The admirable historie of the possession and conversion of a penitent woman. Seduced by a magician that made her to become a witch and the princes of sorcerers in the country of Province, who was brought to S. Baume to be exorcised in the yeere 1610 in the moneth of November / by the authority of the Reverend father, and frier, Sebastian Michaëlis ... ; Whereunto is annexed a pneumology, or discourse of spirits ... Translated into English by W.B.

Contributors

Michaelis, Sébastien, 1543?-1618.
W. B.

Publication/Creation

London : Imprinted [by Felix Kingston?] for William Aspley, 1613.

Persistent URL

https://wellcomecollection.org/works/ts6zgua2

License and attribution

This work has been identified as being free of known restrictions under copyright law, including all related and neighbouring rights and is being made available under the Creative Commons, Public Domain Mark.

You can copy, modify, distribute and perform the work, even for commercial purposes, without asking permission.

Wellcome Collection
183 Euston Road
London NW1 2BE UK
T +44 (0)20 7611 8722
E library@wellcomecollection.org
https://wellcomecollection.org

4318/B

N IV c
17

S.T.C. 17854a

48452

THE ADMIRABLE HISTORIE OF THE POSSESSION AND CONVERSION of a Penitent woman.

SEDVCED BY A MAGICIAN THAT MADE her to become a Witch, and the Princes of Sorcerers in the Country of Prouince who was brought to S. Baume to be exorciſed, in the yeere 1610. in the moneth of Nouember, by the authority of the Reuerend father, and Frier, Sebaſtian Michaëlis, Priour of the Couent Royall of S Magdalene at Saint Maximin, and alſo of the ſaid place of Saint Baume.

WHO APPOINTED THE REVEREND FATHER, Frier Francis Domptius, Doctor of Diuinity, in the Vniuerſity of Louaine, by birth a Fleming, and reſiding in the ſaid Couent of Saint Maximin, vnder the regular diſcipline and reformation of the order of preaching Friers, for the Exorciſmes and recollection of the Acts. All faithfully ſet downe, and fully verified.

WHEREVNTO IS ANNEXED A PNEVMOLOGY, OR DISCOURSE of Spirits made by the ſaid Father Michaëlis, and by him reuiewed, corrected, and enlarged: Together with an explanatory Apology of the many difficulties touching this Hiſtory and the Annotations.

Erubeſcant impij, & deducantur in infernum, muta fiant labia doloſa. Pſalm. 30.

Tranſlated into Engliſh by W. B.

AT LONDON,
Imprinted for William Aſpley. 1613.

THE ADMIRABLE HISTORIE OF THE POSSESSION AND CONVERSIon of a Penitent Woman.

SERVED BY A MAGICIAN THAT MADE her to become a Witch, and the Perfect Historie of Sorceries in the Country of Prouince where she was borne in S. Maxime in Provence, written by the verie same Notarie and Register, by the commandement of the Iudges, for the Instruction of the Acts.
Additionally reported, and fully verified.

WHEREVNTO IS ANNEXED A DISCOVERY OF DIScoveries, by the Author vnto the Deuine of the Same.

Translated into English by W. B.

AT LONDON,
Imprinted for T. Adams. 1613.

To the Reader.

IN this booke, gentle Reader, thou maist see to what poore estate, and little lesse then extremitie, the doctrine of Poperie in this present age is come. When like a rotten house it is growne so ruinous, not only in our estimation, but in the iudgement of the chiefe Professors and maintainers of the same, that they are driuen to support the whole building and frame thereof, with the testimonie of Sathan the father of lies. Which auncient and subtile enemie of our soule, when he could no longer preuaile to keepe the world in blindnesse and ignorance, but that the bright beames of the Gospell, by the mercy of God extended to this age, did breake forth, he formerly bestirred himselfe, and for the obscuring of the appearing light, raised vp Ignatius Loyola with his Iesuiticall brood, like a Simon Magus, or some Elymas the Sorcerer, to withstand the truth. And hence it is, that since the Councell of Trent, the Iesuites haue laboured with their distinctions and equiuocations, to set againe on foote the grossenesse of Poperie, and to offer to maintaine that before the world, whereof the Papists which wrote soone after Luthers time, began to be ashamed.

But when the mists which they cast before the eyes of men, began to be dispersed, not onely by the writings of diuers in the reformed Churches, but euen by the bookes of some other, in many things addicted vnto the Church of Rome, especially in France: and so by a consequent the power of their supreme Father the Pope was in danger to decay, then started vp another sect of men, as Carerius the Canonist, Franciscus and Thomas Bozius, with other such like, who with purpose to ouer-awe the world, by their bookes did inuest the Bishop of Rome, with a direct power ouer Kings and Princes, in temporall affaires. And so by entituling of him vnto that authority, they make Emperours and Kings in effect no better then his vassals, that at his pleasure he may set them vp and pull them down, crown them and vncrowne them, and giue leaue vnto their subiects, one while to obey them, and another while to renounce their fidelity and alleagiance towards them.

It is true that forraine States, such as haue not yet shaken off the yoake of the Papacy in other things, grew very sensible hereof, as by some Edicts and Censures passed vpon bookes of that quality, doth euidently appeare to euery man of vnderstanding. But it is the pen of our most gracious Soueraigne, that with his learned writings hath broke the backe of this opinion, and hath let the world to see, that it is a proud aspiring in that man of sinne, to take on him that authority; and an insolent claime that hee maketh, to bee directly or indirectly the temporall Lord of all the world. And what effect this declaration hath taken in the hearts of sober men, may easily hereby appeare, that so many of the Popes flatterers, finding all not well on their side, haue troubled and puzled themselues, to make vp that breach if it might bee, and against a little booke of so mightie a King, haue published out of diuers Countries, so many whole volumes. Whereby they doe as much as ingenuously confesse, that they know not how to answere that little Treatise, but because they distrust themselues, the one thinketh to amend the other, and the latter to adde vnto the former, that if they be not able by waight of Diuinitie and reason to ouer beare the Author, which it were fondnesse to imagine, yet by multitude and numbers yeelding forth a clamour, they may make the ignorant beleeue, that they had somewhat to say against him.

hath

This truth then, will they nill they, preuailing amongst themselues, they are at last enforced for the vpholding of their decaying kingdome, to rake into the bottome of hell it selfe, and to produce the diuels on the stage, yea euen wrangling and wrestling one against another, to auerre and maintaine the doctrine of Popery to be the faith of God. Which is most liuely declared in this insuing treatise, where the Inuocation of Saints, the superstitious vse of Images, the propitiatory sacrifice of the Masse, the adoration of the Host, transubstantiation in the Eucharist with Christs very flesh and bones, the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary without sin, and a great deale more of such trumpery, are with earnest asseueration of the Deuill himselfe, defended and maintained. And as the Huguenots who will not beleeue these things are trownced for Heretikes, and so declared by the vncleane spirit; so the religious Orders (as they terme them) of the Monkes and Friers in the Romane Church, are highly extolled, and especially that of Saint Dominicke, because forsooth the Exorcist was a Dominican Friar, who had beene much to blame, if he would not haue spoke the best of his Founder Saint Dominicke. For which peraduenture before it belong, hee may receiue some lashes from the Franciscans or other Sects, who thinke their penny as good siluer, as the Dominicans thinke theirs to be, and will not haue their Founders in the opinion of the vulgar (for the wiser sort laugh at both) to be ouerstripped by the other.

But to how low an ebbe is Popery now growne, when the professors of it are put to such base shifts, that they haue not so much as the garlicke and oynions of Ægypt to set before their people, but must present vnto them such huskes and shels for bread, and such garbage for meate, as that men of common sense must needs bee ashamed both of it and them? And what do they thinke of all the reſt of the world, when they propoſe ſuch traſh vnto them, as if they eſteemed them but as mad-men and fooles, fit to ſwallow ſuch their gudgeons? Which I may the more iuſtly complaine vpon, when ſuch a booke as this is, muſt be printed & reprinted in the chiefe City of a glorious kingdome, and haue the approbation of ſome Doctors, as if it were not enough for the ignorant and ſimple to bee beguiled by theſe deluſions, but men of better place, who ought to haue more wit, muſt profeſſe thẽſelues couſoned and circumuented by theſe impoſtures.

thinke

To teſtifie therefore how much wee in this kingdome, are bound to almighty God, for opening our eies in this light of the Goſpell, that wee may both diſcerne and deride theſe fopperies, it hath beene thought fit, that this Treatiſe ſhould be turned into the Engliſh tongue, that our people may ſee with what draffe their neighbours are fedde, and ſo be more thankefull vnto their Sauiour, for yeelding them the Manna of his holy word, and conſequently ſtudy to bring forth fruit worthy of the ſame. And by the way they may learne that the Popiſh Prieſts, in all Countries where men will beleeue them, are vniforme & like vnto themſelues, ſince that which was done couertly in England, in the daies of Queene Elizabeth, by the Deuils of Denham in Sara Williams and her fellowes, is now publikely taken vp elſewhere by men of no ſmall ranke. That what was hiſſed out heere with ſuch horrible rible ſhame and confuſion vpon their faces, who were the practiſers therein, that ſince that time no Papiſt hath been ſo impudent as to put penne to paper, for the excuſing or anſwering thereof; ſhould now bee fallen vpon in the kingdome next adioyning, and bee receiued in the City, and runne currant in the country, as if it were ſome oracle from heauen, when it is but the iugling and crafty conueyance of a few maſſe-mongring Prieſts, and ſome of their women-diſciples, who with a great deale of paines are wonne to their inſtructors lure, and taught what they ſhould ſay, and how they ſhould beare themſelues, for the effecting of the purpoſes of their deceiuing Schoolemaſters.

God open the eyes of thoſe that bee yet blinded, call home thoſe that go aſtray, raiſe vp them that be fallen, and ſtrengthen ſuch as ſtand, that the power of Antichriſt may be abated, and his owne kingdome enlarged, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord.

TO THE QVEENE REGENT.

MADAME,

The Hiſtory comprized within this Booke, doth for ſundry reaſons appertaine vnto you. Firſt, becauſe theſe things which in themſelues are great, rare, or admirable, doe properly belong to great perſonages, and your Maieſty is the greateſt Queene and Princeſſe of our age. Secondly, for that your name ſeated in the higheſt place of the entry of this Hiſtory, may occaſion Princes, Lords, and Gentlemen, to take the paines to reade ouer the ſame, which will aduantage and profit them as much, as any booke that hath been publiſhed theſe many yeeres. The third reaſon (which is grounded vpon the two former) is, that our little King your ſonne will proue another Ioſias, who was crowned and made King of Iſrael at eight yeeres of age, yet neuertheleſſe became the moſt pious King that euer was in Iſrael: who did parallel Dauid himſelfe in ſanctity, cruſhed all manner of Idolatry that for ſo long ſpace was hatched amongſt the people, broake downe their Idols, and put to death all Magicians and worſhippers of Baal. Neither doe I ſlenderly conieCture this, becauſe that ſince his raigne euen at the very firſt entrance vnto his Crowne, there hath been made an admirable discouery of Magicians and of the kingdome of Satan, by the extraordinary prouidence of God. Henry the Great his deceased father and our so much-desired King, gaue the first light and life thereof vnto him, who would rather die then giue credence vnto Magicians: cleane opposite to Saul, who did affect rather to make his addresse to such men, then to hazard himselfe any way to danger. To which may bee added that our present King gaue the first grace and pardon vnto her, who by seducements became the Princesse of Magicians: God hauing through his mercy touched her heart, and conuerted her vnto him, as he will doe all those, that of their owne accord doe make acknowledgement of their impieties: which is the most proper remedy to bring the said kingdome of Satan to vtter confusion, and to attract and winne in his adherents and complices to the true knowledge of God; Neither can hee better assure his state and kingdome then by this meanes. King Saul was dis-inuested thereof, because he went to a Witch. And God was stirred vp to wrath against King Manasses, in that hee countenanced Magicians and Sorcerers. Vpon the like occasion was the great City of Babylon ruined, as it is written by the Prophets, Esaias and Ezechiel. Contrariwise the good Iosias, although God was much prouoked, and as it were challenged by their former offences, yet raigned religiously and peaceably one and thirty yeeres in Ierusalem. The fourth and last reason is, because that in this History, our late King Henry the great is mentioned not without grert Attributes of honour and praise; God hauing accepted of his piety and good desires as a sacrifice,

1. King. 23. 4. King. 21. & 23.

Esa. 47. Ezek. 28.

The Acts of the 23. of December. pag. 219.

fice, and his death as a kind of Martyrdome. To conclude, I am not ignorant, that some will heere alleage, that it is not expedient to beleeue all that is written in this History, and that it was not so fitly managed, to put this booke in print, by reason of the inconueniences which may arise thereupon. But to these two points I will answere in the following Epistle, which I make to the Reader; fearing (Madame) least I proue burthensome to your Maiesty, who am, and alwaies will remaine

Your most humble and obedient subiect and seruant,
F. SEBASTIAN MICHAELIS,
Prior of your Couent Royall of
S. Magdalene at S. Maximin.

From Paris the 2. of October. 1612.

TO THE READER.

FRiendly Reader, When first I made mention to put this Historie in Print, I found two sorts of men, that were of a contrary opinion. The first had the faire cloak and couerture of Scripture, saying that wee must not beleeue nor giue credence to the Diuell, vpon which (say they) all this Historie is founded. The second as more eagle-sighted then the former, alleage, that it is vnfitting to put it forth, to auoid thereby the scandall of many (especially of those that are strayed from the Catholicke faith) which they will take at the publishing of this booke, when they shall vnderstand that these things were done by a Priest. To these two points I answere, that as touching the former, Iesus Christ himselfe doth giue vs the resolution thereof, when speaking of the Diuell he saith, that of a certainty there was no truth in him from the beginning of his fall; but hee giueth a restriction and limitation to his Axiome, adding immediately these words, Cum ex propriis loquitur, mendax est, that is to say, when he speaketh from himselfe, and of his owne accord, it is most certaine, he is alwaies a liar, euer endeauouring to worke mans preiudice and destruction; but the case is altered, when being inforced and adiured in the efficacy of the name of God, hee speaketh and answereth to exorcismes. This wee see verified in the Gospell, when Iesus Christ would vse his authority ouer the Diuels; as when they cried with a loud voice worshipping him, What haue wee to doe with thee Iesus the Sonne of the high God.

Iohn 8.

Marc. 5.

Nemo poterat eum domare, catenas disrumpe-

God? I charge thee by the same God (said one of them) that thou doe not torment me; and earnestly besought him not to cast him out of that region, nor into the bottomlesse pit of hell, but to suffer them all to enter into the heard of swine. And Iesus Christ demanding the Diuell that spake and was the chiefe of them what his name was; he answered, my name is Legion, for wee are many. In which we may obserue two remarkeable points; first that Christ Iesus being adiured by the name of God, although it was done by a Diuell, yet from the respect and reuerence which hee did beare to God his father, condescended vnto the request of this Diuell and all his companions: as in the like occasion, being semblably charged by Caiphas to declare whether hee were the Sonne of God or no, hee then answered more cleerely and amply then at any time before, although hee well knew, that Caiphas was vncapable of that mysterie, and would not make his aduantage of the same? What ought we then to cõceiue of Diuels, being adiured in the power of the name of God? shall they not deliuer the truth, when by the vertue of the same name, they are compelled to relinquish and abandon the bodies of those, whom formerly they did possesse? The second point to be noted is, that vpon the interrogatories of Iesus Christ, they haue spoken and answered truely, and consequently they doe somtimes tell truth, not of their owne accord or motion, but vpon constraint and that of him who is powerfull to constraine them, to wit, Christ Iesus, and his Lieue-tenants that are endowed with this power: to whom hee saith; I haue giuen you power to tread on Serpents and Scorpions, and ouer all the power of the enemy: And in another place he saith to the successors of the Apostles, that they shall cast out Diuels in his name. If then the answeres of Diuels are inserted in the Gospell, why may not the like answeres be now written and published to the world? The old Testament doth not stick to say, that the euill spirit bat, & compedes diminuebat & videns Iesum à longè cucurrit & procidens. Matth. 8.

Adorauit eum & clamans voce magna dixit. Quid mihi & tibi Jesu fili Dei altissimi?

Vid. Acta. 16. Decemb. pag.
Marc. 5.
Luc. 8.
Matth. 8.

Dedi vobis potestatem calcandi supra serpentes, &c. Luc. 10.

Et in nomine meo dæmonia ejicient. Marc. 16.

1.Sam.19. Spirit of God hauing poſſeſſed Saul, beſides tormenting him, did propheſie alſo, that is to ſay, hee ſpake after the manner of Prophets, of things abſent and hidden from the vnderſtanding of men. Saint Chryſoſtome in the 13. Homily vpon Saint Matthew, giueth vs his reſolution of this pointe, inueighing againſt Atheiſts who deny the paines of hell. They are taught by the Deuils (ſaith he) who being full of pride will not confeſſe that they indure any torments, and being repleniſhed with malice, would diſſwade vs from beleeuing it: yet are they oftentimes compelled (beſides the confeſſions made by them in the Goſpell) to ſay and confeſſe publickly the great torments which they ſuffer; and are conſtrained thereunto by the omnipotency of God, and the exceſſiueneſſe of the torments wherewith they are puniſhed: as a malefactor that is queſtioned extraordinarily, doth by the force of the tortures that are preſented vnto him, confeſſe the truth. If then the Atheiſts will not beleeue the Scriptures, God maketh the Deuils themſelues to confeſſe it, and thoſe (ſaith hee) that will not then beleeue are worſe then Deuils.

For anſwere vnto the ſecond, wee will make remonſtrance vnto them, that by their reckoning the Scripture ſhould not haue laid before vs the Hiſtory of the 1.Reg.2. yong Preiſts that were the ſonnes of Hely: who did ſnatch the fleſh from the pots that belonged to the ſacrifice, and did deflower the deuout women, that came into the Temple to watch there at night. Neither ſhould the narration of the ſinnes of Dauid who was a Prophet and father of the future Meſſias be ſet downe; much leſſe ſhould the Euangeliſts mention the treaſon of Iudas: which are ſo farre from miniſtring occaſion of ſcandall vnto the people, that on the contrary, many wholeſome doctrines tending much to edification may be drawne from thence. This is declared by Saint Paul,
2.ad Timoth. 2. when hauing ſpoken of Hymeneus and Philetus that did ſcandalize the Church, hee addeth, The foundation of

God

God remaineth ſure, and hath his ſeale on thoſe that are his. Notwithſtanding (ſaith he) is it not true, that in the houſe of a great Lord, there bee veſſels of gold and veſſels of ſiluer, veſſels of wood and veſſels of earth, deſtinated vnto diuers vſes? If therefore any man purge himſelfe frō the ordures which are in the contemptible veſſels, the ſame ſhall be a veſſel of honour in the houſe of God. True it is that the veſſels of greateſt contempt and diſhonour, are the wicked Preiſts: as for example Iudas in the Colledge of Chriſt Ieſus, and Diacrus Nicolaus in the ſociety of the Apoſtles; and the reaſons thereof are apparent. Firſt becauſe of their great ingratitude, which maketh the grace of God to depart farre from them, and conſequently they are the more blinded by the working of the Deuill, Ingrati, ſceleſti; ſaith S. Paul. Another reaſon is, becauſe they are more ignominious to Chriſt Ieſus, as appeareth by Magicians. The third reaſon is, for that the corruption of thoſe things that are excellent, is worſe then the corruption of things leſſe excellent, as the putrification of the blood is more pernicious then of any of the other humours. And this would Ieremy haue ſaid in the viſion of the two baskets of figges; the one being full of figges not onely good, but excellently good, and the other full of figges not onely naught, but extreamely naught, in porta templi. And this is amply declared by Saint Auguſtine, in an Epiſtle which he wrote vpon a ſuggeſtion againſt a Preiſt of his, who was accuſed of ſome foule crime. In the houſe of Adam (ſaith hee) there was Abel and Cain, in the Arke of Noah liuing creatures both cleane and vncleane, and in his houſe one Cham with Sem and Iaphet. In the houſe of Abraham, Iſmael with Iſaac: in the houſe of Iſaac, Eſau with Iacob; in the houſe of Iacob, inceſtuous Rubin with chaſte Ioſeph: in the houſe of Dauid, Abſolon with Salomon: And how be it God himſelfe had twice talked with Salomon, and had beſtowed on him ſo many indowments of his grace in the

Rom. 1.

Epiſt. 117.

A thorne in a garden cannot blemiſh the roſes or the garden; but that a man may ſtill ſay. Behold a faire garden.

the houſe of his father ; yea although himſelfe was a Prophet and the author of ſome of the ſacred and Canonicall writtes, yet did not the Deuill ceaſe to gaine vpon him, and to cauſe him to preſent vnto him the ſacrifices that were appointed for God. Finally Saint Auguſtine bringeth in the example of Iudas, and concludes, I haue by long experiences learned, that as there are not on the earth better Chriſtians then good Preiſts, ſo on the contrary I neuer knew a Chriſtian ſo euill as a wicked Preiſt. To the ſame purpoſe ſpeaketh Saint Ierome, no man did euer diſeſteeme the Colledge of the Apoſtles, becauſe Iudas plaid the villaine among them : no man euer miſconceiued of the Quires of Angels, by reaſon of Lucifer and his confederates : but rather by their vnhappy end we ſhould learne to do well, and be ſtrengthned the more in the Chriſtian faith, when it commeth into our conſideration, that the Deuill paineth not himſelfe to draw a Miniſter to make his ſupper in a Synagogue, nor a Rabbin of the Iewes, nor a Muſulman of the Turkes ; for from hence can redound no ignominy vnto Chriſt Ieſus, neither can he by this gaine in any thing in his pretenſions, as he would by the aſſiſtance of a wicked Preiſt that doth conſecrate the body of Chriſt Ieſus. Neither doth God ſuffer ſuch execrable villanies to paſſe without great and maruellous wonders (as ſhall be ſeene in this Hiſtory) but diſcouereth all by the extraordinary meanes, of his vnbounded power, and doth inforce the Deuils themſelues to make diſcouery and proclaime the ſame, to their vtter ruine and confuſion. And from hence he miniſtreth matter and occaſion vnto Hereticks to make acknowledgement of their Hereſies: vnto Magicians to abiure and abandon their abominations ; vnto Catholicks to implant and eſtabliſh themſelues with better aſſurance in their faith. I haue made ſome Annotations in the margent vpon the pointes of greateſt difficulty, becauſe I would giue contentment vnto euery one. I muſt intreate the courteous reader of this

Hiero. contra vigil.

this Hiſtory to excuſe mee, if in the ſecond part heereof I haue bin conſtrained to make mention oftentimes of my ſelfe, and thoſe that were with me; there was a neceſſity for the doing of it, for the more ample verification of the Hiſtory. Moreouer the courteous reader ſhall do wel to take heed, that in this Hiſtory he do not therefore giue credit to the Deuill, in that hee ſpeaketh naught that is contrary to the Goſpell and doctrine of the Church; but to giue credit to him then, when hee would ſet on foote ſome new and contrary doctrine. Beſides he may obſerue, that this tendeth not any way to the ouerthrow of the company of the Virgines of Saint Vrſula, for there is many times mention and repetition made in this Hiſtory, that God hath made ſpecial election of them to confound and cruſh in peeces all magicke, and the abhorred villanies thereof, and that for compenſation of the ſame, they ſhall be extolled before God and before men. Furthermore the freindly reader will hold me excuſed for the rude and vnpoliſhed phraſe of this booke, I hauing a regard in a buſineſſe of this nature to write rather truely then elegantly: hee may remember that the French Dialects are different, as it was in Greece when it moſt flouriſhed; and that Ariſtotle with his harſh kind of writing was no leſſe profitable, then Demoſthenes with his Atticke phraſe was pleaſing: and the ſtile of the Goſpell and of Saint Paul is more powerfull with vs, then all the oratory of the world. Beſides thoſe that are poſſeſſed ordinarily ſpake their mother tongue, ſo that it was expedient for the more faithfull relation of the whole, to follow their vaine of ſpeaking word for word. Hence it commeth, that the phraſes of the natiue French tongue could not be alwayes obſerued. The ſcope of this Hiſtory is, the feare of God and his iudgements, the deteſtation of vice whereby the Maieſty of God is prouoked, and the auoiding of the paines of hell; more particularly, to cauſe in vs a loathing of that abominable ſinne of Idolatry latry, which is perpetually committed in practising of Magick, and in the Schoole of Satan. In the recollection of all, there hath beene vsed great faithfulnesse, without any additions whatsoeuer; and the diligence that hath beene employed heerein may bee seene in the page of the actes of the eighth of Ianuary, and in the following page.

I haue suppressed this History for the space of a yeere and more, and made no account to haue had it published; but the zeale of the Catholicke faith hath induced me thereunto, after I had once seene a letter missiue of Monsieur du Vic, wherein he aduertised, that the aduersaries of our faith did triumph in Rochel, when the depositions of the Magician, now in question, were put forth in print, where it is said, that the said Magician did celebrate Masse in the Synagogue. And thereupon they make an inference, that the Masse is a diabolicall thing, but doe not withall consider, that the Diuels aime is to vsurpe vpon the glory of God, and to inuade (as much as in him lyeth) the honour of his diuinity, that in conclusion hee may cause himselfe to bee adored as a God. For hee shamed not to demand it of Christ Iesus himselfe, saying vnto him, I will giue vnto thee all the kingdomes of the earth, if thou wilt worship me, that is to say, if thou wilt acknowledge mee to be the onely God and Creator of all things, as Saint Chrysostome doth interpret it: as also hee dared to abuse the sacred Scripture it selfe in the presence of Christ Iesus. To which purpose speaketh Saint Augustine: shewing that sacrifice appertaineth to God alone; as in the old Testament (saith he) the sacrifice of the law, in the new Testament the sacrifice of the true flesh of Christ on the Crosse: and after his ascension, the sacrifice made in the Sacrament, which is in commemoration of his death and passion; hee goeth on and saith. These are things which those proud spirits the Diuell and his Angels do openly chalenge and demand. And in the 4. booke of

Matth. 4.

August. lib. 20. contra Faustum Manich. c. 21.

the

the Trinity, chapter 13. about the end of the chapter hee saith, Non intelligunt ne ipsos quidem superbissimos spiritus honoribus sacrificiorum gaudere potuisse, nisi uni vero Deo, pro quo coli volunt, verum sacrificium deberetur. That is, Idolaters doe not vnderstand that these haughty spirits could not be so pleased with the honour of sacrifices, were it not that true sactifice were due to the only true God, in whose steed they would be serued and honoured. Another inducement wherewith I was much mooued, was a booke in Latine lately printed in Paris, intituled Mimyca dæmonum, compiled by Henry de Montaigne a gentleman of Languedoc L. of S. Iohn de la Coste, where in his precursory epistle he giueth to vnderstand, that the occasion that gaue life and birth vnto this book (which doth intend to shew that in al ages the Diuel hath bin Gods ape, and vsurpes vpon his glory) is to beat flat that shallow, yet dangerous conclusion which the Ministers of Languedoc held touching the depositions of the said Gaufridy; adding these words, Nouatores in re tam leui insistunt, & libellum confessionis prædicti Gaufridy à suis curant emi, & venundari, vt rudi plebeculæ, quam decipiunt, quasi horrorem sacerdotum ineutiant. But the truth of this History will cleerely demonstrate, that God was grieuously offended with such impiety, and that for to bring confusion on the same, hee vsed a maruellous and vnusual meanes, making the Diuels themselues to be the discouerers of this Magician, who was afterwards burnt. Neither could it be otherwise detected; for the truth of this could not sinke into their apprehensions that knew him, hee being after a strange manner by the aide and conuention of the Diuell growne a couert and close hypocrite, and was after a stranger manner dis-masked and layd open by the omnipotency of God, whom the Diuels themselues are constrained to obey, when it is his good pleasure. The streame of this History runneth mainly on this point, to shew, that al tendeth to ampliate the glory of God vnto vs, and to confirme our holy Catholick faith. Whence the courteous reader may also note, what regard God had of our Priest-hood, when to conuert one Priest that had so strangely gone astray, hee did draw it on with such long and admirable solemnities. For matter of fact in this History, there is nothing to bee wondered at, which hath not beene obserued and published vpon other occurrences by three Inquisitours of Spaine in the yeere 1610. which was the very yeere that this History was acted; and at the heeles of that followed another booke of the same nature, made by Monsieur d'Ancre, one of the Kings Counsell in the Parliament of Bordeaux. But the wonders were done in the person of him, who named himselfe and indeed was the Prince of all the rest in France, Spaine and Turky: and Monsieur d'Anere doth write, that he found by the depositions of the Sorcerers of Biscaye, that one Lewes came & taught them to accuse those that were innocent, to excuse the nocent, and to inueagle in as many sonnes and seruants to Satan as they could. So that the prouidence of God, hath been the true meanes to put to rout al the army of Satan in this kinde, in that his Standard is ouerthrowne, and the very master of his campe trampled and troden vnder foote. Moreouer hee that will more narrowly consider the History of Balaam the Magician, rehearsed in the booke of Numbers, will not think it strange which by assiduall experiments is verified of the Magicians and Witches of our time. For it is there said, that King Balac being conscious to himselfe of his weakenesse to resist the army of Israell, sent to seek out Balaam as the greatest Magician of that Countrey, to charme and chaine vp the armies of the Israelits, and so to come to his purpose by this meanes. It is also recited in that History, that to make his charmes and maledictions the more potent and effectuall, he caused seauen Altars to be built, and this was to sacrifice and inuocate the seauen Princes of the euill Spirits, which bare sway in

Printed by Iohn de Mongastonat Lon. grond.

The 6. booke and 3. discours pag. 459.

Numb. 22.

in the kingdome of Lucifer: wherein he doth by way of imitation endeauour to make himselfe like to God in his Maiesty, who hath seauen principall Angels to assist him. Of whom S. Thomas as also S. Denis doe say, that the seauen superiour orders do command and send forth, and the two inferiour are commanded and sent; and hence it is that these first are properly stiled Princes. Yet are we not to say, that the superiours doe not come vnto vs when they are sent from God, for S. Michael and S. Gabriel in the 10. of Daniel, and in the 1. of Luke, and Raphael himselfe who is said to be one of the seauen Assistants before God, were sent by him. And in the 10. of Daniel, Michael who is one of the chiefest is come to aide me. And in our very History, mention is made of seauen principall commanders amongst the other Diuels, and the same is auerred in the late History of Monsieur d'Ancre touching the countrey of Biscaye. These Altars were built to sacrifice a Bull and a sheepe vpon euery of them to these seauen Diuels (which was the very manner of sacrificing to God in the Law) and by these meanes to obteine of them that which he desired, Dabo si cadens adoraueris me. And because they sought to worke against the honour of God, and the publicke good of the Church by him that was the Prince of all the Magicians of the East, it is said, that God to discouer and giue stoppage vnto such impiety against his Maiesty, and villany against his Church, did shew great and vnusuall wonders; to wit, that a good Angell did visibly appeare highly displeased, and exceedingly dreadfull, brandishing a sword in his hand, that an asse spake by as great a miracle, that the Sorcerer himselfe became a Prophet, God putting that into his mouth which was not in his heart, and he speaking oppositely vnto that which hee had determined, whereby Magick was by the Magician himselfe defeated and put to confusion: to the end (saith S. Ambrose) that the perfidiousnesse of those that beleeued not in God, might by their Apoc. 1. D. Thom. 1. partic. quest. 113. art 2.

Tob. 12.

The second part pag. 311. act of the 11. of Ian. and the 6. act of the 12. Decem. pag. 396. Book 2 discours pag. 414. after Cardan and Strozzi. Math 12. assumpsit 7. spiritus nequiores se. Marc. 16. De qua ieiecerat 7. dęmonia. See Dr. Maldonat vpon the passages which he literally maketh of the seauen Diuels.

their owne South-saier and Sorcerer bee reprehended. We are further to hope, that this History will be no lesse profitable and vsefull vnto France, then that of Laon printed in French in the yeere 1566. which greatly confirmed the Catholicke faith, and conuerted many hereticks, that heard the Diuell which possessed a Virgin to say diuers times in a high voice, that these Hereticks were his friends and confederates; and that the reality of Christs body was in the Sacrament, because in it there was Hoc. To this purpose speaketh S. Augustine in the 1. booke of the Concordance of the Euangelists chap. 15. that in his time the Paynims durst not blaspheme Iesus Christ, because their Oracles were constrained by the power of God to speake well of him: and thereupon the Paynims began to blaspheme the Apostles; but (saith hee, speaking to the Paynims) question your Oracles touching the sanctity of life of the Apostles, and you shall cleerly see, that they will be enforced to speake well of them also. If they could not haue had a power to speake a truth, S. Augustine had made these other more obstinate in their vnbeleefe. S. Thomas in his Opusculum 17. cap. 10. answering to the fourth obiection of those that said, it was vnlawfull to receiue children into the orders of Religion, because that sometimes it proceedeth from the temptation of the Diuell, hee saith, that there is no danger to follow that which perhaps may be a temptation of the Diuell, so that it bee to a good end, with this prouision, that if the Diuell would afterwards wreath and wrest this to an euill purpose, as to scandalize or corrupt others, they doe not consent vnto the euill; otherwise the Diuell by this scruple may diuert vs from all goodnesse. Thus did S. Anthony practise who was well versed in this arte, as Athanasius obserueth. And for resolution of all scrupulous doubts, a late Doctor of Prouince of the society of Iesus, called father Iohn Lorin hath prettily collected, that the Diuell may speake truth foure seuerall waies:

Bartholomæus Fayus præses. Parisiensis in Energumenico Hadrian. Hofstadius ser. 52. de Eucharistia. Ioan. Lorinus in acta apost. c. 5. vers. 16.

Athanas. in vit. Anthonii. Ioan. Lorin. in act. Apost, c. 16. vers. 17.

first

first to beguile those that are vnbeleeuers and faithlesse, because they may say, this is not true, for the Diuell saith it; as S. Chrysostome and Oecumenius haue noted vpon the 16. chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, where it is said, that Paul being with his associats in the city of Philippi, a maid hauing an euill Spirit vpon her, cryed after them and said, These men are the seruants of the high God, and doe shew vnto you the way of saluation. Saint Paul for a while suffered her to say this, thinking that it might bee auaileable vnto some; but when shee still continued on for many daies, hee grew angry, and conceiuing that this might be hurtfull vnto others, hee commanded him to come out of the maiden in the name of Christ Iesus, which he presently did. Secondly to flatter and collogue with the Exorcist, that he would cease to torment him, or to cast him out: which reason is also alleaged by S. Chrysostome vpon the same passage saying, that hee behaueth himselfe heerein as a guilty person before his Iudge, and a boy before his Schoolemaster, holding the rodde with his hands for feare of being scourged. After this manner did a Diuell flatter Christ Iesus, saying, I pray thee torment me not Iesus, thou Sonne of God; in which hee spake the pure truth. Thirdly, (which is the most ordinary fashion) when they are enforced thereunto in despite of themselues, by the diuine and hidden prouidence of God, or in the vertue of his name by exorcismes; which reason is alleaged by the sweet and religious Poet Arator, in his Poems vpon the Acts of the Apostles, as also by venerable Bede, and many others. Fourthly, hee speaketh truth to gaine thereby an opportunity to accuse and giue attestation against vnbeleeuing and impenitent men, before the throne of Gods iudgement. Whereupon Saint Anthony rehearseth the history of a Diuell, that hauing taken on him the shape and habite of a Preacher, made a very good sharpe sermon, and in the end declared before them all, that hee was a wicked

Marc. 5.

The discours of the history which is faithfully gathered shall giue you to vnderstand that the Diuell spake after this manner.

Spirit permitted by God to accuſe vnbeleeuing and vnrepentent perſons before the tribunall of Gods iudgments. The friendly Reader may be pleaſed to haue regard vnto two things; firſt that this is a Hiſtory making a bare declaration of a fact, & is no foundation whereupon to build our faith, though it may ſerue very fitly to ſtirre vs vp to ponder vpon the iudgements of God. The other is, that hee take not in ill part the frequent repetition of things, for that it was expedient to expreſſe and faſhion this Hiſtory to the truth: although thoſe very repetitions were ſo varied and expreſſed with ſuch vehemence, that they were neither vnfruitfull nor ſuperfluous to the ſtanders by, but did raiſe in them ſuch paſſions, that they caſt forth many ſighes and teares, God for his goodneſſe touch and make tender all our hearts by thoſe many meanes and remedies, which he hath beſtowed vpon vs.

THE

THE SVMMARIE OF THE HISTORY OF the Magician burned at Aix, in the yeare 1611. the last of Aprill.

IN the Citty of Marseille there was a Priest called Lewes Gaufridi, that came from the side of the mountaines of Prouince, and for the space of 14. yeres remained a Magician. Hee fell into it, by reading a certaine booke in written hand, where there was French verses with diuers characters: and this was found by him amongst the bookes of an Vnkle of his, that died some yeeres past; so that in conclusion the Diuell did visibly appeare vnto him in a humane shape, and said. What wilt thou with me, for thou hast called me? And after some discourse, the said Lewes Gawfridi said vnto him, If thou hast power to giue mee what I desire, I aske of thee two things. First that all the women that I shall be in loue withall, doe affect and follow me: Secondly that I may gaine estimation and honour aboue all other Priests of this Country, and amongst men of worth and credit. The diuell hauing promised him these two things did reciprocally demand, to haue giuen him his body, his soule, and his workes: whereunto hee answered, that hee would freely bestow these three things vpon him, onely hee desired to make reseruation of administring the Sacraments. And being thus agreed, the said Gaufridi gaue him a schedule signed with his bloud, and the diuell interchangeably gaue vnto him another, and promised vnto him as aforesaid.

And being now become such a one, hee endeuoured to seduce a young girle, of the age of nine or ten yeares called Magdalene de Demandoul, alias de la Pallud, daughter vnto Mounsieur de la Pallud, a gentleman of Prouince, whose consent at last hee gained, and led her whiles shee remained at a Grange of the said Monsieur de la Pallud, to a Caue or denne not farre from the said Grange: where she saw a great number of people (who were the Synode of Sorcerers) and was much abashed at the same. But the magician told her, these are all our friends, and you must be marked like vnto them: and so tooke the poore affrighted girle and marked and abused her; yet for all this shee would reueale nothing when she came home, neither to father, nor to mother, nor to any other. Afterward she was ordinarilie carried by the Deuill to that Conuenticle, and was made the Princesse of the Synagogue, as the said Lewes was the Prince. Notwithstanding this, whiles shee remained still at her Fathers, by the grace of God (who had regard of her yong and tender yeares) she had a desire to become one of the Virgines of Saint Vrsula, that are resident at Aix in Prouince, vnder the conduct and gouernment of Priests called the Priests of the Christian doctrine.

This her intendment she communicated vnto the Magician, who dehorted her from it with all the inforcements hee could, and perswaded her to marry, promising to prouide for her a rich and proper man to be her husband. For all this she stil persisted in her first resolution, which put the Magician into such passion and choler, that he menaced her and said, if thou do go thither I will destroy all the company, as well of the virgines of S. Vrsula, as of the Priests of the Doctrine. Being gone thither, the Magician by Witchcraft, & power of a Schedule which she had formerly giuen the diuell signed with her bloud, so wrought that shee was possessed by Belzebub, and many others of his associates. He also did by a Charme bewitch a companion of hers called Louyse Capeau, by the force whereof (as also because she had diuers times besought God, that shee might indure all tortorments euen to the paines of hell, as much as she could be capable of, that shee might conuert certaine of her sisters there, who were in a desperate estate, & deuoid of the grace of God) the said Louyse was possessed by a wicked spirit called Verrine, and by two other his companions. This being so, father Iohn Baptista Romillon Superiour of the Priests of the Doctrine, perceiued by their extraordinarie gestures, that these two women, were possessed, and thereupon caused them priuately to bee exorcised in their Chappell, as one that feared least this might tend to the defamation of that Company. And hauing continued this for the space of a yeere and certaine moneths, and to his vnderstanding profited nothing (for the diuels could neuer all that space be brought to speake) hee brought the said Magdalene as more manifestly possessed then the other to S. Maximin, to craue there the aduise of Father Sebastian Michaelis Priour of the Couent Royall that is at Saint Maximin, where the body of S. Magdalene lyeth: who was of opinion, that there should a generall Confession be by her made to S. Magdalene, and so she should receiue absolution from him, as from the Inquisitour of the Faith, least otherwise shee might reserue some particular fact to her selfe. Afterward they made her make a vow for 9. daies in the Chappell where the blessed S. Magdalene doth lye, and did exorcise her euening and morning, in which time the diuells vsed strange motions and gestures, and greeuously tormented her, but would neuer speake.

And now approched the time of Aduent, in which the said Father was to preach in the city of Aix: hee therefore aduised Father Romillon to bring Magdalene, and Louyse likewise to S. Baume, a place where S. Magdalene for thirty yeares space did her penance; and is a Vicarige that belongeth vnto the Couent Royall of S. Maximin: and told him that some daies past he had sent thither Father Francis Domptius a Fleming by birth and Doctor of Diuinity in the Vniuersity of Louaine, who besides his other sufficiencies had formerly exorcised in this kind. And all this was done accordingly.

When the two that were possessed came to S. Baume, Verrine that was in the body of Louyse began to discourse vpon the day of the conception of our Lady, and spake a full howre; and continued on these discourses twice a day at the two Exorcismes till the third of Ianuary; saying that hee was abiding there by Gods appointment (although constrained and compelled thereunto) to conuert and make knowne vnto the world two magicians, especially him who was the Prince of them and commanded al the Magicians of Spain, France, England, and Turkie, and had Lucifer for his diuell. And further he added that God could no longer indure the blasphemies & iniuries, which they in the depth of night committed against his maiesty, and against the blessed Sacrament, and said, that vpon speciall causes God had destinated him vnto this, and to be an instrument of their conuersion, which neuer yet tooke effect, because they had renounced God, the merits of Christ Iesus, his blessed mother, all the Quires of Angells, and all the blessed Saints: as also all confessions and the other Sacraments, all preaching and exhortations of men, all motions and inspirations from God, and al visible creatures which might any way lead them on to their conuersion vnto God: the diuell (said he) onely excepted. Hence it is that God hath made choice by a great and new miracle of the diuells themselues (said he) for the manifestation and conuersion of them.

In these discourses, he principally endeuoured the conuersion of Magdalene, and did rudely lay to her charge in the presence of a great multitude of people that flocked thither euery day, that she was not intirely conuerted, that she had a heart of stone, and that she did still practise and hold intelligence with Belzebub, hauing the day or the night before consented anew vnto him. Finally he told her before all the standers by whatsoeuer she did in that Synagogue of witches: And heereupon she became so ashamed of her selfe, especially when she heard him say she was a Magician, that she began to shed many teares, and remained afterwards a perfect Conuert.

shee

This once performed, Verrine began to inueigh against the Prince of the Sorcerers, without naming him: but said, that hee knew well enough what was spoken of him, eyther by the report of wicked spirits, or himselfe comming there in person to hold his synode, or by the speech of the lookers on, who cryed with a loud voice, That if hee would not bee conuerted he should be burnt aliue, yet he made slight of his conuersion: and therefore one day hee named him aloud in the presence of much people, and wrote him a letter by the hand of the Father the Exorcist; of which hee made little reckoning.

The Aduent being finished, Father Michaelis parted from Aix after Christmas, and came to Saint Baume, where he remained from the first of Ianuarie till the fifth of February, to try whether the two women were really possessed, or no: because they spake diuersly of it, and himselfe had a desire to make tryall thereof, in regard they were in a Church of his Iurisdiction. So hauing obserued all, and being confident that the two girles were indeed possessed, as also seeing what strange euents had befallen, which were caused eyther by the diuells or the Magicians: when the time of Lent drew neere hee went againe to Aix, to continue there his preaching, and acquainted Monsieur du Vair cheefe President of the Court of Parliament in Prouince, with euery circumstance: and told him that there were three distinct infallible essences or realities in Magdalene, which when he found to be true, he together with the parliament of Aix proceeded against the Magician, but obtained grace and pardon for Magdalene from his Maiesty, who had regard and compassion of her tender yeares, and considered that the seducements were very full of craft and subtlety.

The Acts that were taken day by day from the beginning of December vntill the 24. of Aprill in the yeere 1611. do extend and inlarge more amply all these strange euents euents and passages, as also any new occurrence that happened vntill that time. The said father Michaelis was present at all the acts and Exorcismes foure monethes together, to wit, Ianuary, February, March, and Aprill, besides that whereof he was an eye witnesse about the end of December,

A TABLE OF THE DIFFICULTIES that are propounded touching this History.

1. WHether it be lawfull for a woman to discourse and reason in a Church?

2. Whether it behooues vs to beleeue all the Diuell saith?

3. He saith that Antichrist is borne.
Whereupon it were good to be prepared least we should be surprised, as those in the time of the Deluge.

4. Whether Salomon be damned, and Nabuchodonosor saued?

5. The Diuell seemeth to command the Exorcist.

6. Whether Henry the great, the fourth of that name be saued?
See the discourse of S. Hierome vpon the first chapter of the Prophet Nahum.

7. That the blessed Sacrament hath been trodden vnder foot.

8. Whether it be lawfull to write letters vnto Saints in Paradise?

9. Whether the Diuell may pray to God for to saue sinners?

10. The Diuell saith, that God did promise him a diminution of his torments.

11. Whether there bee not heere an appearance of ambition.

THE

THE REPORT AND EXPLICATION OF

the passage of S. Ierome, vpon the 1. chapter of the Prophet Nahum, where it is said:

WHat doe you imagine against God? hee will make an vtter destruction (that is to say, he will bring all things to an end) affliction shall not rise vp the second time: or according to the Septuagints, Hee will not take vengeance twice vpon the same subiect in affliction.

Hereupon S. Ierome discourseth against the Marcionites, and other ancient Heretickes, who accused God in the old Testament of cruelty, and alleaged the examples of those that perished in the flood, of those that were stricken with lightning from heauen, in Sodome and the neighbouring townes: of the Egyptians that were drowned in the red sea, and of a great multitude of people that died in the desert.

To which he answereth, that in all this there is more mercy then iustice, for he afflicted them with some temporall punishment, that they might not bee eternally damned. This is cleer in the Prophet, who saith plainly, that God will not take vengeance twice on the same subiect.

Then (saith he) those that haue been once punished, shall not bee punished afterwards; otherwise it might occasion men to say that the Scripture is not true, but subiect to lies. Wee are then to say (addeth Saint Ierome) that these receperunt mala in vita sua, and consequently not in the other world. Hee groundeth this vpon the saying of S. Peter, that many at the time of the the flood repented them of their sinnes, and went not immediately into hell fire, but were put into a prison, from which Christ Iesus deliuered them when hee descended into hell. The same also must bee vnderstood of the others aboue named. After all this Saint Ierome maketh a very apposite question, saying: What shall wee then iudge of a Christian, whom another findeth in adultery and cutteth off his head? To this hee answereth in another manner, and saith: No man can preuent or anticipate the sentence of God our righteous Iudge, thereby to giue impeachment vnto the course of his vengeance, which hee inflicteth according to the measure of those punishments, that are by him decreed for our great offences.

