10507. That would be quite regular, would it?—It is not regular according to the regulations. I make that a point in my evidence.

10508. In the Dietary Order there is no medical dietary for children under three?—No, I do not advocate one for one moment.

10509. Then the matron really would have to form a dietary of her own?—No, I say it is the duty of the medical officer, that these children ought to be considered as sick persons, and that their diet ought to rest entirely under the medical officer's directions.

10510. That, of course, is the fault of the medical officer?—I think I make that clear, that they are very apathetic in this matter.

10511. In paragraph 82 you refer to the recent scientific investigations with regard to food values, and I take it they might affect your opinion upon the dietaries that are in vogue at the present time. Is that so?—I think that the investigation which was conducted by Professor Chittenden, which has been commented upon by Sir Michael Foster and Dr. Hopkins of Cambridge, and also Dr. Robert Hutchison, tends to the outcome that we are eating too much meat as a whole, and, therefore, in Poor Law diets we can reduce the quantity of meat without any harm resulting to the persons so dieted.

10512. You would recommend an alteration in the dietaries at the present time, would you?—On the lines I propose in paragraph 82.

10513. Practically all the inmates of a workhouse now are dieted by the medical officer, are they not?—All the inmates in the sick wards.

10514. If you look at Article X. of the Order, it says: "It shall be the duty of the medical officer for the workhouse, for the purposes of classification under this Order, to examine each inmate as to his or her physical condition and fitness for employment, on the admission of such inmate, and at such other times as may be necessary, either in pursuance of any regulations, prescribed by us, or by the guardians, or upon an application of such inmate, and to certify the result of such examination in the workhouse medical officer's Report book." Does not that really leave the diet entirely in the hands of the medical officer?—It might be so construed, but as a matter of practice it is not so. The inmate comes into the receiving ward and is put on a diet by the master.

10515. Where they have a resident medical officer it always forms part of his duty?—I hope so.

10516. Therefore, the resident medical officer would put down the diet which those persons should have?—He should do so.

10517. If he does so, then really all the inmates are dieted by the medical officer?—Subject to the statement on page 6 of that Order, at the bottom of Regulation 1, as well as the first four lines of the regulation and Art. III. It is of "Schedule A. Part 1. Regulations."

10518. In actual practice, where there is a resident medical officer, the whole of the inmates are placed on the respective diets by him, are they not?—I should think that that would be the practice. I am not conversant with the practice of the whole of the workhouses so administered.

10519. The whole responsibility practically rests in the hands of the medical officer for the class in which each inmate shall be classified?—For the purpose of diet.

Classification of Workhouse inmates by diet.

10520. Really the classification is on diet now, is it not?—It practically amounts to that.

Effect of Dietary Order on economy of food.

10521. With regard to the waste of food under the present Dietary Order, do you think it is more economical than the old form of dietary, where the guardians made their own and submitted them to the Local Government Board for approval?—Yes, I think so, as a whole.

10522. You think it tends to less waste?—It does, certainly.

10523. Do you think if those restrictions as to quantity were removed, it might tend even to a greater waste still, by an excess of food being allowed?—No, I should say it would tend rather the other way, that the master of the workhouse, desiring to show a considerable saving in the feeding of the inmates, would be inclined to restrict the quantities given.

10524. You think it might possibly be detrimental to the inmates?—I think so. It would be really going back to the old times before there was any prescribed dietary.

10525. The prescribed dietary is really in the interests of the inmates, is it not?—Yes, I think one may take it so, generally speaking; and the interests of the ratepayers.

Proposed reduction of diets.

10526. (Professor Smart.) In regard to paragraph 82, you think that there might be a not inconsiderable saving in the way you indicate, by reducing the meat allowances?—I count the meat allowance as being part of a ration that you can reduce without reducing in any very material quantity the bulk. These people have always been accustomed to having bulky rations, and they would feel it a hardship to have anything taken from them that would make a difference to the bulk.

10527. Do you really mean bulk and not weight?—Yes, I mean as regards the amount of food in bulk that they take rather than the amount by weight.

10528. The substitution of vegetables would make it more pleasant, perhaps?—I would not propose the substitution of anything; I would simply propose the reduction in the meat allowances, at present at any rate.

10529. You speak of "vegetable soups"; would they be substituted for meat soups?—They would be made by simply taking out the meat allowances as specified in the ingredient tables added to the Order.

10530. And substituting vegetables for the meat?—There are already vegetables there, and I do not think it would be necessary to make any increase in them.

10531. Has this suggestion been put before the Local Government Board in any form?—Not at present.

10532. Do you not think it should be?—That is a matter for conference with my colleague, Dr. Downes.

10533. It is only through the Local Government Board that any change like this could be made then?—I daresay you will regard this paragraph, and indeed the greater part of my statement-in-chief as an obiter dictum on my part.

Inspection of Workhouse Children.

10534. (Mr. Phelps.) In paragraph 13, you speak of inspecting the children in workhouse schools; do you inspect the inmates of the workhouses as well as the children in the schools?—Not unless the general inspector requests me to do so, or I get some special instructions from the Local Government Board to do so.

Dr. Andrew Fuller.

24 April 1906.

10535. Your instructions are different on that point as regards workhouses and schools, are they?—Yes, as far as regards any instructions at all; I am to inspect infirmaries and the children in the workhouse nurseries.

10536. You say they do not come within the purview of the medical inspector of the education authority; is that an inspection which is carried out at all systematically?—I should not like to say that, as I am not conversant with the education authority's directions.

Different methods of supplying drugs.

10537. With regard to the question of supplying drugs; what different systems have you come across?—In workhouses or outside?

10538. First of all in workhouses?—In the workhouses, in the majority of cases, the medical officer's salary is supposed to include the supply of drugs; but in the larger workhouse infirmaries the guardians almost invariably find the drugs for use in the workhouse and in the infirmary.

10539. When they find the drugs, what system do they adopt; do they keep a stock by them, for instance, or do they buy as required?—As a rule there is a stock kept.

10540. Do you find a danger from that, owing to the drugs getting old and stale?—I have never had my attention drawn to that, though, of course, it is likely. The actual control of the drug supply is in the hands of a committee of the guardians. The medical officer in the first place makes a requisition, which probably goes through the steward if it is a large infirmary, or through the clerk in the ordinary way to this committee of the guardians, and they have the power to strike out any drug or any article that is requisitioned for, quite irrespective of the medical officer's recommendation.

10541. With regard to out-door medical relief, and the drugs in that case, what systems are in vogue?—I might say that in almost every district the salary of the district medical officer includes the supply of drugs. In some cases, such as the Cardiff union, the Cheltenham union, the Birmingham union, the Wolverhampton union, and a good many more that I could mention, there is a dispensary system. It is not always the case that the outdoor patient attends at the dispensary, but the prescription given to the recipients of out-medical relief is dispensed by this particular dispensary.

10542. Would the dispensary be an office of the guardians, or would there be a chemist who is appointed so to speak, as dispenser?—As a rule the dispensary is an office of the guardians.

10543. They would have an office at which there would be a store of drugs kept?—Yes. There are cases in which local chemists do make up prescriptions in that sort of way, but they are very few.

10544. That is to say, the owner of a particular chemist's shop would be appointed dispenser?—No.

10545. Then would they pay so much for each prescription that was made up?—I believe they would pay so much.

10546. You say that it is impossible to adopt such a system in rural unions; what are the difficulties?—The distances which the people would have to travel in order to get their medicines.

10547. Is that, do you think, a serious difficulty as compared with the present system?—Supposing this system was to be adopted in the rural unions, I do not think the advantages would be at all commensurate with the expense that the improvement would lead to.

10548. Would it really make such change in the system by which they now get their medicines?—Yes, because I do not think that there would be a dispensary for every particular district; I think that there would be a dispensary for a union, or a dispensary in two parts of the union, while the union may be divided into six or seven medical districts.

Combination of Unions to deal with phthisis.

10549. With regard to cases of phthisis, you propose that there should be more classification of unions; have you any experience of unions combining for those purposes?—The only case that I can quote is the combination of Toxteth Park, the Liverpool Select Vestry, and the West Derby union.

10550. How many beds does their institution contain—I think it is twenty-five, is it not?—I was going to say twenty or twenty-five.

10551. Is that really an adequate provision for the three unions which it represents?—No.

10552. That is to say, it does not take nearly all the cases?—No, it does not.

Provision phthisis a Liverpool Chorlton.

10553. I have looked into that particular case; on what principle of selection do they go, do you know?—The selection of cases rests with the three medical officers of the different unions, who are appointed to attend to this matter.

10554. Do they refer to curable cases?—As a rule, I believe, they try to select curable cases.

10555. And only curable cases?—Only those.

10556. You are familiar with the Chorlton workhouse of Withington, I presume?—To a certain extent, yes.

10557. Do you know the phthisis ward there?—Yes, but I cannot tell you the exact situation of it; I know that there is one.

10558. Do you think there is a very great advantage from a medical point of view in the case of Liverpool over a ward like that at Chorlton which is specially built and equipped for phthisical patients?—Speaking strictly from the medical point of view, I think so.

10559. You do think there is a great advantage?—Judging by results, one would be inclined to think so; but then, of course, the Heswall Sanatorium has hardly been in existence long enough for one to make a definite statement about it.

County Sanatori for phthi

10560. Do you think it would be possible to make the proposal, or to get it carried out, that the county should be the unit for the purpose of providing such a sanatorium?—There again comes in the question of the public health point of view; and I am supposed only to deal with the Poor Law.

Risk of infection from phth in Workhou Infirmari

10561-2. You say with regard to phthisical cases that they are better not treated in the patient's own home; do you think there is any danger of infection in an ordinary workhouse infirmary from introducing a phthisical patient?—Yes, and I could give you instances.

10563. Take the ordinary workhouse infirmary ward, which contains people who are suffering from senile decay; is the risk of their catching it great?—No, the risk is reduced to the minimum in those cases.

10564. It is not anything like so great a danger as the danger of leaving the case at large?—I should say not.

10565. Have you much experience of out-door medical relief?—As an official of the Local Government Board very little, except when sitting on inquiries.

10566. But you were an out-door medical officer?—Yes, once I was.

10567. Might I ask in what part of England?—In the union of Northampton.

Nursing out-door paupers.

10568. Do you think on the whole that the nursing in the case of out-door medical relief is adequate?—In those years I should say it certainly was not.

10569. Have you any proposals that you could make with regard to its improvement?—I think the guardians as a rule, taking the country as a whole, are availing themselves of the district nurses to ensure better nursing for their out-relief medical cases.

10570. The district nurses being supplied from voluntary sources?—They are supplied by the voluntary associations.

10571. Do you think that is covering the ground?—I think it does better than the guardians being allowed to appoint nurses for their own out-medical relief districts.

10572. Do you think that the administration of out-door medical relief is satisfactory as a whole; that is, do you think the patients are well and sufficiently attended, or do you hear many complaints on that score?—Unofficially, one is constantly hearing complaints.

Duties of Medical Inspector

10573. (Dr. Downes.) With regard to your duties I think they are governed by the Minute of Mr. Sclater-Booth which you put in?—I believe so.

10574. That has laid down the conditions under which you make your reports?—The conditions are laid down in the Minute of Mr. Sclater-Booth promulgated in 1878, and also in Mr. Ritchie's Minute, which originally was only of temporary application, but is now generally construed to govern my appointment.

10575. The present procedure is dependent on the Minutes of those two Presidents, is it not ?—That is so.

10576. I think you have stated that in addition to the inspection of the workhouses, you do from time to time inspect Poor Law schools in the provinces ?—Frequently.

10577. Could you tell us whether you are satisfied with the ophthalmic state of those schools at the present time ?—My knowledge of them, with the exception of one in Lancashire, is about three years old.

10578. Take your latest knowledge ?—No, I am not, my notes were not satisfactory on that score.

10579. Is there any provision in the provinces for dealing with ophthalmic cases similar to that which now exists in London ?—Except in the case of the Liverpool Select Vestry, none.

10580. What do the Liverpool Select Vestry do ?—They have provided a separate hospital, or what they term a cottage hospital, for the treatment of these cases.

10581. Is that sufficient for their purpose ?—I have not inspected it since it has been opened, so I cannot say.

10582. Do you know what is the accommodation ?—I forget that.

10583. Do you consider that some such provision is desirable ?—I think in large unions where ophthalmia is prevalent, such as those of Manchester and Liverpool, it is.

10584. What do they usually do with the ophthalmic children in the country infirmaries ?—They treat them in the ordinary wards.

10585. Can they educate them there ?—As a rule there is no provision made for their education.

10586. Would that answer apply also to cases of ringworm in many instances ?—Yes, and to almost all cases that are detained in the workhouse sick wards, or in the infirmaries for any length of time as sick cases. Of course, there are some instances, such as at the Chase Farm Schools of the Edmonton Union, where special provision is made for the education of the children that are under treatment in that way.

10587. But that is exceptional ?—Those cases where provision is made for education are very few—not more than five or six.

10588. It is a difficult matter, is it not, for the guardians to provide education for isolated cases of that character? —I think so, very.

10589. Is there any class of sick for which you think special provision should be made in the provincial districts? —In the case of children suffering from tuberculosis in different forms, I certainly think that they ought to have the benefit of the "open air" treatment.

10590. Then you think that more special accommodation for that class is required ?—I do think so—in the urban unions more particularly.

10591. Have you considered how such accommodation could best be provided ?—I have made recommendations in one or two cases.

10592. On what general lines ?—On the lines that the Liverpool Select Vestry have proceeded on quite recently.

10593. That is a particular union providing for its own cases ?—That is a particular union providing for the treatment of tuberculosis amongst young children.

10594. Assuming buildings might suit the special conditions should you favour taking in cases from other unions?—I think that that would be an admirable arrangement.

10595. On the principle of payment by agreement ?—Yes.

10596. Do you find the treatment of surgical cases in the country workhouses satisfactory ?—Not in the country workhouses as country workhouses; but in some of the provincial unions I think that the treatment of surgical cases is of the very best possible class.

10597. It is easier for the guardians of a large union to make proper provision than it is for the guardians of a small union, is it not ?—Certainly.

10598. What is usually done in the small unions with regard to the operative cases ?—If the inmates can be persuaded to be moved to a general hospital, they are moved, and in very rare cases the guardians empower their medical officer to call in surgical assistance. Of course, in some cases the workhouse medical officers themselves operate. Dr. Andrew Fuller. 24 April 1906.

10599. Do you find that the improved nursing generally facilitates the performance of operations which formerly could not be done safely in workhouses ?—I am very decidedly of that opinion. I have frequently expressed real pleasure in finding the nursing staff so very much improved as to enable that sort of thing to be done, where it was not possible before.

10600. You mention in your memorandum the question of the remuneration of the medical officers, which you regard in many cases as inadequate; is it not the fact that the cost of medical education has considerably increased since the General Consolidated Order was drawn up in 1847 ?—Yes, and not only that, but within the last ten years it has very considerably increased. Inadequacy of Medical Officers' Salaries and increased cost of drugs and of medical training.

10601. The duration of the curriculum has been extended ?—Yes.

10602. And the cost is enhanced in various ways ?—Yes.

10603. Is it not also the fact that the cost of medical and surgical treatment is greater nowadays and tends to become greater ?—I think so, throughout the country, in any union where what I term proper medical and surgical treatment is given.

10604. And that, quite apart from any question of experiments with new drugs ?—Yes.

10605. Are there not new drugs which have an established reputation, which nevertheless are very expensive drugs ?—That is so.

10606. Take the case of anti-toxin—anti-toxin is a very costly drug, is it not ?—It is.

10607. I think I saw in a current medical journal an estimate that a case would cost from £1 to 30s. ?—I believe that is so. I think I may say that the Local Government Board frequently have applications from different boards of guardians for authority to defray the cost of this particular use of anti-toxin.

10608. So that a medical officer's salary may have been fixed some years age, but since that salary was fixed the cost of treatment may have materially advanced ?—I think it has very materially advanced.

10609. And yet it may be part of the medical officer's contract and agreement to provide everything that is required ?—Even so, and that with recent appointments within the last twelve months.

10610. Do you, of your own knowledge, know that there are cases where that may act prejudicially to the patient ? —Yes; I could give illustrations, but I should prefer not to give names, naturally. About three weeks ago I was inspecting a workhouse, and I noticed a case in bed; I asked the medical officer what the case was, and he told me that it was a case suffering from syphilitic disease, and apparently, from what he said, it was curable. I asked him if the case was having drug treatment. He said, "No, I cannot afford it; my salary is not sufficiently adequate for me to find the expensive drugs necessary." I asked him then whether he had reported this matter to his guardians, and he said, "No," and I advised him to do so. Evils arising from inadequate salaries of Medical Officers and suggested remedy.

10611. (Chairman.) Is that the only case ?—That is the latest case. I think that is a very good example of cases that frequently come under my notice.

10612. Of cases, that is, which have come under your notice previously ?—Yes.

10613. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Do you know what the salary was ?—Not in that particular case.

10614. (Dr. Downes.) With regard to the payment of fees for extra services, I think that is under consideration ? —I believe so.

10615. Can you suggest any remedy for this state of things which we have just been discussing, namely, the under-payment of medical officers ?—As a matter of fact, I am in favour of the repayment of the whole salary in the case of resident assistant medical officers, and of part repayment of the salary in the case of the ordinary visiting medical officers or the district medical officers.

Dr. Andrew Fuller.

24 April 1906.

10616. Somewhat on the principle which has been adopted in the case of other medical services?—Yes, particularly in the case of the public health.

10617. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) I do not quite understand what repayment of the salary means here?—That instead of becoming a local charge, part payment is made out of, I believe, the national funds and part payment out of the local funds.

10618. (Dr. Downes.) By a grant-in-aid?—It practically amounts to a grant-in-aid.

Security of tenure of Medical Officer.

10619. (Mr. Gardiner.) In return for that the medical officers of health cannot be got rid of except with the consent of the Local Government Board, I think; they are protected by the Local Government Board in consequence, are they not?—I should say so, but I am speaking off the book there.

10620. (Dr. Downes.) The Poor Law officer, I believe, is not removable except with the consent of the Local Government Board?—That is so.

10621. His appointment is also subject to the approval of the Local Government Board, is it not?—I think it is, in so far as approving of the payment of the salary; I do not know that the Local Government Board ever exercise any discretionary power as to the appointment of the individual qua the individual.

10622. There is a formal approval, is there not?—Yes, there is.

10623. The salary is practically fixed by the guardians?—I believe so in almost all cases.

10624. I am speaking of the provinces?—In the provinces it is so.

Function of Local Government Board as to salaries of Medical Officers.

10625. What power would the Local Government Board have to regulate any salary in the provinces, if the guardians were unwilling to do so themselves; are you aware of any?—I am not aware of any, except a power of suggestion and personal interview on the part of the general inspector.

10626. Such powers as are in the possession of the Local Government Board for that purpose are not of a practical character?—I think not, 10627. In regard to the questions that were asked you about the salaries of medical officers being regulated by the Local Government Board, I dare say you are aware that in London there is a fund known as the Common Poor Fund?—Yes.

10628. Which places the matter on really a different footing, I think?—I believe so.

Concerted action by Medical Officers as to inadequacy of their salaries.

10629. In paragraph 25 of your memorandum, to which we have just been referring, you attribute the unsatisfactory state of the salaries in some cases to the want of cohesion of the medical profession as a working body of men; am I right in supposing that there have lately been certain cases in which there has been more cohesion on their part?—I think that the tendency is now more towards establishing a "trade unionism," as it were, among medical men in relation to these appointments.

10630. There is a case at the present time, is there not; it has been reported in the public press, so there is no secrecy about it?—There are two cases. One is the case of the medical officer for the workhouse in the Aberystwith Union, and the other is the case of the medical officer for the Bangor workhouse.

10631. They are both matters of public knowledge, are they not?—They are.

Cases of Bangor and Aberystwith

10632. Will you shortly state what the facts are in those cases?—At Aberystwith, the medical officer, I believe, was in receipt of a salary of £30 a year; he asked for an increase, and the guardians declined to give it, without giving any reason. The medical officer, as a protest, resigned. Then the guardians asked him to resign all his other Poor Law appointments; he refused, and the Local Government Board supported him in that refusal.

10633. Have the guardians appointed anybody to the workhouse?—As a temporary measure they came to terms with the local voluntary hospital committee to allow their house surgeon to attend at the workhouse at intervals. This arrangement is to expire at the end of this month, and, as far as one knows, there is no other possible arrangement to be made.

10634. Do you know whether the British Medical Association have taken any action in the matter?—The British Medical Association took action from the very beginning, and, I believe, wrote through the secretary of the Local Association to all the medical men in practice in the district, asking them not to apply for the appointment.

10635. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Is the appointment that of the workhouse medical officer?—Yes.

10636. How many inmates are there in that workhouse?—About seventy, I think. It is some time since I visited Aberystwith, so I am not quite sure about the numbers. The numbers in Knight's Directory do not always correspond with the actual numbers in the house.

10637. (Dr. Downes.) It is not a very large place, is it?—No.

10638. I do not know whether you would care to give the details of the Bangor case?—The Bangor case is one where the medical officer had to resign for various reasons; I think the Local Government Board called upon him to resign. The guardians offered what the British Medical Association, that is, the local association, considered an inadequate salary. There again, representations were made to all the local medical men not to apply for the appointment, and no one applied. The guardians have now re-advertised the appointment, with an increase of £20, and the local association consider that £70 per annum, which is now offered, is an adequate salary, so there is no restriction, or no suggested restriction, upon application.

10639. So that there are two recent cases in which there appears to be some action on the part of the medical profession as an organised body?—In the provinces; I believe those are the only two cases that have happened during my term of office as medical inspector.

Effect of Medical Relief Disqualification Removal Act.

10640. You had, previous to your appointment, some experience of out-door medical relief; have you any recollection of any change which followed the passing of the Medical Relief Disqualification Removal Act?—Yes. In the first twelve months of my appointment the number of cases that I had to see as a district medical officer amounted to twelve or thirteen in the course of the week, but these gradually mounted up till I had a list of twenty-five to thirty cases. Then I wrote a protest to the local authorities, saying that I did not consider some of these cases should be treated as out medical relief cases, and they replied with a suggestion that I should apply for an increase of salary, and I did so. I was informed by the clerk to that union that the guardians did not consider that any opinion of mine as to whether these cases should be treated as out medical relief cases came within my province, as I was not a relieving officer.

10641. To what did you attribute that increase in the number of cases?—To the passing of the Act to prevent medical relief disqualifying a person from voting. That Act was passed in 1885. Rightly or wrongly, I put it down to that; not that it happened within the next year—I believe it was two years after the passing of the Act—but it became known that it did not disqualify about that time in that particular union.

10642. Do you know whether it was that the people applied more readily or that the orders were given more readily?—I think that it was both. It gradually became known that the Guardians did not refuse, neither did their relieving officer refuse to give orders for out medical relief.

Workhouse Infirmaries under quasi separate administration.

10643. On the question of the separation of the infirmary administration from the workhouse, in your experience you have had to deal with infirmaries administered on quite a different basis, have you not?—Yes.

10644. Are not some of the largest infirmaries and some of the best in the provinces administered without any order other than the General Consolidated Order?—Yes. I have mentioned one in particular, the Crumpsall workhouse infirmary—the infirmary in Manchester township. There is no order relating to the administration of that infirmary, and yet it is administered for all practical purposes on separate infirmary lines.

10645. And satisfactorily so, I understand?—Judging by inspection, most satisfactorily. I might mention other unions, and I have refrained from mentioning one that I had in my mind and have had always in my mind for about ten years; that is the Bradford (in Yorkshire) workhouse infirmary.

10646. Is that administered on similar lines?—Yes.

10647. So that it is perfectly possible to have a satisfactory separate infirmary without the very definite regulations from the central authority?—I think so. I think the administration of almost all the institutions, whether they are large or small, depends entirely upon the personal equation of the different officers concerned. If they choose to work amicably, they can work amicably, in spite of the so-called strict regulations.

10648. Would you apply that to the case of the smaller workhouses too?—Yes, as a whole; but in the small workhouses there appears to me to be more time for personal feeling to have some bearing upon the administration.

10649. And perhaps there is less separation of departments in a small workhouse?—Of course that is so—very much less.

Administration of Workhouse Infirmaries with visiting Medical Officers.

10650. Then with regard to the administration of the infirmary itself, you have mentioned to us that in some of them the medical staff are partly visiting medical officers; in some cases, I believe those visiting medical officers are men of high consulting rank in their profession?—They are.

10651. Where you have a medical visiting staff, how do you regulate the supervision of the internal administration of the infirmary?—In the first place, the guardians define the duties, or are supposed to define the duties of their resident assistant medical officers; and if there happens to be a matron of the infirmary as distinct from the matron of the workhouse, the duties relating to administration are divided between the visiting medical officer and the matron rather than between him and the resident medical officer.

10652. What officer would there be to exercise a check on expenditure?—There would be a steward.

10653. Could he regulate the expenditure on sick diet or on the drugs or on costly surgical dressings?—No.

10654. It would be rather difficult, would it not, for him to do that?—Yes. He merely acts as an agent passing on the requisition of the medical officer for drugs and surgical dressings to the committee of the guardians. The committee of the guardians as a rule exercise the control.

Provision of Sick Diets under Dietary Order.

10655. If I remember rightly, in the Dietary Order there is a provision for workhouse medical officers to revise their sick diets from time to time, is there not?—Yes.

10656. Is that duty carried out?—Not as much as I should like it to be.

10657. Should you regard it as an important duty?—I think it is a most important duty.

10658. If it is not properly carried out, there may be considerable waste and extravagance, may there not?—Yes. One constantly finds that certain cases are not eating the diet that is ordered for them, and it is very obvious that they could not eat the diet.

10659. In these large separate infirmaries with visiting staffs, on whom should the duty fall of revising the diet?—In the first place on the resident medical officer, subject to the discretion of the visiting medical officer from time to time.

Medical Administration in Country Workhouses.

10660. In the small workhouses do you find sufficient care in the classification of the sick, with a view to economy of the more expensive infirmary beds?—No; I think that the medical administration in that respect as a rule in the country workhouse is very slack. There is no difference made. In some places you will find that the infirmary accommodation is taken up almost entirely with infirm cases, as distinct from chronic cases, or cases requiring the attention of a nurse by night and by day.

10661. That is to say, costly machinery is utilised to deal with cases that do not necessarily require such costly machinery?—Yes. Dr. Andrew Fuller.

24 April 1906.

10662. Is the remedy for that within the power of the guardians?—I should say so, certainly.

Number of Poor Law Nurses.

10663. In Paragraph 45 of your Memorandum you give a very interesting table showing the number of nurses; does that include the whole of the Kingdom, London and all, that is to say, is it for the provinces and London also?—Certain unions in London are included in the third table, the Separate Infirmary table.*

10664. Does it refer to the whole of England and Wales or to only a part of England and Wales?—It refers to the whole country plus one or two infirmaries outside the immediate metropolitan area. I believe a place like Croydon, for instance, is included in the columns under Separate Infirmaries. This was a return furnished to me by the B. department of the Local Government Board. When I revise the evidence I will make it clear to what it does refer.*

Departmental Committee on Workhouse Nursing. Recommendation as to minor training schools.

10665. You have been asked some questions about the recommendation of the Departmental Committee on Nursing as to minor training schools; am I right in stating that the recommendation there does not aim at the creation of an inferior class of nurse, but is rather intended to insure the regulated instruction of an existing class of nurse?—That is so.

10666. There are, as a matter of fact, places where they have so-called probationers, but no regulations for their instruction, I believe?—There are places where they have absolutely no regulations for their instruction, and what is more, where there is no instruction obtained at all, except what they may happen to pick up by rule of thumb from the superior officers, whoever they may happen to be.

10667. And that condition of things, I believe, is not entirely confined to the Poor Law?—I understand so.

10668. (Mr. Bentham.) Do you think it advisable that nurses should be trained in institutions of that kind, that is, in small workhouse hospitals?—No. There are some workhouses that have probationers to-day that I do not think at all suitable for the purpose, but there are no regulations forbidding their appointment. If the guardians like to appoint probationers they can do so. Speaking from the one point of view that half a loaf is better than no loaf, it is better that the people should be nursed by probationers than, as they used to be under the old conditions, by people who had absolutely no training and had no appreciation of responsibility in the care of the inmates.

10669. Would this system of minor training schools include those places as being proper places for training nurses according to the regulations?—No. It would give the general inspectors and Dr. Downes and myself the power of restricting these places in number, according to what we thought they should be as regards the materiel that was available for the training.

Provision for venereal cases.

10670. (Dr. Downes.) In speaking of the special classes of the sick, I omitted to ask you whether you had anything to say on the supervision made for lock cases in the different workhouses that you visit; is it done satisfactorily, or have you any suggestions to offer on the subject?—I have in some cases. In some large workhouses I have made suggestions that there should be separate provision. One is in favour of those cases where possible being sent to hospitals such as the Lock Hospital at Paddington Green.

10671. But that is not always possible, is it?—No. In a large union, or in any union, I think those cases ought to be kept entirely separate from the ordinary sick.

10672. Should you be in favour of their being dealt with as a special class, if there was any combination of unions or any arrangements for dealing with special classes?—I think that would be an admirable arrangement, and I do not think that any pleas, such as that of the hardship of being separated from their relations and being too far out of reach of their relations to be visited would bear at all in those cases.

* This Table includes all the London Separate Infirmaries and the other Tables the Workhouse Infirmaries.

Dr. Andrew Fuller.

24 April 1906.

10673. (Chairman.) Are there many of those cases?—Proportionately, one would say there is a fair number.

10674. Have you any idea of the proportion?—No. Sometimes you do not meet with a case at all in a workhouse, and perhaps in an adjoining union you may find two or three, and then you may go two or three years in that particular union and not get a case.

10675. Are they getting worse?—That is a very difficult question to answer. Some medical men tell me "no."

10676. (Sir Samuel Provis.) But you get it in particular localities?—Yes.

10677. Was there not a hospital somewhere near Farnham?—Yes, it was near Farnham, but that is closed. It was the Aldershot hospital.

10678 (Mr. Gardiner.) Have you any recommendation to make as regards the powers of removal and detention in these cases, both male and female?—There you open up a very wide question.

10679. Merely from the medical point of view, I mean?—One finds that medical opinion differs so very much in that respect. I should not like to offer an opinion. I think that it is practicable to have a combination of unions, or to have the accommodation found by the county, to which these cases could go; and I do not think there should be any hardship in removing them from one union to another which might be central to the whole of the unions in that paticular county.

10680. And detaining them?—Yes.

10681. (Dr. Downes.) The question of their compulsory detention, I think, is a legal question?—It is a question which I think has to be settled by the House.

10682. It is a question that has been before the Law Officers, has it not?—Yes.

The treatment of phthisis under the Poor Law.

10683. You have been asked questions about the provisions for phthisis. From a purely medical point of view, is there not a distinction between the class of case which you mention in your Paragraph 36, on which those questions started, and some other classes which were brought into the discussion?—The essential point about phthisis, as contrasted with a broken leg, is that it may be communicable, is it not?—That is so.

10684. Then there is also this distinction, is there not, between phthisis and certain other communicable diseases which were mentioned, such as small-pox, that although phthisis is communicable, it is communicable in a minor degree and the communication is more readily prevented?—Yes, I should say so, decidedly.

10685. So that from the medical point of view there is a distinction between those classes of disease which came into the account?—Yes. In my mind I thought the distinction was rather clear, before I came here to-day.

10686. I think that in regard to phthisis you attach special importance to dealing with the early cases?—Yes.

Nature of phthisical cases coming to the Poor Law.

10687. Does your experience show you that such cases do not come to the Poor Law as a rule until the disease has become advanced?—The whole of my experience up to now is that it is very unusual indeed for what is called a curable case to come to the Poor Law. I have used the word "curable" because it is a word in common use, rather than use the technical expression for it. Curable cases are very rarely under treatment in Poor Law institutions or as out medical relief cases.

10688. (Mr. Loch.) What is your suggestion with regard to these cases of phthisis? Presume that there is notification, or that in some way the case in its early stage does come; then what would you propose as the better course to take?—I think that under the Poor Law the treatment is outlined in the sanatorium which has been established near to Skipton for the Bradford Union, and in the Heswall Sanatorium near to Heswall, in Cheshire, for the Liverpool combined unions. They are very good instances of the way to provide for these cases.

10689. It would be in the earliest stages that you would send them to the sanatorium?—To a sanatorium of that kind, yes.

Relief of families of phthisical patients.

10390. How would you deal with the family? I understood you rather to suggest that the Poor Law should take possession of the cases that were past treatment in the main——?—As to the individual.

10691. What would you do? Put the Poor Law aside for the moment, please, from the point of view of general relief: would you propose that there should be a grant for out-door relief in every case in order to keep the family if the husband goes away; or what would you suggest?—I think the family would immediately become destitute, and so they would come under the Poor Law.

10692. Therefore in regard to the Poor Law you would suggest that the family came on as a matter of fact for out-door relief?—I am not speaking about out-door relief; for me it is a question of out-door medical relief.

10693. Suppose a man has to go into a sanatorium on your own proposal, what is to happen to his family if they cannot support themselves; you would not offer them the house, would you?—No.

10694. Therefore you would give them out-door relief?—That is a question for the local authority to determine.

10695. True, but that follows, does it not?—This is a mere personal opinion of mine I should like to say, and it has nothing to do with me as an official.

10696. I understand; but that is a factor that has to be considered, is it not?—Of course one would like to see them relieved in any other way than by the Poor Law, say, by charity.

10697. There is this suggestion made, that if there were sanatoria in connection with the public health authorities, then so far as it was desirable to send these people to sanatoria, the Poor Law might provide the out-door relief. That is one suggestion, and another is that the charitable should do it. What would you do?—I favour the charity point of view.

10698. Then you would propose, really, that the local people should organise themselves better in order to deal with these cases at an early stage, irrespective of the Poor Law?—I think so, decidedly.

Effect of provision of sanatoria type of phthisical cases applying for relief.

10399. (Mr. Bentham.) Have you any information as to whether, where sanatoria are provided, these curable cases come under the notice of the Poor Law rather more frequently than before?—Some year or two ago, in discussing the matter, I think, it was with Dr. Raw, or Dr. Smart, he told me that he thought we should not get any curable cases in Poor Law at all, and that there were no such cases taking the Poor Law as a whole. From a conversation that I had with you yesterday, I gathered that your experience in the Bradford union was that there are curable cases coming under the Poor Law.

10700. Really they do come under notice earlier than before?—Yes; just in the same way that I suggested that one result of this Act of 1885 was that the people gradually got to know that it did not disqualify, and therefore they applied when they had not applied before.

10701. Do you know whether that obtains in the Liverpool union or not?—I was at Heswall two years ago, but I have not been there since, and I have not had a chance of talking the question over with them.

10702. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Do some of the unions now erect wooden shelters, which are very economical and which are found to be very useful for incipient cases?—Yes. I may say that I am constantly recommending them.

10703. That is a very much cheaper and less expensive mode of dealing with the question than the building of sanatoria, is it not?—I think that is the right way.

10704. Is that in use in England?—Yes, in a great many cases. I do not know that those cases are particularly reported to the Local Government Board, but it is reported that provision is made for the outdoor treatment of phthisis.

10705. I think it is the case, is it not, that these shelters accommodate perhaps a couple of patients for something like £30; is that not so?—I believe that is so.

10706. (Mr. Bentham.) I think it cannot be said that that is applicable everywhere, because some workhouse hospitals are in situations that are not suitable for treatment of that kind?—That is so. I should like to say that the methods which they have adopted in the Bath uinon and in the Kettering union are two very good specimens of making provision for this class of case within the workhouse grounds.

Dietary of children under 3.

10707. (Dr. Downes.) With reference to the dietary of very young children, I think you state that medical officers do not always carry out their duties in that respect?—That is so. One tries to remedy that by a personal application to or a personal interview with the medical officer concerned.

10708. The old regulation, if I remember rightly prior to the existing one, was that the matron should consult the medical officer in regard to the dietary of the children?—That was so, and a great many of the older matrons have continued to think that that is the best way of doing it.

10709. So that in a way the medical officer may yet have a voice in the matter, although he is not carrying out this particular duty?—Yes; but in some cases he never carries out the second paragraph of the regulation, which I consider to be the most important one.

10710. Do you mean this—"The medical officer shall give directions in writing as to the service of food to inmates under three years of age, and as to the time at which each infant should be weaned"?—Yes. If Article VI. consisted of those four lines, and the five lines preceding them (that is, the first paragraph of the article) were deleted, I should say that those four lines would be sufficient, because the whole responsibility for the feeding of these children ought to rest on the medical officer.

10711. Do the guardians take any action in the matter, if the medical officer does not carry out his duties?—They have said on several occasions that they have given instructions to the medical officer that he is to carry out Article VI.

10712. It is within their power to require him to do so, is it not?—Yes, and they do so in fact in writing, but whether he does take any notice or not, I am not always in a position to say. I know that in some cases the medical officers do not take any notice.

Discretion of Guardians as to diet.

10713. You were also questioned as to the duty of the medical officer with regard to the dietary of the inmates generally, and Article X. of the Dietary Order was referred to. Article X. renders it the duty of the medical officer "for the purposes of classification under this Order, to examine each inmate as to his or her physical condition and fitness for employment?—Yes.

10714. Is it not the fact that the Order gives the guardians an almost entirely free hand as to the dietary they will allow to the different classes?—Yes. I believe that one of the Commissioners who has examined me read me these lines from Schedule A part 1—"The Guardians may from time to time direct the removal of any inmate from any one to any other of such classes in which such inmate can properly be placed. . . . . provided that any male inmate certified by the medical officer of the workhouse as a healthy able-bodied person shall be placed either in class 1 or in class 1 A for purposes of diet."

10715. That is the only instruction as regards healthy inmates, I believe?—Yes.

10716. The other instructions are as to the sick and the certain semi-infirm and ailing classes which are dieted by that Order?—Yes. Those are included under Articles IV., VI., VII, and IX.

10717. (Mr. Bentham.) That dietary has to be submitted for the approval of the medical officer, has it not, before it can be put into operation, even though it is selected from the Schedule?—I think the Order reads very clearly that they shall merely consult him. It is not to be referred to him, but it says the guardians shall forthwith in consultation with the medical officer for the workhouse do so and so.

10718. In Article II. it says: "Before the dietary tables so framed are adopted by the guardians they shall be referred to the medical officer, who shall, as soon as may be, make a report thereon. Such report shall be laid before the guardians and considered by them, and a copy of it shall be entered on the Minutes of their proceedings"?—Yes, that is in the Order.

10719. (Sir Samuel Provis.) It goes on: "After considering the report of the medical officer the guardians shall settle the dietary tables, with or without alterations" so they can alter them if they choose, and they are not bound by the medical officer?—That is so.

10720. (Dr. Downes.) Did not the circular which accompanied that Order contain this statement: "The functions of the medical officer in this matter will be purely advisory, and the final settlement of the tables will rest with the guardians alone"?—Yes. On page 2 of the circular it says it may be necessary for the guardians to lay down general rules for the classification of inmates for the purposes of the dietary.

Waste of food in Workhouses

10721. On the question of the waste of food, and the cost of the dietary, does not that first of all depend on the selection of the foods made by the guardians?—It does.

10722. And secondly on the way in which the Order is administered?—It is so.

10723. When it is said that so much bread is issued, is that not a matter entirely within the power and discretion of the guardians?—It is, as I think I have mentioned in my previous answers. The guardians may order a half, or a third, or two-thirds, of the quantity that they think suitable to be served in the first place.

10724. I believe that it was found by the Departmental Committee which inquired into this question, that the waste in these matters was almost entirely on bread?—That is so.

10725. It was suggested that scraps might be usable in a big workhouse, as in an ordinary house; would there not be a considerable danger in such a proceeding?—I think that would open a very wide door to abuse.

Cooking in Workhouses.

10726. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Is not the cooking a very important matter in a workhouse?—One regards that as almost the essential.

10727. (Dr. Downes.) It is so important that I understand the Local Government Board arranged with the School of Cookery to publish a Manual?—That was so, and I think that in the Circular which accompanied the issue of this Order there was some reference to the appointment of a cook in houses where there was no cook.

Hospitals for accidents supported out of the rates.

10728. You were asked whether there was any instance of a hospital provided out of the rates by a local authority other than Poor Law. Are you aware that there are rate-aided hospitals for accidents and for general diseases, which are not provided under the Poor Law?—I am aware that the guardians subscribe varying amounts from time to time to voluntary hospitals.

10729. Are you aware that in the case of the Widnes Local Board, in 1876 it was held that a hospital for accidents might be provided under Section 131 of the Public Health Act?—That had not come under my notice.

10730. I believe that there have been other proposals for hospitals for purposes not connected with infectious diseases, but under the same section of the Public Health Act. I take it you are not aware of those cases?—I was not aware of those cases; they have never come under my cognisance.

10731. (Mr. Gardiner.) You sit as assessor, do you not, at inquiries into the conduct of medical officers?—Yes.

Powers of Local Government Board as to removing unsatisfactory Officers.

10732. Judging from your experience, are the powers of the Local Government Board adequate to get rid of unsatisfactory officers?—No, I should say not. Unless they are first reported by the guardians, the Local Government Board do not move in the matter.

10733. Is this a fair question? Would it not be well if the Local Government Board were empowered to move, as far as medical officers are concerned, and perhaps superintendent nurses?—There again you open up rather a wide question of administration, which would, of course, interfere with the local authorities. The true system on which we go is local administration by local government.

10734. It is the fact, is it not, that almost every Board of Guardians is entirely in the hands of its skilled officers like the doctor and the superintendent nurse. They seem to be rather a different class to, say, the relieving officers, whose work comes under the notice of the Board every day, and they can therefore more or less criticise and estimate its value; but the work of a doctor a board of guardians cannot estimate?—There, I think, the power of the Local Government Board ought to be altered, unless they might by part repayment of salaries have a voice in the matter, without having to hold a public inquiry, if in the first place misconduct, or want of care and attention on the part of the officer, were reported to them.

Dr. Andrew Fuller.

24 April 1906.

10735. They should have a voice both in the appointment and in the removal ?—I think so.

Nursing of out-door poor at Chichester by Workhouse Nurses.

10736. You made a very interesting remark about the Chichester system, whereby the infirmary nurses go outside the infirmary and nurse the poor; are their services confined to those in receipt of relief, or are they given to the poor generally ?—They are confined entirely to the cases that are referred to the nursing staff by the district medical officer, who is also the workhouse medical officer.

10737. I suppose as a matter of experience you find, do you not, that the fact of the nurses going outside to nurse particular cases tends to make the nurses more satisfied with their position and to remain longer in the service ?—I think in that particular case it has worked admirably.

After effect of Poor Law treatment of phthisis cases

10738. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Is this the case with regard to phthisical patients—that when they are dismissed after long treatment in special institutions, they are averse to taking up regular work again ? I have had experience of one or two, and I have found that it is very hard to make them resume work ?—I have seen a fair number of cases, and I have often been told by different medical officers more particularly by the medical officers of workhouses, that the man becomes, to use the words of a medical officer who spoke to me about this the other day, a "corner" man.

10739. Has that anything to do with the nature of his complaint, or is it merely that he has been kept for six months or a year doing nothing?—This particular medical officer I am speaking of told me that it was in consequence of the attention that the man had received while he was in the sanatorium. The man was told to have so many minutes' rest before his meals, and so many minutes after, and he was not to do this, and he was not to do the other, and being a man of limited education he took these as a sort of axioms by which he ought to live.

Employment of phthisis patients under treatment.

10740. That is exactly what the men I came across did. Did you recommend that there should be employment found for them in the sanatoria ?—Yes, I think that all these people ought to be employed according to their capacity, the capacity to be adjudged by the medical officer only.

10741. It would not impede their treatment necessarily, would it ?—No; I think in some cases it would very materially help their treatment, and help their restoration to health.

10742. Is there any employment at all for them in the present sanitoria ?—At Heswall when I was there, there was nothing but games for these people to occupy themselves with. I am not quite sure about the Bradford sanitorium, as it was sometime since I was there.

10743. (Mr. Bentham.) There is a large garden there, and all of them who are suitable for it are employed in garden work ?—I was not aware of that at the moment.

10744. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Really there appears to be a great danger that we are creating a much more dangerous disease than that which we are curing, if we turn them out hopelessly pauperised ?—That is another point which goes off my particular province, I think.

10745. Could this be enforced in these sanitoria—could they be made to work, or might the work perhaps be put to them as part of the treatment ?—I think it ought to be left entirely to the local medical officer. He is the best judge whether they can be made to work, or should be asked to work in any way.

Child mortality in Poor Law institutions.

10746. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to the children that you referred to who are in the workhouse, is there any return of the deaths of children in poor law institutions which one could set against the deaths outside the poor law institutions ?—Not in the provinces, so far as I know.

10747. Would it throw light upon this question of mortality in workhouses, so far as children are concerned, if we could get that informotion ?—I obtained the information for the purposes of the report which I have quoted in my memorandum for the five years previous to 1896.

10748. Would it be difficult to bring it up to date ?—I should be obliged to have a special instruction from the Local Government Board to bring out a corresponding report.

Mortali statistic institut

10749. I wanted to draw your attention to the fact that the deaths in institutions such as hospitals have increased as well as the deaths in poor law institutions, so that it is not remarkable so far as the poor law is concerned merely ?—That is so, and I did not wish to emphasise that point at all. My purpose in obtaining the return as regards the deaths in workhouses was to use it as a lever in urging the guardians to provide better nursing accommodation as well as nurses, because we could not expect the nurses to stay in these particular places where they were so much wanted if there was not good accommodation for the nurses to live in.

10750. The argument is that the Poor Law is being very much more used by people in their old age or infirmity than it used to be; hence a large number of deaths; but that is equally true of hospitals relatively speaking, is it not ?—I think so decidedly.

10751. As far as the figures go, I mean ?—Certainly I should say so. The difference is a matter of personal observation. I have noticed in the last thirteen years that the class of case coming into a workhouse infirmary is very much more a class requiring the constant care of a nurse by night and day. They are very often brought into a workhouse infirmary within the last few weeks of their life, if not within the last few days of their life.

Child mortalit and its preventa bility.

10752. If a return of deaths in childhood were possible, could the form of it be that of Dr. Tatham's last return, which gives the numbers according to age, under one year, and so on, taking the same grouping of sicknesses ?—Yes, and I think it ought to be done in that way; it ought to be comparable with the ordinary returns for the whole country.

10753. Is it your opinion that a good many of the deaths are avoidable, so far as the diseases are concerned, among the children ?—Certainly, without any doubt. I may say that for twenty years past I have made a particular study, so to speak, of this very question, and that I have become more and more convinced that, I was going to say 80 per cent. of the deaths of children under one year of age are due to preventable causes.

10754. Are you speaking now of the children in workhouse infirmaries ?—Anywhere, not necessarily in the workhouse; but as my particular province is in the workhouse, I naturally direct my attention to them.

10755. (Mr. Booth.) Is that true of the rich as well as of the poor ?—It is to a certain extent.

10756. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to another branch of the question—for we must look at it, as far as this Commission is concerned, not merely from the point of view of the Poor Law—do you think that an improvement could be arrived at by such an arrangement as this, that some paper, or statement, on the subject should be issued by all hospitals similar to this which you have referred to in your memorandum, and that it might have some currency as being more or less officially sanctioned?—Yes, it could be done easily, and I think it would very probably help.

Instructi in child rearing.

10757. Has anything been done to your knowledge by way of, not merely the relieving officers, but any officers of the Poor Law who have to do with mothers who are in receipt of out-door relief, and others, giving them this information ?—In some areas the relieving officer, or the vaccination officer, has directions to issue a form of instruction to mothers how to feed and clothe their children; and that form of instruction is usually prepared by the medical officer of health. I am glad to say that the majority of medical officers of health throughout the country are looking upon this as a public health question, and so all classes, of course, are reached. What I lay stress upon is that we have in the workhouse nursery a focus or a centre for the dissemination of practical knowledge how these children ought to be fed, and therefore we ought to avail ourselves to the utmost possible extent of that.

10758. As to what I may call the medical organisation of the future, which you in a manner led up to, as I understand it you would desire that the incurable cases should be dealt with as far as possible by the Poor Law ?—Yes. I regard it that the incurable cases can never earn their own living, and therefore they must be provided for by the only authority that there is, and that is the Poor Law authority.

10759. On the other hand, the curable cases should be dealt with by the other agencies ?—Yes.

10760. If that is to be the policy, what steps could we take ? Would you desire that there should be an understanding in any of our large provincial towns as between the Poor Law and the voluntary institutions that they should reject the one case and take the other as a matter of course ?—I think that might easily be arrived at, because it would be a matter for the jurisdiction of the medical officer of health ?

10761. The medical officer of health, or rather the health organisation of the community, would deal with the infectious diseases, scarlet fever, and the rest as a group ?—Yes.

10762. Then apart from them phthisis might, or might not, be added to that list ?—Exactly.

10763. Then apart from that, the voluntary hospitals might take all the curable diseases. How would you arrange that ? Would you be able to come to an understanding with a non-statutory body to limit itself in this manner ?—I do not think you could do that precisely; but I think that an arrangement could be made, though not a definite understanding.

10764. Why should we not go a step further and give the hospitals a status, leaving them voluntary, but requiring them especially to deal with this class of case, or rather recognising them as institutions for dealing with this class of case, but not as receiving any grants from the State ?—If a case came under the Poor Law I should say that the Poor Law guardians ought to be able, as they are at present, to subscribe to these sanatoria and have the call of so many beds.

10765. By subscribing to a general hospital ?—Yes, or to any other similar institution, not a Poor Law institution.

10766. Would not it be possible, by an arrangement on the lines I have suggested, to refer these cases to the hospitals, and make it their responsibility to deal with them without any grant necessarily from the Poor Law ? —Yes, if it were made purely and simply a public health matter.

10767. If that were so, could not the organisation which you say is available take any form which would be satisfactory to your own conditions; so that, instead of the infirmary being made a rate-aided hospital, you would be able to recognise voluntary institutions as doing work which it would be dangerous under your conditions for the rate-aided hospitals to do ?—In relation to phthisis cases only, do you mean ?

10768. In relation to all disease ?—In relation to all infectious diseases, yes.

10769. And to all curable diseases ?—I would say that it would be possible, but I do not think it would be probable under present conditions.

10770. Do you hold out to us any line of development in accordance with your own limitations other than that ? —I believe, more particularly in the north of England, that the feeling is altogether in the direction that these infirmaries are, as it were, adjuncts to the voluntary hospitals, and are not Poor Law institutions.

10771. That they are not Poor Law institutions ?—Yes, although they are provided out of the rates. I believe that is the undercurrent that is every now and then coming to the surface.

10772. And that the infirmaries should take the incurable cases ?—Yes; and the cases that there is no room for in the local general hospitals. I believe that is what is giving rise to the suggestions which come up from time to time to the Local Government Board that we delete any reference to paupers, or poor persons, in the orders that are issued for the government of these infirmaries.

10773. Then the outcome of that would be a kind of medical organisation which would include a rate-aided infirmary for the incurable and a voluntary institution for the curable ?—It would practically come to that; but also practically it would come to this, that cases would be continually coming into these rate-aided infirmaries which were not incurable, but would be sent there merely because there was no room for them in the voluntary hospitals.

10774. If that difficulty could be met in any way, there would be a distribution of labour on those lines ?—I think it is a matter for regret that there is not an extension of the voluntary hospitals.

Phthisis cases in general hospitals.

10775. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Is there not a practice springing up in some parts of England of treating phthisical cases in the vacant wards of general hospitals ? I refer to a practice which I understand has been followed in Brighton, judging from what I read the other day of what Dr. Newsholme is doing there; where there are vacant wards in the general hospital, these vacant wards are now being utilised for cases of phthisis ?—I believe that is the case, but I do not know it of my own knowledge.

10776. Would you approve of that ?—There I think you would have to judge whether these wards might not be called upon in some sudden emergency to be used for some other purpose. What would you do with your phthisical cases then ?

10777. Of course, it is only during the time when these wards are vacant that they could be utilised. Small pox hospitals also, when there are no small pox cases, are being used for phthisical cases, I understand ?—I cannot speak of my own knowledge as to that.

Provision of drugs.

10778. As regards the drugs, is there in England any practice of paying a fixed sum to the medical officer or to a druggist for drugs, as well as the practice of including the cost of the drugs in the salary of the medical officer; does that obtain anywhere here ?—Speaking off the "papers" at the Local Government Board, I am not in a position to say.

10779. Is it the general practice to include the cost of the drugs in the salary of the medical officer ?—Yes.

Basis of Officers' "Grant."

10780. You have suggested, I think, that that is a system which should be abolished if possible, and also that there ought to be some power of revising the salaries of the medical officers; and I think you have further suggested that in London the salaries of the medical officers are calculated to a certain extent on the grant which is given under the Act of 1888 ?—That was in answer to a statement that was put before me by Dr. Downes, but I have no knowledge that that is so. It does not come within my duty as medical inspector in the provinces.

10781. Can you say whether the rules and conditions under which that grant is administered following upon the Act of 1888, are stereotyped under that Act ?—I think that there has been no addition to the sums allocated to the different unions since 1888.

Abolition of pauper Nurses in Workhouses.

10782. And they may not be altered, because in accordance with the provisions of the Act I understand they are stereotyped until Parliament otherwise directs. The reason why I ask that is that it is so in Scotland also, and the conditions there having very much altered, Parliament has been approached with a view to having this restriction altered. To go to another point, is there any pauper-nursing in the workhouses in England now ? —I know that it has been formally abolished, but de facto is there any ?—No, not officially.

10783. Has it absolutely disappeared ?—Yes.

10784. And is there trained nursing in all the workhouses ?—No, not in all.

10785. Is the matron, as a rule, a trained nurse ?—I should say not frequently.

Trained Nurses as Matrons.

10786. Is there any rule or suggestion that she should, if possible, be a trained nurse ?—There have been suggestions made from time to time. I think that it is a very good arrangement, other things being equal, where it is not possible to retain the services of a trained nurse, that the matron should be a trained nurse.

Period of training for Nurses.

10787. Have you had your attention directed to the question of the standard of training nurses, and to the question whether the present minimum of two years' training should be maintained or increased ?—We have a minimum of three years in all our large workhouse infirmaries in the country. In all that we call the "recognised" schools the three years' training is the limit and there is no two years' training.

Dr. Andrew Fuller.

24 April 1906.

Public Institutions for Phthisis.

10788. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to the establishment of institutions for phthisical cases, there are one or two that have been authorised to be established, are there not?—There are two in the provinces.

10789. The Local Government Board have not shown any indisposition to authorise them in the provinces, supposing application has been made, have they?—No. If the guardians can show a very good reason for their establishment, they have permission to provide the accommodation.

Type of Rural Medical Officers.

10790. (Mr. Booth.) I think you mentioned in reply to Mr. Lansbury that in some of the rural districts the medical officers might be not so highly qualified or so skilful as they ought to be, did you not?—I do not think I put it quite in that way. I meant that the personal element entered so largely there that the man was not quite of such good standing professionally or socially in some of the rural unions.

10791. What I want to ask is whether you consider that they have as good talent as is available in the district, or do the more qualified men refuse to take the position?—I have known instances where the better qualified man has refused to apply for the appointment, and a man who is not considered to be "quite the thing" has been appointed.

10792. Would that be at all a general characteristic?—You can apply it to parts of the country, but not to the country as a whole.

10793. That would be partly due to the low remuneration I take it?—Yes, I think so.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Monday, 30th April, 1906.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I., etc., etc., etc. (Chairman).

The Right Hon. Sir HENRY A. ROBINSON, K.C.B.
The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S.
Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.
Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
Mr. FRANCIS CHANDLER.
Dr. A. H. DOWNES.
The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
Mr. C. S. LOCH.
Mr. J. PATTEN-MACDOUGALL.
Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.
The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.
Professor WILLIAM SMART.
The Rev. H. RUSSELL WAKEFIELD.
Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.
Miss OCTAVIA HILL.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary).

Mr. HERBERT JENNER-FUST, called; and Examined.

Mr. Herbert Jenner-Fust.

30 April 1906.

10794. (Chairman). You have been one of the general inspectors of the Local Government Board since 1884?—I have.

10795. You were appointed inspector for the Lancashire district in 1892?—I was.

10796. During that time there have been fluctuations in the pauperism of your district, but the tendency has been upwards, has it not?—Until quite recently.

10797. That is during the last few months?—Yes.

Effect of administration and of Local Government Act of 1894 on pauperism.

10798. As regards the difference in the ratio of pauperism in parts of your district, you attribute a good deal of that difference to the administration?—I do.

10799. Has the Act of 1894 had any effect upon the principles of outdoor relief?—In some instances outdoor relief has been given more freely since 1894.

10800. Has it generally affected the returns?—No, I do not think I am prepared to say that it has.

Conditions in Prestwich in 1891.

10801. You give an illustration in your memorandum, which, according to our practice, we will take as your evidence-in-chief (see Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. XXII. (A to D)), of a district where pauperism has risen very considerably, Prestwich. Could you shortly state what occurred there? Was there any special cause that led to the change in administration, or any special elections?—I do not think so. I think the change has come rather quickly. For instance, in 1892 the total pauperism was 1,063. In 1906 it had risen to 2,929. Of course, there had been a considerable increase in the population during that time, but the proportion of paupers to population in 1892 was 1 in 141, and in 1906 it was 1 in 67.

10802. The ratio had more than doubled itself?—Yes.

10803. Was this mainly in the outdoor relief?—The indoor relief had risen between those dates from 368 to 871, and the outdoor from 695 to 2,058. The out door had increased more in proportion.

10804. So far as you know, there were no material changes in the condition of the district?—Nothing, I think, to account for that.

10805. Is Prestwich a district outside Manchester?—Prestwich is mainly a part of Manchester.

Instance of successful large Poor Law school.

10806. Passing to the 18th paragraph of your memorandum, you say you have one school of the barrack type?—Yes.

10807. What has been the result of that school: has it been unsatisfactory or satisfactory?—The results have been extremely good until within the last two years, when there has been a serious outbreak of ophthalmia; otherwise the results of the school have been excellent; the children have done well in after-life.

After care of Poor Law children.

10808. (Mr. Gardiner.) Are records kept of the career of the children subsequent to their leaving the school?—To a great extent.

10809. This is the first case in which we have been told there have been records kept?—I would not like to say in every case, but in a number of instances the subsequent career is known. A few years ago the jubilee of the school was kept, and the old boys and girls came back in very large numbers indeed to assist at the celebration, showing they took an interest in it and did not look down upon it in any way.

10810. (Chairman.) What is the size of the school?—It is a school for about 600.

Grouped cottage homes for children.

10811. A good many unions have adopted the system of grouped cottage homes?—Yes.

10812. Has that system worked well?—Yes, I think that has worked very well.

10813. The Roman Catholics have made special provision for their children, and I gather from your memorandum that they have established schools for the reception of pauper children only; is that so?—Almost entirely for that.

10814. So far as you know, what effect has that had on the results in after life of the children?—It is rather early to judge, because some of these schools have only been opened for a few years. I do not think I am prepared to give any opinion as to the after career.

10815. It has been put forward by several of the preceding witnesses that it is very advisable, as regards school life, to remove, if possible, the taint of pauperism from the children, but under this system they would be known as pauper children?—Yes. If I may say so, in these separate schools, cottage homes and others, the question of pauperism does not seem to exist; the children consider themselves by no means as paupers, the name is hardly ever used, and they look down upon the workhouse and consider themselves entirely independent of it.

10816. They as a rule attend the ordinary elementary schools?—Do you mean in the certified homes?

10817. No, in these grouped cottages?—Some do; not the larger ones.

10818. They have schools of their own?—Yes.

10819. They are just on the same footing, then, as the Roman Catholic schools?—In that way, yes, only that the Roman Catholic schools are more of the barrack type than the others.

10820. The remainder of your memorandum, I think, mainly deals with very strong recommendations as regards the advisability of extending the areas?—Yes.

10821. You give a number of illustrations of the success which has attended combinations in the neighbourhood of Liverpool and Manchester?—Yes.

10822. I think you express the opinion that, in your judgment, even West Derby Union, large as it is, is not large enough for successful combination.—Yes.

10823. You conclude your memorandum by making a number of recommendations which would result in the County of Westmorland being one union. Have you ever tested at all what local opinion would be with regard to such a proposal?—I have, to a limited extent, and the local opinion, I think, invariably is that they each prefer to have their workhouse, however small.

10824. The opposition to combination would, I assume be less strong in urban than in rural districts?—I think so.

10825. Your suggestion was that in the very big towns the areas of the board of guardians should be co-terminous with the municipal area?—Yes.

10826. I think you suggest an election on the same day both for the town council and the board of guardians?—Yes.

10827. At present there is nothing to prevent boards of guardians combining their areas if they can get the assent of the Local Government Board?—Nothing, I believe.

10828. If there is a strong local opposition, the suggestion you make would have to be carried out by an Act of Parliament, and the opinion of the locality would have to be over-ridden?—Yes.

10829. Is not that a very serious objection now?—I take it that is the objection that obtained in 1834 to the formation of unions. I think the combination of parishes into unions had to be done compulsorily.

10830. The areas would be much larger. Take the case of the rural workhouses; the relatives now are within a reasonable distance of those who are within the workhouses, and they can see them periodically. That would be very much more difficult under your scheme?—Yes, but the means of locomotion have so increased since the existing workhouses were formed that the visiting would not be nearly so difficult as some years ago.

10831. You have looked on this mainly from an administrative point of view, based on your great experience?—I have looked upon it in this way, if I may explain briefly: that public opinion seems to demand classification of the indoor poor, besides the main classification laid down in the general consolidated order; guardians are called upon to classify according to diseases; to separate the phthisical, and the scrofulous; to separate the ophthalmic; to divide imbeciles from the sane, and sane from insane epileptics, and to make various subdivisions of the kind, which it seems to me it is impossible to obtain with the existing areas.

Classification and economy obtainable by increasing size of Poor Law areas for indoor relief.

10832. To put it in another way, an effective scheme of classification is impossible under the existing areas?—Yes.

10833. You think that a thorough system of classification would tend rather to economy than to increased expenditure?—I think it should.

Proposed general grant-in-aid from Exchequer to Poor Law authorities.

10834. Your idea is that the Imperial Exchequer should make a certain contribution towards the authority of these larger areas?—It seemed to me that any contributions the State might make would be more easily given to a large area than if they had to be distributed and divided among a number of small areas.

10835. Have you thought out at all whether this contribution should be in the shape of a lump sum or whether it should be earmarked for certain specific purposes?—At present there are various contributions for specific purposes which might be increased if it were thought just.

10836. If a contribution is made in connection with a specific purpose, it has been hinted that the tendency is rather to run up the expenditure, or to increase the number of persons upon which payment can be obtained?—Yes; I think my idea was a lump sum towards the in-maintenance, to be administered by the county board of guardians, without being definitely given to any particular object.

Proposed administration of out-relief by the district councils.

10837. Assuming that the county authority or the central authority were able to administer or control the institutions, how would you deal with out-door relief?—I would have relief administered by the existing boards of guardians, or, if it were thought possible, by the district councils. Applications would be made to them; they would have the control of the relieving officers and of the district medical officers; they would decide whether a case was to be relieved by out-relief or in-door relief, and in the case of the out-door relief they themselves would pay; in the case of in-door relief the individual would be handed over, if the offer of the house was accepted, to the central authority; the county board of guardians.

10838. The out-relief would be a charge on the district?—Yes.

10839. (Mr. Booth.) On the smaller district?—Yes.

10840-1. (Chairman.) Whatever the local unit was?—Either on the existing union or upon the district council, if that was adopted or whatever the area might be.

Need for consolidation of Poor Laws and Orders.

10842. You make also some recommendations with regard to certain miscellaneous points. I think most of those have been before us and have been advocated by preceding witnesses. You think there is a need for a consolidation of the poor law and the orders of the Local Government Board?—I do.

10843. And a clearer definition of some of the terms?—I do not know that I have felt that particular objection, but the main point, to me, is that guardians and their officers have the greatest difficulty, as things are, in ascertaining what Acts and orders are actually in force; they are scattered about, and there are a large number of amending Acts and orders which are apt to be overlooked.

10844. There are a great many benefit societies and co-operative societies in Lancashire?—Yes.

10845. Have they increased much, do you know, during your tenure of office?—I am afraid I could not say.

Increased freedom in workhouses and resultant decrease of deterrence of relief.

10846. Have the deterrents to pauperism lost their effect at all in recent years?—I think in a few instances the greater freedom that has been given to inmates of workhouses has tended to diminish the deterrent influence By "freedom" I mean more freedom in receiving visits.

Mr. Herbert Jenner-Fust.

30 April 1906.

from their friends and going in and out when they feel inclined.

10847. That loss of liberty which prevailed in previous years was a considerable deterrent?—It was almost the only deterrent that existed in the case of the aged and infirm; the conditions under which they are maintained are much more comfortable than in their own homes; it is only the discipline, it seems to me, that exercises a deterrent influence at all.

Comparative stigma of in- and out-relief.

10848. I assume that you would corroborate other witnesses who state that a great difference exists, in the minds of those who may be compelled to have recourse to the poor law, between out-door relief and in-door relief?—Yes. There is a stigma attached to in-door relief which is conceived not to exist in the case of out-door relief.

Publication of list of paupers.

10849. Do any of the Lancashire unions publish a list of those in receipt of out-door relief?—I think only two or three at the outside.

10850. Turning to your statistics, there are only one or two unions where the rate of pauperism is extraordinarily low as compared with others. In your Return of the number of paupers, if you look half way down the page, the proportion in The Fylde Union is one to 141 and 118 of the population; and if you look down the list generally there are only two other unions where, in the period from 1900 to 1904, the proportion was one to over 100, and at 1st January 1905, one to over ninety. Is there anything exceptional in the condition of those three unions? They are The Fylde, Haslingden, and Lancaster?—The Fylde has Blackpool, which is very populous and very prosperous and has a large population without much pauperism. I think that tends to keep down pauperism, but I would attribute the low rate to the administration mainly. Prestwich, when I first remember it, had as low a pauperism as The Fylde, or very nearly, and now it has increased considerably.

Conditions in The Fylde, Haslingden, and Lancaster Unions.

10851. What about Haslingden and Lancaster?—Haslingden, I think, is entirely due to administration; the relief has been strictly administered there for a number of years; and as to Lancaster, I do not know of any other cause to which to attribute it, except administration.

The problems of suburban unions.

10852. Have you round the big towns any very poor districts which are caused by the migration of the wage-earning classes from the centre of the populous districts?—Both in Liverpool and in Manchester the poor population is being pushed from the centre, which is being more and more occupied by offices, to the outside districts, and in the case of Liverpool it is invading the West Derby Union to a great extent, and in the case of Manchester, the Chorlton and Prestwich Unions.

10853. Are those unions outside the municipal boundaries of the big towns from which the people are forced?—Only partially.

10854. Have you any knowledge whether there has been any great difficulty there as regards rating in consequence of the increase of rates in these districts?—I have not heard of any particular difficulty beyond the usual complaints when rates go up.

10855. The tendency, we are told, of these districts which augment thus rapidly is that the Poor Rate remains low for a certain period, but the school rate is very high; then in course of time the Poor Law rate rises also and forms a combination which some of these poor districts find it rather difficult to bear. You are not aware of any districts of that kind in Lancashire?—I do not think to any excessive degree.

Effect on pauperism of Workmen's Compensation Act.

10856. Have you noticed, or have you been told, that the Workmen's Compensation Act has at all affected the age at which people lose employment?—Yes, I have heard of that constantly: that men over fifty can hardly get occupation.

10857. You were in Lancashire before the Workmen's Compensation Act came into operation, I think: have you noticed any difference yourself, in the workhouses, as regards the younger age of those who are unable to get employment and thus fall back on to the Poor Law?—No, I do not know that I have noticed it.

10858. What you are stating is the impression formed in your mind by the general opinion of those whom you have heard speak of the matter?—Yes. I hear it constantly mentioned as a thing to be regretted.

10859. That particular feature of the Act?—Yes.

Mutual waiver of settlement in certain unions; effect of total abolition.

10860. It has been suggested to us that the law of settlement might be abolished, inasmuch as now the main qualification is only one year's residence: have you any views on the subject of settlement?—I venture to point out in my scheme for enlarging the areas that the area might be enlarged to the county, as far as the indoor poor are concerned; but in large towns, in Manchester and in Liverpool, the three Poor Law authorities, which in each case make up those cities, by agreement do not remove against each other, except in the case of lunatics.

10861. What are the unions?—Liverpool, West Derby and Toxteth Park are the three unions in Liverpool; Manchester, Chorlton and Prestwich in Manchester.

10862. Are there many applicants, for instance, in Liverpool, whose settlement is in a union outside the three unions you have just mentioned?—Yes.

10863. How would Liverpool be affected if the law of settlement was abolished?—I hardly know.

10864. It would be in places of that kind, I assume, that the most difficulty and inconvenience would arise?—Liverpool, of course, is subject to a number of outsiders being landed and being or becoming destitute and having to be relieved there.

10865. You would hardly go so far as to advocate the abolition of the law of settlement?—I do not think I would.

10866. But the increased area, of course, would largely reduce the number of contentious cases relating to settlement?—Yes, so far as in-door cases are concerned.

Roman Catholic certified Poor Law schools.

10867. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to these large Roman Catholic certified schools, is it the case that they do not take in any persons except paupers?—The great majority are paupers, and the schools are established really to deal with certain unions, but they do have others from outside in much smaller numbers.

Question of boarding out of children by the managers of certified schools.

10868. Have you ever known of any case where the managers of a certified school have boarded out children who were sent there?—I do not think I have known of any such instances, in my district.

10869. Do the managers keep records showing what children are sent from particular unions which the inspector can see when he visits the school—Yes, we have those now, but, as a rule only recently, certificates of health are sent now with every child to most of these schools.

10870. Would you know anything about it supposing a child was sent there and was boarded-out by the managers and not really kept within the institution itself?—It might easily be done without my knowledge, I think.

10871. You do not know of any case where it has happened?—No, I do not think of any case in my district.

Combination of unions and their difficulties.

10872. You have had one or two cases of combinations of unions under the Poor Law Act of 1879?—Yes.

10873. Have they worked pretty well?—Yes, I think quite well.

10874. You had some little difficulty in forming them had you not?—There was a difficulty as to how the expenditure was to be charged.

10875. As to the apportionment, I suppose?—As to the apportionment and as to the committees being allowed to charge the rates on their own responsibility. That was got over by arranging that each joint committee should call upon the constituent unions for what it required, and that each union should then decide whether it would raise any part of what was called for by loan, supposing it to be for a purpose for which they could borrow money, or whether they would pay the contribution out of the current rate.

10876. You have not got any outdoor relief unions in your district, have you?—No, none.

10877. You have not had any occasion to consider how they work?—No, I have not.

Difficulty of making the county the Poor Law area for indoor relief.

10878. The plan that you were suggesting just now, of having the county as the area for indoor relief, and a smaller area for outdoor relief, would come to pretty much the same thing as having out-relief unions, would it not?—Yes, I suppose it would. I am not very familiar with the working of these out-relief unions.

10879. Quite so, not having them in your own district. Then, taking the question of having a large area, supposing the county was the area for indoor relief, do you think there would be a risk of the guardians wanting to send an undue number of cases into the workhouse if outdoor relief was a union charge and indoor relief was a county charge ?—I think it would tend to a strict administration of relief.

10880. Do you think the county would be a good area for the purpose ?—Some counties, not all.

10881. Do you consider the difference there is in the areas of the different counties ? Are they not very large in extent in point of acreage ?—Yes.

10882. Would they not be very large ; take Somersetshire, for instance, which has an acreage of more than 1,000,000 acres ?—I do not anticipate any real difficulty.

10883. How often would you propose that there should be a meeting of the central authority for the county ?—I do not suppose the whole body would meet very often, but committees would meet frequently as in the case of the county councils.

10884. Is it not one of the difficulties in the administration by county councils that they meet so seldom ?—The tendency, I suppose, is to throw more of the work into the hands of officials.

10885. And that it is difficult to get expressions of opinions from a county council because they only meet once in three months ?—Yes, but the different committees of the council meet more often than that.

10886. Is the committee to represent the whole area or only a part of it ?—I think there would be committees for areas.

10887. Then it would not be administration, would it, by the whole county, it would only be administration by representatives of a part of the county ?—That is really what takes place in the present administration of the poor law, it is mainly, in the large unions, carried on by committees.

10888. But I thought the proposal was to get administration by representatives of a larger area ?—Yes.

10889. Could you get that ?—I think you would as a matter of general policy.

10890. Take another point, the visitation. Who do you propose should visit the institutions ? I think they would be visited in the same way that the asylums are now.

10891. Would that be by representatives of the particular area in which the institution is situate ?—I think very probably it would be, as a matter of convenience.

10892. It is stated that one of the advantages of the present system, under which the workhouse in a rural union is generally in the market town, is that the friends of the paupers come in on the market days, and therefore they have an opportunity of visiting their friends in the workhouse, and it is suggested if there is a larger area that that opportunity would be lost. Do you think there is anything in that ?—I think that opportunity no doubt would be lost, but I think the advantages more than compensate for that drawback.

10893. Supposing a pauper's relatives are one end of a county, and the institution is the other end is not the difficulty of getting there very considerable ?—Yes, but we constantly find sick poor sent to the hospitals at a considerable distance, where their friends can hardly ever see them.

10894. Are they sent there for long ?—Yes, very often for a considerable time ; a number of weeks or even months.

10895. I am not sure what hospitals you had in your mind ?—I mean voluntary hospitals.

10896. Is it not rather different in the case of a workhouse where an aged person may be taken in for the rest of his life ?—Yes, I think it is, but you would not, in the case of a county, have only a single workhouse for the aged, you would have several in a large county, and the individuals from the localities would be sent probably to the nearest as far as possible.

10897. Take a case like Westmorland where the population is small, even there would the workhouses practically be at any considerable distance from each other, taking into account the difficulty of access on account of intervening mountains and so forth ?—I do not think so because the population tends to live in the valleys, and the railroads occupy the valleys, and the central workhouse for Westmorland would be, I think, quite reasonably accessible. It occurred to me also that the Paupers' Conveyance Expenses Act, and the corresponding Order, might, if necessary, be extended in order to facilitate visiting where it was thought desirable.

The payment of costs of visits of paupers' friends.

10898. If the expenses of the friends who go to visit the paupers are to be paid out of the rates that would make a considerably increased charge, would it not ?—There is that power as you are aware now.

10899. Yes, in certain circumstances. Of course, the expenses would be much greater in proportion as the distance increased ?—Yes.

Unions in more than one county or borough.

10900. Do you remember that a Report was made by a Commission which was appointed in 1887 with a view to bringing unions into counties, for making unions and counties co-extensive in the sense that there should be no over-lapping of boundaries ?—Yes.

10901. Was anything attempted in Lancashire to give effect to that Report ?—Yes, a good deal was done, and boundaries were very largely simplified.

10902. Was there much opposition ?—No, I do not think there was.

10903. How far do the unions come within the county ? Have you got much overlapping ?—No, there is not much. Clitheroe and Ashton-under-Lyne are the two which overlap.

10904. There has been some endeavour at Manchester to combine the unions so as to make the whole of the city one poor law union ?—It is supposed that the City Council have that in view, but it has not taken much shape hitherto, and there has also been a proposal to unite Manchester and Salford into one big city. That I believe has fallen through for the present.

10905. Chorlton and Prestwich extend outside the city do they not ?—Yes, to a small extent, not much. They are gradually being absorbed.

Difficulties of combining Poor Law areas.

10906. Do you remember a proposal some years ago that a joint committee of the county council and the borough council should alter those unions, that is to say, should alter the parishes so as to make them all one parish in Manchester ?—Yes, I held an inquiry on the subject. The result of it was to leave the old City of Manchester as one parish, and to combine the northern parishes into one parish, and the southern parishes into another, so that there are now, as it were, three parishes constituting the city.

10907. Was that an instance of the difficulty there is in getting areas altered. The actual alteration made was a sort of compromise, was it not ?—The original proposal was to form a single parish for the whole city 10908. That was objected to, was it not ?—That was objected to.

10909. Therefore, that is an instance, is it not, of the difficulty of getting alteration of areas effected, particularly if it involves any considerable alteration in the incidencies of the charge ?—I think that was the great objection raised to it.

Local Government Board's powerlessness to require building of a new workhouse.

10910. On the last page of your memorandum you say you think there is a lack of power on the part of the Local Government Board to secure proper provision for the indoor poor ; have you anything definite in your mind ?—What I mean is that I think that in the last resort there ought to be power in the Local Government Board to order provision to be made.

10911. That is to say, to order a new workhouse to be built ?—Yes, if necessary.

Mutual waiver of the law of settlement in certain unions.

10912. (Sir Henry Robinson.) You said that there were two large cities where the law of settlement was not put in operation one against the other ?—I mentioned Liverpool and Manchester.

10913. Was that because it was found that the operation of the law produced hardship to the people ?—I think it was because it caused a great deal of expense ; it was almost impossible to carry out ; people were constantly shifting from one side of the line to the other, and the litigation caused was considerable ; and by mutual agreement they settled they would not remove against each other.

Mr. Herbert Jenner-Fust.

30 April 1906.

"Settlement" as between England and Ireland.

10914. No question of hardship arose from the application of the settlement?—I do not think that was the reason.

10915. Do you think either of those cities would be inclined to go further, and extend the same to Irish paupers? Do you think the feeling is very strong in favour of putting the Law of Settlement in operation with regard to the Irish paupers?—I have not come across that much.

10916. There are a good number of Irish paupers, are there not, sent from those two cities to Ireland?—I could not answer that with any accuracy.

10917. Can you give me any information as to how they determine whether these paupers are really of Irish birth?—I cannot.

10918. Or what is the nature of the inquiry made?—I am afraid I cannot.

10919. Is the law of settlement put in operation to a very great extent in these cities? Are these two cities you have mentioned the only ones where it is suspended?—They are the only ones I know of.

10920. Are there many cases which come up from time to time?—There would be a large number.

Procedure for setting in motion the law of settlement.

10921. In the ordinary unions do these questions come before the boards of guardians at their daily meetings?—Yes, they do. But as a rule they are simply referred to the clerk to deal with as he finds; to make the inquiries and act upon them.

10922. But can a case be removed by the clerk without the direct instructions of the board of guardians, in each particular case, by resolution?—No, I think not.

10923. So the clerk, therefore, makes a report to the guardians, and they order the case to be removed?—He makes a report either that he thinks the guardians ought to contest the case, or that the case is settled in their union, and they had better accept it.

10924. The clerk cannot deal with them on his own initiative on general instructions from the guardians?—No, I think not.

10925. May the clerk litigate?—No, I think not.

Mutual waiver of the law of settlement in certain unions.

10926. (Mr. Booth.) I understood that this modification as to the settlement merely referred to the inter-communication of the three great divisions of which Liverpool and Manchester each consist. It is not an abrogation of the law of settlement altogether, but the non-application to the three unions which form each of those cities. Is that right?—Yes; they do not remove as against each other.

10927. It is not as between Liverpool and Manchester, but in Liverpool as between West Derby, Toxteth and Liverpool itself, and as regards Manchester, between Chorlton, Manchester and Prestwich?—It is only between the three constituent Poor Law authorities in each case.

10928. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Those that are within the municipal boundaries of Manchester and Liverpool?—The boundaries are not quite the same.

10929. They are practically the municipal boundaries of Liverpool and Manchester?—Nearly so, but the unions project outside.

10930. (Mr. Phelps.) Do I understand that, supposing a pauper becomes chargeable in Liverpool who is really settled in Toxteth Park, the Liverpool guardians make no effort to remove him?—Yes.

Difficulties of allocating State grants to small areas.

10931. It is not that the other people accept him without question?—No, the question is not raised.

10932. (Sir Henry Robinson.) You said, I think, that the State contributions to these unions would be more easily distributed over combined areas?—Would be more easily given to an enlarged area than if they had to be distributed over smaller areas comprised in it.

10933. Why would that be so? Is there any difficulty in the distribution of the money now?—No, but I had in my mind the report of the Local Taxation Commission, who found considerable difficulty in recommending principles upon which State contributions should be given to unions.

10934. Are these State contributions not measured by expenditure under particular heads?—No, they are lump sums at present given to the county authority, and distributed under certain heads by them.

10935. How are these lump sums ascertained?—I do not think I can answer off-hand.

Visitation of children in service up to fifteen.

10936. Are children sent out to service in the large city unions in your district before they reach the age of fifteen years?—Yes, in some instances they are, in others they are kept.

10937. Is any inquiry made by the guardians from time to time as to these children when they are under that age, when they are sent out to service, as to how they are treated?—Yes, they are visited.

10938. Not in cases where they are boarded out, but when they are absolutely discharged and put to service, are they still visited?—Yes, they are still visited by the relieving officer, and very often individual guardians interest themselves and keep the children in view.

10939. Is there no objection made by the persons to whom they are hired out to the visits of the union officer?—Very seldom.

10940. (Mr. Gardiner.) Is not it a condition of service that they should be visited?—Yes, it is the duty of the relieving officer to visit.

10941. The guardians would not allow a girl of fifteen to go to a particular place except on condition that the relieving officer should be allowed to visit at visiting times?—The duty arises immediately the child is sent out.

10942. And the person employing the child knows that condition before?—Yes.

Question of reduction of size of boards of guardians.

10943. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Boards of guardians generally consist of very large numbers, from forty, to seventy or eighty?—Yes.

10944. Do you think that is a workable administrative body?—No, I think it is too large.

10945. What suggestions have you to make with a view to removing those difficulties?—It is difficult to say. The fixing of the number is in the hands of the county councils.

10946. I suppose the most simple way of doing it would be to group parishes, would it not?—Yes.

10947. And to give the group a representation by one guardian instead of, as I understand at present is the case (I may be wrong), each parish having a representative on the board?—There is power to unite one parish to another for the purpose of an election of guardians, but I do not think there is power to combine three. You can combine two, but not three.

10948. Would you suggest that such power should be provided?—I think it would be useful, but the difficulty is that, except in the shape of an application for an increased representation, the fixing of the number does not come before the county council.

10949. However arrived at, would it not be a good thing that that power should be provided?—I think so.

10950. With a view of making the board of guardians a more workable and businesslike body than they appear to be at present?—I think so. The smallest board, I have, I think, is Manchester, which consists of nineteen guardians including co-opted members.

10951. That is for the Manchester union?—Yes.

10952. How is it that the board is so small there?—I do not know; it has always been so.

10953. (Mrs. Webb.) The Manchester representatives used to be elected at large, not by wards. They are still elected at large?—I think they are. The area only consists of one parish, the old parish of Manchester, or the old City of Manchester.

10954. It used to be under a Local Act in the olden days?—I think it was.

10955. The overseers are still under a Local Act?—Yes, the overseers are.

10956. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) When applications are made for relief, I see you state as a rule those applications come before committees of boards of guardians?—Yes.

Effect of guardians administering relief to paupers from their own constituency.

10957. Is it your view, as has been represented to us by several of the inspectors whom we have had before us, that it frequently happens that some of these guardians are instigated in giving relief by influences which are brought to bear upon them from the parishes which they themselves represent, or that they desire to rather favour applications which come from their own parishes. Is that your experience?—The guardians who administer relief on these committees are generally the guardians for the places of which the relief district consists. I think the effect of that is to make them more willing to give than they otherwise would be. It is easier to say "No" to somebody else's neighbour than it is to say "No" to your own next-door neighbour.

10958. That does not seem to be the best method of administration. Have you any suggestion to make by way of altering it?—I do not think I have, for the reasons that, even if you alter the constitution of the committees, you cannot secure the attendance of guardians from a distance. In many instances these committees have been mixed, as they call it, have been composed so as to include guardians from outside the relief district.

10959. When a case comes before these Committees does the applicant himself appear, as a rule?—Yes.

10960. The Committee then deals with the case, and the Committee's decision is final, is it?—Practically it is. In theory it has to be confirmed by the Board, and some Boards, the Manchester Board for instance, and others also, have rules, and if relief is given contrary to those rules, the case has specially to be brought before the whole Board to be confirmed or otherwise.

spective isdiction com- ttees and ole Boards guardians to adminis- ing relief.

10961. When the question comes before the whole Board is the relieving officer present, the same relieving officer who was present before the Committee; if so, has he an opportunity of stating his view of the case?—I am not quite sure that I have ever heard a case opposed under those conditions. As a rule I should say the relieving officer is not present.

10962. Taking the general question, do you think it would be the right thing that there should be a power of appeal, either by the applicant himself if he does not get what he thinks he is entitled to, or by the relieving officer if he thinks the applicant is getting more than he is entitled to? Do you think it would be well to have a power of appeal from the decision of the Committee to the whole Board?—I do not think the appeal should come from the relieving officer. It would be appealing from the decision of part of his employers to the whole of his employers; but it might come from individual members of the Committee.

10963. I do not desire to call it an appeal, but that he should state the case which he has represented originally and which has been over-ruled?—I think at present any individual member of the Committee might bring the case before the whole Board; there is nothing to prevent that.

10964. I do not understand that that system prevails generally, but would you approve of such a system being introduced, if it does not prevail generally, the power, that is, of appealing against the decision of a Committee? I think the power already exists, but it is very seldom that it is used.

10965. You tell us, in paragraph 19, that there are only, in your district, as I take it, thirty-two children boarded-out outside the union?—That was the return given by the clerks in 1904.

all number children arded-out thout the ion and asons there- .

10966. Apparently the system of boarding-out children outside the union scarcely exists in your district?—Very little of it.

10967. Is there any reason for that that you can state?—In the case of Liverpool, they tried it and they did not like it. At one time they had 100 children, I think, boarded out, but they were not satisfied, and they did not board out any more, and the number gradually fell away.

10968. Can you inform us why that was: what reasons operated to induce Liverpool to give up the system?—I cannot give you a special reason.

10969. Was it the difficulty of getting homes?—No, I think they were not satisfied with the results of the system.

10970. It did not suit the children, or they did not benefit by it?—They thought they could do better for the children in their own schools.

10971. It is a very much more expensive system in their own schools, is it not?—Yes, per child.

10972. We have been informed by Miss Mason that in Westmorland and Cumberland, which I think are both within your district, there are a great many boarded out children from other parts of England?—Yes.

10973. Apparently the system does not appeal to the boards of guardians in the district in which these children are boarded out?—That is so.

10974. And the reason, as I understand you, is that the children have not benefited to the extent that they do in the scattered homes and other grouped homes where they are at present being put. Is that so?—My answer just now referred to the reduction in the number boarded-out by Liverpool, but I think that answer would apply generally to Lancashire.

10975. Has the system of inspection that is pursued as regards boarded-out children come under your experience at all?—No, only from reports.

Extravagance in Poor Law buildings and its causes.

10976. You further tell us of a very large expenditure upon buildings and purchase of sites for workhouses, schools and infirmaries. Do you think that the expenditure is more than it ought to be, that there is extravagance in building? Has that come under your notice at all?—I think some of the buildings might have been more cheaply built than they have been—might have been built in a simpler style. Cottage homes, for instance, I think, might be less like villas and more like labourers' cottages than they are.

10977. To whom is the extravagance due? Is it to the boards of guardians, or is it to the methods pursued as regards the architecture?—I think it is perhaps mainly the difficulty of getting an architect to build sufficiently simply. He likes to put up a building that he considers will do him credit, at all events, from the outside.

10978. I think it is also the case that the architect has a percentage, has he not, upon the whole cost of the buildings?—He has, of course.

Mutual waiver of the law of settlement in certain unions.

10979. As regards the question of settlement, I understand you to say that in Liverpool and in Manchester there is a regulation or a system in operation under which no removals are made from one parish of the three parishes in Liverpool to either of the other two parishes, and similarly in Manchester?—Yes, except in the case of lunatics.

10980. That really is, as I understand it, an inter-municipal arrangement; it is an arrangement which exists solely within the municipalities, to take it generally, of Liverpool and Manchester, although the boundaries are not practically the same?—They are arrangements between the Poor Law authorities.

10981. Have you any idea what the cost of settlement litigation in your district is?—No.

Decision of settlement cases by Local Government Board.

10982. Are all cases litigated, or are any of them sent to arbitration by the Local Government Board, there being that power in existence?—Some are so sent; no great number.

10983. To arbitration?—By the Local Government Board, yes.

10984. Do you think it would be a good thing that all settlement cases should be referred to arbitration by the Local Government Board? There is a movement at present in some parts of the country that that should be done?—I have not considered the subject, but, speaking off-hand, I should say "No."

10985. Is that because of the amount of work which would be involved, or what is your reason?—These really are cases requiring evidence to be taken on both sides, and it seems to me that that would be more desirably done in the ordinary course.

10986. Does the present system hold out any inducement to litigation on the part of officials at all?—I do not think so.

10987. That does not operate at all?—I do not think it does.

Conditions in West Derby Union.

10988. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to West Derby the pauperism there is increasing on the whole rather rapidly, is it not? I notice from the figures supplied to us here it is increasing faster than the population?—The population is increasing very fast.

10989. Is that simply that the Liverpool poor people or paupers are passing into West Derby to such an extent?—That has a great effect. I should say that is the main cause.

10990. Is the position being accepted that in their new homes at West Derby practically there is to be the same amount of pauperism that there was in Liverpool; because it is very serious that this new city, or this very large area, should be subject to that, is it not?—You mean that if the paupers are pushed out of Liverpool into West Derby they will be paupers in West Derby?

Mr. Herbert Jenner-Fust.

30 April 1906.

10991. That is to say the conditions are simply reproducing themselves; there is no depauperising going on, there is a reproduction?—I think that is so.

10992. Is that inevitable? Can administration do nothing still further to prevent that?—If the administration of West Derby were very much stricter than that in Liverpool no doubt there would be a result.

Decreased deterrence of indoor relief.

10993. West Derby is well supplied with institutions, is it not?—Yes.

10994. I notice, in reply to questions sent from here, they say that the institutions are losing their deterrent effect. Is that so?—I think that is distinctly the tendency as a result of the increased comfort.

10995. I notice that in 1895, on 1st January, the pauperism was put down here at 6,937, and on 1st January, 1905, it is put down at 10,150, and the increase is so extraordinarily great that one is inclined to think that either 1905 must have been an excessively bad year or there is some special reason to account for it?—I am afraid I have not anything to refer to with regard to that.

Effect of enlarged Poor Law area for dealing with indoor relief.

10996. Supposing you treated Liverpool, Toxteth Park, and West Derby as a single area for indoor relief, somewhat on the lines of your own suggestion, do you think it would have any effect in the reduction of pauperism?—I think you would have a reduction in pauperism if those areas each paid for their own out-relief; I do not know that you would otherwise, as a consequence of the combination.

10997. But supposing it were possible to have a single board for the indoor relief of that area, which I think is again on the lines you suggest, would that board settling these cases of admission reduce the pauperism?—That board, according to my proposal, would not deal with applications for relief, they would simply deal with those cases that were sent them by the constituent authorities.

10998. Then practically there would be no control, so far as that board was concerned, on the admissions; it would be simply that the local bodies would send to them those that they thought suitable for indoor relief?——Yes, they would have of course the same power of discharge that boards of guardians have now.

10999. How do you tackle the outdoor relief question, because now these bodies pay for their own outdoor relief?—Yes, but it seems to me that if a larger area paid for the indoor relief than paid for the outdoor relief there would be a greater tendency to what is called "offer the House" than to give out-relief.

11000. That is to say the pecuniary charge would not so directly fall upon them, it would be more like our London arrangement?—And also that the numbers of those who accept the offer of the House is comparatively small.

11001. The effect would be really to put a premium on the offer of the House?—I think it would have that tendency.

11002. Do you think in the long run you can trust to a system of that sort; if your House becomes less deterrent will not that system fail?—I think you would be able with a larger area to establish more of what we call test-houses, that is to say houses for the strictly able-bodied who ought not to be in a workhouse at all, where they can be put under stricter discipline than they can in the general workhouse.

11003. Then practically you would adhere to the deterrent in some form?—I think you would.

Paupers' leave of absence from workhouse.

11004. Would you allow them to go in and out of the workhouse as they now do on leave?—Yes, within reason I would.

11005. Do you think that now, with their frequent leave, they exceed reason?—I have known instances where they were allowed to go in and out every day just as they liked.

Bad condition of Salford Union and possible remedies.

11006. With regard to Salford, Salford strikes one as in rather a difficult plight from the point of view of pauperism. The figures are in 1895 on the 1st of January, 3,762, in 1905, 6,223. The figure in 1885, that is to say, twenty years before, is 4,035. I suppose that its pauperism has increased by something like 60 per cent., and its population has increased by something like 12 per cent. Why is it that Salford is not included with Prestwich, Manchester and Chorlton in the arrangement you refer to, because Salford is almost part of Manchester?—I think it should be so included, but it is a distinct borough by itself.

11007. Is it that which prevents it coming in?—I do not know.

Proposed power of compulsorily combining Poor Law areas.

11008. First of all, if this is a unit from the Poor Law point of view, Salford, Manchester, Chorlton, and Prestwich, do you think it would be well to have compulsory powers to bring in an area like that on your own scheme?—Yes, my own scheme proposed the inclusion of Salford.

11009. Then practically you would give the Local Government Board, or some authority, a very large power of reorganising areas under urban conditions?—Yes. It should be a general power extending to the whole country, not merely in view of a particular city.

11010. It would get over particular difficulties?—Yes.

Conditions in Salford Union.

11011. Is it not true that in Salford there are some very large charities?—Yes.

11012. Have you ever seen anything of the working of those charities?—I think I may say "no."

11013. At the same time it is the case, is it not, that the outdoor relief at Salford is very large?—Yes, the outdoor relief is large.

11014. That is to say, it is 3,527 out-door as against 2,696 in-door. You have not, in any of your inquiries in Salford, come across the fact that the outdoor relief recipents are receiving charitable relief as well?—I have not.

11015. Has any investigation been made with regard to Salford, from the point of view of outdoor relief and charity by yourself, or by anybody on behalf of the Local Government Board, in any way?—I do not think so. If I may just say so, the percentage of outdoor to total pauperism in Salford is not very high. It is 56 per cent., just over the half.

11016. But it has an excessive pauperism, at least, I should imagine it has rather an excessive pauperism; it stands at 2·6, but of course, that is not the real test, because the pauperism has been increasing at a much greater rate than the population?—Yes, but in Manchester and in Liverpool, speaking of them as areas, something of the same conditions obtain as in London, namely, that there is a very large non-resident population, and therefore the proportion of pauperism to population seems very high.

11017. Of course, the actual figure 2·6 is not so very high at the moment, it is only by analysis of the figures that you find it is higher than it should be?—The rate for the county was 20·6 per 1,000 on the 1st January, 1905.

11018. Is there any other reason, besides what I have referred to, for Salford being in this position? Is the municipal energy of the place high?—Yes, I should say so.

11019. Is it that the municipal energy of the place does not take special account of pauperism, and matters of that kind, that there is this very large increase of pauperism?—It is the board of guardians who have the administration in their hands, not the municipality.

11020. Generally the municipal energy does not find its way on to the board, is that it?—I do not think I can answer that.

11021. Is there any other special cause for this state of things?—I am not aware of any.

Boarding-out of children within the union and need for its inspection.

11022. With regard to boarding-out, you said that there was next to no boarding-out outside the union. Is there much inside the union?—Yes, a great deal more than there is outside. I think I do give the number; there were about 500 boarded-out inside.

11023. That is not a very large number for such a populous district?—No.

11024. Are you inclined to think that there ought to be any inspection of such children by an inspector of the Local Government Board as there is in the case of boarded-out children?—I am inclined to think that there should be. It is difficult, because many of these really are children in receipt of outdoor relief who are technically classified as boarded out children.

11025. Practically in many instances it is a form of rather cheap outdoor relief ?—Yes.

11026. And therefore there is the more reason to inspect it ?—I think there should be an inspection.

11027. You refer in paragraph 36 to casuals in Liverpool and West Derby, and now in Toxteth Park. What is the scheme you refer to as made in common with those unions ?—The West Derby Guardians have built new casual wards in which the whole of the casuals of Liverpool are, or will very shortly be received. They have themselves paid for the erection of the building, and the others will pay their share, as far as it can be estimated, towards the cost of the maintenance.

11028. So there will be one centre for the whole of the three unions ?—Yes.

11029. Is that connected with any special workhouse ?—It is close to the Belmont Road Workhouse of the West Derby Guardians, and is administered from that.

11030. Is there a large number of applications from casuals in those three unions now ?—Yes, a considerable number. I might also mention that the guardians have built infirmary wards for the sick casuals as distinguished from the general infirmary.

11031. So practically they have organised Poor Relief for casuals as almost a separate department ?—Yes.

11032. Is the result, so far as it can be traced, a reduction of the number of casuals ?—That is an extremely difficult question to answer, because we have no information as to the number of casuals. We have only information as to the number of admissions.

11033. Does the number of admissions keep up ?—I am not quite sure whether these new wards are open; if not, they are on the point of being opened. They have not been at work for any length of time, though for many years West Derby has been dealing with Liverpool casuals —for fifteen years past.

11034. I have been to see the building. Can you say now what has been the result as between West Derby and Liverpool; has there been a reduction of the number ?—I could not say. My information does not go far enough back.

11035. The West Derby Union, in your paragraph 37, are set down as dealing with the acute sick ?—That is so, 11036. Practically, therefore, the West Derby Union infirmary is a rate-supported hospital, is it not ?—All the modern workhouse infirmaries have a tendency to become that.

11037. Is there, within reach of West Derby, no large voluntary hospital that would take the acute sick?—There are several hospitals in Liverpool which do receive a large number, but if they are full, the cases have to be sent on to the Poor Law Infirmaries.

11038. Is it not the case that the West Derby Poor Law Infirmary is more and more becoming a hospital in that sense ?—I think it is.

11039. Are you prepared to accept that position by which the infirmary should become practically a hospital ?—I do not see how to avoid it. A case is brought to the door that requires immediate attention. It cannot be turned away because it is not, in the Poor Law sense, absolutely destitute.

11040. I presume that those very urgent cases are not the normal cases ?—A good many apply at this particular infirmary that have been refused admission for want of room at the voluntary hospitals.

11041. Do you think there is any possibility of there being an arrangement made with the hospitals by which they should take a definite share of the common work, the chronic cases going to the infirmaries and the acute cases, and only the acute cases, possibly, being dealt with by the hospitals. Do you not think it would be at all possible to give the hospitals a definite position in these matters, and require of them a certain duty as we do in Poor Law work normally from the infirmaries ?—No, I do not see how you could do that so long as they are supported by voluntary contributions.

11042. You do not think, because an institution is voluntary, you cannot claim of it a definite responsibility? —They must manage as they please, I take it.

11043. According to that, you could not leave an institution voluntary and give it a definite obligation by giving it a status subject to the fulfilment of those duties ? —You would have to face the possibility of its declining to go on, if it did not like those conditions.

11044. You might also, of course, by a method of organisation, arrange that certain advantages should be given which are not given now, as in the case of friendly societies, which, without registration, would not have some of their advantages. If those inducements were sufficient, possibly you might bring them into a common organisation ? —In some instances boards of guardians subscribe liberally towards local hospitals, because they feel that they do take a large number of cases which otherwise would find their way to the Poor Law infirmary.

Proposed re-organisation of public hospital systems.

11045. Now, I understand, if an acute case comes to the hospital and there is no room for it; it is sent to the infirmary. If an acute case comes to the Poor Law infirmary, it must be received; the consequence is, there will be more and more drifting of acute cases from the hospitals, unless they expand very much, to the infirmaries ?—I think the tendency is all in the direction of our Poor Law infirmaries becoming State hospitals and the voluntary hospitals gradually ceasing to exist.

11046. Practically, in that view, would you suggest that the hospital system of the country be re-organised on a basis apart from the Poor Law ?—At the public expense ?

11047. At the public expense ?—I am not prepared to make that suggestion.

11048. But, of course, it would happen, would it not, that if your Poor Law infirmary was to become more and more the general hospital, the element of dependence, or pauperism, which was so identified with admission to Poor Law relief, would be either blurred or got rid of ?—Yes.

11049. Would you be prepared to accept that result ? —Unwillingly, I confess.

11050. But you have no alternative ?—I do not see the alternative.

The financing of county Poor Law areas.

11051. With regard to your suggestion of the charges being imposed upon the county for the institutions relating to indoor relief, would you propose a county rate to support those institutions, or would you work on the lines of a sort of Metropolitan Common Poor Fund ?—My idea was that by the time any scheme of this kind came into force there would be one basis for the levying of county and poor rates; that these institutions would be supported out of the county rate, and that the State contribution would go towards the alleviation of that rate.

Proposed unification of county and parochial assessments.

11052. Does that imply, in your mind, a county assessment right through the county, a single assessment ?—An assessment for all purposes.

11053. You would not accept the parochial assessments as they now stand ?—Not if I could help it.

11054. You would treat the counties as you would a borough ?—I think strongly there ought to be a single assessment for the county and poor rates.

11055. Your scheme is dependent upon the acceptance of a single assessment for the whole county ?—No, but I think it would be improved by an acceptance of such an assessment.

11056. It would be made juster by it ?—Yes.

11057. Otherwise you would have very varying payments towards your common fund ?—Yes, just as you have now in the contributions towards the county rate, which are levied on one basis, and to the poor rate which are levied on another.

Existing system of Exchequer grants and possible reforms.

11058. Are you in favour of keeping up the present contributions for salaries, and so on, which are made to boards of guardians; as the rateable value of those areas is going up immensely is it desirable that the payment of these comparatively small amounts should be continued ?—In some form or other the contributions, I think, should be continued.

11059. Would you be in favour of paying in a lump sum, but subject to report; making the payments dependent upon efficiency of administration ?—You mean as it is done in the case of the police ?

11060. Yes ?—I see no objection to that.

11061. Are you dissatisfied with the present system of payment for lunatics, the 4s. grant ?—Yes.

Mr. Herbert Jenner-Fust.

30 April 1906.

11062. Would you be prepared to adopt a similar system with regard to that?—No, I think I would not.

11063. What do you suggest?—If you had the whole of the indoor poor maintained by the county there would be no object in a grant of that kind.

11064. Your lunacy would then become a county charge?—Yes.

11065. You would still desire, however, a grant towards the lunatics from the State?—Yes. I do not mind whether it is towards the expense of the lunatics or whether it is towards the expense of the indoor poor, but in some way or other I think there should be large grants made so that personal property may be laid under contribution.

11066. Would you not keep the lunatics as a separate department from the Poor Law in your proposed county arrangement?—Yes.

11067. Then your grant to them would be a special grant to a separate department?—It might or might not be. The grant might be simply in aid of the county rate as a whole.

11068. Leaving it to the county to apportion what it would to lunatics?—It seems to me it would not signify how the county apportioned it, in this way: they would have to pay for the maintenance of the poor, and they would have to pay for the maintenance of the lunatics.

11069. I will put this to you: would it not be desirable, if your proposal is adopted, that the grant from the exchequer to the county should be a grant definitely either for indoor relief connected with the poor law, or for lunatics, and that in most cases the contribution should be by way of a grant subject to report?—The question of distribution by the county itself would hardly arise.

11070. It is a point I should wish to have arise?—You mean that the grant, we will say, for lunatics should be dependent upon the report of administration?

11071. Yes, as a separate grant?—I see no objection to that. [But see Q. 11424.]

Possible methods of supervising out relief.

11072. You refer, on your last page, to relieving officers, as a point to which you would call attention. Would you kindly expand a little what you say in those words: "The supervision of relieving officers"?—In some unions there is a superintendent relieving officer who generally superintends all the officials on the relief staff, and my suggestion would be that wherever the number of relieving officers exceeds, say, three or four, there should be some one superintendent to regulate the others, just as you have a superintendent nurse where the number of nurses exceeds a certain number.

11073. But, from the point of view of the inspector, what ability has he, at the present moment, to see the inquiry work of the relieving officers of these important areas is properly done?—Very little indeed.

11074. Would not it be better that the inspector should have at his disposal something of a staff which should investigate and supervise, from the point of view of the whole district, how the work is done in detail?—I do not think it would take the place of the other.

11075. Granted it would not, would not it be better, even if you had the other; in a large number of Unions very possibly you would not get the cross-visitor at once, and even if you had the cross-visitor, still a system will only go on well if the administration is continually supervised from without?—I do not think it is work that could be usefully done by an inspector.

11076. But by an inspector's assistant?—I do not think so.

11077. To what do you trust to raise the level of the investigation if there is no one from without coming in and saying, "This is not up to a certain standard and, therefore, it ought to be improved"?—I think the superintendent would do that.

11078. But he, after all, is a local servant?—Yes.

11079. It may be that he would get to a certain standard of work and then drop. There is nothing to keep him up in his turn?—He is in the employ of the guardians.

11079A. Have not you found there are boards of guardians who pay very little respect to what the relieving officer may say?—Yes, but I would not extend that so much, at all events, to a superintendent relieving officer.

11080. Do you think they will attend to the superintendent relieving officer when they will not listen to the relieving officer of a district?—Yes, I think they are more inclined to consider his opinion.

11081. You are not inclined to think that possibly they may treat them all with the same partial disregard as to their information?—I think, to put it generally, a superintendent relieving officer would have more influence with a board of guardians than an individual relieving officer.

The proper authority for relief of the unemployed.

11082. Are you in favour of having a separate body, in a Union or group of Unions, for the relief of the unemployed on the lines of the Unemployed Workmen's Act, separate bodies like distress committees dealing with the question of the unemployed as apart from the Poor Law?—I think that depends rather on whether you mean the actual relief of the distress arising from unemployment or the larger question of removing the causes which lead to unemployment.

11083. I meant only the action which might be taken under the present Act of Parliament, if that were extended?—I think the relief of distress should be kept to the boards of guardians.

10084. And would you include in that the relief of unemployed persons?—They have to relieve them now if they require it.

11085. Therefore, what you contend for would not need a separate Act of Parliament for the purpose?—Not for the actual purpose of relieving the distress as distinguished from removing the want of employment.

Aged Deserving Poor: Effect of Mr. Chaplin's circular.

11086. Has the Aged Deserving Poor Circular made any difference in the administration in your district?—Yes, I think it has. The idea was moving before: it may have given an additional stimulus to it. In most of the workhouses, certainly the larger ones, one generally finds now special wards set apart for those that are considered the more respectable of the aged poor.

11087. Has it given any real impetus to outdoor relief?—The misunderstanding of it has.

11088. On the whole, would you be inclined to revise the circular, or to bring it into accord by the kind of consolidation which you propose of the Orders and Circulars of the Board?—I do not propose to consolidate the Circulars, but the Orders.

Proposed devolution of powers of Local Government Board.

11089. Would you not have to bring in a good deal of information that is in the Circulars, if you are to produce a document which would cover the ground for boards of guardians?—I am in hopes that if the extension of areas should take place, such as I venture to suggest, the minute control which is now exercised by the Local Government Board would, to a great extent, disappear. You would not require the detailed duties to be so minutely laid down as they are in the Consolidated Order.

11090. There would be the new centre for local administration as between the Local Government Board and the Guardians, and to that all these questions would go?—I think to a certain extent they would. As to the control of officers, for instance, you would not require a County Board of Guardians to submit every appointment for approval to the Local Government Board.

11091. And so with dismissals?—And dismissals the same.

Existing difficulties in removing inefficient Poor Law officers.

11092. Have you found, at present, great difficulty about dismissals?—Yes

11093. On what grounds?—Mainly where an officer was simply inefficient; thoroughly respectable, perhaps, nothing against him, but not capable of doing his work properly.

11094. The order itself is broad enough, is it not, to allow the Local Government Board to dismiss a man like that?—Yes, but the Local Government Board would require some evidence before it exercised its power.

11095. Would not the new authority you refer to be in the same plight?—The officer would be the officer of the new authority.

11096. That is to say, all the officers for in-door relief being practically employed by one body, that body could get rid of them?—They could deal with them as they chose.

Effect of administration on pauperism.

11097. (Mr. Chandler.) Speaking of the ratios of pauperism in your district you mentioned, that to a considerable extent, the various figures represent differences of administration, and I think you specially mentioned the change in the Prestwich figures as being due mainly to a change in the principles of administration ?—Yes.

11098. Can you tell us in what way a change in the principles of administration has been responsible for that ?—My general meaning was, that the relief was administered less strictly than it had previously been, that is to say, that out-relief was granted more freely and to more individuals than it had been.

11099. Yet in Manchester proper that would hardly apply, because there we have, as is often quoted, some very strict rules for the administration of relief ?—That is so; but in Manchester the increase has been considerable also.

11100. In spite of the decrease of population in Manchester proper, the number of paupers on January 1st, 1905, was very high, was it not ?—Yes.

Effect on pauperism of recent abnormal distress.

11101. That could hardly be attributed altogether to the administration, could it ?—Of course there has been more distress than usual during the last few winters.

11102. That is what I wish to bring out. Is it not a fact that a census of your district on January 1st, 1905, would hardly give a fair comparison, because the guardians had then to deal with the distress that had arisen through the short-time in the cotton mills of Lancashire which had, for quite a long period prior to that, been in operation ?—That is the case.

11103. So that all the Lancashire unions on January 1st 1905, would be suffering most acutely in consequence of that operation ?—Yes.

11104. The docks at Manchester and at Salford, I suppose, would have something to do with the existence of casual employment ?—Yes; there would be an increase, and a considerable increase, in the casual labour owing to those.

Effect of increased facility for paupers' leave of absence from workhouse.

11105. I think you expressed an opinion that the granting of liberty to the inmates, rather tended to do away with that deterrent which should exist, as far as going into the workhouse is concerned ?—Yes.

11106. I suppose that would not apply to unions in your district, such as Chorlton and Manchester, where the workhouse simply contains the aged and the infirm ?—I have an instance in my mind where the freedom to go in and out, and to receive visits from friends, was enlarged considerably, and where, in consequence, the discipline of the workhouse suffered and the numbers increased. A certain amount of change has taken place, and there has been a change in the results in consequence.

11107. But the real and chief reason for restricting the liberty of the inmates would apply, I take it, to the able-bodied inmates rather than to the aged an infirm ?—No, I would apply it to the aged as well; otherwise you would take away all incentive to avoid having to come to the workhouse.

Effect on pauperism of Workmen's Compensation Act.

11108. In answer to the Chairman, you spoke of the general influence of the Employer's Liability Act as having had something to do with old age pauperism; would that apply in those parts of your district where there are cotton mills ?—Yes, I should imagine it would apply there.

11109. Do you mean to say that employers get rid of their hands on account of the risk that old age brings in connection with this Act ?—I think that if there are two men of equal ability applying for work, and one is a young man and the other is an old man, it would go hard with the old man.

11110. That is so to-day and every day, is it not, under any circumstances ?—Yes; but I think from all I am told, that the Workmen's Compensation Act has had an effect in that way.

Boarding-out of children.

11111. I understand you have in your district various systems of dealing with the children; do you find that the boarding-out system has been successful in the district ?—There is hardly any boarding-out beyond the union.

11112. Boarding-out within the union has not been successful, has it ?—I should not like to say it has not been a success, but I think all boarding-out of children requires the most careful watching.

11113. So far as the future of the children, after they leave the care of the guardians, is concerned, has the boarding-out system produced as good results as the system of grouped homes ?—I do not think I could answer that question. The grouped home system has produced very good results. Speaking generally, children brought up in workhouses do not return in after life to any great extent.

After-careers of Poor Law children.

11114. In any case, the grouped home system must give them a better training, both males, and females, for starting out in life, must it not ?—I think so, personally.

11115. (Mr. Gardiner.) As regards the schools, I think, owing to the Act of 1903, the children now are examined by the Board of Education, are they not ?—Yes.

Examination of Poor Law children by inspectors of Board of Education.

11116. Could you give us any information as to what have been the results of the inspection ? Do the inspectors of the Board of Education find that the children in these big schools are as well educated, or better educated, than the children in the ordinary elementary schools ?—I do not think the system has been in operation sufficiently long to be able to speak to that. I have seen no notice of it that would enable me to answer that.

11117. When the inspectors of the Board of Education first visited the schools, there were no reports made out for the information of the guardians that you know of, were there ?—I have seen a few, but very few—not enough to found an answer upon.

Need for further assistants to inspectors.

11118. Might I ask one question as to the size of your district; it is one of the largest in England, is it not ?—Yes, it is.

11119. And has a larger population than most ?—Yes.

11120. Have you any recommendations or advice to give us as regards an increase in the staff of inspectors for so large a district ?—I have an assistant, and mine is the only district outside London that has.

11121. Supposing both you and your assistant were able to give more time to the boards of guardians, would you be able to raise more rapidly the level of administration inside and outside the workhouse ?—One point on which I feel that I have not been able to do so much as I should have wished, is attending out-relief committees. There are a great number of them in the district, and I have not time to attend them all, or nearly all.

11122. I suppose a great deal of your time is really taken up by performing duties which might be performed by an assistant, so giving you more time to attend to matters of that kind which are of greater importance ?—No, I do not think I would say that, because my assistant does most of the formal inspection, and leaves me free in that way to attend to whatever seems to require attention.

11123. Of course, your relief committees being so numerous, you cannot get to them as often as you could wish, can you ?—No, you cannot.

11124. Therefore, your influence cannot be continuous ?—No, it cannot.

Need for unification of county and parochial rate.

11125. As regards the recommendation or suggestion you have made about the county rate, that would involve, would it not, an assessment of the whole county made by one authority, a county authority ?—I do not think it would necessarily involve that, but certainly there should be one basis.

11126. There should be one, no doubt, you would say ?—I think everybody agrees in that.

11127. In so far as you know anything about the urban districts, that is to say, the smaller districts, you are thoroughly dissatisfied, are you not, with the way in which the overseers discharge their duty—perhaps "thoroughly" is too strong ?—I am not prepared to say that. My point is, that whereas at present there is one basis for levying the county rate, and another for levying the poor rate, there should be one basis for the two, and one valuation for the two—in, fact, for all purposes.

11128. Made by an authority other than that which makes the rate ?—I think helped by another authority; I would not take the valuation out of the hands of assessment committees, because local knowledge is extremely valuable, and I do not think it could be supplied in any other way.

Mr. Herbert Jenner-Fust.

30 April 1906.

Compulsory detention in workhouses of certain classes.

11129. In paragraph 75 (5), you say you would like to call attention to the compulsory removal to, with detention, in a workhouse in certain cases; would you amplify that?—Every now and then, there is a case of an old man or an old woman who is a nuisance to the neighbours, whom it is impossible to nurse under existing conditions, and who in his or her own interest, ought to be removed to a place where he or she can be looked after—perhaps it is an old person living in a room without furniture, filthy to the last degree and objectionable in every way, who steadfastly refuses to accept an order for the workhouse; I think that, under conditions—make them as stringent as you like—there should be power to remove that person against his or her will.

11130. Would your recommendation extend to any other class of case, beside the aged and infirm, either as regards detention or removal?—No, I do not think so. Those are the cases I had in my mind.

11131. Not phthisical cases?—No; I do not go so far as that.

11132. Or any other case of that kind?—No.

Diminution of filial responsibility and its causes.

11133. Statements are often made in the south, that in parts of your district, children are less willing than they used to be to contribute to the maintenance of their parents; is that a libel on your district?—I am afraid not. That is the general opinion.

11134. Could you tell us what that is due to?—It may be in a measure due to the fact that the workhouses are more comfortable now, and, therefore, children have not the same objection to their parents going in, and the parents themselves have not the same objection to go in that they had. The difficulty of making unwilling children contribute is great—I do not say greater than it has been.

11135. I suppose, in the long run, it is really settled by public opinion much more than by a magistrate's order?—The applications for a magistrate's order are comparatively few. Guardians, as a rule, call upon the son or whatever the relation may be, to contribute, and a great deal is collected in that way.

Proposed alteration in period and method of repayment of loans.

11136. Have you any recommendation to make as regards the present system for the repayment of loans? Do you think that the system which is now common, of equal instalments of capital and interest, tends to economy?—Yes, I am inclined to think that is the better plan.

11137. Extending over thirty or more years, say sixty years?—I think the length of the loan is sufficient at present.

11138. Would you extend it say from thirty to fifty or sixty years?—Not for buildings.

11139. Would you for land?—For land it is now extended.

11140. You think on the whole that that system does not tend to extravagance?—No.

Disinclination of guardians to incur capital expenditure.

11141. Supposing the guardians had to pay more in the early years of the loan, would they not consider more carefully than they do now before embarking on any fresh capital expenditure?—I am not sure that I think it is desirable that they should do that. My difficulty very often is to persuade them to embark on capital expenditure at all.

11142. Is it a common difficulty in your district to get them to embark on any capital expenditure?—Yes, I think it is; still my district is exceptionally good in that respect, for they spend a great deal. But I think if they had to repay more in the earlier years, they would embark less on fresh capital expenditure.

Question of "Pluralist" clerks to guardians.

11143. I suppose in most of your unions the clerks give the whole of their time to the duties of their office?—In a great many of them they do, but in many of the smaller ones they do not. In nearly all the larger ones they do.

11144. Could you make any generalisation for our guidance on the matter, as to whether or not you get a higher standard of administration where the clerks give their whole time?—In the smaller unions it would be impossible for the clerk to give his whole time to Poor Law work, as there would not be enough for him to do; and again the smaller unions could not afford to pay a clerk to give his whole time—at least if they did they would get not so high a class of man.

11145. Even at a lower salary they might get a man quite capable, might they not; because in many unions, I am right, am I not, in saying that the clerk to the board of guardians simply provides one of his own clerks who does the work?—Yes, to a certain extent that is the case, where the whole time of the clerk himself is not given.

11146. The clerk to the guardians is also clerk to the magistrates, say, and he holds half-a-dozen offices of different kinds, and so he simply pays a clerk so many shillings a week to do his guardian's work?—That is so as regards the formal work, only you have the better man to fall back upon for advice in any case of difficulty.

11147. Do you mean for legal advice?—Yes, and further—for general advice, and guidance.

11148. And you think that is very valuable, do you? I think it is valuable.

11149. Do you think that it more than compensates for what you lose by the man's mind naturally being occupied with many other things besides Poor Law administration?—Yes, I think so.

Cases which should be compulsorily removed to workhouse.

11150. (Dr. Downes.) You have spoken of its being advisable to give power to remove to the workhouse certain cases that are neglected; have you reason to suppose that there are many of those cases?—No, I do not think there are, but one comes across a case every now and then.

11151. Do the district medical officers report them to the guardians when they occur?—Yes, I think they do.

11152. And the relieving officers also?—The relieving officers would also report such cases.

Attendance of district medical officers at relief committees.

11153. Do the district medical officers ever attend the guardians with a view to informing them on the condition of their cases?—Seldom.

11154. Do you think that would be a desirable practice, if it could be arranged?—Yes, I think it would be.

11155. It might be a check on the abuse of outdoor medical relief in some cases, might it not?—Do you mean in regard to the granting of orders?

11156. I am referring to the granting of medical comforts, medical extras?—Yes, I think it might be in that case.

11157. (Mr. Phelps.) At Oxford the medical officer always attends, I think?—I had that in my mind.

Laxity as to medical relief and its effect on pauperism.

11158. (Dr. Downes.) Do you find any tendency to grant medical relief with less strictness than ordinary relief?—Yes, distinctly.

11159. Do you think that is desirable?—No, I do not. I think that an application for medical relief ought to be gone into quite as carefully as an application for ordinary relief.

11160. Do you think that sometimes it may be the first step towards the ordinary relief?—I do.

11161. Is your district well-provided with voluntary provision for sickness, first of all of the charitable kind; that is to say, are you well-provided with hospitals of various descriptions?—Yes, I should say as a whole we were; but it is a difficult question to answer.

11162. Have you rather more than the average, do you think?—Yes, I should think so.

Transfer of cases from general hospitals to Poor Law infirmaries.

11163. But, nevertheless, I think you have told us that the tendency is for the hospitals to send cases to the Poor Law infirmaries?—That happens when they are overfull.

Sick benefit clubs.

11164. With regard to the provision by thrift for sickness, have you anything you can tell us on that point in reference to Lancashire?—Do you mean by way of clubs?

11165. By way of clubs and societies which provide for sickness?—I do not think there is anything different there from what obtains elsewhere. There are numerous benefit clubs and trade unions which give payment in sickness, and so on.

11166. Have you any information as to whether that kind of provision for sickness is increasing or otherwise?—No, I have nothing that I can rely upon.

11167. Could you point to any source of information on that question?—I do not think I could.

11168. With regard to the provision for the indoor sick, speaking quite generally, are you satisfied with the progress that has been made in your time in that respect?—Yes, I am. I speak as a layman and not as an expert like yourself.

Improved provision for indoor sick: effect of Nursing Order.

11169. You have from time to time, I think, availed yourself of Dr. Fuller's services?—Yes.

11170. Dr. Fuller, I have no doubt, would communicate to you his opinion of what he saw?—Yes. I think there is reason to be satisfied.

11171. You give a very interesting table of the increase in the number of nurses which were provided; should you consider that the Nursing Order had stimulated that provision?—Yes, greatly; and if I may say so, the circulation of that return has had considerable effect by showing the guardians how their unions stood in comparison with others.

Circulation to boards of guardians of statistics as to other unions.

11172. I gather from that that you attach considerable importance to the circulation of information to each board of guardians which enables it to know what its neighbours are doing?—I do.

11173. Would you extend that to other particulars of information, such as expenditure?—Yes. We do circulate that kind of information to a limited extent.

11174. Do you mean that the inspectors or the Local Government Board circulate it?—The inspectors do.

11175. In the earlier days of the Nursing Order, did you have any cases of difficulty in its administration, any cases of friction, for instance?—Yes.

11176. Do you find that difficulty tending to decrease?—Yes, distinctly.

Insufficiency of night nursing.

11177. One or two places still, you say, have need for more night nurses; has any action been taken in those cases?—None, beyond calling the attention of the guardians to the fact by myself.

11178. That has been done, you say?—That has been done in some instances.

11179. What is their reason generally for not complying with the suggestion?—I think it is a disinclination to increase the staff, and in some instances not realising the importance of night nursing.