He meaneth, that if a man should pretend to delude God, and say, I will hinder God from condemning of this sinner, and will punish him my selfe in this world, he would much deceiue himselfe. For the reason why God doth not punish in the other world, doth presuppose that God himselfe in his prouidence hath punished it, and that he who receiueth castigation in this world, doth whiles his affliction is vpon him repent him of his sinnes, and semblable vnto the good theefe, aske pardon in his punishment. On the other side, if a Christian be beheaded in the very act of adultery, he hath no leisure to make an acknowledgment, and craue pardon of God; which is another case, and not comprized in the sentence of the Prophet Nahum. Better it is (saith S. Ierome) that the transgressor bee punished in this world; as he who cursed the people of Israel, or hee that gathered wood on the Sabbath day, for they had time to acknowledge their sinnes, which yet were much more pardonable then the sinne of adultery.

From this discourse of S. Ieromes, some schoole diuines haue drawne this conclusion, that if a malefactor that is condemned to die, receiueth his death willingly because hee hath offended God, and in hope of the remission mission of his sinnes, hee is not to endure further paine in the other world: because there can bee no greater loue in the world, then freely and willingly to die for God, for the remission and satisfaction of the offence committed against his Maiesty.

AN EXTRACT OF THE Kings Priuiledge.

BY the permission and priuiledge of the King, it is granted to Charles Chastellaine, sworne Printer in the vniuersity of Paris, to print or cause to be printed, to sell and to disperse this present booke, intituled, The admirable History of the possession and conuersion of a penitent woman, seduced by a Magician, compiled and disgested into order by the Reuerend Father, Michaelis, Doctor of Diuinity, and Preacher. Wee doe therefore forbid all Stationers, Printers, and all others of what estate, quality, or condition soeuer they bee, to print, or cause to be printed the said booke, or to sell and vent the same during the tearme of six yeeres, vpon paine of confiscation of the said Copies, and an arbitrary amersement besides: as is more lagely declared in the Letters Patents. Giuen at Paris the third of August, in the yeere of Grace, 1612. And of our Raigne the third.

By the King in his Counsell.

DV FOS.

AN APOLOGIE VNTO THE DOVBTS

that are propoſed touching this admirable Hiſtory of the poſſeſſion and conuerſion of a Penitent woman, &c.

AN ADVERTISEMENT TO THE Reader.

This booke is a bare Hiſtory, that maketh true declaration of all the paſſages which happened in the diſcouery of a Magician, and conuerſion of a ſeduced ſinner.

THe wicked Spirit that was the inſtrument of this diſcouery, called himſelfe Verrine, and declared that himſelfe was a Diuell, damned eternally without hope or redemption. This he well ſhewed by his deeds, for from the moneth of December vntill the end of Aprill, he did what in him lay to ſtoppe and hinder Louyſe, whom he poſſeſſed from making an end of her confeſſion, and from receiuing the bleſſed Sacrament: the like did Belzebub by Magdalene.

God (ſaith he) is not my redeemer, but my ſeuere Iudge. And addeth, that it is a wonder extraordinarily rare, that he is thus conſtrained to ſpeake the truth; yea it is more (ſaith he) then to create the world, in that the Diuels in this conſtraint, reſiſt as much they are able, and enter into diſpute with God. He alſo ſaid, I was not ſent by God to preach the Goſpell, I ſhould lye to ſay it; but ſaid that God had permitted him to enter into this body for his glory, and for the conuerſion of many ſoules, eſpecially of theſe two.

Both

Both the Deuils did discouer and declare, all the enormous and grosse villanies that these Magicians committed in their cursed Synagogue. Verrine further said, I speake vnto you things tending to your saluation: take and make vse of that which is good (as if a wicked Preist should giue you good exhortations) and if you will not, I tell you, you shall not be constrained vnto it.

These particulars with many others of a semblable nature, will giue an easie checke to those apprehensions, that should misconceiue them to be Angels of light: for they do plainly appeare what they are, to wit true Deuils. And consequently, in this regard there is no danger of being abused, by those which speake in persons possessed, because we know they are very Deuils, which in these cases we must alwaies presuppose as a foundation. The strange torments and gestures which do appeare beyond the strength of man in the bodies of those that are possessed, do prooue also the same vnto vs.

This being presupposed, it remaineth now to cleere vp some difficulties that were propounded since the impression of this booke: which not withstanding consistunt in facto tantum, and not in any points of our faith. And although I had for the most part breefly swept away these doubts in my Annotations in the margent, yet because I will giue no disrelish vnto any, I will make a longer explication of the same: alwayes supposing that which I haue noted in the 260. page vpon the day of Saint Iohn the Euangelist, that touching the predictions to come, time will make the truth or false-hood thereof to appeare heereafter, and touching those things that are abstruse and hidden, wee must in the meane time hold vs to that, which is decreed and taught by the Church.

THE

THE DOVBTS BY SOME PROPOVNDED TOVching the Hiſtory comprized in this booke.

THE I. DOVBT.

Whether it bee lawfull that a woman ſhould ſpeake and preach in the Church, ſince that Saint Paul forbiddeth a woman to ſpeake there?

THE ANSWERE.

THat a woman poſſeſſed ſhould ſpeake in the Church, or rather the Deuill by her mouth, during the time of Exorciſmes, is no new thing in the Church of God; and the freſh remembrance of the woman of Laon that was poſſeſſed in the face of the whole Court, and of diuerſe Prelates, doth giue ample atteſtation of the ſame, which Hiſtory was word for word ſo largely written, that it ariſeth to a iuſt volume; and many graue perſonages haue alleaged the ſame, ſo that diuerſe Preachers made no ſcruple to make mention thereof in the Pulpit as of a great miracle, ſent from God, to confirme the Catholicke faith, which began then to fluctuate and wauer in many, and alſo to conuert Heretickes vnto the truth. This booke hath bin ſeene and receiued in all the quarters of Chriſtendome, as ſome haue obſerued: yet neither Biſhops, nor the Sorbone, nor any Vniuerſity did euer ſhew any diſguſt they tooke in the publication of the ſame, nay it hath bin found, that it hath wrought good effect in the propagation and aduancement of the faith faith. Saint Ierome thought it no scorne to write the Hiſtory of a woman poſſeſſed through witch-craft, together with the manner thereof, and the queſtions of the Exorciſt Saint Hilarion, and the anſweres made by the Deuill. And in our time a Nunne of Millane that was poſſeſſed, did in like manner diſcourſe out of the Scripture, as ours do in this Hiſtory. Hieron in vita Hilarionis. Ioan. Lorin. in Act. Apoſtol. cap. 16.

Boleze. 1566. Bartholomæus Fayus præſes Pariſienſis in energumenico. Hadrianus Hoſtadius ſerm. 52. de Euchariſtia. Iohannes Lorinus in Acta Apoſt. cap. 5. & 16.

As for the matter of preaching which ſome may heere conceiue, the Hiſtory it ſelfe will thwart all ſuch imaginations; for ſhe neuer went into the Pulpit, and the Deuill himſelfe did oftentimes proteſt that hee was no Preacher, ſaying that if God ſhould command him to go into the Pulpit to declare who this Magician is, hee muſt haue taken vpon him the ſhape and ſemblance of a man, becauſe it would not befitt a woman to do it.

THE II. DOVBT.

Whether we are to beleeue all the Deuill ſaith?

THE ANSWERE.

IT is a note worthy of obſeruation, that he neuer ſaid it was neceſſary to beleeue him, but when hee ſpake out of the Goſpell and the Scripture, and then he ſharply rebuked all Hereticks and vnbeleeuers: but when he ſpeaketh otherwiſe, he plainly ſaith that he conſtraineth and tyeth none to beleeue him, as appeareth in the 249. page, about the end of the Act taken vpon Chriſtmas day.

THE III. DOVBT.

He ſaith that Antichriſt is borne.

ANSWERE.

THis hath bin ſaid many times by the Doctors, as by Saint Gregory and others; and about 200. yeares after In regiſtro.

D. Antonius in Historia.

after, Saint Vincent Ferrier did say it, and preach it, and doth assure vs of the same in the Treatise hee made De Antichristo, which was verified in Iohn Husse burned at the Councell of Constance, vntill which time the said Saint Vincent liued: And this Iohn Husse was the first originall and sourse of heresies both of the age past and of this now present. Quoniam Antichristi multi sunt, & Antichristus iam venit, saith Saint Iohn. And who knoweth what God prepareth and storeth vp for the hainous transgressions of our age.

THE IIII. DOVBT.

Whether Salomon bee damned, and Nabuchodonosor saued?

ANSWERE.

THe Annotation which I haue made in the margent, doth make knowne that this is a Probleme in the Church, yet Saint Augustine holdeth he is damned vpon the 126. Psalme, and in many other passages, as Bellarmine noteth 1. tom. lib. 1. Controuers. cap. 5. who is of the same opinion, together with Lyra vpon the second of Kinges the 7. Chapter. Touching Nabuchodonosor Saint Augustine doth oppose him directly against Pharaoh, and magnifies the iustice of God in Pharaohs reprobation, and his mercy in Nabuchodonosors saluation, although both (saith he) were equall in condition and dignity, and in the greatnesse of their sinnes. The repentance of the latter appeareth in the Scripture: And Epiphanius reporteth that Nabuchodonosor after he recouered his witts, in all his life after did neuer eate flesh nor drinke wine; and was aduised to do this by the Prophet Daniel.

In Decretis de Pœnitentia.

Lib. de interitu Prophetarum, in Danielem.

THE

THE V. DOVBT.

The Deuill seemeth to command the Exorcist, saying to him, take the stole and exorcise mee.

THE ANSWERE.

HEere is to be noted, that immediatly after it is said, command mee; and hee doth oftentimes protest, that he neither can, nor will do any thing without his command. In which hee sheweth, that he speaketh not after the manner of one that commandeth, but of one that desireth and would bee commanded. An Example heereof we haue in the Gospell, where it is said: Si eijcis nos hinc, mitte nos in gregem porcorum: & ait Iesus, Ite, where it is cleere, that ỹ word Mitte is not imperatiuely spoken, but by way of deprecation. Saint Athanasius reporteth, that when the Deuil perswaded S. Anthony to pray to God, hee prayed vnto him, not becausse the Deuil said it, but becausse it was his duty, and that the Deuill therein did speake agreeable vnto the word of God.

Matth. 8. & Marc. 5.

Athanas. in vita Anthonÿ.

THE VI. DOVBT.

Whether Henry the great, the fourth of that name bee saued?

THE ANSWERE.

THe Diuell doth say it, and repeat it three seuerall times in diuers places. And whereas it may be obiected, that this may bring in a bad example, the answere is cleere, that contrariwise it is a maruellous example vnto vs against Sorcerers, since that God doth so freely and largely pardon those, who are not hasty to giue credit vnto their abominations.

Nolite iudicare, &c. Dijs non detrahes, Principi populi tui non maledices.

And becauſe it is ſaid, that it was likely that his death was a kinde of Martyrdome; we are to interpret all doubtfull and indifferent things to the beſt, as wee are commanded in the Goſpell, eſpecially in behalfe of our Kings and Princes. Wee muſt ſuppoſe that before his Aſſaſſinate, a Germane Aſtrologian did foretell the day of his death, and he was afterwards aduertiſed thereof by others. We muſt alſo ſuppoſe, that by the excellency of his iudgement, and through the great faith which he had in God, and by the inſtructions of his ghoſtly fathers, he had this faith and knowledge, as to thinke it a greeuous ſin to beleeue iudiciarie Aſtrologers, or Magicians. All this being by vs ſuppoſed, as euery true French-man and indeed euery good Catholicke ought, it is eaſy to reſolue this difficulty, that his death was a kinde of Martyrdome; ſince if a man ſhall ſuffer death for any vertue be it morall or diuine, with faith, it is alwayes a Martyrdome. Beati qui perſecutionem patiuntur propter iuſtitiam, quoniam ipſorum eſt regnum cælorum. As for example, if ſome or other had foretold Ioſeph, that vnleſſe he gaue conſent vnto the laſciuious deſires of his Miſtres, he ſhould as he went out of the houſe be murthered. If this had happened, Ioſeph had bin a true Martyr, becauſe he rather made election to expoſe his life to danger, then to offend God through incontinencie. Much more, when ſuch a miſcheefe as this befalls a man, becauſe he would not tranſgreſſe the firſt commandement of the Law, which is the waightieſt and of moſt importance amongſt them all; the obſeruation of which is moſt frequently commanded in the law, and the tranſgreſſion the moſt ſeuerely threatned and auenged. This doctrine is the deciſion of Saint Thomas, who concludes that if a man ſuffer death for any vertue whatſoeuer, it is a true Martyrdome, And he alleageth the example of Saint Iohn Baptiſt, who was a true Martyr, in that hee did defend continency againſt Hoc maximum eſt & primum mandatum.

2.2.queſt.124. art.5.

the

the inceſtuouſneſſe of Herode. In like manner was that good Monke declared by a Councell to be a Martyr, becauſe in running betwixt two fencers to part them, hee was ſlaine by them. Saint Chryſoſtome doth preciſely ſay, that he which may be healed of ſome malady by inchantments, and refuſeth all ſuch helpe, leaſt he might offend God, and had rather dye, then haue the vſe of the ſame, in this caſe (ſaith he) he is a Martyr. Furthermore Cardinall Caietane commenting vpon the abouecited article of Saint Thomas, ſaith, that if a man bee ſlaine to auoid a veniall ſinne, that death is a Martyrdome; for it chanced vnto him, becauſe he would not offend God, and becauſe hee deſired to ſupport vertue. Thoſe that would play the Philoſophers and ſay; the deceaſed King called not on the name of God in the laſt period of his life, let them know that he might do that ſo ſuddenly and ſecretly, that none about him might perceiue it, much leſſe vnderſtand it. How eaſily might he lift vp his heart and inward parts vnto God, and that in a moment of time, eſpecially for that his precedent deſire might miniſter quicke aſſiſtance heereunto; becauſe that day hee powred out his prayers vnto God, more particularly and for a longer ſpace, then he accuſtomed to do. Beſides, that honorable company which were with him in his Caroche, do ſhew that hee went not ſurcharged with any wicked proiect or purpoſe.

Apud Theodoretum, in hiſt. Eccleſiaſt.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 3. in 1. ad Theſſal.

THE VII. DOVBT.

It tendeth litle to edification, where it is ſaid, that the bleſſed Sacrament was troden vnder feet.

ANSWERE.

I Haue cleered this very largely in the Epiſtle to the Reader. Beſides the myracle which followed thereupon did much condemne Sorcerers, and tended to the edification of good Christians. It was further necessary to touch vpon this pointe, as well for the integrity of this History, as also because the said prophanation was already published, and all the hereticke ministers of Xaintogne and Languedoc made their best aduantages from the same, as may be seene in the said Epistle. The But and aime of this History is, to declare how much God is offended with such vnhallowed and sacrilegious persons, as will appeare through the whole frame and body of this History. I should desire, that the historians in such cases would imitate the sacred Scripture, which neuer sets before vs any prophanation of those things that are sanctified, but it presently subioynes a miracle, as may be seene in the History of the sonnes of Heli, and of their death; of the Philistins prophaning the Arke, and their plagues: of the Bethsamites who were too curious to behold it, and the fire that fell from heauen vpon them: of the two sonnes of Aaron, Nabad and Abiud, and the fire that went out from their Censers and destroied them: of Choran and Dathan taking their Censers, and the earth opening vnder them: of king Ozias offering incense on the Altar, and of the leprosie wherewith hee was stricken. In the new Testament, of the prophaners of the Temple, and the whippes wherewith they were chased away, which Saint Ierome taketh to be a great miracle: of Ananias and Saphira, and of their sudden death: and to come neerer to our purpose, of Iudas prophaning the blessed Eucharist, and of his death the morrow after, with his belly breaking asunder in the middle. Saint Paul was well practised in this, who when he had told the Corinthians of this prophanation, he presently sets before their consideration those, that for this cause were dead, sick, and feeble, by the vengeance of the iust iudgement of God. And it is a cleere truth, that at sundry other times things sacred haue beene made prophane, which the holy Ghost pas-

Hieron. in Matth.

seth

seth ouer in silence, because there insued no miracle thereupon: which when it happeneth may edifie as much or more, then the prophanation can giue occasion of scandall. The same is held by S. Cyprian, and S. Gregory in his Dialogues. To this purpose may bee alleaged the example of the Donatists, that gaue the blessed Sacrament vnto doggs, who running presently mad, turned vpon them and tore them in peeces. As also of him who came in to the city of Berith, recited in the workes of S. Athanasius: and of him of Paris, whose markes are yet in the Church of Bullietes, in Latine, Ecclesia Domini Bullientis, the blessed Sacrament being throwne into a boyling cauldron. Another miracle is to be seene in the holy Chapel at Dijon. Besides the blessed Eucharist is more prophaned, when it entereth into a soule that is polluted with the infections of sinne, then it can be said to be in this place.

Cyprian. Serm. de lapsis.

THE VIII. DOVBT.

How and for what reason did Magdalene by the aduice of her Confessour, write one letter to the blessed Virgin, and another to the glorious S. Magdalene?

ANSWERE.

IT is a very profitable way which our spirituall fathers do vse, to instruct & inure those that haue any knowledge, to holy exercises and meditations; and by this means they become ready & expert therein. As a schole-master cõmandeth his scholar to write letters to his father or mother, to the King or to the Pope, not that he would haue the letters sent, but that his scholar should by this gaine some skil and ability: for it is one thing to write, and another thing to send a letter. So many in our age haue with great deuotion dedicated the epistles of their books to the blessed Virgin, not with an intent to send them, but to giue contentment to their deuotion. As for example the Epistle of the Booke touching cases of conscience made by Frier Benedictus, and of the Booke of Euangelical demonstrations vpon the 3. Maries, made by another Frier. The same was also practised by the Emperour Theodosius, who wrote a letter to S. Chrysostome, that was dead more then 30. yeeres before: which letter is to be seene in Nicephorus.

Lib. 14. Eccles hist. cap. 43.

Touching the correction of this letter which was made by the Diuell, we are to conceiue, that he was inforced by God, to busy himselfe in the conuersion of Magdalene, as is by experience verified vnto vs. There is no difficulty of this, for it is apparant, that a spirit is more sharpe-sighted and peircing, and more particularly familiar with mens faults and imperfections then any man can be either with his owne, or with others.

THE IX. DOVBT.

How the Diuell could pray to God for the conuersion of the Magician, presenting to God the Father the merits of the death and passion of his Sonne, of the blessed Virgine, and of all the Saints of Paradise?

ANSWERE.

S. Thom. 1. 2. quæst. 1. art. 1.

WHen a good or bad Spirit doth put motions into a man, if hee yeeld his consent and doth operate with them, then is the action said to be the mans and not the Spirits; because a voluntary action proceeding from free-will, is an action appertaining to a man. When it is said, that a Spirit did aske of God to bee a Spirit of lies in the mouths of the Prophets of Achab, although this lying spirit, did speake by the mouth of Zedekias and other false Prophets, yet the action of prophesying falsly, is attributed to Zedechias and his companions. In like manner, when the wicked Spirit

3. Reg. 22.

came

came to Saul, and made him throw his speare at Dauid, this action is Sauls and not the wicked Spirits, because Saul did consent and worke with him. So when the good Angell came vpon Sampson, by whose force and power he slew a thousand Philistins with the iaw-bone of an asse, the Scripture doth appropriate this victorious action vnto Sampson holding the iaw-bone in his hand. When the same good spirit made Elizabeth to declare the praises of the Virgin, the Gospel doth make the action to be blessed Elizabeths, exclamauit & dixit. The same may be said of S. Iohn Baptist, who leapt for ioy in his mothers belly, because he did co-operate and yeeld his consent thereunto, by his precedent free-will, as many of the fathers haue obserued. In the same sense doth Saint Augustine and others interprete that sentence of S. Paul, Spiritus postulat pro vobis gemitibus inenarrabilibus, postulare nos facit & gemere. For they are the actions of the man, not of the holy Spirit, but as he inspireth him. And when it is said that God hardened Pharaohs heart, the interpretation heereof is two fold. First that it was God himselfe immediatly that did it, by withdrawing his grace: secondly, that it was by Gods permission, who suffered Satan to tempt him euen to obduratnesse of heart, without controule or hindrance. Howsoeuer it bee, all the euill actions of Pharaoh that proceeded from this hardnesse of heart, and euen that too, are attributed to Pharaoh, Indurauit Pharaoh cor suum, saith the Scripture; and the reason heereof is, because he delighted and gaue his consent vnto this hardnesse of heart.

1. Reg. 18.

Inuasit spiritus Dei malus Saul & prophetabat in medio domus suæ, tenebatque lanceã & misit eam, &c.

Thus fared it with the Diuell that possessed Louyse, when God by his absolute power (as the Diuell himselfe said, and often repeated that it was a very great miracle) constrained the Diuell to moue the tongue of Louyse, and to imprint in her imagination all which she should say, Louyse giuing her consent vnto it, out of a longing shee had to conuert the Magician and

Magdalene. All these prayers were the actions of Louyse and not of the Diuell but as an instigatour. Peraduenture God would haue it so, to demonstrate the more how greeuous the offence of the said Magdalene was; shee at that time sending forth hideous yell's and cries with all the force she had for the space of an houre, till shee had lost her voyce; as also to shew how much prayer and merit must be imployed in the conuersion of a miserable man, so farre banished from the presence of God. And although the wicked Spirit did sometimes speake by Parenthesis in his owne person, to declare that he was the authour and moouer of this discourse yet this lets not, but that those other actions might bee humane, shee working with them, and not these Parentheses. And as wee haue noted vpon the passage in the 292. page, the act of the second of Ianuary and the 275. page in the act of the 29. of December, she afterward said, that she did labour and consent vnto all those prayers, as if it had proceeded from her owne proper and first motion. Which being so, there is no doubt but she might present the oblation of Iesus Christ to God his Father, as all Christians that are present at Masse do or ought to doe. Pro quibus tibi offerimus, vel qui tibi offerunt hoc sacrificium laudis pro se suisque omnibus, &c. Heereunto I adde, that of S. Thomas cited before in our Epistle, who saith, that when a young man is tempted by the Diuell to enter into the orders of religion, who hopes by this meanes either to ouerthrow him, or by him to spoyle others, and that this young man doth then pray to God to giue him grace to bee receiued, this action is meritorious and good, as being a humane action, proceeding from a good intention, although the Diuell bee the authour thereof. And if when the Diuell straineth to put his first designe in execution, hee doe yet resist him, then gaineth hee a double conquest vpon his enemy. The same may bee said of all other good workes, as giuing of Almes, or hearing the word word of God. Actiones sunt suppositorum.

THE X. DOVBT.

The Diuell saith, that God promised him a diminution of his paines.

ANSWERE.

THe essentiall torment of the Diuels, which is the depriuation of the sight of God, and is the greatest of all others, together with the punishment allotted vnto them from the beginning, and proportionable vnto their first sinne, cannot bee subiect to augmentation or diminution, as may those accidentall paines bee, which are often written and mentioned in Exorcismes, Augeo tibi pœnas. The doctours of Saint Ieromes time were of opinion, that euill spirits haue new punishments inflicted on them, as oft as they offended God, & these punishments are temporall: as parallell heereunto, there is an accidentall ioy in the good Angels at the conuersion of a sinner, which is lost againe, when hee returneth and falles into a relapse, but their essential ioy remaineth for euer. Besides God at the last iudgement will augment their paines. Vt, quid venisti ante tempus torquere nos? & tradidit cruciandos in iudicium reservari: although there should bee nothing else done vnto them, then the shutting and penning of them vp in hel, being now at more liberty in the aire. And when a good Angell binds a wicked Spirit (as in Tobias and in the Reuelation) then is his paine increased, and when he is loosed, then is it diminished and taken away. So shall Lucifer be serued at the end of the world, Soluetur Sathanas iam alligatus. There is heere no doubt then, if we attribute this vnto the vnlimited power of God, by which he is able to do all things, and of this power doth the Diuel expressely speake, as we haue before obserued.

Hierom super 5. cap. Matth.

Marc. 5. Matth. 8. 2. Pet. 2.

Tob. 8. Apoc. 20.

THE

THE XI. DOVBT.

There is a shew and semblance of ambition, by reason certaine praises are bestowed in common, and some giuen more particularly: which might well be spared.

ANSWERE.

TOuching this point, there are two sortes of learned men, which haue said their opinions of it. The first being led by the direction of their knowledge, answere candidely in three words, which for this purpose are as good as a thousand. It is a History. The others not regarding their knowledge (by which they might easily vnderstand, that in the composure of a History, the truth must be purely told and written, and must neither wrappe vp in silence, reprehensions nor praises, vices nor vertues) conclude, that it had beene better to haue spared them. Notwithstanding Moses in his bookes, hauing regard vnto the rules of a History, did otherwise, euen when he spake of his owne person. The same doth Dauid in his Psalmes, Iob in his History, Saint Paul in his Epistles. Truth it is, that I would haue pared this off from the History, but those that were there present did withstand it, protesting that they would then declare openly, that the History was not syncere and full: which yet I wrote not, neither was I present at all these acts. The History was giuen mee in Latine and French, and may word for word be iustified; yet did I qualifie and moderate this in the margent, and said, that this might seeme to sent of flattery: and for feare least it should be misconceiued, that this was suppositiall. I afterwards subioyned, Notwithstanding this hath beene said. Concerning the Trinity which hee speaketh of, himselfe maketh explanation of it in these words. When the creatures doe conforme their wills vnto the will of God, then haue

Act. of the 27. of Decem. pag. 260.

haue they not but one will with God. And this is agreeable to Saint Paul, who saith, Qui adhæret Deo vnus spiritus est cum eo. And Christ himselfe witnesseth the same whē speaking generally of all Christians he saith Iohn 17. Vt ipsi in nobis vnum sint. But neither my selfe nor any of ours doe arrogate or lay claime to this, especially I who am a poore and miserable sinner before God. Men may iudge whether or no I haue beene ambitious of mine owne glory, when in the Annotation which I haue set downe on that pointe, where the Diuell doth mention father Lawrent, and father Michaelis for preachers, without speaking word of others that were very famous in that kind, I haue added these words. He speaketh vnto the capacity of the simple people that were there present, because that these two did preach much in the cities of Prouince. Many will beare mee witnesse, that I forbad all Odes and Epigrammes to be inserted in the beginning of the Booke, and I know not how the Printer was wonne vnto it, vnlesse through the importunacy of some. As for that which concerneth the religious orders in common, the mother Therrese and the Abbot Ioachim haue foretold as much, saying, that about the end of the world two orders should be reformed in the Church, before the comming of Antichrist, and all the other orders should follow, Postea omnes ordines reformabuntur. Touching particular men (one of them being father Romillon Priest of the Doctrine) they are 66. yeeres of age, and this other not much short of it, so that it may be hence euinced, that their best rely is now on God, and that both their age and condition of calling will free them from any touch of worldly vanity: and God he knowes, that this History was meerly published for his glory, for the supportation of the Catholick Church, and for to stoppe the mouths of Hereticks, who wrested and abused the depositions of the Magician, that to our great disgust were put forth in print; which if it should passe vncheckt, it might adde obsti-

Ribadeneira in her life and workes.
Ioachin Abbas in Hieremiam.

nacy

nacy to the one, and bee a meanes to seduce the others. Therefore it was needfull to vnderstand the course of this History, which is the true antidote against those cursed depositions. Those that doe yet obiect, that Hereticks will take their aduantage thereof, let them read with diligence my Epistle to the Reader, and they shall perceiue that nothing makes for them. To conclude, this History is true, to which nothing hath been added, and in which nothing is contained, either against faith or manners: against the authority of Church or State; no more then is in the collection of the Exorcismes of the woman of Laon.

The reason why God hath permitted this wonder, may be on the one part the vnbeleefe of men, and on the other part the wrath of God for their vnbeleefe. Saint Chrysostome inferreth this conclusion against the Athiests of his time, vpon the confessions which the Diuils made, and their rehearsal of the tortures which they suffered in hell. This proceeded not (saith hee) from their owne accord, for their pride that alwaies swelleth and neuer abateth, is too repugnant thereunto; but it is God that constraineth them to doe this, for the further conuiction of Athiests, who beleeue not the word of God preached, nor yet the Scriptures. Wee are likewise taught by the Scripture, that when God is wroth with vs, he maketh men to vnderstand his indignation, foure seuerall waies. First when hee sendeth them cruell and tyrannous Princes: as in the 13. of Osee it is said, I will giue thee Kings in my displeasure, and Rulers in my indignation. The second (which is an argument of greater anger) is, when hee suffereth euill and corrupt Pastours to instruct the people either in doctrine (by permitting them to beleeue lies, because they would not hearken vnto the truth) or in manners, as he doth threaten them in the 14. of Ezechiel, and in other places. So Caiphas by propheſying amongst the Scribes and Pharisies, and inducing them to crucifie Christ Iesus, gaue as it were a signal a signall of their ensueing ruine. The third (which is a greater demonstration of wrath then the former) is, when the people are taught by Magicians and Sorcerers. Thus did Balaam propheſie amongſt the Moabites, and concluded that they ſhould be totally deſtroied. Et conteret duces Moab. The fourth (which is the greateſt of them all) is, when the Diuell is permitted to giue inſtructions vnto men, not by an immediate operation of his owne (for he is an inuiſible ſpirit) but by the bodies of thoſe that he doth poſſeſſe. And in this manner (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) God doth conuict and threaten the Atheiſts, who will not beleeue hell fire. And thus did the Diuels cry againſt the Phariſies and vnbeleeuing Iewes, that Chriſt Ieſus was the Sonne of God.

Homil. 13. in Matth.

So that from this Hiſtory we may draw three obſeruable points: the conuerſion of a ſinner, by whom others of like condition may take example: the detection of a curſed Magician; and the iuſt wrath of God againſt thoſe, who will not beleeue or follow that which is taught them by their Paſtours and Preachers. But hee that will make vſe of the foure ſignes aboue mentioned, ſhal thereby eſcape the diſpleaſure of God, and ſhall acquire a full meaſure of reward before him. If then wee doe thus conceiue of this Hiſtory, it can not chuſe but miniſter much edification vnto our conſciences.

We are further to conſider, that God as the Creator and ſoueraigne Lord of all, doth imploy both good and bad Angels, about any thing that may tend to his glory and the execution of his good pleaſure, be it by meanes ordinary or extraordinary. Of this ſecond wee haue an example in the Scripture; It is certaine, that the leaſt Angell in Paradiſe, is more potent then the greateſt Diuell in hell; as the Diuell himſelfe doth preciſely confeſſe in this Hiſtory: yet did God ſuffer the Diuell to reſiſt and ſtand in affront with Michael the Prince of Angels, about the burying of the body of Moſes. And being being not able to ſtoppe and vanquiſh him, hee had no other remedy but to flye to God, and to pray him to lay his command on Satan. Imperet tibi Deus, increpet te Deus Satan: eſpecially in matter of iuſtice, whereof the Diuels are the executioners. Thus when God would trye Iob in his iuſtice, and cauſe all his catteil to be taken from him, all his children to be deſtroied, his houſes to be throwne to the ground, and fire to deſcend from heauen and conſume all his ſubſtance, then ſpake hee friendly to Satan, as is written at large in the booke of Iob. And when hee would declare his iuſtice vpon Achab, and had decreed to let him periſh in battell for his tranſgreſſions, hee ſpake vnto a wicked Spirit, and commanded him to goe and execute his pleaſure. Now becauſe this Hiſtory is an act of his iuſtice againſt one of the moſt impious and curſed Magicians that euer was, as appeared in his end, and that it was not a woman that divulged this, but the Diuell himſelfe called Verrine, who publiſhed the ſame in her: and further, in regarde that God would ſhew an act of iuſtice vpon the conuerted ſinner, as the vnſufferable torments (wherewith for the ſpace of ſix moneths ſhee was in all mens ſight miſerably afflicted) doe very well teſtifie; it is not to bee wondered at, if heerein hee imployed two executioners of his iuſtice. Let vs then giue God leaue to doe whatſoeuer ſeemeth beſt vnto him, and not diſpute thus againſt his powerfulneſſe, and manifeſt good pleaſure.

CONCLVSION.

We ought not to beleeue the Diuell; yet when hee is compelled to diſcourſe and relate a truth, then wee ſhould feare and tremble, for it is a token of the wrath of God.

ERRATA.

Pag. 10. line 13. read, The Dominican father. p. 11. l. 21. read, refractarie. p. 12. l. 27. read, contentations. p. 18. l. 24. them, read, it. p. 38. l. 30. read, ouuert. p. 82. l. 2. it not so, r. it is not so. p. 87. l. 16. in margine, from any, r. from him. p. 96. l. vlt. for them, r. him. p. 97. l. 15. leaue out (and further) p. 103. l. 3. for them, r. him. p. 105. l. 19. for the, r. thy. p. 116. l. 10. for part, r. heart. p. 137. l. 27. r. to the blessed. p. 143. l. 6. for these, r. thee. p. ibid. l. 30. r. things. p. ibid. l. 36. r. store. p. 146. l. 5. r. 100000. p. 152. l. 12. r. in a good way. p. 169. l. 18. as like, r. like. p. 172. l. 11. r. seemed. p. 174. l. 32. leaue, r. liue. p. 189. l. 26. r. equall. p. 198. l. 8. redresse, r. addresse p. 216. l. 14. r. fauourably. p. 219. l. 18. in margine, for this Saint, r. the same. p. 223. l. 13. for his, r. this. p. 235. l. 32. forwhom, r. which. p. 245. l. 34. questioned, r. question p. 246. l. 1. r. dominj. p. 252. l. 31. r. follow. p. 257. l. 17. r. lessoned. p. 285. l. 5. r ascent. p. 355. l. 2. r. inuisibly. p. 361. l. 13. r. Thrones. p. 387. l. 15. the portment, r. deportment.

Errata in the discourse of Spirits.

Pag. 12. line 1. erunt, read, erant. p. 17. l. 5. this, r. his. Ibid. p. 26. leaue out are. p. 50. l. 9. Spiritum, r. Spiritum. p. 78. l. 24. do, r. did.

THE ADMIRABLE HISTORIE OF A PENITENT woman conuerted, who was seduced by a Magician in the Country of Prouince in France: and of the end of the said Magician.

The acts of the 27. of Nouember, 1610.

THE reuerend Father and Frier Sebastian Michaelis, Prior of the Couent of S. Magdalen at S. Maximin, of the order of preaching Friers, hauing sent Father Francis Domptius (aboue-named) to Saint Baume, a place of penitence of the said Saints: about the same time also (which was the 27. of Nouember, 1610.) there came thither from Saint Maximin, by Father Michaelis his appointment, Father Romillon, and Father Francis Billet, together with Magdalene de Demandouls, and Louyse Capeau. And it was held expedient, that the said Magdalene should there soiourne, especially on S. Andrewes day, to make frustrate the menaces of the Diuels, that threatned to carrie her away that day, according to the compact made betwixt them two yeeres before, as the said Magdalene confessed.

Being come thither, and she hauing been formerly exorcised in diuers places, as at nostre Dame de Grace, at S. Maximin, and at Aix, by the space of many moneths; in which affaire the said Father Francis Billet did exercise much patience in himselfe, and charitie towards the said Magdalene, yet was neuer able to draw the Diuels, who did possesse her, to speake one word; vpon the 28. 29. and 30. of Nouember, the said Father Francis Billet began againe to vndergoe the office of an Exorcist at S. Baume, endeuouring to make the Diuels to speake. In the meane time, by reason of some occurrence of busines, it behoued the said Father Francis to be absent for certaine daies from S Baume. Vpon whose departure (which was the 3. of December) the said Magdalene was very carefully watched; for in the meane space, especially vpon S Andrewes day in the euening, it chanced that the wicked spirits would sensibly and with great violence haue carried her away, euen when she was in the holy place of Penitence, whither she was led to preuent the worst; as also the night before they lifted her vp very high from the ground, and would haue carried her out at a window, which is in the highest place of the Quire at S. Baume. In so much that Father Romillon not being able to hold her, was forced to call for aide, and to contest with the Diuels and say, She is ours.

Magdalene carried vp by Diuels.

The 3. of December Father Romillon and the said Father Francis Billet before his departure, did intreate Father Francis Domptius the Dominican, that he would make some Exorcismes for Father Romillon, who by reason of his age was to vndergoe that labour; assuring him that Father Michaelis would auow the fact, because he had taken him as his assistant, in his proceedings of Inquisitour, to annihilate and breake off all contracts betweene the Diuell and Magdalene. To which Father Domptius then answered very coldly, because hee had been formerly trauelled and wearied with the pressure of the like charge.

The first speech of Verrine.

Notwithstanding vpon the 6. of December he began to coniure Louyse, and at the first Exorcisme one of the Diuels that was in her bodie, began to speake. Then the said said Dominican Father commanded him to worship God, and to bow himselfe in the adoration of him, and to doe things of the same nature, which he readily did to the great astonishment of the Exorcist, who had vpon another occasion laboured three weekes, to make a Diuell called Rauio, to performe an action of that kind.

The act of adoration of the said Verrine.

The 7. and 8. of December, vpon the continuance of the same Exorcismes, twice a day, the Diuels were asked and readily answered, that there were three of them in the bodie of Louyse, and that they resided there by meanes of witchcraft: the first of them named himselfe Verrine, the second Gresil, and the last Sonneillon: and that all three were of the third order, to wit in the ranke of Thrones.

Possession by witchcraft.

During this time, Verrine one of the Diuels in Louyse gaue a signe of his being in her bodie, and it was this: As the Dominican (who had been now an Exorcist for the space of three weekes) had after Euen-song finished his Rosarie, (as is the manner of the order of S. Dominicke) hee did immediatly present three prayers vnto three Saints, to the Virgin Mary the mother of God, to S. Magdalene, and to S. Dominicke; and then did sensibly feele a maruellous power, deuotion, and attention in himselfe, so that he was amazed from whence such incitements might come, and endeuoured by al meanes to shake the force of them, and to know the reason of this strange motion. But he could not finde the reason of it, vntill hee affronted the diuell with an Exorcisme, and so demanded of him, what were the Saints that did most disquier him? Who answered, they are those whom thou doest with such ardencie of affection pray vnto. The Exorcist asked him, whether it were not Saint Paul (vnto whom he euer bore a particular deuotion.) The diuell said, no; but it is the Virgin mother of God, Magdalene, and Dominicke: yet had not the Exorcist spoken a word of this to any person whatsoeuer.

The Exorcist tries the diuel.

The acts of the 8. of December, which was the 4. feaſt of the ſecond weeke of Aduent, and the day of the conception of our Lady. 1610.

THis day in the euening, the ſaid Dominican Father began to exorciſe; and vpon the entrie vnto the ſame, Verrine began to ſpeake in this manner following, to the honour and praiſe of the ſacred Mother of God, ſaying:

[a] Wee are to take theſe and the following diſcourſes, as we take the diſcourſes of Balaam the Inchanter, and of Caiphas that prophecied of Chriſt Ieſus; not of their owne voluntarie or proper motion. S. Athanaſius ſaith, that when the diuell perſwaded S. Anthony to pray vnto God, he prayed vnto him, not becauſe the diuell ſaid it, but becauſe hee ſpake agreeable vnto the word of God. Athanaſ. in vit. Anthonij. Thus we beleeue the diuels ſaying, in Mat. 8. Mark. 5. Luk. 8. that Chriſt Ieſus was the Meſſias, and the Son of the liuing God; not becauſe they ſaid it, but becauſe they were inforced to ſpeake according to the Scriptures. They feare and tremble (ſaith S. Iames) vnder the puiſſant arme of God, who ſerueth his turne with them as he pleaſeth Dragons and Serpents, fire and haile, doe all worke the will of God, ſaith Dauid, Pſalm. 148. [b] Exclamation vpon the conception of our Ladie.

[a, b]. Mary is the goodlieſt creature that euer the eternall Father created, to my great griefe doe I ſpeake it. She ſtandeth inceſſantly before her ſonne making interceſſion for you: ſhe ſheweth him the wombe that bare him, the breaſts that gaue him ſucke, and all the ſeruices that euer ſhe did for him in the world. True it is that ſhe is ſo faire, that the diuels themſelues would endure all the tortures of the world only to haue a ſight of her beautie; but they could neuer haue the grace to ſee her in glorie, neither haue they deſerued, or euer ſhall deſerue the ſame, by reaſon of their exceſſiue pride and arrogancie. She is ſo amiable, ſo excellent, and ſo rich in all perfections, that neither Angell, nor Archangell, no not the Seraphins themſelues, can be equall matches vnto Mary in beauty. She is rich and a Queene together, ſo that it were an idleneſſe to demaund, whether ſuch a one as ſhe be able to beſtow on thoſe that beg it of her: ſo is ſhe wiſe, and doth therefore know all your neceſſities. Beſides, ſhe is mercifull, and is euer in the preſence of her Sonne ſuing and ſaying: Sonne, take compaſſion vpon theſe miſerable ſinners, for many times they vnderſtand not what they aske. And in this (ſaid he) they are like the mother of the ſonnes of Zebedeus, who prayed that one of her ſonnes might ſit at the right hand, and the other at the left, not knowing that ſhe wronged her ſelfe in ſpeaking ſo, and that thoſe that were on the left hand ſhould be damned. But your God, who knoweth better then you what is needfull for you, will anſwere, You know not what you aske.

You will tell me, that this is no new thing which I vtter, it is true, but this is new, that the diuell doth ſpeak theſe things.

I ſay then, that it is good to loue, ſerue, and honour the moſt bleſſed and moſt worthie mother of God; for all thoſe that are carried with a full and perfect zeale vnto her, they ſhall neuer, it is true, it is true, it is true, they ſhall neuer, neuer (O Mary thou ſacred mother of God) be put to confuſion. The diuell himſelfe by the coaction of thy Sonne is forced to honour thee, and to call thee the mother of God, a thing vnaccuſtomed to be done by diuels: for they call thee either plaine [a] Mary, without any acceſſion of title, as did the Iewes in contempt, or they name thee by ſome other names of blaſphemie in great indignation: but neuer before by this ſo excellent an attribute, as the bleſſed mother of God. And vſing theſe words, you ſay all that may bee ſaid, of a Ladie, in honouring her with the title of the Mother of God; then which no dignitie is more excellent, none more venerable.

[a] The cõtempt of the diuels towards our Ladie.

[b] Shee is alſo all in all; for ſhe is the daughter of the Father, the mother of the ſonne, the ſpouſe of the holy Ghoſt, and the peereleſſe temple of the ſacred Trinitie. Shee is beſides, ſiſter vnto the Angels, yea euen their Queene and Princeſſe. I ſay further, that next after the bleſſed humanitie of Chriſt, ſhee hath her Quire alone, as one whoſe excellence admitteth no partners or equals to keepe her companie. And in that ſhee is the onely and moſt matchleſſe mother of God, it ſtands with reaſon, that hee who is cloathed with all power, wiſedome, and bountie, ſhould mould and faſhion her to admiration: neither are we to wonder that it is ſo.

[b] He limiteth this afterwards, ſaying, next to the humanitie of thy Sonne.

Many there are that haue a will to do good, but their impotencie and diſability maketh them come ſhort of their intendments: others haue knowledge, to doe good, but by reaſon of ſome bodily impeachments, or for want of grace they cannot imploy it thereunto: for the diuels haue knowledge, but it ſteedeth them very little. But [c] thou (ſpeaking of God) it is true, I ſpeake it conſtrainedly, and not out of affection, thou art omnipotent, all-knowing, and euerlaſtingly good, who art able to make out of nothing whatſoeuer ſeemeth good vnto thee. Notwithſtanding it is true, there are thoſe that for all this are vngratefull.

During theſe and the like diſcourſes ſo full of vſe and obſeruation, the ſiſter [d] Catherine of France was ſent for, and brought with her Magdalene that was poſſeſſed, that ſhe might know the rare and tranſcendent praiſes of the bleſſed mother of God (for it was held vnmeete that * Magdalene ſhould be preſent at the exorciſing of Louyſe.) And being come thither and ſeated on the firſt ſtep of the place of the holy Penitence, Verrine about the end of his diſcourſe turned towards her, and began to yell with a hideous out-cry. Belzebub, although thou be my Prince, yet there is one greater then thy ſelfe, that commandeth me to ſpeake in thy preſence: yes, [a] yes, I am conſtrained to ſpeake before thee.

Proud Belzebub the Prince of Diuels, who was in the body of Magdalene, hearing theſe words, began to bellow like a furious Bull, and wreſting aſide the head and eies of Magdalene, with great wrath and fierceneſſe he tooke her ſhooe, and threw it againſt Verrine, ſo that therewith he ſtrucke Louyſe on the head.

[c] Exclamation in the praiſes of God.

[d] This was Magdalenes Gardian, a woman admirably vertuous, whom we haue beheld raviſhed in a trãce, as ſoone as ſhe had with teares receiued the bleſſed Sacrament.

* There was obſerued a great hatred betwixt the two poſſeſſed, proceeding from the diuels that were contrarie.

[a] The Diuell that is inferiour, dares not ſpeake in the preſence of his Superiour without his permiſſion, becauſe he is reſtrained by one mightier then he: for the order they haue in hell is naturall. And we haue obſerued that the two companions of Verrine would neuer ſpeak without his permiſſion; nor the companions of Belzebub without his permiſſion, or in the abſence of the ſaid Belzebub.

Notwith-

Notwithstanding these brauadoes of Belzebub, Verrine addressed his speech vnto the said Magdalene, and said. [b] O Magdalene, how blest is S. Baume in thee. It is true Magdalene, blessed for euer is this S. Baume, because in this place if thou wilt, thou shalt become a second Magdalene: but hitherto thou remainest arrogant, vnthankfull, obdurate. I tell thee Magdalene, that thy Creatour is yet readie to die for thee. This is true, Magdalene: Mary intercedeth for thee, and pleadeth for thee before her sonne, and euer saith vnto him. My sonne, Magdalene will be conuerted vnto thee. But O cursed, polluted, detestable woman as thou art, thou still shuttest vp the dore of thy heart. Magdalene take heede vnto thy selfe; take heede, take heede, take heede Magdalene. I tell thee, neuer was Iudas, neuer was Herode so tormented as thou shalt bee, except thou amend thy life and conuersation. Magdalene, forsake these Diuels, Belzebub, Leuiathan, Balberith, Asmodee, Astaroth, forsake this infernall societie, Magdalene: they all doe thirst after nothing else but after thy damnation. Louyse is but the instrument of this discourse, shee is possessed out of loue to thee. God giueth the touch vnto this instrument, to make thee listen after his melodious harmonie. It is true Magdalene, this good God will receiue thee to grace; if thou doe repent, thou wilt proue another Thais; Humiliate thy selfe Magdalene, and returne and obey S. Vrsula.

[b] The first reprehension of Magdalene.

A [c] miracle, an vn-heard of miracle, and which will neuer happen againe, that the Diuell should conuert soules, and be in stead of a Physitian, an Apothecarie and a Surgeon.

[c] He here begins to discouer this miracle.

After all these discourses, [d] Magdalene still remained obstinate, and in her first desperate estate; at which all the compassionate spectators were much amazed, not onely for the hardnesse of her heart, but also to heare such high and mysterious discourses, and pronounced after more then a customarie manner. It was then held fit, to offer her vnto God by the 7. penitentiall Psalmes and other prayers.

[d] The hardnesse of Magdalenes heart.

When this was accompliſhed, the father Dominican ſaid vnto her. Magdalene where are thy [c] teares? where are thoſe gnawings and remorſes of conſcience? where are thoſe ſighes which a penitent woman ought to haue? At this Magdalene began to weepe, and bitterly bewailing her ſelfe ſhe fell downe at the feete of thoſe that were preſent, and asked forgiueneſſe, with this proteſtation, that ſhe knew her ſelfe to be a curſed and diſconſolate ſinner: ſo that euery one remained well edified thereby, and conceiued good hope of her conuerſion.

[c] Prayer cauſeth teares.

The Acts of the 9. of December.

ON which day in the morning Louyſe and Magdalene were by the ſaid Dominican father exorciſed, and at the entrance of the ſame Verine began to ſpeake in this manner. [a] Accurſed woman, liſten and bee attentiue vnto what I ſhall now ſay vnto thee: I call thee accurſed, becauſe in the world there is none ſo impure as thou: it is true, thou art moſt wicked, and ſhalt bee moſt vnfortunate, vnleſſe thou bee conuerted. Neuer [b] was Cain, neuer was Iudas, neuer was Pilat, neuer was the rich Glutton ſo horribly tortured, as thou ſhalt be. Louyſe is no Philoſopher, Louyſe hath no indowments of literature, Louyſe neuer was a ſtudent, and thou well knoweſt, that Louyſe vnderſtandeth not the ſecrets of thy heart; but almightie God who knoweth thy moſt reſerued cogitations, compelleth me to ſay, that [c] thou haſt againe harkened vnto Belzebub with ſtronger attention (diſſembling and graceleſſe Witch as thou art) then vnto thy Creatour: and this thou couertly doeſt day by day. Graceleſſe and accurſed woman, I do here lay it vnto thy heart, that he is fearfully incenſed againſt thee. And though it be an vncontroulable truth, that thou

[a] The 2. reprehenſiõ of Magdalene.

[b] Theſe are as ſtrokes of a hammer, to conuert a relentleſſe perſon, and to bruſe and bray his heart.

[c] The firſt accuſation of the Sorcereſſe.

thou art a thankleſſe and proud wretch, yet doth the [d] mother of God ſtand for thee: ſhee is euer, euer, euer ſpeaking for thee; ſhe is euer telling her ſonne: to morrow Magdalene will be obedient, to morrow Magdalene will be humbled, to morrow ſhe wil turne to goodneſſe, to morrow ſhee will be conuerted. O heart of ſtone, O heart of marble and of Diamond, nothing can ſoften or make thee tender but the blood of the Lamb. Looke to thy ſelfe Magdalene, and be no more wilfull, elſe art thou euerlaſtingly vndone: O thou a thouſand and a million of times accurſed, damned ſhalt thou be, and that more deepely then any other, the Diuels ſhall carrie thee body and ſoule to hell. I ſay vnto thee, neuer was there, nor ſhall be ſuch a wonder, as God hath now wrought for thy ſake. It is true, thou vngracious and flint-hearted woman, that God could doe no good vpon thee neither by his inſpirations, nor by preaching, nor by reading, nor by Angels, nor by all thoſe that are in heauen, nor by ſo many good men as haue prayed for thee. What? muſt thou haue a Diuell to conuert thee? muſt thou haue a Diuell to be thy Phyſitian, Apothecarie, and Surgeon? This is more ſtrange, then to ſee a hundred, and a hundred, and a hundred dead bodies raiſed and enliſened againe. The defect is no where but in thee, to be if thou wilt, another Magdalene, another Thais, another Mary of Ægypt, and another Pelagia. Magdelene I aduiſe thee reſiſt no longer, open the dore which thou haſt locked againſt thy God, and he will compaſſion thy youth, and giue pardon to thy tranſgreſſions.

Verrine continued on, and ſaid. Magdalene. Thou knoweſt well, that Louyſe is very ſcrupulous and daintie of an oath; and will not ſweare for any good. I then doe ſweare by your God and by your Redeemer, that it is moſt true which I haue formerly ſpoken. And till this preſent thou diddeſt conceiue it was Louyſe: is not this true? The all-powerfull God who ſeeth thy in-moſt imagiimaginations, constraineth me to speake it.

[d] Exclamation that our Lady intercedeth for ſinners.

Then hee cried. Ha, woe is me. [c] Ha, Belzebub thou doest threaten me; but I must not regard thy threates, for a maister more potent then thou, and all hell besides doth command me. Then turning to Magdalene hee said; Magdalene renounce Belzebub, Leuiathan, Baalberith, Asmodee, Astaroth; say but, I renounce thee cursed Belzebub, and thee wretched Leuiathan, & thee Baalberith, and thee Astaroth, and thee Asmodee. Then he willed the Exorcist that hee would force him to make this [a] abiuration, which hee did by the mouth of Louyse. After the end of this discourse and of so terrible an inuective, the Father Dominican turned to Magdalene, and commanded her to say, Conuerte me Domine, & conuertar ad te. Then began she to weepe very tenderly, and in external appearance shewed maruellous great contrition for her life past, and oftentimes kissed a Crucifix which she held in her hand.

The Dominican when he perceiued in her so much compunction, after the terrible batteries of such a hammer, that did so beate at the gate of her heart, asked her how she found her selfe. Magdalene answered: Ha! my father, I am at the brink of desperation. [b] To which the said Father replied: No Magdalene, God doth not call thee to reiect thee afterwards. Be confident that the gate of his mercy is opened vnto thee, and that his hand is stretched out to receiue thee. Magdalene resist not his motions any longer, but ponder well vpon them, for in them God doth offer vnto thee the remission of thy sinnes, and such abundance of grace, that if thou be willing, thou maist proue another Magdalene. What inducement leadeth thee to be distrustfull of the bountie and mercie of thy Redeemer? To which, she said, I [c] am as it were swallowed vp in the immense sea of my offences, and with the foulnesse of my transgressions.

Then did Verrine lay hold on those words, and said: I haue not spoken this vnto thee, to occasion thee to despaire:

[c] Belzebub inuisibly menaceth him, according to the mutuall language, that Spirits haue.

[a] Verrine neuer made oth or abiuration but by the commandement of the Exorcist. Magdalenes contrition.

[b] The Exorcists exhortation.

[c] She was also much ashamed that she was proclaimed a Sorceresse in the presence of all the people.

ſpaire: no, no, Magdalene, although any other ſinner ſhould commit a million of impieties more then thy ſelfe, Magdalene, it is true, God would pardon him vpon his comming home vnto him. God cannot lie, he hath ſaid it: In [d] quacunq; hora, He hath made no ſeſſement of the number, or enormitie of ſinnes, he deſireth only vnfained repentance: and it is moſt true, God receiueth a ſinner as the prodigall childe was receiued. Theſe and the like words were vttered by Verrine, ſo that the whole aſſemblie was poſſeſſed with more amazement, then on the day before.

[d] The mercie of God.

The ſame day after Euening-ſong were Louyſe and Magdalene exorciſed by the ſame Dominican Father before the great Altar at S. Baume, where there remaineth a pourtrait or picture of the bleſſed Mother of God, with her ſonne Ieſus in her armes, hauing on one ſide of her the bleſſed S. Magdalene, and on the other ſide S. Dominicke. At the beginning of the Exorciſmes the ſaid Father demanded of Magdalene: Doe you acknowledge your ſelfe to be a proud, vngratefull, and refractorie woman, and to be the moſt miſerable creature that did euer tread on earth? Doe you renounce with your whole heart Belzebub and his adherents? Are you readie to ſet open your heart to God, who hath created you? To which ſhe anſwered, yes: and in contempt of Sathan ſhe ſpit [e] three ſeuerall times vpon the earth. Then preſently ſpake Verrine, and ſaid: Magdalene true it is, that this is the firſt time thou ſpakeſt from thy heart. Magdalene, now doth the whole hoſt of heauen reioyce for thee, and all hell is in great ſorrow and confuſion; the Almightie compelleth mee to ſpeake it. Magdalene, take now vnto thee thy God and thy Creator for thy Father and husband. Loue him, and him alone with all thy heart, and let neither men, nor women, nor any other creature whatſoeuer ſhare or haue fellowſhip herein, but for his ſake. Magdalene deliuer vp the key of the three faculties of thy ſoule vnto him, for he

[e] She ſpit at the perſwaſion of the Exorciſt.

he now begins to take affection vnto thee.

f Verrine his perſwaſions to Magdalene.

f Magdalene, thou doeſt affect beautie, thy ſpouſe is the comelieſt amongſt men. Hadſt thou but once ſeene him, as hath that other Magdalene, thou wouldeſt nothing but languiſh after him. It is true (ſaid he, turning to thoſe that were preſent) you know not this, but we know it well: yet neuer ſaw we him in his glorious beautie, although wee would endure whole millions of torments to gaine the fruition of the ſame.

I ſay, Magdalene, thy ſpouſe is moſt louely, moſt gracious, moſt perfect: He would yet be readie to die for thee, and for all thoſe that are here: he hath hands of iron for vs, and feete of wooll for you. He that knew the greatneſſe of his beautie, would ſuffer millions of torments, to haue only a glance of him, as he paſſed by: yea the very diuels confeſſe, that he is beautie, goodnes, and perfection it ſelfe.

Thou loueſt riches and pleaſures, Magdalene; thy Spouſe is powerfull to beſtow vpon thee Paradiſe and Heauen, which are repleniſhed with all riches and pleaſures that may be. Fie on diuels, fie on Belzebub, fie on all hell. True it is, Magdalene, that we Diuels promiſe mountaines and maruels, but the wages wee giue to thoſe that ſerue and pleaſure vs, is meerely hell. But with thy Spouſe there are a thouſand millions of pleaſures, which doe neuer decreaſe, nor will euer haue end. The delights there are ſo infinite, the contentation ſo numberleſſe, the ioyes ſo exquiſite and immenſe withall, that though I ſhould diſcourſe thereof vntill the day of iudgement, yet could I not ſet foorth their vndeſcribeable greatneſſe and excellencie.

Magdalene, thou loueſt nobleneſſe of blood: Thy Spouſe ſhall ennoble thee, and place thee in the ranke and condition of a Queene and Princeſſe: onely loue him with all thy heart, ſithence he loueth thee ſo much, and will inueſt thee with ſo much honour.

Thou art alſo to take the moſt bleſſed Mother of God

God for thy mother: For thy [g] naturall mother heere wisheth thee much good, but hath not abilitie of performance: but the sacred Mother of God hath all power to satisfie thy desires; all knowledge to vnderstand what is meete for thee: all goodnesse to grant thy requests vnto thee. Magdalene, she is so amiable, that she is not to be paragond by any: we Diuels neither haue seene her, nor shall see her; but it is in thee to behold her, if thou wilt. Magdalene, the Diuels will assault thee againe and againe, euen vntill they tempt thee to despaire: but bee of good cheere, be of good cheere; God will yeeld thee his assistance, if thou wilt but permit him to discipline and gouerne thy soule. And take thou no thought for any thing, for the victorie will remaine with thee.

[g] The arriuall of Magdalenes mother.

True it is, Magdalene, that to enter into Paradise, thou oughtest to tread in the paths of simplicitie. Thou hast read many bookes, but art little aduantaged by them. The gate of Paradise is so narrow, that there can enter in but one at once, neither can you passe so, but you must be forced to creepe vpon your belly. Thou art to thanke [h] Magdalene a thousand million of times, for she hath done much in thy behalfe, and will hereafter be thy aduocate, yea euen thy sister to be assistant vnto thee in all perils and dangers.

[h] S. Magdalene interceded for Magdalene.

Thou oughtest also to render thankes vnto S. [i] Dominicke, (a great enemie of mine he is) for he hath mediated much in thy behalfe.

[i] Dominicke an intercessor for Magdalene.

Thou must doe the same vnto the Angell that is thy Gardian, who hath begged thee of his Lord, saying: Lord leaue Magdalene to me, suffer her to be a day longer in my custodie, and she will be conuerted, she will repent, she will readily relinquish all the blandishments and inticings of hell. Courage then, Magdalene, for thou hast gracious and diligent Aduocates for thee vnto God. Then shewing her Father Romillon, and the Father the Exorcist, he said vnto her, Magdalene behold thy thy Gods on earth, thou art yet as a childe, suffer thy selfe to be gouerned, humble thy selfe, be obseruant of them, and follow their aduice and counsell.

Verrine added: Magdalene, tell me, didst thou neuer see the Duels? Whereunto she answered, that she had. Then said Verrine: And knowest thou not, that the inferiour Duell dareth not to speake in the presence of his superiour. Is it not thus? Speake? To which she answered, that it was so. After this was spoken, Verrine said to Belzebub: I regard not at all thy threats; a greater Master then thou commandeth me. In Hell I owe thee homage and obseruance, as one more powerfull then my selfe, but being in this bodie, I haue nought to doe with thee: for I am here by the appointment of thy Creator.

[1] She had seene them often at the Synagogue and elsewhere.

Then towards the end, he addressed his speech again to Magdalene, and said: Thou hast been serued like a Princesse, thou hast had the first place at the table, and the middle, and also the last. Content thy selfe, and digest this remonstrance well: all these discourses are intended to thee.

When this was finished, the whole assembly thought it fit to say a Te Deum laudamus, &c. to giue thankes vnto the Almightie for his manifold mercies shewred downe from aboue vpon the said Magdalene; which was done to the great ioy and contentment of her owne mother, who by accident was there present at S. Baume.

Te Deum laudamus, &c. being ended, Magdalene cast her selfe at the feete of her mother, and humbly craued her pardon; and performed the same to the whole assemblie, who receiued much comfort and gladnesse, to see the vnbounded and infinite bountie of God towards his creatures.

At the same time some aduised Magdalene to take her Creator for her husband, the blessed Mother of God for her mother, the holy S. Magdalene for her sister, and

S. Domi-

S. Dominicke for her father, and all the Angels for her brothers: and so to call them by these seuerall appellations, when she prayed. This being done, she directed a letter by the aduice of the Father her Confessor to her blessed and gracious Mother the Virgin Mary, in this following manner.

My[1] most sacred, most glorious, most sweet and amiable Mother, I salute you with my very heart, and present my selfe before you, as a poore afflicted daughter before her mother, to receiue some consolation. I do addresse my selfe to you (my dearest and most amiable mother) as a poore desolate girle, that is on all sides destituted and defeated of comfort, deuoid of all goodnesse, and surcharged with whatsoeuer is naught. I therefore in all humilitie pray you to take pitie vpon me, and do here protest, that I offer and consecrate my selfe wholly vnto you, and doe freely bequeath you the keyes of my heart, that you may in the midst thereof implant the vnstained lilies of puritie and chastitie, that my dearest spouse Iesus may repose himselfe and take his delight in the same. I giue also vnto you the keyes of the three powers of my soule: the key of my vnderstanding, to plant therein the lawrell of perfect hope, that I may trust wholly vpō my spouse: the key of my wil, to plant therein the rose of feruent loue, that I may aboue all things cleaue vnto him, and for his loue abandon all other by affection: the key of my memorie, to plant therein the violet of deepe humilitie, to put me in minde of my base and meane condition, that so I may deiect and debase my selfe to the feete of euery one, after the example of my beloued and dearest spouse. And I heartily beseech you my dearest and best beloued Mother to accept these my prayers and offers, so shall I remaine now and for euer, your most humble, most obseruant, most vnworthie daughter, seruant and slaue Magdalene of Iesus.

This letter Father Romillon did then approue of, but the

[1] The letter that Magdalene wrote to the mother of God. See the answere vnto the doubts in the 8. obiection after the Epistle to the Reader.

the correction thereof was on the twelfth of December, as afterward appeareth by the acts of the said day.

The acts of the 10. of December. 1610.

THis day in the morning were Louyse and Magdalene exorcised by the Dominican Father, in the presence of foure Pilgrimes come [m] from Rome, and of many other persons of the countrey of Prouince. Then at the beginning of the Exorcismes, Verrine began to discourse in this sort.

[n] Call to remembrance the day of Gods iudgement, how dreadfull it will be; when hee shall separate the good from the bad, and shall say, Come, giue me an account of your workes of mercie.

He will not aske you, whither you haue read or prayed much, whether you haue been great or base, noble or ignoble: no, no, hee will not mention this, but will say, Come, giue me an account, whether it be not true, that when I was a hungrie, you (directing his speech to those that he reproueth) gaue me no meate; when I was thirstie, you gaue me no drinke; when I was naked, you cloathed me not; when I was a stranger, you receiued me not; when I was sicke, you visited me not; when I was a prisoner you redeemed me not; when I was dead you buried me not. Then shall they answere and say: What? were you a hungrie? were you thirstie? could so great a Lord as you stand in need of any thing? could you be naked? we neuer saw you thus. Verrine followed on, and speaking in generall as well to those that were absent, as to those that were present, he said: [o] O miserable and vnthankfull men, how misunderstanding you are of the benefits of God. You call your selues Christians, but doe not the workes of Christians: you haue a God so good, that the very Diuels doe confesse his ouer-much goodnesse. What more great expression

and

[m] Great troupes did daily flocke thither.

[n] Exclamation touching the last iudgement.

[o] A worthie reprehension of Christians.

and signe can you haue thereof, then to heare him speak these words, Whatsoeuer you shall doe vnto the least of mine, I will take it done vnto my selfe.

Miserable is the state of those Christians, who doe not loue and serue so good a God, know yee therefore, that those who remaine in their obstinacy and wilfulnesse, and yet haue heard those dreadfull words, which God spake to the cursed and reprobate, Ite maledicti in ignem æternum, Ha! how well doe they deserue to incurre the most seuere castigation.

We are to note, that Verrine spake these words with such hideous cries, and fiercenesse, that he seemed desperatly enraged: and often repeated these words Ite maledicti, about fiue seuerall times; and gaue intimation, that since they had slighted and set at nought all the wounds of our Sauiour, together with the blessed Trinity, and the 10. Commandements of the law; it comported with good reason, that they should experiment and try that amazefull sentence.

Hereunto Verrine added. Your God is so full of indignation, and so dreadfull, that the beames proceeding from his eyes as from bright-shining flames, cannot be endured by the wicked: Yea the paines of hell it selfe are not more vnsupportable, then is the fury of this great Iudge, when once he is prouoked by them.

I say further, that the soules [p] in hell are so horridly fearefull, that if any of them should be presented before you, the sight thereof would prooue vnto you so ghastly and vnsufferable, that you would dye in the place, to see all their deformities, pollutions, loathsomnesse, stinkes, and meruailous torments. But your God is so good, that he will giue to euery one according to his deseruings (not for their [q] merits, but from his owne bounty, for if he should handle euery man according to his deserts, there would few scape hell:) And this great God, be your good workes neuer so meane, yet if they flow from charity and the merits of his passion, hee will giue them a reward, as he hath promised, saying, Come yee blessed of my father, &c.

[p] The sight of the damned fearefull.

[q] The vocation and first grace is the pure & meere grace of God.

Because when I was a hungry you gaue mee meate; when I was thirstie you gaue me to drinke; when I was a stranger, you tooke me in; when I was dead, you buried me; when I was sicke you visited me; when I was naked you cloathed me; when I was in prison you redeemed me. Then shall he carrie them to Paradise, to haue there the fruition of his pleasures, because they contemned all for his sake. And since they were his companions at the Crosse, it standeth with reason, that they be his Associates at his table. These words were no sooner ended, but hee cried, I am mad, I am mad; I [r] am compelled to expresse this not for loue, but vpon constraint.

[r] The constraint of Verrine, which he auoweth in all his discourse.

It is strange that a souldier should kill himselfe with his owne weapons. It fareth so with mee, who take armes against my selfe, wherewith my owne throat is mangled. But what remedie: God will haue it so.

Is it not a thing that was neuer heard of before, that the Diuell is at variance with the Diuell, and that hell combateth against hell?

Here is to be obserued, that this discourse and many others semblable vnto them, were spoken with such an emphasis and efficacie, that all the assembly began to weepe, and to aske God forgiuenesse: as also to confesse themselues, and to receiue the Sacrament instantly vpon it. Of which the foure aboue-named Pilgrimes would needs giue attestation in forme as followeth.

[f] The Pilgrimes arriuall, and testimonie of the precedent Acts, besides ordinarie witnesses.

The 10. of December 1610. there came to S. Baume [f] Monsieur Arnoulde Borffartigues, Canon and Sexton of the Cathedrall Church of Cominge, Doctor of Diuinitie, Iames Audry Merchant, of Troy in Champaigne, Iohn Gallois Gold-smith, and Claud Gaudet a Merchant Draper of Troy in Champaigne, which were present at the Exorcismes, of the two women that were possessed, about three seuerall times, and heard very admirable mirable accidents touching this particular. In witneſſe whereof we of our owne proper motion haue ſubſcribed our names, for the publique good, and for the reducement & bringing home of many millions of ſoules by the miraculouſneſſe of the ſame, where the Diuell is enforced to vtter the truth of the Goſpell by the mouth of a woman called Louyſe, being thereunto commanded by almighty God. And hauing no further occaſion to remaine or ſoiourne here any longer, as men harried with the trauell and toyle of our iourney from Rome, we haue left our teſtimony in the hands of the venerable father the Exorciſt, in the preſence of the fathers that were preſent, and of many others. In truth whereof we haue ſubſigned our names. Torffartigues, Iohn Gallois, Gaudet, Audry.

The ſame day in the euening were Louyſe and Magdalene exorciſed by the Dominican father, and at the beginning of the Exorciſmes, Verrine diſcourſed of the paines of hell, and other matters in this manner.

The [t] paines of hell are ſo great and fearefull, that one alone Diuell with his hideous ſhape, were able to ſtrike a man dead vpon the place, although he had a thouſand liues. The diuels themſelues might not indure the ſoules of the damned, were it not that hell were the place that is deſtinated for euerlaſting torments. When the accurſed ſoules of the damned come vnto vs, wee make very much of them, wee cauſe them to ſit on a great chaire of flaming fire; we preſent vnto them balls of fire for their repaſt that are all very well ſulphured: we giue them to drink a certaine liquor, bitter as gall or worm wood, and enforce alſo vpon them courteſies more bitter and more ſtinking then theſe. Their eyes are fed with continuall viſions of Diuels; they haue for their ſongs and muſicke, wherein they tooke their pleaſure in their life time; vnceſſant blaſphemies againſt God, curſing the time that they were borne, their fathers and their mothers, together with all other creatures great and ſmall. We fling and tumble them ſometimes in the fire, ſometimes vpon the yce, ſometimes in ſulphure, ſometimes in ſnow; and in exprobation of their tranſgreſſions we ſay vnto them. Ha! accurſed wretches, behold, [u] behold the recompenſe for your pleaſures and delicacies. You that would not obey your God, you that made ſlight to treſpaſſe againſt his commandements, you that haue whored after Baal, and abandoned your Creator, you doe deſerue, you doe deſerue to be thus tormented; you deſerue to bee thus handled. Neuer ſhall you ſee God, but ſhall bee eternally depriued of thoſe celeſtiall ioyes, and in brieſe, you ſhall here be tortured for euer.

[t] Exclamation of the paines of hell.

[u] The reproches and ſorrowes of the damned.

Beſides (ſaid Verrine) we are cruell remembrancers vnto them of the fauours and bleſſings which they haue receiued from their Creatour, not hereby to giue them any comfort or refreſhment, but to torment them the more abundantly. We ſay vnto them. Miſerable caitifes as you are, you might haue gone to Paradiſe, you might haue beene filled with heauenly bliſſe, you might haue beene companions to the Saints of heauen; but the tide is turned another way. Behold, you are the bondmen of Sathan, the Gally-ſlaues of hell, and the food and nouriſhment of that vnquenchable fire. How wretched are you, who might haue had the liberty of the children of God, and doe now remaine in the thrall and ſeruitude of Diuels. If you ſuffer tortures, you doe well deſerue them; yet are you not puniſhed according to your miſdeedes and demerits. Then making a great out-cry, he ſaid.

O wonderfull miracle, O great miſery! The Diuels ſpeak againſt [x] themſelues, yea and againſt all hell; they diſgrace their owne Countrey, and dehort men from trauelling thither, and from cohabiting with them; This is very ſtrange. Let two men ſpeake together of their Country, and it is not to be wondered at, if both of them be lauiſh in the praiſes thereof: but it is a great miracle miracle that the Diuell an enemie to God and heauen, recommendeth vnto men that celeſtiall Country, and vilifieth the kingdome of hell. I further auerre, that men ride to hell eaſily in a Coach, and the horſes and all the furniture thereof may paſſe in with facility: But to Paradiſe, you muſt goe a-foote, and enter in, ſtouping; the gates thereof are narrow, ſo that much labour and toyle is requiſite for the attainement of the ſame, and hardly may you enter in without doing penance. I alſo ſay, that the fire of hell is ſo deuouringly hot, that put all the fire in the world together, and it is but a painting in regard of it. Yet are there ſoules ſo deſperate, and vnnaturall, that they runne at full ſpeede into theſe gulphes of brimſtone. Accurſed Magicians, abominable Witches and relentleſſe ſinners, can all of them relate vnto you ſuch newes as this.

[x] The ſorrow of Verrine, becauſe he was conſtrained.

Then hee [y] cried with great and ghaſtly exclamations, and with a rage and fierceneſſe beyond ordinarie, and ſpake theſe words fiue ſeuerall times. For euer, for euer, for euer, for euer, for euer; alas ſhall the damned ſoules be depriued of the viſion of God. You will tell mee perchance, that as yet I haue tolde you no great newes, it may be ſo: notwithſtanding it is ſtrange newes (as I haue ſaid formerly) to heare a Diuell ſpeake for God, and for the ſaluation of your ſoules.

[y] Exclamation of the wicked Spirit.

All the aſſembly were ſo affrighted with theſe and the like words, and at the dreadfull paſſages which Verrine had, touching the paines of hell, that there guſhed from their eyes abundance of teares, when they called to remembrance their offences which they had committed.

After this diſcourſe, Belzebub who was in the body of Magdalene, cried out very [z] hideouſly. Hola! I will acquaint you with the repoſe and contentation which the ſoules of the damned haue in hell. And then taking Magdalene, he [a] rudely and without intermiſſion toſſed her from one ſide of the Church of S. Baume to [z] The maruellous paines of hell.

[a] Belzebub throweth Magdalene from one ſide of the Church to the other.

the other, and presently from that side backe againe, and so continued in tormenting of her without any cessation, so that if it had not ended as it did, she would surely haue died. Thus (said hee) doe wee torture the soules of the damned, without allotting vnto them the least moment of relaxation.

Besides this that hath beene said, Verrine added, that [b] God was so beautifull, that the Diuels would be content to vndergoe all the torments of the world, and all the paines of hell, so they might but once haue a sight of his beauty.

[b] The will as a faculty of nature, desireth euer that which is good.

The same day after dinner, Magdalene wrote a letter to the blessed S. Magdalene, the tenour whereof ensueth.

[c] The letter to S. Magdalene.

See the answer to the doubts, after the Epistle to the reader. Obiect. 8.

Most [c] holy, glorious, and beloued sister. I heartily beseech you to compassionate the deplored estate of your poore and worthlesse sister. Take me by the hand, and leade mee to my deerest and louely spouse. And with all my soule I doe entreate you, to indow me with those fiue goodly qualities, wherewith you were able to prostrate your selfe at his blessed feete, and which induced him to receiue you with such speed for his best-beloued friend.

The first is humility, that I may vnder-value and set at naught all things with you. The second is perfect contrition, that I may bewaile and euer abominate all my sinnes. The third is, perfect faith, that I may beleeue, that the almighty can pardon me. The fourth is perfect hope, that I may assuredly expect his mercy. The fifth is feruent charity and loue, that I may affect and cleaue to him as to my deerest spouse, and disingage my selfe from those incongruous desires, which may thwart or giue impeachment vnto the same. I instantly pray you (deerest sister) to begge for mee these fiue louely vertues, that I may be confident through them, to present my selfe to my most glorious Spouse, and so to receiue from him the blessings and grace of heauen: that together with you I may praise and blesse him for euer. My most blessed and glorious sister.

together

Your most humble, obedient, vnworthie, and meanest sister and seruant, the wretched slaue, and forlorne creature, Magdalene of Iesus.

The Acts of the 11. of December.

VPon that day the Dominican father began to consider with himselfe, whither it were not expedient to force [d] the Diuell to dictate the words and discourses, which he affirmed did come from God, and so to submit them to the censure of the Church, to the end that the wilinesse and subtilties of Sathan might be detected, and to make knowne, whither hee spake from his owne motion and scope, or no: that so both those that saw it not, and those that were present at it, and also those that are to come after vs, might be partakers of this history, to the encreasing of the glory of God, of his blessed mother, of S. Mary Magdalene, and of all other Saints, to the extirpation of all heresies, and to the conuersion of mis-led and wandering soules. Conceiuing for a certainty, that whither the pitcher fall vpon the stone, or the stone vpon the pitcher, it is still the pitcher that is broken, and all shall turne to the confusion of the Diuell, be it this or that way. Since that in strange and new occurrences, it is lawfull to vse and search forth new remedies; prouided that nothing bee done against God and his Church.

[d] The triall of the wicked Spirit.

This was for certaine daies put in execution, when as the Exorcist not being able to write downe all for hast, Verrine did dictate vnto him word after word, that which hee had formerly discoursed: and that for eight daies after: And this was done by the vertue of the Exorcismes. Afterwards hee had liberty to speake as hee would, which he also did.

The same day came the reuerend father Francis Billet, Priest Priest of the Christian Doctrine. And in the morning Louyse and Magdalene were exorcised by the Dominican father who saying Masse to the honour of the blessed mother of God, Belzebub [e] vpon these words (ecce Ancilla Domini) began to crye. O accursed words for vs. O would they had neuer beene spoken!

And a little before the beginning of the said masse, Belzebub lifted himselfe vp with great arrogancy, and vnusuall fury, howling and crying with a loud voice: Should I adore thee Christ? Should I adore thee! No, no; I am as mighty as thy selfe. [f] See how vn-stouping-ly and vpright I stand. In all this hee made the body of the girle serue his turne as his instrument.

Then Verrine (who was in the body of Louyse) said vnto him. Ha! Belzebub, wretched spirit as thou art, thou [g] wilt bee lasht and punished for this. Belzebub answered. I regard not, I had rather be punished, then adore him.

After Masse, the Priest holding the blessed Hoast that Louyse and Magdalene might communicate, and saying (Ecce Agnus Dei) Belzebub began to cry, yes, yes, yes, hee is a Lambe for others, but vnto vs a roaring Lyon. Then the Dominican father said vnto him. Adora Deum tuum. To which Belzebub replied: Why should I worship this God? I will not doe it, I will not doe it. Ha God! in despight of thee, in despight of Mary, in despight of Magdalene, this Magdalene is mine.

Then said Verrine: Ha thou cursed and as abominable as my selfe, thou hast nought to do with Magdalene, thou shalt come short of thy reckoning. Magdalene this is but to fright thee, feare not, be confident, and take God for thy husband.

Then answered Belzebub. No, no; shee is married to mee, I will make demonstration vnto you shee is mine, I haue the Bondes, I haue the Seales.

[e] The first exclamation of Belzebub.

[f] The Deuills pride.

[g] They are beaten to augment their torments: as wee haue proued to be true by their howling and crying. I burne. I can endure it no longer: and foame and boyle with the paines of it. Among the deuills the superiour beateth the inferiour, as being more powerfull then hee. The good Angells also beate them, and torture them when God is pleased to haue it so. Besides they are tormented by vertue of Exorcismes, as experience sheweth it, and themselues confesse it, Mark 5. Venisti torquere nos. And Christ Iesus himselfe hath giuen this power to his Apostles, to tread on Serpents, and ouer all the power of the enemie.

Vpon theſe words the Exorciſt ſaid to Magdalene, beleeue not this deceiuer and father of lies. Your God calleth himſelfe your ſpouſe, the Virgin Mary ſtiles her ſelfe your mother, and Saint Magdalene your deare ſiſter.

Then ſaid Belzebub. No, I will make it appeare that in all equity ſhe is mine. Verrine anſwered. No more then I am: thou diddeſt not create her, neither diddeſt thou redeeme her, and if thou haſt loſt thy pray, ſhe is now become a ſheepe of Chriſt Ieſus. Goe to [h] thou wretched and deteſtable ſpirit, thou ſhalt be well beaten by Lucifer. To this Belzebub replied: I will once againe bring backe this pray vnto him, for I haue a power to tempt her, and will practiſe a thouſand and a thouſand wiles to gaine her, I will now vſe all my ſlights, ſubtilties, ambuſhes, and cautelous circumuentions, I will aſſiege and aſſault her ſo often, that at length I will carrie her.

Verrine ſaid vnto him. Her ſpouſe will ſtrengthen and illuminate her, and will alſo giue aſſiſtance vnto thoſe who haue charge ouer her, to confound thy cunning and deceites.

Belzebub replied. They doe me wrong, and are iniurious in this particular vnto mee, becauſe in all right ſhee is mine, and I will make proofe thereof by many ſpeciall allegations; and if ſhee be the wife of Chriſt, where are her vertues.

Verrine ſaid vnto him: She hath made confeſſion of all, and hath kept in nothing; Belzebub replied. That is true, but confeſſion without contrition and ſatisfaction is nothing. Where is her penance? Verrine ſaid, Shee ſhall doe it. Belzebub anſwered, Curſed be that, She ſhall doe it. When ſinners offend, they talke preſently of that which ſhall be, and neuer of what is paſt: this maddeth me. God for one pranke of pride could puniſh vs. Curſed, [i] curſed, curſed may hee be for the ſame. After this Dialogue, the Dominican father holding [h] He would here ſay, that becauſe hee had loſt her, and ſuffered her to ſcape his Clutches, Lucifer would be enraged againſt him, and would beate him, as one more mighty then he.

[i] This is the Diuels language in hell. Non mortui laudabunt te Domine, &c.

ing ſtill the ſaid Hoſt in his hands, ſaid to him. Adora Deum. Belzebub anſwered him: Should I worſhip him. No, no; I will not.

Then replied Verrine. Ha miſerable wretch, I doe perceiue thou art ouercome, and haſt no more force to yeeld reſiſtance. Theſe are onely thy brauadoes and ſhewes to gaine time.

[k] The adoration of the bleſſed Euchariſt.

The Dominican father hauing againe commanded him to worſhip God in the bleſſed Hoſt, vpon the ſuddaine [k] he proſtrated himſelfe flat on the ground, and all the aſſembly troad on him, as one that was conquered and put to the worſt, and were required by the father Exorciſt ſo to doe; there being alſo fiue or ſixe Prieſts preſent at that time.

As ſoone as Louyſe and Magdalene had receiued the Sacrament, Verrine began to cry, Harken and conſider me well. God conſtraineth me, (it is a truth) and enforceth me to ſpeake.

[l] Exclamation vpon the wickedneſſe of the world.

The [l] day of iudgement is not farre off, the world was neuer ſo repleate with all pollutions and wickednesſes, as now it is. Sermons haue loſt their operation and efficacie: learned Preachers are liſtened vnto meerly for curioſitie, and ignorant Preachers, that men may carpe at them and deride them. There is now no eſteeme made of holy motions; and reading with other ordinarie meanes is held in miſ-priſion. Churches are as Stables, and are now become the places where greateſt villanie is contriued, and where men doe moſt tranſgreſſe. Behold the laſt remedy is, that God would conuert ſoules vnto him by the Diuell. Be yee therefore penitent.

The ſame day towards euening Louyſe and Magdalene were exorciſed by the Dominican father. At the beginning whereof Verrine began to cry out after this manner.

[m] Exclamation vpon the ingratitude of men.

The [m] Chriſtians are curſed and obdurate caytifes, for although God hath done ſo much for them, yet do they they not returne vnto him any acknowledgement for the same. The loue which God beareth them, and alwaies hath borne them, euen to desire to die for them, and to put this desire in execution, is slighted and not accounted of. O wretched and vnhappy as you are, your God dyed for you on the Crosse, and hath indured greeuous torments for your sakes, and would you go to heauen in your Litter, or Caroche! no, no, no; you get not thither so easily. The gates are there very narrow and low, and you must be humbled before you can enter. I say further, you must trauell thither with an extraordinary lowlinesse, and as it were creeping with the belly on the ground. I ascertaine you this, that the hauty and curious shall neuer touch on Paradise, if they persist in their pride and curiosity: you will tell me, that I speake no new thing vnto you, and that you know this already; that is true and I am contented to deliuer vnto you the truth, as being here by the appointment of God.

Know that the day of doome is at hand, and that it is now high time to repent, as did the people of Niniuie. Thē Verrine addressing his speech to God, said: [n] What, Lord? are there not Preachers enough? There are many learned personages, many Doctours, many wise Philosophers, many good bookes. They haue also the holy Scripture, they haue the liues of all those that haue led vertuous and exemplary liues. [o] No, no, saith the Lord: I regard not that, I will declare that I am the Almightie, and that I can serue my turne by the Diuels themselues when I please, and when it maketh for the execution of my pleasure. What? is Lucifer greater then I?

Verrine answered: Many there are that will not beleeue this, but will obiect and say, that wee are the fathers of lies. I tell thee Lord, there are many that for this cause will not beleeue. I am not astonished at it, yet when others shall haue information thereof, because they cannot sound the bottome of this businesse, they will [n] Exclamation of Verrine, that God constrained him.

[o] Verrine expresseth the answere of God; or else the good Angell on Gods behalfe, did make an internall impression thereof vnto him. As in Iob, 1. chap. where God by a mutuall colloquie spake to Satan. Now Verrine, because hee speaketh by coaction, desired that God would exhort sinners by some other instrument.

will conceiue very ſtrange of it. I ſay this is a miracle altogether vnheard of: I further ſay, that when thou thy ſelfe (meaning Chriſt Ieſus) didſt preach, wert not thou truth it ſelfe? Vndoubtedly thou waſt. Yet were there ſome found readie to gainſay thee, witneſſe the Phariſie, and thoſe that demanded ſignes and miracles. So that it is not to be admired, if I ſhall not eaſily be beleeued, becauſe theſe things are plenteous in admiration, and hee who knoweth or ſeeth them not, can neuer without much ſcrupulouſnes beleeue and vnderſtand them, as he ought. But I haue ſaid, that to beleeue it, you muſt humble your ſelues, and muſt not in a thing of this nature vſe any curioſitie, but ſay, that God is omnipotent, and can at his pleaſure out of baſeneſſe worke great effects. Then did Verrine replie to God. What, Lord? If thou wilt work an vnuſuall wonder, take ſome great Doctor, Philoſopher, or Preacher, and then will men beleeue. To which God after an internal and intellectual manner replied. What? haue I need of the counſell of men, much leſſe the aduice of Diuels? Verrine anſwered him: I ſay vnto thee (O great God) that thou art moſt powerful, and yet there will P be found ſome ſo wretched, that will conceit, that all thy power, all thy wiſedome, yea and the whole Trinitie with all perfections thereof, may bee comprehended and ſhut vp in their vnderſtandings, as if they were of an able capacitie to conceiue all this. But in thy behalfe I tell them they cannot, and that they are ſo ſwolne with pride, that except they humble themſelues, they are not worthie to receiue that true illumination, which ſtreameth and proceedeth from faith: for, ſay I, the haughtie and curious perſon is in the end deuoid of faith.

P Exclamation againſt the proud and curious.

Hereupon I affirme, that if they be humble, they will acknowledge that thou art omnipotent, and that being ſo, thou art able to wring truth from the very Diuels, not from their free diſpoſition and will, for we are all of vs accurſed, but compulſorily and as conſtrained there-unto unto by thy power. We are more loyall vnto God then many Christians, yet for all this we are still Diuels.

And heere 9 must they denie the authoritie of the Church. Why is it, that those that are possessed be exorcised, if it bee not auaileable, and if the Diuell cannot speake truth? I say it is all lost labour; you may take your bookes (speaking to the Exorcist) and throw them all into the fire. Then he spake in a great rage to her that was possessed, and said: What thinkest thou Louyse? why doest thou suffer thy selfe to be exorcised, if neither by God, nor the tenents of the Church we are able to tell the truth? Ha miserable wretches! how many othes haue been taken in the vertue of the name of God by Exorcismes: all which must proceede from Louyse, if they must not be accepted of our part.

9 Reasons why the diuels may speake the truth.

But miserable and abhorred wretches as you are, you deceiue your selues, you are exceedingly repleniſhed and surcharged with vnthankfulnes, and mis-apprehension. You haue so good a God, that if it were needfull that hee should suffer death for you againe, he would willingly vndergoe it; more especially for two soules, which now I cannot name.

Magdalene it is true, that Louyse is for thy sake possessed, and will if it be requisite, lay down her bodie for thy soule.

It is true, all sinners are accursed, and obstinate. You will peraduenture say, that God doth loue much. And why Lord? Hast thou neede of Christians? No, no, thou couldest not bee God, and haue neede of the aide of any creature whatsoeuer. I say, the creature hath neede of thee. And it is a fixed truth, that the more miserable the creature shall bee, the more cleerely shall thy bountie shine and appeare in relieuing it. It is not so great a wonder that children should goe to heauen, but this is the miracle, that sinners who haue a long time snored in their obstinacie, should repent and turne to God. I doe assure you who heare this, that if you doe not not treasure vp these things for your profit and health, we will be your accusers at the day of iudgement.

[r] The fright of Magdalene.

We must here note, that some daies past, [r] Magdalene told the Dominican father, that vpon the eighth exhortation, which Verrine made vnto her, she felt her selfe so affrighted, as if she had alreadie one foote in the pit of hell.

The acts of the 12. of December 1610. which was the third Aduent Sunday.

[a] The resolution to write that which was spoken by the diuell.

ON [a] this day it was thought behoofull, that the Father of the Doctrine, and the Dominican Father, should so interchangeably aid one another, that whiles the Dominican Father was busied in exorcising one of the possessed, Father Francis should supplie the place of a Scribe, to note summarily the sentences that proceeded from the Diuell by the mouth of Louyse. On the other side, when the Father of the Doctrine did exorcise, the Dominican Father should transcribe, that so in conclusion all might be subiected to the Censure of the Church, for the further glorie of God.

The same day in the morning were Louyse and Magdalene exorcised by the Dominican Father. In the beginning whereof (many persons of the neighbouring Townes and Villages, which were by this time aduertised of this accident that happened at S. Baume, being assembled thither in great troupes) Verrine began thus to speake.

[b] God changeth the witchcrafts and charmes of the Magician into good.

Cursed be this [b] witchcraft for from hence will God worke out a thousand benefits, and a thousand acts of his mercie. It was not our intendment, nor the purpose of the Magician that such accidents should happen. Our project was to get her consent, that so wee might haue carried her to hell.

[c] The diuels were not inforced to discouer themselues and to speake till the possessed were brought to Saint Baume, a place sanctified and apt for that purpose through the conuersion of a famous sinner.

Cursed, cursed, cursed be S [c] Baume a thousand, thousand, thousand times accursed. It is a wonderfull thing that that the ſlaues of hell ſhould be the inſtruments to conuert the children of light. Do but obſerue what I ſhall ſay vnto you. Some hunt after riches, and all their affection is enuaſſailed and taken vp therewith, who by giuing a little almes imagine to goe to heauen in a featherbed, without any more adoe, or obſeruation of the law and Commandements of God. Some others are poore, and haue a conceit, that for their pouertie they ſhall enter into glorie. Indeede happie are the poore, but they muſt be poore in ſpirit.

You that[d] are poore, endure your pouertie with patience, and you ſhall merit much. Haue you in your cogitations the God of glorie; how he was borne in pouertie for your ſakes, and laid in the manger of a ſtable. God from all eternitie foreſaw this day, and that in S. Baume the Diuels ſhould diſcouer themſelues, to the conuerſion of ſoules. Do not repine at your comming hither, you (I ſay) who oftentimes haue proſtituted your ſelues to the hazard of loſing your goods, bodies and ſoules, to offend and treſpaſſe againſt him. What a ſhame will it be, that any ſhould not be conuerted, whē the Diuell himſelfe exhorteth them thereunto? God is moſt powerfull, and is able to beſtow rewards and riches vpon you: but he is not able to doe two things, he is not[e] able to ſinne, and hee cannot faile of his promiſe.

Shake off your ſins you who haue mortally ſinned, and depart not from hence vntill you be confeſſed; To my extreame griefe and vexation doe I ſpeake this. Forſake your couetous deſire of worldly goods, which doth ſo much poſſeſſe you.

You poore people, reioyce in your pouertie. This day am I compelled by Mary and Magdalene to tell it vnto you: by Mary from her ſonne, by Magdalene from her Matter.

Humble your ſelues after the example of him who became poore for your ſakes. He died for you, and not for [d] On that day the whole aſſemblie conſiſted of the poore of the adioyning villages.

[e] Deus mentiri non poteſt, ſeipſum negare non poteſt. But this diſabilitie (as we terme it) is a ſupreme power: as it is a great excellence in Spirits and ſoules, that they haue no power to dye.

for vs. Mary knoweth well, that he died on a Croſſe, being naked, and not able to get a glaſſe of water. The ſame knoweth Magdalene, and Iohn the Euangeliſt, and that for you he ſuffered death on the Croſſe.

It is ſtrange, that hell ſhould exhort you to goe to Paradiſe. And ſpeaking to Louyſe, he ſaid: Curſed bee thy deſires, thou haſt longed aboue a thouſand times to ſuffer euen the paines of hell for thy neighbour. Humble thy ſelfe Louyſe and that ſpeedily, [f] otherwiſe beleeue it, thou art the moſt vnhappy, the moſt abhorred, the moſt deteſtable, and accurſed of all creatures. Louyſe beleeue me. Enter into the abiſme of thy leſſe then nothing. God would haue thee humbled. Deſiſt from beleeuing all that men will thruſt vpon thee.

[f] Louyſe at ſome intermiſſions did contemne & deteſt Magdalene, as hauing beene by her charmes poſſeſſed, as ſhe conceiued.

The ſinnes from which God hath preſerued thee, are as great benefits, as thoſe for which he hath pardoned thee. Thou hadſt beene in hell if God had not preſerued thee: thou hadſt [g] remained a Huguenot, and ſhouldeſt not haue had the vnderſtanding, to begge for that, which was conuenient for thee.

[g] Louyſe was baptized by a Miniſter, and for a time remained a Huguenot.

Preachers doe trauell themſelues much to thinke vpon what they haue to ſay, wee alſo thinke vpon many things, but it is for wicked purpoſes.

Be yee deuout and obſeruant vnto Mary, and vnto Magdalene, vnto Dominicke, and vnto all the Saints in Paradiſe, and the Diuell ſhall haue no power to hurt you.

The word of the Diuell is in this reſpect as good, as the word of a great Philoſopher, Doctor, or Preacher.

The Diuell is alwaies in extreames, be it in deſpaire, or be it in preſumption, but here I am forced to keepe the middle, when God commandeth me.

[h] Hauing reſpect to the conſecration, not to him that conſecrates.

It is a [h] great matter, that the Maſſe of a wicked Prieſt ſhould bee as auaileable, as the Maſſe of a holy man.

If you ſhould ſee a maleſactor puniſhed, and yet his Iudge to yeeld obedience vnto him, you would bee much much abashed at it, for it were a strange case. [i] Thus doth God obey a wicked Priest, in descending on the Altar at his command: the Creatour obeyeth the creature, the Father his childe, the Redeemer his slaue, and the Iudge his malefactour.

Hereupon the Priest held forth the blessed Host, that Louyse and Magdalene might communicate; and said, Ecce Agnus Dei. Which Verrine straight takes hold of, and saith. True, he is a Lambe for you, but a Lion for vs: it is the innocent Lambe, the true God and your father, but our Iudge; a Lambe sacrificed for you, and not for vs.