Separate Poor Law infirmaries.

11180. You have in your district two separate infirmaries, I think?—I may say that we have three now, because one has just been opened at Highfield for Liverpool.

11181. Are those under distinctly separate administration?—Yes.

11182. Have you any separate infirmaries under a medical superintendent?—One.

11183. And only one?—Yes, that is the Mill Road Infirmary belonging to the West Derby Guardians.

Checks by guardians on cost of medical relief.

11184. What checks on the cost of infirmaries in administration and maintenance are exercised by the guardians? Do any of your boards of guardians have systematic returns of the expenditure at their infirmary, classified under different heads?—Yes, I think they do; but I do not think I could tell you which.

11185. Do you think it would be desirable that systematic analyses of such expenditure should be regularly made?—I think it would be a good thing, but it would be examined by comparatively few.

11186. Even in Lancashire?—I am afraid even in Lancashire.

11187. Where you have a visiting medical staff, who supervises the cost of the drugs and the cost of the sick diets and medical matters of that sort? Is there a resident medical officer who has any authority on the matter?—Do you mean as to the actual prices of them, and so forth?

11188. No, rather as to the reasonableness of the orders given by the medical men?—I do not remember any system of doing that, but I have no doubt it is done.

Revision of diets by medical officer.

11189. Are you aware that under the Dietaries Order it would be the duty of the medical officer to revise the sick dietaries periodically?—Yes.

11190. The object of that being to see that the diets were not continued unnecessarily?—Yes.

11191. Do you find that that duty, for example, is carried out?—Tolerably well, only. It is a duty that one has to call attention to from time to time. There is no actual prescribed form in which the record of that revision has to be entered.

11192. Do you think that that might be one reason why it has not been so fully carried out?—I think it might be.

11193. You have spoken of an outbreak of ophthalmia at a school; may I ask if you know what kind of ophthalmia it was? I ask, because some forms are very trivial and some are more serious?—It was not the form that you can get rid of in a comparatively brief time.

11194. It was a chronic trouble then?—Yes.

Education of Poor Law children suffering from contagious affections.

11195. What steps did the guardians take in that case?—They built an iron house for the isolation of the cases, and Dr. Fuller has been down several times to examine and advise. I do not think they have employed an expert there.

11196. Do they educate the children?—Yes, to a certain extent.

11197. But not very thoroughly?—Not very thoroughly, I am afraid, it is hardly possible.

11198. They had no other course open to them; there was no place to which they could send those children, I take it?—That is so.

11199. Should you think it desirable that under your scheme of classification there should be some arrangement for cases of that sort?—Yes, I think so. At Liverpool the Liverpool guardians are building blocks for scrofulous and for ophthalmic children, for the purposes of isolation.

11200. If there were any classification by workhouses such as you have suggested, how would you propose that the cases should be revised as to their chargeability?—Do you mean as to their chargeability on the county?

11201. I am thinking of cases that have come under my own observation in similar instances—cases that have been originally destitute, but whose circumstances afterwards have altered, and the guardians from whose union they originally came have not been aware of that alteration in their circumstances?—That is a point which would be of importance, but which I have not considered.

11202. It is a point which would have to be borne in mind, I take it?—It would, no doubt.

Need for some accommodation for sick in every workhouse.

11203. I take it you realise that it might be difficult to remove all the sick from the workhouses, because some times cases fall sick that are not capable of being removed?—Yes.

11204. So that some sick provision would have to be made probably in other workhouses than those specially set aside for the sick?—Yes.

Effect of Superannuation Act on difficulty of getting rid of inefficient officers.

11205. On the last page of your memorandum in paragraph 75 (2), you speak of the difficulty the guardians sometimes have in getting rid of an inefficient officer; do you find that that difficulty has been increased by the operation of the Superannuation Act?—No, I do not know that it has.

11206. Do you ever get cases where officers, who have contributed for a long time to that fund and yet cannot be certified as mentally or physically unfit, cannot be got rid of without suffering considerable hardship by the loss of their pensions?—Do you mean officers over whom the guardians have power of dismissal?

11207. I will take those officers over whom they have power of dismissal?—Yes; I have known cases where officers have been allowed to remain on when they have rather outlived their usefulness, in order that they might qualify for superannuation.

11208. I did not know whether you had that in your mind when you wrote that sentence?—No; I had more in mind the case of an officer to whose dismissal the consent of the Local Government Board is necessary. A general charge of inefficiency is not sufficient to bring that about.

Proposed power to Local Government Board to build and administer new workhouse.

11209. You have suggested, I think, in your evidence that the Local Government Board should have power to order a new workhouse to be built, but if they ordered a new workhouse to be built could you suggest any power by which they could cause it to be maintained and administered when it was built?—I think the power would have to be extended to that, so that if the guardians failed to maintain it, the Board would be able to step in and do it for them at the cost of the rates.

Mr. Herbert Jesner-Fust.

30 April 1906.

11210. And administer it?—And administer it. They can do so now in the case of individual officers, if the guardians refuse to appoint.

11211. Do they ever exercise that power?—I have never known of it.

Insurance of paupers.

11212. Among the suggestions that we have received from chairmen of boards of guardians in your district, I see that one of them, the chairman of the Bolton Board, suggests that there should be a reform of the law as to the insurance of paupers; have you had any cases in your district of the insurance of paupers which seemed to call for that?—Generally speaking, the insurance of paupers is carried on largely. A number of inmates of workhouses are insured.

11213. By whom are they insured?—Sometimes by their own relations, and sometimes I understand by those who are not relations at all.

11214. Do you think that is satisfactory?—No, I do not.

11215. (Professor Smart.) Are they insurances for the purposes of speculation?—Yes.

11216. (Dr. Downes.) Have you any particular instances you can mention to illustrate that?—No, I do not think I have.

11217. (Mr. Booth.) Are they new insurances, or insurances maintained in order to cover an old debt?—Very often—I should say more often than not—they are insurances which are being maintained; but that is not always the case, I believe.

11218. (Professor Smart.) Do you consider there is any harm in a speculative insurance?—I do not think it is a desirable thing.

11219. (Mrs. Webb.) Is the insurance usually maintained to cover a debt owing by the person insured?—No, I do not think so.

11220. (Miss Hill.) It is for the purpose of burial usually, is it not?—The cost of burial is sometimes paid out of it, but not in all cases.

11221. (Mrs. Webb.) Where it is effected by an outsider, it is not for the purpose of burial, is it?—Sometimes where it is effected by an outsider a contribution towards the cost of burial is made, but that is by no means always the case.

11222. It is to cover a debt, very often, is it not?—It may be that.

11223. (Professor Smart.) But it might be done as a pure speculation by an outsider?—I believe so.

11224. Do you see any specific objection to that, more than to any other form of speculation? Is there any harm done to the pauper himself, for example, by it?—No, I do not know that there is.

11225. (Dr. Downes.) Are you aware that it led to a case of murder in one of the London Imbecile Asylums?—No, I am not.

Burial of paupers by friends.

11226. Have you any statistics as to the number of paupers who are buried by their friends?—No, I have not; I know it is a large number.

11227. Do you think that the proportion is increasing?—I have no information to guide me.

11228. You have mentioned that you have a tuberculosis hospital established by the Poor Law authorities at Heswall?—Yes.

Poor Law Hospital for Tuberculosis.

11229. Have you any tuberculosis hospitals established by sanitary authorities in your district?—I am not aware of any.

11230. (Mr. Phelps.) You have had some experience, I think, of the Poor Law in Gloucestershire, have you not?—Yes.

11231. And for some time you were associated with Mr. Henley, were you not, in the Oxford district when he was inspector?—Yes.

Comparision of Poor Law administration in the North and Midlands.

11232. Can you from your experience draw any broad distinction between the Poor Law in the South and in the North?—Speaking generally, in my present district the whole circumstances are much more urban than they were in the Oxfordshire district; and the urban portion compares very much with what the administration was at Birmingham in the Oxfordshire district. The remainder of the Oxfordshire district was mainly agricultural. I have some agricultural parts in Westmorland and Cumberland and a few in Lancashire, but not very many. I do not know that I can draw any broad distinction.

11233. Would you, on general lines, say that the interest in Lancashire is in the main institutional, and in the South is in the main in the matter of outdoor relief?—I think that is so to a considerable extent, partly because often in the agricultural districts the administration of relief comes before the whole Board instead of before a few members of a committee.

11234. Do you think, with regard to the labouring class itself and the poorer class, that poor relief plays a different part in their lives in the North from what it does in the South?—You have in connection with the big towns a very large class of loafers and corner-men who come under the Poor Law in some shape or other constantly, which you do not get in the more agricultural districts.

11235. Would you say that the prospect of receiving relief in old age was as much a factor in the lives of the poor in the North as it is in the South?—I think they look to the Poor Law in the North quite as much as they do in the South.

11236. Would you say that in the case of unemployment they look more to it?—Yes.

11237. Do you think that it really has a perceptible influence upon employment and wages in the North of England?—I hardly know. Of course the cases of unemployment in towns are very numerous, compared with what they are in agricultural districts; one hardly comes across them in agricultural districts.

11238. The Poor Law is never counted upon in the agricultural districts as a substitute for employment, is it?—No.

11239. But in large towns you think it is now?—Yes in large towns it is.

Increase in comfort of workhouses.

11240. You say with regard to workhouses that their comfort has very much increased of late years?—Yes, it has.

11241. We neither of us can remember the passing of the first Poor Law; do you think that, relatively to the standard of living outside, the improvement has been great?—I should say it had been.

11242. Is it greater on the whole than the rise of the standard oustide?—It is distinctly greater.

11243. It has passed the point at which you could say it is no more than parallel?—Yes.

Treatment of "ins-and-outs."

11244. You are familiar with the class of people called ins-and-outs, of course?—Yes; we have to deal with them.

11245. Have you any suggestion to make with regard to their treatment?—I think after a certain time they ought not to be allowed to go on going in and out.

11246. It has been suggested to us that they should be treated as vagrants, after a time?—Then I should want to know how the vagrants are going to be treated.

Religious ministration for workhouse inmates.

11247. Have you any experience with regard to the existence of chaplains in workhouses?—Yes.

11248. Have most of the workhouses in your district chaplains?—There is a considerable number that have not. I think one reason is this. The Local Government Board no longer insists upon a chaplain being appointed; but if a chaplain is appointed it is a permanent appointment. On the other hand, if the guardians want to appoint someone to minister to the Roman Catholics or the Nonconformists, they can make the appointment on such terms as they please and terminate it when they please. They have no such power in connection with the chaplain, and I think that stands greatly in the way of more numerous appointments of chaplains.

11249. What kind of substitute do you find for a chaplain in workhouses?—Sometimes a rota of clergy and Nonconformists who take duty in turn. Sometimes it is done voluntarily, the different denominations being kept distinct. In two cases a chaplain is maintained by offertories at the different churches in the rural deanery, or the archdeaconry in which the workhouse is situate, who maintain and pay a voluntary chaplain.

11250. Do you find all those systems in different places working fairly satisfactorily and well?—I do not think the system of a rota is satisfactory. I think it means that the inmates are ministered to by those of different denominations, sometimes by one and sometimes by another.

The Creed Register.

11252. There is a religious census taken, is there not, of inmates always ?—There is one always in existence called a creed register.

11253. Do you think that is a trustworthy document ?—If it is properly kept, I think it is reasonably correct.

Voluntary visitation of workhouse.

11254. Have you much experience of volunteer visiting of workhouses ?—Yes, a certain amount.

11255. Is that increasing ?—I do not think it is.

11256. Is it viewed with favour as a rule by guardians ?—There are diversities of opinions upon that.

Effect of Local Government Act, 1894, on administration.

11257. With regard to the boards of guardians themselves, do you remember the passing of the Local Government Act, 1894 ?—Yes.

11258. Do you think that has made much difference in the composition of the boards of guardians of Lancashire ?—It has certainly ; there has been a difference since then.

11259. Do you find the interest in Poor Law affairs has been extended ?—I think there was a considerable stimulus given to it at the time of the passing of that Act.

11260. Have you any knowledge as to whether the percentage of people voting at elections is larger ?—No, I do not know about that.

11261. Nor whether it grows ?—No.

11262. Do you not think it is a very desirable thing that public opinion should be growing on the matter of Poor Law questions ?—In which direction ?

11263. I mean growing at all—that there should be more people taking interest in them ?—Yes ; and I think there are more people taking an interest in them.

Working men as guardians.

11264. Have you many boards on which working men sit ?—Yes.

11265. Have you formed any opinion as to their contribution to the administration of the board ?—I have known working men do very good service indeed on boards of guardians.

Scheme for dealing with indoor-relief by county authorities and with out-relief by district councils and its effect.

11266. You are in favour of a certain amount of specialisation in institutions, I see ?—Yes.

11267. You would treat the various departments of pauperism in separate institutions ?—Yes.

11268. And you would be inclined to put them under a joint board representing the various boards of guardians —Yes.

11269. Do you think that it would be reasonable to remove vaccination from the work of boards of guardians ?—Yes.

11270. Have you faced the question as to what, if those reforms were carried out, would be left for boards of guardians to do ?—Yes, I have ; and in my memorandum I suggest the possibility of the remaining work of the guardians being done by district councils.

11271. Do you think that the work which would be left to them would be sufficiently interesting and important to keep up the quality of the boards of guardians ?—No, I do not think it would be. I think ultimately they might be done without.

11272. Do you think a district council would be a good body to deal with out-door relief, for instance ?—I think they would do it just as well as the boards of guardians, in fact in the agricultural districts of course they do it now—it is the same body.

11273. Supposing that under any Act of Parliament a special body were appointed to consider old age pensions, then the functions of guardians would be nearly at an end, would they not ?—If the guardians no longer had to do with that and there were a county board of guardians, yes.

The question of disfranchisement through medical relief.

11274. With regard to the question of medical relief, you stated that the tendency you thought was for the infirmaries to take the place practically of voluntary effort ?—I think that is so, in the large towns, at all events.

11275. Do you think, if that became customary, that it would be desirable to maintain the disqualification attendant upon entering a Poor Law infirmary, I mean political disfranchisement ?—I am not at all sure that it would, if that became acknowledged and general.

11276. That is to say, you would draw a distinction between the sickness which required relief in an institution and the sickness which did not require removal to an institution ?—Yes, the latter can be provided for through benefit societies.

11277. You would make the one disfranchise and the other not ?—Yes ; but I would not necessarily extend that absence of disqualification to all the inmates of an infirmary.

11278. How would you distinguish between them ?—I do not know that I could, but I have in my mind that in many infirmaries there are a number of infirm and aged paupers who are placed there simply for convenience.

11279. People, that is to say, who, being inmates of the house, have been moved to the infirmary ?—Yes.

11280. As distinct from people who come in straight to the infirmary ?—As distinct from the acute sick, if you like to call them so.

Possibility of abolishing out-medical relief.

11281. Supposing that that change was made, and that in-door medical relief did not carry disfranchisement, do you think it would be possible to abolish all out-door medical relief ?—No, I do not think it would.

11282. Do you think that voluntary agencies could be counted on to take its place ?—No, I do not think they could be.

Proposed administration of indoor relief by county authorities and out-door relief by district councils.

11283. (Miss Hill.) You say in paragraph 62 "the work of a board of guardians is far more important than that of a county council, except as regards education and the care of lunatics, and it might be better to choose a board of guardians for the county by direct election" ; then, I gather from your answer to Mr. Phelps, that you rather think those guardians might be district councillors also, is that so ?—No. Mr. Phelps was asking me as to what would remain for the existing boards of guardians to do in the event of a county board of guardians taking over the management of all the workhouses, and I said I did not think there would be much left for them to do.

11284. Are you imagining a county board of guardians and also boards of guardians for the separate unions ?—No, I thought that, by degrees, when a county board is established, the tendency would be for the others to disappear, their duties as regards hearing applications for out-relief being handed to the district councils.

11285. Then you were not thinking that the duties of boards of guardians in dealing more with people than things required a different quality of men and women to those who were entrusted with the more business work which is handed over to county councils ?—No, because in all the country districts the district council and the board of guardians are one and the same body.

11286. So that you would rather be aiming at the time when the county authorities took over the institutional relief and the district councils took over the out-relief ; is that so ?—Took over the dealing with the applications for relief.

Probable economies of a combination of unions.

11287. (Professor Smart.) You note that although the rate of pauperism is low the expense of workhouse accommodation is increasing rapidly, so that what you would consider better administration is not likely to be cheaper administration ?—I think the tendency would be in the direction of being cheaper, from their not having to maintain so many empty beds. In an ordinary workhouse you have to maintain empty beds for a number of different classes ; if you had your different classes in different workhouses you could fill up much more closely.

11288. But with that exception the tendency would be to more expense, would it not ?—No, I do not know that it would be so.

11289. Do you think the economy saved by a union of unions would be so great as to counterbalance that ?—I do not see why the cost should increase any more under a county board of guardians than it would under the existing boards of guardians.

11290. You mention specifically the increasing expense of workhouse accommodation, and you look forward to increasing the workhouse accommodation, do you not ?—No, I look forward more to re-arranging it.

11291. And not necessarily increasing it ?—No, not necessarily increasing it.

11292. This combination of unions is the only suggestion you can put forward for economy, is it not ?—In connection with in-door relief.

Mr. Herbert Jenner-Fust.

30 April 1906.

Comparative stigma of out and in-door relief.

11293. I think you said there was a stigma attaching to in-door pauperism that did not attach to outdoor pauperism; do you refer both to the case of aged poor and to the case of widows?—Yes, I think to both.

11294. Do you find in that any argument for old age pensions?—I look upon old age pensions as a form of out-relief.

11295. But so far with an absence of stigma?—There would be no stigma attaching to a person in the receipt of a pension.

11296. You think there is not much stigma attached just now to relief?—I do not think there is.

Origin, necessity and effect of the alternatives: Out-door Relief Regulation and Prohibitory orders

11297. (Mr. Bentham.) In paragraph 8 of your memorandum you refer to the unions that come under the Out-door Regulation Order and the Prohibitory Order; there are a few unions which I do not find in the list of either of those orders, namely, Bootle, Barrow, Lunesdale, and Toxteth Park?—Bootle is under the Prohibitory Order, Toxteth is under the Regulation Order, Lunesdale is under the Regulation Order, Barrow is under the Regulation Order—in fact all the unions in Lancashire except Ormskirk are under the Regulation Order.

11298. Do you find that there is any difference in the administration of unions under the respective orders?—The unions under the Prohibitory Order cannot grant relief to able-bodied men.

11299. In actual practice do you see any real practical difference in the administration of unions that come under either of the two orders?—Where, as in many instances, the union is under the Prohibitory Order, and they also have had issued to them a Labour Test Order, the difference is slight.

11300. Do you see any reason why the distinction should be made between the Prohibitory Order and the Regulation Order?—The distinction arose, as I understand it, from the inability of the original Poor Law Commissoners to get the Prohibitory Order accepted in the northern countries, the manufacturing distrists. They intended originally to have the Prohibitory Order everywhere.

11301. Had it not something to do with the amount of provision that was available for in-door relief?—The Prohibitory Order was only issued in cases where sufficient accommodation had been provided.

11302. Therefore it was regulated partly by the amount of accommodation for in-door paupers?—Yes.

11303. Do you see any real reason why the two orders should remain, and why all the unions should not come under one order?—I think it would be very difficult in large towns where there is a good deal of fluctuating casual poverty to enforce the Prohibitory Order.

11304. In fact where it exists in large towns they do not enforce it, do they? They manage to administer their affairs pretty much on the same lines as those under the Regulation Order?—I thought that in most large towns the Regulation Order was in force.

11305. It is in most, but there a few exceptions, I think?—There are a few that are under a special order, which comes almost to the same thing.

Supervision of Out-Relief by Superintendent Relieving Officer and Clerk to Guardians.

11306. In paragraph 10 you refer to some of the larger unions which employ a superintendent relieving officer and a cross visitor as well as a pay clerk and a staff of clerks in the relief department; I take it that you agree that it is false economy to be under-staffed in the outdoor relief department?—Yes.

11307. And wherever possible you would have a superintendent of the out-relief department?—Wherever the union was large enough to warrant it.

11308. Where there were only two relieving officers, or it may be three, would you think it advisable to give the clerk to the guardians more power with regard to out-door relief, in order to save the expense of an additional officer as superintendent?—I do not know that he would want more power. At present the clerk very often exercises a considerable amount of supervision over the relieving officers.

11309. The relieving officers are really independent of him, are they not, in all matters of relief?—Do you mean as to what they give?

11310. I mean as to their duties. Their duties are defined by orders and of course the clerk has very little power over them so long as they keep within the four corners of the Orders?—That is so, but he is able to exercise a considerable amount of influence over them.

11311. Not so much as a superintendent relieving officer who is specially appointed, I take it?—No, because the clerk has not the time to devote to it, and he could not go about and do some visiting for himself, so as to check what they were doing.

11312. Do you really think that, apart from that, a superintendent relieving officer who is appointed as such has more power over the relieving officers than the clerk has?—Yes.

11313. You really think he has?—Yes because he is their immediate chief under whom they do their work.

11314. In the absence of a superintendent relieving officer, do you think the clerk has equally as much power as a superintendent relieving officer?—No, I do not think he has; his power is not exercised in the same way.

11315. Do you not think it would be advisable that it should be exercised in the same way?—No; I do not think it would be advisable that the clerk should do visiting, for instance, among the paupers.

11316. I was not thinking so much of visiting as of receiving instructions from the clerk, which at the present time on matters of relief they very often resent?—I have not come across instances.

Conditions the Fylde, Wigan, Salford, Manchester, Liverpool Unions.

11317. Have you made an omission in paragraph 11, where you say that the ratio of paupers to population on January 1st, 1905, varied from 8 per 1000 in the Fylde Union to 25 per 1000 in Wigan, and 27 per 1000 in Salford; has not Liverpool 51 per 1000, and ought not the variation therefore to be from 8 per 1000 to 51 per 1000?—The conditions in Liverpool and in Manchester are so exceptional that I did not think they were fair subjects of comparison, because there is a very large non-resident population in both those places.

11318. But you think that Salford and Wigan are fair comparisons with the Fylde district?—I should not place the unions as on the same footing at all; I should not say that the Fylde Union was one which could be fairly compared with the Salford Union. I merely took those as the two extremes.

11319. They are really not the extremes, are they, but they are taken on typical grounds rather?—As I have said, I left out Manchester and Liverpool owing to their being so exceptionally situated.

11320. In the Fylde Union are there not several watering places, such as Blackpool?—Yes, Blackpool is in it.

11321. It is principally residential, is it not?—Blackpool is very populous. It has over 50,000 inhabitants and there is very little poverty there.

11322. Blackpool constitutes more than half the population of the union, I see?—That is so.

Conditions Ormskirk Union.

11323. Take the Ormskirk Union; Southport is in the Ormskirk Union, is it not?—Yes.

11324. Is there any reason why the Ormskirk Union should have a larger number of paupers than the Fylde Union; they are very similar in character, I suppose?—I do not know that I could give you any general reason why it should be so.

11325. Do you know whether the reason is administration?—Not in a marked degree.

Rules adopted by guardians administration of relief.

11326. In any of the unions in your district now are there any rules or regulations in force for the guidance of the guardians?—Several of the unions have what they call Year Books, which contain extracts from Acts of Parliament and Orders of the Board and things of that sort, as a help to guide the guardians.

11327. They have some relief rules in the Manchester township, have they not?—Yes.

11328. Are they still acted up to?—I do not think they are quite as strictly as they have been. I may mention that the Manchester Guardians have just appointed a committee to go into the question of out-relief.

Effect of administration on pauperism.

11329. Do you see any reason why the numbers in Manchester on out-relief should have nearly doubled, mparison conditions Manchester l Liver-ol.

taking the numbers on January 1st, 1905, as against the average of the previous five years, whilst in Liverpool the numbers have actually lessened ?—I can only say that in Manchester there has been a good deal of distress in the last few years, and that, no doubt, has led to an increase in the out-relief.

11330. Has there been more distress there than in Liverpool ?—I am inclined to think on the whole that there has been.

11331. Is there not more casual labour in Liverpool than in Manchester ?—That is always so.

11332. Where there is a large quantity of casual labour, does not a bad time usually send up the numbers more rapidly than where there is not so much casual labour ?—I do not know.

11333. There has been more agitation in Manchester than in Liverpool with regard to the guardians, has there not ?—Yes, there has been in the last two years.

11334. You cannot account for the difference in numbers, except that there is a difference in administration, can you ?—I think the considerable increase in the Manchester out-door relief is due to a certain extent to change in administration. I think that the rules are not as strictly administered as they were.

option by rds of rdians of es as to inistra-n of relief l effect.

11335. Has any other union rules for its guidance ?—Yes; several have adopted rules. The Rochdale Guardians have recently adopted some rules, the result of which has been a considerable decrease in the out-relief.

11336. Have they adopted the rules put forth by the Poor Law Officers Association, do you remember ?—I do not know whether they did.

11337. That is the only instance, is it ?—Several of the other unions have adopted rules. I am not prepared to say that in all cases they have been strictly adhered to.

11338. Is it your experience where they have adopted rules that it has been beneficial ?—Yes, where the rules have been adhered to.

11339. And has created no hardship to the applicants ?—No, I think none.

11340. Has it been your experience that where rules are adopted, the amount of relief given usually rises per head of those in receipt of relief ?—I do not know that I can say that, but I have often heard it urged that if relief were given to fewer numbers, there would be more power to give a reasonable amount to individuals.

mber of ldren dealt h in rkhouses.

11341. In respect of the children, in paragraph 18, you give the number of unions that adopt different systems of dealing with children. You mention altogether eighteen unions, which leaves twenty unions in your district where the children still remain in the workhouse. Could you give us any idea as to the number of children in those twenty unions ?—I could not, off-hand. Speaking in general terms, it is the larger unions that have removed the children from the workhouses. I should say there are more children that have been removed than there are remaining.

ovision for man tholic Poor w children.

11342. The Roman Catholics having provided institutions for Roman Catholic children will have reduced the numbers that were formerly in the workhouses of some of those unions ?—Yes.

11343. To any great extent, do you think ?—The Roman Catholics now remove the whole of their children from the workhouses, as soon as they have accommodation for them.

11344. Do the guardians pay for them in these institutions in all cases ?—Yes.

itude of ntral Mid-ves Board ards Poor w in-maries as ining ools and effect.

11345. Have you found any difficulty with regard to the rules of the Central Midwives Board, in connection with any of the larger infirmaries in your district ?—There seems to have been a great reluctance on the part of the Central Board to certify workhouse lying-in wards for the purpose of training.

11346. Have there been many certified ?—No. I do not quite know now how many have been, but it is not many.

11347. Could you say if they have actually refused to certify any of them who have made application ?—Yes, they have. One great thing which has caused difficulty is the increase in the number of cases which they now require to have been attended by each candidate which has reduced the number of midwives which it is possible to train.

11348. Has that not created some difficulty with regard to the probationers who are already taking a course of training, and who are now deprived of taking a certificate, from the London Obstetrical Society, as they could formerly ?—That is so, no doubt.

11349. It will act against those institutions getting properly qualified nurses, will it not ?—They will not be able to obtain the qualification in the way they have hitherto done.

Method of administration of relief at Manchester and its effect.

11350. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to Manchester, when I was there six years ago there was a system by which an experienced superintendent with one guardian administered relief: the relieving officer came before this superintendent who sat with one guardian who acted as chairman and entered the case, but it was the superintendent who practically determined how the man was to be relieved. When did that cease ?—I should not like to say that within my experience at all a superintendent has decided.

11351. I do not mean technically. I sat with them two or three times, and it was quite obvious that it was the superintendent, who had the whole case in his mind, who really determined the form of relief which should be given, and the guardian (who was always a different guardian, and only one guardian) registered the joint determination in a book. When did that system cease ?—I do not admit that that is a fair description of the system.

11352. Would you describe the system ?—I should say that the relief was administered by one guardian advised by the superintendent relieving officer and the relieving officer.

11353. When did that cease ?—I do not know that it has ceased.

11354. We understood from Mr. Davy that that had been actually discontinued, and that that particular superintendent relieving officer had been dispensed with, and we were referred to you for further particulars ?—I do not know which superintendent Mr. Davy had in his mind. There has been a change of superintendents in the last two or three years.

11355. Does the same system prevail ?—The same system exactly.

11356. The superintendent and one guardian do the relief ?—Yes, that is to say, the quorum of the Relief Committee consists of three, and two are usually absent.

11357. They are always absent, are they not ?—I think I can say whenever I have been present they have been absent.

11358. Do you at all attribute the very extraordinary rise in pauperism which there has been in Manchester to the change of the superintendent ?—No, I do not. I do not say it might not have had any effect, but I do not attribute the rise to that.

11359. Do you know the circumstances under which that superintendent left ?—Yes: he died.

11360. Who got the appointment after that ?—One of those who had been a relieving officer.

11361. Has there been any other change in the constitution of the Manchester Guardians ?—Its fifteen members used to be elected at large: are they now elected by wards ?—I do not think so, 11362. Are they still elected in the same way then ?—I think so.

Conditions in Bolton Union.

11363. Leaving Manchester, I am told that at Bolton the Elberfeld system has been tried, or something like it ?—It is being tried, but it has not got so far that I am able to give any information about it, I am afraid.

11364. Is Bolton a particularly well-administered union ?—It is a very carefully administered union.

Large board of guardians.

11365. Has it a large body of guardians ?—Yes, there are fifty-seven guardians.

11366. But they are of a rather good stamp, are they not ?—I consider it a distinctly good board of guardians.

11367. With regard to Stockport—— ?—Stockport is not in my district.

Mr. Herbert Jenner Fust.

30 April 1906.

11368. Then you do not know about the workhouse there?—No, only by hearsay.

11369. I thought when you said that the Local Government Board had not sufficient power to force unions to build workhouses, you were referring to Stockport? No, I was not.

Insufficient power of Local Government Board to enforce provision of workhouse accommodation, e.g., at Cockermouth and Wigan.

11370. Have you got any case similar to Stockport in your district?—Yes, I have two in my mind—Cockermouth and Wigan.

11371. Could you give us details of those two?—In the case of the Cockermouth Union, correspondence has been going on with the Local Government Board for a number of years, with a view of getting a new workhouse, or at all events a new infirmary built—and hitherto without success. I have been doing my best ever since I went to the district. I may say the same as regards Wigan. In the case of the Wigan Guardians, they have bought land for the purpose of cottage homes, and they have bought land for the new workhouse and also for new offices for the guardians. Nothing has been done in the direction of providing cottage homes, but plans have been approved for the new workhouse, and it is intended apparently to build a new infirmary to begin with; but it rather hangs fire, and there is a certain amount of opposition still. My point is that if the Local Government Board had the power, they would have exercised it before this in the case of Cockermouth, and I think also in the case of Wigan.

11372. Are those the only two instances you can think of where the power is insufficient?—Those are the only two where the conditions are such that I think the power would have been exercised.

11373. Are they the only two cases in which the workhouse accommodation or infirmary accommodation is actually required?—No, I would not say that.

11374. You would not go so far as that?—No.

11375. There are bad cases, but you do not think they are so bad as that?—There are four workhouses in Westmorland and three of them ought to be pulled down, but they are not so terribly bad that the Local Government Board would interfere.

Controversy as to salaries of officers at Oldham.

11376. With regard to Oldham, there was some difficulty about the salaries of the relieving officers, and the Local Government Board thought they were paying very low salaries; do you remember that case? I think it was about five or six years ago, and the Board sent down an order for the salaries to be raised, but the guardians refused to do that?—That was not in reference to the relieving officers; that was in reference to the collectors of rates.

11377. I thought it was in reference to somebody under the Board of Guardians?—Do you mean where ultimately there was a surcharge, and the guardians had to pay?

11378. It was a case where the salaries were too low; how can you surcharge a thing which is too low?—The guardians refused to pay the collectors of rates the salaries that were fixed by the Local Government Board, and an action was brought against them by these officers to obtain the salaries which had been fixed. The case was fought legally, and decided against the guardians, and the guardians had to pay. When the auditor came to audit the accounts, he surcharged the guardians with the amount of the legal expenses as having been an unnecessary expenditure of union funds.

11379. On a lawsuit?—Yes.

11380. It was a very roundabout way of getting the salaries raised?—Yes.

11381. Is Oldham the only case in your experience of officers being refused the salary fixed by the Local Government Board?—The Local Government Board does not ordinarily fix salaries at all; it is only on appeal that the Board does so in certain cases, and that is the only instance I have known.

Modification of the Outdoor Relief Prohibitory Order.

11382. With regard to the Prohibitory Order and the Regulation Order, in your experience has the Regulation Order been turned into the Prohibitory Order or the Prohibitory Order turned into the Regulation Order in any unions?—No.

11383. There has never been any change from one to the other?—No.

11384. It is an historic thing entirely?—Yes. I have known a Labour Test Order issued to a union that had the Prohibitory Order.

11385. That is often done, is it not?—I believe it is, but I have not known many instances myself.

11386. Is it ever withdrawn?—I have never known it.

11387. Then the tendency is by the issue of that Labour Test Order to approximate the two Orders?—Yes, that is the effect of it.

Effect of Workmen's Compensation Act on pauperism.

11388. Now with regard to the Workmen's Compensation Act; as I understand it, you have no evidence that the Workmen's Compensation Act has actually resulted in the dismissal of old men?—No, I have not.

11389. You have not inquired into the average age of workmen?—No.

11390. Have you heard it asserted that the speeding-up of machinery in the cotton factories leads to the dismissal of old men?—No. The general reason alleged is that as a man gets older he gets a little less active, and therefore is more liable to accidents than a younger man.

11391. You do not suggest that the Workmen's Compenation Act has decreased the volume of employment, do you?—No.

11392. It is only if two men are unemployed, the younger one gets taken on?—Yes.

11393. Is it not said that in the cotton trade no man is employed as a spinner after the age of forty or forty-five?—I cannot answer that.

Effect of casual labour and lodging-houses on pauperism.

11394. With regard to the amount of pauperism in Liverpool, Salford, and Manchester, do you not attribute that largely to the existence of casual labour?—I think Manchester is influenced considerably by the existence of the large lodging-houses, from which applications for relief come freely in cases of sickness and so on. Perhaps the two things go rather together.

11395. The existence of those large lodging-houses means casual labour, does it not?—Yes, I should say it did.

11396. Liverpool has obviously got an enormous amount of casual labour?—Yes, a very large amount.

11397. With regard to Salford, that is in the same position as Manchester, is it not?—Salford has had a good deal of casual labour, too, since the opening of the Canal.

Condition in Prescot Union.

11398. What sort of place is Prescot, which is another place high in pauperism?—At Prescot the out-relief was very high and they have been overhauling the whole thing. A considerable decrease is taking place in the number of out-paupers.

11399. Is there any peculiar industrial condition at Prescot, or is it similar to Manchester?—There are chemical works and glass works there, and I am told that the employments are such that many men do not reach an advanced age before they are obliged to give up.

11400. Is not St. Helens in Prescot?—Yes.

11401. Has it ever been suggested to you that these chemical works are productive of ill-health?—Yes, in that way.

11402. And that therefore the high pauperism may result from unhealthy employments?—Partly so.

Condition Wigan Un

11403. Then with regard to Wigan, what are the conditions there?—At Wigan the principal occupation is coal-mining. I think the administration of out-relief there has not been sufficiently strict, and they have had no workhouse which they could use as a test.

11404. With regard to the district committees which you mention as giving relief in your district, do they usually meet at the office or in the locality itself?—The practice varies very much in different unions.

Working System of Relief Committe

11405. Do they sometimes meet in the locality itself as against the board of guardians' office?—Yes.

11406. Is that the most usual?—No, I should not say it is; but it obtains to a considerable extent.

11407. You disapprove of the giving of that relief by district committees as against the whole board, do you not?—Yes, but I do not think that in a big union administration by the whole board is possible. At the same time I think there are great drawbacks to the system of relief committees.

11408. Would you approve of the Manchester system instead, that is, of one guardian and a superintendent ?—No. I should prefer a small number, like three. The Manchester system is that of a relief committee, Joint committees at Liverpool.

11409. I know it is technically a relief committee. With regard to the joint committees which manage the affairs of the Liverpool unions, do you consider that these indirectly elected bodies, formed by representatives from one or two unions, are satisfactory administrative bodies ; I have been told that you lose all control over them ?—That is the system ; as soon as they are appointed they are independent for the period of their appointment.

11410. And they tend to become lacking in control, do they not ?—I have no reason for saying that.

11411. I thought your suggestion of a directly elected county authority was rather on the ground that these were indirectly elected ?—I had not that idea, but I think when you come to so large an area as a county it is better to have direct election.

Proposal to administer relief by judicial officers.

11412. With regard to your proposal of a county authority, would it not be possible to combine that with a semi-judicial official, to take the place of the subordinate local authority and to decide whether a pauper should go to one institution or should be given outdoor relief ?—Do you mean to have the applications for relief dealt with entirely by an official ?

11413. Dealt with entirely by a judicial officer, say, with one or two of the district council sitting as assessors ?—And giving an official vote ?

11414. Yes ?—I do not think I favour that idea.

11415. You do not think that the deciding whether a person shall have relief of one kind or another, or shall have relief at all, is a semi-judicial function ?—I do not know that I do. It seems to me that it would be very much as if you gave an inspector a vote when he was attending a relief committee.

11416. Of course the inspector has got a name which betokens certain functions ; but you give the county court judges all sorts of decisions with regard to the rights of individuals, so why should you not give a stipendiary judge the decision of the right to relief ?—Do you mean that the decision should rest only with the official ?

11417. No, I should give him two assessors ?—Would you give them equal power with himself ?

11418. Yes ; therefore they would be in the majority ?—Then he would not be in the same position as a county court judge.

11419. Could you combine the two ; could you not get the judicial element into it ?—I should be sorry to take the decision out of the hands of the local authority.

11420. You do not favour making it semi-judicial ?—No, I do not.

Proposal to make Exchequer Grants conditional on efficiency.

11421. With regard to the grant in aid, would it not be possible to get control over the provision of workhouse accommodation or infirmaries by making the grant in aid dependent on efficiency, as the police grant is ?—Do you mean if there were a county board of guardians.

11422. Either in the case of a county board of guardians or in the case of the present boards of guardians, would you be in favour of rolling up all the grants into one, which should be given according to efficiency, as in the case of the police grant ?—I think you would have to divide the lunatics from the Poor Law.

11423. Leaving the lunatics on one side, and taking the grants which depend upon the past number of officers and so on, could you roll them all up and give them in relation to efficiency ?—I think so, if the power were in the hands of a body exercising their duty over a large area like a county.

11424. If you had got a County Board of Guardians, would you favour the grants being given in relation to efficiency ?—I am not sure that I would. I think they are a contribution towards the general expenses from personal property which ought to be made.

11425. Do you not think that is the best way of getting control over such things as workhouse accommodation, or infirmary accommodation, or the right number of officers ; or do you see any other way of securing that besides the grant in aid ?—I do not think it would be required.

11426. But you yourself want the Local Government Board to have some control over these county boards do you not ?—I think their control would be very limited 11427. Do you wish it to be very limited ?—Yes, if the administration were in the hands of a body of that kind.

11428. You would trust such a body ?—I think a great deal of the Local Government Board's work might be done away with, if they were just able to influence matters, so that there should not be too much divergence of administration in different parts of the country.

Deterrence of medical relief.

11429. With regard to the infirmaries, it has been suggested to us that the mere fact that the sick person loses his freedom acts as a deterrent to the use of Poor Law infirmaries ; do you think, that is so ?—I do not think it does much.

11430. You do not think that practically the theoretical loss of freedom tells with regard to a sick person ?—I do not think it does to any appreciable extent.

Type of persons receiving relief.

11431. (Mr. Lansbury.) You said just now that in the towns the population is made up largely of loafers, corner boys and that sort of thing ?—There are a large number of them.

11432. They would not be the people who are getting the out-door relief, would they ?—No.

11433. If they are dealt with at all they are dealt with inside the institutions, are they not ?—A great number of them go into the vagrant wards.

11434. So that they would not come into these figures that we have had put before us by Mr. Booth ?—Some of them from time to time would get some out-relief, but not a large number.

11435. That would be medical relief in the main, would it not ?—There would be some who would have other relief as a temporary expedient perhaps.

11436. Would that last them very long in a place like Liverpool ?—No.

11437. It would simply be until a committee meeting or something of that kind ?—Just to tide over the difficulty perhaps.

Comparison between class of out-door paupers in rural and urban unions e.g., Wigan, East Ward, Barrow-in-Furness.

11438. Would you say that the difference between the problem of relief in a rural district and the problem in an urban district, was this, that in a rural district the people whom you dealt with by out-door relief were the aged people, and in an urban district the people whom you dealt with by out-door relief were widows and children ?—There are a large number of old men in the urban districts.

11439. Take Wigan, for instance, of which we have been hearing something ; the number of people in Wigan over sixty is forty-six per 1,000. Then if you go to Westmorland, and take the place called East Ward, you will see the number of people over sixty is 112 per 1,000. Turning again to Wigan, you will see that 60 per cent. of the relief there is for people under sixty, 36 per cent. of it being for children under sixteen ; and that there are nearly 4,000 people in Wigan in receipt of out-relief. Do not those Wigan figures point to the fact that a large number of women and children were getting out-door relief, whilst in East Ward, Westmorland, where you have 213 people getting out-door relief and only fifty-two getting in-door relief, would the figures not mean that it was largely the old men and old women there who were getting it ?—It would seem so, but as a matter of fact the men out-number the women in the Lancashire workhouses.

11440. That may be so, but I am rather wanting to get at the out-door relief just now. At Wigan you have a very large amount of out-relief, 3,906 as against 728 receiving in-door relief, and, which is a point that strikes me, 60 per cent. of the whole of the relief goes to people under sixty. That is accounted for, I think, by the fact that you have such a small proportion of old people in the union. I wanted to follow up Mrs. Webb's point, and to ask you whether that is not due to the fact that the local occupations kill off the bread-winners, and then of course the women and the children come on the rates ?—I suppose the expectation of life is considerably higher in country districts than it is in a place like Wigan, for instance.

Mr. Herbert Jenner-Fust.

30 April 1906.

11441. Take Barrow-in-Furness where it has just been pointed out to me the proportion is 72 per cent. under sixty ?—There again that is entirely urban.

11442. If you notice at Barrow-in-Furness 48 per cent. are under sixteen, which must mean that several heads of families have died and so these children have become chargeable ?—It would seem so. But I am afraid I have not considered those figures, and I would rather not express an opinion off-hand upon them.

Effect of administration upon pauperism.

11443. From the point of view of administration, do you say that pauperism rises or falls just so far as the administration is good or bad ?—No, I do not go so far as that ; but I say the administration has a considerable effect upon the amount of pauperism in a union.

11444. Pauperism just now is going down in your district, I think ?—Yes.

11445. How do you account for that ?—There has been a considerable revival in the cotton trade, which always carries other trades with it, and employment is much more abundant and things generally are much more prosperous.

11446. Which of course means the converse, that if trade is very bad pauperism tends to rise ?—Yes.

11447. And that holds in well-administered unions as well as in badly-administered unions ?—Yes, but the tendency to rise is greater in the badly-administered unions than in the well-administered unions.

11448. That would be so, because pauperism would be higher in the unions badly administered, independent of whether there were good or bad trade ?—Yes.

Manchester system of administering relief.

11449. I am rather wanting now to get you back to Manchester. The system there you told us was that a superintendent relieving officer sat with the committee ; that committee is not a committee of one, is it ?—It is a committee of which the quorum is three.

11450. Half-a-dozen men may be members of the committee, I suppose ?—In practice it is one.

11451. What I want to get at is this—what does the Board of Guardians which elects that committee elect—one man or six ?—I have the numbers here ; there are large numbers on each committee.

11452. So that the committee is not a committee of one sitting with an official to determine what relief shall be given ?—No, it is not.

11453. Do you know whether there are any rules or whether there is any order which says that the quorum of a committee shall be three ?—Yes, there is.

11454. If relief is being given in the Manchester Union by one guardian, is that legal ?—It has never been objected to.

11455. Excuse me, I did not ask you that. Is it in accordance either with the rules of the Manchester Board or of the Local Government Board that one guardian should administer relief ?—It is not in accordance with the rules of the Local Government Board.

11456. And therefore this system which we have heard of is an illegal one ?—In that sense, yes.

Proposal to administer relief by judicial officer.

11457. Is there not a danger of appointing a stipendiary magistrate to act in the manner suggested just now, because you may find after you have made the appointment that you have not got quite the right man ?—You may get a stipendiary of a kind who is not sound on the question of relief. I do not like the suggestion at all.

11458. It is better to have many than simply one ? I mean it is better to have half-a-dozen decent people on the off-chance of getting three or four of them to come than to put all the power into the hands of one man ?—Yes.

Manchester system of administering relief.

11459. (Mr. Phelps.) Are not the decisions of this Manchester Committee confirmed by the Board ?—Yes.

11460. That makes them legal, does it not ?—I do not think they can be objected to afterwards.

11461. (Mr. Lansbury.) Their decisions are reported to the Board of course, but that is a matter of form, is it not ; the books are all there, and the vice-chairman signs them ? —It complies with the regulations.

11462. But it does it in a very technical sort of way, does it not ?—It gives an opportunity for anyone to object. The board could not go into all the cases again.

11463. That is what I mean, the board really has not any control unless someone is interested enough to bring up a particular case ?—Unless they choose to exercise it in any particular case.

11464. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Is the relief, in fact, confirmed by the guardians ?—Yes, it is.

11465. So that there is technically an order by the Board of Guardians for the relief given ?—Yes.

TWENTY-NINTH DAY.

Tuesday, 1st May, 1906.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I., etc., etc. etc. (Chairman).

The Right Hon. Sir HENRY A. ROBINSON, K.C.B.
The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S.
Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.
Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
Mr. FRANCIS CHANDLER.
Dr. A. H. DOWNES.
Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
Mr. J. PATTEN-MACDOUGALL.
Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.
The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.
Professor WILLIAM SMART.
The Rev. H. RUSSELL WAKEFIELD.
Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.
Miss OCTAVIA HILL.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary).

Mr. HERBERT JENNER-FUST, recalled; and further Examined.

Mr. Herbert Jenner-Fust.

1 May 1906.

Proposal to make Poor Law area coterminous with Borough area.

11466. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) In the urban areas you recommend enlarged districts which are to be coterminous with the municipal authority, or as nearly so as possible; under those circumstances, where you would have one authority for a large district like, say, Manchester, how would you propose to manage the out-relief, generally speaking?—I think it would have to be managed in the same way that it is now, that is to say, there would be a board of guardians for the city who would deal with all the questions with which guardians at present deal.

11467. And then would you have in the various districts of the whole authority certain offices, and would you appoint sub-committees to deal with the out-relief in the different districts?—No doubt there would be relief committees, as there are at present in all the large urban unions.

11468. You would still have the difficulty of having probably to rely upon the guardians acquainted with the particular district for the out-relief of that particular district?—There would be the same difficulties that exist at present.

11469. And you would not propose to get over that by increasing the power of the officials in any particular district, would you?—No, I think not.

11470. In the urban districts the objection as to the times of the meetings of the central authority would not prevail so much as in the rural districts, I take it. Your attention was called yesterday by, I think, Sir Samuel Provis to the fact that if you had very large districts the difficulty of getting the guardians to come to the meetings, and so on, would be very great?—Yes.

11471. That would apply much more in rural districts than in urban districts, would it not?—Yes.

11472. You could quite easily get your guardians together in a large town?—I think so.

Difficulty of securing attendance of guardians in large rural areas.

11473. I suppose in rural districts the difficulty would be less if there were fewer guardians; that is, if you did not have such a large number of guardians, it would be more easy to get a small number present, even if they had a considerable distance to come?—If the county board were smaller in number, that would throw more work upon individuals. The smaller the board, the greater the work thrown on each individual member.

11474. The populations are not so very large in those rural districts as a rule; it is the distance that is the difficulty there, is it not?—Yes.

11475. In regard to those districts, I suppose you would have to depend a good deal upon the relieving officers and officials of that class, if you are not to rely entirely on the guardian of the village, so to speak?—I think you should rely upon the guardian of the village for information, but as little as possible for decision on the case.

The ideal Guardians.

11476. You were asked yesterday on the question whether you had somewhere or other a good stamp of guardian; could you give one generally your view as to what is a good stamp of guardian, as I was rather struck with that expression? Is not variety of profession and occupation a very important matter in a board of guardians?—Yes, I think variety is desirable.

11477. A good stamp of guardian is, I presume, an honest man who does his best to study the problem that he is engaged upon?—Yes.

Conditions in Salford Union.

11478. I want to get a little information about Salford, which was held up to us yesterday as capable of improvement. I noticed two or three things about it which are not altogether discouraging. In the first place, I noticed that the proportion of out-door paupers, as compared with in-door paupers, is not nearly so great as in a great many of your other unions?—That is so. Might I say that in mentioning Salford I had no intention of making any complaint of the administration; I merely mentioned it as being at the other end of the scale from the Fylde union, if you exclude Liverpool and Manchester.

11479. I was a little desirous to know why Manchester was to be excluded and Salford included, the population being very considerable in both cases and the casual labour being also considerable in both cases?—I think the fact of a non-resident population, that is, a population who do not sleep in the town, comes in more perhaps in Manchester and Liverpool than it does in Salford; but it is quite a question of degree.

11480. Would you not say that the casual labour is probably rather greater in Salford now that the canal is there?—Yes. There has been a good deal of distress in the last few years in Salford. I had no wish to find fault with Salford at all.

Effect of increased freedom of workhouse inmates.

11481. You spoke of the loss of deterrent influence in consequence of the greater freedom given to inmates of workhouses nowadays; would you be inclined to reduce that amount of freedom?—At present there is no particular standard. It depends upon the individual boards of guardians.

11482. Something more systematised would be better, probably?—I do not think I would interfere much with guardians' discretion, because it is more a question of a privilege to be granted perhaps to an individual than to a whole class.

11483. And, of course, the individual to whom you refer would not, in consequence of the greater freedom, lose the dislike of being in the workhouse, and the fact of being in the workhouse would be a deterrent to such a character just as much as if he had less freedom ?—A deserving character would stand on rather a different footing from a bad character.

Mr. Herbert Jenner-Fust.

1 May 1906.

11484. And therefore giving freedom is one of the ways by which you can show approval of behaviour and conduct within the workhouse ?—Yes. The position of an inmate of a workhouse, particularly if he is old and infirm, is better than that of the average independent labourer. He is better fed and better clothed, his rooms are better, he is warmly covered at night, and he has every comfort of that kind. The only way, as I understand it, in which you can create a dislike for the workhouse and avoid its being abused, is by regulations and by the discipline of the inmates.

Casual labour's bias towards pauperism.

11485. Would you say that, owing to the state of casual labour as we have it now in the land, one of the great difficulties is, that so many people say, "Well, it is the natural thing; I shall never be able to earn enough to provide for my old age, and therefore I shall probably drift to the workhouse at a certain time in my career" ?—I think that has some effect, but I should not attach a great deal of importance to that. I think they are more apt to drift without thinking what the end of it is to be than to look forward and calculate, "It is no use my making an effort."

11486. There is nothing very much now to deter the casual labourer from seeking relief ?—No.

Diminution of filial responsibility.

11487. Have you had any experience of people telling you that the children were doing much less for their parents nowadays than used to be the case ?—It is generally said so, and there is a strong impression that that is so.

11488. The sense of responsibility is weakened ?—Yes.

Conditions in Prestwich Union.

11489. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to Prestwich as well as Salford, you have to consider both places as parts of a large industrial centre, namely, Manchester, have you not ?—Yes.

11490. It would be unfair to penalise the very high rate of pauperism either in Manchester or in Liverpool, and to judge them hardly, without taking into consideration not only that each has a non-residential population who go to live elsewhere, but also that there are movements amongst their very poor ?—Yes.

11491. So that it is possible that the increase of pauperism at Prestwich, for instance, though it may have been coincident with the change in administration, is partly affected by the incoming population ?—To a limited extent.

11492. That, at any rate, you have to take into consideration ?—Yes, I think that is so.

An adequacy of institutions as a result of enlarged Poor Law areas.

11493. With regard to the question of the area of administration, I rather gather that what you suggest is that it should be such as would justify a complete service of institutional relief in itself ?—Yes.

11494. But that would not prevent there being more than one example of such institutions as needed to be more locally placed ?—Quite so.

11495. So that, in that way, you would get over part of the difficulties of the extended area ?—Yes.

11496. While there might be, for instance, one lunatic asylum, there might be two or three institutions of some other description ?—Yes, I think it would be so inevitably in a large area.

11497. But the management should be under one central organisation ?—Yes.

Facility of locomotion in connection with the Poor Law area.

11498. Then you pointed out that the size of the possible area depends on the means and the organisation of locomotion, to a great extent ?—I think that ought to be considered.

11499. And that the improvement in the means of locomotion and its organisation does render possible a larger area than might have been thought of twenty or thirty years ago ?—I think that is so clearly.

11500. Possibly, in the near future, it will go even still further if we learn how to make a thorough use of roads as well as of the railways ?—I think there is every prospect of it.

11501. If some of the institutions were rather distant, and you had to trust to organised locomotion to make them accessible, would that not probably result in there boing more visiting of friends to their friends in the workhouse, and less cases of inmates of the workhouse going out to visit their friends ?—Yes, I think there would be.

Distant institutions and their effect on inmates' leave of absence, and visits to inmates.

11502. Would not the visiting be organised more than the opposite, that is, those who come into the workhouse would have to be considered by the provision of special means of access, and those that were within the workhouse would have less chance of getting out to see their friends ?—I think that is so.

11503. Would that not be a good thing ?—I do not think it would be at all a bad thing; I think it would be a good thing.

Need and effect of small areas for administration of out-relief.

11504. With regard to the value of small areas, I understand that it is in connection with the administration of out-relief that you regard the smaller area as essential ?—Yes.

11505. And that you think it could be separately organised in the way that you have suggested, so as to give efficiency in both directions ?—I think so.

11506. I take it, that it is more efficiency than economy that you have in view, efficiency being more practicable to attain perhaps than economy; or, should I say that it would be the economy of efficiency that you have in view ?—Yes, I think that is so. I think the natural tendency would be to a stricter administration of out-relief which would tend to economy.

Guardians' discretion as to liberty of workhouse inmates.

11507. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Are there separate rules and regulations for each workhouse now ?—There are general orders from the Local Government Board laying down general regulations, but as regards liberty, a great deal rests in the discretion of the guardians.

Extent of privilege of leave of absence from workhouse.

11508. (Mr. Lansbury.) You said that the workhouses were not so deterrent now because there was more freedom in seeing friends; does that mean that the inmates go out more often in your district ?—In some instances that has been the case.

11509. What would be the most frequent time the people can go out—once a week, or once a month, or what ?—In one instance, freedom was given to a large class to go every day in and out as they liked.

11510. Would that be to the whole of the aged ?—Yes, I think practically to the whole of them.

11511. (Mrs. Webb.) Simply to the aged, or to any other class ?—The really able-bodied class hardly exists in our workhouses, and we have very few of them, I mean those who ought to be earning their own living. I should say it applied to the whole of the remainder, except of course the children and the imbeciles.

11512. It was not limited then to the aged, as it is at Woolwich, for instance ?—Not to any particular class of the aged.

11513. (Mr. Lansbury.) Was it limited to the people over sixty ?—No, I do not think so.

11514. Do you think the able-bodied were allowed to go in and out too ?—Some who might be classed as able-bodied, but not who would ordinarily be termed able-bodied, were allowed to go in and out. I do not mean that it applied to those who ought to be earning their own living.

11515. (Mrs. Webb.) I rather wanted to know whether it was the same rule which is in force at Woolwich, where the aged who are of good character are in a separate institution where they have complete freedom of egress and ingress ?—I do not think that amount of distinction was drawn; I think it was a good deal wider than that.

11516. (Mr. Lansbury.) But it would not mean that able-bodied men and women capable of getting their own living were allowed to go in and out of the workhouse whenever they pleased ?—No, certainly not.

Effect on discipline of frequent leave of absence from workhouse.

11517. What was the effect of that on the pauperism of the union concerned ?—I cannot say what was the effect on the pauperism, because I do not think it continued long enough; but the effect on the discipline of the house was rather a bad one.

11518. I suppose they came back drunk ?—They thought they might do as they pleased, and were not to, do any work at all.

11519. These were people who were capable of working, were they ?—Many of the old people can do something such as cutting up chips for fire wood and that sort of thing.

11520. Instead of doing that, they thought they ought to go out each day?—They took a stroll in the town instead.

11521. Was that because of a new rule that had been made that they could do that?—Yes.

11522. There would not be any objection, would there, to people going in and out if they did the work which was laid down for them to do?—If it is kept within reasonable limits. I think there ought to be a certain amount of freedom given.

11523. This experiment failed, and it failed apparently because of bad organisation, but that does not mean that you are against giving people freedom to go in and out, does it?—No, not altogether.

estion as reasonable ve of ence.

11524. (Mr. Bentham.) May I ask to what extent, without increasing your difficulties, you do think it would be advisable to let them go in and out?—I think once a month is a reasonable time.

11525. You would not say it would be advisable to let them out so many hours every day, for instance?—No, I do not think I would.

11526. You think once a month for the able-bodied would be quite sufficient?—I was speaking of the aged and infirm, not of the able-bodied.

11527. (Mr. Lansbury.) I was thinking of the aged people who do work about the house—not tasks, but work of various descriptions—the light jobs about the house which the old men and old women do. My question is that for these, at any rate, you have no objection to more frequent going in and out so long as it is organised properly, by which I mean so long as they do the particular work that is allotted to them, and their going out does not interfere with that?—Yes.

11528. (Mr. Bentham.) Do you think once a month is often enough for those?—I think, as a rule, it is.

11529. (Mr. Lansbury.) Would you have any real objection to their going out once a week?—I think that is too often. Constant going in and out gives a good deal of trouble to the officials of a large house.

11530. Would your only objection be the trouble to the officers concerned?—No. It also tends to decrease what I have termed the deterrent influence of the house. The easier you make the conditions in the house, the less objection they will have to going in.

11531. If they are decent people who have got into the position of not being able to maintain themselves because of old age or infirmity, do you think it is quite right to impose such a restriction as that, merely for the purpose of making it more deterrent?—The number of such in our workhouses is, I am afraid, very small.

e adminis- tion of ef by ardians to dents in ir own stituency.

11532. Then about members of committees looking after their friends for out-door relief; do you find that prevails very much in your district?—No, I should not like to say that; but I think it is more difficult to deal judicially, if I may say so, with applicants whom you know personally, than it is for you to deal with applicants whom you do not know anything about. If relief is administered by guardians who represent the districts from which the applicants come, I think the tendency is that the relief is more freely given.

11533. I do not know what happens in Manchester or in Liverpool, but in London a relief committee would be made up of members representing several parts of the district; and therefore, although one man might know the individual applicant, there would be three or four others who did not know him or her?—That would be so in that case.

chester hod of inister- relief.

11534. Do you not think that that is quite enough safeguard about it?—I do not think that in practice it is so.

11535. Not in your district?—I am limiting my observations to my district.

11536. How do they elect the members, say at Manchester—by wards or for the whole district?—At Manchester, if you remember, it was said yesterday that a single guardian sits in committee.

11537. But you told us that was not quite correct—that there was a committee, and it only happened that the other members of the committee were not present, but they ought to have been present?—That is so.

11538. (Mrs. Webb.) Did they not get a special order for it?—Not to allow a single guardian to sit.

11539. I thought they had some order which they considered equivalent to a permanent or special order?—No, I think not. I think three is the minimum.

11540. (Mr. Phelps.) If the decisions are confirmed by the Board, that would legalise them, would it not?—I suppose it would; but as a matter of fact the Order fixes three as the smallest number.

Relieving officers' security of tenure.

11541. (Mr. Lansbury.) The relieving officers are irremovable, are they not, without the consent of the Local Government Board?—Yes.

11542. So that a relieving officer is perfectly free to express his opinion without fear of getting the sack?—Yes.

11543. And a superintendent relieving officer would be free too, would he not, to say what he thought about particular cases, without any fear of dismissal?—Yes.

11544. All those permanent officers cannot, as a matter of fact, be dismissed without the sanction of the Local Government Board?—That is so.

Question of extension of Local Government Board's power to decide disputes as to settlement.

11545. I understood you to say that you were not in favour of arbitration in settlement cases. Instead of two unions going to law to settle to which of them an unhappy person belongs, it is suggested that such questions should be settled by arbitration?—They can be settled by the arbitration of the Local Government Board now.

11546. (Mrs. Webb.) And they are already settled so in many cases, are they not?—Yes, if they agree to submit a case.

11547. (Mr. Lansbury.) Are you in favour of all questions of settlement being treated in that fashion; that is, not giving boards an option of coming to you at all, but saying, "You two unions shall not go to law about this, we will settle it for you"?—I do not think that is possible, because I do not think a case could be agreed upon in all instances.

11548. In the last resort evidence has to be submitted to a court, has it not?—Yes.

11549. Would you be in favour of that evidence being compulsorily submitted to the Local Government Board, and their decision being taken?—No, I do not think I would. I think I should prefer it remaining as it is.

11550. Despite the cost of legal proceedings?—Yes.

The Unemployed Workmen's Act.

11551. Now about the Unemployed Workmen's Act; I understood you to disapprove of that yesterday?—I think I was hardly asked any questions on the subject.

11552. Mr. Loch asked you some questions, and I gathered from your answers that you thought that any relief work ought to be carried out by the guardians?—I mean, that where application is made to the guardians for relief, the dealing with the applicants should be in their hands.

11553. Have you any opinion on the Unemployed Workmen's Act at all? It has been in operation in Manchester and Liverpool and your other big towns this winter?—The effect of it has been to find temporary employment for a certain number to carry out work which would not otherwise have been carried out, at all events for some time, and in that way to diminish the amount of work available for the future. I cannot see that it has acted at all, except as a palliative to enable the difficulties to be tided over.

11554. That is all the Act set out to do, is it not? It did not set out to be a permanent remedy, did it?—There is a power for emigration, amongst other things, which is a more permanent way of dealing with the difficulty.

11555. I suppose they have emigrated some people from your district?—A few, I believe.

11556. (Dr. Downes.) Have any of them come back?—I do not think there has been time.

Mr. Herbert Jenner-Fust.

1 May 1906.

Difficulties as to discharge of paupers from district institutions.

11557. With reference to the classification of workhouses, which you suggest, how would you deal with the question of persons who wish to take their discharge; take the ins-and-outs first of all?—I had it in my mind that that class would be dealt with in some more drastic fashion than they are at the present time, by being placed in labour colonies with compulsory powers of detention, or in some other way.

11558. You do contemplate increased powers with regard to that class?—Yes.

11559. Now take the infirm class; how would you deal with them?—There might have to be limitations on their power of discharge. I think it would only be fair that when they were allowed to take their discharge they should be taken back to their own locality, as I think is done now when paupers are boarded out in other workhouses than their own.

11560. Those are probably points which would all need consideration in connection with such a scheme?—They would, no doubt.

11561. This point, whether a pauper acquires a settlement by being placed in another district, would also be a matter for consideration, would it not?—I speak with diffidence, but I do not think that would come in under the present law. Such residence would not be counted for purposes of settlement.

Mr. Gerald A. F. Hervey, called; and Examined.

Mr. Gerald A. F. Hervey.

1 May 1906.

11562. (Mr. Booth.) I think you are the General Inspector of the Local Government Board for the Eastern Poor Law District, which comprises the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk and Essex (West Ham excluded) and also the union of Wisbech in Cambridgeshire?—I am.

11563-4. And you have prepared for our use a memorandum together with certain tables giving detailed information as to the boards of guardians in your district, the number of paupers, the cost of relief, and so on? (See Appendix, Vol. I. (A), No. XXIII.)—Yes.

11565. How long have you been inspector of this district?—Five-and-a-half years.

General conditions as to pauperism, occupation, and administration in district.

11566. It has the reputation of being a heavily pauperised district, and is so, I think, in comparison with other districts in England?—Yes, I believe it is.

11567. Do you consider that that is due to impoverishment owing to industrial conditions?—Yes, on the whole.

11568. Has there been, during your five-and-a-half years, improvement or the reverse in the general pauperism of the district?—There has been a reduction, certainly, on the whole.

11569. Is that partly the result of your urging upon them certain methods of administration?—Of course you must take into consideration the reduction in population.

11570. But that cuts in two ways, and a reduction in the population may tend to make the ratio of pauperism higher without any increase in the actual number of paupers?—That is so.

11571. When you say there has been an improvement do you mean merely in the numbers of paupers, or in the ratio of paupers to population?—I mean in the ratio of paupers to population.

11572. So that there has been actually an improvement in that respect?—Yes.

11573. And therefore a still greater improvement in the actual numbers?—I think so.

11574. During this period has there been an improvement or not in the industrial conditions generally?—I should say that the industrial conditions are about the same.

11575. When we speak of the industrial conditions in your district, that means mainly agricultural conditions, does it not?—Yes.

11576. Apart from agriculture, has there been a spread of such industries as there are at Ipswich, Colchester and other towns in your district?—I should say, on the whole, yes—with the exception of certain trades.

11577. With regard to the population that has left, has it merely concentrated itself in your towns, or has it gone further afield to London, or wherever it may be?—I should say that in Norfolk and Suffolk there would have been a tendency to go into the towns of the district; possibly in Essex there may have been a tendency to come to London.

11578. Or to come at any rate towards London?—Yes.

11579. You have some unions in Essex which have greatly increased in population, have you not?—That is so.

11580. With regard to the administration, the greater number of the paupers are receiving out-relief, as a rule, I think?—Yes.

11581. Is that out-relief given without offering the test of the house in most cases?—In the rural districts the only applicants for out-relief are the aged people—men and women who are mostly past work.

11582. Are there a very large number of guardians in the various unions as a rule?—Yes; in one of my tables I have shown the number of elected guardians for each union.

Large boards of guardians and their effect on administration.

11583. The numbers in many cases are extremely unwieldy, are they not?—They are, certainly.

11584. Too large for good administration, I suppose?—In a large number of cases, yes.

11585. Their numbers are no doubt connected with the number of parishes?—Yes.

11586. Do you recognise that frequently there is more relief given where there is a very small area to each guardian?—Yes; there is more inclination on the part of those boards to give more relief.

11587. On the whole has there been any change at all in the method or principles of administration during your period there?—No; I think in the rural districts matters remain pretty much the same. It is very difficult to get good principles of administration into the heads of farmers and so on.

Endowed charities at Norwich and their effect on administration.

11588. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) I notice that you refer to the charities in Norwich which are endowed, you say, to the extent of about £50,000 a year, I think?—Yes.

11589. In your judgment, in a town in which there are a large number of these charities, is there not a tendency to make people lax with regard to the administration of relief altogether? Is not the existence of a number of these charities likely to make people a little slack in dealing with other people's money, generally?—I should say it is the case in Norwich.

Number of qualified applicants under Unemployed Workmen Act.

11590. I see you make certain statements in your memorandum in regard to the unemployed. I presume in all these cases where the people have registered, there has been a proper classification, and inquiries have been made in due course under the Act, have they not?—Presumably, yes.

11591. I notice you say that in Southend 393 men registered themselves, but work was found for only seventy-five; that might mean that after the sifting process there was only, comparatively speaking, a small proportion of the 393 who were considered qualified for work under the Act?—Very possibly.

Electoral system at Yarmouth.

11592. I notice that Yarmouth seems to have a small number of guardians as compared with its population, and even as compared with the other districts, for you say there are only twenty guardians in Yarmouth?—Yes.

11593. Is that because there are only two parishes there?—Yes.

11594. In Yarmouth are they elected ten from each parish?—I think Yarmouth is divided into wards.

11595. Have you any case, as far as you know, of a town something of the size of Great Yarmouth where the election is simply for the town and not for particular wards in that town?—No, I do not think so.

Preponderance of out-relief cases and its causes.

11596. Apparently in your district altogether the proportion of out-relief is very large as compared with the in-door relief and as compared with certain other districts; is there any cause that you can assign for that?—I think that generally the guardians feel that they would very much rather give out-relief than apply the house test; that is mainly on the ground of cheapness.

11597. A great deal of your district is rural, of course?—Yes.

11598. Would you say that the tendency to give out-relief in preference to in-door relief is generally more in rural districts than in urban districts?—I think that the guardians generally feel that it is cheaper to give out-relief than to bring them into the house.

11599. It would not be because of a disinclination to take persons away from their little village, where a good many people would look after them if something were provided for them? Do you think that consideration has made people rather sentimental with regard to moving them?—There is that feeling as well.

11600. That feeling, of course, would not prevail in the same degree in an urban district?—No.

Surcharge in respect of out-relief at Norwich.

11601. (Mr. Nunn.) I suppose you have mentioned in your annual reports the circumstances of Norwich, where there is obviously a great deal of pauperism?—Yes, from time to time.

11602. Have you, besides mentioning it in your annual reports, made any special recommendations to the Local Government Board?—Yes, recently.

11603. Quite recently?—Yes.

11604. In order that the Local Government Board may take some action in the matter?—It was in reference to inquiries that I made myself in Norwich with regard to out-relief.

11605. Do you refer to the inquiries into those cases that you have sent us?—Yes, the inquiries were with regard to those cases. I drew the attention of the district auditor to the fact that these people were in receipt of out-relief, with the result that at his audit he made a long report to the Local Government Board on these cases and surcharged the relieving officers.

10606. Then some of these cases which we actually have before us have been surcharged?—Yes.

11607. Do you remember what proportion of them were surcharged?—I think the relieving officers were surcharged with all these cases.

11608. Have they actually paid the money?—No, the question has not been decided at the Local Government Board.

11609. Will the Local Government Board hold an inquiry and decide for itself?—They will not hold an inquiry. They have the auditor's report before them now, and they will decide in time whether they must uphold the auditor or whether they must override the auditor.

11610. If the auditor is upheld, will the relieving officers have to pay?—I think the practice of the board is to confirm the auditor's action and to remit the surcharge.

11611. Which board do you mean, the Local Government Board?—Yes; that is their usual practice.

11612. Do you think it would be salutary not to do that on some occasions?—I think it would have a very salutary effect on many occasions if they made them pay up.

11613. As in this case you are satisfied with the work of the relieving officers, it would be hard upon them if they were made to pay?—Undoubtedly it would fall very hardly upon the relieving officers.

11614. In your opinion, evidently, if it is anyone's fault, it is the fault of the board of guardians?—Undoubtedly.

Question of persons liable to surcharge in respect of out-relief.

11615. Cannot they be made to pay up? Cannot the auditor surcharge the guardians?—That is a question for the office. I do not think such a thing has ever been done.

11616. But there are certain things for which the guardians themselves can be surcharged, surely?—Naturally there are.

11617. All these amounts were passed in pursuance of their resolutions, I take it?—Yes. Mr. Gerald A.F. Hervey.

11618. And the cheques, I suppose, were finally drawn for the relieving officers in pursuance of their resolutions?—Yes. 1 May 1906.

11619. Then why should they not be surcharged—but perhaps that is an auditor's question?—That is quite an auditor's question, I should think.

Composition of Norwich Board of Guardians.

11620. Your statement of the numbers on the various boards gives no idea of the composition of the boards; might we, in connection with the Norwich board, have some idea of what its forty-eight members are? You speak of Socialists on the board there; do they form the majority?—No, not by any means.

11621. (Mrs. Webb.) What is the political colour of the Norwich board now, do you know at all?—It is pretty equally divided between Liberals and Conservatives.

11622. And they both give out-door relief?—Yes.

11623. (Mr. Nunn.) I understand there is a certain leaven at any rate who are opposed to the policy which the Socialists press?—There is a certain leaven.

11624. But they are in a minority?—They are in a distinct minority.

11625. May I ask what classes that minority represents, are there any benefit society men amongst them?—That I could not say.

11626. Could you say whether the endowed charities are represented on the Norwich Board of Guardians—not officially, of course, but by members who belong to them?—That I could not say.

11627. You do not know whether they have infected the board at all?—No, I do not know that at all.

11628. There is a Charity Organisation Society in Norwich I think?—There is.

11629. Are any of its representatives on the board?—I do not think so.

11630. Does the Charity Organisation Society there take any part in the election for the board of guardians, do you know?—That I could not answer.

11631. At the election I gather the Socialist Party practically has its own way?—At the recent General Election, yes.

11632. I am not speaking of the General Election?—The Socialists are a very small minority on the board of guardians.

11633. (Mr. Lansbury.) How many are there?—At the present time I think there is only one avowed, but that one has a very loud voice.

11634. He knows what he wants, that is really what is the matter?—And he gets it.

11635. (Mr. Nunn.) And there is a mixed body of Liberals and Conservatives who practically follow that one Socialist?—Yes, quite so.

11636. (Mrs. Webb.) As aspersions have been cast on the Socialists, may I ask whether there was not a Mr. Herbert Day, who was a Socialist, on the board of guardians?—He is not now a guardian.

11637. But he was a thoroughly good guardian, was he not?—Yes, he was a thoroughly good guardian indeed, and a very good man.

11638. He was a Socialist, and his action, I believe, was not in favour of this lax out-door relief?—No; Mr. Day was a very evenly balanced man.

11639. (Mr. Nunn.) I understood from your memorandum that it was because of the action of certain Socialist members at public meetings held in the Market Place that the chairman, who was in favour of strict administration, resigned his seat?—No, not on that account.

11640. That is what I understood you to say in paragraph 13?—The chairman of the relief committee resigned his seat as a protest against the granting of indiscriminate relief.

11641. You say in that paragraph, "The members of the relief committee who were inclined to assist the relieving officers are in the minority, their fellow members being influenced by the action of certain Socialist members, who at public meetings held in the Market Place and elsewhere announced and denounced the names of those members who were opposed to the granting of relief;" and then you follow that by saying, "In September last the chairman of the relief committee resigned his chairmanship as a protest?"—Yes.

Mr. Gerald A.F. Hervey.

1 May 1906.

11642. (Mrs. Webb.) The members of the relief committee were not Socialists particularly, were they?—No.

11643. (Mr. Nunn.) Who are the "certain Socialist members" and what are they members of—they are members of the board of guardians, I suppose?—Yes.

11644. And not of the relief committee?—They sit on the relief committee.

11645. Then there were more Socialists than one on that relief committee?—Yes, there have been, but at the present moment there is only one avowed.

11646. Besides the appeal to the auditor, which seem, likely to be successful, what would be your other proposal for checking the pauperisation of Norwich?—I do not see what proposals one can put forward as long as the relief committees are bent on giving relief. At the present time there is no wish on the part of the Norwich Board of Guardians to check the granting of relief.

Co-operation between Guardians and charitable agencies.

11647. Has the question of the exchange of lists with the various charitable agencies and endowed charities been brought before the Norwich Board by any member?—It has not been brought before the board of guardians by any member. I have suggested myself in years gone by that something should be done in that matter.

11648. But it was not acceptable to the board?—It was not acceptable to the board at all.

11649. Have you any suggestions for checking pauperism in Norwich besides those you have given us?—If the relief committee showed any desire to reduce their out-relief and to check their out-relief, the appointment of superintendent relieving officers would help them very greatly; but, as I said before, they have no desire to reduce their out-relief. It is just a question of party politics with them, and that governs everything in Norwich.

Political influence and out-relief at Norwich.

11650. What I understood from you was that the Liberals and Conservatives were about equally balanced on the board, and that there was one Socialist member?—Yes, but I should say again that I am pretty well convinced that the granting of out-relief has a great deal to do with the votes.

11651. Do you think it is done with a view to their future election?—Yes.

11652. And that they are largely influenced by that in the granting of out-door relief?—Quite so.

11653. (Mrs. Webb.) Every party is equally interested in it?—Yes, Conservatives and Liberals alike.

11654. (Mr. Nunn.) But the real animus and strength of the out-relief policy is derived, as I gather, from the one or more Socialists who have friends outside, who practically put the fire to the fuel in the Market Place?—Possibly.

11655. (Mrs. Webb.) Might I venture to suggest about that that this question of granting out-door relief for electoral purposes is a hundred years old in Norwich?—I believe it is.

11656. Before 1835 there were two parties, the Blues and the Yellows, and out-relief was given to 30,000 or 40,000 people by the Blues and the Yellows?—I believe so.

11657. That was long before Socialists existed?—Long before.

11658. It has practically been a historical tradition in Norwich that out-door relief has been given persistently for electoral purposes?—Yes.

11659. Even from the eighteenth century?—I believe so.

Supply of alcohol in workhouses.

11660. (Mr. Nunn.) It is quite a misfortune then that the Socialist party has been mixed up with this business, but it has taken quite a leading part in it recently. There is one other question apart from the question of out-door relief that I want to ask, and that is with regard to the supply of alcohol for consumption in the workhouses; does that apply to anything besides spirits?—It applies to beer, wine, and spirits.

11661. Is that in workhouses as apart from infirmaries?—That is altogether in the workhouses but including the infirmaries, because I have no separate infirmaries.

11662. In what way is alcohol supplied in workhouses in those parts of the house where the able-bodied members are?—I have no doubt it is given under the direction of the medical officer to certain old people.

11663. It is really given under his direction then?—Yes.

11664. (Mr. Phelps.) Is it given in return for work at the time?—Not the alcohol.

11665. But the beer is?—Yes.

Composition of Ipswich Board of Guardians.

11666. (Mr. Lansbury.) Speaking of Ipswich, in your second paragraph you say that the board there has deteriorated; in what way has it deteriorated?—There are not so many of the larger and more responsible ratepayers coming forward for election as there used formerly to be.

11667. Are the people who are on the board now direct ratepayers in the main?—I suppose generally speaking they are all direct ratepayers.

11668. They do not compound at Ipswich, I think, do they?—I think not.

11669. But you do not know that for certain?—I do not know it for certain, but I do not think there are any members of the board of guardians at the present moment who would be classed as compound ratepayers.

11670. They do compound for the rates for the smaller property at Ipswich, do they not?—Yes.

11671. There are really no workmen on the Ipswich Board, then?—Not at the present moment. They had one very excellent Labour member a short time ago, but he had to give up his post, because he went into partnership in a masonry business.

The Norwich out-relief policy and its results.

11672. Has the increase in out-door relief at Ipswich been due to a settled policy on the part of the board there?—For years Ipswich had a very rigid system of out-relief administration, but, within the last two years that has shown signs of breaking up.

11673. Is that due to a definite act of policy on the part of the board; I mean consciously, and that they are doing it with their eyes open, because they disagree with the system which their system is giving place to?—I should not like to say that.

11674. It might be that these men who have got to pay in the last resort are spending their own as well as their neighbours' money (because these men, I understand, are all direct ratepayers), but think that the old policy was too strict and that the policy which they have inaugurated is best for the people and for themselves?—It may be so.

11675. The deterioration really only shows itself in the fact that there are rather more paupers there now than previously?—In the fact that there are more paupers, and there is a considerable rise in out-relief.

11676. But that does not necessarily mean that undeserving people are getting it, or that they are doing, as at Norwich, giving it to cases which do not need it?—I think that they are giving more in Ipswich.

Effect of Local Government Act, 1894, administration.

11677. It is not the Act of 1894 which has led to this, because the present members of the board could have got elected before, as they have all the necessary qualifications?—I dare say they could have done so, but they did not.

11678. Still, the alteration in 1894 did not make it possible for them to get on the board; but the whole effect of your paragraph is to say that it is due to that Act, and that that Act has brought all these dreadful things to pass?—I think that that Act had a very great deal to do with it.

11679. In what way?—In encouraging the smaller people to come on.

11680. How did it encourage them, because they could have got on before, and as a matter of fact in many towns—in many parts of London at any rate—that kind of person ruled the boards before that time. The point that I am trying to put to you is that these people, whom you class as responsible for the lowering of the administration at Ipswich, could have got on before the alteration of 1894, as they had the qualifications?—I suppose so.

11681. (Mrs. Webb.) Do you suggest that the electorate has changed?—Yes, the electorate has changed.

11682. (Mr. Lansbury.) Only by bringing in more of the same kind of people, because the householder workmen had votes before 1894, and it was only the lodger that was brought in by the 1894 Act?—Yes.

Trade depression at Ipswich.

11683. (Mr. Phelps.) But under Sturges Bourne's Act there was also plural voting, was there not?—Yes.

11684. (Mr. Lansbury.) Has Ipswich during the last two years suffered, like every other town, because of the depression in trade?—There have been certainly more unemployed during the last two years in Ipswich than there had been previously.

11685. That would make the administration of the Poor Law more difficult, would it not?—It would make it slightly more difficult.

11686. Then about Norwich; it is of course true as you say that only one of the forty-eight members is a Socialist?—Yes.

Constitution of Norwich Board of Guardians.

11687. It is also true that at Norwich the relief is administered by committees, is it not?—Yes.

11688. Then one man could not be on all these committees, could he?—No. He is on one committee, but that is the largest relief committee.

11689. Is he on the particular committee which is responsible for the cases in your appendix?—That I am sure I could not say. Those cases were collected from various parts of the city, not from one relieving officer's district.

11690. How is the Norwich Board constituted; what is the occupation in life of the people who are on the board?—They are mostly tradesmen of various denominations.

11691. Are there any clergy there?—Yes, there are a few clergy, both Anglican and Nonconformists.

11692. Do these clergy have the giving away of the charities as well?—Not that I know of.

Charities at Norwich.

11693. In whose hands are the charities?—I suppose they are in the hands of the various bodies themselves. I can give you a list of the charities. There is first the Great Hospital of Norwich. That is the greatest charity in Norwich, and I think it has an income of nearly £10,000 a year. The Great Hospital, I might explain, is really a sort of workhouse. It is a huge almshouse which is governed by a master and a matron, something after the style of a workhouse.

11694. How do you get admission there?—By votes.

11695. Who would be the managers?—There is a Committee of Management.

11696. Are they elected?—They are not elected by the people.

11697. How do they come into being?—I fancy they must be appointed by the Charity Commissioners.

11698. (Mrs. Webb.) Has not the municipal corporation something to do with it?—Yes, the municipal corporation has something to do with it.

11699. (Mr. Nunn.) Are they not nominated according to a scheme which has been approved by the Charity Commissioners?—It is something of that sort I should say.

11700. (Mrs. Webb.) Was it not a charity under the old municipal corporation prior to 1835?—Possibly it was.

11701. (Mr. Lansbury.) What are the other charities?—Doughty's Hospital, the Childrens' Hospital, Norman's Endowed School, Cooke's Hospital, the Hospital and School for the Blind, the Town Close Charity, the Bethel Hospital, the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital, the Lying-in Charity, the Jenny Lind Hospital, the Eye Infirmary, the Loan Charities——.

11702. Is that an arrangement for granting loans?—I expect so. Then there is the Norwich Hospital, the Saturday and Sunday Fund, the Orphans' Home, and the Norwich Magdalen or Female Home. In addition to those, there are a large number of lesser charities, such as local and Nonconformist charities, and private doles, which must account for another £10,000 a year. Those charities I have specifically mentioned have an income of nearly £40,000 a year.

11703. So that it is quite a desirable place for people to live in who want to loaf on their fellows?—Most desirable.

11704. That state of things has not arisen certainly since 1894?—No.

11705. So that any modern legislation is not responsible for the degraded condition of Norwich?—I should think not.

Charities in Cathedral towns.

11706. Has the pauperism of Norwich anything to do with the fact that there is a cathedral there; has the cathedral brought these demoralising charities there?—I should not think so.

11707. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) As a rule, is it not around cathedral cities that there gather these large numbers of charities?—I have no experience of any other cathedral city, except York.

11708. (Mr. Lansbury.) We have had the case of York brought before us, and it seems to me that Norwich rather beats York. Ely does not come under you, does it?—No.

Old-age pauperism in rural districts

11709. Now about the pauperism in the rural districts. Mildenhall apparently is at the top of your list; would it not be true to say that most of these are aged people?—In the rural districts certainly.

11710. And that the out-relief is really an old-age pension to them, and they look on it as a kind of pension?—Possibly they do.

11711. Is it not the tendency nowadays in the country districts for them to look forward to the allowance when they get to a certain age?—I do not like to say that altogether.

11712. But it is true, is it not, that right over your district, where pauperism is very high the proportion of aged people to the population is also very high?—Certainly.

11713. And that in the country districts, the longer an agricultural labourer or his wife lives, the greater the chance of him or her becoming a recipient of outdoor relief or going into the workhouse?—Yes.

Norwich charities and their effect.

11714 (Mrs. Webb.) Is it not the fact that these charities at Norwich are very ancient?—Yes, very.

11715. They go back to the fifteenth or the sixteenth century, do they not?—Possibly they do.

11716. So it is not a new phenomenon at all?—No.

11717. Do you happen to know whether they are connected now with the municipal corporation?—I do not know I am sure.

11718. I believe the reason why there were so many charities at Norwich was because Norwich was an extraordinarily wealthy centre in the sixteenth century?—Quite so.

11719. So that the present conditions are not attributable either to the cathedral or to the Socialists?—Not a bit.

Guardians' methods of dealing with contracts.

11720. With regard to contracts, has your attention been called to the method of giving contracts by boards of guardians, and have you considered that question?—In what respect?

11721. As to whether they are duly advertised and as to whether due inquiry is made as to quality and price?—The contracts are well advertised, and I think as a whole, speaking generally, great care is taken in the giving of the contracts.

11722. Do you ever attend meetings of the guardians while they are giving out contracts?—Often.

11723. What is the ordinary procedure?—The ordinary procedure is that the tenders arrive in sealed envelopes and are opened by the contract committee.

11724. And reported on?—And reported on; the committee, of course, make certain recommendations.

11725. You have never noticed a board of guardians opening contracts and voting on them without a report, have you?—Yes, I have.

Mr. Gerald A.F. Hervey.

1 May 1906.

11726. In what particular union?—I cannot name, speaking from memory, any particular union.

11727. Would you consider that a bad procedure?—No.

11728. Then you see no advantage in it being reported on by a committee?—No.

11729. You think it does just as well for the board of guardians to open them and decide on the spot?—I think so.

11730. Have you any experience of arrangements made by the clerk to the guardians to withhold the names of the tenderers, with a view to preventing collusion between members of the board of guardians and specific tradesmen?—I think that the name of the contractor is only known at the time of the opening of the tenders.

11731. But it is known then?—At the time of the opening of the tenders, yes.

11732. You have not got instances of the practice which obtains, I think, a good deal in Lancashire, of withholding the names of the tenderers altogether and permitting the guardians only to vote on the quality and possibly on the price?—I think I might say that is the practice which is generally followed.

11733. The practice is, then, that the names are withheld?—Yes, they are withheld generally.

11734. And you get one, two, three, four, and so on?—Yes.

11735. With the price?—With the price.

11736. Is the specific price given, or is it only said that No. 1 is higher than No. 2?—The specific price is generally given.

11737. I daresay you know that some clerks withhold the specific price in order to prevent collusion?—I have never noticed that.

11738. But it is usual to withhold the name?—Yes.

11739. Do you consider that is any safeguard?—I think so in dealing with the rural boards of guardians; they are mostly farmers, and very honest men as a rule.

11740. But you do think it is better to withhold the names?—Yes, I think it would be better to withhold the name.

11741. So you think there might be collusion?—I do not say there would be collusion.

11742. Still you think it is better to withhold the name?—On general principles I think it is better to withhold the name.

11743. You talk about the deterioration of certain boards of guardians, not specifying any particular board of guardians; has that affected the giving of contracts at all, and has the giving of contracts become more reckless?—I think only in regard to expenditure.

11744. You do not suggest that there is more collusion?—No, not a bit.

11745. You think it is merely impulsive expenditure?—Yes.

Effect of Act of 1894 on administration.

11746. We were told by Mr. Davy and by some other inspectors that though the character of the boards had deteriorated since 1894, yet that had been gradually remedied, and the people had begun to know their business and were now improving, so that the deterioration was not permanent; is that your opinion?—Yes, I should say in that one particular direction it is so.

11747. That they are improving?—Yes.

11748. Do you think the effect of the Act of 1894 will be permanent, or do you think the existing condition of things is merely due to the people who get elected being inexperienced, but that they will learn their job?—I think inexperience has a great deal to do with it.

11749. But you still deplore it?—I still deplore it.

Publication of lists of paupers.

11750. With regard to paragraphs 19 and 20, do you advocate the old system of the 18th century of publishing lists of people in receipt of out-door relief, which you may remember was practically dropped?—I should say in one particular instance it would have a very good result.

11751. An instance of one union?—Yes.

11752. Is that Norwich?—That is Norwich.

11753. Do you think the ratepayers would take action, or what would follow?—I think the ratepayers in general would take more interest in the administration of out-relief if the names of the persons were published.

Apathy Norwich ratepaye and its c

11754. With regard to the ratepayers of Norwich, why are they so apathetic; do they realise that it means a rise in the rate?—I do not think the general run of ratepayers think of it at all. They are satisfied to grumble at the increased rating every half year, and that is all.

11755. Do you happen to know that there is much compounding; does that come to your knowledge?—It does not come to my knowledge.

11756. There does not happen to be much railway or Government property there?—No.*

11757. So that there is no obvious reason why the voters should not object as ratepayers to this increased expenditure?—There is no reason at all.

11758. It is not because they do not pay the rates directly?—No.

11759. Nor is it because they are spending either railway or Government money which they do not contribute?—I should think not.

11760. It is simply the indifference of the ordinary ratepayer?—Yes.

11761. In Norwich is there not a good deal of work which is taken to the homes?—Yes, there is a good deal of that.

11762. Does any of the out-relief go practically as a rate in aid of wages to the out-workers?—I have no personal knowledge of that, but I believe that a good deal of it does go in that way. The only knowledge I have of it is in these cases that I have put beforethe Commission.

Out-relie aid of w

11763. Has it ever been suggested that manufacturers who happen to be members of boards of guardians give out-relief to persons taking work from them?—I do not quite follow.

11764. Supposing a manufacturer who gives work out into the homes is a member of the board of guardians, he might recommend the giving of out-relief in order to make it possible for his people to work cheaper; has that been suggested?—No.

11765. You have never heard of that?—I have never heard of it.

11766. The only reason for this lavish out-door relief beyond a definite policy is a political reason?—Yes.

11767. The desire to buy votes practically?—Yes.

11768. Is the relief at Norwich administered by the guardian of the ward in which it is given?—There are two relief committees at Norwich, and they are selected from various wards in the city. The practice is that the different relieving officers take it in turn to go before the various committees.

System of ministrati of relief a Norwich.

11769. But those committees are not necessarily made up of the representatives of the wards, are they?—Not entirely.

11770. Is there any tendency for relief to be given on the advice of the representative of the ward?—I might say that the relief is given entirely on the advice of the representative of the ward.

11771. It is the representative of the ward then that has particular influence rather than any other member?—I should say so.

11772. Has there been any attempt to establish a rota of members, so that the representative of a ward shall not give relief to the persons of that ward?—No.

11773. The system is that the representative is all powerful?—As in pretty well every board of guardians the representative of the particular parish or the particular ward has the most to say.

Absence o rota committee in district

11774. You know that in some boards of guardians they have definitely provided against that by refusing to permit a man to continue to give the relief in his ward for any length of time, and they have a system of rota by which that is distinctly brought about?—I do not think the rota system prevails in my part of the country at all.

---

* Mr. Hervey, in a letter dated 31st July, 1906, supplied the following particulars as to the valuation of Norwich:—

1.	Total gross estimated rental	£550,551
2.	,, rateable value	439,481
3.	Railways—gross estimated rental	20,293
4.	,, rateable value	13,105
5.	Government property	4,403

11775. You deprecate a person giving relief on his own view and knowledge, and you prefer him to do it without knowledge of the person ?—I should certainly.

asons for cessively ge work- uses in tain ions.

11776. With regard to Bosmere and Claydon, Smallburgh, Cosford and Samford, unions which have workhouses which are too large, that arose from the fact that they are incorporated hundreds, did it not ?—Yes.

11777. They were originally very much larger areas, and the workhouses were provided for very much larger areas than they now provide for, under the incorporation of hundreds prior 1835; was that not so ?—Possibly that was so.

11778. The historical reason why these workhouses are too large is not therefore any stupidity on the part of these unions, but because these workhouses were used for very much larger areas originally than they are now used for ?—And for very much larger populations.

11779. Larger areas, and therefore larger populations ?—Yes.

ovision of gs out of ary of rkhouse dical cers.

11780. I notice with regard to medical relief that in the very last paragraph of your memorandum you deplore the fact that medical officers find their own drugs ?—Yes.

11781. Is it usual for them to find their own drugs ?—It is in the large number of cases usual for the medical officers of workhouses to do so.

11782. Is there a definite kind of board of guardians who insist on that, or is it a general policy ?—It is a general practice. The Local Government Board from time to time on the appointment of a new medical officer of a workhouse always urges the guardians to provide their own drugs.

11783. But they do not do that ?—They do not all of them accept the suggestion.

11784. Would it not be better to make that a General Order ?—I think so.

11785. Is there any reason against making it a General Order ?—None that I am aware of.

pply of ohol in rkhouses.

11786. With regard to the supply of alcohol which you also note, what is your suggestion to prevent its continued over supply ?—From time to time I have brought this matter of alcoholic expenditure before the boards of guardians, and several of them have accepted my hints and have themselves reduced it considerably. For instance, last year I pointed out the very heavy expenditure on alcohol at the Thingoe workhouse, and from giving a good deal they now give none at all, except strictly on the order of the medical officer. But at East and West Flegg, where they have such a large consumption for a very small in-door population, they altogether rejected any suggestion of mine.

11787. They are always supposed to give it on the order of the medical officer, are they not ?—Yes, but then the order of the medical officer in the case of East and West Flegg would not, I should say, warrant such an enormous expenditure.

pposed culation ratepayers expert orts on ministra- n of ardians.

11788. With regard to mal-administration generally, whether with reference to the giving of alcohol or to the giving of out-door relief, would it be possible or desirable for a report to be made by a specialist on the administration of a union, and for that report to be circulated to every ratepayer ?—What would be the objection to that ? Supposing you had a special inquiry into Norwich, for instance, why should not the report be circulated to every ratepayer ?—I do not see why it should not.

11789. Would you object to the local inspector making a report, and having it circulated to every ratepayer ?—On the administration of out-relief ?

1179). On any point of the administration ?—I myself should have no objection at all.

11791. Do you think that it would tend to embitter your relations, or would it be better to leave it to another inspector ?—If it had to be done, I think it would be far better that someone not connected with the district should do it.

11792. But on the whole, do you think that it would be a good thing if it were possible to have reports periodically issued to the ratepayers on the administrative procedure of guardians ?—The guardians are the representatives of the ratepayers.

11793. Sometimes the ratepayers do not know what the guardians are doing. Would there be any objection to a carefully drawn up expert report on the administration of a particular union being circulated to every ratepayer ?—None that I am aware of.

11794. (Mr. Bentham.) The pauperism generally in your district, I notice, is very high in comparison with the rest of England and Wales. There were forty-eight unions with thirty per 1,000 or over in 1885, and the same number with thirty per 1,000 or over in 1895; but in 1905 there were only forty-four with thirty per 1,000 and over; therefore we may say that the pauperism has been stationary during the last twenty years ?—Yes. I think there is an inclination for it to fall, but it is practically stagnant. Condition of district as to pauperism.

11795. What is that tendency to fall at the present time due to ?—I am sure it is very difficult to say.

11796. Is it on account of more care being exercised, or is it the cost that is increasing ? I notice that the cost increased out of all proportion to the number of paupers ?—That is so generally.

11797. Do you think it is the cost that is drawing their attention to it at the present time ?—It may be that.

11798. You said in answer to a question just now that the very large number of people in Mildenhall over sixty years of age might have something to do with the high rate of pauperism; I see that Mildenhall has 6·1 per cent., which is the highest in your district, I think ?—Yes. Co-relation of old-age and pauperism statistics.

11799. If you will look at Mr. Booth's table I think you will find that 118 per 1,000 is the old-age figure for Mildenhall ?—Yes.

11800. Then if you will take the next highest, which is Hoxne, the rate of pauperism there is 5·7 per cent. and the aged people are 124 per 1,000 ?—Yes.

11801. Then, if you go to Blofield, that is one of the lowest in pauperism, being 2·8 per cent., you find that it has an old-age figure of 132 per 1,000, which is higher than either Mildenhall or Hoxne ?—Yes, I noticed that.

11802. Then take Samford; its pauperism is 2·2 per cent., but its old-age is 111 per 1,000 ?—Yes.

11803. So that two of the lowest in pauperism and two of the highest in pauperism have old-age figures which are practically the same ?—Yes.

11804. All those four are rural unions, I think ?—They are quite rural.

11805. And they are all practically identical, are they not ?—That is so.

11806. If this disparity is not due to old age, can you give us any other reason for it ?—I am afraid I cannot.

11807. There is a very great difference, is there not, between those four unions ?—There is a very great difference, it is true.

11808. If you take the population, it is practically stationary in all the four, I think ?—Yes.

11809. Practically there has been no movement, as far as the population is concerned; and therefore I should think they are identical in almost every respect as far as conditions go ?—Yes, I should think they are.

11810. You have no theory as to why the two, Mildenhall and Hoxne, should be much higher than Blofield and Samford in pauperism ?—I have no theory at all about it.

11811. With regard to Poor Law relief generally, do you find that many boards of guardians have a policy at all on the question of relief; have they, would you say, any avowed policy on which they are acting ?—Do you mean to say with regard to the amount of relief given ? Policy of boards of guardians as to relief.

11812. A policy of any kind, whether it might be in the direction of a more liberal out-door relief, or of a more restricted relief of any kind ?—The general tendency is to give a more adequate relief.

11813. That is only a tendency, and it is not a policy that is laid down, as it were, by resolution of the boards of guardians; and they are not acting upon a certain Scales of relief in rural district.

Mr. Gerald A. F. Hervey.

1 May 1906.

set of principles in giving relief?—No. You will find that pretty well every rural board has a scale of relief.

11814. But no particular policy?—That is so.

Inspector's influence on policy of boards of guardians.

11815. Your influence would tend a great deal in the direction of shaping their policy, would it not?—I dare say it would.

11816. Do you think more could be done in that way?—I have no doubt a great deal more could be done.

11817. Is the district small enough now for you to exercise an influence over them in that direction?—Quite.

11818. You think you could manage it?—Quite.

11819. Do you find there is any disinclination on the part of the guardians to receive hints from you with regard to their methods of granting relief?—No. I have noticed that they have always accepted one's suggestions with the greatest kindness.

11820. One would think that with the very high rate of pauperism there is a very useful field for labour in this district?—Undoubtedly there is

Influence of one man with a policy on a board of guardians.

11821. Do you find that if one person on a board has a definite policy in his mind, he can usually influence the whole board, because the remainder of the members have not any particular policy?—That is so.

11822. Even if it is a bad policy he still has the influence?—He still has the influence, if he is a very talkative man.

11823. And if he has a strong character and has a definite idea in his mind, he can usually carry the rest with him?—Yes.

Effect of Local Government Act, 1894, on administration.

11824. I take it that, broadly speaking, you do not object to the change that was made in 1894, by which a larger number of working-men guardians have been elected?—No. No one can object to the election of working-men on boards of guardians.

11825. You think they are very useful members on a board?—I think some of them are. I have come across some very useful members indeed.

11826. Do you think that they are more likely to be led in the direction of a more liberal out-door relief than the propertied members of a board?—Yes, undoubtedly.

Motives of policy of lavish out-relief.

11827. Do you think that some boards of guardians have a policy, which is a perfectly honest policy, of liberal out-door relief, believing that that is the cheapest and best method of relieving the people?—Yes.

11828. Do you think that does obtain sometimes?—Sometimes it does, certainly.

11829. And that, on the other hand, there may be people on a board—irrespective of political parties; who may be members of any political party—who would advocate more liberal out-door relief for other reasons?—Yes.

11830. That is, if a man is unscrupulous he sees that that is the way to get popularity quite easily?—Yes.

11831. And that it is a policy which he can carry out when he becomes a member?—Sometimes.

11832. Do you not find that it is a policy which takes very well with the people themselves, and that very little opposition is taken to it by the ratepayers generally, because of their sympathy with the poor?—That is so.

11833. So that a policy of out-door relief might be advocated by an unscrupulous person, and meet with general acceptance by the ratepayers, and still be mischievous?—Yes.

11834. Do you think that the main reason why the ratepayers do not object to the increased cost is because they think that the poor people are being treated liberally and well, and it is a most unpopular thing to object to that?—Speaking generally, it is so.

11835. Do you think that might be a reason why a board that starts on that policy easily drifts on until it gets into a hopeless state of pauperism and then can scarcely find a turning point?—Yes, that is so. I think that Smallburgh Union is one of those unions.

Poor Law administration at Norwich.

11836. Take Norwich; do you find that there is any party on the board that is, at the present time, openly advocating restriction of out-door relief?—Yes, there is a certain section.

11837. Is it a small section?—Yes, it is.

11838. Is there any conflict against them by any other section of the board which is in favour of the opposite policy?—I would not say there is a conflict; they are simply out-voted.

11839. Which is the strongest party at the present time on the Norwich Board—the party that is in favour of out-door relief openly and avowedly, or those that are against it?—The party that is in favour of out-door relief.

11840. That would be composed of all sections of the board, would it?—Yes.

11841. Irrespective of political views?—Yes.

11842. Do you examine the relieving officer's books in the Norwich Union in a regular way, when you are inspecting the workhouse?—I frequently inspect the relieving officers' books.

11843. Do you ever sit with the relief committees?—Yes.

11844. Do you make a practice of it when you visit Norwich?—I sat with the relief committees twice last year.

11845. Do you find that the committees act pretty much on the same lines when they are hearing cases?—They act pretty much on the same lines, in spite of any protests on my behalf or on behalf of the relieving officers.

11846. Do you think that the Norwich cases, which you state in your appendix, are really exceptional cases, or could you find similar cases in almost every union in your district?—Those are exceptional cases.

11847. And you do not think you could find similar cases in almost every union?—No.

11848. Have you examined the books at any other union with the object of ascertaining that?—Yes, I have.

11849. You could not find any except at Norwich?—No.

The family income as a factor in eligibility for relief.

11850. Is it not sometimes accepted as a principle at a relief committee, that an application shall be considered in the light of the income of the applicant, apart from the income of the rest of the family, that is, that the children's income shall not be taken into consideration when the applicant is an aged person only earning a small matter by charing; and that although there might be a large income in the family, they look upon that as the income belonging to the children? Most of the cases in your appendix are cases of that kind, are they not?—These cases are almost all of that kind. But they should consider what the income of the family is.

11851. They should consider the income of the household?—Yes. In most of these cases, the mother is simply the housekeeper for the children.

11852. Do you say you have examined the books of other unions of your district, and you cannot find similar cases?—I have not come across any.

11853. Have you tried Mildenhall?—Yes. At every board of guardians' meeting I attend, I always sit through the relief cases.

11854. You do not find any there?—No.

Norwich charities a possibility their co-op ating with guardians

11855. With regard to the charities of Norwich, many of which you have named, is there any definite part of this £50,000 a year given in the way of relief in money or in kind?—I have not been able to get any particulars as to how these charities are administered, but I know that there is a good deal of money given as well as kind. The charities are distributed both in money and in kind.

11856. You do think there is some money available for dealing with out-door relief cases from these charities?—Yes, I think so.

11857. Do you think that might meet, to a large extent, the demands for out-door relief in Norwich as apart from Poor Law relief, and thereby reduce the amount of the out-door relief given by the guardians?—I have no doubt that if the administrators of charity and the administrators of out-relief could be brought together, a very great improvement could be effected.

11858. Has any attempt been made to bring them together recently?—There has been no attempt made at all.

11859. Do you think that this is a useful field of inquiry ?—I certainly do. I should like to say in connection with this that Mr. Lloyd, the vicar of St. Giles, Norwich, has been making a study of this question for many years. St. Giles is the parish which has the largest number of small charities in Norwich. He would very much like to come and give evidence before this Commission.

Poor Law electoral areas at Norwich.

11860. With regard to the wards for election purposes at Norwich, do they approximate pretty nearly to the size of the municipal wards, or how are they divided ?—They are pretty much the same as the municipal wards.

11861. Do you think they are the same ?—Yes.

11862. How many wards are there altogether ?—I am afraid I cannot tell you off-hand.

11863. With regard to the surcharge that you referred to, for these cases of out-door relief have you got the terms of the auditor's note with you ?—No, I have not.

11864. (Professor Smart.) In speaking about the circumstances of agriculture in your district, you said they were very much the same as formerly: do you mean there is no improvement in agriculture in that quarter ?—There is none in the conditions of the agricultural labourer.

11865. Farming is no better ?—No.

Agricultural conditions in district: success of Scottish farmers.

11866. Is there much derelict land in Essex, for example ?—There is a good deal of derelict land in Essex.

11867. That means that rent has disappeared ?—Yes.

11868. And you see no improvement at all ?—No.

11869. The growing of other crops, for example, has not done anything ?—The improvement there has been in Essex has been effected by the Scottish farmers who come down and make a profit out of the land, which the ordinary Essex farmers have been able to do nothing with.

11870. I have heard occasionally of Scottish farmers returning to Scotland afterwards ?—With money in their pockets.

11871. Have you any experience of boarding-out children ?—No, not without the union, but within the union.

The boarding-out of Poor Law children.

11872. Is your experience all of boarding-out within the union ?—Yes.

11873. I do not think you say much about that in your memorandum, do you ?—No.

11874. Have you any opinion upon boarding-out ?—Boarding-out is, I think, the ideal system of dealing with children, provided you can get good homes for them.

11875. Even within the union ?—Even within the union.

11876. But you have no experience at all of boarding-out outside ?—I have no experience of boarding-out outside the union.

11877. Do you find the results have been good inside the union ?—I would not say that.

11878. Is there nothing you would say definitely on it ?—I have said that boarding-out is the ideal way I think, of dealing with children provided you can always find satisfactory homes.

11879. So far as you have had experience of it in your district, have the results been good ?—Speaking generally, the results have been satisfactory.

Out-relief policy at Ipswich.

11880. In paragraph 2 of your memoraudum you say, "Ipswich has adopted for many years a strict out-relief policy, which worked with the best results." Do you put the emphasis on the word "strict" or on the words "out-relief;" do you mean strict as opposite to lax, or out-relief as opposed to in-relief ?—I mean a strict policy of administration of out-relief.

11881. You do not mean to say they prefer out-relief to in-relief ?—No; what I mean to say is, that whenever possible they have offered the house in preference to giving out-relief.

11882. Then it is the word "strict" you put the emphasis on ?—Yes.

Relief in aid of wages.

11883. In paragraph 27 you say: "The effect on the Poor Law relief of the endowed charities and the wages of the poorest paid class of wage earner is one that seems to me to require more thorough investigation than I have had an opportunity of making." You said in answer to Mrs. Webb that you never heard it suggested that there was any effect of Poor Law relief on wages, and I took that to mean that you had never heard it suggested that there was any causal connection between low wages and Poor Law relief, but perhaps you meant that you had never heard it suggested that Poor Law relief had been given with the object of reducing wages ?—That is what I meant.

11884. Were you referring to agricultural wages there ?—No, I was referring to wages in Norwich.

11885. Wages in Norwich entirely ?—Yes, in connection with the charities.

11886. And not agricultural wages ?—It had nothing to do with agriculture.

11887. Do you not think it has any connection at all with agricultural wages ?—No.

Cases of improper out-relief: Action of district auditor.

11888. In paragraph 16 you refer to the extraordinary cases in which relief was given according to the nett income of the applicants. Was that done in any way by way of principle, or had the guardians only drifted into such an extraordinary system ?—I think they have got into the habit of distributing out-relief as a sort of largesse, and they do not like to refuse anybody who comes along.

11889. I should like to emphasise these two cases; the first a case where the total earnings are 40s. 9d., the relief given by the guardians being 3s; and the second where the total earnings are 51s. 6d., the relief given by the guardians being 5s. weekly. One would think that no board of guardians would be willing that such a statement as that should be placed before the public ?—They have stopped it now, since I brought these cases to the notice of the auditor.

11890. But you do not know whether his decision was confirmed or not ?—That remains for the decision of the Local Government Board.

Supply of alcohol in workhouses.

11891. Then about alcohol; do I understand that alcohol is given to a large extent as medical relief or altogether as medical relief ?—A good deal of beer is given by the guardians. In the rural districts they do not believe in robbing a poor man of this beer, as they say.

11892. You suggest that it is sometimes g ven as a substitute for drugs; that is alcohol pure and simple, I take it ?—Yes.

11893. And it is cheaper in the case you mention ?—It is undoubtedly cheaper to the medical officer.

Large consumption of alcohol in East and West Flegg Workhouse.

11894. Are we to understand that in a very small workhouse, apparently with thirty-six inmates, the consumption of alcohol is not less than £2 3s. 10d. per head ?—Yes, that is in East and West Flegg.

11895. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) And there is none given to out-door paupers there at all, is there ?—None.

11896. (Dr. Downes.) There are only eight people in the infirmary in that place, I believe ?—Only eight.

11897. (Professor Smart.) What answer was given when you complained of that ?—No answer at all, although I wrote to the guardians specially on the subject.

11898. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) There are thirty-six in the workhouse and 331 receiving out-door relief I see from Mr. Booth's return, and yet the whole of the alcohol is distributed amongst the thirty-six of the workhouse and nothing is given to the out-door people ?—That is so.

11899. (Professor Smart.) Most of that would be as beer, I presume, and not as alcohol pure and simple ?—Most of it as beer.

11900. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Is there any intelligible reason for it ?—There is none whatever, because these old crocks do no work. There are only eight in the infirmary, as Dr. Downes has just remarked.

11901. So it cannot be given as medical relief ?—No; it is simply given because the guardians like them to have it.

11902. (Professor Smart.) East and West Flegg is a purely agricultural parish, is it not ?—Yes.

11903. (Mr. Patten MacDougall.) Has the auditor drawn attention to that ?—I think he has; anyhow I have.

Mr. Gerald A.F. Hervey.

1 May 1906.

11904. (Miss Hill.) Did I understand you to say that no effort had been made by the charities themselves in Norwich to get any sort of organisation or reform?—None whatever, as far as I have ever heard of.

The organisation of charities at Norwich.

11905. Is the Vicar of St. Giles' taking any steps about it actively, besides studying it for years, do you know?—I believe he has formulated a wonderful scheme with the intention of bringing together the administrators of the charities and the administrators of out-relief.

11906. That seems to be what is wanted to begin with?—That would be a very good thing to begin with.

11907. (Mr. Phelps.) Have you any experience of co-operation of that kind anywhere between charity and poor law?—No. Norwich is the only city in my district in which there are any charities.

11908. You have not any at Ipswich?—No.

Type of rural guardians.

11909. Take for the moment the case of rural unions; what type of guardian do you find in the small rural unions?—There are the clergy and the farmers.

11910. You do not find many of what are called country gentlemen, do you?—Very few.

The letting of country houses and its effect on administration.

11911. Do you think that the tendency to let country houses has had a great effect on administration?—No, I do not think it has. I do not think that many of the country houses in Norfolk, for instance, are let to strangers.

11912. It is not a general movement at all, then?—No.

Out-relief to aged in rural districts: Scale in Norfolk.

11913. From what point of view do the guardians in a country district regard the giving of relief, do you think? They are mostly farmers, are they not?—Yes.

11914. And they give it to their labourers in their old age, I suppose?—Quite so.

11915. Do they regard it as practically a subvention to themselves?—Possibly.

11916 On what sort of scale do they give it? What would be the scale of relief in a country union in Norfolk for an old man and his wife, for instance?—It would vary, but on an average I think it would be about 4s. 6d.

11917. 4s. 6d. for the two?—Yes.

11918. How much of that will they have to pay as rent?—Perhaps 1s.

11919. Have you investigated or visited in any of the unions the particular cases receiving out-door relief?—I have never visited them.

11920. You do not know how far boards of guardians are careful with regard to the surroundings in which their cases live?—No, not from my own observations.

Need for power of compulsory removal to workhouse of certain classes.

11921. Do you think that compulsory powers are needed for the removal of cases to the workhouse? Have you come across cases which ought to be compulsorily removed?—One now and again hears of cases of that sort who should be removed to the infirmary, but who prefer to stick to their own cottages and their own messy ways.

11922. And who live in a great state of dirt?—Yes.

11923. You have come across some?—Yes.

11924. But not many?—Not a great many.

11925. You do not think, then, that it is a pressing matter?—No, I do not think it is pressing.

Indoor administration at Norwich.

11926. Now, coming again to Norwich, I see that at Norwich the administration of the workhouse is particularly good?—Yes, it is.

11927. To what do you attribute that?—They have a first-class master there who understands his business as an administrator.

11928. Is he supported by the Board?—He is supported by the committee.

11929. There is no sign of bad administration in that department?—No.

11930. You say that classification is very good; what kind of classification have you in your mind?—The paupers there are divided into three classes, first, second, and third.

11931. According to desert?—Yes. Class 1 will get very much better quarters and live with a great deal more comfort and so on than Class 2, and Class 2 will be better off than Class 3. That creates competition to get from one class into the other, where they get better treatment, more leave, and so on.

Classification of workhouse inmates and its value.

11932. Are they classified according to their conduct before they come into the workhouse, or according to their conduct in the workhouse?—According to their conduct in the workhouse.

11933. So it is a test?—Yes.

11934. Does that not have rather a curious result?—What do you mean?

11935. Might you not have a man whose character outside was undesirable, but who for reasons of policy behaved himself well within the workhouse?—That is quite possible.

11936. Do you think that classification is really valuable?—I think it is most valuable.

11937. In what way?—I think it tends to elevate these poor old people as much as you can elevate them.

11938. I can quite see that it makes for the good discipline of the house?—Of course it is good for the discipline of the house.

11939. (Mr. Bentham.) Is no regard ever paid in that classification to conduct prior to entering the house?—I do not think so; there may be some exceptional cases perhaps.

Classification of workhouses and its difficulties.

11940. (Mr. Phelps.) Have you any views with regard to the classification of workhouses in the counties, and do you see your way to recommending any such classification?—In the country districts, do you mean?

11941. I am referring to the specialisation of workhouses for special classes of cases. Do you think, for instance, that you could take Norfolk as a unit for the purpose of dealing with the feeble-minded and the epileptic, collecting them from all the individual workhouses in the county and putting them together in one institution; do you think that would be possible?—It would be quite possible.

11942. Do you think it would be desirable?—It is very much advocated.

11943. Do you think it would meet with great opposition from the various Boards?—It all depends how much it is going to cost them.

11944. The question of the distance from the home of the pauper would not be material, would it?—I do not think it would.

Tendency to economy in indoor relief and its causes.

11945. Do you find that kind of economy a very strong motive with your boards of guardians?—Very.

11946. Do you find it difficult to get them to build a new infirmary or to improve their workhouses?—Most difficult.

11947. Do you think that they are more economical on that side than they are on the side of giving relief?—Yes.

11948. Can you explain that difference at all?—The general idea is that workhouses will be done away with, and therefore they deprecate the idea of spending more money on them than is necessary.

11949. Do you find that the Norwich people are prompt to improve if you point out an improvement that is needed in their workhouse?—Most prompt.

11950. Then you have no criticism to make in that respect?—No, none at all.

Poor Law treatment for phthisis at Norwich.

11951. Do they classify their inmates according to their complaints; have they wards for phthisical patients, for instance, in the infirmary at Norwich?—They have adopted for phthisical cases out-door treatment.

11952. Have they an institution for that?—They have no institution, but they have out-door shelters.

11953. In the grounds of the infirmary?—Yes, they have revolving shelters which they put in the grounds of the infirmary.

11954. What number of patients roughly can be accommodated in that way?—I think they have four shelters.

11955. Are the guardians satisfied with the results at present?—Yes. I was talking to their medical officer some time ago and he said he was very satisfied with the results.

11956. They do not work it in connection with a seaside resort, do they ?—No.

The boarding-out of sick paupers in workhouses belonging to other unions.

11957. (Dr. Downes.) You tell us on the first page of your memorandum that Bury St. Edmunds, Woodbridge and Hoxne board-out their in-door paupers in the workhouses of Thingoe, Ipswich and Hartismere; do they send their sick to those workhouses ?—Yes.

11958. Has any difficulty arisen with regard to sending the sick ?—None at all.

11959. Is the distance great to any one of those institutions ?—The Thingoe workhouse is situated in Bury St. Edmunds itself, so there is no difficulty there. For Hoxne, the workhouse is situated at Eye, and they may have to send their paupers as much as ten or twelve miles.

11960. Has there been any difficulty in that case ?—There has been no difficulty that I ever heard of.

11961. Who removes the sick person, the union that sends the case ?—Yes.

11962. Do you know how they do it ?—By an ambulance.

11963. Have they got an ambulance ?—Yes.

11964. Do they send a nurse ?—I do not think a nurse is sent.

Consumption of alcohol in Billericay Workhouse and its causes.

11965. In paragraph 6 you speak of the crowding of the Billericay workhouse, and on referring to your return of the consumption of alcohol I find that Billericay stands rather prominently there. Billericay with 225 inmates of the workhouse spent £125 on alcohol, while the adjoining union of Chelmsford with 313 inmates only spent £22, and Braintree, also a neighbouring union, with 232 inmates spent £10. Is there any reason why Billericay should use such an amount of alcoholic liquor ?—I think Dr. Carter, the medical officer there, is a strong believer in the administration of alcohol.

11966. You think it is due to the personal element of the medical officer then ?—I think it is due to the personal element there.

11967. Do you think that reacts on the crowding of the workhouse; does it form an attraction ?—No, I do not think so.

Procedure for authorising supply of alcohol in workhouses.

11968. Is there any special Order or anything in force at East and West Flegg which enables the guardians to give alcohol ?—Not that I know of.

11969. The General Order, the Dietaries Order, as you are no doubt aware, forbids the guardians from giving any fermented or spirituous liquor unless in pursuance of a written recommendation of the medical officer of the workhouse ?—That is so.

11970. Is all that is given at East and West Flegg given in pursuance of an order by the doctor ?—Yes.

11971. That order has to be renewed every twenty-eight days, I believe ?—That is so, according to the General Order.

11952. Is the General Order carried out there ?—I believe it is.

11973. (Mr. Phelps.) Would that apply to the beer given at Christmas ?—No, I do not think that would apply to the Christmas beer, but then you see at East and West Flegg they give such a great deal of beer that it would be hard to discriminate which would be Christmas beer and which would be the ordinary beer.

11974. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) How does it come about that it is never ordered for any of the out-paupers there ?—I suppose the different medical officers probably have different views.

11975. Then it is not the same man who attends to the out-paupers there ?—No, it is not.

Supply of alcohol in East and West Flegg Union and its causes.

11976. (Dr. Downes.) Is this expenditure at East and West Flegg due to the personal influence of the medical officer there ?—I do not think it is due to the personal influence of that medical officer. I think it is the wish of the board that the medical officer should allow these people their beer.

11977. But he is not bound to give it if the board wish it, is he ?—He is not bound to give it, but he is not the sort of officer who would object.

11978. He does not resist them ?—No.

11979. He has to give definite reasons in every case why he is giving the alcohol; does he do that ?—Yes, I think he does. I have spoken to him several times about it; but he is agreeable to recommending it to all these people, as he wants them to have something to "buck" them up. He says, "If I took off their beer now they would die."

11980. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Can you recover some of the certificates of the medical officer ordering that alcohol should be given in these particular cases at East and West Flegg ?—We could call for his book.

11981. (Dr. Downes.) There is a formal book called the alcohol book, I think ?—Yes.

11982. The first column is for the name of the inmate, and the second column for a statement of the reasons which in the opinion of the medical officer render such allowance requisite for the health of the inmate ?—Yes.

Effect of charities on pauperism at Norwich.

11983. With regard to Norwich, in paragraph 8 you say, "Mr. Preston-Thomas said that he knew of no reason, except such as is to be found in difference of administration, why Norwich, with its extraordinary amount of charities, should have something like twice as much pauperism in proportion to population as Ipswich." Do you agree with the opinion of Mr. Preston-Thomas ? Apart from administration, you are not aware of any reason why Norwich should have so much more pauperism than Ipswich, are you ?—Very possibly the charities may have a great deal to do with it, by attracting people to the town.

11984. But apart from those ?—Apart from those I know of nothing.

11985. In fact the two towns are very fairly comparable in other ways, are they not ?—Yes.

11986. As regards the old-age problem, I notice that in this return the numbers of the old people are very much the same ?—Yes, that is so.

Number of Poor Law nurses in Suffolk and other counties.

11987. In your nursing return there is a considerable difference shown between Suffolk and the other counties. Suffolk, with 729 inmates in the infirmaries, seems to have appointed only thirty-six nurses on day duty and ten on night duty, and the proportion on night duty seems extremely small in that case. Can you give any reason for the small number of night nurses in Suffolk ?—Speaking generally, I do not think there is a great necessity or a larger supply of night nurses. I have found that guardians supply a night nurse when the necessity has been brought before them by myself or Dr. Fuller.

Relation between the supply of night nurses and the number of deaths in a workhouse.

11988. In your next return, of deaths, there is a large number of deaths shown in some of the workhouses where they have no night nurses. Take Bosmere and Claydon; there were thirty-three deaths occurring in 1905, thirty-one in 1904, and twenty-six in 1903; that is a considerable number of deaths, and there is no night nurse there ?—It is true there is no night nurse there, but I think those were very aged people who died. I do not think they had been long ill.

11989. Do not aged people require looking after at night if they are ill ?—Yes; I agree that they require looking after at night; but I do not think there is much difficulty there.

11990. I do not know whether it has any bearing on it, but I have also noticed that the number of lady-guardians in Suffolk is only fourteen as against thirty-three in Norfolk and twenty-six in Essex ?—That is so.

11991. Do you think that the influence of lady-guardians may have some effect on the other counties ?—Very possibly it has.

11992. At any rate, I take it you regard it as desirable that where there are dying people there should be night nurses ?—Certainly.