Then the Priest presented the blessed Host vnto Magdalene, and said: Receiue thy spouse Magdalene, the sonne of thy good mother. Vpon which Belzebub began to torture [k] and tosse all her body, making her to knocke her head against the ground, yet without wounding her, and made her to wreath and bend her body in diuers manners; sometimes backward, and sometimes with her head doubled downe to the earth; Saying to those that were present, Thus doe we practise in hell, learne how we torment soules. If we now torment them thus, when the edge of our power is blunted and abated, thinke how we plague them in hell, when we are enabled to imploy all our fury thereunto.

Aye me! God doth enforce me to torment her thus, to present vnto your view the punishments of hell.

Then the Priest said vnto him; Belzebub, worship thou God with thy face on the earth. At this Belzebub began to yell and cry as if hee were enraged, and said: Ha miserable and accursed [l] caitife (speaking to Magdalene) I am enforced to worship Christ, for the contempt which at midnight I receiued from thee.

In the meane space Verrine spake to these that were present, saying: Beleeue that your Redeemer is heere with his flesh and bones, and with all his diuine essence,

[i] It may be spoken well, if it be vnderstood in a good sense, by way of exaggeration. As in the tenth chapter of Iosuah it is written. Obediente Deo voci hominis. God obeying the voice of man. And to speake properly, God doth no more herein, then hee hath ordained and promised, the Priest doing his office.

[k] Magdalene cruelly handled by Belzebub.

[l] Magdalene had manfully resisted the Incubi, which ordinarily Belzebub sent vnto her.

really and truly. Wee [m] worship him although hee be our Iudge, you worship him as your Sauiour and Redeemer; and yet doe you serue him but badly. We put his commandements in execution by compulsion, and you haue no respect vnto them at all. Preachers make Sermons either for loue or for reward, and God will plenteously reward them, but we preach by force. It is no wonder that a man preacheth vnto another man, that so they may attaine vnto a place, whither all men desire to come. But the wonder is, that Diuels should preach to men, that they may haue accesse vnto that place, where they themselues haue no meanes to be.

It is no small matter, that the Diuels should occasion the Angels to reioyce, who in times past were their brethren, but are [n] now their mortall enemies.

Then speaking to Magdalene he said: Cursed be thy desire, which wrought in thee a liking to enter into the Order of S. Vrsula.

Vrsula, Vrsula: thou hast cost mee deare. But no man is exalted, vnlesse he be first humbled. We were [o] all set loose, to ruine this company, we haue tempted them all to goe into Monasteries, would God they had all gone thither, then should we not haue beene put to this paine.

O you of that company! you haue beene mis-prised, and set at naught, yet were you abashed at nothing. Therefore shal you hereafter be exalted, and that by the meanes of Diuels, to our infinite sorrow and confusion.

Lucifer thou hast no power left thee, nor thou Belzebub. O great confusion! that Diuels to our exceeding griefe should preach against Diuels.

Then said Belzebub to Magdalene: God confound thee, and all hell swallow thee. For thou art the occasion of my downe-fall. At which words Belzebub and Verrine began to cry, as though they were outragiously mad, Confundetur infernus, Confundetur, by our selues. Louyse cursed be thy force, and him that gaue it

vnto

[m] The Diuels worship him by constraint, as they also beleeue by force and trembling. Marc. 5. Videns Iesum à longè cucurrit & adorauit eum, clamans voce magna: Quid mihi & tibi Iesu fili Dei altissimi, &c.

[n] When God permitteth them, they are vnlooſed, and doe all they can against men.

[o] They intended to haue hindered this new erection of religion, which was to profit ỹ church of God; who made profession to teach girles their Catechisme, deuotion, and good manners. Thus would the Diuels haue hindered the first Monks of the deserts.

vnto thee. And Verrine speaking to God, said: Thou couldest not be God if thou wert not stronger then vs and all hell besides. Lucifer it must bee so, thou art to be obedient.

p Then the Priest commanded Verrine, that in testimonie of the truth of that which he had said, he should suffer Louyse to communicate: to which Verrine answered, In confirmation of all which I haue said, I obey the blessed Host, let her communicate. Then q did Belzebub and Verrine agree both together to take an oath. And Belzebub beginning said to the Priest: I sweare vnto thee, my Soueraigne maketh me to sweare, that I doe shew you the truth how wee cruciate and torment soules from time to time without any intermission.

After Belzebub, Verrine spake. I sweare, that God hath enforced mee to say all these things in the vsuall tongue and language of Prouince, for the instruction of the ignorant: in which the full bounty of your God towards his creatures, doth make cleare manifestation of it selfe.

The same day towards euening Louyse and Magdalene were exorcised by father Francis Billet, and presently Verrine began to make relation of the eternall glory of the Angels, and discoursed of many other matters in this sort. Cursed, cursed, cursed be the Charme and he that gaue it. But should it not haue beene giuen to her, it had beene giuen to some body else. Wee are bound vp from doing mischiefe, but let loose to doe good. We desired to be r loosed to tell you your sinnes in another fashion, but we cannot resist the Almighty.

Lucifer and all hell are but flies, hand-wormes, Pismires, Gnats; and wee haue no more power then what God pleaseth to giue vs; he bestoweth vpon vs so much as will try who are his that are to be placed in Paradise. Witnesse Iob who is the Patrone of patience, as is Magdalene of repentance, and Francis of humility. You are s all vnthankfull to your good Angels, whom your Redeep Both the Diuels did much resist, that the two women should receiue the blessed Sacrament. And it was needfull to be very patient, for by that meanes at length they were ouercome. They would say. It is too hot for vs, we will taste none; and this happened euery day, which we tried often from the moneth of Nouember, till the moneth of May.

q The oth of Belzebub and Verrine.

r They were bound there to discouer the Prince and Princesse of Magicians, and to exhort others. And beyond this bound they could not passe.

s Ingratitude of men to their good Angels.

Redeemer hath giuen vnto you; they attend alwaies vpon you, they doe euer preserue you from a thousand dangers, from fire, from water, and other like perils, and without them you would many times bee choaked in your sleepe.

[t] This is a new torment vnto them, when they thinke thereupon: because they doe enuie and malice the elect of God, who are inuested with their places in heauen.

Speaking this, [t] he added withall in a great fury, and said, It is to our exceeding griefe, and to our confusion and deepe damnation, that I say this.

Great goodnesse of God! Hee giues vnto you creatures of that transcendencie in perfection, to waite vpon you; and those who are his Pages of honour, and part of his Court, are seruants vnto you. Yet are there many that make more reckoning of their Gromes and Lackies, then you doe of your good Angels, who alwaies behold their God and their King in the face, and by onely looking vpon him, doe know the will of their Maister, and doe euermore render their obedience vnto him. They are so wonderous faire, that if you should but see one of them, you would worship him, and think that you beheld a Deitie. If the seruant bee so louely, how amiable ought the Maister then to be. You haue the witnesse of Iohn the Euangelist heereunto, who would haue worshipped an Angell which hee saw, but he raised him vp, and would not permit that hee should worship him. An Angell is more powerfull then all hell; and one of them is sufficient vtterly to ruine and ouerthrow it.

[u] The humilitie of the Mother of God.

Mary the mother of God is the most pure of all creatures, & most louely in her [u] humility. Cursed be those words when Mary said, that she was the hand-maide of her God; and that she held her selfe vnworthy to be the hand-maide of those that are hand-maides vnto him, for by this meanes she deserued to be the mother of God.

[x] S. Magdalene the chiefest amongst sinners.

[x] Magdalene because shee loued so much, is there where she now remaineth, and is the chiefest (amongst those that haue sinned) that are about the sonne of God;

because

becauſe ſhee and Iohn the Euangeliſt loued him more then others.

y Dominicke, Iohn the Euangeliſt, and Iohn Baptiſt, be all our enemies, yet muſt we ſound forth their praiſes. All thoſe that are in heauen, haue ſuch a longing that the day of iudgement ſhould come, as cannot bee expreſſed: to the end that you may haue the fruition of what they enioy, and that you may taſte of thoſe delicacies, wherewithall they are plenteouſly fed.

They haue a good Maiſter, that z prepareth their viandes for them, and the holy Ghoſt is the Maiſter of the banquet of ſoules. They that are in Paradiſe would willingly tranſport you vnto that mountaine of bliſſe, and they doe ſo burne with the feruencie of this deſire, that they would bee more pregnant and ready to deſcend and accompany you thither, then we that are Diuels can be to carrie you to hell.

Paradiſe is ſo exceedingly faire, that if you could but behold one of the ſoules there (I ſpeake not now of Angels) you would worſhip the ſame, and thinke it to be a Deity, ſo louely is it, being cloathed and couered with the cleere brightneſſe of God.

The ſoules of Iohn the Euangeliſt, of Iohn Baptiſt, of Peter, of Paul, of Stephen (our greateſt enemie) haue had ſome participation of this glory before they died, but nothing comparable to that, wherewith they are now adorned.

It is a great wonder, that ſo grieuous ſinners as they haue beene in the world, ſhould haue their ſoules ſo beautified in heauen. This is it that plungeth vs into deſpaire, and maketh vs runne outrageouſly madde. For let them commit ten thouſand millions of ſinnes, yea let them leaue no tranſgreſſion vnpractiſed, yet ſhall they finde mercie, and out of the euill which they doe, there ſhall be drawne much goodneſſe. Witneſſe Paul, when hee heard the voyce, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou mee? he heard a voyce, he felt no y Dominicke is the Saint that is aduerſarie vnto Verrine; whom therefore he rankeeth firſt as if he were ſuperiour to his two cõpanions. He doth then firſt place his Saint that is aduerſarie vnto him.

z The charity of the Saints is greater then the diuels malice towards men.

ſtroke. Your God loueth you ſo much, that be it good, or be it hurt which is done to one of his, hee will take it as done to himſelfe.

[a] The beautie of Paradiſe.

[a] Paradiſe is ſo beautifull, that the walles thereof are framed of precious ſtones; as Carbuncles, Emraudes, Diamonds, Saphyrs, Iacinths, which do all ſignifie ſome manner of vertue. He that will come thither, muſt build him a Tabernacle here, and that by good works. There is a manſion prepared for you in Paradiſe, but you muſt bring with you the ſtones that betoken vertues; and before your iourney thither, it is needful that you ioyne and ſet theſe ſtones together.

Euery bodie ſhall haue there a countrey more ſpatious then the whole earth: and notwithſtanding all this beautie and riches of your God, how few are there that doe loue and ſerue him?

[b] The deformitie of the diuels and ſoules of the damned.

Contrariwiſe, [b] we are ſo deformed, ſo horridly foule, that if you ſhould ſee one of vs, you wil be ſtruck ẽ dead with feare vpon the place. And if a ſoule of the damned ſhould but preſent it ſelfe vnto your view, you could not endure to behold ſo gaſtly a ſpectacle, but would fall downe dead preſently. Yea ſo horrible is their ſemblance, that hell it ſelfe could not ſuffer them, but that it is the place deſtinated by God for their puniſhments. The good Ieſus hath many friends at his table, but very few on Mont Caluary.

Many loſe their part in Paradiſe for their delights, others for gluttonie, and ſome for their curioſitie: wee alwaies aſſault them where they are weakeſt and moſt [c] onuert vnto danger, and on that ſide, which we know moſt inclinable to vices.

[c] We muſt ſay with Dauid: Et obſeruabo me ab iniquitate mea.

We ſhall neuer ſee God but in iudgement, when he ſhall rouſe himſelfe vp as a roaring lion againſt vs, and when flames of fire ſhall flaſh from his eyes, which wee ſhall neuer endure to behold.

After this diſcourſe, whileſt the aſſemblie ſaid their Credo, at the Article, Sedet ad dexteram Patris, Verrine ſpake ſpake of Ieſus, and ſaid:

Before he ſate at the right hand of his Father, he did endure ſo much, and did ſuffer ſuch an ignominious death, as no Martyr did euer vndergoe the like. I ſay further, that not only no one Martyr, but all of them together, did neuer endure ſo much as hee, although all glorie were alreadie his owne.

There is no ranſome bee it of King or of Emperour, that can equall the price wherewithall God hath redeemed you to be heires of Paradiſe: yet doe you reckon no more of it, then if it had coſt him nothing. I ſpeake generally as well for thoſe that are heere, as for thoſe that are abſent. You regard it no more then if it had ſtood him but two Liards, or a Sous. No, no, it is not ſo cheape, he hath bought it with the price of his blood.

And when they came to Sanctam Eccleſiam, &c. Verrine ſaid: Euery one beleeues not this Church, witneſſe the Caluiniſts: and many ſtray from her, and ſo depart from the light to be ſhadowed with darkneſſe. I am forced to ſpeake this with more compulſion, then any Gally-ſlaue, or one that is a captiue amongſt the Turkes.

[d] There were then fiue Princes of the Diuels in the bodie of Magdalene, to wit, Belzebub, Leuiathan, Baalberith, Aſmodee, and Aſtaroth, with many others of inferiour ranke and condition. Yet did Verrine braue them all, and Lucifer himſelfe alſo, ſaying, that God commanded it, and that they al in regard and compariſon of him were but flies; and were to yeeld their ſeruice and obedience vnto him, when hee ſhould command it, as ſeruants doe vnto their Prince.

[d] There were ſeuen there in ordinarie as they declared afterwards, but many times they wēt forth and returned very ſenſibly, neighing as it were, and ſaying to Belzebub: See I am here. Belzebub poſſeſſed her fore-part, Leuiathan the middle of her head, and Aſtaroth the hinder part. The part of the head where they were did beate and moue perpetually contrarie to nature: but when they departed forth, that part ſtirred not. And when at any time wee commanded Belzebub to leaue her for the ſpace of a Miſerere, hee went out of her very ſenſibly, and made a noyſe in the mouth of her that was poſſeſſed. And the prefixed time being paſt, he preſently returned, that it might be well perceiued, as we haue ſaid. And being departed, the Phyſitians and others that felt her head, found it immoueable but vpon his returne, they felt and ſaw the motions. And this was alſo proued by Leuiathan, and Aſtaroth. This hath been tried at S. Baume and at Aix many weekes together, to the great aſtoniſhment of the beholders, eſpecially of thoſe who would not beleeue it.

That same day did Magdalene reade the letter which she had before addressed to blessed Magdalene, and the assemblie there heard it, without any hindrance or contradiction from Verrine.

Afterward she read the letter, which she had formerly, the day before her conuersion, directed to the blessed Mother of God by the order and aduice of the Father Romillon; in reading of which, Verrine rebuked her and taxed her of pride, saying, that Pelagia being conuerted by a sermon, [e] Nonnus refused to baptize her; but she threw her selfe downe at his feete, and said, that she would demaund satisfaction of him at the day of iudgement, whereupon he did baptize her.

[e] This Nonnus was Bishop of Edessa: of whom mention is made in the Romane Martyrologe, the 2. of December.

Then hee said: Take courage Magdalene, for God will giue assistance vnto thee; but beware thou neglecte not the fiue counsels and instructions, which were giuen to Louyse this morning; to wit, a good intention, puritie of affection, puritie of conscience, faith, and humilitie. Francis for his simplicitie and humblenesse is in Paradise; hee suffered himselfe to bee accounted a foole, yet was hee garnished with all sorts of excellent vertues, for God giueth grace to the humble, and resisteth the proud. He was also indowed with the gift of obedience, for without obedience there is no going to Paradise; yea the Sonne of God himselfe said to his Father in the garden of Oliuet: Fiat voluntas tua; and finally, resignation is to be made of all worldly desires.

After this, hee caused the tenour of the letter to bee changed, saying, that it sented of nothing but of pride and niceneſſe; and he made it to be mended in manner as followeth:

* My most deare, glorious, worthie and vnspotted Mother of God, and the most louely Mother of my Spouse, I salute you in the heartiest manner, and present my selfe before you, as a wretched malefactor before his Iudge, to the end that you would be pleased to intercede for me to your best beloued Sonne, and to offer

* Magdalenes first letter corrected. See the answere to the doubts, the 8. obiection, after the Epistle to the Reader.

vnto

vnto him your holy and chaſt wombe that bare him, and your bleſſed breaſts that gaue him ſucke; As alſo to pray your deareſt Sonne to preſent his fiue wounds vnto his Father, that ſo I may haue remiſſion of all the ſinnes, which I haue committed in my fiue ſenſes. I am a poore miſerable creature, vnworthie to lift vp mine eyes to heauen, or once to name the name of my Creator. But I will ſay like another Thais, he who hath created me and framed me of nothing, take pitie vpon me, who am not worthie to tread on the earth, or to lift vp my ſpirit and voyce to pray, no not to S. Magdalene, S. Dominicke, my good Angel, and all the Saints of heauen, or other reaſonable creatures, as well abſent as preſent. I Magdalene of Demandouls, haue written this letter to the moſt ſacred and worthie Mother of God, who doe not merit as much as to name her, deliuered by a Diuell called Verrine, that ſpake by the mouth of Louyſe, becauſe I haue not made thoſe inſtructions vſefull vnto mee, which by ſo many learned perſonages (whom I little eſteemed of) were recommended to my practiſe. I haue rather hearkened vnto Lucifer then to them, and doe now make my proteſtation before God, that I ſhall neuer hereafter giue eare to Belzebub nor to his adherents, by the aſſiſtance of his grace, and through the prayers of the Virgin Mary the ſinners Aduocate, and ſpecially of S. Mary Magdalene, of all Angels, and of all Saints. Proteſting in deſpite of Belzebub, the chiefe of the Diuels, which are in my bodie, and of al hell, I will heedfully obſerue thoſe fiue points, which were recommended vnto me: to wit, a good intention, a pure affection, puritie of conſcience, ſimplicitie, humilitie, as alſo obedience, and reſignation of the world. All this I doe here promiſe by the aide and grace of my God. The ſubſcriptiõ of the ſaid letter was dated in manner as followeth, Verrine ſaying, that the ſubſcription of letters that were to be ſent to great perſonages, ought to be no leſſe polite and elegant, then the bodie bodie of the letters themselues. Your most humble, and prostrate hand-maid, repleniſhed with all presumption, in that she hath been so hardie as to write vnto so great a Queene, although my great and compelling necessities haue pressed me vnto it; and I saw that you were the Sanctuarie and refuge of those that were forlorne; as also I was transported thereunto, by reason of the great and violent assaults of temptations, which Belzebub and all his complices did force vpon me. And hauing vnderstood such wonders spoken of your greatnesse, I was emboldned to take you for my Mother and Aduocate; and will remaine all my life long, vntill the last houre of my death by the helpe of my God, your most forlorne, and worthlesse slaue Magdalene of Demandouls.

The superscription was thus: To the most sacred, worthie, pretious, and glorious Mother of my God, and Aduocate for sinners.

The acts of the 13. of December 1610. being the feast of S. Luke.

THat day in the morning, the Dominican Father came to conferre of the discourse of the day past, that he might orderly couch and set downe in writing, what he had obserued. And seeing that hee could not conceiue where to begin, hee remained a little sad, that it should bee thus in hazard to bee forgotten. At the length he was resolued, to take the Stole, and to adiure the Diuell Verrine, that if it were the good pleasure of God, that this should bee written to the end that the Church might take knowledge of the same, it was then his part and dutie to repeate and dictate what hee had spoken, to the confusion of the Diuell, and to the glorie of God. Presently did the Diuell begin to dictate in the presence of the fathers of the congregation, as is aforesaid. The Diuell protesting that he was now inforced to the repetition thereof, but would hereafter dictate all vnto the Church so leasureably, that a man might haue the opportunity to write after him.

the

The same day in the morning, Louyse and Magdalene were exorcised by the Dominican father, and at the beginning of the exorcismes Verrine began to dictate that which here followeth, in the hearing of many; taking the subiect of his discourse from the Gospell In principio, which the Priest read after Masse. Hee cried out: Cursed be In principio, If I were able to smother it, how willingly would I doe it? These last words plunge vs into despaire, Verbum caro factum est, & habitauit. The beginning speaketh of your redemption, the conclusion of your glorie, there is no habitauit for vs; it is for others. And this habitauit is it, that maddeth vs. The miracle doth not consist in this, that Iohn the Euangelist wrote it, but [f] the wonder is, that a Diuell doth auow it, and is constrained to his infinite sorrow, to annunciate this truth vnto you. The Diuels are compelled to speake the truth, when God almighty doth expresse and wring it from them, and are as Gally-slaues forced vnto it. This is that God whom the Christians worship.

[f] The wonderous miracle of the compulsion of Diuels to speake the truth.

After Masse was finished, hee began to speake after this sort, touching the great Counsell of the most sacred Trinitie, about the reparation of mankinde.

When Adam had transgressed, God was highly displeased against him, yet would he not by and by inflict his vengeance and indignation vpon the soule, which was so goodly a creature, although it had receiued a taint and blemish by the pollution of sinne, and was growne refractarie and mutinous against him, who had showred downe so many blessings vpon the same; that had shaped and created the whole world for man, and did assubiect all creatures vnto him, to vse them as he thought good, euen downe to the very beasts. This would man haue excused, when he said, Eue did cause me me to doe this; but in this he did bewray the impotencie of his iudgement, that would so facilely beleeue the counsell of a woman. Yet if hee had humbled himselfe without excusing his g faults, he should not haue felt so much displeasure, as he did.

God loueth not, that men should endeuour to euade by excuses. If that Adam had craued pardon, God would presently haue forgiuen him: yea the very Angels that fell, if they had humbled themselues, should haue tasted of his mercy. Now the blessed Trinity held h their counsell vpon this point concerning man. The eternall Father according to true iustice would haue him punished; but presently did the diuine word giue himselfe vp to be your pledge, saying that hee would be incarnated, and take your flesh vpon him, and would be euer readie to endure whatsoeuer the father would thinke fit to be inflicted. Then presented themselues the two daughters of the eternall Father, to wit, Iustice and Mercie, and made them readie for the encounter.

i Iustice as the younger daughter said, that they were to be punished for their disobedience, and that they did very well deserue it. Mercie as the elder said. My Father, I am thy eldest daughter, and my sister here is much younger then my selfe, it therefore standeth with reason that I be beleeued, and that for many causes. As first, to what end haue you created a creature thus beautifull? to cast him headlong into hell? There is a remedie to saue him. For there will come a woman called Mary, that will be more humble, then Eue hath beene proud after her transgression; and will bee more reple-g He had not beene subiect to so much miserie as he was: for the excuse did aggrauate the fault.

h The counsell of God is eternall, but the Scripture stileth the execution of his eternall counsell, after this manner. It is also a phrase of Scripture to say, that God holdeth his Counsel, when he would execute his will. As in the 1. of Genesis in the creatiõ of man. The metaphore is borrowed frõ the custome of mẽ, when they would execute any thing.

i Mercy and Iustice are equally twinnes with God, as all other perfections are. Yet in the putting of them in execution, one sometimes gaineth vpon another, according to the good sentence and pleasure of God. And vpon this is the metaphore drawne from two Aduocates, each pleading their right one against another. Now although the determination and sentence abideth in the Iudge yet doth not this hinder, but that either the one or the other might alledge iust and ponderous reasons in diuers sorts. Diuines maintaine the Idea of things in God.

nished

nished with simplicity, then euer Eue was with curiositie. Mary will be more obedient then euer Eue was rebellious; and more prompt to say, I am the handmaid of the Lord, then euer Eue was to take and taste the apple. From thence shall proceede that great paymaster of debts, that shall giue satisfaction more then a hundreth fold.

On the contrary part, Iustice pleaded that they did well deserue sharpest castigation, who doe yet stand vpon their iustification, although they are guilty of the highest treason, in rebelling against their Prince, yea such a Prince as their God is. That they knew the Edict of their King, yet would not obserue the same, and sinned not through ignorance, but through their too much knowledge, that brought them to their destruction. To this the [a] diuine Word made replication. Father, Father, you are to pardon them, you are to pardon them, repeating the same often (not in words but by the power of vnderstanding) and euer saying, that hee would take vpon him your flesh for your sakes. The eternall Father, according to the rigour of Iustice, and as being iustly prouoked against them would not haue it so: but alwaies the diuine Word did oppose himselfe vnto it, and said, Father I will endure for their sakes a more ignominious death, then euer any creature shall be able to suffer. The eternall Father hauing regard vnto the person which was to suffer, and giue plenarie satisfaction, and that by no other meanes then this could a thing of that nature be accomplished, as also knowing how much hee was to suffer (for in God all things are present, and there is nothing past or to come) did yeeld vnto this ouerture: yet what Father would haue consented to giue vp his Sonne as he did. For he fore-saw the ingratitude and disesteeme which you would beare vnto him, yet was he contented to agree vnto this, because his sonne alwaies said Father, some or other will be conuerted.

[a] The mercie of Christ Iesus.

The

These are the attributes of the diuine persons.

The Holy Ghost gaue assistance vnto the Word, for he is the God of loue; the Father is the God of power and of vengeance; the Sonne, the God of wisedome, and the Holy Ghost the God of bountie. But the Diuels themselues doe confesse that there is but one God in three persons, and haue made confession of the same at Baume, the place of S. Magdalens penitence, in the presence of the whole assemblie. Then spake Mercie and said, Father, it is expedient that the voyd seates of the cursed Angels that fell should be filled vp, and why was this goodly fabricke and frame of the world created, and the heauen so varied with diuersities of beauties? Was it for your selfe alone? let them liue, let them liue, they will be repentant, and haue vertuous children, and iust Abel will proceed from them. Hereunto [c] Iustice replied, that there should be a Cain as wicked as the other was iust. But Mercie did alwaies ingeminate, that many of them would proue good, as Mary, who should make reparation of the fault committed by Eue. And in truth, Mary hath been more vertuous, then euer Eue was wicked, and gaue more reputation vnto good, then euer Eue gaue aduantage vnto sinne. The Serpent held diuers discourses with Eue to cause her to fall, but Gabriel spake but a few words and Mary presently obeyed, saying, Ecce ancilla.

[c] The knowledge of God foreseeth all things.

Then the Word said to his Father, that as the person offended was diuine, so a diuine person should giue satisfaction, since no other could make reparation of the same; the person offended being infinite, might iustly expect satisfaction from a person infinite. That there was no creature, neither men nor Angels, that could make vp this offence, which was committed by a man that at the time of his tentation was altogether innocent. And as this sinne was committed in a garden, so reparation thereof should be made in a garden, at what time he should say fiat voluntas tua, and this should be the act of his giuing himselfe vp vnto death. To conclude, clude, this transgression came by eating of an apple, and should be remitted by the fruite of life issuing from the garden of Mary. Vpon this mention of the Virgin, Verrine tooke occasion to say: This was a[d] garden hedged in, where that goodly fruite of her puritie remained, excellently qualified with beautie, sent, and taste: which make representation of the properties of the blessed Trinitie. In this garden there were all sorts of goodly trees, whose roots were humilitie, whose leaues were vertuous desires, and whose fruites were good workes, that might deseruedly bee placed vpon the table of the King of glorie. And vpon this table are euer strowed all kinds of flowers, which signifie her vertues, and these she hath kept fresh by her humilitie, acknowledging that all the good which euer she had receiued did streame from her sonne, and proceeded not from her selfe. By these meanes of humbling her selfe she conserued them, and lent also of her store vnto others. The Word was content to repaire the fault of Adam, and in regard thereof to subiect himselfe to all the torments which Adam had deserued, and said, that by his obedience there would redound more benefit vnto mankind, then euer did preiudice by Adams transgression: and by how much the greater the offence was, so much the greater would his mercie appeare: that his bountie would then shine cleerest, when these his creatures appeared most miserable, as hath been verified in Peter, Paul, Dauid, the Publican, Matthæus, and Iames the Hermite: as also in Magdalene, Pelagia, Mary of Ægypt, Thais, and the woman of Samaria. That his bountie would dart forth the raies thereof so effectually vpon his creatures, that many soules by their examples should be conuerted. Besides, the Sonne made offer vnto his Father to endure all the torments that should bee put vpon him, and that he would debase himselfe euen to the cratch to giue satisfaction for the pride of Adam: that he would be obedient, for his rebellion, euen to

[d] The Virgin Mary likened vnto a beautifull garden.

to the death of the Croſſe : that for the wantonneſſe of Adam, hee would vndergoe all vexations, and would faſt for his gluttonie : that the offence was committed by a tree, and ſhould bee remitted by the tree of the Croſſe : and that at the ſame houre or inſtant that the firſt man offended, the breach in mankinde ſhould bee built vp in the ſecond.

Doe but conſider, that at that time when in his humanitie he ſuffered, the loue which he did beare to you, did cauſe him to crie out that hee was thirſtie, that is to ſay, after the ſaluation of your ſoules. This is euident by the theefe, who ſpeaking vnto him but theſe words, Memento mei, was by him refreſhed, as alſo was Longinus, and all thoſe which at that time were conuerted. Obſerue further, that hee died with a great longing to haue his very tormentors to be conuerted ; and his ſorrow, to leaue his enemies plunged in their obſtinacie, (as Pilate, Caiphas, Annas, and Herod) was more apparent and ſenſible, then to leaue his Mother whom he ſo much loued, Magdalene, Iohn the Euangeliſt, or Martha. Witneſſe thoſe words which he ſpake, Pater ignoſce illis, Father pardon them, for they know not what they doe. His ſecond griefe was to leaue his children the Iewes, hardned in their wickedneſſe, ſorrowing that they would make ſuch bad compenſation vnto him for all his benefits. For neuer was there naturall father that hath powred downe ſo many bleſſings vpon his children, as your God hath done vpon the people of the Iewes. It was no nouell thing with them to diſobey his commandements, and mutinie againſt him. They made a Calfe of golde and worſhipped him, and without ſenſe or conſideration of his manifold bleſſings they did long for the garlike, onyons, and leekes of Ægypt : ſo gluttonous and rauenous were they. Notwithſtanding all this, he cried vpon the Croſſe, Pater ignoſce illis.

Then did Verrine cauſe this which enſueth to be adioyned ioyned vnto that letter that the day before hee did dictate vnto the blessed Virgin: I protest by the assistance of God to obserue the good instructions which were giuen vnto me vpon the Vigile of S. Luke, and wil reade them fiue times a day. Obserue heere, that Verrine said that they would proue fiue exorcismes more terrible vnto Belzebub, then all those that were comprehended in bookes: and added, Cursed be your exorcismes.

After this, he said that Magdalene was to say at least an hundred times a day, if she could, He who hath created and fashioned me, haue mercie vpon me: as one that well knew how vnworthie she was to name the name of God, and to suffer for his loue; or that Belzebub himselfe should remaine in her bodie, since that her God did patiently beare the appellations of foole, drunkard, and possessed by Belzebub, and that hee wrought wonders in the name of Belzebub. But the good woman in the Gospel confessed that all which they obiected were lies, and that hee wrought those wonders by a peculiar puissance of his own, without borrowing the assistance of any creatures.

Afterward as they should haue communicated, Magdalene was vpon the sudden strangely tempted by Belzebub. But Verrine taking vpon him as her counsellor and admonisher, did lay before her the imbecilitie of the Diuell, and dismasked all his slights and subtilties. And it happened, that after Magdalene had receiued the holy Host in her mouth, Belzebub made shew, as if he would force her to spit it out vpō the earth. In which fact, hee discouered that there was some [a] enormous sin in Magdalene, which was familiar only vnto those that knew the inward guilt of her conscience.

The same day in the euening Louyse and Magdalene were exorcised by Father Francis Billet: and Verrine began to speake in this manner: It is requisite first to passe the Altar of thornes and kniues, before you come to the Altar of Crownes. I tell you that [b] Lucia was a poore poore woman, and of ſuch baſe condition, to outward ſemblance, that a man would not haue beſtowed a farthing vpon her: yet being betrothed, ſhe abandoned all for the loue of him who had redeemed her, and in regard of him vnderualued all worldly things whatſoeuer. So muſt all they whom he takes to wife, they muſt forſake father, mother, brothers and all, and onely ſet their affection on him who doth ſo wholly deſerue it. Hee will place them there where no perſon is able to ſing the hymnes which they ſhall ſing, and they ſhall follow the Lambe whereſoeuer hee goeth, to the great vexation of the Diuell and of all hell. Magdalene doth not ſing at all, yet is ſhe next vnto Mary: for in loue ſhe doth ſurmount Martha. Martha is the next that ſingeth after the Mother of God: ſhe was hoſtes vnto him, and lodged him in her houſe, and next vnto the Mother of God was the principall Virgin. Catherine of Sienna thou beareſt a part in that ſong, and thou Barbara, and thou Lucia, and thou Clara. Vrſula is a Queene, and Catherine is another, and thou [c] Victoria haſt alſo thy ſhare in that melodie.

[a] She had not confessed this sinne either frō oblition or out of shame.

[b] The martyrdome of S. Lucia and the Virgins.

It is true, I rage againſt thoſe that liue chaſtly in their Monaſteries, but the Companie of [*] Vrſula makes mee ſtarke mad, both by their Chriſtian doctrine, and by their holeſome inſtructions: and the exceeding great labour which they take for the good of their neighbours, maketh hell it ſelfe to bee ſwallowed vp in deſpaire. I doe not ſpeake this to puffe them vp, let them be as humble as they will: but the truth is, that all the diuels doe ſtraine their vttermoſt ſubtilties to worke their finall extermination. God is deſirous to haue them proued, curſed be my words, they will coſt me ful deare. Mary, why ſhouldeſt thou ſo affectionatly loue them? wherein haue they been ſeruiceable vnto thee? Wee haue ſifted them all by temptation, to breede in them a longing to leaue their vocation. Wee ſuggeſted that their order of Religion was meere brocage, and their vocation

[c] That Victoria is regiſtred in the Romane Martyrologe 27. December, who was put to death becauſe ſhe would not take Eugenius the Paynim for her huſband.

[*] The praiſes of the Companie of S. Vrſula.

vocation vnapproueable. This wee ſaid to diſcourage them from that courſe, and diſtilled diuers other temptations into them againſt their Superiour, but principally againſt Caſſandra their Superiour at Aix. Wee haue filled them with grudging and murmuring againſt their Superiours, perſwading them not to obey or beleeue them, and haue baited both men and women with our temptations: the men gaue beſt heede vnto vs as thoſe that were the prouder. We alſo hatched a conſpiracie againſt Romillon, and the Order of the Doctrine, that they might be forſaken of euery one.

Whileſt the Diuell was thus diſcourſing, there came to S. Baume Siſter Catherine of Iſle, with another of the ſame Companie. Whereupon [d] one that was preſent ſaid vnto the Dominican Father, whether hee thought the Diuell could preſage of their arriuall: who being asked thereof, without ſeeing or hearing of her, anſwered it was ſhe. Then being demanded, whether there came but one or no, he anſwered, there is none but Catherine of France: which was not true: and when one of the Aſſemblie did reproach his ignorance, Verrine ſaid, Doe you wonder at that, this is not the firſt lie that I haue told.

Then the Dominican Father ſoftly rounded Father Romillon in the eare, and ſaid, It is no wonder though he intermingle ſomething of his owne, when men out of meere curioſitie doe aske him queſtions. Scarce had the Father finiſhed theſe words when [e] Verrine ſaid, It is true, I am not bound in that caſe to ſpeake the truth, for I neuer doe it but by conſtraint, or for ſome ſiniſter and malicious purpoſe.

About the ſame time the Diuell Verrine was obſerued againſt his cuſtomarie manner to be very ſtill and ſilent, and being demanded why he thus held his peace, he anſwered, Becauſe ſome think that the things which I doe vtter are not worthie to be written. And indeede ſome were of opinion, that they ought not to giue heed

[d] Experience doth teach that in matters of curioſitie they doe laugh and make a ieſt of men.

[e] We haue often made triall, that when Verrine ſpake according to his commiſsion that tended to the conuerſion of the two Witches, he alwaies told the troth and neuer failed: but being put from that he declared himſelfe to be a true Diuell, oftentimes interrupting Confeſsion, and a long ſpace endeuouring to hinder the receiuing of the Communion. The reaſon whereof is ſet downe in the acts of the 15. of Ian. in the margẽt.

to these discourses, but onely to the deliuerance of these poore creatures: at the least, that it was not necessarie to booke downe what he spake. Yea, some conceiued that it was no Diuell that spake in Louyse, but as soone as they reuoked that their opinion, Verrine then began to discourse as he was accustomed.

The acts of the 14. day of December.

VPon that day Father Francis Billet Priest of the Christian Doctrine saying Masse, at the eleuation of the blessed Sacrament, Verrine began hideously to yell, as if hee had been mad and desperate, saying, that he adored the God of the Christians, and confessed him to be his Creator and Iudge. Hee further said, that hee was in the Chalice blood and bones, clothed with his Humanitie and Diuinitie, as when hee was crucified on the tree of the Crosse: and was there as great and as full of dimensions as when hee was vpon the same tree: yet was his bodie couered vnder a morsell of bread, and his blood vnder a little wine really and substantially. Hee made also repetition of the same at the Masse, which was said by Frier Francis Domptius of the reformed Order of S. Dominicke. Verrine also added, I said in my rage, that thou wert of the reformed Order: Cursed be the inspiration of Michaelis who began this Reformation, which will be an occasion to correct the disorders of many Monasteries as well of men as of women. This is it that maketh vs to despaire. I say besides, that some will giue out, that Romillon hath taught Louyse, &c. All this hee repeated againe at the eleuation of the blessed Sacrament, Father Iames de Rets Priest of the Doctrine saying Masse.

The same day in the morning was Sister Louyse and Sister Magdalene exorcised by the Dominican Father. And there happened a long dispute betweene God of the one part, and the Diuell of the other, whether God ought to make the Companies of S. Vrſula and of the Doctrine, as alſo the Sifter Louyſe his inſtruments to put that in execution, which he intended to accompliſh. Now becauſe I had no leiſure to write it downe, Verrine did afterwards will me to write that which then had bin diſputed, but firſt would haue me to command him to doe this by vertue and power of the Exorciſmes, as they alwaies vſe to doe. As ſoone as I had commanded him, he began to ſpeake in this manner: I haue ſpoken formerly (meaning in his diſcourſe the day paſt) in the honour of Martha and of the Angels. This I did vpon good reaſon, f for Virgins are the ſiſters of Angels, and ſhall be exalted, becauſe Mary would haue it ſo: yet alwaies without any preiudice to Magdalene, for in Paradiſe there is no ambition.

ought

f The proſecution of the praiſe of Virgins.

I alſo ſaid, that the Sonne did much eſteeme of Magdalene, by reaſon of her affection; and the Mother of God did exceedingly loue Martha in that ſhe vowed virginitie (which ſhe did in imitation of the Mother of God) ſhe alſo loued Martha, becauſe ſhe was the Hoſteſſe of her Sonne.

I ſaid, that yeſterday I had ſpoken of Lucia and of virginitie, and that Virgins were ſiſters vnto the Angels, and that they did ſing a new hymne, which none could ſing but themſelues.

I alſo ſaid, that married women might bee happie enough, and go to heauen, but that Virgins did attaine vnto it with more facilitie then they.

g Beſides, I entred into diſputation with God, ſaying: Why haſt thou inſtituted the Sacrament of Mariage if thy intendment were not that all ſhould be married? His replie was, that they who were vnmaried were all eſpouſed vnto him. To which I reioyned, that ſuch Piſmires as they, could not deſerue ſo great a King for their husband.

g The conference of Verrine with God, or with the good Angell ſent from God.

God anſwered me, that they had forſaken all for his loue, and that for a lumpe of earth (thereby meaning man) they did bequeath and betroth themselues to him. And in liew of those momentarie blessings and riches, which for his sake they had abandoned, he would open vnto them the treasures of Paradise: and for a little pleasure which passeth away as the winde, hee would glut them with the delights of Paradise which endure for euer. Furthermore, I did obiect that hee did prepare Crownes for them as if they were Queenes, and had well deserued it: but, said I, they haue merited nothing. He answered me that they were true Queenes. I replied, that they were Chamber-maides, and that I should not haue wondered at Vrsula which was a Queene, at Margaret the Queene of Hungary, at Catherine of Alexandria, at Gertrude, at Margaret the Martyr, who haue performed ma. y memorable exploites, for the loue of him and of many others. He answered mee, that his custome was that from baseneſſe and from things of the meaneſt condition, hee vsed to worke matters of great moment for his glorie, and for the conuersion of soules. To this I replied, that I should not haue wondred if in a matter of this nature hee had made election of some great Philosopher or Doctor, or of some great Queene, or of some magnificent Empresse and Princesse: but I was confounded with wonder when I perceiued he would make choice of personages of so high a qualitie, from such Pismires as was Louyse. He answered me, that he did not this for her, as if she had deserued it, but had done it for his glorie, and for the conuersion of soules.

h The desire of Louyse to suffer patiently.

h Then (said I) cursed be that desire which swaied in her (speaking of Louyse) and made her readie to endure hell it selfe (if it had been expedient) for the glorie of God and saluation of soules. And heere I began to howle as one surcharged with despaire and madnesse, and more fearefully indeede then I can expresse it, saying, that she was a Huguenot, and that her father and mother died Huguenots, and that she was baptized in

the

the [i] kitchen of Monsieur de Mailhians at S.Rhemy, and that Ioseph Dessade of Beaucamp, brother of Michael Dessade of Lagoy was godfather to Louyse, and Louyse of Pourcelet daughter of Monsieur de Mailhians was her godmother, in whose house she was baptized by a Minister. Then God told me that many soules had been conuerted to him by Catherine of Sienna, & that humiliation is to goe before, that exaltation may follow after: and that the calling of this wretch (meaning her that had the diuels in her bodie, to wit, Louyse de Cappeau) had been debased and exposed to derision, as also dishonoured and disrespected by the diuels, who would haue waded further into these aduantages, if they might be suffered. Many incongruities are committed in the iudgements, which men and women make vpon the euent of things; but this calling should by the same meanes purchase much glorie and reputation, through which formerly it was depressed: and that God should bee magnified euen by those who did offend herein, when they should once comprehend all the circumstances of this businesse. And this is it wherewithall the Diuels are so enraged. Then cried Lucifer, Come and helpe vs, Belzebub, Leuiathan, Balberith, Asmodeus, Astaroth, Carreau, and let all Hell come, for we are at our wits ends, and can make no longer resistance. I also added, that we were now all desperate, that Hell it selfe had entertained a dreadfull combination and conspiracie, and that wee were all vnlooſed to ruine and fling headlong into perdition the whole Order of the Doctrine, and the whole [k] Companie of Vrsula: and that we had inuironed them with all sorts of temptations as well men as women of both Companies, from the least and youngest vnto the greatest of them: and that wee had giuen impeachment vnto others to be of that Companie, and suggested vnto them, that they might doe well to encloyster themselues in Monasteries, where they might abide in the house of God their Father, and might might doe much good, as frequenting Hoſpitals and Churches.

[i] Louyse baptized in a kitchē by a Minister.

[k] Touching the Companie of S.Vrsula.

Moreouer, that by bringing of the companie of the doctrine vnto ruine, we ſhould eaſilie roote out the other companie, to wit of S. Vrſula, becauſe theſe are guided by them. For the Prieſts of the doctrine are founded and eſtabliſhed expreſſely to guide and gouerne them, and were particularly reformed for that purpoſe. As alſo becauſe the two companies had a reference the one to the other, and were to be fellow labourers for Gods glory, and the ſaluation of their neighbours, and were to march hand in hand, that is, where there was a houſe appointed for the ſiſters, there was alſo to be a houſe for theſe Fathers. Then Verrin began to crie as if he had been mad, that there [1] were ſixe ſiſters of S. Vrſula bewitched or poſſeſſed, to wit, Magdalen, Catherine of Iſle, Margaret Burles, Martha of Gazier, and that vnhapple Louyſe: for Anne of Bonieux ſaid, he is full of ſorrow. The Diuell (ſaid he) is not in the bodie when he will, but when it conduceth with the glorie of God. There be that demand the ſame with much inſtance and ſollicitation, but that which others doe ſo vrgently demaund, and for the moſt part are denied, hath been graunted vnto this vnluckie woman.

[1] Godpermitted this for his glorie, and the exaltation of that company.

I further ſay, that I would rather chuſe to be in the bodie of a dogge or of a hogge, then to be where I am, and I haue petitioned Lucifer, that he would take me off from this bodie, becauſe there is nothing here to be gotten; and I curſed Belzebub that he would not come and take me from hence, and that I would rather fall vpon a ſupper in Hell, then taſt that dinner which I had at S. Baume. He further ſaid that a certaine diſputation betwixt God and him was acted in S. Baume at the feete of S. Magdalen as here enſueth.

I ſaid to God he might doe well to diſcouer by viſion to this vnhappie woman what he intended, he anſwered me that viſions were too dangerous, and that he would

cauſe

cauſe her to vnderſtand his pleaſure when and how he pleaſed, and that ſhee ſhould doe well to humble her ſelfe. I ſaid vnto him that it was the diuell that made her ſpeake, but God replied vpon mee that it was not true, and that all came from him, and to vnderſtand this (ſaid he) there needs no [m] other argument thē this, that her ſoule is in repoſe, and that ſhe is full of gladnes, and the diuell doth not poſſeſſe thoſe ſoules that are peaceable and chierefull. Alſo God the more to trie her, told her that ſhee was to humble her ſelfe euen to the profoundeſt gulfe hell, and that ſhe ſhould recken of her ſelfe no more, then if ſhe were a handfull of duſt, or of durt, or as the leafe of a tree that falleth to the ground: and further that ſhe ſhould conceiue her ſelfe to be vnworthie to tread on the face of the earth. Then ſaid the Diuell, this will ſwell her with pride; but God made anſwere, that his grace ſhould ſuffice to preſerue her vntainted by vaine-glorie, and that ſhe ſhould make recognition that all was deriued from him; and that of her ſelfe ſhee was nothing, but was confident that hee would giue her his grace, to acknowledge this nothing. Then I added, that the date of miracles was now expired. And his reply was, that hee was ſtill the ſame God, who wrought them in times paſt, and that hee was both as powerfull and willing, as hee was in thoſe daies.

The Diuell anſwered, that ſhe was not indowed with thoſe vertues, as were thoſe in whoſe time ſuch miracles were done. What? ſhee is no Saint, ſhee is a Piſmire. Then God commanded me to be gone, and holde my peace, and ſo I was inforced to withdraw my ſelfe, and to ſuffer Louyſe to finiſh her deuotions. All this was done in the preſence of her Creator, and of the bleſſed Sacrament, that was there, and of her ſuperior, Iohn Baptiſta Romillon, and of Catherine of Iſle. To conclude, the Diuell was ſo impatient of this diſcourſe, that hee began to roare, as vnable to indure ſuch talke any longer:

[m] In confeſsion and out of cōfeſſion ſhe ſtill ſaid, that ſhe regarded not to be poſſeſſed, ſince it was Gods pleaſure for the manifeſtation of his glory.

ger: and cried thrice, that hee had loſt all hope both of God, and that vnhappie woman.

This diſpute internally and externally indured little leſſe then an howre and a quarter, in Saint Baume: and much of this diſputation was repeated at the time of Maſſe the ſame day in the mornings diſcourſe.

Then was Louyſe commanded to tell her Superiour, and all thoſe that had charge of her ſoule, as alſo to him that did exorciſe her, and to all thoſe to whoſe benefit it might any way appertaine, all her temptations and internall conferences, for feare leaſt ſhe ſhould be deceiued by the Diuell. In concluſion, they recalled to her remembrance thoſe fiue points which that laſt Sonday they recommended vnto her: to wit, a good intention, a pure affection, puritie of conſcience (which is one of thoſe points) humilitie which is another, obedience, and reſignation of the world which is another. This done, Verrine ſpake and ſaid, I haue formerly ſaid, that ſome Prieſts goe to the Church as if they were to goe to a ſtable without any preparation, or premeditation of that which they haue to doe. I haue alſo ſaid, that the Sonne of God did yeeld more [n] obedience to you then you to God, and that as ſoone as a Prieſt doth ſpeake, God preſently deſcendeth vpon the Altar. I haue alſo ſaid, that the Prieſt was equall in honour vnto the Mother of God, yet did not his mother dare to touch him but with feare and reuerence, no not ſhee which had carried him in her wombe nine moneths.

I ſaid, that if they were to behold him they would drawe backe and be dazeled with his exceeding brightnes, or at leaſt would prepare themſelues better then they doe. Then Louyſe ſaid, that it was reuealed to ſiſter Louyſe in Saint Baume in that diſputation, how the Magician ſhould bee conuerted by the prayers of our Lady, if hee hardened not himſelfe againſt them, and how God had inwardly commanded ſiſter Louyſe to pray for him.

[n] In the Scripture phraſe as we haue formerly cited out of the booke of Ioſua the 10. chapter.

After

After this, there was a letter directed to bee sent to the Sisters that were the Co-adiutors in the house of S. Vrsula at Aix as here ensueth. Most deere, best beloued and euer honoured Sisters, I vnworthie to call you my Sisters doe beseech you to pray vnto your Redeemer to take mercie vpon me desolate and distressed wretch, vnworthie to call vpon the name of God. I doe craue pardon of you as oft as I haue grieued, prouoked, and debased you, and that many times vpon no ground.

Your most humble obedient and indeede vnworthy to name you, the seruant and slaue of Catherine, Espirite, Magdalene Honorate, and of all those whom God hath created and formed (God be mercifull vnto them all) Louyse Cappeau. While the said letter was dictated, the Diuell began to say, Ha God, thou goest about to humble one, and I will cause foure other to fall by infusing into them vaine glorie. Then he said, God answereth me that he would humble them by those fiue points aboue mentioned to Louyse, which shee should make familiar vnto them, and should not faile to performe it.

The same day in the euening the two that were possessed were exorcised by Father Francis Billet: when Verrine began to speake of Hell and of sundry other subiects saying, Catherine humble thy selfe, and remember what I said vnto thee in the morning, that the seruants of God were to humble themselues and to endure patiently, to be scorned and troden vnder foote. Men are so vngratefull, that they serue God with lesse respect and veneration then they beare vnto their grooms or lackies. Also, men doe so little regard his commandements as if a groome had made them: yet notwithstanding he who gaue them vnto Moses hath recommended them vnto you.

There be ten Commandements, and yet they are but two.

When men preach vnto men of Hell and Paradise, there there is no more heede giuen vnto it, then if they preached of ſome rocke of ſtone. S. Francis ° preached to ſtones, and Anthony of Padua to fiſhes. It is ſtrange, the very beaſts did bow downe their heads, thereby making recognition after their manner of the benefits they had receiued, and therefore ſhall riſe vp againſt men at the day of Iudgement.

° Whē it pleaſeth God all things accompliſh his will. He commanded the Rauen of Helias, and the Worme that withered Ionas his gourd

In Hell we make wondrous much of men in requitall of their obedience which they carried towards vs. We ſay vnto them, P Damned and ingratefull as you are, you would not ſerue and acknowledge your God, and then we lay on loade as it were with barres of iron, and doe intollerably torment them.

P Diſcourſe of Hell.

There are no gates for men to get out of Hell, but the gates to enter in are very large and ſpacious.

The repaſt and fare which they haue in Hell are Serpents, Toads, Scorpions, and whatſoeuer elſe is filthie and abhorred: the drinke is brimſtone, wormewood, rhew, and all bitter and diſtaſtfull liquours. Wee put them in a ſeate of flames and fire which doth grieuouſly ſcorch them, and doe oft remember them of Paradiſe, thereby to augment their torments. Vpon the earth they eate white bread, but here they muſt gnaw vpon cruſts, and that without their teeth.

In ſtead of perfumes wee ſtuffe their noſtrels with ſtinkes and loathſome ſauours, and in ſtead of delightſome ſongs wee fill their eares with deriſions, blaſphemies, and curſings, ſaying, Curſed be the God that hath created thee, curſed be the father and mother that haue begotten thee, curſed bee the ayre that thou diddeſt breathe, curſed bee the foure elements, curſed bee the creatures that haue any way obeyed thee.

And to adde vnto their torments, we ſet before them Heauen, together with the glorie and thoſe pleaſures which they haue loſt, becauſe they haue tranſgreſſed through malice, not through ignorance, and remained obſtinate in the ſame.

He

He that would dine at eaſe in this world muſt ſup in Hell.

We alſo prouide milke for them, in compariſon of which the haile of Laurent is a heape of roſes. All miſerie is contained in Hell, as in Paradiſe all happineſſe doth abound.

The damned ſoules are more horredly deformed then the Diuels themſelues, and eternally, eternally, eternally, eternally, eternally, eternally ſhall they blaſpheme the name of God. And wee haue permiſſion to inflict vpon them moſt ſharpe and exquiſite torments, for their vncleane and beſtiall ſpeeches.

And as the hangman doth his office when hee tortureth a maleſactor that is condemned by the Iudge, ſo the Diuels are not nice to performe their charge they haue to torment ſoules.

The torments of Hell are torments indeed, and the greateſt tortures of the world which are inflicted vpon maleſactors, compared with theſe, are but as flowers and roſes.

They ſhall bee damned euerlaſtingly, euerlaſtingly, euerlaſtingly, without hope of intermiſſion or end, euerlaſtingly, euerlaſtingly.

The Diuels ſhall binde you hand and foote, and, being thus manicled, they ſhall throw you into a boyling chauldron: and after you haue been burned in theſe flames, you ſhall be engulfed in a ſea of ice. None can reſiſt the Almightie when hee hath a purpoſe to doe a thing. God hath giuen you a ſoule, and appoynted her to be the Miſtreſſe: it ſtandeth with good reaſon that the Miſtriſſe ſhould beare ſway, and not the chamber-maide.

God hath giuen you three faculties or powers: giue him the keyes thereof, and ſuffer him to haue the gouernment of them.

Locke faſt your gate, that is to ſay, your will, againſt all manner of vice: ſhut vp your windowes, to wit, the fiue externall senses, that theeues steale not in and make a cheate vpon your soules. Then Verrine said, I had rather an hundred thousand times sup in Hell, then haue giuen you such a supper, as by this discourse I haue done, and withall swore, that hee had vttered all, which is aboue mentioned, for the glorie of God, that all proceeded from God, and that the Diuel was forced thereunto as a slaue or a captiue in the galleys.

Then he said to those that were there present: This Baume, this Rocke, these leaues will rise vp against you at the day of Iudgement, if you make not your aduantage of these things. Your God loueth you so well, that if it were behoofull for you, hee would at this very instant returne to Mount Caluary.

The same day, this dialogue chanced to be betweene Verrine and Belzebub. Verrine said, You that heare Masse doe say, I beleeue that my God is there in blood and bones, and that in the Chalice, both his flesh and bones, his Humanitie and Diuinitie are present. But you must conceiue, that you are there as poore malefactors before your Iudge: pray therefore vnto your Iudge and he will heare you, for hee giueth grace vnto the humble, and casteth downe the proud of heart. Oh how narrow is the gate of Paradise, and how low you are to stoope to enter into it.

¶ The discourse of Belzebub cõplaining to God of his ouer great mercie to sinners, euen to the Magician himselfe, in whose custodie remained the scheduls of Magdalene.

¶ Then Belzebub said: Ha God, thou art too plenteous in thy pitie to sinners: the Diuell is enforced to acknowledge it. I am not at this time possessed with the scheduls, Lewis hath them in his custodie: to the confusion of Diuels is this great mercie shewed towards sinners.

Christ Iesus is euer shewing his wounds to his Father hee doth alwaies renue and make them fresh, and doth still represent them vnto him. All Hell is confounded: Misericordia Dei plena est terra. O Mercie, thou art too too exceedingly great! You haue no more to doe but only to crie peccaui, and presently all is pardoned:

ned: a mercy indeede too ſpatious. Let a man renounce God, his Paſſion, and all the merites of the ſame, and let him onely ſay Miſerere mei, and preſently all is pardoned: confuſion vnto vs, Confundatur ſuperbia Diabolorum. Lord, thou diddeſt caſt forth the Angels which would haue bandied themſelues againſt thee, and diddeſt cruſh in pieces all their forces: yet let a ſinner caſt himſelfe headlong into Hell, and renounce thy precious blood and wounds, yet wilt thou euer mediate for them to thy Father, and wilt receiue them into grace if they bring with them a pure deſire to returne backe to God for thy ſake: a mercy too large for ſinners, and damnation too great for the Diuell.

Curſed be the wound that coſt me ſo deere, becauſe in it all ſinnes are ſwallowed vp: Curſed be Longinus that made that wound. O God moſt bountifull vnto ſinners: O vertuous and moſt mercifull Mary. The Diuell is their God, and yet O Mary thou art alwaies falling at the feete of thy ſonne; thou art euer interceding for them: thou art alwaies ſaying, To day and to morrow, and doeſt euer prolong and driue things off. In ſaying this hee deſired againſt his ordinary manner to haue an oath miniſtred vnto him: and for further confirmation of the truth, he ſaid that one of Magdalens [r] Gloues ſhould fall to the ground, and that hee would ſtretch himſelfe flat vpon the earth. Then ſaid Verrine to him, humble thy ſelfe Belzebub. What is now become of thy ſtrength? Belzebub ſaid, Confundatur ſuperbia Diaboli: I am now conſtrained to humble my ſelfe. Then Verrine ſaid: All you that are here, come and tread vpon him, ſpeaking this to the Aſſembly.

Then Belzebub began to cry: what, vnder the feete of men? Doe men reſiſt God, and am not I able to doe the ſame? Verrine ſaid, God is ſo mercifull, that he will fill vp the empty ſeates in heauen, and will pardon men their offences. Then did Belzebub inferre, O what a iudgement is heere againſt thoſe which will not turne and and be conuerted. Next after Lucifer, I am the proudeſt, yet learne from hence to humble your ſelues. For one offence am I damned for euer, for euer, for euer.

[r] The Gloue of the Girle was too little for her, and could not be pulled on but by violence.

And that iuſtly ſaid Verrine; we are damned becauſe wee had more illumination then was giuen vnto men. O, O, O, Mercy (ſaid Belzebub) how great art thou for the ſinner, O Iuſtice, how ſeuere art thou againſt vs? Occaſions of doing good are neuer wanting vnto the ſinner: he hath the benefit of Preachers, of Confeſſours, and of Miracles, & yet remaineth obſtinate in his ſinne, and ſtill God is ſo fauourable in his behalfe, that he will at the laſt caſt make vſe of Diuels for his conuerſion. Verrine replied, ſuperbos humiliat, he is more powerfull to attract ſinners vnto goodneſſe, then are the Diuels in their malice to allure them vnto ill.

Further hee ſaid, I feare not Belzebub, nor Lucifer, nor all Hell beſides. I am not to bee puniſhed for this. God hath commanded me, and yet there be ſome found that will not beleeue this. Neuer buſie your ſelues further about repentance, for the day of [f] iudgement doth approach, and the very ſtones ſhall riſe vp, and the leaues ſhall bandy themſelues againſt thoſe that ſhall dwell ſtill in their obſtinacie: I warne you all of this both young and olde, for Death is a thiefe that ſpareth none, but ſweepeth all away rich and poore, great and ſmall: and as the hooke moweth downe the hay, ſo Death with his ſithe cutteth downe all.

[f] Exclamation againſt ſinners.

[t] Then ſaid Belzebub, it is no longing of ours to deliuer the truth. Whereupon Verrine tooke occaſion to ſay; Magdalene, this he vttereth in confirmation of the letter directed to the bleſſed Mother of God, and pronounced by Verrine in the mouth of Louyſe; reade it often, and keepe it as thou wouldeſt doe relickes. Then ſaid Belzebub: I ſweare that I haue reaſoned of the mercy of God, to confound all Diuels, Magicians, and Witches, that are in the world, and all them that doe practiſe or trade with Magicke. At this Verrine ſaid, [t] Belzebub conſtrained to ſweare and to tell the truth.

Through

Through maine compulsion art thou drawne to sweare, and although thou bee my Prince, yet at this present thou art but as a Fly. Where are thy braues and forces now? thou that but a while since diddest out-face heauen and earth, doest now humble thy selfe vnder the feete of Frauncis.

Then Verrine setting his foote vpon Belzebub, said, I am thy vassall. Thou wouldest haue pluckt God from his Throne. Consider you that are here, whither Monsieur de Guyse your Gouernour would euer haue endured, that a Lackey should braue him thus, as I doe now my Prince. And turning to Magdalene he said: Endure patiently Magdalene, for the remission of thy sinnes, and thinke thy selfe euen vnworthie to humble thy selfe; Resist thou Belzebub, for thou seest how I braue him, and yet there are heere fiue Princes in this body.

The Diuels would haue laid diuers foule aspersions and disgraces vpon the Companies of the Doctrine and of Saint Vrsula, but God is pleased to exalt them as it were by Pismires and leaues of trees. Labour therefore for the glory of God.

Then hee swore that whatsoeuer had beene by him deliuered, of hell, and of the mercie of God, and of those that were obstinate, was all true: by the obstinate, he tacitly meant those that were negligent in their deuotions to Saint [u] Martha, and Lazarus.

Afterwards the Priest saying Fecit potentiam, Verrine thus discoursed. All things are the workes of the hands of the Almighty. It is strange, that they say euerie where, there is nothing that withstandeth God or the Church. I say that many Christians are Gods friends at his Table, but fewe followed him to Mount Caluary; your Redeemer was forced to bee there almost alone. Some will be contented to be present at a Masse, and then desire that within halfe a quarter of an houre it should all be ended. Try your selues, and bee regardfull of your ſoules, for you haue but one, and let that be ſurrendred vp to him that gaue it.

[u] These are the Patrones of the Country of Prouince together with Saint Magdalene, where their bodies lie interred.

Wee could be contented, that there were none but rockes and trees to heare vs. This is it that puſheth vs on to deſpaire, that neuer any Preacher did deliuer ſo much, and that this fact of ours will bee diuulged all abroad.

Then he ſpake to the ſiſter Catherine, and ſaid: Catherine thou art entangled with many encumbrances, thou muſt ſuffer thy ſelfe to be inſtructed, and to ſay, Gods will be done. Curſed be that word that hath coſt me ſo deere, whereby the Diuell doth leſſon others againſt the Diuell. Ca herine ſuffer it to bee done, for thou art yet vnexperienced. Then Verrine ſpake to the Diuels that were in the body of ſiſter Catherine, ſaying, Speake accurſed Spirits, come into the field.

Belzebub alſo ſaid: There is no meanes to hide thy ſelfe, thy Prince is humbled, therefore take not thou in ſcorne to humble thy ſelfe. Let vs goe and diſcloſe our ſelues. Obedi Deo, & Mariæ Virgini, Mariæ Magdalenæ: Obedi maledicte, maledictio Dei omnipotentis ſit ſuper te ſuperbe. Obedi Deo, confundatur ſuperbia. I command thee by almighty God, tell mee thy name, × I command thee by the Virgine Mary, by Saint Vrſula cum ſocijs, confundatur ſuperbia. Wilt thou yet make head againſt thy Captaine? I wil make thee ſpeak, and fall vnder my feete, for ſince that I haue humbled my ſelfe, I will haue thee humbled alſo. Surge, augeo tibi pœnas, thou art but a proud Spirit. I regard not whither thou ſpeakeſt or no, for I will tell, that thou art a Spirit called Sabathon.

× The Diuels are euer very daintie and ſqueamiſh to diſcouer them ſelues, or to tell their names for feare of being exorciſed, commanded, and by puniſhments impoſed on them, tormented.

And ſpeaking to the Exorciſt, he ſaid, Encreaſe his paines, ſeeing he will not tell his name. Verrine ſaid, We are of the ranke of Thrones, and doe yet yeeld our obedience, but here the men would be better then their Maſters. That time is not yet come.

Phyſitians are contented to giue Phyſicke, and wee muſt must giue both Physicke and restoratiues.

You that are heere present will testifie and say, that you haue seene three women possessed for the glory of God, and for the estimation of the two Companies of Saint Vrsula and of the Doctrine, and that the Diuell neuer met with such an affront and encounter: for all hell is amazed at it.

Cursed be the Charme, cursed be hee that aduised to giue it. O what a great reparation will this make in the breach that was caused by sinne.

Louyse, thou art but a poore wench and of base condition: yet could we wish thou hadst been a Queene, a Saint, or skilled in Philosophie. Thou doest but lend thy tongue in the vtterance of these things, and hast now deliuered twelue seuerall discourses, by the which thou art much confirmed; Be content with this: You haue seene the beginning, the progresse and issue of this matter. y O Michaelis, thou art now preaching, and hast said many things and that truly, but hast gained verie little by the same. Louyse neuer studied, and yet hath in a summarie comprehended all manner of perfection.

y This was in that houre wherein the Sermon of the Aduent was ended at Aix, where he preached about eleuen a clock in the forenoone.

Then he said, that vpon a Tuesday was the birth-day of Louyse being the feast of Anthony of Padua, and vpon that day he entred into the Order of Saint Vrsula: vpon a Tuesday was the day of Saint Maximin, where we were discouered; and vpon that day wee departed from Aix to come hither. Vpon a Tuesday Louyse made her generall confession, and was borne about midnight on a Tuesday, the same houre that your Lord was born, being the thirteene of Iune; and it is about thirtie yeeres agoe since she was borne.

The same day Belzebub and Verrine began to curse in the chamber where they were saying, Cursed be him who first began to write these euents: Cursed bee the Printer that shall put them foorth: Cursed be the Doctors that shall examine them: and cursed be those that shall compile the contents hereof in a volume: Curse d be the Pope that shall giue his approbation thereunto: Cursed be the Cardinals Arch-bishops and Bishops that shall giue any passage or assistance vnto the same. For since the beginning of the world vntil the day of iudgement there neuer hapned, nor euer shall happen an accident of a semblable nature.

The Acts of the 15. of December.

VPon which day in the morning Louyse and Magdalene were exorcised by the Dominican Father. And at the beginning of the Exorcismes Verrine tooke occasion to speake of Saints in this manner.

Gods pleasure is that I speake of the Saints which are in Paradise, my mortall enemies. I would haue here resisted God and the blessed Trinitie, but they doe constraine me to speake. Belzebub, thou art but as a Pismire in comparison of God. How strange a thing it is that deuils must bee faine to discourse of the glory of Saints whose mortall enemies they are, and would, if it lay in their power, pluck them from thence, and carry them headlong to hell.

Frauncis is in heauen: and Lucifer lost his splendor by his excessiue pride, to the attainement of which Frauncis hath aspired by his humilitie.

If a[z] Michaelis, a father Lawrence, or some great learned personage should preach this, I would not be abashed at it, but that a deuil should speake it by the mouth of a Pismire, there lyeth the wonder. But the God of the Christians wil haue it so, and he which lyeth in the blessed Sacrament at S. Baume commandeth it.

Mortifications are by them that are vnacquainted with their vertues accounted yrksome. Iohn Baptist with all his repentance was contemned, but is now high in glory in Paradise, he is sanctified, and is one of the great familiars and friends of God: who to shew to [z] He speaketh according to the capacitie of the simple people that were there present, because these two did vse to preach in the Townes of Prouince.

sinners

sinners the way vnto repentance, tooke vpon him repentance when he had not sinned. [a] Wee are therefore to passe through mortification if we would attaine vnto the place of blisse and glory. Is it not strange that the deuils should teach men mortification and aduise them thereunto? Ioannes Euangelista was the great friend of God, and Maryes gardian for her chastitie. Stephanus, cursed may'st thou be, I must trumpet foorth thy charity in praying for those that stoned thee. O Bernardus, thou art Maries darling, and thou Dominicke, & thou Stanislaus also, though few take notice of thee. Paulus, thou wert a sinner and persecutor of the Christians, but afterwards diddest become a great Preacher of vertues. Anthonius of Padua, through thy humilitie, and for thy other vertues thou art now in Paradise.

[a] That mortifications are requisite toward the attainement of Paradise.

By thy obedience, O Abraham, thou art the Father of beleeuers: Dauid is the glasse of repentance wherein sinners may behold themselues, and how they are to returne vnto their God. Tu Petrus, thou hast denied thy Maister. Accursed Peter, thou hast cost me deere: O Peter, by thy example those that haue denied God will learne to be conuerted. William the Hermite was a great sinner, yet by his repentance he found mercie. Some go to heauen through repentance, others through innocence. Mary is in Paradise for her innocence, Magdalene for her repentance. Lewes King of Fraunce is the Patron of Kings. It is the good pleasure of God, that men of all conditions should be saued. Hee hath made election of Emperours, and also of the basest sort of people, of Shooe-makers, and of Husband-men. Crispinian was a Cobler: Athanasius a Labouring-man, yet was hee at length chosen to be a Bishop. There are of all sorts in Heauen (to our confusion be it spoken) to the end that none might haue any pretension for excuse. God placeth those in Paradise which loue his Commandements and keepe them, and doe not quench in themselues his good inspirations. Hee sets them at his table: He causeth them to eate of his bread, and drinke of his wine: He doth not as the men of this world doe, vse their seruants as if they were slaues; Nay, there bee diuers that doe a great deale worse, who cherish and make much of their dogges, but doe euill entreate their seruants. Then he said that hee should not be abashed if God would elect Princes and not men of base condition: yea, we could be contented to haue patience that he should chuse men; but that women should bee gadding to Paradise, that is it that maddeth vs. [b] Cunigonda was an Empresse, and is in Paradise, so is Catherine of Alexandria, and eleuen thousand Virgines went in one day to Paradise, besides men which are not numbred. [c] Margaret of Hungary was a Queene, shee entred into a Monastery, and became so humble that shee would not be called the daughter of a King but of a Citizen. Curssed be her humility for which we haue payd so deere. To this Belzebub replied, Amen. Then Verrine continuing on his discourse, said: Barbara was beheaded by her owne Father, and presently the Diuell slew him vpon the place. The earth and Paradise are two Countries very distinct and different, heere those that are most rich goe formost, in Paradise those that are most good, most humble, and most obedient. [d] Marie was a poore Chamber-maid, and the Chamber-maid of a Paynim, yet is shee now espoused vnto the King of glory, and as great as Cunigunda. Margaret of Scotland was a married woman, and yet shee went to Heauen.

Codelana also was a married woman, whose husband strangled her, and afterwards caused her to be throwne into a pit.

Elizabeth was the Queene Dowager of Hungary, and in her great humility betooke her selfe to be the Mistresse of an Hospitall.

Notwithstanding we could let passe all this with patience, but wee cannot chuse but bee enraged at those that [b] In the Martyrologe the third of March.

[c] In Ribadineira 25. Ianuar.

[d] In the Martyrologe 1. Nouemb.

that haue committed folly and were great sinners, as were Pelagia, Thais, and Magdalene: which we speake without any preiudice to them or their glorie, it doth rather conduce with the glorie of God and his bounteousnesse, that he would vouchsafe to take them into blisse, who did a thousand times deserue Hell.

They that will not beleeue what is here spoken, will say that these two here be women, and haue had their lesson giuen vnto them: by which meanes these discourses will not proue vse-full vnto them, which doth put vs in great comfort. A Preacher is often wearied in preaching of one Sermon, and I haue already made fifteene discourses by the mouth of this woman here (meaning Louyse) and haue sometimes made two or three in a day of greater extent and length, then Preachers in their Aduents. Curſed be thy force, and curſed be him that hath bestowed it vpon thee. Belzebub at this discourse cried out. O power! Then Verrine said, it is the force which God giueth her. How strange is it that Diuels should preach the Commandements of God and his Counsels, and should teach the religious, Clergie men, Priests, and Seculars, and all sorts of people? I tell you, here are viands for all people to eate; Eate he that will. There are not a few of vs who are not well pleased with the sauce, but would rather chuse the sauce of Hell. You shall finde Notaries that for a matter of fiue sous will Register the Acts false, and breake their oathes. The Diuels are more faithfull vnto their Maister then you men are.

When the Diuels haue once sworne according to the purpose of God and his Church, being thus adiured vnto the truth they want ability to lye. Men haue their free-will, if they doe ill, they doe goe forth-with to hell; if good, they are straight admitted into heauen. But the Diuell is meerely constrained to speake the truth when God would haue it so: they haue no free-will to doe that which is good, but are enforced, accur-ſed Fiends as they are, to deliuer a truth. Otherwiſe to what purpoſe ſerueth the authority of the Church, if oathes haue no tye or power? or to what end are theſe bookes of Exorciſmes publiſhed? For they that denie this, muſt denie the authoritie of the Church, and thoſe that haue compoſed and allowed the ſaid bookes. They muſt further ſay, that there was neuer any diſpoſſeſſed after the taking of an oath. But they plunge into a gulfe, from whence they can neuer iſſue out, and either they muſt make ſearch and inquiſition, after the curious perſons that are in hell, to make explanation of their curioſities, or after the Saints in heauen, to cauſe them to ſay, that all their writings are nothing worth: And ſo by a conſequence they wil come to deny the Church, and ſo ſtand defiled with the infectious opinions of the Caluiniſts.

How wonderfull is this? that Diuels ſhould preach of good intention, pure affection, puritie of conſcience, ſimplicitie, humilitie, and reſignation of the world, and teach men not to reſerue the leaſt loue of themſelues: as alſo to ſhew the meanes toward the attainment of Paradiſe, and to diſcourſe of chaſtitie and pouertie? The Diuels will be a meanes of the reformation of many Monaſteries, the Diuels will yeeld more furtherance hereunto, then their Biſhops, Abbots, or Prelates are able; to their great griefe doe they reueale it: This muſt be the meanes of that reformation. Then he tooke an oth after this forme: I doe here ſweare by that God, whom you worſhip, and who is your Creator and Redeemer, that whatſoeuer I haue here ſpoken is true, and that all is done for his glorie, the ſaluation of ſoules, and inſtruction of the Clergie, and Laytie, and all ſorts of people; for the good and the bad, and for the reformation of many Monaſteries as well of men as of women; All which is moſt true. I ſweare this according to the intention of God and his Church, which I neuer did before, and this oth I haue taken vpon the bleſſed Sacrament, crament, and without being ſpoken vnto by you; and haue ſworne this with all the ſolemnities that are required to a true oth, according to the intention of God and his Spouſe the Church, that whatſoeuer I haue deliuered was for his glorie, as alſo for the conuerſion of ſoules, and the extirpation of Hereſies, and Magicke: All which is true, and nothing is heere vttered againſt the glorie of God, or againſt his Church; And I haue ſaid, that it ſhall haue approbation from the Church, and that I neuer tooke ſuch a kind of oth before. And when I was to take this oth, I ſaid, I doe ſweare by the liuing God, which is the greateſt oth that may be taken.

After this he ſaid: Thoſe that are ſo preiudicate as to ſay, theſe things are falſe and very vnſutable to truth, ſhall doe a wrong to God. They affirme that God is omnipotent, and yet in effect denie his omnipotencie; and perhaps conceit that God is leſſe [a] puiſſant then the Diuell. And in regard theſe euents runne in a courſe beyond ordinarie, there are many that will rather denie Gods power, then confeſſe that this is true. The Diuell by the firſt article of their Creed, Credo Patrem omnipotentem, doth proue, that they are to beleeue that God is omnipotent: And if it be ſo, he might then haue done all this by a Piſmire, yea and greater things then theſe; for hee can (if the concurrence of his will and power ſhould reſolue thereon) create a hundred thouſand worlds out of nothing.

After this, Louyſe retired her ſelfe into her chamber, as being all in a ſweate, through her exceeding toyle and the vehement action of the Diuell. Preſently did Belzebub prince of the Diuels in the bodie of Magdalene, begin to conteſt againſt the mercie of God, in manner as followeth.

[b] O mercie too great! O God, canſt thou not be contented to take from vs ſinners, but muſt thy mercie alſo extend to thoſe, who haue giuen and made ouer vnto vs bodie and ſoule, and whatſoeuer elſe they did or could

[a] If God were not powerfull to compell the Diuels, it muſt be ſo.

[b] An admirable inuectiue and complaint of Belzebub to God, where he ſetteth downe a Briefe of the curſed abiurations and execrations made by the Magicians when they receiued the marke of the Diuell, and abominably gaue thēſelues vnto him.

could possesse? And this they gaue vs in writing, and in schedules signed with their blood, yet for all this doest thou take them from vs?

[c] A discouerie worthie of admiration, and of feare.

It is [c] strange, that thou takest them from vs in such a manner, when they haue made renunciation of thee, thy Father, and the holy Ghost, together with all his goodnesse, loue, and mercie, that they might bee made vncapable of the same, and bee damned for euermore. They haue renounced thy Mother, and all her prayers that she might make for them, with her wombe and breasts, that they might neuer proue compassionate in their behalfe; her remembrance that she might neuer be mindfull of them; her will, that she might neuer pray vnto her Sonne for their conuersion; her vnderstanding, that she might neuer think vpon them, but might abandon and giue them vp into the hands of the Diuels: all Angels, and all Saints, and all the benefits which God had euer bestowed vpon them, or was to bestow vpon them hereafter: all inspirations that might be infused into them to draw them vnto him. They haue cursed all that euer God created for the good of man: all the prayers that Angels, Saints, and men might make in their behalfe, to the end they might be without all possibilitie of returning to God, saying, they had nought to doe with him, his blessings, fauours or Paradise. They haue renounced his passion and blood, with all the merits thereof, that they might haue no power or efficacie vpon their soules, but might lay a pressure vpon them of greater obstinacie. They haue inuocated vpon themselues the wrath of Almightie God, of his all-knowing Sonne, of the euer-bounteous holy Spirit, as also the indignation of the Mother of God, of all Angels, and of all Saints: saying, the blood of the Sonne of God fall vpon vs bodie and soule eternally. Yet for all this doest thou take them from vs. And notwithstanding that in despite of thee, and all that thou hast done for them, they are desirous to be ours, yet doest thou take them frō vs.

They

They haue taken the Diuell and the Magician for their God, Creator, and Redeemer, Sauiour, and sanctifier, and will not haue any reference or dependance vpon God, but from the Diuell and from the Magician, and doe worship, magnifie, and praise as well the Diuell as the Magician, as if they were Gods.

They haue renounced God who hath created all: they haue blasphemed him, making retractation of all the good that euer they did for Gods sake, and attribute all their subsequent actions to the Diuell and the Magician: yet for all this art thou so good that thou wouldest bereaue vs of them, and hast thy armes alwaies open to receiue them. They were bequeathed and consecrated to thee, and notwithstanding this, they haue by a sure earnest contracted mariage with the Diuel and the Magician: for greater confirmation whereof, they did not sticke to signe it with their owne blood; witnessing, that they had now nothing to doe with God, but were affianced wholly vnto the Diuell. This mariage was authentically solemnized in the presence of the blessed Sacrament, and written by the Priest that was the Magician: yet for all this, thou art still so good that thou wouldest bereaue vs of them.

I said to Mary, what hast thou to doe with them to present them to thy Sonne, for they haue prostituted themselues to all kinde of voluptuousnesse, as well of men as of diuels and beasts. What hast thou then to do to present such to thy Sonne, who is puritie it selfe?

They renounce their good Angels, lest they might infuse some inspiration into them to returne vnto thee. And in counterchange they take the Diuell for their gard-Angell to direct them in whatsoeuer they doe: yet art thou so good and so mercifull, that thou giuest them in exchange their vsuall Angell, and wilt doe the same twentie, thirtie, fourtie times, and in the end wilt cause all the Angels to bee assistant to plucke them from betwixt our hands.

They

They make protestation that they haue conceiued such great anger, rage, disdaine and indignation against God, that they would willingly become Diuels, that they might the better hinder others from the fruition of the glorie of God, by those temptations which they would lay close vnto them: [d] cursing God that hee had made them men, and not Diuels: inuocating and heartely praying vnto Lucifer, that hee would change his state and condition with them, and that by exchange he would seate himselfe in their place, and they in his: protesting, that they would vndergoe all the torments, paines, and punishments of all the Diuels, and of all damned soules, which are and might be so, if they might be able totally to bandie themselues against God, and to ouerthrow his intentions: in respect whereof, they would no more care for all these torments, then they would for a flye. They cause the pictures of their bodies to bee drawne, to the end to giue them to Diuels and Magicians, that they might make vse of them to offend God. In despight of thee, O God, the Diuels, the sea and the earth doe conspire together to swallow them vp, at what time thou wouldest conuert them.

They renounce thy passion, and the blessed Sacrament of Confession, and doe pray, that when the Priest should giue absolution vnto them, that then the wrath and indignation of God might fall vpon them and their blood, for their finall condemnation.

They protest before your Sauiour, that their desire is that when they shall truly and really receiue the blessed Sacrament, that then the ayre may bee thronged with multitudes of Diuels to take possession of their soules and bodies, and of whatsoeuer else is in them.

They protest, that they haue no part or portion in God, but would bee possessed by all the Diuels, imagining this to bee the greatest good fortune that euer could happen vnto them, to haue the Diuels as guests within them. Yea they haue still such a spleene and disdaine

[d] O blindnes, more great thē that of Infidels, or of the Diuels thēselues. The cursed and miserable rage of Magicians doth resemble mad dogs, or rather the Diuell himselfe, being partakers of his obstinacie, as doe also the good communicate of the vertues of Iesus Christ.

[e] disdaine against thee, that by their will there should be nothing in their bodie, that should not some way or other make a shift to offend God: giuing all the parts of their bodie, as their blood, their marrow, their bones, their humours, the haire of their browes, and all to the Diuell and to the Magician to make charmes of the same, or whatsoeuer else may displease God, his Mother, all Angels, and all Saints.

O mercie of too large extention for sinners! Thou makest shew as if thou diddest not see nor vnderstand of al these their villanies and abominations, but art euer readie to present thy wounds vnto thy Father, that hee might not vnbend and let flie his indignation vpon them: saying alwaies vnto thy Father: Father, consider here what I haue endured for sinners, I pray you haue regard vnto my death, and to the loue you beare towards mee, and giue these vnto mee. I will send vnto them so many Angels, so many Preachers, and sanctified inspirations, that in conclusion they shall be enforced to cast themselues into my armes, as did the poore prodigall childe. Let not my blood be shed for them in vaine. Belzebub continued on, and said, O, ô, ô, the bountie and mercie of God, of too large an extent for sinners, O iustice, too cruell for Hell. And said, He doth vs wrong to take frō vs those who by so many meanes haue been knit and fastned vnto vs, and to the Art of Magicke. His bountie vnto them is so great, that, to the end they may be conuerted, he doth trauell them with great sicknesses, and by strange and violent temptations: yet for all this they would not be conuerted. He doth permit (to the vtter confusion of Diuels) that they should be possessed for their more easie conuersion: he causeth the Diuell to shew them the iudgements of God, the greatnes of their sinnes, and the paines belonging vnto them, for their more easie conuersion: yet for all this do they remaine for the most part obstinate, saying, that all these things are trifles, and that they are not not the first that haue offended God, but that there are many others as well as they: yet for all this God is so gracious that he euer knocks at the doore of their hart, that so at last he may win them home vnto him. f Mary doth euer present her wombe, and her breasts vnto her Sonne in their behalfe, yet haue they many times despised and renounced them. She prayeth her Sonne that for her sake he would compassion their wretched estate, and inspire some or other to pray for their conuersion: that being thus beset and besieged on euery side, they may no longer resist God, but may runne and shelter themselues vnder the wings of his goodnesse and mercie, as a chicken runneth vnder the wings of the henne that nourisheth it. O, ô, ô, confusion of the Diuell, of all Hell, and of all the Sabbaths and assemblies of Witches. If the g sinner did but know the bountie and mercy of God, he would be ready to creep & trale his belly vpon the earth, and to pray vnto stones, thornes, trees, flowers, fruites, the sea, the earth, and in briefe all things that euer were created, to conspire and bandie against him for the sinnes and offences which he hath committed against his God. He would desire to be forsaken of all Gods creatures, because he hath so grieuously transgressed: he would thinke himselfe vnworthie to tread on the earth, yea vnworthie of eternall damnation, conceiuing and assuredly beleeuing, that the greatest grace that God can bestow vpon him, is to stirre vp all the Diuels in Hell to punish, torture and giue castigation vnto his villanies, thinking that all this was nothing in comparison of his transgressions. Furthermore, sinners would pray all that euer was created to aske mercie of God for them. But, Lord, sinners are so stuffed with pride and presumption, that they thinke much, when they haue transgressed, to reueale their sinnes to a Confessor: but say, what will hee doe for vs, if wee should confesse our grieuous sinnes vnto him? And because (Lord) they are so loaden with pride and obstinacie, f The compassion and mercy of our Lady.

[e] The Diuels did say that they had in horror those cursed inuentions of Lewis the Magician, which he did daily contriue to prouoke God and Iesus Christ with fresh iniuries.

g An exclamation against sinners.

giue,

giue, giue, giue them to vs; otherwise you doe offer vs exceeding iniurie. Thus being readie to retire and hide my selfe, I cried with a loud voyce in a great rage, for I was driuen into desperation, and deliuered this whole discourse with great furie, and was indeede besides my selfe. Finally, turning towards sinners, I said thus vnto them: Ha! sinners; thinke, thinke, thinke vpon the goodnesse of your God; saying vnto them againe, Ha, ha, ha! thinke vpon his goodnesse, and haue in your remembrance the mercie of your Redeemer, Creator, and Sanctifier. Goe your waies, and assure your selues, that if you make not your vse hereof, the wrath and indignation of God will fall vpon you, and all hell will rise vp in iudgement against you.

The same day in the euening were Louyse and Magdalene exorcised by Father Francis Billet; and in the beginning of the Exorcismes, Belzebub did fearefully shake the body of Magdalene, and said: O mercie of God, thou art too spatiously great! Doest thou alwaies (Lord) present thy wounds vnto thy Father in the behalfe of sinners? is this a bagge that neuer shutteth? Then he said, We that are Diuels doe thus torment the soules in Hell in the middest of the flames, sometimes wee tosse them of one side, and sometimes of another, and snatch them from the fire to throw them on ice. What say ye? will you goe into this countrey?

And speaking vnto Magdalene, hee said, Cursed be the houre wherein thou wert first possessed, which will cost me so deare that I shall haue cause to remember it for euer. O wisedome of God, too great! O infinite, incomprehensible, admirable wisedome! O what space and distance haue the iudgements of God, and the iudgements of men! O wonder, O iudgemēt of God! whom God is disposed to saue, nothing can doe him annoyance, & whom God will retaine, Hell cannot take from him. Then Belzebub spake to the Diuels which were in the bodie of Catherine of Isle, who began a little to grumble grumble and to make a noyſe: come, come, let vs march into the field, we muſt awake and rouſe vp our people. Then ſaid Verrine, Reſponde maledicte, [h] obedi Eccleſiæ, Doeſt thou hope to bee greater then thy Maiſter. To which Belzebub replied: It is not the manner of ſeruants to ſpeake before their Maiſter. Verrine ſaid, yet doe I ſpeake before thee, although I am of leſſe authoritie then thou. Belzebub anſwered, but it is full ſore againſt thy will. Verrine ſaide, that is true, for I am conſtrained vnto it. Is it fit that Diuels ſhould fall out with Diuels? and turning to ſiſter Catherine, hee ſaid, they will not ſuffer thee to eate or ſleepe, yet doeſt thou beleeue that all this proceedeth from naturall cauſes. Is it not ſo Catherine? Catherine, doe not thou hinder or giue a checke hereunto, [i] beleeue thou art poſſeſſed.

And ſpeaking to the Prieſt, he ſaid: Come your waies, adiure him in the name of Iohn, Peter, and Bernard: what? muſt [k] the Diuels acquaint you with the verie meanes? And ſpeaking to Sabbathon, whoſe name Belzebub had formerly diſcouered, he ſaid: Lucifer could not reſiſt, and doeſt thou that art but as a petty Cooke in Hell, make ſhew of an abilitie of reſiſtance? Obedi maledicte. But thou ſheweſt, that a Peſant is more fierce and rugged in his diſpoſition, then a Gentleman.

Whilſt the Prieſt was Exorciſing and ſaying theſe words, Sacro-ſancti baptiſmatis vnda regeneratus; there are many (ſaid Verrine) that are baptiſed, but few that are ſaued: there are thoſe that would goe to Heauen in a feather-bed, but ſhall be cenſured with the iudgement of fire. Then he began to cry, that he was to ſpeake (but it was vpon compulſion) of the [l] workes of mercie. Virginitie is not ſufficient of it ſelfe to leade vs to Heauen, as the fooliſh virgins conceited: other things are alſo requiſite, ſuch as are the workes of mercie. For God hath ſaid that he will not take an account whether men haue read much or ſaid ouer their Beads often, but they muſt

[h] There is an order among Diuels.

[i] Very ſhame did force from her, teares, after the diſcouerie being a Gentlewoman of quality, and of her ſelfe very harmeleſſe.

[k] He was very cholericke, becauſe the Exorciſt was not very expert to conſtraine the Diuels, & was grieued that hee ſhould be made the inſtrument hereof.

[l] Concerning workes of mercie.

muſt do good works, becauſe whē the day of Iudgemēt ſhall come, God will not reckon with our ſoules what knowledge they haue, but what works they haue done. For he will ſay (ſpeaking vnto the reprobate) whē I was an hungry, you gaue me not to eate; when I was thirſtie, you gaue me not to drink: when I was ſicke, you viſited me not, when I was in priſon, you redeemed mee not: when I was naked, you clothed me not: when I was a ſtranger, you receiued me not: when I died, you buried me not. By the like reaſon will he alſo ſay, when I wandred & went aſtray, you reprehended me not for my ſin: when in my members I liued ignorantly, you taught me not: when I was in doubt & miſaduiſed, you counſelled me not: when I was in affliction, you comforted mee not: when I would ſuffer in you, you haue not borne patiently the iniuries that were offered vnto you: when any one offended mee in you, you haue not pardoned theſe offences: when I was perſecuted in you, either in the paines of Purgatory, or in this world you tooke no pitie vpon thoſe that perſecuted me, either for the good of your neighbours, or for the good of thoſe that were dead. Hereupon it is that God ſaith, Whatſoeuer you ſhall doe vnto the leaſt of mine (ſpeaking of the poore) I ſhall take it as done vnto my ſelfe. And alleaging that place of the Goſpel when your Lord reproueth Iudas of his auarice in blaming of Magdalene, he ſaid, The poore you haue alwayes with you, but mee you ſhall not haue alwayes. And he bare record that Magdalen had done a good worke, ſaying vnto her, that ſhe ſhould be had in memory throughout the world, whereſoeuer this Goſpel ſhold be preached. I further ſay, that he ſhal ſet apart thoſe that are damned, & ſhal ſay vnto thē, Ite maledicti in ignē æternū, which is prepared for you and for the deuils. Then ſhal he turne to the right ſide & ſhal ſay vnto the good, Come ye bleſſed: when I was hungry, &c, I ſay the fooliſh Virgins repoſed too much confidence in themſelues, imagining as many doe in theſe dayes, that Baptisme, Faith and Virginitie were sufficientlie powerfull to bring them to heauen. No, it is not so: for your Lord did obiect, that they had no oyle in their lampes; vnderstanding thereby good works. And when they came to be admitted vnto the Supper (whereby is signified the day of Iudgment) and to be presented before their spouse, he said vnto them, Nescio vos. I am a bed, you cannot come in. That is to say, obstinate sinners you come too late, you will repent you of your lazinesse. Then shall he turne to the elect, and say, Come ye blessed of God my Father, possesse the kingdome of heauen which is prouided for you and my Angels. It is meete that the emptie seats of the euill Angels should be filled vp with men: who though they are nothing but lumpes of clay, yet shall they be installed into their places.

Then I said, that the Angels were very beautifull, and demãded the reason why such goodly creatures should for one sinne be throwne downe from heauen. It was answered mee, because they had more knowledge then men to vnderstand what was good, and auoyde what was euill: but ignorant and fraile sinners, although they commit thousands of offences, shal yet be receiued into mercy whensoeuer they will returne.

Then hee began to cry againe as loud as hee could, saying, I know not what to doe: I am constrained to tell thee Magdalene, that thou art a witch. It is true Magdalene, thou hast beene deceiued: God will that I reueale it. It is true Magdalene, thou wast deceiued by a Priest who was thy Confesser. It is not to be wondred if there be a lost sheepe when the sheepeheard is starke naught. This is true Magdalene, hee is of Marseille, and is called [m] Lewis: he is of the Church of Aconles; Francis knoweth him, but Lonyse that heere speaketh neuer saw him.

[m] The first discouery of the Magician.

True it is Magdalene, that [n] Lonyse would haue resisted this, and was not willing at the beginning that this should

[n] Lonyse held her tong when Verrine would haue opened and named the Magician.

should be publiſhed. Thou haſt giuen and bequeathed thy ſelfe vnto the Diuell o Magdalene, and haſt renounced thy God and his Mother: thy baptiſme, and all heauen: thou haſt giuen a ſchedull to the Diuel Magdalene, which Louyſe neuer ſaw. It is a truth Magdalene, that when thou wert firſt ſeduced, thou wert in thy Fathers houſe: and as true is it, that thou haſt giuen leaue and licence vnto the Diuell to enter into thy body. Take heede p Magdalene, take heede, take heede, leaſt thou incurre ſome dreadfull iudgement, thou being now confeſſed as thou art: if it were not ſo, I had no reaſon to ſpeake it. Thy Confeſſours are wiſe, and haue not reuealed thy ſinnes vnto me. This is moſt true Magdalene: Louyſe knoweth nothing of it: beware therefore, beware, beware, how thou doeſt coniecture that this ſhould come either from thy Confeſſours, or from Louyſe.

This is true Magdalene, this is true, neuer ſtriue and ſtruggle for the matter: it is for the glory of God, and thou ſhalt receiue benefit by it.

It is true Magdalene that hee ſtands not in neede of thee, for he ſhould not be God if he had neede of thee, or of any other creature. All ſhall redound vnto thy profit; doe not vexe at it. God is ſo gracious that his end is not to publiſh any mens diſgrace to the world, but to conuert them. Then hee ſaid to thoſe that were preſent; if you doe not make inquirie after him, you ſhall all ſtand charged with him (thereby meaning Lewis.) He further ſaid with a high voice: you Prieſts, be not you troubled at any thing: euill Prieſts cannot preiudice thoſe that are good, neither are the good to be deſpiſed or diſeſteemed becauſe there are ſome that are euill. If Lewis will not be conuerted, hee well deſerueth to be burned aliue.

It is true Magdalene, hee firſt ſeduced thee to renounce thy God, thy Baptiſme, and thy part in Paradiſe. Thou haſt choſen Hell for thy Manſion place, yet o This was done after the manner of all other Magicians, but God diſpoſed it by his ſpeciall grace for her ſaluation.

p Magdalen was much vexed at this diſcouery, fore-ſeeing that ſhe ſhould alſo bee publiquely deteſted.

yet ſhalt thou not goe thither, becauſe God will aſſiſt thee.