Readiness of Guardians to supply nurses

11993. Do you find that the guardians are increasingly ready to provide special nursing for their sick ?—Yes.

11994. Do you find less reluctance now than you did formerly ?—In the last two or three years they have been very ready indeed to fall in with that proposition.

Mr. Gerald A.F. Hervey.

1 May 1906.

11995. So that what deficiency there is you would think is tending to right itself?—I do think so.

Difficulties as to appointment of superintendent nurse

11996. In a great many cases they have not appointed a superintendent nurse, although apparently the number of nurses would require it under the Order; do you find an objection to appointing a superintendent nurse in some cases?—There is a great difficulty in some cases in getting a superintendent nurse appointed. I think that that difficulty is generally owing to the influence brought to bear by the master of the workhouse.

11997. Because of the possibility of friction arising?—Yes.

11998. Have you had any cases of friction recently?—Yes. I had to hold an official inquiry at Braintree a short time ago in reference to some friction between the master and the superintendent nurse there.

11999. What was the outcome of the inquiry?—The outcome of the inquiry was that the master was severely censured.

12000. The master was to blame in that case, then?—Yes.

12001. Is the difficulty as to friction tending to right itself, or is it increasing, do you think?—It is tending to right itself. I find no friction whatever in the workhouses in which there are modern masters and matrons. I have several masters and matrons in my district who have been assistant masters and so on; they have a good idea of discipline, and they know how things should be managed, and in their institutions there is no friction.

12002. They understand managing by departments?—Yes, they do.

Attractiveness of Norwich Workhouse.

12003. (Mr. Chandler.) In paragraph 5 you say "The question has arisen whether too much is not being done for the workhouse inmates"; have you any views on that question yourself?—I had Norwich in my mind at the time I wrote that. My reason for saying that was because in recent years the workhouse has been made rather a society resort. They have had large entertainments there, and every year they have a very large sale of Brabazon work, and the workhouse has been more or less thrown open to the general public.

12004. That is, the ordinary monotony of a workhouse inmate's life has been somewhat relieved?—It has been very much relieved.

12005. It is not a question of allowing liberty to go out occasionally that you had in your mind, then?—Not altogether. I think it is an extremely well-administered workhouse; but one can go too far even in administration.

12006. Do you think they have gone too far?—The idea has occurred to me that it has been so, and it has also occurred to the chairman of the workhouse committee whether they are not doing a little too much in the way of administration.

Figures as to unemployed and paupers at Norwich.

12007. In reference to Norwich—I hesitate to mention it, as so much has been said about it; but still it is your largest town—I see in your paragraphs relating to the unemployed, you state that the Norwich distress committee registered 1,442 men, the number of dependents being 3,069; that makes a total of 4,511 beings who had to depend either on the earnings of the wife, I suppose, or on the charities, or on Poor Law?—Yes.

12008. That seems to me rather a high percentage?—Yes, it is rather.

12009. Yet in spite of that I noticed that during the last decade the population has increased by 11,000 odd, but the number of paupers who are in receipt of relief has decreased by 140. Would that not appear to be rather favourable to Norwich?—Yes, it would certainly appear to be very favourable to Norwich, if it were only continuous.

12010. If it were continuous many of the strictures that have been made upon Norwich would be removed?—Certainly.

Entertainments at Norwich Workhouse.

12011. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) With reference to your answer to Mr. Chandler about the entertainments and the sales of Brabazon work, are the entertainments social entertainments paid for out of the rates?—No.

12012. They are altogether charitable, are they?—Yes.

12013. And so, of course, are the sales of the Brabazon work?—Yes.

Local Poor Law Acts district, and difficulties as to their repeal.

12014. (Sir Samuel Provis.) In paragraph 3 of your memorandum you refer to some special Acts which are in force in two or three unions in your district, and you say they are obsolete. What had you got in your mind when saying that they are obsolete? They are still in force, are they not?—They are not regarded in any way nowadays.

12015. But they do define the constitution of the union, do they not, the area, for instance?—Yes, in the case of East and West Flegg.

12016. And the same, I suppose, with regard to Forehoe?—Yes, Forehoe is an incorporation.

12017. With regard to East and West Flegg you say the workhouse is very bad; there was a proposal, was there not, some years ago to deal with the union on the ground of the badness of the workhouse?—Yes; Mr. Bagenal, I believe held an inquiry on the subject.

12018. Did the guardians not promise to do something?—I think the guardians promised to do something; they promised to provide more adequate accommodation for their sick.

12019. To erect a new infirmary, was it not, or to make new infirmary wards?—I think it was to provide better accommodation within the workhouse.

12020. Has that been done?—Yes, it has.

12021. There would be some difficulty, would there not, in getting rid of these local Acts, because they could only be got rid of, I presume, upon the application of the guardians themselves?—I suppose so. That took place at Bury the other day.

12022. Would the guardians be willing to apply in these other cases for the repeal of their local Acts?—I do not think so now at all.

12023. Neither in the case of Forehoe, nor in the case of East and West Flegg?—Certainly not in the case of Forehoe, because Forehoe has recently spent a large sum of money on renovating its workhouse.

12024. You might get rid of the local Act, and yet retain the same area as a union constituted under the general law, might you not?—I suppose so.

12025. The guardians you think would not favour the getting rid of their local Act?—I do not think they would.

Decrease of pauperism agricultural districts.

12026. (Chairman.) I see that the result of the last decade has been satisfactory in your district, as there is an actual decrease of pauperism of 7 per cent., though there has been an increase in population of 8 per cent.?—Yes.

12027. Looking down the tables that you have furnished the Commission with, I see that there is an almost universal decrease in the percentage of pauperism in the agricultural districts?—That is so.

12028. Does that not rather imply that according to their lights, your boards of guardians are administering the Poor Law as well as they can?—I believe that they are.

Advantage more definitely laying down principles relief.

12029. Is not some definition of the principles which underlie and govern out-door and in-door relief required to be put before the guardians, so that they may know what is the standard of administration to which they should try to attain?—Yes.

12030. The tendency, I assume, of these agricultural boards is to do much what their forefathers did, and to take care that the parish which they represent has its full share of the poor rate?—Yes.

12031. That is the general idea?—Yes.

12032. Assuming it were possible to define more clearly what should be the principles which every board of guardians should keep in mind, and that some such public policy was enunciated by the Local Government board or was in an Act of Parliament, it would have a good effect, would it not, upon the guardians?—I should think it would.

12033. It would make them think?—Yes, it would, certainly.

Conditions Norwich Union.

12034. Has there been any great change in the industries of Norwich of late years?—I think not.

12035. There is a good deal of boot-making there, is there not ?—Yes.

12036. Have they brought in machinery which has caused any great displacement of manual labour ?—Not in recent years, I think.

12037. I notice that although the out-door relief is in your judgment too lavish, and although there are no doubt charities to the extent of £50,000 a year in Norwich, yet Norwich was the only place in your district where apparently there was a large number of unemployed and also a considerable number of under-fed school children ?—That is so.

12038. Does that not pretty clearly indicate that the system of Poor Law administration and the distribution of charity has not tended to relieve distress, as might have been anticipated ?—That is so.

12039. And that in consequence of these large public and charitable funds not being administered in the way best calculated to be to the advantage of the community, there was a greater demand for extraneous assistance both in the shape of employment and in the shape of food for under-fed children than in any of your other districts ?—Quite so.

Fall in number of vagrants and its causes

12040. There is a very curious figure in your return of the total number of vagrants relieved from 1898 to 1905. You begin in 1898 with a figure of 86,628, the next year it falls to 57,422, and the year afterwards to 39,672. That is a very remarkable fall, and it looks as if there must have been some combined action taken; do you know if anything was done at that time by boards of guardians ?—No.

12041. That was before you were in the district, I assume ?—That was just the year when I joined the district.

12042. Can you account for that very remarkable fall in those figures ?—No, I cannot, indeed. One of the extraordinary things that one cannot account for is the way in which these figures fluctuate.

12043. Were you aware of these figures ?—Yes, I have been aware of them all along.

12044. I see that the figure goes up from 39,672 in 1900 to 74,476 in 1905 ?—Yes, that is so.

Effect on pauperism of large influx of industrial population.

12045. (Dr. Downes.) That covers the period of the war, does it not ?—1900, of course, was the war year. During the war the number of vagrants was diminished and they increased afterwards. If you look at the next table you will see that the vagrants in the eastern counties are very small as compared with the numbers in the rest of England.

12046. (Chairman.) In the south-eastern part of the county of Essex, Romford, Orsett, and Rochford have increased very rapidly in population ?—Yes.

12047. But I see there is beginning to be an increase of pauperism in those districts on the whole ?—That is so.

12048. I assume that when a large population of mostly the working classes come into new districts, they diminish the rate of pauperism, because they do not as a rule bring their old people with them ?—That is so.

12049. But after a time, when they become settled, and normal conditions are established, the poor rate would go up ?—Yes.

Absence of complaint as to burden of rates.

12050. In those districts there is a heavy school rate as a rule because they come with their children; have any complaints been made to you in those districts as regards the heavy burden of the rates ?—Not at all.

12051. Not in Romford even ?—Not even in Romford.

Persons liable to surcharge in case of illegal relief.

12052. (Miss Hill.) Referring to the case of surcharge which you have mentioned, is it obligatory that the result of the surcharge should fall on the relieving officer ? You said that in those objectionable cases in Norwich where a surcharge had been made, it was the relieving officers who would suffer if it were put in force ?—The auditor has surcharged the relieving officers with the amount of the relief.

12053. Is it the relieving officer and not the board of guardians who is usually surcharged ?—That is a matter for the auditor.

Deterrent effect of surcharge enforced by Local Government Board.

12054. It would be naturally very difficult to enforce it as against the relieving officer, would it not ?—That is entirely an audit question which it is for the Board to consider. If in this instance the decision of the auditor is upheld by the Local Government Board it would have a very good effect indeed, but if, on the other hand, the auditor's decision is reversed it would have the very worst effect.

12055. (Chairman.) Assuming the auditor's decision is confirmed but the charge is remitted, would that have any effect ?—Yes. If the guardians know that by administering relief in this manner carelessly, they are liable to be surcharged by the auditor, they will take very great care that they do not overstep the bounds.

12056. (Miss Hill.) But if it is remitted, it will not particularly matter to them. Although one can imagine that it might be deterrent to them, I should not have thought that it would be deterrent all over the country ?—I quite agree that there are some instances where a surcharge has been made in which it would have had a most salutary effect indeed if it had not been remitted.

12057. (Mr. Bentham.) I take it the point is that a surcharge which is confirmed by the Local Government Board has a different effect to a surcharge which is not confirmed by the Local Government Board ?—Yes.

12058. Quite irrespective of whether it is remitted afterwards or not ?—Quite so.

THIRTIETH DAY.

Monday, 7th May, 1906.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, C.G.S.I., etc., etc., etc. (Chairman)

The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S
Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.
Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
Mr. FRANCIS CHANDLER.
Dr. A. H. DOWNES.
The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
Mr. C. S. LOCH.
Mr. J. PATTEN-MACDOUGALL
Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.
The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.
Mrs. BERNARD BOSANQUET.
Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.
Miss OCTAVIA HILL.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary)
Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Mr. ARTHUR B. LOWRY, called; and Examined.

Mr. A. B. Lowry.

7 May 1906.

12059. (Chairman.) You are now the General Inspector of the Local Government Board for the Counties of Kent, Sussex and part of Surrey?—I am.

12060. From your memorandum, which we take as your evidence-in-chief (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. XXIV. (A–B)), it appears that you have only very recently been appointed to your present district?—That is so.

12061. Previous to that appointment, in what district were you?—I was assistant inspector in London.

Decrease of pauperism in Kent and Sussex.

12062. You are, therefore, hardly in a position to describe to the Commission any particular characteristics of your district; but you have given us some useful statistics, from which it appears that there is a steady decrease in the pauperism of Sussex?—Yes.

12063. There has been a decrease also in Kent?—Yes.

12064. Is the decrease in the actual number of paupers or on the increased population?—In Sussex it is an actual decrease in the numbers; in Kent it is not; there is a slight increase in the actual numbers, but the population is growing more rapidly than that of Sussex.

12065. The infirmaries are mostly associated with the workhouses?—Yes, in every case.

Workhouse children attending public elementary schools.

12066. In most of the unions the children are in the workhouse, but they go to the elementary schools?—Yes.

12067. Although in the workhouses the arrangements for keeping them separate from the adult population, in your judgment, are generally effective?—Yes, I think I may say so.

Percentage contributed by various occupations to indoor pauperism.

12068. In paragraph 6 of your memorandum, you give the occupations, and in paragraphs 7 and 8 you give the percentages of pauperism in the various occupations?—The percentages in the workhouses and asylums.

12069. It does not include out-door relief?—It does not include out-door relief at all. I was relying on the census returns only.

12070. If it only relates to the workhouses, will you take the head of general labourers. In Kent, from the point of view of occupation, there are 5·1 per cent., but in the workhouses there are 27 per cent.?—Yes, they are 27 per cent. of those who are in the workhouse.

12071. Going to Sussex, the percentage of general labourers to the population is 4·1, and the percentage of pauperism they contribute to the workhouses is seventeen?—Yes.

12072. So that in both cases the percentage of indoor pauperism of this particular class is very much larger than their percentage to the general population?—That is so.

Casual labour and pauperism.

12073. What would these general labourers be engaged in: any kind of casual work?—That is what it amounts to, I think.

12074. Are they men who are not continuously employed?—Yes, I think so, chiefly.

12075. They would include, I suppose, a very considerable portion of people who are not continuously employed?—I think undoubtedly so.

12076. You have one or two seaport towns in your district?—Yes.

12077. At Chatham, Sheerness and Rochester, there would be a certain amount of casual employment I suppose?—There are a considerable number of casual labourers in all those towns, and in Dover also.

Conditions in Dartford and Erith.

12078. (Mr. Loch.) In your memorandum you refer to the increase at Dartford; is that due to any special cause? There is an increasing population which is very marked?—The increase in population is due to the growth of industries, in the town of Erith especially.

12079. In Erith there has been some great fluctuation, has there not, in regard to industry?—Very considerable.

12080. Could you say what it has been?—From what I have heard I gather that when the war was over there was a considerable depression, especially in what I might describe as the Ordnance manufactories there, and a great many people left the town. The population was down for a time in 1902 and 1903. At the present time it has recovered entirely, and the population is now presumed to be higher than it has ever been.

12081. In 1895 the pauperism, on the 1st January, was 2,009, and 1905 the pauperism, on the 1st January, was 2,432. Is that due to that special industrial trouble?—I think the practical explanation is probably this, that in 1905 there were labour yards open in the union, and in 1895 there were not. Of course, you might go behind that and say that the reason the labour yards were opened was that there was this distress owing to the industrial depression.

12082. Therefore, this itself is not the pauperism, so to speak, of the residue; it really represents the policy of the administration as it then stood in 1905?—I suppose it might be put like that.

12083. Judging from your experience of the district since you have been there, do you think that there is a permanent pauperism growing up in Dartford in consequence of the industrial evils?—I am told there are more loafers than there were, men who make no attempt to leave the district at all to get work elsewhere.

12084. The interest of the point is that possibly there is a close connection there, more close almost than anywhere, between the industrial character of the place and the pauperism?—That is so.

Conditions in Milton Union.

12085. Have you seen much of the Milton union?—Not very much. I have visited it comparatively lately.

12086. Is there anything distinctive in the administration there?—I should describe them as a very businesslike board of guardians indeed.

12087. What district does that union include?—It has as its centre the towns of Milton and Sittingbourne, which are to the east of Chatham.

12088. As to the nature of the population, is it a union where there is a large agricultural district, or mainly industrial?—There is a good deal of agriculture in the union, and there are large brickfields. That is the chief industry, apart from agriculture. I should say that agriculture is the predominant industry.

12089. The success of the whole of the district, although I see that pauperism is slightly going up, is due really to administration?—I do not know of any other reason.

12090. Is it a small board?—Not very; it has twenty-five members.

Conditions in Bromley Union.

12091. In the case of Bromley, according to the figures here, the rise is very great; 1,387 is the number of paupers on January 1st, 1895, and 2,613 on January 1st, 1905. Is it the character of the place that is altering?—No, I do not think it is that. I should say that it was owing to badly administered labour yards last year that that came about. I may mention that on the 1st January, 1906, the figures for Bromley are 1912, the total indoor and outdoor, comparing with 2,613 in the year before. That represents a decrease of 700, owing to improved administration in their labour yards, I think.

12092. Was there a great industrial depression in Bromley?—There was considerable depression in the building trade, I think.

12093. In both these instances which one has picked out, you rather lay stress on the fact that there was special provision made by way of labour yards, or something akin to that?—Yes.

Labour Yards at Bromley.

12094. Do you think, in a manner that has been provocative of pauperism rather than a sedative?—I hardly know enough about them to say so, but, judging from the experience of Bromley, that is the view I am inclined to take. In the winter of 1904-5 they had a very light task at the labour yard, merely wood chopping, and they got a very large number of men in, but this year they were very much more strict, and they took a line which I am afraid is not strictly legal, that is to say, they paid by results.

12095. Is that a suggestion which you would approve in trying to manage that form of Poor Law relief?—No, I think not, certainly.

12096. Would you have any suggestions yourself to make, on that score, as to preventing this form of relief falling off and becoming useless?—You mean as to the best administration of the labour yards?

12097. Yes?—I have my views on the subject, but not derived from any considerable experience, and I do not know that they are worth troubling the Commission with.

Administration in Milton Union and its effects.

12098. (Mr. Chandler.) You regard the board of guardians at Milton as people with businesslike abilities, I think you say?—Yes.

12099. Do you know if they have ample accommodation in their workhouse?—I think I may say so.

12100. Have they any rules for the administration of out-door relief?—I do not think they have drawn up any formal rules there.

Increased pauperism in spite of strict out-relief policy.

12101. The instance of Milton presents rather a unique example; there are more in the workhouse than there are out-door paupers?—That is so.

12102. Do you attribute that, in any way, to the method of administering relief there?—I noticed at the meeting I attended there not long ago, that there is a very strong determination on that board of guardians to enforce repayment from relatives in every possible case. I daresay that has something to do with it.

12103. That has nothing to do with reducing the number of out-door paupers; it would, of course, increase the receipts of the guardians?—Would it not reduce the number at all? I should have thought it would have that tendency.

12104. You think it has a tendency to prevent applications?—That would be one effect.

12105. In spite of that administration, and the fact which we have here, that there are less out-door paupers than in, the pauperism is steadily increasing there?—From 1885 I see there is an increase in the percentage from 1·8 to 2 now.

12106. My point was that the strict administration of out-door relief which has brought the percentage of out-door pauperism down has not absolutely prevented the steady increase of pauperism in Milton, has it?—Apparently not.

Canterbury Charities.

12107. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Are there many endowed charities in Canterbury?—I think there are a considerable number of endowed charities in Canterbury.

12108. Is there any special method of administering them?—I am afraid I have not gone into that question very carefully, but there is, I think, a relief association connected with the Charity Organisation Society.

Chichester Rules for administering relief.

12109. You say at Chichester the guardians have drawn up rules of administration which are more stringent than the Prohibitory Order. Can you tell us in what way they are more stringent?—The first rule is this: "An able-bodied person shall be relieved only in the workhouse, either alone or together with such of the family as may be resident with him, or her, except in the case of a widow with one child or more dependent on her, and during cases of sickness of any member of the family." Then there is another rule: "Out-relief may be granted only to such aged and infirm persons as (a) are deserving at the time of application; (b) have no relations legally or morally bound to, and able to, support them; (c) are desirous of living out of the workhouse and can properly be taken care of." Then: "No out-relief shall be given to women who are deserted, or whose husbands are in prison, or undergoing penal servitude, except under special circumstances." Then there is another rule: "No permanent out-relief shall be given to persons who have been resident in the union less than two years"; and a further rule: "Out-relief shall be allowed only to those persons who satisfy the guardians their destitution has not been caused by their own improvidence or intemperance. Those that cannot satisfy the guardians in these respects shall only be relieved in the workhouse." I think it may be said that those rules are more stringent than the regulations of the Prohibitory Order.

12110. Do you think the guardians carry them out pretty fairly?—When I attended a meeting there, I am bound to say I had occasion to make the remark that I did not see the use of having rules unless they were adhered to. The remark was effective at the time. I fancy it might have been made by one of the guardians, if I had not been there.

12111. It would require a good deal of careful investigation to carry them out?—Yes.

Case papers.

12112. Have they case papers there?—No, they have not. It is a small union, and very compact, and they have a good relieving officer.

12113. You think they are able to make it effective?—I think so.

12114. Are there case papers used in any unions in your district?—Yes, in some of the unions, certainly. I am afraid I cannot give you a complete list of the unions where they may be used. I can only tell you where I have noticed they are in use. Those are: Eastbourne, Blean, and the Isle of Thanet. As I say, there are very likely more, but I have not come across them. I have not made particular inquiries on that point.

Conditions in Brighton Union.

12115. Are there any particular difficulties at Brighton? Do you think it is a specially difficult place, from the point of view of pauperism?—Brighton always seems to me very greatly to resemble London. I do not know that I can say more about it than that.

12116. It would not have the staple industries that London has?—No.

12117. So in that respect it would be even worse?—Quite so.

12118. Do you know whether the guardians there work with the Charity Organisation Society much?—I do not think they are in very close touch with them.

Mr. A. B. Lowry.

7 May, 1906.

Question of amalgamating smaller Unions in the District.

12119. (Mr. Gardiner.) As regards the size of some of the unions, the population seems very small, for instance, Romney Marsh. Have you any recommendation to make with regard to re-arranging the unions in your district?—I think in the particular instance you have selected there would be considerable difficulty: Romney Marsh is a very clearly defined district, with local characteristics of its own, it is a sort of kingdom within a kingdom really.

12120. Do the same remarks apply to Canterbury, Bridge, and Blean; they are all adjacent, are they not?—I think the reason for such anomalies as you observe there are historical; I have mentioned it in my memorandum.

12121. Do you think it desirable to have a re-arrangement?—Has a rearrangement ever been suggested?—Yes, I believe some years ago there was a suggestion.

12122. Do you know why no action was taken?—No, that is not within my cognisance.

12123. A request was made to the Local Government Board?—Yes.

12124. But for some reason, which you cannot tell us, no action was taken?—That is so.

12125. Would it be a fair question to ask which union was opposed to the re-arrangement?—I think it was opposed both by the Blean and the Bridge Unions. I am not quite sure about my facts, but the proposal was that Canterbury should take some of the most wealthy parishes from each of those unions.

12126. Would it have been possible to have formed Bridge and Blean and Canterbury into one union?—It would have been possible, of course, but I think it would have made rather an unwieldy union.

12127. Speaking generally, you do not think it is desirable to enlarge the unions, having regard to the great change in facilities of communications since the 1834 Commission Report?—I do not express any opinion against enlargement in general. I will tell you, if you like, the points of consideration which influenced my reply. The reason is that the Blean Union contains two fairly important towns, one Herne Bay and the other Whitstable: they are both growing, and they are both some distance from Canterbury. It is a union that might be said to be large enough to be self-supporting.

12128. What I was really thinking of were the improved facilities of classification and the like. You have some anomalies there, have you not? For instance, you have the City Lunatic Asylum side by side with the County Asylum?—I quite agree with you that there are curious anomalies in connection with those unions.

12129. The result is that in a certain case, at any rate, the ratepayers suffer, do they not?—I suppose they do 12130. And practically the poor suffer too, because so much goes in administrative attention that they do not get the attention they deserve?—It may be so.

12131. That applies to some of the infirmaries, does it not. Perhaps it is too detailed a question to ask, but some of the infirmaries in your district are not of a very high level, are they, as regards the nursing?—Some of them have not got a very large number of nurses, certainly, and some of the buildings are not very modern or up to date.

12132. Am I wrong in saying that at certain of the infirmaries too much pauper assistance is given?—It has not struck me as being abused at all.

Time devoted to their duties by Clerks to Guardians.

12133. Could you tell us anything about the Uckfield Union. Does the clerk there give the whole of his time to the duties of his office?—I think not.

12134. Have you formed any opinion as to the desirability of clerks giving their whole time? My point rather is this, in your experience does it or does it not lead to improved administration when the clerk gives his whole time to his office?—I can hardly say that my experience has taught me that. It almost stands to reason, does it not?

12135. That is my opinion. I think it does, but a good many of the inspectors when I have asked a similar question have said that on the whole they are disposed to favour the existing system?—On the ground that you are more likely to get a competent man in a small union.

12136. And in consequence of their influence in other directions. For instance, we are told a good many clerks are also clerks to the magistrates, therefore when the guardians have reason to apply to the magistrates for orders, and the like, their case is stated very fully?—I understand.

12137. That is only one answer that was given by one of the inspectors. Do you hold any general views on the subject?—I should agree with it thus far, that in some of these smaller unions the work is not enough to justify paying a large salary.

12138. Practically the work is done by a particular clerk, who does the work of the union under the general supervision of the clerk of the guardians?—I should not be prepared to say that. I should certainly say that most of the clerks to the guardians in my district have a very great knowledge of and give a great deal of attention to the work of the guardians.

Nursing of Out-door sick at Chichester by Workhouse Nurses.

12139. (Dr. Downes.) Do you know whether they have any special arrangements for nursing the outdoor sick at Chichester?—Yes, they have special arrangements there.

12140. Could you tell us what they are?—The arrangement is, put generally, this, that the nurses in the workhouse take it in turns to go out for certain periods (I forget exactly what the periods are) and attend to the sick cases amongst those receiving outdoor relief. During that time they do no nursing in the workhouse itself.

12141. How long has that been in operation?—I am afraid I cannot give you the date. It is three or four years.

12142. Is it working satisfactorily to your knowledge?—Yes, as far as I know.

12143. Who supervises the nurses when they are on this outdoor work?—I am afraid I do not quite know. I suppose it would be the district medical officer.

12144. Is there a superintendent nurse?—Yes.

12145. Does she have any duties with regard to the outdoor sick?—I am afraid I do not know.

12146. (Mr. Phelps.) You have not been in Kent in the hop-picking season?—I have not.

12147. You have no experience of the pressure put on the guardians at that time?—No.

Conditions in Faversham Union.

12148. Have you heard anything about the administration in Faversham?—Yes.

12149. Mr. Davy gave us some details about that. You notice that the outdoor relief there has gone up from double figures to treble figures. Can you give any explanation of that?—Of course all that I know about it is purely hearsay. I have some figures here on the subject. I have the detailed figures giving the number in receipt of out-relief since 1871. I take it that you would not like me to read them all out.

12150. Perhaps you would kindly put it in as part of your evidence?—I will certainly. (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. XXIV. (C)).

Influence of Chairman of policy of Guardians.

12151. I am right in saying that that striking reduction in the outdoor relief was mainly due to an individual's influence?—I believe so. In the year 1876, I think, the chairman determined that outdoor relief should be gone into carefully. From that date there was a steady decrease

12152. Do you notice that in going round the Boards of guardians that personal influence still has a considerable effect?—I think the personality of the chairman has a very great deal to do with the proceedings of the guardians, certainly.

12153. In the rural districts in Kent is the chairman commonly a country gentleman, or is he a farmer?—I should say more often a country gentleman than a farmer.

12154. That is still the case, is it?—Yes.

Administration in Gravesend Union.

12155. Take a special case, the town of Gravesend. Is the town of Gravesend under a special Act?—No, there is no special Act there.

12156. You do not know the history of how it came to be so small a union?—No.

12157. There they only have eight guardians?—Yes.

12158–9. Is that a well-administered board?—I am sorry to say I have never attended a meeting of that board yet, but their results are pretty good, judging by the figures.

12160. You have been at Eastry ?—Yes.

ailors in Eastry workouse.

12161. Did it strike you at all at Eastry there was something wrong in the system which put people used to a sea-faring life in a country workhouse ?—The point did not strike me very particularly.

12162. It struck me very much in going over it once. You know the Newhaven Union ?—Yes.

dministration in Newaven union.

12163. The Newhaven Union is one of the lowest in percentage in your district, is it not ?—Yes, it is.

12164. It has very adequate buildings, has it not ?—It has a very good infirmary.

lerk to uardians as "wholemer."

12165. There the clerk devotes his whole time, I think, to the affairs of the board ?—Yes, he does—and those of the rural district council, of course.

12166. He has no private practice at all ?—No.

12167. Perhaps you could hardly say whether the results are due to his assiduity ?—The present clerk has only been in office for a few months. His predecessor, as far as I am aware, did not give his full time.

12168. You said with regard to Romney Marsh what is quite true, that it is a kingdom within itself; is the same true with regard to the Hundred of Hoo ?—I should say not to the same extent.

12169. Do you think the workhouse and infirmary there are worth maintaining as separate institutions ?—No, certainly not.

12170. Have you any knowledge with regard to the provision of chaplains in the workhouses you visit ?—No, I have not any statistics about that.

arge umbers of ricultural upers in ent and ssex.

12171. (Miss Hill.) I see that you say that the largest proportion of people in the workhouses in Kent and Sussex have been employed in agriculture. The number of people employed in agriculture is larger than those that you call "retired ?"—I have given the figures of those described as "retired," but I do not state that the greater number of them were engaged in agriculture. In the Kent workhouses the greater number are general labourers.

12172. (Chairman.) You do state, I think, as Miss Hill points out, that the proportion connected with agriculture is 18 per cent. in one and 28 per cent. in the other ?—Yes.

12173. (Miss Hill.) 18 per cent in Kent and 28 per cent. in Sussex ?—Certainly.

emand for ricultural bour in ent and ssex.

12174. There are 27 per cent. general labourers in the workhouses in Kent, so that those who are now employed in agriculture must be almost exclusive of the sick and the old. There is a very good steady demand for agricultural labourers throughout those two counties, is there not ?—Certainly. These are described as people "retired."

12175. Therefore they would probably be either old or sick ?—Either sick or broken down.

12176. One is struck, I think, with the fact that in those counties, so very near London, there is a very decided demand for labour in the agricultural parts. Is that not so ?—That is so certainly, and there are many people still employed in agriculture above the age of 70.

12177. In fact, they are rather valued, are they not ? Yes, I think they are.

ders in ce at ighton.

12178. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to Brighton, you say that the provisions of the Out-Door Relief Regulation Order and the Prohibitory Order are not binding on them. What is there in their local Act which absolves them ?—I do not know of anything in their local Act which prevents the orders being applied to them.

12179. Why are they not under one or the other ?—I am afraid I cannot say. I do not know.

12180. Is it with reference to their local Act ?—I suppose it is because there was a local Act in force there.

12181. You cannot tell us anything about it ?—No.

ocedure as contracts.

12182. With regard to contracts, have you often attended meetings of boards of guardians when they are giving out contracts ?—I have been present at one or two when contracts have been under consideration.

12183. What is the procedure ?—The procedure varies, as far as I can see.

12184. Can you give us instances ?—Do you mean instances with the names of the unions ?

12185. I do not so very much mind the names of the unions, but I want to know how they vary in procedure. For instance, are the tenders opened at the board itself, or are they reported upon by a committee ?—In one instance, certainly—I am sorry to say I cannot remember what union it was—a report did come up.

12186. Was the name of the tenderer always given before it was voted on ?—I think so. The report of the committee, I may say, was accepted as it stood.

12187. With the name of the tenderer ?—The name of the tenderer was in.

Duties of an assistant inspector.

12188. Would you mind describing to us what were your duties when you were assistant inspector ? How did they differ from the duties of an inspector ? Were you engaged more in visiting institutions as an assistant inspector ?—As an assistant inspector of course one is at the disposal entirely of one's chief.

12189. Of course, but what, as a matter of fact, does he ask you to do ?—As a matter of fact, what he asked me to do was chiefly in visiting the institutions. That was what I may describe as the formal part of my work—what I did from day to day. Anything else I did was by his special request.

12190. What sort of things would he ask you to do by special request ?—Enter into any particular complaints that might come to the office, and on one occasion at his request I went round to the various unions and made various inquiries in connection with the administration of outdoor medical relief.

12191. Did you ever make a special investigation of the conditions under which out-door relief was given ? No; only incidentally, of course, one came across that question in connection with the medical relief. That was all.

12192. Were you ever asked to cross-visit at all to test the cases ?—No.

12193. You were never used as a superintendent relieving officer to make a special investigation ?—No.

Previous official experience of inspector.

12194. (Mr. Lansbury.) How long were you an assistant inspector ?—Two-and-a-quarter years—from July, 1903, to November last.

12195. Then you went straight on to this district ?—Yes.

12196. You were previously assistant inspector for London, were you not ?—Yes.

12197. Previously to that, had you had any experience of the Local Government Board ?—Yes, since 1892.

12198. What were you at the Local Government Board ?—From 1892 until 1903 I was what is called a second class clerk—a higher division clerk—in the office, and during that time, from the beginning of 1899 to the middle of 1900, I was the official private secretary of the Parliamentary Secretary; from June, 1900, to July 1903, I was private secretary to the President.

Agricultural labour in Kent and Sussex and its nature.

12199. With regard to your present district, have you discovered anything about agricultural labour there, especially in Kent and Sussex ?—Have I discovered anything ?

12200. Anything special about it ?—No, I do not think I have discovered anything that is not generally known.

12201. Is it the fact that farmers want a large amount of labour at certain periods of the year ?—Certainly.

12202. And at other times they do not want the labour at all ?—Certainly, there is a greater demand for labour at some times than others. Just at present there is very abundant labour required in tying hops, and so on, and, of course, it is notorious that in the fruit-picking and hop-picking season there is a very large demand.

Casual labour and pauperism.

12203. There is a good deal of casual labour in your district, is there not ?—Yes, a certain amount of casual labour actually resident in the district.

12204. So that may account for a good number of these people who are down as having been engaged in agriculture becoming chargeable ?—That may be so. Of course, those figures are necessarily rather doubtful. One knows that a man who has never done any work at all will call himself a general labourer.

Mr. A. B. Lowry.

7 May, 1906.

12205. I was rather thinking of agriculture just then. It is true that there is a good deal of downright casual employment in agriculture?—Yes.

12206. My point is that when the farmers say that they want labourers it very often means that they only want them for a particular period?—I suppose that may be so.

12207. Now about Bromley; is it not true that the character of Bromley, from a residential point of view, is changing and has been changing the last few years?—That may be so. I have not really known Bromley until the last six months.

Unemployed at Dartford.

12208. You said there were more loafers there than there were previously?—I was speaking of Dartford.

12209. What do you mean, quite, by "more loafers" there?—I was simply repeating what I had been told. I have been told there are more men standing about at the corners.

12210. What you told us is true, that during the war there was a big demand for all kinds of labour, and that demand fell when the war ceased?—Yes, speaking of Erith particularly.

12211. That is in the Dartford district, is it not?—Yes.

12212. That would account for a good lot of men hanging about, would it not?—No doubt.

12213. They would not necessarily be loafers because they could not get employment?—No.

Possibility of discriminating between deserving and undeserving paupers.

12214. You think it is possible to discriminate between the deserving and the undeserving?—I do not think I have said so, have I?

12215. Do you? I will ask you?—It is rather a wide question, is it not? We each of us think we can individually discriminate between the deserving and the undeserving.

12216. You have told us that the Chichester guardians have adopted a certain set of rules?—Yes, I quoted to you the rules of the Chichester guardians.

12217. In which "deserving" comes out. I would point out that your department has issued various circulars in which guardians are invited to discriminate between the deserving and the undeserving?—Yes.

12218. I will put it to you whether you think it is possible that boards of guardians can discriminate between deserving and undeserving poor?—I think it is one of the most difficult tasks they ever undertake.

12219. Would you think it is practicable, if you were on the board of guardians, administering relief?—If I were on the board of guardians, administering relief, I think I should go into the question as little as possible.

12220. As little as possible?—Yes.

12221. What would you do with the people, then?—I should endeavour to administer relief according to the law.

12222. The law, of course, is the law as laid down by the Department very much?—Yes.

12223. It is Department-made law?—Yes.

12224. We are told by their various circulars and Orders that we are to discriminate; therefore, in carrying out the law, boards of guardians must so discriminate, must they not?—I have not seen any Order requiring guardians to discriminate.

12225. Well, circulars; I will not limit my question to Orders?—There is, of course, a real distinction between a circular and an Order, as, no doubt, you are aware. A circular may contain a recommendation, but it is not binding like an Order.

12226. Still, it is the recommendation of the Central Authority on Poor Law?—Yes.

12227. And, therefore, Guardians are entitled to look to it with some amount of respect?—Certainly.

12228. Do you think that in the main the guardians in your district, where you have become acquainted with them, do carry out their duties as administrators of the Poor Law in an efficient manner?—Generally speaking, I should say yes.

12229. You said just now that it was very difficult to discriminate, but do you think that so far as it is possible to discriminate, on the whole, the boards of guardians do discriminate in an intelligent manner between deserving and undeserving?—I think they do their best, certainly.

Aged and d serving poo Mr. Chaplin circular.

12230. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to that question of deserving and undeserving, is there not a very clear distinction, which is brought out by the Commissioners of 1834, between out-door relief and workhouse treatment? The 1834 Commissioners precisely stated that, as regards out-door relief, it was a mistake to make any distinction between deserving and undeserving; they do not say that with regard to workhouse treatment. Is not the recommendation with regard to deserving and undeserving usually confined to workhouse treatment?—The recommendation which I think Mr. Lansbury has in mind was in the Circular of August, 1900.

12231. (Mr. Lansbury.) Yes, Mr. Chaplin's Circular?—In that I think it was implied that the aged and deserving poor should not be compelled to enter the workhouse.

12232. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to other classes, has that not always been the distinction between outdoor relief and workhouse treatment? It has always been recommended that no attention should be paid to deserving or undeserving characteristics with regard to outdoor relief, whereas it has been suggested that in treatment within the workhouse there should be some distinction made between deserving and undeserving?—Certainly, differential treatment has been recommended in the workhouse.

12233. (Mr. Lansbury.) No one would suggest, would they, as to all these people on the list here who are getting out-door relief, that the guardians have not taken into account whether they were well behaved, respectable, decent people or not? I do not know anything about 1834; for the moment I want to know how it works out in practice?—You are asking me, in fact, whether the guardians have satisfied themselves that all these people in receipt of outdoor relief——

12234. Not all of them, but on the average they are decent, respectable people?—I have no doubt the guardians are of that opinion.

12235. The question of deserving and undeserving, as far as out-door relief is concerned, depends on the point of view. If persons are, in the judgment of the guardians, decent, deserving persons, and it is practicable to give them out-door relief, they give them it in preference to taking them into the workhouse?—Certainly, in the majority of unions they do.

Nature of agricultural labour in the district.

12236. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to the irregularity of employment in this district on the land, would it not be mostly connected with fruit farming?—Fruit farming and hops, I think.

12237. Is not the irregular labour that comes in mostly migratory labour that comes and goes according to the season?—I should think it is, for the most part. A certain amount of it comes from the towns in the district.

12238. Otherwise these people would not be likely to be found in the workhouse, would they?—No. They would presumably be in the workhouses of the unions in which they had their settlement.

12239. The same explanation might affect the urban districts?—Yes.

12240. What is usually called agricultural labour is about as regular there as anywhere else, is it not?—I should think so.

Mr. HERBERT PRESTON-THOMAS, recalled: and further Examined.

Effect of small electoral areas on administration.

12241. (Mrs. Webb.) I notice that in your last examination it rather came out that in the unions which were cut up into small wards with a small number of persons in each ward, the individual guardian tended to be more influential in the distribution of relief; is that so?—That is so, I think.

12242. That is what you would rather deplore, is it not?—Since you put one or two questions as to that particular point, I have got out a statement of the population of each union, and roughly divided that up by the number of guardians, and I see generally that what I should say are, for the most part, the most efficient boards are those in which individual guardians represent on an average the largest number of population, and, at the other end, that those representing the smallest population are those who do not conduct their business as efficiently as the others; but that general rule is subject to such very considerable exceptions that it is very difficult to generalise. Of course, one masterful person in a small board of guardians may be very useful indeed, and may bring the people to proper principles and good procedure; on the other hand, it may be just the other way, that the influence of the particular guardian who has most influence is not satisfactory as regards the conduct of business.

12243. On the whole, you would deprecate relief being given on a guardian's own view and knowledge?—Very strongly.

dministration in lymouth nion.

12244. Could you tell us why it is that the Plymouth has been such an inefficient and bad board of guardians for so many decades, because it has been almost a historical question, and it has gone down the whole of the last century as a bad board of guardians?—It had been exceedingly unsatisfactory. At present it has some difficulties to contend against, difficulties principally of its own making. It ought long ago to have built an infirmary, and its workhouse is at the present moment crammed; and the result is that many cases which they ought to test with an order for the workhouse they give outdoor relief to. In some cases I think they ought to refuse absolutely, but they give outdoor relief as they have no room in the workhouse. They have now got plans approved, and are going to advertise for tenders for a large infirmary, to hold 300 patients. I hope they will build it. We once got to this stage before, some five or six years ago; then they threw up the whole thing, and have been struggling with an over-full workhouse ever since.

12245. What is it in the constitution of the board or the character of the place which brings about this perpetual inefficiency in administration?—I have heard it said that it was much better when their guardians were elected for only two parishes instead of the union being cut up into fourteen wards. Now there is a tendency to insist on the guardian being somebody who lives in the ward, and there are some wards where there are few eligible candidates. I have heard that stated as a reason. Whether it is so, I cannot say for certain.

fect of the ective inciple on e policy of t-relief.

12246. Do you think there is much giving of out-door relief before elections for election purposes?—I do not know any case of that sort so precisely that I could say "yes" to that. Generally, I think the giving of outdoor relief freely is rather a platform of the election. Before an election comes on I often hear taunts at the board: "Oh, yes, you give this because an election is coming."

12247. (Sir Samuel Provis.) To whom would it be given? It could not be given to people who were going to vote, that would disqualify them?—No, but the general tendency is to give it, not to the actual people who are going to vote, but their relations, friends, and so on.

12248. (Mrs. Webb.) I have also heard that in many of those cases there is an understanding between the persons who put the voters on the list that relief shall not disqualify?—I do not know of any cases of that sort.

12249. That is often said?—I have heard it said.

12250. With regard to East Stonehouse, which is an efficient union, that has rather a peculiar constitution has it not?—Yes, it is a very small place wedged in between the two big towns of Devonport and Plymouth. It is very poor indeed, and it has a very small number of guardians.

12251. They are elected at large, are they not?—I believe so.

12252. They have been persistently efficient, in a way?—Particularly efficient.

Administration and method of election of Guardians in East Stonehouse Union.

12253. And that also goes back a long time. You have the East Stonehouse Board of Guardians efficient for a long time?—Yes, they have a high standard of administration.

12254. What sort of persons are on the East Stonehouse Board of Guardians? Are they of a superior status to the ones at Plymouth?—No, I do not think I could say that.

12255. Have you noticed any relation between efficient administration and the amount of compounding for rates?—No, I have no information as to that.

Effect of compounded, Government, and Railway property in Union, on administration.

12256. Have you noticed any relation between efficient administration, and the amount of Government or railway property?—No. Of course, one's natural assumption would be that where the union funds are in a large degree derived from Government property and railways, and therefore the rates do not fall so heavily on the ratepayers themselves, there would be greater laxity.

12257. That is an assumption?—That would be an assumption. I cannot say it is justified in any case in my district.

12258. Is there not Government property at East Stonehouse?—Yes, a good deal.

12259. Yet it is efficient?—It is efficient, and so is Devonport. There is a very considerable amount of Government contribution in Devonport, yet the administration is fairly efficient, but in Devonport the circumstances are peculiar; it is a particularly prosperous place, and the composition of its residents is such that you would not expect many paupers.

Procedure of guardians as to contracts.

12260. With regard to contracts, have you any experience or views with regard to the giving out of contracts by boards of guardians, as to what procedure leads to efficiency and integrity?—There is, of course, a great tendency to restrict the contracts to local people, and sometimes I do hint to a board of guardians that (if the result is to increase the cost) that means a present to such and such tradesmen from the rest of the ratepayers. That is the course taken by a large number of unions. On the other hand, some of the best administered unions accept tenders without regard to the place of business of the tenderers. In the union of Exeter nearly all the contracts are given outside, as it happens, at the present time. The guardians are absolutely fair. They give the contract there to any reputable firm who sends in the lowest tender.

12261. With regard to the procedure in giving contracts, have you sat with boards of guardians giving contracts?—Often.

12262. What is the ordinary procedure? Are the tenders opened at the board and decided off-hand, or are they reported on by committees?—In the small unions, like many in my district, the usual practice is for the whole board to deal with the tenders. On the other hand in many unions they are referred to a committee for report.

12263. Do you happen to remember whether the names are withheld?—In a good many cases they are; in some, not.

12264. Do you regard the withholding of the names of the tenderers as at all an important check on any possible collusion?—I take it that the person who wants to communicate his name can really do so pretty easily.

12265. Through his price?—Yes, somehow.

12266. Do you think those various little dodges which they practise to prevent collusion between their members and outside tradesmen, are really operative in preventing corruption or not? If you were preparing standing orders for a board of guardians would you suggest them or not?—I am not sure. I think there is no device of standing orders that an ingenious tradesman and a collusive guardian or official cannot drive a coach and horses through.

Mr. H. Preston-Thomas.

7 May 1906.

12267. That is what I wanted to find out. With regard to conditions of employment, have you noticed that the degree of pauperism at all corresponds with particular conditions of employment like casual labour, agricultural labour, or any other condition of employment?—I should not say so.

Effect on pauperism of casual labour, unhealthy trades, etc.

12268. You think it is quite independent of that?—I think it is mostly independent, unless there are some conditions of particularly unhealthy employments.

12269. What, for instance?—For instance, only the other day in Redruth, where there is a fairly good board of guardians, but a high rate of pauperism, I obtained from the clerk a return of the cases which have come on the rates owing to miners' phthisis. It is very striking. The whole number of outdoor paupers in the union of Redruth is about 1,400, and at the present time 83 are women who have become chargeable in consequence of the death of their husbands through miners' phthisis, and no less than 250 children are dependent on them. That is a total of 333 out of those 1,400 outdoor paupers who have been pauperised in consequence of this disease, contracted in gold mines in the Transvaal, or in tin mines in Cornwall. It is the mineral dust in both that causes it, but it operates much more fatally in the mines in the Transvaal, and while some die out there, others come home to die. Some contract it in Cornwall and die there, but a small proportion only who have not worked in South Africa. That is a special instance in which conditions of employment very considerably affect the amount of pauperism.

12270. You do not know any other? Would you consider casual and irregular work caused people to be less provident?—Yes. I do not think I could mention any other.

Effect of housing conditions on pauperism.

12271. With regard to bad housing, it has been brought to our notice by some of the inspectors that bad conditions of housing, insanitary conditions of housing, lead to pauperism. Is that your experience at all? It leads to the sickness which leads to pauperism, does it not?—No doubt that would be so, speaking generally. I could not bring any particular instance of that. I could not indicate any particular union with only a small number of paupers as being better housed than its neighbour with a large number of paupers.

12272. You have not inquired into that?—No, except that I have very often sat with the rural district councils, and have had incidentally some information about it.

Comparative efficiency of ad hoc and ex officio guardians.

12273. With regard to the constitution of boards of guardians, have you noticed any distinction in efficiency between the board of guardians which is made up mostly of district councillors and the board of guardians which is ad hoc and urban?—No, I think not.

Possibility of discriminating between deserving and undeserving.

12274. With regard to the question of deserving and undeserving, do you think it practical or desirable to make any distinction between deserving and undeserving with regard to outdoor relief?—I think that you must, and you always do. Of course, I know perfectly well it has been said by high authority, by economists, and so on, that the Poor Law has nothing to do with the deserts of the applicant; but, as a matter of fact, when an applicant comes who has borne a good character, has lived an industrious life, and has perhaps brought up a family creditably, but has had misfortune, and then a drunken fellow who has spent all his life in public houses and at street corners, I cannot imagine any board of guardians in my district who, as a matter of practice, would not treat the scamp differently from the industrious man.

12275. You would think it right, on the whole?—That is an ethical question.

12276. Would you do it if you were a member of the board of guardians?—Yes, I certainly should.

Rateable value in Dulverton and Axbridge.

12277. (Mr. Bentham.) In Dulverton the rateable value per head of population amounts to £8 14s. Can you say to what that is due? Is it because of any exceptional property in the union, such as railways or waterworks?—No, I cannot say why it is. I know that Dulverton is the highest union in rateable value per head of population; this may be because there is a very small population, and there is a very large acreage. Dulverton is Exmoor and scarcely anything else.

12278. Axbridge is also high. It is £8 per head?—Axbridge is very high. That is a very flourishing place, and it has Weston-super-Mare; that accounts for most of the rateable value. Also it has the Cheddar Valley in it, which is some of the best pasture land for the production of butter and cheese. I think those two facts mainly account for it.

12279. Is Weston-super-Mare a watering place?—Yes, a very popular watering place for Bristol.

12280. Do you know what proportion of the population lives in Weston-super-Mare out of the total population of the union?—Rather less than one-half.

Relation between old age and pauperism statistics.

12281. In paragraph 3 of your memorandum you attribute the high rate of pauperism to the large number of aged people?—Yes.

12282. You say there is a higher rate of old age, i.e., people 65 years old and upwards, in your district than the average in England and Wales?—Yes.

12283. When we examined the unions in this respect we found that Taunton, with an old age of sixty-six per thousand, has a pauperism of seventeen, while Redruth, with the aged people sixty-three per thousand, has a pauperism of thirty-six, which is more than double?—Yes.

Effect of administration in Taunton and Exeter.

12284. By what would that discrepancy be accounted for?—Mainly by differences of administration. As to Redruth, I have already mentioned the prevalence of miners' phthisis as a special case of pauperism; and the number of deserted wives and families is also rather large owing to the miners' habit of going abroad for employment. As to Taunton, when I had the honour of giving evidence here before, I explained that for a great number of years the administration there had been exceptionally good. That was the one union in which I found a careful administration; and those are two exceptions to the general broad rule that a high number of old people means high pauperism and vice versa.

12285. Would you say the same of Exeter, which has aged people sixty-six per thousand, just the same as Taunton, and a pauperism of twenty-six?—Exeter ought to be lower still; but Exeter has improved very much of late years, and it will go on improving. Taunton is quite an exceptional case from its long-continued good administration.

12286. You attribute the low rate of pauperism in Exeter, I think, to the good administration?—Clearly.

Effect on ministrat of reducti in numbe Guardian

12287. There has been a change there, has not there, in recent times, by a local Act in 1900 which reduced the number of guardians from thirty to twenty-two?—Yes, there has been a change of that kind.

12288. Has that been conducive to better administration?—Certainly; the board was too unwieldy before, and that has improved it; but the chief change has been in the principle of administration of the board generally.

Effect of elective p ciple and politics o administr tion of o relief.

12289. Are the elections at Exeter fought on political lines?—Yes.

12290. Does the question of outdoor relief play an important part in the election?—I think not.

12291. You think not?—Certainly not conspicuously.

12292. Therefore the guardians do not get returned on the promise of liberal outdoor relief?—No, I think not. I am bound to say, although they are elected on political lines, they drop their politics in the board room.

12293. After election?—After election they quite drop their politics.

12294. That is usual, is it not?—Not always. I know one board of guardians, not in my present district, where the two parties, Liberal and Conservative, sit on different sides of the table, and most things are done by party vote.

12295. That does not obtain in any of your present unions?—Certainly not.

Classifica in the Workhou

12296. (Mr. Phelps.) Have you any workhouses in which an attempt has been made to classify the inmates?—To a limited extent.

12297. On what kind of basis?—In Devonport nothing fresh was done by the guardians, but there is an exceptionally good master and matron who have arranged matters. They have got on each side three sets of people; they have the really good, quiet, best class of inmates; then they have the pretty good; and then they have the worst. They divide them as much as possible. They keep them apart in dormitory and day-room. They have three day rooms each side and three dormitories, and so on; and they give them as much chance as possible of associating only with their own class.

12298. Is the distinction between them based upon their conduct in the workhouse, or before they come into the workhouse?—When a man comes in he is classed by what they know of him, and what the relieving officer says of him. He may remain where is he put, but, on one hand, if his conduct or his language is bad and offensive to other people, he would be degraded; and, on the other hand, if put originally in a low class, and it was found his language and conduct were decent, he would be put up.

12299. Is there a distinction made between them in the matter of dietary?—No, none.

12300. Or the leave to go out?—Not in Devonport, I think. In Exeter there is a special class; they have certain privileges both as to leave and as to having a little extra tobacco, and so on; and they have nicely furnished rooms to themselves, the old men and the old women.

12301. It has a good effect upon the discipline of the house, has it not?—I think so.

12302. It is an object of ambition to get into Class 1, moderate ambition, at any rate?—Ambition is very dead in most of these people, but they like to be treated better, most of them.

12303. What do you think is the effect on class 3?—I should think it had not very much effect on them. The people that are in class 3 are habituals, and they would not be improved, probably, by association with a better class of people, nor are they deteriorated by keeping among each other.

orkhouse
ovision
r married
uples.

12304. In the majority of your workhouses is there provision for married couples?—Yes; but it is generally not used.

12305. Not used?—No; generally one of the two has got tired of nursing the other. Sometimes one has to be in the infirmary. In a few unions they live comfortably together, but it is curious to see the large number of cases where they refuse. They have said all they have to say to each other, and perhaps are wearied of each other.

12306. Have you come across unions in which a great deal has been said about the cruelty of separating married couples?—One constantly takes up newspapers where there is great nonsense about that.

12307. You think those complaints are unfounded?—So far as my district is concerned the guardians know perfectly well that it is a legal claim, and they do not attempt to avoid the claim, as far as I know.

12308. Have you any instance in your eye of old couples living comfortably together in married quarters?—Yes, I came across one the other day. They have one room, and there they seem to be happy. I go in and see the old couple time after time when I inspect the workhouse and they always say how comfortable they are. It is not very uncommon.

dvisability
master and atron of orkhouse
ing man
d wife.

12309. In the majority of the workhouses you visit I take it the master and matron are married, are they not?—Yes.

12310. Have you any instances in which they are not?—I think hardly any now.

12311. You think on the whole that is the best system?—The best system. I am sure that if there are an unmarried master and an unmarried matron, it is likely to produce one of two things, either quarrels or scandals.

12312. I can quite fancy that in a small workhouse in the country. Do you think, if you take a large workhouse in a town, that it is common to find both with the administrative ability requisite to carry it on?—I have very few towns; and I think that my unions are fortunate in their workhouse masters and matrons. One case occurs to me now, a master's wife, who was the matron, died, and the daughter was appointed a little time ago. If I went through the list of my unions I might find other instances where master and matron are not man and wife, but it is a rare exception.

12313. Do you find any difficulty arising in these modern times between the master and the matron and the nursing department?—Yes.

Friction between master, matron, and nurses.

12314. You do?—They fight a good deal.

12315. Have you any suggestion to make on that head of anything that could be done?—I should like to see, I confess, the nurse made rather more mistress of her own house in the infirmary, because sometimes you get an interfering matron who treads on the nurses' toes, and then you get quarrels. I have had to compose a good many quarrels in one way and another, but it is very difficult. It is really a question of people, and not of regulations, I think. Some people will quarrel in those circumstances.

Nursing of outdoor poor.

12316. Have you any experience of organised nursing of the outdoor poor?—No, there is no organisation. In my district there are a great many nursing associations and nursing societies to which guardians subscribe on condition that the nurses shall be available for outdoor paupers, and that works excellently. That is spreading; each year we get more and more development. In Devon we have lately started a nursing association with the express object of promoting that sort of thing. It is a county association, and is working very well; and I am quite sure the outdoor poor will gain by it enormously.

12317. Practically, then, charity and the Poor Law co-operate in the matter of nursing?—They co-operate.

Possible co-operation between Poor Law and Charity.

12318. Do you think that co-operation might be extended?—It always seems to me that the one complement that you want to the Poor Law is, in every place, some organisation to deal with what ought not to be Poor Law cases. There are lots of people who are ready to subscribe money if they can be certain that the money is not wasted, and you want some organisation in every union, in every district, to take off the rates people who ought not to go to workhouses, and whom it would be kindness to prevent from going to workhouses, or indeed from being pauperised otherwise, and who would not come within hard and fast regulations. I should like to see that very much. Of course in London you have got various societies which help in that way.

12319. You stated just now, in answer to Mrs. Webb, the type of cases which you thought might fairly be given outdoor relief. Should you prefer a system by which all those cases were dealt with by charity?—Yes, if it were practicable to deal with all those cases by charity. As to its practicability, I am not sure.

12320. You would draw a distinction as to practicability between towns and country perhaps?—I cannot say.

Proportion of inappropriate cases in Workhouses.

12321. Do you find at all in country workhouses a large proportion of people whom you would prefer to see out?—No.

12322. Do you, in town workhouses?—No.

12323. You do not think that class is a large one?—No.

12324. What are called aged deserving poor do not in your district come into the workhouse?—They do not exist; there are no such people who could keep themselves outside, in my opinion. Speaking generally, the people are all there because they cannot live outside, and cannot live on any such payment as they would receive from the rates.

Possibility of modernising old Workhouses.

12325. (Dr. Downes.) In paragraph 34 of your memorandum you speak of some satisfactory instances where they had modernised workhouses to meet modern requirements. Are those exceptional cases, or do you think that sort of thing may be done very frequently?—It is done to a large extent. Guardians always wish to save themselves from building, and if they see how to do anything in the way of useful alteration they are generally ready to do it. I have specially mentioned here the case of Okehampton, and it seems to me that if you could everywhere get the sort of man that we had there, he could convert an enormous number of workhouses into much better institutions than they are. There was one guardian there who had been a London builder; he knew the whole trade, he knew every detail, and he was uncommonly clever at devising alterations. The question was as to whether they ought not to build a new workhouse, or at any rate, a new infirmary, but he said, "Put it all into my hands and I will make a good job of it for you." So, with extraordinary cleverness, and at small cost, he converted the whole of that old, awkward, straggling workhouse, into I will not say something quite equal to the best of the modern workhouses, but everything is now quite satisfactory, and when the architect of the Local Government Board went down with me some time ago, he was perfectly surprised at what had been done. I must say that one difficulty I had to face was this, that this man, like most geniuses, was somewhat self-willed, and was not at all inclined to put himself under official restriction. If he had had to make all his plans according to strict rules, and submit them to official criticism, I do not think we could ever have got it through. However, it was all arranged comfortably and done at very small expense, and if you could get a genius like that, you would be able to improve a good many of your workhouses.

Mr. H. Preston-Thomas.

May 1906.

12326. I do not understand quite in what capacity he was acting, as guardian or builder?—Not as builder except en amateur. He had been a London builder, he was a guardian, and his brother guardians put the whole thing into his hands, knowing he was an expert, and they gave him a pretty free hand, and as far as anything official was concerned, he was not interfered with.

12327. You would point to that as a satisfactory example of a building brought up to date for the special requirements?—Singularly satisfactory.

Inadequate salaries of Medical Officers and possible remedies therefor.

12328. You agree it is most desirable if it can be done, with a view of saving money, that that sort of thing should be imitated as far as possible?—Certainly.

12329. A little further down you speak of the services of the medical officers, to whom you pay a very satisfactory tribute, and then you speak of their being scantily paid. Can you suggest any remedy for that state of things?—I cannot. The general principle, I suppose, has been to leave the question of the amount of payment of all officers very much in the hands of boards of guardians. I am not prepared with any suggestion in variation of that practice.

12330. Should you be in favour of some such system as applies in the case of the Public Health service? There I think, grants are given, are they not, provided that the salary is satisfactory?—That is so. I confess I do not like that system of grants; but that was the practice also with regard to poor-law appointments till the Act of 1888. Up to that time half the salary was paid. I believe that before that time the Local Government Board did not exercise any more control than they regard themselves as having now, as to the amount of salary. Quite apart from any question of repayment, I think sometimes they should say, this salary is plainly insufficient, and it must be higher. They might have greater power of control in palpably insufficient cases.

12331. Is not some such power exercised in the case of public health appointments? If the salary is not considered satisfactory the grant is not made?—Yes, and the district has to pay the salary.

12332. Was that the case under the Poor Law up to 1888, or was it not the fact that the grant was made, whatever the salary?—The grant was made whatever the salary, I think.

Existing system of providing drugs and results.

12333. Was there any control at that time over the salary?—There was no more control.

12334. On the question of expensive drugs, have you had any difficulty or allegation of injustice to the sick poor through expensive drugs not being supplied?—No.

12335. How do the guardians generally arrange for the supply of drugs?—The practice varies. Sometimes they are supplied from the workhouse stores; sometimes they are supplied, I think, by the medical officer who sends in a bill, generally with regard to drugs like antitoxin and that class of drug, which is expensive.

Difficulties of providing adequate nursing in small workhouses.

12336. With regard to the insufficiency of night nursing in some of the workhouses, is that tending to right itself or can you suggest any remedy which might be desirable?—It is tending to right itself very slowly by more nurses being appointed, but I do not think you can say, as regards very small workhouses indeed, that there shall be never less than two nurses, and unless you can say that, I do not see that you can get efficient night nursing. I think that is inherent in the nature of things. If you have only a very small number of patients to deal with you cannot really appoint enough nurses to be always ready for any emergency.

12337. That is a difficulty with small workhouses on account of the smallness of the staff?—Yes; large workhouses have night nursing.

12338. With regard to the suggestion that such workhouses should amalgamate with regard to nursing, you have a point I think with regard to visiting by their friends?—Yes.

12339. Would the railways serve sufficiently to overcome that difficulty in your district?—I do not think so. Our unions are nearly all large in area, and there is nothing that more conduces to the comfort of the sick than being near their friends. They are very much visited. I should not like at all to see anything which would diminish the opportunities of their friends and relations visiting them.

12340. Balancing the better nursing they might get against the visiting of their friends, you rather incline to keeping them in the neighbourhood of their friends?—I do.

Proposed State Pensions for Law Nurses.

12341. I think you alluded to the difficulty of the Superannuation Act as regards nurses. I think that the age under the Superannuation Act is rather high for a nurse to look forward to for her pension, and you suggest that it might be desirable if she could claim a pension payable by the State. Have you thought out any details of such a project?—I stated in my evidence (question 4593), that, "If it were possible to introduce a system under which any trained nurse could, after twenty or twenty-five years' service, claim a pension of £25 or £30 per annum, payable by the State, the difficulty experienced by so many women of providing for themselves after middle age would be to some extent surmounted," and the service would be made more attractive. It is now so little attractive that it is very difficult indeed to get nurses with any amount of training at all.

12342. You have not considered any details or difficulties of the scheme?—No; I only say that the total number of nurses is about 6,000, that the number of those who, having twenty years' service would retire on a pension of, say, £30 a year, is so small that it would not be a serious disbursement of the State, and that as the Local Taxation Commissioners contemplate that the payment to local authorities should be increased, that is one of the forms in which payments in respect of the administration of the local authorities could be made with great advantage to the system.

12343. I do not know whether you are aware that there are voluntary associations for pension funds for nurses?—Yes, I have heard of that. I believe they are not very well supported, are they?

12344. I do not know; statements have rather led me to think otherwise. I have no personal knowledge of them. Would any arrangements such as those, if they were sound, financially, meet your point?—I should still adhere to my broad principle that, after twenty years' service, a nurse should have a pension of £30 a year, and that the State should pay that.

12345. Referring to the question of friction between the master and matron, do you find that tending to decrease?—I am doubtful.

Starcross special institution imbecile children.

12346. Do you inspect the institution at Starcross?—Yes.

12347. It is for imbecile children, is it not?—Yes.

12348. What is the accommodation at Starcross?—270.

12349. Is it sufficient for the needs of your district?—It is generally full, but then it goes rather outside my district. It is not only for my three counties, but I think for two besides.

Retention of imbecile children in Workhouses.

12350. Do you find the imbecile children retained in the workhouses?—Too much so.

12351. Too much so?—Yes. Starcross is a place where they will only take improvable cases, and the difficulty is to place the wretched children who are not improvable, who have horrible tricks of various kinds, and who have to associate to a certain extent with the other children in the workhouse, who learn from them their tricks.

12352. Do the guardians retain those cases because they have nowhere to send them ?—Yes, various boards have tried to find places for them, and cannot.

12353. In the suggestions from chairmen of boards of guardians I see from East Stonehouse there is one that there should be increased power to detain infectious and contagious cases. Were they referring more particularly to lock cases there ?—I should think so.

12354. Have you heard of any difficulty at East Stonehouse with regard to such cases ?—Yes, it is a matter of common report that such cases are not detained sufficiently in the three towns.

12355. Are there any special hospitals, apart from the Poor Law, for such cases in the three towns ?—I think not now ; I believe the special ward of that sort in the Royal Albert hospital was closed, some few years ago, and that created considerable difficulty.

12356. I believe the law officers of the Crown held years ago that there was no power to detain those cases ?—That is so.

12357. Should you be in favour of that power being given to boards of guardians ?—I am not prepared to express an opinion on that. That opens a large question.

12358. At Redruth, where there is so much miner's phthisis, a large proportion of the relief given is out-relief ?—Yes.

12359. Are there many cases of phthisis on the out-relief lists there ?—Not a very large proportion, but there are some.

12360. Have you any special provision in your district for phthisis ?—There is one hospital, which a good many boards of guardians subscribe to, and they have the right to occupy a bed there, for £75 a year. It is at Didworthy, and is a special hospital for the application of the open-air treatment to phthisical cases ; that has done wonders, certainly. In several of my workhouses wards have also been established, for instance at Plymouth, where they keep phthisical cases in a tremendous draught of air, which is always blowing through the room. People who have been brought up in the notion that you must bottle up all lung cases think it is very dreadful, but it is perfectly astounding to see the way in which these patients improve ; and this curious thing happens : they weigh them week after week ; and in cold weather the weight increases as a rule steadily, then you get a week of muggy weather, which you sometimes have in the valley of the Tamar, and suddenly down go all the weights. The relation of the progress of the patient, as tested by the weight to weather, is very remarkable.

12361. I take it that that sanatorium to which the subscription is £75 would be intended for cases in which there is a reasonable prospect of arresting the disease ?—The managers will not take patients unless they anticipate an improvement.

12362. (Mr. Gardiner.) I noticed there are 150 children boarded out within the union ?—About that.

12363. Do you inspect them at all ?—No.

12364. Their inspection is confined, is it not, to the relieving officer and medical officer ?—And sometimes to a committee ; a committee may be appointed for the union.

12365. No definite instructions are given to that committee, are there ?—Certain requirements are specified in the boarding-out order, but there are no definite instructions as to matters of detail.

12366. Is there any change you would like to see in that system, seeing, taking the country as a whole, what a very large number of children are boarded out within the union ?—I am not quite satisfied with the way in which that particular branch of the Poor Law is organised, but I do not know that I have any suggestion for its improvement. I think we want to know more about it. I should like very much to see an absolutely independent inquiry made (say by this Commission) of 200 or 300 children in different parts of the country, boarded out, to see how they do fare, and whether they are well treated or badly treated. All the people who take them want to make money out of them. The worse they treat them, the more money they make. I have had several cases in which it has not seemed to me a satisfactory way of disposing of the children.

12367. (Chairman.) Cases of cruelty ?—Yes, cases of cruelty, or cases of neglect I should say rather than cruelty. In some instances, cases of cruelty.

12368. (Miss Hill.) Do these remarks relate to children boarded within the union or outside ?—Within the union.

12369. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With their own relatives ?—No, not with their own relatives.

Question of size of Inspector's district and possibility of his exercising sufficient influence in it.

12370. (Mr. Gardiner.) As regards outdoor relief, having regard to the size of your district and the enormous number of claims on your time, is it possible for you to keep a watchful eye over the out-relief, and the methods under which it is given, and the condition of the people to whom it is given, and the adequacy or inadequacy of the amount ?—Not the details as to individuals, but I am meeting all the boards of guardians in my district. I must meet each of them once a year, and to some of them I go, if there is reason, repeatedly ; so I am now able to form an opinion of the class of their administration, and I have obtained returns as to the scale of their allowances. I look at the relieving officers' books, as to the scale of allowances and so on. I might, no doubt, know much more ; but I think I have a fair knowledge of them all.

12371. Do you think if you could give more time to a particular board, you could improve the level of administration in any way ?—I think the influence of an inspector on a board cannot help being rather in the interests of good administration, or at any rate of the administration which he considers good ; and the oftener he is able to be with them and to influence them, the better effect it ought to have.

12372. Would you say that your present district is the right size or too large ? Some inspectors have told us they think their districts are exactly the right size ; a good many have said that ?—My district is a very wide area indeed. At first I found a difficulty in it, when I went there some eight or nine years ago, especially as the pauperism was very considerable, and their methods were not so good as they have become in most places since ; but now by knowing where to go—I go, for instance for a month in Cornwall and work all round there, and I go for a fortnight, perhaps, to North Somerset and do that—I am able to do it. I think it is a district that is fairly workable by one man.

12373. You do not think an assistant inspector would be of advantage ?—I have not found the need of an assistant inspector.

Inspector's allowance for subsistence when absent from home.

12374. (Chairman.) You go to a certain county and make that your headquarters for a certain period, I understand ?—Very often.

12375. I assume you have a house where you permanently live ?—Yes, at Exeter.

12376. Are you given any allowance for the lodgings which you have to take ?—Yes, whenever I am away from home, I receive the usual allowance per night.

12377. Would that cover the expense ?—That reasonably covers the expense.

Question of provision of drugs by Medical officer.

12378. (Mr. Gardiner.) With reference to what you were saying to Dr. Downes, is it not a condition that is necessary, so far as outdoor medical relief, that the medical officer should supply the drugs ?—In some cases, but not in all.

12379. Is that a very few or a considerable number ?—I should say now that the guardians supply expensive drugs in a greater number of cases than the cases in which the medical officer supplies them.

12380. Do the guardians do it by orders on a dispensing chemist, where one is available, or is there a dispensary at the workhouse ?—Generally by orders on a chemist.

12381. I notice here you say the medical officers are very scantily paid in some cases. I thought if they had to provide their own drugs too, it would be rather serious from the point of view of the people receiving relief ?—Of late years the Local Government Board have always tried, as far as possible, on the appointment of a new medical officer, to get the guardians to supply the expensive drugs. Ordinary drugs the medical officers supply.

7 May, 1906.

Allegation of guardians dispensing relief to their own tenants.

12382. It is commonly stated that there are boards of guardians on which the guardians sit, who practically give outdoor relief to their own tenants. Have you ever seen that in your own experience?—No.

12383. You have never been able to prove such a case?—No, I have no case of that sort in my mind distinctly.

Lack of co-operation between hospitals and Poor Law infirmaries.

12384. As regards any co-operation between the general hospitals and infirmaries in large centres of population, has any such scheme been established at any large centre like Plymouth or Exeter, or where the county hospitals may be?—No, I think not. There are certain cases which are regarded as more fitting for the one, and others more fitting for the other, but I do not think there is any special co-operation between them.

12385. Are they so regarded by the subscribers or the guardians?—By both, I should say.

12386. I suppose practically if a person arrives at a hospital with an order or recommendation, if he belongs to the class that might go to the Poor Law infirmary, they are bound to take him in, are they not?—No doubt they are bound, but they might in some cases represent to the subscriber that this is a sort of case more fit for the Poor Law. I happen to be on the governing body of the county hospital at Exeter, and that is what we should do.

12387. When it is brought to your knowledge?—Yes.

12388. Have you an outdoor medical department at Exeter?—Not under the Poor-Law.

12389. Nor at Plymouth, so far as you know?—As to Plymouth, I am doubtful.

Question of out-relief to wage-earning women.

12390. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) There are a good many special industries carried on by women in your district, are there not?—A good many, especially about Yeovil, in Somerset.

12391. Is there any tendency to supplement the earnings by outdoor relief?—I think not.

12392. I notice both in Honiton and Yeovil, which are both centres of women's work, the outdoor relief stands very high?—I do not think that those two things are connected.

12393. You do not think the guardians give outdoor relief like that?—I do not mean to say that some of the women in Honiton to whom they give relief might not supplement it by a little bit of pillow-lace making, and so on, but I should not go further than that.

12394. You would not say for instance it is like the gloving in Leicester, which is said to be very largely supplemented by outdoor relief?—I do not think so. I am not aware that gloving is really very badly paid. The pay is not kept down by the granting of outdoor relief in addition to wages at all, I should say.

Effect of discontinuing out-relief in individual cases at Exeter.

12395. In paragraphs 13 and 14 you explain that you made some enquiries about the cases at Exeter, after they had been cut off from outdoor relief, with a view of seeing whether they suffered any hardship. Would it be possible to get any return of those cases to illustrate the point?—I scarcely think it would be a subject on which you could have a formal return.

12396. It is so exceedingly interesting; you say many of them who are receiving relief are now maintaining themselves?—Yes, that is the fact. I have not the least doubt of my information. I had it partly from the clerk of the guardians, who happened to be the relieving officer at one time, and partly from the clergymen of the different parishes, and others; but I doubt whether you could get any return that would be complete or worth having.

12397. You do not think if we sent down a special investigator we might get some report on it?—It is conceivable. Only recently I was talking to the clerk about it, and he said it is very remarkable indeed, and there are plenty of such cases. Some who were on the list are still living there; others have moved away from Exeter, gone to their relations, elsewhere, and so on.

12398. It would be important to ascertain?—I am quite sure if you thought proper to send down anybody there, the clerk would be in a position, with his special knowledge from having been himself a relieving officer, to help as much as possible to get the information you want.

12399. You speak in paragraph 25 of the inadequacy of the inquiries. Do they use case papers in many unions in your district?—They scarcely use them at all in my district.

Infrequenc of case-pa system in the distric

12400. Do they use them at Exeter?—They do not actually use case papers, but the relieving officers give very full particulars of the cases from their notebooks. So they do in a great many other unions, but we have scarcely come up to the case paper standard yet.

12401. And, of course, the particulars in the notebooks perish, they are not kept?—Yes. Case papers are very valuable, but we have been rather behindhand in Poor Law matters, and we are scarcely up to that refinement yet.

Evils of re stations.

12402. Are pay stations much used?—A good deal; the distances are so great.

12403. What do you think of them; are they desirable?—I would much sooner do without them. There are one or two abuses that are likely to come from them. Sometimes the people send for their allowances, and pay a penny, or some small sum for getting them. Sometimes children are sent to get them, and it is an uncommonly bad object lesson for a child to see the piles of shillings and half-crowns that are distributed all round for doing nothing. But on the whole it seems to me that pay-stations are a necessity unless you increase the staff of relieving officers to a point that the guardians would not like at all.

Economy rural guardians.

12404. I noticed when you were here before, on the subject of increasing the number of relieving officers, you said that the farmers objected to spending the rates so much?—Yes.

12405. Does that apply all round? Do they object to out-relief, and do they try to restrict it?—No, not enough; but there is antagonism to a particular salary of, say, £100 a year, as a new charge on the rates. That is one certain sum that they must object to. It is a little different to them when the question is whether they shall be generous, as they call it, to this or that individual applicant for relief, and what they call their generosity, which is often very bad for the community, in particular cases outweighs their desire to be economical.

12406. (Mr. Gardiner.) Does the clerk of the Exeter guardians give the whole of his time to the duties of his office?—Yes. He is Superintendent Registrar besides, but nothing else.

Migration labourers from the country a its effect.

12407. (Mr. Chandler.) You speak of the depopulation that is proceeding so rapidly in the agricultural districts. I gather that the class of people that would be leaving those districts are the labourers, the poorer class?—Yes.

12408. Should I be right in assuming that the majority of them are attracted to the dockyard towns, Plymouth and Devonport?—Yes.

12409. Largely there?—Sometimes. A good many of them go to London. It is the able-bodied and the young that go, and leave the old and incapable behind.

12410. That is, the larger towns attract the agricultural labourer?—That is so.

12411. That accounts, I suppose, largely for the increasing pauperism in Plymouth?—I think not. It is the able-bodied people who go to Plymouth, and the able-bodied are not the people who furnish pauperism; there is not much able-bodied pauperism in Plymouth, although perhaps there is more there than elsewhere. I do not think the pauperism is dependent upon that. If a town is rapidly increasing, the people who come to it are the able-bodied, and not the class who appeal to the rates for relief.

12412. Has there been a distress committee formed in Plymouth under this Unemployed Workmen's Act?—Yes; they formed it because they had to form it.

12413. Was there no need for it?—There had been no very exceptional distress there.

Effect of discharges from dock yards.

12414. Do the discharges which frequently take place in the dockyards in large numbers tend to throw work on the guardians?—I asked that question of the Town Clerk of Devonport when I was seeing him about the Unemployed Act some time ago, and he said, No. For instance, a number of men, mostly Northerners, come for a special job; they do the job, and then they go away. People talk of these discharges as if they were sudden convulsions, but they are anticipated. The men know that they are not to be there for ever, when the dock is made or whatever it is is built.

12415. You think the majority of them leave the district and go back to their own places ?—The majority of them do. Of course there are some inferior labourers (not the skilled labourer or the tough navvy), who are the hangers-on, who do throw themselves on the rates.

istance of fusal of ork by amps.

12416. You gave us an instance when you were here before of a case at Wellington, where a gentleman offered six tramps employment, and only one of them accepted. Can you tell us what class of employment it was ?—It was quite unskilled labour, as I understand, it was mostly moving timber.

12417. Rather heavy work ?—Rather heavy work ; but a great many of the tramps that one sees in the tramps' wards are men who look capable of doing heavy work.

12418. (Mr. Loch.) In paragraph 11 of your memorandum you say with regard to Taunton, "The effect has been largely to encourage friendly societies and industrial assurances" ; could evidence be got on that point of a very direct description ?—I took that statement from a paper that was read by the clerk to the Taunton guardians at one of the Poor Law conferences. I think that the clerk who read that paper would be able to give any information that the Commission might desire on the subject.

ules for re- f formu- ted by Poor aw Con- rence.

12419. In the paragraph just above that you refer to certain formulated rules of relief ; there were, I think, four points in those rules, the first being that able-bodied persons should not have relief except in the house ?—Yes, that is so. Perhaps I may read those rules which were settled by the Poor Law Conference after discussion with all the unions in the district. When they were adopted by the Poor Law Conference, they were circulated, and certain Boards of Guardians have adopted them, some en bloc and some with modifications. These are the rules :—"(1) An able-bodied person shall be relieved only in the workhouse, either alone or together with such of the family as may be resident with him, or her, except in the case of a widow with one child or more dependent on her, and during cases of sickness of any member of the family. (2) Out-relief shall not be given for more than four weeks on the first application, and then only after the case has been visited by the relieving officer, the date of whose visit shall be recorded in the Application and Report Book. During such period full information shall be obtained by the relieving officer and the guardians of the parish to which the applicant belongs with regard to the character and circumstances of the applicant." That, you see, brings in the guardians of the parish ; they are to have a hand in it too, as well as the relieving officer ; and that has its advantages. "(3) Out-relief may be granted only to such aged and infirm persons as (a) are deserving at the time of application ; (b) have shown signs of thrift ; (c) have no relations legally or morally bound to, and able to, support them ; (d) are unable to obtain sufficient assistance from charitable sources ; (e) are desirous of living out of the workhouse and can properly be taken care of. (4) Out-relief when given shall be adequate to the needs of the case, regard being had to the circumstances of the locality. (5) In no case of application for relief by adults under seventy years of age not having children dependent upon them shall out-relief be given unless a certificate of temporary or permanent disability to work is produced from a medical officer of the district. (6) Relief shall not be given for more than three months without revision, previously to which the relieving officer shall make full inquiry into the circumstances of each case ; and in order to facilitate this, the revisions shall be spread over the whole year." That introduced an important reform, because they had been in the habit of bringing up the cases thirty or forty or fifty at a time for the whole union, perhaps, all on one day, or half of the union all on one day, so there was no chance of inquiring into individual cases, and "renewed," "renewed" was simply put as fast as the chairman could write the word and initial the cases. Here it is secured that there shall be some sort of real re-examination of each case. The seventh rule is, "All persons applying for relief shall, except for good reason, appear before the board, unless a medical certificate is produced showing that they cannot attend."

12420. You have rather broadened the Poor Law position in those rules in some ways, because you take in relations who are morally liable ?—Yes.

12421. How would you raise the money from them in a particular instance ?—You cannot. All you can say is, "If your relations are to have relief, they must be relieved in the workhouse." Then people will be ashamed of having their relations relieved in the workhouse, whereas they would not be ashamed in letting them have a quiet 2s. 6d. or 3s. or 3s. 6d. a week, which they think is known to nobody and is no disgrace to the family. Then, to go on with the rules, the eighth rule is, "No out-relief shall be given to women who are deserted, or whose husbands are in prison, or undergoing penal servitude, except under special circumstances. (9) No permanent out relief shall be given to persons who have been resident in the union less than two years. (10) Out-relief shall not be given in respect of any idiot or imbecile." I am sorry to say they do not carry that out nearly enough. "(11) Where money has been received from any club or society on the death of a person, out-relief shall for a time be refused to any applicant dependent on such person, if such money has not been properly expended." Those are the rules ; they are rather a counsel of perfection, of course.

Effect of refusal of out-relief on relations not legally liable to maintain.

12422. To revert to the question of the relatives ; apart from offering the house in the way you have described, does the clerk try to raise money from the relatives who are only morally liable ?—No, I think not.

Possibility of more generally securing maintenance by relations not legally liable.

12423. Would it be ultra vires to do that ?—I have heard this done—the relieving officer has been instructed to say to a brother, "Here is your sister; you do not want her to be in the workhouse, surely ?" The relieving officer has made inquiries, and now and then the brother has consented to keep his sister. I have actually known cases of that sort ; I will not say they are numerous.

12424. Do you think there is scope for an extension of the normal work of the Poor Law authorities in this direction, that is to say, that, as a rule, if there are rich relatives the clerk should write to them ?—I think it might be well for communications to be made somehow, but I am not sure wehther they should not be more or less informal communications.

12425. You know that in dealing with cases of distress outside the Poor Law, when they are long-continuing cases relations who are only morally liable, frequently do a very great deal in response to persuasion ?—I have understood that.

12426. So that apparently if we were to accept the limitations of legal responsibility in regard to the Poor Law, we should be omitting to take advantage of that feeling which is equally strong in favour of helping relatives ?—Quite so.

Co-operation between charities and the Poor Law.

12427. You have referred to concurrent charitable work which might be of service to the board of guardians ; would you prefer the guardians to take up the line that I have just been referring to, or would you prefer that cases in which the relations are morally liable should be left to charitable persons to deal with ?—I should be inclined to leave those cases to charitable persons to deal with. Assuming that there were some such society as I vaguely contemplate in your area to deal with meritorious cases, I should imagine that the first thing the society would do, would be to say, "Mary Smith has got a very well-to-do brother, why should we not try him ?"—and they would put some pressure on him. I should leave that to the society, rather than try the direct pressure from the guardians.

Participation of guardians in work of enquiring into Poor Law cases.

12428. There is another point on your rules, which is that the guardians themselves are to take part in the work, that is to say, you would treat them not merely as a board, but as so many individuals who are interested in the same subject, and who would therefore personally work at it ?—Yes, being the representatives of that parish and having local and personal knowledge, they might properly correct and supplement that of the relieving officer. I am all against guardians having to act as both witnesses and judges in their own cases. But it is not a bad thing that guardians should at the same time take a personal interest in cases and should give their view to their colleagues as well as the relieving officer giving his view.

Mr. H. Preston-Thomas.

7 May 1906.

12429. Do you find, as a matter of fact, that the guardians do trouble about individual cases in the manner you describe?—Yes, they do, a good deal.

12430. Spending time upon them outside the duties of the board itself?—Yes, certainly.

12431. Are you under the impression that that is done generally in the country?—I think it is so in the country districts, and in some town districts as well. I have been surprised very often to see how guardians look almost on themselves as if they were in charge of a street or of a certain place, just as the people at Elberfeld do.

Possibility of organising charity in co-operation with the Poor Law.

12432. Are you inclined to suggest then that, parallel to the Poor Law authority, there might be something like an organisation of charity as a recognised system?—I think I should like to see that. I have not heard of any plan for establishing that, but it always seems to me that for the meritorious cases you want something beyond the hard and fast rules of the Poor Law, and that when you have got that you could make the rules of the Poor Law rather more hard and fast.

12433. Might I put one or two points by way of suggestions to you. For instance, do you think that the inquiry officer appointed by a board of guardians, working somewhat on the lines you have mentioned, might make the inquiries, and that the cases might be afterwards considered by such an organisation of charitable relief as there might be created?—I think that would be an advantage.

12434. Of course you see the expense of it would be much less?—Yes.

12435. Do you think that a society working in this fashion might have a kind of status and recognition as doing this type of work? I ask the question, because, whilst boards of guardians are elected from period to period, and therefore in a manner there must always be a board of guardians, charitable people, who are under no such rule, may disappear in the course of two or three years society and all. It seems to me very difficult to make a suggestion with regard to charity, unless something of that continuity of work and responsibility which is assumed to apply to boards of guardians may also be assumed to apply to charitable institutions?—The difficulty that strikes one at the first blush as regards giving them a special status, or constituting them in any formal or official way, is that the essence of charity is largely its spontaneity, and that you do not want to regulate that. If charity is put in the leading strings of Acts of Parliament and official regulations, I am not sure that charity will not lose one of its chief features.

12436. But suppose it were simply recognised as having a certain object, and that it had a certain assistance, we will say, through the inquiry officer or the relieving officer, and there were no other regulations practically, so that they had full elbow room for development; then do you think that it might work out?—Then, I think it would work out well.

Possible utilisation by Charities of Relieving Officers' enquiries.

12437. Would you see any difficulty in the relieving officer making these inquiries for such a combination as I have suggested at the present time without further order or instruction?—I should not like to put a relieving officer under the control of any other body except his immediate masters. I fancy I must have understood wrongly that your original question was limited to this, that having made up a dossier of certain information about a special case, the relieving officer had come to the conclusion, and perhaps his guardians had come to the conclusion, that it was a meritorious case, but a case more for a charitable body to deal with than for them; and that then he should be able to hand over the information that he had got up to that time, or that the guardians should communicate it, to the charitable society, and it would be of use to them for the basis of their action. I should not be inclined to go further than that.

12438. I was contemplating a step further, namely, that when they had the case in their hands, there might be further details wanting which they could not well get without the assistance of some officer, and then in that case the relieving officer might, to that extent, overlap in this new organisation of relief which I have suggested?—I should be rather shy of giving them any control over the relieving officer. He has got his own masters, and whatever further information they want for their own purposes they must get for themselves; at any rate, that would be my view.

12439. You would not allow a case to be referred back for particulars to be obtained by the relieving officer?—If they like to ask any question of the guardians I would allow them, of course, to do that, and leave it to the guardians to deal with the question as they like, whether by saying to the relieving officer, Find out so-and-so, or otherwise. But, as a rule, I would stop there, and if the case is to be transferred, and they take the case up, or at any rate were prepared in the first instance to take it up, I should tell the relieving officer that he had done his work as to that case.

Proposal to utilise voluntary effort for Poor Law work.

12440. You clearly are of opinion then that the charitable organisation and the Poor Law organisation should be side by side, but independent one of the other? That would be my opinion.

12441. Therefore you would be against what is called the Elberfeld system, so far by which unpaid voluntary visitors should be doing work under the authority?—Yes. I did not mean to blend them in the way you suggest.

12442. (Chairman.) Would you be opposed to the idea of unpaid people working under the recognised Poor Law authority?—I prefer the regular work of the relieving officer, supplemented by any information that an individual guardian can give.

Validity of principle of ineligibility of relief.

12443. (Mr. Loch.) There are one or two other points arising out of your evidence which one would like to take up. Do you think that the principle of Poor Law relief, or the so-called principle, that the condition of the recipient should be less eligible than that of the independent labourer, is practically accepted in the rules we have referred to, or is it set at naught?—I think it is practically accepted.

12444. That is to say, what is done in the matter of out-relief does not make the position of the recipient better than his neighbour's position?—That is so.

12445. Therefore you could accept that still as the basis, so to speak, of the administration?—I accept that still as the fundamental principle of Poor Law administration.

Proposed increased supervision or inspection of out-relief.

12446. With regard to insuring that inquiry should be made up to a certain point—and those rules, of course, lay great stress on inquiry—do you feel that the details of investigation are sufficiently controlled by the present organisation of the Poor Law administration? The inspectors evidently have their hands very full, and it has been suggested to us that they have not the time to look into all these details?—If it were possible for the inspectors to take a larger personal share in the supervision of the work, it would probably make relieving officers work better. It is absolutely impossible if the inspector has nearly fifty unions, as he generally has, for him to take any large share as to seeing what the work of individual relieving officers is. I consider, speaking generally, that the present system is good, that there has been a wonderful social improvement under it, and that the Poor Law Act has been on the whole an extraordinary success. I do not regard it as some people do. It has failed upon particular points, but on the whole I think it is an uncommonly good Act, and a good system.

12447. Would you think it would assist you in the policy which you have described here, if you had at your disposal an assistant who could pay special attention to the matter of investigation, with a view to raising the methods of it to a higher pitch? There is, of course, in the rural unions no chance of having cross-visitors or anything of that kind?—No.

12448. That is out of the question, so if there is to be anything equivalent to that, it must be in a different way?—It must. There would be no doubt increased efficiency if there were more supervision.

Type of Relieving Officer and effect thereof of Superannuation Act.

12449. As to the relieving officers themselves, do you find that the appointments that are made are often made simply owing to the fact that members of the board know an individual applicant for the office, and he is appointed apart from his capacity for the particular work?—No doubt local knowledge and local influence have a great deal to do with it. On the other hand, I think as a rule the relieving officers are a very good class, and that we get men who do their work surprisingly well.

Question of prescribing qualifications for Relieving Officers.

12450. Do you think that the class is being improved as time goes on?—Certainly—there is no doubt about that. I feel quite sure that the Superannuation Act is giving us a much better class of officers from year to year. There is a very large number of candidates for each appointment of the sort, and on the whole we get very good men now.

12451. Do you think it would be of any service if the Local Government Board were to issue in a kind of Order all the conditions which a man of that type should fulfil, so that persons not fulfilling those conditions should, as a general understanding, not be appointed?—Do you mean that each candidate should possess certain qualifications?

12452. That he should possess certain qualifications as to ability and education, and certain moral qualifications too?—I have been rather surprised to see that men who have had no previous knowledge of the Poor Law, and who have had no work akin to that of a relieving officer, have over and over again, in a very short time, by the help of the various manuals that there are for instructing relieving officers, and by the help that they get from the clerk to the guardians, become very efficient officers. Of course in theory one would suppose that a man ought to pass an examination, at any rate in the elementary principles of the Poor Law or in the elementary principles of relief, and in his duties; but as a matter of fact, he does get to learn them very quickly, and learns them well. So, if you ask me whether I have met with a general need for such a test, I can only say that it has not been apparent.

Scales of out-relief.

12453. With regard to outdoor relief, is that given according to scales?—Yes.

12454. Do you agree with that system?—It is a rough and ready system. The scale is generally a basis rather than a hard and fast rule, and it is departed from in particular instances. In the case of some scales, where they are very small indeed, I have tried over and over again, and with some success in nearly all the instances, to get the scales raised. It is desirable perhaps that you should have a particular scale as a sort of basis to work upon.

Dearth of Nurses and pensions as a remedy.

12455. To turn to another question, the question of the nurses, of which we have heard, the want of nurses is very great, is it not?—It is very considerable indeed.

12456. Your proposal is that they should be able after twenty years to get a pension of £30?—Yes.

12457. And you think, I gather, that that would actually create a demand for those posts?—I think that would attract an immense number of people to the nursing profession and to the workhouses. I think, also, that a good deal might be done by facilitating the training of nurses in workhouses. At present, I believe, the rule is that you cannot train nurses sufficiently, at any rate, to attract an immense number of people to the nursing profession and to the workhouse. I think, also, that a good deal might be done by facilitating the training of nurses in workhouses. At present, I believe, the rule is that you cannot train nurses (sufficiently, at any rate, to qualify them for the post of superintendent nurse), unless there is an infirmary with a resident medical officer; and various other points are laid down. I should like to see it made rather more easy to train nurses. In two unions of my district they do train nurses, and I believe they train them excellently. There is no rule about it, but the medical officer and the superintendent nurse in each case have put their heads together. They do not mind taking a good deal of trouble, for which they are not specially paid, and so they train excellent nurses who, in their little way, are meeting the demand. I wish that practice could be more extended, if possible.

Need for facilitating training of nurses in Workhouses.

12458. But I suppose the extension of it does not lie actually with the poor law, except so far as the conditions can be adapted to those laid down by some other body, a quasi medical body?—I suppose so.

12459. Would you be prepared to say that terms might be arrived at by which a year at a hospital was required, and possibly two elsewhere; not in an infirmary, perhaps, but generally in poor law work?—My own notion has been rather not so much to insist on the hospital training as to insist on some training in workhouses where a good training can be given. Workhouse nursing—I am speaking, of course, of country workhouses—is rather a special business, and I believe the nurses who are trained for it in these two workhouses are admirably suited for their duties.

12460. Do you not run a great risk of creating another type of nurse for a possibly less acceptable professional position, namely, that of a poor law nurse?—It may be, but then at present you get them without any training at all. You have to take some young woman who has perhaps attended one or two people in illnesses, and you have to appoint her because you cannot get anyone else to appoint. That happens every day. Then the appointment is submitted to the Local Government Board, and the Local Government Board has to say, "You must try her for three months, and if we get a favourable report at the end of the three months from your doctor, well and good—we will sanction the appointment." That happens constantly. We are obliged to have those, simply because there is nobody else to come forward as a candidate; but they have had no experience.

12461. I take it for granted that your own suggestion might be adopted of a pension, whilst at the same time trying to find a basis which would satisfy, if it were possible, the medical claims and keep the nurse in the rank of nurses generally?—It might possibly be desirable from that point of view to insist upon some hospital training; but I am not sure.

Sanction of Local Government Board to appointment of nurses.

12462. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Is the sanction of the Local Government Board essential before a nurse can be appointed?—Yes.

12463. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to obtaining the money from relations and others, do you think that the present method of taking the case into the county court is quick and sharp enough? Would it not be better to take it before a magistrate, and bring it under the system of the Bastardy Acts?—I have heard complaints that the present system is cumbrous.

Unsatisfactory procedure for recovery of maintenance.

12464. Is it the clerks who complain?—Yes.

12465. Is there any very large amount raised in your district from relations of normal cases—I do not refer to lunacy cases?—I should rather put it that there are a very large proportion of cases in which people who ought to pay, undertake to pay and do not pay, but get into arrear, and then the guardians wipe off the debt.

Publication of particulars of arrears of maintenance.

12466. Could it not be pushed to a better position by the guardians being required to make an annual report of some kind, and to give some return on those matters, so that it would then become a public question?—Are you thinking of a return showing the arrears which they have lost?

12467. Yes, a return as to the non-payments by relations?—Some of them do publish statements showing exactly the amounts in arrear. There is one of my unions where I think it has had some effect. It is a badly administered union, which I think I have brought before the Commission on a previous occasion. It is the union of Clutton which has every circumstance in its favour, and yet has an extraordinarily high amount of pauperism. There they took to publishing the arrears. In some cases the arrears were so great that of the amount payable in a particular half-year there would be only about a quarter paid. This incited them to some reform, with the result that I had a letter from the clerk only the other day to say that I should be glad to hear that in a large number of cases, in fact in most of the cases, they were now getting the contributions properly.

12468. That was the result really of their publishing a report and seeing how they stood?—I think so, and also of attention having been called to it publicly at their meetings.

Proposal to make Boards of Guardians publish annual reports.

12469. Do you think it would be a good thing if under statute Boards of Guardians had to make an annual report?—I do not know that many people pay very much attention to annual statutory reports.

12470. You, on the other hand, have sometimes effected the changes that you have to bring about in your district largely by the circulation of information?—Yes, I think so.

Mr. H. Preston-Thomas.

7 May 1906.

12471. It was with that idea that I thought the local reports might also serve?—It is possible. I always send them the statistics of their union once a year, and those are always pretty freely discussed, and I think they very often lead to some amendment.

Need for consolidation of Poor Law Statutes and Orders.

12472. Do you think it would be of service to have a very simple statement, as far as it could be made simple, of the statutes and orders, for circulation to new members of the Boards?—I think something of that sort is very much wanted, when you consider the extraordinary complexity, and the thousands of pages of statutes and of orders that the Poor Law and the regulations under it are now comprised in. If they could possibly be boiled down, it would be a great advantage.

12473. Then you would be in favour of consolidation, if possible?—Yes, if possible.

Operation of Unemployed Workmen's Act in the district.

12474. Now I want to ask you about the Distress Committees and the policy of the Unemployed Workmen's Act. Do you think it is a good or a bad policy to start a concurrent committee on statutory lines with that of the Poor Law guardians for the relief of distress in a district?—I can only answer that in this way: I have only one such committee in my district, and my experience therefore is very limited indeed. That one committee I do not think would have been constituted but for the fact that being a borough council it had to be constituted. I do not think it would have been necessary. As a matter of fact, that particular council had off their own bat some six or eight years ago created something of the same sort of department for dealing with distress, and they had £300 or £400 remaining as a balance which they had not expended. When this new plan came in, they did not think there was very serious distress, and they did not make any effort to raise subscriptions, but they applied their £300 and they gave some work. The whole thing was not on a big scale, and I do not think it enables me to speak as to that point.

Operation of Relief to School Children Order in the district.

12475. With regard to another point of relief on new lines, namely, the order respecting underfed children, are you in favour of development on the lines laid down in that order by which the child becomes in a manner the claimant to relief and the father has to pay or may be prosecuted?—The Under-fed Children Order has scarcely been utilised at all in my district, and I have not had occasion therefore to express any opinion or to try and influence the guardians on the subject. Speaking generally, I believe no representations have come from the school authorities, and therefore that Order has not been particularly operative in my district. As a matter of fact, the people who do not feed their children in the country are generally drunken people, and people of such habits that any chance of getting any recovery of the cost from them seems to me to be almost out of the question.

12476. The Order therefore has not been turned to account in places like Devonport, Plymouth and so on?—No.

12477. Practically it is a dead letter?—I have not heard of any representations being made under it.

The ethics of old age pensions as compared with out-relief.

12478. In regard to old people, do you think that they should have any kind of statutory right to old age relief, on the lines adopted in Denmark and elsewhere?—It has always seemed to me that old age pensions are outdoor relief without its restrictions, and I have never understood myself why it is supposed to be a disgrace to have an allowance fom the rates and not a disgrace to have an allowance from the taxes.

Need for harder work for "ins-and-outs" in the workhouse.

12479. With regard to another difficult point, the ins-and-outs, would you be prepared to alter the law as it now stands in regard to their continued detention in the house, or their punishment for continual recurrence to the house, or in any other way?—I have found very considerable use in the last modification of the Order, under which they may practically be detained for a week. That I think in most of the cases has dealt with the matter satisfactorily. The way to deal with people who might support themselves, but who go to the workhouse and worry everybody, is to make them work uncommonly hard in the workhouse, so that they shall not want to go there again. That is what I always tell the masters.

12480. Then practically the cure would lie in strict workhouse administration?—I think so.

12481. And not merely by prosecution, for instance, under the Vagrancy Act?—Yes. I think the work in the workhouses is made far too easy. The work in the Swiss workhouses and in their forced labour institutions is an entirely different thing from the labour, in the first place in workhouses, and in the second place in prisons, in England.

12482. Of course you know that the difficulty is in providing suitable work in town workhouses, at any rate as they are managed now?—Yes; but in the Swiss institutions they devise lots of industries in which the people are made to work hard all day. If there was more hard work in workhouses, I sometimes think that we should not have any loafers there. We have not very many of the able-bodied loafers now, but still there is a certain number of these men, who go to the workhouses because they can get enough to eat and they can get properly lodged, and yet have to do very little work for it.

12483. Then you would be inclined to reorganise the workhouses, even in the towns, so as to meet this need?—I think something might be done by taking example from abroad in that way, though I must say I have very few workhouses where we have able-bodied loafers.

Evil of other than Poor Law expenditure being defrayed out of the poor rate.

12484. To turn to another point, the financial side, do you think that it would be a good change if the poor law authority collected the poor rate only, and that the poor rate should not include the police and other items?—I think that would be very useful indeed. People are always complaining of the increase in the poor rate just at the time the relief of the poor, indoor and out, is going down. The decrease of the cost of poor relief, indoor and out, in the last seven or eight years in my district has been very great. The out-door relief has gone down £29,000 a year, but balancing the increase on the indoor relief and so on, there is a saving of, I think, speaking broadly, about £10,000 a year; and yet I constantly hear people say on my boards of guardians, "There is always an increase!" "Another increase of the poor rate!"—and so it is an increase of what is called the poor rate, but it is not in the least an increase in pauperism or in the cost of the relief of the poor.

Effect of lunatic gra

12485. To take the point of the grants from the Exchequer, are you in favour of the 4s. grant for lunatics?—No: I think it is most wasteful. I believe it creates lunatics.

12486. Would you be in favour of continued Exchequer help in some form towards poor relief?—Yes, but I do not like that form of it at all.

Proposal t transfer all imbeciles, etc., to ju diction of county council.

12487. Would you be prepared rather to make a grant for general purposes to some authority, like a county authority, to distribute subject to good report: or would you have any other suggestion for dealing with this 4s. grant, and also with the other statutory payments that are made to the Poor Law authorities?—I should like to turn all the imbeciles over to the county to deal with. We have tried over and over again to discriminate between imbeciles who are mischievous and a nuisance inside workhouses, and imbeciles who are not mischievous and are not a nuisance: and the statute has tried to discriminate between them. The magistrates and boards of guardians disregard the statute. It provides expressly that no imbecile shall be in a workhouse if he cannot be kept separate from the sane inmates, unless it is unnecessary for his convenience or for their convenience that he should be so kept. That is generally disregarded, and very offensive and mischievous imbeciles are not kept apart. I do not care so much for the imbeciles themselves; I am thinking of the other people in the workhouses. We always hear about the interests of the imbeciles and whether they will or will not be improved in the workhouses. I am sorry for the sane inmates. It is very hard if I have to go to a workhouse in my old age that I should have to associate with idiots offensive in body and mischievous in mind and playing all sorts of tricks. They make the lives of some of the people miserable.

12488. Would you propose to entirely separate lunatics, imbeciles, and idiots from poor relief?—Yes; I would give them over to the county council entirely.

Question of grants from county council in aid of Poor Law expenditure.

12489. With regard to the other statutory grants that are now made for officers, would you be prepared to give those up, or would you make the grants in some general form with a view to improvement in administration?—I should like them to go from the county council. It is rather a question as to whether you should put on that particular pressure of a money fine, if people do not do what you like. I do not quite approve of that. The money fine that I mean consists in not allowing a grant when a particular officer is not paid what you want to have him paid. My remedy would be for the Local Government Board to decide, with rather more authority than they have hitherto exercised, as to that one thing. It has always been thought that the amount of payment is almost entirely a matter for the guardians, but I should prefer that, in a great many cases where it is plainly insufficient, the Local Government Board should say, "We refuse to sanction because the salary is too small."

Proposed intervention of Local Government Board in cases where salaries of Poor Law officers are inadequate.

12490. Would you be in favour, in the case of the medical men, of something like a tariff based on the number of beds in an infirmary, so as to get a basis that might seem fair to them?—Yes, if any fair basis could be got which the Local Government Board might adopt broadly in considering whether they should approve or refuse.

Small percentage of pauperism at Penzance and its cause.

12491. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) I see that you instance the case of Penzance as being a union where the ratio of pauperism is comparatively small; and I rather gather that you attribute that, at any rate to some extent, to the fact that there the population is a fishing population. Is one correct in deducing from that that there is more of a spirit of independence and more of a sense of duty still remaining there as between parents and children, and children and parents than in other parts of your district?—It is very difficult to give a reason for it; Penzance is exceedingly puzzling in that respect. It is the westernmost union, and it is dependent on two things mainly, on fishing and on flower and vegetable growing. In one parish that I know, Sennen, they have not had a pauper on the rolls for many years, simply because there the widow has shares in a boat, and the sons have shares in a boat, and they have certain arrangements as to the catch. It is the one place where the gray mullet habitually come, and where they can get a haul that may even be worth some hundreds of pounds. There are certain arrangements which prevent the creation of paupers, and then also the people are very keen on supporting their relations. There is more dislike to poor law relief there than elsewhere. Besides, in the union generally there is a large amount of work for very old people in the gardens, and also on the strawberry beds at one time of the year. They fix the school holidays there with reference to the strawberry picking time, and so on. There are various things which largely influence the pauperism there; but it is a very curious case, and I do not feel able to explain it entirely.

12492. Is the dislike for, and aversion to, pauperism a decreasing and diminishing factor? I gather that it may be from what you tell us of the laxity of the administration?—I would not say that it is a diminishing factor. They keep very much to themselves and they keep to the traditions of years. They have a notion there, more than in most other places, that they ought not to be paupers. I am afraid I cannot explain why it is, but there it is.

Comparative merits of administering relief by committees or by whole boards.

12493. As regards the boards of guardians, I do not think from what you tell us that you approve of the administration generally; can you tell us whether, as a rule, the relief is administered by the board sitting together or in committee?—Partly one and partly the other; generally, I think, in committee.

12494. Is it your opinion that when they are sitting in committee matters are managed more satisfactorily than when they are sitting in a body?—That is difficult to say. It is really impossible when there is a large number of cases for the full board to deal with all of them. As a matter of convenience, having regard to the time which the guardians can devote to the work, they must have committees; and when you get committees you do not quite get equality of administration, because you will get one committee on which the strongest man will be for out-relief and you will get another committee on which the strongest man will be against it, and in committees it is the strongest man that governs the committee as a rule.

12495. I think you are also of opinion that at present they do not pay the attention that they ought to the advice of the relieving officers; but from what you have said to Mr. Loch I gather that that probably is a matter which is being remedied, owing to the fact that the class of relieving officers is now much improved?—I think it is improving, certainly. The particular case that I had in my mind where they are not paying sufficient attention to the relieving officers is Plymouth, which is a case where the business is not transacted on strict lines at all, and where the procedure leaves much to be desired. I would not say much against most of the unions in my district. I think on the whole they have been getting the relief steadily down, and that after their lights they do a great deal as a rule. But there are two or three where the relief is badly administered, and I should say Plymouth is one of them.

Mr. H. Preston-Thomas.

7 May, 1906.

Disregard by guardians of Relieving Officers' advice at Plymouth and elsewhere.

12496. If the relieving officer were a thoroughly efficient official, his duty would be to give a full and particular account of each individual case when brought up for relief, and the guardians I imagine would be inclined to follow the suggestion which he made as to the amount of relief to be given, would they not; and would that not be the best method of administration?—Yes, and that is very largely done. In Plymouth, which I have been speaking of, they have not got enough relieving officers, and I have been advising them for some time to appoint one or two additional men, but they have not done so yet.

Proposed register of workhouse nurses.

12497. As regards the nursing in the workhouses, has it ever occurred to you that in order to meet the difficulties of getting nurses and to improve the qualifications of the nurses, it might be a good thing to have a register of nurses for workhouse purposes?—I have not heard it suggested.

Comparative unpopularity of workhouse nursing.

12498. I gather that in England the nursing in workhouses is by no means popular on the part of the nurses, and that they do not like the workhouse work?—There is an enormous demand for nurses in workhouses, in hospitals, in districts, and for private nursing and Army nursing, indeed the demand is greater than the supply, so that they naturally do not take to what is the most unpleasant sort of nursing—the nursing that has no interesting cases in it, which consists mainly in keeping old people alive and clean. That is the most unpopular of all the different classes of nursing, and I have heard it complained of as monotonous.

12499. You would not, I take it, agree with the view, which I think has been stated by some of the superintendents of the Queen's Jubilee nurses, that training in a workhouse or a poorhouse is sometimes the most efficient training that can be got, because of the great variety of cases and of the numerous chronic cases which they have to look after and care for?—I am speaking rather of my small workhouses, and I know little of the large infirmaries which have some hundreds of inmates. They got lots of chronic cases, and have to deal with bed sores, paralysis, and so on; but as to variety, I should say that there is very little.

Method of recovery of maintenance and loan relief.

12500. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Did I understand you to say that you had complaints on behalf of the clerks as to a difficulty in recovering relief from relatives?—They have said that the proceedings are somewhat cumbrous.

12501. Did they at all explain why?—I am afraid I cannot say.

12502. You are, of course, aware that the amount is recoverable summarily before Justices; and, therefore, it ought to be a simple process, ought it not?—I think sometimes they have a difficulty in recovering it in the County Court.

12503. That would be as to the amount of relief given on loan and not as to the amount recoverable from relatives, would it not? Relief given on loan is recoverable in the County Court, but contributions by relatives are recoverable summarily?—Then I am afraid I must have misunderstood that.

Removal of imbeciles from workhouse.

12504. On the question of imbeciles, you are aware perhaps that there is some difference of opinion about whether they should be all taken out of the workhouses? Some of the witnesses who have come before us have said that some of them are very useful in the rural workhouses for doing certain work, such as cleaning, sweeping, and so forth, and that there would be some difficulty in getting that work done if the imbeciles were all cleared out; would you agree in that view?—I quite agree that some imbeciles do useful work, but I think that that fact is not to be held to outweigh the discomfort which the general presence of imbeciles in workhouses causes to the people who are not imbeciles.

Mr. H. Preston-Thomas.

7 May 1906.

12505. It might mean, I suppose, more paid officers?—It might.

Difficulties as to making the county the area for indoor-relief.

12506. To turn to another matter, it has been suggested by one of the witnesses that it might be desirable to have very much larger areas for the administration of relief; for instance, that the county might be taken as the area for the purpose of indoor relief, and that a separate authority might be elected for the county to administer indoor relief, whereas outdoor relief should be administered perhaps by district councils, the charge being borne by the smaller area; would you have any view upon that matter?—I do not know whether it contemplates the suppression of some workhouses.

12507. That scheme contemplates the classification of workhouses, so that a particular class could be sent to one workhouse and other classes to other workhouses?—That, of course, involves some people being sent a considerable distance from their own homes, and it involves the splitting up of families, for one member of the family might be sent to one workhouse and another to another. Then I suppose in some shape, form, or kind, it would go to the county authority. Now, what with all their functions at present, I believe the country gentlemen are complaining that the county councils are beginning to have too much to do, and that their back is not unlimited for the burdens to be placed on it.

12508. It is suggested that that difficulty about distance could be got over, because the facilities for locomotion are now so great; does that seem to you a sufficient way of meeting it?—I think not; because the people who visit are people who cannot pay much for locomotion, and the distances in many cases would be very considerable. I have known many cases where a woman's daughter comes to see her in the workhouse, being brought in on market day by some kindly farmer, who lives near her, in his market cart. I happened to be at Helston on their last Flora day. That is a very old institution, which has been going on for a century or two. They all dance round the streets, and on on. The whole neighbourhood goes to Helston to see this dancing and singing and there are cheap excursions of all sorts. That day I was at the workhouse, and it was thronged by people who had come in from distant parts of the union to see their relations and friends. They told me it was always so, and that the people took advantage of such opportunities. You would not have them coming like that if the workhouse was not in their own town, but thirty or forty miles away.

12509. Would you think there would be any difficulty in getting a proper visitation of institutions, if it were under an authority with an area so large as that, say, of a county?—I think it might be a difficulty.

12510. (Chairman.) The objection that you urge as regards consolidation and convenience would not apply with equal force to towns as to rural districts?—No.

Advisability of making union and borough boundaries coterminous.

12511. I assume you see no objection to the boundaries of municipal boroughs and the boundaries of boards of guardians in municipal boroughs being made coterminous, if possible?—No. I believe the policy of the Local Government Board has been as much as possible to make those coterminous.

12512. And to have, if possible, only one board of guardians in an area?—Yes.

12513. Is Stonehouse a separate township, or is it part of a municipality?—It is a separate town.

Effect on pauperism of system of small farms in Cornwall.

12514. Is any part of your district composed of very small farms?—There are a great many very small farms in Cornwall.

12515. Do any of the farmers become paupers?—No, I think not.

12516. Do you think these small farms have any effect in reducing the amount of pauperism?—Only to a slight extent.

12517. The farmer's sons and their families would take the place rather of the labourer, would they not?—Yes. Sometimes I have heard this of a farmer with a very small holding, whose father or mother is in the workhouse—that he has made a plea that he really cannot afford to pay anything, because, although he is a farmer in name, yet his farm is only twenty acres, and he can only just manage to squeeze a living for himself out of it and no more; and he has been let off.

12518. But you would not say that the system of small farms in Cornwall makes any appreciable difference so far as pauperism is concerned as compared with the larger farms in other parts of their district?—I should say it may have a tendency that way, because the very small farms are generally worked by the man and his family, and they will never as a general rule get on the poor rate, whereas the big farms are worked by labourers who may get on the poor rate.

THIRTY-FIRST DAY.

Monday, 14th May, 1906.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I., etc., etc., etc. (Chairman).

The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S.
Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.
Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
Dr. A. H. DOWNES.
The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
Mr. C. S. LOCH.
Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.
The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.
Professor WILLIAM SMART.
The Rev. H. RUSSELL WAKEFIELD.
Mrs. BERNARD BOSANQUET.
Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.
Miss OCTAVIA HILL.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary).
Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Mr. HENRY LOCKWOOD, recalled; and further Examined.

Mr. Henry Lockwood. 14 May 1906.

12519. (Mr. Gardiner.) What has been the effect of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund upon guardians of poor unions?—I am not sure that the existence of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund has any considerable effect on the system of administration of guardians of poorer unions, but of course they benefit by the repayment of salaries and grants in respect of indoor relief and other charges. It is possible that guardians of poorer unions have been induced to spend more money both upon salaries of officers and upon indoor relief than they would have done had it not been for the assistance they received from the fund.

12520. (Mr. Nunn.) Would you favour the inclusion of more unions within the area of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund? Might we have your views as to the difficulties likely to be made from such areas with respect to their inclusion for Poor Law and for other than Poor Law purposes in the county of London or Metropolitan Poor Fund area?—This is a big question and it is difficult to say, if one begins to include some outside unions, where one could stop. If, for instance, the unions of West Ham and Edmonton and the parish of Willesden were included in the Metropolitan area for Metropolitan Common Poor Fund purposes, there would be added something like two millions of additional population, including an appreciable proportion of potential pauperism; and without going into the question very much more minutely than I have been able to do at present, I should be inclined to say that the contributions to the fund likely to be received from these three administrative areas would be considerably less than what they would be entitled to receive, and consequently the effect upon the rates of what are regarded as richer unions and parishes already contributing to the fund would be considerable. As regards difficulties likely to be met from such areas, I have not as yet had time to consult those able to give an opinion on the subject, but I hope to do so.

12521. Would you extend, and if so in what manner, the operations of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund?—As to this I would refer the Commission to a Report of the Local Government and Museums Committee of the London County Council on the subject of suggested legislation, for further equalisation of rates. This report includes, inter alia, suggestions for increased allowance in respect of in-maintenance and of expenditure on building, and I should be disposed to agree with those proposals. I gather from the report that the Committee hesitate to suggest outdoor relief being made a charge upon the fund, and with this hesitation I entirely agree.

12522. (Mr. Lansbury.) With regard to the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, as I understand it, this fund is raised for the purpose of assisting the poor unions. Does it ever happen that your board refuses to sanction the increase in an officer's salary to come out of this fund, and then recommends boards of guardians that if they consider an increase is necessary, such increase may be paid out of the local rates?—The history of the establishment of the fund will be found on page cv. of the Local Government Board's Annual Report of 1905. It was originated, undoubtedly, with a view to assisting poorer unions. It does sometimes happen that the Local Government Board refuses to sanction increase in salaries to be charged to the fund, and recommends guardians that if in the case of certain "assistant officers" they consider an increase is necessary, it should be paid out of the local rates. It has been more than once suggested by myself and my predecessors that in certain particular cases, an exceptionally meritorious officer might be awarded a salary in excess of the general scale, and that with a view to avoiding difficulties in respect of the fund, the increase might be paid out of the local rates. It is held, however, that, for other than certain assistant officers, this would not be possible without legislation, and a Bill with a view to giving effect to the suggestions aforesaid was prepared some four years ago; but owing to opposition on the part of some of the poorer unions and parishes, who were under the impression, wrongly, as I conceive, that they would be losers by such an arrangement, the Bill was blocked and it never passed into law.

Salary of Receiver of Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12523. Who is the responsible head of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, and what is his salary?—The salary of the Receiver of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund is, I believe, £400 per annum. This is expended mainly on the clerical staff that have to deal with the distribution of the fund. The total expenditure charged upon the fund for the year ended Lady Day, 1904, was £1,578,000.

Power to combine London Unions for special purposes.

12524. With reference to the Metropolitan Asylums Board, is it not a fact that the explanatory clause in the Act of Parliament expressly declares that the President of the Local Government Board has the power to unite boards of guardians for anything which they may individually have the power to do?—The Metropolitan Poor Act of 1867 did empower the Local Government Board to unite boards of guardians and form districts for practically any purposes connected with Poor Law administration.

Receipts and expenditure of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12525. (Mr. Loch.) Will you explain how the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund is levied and distributed?—I would venture to suggest that particulars as to the levying and distribution of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund should be obtained from some other source better acquainted with details than I am. For figures of levying and distribution, in the Board's Annual Report for 1904–5 at page 502, Appendix (h) will be found a table setting out the various items of cost incurred by guardians and chargeable to the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, and on page 508, Appendix (h), Table No. 113 shows the nett amount received from the fund by each union and parish for each year ended Lady Day, from 1835 to 1904, and on page 510, Table 114, is set out the nett amount contributed to the fund by the several unions and parishes for the same period. The rateable value of each union is given at page 504, Table 110.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1906.

12526. Can you show the items on which the fund is expended, and the amounts distributed on each item to the several unions in that period, during twenty or thirty years, showing also the increase per cent.: and can you also show the increase per cent. of population, or decrease, in the union areas?—I regret that I have been unable to get material to answer your question, though I can supply a card giving the population increase or decrease for each union area since 1881.

Check on items of expenditure chargeable to Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12527. Will you explain whether the board exercise any check on the growth of expenditure under the heads of medicine and medical and surgical apparatus, salaries of officers, rations of officers, maintenance of pauper children, and maintenance of indoor paupers: or whether the expenditure on these heads as returned by the unions is accepted without special scrutiny?—As to checking of growth of expenditure under the head medicine and medical and surgical apparatus, the Receiver of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, I believe, queries any unusual expenditure on particular items observable in the half-yearly claim, including, no doubt, any such under the head of medicine, etc. The same applies also to claims for maintenance of pauper children or indoor adult paupers which are controlled to a large extent by the certificates of accommodation for each institution, whether workhouse, infirmary, or school. With regard to salaries of officers so far from expenditure on these heads being accepted without special scrutiny, I think I may say the scrutiny is minute, exhaustive, and, I might even add, vexatious on occasion. Many examples illustrating the careful and minute scrutiny could be given if desired.

Scale of certain officers' salaries chargeable upon the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12528. Will you explain whether there is any limitation of salaries for the several classes of officials employed in the unions, in the service of the Poor Law, and, if so, what are the limits: whether additions or gratuities are made by the guardians in addition to such grants from the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund: whether such additions or gratuities are reported to and approved by the Local Government Board and what system is adopted by the Local Government Board in approving of salaries paid out of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund?—The limitation of salaries is confined to clerks, assistant-clerks, relieving-officers and superintendent relieving officers. I hand in a table giving particulars as to this (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (B)).

Return of cost of salaries, etc., in certain London unions.

12529. Can you furnish the Commission with a return of the salaries, and their increments, showing, (a) payments from the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund: (b) payments by the guardians from other sources, either of the London unions generally during the past ten or twenty years, or of certain unions; for example, Lambeth, St. Pancras, Poplar, St. George's, Hanover Square, St. Marylebone, St. Olave, Woolwich, St. George-in-the-East, City, Battersea, Kensington, Camberwell?—I regret I am not able to supply the return asked for, not having the material necessary for its preparation.

"Rations," registration and vaccination fees, and vagrants as charges upon the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12530. In regard to rations of officers, is there any necessity for the continuance of this system?—In each institution it seems desirable that the rations of officers should be supplied to them by the guardians as the most convenient arrangement.

12531. In regard to "registration fees" and "vaccination fees and expenses," should not these items be chargeable to some other authority and the work they represent transferred?—Speaking for myself, I think vaccination fees and vaccination matters generally might very well be managed by some other authority than the guardians. Vaccination questions very often involve acrimonious discussion, and a good deal of ærated oratory and waste of time at guardians' meetings, and it has not infrequently been the case that guardians have been elected not for any special qualification they might possess for Poor Law administration, but rather on account of their views for or against vaccination. As regards registration fees, for census purposes the borough area is taken. Those concerned with population and health questions agree, I believe, that the borough might well be the authority to undertake registration matters, but it would be necessary, I presume, to compensate for loss of office in a good many cases in consequence of the transfer. Most clerks to guardians, for instance, are superintendent registrars in London, and their position would have to be considered.

12532. In regard to expenses under the "Homeless Poor Acts," might not this item be repealed?—It seems not unreasonable that the expenses should continue to be a charge upon London generally.

12533. (Mr. Gardiner.) In regard to "Maintenance of Indoor Paupers," does the system work satisfactorily? Considered in relation to the population in different unions, does it represent a fairly equal administration, for example, of the City, Hackney, Poplar, Camberwell, Bethnal Green, Whitechapel?—I am not sure that I quite understand this question, though it may be observed that Hackney, Poplar, Camberwell and Bethnal Green all receive from the fund on balance, whereas the City of London on balance contributes very largely to the fund—at the rate, in fact, of £160,000 per annum. The other receives on balance as follows: Hackney, £21,000, Poplar, £44,000, Camberwell, £25,000, Bethnal Green, £400,000.

Salary and staff of Receiver Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12534. What is the office and the staff which now manages the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund? What are the salaries paid for the office?—The £400 per annum, as already mentioned, is paid to the Receiver of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, but I am not aware how that sum is distributed.

Report of Committee London County Council on Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12535. (Chairman.) I gather from your evidence with reference to the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund that you are disposed to concur with certain recommendations that were made by a Committee of the London County Council to the effect that it might be possible to extend the operation of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund further as regards indoor relief, but not as regards out-door relief?—That is so.

12536. Was any action taken on that report?—As a matter of fact, I believe it has been referred back to the Committee.

Question of inclusion of West Ham and Edmonton in benefits of Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12537. Do you think it would be possible to keep the West Ham and Edmonton areas outside?—I can only say this: that I have consulted Dr. Hilleary, who is the Town Clerk and clerk to the guardians of West Ham, and also the clerk to the guardians of Croydon, and I have seen one or two representative persons of Richmond, and, as might be expected, they say that before being prepared to give an opinion one way or the other, they would like to know a great deal more of what the results of their inclusion might possibly be. As a matter of fact, I think the disposition of those who are likely to be affected by it is to remain where they are; but they naturally gave no opinion until they had information, which I was not able to give them, of what was intended. When you speak of West Ham, I do not know whether it would be intended to include only the borough of West Ham, or the union of West Ham. That is a question which would have to be considered, and would have a very considerable effect on results.

12538. You think those districts will be able, without very serious detriment, to bear the burden of their own rates?—I should hope so. I may say Edmonton is not in my district. I have just remembered that an acquaintance of mine, who happens to live in the Edmonton union, in the Hornsey borough, was quite certain that it would be financially to the disadvantage of his part of Edmonton if it came into London.

Effect on policy of Guardians of exclusion of out-relief from Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12539. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, would you tell us whether you think that the principle of putting out-relief on the local rates administered by the guardians, and the indoor relief on the Common Fund, really has operated to produce economy in outdoor relief?—I think it has. I am inclined to think that in fact one might say it was in the nature of a bribe.

12540. We were told by those inspectors who had to do with outdoor unions, which are on the same principle, that it had not actually changed the administration much, and the instance of Poplar within the Metropolitan area would rather go to that conclusion?—I think in the case of Poplar the outdoor relief, which has risen by leaps and bounds in the last few years, has been more or less exceptional. I understood your question to refer to the principle generally.

12541. I was wondering whether that principle was sufficiently strong to counteract a growing policy in favour of outdoor relief?—I do not know about counteract, but I certainly think it would tend to, I should say, reduce the amount which they would be prepared to expend upon it.

12542. You think it has actually done so?—I think so. Taking London generally, I put it in this way: that I think there are certain localities where there would possibly have been more outdoor relief if it had been a charge upon the whole of London.

ffect of etropolitan ommon oor Fund on st of indoor lief.

12543. Do you think that throwing all sorts of classes of people into the workhouses has actually resulted in a more extravagant maintenance of workhouses?—I do not know that the actual inclusion of different classes in the same workhouse has resulted in extravagance. I think, as I have said in previous reports, that where you get the various classes mixed together—the aged, infirm, and the so-called able-bodied—it is so very difficult to draw strict lines between the conditions of the two that the able-bodied are more disposed to indoor relief than they would otherwise be where they could be separated and dealt with under separate conditions.

12544. What I wanted to arrive at was this: Do you think the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, in the encouragement that it has given to workhouses, has prevented the sort of test workhouse which you had in Poplar, at Kensington, and at other places, prior to the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund?—Kensington was established as a test house, and so was Poplar, in old days, after the establishment of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12545. After the increase of the equalisation?—The Metropolitan Common Poor Fund was established in 1867.

12546. Then there was another considerable increase, was there not?—The equalisation of rates, I think, was applied rather to the sanitary authority than to the Poor Law authority, though they benefited to some extent, of course.

12547. You do not think it has had any effect in making workhouse maintenance more liberal and more luxurious?—I think possibly it has. Unquestionably I think it may be accepted as a fact, or something likely to be the result, that, as you increase the number of pockets into which you can dip for a particular purpose, so there is less restraint imposed upon those who have to spend the money.

12548. Considering the effect of this, we have, perhaps from the point of view of economy, to balance the decrease in out-relief by the increase in the lavishness of workhouse maintenance?—I think that is not an unreasonable suggestion.

12549. Do you think that is borne out by the facts at all?—Yes, I think I may say it is.

estion of creasing arge upon ndon as a hole in spect of in-aintenance.

12550. (Mr. Bentham.) In answer to a question put by Mr. Nunn you refer to the report of the Museums Committee of the London County Council, and in that report they make a suggestion for the abolition of the 4d. per head payment from the county grant?—And include it in one sum.

12551. And substitute an additional 5d. per head for all inmates from the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund?—Yes, I think they did that. I think they proposed that. I should not myself have seen any considerable objection to increasing the charge in respect of in-maintenance.

espective ntributions om Metro-litan ommon oor Fund d from unty uncil wards in-aintenance.

12552. Would it make any difference to the boards of guardians, whether it came as a county grant or through the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund?—I do not suppose it would. They would not care where it came from, so long as they got the extra payment.

12553. (Sir Samuel Provis.) There is this difference, is there not, that by the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund the payment to the Guardians of 5d. per head per day is limited?—Limited by the certificate of the workhouse to ages.

12554. It does not include the children?—No.

12555. Whilst the money that comes from the London County Council takes them all, does it not?—Yes, that would be so. You are speaking, not of the lunacy allowance, I take it, but the 4d. allowance from the London County Council, which was established in 1888, and that is based upon the average number of inmates for the five years prior to 1888, so it is an unchangeable sum up to the present moment, that is to say, each Union gets the same amount each year.

12556. (Mr. Bentham.) If the 5d. a day was provided from the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund instead of the County Fund, what effect would it have on the administration of the Union?—I do not know that it would have any.

12557. It would be different, they would get it on all their inmates for the whole year, 5d. a day per head?—I am assuming in any case, whatever additional allowance might be made, there would still be the check of the certificate of the workhouse. That was provided in order to prevent overcrowding. At the present moment, the 5d. that they receive from the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund is not paid in respect of any inmate over the number for which the workhouse is certified.

12558. And the County Grant is made irrespective of that?—Yes, it is based, as I say, upon the average number of the five years prior to 1888.

12559. Would that mean that the guardians would immediately set about increasing their accommodation in order to get a large certification?—No, I do not think it would be worth their while to do that. They would still have to pay for the buildings themselves, and in any case they would have to get the assent of the Local Government Board before they could do it.

12560. When the number is in excess of the number for which the place is certified, they would get no payment, would they?—No.

12561. Then it would clearly pay the guardians, would it not, to increase the accommodation for that number; or would it not?—It would depend a good deal upon what the accommodation was going to cost. I am sorry to say it has become exceedingly costly in London and the neighbourhood.

12562. You do not think the effect of the change on the Board would be very great?—No, I do not think it would.

Checks on amount of salaries chargeable to Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12563. You have referred to the limitation of salaries to the various officers. Is there any limitation to the number of officials in any particular department?—No fixed limit.

12564. A board may have as many officials as it thinks proper, with no limitation as to amount paid, except those that are mentioned in the scale of salaries handed in by you?—The limitation there was intended to apply to salaries, not to officers.

12565. With no limitation with regard to salary, except as applying to those officers mentioned in your scale of salaries?—There is this limitation, as I explain; that every increase of salary however infinitesimal, has to be scrutinised by the Local Government Board in connection with its possible effect upon the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12566. Do the board often refuse to sanction the salary of officers that is proposed by boards of guardians?—Very often.

12567. You think the check is quite sufficient in that respect to prevent any extravagant payment of the officers that are not mentioned in the Schedule?—I think there is no doubt about that.

12568. Do the Local Government Board often refuse to sanction the appointment of an officer that is applied for?—You mean the creation of a fresh appointment?

12569. Yes?—They always ask for full particulars before they assent to it.

Clerks to Guardians giving whole time to duties, et per contra.

12570. In your answer to a question put by Mr. Loch you say: "Most clerks to guardians, for instance, are superintendent Registrars in London, and their position would have to be considered." Are they allowed to take positions for which they are paid by the guardians, other than registrarships, in addition to the salary that is already mentioned in the scale of salaries handed in by you?—I do not recollect a case in London in which a clerk to guardians holds any other office.

12571. (Mr. Lansbury.) They used to be assessment

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1906.

clerks ?—Yes, but not now ; there are only three left, I think, in London.

12572. (Mr. Bentham.) A clerk is not permitted to take the position of clerk to the Assessment Committee, is he ?—Yes, but it happens now that the Assessment Authorities in London are the boroughs, except under certain circumstances, I think, where the borough is not wholly coterminous with one or more unions.

12573. (Sir Samuel Provis.) There is the case of the City of London too ?—Yes.

12574. (Mr. Bentham.) Any clerk may hold the position of superintendent registrar ?—Yes.

12575. Or even the registrarship of births, deaths and marriages ?—I do not know whether I have mentioned it, but, as a matter of fact, registrarships of births and deaths are, to a large extent, held by officers in the clerk's office of the guardians ; so that there again there will be another group of persons who would be dissatisfied with the transfer of these appointments.

12576. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to the clerk, may I ask whether it is at all common for him to be a practising solicitor doing other work ?—I do not think it is common. I do not say that he never does.

12577. Are there many who do not give their whole time ?—They give their whole time, properly speaking : but where a clerk is a solicitor it is always expected that he will conduct all the legal business of the guardians.

12578. I understand that Mr. Cutter of Woolwich is not pledged to give his whole time ?—That is possible, but I really could not say.

12579. (Mr. Bentham.) Would he be allowed to practise privately ?—No, I should say not.

12580. (Mr. Gardiner.) Could we not have exact information on this point ?—I can only say that I think not. I take it that if the Board became aware of it they would question the propriety.

Question of making special extra remuneration to officers a charge upon the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12581. (Mr. Lansbury.) Gratuities are not paid, are they, out of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund ?—No.

12582. But the board very often tells the local board that they may give a gratuity if they think an officer deserves it ?—Yes, it is in the interests of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund to save that.

12583. If the officer is really entitled to it, do not you think the better policy would be to put it on the Common Poor Fund. If the man deserves the extra money, it seems rather hard on the poor unions that they should pay it ?—Yes, but I have already referred to that point. I have said : "It has been more than once suggested by myself and my predecessors that in certain particular cases, exceptionally meritorious officers might be awarded a salary in excess of the general scale." One not unfrequently hears that a workhouse master has been very efficient and done this, that and the other, which has saved the local rates very considerably. In a case of that sort it has always seemed to me that the local rates might fairly be burdened with the smaller additions to the salary.

12584. You do not think they ought to go on the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund ?—No, I think that there are certain instances in which it might reasonably be expected that an addition to the salary for special services might be a charge on the local rates. However, you will no doubt remember that the Bill for that purpose was blocked, I think it was in 1901.

Effect of Metropolitan Common Poor Fund on indoor relief.

12585. I think I understood you to say to Mrs. Webb that you thought in all probability to some extent some boards of guardians went in for the in-relief policy, because of the Common Poor Fund. Do you think that that holds very much in the metropolis ?—I think this : that inasmuch as the cost of in-maintenance is, for the greater part, repaid from the larger fund, there would be a disposition to give in-door relief : where the local purse had to bear the whole cost perhaps the same inducement would not exist.

Statistics as to relief in certain London Unions.

12585 (A). (Mr. Loch.) As regards the administration of Poor Law relief in St. Olaves, Hackney, Camberwell, Poplar and West Ham during the last ten years, can you state : (a) the numbers in and out, (b) the out-relief arrangements, (c) the cost of in and out-relief year by year ?—I hand in a statement (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (C)) giving the numbers in and out, the out-relief arrangements, the cost of in-and out-relief year by year, from 1896 to 1905, in Bermondsey, Hackney, Camberwell, Poplar and West Ham.

12586. (Mr. Lansbury.) The increase of in-maintenance is rather striking right through the table that you give us : Bermondsey, Camberwell, Hackney, Poplar and West Ham. There is a tremendous increase all the way through there. Even in Bermondsey, where the numbers are not very high, in-maintenance has gone up very considerably ?—Yes, that is the fact, that for the last twelve years—I think there is some slight difference now—but certainly between, we will say, 1894 and 1901 or 1902, the ratio of increase was greater in indoor than in outdoor.

12587. Do you think that that has anything to do with the Common Poor Fund ?—In that way I think, that it is paid for by a large purse. The guardians get repayment in respect of it.

12588. The point I want to get at is : a board is not necessarily more economical because it spends its money on in-door relief ?—Economical ?—to that extent, no.

12589. Would it be possible, without very much trouble, to do all the unions in London in the manner that Mr. Loch has asked you to do these five unions—because that paper is rather instructive ?—It could be done, but I assure you it required a very considerable amount of work to get out the return I have handed in. To supplement the information would, I fear, involve more time and work than I should be able to apply.

Question extending area for Metropoli Common Poor Fun

12590. There is one other matter, namely, extending the metropolitan area, that I wish to ask you about. I notice you point out that if Willesden, West Ham and Edmonton were to come in, they would probably only bring in poverty, as it were : is there any objection to bringing in Wimbledon and Croydon, and other well-to do districts, to balance these others ?—No. As I think I said, it is a very important question. When one begins extending, one has to decide where one is going to end. I have already answered one member of the Commission that the representatives of two or three of the adjoining unions of London, before giving anything approaching an opinion on the subject, have asked to get full particulars of what would be involved, probably, financially by their inclusion.

12591. Your objection would be met if you brought in richer areas balancing the poorer ones ?—That would be so.

Check of Local Governme Board on appointme of additio officers.

12592. It is true, is it not, that the Local Government Board occasionally object to the appointment of new officers ?—You mean the individuals ?

12593. Yes ?—They have sometimes.

12594. And also to the creation of the offices ?—Yes.

12595. That is to say, if a board of guardians were wanting to employ a large number say, two or more relieving officers, the board has, at times, objected to that ?—Yes, they certainly would want all particulars in support of the proposal.

12596. Is not there on record any occasion where they have definitely stopped the appointment of officers as being, in their judgment, unnecessary officers ?—I have no doubt there have been cases of that sort. I do not call a particular one to mind at the moment.

12597. But there are many cases, are there not ?—Yes. I have just been reminded that in the case of the City of London they were proposing to increase the clerical staff there, and the Board objected.

12598. I think there was another union too, but that does not matter. There is not any possibility in London of the appointment of too many officers ?—That is so.

12599. The whole thing is safeguarded very jealously, first by your own Department, and then by the people who control the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, so that it is really a very difficult thing to get officers appointed at all, other than quite the ordinary ones ?—That is true.

12600. I notice you are not in favour of abolishing rations ?—No, it seems to me that, for administrative purposes, it would be difficult. I am talking of officers all residing in a large workhouse.

Definition o " the Metro polis," and possibility o its extensio

12601. (Mr. Phelps.) First of all, what is the Metropolis ?—The Metropolis is the area included in the Metropolis Local Management Act of 1867.

12602. It is the creation of an Act of Parliament ?—Yes.

12603. There is no reason why it is stopped at one point for one thing and at another for another ?—No.

12604. There is no reason for not extending its area ?—No, except possibly the difficulty in administering so large an area.

12605. Administrative difficulties ?—Yes.

12606. With regard to the principle of contribution, it is mainly confined to contribution for cases of indoor relief ?—Yes, and salaries.

12607. What principle is involved in that. I see the policy of it, but what principle is involved in it ?—I do not quite understand. The object, of course, was to relieve the poorer unions.

12608. Why should it be confined to cases of in-door relief ?—I think the reason of that was, in the first inception, it was felt that it was better to so confine it, as it might otherwise tend to an undesirable increase in out-door relief.

12609. That is what I call the policy of it. There is no other reason for it ?—Not that I am aware of.

12610. Do you think it would be possible to make the administration of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund a test of good administration ?—In what way do you suggest.

12611. A contribution should be refused where the cubic space was not up to a certain standard, or to workhouses that were overcrowded ; that the distribution of it should be made a method of testing administration ?—There is a provision now for that, but the process of applying it is so cumbersome and roundabout that I think it has never practically been applied. In terms of 33 and 34 Vict. Cap. 18 Sec. 1 (4) the Board are entitled, under certain circumstances, to withhold the grant for a certain period. The difficulty of applying the provision in the Act has arisen through the several preliminaries and conditions held to be necessary for the preparation and enforcement of an Order.

12612. That has not been acted on ?—No.

12613. Is there a great lack of uniformity, should you say, in in-door administration in London ?—I do not know that there is.

12614. It is not a crying difficulty that meets you as an inspector ?—No.

12615. A great deal has been said about the law of settlement ; you do not think there is any difficulty in that way ?—No.

12616. It would not be worth while to try and use this fund as a means of insisting on uniformity ?—I think the fund might very possibly be used in that direction, only means would have to be provided for simplifying the methods.

12617. It has been suggested to us from many quarters that something in the way of a central authority for London Poor Law might be established. It seems to me that this fund might possibly be the nucleus of it ?—Yes.

12618. Do you see, on the surface, any great objection to that ?—To one central authority ? I think there are a good many.

12619. That this fund should be administered by a body which had a certain amount of control over the administration of London ?—That would be a body which would have control over so much of the relief as is included in the repayment from the common poor fund ; that is to say, indoor relief.

12620. Yes ?—I think that is possible ; in fact, it is a point that my colleague and I have considered more than once ; but there have been difficulties in finding an existing authority who could carry it out.

12621. (Dr. Downes.) I do not know whether you have referred to the amount of work that the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund entails at the Local Government Board ?—No, I have not. One could spend an hour in describing it, I think ; there is an enormous amount of it.

12622. Sometimes on very small items in themselves ?—Very much so. I had in fact written out a description of what had to be done where it was a question of the increase of the salary of an assistant engineer of 2s. a week, but I thought it would weary the Commissioners to hear it. It is common knowledge that an enormous amount of work is involved in checking salaries in connection with the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund specially.

12623. Are you aware whether the number of paupers in a union has been at any time taken as the basis of regulating the salaries of clerks ?—Yes, there is a system under which it is endeavoured to somehow assimilate the salary to the amount of work probably involved by the figures showing the population and pauperism and so on.

System of basing clerk's salary on number of paupers in the Union.

12624. So assuming a very large increase in the number of paupers, possibly as the result of lax administration, if that basis were taken the clerk would have a greater claim on the fund ?—That is so.

12625. I think some time back you held an inquiry as to the increase of the borrowing powers of the Metropolitan Asylums Board ?—Yes, in 1902, I think.

Proposal to increase borrowing powers of the Metropolitan Asylums Board and apathy of ratepayers.

12626. It was on the 11th March, 1902, as a matter of fact. The object of the inquiry, I believe, was with a view to doubling the borrowing power of the Metropolitan Asylums Board ?—That is so, it was a very large amount ; I forget what the borrowing powers were.

12627. At that time it was one-tenth of the rateable value of the district ; the rateable value of the district at that time was just short of £40,000,000 ?—Yes, it is £41,000,000 now. I remember that very well. I remember also in connection with that inquiry a question arose as to how the usual practice in an inquiry of that sort should be carried out of posting notices of the approaching inquiry on every church and chapel door in the district, that would mean the whole of London ; and we came to the conclusion that we ought to be able to manage without that, and it was ultimately arranged that each board of guardians and each Borough Council should have a certain number of notices of the inquiry sent to them with a request to post them outside their own public institutions, their own offices, and so on, so that there can be no question at all that full information of the approaching inquiry was available. I certainly anticipated from what I had read and what I had heard at meetings of boards of guardians, that there would be very considerable opposition, so I had taken perhaps more than usual care in getting up the case. On the day of the inquiry there were present the clerk, two of his assistants. I think two or three representatives of local papers, and one gentleman from Fulham, and the reason of his appearing to object was that he was under the impression that the main object of the increase of borrowing powers of the Metropolitan Asylums Board was to establish opposite a factory on the Thames at Fulham a small-pox ambulance station. He was the only person who appeared to oppose.

12628. So that, although a question of borrowing £4,000,000 or thereabouts was concerned, that was the whole of the public interest that was shown ?—Yes, and as I have already said, notwithstanding there was a full opportunity of knowing what was going to happen. There is no doubt it was fully advertised.

Apathy of ratepayers in regard to new Poor Law schools for Poplar.

12629. (Mr. Lansbury.) Is it not true that a Local Government Board inquiry was held in Poplar with regard to the Shenfield Schools which are so much discussed now ?—It was in connection with the Shenfield Schools, but the inquiry was similar to that just mentioned to enable the guardians to increase their borrowing powers.

12630. Was that advertised well ?—Fully.

12631. What amount of interest did the local ratepayers take ?—I remember there were half-a-dozen or so ratepapers present as objectors.

12632. There was no real interest taken ?—Apparently not.

Question of altering method of assessment in London.

12633. (Mr. Gardiner.) As regards the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund have you ever thought it desirable that one authority to assess the whole of London, including the City of London, should be established ; one authority to do the whole of the assessment work in London ?—I cannot say I have ever thought that. It is a subject to which I have not up to the present applied my mind.

12634. The poorer unions of London have thought the City of London does not pay its full share because of the basis of the assessment ?—Yes, occasionally, but I fancy one would hear something to the contrary on the part of the City of London itself, which contributes £160,000 a year to the fund.

12635. (Mr. Loch). With regard to salaries chargeable to the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund have you thought whether, instead of the present system, a system might be adopted by which on the local rates paying so much the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, or some other fund, should pay a proportionate amount thus throwing salaries back in this way on to the rates to a certain extent?—I have already in part replied to that question in reply to Mr. Lansbury. I have more than once suggested that something of that sort might be done.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1906.

Question of dividing cost of salaries between local rates and Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

12636. Your phrase is: "An exceptionally meritorious officer might be awarded a salary in excess of the general scale." My suggestion is different; I ask whether, as a rule, as a matter of habit, a system can be adopted by which local rates should pay a certain amount and the central fund a certain amount?—I think if that system had been adopted when the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund was first instituted, probably a good deal less might be expended at this present day than is expended. I am hardly prepared to say we could go back on that now.

Question of making grant from Metropolitan Common Poor Fund conditional on general efficiency of administration.

12637. Mr. Phelps suggested that the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund might be used as a fund more or less guiding and controlling expenditure and management, and you refer, I think, to the Metropolis Poor Law Amendment Act of 1870. The conditions under which the Local Government Board can interfere are very precise; for instance, the maximum number of paupers to be maintained in their workhouses is one point, and there are others as to the proper work being done with regard to drainage, sewers, ventilation, etc.; those are all specific points, but would it be possible to adopt a line on a more general line, saying that only upon a satisfactory report, in regard not only to the fulfilment of those points, but the general administration of the union, the grant should be made?—I do not know whether that is provided for in the Act; I think there must be certain specific things in default, must there not?

12638. Yes, it is quite specific here: "The provision of proper drainage, sewers, ventilation, fixtures, furniture, surgical or medical appliances, or directing the appointment of any officer, or prescribing the maximum number of paupers to be maintained in any workhouse or asylum," and so on; particular points like that which may or may not be called into question at all?—True.

12639. Do you think a report on what one may call the administration on these points, and on others generally, might take the place of this detailed statement?—I take it that would require legislation, and I should imagine that it would not be easy to get an Act passed to give the Board power of that sort.

12640. Granted the legislation, taking the question on its merits purely, you would be inclined to say that would be a good line to take?—On a report?

12641. On a report in regard to the union and its administration including the matters laid down here, do you think the question of granting or not granting out of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund in that manner would raise the administration?—Of a workhouse or a school?

12642. Yes, or out-relief or any other matter that comes under the guardians?—The Common Poor Fund only comes in in-relief. I can imagine cases in which the knowledge that the grant might easily be withdrawn would have a good effect on the administration of a particular union; beyond that I do not know that I can go.

12643. That is what I am referring to; but supposing the question were, taking the broadest sense, the system of control, and the question of out-relief was included, would you still hold to the opinion that that might be one thing upon which a report would be required?—I think outdoor relief must in any case be left, to a considerable extent, to the discretion of the local authorities, so long as they continue to exist.

Effect of Metropolitan Common Poor Fund upon Indoor Relief.

12644. With regard to the indoor relief, is it not true that though the action of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund may have tended to increase it, or the expenditure upon it; is it not true that in all the large urban centres there is now a continuous increase of indoor relief, and a larger expenditure upon it?—I think that is so; I think you will find that in all populous places.

12645. (Sir Samuel Provis.) As to the power of the Local Government Board to combine unions under the Metropolitan Poor Act, I think your answer to Mr. Lansbury's question goes a little further than you intend, does it not. That would lead to the inference that unions might be combined under the Metropolitan Poor Act for the purpose of outdoor relief. That is not so, is it?—I did not mean that.

Power to combine London Unions for certain purposes.

12646. It is only for the purpose of indoor relief, because the Act requires as a condition that there shall be an asylum?—Yes; I did not intend it to have the meaning you suggest.

12647. I wanted to make that quite clear, because I thought that was your intention. With regard to indoor expenditure and the effect upon it of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, it is this, is it not, that putting it generally the guardians get a daily allowance from the fund, for each inmate, namely 5d. a day?—Yes.

Fixed amount of contribution from Metropolitan Common Poor Fund towards maintenance of each indoor pauper and its effect.

12648. So that supposing they increased the expenditure by making the living in the workhouse more luxurious, the cost would not fall on the Common Poor Fund, but on the guardians themselves?—The excess over that would not fall on the Common Poor Fund.

12649. It would make no difference in the amount they get from the Common Poor Fund?—No.

12650. Because the amount from the Common Poor Fund is fixed, a certain amount in respect of each inmate?—Yes.

12651. Therefore the fund itself would not have any influence in determining whether the life in the workhouse should be more comfortable or not?—To this extent, that supposing the cost of an inmate is, we will say 10d. a day, they get half of it back at all events.

12652. It does not depend on what they spend, the amount they get from the fund is fixed?—It is.

12653. Consequently anything additional they spend on making things more comfortable falls on them, and not on the Fund?—That is true.

Effect of Metropolitan Common Poor Fund indoor re

12654. (Mrs. Webb.) I quite understand Sir Samuel Provis' point, that you do not encourage luxurious living per se, but might not you, by including certain classes within the workhouses who had formerly been outside, indirectly alter the character of the workhouse and make it into an asylum, rather than a test for able-bodied?—My point would be, although the sum is fixed, still in as much as the guardians get that amount they are helped to that extent, and it would have possibly that effect, I think.

12655. (Sir Samuel Provis.) If you increased the class that comes into the workhouse you would want more accommodation, would you not—if you created a wider class?—That is so. You would require more accommodation per head for certain classes, than for others.

12656. And the provision of accommodation falls on the locality and not on the Fund?—That is true.

12657. Gratuities are given for special services, are they not?—Yes.

12658. The special service therefore is rendered to the particular union, is it not?—That is so.

12659. Would it be right to bring that as a charge entirely on the Metropolis?—I am not sure that it would.

12660. With regard to the area, at present the unions are the unions which are wholly included in the Administrative County of London, are they not?—Yes.

Difficulti as to ex ing area Metropo Common Poor Fu 12661. There is no overlapping now, since the London Government Act of 1899?—No.

12662. So that you have got, for all purposes of local government, one area. Would it be open to some objection to extend the area of London for Poor Law purposes, if it were not extended for other purposes as well?—I think there would be great difficulty attending that, certainly.

12663. Therefore if any action were taken with a view of extending London for Poor Law purposes, the extension should be for all Local Government purposes generally?—I think it would be most difficult to bring them in piecemeal for one purpose and not another.

12664. (Mr. Phelps.) The area was originally chosen for the purpose of the Fund long before the administrative county was formed, was it not?—It was the area under the Metropolis Management Act.

12665. (Mr. Gardiner.) As regards the method of administering out-relief, do committees rotate? Are tem of

ini-te rout-reli f London.

e supervi-
n, qual fiions, an i aties of ieving
cers.

there any out-relief rules? What is the number of relieving officers?—There is no rotation of committees as a rule. The majority of guardians in London administer relief by committees. The number of relieving officers, of course, varies considerably, as do the out-relief rules.

12666. (Mr. Nunn.) What are your views as to the (1) training, and (2) best form of supervision for relieving officers? In regard to (2) would you prefer (a) cross-visitor; (b) superintendent of relieving officers, both union officers; (c) inspector or inspectors of out-relief; (d) any other method?—The present system of appointing assistant relieving officers, though it has its drawbacks, affords fairly good opportunities for training for the office of relieving officer. It would be, no doubt, advantageous to the officers and to administration generally, if both relieving officers and their assistants took note of the methods adopted by the Charity Organisation Society. I have often wondered that no enterprising firm of publishers have re-issued separately so much of the Consolidated Order, Article 215, etc., and other Orders of the Board, setting out the duties and responsibilities of relieving officers; and evidence of acquaintance with these might well be made one of the conditions of appointment. With regard to supervision, the appointment of superintendent relieving officers is decidedly useful in my opinion. The usefulness necessarily depends a good deal upon the qualifications of the particular officer. With regard to cross-visiting, it may have its advantages. On the other hand, it may tend to some extent to lessen the authority of and occasion difficulties for the relieving officer. I cannot resist this opportunity of stating my opinion that a good relieving officer is worth more than the maximum salary to which he is now entitled. There is, in my opinion, no comparison whatever between the responsibilities and difficulties of a relieving officer and those of a master of a workhouse. There are many excellent masters of workhouses, no doubt, but in view of the duties appertaining to either office it has always seemed to me that, in salary and emoluments, a workhouse master has very much the best of it. A relieving officer is practically on duty the whole twenty-four hours through. He has frequently to act in difficult cases on his own responsibility; his duties take him into uncleanly houses and rough localities, he is on duty always and liable to be called up at any hour of the day or the night, and I venture to suggest that even if the maximum salary is not increased, the periodical increments might be higher, so that the maximum might be reached earlier than under the present system.

sibility of
al vernment ard aining more cise rules
out-relief.

12667. In view of the disregard of their own rules for the administration of outdoor relief by many boards, do you think it would be desirable for the Local Government Board to frame rules which, being orders of the Local Government Board, would be binding upon relieving officers and be accepted as law by boards?—I doubt if it would be possible to frame rules having the effect of orders of the Local Government Board to be binding upon relieving officers as it must so frequently happen that the latter must act on their own responsibility, and in circumstances which no general rule could be made to satisfactorily provide for.

ouping of
ndon
ions cording to portion of
-relief.

12668. Can you group the London boards according to their outdoor relief policy?—As to grouping the boards according to out-relief policy, I have taken the figures attached to Mr. Booth's map, and grouped the boards as follows; percentage of out-relief to total relief under 20 per cent., Bethnal Green, Kensington, Marylebone, St. George's-in-the-East, St. Giles, Strand, Westminster Whitechapel; between 40 and 50 per cent., Greenwich, Hammersmith, Lambeth, Mile End; over 50 per cent., Camberwell, Hackney, Islington, Lewisham, Poplar and Wandsworth.

mber of
ses which n be dealt
th by one lieving
ficer.

12669. Do you suggest any means, including more time or smaller number of cases for relieving officers, in order to produce more efficiency in the administration of relief?—As to efficiency, one finds, of course, that one man can deal with a higher number of cases than another who may be slow and not specially efficient, and it is consequently not easy to state an exact rule as to the number of cases, but Mr. Fothergill, a very well-known relieving officer of Birmingham, who was a witness before the Aged Poor Commission of 1895 recommended, I think, that the proportion to a relieving officer should not exceed 150.

12670. Can you describe the methods in use amongst relieving officers in London, for (a) extra union, and (b) extra metropolitan, enquiries, into their cases?—It is generally considered undesirable that relieving officers should leave their district, and extra union and extra metropolitan enquiries are usually made by the relieving officer of the particular outside district or by the general relieving officer appointed for the purpose.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1906.

Method of inquiry into non-resident cases.

12671. Will you give us an analysis of the average amount and description of the relieving officers' daily work in London?—It is not easy to prescribe definite rules which would meet every case but there should be an arrangement under which a relieving officer is bound to be at a certain place, whether his home or the relief office, at certain times in every day, say one hour in the morning, and one hour in the afternoon, so that applicants may know where to find him; though of course a relieving officer can never be truly said to be off duty. The rest of the day must be apportioned by the officer in the best way he can between his clerical work and his visiting the persons on his books, which is the most important of a relieving officers' duty, and if properly done must necessarily take up a good deal of time. The time expended over different cases depends a good deal upon the idiosyncrasies of the case. In going the rounds with relieving officers I have in some instances been able to get all the information I wanted in less than 10 minutes. In other instances dealing with a prevaricator or economiser of truth a full half hour has sometimes been occupied, not to say wasted, in the endeavour to get at an essential fact.

Relief to widows with children.

12672. (Mr. Lansbury.) With regard to widows with families applying for relief, is it the rule in the Metropolis to give out-relief where there are no children—or, to put it in another way, is it the rule to give relief to able-bodied single women and widows without children?—It is not the rule, I should say, in the Metropolis to give out-relief to widows (able-bodied) where there are no children, and still less so to able-bodied single women with or without children.

12673. In the case of widows with children, what is the policy you would recommend, or which you think would be most successful in dealing with these? Would you take the children from them, or give them sufficient outdoor relief to maintain their children at home?—My views concur with those of the House of Lords Committee of 1888, who say: "We are of opinion that in those cases where the home and other circumstances of the widow are such that her family cannot properly be cared for, the latter system (that is, taking the children into the guardians' schools) is best, but we recommend that careful discrimination be exercised, and that the children should be left with their mother where she is a good character and able, with an outdoor allowance for such children as she cannot support from her earnings, to bring her family up respectably."

Effect of strict medical out-relief on infant death-rate.

12674. (Mrs. Webb.) It has been suggested that a strict administration of medical relief (outdoor), and its adjunct in food, etc.—so far as women are concerned—has the effect of raising the infantile death-rate in this class. Can you suggest to the Commission any evidence for or against this hypothesis: and any indication of the manner in which the question would be investigated?—I believe that Sir John Gorst, Mr. Theodore Dodd, and others have stated their impression that a strict administration of medical relief has had the effect of raising the infantile death-rate, but I am not in a position to suggest evidence on the subject.

12675. It has been suggested that the long and irregular hours, low earnings, and insanitary conditions characteristic of the "sweated industries," especially increase the destitution, and thus the pauperism, of certain London unions. Can you supply any evidence for or against this hypothesis?—I should like to show the Commission a box of exhibits of work and to hand in a list of articles (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (D.)) produced by persons of various ages in receipt of relief which show that relief is given to persons employed in what are called "sweated industries," but beyond this, I can offer no direct evidence on the subject.

Effect of Mr. Chaplain's circular as to adequate relief.

12676. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to the adequate Relief Order of the Local Government Board, should it be considered a temporary Order, that after the advice contained in it has been given, might be withdrawn as covered by the existing Laws and General Orders? What has been the effect of the Order in London or the administration of the present system?—The Local Government Board in 1900 issued, not an Order with regard to adequate relief, but a Circular, and so far as adequate relief was concerned, there was nothing in it that has not appeared from time to time in previous instructional and official circulars. The effect of the circular in London has been to occasion the belief in certain quarters, that it was intended to encourage the giving of outdoor relief.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.
14 May 1906.

Circulation of lists of paupers.

12677. To what extent is the Order of February 14th 1878, for the circulation of lists of pauperism, carried out in London, and with what success?—The Order of February 14th, 1878, regarding lists of paupers, was optional, and, speaking generally, the circulation is in any case, I think, confined to members of the Board. In most cases the lists of applications are printed or typewritten for the use of the relief committee, and in St. George's, Hanover Square, and one or two other places, quarterly lists are printed and circulated among the guardians.

Grouping of London unions according to percentage of out-relief.

12678. (Chairman.) The classification of outdoor relief, according to the percentages which you have given us is not a geographical classification. You have put the amount of relief given, but the result is not geographical?—I must point out, that unfortunately in my answer to Mr. Nunn's question, I have left out some percentages. It should be under 20 per cent.:—Bethnal Green, Kensington, Marylebone, St. George's-in-the-East, St. Giles, Strand, Westminster, and Whitechapel: from 20 per cent. to 30 per cent., Chelsea, City of London, Hampstead, Paddington, St. Georges, St. Pancras, Southwark, Stepney and Woolwich: from 30 per cent. to 40 per cent., Fulham, Holborn, Shoreditch: and between 40 per cent. and 50 per cent., Greenwich, Hammersmith, Lambeth, Mile End: and over 50 per cent., Camberwell, Hackney, Islington, Lewisham, Poplar and Wandsworth.

Preponderance of indoor relief in London and its causes.

12679. The peculiarity of London pauperism compared with the rest of the country is that the indoor relief is so much greater in proportion to the outdoor relief?—Yes.

12680. You have been a good many years in the Metropolis: how do you account for this? Is it due to the pressure of public opinion upon the guardians or do you think it is at all attributable to the question we have just left, of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund?—I think that the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund certainly does operate in that direction.

12681. It has tended in that direction?—I cannot help thinking it must have.

12682. If you look at it from a ratepayer's point of view, a reduction of outdoor relief may be satisfactory, but if it is accompanied by a more than corresponding amount of indoor relief, although the number of paupers may be less, the expenditure is greater?—True.

12683. Is it in consequence of the agitation against outdoor relief that there has been this steady diminution or reduction in London until recently?—I do not mean to say there has been an agitation, but the general view is that outdoor relief should be kept within, we will say, reasonable limits.

12684. And the theory which is advanced, and I think is supported in many cases by facts, is, that an increase of outdoor relief is generally accompanied by an increase of indoor relief?—Yes, very frequently it is.

12685. In the returns of outdoor relief, are those who are in receipt of medical relief always distinguished? It is the practice to lump them together, is it not?—Yes.

12685a. (Mr. Lansbury.) In Whitechapel is it a fact that the foreign Jews apply to and are assisted by the Jewish Board of Guardians, and that this fact, to a large extent, relieves the Whitechapel board of a considerable amount of pauperism which they would otherwise be obliged to face?—The Jewish Board of Guardians relieve those of their own faith, but the Whitechapel guardians give a certain amount of out-door medical relief. They work in co-operation with the Charity Organisation Society. In 1904, 120 cases were assisted by the latter body. In this connection, I hand in (1) a return being an extract from Appendix, Vol. III., Royal Commission on Aliens, Tables 31 and 32,* and also (2) census of foreigners, 1871. (For census table see Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (E)).

* The returns as to poor relief granted to aliens in the various unions of the Metropolis during the year 1901, have not been printed in the Appendix. For returns see Vol. III. of report of Royal Commission on Alien Immigration. [Cd. 1741-1-1903.]

Jews receiving Poor Law medical relief and also other relief from Jewish Board of Guardians.

12686. (Chairman.) If you look down the medical column of the return which you have just handed in you will see how very large a proportion of those aliens got medical relief. Is not the practice that when they have got the certificate or order for medical relief, they go and get substantial relief from the Jewish Board of Guardians?—That is done to a certain extent I believe.

12687. That would account perhaps for the large number of persons asking for medical relief?—Of aliens, yes: in the three East End unions, Stepney, St. George's and Whitechapel.

12688. Does that practice prevail with many people who are not aliens?—No, I think not.

12689. Not to anything like the same extent?—No, I do not know that it does.

Increase cost of in-relief London.

12690. The cost of in-door relief has gone up enormously in London?—Yes.

12691. The increased cost is much greater than the increased number of persons relieved?—Yes, I think that will be found to be so.

Relation between dynamic out-relief in-relief.

12692. Do you think that the attempts to reduce outdoor relief have increased the amount of indoor relief?—I do not know that one can be sure of cause and effect, but in the case of Bermondsey you will see that the outdoor relief has appreciably diminished in numbers within the last three or four years, but the number of indoor has appreciably increased, but with regard to that increase in indoor, there is this to be considered: that there was a new workhouse which the guardians built under mild pressure from the Board, and they have also provided no less than three children's receiving homes, with a total capacity for 250 or so, I think; so that in that particular case the rising of the indoor relief concurrently with the reduction of outdoor relief was brought about by exceptional circumstances. They had a very crowded workhouse and so on, and they consequently were giving much more outdoor relief than they would have done had the indoor accommodation at the time been adequate.

12693. That is an exceptional case?—Yes.

12694. I want to put the other theory before you, that the reduction of outdoor relief may have tended to an increase of the indoor relief?—As a general rule, I think that is not found to be the case.

Reasons increase of relief.

12695. This great increase in expenditure, I assume, is due to a more kindly and humane feeling dominating the Poor Law policy and the actions of the guardians?—I think so. There is a point I do not think I have mentioned before, that in indoor relief is of course included infirmary relief, and of recent years opinion as to what should be the proper proportion of nurses, for instance, has changed, and an increase of that sort in the staff means a very considerable increase in the cost of administrative buildings and administration.

12696. I want so far as I can to keep to outdoor relief. Do you think as regards outdoor relief there is a different or higher class applying for medical relief, than used to apply?—I do not know that there is.

Decrease outdoor relief in Bermondsey and its causes.

12697. (Mr. Lock.) Could you give the figures, in regard to Bermondsey, as to the amount of increase of indoor and outdoor relief?—You will find that in the table I have handed in. (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (C)). They about balance one another in ten years.

12698. The 2,264, in the course of the period from 1896 to 1905, becomes 3,251, and the 3,486 in receipt of outdoor relief was reduced to 2,756?—They about balance one another.

12699. That decrease in Bermondsey in the outdoor relief is due to the cross-visitor, is it not?—Not so much to the cross visitor. It was due to the appointment of a superintendent relieving officer, who does act as cross visitor, and the establishment of the Case Paper system there.

12700. That was the influence, really, of the change of feeling on the part of the board?—I think the change of feeling on the part of the board resulted in the appointment of the superintendent relieving officer and the other matter also.

12701. Would you say there was an exaggerated outdoor relief before that date, and that this action of the board and of the visitor points that out?—I think there was an unnecessary amount of out-relief given previously to that.

12702. Did the Local Government Board at all give any advice about the question?—I do not think the board did. I personally occasionally did.

12703. Was it due to your intervention at all that the change was made?—To some extent, but I do not wish to take too much credit for it.

12704. Was it due to the fact at all that the rates were rising?—Yes, certainly, partly to that.

12705. You could not say what the rates were and how far the rates had risen in that time?—I am afraid I could not.

lation tween ict out lief and lant rtality.

12706. With regard to your answer to a question by Mrs. Webb, as to the relation between outdoor relief and a possible effect on the infantile death rate, did you read Dr. Milsom Rhodes' Report on that question?—No, I did not.

12707. You have possibly examined the figures yourself?—I cannot say I have. To tell you the truth, I rather hoped I might escape having to answer that question, as it is a medical one.

12708. You know the allegation was based on out-relief pure and simple, and not on medical data. The amount of outdoor relief was supposed to be a sign of the degree of infantile mortality, so that it really was based on the amount of normal outdoor relief, and not medical relief entirely. You have not examined the figures yourself?—No, I confess I have not.

ffect of lministra- on on t-relief.

12709. With regard to your answer to a question put by Mr. Nunn, would you say that these groupings of outdoor relief to total relief are in the main, a question of administration?—I do not know that one could say in the main. I think undoubtedly administration has a great deal to do with it, particularly in unions having a much larger percentage of poor people than others.

12710. Would you say it was due to administration in Bethnal Green?—I should say it was.

12711. Would you say in Marylebone it was due to administration?—Marylebone is a fairly well-to-do parish.

12712. Would it be due mainly to administration?—Possibly, yes.

12713. Would you say the same of Westminster?—Yes.

12714. Then practically this system of a restricted outdoor relief may be adopted in either rich or poor districts?—Restricted?

12715. That is to say, under 20 per cent.?—Bethnal Green, Kensington, Marylebone, St. George's-in-the-East, St. Giles', Strand, Whitechapel, are under 20 per cent.—it is possible but difficult.

lien paupers t Bethnal reen.

12716. (Mrs. Webb.) Would not the foreigners come in in Bethnal Green?—To a certain extent; they are only beginning to arrive there.

12717. (Mr. Lansbury.) There are 4,000 on the list?—I did not know that.

12718. (Mr. Loch.) Would the number of 4,000 in Bethnal Green have an effect on the result?—I think some effect.

12719. How much?—I could not say how much.

12720. Would it be infinitesimal?—It would not be considerable, certainly.

ffect of estricting ut-relief.

12721. Would it not show that these unions in different parts of London, some rich, some poor, adopting a policy of restricted outdoor relief have been able to do so without any evil results, to your knowledge?—To my knowledge, certainly, without.

12722. Would you imply by that that there were evil results from this policy which are unknown to you?—No, I do not want to imply that.

12723. Therefore, practically this policy of restricted outdoor relief may apply to any of these districts without harm to the people?—I think it might.

12724. It does?—It does in these four parishes you have mentioned.

12725. Does it not in other unions?—I do not know that it does not; I do not know why it should.

12726. The policy, as it stands, is satisfactory from your point of view?—I think so. I think, as I said before, it is desirable to keep outdoor relief down as low as possible.

Adequacy of relief and of inquiry as to income.

12727. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) I think you have said that you considered the inquiry on the cases generally is sufficient but do you apply that to outdoor relief cases in general?—I think I would in general. There may be exceptions, but I think as a rule there is plenty of information supplied.

12728. So that the guardians really have adequate information to go upon?—I think, speaking generally, yes.

12729. The reason I ask you is this: I have here a list of fourteen cases in which the total income after the relief was counted and after the rent is paid, varies from 1s. 3d. to 3s. 6d. a week. That is to say, that is on the relieving officer's statement that is given to the guardians. Do you consider that the guardians gave that knowing the full circumstances of the case and considering it adequate to the needs?—No, I am afraid they leave a good deal to the imagination in cases of that sort.

12730. They assume that they have not got full information?—Yes, in many cases of that sort, I think so.

12731. Two shillings a week to live upon, even after rent is paid, is cruelly inadequate?—That is an observation one has made oneself often. One feels there is something behind it which they cannot get at.

12732. You think in all those cases there is some income coming in, or do you think that these people are really suffering?—The income is possibly supplemented to a certain extent.

12733. In the cases I have mentioned, I have gone through what the relieving officer says very carefully. As in many of them there are no children, it is impossible to see where the resources could come from. I think these are only specimens of a very much larger number?—That may be so.

12734. Really the guardians are acting in these cases on the assumption that they have not information on the cases?—I suppose it is difficult to combat the suggestion, it is so.

12735. Do you know whether the relieving officers enquiring into these cases ever verify the statements of the applicants?—Yes, I believe they do.

12736. I have looked through about 200, and I think that in not more than a few of those is there any verification?—That is not in Bermondsey.

Adequacy of inquiry as to relatives liable for maintenance.

12737. I do not think it is fair to mention the name of the union. There is, I believe, a return which they are supposed to make where the relations are liable for maintenance, they are supposed to inquire into the circumstances, but my experience shows that that return is always filled up by information from the applicants, the old father and mother themselves, and that reference is hardly ever made to the relations?—I do not think that is satisfactory.

12738. Do you think that is general in London?—No, I should think it is not.

12739. You think that would be exceptional to the particular union?—I should hope so.

12740. Is there any means of compelling adequacy of out-relief, or is it left entirely to the discretion of the guardians?—I think it is left entirely to the discretion of the guardians.

Inadequate out-relief.

12741. It would be the case, would it not, that these old women, receiving from 1s. 3d. to 2s. a week to live upon, would be far better off in the workhouse?—One does not know, possibly in some cases they would.

12742. Supposing that that is their real income, assuming that a person has only 1s. 3d. to live upon?—Their material circumstances would be better in a workhouse than outside.

12743. In three at least of the cases, the condition of the home is described by the relieving officer as being in a filthy state, and one as having no furniture at all. The guardians sometimes take no notice of the recommendation of the relieving officer I find; is that so, do you think?—I hope not.

Effect of decreasing out-relief.

12744. Referring again to the question of the increase of indoor relief in Bermondsey, the connection that is generally asserted is that it is the policy of outdoor relief which gradually teaches a lesson of unthrift, and it takes some little time for that to act upon the number who go into the workhouse?—Yes, I think you may say that, outdoor relief being easier to get, naturally persons are more disposed to take that form of relief and become dependent upon others than if they had to go through the difficult process of going into the workhouse.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1906.

12745. When that policy is reversed, the people do not at once learn the reverse lesson of maintaining themselves?—Unfortunately not.

12746. So it is natural that at first the tendency would be to fill the workhouse?—Yes.

12747. It would take some time for it to become effective?—Yes.

Connection between increase in medical out-relief and increase in number of aliens.

12748. (Dr. Downes.) On the question of medical relief and aliens, I do not know whether you are aware that there has been a rise in the number of medical Orders for outdoor relief of late years in some of the unions of London. Do you know if there is any connection between that and the relief of aliens?—I am not sure, but I may say that in St. George's-in-the-East it was noticed that the numbers of Orders had gone up considerably, and it was suggested that in that particular case the officer concerned was giving undue favour to Jews, and with a change of officer the increase diminished; but, so far as aliens are concerned, up to the present they have been confined almost to one comparatively limited part of London. They are spreading into Bethnal Green and Mile End now, but, with regard to these particular cases here, I take it, in every one of those cases, Mile End, St. George's, Stepney and Whitechapel, there was a good percentage of Jews amongst them.

12749. In the last return that I have of the outdoor medical relief for London there are over 17,000 people on the permanent list. I notice at Bethnal Green there are none on the permanent list, but at Camberwell, which comes next alphabetically after Bethnal Green there are 2,666?—That is so.

12750. Is there any reason why Camberwell should have such a large number on the permanent list?—None whatever.

12751. Do you think it desirable in London to have large lists of people on permanent relief?—No, I think if I were a guardian myself I should try and persuade my colleagues to have no permanent list at all.

Publication of extracts from Orders of Local Government Board.

12752. You speak of the desirability of selections from the orders being issued to relieving officers. In the case of relieving officers outside the Metropolis, I think those extracts have been issued. I do not know whether they are in the Metropolis?—That was in 1896, I think. Those were confined to outside London only, why, precisely, I do not know, unless it was conceived that they know enough in London without it.

12753. It has been done outside London, but not inside London?—Yes.

Medical relief of aliens in Poplar.

12754. Could you tell me what happens to the alien in Poplar who wants medical relief, having regard to the table which you have handed in?—He has to go without, I suppose.

12755. (Mrs. Webb.) There is no rule that relief should not be given to aliens?—Not that I know of, this is a fact reported by Mr. Harper, the statistical officer of the London County Council.

12756. Ought not that to be "No aliens," simply?—I copied his return as I got it.

12757. (Mr. Phelps.) Do you pay much attention to the question of the outdoor relief in a district?—Yes.

12758. Do you follow up the cases?—I cannot say I follow up the cases.

Proposed assistant inspector of out-relief in London.

12759. Do you think it would be a good thing if, for the purpose of London, there was an assistant inspector appointed specially for outdoor relief?—It might be useful, certainly.

12760. You would rather welcome such an assistant?—Yes, I think he would be useful.

12761. Do you find that boards of guardians are very much guided by tradition?—Yes.

Out-relief policy in City of London.

12762. Taking the City of London, the City of London Board has for a very long time adopted the outdoor relief policy, has not it?—I do not know that one can say that, they have not a very large number; their percentage is based upon the comparatively small number of persons sleeping there. The last time I was at their relief meeting was about two months ago, and I should not say from recollection that their method of dealing was one which could be called a lax one.

Administration in rich and poor unions.

12763. Some of your unions comprise populations which are partly rich and partly poor, and some are in the main poor?—Yes.

12764. Do you notice any difference of administration classifying it in that way?—No, Bethnal Green may certainly be said to be a poor parish, so may Whitechapel, so may St. George's in the East. There the outdoor relief is low. On the other hand, proportionately the outdoor relief in St. George's, Hanover Square, is high, there they have spots of poverty within the union, but taking the union as a whole, the rateable value per head must be considerably greater than most East End parishes.

Proper number of cases for relieving officer.

12765. When you say in your return that the proportion of paupers to relieving officers is 316, does that mean individuals or cases?—That means individuals. You would have to divide that by about four to get the actual cases.

12766. In that case it would be about 80?—Yes, something about that.

12767. Eighty different homes or centres of population?—Yes.

12768. Do you think that is a fair number for a man to have to look after?—As I think I have said, a good deal depends on the man. It is almost impossible to say what is a fitting number for a relieving officer to have to deal with. A witness before the Aged Poor Commission of 1895 recommended 150.

12769. That was cases, not individuals?—Yes, You may have a case which is a man with a wife and six or seven children. He could deal with that family at one visit without very much harm.

Inadequacy of relieving officers' salaries.

12770. You think that the remuneration of relieving officers, is, as a rule, inadequate?—Yes, I really do.

12771. Is that because you would wish to see a different stamp of man filling the office?—I do not want to go so far as that. I think many of our present relieving officers are very good men indeed.

The class of men desirable as relieving officers.

12772. Dismissing the present from one's thought, would you wish to see a state of things in which a very different class of people had the office? For instance, would you think it might be a career for University men?—Yes, it might be, I think.

12773. What I want to get at is this: Do you think it a good thing for a relieving officer to be nearer in class to the cases, or removed from them?—I think it is not altogether disadvantageous. I mean, I can think of certain relieving officers who do their work as well as any University man could, both in inquiring and visiting, and keeping their books, and so on; they are sympathetic, but, at the same time, they are careful in their inquiries and do all their work very well.

12774. And you do not think that it would be an unreasonable objection that the men should be so far removed from them that he would approach them more in the way that the Charity Organisation Society's visitors do?—No, I think I have said in my report somewhere that the methods of the Charity Organisation Society might be taken note of by relieving officers, whatever class they belonged to originally.

12775. Do you think you might look forward to a time when a salary of £400 a year might not be uncommon for a relieving officer?—I do not know what the Receiver of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund might say to that.

12776. I am only asking the question?—I have already stated my opinion, and it is all summed up in that: I think a relieving officer, a good man, is worth more than he gets at present. I am hardly prepared to go so far as to say what he ought to get.

12777. Supposing you were creating an ideal system. Would you prefer to see a class of relieving officers very different from the present class, or would you think the present class would be the best?—I have known so many good relieving officers that I do not want to say anything which would seem disparaging to them as a class.

Considerations by guardians of condition of home of applicant for out-relief.

12778. I do not want to suggest that either, from my own experience of them. Do you know any board of guardians who have strong rules with regard to the character of the houses to which they send out-relief?—I cannot say that I do.

12779. Who have a standard with regard to the size of the rooms or the number of rooms?—I cannot call to mind any set of rules in which that is one of the articles; but I would not say that there are not one or two where it may be so. If it were not the rule, I would make that a condition in many instances.

12780. Is the advice of the relieving officer taken on a thing of that sort often?—I think it is in most cases, though in some cases not, but in the majority of cases I should think they would not give relief where the house was in an insanitary condition.

12781. They have a fairly high standard of house?—Yes, I think, so as a rule.

12782. Would they give it to a man in a common lodging house?—Some do, but as a rule I do not think it is given.

12783. Is the opinion of the medical officer generally followed in a matter of that sort; take the cases of a man with phthisis?—Yes.

12784. He would say he ought to be treated in an institution, and the man may decline to come in, or be unwilling to come in?—I think it would be followed.

12785. If he could point out that it would be a danger to a family?—I think so. I do not think there is any reluctance on the part of the guardians as a rule. I think they are only too willing to act on it.

12786. Would they enforce the suggestion?—I am not sure that they could. They would endeavour to.

12787. On the whole, you think the opinion of the officer has a fair weight with the average board of guardians?—I think on the whole it has; there are exceptions, of course.

Circulation of lists of paupers.

12788. (Miss Hill.) You have referred to an order of February 14th, 1878, as to the circulation of lists of paupers. That, I suppose, was a permissive, and not a compulsory order?—It was permissive.

12789. There are certain boards of guardians where it was done more extensively than it is now. It that not so?—Yes, I think it has dropped out to a considerable extent.

12790. It is no longer issued, as it was in some cases, to those whom you consider legitimately interested?—Not generally; it is in some cases. In Marylebone, for instance, it is.

12791. It is no longer issued in Marylebone, is it?—I was told it is so issued, by Mr. Dudman, the clerk, only a few days ago. I gathered that as a matter of fact it is sent to all the clergy. I was given a list of those to whom it was sent.

12792. It continues to be sent to the clergy there, does it?—Yes.

12793. I do not think it is so much circulated in Marylebone as it used to be?—It is sent quite regularly to the clergy.

Effect of administration on relief.

12794. Did you know Marylebone at the time that the out-relief was smaller than it is now?—I think the out-relief began to go up just after 1894.

12795. That surely was a question of administration and not of increased poverty?—I think that is very possible. They had a certain section on the new Board who were in favour of out-relief rather than of restricting it.

12796. And the indoor relief went up with the outdoor relief?—Yes, I believe it did.

12797. That would be a case distinctly where the rise in pauperism was due to administration and not to conditions?—To a considerable extent, I think.

Relation between uncertain relief and death rate.

12798. With regard to this question of whether the strict administration of medical relief has the effect of raising the infantile death rate, that is a difficult thing to prove one way or the other?—Very, I should think.

12799. Does it occur to you that there is a considerable danger in increasing either the death rate or illness from from the supply of various uncertain sources of relief, so that people are depending less on their own resources?—Yes, I think there may be.

12800. It has often seemed to me that the danger was far greater of all those various sources of relief coming uncertainly; I do not know whether your experience would point in the same way?—I think one might take that as a reasonable conclusion, in any case, without knowing much about the infantile death rate.

Rules for out-relief adopted by London guardians.

12801. (Mr. Bentham.) Could you tell us in what unions in London rules are in operation for the guidance of the guardians in distributing out-door relief?—I could not tell you off-hand, but in a great many.

12802. You could not give us the names of the unions?—I had intended getting that, but it is a thing one cannot always carry in one's mind. It does not always follow that they are followed. Poplar has some excellent rules for outdoor relief, I remember.

12803. You could not give us the names of the unions: it might be useful at this point?—No, I am sorry I have not been able to get them; but in a great number of the handbooks that the Guardians issue you find printed rules.

12804. In answer to a question put by Mr. Lansbury you say: "It is not the rule, I should say, in the metropolis, to give out-relief to widows (able-bodied) where there are no children, and still less so to able-bodied single women with or without children." It is not the rule to do so; but it is not often, in practice, done?—I think not, except in this way: you may find an able-bodied single woman in a family, who will possibly be living with her parents, and consequently share in the temporary relief.

Out-relief to able-bodied women.

12805. But it is quite the exception?—I think so.

12806. Do you find it often the case that persons who are living with relatives, where the united income of the household is sufficient for the support of all its members, whether such relatives are legally liable to support the applicants or not, are given relief?—It does happen, no doubt, but I think as a general rule guardians recover what they can.

Relief in cases where income of household adequate.

12807. I do not mean with regard to recovery. Is relief given in a case where the united income is sufficient for all, because of the destitution of one person in the house—that is, destitution in the sense that the person has no property in his own rights, as it were, but is dependent on the other members of the household?—One could not say it is never done, but I should think it was the exception. If a case of that sort happened to occur when I was present I should suggest it was not a proper case for relief. I do not think it is done very generally.

12808. Have you examined cases with the object of ascertaining whether that is so?—No, I have not.

12809. Do you often sit with the relief committees when they are hearing applications for relief?—Yes.

12810. Does this point never arise, that the income of the family is given, or the income of the occupants of the house is given, and in other cases that the relieving officer has no information with regard to the occupants, because they are not legally liable?—I think that may occur.

12811. The guardians in those cases would give relief without insisting upon knowing the incomes of those living in the house?—They would sometimes, but I do not think they would as a rule.

12812. Does that account for your not knowing that it is often done?—Yes, it may be.

12813. In fact, the information is not there, although the guardians have rules to the effect that relief shall not be given when the total income is sufficient?—Yes.

12814. They do not intend to give it?—Yes.

12815. You do not know whether relieving officers have instructions not to get such information?—I do not know that.

12816. Not to ascertain the wages of those not legally liable?—I do not know that they have instructions not to inquire.

12817. Do you think it is the practice not to do so?—I should think not.

Proper allocation of a relieving officer's time.

12818. You have said, I think, that you are unable to give an analysis of the average amount and description of the relieving officers' daily work in London?—I may tell you that I think a good rule is this: that the relieving officer of each union, or each of the relieving officers of every union, should have certain stated hours at which they should be either at the relief station, or at their homes, so that people should know, at two periods of the day, where they can be found. For the rest of the time a relieving officer should be going round his district, except at such times as he is making up his books.

Comparison of status of relieving officers and workhouse masters.

12819. You have also said, I think, that "There is no comparison whatever between the responsibilities and difficulties of a relieving officer and those of a master of a workhouse." Of course, you attach far more importance to the position of the relieving officer than that of a workhouse master?—Yes. My views are expressed in that answer as well as I can do it.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1903.

12820. Are the workhouse masters better paid than the relieving officers ?—I think they are, because, you see, in addition to their salaries, they have comfortable apartments, they have their food provided for them, they have no rent, rates or taxes to pay, and they have no trouble of that sort.

12821. You think, taking their salaries and emoluments, they are much better paid than relieving officers, as a body ?—I will not say much better, but they are better, because a relieving officer in London only reaches his maximum of £200 after twenty years.

12822. You have not stated the salaries that are given to workhouse masters ?—No, I have not, but I could get you certainly some typical cases by to-morrow morning, with regard to some of the larger workhouses. (Table handed in. See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (F)).

Relieving officers holding other offices.

12823. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Do you know whether, in London, the relieving officers hold other offices besides that of relieving officer : for instance, are they registrars ?—In some instances, not many. I think you will find that the registrars, to a great extent, are in the clerk's office.

12824. Are they vaccination officers ?—Very rarely, I think. I do not think there is one at the present moment, but I am not quite sure.

Methods of improving out-relief administration.

12825. (Mrs. Webb.) Supposing you had a certain amount of money to spend on relieving officers in each union, would you be inclined to recommend the appointment of a superintendent at a good wage, or to recommend the levelling up of the salaries of the relieving officers. Which would you regard as more important, the appointment of a superintendent or the levelling up of the relieving officers' salaries ?—I should like to answer that by saying I should like both.

12826. Which do you consider the more important ?—I think to have a good superintendent to start with.

Superintendent relieving officers and their proper qualifications.

12827. You would propose that the superintendent should be of a rather different class of man from the relieving officer. What sort of man have you got in your mind ?—I do not like to say that, because the present superintendent relieving officers are much of the same stuff, they have been promoted from one to the other.

12828. Supposing you were to appoint a superintendent relieving officer, what type of man would you take ?—I could think of two of the present superintendent relieving officers, who would do as well as anyone I could think of.

12829. They have been relieving officers ?—Yes, both of them in point of fact.

Qualifications and examinations for relieving officers.

12830. Would you suggest that superintendents should be qualified by some examination as to their knowledge of Poor Law, like a sanitary inspector is for instance ?—I think it would be useful. There is an association now who are inviting persons who are proposing to become relieving officers to acquire useful information about what they will have to do before they take it up. But there is no examination and no regulation of that sort, at present.

12831. Would you suggest there should be an examination for relieving officers of about the same sort of level that there is for sanitary inspectors ?—I think it is very desirable that guardians should be assured before they appoint a man that he has some knowledge of what the duties and responsibilities will be.

12832. That would prevent jobbery in its grosser forms, would it not ?—Yes.

12833. There is a handbook for relieving officers by Hadley, which was published in 1902 ?—I did not know of that. When I made my previous answer I was thinking of one that was published some time ago by one of our clerks. No doubt any persons who wish can always acquaint themselves generally with the outlines of what a relieving officer's duties are.

12834. To return to the question of examination, you would definitely suggest that it would be desirable that there should be some sort of qualification in respect of the subjects of the same sort of level that you have in the case of a sanitary inspector ?—I will not say I suggest it, but I will accept the suggestion.

Effect of industrial conditions on pauperism.

12835. You are of opinion, I think, that irregular hours, low earnings, and insanitary conditions result in destitution ?—Yes, I think they do contribute to it.

12836. Would you say that also with regard to casual labour apart from insufficient wages—merely irregularity of labour ?—Yes, irregularity of labour must, I think, tend to predispose a person to fall out of the ranks of work, and so possibly require assistance from others.

12837. In regard to that question, would you necessarily say that the extent of relief given in the union is an index of the amount of destitution suffered ?—The amount of out-relief given ?

Difficulty restricting out-relief absence o charities.

12838. Yes, supposing you were to withdraw the out-relief, might not you have destitution ?—I think as to that I should like to say that my views concur with that of the Royal Commission on Aged Poor in 1893, in which they say that out-relief is liable to abuse. I should say that wherever restricted administration of out-relief is adopted, it must go hand in hand with charity and assistance from outside.

12839. If you had a district in which there was no charity or very little charity, you could not apply the restricted out-relief ?—I think it would be risky to do so.

London Relief Committee Administrati and its methods.

12840. (Mr. Lansbury.) Guardians in London do not rotate, that is they do not go from one district to another as a rule ?—No, in Croydon they have district relief committees, and when they were established it was made a condition that guardians non-resident in the particular district of the committee should take part in the proceedings, but as a matter of fact the condition after a time came to be disregarded. In London they do not rotate.

12841. From your experience, sitting at committees or boards where they are giving relief is it true that as a rule the guardians take the advice of the relieving officers ?—I think they do as a rule. It would be too much to say invariably.

12842. I mean from your own observation ?—I should say they do.

12843. Where they have a superintendent relieving officer, he, as a rule, takes the committee, and not the clerk, does he not ?—At the relief committee either the clerk or his assistant sits where there is not any superintendent relieving officer ?—You are thinking perhaps of the Relief Order Book ?

12844. Yes ?—It happens in your case ; your superintendent relieving officer does so.

12845. I wondered if he did everywhere else ?—No, in a good many places either the clerk or the assistant clerk takes that book. Particularly where the relief is done by district committees, it by no means follows that the clerk himself is present, but as a rule they have a member of the clerks staff there to enter up the book as required by the District Relief Committee Order.

12846. Would not it be better if the superintendent relieving officer did attend all the meetings so that he would get to know really practically all the cases ?—I am under the impression, taking the superintendent relieving officers as a whole, that they do attend.

12847. That is all I want to know ?—I misunderstood your question, I thought you were referring to the Relief Order Book.

Informati as to inco of relative not legally liable for maintenar

12848. You do not know of any case where the relieving officers do not get full particulars as to the income of friends and relations and all the rest of it ?—I do not, but apparently there are cases in which they do not, but I was surprised to hear it.

12849. You have never dropped across any during the years you have been inspector ?—Possibly now and again I may have. I do not think it is the rule, I can honestly say that.

12850. You have never found a board of guardians or committee deliberately telling a relieving officer not to get certain information ?—No, I never have.

Best type man for relieving officer.

12851. Now as to University men for relieving officers. Would you think that men who have had some experience of ordinary life would be the best kind of men to act as relieving officers ?—I tried to get out of giving a definite answer to that question. I think it really does not matter very much what class the man comes from, so long as he has intelligence and energy.

12852. I suppose you know all about the training at Oxford ?—Is there anything special about the training at Oxford that would adapt a man especially for a relieving officer ?—I do not know that I know very much of the training at Oxford.

Charities in East End of London.

12853. With regard to the general question of out-relief, we heard something just now about charities. Do you know of your own knowledge what charities there happen to be in, say, Bethnal Green, Poplar, St. George's-in-the-East, or Whitechapel?—No, I do not, but I said in answer to somebody else's question, the Charity Organisation Society publish annually a very useful book, a digest, in which I think information is given regarding pretty well all the charities existing in the district.

12854. In districts where there are no charities you cannot co-operate?—No, certainly not.

Population and proportion of aliens in Whitechapel.

12855. That brings me to this, on the question of conditions in comparing unions; have you studied those figures with regard to population in Whitechapel and Poplar, because they are the two unions that strikingly show differences of policy. I have just done it. I make the Whitechapel population in 1871 according to your figures a total of 76,046. Of those, there are aliens, 8,063, leaving a Gentile population of 67,983. In 1901 that populaiton had only increased to 78,768, but the aliens had increased from 8,063, to 29,188, leaving a total Gentile population of 49,580; but the figures for Poplar are these: In 1871 the total population was 116,277, aliens 1,070, total Gentile population 115,207, but during the thirty years the total population has gone up to 168,822, and the aliens have increased from 1,070 to 2,000 roughly, leaving a Gentile population of 166,718, which was an excess over Whitechapel of 117,000 Gentiles? —Quite true.

12856. I want to put it to you whether it is fair to compare a union where you have only one third of the Gentile population, with a union like Poplar?—No, I think the circumstances are not really quite fairly comparable, though of course the percentage of the pauperism in Whitechapel—we have not worked that out—on the Gentile population, would conceivably be lower than that of Poplar.

Percentage of pauperism to Gentile population in certain unions.

12857. I want that done, if you do not mind. It is the next question I am going to ask you: Whether you can give us a table to show us the percentage of pauperism to the Gentile population in 1871 and 1901 of St. George's in the East, Whitechapel, and Poplar. I have worked it out myself, and the net result is rather astonishing. We are still ahead, I know?—I will try to get that for you. (Subsequently sent. See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (G)).

Conditions in Whitechapel Union.

12858. Did you know Whitechapel in 1870?—I believe Whitechapel then was in a parlous condition, owing to injudicious charity thrown into it from other parts of London.

12859. Did you know anything of the conditions of Whitechapel?—I cannot say I did.

12860. You could not tell us the amount of population that lived there?—No.

12861. It is obvious, is it not, that if the population is practically stationary there must be something to account for it, and what I want to ask you is whether it is not a fact that huge warehouses have been erected all through there, and that the district railway has cut out a very big slice of the area where potential paupers used to live?—I cannot speak of that from my own knowledge, but I think it is the fact from observation. Going about in Whitechapel one has noticed in the course of some years past that there has been a disappearance of the old small tenement houses, and warehouses and other buildings have been erected in their places.

Housing schemes and their effects in Bethnal Green: numbers of aliens.

12862. I am leaving out St. George's in the East, because we shall get the percentage of pauperism later on with regard to that. I understand that you put Bethnal Green rather in the same category that you put Poplar in?—As regards the condition of the people, yes, except that I should qualify that, that they have not in Bethnal Green the same amount of casual labour that you have in Poplar.

12863. Is not it also true that the county council cleared, one of the very vilest slum districts that there was in London, namely, the Boundary Street area?—Yes, they did.

12864. Is not it true that they wiped out a considerable amount of potential pauperism?—I am not sure as to that. The clerk to Bethnal Green tells me that the effect of that clearance for the time being was to scatter the poor who lived in the Boundary Street area in other parts of Bethnal Green and, only to some extent, outside the parish.

12865. I am going to deal with that, because that is an answer that has been given me before. It is about ten years ago that that area was cleared. It was the first act of the new county council when it came in?—It is rather more than ten years ago, I think.

12866. Do you know Bethnal Green Road?—Yes.

12867. Have you been down Bethnal Green Road lately? —I have not been there since Christmas.

12868. My point is this, that coming up from Spitalfields where the Jewish Ghetto is, is it not the fact that the whole of that has overflowed into the northern part of Bethnal Green?—You mean to say there is a considerable increase of Jewish population?

12869. Yes, during the last six years?—I believe it is common knowledge that there has been.

12870. Have you heard that there has been a great agitation there because Sundays now in Bethnal Green are really just like any other day, because of the tremendous amount of business carried on by the Jews there?—I cannot speak to that of my own knowledge, but I have not the least doubt, if you say so, it is true.

12871. I will ask whether you heard of another clearance in Bethnal Green Road, which took place three years ago, Pondsbury Gardens. Did the clerk tell you of that?—No, he did not.

12872. Where a whole block of slum property was swept away. Did you hear of the riots that took place because a notice was put up that no English tenants need apply; they filled the whole of the property up with aliens?—I confess I have not heard of that.

12873. If that is true, does not that cause a strict administration of relief?—Assuming those facts to be correctly stated, it would mean that there would be an increased number of the population less likely to gravitate to Poor Law relief than the Gentile population would.

Casual labour and pauperism.

12874. You have already said that casual labour, the hours and conditions, would affect pauperism?—I think so.

Unhealthy conditions in Poplar.

12875. On the question of medical relief, do you know the Hackney Wick district of Poplar—the marsh district? —Yes.

12876. Do you think that those conditions would probably be conducive of disease among the people, which would compel them to get relief somewhere or other?—I should say it was not a very healthy district; beyond that I could not say whether how far the conditions would conduce to pauperism.

12877. With regard to the Adequate Relief Circular there has been considerable agitation, not only in London, but in the country, for old-age pensions. Is not it true that that circular came out really as a kind of suggestion that guardians might meet the demand for old-age pensions by giving outdoor relief to the aged deserving poor?—I have no knowledge that that was the object of it, I think that there was some special reference to old people being forced into the workhouse, but, with that exception, there was nothing more than the circulars of the Poor Law board have always advocated, that if you do give relief of any sort it ought to be adequate.

Mr. Chaplin's circular and its interpretation in Camberwell and Poplar.

12878. From your knowledge of Camberwell and Poplar, which are the two big outdoor relief boards in London, is it not true that that policy is a policy which has for its object not so much the relief of destitution as the relief of poverty in old age?—I do not know that I have heard it said in so many words that that was the object of the guardians.

Relief to aged persons not actually destitute.

12879. It does amount to that really?—It may very possibly be so.

12880. That is what it amounts to, does it not; a person does not have to be actually destitute in either of those unions to get outdoor relief?—No, I think not.

12881. It is true, is it not, that the department laid it down that respectable decent persons were not to be driven into the workhouse?—Yes, they did.

12882. And, if a board of guardians acts on that and gives adequate relief outside, so far they are doing what the board has said was a right thing to do?—That is so.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1906.

12884. I am only speaking of aged people; I am not thinking of able-bodied people at all?—The order did apply specially to aged.

12884. The circular was definitely to discourage the breaking up of homes and driving respectable decent people into the workhouse?—I should like to have the circular to refer to, in answer to that. I do not want to go beyond what the circular said. On referring to it I find it says: "The board consider that aged deserving persons should not be urged to enter the workhouse at all, unless there is some cause which renders such a course necessary, such as infirmity of mind or body, the absence of house accommodation, or of a suitable person to care for them, or some similar cause, but that they should be relieved by having adequate outdoor relief granted to them."

12885. If a board of guardians act on the principles laid down in that circular, obviously there would be an increase of pauperism in their district. People would not have so much objection to getting adequate outdoor relief that they would to having adequate indoor relief?—They certainly would not, I should think.

12886. Therefore, Poplar and Camberwell, in that respect, were definitely carrying out the desire of the President for the time being of the Local Government Board?—I think that they had begun, before that, to give a good deal of out-relief.

12887. I know, but they only intelligently anticipated what the central body would do?—You are perhaps entitled to put that construction on it.

Figures as to out-relief in Poplar and Camberwell.

12888. (Chairman.) Assuming that Camberwell and Poplar had the same ideas, let us see what the result is. Taking Camberwell, I find from your figures (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (C.) that in 1902 the outdoor relief was 4,695?—Yes.

12889. What was it in 1905?—4,685.

12890. Now let us look at Poplar in 1902?—It was 2,555.

12891. And in 1905?—7,059.

12892. Though the policy may have been the same, it bore somewhat different fruit?—Apparently.

12893. (Mr. Lansbury.) You have taken just the year that hits Poplar very badly. You will only want to do the fair thing, I am sure. We shall come to the reason for that being 7,059. As you are aware, that was caused by the fact that we had 500 able-bodied men, with their wives and children, included in that. The proper year to take would be the year before 1901, and 1904 should be the other year?—That large figure includes a considerable number of persons other than the aged.

Out-relief in aid of sweated labour.

12894. It is not the aged. The real figure should be 3,484?—Yes.

12895. (Chairman.) You have with you a box of exhibits produced by persons of various ages in receipt of relief, which shows that relief is given to persons employed in what are called sweated industries?—Yes, but I am afraid I have been rather anticipated by the exhibition got up by the Daily News. I should, however, like the Commission to see the contents of the box.

12896. Assuming this was a question which the Commission thought of further investigating, in what parts of London would you advise us to push our investigation as to the relation of sweated industries to poor relief?—Enquiries might be made in Bermondsey, Bethnal Green, Westminster, Holborn and Whitechapel.

12897. You have given, not only your general impression, but an impression which, to some extent, was supported by facts?—Yes. These particular facts came from Bethnal Green only.

12898. Is there at all a profuse system of outdoor relief there?—No, not at all; on the contrary. That is the remarkable part about it.

12898a. Bethnal Green is a union which gives very little outdoor relief?—That is so.

12899. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Is it not the fact that in these sweating cases the members of the family work together, the children and all, and each earns very little?—Yes, they supplement the relief. It is a question of cause or effect; I do not know quite which it is.

12900. (Mr. Nunn.) With regard to the answer you have already given me as to the training of relieving officers, would you be inclined to say that a relieving officer required not merely a training in the actual Consolidated Order, Article 215, but that he would be better for a training in the general principles and the history of the Poor Law?—Yes; he might with advantage know something of those certainly.

The proper training for relieving officers and superintendent relieving officers.

12901. He would hardly find that in the General Orders or in the Manual, would he?—No, I am afraid he would not.

12902. A superintendent of relieving officers especially ought, one would suppose, to have received a certain amount of training in the principles and history of the actual law on the subject?—He ought to have received a certain amount of training in the general principles certainly.

12903. As a matter of fact, I suppose the superintendents are drawn from the ranks of the relieving officers, as a rule?—Yes, that is so.

12904. So that, as a matter of fact, even the men who are at the top of the tree in regard to relieving-officership, are men who have practically not had a training?—They have not had a training beyond that of their experience as relieving officers.

Possibility of Local Government Board issuing more precise rules as to out-relief.

12905. Then with regard to the possibility of rules being framed for boards of guardians, I believe the Local Government Board does prescribe within certain limits certain schemes of classification or certain divisions within the house?—Yes.

12906. Might it not be on all fours with those Orders and Regulations to make perfectly definite orders with regard to outdoor relief, giving a classification of applicants and a classification of the amounts desirable for them?—I do not know that I can go beyond the answer I have already given. I think it would be so very difficult in the case of outdoor relief to frame anything but very general orders.

12907. Have not certain boards of guardians made regulations which relate to their own administration of outdoor relief?—Yes, they have.

12908. And which do not really interfere with the responsibility and exercise of discretion on the part of the relieving officers?—That is so. But then circumstances vary so much in different localities, that any rules of the Central Department with regard to outdoor relief, would have to be general. On the other hand, I am really not fully acquainted with all the details of the document mentioned by Dr. Downes this morning, which was issued to country unions; but I am bound to say that I do not see any reason why many of the details which it may contain, should not apply equally to London.

Publication of extracts from Orders of Local Government Board.

12909. Might that document be put in?—Yes (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (H)). I think it is not so much a circular, properly speaking, as a statement of the duties of relieving officers and medical officers as embodied in various extracts from the General Orders.

The training of relieving officers.

12910. I suppose you cannot throw any light on this question, why that document was not sent to the London relieving officers?—No, I do not know why.

12911. The London relieving officers have an association of their own, I think, which arranges for courses of lectures?—Yes.

12912. Does it do anything in the way of training by going through case work with the officers?—Not that I know of.

12913. So that its work is purely theoretical?—Yes, I think it is.

12914. Have you ever heard of any case in which an officer went definitely to train with another relieving officer of established reputation, before he undertook the work?—No, the only case of the sort that comes to my mind, is that of Hampstead, where lately, I think, an assistant has been appointed, the idea being that he would in due course have sufficient experience and knowledge to succeed the present relieving officer. But I do not know that it is a common thing that persons have been appointed with that distinct object.

12915. When an ordinary relieving officer or an assistant relieving officer is appointed, is it understood that he will get a certain amount of training from his superiors?—It is understood so, but I cannot say that that it is by any means always the case.

Prestige of relieving officers with boards of guardians.

12916. In answer to a question that was put to you a short time ago, I think you said that your opinion was that boards of guardians, as a rule, accepted the advice of their relieving officers?—Did I say that? If so, perhaps I said rather too much there. I think they would act on their advice in a case in which there was doubt, and in which they thought the relieving officer's advice would be useful.

12917. I suppose that statement has to be accepted with this modification, that the relieving officer knows the board that he is dealing with, and the general atmosphere of the board, and that his training and previous experience would suggest one answer to, say, the guardians of St. George's-in-the-East, and another answer to a board like the Poplar Guardians, his advice being given according to what the general trend of opinion and the general action of his board were?—I think, human nature being what it is, one must assume something of that sort.

12918. It would be useless to give the same advice to both those boards, would it not?—Perhaps so. I do not know, positively of course, but I do not suggest that he would give the same advice to both.

Difficulty of restricting out-relief in absence of charities.

12919. With regard to another question that was raised by a previous Commissioner, it was said that without the co-operation of charity, it would be very difficult indeed to restrict the outdoor relief in London unions, and I think you agreed with that?—Yes, I did.

12920. But, as a matter of fact, London unions differ from those in the country, in this, I think that in every union in London there is a considerable amount of charity being given away?—In the majority of unions, I should say there was.

12921. And in every district there is a Charity Organisation Society which more or less focuses the charity of the district?—Yes; so that the agency for co-operation is already existing.

Co-operation between guardians and charities and its difficulties.

12922. On the other hand is there not a slight tendency on the part of boards of guardians to regard relief as their work, and to regard any suggestion of co-operation from the outside as an interference with their functions?—I think I said in my reply that I should be glad to see boards of guardians in closer co-operation with the Charity Organisation Society and with other charitable agencies in their locality. I think it is the fact that in some instances they rather demur to interference, or they do not think it worth while to co-operate, because they think they can do without extraneous help perhaps.

12923. It is not only, I think, that they consider it an interference with them in what they have a right to do, but that they are afraid that they may be regarded as neglecting their duties if they hand over any supposed functions of theirs to a charitable society?—I think probably that opinion also operates in some cases?

12924. Whereas, on the contrary, Mr. Goschen and other others who have followed him at the Local Government Board, have been of opinion that certain cases were much more suitable for private charity, and that guardians would be wise in referring such cases to private charity?—Yes. I think that is a view which certainly has been held by several people.

12925. So there would be no dereliction of their duty in handing over such cases at all?—No. I take it that in the great majority of cases, where an applicant is referred in the first instance to the Charity Organisation Society, or to some similar agency, that is done with a desire of preventing his coming on the rates and in the hope that he might be assisted otherwise.

Advantages of case paper system.

12926. In further reference to the grouping of London boards, I think you have said that the case paper system tended in the direction of restricting outdoor relief?—Yes, I think so. It is difficult to say precisely why, but it does seem to act in that way automatically.

12927. It gives the guardians a memory, for one thing?—Yes, that is one advantage of it.

12928. If they have rejected a case before, and it comes up again, they have all the facts before them if they have adopted the case paper system?—Yes. The advantage of the case paper system is that you have, as it were, the life history of each individual accessible. As I have said on previous occasions, when endeavouring to show the advantages of the case paper system, if you have an inquisitive guardian, and he asks a question about a case which has perhaps been heard three months before, in the ordinary course the Application and Report Book would not give the particular information asked for, and in order to get information of that sort, you would have probably to get another book and to send to another office, and so on: whereas with the case paper system the whole thing is self-contained, and everything that has happened is there on the file. In that way I think it leads to careful administration, or helps towards it at all events.

12929. I think also in unions where the case paper system is in force, the guardians have introduced a great many more questions and get fuller details than were given under the old application and report book system?—In some instances they have; at the same time I think that the information required by the application and report book is really sufficient for all purposes, only, in my opinion, it is not in such a convenient form.

12930. For instance, I think most boards of guardians have adopted special forms for describing the relatives who are liable to assist?—That is true.

12931. And in that way also, greater facilities have been given for taking account of those relatives?—True.

12932. Do you find it increases the interest that the relieving officers take in their work?—Yes, that is another result that I think it has. It is only natural that where, as originally established, the relieving officer has to continue to use this ponderous application and report book, and the case papers are, so to say, a mere addition, that he does not welcome with great enthusiasm a double set of entries; but where the case paper system is est b-lished, and where as, in a case like Paddington, you are able to curtail the amount of entries which the officer is obliged to make in the application and report book, I think you will find that most of those who have adopted the system will, as a rule, say they are glad of it. It has not increased their clerical work considerably, and on the other hand, it enables them, as you have suggested, to furnish and keep a fuller and more convenient record of the cases than the old system did.

Inquiries as to non-resident out-relief cases.

12933. I think in a good many unions of London there is some difficulty found, is there not, in getting relieving officers to take up inquiries for relieving officers of other unions?—I was not aware of that. As a rule, I should have said that they were willing to help one another; but there may be exceptions.

12934. You have not found any unwillingness, at any rate?—Really I am not aware of it. I do not know but that there may be individual cases in which they say "I will do what I am appointed to do and no more"; but I should have said—there may be exceptions, of course—that as a rule they were willing to help one another.

12935. Do you know that Paddington has appointed a relieving officer whose special duty it is to make extra-union inquiries?—Yes, but I was not aware that it was because of a difficulty of that sort. I thought it was probably because they considered that they would get more particular information through an officer of their own.

12936. Thinking that their own officer would be more interested in the case, and would therefore get better information?—Yes, better information than could be got secondhand, as it were, from another board's officers.

12937. Which system do you think is the best?—It stands to reason that an officer working for a particular board of guardians is likely to get more complete information about a case which he would have himself to report to his employers, than would be the information acquired secondhand from somebody else's servants.

12938. On the other hand, going into a strange union he would be going amongst people he does not know, and he would not be so much au courant with all the sources of information as would be an officer of that union?—No; but I should imagine that the man so appointed, although he was making the inquiries himself, would probably, in most instances, get the assistance of the local officer if he could.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1906.

12939. Do you think the ideal system would be for each union to have its officer for extra-union inquiries, who should consult with the officer of the union in which he was making the inquiries?—It depends rather on what the extra-union inquiries were to include. Do you mean merely inquiries relating to the non-resident poor?

12940. That he should get all information—any details possible about any particular case?—Yes, I think perhaps it would be a good system. My own view is, with regard to all cases, that you cannot have too much information and I think you will be more likely to get full information by relying upon a man employed by yourselves than relying upon somebody else's servant to give it you.

12941. Do you think that that would be more expensive than the present supposed method of employing the relieving officers of the union?—There would be an extra salary required, of course, if you appoint a man for that purpose.

12942. There would be a saving of the other officer's time. Do you believe it would be more expensive?—I think, to that extent, it would.

Desirability of appointing relieving officers as superintendent relieving officers.

12943. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) I want to get clearly your views as to the relieving officers. I think you rather regard it as desirable that theirs should be a profession with prizes, so to speak, and that a superintendent should be the goal of the ambition of an ordinary relieving officer?—I do not know that I should go so far as that, because, taking London, for instance, you can only have 28 superintendent relieving officers.

12944. Everybody does not necessarily get to the top of his profession, but there are certain prizes for some of the men, and if there were prizes in the profession of relieving officer, that would give them more interest in their work, I take it?—Yes; I think that is a fair way of putting it.

Training of relieving officers.

12945. In answer to Mr. Nunn you have said that the "present system of appointing assistant relieving officers, though it has its drawbacks, affords fairly good opportunities for training for the office of relieving officers." May I ask what you consider to be these fairly good opportunities for training?—I was thinking of the appointment of an assistant to a relieving officer who had already had some experience. By working with the relieving officer the assistant by degrees himself acquires experience and knowledge.

12946. But he starts without any training at all?—He would usually do so.

Relieving officers as "whole-timers."

12947. Do you think that in order to make it more of a profession, it would be desirable that the whole time of a man should be given to the work?—Yes. I think that if the relieving officer does his duty thoroughly, he cannot have much time to spare for any other things.

Women relieving officers.

12948. Are there any female relieving officers in London?—No. There are two women appointed for relief purposes, one in Southwark and one in Camberwell, but they are appointed especially for lying-in cases and children. There is no instance, in London at all events, of a woman being appointed as a relieving officer to do the duty generally.

12949. Do you see any objection to their being appointed relieving officers?—I do not know. A relieving officer is on duty at all hours of the night and day, and he has very frequently to go into rough neighbourhoods, and so on. I think there might be circumstances in which it would be difficult for a woman to make the necessary inquiries. At the same time as regards maternity cases, children's cases and so on, I see no reason myself why a woman should not be appointed.

12950. Still, nowadays women are engaged in work in which they have certain difficult duties to perform?—Yes, that is so.

12951. Woman sanitary officers, for instance, have difficulties of the kind you suggest; would they have anything more serious to face under the Poor Law?—Yes. A sanitary officer has possible dangers to face in the way of microbic attacks, and so on, whereas a relieving officer who wishes to make special enquiries in a low neighbourhood has often to deal with a class who are not over particular as to what they may say or do, the risks implied should preferably, I think, be incurred by men than by women.

12952. There are a good many women in London, are there not, going in and out of localities which are considered low?—Yes, there are. However, that is my view of it; I think if I were a guardian I should hesitate to appoint a woman to undertake the whole duties of a relieving officer.

12953. In regard to the parishes in which the percentage of out-relief is under 20, it is a fact, generally speaking, is it not, that those are localities in which the population is gradually getting put away from them, that is, they are the more central localities and gradually the population is getting farther east or west as the case may be?—That hardly applies to Bethnal Green, but it would apply to St. Giles's, the Strand and Westminster.

Conditions London Unions with low percentage of out-relief.

12954. And also to Marylebone?—You would know that better than I do. There are certain parts of Marylebone, it is true, where there have been clearances, and the poor have been pushed over the border into Paddington. I am thinking of the clearances for the Great Central Railway.

12955. The population of Marylebone has actually decreased?—I had forgotten that; but it is not a very considerable decrease, is it? Obviously in that case it does apply to Marylebone.

12956. It strikes one that it applies to a good many of the localities in London; Strand and Westminster, I think you have mentioned?—Yes. Whitechapel, I think, is stationary, in respect of population and so is St. George's-in-the-East.

12957. I do not know at the moment whether the Bethnal Green population is stationary or has decreased. I think you said in reply to Mr. Nunn just now that in every district in London charity is being given away; is that quite the case all over London?—Did he put it to me that charity was being given away in every district? I meant to say that there were agencies for giving it away.

12958. Church agencies and charitable agencies of one kind or another?—Yes.

Charities in East End of London.

12959. Is that the case in the East End?—No. I ought to have made a reservation there. I do not suppose, for instance, there would be as much charity given away in Poplar as there is possibly in Marylebone.

12960. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Does that answer quite hold, in view of all the newspaper funds, and the enormous sums that have been collected in that way?—I take it you are thinking of such funds as the Distress Fund of the Daily News?

12961. Yes?—Those are more or less spasmodic; I was thinking of the permanent charities.

12962. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) I understood you meant permanent charities which would be administered either by committees or by the clergy or by some agency of that kind; these are not considerable in the East End, are they?—If I had the Charity Organisation Society's Digest on Law to refer to, I could tell you, but I cannot carry it all in my head.

12963. (Mr. Nunn.) Is it not the case that the Society for the Relief of Distress and the Metropolitan Visiting and Relief Association make their grants to the clergy in inverse proportion to the wealth of the district in which they are working; and would that not act compensatorily?—It would to some extent, but I confess I am not very well up in that part of the question.

Relation between sweated industries and out-relief.

12964. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) With regard to the question of the sweated industries, I suppose it might follow that if there was a great deal of sweating in a particular locality, there would not be a large amount of out-door relief consequent on that, because if a whole family were working at one of those sweated industries, they would earn enough amongst them to keep them off the rates?—I suppose that would be so.

12965. That is what we are finding a good deal at the Sweated Industries Exhibition just now. I do not want to ask any question about your box of exhibits particularly, but I notice the phrase with regard to a good many of them "making the shoes," "making the boots," of course that "making" does not mean a very large amount of work, in fact in some cases it means nothing more than just putting certain pieces together?—Yes; they get the materials, and sew them or gum them together.

Preponderance of indoor relief in London and urban centres.

12966. (Mr. Booth.) The chairman has referred to the peculiar fact that there is so much more in-relief in proportion to out-relief in London. That is not a London question alone, is it—I think it is applicable to all crowded urban centres ?—I do not know about that, but, speaking from memory, it does not follow. When I was in the eastern counties district, the out-relief in Ipswich was always low as compared with the in-door relief—whereas at Norwich it was very high.

12967. I do not consider either Ipswich or Norwich as a great and crowded urban centre; it is the central portion of Liverpool and the central portion of Manchester and such cities that I am thinking of ?—Very possibly it would be so in those cases.

12968. This peculiar fact is due to something which is in connection with this crowded condition, and as Mr. Russell Wakefield said it very often appears in a district in which the people living are actually being gradually crowded out. The main contrast with regard to in-door and out-door relief is, I think, to be made between rural and urban districts ?—Yes, I think that is so.

12969. There are certain reasons for that, the greatest of which is the proportion of the old ?—Yes, certainly.

Effect on out-relief of large number of aged in rural districts.

12970. In many country districts there are twice or even three times the number of old people in proportion to population that are to be found in the London parishes, I believe ?—I should think that would be so.

12971. That would make a very great difference, because confessedly, out-relief is largely a question of the old ?—Yes, that is true.

12972. That appears to me to be the main reason, because in the crowded parts of the great urban districts there are comparatively few old people ?—I should think that is so certainly. Then of course in the country districts there is the question of distance to be considered as well.

12973. Altogether, out-relief is more applicable to the conditions of the people there ?—Yes.

12974. And in addition to that, I think that the old, especially the old women, are not so helpless in the country as they are in the towns, and that there is every advantage for out-relief in the scattered country districts and very few advantages apparently for out-relief in the great urban centres ?—I think that is the case.

12975. Broadly, I believe, that is the explanation ?—No doubt that is a factor.

Relief of aliens.

12976. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to the aliens, do boards of guardians realise that it is their duty to give relief to persons who are destitute, quite irrespective of the fact whether they are aliens or not ?—I think certainly they do. I think it is improbable that a case was ever refused merely on the ground that the person was an alien.

London guardians' procedure as to contracts.

12977. (Mrs. Webb.) Will you please describe the procedure of the London boards of guardians as regards the acceptance of tenders for supplies, specifying differences of practice in respect of the following points:—(a) Are tenders in all cases called for by effective public advertisement ? (b) Are the tenders in all cases referred to officials for report ? (c) Are the tenders in all cases reported on by a Committee before being considered by the full board ? (d) Are the different tenders for each article set out in the agenda of the board, so as to enable comparison ? And (e) Is there in London any system by which the names or prices or distinguishing marks of samples are withheld from the guardians until after they have voted, so as to prevent collusion or local favouritism ?—Tenders in all cases for work costing more than £50 are advertised for, and I think for the most part by effective public advertisement. The tenders are not in all cases referred to officials, but generally, in a good many instances the tenders are referred to a Committee after they have been opened, are further reported on, and later considered by the full board. I will hand in an example of what appear to me good methods in regard to contracts. In Kensington, the contracts for linen drapery were distributed among seven different firms the clothing among two firms, and leather and shoes among four. In Lambeth, again, the orders are distributed, The orders for drapery and linen goods are distributed among several firms. I will hand in a list of tenders in which there are columns giving the total quantity to be supplied, and the lowest contract prices followed by columns giving the names of ten different firms for drapery and some twenty firms for cotton goods (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII.(I.)). The lowest tenders in each case are shown in dark block figures. There is no universal system of withholding prices or distinguishing marks on samples, but generally speaking something at least is done with the object of avoiding collusion or favouritism. I am not sure that these efforts are always successful. Opportunities, however, for chicanery and manœuvering by no means cease with the consideration and acceptance of tenders. Where guardians are frequently cheated is in the sending in of goods which are not really up to sample. I had an interesting illustration of this on my visit to a dispensary recently. The dispenser showed me in a bottle the sample tendered for of nitrate of potass; he also showed me a sample of the article that had been sent in. The latter, he explained, was of an inferior description known as commercial nitrate and used principally in the manufacture of fireworks.

Goods supplied not up to sample.

12978. Can you supply the Commission with the range of prices paid by the London Boards of Guardians for the same commodities, giving the lowest and the highest rates for certain articles, such as meat, flour, tea, sugar, arrow-root, coffins, men's boots, calico, and so on ?—Descriptions of meat, &c., in tenders vary so much that it would be impossible to furnish a return which would be of use for comparison.

Variation in prices paid by London guardians.

12979. (Chairman.) There is no prescribed procedure for tenders, is there ?—Not beyond this, that there are certain forms, and the Order requires that the tender should be opened at a meeting of the board of guardians.

12980. Are you referring to the Order that was issued in 1877 ?—Yes.

12981. On the whole, are you fairly satisfied with the methods of dealing with tenders ?—The methods vary to a certain extent, but, as I have said, in reply to Mrs. Webb, it is really in the supply that the guardians are apt not to get what is their due. I think in most places endeavours are made to prevent collusion.

Goods supplied not up to sample.

12982. That is to say, to see that the deliveries are not under sample ?—Yes.

12983. Would it be useful to have a stereotyped procedure, or are not the differences so great as to make that justifiable or advisable ?—I do not know that you could very well have a stereotyped procedure. I think there are objections even to that. The practice of having the tenders opened, as required by the Order, and then letting them be considered by a committee in a way that prevents the whole of the tender or the whole of the supplies of a particular class of goods going to one man or one firm, operates in the direction of preventing—I can only use an unofficial term—dodgery in the tendering. But it is a difficult question.

Existing system of dealing with tenders on the whole satisfactory.

12984. Have you, whilst urban inspector, been compelled to make any special investigation into any particular cases ?—No; but you can see that there may be a good deal of suspicion about these things, and naturally they are not done in a way that renders detection at all easy.

12985. On the whole, would you let things go on much as they are ?—I think you must rely to a great extent upon the intelligence and care of individual boards of guardians, and upon the integrity of their officers.

Supply of goods not up to sample and remedies therefor.

12986. (Sir Samuel Provis.) In such a case as you have referred to in your replies to Mrs. Webb, where the goods supplied did not correspond to the samples, would the guardians send them back ?—In most cases they would certainly; but, on the other hand, occasionally there may be carelessness, the officer concerned may not be sufficiently vigilant, and therefore for some time the guardians may be paying for something which they are not really receiving.

12987. The officer would usually be the master, I suppose, or perhaps the medical officer or the dispenser, in the case of drugs ?—Yes.

12988. There is a provision in the Order, is there not, that supposing the goods do not correspond with the sample, the guardians may buy goods elsewhere and charge the contractor with the difference in price ?—Yes.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1906.

12989. Do they ever do that?—It has been done, and the marvel to me is that it is not done more often. I think if it were known that guardians were pretty sure to act on their right in that respect, that the persons supplying goods would be more careful than they are.

Advertising for tenders.

12990. (Professor Smart.) You have told Mrs. Webb that tenders in all cases for work costing more than £50 are advertised for; what does that £50 apply to—is it £50 for one order or £50 for a single line?—It is for one order. The Order is, "The guardians shall require tenders to be made in some sealed paper for the supply of all provisions, fuel, clothing, furniture, or other goods or materials, the consumption of which may be estimated, one month with another, to exceed £10 per month, and of all provisions, fuel, clothing, furniture, or other goods or materials, the cost of which may be reasonably estimated to exceed £50 in a single sum, and shall purchase the same upon contracts if entered into after the receipt of such tenders."

12991. Then that £50 might be spread over a great many different tradesmen?—Yes.

12992. (Mrs. Webb.) I daresay you have heard of the Mile End libel case?—Yes.

Possibility of collusion between guardians and contractors.

12993. Have you any knowledge whether the state of affairs which was brought to light by that case is at all characteristic of other boards of guardians? You will remember that the system at Mile End was one in which the tenderers, who were in collusion with some of the guardians, gave a low price for articles of which there would be very little required, and a very high price for articles of which there would be very much required?—Yes.

Mile End Case.

12994. Do you suppose that that state of affairs exists anywhere in London now?—I do not myself think it does to any great extent. That particular method of getting the better of guardians I think has had one or two examples which has probably made contractors or tenderers careful of repeating it. I knew a case quite recently where in the advertisement for leather goods—boots, and so on—it was estimated that there might be three leather aprons required for the next year. There the guardians had the blind habit, as I think it is, of contenting themselves with taking the lowest tender for any particular class of goods without going into details. The tenderer had put down the leather aprons at a penny a piece, and when this was discovered, the guardians promptly ordered fifty; so he got no good out of that, at all events.

12995. The system really can only be successful when there is practical collusion?—I think that is so.

12996. What I rather want to get at is whether, in your opinion, there is among the boards of guardians in London or elsewhere a considerable amount of foolish acceptance of inefficient and uneconomic tenders?—I think I can say in London it is an exception to find other than careful endeavours to prevent chicanery of that sort. You might like now to look at this list of tenders, which shows how one board of guardians deals with its tenders. (Producing table.) It is the list I promised to put in.

West Ham Case.

12997. Do you know of any other legal case like the Mile End case?—There is a similar case now being considered in West Ham, but that is the only case within my own knowledge which has occurred for many years.

12998. Is that case going into the courts?—An inquiry is being held as to why an excessive amount of coal was used in the infirmary; but it has not got so far as the courts yet.

12999. Is the inquiry being held by the Local Government Board?—Yes. In that case it is merely a question as between the officer and the board.

13000. I believe it was only through the mere chance of this libel case, which was produced by an elector, that the whole thing at Mile End came to light?—That is quite true; it was quite accidental.

13001. These scandalous practices had been going on for a long time, and yet they had not come to light?—That is so. I am afraid that where you have a determined rascal so to say, it is a very difficult thing to find means of catching him, unless you have a very careful and vigilant board.

13002. It was a very scandalous business, because the jury refused to say that it was a libel?—It was a very bad case, no doubt.

13003. (Mr. Bentham.) Referring to the table that you have handed us, may I ask whether the tenders included in it were opened in the presence of the guardians and ordered to be printed for the next meeting of the board?—Yes.

Procedure to contract and possibility of collusion.

13004. Would they be opened and read to the board at the time?—No. The practice there—and I think myself that it accords with the spirit at all events of the order—is that the tenders are opened at the board meeting, then, as you see, they are handed to the clerk, by whom the original tenders are kept, but copies are sent to the printers to be printed with, as you see, the lowest tenders marked in thick figures for easy distinguishment by the guardians. Then these supplementary forms are brought up at the next meeting of the guardians, and are read out by the chairman, and in nearly every instance the lowest tender is accepted.

13005. They are only formally opened at the first meeting, so as to meet the letter of the order?—Yes. The object in that case was not to take blindly the lowest tender, but to select from each tender the particular goods which the tenderer had offered to supply at the lowest prices.

13006. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Are we to take it that the names of the tenderers are known to all the guardians before the tender is accepted?—Yes.

13007. Do you think it is usual for all the tenderers' names to be known before the tender is accepted? (Mrs. Webb.) In Lancashire it is not usual; in Lancashire it is usual to withhold the names of the tenderers?—There, as you see, after the tenders have been opened the names are printed at the head of each column. But the knowledge of the names does not make any difference, I think, because you see the tenders have already come in and they cannot alter their prices.

13008. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) I can see cases in which it might make a very considerable difference, particularly if the lowest tender is not accepted. Are there certain things supplied to your guardians for which only a very few firms up and down London tender?—Leather is not on that table, but I think there are comparatively few people who tender for leather and boots.

13009. Would it be possible for there to be anything in the shape of collusion between four or five firms who might arrange as to the price, one giving the lowest price in one parish and another in another, so as to divide the tenders up between them?—I have heard it said—I only say heard, because I do not wish to render myself liable for libel—that certain meat supplying firms had a system which is similar to what is called the knock-out at an auction, and that they did not interfere with one another—that there is a ring, in fact; but it is quite impossible to prove that.

13010. In other directions, in borough council work, it is very easy to have a great deal of that, because there are certain things as to which there are only three or four firms up and down London who supply them; I did not know whether that applied to the guardians?—It does to some extent, I think.

13011. (Mr. Loch.) Have you ever considered whether it would make any considerable difference if the tenders were made not on behalf of one board of guardians only, but on behalf of a group of boards of guardians? Would there be a great reduction of cost, do you suppose, if there was a general tender, instead of it being a case of tenders to each union separately?—Do you mean that there should be a central depot from which they should be supplied?

13012. Yes?—I think there is something to be said for that. I do not know what the various persons concerned in the various trades would say to that; probably they would think they would be losing so much custom.

13013. I am only considering it from the point of view of economy?—I should think on the whole it ought to be more economical, but I would not give more than a general answer to the question.

13014. (Chairman.) This list of tenders that you have handed us is only a specimen sheet, I take it, and you do not know what action was taken in those cases?—No, except that, as I say, the block figures are in every case the lowest tender. You see a star there; where the two lowest are the same they are starred, and then it is the fact, I believe, that they are apt to give the contract to a local man if he is one of the lowest.

Clearance schemes and their effect on housing, etc.

13015. (Mr. Gardiner.) Can you give any information as to the effect in general on unions of clearance schemes, e.g., the Boundary Street scheme referred to by Mr. Lansbury); the closing of insanitary areas under the Public Health Act; the increasing depopulation of certain areas adjacent to the City of London by reason of increased office and warehouse accommodation, railway extension, etc.; the immigration of aliens into certain East London unions, especially Whitechapel, St. George's-in-the-East, Stepney, Bethnal Green; and the effect on Kensington of the rebuilding of the Cadogan estate?—It is not easy to give very direct evidence of the result of clearance schemes, but in the case of Boundary Street, the clerk to the Bethnal Green Board tells me that the effect for the time being was to scatter the poor who live in the Boundary Street area in other parts of Bethnal Green, and to some extent outside the parish. There must of necessity have been greater competition for other empty tenements in the parish, when it may reasonably be assumed that the rents of those tenants were for the time being raised. Those whose circumstances made it impossible for them to seek residences in cheaper districts outside Bethnal Green had to pay the increased rents, and those who were already verging on pauperism this last straw probably drove to the Poor Law authorities for help; in other words, for relief in aid of rent. The dwellings put up in the Boundary Street area by the London County Council could not by any stretch of imagination be regarded as supplying the accommodation for the same class of person that existed there before the reconstruction. That area before demolition was covered by houses in which the very poorest lived. The London County Council tenements are now occupied by better class artisans. The migration of aliens into Whitechapel, St. George's-in-the-East, Stepney and Bethnal Green has no considerable effect on pauperism, the applications for the most part being confined to those for medical relief, and where this is offered on loan the Jewish aliens usually, I understand, decline. As to the Cadogan estate, the clearances that have been going on for some time in Chelsea are said to have pushed the poor down into Fulham and across the river to Battersea, and these and others squeezed out from Westminster have migrated, I am told, as far as Tooting and Clapham.

Effect on pauperism of dwellings on unhealthy sites.

13016. What evidence can you give as to the effect on pauperism of the erection of working-class cottages on low-lying sites which had been used for deposit of house refuse, street sweepings, etc.? Such sites have, I believe, been built on in East and South London?—I have no direct evidence as to the effect on pauperism of working-class cottages on low-lying and indifferent sites. The London County Council bye-laws are sufficient, I believe, now to prevent building on sites of the sort suggested.

Effect on an area of increase of rents.

13017. Can you give instances of the increase in rents in any unions, and the effect of such increase on the possibility of thrift, assistance by poor to relatives, the diminished housing accommodation per family, and the consequent loss of vitality?—In the information I have been able to get on this subject there is no evidence as to the effect of increased rent on possibilities of thrift, consequent loss of vitality, and so on.

13018. Can you give evidence as to the effect on the proportion of pauperism of the migration to the suburbs of the well-to-do classes and of the more energetic of the artisan and clerk class?—I cannot give direct evidence as to the effect on the proportion of pauperism on migration to suburbs, &c, but I may mention a case in my own parish, St. Pancras, where (in the north-eastern part) houses originally built to accommodate one family and rated, I believe, for £50 to £60 a year, are now occupied by a family on a floor. The original occupants have been able, owing to increased facilities for locomotion, to get out into suburbs where the rates are lower, and the families who have taken their place are of a poor class who have to settle where they can. St. Pancras has suffered to some extent too from the Strand improvements. A good number of the displaced poor have come into the southern part of the parish, and from among them, I am told, come a considerable number of applicants for relief.

Effect on pauperism of migration from London to suburbs and of clearance schemes.

13019. (Chairman.) I take it that these clearance schemes have, in certain cases, moved pauperism from one parish to another?—Yes.

13020. Is the Law of Settlement in practice in London, and do Metropolitan guardians fight one another over questions of settlement?—Yes, they have to get these questions settled. They inquire into the settlement in pretty well all cases.

13021. Then in the case of these clearances, if the people so moved apply for relief within the year, they will have no settlement?—True.

13022. Have there been many cases of that kind?—I do not know that there have been very many, but there have been some, certainly.

13023. Would you say the displacement by these clearances is a matter for serious consideration in some of the parishes?—I think it becomes so in the course of time.

Question of abolition of law of settlement.

13024. Have you any opinion about the Law of Settlement; would you like, for instance, to abolish it?—That is a big question. I think the Law of Settlement might be abolished for London, and you might make London one area for all that purpose.

13025. Of course if you had one administration for London the Law of Settlement would be abolished?—Yes, it would.

13026. Is there much money spent on settlement questions?—Here and there a good deal is spent on them.

13027. Have any boards of guardians come to any arrangement to accept each other's cases without fighting?—Some of them have. On the other hand, there are complaints made when they determine to fight cases, where a good deal of money has been spent on a case that might just as well have been settled by the Local Government Board or between themselves.

13028. Is the tendency towards amicable agreement?—Yes, I think it is.

Clearance schemes and their effect on housing, etc.

13029. (Mr. Booth) With regard to the effect of the clearance in Bethnal Green, you have told Mr. Gardiner that the poor who were living in the demolished dwellings having been scattered, to some extent, over the rest of the union, it may be assumed that the rents of those tenements were raised. That might well be so, without raising the rent paid by any particular lodger class; because the effect in that case would be, I take it, that the poor would crowd into the tenements, and, therefore, although the landlord gets somewhat more, the individual tenant does not necessarily pay more?—That would be so.

13030. The house would contain perhaps three families instead of two, and, therefore, the landlord would get a little more rent, a little more trouble, and a little more destruction; but it does not at all follow that the rent paid by the people who were turned out for the clearance would be any heavier than it was in the demolished dwellings where they were living under similar conditions of crowding?—That would be so. I was quoting the clerk to the Bethnal Green union there. I do not pretend to know very much about the case myself, and those are the views he communicated to me.

13031. I do not think it at all follows that those people who were settled in other parts of the Bethnal Green union did, in fact, pay any increased rent, or that, therefore, that particular clearance would increase their liability to come on the rates?—I agree.

Checks on building on unhealthy sites.

13032 (Mr. Gardiner.) Could you give me the date when the by-laws were passed enabling the County Council and the boroughs to refuse to allow a particular site to be built on?—I ought to have remembered that, but I am afraid I have not got it with me.

13033. Is it within the last five or six years?—Yes.

13034. Do those by-laws apply outside London?—No. I am speaking of the London County Council area only.

13035. Is there any power of appeal to the County Council? Supposing a site is thought by a borough council to be an unhealthy site, because it has been used for the deposit of refuse, and the borough council refuse to allow that site to be built on, is there any appeal to the London County Council?—I am afraid I cannot answer you straight off. I did not inquire into that.

13036. It is very important both for outside London

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1906.

Clearance schemes and their effect on housing, etc.

and for inside London, so might we have that information subsequently?—Yes.*

13037. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) I think you are of opinion that when these new buildings are put up it is very seldom that the original inhabitants of the site are lodged in the new buildings?—Yes. I do not speak from personal knowledge, but I have always understood from those who ought to know, and probably do know, that in a great number of cases the original inhabitants are not; that is to say, that on a cleared area are erected buildings which are later on occupied by a class superior to the class who were evicted.

13038. You get in a much higher class?—A higher class, certain.

13039. That being so, do you not think it might be much better if those sites were kept as open spaces—the poor would not suffer by that?—Speaking of open spaces generally, the more we have the better, I think.

13040. (Mr. Gardiner.) But then the rates over the rest of the union would rise very much?—Yes.

13041. (Sir Samuel Provis.) And the cost would be very great, would it not?—Yes.

13042. The London County Council, for instance, in Boundary Street accommodate 5,000 people I think in the new buildings?—Yes.

13043. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) If I might suggest, the loss would not be entirely that, because frontages to open spaces are so valuable that the surroundings would rise in value at once?—That would be so. The assessing authority would probably put up the rateable value of the accommodation so left, but I doubt whether that would compensate for the greater cost of providing for the people removed further out.

13044. It is generally argued from the point of view of the poor people who are turned out, that you must house them again, and that it is such a hardship not to provide these new buildings for them; but, as a matter of fact, you only house a better class, and you do not improve the district as you might if the land were turned into an open space?—That would be so, but I should doubt whether the frontage would compensate for the cost.

13045. My point is distinctly this, that these clearances are made with a view of benefiting the poor people of the district, but that when you put up these improved dwellings you do not benefit them at all, but if you keep the land as an open space, you would benefit those who remained in the surrounding streets?—But still the others would have to be provided for elsewhere.

13046. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) In a poor district you could not raise the rents of those that were left without doing them a real injury?—I am afraid I have not the solution.

13047. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The object of clearing a site is not to benefit the poor people, is it, but it is really to get rid of an insanitary area?—Yes, that is the object.

13048. (Mr. Loch.) Did you see the report of the London County Council when the Boundary Street area was first cleared, showing where the people went?—No, I did not. I was promised a report on that subject, but I have not had it yet.

13049. The result of it is really, I think, to support the view you have expressed that the people were scattered mostly in the immediate area, and only to a slight extent went into far distant areas?—That is what I understand—that they were not pushed out very far.

13050. Have you at all followed this question, how far, when an area is cleared, the pauperism of the area is continued in the new district to which the people go?—Taking the case of the clearance of that area in Marylebone for the Great Central Railway, I have always been given to understand that the persons so displaced have found their way into the eastern parts of Paddington. It is a common complaint in Paddington that they have had a large number of poor people from the cleared area.

13051. But the Paddington pauperism, though slightly affected by it, possibly, has not gone up very much, has it?—No, I do not think it has.

13052. Practically, if they were paupers in Marylebone they are not paupers in Paddington, or if they were paupers to a certain extent in Marylebone, they are possibly to a less degree paupers in Paddington?—Yes; but still the fact remains that the poorer persons have left the area to which they might have been chargeable previously.

13053. They have left it certainly, but my question had to do with the fact, whether or not that clearance implied simply an extended pauperism, and that, I take it, is the idea underlying these questions?—Yes. Dislocation of any kind may possibly have an effect detrimental to a certain number of persons, but I do not know that you can say that clearance necessarily increases pauperism.

13054. Would you say that the question really had not been worked out as to whether clearance was on the whole beneficial or not beneficial from that point of view?—I do not think it has been worked out from that point of view.

Possibility a Central Poor Law Authority London.

13055. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Referring to Mr. Davy's evidence as to London's difficulties (Davy, Question 3425), would not these point, unless there were something to qualify, to the need of a central single administration? Would it not be easier to have general principles if you had a commanding central London authority? As to outdoor relief, if you had certain principles laid down, could you not administer the relief by committees?—It is not easy to see how this central body should be composed. Public opinion in these days is all for direct representation and does not favour nomination for any purpose, and there are objections also, I think, to increasing the number of central authorities. With regard to the administration of outdoor relief by a central authority, I have some doubts if you would get much nearer uniformity of administration if you depended on committees. Uniformity would be more likely to be secured by the appointment of paid almoners or distributors, but, even with such an arrangement, absolute uniformity would not be assured. It would be necessary, I take it, in any case, to have a certain number of local relieving officers; though if they were all appointed by and subject to the control of one central authority they might be shifted about from place to place, and men who were not really up to the mark would not be continued in office.

13056. If you got a central London authority you could then separate ages and classes, have detention works, organise labour colonies, and send suitable people to them; and would you not get better guardians, more economical administration, a general equalised rate disbursed by those who pay, and consequently greater satisfaction?—A central authority controlling all the Poor Law institutions in London could, no doubt, use them for classification purposes in a manner impossible now; and could provide and organise branch workhouses for the able-bodied, but I am not at all sure that you would get better guardians or more economical administration. The general equalised rate would not necessarily be disbursed by those who pay, the representatives of the paying areas would be in a minority, and the "greater satisfaction" would be confined to those who benefited as recipients from the equalised rate.

13057. In any general scheme for managing the whole of London would not the outer limits (West Ham, Edmonton, and the wealthier district of Croydon) have to be included?—The possible inclusion of West Ham, Edmonton, and other suburban districts is one which would require very careful consideration, and in respect of which the views and interests of the localities proposed to be included would have to be considered.

Possibility one Londo Authority indoor reli

13057*a*. (Mr. Gardiner.) Have you considered the proposals which have been made for an ad hoc Poor Law authority for indoor purposes, out-relief being administered according to definite principles by district relief committees representative of union areas, appointed by ad hoc authority? Do you consider that London (that is, the Metropolitan Police area) should be considered one community for administering the Poor Law, and, if so, would you be in favour of a board specially elected for the purpose, or would you hand the work over to the county council, which could be assisted by groups of voluntary workers? Allowing for a central body administering

* Mr. Lockwood subsequently sent the following answer:—"The London County Council in 1901 adopted a bye-law of the Metropolitan Board of Works empowering them to prevent the erection of buildings on unhealthy sites."

London as a whole, would you be in favour of putting all indoor charges, costs of administration, and buildings entirely upon the fund if such a central committee were set up to control such administrative buildings, etc.?—I confess I hardly see how it would be possible to arrange for the Poor Law administration of London by any existing bodies. If the care of infectious cases and imbeciles were transferred from the Metropolitan Asylums Board to the London County Council, the former might pehaps take over Poor Law administration for London generally; but in that case a considerable augmentation of the present number of members might be necessary. The number of institutions for which a Poor Law central body would be responsible would be considerably greater than those for which the Asylums Board is responsible at present. As regards handing the relief work over to the County Council, that body has already, it seems to me, as much to do as it well can, and it is certainly a question whether the administration of relief by voluntary workers would tend to the uniformity of practice which is admittedly desirable.

13058. (Mr. Loch.) Would it lead to better, more equal, and more economic administration if there were a single Board for London in charge of all the Poor Law institutions, supported by a single rate for the purpose leviable on the whole country? Have you any evidence as to (a) The accommodation now available for paupers in London (1) in workhouses; (2) in infirmaries; (b) The margin now available for increased demand; and (c) The possibility of the better utilisation of the accommodation, if there were one control able to utilise all institutions. How might such a controlling body be constituted, and what is the possibility of economy in staff, salaries, additional buildings, etc.?—I will hand in a statement (see Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (J)), showing the accommodation now available in (1) workhouses, (2) infirmaries, and the margin available for increased demand, from whence it will be seen that there is or was on the 10th February of this year spare accommodation in workhouses for 1,596. and in infirmaries for 816. Assuming one control to be desirable for all institutions, the question of how it should be constituted is one which I confess I have not so far had time to exhaustively consider; though I am inclined to doubt whether in any case there would necessarily result any considerable economy in staff and salaries, though assuming it were possible by a grouping of institutions to accommodate the surplus in the existing vacant space, there would, for the time being, be avoided expenditure on additional buildings; and while on this subject I will call attention to the fact that in the column "boarded-out" in the return I am referring to it will be found that a good many London paupers are boarded-out in country workhouses, and so long as there is spare accommodation of this sort, London guardians should, I think, be encouraged to avail themselves of it rather than to embark on the provision of costly new buildings.

Accommodation in London workhouses.

Possibility of Central Authority for London.

13059. (Chairman.) I gather you are not very favourable to the idea of a single administration for London?—I think I may be allowed to say perhaps that I have hardly had time to form a judgment upon it, but on balance I am a little doubtful.

13060. Looking at the merits and demerits of a scheme of that kind, whilst it now would tend, I think, in certain directions to greater uniformity and possibly to greater economy, would you not lose the services of a good many people who are now doing their work very well as guardians if you were to adopt such a plan?—I suppose the idea is that if you had a central authority you would get all the best of the present working guardians upon it, I do not know that that necessarily follows. I may say that in any case a new central authority, whatever else happens, will have to be directly elective and representative. I am thinking of the general tendency of public opinion in such matters.

13061. Then your idea of a central authority is against a body something like the London County Council or the Metropolitan Asylums Board administering poor relief all over London?—I have done my best in my previous answers to give some sort of reply to the questions on this point. It seems to me that it is not desirable to multiply the number of central authorities. We have already the Metropolitan Asylums Board and the London County Council; and, as I have said, if one could with an existing authority do that which would tend to uniformity, I think it is a desirable thing; but I should doubt whether it is desirable to set up a completely new authority, which would be, and must, I imagine be, directly representative to administer the Poor Law.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1906.

13062. (Mrs. Webb.) Would you make that distinction as against the Metropolitan Asylums Board, which is indirectly representative?—The Metropolitan Asylums Board is an existing authority, and it occurred to me that it is an anomalous authority to a certain extent, since a great deal of its work has nothing to do with Poor Law at all, and yet it is composed entirely of delegated guardians and nominated managers.

The Metropolitan Asylums Board and its administration.

13063. (Chairman.) But it does its work very well, does it not?—I think it does. It is accused of extravagance but where you have to make provision for infectious disease under any circumstances you cannot expect it to be done very cheaply. They are constantly hauled over the coals for keeping expensive establishments for small-pox and so on, when there are no small pox patients: but that is in the nature of an insurance, and you must have accommodation ready to hand, and they have to consider what would happen if they had not the means of meeting a sudden outbreak.

13064. Have you attended the meetings of that body?—I have hardly ever attended the meetings of the body themselves, but for a long time, I attended pretty well every meeting of the childrens' committee when certain classes of children were handed over to them.

13065. Do the members of that authority pay as much individual attention to their duties as boards of guardians do?—I think they do.

13066. And do they become as much interested?—I think so. I can speak from personal experience of the committee that manage the five classes of children's establishments. Nothing could have been more careful or regular or minute than the attention they paid to the work.