It is true Magdalene, the Magician hath thoſe ſchedules: trouble not thy ſelfe, he ſhall be forced to reſtore them.

It is true Magdalene, the [r] Prieſts haue watched with thee, and happie was it for thee that they did ſo: if they had not, the Diuels would haue carried thee away.

[r] All night long two Prieſts of the Doctrine, and two Matrones did watch with Magdalene, and found that for the greater part of the night ſhe could not ſtirre nor cry: the diuels holding her bound in all her body the better to tempt her, or cauſe her to deſpaire, if by relapſe ſhe did not fall backe vnto them.

It is true Magdalene, thou art a Witch, and haſt performed whatſoeuer belongeth thereunto in great ſolemnitie: Thou haſt renounced God at three ſeuerall Maſſes, one at mid-night, another at the dawning of the day, and the third was at high Maſſe.

It is true Magdalene, God hath pardoned thee: reſiſt curſed Belzebub: the Diuels haue no more force then is allotted vnto them.

It is true Magdalene, thou haſt alwaies withſtoode thy God, his inſpirations, and all other admonitions as well of the Angels of heauen, as of the men of this world, ſo that they could preuaile nothing in thy behalfe: yet is thy God ſo gracious Magdalene, that hee hath harkened vnto many ſoules that haue beene acceptable vnto him, when they made interceſſion for thee.

It is true Magdalene, many haue ſaid Maſſes: many haue done pennance, and giuen almes: many haue wrought good workes for thy ſake, and all this hath beene done by thy Fathers and Mothers as well corporall as ſpirituall.

[ſ] The goodnes of God towards Magdalene.

[ſ] Magdalene, if the Starres of heauen were capable to thanke God for thee, or the leaues of trees, or the very ſtones of this Baume, they would willingly do it: for thy ſinnes in number doe ſurmount the ſand of the Sea.

O Magdalene, the goodneſſe of God doth not ſhine ſo bright in Peter, Paul, Dauid, William the hermite, mite, in Theophilus, or in Cyprianus as it shineth in thee. It appeareth not so bright in Magdalene the sister of Martha, nor in Pelagia, nor in Thais, nor in Marie of Ægypt, nor in the woman of Samaria as it shineth in thee. Yet Magdalene art thou a greater sinner then they, Then Verrine cried to all the Assembly, that they should haue compassion of her soule, and that if God did not protect them with his grace, they would bee farre worse then she.

Then he said, humble thy selfe Magdalene, and acknowledge that thou art lesse then nothing. It were no wonder to see a little Innocent goe to heauen, but (O great wonder) to see a soule that hath renounced her Maker, Baptisme, and Heauen, to returne to God, Hell it selfe is confounded thereat. Lucifer, now doe all thou canst, call together all the Princes which are in the body of Magdalene: for this is done against thee. Then he began to talke in this manner. What [t] a wonder would it be to see a King take a Pismire, and exalt it vnto honour. Men would be amazed to see him thus honour a Pismire; and this amazement would be encreased if he should take it, and set it in his Chamber to honour it the more. His Princes would mocke at him, and say, there were Ladies enough for him to honour without exalting a Pismire: or if hee should take a Country wench to wife, they will say that Kings ought to wed with equals, and those of their owne ranke.

Yet for all this the Pismire should not haue eares to vnderstand when it was honoured, nor words to vaunt and boast it selfe, nor a proud body to swell at it: and continuing still a Pismire, it would neuer come to be a Lyon, a Leopard, or an Horse, but would alwaies remaine a Pismire. So Louyse because thou art a Pismire, thou shouldest the more admire the puissance, wisedome, bounty, and humilitie of thy King that hath made election of thee; and would haue thee to be prouident as is the Pismire, fore-casting in the Summer how how to liue in Winter. So must thou (Pismire) doe; thou must amasse and treasure vp much good workes in the Summer of this world against the Winter, which is the houre of thy death.

[t] An exclamation of Verrine against the honour that God gaue to Louyse. [u] The diuell is proud, and is vexed, that God should cull forth a simple woman to bee the instrument of such an important action; & disdaining her, was desirous it might haue bin some Queene or Princesse, by which more admiration & honour might be gotten.

From this Pismire will God glorifie himselfe, and make vse of her, although she be but a Pismire; for hee is able to make a Pismire speake, if he please. This will he doe, to gaine soules vnto himselfe; and she shall doe well to conceiue that all proceedeth from God, and that she her selfe is but as a leafe of a tree, nay lesse, nay that she is nothing thereby, to declare that all this commeth from God.

Then turning againe to Magdalene, he said: Magdalene thy soule is like a common-wealth; thou must put to death the x Princes that are within, that a peace may bee there established. It is true Magdalene, disarme them all, their weapons are thy consents; cut off their heads, and thy common-wealth will be free from danger. Doest thou not know, that God doth alwaies worke order out of disorder?

Courage Magdalene, humble thy selfe, and subiect thy selfe vnder the feete of euery one.

Then speaking to Belzebub, Verrine said, humble thy selfe cursed Belzebub; and Verrine was the first that made him to humble himselfe; who setting his foot vpon his head, said, Accursed, miserable, and proud Spirit, Thou wouldest on Sunday last haue plucked God from his Throne if thou haddest been able, and wouldest not worship him, yet now thou art debased vnder my feete. Then he cried to the Assembly, Come heere, and helpe to humble this cursed Belzebub; let euery one of you set his foote on his head, and in contempt of him say three times, Ite maledicti in ignem æternum. Then he commanded on Gods behalfe, that euery one should deiect Magdalene, and humble her, by putting their feete on her head: and said, Take courage vnto thee Magdalene, this is behoofefull for thee, for the remission x The Princes, that is to say, the vices and sinnes that doe raigne & beare sway: according to that of Saint Paul. Let not sin raigne in you. Rom.6.

mission of thy sins, and the confusion of Lucifer, Belzebub, and all hell. O great confusion! that the Diuels should be at ods, and combat against diuels, and take part with God; it was neuer before heard of. Hold thy selfe Magdalene to bee the most vile and detested creature that is vpon the earth, and thou shalt proue another Magdalene, and shalt die a penitent. O Magdalene, thou shalt be a [y] helper vnto S. Vrsula, and shalt be much honoured. A great sinner shall find great mercy, witnesse the Prophet Dauid, and a lesse sinner lesse mercy. O great, great, great mercy! let euery one pray for it.

[y] A Helper, that is, an assistant and seruant to the religious women of S. Vrsula.

Then the Priest tooke the blessed Sacrament at Verrines owne instance, to make him sweare, who said, Magdalene, I say this in thy behalfe, Adoramus te Christum, & miserere ei, miserere ei. And as those that were there presēt were saying miserere mei Deus, vpō a suddē he began to howle and cry like a galli-slaue, and as if he were framed out of rage and despaire, saying, Miserere tui, [z] miserere tui, miserere tui, Magdalene; to shew how God doth reioyce at the conuertion of this soule. O Magdalene, the Angels of heauen would triumph at it, and Lucifer with the whole kingdome of hell would grow sad and dumpish vpon the same. It is true Magdalene, thou art in a desert very happie for thee. Cursed be S. Baume, O how fortunate is it vnto thee, O how disasterous vnto hell. This is the sheepe, which the Prophet saw deuoured by the wolfe, whereof nothing but the peeces of the eares was remnant; which signifieth the soule of an obstinate sinner; for men in an agonie lose their hearing last. That you may therefore be conuerted, you must haue the eares of your hearts open, thereby to receiue in the inspirations of God.

[z] It is not to be forgotten that when men did attend and watch, to see whether these words Miserere mei would scape at any time from any, yet they neuer did.

O Magdalene! worship the right hand of thy God, worship also his left hand; worship his side Magdalen, where all thy sins lie buried; worship his head that was couered with thornes for thy sake, Magdalene; and beg beg from him one thorne of true compunction. It is true Magdalene, thou hast offended him in thy fiue senses, and Magdalene, his fiue wounds haue made reparation of the same. A braue miracle Magdalene, that the diuels should say, Miserere tui, and should beg mercy for thee.

[a] And then Uerrine sware, according to the meaning of God and his Church, vpon the blessed sacrament (confessing in the said sacrament the reall presence with his humanitie, diuinity and all his glory) that Louyse knew nothing of this, neither vnderstood shee that Magdalene was a witch, or of the schedule: All which (said he) is true, and hee that would denie this, must denie the power of God, the authoritie of his Church, and the vertue and efficacy of Exorcismes: God hauing told Peter, that the gates of hell should not preuaile against his Church. Tu es Petrus & super hanc Petram. They should further denie all bookes of Exorcismes, if they denie that the diuell cannot speake truth, when God forceth him thereunto.

And turning againe vnto Magdalene hee said vnto her: Thy [b] father gaue thee not vnto the diuell Magdalene. It is true Magdalene, thou diddest indeed abide in thy fathers house at that time, Magdalene, and yet tookest not thy bane with S. Vrsula.

It is no wonder that a yong girle should bee led astray as a sheep when her shepheard is the meanes hereof: but this was no shepheard of the Gospell, but of the number of those that fly away when they see the wolfe; nay worse, he is the wolfe himselfe, and hell is well stuffed with such as hee. It is true Magdalene thou wert and art possessed, and it was expedient that the Priests should watch with thee; for otherwise the diuels had carried thee away, such power had they ouer thee both here and abroad, and whereseoeuer thou wentest. Then he discoursed of Lewes, and said: O Lewes, if thou be not conuerted thou shalt bee burned aliue: but if thou bee

[a] Verrine his oth.

[b] Magdalene had said that her father gaue her vnto the Diuell, and that in the power therof she was possessed, but being conuerted, she declared that Belzebub did cause her to equiuocate meaning within her selfe her spirituall father. Which declaration did much comfort her father, who was very sory if it should so fall out, that through his fault she should be possessed.

be, then shalt thou proue a Theophilus, and a Cyprian. Mary will endeauour to conuert thee; therefore beware Lewes how thou resist her. I am the executioner of that high iustice, and am constrained by force vnto obedience. If I were capable of heauen you would peraduenture pray vnto God for me, but your prayers will not be auaileable vnto me; I am debar'd from Paradice, the sentence is gone forth against me. The sentence of the highest is not as an earthly sentẽce, obnoxious vnto change, and repealeable for money. Ite maledicti, venite benedicti, shall stand for euermore. Iurauit dominus & non pœnitebit, he shall neuer repent himselfe thereof. If the Kings of the earth make good the performance of what they haue promised, who are in comparison but as gnats; much more will the King of glory, and God of Israel auow his denuntiations.

Then hee said, O great miracle, full of rarenesse and nouelty destinated to Gods glory, and to the conuersion of sinners; there is nothing in it preiudiciall to God or his Church: it is for the reputation and honour of the fathers of your doctrine, the Diuels hauing conspired to root them and the companie of S. Vrsula out of the Church; but it is a greater wonder that a diuell should adore God and should confesse and say vnto the blessed sacrament, behold my God and my Iudge, then if all the Christians in the world should without intermission call vpon all the names of God, and should returne backe to goe them ouer againe till the day of iudgement.

It Is no wonder if those doe well that haue a power thereunto, that is, if they doe often call vpon and worship their God: but this is an exceeding great wonder that those [e] who of themselues haue no capacity vnto goodnesse, should yet doe the thing that is good, when it is commanded them from God. This the Diuels doe without any expectance or hope of compensation.

And whiles that Pange lingua was said, to the honour

[c] An exclamation against Lewes, and that he should be burnt.

[d] The assembly was much agrieued that Verrine was damned, considering the excellent remonstrances which he made.

[e] He meaneth this of themselues, hauing reference vnto the constraint whereby God enforceth them to say or doe somthing for the good and saluation of reasonable soules.

nour of the blessed Sacrament, which the Priest held, vpon the rehearsall of this verse, Sola fides sufficit, Verrine cryed, O this is most true, sola fides sufficit, faith alone is sufficient. How can it bee that so [f] great a God should be contained in such a little Host? and he cryed out, saying; yet is it true, hee is present here; worship you him, for hee is here really and truly; cursed bee the curious. Curiositie will let them drop into a pit, from whence they shall not bee able to issue forth at their pleasure. We our selues are constrained to worship him and to beleeue his presence there: we suggest many forgeries and falshoods vnto the curious, so that they are more pregnant to beleeue vs, then to listen vnto God.

[f] Damnable curiosity touching the blessed Sacrament.

[g] After all this he said, that the Diuels were theeues; and added: Wee vse to enter in at the gate that is, the will, but when that gate is shut, we enter in at the windowes, (as we practise in the houses of Magitians and Witches where wee come in at the windowes, that is, the fiue senses. For our manner is to make our approches and assaults on that side, where we finde them most vnable for resistance. This might suffice to conuert many soules, yea euen the Diuels themselnes if they had a possibility to be conuerted. S. Iohn saith, Possumus bibere, we cannot say this, we cannot be reclaimed: For, In inferno nulla est redemptio.

[g] Diuelsa re theeues.

The Acts of the 16. of December. 1610.

ON this day in the morning, there chanced to arriue thither a religious person of the order of S. Francis de Paul, a minime Fryer; who kneeling on his knees neere the steps, by which you goe to the holy Penitence, there befell this dispute that followeth. When Belzebub began to cruciate and shake the bodie of Magdalene, Verrine, one of the Diuels that was in the body of Louyse de Capeau, began to say: Feare not Magdalene, thou art very happy to be thus tortured in this

this world, for they ſhall not haue power vpon thee in the world to come: So it is Magdalene, that God deſireth to make triall in this world of thoſe whom he loueth. Beleeue Magdalene, this is a certaine truth, and I am conſtrained to vtter the ſame, although my deſire was to palliate and keepe it cloſe. I know not what to doe, I am not able to withſtand it. Then[h] the ſaid religious perſon ſaid vnto Verrine: Peace thou accurſed ſpirit, thou art the father of lies and falſhood. To which Verrine replyed: It is true, I am the father of lies, but being compelled thereunto by the vnreſiſtable working of the Almighty, I muſt of neceſſity deliuer the truth. The Frier anſwered: Peaſe thou damned ſpirit, thou canſt not ſpeake a truth, thou art the father of lies, and therefore art not capable to ſpeake any thing truely. S. Thomas ſaith, that truth is no vertue in him that onely ſpeaketh it, but when the perſon that vttereth the ſame, is thereby made vpright and ſincere, then, and not before it is a vertue. 2ᵉ. 2. qᵉ. 109. art. 1. He further ſaith, that[i] this vertue is no theologicall or intellectuall vertue, but a morall; and therefore may be pronounced either by one that ſpeaketh truth, or by a lyar. Doctor Maldonat vpon the[k] 8. Chapter of S. Iohn doth with great ſubtility obſerue, that the diuell may ſpeake a truth, For he ſpake the truth in confeſſing Chriſt Ieſus to be the Sonne of God: and albeit it may be obiected that he doth this to an euill purpoſe, yet was it not ſo in this particular: for although it is to be coniectured that he ſpake by conſtraint, yet doth not this hinder but that he might ſpeake the truth. Hee ſpake the truth in the third of Kings, 22. Chapter, when he ſaid that hee would be a lying Spirit: as alſo when he alleaged Scripture to Ieſus in the deſert, although it was leuelled to a wicked purpoſe. Notwithſtanding wee ought to beware how we beleeue what hee ſaith, if it be not cleere, that it is by coaction and in the vertue of the name of God by Exorciſmes, and that he ſpeaketh conformable vnto

[h] The diſputation betweene Verrine and a Frier.

[i] This is an annotation found there in the margent.

[k] That the Diuell may ſpeake truth.

vnto the Scriptures and the doctrine of the Church; and in this caſe wee are not to beleeue him, but the Scripture. Then ſaid Verrine, I will proue vnto thee that what I haue ſpoken is true, & that the Diuell is able to ſpeake truth. He replyed thou canſt not, for thou haſt no ability to doe good, thou art an accurſed and wicked Spirit. Verrine anſwered: It is true, I am an accurſed, wicked, and damned ſpirit, and am not able of my ſelfe to ſpeake any thing but falſhood, and to act nothing but miſchiefe. It is true, that of mine owne free will I cannot doe the thing that is good, but when I am conſtrained by Almighty God, there is a neceſſity laid vpon me to deliuer the truth. Then the Frier hearing that Maſſe was begun, held his peace. And Verrine ſaid, I will take Gods part, and ſince I am forced vnto obedience, I will ſerue him with more obedience then you. Then he cried out as loud as he could: who dares deny that Diuels may ſpeake truth? I ſay they may as wel denie that God is omnipotent, and that there is no authority in the Church, and that all the bookes of Exorciſmes are idle and of none effect. They muſt alſo denie and diſapproue of all the oathes which Exorciſts doe cauſe the Diuels to take: for why do they demand it of them, and make them ſweare to deliuer the truth, if they are diſabled to ſpeak the truth? Or why do they loſe ſo much time which they employ about thoſe ỹ are poſſeſſed, if they can draw nothing but falſhood from them.

True it is (ſaid Verrine) when the Exorciſts are not circumſpect and well aduiſed, it is likely the Diuels make their aduantages thereof, and ſo ſomtimes ſweare falſly againſt God and his Church: but this is no fault of ours, it is the Exorciſts fault, becauſe they haue not had that circumſpection as to cauſe them to ſweare, as I haue done, according to the intention of God and his Church, and alſo according to the meaning of the Exorciſt: in which caſe wee cannot lye, but are conſtrained to ſpeake the truth.

[b] It is to be vnderſtood, if God were not able to conſtraine and put his curbs vpon Diuels. See the aduertiſement to the Reader, in the laſt leafe.

If

If this were not so, I should then say that the Diuell had more power then God. But it is cleere, the Diuell must acknowledge a subordination vnto God, not out of loue, but by compulsion, by which they are tied vnto obedience.

Then the Frier said vnto the Priests and other religious persons that were there: make this Diuell hold his peace, and himselfe said, peace thou cursed spirit, peace.

But the Diuell euer shewed himselfe more and more couragious to speake on Gods behalfe, and said resolutly, that he would not obey him, for he had a Superior mightier thē he (meaning the Frier) yea more powerfull then the Exorcist that did command him. At this the Frier grew angry and said: peace thou wicked spirit, peace: get thee into Hell thou damned fiend; and spake to the assemblie: My Masters, you should make him hold his peace: this is a cursed spirit, and speakes nothing but lyes, and saith that God is his Redeemer.

To this Verrine answered, that hee lyed: for hee had said that God was his Creator and Iudge, but not his Redeemer. To which the Frier answered, that hee vnderstood him so:

Then Verrine told him, that hee had no good eares, and vnderstood him amisse. Hereupon the Frier said: I do assure you, you ought to make him hold his peace: & he himselfe began to threaten him saying: peace thou blasphemous beast, peace: cōmest thou here to preach lies? Thou saiest that thou art sent from God to preach the Gospell: wee haue Preachers enow without thee. To this Verrine replied, thou lyest, and doest misvnderstand me, I said not so: thou knowest not the bottome of this businesse, and that maketh thee to speake so foolishly as thou doest. It is most true, I neuer so much as said that I was sent from God to preach the Gospell: I should lye to say it. I said that I was here in the bodie of this vnhappie woman, who hath begged from from God that shee might bee humbled euen to the paines of Hell, for the saluation of her neighbours. I said, that God had permitted me to enter into this body for his glorie, and the conuersion of many soules, and in particular of these two, which thou curious fellow knowest not.

1 The Hierarchicall order of the Church doth not appertaine or agree, no not to good Angels.

Thou art a proud arrogant fellow, and worse then a Diuell, except thou humble thy selfe, and I will proue it vnto thee that thou beleeuest not thy God to be omnipotent. Thou art worse then an Heretick, except thou repent and beleeue what I haue spoken.

Get thee gon, get thee gon accursed spirit (said the Frier) I will not beleeue the Diuell. Then said Verrine, I doe adiure thee by the liuing God to come with me, and sweare that all which I haue said is true. For thou deseruest to bee burnt aliue, if thou doest not beleeue thy God to be omnipotent. Why saiest thou thy Credo, if thou beleeuest not what I haue spoken? It is not to bee auoided: thou must either denie the puissance of God, or confesse that this is true. To this the Frier replied, that there was a [m] woman in Paris much resembling the condition of this woman, in whom was discouered a great deale of knauerie and iugling, and that she did deceiue much people. Verrine told him that it was true: shee did indeede couzen many: but Louyse was trulie possessed. Let her life be looked into, and let her be turned ouer to the Examinations of the sharpest vnderstandings. Shee would bee readie euen to suffer Martyrdome to maintaine this auerment, if need did so require, because it would redowne vnto the glorie of her God. Then Verrine ingeminated that speech to goe and sweare with him, and that Louyse could not communicate till they were both sworne.

[m] There are many women possessed in Paris.

The Frier made great resistance hereunto, and would by no meanes obey it, saying, that hee would not bee commanded by a Diuell.

[n] We are not to obey Diuels.

Hereunto Verrine answered: it [n] standeth not with reason reaſon to obey the Diuell: I command thee not from my ſelfe, but ſay vnto thee on Gods behalfe, that thou come along and ſweare with mee: it waxeth late, and Louyſe is to communicate. Then the Frier ſaid vnto the Prieſt which held the bleſſed Sacrament: Father, doe you commaund me, for I will not obey the Diuell. Whereupon the Prieſt commanding him, he came and ſwore vpon the Te igitur, and then vpon the bleſſed Sacrament. Verrine alſo taking ſuch an oath, the like whereof hee had neuer taken before, ſaid thus: I doe ſweare by the liuing God, that whatſoeuer I haue ſaid, I haue been conſtrained to vtter the ſame vnto you. It is true O God, who art here really and truely with thy bodie and blood, with thy diuinitie, power, wiſdome, and bountie. The ſaid Frier was preſent, when hee ſwore thus, to whom he ſaid. I doe ſweare by the God of Iſrael, and by the God of the Chriſtians, that all which I haue ſpoken is true. I ſweare vnto thee according to the meaning of God and his Church, and according to the Exorciſts intention alſo, that when wee are inforced thereunto by God, we muſt put his good pleaſure in execution, keeping all the ſolemnities that are requiſite in taking a true and perfect oath.

Then the Frier ſubmitted himſelfe, and ſaid that hee had ſpoken nothing againſt God or his Church, and beleeued that God was Omnipotent, and was able to force the Deuill to deliuer a truth when it pleaſed him. And ſo ſubmitting himſelfe, he reſted ſatisfied.

The Deuill thereupon told him, Thou art exceeding proud, learne to humble thy ſelfe, and bee not ſo ouercurious: for the curious fall into a pit, from whence they cannot free themſelues when they will: alleaging Caluin, Beza, Luther, Iulian the Apoſtata, Simon Magus; and ſaying, doe not thou boaſt thy ſtrength aboue theirs, for there haue been Prieſts and religious perſons that afterwards became heretikes, as Caluin, Beza, Luther.

Verrine

Verrine further ſaid vnto him: And of what religion art thou? Doth thy Order command thee to bee proud? I will proue vnto thee, that thou art arrogant and ſelfe-opinioned, and wouldeſt circle in the omnipotencie of God within thy narrow vnderſtanding. Humble thy ſelfe, for it ill beſeemeth one of thy coate to bee thus drenched in curioſitie. The ° ſupremeſt Seraphins doe euery day make new diſcoueries of great perfections in God, the ſame doth his Mother, and all the Angels. Salomon, when hee dedicated his Temple, ſaid, Hee that created heauen and earth, whom the heauen of heauens cannot containe: and wilt not thou that art but a worme which crauleth on the earth, ſubmit thy ſelfe, but wouldeſt hoope in the omnipotencie, bountie, and wiſedome of thy God within the cancels of thine owne memorie and braine. Vpon this the Frier reſted ſatisfied, and ſubmitted himſelfe with many words of humiliation.

Verrine alſo diſcourſed touching the reaſon of theſe preſent writings, in forme of a letter miſſiue: the tenour whereof here enſueth.

The men of theſe times are ſo curious, that God muſt bee as a Gardener vnto them, (witneſſe Magdalen, to whom he appeared in the ſemblance of a Gardener) and fit diuers ſorts of ſallets vnto their palats, leſt they ſhould be diſreliſhed; wherein he reſembleth a good father, who doth ſo affectionately loue his child, that he is euer asking him, What wilt thou eate childe? And if the childe chance to ſay, I haue no appetite, I ſee nothing I can eate, the father will cauſe daintie and exquiſite meate to bee ſet before him, the beſt that may bee gotten: If then the childe ſhould ſay; nothing heere pleaſeth me; the fault is not in the victuals, but in him that is ſicke, and hath his taſte ill-affected. What doth the father then? doth he fall a beating of him? doth he threaten and chide him? no; but goeth about and ſearcheth after other ſtrange victuals, which may chance to pleaſe them for their noueltie, as being ſuch which hee had had neuer ſeene, taſted, or heard talke of. Euen ſo doth your God by you, for he is an hundred times more careſull then all the naturall fathers that are. This father both of your ſoules and bodies, when he obſerueth that the ſoule hath no appetite vnto ſuch varietie of good meates, which as a father hee hath ſolicitouſly prouided; ſuch as is the holy Scripture (it is true, euery one doth not vnderſtand this) which is a meat too luſhious, too delicious, too precious; and all cannot relliſh and like the ſame, eſpecially women and fooles; it is too hot for them, and there are hundreds that burne their p fingers, for being too nimble and preſumptuous, and becauſe they would make their priuate interpretations vpon the ſame, which they vſe to ſquare by their owne iudgements: and further, hee prouideth for them other good wholeſome foode, to wit, the liues of Saints, and many miracles; yet for all this they are euer ſquemiſh, and cannot downe with theſe courſe cates. Where lieth the fault? it is becauſe their palate is by ſome infirmitie and indiſpoſition diſſeaſoned, for the meate remaineth good, though the taſte bee naughtely affected. What doth this father then? he doth loue his children ſo tenderly, that hee enquireth after freſh and vnaccuſtomed delicacies by new and vnuſuall miracles.

° All Angels haue their eſſentiall beatitude, which neuer augméteth: yet their accidentall bliſſe doth ſomtimes increaſe; as when God reuealeth ſomewhat of his bleſſed pleaſures vnto thé: by which they doe in a larger meaſure know the bountie, ſapience, or omnipotencie of God, and doe admire ỹ ſame, and doe worſhip him anew, and are deſirous to receiue from him freſh reuelations, Non in verbo, (as Diuines ſay) ſed in proprio genere. And in this ſenſe doth S. Denis ſay, That Angels propoſe demaunds and queſtions to Chriſt Ieſus himſelfe, Ipſi Ieſu quæſtiones faciunt.

Like vnto the Spouſe who loueth his wife ſo dearely, that he is euer preſenting her with ſome new token of his affection.

O Church reioyce now at thy husband; Thou art that chaſt wife, whom if any will follow, hee muſt not walke in darkneſſe, for the holie Ghoſt doth guide thee by his light and illumination. I am not a whit abaſhed, that the Caluiniſts make refuſall of thee, for they are exiled from the boſome of the Church, and haue no light to vnderſtand the truth: but I wonder moſt, that the children of this Church doe not make vſe of the light of the Goſpell. Here now is nothing ſpoken either againſt God or his Church.

p The Diuell here ſpeaketh after his manner, for when the bleſſed Sacrament was to be giuen to the two that were poſſeſſed, he reſiſted a long time, ſaying it was too hot, becauſe the preſence of Chriſt Ieſus, and the new grace which they receiued in the vertue of the ſame, did augment the paine of the wicked ſpirit, which is by fire. (as S. Peter ſaith) The diuels are chained vp in eternall fire.

The ſame day in the euening the ſiſter Louyſe and the ſiſter Magdalene were exorciſed by Father Francis Billet. Then Verrine turning himſelfe toward Magdalene, ſaid: Beware Magdalene, Belzebub would caſt thee downe headlong into deſpaire: It is a good ſigne, Magdalene. He ſaith that thou ſhalt not be able to reſiſt him; but Magdalene hee lieth in ſaying ſo, for thou haſt more brothers in heauen, then thou haſt aduerſaries in hell. Take courage Magdalene, one of thy brothers is able to doe more, then all hell ſet together.

And ſpeaking to Belzebub, he ſaid: Ha wretched fiend, thou doeſt tempt Magdalene, and tell her that ſhe ſhall be damned: I ſay no, Magdalene, thou ſhalt be ſaued: and I tell thee againe from the liuing God, Magdalene thou ſhalt be ſaued.

He ſaid againe to Lucifer; In Hell I acknowledge thee for my ſuperiour, but in this body God hath made me thy Maſter.

It is not to bee wondred at, if many men ſhall with difficultie bee induced to beleeue a matter altogether vnuſuall.

A great ſinner ought to vſe great repentance: thou ſhalt repent Magdalene, and God ſhall giue thee life: put thy confidence in him, for he ſhall more helpe thee, then all Hell can hurt thee. God hath promiſed to heare the prayers of the iuſt: a thouſand (Magdalene) haue begged for thee mercie and grace, and at the laſt haue found it: for thee Magdalene haue they knocked at the doore of mercie, and at length it hath been opened vnto them.

Thy good workes (Magdalene) ſhall not be able to ſaue thee, but the blood of thy Redeemer. It will bee ¶ proued that there haue been more then a thouſand Maſſes ſaid for thee; and doeſt thou think that ſo many ſacrifices haue been all barren and vneffectuall? ſhall not the eternall Father haue regard vnto his Son, equall vnto him in power, wiſedome, and bountie? Take a good good courage Magdalene, I doe assure thee that hee is Omnipotent and euer-bounteous: that he hath pardoned thy offences, and being that all-knowing vnderstanding, he hath taken notice of thy miseries: for in the glasse of his owne essence he seeth all things, and there is a perfect representation in him of all euents whatsoeuer, as if they were now present. It is true, [r] thou blessed Mother of God, thou hast presented thy breasts for her, more then ten thousand times. And thou Magdalene hast made tender of thy repentance; and thou Peter prince of Apostles, hast shed many teares for the conuersion of this Magdalene. Ioannes Baptista hath also interceded for thee, and did present his innocencie in thy behalfe. And thou Dominicke hast been very fauourable vnto her: and thou Bernardus and Antonius haue prayed for her.

¶ The truth is, that many Prieſts and religious perſons did euery day ſay Maſſe for her conuerſiõ, as the Angels themſelues in ceſſabili voce proclamant, and the other ſaints neuer ceaſe, Reuel. 4. Non habent requiem nocte ac die.

[r] The wicked Spirits might haue knowledge hereof by reuelation.

Take a good heart Magdalene, keep thy owne Magdalene, and thou shalt become another Magdalene, or another Thais. God is wearied in expectation of thee: giue him to drinke Magdalene: but O Lord how canst thou bee thirstie, since thou hast no neede of thy creatures? But as Christ demanded drinke of the Samaritane woman, and then also when hee was nailed to the Crosse: so Magdalene, thou shalt doe well to let him drinke of thy teares, and for a little of this liquour hee shall bestow vpon thee the wine of his loue, and shall take from thee all thirstinesse and alteration whatsoeuer. [s] Who will beleeue that the Diuell should thus endeuour to conuert Magdalene and the Magician?

[s] Obserue well how God honoureth priesthood in this world, when he vseth such extraordinarie and vnheard of remedies for the conuersion of a Priest that wandred out of his way.

Magdalene, I doe assure thee from God, that he who hath deliuered the children of Israel from the red Sea, will, if thou humble thy selfe, euen to the pit of hell, although thou haddest committed an hundred million of sins more then thou hast done, receiue thee into grace, saying: In quacunq; hora. For Magdalene, hee cannot be lesse then his word. This and many other discourses of of a semblable nature did hee confirme and strengthen with his accustomed oath.

Quod licet dicere, licet scribere: Whatsoeuer is lawfull to be said, is lawfull to be written. But as the wicked Spirits doe not speake vnto men but by the tongues of men, so neither can they write to men, but by the ministerie and seruice of men: God not permitting vnto them a free vse either of the one or the other. Vpon the same day did Verrine dictate many letters, saying to Father Francis Billet, Write me certaine letters after this tenure, and first of all one to the Priest [t] Lewis.

[t] Here he beginneth to perswade and labour particularly the cõuersion of the Magician, hauing called him publikely by his name and sur-name, in a full assemblie of people, after he had alreadie wonne home Magdalene.

Lewis, for the saluation of thy soule, for the glorie of God, and edification of thy neighbour, come to S. Baume, and obey the Sonne of the Virgin that calleth thee vnto him, or doth otherwise threaten thee, that if thou doe not obey him for loue, thou shalt be enforced thereunto by iustice. Come if thou be wise, come if thou be wise, come if thou be wise, obey, obey, obey for the honour of the blessed Trinitie, come along with those that goe to seeke thee, who will accompanie thee, and will become pledges for thee. If thou be well aduised thou wilt come.

For there is a great processe betwixt the iustice and mercie of God, which are the two daughters of the eternall Father: obey Mercie the eldest daughter, for she is euer fauourable vnto sinners: The Virgin Mary is thy aduocate, and Theophilus prayeth for thee, and is one of thy solicitors: Cyprian is another, and was a Magician as thou art: Dauid is another: William the Hermite doth also pray for thee, and so doth Matthew the Publican.

Mary the sister of Martha is thy aduocate: Pelagia is another: Mary of Ægypt is another: Thais also is another, and the woman of Samaria is another: who doth inuite thee to come and slake thy thirst with that water which God gaue vnto her when he was so weary, as she also gaue him to drinke when she was conuerted.

Our

Our Lord was so exceedingly thirstie, that being fixed to the tree of the Crosse, he cried, I thirst, that is to say, after the saluation of soules, especially of obstinate soules, such as thine is: and God from all eternitie hath foreseene this miracle.

Be conuerted, be conuerted, be conuerted vnto me, saith Iesus Christ, to all trangressing and sin-burthened soules: for I desire not the death of a sinner, but that he should liue and bee conuerted, that God might take mercie vpon him. Take heede how thou check and giue impeachment to the words contained in this letter, and how thou doest slight and disesteemest the same.

Thinke thy selfe vnworthie, yea most vnworthie of that solicitude and care, which God of his great goodnesse hath of thy soule. Hee hath said it, that hee came not for the iust but for sinners: and by how much the greater their transgressions are, by so much the more will the glory[u] of God bee magnified, and the greater will the compensation bee which they shall receiue at Gods hands, if there doe precede a great contrition that they haue offended him. Beware of the temptations and subtilties of Lucifer, Belzebub, Leuiathan, Balberith, Asmodee, and Asteroth, who doe slily drop their temptations into thee. But as thou diddest not feare to renounce thy God, thy Baptisme, and part in Paradise, so bee not thou affraid seriously to renounce Lucifer, and all the aboue named Princes, and that portion which is prepared for thee in the depth of the lowest Hell according to thy demerits. Doe not faile to come hither, for vpon thy comming all Hell will fall into despaire, and the Diuels will be put to their last shifts and subtilties. Behold the seales of those that haue seene this miracle, and haue beene present when Louyse Capeau was exorcised, and when one of the Diuels named Verrine began to cry as loud as hee could, that hee was constrained from the liuing God to say, that Lewes Gaufridy whose aboad is at Accoules neere the Palace, is is a Magician: and hath said and sworne, that whatsoeuer he hath spoken is true, to the glory of God and saluation of soules. The oath was taken vpon the blessed Sacrament with great solemnitie, according to the meaning of God and his Church, and of the Priest that did exorcise him.

[u] The glory & magnificence of the mercy of God hath the greatest luster in sinners, as Magdalene and Paul, but the glory of his goodnesse shineth more in the innocents as the Angels, the blessed Virgin and Saint Iohn Baptist.

And also the vnder signed witnesses doe promise all in generall, that if the said Lewes be conuerted priuatly in S. Baume, they will silence his sinnes as if they were his Confessours.

[x] It was signed after this manner. I Paschalis vnworthie Priest haue seene and vnderstood the oath that is within written, and am thereof an eye-witnesse. I Geraud vnworthy Priest, yea the most vnworthie of all haue seene and vnderstood the oath that is within written, and am thereof an eye-witnesse. I Peter Michaelis, vnworthy, haue seene and vnderstood the oath that is within written, and am thereof an eye-witnesse. I Denis Guillemini Prior of Romoules, most vnworthie, haue seene and vnderstood the oath that is within written, and am thereof an eye-witnesse. I Balthazar Charuaz haue seene and vnderstood the oath that is within written, and am thereof an eye-witnesse. Then did hee dictate the manner, how the said witnesses who did voluntarily tender themselues to carrie the saide letter, were to proceede in the execution of this Information in manner [y] as followeth. To remember that if they came late, they should goe to the [z] Capuchins, and should giue the letter to the Father Gouernour, together with the three that hee would chuse to conferre with Lewis: and they all should bee present at the reading of the letter, and should first heare Masse although it were before day, and should receiue the Communion to this purpose: and the [a] Capuchins should make themselues ready to seeke him out as soone as it was day, and should cause a Masse to be said for a soule that had great neede thereof. And if they shall finde him well disposed

[x] Strangers that besides the Ordinary were witnesses to the discouerie of the Magician.

[y] This processe is very conformable to the Gospell, and altogether opposite to the diuels manner of proceeding.

[z] He was very familiarly acquainted with the Capuchin Fathers, the better to set a glosse and couering vpō his abomination.

[a] The religious of S. Dominicke and S. Francis haue a priuiledge to say Masse before day, when they shall conceiue it to be a matter expedient.

sed to renounce Magicians with all due ceremonie and solemnitie as the Church hath commanded, and to returne to his God, the Capuchins are then to bring them to their Church, and to examine him, that all may bee by him performed, that is requisite to draw him from the hands of the Diuell, and to reseate him in the grace of his God. And in this case it shall not neede to bring him hither, vnlesse it be afterwards to giue thankes vnto God, to his and Mary Magdalenes glory, and to the further honour and reputation of Saint Baume. And if he be conuerted, then those that goe thither are to tarry there two or three dayes if there bee occasion for the same, and shall make knowne vnto him many particulars which they haue obserued from these Exorcismes: and shall speake of the ingratitude of obstinate soules vnto God, to their euerlasting perdition, and to the confusion of Diuels and all Hell. As also, how one of the seruants of Belzebub was forced to cry out: O the great mercy, O the great mercy, O the great mercy of God! men are vngratefull, and notwithstanding all their ingratitude and renunciation of God, he doth yet take them into fauour without any exprobration of their faults against them. Also, how the said seruant of Belzebub did out-braue Lucifer, and adiured Belzebub, treading him vnder his feete, and commanding the whole Assembly to set their feete vpon his head, and how he was contented to assubiect himselfe to whatsoeuer was commanded him by his owne slaue (meaning Verrine) and how that if Verrine had beene capable to be prayed for, they would haue made intercessions for him: But they being not to doe this for him, because his place was determinatly set downe to be in Hell, God commanded him to say vnto them, that they should rather haue compassion of this soule that had a capacitie to bee conuerted, and should pray to God for him. Among other Memorials touching Lewis the Priest, there was this ensuing aduertisement set downe. That they they ſhould chuſe three of the moſt auncient, learned, and able Capuchins, that the Father the Gouernour could make election of, who were to goe to the houſe of Madame [b] Blanquart, and to cauſe Lewis to come along with him: and that thoſe who were to goe to enquire after him, ſhould diſcloſe nothing to Madame Blanquart, but ſhould onely ſay that they were come about an affaire of [c] importance, and that ſhe ſhould reſt ſatisfied with this generality. There were then fiue of them that were to goe from hence, who with the three Capuchins ſhould make eight, and Lewis himſelfe the ninth: and thereupon they ſhould tell him that the nine quires of Angels would reioyce at his conuerſion, and that he ſhould turne home if he were wiſe, being now detected by the prouidence of God.

After this did he dictate another letter to the Superiour of the Capuchins, of the Couent at Marſeille in the name of Father Francis Billet: the forme whereof here enſueth. My brothers, I beſeech you for the honour of God forth-with to enquire after M. Iames [d] Prieſt of the Church of Accoules, that you together with him may finde out M. Lewis, whom you are not to leaue vntill you haue brought him into the houſe of Madame Blanquart; the Prieſt that ſhall be with him will be able to giue aſſiſtance vnto you. And if the ſaid Lewis ſhall be any whit bettered by this preſent letter, the other is to be kept backe, and you are to ſhroud all theſe things in ſecrecie as if you had heard it in confeſſion: thereby to ſhew, that this proceedeth from God and his Church, [e] who will not haue ſinners to bee openly diſcouered, till they haue beene charitably admoniſhed by their brethren, as Chriſt ſaith in his Goſpell. And he himſelfe ſaith, that if any one ſinneth, admoniſh him priuatly between you and him. He hath had already one admonition from Francis Billet, Prieſt of the Doctrine, which hee hath vtterly reiected, and made no account thereof, and would not bee brought to confeſſe the truth.

[b] She is a deuout and vertuous woman.

[c] The better to couer the buſineſſe that was in queſtion.

[d] This was a great friend & familiar of his.

[e] A charitable and Euangelicall manner of proceeding is no way compatible, or agreeable with the Diuell.

truth. He is now vpon the second point, which is, when God commandeth to take men fit and proper to execute a worke of this nature. Wish him to beware that he make his vse of the third point: which is, that except hee be conuerted, God layeth his command vpon his Church, that is bound more then any wife of the world to obey her husband, with extremitie of rigour to punish all them that are not obseruant of his commandements and counsels. The superscription was. To my deerest brothers the Reuerend Father the Superiour, and Friars of the Couent of Marseille of the order of the Capuchins, at Marseille. Within the saide letter there was a scrowle containing this that followeth. Take heede of the third: Cursed bee the Priest whose conuersation suteth not with the wayes of God, and who hath promised his Church, when his[f] Orders were giuen vnto him to serue, loue, and feare God, reiecting the loue of all creatures for the loue of him. And seeing the Diuell is more powerfull ouer the soule then God, and since thou doest acknowledge, obey, and harken more vnto Lucifer, Belzebub, or whatsoeuer else is hellish, then to thy God, and doest entombe the glory of God, the saluation of thy soule, thy part in Paradise, and the edification of thy neighbours in neglect and vtter oblivion: as also, because thou giuest occasion of scandall, if thou bee not wise to follow first the Counsel of God, and then the aduise of thy best friends: hence it is that the Diuell doth seriously imploy himselfe, and labour the conuersion of thy soule, although he be forced thereunto: all vengeance and malediction light vpon thee. O rare and euer to be admired wonder: God himselfe who is Almightie, was not able to plucke thee back from thy perdition and sinfull estate, neither could his Mother, nor the Angels, nor Saints, nor any terrestrial creatures whatsoeuer worke any good vpon thee: yet did hee make reseruation of the most vnmatchable wonder that euer was brought forth to act, that that the Diuell called Verrine ſhould be the inſtrument of thy conuerſion, not from his proper and franke will, but conſtrainedly and by enforcement, worſe then any gally-ſlaue or captiue that euer was expoſed to command: being terribly threatned thereunto, and hauing a deſire to giue ſtoppage and hindrance to theſe proceedings, obiecting if a man did well, hee had a ground whereon to frame vnto himſelfe ſome hope of recompence, but that this man was in expectation of nothing but of his eternall damnation: For ſo will it happen vnto thee if thou reſiſt the Almighty. Make vſe therefore of theſe admonitions, and put in practiſe the precepts compriſed in theſe letters, for it is impoſſible for thee to palliate thy faults before God, as Adam and the Phariſie thought to doe. The Phariſie boaſted of his good workes, and contemned the Publican, ſaying that he was not as that man, yet was the one of them wicked before men, the other before God: the one confeſſed that he was not worthy to lift vp his eyes to heauen, and returned to his houſe iuſtified: the other was confident of his works, and hypocriticall countenance, and returned home like vnto the (Iewes) full of ſinnes: but God wil receiue thee into grace, as he did Theophilus, and Cyprian who was a Magician as thou art. Hee that is more deſirous of your welfare then you your ſelfe are, ſendeth this letter vnto you. Beware that hell open not her iawes to deuour thee, if thou neglect theſe letters, which are directed vnto thee by the appointment of God, and pronounced by a Diuell named Verrine, that now remaineth in the body of Louyſe Capeau, as thou well knoweſt; Neither gaueſt thou him vnto her by thy charmes, with this intendment or purpoſe to conuert thee, although if thou bee not too wilfull in thy vnbeleefe, it will ſo fall out vnto thee.

[f] The punishment & transgression of the Commandements is generally addressed vnto all; but that of Counsels vnto those only that haue made vowes.

Then didſhe dictate another aduertiſement to the Capuchin Fathers, as here [h] enſueth. My *deareſt fathers, I beſeech you for Gods cauſe to put a deed of charity in execution, [g] Another maner of proceeding in caſe he doe not repent vpon the ſight of the letter.

[h] In the name of father Fraxcis Billet, as before.

* He preſuppoſeth, that thoſe who carried the letter, had made rehearſall of whatſoeuer was paſſed.

execution, to the glory of his ſacred name, and ſaluation of ſoules. Come along with this Prieſt, and ſuffer him not to ſtep a foot from you, but let your vigilancy haue an eye ouer him, as if he were a malefactor. For hee is in the Diuels clawes, you ſhall do well to binde him with a ſtole vnder the mould of the head, and bring along with you the booke of Exorciſmes, and if you ſhall thinke it neceſſarie, you may doe well to exorciſe him, forbidding Belzebub and all hell to hinder it. God grant you his grace to execute his will, and that you giue no ſtoppe vnto the ſame, that the ſaid malefactor may be brought to S. Baume, where the miracle ſhall be wrought if he himſelfe be no hinderance thereunto. the 16. of December. 1610.

Then hee dictated a letter for the father Gardian, as followeth. I entreat the father Gardian, that he would cauſe (if ſo hee pleaſe) three of his Friers, ſuch as hee knoweth beſt able to walke, to goe vnto S. Baume, for a buſineſſe purely aiming at the glory of God, and the ſaluation and conuerſion of a ſoule, that is in great diſtreſſe.

After this was finiſhed, he dictated another letter to Madame Blanguart, as here enſueth, in the name of father Romillon. My daughter, I pray you for the loue of God, to lend a chamber vnto theſe men, who are come to treate of a buſineſſe of great waight and importance; neither is it fit to make you as yet acquainted therewithall, it being forbidden me by one that hath power and authority both ouer you and me. Curioſity is the mother of much miſchiefe, and the daughter of Lucifer, where as oppoſite hereunto, humility, ſimplicity, and obedience are the ſiſters of Chriſt Ieſus. In the meane time you may enioy and gather the fruit of this obedience, which will be very aduantageous vnto you. And remember, that when God commanded Abraham to ſacrifice his ſonne, he asked not why or how: but humbled himſelfe, and did adhere rather to him that commanded manded him then to himselfe. So should the true and perfect paragon of obedience demeane himselfe, if hee will do the will of God. I rest your spirituall father Iohn Baptista Romillon, superiour of the Christian doctrine in despite of Lucifer. From S. Baume this 16. of December. 1610. Superscribed, to Madame Blanquart at Marseille.

Within the said letter was enclosed an aduertisement to sister Catherine of France, as followeth. [h] Catherine of France, be you very circumspect how you out of curiosity doe reueale any thing to Madame Blanquart, of the Priest you wot of; and withall beware how you tattle of it vnto the sisters, but remit the manage of all this businesse vnto him, who is euer wakefull for his owne glory, and the saluation of those soules, whose ransome he hath paid at a dearer rate, then euer you are able to value. Further, you are to take heed vpon paine of disobedience vnto God himselfe, how you intermingle your opinion and iudgement in things that are impertinent for you to meddle withall. Be satisfied with this, that God is good and so vnsearchably wise, that hee hath no need of your aduice of the same. Verrine hath dictated this letter by Gods appointment, and I Francis Billet the vnworthie Priest of the Christian doctrine haue written it in the name of father Romillon. And at the foot of the letter, there was written: Louyse de Capelle humbly recommendeth her selfe to the praiers of Martha d' Aguisier, and of Catherine of France, and sendeth vnto them, to beseech them, that they would cause all the sisters at Marseille to pray for her, for shee standeth in great need of the same; but principally shee desireth the said Martha to pray to God for her, that he would enable her to endure whatsoeuer her redeemer shall bee pleased to lay vpon her, and that shee may suffer all things meerely for his sake.

[i] After this did he dictate another letter to the superiour

[h] She was the superiour of the sisters of the order of S. Vrsula at Marseille, and was at that time vpon speciall occasions at Marseille.

[i] In the name of Louyse.

riour of ſiſter Louyſe as here enſueth. Shee that is moſt vnworthie to call you her mother, doth pray you for Gods ſake, and entreateth you from your ſuperiour, to obey [k] him in thoſe things which hee ſhall now impoſe vpon your performance, without any replication, gainſaying, or contradiction whatſoeuer; and without diſputing or ſaying, How ſhall wee bee able to vndertake ſuch a buſineſſe? wee could not come if wee were all at home, and how ſhall we now (when wee are but few) venture vpon that which many would not dare to vndergoe? It is the Diuels craft and wilineſſe, euer to cauill and diſpute againſt obedience, yea to cauſe grudgings and mutinies againſt ſuperiours and gouernours; obiecting vnto you, that they doe many times impoſe vpon you ſuch difficult and vneaſie commands, that it is almoſt impoſſible to effect them. But remember that the moſt worthy mother of God is the gouerneſſe of this houſe; giue therefore the keyes vnto her, for the gouernment appertaineth to her, and ſhe ſhall be more regardfull and ſtudious of your good then your ſelues can poſſibly be; for ſhe is not tied to thoſe hinderances as you are, to your ſpirituall exerciſes, to your prayers, and to the holy Communion; neither is ſhe filled with ſelfe-loue as you are. Vnder a ſhadow and pretence of good, many times religious perſons doe withdraw themſelues from the commands of their ſuperiours, and commit many great and groſſe incongruities, although not ſo much out of malice, as for the moſt part out of ignorance and ſelfe-loue, which at ſome times wee are content to acknowledge, but for the moſt part our depraued nature cauſeth vs to diſſemble it, ſo that it lyeth hidden in the face of hypocrites. For (ſay they) how can the deſire to receiue the ſacrament often, to pray, and performe thoſe exerciſes that conduce vnto repentance proceed from the Diuell? alleaging that God hath ſpoken by his Prophet: Repent, for if you doe not repent, you ſhall die the death: Who dares ſay that this is [k] Theſe ſiſters made dainty to ſend their gouerneſſe to S. Baume, although their ſuperiour had ſent for her.

is not true? It is confessed to be a truth, but God looketh further, hee would haue a perfect Cassandra, a full humiliation, obedience, simplicity, and resignation of all things. Hee doth therefore let you know, that you are not to neglect the least word of your superiors command, Louyse doth therefore pray you to embrace that councell which is very reasonable, and which at the time of her departure from you, you were pleased to lay close vnto her; which is, that she would endeauour to be obedient, and to put her selfe wholly in the hands of God. Which she taking in good worth, doth likewise desire you to share in this aduice, and to enioyne the same vnto your spirituall daughters: exhort Margaret Burle, and Martha d'Aiguiser to doe the same. It standeth with reason, that when the gouernesse is obedient, none of the rest should behaue themselues with any dislike or contumacie; For rebellion and disobedience is the daughter of Lucifer, as humility is the daughter of God, and should therefore be your sister. Come therefore accompanied with her, she is of a noble parentage, but yet doth so bow her selfe to obedience that shee is continually prest and actiue to doe the will of God her father. She will go with you to heauen, and will assist you to climbe that steep & wearisome mountaine: Expect when you are come hither, things so full of strangenesse and admiration, that you would not for all the gold in the world but see, vnderstand, and bee made familiar vnto them. But hee that will haue profit must take paines for the acquisition thereof. No paine, no gaine. The subscription was, Your most vnworthy slaue, full of great boldnesse and presumption, sendeth this vnto you; you know my insufficiencie and want of vnderstanding, perfectly well: so that you will apprehend with ease, that shee that sendeth this, had neuer that ability of iudgement to fashion such a letter, nor the boldnesse to speake vnto her gouernesse with so little respect and ceremony. But this proceedeth not from her her ſelfe, God would haue it done, by a Diuell that did dictate al theſe ſayings. Your ſlaue Louyſe Capelle. Keep this letter ſafe, and bring it back with you, and reade the ſame aloud before all the ſiſter Nuns and Aſſiſtants, except the little Penſioners: alſo reade it before Miſtris de Saint Iaques, and pray for Louyſe, who hath great need thereof.

The ſuperſcription was, To ſiſter Catherine, gouerneſſe of the houſe of S. Vrſula at Aix. Then did hee dictate another letter to the fathers Andrew and Matthew Arnoult Prieſts of the Chriſtian doctrine in manner as followeth. My deareſt brethren, I ſend vnto you to requeſt your ſpeedy preſence heere at S. Baume, that you may bee acquainted with ſome things of that rare and admirable quality, as the like hath not been ſeene from the beginning of the world.

And in regard that loue is the daughter of God, I am commanded by my [1] ſuperiour and yours, to ſend you out of my loue this letter, which I could not but performe; for I ſhould haue been ſhrewdly burthened, if I had neglected the ſame. It is to tell you, that you forthwith come hither without faile, and not aske wherefore, or how, or wee cannot come, becauſe wee haue a great charge, and are here but few in number, theſe excuſes and tergiuerſations doe all flow from the Diuell. Remember that true obedience doth neuer enter into diſpute, eſpecially when the good pleaſure of God is to bee executed in matters of ſuch importance as theſe are; humble your ſelues in imitation of Chriſt Ieſus, and doe not murmur and ſay, This croſſe is heauier then I am able to beare. He would neuer vtter ſuch a thing but like an innocent lambe, and as an oxe vnder the yoke, he ſuffered himſelfe to bee led away, and carried his croſſe without diſputing or reaſoning the matter with the hangman. He ſaid not, this mountaine is ſo ſteepe that I cannot climbe vp vnto it, but ſubmitted ſelfe to the guidance and gouernment of his heauenly father.

[1] The father Romillon as her ſuperiour commandeth her.

Father. It ſtandeth with good reaſon that the ſeruant ſhould be directed by his maiſter, ſince that the maiſter hath bene content to bee ledde by his ſlaues and curſed ſeruants, yea, by hell it ſelfe. [m] Therefore humble your ſelues and bee obedient, otherwiſe you ſhall incurre Gods heauy diſpleaſure, vnleſſe you doe that which I haue aduertiſed vnto you.

I deſerue not to bee obeyed at your hands, *but hee who cauſed this letter to be written, doth wel deſerue it from you.

After all this, hee did dictate another letter, which beginneth, Andrew Chicolle, Louyſe prayeth thee to cal to remembrance the ſpeech which thou diddeſt vſe vnto her in the Chappell of S. Vrſula in Confeſſion, when ſhee ſaid, that ſhee had prayed vnto God to haue the grace to ſuffer for his ſake. Then diddeſt thou ſay vnto her (obſerue well my ſpeech, looke you obſerue it well, and call it to minde) Suffer thy ſelfe to bee guided and directed: which aduiſe ſhee afterward found to be of ſpeciall vſe vnto her, and being now acquainted with the truth thereof, ſhee is deſirous to returne vnto you ſome fruite of your owne counſell, whereby you did then particularly giue inſtance, in the obedience which wee did owe vnto our ſuperiour, when hee ſendeth for vs. [n] You wel remember the reſiſtance and denyalls which ſhee at that time made againſt God and her ſuperiour, notwithſtanding your counſel together with the aduiſe of Mathew Arnout, and of Peter Thion was treaſured vp in her hart, and proued afterward very vſefull vnto her. And God is well pleaſed that acknowledgment of theſe thinges bee firſt made to him, and then vnto his creatures for the loue of him. Shee doth therefore exhort you thereunto, ſince for her owne part ſhee hath ſped ſo well in obeying the pleaſure of God and of her ſuperiour: which ſhee hath no reaſon to conceiue but that you (if you be wiſe) will alſo be very ready to performe.

For

[m] Theſe good Fathers would not heare talke of thoſe things, and did, as it were, bluſh at thē. They were rather of opinion, that they were meer fancies, & had no communion or agreemēt with Father Romillon

*Hee ſaid hee was commanded & conſtrained by the appointment of God.

[n] Louyſe being commāded by her Superiour to come from Aix, reſiſted & made ſcruple of the ſame; being tender of her reputation, and fearing the defamation of being poſſeſſed by the Deuill.

For vnhappy and miſerable is that man, who giueth good counſell vnto others, and can practiſe or follow none himſelfe.

Your moſt humble and vnworthy, the ſlaue of God, and for his loue the ſlaue alſo of his creatures, Louyſe. Pray vnto God for her, and cauſe others to doe the like, for ſhee ſtandeth in great need of the ſame.

The ſame day departed the ſaid Paſchalis Preiſt, Geraud Preiſt, Peter Michaelis, Denis Guillemini Priour of Ramoules, and Balthazar Charuas to goe to Marſeille with the ſaid letters; who promiſed to giue a good account of their proceedings.

The Acts of the 17. of December.

THis day, Verrine for an infallible marke to diſcerne whither this ſpirit came by Gods permiſſion or no, did yeeld very readily his obedience: and in token that he was there on Gods behalfe, hee ſaid hee would ſuffer Louyſe to communicate without any reſiſtance whatſoeuer, vpon the commandement of her ſuperiour, father Romillon: which before this time hee neuer did; and did dictate very diſtinctly vnto vs the diſputation of the 16. of this preſent moneth, by the vertue of the like commandement.

Alſo Louyſe being twice or thrice as it were rauiſhed in an extaſy, ſhee recouered and came to her ſelfe, as ſoone as her ſuperiours command was layd vpon her.

The ſame day Magdalen was ſhrewdly tempted by the Deuill, and was depreſſed with a great and extraordinary ſadneſſe. And whiles Maſſe was ſaying, the temptation ended; Magdalen performing all acts of humility, and weeping very bitterly in S. Baume, when ſhee called to minde what had happened vnto her. In the morning ſhee was exorciſed by the Dominican father, and Verrine began to ſpeake in this manner. Let the Luxurious liue, let thoſe that beare falſe witneſſe liue, let these and the like liue for hell: but let obedience, simplicity, a good intention, pure affection, vnspotted conscience, humility and resignation of the world liue for the liuing God; as doe all they that are belonging vnto the traine and company of the Lambe: I say, that immaculate Lambe. Hee that will conquer, must suffer. Petrus thou hast seene thy maister in the mountaine of glory, and hast indured martyrdome for his sake: and thou Iames hast drunke of his cup, which thy mother did so litle esteeme of.

Surrender your selues vp into the hands of God, hee knoweth what is good for you, and shall be a guide vnto you in all your waies.

Ioannes Euangelista thou diddest tell thy maister, Possumus; and diddest indeed afterward prooue a Martyr; but it was a martyrdome of passion and greefe, when thou wert with thy maister at the Crosse. He that will goe to heauen must honour God, and loue his neighbour as himselfe: and be ready to depart with his goods for his neighbours body, and with his owne body for his soule: and if any shall remaine obstinate, they shall frye in those vnquenchable flames. It is true, many ° Sacrifices haue beene offered vp vnto God in the behalfe of Magdalen and Lewes the Priest.

° There were publick sacrifices for all sinners, especially for the most enormous: of which they haue of all other the most need: and this was done for sins past, present and to come.

Thou Louyse diddest beg of God to suffer for his sake, and thou shalt suffer, and for the better support of thy patience, God will augment and double thy force vpon thee. And to show that this proceedeth from God he shall make thee obedient. Then Belzebub said, that Magdalen had giuen vp her keyes vnto him. Verrine answered, Thou lyest, God seeth more cleerly then thy selfe, thy aime is to ouerthrow her and make her perish, by impaciency and despaire. No, no, Belzebub, this soule belongeth vnto God: But put case she had made a bequeath of her soule vnto thee, I say that God may at any time take her home vnto himselfe; cannot a King enter into his owne Palace at any time that pleaseth him?

him? Belzebub answered, That is true, but not against the will of the creature.

Then said Verrine vnto him, Hee will enter either by force or loue, and will haue her to himselfe, although she had committed all the sinnes of those that are damned in hell. If Iudas had been penitent, if Cain had craued pardon, if *Adam*p had not stood vpon his iustifications and excuses, God would haue forgiuen them: of such vnspeakable goodnesse is the God of the Christians, and so wel doth humility please & accord with him. The God of the Turks and the Gods of the Gentiles are all Deuils, there is but one God, one Church, one Baptisme. The God of the Christians is the true God, the Baptisme of the Christians is the true Baptisme the Church of the Christians is the true Church. The q Baptisme of Turks or Iews is of no auaile for the soule; The Christian shall say, In te Domine sperani, and shall neuer perish. It is true Magdalen, thy life shall be written and described from the first three yeeres of thy age; and Louyse shal endure much sorrow, and afterwardes dye in paine; but the end crowneth the worke.

p Adam afterward did repent. Sap 6.

q That is to say, of their law.

Thinke not Magdalen that thy God will come to thee and take thee by the hand: No, no, hee will not descend in his humanity for such a purpose. Where is thy Credo, Magdalen? thou must now beleeue Magdalen, dost thou looke for miracles, as many others doe?

To this Belzebub said, I haue nothing to doe with that Credo. Verrine replyed, Ha wicked spirit; it was not for thy sake I spake it. Magdalen shall be conuerted in despite of Lucifer and of all hell besides. I am true of my word. Belzebub answered, No, no, she shall be mine, she shall be damned, for the gate of mercy is shut against her.

Then said Verrine, It is not so, her will to doe well proue acceptable and pleasing; and thou saist this (accursed as thou art) to plunge her into dispaire. But the iust shall say, In te Domine sperani, and shall finde the gates of Paradiſe opened vnto them: as witneſſeth S. [r] Auguſtine.

The Church ſhal examine this whole tract, wherein is nothing contained either againſt God or his Church. hereſhal many be illuminated, & he that ſhall diue into the botome of the ſacke, ſhall eaſily approoue the ſame; the curious and proud ſhall haue their abode in the pit of hell, and ſhall not haue the power to beleeue. Then hee ſaid, [f] Carreau cannot fill thy hart, Magdalen, thy part is ſet triangle-wiſe, and the bleſſed Trinity is to repleniſhe and comfort the ſame.

The ſame day Verrine told Magdalen roundly and rigourouſly of her faults being in her chamber, and ſpake vnto her in this ſort. Magdalen, if thou reſolue not vpon thy conuerſion between this and Chriſtmas, thou ſhalt bee euerlaſtingly damned, and burnt aliue, and ſhalt not for all this eſcape our hands: as none haue euer ſcaped vs theſe hundreth ninty nine yeeres, becauſe wee made them all to diſpaire. This indeed will bee the Magicians confuſion, but ſhall leaue no touch or taint vpon the company of S. Vrſula, the company of the Chriſtian doctrine, or vpon thy father, whom I haue pronounced innocent, though Belzebub [t] tooke a falſe oath againſt him, ſaying that thy father had giuen thee vnto him, which was falſe, for thou of thy owne accord, and from a full and franke will didſt giue thy ſelfe to Lucifer, and to all his adherents, renouncing God, the bleſſed Trinity and Paradiſe: renouncing all the merits of the Paſſion of Chriſt Ieſus; all the prayers of the ſacred mother of God, and of all Angels and Saints: taking and chuſing hell, accepting the ſame as thy laſt and euerlaſting habitation: ſaying, that thou hadſt rather liue in this world in all varieties of delights and villanies, then to ſerue God thy Creator, and thy Redeemer Ieſus Chriſt: promiſing Belzebub to bee obedient vnto all his commands, and that thou diddeſt giue him with all thy heart, thy body

[r] S. Auguſtine doth prettily diſcourſe vpon the 50. Pſal. in ŷ interpretation of theſe words ſpeaking of the merits which haue not preceded, and the benefites of God which haue preuented the ſinner. Hoc me eruit (ſaith he) quod me iuſtificat, quod ex impio, pium facit, quod ex iniquo iuſtum quod ex cæco videntẽ, ex cadente ſurgentem, quod ex flẽte gaudentẽ.

[f] Carreau did tempt her to obſtinacy. Magdalene was often perſecuted and extremly tempted by ŷ deuils, ſo that thee did ſometimes ſeem to wauer.

[t] Belzebub took this falſe oath, and did afterwards thus excuſe and gloſſe the ſame, ſaying hee meant her ſpiritual father.

[u] The blindnes and deſperat madnes of Magicians.

body and soule, with the powers thereof, reseruing nothing to thy selfe but hell, which those that are culpapable of the like abominations doe deserue, if they remaine and dye in their sinnes: making a schedule written in thy bloud by thine owne hand, and giuing it to Belzebub; which afterwards the Magicians got into their custody.

It is true, she did not enter into these infernall courses her self, but was induced and by allurements drawne vnto it, by the theeues of her soule. But Lodouicus seeing that dreadfull wolfe of hell to approch, left this fillie sheepe to be seazed by him, yea intised her into the clawes of rauenous wolues, which are the Diuels of hell.

Shee was young, which will bee a good plea for her; because God is accustomed to compassionate youth, witnesse the prodigall child, who left his fathers house, as Magdalene hath done, and fed with hogs, as she did.

Yet did he not die in his obstinacie, but acknowledged his fault, and prostrated himselfe at the feete of his father, in great humilitie. So if Magdalene shall cast her selfe at the feete of the mercie of her God, and shall knock at his gate, that father of pitie will commaund her to be let in, and will bid the fat calfe to be killed: he will also cause new garments to be fetched and cast vpon her, which signifieth a good conscience and repentance, and will put a ring on her finger, to declare the faith and trust she ought to giue to the words of her father, and how grateful she should be in her acknowledgements of his benefits: Then is shee [redacted] to say, Father, father, I haue sinned against heauen, and against thee, and am no more worthie to be esteemed thine, intreate me as one of your hirelings, although most vnworthie of such a place as that. Thus should Magdalene humble her self, and should say, approching to the seate of his mercie, Father, I haue sinned against heauen and againſt thee, againſt thy bleſſed Mother, againſt the whole Court of heauen, and againſt all thy creatures, I am therefore vnworthie to bee called your daughter, nay your ſlaue, nay I am not worthie to lift vp mine eyes to heauen; but take mee vnto your mercie, (if it ſtand with your good pleaſure) who am the moſt wretched and diſconſolate creature that liues vnder the heauen, or vpon the earth. Then he added further: Magdalene be conuerted, and abandon thy ſinnes: thou haſt been hitherto gently led on in calmeneſſe and in ſoftneſſe: thou haſt been priuilie reproued by ſecret inſpirations, by preaching, by reading of good bookes, by many ſpirituall inſtructions which haue from time to time been infuſed into thee, as well in the houſe of S. Vrſula, as by the fathers the Confeſſors, and other learned and illuminated perſonages, who haue giuen them vnto thee both for thy practiſe, and for a remedie againſt thy aduerſaries. He further ſaid, Magdalene being rebelliouſly bent againſt her God, and the admonitiõs of his Spouſe the Church, and God ſeeing her perdition ſo neere, and her ſelfe ſo obſtinate in her ſinnes, and hauing by all the aboue-named remedies profited nothing, hath permitted that an vnworthie, yea thrice-vnworthie ſiſter of the Companie of S. Vrſula, Louyſe Capelle, who of her ſelfe is leſſe powerfull then the leafe of a tree, a ſtone, or a piſmire, yea who conceiueth her ſelfe to be vnworthie of the title or ſtile of one of Gods creatures, ſhould pronounce theſe things by the appointment of God almightie, and a Diuell, named Verrine, ſhould by her mouth dictate and deliuer all theſe writings.

Then hee made this remonſtrance vnto Magdalene, ſaying vnto her in a great [a] furie and chafe, as if he had been mad, that God was infinitly angrie with her if ſhe were not amended, or did remaine in a determinate kinde of obſtinacie. And he for his part did ſpeake with as great aſſuredneſſe from God, as euer the Prophet Ionas did ſpeake to the people of Niniue, when he ſaid vn-

[a] Magdalene ſuffered her ſelfe to be gained away at times.

to

to them, If you repent not, you ſhall all periſh: but they were wiſe, as Magdalene will be, and followed the example of their King, who tooke aſhes and caſt them vpon his head, to appeaſe and ſlake the wrath of God againſt them.

He alſo ſaid to [b] Magdalene, Art not thou an accurſed woman, that the Witches Sabbath is kept here? Bluſheſt thou not, that theſe Sabbaths and abominable conuentions are kept here for thy ſake, and that Magicians, Witches, Hags, and Sorcerers doe bewitch all theſe that are here? Yea, Father [c] Francis himſelfe hath taken in a charme whileſt he was drinking.

Verrine further ſaid vnto ſiſter Magdalene: If God were capable of ſadneſſe, he would bewaile, Magdalene, the great vncertaintie and ſuſpenſe wherein thou keepeſt him, touching thy conuerſion. Then did Verrine threaten her with more abſolutnes and authoritie, then euer her Superiour did vſe towards her, or any creature in the world beſide. And good reaſon hath he for the ſame, becauſe hee was to execute the will of the Creator, being (as hee himſelfe ſaid) as the Kings Sergeant, who ſpeaketh in the Kings name and authoritie, and commandeth, ſaying, If you doe not put this in execution, and obey the King, you ſhall be grieuouſly puniſhed, becauſe hee that withſtandeth his King, deſerueth the moſt ſeuere puniſhment that can be inflicted. So the ſinner that rebelleth, and growes obſtinate againſt his God, not keeping his commandements, nor obſeruing his and the Churches Counſels, he deſerueth ſharpe correction, yea tortures and hell it ſelfe.

Alſo he ſaid: O Magdalene, conuert thy ſelfe, God is moſt gracious, and full of pitie. Thou art vexed Magdalene, to contemne and ſet at naught the delights of this world, and yet regardeſt not the pleaſures of eternitie.

Then he ſaid: [d] Miſerable, accurſed, and damned as thou art, art thou not truly vnhappie, to beleeue that [b] He meaneth that Magdalene had not as then ſhewed ſo great ſignes of her repẽtance, as that the Diuels had left all hope to regaine her.

[c] Francis Billet felt ſtrange motions within himſelfe, but reſiſted them, and called for the grace of God.

[d] Magdalene did at times wauer ſhrewdly, like to one that begins to be recouered of a grieuous and long ſickneſſe, and ſtaggers when he offers to goe, and is readie to ſinke for weakneſſe, but then leaneth & ſtaieth himſelfe on his ſtaffe.

which commeth from Lucifer, and giueſt no heede vnto me who am here from God? Art thou not vnhappie to beleeue that Louyſe is the author and expreſſer of theſe things? O Magdalene, thou doeſt beleeue it, and this beleefe is exceedingly preiudiciall vnto thee. It is true Magdalene, and I muſt lay it cloſe vnto thee, thou diddeſt double and hadſt a falſe intention before God, and thy opinion was that Louyſe ſpake theſe things from her owne head. And this is true, Magdalene; as for Louyſe ſhe is poſſeſſed, Catherine is alſo poſſeſſed, and ſo are the reſt that are bewitched, but they know nothing of what is here deliuered; whereof thou Magdalen art the only vnhappy cauſe. It is true Magdalen, thou art proud and vngratefull, hauing a heart of ſtone, a heart harder then a Diamond: thou conceiueſt that God is thy debter; O thou proud caitiſe, how willing wouldeſt thou haue been to plucke him, if thou hadſt been able, from his throne of Maieſtie. But be of good courage Magdalene, and humble thy ſelfe, thy God is ſo good, that although thou hadſt runne through all the ſinnes of the world, and of all the damned, thy God can ſhew thee mercie, yea and wil pardon thee thy offences, if thou humble thy ſelfe and be penitent.

The ſame day in the euening Louyſe and Magdalene were exorciſed by Father Francis, and Verrine ſpake in this manner: Who hath euer beheld the like, that a Diuill ſhould enter the liſts againſt a Diuell? wee are all damned for euer, and what we do, wee do by conſtraint, for there is no iot of charitie dwelling in vs. I auerre that this woman is poſſeſſed, and hath three Diuels in her bodie, for the particular conuerſion of two principally, and then for the conuerſion of many others. He that will not trauell to Mount Caluarie, ſhall not aſcend Mount Thabor: God did intimate thus much vnto the mother of the children of Zebedeus. Peter denied his Maſter, but he repented, and wept very bitterly, yea afterwards died for him, & was crucified for his names sake. Our Lord had many friends and associats that did beare him company at the Table at Easter, Whitsontide and Christmas, but there were few that receiued him worthily, and a smal number that presented themselues before him with due and serious preparation.

ſake.

I take God to witnesse, his blessed Mother, and all Saints, that I doe now tell you, if you doe not repent, and acknowledge the benefits that God hath so plentifully powred vpon you, you are not worthy to be partakers of any Sacrament, nay you deserue to dye without the comfort of them.

Those that are curious, are liquorous of more knowledge then is expedient for them; which they make inquisition after in the pit of Hel, as doe the Caluinists, and all other Hereticks, who would interprete the passages in holy writ, not according to Gods meaning, but interpose their owne giddy and priuate fancies, and reiect the meaning and exposition of the Church. Yonge people bee you penitent, you pamper vp your flesh with such delicacies and niceness, & let in al pleasures with such a full scope vnto you, that you stand vnder the arrest of high treason against God. Wee tempt youth and make them fall like mellow figges from a tree when they are shaken by a strong winde, neither need wee to helpe this winde by our breath. I am as a Sergeant, and execute my commission; I say, you may attaine, if you will, vnto heauen: yet are you obstinate, and thinke that God is endebted vnto you, and that the way to Heauen is easy and open.

[e] Against youth

No, no, I tell you that God cannot sinne, nor lye; ponder well vpon this so fearfull a sentence, Ite maledicti in ignem æternum. Goe ye cursed into Hell, and liue for euer in all misery in that other world, together with those whom in this life you haue obeyed and hearkned vnto.

Wee that are Deuils doe dandle and make much of them with a thousand varieties of torments: we bestow sights sights and visions vpon them, but they are the visions of Deuils, that would at one clap strike all men starke dead, to haue but a side long glance of their horrid deformities. They doe also see the soules of the damned, who hauing in their first creation beene fashioned with much bewty, are now as hideous in their semblance as are the Deuils themselues.

You haue indeed the Saints to intercede for you, saying, Lord giue them of the water of life; but you are to conceiue your selues to bee vnworthie of that life, vnlesse you humble your selues, beleeuing that you are vnworthy of such a place as Hell, nay, if that God shall make ten thousand helles, yet are you to thinke that your deserts doe surmount the torments of them all. If you fast in this world, you shall feast in the world to come. The excellency of the choise delicacies of the world to come, doth breed a facietie and disgust of the meats you heere enioy: and whosoeuer could but get a crumme or the least relish in the world of those dainties, they are so exquisitely prepared, that they would cause all the viands of this world to bee loathed. Wee may talke of them, but wee shall neuer taste them, it is too late now to repent vs. That horse is not a horse of price and value that gallopeth not but when hee is spurred; and hee who serueth God with an ill will, is of no reckoning. It is many times a greater fault, to omit that thou oughtest to doe, then to doe that which thou oughtest to omit. f There are three sorts that serue God, the first serue him as slaues, and they are those that are alwaies in Hell: Others serue him as Hirelings, and those haue regarde to nothing but to the rewarde of Heauen; and are like those that work and trauel meerely for their profite: and there are those that serue him more faithfullie, who serue him as children out of meere loue.

f Three sorts of seruants of God.

A vertuous childe hath no regard vnto the goods of his Parents, neither doth hee murmure at those blowes which which for his reformation they giue vnto him; but is respectiue of his duty, and is seruiceable vnto them meerely out of affection: so doe the children of God, they serue him, not out of expectancie of reward, but from the strength of their loue. A cup of fresh water that is giuen vnto the poore, payeth a whole yeeres ransome in Purgatorie. O great God, it is no wonder, if neither beasts, Barbarians, nor g Indians doe know thee: for they either haue no vnderstanding or doe liue in darknesse: but I meruaile at thy children the Christians, that they doe not acknowledge thee, whose name and stampe they carrie. For a Christian hath his appellation from Christ, as the Bride beareth the name of the Bridegroome. In the blessed baptisme, God the Father taketh the soule for his daughter; the sonne taketh it for his sister; the holy Ghost for his Spouse; and all the blessed Trinity for their Temple.

h You doe so little reckon of Baptisme, that when you approach to this Sacrament a man would say, that you went to some May-game or dance, for you talke in the Church, and doe nothing but laugh, vsing many other scandalous misdemeanments of this nature, and do indeede any thing, rather then conceiue of this Sacrament with reuerence. S. Iohn did not runne into such an error, but when he baptized our Lord, hee baptized him in great feare and deuotion. How great an ouersight is this in you, thus to dis-esteeme the Sacraments that haue their institution from God himselfe, and are the pillars on which this Church doth leane; neither is there any Sacrament that hath not drawne blood from him. Then Verrine set his foote vpon Belzebub, and said; Belzebub, I doe adiure thee by the liuing God, that if thou haue any thing to reply, that what I haue now said is not true, thou giue answere thereunto; speake Belzebub, whether that which I haue spoken be true or no. I doe further adiure thee by Lucifer, that if thou canst take me tripping, thou doe directly tell mee wherein g He meaneth the Indians in that state wherein they were before their conuersion, being people remooued farre frō God, as S. Paul speaketh of the Gentiles, Ephes. 1.

h Irreuerent behauiour in Baptisme.

wherein I lye. O curſed Belzebub, thou canſt not reply againſt me, for I deliuer the truth, and that by the appointment of God. Thou art accurſed, and as wretched as my ſelfe: ſpeake wicked ſpirit if thou haſt any thing to ſay. Then Verrine began to cry. All you[i] here may obſerue (ſpeaking to the Aſſembly that was there preſent) he is my Prince, but I doe not now acknowledge him to be ſo. It is true Belzebub, thou art my Prince, but I here renounce any ſuperiority which thou pretendeſt to haue ouer me. I alſo renounce thee Lucifer, and the authority of all the Diuels in Hell, for wee are not powerfull to reſiſt the Almightie. You, who take Lucifers part, can reply nothing of any moment or importance, neither haue you more force then a ſort of Flies. All this while did Verrine, in contempt, tread vpon Belzebub, ſaying: Thou proud Spirit, and full of arrogancie as my ſelfe, thou ſwelleſt & art in the highth of pride. I hope there is no offence done, if that theſe proud creatures bee deiected and throughly diſhartened.

[i] The people of Townes & Villages there adioyning did flocke thither in great troupes.

Then Verrine ſaid to Magdalene, Magdalene the gate of Heauen is opened, ſo is the gate of Hell, and there men may enter in at full Carroche, yea foure Caroches together may haue eaſie paſſage thither, and all foure may enter in a front: but the gate of Paradiſe is ſo narrow, that few paſſe in thereat, and much humiliation is expedient to enter in at the ſame.

Ouer this gate, Obedience is ſeated, and vnder it is Humilitie, on the one ſide ſtandeth Charitie, on the other, Hope; and Perſeuerance is the Porter that letteth in thoſe that come thither. Humilitie repreſents the birth of the Sonne of God, and Obedience ſignifieth that the Sonne of God hath humbled himſelfe from his birth, vntill the time of his death.

Sinne is more vgly and deformed then the Diuell. If a man had a conuenient houſe of his owne, and a reaſonable competencie wherewith to liue, and yet without

cauſe

cauſe ſhould giue and caſt himſelfe into the hands of Turkes, and ſhould from them receiue hard vſage and entertainement: if ſuch a one ſhould plaine himſelfe, men would ſay vnto him; Friend, you were not well aduiſed: you liued well in your owne houſe, and who is cauſe of this calamitie but your ſelfe? I ſay there is no man that would compaſſionate ſuch a fellow: Euen ſo, euery man hath ſomewhat whereby hee is enabled to make oppoſition againſt the world, prouided that hee haue the grace of God: but if he will ſinne and inuaſſall himſelfe to the Diuell, who will pitty his caſe? He is diſabled in his braine, that enioyeth libertie, and doth voluntarily render himſelfe vp to ſlauerie. Then hee confirmed this ſpeech with a ſolemne oath, and after ſaid, to what vſe and purpoſe are wholeſome waters if there be none to drinke of them? you muſt frequent the Sacraments, that you may make your profit and aduantage of them. Magdalene, the iudgements of God are not to bee ſquared by the iudgements of men: you are to ſtoope and abaſe your ſelues in this world, if you will aſcend to that which is to come. This which I haue ſpoken (Magdalene) was neuer hammered in the ſhop of Hell.

The Diuels haue at ſundry times preached, and broached diuers curioſities to the preiudice and perdition of thoſe that entertained the ſame, but the things which I deliuer, conduce to the amendment of mens liues and conuerſations.

The ſoules of men fall as thick into Hell, as the Corne doth from the Mill. Men goe to Hell by thouſands, but they enter one by one into Heauen: though it bee not alwaies ſo. At times, there haue gone to Heauen 10000. Martyrs in one day, and 11000. Virgins in another day, and many other arriue there after ſundry manners, according to the good pleaſure of God.

The ſame day Verrine was asked, why Magdalene was not yet endowed with vpright intention, ſince ſhe followed followed his inſtructions, and the day before the conception had hartely renounced Satan. To this hee anſwered, that he is perfectly poſſeſſed with vpright intention, that caſteth no luſtfull winke or glance of the eye on any creature; yet a man might haue an honeſt heart, although his intention doe fleete and wauer, and might be as it were placed in the middle, ſeazed vpon by neither party. Then he ſaid, that he was not able to ſpeake one word before another, but as he receiued them from aboue, ſo he ſpake them.

The Acts of the 18. of December.

THe ſame day, as Father Francis one of the Order of S. Dominick did ſay Maſſe, at the eleuation of the Chalice, Verrine began to cry, ſaying: It is a truth, that the body and blood, and the whole humanitie and Diuinitie of our Lord, all, all is here preſent. God is at this time contented to obey him that ſayeth Maſſe. This God who is ſo [k] powerfull, doth ſubiect himſelfe to obedience: yet you that are but lumpes of clay, are ſo refractarie and rebellious, that you labour to withdraw your obedience from ſo good a God: obey him, obey him.

After this, when ſome would haue Louyſe to communicate, hee ſpake aloud, and ſaid: goe, and call mee hither Romillon; this is to teach you obedience. O [l] Romillon, thou muſt command me in the power of that bleſſed obedience, and by the ſame power thou muſt command her to communicate. Then he ſaid, communicate all you firſt; Louyſe ſhall be the laſt. And before ſhe did communicate, Verrine began to ſay, be well aduiſed how you goe to [m] Confeſſion: there be many that goe to Confeſſion, and enquire after a Prieſt, and deſire the Prieſt to make their Confeſſion for them, ſaying: Father, tell me a little my ſinnes, for I haue forgot them. What fooles are theſe, doe they thinke that Prieſts are Gods

[k] See the Page 18.

[l] He deſireth to be commanded. See the Anſwere to the fifth doubt after the Epiſtle to the Reader.

[m] Of thoſe that goe to Confeſſion without due preparation.

Gods and Prophets, or that they know those sinnes which they haue neither seene nor committed. I am verily of opinion, that such as they should giue absolution vnto the Priest, because it accordeth with reason, that he that confesseth should receiue absolution. There are others, that will not sticke to commit many sinnes, and when they come to Confession, they say, why should I confesse my sinnes to a Priest? I thinke it very vnfit to reueale all vnto such as they: they are men and sinners as we are. But I would know of them why such kinde of men should goe to Confession at all, if they doe not subiect themselues vnto the authoritie of the Church? The Church doth positiuely command and say, Thou art to confesse all thy sinnes at the least once a yeere. Then hee said: Take good heede to your Confession: it is a businesse of no small importance: this I affirme to my owne confusion and damnation, but God Almightie doth force me thereunto. Then hee swore that this was true, and that in confirmation thereof, Louyse should[n] communicate without any contradiction or repugnancie: an accident that neuer happened since shee came thither, but onely once, to strengthen and confirme the disputation which hee had with the Minime Friar.

[n] See the 19. page.

When Magdalene was about to reade the aboue mentioned letter, directed to the blessed Mother of God, Belzebub began to resist, and hinder the same: whereupon Verrine stood vp and said: take courage Magdalene, persеuere, and hold firme for God: Magdalene beleeue mee, Belzebub is almost disweaponed: Take courage Magdalene and perseuere; thou hast begun well I assure thee Magdalene, and will sweare it vnto thee.

It is true, I am the[o] Sergeant sent by commission from my King to execute that designe which he hath recommended vnto my charge much against my will: but like a Gally-slaue I am forced to obey him, and am come with [o] Verrine stileth himselfe Gods Sergeant.

P A profitable and vse-full discourse vnto Magdalene.

with a rod, and knocke at the doore P of Magdalenes heart: but I found it shut, and all the windowes closed vp, so that I knew not where to enter, but was vpon the point of returning backe. But God commanded mee, that I should knock at the gate in good earnest, and should get it opened. I performed his pleasure, and haue not varied from it a iot. Yesterday I knocked, and to day it was opened, and then the stone which kept the doore fast, was taken away. It standeth with reason, that hee who proueth rebellious, should haue the most greeuous punishments inflicted vpon him.

This is true Magdalene, persеuere, persеuere Magdalene, for thy God is come to dwell with thee. God herein resembleth a King, who sendeth his Sergeant at Armes to see his Commission executed. When the Sergeant comes, he saith: Open doore, for I come from the King: then are they constrained to open vnto him, and he casteth his staffe into the house, and returneth to the King saying, his Commission is executed. The King maketh vse of a paltry Sergeant that is not worth a farthing for the performance of his seruices, as if he were a man of value and estimation, for the Kings authoritie hath no reference or dependencie vpon the Sergeant: so doth God make vse of me (who am of no reckoning) to be the instrument of things that are good and commendable. Take courage Magdalene. Thou hast indeede a great Inditement, but take comfort Magdalene, for Mary is thy Aduocate, thy President, Commissary, and Solicitor, euen as Monsieur du Vair being the first President, is also the most sufficient Solicitor that is in the Parliament of Aix: Cheere vp thy selfe Magdalene: all are thy aduocates on high in the Parliament of Paradise.

It is true Magdalene, thou hast but begun to day seriously and in good earnest to be conuerted: at all other times thou wert newtrall and betwixt two, neither against

gainſt God, nor for the Diuell: but now thou doſt reſolutely take armes againſt Belzebub. This is true Magdalene, this is true. Then Belzebub began to buſtle vp himſelfe and ſaid, there is yet a time wherein ſhee may be had: whereupon Verrine roſe vp and tooke Belzebub rudely by the hand, ſaying: Thou lyeſt Belzebub, thou haſt no part or portion in Magdalene. Beleeue it Magdalene thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee: it is moſt true, and I will take my oath of it. Then he ſware vpon the Goſpell, that all which hee had deliuered was true, ſaying: I ſweare by the liuing God, by the power of the Father, by the wiſedome of the Sonne, by the goodneſſe of the holy Ghoſt for confirmation (Magdalene) of all the words which I haue ſpoken. But doe not you thinke that I will leaue Magdalene thus: there is no reaſon that ſhee ſhould goe to Paradiſe without humbling her ſelfe vnder the burthen of repentance. I tell thee Magdalene, thou muſt bee repentant, and muſt with all lowlineſſe and debaſement of thy ſelfe make reſignation of whatſoeuer appertaineth vnto thee into the hands of thy God; thou art to ſuffer him to do with thee whatſoeuer ſhall ſeeme good vnto him; thou art to obey thy ſuperiour as if he were a God on earth: for it is ſaid: honour the Prieſts becauſe of their dignity and calling: which in regard the Angels themſelues cannot paragon or equall, it ſtandeth with reaſon that you ſhould haue them in good eſteeme and veneration. O Magdalene, theſe are thy Gods on earth: honour them, and doe all that which they ſhall command thee, agreeable to God, his Church, and their authority: obey, Magdalene, and humble thy ſelfe, craue pardon of all, and beſeech euery one to ſay a [q] Miſerere for thee; fall downe groueling vpon the ground, and bid all come and put their feet vpon thee, to the vtter confuſion of Belzebub, Lucifer, and of all hell, yea of [r] Verrine himſelfe that doth command it. After this he began to ſay, take all this as ſpoken to thy ſhame, and thou ſhalt reape profit by it; it will minister vnto thee occasion of contrition, and of satisfaction; it will asswage and lessen the paines which thy sinnes haue deserued. Then he cried aloud as one beside himselfe, It is true Magdalen, thou hast been buffitted, thou hast been spit vpon, and hast borne a thousand disgraces and disparagements, but bee of good cheere Magdalene, all shall turne to thy aduantage. Hee further made great exclamation, saying, O great goodnesse of your God! how wretched shall you be if you doe not serue him with all fidelity? for a little affliction which you endure in this world, you shall bee clothed with robes of honour in Paradise. Your God is so gracious, that for a little paine which a man here endureth for his sake, yea for a glasse of water giuen for his loue, or for a little mortification in this world, hee will esteeme more of these, then of a long and languishing durance of the flames in Purgatorie: and turning againe to Magdalene hee said, Bee of good cheere Magdalene and be glad, and take into thy possession and vse those two wings, wherby mens soules doe soare vp to heauen, that is, loue and feare: the one toucheth the earth, the other climbeth heauen. The two wings that carried Magdalene to S. Pilon, were the loue which shee did beare towards her God, and that filiall feare which kept her back from offending against him.

[q] This was the faſhion of publike pennance.

[r] Verrine craueth his owne confuſion.

The same day did those that were sent to Marseille with a purpose to giue the letter vnto Lewes, returne from thence, hauing effected nothing in the businesse; For it seemed strange vnto the Capuchin fathers, that they should be actors in reclaiming of him, and would by no meanes proceed in the same, till they had taken aduice and direction from father Michaelis, vnto whom they sent certaine fragments of this their brotherly resolution, and one of their reasons against this was, because at that very time there was in the City of Aix one possessed in the couent of the Capuchins; where where the Diuell swore crosse and opposite to that, vpon which the correction and pretended reformation of Lewes was founded, saying, that Lewes the Priest was no Magician, neither was Magdalene bewitched. This being thus related in the presence of Verrine and Belzebub, Verrine said that this Diuell was sent from Lucifer to stagger and make doubtfull the truth of these things, and that he had taken a false oath; for the Exorcist did not deale with that circumspection as hee should, in exacting this oath with those solemnities that are requisite vnto the same: that is to say, hee was not made to sweare according to the meaning of God, of his Church, &c. Yea Belzebub himselfe contrary to his wont and custome (for hee did alwaies stand in opposition against Verrine) said in great choller and fury: yes, that which Verrine tels you is most true: for that Diuell was expresly sent from hell, to say that Lewes was no Magician, and that Magdalene was not bewitched: but hee spake not truth in saying so, neither did he sweare according to the meaning of God and of his Church, and that hee was now grieuously punished for the same. All which hee confirmed with a solemne oath, vnto the which hee was enforced, as Magdalene did afterwards testifie to haue inwardly felt in her selfe.

[f] It is a Chapel, where behinde a certaine pillar there is a peece of the mountaine, whereunto the Angels carried S. Magdalene with great singing and melody, much reioycing at her repentance which she there performed for the space of 30. yeeres, as she told an honest religious person, that presently died after she had reuealed this vnto him, as was foretold him, in token of the truth thereof. Sylueſt. Prieras hath wrote the history of her fol. 5. post. Pasch.

The t same day I receiued a letter from father Michaelis, dated the 16. of December. 1610. in this tenour.

t Father Michaelis at that time preached the Aduent at Aix.

Reuerend father, Pax Christi vobiscum. I was well pleased to heare such good newes from you, and to vnderstand that your labour towards those poore soules was not idle and without fruit: of the which I doe so well approue, that I delegate ouer vnto you all my authority as well of Inquisitour and Priour, as of Vicar generall. Cudgell these Diuels lustily, who are Gods and our sworne enemies. The manage of these affaires I wholly leaue vnto your selfe, as being well practised and dextrous in things of this kind, and by Gods assistance hope to see you after Christmas. So recommending me vnto the praiers of your reuerend selfe, of the father Vicar, and of father Gadriy, saluting you, and desiring you to tell Frier Simon from me, that hee bestirre himselfe lustely herein, I rest, Yours most affectionate in the Lord. Fr. Sebastianus Michaelis, Vicarius generalis, Prior, & Inquisitor fidei. From Aix, the 16. of December. 1610.

The same day after dinner Magdalene seemed to be much changed, being full of spirituall ioy, and ready to doe and leaue all for the loue of God. She said, that the day before shee had receiued many blowes, and much disgrace without any feare or trembling in her heart, although Lucifer endeauoured at the same time to make it appeare otherwise in outward shew; and that she had receiued and taken in good part those instructions and discourses which in S. Baume were proposed vnto her. She said that in the said place shee did for the space of 3. or 4. howres sensibly feele a kind of gentle sweetnesse, softly distilling and dropping vpon her heart, with a quiet internall silence so admirablie pleasing, that in all her life she had not knowne, nor seene, nor heard the like.

She was also that day shut vp within S. Baume, and confessed, that the [u] Sabbath and assembly of Witches was kept in S. Baume. In the euening they were Exorcised by father Francis, and Verrine after his accustomed manner began to say, They that make difficulty to beleeue that the Diuell constrained by Exorcismes may auow and sweare a truth, are worse then Hereticks, because they must deny the vertue of Exorcismes, the authority of the Church, and the Omnipotency of God. I could tell you all the villanies and sins you haue committed, but I am tyed vp from doing mischiefe. Wee that are Diuels can doe nothing but that which is euill, and Angels can doe nothing but that which is good:

but

[u] They oftentimes assẽbled in a place that is vnder the Church, and ioyning vnto the chamber where Magdalene lay.

but men are able to doe either good or euill, as being endowed with a free will, and yet, O God, there are of these creatures that doe rebelliously demeane themselues against thee, and are indeed worse then Diuels. The paines that men suffer in this world are as flowers and Roses in comparison of the paines of Hell, which are true torments indeed: I tell you the fiers of this world are imaginarie and painted in respect of the fiers there, and all furnaces are as nothing if they be compared but to a sparke in Hell: Diuels are as wild and rauenous beasts: they bite in their embracements. Wee promise much and performe nothing, because where nothing is nothing can bee expected. You that are × Priests bee circumspect and aduised in your calling, because it is no offence if a man neglect and turne from an Angell of heauen, to doe honour and reuerence vnto you. The Angels indeed doe incessantly behold the face of their God, but you with foure words doe make him descend vpon the Altar, and since herein the King obeyeth his vassall; how wretched must that Priest bee that doth rebell and mutter against his superiour: you lumps of clay, it will not go well with you, vnlesse you humble your selues and bee repentant. Disobedience was it that turned Adam out of Paradise, and the same disobedience cast Lucifer headlong out of Heauen; If God were capable of sadnesse, hee would weepe when he seeth a rebellious and disobedient man, so highly doth that sinne displease him. Euery one ought to liue contentedly in his vocation. You that are Priests and religious persons ought to studie, preach, and search out the truth, for you are sequestred from this world to be seruants vnto the light. Many seeke truth and cannot find it, because they search after it with a dim and obscure lanthorne: other search it with a greater and fuller light, and they finde it. Faith is this light, and humility the doore that openeth vnto truth. The curious walke vpon the brinke of Hell, and thinking alwaies that they shall finde out what they make inquisition after, they doe at last stumble and fall downe, the head first, and the rest of the body after: witnesse the Caluinists, Caluin, Beza, Luther, these were the heads of our new Hereticks, and all the body, to wit, those, that follow and adhere to their opinions doe fall into this gulfe, if they die obstinately in their fancies: this is it they must looke for vnlesse they be conuerted.