13067. (Sir Samuel Provis.) In answer to Mr. Gardiner you say: "If the care of infectious cases and imbeciles were transferred from the Metropolitan Asylums Board to the London County Council the former might perhaps take over Poor Law administration for London generally." Do you quite mean that? Supposing the Asylums Board parted with their infectious cases and imbeciles, they would have nothing to do, and they would cease to exist, would they not?—They would have the children still.

Proposal to transfer care of infectious cases and imbeciles to London County Council and London indoor Poor Law Administration to Metropolitan Asylums Board.

13068. But the treatment of the ophthalmic and defective children is quite a small matter?—Yes, but if the body continued to exist, they might, in exchange for the duties relating to infectious disease and imbeciles, take over the Poor Law.

13069. Supposing it was decided to have one central body for London, the Asylums Board would cease to exist, would they not, because the guardians would cease to exist, and they are elected by the guardians?—To tell the truth I was thinking there rather of indoor administration. I ought to have expressed it more clearly. They would be elected by the guardians, and the guardians would continue to do the out-door local work, and the in-door institutions in fact would be managed by the Asylums Board.

13070. So that practically the boards of guardians would only administer out-door relief; that was the theory you had in your mind?—Yes, that is what I had in my mind really.

13071. Looking to the large number of institutions that there are and must be in London for in-door relief, do you think that there are too many for any one board to manage?—I had my doubts, and therefore I have said that a considerable augmentation of the present number of members would be necessary. What I had in my mind in that answer was that there would be still guardians who would be associated with members of the central body in visiting and looking after the institutions.

Need for and difficulties as to one central Poor Law Authority for London.

13072. Of course if you had one body which dealt only with indoor relief, you would not get uniformity in your out-door relief, which is perhaps the more important of the two?—Yes.

13073. Supposing it was suggested that you should have one body to administer the out-door relief, do you think that it would be practicable? For instance, must they not work through committees?—Unless you change the whole system, and have it all done by your officers,

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1906.

I do not know how you are to do without local committees.

13074. You must have committees to administer the out-relief, must you not, in the localities where the poor are?—Yes, unless, as I say, you have paid dispensers of relief who would be appointed for certain districts and sit as magistrates do; but the difficulty then, I think, is that you would not necessarily get uniformity.

13075. With regard to the question of economy, is it not a common experience that if you have a very large area and a very large rateable value the expenditure tends to run up?—I am afraid it does. I think that what one reads and what one sees in one's demand note relating to the London County Council rate, for instance, suggests that the rate does not tend to diminish.

13076. (Mrs. Webb.) Might I suggest to you that it is not the London County Council that has increased the rates, but that it is the borough councils?—It is the two together. I am thinking of my last demand note, and in that the contributions to the several authorities are all set down separately, for instance, London County Council, £63,909, rate 8·84d., the same for education purposes £71,428, rate 9·88d.

13077. But all the things are mixed up in that demand note, and if you analyse it you will find that the borough councils and the boards of guardians have increased the rates?—I was content to read just what I saw. I only read it as a ratepayer, and I did not go behind the figures.

13078. (Chairman.) I think, looking at the analysis, it is the education rate that has risen so very much, is it not?—Yes, it is.

13079. (Miss Hill.) The rise in the assessment values conceals the rise in the rates very much, I think?—Yes, it does.

13080. (Mr. Loch.) You speak on the whole with satisfaction of the Metropolitan Asylums Board. Suppose, as you suggest, all the cases of lunacy and mental defect were brought under one head and placed under the County Council, that would be a logical first step, would it not?—Yes.

13081. But that would leave the Metropolitan Asylums Board practically without anything to do?—Yes, if they lost their infectious cases as well.

13082. Do you think there might be formed, on the lines of the Metropolitan Asylums Board, a Board of Supervision for London which would more or less have inspectors at its disposal and would bear the brunt of deciding all London questions in the first place as the responsible authority?—No; my views are rather those indicated in Sir Samuel Provis' question, that it would be difficult to arrange for out-door relief, at all events without local help.

13083. I have not made any suggestions as to out-door relief, nor as to the removal of institutions under one head; the only suggestion I have made is that there should be a board of supervision for London?—But I do not quite understand what they are to do.

13084. They would be the responsible advisers under this scheme of the boards of guardians in all their work, and probably any system of assessments for the common purposes of relief on the lines of the Metropolitan Asylums Board, or the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, or any other lines, would be connected with their work?—Would they be a separate body, separately elected, or would they be composed of delegates, as the Asylums Board now is.

13085. My suggestion is that they should be composed of delegates as the Asylums Board now is, with nominated members?—And that they should be a central advisory board.

13086. Yes?—You would have to consider what powers they would be invested with. I think that no one would be any the worse if they had the advantage of the advice and assistance of persons experienced in Poor Law administration, who could give their advice generally rather than specially in their own particular boards.

13087. At the present moment there is no single body responsible for London, except it be yourself and the Local Government Board behind you?—That is the case.

13088. There is no local body responsible for London business in the matter of poor relief otherwise?—That is so.

13089. There is, is there not, a responsible authority for the other administration of London—the London County Council, for instance, and in a manner the Metropolitan Asylums Board for Infectious Diseases?—Yes.

13090. Does it not follow that the question of London as a whole, from the point of view of poor relief, is sufficiently important for the supervision of a board?—I think it is worth considering, but I confess that it never occurred to me in that light before.

13091. Do you think it makes any difference in the problem as it appears to you if the question of local administration by the guardians, subject to this change, remained the same; or, to put it otherwise, if the workhouses and infirmaries still remained in the hands of the local boards of guardians? As I understand it, your difficulty is that you cannot see how they can be dealt with apart?—I say it more of out-relief. I think a central authority might perhaps manage the institutions.

13092. The out-relief is found to be the difficulty as a separate part of the administration?—I think it would be.

13093. Would you find a difficulty on another score, that is to say, in the same body not controlling the local indoor relief as well as the out-door relief, and not being able to say as a matter of course "This applicant is offered the house"?—There would be a difficulty, I confess.

13094. Do you see your way out of that difficulty?—No, I do not, off-hand.

13095. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The guardians could send the case, could they not?—It would be just like the case of an out-relief union?—I did not quite understand Mr. Loch's last question.

13096. (Mr. Loch.) If you have one single board administering both out-door and in-door relief, that board might at any moment say to an applicant "The house will be offered to you," and the house will be so offered; but if you have two authorities, one for out-door relief and one for in-door relief, you would make that a difficulty, because the indoor relief board might say, We wish to arrange the admissions to our own institutions?—In other words the out-relief should be managed by members of the same body, and there should not be two bodies.

13097. That is the question?—You could not manage very well if you had two separate bodies dealing respectively with in-door and out-door relief; you must have them members of one body.

13098. Unless the understanding was that any one sent by the out-door relief body must be admitted into the house?—Yes, but I do not know that that could be conveniently arranged for.

13099. You have not thought that out at all in detail, have you?—No, I have not.

13100. Could the out-door relief body, that is the guardians, who are dealing with out-door relief only, give an order in the case of a particular applicant for his admission to a particular workhouse governed by another body?—There would be an awkwardness about that.

Margin accommodation in London Workhouses

13101. With regard to the sufficiency of accommodation that exists in London in some instances and is wanting in others, details of which you give us in your table (see App. Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (J)) are there cases where a certain number are boarded-out so as to make room in the workhouse?—Yes; but as you see there are a large number boarded out from Islington at the same time that they have a considerable number in excess of their certificate in the workhouse.

13102. Then the figure of total inmates, for instance, is a figure irrespective of the fact that they may have other paupers who are boarded elsewhere?—Take Islington for instance. The certificate of accommodation for St. John's Road, Islington, is 2,129, and the number of persons in the workhouse on this particular day was 2,489.

13103. That gives an excess of 360?—Yes.

13104. Then besides that they have a certain number boarded-out?—Yes, they have boarded-out eighty adults and fifty-eight children.

13105. Take the converse case, where there is less than the number certified. Is the "less than certified" obtained by the fact that a certain number of persons are boarded-out from those unions, so as to get a number less than the certification? Take for example, Chelsea, which has 107 less than certified, and Fulham, which has 131 less than certified?—No.

13106. Besides those, are there people boarded-out from those unions?—The only cases in which they are boarded-out from the unions are given in the column headed, "Boarded-out."

13107. Does that column represent the committees or the bodies that receive the boarded-out paupers?—The meaning of it is this: Here is Hackney, which is the first that appears in the boarded-out column. Hackney have a workhouse certified for a total accommodation of 1,401, and they have got 1,573 inmates, and they have boarded-out at Westminster, 34, in the Strand Union Workhouse, 148, in the City of London, 47, and in St. Giles', Bloomsbury, 107.

13108. In no case to which the column headed "Less than certified" applies, are there any boarded-out paupers?—No.

13109. So that practically for a considerable number we are now indenting upon the country unions for maintenance?—Yes.

13110. Do you think that apart from that, the margin of room in the workhouses and infirmaries is large enough even when there is no excess?—I think I made out that there were 1,500 odd vacancies; that is, there was room for 1,500 additional inmates.

13111. Taking them workhouse by workhouse, is there anything like sufficient accommodation to meet a sudden demand?—No.

13112. What do you suggest then, in order that that demand might be met if it came suddenly upon the unions of London?—I have often wondered what one could possibly do in order to meet it.

Need for extra London Workhouses or London able-bodied paupers.

13113. Would you be prepared to create institutions outside London, especially to take the surplus or to take the aged out of London, or anything of that kind?—I do not think you can take the aged out of London. My idea is that it would be a very desirable thing if one could have a separate institution to deal with the so-called able-bodied, and also with what are called the young sixties.

13114. Would you be prepared to adopt that as a line, namely, to take all the juniors who are adults out of the existing workhouses and give them separate accommodation?—Yes, I think there is a good deal to be said for that. If you could take them outside London you could get sites cheaper, and, as I think I have said, you would be able to provide quite sufficiently for that class of person at very much less cost than has been necessary of late years in London.

13115. Have you made a calculation of the number that class would represent?—No, I have not.

13116. So that one cannot tell exactly what the accommodation would be, even on the present basis, that you would have to apply in this way?—No.

13117. There has been no report, has there, in regard to London pauperism, endeavouring from this point of view to solve this difficulty?—No, there has not at present.

Insufficient margin of Workhouse accommodation in London.

13118. In the last two or three winters has it not been constantly said that the Poor Law guardians were so pressed for accommodation that they could do nothing but adopt an outdoor relief policy?—It has been said.

13119. And that, so far as these figures go, in your opinion, is fairly true?—It is true, I am afraid, to a certain extent. I have for a long time desired—and I have repeated it more than once—to have, if one could, means, whether by imposing conditions of detention or otherwise, whereby that class, not the wholly able-bodied alone but the different classes who are included under the head of able-bodied, should be dealt with separately.

13120. If there were a supervising board for London such as I have suggested, would this be one of its duties?—Yes, I think it might very well be one of its duties.

13121. But there is no endeavour now, as it were, to deal with London as a whole from this point of view?—No, none. Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1906.

13122. Take Hammersmith, there we have the entry "Workhouse not yet occupied, infirmary not yet occupied"; what is to happen at Hammersmith?—Their indoor poor are boarded-out either at Fulham or at Risbridge and other places in the country. Hammersmith arrangements for indoor relief.

13123. Supposing there were a great deal of distress at Hammersmith suddenly arising, what would they do?—They would have to relieve it the best way they could.

13124. By outdoor relief?—Yes.

13125. What is the pressure that is now being put upon them to get their workhouse and infirmary on foot?—There is this pressure—the Local Government Board have recently asked them when they may expect the workhouse and infirmary to be ready for occupation, and they have had the reply that this, that, and the other are necessary before they can be occupied. I do not think that one can say that Hammersmith have been unduly dilatory in completing their accommodation.

13126. When was Hammersmith formed into a separate union?—About four or five years ago, I think.

13127. When it was formed did Fulham take over their buildings?—Yes, and kept their inmates.

13128. Did they take any steps to begin building as soon as the separation of the two unions was effected?—As soon as they could get a site they did, but they took some time to find a site.

13129. After the separation?—Yes.

13130. Though there was separation before them, they had not found a site at the time the separation took place?—No; and you could hardly expect them to do it.

13131. How long after was it when they found a site?—I should think many months; it took a long time.

13132. Is there any hardship to Hammersmith consequent on their paupers who are in receipt of indoor relief all being out of the district?—There is the hardship to the inmates themselves, I suppose. Those who are away in the country consider it a hardship, I expect.

13133. Is there any evidence to show that they do so consider it?—No, I do not think there is beyond complaints from individuals.

13134. Then if this is a case in which practically the whole of the indoor relief is dispersed and there is no hardship; does not the argument fall to the ground that it is an evil to disperse the indoor people?—I did not say it was an evil, but I thought that possibly it might be objected to; I mean there is a theory that you should not send old people too far away from their union or parish of settlement, and so on. Difficulty as to sending aged paupers to a distant Workhouse.

13135. As a matter of fact, either there has been no hardship expressed, or we do not know in fact that there is hardship?—That is so; but then, of course, this has been regarded as more or less a temporary arrangement.

13136. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Hammersmith and Fulham formed one union before Hammersmith was taken away, I think?—Yes. Hammersmith arrangements for indoor relief.

13137. And after the union was dissolved the existing state of things went on for some time, that is, the bulk of the Hammersmith poor remained in the Fulham workhouse; is that not so?—Yes, of course; I thought that was understood.

13138. (Mr. Loch.) But besides those, there are 175 at Bosmere, eighty-five at Dunmow, and thirty-seven in London; so that there is a considerable population besides, and one does not know really from this table what the classification is, that is, whether the old people have gone to Bosmere or have stayed at Fulham. Do you happen to know that?—Yes. I think most of the old people are at Fulham. They naturally deal with those boarded-out in the way which shall be least inconvenient to the persons so dealt with.

13139. Is the Fulham infirmary now being used by the Hammersmith board?—Yes; and they are continually having notice that they must remove their poor at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.
14 May 1906.

13140. Is there any limitation of time within which Hammersmith must make provision?—Yes; and the time has had to be extended, because there was only one alternative, and the Fulham people could not adopt that and turn the inmates into the street; and so they have grudgingly kept them on.

Difficulty as to procuring additional buildings at Islington.

13141. Have you had any difficulty of that kind in London in endeavouring to extend the accommodation available in workhouses, namely, long dilatoriness before any change is made?—Yes; the Islington people have been a long time.

13142. How long ago was it since you brought the question before Islington?—The question of their school has been revived from time to time for seven or eight years.

13143. They are boarding-out in the country, are they not?—Yes.

13144. And not merely the children?—Not merely the children.

13145. Have they come to any final decision as to what they are to do?—They have. They are about to build two additional blocks, on the site of what is called the St. John's Road workhouse. I may say that in all this, one, of course, feels that the cost of provision in London in these days is so enormous that one has some hesitation in pressing the guardians to embark on expenditure of this sort.

13146. Does that not imply that the question must be considered as a whole, with a view to making it more possible for them to do it by some such plan as you yourself have suggested?—If you mean so that the whole indoor accommodation might be available for all classes, yes.

13147. Or some members of a particular class may be sent to the country?—Do you mean that that could be better managed by one authority?

13148. Nay; I meant that if they saw that that could be done, possibly they would be more willing to make these changes and make the accommodation sufficient?—I do not know that that would affect them.

Hammersmith arrangements for indoor-relief.

13149. (Mr. Gardiner.) In reference to the question Mr. Loch has just raised, about the Hammersmith infirmary cases being boarded-out in the Fulham infirmary, could you tell me whether those Hammersmith folk are included in the figures in Appendix IV?—The column "boarded out" shows that 350 are in the Fulham workhouse and infirmary.

13150. Does the table mean that part of those 350 are really included in the 290 inmates of the Fulham infirmary?—I do not think the Hammersmith inmates can be included in that number, because it seems too low a figure for that.

13151. So probably that infirmary is overcrowded?—It is not necessarily overcrowded. I am glad you drew my attention to that; there is an error, I am afraid, there.

Proposals to abolish settlement in London.

13152. (Dr. Downes.) A suggestion has been put forward that London might be made one union for the purpose of settlement; Would you be in favour of that?—I think I should.

13153. Do you think there would be any danger of the paupers selecting their workhouses?—Yes; but then I think it would be an incentive to careful administration if people found that paupers were flocking where they could get relief easily, and so on.

13154. It would mean that there would have to be uniformity of administration to some extent to prevent abuses of that kind?—Yes, and I think it would tend to that.

Use by guardians of temporary accommodation in times of pressure.

13155. With reference to Mr. Loch's question as to the accommodation in case of pressure, I think that temporary accommodation has been made use of. I may mention the example of West Ham; is it not a fact that the guardians there had some school buildings handed over to them?—Yes, and very useful they were. But supposing there was a severe winter in London—and I am afraid it is bound to come sooner or later—though admitting undoubtedly, as you suggest, that provision can be made in that way, I am afraid it would be found very difficult to make sufficient provision for all London. There are not very many places that would be available for the purpose, but I think the difficulty might be partly met in that way.

13156. (Mr. Phelps.) Do you think that there is much room for classification in the workhouses in London?—Do you mean classification as between the different classes in one institution?

Existing London workhouses insufficient for system of classification of paupers in workhouses.

13157. I am rather thinking of devoting particular workhouses to particular purposes?—The fact is that when you come to compare the total number of inmates boarded-out with the vacancies, you will find that the former more than counterbalances the latter; so that I am afraid it would be difficult to find means of classification in existing London workhouses in the manner you suggest. That is why I have referred more than once to the desirability, as it appears to me, of providing for the so-called able-bodied in some new and comparatively cheap institution oustide London.

Legal position of pauper boarded-out in workhouse of another union.

13158. There is one technical question I want to ask you. Supposing you have a man boarded-out at Bosmere, and he discharges himself, what is the process?—The process is that he has to be brought back at the expense of his union. That has been the difficulty. The guardians have been told that in this boarding-out business they have no right to send a man away without his consent.

13159. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Not if he objects?—I know, that is the way it has been put.

13160. You do not have to get his consent in the first instance, do you?—No, but if he objects to remain he can go home.

13161. And he need not find his own way back?—No. In every case it is insisted upon in the agreement that they shall bring him back again.

13162. (Mr. Nunn.) If he objects do you say he goes to his own home in that case and supports himself?—No, he goes back to the workhouse. If he is chargeable, he is entitled to relief in the workhouse of his union or parish.

Co-operation between Poor Law and charities.

13163. (Mr. Gardiner.) What co-operation exists between Poor Law and charities in several unions?—Not a few boards of guardians have amongst their members those who are members also of the Charity Organisation Society. An excellent practice prevails in a certain number of boards, and I wish the number were greater, of referring applicants for relief through the guardians representing the society to the Charity Organisation Society where such a course seems desirable. The arrangement works very satisfactorily where adopted, and saves a quite appreciable number of persons from becoming chargeable to the rates. In the report of the Whitechapel Guardians for the year ended Lady Day, 1905, is given a return of cases assisted by or through the agency of the Charity Organisation Society, whence it appears that 113 persons were so assisted during the year in various ways.

13164. Would you favour any degree of departmental control (not necessarily Local Government Board control) of voluntary charities? Can you in that case make any suggestion for their control, that would (a) secure some differentiation between Poor Law and charitable functions; and (b) tend to the dispauperisation of the working classes? In particular, have you any criticisms or suggestions with regard to the almost identical terms upon which admission may be obtained to London hospitals and London Poor Law infirmaries?—I have no suggestions to make as to departmental control of voluntary charities. As to the terms upon which admission may be obtained to London hospitals and London Poor Law infirmaries, a system of investigation and differentiation has, I think, been established in the case of the Royal Free, the Westminster, the Middlesex, and the London hospitals. The co-operation of the Whitechapel and St. George's-in-the-East Guardians with the Charity Organisation Society may be regarded as specially well organised, and, as I have observed in reply to a former question, co-operation in a greater or less degree is practised by a good many boards in London.

Allocation of sick cases as between hospitals and Poor Law infirmaries.

Co-operation of guardians with charities in various London unions and possibility of extending it.

13165. (Mr. Loch.) Are the boards of guardians in London acquainted with the resources of charitable relief in their unions; and how far is there co-operation with charities?—I am not sure that boards of guardians in London, taken as a whole, are as well acquainted with the resources of charitable relief in their respective unions as they might be if they studied the excellent and informing digest published annually by the Charity Organisation Society. In some instances, Chelsea, for example, the relieving officers are supplied with a list of the charities and benevolent associations extracted from the digest in question, and if this practice were universal it would be no doubt advantageous, provided guardians and their officers would duly make use of the information so supplied in dealing with cases.

13166. (Chairman.) There appears to be a certain amount of co-operation between guardians and charities, but I gather from the answers you have just given that a good deal more might be done to secure more thorough co-operation?—Yes, I think so. Mr. Nunn adverted to that just now. I think there is in certain boards a disposition to regard with some resentment what they consider to be interference, and consequently an indisposition to ask for co-operation and assistance.

13167. If you want to make two separate bodies working, different systems combine, how would you suggest getting more thorough co-operation between them? Would you suggest that the authorities should be more organised, so that they could sit more as a whole in the locality and approach guardians in that way?—I did not quite understand the preliminary part of the question.

13168. Assuming that you get more cordial co-operation than now exists, have you any practical suggestion to make as to how that could be best done?—I am afraid I have none. The only action in that direction that I could suggest would be to repeat what I have already said. I think that the board might very well issue a circular—such a circular, as far as I know, has not been issued for many years now—calling attention to the desirability of co-operation. But, as I have also said, I think in that case it would be necessary that the observations of the guardians should be asked for after a period, because, those sort of communications are apt to lie on the table and to be forgotten. I think, however, very great good might come of a circular of the kind indicated.

13169. Are there many big endowed charities in London, do you know, which co-operate and work with the guardians?—I cannot say that I do know of many of my own knowledge.

13170. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to co-operation, I take it that what is intended by that phrase is not that they should co-operate to deal with a case, but that they should co-operate in considering the method by which the case should be dealt with?—I have always understood co-operation to mean this, that it should be co-operation between the guardians and the Charity Organisation Society or any other similar association in the Poor Law area concerned, to whom cases could be referred which the guardians thought were better suited for that assistance than for coming on the rates. The object of that co-operation, as it has always appeared to me, is to save the persons from being pauperised.

13171. That is to say, that one or other body should deal with the case according as it is suitable to deal with it?—Yes, according as it thought best.

13172. Then the role of the perhaps more organised charitable body would be the prevention of pauperism?—Yes.

13173. While the Poor Law authority would deal with or have the treatment of, poverty from the point of view of pauperism?—Yes, it would deal with destitution where proved.

13174. The other would be dealing with the prevention of pauperism altogether?—Yes. I take it the whole aim and desire of those who urge co-operation is that charity in the broadest sense should step in before it is necessary for the Poor Law to do so.

13175. Do you think it would be possible to give some official status to the bodies that deal with the prevention of pauperism?—I have not thought of that, and I do not know quite how that could be done.

13176. (Mr. Nunn.) Might I approach it from another point of view? Supposing all the agencies that were engaged in preventive work in a given borough or union were to agree to combine in order to deal with cases, would it be at all possible for the board of guardians, supposing other agencies were represented on such a board, to send representatives to it? At present I believe they send representatives to national conferences; would it be possible for them to send representatives to a body that sat permanently?—Do you mean representatives of charitable agencies?

Co-operation of guardians with charities in various London unions and possibility of extending it.

13177. Yes, to a body formed of all the preventive agencies in the district?—I am not quite sure how that could be carried out to the full extent. To take St. Pancras, for instance; at almost all the relief committee meetings a member of the Charity Organisation Society, who is not a guardian, attends and notes particular cases, and to a certain extent enters into the deliberations with regard to the case, but has no official status.

13178. My question was rather different; it was, supposing you had got a representative body of the charities of a particular union, whether it would be possible for the board of guardians to appoint a representative to it?—They could only do it voluntarily, I suppose.

13179. I am talking of their sending a representative to this board, not of their taking a representative on to their board. It is the business of any member of the community to get on to the board of guardians if he wants to do so, but the difficulty is to get the guardians to recognise the principle of appointing a representative to such a body as I have suggested?—The representative would have to be appointed by the board of guardians, and in order to do that, I take it fresh powers would have to be given to them.

13180. Would they—that is my point?—I think so.

13181. Then although they can appoint a representative to an annual conference, they have not got power to appoint a representative now to a weekly conference or a quarterly conference?—I do not quite understand.

13182. (Sir Samuel Provis.) There is nothing to prevent their appointing anybody, but they could not pay his expenses?—Yes, that is so.

13183. There is nothing to prevent the board of guardians passing a resolution saying that such a member of their body should attend?—I am afraid I did not understand the question, and that I thought it was the other way about—that the representative of the association should have the right, as it were, of being present at the guardians' meetings. I can only say in answer to Mr. Nunn that it would be a very desirable thing.

13184. (Mr. Bentham.) What union in London has been most successful in this co-operation?—I suppose one may say St. George's-in-the-East; but there it is quite exceptional.

13185. Have they a representative of the Charity Organisation Society of the district present at each meeting of the relief committee?—As it happens, at St. George's-in-the-East three at least of the guardians are themselves members of the Charity Organisation Society, and so representatives of the society would always be there. I do not think anybody sits at the meetings as directly representing the Charity Organisation Society.

13186. Are all the relief cases dealt with by the general board there?—Yes.

13187. Therefore one or other of these three members is likely to be present each time?—They would almost certainly be there.

13188. (Mr. Phelps.) The co-operation you speak of might take more than one form, might it not? Have you any experience in London of a board of guardians consulting with the Charity Organisation Society in inquiry work?—I do not know that they consult with the Charity Organisation Society as a body, but in St. Pancras it is a common practice for the relieving officers to meet periodically the officials of the Charity Organisation Society working in the district and to consult with them about particular cases.

13189. Would the books of the Charity Organisation Society's committee be available for the relieving officer?—Yes; and vice versa the books of the relieving officer would be available for the Charity Organisation Society's committee.

13190. Supposing a case comes up before the board of guardians and it is thought that the Charity Organisation Society is the appropriate body to deal with it, what procedure is taken in the case of any boards that you know?—The procedure is almost invariably this.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

14 May 1906.

Some member of the committee or of the board who is there, and who happens to be a member of the Charity Organisation Society, takes down the particulars, and then the applicant is told to attend at the office of the Charity Organisation Society at a certain hour. If a member of the Charity Organisation Society does not happen to be present, then the applicant will be given a note to say that the guardians think it will be better for the Charity Organisation Society in the first instance to deal with the particular case.

13191. But the person has applied to the board of guardians for relief?—Yes.

13192. Do the guardians adjourn the case or refer it to the relieving officer, or do they totidem verbis refer it to another source of relief?—The relieving officer continues to be responsible for the case; that is to say, he must see that the case suffers no hardship; but the guardians consider they are justified, where apparently there is no very immediate or urgent condition of necessity, to refer the applicant in the first instance to the Charity Organisation Society, on the understanding, of course, that the relieving officer is not thereby relieved of his responsibility.

13193. In an application and report book have you ever seen the heading "Referred to the C. O. S."?—Yes.

13194. You have seen that in an official volume?—Yes.

13195. I did not know whether it had got so far?—Yes, I have seen it.

Moral effect of charitable relief.

13196. Could you state, without going too much into detail, what you think the advantages which the Charity Organisation Society has over a board of guardians?—For purposes of that sort the principal advantage to the persons relieved is that they are relieved without disfranchisement.

13197. That may be an advantage, or it may not. Do you think that the moral effect of receiving relief from the Charity Organisation Society is different from the moral effect of relieving it from a board, because that is the really important point?—It is a question whether there is much difference.

13198. You do not feel very clear upon that point, at any rate?—No.

13199. Do you think it is much cheaper?—I should say it was, but that I cannot tell you. I do not know what the cost of the inquiry is.

13200. Perhaps you have not knowledge enough of the comparative cost in the two cases?—I am afraid I have not.

13201. Do you think that the charitable people have more opportunity of restoring independence than a board of guardians has?—Yes, I think they have; I think one must accept that.

13202. Do you think that the poor people themselves are conscious of the difference?—I do not know that many of them are. On the other hand, supposing the Charity Organisation Society had taken the case in hand, one would hope that the way in which it would probably be dealt with, would be such as to enable the persons relieved to feel that they were not necessarily losing their self-respect by accepting the assistance. I think the assistance is generally accompanied by conditions.

Co-operati of Poor La and charity

13203. One more question, which perhaps more immediately concerns you: do you, as you go about amongst boards of guardians find that the idea of co-operation is growing?—If anything, I should say yes. I think I may say that, speaking generally, when I have mooted the subject in recent years, I have found less of the direct hostility that one used to meet.

13204. People are inclined to more charitable estimates?—Yes. I think they appreciate it better than they used to. Perhaps I may take some of the credit for that myself, because I have always taken the opportunity when it occurred of pointing out what might be done in that direction.

13205. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Is it a common thing for relieving officers to send cases to the Charity Organisation Society on their own responsibility before they go before the Board?—I do not know that it is common, but I have certainly known it done.

13206. In that way the applicants really never come near the guardians at all?—Yes. It is done in St. Pancras I know, and not unfrequently.

13207. It is also a common thing, is it not, for the Charity Organisation Society to send reports of cases to the board of guardians?—Yes.

13208. Which are read at the Board?—Yes. That incidentally shows one great advantage of the case paper system. In the application and report book you never see these communications, but in a case paper every communication and every letter from the Charity Organisation Society is there immediately at hand, and you can turn over the sheets and read them. In those instances in which the case paper system is in vogue, you will hardly take up a file without finding letters or some correspondence with the Charity Organisation Society or other agencies showing what has been done.

13209. The ordinary form of co-operation in London is mutual representation and a member of the board of guardians is on the Charity Organisation Society's Committee, or vice versa a member of the Charity Organisation Society's Committee becomes a member of the board of guardians?—Yes, and in some places they do something more. In St. Pancras, and I think in one or two other places, it is recognised that the Local Charity Organisation Society's officials are, not casually but periodically, to compare notes, so to say, with the relieving officer, so that there should be, as it were, cross references between the two.

13210. The relieving officers' lists are shown to the Charity Organisation Society's officers?—Yes.

13211. Do you not think we might put it generally in this way: that the guardians refer cases to the Charity Organisation Society where constructive work is needed?—Yes, I think that would be a very good way of putting it; it is where there is still, so to say, a hope for the case.

13212. When a case may be made independent?—Yes.

13213. (Mr. Gardiner.) Do I understand that that is a common practice?—I wish it were a common practice.

13214. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) But the cases they do refer are cases of that class?—Yes.

THIRTY-SECOND DAY.

Tuesday, 15th May, 1906.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I., etc., etc., etc. (Chairman).

The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S.
Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.
Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
Dr. A. H. DOWNES.
The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
Mr. C. S. LOCH.
Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.
The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.
Professor WILLIAM SMART.
Mrs. BERNARD BOSANQUET.
Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.
Miss OCTAVIA HILL.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary).
Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Mr. HENRY LOCKWOOD, recalled; and further Examined.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

15 May 1906.

ffice of chief neral spector.

13215. (Chairman.) I should like to ask you whether your position differs at all from that of the other inspectors. There is an inspector-in-chief of the Local Government Board, is there not?—Yes.

13216. He is located in the Local Government Board?—Yes. His title is assistant secretary and chief general inspector.

13217. Is he supposed to give more personal attention to the London district than to other districts?—I think not.

13218. The other inspectors' relations to him are much the same as yours?—Yes, it happens that being on the spot he probably in the course of a given period would give more attention to London subjects, but he is not in a different position with relation to London?

13219. Nor are you in regard to your district in a different position?—No.

-operation tween arities and e guar-ans.

13220. (Mr. Gardiner.) Would you tell me whether there is any effective co-operation between the boards of guardians and charitable associations in London?—Taking them as a whole, I cannot say that it is effective; in a certain number of them, I do not know that I can name them at once, there is co-operation.

. Olave's bour yard.

13221. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Considering the severity of the winter of 1905, do you consider St. Olaves a typical case whereby to judge stoneyards?—It would be hardly fair to call the St. Olaves example one whereby to judge stoneyards generally, because it was started in a hurry and inefficiently managed.

13222. How would you deal with the different classes noted in Question 4086?—The undesirables should have no relief except in a properly organised workhouse. The others might be tided over exceptional periods of distress by charitable assistance, properly organised after reasonable inquiry.

eed for less athy on rt of tepayers.

13223. Referring to Question 4098, what alternative do you see to returning lax guardians in times of great pressure?—The only alternative I can suggest under the existing system is that those who have to pay the rates should take greater trouble to endeavour to get elected those who would regard their interests equally with those whose distress has to be relieved out of the rates.

asual labour the West nd of ondon.

13224. Referring to Question 4103, is not casual labour greater in the West End, and is this not due to a kind of parasitical labour?—You would know more about this in the parish of Marylebone, for example, than I do; but I should not myself have thought that there was a greater amount of casual labour in the West End than in, say, the neighbourhood of the docks, though, no doubt, there would be more to be picked up by what may be called parasitical labour west of Oxford Circus than in, say, Stepney or West Ham.

Labour colonies for "ins-and-outs."

13225. Ought not the class "gravitating towards ins-and-outs" dealt with in Question 4120 to be dealt with earlier by labour colonies?—I think labour colonies, or branch workhouses, strictly administered, would be useful in this direction.

13226. As regards the 5 per cent. able-bodied referred to in Question 4147, would this not apply now to the class immediately above those in receipt of relief?—I should think that a larger percentage than five of the class immediately above those in receipt of relief would be able-bodied in the usual acceptance of the term.

Casual labour provided by Borough councils.

13227. Referring to Question 4104, is borough council labour casual as a rule?—I am not in the position to say whether or no this is the case as a rule, but when I answered Question 4104 I had in mind such work as relaying streets, street sweeping and cleaning, and so on, and from observation, admittedly superficial, it has generally appeared to me that a proportion, at least, of the men so employed were of the casual sort.

13228. Is not the prevalence of three days a week workers, a danger due to mistaken methods of providing temporary work?—I agree that providing temporary work by three-day shifts is a mistaken method.

Effect of farm colonies upon character.

13229. Will you give your experience as to the effect upon character of the farm colony?—I believe that the discipline, supervision, and the steady work provided in well-managed farm colonies must have a good moral and physical effect.

Methods of dealing with unemployed prior to Mr. Long's scheme and advantages of that scheme.

13230. (Mr. Gardiner.) What methods have been adopted to deal with able-bodied unemployed, and what has been the effect on pauperism of Mr. Chamberlain's circular with regard to borough councils and unemployed in 1890, 1895, 1900 and 1905? What has been the extent of co-operation between boards of guardians and borough councils?—In each succeeding winter since 1895, in London, there has been co-operation of a sort between guardians and borough councils, but until the establishment of Mr. Long's scheme there was little or no preliminary investigation of the circumstances of applicants for relief or assistance, and consequently I am inclined to think that there was very much the same mixing up of classes under the three-day shift system as occurs in the case of stoneyard relief. This much can, I think, be at least claimed for Mr. Long's scheme, that there was an endeavour to systematise investigation in lieu of the indiscriminate methods previously adopted.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

15 May 1906.

The records of emigrated paupers.

13231. What steps are taken to obtain reports of the able-bodied paupers emigrated by London boards—say for a year or two after their settlement? Are there any facts or figures relating to this subject now available, especially in regard to Poplar's emigrants of last year? —There are not, so far as I know, any regular steps taken to get reports regarding able-bodied paupers emigrated by London guardians. Of the twenty-five Poplar emigrants of last year, three have, I understand, returned; of these, two have applied for relief, but have been refused it absolutely on any terms whatever.

13232. (Mrs. Webb.) It has been suggested that "casual" employment increases the destitution, and thus the pauperism, of certain London unions. Can you supply any evidence for, or against, this hypothesis? —I am not in possession of any direct evidence on this subject, but the special inquiry now proceeding in Poplar may very possibly provide evidence more or less direct on the subject.

Out-relief to wage-earners.

13233. One point to which the attention of this Commission has been directed, is the practice of granting out-relief to persons in employment. Can you give us specific information on the following lines, classifying the relief in aid of wages under the following heads, and stating in which unions within the Metropolis is each one of them most prevalent:—(a) To men in employment under some sudden and urgent necessity?—(b) To men in employment under the guise of adjuncts to medical relief?—(c) To men irregularly employed, in respect of those days in a week, or weeks in a month, in which they have no work? (d) To men in employment, in respect of the cost of burial of some dependant?—(e) To women in weekly wage-earning employment, at constant work, but earning less than subsistence?—(f) To women in weekly wage-earning employment irregularly in respect of the days in a week, or weeks in a month, in which they have no work?—(g) To women doing casual "day's work" for different employers, such as "charing"?—(h) To women in wage-earning employment under the guise of adjuncts to medical relief?— Relief is not given to men actually in employment except under the guise of adjuncts to medical relief to some member of the family; but relief is frequently given to men irregularly employed during the period that they are out of work, and not unfrequently to men in employment in respect of burial expenses. I am unable to say in which unions each one of these is most prevalent, though it will probably be found to prevail in those unions the guardians of which favoured an out-relief policy. Relief is certainly given in a great many instances to women of the class noted in (e), (f), (g) and (h) of your question.

Relief in aid of wages—extent to which illegal.

13234. Are any of the above kinds of relief in aid of wages in your opinion contrary to the regulations of the Local Government Board?—I doubt if they are contrary to the regulations; in fact, the Poor Law Board Instructional Letter accompanying the Out-Relief Regulation Order of 1852 pointed out as follows:—"What it is intended actually to prohibit is the giving relief at the same identical time as that at which the person receiving it is in actual employment and in the receipt of wages (unless he falls within any of the exceptions afterwards set forth), and that relief given in any other case as, for example, in that of a man working for wages on one day and being without work the next, or working half the week and being then in need of relief, is not prohibited by this article." That is Article 5 of the Out-Relief Regulation Order.

13235. Have any cases of such relief in aid of wages been surcharged by the auditor of the Local Government Board?—I am not aware that they have.

Recent London labour yards.

13236. (Mr. Loch.) I should like to ask you what unions, including West Ham, have opened labour yards in the last five years, under what regulations, with what number of applicants, and with what results?—Labour yards were opened last year by West Ham, Croydon and Wandsworth this year by Croydon and West Ham only. There was nothing unusual in the result. I am waiting for returns of the numbers and the cost. (Return subsequently sent. See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (K)).

Effect of borough council "relief."

13236. (a.) Should labour yards be continued? If so, should any conditions, other than those now in force, be required?—My experience of 1895 has unduly, perhaps, prejudiced me against labour yards; the only argument in their favour is that, for the time being, the persons so employed are kept off the labour market.

13236 (b.) Is the substitution of borough council employment relief for labour yard relief, satisfactory?—What I have just said in favour of labour yards cannot of course be said of borough council employment, which to that extent may be held to be unsatisfactory, particularly when the relief or the work is given in three days or fortnightly shifts.

13236. (c.) What has been the effect of the general adoption of borough council relief on the Poor Law?—The effect of borough council relief in dealing with seasonal or exceptional distress has been that for the time being the guardains have been relieved to that extent of their responsibility for the relief of distress.

Cost of Laindon Farm Colony.

13236. (d.) What has been the cost of land per acre; plant; maintenance and terms of maintenance, of the Poplar and other experiments made within the administration of the Poor Law for dealing with the unemployed, the number, conditions and the results?—The only experiment of the nature of a farm colony is that of the Poplar experiment at Laindon. I hope to be able to hand in a return of cost of land, maintenance, etc., to be furnished to me by the clerk. (Subsequently sent. See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (L)).

The modified workhouse test order.

13236. (e.) What has been the result of the Out-Door Relief Able-bodied Male Persons Order to the several unions to which it has been applied?—The Modified Workhouse Test Order issued to Poplar, Wandsworth, and Kensington, and, I think, Hampstead, has only been put in force in the first-mentioned union, where fifty men were so relieved and sent to Laindon, while their wives and families were supported at home.

13236. (f.) So far as the Poor Law is concerned, on what parts of its organisation should reliance be placed for dealing with exceptional distress, if it were to remain the chief agency available for that purpose?—If the Poor Law were to remain the chief agency for relieving exceptional distress, the Modified Workhouse Test Order might probably be very usefully employed; assuming, of course, that suitable accommodation would be available for the men so dealt with.

Joint Committees under Mr. Long's scheme.

13236. (g.) Is it desirable that there should be a second relief organisation, such as the Distress Committee, in addition to the Poor Law?—If, some other agency should be brought in, the best as yet suggested, as it seems to me, is an organisation such as the Joint Distress Committee as established under Mr. Long's scheme; the principal value of which is that the essential importance is recognised of careful investigation before relief or assistance is given.

Extent of accommodation in London workhouses.

13237. Is there sufficient accommodation in the workhouses?—Although, as the return handed in shows, there are in the aggregate some 1,500 vacancies in London, the accommodation in the workhouses is not, strictly speaking, sufficient, because the means of proper classification are inadequate, but, as I have previously observed, adequate classification can, in my opinion, only be provided in separate institutions for each class, sick, infirm or aged, and able-bodied—so called.

Effect of farm colony on the colonists.

13237. (a.) What is the experience of "farms"—Salvation Army and others?—The restorative effects of Salvation Army treatment on the colonists sent there has not been so considerable as one might be led to suppose.

Position of paupers refusing to work when sent to voluntary institutions by guardians.

13238. Has it not been the practice of some boards of guardians in London to refer lazy, or other able-bodied paupers, disinclined to work, to the Church or Salvation Army labour colonies, and, if they refused work offered them there, to prosecute? Is this system legal? What cases of it have occurred? Can any magistrates' comments or decisions on it, and on the character of the offer made to the applicant by way of work and remuneration, be produced? Cannot the Poor Law deal with cases of unwillingness to work within its own administration without having recourse to voluntary associations in the manner described?—Not a few boards of guardians have referred lazy and other able-bodied paupers to Salvation Army or Church Army colonies and have prosecuted the pauper so dealt with, if he returned to the workhouse. When this practice was first adopted it suited the guardiane' purposes so far, that magistrates, as a rule, would deal more severely with the men who had been given opportunities to work in this manner than they would with a man who refused to do his work in an ordinary workhouse, but recently in certain cases magistrates have taken a view hostile to the guardian, and one case—that of Martin of Poplar—was twice referred to the Commissioners of King's Bench, and decisions against the guardians were given on each occasion. The Poor Law should be able to deal with cases of unwillingness to work without having recourse to voluntary associations, but in order to do so, it will be necessary, I think, to provide able-bodied or test branch houses in which employment or work, not necessarily of a severe sort, but continuous, could be systematically provided for every inmate, but disciplinary treatment of the kind I have in mind is, it seems to me, quite impossible in a large mixed workhouse.

Kensington Test Workhouse and cause of its failure.

13239. (Mr. Nunn.) Can you classify the steps taken by London Boards to secure adequate work for able-bodied paupers?—No steps which could be classified have been taken by London Boards to secure adequate work for able-bodied paupers, though I may mention that for some years, the Kensington workhouse at Mary Place was available as a test house, but it failed in its object because stone-breaking was practically the only task, and in a large number of the cases that the guardians wished to send there the medical officer would not certify the men to be physically fit for the task of work imposed.

Effect of out-relief on wages.

13240. Assuming the economic tendency of out-relief to diminish wages amongst certain classes can you indicate any lines upon which, in the metropolitan area any verification in actual facts can be established?—I am unable to indicate any lines upon which complete verification in actual facts can be established of the effect of out-relief on wages, but the exhibits that I have shewn from Bethnal Green and the larger number in the exhibition got up by the "Daily News" may help in that direction.

Unemployed Workmen's Act.

13241. Are you prepared to suggest any useful modification of the Unemployed Workmen's Act, 1905?—Amendment of the Unemployed Workmen's Act is a matter for Parliament and it is beyond my province to volunteer modification, though perhaps I may not improperly express a hope that in any case the record papers will continue to be used.

Effect of Mr. Chamberlain's circular as to providing employment for the unemployed.

13242. (Mr. Lansbury.) Have you any information as to what has been the result, so far as London is concerned, of the circular on unemployment issued by successive presidents since 1886 recommending local authorities to provide work for the unemployed apart from the Poor Law?—I have only general information as to the effect of these circulars on unemployment, but without doubt, very considerable sums have been spent by borough councils on what were practically relief works during the past twelve years.

13243. In your opinion has the effect of that circular, as far as London is concerned, been to get into people's minds that the State has recognised the principle that it was the business of the community to provide people with work when unable to obtain it through no fault of their own?—It is probable, I think, that the circular has had the effect suggested in the minds of a good many people.

13244. Can you give us the cost of such work put in hand by the old vestries, district boards of works, and borough councils, for the past ten years or for any period which you think would be fair, showing the total amount of money spent each year on special work; the number of men employed, the period for which they were employed (whether continuously or for short periods only), the total net cost of such work, and the estimated cost if done under ordinary conditions and not by unemployed labour?—I have not the material for answering your question, though I presume it could be got from the borough councils themselves.

Men "relieved" by municipal authorities as a factor in pauperism.

13245. Would it be possible for you to put in a return showing the proportion of able-bodied male pauperism chargeable to the Poor Law during the past twenty years in the Metropolis, side by side with the total number of men relieved during the same period by borough councils?—I regret I am equally unable to put in a return showing the proportion of able-bodied males chargeable to the Poor Law together with the total number of men relieved by borough councils.

13246. In your opinion, would it not be fair in estimating the increase or decrease of able-bodied pauperism in the Metropolis, to add these two sets of figures together?—I think that certainly the figures may be regarded, as, to a certain extent, interchangeable.

London boy labour a source of casual labour.

13247. With regard to boy-labour, can you tell us what effect this has on producing the unskilled unemployed labour which borough councils and boards of guardians have had to deal with during the past twenty years?—It is impossible to say precisely what effect this has on the production of unskilled unemployed labour, but there can, I think, be no donbt, that van boys, paper boys, and others who, between the ages of twelve and seventeen or eighteen, pick up a living in the streets, and, perhaps in a lesser degree district messenger boys and telegraph boys must help to swell the ranks of unskilled labour in London.

13248. Would it be possible by any means to get for a given year the ages and the occupations of the men employed by boards of guardians as unemployed?—It might be possible to get this information from the guardians or borough council records, but it would be, I am afraid, a lengthy and difficult business.

Nature of work done at Laindon Farm Colony and its efficacy as a workhouse test.

13249. With regard to the Laindon Colony, you have told us that the Poplar guardians dealt with two separate classes of able-bodied men. In your opinion, during the first six months, when only the ordinary pauper was engaged, was real work done on the estate? That is to say, you saw the estate when it was taken over, and you saw it six months later; in your judgment was the work carried out during the period mentioned work of a character which would test the ability and willingness of the pauper to work, and was not one of the reasons for opening the colony this: that it would prove whether men would work at ordinary labour without being driven to it?—Certainly, real work was done at Laindon during the first six months after it was opened, and was of a character calculated to test the ability and willingness of those employed, and one of the objects for opening the colony was to ascertain whether workhouse inmates could satisfactorily work at ordinary labour.

Physique of bulk of the unemployed.

13250. In your experience would you say that what are called the bulk of able-bodied men are those who, for a variety of reasons, are unable to secure a place in the labour market, and that they are mentally, morally, or physically deficient?—I should say that the majority of those classed able-bodied for Poor Law purposes are in some degree mentally, morally, or physically deficient.

13251. Did you see the 100 men who first went to Laindon; and in your judgment would you consider them all able-bodied in the sense that they were men who could be described as fit for any unskilled employment that was going under commercial conditions?—I think that they could not have been so described when they first went to Laindon.

Generic pauperism.

13252. Have you ever taken sample cases of able-bodied men and women and traced back their history; if so, with what results?—I cannot say I have, except in some instances of school failures, and in the majority of these the failure was the result of some such infirmity as that already referred to. I have, in fact, not known many hereditary paupers, though I did find three generations in one family in the stoneyard at West Ham.

Provision for able-bodied paupers past middle-age.

13253. You have told us that the age when men become too old for ordinary work was growing less. What in your judgment is the best method for dealing with the so-called able-bodied and what are known as the "young 60's?" Would you be in favour of country workhouses where not only agriculture but other industries could be carried on by this class?—The "young 60's" are a very difficult class to deal with, but I should favour branch workhouses with alternative industries and graduated tasks of work, so that all persons could be kept steadily employed according to their capacity.

Need of special test workhouses for able-bodied.

13254. (Chairman.) You are not satisfied with the results of the labour yards, I gather; but it is difficult, in your judgment to substitute any other effective system?—I am afraid it is, in the absence of what I live in hope of seeing, namely, a properly equipped separate workhouse

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

15 May 1906.

specially designed to deal with the class of persons who otherwise might be found in the labour yards.

13255. (Mr. Booth.) Do you mean one for all London?—No; I think I should not go so far as that. I question whether you could deal satisfactorily with that class in a very large institution. I may say that my own somewhat vague idea has been that there might be three such institutions as that for groups of guardians who would use each of them according to their needs.

13256. (Chairman.) What would be the class for whom this institution would be set apart? Would it be the unemployed who come to the boroughs?—Yes, to a certain extent, but mainly cases which were not considered suitable for assistance by the Distress Committee.

13257. Are you in favour of two authorities dealing with them, or would you wish only one authority?—If you grouped guardians for the purpose, you would have to resort to a similar arrangement to that which obtains in the sick asylum districts. You would require a board of management for the particular institution selected or delegated by the boards of guardians who are to use it, so that you would not have a separate authority, but an authority provided for that particular purpose from representatives of existing authorities.

13258. From your experience, do you think it advisable to bring in the borough councils at all?—The borough councils have hitherto been asked to deal with applicants with a view to their being saved disfranchisement, and being dealt with separately.

13259. Those institutions would be so far part and parcel of the Poor Law as to disfranchise the applicants?—Yes, they would.

Position of paupers refusing to work, when sent to voluntary institutions by guardians.

13260. In answer to one of Mr. Loch's questions you have referred to the case of Martin of Poplar?—May I be allowed to correct that answer? The case did not go to the House of Lords at all. The magistrate, Mr. Cluer, stated a case, which was considered in the Court of King's Bench, and they sent it back to him; he sent it back again to the Court of King's Bench, and ulitmately they upheld his decision.

13261 What was the result of the decision?—Mr. Loch's question was: "Has it not been the practice of some boards of guardians in London to refer lazy or other able-bodied paupers disinclined to work to the Church or Salvation Army labour colonies, and, if they refused work offered them there, to prosecute? Is this system legal?" If that applies to the practice of sending persons there, I have no reason to suppose that it is not legal, but I understand all this was gone into with Mr. Adrian; I have not seen his evidence, but if that was the case, I do not know that I can usefully add anything to what he said. In the Martin case neither the magistrate himself nor the Court, so far as I understand, questioned the legality of the proceedings as between the guardians and the Salvation Army, but what they did question was whether the Salvation Army had a right, as a condition of employing the man, to insist upon his attending a particular form of service, and also advocating teetotal principles.

13262. The statement here is that the board of guardians prosecuted this person for returning to the workhouse from some shelter or Church Army colony?—Yes.

13263. What is meant by prosecuting?—The guardians prosecuted him under an Act which would constitute him, if convicted, a rogue and vagabond; the court held that a man was not in law a rogue and vagabond if he refused to work under the conditions imposed by the Salvation Army.

13264. If the institution had been under the control of the guardians, I assume they would have been able to prosecute?—Yes.

Distinction between work found for unemployed by guardians and by borough councils.

13265. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The distinction between work provided by the borough council and anything done by the guardians is this, is it not, that in the case of the guardians it is relief, and in the case of the borough council it is not?—Certainly.

13266. Therefore it is proper to look upon anything done by the borough council in paying wages as money paid for work done?—That is so.

13267. Whereas the guardians do not pay for the work done?—No, they do not pay for the work done. The man has to work, as it were, as a guarantee of good faith for the relief he receives. He receives not wages, but assistance for himself and family.

13268. The amount given to him, therefore, should not depend on the work done?—It should depend on his actual needs.

13269. It would depend on his family and the circumstances of the case?—Certainly, there is that difference.

Combination of unions to provide a test workhouse for "able-bodied."

13270. Supposing there was some combination of unions for the purpose of providing a test house, I think I gathered from what you said that you rather contemplated that a district should be set up under the Metropolitan Poor Act?—Yes. I do not say that would be the absolutely best way, but it has occurred to me that it might very possibly be a useful way of endeavouring to deal with the class termed "able-bodied." As I have said before, the difficulty with that class is that a large proportion of them are persons whom a medical officer cannot certify as being able-bodied in the ordinary sense of the term. It would be essential it seems to me, that in any institution of this sort you should be able to provide for persons in pretty well any physical condition, this is to say, a man who has a weak heart, or is ruptured, or anything of that sort, who is not fit for very hard work, could be dealt with in some way so that he could be constantly kept employed; his relief in that way would be a test of his worth, physical and otherwise, and an incentive to try and shift for himself.

13271. Outside London there is power for the guardians to combine and have a joint committee, as you know?—That is so.

13272. Section 8 of the Poor Law Act, 1879, does not apply to London. Do you think there would be any advantage in its being made applicable to London, rather than setting up a separate district with a board of managers?—As a matter of fact, a joint board of that sort is composed, is it not, of delegates, not necessarily delegates of the board, but representatives of the board?

13273. The other is a little simpler, you merely get a joint committee of the several bodies?—Certainly the inauguration of it would be simpler than formally constituting a district. I think that would be a simpler way of getting at the authority you want.

Unemployed relieved by boroughs as a factor in London's pauperism.

13274. The point I was mentioning just now about the distinction between persons who got assistance from the borough council and assistance from guardians a little affects the answer you gave that the figures may be regarded as to a certain extent interchangeable. That is not quite so, is it?—Perhaps I ought to have said that it might be possible that persons might ring the changes, a person might be relieved by one authority in one year and by another authority the next. I do not mean to say they would to any considerable extent be transferred from one authority to the other during the same period of distress.

Persons "relieved" by both guardians and borough councils.

13275. Do the borough councils refuse to give assistance to people who have been in receipt of relief during a certain time?—Under the present distress committees they should do so; they have to get special assent, I believe, in case they propose to depart from that rule in any case.

13276. That would be for a temporary period?—Yes.

13277. I do not know whether the question of borough councils acting apart from the Unemployed Workmen Act has come under your notice; but have they, as a fact, laid down rules?—I do not think they have. In cases of that sort it is not improbable that persons who had been relieved by the borough council might be temporarily relieved by the guardians, or vice versa.

Remuneration for work at Laindon Colony.

13278. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) I think it is the theory that guardian's work is relief work, and not paid by wages?—Is that absolutely the case? How is it at Laindon, for instance, are the men paid a fixed scale?—The only payment at Laindon is the 6d. a week which some well-intentioned benevolent gentleman provided the money for; otherwise the men have their lodging and their rations only, they are not paid wages.

13279. Do they ever try to work by piece-work on Poor Law work; are the men paid according to what they do?—I do not think at the present moment there is any provision for the men being paid by money under any circumstances.

13280. That means, does it not, that you must have very special superintendence to see that they do anything like a day's work?—I suppose you are speaking of the labour yards?

Labour yards a method of relief.

13281. Or any other form of work under the guardians?—Certainly, and that has been one of my objections to labour yards, that it has been almost impossible so to arrange the supervision that you could really make that form of relief at all deterrent to the class of men that you wish to make it deterrent to.

13282. Can you ever get a fair day's work out of them?—I do not know that you ever get that. Of course they are kept employed during the time they are there; it is assumed that each person who goes to a labour yard has a certain task of work, but it is unreasonable with 400 or 500 men in a labour yard to expect that each one of them would be able to break the same amount of stone, you cannot exact a fixed task; all you can do is to keep them employed.

13283. I presume a skilled superintendent could tell sufficiently whether they had done a good day's work?—Yes, he could; but it is difficult to insist upon it.

Application for relief by guardians and borough councils.

13284. It is pretty well known in some of the South London unions that the men have oscillated from week to week between the borough council work and the Poor Law?—I think it is possible. In 1894, 1895, 1896, and 1898 certainly, I think in the South of London in a good many places the men would be alternately relieved by the guardians and employed by the borough council.

13285. I think last winter it was the same?—Probably.

13286. In that case the whole object of the borough council's work as against the Poor Law work is defeated?—I take it that the assumption would be that some of the men employed by the borough council would escape disfranchisement.

13287. But with regard to those who went to the Poor Law in the alternate weeks?—They would not.

13288. There would be no superiority in the work?—They would certainly be disfranchised. The mere fact of being employed by the guardians carries that with it.

Out-relief to women wage-earners.

13289. You have said that it is quite habitual for out-relief to be given to women who are employed?—I am afraid it is.

13290. Do you know whether the guardians have ever had it brought before them, as a question of policy, whether this is a wise thing or not?—I have myself incidentally questioned the wisdom of it, but it is difficult when they have a particular case before them to induce them to take the view that they ought to depart from the practice and refuse relief.

13291. It is impossible on the special case?—Yes; I am speaking of the common case of an old woman who is in receipt of relief, or applies for relief, and she is asked what she does, and she says she is employed cleaning a church, for instance, one day, and somewhere else another day, for which perhaps she gets a shilling and her dinner. It is irregular employment, but still she is employed.

13292. Take another case, when you get a woman working, say, at Pink's factory, the relief might be quite necessary, but would any board of guardians take the line of saying, "If you give up work we will give you adequate relief"?—I do not know that they ever have gone as far as that. That is carrying out the principle, no doubt, to its logical conclusion.

13293. Have any boards got rules on this subject?—No rules to this extent, that no person in receipt of any wage whatever should have relief.

13294. No rules for women earning wages, but with men there are rules in respect of wages?—No, I do not think there are fixed rules.

Application for relief by guardians and boroughs.

13295. (Chairman.) Assuming that certain men first get employment from the borough under the joint committee, and then revert to the Poor Law, I assume that the borough committee would not give them employment again if they knew that?—I take it at the present moment there has been substituted for what used to be borough employment work provided by the district distress committees, and I think certainly in that case it is one of the accepted conditions that they should not give employment to men who have been in receipt of relief within a certain period.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

15 May 1906.

13296. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) I believe that in some of the the South London unions though distress committees have been formed, the borough council have continued to give the work quite irrespective of what the distress committees are doing?—That is possible; but my enquiries have not been sufficiently extensive to enable me to corroborate that from facts within my own knowledge.

13297. When that is the case I think the borough council take on the men quite irrespective of whether they had been in receipt of poor relief apart from the Distress Committee?—That is possible.

Co-operation between Distress Committees and guardians.

13298. (Dr. Downes.) Do you think that the various agencies of relief, the Poor Law relief and the borough council relief, know sufficiently what each is doing?—I think that the borough relief agency, until the establishment of the distress committees, certainly did not know as much as was desirable, but I should have assumed there is improvement in that respect now; there may be exceptions, as Mrs. Bosanquet has suggested, but as a rule there is an endeavour on the part of the distress committees on the one hand and the guardians on the other to know what has been done by the other body and avoid overlapping.

13299. Are there any definite records available to shew what men receive relief and what amount is expended upon relief from each of those sources?—They are not at hand at present, but each distress committee has, in respect of each person employed, a record sheet which gives full particulars of the person's antecedents and so on. I do not know that they have yet been collected for report purposes by the Cental Committee.

Report as to work under Unemployed Workmen's Act.

13300. Is there any machinery which will collect that information so that the public may have it?—I think so, I think it is certainly intended by the Central Committee ultimately to issue a report on the whole subject.

13301. In such a form that the operation of the two kinds of relief may be clearly set forth?—I cannot tell you, but I suppose it would be in such a form.

13302. Is there any statutory machinery that would produce that result?—I am not quire sure whether the Act provides for all that.

13303. Do you think it desirable that it should be done?—I think so, certainly.

Practice of wives sending money to husbands and receiving relief apart from them under Modified Workhouse Test Order, etc.

13304. With reference to the modified Workhouse Test Order, have you found any difficulty with regard to the wives sending money to the men?—No, but I am sorry to say on the other hand, in the case of men who were relieved at labour colonies under the Guildhall Committee in the year before last and last year, it was not unusual for the men to receive money from their wives in stamps and so on, and Mr. Leonard Cohen and myself, who together supervised the Garden City Colony, discouraged it as much as possible.

13305. Do you know whether anything of the sort happened at Laindon?—No, but I think it is more than likely that it did. It is an extremely difficult thing to prevent; in fact, you can only do so by moral suasion.

13306. Can you tell us under what circumstances the three Poplar emigrants have returned so quickly?—I have not particulars beyond the fact that they have returned.

13307. With regard with the Vagrancy Act, was not some attempt made by the Southwark Union to bring the delirium tremens cases, and that class of case, within the Vagrancy Act?—I am afraid I cannot answer that question positively.

13308. I am under the impression that there was some effort, and it was taken to the Courts?—I will enquire about that, and try to give the answer later. (Mr. Lockwood subsequently replied as follows:—In December, 1899, the attention of the guardians was drawn to the case of a man admitted to Newington Workhouse suffering from delirium tremens, the directions were given for prosecuting this man for neglecting to maintain himself; and with a view to the importance of the matter, the clerk was directed to brief Mr. Corrie Grant (who had settled the information) to argue the point before the magistrate, preparatory to the matter being finally determined by the High Court. The magistrate dismissed the charge, but subsequently stated a case, which was lodged, and on the 31st July, 1900, the Divisional Court, after hearing counsel on behalf of the guardians, held that the respondent could not be convicted under the Act. Mr. Justice Kennedy in giving judgment stated: "In my judgment the magistrate was quite right. The respondent at the time that he was taken to the infirmary was extremely ill and suffering from delirium tremens. He is described in the case as suffering from that disease while at his own residence to such an extent that he was dangerous to himself and to those about him. Now we have to bear these facts in mind, while looking at the section under which the magistrate was asked to convict him. That section provides 'every person being able, wholly or in part, to maintain himself or herself, or his or her family, by work or other means, and wilfully refusing or neglecting to do so, by which refusal or neglect he or she or any of his or her family whom he or she may be bound to legally maintain, shall have become chargeable to any parish, township, or place, shall be deemed to be an idle or disorderly person.' Now the respondent was not merely drunk but had become by his own voluntary act for a time diseased and incapable of maintaining himself. Now I do not think that this Act was intended to punish people who by wilfully bringing on a disease incapacitated themselves from working. The statute is directed against persons who at the time they become chargeable are able to maintain themselves. That is not this case. The magistrate, therefore, would have been quite wrong if he convicted a man under this statute, who was suffering from a disease which prevented him from working, however that disease may have been brought on. Mr. Justice Darling agreed.)"

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

15 May 1906.

Workhouse labour tests in London and their respective merits.

13309. (Mr. Phelps.) Do you find a great variety of forms of labour test in the workhouses in London?—No. I think you may say there are three: Oakum picking, stone breaking, and, here and there, corn mills.

13310. Do you think that, as a whole, the labour test really serves its purpose as a test of destitution for able-bodied?—I should say to the able-bodied, yes, in the majority of cases.

13311. Could you draw any distinction between the forms of labour in that respect?—Do you mean which is the most efficacious?

13312. Yes?—I am disposed to favour the corn mill myself, because I think it is work that anybody can do, and it has this advantage, I think, that a man in performing his task of work is producing something which will be useful to his fellow creatures in the shape of food later on.

13313. Given that you have a difference in the form that the labour test takes, is the administration of it fairly uniform; is the amount of work required for an able-bodied man in a given time the same?—Fairly so, I think.

Emigration of paupers without labour test.

13314. (Miss Hill.) Do you know the particulars of the result of the emigration to Canada of a group of men from the Marylebone workhouse, through the Salvation Army, without any previous test?—Last summer 21 men were sent through the Salvation Army to Canada. Good reports have been received as to several. Others have been sent up country and are rather beyond reach, but up to the present none of the men have returned to Marylebone.

13315. Has any other board of guardians sent men out in that way?—I do not know of any boards of guardians that have sent a group of men straight from the workhouse in that way. Speaking for myself, it has always seemed to me that there should be a greater probability of men succeeding in Canada, if, before going, they had, we will say, six months' training in something like the work they would have to do when they got there, rather than taking them straight away from a workhouse and putting them on board ship.

13316. And you think there should be some inquiry into their condition and characters, too?—Yes, I may say that I happen to know that in Marylebone they have a large number of men at the preset moment with perhaps an unusual proportion of really able-bodied men. There was a considerable discussion as to whether they should not emigrate some—I think it was over forty of them—in a group together; and the decision ultimately come to was that it would be better to postpone the matter in order to see whether they could not give the men some adequate training, before they started, rather than to risk sending them straight from the workhouse with the probability of their coming back again.

13317. (Professor Smart.) Are the corn mills you spoke of hand mills?—Yes.

The corn m as a labour test.

13318. The old hand mills of sixty years ago?—I do not know about that, probably the interior machinery has been improved, but a hand mill is always a hand mill, it is a machine with a wheel and handle which must be turned to grind the corn.

13319. You said it was producing something useful to one's fellow men, does not that apply to stone-breaking also?—It does, but you realise the usefulness of the flour more directly than you do that of the stone.

13320. There is no arrangement made for using that flour in the workhouse, is there?—I may tell you that I had a very interesting piece of information quite recently at Lewisham; they have had some trouble with so-called able-bodied men, and when I was there last—about two months ago—they were putting up three hand mills, and I asked whether they would not probably find some difficulty in disposing of the surplus flour they might grind, as I knew in some instances there had been a difficulty, but they told me they had made an arrangement with their flour contractor to take from them all that they could not consume themselves in the workhouse, so they got over the difficulty there.

13321. The cost of the flour produced by that method would be very great?—Yes, it would cost more; however, the contractor was willing to take it off their hands at market price; it was better than their getting nothing at all for it, and not being able to use it themselves.

13322. In approving of the corn mill in preference to the stone yard, are you attaching any weight to the effect on the worker?—No; it is merely this, I am regarding it, so to say, as a test. You may say that any person can turn a handle, and I think it is not necessarily such hard work as stone breaking.

13323. It does not destroy the fingers, of course?—No.

The policy incontinuou work in Labour Yar e.g., the rec mation of Chat Moss.

13324. I should like your opinion on this: Some time between 1834 and 1847 an experiment was made of putting labourers to work in Chat Moss on reclaiming land. Those men, I find, worked on the principle that they got enough days work in the week to earn a subsistence for themselves and their families, but for the remainder of the week they were allowed to take outside work at wages wherever they could get it; is that in violation of modern principles?—I do not think it is in violation of the Out-relief Regulation Order, is it?

13325. But of the practice?—I think that you may take it it is not an uncommon thing at all for a man to be in receipt of relief, we will say, for a certain period, and then go off relief, be employed, and then be relieved again.

13326. In the same week?—Not in the same week, I think. I was thinking of a period of perhaps three or four weeks, then out of work, and then in work again.

13327. Is not that a rate in aid, after all?—I suppose we must say it is.

13328. If a man gets enough for himself and his family by, say, three days' work for the Poor Law authority, and then goes out and offers himself for wages the other three days, he can work for any wages he likes?—The principle on which the Board advocate the use of labour yards is that they shoud be so arranged that the man should be off the labour market, that is, he should be employed there for five days a week.

13329. I wanted to know whether we had got more strict in our views, because I find at that time the Poor Law Commissioners approved of that scheme, or said nothing against it?—As a general rule, where labour yards are in use, the persons there employed would be employed for five days in the week, mainly with the object of preventing their interfering with independent labour.

Olave's bour rd experi- nt l causes of failure.

13330. You say your experience in 1895 has prejudiced you against labour yards. Will you tell us what that experience was?—It is rather a long story, and it is all in my report for 1895–6. It happened that in 1894 the first boards were elected under the New Act, and in Bermondsey they had a considerable influx of new blood on the board, and the view of the new comers was that workhouses were unnecessary, and so on. It also happened that, very shortly after the election, the severest frost for almost a century began, that is to say, on the 7th January. But before the commencement of the frost, which really put an absolute stop to all riverside labour for nearly two months, they had already opened a stone yard, and the consequence was that when the real distress came they had on their hands a certain number of undisciplined men in an overcrowded yard, and then on the top of those, they had those who were driven to relief by the severity of the weather. They got a number of persons whom they practically could not control. There were all sorts of stories of abuse and so on. That was partly due no doubt to the fact that it was opened in a hurry, and was not well managed throughout. People came flocking in from all parts of London. They had two places in which the men were employed, but they would have a certain number of men for half a week and a certain number of men for another half, as I have stated in one of my reports. I do not think that is a fair example of stone yard management.

13331. (Mr. Loch.) Was that at Bermondsey?—Yes, St. Olaves. It is now Bermondsey; it was St. Olaves in those days.

13332. In the case of St. Olaves did they put on an additional number of superintendents in that labour yard, proportionate to the number of men that came into the yard?—Yes, they did; they increased the staff at one period.

13333. Did they increase the staff before the climax came, when there was very great difficulty in management at all?—No, they did not.

13334. Did they use the House at all in the case of men who were attending the labour yard?—There again it was not until quite late in the period. As a matter of fact, in those days they had two workhouses only, and they were both already full.

13335. At that time you made I think, on behalf of your board, some kind of investigation of all the circumstances, after the winter was over?—Yes.

13336. Could you tell the Commission what was the nett result of your investigation?—Here is an extract: "In addition to the assistant relieving officers, a large number of other temporary officers were appointed from time to time; the largest number so employed being eighty-five on the 9th March."

13337. As against what number of men?—The greatest number of men in any given week was 3,703.

13338. In the labour yard?—Yes, in the two labour yards. The amount of stone purchased was 4,000 tons; the amount broken was 2,500 tons. "The clerk to the guardians, in his evidence before the Select Committee on Distress, stated that the increase in the cost of salaries might be taken at an average of £100 per week; there can, however, be but little doubt that, notwithstanding the large increase in the staff, the inquiries made by the temporary officers were perfunctory and insufficient, while the supervision in the stone yard was altogether ineffective. The amount of stone purchased was 4,000 tons; the amount broken was 2,500 tons. The amount paid in salaries for stone yard purposes was £1,280, in relief £10,782. It was stated before the Select Committee on Distress that, including supervision, rents, plant and materials, the guardians spent altogether £17,000, bringing the cost of the stone broken to £7 a ton, whereas 5s. or less per ton is the usual cost. It was further stated in evidence before the Committee that the experiment was a great failure, owing, among other things, to the class of men employed; some would have honestly tried to do as much as they could, but were deterred by others.';

13339. One may sum it up in this way, that practically the labour yard was there adopted without any regard to the main conditions under which alone it could have operated satisfactorily?—Yes, it was, as I say, opened in a great hurry, and the great trouble when the frost stopped all riverside and dock work was that they were already handicapped by this large number of persons for whom they had made inadequate provision to begin with.

13340. They did not increase their inquiry staff at the same time?—They increased their staff, but unfortunately they made this mistake, that instead of giving the temporary men the clerical work to do, they started them on the inquiries, so that, as they had not any experience in that sort of work, their inquiries were not as satisfactory as they might have been.

Labour yard experiment at West Ham.

13341. In West Ham, the winter before last, Mr. Rushridge was put in charge of a labour yard; may I ask you in two words whether practically the case was not the same in that instance?—Very much the same.

13342. And the result very much the same?—I am afraid so.

13343. Neither of those can be taken as carefully planned and sufficiently supervised instances of stone yards?—That is true.

Refusal of relief at Poplar to returned emigrants.

13344. (Mr. Bentham.) You refer to the returned emigrants of the Poplar Union. What became of the two men who were absolutely refused relief?—That is one of those remarkable things one does not know; they have had no relief there. One can only assume that they are doing something whereby they are earning a subsistence.

13345. Or they have cleared out to some other district?—Very likely, I think.

13346. You have also referred to a special inquiry now proceeding in Poplar. What is the nature of that inquiry?—It is with regard to Poor Law Administration generally.

13347. I thought you were referring there to an inquiry which had special reference to casual employment?—No.

Casual labour and "sudden and urgent necessity" relief at Popar.

13348. A question that was asked you was this. "It has been suggested that 'casual' employment increases destitution, and thus the pauperism of certain London unions. Can you supply any evidence for or against this hypothesis?" I thought the inquiry you were referring to in your answer was on the question of casual labour?—No, the inquiry is general, and I take it that that particular question will be gone into at the inquiry.

13349. May I ask you whether you have any information with regard to the prevalence of casual employment in the Poplar district as compared with other districts in the locality?—It is, of course, common knowledge that there has been a very great deal more of out-relief given under the exceptions in the out-relief regulation Order than there has been in the neighbouring unions.

13350. That does not prove, does it, that there is really more casual labour in the locality?—No, it does not prove there is more casual labour, but it may be assumed in a case of that sort you would have more cases to deal with if you had a larger amount of casual labour than if the locality was one where the labour was continuous and steady.

13351. You think in Poplar there is more casual labour than in the immediate locality?—I believe there is.

The overlapping of Borough Council and Poor Law Relief.

13352. In your answer to a question put by Mr. Lansbury on this subject you say, "I think that certainly the figures may be regarded as, to a certain extent, interchangeable." That is those who were found work by the Borough Councils, and those that were given a labour test by the guardians?—What I rather meant by that answer was this, that one would assume that the employment of persons by boroughs would reduce the number of able-bodied persons the guardians would be asked to deal with.

13353. You do not mean to infer to the same extent to which the borough councils find work for the men, do you?—No.

13354. Do not the borough councils really find work for a good many men who would not be considered by the guardians to be eligible for relief of any kind?—Yes, that was the original idea of having recourse to the borough councils in times of exceptional distress, to save the men from being disfranchised.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

15 May 1906.

13355. Then they would not really be interchangeable, because the borough council is dealing with a different set of men from those who would ordinarily come under Poor Law relief?—Perhaps I used the word "interchangeable" there wrongly. What I meant was that the numbers might be interchangeable inasmuch as persons who would be relieved by the borough council in a particular winter might possibly, but for the borough council, have been relieved by the guardians.

13356. In taking the measure of the number of persons who are dependents in a given union, you would not say it would be fair to take the whole of those that are found employment by the borough council, and those that are relieved by the guardians and say, "That is the sum total of the pauperism of that district," would you?—No, I do not think you would.

Work provided by Borough Councils apart from the Unemployed Workmen's Act.

13357. Was there any work provided on their old lines by any borough councils last winter, during the time the Distress Committees were in operation?—There were special grants made by the Classification Committee of the Central Committee at the Guildhall to boroughs for work done.

13358. That would be for work done under a Distress Committee?—Yes.

13359. Did borough councils provide any work outside the operation of the Distress Committees?—Yes, they did.

13360. Therefore the Unemployed Workmen Act did not prevent borough councils from carrying out the same class of work they did previously?—It was Mr. Long's scheme, and it has developed now into the Unemployed Workmen Act. The return asked for by Mr. Whitmore, a Member of the House, gave the amount of money expended by borough councils and the number of men employed on that work during the winter of 1904-5.

Relief of persons intermittently employed.

13361. With reference to relieving persons who are intermittently employed do you know if it is the practice to give relief to persons who are employed one day, and out of work the next?—No, I do not think it is, except that it might apply to the persons I was speaking of just now—a woman who did a casual day's work.

13362. I mean apart from women?—I do not think with regard to men it is.

13363. They do not make up a broken week, as it were, by outdoor relief?—I think not a broken week.

Effect of Mr. Chamberlain's Circular.

13364. (Mr. Lansbury.) With regard to work by borough councils, the Circular issued to district boards, and that kind of body, was first issued in 1886, was it not?—Yes, it was.

13365. Did not that Circular create a new class of people whom society had to deal with, not through the Poor Law, but still out of the public funds?—I do not know whether that was the intention of the Circular.

13366. That Circular called attention to the prevailing distress, did it not?—It did, certainly.

13367. And pointed out that it would be rather bad if a large number of respectable, deserving people were thrown on the guardians?—It did.

13368. Is it not true to say that the effect of that Circular has been to bring about discrimination in dealing with able-bodied men and women in need of help?—It was rather able-bodied men established in a district, not able-bodied men as we speak of them in the Poor Law; it was the class above that.

13369. My whole point is this, that it brought in a new discrimination in dealing with people who needed help from their fellows through the law?—I think you may say that it did do that.

13370. That circular specially mentions spade labour and work that would not injure people's hands, and therefore borough councils, town councils and district boards, who found people that sort of work were really acting on the suggestion of that circular, were they not?—I think they were.

13371. That Circular was issued by the head of the Department?—Yes, it was a Circular issued by the Local Government Board.

13372. That has been re-issued, has it not, on many occasions?—Certainly, on two occasions.

13373. Can you tell me whether it was re-issued in 1904?—I do not think it was. I think, as a matter of fact, in 1904 we had Mr. Long's scheme in its place.

13374. The head of the Department, at any rate, or several heads of the Department, have recognised that there are, or have been, a large number of people whom society ought to provide the means of work for?—Yes, the circular says "What is required in the endeavour to relieve artisans and others who have hitherto avoided Poor Law assistance, and who are temporarily deprived of assistance is," and so on.

13375. That cast on society through the rates, and through the borough councils, the responsibility of providing work for these decent respectable men?—The responsibility of providing work? and it was an endeavour, I think, to so deal with them as to avoid, as it says here, the stigma of pauperism.

13376. The money to do that had to be raised out of the rates?—Certainly it was rate money that was to pay for the work done.

13377. That kind of work is carried on very largely in the Metropolis, is it not?—Yes, for ten years certainly, or more, and many thousands of pounds have been spent on it.

Mr. Whitmore's Return.

13378. In Mr. Whitmore's return* you have figures showing the tremendously increased cost of doing work in that way?—Yes.

Relief by Borough Councils.

13379. Therefore the ratepayers were called upon indirectly to give relief, without the Poor Law coming in at all?—Yes, assistance without the Poor Law—it is relief you may say, I do not know that one need trouble about a phrase.

13380. Some were being paid more than they really earned in the ordinary market value of things?—I do not know that.

13381. The labour cost more than it would have cost if the work had been done under ordinary normal conditions?—That is so, of course.

13382. That is the effect of borough councils attempting to carry out the intention of the circular?—It was really in supplying work in most instances.

13383. And paying men to do it, who were not able to do it?—Who were not skilled in that particular work.

Wood-chopping and question of Workhouse industries competing with outside labour.

13384. Has anything come to your Department with regard to an agitation from the firewood cutters, the people who sell firewood, asking that the Board should prohibit boards of guardians selling firewood?—Yes, and there has been, as you know, a correspondence between the association and many boards of guardians.

13385. Would it not be true to say, supposing any industry were carried on in the workhouses on anything like a big scale, it might have the effect of raising opposition, even from the corn millers?—Yes, that is the difficulty, no doubt, to find a work that is suitable to the aged or infirm class. You do not wish to impose any very disagreeable work upon them, and the difficulty arises of avoiding interference with independent labour.

13386. Is that not one of the reasons why you are suggesting that these men should be taken to farm colonies?—I do not know that it is quite that. I am thinking with regard to employment in the workhouses of the work you would give to a somewhat different class to that which I should propose sending to a farm colony, or a branch workhouse in the country. Taking wood-chopping, for instance, I think as a general rule it is only the older men who are employed in the workhouse on that, but even the work so done is sufficient, according to the association you are speaking of, to interfere with the trade outside.

13387. It interferes with the ordinary labourers?—It does.

Expensiveness of labour yard work

13388. One of the objections to labour yards which you have just mentioned, and, as a matter of fact, to all work provided in that sort of way, is that it makes it more costly. Have you any figures to give us showing what is the cost of corn ground by the inmates of a work-

* H.C. 193—1905.

house and what would be the ordinary cost at a modern flour mill ?—I have not the figures, but you may take it at once that it is very considerably greater; it must be.

13389. So that the figures you just now read out as applicable to Bermondsey apply in a larger or smaller extent to any work that is carried on under the Poor Law ?—Yes, to any artificial work of that sort.

Census of occupations of males at Poplar.

13390. With regard to casual labour, could you put in the census return that was taken at Poplar showing the occupations of the male inhabitants of Poplar ?—You mean probably the census that was taken to supply the materials asked for by a circular from the Board as to the different industries represented in Poor Law relief ?

13391. No, I mean the house-to-house census that was taken in Poplar by the Distress Committee of the district. I was wondering whether your Department had a copy of that ? It was taken during this last winter ?—I have not seen that.

After-careers of emigrants from Poplar.

13392. You cannot tell us what has happened to the remainder of the Poplar emigrants, I suppose ?—No. All I know is what I have heard from the clerk, that letters have been received from four or five of them in which it appeared that they were doing well: but they have no particulars beyond that. They were sent out under the auspices of the Salvation Army, and I suppose the Army Authorities have some arrangements whereby they know something about the men for some time after they arrive there.

13393. We have a return about that, but we rather want to leave them alone. Would it be possible for you to get, and put in, the record papers of those men who were sent, and many other men that were sent from other unions, to show the kind of men that were sent ?—You could probably get those materials from your clerk's office; I am prepared to say this, that I do know as a fact that the 100 men who first went to Laindon, with very few exceptions, were men who were gravitating to the condition of ins-and-outs.

13394. The answer to the question as to money to the wives could only refer, so far as London is concerned, to families dealt with under the modified Workhouse Test Order ?—Yes. I know there were fifty men of that class sent to Laindon under that Order.

Status of unemployed for whom municipalities find work.

13395. Would it be true to say that the people who receive relief through the borough council, or work through the borough council, and receive wages for more work than they are able to perform, are in the ordinary and accepted sense of the word paupers, or dependants upon society in the same way that the pauper is ?—Hardly that, I think, but that adjective of mine "interchangeable" is unfortunate. What I wanted to convey was that they were taken in hand before they reached the condition when Poor Law relief was rendered necessary.

13396. I am on the point of principle as to whether society is to be called on to relieve people before they become destitute; whether that is not what the circular really involves ?—That is, I think, only in times of exceptional distress.

13397. If in times of exceptional distress it means many people, as a matter of fact in principle there is no reason why an individual person should not be so relieved ?—No, that is true.

Need for powers of detention in test workhouses and colonies.

13398. (Mr. Booth.) I suppose that any institutions to take the place of the labour yard would either be educational or used as a test with a view to discrimination rather than industrial or productive in their aims ?—Yes, I think you might say that they should be to a certain extent in the nature of a test, and also, so far as possible, reformatory. There comes in the difficulty that unless you get legislation to enable you to deal with the men for a sufficiently long period, it is a question whether the second result would be achieved

13399. In addition to that you would have to follow it up by different treatment and possibly different institutions, according to the results of the discrimination or education ?—That is so.

13400. With regard to the deterrent, I suppose the discrimination would be practically deterrent to those who could but would not work ?—Yes, that is the condition, and I think it is a good thing that it should be so; a man will put up with a good deal before he gives up his liberty. It is a strong incentive to try and work for your own livelihood if you know the alternative is that you will, for the time being at all events, be cut off from the world outside.

13401. The whole system, though elaborate, would have the merit of being deterrent in that sense that those who knew they were to be treated in this way, unless they knew they were likely to be suitable for that treatment, would prefer to stay outside ?—Yes, I think it would. They would try to stay outside.

Relief in cases of sudden and urgent necessity and control over such cases.

13402. (Mr. Loch.) No question has been asked you about the sudden and urgent necessity relief which has been given in the past winter. Under what condition was that ?—I understand that the whole of that question was gone into with Mr. Adrian. As a matter of fact, cases of sudden and urgent necessity are not necessarily reported to the Board.

13403. To what extent were those cases passed to the Board during the past winter ?—They are not passed to the Board.

13404. They come to the Board, do they not ?—No, they are dealt with in that way under an exception to the Out-door Relief Regulation Order. The cases which would be reported to the Board are cases under Article 10 of that Order, which is a different one In this case the ordinary urgent cases do not come before the Board necessarily at all.

13405. Are they not reported to the Board ?—No.

13406. Then what control have you over them ?—The only control is this, that it ultimately rests with the auditor to ascertain, as far as he can, whether the cases were such as to justify their being dealt with in that way.

13407. Have you any return as to the extent to which relief was given in that way made to you by the various unions in London ?—No.

13408. Neither this winter nor last ?—No.

13409. Have you noticed at all how far it has affected the figures for the winter ?—In Poplar it has.

13410. Can you say the extent to which it has done so ?—Several thousands.

13411. (Mr. Lansbury). That several thousands includes the families ?—Yes, it includes women and children.

13412. There were 500 to 600 actual cases ?—It is between 500 and 700 cases.

13413. (Mr. Loch.) In Poplar ?—Yes.

13414. You have no return for St. Pancras, for instance ?—No.

13415. Would it be possible to get that information all round ?—The Commission might get it from the clerks to guardians.

Relief to families of men in Workhouse under modified Workhouse Test Order.

13416. With regard to the Modified Workhouse Test Order, the present application of that Order differs considerably from the application of it in Whitechapel and St. George's-in-the-East, does it not ?—I do not know that it does. I think there is this difference, that the men are allowed out for a longer period.

13417. I think I am right in saying, am I not, that in Whitechapel and St. George's-in-the-East no charges were made on the Poor Law with regard to those people who were left outside—the wives and families; they were supported by voluntary contributions ?—In St. George's-in-the-East in a certain number of cases that was so. So I understood Mr. Crowder; that he took them in hand himself.

13418. It was so in Whitechapel ?—I am not able to speak of that.

13419. With regard to fixing the relief which the guardians paid to those families, have you had anything to do with that, as to the amount that should be paid, or anything of that kind ?—No, we have not. That, I think, would necessarily be left to the discretion of the guardians.

13420. Do you know whether any scale has been adopted with regard to it ?—I do not know that it has. At Poplar I thought they had adopted the Mansion House scale,

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

15 May 1906.

which was 10s. for the wife and 1s. 6d. or 2s. for the first child, and so on downwards. I am informed that was not so, but when attending one of their relief committees I saw two cases which I thought were typical of the others, which led me to assume that they had adopted that scale throughout.

13421. With regard to that scale or a scale approaching it, has there been any consideration by each Committee of the propriety of the amount given to those people who are in the family?—I take it each case is considered as to what is necessary to meet the needs of the family.

13422. The auditor has not drawn attention to it in any case?—No, I do not think so.

13423. It has not been under the consideration of the Local Government Board as a thing rather out of the ordinary course?—It would only come before the Board on the Report of the Auditor. The Auditor must find a case where the relief was excessive, and then it would come under consideration as to whether it should be disallowed or not.

13424. (Sir Samuel Provis.) I thought at Whitechapel they never acted on the Order?—They did not that year.

13425. It was stated to be only temporarily in force?—I was not aware of this, but Mr. Loch is telling us that it has been so.

13426. If so, they have been quite out of order. The Order was only issued for six months or three months—some particular time?—Yes, I believe that is so.

Improved standard of medical relief and its effects.

13427. (Mr. Gardiner.) What has been the effect on pauperism of the improved treatment afforded in sick asylums and infirmaries?—The effect has undoubtedly been to increase the number.

13428. (Mr. Nunn.) In the face of the increasing standard of comfort and hygiene in regard to infirmary accommodation, can you suggest any lines of action by which boards of guardians, with due regard to humane treatment, may secure ineligibility of conditions in infirmaries?—The improved standard of comfort and treatment generally in infirmaries has been brought about in response to public opinion on the subject, and the improved condition must, it appears to me, be maintained.

13429. (Mr. Lansbury.) With regard to the sick, do you consider that too much is done for sick persons, and are there any sick asylums or infirmaries in the Metropolis, which, in your judgment, have been built in too extravagant a manner; also is it your opinion that they are administered extravagantly?—Institutions for the sick are necessarily costly, but I should hesitate to say that any of the separate infirmaries have been built in too extravagant a manner, nor should I be disposed to say that they are extravagantly administered. The cost of maintenance may with regard to some items appear higher in one institution than another, but I should be sorry to say that there was any general extravagance in the administration.

Need for London able-bodied Workhouses outside London.

13430. Would you be in favour of removing all institutions of a permanent character outside town areas?—I think any institution for the able-bodied should in future be provided as cheaply as possible beyond the limits of London, but I question if the same could advantageously be done with institutions for the aged, infirm, or the sick.

Old age pensions.

13431. You have told us that considerable numbers will always require institutional treatment. For the remainder of those who could get along outside, are you in favour of their receiving adequate pensions?—I have no objection to adequate pensions, if it could be ensured that they would be legitimately used and in the best interest of those for whom they were provided; assuming also funds for this purpose could be provided without detriment to the self-supporting members of the community.

13432. Can you tell us what the average total cost is for maintaining an aged person in workhouses or infirmaries?—I have been unable to get information which will enable me to answer this question.

Medical relief as a high road to pauperism.

13433. (Mrs. Webb.) It has been suggested that medical relief (outdoor) is often the first step to chronic pauperism. Can you direct the Commission to any statistics bearing on this hypothesis?—There are no statistics to which I can direct the Commission, though I can give particulars of some two or three families who have received relief of this sort through three generations. (Paper subsequently handed in. See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (M)).

Class of persons receiving out-door medical relief from Poor Law and Voluntary Hospitals.

13434. Are you of opinion that the class of persons applying for out-door medical relief in the Metropolis is any way different, and, if so, in what way, from the main class of (I) workhouse inmates, (II.) out-door paupers?—This depends a good deal upon the view taken by a particular board with regard to medical relief. I know of a case in which, in consequence of the relief committees requiring all medical relief cases to go before the committee the list of persons receiving this form of relief was reduced in the course of eighteen months to some 1,500, which suggests that a class somewhat above that which gravitate to general relief were ready to avail themselves of medical relief if it could be obtained without any great inconvenience.

Result of enquiries by Voluntary Hospitals into income of applicants for medical assistance.

13435. Does this class differ in any way, and, if so, in what way, from the class of out-patients at the voluntarily supported hospitals? Is there any difference, and if so, what, in the kind of illness dealt with respectively by Poor Law out-door medical relief, and by the out-patient departments of the voluntarily supported hospitals?—It is not easy to say in what way this class differs from the class of out-patients at the hospitals; and the inquiries that I have made at St. Thomas', the Middlesex, and the Royal Free hospitals, have not proved very helpful towards arriving at a conclusion. For instance, it was at one time alleged that persons actually in employment had found that they were kept waiting longer as applicants at a hospital than when applying at a dispensary or medical relief office with a relieving officer's order, and there were complaints of this. To meet this difficulty they have, at St. Thomas', appointed two properly qualified men to deal specially with such cases, and so avoid delay. It may probably be said that the class using general hospitals and infirmaries respectively differs to this extent, that the majority of those using the former are of a better class financially than those using the latter, though they are probably in a sense interchangeable; that is to say, the lady almoners who have been appointed at certain hospitals (for example, St. Thomas', the Royal Free, Middlesex, and Westminster) to enquire into the circumstances of applicants, find among them an appreciable number who are referred to the Charity Organisation Society, to the friendly societies, and provident dispensaries. On the other hand, a certain number are referred to the Poor Law authorities, though the number so referred is inconsiderable if the lady almoner's report for Westminster may be taken as a type; because out of a total of 4,000 patients interviewed, forty-seven only were referred to the Poor Law. One of the governors of the Royal Free Hospital wrote me that the object of the hospital in instituting almoner's inquiries, which are paid for partly by the Charity Organisation Society, was, on the one hand, to prevent people able to pay for ordinary medical treatment outside, accepting charity meant only for the poor, and on the other hand, to avoid overlapping the Poor Law. Consequently all cases found to have means were referred after first aid to medical clubs, etc., and all requiring nourishment only, or principally, were, after first aid, referred to the Poor Law. Last year, of 8,000 cases inquired into, 226 were referred to medical clubs, etc., and eighty-four to the Poor Law.

Class of persons resorting to Poor Law Infirmaries.

13436. Are you of opinion that the class of persons entering the workhouse infirmaries in London is, apart from their illness, in any way different and, if so, in what way, from the ordinary (1) workhouse inmates, (2) out-door paupers? Does this class differ in any way, and, if so, in what way, from that of the persons admitted to the voluntarily supported general hospitals?—They differ to this extent, that an appreciable number of them are, under ordinary circumstances, self-supporting and fairly well-to-do; that this is so is suggested, amongst other things, by the large number of persons dying in Poor Law infirmaries who are buried by their friends, and in most infirmaries there are a certain number of paying patients. This class probably differs less from that of persons admitted to hospitals than the outdoor cases previously referred to.

13437. Do you think that there has been of recent years any change, and if so, what change, in the class of persons resorting to the workhouse infirmaries of the London unions?—The improved conditions of infirmary relief have had the effect of inducing an increased number of persons ordinarily above a status of poverty approaching destitution to make use of them.

The alleged transfer of patients from voluntary to Poor Law Hospitals.

13438. Do you know of any cases, and, if so, in what unions and what kind of cases, in which voluntarily supported hospitals transfer patients, either permanently or during "spring cleaning," or other emergency, to workhouse infirmaries?—As to spring cleaning in the hospitals, the Central Medical Council, composed of representatives of all the London hospitals, or most of them, meet periodically to settle, inter alia, how many wards shall be vacated for spring cleaning, and when, and which of a particular group of hospitals shall receive patients so temporarily displaced. There is nothing to show that patients are under these circumstances transferred to Poor Law infirmaries, though I expect that patients in public hospitals are not infrequently, when their case becomes chronic, transferred to Poor Law infirmaries, and it may be taken for granted that where a general hospital is in the neighbourhood of a Poor Law infirmary cases will occasionally arise of transfer or disputed responsibility which cause friction between the authorities.

Decreased deterrency of London Workhouses.

13439. (Mr. Loch.) Are workhouses ceasing to be deterrent?—Yes, at least so far as regards the sick and the aged.

13440. What is the evidence on this head, statistical or other?—Guardians, masters of workhouses, and relieving officers all speak to the more or less steady increase in number of applications for indoor relief and in the number of admissions, and the ratio of the increase of pauperism for London for the last ten years has been greater in the case of indoor than of outdoor relief.

13441. What suggestions can be made, if this is in fact the case?—As to suggestions in connection with this, classification in workhouses would at all events ensure that the increased comfort upon which public opinion insists should be confined to the aged, and that the disreputable at least should not enjoy them. More might perhaps be done to keep the aged employed, but this is a very difficult question, inasmuch as no employment of workhouse inmates should to any appreciable extent interfere with industries followed by independent persons outside.

Evidence of change in class of persons resorting to Poor Law Infirmaries.

13442. What evidence is there that in London people of a better class than formerly go into the infirmary?—The evidence that a better class than formerly resort to Poor Law infirmaries is to be found in the appearance of relatives and other visitors to patients; the number of cases where payments are recovered by guardians, and of those where funerals are conducted and paid for by friends or relatives.

Operation of Brabazon scheme in London.

13443. Can you give particulars of the Brabazon Scheme; and the extent to which it is adopted in London?—The Brabazon Scheme is adopted in a good many workhouses in London, and I can give particulars of a few:—Bethnal Green: numbers employed, men, seventeen; women, nine. St. Pancras: men, one; women, thirty. Marylebone: men, eleven; women, sixty-five. Poplar: men, seven; women, thirty-four. St. George's: men, nine; women, thirty-four. Southwark (Newington Workhouse): men, six; women, nine. Hackney: men, three; women, twenty-five. Camberwell (Gordon Road): men, three; women, three. As to those only recently started—Lambeth: men, five; women, twenty-eight. Greenwich: men, eleven; women, twenty. Fulham: men, nil at present; women, twenty-six. Chelsea: old women previously ignorant are taught needlework, and thus become useful in making-up, mending, etc. Much of the work done is of excellent quality, and averages a good price. The workers are recompensed in various ways, entertainments, excursions, and, in the case of Lambeth, twelve of the old people were sent to various convalescent homes and other places for change of air and holiday.

Classification in London Workhouses and Infirmaries.

13444. How far is classification carried out in London in the workhouses and infirmaries, or as between them and the institutions of the asylums board, and joined with a use of private institutions? Could you report on two or three typical unions from this point of view?—Classification in workhouses in London accords with the general consolidated Order, except that in most cases indoor children are in separate establishments. The classes are: (1) Men infirm through age or other cause; (2) able-bodied men and youths above the age of fifteen; (3) boys over seven and under fifteen; (4) women infirm through age or other cause; (5) able-bodied women and girls above fifteen; (6) girls above seven and under fifteen; (7) children under seven. This was the original classification, but as regards children in London, it has been modified to meet the regulations respecting ages of admission to district and separate schools; that is to say, that in the workhouse the classification ages for children are eight to fifteen, three to eight, and under three, children under three not being admissible to the schools. Further classification includes, in workhouses, married couples' quarters, and, in some workhouses, sub-classification in accordance with the Board's circular of 1896 has been provided for. The better class of either sex have to a certain extent separate accommodation, and enjoy special privileges with regard to leave of absence, and so on. In infirmaries, classification necessarily follows to a great extent the nature of the disease, and is, in fact, regulated by the medical superintendent. The sexes are, of course, divided, and in some infirmaries there are separate children's wards. As typical unions or parishes in this connection may be mentioned, St. Pancras—two workhouses, two infirmaries, children's receiving home, separate school, one main workhouse, certified for 1,584. To this all indoor cases are first admitted. The classes retained are infirm men, infirm women, and able-bodied men and women. The sick are not retained in the workhouse, but transferred to the adjoining infirmary in Cook's Terrace or to the infirmary at Highgate. A branch workhouse at Streatham, certified for 454, receives healthy old men and younger men, if crippled or otherwise infirm. All the housework and laundry work is done by the inmates. In case of sickness, unless removal is dangerous, all cases would be transferred to one or other of the infirmaries. The Hackney infirmary has 452 beds, and to this sick cases, including children and phthisical cases, are sent. The cases so dealt with are mainly those resident in the northern part of the parish, while those sent to the Cook's Terrace infirmary are mostly residents in the southern part, excluding children and phthisical cases. The receiving home, about a mile from the workhouse, is certified for sixty. To this all children except the sick, are transferred immediately after their admission to the workhouse receiving ward. They remain in the home for fourteen days, and are then, if under medical certificate, transferred to the schools at Leavesden, unless they are of the class known as "ins-and-outs." The schools at Leavesden are certified for 678 inmates. Islington parish has two workhouses, one infirmary, and a separate school. At St. John's Road there is one workhouse, certified for 1,274, intended for the aged of both sexes and able-bodied women. The Cornwallis Road workhouse is certified for 838, and is intended for healthy old men and women, able-bodied men and children; the latter are kept at this workhouse for a probation period before being sent to the schools. The infirmary on Hackney Hill is certified for 800 beds. The school situated in Hornsey Road is certified for 400. This is the only separate or district school situated within London, and the guardians have not yet been able to see their way to provide a proper receiving home.

13445. What is the accommodation for lunatics in London workhouses?—I have no separate returns of accommodation for lunatics in workhouses.

Effect of Dietary Order in London.

13446. What has been the effect of the Dietary Order in London; has it led to greater variations of dietaries?—I think it has led to greater variation and also to a reduction in the number of complaints to the Board by inmates with regard to the food supplied. Another effect, for which it was, in fact, designed, has been relief at both ends from the tiresome correspondence between the Board and boards of guardians previously necessary in relation to any proposed alteration in the dietary, however insignificant.

Cost of Poor Law buildings in London and checks thereon

13447. (Chairman.) The opinion seems to be unanimous that the improved comfort and treatment afforded in the workhouses and infirmaries have naturally tended to increase the number of people entering them. Are you consulted at all in regard to the cost of new buildings that are to be put up?—Yes, very much. We have to consider the plans and the probable cost of new buildings as submitted by the guardians.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

15 May 1906.

13448. You have no particular scale as regards what the cost per bed should be for workhouses or infirmaries?—No, it is almost impossible to have a scale, so much depends upon local circumstances.

13449. Mr. Davy put in some returns relating to the infirmaries built during the last twenty years, as to the cost per bed, exclusive of site. I will take the London infirmaries. In 1893, Brentford built an infirmary at the cost of £200 a bed; in 1894 West Ham built an infirmary the cost of which was £372 per bed for 672 people; and in 1898 Bethnal Green built an infirmary for almost exactly the same number of people (669), but at a cost of £274 per bed. If you would look at that return (see Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. V. (3)), you will see that in those two poor districts, both of which had to build infirmaries, there is a difference of £100 per bed, which I calculate means that West Ham paid £65,000 more than Bethnal Green did for the accommodation of the same number of people?—Those, I take it, in neither case include the cost of the site?

13450. No, that is exclusive; that shows a very great discrepancy?—It does. I know that in the case of the West Ham Infirmary the question was mooted originally, I think in 1889; it was not until 1898 I think that the infirmary was built; however that does not matter. The question of the plans was considered over and over again, and so far as I recollect every endeavour was made to keep the cost within due proportions, but ultimately the plans were passed and the cost worked out at the very large figure you have mentioned.

13451. On the face of it it looks as if some explanation was wanted of why two buildings of exactly the same size, for exactly the same class of persons, both put up by poor localities, should so vary in price?—I agree.

13452. (Mr. Lansbury.) Might I suggest that perhaps the explanation is found in the provision of the laundry, nurses' house and the engineer's and steward's houses. I rather think at Bethnal Green the steward is the master of the workhouse, and perhaps the laundry work is done at the workhouse, which is quite close. After the figures in that return you will see there is a description of the work which was done, and to compare them you want to know what each set of guardians got for the money?—I see that in Bethnal Green the Nurses' Home is not included, and that is always a very considerable item.

13453. (Chairman.) Do you think your department have sufficient power over the cost of building?—I do not know how they could have larger power, unless they were to say this: "You want accommodation for this or that number of persons, of this, that, or the other class; you may spend so much money and no more." When you get into the hands of architects and contractors it is very difficult to limit the price.

13454. Mr. Kitchin said that after the plans were sanctioned there were very often alterations, and that structural changes were made which ran up the expenditure. Is that your experience?—I do not think that happens very often. If you once begin to go outside your contract the price goes up enormously, or it is liable to.

13455. Is there any scale at all present to your mind or the minds of those who pass those buildings as to what is a reasonable or unreasonable expenditure per bed?—No. For instance probably anyone would say that the cost of the beds at Hendon, £455, was an unreasonable one. At the same time it had to be passed ultimately.

13456. That is the City of London, is it not?—No, it is the Central London Asylum District. The guardians concerned there are Strand, Westminster, St. Giles, and St. George's, Bloomsbury, three unions in combination. Probably one explanation of the cost there is that the pavilions were two storied instead of three.

13457. (Mr. Lock.) Was not that gigantic?—Yes, it is enormous.

13458. Why, therefore, had it to be passed?—I really forget the circumstances now; I know it was passed.

13459. (Chairman.) What occurs to one is that if, as is inevitably the case, increased comfort in a building attracts people to it, if the poor localities in London spend these very large sums of money, they are not only taxing themselves for the increased cost of the building, but they are encouraging more and more people in their locality to go into the building?—That is true, unfortunately.

Increased cost of London Workhouses and causes.

13460. There is another return I have here of Mr Davy's. This relates to workhouses. (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. V. (2)). If you notice, up to 1898 there were no workhouses which cost more than £154 per bed. Then a number were built in London and they came up to from £269 to £284 per bed. Was there any alteration in the standard of comfort or the accommodation in workhouses in that period, say between 1890 and 1898, which would account for that rise?—It would partly account for it no doubt. In deference, as I have said before, to public opinion, there was a tendency in workhouses, particularly such a workhouse as that in Bermondsey, which is for the aged and infirm, to make such provision, of greater space, subdivision, and so on, as would tend to bring up the cost per bed, and later again, in the case of Hammersmith, it was built with a view to providing for that sub-classification which is thought desirable; and if you attempt to provide for that structurally, you necessarily very considerably increase the cost of the building. Then within the last twelve years the cost of building generally has gone up very considerably. I see that West Ham is put down here as being built in 1894. I do not know quite what that means, but I know that in 1894, when I first came back to London, there was a question of West Ham providing an infirmary, and everything was all settled, and it was then, as the architects call it, cubed at 8d. a foot; by the time they began to build the infirmary five years later the price in the locality had gone up to something like 1s. 1d. per foot. There at once the actual cost of labour, material and so on, is increased by one-third.

The process of passing plans for Workhouse buildings by the Local Government Board.

13461. What is the process through which plans pass. I suppose if it is decided to build an infirmary or a workhouse, you would, from an administration point of view, be consulted?—Yes.

13462. There are certain requirements which you would insist upon?—Yes.

13463. The next process I suppose, if all your wants are complied with, is that it is referred to the architect's department of the Local Government Board?—Yes.

13464. And he makes the best calculation he can, as to whether or not the price is excessive?—He does.

Increased willingness of guardians to incur expenditure on workhouse buildings.

13465. Have you noticed a great change, or has there been any change in the attitude of the guardians towards building these institutions. I suppose in your earlier days as an inspector you had rather to press upon them the necessity of providing certain requirements?—Yes.

Factors in the increase cost of workhouse infirmaries.

13466. Is that still so?—I think with guardians you may find it difficult in starting them, but once you have done that it is very difficult to hold them in hand. With regard to the cost of infirmaries I do not know whether this has been mentioned before (possibly Mr. Kitchin referred to it), the views of experts, and all concerned, with regard to what is a proper proportion of nurses, for instance, in an infirmary, has very materially changed in the last fifteen years; in other words, in every new infirmary now there is considerably more accommodation required for the nursing staff. That is all included in the price per bed. It is only fair to recognise that that is one of the items which must tend to increase the cost.

13467. For instance separate nurse's accommodation requires considerable extra building?—Yes, it is a very considerably item in any new infirmary now.

System of payment of architects a possible factor in increased cost of buildings.

13468. Are you satisfied with the present system. You have had a good deal of experience of it. Can you make any suggestion to bring a little more economy to bear?—It is extremely difficult to say what should be done. If you say that the plans shall not be passed until tenders have been received, it involves a good deal of delay and consequent trouble. I do not see what else can be done. The guardians' architect is told he is to provide for a certain number of people in a certain way. As a general rule there are conferences between him and the architect of the Local Government Board. As a general rule it is found that the board's architect makes suggestions here and there that tend to a reduction in the cost. Then at last the plans are passed as apparently suitable for the purpose required. The guardians' architect in the meantime has estimated the cost to be so and so, and I may say, probably without exception, when the tenders are received, there is never any tender that is not considerably higher than the architect's estimate. Here comes in a point that is worth considering, but I do not see how it can be altered; the Institute of British Architects requires that every architect shall charge 5 per cent. of the total cost of whatever plans he may prepare, consequently—I do not wish to suggest anything about architects—it is only natural that the architect is not specially anxious that the total sum shall be a small one; and naturally to start with he does not estimate a very high sum, in order to avoid delay in commencing. Then when, as I say, is almost invariably the case, they find it is going to cost a great deal more, it is so much to his advantage. The only suggestion that has ever occurred to me would be this, I do not suppose it is possible, that the architect should be paid his percentage on his original estimate and nothing more. Then, I think, you would probably get estimates a great deal nearer what the buildings actually cost in the long run, and the guardians would be able to determine whether they should go on with the particular scheme as it is presented, or not. As it is they go on more or less blindly, there is a set of plans which are thought suitable for the purpose intended, their architect tells them they are going to cost so and so, but they in most cases cost a good deal more than the estimate.

uardians
w to move d slow to p in atter of penditure
buildings.

13469. As you say, guardians are difficult to set in motion, but when once set in motion they want to have a building that not only will be up-to-date, but superior to anybody else's?—Yes, not unnaturally, they like a very good thing indeed. I think, speaking for myself and my colleagues, that in considering the plans and so on we endeavour, as far as possible, to see that the plans shall provide what is absolutely necessary, and no more.

ructure of
orkhouses
tisfactory.

13470. As regards the actual construction, there have been no complaints, have there?—I think not.

eaning of cost per d."

13471. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to this estimate of cost by the bed, are beds that are referred to in that solely those that are occupied by sick people, or is the bedroom accommodation for other residents covered?—In the cost per bed you take the cost of the whole building and divide it by the number of the patients' beds only.

13472. So that it is not a very good test?—No, it is somewhat misleading. But in an infirmary you must have nurses and medical staff, so it is not, after all, unfair that the cost of the beds should include the cost of the housing of the medical and the nursing staff.

arious
andards for mparison cost of ildings.

13473. That all needs to be borne in mind, and, possibly, does explain the great divergence?—To some extent.

13474. The test you have just mentioned is a sort of builders' test; the 8d. a foot cube, which you say very soon rose to 1s. 1d. a cube foot. That refers to the total size of the building cubed out?—Yes.

13475. Another very common and usual test is that of the square feet of floor surface. Is that ever taken as a test?—I think, as a rule, architects always talk of the cube at so much; it is a simple thing to remember. I know it is the fact that 8d. a cube was what buildings could be provided for in London and the neighbourhood twelve years ago. I do not think now that a building of that class can be provided for less than at least 1s.

13476. That test would be very useful in showing the alteration in actual cost of bricks and mortar, and so on?—I think so.

13477. It might, perhaps, be applied in addition to the test of so much per bed?—It might, certainly. The only further observation I wish to make here is that the Hendon Infirmary is put down as having been built in 1896, two years later than West Ham. As a matter of fact, that date for West Ham is wrong; the infirmary was not completed till 1899 or 1900, I think. The date of 1894 would seem to imply that the infirmary at West Ham ought to have cost less because at that time labour was less costly, but, as a matter of fact, it was built later than the Hendon infirmary was.

ctors in creased cost workhouse
ildings.

13478. I think we have had a good deal in evidence that some portion of the extra cost, where they have been very costly, has been due to the adoption of the very latest scientific methods, for instance, with regard to heating and ventilation, and matters of that sort, scientific machinery and other things in the building. Have you recognised that this has been done in a degree that is unnecessary?—I cannot say it has been done to an unnecessary degree. If you have a superintendent of an infirmary, and he is a man whose abilities and usefulness you appreciate, you do not like to say: You shall not have this which you think is essential to good management. I do not think you can very well interfere with him.

13479. Would you say on the whole the high cost is a question of the design, or that it is aggravated by bad management as to the tendering, or in the actual operations?—I do not think there is any bad management. As I say, I think, perhaps, behind it all, this continued excess of actual cost over original estimate lies to a certain extent in that question of the architect's position in the matter.

13480. Do you suppose that the cost is expensive from the point of view of an unnecessary profit to the contractor, or is this additional cost due to an expensive form of design?—I think it is not certainly due to expensive forms of design; there may be here and there something which might have been dispensed with, but I do not think that that operates very considerably. On the other hand, you have a number of firms tendering, and you may assume that the tender which is accepted is one which may be regarded as genuine from a trade point of view. If you have a dozen big firms tendering no doubt their tenders vary considerably, but I think you may assume, if you take the lowest tender, you are probably getting value for your money.

13481. So you blame neither the design nor the operation?—I do not think I can.

Deterrent effect of investigation upon amount of out-medical relief.

13482. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) In answer to a question put by Mrs. Webb, you say you know of a case in which the list of persons receiving outdoor medical relief was reduced in the course of eighteen months to some 1,500. Could you tell us what number it was reduced from, roughly?—I am afraid I cannot; but I think I am right in saying it was reduced to very nearly one half.

Transfer of patients from Hospitals to Poor Law Infirmaries.

13483. (Mr. Loch.) There has never been any return shewing the extent to which patients are sent from hospitals to infirmaries or workhouses, has there?—No, never.

13484. You say hospitals receive patients temporarily displaced, and so on; is there any return, or has any investigation been made, with regard to the number of patients that are sent from hospitals to infirmaries?—No, there never has, I think.

13485. It would be a new subject of investigation?—I think it would. I do not wish, as it is a new subject, to dogmatise, but I do not think that they are very considerable now. I have in mind two cases, Middlesex Hospital in Marylebone, and St. Thomas' Hospital in Lambeth, where there was a good deal of trouble at one time, but I think they have come to more or less amicable arrangements now. I do not think it happens very often.

13486. The actual number is not large?—No, I do not think it is.

General indebtedness of the District not considered in dealing with Poor Law Expenditure.

13487. With regard to the questions asked by the Chairman, is any account taken of the indebtedness of a district in relation to the expensive nature of the buildings which they desire to erect?—Before they can get a loan certain forms have to be gone through, and amongst other things they have to send up a form shewing their total indebtedness, giving the date of each loan, how much has been repaid, and so on.

13488. That is the board of guardians alone?—Yes.

13489. No account is taken of the indebtedness of the district as a whole from the point of view of the ratepayer?—The indebtedness of the guardians only is taken into account.

13490. Take the Borough of Stepney. There you have a rateable value of £1,358,000, and the outstanding loans to the credit of the rate are £1,763,000, so that taking the population of the district as a whole, and its liabilities, you find very considerable addition, from that point of view, which the workhouse may effect to the indebtedness of the district?—Quite true, it is certainly a point that, with regard to expenditure by guardians, they are only concerned with their own particular indebtedness; but there is the large item of borough expenditure.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

15 May 1906.

13491. It may aggravate what was already an exceedingly severe pressure?—It might.

Proposed new London Central Board for controlling Poor Law expenditure.

13492. Do you think that economy could be obtained in this way: Supposing there was a Central Board for London, and that central body made a grant towards the expenses of the local board of guardians conditionally upon what they thought the best way of building the kind of institution which they thought desirable, do you think that participation in the cost would lead to economy in the result?—I do not know that I do, offhand. It is dipping into somebody else's pocket, is it not? So far it would be conditional upon the central body being satisfied of the economy of the scheme.

13493. That is what I meant. In the present Metropolitan Common Poor Fund arrangement the local authority builds the institution at its own cost, and then the staff is largely maintained out of the Common Poor Fund. It is a question whether that is an extravagant or an economical method. It may be that it throws upon the locality the expense of an expensive institution which it gaily incurs on the understanding that it will be largely paid for and kept up by the Metropolis at large. So you may find, may you not, on that basis that the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund is acting contrary to good economical results in this matter?—I do not know about that. The fact remains that the object and intention of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund was to help to that extent poor unions, and to offer an incentive for providing an efficient staff. I do not know that it makes very much difference.

13494. There is no condition attached to building that there would be on the other plan?—I do not quite see how the other plan would work. There is to be some new authority who is to contribute towards the cost of the building on certain conditions?

13495. There would not be the inducement by this to start a building which would be practically kept up by another fund, by a Metropolitan fund?—The body would continue to be in the form in which it is at present?

13496. I am taking it for granted that the condition would be attached to the other body that they should share the expense, but not pay the whole of the salaries and other items?—That would be a new departure. I think I have said in answer to a previous question that probably the cost of salaries in London in past years would have been less if instead of the whole of the salary, only half had been paid out of the Metropolitan Common Fund Poor, as is the case with sanitary officers.

13497. There might be economy all along the line?—Possibly.

Object of Metropolitan Common Poor Fund in regard to sick-relief and child-relief.

13498. (Sir Samuel Provis.) In the case of maintenance of inmates would you regard it as fair that the East End of London should have to bear a large proportion of the maintenance of the sick without the assistance of the rest, or only the modified assistance of the rest?—I have said that I take it that the object of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund was to assist the poorer unions, and there again you would have rather a complicated arrangement if the Fund were to pay half the salaries only and the whole of the maintenance. So far it does not pay the whole of the maintenance?

13499. In the case of infirmaries they do?—Yes, in the case of infirmaries.

13500. The intention of the Act was that the charge for the sick poor should be regarded as one in which the whole of London was to assist?—Yes, and to participate.

13501. Therefore it should be charged on the whole area?—As a matter of fact in those days the sick in the workhouses were unsatisfactorily dealt with, and a separate infirmary was one of the objects in view when the Common Fund was established.

13502. One of the great objects of the Act also was, was it not, to induce the Guardians to get the children out?—Yes, to get the children out and to get the sick away.

13503. To build separate infirmaries to get the sick away?—Quite so.

Effect of making cost of Poor Law Buildings only partly a local charge.

13504. Supposing there was a grant with regard to building from the whole Metropolis, which is not the case now, might that not tend to additional expense?—If the cost of the building was to be shared partly by the local authority and partly by the local new authority?

13505. Yes?—I understand Mr. Loch to say that that sharing would be conditional upon the other authority being satisfied; in other words I suppose securing economy in the building.

13506. So far that might have its deterrent effect in the erection of separate infirmaries?—It might.

Formalities of consent of guardians to building of new workhouse.

13507. There is one point with regard to the procedure. Where a new workhouse is intended, or any building involving any considerable expenditure is concerned, it is necessary, I think, under the 'Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act 1882 that the consent of the guardians, at a meeting, held after fourteen days' notice, should be given?—Yes, I did not mention that, but there is also in connection with building expenditure, that provision, so that every guardian knows the precise financial condition of the union.

13508. Does any result happen from that consent being necessary?—I think it has happened that there have been postponements, the guardians have hesitated, but it is very often the case.

13509. Is it practically a useless formula because it comes at the end of the proceedings, after the matter has been throughly known to the guardians, and is thoroughly and carefully threshed out and after the plans have been submitted and approved?—I do not say it is have been submitted and approved?—I do not say it is useless. It sets a seal on what the guardians have all along been perfectly aware of apparently.

Effect of Dietaries Order.

13510. (Dr. Downes.) You have said that the effect of the Dietary Order has been to lead to greater variations. Do you mean a more varied diet, or a greater divergence between the different unions?—I mean a more varied diet. I mean that within the four corners of the Order guardians have a larger choice, and the variations have resulted in this way, as you will probably remember complaints used to be very common as regards the dietary previously; they have diminished very much, and we hardly ever get any complaints now.

Decreased sense of parental responsibility

13511. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Referring to Question 4075, has not the sense of responsibility as to children lessened on the part of parents recently? Does not the taking of some of a family give greater encouragement to this want of sense of responsibility?—I fear, in dealing with children, there is a tendency to do that which is calculated to lessen the sense of responsibility on the part of parents, and, as I have said in reply to a previous question, it is better to leave the children with the mother if there is good reason to believe that she will deal with them properly; but unfortunately in a good many cases the form of relief which takes the children from the mother and places them in a school is, in the children's interests, the best way of dealing with them.

Comparative success of various methods of dealing with Poor Law children.

13512. (Mr. Gardiner.) Can you give any information from records of boards of managers as to the result on after life of children brought up in (1) Barrack Schools, (2) Cottage or Scattered Homes?—I cannot give information from records of boards of managers as to the after life of children brought up in (1) Barrack Schools or (2) Cottage or Scattered Homes, but the Commission can get valuable information as to results of all three classes of schools from the M.A.B.Y.S. and the more recently established associations for befriending boys.

13513. (Mr. Nunn.) Will you indicate the lines upon which, in your opinion, the various methods of relieving orphan children may be compared and their respective merits weighed? Do you think there are, as yet, sufficient data for framing a conclusion on the subject?—Material for judging of the respective merits may possibly be found in the records of the two associations I have just mentioned, but I doubt if there are at present sufficient data to determine which is the absolutely best method. For my part, I think they have all their merits, but success depends not so much upon the method as upon the capacity of those who manage it.

Extent and cost of London Receiving Homes for Poor Law Children.

13514. Will you give the number, and give us your estimate of the success and economy of receiving homes for children who would otherwise be admitted to London workhouses. Receiving homes have been provided by 24 boards of guardians, the total cost being some £200,000. It has necessarily been a costly process, but I think the outlay may be regarded as justifiable, in that it has in a great measure met the demand of public opinion that children, whatever the class to which they may belong, should be provided for elsewhere than in workhouses.

Comparative success of various methods of dealing with Poor Law Children.

13515. (Mr. Lansbury.) Which system of dealing with children is, in your judgment, the most successful?—As I have already said in effect, it is not so much the question of the system as the men and women who deal with the children under it.

Ophthalmia in Poor Law schools. Dr. Stephenson's Report.

13516. With regard to ophthalmia and ringworm in large school, you will remember that Dr. Stephenson reported on ophthalmia. Can you give us the result of his inquiry, that is, generally speaking, what was the effect of his inquiry, and how did it affect the question as to children taking ringworm and ophthalmia into a school with them?—Dr. Stephenson reported on ophthalmia in the Metropolitan schools in 1897, and the following extracts are worth quoting. In the course of his report, he says, "Were it possible to separate these two classes (children who come for the first time to a parochial school and those who have been there previously) with any approach to trustworthiness, I have little doubt that ophthalmia would be found more frequently among the so-called "ins-and-outs" than among the other children; that the malady, however, is common enough in those who have never set foot in a pauper school is shown by the following return taken from the records of the Central London School at Hanwell by Dr. Littlejohn, the resident medical officer. The figures, it should be explained, cover the period from 1868 to 1888, and their value for the present purpose lies in the fact that children previously in the school have been carefully excluded from the list. During the period referred to in Question 1374, newcomers were found to be affected with ophthalmia, and it is to be particularly noted that this included neither corneal damage nor blepharitis unless attended with thickened and congested conjunctiva. If a large percentage of cases of ophthalmia were actually imported into this school, there is every likelihood that the same sort of thing has gone on elsewhere. Certain other facts tell much the same tale, for example, between 1890 and 1897 St. Saviour's Union sent 1,691 diseased children to the ophthalmic school; of that number 582 came for the first time to a Poor Law ophthalmic school; a fact clearly proved by the record of each individual case. In a word, of the 1,691 admissions, eighty-seven only had been inmates of Poor Law schools before coming under care. To be brief, all the evidence I have been able to collect leads me to conclude that the primary cause of tracoma, as it is met with in the London pauper schools, is to be traced to the admission of affected children. The number of such imported cases will obviously depend upon several factors, such as the poverty or otherwise of the area supplying the school children and the care taken by outside medical officers to detain those suffering from the disease."

Great cost of London Poor Law schools and its justification.

13517. It has been put in evidence that considerable sums of money have been spent on the provision of schools for the children throughout the Metropolis. Do you think that the guardians have wilfully wasted the ratepayers' money in buildings which are too ornamental, and which give the children the wrong kind of impression as to what the life outside, the life they will have to face in the future, really is?—I do not think that guardians have wilfully wasted money on buildings, though there may have been a disposition here and there, in the desire to make the best possible provision, to spend more money than was absolutely necessary.

Excellent results in different Poor Law Schools: Hanwell, Forest Gate, etc.

13518. Can you give us any results which have followed the training of children in barrack schools, cottage homes, and such-like places?—Evidence of all results, as I have already stated, will be found in the records of the two associations for befriending girls and boys; but I would venture to suggest that the Commission should take occasion to see for themselves what sort of stuff is turned out of these schools by visiting some of them, say the Hanwell, Forest Gate, Leavesden, or Annerley Schools, on the annual festival day. There they will see not only the children in the school (the original material) but the finished article, as represented by scores of old boys and old girls, out in the world and independently earning their own living in various walks of life. For myself, I find it difficult to use moderate and decorous language in relation to—I will use a moderate adjective—the inaccurate rubbish that has been reeled out on platforms, in pamphlets, and in the press regarding the alleged deplorable results of the education provided in Poor Law schools. I have no personal feeling in the matter, and I can take no credit to myself for what is being done. I am merely a looker-on, but, knowing the facts, I view with wonder and admiration what has been done, and is being done, by a large number of public-spirited men and women, guardians, managers and officers alike, whose well-directed zeal and devotion, and high sense of duty, render such efficient service to the children of all sorts and conditions who are committed to their charge; and I would like here to refer to some of the reports on these schools which have been made by inspectors of the Board of Education. I select purposely the schools at Ashford, Leavesden, and Annerley, which are all large schools of the much abused barrack type. Mr. Henry Lockwood. 15 May 1906.

Ashford. The report on Ashford says:—"Boys:—This in an excellent school, conducted with great vigour and intelligence. The curriculum is comprehensive and up-to-date in every respect, and the results of the teaching are highly creditable to all concerned. The boys are alert and responsible, and the efforts made to interest them in subjects of every-day importance outside the school curriculum are much to be commended. Girls:—The arrival of a new teacher on the day previous to the inspection was unfortunate, but the work seen was in most cases very satisfactory. The writing is uniformly sound, and oral answering is in fair form and generally ready. The work of the fourth standard is exceptionally good all round. Infants:—The infants are doing very fairly well, and the elder children show reasonable proficiency in most subjects, though their knowledge of numbers might be clearer, and the reading is none too fluent."

Leavesden. The report on the Leavesden School is:—"Boys:—The boys' school deserves very high praise for excellent discipline and tone, neat and accurate writing, exercises sound, intelligent and effective instruction, and a high standard of work is maintained throughout the school. Drill and singing are very good, and drawing and geography deserve special commendation. The industrial training of the elder boys and girls appears to be very satisfactory. Girls:—The general efficiency of the girls' school is very praiseworthy. The discipline and tone are excellent, and reading, recitation, singing and sewing are very good. Infants:—The children are very orderly, obedient, and kindly treated, and the school is taught with care and success. The recitation is very good, and enunciation receives very careful attention. The style of writing is too narrow and pointed, and admits of improvement. The babies are delightfully happy and natural, and their power of observation and conversation is quite exceptional in such young children."

Annerley. As to Annerley:—A "barrack school" established in 1849. Extract from Agenda. "The education part of the school curriculum has been transferred from the Local Government Board to the Board of Education. Mr. Henderson, H.M. Inspector, examined the work on November 20th, 21st, and 22nd and has classified the schools:—Boys:—Excellent; Girls:—Excellent; Infants:—Excellent. For the first time diocesan inspectors have examined in religious knowledge. The managers have received the followng reports:—"Boys:—Work of this school is admirable. The instruction is most thorough and the influence exercised upon the children cannot fail to bear fruit. Girls:—I am extremely pleased with the work on the girls' side. It is marked by an intelligence and power of reflection which are very rare in institutions of this nature. The teaching is not only full and accurate, but is brought to bear on the personal needs of the children."

Kensington and Chelsea Cottage Homes Schools. As to the Kensington and Chelsea Schools on the Cottage Home System, established in 1880:—The Report is "Boys:—The boys' school is an exceedingly satisfactory one. There is a good tone and much keen and intelligent interest in the work on the part of both teachers and pupils. Girls:—An exceedingly good school as to tone, discipline, and instruction. All the work is thoroughly good. Infants:—The infant school is conducted on very good lines, is generally satisfactory, and most creditable to the teachers."

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

15 May 1906.

13519. In your judgment, are the children pampered and made too much of, and, if so, in which schools do you think this has been and is carried on?—I am not prepared to admit that there is any undue pampering in any of the schools.

Question of "pampering" in Poor Law Schools.

Difficulty as to homes for Poor Law children when first apprenticed.

13520. With regard to boys going out to work, is there any difficulty in finding proper homes for them when they are only earning a small wage at the beginning. For instance, a boy is apprenticed outdoor; what means have the guardians for seeing him through his apprenticeship? Would you be in favour of the erection of suitable homes throughout the Metropolis where such boys could be taken in and kept under the control of the guardians until such boys were out of their time or had reached the age of twenty-one?—There is undoubtedly difficulty in dealing with boys on first leaving school in finding proper homes for them, but a satisfactory remedy is not easy to suggest. It would be useful, no doubt, if suitable homes could be provided, but a satisfactory remedy is not easy to suggest. I am doubtful whether homes of the sort suggested in your question should be provided by the guardians.

Number of Poor Law Children returning to the Workhouse as adults.

13521. Can you tell us the percentage of failures amongst children brought up under the Poor Law throughout your district?—I have no returns later than those got out for and after the Departmental Committee's Report in 1896; but I have no reason whatever to suppose that the percentage of failures has since then increased. The return in question shows that of 49,000 adult inmates in workhouses, 336 had been educated in Poor Law schools, of these, all but seventy-two suffered from physical or mental defects for which the school could be in no way responsible.

Inter-Poor Law School Sports.

13522. Are there any school sports between the various Poor Law schools of the Metropolis, and are trophies competed for; if so, with what results?—The results of the inter-school football and cricket, and swimming matches are excellent. On this head I may refer you to my report for 1901, quoting Mr. Bailward.

13523. Do the Poor Law schools enter into competition with outside schools, and with what results?—I think they hold their own.

Numbers of Poor Law children entering the Army.

13524. What is the number of boys who go into Army bands? How many enter the Army, as privates? How many enter the Navy? Can you give us any results?—I cannot give numbers. The great majority of those who join the Army go into the band. Some three years ago I got out a return showing most satisfactory results. There were 1,971 men then serving in various regiments.

13525. Can you give us the total cost for maintenance, exclusive of education, for pauper children inside Poor Law schools, and also for scattered homes, etc.?—I am sorry I have not been able to get these figures out.

Effect of boarding-out in eradicating the pauper taint.

13526. With regard to boarding-out, do you think that boarding-out has succeeded in removing what is known as the "pauper taint," and that the children under that system are absorbed into the ordinary population easier than through a Poor Law school?—With regard to boarded-out children, like any other system it is successful under good management, but I am not at all sure that the majority of the children so dealt with are ultimately absorbed in the rural population amongst whom they are placed in infancy.

Effect of Local Government Board's limitation of number of children to be dealt with on one site.

13527. Your Board has laid it down they only 300 children shall be under one administration; what effect has that had in increasing the cost for providing accommodation for Poor Law children?—The limit of the 300 administration unit in regard to schools must have increased the cost of providing accommodation.

Effect of receiving homes for children in preventing the pauper taint.

13528. With regard to receiving houses in London, these too have been strongly recommended by the Department; can you tell us whether these had good results, the object of course being to prevent the child coming into touch with the workhouse at all. As a matter of fact, do you consider the "pauper taint" cry has any real foundation? Has it had any real foundation during the past twenty years?—The main object of receiving homes was certainly to keep the children out of the workhouse. The "pauper taint" is a familiar platform expression, but certainly a very small percentage of the children brought up in the district and separate schools are affected by it. The odd thing to me is that the people using the term never apply it to those receiving outdoor relief.

Duties of guardians towards children of vicious parents.

13529. (Mr. Loch.) In the case of families in which the parent or parents drink, and are what is often called "undeserving," but are unwilling to enter the house if it is offered them (and are unsuitable obviously for outdoor relief), what steps can be taken, or should any steps be taken, to prevent injury to the children, for example, by the prosecution of the parents by guardians for neglect, or in other ways?—I certainly think steps should be taken to protect the children by prosecuting the parents for neglect, but the subject is not a simple one, because hile, on the one hand, one would desire to protect the children, on the other hand, one should avoid relieving the parents of their responsibility.

Operation of Relief to School Children Order in London.

13529 (a). As regards the order of the Local Government Board as to the feeding of school children; how far is it adopted in London and with what results?—The order relating to underfed children has not been very generally adopted in London. I may be able to supply particulars of what is being done by one or two boards of guardians.

Results of training of Poor Law children in large schools.

13530. (Chairman.) Do you consider the results of the training of children have on the whole been satisfactory?—Exceedingly so.

13531. You like the system of training in large schools in considerable numbers?—Yes, I see no objection to it. I think the results show that it may be very satisfactorily carried out.

13532. Do many of the old boys and girls attend the annual festival days of the large schools?—A great number.

13533. Judging from their condition you would say they were in a satisfactory state?—Entirely. I think of all the pleasant duties I have to perform there is none more delectable than seeing the old boys and girls at a large school on the festival days. You see them there by scores. There can be no sort of question as to what condition they are in.

13534. Do you think the physical training of the children in the larger schools is more satisfactory, and that they develop faster than when they are boarded out?—I think they have certainly greater opportunities.

13535. And greater supervision?—Yes.

Pros and Cons of Cottage Homes system.

13536. You do not object to the various other systems?—No, I do not; because I happen to have a particular school well managed, I do not immediately jump to the conclusion that no other school can possibly be well managed on any other system. I think there is good in them all.

13537. But the boarding-out system or the scattered home system requires supervision?—I think so. I do not for a moment wish to say anything unfair about either of those systems, but what has struck me from the first has been that it is a mistake to assume that by the mere fact of placing so many children in a house and calling it a home, and then calling the woman in charge a mother, you start a real home. It is only, in fact, a small institution when all is said and done. When well managed, good results have been achieved. I think if the Commission would see the scattered homes belonging to the Mile End Guardians they would be satisfied that there is a case in which very good work indeed is being done, including good industrial training; the games are well arranged for, in fact everything is well done.

Mile End Cottage Homes.

Number of Poor Law children returning to workhouses as adults.

13538. You have referred to a return which shows that out of 49,000 adult inmates of the workhouses 336 only had been educated in Poor Law schools, and of those all but 72 were suffering from physical or mental defects. Where were those 49,000 adult inmates taken from?—London.

13539. It was a sort of investigation as to the origin of pauperism in the inmates?—What happened was this When the Departmental Committee was sitting, and before it was appointed, a great number of persons had been talking at large on this subject and implying (in fact some of them said so in so many words) that these Metropolitan Poor Law schools were mere manufactories of paupers, that the great majority of those brought up in the schools, spent the greater part of their lives in the workhouses. I thought there was no ground for saying that, so I asked the masters of the workhouses to give me the number of inmates in their several workhouses on a given day, who had in childhood been in a Poor Law school, with their ages and all particulars, and the reason of their being there, and the return proved my view to be correct. Subsequently a return was asked for in Parliament in which I think the figures worked out very much the same as mine did.

13540. You have been, I think, twelve years an inspector in London ?—Yes.

Increased standard of physique in Poor Law children.

13541. Do you notice any difference in the physique or stamina of the children in the schools now compared with what it was twelve years ago ?—I do not know that there is. I think on the whole, if there is any difference, it is on the right side that the increased interest in athletics, swimming, drill, football, cricket, and so on, has had a good effect on the children.

13542. There has been an improvement in diet as well, I presume ?—Yes, there have been improvements here and there.

13543. You do not see any distinct signs of deterioration physically ?—Not among the children certainly; when they have been a certain time in the schools you generally find them improve.

13544. I would rather take the age at which they went out ?—I should say the improvement continues, and on the average their physical condition is quite satisfactory.

Comparative merits of institutions and boarding-out for Poor Law children.

13545. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) I was talking the other day to the inspector in a provincial town about the children there, and she certainly confirmed what has been said so often, that the children coming from the schools, however well managed, are not as bright and not as capable of looking after themselves as children brought up in a normal family ? What is your opinion about that ?—I do not say for a moment that every child turned out either from a cottage home or a barrack school is all perfection, but I have no reason to believe that the large school or the cottage home school necessarily produces a larger number of dull children than any other system does.

13546. Apart from any system, is it possible, do you think, by any kind of institution to get the same kind of initiative in the children as you do in real home life ?—The question is, what is real home life ? I have never seen a real home myself with fifteen children living together under one mother.

13547. I mean the normal family ?—How are you to avoid that ?

13548. I do not suggest that it can be avoided, but I want rather to get at the distinction if it exists ?—A natural home and a natural life must necessarily be preferable to any other. I think when you cannot provide the natural life you provide in a large school as well as you can be expected to provide in any other system. I do not think that a large school is necessarily worse or better than a well managed cottage home school.

13549. I am inclined to agree with that; still, the fact remains, that the children are slightly at a disadvantage to those who come from a family ?—I think one must admit that.

13550. (Mrs. Webb.) It rather depends on the family ?—Perhaps it does.

13551. The question is whether the family home of that class is an ideal place. It may be very much below the institution ?—I think that people are apt rather to assume over much the quality of a home because it is a home. There are homes and homes, unfortunately.

13552. There may be a home which is infinitely worse than any institution ?—That is so, I am sorry to say.

13553. (Mr. Bentham.) The home you mention of fifteen children is rather large for a scattered home ?—I do not know whether there is any magic in the fifteen, but that was the number recommended as the maximum for a home, ten to fifteen is the usual number.

13554. Is it your opinion that you approximate more nearly to the conditions of life of a real home if you get down to eight children ?—Naturally you do.

13555. You would expect better results ?—I do not know that you need necessarily have better results, but there is this, that the artificial mother ought to be able to give more individual attention to eight children than she would to fifteen.

13556. (Mrs. Webb.) In stating a comparison between a home and an institution it is rather usual to assume an ideal home and an ordinary institution ?—That is true, unfortunately.

13557. Therefore if you take the average home of that class, you would not necessarily say that it was usually superior to the institution as provided by the Poor Law ?—I do not think it would be, but I have no desire to disparage homes as such; all I feel is, that everybody assumes that a home must be everything that is right, and there has been a disposition to believe among a large section of the community that a large school must be wrong. All I want is that they should be treated fairly and have a fair chance.

13558. That we should have the facts, and not the theory ?—Yes.

13559. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The home must be an artificial home, because the children have no homes of their own ?—It is an artificial home, consequently it is more or less of an institution.

13560. The real reason for having rather a large number, because fifteen no doubt is a large number in a cottage home, is to avoid all the expense which would result if you had separate homes for a small number ?—It would be that; and then again I think there is this to be considered, there are worthy people who seem to think that all you have to do is to have a house and call it a home, to take the first motherly person you find and say, "You are to be the mother," and all will go well. The more you reduce the unit of your home the greater will be the difficulty of finding a sufficient number of really suitable foster mothers.

Reason for limitation of number of children to be dealt with on one site

13561. The limiting the number of children to 300, where a school is set up has increased the cost a good deal, has it not ?—Yes; it is inevitable that it should.

13562. That has been done in deference to the report of the Poor Law Schools Committee ?—Yes, they asked that 300 should be the maximum administrative unit.

Out-relief as a criterion of administration.

13563. (Mr. Lansbury.) Do I understand that you consider those unions the best administered where little or no out-relief is given ? The two typical unions for seeing the two policies at work would be Whitechapel and Poplar. At Whitechapel there is no out-relief, but at Poplar outdoor relief is rather freely given ?—I think that low out-relief is, prima facie, an indication of careful administration.

Statistics as to alien population; rateable value, etc., in Whitechapel and Poplar.

13564. Can you tell us what the population was in Whitechapel in 1870, and what it was in 1900, showing the proportion of Jews and aliens in 1870 and the proportion of the same nationalities in 1900 ? Can you give us any evidence as to rateable value in the same unions for the above two mentioned periods ? Can you obtain information as to the number of dwellings in these two periods; also railways, warehouses, and factories ? And with regard to Whitechapel (which is in the Stepney Borough Council area), can you give us any return, or have you any facts at all, as to the amount spent by the borough councils on work for the unemployed during periods of depression; can you give us the same information with regard to Poplar as asked for Whitechapel ?—Yes, I can give you the following figures. Whitechapel, 1871—area, 406 acres, houses, 8,772; population, 76,046; rateable value, £314,850; aliens (males, 4,651; females, 3,412); total, 8,063. Whitechapel, 1901—area, 406 acres; houses 6,367; population, 78,768; rateable value, £482,376; aliens, 29,188. Aliens relieved, 1901—medical only, 536; indoor, 185; outdoor, 1; lunatics, 30; a total of 721. Poplar, 1871—area, 2,335 acres; houses, 17,813; population, 116,277; rateable value, £465,655; aliens (males, 864; females, 206). total 1,070. Poplar, 1901—area, 2,328; houses, 11,024; population, 168,822; rateable value, £823,509; aliens (males, 1,535; females, 569), a total of 2,104, which includes Russia and Poland, 277; Germany and Austria, 775. Number of dwellings in Poplar: total tenements 35,787; tenements of less than five rooms, 26,216; of these 3,935 are one-roomed tenements, 6,450 are two-roomed tenements, 8,270 are three-roomed tenements, 7,561 are four-roomed tenements. In the Borough of Stepney: total tenements, 61,113; tenements of less than five rooms, 49,182; of these 13,282 are one-roomed tenements, 15,690 are two-roomed tenements, 11,926 are three-roomed tenements, 8,284 are four-roomed tenements. I have not information as to railways and warehouses.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

15 May 1906.

Return as to deaths from starvation (in London).

13565–6. There is a return issued as to deaths from starvation; can you put these in for the period since those returns have been issued?—These returns are not yet to hand, but I hope to put them in. (Subsequently sent. See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (N)).

Disuse by Stepney Borough Council of labour-saving appliances.

13567. Is it true that the Stepney Borough Council abolished the horse-broom for the purpose of giving employment to out-of-works?—It is a fact that the horse-broom was abolished as mentioned. I remember this action being criticised last year when reported to the Classification Committee at the Guildhall.

Figures as to increase in paupers in Poplar.

13568. With regard to Poplar, it was stated that there was a great increase of pauperism in that union; can you tell us when the increase in able-bodied pauperism began?—Between 1887 and 1899 the indoor pauperism was about 2,000 and the outdoor between 1,700 and 1,800. In 1889 the indoor was 2,187, and the outdoor 1,790. In 1899 the indoor had risen to 3,076, the outdoor being 1,794. In 1900 the indoor decreased 200 and the outdoor increased 223. In 1901 the indoor decreased 124, the outdoor increased 437. From 1902 there was a steady annual increase in both until in January, 1906, the indoor numbers exceeded those of 1899 by 763 and the outdoor by 4,999; the actual totals being: indoor, 3,836; outdoor, 6,793; total 10,629.

13569. Can you tell us what happened at the borough council with regard to work for the unemployed at the same time?—I believe that for the past five years the borough council have in each winter found special work for the unemployed, but I have no particulars.

Modified Workhouse Test Order, its object, effect and extent to which adopted in London.

13570. With reference to the modified Workhouse Test Order, can you tell me how many unions in London have applied for permission to act under this Order?—The Order has been issued to Islington, Wandsworth, Kensington, Hampstead, Poplar. No cases have been relieved under the order except in Poplar. I am not sure of the number there. About fifty men were sent last year to London.

13571. Would you please describe to the Commission the object your Board had in formulating that Order? that is, was it to enable boards of guardians to discriminate between deserving and undeserving able-bodied applicants for relief?—The suggestion came originally from Whitechapel in November, 1886, and an Order was issued in 1887. It was never put in force. The guardians stated that the object of the Order, was, inter alia, that it should not necessarily involve or occasion the breaking up of decent homes. Mr. Crowder, in his evidence before the House of Lords Committee stated, respecting it: "It acts as an efficient test of distress and as a lesson in providence to the man and his neighbour, yet without breaking up the home; that the relief is adequate to the wants of the whole family and not, as in the case of labour yard relief, given into the hands of a man who may or may not share it with his family; also it withdraws from the market superfluous labour which is gradually absorbed again as the demand arises."

13572. What has been the effect of the Order; has it been acted upon anywhere, and with what results?—It has only been acted on in Poplar.

13573–4. With regard to the results, can you put in a return showing how much of the poor rate levied in Poplar and Whitechapel goes distinctly to the poor? What I mean is, how much does it cost in administration to spend one pound in each union, and would it be possible to give us such a return for the whole of the Metropolis, say, for 1905?—I regret I have not been able to get this out.

London Unions with Superintendent Relieving Officers and Cross Visitors.

13575. (Mr. Loch.) Generally, will you state whether there are cross visitors or superintendents of relieving officers there (or elsewhere in London)?—Superintendent relieving officers have been appointed at Bermondsey, Bethnal Green, Camberwell, Islington, Kensington, Lambeth, Paddington, St. Pancras, Hackney, Poplar and St George's. Superintendent relieving officers may be said to act as cross visitors. In two instance women have been appointed as visitors, namely, in Camberwell and Southwark. Their visiting is understood to relate chiefly to children and lying-in-cases.

13576. What is the relation of the guardians to the relieving officers?—The relations of guardians to relieving officers are generally satisfactory.

Questions by Guardians to applicants for relief.

13577. How far do the guardians set aside the relieving officers and rely on personal questioning?—I should not say that the guardians set aside the relieving officers, but fresh applications are usually subject to a cross-fire of questioning by invididual guardians.

Use and suitability of Application and Report Book—advantage of case paper system.

13578. How far is the application and decision book filled in; is it suitable in form, does the clerk see that the inquiry is sufficient, and that there is verification, and are there systematic arrangements between the unions for supplementing the local inquiries by investigations outside their unions?—The entries in the application and report book are, speaking generally, properly filled in. In form it is inconvenient in my opinion and less suitable than the method of what is known as "case papers" or "history sheets." In fact, I would go so far as to say that for the application and report book might very well be universally substituted a system of case papers. As to supplementing local inquiries, I think as a general rule one officer is willing to help another when necessary.

London Unions not using Relief Committees.

13579. What unions have relief committees, is there any special organisation of work for the settlement of cases, and what is its success?—The majority of unions work by relief committees. In fact, speaking from memory, the exceptions, I think, are Paddington, Mile End, St. George's-in-the-East, Shoreditch, Hackney and Strand.

Co-operation with Charity Organisation Society in certain London Unions.

13580. Can you describe the system of relief at Whitechapel, St. George's-in-the-East, Paddington, Fulham and Marylebone; the relation of the Jewish population to Poor Law relief in the East of London in the last thirty years; the status, education and ability, salary and appointment of relieving officers?—At Whitechapel, as you are aware, there is a close and systematic co-operation with the Charity Organisation Society, and other local agencies, and the same applies to St. George's in-the-East. In Paddington, Fulham, and Marylebone the association with other agencies, is, perhaps, less close and systematic, but in each case it is a common practice to refer individual cases through one of the guardians present to the Charity Organisation Society. As regards the relation of the Jewish population to Poor Law relief, I have done my best to give information on that head in the table handed in in reply to Mr. Lansbury. (See Question 12685 (a). I have already given particulars of the salaries of relieving officers, and my advocacy of higher salaries may be taken to imply that I have a good opinion of the education and ability of the members of that branch of administration in London generally.

Statistics as to industries and pauperism in Southwark, Bermondsey, Kensington, and St. George's, Hanover Square.

13581. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) With a view to understanding the marked difference in rate of pauperism in unions which are prima facie of similar character, for example, Southwark and Bermondsey or Kensington and St. Georges, Hanover Square, it is important that information should be available which definitely bears upon the question. For example, can you state (a) the nature of occupations in the district? (b). How far it is purely industrial or also residential? (c.) What is the number of relieving officers in proportion to population; is there a superintendent relieving officer? and (d.) What is the average number of paupers to each relieving officer?—I hand in some returns (see Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII.(O)). These returns must be taken for what they are worth, but they are the best I have been able to provide in an endeavour to answer these questions. The figures in italics give the numbers of persons in certain occupations in the four localities, Southwark, Bermondsey, Kensington and St. George's at fifteen years and upwards. The figures in ordinary type give the number of applicants for relief in the quarter ended Lady Day, 1905, under various headings, indicating the usual occupations of the applicants. It will be seen that in Bermondsey and Southwark, the trade occupations supplying the largest number of applicants are general labourers and building trades. The same applies also to Kensington and St. George's. It is also noticeable that the occupation furnishing the next largest number of applicants is in each case domestic service. It appears to have been left to the discretion of each clerk or relieving officer to determine what should be included in the column for domestic service. Some, for instance, include charwomen and needle women; others do not, but I think it may be fairly assumed that the bulk of those so returned is made up of those ordinarily included in domestic service, such as cooks, housemaids, general servants, etc., and resident with their employers. I may mention that the clerk to the Kensington guardians attributes the large number of 373 under the heading "Domestic Service" in the Kensington return to the fact that there are a large number of small flats in the parish which lack accommodation for the proper nursing attendance of a domestic falling sick. The figures in black type show the numbers of relieving officers in each of the four unions, and the proportion of population and of outdoor poor to each officer. Columns 2 to 8 of the Return (ordinary type) include all persons and dependents and orphan or deserted children. Columns 9 and 10 give the total adults (men and women) relieved, excluding dependents. Columns 11 to 19 give the ages of men and women relieved in 4 decennial periods. Columns 26 and 27 state the total numbers, including dependents, who received indoor and outdoor relief respectively during the period. The totals of columns 9 and 10 correspond with the totals of column 53. The figures in column 9 (men) are those of columns 2 and 6 added together, and the total of 10 woman) are the totals of 3 and 7 added together.

13582. What is the state of these areas as to sanitation and overcrowding?—As to this, I have not found any special reference to the sanitation and overcrowding in either of these areas in the London County Council's Public Health Report for 1904, though I may menton that the death rate from all causes per 100,000 is stated to be in Southwark 2,008, Bermondsey, 2,007, Kensington, 1,435, and Westminster, including St. George's, 1,344.

13583. What charities are there in the district and what number of lodging houses?—Particulars as to the charities are to be found in the Charity Organisation Society's Annual Digest. In Southwark during 1905, there were admitted from Salvation Army shelters to the workhouse, 256; to the infirmary, fifteen; from common lodging-houses to workhouses, 1,684; infirmary, 474, total 2,429. Of these, 1,169 had less than twelve month's residence. In Bermondsey in 1905, there were admitted to the workhouse from Salvation Army shelters, fourteen; to the infirmary, three; from common lodging houses to the workhouse, 694; to the infirmary, 108. Admissions from this district from lodging houses are said to be diminishing owing to greater vigilance on the part of the outdoor relief staff. In St. George's there are common lodging houses with a total of 1,047 beds, a Salvation Army shelter with 449 beds, and a Church Army shelter with eighty. I have not the figures of admission from these places, but they are said to be very large.

13584. What is the constitution of the board of guardians on the administrative side; does it work by committees?—In each case relief work is done by committees.

13585. Is the inquiry into cases adequate and are case papers used?—The inquiry is, I think, adequate. Case papers are used at Bermondsey and now in Kensington.

13586. What are the regulations as to the leave days in workhouses?—Speaking generally, in these four unions and elsewhere, well-conducted aged and infirm men and women are allowed out on Sunday and on two other days in each month. The number availing themselves of this privilege is in each case considerable.

13587. What is the percentage of aliens to population in the different unions, and what proportion of these receive relief from the Jewish Board of Guardians or similar agencies?—Aliens do not cross the river much. There are a certain number of Jews in the Westminster part of St. George's, but they do not figure much in the relief list.

13588. (Chairman.) You think that the case paper system might supersede the application and report book?—I do indeed

13589. If once started, it more or less works in such a way that it saves a great deal of trouble. I suppose there is a good deal of detail work and time required?—Certainly, and it involves very careful indexing and storing of the records and so on. Mr. Henry Lockwood. 15 May 1906.

13590. Where it has been started it gives satisfaction to the guardians?—Entirely, I think.

13591. (Sir Samuel Provis.) They use some supplemental book, do they not?—They do. I should like to mention that it has always appeared to me that where you have the case paper system established and properly managed, you might dispense with the application and report book, and that if you had two relief order books, one that the relieving officer should keep and the other that the clerk should keep, they would suffice for both checking and record. I ought to tell you that Miss James, the guardian for Bethnal Green, who probably knows more about case papers or history sheets than anybody, would prefer a modified application and report book. I thought I would mention that, because I do not wish to pit my opinion against one who has such a very wide and intimate experience of the working of the system. Possibility of abolishing Application and Report Book.

13592. Some book of that kind has this advantage also, has it not, that it contains the record of the actual decision of the guardians?—Precisely.

13593. It is the only legal authority for the relieving officer to give relief?—That is quite true.

13594. It might be said, perhaps, that the relief order book answered that purpose and the relief order book acts as a check on the application and report book under the existing system, which is of value?—Yes, the relief order book is a clerk's book according to the Orders; but I should imagine inasmuch as the relief order book contains the directions of the guardians, which, after all, is the main thing, as to the amount of relief to be paid, that it might be regarded as sufficient authority to the relieving officer.

13595. That book, as you say, is in the custody of the clerk; is it not desirable to have some book which is in the custody of the relieving officer which is his authority for the relief he gives?—I think it would be provided, as I say, by a duplicate Order Book without a large number of columns.

13596. You want a book, whatever it is called?—You must have something. My notion would be to have a book with the least amount of necessary writing in it. Miss James, no doubt for very good reason, would possibly argue that there should be something more than I should suggest in the duplicate Order Book.

13597. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to the Whitechapel union, the great change in their administration was in the early seventies, I think?—I think it was.

13598. That would be at a period when the Jewish population was comparatively small?—The Jewish or alien population in 1871, was only 8,000. Jewish population as a factor in Whitechapel relief policy.

13599. So that granted this great incursion of alien population, still the definite characteristic and merit, so to speak, of their method would be taken as indicated by that old state of things, though they still carry them on with a dwindling christian population?—You may say I think, that the reduction in the relief in Whitechapel began when the number of aliens to the population was comparatively unappreciable. It was one-third then of what it is now, 8,000 as against 29,000.

13600. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) You have given us a table comparing St. George's, Hanover Square, and Kensington?—Yes, I hand it in, it is the best I could do.

13601. There is one point I do not understand; there is a very much higher rate of pauperism in St. George's, Hanover Square, than in Kensington?—Yes. Comparison of conditions in Kensington and St. George's, Hanover Square Unions.

13602. How does it happen that taking the quarter there is such a much larger number of applications in Kensington than in St. George's?—The difference is accounted for by the fact that in Kensington a labour yard was opened for three weeks.

13603. About those two districts; comparing them both as to wealth and poverty, and as to industries, they are very much on a level?—Yes, they are.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

15 May 1906.

13604. There is a very large rate of pauperism in St. George's? There is at the present moment. Kensington have started on a new principle recently, and consequently the outdoor numbers have diminished since the election of the last board of guardians in 1904. I think there is the same tendency also with regard to administration in St. George's, but it is true that the percentage does not appear to be accounted for by the circumstances of the two localities, which are very much the same.

13605. So that in that case you would say it amounts to administration?—I think to a great extent it does.

Domestic servants receiving relief.

13606. You point out that a large number of domestic servants come to the Poor Law in those districts?—Yes.

13607. That does not seem at all desirable, does it?—I do not know whether I have mentioned that, but the clerk accounts for the greater number of cases in Kensington by the fact that they have many flats, and they have found it necessary to issue somewhat strict orders with regard to the admission of cases of that sort to the infirmary. They found that cases had been accepted at the infirmary with merely a private practitioner's recommendation, and they have now reminded the superintendent that except in case of sudden and urgent necessity the condition of reception in an infirmary is an order by the relieving officer, and they now insist on a report by one of their own district medical officers.

13608. What happens is that the employer, not wishing the trouble of nursing, sends them there?—It is partly that. There are a large number of flats in Kensington, in which the occupants would have at the most one or two servants; if one of the servants falls ill there is no convenience or means of nursing them properly, and the result is that they have to find some place for them; then so excellent is the treatment and the provision for patients in Poor Law institutions that the family doctor says, "Send them away to the infirmary."

13609. Do the employers ever voluntarily pay?—That is another point they are considering now. In some cases it is impossible to refuse the case. They are trying to make the employers pay, but as a matter of fact I believe in law the employer is not responsible.

Conditions in Bermondsey and Southwark Unions.

13610. You find a very similar divergence between Bermondsey and Southwark, though I believe the industrial conditions are very similar again in those two districts?—They appear to be.

13611. I think Bermondsey is in one respect even better than Southwark, because it has much less density of population?—That is so, I think.

13612. Is that accounted for by any large open space, or any special cause, because it is a very remarkable difference. (Mr. Lansbury.) Are the Surrey Docks in Bermondsey?—Yes, and there is the Southwark Park, adjoining the infirmary at Bermondsey. The population of Southwark is tending to diminish, I believe.

13613. (Mr. Bosanquet.) They get a better result in Southwark with a smaller proportion of relieving officers to the population?—Yes, although at Bermondsey they have a superintendent relieving officer.

13614. That is rather contrary to the general views?—Yes.

Effect of administration on relief.

13615. There again would you attribute it entirely to the difference in administration?—I hardly know how to explain it because the tendency in Bermondsey now is in the direction of more strict and careful administration. The guardians are a good deal more particular and careful than they were four or five years ago.

13616. (Mr. Gardiner.) Does not it take a certain number of years for that to operate?—Yes, it does; it is better to go slowly in cases of that sort. I have by borrowing from the clerks been able to get similar returns for the whole of London. It is interesting I think to note that, taking the whole of London, as might be expected, the occupation most largely represented in the relief list is general or casual labour, amounting to 12,297. If any one had asked me before I had seen this return, I should have said the next would be building trades probably, but here we have general or casual labourers, 12,297, and the next is domestic service, 5,793; the building trades come next, 3,720.

Previous occupation of London paupers.

Applicants for relief in "domestic service."

13617. (Chairman.) Do they include under the head of general or casual labour artisans in the building trade?—It depends to a certain extent on what view the person making up the record takes of what should be included under the building trade. I find from inquiries made that in some cases they have included bricklayers' labourers, as well as carpenters, joiners and so on, and in others they have left them out. Still even so, the remarkable thing is that domestic service comes second with 5,794.

13618. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) I suppose that would include charwomen?—There again some returns include charwomen, and washers and so on, and others do not. I am inclined to think that the majority of those included are persons who are ordinarily resident with their employers. But it is a question which it is not possible to answer without analysing the whole of the figures from which these returns are compiled?

13619. Perhaps we might have that return?—Yes, I think you should have it. It can in fact now be obtained from the Statistical Department of the Board.

13620. (Mrs. Webb.) Who has given you the figures for that return?—A Return has been asked for by the Statistical Department of the Local Government Board which is a Return of the number of cases in which relief, exclusive of relief to insane and casual paupers, was applied for and granted during the quarter ended Lady Day, 1905, showing the ages, causes of application for relief and usual occupations of the persons relieved. I found that each clerk had kept a copy, and I got them each to lend me their Return and I copied the figures into this. There again I find that under the head of "other trades" in the case of Bermondsey, they include market porters, hawkers etc., postmen and costermongers. In Southwark under "other trades" they have carmen, ostlers, glass-blowers, harness makers, sweeps, furriers, costers, etc. When you can only partly analyse the figures it is difficult to make much of them.

13621. (Mr. Booth.) In addition to that you have the fact that it depends on what the man declared himself?—Yes.

13622. Therefore you start with inaccurate information and tabulate it in various ways?—True. I have at all events made an honest endeavour to supply the information, but I think it necessary to explain that the material is not very reliable.

13623. (Mrs. Webb.) Does that Return relate to the whole country or only to London?—Only to London.

M. Henri Monod, called in; and Examined.

M. Henri Monod.

15 May 1906.

13624. (Chairman.) I believe you are the late Directeur de l'assistance et l'Hygiène Publiques in France?—Yes.

Historical sketch of Poor Relief in France.

13625. You have very kindly prepared a paper, which you propose to read to the Commission, on the subject of the system of poor relief in France. I am sure I am expressing the unanimous feeling of the Commission when I say that we greatly appreciate the kindness and trouble you have taken in preparing it?—I felt very much flattered when my friend Mr. Loch wrote that the Royal Commission desired to hear my views on the present situation in France of the Poor Laws—of what we call l'assistance publique. I am certainly indebted for that honour to the fact that our system of poor relief has undergone considerable changes in the last nineteen years during which I have been at the head of the service. Therefore, you expect me to tell you, I suppose, not so much what French legislation, relative to the relief of the poor, was in former times, but what it is now. However, to place the present state of things before you in its full light, I am obliged to refer to the past; but that may be done briefly. In regard to our present system, I wish to put before the Commission mere facts, legislative or administrative, and to show on what general principles these facts are founded, but not to attempt to justify the principles themselves.

Relief by the Church.

(1.) In old times the care of the poor in France was entirely in the hands of the Catholic Church, and under its control, for it was one of the social obligations of the Church in relation to the State, as well as it was one of the religious obligations of every parishioner in relation to the Church. It has been said that in those times the main pre-occupation of charitable persons was rather to gain Heaven than to raise the poor out of misery. I am no judge of the question, but I must say that until the end of the nineteenth century I do not know of any work in French charitable literature which bears any resemblance to the pamphlet published by your Defoe in 1706 under the title "Giving Alms no charity."

Each parish responsible for its own poor.

(2.) From the beginning the Church established the rule that each parish must support its own poor. We will see further on that this rule is still a fundamental principle of our organisation, only instead of each parish (chaque paroisse), we say now each commune (chaque commune).

Gifts and bequests for the poor.

(3.) Under the influence of religious feeling, the gifts and bequests for the relief of the poor were numerous and important; and the time came when it was necessary to exercise some supervision in regard to them, so as to ascertain that proper use was made of such large sums of money. By means of religious congregations who were at the head of many of our public charitable services, the Church retained a very prominent part in their administration; but by degrees the control passed into the hands of public bodies, in regard to the establishment of which the Government had something to say.

Respective functions of Bureaux de Bienfaisance and public Hospitals.

(4.) The funds available for out-door relief were administered by what was called les Bureaux de bienfaisance; those available for in-door relief (not including the able-bodied, who only received out-door relief), were administered by the public hospitals.

(5.) When the funds, having their origin in private means, seemed sufficient to justify the creation of the bureau or the hospital and to ensure its proper working, a separate decree was issued by the Government in each case in order to constitute them public institutions. Each of these institutions was administered by a board of seven persons, the mayor of the commune, two persons appointed by the municipal council, and four members appointed by the prefect of the department.

View of First and Second Republics as to Poor Relief.

(6.) This certainly could not be considered a fulfilment of the duty of relieving the poor; but, in fact, that duty, which was preached as religious and individual, was never regarded as social by either of the two hereditary powers that ruled France, the Monarchy and the Empire. The First Republic, however, stated, with great earnestness, and ability, that principle of social duty. I will say later on why, in my opinion, adopting this principle, it failed to produce any practical results. Besides, obviously time was wanting, as it was wanting for the Second Republic, which in 1848 proclaimed the same principle as the First Republic had done; Les secours publics sont une dette sacrée. She soon saw herself and her plans of reform crushed by the Second Empire, just as the First Empire had crushed the First Republic and her reforms. It was the destiny of our Third Republic to realise the old republican programme as far as it could be realised.

(7.) It is easy to understand why the system, or rather absence of system, which I have put before the Commissioners, was quite unable to provide regular relief for any class of the poor.

Finance of the Bureaux de Bienfaisance and Hospitals.

(8.) First, the public charitable institutions, the Bureaux de bienfaisance and the hospitals, were established as I have said, just at a time when the gifts contributed on their behalf seemed sufficient. But circumstances had changed; or there had been some error in their judgment; and what had seemed sufficient did not prove to be so. That this was sometimes the case is obvious from the fact that public bodies, the Commune, or the Department, or even the State, had to aid the public establishment by way of annual allowances. In 1889 the amount of the expenses of the Bureaux de bienfaisance and hospitals in France was about three millions eight hundred thousand pounds sterling (£3,804,000), of which about three millions(£2,912,000), were provided by themselves, and the rest by grants from public funds.

(9.) Secondly, and chiefly, as these institutions had their origin in individual gifts only, nothing could ensure that there would be any proportion between resources and wants. Too much was done at one place, if it happened that at that place there were many wealthy and devout people, anxious to secure, by large gifts to the poor, their place in Paradise. In other places—at a great many places—nothing was done. Again, some kinds of distress made a more sympathetic appeal than did others; those were largely relieved; others, such as sickness or certain infirmities—epilepsy, for instance—were very seldom properly provided for, and many who suffered from them remained without help. Thus our French system as a whole was founded on personal charity, and shared alike its qualities and its defects; for charity is spontaneous, generous, courageous, often smiling, sometimes charming; but it is also capricious, often changing, and sometimes blind; and, worst of all, it is often altogether wanting.

Early French system of relief founded on charity aided in certain circumstances by taxation.

10. Where it had been wanting, where no public charitable institution had been created by private gifts, the local bodies had no power. They were allowed to help, with public money, institutions, the establishment of which was a proof of their usefulness; but they were not allowed themselves to create such institutions. The latter, the prohibition, seems more logical than the former—the permission; for public money, levied by compulsory taxation, ought only to be used for public services, and as long as the relief of the poor was considered the business only of private liberality, private means alone should be required to provide the relief.

Re-organisation of French poor system.

(11.) Very many of our political men, especially those who belonged to what is called with us le parti avancé, were anxious to bring some order into this unorganised and unsatisfactory state of things, to resume, in the matter of relief, the formula of the Revolution, and, this time, to enforce it.

Institution of the Direction de l'assistance Publique, 1887.

(12.) The first step was taken by the Government about twenty years ago. In November, 1886, the administrative functions of the central authority connected with the relief of the poor were centralised in one department at the Ministry of the Interior, the Direction de l'assistance publique. These administrative functions were few and limited; but the new department—and it was then explained that such was its chief aim—had to consider the whole question, and to study the means of carrying out a general and methodical reform.

Establishment and constitution of the Conseil supérieur de l'assistance Publique, 1888.

(13.) That was very heavy, very difficult, and attractive task was put on my shoulders in Feburary, 1887.

What was to be done? And how was it to be done?

(14.) In such a work it would have been a great mistake for an administrator to be too confident of his own knowledge and ideas. In 1888 a decree was issued by which the Government establised the Conseil superieur de l'assistance publique, the co-operation of which was of the utmost service to me. It was at first composed of sixty-seven members, of whom thirteen were officials, members ex officio, while others were members of the Senate, of the Chamber of Deputies, of the Conseil d'État, of the Conseil Municipal de Paris; and others again, thirteen in number, belonged to the provinces, for in an assembly which had to deal with national questions it was of great service to have their advice. Besides these there were fourteen members representing every kind of political and religious opinion, who had long taken part in public or private charitable work, and by their special knowledge seemed to be well qualified for membership of the council. The Conseil supérieur sat for the first time in June, 1888, and since then they have been intimately associated with me in the preparation of the successive laws and regulations which have been made for the relief of the poor. They began by discussing and then formulating a few general principles—the fundamental principles of the work that they had to accomplish. A statement of these principles from which they have never deviated is still printed at the back of their publications. These publications are uniform, and now number no less than a hundred, and they form a most valuable library of the history and practice of public poor relief in France.

Congrès international de l'assistance publique 1889.

(15.) But French advice was not enough. Before our line of action was settled, questions of essential importance were brought before an international gathering, before the first Congrès international d' assistance publique, which met in Paris in 1889, during the International Exhibition, and in the proceedings of which my friend, Mr. Loch, a member of the Commission before which I have the honour to appear, took an important part.

Mr. Henri Monod.

15 May 1906.

(16) Now, again, what was to be done?—It was useless to proclaim once more that it was the duty of the community to relieve the poor if we were not prepared to give an answer to practical questions such as these:—

Is it a social duty to relieve all classes of the poor?

Classes entitled to relief in France.

If not, what are the categories of the poor that have a moral right to be helped at the public cost?

A close study of what had been planned, and planned in vain, in 1791 brought to light the chief causes of failure.

(17) Our first revolutionary government attempted to organise public help for every form of human misery, whether the distress was due to personal faults or not; whether or not the distress was kept alive by such faults; whether or not the help was claimed by able-bodied persons. I firmly believe that if we had proceeded on such an unlimited plan, the Bills which we submitted to Parliament would not have been adopted. And this is the main difference between the English and the French system. In the French system—unlike the English system—the able-bodied, though not excluded from public relief, are excluded altogether from obligatory relief. And this is the force of the definition which I suggested in 1889, and which was approved by the International Congress—which the Conseil supérieur adopted as their own, and which has since governed the terms of all the laws and regulations on public assistance in France. The words of this definition I must state here in French:—"L'assistance publique est due, à défaut d'autre assistance, à ceux qui sont, temporairement ou définitivement, dans l'impossibilité physique de pourvoir aux nécessités de la vie," which means that the public assistance is due in the absence of all other help to those who for a time or definitively find it physically impossible to provide for themselves the necessaries of life. Note the principal words—l'impossibilité physique. Those words include within the province of obligatory relief children, and the sick, and the aged, but they exclude from that province all adult able-bodied persons.

Relief not a right to able-bodied adults in France.

Obligatory relief to children, sick, aged and infirm.

(18) There may be with you, as there are with us, eager minds never satisfied with limited results, and inclined to look with scorn on such reforms as these. To their criticism I have no answer, except that the reforms seem important enough to those who are concerned in their adoption, most unfortunate beings who used often to be left without any help whatever, and who now are sure to receive help. And I repeat that if we had endeavoured to obtain more, we should probably have obtained nothing.

So we went to work on this limited programme—the children, the sick, the aged and infirm.

Laws as to relief of children.

(19) On behalf of the children two laws were passed, which bear the following dates, July 24, 1889; June 27 and 28, 1904. These laws deal with children who have no parents, or who have parents so bad that they have to be deprived of their paternal authority.

(20) Do not think that before these laws were passed nothing was done for abandoned children. Much had been done for a long time by our Service des Enfants Assistés, of which, if time permitted, I should be glad to tell you more; two volumes, which I present to the Commission, contain the results of an inquiry which I made in regard to that service. But in the laws which I have mentioned there were new points. They made it possible to deprive of their parental rights parents who ill-treated, or corrupted, or exploited their children. And next, they included within the scope of the Service des Enfants Assistés certain classes of children, and they made it obligatory to provide the expenses of their education, which before it had been left to the discretion of local bodies to provide.

Numbers of children receiving relief.

(21) The number of children registered in connection with our public service was on January 1st, 1905, 212,378, of whom 66,058 were infants assisted at home, and 146,320 were to remain until they came of age under the supervision of the service, and maintained at its expense.

(22) For the complete fulfilment of the general programme adopted in 1889 something, and something important, remains to be done, that is a Bill for securing sufficient relief to the children of good parents who are too poor to support them.

Law as to relief of sick persons.

(23) The second class of persons who in accordance with our definition have a right to public relief are the sick—I mean those who when they are sick cannot face and fight their sickness with their own resources. This question has been settled by the law of the 15th July, 1893, which rendered the assistance of such sick persons obligatory. Such aid includes the attendance of a doctor and the provision of the necessary medicine.

(24) It took some months to bring this law into operation but it has now been in operation since 1895; and I present to the Commission four Reports in regard to its execution in the years 1895 to 1902. From these Reports it appears that in every one of these eight years hundreds of thousands of persons, sick and poor, who without this law would have had no relief, either from private or from public sources, have been the object of proper medical care. The total number of the sick who were assisted in 1902 was 582,264, and of these 28,042 were admitted to hospitals. The average cost of each sickness in that year was 14s. 6d. divided as follows between in-door and out-door relief: £3 10s. 10d. the average cost in the hospital; and 10s. 3d. the average cost at the home of the patient. One of the sections of the law of 1893 specifies that, whenever it is possible, the patient must be attended at home, which is altogether more moral, and, as you may see, much more economical. But if it is ascertained by the certificate of the doctor that the patient cannot be properly attended to at home, he must be admitted to a hospital. You see, it is just the reverse of what is done here for the relief of the able-bodied—and so must it be. In their case in-door relief is the rule, out-door relief, relief at the home, the exception.

Numbers of sick persons relieved.

(25) One of the consequences of the law of 1893—and in regard to this we shall have only to walk in your footsteps—is that we must establish a system of well-trained nurses, for the obligation to do a thing implies the obligation to do it well. But in this matter serious difficulties of more than one kind arise from the fact that the great majority of our public hospitals are at present managed by Catholic sisters.

(26) I have little to say of the third class of our clients the aged (more than seventy years of age) the infirm, and the incurable. The law that concerns them is dated July 14, 1905, and comes into operation only on January 1st, 1907. The principal objection raised against it, an objection that for years checked the progress of the Bill, was this: "You know how prevalent among our people is the spirit of thrift. Would not that spirit be discouraged, or at least would it not lose its effective force, if the people knew that the law would never allow them to be completely destitute in their old age?" We had to deal with this objection, and we did not present the Bill till we had found a system by which the situation of those who provided for themselves—however small that provision might be—would be better than the situation of those who had nothing to live upon except the relief they received from public money.

Law as to the relief of the aged.

(27) You may now see as at a glance what has been done these last seventeen years in France for those that are within the limits of the definition of 1889—those that are in physical impossibility of providing for themselves. I shall now put before the Commission in a few words three rules that apply to all these laws for the relief of the poor.

Rules as to relief.

(28) The First Rule.—We have stuck to the old principle the parish must support its own poor. The first revolution had abandoned it. That it did so was the second of its blunders. In 1791 they thought that it should be possible to centralise in the hands of the Government all the resources of poor relief, which would be poured out from the centre to meet local wants. I say this was a grave mistake, and we have proceeded on just the reverse method. We believe in individual effort first—in family aid next, thirdly, in private help, and if none of these is sufficient, then in the help of the smallest "collectivity," the commune, which is as a greater family, and which alone has the means of knowing the people who apply for help. This is one of the rules that is printed at the back of the publications of the Conseil Supérieur.

The relief of the poor primarily a local charge.

The words are as follows:—

"L'assistance publique est d'essence communale. C'est par la commune que doivent être désignés les bénéficiaires de l'assistance parceque seule elle est en situation de les connaître."

List of persons eligible for poor relief drawn up by the commune.

Under this rule the municipal council draws up the lists of the inhabitants of the commune who become eligible for assistance under the Poor Laws.

M. Henri Monod.

15 May 1906.

(29.) The Second Rule.—The commune, whose business it is, as has just been said, to make the lists of those who have a right to receive public help, must be financially interested in limiting their number. Otherwise, especially in a country of universal suffrage, the danger of waste would be great. Public funds must be protected against the temptation to put on the lists persons who could do without public help. But there arises another danger—that of not putting on the lists the names of all those who cannot do without the public help; and here it is the poor who have to be protected against a spirit of exaggerated parsimony. For the settlement of these cases a special tribunal has been established. The general rule is as follows:—

"L'organisation de l'assistance doit toujours être telle que la commune soit financièrement intéressée à la limitation du nombre de ses indigents. Des recours doivent pouvoir être exercés contre sa décision si cette limitation est excessive."

(30.) The Third Rule.—France is divided into departments, and the departments into communes—the State, each department and each commune having a separate budget. Now our poor laws represent a system of joint responsibility, for the whole of the country, and every part of it is interested in their successful working. From this we infer that each of the three national constituent bodies—the commune, the department, and the State—must co-operate in meeting the expenses incurred under these laws.

(31.) But in what proportion are these expenses to be divided between the three constituent bodies? The general plan is not only one of joint responsibility; it is also one of relief, and if the relief passes from the community to the individual, why should it not pass also from community to community? In a department there are richer and poorer communes. Therefore, the share of the department in the expenditure will be divided between the communes according to their degree of wealth or of poverty. There are also richer or poorer departments. Therefore the share of the State in the expenditure will be divided between the departments, according to their degree of wealth or poverty.

(32.) We have an administrative method of specifying these degrees of poverty or wealth. Following the laws of 1893 (sick) and 1905 (aged) are tables which form a part of these laws, which group the communes and the departments in a certain number of classes and fix for each of these classes the proportions of the contribution, on the one hand of the department in the expenses of each commune, on the other of the State in the expenses of each department. For instance, the class of the poorest communes will have to pay only 20 per cent. of the expenditure on their sick, and 10 per cent of the expenditure on their aged, whilst the class of the richest communes will have to pay 90 per cent for their sick, and 70 per cent. for their aged, the rest constituting the nominal contribution of the department. I say the nominal contribution, for of this contribution the class of the poorest departments will have to pay no more than 30 per cent. for both the sick and the aged, whilst the class of the richest departments will pay 90 per cent. for the sick and 50 per cent. for the aged; the rest (70 per cent. of the departmental contribution on the one hand, 10 and 50 per cent. on the other) being the obligatory contribution of the State. You see that by means of the departmental contribution the rich communes aid the poorer; and by means of the State contribution the richer departments aid the poorer. This rule is formulated in the French text as follows:—

L'assistance publique est une œuvre de solidarité nationale. Elle doit s'exercer, non seulement de la société à l'individu, mais de groupe à groupe, les communes riches venant au secours des communes pauvres, les départements riches venant au secours des départements pauvres. La proportionnalité, et non la fixité, doit en conséquence être la regle des subventions, soit des départements, soit de l'Etat.

(33.) So much for the present about public relief. About private charity I have only to say that in France it has at all times enjoyed much independence, especially since our law of 1901 on the liberty of association was passed; that over charitable societies (œuvres de charité), or those that take the name of charity, the central authority has no control whatever; that my experience, as director of the public service, convinces me that this absence of control is very objectionable; and that the efforts made by well-intentioned persons to bring the public service and the private societies together, so that they may join in a common undertaking, especially for the exchange of information, has hitherto obtained very little success.

(34.) I hope that the systematic scheme of public poor relief which has been adopted by our Government and Parliament, and which I have put before this Commission, will lead charitable persons to devote more and more of their charity to those who are not the objects of obligatory help—namely, able-bodied paupers, and to study more and more the means, not only of relieving them casually, but of raising them up, of restoring to them the fulness of their moral health, and replacing them under normal conditions of life. On all these points I venture to say that they have a good deal to learn from the experiences of the Charity Organisation Society of London.

13626. I am sure I may express what is the unanimous opinion of the Commission that that is a most excellent and valuable paper. But clear as it is, perhaps you will allow me to put one or two questions to you upon it. Speaking of the law of 15th July, 1905, you stated that you did not present the Bill till you had found a "system by which the situation of those who provided for themselves—however small that provision might be—would be better than the situation of those who had nothing to live upon except the relief they received from public money." I assume that a description of the principles and of the situation will be found in those books which you are kindly going to leave with us?—It will be found in the text of the 20th Article of the law. According to the law, which, as I have already explained, does not come into operation until 1st January, 1907, each commune fixes, without regard to the circumstances of any particular individual, the minimum cost of living within the commune. For instance, it may be that one cannot live within a particular commune if one has an income of less than 10 francs (8s.) per month; then that sum of 8s. per month will be accepted by the Council of the Department and by the State as the standard. Therefore, if anyone living in that commune has no income at all, he must receive the 8s. per month. But if a person has private means, there is of course no reason why all the collectivity should give more than is necessary, and, therefore, his private means will be deducted; for instance, if he has 3s. or 4s. per month of his own, then they would only give him 5s. or 4s. per month. But if those private means had been acquired by personal foresight or thrift, then only half the amount would be deducted, in arriving at the sum which is to be paid to him. Therefore, necessarily, the situation of those who have done something to provide for themselves is better than the situation of those who have done nothing at all.

Minimum scale of relief based on minimum cost of living fixed by each commune subject to confirmation by the department and by the State.

Discrimination between thrifty and thriftless applicants.

13627. Is the amount or the standard fixed by the commune?—It is fixed by the commune with the approbation of the Conseil general du Department and of the State.

13628. I presume that they can vary the scale?—Yes, and it does vary very much. A provision has been put into the law that they must not give less than five francs per month; but I do not suppose that even in France there is any place where a man who has nothing at all can live on five francs per month.

Absolute minimum scale of relief fixed by Statute.

13629. According to the second rule, the commune has the right of limiting the number of those who may receive this assistance; is there also a limit to the amount of money which can be given?—No. As the principle is the obligatory relief of all those who need it, you cannot put a limit to the amount of money given; obviously that would be contradictory.

13630. If a commune has a great demand for help from the poor, I gather that it would obtain resources, first, from charitable institutions and, next, from the department, would it be?—Yes.

Source of Poor Law revenue of the commune.

13631. And then, thirdly, from the State?—No. The help of the State goes to the department and not to the communes directly. However, there is now a proposition for a certain amendment being made in the barèmes, so that if the number of paupers in the commune is too great, there may be supplementary help from the State directly to the commune; but that would be quite an exceptional thing.

Special grants by State to exceptionally pauperised districts.

M. Henri Monod.

15 May 1906.

13632. That is a proposal, not that it should come through the Department, but that it should come straight from the State ?—That last proposition is that it should go straight to the commune.

13633. If a commune has a special demand upon it, has the department the power of giving extra aid ?—No. The department must give the proportion which is directed by the law according to the class in which the commune is situated.

13634. Then if an exceptional case occurs, the State has to come in and deal with it ?—Yes. But that is quite a new thing, and it is not yet in operation. It has been found that there are certain communes with a great working class population, which, according to our method of stating the wealth or the poverty of the commune in centimes, do not occupy their fair position on the table, and in those cases it is proposed that the State should give direct help to the commune.

Percentage of population eligible for sick relief.

13635. With your great experience, have you ever made a calculation of the proportion or percentage of people in the community who are unable to help themselves ?—It is very difficult to answer that in a general way; but we have reports each year giving the proportion of those who are on the lists to be helped in case of sickness. That figure is about 16 per cent. of the population.

13636. As much as that ?—Yes. That is not the percentage of the sick, but the percentage of those who are on the list to be helped when sick. If they are sick in the course of the year, they will be helped for nothing. I cannot say what is the proportion of the aged, because that has not been ascertained yet. We were asked by our Parliament to give the percentage of the aged poor, and we were obliged to give them some calculations, but I remain in doubt as to the value of these calculations.

13637. You want experience there, of course ?—Yes, we want experience.

Proportion of number of children relieved to number born in France.

13638. As regards the children, you tell us that there are 212,378 registered in connection with your public service; what proportion would that bear to the total number of children in France ?—The number of births in France is 900,000 a year, or thereabouts.

Definition of "Child" in France.

13639. What do you call a child in France ? under what age, that is ?—In this number of 212,378 are included those who are assisted at home, and they must be under two or three years old. The others we have under our charge until they are twenty-one. When they are thirteen, we put them out to work, and they earn their own living more or less, but we have full responsibility for them until they are of age.

13640. You are their parents, so to speak, until they are twenty-one ?—Yes. Those services are departmental and are done by the department.

French Relief principally out-relief.

13641. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to the sick, I see your law emphasises their being relieved at home ?—Yes.

13642. The whole experience of the English Poor Law has been a steady inclination to take the sick into institutions; but you do not agree with that ?—No, not at all.

Comparison of cost of medical relief in institutions and at paupers' home.

13643. Why do you say that relieving them in their homes is better ?—The difference in the cost is enormous. The average cost in the hospital has been more than £3 and it has only been 10s. at home.

13644. We have found, as a matter of fact, that the cost at home comes to be more, in consequence of what we call malingering; we have found that you cannot prevent a person at home from shamming illness and from continuing to declare himself ill longer than is necessary ?—Until now, we have not had that difficulty to contend with. The family ties in France, are, as you know, very strong, and they would not like to have their sick going to the hospital if they could help it.

Reluctance of Frenchmen for institutional medical relief.

13645. We have found the people do not like it, but we have also found that it is better that they should go ?—But why should it be so ? Every time the public doctor thinks it is necessary they can go to the hospital; he gives a certificate, and the hospital will not be repaid the cost of the patient if they cannot produce the doctor's certificate.

13646. But you steadily discourage institutional treatment of the sick ?—Yes, because we think it is much better, wherever possible, to help them in their own families.

13647. (Mr. Bentham.) Can you tell us what proportion of the total cost is subscribed voluntarily—you have given us the figures for the hospitals ?—I have given you figures showing what was the case before our laws of obligatory relief were passed.

Effect of State-aid on charitable contributions.

13648. Has the effect been that the charitable donations have declined, as State help has increased ?—Not yet, but it will be so. It has been so in regard to the assistance given to the children. More than 100 years ago, the children were only assisted by voluntary help; then the Service des Enfants assistés was created, and now there are very few voluntary donations or bequests for that Service, which is in fact done on entirely public money. Probably it will be the same in the case of the sick.

Administration of Public Hospitals.

13649. Is the management of the hospital entirely in the hands of a voluntary committee ?—If a hospital has been made a public institution, then it is under the administration of that board of seven persons of which I have spoken; but there may be free hospitals, and they would have nothing at all to do with the State.

13650. What provision is there for a change in the constitution of the board; do its members remain members of the board for life ?—They do not remain members for life. As I have said, four members are named by the Prefect, and every year the powers of one of these four persons come to an end. But he can be appointed anew for four years. Then the municipal council is changed by election, and the two members who are appointed by the municipal council are changed also.

Constitution of Court for revision of Relief Lists.

13651. You have told us, speaking of the second rule, that for the settlement of case of a special kind, a special tribunal has been established; would you describe the constitution of the tribunal ?—Yes, I can do so from the documents I have here. The tribunal is fixed by Article 17, and it has the power of striking names off the list or of putting names on the list. It is a Cantonal Commission composed of the Sous-préfet of the Arrondissement as representing the State, of a member of the Conseil Général, of a member of the Conseil de l'Arrondissement, and of the Juge de paix of the Canton—four persons, of whom two belong to elected bodies.

Rules as to administration of relief in France.

13652. (Professor Smart.) You have spoken of a statement of the principles which is printed on the back of your papers; do I understand that there are more than the three rules you have quoted ?—In my paper I have given you the three great rules.

13653. Do you not think it might be good for us to have the whole of them ?—Yes, I will leave these documents with you, and you will find them on the back of every one.

13654. Do I understand that these are the principles on which the Poor Laws were administered before you came into office ?—No. They were not formulated before 1889.

13655. They do form the principles of the present Poor Laws ?—Yes.

13656. Then I think we might have these printed, if you do not mind ?—Certainly. (For translation See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. XXV.)

Effect of State-aid upon charitable contributions.

13657. Do you anticipate a very great diminution in voluntary charity in consequence of these laws ?—I do not anticipate a diminution in the voluntary charities as a whole, but I suppose they will go in the future to the able-bodied. There will certainly not be a diminution, but I do not think these voluntary charities will come now to those who are the objects of obligatory public relief.

13658. Then there will be voluntary charity neither for the sick, nor for the aged, nor for the young ?—For the young there will always be a lot of charitable works, and very good ones. I think there will be a diminution on behalf of those classes, but not a diminution in the total voluntary contributions. I think the charitable public will always do a great deal in France.

Expediency of relief of able-bodied being left to voluntary effort.

13659. One would hope so, certainly; but it seems to me that the able-bodied will not appeal to the people nearly so much, nor will people see very easily the way to help them; they are a much more difficult class, are they not?—Much more difficult. It is only private persons who can properly do that work, I think.

Lady inspectors in Poor Law work.

13660. Do you associate any women with you in this work?—Yes, we have four Inspectrices générales des servier de l'enfance.

13661. But they are not among the governing body—not among the committee who decide these things?—No, they are not yet. It was my intention—and I hope they will carry it out now that I am no longer in office—to have these four inspectresses on our Conseil superieur de l'assistance publique. I think they must get on that council, but they have not yet done so. And I had to contend with people who try to put them out of office altogether.

Method of drawing up Lists of persons eligible for medical relief.

13662. (Mr. Phelps.) If a man comes and asks for medical assistance, who decides whether he is poor enough to receive obligatory relief?—The list is made up every year. I cannot go into all the details, but in each commune there is a Board of Assistance, and that Board of Assistance prepares a list, not of those who are paupers, but of those who would become paupers in case of sickness. They make out that list, and that list is then agreed to by the municipal council. Now there may be cases where a person who is not on the list must be helped, and then the Maire by a special article of the law decides that help shall be given to him. As a rule, a person to be helped must be on that list which has been prepared by the Board of Assistance and decided on by the municipal council.

Relief in emergency to persons not on list.

13663. In an average town what kind of income would a man have who would be put on that list?—He would have about nothing if he was sick.

13664. Would you put on that list a man who had 8 francs a month of his own?—That is a thing to be decided by the municipal council. If he has got 8 francs a month, and he is living in a city like Paris, of course he could not keep himself on that, so that he would be entitled to be put on the list; but if he is living in a little place in the country, 8 francs a month would be quite enough.

13665. It would vary very much, then, according to the place in which he lived?—Yes. In each place it is decided by the municipal council. We have a large number of communes in France—more than 36,000; many of them very little communes—where all the inhabitants know each other.

No stigma attached to medical relief.

13666. (Chairman.) Is it considered to be a disgrace to be on the list?—No.

The finance of poor relief.

13667. (Mr. Phelps.) What taxes go to the Assistance Publique?—The general resources of the commune.

13668. Is there a tax on theatre tickets?—Yes.

13669. Are there any other taxes of that sort?—Yes; but that is special, and that does not come to very much.

13670. Would the council see at the end of the year what their expenditure was likely to be?—Yes.

13671. They would make an estimate, would they, of what they thought the charge would be for the next year, and they would tax the people to that extent?—The expenses are centralised at the department. The department pays the expenses of in-door relief as well as of out-door relief. It ascertains the total expenditure, and then it says to one commune, "You must pay 50 per cent.," and to another, "You must pay so much;" and then it goes to the State and says, "We have to receive from you 35 per cent.," or 40 per cent., or whatever it is, and they get that amount from the State.

The minimum scale of living.

13672. (Dr. Downes.) You have spoken of 8s. per month as a possible minimum subsistence in certain communes; how is that arrived at—would it include rent, clothing and fuel?—It would include everything.

13673. Even food?—Yes. I mentioned that figure of 8s., because for a long time we tried to get the people to give those pensions to the aged who had nothing at all, and where we were successful they did give 10 francs per month.

13674. Has that been found to be sufficient?—Yes. The Senate found it too much, and put the minimum down to 5 francs per month.

Separate lists of indigents and of those eligible for medical relief.

13675. With regard to medical relief, what is the position of a man who is not poor enough to be placed on the list to receive the gratuitous medical service, and who is not rich enough to pay out of his own pocket for very much medical assistance?—If it is ascertained that he is unable to pay, he must be put on the list. He has a right to ask the tribunal of which I have spoken to put him on the list. He does not ask to be put on what is called by us the list of the Bureau de bienfaisance, which is a list of what is called indigents, but he asks to be put on the list under the law of 1893, which is a law for the relief of the sick. The two things are quite different. People who would not be put at all on the list of the indigents by the Bureau de bienfaisance for out-door relief will allow themselves to be placed on this list in case they are sick. They are people who, when they are in health, earn their living, but who, if they happen to be sick, have no money coming in at all, or very little.

Repayment of cost of sick-relief.

13676. Is there any provision by which a man who can pay a little can go into any institution for the relief of sickness?—There is nothing regular about that. It may happen that he is in a commune where that sort of aid exists, and it may happen that he is not. In Paris there are such institutions, but there are a great number of communes where there is nothing of the kind.

13677. I believe that in Paris you have what we call paying hospitals?—Yes, we have some of those.

13678. How much would a man have to pay in such a hospital, taking a man of the middle class with a small income?—It would differ. Even in our public hospitals we have a certain number of rooms reserved for those who can pay something. Some will pay 5 francs per day, and some will pay 6 francs per day; then they have a separate room.

Number of applications for sick-relief in a year.

13679. With regard to your figures as to the number of sick who were relieved in 1902, you give the total as 582,264; is that the number of different persons or the number of applications?—It is the number of applications.

13680. So that it might include the same persons over again?—Yes, but for a different sickness.

Private hospitals in France.

13681. (Chairman.) Have you any hospitals in France which are private hospitals not under government?—Yes; we have not very many, but we have some in the large towns. We have the English hospital in Paris, which is quite private.

13682. Most of the hospitals in France are supported by the public funds, I think?—No, they generally are supported by the private gifts of which I have spoken in my paper.

13683. Are they supported by the funds of the department or of the commune or of the State?—Neither one nor the other. They are public institutions by themselves. But since the law of 1893 they may receive money from the department for the treatment of those sent to the hospital in execution of that law.

Administration of bureaux de bienfaisance.

13684. Are the bureaux de bienfaisance government departments?—They were instituted with voluntary funds, and then made into public institutions, each of them by a separate Act and a separate decree.

13685. Are they under the control of publicly-appointed officials?—Yes; that board of seven persons of which I have spoken will administer each one of them.

13686. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Is there any system among the working people of mutual assistance during illness, like our friendly societies?—Yes, we have a great number of mutual societies, but they are quite apart from this.

Effect of medical relief on Provident Societies, etc.

13687. I was wondering whether this would affect their numbers at all; does it reduce them?—They were afraid it would, but it has not done so. It was alleged that it would, and these societies were afraid that it would. In a speech that I made in the Senate in connection with the law dealing with the aged people, I dealt with that matter. I said that one of our writers in 1885 stated that the recent law which instituted medical assistance to the sick would destroy the majority of the societies of mutual help, and I answered. Here are now the figures: On December 31st, 1895 (the year of that law) there were 10,588 societies of mutual help with 1,354,439 members; and on December 31st, 1904, when that law had been in operation for nearly nine years, the number of societies had gone up from 10,000 to 17,800, and the number of members from

M. Henri Monod.

15 May 1906.

1,350,000 to 2,950,000. Therefore, you see the operation of the law for relieving the sick has had no influence in reducing the number of societies for mutual help.

Right to relief of those incapacitated by old age.

13688. Did I understand you to say that the law which is to come in force next year for the aged, applies to the infirm and incurable as well?—Yes, when they are so infirm and incurable as to be incapable of earning their livelihood.

13689. At any age in their case?—Yes.

13690. Is there any Employers' Liability Act in France, by which employers are liable for the men who are disabled while employed by them?—Yes. But that is a different law, and has nothing to do with the public assistance. That comes under another ministry altogether—the Ministry of Commerce.

Feeding of school children and the relief of the children of the State.

13691. I think that in France there is a good deal of feeding of school children; is that done under the obligatory law?—No, not at all. That also comes under another ministry—the Ministry of Public Instruction.

13692. That works side by side with your care of the children?—Yes.

13693. Would they be dealing with the same children that you do?—No.

13694. They would be dealing with a different set of children altogether?—Yes. Our children who are what we call Les Enfants Assistés, and who belong to the State, are not regarded as paupers at all. We have to provide for them, and we would not ask for any assistance in their feeding; we must do that.

Position and functions of Director of l'assistance publique in Paris.

13695. Would they be going to the same schools as the other children?—Yes, certainly; they would go to the public schools.

13696. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to Paris, I think I might ask you a question or two, your answers to which might be of great service to us. You have in Paris at the head of the general administration of Public Assistance, I believe, a director appointed by the Minister of the Interior on the nomination of the Prefect of the Seine?—Yes.

13697. He submits a budget of all the expenses of the city from that point of view, and he also is the legal representative of the hospital establishments and of the Secours à domicile?—Yes.

13698. He acts as the guardian of the enfants assistés, the enfants trouvés, and so on?—Yes.

13699. As representing Paris he also takes part in the Conseil de Surveillance?—Yes.

13700. And also in the Conseil supérieur de l'assistance publique that you have referred to?—Yes.

13701. So he has a very strong assured position in regard to the whole administration in Paris?—Yes.

13702. And he is in touch with the whole administration in the country at large?—No.

The Conseil de surveillance in Paris and its constitution.

13703. Then, besides that, in Paris you have the Conseil de surveillance, and I want to ask you if you can tell us how it is formed. As I understand, it is a consultative body that stands beside the director of the relief in Paris as the central body of the town?—Yes. I do not know the number of the members, but I can give that information to you. In one of these books you will find all the particulars about that. I think there are thirty or thirty-five.

13704. I have a rough note here; there are ten representatives of the Conseil municipal?—Yes.

13705. Then there are two maires or adjoints, and also two administrators of the bureaux de bienfaisance?—Yes.

13706. It is linked to the central body by having one Conseiller d'État, I believe?—Is there a Conseiller d'État now? Perhaps there may be, but I have nothing to do with it now.

13707. Then there is a physician, who should be a physician attached to the hospitals?—Yes.

13708. And there is also an accoucheur in practice at the hospitals?—Yes.

13709. So you have in that way a very representative body?—Yes.

13710. It is not really an elected body, but it is an appointed body?—Yes.

Members of the Bureaux de bienfaisance partly representative and partly nominated.

13711. It is the same with the Bureaux de bienfaisance and the hospital committees; they are appointed bodies and not elected bodies?—Do you mean in Paris only?

13712. I mean generally?—In general for each bureau de bienfaisance and each hospital, as I have said, there is a Board of seven persons, consisting of the maire of the commune, who is elected, two members appointed by the municipal council, who are elected, and four members named by the prefect.

13713. Who are practically appointed?—Yes.

Constitution of the Conseil de surveillance and its operation in Paris.

13714. But this central body in Paris is entirely an appointed body?—Entirely; and it is very much sought for by gentlemen in the town. It is a great honour to be a member of that Council.

13715. Do you think it is a good method of managing the general administration in Paris to have this appointed body at its head; does it answer?—I did not see, whilst I was there, any great inconvenience in it. But the Paris business was very much out of my hands. There is a very great autonomy in our commune at Paris, and it will not easily accept the intervention of the Government, you know.

13716. Granting their desire for autonomy, is the administration, in your opinion, well-conducted from the point of view of the general interests of Paris?—Yes, I think it is very well-conducted from the financial point of view. I think their management expenses are very low, that is, the proportion of the expenses that do not go direct to the poor is very low.

The finance of the Bureaux d'assistance medicale.

13717. To take another point, the sources of payment in regard to these Bureaux d'assistance—the medical body. You take into account, do you not, all endowments that are available for paying your expenses?—Yes.

13718. The receipts of these Bureaux d'assistance take into account three ressources propres, namely, dotations, droits des pauvres and cimetières?—That goes to the Bureau de bienfaisance, but where there is no Bureau de bienfaisance, the Bureau d'assistance medicale under the Article of the Law for the Relief of the Sick, has all the powers the Bureau de bienfaisance has under our law of 1879.

13719. That is to say, you fall back upon the endowments which are held in the interests of the public good as far as they will go?—Yes; but when there is a Bureau de bienfaisance, that Bureau de bienfaisance takes them, under the law. You have some dotations for the sick and all those go to the new Board of Assistance. As the Bureau de bienfaisance has the entire charge of the relief of the poor, some of its funds must go to the sick, even without a special dotation, and so the prefect tells the Bureau de bienfaisance: You must take, say, a fifth of your revenue and give it to the new Board of Assistance.

13720. Then also you may obtain reimbursement, may you not, from all persons, societies and corporations who exist for the purpose of assisting sickness?—If they have a special obligation in respect of the sick person.

13721. That is to say, a friendly society, for instance—a Société de secours mutuels—might pay towards the cost of the medical relief?—Yes; they would pay what they are obliged to pay, according to the rules, but not more.

13722. Then with regard to the Enfants assistés, do you not find that their numbers are increasing very rapidly?—Yes.

13723. Does that at all frighten you?—Not at all.

Increase in numbers of children relieved.

13724. I notice the figures for Paris are very high now compared with what they were in 1891. The figures seem to have risen from 20,616 to 31,308?—I know it. But I do not think it is any advantage for a child to be kept by force with parents who will not keep him. I think it is much better for the child to come to us.

Increase in numbers dealt with by bureaux de bienfaisance.

13725. Then with regard to the indigents, there again I notice a considerable increase, namely, from 47,000 in 1892 to 53,000 in 1902 in Paris?—That does not all come within the limits of our obligatory laws.

13726. That is what I wanted to find out?—That is the business of the Bureaux de bienfaisance of Paris.

13727. Does it strike you that there is an increase in pauperism generally in Paris under the system on which they are now operating?—No, it does not strike me so at all.

13728. I notice that what they call the Titulaires de secours représentatif d'admission à l'hopital show a very large increase too ?—Yes.

13729. So that the indigents in these various departments are much on the increase ?—Yes; but before that help to the aged was obligatory, there were a great many who had need of help and did not get it, but now they must get it.

13730. You would, therefore, make an allowance for a considerable margin of persons who ought to be relieved, and who hitherto have not been relieved ?—Certainly. I have seen that all round me very often.

Barèmes the location of cost of lief between h and poor stricts.

13731. In reference to the Barèmes, the tables which are made of the value of the centime in the various districts, that is made by a Government department from year to year, I think ?—No, not at all; it is a part of the law.

13732. Is it actually incorporated in the law ?—Yes.

13733. So that you have in this way a sort of self-acting system for the assistance of the Department and of the State in the case of each commune ?—Yes. It works quite mechanically and mathematically; there is no opportunity at all for arbitrary appreciation there.

alue of urt for vision of lief lists.

13734. Is it the general feeling in France that this distribution is fairly done ?—Yes, I think it is the general feeling, but I think it would be very desirable that our little tribunal, of which I spoke, the county tribunals, should do more than they have done. We have had instances of a commune where every member of the municipal council and the maire himself put themselves on the list. In another, on the intervention of the Prefect, that tribunal struck off eighty out of a hundred.

13735. There is a control really acting on behalf of the Government right through the system, in the form of the Prefect ?—Yes; and not only the Prefect, but every inhabitant of the commune can go to the tribunal and say, "That man ought not to be on the list," or "That man ought to be on the list."

13736. And ultimately the Prefect intervenes ?—Not ultimately. The tribunal decides.

13737. But sooner or later, if he thinks the thing is wrong, he can intervene ?—He can, but he is not compelled to intervene.

oor Law rganisation f Paris.

13738. (Chairman.) Is Paris treated as one commune ?—Yes, but it is divided into twenty arrondissements, and each arrondissement has a bureau de bienfaisance.

13739. The arrondissement is not the commune, but it takes its place ?—Yes. There are twenty arrondissements, and each of those arrondissements has a maire.

13740. Is the system under the control of the Prefect or of a special officer ?—It is under the control of the Prefect, or rather of the director of whom Mr. Loch was speaking just now, and over the director there is the Prefect.

13741. Has that resulted in pressure being brought on the Government in the Chamber of Deputies to relax the rules and give more assistance in times of distress ?—Not very much, because Paris always has done a great deal more than any other town or commune in France.

13742. Then that has not been a danger under the system ?—No, it has not up to now.

ontribution f Paris unicipality owards cost f poor relief.

13743. (Mr. Loch.) But there is a temptation, is there not, for the municipality to intervene and to make grants for relief for different purposes in Paris ?—Yes, because they have to give a great deal towards it. The Public Assistance has to spend about 50,000,000 francs a year, and as it only has 20,000,000 francs of its own the other 30,000,000 francs must be provided by the municipal council. As they give so much money they think they should have something to say as to the way that money is spent.

Minimum scale of living.

13744. (Professor Smart.) Would the 10 francs per month you have mentioned be per head ?—Yes.

13745. That is for aged persons alone ?—Yes.

13746. Do you seriously say that a French peasant of any age can live on 10 francs a month ?—In some parts of France, certainly. I objected very much in the Senate to the 5 francs a month, but I must say that I think it is possible in certain parts of the country to live on 10 francs a month.

13747. Do you not mean that a relative would be glad to take them as boarders for 10 francs ?—Yes, a relative would take them.

13748. But they would not make anything out of it ?—I hope not. This is a very difficult question.

13749. (Mr. Lansbury.) You do not mean that a man or a woman might have a separate house and live alone on that amount, do you ?—Yes.

13750. And it would be sufficient ?—Yes, it would.

13751. Would they have any land attached to the house, and be able to grow stuff ?—There would be a little bit of land and a very little house, but they might live on it.

French Poor Law literature.

13752. Could you tell us what rent they would pay per month for that house ?—Perhaps 10 or 15 francs a year.

With a view of helping any one who would like to go deeper into this matter, I present the Commission with a certain number of documents: 1st, the inquiry of which I have spoken about the children—Les Enfants Assistés, two volumes; 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and 5th, four reports about the Application of the Law of 1893 (Relief to the Sick); 6th and 7th, two books about the public money spent for the relief of the poor, first in 1885, and second in 1896—one can see there that it was beginning to increase and since then it has increased a great deal more; a third volume ought to be published. Then, 8th, the Law of July 24th, 1889, dealing with the Relief of Ill-treated Children and the Regulations in regard to it; then, 9th, the Law of July 15th, 1893, dealing with Relief of the Sick and the egulations in regard to it; 10th, the Law of February 4th, 1901, dealing with Gifts and Bequests under Public Control and the Regu ations in regard to it; 11th and 12th, the Laws of June 27th and 28th, 1904, dealing with Children Registered in the Public Services and the Regulations in regard to them; 13th, the Law of July 14th, 1905, dealing with Relief to the Aged and Invalid, and the Regulations in regard to it; 14th and 15th, two speeches I delivered to the Senate concerning one, the Law of 1893 for the Relief of the Sick, and the other, the Law of 1905 for Relief of the Aged—in which speeches are developed the principles I have just put before the Commission; and 16th and 17th, two speeches I delivered at the opening of the International Congresses of 1899 and 1900, in each of which the state of things according to the Relief of the Poor is put down as it was at that time; and then, 18th, 19th, and 20th, three papers containing the decrees relative to the Institution of the Direction of the Conseil Supérieur de l'assistance publique, and the proceedings of the first sitting of that Council.

13753 (Chairman.) We are very much obliged to you; you have given us the greatest assistance ?—I am very glad to have been able to be of help to the Commission.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY.

Monday, 21st May, 1906.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I., etc., etc., etc. (Chairman).

The Right Hon. Sir HENRY A. ROBINSON, K.C.B.
The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S.
Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B
Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
Mr. FRANCIS CHANDLER.
The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
Mr. C S. LOCH.
Mr. J. PATTEN-MACDOUGALL
Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.
The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.
Professor WILLIAM SMART
The Rev. H. RUSSELL WAKEFIELD
Mrs. BERNARD BOSANQUET.
Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.
Miss OCTAVIA HILL.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary).
Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Mr. HENRY LOCKWOOD, recalled; and further Examined.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.
21 May 1906.

13754. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) With regard to certain localities being indulgent, and others strict (not necessarily east and west), has the pressure not been on the whole greatest where now (and possibly consequently) indulgence is greatest?—I think pressure is apt to follow indulgent administration.

Effect of administration on pauperism.

13755. Is laxity the cause or effect of the present state of things, or is it due to want of work, poor physique and such matters?—It is not easy to differentiate on this point.

Variation in attractiveness of workhouses.

13756. Which is the most luxurious—a workhouse or an infirmary in London?—I do not know that there is much to choose between them.

13757. Are there not in some workhouses special features rendering them specially attractive?—In some, the entertainments, small luxuries and so on are perhaps overdone, and, as I have said in previous reports, the leakage unavoidable in a crowded workhouse has special attractions for the class known as loafers.

Effect of Local Government Act, 1894.

13758. (Mr. Lansbury.) You have had experience of administration before 1894 and since; in your judgment is the Poor Law administered to-day as well as it was before 1894, that is to say, are the guardians as public-spirited nowadays as they were before 1894?—The condition of the poor both in workhouses and in infirmaries is certainly more eligible now than it was prior to 1894.

Army pensioner paupers.

13759. Can you tell us the proportion of old soldiers who become chargeable, the age at which they become chargeable, how many received pensions, and the highest and lowest amount paid?—I hand in a summary of lists of pensioners (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (P.)) in the several workhouses in London. The total is 226. The original lists are available if desired, but they are voluminous and of various sorts and sizes. The pensions vary considerably from 6d. to 2s. 6d. per day.

Proposal to introduce Outdoor Relief Prohibitory Order.

13760. (Mr. Loch.) Why should not the Prohibitory Order be brought into force in London instead of the Outdoor Relief Regulation Order? As to the applications at times of pressure from want of work, and inclement winters, do not borough councils or "Distress Committees" make provision so that the Prohibitory Order might, so far as the "Unemployed" are concerned, be applied to London?—This might be worth considering, but it would be well probably to have first full reports of the working of the distress committees appointed under the Act of last year.

The practice of giving continuous relief in "sudden and urgent necessity" and checks thereon.

13761. As to "continuous, sudden, and urgent necessity relief." In what unions in London has this prevailed year by year since 1894?—In Camberwell, Bermondsey, and Poplar, but I have no accurate figures as to this.

13762. What orders or instructions, if any, have been given by the Local Government Board?—No special instructions have been given.

13763. What numbers of cases have been passed in this way by the Local Government Board, and in what unions, since 1894?—I have not been able to get figures as to this. (See answer to later question, 13842.)

13764. What is the procedure for sending up cases and getting approval? Have the auditors raised questions as to the legality of such relief, and, if so, what replies have been given to the auditors?—The only instance of action by an auditor that I know of is a recent one in Poplar, where a relieving officer has been surcharged in respect of a particular case, but I am not sure that a decision has yet been arrived at.

13765. Has the inspector approved of the system, and, if so, under what conditions?—Regarded, as a temporary expedient, it is preferable to the stoneyard, but of course there should be careful inquiry in each case which should be reported regularly to the guardians or relief committee, who should have the cases before them regularly, and the circumstances reported on carefully, at short intervals. Relieving officers should not be given general instructions to relieve able-bodied persons continuously under the exception in the Order.

13766. If the Outdoor Relief Regulation Order does not forbid continuous, sudden, and urgent necessity relief, should it not do so?—Something might be done in this direction, but it would not be easy to define precisely what was to be understood to be continuous.

The tendency to indulgent administration of Poor Law and its causes.

13767. (Mr. Nunn.) Can you trace to any particular year, or to any movement occurring during any special period, the decline from strict administration, that followed the period immediately following 1869–70?—I cannot speak for the period immediately following 1869 and 1870, but the reduction in outdoor relief began in Whitechapel and in St. George's-in-the-East about 1872, and it was brought about, I think, by the ill results following upon money sent to and indiscriminately distributed in the East End during a period of distress. Within my own experience the tendency to more indulgent administration began, I should say, in 1886 or thereabouts, which was the date, I think, when the agricultural labourer was enfranchised and the inhabitant occupier came on the scene as a voter. Since then public opinion more or less continuously seems to have been in favour of what on political platforms was called "humanising the Poor Law," and it happened that the weather of the first three months of 1895 immediately following the first election of guardians under the Act of 1894 resulted in an excess of unemployment, particularly amongst those engaged in dock and river-side occupations. The Orders and Circulars issued by the Board from time to time during the past twelve years, all tending to ameliorate the conditions of workhouse life, were issued, I take it, in compliance with public opinion as reflected in Parliament; and though there may be at present a tendency to reaction in respect of certain instances in which indulgent administration has been thought excessive, public opinion continues, I think, to desire that all reasonable comfort, and perhaps something more than what may be considered reasonable by some, should continue to be provided for the aged and the sick.

Evils of Charity funds for the relief of distress.

13768. Can you suggest any better means than those at present obtained, for the enforcement by boards of guardians of their decisions in regard to the recovery of maintenance, loans, etc. ?—Unfortunately, the enforcement by Boards of Guardians of their decisions depends a good deal upon the caprice of individual magistrates.

13769. Assuming the difficulty that has been experienced by the Local Government Board in securing the adoption of their views by Boards of Guardians in the administration of the Poor Law, have you any suggestions to make for consolidating what may be described as the propagandist and educative influence of the central authority ?—There would be advantage, I think, in the issue by the Board of a carefully prepared Circular on the lines of Mr. Goschen's of 1869 calling attention to the importance of care and discrimination in administering out-relief, and the usefulness of co-operation with voluntary agencies. As a detail the Circular might very well call attention to the Annual Digest issued by the Charity Organisation Society, but if the Circular is to be effective it would be necessary, I think, to invite the observations of the guardians to whom it was sent after a stated interval. A close and systematic co-operation with agencies of the kind referred to is, I think, an essential, in a strict out-relief administration, and this view is expressed by the House of Lords Committee in their Report of 1888.

13770. (Mr. Booth.) When the word "lax" is used with regard to administration is it understood to mean simply that they do not adopt a certain policy of administration, or that whatever policy of administration they do adopt they are indifferent in carrying out the policy on which it is based ?—I think laxity is not to be taken necessarily to mean careless administration, I should apply it rather to those cases where relief was, perhaps, too readily given.

13771. Too readily as being against certain principles ?—Yes.

13772. Not that they may not be conscientiously carrying out the principle which they themselves think right ?—It is not infrequently the case that where a good deal of out-door relief is given it is given not in ignorance but with full knowledge of the circumstances; but there are boards of guardians who regard the condition justifying relief to be somewhat different to that regarded by others.

13773. "Whatever is best administered is best" is sometimes quoted, would you agree with that motto ?—I think I have given my view that as regards out-door relief it should be kept within reasonable limits. As far as I understand there are three schools of thought with regard to out-relief: there are those who think it should be the principal method of relief, there are those who think there should be no out-relief at all, and there is the intermediate class, like myself, who think it ought to be kept within reasonable bounds if possible; what those reasonable bounds are it is rather difficult to define, I admit.

13774. "Lax Administration" is a very common phrase, and I want to get it more particularly defined, because I do not think it is desirable to indirectly attack any particular system by using that kind of phrase. If I had to substitute a word, I should prefer to use "injudicious" instead of "lax." Would you agree that that is a word which might be used ?—If I were to select my own word, I think I should say, perhaps, that "indulgent" is better than either.

13775. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) In answer to my first question on this point, you said you think pressure is apt to follow indulgent administration. What I was trying to state in that question was rather this. Sometimes when pressure was very great, through special poverty or anything of that kind, the tendency was to make men say, "principle must go to the wall altogether for the time being" ?—I did not quite understand that, You mean to say there may be a time when it is felt that the circumstances are such that you cannot apply any strict rules to them.

13776. Exactly, and the tendency, after that, would go to the rather over-indulgent policy ?—Yes, I think that is rather likely to be found in most places.

13777. In another question I asked whether there are not, in some workhouses, special features rendering them specially attractive. You have charge of Richmond, have you not ?—Yes. Feather-beds at Richmond workhouse.

13778. Do you know one specially attractive thing that used to be there in the shape of feather beds ? Near Derby day we always had a very great number in the workhouse because of the old feather beds, which had been given, first of all, by a Queen, and have been continued ?—I suppose I ought to know of the feather beds, but that is the first I have heard of them.

13779. I asked a guardian the other day about it, and he said they still had some; but they did not make the Richmond workhouse, in those days, very attractive?—That is possibly so.

13780. (Mr. Nunn.) As an officer of the Local Government Board, are you satisfied with the machinery that lies to your hand for converting opinions that you may have formed, as you get more and more experience of boards of guardians and their actions, into recommendations for actual practice amongst boards of guardians. Supposing you came across some special abuse in connection with the work of any board of guardians, or in connection with a group of boards of guardians, have you any other resource than to mention it in your annual report ?—You have to apply your powers of persuasion as best you can. Methods of exercising the influence of Inspectors and Local Government Board on Guardians.

13781. You have no means of bringing the powers of the Local Government Board to bear directly ?—No. You mean in matters of general administration ?

13782. There is no system of recommendations from you to the Local Government Board that might be converted into circulars or orders ?—No, I do not know that there is. As I say, one has to take each case as it comes before one and deal with it as best one can.

13783. As to the whole question of indulgent administration of outdoor relief, which combines within it the question of giving to a large number of applicants, and giving to them inadequately—which are two recognised evils—is there any systematised method which you have for getting the power of the recognised policy of the Local Government Board brought to bear upon boards of guardians generally ?—I do not know that there is anything to bring it to bear on boards of guardians generally. One has, as I say, to do the best one can to persuade guardians to adopt what is recognised as a good policy, as occasion offers.

13784. Might I go a little further and ask, as a matter of opinion, whether you think that some more direct means might exist for converting the experience of the inspectors into actual propaganda by the Local Government Board ?—Yes, as I rather suggested in my original answer, I think that a circular setting out the Board's view as to what should be done would be advantageous, provided, of course, you were sure, as I suggest, that it is not laid on the table and perhaps forgotten.

13785. Would a recommendation to the Local Government Board by one inspector that the time was ripe for such a circular be out of place ?—No, I think not.

13786. A consensus of the inspectors' opinion on the subject—— ?—Would, I should think, have the effect probably of the issue of a circular.

13787. But there is no regular machinery for sending up such recommendations ?—I do not know that there is any such recognised machinery.

13788. (Sir Samuel Provis.) There is nothing to prevent an inspector making a recommendation of that kind ?—No, either individually or collectively. Meetings of General Inspectors.

13789. (Mr. Nunn.) Do the inspectors ever meet together ?—Not very often.

13790. Certainly not periodically ?—No.

13791. Do you think that would be a good plan ?—It has often been thought so, but somehow all efforts to bring about a periodical meeting have failed—why, exactly, I do not know.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

21 May 1906.

13792. Are inspectors generally of opinion that meetings would be useful?—I really cannot tell you; I believe there are differences of opinion.

13793. It is your opinion that they would be useful?—I think so.

13794. (Chairman.) Have they ever met?—They have on one or two occasions; and, speaking for myself, on those one or two occasions, I have derived benefit from hearing what my colleagues thought on various subjects; whether they learned anything from me, I do not know.

13795. (Mr. Nunn.) Who would be the convener of such a meeting?—I think any one of the inspectors could do it.

13796. I suppose the chief inspector would be?—As far as that goes, it might come from anybody. The difficulty is so to arrange their duties as to enable them all to meet together on a particular day.

13797. To an outsider it seems that the enormous experience accumulated by the Local Government Board, and the very great power it wields, ought to be combined with some little more systematic machinery for giving vent to its opinion?—Yes, of course, as you are aware, every year there are in the Blue-books reports by each inspector. I have not myself met with many people who appear to have read them, but I daresay those who have read them would find in them useful information.

13798. They are in the nature of pious opinions, are they not?—My particular reports appear twice a year in The Times, but unfortunately they appear a very long time after the period to which they particularly apply, and, consequently, I have occasionally to answer inconvenient questions as to what I meant by this, that, and the other, which relate really to matters which occurred perhaps eight or nine months previously.

13799. What I meant was, they do not come as practical proposals of administrative bodies?—No, I cannot say that they do.

Proposed special magistrate for dealing with Poor Law Cases.

13800. With reference to a previous question of mine taking for granted that we have the very greatest difficulty owing to the caprice of individual magistrates, has it ever occurred to you that we might have a magistrate specially appointed for dealing with cases arising out of the poor law?—I do not know whether those cases would be sufficiently numerous. You mean the appointment of a man specially for that purpose?

13801. Yes; one who should have a background of poor law principle, and who was acquainted specially with the poor law?—Of course, that would depend on what view the Home Office might take of it. I fancy very strong representations would have to be made before they would be willing to appoint a person for that particular purpose.

Attitude of magistrates as to enforcing Guardians' decisions.

13802. You are aware that the way in which their cases are refused by stipendiaries does break up principle on boards of guardians to a very large extent?—Yes, I am bound to say I have had not infrequent complaints of the way in which cases have been dealt with.

13803. It breaks up a great deal of excellent resolution on their part?—No doubt, and it is very hard indeed on a board of guardians who have been strictly following up what they are legally entitled to do in cases of that sort, to find it all upset by, I will not say the caprice, but the opinion of the particular magistrate.

Return of deaths from starvation in London.

13804. (Mr. Lansbury.) You have given me a return of the number of deaths from starvation in London. The total is 625, of which eighty-eight are Whitechapel Union cases, and eighteen are Poplar cases?—Yes.

13805. (Sir Henry Robinson.) For what period was this?—From 1891 to 1904.

Reason of large number of deaths in Whitechapel as compared with Poplar.

13806. (Mr. Lansbury.) There were eighty-eight deaths in the Whitechapel Union, as against eighteen deaths in the Poplar Union. Would that be anything to do with judicious administration in either place?—I do not think so necessarily. I do not know whether it is in the summary, but in the original reports from which that summary was taken there is a column which sets out what is known of the cases by the Poor Law authorities. I think you will find that in very few there was any cognisance of the case by either the relieving officer or others.

13807. Might not that be because people simply would not go to the Poor Law; they had such a terror (the old terror) of going to the Poor Law?—I should not like to say that. I do not know that there is any evidence to point to that, really. It is only fair, with regard to Whitechapel, in this particular instance, to say that I fancy that Whitechapel has a considerably larger number of common lodging houses and shelters, and so on, than Poplar has, and those cases would very possibly come from them to some extent.

13808. On the other hand, it has a great number of philanthropic homes, where people would be taken in without any question of how they came to be in a destitute condition, and that sort of thing?—I do not know whether that would counter-balance the shelters.

13809. I only want to put the other side: whether it is not possible to make your Poor Law so rigid and so strict and your administration so strict that people would prefer to die rather than go to it?—I fancy that sort of thing must occur very seldom. I should be sorry that it should at all be understood that I have any belief that the larger number of starvation cases in Whitechapel was even indirectly the result of their administration.

13810. Still, eighty-eight as against eighteen is a big percentage, considering that the population of Whitechapel is less than half that of Poplar?—That is perfectly true, but, at the same time, I do not think I have committed myself to saying that the Whitechapel administration is responsible for it.

Attractiveness of London Workhouses.

13811. With regard to workhouses having specially attractive features, there is no workhouse, I suppose, in London where anyone would voluntarily end their days?—Voluntarily—no, perhaps not.

13812. You speak of the orders and circulars issued by the Board. I take it that is the Local Government Board?—Yes.

The causes of indulgent administration of the Poor Law.

13813. You say they all tend to ameliorate the conditions of workhouse life, and were issued, as you take it, in compliance with public opinion as reflected in Parliament?—I think so.

13814. Is it not possible that all the rest of the things that have been done by Poor Law Guardians in London, which have been contrary to what are known as the old Poor Law principles, have only reflected public opinion, as also reflected by elections to Boards of Guardians of people to carry out a certain policy?—I think that is so. I think there can be no question that public opinion as to what is due to persons in the workhouse, certainly in the infirmaries, has materially changed of late years.

13815. Has it not also changed so far as the Metropolis is concerned with regard to old people not being sent to the workhouse?—I do not know that you could really gather that from the returns of relief. If that view had been accepted and effect given to it by increased out-relief to old people, you would find a general increase in out-relief throughout the Metropolis, I think.

13816. In particular unions is it not within your knowledge that that has been done?—Yes. You may say that in the unions in which there is more out-relief given than in others, in most instances it is mainly given to old people.

Excessive out-relief at Camberwell.

13817. Take Camberwell, which is, I suppose, the most avowedly out-relief Board in the Metropolis; that is their policy. Do you consider that union properly administered?—I think they might, without any considerable harm, give less out-relief.

13818. Apart from that, taking it that that is their policy, that they go there definitely to give out-relief because they think people should not be taken to the workhouse, do you consider that those men are capable of administering things?—They are capable of administering, certainly, and it appears to me that Guardians under the Relief Regulation Order have a very wide discretion as to how they shall administer relief.

Effect of strict administration in Whitechapel.

13819. If you look at the top of this table of Mr. Booth's, Whitechapel is another Union which, since 1870, as I understand it, has adopted a strict indoor relief policy. According to that table they started in 1875 with a pauperism of 2·6, and they finished in 1905, thirty years afterwards, with 2·3. If you look at that in the light of the figures which we got out the other day, namely, that the alien population of Whitechapel would bring their Gentile population down to just under 50,000, you will see at once that their pauperism has increased, that is, in relation to Gentiles pure and simple?—You mean if you leave out the Jewish population, that the percentage of pauperism would be considerably higher than it appears there—that is true.

Proportion of paupers to Gentile population.

13820. It would be 3¾?—I have not worked it out.

13821. The actual population of Whitechapel, apart from the Jews, at this time would approximately be 49,580; with their pauperism that would give you 3¾ per cent. My point is that there you have a Union which has rigidly adhered to the in-door relief and the judicious policy, and yet, with that, their pauperism actually increases?—If you take only the Gentile population, yes.

Medical relief to Jews in Whitechapel.

13822. I suggest to you you must do that, because the Jews go to their own Jewish Board of Guardians. What is the number of Medical Orders for the Jews which you have from the Whitechapel Board?—It is over 500, I think.

Gentile population of Whitechapel and St. George's-in-the-East.

13823. I am perfectly willing that the actual figures shall be put in. If you say you will put them in, I will not pursue it now?—I will, I understood you wanted figures for Whitechapel and St. George's-in-the-East in which the Jewish population had been eliminated, or at any rate showing more distinctly what proportion of the pauperism is Gentile and what Jew. I have not been able to get those, but I may tell you I have given all the necessary particulars to the Clerks of the Guardians, and they have promised to let me have them as soon as they can. (Subsequently sent. See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (G)).

Effect of numbers of aged on numbers of paupers.

13824. At any rate, there is not much difference. They start in 1875 with 2·6, and they finish in 1905 with 2·3. I want you to look into the next column, and you will see that the persons over sixty in Whitechapel number 46 per thousand of the population?—That is so.

13825. In Camberwell it is 68 per 1000?—Yes, that is remarkable.

13826. I want to ask you whether your experience is that where there are a number of old people resident you get more people on the Poor Rate?—You probably would, but I am afraid I have not a sufficient knowledge of the census returns in detail of the various Unions, and I have not examined this table very minutely hitherto, but when you have a large percentage of old people you would reasonably expect that, I think.

Conditions in Stepney Union.

13827. I call your attention to St. George's-in-the-East also. There you have only forty-eight, and in Stepney, which is another classical union, you have fifty-four. At Stepney I want to call your attention to the fact that that also is another of the group of unions in the East End, and they have positively increased their pauperism?—So I see.

13828. And their population is practically stationary?—And up to date, with not a very large percentage of Jews I think.

13829. Not very large, but they have some. Would you trace that to laxity or injudicious administration at Stepney?—No, I think the policy has somewhat changed in Stepney within the last few years. I think you will find there is a good deal more out-relief given now than there was, say, five years ago.

Conditions in Bermondsey Union.

13830. With regard to Bermondsey, is the administration there judicious or injudicious?—I think it is fairly judicious.

13831. I would like to call your attention to Bermondsey. There, with a falling population, they have increased their pauperism?—So I see.

13832. They have very nearly reached Poplar, but not quite. You have a population that is dwindling, and yet pauperism has increased?—I think the increase is not likely to continue now.

13833. Are we to take it that the 1905 figures here are the normal condition at Poplar?—Apparently not.

13834. Would it not be fair, in this comparison, not to lay too much stress on 1905 and 1906, which are two bad winters, but rather to take from 1875 to 1903, instead of 1905 and 1906, and make comparisons from those. I point out to you that in nearly all cases it would be against the Unions?—You mean taking that long period?

13835. Yes?—In my answer to one of your questions, I have shown that the large increase of pauperism in Poplar began some three years ago.

Attitude of magistrates as to enforcing Guardians' decisions.

13836. I was not going into Poplar particularly, but, as you have made a reservation in the case of Bermondsey, I wanted to get you to make one with regard to Poplar. With regard to the magistrates and obtaining decisions in reference to loans, relatives, and that sort of thing, have you heard of very much difficulty?—One hears of it from time to time. I think if you were to circularise the clerks in London you would find that in the aggregate there were a good many cases.

Charity in poorer districts of London.

13837. Your answer to Mr. Nunn's question with regard to co-operation with voluntary agencies, of course, depends upon whether the voluntary agencies are there?—Yes.

13838. And whether the charities are there?—Yes.

13839. And I suppose it is a well known fact, is it not that people who subscribe to charities do not, as a rule, live in places like Bermondsey, Poplar, and that kind of district?—That is so.

The practice of giving continuous relief in cases of "sudden and urgent necessity" and checks thereon.

13840. (Mr. Bentham.) You were asked by Mr. Loch "what number of cases are being passed in this way by the Local Government Board, and in what unions, since 1894." That is as to the number of persons who are relieved under the sudden and urgent necessity plea?—I replied to that that they were not reported.

13841–?. Your answer was, I think: "I have not been able to get figures as to this"?—Yes. I confess in that answer I had got confused between the two things. The cases of sudden and urgent necessity are relieved by the relieving officer on his own responsibility, and they are not reported to the Board, but, under another article of the Order, where the guardians for any reason propose to depart or have departed from the regulations, they then report to the Local Government Board, and the cases are considered by the Board, whether they should be sanctioned or not; but sudden and urgent cases are not reported.

13843. Have you any figures as to the number that have been reported to the Local Government Board?—No. The only instance in which, to my recollection, there was any report of that sort was from Bermondsey, last winter, in which they wrote saying that they proposed to deal with certain cases, not under the exceptions set out in the Order, but under Article 10 of the Order, and the reply was that they had apparently misunderstood that Article, and that, after having relieved persons in the manner provided for in Article 10 of the Order, they must report them to the Board; but, as a matter of fact, no such report was made.

13844. It would be an easy matter to get a record of the number that have been reported to the Local Government Board, in those unions mentioned, would it not?—Yes, I think it could be got if it is thought desirable.

13845. You do not approve of relieving able-bodied persons outside of the workhouse continuously under the sudden and urgent necessity plea, do you?—No. I have no desire or intention at all of shirking my full personal share of responsibility in this stone-yard and out-relief business. What I told the clerk to the Bermondsey Board and others in the winter of 1904 was that they should avoid, as far as possible, except at the very last moment, at all events, opening a stone-yard, and it would be better, rather than do that, that they should so deal with their workhouses that they could take into the workhouses any single men; and persons who had an established residence in the union should be dealt with, not under this sudden and urgent exception, but under Article 10. As it turned out, I do not know that they relieved very many in that way. They did not in fact adopt my suggestion, and the relieving officers did relieve a number of men under the exception to the Order.

13846. As a temporary expedient, I think you prefer that to the stone-yard?—Yes, as a temporary expedient.

13847. In one of your answers you say: "Something might be done in this direction"—that is, forbidding continuous, sudden, and urgent necessity relief—"but it would not be easy to define precisely what was to be understood to be continuous." Could it be said that a case was relieved as being suddenly and urgently in need if it was continued week by week?—Probably it could not. On the other hand, I take it it would be difficult to say that a case which was relieved, we will say, this week under certain conditions, when the period of relief had expired, might not become again sudden and urgent.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

21 May 1906.

13848. It is continuous, is it not?—It is hardly continuous. There might be a break. The person who relieves under that exception is the relieving officer, and you have got to show that the conditions were not such, when he gave the relief, as to entitle him to do it.

13849. But it cannot be sudden and urgent week by week, can it?—No.

13850. (Mr. Lansbury.) Is not it "sudden or urgent"?—It is "sudden and urgent" in the Relief Regulation Order.

13851. Is there not another one: "sudden or urgent"?—In the case of overseers it is "or," I think.

13852. Is there not an Order with regard to "sudden or urgent necessity"?—It is "sudden and urgent" in the Prohibitory Order. I am not quite sure, but I am inclined to think that where it is a case of what an overseer is to do, it is "sudden or urgent," but I am not quite sure about that. In the Regulation Order it is "sudden and"; you want the two conditions.

13853. (Mr. Bentham.) It is "sudden and" in the Prohibitory Order. I have them both here?—Then that is so.

The 1834 principles of Poor Law administration.

13854. (Professor Smart.) I am afraid I must return to a theoretical question. You speak now and then of principles, and you have been discussing principles to-day already. Now, are there principles in Poor Law administration? You cannot have an administration of a law according to a principle unless you know what the principle is?—No.

13855. Is the principle understood, or is it laid down?—I do not know that it is laid down in so many words.

13856. Is it not the principle of 1834?—Yes, it should be.

13857. Is it clearly understood that that should be so?—That destitution should be the condition of relief?

13858. No, that is not the particular point, it is the eligibility; that the condition of the pauper should be less eligible?—Yes.

13859. That is the single principle laid down by the Commission of 1834?—True.

The ineligibility of Poor Law relief.

13860. And it was carried out by the Commissioners. The workhouse test is only a carrying out of that single principle, and the original Commissioners were appointed simply to carry out the original principle through the workhouse test. If you refer to principles, is it not the case that the only authoritative guide you can get is that earliest principle, namely, that the object of the Poor Law is to make the condition of the pauper less eligible than that of the independent labourer outside?—Yes.

13861. So that everything must be judged by that alone, if you are going to refer to principle at all?—I think I have said before that you cannot say that the condition of the aged person in a workhouse now is less eligible than that of a good many people who have to contribute to his support, except for the condition of confinement.

13862. And the deterrent in that case would be this, would it not, that it was clearly laid down in the original legislative documents that it might be possible to fulfil this principle without a workhouse at all. It might be, but it was extremely difficult, but whenever any question came up of how outdoor relief was to be administered, the sole reference was to this one principle, so as to make the condition of the pauper less eligible than the outside labourer?—Yes.

13863. So that there may be a very wide interpretation indeed of the administration of the Poor Law, and yet you cannot call any administration lax or strict except by reference to this standard. Is that not what one would call the philosophical case?—I think it is, but to apply it in practice is not an easy thing to do, unfortunately.

13864. I want you to explain another statement, which seems to be a statement of principle based on that, namely, that the object of the Poor Law is the discouragement of pauperism and the restoration of independence?—Yes.

13865. That was never explicitly laid down, but the words occur continually?—I think in the old Poor Law, the guardians, having relieved the destitution, were considered to have done all that was necessary.

13866. Is it quite fair even to speak of strict or lax administration with regard to any particular union?—I do not know whether it is fair. One has to do it.

Overlapping of charity and the Poor Law.

13867. You may give a dog a bad name and then hang him, of course. There is another point I would like to put to you. It is Mr. Lansbury's point, but I should like to get your opinion of it in this way: a good deal of assistance to poor people is given generally, by way of charities, and by private individuals, generally injudiciously given, or very often injudiciously given, which might be given and ought to be given by Poor Law authorities; that is to say, in a good many cases private charity takes the place of the Poor Law authority, when it would be better for every one that the Poor Law authority should do it?—I do not know that that happens very often. I am thinking where the Poor Law should come in.

13868. I am only on the point that charities and the Poor Law administration very often cross each other and do each other's work?—Possibly, yes.

Effect on pauperism of absence of charities.

13869. So that in a district where there are no charities and no residential benevolent rich individuals, much heavier work is thrown on the Poor Law and the Poor Law funds than in the districts where there are charities and rich private individuals?—Yes.

13870. So that, in such a district, the rate of pauperism might rise enormously above the rate of another district without any reflection at all on the administration?—Certainly. I think you must take into consideration the circumstances of every district in respect of the pauperism of it, though you do find pauperism increasing in districts where one would suppose a reasonable cause was not existent; it does not follow that you have a low pauperism in a district where there are a good many well-to-do people and a good many charities.

Charities in East End.

13871. (Mr. Phelps.) In regard to what has been asked you about charities in a district, is it the case in London that the charities at all correspond with the number of well-to-do people?—I do not know that I can answer that question.

13872. Is it not a matter of common knowledge that an immense deal of charity goes from the West End of London to the East End?—I believe that is so.

13873. And the amount of charity distributed in the East End does not in the least depend on the well-to-doness of the inhabitants?—I would say it does not depend on it altogether.

Difficulty of enforcing proper classification and treatment of able-bodied within a Workhouse.

13874. (Mr. Chandler.) In your answer to Mr. Russell Wakefield's question as to special features in some workhouses making them specially attractive (which he has this morning amplified by referring to the feather beds at Richmond), you state that in some workhouses the leakage which is unavoidable has special attractions for the class known as loafers. Will you explain that?—By leakage I mean this, particularly if it is an overcrowded workhouse, it is impossible to prevent the able-bodied class sharing in the comfort, and I may say the luxuries, of the older ones. The Dietary Order provides the old people with a better class of diet, and so on, and the able-bodied should be on a restricted diet; there should be nothing attractive about it, and the conditions of the life in the workhouse should be distinct for them and such as to provide an incentive to them to earn their living outside. I say you cannot prevent that class finding the condition of life in a mixed workhouse such as, as a matter of fact, they are not entitled to, and which they ought not to share in.

Need for separate institutions for able-bodied paupers.

13875. Are there any institutions in your district for the separate treatment of the young and able-bodied as distinct from the aged?—No, I am sorry to say there are not. That is a thing I have been urging the desirability of for some time.

13876. Do you think if some arrangement were made of the kind it would stop this feature you refer to as "the attraction to loafers"?—I am quite certain that it would, only, as I have said before, you must have a workhouse so arranged that you can deal with other than actual able-bodied. Amongst the persons who are classed as able-bodied, the percentage of those who could go out and do a day's work is very small indeed. As every workhouse master and every guardian knows, it is by no means the actual able-bodied man who is most troublesome, it is the man who has just enough amiss with him to prevent the doctor certifying that he is able to do hard work, so you must have a workhouse in which you can have graduated tasks for each sort of man. It is not so much the severity of the task, what you have to do with the class of man in question is to keep him at something all the time.

Paucity of genuinely able-bodied.

13877. Separate treatment in a separate institution you think would meet that ?—I think so, to a great extent.

umbers of ses in ndon of ief in udden and gent cessity."

13878. (Mr. Loch.) I think you promised a return of the extent to which continuous sudden and urgent necessity relief was provided during the last winter ?—I am afraid I must have misunderstood your request. I understood your question to refer to the sudden and urgent cases. Sudden and urgent cases are not reported to the Board.

13879. I understood they were not reported to the Board, but I understood you would try to obtain a return of the extent to which the system had worked these last two winters ?—I am sorry I misunderstood you; you shall have that. (Subsequently sent. See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (Q)).

13880. With regard to testing the position of the unions, do you think it is a fair test in comparing the past and the present of the unions, to compare union with union ?—Naturally the circumstances at any time are presumably the same in each union.

13881. That is, a comparison between past and present is fair unless there is a strong reason to the contrary ?—I think so.

atistics of pulation d uperism in mberwell.

13882. Taking the Camberwell Union, and comparing its past and present as set down here, the population has gone up from 206,093 to 270,718, and the pauperism has gone up from 3,246 to 8,484, in the period mentioned, from 1885 to 1905 ?—That is so.

13883. The rise is also marked in the earlier years, before any question of distress arose of the larger type of the last few years. It was 3,246 in 1885, and it had doubled by 1895, when it was 6,423 ?—Yes.

13884. Taking that as a record of administration, would you say it is satisfactory ?—I cannot say it is; but as Mr. Lansbury has suggested, it is a policy; it represents the policy of the Board.

13885. Do you think as a policy it has had satisfactory results ?—I cannot say that it has.

atistics of pulation d pauper- n in White- apel and pney.

13886. Taking another problem which refers very much to Whitechapel, the foreign element of the population has largely increased in Whitechapel since 1885, has it not ?—Very much.

13887. The actual Christian population that would take advantage of the poor relief is relatively smaller ?—Yes, probably; I think it would be.

13888. The population has increased only from 72,602 in 1885, to 80,497 in 1905; therefore the chances are that the Christian element is very much less ?—Yes, no doubt. I should think the greater part of that increase is amongst aliens.

13889. A percentage on a decreasing population will show up the numbers, as it were, as against population ?—Yes.

13890. If that is so, then the return of pauperism in Whitechapel must be considered not only in regard to their actual position, but with regard to the past, and how far the population decreasing has itself led to the higher increase in the percentage of pauperism ?—The decrease of Gentile population, do you mean ?

13891. Yes, available for poor relief ?—That is so.

13892. Taking past and present again, in Stepney, there has been an actual decrease of population between 1885 and 1895 ?—Yes.

13893. At the same time there has been, I think you would say, a considerable increase in the Jewish or alien element in this last decade or so ?—I think so.

13894. The pauperism between 1885 and 1895 increased about 17 per cent. ?—Yes.

13895. There again you see the population has been going down ?—It has gone up slightly again since.

13896. I see it has. If you take the last decade for the population, 1905, as put down here, you will see that the pauperism has increased greatly ?—Yes.

13897. 1,267 in 1885; 1,489 in 1895, and 2,197 in 1905 ?—Yes.

13898. Do you think that that indicates a change of policy, as between 1885 and 1905 ?—I think that, certainly within the last five years, there has been a section of the Board who have been disposed to more out-relief than previously was the case.

13899. Therefore this increase, which amounts perhaps to as much as 70 per cent. between 1885 and 1905, is really an increase, marked by a change of policy ?—To a great extent, certainly.

Statistics of population and pauperism in Poplar.

13900. Comparing past and present if we take Poplar, as put down here, between 1885 and 1895, in the first period you have 160,606 as your population, and in the second 167,604, only a small increase of population, say about 4 per cent.; but if you take their pauperism between those years you have 5,008 in 1895 against 3,233 in 1885; therefore comparing Poplar with Poplar you have something like an increase of 54 per cent. in pauperism, with only an increase of about 4 per cent. in population ?—That is so.

13901. If you take the subsequent years 1895 to 1905 of Poplar, which has been in the nature of a district specially under difficulties, in 1905 you have 11,683 as your pauperism against 5,008 in the previous decade, and your population has gone up only a little ?—2,000 only.

13902. Therefore that pauperism has risen, whatever the circumstances may be, about 260 per cent ?—Of course it has enormously risen these last few years.

13903. I want to clinch that by asking this: In view of these figures, do you think it at all advisable as showing the conditions of administration in different parts of London, to compare union with union; is it not better to compare the past and present of the same union ?—You get facts there certainly, which there can be no question about at all.

Deaths from starvation in London in relation to the strictness of administration in certain unions.

13904. I want to ask you a question about the starvation returns. I have here the last starvation return, which was for 1904. I will take the first case that comes. I take it simply as it appears. In the second column you have the address, and then the age, 33, and the date of the inquest: Then, whether admission to the workhouse was offered and refused: No. Then the next column is: "Whether any, and if so what officer of the union or parish was examined at the inquest": "Dr. Lardner, Medical Officer and Elizabeth Dendney (Sister) Whitechapel Infirmary." Verdict. "Acute bronchitis and oedema of the lungs, accelerated by want of medical attention." Then come the observations of the board of guardians: "This man applied to the relieving officer on the 7th January, 1904"—the inquest was on the 8th January—"for admission to the infirmary. He was at once admitted at 11.10 a.m., and died at 3.30 p.m. the same day. The guardians consider that the deceased should have made application for admission earlier. Their officers had no previous knowledge of the case." In that case do you think that the responsibility attaches to the board ?—No, I have already said I do not think you can say that.

Application a necessary condition of relief.

13905. Granted that responsibility does not attach to the board in that case, do you think there ought to be any arrangement by which the Poor Law relief should not depend on application ?—I think you must leave it to the person needing relief to make his own application.

13906. Therefore the system indicated by this return and justified so far as the guardians are concerned, is a just one in your opinion?—I think it is really; the cases are all very carefully gone into. I think it is quite the exception, amongst the large number of returns, to find anything suggesting a reflection on the guardians or their officers. There have been one or two cases, where it has been thought the case might have been dealt with differently perhaps.

13907. Your answer therefore would apply equally to districts such as Whitechapel and districts such as Poplar or any other district ?—Yes, a person may die of starvation anywhere of course.

Mr. Henry Lockwood. 21 May 1906.

13908. Therefore the in-relief method, or the non-indulgent method, or the non-lax method, whatever it may be called, does not make for starvation?—I think we have no evidence that it does.

13909. (Mr. Nunn.) Is there any indication in that case, that the man had any scruples in applying to the Poor Law?—I do not know anything about the case, except what is stated here.

13910. (Mr. Lansbury.) If you take particular unions to judge of their pauperism, you must take the condition prevailing past and present?—Yes, you must take all the circumstances into consideration in getting at the meaning of the figures.

Discretion of Relieving Officer as to refusing application for relief.

13911. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) I suppose there is very great responsibility on the relieving officer when he refuses an application for relief under those circumstances?—Certainly.

13912. In your experience have you ever heard of a case of prosecution following where relief has been refused by a relieving officer under those circumstances?—Not within my own knowledge; but I happen to have here a copy of a foot-note to one of the articles in Glen in which it says: "A relieving officer has no absolute discretion in deciding what is urgent necessity. A relieving officer having been convicted of refusing relief under Section 98 of 4 and 5 William IV, the Court upheld the conviction." That is to say, that in his discretion he refused relief and the person died, and he was tried for manslaughter.

13913. That is the only case you know of?—Yes.

13914. Accordingly there is a very serious responsibility on the relieving officer, and always must be?—Undoubtedly.

13915. (Mr. Nunn.) May I ask, was that man convicted of manslaughter?—The note gives a reference to the case, it is Clark v. Joslin, in a certain number of the "Law Times."

13916. All you meant was that the relieving officer having to exercise his discretion, he was tried on the question of fact whether his discretion was justified or not?—Yes. When it says, "No absolute discretion;" it means, as a matter of fact, he cannot say: "I was right"; he is judged by results.

13917. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Whether he was justified in the action he took?—Yes.

13918. (Mr. Booth.) Would he be allowed to refer to one of the overseers, so as to protect himself by his opinion?—I do not think so. The section referred to there is rather curious. Apparently he was tried for disobeying an order framed by the Poor Law board under Section 98, which seems to imply that he was to relieve a case where apparently necessity or destitution actually existed. He took on himself to say, "this is not a condition of things which needs relief." He is to be judged by results and not by whether he sufficiently considered the circumstances of the case as they appeared to him.

13919. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Who took up the case?—It is an old case; I cannot give you the actual particulars.

Relief in kind in Poplar and West Ham.

13920. On the return which you have handed in (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (C)) there is a point I should like to ask you about. The outdoor relief given in kind I see amounts in Poplar to £9,386, and in West Ham to £17,000. What does "in kind" represent there generally?—Which year are you taking?

13921. I am taking the last column; it is £9,386 in the case of Poplar and £17,507 in the case of West Ham?—That no doubt relates to the number of so-called sudden and urgent cases, and, in the case of West Ham, stoneyard cases, which were relieved only in kind, or half in kind.

13922. It really has relation practically to stoneyard relief?—Yes, where stoneyard relief, or relief to able-bodied is given, half of the relief at least must be given in kind. In ordinary relief it is in the discretion of the guardians whether they will give in kind or money, partly or wholly.

Duties and practice of Relieving Officer in case of "sudden and urgent necessity."

13923. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to the question which was raised just now as to whether it was the duty of a relieving officer to give relief in a case of sudden and urgent necessity, or whether it was to give relief in sudden or urgent necessity, may I call attention to the actual words of the Articles of the Order. In the first place the General Consolidated Order lays down, does it not, the duties of the relieving officer?—Yes.

13924. If you look at Article 215, No. 6, it would be the duty of the relieving officer, would it not, in every case of sudden or urgent necessity, to afford such relief to the adult person as may be requisite?—Yes.

13925. If you turn to the Outdoor Relief Regulation Order, which is the order in force in London, and look at Article 7, there you have the exceptions to Articles 5 and 6 of the Order. Articles 5 and 6 of the Order prohibit the giving of relief to an able-bodied person while he is employed for wages, and require that he should be set to work by the guardians while he is relieved out of the workhouse?—Yes.

13926. Then the exceptions say, those articles are not to be imperative in the case of a person receiving relief on account of sudden and urgent necessity?—Yes.

13927. Consequently the provisions of the two Orders are not identical?—They are not in terms.

13928. Again if you look in the Regulation Order, Article 3 prohibits the guardians or their officers from establishing an applicant for relief in a trade or business and various other things. Then there is a provision at the end of it to this effect: "Provided always that nothing in this article contained shall apply to any shelter or temporary lodging procured for a poor person in any case of sudden or urgent necessity?"—Yes.

13929. There again the language of the Order is not the same as it is in Article 7?—Yes.

13930. Going one step further with the case of overseers, the statute lays down what is their duty and the words of the Statute 4 and 5 William IV., Chapter 76, Section 54, are that an overseer shall not give relief except in case of sudden and urgent necessity?—You require the two conditions apparently.

13931. Does not that rather lead to the inference that no very great distinction is intended to be drawn between cases of sudden and cases of urgent necessity?—I certainly think that it is generally understood.

13932. That when a case is really urgent the question of the suddenness is not very much taken into account?—I take it if a relieving officer were to wait and consider the question of suddenness he might very often find himself in an awkward position.

13933. It is the duty of the relieving officer to relieve when the case becomes urgent, whether the necessity has been sudden or gradual?—Yes, the urgency is what he has to take note of and act on.

13934. (Mr. Nunn.) Is the word "or" sometimes used as an explicative and sometimes as an alternative?—Yes.

13935. It is quite possible that "or" may be used in either of those circumstances?—True.

13936. (Mr. Loch.) In these cases, the urgency we are referring to would be continuous urgency and so continuous relief?—It amounts to that.

13937. (Mr. Lansbury.) Not when seven days elapse?—I said it would be very difficult to establish as against the relieving officer that the case was not urgent, when he relieved it the second time.

13938. Within a week?—Whenever it happened.

13939. (Mr. Bentham.) People get hungry every day, and may require some help; if they have not anything to eat, the relieving officer may grant relief day by day, week by week, and year by year; and it would be urgent every time he gives it, and it would come within the four corners of the Order?—I think it would, but I take it no relieving officer would in practice do that.

13940. (Mr. Lansbury.) Is it not also the fact that the relieving officer would have to report the case to his committee or board, and that then it would come under review?—In every case of the kind the relieving officer has to relieve, but he has a further duty, that is, to report the circumstances to the guardians or the relief committee at the next meeting.

13941. (Mr. Bentham.) And the guardians sanction that usually, they think it may be an end of the case, and the following week the relieving officer has the case up again for sanction?—Yes.

13942. That might continue week by week?—It might.

13943. And it might be within the knowledge of the guardians also that this will continue week by week and be urgent week by week?—It would be within the knowledge of the guardians, not necessarily that it was urgent, but that it was being treated as an urgent case.

uties of elieving ficer where pplicant uses indoor lief.

13944. (Mr. Booth.) Would the case be complicated if an order for the infirmary or the workhouse had been made, if the patient absolutely refused to take the relief in that form, and then continued to be in a state which needed relief to prevent death? Would that force the hands of the relieving officer, and of the board too, to maintain him outside?—I think in a case of that sort the relieving officer's responsibility still continues, and what he is always told is, he must watch the case to see that no serious harm results, and it does happen sometimes that you have very great difficulty of that sort, where a person ought to be in an infirmary and under treatment, but will not go in, and the relieving officer still has to see that no untoward results, or the least possible harm ensues to the person who obstinately refuses the relief which is best for him.

13945. Although they may prefer to die outside?—Yes.

roposed ower to mpulsorily move rtain cases work- ouse.

13946. (Mr. Loch.) Would you be in favour of a compulsory power to remove in cases which are unsuitable for out-relief?—If I can speak as an individual, I should say, yes.

13947. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Is not a case of sudden and urgent necessity under these circumstances reported to the medical officer, and does not his report come in with reference to whether relief is to be continued or not?—Only in cases of sickness; the doctor does not come in where a man asks for food.

13948. (Sir Samuel Provis.) It is the duty of the relieving officer to report the case at the next meeting of the guardians?—Yes.

Sudden and gent cessity," lief does ot require uardians' nction.

13949. Guardians are sometimes under the impression that their sanction is necessary to the relief so given, are they not?—Yes, they have been.

13950. But that is not so, in fact?—As a matter of fact, although the chairman would initial the column headed "approved," the mere initialling of that does not transfer the responsibility in any way from the relieving officer. The thing has been done before it came before the board, and the personal responsibility continues to be with the relieving officer.

ledical xamination f applicants r indoor lief in cotland.

13951. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) In Scotland in every case of indoor relief there is a medical examination and report almost at once, or as soon as it can be got. Is that not the case in England?—In indoor relief it is.

13952. In outdoor relief, is that not so?—No, unless the object of seeking the relief is the sickness of the man or some member of his family, or the need of medicine. In indoor relief the regular course is gone through. The inmate has to be seen and reported on by the medical officer within twenty-four hours of admission, or earlier if necessary, in every case.

Power of Guardians o give regular out-relief to he able- odied in xceptional ases, with anction f Local Government Board.

13953. (Mr. Bentham.) In the absence of an outdoor labour test for the able-bodied, this is the only means of relieving the able-bodied, outside the workhouse, is it not?—It really is. There is a better way under Article 10; there the cases are more likely to come under review, and the Board would have opportunities, if they thought fit, of criticising.

13954. (Mr. Loch.) Which would Article 10 be?—Article 10 of the Regulation Order.

13955. (Sir Samuel Provis.) That is, reporting the case to the Local Government Board as a special case?—"If the guardians shall, on consideration of the special circumstances"—it then requires them to report within twenty-one days under the Regulation Order.

13956. (Mr. Loch.) Did any of the London unions report under that Article?—The only one was Bermondsey as to which I had taken the responsibility (and I am quite prepared to support it) of suggesting that they should act under this Article. Instead of doing so, they wrote up and said they proposed to do so and so.

13957. Why should not the guardians have acted on that Article generally?—It would have been better, I think, if they had.

13958. By not acting on the Article they were really acting without supervision in that matter?—What I object to is that there was an unfair, as I think, responsibility thrown upon the relieving officers.

Desirability of Medical report on all applicants for relief.

13959. With regard to the point raised by Mr. Patten-MacDougall just now: In Scotland, as I understand it, there is not, technically at least, any able-bodied relief, but there are many men in the workhouse not unlike those that we should classify as able-bodied. Do you think that in those cases it would be desirable to have a medical report about able-bodied people who applied for relief, whether they applied for out-door relief or indoor relief?—Yes, I do not see why it should not. I fancy the guardians could have that now if they liked.

13960. You think it would be useful from the point of view of ascertaining really what the class of man is?—I think so.

13961. (Mr. Lansbury.) Have you not made a mistake about London unions?—Is it not true that Poplar at the very commencement of their giving sudden and urgent relief sent up a list of cases to the Local Government Board and got a reply that it was a matter for the auditor?—I am not sure. Possibly they did.

Power of Local Government Board to sanction irregular out-relief to the able-bodied under Art. 10 of Outdoor Relief Regulation Order.

13962. I know we did, as a matter of fact?—Very possibly you did. I have forgotten that. In that case you would have been reporting under Article 10, I think.

13963. I am under the impression that that was so?—I am only speaking from memory. I thought it was the other way, that they were reported as having been relieved by the relieving officer; and that consequently the reply was that it was a matter between the relieving officer and the auditor.

13964. (Mr. Loch.) Is that the technical answer that is given to a board of guardians when they report under Article 10, to throw the responsibility back on the auditor?—No, not so, if they report under Article 10; it says: "shall report the same and the grounds thereof to the Poor Law Board, the relief which may have been so given in such case by such guardians before an answer to such report shall have been returned by the said Board, shall not be deemed to be contrary to the provisions of this Order; and if the Poor Law Board shall approve of such departure, and shall notify such approval to the guardians that relief given in such case after such notification, so far as the same shall be in accordance with the terms and conditions of such approval, shall be lawful, anything in this Order to the contrary notwithstanding."

13965. (Mrs. Webb.) Is not Article 10 practically the same position as in the Prohibitory Order?—I think it is except that in the Prohibitory Order they must report within fifteen days, instead of twenty-one.

13966. In effect it is the same?—It is.

13967. (Mr. Loch.) Are there not three ways in which boards of guardians can give sudden or urgent necessity relief, that is to say, without asking for permission at all and give it; asking, as Poplar did apparently, by sending up a list and being referred to the auditor; and thirdly, Article 10?—Yes.

13968. Under Article 10, is there any control directly?—Except by the auditor, there is not.

13969. (Sir Samuel Provis.) When they sent up the list, did not they say that they had themselves given the relief, and they were referred to the auditor?—I almost think that is so.

13970. They were referred to the auditor; the relieving officer was giving the relief in case of sudden and urgent necessity, and the point was whether he could do it continuously?—The letter was sent to the Audit Department; I only saw it incidentally.

Responsibility of and checks on Relieving Officer in respect of relief given in "sudden and urgent necessity."

13971. (Mr. Nunn.) Do not the guardians have to approve what the relieving officers have done?—They do approve, but yet by approving they take no responsibility to themselves for what he has done.

13972. (Mr. Loch.) And the relieving officer may be surcharged?—Yes.

13973. (Mrs. Webb.) Is not that the result of the fact that the relieving officer practically steps into the shoes of the old overseer?—He does really.

13974. Who was the person responsible in law?—Yes.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

21 May 1906.

13975. That is the historical origin of the position?—Yes, the relieving officer is now in the position of the old overseer.

13976. That was not swept away in 1834?—He incurred the responsibility.

13977. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Let us take the duty of the relieving officer? It would be this, would it not, that in cases of sudden or urgent necessity he gives relief on his own responsibility?—Yes.

13978. That relief would be reported to the guardians in the Application and Report Book?—It would.

13979. The guardians might approve of it or disapprove of it as they thought fit?—Yes.

13980. But that would not in any way effect the legality of the action of the relieving officer?—No; he acts entirely on his own responsibility.

13981. He would be the person responsible and, supposing the relief to be unnecessary, he would be the person to be surcharged by the auditor?—Yes, he and not the guardians.

13982. He can only give relief, can he not, until the next meeting of the board of guardians?—That is so.

13983. If, therefore, he went on doing it, it might be a question whether that was within his power or not?—Yes, the guardians might question the propriety of his proceeding.

13984. And the propriety of his proceeding, if it is to be legally tested, must be tested before the auditor?—Yes.

13985. The guardians themselves not being responsible in the matter?—They are not responsible.

Surcharge on Relieving Officer in respect of sudden and urgent relief continuously given.

13986. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Is not the auditor thereby made a Court of Appeal against the action of the relieving officer, the auditor not seeing either the applicant or knowing the circumstances under which relief is given?—That has always occurred to me to be the difficulty. The probability is that if the auditor did surcharge a relieving officer he would be dealing with something which happened probably at least six months before, and, consequently, supposing he was not satisfied that the relieving officer was justified in doing what he did, it would be very difficult for him to prove the absence of sudden or urgent necessity.

13987. Have there been cases of surcharge of relieving officers under these conditions?—Yes, there has been one in Poplar; it is not settled yet.

13988. (Chairman.) Is that an individual case?—Yes, the auditor has disallowed the payment by one relieving officer of a small sum to what he regarded as a continuing case of sudden and urgent necessity. I do not know what precisely the position of the case is now, but it has not been settled, I think.

13989. (Mr. Loch.) Does it not follow, as a conclusion from this, that in connection with boards of guardians there are two jurisdictions, the jurisdiction of the relieving officer direct, and tempered as it were by the jurisdiction of the board of guardians itself?—Yes, it is to a great extent.

Position of Relieving Officer when instructed by Guardians to watch a case.

13990. (Mr. Phelps.) Is the position of the relieving officer different if he is instructed by the guardians to watch a case?—I think nothing, as far as I understand it, can relieve the relieving officer of responsibility for a particular case. He is responsible that the case comes to no harm, and nothing that the guardians can tell him to do affects it. The guardians may say: We offer the infirmary to this particular person, but that particular person may say: No, I will not go into the infirmary; and that particular person may be in a condition of either disease or dirt, serious or objectionable, but the relieving officer has still to see that no harm comes to that case, but he has no power to carry him off to the infirmary.

13991. My point of distinction is this: if he is told to watch the case it is his duty to visit the person, whereas if he is not, he may wait until he is applied to?—The question of watching the case, I take it, comes only after the guardians have dealt with it. He is required to watch a case where he is aware of the existence of want or need of assistance which has been refused in the particular form in which it was offered.

13992. Then it is his duty not to wait until he is applied to by the case?—Not, I think, a second time. If he has knowledge of a case of destitution or need, it is his business to see that no harm comes to that case as long as it remains chargeable. You cannot relieve him of that personal responsibility as far as I can see.

Qualifications of auditor for deciding legality of relief given.

13993. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) The auditor is an accountant in most cases and is not versed in Poor Law administration. Do you approve of the reference to an auditor of a case which really is one of the proper exercise of discretion in the giving of relief?—Whether one approves of it or no, he is there.

13994. I ask whether you do not think an appeal to, say, the Local Government Board would be more appropriate?—The auditor has to determine the propriety of the payment.

13995. The legality of the payment?—Yes.

13996. But this is a matter of discretion and propriety, not legality so much?—Yes, but having got the facts of the case, he has to deal with it, and he ought to be able to judge whether the case was one of legal relief or not; he would have to determine as to the suddenness or urgency of it.

13997. Is not that more a matter of propriety than of actual legality?—Perhaps it is.

13998. Therefore that is not a matter for an accountant so much as for an administrative body?—On the other hand, it always has been so.

13999. (Mr. Loch.) Is it possible for the auditor to go through all these cases case by case and come to a quasi judicial decision on them?—He might try to; whether it is possible, I cannot say.

14000. (Sir Samuel Provis.) He would take a test case?—Yes.

14001. (Sir Henry Robinson.) Are not a good many auditors barristers or solicitors?—A good many are, but I do not think it is a condition of their appointment.

14002. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The auditor would not go into a question of discretion; he would go into a question of law, whether the payment was legal or not. In a matter of discretion he would consider whether he could go behind the action of the individual officer?—That is so.

The relation of the inspectors with the Local Government Board.

14003. Now, coming to a different matter, with regard to inspectors, it is competent to an inspector, is it not, if he thinks it desirable, to suggest to the Board some particular action which he thinks it should take?—Certainly.

14004. Either in a particular case or generally?—Yes.

14005. It is also the practice, is it not, before any general action is taken in a matter, to consult the inspectors?—Yes.

14006. With regard to their general line of action, they make an annual report to the Board, do they not?—They do.

14007. Those reports are published in the annual report of the Board?—They are.

14008. So that each inspector sees what his brother inspectors are doing?—Yes, he can.

14009. And he knows what is going on in their districts?—Yes.

14010. Occasionally the inspectors have been summoned up to be consulted by the Board, have they not, upon matters which are of general interest?—Yes, they have.

14011. So that there is no sort of difficulty or hesitation as to full communication between the inspectors and the Board on any general matter affecting Poor Law administration?—None at all. I was only speaking of the meeting of the inspectors. I thought it would be a pleasant thing for them to do, and they might certainly obtain useful information from one another.

Proportion of electorate voting at local elections.

14012. (Mr. Loch.) Can a statement be submitted showing how far the local electorate actually vote at elections of guardians?—I hand in a summary of election returns relating to Greenwich, Hackney, Kensington, Marylebone, Poplar and Shoreditch. (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (R)).

14013. How far are those in receipt of borough employment relief on the register for the Parliamentary franchise?—The larger proportion, I should think, are on the register.

isfranchise-ent by lief.

14014. How far do paupers actually lose the franchise, having been on the register before receiving relief?—I have no precise information as to this.

14015. Should the present condition that the Parliamentary franchise is lost if medical relief with maintenance is received be adhered to, even if the law is now construed so as to exclude the factor of "maintenance" and to have on the register all who receive medical relief whether with or without maintenance?—I think it should be adhered to.

14016. Should all other paupers (except those specially exempted by statute) lose the franchise on receipt of relief?—I think they do lose the franchise.

umbers of
gitimate
d illegitiate births certain ondon
orkhouses.

14017. (Mr. Lansbury.) With regard to women, can you tell us what is the total of legitimate births in Metropolitan workhouses during the past year, and what was the total for a similar period ten years ago? And with regard to Poplar, can you specifically give the number of births for that union?—I am unable to answer your question in full, but I have the following figures:—Marylebone, births in workhouse for six months, legitimate, 15; illegitimate, 52; total 67. Poplar, legitimate, 16, illegitimate, 21; total 37. Hackney, legitimate, 23; illegitimate, 37; total 60. In this case the proportions were reversed in the previous six months, Michaelmas, 1905, namely, legitimate, 35; illegitimate, 24; total, 59. Bethnal Green, legitimate, 17; illegitimate, 10; total, 27. Holborn, legitimate, 27; illegitimate, 22, total 49. St. Pancras, legitimate, 21, illegitimate, 47; total, 68. Whitechapel, legitimate, 26; illegitimate, 56; total 82.

14018. Can you tell us the number of single women with illegitimate children chargeable throughout the Metropolis on any given days ten years ago, and the same on any given day last year? Would you also give us the same kind of figures with regard to Poplar?—I am afraid I have not material for replying to your question.

ffect
large milies on uperism.

14019. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) In your Report for 1900–1 you speak of immoderate families being responsible for pauperism fully as much as immoderate drinking. Is it not rather unhealthy families?—I should be inclined to say that in a large number of instances they become unhealthy because there are too many of them, and more than the parents can afford to feed, house, and generally maintain properly.

14020. Would you not think many persons over sixty suitable for pensions?—Some, perhaps, I will hardly say many.

uestion of
terioration
physique.

14021. Has not physique gone down? Would this account for the theory "too old at fifty"?—I should have thought that physique must have degenerated under present conditions of keeping everything alive that is born, and allowing it to reproduce itself, but this view is, I understand, not borne out by the Report of the Committee appointed to consider the subject.

roportion of ed work-use mates able look after emselves.

14022. In your 1894 Report you say the aged must be relieved in the workhouse, the reason being that they are not able to look after themselves and that medical care is required; but is not 2 per cent. as the proportion of those able to be relieved outside a very low estimate?—2 per cent., perhaps, is somewhat low, but I am inclined to question whether it would exceed 3 per cent.

ifficulty of assification work-
use.

14023. With regard to old people in the workhouses generally, do you believe in classification; is it possible in one building?—I do not think it possible to satisfactorily classify the different classes in one building.

ffect of shelters" certain
ondon
nions.

14024–26. Do not shelters help to manufacture paupers by attracting to London and accustoming to a casual sort of life? (Mr. Gardiner.) Can you state the effect of "shelters" on Poor Law relief in particular unions?—No doubt shelters attract weaklings of sorts to London. As to particulars of shelters; in six months the following number of applications were received from shelters in Marylebone:—Shaftesbury, 6; Church Army, 25; Salvation Army, 400; common lodging-houses, 71. In Greenwich the following number of persons were admitted from Carrington House to the workhouse, 231; to the infirmary, 74; of these 29 were reported removable. In the Strand Union the number of persons admitted to Bareyard workhouse in six months ending 31st January, 1906, from the Salvation Army, 272; and the Labour Tent, Church Army, 17; of these 26 were removed under justices' orders, and in 19 cases there was no evidence of any settlement.

14027. (Mr. Gardiner.) When you attend Boards of guardians or relief committees, do you find that the guardians in poorer unions regard the Poor Law as the means of relieving destitution, or of rendering charitable assistance to the distressed? Do you find that the guardians as a rule have any real knowledge of their work, the principles of the Poor Law, etc.?—The views of guardians with regard to the Poor Law vary, of course. Some say it is their duty to think first of the poor, others think it is their duty to think first of the ratepayer. I think guardians as a rule have knowledge of their work. Divergent views of Guardians as to their duties.

14028. (Mr. Nunn.) Can you trace the results of the case paper system in any better administration of the Poor Law unions where it is in use?—Paddington has nearly always been exemplary in relief matters. The case paper system was invented here. Its adoption at both Bethnal Green and Bermondsey was followed by a reduction in pauperism, and the same is expected to take place in Kensington where it has quite recently been adopted. Effect of the case-paper system on pauperism.

14029. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) In reference to question 4078, do you regard the present increase of pauperism in London as temporary?—I think we may look for a decrease in out-relief, but I question whether there is any likelihood of an appreciable diminution of the numbers in the infirmary or workhouse. Improbability of decrease in London's indoor pauperism.

14030. Can you give the percentage of deaths in Poor Law institutions in London as compared to the total number of deaths?—I will try and get this from the London County Council. (Subsequently sent. See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (8)). Percentage of deaths in Poor Law Institutions.

14031. (Mr. Lansbury.) Have you anything to do with the Metropolitan Asylums Board? Do you consider the affairs of that body wisely and economically managed?—On the whole I should say yes. Proposal to transfer duties of Metropolitan Asylums Board to County Council.

14032. Would you be in favour of the abolition of that board and the handing over to the County Council of all its duties?—I would not abolish it, though, as I have said elsewhere; I think its duties in relation to imbeciles and infectious diseases might be taken over by the County Council.

14033. (Mr. Nunn.) Have you any further suggestions as to a new terminology or classifications or definitions for descriptive purposes under a reformed "Poor" Law for example, able-bodied, "Poor" Law, "Poor" rate, "Relieving" officer, "adequate" relief, "destitution"?—I do not know that I have, though I think for the institutions occupied by the aged and infirm the "Poor's House" would be more appropriate than the workhouse." Suggested new Poor Law terminology for aged.

14034. (Mr. Gardiner.) How far have the dock strike, the Employers' Liability Act, etc., and the slackened rate of increase in building (due, perhaps, to increased cost of labour and materials) affected the number of applications for relief in the judgment of certain selected relieving officers? (Mr. Lansbury.) Can you give us any evidence as to the conditions of employment at the docks and wharves since the dock strike, that is, as to the number and kind of men engaged as regular hands; also the number engaged in casual occupations?—Mr. Craig, superintendent relieving officer, St. Pancras, can give valuable information about this, and probably others also.

14035. (Mr. Gardiner.) Can you give any evidence to show the result of the introduction of machinery? Has the extension of the employment of boys and girls diminished the demand for adult labour, and, if so, with what effect on the percentage of pauperism?—I can give no evidence as regards machinery. Boys and girls, no doubt, oust to some extent their elders, but I cannot say the precise effect of this on pauperism.

14036. (Mr. Loch.) Can you say whether the 4s. grant for lunatics acts well, or whether some other system for subvention, if subvention is necessary, should be devised?—I doubt if the 4s. grant has the effect in London, as assumed in the country, of inducing guardians to shift senile dements to asylums. The whole question of subventions and common fund charges is dealt with in the report by the Local Government and Museums Committee dated 16th and 30th March, See London County Council agenda for 10th April, 1905, page 4, paragraph 3 and passim.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

21 May 1906.

Number of pauper lunatics in London.

14036 (a). Can you give the statistics of lunacy in the county of London and West Ham; their number, cost of maintenance, cost of buildings, etc., and the number of pauper lunatics?—I would refer you to the report of the Local Government and Museums Committee; statistical abstract, London County Council, 1905, Vol. VIII., return 24 and 26 pages, 34 and 35, which gives the total number of lunatics in workhouses 1904–5 as 6,539, in asylums, 17,238. I cannot give figures as to cost of buildings, etc., or maintenance.

Effect of compounding for rates.

14037. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Is not compounding a great reason in West End of London for indifference to the whole citizen life of the Metropolis?—I think there is no doubt of that. There are tens of thousands of people living in flats who pay their rates in the rent and consequently seem to imagine that the rates are of no importance to them.

Relation between rates and rent.

14038. (Mr. Lansbury.) I understand you are not in favour of compounding for rates. Is it a fact that the rents are sometimes higher in a low-rated district than in a district with high rates? For instance, can you put in a return showing the average rate per room for any given street in Whitechapel and Poplar respectively?—I am sorry I cannot give a return of room rating, but rents are certainly sometimes higher in low-rated districts than in high-rated districts. Mr. Craig told me that when he went from Poplar to St. Pancras, the higher rents in the latter about balanced the difference in the rates.

14039. (Mr. Gardiner.) What has been the effect of the out-relief policy on friendly societies in London?—I have not been able to get any precise information as to this.

14039 (A). (Mr. Nunn.) Can you indicate any special lines of inquiry for tracing a casual connection between the friendly societies' movement and pauperism in London?—I fear, I cannot help much in suggesting any special lines of inquiry.

Question of making the Metropolitan Asylums Board the authority for phthisis.

14040. (Mr. Nunn.) Can you describe any methods of co-operation between the Poor Law and the municipal authorities, and charitable agencies, for the treatment of poor persons suffering from phthisis, and the prevention of the spread of the disease. Would you regard the intervention of the Metropolitan Asylums Board as desirable?—I have no intimate knowledge of any instance of co-operation of this kind. The Metropolitan Asylums Board have, I think, already as much to do as they can be expected to do well. The authority which should deal with phthisis should be, I think, municipal rather than Poor Law.

Proportion of electorate voting at Guardians' elections.

14041. (Chairman.) You have handed in a return of persons who vote at Poor Law elections in London?—Yes, a return of the elections of guardians for 1904 in Greenwich Hackney, Kensington, Poplar, Shoreditch and Marylebone.

14042. Have you the percentages worked out?—Yes.

14043. Perhaps you will state them each in turn?—In Greenwich, in the Marsh Ward, the number of electors was 2,362, and the number of votes recorded was 576: percentage of voters to electorate, 24·4. Perhaps it will be enough if I give the percentages. In the South Ward, the percentage of voters to the electorate was 39·8. In St. Paul's, Deptford, in the North Ward, the percentage was 49·2, and in the South Ward 32·4. At a bye-election in the South Ward of Greenwich the percentage of voters to electorate was 49·2. In the union of Hackney, in the Hackney parish, the percentage of voters to electorate was 24; in Homerton, 17·5; in the Kingsland Ward, 20·6; and there were twelve other wards uncontested. In Kensington, in the St. Charles Ward, the percentage of voters to electorate was 16; in the Golborne Ward, 13·3, and in the Earl's Court Ward 26·3. In Poplar, the North West Ward, no contest; in the West Ward the percentage was 45·8; in the East Ward 35·1; and in the remaining wards there was no contest. In Bromley, in the North West Ward it was 35 per cent.; and in the South West Ward there was no contest. The North East Ward, 46 per cent.; Central, 46·2 per cent., and South East, 47 per cent. In Bow the percentages were: North West, no contest; West, no contest; Central, 34·3, and South, 36·2. Then when we come to Shoreditch we find some very different figures: Moorfields, no poll taken; in the Church Ward the percentage of voters was 96·5; Hoxton, 80·2; Wenlock, 67·1; Whitemoor, 49·7; Kingsland, 63·2; Haggerston, 64·3, and Acton, 58·4. In Marylebone: the Church Ward was 73·5 per cent.; the Langham Ward, 49·5 per cent.; and the Cavendish Ward 57 per cent. Those are all I have collected.

Proposed power of detention of unmarried mothers.

14044. As regards illegitimacy, it has been represented to us by previous witnesses that there is a certain class of girls not exactly feeble-minded, but very near it, who are constantly returning to the maternity wards. It has been suggested that after one or two births there should be some control exercised over these girls. Do you agree?—I do. There is no doubt there is a deplorable number of cases of that sort; poor creatures who are really not compos mentis, who are victims of others.

14045. Assuming it was thought desirable to exercise some power of detention over them, would you go further as regards unmarried women, who are in possession of their wits, but who constantly resort to these maternity wards for the birth of their children?—I rather hesitate to give an opinion upon that. I think it is a very difficult subject.

Effect of "shelters" and distress funds in London.

14046. You are clearly of opinion that the erection of a certain class of shelters attracts weaklings to London?—Yes, I think there is no question of that.

14047. These weaklings come, and I assume that a certain proportion of them stay?—Yes.

14048. You are clear on that point; they do not come and go; a certain proportion remain?—Such are the attractions of this great Metropolis that I am afraid a person of that class who once finds himself in London is never going to leave it permanently. He may go out of London for hop-picking or fruit-picking, or to the seaside for the season, but he finds his way back to London for the winter.

14049. From time to time funds have been raised to meet distress in London; in your opinion, have they had the same effect as shelters; have they attracted weaklings?—I am afraid so.

14050. And, so far as you know, a certain proportion of those remain?—I am afraid so.

14051. In the case of any fund that is raised, in your judgment very great care is required in its administration?—Certainly. You may remember that in distributing the money raised for Mr. Long's scheme, to begin with, a condition was that, where possible, six months' or a year's residence in the locality should be clearly established, to prevent, as far as possible, the incursion of newcomers of that sort.

14052. Was that fairly successful?—I think it was. Of course, a good deal depends upon the vigilance of the distress committees; but I think in most instances they have been very particular.

Residence qualification under Unemployed Workmen Act.

14053. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Under the Unemployed Workmen Act there must be a residence, must there not, in London, for 12 months?—Yes.

Suggested new Poor Law terminology.

14054. You have been asked a question about the names of workhouses: have there been suggestions in your district that the name should be changed, so as not to use the word "workhouse"?—Yes, there have. There have been suggestions that they should be called Homes of Rest, Homes for the Aged, and so on.

14055. They have not actually been adopted, have they?—No.

Compounding for rates: evils thereof, difficulties of abolishing, and report of Local Taxation Commission.

14056. With regard to compounding, you are probably aware that there is a good deal of difficulty in collecting the rates where there is no compounding?—Yes.

14057. That matter was gone into by the Local Taxation Commission, who recommended that the system of compounding should be continued?—Did they? I suppose they realised the extreme difficulty of direct collection.

14058. They recognise the extreme difficulty of collecting the rates, and give instances showing the difficulty there would be supposing there was no compounding; but it has been suggested that the difficulty of collecting the rates, where there are shifting tenancies, might be got over if the rates were collected more frequently, say fortnightly or weekly, like the rents are. Have you ever considered that point at all, or has it ever come before you in any way?—I have considered it in this way. I have made inquiries of the collector in my own parish and he says it would not be impossible, but it would require obviously an increase in the collecting staff, and in any case you would have to allow for a certain amount of leakage. I may say at once that in 1894, I think it was, the Deptford Borough issued a circular—I do not know whether it was to all of the boroughs, but they communicated with Paddington—and the gist of their circular was that they had been in the habit of allowing a 25 per cent. rebate, under the Act of 1869, and they thinking it was too much, proposed in future to allow not more than 10 per cent. to any compounder under the Act. The Paddington Borough Council gave notice to various owners or representatives of property who had hitherto been receiving, I think, 20 per cent., saying that in future they would receive only 10 per cent; and the reply was: "Very well, you may collect for yourself." Briefly stated, I think they have come to the conclusion now that 10 per cent. is the outside it would be worth their while to allow to any owner compounding under that Act. One could understand that it would depend a good deal on the number of industrial dwellings there were in the district, and on the number of weekly lodgers; but I think it must be recognised that, if you do undertake to collect yourself, you must make a proportionate increase in the staff. On the other hand, it always seems to me there ought to be no particular difficulty in bringing home, even to weekly tenants, what the rates are doing. I do not know whether legislation would be necessary, but, supposing it is, I think it would be useful legislation, to the effect that in what corresponds to the rent book, every person paying his rent ought to be entitled to see, on the front page of it, what the rates were at that time, and what they were at the last assessment; and it is I think generally agreed to be desirable that everybody should, if possible, know something about the way the rates are going: they are generally going up.

14059. A very frequent collection of rates would involve a considerable increase in the staff?—Yes.

14060. Have you at all considered whether the saving in not allowing a composition would be sufficient to pay the increased staff?—Yes, I should say that you would probably find that experienced persons in that department in a borough would tell you that the cost of increasing their staff for direct collection would not be equal to 25 per cent. of the rate. Now they can allow up to 30 per cent., but in a good number of cases until quite recently 25 per cent. was the abatement. I think you will find that any experienced collector will tell you that the cost of the increase of the staff will be less than that percentage of the total amount collected.

14061. They would not save all that, because the larger allowance is only made where the rates are paid whether the houses are occupied or not?—Yes.

14062. Supposing there was no compounding, they would only get in the rates when the tenements were occupied?—True.

14063. You must make an allowance for that?—Certainly, that is a very important point.

14064. You think the saving on the compounding would be sufficient probably?—I am inclined to think it would. I was not aware that the Commission had reported so directly against it. They must have more evidence and knowledge than I can pretend to. I am only speaking of what I have heard from conversations with men who have had practical experience.

14065. I will read the passage: "But, however desirable in principle it might be to abolish compounding, it is generally agreed that the practical difficulties of collecting and enforcing payment from the large numbers of the poorer classes in the large towns who are weekly tenants and frequently moving from one tenement to another are insuperable. This view has been endorsed by officials of local authorities in large boroughs, and some of them have suggested that the limit of rateable value below which compounding is allowed should be slightly raised. Witnesses of this character have also expressed the opinion that the same system of compounding should apply to all rates subject to composition, though the adoption of the system should remain optional with the local authorities." ?—They were talking apparently there rather of the cost than the moral effect of direct collection.

14066. They realise that also I think, because they begin by saying: "The system of compounding has been frequently condemned on the ground that those who have the right to vote for the election, or become members, of local authorities entrusted with the raising and expenditure of money derived from rates, should pay rates directly themselves, and we entirely concur with this view"?—Yes. I think I have said before, and I should like to emphasise the fact that, apart altogether from this question of compounding, it is very much to be regretted that many well-to-do people, who are living in flats and paying their rates in their rents, seem really to be under the impression that they do not pay any rates at all; they never see a demand note and know nothing of local administration and its cost.

14067. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) In the case of an application for relief on the ground that the applicant is suffering from tuberculosis or phthisis, or that any of his family is suffering from it, and he desires relief for them, is the relief given to them now Poor Law relief?—Yes, I think so. In one or two infirmaries they have made special provision for open-air treatment of those cases.

Proposal to make treatment of phthisis a "public health" matter.

14068. In no case is phthisis or tuberculosis, as far as you are aware, treated as a public health question and handed over to the public health authority?—Not at present in London.

14069. No step has been taken towards that?—No, it has been talked about a good deal, but nothing has been done yet, I think.

14070. How does it strike you, do you think that would be a proper step and that workhouses and the Poor Law authorities should be relieved entirely of the care of the cases of tuberculosis?—I think it might be so. I think I have already suggested it. I have always understood that it is generally admitted by the advocates of the open-air treatment of phthisis, that the possibility of success depends very largely upon the early stage of the disease in which a person comes under that treatment, and so far as my experience is concerned, those cases that are treated in Poor Law infirmaries are very seldom, so to say, caught soon enough, and therefore if special hospitals are to be established for phthisis, they ought to be established rather by the municipal authorities, with the arrangement that the guardians could, if necessary send patients there.

14071. Phthisis now being recognised as an infectious or an understanding disease?—Yes.—I think that if any special provision is to be made it should be made rather by municipal than Poor Law authorities.

14072. And the Poor Law authority should be relieved of all cases of that kind?—Yes, they should be able, where necessary or desirable, to send their cases to this special hospital.

Return as to London "ins and outs."

14073. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to the ins and outs, have you been able to get any return on the subject?—Yes, I have a return of the ins and outs. As a matter of fact I have very voluminous lists, but I can give a summary of the total number. I have regarded as ins and outs for the purpose of this return the inmates who have to give 168 hours notice of discharge. They are in varying numbers, but the total of all classes in London at the date of this return was 908, and they are of all ages, that is the remarkable thing, some are quite old people of seventy or eighty, and there are a good many over sixty.

14074. Who have been in and out in this way?—Yes, I assume they are confirmed ins and outs, because the guardians have thought it desirable to give them the maximum detention.

14075. Might we have that return put in in some detail?—I shall hand in the summary and shall be pleased to furnish you with further particulars from the lists if desired. (For Summary, See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. VII. (T)).

Proposed increased detention of "ins and outs" and its difficulties.

14076. That raises the further question, do you think that the evil will be remedied by a yet longer detention?—I think powers of detention should be extended.

14077. Could it be dealt with under the Vagrancy Act, or some statute as a better method, that is to say to be dealt with as a kind of offence?—Yes, but the difficulty of course is, as I say, that amongst those on the list there are so many quite old people. It is difficult to know what to do with an old person of over seventy, who insists on going out.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

21 May 1906.

14078. You say they are of all sorts?—Yes.

14079. Supposing we take the other sorts, could not they be dealt with?—Yes, the younger ones.

14080. If there were an exception made on the basis of age, we should meet the difficulty?—Yes.

14081. Do you think the kind of treatment that is laid down in the Vagrancy Act is really applicable to this?—No, I should say that I had in mind that those of the younger age would be, if not adequately, more satisfactorily dealt with in some sort of separate institution, as I have suggested, where the conditions should be continuous, though not necessarily very severe work, a very moderate diet, and strict discipline if the legislature will confer it, with an increased power of detention. I am assuming that some of those I have in mind are capable of reform and improvement and setting-up again.

14082. Would you be in favour of a power of detention adjustable to the reform or apparent reform of the person?—Yes, I think that would be a very good way of arranging it.

14083. You would rather not adopt the power of the Vagrancy Act, but something better and new?—In all these cases, I think, you must have public opinion behind you more or less. I think you would be more likely to have their support if it was known that there was an endeavour to re-establish where possible.

Proposed detention of unmarried mothers.

14084. Now, with regard to the case of unfortunate women who come in and give birth to children in the workhouse, would you be in favour of a medical examination of the persons to show whether they were feeble minded or not, and then, as soon as possible, the removal of the case to another place altogether, or, to put the alternative, would you prefer that such cases should come into a different door or a different department to a normal workhouse, received into a separate institution, and so dealt with?—I think the latter would be the better alternative. They would be under restraint. I take it the conditions of their relief would be different to those of ordinary able-bodied persons, and so on, they would be treated with consideration.

14085. I am speaking purely of the defective. Would you send them to an institution outside, other than the workhouse, when they were better and could more or less look after their own children?—I suppose it would be desirable that you should have grades or conditions; if you found individual cases improving and likely to be able to take care of themselves, you would deal with them accordingly.

14086. What would the Board of guardians be able to pay for such cases?—I suppose they might pay for cases of that sort, they might be regarded as coming under that section of the Act of 1876 which enables the guardians to contribute to institutions which are rendering useful aid in the relief of the poor.

14087. What would be the weekly sum paid, 10s. or 12s.?—I could not say that.

14088. One of the great difficulties has been to get the guardians to send the cases, because of the payment and, even though the payment may be comparatively small, if it is rather higher than the normal, as it must be in these cases, because the child and the mother have to be cared for, a difficulty is put in the way?—I quite see that, but it appears to me that some special treatment of that kind is very desirable, that means ought to be taken whereby guardians practically would have no choice; they would have to pay what was really a reasonable sum for the special care and treatment.

14089. What the result is of treating these women on the lines I have suggested has never come before the board?—I think not. I think we have no experience of that at present.

Main country routes of London vagrants.

14090. To take another question with regard to vagrants, have you ever made an investigation in the winter part of the year of the number of vagrants in the vagrant wards in the neighbourhood of London and on the main roads to London?—No, I have not made any special investigation recently, but I think it may be said to be common knowledge, or it is at any rate within the knowledge of the visiting officers appointed by the Board, that there are certain periods of migration in the early autumn and the late autumn, in which the vagrant wards in the direction of Kent, for instance, and in fact many directions, are temporarily occupied by the migratory casual leaving London for a period, and later on, we will say in October and November, you will find them coming back again along the same route.

14091. There has not been published by any Committee or the Board any document showing what those are?—No.

14092. Would it be possible to make an inquiry on that point by going through the books of the casual ward?—I suppose you could get the numbers returned in any or every casual ward in the country on a given night or for a series of nights.

14093. But the examination of the books in the neighbourhood at particular times of the year would follow it up, would it not?—Yes; it would be very interesting, I think. You would not get much more than the numbers. Of course, in statements by vagrants you have to take a good deal on trust.

14094. Of course, all you could say is that the vagrant said that he was on the way to London?—To be sure, and you have to accept what he said as to where he slept the night before and all the rest of it.

Effect of lunatic gr

14095. With regard to the 4s. grant for lunatics, are you in favour of the continuance of that method? Do you think it is desirable, so far as London is concerned?—As I think I have said in my evidence before, it seems to me that the grant is hardly sufficient in London to be a temptation to send the cases away.

14096. You mean it would be in a case where living was cheaper, but not here?—No, I think in the country it has frequently been alleged that the 4s. grant has been an inducement to guardians to get rid of troublesome cases, senile dements, and that class of case who help to fill up the beds in a lunatic asylum, which might very much better have been occupied by really cureable cases. If that was what you had in your mind in asking the question, with regard to London, I do not think it operates in London; to begin with, there is the Asylums Board's institutions, to which they send senile dements.

14097. Are there not a very large number of senile dements sent by the Poor Law authorities to the country?—From London?

14098. Yes?—I do not know that there are. I know there are a great number of cases.

14099. Do we have the return?—No, we do not get returns. In the Statistical Abstract for London, 1905, you will find a return of the number of lunatics in workhouses on a given day, I think, and the number in asylums. There are a very large number in workhouses—some thousands—but I do not know that amongst these there would be a large number of short-period lunatics. I do not think they transfer a large number.

14100. You have no return?—No, I have no evidence; it is only a surmise.

14101. There are no returns saying how many are sent by the Poor Law authorities?—No, I think in that book there are particulars relating to pauper lunatics, and in the Appendix they give you lunatics in workhouses, and pauper lunatics in asylums. You will see that the pauper lunatics in asylums considerably exceed those in the workhouses.

14102. That is a sign that the Act is being used in such a way as to throw a large number of paupers, who are lunatics, into these institutions, and it is suggested that that is because of the 4s. grant?—I can quite understand its operating in the country, but I should not have thought it would have operated very considerably in London.

14103. The London figures, I fancy—we may take it that these come under the head of pauper lunatics chargeable to London unions—shows a continuous increase in the items "in asylums and licensed houses," and also there are a large number of imbeciles; the total number of lunatics and imbeciles go from 18,000 of 1895, to 19,000 in 1896, and nearly 20,000 in 1897, and there are 24,000 in 1905?—Yes.

14104. Showing a very large increase?—Yes.

14105. Is not it likely that that is due partly to this system?—It may be.

Proposed new authority for dealing with defective class.

14106. Do you think it would be well to have all the defective classes dealt with by a single department, including possibly the lunatics, that is to say, the idiots, imbeciles for whom there is very little provision, and those who come under the general term feeble-minded ?—I do not see why they should not all be dealt with by one authority.

Possibility of abolishing compounding.

14107. You disapprove of compounding, at any rate among what may be called the upper classes ?—I think it is regrettable.

14108. With regard to the Report of the Local Taxation Commission on the subject, you have not, I suppose, been through the evidence ?—No, I confess I have not.

14109. So that since that Report was issued you would not know whether there have been other experiments made with a view of ensuring, as you suggest, that the tenant might know the rate, and pay it in some form, knowing how much he paid ?—I have heard of experiments of that sort, but I have no personal knowledge of them.

14110. If those experiments were proved practically to be advisable, then your wish would be fulfilled, would it not ?—I think you cannot very well go further than that. The point is that every individual, rich or poor, should have—they will not take the trouble to look for themselves—automatically brought under their notice what is happening with regard to the rates.

14111. From the point of view of the officials who have to collect the rates, a simplification by which they can deal with one man instead of twenty or fifty is a great advantage ?—Of course it is.

14112. Therefore the test of the matter would not be a simplification of his own methods to the maximum, but rather what was good for the people at large ?—Quite so, I agree.

Deterrency of relief to women.

14113. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) You say you think all paupers lose the franchise on receiving relief; that of course does not apply to women, does it ?—No.

14114. Therefore, there are no deterrent conditions on out-relief to women ?—Not in respect of the franchise.

14115. There is no substitute for that, is there ?—That is so.

14116. Would this position, do you think, depend on the assumption that women form a class which is naturally dependent ?—I might assume that they were so naturally, but I do not know whether they are in fact in these days. They are very well able to take care of themselves for the most part, I think.

14117. I quite agree with you; but if that were generally recognised, the economic position of women would be greatly improved, would it not ?—Probably, yes.

14118. You cannot really make outdoor relief deterrent to women by any means, can you ?—You cannot give less relief ?—No, you cannot.

14119. I do not know whether that is the motive of the guardians in giving inadequate relief, but it is obviously a wrong way to do it ?—I agree.

14120. So that, as a matter of fact, you cannot apply the law now to women in the same way that you can to men in respect to out-door relief ?—No.

14121. Do you think this would be an argument for extending the franchise to women ?—It might be used as such.

Number of aged persons suitable for out-relief or pensions.

14122. (Miss Hill.) Mr. Russell Wakefield asked you whether you would not think that many persons over sixty were suitable for pensions; how did you understand that question ? Is not a pension simply the same thing as outdoor relief, or how would you distinguish a pension from outdoor relief ? When you answered that question, did you mean to say how many people would be able to live out of the house without the care of a nurse and so on ?—That is what I rather thought of.

14123. Then might not the words "outdoor relief" be substituted for "pensions" ?—You see I must not interfere with the question.

14124. I only wanted to know how you understood it; I was not proposing to alter it. Very often I do not see the distinction between pensions and outdoor relief ?—Possibly some of the old people who are receiving out-relief might be suitable persons for pensions, if there was an existing fund from which the money could be provided.

14125. A pension to a person is outdoor relief, is it not ?—Hardly.

14126. I do not mean a pension for services rendered, or anything of that kind ?—At present, as far as I am aware, you may say that outdoor relief amounts in effect to a pension; but assuming that pensions generally were provided for, a condition would be that disfranchisement would not follow.

Possibility of abolishing compounding.

14127. Then with regard to the question of compounding; the percentage allowed by law is 15 per cent., and, therefore, if any borough offers less than that, the acceptance of it is dependent on the owner's agreement to it; that is so; is it not ?—I think it is not quite that. I think that under the Act relating to compounding, when the owner agrees to be responsible for the rate whether the tenement is occupied or not, the rating authority can allow as much as 30 per cent.

14128. Leaving out of question the allowance for let or unlet, which is quite a different point, if they make compounding compulsory in any parish, they are obliged by the Act to give 15 per cent. are they not ?—Yes, I think so.

14129. All landlords can get their rents collected for 5 per cent.—that is the common price, is it not ?—Not being a landlord myself, I cannot speak from experience, but I believe that is so.

14130. Supposing that any local authority wished to promote the intelligent education of the voter, they might conceivably collect weekly or fortnightly, and still have a good deal to go upon for either losses or profits to the rate, for they need not pay more than 5 per cent. ?—The extra cost of the weekly collection would be more than covered by the percentage now given.

14131. It would be covered three times over, would it not ?—Very possibly that may be so.

14132. Therefore, I am unable to see on what ground the Royal Commission on Local Taxation decided that it would be impossible, although it may be difficult; and I think it very important that the facts should be well before the people. Then the compounding allowance above the 15 per cent. is either for let or unlet, which of course must vary very much in the district ?—Yes, undoubtedly it would.

14133. Or else it is a matter of favour; they need not give, if they like, more than the 15 per cent., but the 15 per cent. they are bound to give ?—Yes. Anything above 15 per cent. is voluntary on the part of the rating authority.

14134. And anything below 15 per cent. is a matter of agreement on the part of the owner ?—Yes.

14135. Has there been any plan suggested that you are aware of, with regard to the richer people who do not pay rates direct ?—No.

14136. I have never heard of any suggestion as to how it could be brought to bear upon them ?—In my humble opinion, it is quite as important that those well-to-do people should, whether they wish it or not, know how things are going with regard to the rates.

14137. It has never been proposed that votes should be dependent on the production of receipts for rates I am afraid, but I should like to see that very much ?—It would be a very good way of meeting the point.

Number of persons relieved by boroughs on the Parliamentary register.

14138. In answering a question put to you by Mr. Loch, "How far are those in receipt of borough employment relief, on the register for the Parliamentary franchise," you said you thought the larger proportion are on the register; that means that there are more on the register than are off it, does it not ?—Yes, I should think that would be the case in the matter of borough employment.

14139. Have you made any tests at all of that ?—No, I have not.

14140. You have not inquired into any number of cases in order to ascertain what proportion would be on the register, and what proportion not ?—No, I have not.

14141. This is merely a conjecture on your part then ?—Yes.

Classification by workhouses.

14142. With regard to Mr. Russell Wakefield's question about classification, if I understand your answer, you think it is not possible to classify satisfactorily the different classes in one building at the present time. Are we to understand from that answer that you are in favour of classification by separate institutions, or classification in the same buildings if it be possible?—I can imagine instances where classification as between the aged and the able-bodied might be possible, but certainly in any large workhouse I do not think it can be satisfactorily provided for. It is that belief which has induced me to desire to see a separate establishment or separate establishments in which the able-bodied class should be provided for distinctly and separately from the aged and infirm.

Mr. Henry Lockwood

21 May 1906.

14143. Do you mean that if they had room, it is not desirable to classify them separately on the same side?—I do not think you can satisfactorily deal with the able-bodied class unless you have them entirely by themselves. That is my feeling.

14144. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to old age, do you think it better to have a separate institution, as they have at Woolwich, for old people of good character?—I do. I know that there are differences of opinion on that subject. You have instanced Woolwich, and I am quite prepared to say that I am responsible for the existence of that institution—it is called Firs Lodge—and the fact that a certain number of old women are provided for there. When there was a question of the acquisition of this particular property, the workhouse generally was crowded more or less continually, and there was the consequent difficulty of which I have spoken in other cases, of dealing satisfactorily with all classes. I advocated the acquisition by the guardians of this particular place, with a view to providing for classification in a separate institution such as was provided, rather than endeavouring ineffectually to carry it out in the existing workhouse.

14145. It enables you to give the old people far more liberty?—Yes, if it is desirable.

14146. If you had them in the same institution, it would be rather difficult to make great distinctions between one person and another with regard to going out in the week, would it not?—That is one of the great difficulties. I cannot conceive myself one institution, in which you could possibly provide for the classification which in my mind would be ideal, that is to say, where not only should the work be different, and the hours different, but the food should be different and everything else should be entirely different as between the several classes. You cannot do that in one institution where you have several classes grouped together, each one seeing what the other is doing and receiving.

Difference between out-relief and old age pensions.

14147. With regard to Miss Hill's questions about pensions, would you not say that the characteristic of a pension as compared with out-door relief is that it cannot be withdrawn, and that in all the pension schemes in the colonies it is given once for all to an old person, and is never withdrawn?—I do not know how that would be in practice, but certainly there is this difference between a pension and relief. It is true that a person has a right to relief, but he or she has no right to say what particular form the relief shall take, whereas in the case of a pensioner the pension has been acquired by service of some kind, and it is inalienable, I take it.

14148. The theory of pensions in the colonies is that the person has paid in rates and taxes an insurance against old age, and receives in return a pension exactly as he would if he put it into an insurance company?—I do not know what the system in the colonies is, but I can understand that that would be the theory and the principle of pensions as distinguished from relief.

14149. It is the consciousness of the persons' feeling that they have paid for the pension that makes the difference?—No doubt that would be so.

Improbability of decrease in London indoor pauperism.

14150. In reply to Mr. Russell Wakefield's question about the present increase of pauperism in London, you say you do not think "there is any likelihood of an appreciable diminution of the numbers in the infirmary or workhouse"; do you differentiate between the infirmary and the workhouse, and is it in the infirmary that you expect the increase?—I am afraid that there is not likely to be a diminution in either. Probably the numbers in the infirmaries will be more likely to keep high than the numbers in the workhouse. I have spoken of the specially improved conditions of relief of recent years, and I think that those improved conditions are more noticeable in the infirmary perhaps than in the workhouse.

Decreased deterrency of Medical Relief.

14151. Do you anticipate that presently the Poor Law infirmary will be completely relieved from any stigma of pauperism, and that therefore we shall all go into one when we require medical attendance and nursing?—I do not know how far the question of stigma may affect the question, but I suppose it has something to do with it. People do not realise that going into a Poor Law infirmary is really accepting Poor Law relief, and that consequently disfranchisement follows. As I have said before, the conditions of relief in a Poor Law infirmary are so excellent in every way nowadays, that a good many people who possibly in ordinary circumstances would make shift to provide for themselves, have little or no hesitation in availing themselves of that sort of relief.

Question of treatment of all infectious disease by non-Poor Law Authority.

14152. Do you think, for instance, with regard to phthisis as well as the ordinary infectious complaints, it is desirable that there should not be any stigma upon going into such an institution?—I do not know that had that in my mind when I was answering Mr. Nunn's question about phthisis. I was thinking only of what was probably the best way of dealing with phthisis under the open-air treatment. I take it that in order that the open-air treatment should have satisfactory results, it is very important that the case should be so dealt with in the earlier stages of the disease.

14153. That is to say, you would put phthisis on exactly the same basis as scarlet fever?—I do not see why you should not. All cases of scarlet fever at the present moment, I take it, are dealt with by the Asylums Board.

14154. And there is no stigma there; on the contrary there is compulsion to accept it?—True.

14155. And you would rather extend that to phthisis?—I see no objection to its extension to phthisis.

14156. Supposing it were discovered that other diseases were directly or indirectly infectious, would you suggest that we should extend that principle?—It appears to me that if you once establish that a disease is infectious, and that it is desirable in the interests of the community that it should be isolated and dealt with separately as soon as possible, then I think you might say that the question of infectiousness would become one in respect to which you will have to consider whether it should be dealt with by the Poor Law authorities or by some independent authority.

14157. Would you extend that principle to what you may call infectious mental states? I mean to say, you might get a person who infects a whole street, or at any rate, a whole household, with very disagreeable characteristics; would you put him into an institution, but relieve him from the stigma of pauperism?—I have never got so far as to consider mental infection.

14158. We have got lunacy and imbecility dealt with in that way on the one hand, and we have got infectious diseases and presently phthisis dealt with in that way on the other hand; and there would be a great many diseases which require as much isolation as lunacy or scarlet fever in a sense. Do you look forward to the extension of that principle—speaking practically and without laughing—to all such people who are injurious to the rest of the community?—I think if you could get public opinion to realise the advantage of some such process as that, it might be done; but I doubt whether you will ever be able to do it. I think in itself it might be advantageous.

14159. We are rather creeping towards it—lunacy on the one side, and infectious diseases on the other?—Yes—and we are including phthisis now.

The incidence of rates as between landlord and tenant.

14160. Then with regard to compounding; is it proved from an economic point of view that if you lower rates of you lower rent? Is not rent determined by the number of people who are applying for housing accommodation on a given site?—Yes.

14161. Therefore, if you lowered the rates, the landlord would get that amount in additional rent, because rates and rent are taken together?—One feels that he does do that, and what one wishes is that the tenant might know really how much of that is going into the landlord's pocket.

14162. How does it affect me as a tenant if my rates are lowered and my landlord by so much raises my rent? I do not care as a tenant, but I would rather pay it to the municipality ?—Still, you know where it is going, so to say.

14163. No, I do not really; although in the one case it goes into the landlord's pocket, and in the other case it goes to the municipality who gives me something for it ?—If you are paying the whole amount direct to the landlord, you really do not know what proportion goes to the one and what proportion to the other.

14164. All I want to suggest is that it makes no difference to me if my rates are lowered and my rent goes up by so much. The alternative to me is that either I pay so much to the landlord, or I pay the same amount, half to the landlord and half, say, to the County Council, who give me something for it ?—That may be so.

14165. Therefore I have no interest as an occupier whether the money goes altogether to the landlord, or partly to the landlord and partly to the rate-levying authority ?—I do not quite see that. You have to pay the same amount in either case, of course.

14166. I have to pay a certain amount to live on a certain site, and if the rates are lowered, I have to pay that much more to my landlord. That is the economic theory of it, is it not ?—Yes.

14167. Therefore, as an occupier it suits me better to pay it as rates for which I get services, than to pay it in rent for which I get nothing ?—Yes, except that the rate being included in the rent paid, is paid more or less under the system of compounding, and so far as the rent-payer is concerned, it is paid blindly; I mean to say, he does not necessarily know where it is going. But if an arrangement is made by which he knows that so much goes in this direction, and so much in that—even though he may say in the end "I do not care; I pay no more or no less than I did before"—still there is an advantage, I think, in knowing how much is so paid that you get something back again.

14168. Quite so; and that would make me as an occupier, if I had that clearly in my mind, vote for a representative who would do his best to raise the rates ?—That might be the result.

14169. So if you were properly economically instructed, and if you had to pay rates, you would wish to pay as much rates as possible ?—You would have to be very well instructed to wish that.

14170. That is the argument—that we should all desire to pay as much rates as possible in order to take it away from, say, the Duke of Bedford ?—I am not an expert in these things.

Proposed penalties on fathers of illegitimate children born in Workhouses.

14171. (Mr. Lansbury.) In reference to some of these single women, in answer to Mr. Loch I understood you to say that you are in favour of detaining them for a certain period. Would you be in favour of strengthening the law with regard to the men through whom these women come into the workhouse to be confined ?—Yes, very much, if one could.

14172. We could do it, if the Legislature would do it, could we not ?—Yes.

14173. Why should it not be made a positive crime ?—I know no reason why it should not.

14174. Are we not in danger of punishing, very often the least guilty party in these things ?—I am afraid that is so.

14175. By visiting not only all the affliction that comes from this sort of thing on the girl, but by letting the man 999 times out of 1,000 go scot free ?—Yes.

14176. In any legislation for giving effect to your wish, would you be in favour of embodying some legislation to deal with the man ?—Certainly. I think that probably in most cases the man is the more to blame of the two.

14177. And therefore should be punished ?—Yes.

The justification for generous out-relief.

14178. Then with regard to pensions, the people in the colonies have paid rates and taxes, and they take their pension as a matter of right; is that not also what some of the poor people here think, who have paid rates and taxes as we are told through their rents for a number of years, and therefore are only getting what they are entitled to in their old age ?—Yes, one frequently hears that.

The relation between rates and rents.

14179. Then about this question of compounding; is it not true that rents are considerably higher in all the low-rated districts of London than they are in the heavily-rated districts such as Bermondsey and Poplar ?—I do not know what it is in all of them, but I have given a particular case in which an acquaintance of mine found that when he removed from Poplar to St. Pancras the rents in the latter parish were considerably higher than in the place he had left.

14180. So that if you abolished compounding, the landlord would get his pound of flesh just the same ?—I do not know. Do you mean that he would raise his rent in order to compensate himself and to meet the rate ?

14181. No; I suggest to you that the rent is not fixed by anything which concerns the rates at all, but by the number that there are going after one house or one room ?—That may be so, but then on the other hand, what I contend is that it is desirable that every occupier, rich or poor, should have some ready means of ascertaining, not necessarily how his rent is affected thereby, but how the rates are going to be used, one way or the other.

14182. Why should he be interested in the amount of the rates unless it does affect his rent ?—I think it would in some degree affect his rent.

14183. How is it that in Whitechapel rents are higher than they are in Poplar ?—I cannot tell you that; indeed I did not know that they were.

14184. It is due to the greater density of population, surely ?—To a great extent it may be so.

14185. Assuming people want to live on a given area, and therefore the rates do not enter into the question, then the landlord simply puts the rent up as much as ever he can ?—That is a question of supply and demand, really. He will ask as much rent as he can get, in point of fact. There is very good reason why every person voting or living in a district should have a better knowledge than he has at present of how the rates are being spent.

14186. That is all right from the point of view of economy, but the point I want to make is that it does not, as a matter of fact, affect the rent. Did you ever know a district where the rates went down considerably, and the landlord lowered the rents forthwith ?—No, I never did; I admit that.

14187. On the other hand, have you ever known landlords put up the rents when the rates went up ?—Yes, I think that is a common practice.

14188. Might that not stop some little service being carried through, because of the rapacity of certain landlords ?—Yes, but I cannot be regarded as an expert on the subject.

The justification for generous out-relief.

14189. (Mr. Nunn.) If a man went to the War Office and said that he had paid taxes all his life and he now thought he had a right to a rifle, would you think that a sound argument ?—I do not know what the War Office might think of it; probably they would not.

14190. I suppose the answer would be that the rifles were at the service of every citizen of the community under the conditions prescribed by the Government ?—Possibly yes.

14191. And therefore when a man said that he had paid rates all his life and he now wanted 5s. a week, the answer would be that he had a right to subsistence as a ratepayer according as the guardians should prescribe ?—Yes, that is reasonable.

Suggested new Poor Law terminology.

14192. With regard to the new terminology in a reformed Poor Law, on which I asked you a question, I think our discussion this morning rather indicates that it is very necessary, for instance, with regard to the question of "sudden and urgent necessity" ?—Yes.

14193. You suggest an addition to the terms suggested by me, namely, "poor's house," for the aged poor ?—Yes. That was the term that was originally used.

14194. Would that be likely to suggest to applicants that poverty and not destitution was to be the test of a man's right to relief ?—I hardly think it would do that. Recollect, that I want to see my able-bodied institution, which would be really the workhouse as distinguished from the poor's house.

14195. It is called the infirmary, I believe now by the old people who are not on the sick list ?—As a matter of fact, "workhouse" is the official term which is recognised. There is the infirmary, which is for the sick as distinguished from those who do not require medical treatment and nursing, and there is the workhouse, which I confess with the great majority of inmates is a misnomer, inasmuch as they are not put there to work; the older people are put there to be taken care of, you may say.

Mr. Henry Lockwood.

21 May 1906.

Difficulty of making relief to the aged deterrent.

14196. But in the case of Woolwich, I suppose you would really consider that that house is for poor old people as apart from destitute old people?—It is for both, I think. They are there because they are destitute in the sense that they have no means of keeping themselves.

14197. Does that not mean that you have abandoned ineligibility as a guiding principle of the Poor Law?—Yes, there is no question that it does mean that, to a great extent so far as the old are concerned.

14198. What principle would you substitute in the place of ineligibility?—I can only say that, though one can take a sheet of paper and write out a series of rules which should guide you in dealing with this that or the other, when you come to deal with the old people in the concrete, it is very difficult to say how you are to arrange that the indoor relief you give them shall be of an ineligible character, because you must treat them with reasonable consideration.

14199. Would not a very large number of persons probably apply if they found they were simply going into a house with no restriction on their freedom?—But there is a certain amount of restriction, even in this place. They have to conform to certain rules. I mean, they have to rise at a certain time, they have to take their meals at a certain time, and they are allowed leave out only under restrictions.

Need for co-operation of various authorities for dealing with phthisis.

14200. With regard to phthisis, under the present circumstances there is a very considerable difference in the actual cases that one has to deal with, ranging from a case of merely threatened phthisis in a home where one feels pretty sure that the people are sufficiently well educated and careful to prevent the communication of the disease, down to the case of a hopeless person in destitute circumstances whose relatives have no intention at all of carrying out any preventive measures?—Yes, that is so.

14201. All such very different cases call for different kinds of treatment, and you could not decide that they should all be sent off to the field hospital or the like, because it would be rather a blundering way, would it not, to deal with the problem like that?—Yes. I committed myself to that opinion just now, but of course it is perfectly true that there would be cases in which it would be quite a question whether you should send them away.

14202. At present one has various agencies in every union or borough which practically take up different departments of the work; the borough council, for instance, accepts notifications of the disease and provides for disinfection, and the Poor Law provides open-air treatment for the hopeless cases, and charitable institutions take up the hopeful cases and cure them?—They take them up, but I do not know to what extent they cure them. Certainly they are more likely to cure them under the circumstances in which they receive them than the Poor Law authorities are, because as I have said, the Poor Law authorities get the cases far too late.

14203. Does that not suggest that as circumstances are at present, in the various boroughs at any rate in London, it is absolutely necessary to have some method of co-operation between the various agencies like the borough council and the board of guardians?—As things are at present, yes. As you have been kind enough to remind me—it is the only instance that I am aware of—there is some organised co-operation of that sort existing in Hampstead.

14204. It is almost impossible to deal with phthisis cases scientifically under present circumstances without that co-operation, is it not?—I think so certainly, only I still hold this, that when you have devised your scheme for dealing with phthisis scientifically or thoroughly, the Poor Law authority should not be the one that should undertake the duty.

14205. But should only take up the hopeless residuum which cannot be dealt with otherwise?—Yes.

14206. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) I want to get a little more clearly your view on the matter of the pension as against outdoor relief. In my previous question I did not suggest that everybody over sixty should be suitable for pensions, but I suggested that many would, and indeed I would hardly say many?—Are you speaking of all the population over sixty, or of those assisted by the guardians?

Differences between old age pension and out-relief.

14207. Of those who come under the operation of the Poor Law. There is a very clear definition morally between the idea of outdoor relief and the idea of a pension, is there not?—In the case of outdoor relief the only thing considered is the poverty, the destitution, of the person, is it not?—Yes; strictly speaking, the guardians are not concerned with the case until it has arrived at a condition of destitution.

14208. There is no question as to the character of that person so long as he is destitute?—No; the person is entitled to relief certainly by the fact that he or she is destitute—and that is irrespective of character, but of course character does come in to some extent.

14209. And the usefulness of the past life is not considered, either?—Not very much.

14210. Of course in regard to pensions it would be quite possible to consider those matters, when they would not be considered in regard to out-door relief?—Yes. I take it that in any scheme for pensions the past life would be considered.

14211. And therefore that would be a very easily marked distinction between the granting of a pension and the granting of outdoor relief?—Yes; you might say that there is this distinction between the two, that a person would not get a pension who had not qualified for it by his or her past life.

14212. And one would not consider it anything unreasonable that after a person had led a life of that kind, he should have something which was not withdrawable at pleasure?—I do not think it is unreasonable.

14213. Would you think it is immoral?—No, certainly not. The whole question hinges upon what it will cost and how it can be provided.

14214. If the State chooses to do it, and if it is desirable, there are moral reasons to favour it?—If you can show that it is desirable there is nothing immoral about it.

Effect of "shelters" and parks in Marylebone Union.

14215. With regard to shelters, in answer to Mr. Gardiner you have selected two localities; had you any special reason for taking those two; is it because there are more shelters in those localities than in others?—Those happened to be places that I was specially acquainted with. As regards Marylebone, those printed returns of which we have heard before show the very large number of persons from the shelters in the Marylebone parish, you may almost say week by week, who have to be dealt with by the relieving officer.

14216. Would you associate with the shelters the fact of there being two large parks close by to which these people may resort in the day-time? Would those parks being close by lead people, do you think, to go into a locality where there were shelters? At any rate, they would congregate there, would they not?—I do not know whether the parks have much effect, because as a matter of fact I believe that they have fewer applications from these shelters in the summer than they have in the winter. Therefore if the parks had any effect at all, they would have the effect of reducing the numbers who would come from the shelters.

14217. Do you say there are fewer in the summer?—I did not quite perhaps understand your question. Did you ask me whether there was any sort of relation between the shelters and the persons who came from the shelters for relief to districts in the neighbourhood of the parks?

14218. Yes?—This class of person, whom one sees lying about in the parks occasionally, would be there in the summer and not in the winter.

Return as aged paup in Maryleb Workhouse

14219. I think you wanted to say something with regard to the aged people in a particular workhouse?—Yes, I want to refer to the large number of women and men in the Marylebone workhouse over eighty—some of them over ninety—and there are a great many between sixty-five and seventy-five—whose records show that they have been a considerable number of years in the workhouse. Many of the old ladies who are now between eighty and ninety apparently came into the workhouse nearly twenty years ago, when they were not many years over sixty, and there they remain, and, I will not say flourish, but it does seem to me that under the conditions in which they live in the Marylebone workhouse they reach so to say, here on earth, the condition of Nirvana, which Bhuddists imagine can only be achieved after æons of well living. It seems to imply that the circumstances of indoor relief for the aged, rightly or wrongly, are such that they tend to prolong life. I have here the return for Marylebone, and this is an epitome of it—over ninety there are seven; over eighty and upwards there are forty-nine who have been in the workhouse from five to twenty-three years; between seventy and eighty there are 101 who have been in the workhouse from five to fifteen years, and then between sixty-five and seventy there are eighty-four who have been in the workhouse from five to ten years. These figures go to show that there is nothing tending to the shortening of human life in the conditions in which they live.

Apathy of tenants of flats as to local affairs.

14220. In regard to the whole matter of compounding, my contention has nothing to do with the finances of it, but what I say is that people take absolutely no interest in what happens in their locality in those cases where they live in flats, especially the well-to-do, because they do not wish to be bothered with the thing at all. What is your view?—That is so, and I still take leave to say that I think it is most deplorable that that should be the case. No matter where the rates or the rents go to, I think that every citizen ought to be induced to take an immediate and active interest in what is being done by the authorities who demand and spend the rates.

14221. Those people escape responsibility in every way?—Yes, these flat-livers do.

14222. They treat the parish much as one of them said he wished to treat the clergy once when I went to call on him:—"Don't you know that we live here in order to escape the parson?"—they want to escape everything?—Yes. They pay so much a quarter and there is an end of it, and they have no responsibility or interest in anything that is going on around them.

14223. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to the attitude with which ratepayers should contemplate the rates, do you mean that they should consider the amount spent or the manner and method in which it is spent?—I think they should have the means of considering both.

14224. Which in your view is the more important of the two?—I think one is as important as the other. It depends perhaps to some extent upon the advantage that a person thinks he is going to get out of rate-expenditure. Take as an instance the question of the tramways we will say; a person who is not likely to use the tramway would probably consider that that was not a good way of spending the rates and he would prefer the money to be spent in some other way; but, on the other hand, a person to whom the tramway would be an advantage would say possibly in effect, "I do not mind paying so much more rates, because by this I am going to have locomotion facilitated for myself."

14225. Ought he to limit his consideration solely to his own requirements, or ought he not also to consider the public benefit?—I think he ought to do both, but probably he begins by thinking about himself.

Miss Ina Stansfeld, called in; and Examined.

14226. (Chairman.) You have given us a very clear and comprehensive statement of your duties, and also of certain recommendations which you would like to see applied to the infirmaries under the Poor Law (see Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. XXVI. (A–N)). I understand you were appointed an assistant poor law inspector in the Metropolitan District under the Local Government Board in 1897?—Yes.

14227. And that previously to that you had had a considerable experience in work germane to that which was given to you to perform?—Yes.

Advantages of treating London as one Poor Law area.

14228. You make a number of suggestions, and towards the end of your memorandum you point out that those suggestions cannot be practically carried out unless the administration of London is treated as a single unit?—Yes.

14229. Therefore, one of the advantages of making London a single unit would be that it would facilitate a good many changes in the infirmaries, which you, after considerable experience, think advisable?—I think it would facilitate desirable changes in the infirmaries and workhouses.

Advantages of having maternity wards in Workhouses rather than in Infirmaries.

14230. I will take you shortly through one or two of your suggestions. First, you are of opinion that the maternity wards should be in the workhouse rather than in the infirmary?—I think it is better for the patients. I think there is a greater reluctance to go into the ward as a patient when it is situated in the workhouse.

14231–3. I can understand that; but why is it better for the patients?—I think it is a bad thing, is it not, if they become too much familiarised with the Poor Law?

14234. You would like to subdivide the maternity wards as they are now conducted?—Yes.

Proposed re-organisation of maternity wards.

14235. You would like to have a central institution in London for women with their first child?—I should like to have a central institution in London, with opportunities for their employment in laundry work and needlework and whatever was most suitable, for some months previous to the birth of their child, and also for some months afterwards.

14236. That would be in the case of a girl's first child?—Yes.

14237. Then you would like also to separate the respectable women from those of bad character?—Yes, I should.

14238. Do you think that is very desirable?—I think it would be well.

14239. Are there any complaints that you have ever heard in that respect?—I have never heard of any complaints on that point.

Associations for befriending unmarried mothers.

14240. You give in the Appendix a very interesting account of many associations which in different unions are working with the Poor Law authorities in trying to get girls who have gone wrong restored afterwards to some form of employment; that movement is on the increase, is it not?—It is very much on the increase. I think the amount of voluntary work which is now being done in the maternity wards of the Metropolis is wonderful. I do not think that I remember any one single instance, when asking a girl whether she would receive help on leaving, of her saying no; and I nearly always ask that question.

14241. You have seen a great increase of that kind of help during the nine years that you have been assistant inspector, I take it?—Yes.

14242. I see you give a long account of the Hampstead Union and their scheme, and that you hold that up rather as a model?—Yes, I do; it gives the girl the best chance, and it tends to keep the rates down at the same time.

Large number of feeble-minded unmarried mothers in Workhouses.

14243. Then I think you are of opinion that feeble-minded women, some of whom constantly come to these maternity wards, should be put under some detention?—Yes, I think they should. They are there really in alarming numbers. It is very difficult for me to say the exact percentage. I have sometimes tried to work it out, and I think about 75 per cent. of the women in these wards are not quite up to the mark.

14244. That is 75 per cent. of the mothers of illegitimate children?—Yes.

14245. As much as 75 per cent.?—I should say so. They are feeble-minded, or something between feeble-minded and normal-minded.

14246. Would it be easy for a medical authority to draw a line between these people and the people who are fully in possession of their wits, or would there be a difficulty in most cases?—I think that a medical authority in going round and examining the women one by one would be able without difficulty to divide them into the two classes at a glance.

Miss Ina Stansfeld.

21 May 1906.

14247. One of the advantages, if London was unified and had central infirmaries, is that you would be able to deal much more satisfactorily with the lock cases?—Yes. I have received, during the last two years especially, many complaints about the want of separation-accommodation for the female lock cases in the metropolitan infirmaries.

Need for segregation of lock cases and senile cases.

14248. Do these cases form any considerable percentage?—It is very difficult to determine, in fact almost impossible, as often that condition is secondary to another. The respectable married woman resents very much finding a patient of that kind in the general wards.

14249. Then in paragraph 24 you suggest that the senile and bedridden women should be segregated, and that at present they give a great deal of trouble to the nurses, distributed as they are through the wards, and also some annoyance to the other inmates?—Yes, they are very troublesome.

14250. You suggest that they should be classified, and if possible located in a special institution?—Yes, I do.

14251. Would they be much more easily managed if they were thus segregated?—No, I do not think they would ever be easily managed. Perhaps they might be more difficult to manage, because that condition of mind is very often very infectious.

14252. I suppose you have put these proposals forward from an administrative point of view, and you have not gone into their cost?—From an administrative point of view as an inspector of the nursing arrangements.

14253. You are looking at it simply from the administrative point of view?—Yes. From the point of view of what is best for the infirmaries and workhouses, and what is best for the inmates.

Need for male nurses and discipline for disagreeable infirmary patients.

14254. In paragraph 41, you make the suggestion that there should be male nurses, owing to the fact that there are a certain class of patients who, you state, are at times apt to make themselves disagreeable?—Yes; they exist in all the infirmaries. It is the commonest experience for me to go round an infirmary and to find two or three men isolated in separation-rooms, because their behaviour or their language has been impossible in the general ward. They are obviously men who need to be handled by men.

14255. Under the present system, can you inflict any punishment upon them for that?—No.

14256. Your idea would be to remove them to some wards where the conditions would be less comfortable?—Yes, to a Special Infirmary, where the conditions would be less comfortable and the discipline stricter.

14257. And enforced by male attendants?—Yes; I think they would take less advantage then.

14258. Would your male nurses be pauper nurses?—No.

14259. Would they be trained male nurses?—Yes, and I think they would be of very great use to the nation. I think a service of trained male nurses would be useful in the nursing of mental cases and delirium tremens cases, and that they would easily find employment after training, and be of great value in the Metropolitan infirmaries during their training.

14260. Have you often had complaints from nurses of the misconduct of this sort of men?—I have had a few complaints, but generally I think I may say that I have a statement that they have been troublesome: "Why is this man in this little room all by himself?" I ask. "Because he has been so troublesome that he could not be managed by the nurses in the general ward."

High quality of Metropolitan Poor Law Nurses.

14261. Passing on to the nurses, I gather that you are very well satisfied with the quality and class of nurses that you now get?—I am thoroughly satisfied with Poor Law nursing as it exists in the Metropolis. Every year it is improving.

14262. And you are prepared to submit—which appears to me to be very sensible—to the fact that the hospitals of London will always get rather the pick of the nurses?—Yes. After having written my memorandum, I was afraid that perhaps by having admitted that, I might have injured those institutions; but the hospitals, with their great traditions and their great work, I think have every right to lead the way.

14263. I assume they produce a larger number of interesting cases and a lesser number of chronic cases than the infirmaries do?—They are supposed to do so, but I do not know that they really do. In my memorandum I have quoted an operation which I saw performed by Doctor Parsons, medical superintendent of Fulham Infirmary, not very long ago, in which he carefully explained to the nurses why he was going to do everything and what effect every action during the operation would have. Naturally, I think, the nurses must become more interested in a case which they are taught thoroughly to understand, than they can be in a general hospital where the surgeon's chief business lies with the medical students, and where it is nobody's business, in the theatre itself, to instruct or to explain to the probationers or to the nurses.

Need for lowering qualifying age for pensions for nurses.

14264. You have something to say as regards the pensions of nurses; I believe you think the age is somewhat low?—The age is very much too advanced.

14265. They are entitled to a pension at the Civil Service age, 60 to 65, are they not?—Yes.

14266. What is your experience; does it want a very strong woman, who begins nursing at about 25, to last till 60?—Yes. In the Poor Law infirmaries the life is exceedingly close. There is no variety in it, and it is one of continuous responsibility. There is comparatively little change in the life of a matron of an infirmary, and that does tend very much, I think, to age a woman.

14267. In your experience, have you known any good nurses who have broken down without becoming qualified for a pension?—Yes, I have.

14268. About what sort of age would they begin to break down?—The woman of whom I am thinking was, I believe, about fifty-five. A certain number of years were put on, because it was found that her health was in a very precarious condition, and she was allowed to retire.

14269. With a pension?—Yes.

Need for proposed separate infirmary wards for children.

14270. Then you would like the children to be all removed from the adult wards?—Yes. I do not like children in adult wards. They annoy the elder patients, and I do not think it is good for the children from either the physical or the moral point of view.

14271. The general practice in most infirmaries is to remove them, is it not?—Some infirmaries do and some do not. Structurally, many of the infirmaries are at a disadvantage, and even if they have children's wards for general complaints, they are obliged to scatter cases of measles, whooping-cough, and infectious complaints among the adult wards; and measles and whooping-cough are two very important diseases in the infirmaries.

14272. In the existing infirmaries, it would necessitate some enlargement and extra wards if they were so separated, I assume?—Yes. The mortality among the children in the Camberwell infirmary, before it was recently enlarged, was very high; now, when it has new wards and separation-rooms attached, it is almost nominal.

Inspection of Poor Law Schools.

14273. How do you come officially in contact with the Poor Law schools? Do you inspect them?—Yes.

14274–5. Both sides; boys and girls?—Yes.

Physique and after-careers of Children in Poor Law Schools.

14276. Are you very well satisfied with the results of the Poor Law education on the children?—Yes, I am indeed very well satisfied.

14277. And you do not endorse the strong objections that are entertained in some quarters to the big Poor Law schools?—No. I have never seen the "pauper taint"; I have heard of it, but I have never seen it.

14278. Do you believe that the children in these large schools are better physically trained and looked after?—I am sure they are.

14279. Have you been able to get any records of how the majority of these children, after leaving the schools, have turned out?—I have not attempted to get any written records for this Commission, but I make very continuous inquiries. I have appended in one of my appendices some records given to me by Mr. Thurnall, the clerk to the Lambeth guardians, and I have examined a considerable number of Case Papers of the Kensington guardians, the Fulham guardians, and the Holborn guardians. I find that practically none returned to the maternity wards; the number is so small that it is hardly worth mentioning.

Good results from "barrack" schools.

14280. This return, Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. XXVI. (N), is well worth looking at. These figures I understand were furnished you by Mr. Thurnall, the clerk to the Lambeth guardians. The schools they refer to are both of them big schools, are they not?—Yes. The Lambeth schools, West Norwood, are large schools on the block system; they are certified for 664 children.

14281. These figures, if they are correct, are very remarkable, because they show that out of 25,075 inmates of workhouses there were only thirty who had been trained in a Poor Law school, and out of 10,919 inmates of infirmaries, there were only three cases who had been trained in a Poor Law school. That return, remarkable as it is in the results shown, is in conformity with your experience, I understand?—Yes. Poor Law schools have a great advantage in this, that their children are regularly fed—food is such an immense factor in a child's development; they are regularly sent to bed, and they do not run about the streets as the children do who are in London; their sports are wonderfully organised, and they are taught to take such interest in them that their physical education is remarkable.

14282. It is alleged that they have too much done for them in the schools, and that consequently when they go out into practical life they have a difficulty in adapting themselves to circumstances; have you ever heard that complaint?—I have heard that allegation, but I do not attach any importance to it.

14283. You dismiss it?—Yes.

14284. Summarily?—Summarily, because they certainly do not return to the workhouses—and that is the chief point.

14285. As regards cottage homes, you think they want very careful inspection, I understand?—Yes.

Disadvantages of cottage homes.

14286. I suppose you have examined a good many?—Yes, a great many.

14287. Even with strict supervision would you object to them?—I would rather not have them. Of course I would rather have them with strong supervision than not with strong supervision. They are a terrible strain upon the cottage mother. May I give an illustration?

14288. Certainly?—On Saturday I was inspecting a scattered home. I knocked at the door, and after a considerable time an untidy girl came to answer it. I asked for the mother. The house was generally very untidy. The mother was an exceedingly nice person. She had been an ex-pupil teacher under the London School Board. She understood children and she understood how to manage them. She was very fond of all her children, and there was a most excellent tone which one could not help feeling in the house. At the end of my visit, I called her attention to the points which were unsatisfactory—the disorder, the general want of domestic management, and the untidiness of the girls. The poor woman began to cry at once. I said, "Don't cry; I should not be doing my duty if I did not call your attention to these things; I come here to see that a certain standard is kept up." She said "I know that, and I know it too well; I know that all you say is perfectly just, but the strain is something terrible." "I have thirteen children upon my mind from the time I get up in the morning till the time I go to bed at night." A woman with a natural family of nine or ten children knows that when she has brought those children up her family will have grown up and will perhaps help her. But it is not so with the mother of a scattered home, who has thirteen of other people's children to bring up. When the time comes for the first boy or girl to go out into the world, another child is instantly given her, and she has to begin all over again. I do not think that educationally it is good that children should be placed under the care of people who are under strain or who are overtired.

14289. Thirteen is the maximum number, is it not?—No, fifteen is as a rule the maximum, and in some cottage home colonies there are more than that.

14290. Would the mother have to do most of the work?—Yes, she has to do everything.

14291. In the cottage?—Of course the children help, but if a mother in her own home does not feel very well when she wakes in the morning, she has every right to say to her child, "Go down and make me a cup of tea;" but that sort of thing would not be permitted in a scattered home. The mother must do everything, and must be always at work.

14292. Was not the mother you have described to us somewhat exceptional, or do you think she was about the average?—I think that all mothers in such small institutions—for after all they are only small institutions—are more or less tired.

14293. How long has the system been in force?—I suppose about twelve or fifteen years, but I really could not give you an accurate answer.

Difficulty in finding foster mothers for cottage homes.

14294. Have many of the foster-mothers given up work—because that would be a proof, would it not, that they had found it too hard?—I could not answer that question, but I know that it is exceedingly difficult to find foster-mothers. The Kensington and Chelsea guardians advertised not long ago for a cottage mother and very few answered. Hardly anyone was at all suitable, but they finally engaged one, and when the day came she failed to appear. They had then to begin to advertise all over again at an expenditure of from £6 to £8. Women know it is a very hard life, and they do not readily come to it.

14295. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) What does she get for it?—I imagine about £20.

14296. (Chairman.) A fixed salary is it?—Yes.

14297. Is everything provided by order for her as regards feeding and so on?—There are different systems.

14298. But she is allowed so much a child?—She does not handle the money; she is as a rule allowed to order from selected tradespeople up to a given sum per child.

Need for raising the minimum age for girls going out to service.

14299. To go to another point, you are rather concerned as to the age at which girls are sent out to service?—Yes, I am very much concerned. I do not think that any girl ought to go out to service before the age I have quoted.

14300. That is fifteen?—Yes.

14301. Of course if these girls were not in a pauper school, but were members of a large family, say, of a labouring man, or a man in receipt of only comparatively small wages, they might go out to work before fifteen?—Yes, that is true, they would. But as a rule a child who comes into a Poor Law school comes in very backward, underfed, having had far too little sleep, and very undeveloped. It takes a year or two to regulate her in that respect. Then there is the education. It is very bad from an educational point of view for children to be over-pressed. There is such a tendency to over-pressure, they must be doing something at every hour, and every hour of the day is fixed and planned beforehand. There is so little of that leisure which brings the child's best development. I think up to the age of fourteen school and play should divide the day, and then there ought to be a year for domestic training before the girls go out to service.

14302. I thought you meant that the pressure upon the children is the pressure due to their going out at an earlier age. If there is undue pressure before fourteen, is that not rather the fault of the curriculum of the school, or do you suggest that it is in order to bring the children up to the level of outside children?—The guardians of a union who send their girls out at fourteen must give them a certain amount of domestic education before they go, and that must affect the procedure in the school. But if it were to be an understood thing that the girls should not go out till fifteen, that would leave a clear year after the girl left school for her to be taught nothing but to do all those things which would make her a servant. I do not like half-timers or half-measures.

14303. Where would these children go? Would you have an intermediate school for them?—Not necessarily. There is plenty of opportunity in the kitchens, laundries, dormitories, needlerooms, the matron's quarters, and in other parts of the school, for first-rate domestic education, and I think that a very good domestic education is being given to the girls.

Miss Ina Stansfeld.

21 May 1906.

14304. You would simply keep them for a year longer ?—Yes. I had an argument with the Islington guardians not long ago on that subject. I am sorry to say they have arranged for the girls to go out at fourteen.

14305. (Mr. Gardiner.) Do you not find great difficulty in getting places for the girls at fourteen ?—I think that servants are so difficult to get now that a mistress, especially a London mistress who cannot afford very high wages, will take anything—she will take a dishonest girl.

14306. And then you ruin the girls ?—Of course you do.

14307. So really you have kept your child for ten years in a Poor Law school and you ruin her through not keeping her a year longer ?—Exactly ; you ruin her for lack of that year's training which would qualify her for taking a better situation, and would give her a better chance from the start. It is not economical.

14308. (Chairman.) Do you examine the Roman Catholic schools ?—Yes.

Dr. Barnardo's and Waifs and Strays' Homes.

14309. Have you examined any of the Waifs and Strays, and Dr. Barnardo's establishments ?—Yes, all the certified homes in the Metropolitan District.

14310. Have you been satisfied with what you have seen of those homes ?—I think they require a great deal of supervision, but I think they are fairly satisfactory—some are very satisfactory indeed.

14311. They are the schools in which, I assume, Poor Law children have been placed ?—Yes ; they are certified for that purpose.

Inspection of "certified schools."

14312. Do you only examine a school when there are Poor Law children there, or do you examine a school in order to certify ?—I very often go to examine a school to certify ; I think generally I am the inspector who is sent.

14313. In summing up your opinions as regards education I see you state in paragraph 74 some very satisfactory results ; I suppose you want nothing better than that that system should be continued and improved from time to time as the ideas of the day suggest ?—Yes. I am very well satisfied in this direction.

Number of probationer nurses trained at London Hospital.

14314. (Mr. Booth.) I have only one question to ask on your most interesting memorandum, and that is to clear up a point which I do not quite understand. In paragraph 32, speaking with regard to the examination for physical fitness in the case of candidates admitted to the London Hospital, you say, "In illustration of this I would state that after medical examination, guaranteeing physical fitness, twenty-eight candidates are admitted every seven weeks by the authorities of the London Hospital to Tredegar House for a month of preliminary training "—that is in effect, four a week on the average ?—Yes.

14315. Then you go on to say, "Such a number of admissions naturally presumes an equal number of discharges." But will not a certain number of admissions for preliminary training imply that they go on to further training ? Why should there be an equal number of discharges out of those who are taken on for the preliminary month, which, I presume, is intended to lead to further training ?—The staff of the London Hospital numbers 603 nurses, and twenty-eight multiplied by seven gives the total of admissions for the year. That would imply that that same number would have to be discharged for private nursing, or to be dealt with as the London hospital deals with them. They do not discharge them, but they keep private nurses on their staff. They would have to dispense with their services in the hospital, or the nurses would have to leave, because their training had come to an end.

After careers of Poor Law Children.

14316. (Mr. Nunn.) In Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. XXVI. (N), you give us the results of education in the Poor Law schools. Although it is your contention that it does not produce application to the Poor Law again, I notice that taking those three years, 1903, 1904, and 1905, the number of such returns steadily goes up ?—That is so.

14317. Do you think that rise is constant, because, if so, it rather tells against the schools ?—I think it is quite accidental. I have carefully noted these cases. They have nearly all been due to some physical defect—either feeble-mindedness, or deafness, or hip disease, or something which has disqualified the child for life.

14318. We have come across this point before in some other departments of our inquiry ; in getting information of this kind, you do not merely take the statement of the persons you find in the workhouse that they were brought up in the Poor Law schools, but I suppose you verify it afterwards ?—How is it possible to verify it ?

14319. By going back to the school ?—I did verify many of the statements in that way. I have had the children looked up in the school books.

14320. So that one can depend upon those figures such as they are ; but they tell a little against your view instead of favouring it, by reason of the increasing number? —Yes.

Disadvantage of Poor Law Children going to Public Elementary Schools.

14321. It is an inquiry in a very small area, and therefore it is hardly worth while dwelling upon it, because it might be refuted by the next set of figures. With regard to the scattered home system, have you found that an objection to it is that the children bring infectious diseases into the home ?—I think wherever the children go out to the neighbouring board schools they bring back a great deal of infection.

14322. That is a matter of observation ?—Yes ; I find that very marked in the intermediate schools where teaching is not done in the establishment.

Type and qualification of foster mother for cottage home.

14323. May I ask how the mothers are selected as a rule, and what is their status in society before they are taken on ?—One of the great weaknesses of the system is that they have had no training. Nearly every woman thinks she can be a cottage mother ; if she can do nothing else, she thinks she can do that.

14324. There is no machinery for training them, is there ?—No. That is where I have tried to show that the Roman Catholic schools are strong. They have their system of training for their sisterhoods, and they do not put women in positions of responsibility until they have been through long and drastic training. I often ask these cottage mothers what their previous experience has been, I remember one cottage mother told me she had lost her mother and then she had lost her aunt, and she did not know what to do, and so she thought she could do this.

Value of State registration for Poor Law nurses.

14325. Turning now to your paragraph on nursing, are you in favour of a system of registration of nurses ?—The question of State registration is such a very serious one and opens so much argument that I would rather not express an opinion upon it otherwise than as I know it would affect the Poor Law nurse.

14326. How would it affect the Poor Law nurse ?—The annual examination by the Central Board previous to State registration would give the nurses from all the hospitals and all the Poor Law infirmaries of the country an equal chance, and it would make it possible for the Gold Medal of the year to be won by a Poor Law nurse. As I know that the training in the Metropolitan Poor Law infirmaries is in many cases equal and in some cases superior to that which is given in the general hospitals, I should naturally welcome State registration as the only way of obtaining for Poor Law nurses the public recognition which I think they deserve, but which they do not get.

Method of selecting Poor Law Nurses.

14327. With regard to the selection of nurses by guardians, I was very pleased to read in paragraph 36 "There is an increasing inclination on the part of boards of guardians to leave the selection of candidates to medical superintendents and matrons." Is it the case with many boards of guardians, do you think, that they leave the selection to the medical officer and matron ?—The greater number are wise enough to do that. Do you not think it wise ?

14328. I think it is excellent, but it is quite new to me ? The medical superintendent is naturally an expert in physique ; and the matron knows well which young woman she can train into a good nurse. There have been many failures, and there are still, with those boards who insist upon retaining that power in their own hands.

14329. (Mr. Gardiner.) Do the medical superintendent and the matron recommend the name of one person if there is only one vacancy ?—Yes.

14330. And the board appoints that one ?—Yes.

14331. (Mr. Nunn.) I think your suggestion about male nurses was rather coupled with the suggestion that there should be separate institutions for cases which could be best dealt with in them ?—Yes. I should like to see that class of men who are so troublesome—it is only a small class—peremptorily placed there, and at the first time they misconduct themselves.

14332. They are not usually suffering from diseases so as to prevent that, are they ?—No.

14333. There is one point with regard to the removal of patients from infirmaries, which in my experience has caused a good deal of trouble. Patients go into one of our Poor Law infirmaries and they are fitted with garments or appliances which the doctor considers necessary for their use, but when they go out again they are suddenly deprived of them ; for instance, a flannel belt or something of that kind, which is really necessary is supplied in the infirmary, and then when the patient is removed it goes back to stock again and the patient goes out, perhaps in mid-winter, without it. Do you know of any method by which a difficulty of that kind might be overcome ?—I think that is a very cruel thing, and I did not know that it was possible.

14334. Do you think that superintendents of infirmaries make paupers presents of such things, or does it come before boards of guardians, who relieve them in that way ?—I have never heard of such an instance.

14335. Do you think that they receive them during their stay in the infirmary, and do you think that having used them they are sent out without them ?—I think that if they are supplied with them, they are sent out with them.

14336. That would be practically giving them extra relief without application to the board ? I am only anxious to know what the system is with boards of guardians ?—I do not quite understand.

14337. (Sir Samuel Provis.) If it was a medical or surgical appliance, would not the recipient usually be allowed to take it away ?—Such as a splint ? Yes. The patient in many cases would have to take away such an appliance, or would not be able to leave the infirmary.

14338. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) And if it were left behind, the patient would probably come back again to the infirmary ?—It would be against the interest of the medical superintendent, of the matron, of the guardians, and against his own interest ; indeed it would be against everybody's interest for him to leave it behind him.

14339. If it is necessary to his health he must have it ?—Certainly.

14340. (Mr. Booth.) While they are in the infirmary they do not wear the clothes in which they came to the infirmary, I suppose ?—No, they do not.

14341. So that apart from anything that can be called a surgical or medical appliance, the clothes supplied there might be much better for their health than those they entered the infirmary in ?—Yes, that is quite true.

14342. And in the clothes in which they entered they have to go away ?—Yes.

14343. (Mr. Nunn.) On that second point raised by Mr. Booth, which is perhaps a less aggravated form of the same evil, do you know of any arrangements that are made by nursing committees or boards of guardians to see that patients go out properly clothed ?—No, I do not.

14344. Have you ever had complaints of that kind come before your notice ?—Never.

14345. With regard to some of these committees of women who look after these workhouse girls, I think some are appointed by the guardians and some not ?—They are all permitted by the guardians.

14346. They are added to from the outside, but mainly consist of women guardians, I think ?—Yes.

14347. Have you come across any cases of friction between the women guardians and the women coming in from the outside, or any difficulty with regard to discipline in the workhouse ?—I have never had any complaints of that nature.

14348. Do they work harmoniously on these committees as a rule ?—Yes, I think so.

14349. When these girls leave the workhouse, are they provided permanently with visitors, or do they just go out in the world without the supervision of these befriending societies ? Is it part of the scheme of these societies to aid the workhouse girls ?—The scheme of the Workhouse Girls' Aid Society is really to make good women of them, and I think they do follow them up.

14350. Do they follow them up personally ?—Yes, most of those who help in that way are very devoted women. I think they realise that the after-care is perhaps the most important care of all.

14351. In how many cases—I have not been able to gather it from your memorandum—do the guardians subscribe to the funds, should you say, roughly ?—I could not answer that question.

14352. Some do, do they not ?—Yes, they do.

Observance of Dr. Downes' Memorandum as to Ophthalmia in infants.

14353–4. With regard to the Paper issued by Dr. Downes in reference to ophthalmia, are the regulations pretty generally carried out ?—They are very generally carried out. In some instances the medical superintendent prescribes for each child at birth exactly what is to be done to its eyes, and in some instances the written rules are given to the nurse and she administers whatever is prescribed by them.

Practice of sending some mothers to Workhouses and others to Infirmaries.

14355. (Mrs. Webb.) Are we to understand that some unions adopt it as a principle to send lying-in cases into the infirmary and that other unions adopt it as a principle to send them into the workhouse ?—In some cases the maternity ward is the infirmary, and in some cases it is in the workhouse.

14356–7. Do you ever get lying-in cases treated in the workhouse and in the infirmary in the same union ?—Yes ; because sometimes when the maternity ward is in the workhouse and some complication arises after the child's birth, the mother is transferred to the infirmary for further treatment.

14358. I see that in London there were ten of these mothers who died in 1905 ; am I right in supposing that there were only ten of them ?—Yes.

Proposed reorganisation of institutions for dealing with lying in cases.

14359. If you add one to the ten you get a very big rate. I mean to say when you have got such small figures as that to begin with, you may get a tremendous death rate by adding a very few, so that if one or two serious cases are sent into the infirmary it would enormously increase the rate when you are dealing with tiny figures ?—Of course it would.

14360. If some of these cases which are presumed to be going to be serious cases are transferred to the infirmary, then, starting with these very low figures, you would increase your rate in proportion ?—Yes. I can find all that out for you.

14361. We should rather like to have, I think, the unions in which the lying-in cases are treated exclusively in the infirmaries, and those in which they are treated exclusively in the workhouses, and whether as a matter of fact cases are transferred to the infirmaries when they are presumed to be serious ?—I have here a return relating to the maternity wards, which I got out for Dr. Downes a month or so ago, which might answer some of your questions (handing in same. See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. XXVI. (O)).

14362–3. I do not quite gather from what you say whether you desire that lying-in cases should be treated in infirmaries or in workhouses ?—I think on the whole I prefer their being placed in workhouses. I think it is better in every way for the woman ; it is considerably more of a disgrace to begin with, and I think that is good.

14364. Do you wish to make it a disgrace ?—I think it ought to be deterrent.

14365–6. On the assumption that it ought to be a disgrace, you wish them to be treated in the workhouses ?—Yes ; I do not think it would do to open the doors too widely.

14367. Do you think that on the whole it is better for the woman—quite apart from the deterrent effect—to go into the workhouse ?—She must go into the workhouse before the birth of her child.

Miss Ina Stansfeld.

21 May 1906.

14368. She does anyhow, does she?—Yes; and it is a great inconvenience sometimes to transfer the mother, especially when the infirmary is at some distance. I think that taking it all round, I do really prefer that the lying-in ward should be in the workhouse.

14369. I see you expressly recommend a lying-in hospital for a certain class of cases?—Yes, I do.

14370. Would the same objection apply to a general lying-in hospital as applies in your mind to a general Poor Law infirmary?—Do you mean its being too easy of access to be deterrent? I only advise that central maternity home for young women applying for maternity relief for the first time. I look upon them as a special class.

14371. Do you think it desirable that those people should not go through the workhouse?—I should not allow them to go through the workhouse or to come under the Poor Law in any way at all. Upon application I should refer them to a ladies' committee, on the lines of the Hampstead ladies' committee, or I should instruct the relieving officer that they were to be sent to a central maternity home under the Poor Law.

14372. That is to say, that all destitute young women lying-in for the first time, you would desire should go to the lying-in hospital?—Yes.

14373. As regards cases which come at frequent intervals, which are the terribly difficult cases to deal with, would you make any distinction between persons who were defective in the sense of being weak-minded, and persons who were perhaps vicious; I mean to say would you segregate weak-minded people more than you would segregate people who were vicious?—Yes, I should, for I think very often the feeble-minded are not at all vicious, but they are exceedingly weak, and they catch up influences and expressions and habits and words to an alarming degree from those who are stronger-minded than themselves.

14374. That would mean, if it was to be any good, that it would be a compulsory detention for life, practically?—Yes, for life.

14375. Does not that same argument hold good with regard to people who are vicious? Why should you let them out on society? Their children may not be unsound in body, but if heredity goes for anything they are unsound in mind?—I could not answer that question.

14376. There does not seem to be any reason why you should not detain these imbecile young women and prevent them having children—which I agree with most heartily; so why should you not detain wilfully vicious women and prevent them having children?—The whole question strikes at the freedom of the subject, does it not?

14377. I quite see that?—I am very clear about the feeble-minded, but I should not like to express an opinion about the others.

14378. It comes to this, that as regards lying-in hospitals those women who come for the first time are to go to special lying-in institutions, and those women who are imbecile and defective and come constantly are to go into separate lying-in institutions?—Yes.

14379. So that there is only left the class of vicious people to go into the workhouses?—And a few respectable married women.

14380. Would you suggest the respectable people should go with the girls who were lying-in with their first child?—I should always give them the chance. I think the number is very small.

14381. Therefore the respectable people would be allocated to this first-time lying-in hospital?—Yes.

14382. So that leaves nothing but the vicious people for the workhouse?—Yes; and for them I should have a very strict rule—no luxuries, no comfort, beyond what was absolutely necessary.

14383. Is it quite fair to the other inhabitants of the workhouse to put those people in? Why should you not segregate them too in another institution?—I am afraid there are a great many of the same kind in the workhouse.

14384. Would you put those people under definite disciplinary regulations?—Yes.

14385. You would not be inclined to compulsorily detain those people?—I would rather not express an opinion upon that point.

Death rate of infants in Poor Law institutions.

14386. With regard to the death rate of infants which you refer to in paragraph 7, does that mean during the first year of life?—During the period spent in the maternity ward.

14387. Have you compared it at all with the normal death rate of the district?—No, I have not.

14388. Then you do not know how it compares?—No.

14389. Could you tell us how many infants there are, because that is important from the point of view of the normal death rate?—I have given it in paragraph 5.

14390. That gives the number of births in the institutions?—Yes, and in paragraph 7 are the corresponding deaths.

Block system of schools.

14391. With regard to the different systems of education, you do not differentiate the block system. The block system seems to be an intermediate between the associated schools and the cottage homes; is that so?—Yes, it is. In one of the appendices I have given the number of children in the blocks of the various schools.

14392. But you do not give us any opinion about the block system?—I do not think it is as dangerous as the cottage homes or the scattered homes, but I do not think it is as good as the associated schools. I think it is very much less dangerous than the smaller systems.

14393. Your conclusion about the associated schools is rather startling?—I know it is a heresy.

Advantage of barrack schools.

14394. I was not saying that it is a heresy, but that it is rather startling. Could you say anything more to explain exactly what you mean by believing this so strongly? Do you think that the whole indictment of barrack schools falls to the ground?—All—absolutely. When I am asked that question, I first of all think what I should wish for my children if I were a working woman and I were dying and leaving them to the public to bring up. I should certainly wish that they should be sent to an associated school. Then I try to think of myself as a child and wonder which I should be the happiest and the best in. I should certainly wish to go to an associated school. It is a happier, brighter, freer, breezier life. It is full of interest. The cottage home, especially the scattered home, is very often exceedingly dull.

Disadvantages of cottage and scattered homes.

14395. But there is a great difference between a cottage home and a scattered home. I noticed that your illustration of the tired-out mother was from a scattered home?—Yes, but that applies to cottage homes as well.

14396. In the case of cottage homes surely they have a system of relief; the mother, for instance, goes out once a week, and there is an odd mother kept?—Yes; there are relief mothers attached to every group of scattered homes. The strain is perhaps less acute upon the mother in the cottage home colony. One can never make up to the children for the great loss of their own home and their own parents, but there are many advantages in the associated school which the children in the cottage homes and the scattered homes can never have; for instance, there is the swimming bath.

14397. The cottage homes have a swimming bath at Chorlton?—Yes, they have, but some cottage colonies and scattered homes have not.

14398. Very much of what you say applies only to the scattered homes, I think?—I think scattered homes are much the less satisfactory, but I think the cottage homes have very many fewer advantages than the associated school.

14399. In the cottage homes they have swimming baths and workshops, indeed they have all sorts of things?—Yes, they have.

The advantage the Poor Law child.

14400. You are of opinion that the Poor Law child on the whole turns out better than the child of the same class which is not a Poor Law child?—Yes, I am; because I think that physical education and physical strength are great factors in a successful adult age, and the children in the Poor Law schools are admirably fed, sent to bed early instead of being up at night, and are well clothed and kept occupied, and they are exceedingly happy.

14401. When you talk of the home being such an advantage, you are talking of the ideal home, and not of the home of that particular class, because in a home of that particular class you may rightly say that the children stay up till ten or eleven o'clock at night?—Yes.

14402. So that when you are comparing it with the home, it is not with the home of the class to which that child belongs?—It is with the good home of the class to which that child belongs.

14403. But not the average home?—No.

ss of lic Poor schools.

14404. I gather you think that the Catholic schools are particularly successful in their effect on the children?—Yes, I do. I think they are managed by women who have given up the whole of their lives to it, and who have been prepared by drastic training for it. Then there is the fact that the system adopted for the management of the school does not come to an end when a Reverend Mother is withdrawn or dies, but is at once carried on by someone educated on the same principles and perhaps even more adept and clever than she has been.

14405. That is to say, where you get a religious order looking after education, you get continuity of good?—You get continuity of good, which you can get in no other way.

Miss Ina Stansfeld.

21 May 1906.

14406. Do you especially think that is so with respect to the education of girls, in other words, that the Orders are particularly successful with the girls?—I think they are particularly successful with the girls, and I think they are wonderfully successful with the boys. It was a very bold experiment to put into the hands of Sisters of Mercy, St. Mary's, North Hyde, certified for 697 boys, which had been allowed to get into a very unsatisfactory condition by a brotherhood who did not know how to manage the schools. The boys now have carried off the shields for football and for cricket from all the metropolitan schools; the schools have been re-organised, the boys are in good hands, the discipline is excellent, and the schools are thriving.

14407. On the whole, would you say that the Catholic schools are on a very high level?—I think they are on a very high level. I think the Catholics are great eductionists. I am not a Catholic myself.

THIRTY-FOURTH DAY.

Tuesday, 22nd May, 1906.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I., etc., etc., etc. (Chairman).

The Right Hon. Sir HENRY A. ROBINSON, K.C.B.
The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S.
Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.
Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
Mr. FRANCIS CHANDLER.
Dr. A. H. DOWNES.
The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
Mr. C. S. LOCH.
Mr. J. PATTEN-MACDOUGALL.
Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.
The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.
Professor WILLIAM SMART.
The Rev. H. RUSSELL WAKEFIELD.
Mrs. BERNARD BOSANQUET.
Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.
Miss OCTAVIA HILL.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary).
Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Miss INA STANSFELD, re-called; and further Examined.

t death in Poor institu-

14408. (Mrs. Webb.) I want to ask you about the death rate of infants; looking at the total number of deaths of infants and the number born, it is an amazingly low death rate. I make it out to be between 40 and 50 per 1,000. The average death rate is, I think, about 150, and the death rate amongst that class in those districts would be about 250. If this really represents the deaths of infants in the first year it is only about 40 or 50 per 1 000, which is an amazing result?—Do you refer to the death rate of infants contained in my memorandum?

14409. Yes; you have the number of infants dying and the number of infants born, and it works out, if those figures are correct, at something between 40 and 50 per 1,000 for the different years, which is an amazingly low death rate?—It is an amazingly low death rate. I believe those figures are absolutely accurate.

14410. My only doubt is whether you were really calculating the first year; if it was only for the first two months it would be amazing?—It is for the first month.

14411. You said it was for the first year?—I ought not to have said so; it was for the first month.

14412. Even then it is very low. Could you give it us rather more accurately? Could you find out whether it is for the first month or for the period which those infants inhabited the workhouse, which I rather suspect it is?—It is for the period for which those infants were in the maternity wards.

Miss Ina Stansfeld.

22 May 1906.

14413. That might not be the first month, it might be the first three months?—No, it is the first month.

14414. I want to clear that up. It is very likely that it is the number that die in the workhouse before the mother takes her discharge, which she might do in a month or in three months. All I should like brought out is, taking the real death rate apart from the period death rate, taking the real comparison, whether the infants born in workhouses and infirmaries have an enormous advantage from the point of view of survivorship. Would it be possible for us to get those statistics, first, as regards the comparison of the death rate with the ordinary death rate of that class in that district; and also in comparison with the death rate of infants belonging to mothers who are given outdoor relief when they are lying-in. I think those are very important points? I think I could get those statistics. [Miss Stansfeld subsequently replied as follows:—"I have endeavoured to ascertain the ordinary "death rate but am informed by the Registrar General that "he his unable to furnish me with the death rates of infants "under one month of age."]

14415. (Mr. Booth.) Are the cases followed up at all? Do you know what happens after the first month? If they leave the workhouse after the first month, do you at all know what happens to the mother and child,

Miss Ina Stansfeld.

22 May 1906.

say, during the next six or eight months?—Many of the ladies on the Girls' Aid Committees help the girls, and they do follow the girls up very closely and see how they are going on.

14416. There is no information you could bring forward about that?—I gave some information on that point in my appendix on that subject. I could also obtain more information quite definitely if you wish for it.

14417. I think it would be rather important if it proves that the death rate is very low while under the charge of the guardians, because therefore, presumably, the child left in a good condition, and it would be very interesting to know whether after that time there is possibly an exceptionally high number for the rest of the year?—I will if possible obtain that information. [Miss Stansfeld subsequently replied as follows:—"I have been unable to "obtain information as to the death rate of infants after "discharge from the maternity wards and after the mothers "have taken their discharge from the workhouse."]

Duties of lady assistant inspector.

14418. (Mr. Bentham.) In your memorandum you do not specify very definitely your duties as an assistant inspector?—My duties have never really been very clearly specified. I am the assistant inspector for the Metropolis, and I assist the inspectors in both the districts: the district north of the Thames, and the district south of the Thames. My special duties have, I think I may say, lain in the maternity wards, in the workhouse nurseries, in the inspection of the nursing of the infirmaries, and of the schools; those duties being such as are specially women's work.

14419. And cottage homes?—Yes, they come under the schools.

14420. Do you deal with children boarded-out within the union at all?—No, I have nothing to do with children boarded-out.

Meaning of "infirmary" and "hospital" in different parts of the country.

14421. The word, "infirmary," as you use it, applies absolutely to the workhouse nursing institutions, is that not so?—Entirely.

14422. The word "hospital," when you use it, applies to voluntary institutions?—Yes, St. Bartholomew's, St. Thomas' and the like.

14423. Exactly the opposite is the case in the north, I think?—Yes.

Attractiveness of maternity wards in Poor Law infirmaries.

14424. You seem to point out a danger in having maternity wards connected with the infirmaries because of their attractiveness. It might be an encouragement for people to avail themselves of these wards because they are situated in the infirmaries you say; and you instance a case of a married woman who availed herself of the maternity ward who ought not to have done so; is that not so?—Yes.

14425. You recommend the establishment of a maternity institution which might be, as I understand, a joint institution for all the London boards?—Yes. I recommend that all the young women applying for maternity relief for the first time, should be provided for in a special and central maternity institution. I further recommend that this need having been supplied, the discipline of the workhouse and infirmary maternity wards should be greatly increased—that they should be depleted of all luxuries and conducted on hard and plain lines deterrent to the undesirables and the vicious characters who, at the expense of the ratepayers too often make use of them. If this were done it would surely be necessary to make some special provision, duly safe-guarded for the very small class of respectable married women, bona fide deserted wives, or women suffering from extreme poverty. It is well known that the best administered unions are those whose guardians make the most searching investigations into the characters and circumstances of the applicants for relief. The better classification of applicants for maternity relief must depend upon increased individualising efforts, and the institution by each union of a ladies' committee, such as that at Hampstead—so long as London is not unified for the purposes of Poor Law administration, which unification would at once initiate a readjustment of the principles of relief.

Proposed new central institution for maternity cases and its effect.

14426. And the object of that institution is, if I understand you aright, to take in those first cases, and also, you say, so that respectable married women might avail themselves of the institution?—Yes.

14427. Then you are not afraid of an institution of that class, if it were formed, attracting women of a respectable class to it? Would it not rather tend in that direction?—It might possibly tend in that direction to a very small degree; but I think that the feeling is very strong, so far, in the minds of the women of the working class, that it is rather a social disgrace to accept help from the Poor Law under any condition. They would feel it much less than applying to the workhouse, as they feel it very much less applying to the infirmary than applying to the workhouse.

14428. They would feel it much less applying to be admitted to an institution of this kind than they would to an infirmary, would they not?—Yes.

14429. Therefore, it is making it easier?—I have ventured to suggest that I should like to see the methods adopted by the Hampstead guardians adopted all over London. The amount of education ladies on committees of that kind can give to the women is great; showing them how to help themselves and how to prevent themselves coming upon the rates. Such a committee must always be a great protection against the undue use of the Poor Law maternity institutions.

14430. In the case of the person you mention who refused such assistance because of the good treatment she had heard of in the workhouse infirmary?—Yes, it does take a little time, I think, to educate a neighbourhood.

14431. Do you not think there would be less chance of educating people to apply to other institutions if a separate home, such as you suggest, was established under the Poor Law?—I suggested that that institution should be primarily established for young women applying for maternity relief in the first instance, and I should always hope that it would exist mainly for them. The number of cases of bona fide respectable married women I do not think would be very great. It is always possible, of course, to institute charges.

Power to recover cost of maternity cases in Poor Law institutions.

14432. Under the Poor Law?—I think in that case the Hampstead Board, finding that the woman had applied after all to be taken to the infirmary, charged her husband 10s., half the doctor's fee, 8s. a week maintenance in the infirmary; 34s. in all; there is a balance due of 10s. for which a county court summons has been taken out. I think I am right in saying the Kensington guardians have made charges.

14433. They cannot institute a charge, can they; they can only enforce repayment; there is a difference, is there not?—I ought to have called it enforcing a repayment.

14434. There is a distinction there which ought to be noted?—Yes.

14435. (Mrs. Webb.) Do they take paying patients? Do they willingly accept anyone who is ready to pay the cost, as they do in lunatic asylums?—I am sorry I cannot answer that question.

14436. They do that in pauper lunatic asylums?—Yes.

Difficulties to proposed central institution for maternity cases.

14437. (Mr. Bentham.) I want to point out that the danger you wish to avoid by having a lying-in ward in a workhouse in preference to one in an infirmary would probably be enormously enhanced by the provision of a separate establishment which is to be a more desirable establishment even than an infirmary, it being apart altogether from either workhouse or infirmary. There may be a danger, but I think it would be more than counter-balanced by the benefits which would result from saving the younger women from evil influences, and as I have said, it is primarily in their interests that I make the recommendation.

14438. Do you think that could be practically carried out? Boards of guardians, of course, differ in their view as to the kind of case they would probably desire to send there; and it is rather unlikely that you could get a number of boards of guardians to join who would carry out explicitly the view that you have of only selecting that particular kind of case; there would be a danger of their sending all the cases, would there not?—Yes, but some conditions of admission would need to be instituted.

14439. Particularly if they had to pay their share of the cost on any other basis than on the number of persons sent. They would want to avail themselves of the advantages which they were paying for? They would ultimately send all the cases if it paid them to do so. Do you not think it would tend in that direction?

—I think in shaping any new scheme dangers always crop up which one hardly realises beforehand, they have to be met and handled as they arise.

14440. Do you think your recommendation avoids the danger which you point out exists by providing for such cases in an infirmary ?—No.

14441. It is not made with that object ?—No, it is made primarily to provide greater seclusion and more helpful assistance to young women who come for the first time.

orkhouses th lying-in ards.

14442. Are there any lying-in wards in workhouses as apart from the infirmaries, where the infirmary is at a distance from the workhouse ?—Yes.

14443. Where are they ?—St. Pancras and Marylebone.

14444. St. Pancras is quite an infirmary on the workhouse site; there is a matron of the infirmary also, a resident medical officer ?—Yes; perhaps St. Pancras is not a good one to quote, but I was rather thinking of the infirmary at Dartmouth Park Hill and the workhouse near King's Cross. Marylebone, of course, is some distance.

14445. Are there no other kind of sick cases on the workhouse site than lying-in cases ?—Do you mean in the case of the Marylebone infirmary or St. Pancras infirmary ?

14446. In the case of Marylebone ?—Yes, there are sick wards.

14447. Therefore, it is really an infirmary, is it not ?—No, it is a workhouse.

14448. Have they a resident medical officer ?—No.

14449. Have they a matron of the sick ward apart from the workhouse matron ?—They have a superintendent nurse.

14450. Then it is quite an infirmary, is it not ?—No, it is a very large workhouse; it is an unusually large workhouse and there are perhaps an unusual number of infirm in the workhouse sick wards.

14451. I want to get exactly what you meant by a workhouse in that case, whether it is a lying-in ward in a workhouse which is an able-bodied workhouse with no other sick cases there; did you mean that ?—I meant a lying-in ward in a workhouse.

14452. Even though there might be no other sick cases there ?—Whether there are, or whether there are not.

ossibility of tending efulness of oluntary ing-in stitutions.

14453. In your appendix (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. XXVI. (O), you give a list of the lying-in institutions in London. Do you think those institutions could be made useful to the extent of taking the cases which you would recommend to be sent to a special home that you suggest being formed ?—I think if that method were taken up firmly and with enthusiasm they could be made to meet it, perhaps entirely.

14454. You think with organisation all the cases you have mentioned might be dealt with outside the Poor Law ?—Yes, that would meet all that I wish, because what I want is that the young women should never be allowed to get accustomed to workhouse ways or workhouse society.

ttitude of ntral Midives Board wards Poor aw stitutions training hools.

14455. You mention in your memorandum the Central Midwives Board and the fact that they refused the application of the Whitechapel Guardians to have their infirmary recognised as a training school for midwives; is that not so ?—That is so.

14456. And you refer to some structural defects; were those defects serious enough to warrant the board in refusing ?—In my opinion they were not.

14457. Do you think there is in the minds of the Central Midwives Board a prejudice against workhouse institutions ?—I think there is.

14458. Have you evidence of it in any other London infirmaries ?—I could not answer that question.

14459. Have any of the others been refused sanction ?—Yes.

14460. Could you name them ?—Bethnal Green has applied; it is not yet settled. Camberwell applied and there has been no result, except that a medical man has been to inspect. Chelsea has not applied. Croydon has applied and been accepted. Fulham has applied and been accepted. St. George's, Hanover Square (Wallis Yard), has not applied. St. George's-in-the-East: the medical officer made application to be recognised as a teacher, but he was refused, which naturally he took "as a gratuitous insult, and has therefore lost all interest in the matter." Lewisham: recognition promised, after carrying out the regulations as to the details of the ward work. Greenwich: granted. Hackney: the clerk of the board is in communication at the present time. Hampstead: the medical officer has applied for recognition as a teacher and has received no reply. Holborn: there is not sufficient accommodation. Islington has not applied. Kensington is recognised. Lambeth applied and was refused. Lambeth is one of our best lying-in wards.

14461. And that was refused ?—Yes; City of London (Thavies Inn), was refused. Marylebone Mile End and Bermondsey have not applied. Paddington: application made and refused. St. Pancras, Poplar, Richmond (Surrey) and Southwark (Newington) have not applied. Shoreditch: application has been made and the medical man or representative of the Central Midwives Board has made an exhaustive inspection of the wards. Stepney, Strand, Strand (Bear Yard) and Wandsworth have not applied. West Ham has been sanctioned by the Central Midwives Board. Westminster: no application. Whitchapel: letter received and permission declined owing to structural defects in the ward. Woolwich has not applied; it did not consider the number sufficient. I may say that the midwifery in Whitechapel, ever since I have been in office, has been extremely satisfactory.

Poor Law provision for female lock cases.

14462. You have referred in your memorandum to the lock wards in the London unions; are those usually provided for women separately from the other patients ?—I think that the arrangements for the reception of female lock patients in the metropolitan institutions leave a good deal to be desired. In a good many workhouses there are wards set apart for such patients, combined with those who are suffering from "scabies," which is a skin disease; and in one or two of the infirmaries there are female lock wards.

14463. Do you advocate separate wards ?—That is a very difficult question to answer—there are so many pros and cons. I do not advocate such patients being scattered about the general wards: I should prefer to see all young girls under twenty withdrawn entirely from the Metropolitan Poor Law institutions and treated in an institution, perhaps just outside London, where prolonged treatment, and what I think is much more important, prolonged influence could be brought to bear.

14464. Do you find that the common ward there has the same dangers that you find with regard to the common ward for maternity cases ?—Very much so indeed.

14465. Do you advocate detention in any of these cases ?—I could not answer that question.

Children suffering from measles and whooping cough in adult wards of Poor Law infirmaries.

14466. You have referred to the children that are in the adult wards of infirmaries. Is it usual to provide separate wards or separate detached buildings for infectious cases, such as measles and whooping cough ?—No, it is not—not separate detached buildings.

14467. The usual method is to scatter those children who are suffering from infection about the adult wards to avoid contact with the other children ?—It is the only method possible under the existing provisions.

Proposed separate institutions for infant [infectious] diseases.

14468. You think that is undesirable ?—I think it is always undesirable to have children among adult patients. I do not think that the presence of the adult sick is ever good for children, and I think as the children regain health their turbulence disturbs the adult sick, and when they are very ill their crying does. I should like to see all children withdrawn from metropolitan infirmaries where there are no children's wards.

14469. How would you have them dealt with ?—I should have four houses taken, north, south, east and west of the Metropolis for the reception of measles. It is not at all good to move a child too far when the measles has already established itself sufficient for diagnosis. I should have whooping cough dealt with in the same way as ringworm and ophthalmia are dealt with by the Metropolitan Asylums Board—I mean to say, in such institutions. Whooping cough lasts a very long time; education during that time is necessary, and if the child does not receive education a great deal of time is wasted.

Miss Ina Stansfeld.

22 May 1906.

Schools on the block system.

14470. You have described the various methods of dealing with healthy children. I do not see the distinction between what you term schools on the block system and cottage home colonies?—There is a great distinction. When an associated school is broken up into blocks the blocks receive a large number of children: quite too many to be compared in any kind of way with the largest cottage; and we have some very large cottages—too large.

14471. In some cases the houses which are provided on what you call the block system will have about forty or fifty children; does not that often obtain in the case of a cottage home colony?—No, not in a cottage home.

14472. Is that the only distinction—that there are a larger number in each cottage?—The blocks are not cottages at all—they are sections of a large building.

14473. It is an old barrack school divided up?—No, it is a school built for that special purpose.

14474. You have an objection, I think, to scattered homes?—Yes, I have.

Disadvantage of cottage homes for children.

14475. One reason you gave yesterday was that the mother who might not feel so well in the morning, when it is time to get up and look after the children, cannot have the comfort of a cup of tea brought to her bedroom, and cannot remain in bed longer than is usual; she must get up and attend to the children, whatever her state of health. Can she have those comforts that you desire her to have under any other system?—No. I think I mentioned that in connection with the mother of the scattered home whom I found one day last week working under great strain, and I was endeavouring to show that the scattered home is not really a home: that the mother of a family of her own could say to one of the older children, "Get up, and go down and make me a cup of tea, I am not very well this morning," but I venture to hope that no mother at the head of a scattered home would ever presume or expect such a thing to be done.

14476. The connection is between the idea in the child's mind as to what is a mother, and the idea in a mother's mind as to the duties of the child; her own child would do it, but she would not ask a child in a cottage home to do it?—Yes.

14477. Is that really so, do not all these little affectionate attentions enter into cottage home life?—They are necessarily limited, and I think that the size of the families in the cottage homes brings about many restrictions along those lines.

Proper number of children for a cottage home.

14478. What are the numbers that you had in mind at the scattered home that you take exception to?—The scattered home which I visited last week was certified for fifteen, I found in it thirteen. Personally I do not think that any cottage home should be certified for more than six children, if one woman alone is expected to take care of them.

14479. You think the nearer it approximates to the size of a real home the more likely it is to be successful?—That is what I mean.

14480. Your objection is principally to the size of the home and the unreal family life?—It could never be real where there are fifteen to twenty children mothered by one woman, and the number always kept up.

Advantages of large Poor Law schools.

14481. Is there not an advantage in this way that these children get in touch with the child life of the neighbourhood, although they have not swimming baths, cricket fields and so on, they still have the same advantage that people have of the same rank by sharing in the public provision of these things?—I do not think they have.

14482. As the training they receive in a large school? No, there is so much esprit de corps in a school, and I am glad to say that in our metropolitan schools on the Associated system, sports and games and activity are the order of the day. I cannot conceive any better counteractant of the pauper heredity of idleness.

14483. In dealing with the children in bulk it is not likely that any attendant can get to understand the child, and its little idiosyncrasies, and its temper, having so many children to deal with, as a foster mother can in a cottage home with a few children?—I do not quite agree there. I have known officers in our schools and I know officers in our schools to-day, who do get to know their children. I am quite sure that the mother in a scattered home who has to take care of fifteen to twenty children has not much time to get to know the idiosyncrasies of her children.

14484. You think it is an advantage for child life that it should get up to the ringing of a bell, it should have its breakfast announced by the same process, and dinner and all the rest of the meals of the day?—Yes I do not see any objection to the ringing of a bell.

Advantages of boarding-out for children.

14485. With regard to boarding-out, you have no opinion, have you?—I have indeed. I think that when boarding out is good it is ideal, quite the best system that the State can possibly adopt, but when it is not good it is fatal.

14486. On the ground I suppose that the child gets absorbed into the community more readily by that process, it being done in early life, than by any other method of dealing with children?—I think in an ideal boarded-out home, the child really becomes one of the family. I do think under those conditions that the child is likely to be understood and to develop as a natural and ordinary child would do, but boarding out can never deal with more than a comparative few of the number of children for whom the State has to provide.

Need for high class personnel in institutions for children.

14487. There are drawbacks in the same way to a large school are there not, that we might get an undesirable person as the head of the establishment. Take the Brentwood case for instance. You remember that, do you not?—I have heard of it.

14488. The person there got five years' penal servitude for cruelty?—That case occurred before I was appointed. That leads up to an expression which I should like to give, and that is that I do not mind really so very much which system is adopted if the personnel of the administrator is all that can be desired. All the systems depend upon those who administer, more than upon their methods.

14489. There must be a difference in principle in the different methods that are in vogue; with boarding out you admit that the child is more readily absorbed into the community and becomes one of the family and has a home, that is different entirely to any kind of training it can possibly have in a large institution, therefore, it is different in that respect, and, in a lesser degree probably, scattered homes have a tendency to get the children absorbed into ordinary society. You agree to that distinction, do you?—No, I do not think I do agree with that distinction. I think the children in scattered homes are exceedingly marked and set apart. For instance, in the house of a natural mother the front door is generally open; the door of a scattered home is always hermetically closed; the steps are scrupulously clean, and there are a great many institutional distinctions which apply to the children as well.

14490. There again it is management, is it not?—You mean it depends on the mother.

14491. Yes.—I suppose it does.

Difficulty in obtaining proper foster-mothers for children.

14492. With regard to the training of foster mothers you said that there ought to be some method of training the foster mothers who will take care of the children in a scattered home. Yes.

14493. That would apply to the block system or to the cottages in a colony, would it not?—It would certainly apply to cottage homes, whether in colony or whether scattered.

14494. Do you find that suitable foster mothers can be so well obtained in the south?—No, I believe there is very universal difficulty in finding the right women. There really is no doubt that that is a very serious difficulty.

14495. Do you find that obtains elsewhere, say in the north of England?—I do not know anything of the working of the system in other parts of England as to cottage homes.

Advantages of large Poor Law schools.

14496. (Professor Smart.) With regard to schools, your principle evidently is that the boarding school system which we approve with regard to children of the upper classes should be extended as far as possible to the pauper children?—Yes.

14497. At what age do you send them to the associated homes?—Three years of age.

14498. That is rather earlier than we care to send our own children to boarding schools, is it not ?—Yes.—But in the associated schools there are infants' departments where the little ones are kept entirely apart and are, as a rule, under the care of expert nurses, so that they do not really bear the brunt of mixing with the older boys and girls. They have charming nurseries, very suitable food and a programme of their own, and they mix hardly at all with the older ones. Boarding schools for our own class do not make provision for infants.

14499. Still one could quite well approve of the boarding school system for grown-up children, and strongly disapprove of it for young children, if it could possibly be aranged otherwise. I cannot help thinking that there is rather a contradiction between your statement that the boarding-out system is your ideal, and at the same time your speaking so strongly for the boarding school system with regard to associated schools ?—I think the boarding-out system is excellent where it is good, but I know the boarding-out system can only deal with a nominal number of the children the State has to provide for, therefore some provision must be made for a very large number, and in making that provision I must say that I do prefer an associated school and such treatment for the boys as is given by the training ship "Exmouth," off Grays, on the Thames.

Wisdom of provision for certain maternity cases by voluntary institutions.

14500. You speak of the efforts made by the Church Army, the Salvation Army, Rescue Societies, and so on, rendering assistance to women and making provision for them outside the workhouse. Those, of course, are women who otherwise would have to go to the workhouse ?—Yes, they are women who are in need.

14501. Is it not desirable that maternity cases should, so far as possible, be dealt with by private charity?—Always, I think.

14502. You are very strong on that ?—I feel that very strongly indeed; I also feel that the more Poor Law authorities and boards of guardians will co-operate with the volunatry charities the better will it be for the girls who are treated, and of course the better for the rates.

14503. I rather thought you had strong views on the deterrent influences of the maternity wards, for example, and where you approve of the Church Army, Salvation Army and so on, you consider them from the ground simply of the feelings of the applicants. There is no disgrace attaching to a person who goes to one of the Salvation Homes, for instance ?—No.

14504. Yet I think you were rather strong that there should be some disgrace ?—No, not for young women applying for the first time. I feel very strongly that many of them have been more sinned against than sinning, and they need discreet and wisely administered help.

14505. I am glad to get your opinion, so far, as to the superiority of private charity over the workhouse treatment ?—It is not because I think such girls are not well looked after in workhouse wards, because I think the influence brought to bear by the matrons and nurses working at any rate in the maternity wards of the Metropolis is excellent. It is entirely because of the companionship of habituées and women of bad, and not only bad, but dangerous, character, that I think that such young women should be kept out at any cost.

14506. (Mr. Bentham.) That can scarcely be avoided in the workhouse ?—You cannot avoid it.

Indoor relief to women with babies and its duration.

14507. (Professor Smart.) You speak in your memorandum of the young mother who elects to remain with her child during the first few months of life. Is that possible ?—Yes.

14508. By paying, I suppose ?—There is no payment. She simply remains in the house as an able-bodied woman.

14509. She can remain in the house as long as she likes ?—She can remain in the house till she takes her discharge.

14510. Exactly like an ordinary pauper ?—I have never known the guardians turn anyone out.

14511. (Mr. Booth.) Is that without limit of time ? Do you mean they would not turn her out after a year ?—They are never turned out until they take their discharge.

14512. (Miss Hill.) Is that so, even if they are strong and able to earn ?—Perhaps a lady may find them a place, but I do not think the guardians turn them out.

14513. (Mr. Booth.) If a woman had a baby outside, and after six months she was still able-bodied, would she be allowed to come into the workhouse ? Where does the destitution come in ?—What is destitution ? A woman who is going to work may come to the end of her week's wages and may be destitute. She has got through the last few shillings she earned, she is destitute.

14514. Is every woman who has a child with her to support necessarily destitute ? That gives an entirely new conception of destitution. (Miss Hill.) Is it because it is difficult to prove that she can support herself and the child ?—As Mr. Nunn has said to me, the theory of the English Poor Law is that you test the ability or the inability of able-bodied men and women to work by using the workhouse test; that is supposed to be a sufficient deterrent in itself to prevent any able-bodied persons who could maintain themselves out of doors accepting that.

14515. (Mr. Bentham.) In that respect they are treated like all other inmates of the house, that is, they remain in, unless there is somebody who takes an interest to get them out, or the guardians ask them to take their discharge ?—Exactly so, and they remain among the able-bodied.

The circumstances of women using the Poor Law maternity wards.

14516. (Professor Smart.) In your memorandum you speak about the factory girls of Stepney and so on. I suppose that you would say that, with the current rate of wages which these women earn, it would be quite impossible for them to pay their own maternity expenses ?—I should think absolutely impossible.

14517. Do you mean the married women as well ?—When a married woman works in a factory, one naturally presumes that her husband is also working, and that their wages conjointly ought to be able to produce the payment.

14518. Of those cases you mention, the factory girls for example, and the other class which I see you mention, namely the theatrical and music hall profession, is a large proportion that of single women ?—Yes.

14519. It is rather an unpleasant question, but I think it must be asked. You have made yourself acquainted with the antecedents of these factory girls as far as possible, I suppose ?—I have not time to make myself acquainted with the antecedents of individual women in the ward. Do you mean to say their circumstances ?

14520. Yes. Have you thought anything, for example, of the connection of low wages with immorality ?—No, I have not.

14521. Do you consider, as a class, these girls are the victims of circumstances, of passion, or of necessary conditions attaching to low wages ?—Of defective education and insufficient home protection very often, I think.

14522. Do you not think that these low wages, especially in the case of warehouse girls, are very often supplemented by the wages of immorality ?—I do not think that it is so in quite so low and poor a class as that, but I am afraid in the rather better class of working girls in London that is so.

14523. I have been very much struck by the emphasis you give to the theatrical and music hall profession. Had you any particular reason for mentioning that ?—No, I only mention that in all the maternity wards I find a small proportion, not a very large proportion. They are generally very homeless and look very sad and lonely.

14524. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) They are very badly paid too ?—Yes.

Possibility of making maternity relief deterrent.

14525. (Professor Smart.) You speak of the deterrent policy adopted by at least one union. Would you mind telling us what you mean by the deterrent policy ?—Not making the maternity wards too pleasant.

14526. Under a definite policy ?—A definite policy not to make the maternity ward too pleasant, or to give the patients any comforts they could do without.

14527. Have you heard any expression of the principle on which they do that, and why they do it ?—It is, I think, because the board which adopts that policy wishes to do everything possible to discourage the young women from coming in a second time. They feel those little differences

Miss Ina Stansfeld.

22 May 1906.

very much. In one of the maternity wards there is an old nurse who has been there very many years. She is an exceedingly kind woman, and if she thinks a patient is not very well and she is making a cup of tea for herself after lunch, she will say to the patient: "I am going to make a cup of tea for myself, I will make one for you too"; and she makes it and takes it to her. I generally find that ward pretty full. I am quite sure that there is a system of telegraphy among the Metropolitan paupers, and that they readily find out where they receive such little attentions and where they do not.

Metropolitan maternity homes.

14528. You speak of Metropolitan maternity homes; what are these?—By a Metropolitan maternity home, I mean those of which I have given a list in my Appendix III. They represent voluntary charities.

14529. Always?—Yes.

Degree of feeble-mindedness of unmarried mothers in workhouses.

14530. With regard to the 75 per cent. of the feeble-minded that you spoke of, you do not mean simply stupid, feckless, and unintelligent people, but you mean people whom you would definitely say are feeble-minded?—No, I do not mean people whom I should say definitely were feeble-minded. I mean young women who entirely lack the power of self-support in life and who are not mentally up to the average. One meets such people in all classes.

14531. You do not mean people who are what we call in Scotland "wanting"?—Well, not very bright.

14532. Exactly?—There is a great difference between "not very bright" and "wanting," is there not? There is a distinct line, is there not?

The workhouse routine for mothers with babies.

14533. You use the words "feeble-minded class," but the class of stupid women and unintelligent women, I am afraid, is enormously large compared with the feeble-minded. With regard to the workhouse nurseries, how far is it compulsory on the mothers to spend the greater part of the time in those nurseries?—When a mother is discharged from the maternity ward and elects to remain in the workhouse she is at once put to able-bodied work, and as a rule pretty hard work, in the laundry, for instance, and she assists the upkeep of the institution by her laundry work, or she will go and work in the scullery. Then there are only stated times, such times beyond the hours when she has to be at work, that she is allowed to be with the child in the nursery. She sleeps with her child.

14534. And that is all?—Yes.

14535. After work where does the child go, with the mother in the ordinary common sitting-room?—To the nursery.

14536. Always?—Yes.

14537. She can only see the child in the nursery?—Yes.

14538. She cannot take it into the house?—No.

Disadvantages of cottage homes as compared with Poor Law schools.

14539. (Miss Hill.) I am extremely interested in your opinion as to the relative merits of the small homes and the schools, because it rather bears out my own impression; not that I am at all an authority upon the matter. May I ask whether your opinion is at all based on the feeling that in the small homes, if any evil does come into them, there is very much less possibility or chance of its becoming known?—Very, very much less, and I think that the dangers involved in those small bedrooms of conversation and undesirable anecdotes or experience related, which the children have witnessed before their admission, are so insurmountable and so great and important that cottage homes should be put out of court altogether on that point alone.

14540. That would have been my impression very much, but, quite independent of the brio and stimulus and animation of the school, the greater support to the teachers and officials of meeting one another is also better for the children?—Yes, it reflects very much.

14541. You really would feel there would be a danger in the smaller groups?—An intense danger.

14542. And in the small bedrooms?—Yes.

14543. Because, of course, these children have seen many things which children ought not to be talking about?—Of course they have; they have frequented the common lodging-houses; I know of an instance which occurred where the orphans of a respectable joiner and his wife who, as working people, had given their children every advantage and guarded them carefully and brought them up well; those children were left orphans suddenly, and they were sent to one of our Metropolitan schools on the cottage home colony system. They were two little girls, and they were put to sleep in one bedroom. Classification is very difficult when you have large numbers to deal with, and in a week or so there came along a girl about their age, who had been dragged about common lodging-houses by her parents, and who knew as much evil as most grown-up people know, and in two or three days she had told those children such terrible things that they were talking about it in the home and about the schools, and so it came to the knowledge of the superintendent and matron.

14544. Any danger of anything approaching to cruelty in the same way would not be found out?—Bullying might go on to an alarming degree; it might go on very much in boys' homes, of course.

14545. You have not a real family life, and it is no good calling it a home or calling the people mothers?—No.

14546. It is not like a boarded-out home, where there is the real family life in the cottage?—That is so, and personally I very much object to the use of the word "Mother." I do not think that we have any right to expect children to be brought to a home to meet a stranger whom they have never seen before in their lives, and be told that they are to call her "Mother." As a rule, children in that class do not mind what they call anyone—granny, or auntie, or anything; but every now and then you come across a child who has really loved her mother. In one instance which came to my knowledge the child looked up into the the face of the matron and said, "Must I?"

14547. You think the Metropolitan Poor Law Schools have very greatly improved; there is much more life in them now, more games?—Yes, they correspond with the high schools and the public schools. They are happy, bracing atmospheres, and the officers are as happy amongst themselves as the chi dren are amongst themselves, and one reflects upon the other.

14548. You find the children willing to return to the schools when they grow up, very many of them without any sense of disgrace, and with affection for it, I suppose?—Yes; one only has to go to the prize days and see old boys and girls returning so proud and happy if they are doing well.

Nurses' excessive working hours.

14549. (Mr. Gardiner.) Are you satisfied with the nurses' hours of work?—Are not the hours of nurses in some cases very long?—I am not at all satisfied with the nurses' hours of work. I think they are too long.

14550. Is there anything further you would wish to say definitely on that point beyond a general statement?—I do not think that that can be helped, unless there were considerably more nurses employed, or three shifts in the twenty-four hours were adopted, which would be at present quite impossible. I think the strain is very much too great upon the young nurses. There have been two cases of suicide in the last six months in London entirely due to the girls having been over-pressed and dreading their examinations.

14551. (Dr. Downes.) Were those in Poor Law institutions?—One was in a general hospital and one was in one of the infirmaries.

14552. This over-stress of nurses is not peculiar to Poor Law institutions, I take it?—No, I think it exists everywhere.

14553. (Mr. Gardiner.) Would you extend the powers of inspection under the Infant Life Protection Act?—I could not answer that question.

14554. You have not had an opportunity of getting information?—No.

Question of size of assistant inspectors' district.

14555. Are you able to give as much time as you would wish to the very considerable number of institutions under your inspection, that is to say, if there were not so many could not you give more time to the individual institutions, and so improve their level of administration?—I think there is such a thing as over-inspection, and as I cover the districts of two assistant-inspectors, I think that it is quite sufficient.

Difficulty of married couples with children obtaining Poor Law appointments.

14556. Do you wish to amplify what you have said in your memorandum about the Poor Law officers advertisements, because I thoroughly agree with what you have said?—It seems to me so inconsistent. We lay such tremendous stress upon the handling of our children, and the treatment they are to receive in these cottage homes, where they are to call the matron "Mother," and in some cases the husband "Father," and then you see the same body, representing the State, advertising for a married couple "without encumbrances"; it is altogether inconsistent. Of course, children are rather an inconvenience in an institution, but I think that more consideration towards children of officers might be given.

14557. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Do you think that perhaps one reason why women would prefer an infirmary even to an hospital would be that there are no medical schools in the infirmaries. I have known women who have a great objection to go into hospitals, because of the students, and the fact that their cases are interesting?—The maternity hospitals have medical schools, have they not, where students attend the women in their own homes. I think that there is a well-rooted objection to the Poor Law altogether, but I think that women are much less afraid of the infirmaries, and the maternity wards which are in the infirmaries.

14558. But, taking infirmaries altogether, do you not think, in all the wards, the women prefer them as having no medical schools attached, where their cases will not be made illustrative to the students?—Do you think they are quite aware of it?

14559. You think not?—I really have not worked sufficiently among the women outside in their own homes to be able to answer that. I do not think I could.

14560. I have met with very great objections?—I have no doubt there are such objections.

14561. You do not think it tells with regard to infirmaries?—I think a very comparatively small number of really respectable women apply for maternity assistance to the Poor Law at all.

14562. You have given us a list of a number of rescue homes and maternity charities. It is possible, I suppose, that these may become almost as demoralising as the maternity wards of a workhouse if they are not under good management?—Every institution depends enormously upon its administration, and I think all voluntary institutions have a tendency to change: either to be on the upward grade or else to be deteriorating.

14563. Can you tell me this, I do not know whether it is in your line: can anyone open a rescue home, or must they be inspected and certified? Is there any supervision at all of such places?—There need not be any supervision at all.

14564. You point out that a very large proportion of domestic servants come into the maternity wards. That indicates, I suppose, a very great carelessness, very often, on the part of their employers?—Very great carelessness on the part of their mistresses, but it also means, I think, that there are a great many country girls who come up to London quite ignorant of London ways and London's temptations; they are unprotected and unguarded, and they are thus led astray.

14565. That goes together with the carelessness of the mistresses who take no pains to provide for their leisure time?—Yes, and the means of recreation in London are surrounded by dangers to young and unsophisticated girls.

14566. Does it occur to you that there is any means of bringing home to employers their responsibility in this connection: that they are responsible for the girls who enter their families?—I suppose it can only be done through the Press, and I think such a society as the M.A.B.Y.S. must have an extraordinary influence along that line, because a number of ladies who visit as representatives of the M.A.B.Y.S., come into contact with the mistresses, and the mistresses have to account to them if a girl goes wrong obviously because she has not been properly looked after.

14567. Turning to the question of feeble-minded girls, I think everybody is agreed that if we could detain them in some way it would be well, but the object of that would be entirely their own protection, would it not—it would not be as a punishment?—First of all, it would be to protect them, and, secondly, surely, it would be a sort of safety for the State, because it is exceedingly hard that the State should have to bring up large numbers of feeble-minded children who cannot possibly be of any use to it. I should advocate permanent detention in institutions with every possible attraction, recreative and otherwise. This would be due to them.

14568. With regard to nurses, is it compulsory that they should wear their uniforms when they are off duty?—Do you mean their outdoor uniform?

Advantages and disadvantages of out-door uniform for nurses.

14569. Yes?—It is not compulsory, but I should like to see outdoor uniforms entirely abolished. Twenty years ago it was a protection to nurses in the streets of London, but now it is by no means a protection, rather the reverse; it is worn by women of all classes, of all grades of character; by women who are trained, by women who are not trained; by little nursemaids who earn about £8 a year, who in extraordinarily loud costumes, dirty cap strings, holey gloves, and untidy boots, take out their mistresses' babies. It is abused. Some years ago I met a society woman who told me she visited a hospital once a week, and she went on to say she always went to them in nurse's dress, because she thought it more sympathetic and suitable. Only last week I heard of a nurse who lent her uniform to a girl friend of hers, to be photographed in.

14570. It is considered to be picturesque?—Yes, I suppose it is, but anyone who lives in the streets of London, as I do, and sees the abuse to which it is put, would wish that all institutions would beg their nurses not to wear it, and that no board of guardians should ever think of providing outdoor uniform?

14571. At present it is provided for them, but they are not compelled to wear it?—In some very few institutions; I do not think that there is any instance of provision of outdoor uniform in Poor Law infirmaries, but I think some of the general hospitals provide it. Nurses wear outdoor uniform if they like, and they do not if they do not like, so it ceases to be a uniform.

14572. (Mrs. Webb.) May I suggest the one great advantage of the uniform is the question of expense; that you can look nice on £10 a year in uniform which you cannot look under £40 a year in ordinary dress. It really is a question of expense. You can look a charming person on £10 a year in uniform, but you cannot look at all distinguished and nice under £50 or £60 a year out of uniform?—There is the washing of those white strings.

14573. Even that, I went into very carefully with a nurse and we discovered that you can look very charming on £10 a year. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) But that adds to the possibility of abuse?—It does.

14574. (Mrs. Webb.) As a Sumptuary Law, as a mode of getting our living less expensive, it might be advisable. A uniform has a tremendous advantage, and I would like to see it adopted by many women?—I do not think it is at all a good thing that a nurse should leave the ward when she has not very long off duty, put her cloak over her apron, and get into an omnibus, which undoubtedly has an exceedingly septic atmosphere; that dress and that apron come back and bring, you do not know what, to the wards.

14575. (Mr. Bentham.) Is outdoor uniform ever provided by the London unions?—I do not think it is—(I think some of the general hospitals do)—but it is permitted. I once saw four or five nurses going out on leave from one of our infirmaries and they each had a costume of different colour, one had dark green, one dark blue, and so on. That is not uniform, there is no sense in it, and I believe it is worn by women of exceedingly doubtful character. I have no evidence to give of that, but I do not think I am wrong in saying so.

The supply of Poor Law nurses.

14576. (Mr. Chandler.) Do you think there is any difficulty in obtaining an adequate supply of nurses for Poor Law?—No I do not think the stream of probationers will ever run dry. I think there will be quite sufficient applications. I think as Poor Law nursing becomes more really recognised it will hold an increasingly good position. It is only a question of time, and I think there will be less and less difficulty.

14577. You think more women will take to it as a profession?—Yes, it has to live down great prejudices; it has to live down unkind words, which takes time and which is not easy.

Effect of Poor Law Superannuation Act.

14578. I had in my mind your reference to what you call the inadequacy of the Poor Law Superannuation Act as applied to the matrons and nurses. You do not think that has any effect of keeping ladies from adopting nursing as a profession?—I have no doubt if they compare what is given in the general hospitals, and find that much less is given in Poor Law Institutions, it would be a deterrent. The length of period of service to a thoughtful girl who chooses to go into it is very alarming. I do not think a matron or a nurse, especially under the Poor Law, ought to be required to work after she is sixty. I think it ought to be competent for her to resign at fifty-five

Miss Ina Stansfeld.

22 May 1906.

Need for lower qualifying age for pensions.

Nurses' pensions at voluntary hospitals.

14579. And yet you admit that at St. Bartholomew's hospital very few people apply for pensions, and few continue in the service for any length of time?—Yes a good many marry, and some go abroad. The training at St. Bartholomew's Hospital is looked upon as a good education and is an asset in the hands of a nurse, and at the end of her period she makes what arrangements she likes, she goes out to the Colonies, and she has a profession in her hands.

14580. A great many of them, of a large percentage, marry, and therefore cease to need it?—Yes, and at the London Hospital, they never have to give many pensions for the same reason.

Disadvantages of cottage homes as compared with large Poor Law schools.

14581. With regard to Poor Law schools, you hold some very pronounced views as to the merits of the different schemes. I notice you favour very strongly the associated school above all other systems in force?—Yes.

14582. You tell us, as a reason for your belief, that the last corresponds with that of the public and high schools with their peculiar advantages, amongst which you mention a band-master, accomplished musicians, drill instruction, and training in all different kinds of trades, etc., that are among the additional advantages of public schools; and the associated schools largely embrace those?—Yes.

14583. If the cottage home system embraces those features, your objection would mainly be removed?—Some of the cottage homes in colonies have all those points.

14584. Your objection is largely removed in a case like that, where the cottage home in colonies embraces all those features?—It is to a certain extent removed, but the cottage home bedroom would always be an insuperable objection to me.

14585. The fact of there being half a dozen children in a bedroom?—Not so many; two or three.

14586. Do you think there is all that absolute freedom from any of those contingencies you have referred to in a large dormitory?—Yes, absolute. The large dormitories are never left unguarded by attendants. After the children are once in bed they cannot talk, or, if they do talk, what they say is overheard. The officers sleep in cubicles in those large wards, and in some of the schools there is a night watchman and a night nurse.

14587. (Mr. Bentham.) There are other opportunities for conversation besides in the bedroom?—But not so favourable? The child is generally sent to bed a little earlier than it wants to go.

14588. (Mr. Chandler.) I was trying to find out how far your theory of contamination and improper discourse related exclusively to the bedroom. Mr. Bentham was putting the point which I was arriving at. There must be association in large numbers in all schools, whether in Poor Law schools or universities in this case?—There are so many officers about, and with such a large number of boys and girls rising to be monitors, after a good education they have a sense of responsibility, and they also act as witnesses; the children forget they are observed, but they are observed; they are always, I think I may say, under observation.

14589. My point again is this, if I can make it understood, that it does not necessarily follow that, because the children we have in our Poor Law schools come from a very poor class of people, they are more liable to be vicious in their habits than even a few amongst a larger and a better class?—I quite agree with you. I do not think it is a class question at all. I think it is a question for all to consider who have the management and the direction and the education of children, especially the boarding education of children.

14590. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to the nurses, at what age do you think they should be entitled to receive a pension?—I think they should be able to apply for a pension at fifty-five.

14591. Not before?—I think most women ought to be able to work till they are fifty-five.

Qualifying age for and amount of pensions for Poor Law nurses.

14592. With regard to hospitals, a great many of the nurses are doing work outside in particular cases, with long holidays in between?—That is so, and that is a great point.

14593. Therefore, is not it rather late to say fifty-five, if they are willing to retire at fifty?—Nobody would be more pleased than I should if it were possible to say fifty. The nurse I have quoted before as being so kind to the patients in the maternity ward of a workhouse is a woman of fifty, but that woman looks like sixty-five, because she has always been shut up.

14594. What pension do you think would be able to attract as good a class as possible to the service, considering the competition of hospitals and so on?—The London Hospital gives a very large pension?

14595. Do you think a pension approaching that is necessary?—No, I think not.

14596. What would you say?—That is a very important point, and it is one I have not considered. I feel its importance so much that I really do not like to answer without time for consideration.

Difficulties as to guardians sending feeble-minded women to voluntary institutions.

14597. I thought it might have occurred to you in the course of your visiting. With regard to these defective women, have you found that the guardians are disinclined, on account of the payment that is made, to provide for these women in an institution outside, when they first come into the maternity wards?—Some guardians might be, I suppose. I think the guardians of the Metropolis are very keen and realise very much the intense importance of segregating them, and that, for that reason, they would be more ready.

14598. Do you not think, that if you are to deal with this class as a whole, it would be necessary to make some quite special provision for them outside the infirmaries in connection with the Board, but requiring a payment for them at some home, and not allowing them to be in the infirmary?—I think that would be most important, and I think to make it at all effective it ought to be done on such a very large scale that it would be impossible to leave it to the discretion of the guardians.

High qualities required of Poor Law nurses.

14599. (Mr. Paton-MacDougall.) I think your view is that the position and the status of the Poor Law nurse is not what it really ought to be in the nursing world, or rather that it does not rank as high as nursing in the general hospitals?—I am obliged to admit I do not think it does rank as high. I do not think it would be so if the public understood how excellent the training under the Poor Law is, how Poor Law nursing really requires the best women, how it is infinitely finer work to nurse a poor bedridden woman who continually wants lifting and feeding, or to watch a chronic case, than it is to assist in one of those great accident cases in one of the general hospitals. I do not think it will be long before the public will come to this recognition, and before the public will also recognise that the private nurse, trained in a Poor Law institution, is likely to be an infinitely more effective and satisfactory private nurse than the private nurse trained in the general hospital.

14600. I am glad to hear you say that, because that view is held in many quarters now. I think the view is sometimes taken that, when nurses have to deal in the poorhouses or workhouses with all people of all classes of temper, who are always there, their position and their duty is sometimes rendered very difficult. I think Sir Henry Burdett himself said that, "Whereas in a general hospital any patient who may be guilty of gross breaches of rules, or may otherwise be found objectionable, can be dismissed from the hospital, patients in the Poor Law infirmary must still be retained and dealt with as the circumstances best permit." That is a view with which you agree?—Yes, I think that the nurse in the Poor Law institution is really worthy of a higher status than the nurse in a general hospital.

Suggested register of Poor Law nurses.

14601. Has it ever occurred to you that it might assist the Poor Law nursing if there were a register of nurses of Poor Law institutions who were qualified by examination?—I think State registration alone will entirely establish the Poor Law nurse's position.

14602. Apart from State registration, which would be of all nurses, would you advocate a register for Poor Law nurses only, with a qualifying examination? Do you think that would be of any benefit?—I think that might be a help, because the medical superintendents and the matrons are so intensely anxious; they are so keen about the results of those examinations. It would help along that line; it would grade the infirmaries at once, and it would be an incentive.

14603. What is your view as to the proportion of nurses which is required for efficient nursing in Poor Law institutions?—It is exceedingly difficult to say any number. I think I have mentioned that eight beds per nurse conveys nothing to me, unless I have found out exactly what the cases are. A nurse might be able to manage eight patients perfectly well, without any undue effort; but, on the other hand, eight patients might mean work far beyond one nurse, and perhaps beyond two. It is extraordinary how there are almost epidemics of heavy cases in some of the infirmaries.

14604. Is there a nurse now for each eight patients, or anything like it?—I could not answer that question.

14605. (Sir Samuel Provis.) I think in one of your answers you refer to the expediency of making the Metropolis one unit for Poor Law administration. You perhaps were not thinking then of Poor Law administration generally, but rather for the management of the institutions. Is that so?—Yes.

14606. You were not intending to say it should be one unit for outdoor relief?—No, I was not thinking of outdoor relief.

14607. Were you thinking of workhouses generally or only particular institutions?—I was thinking of all the institutions. I think there is a great deal of overlapping, and a great deal might be done under those circumstances which cannot possibly be done now.

14608. Would you think the number of institutions large to be placed under one body? There would be, of course, a very large number, would there not?—No, I do not think so, if under a competent body.

14609. How would they work? Were you thinking of committees?—Yes, I suppose one large central committee with sub-committees.

14610. With a committee to look after each institution?—Yes, a sub-committee. I am quite sure that a great deal might be done in that way, which cannot be done now.

14611. You made a very careful report in 1889 on the industrial training of girls in separate district schools, did you not?—Yes. Miss Ina Stansfeld. 22 May 1906. Miss Stansfeld's Report on industrial training of girls in Poor Law schools and its result.

14612. I think in connection with that you got a good deal of information as to how far girls who had been sent out to service had turned out satisfactorily? Could you state at all, generally, what the result of your investigation was on that matter? Was it good or bad?—It was excellent. I was trying to think of the percentage of failures, but I feel a little nervous in saying what I think it was, for fear I should not be correct. I believe the failures were 5 per cent.

14613. That information might be useful to the Commission, and if you would put that report in as a part of your evidence it would be convenient?—I will do so, certainly.*

14614. In the last paragraph of your memorandum you refer to the advertisement by boards of guardians for married couples without encumbrances. Is that usually the case with a master and matron?—No, couples with two or three children are engaged as superintendent and matron. Difficulty of parents with children obtaining Poor Law posts.

14615. What officers had you exactly in your mind?—Gate porters, drill masters, and subordinate officers.

14616. There is a good deal of difficulty, is there not, in providing accommodation for children of that class?—There would have to be a little rearrangement. I think those officers would have to live outside the schools or outside the institution, and provision would have to be made for their children while they were away at work. It disqualifies so many couples who would do excellent work. I think we might venture to expect that men and women who have children of their own are much more likely to understand other people's children than those who have not.

14617. (Mr. Lock.) Would the overlapping you refer to be overlapping as between institution and institution of inconnected with the Poor Law?—I think there is a good deal of overlapping in institutions both with the Poor Law and institutions not in connection with the Poor Law. Overlapping of institutions for relief of the poor.

14618. That is based on your finding applicants in one place and then in another?—Yes.

* Report (Cd. 237—1899) not printed in Appendix.

Mr. Edward John Mott, called in; and Examined.

14619. (Chairman.) You have been clerk to the guardians for the parish of Fulham for several years, I believe?—Yes. Mr. Edward John Mott. 22 May 1906.

14620. When were you appointed?—In 1899.

14621. You have written for us a memorandum stating what you think would be the effect of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, and we will take that memorandum as your evidence-in-chief (see Appendix, Vol. I. (A), No. XXVII. (A–B)) but there are one or two questions I should like to ask you upon it. Referring to paragraph 4, does the rule that guardians in all cases must pay 4s. in connection with each lunatic, at all diminish the amount that the guardians would otherwise get?—I have one case here that I will mention to you, which might perhaps show the effect generally. This is an actual case which has recently occurred. The man is in an asylum, and he is entitled to a pension of £19 9s. 8d. per annum. The pension is, I think, from the General Post Office, or, at any rate, from some Government Department. The guardians have agreed that the wife of the lunatic should draw the pension. If they received it themselves, of course, there would not be a charge of 4s. weekly in respect of the lunatic, and the claim upon the Exchequer would not be allowed. They have allowed the wife, as I said, to take the pension, but the Government Department have made it a condition that the grant shall not be allowed, and it is only being paid to the wife upon that condition. The effect of that is merely to throw the burden upon the Common Poor Fund. It makes no difference to Fulham whether they receive the grant or not, because if they receive it it would have to be credited to the Fund; and, therefore, by allowing the wife to take the pension, the financial effect on Fulham is just the same. Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14622. Does the wife bear the whole cost of the maintenance of her husband?—She contributes nothing at all. She draws his pension, and the claim on the Exchequer is not allowed, but the whole cost of the maintenance is a charge upon the Common Poor Fund.

14623. Then your suggestion would be, I suppose, that the payment of 4s. should be made, quite irrespective of contributions from relatives?—It would be better if it were so.

14624. Under the present system there would be a tendency to reduce the contribution from the relatives, so as not to make the cost of maintenance a loss of 4s. to the guardians?—That is possible.

14625. I gather from your fifth paragraph that your experience is, that people of rather a higher social status than before try to avail themselves of the gratuitous maintenance and treatment provided for them when suffering from certain forms of illness?—Yes, that is so. Higher class of person applying for gratuitous treatment of infectious diseases.

14626. Is that tendency increasing, do you think?—The percentage of admissions to notifications in the case of the hospitals of the Metropolitan Asylums Board has increased in the case of scarlet fever from 42 per cent. in 1890 to 84 per cent. in 1904, and in the case of diphtheria from 17 per cent. in 1890 to 79 per cent. in 1904; so that the number of admissions has gone up very considerably indeed in consequence of that.

14627. Is that rise simply due to the numbers having gone up, or is it due to a special outbreak; in other words, have there been any exceptional circumstances to disturb that comparison that you make?—None whatever, I think.

14628. It just shows the tendency of which you were speaking?—Yes, quite so.

Mr. Edward John Mott.

22 May 1906.

14629. Are your figures for the Fulham union or for the Metropolis?—They are the figures for London.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14630. From paragraph 9 I gather that you think that the distribution of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund operates rather to the detriment of the salaries of certain Poor Law officials in London?—Yes, I am sure it does.

Detrimental effect of Metropolitan Common Poor Fund on salaries of Poor Law officers.

14631. In consequence of the local authorities having to make special applications in every case to the Local Government Board?—I do not know that it is entirely in consequence of having to make special application to the Local Government Board; I think it is because of the operation of the Common Poor Fund.

14632. That is the say, the guardians do not wish to put any burden upon the local rates in connection with these salaries?—Of course, the guardians are very much averse to that.

14633. Is there not a system of gratuities in force by which in certain cases, with the assent of the Local Government Board, a special grant will be made to an officer out of the local rates?—That is being done to some extent, but, of course, the guardians do not like that sort of thing. It is very objectionable to everyone concerned—both guardians and officers.

14634. It is invidious and personal?—Yes; it is most objectionable.

Imperial contribution to cost of relief in London and the country.

14635. Would you look, please, at paragraph 24: that seems to me a little germane to what you complain of in paragraph 9. You say there, "In London, of the amount expended in connection with the relief of the poor about 5 per cent. is contributed from the Imperial Exchequer, as compared with about 30 per cent. outside the Metropolis." How do you get those two sets of figures? Is there not a contribution from the Imperial Exchequer which goes through the London County Council and is paid under the head of "County rate"?—That is the 5 per cent.

14636. It is not more than 5 per cent., then?—No, it is not more. There is another grant which probably you have in your mind, but that is a charge not on the Exchequer contribution account, but on the county rate.

14637. The Imperial Government contribute to that, do they not?—I think there is some small balance which partly makes it up, but it certainly is not sufficient to pay the whole of the grant by a very long way.

14638. What do boards of guardians outside the Metropolis get, which inside the Metropolis they do not get, from the Imperial Exchequer?—They get a grant based upon the amount paid in respect of the salaries and maintenance of their officers on an average of the five years ended Lady Day, 1888. It is paid under the Local Government Act, 1888.

14639. And is very much in excess of any similar contribution to the London unions?—Very much.

Detrimental effect of Fund on Poor Law salaries.

14640. Under the procedure laid down, application has to be made to the Local Government Board in connection with an increase of salary of certain officials, from which the provincial guardians are exempt, I believe; is that so?—I think that the provincial guardians have to apply to the Local Government Board for sanction in the same way.

14641. How does the administration of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund operate to the detriment of the Poor Law officials in London?—I have one or two cases here, and perhaps the best thing would be to let you have them. The first one I made a note of is that of a sculleryman in the infirmary. The man had been in the service of the guardians for ten years, and it was proposed that his wages should be increased from 20s. to 22s. per week. The Local Government Board at first refused to sanction it. The man was at work from six o'clock in the morning till six o'clock at night, and he only had only alternate Sundays off. The Local Government Board finally wrote as follows: "I am directed to state the Board have again given the matter their consideration, but that they do not feel justified in assenting to any increase in the present charge upon the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund in respect of this officer's remuneration. They would not object, however, to the amount of the proposed increment being paid to the officer out of the common fund of the parish."

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14642. Is what you mean that, although the assent of the Local Government Board may in certain cases be required as regards an increase in the salary of provincial officers, yet the fact that the Local Government Board are supposed to specially guard the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund makes them more reluctant, as regards London, to give their assent to those increases than they would be in the country; am I right?—I suppose they are anxious to secure that one particular district is not getting more out of the fund than another in the way of salaries.

14643. The idea of the equalisation of salaries, so to say, is present to their mind, and they fear that an increase in one quarter might be followed by demands for an increase in many other quarters which, if a precedent were once set, it would be difficult to refuse?—That, of course, must be the reason.

Proposed "block-grants" from Fund toward general cost of Relief.

14644. I see you are in favour of there being a common fund, but I see from paragraph 16 that you would prefer some other system of distribution, and I think you suggest population as a basis?—Yes, I do.

14645. Your idea would be, would it, simply a grant in aid of local rates, or would you attach any conditions to it?—The grant should, of course, be for the relief of the poor; but it should not be ear-marked to any particular item.

14646. The drawback to that might be that as regards certain special services—the nursing of the sick, and infirmaries—which it was desirable should be kept up in a high state of efficiency, they might—I do not say they would, but they might—be allowed to lapse into a state of inefficiency, the money which was obtained from the common fund going to other services?—That could always be guarded against by making it a condition that the grant would not be allowed in the event of such a state of affairs being brought about.

14647. Then there would have to be some conditions attached?—Yes, possibly.

14648. It would not be simply an unconditional grant in aid of the local rates?—No, perhaps not.

Effect of increased comfort of Poor Law institutions in regard to the workhouse test.

14649. In paragraphs 17, 18, and 19 you put forward a very interesting theory, namely, that the increased cost of the institutions has made them so comfortable that they have ceased to be an effective deterrent against applications, and that, therefore, the number in the workhouses has gone up until they are practically full, and consequently in times of distress they are not able to apply the test of the house, and outdoor relief has gone up to a considerable amount. Am I accurate in so describing your theory?—That certainly seems to have been the position. What I endeavoured to do was to compare the London system with practically what would be a national system.

14650. Do you think that if your method of distributing the fund could be adopted, it would check what you consider has been the tendency just referred to?—I have every hope that it would. The theory is that instead of having an equal rate which all bodies should draw upon according to their expenditure, they should be provided with, as near as it is possible to get it, an equal income.

Anomalies as to charge on Fund of cost of relief to sick children.

14651. I believe there are certain anomalies which have been permitted, by which certain boards of guardians are allowed to get relief for children maintained in sick asylums, which concession has not yet been made to other boards of guardians?—That is so.

14652. Is your board of guardians one of those boards which have had this concession?—No, we have not had it. It is due to the fact that in the Poor Law statutes the word "infirmary" does not appear. An infirmary is a workhouse, and the maintenance of children in a workhouse is not to be made a charge upon the fund. The children whose maintenance is charged on the fund are in asylums. Of course, these asylums really are infirmaries, just the same as the separate infirmaries, and they were established equally with the infirmaries as a consequence of the passing of the Metropolitan Poor Act. This was quite an oversight, I should think.

Effect of Fund on recovery of maintenance from relatives.

14653. In paragraph 23 you point out that in certain cases the recoveries from relatives, which are very difficult to effect, go to the credit of the common poor fund, and not to the credit of the parish?—Yes, that is so.

14654. In your judgment that has an inevitable tendency to check the efforts that would otherwise be made to get these recoveries?—I think it must be so.

tropolitan mmon or Fund.

14655. It is, I assume, an unpopular and a very tiresome work ?—Very, indeed.

14656. Should you think that this operates to any considerable extent in preventing the relatives from otherwise contributing as they ought to ?—The figures are not published, and it is very difficult to say how that operates. I have a list of figures here in respect of the half-year ended Michaelmas, 1903, from which I notice that for Fulham, for instance, where we try to do the work as carefully as possible, £1,107 was credited to the common poor fund within the half-year; while in the adjoining parish of Chelsea, a parish certainly as rich, with more pauperism (in respect of which there should be a larger sum collected), the amount credited is £493.

14657. Are you allowed first to repay yourselves the necessary legal expenses, if there are any ?—The commission of the collector is a charge on the fund. I have two of the claims here; I do not know whether any of the Commissioners would like to examine them; if they are not acquainted with the fund, probably they may like to see them (*handing in same.)

14658. You contend that as this is necessary, unpleasant, and distasteful work, unless the union has some inducement to undertake it, it naturally becomes rather lax in enforcing what would nevertheless be a legal claim ?—That certainly does appear to be so.

lect of nd in couraging onomy.

14659. In your last paragraph you state the change you would like to see, which would be not the unification of London for Poor Law purposes, but the continued existence of the present areas, and the distribution of the equalised rate on a basis which would not tend to extinguish the local interest; and at the same time the adoption of a system which would not penalise localities which are economically administered. Are there cases now where effective economy is at all punished under the distribution and procedure of the Common Poor Fund ?—I give an instance in paragraph 22 in connection with the emigration of children.

14660. That was a special charge, and I assume the £1,000 did not legally fall within the scope of the charges which can be imposed upon the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund ?—Not at present.

14661. How would the position of Fulham as regards that £1,000 be improved under your scheme ?—The grant that Fulham would receive would be independent of the cost of the maintenance of the children in the schools, therefore the expenditure of the £1,000 would relieve the parish of the burden of the seventy children, and the guardians would suffer no diminished grant.

14662. By removing those seventy children you got rid of certain charges that would have fallen on the local rates, and also certain charges that would have had to be paid out of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund ?—Yes. The principal charges are those which would have been charged upon the Common Poor Fund.

14663. Therefore really your contention is that this £1,000 was an economic expenditure, not only for the local rates, but for the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund in the future ?—Yes.

14664. The fact that the whole £1,000 had to come out of the local rates is deterrent to guardians adopting this or any similar measures, which, although they are a charge for the moment, tend to relieve both the rates and the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund for the future ?—It must have that effect, unless, of course, they all do the same. If every Board spent £,1000, the result, of course, would be different.

14665. I assume your contention is that you have benefited the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund at the expense of the local rates ?—At the expense of Fulham.

14666. I assume that there are other branches or other items of expenditure which might have that effect, and which the Fulham Board of Guardians would not care to incur, because, though the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund would be benefited, the money that came from the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund could not be applied to this purpose ?—Yes, that is so. Out-relief would be one of those.

14667. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Would you mind looking at Paragraph 5 of your memorandum, which refers to the maintenance of persons suffering from fever, small-pox and diphtheria. You point out there, quite correctly, that attention should be drawn "to the fact that the power that exists outside of the Metropolis for recovering the expenses of maintenance of a patient in a hospital for infectious diseases does not now extend to London. Then you add, "Such power was taken away from the Guardians by the Public Health Act, 1891;" was that quite so ?—Yes, that was so. The Act under which they were empowered was 52 and 53 Vic., Cap. 56, Sec. 3. By that Act the guardians were empowered to recover these expenses from any person so treated, or from any person liable by law to maintain him. That Section 3 was repealed by the Public Health Act, 1891, and most of the provisions of the former Act were re-enacted in the later Act, but the provision under which the guardians could recover the expenses of maintenance from the patients, or those liable for them, was not re-enacted, and consequently the guardians are not now empowered to recover any such expenses.

Mr. Edward John Mott.

22 May 1906.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund. Absence of power to recover maintenance of patient in infectious hospital in London.

14668. Then you were not thinking of the power the sanitary authority had, but you were thinking of the power the Guardians had under the 52 and 53 Vic., Cap. 56 ?—Yes. The sanitary authority has no similar power, I believe.

14669. It has outside London, and there was an exception made in the case of infectious diseases with regard to the sanitary authorities by the Public Health (London) Act. In paragraph 12 you suggest that superannuation allowances might properly be charged on the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund; in that case, you no doubt would say, too, that the contributions must be credited to the Fund ?—I suppose so.

Conditions of proposed charge of superannuation allowances upon Fund.

14670. Do you not think so ?—Yes, they should.

14671. You have suggested that there might be a contribution to boards of guardians, in lieu of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, based on population. Do you not think that the fact that the charges on the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund have been made in respect of particular kinds of expenditure has been beneficial in this way, that it has encouraged that class of expenditure; for instance, it has encouraged getting the children out of the workhouses ?—I think that would have happened the same if the boards of guardians had the funds at their disposal to bring about that change.

Effect of Fund in encouraging certain Poor Law reforms.

14672. Was that not one of the reasons why particular classes of expenditure were selected, namely, to encourage such things as getting the children and the imbeciles out of the workhouses, and so on ?—It was not extended to the remainder of England.

14673. No, and, therefore, they have not got them out ?—If they had the funds at their disposal, I have no doubt they would, whether the funds were specially ear-marked for that purpose or not.

14674. You would not question, would you, that the allocation of a charge for a particular purpose, or, to put it in another way, the benefit of enabling the guardians to charge the Metropolis with a certain class of expenditure, does tend to encourage that expenditure ?—It has done so in London; it certainly has encouraged the expense of in-maintenance.

14675. And you yourself say so, do you not, in your second paragraph—"For the purpose of evenly distributing so large a proportion of the cost of relief of the poor over the whole of London, the fund has been most useful, and especially has it been beneficial in enabling the provision of suitable establishments for the treatment of the sick poor and maintenance and care of children to be made in all parts of the Metropolis." The underlying notion of that is, is it not, that by making those things a Metropolitan charge you encourage them ?—Yes. Of course the actual cost of the provision of the establishment is not a charge on the fund. The cost of maintenance is, and in that way it has, there is no doubt, done as you say. London is now very well supplied with institutions, and the question is whether the time has not now arrived when some change might be made.

14676. Then you have explained with regard to paragraph 21 that the reason for the difference between the unions you have mentioned and the others, is really that the Metropolitan Poor Act does not include a separate infirmary as one of the institutions the cost of maintenance of which is a charge on the fund ?—Yes, that is so.

Cost of separate infirmaries not chargeable to Fund.

* Not printed in Appendix.

Mr. Edward John Mott.

22 May 1906.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14677. That of course, is statutory and therefore cannot be altered without legislation?—That is so. I think most of the boards of guardians appealed to the Local Government Board some four or five years ago to make the cost a charge on the fund, but nothing was done.

14678. I think a good deal is to be said for your view that there is no real difference between the case of a separate infirmary provided for one union, and the case of an infirmary provided for a number of unions combined?—There really is not much difference between the cases.

Imperial contributions to cost of relief in and outside London.

14679. In reference to paragraph 24, have you compared the amount which the unions outside London get from the officers' grant with the amount which unions inside London get from the indoor poor grant?—I made that comparison in 1902.

14680. What was the net result of the comparison?—At that time, after deducting the expenditure of the metropolitan asylums board in respect of infectious diseases, the poor law expenditure in London was £3,093,122 and the grants from the Exchequer Contribution Account amounted to £223,045; whilst outside of London the Poor Law expenditure was £8,348,618, and the grants, including that under the Agricultural Rates Act, amounted to £2,054,000.

14681. Did that take in all the grant?—Yes.

Origin of Officers' Grant in country and In-door Maintenance Grant in London.

14682. There is this difference, is there not, between the metropolis and the rest of the country, that in the metropolis the guardians get a grant in respect of indoor relief and they do not get it outside London?—The London grant is from the local rates of London.

14683. It is a grant to the boards of guardians, so far as they are concerned?—So far as they are concerned, yes.

14684. Outside London there is an officers' grant, and the grant for indoor relief was given in lieu of that officers' grant?—Yes, but it did not come from the same source.

14685. It did come from the same source, surely?—Not from the Imperial taxation.

14686. But the other does not come from Imperial taxation; it is a charge on the county fund?—No.

14687. Both are a charge on the county fund. In London the indoor relief is a charge on the county fund, and outside London the officers grant is a charge on the county fund?—The county council is the channel through which the money passes, but the outside London grant does not come from local rates.

14688. That has nothing to do with it; the amount which goes to the county council is not in any way based on the amount which is paid to the boards of guardians in respect of indoor officers; it is arrived at in an entirely different way?—It comes from the death duties and the beer and spirit taxes.

14689. Certain funds go to the county council in respect of a share in the estate duty and in the licences, but the amount which the county council get from that source in no way depends on what the charges are upon them in respect of officers?—It so happens that outside of London the amount which the county councils receive from this particular source is sufficient to pay the grant, whereas in London it is not. In that way the London grant is a charge on the county rates of London.

14690. That may show that the amount of the allocation to the London County Council as compared with the allocation to other county councils should be greater; but when comparing the amounts which the boards of guardians receive, you ought to compare the amount of the officers' grant outside London with the amount of the indoor grant inside London, ought you not?—If we were dealing with the grants in aid of Poor Law expenditure, of course I should do that.

14691. Perhaps you have not exactly compared them?—I know the amount of the indoor pauper grant in London it is £320,000. I have not included that.

14692. (Chairman.) Which is an imperial contribution paid through the county council?—I do not agree that it is an imperial contribution.

14693. (Sir Samuel Provis.) It comes from the county council?—Yes

14694. (Chairman.) Your contention is that though it comes from a central fund and a certain proportion of it does come from what I may call imperial taxation, the remainder comes from local rates; is that so?—Yes, the largest portion comes from the local rates. Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14695. And therefore is not a subvention, but is a —charge common to the whole of London?—Yes, it is.

14696. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The same would happen outside London, supposing the amount which a particular county council receives is not sufficient, would it not?—That might happen if it were not sufficient. Still that was not contemplated, because the Act provided that in the country the payment to the guardians should be made direct from the Exchequer contribution account. In London it is especially provided that this indoor pauper grant should be paid, not from the Exchequer contribution account, but from the county rate. So that it was never contemplated that the Imperial taxes should provide sufficient for London, whereas it was so contemplated outside of London.

14697. Was that so, having regard to the terms of Section 26 of the Local Government Act, 1888, which is the officers' grant?—Yes.

14698. Look at Section 26: "After the 31st day of March next after the passing of this Act, every county council, other than the London County Council, shall grant to the guardians of every Poor Law union, wholly or partly in their county, an annual sum for the costs of the officers of the union and of district schools to which the union contributes; and, until Parliament otherwise determine, the said annual sum shall be such sum as the Local Government Board certify to have been expended by the guardians of each Poor Law union during the financial year ending the 25th day of March next before the passing of this Act, on the salaries, remuneration, and superannuation allowances of the said officers (other than teachers in Poor Law schools), and on drugs and medical appliances." That would be paid out of the county fund, would it not?—No, it comes out of the Exchequer contribution account. See Local Government Act, 1888, Sec. 23 (2) (iii).

Difficulties to establishing one authority for in-door relief in London.

14699. I have only one other point, and that is with regard to paragraph 25. You would not be in favour of making a unification of London for all purposes, but would you think there would be any advantage in any unification for the purposes of the administration of institutions such as workhouses, infirmaries and so forth? I do not think there would be any advantage in unifying London for the purposes of administration. For the purposes of classification it certainly seems that there might be more to be said.

14700. That is to say, you could have different workhouses for different classes of people?—Yes.

14701. Do there seem to you to be objections to that arrangement, looking to the large number of the institutions?—Is the proposal to administer the Poor Law of London from one central authority?

14702. I am only taking the institutions now, and I am leaving aside the question of outdoor relief?—I think it would be an enormous thing. I do not see how you can separate the indoor relief from the outdoor relief.

14703. But you do that in certain cases, do you not; for instance, you place certain classes of the indoor poor now under the Asylums Board?—Yes, but that Board merely provides the establishments. It is the guardians that keep in touch with the inmates, and have all the local work.

14704. Does it seem to you that it would be in any way possible to apply that system to the indoor poor generally?—It would prove to be a most expensive system.

14705. You think the expense would be one objection does any other objection occur to you? For instance, would there be a difficulty in administration, because, owing to the large number, the local authority themselves could not look after them, but must delegate that work to committees?—The difficulty of administering such a system would be immense. The classes that are at present dealt with by other authorities, say by the Metropolitan Asylums Board, are stationary classes. The imbeciles, for instance, are confined in the asylums, the fever cases we will leave out of account, but the tropolitan mmon or Fund.

estion of arging penditure tropolitan ylums ard upon ferent ions cording their leable lue.

ntrol of cal vernment ard on pointment officers in ndon.

dvantages proposed block-grant" om Fund d possible sis for such ock-grants.

children of course are also confined. When you come to deal with men and women freely admitting and discharging themselves, I think such a system would break down.

14706. The system at the present time, with regard to the expenditure of the Asylums Board, is this, is it not, that they charge each board of guardians with the cost of the maintenance of the persons sent from the union, and then the guardians recover that sum from the common poor fund ?—That is so.

14707. Consequently, that becomes a charge on the whole metropolis ?—Yes.

14708. Would there be an advantage in the Asylums Boards making one order on each board of guardians for its expenditure based upon rateable value, and not charging them in respect of individual cases ?—No, you would conceal the fact that the cost of maintenance in any particular locality is very great, because you spread it over London.

14709. It would be rather a simplification, would it not ?—It certainly would be simpler.

14710. But you think that that would be balanced, do you, by the fact that it would not be shown what the cost of relief was in any particular union ?—Yes, it is only a matter of account. There is no reason why it should be dealt with other than the way it is.

14711. Do you remember that the Workhouse Accounts Committee made some representations upon that subject ?—The Metropolitan Asylums Board itself did, I think.

14712. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Am I right in assuming that it is not in regard to the appointment of every officer that you require the sanction of the Local Government Board, but only in regard to the question of the salary being made a charge against the grant ?—The entire question of the appintment of officers is in a most extraordinary position in connection with the Local Government Board and the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund. I have only mentioned one case, but I have another one here in which the Board sanctioned the appointment of an assistant clerk, but made it a condition that no portion of his salary should be a charge on the common poor fund—a most illegal proceeding, I believe.

14713. It is only, then, as regards the question of the salary being a charge upon the fund or the grant that the sanction of the Local Government Board is required ?—No.

14714. Supposing you make an appointment, you do not necessarily go to the Local Government Board for the sanction of that appointment, do you, apart from the question of the salary ?—There is an Order in existence which enables the guardians to appoint what assistant officers they please in connection with the maintenance and care of the indoor poor; but that does not extend to, say, the clerks' office. Notwithstanding that, the Local Government Board have, in their discretion, confirmed the appointment but made the condition; whether they have legal authority for it or not, I do not know, but I very much doubt it.

14715. (Mr. Loch.) To go back to this question of the salaries and rations of the officers, I understand that your chief objection is to the interminable labour in correspondence, and your next that it leads to "vexatious differences, and dissatisfaction, boards of guardians being only too frequently, in the interests of good administration, forced to charge upon the local rates sums the Legislature intended should be charged upon the common fund of London." Your last case had reference to that, had it not ?—Both the cases I mentioned had—the scullery man and his 2s. a week, and the salary of the assistant clerk.

14716. Is it within your idea that there might be certain charges for salaries which should not come up for sanction in detail, while others, the more important ones, should come up; is that how you would stop this interminable labour, etc., or what is your cure for it ?—The block grant, or a grant distributed upon some other basis, as I have before suggested.

14717. That is to say, for the moment you would suggest, so to speak, the abolition of detail, and a grant given towards those purposes which, you say, are put down as the present purposes of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund ?—Yes.

14718. Then with one stroke of the pen you would take away the whole question of salaries, or any control over them ?—Such control as is exercised for the purpose of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund. Yes. Mr. Edward John Mott. 22 May 1906.

14719. So long as you thought a block grant plus the local rates could meet the charge ?—Yes. Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14720. If you did that, you propose, I understand, a population basis for the distribution of the grant; that is, raised on a rateable value basis, it would go out on a population basis ?—I have not quite fixed upon the population alone. Of course, one can but recognise that poverty is not equally distributed.

14721. That is the point I wanted to work from. Suppose you did not for the moment say that population alone was to be the test, what would your next step be ?—That is rather difficult; that is where the trouble comes in. It is known that the census tables show us the distribution of the different classes of people, and where the workers are to be found; they also show us the places where overcrowding exists, and overcrowding is, of course, a very prolific cause of pauperism. I think on those two, taken together, some basis could be found upon which this fund could be better distributed.

14722. Apart from solving the question in regard to salaries as you have done, would you consider this—whether or not you could find a basis in the number of houses or tenements, say, of a certain rateable value; that is to say, that a district which has a large number of a certain low rateable value—£30, or whatever it might be—should have a grant according to that, there being, by implication, a kind of test of need in the class of house in the district ?—I had not previously thought of that. It would require to be looked into; I could not say off-hand.

14723. I am trying to take some concurrent or other basis for your own proposition ?—It is much on the same lines as the suggestion that the amount of overcrowding should be ascertained.

14724. Only I think that is more difficult to ascertain, and that something on the rate-book as to houses and tenements would form a good line of demarcation ?—The number of rooms which each person occupies is set out in the census tables.

14725. It is, I know. Might we take for the moment some alternative to your general proposal ? Have you the feeling that the rating in one union is, so to speak, based on an idea that you should do what is best for your own union, and that the assessment, therefore, is rather low ?—I have nothing whatever to do with the assessment part of the business, and I am afraid I cannot answer that.

14726. You have not had before you the suggestion, for instance, that the City is rated low ?—I do not know anything whatever about that.

14727. Putting that point aside, do you think that to insure quite similar equality in regard to rating right through London, there might be for that purpose some method of distributing on the basis of London a rate made for London as a whole, so that one authority should make the calculations as to what should be the rateable value for London, and on that basis the rate should be made ?—I should certainly leave the Common Poor Fund rate and its distribution to the Local Government Board.

14728. Or the county council ?—No, I should prefer to see it left with the Local Government Board.

14729. Do you think, taking your block grant suggestion, that in some form you might make a system by which some central authority should, on a rateable value for the whole of London, distribute for particular purposes whatever you might suggest, and the local body, that is the Board, should raise the rate for certain other definite purposes ?—No. My first idea was that it should not be ear-marked for any particular purpose—that that should be the income for the Board, and that the guardians should be expected to do their work within the amount of that income. Necessary conditions to be attached to proposed "block-grants"

14730. True; but, as was said, if you do not have any purposes earmarked will you not require that a certificate of the work being properly done should be submitted to the central authority ?—Yes.

14731. Then does it not come to this, that the grant made to you under those terms would be a grant made on approbation of the policy of the Board; and that, possibly, not only in regard to the institutions benefiting by the common poor fund, but generally?—Yes, it would certainly be necessary that the central authority should be satisfied with the general policy of the Board.

Mr. Edward John Mott.

22 May 1906.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14732. Then if you take that step, are you not driven to go one step further, and to say that you must have for the Metropolis some kind of board of supervision?—The Local Government Board is that board of supervision.

14733. True; but you are altering the whole basis under which it makes its grants. At present it makes grants in regard to various points in respect to which you have to report minutely; that protection is to be withdrawn, and you fall back really upon general inspection, which must itself be made very much more close if a central board or the Local Government Board is to be satisfied, must it not?—There is no reason why that should not be made more close.

Difficulties as to one Poor Law authority for London.

14734. What is your objection to a central governing body, in a manner, a central board for London?—It is unnecessary. It is simply adding one more to the local authorities of London.

14735. We are already treating London as a separate geographical area, from the point of view of finance, by the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund?—That is so.

14736. And you have another central body already in the Metropolitan Asylums Board. If London has interests in common right throughout, then does it not imply that both in regard to outdoor relief, which is a very important item, and in regard to indoor relief, there should be an equality of supervision?—But that central board could only do that which the Local Government Board is at present in a position to do—it could only issue orders to its local committees or local boards.

14737. To take the question of outdoor relief, it practically stands outside, and you yourself see from the statistics, which you know very well, what variations there are on the present system?—Yes; but how are you to avoid those variations with the present unequal distribution of the different classes of people?

14738. If your block grant which you propose is a block grant on a policy through and through in reference to a body that thoroughly understands London, possibly in a very close manner, would you not have a chance of amending those variations?—To some extent, possibly.

Effect of lunatic grant on recovery of cost of maintenance by guardians.

14739. Then to take some other points; in paragraph 3 you refer to the question of the lunatics; are you in favour of the continuance of the 4s. grant?—Certainly; I am in favour of the Imperial Exchequer contributing as much as possible.

14740. I am speaking of it in the form in which it is given; are you in favour of a grant per pauper, as it were? I take it that your criticism has this result, that it puts a hindrance on the guardians raising as much as they could from the relations, because otherwise they may be without the 4s. grant?—Yes. But that is a small point, and I should think it is quite easy of amendment.

14741. What would your amendment be?—I should prefer to see the 4s. given, whether the relatives contribute or not.

14742. Would not the effect of that be that at any rate in some unions where they are careful, they would be induced to care less for the money of the relatives?—Not if the locality benefited entirely by it.

14743. There again, with regard to this 4s. grant does it not tend to clear the workhouse of rather senile people, who are put into lunatic asylums, which are very expensive?—I do not think the 4s. grant ever enters into account there at all.

14744. Not at all?—I am sure it does not. It is quite true that a number of aged persons go from the workhouses to the asylums, but that is not because of the 4s. grant; it is because they are almost intolerable in the workhouse.

Effect of Fund in discouraging economy.

14745. And it is not because you want to clear the institutions to a certain extent, and to have more room?—Not on that account.

14746. On the present basis of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, are you inclined to think that it pays a rich district to be extravagant, as it were? That seems to be a point of your table in the Appendix, and of one of your paragraphs?—Yes.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14747. So that a rich district which actually has largely taxed itself gets an advantage, in your opinion, from its large claims on the fund?—If it does not increase its claim on the fund it must necessarily increase its contribution to the fund.

14748. Therefore the fund is acting rather as an impulse towards extravagance in rich districts?—It certainly has that appearance.

14749. To take this year-by-year expenditure, is it your opinion and your experience that constantly there are larger charges under rations and salaries every year in your own union? Taking the unions as they are put out in the Annual Report of the Local Government Board, and comparing, we will say, a matter of twenty years, it seems almost as if there were a perpetual rise everywhere in everything?—It has been so, but it is, I think, principally due to the Metropolitan Asylums Board that the charges in respect of salaries have increased enormously.

14750. Would you say that that really accounted for it?—Not entirely.

Increase in charges upon the Fund.

14751. That is so say, allowing a considerable margin, there would be, as on those figures, a great increase in the expenditure incurred by boards of guardians and charged upon the fund; for instance, here you have a matter of 60 per cent. as the increase between 1885 and 1905, that is, in 1885, the expenditure charged upon the fund was £1,001,939, as against £1,619,568 in 1905; and that increase seems from the figures to have been pretty well scattered over every item of expenditure?—I do not think you are quoting from my table.

14752. No, I have had these figures handed to me by Sir Hugh Owen. Is it not clear from these figures that the whole system is productive of large extravagance, may we say?—That is what I have attempted to suggest—the system is wrong.

Reason for distinguishing "rations" from salaries.

14753. To take the items of the fund, is it desirable that there should be a separate entry of salaries and a separate entry of rations; what is the necessity of an item like that coming on a central fund for London?—It is part of the remuneration of the officer, and if the salary is to be on, there is no reason why the rations should not be on.

14754. Is it necessary to split the salary into two parts, and to call it salary and rations?—The Local Government Board find it very convenient.

14755. In order to check the expenditure?—No, not always that; but in order to provide some deserving officer with an increase of salary without making it entirely a charge on the fund.

14756. Then it is really at the basis a matter of accounting?—Entirely.

The incidence of registration and vaccination fees.

14757. Then with regard to registration fees; would you be in favour from that point of view of continuing those as a charge in relation to the Poor Law?—There can be no reason why they should not be continued.

14758. And vaccination fees?—Yes; I see no reason why they should not be on.

14759. Then with regard to medical relief, which again is a question of detail; would your block grant be for all these things, or would you say that the medical relief should be a separate block grant?—That would depend upon how it would work out in different localities. I quite see that to alter the basis of the distribution of a grant like this, off-hand, would certainly not suit those places that have flourished, may I say, under the common poor fund system.

Functions of the police in relation to the Poor Law.

14760. If we could adopt certain principles, we might work towards them, and an adjustment might be made and, as I understand it, your object chiefly is to suggest principles. With regard to paragraph 23, why should not the police do a lot of the work of ascertaining the means and assessing the amounts to be contributed, which is so very difficult? The time occupied in doing that and in reconsidering cases, excusing arreas, etc., is, you say, very considerable; and you add that it frequently becomes necessary to take proceedings in the county court. You do employ the police, do you not, in desertion cases and such like cases?—No, not at all. Of course a warrant can only be executed by a police officer; only to that extent are the police used at all.

etropolitan ommon oor Fund.

14761. Have the inquiries to be done by yourselves right through ?—Yes.

14762. How much of an officer's time does it take in Fulham to ascertain means, and to do the whole of the work that is referred to in paragraph 23 ?—That work is distributed amongst several officers, and I could not tell you how much time it takes altogether. One man's time is entirely taken up in collecting money and accounting for it, and in looking after the people after the order is made.

ffect of and in dis- uraging covery of aintenance.

14763. Therefore taking the whole general administration of Fulham, it really depends upon whether the clerk and the guardians are intent upon getting their money back ?—To a very great extent it does. That can make a difference of a penny or a twopenny rate very easily.

14764. Granted that that is good and should be added on, I understand your criticisms to be that you practically get no credit for that on the present system ?—We are simply collecting for the rest of London.

14765. For yourselves, do you collect largely locally in cases that have nothing to do with the metropolitan common poor fund ?—Almost all that we collect is credited to the common poor fund.

14766. Almost all ?—Yes, but not entirely; because in respect of the maintenance in the workhouse, the charge on the fund is only 5d. a day, and the Local Government Board have decided that we need not credit more than 5d.

14767. How comes it that the work is so entirely done, or almost entirely done, by the common poor fund, because you must have many cases that you deal with apart from that fund ?—Nearly all maintenance, whether for lunacy, children, or boarding-out, or what not, is a charge upon the fund.

14768. That is to say, the fund covers such a large range that practically it touches you everywhere ?—Yes. It is only the sums in respect of outdoor relief that are not credited to the fund; and they are few.

14769. So then we may say, in accordance with your paragraphs 17, 18, and 19, that generally you think the system is working in a way which puts a bounty on institutions, and then allows a new difficulty to arise, owing to the institutions not being sufficiently large for the applications ?—Yes.

14770. And then comes the tendency to revert to outdoor relief ?—Yes.

etrimental ffect of und on Poor aw salaries nd ersonnel.

14771. (Mr. Chandler.) You tell us of instances where the Local Government Board have refused to sanction advances in salary, unless the guardians choose to pay those advances out of the rates; have you ever known any cases where they absolutely refuse to sanction the appointment of necessary officers on that ground ? If, for instance, the guardians recommend, after mature consideration, that a certain officer is necessary—it may be an additional officer—have you in your experience known the Local Government Board refuse to sanction the appointment of that officer on the ground that his salary would become an additional charge on this common poor fund ?—They have not done so lately. They have gone on the lines of allowing the guardians to appoint the officers they need, provided the salary is not a charge on the common poor fund.

14772. That is, they have sanctioned the appointment, but with the distinct understanding that it is not to be an additional charge on the fund ?—That is so.

14773. Have you found that that has resulted in less qualified officers being appointed for the administration of the Poor Law in London ?—I have another case here. The guardians had an electrical installation at the workhouse, and the engineer who had previously been engaged was not competent to act as engineer under the new system, so it became necessary to get a more highly skilled man. The guardians, after taking the best advice, applied to the Local Government Board for permission to engage a man at £200 a year. The Local Government Board sanctioned the appointment, but on the condition that £50 of it was in lieu of lodging, coals, and lighting. That meant that £150 was to be a charge on the fund, but £50 was to be a charge on the local rates. In that case the guardians agreed; they had to get a man, and there is no doubt they were bound to have a qualified man. But in the course of time that man went, and then the guardians said, "We will reduce the wages of the next man down to the amount which the Local Government Board sanctioned upon the fund." They did not understand that the amount which the Local Government Board sanction for the purposes of the fund has no relation to the value of the services. In that way it does tend to depress the salaries, and it may be to get people of lower qualifications.

14774. Do you think it has that effect ?—It is not unreasonable to expect that it would.

14775. In making a change such as you describe, is it not usual to start at a lower rate of salary ?—In this particular instance that I have given you, the two men started one at £200, and the other at £120.

14776. In your judgment the administration of this common poor fund rather tends to keep down the qualifications of the officers, I gather ?—It is not unreasonable to expect that it would.

Basis for distribution of proposed "block-grant."

14777. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) By making your distribution of the block grant on any such basis as the poverty or over-crowding of a district, or any particular type of house in the district, would you not put a premium on maintaining those conditions ?—I do not think that the local authority would be able to check it. Certainly the board of guardians would have nothing whatever to do with maintaining those conditions.

14778. Supposing the local authority had it in view to clear an insanitary area, or to pull down a certain type of house where there was over-crowding; as they might to a large extent be the same people as the board of guardians, might they not be influenced by the fact that any such policy might reduce their grant ?—There is that possibility.

Detrimental effect of Fund on Poor Law salaries.

14779. (Mr. Bentham.) In paragraph 9 you give us the impression that salaries generally are lower in London than in the provinces; have any steps been taken by the officers of the London boards of guardians to induce the Local Government Board to raise the maxima of these salaries that are already specified ?—I think that many appeals have been made.

14780. Individual appeals ?—Appeals by different associations of officers.

14781. Has that been done collectively ?—Yes, it has.

14782. Do you think those salaries are much below what are paid in the provinces in unions of a similar size and responsibility to the London ones ?—There are many instances where they are much lower.

14783. In London, the cost of living being higher, the maximum really ought to be higher than in the provinces ?—Then the work itself is much more difficult in London than it is in the provinces, I think.

Proportion of "rations" chargeable to Fund.

14784. With regard to the cost of rations, rations now, I think, are fixed at 8s. 9d. per week, but you give the cost in Fulham as actually being 14s. 9d. for the principal officers and 11s. 10½d. for subordinates. Is that fixed on any scale of diet ?—Yes.

14785. Are the principal officers appointed without any scale, or does the scale apply to all officers ?—In this book you will find two scales, one for the principal officers and the other for the subordinate officers.

14786. Do you think the amount allowed of 8s. 9d. per week will be insufficient to give a proper scale of rations for the officers ?—I do not raise any objection about the 8s. 9d. per week, because the guardians can improve it if they choose without the sanction of the Local Government Board.

14787. There is a difference of 6s. there, you see, between 14s. 9d. and 8s. 9d., and that is rather a serious matter ?—Yes, it is, but that is a matter for the locality. I am not in favour of releasing the locality from all responsibility.

Effect of Imperial grant on administration.

14788. With regard to the grants generally, are you of opinion that grants tend to extravagance in administration ?—Not necessarily. I do not think they are when they are distributed on a proper basis. I have not found guardians to be unduly extravagant.

14789. It is always much easier to spend other people's money than money belonging to the ratepayers of the locality, is it not ?—It is easier, certainly, than to spend your own money.

Mr. Edward John Mott.
22 May 1906.

14790. If the whole expenses of the unions in London were borne by the the national exchequer, do you think that that would tend to economy in London?—It certainly would not.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14791. Then you would say that grants generally do not lead to economy in expenditure particularly if they come from the national exchequer and are locally administered?—A grant such as the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund grant does not.

14792. There has been a proposal to rather alter the basis of that grant and to abolish the county grant altogether, and instead of that to give a grant of 10d. per day for all indoor paupers; would that not simplify matters very considerably?—No. It would be a worse system than the present system. Whatever evils there are in the present system would be increased by that.

14793. Then that would not assist you at all?—No, I think not. I do not think that would be a good thing for London. That is the proposal of the Local Government Committee of the London County Council, and it has been rejected by the council.

Effect of Fund on outdoor relief.

14794. In paragraph 19 you refer to the extension of outdoor relief; do you think that the tendency of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund from the beginning was towards restricting outdoor relief?—Yes, I think that must have been so.

14795. Now, that has been overtaken, and the tendency is in the opposite direction, because of the accommodation being insufficient to deal with the indoor poor—I think you attribute it to that?—That does appear to be so.

14796. Do you not think there is a change in the public sentiment with regard to outdoor relief generally in London, and that it is now in favour of giving outdoor relief instead of indoor relief?—There is a large number of ill-informed persons who are certainly in favour of it.

14797. Do you think that the tendency all over London is in that direction?—I do not think that is so.

14798. Does the opinion in that respect differ in different unions in London?—Yes, certainly it does.

Basis for distribution of proposed "block-grants."

14799. (Mr. Nunn.) In seeking a basis for an apportionment of the block grant, I think you said just now, in reply to Mr. Loch, you were rather in favour of some estimate based upon the number of rooms occupied by a tenant?—What I should like to get at would be the prospective needs of the different localities.

14800. Do you think that could be attained by taking the figures of the census of the persons who occupied one, two, three, four, or five rooms?—I mentioned that table as probably containing a possible basis.

14801. Or a partial contribution towards it, perhaps?—Yes.

14802. A considerable number of persons are rather over-crowded in London, because it is absolutely necessary for them to live especially near to the centres; they give up a certain amount of the physical comfort which is derived from living in more spacious apartments in order that they may live more closely to the City, for example. Therefore you cannot judge their wealth or poverty from the fact that they are living in one, two, or three rooms?—If that is so, of course that does detract from the value of that table as a basis. Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14803. I think there is another set of tables in the census from which you might select, for instance, a certain number of trades in each district, and then you could ascertain from the Poor Law Returns of each district the numbers belonging to those trades who had within a certain number of past years applied for Poor Law relief?—Yes, you could do that.

14804. That would give you a figure that would be much closer, I take it, to what you need, would it not?—I think it is possible; at any rate, it is between those two tables, I think, that we must look for any different basis.

14805. You should balance the two?—Yes.

14806. You are in favour of the stricter as opposed to the laxer administration of outdoor relief?—Yes.

Conditions to be attached to block-grants.

14807. Do you think it is possible that by giving up the system started in 1870, and withdrawing outdoor relief from the purely local funds, and substituting a very careful system of inspection which would base grants upon the propriety of the relief given by the guardians, that system of inspection, considering the needs of the district, the amount of indoor relief required, the adequacy of the outdoor relief, and the amount of efficient work done by the boards of guardians—if it were done by a system of that kind, do you think that one might compensate for the purely economical motive the 1870 system inaugurated?—I am afraid I do not quite follow you.

14808. I am afraid I found some difficulty in expressing it myself. I mean to substitute for the purely economical motive of the Act of 1870 a system of inspection, so that the amount that a district earned—to use a phrase adopted in another department of local government—should be dependent upon the efficiency of all its arrangements in administration?—I should certainly make that a condition.

14809. Would it be practicable?—That really comes to distributing the grant on the number of officers engaged, does it not——?

14810. No, I should think not, but on the general propriety of the arrangements that were made, including the officers and the amount of outdoor relief that was given, and the economy with which the establishments were conducted?—Certainly efficiency should enter into it.

14811. And the fall or rise of pauperism in the district, taking several years together?—Yes. Under the present system the fall in pauperism does not help us; under certain circumstances it might act against the district.

14812. Do you think that the stricter administration of outdoor relief might possibly gain and not lose under such a system?—Gain in amount, do you mean?

14813. No, but the administration might gain in strictness, possibly, under such a system, even though the economic motive provided by the regulations under the Act of 1870 were dispensed with?—I should think so, if the central authority acted with fairness and firmness.

14814. A great deal would depend on that?—Entirely so.

Sir Hugh Owen, G.C.B., called in; and Examined.

Sir Hugh Owen, G.C.B.
22 May 1906.

14815. (Chairman.) You were, as we know, for several years Permanent Secretary to the Local Government Board?—Yes.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14816. And you are the Receiver of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, having been appointed to that office on the death of Sir John Lambert?—Yes.

Erection of casual wards a charge upon the Fund.

14817. You have been kind enough to prepare for us a Memorandum on the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, which very clearly gives its history and explains the purposes for which it was instituted and its present operation. (See Appendix Vol. I. (A), No. XXVIII. (A-E)). There are two separate questions I should like to put to you at once upon this Memorandum, and the first is, Is the erection of the casual wards a charge upon this fund?—Yes; and the cost is very considerable. The payments in respect of principal and interest on account of the loans amount to nearly one-half of the whole charge for houseless poor.

14818. The second question is, Do you find that the power of declaring a union in default is a power which you can put into practical use?—It never has been exercised, but it has been threatened from time to time and the threat has secured the desired result. Metropolitan Common Poor Fund. Exercise by Local Government Board of power to declare a union in default.

14819. The difficulty of putting it into effect would, I assume, be that if you did deprive the union of a grant from the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, the very services it was the object of the Act of Parliament to promote might become starved?—I do not think there is any probability of an authority standing out; the loss would be so great.

14820. Therefore in that sense it is an effective weapon?—Yes.

Inadvisability of increasing class of expenditure chargeable to the Fund.

14821. There are various questions that suggest themselves in connection with the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, and you will allow me to put them to you One of the objects of the common poor fund, I understand, was to secure an improved administration; are there any further items of expenditure which in your opinion should be charged on the fund for a like object?—I have in the Memorandum set out somewhat fully the object of the fund, apart from the equalisation; it was to secure improvement in administration, an improvement which was very greatly needed. If you ask me whether at the present time I think that there is any item of expenditure of boards of guardians in respect of which some stimulus to additional expenditure is required, I should say certainly not.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14822. During the last year or two have there not been suggestions made to the Local Government Board by some boards of guardians for an extension of the operation of the common poor fund, with a view to further aid being given to the poorer unions?—Yes. There has been rather a large number of suggestions from different unions, and especially from the unions which are now receiving from the fund. Those who contribute have not generally proposed any extension.

Proposal to throw whole cost of relief on Fund.

14823. What is your opinion about this suggestion, that the whole cost of the net expenditure should be a charge on the common poor fund?—It seems to me to be altogether inconsistent with any separate administration of the several unions. If the whole expenditure of a union were charged on the fund as suggested, there would be no check on extravagant administration by a union, whilst any such extravagance would cause an undue burden to be cast on the other unions.

Proposal to make out-relief a charge upon the Fund and objections thereto.

14824. Has there been any suggestion as to out-relief being charged on the fund?—Yes. The Camberwell, Bermondsey, Mile End Old Town, Stepney, Poplar, and Wandsworth Guardians have proposed this.

14825. What is your opinion of that proposal?—In my memorandum I have shown that 70 per cent. of the total expenditure by boards of guardians is now borne by the grants made out of sums raised by imperial taxation or other receipts in aid, or by rates levied throughout London in the proportion of the rateable value of the unions. That being the case it appears to me to be a grave question whether it would be judicious to further reduce the proportion of the charges which is to be borne exclusively by the unions incurring the expenditure. As regards out-relief, it appears to me that it is especially undesirable that the charge should not be borne by the particular unions by which the relief is granted. There is a marked difference between indoor relief and outdoor relief. With comparatively few exceptions a person will not go into a workhouse unless his destitution is such as to leave him no alternative, and this gives him an incentive to make every possible effort to avoid becoming a pauper inmate. Relatives and others interested will often assist a person to keep out of the workhouse. I admit that these considerations do not apply to anything like the same extent in the case of workhouse infirmaries, as in the minds of the poor the infirmary is regarded as very different from the workhouse. But a person must be suffering from illness to qualify himself for admission to the workhouse infirmary. On the other hand, out-relief may be granted to almost any extent. A person who is most reluctant to go into a workhouse will readily receive out-relief and congratulate himself on obtaining it. The burden of the relief, it is to be remembered, is borne not merely by the well-to-do, but also by the struggling, independent poor, who have to pay their share of the rates either directly or indirectly in their rents. Unwise expenditure in the case of other expenses of the guardians means at the worst a waste of money; but an injudicious administration of out-relief may have much more serious results in its effect in undermining the self-reliance and independence of the poor. From my memorandum it will be seen that there are several unions which would each contribute to an expenditure by them of £500 in out-relief a sum not exceeding £10, the remaining part of the £500 being borne by other unions. The effect of placing the out-relief in the year ended Ladyday, 1904, on the common poor fund would have been to increase the burdens on some of the East End unions.

Discussion of proposal to charge certain classes of out-relief upon Fund.

14826. There have been proposals that out-relief to certain classes of the poor should be made a charge on the fund, I believe? Yes. The Greenwich Guardians proposed that the sums given in out-relief should be a charge on the fund to a strictly limited extent, and in respect of a clearly defined class or classes. The Islington Guardians suggested that out-relief limited to persons of 65 years and upwards might be a charge on the fund, and the Lewisham Guardians suggested the same in the case of widows and children. The observations I have made as to out-relief generally apply to these cases also. With regard to the suggestion of the Lewisham Guardians, I know that it was the practice in some unions, with the view to enabling a respectable widow to maintain herself without outdoor relief, to take some of the children into the separate school of the union, this being an advantage to the children; but I cannot say to what extent at present that practice continues.

Sir Hugh Owen, G.C.B.

22 May 1906.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

Proposals for increasing amounts chargeable upon Fund in respect of indoor relief.

14827. Then as regards the indoor poor, have there been any proposals as to increasing the payment out of the common poor fund for that?—The guardians of the Stepney and Poplar unions have suggested that the total cost of the maintenance of all classes of the poor in the workhouses and separate infirmaries should be borne by the fund. The guardians of Lambeth and Hackney desire that there should be an increase of the rate of 5d. per head per day. Camberwell, Lambeth, and Islington suggest that children under the age of sixteen in workhouses and infirmaries should be allowed to be claimed for. The Fulham, Greenwich, Hackney, and St. Pancras Guardians make a similar suggestion as to children under sixteen who are in separate infirmaries. The proposal of Hackney also referred to children in workhouses and separate infirmaries under the age of three years.

14828. What is your opinion of these proposals?—The suggestion that the whole cost of the maintenance of the inmates of workhouses and infirmaries should be borne by the common poor fund, I think, is not one that should be entertained. The adoption of the proposal would remove any safeguard against extravagant expenditure in connection with indoor relief by one union at the expense of the other unions of the Metropolis. As to the proposal that the payment at the rate of 5d. per head per day should be increased, the fact of the payment by the London County Council at the rate of 4d. per head per day on the average number of indoor poor in the five years ended Ladyday, 1888, will be borne in mind. I doubt the expediency of increasing the rate per head per day charged on the fund. Then as to the proposal that the payment of 5d. per head per day should be made in the case of children who are under the age of sixteen in workhouses or workhouse infirmaries, the only children under the age of sixteen years who should be retained in workhouses or infirmaries are the infants under three or those who are suffering from illness. As to the infants, many of whom are nursed by their mothers, the cost would be comparatively small. The number of children who are not removed to separate schools in consequence of illness will now be somewhat reduced by the managers of the Metropolitan Asylum District providing for children suffering from ophthalmia or other contagious diseases of the eye and contagious diseases of the skin or scalp. As regards other children who are retained in separate infirmaries in consequence of illness, I should not see any objection to the 5d. per head per day being allowed as a charge on the fund, especially as this is the arrangement in the case of sick children in an asylum of a sick asylum district. At present it is somewhat of an anomaly that 5d. per head per day should be paid in the case of sick children in a sick asylum, whilst no such payment is made in the case of children in a separate infirmary.

Anomalies as to charge upon Fund of cost of relief to sick children.

Salaries chargeable against the Fund and proposal to increase amount thereof.

14829. Then going to another point, have any suggestions been made as regards the remuneration of officers?—The full salaries of all officers whose appointments have been sanctioned by the Local Government Board are now repaid from the fund. This applies to temporary as well as to permanent officers, provided that the sanction of the Board is obtained to the appointments. The guardians of the Poplar union proposed that the salaries to be repaid should be so fixed that they should include any additional emoluments of the officers, so that the full cost of the officers should be borne by the fund, and that the extra fees to medical officers, the cost of uniforms and any gratuities to officers should be repaid. The Stepney Guardians also proposed that the salaries of temporary officers (although the salaries may not have been sanctioned by the Local Government Board) and gratuities to officers should be allowed. As to the first

Sir Hugh Owen, G.C.B.

22 May 1906.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

Proposal to repay from the Fund lump sum in respect of certain classes of expenditure.

point, there is nothing at present to preclude guardians, with the consent of the Board, giving inclusive salaries in the exceptional cases where emoluments in addition to salaries are allowed to officers. With respect to the cost of uniforms and gratuities to officers, there is nothing in the character of these charges which appears to require that they should be a charge on the fund.

14830. Have there been any proposals made that, in lieu of the repayment of actual expenditure, the common poor fund should contribute the expenditure based on some scale or some system of averages?—There have been several suggestions of this character. Lambeth suggested that the claim for salaries and rations should be abolished, and that a sum calculated on the certified number of inmates of the several institutions should be borne by the fund. Fulham suggested that an average sum per officer in respect of the majority of indoor officers should be paid, or that a sum to be fixed, instead of the allowance of 5d. per head per day for indoor poor, should include a sum to cover the cost of the salaries of officers. Greenwich suggested that in lieu of the present payment of salaries the daily sum for the maintenance of indoor poor might be increased. Woolwich proposed that a lump sum should be paid in respect of salaries on an average of three or five years; and Islington suggested that on an estimate of the sums properly chargeable in respect of officers in each Poor Law union a fixed sum should be settled, the sum so fixed being subject to revision from time to time.

14831. What do you think of those suggestions?—Some of the proposals are only made with a view of the unions being saved giving details in their claims on the fund. I think that there will be the greatest difficulty in devising any general scale according to averages or otherwise which will be regarded as satisfactory to the unions generally. A receiving union would object to any scale which would give that union less than that which it is now entitled to receive; and a contributing union would object to any scale which would impose on them a larger contribution than that which they can now be required to pay. In the case of both classes of unions it would appear, as a general rule, more equitable that the payment from the fund should be on the actual expenditure authorised to be charged on the fund, rather than on averages or estimates.

14832. Now, you have made use of the words "as a general rule;" will you please explain them?—I was thinking of the washers and scrubbers in the infirmaries. There is a very large number of women employed in the infirmaries in the work of washing and scrubbing; they are paid a daily wage, and there are frequent changes in the persons employed. The reporting to the Local Government Board for sanction of the employment of the individuals, and the setting forth in the claims on the fund the particulars of all the cases, involve a good deal of trouble, and I am sure that it would be appreciated if some arrangement could be adopted by which the Board could sanction a certain sum to be allowed to a union from the fund for the services of those washers and scrubbers without any sanction of the employment of particular persons, subject to such sum being actually paid by the guardians. This cannot, however, be done under the existing law. The same principle might perhaps be applied in the case of some other classes of subordinate officers and servants.

Difficulties as to Local Government Board's power to sanction salaries for purposes of the Fund.

14833. Now there is the question of the salaries which are to be paid to the officers; does that not at times cause friction between the Local Government Board and the guardians of London unions?—It has always been a source of friction. The guardians consider that they are the representatives of the ratepayers and know the value of the services of the particular officer to whom they propose to give an increased remuneration; but they are not always mindful of the fact that the union making the proposal does not pay the increased cost, but that the cost is borne by all the unions in London; and, in fairness to other unions, the increase should not be sanctioned unless the circumstances fully justify it. If one union offers for a particular office a higher salary than that generally paid in London, that union would probably induce an officer of some other union in London to become a candidate for the office and secure his services. The union losing their officer would then not unnaturally desire that the salary assigned to the office in their union should be increased to the amount paid in the other union. The salaries paid in respect of particular offices in different unions are generally known, and the salary paid in one union is continually quoted by other unions in support of proposals for increased salaries, and there is pressure to secure a levelling up. The effect of a sanction of an increase in one union often extends much beyond that particular union. I know that it was the practice of the board to have for their guidance in respect of certain offices, scales of salaries on which they acted when applications for an increase of salary were made, and in other cases each proposal was considered in connection with the salaries for like offices held in other unions, having regard, of course, as far as practicable to the varying circumstances of the unions. This continually involved the preparation of very elaborate comparative statements. This, I believe, is still the practice. The trouble involved is very great, and when the question is as to the salary to be paid to a very subordinate officer, it appears scarcely seemly that the Local Government Board should be in conflict with a board of guardians over a question of a few shillings a week; but, of course, the decision may affect the rate of remuneration of a very large number of persons of the same class, involving in the aggregate a considerable sum. The endeavour to safeguard the common poor fund has, however, the disadvantage that in equalising salaries there is not the scope that is desirable for the recognition of the services of specially zealous and valuable officers. For instance, one union may have a master of the workhouse who may so discharge his duties that he may greatly increase the efficiency of the administration of the workhouse, and possibly with a diminished expenditure; whilst in another union the master may discharge his duties with no special zeal or efficiency. The tendency of the operation of the fund is to give the two officers equal salaries—assuming that the workhouses are of a similar character.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14834. Have you any suggested alternatives that you could make for meeting this difficulty?—I think that it would have been better if a proportion of the salaries sanctioned, rather than the whole, had been made a charge on the fund. It would be difficult now to propose to take away from the poorer unions the benefit to which they have so long been entitled in connection with the salaries of officers, but in the case of the more important offices, I think it might help if the guardians of a union were empowered within certain limits to pay out of the rates of that union in the case of a specially deserving officer a sum in excess of that which for the purposes of the common poor fund may be sanctioned by the Board.

Proposal that guardians should be empowered to pay salary in addition to amount chargeable upon the Fund.

14835. Have you anything to say about the rations of officers?—The Stepney and Poplar Guardians propose that the whole cost of the rations should be charged on the fund. The St. Pancras Guardians desire that the scale which was fixed in 1887 should be revised; and the Greenwich Guardians propose that it should be increased. Mr. Ritchie, in the year referred to, obtained returns of the actual cost of the rations of the officers in the different unions, and settled as high a scale as it was then considered should be adopted. There is, at present, no evidence, so far as I am aware, to show that the scale should be increased.

Proposal to charge whole cost of rations upon the Fund.

14836. There is a question I should like to ask you about loans. I am not quite clear on this point: Are all the loans for building which are charged to the common poor fund raised on the security of the whole of the rates of London?—The only loans which are charged on the fund are those in respect of casual wards, and the amount is comparatively a small sum—it is only about £14,000 or £15,000 a year. These loans are raised on the security of the rates of the union incurring the expenditure, not on that of the whole rates of London. Taking the payments of principal and the payments of interest generally, they exceed £400,000 a year in London.

Loans chargeable to the Fund.

14837. What would those loans be in connection with?—I am referring to loans for all purposes in connection with the erection of buildings. Those are the only purposes practically for which loans can be raised.

14838. Does each union pay the cost of its own workhouses?—Yes. The principal and interest amounting to £400,000, which I referred to, are not a charge on the fund, but are an expenditure of the guardians, which the unions bear.

Incidence of cost of erection of workhouses.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14839. That being the law now, have any suggestions been made with regard to charging on the fund payments in respect of loans?—Yes. Greenwich has suggested that the operation of the fund might be extended to include a sum in respect of the provision of accommodation; and Bermondsey, Stepney and Poplar have proposed that loan repayments should be made a charge on the fund. The repayment of the principal of loans and the payment of the interest on loans constitute one of the heaviest items of expenditure borne exclusively by the unions by which the loans were raised. The amount of these payments in the year ended Lady Day 1904 (excluding the payments in respect of loans for casual wards, which are already a charge on the fund), amounted to £403,167. If these payments in the year referred to had been charged on the fund, the unions, which would have been the gainers, would, with two or three exceptions, have been the poorer unions which are now receiving aid from the fund. Personally, I have great doubt as to the expediency of any additional charge being cast on the fund, except that in the case already referred to of sick children in separate infirmaries. The expenditure of guardians which is now borne by the union incurring the expense, it appears to me, is not greater than is desirable in the interest of economical administration. If, however, the conclusion arrived at is that the operation of the fund should be extended, it may be desirable to consider whether one half of the expenditure on principal and interest in respect of loans might be so charged.

Proposal to make provision of buildings and repayment of loan a charge upon the Fund.

14840. Have any suggestions been made that the cost of the maintenance of the inmates of the asylums provided by the managers of the Metropolitan Asylum District should be charged to the several unions, in the same way as the common charges of the district are distributed?—Yes. The Poplar Guardians suggested that all the expenditure of the managers of the Asylum District should be apportioned to the several unions according to rateable value, and excluded from the operation of the Common Poor Fund; and Lambeth made a similar proposal. The cost of the maintenance of inmates of asylums under the Metropolitan Asylums Board would, if they were dealt with in the same way as common charges, be borne by the different unions on practically the same basis as if the payments continued to be made from the Common Poor Fund. The change would not involve the simplification to any extent of the present claims on the fund, but if the alteration suggested is deemed desirable, I am not aware of any reason why it should not be carried out. Of course, if this change were made, it would be necessary that the London County Council should pay to the managers of the Asylum District, instead of to the guardians of the unions as at present, the grants in respect of the expenditure of the managers.

Proposed alteration in method of defraying expense of Metropolitan Asylums Board.

14841. Are there any other suggestions which have been made as to placing charges on the fund?—Stepney proposed that the expenses of certification and removal of patients to and from asylums, and the cost of the conveyance of patients to infirmaries and sick asylums, should be made a charge on the fund. Camberwell, Lewisham, Greenwich, Hackney, Poplar, Stepney, Lambeth and Woolwich, suggested that the cost of the superannuation of officers, less the sums received from the officers, should be so chargeable. In the year ended Lady Day 1904, these superannuation allowances amounted to £30,968, the deductions from salaries towards superannuation being £11,001, leaving on the unions a charge of less than £20,000. There does not appear to be any ground for these proposals other than the desire to obtain larger contributions from the more wealthy unions. Then there are proposals that unions should not be required to give credit in connection with the claims on the fund for the receipts from relatives. This is supported by Lambeth and Camberwell. Such a proposal appears to be unfair to the unions which have to bear the burden of contributing to the charges of other unions.

Proposal to make superannuation allowances and other expenditure charges on the Fund.

14842. There have been some suggestions made, have there not, that the form in which claims on the fund are required to be made might be simplified?—Yes, there have been several representations to that effect. It is the fact that a great mass of detail is required to be given in the forms which have been settled, and the preparation of the claims involves a considerable amount of labour on the clerks to the Guardians. But details are essential if the Receiver of the Fund is to have any means of checking the claims. The fact that these details have to be supplied, and that it is known that they are very carefully examined before any claim is allowed, ensures accuracy to an extent which would not otherwise be obtained. There have been cases where without such an examination the fund would have been improperly charged with sums of considerable amount. It is noteworthy that the complaints as to the detailed character of the claims, with one or two exceptions, come from the receiving unions. This may be regarded as some evidence that the contributing unions, whilst they are subjected to the same trouble in making their claims, generally appreciate the safeguard which the fact that these details have to be supplied affords. The suggestion that I have made in regard to washers and scrubbers would effect a saving in the preparation of the claims without, I think, any disadvantage. There is another class of items which I should see no objection to excluding. All payments made by relatives or others in respect of the maintenance of paupers, with the exception of receipts from other Boards of Guardians in the metropolis, might, it appears to me, be omitted from the claims. The details as regards these payments which are now given are not such as can be utilised by the Receiver in checking the amount which should be deducted from the claim, and their omission (the aggregate amount of such payments only being entered) would effect a material saving of time in the preparation of the claims.

Proposed simplification of form of claim upon the Fund.

14843. If these payments were omitted from the claims, I assume they would go to the credit of the unions who enforced them?—No. I merely suggest that all the details as to the payments which are made by relatives and others should be omitted from the claim, but that the total of those amounts should be deducted. It is only saving certain details being furnished.

14844. The Fund should still get the benefit of it?—Clearly.

14845. But the accounts should be in the aggregate and not in detail?—Yes. That is with the view of simplifying the preparation of the claim.

14846. With the exception which you have very clearly stated, you are, I see, opposed to any further charges being put on the Common Fund?—That is my view. I think that you must have a margin of charge on a union if you are to get something like economical administration.

The basis for raising the Fund.

14847. (Mr. Bentham.) In paragraph 39 you refer to the method of assessing the various localities on the rateable value; is any allowance made in the rate for leakage in collection, or is it taken on the net amount of the rateable value?—It is the net amount of the rateable value. In London, as you are aware, there is a special Act, the Valuation of Property (Metropolis) Act, and certain valuation lists become absolutely conclusive as a basis of charge. The rateable value according to those valuation lists is taken as the basis of distribution. No doubt there is a leakage, especially in some of the parishes of London, in consequence of the compounding. There are cases where there is voluntary compounding, the limit being £20 rateable value; and in others the authority may make an order for the actual rating of the owners instead of the occupiers in the case of all properties not exceeding the limit of £20, there being an additional allowance when the owners undertake to pay the rates for the properties whether occupied or not.

14848. In a locality where leakage is rather large, it might take a 7d. rate to raise the 6d. which they have to pay?—The actual rate that it is necessary to levy in order to raise a certain sum must vary in different unions and parishes.

Effect of the Fund in discouraging economy.

14849. Is there anything in the point which was raised just now, by a question that was asked of another witness, with respect to the effect of administration on the contributing unions, namely, whether they are less careful because they contribute a larger amount to the expenses of the administration of the Poor Law generally?—As long as human nature is what it is, I feel sure you can never constitute a common poor fund for defraying expenses, without some of the expenditure not being so carefully considered as would be the case if the whole charge were cast upon the union.

Sir Hugh Owen, G.C.B.

22 May 1906.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14850. I am afraid I did not make myself understood; I meant to put the question the other way round?—I beg your pardon. I should say, first, that I think the receiving unions sometimes put forward claims which they would be less willing to do if they had to bear the whole expense, and then the contributing unions are sometimes, I think, disposed to say, "Well, there are those unions that we contribute to receiving so much, why should not we benefit a little more from the fund?"

14851. (Dr. Downes.) I gather from what you said that you rather think that the stimulus on expenditure which was originally needed when the fund was established, is not so necessary now?—I certainly do not think it is acute.

14852. Is it not the fact that the distribution of the fund essentially rests on expenditure?—Yes, and I think it is extremely difficult to find any other basis.

Possible basis for distribution of the Fund.

14853. I did not know whether you had considered the possibility of any other basis than that of expenditure?—I know population has been suggested, but population is not the basis of expense. You may have a parish with a considerable population of well-to-do people, and obviously the population there is no criterion as to the extent of expenditure in connection with the poor relief that may be required.

14854. Is not what is wanted rather a measure of the true poverty of a district?—When the Local Government Bill of 1888 was passed, the question what should be the basis of a contribution by the London County Council to the unions was very carefully considered? It was considered then, after every proposal that could be suggested had been weighed, that the best basis was the number of indoor poor. That was to a certain extent a test of administration, and it was also a test of the poverty of the district. You cannot make indoor poor unless people are really destitute.

14855. Would you apply that principle to the infirmaries as they are now constituted?—I have made an exception as regards infirmaries. I think in the minds of the poorer classes there is a very marked distinction between the workhouse and the workhouse infirmary. The workhouse infirmary is practically a hospital.

14856. Should I put the problem correctly if I said it was to distribute the fund equitably with a view to equalisation, but in such a way as not to remove any stimulus to local carefulness?—Yes. When the Bill was introduced by Mr. Gathorne-Hardy he said, "I want to select what will not admit of extravagance and jobbery." He said people would not go into fever and small-pox hospitals unless they had fever or small-pox; and he selected lunatics, because you cannot make a person a lunatic in order to get him on the fund. So it was with almost every item. There was intended to be some check and control.

Effect of Fund in encouraging sending of lunatics to asylums.

14857. With regard to the lunatics, I do not know whether you are aware that there is alleged to be an increased tendency to send old people to asylums nowadays, both to the Asylums Board asylums and to the county council asylums?—I cannot speak with any certainty as to what has happened in recent years, but I have known some cases in Provincial unions where it was considered that it was more economical to send the insane inmates of a workhouse to the county asylum, than it would be to erect additional buildings.

14858. Is there an advantage accruing to a union by sending such old people to, we will say, an Asylums Board asylum? If they keep them in their own workhouse they obtain only a certain repayment, do they not, but if they send them to the Asylums Board asylum they get the whole maintenance?—They get the whole maintenance then, and apart from that, if they have a pressure on the workhouse, it is convenient to reduce the number, because if the certified number for the workhouse is exceeded, the guardians get no allowance—no 5d. per day—for the number in excess. So that they may get an advantage both ways. If the old person remains in the workhouse, they receive the 5d. per day, and if he goes to the asylum, the whole cost of the maintenance is borne by the fund. Then there is the further advantage that I have just referred to, that you get spare accommodation in the workhouse, and can fill up that accommodation without diminishing and possibly increasing the claim on the fund.

14859. May not all that offer a temptation to send old people to the asylums?—I think it is quite possible that it may, but still the increase in the numbers sent to the Asylums Board's asylum is not equal to the increase in the numbers sent to county asylums and licensed houses.

The Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

14860. Where no fund exists?—I think so. The charge on the fund for insane poor has increased from £215,973 in 1885 to £378,683 in 1905. That increase is chiefly attributable to the increase in the number of the insane poor. The number of pauper patients in county and borough asylums, registered hospitals, and licensed houses was, in 1885, 8,714, and in 1905, 17,198, an increase of 8,484. The number in the asylums of the Metropolitan Asylums Board was 5,404 in 1885 and 6,642 in 1905, an increase of 1,238, the total increase being 9,722.

Figures as to increase of pauper lunatics in asylums.

14861. I may perhaps remind you that it has been alleged that the accommodation has been insufficient in the case of the Asylums Board?—More might possibly have been sent if there had been more accommodation.

14862. I believe that under the Act of 1867 all medicine and medical surgical appliances supplied to the poor are charged on to the common poor fund, or at any rate what is not charged on to that fund is charged on to the county grant?—The total cost of medicines and medical and surgical appliances is charged on the Common Poor Fund. The county council make a grant out of the moneys they receive from the Imperial taxation, the grant being equal to one-half of the cost of the drugs, and that is deducted.

Effect of Fund in decreasing economy in drugs.

14863. So that practically the guardians are not troubled with any local expense for drugs?—None whatever.

14864. Then what stimulus to economy remains to them?—I cannot say that there is any in the case of this item.

14865. Have you noticed that the claim for drugs is increasing?—Almost every item chargeable on the Fund has increased, but in connection with drugs, I think you must have regard to the epidemics that have existed in London, because that makes a considerable difference. In 1902, the year of the small-pox epidemic, there were over 32,000 admissions to the asylums of the Asylums Board, and of course the whole of the drugs required for those patients had to be paid for.

14866. I was speaking more particularly of special unions. I happen to hold in my hand a contract of one of the unions for drugs, and I will only say of it that it does not strike me as showing any tendency to economy. I rather wanted to ascertain whether there was any incentive to economy on the part of the guardians?—I think that the guardians are advised by other medical officers, and they are very much in the hands if those officers as to the drugs that should be obtained.

14867. Should you consider it desirable that more effective checks should be introduced?—I do not see what check you can have, unless you are going to throw a portion of that expenditure on to the union which incurs the expenditure.

14868. But if the union itself had to bear the larger share do I gather that you think that would be an additional check?—Yes. I feel, however, there is a good deal of difficulty about that item, because the guardians would naturally be guided by the views of their medical officers. They would say: We do not ourselves know what drugs are required for the patients.

14869. But would they not possibly compare themselves with other unions?—I do not think they do, but no doubt there would be an advantage if this were done.

Figures as to cost of drugs.

14870. Or notice whether the expenditure was increasing, that is, whether it is more under one officer than it had been under another?—You might find that with one board of guardians, but perhaps not with another. It is very desirable no doubt that attention should be given to that point. I am under the impression that there has been rather a falling off in the cost of drugs. In 1905 it was £24,600, in the previous year it was £22,354, in the year before that it was £26,437, and in the year before that it was £28,303; so that there has been some diminution of the charge.

14871. But I think as you pointed out those years are rather affected by the operations of the Asylums Board ?—They are considerably, no doubt.

14872. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) To meet the very obvious objections and disadvantages which pertain to the present conditions of things, under which the whole salaries are charged against the fund, I understand that you suggest that a portion of these at any rate should be paid out of the rates. Would you approve of the system which prevails in Scotland, where there is a fixed sum of £20,000 granted towards medical relief, and that sum is devoted to nursing in the first place and then to all expenditure which falls under the head of medical relief, the balance being paid out of the rates ? The result, I am sorry to say, is that the sum is a diminishing sum, for whereas 10s. per head was payable some twenty years ago, it is now reduced to only 6s. per head, the total grant being a fixed sum ?—We do a great deal more apparently than you do in Scotland, because we pay from the fund the whole salaries of the medical officers and the whole salaries of the nurses, and we pay for all the drugs and medical and surgical appliances. So that we go much beyond you.

14873. We have not got that at all, but I understand that your opinion is that that rather leads to extravagance on the part of the union ?—What I said with regard to the salaries was that according to my view it would have been better if, in the first instance, instead of throwing the whole burden on the fund, you had only charged a proportion, leaving the unions to bear the difference. But after this has been going on for nearly forty years it is extremely difficult to take away from the poorer unions the help that they have hitherto had.

14874. (Mr. Loch.) There is no form of re-adjustment that you can suggest otherwise to carry out your principle, is there ?—I am sorry to say that I cannot suggest any. I believe myself that the actual expenditure is the best test.

14875. (Sir Samuel Provis.) That charge under the Valuation (Metropolis) Act on the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund has nothing to do really with the fund proper —it is not a poor law expenditure, in any way, is it ?—No. It was considered at the time a convenient way of raising the amount over the whole of London.

14876. Might it not now more properly come off the fund, and be paid by the London County Council ?—The amount is only about £300 or £400 a year. It is hardly sufficient to render it necessary to make a change.

14877. It is not worth while to make a change, you think ?—No. I may say that the Act allows a payment to the clerk to the county council being charged on the fund, but for some years past the county council have made an arrangement with their officer which renders unnecessary any claim on the fund for his services.

14878 It was in fact intended, was it not, by the Act of 1888 that it should be paid as part of the costs of the Quarter Sessions in London ?—Yes. When the Act was passed there was an Assessment Sessions for the three counties. Then, when London became one county, and there was a separate Quarter Sessions, these duties were transferred.

14879. It has been suggested to us by a previous witness that the superannuation allowances might properly be charged to the fund inasmuch as the salaries are ; would you have any view about that ?—When a union wishes to draw more largely from the fund, they are ingenious in finding reasons for it. They say because the salaries are paid, then any fees, any gratuities, any uniforms, any allowances of any kind to officers, and the superannuation allowances, all ought to be brought on the fund. But there is no reason for it as far as I see, beyond the desire to draw more largely from the fund.

14880. Of course, assuming that the superannuation allowances are to be charged on the fund, the Fund ought to be credited with the contributions ?—Yes, and no doubt they would be. The contributions are not at present nearly so large as the superannuation allowances.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON THE POOR LAWS AND RELIEF OF DISTRESS.

LIST OF APPENDIX VOLUMES TO THE REPORTS OF THE POOR LAW COMMISSION FOR ENGLAND AND WALES, SCOTLAND, AND IRELAND.

Appendix Vol. I.—English Official Evidence.
Minutes of Evidence mainly of the Officers of the Local Government Board for England and Wales. 1st to 34th Days: 8th January to 22nd May, 1906: Questions 1 to 14,880.

Appendix Vol. I. A.—English Official Evidence.
Appendices to the Minutes of Evidence included in Vol. I., being mainly the evidence of the Officers of the Local Government Board for England and Wales.

Appendix Vol. I. B.—Index.
Index to Appendix Vols. I. and I. A.

Appendix Vol. II.—London Evidence.
Minutes of Evidence (with Appendices) mainly of London witnesses. 35th to 48th Days: 28th May to 23rd July, 1906: Questions 14,881 to 24,739.

Appendix Vol. II. A.—Index.
Index to Appendix Vol. II.

Appendix Vol. III.—Associations and Critics.
Minutes of Evidence (with Appendices) mainly of critics of the Poor Law and of witnesses representing Poor Law and Charitable Associations. 49th to 71st Days: 1st October to 17th December, 1906: Questions 24,740 to 35,450.

Appendix Vol. III. A.—Index.
Index to Appendix Vol. III.

Appendix Vol. IV.—Urban Centres.—Liverpool, Manchester, West Yorks, and Midlands.
Minutes of Evidence (with Appendices) containing the oral and written evidence of the British Medical Association and of witnesses from the following provincial urban centres—Liverpool and Manchester districts, West Yorkshire, Midland Towns. 72nd to 89th Days: 14th January to 26th March, 1907: Questions 35,451 to 48,347.

Appendix Vol. IV. A.—Index.
Index to Appendix Vol. IV.

Appendix Vol. V.—Urban Centres.—South Wales and North Eastern Counties.
Minutes of Evidence (with Appendices) containing the oral and written evidence of witnesses from urban centres in the following districts:—South Wales and North Eastern Counties, 90th to 94th Days: 15th April to 30th April, 1907: Questions 48,348 to 53,067.

Appendix Vol. V. A.—Index.
Index to Appendix Vol V.

Appendix Vol. VI.—Scotland.
Minutes of Evidence (with Appendices) relating to Scotland. 95th to 110th Days, and 139th and 149th Days: 6th May to 21st June, 1907, and 13th January and 2nd March, 1908: Questions 53,068 to 67,565; 88,667 to 89,046; 94,629 to 95,323.

Appendix Vol. VI. A.—Index.
Index to Appendix Vol. VI.

Appendix Vol. VII.—Rural Centres.—Friendly Societies, etc.
Minutes of Evidence (with Appendices) containing the oral and written evidence of witnesses from various rural centres in the South Western, Western, and Eastern Counties, from the Parish of Poplar Borough and from the National Conference of Friendly Societies. 111th to 122nd Days: 9th July to 7th October, 1907: Questions 67,566 to 77,734.

Appendix Vol. VII. A.—Index.
Index to Appendix Vol. VII.

Appendix Vol. VIII.—Unemployment.
Minutes of Evidence (with Appendices) containing the oral and written evidence of witnesses relating chiefly to the subject of "Unemployment." 123rd to 138th Days: 14th October to 10th December, 1907: Questions 77,735 to 88,666.

Appendix Vol. VIII. A.—Index.
Index to Appendix Vol. VIII.

Appendix Vol. IX.—Unemployment.
Minutes of Evidence (with Appendices) containing the oral and written evidence of further witnesses relating to the subject of Unemployment, etc. 140th to 148th Days: 150th to 156th Days, and 158th Day: 14th January, 1908, to 11th May, 1908. Questions 89,048 to 94,628; 95,324 to 99,350; 100,020 to 100,590.

Appendix Vol. IX. A.—Index.
Index to Appendix Vol. IX.

Appendix Vol. X.—Ireland.
Minutes of Evidence (with Appendices) relating to Ireland. 157th and 159th Days: 25th April and 12th May, 1908: Questions 99,351 to 100,019; 100,591 to 100,928.

Appendix Vol. X. A.—Index.
Index to Appendix Vol. X.

Appendix Vol. XI.—Miscellaneous.
Miscellaneous Papers. Communications from Boards of Guardians and Others, etc., etc.

Appendix Vol. XII.—Commissioners' Memoranda.
Reports, Memoranda, and Tables prepared by certain of the Commissioners.

361. 70,500—Wt. 27649. 5/09. Wy. & S. 7865r.

6658

2 WELLCOME LIBRARY

APPENDIX VOL. XIII.—DIOCESAN REPORTS.
Diocesan Reports on the Methods of administering Charitable Assistance and the extent and intensity of Poverty in England and Wales.

APPENDIX VOL. XIV.—INVESTIGATORS' REPORTS.—MEDICAL RELIEF.
Report on the Methods and Results of the present system of administering Indoor and Outdoor Poor Law Medical Relief in certain Unions in England and Wales, by Dr. McVail.

APPENDIX VOL. XV.—INVESTIGATORS' REPORTS.—CHARITY.
Report on the Administrative Relation of Charity and the Poor Law, and the extent and the actual and potential utility of Endowed and Voluntary Charities in England and Scotland, by Mr. A. C. Kay and Mr. H. V. Toynbee.

APPENDIX VOL. XVI.—INVESTIGATORS' REPORTS.—INDUSTRIAL AND SANITARY CONDITIONS.
Reports on the Relation of Industrial and Sanitary Conditions to Pauperism, by Mr. Steel Maitland and Miss R. E. Squire.

APPENDIX VOL. XVII.—INVESTIGATORS' REPORTS.—OUT-RELIEF AND WAGES.
Reports on the effect of Outdoor Relief on Wages, and the Conditions of Employment, by Mr. Thomas Jones and Miss Williams.

APPENDIX VOL. XVIII.—INVESTIGATORS' REPORTS.—CHILDREN: ENGLAND AND WALES.
Report on the condition of the Children who are in receipt of the various forms of Poor Law Relief in certain Unions in London and in the Provinces, by Dr. Ethel Williams and Miss Longman and Miss Phillips.

APPENDIX VOL. XIX.—INVESTIGATORS' REPORTS.—UNEMPLOYMENT: ENGLAND AND WALES.
Report on the Effects of Employment or Assistance given to the Unemployed since 1886 as a means of relieving Distress outside the Poor Law in London, and generally throughout England and Wales, by Mr. Cyril Jackson and the Rev. J. C. Pringle.

APPENDIX VOL. XIX. A.—INVESTIGATORS' REPORTS.—UNEMPLOYMENT: SCOTLAND.
Report on the Effects of Employment or Assistance given to the Unemployed since 1886 as a means of relieving Distress outside the Poor Law in Scotland, by the Rev. J. C. Pringle.

APPENDIX VOL. XIX. B.—INVESTIGATORS' REPORTS.—UNEMPLOYMENT: IRELAND.
Report on the Effects of Employment or Assistance given to the Unemployed since 1886 as a means of relieving Distress outside the Poor Law in Ireland, by Mr. Cyril Jackson.

APPENDIX VOL. XX.—INVESTIGATORS' REPORTS.—BOY LABOUR.
Report on Boy Labour in London and certain other Typical Towns, by Mr. Cyril Jackson, with a Memorandum from the General Post Office on the Conditions of Employment of Telegraph Messengers.

APPENDIX VOL. XXI.—INVESTIGATORS' REPORTS.—REFUSAL OF OUT-RELIEF.
Reports on the Effect of the Refusal of Out-relief on the Applicants for such Relief, by Miss G. Harlock.

APPENDIX VOL. XXII.—INVESTIGATORS' REPORTS.—OVERLAPPING OF MEDICAL RELIEF IN LONDON.
Report on the Overlapping of the Work of the Voluntary General Hospitals with that of Poor Law Medical Relief in certain districts of London, by Miss N. B. Roberts.

APPENDIX VOL XXIII.—INVESTIGATORS' REPORTS.—CHILDREN: SCOTLAND.
Report on the Condition of the Children who are in receipt of the various forms of Poor Law Relief in certain parishes in Scotland, by Dr. C. T. Parsons and Miss Longman and Miss Phillips.

APPENDIX VOL. XXIV.—INVESTIGATORS' REPORTS.—ABLE-BODIED AND "ORDINARY" PAUPERS IN ENGLAND AND SCOTLAND.
Report on a Comparison of the Physical Condition of "Ordinary" Paupers in certain Scottish Poorhouses with that of the Able-bodied Paupers in certain English Workhouses and Labour Yards, by Dr. C. T. Parsons.

APPENDIX VOL. XXV.—STATISTICAL.
Statistical Memoranda and Tables relating to England and Wales, prepared by the Staff of the Commission and by Government Departments, and Others, and Actuarial Reports.

APPENDIX VOL. XXVI.—CHARITIES.
Documents relating more especially to the Administration of Charities.

APPENDIX VOL. XXVII.—REPLIES OF DISTRESS COMMITTEES.
Replies by Distress Committees in England and Wales to Questions circulated on the subject of the Unemployed Workmen Act, 1905.

APPENDIX VOL. XXVIII.—VISITS.
Reports of Visits to Poor Law and Charitable Institutions and to Meetings of Local Authorities in the United Kingdom.

APPENDIX VOL. XXIX.—REPORT BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.
Report on the Methods of Administering Charitable Assistance and the extent and intensity of Poverty in Scotland, prepared by the Committee on Church Interests appointed by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

APPENDIX VOL. XXX.—SCOTLAND.
Documents relating specially to Scotland.

APPENDIX VOL. XXXI.—IRELAND.
Statistical Memoranda and Tables relating to Ireland, etc.

APPENDIX VOL. XXXII.—FOREIGN LABOUR COLONIES COMMITTEE.
Report on Visits paid by the Foreign Labour Colonies Committee of the Commission to certain Institutions in Holland, Belgium, Germany, and Switzerland.

APPENDIX VOL. XXXIII.—FOREIGN POOR RELIEF SYSTEMS.
Foreign and Colonial Systems of Poor Relief, with a Memorandum on the Relief of Famines in India.

APPENDIX VOL. XXXIV.—LIST OF WITNESSES.
Alphabetical Lists of Oral and Non-oral Witnesses.

E. 1.

Poor Law Commission.

Appendix

Vol I.