× Vnto Priests and religious persons.

You that are in religious Orders attend seriously vnto your vocation, and obserue the commandements and counsels of God, and know that your life is a light vnto worldlings, and a patterne or copie of their liues and conuersations: you must studie a new booke, a booke that hath but two leaues; the first leafe containeth the manner of attaining vnto perfect humility in the birth of the Son of God; the other leafe containes the obedience which till his death hee euer practised. I tell you, that those who shall reade this booke aduisedly and as they ought, I dare bee bold to promise them on Gods behalfe life eternall, because in this booke is comprehended the beginning and end of perfection. He that is humble is neither curious nor rebellious, but is apt for commands and full of obedience; and the obedient cannot die but liue eternally: by obedience I vnderstand such a kind of subiection that shall no way be disagreeable vnto God or his Church, or the saluation of soules; for if I should say otherwise I should lie. And I say (turning himselfe to the Assembly) speaking vnto you in generall, not in particular, that our Lord had twelue Disciples, of whom one was starke naught: The Iewes were formerly the true children of God, but now they are a reprobate Nation: so I say, if you see a wicked priest, you are not presently to ground from hence that all the rest are like vnto him: if you see a wicked Frier or religious person, you are not by and by to coniecture that their religion is naught: But here is the great misery of worldly men, who when they see a wicked Priest, are presently ready to say, this is the conuersation of them all: I say vnto them that herein they doe bely them, and they are not to speake after this manner; for the wicked cannot preiudice or dispa-rage the good, and those that thus despise Priests doe it to this end that they may haue freer scope to liue in li-berty and licentiousnesse. The booke of humility is hard to be vnderstood by a man that is not very intelli-gent, but when hee once shall know the interpretation of the same, hee will find all manner of vertues contai-ned therein: for she is a Queene that bringeth with her many Princesses and Ladies in her traine: and as in a chaine one ring followeth and dependeth vpon ano-ther; so doth humility vpon obedience: the ground-worke of true perfection is humility, and the end is o-bedience. Great God for this cause wast thou borne, for this cause didst thou die; thou wert borne in a man-ger, and died'st naked vpon the Crosse, and hast endu-red death itselfe, yea a most cruell and ignominious death.

see

y Cursed be those that shall fight in single cumbate, for hereby they transgresse the Commandement of God, and of their King, and doe contemne the Excom-munication of the Church. Many children are so il-aduised, that they beleeue neither father nor mother, and doe well deserue the miseries which doe after-ward ouertake them; Absolon may be a true witnes of the same.

y Against sin-gle cumbates.

In the world all things goe by friendship and partia-lity, but it is not so with God; the Monarch and the begger; the faire and the foule; the lame and the per-fect are all alike, if they be in grace alike. You of the lai-ty keepe the Commandements of God and his Church, and you shall be saued: Heauen was not made meerely and solely for religious persons: bee you onely carefull to loue God, and to serue and obey him. Such and so ad-mirall is the power of God, that he stinteth not himselfe to the praiſes of Angels or of his creatures, but goeth further, and commandeth the Deuill himſelfe, (by compulſion and not out of loue) to glorifie him and to put his good pleaſure in execution. Though all Angels, all men, and all Hell ſhould inceſſantly enlarge and extend their ſpeaches to relate at full the glory and perfections of God, yet could they neuer attaine vnto the ſame; it is an abiſme whoſe bottome is inſcrutable, and cannot be diued into by the greateſt Seraphins, or the Mother of God her ſelfe, God is onely he who can comprehend it. Many curious perſons conceiue their iudgments ſo able that they can compriſe within the ſame all Gods power, all his ſapience and goodneſſe, and all his other perfections. Ha! how ſhort commeth their vnderſtanding of theſe myſteries; they muſt humble themſelues if they will goe to Paradiſe, you cannot goe any other way; beleeue mee, this is the path that leadeth to Heauen. [z] The ſame day Verrine bid Father Francis Billet to take the Stole, and the booke of Exorciſmes, and willed him from God, & in the vertue of thē to command him to dictate this enſuing letter directed vnto a Preiſt of the Chriſtian doctrine that was tempted to doubt of his vocation: the Exorciſmes being performed accordingly, he began to dictate in forme as followeth.

[z] See the Anſwere vnto the fifth Obiection to the doubts after the Epiſt. to the Reader

Deareſt and welbeloued brother, I heere aduertiſe you that we aſſuredly know for a truth, that whatſoeuer your Reuerence hath conceiued againſt your vocation is nothing elſe but a meere ſuggeſtion of the Deuil, who is an vtter enemie to God and all obedience. He endeuoureth to infuſe into you rebellion againſt God and your Superiour, and would haue you to beleeue that your iudgment is able to comprehend all the ſecrets of God. But I aſſure you it would require and take vp all our time if we ſhould endeauour to learne and enquire into the ſecrets of God. For his ſecrets and iudgments are ſo abſtruſe that none of themſelues can bee certaine of the manner of them. Many there are that haue a conceite ceite they know the will of God, and that their vnderstanding is very perfitely illuminated: but for the most part they are beguiled. For wee see by daily experience, that they may be deceaued, and no question are deceaued, since euery day there are new wonders full of rare and admirable strangenes, discouered in this our God. And perceauing a burthen and pressure vpon my soule, if I should bee wanting vnto you in this office, I haue sent this letter vnto you to wishe you instantly to dispatch your selfe hither for S. Baume with as much speed as possibly you may. If you come before Christmasse, you shall vnderstand, as I conceiue, diuers passages so excellent in themselues and so aduantageous vnto you, that you would not for the world but bee made familiar with them, for they are so full of nouelty and strangenesse, that no man aliue did euer see the like. Knowe that Louyse Capeau whom you haue formerly beene acquainted withall, one of the vnworthiest and meanest Sisters of the company of S. Vrsula that are at Aix, is bewitched and possessed by three Deuils that are within her body: It was a Charme that gaue way to this possession of Deuils, which did befall her by the permission of God, and out of a zeale shee had to suffer Hell it selfe, and all the paines thereof (so that she might not be separated thereby from her God) for his glory and the saluation of soules. And being setled for many yeares in this resolution, and comming often times to blessed Communion, shee prayed still vnto God that he would take compassion vpon the soules of her neighbours, and this she demanded with such ardency of desire, that it is almost impossible for any to attaine vnto the like. And being moued by him that internally spake vnto her and said: Whether, if it were expedient, to hazard thy body and to expose it euen vnto death for the saluation of thy neighbours, wouldst thou willingly vndertake the same? she accepted of it many times, saying, that shee was ready to endure all, and that it was fit

fit to preser the soule of our neighbour before our body or our owne life. Thus God out of his great goodnesse hath made choice of her for a worke which neither you nor I euer dreamed of, nor should euer haue beleeued, if wee had not seene the experience of the same: and those who haue not had the oportunity to behold it, may perchance hereafter at the least haue meanes to read this wonder. For euery one laboureth with all diligence that may be to make such vnhard of euents, and so strange a Miracle to appeare vnto the world. And I doe assure you, if you did but vnderstand it aright, you would leaue meate and drinke, nay your very studies to haue knowledge of that, which euery day offereth it selfe vnto our considerations. For Father Michaelis being inspired from God, counselled Father Romillon to bring Magdalene from Palud, and to search out al other that were bewitched, and bring them to S. Baume, that they might there make their vowes. Being there, Louyse Capeau came from Aix her selfe alone, accompanied with none of the rest that were possessed, where shee found Magdalene already arriued. Touching Louyse, she would by no meanes at the first heare tell of Exorcismes, saying, that she was not possessed, and that all might arise from natural causes, or by the sleights and power of the Deuils that were in the body of Magdalene. She was at Aix when they [a] discouered themselues, and it was done in the time of Confession; (then was Magdalene at S. Maximin) and although her Confessours did cleerly demonstrate vnto her, that this straine and fancie of hers against possession, could no way sute with probability, yet was shee so swolne with pride, arrogancy and rebellion, that shee would not submit her iudgment vnto her Superiour, who commanded diuerse to make inquiry of this matter at S. Baume. And the Deuill within her said, I will not obey him: so that when it was offered vnto her consideration, how that she was now in the presence of God himselfe (for it was [a] It was discouered by certaine strange and vnusual gestures.

with-

within the Church of S. Vrſula) and when he that confeſſed her at the time the Deuils began to bee diſcouered, did reproue her, and ſay, [b] How dareſt thou to ſpeake thus before thy Superiour? She anſwered, that ſhe would ſubiect her ſelfe to the command, neither of Gouernour, nor Gouerneſſe, neither would ſhe regarde or thinke of them: that ſhee thought her ſelfe more knowing, how to conduct her ſelfe in her owne behauiours and deportments, then they could be: that ſhe would rely vpon her owne iudgment; and that Superiours did many times command things very vnfit to be put in execution. All this while did not ſhe vnderſtand, that this was a ſtratagem of the Deuils, to giue hindrance and ſtoppe vnto the worke which is now ſo well begun. And although the Deuill would haue ſhifted this off by ſundry ſlights and colluſions, yet in the end either by force or out of loue ſhe was contented to be obedient; although ſhe ſtill was ſtiffe in her opinion, that ſhe would not ſuffer her ſelfe to be exorciſed. But God changed her intendment, and diſpoſed her hart to embrace the good pleaſure of God and of her Superiour, and to renounce and diſclaime her owne: ſo that ſhe came to S. Baume, and there ſuffered her ſelfe to be exorciſed. Whereupon one of the Deuils named Verrine began to ſpeake and to tell his name, and after many adiurations wherewithal he was chained and bound vp, he reuealed the names of his companions; and vpon the continuance of the Exorciſmes, he ſaid and ſwore (taking a ſolemne oath with all the properties and particulars thereunto belonging) vpon the bleſſed Sacrament, ſaying theſe words. I ſweare by the liuing God, that all which I haue ſpoken is true. And further, I ſweare according to the meaning of God and his Church, that the Deuill and all Hell haue made a combination and ſolemne agreement to ruinate the company of the Chriſtian doctrine, and the company of S. Vrſula, becauſe there is a dependance of one vpon another, and by abo-

liſhing

[b] They did at firſt impute all vnto Louyſe, but after the diſcouery was made, it was iudged that the Deuils within her, made her ſpeak in that manner.

liſhing the one, the other will of it ſelfe fall to decay. Many other things he ſpake at this Exorciſme, and bade vs not from Romillon but from God to ſend and ſearch after all [c] thoſe that were tempted, and particularly one who is very high and haughty, and is too ful of conceite of his iudgment and of ſelfe-will, and to warne him, if hee bee wiſe to ſubmit himſelfe to the will of God, and to his obedience, that is, to returne to his calling, and that he come hither to plead for himſelfe, For heere is (ſaid hee) an Aduocate, that is ſo skilfull in matters of pleading, that he will quickly eaſe and disburthen him of all care and ſcruple, and of all thoſe doubts which did ſtagger him in his apprehending of the pleaſure of God: for hauing ſought the ſame with an obſcure and dimme lanthorne, it was not to bee wondered at, if hee were not able to finde it.

But God ſeeing him thus benighted, did ſend vnto him a bright and cleare burning flame, ſo that hee can now no longer ſhift things off with excuſes; if hee bee wiſe let him come, that it may bee diſcerned what belongeth vnto the light and what vnto darkneſſe; what to lyes and what vnto truth, and what difference there is betweene his iudgement, and the iudgment of God. Come therefore hither with all promptitude and readineſſe, and for-ſlow not your time, to bee informed in a point that toucheth you ſo neerely, and call to minde how earneſtly you haue beſought God for this very particular: and theſe prayers of yours God hath heard, ſo that you need not feare to be forſaken; as they haue beene a ſweete ſacrifice vnto him, ſo ſhall they prooue very profitable vnto you, if you wil but humble your ſelf to his good pleaſure. Remember what God hath ſpoken, that hee will giue grace to the humble, and reſiſt the proud of heart. You are vnworthy to know his pleaſure, neither ſhall you euer vnderſtand the ſame, if you doe not bow vnder obedience, and humble your ſelfe towards him. You may turne ouer as many bookes as you you will; this is a new booke and very lately compoſed, and not yet publiſhed to the world: within this booke there are not aboue two words; and yet heere is compriſed the Epitome and abridgment of all perfection: this is our Philoſophy and Diuinity, which wee are ſo ſeriouſly to ſtudy.

[c] Some Preiſts of the doctrine were tempted to forſake their vocation, becauſe of theſe poſſeſſions, and grew factious at the laſt againſt their very Superiour.

Call alſo to your remembrance, that they who will not read this booke, are very vnworthy to aſcend vnto ſo great and ſublime perfections. Come therefore, and trifle not with any ſtudied or prepared delaies, for God expecteth you, that he may beſtow vpon you that which with ſuch ardency you haue beſought at his hands, that is, to open your vnderſtanding, that you may be made acquainted with his will. Remember what hee ſaith, Aske and you ſhall haue, ſeeke and you ſhall finde, knock and it ſhall be opened vnto you. Call to minde, how often you haue knocked at the gate of this King, and how he who had the key of this gate, to wit, Peter, hath ſaid, yea, and interceded for you as for the Cananite, ſaying, Lord, giue to this poore blinde man that which he demandeth (who would haue thought then that thou wouldeſt haue prooued ſo darke in the knowledge of Gods will?) But God grew angry at theſe interceſſions and ſaid, I doe not vſe to caſt away my graces vpon a proud man. If thou ſay, that thou art not proud, then thinke thy ſelfe to be depriued of light, and that hee who conceiteth himſelfe to bee humble, doth notwithſtanding appeare in full pride before God. But if thou ſay that thou art proud, I alſo will confeſſe the ſame, and there is no hurt done, if proud men be taught and leſſoned to bee humble. If thou tell mee thou art humble, I muſt bee bold to ſay that it ſuteth not with truth: for he that is humble indeed taketh no notice of his owne vnderſtanding or will, but ſuffereth himſelfe to be guided as a blind-man by him that leads him, and verely beleeueth that the other ſeeth better then hee: and if thou be blinde, then can it not bee hurtfull, that he he who of himselfe is depriued of light, should goe and seeke it of him who hath the same. And I doe assure thee thou shalt plentifully finde it, if thou obey the will of thy Superiour, and acknowledge thy selfe to be subiect vnto him: that is to say, to the Reuerend Father Remillon. Louyse prayeth you for the loue of God to begg of God fiue things for her which shee hath long desired, and that you would also lay hold vpon them for your selfe, that is, an vpright intention, a pure affection, integritie of conscience, simplicity and humility, together with obedience and resignation of your selfe in all things that may concerne the glory of God, for the saluation of soules, and for our good in particular.

She further intreateth, that you would be pleased to pardon her, if she hath beene too presumptuous to take on her to teach you; for it is not her intention so to doe, but the vrgent necessitie of the matter is such, that shee hath beene bold to make thus much familiar vnto you, which shee prayeth you to take in good part. Shee should be very sorry, notwithstanding any pride that may be in her, but to take all your counsels and admonitions with due respect, and to humble her selfe to him whom she knoweth to be inuested with so great dignitie as is the calling of Priests: for she desireth nothing more then to honour them as Gods on earth, and as befitteth so high a dignitie. Your most humble, affectionate and obedient seruant to doe whatsoeuer you shall be pleased to command, Francis Billet the most vnworthie Preist of the Congregation of the Christian Doctrine, being a witnesse of what is aboue mentioned.

The Acts of the 19. of December. 1610.

THis day at the eleuation of the blessed Sacrament, Verrine began to speake aloude when he saw them take the wax candles which they vse to light at the eleuation of the Sacrament.

This

This light which you heere see, represents the faith which you ought to haue, of Gods being in the blessed Sacrament with his Diuinity, Humanitie, and Blood: yea, I say further, he is also within the Chalice. What seekest thou further? I confesse it, it is a truth, is it not sufficient that I haue confessed these to be present in the blessed Hoast? And so fell downe and worshipped him.

Speaking of God, he said, yes I adore thee, Adoramus te Christe. And when they came to these words, Redemisti, &c. he cryed out, You, you, not me, for he is not my Redeemer, but a seuere and terrible Iudge. Then he made an exclamation, and said, O great miracle! although in saying thus, what nouelties doe I speake? for it is no new thing that the Sonne of God should yeeld obedience vnto a [d] Preist.

[e] Ha God! it is no great wonder for thee to raise the dead, to make the blinde to see, or the dumbe to speak, with many works of wonder of a parallell nature: but the wonder of wonders is, that the Sonne of God with foure words should be made to descend vpon this Altar: although I could tell you another great wonder too, and that is, that the Deuill is here forced to deliuer the truth. I doe auerre, that it is more strange that a Deuill should thus deliuer truth, then to create 1000. worlds, or to raise 1000. from the dead: for it is a matter of ease and course with God, to command those things that giue no stoppe or resistance vnto his will. When God created the World, hee said but, Fiat: When he raised the dead, he said but the word, and all thing obeyed him: But when he comes to command a Deuill, he had need to employ all his power to enforce him to performe his will. For the Deuill is so mischeeuously bent, that he [f] resisteth as much as he is able, and is euer disputing with God, propounding diuers reasons vnto him, saying, they haue preachers, and they haue stoore of bookes, let them giue credite vnto them.

He

[d] When it is said, that God obeyed the voice of Iosua, the meaning is, that he granted him that which was desired of him, that is, he stayed the course of the Sunne.

[e] It is not strãge that Almighty God should begin a new creation, or raise the dead: but the strangeneſse is, that a Deuill should to his ruine discouer his owne associats in relating truely the fact, as is in this History.

[f] The example of Satan communing with God is set downe in the 1. chap. of Iob.

He further said: God is like the master of a great shop, he is his craftsmaster in all trades, and will giue euery one of you wherewithall to employ himselfe. He is so skilfull and gallant a Taylor, that hee cutteth out garments with much dexterity, and wants nothing but whom he may set on worke. Hee is well experienced to cut out your worke, you Ecclesiasticall men may doe well to employ your selues vnder him, because you that are priestes ought rather to lead the life of Angels then of men, and are to bee intrusted with the counsels and Commandements of God.

Then he turned himselfe to the Layity, and said; No no, the Priests haue not the world at will as you conceiue: they must be humble, chast, and poore, and must chastice and mortifie themselues sundry waies, which is a point full of difficulty vnto those that are deuoid of charity. Then he spake to the g Monkes, and said: You that liue in Cloisters, haue an eye vnto your estate, for it is not enough to bee mued vp in your walls, and then to liue at your ease, no, you must rise at midnight, you must be very studious; you must bee humble, you must be modest. You should be a glasse vnto secular persons, and harmelesse and vnblameable in your conuersations: yet doe you worldlings thinke that religious persons doe liue in idlenesse and ease. I tell you, that the employment of one houre at mens studies is a greater toile then the trauels of a labouring man that sweateth at his worke a whole weeke.

g A discourse vnto the Monkes and religious persons.

The good conuersation of religious persons is of inestimable vse amongst Christians, therefore obey God and his Church, and ten thousand soules will be conuerted after your example. Say not wee are young: if you had a licence or warrant from another world, I might then perchance aduise you to delay your amendment: but thinke of death, and consider how suddenly men are surprised by it. Death is a theefe, and stealeth vpon men when they least looke for it. Happie are they that are found to doe good, and miſerable are they that wallow in their ſinnes when death approacheth: for death will ſpare neither great nor ſmall.

h Then he ſpake vnto the Laity, and ſaid: you are to liue euery one according to his calling. In Paradiſe there are Kings, and there are poore people: for ſome of all eſtates and conditions are ſaued. Doe not mutter and ſay, wee are poore, wee haue not wherewithall to liue: God will haue regard vnto your pouerty, and will ſaue you: but the great ones cannot excuſe themſelues: you that are poore haue reaſon to reioyce, when you ſhall conſider that God became poore for your ſakes.

h A diſcourſe vnto the poore people that were preſent in that aſſembly.

God is a Taylor that wanteth nothing but workemen; he is a Phyſition and a Surgeon that maketh enquirie after thoſe that are infirme or wounded.

Reade well the booke of the Crucifix, and you ſhall there find all variety of knowledge: if thou doeſt obiect, I am not able to reade this booke, I tell thee thou lieſt, for this booke may bee read by men and women: yea by people of the moſt groſſe and muddy capacity that may bee: you may reade it in Churches, in your houſes, in your beds, and in the fields, and all manner of vnderſtanding is treaſured vp in this booke, that may any way concerne the ſaluation of your ſoules. Looke on this booke and reade it well, for in it you ſhall find all ſorts of vertues: humility, pouerty, patience, obedience, and whatſoeuer elſe may make full a mans perfection. Rich and poore, and people of all conditions, looke in the glaſſe of the Croſſe, and behold therein a God ſo great, ſo humble, and yet ſo full of Maieſty: you ſhall there ſee your God poore, & will you then hate or deteſt pouerty? If pride ſuggeſt theſe haughty thoughts into you, thinke that your God tooke man vpon him to humble himſelfe to the death of the Croſſe. It is a greater miracle to ſee God dwelling in the fleſh of man, then to behold the creation of one hundred thouſand worlds. The Word equall vnto his father hath taken humane nature vpon him, to ſuffer and to be put to a cruell death. And you Mary haue endured much alſo which hath bin the cauſe of the ſaluatiō of many ſoules.

If a King ſhould haue a ſlaue, and would redeeme him by giuing 10000. Crownes for his ranſome: this were a great ſumme and an extraordinarie fauour; but if he ſhould giue a Million of gold, his grace and loue would ſhew it ſelfe the more by how much the more the ſumme encreaſed. But this would appeare but a ſlender curteſie, if hauing but one only ſonne he would giue him away to redeeme and purchaſe back this ſlaue vnto him: how infinitely would men maruell at the curteſie of ſuch a King? But all this is nothing in compariſon of your God who hath but one only Sonne, yet gaue him vp for you that are ſinners: this ſonne (I ſay) that is equall to his father in power, in wiſedome, and in goodneſſe, that is, the bleſſed Word.

O great wonder! that the Sonne of God ſhould thus ſuffer for ſuch vngrateful creatures, who make ſo little profit of the ſame. If ſtones were capable of vnderſtanding, they would expreſſe ſome action of acknowledgement; and if leaues could bee furniſhed with the ſame, they would alſo declare their thankfulneſſe: but you are the moſt vngratefull of creatures, and doe not acknowledge the loue and tender care that God hath ouer you, whoſe greatneſſe is ſuch, that if you had but the leaſt knowledge or ſide-long glance thereof, you would creep with your belly vpon the earth, and would eſteeme your ſelues vnworthy of that deiection. God is a glaſſe, and bleſſed is he that taketh Chriſt Ieſus, and the mother of God for his glaſſe to looke on. It is true, that whileſt ſhee liued in the earth ſhee was contemned and held to bee a woman of meane condition: but know you not that Gods cuſtome is to abaſe the proud? you that are poore would very faine liue in the deſert of this world, but you want money to buy drugges or confections of the Apothecaries thecaries: this want may easily be endured. Come, and vnderstand what may more neerely import you, how you ought to be deuout to the blessed mother of God. I tell you those that are deuout vnto her shall neuer die in mortall sinne. Mary is the sinners aduocate. There is a great inditement betweene God and the soule, the blessed mother of God makes the report, the Angels and Saints are the Aduocates. Mary is the poore sinners refuge, and thou Magdalene hast obtained remission of thy sinnes. Let the Crosse therefore bee your Grammer, your Philosophy, and your S. Thomas. Then he confirmed all this discourse, and diuers other matters by an oath as his maner was.

Then he spake to i Magdalene, and said; Well Magdalene, are you satisfied now? Is it not better to obey God then Belzebub? Then Magdalene said aloud, yes, I finde a great deale of difference betwixt them. Verrine replied, a minute of the ioyes of God is more then the eternity of all hell, and all the delights of the world put together.

i An exhortation vnto Magdalene.

k Magdalene, thou must change thy selfe, thy name shall remaine still Magdalene, but touching thy first workes, thou shalt bee Magdalene no longer. Thou shalt be changed Magdalene, and as it were transformed from what thou art into a new forme. You know that those who make cheese when they haue failed in making it good, they doe vnmould it againe and make it better: euen so God, when hee seeth a soule disfigured and defeated of shape by sinne, hee taketh it vnto him, and doth alter and fashion and new frame it, and so makes it pliable vnto his will. And as the cheese doth still remaine the same cheese, so doth the creature remaine still the same creature: but he that hath refashioned the same is Omnipotent, vnto whom all things owe subiection, and whom the Diuels themselues obey when they are constrained to execute his pleasure. The creature may for a short space resist, but God hauing k The manner of Magdalens transformation in soule, and of other persons.

waited a long time, and growing now impatient to ſtay ſo long without doores, ſaith theſe words. No, no, I will enter in, I am maſter of this houſe, and am come to faſhion this Image a new, whom the Diuell hath ſo deformed. I am the [1] Painter; ſhall not I mend this picture when it ſeemeth good vnto me? Witneſſe my Paſſion, when my holy and ſacred face was couered ouer with ſpittle, but it was to make my countenance ſhine the brighter: I am content that in this world you ſhould be deſpiſed and defaced euen by the Diuels themſelues, for all creatures are my pictures: I am the Painter, and haue made them all: but the Diuels my mortall enemies doe often come by ſtealth and disfigure theſe portraictures, and do deface them after ſuch an outragious manner, that I my ſelfe doe tremble to behold them. But remembring that they were my handy-worke, I take the pencell of holy inſpirations with the colours of my graces, and come to this picture and giue him the firſt draught by contrition, and another by confeſſion, and after that by ſatisfaction. I am content that the linnen cloth ſhould ſtill remaine the ſame, that is, the body and the ſoule of the creature. Now God, who hath all manner of liuely colours in his hands, knowes well to diſpenſe theſe colours as ſeemeth beſt vnto him: giuing men the white of Humility, the red of Charity, the orange of Patience, the greene and yellow of Hope, that he may one day take comfort in this his pourtraying: and that this excellent peece may come and giue him thankes in that he hath framed him and faſhioned him anew, when the Diuell in his malice had razed and disfigured him. Thus doth God by the ſoule of Magdalene: ſhee was a portraicture that God himſelfe had made, but Belzebub, Lucifer, and all Hell did bandie themſelues and were reſolued to deface it: not once or twice, but I dare ſay a thouſand times. God being impatient to ſee them ſo maliciouſly bent, was deſirous to conuert her, gaue her to vnderſtand, that hee had a long time time with patience waited for her, threatned her with great authority, with words so strong, with such violent strokes as it were with hammers, that she was constrained to open the gate to him who saith; Open vnto mee and I will enter in, and dwell with thee, it is long since that I haue been heere at thy gate Magdalene, suffer me to enter in and giue me thy keyes.

[1] Ieſus the Painter, Magdalene the picture and Image.

The [m] same morning, after the Exorcismes were finished, Magdalene performed three acts of humilitie: at the first she craued pardon of the whole Assembly: at the second she desired to be forgiuen by all those that were absent, confessing that she was not worthy so much as of Hell, and intreating, that they would set their feete and treade vpon her. Hereupon Verrine said, that this was more pleasing to God, then a whole yeares repentance. At the third, she said to the Assembly, that she would lie along at the entry of the Church, desiring all that were present to tread vpon her, as the most wretched creature of the world, which was accordingly performed: then [n] Verrine said, that such an act of humiliation was neuer before performed by any that euer was possessed, and that Belzebub would rather chuse to be tortured in Hell a thousand yeares then to haue endured such an affront and infamy in the body of Magdalene.

[o] The same day about two a clock in the afternoone there came thither in the company of certaine Gentlemen, a Huguenot that would needs dispute with the Deuill. When suddenly the Deuill Verrine began to say, Shee whom thou seest heere is the daughter of an Hereticke, shee is of S. Rhemy, her father and mother died Huguenots, and Monsieur de Beaucamp is her kinsman, who would haue disswaded her from dedicating her selfe to the seruice of God; but now by his permission she is bewitched and possessed, hauing three deuils in her body. Doe not thou conceiue that thou art now to enter into the lists of disputation with a woman; no, thou

[m] Magdalens Act of humiliation.

[n] That it should bee performed in this humble manner, for al those that passed by did tread vpon her that was possessed. Hee speaketh onely of those that were actually possessed.

[o] Disputation betweene an Heretick and Verrine.

thou ſhalt not direct thy ſpeech to her, it is I that will grapple with thee. Come neere, and aske what thou wilt. To this he anſwered, I aske nothing. Then ſaid the Deuill, you are quickly ſatisfied; it ſeemes you are very rich, that you haue need to aske nothing. And bid the Gentle-man propound what hee had thought to haue ſaid; What is it (ſaid hee) that you would bee reſolued of? To this the Gentle-man ſaid, How prooue you that the Church was the true Church? The Deuill anſwered, There is one God and one Church. The Huguenot replyed vpon this, I beleeue the Church. Verrine ſaid, Doſt thou beleeue the true Church which is the Church of Rome, I know thou doſt not beleeue it?

He anſwered, let vs leaue that point, I affirme that I am in the true Church. Verrine replyed that it was not true. Then did the other bid him to ſhow ſome reaſon, whereby it might bee declared whither the Saints may pray for vs or no. Verrine ſaid, Who ſo denyeth the Prayers and Interceſſions of Saints, denyes an Article of his Creede, which doth confeſſe the communion of Saints.

Then replyed the other, I am not ſatisfied with this, giue me a better reaſon. To which Verrine anſwered, Doe not you your ſelues pray ſometimes one for another? You know full wel, that you pray for your Kings and Princes, and doe you conceite, that there is leſſe charity in Paradiſe? I ſay no: for ſtanding before the preſence of God, and God being Charity it ſelfe, it falles not within the compaſſe of doubt, that Saints pray for vs. But the other ſaid, that for all this hee was not yet ſatisfied.

Then Verrine told him, Thou art proud, yea and curious in thy nature, thou deſerueſt not to haue fruition of the light, for thou doſt not endeauour to ſearch forth the ſame. Then they fell vpon the point of the bleſſed Sacrament, and the Huguenot ſaid, that it was neceſ-

ſary

sary to beleeue that his diuinity onely was there, and not his humanity. Verrine answered that he was really and truely there, both in Diuinitie and Humanity, and alledged diuerse reasons for the same, saying, that who so denyeth that, denyeth the first Article of his Creede. Thou dost acknowledge (said hee to the Huguenot) in thy Creede, that God is Omnipotent, and yet dost now crosse that, and denyest heere his Omnipotency: for if hee be Omnipotent, then is hee of powerfulnesse to performe the same; which he also doth for his body and diuinity are in the blessed Sacrament, whereunto hee added, that Gods word ioyned with his power could not but take effect, and that when God had affirmed a thing, it was impossible for him to lye.

Then said the other, And I affirme that wee receiue him not but by Faith. Verrine answered, This (by Faith) will lead you all to Hell, if you bee not humbled, and giue way vnto the truth. The other said, And how is the body heere, when it is said, that he sitteth at the right hand of God? Verrine replyed. It is true, hee is so: yet doth he not say, I can be no where but at his right hand, he said, when he made the first institution of this blessed Sacrament; Take, this is my body and my bloud, it is not said, this is by faith, but it is said, This is my body: as often as you doe this, you shall doe it in remembrance of my Passion. Then Verrine added. You deceiue your selues, in that you thinke that the body of our Lord doth fill or take vp any place. No, no, it is not thus, for his body is a glorified body, and is adorned with all the qualities of a glorious body, yea I doe further say, that he being more perfect then all, hath therefore a body so blessed aboue all other, that hee occupyeth no place, but is couered and shrouded in a litle [o] bit of bread onely.

[*] Then there began a disputation between Leuiathan and Verrine in the presence of the said Huguenot and of sundry Catholicks, one of the Deuils speaking and sustaining sustaining the cause of God (which is Verrine) and the other, to wit, Leuiathan (who is the master of all Heretickes) the cause of Lucifer, and speaking interchangeably, they reasoned to this purpose.

[o] He meaneth the visible accidents, and speaks according to the phrase in Scripture.

[*] Disputation between Leuiathan and Verrine.

What? (said Verrine) is not God Omnipotent? May not hee exact this seruice from the Deuill, to enforce him to doe his will, when it shall be best pleasing vnto him?

P Leuiathan did cõtradict him, for he is the father of lyes, & did lye in whatsoeuer he heere vttered.

P Leuiathan taking the Huguenots part, replyed. My friend, doe not beleeue him, wee are all the fathers of lyes. Ha! you shall shew your selfe very weake to giue credite to his words; beleeue me you are in good way, beleeue me, and hold on your course. Verrine answered, thou lyest, and art not able to prooue it. Leuiathan said, I will sweare solemnly that he is in a good way. Verrine replyed, thou art an accursed spirit, and wilt take a false oath against God and his Church. Leuiathan said vnto him, No, I say, I will take mine oath according to the meaning of God and his Church. Verrine answered, Thou canst not doe it, vnlesse thou haue some sinester and reserued intention. Leuiathan said, leaue this talke, you neede not search so deeply into the botome of this. I onely bid thee, answere to what thou oughtest.

Verrine said, I am heere on Gods behalfe. It is true (said Leuiathan) and I am heere, on the behalfe of Lucifer. Then Verrine said, that is the very reason that thou art not able to say what I say, but onely tellest lies, thou art in the body of Magdalene, that thou maist destroy soules, but I am heere to saue them. That is true, Leuiathan. Then said Verrine, wilt thou take an oath, as I will, affirming that there is but one God, one Baptisme, and one Church? I am heere to take part with God. Leuiathan turning himselfe towards the Huguenot, said, Bee resolute my friend, bee resolute, thy Church is the true Church, thou mayst safely follow these paths.

Then Verrine told him that hee lyed, and that it was

the

the Church of Darkneſſe, wherein no truth was to bee found: and becauſe they tooke not the help of a candle to direct them to the habitation of truth, but ſtumbled along with a dimme and darkſome Lanthorn, what wonder was it if they miſcaryed from their way, and could not attaine vnto it. Leuiathan ſaid, No, this is the true Church, which is beawtified with the fair appellation of the reformed Church. Verrine replyed, I tell thee it is the Gulfe of Hell, becauſe the curious tread dangerouſly on the brimme of that Gulfe, and are euer labouring and digging neere the brinke thereof, and not being able to finde that which they ſearch after, they doe at length tumble in: and when the head falleth into this pit firſt, the reſt of the members of that body doe eaſily follow after: witneſſe Beza, Caluin and Luther, who alledged and ſaid, that they were Preiſts and Religious perſons, yet did they deſpiſe all Religion, and all Eccleſiaſticall Diſcipline. And although darknes iſſued from thence where light ſhould haue remained, yet for all that, (ſaid Verrine) men ought not to take away Preiſt-hood, or to aboliſh the orders of Religion, becauſe there are ſome wicked Preiſts, and ill-diſpoſed Religious perſons. For proofe whereof he alledged, that in the company of our Lord himſelfe, there was a Iudas: yet who would bee ſo fooliſh to conclude that the reſt muſt be as wicked as hee. Then ſaid the Huguenot, how prooue you that God hath commanded vs to pray to Saints? Verrine anſwered him, it is an Article of your Creede; if you be wiſer then God, why goe you not and pluck him from his Throane? To this he ſaid, I am not yet ſatisfied in this point, but tell mee, how prooue you there is a Purgatory? Verrine replyed, yes. I will prooue it eaſily vnto you: I affirme that God hath ſaid, that no defiled thing ſhal enter into the kingdome of Heauen. To this the other anſwered, that he was not content with his replications, becauſe the Deuill is the father of lies. Verrine ſaid it is true, wee are the fathers of q Hee ſpeaketh of the whole ſect of them.

of lyes when wee haue free and vncontrouled ſcope to ſpeake from our ſelues; but being conſtrained by God, wee haue a neceſſity impoſed vpon vs to deliuer the truth. What? thinkeſt thou that thou diſputeſt with the woman heere? Thou art too arrogant; thou deſerueſt not to haue thy vnderſtanding inlightned: thou art too curious, and what thou haſt heere heard will not bee auaileable vnto thee. The Huguenot replyed, hold thy peace, thou art not able to anſwere, and art indeed but a block-head. Verrine anſwered, it is not words will bring men to Heauen, there muſt be an addition of ſome thing elſe: faith & good works are to be thought vpon by thoſe that will goe to Paradiſe. Here-vpon Leuiathan ſaid, turning himſelfe towards the Huguenot: my friend beleeue mee, ſtand ſtoutly to it, I will accompany thee if it ſeeme good vnto thee.

r Thinking that he had all this while ſpoken vnto her that was poſſeſſed a Mayden of ſome 19. yeares.

r Then the Huguenot ſaid, with all my heart, ſhake hands, & let vs goe if thou wilt. To this Verrine ſaid (directing his ſpeech to the Huguenot) Soft and faire, ſoft & faire, the Deuil hath no power on her body, although he vſe her toung as his inſtrument to expreſſe himſelfe. But you Sir, where doe you conceiue you are, in ſome wood or at ſome May-game? and taking him vp very ſharply he ſaid, the Deuil take al thoſe who neuer go to Church, but to commit a thouſand ſinnes and impieties. The other ſaid vnto him, is there no ſhame in thee, that ſpeakeſt thus before thy God: thou art worſe then a Deuill to pronounce theſe words. O accurſed wretch, ſaid Verrine, thou doeſt not deſerue the leaſt glimſe of light: for when thou ſpakeſt this, thou diddeſt conceaue thou haddeſt ſpoken vnto a creature not vnto the Deuill: thou miſerable loathed, and abhominable caytiffe: thou art worſe then the Deuill: yea, thou haſt inwardly reſolued to commit ſome notorious ſinne: get thee gone thou wretche, get thee gone. Dareſt thou to be ſo hardy, as within a Church where the bleſſed Sacrament remaineth to conceiue that which thou haſt con-

conceiued: thou deseruest death, thou obstinate fellow. Then [s] the Huguenot departed, & Verrine said vnto the Catholicks that were present. What? did you see how this wretch shrunke away, learne you by his example, and doe not doe as you haue been accustomed, kneeling onely vpon one knee when you came to heare Masse. No, no, you should not misdemeane your selues thus, but should behaue your selues as malefactors before your Iudge.

[s] He went away much discountenanced and ashamed.

In [t] the euening, Magdalene onely was exorcised, and during the time of Exorcisme there was represented vnto her a vision full of horror and amazement, for she saw two Diuels in the semblance of Serpents, each of whom held a soule in their mouth that seemed vnto her more deformed then Hell it selfe: and the fright of this spectacle did endure long after the Exorcisme, and had not quite left her when shee made relation of the same.

[t] The Diuell might represent vnto her imagination both the one and the other at one time. The very same happened vnto the woman of Laon that was possessed.

The same day father Francis Billet wrote vnto the Priests of the doctrine in this manner.

[u] Deerest and best beloued brethren, I beseech you in the name of Almighty God, that you would be pleased to come hither as soone as possibly you can: yea if you could to depart vpon the very day or the day after at fartheſt, that this messenger shall arriue vnto you, and to come hither; where you shall vnderstand of diuers passages and occurrences so strange, so vnheard of, and so vsefull, that hee who is not present to see and to be made acquainted with the same will hardly beleeue it. For they are things of that high nature, that who so vnderstandeth not the bottome and foundation of it, will hardly humble his iudgement vnto the truth thereof. But come, because this matter toucheth the glory of God, and of his Church, the conuersion of soules, and the honour and aduancement of your vocation. Come then, and doe not wonder if I do so often inculcate this word (come) vnto you, for I doe assure you that it is a matter matter of importance. Letters speake but once, & therfore I had reason to make frequent repetition of this word. Come then with all the speed you may. I should conceaue my selfe guilty of a great offence if I had not disburthened and cleared my conscience by writing this letter vnto you. You may obiect vnto me, that I am too easie of beleefe, but come and you shall see, that I am not alone of this opinion: If I am deceiued, there are others in the same case, whose iudgements I must beleeue to be more able and more piercing then mine owne. I doe assure you, that if you had seene and obserued these things, you would receiue great contentment thereby, and would rest very well satisfied. For God hath permitted, that a sister of the Company of S. Vrsula, most vnworthy though shee be, to bee bewitched, hauing three Diuels in her body. Her name is Louyse Capeau, who hauing from her youth begged of God to set her in some course of life wherein shee might remaine to his greater glory for the saluation of her soule, and the profit & good of her neighbour: and being entred into that vocation wherein now she standeth, in the first yeere of her nouiciatship God began to instill into her, strong and vehement desires to endure, for her neighbours, all temporall paine whatsoeuer: yea to vndergoe the torments of Hell it selfe, if it might bee done without her separation from God; and hauing persisted till this time in her request, especially when she was to receiue the blessed Sacrament, at length she had her desire, and did accept with great patience all the said paines and torments euer saying these words: Lord I thinke my selfe vnworthy to suffer any thing for the loue of you. Shee made all these requests without asking any mans aduice, because shee euer conceiued, that it was no way within the compasse of sin, so that when shee found her selfe possessed, shee was much abashed thereat, and wondred with her selfe from whence it might proceed.

[u] He doth inuite them to come thither, to shake off that tentation which they had, to relinquish their Company and Order, as receiuing much scandall from the same.

But

But God, from whom this was not hidden, did saue vs a great deale of labour, by laying his charge vpon one of the Diuels that were in her body to answere vnto the Exorcismes, and to deliuer the truth what the end was, wherefore he remained in her body. And although the Diuell after many adiurations which the Exorcists made vnto him, seemed obstinate in his silence, and would giue no resolution vnto any thing that was propounded; yet being commanded on Gods behalfe, and by the authority which he hath giuen vnto his Church, and by the vertue and powerfulnesse of Exorcismes, hee did in conclusion roare aloud, as though hee had been outragiously mad, with such high and affrightfull cries, that he was heard a great way off; and so turning to Magdalene of Palud, hee said three seuerall times, it is true Magdalene, it is true, it is true, Louyse is possessed for thy sake, and for thee doth she suffer this affliction. O Magdalene, Louyse is thy pledge, and repeated these words three times: her body shall bee afflicted particularly for thy soule, and by a consequent for many others. Then speaking to Louyse he said; consider that thou art an accursed, detestable, wretched and abominable creature, and so repute of thy selfe before God. I am constrained to lay it close vnto thee: endeauour to beleeue that of thy selfe which diuers would perswade thee to beleeue. If thou thinkest thou shalt be hurt thereby, thanke thy selfe, I cannot doe withall. Doest thou not know what is commonly said? harme watch, harme catch, thereby meaning the torments which shee had and was to suffer, saying vnto her, that she was not to vex her selfe, if these afflictions did fall heauie vpon her: for, said he, why wouldest thou then aske them? Cursed bee the charme by the which God shall receiue so many offerings of thanksgiuing, and men so many showers of benefits; and repeating three times cursed bee that charme, it was not (said hee) our intention, nor the purpose of the Magician and the rest that that agreed thereunto, that these things should bee brought to so vnexpected an issue. Our intendment is alwaies sinister and mischieuous, to cause all villanies to be set on foote and acted, and to procure iudgement to follow on the necke of them: wee haue been constrained from God to pronounce and declare him innocent, whom wee suggested vnto Louyse to bee the author of her troubles; wee haue opened and disclosed the name of the Magician by the vertue of Exorcismes, and haue cried aloud that he is such an one. Notwithstanding all this declaration of mine, yet will your apprehension come short of these things whose life consisteth rather in their action then in their relation. Afterward, vpon the day of the conception of the blessed mother of God towards euening there were diuers discourses vttered, full of excellency and vse, which hee promised should continue till Christmasse. Hee did in particular labour the conuersion of Magdalene, and in her the conuersion of many others: so that those who heard it twice a day at the time of the two seuerall Exorcismes returned from thence with full satisfaction, the whole assembly being filled with the admiration of it: Whereupon I will ingeminate this word vnto you againe, come if you be wise, and herein make declaration of your wisedome: for true wisedome is to harken and be obedient vnto the will of God. But you may obiect, how proue you that this is the will of God? Doe but come and these doubts shall bee cleared vp and dispelled. You know that there is no good but is accompanied with some difficulty, come, come, and bee assistant vnto our Lord, and suffer your selues to be a little diseased for his sake who for the loue of you did not feare to approch to Mount Caluary: doe not you then from the dutie you should beare vnto him, be dishartened to vndergo this trouble: hee hath shewed you the way, follow your Captaine. And since you are his souldiers, it standeth with reason that you should abide in your Garrisons

(I meane your vocation.) Come and bee not fearefull to combate with his enemies, for now occasion doth present it selfe, the enemy is discouered, and you are to fight no longer in corners: and God hauing regard vnto their patience that haue suffered so much for his sake, will in a full measure recompence the same. The Diuell had sworne very solemnly, that all Hell had a resolution to abolish and root out the Christian doctrine and the Company of S. Vrsula, to their vtter ruine and perdition; if their power had been of sufficiency to compasse the same, God himselfe permitting this for his glory, as he did tolerate the like practise vpon Iob. And to assure vs the better hereof, hee hath suffered the Diuel to reueale it, who hath been enforced to affirme that God would doe now as hee did by Iob, worke good out of these tentations, which the Diuell proiected for euill purposes. God is very cunning to draw good out of euill, and is like a skilfull Surgeon who when hee obserueth a man to abound with more blood then is expedient for his health, hee launceth him, and draweth that vnnecessarie superflux of blood from him, not thereby to kill him, but as the Surgeon taketh some blood from him that is sicke, the better to prepare him to be cured, and this is done to preserue him from many inconueniences and dangerous maladies which otherwise would grow vpon him: so doth God demeane himselfe towards vs hauing permitted that we all, without exempting any one should be tossed in this tempest. For the Diuell himselfe did affirme, that hee had left none of vs vnattempted, but said aloud, Francis, be not angry, thou hast had thy share in these tentations as wel as others: and so hast thou Iames (speaking to Father Rets.) It is true Romillon, it is true, all thy people haue been tempted, but be of good cheere Romillon, for thou shalt regaine them all. Peter Barmond hath been tempted likewise but you will recouer him, and most vnhappie shall he be if he doe resist it. And hee charged vs to send

ſend for him : wherenpon there was a letter written which alſo did concerne the Fathers of Aix, and was deliuered by Father Rets.

We doe already ſee a good and happy beginning in Magdalene of Palud who is now much ſtrengthened, and exceedingly altered in her inward man. Belzebub and all the Diuels in Magdalens body are forced to obey God ; and Verrine doth ſo taunt and braue them on Gods behalfe, that we all remained greatly aſtoniſhed. He would not ſticke to ſay, curſed art thou Belzebub, and you Balberith, Leuiathan, Aſmodee, Aſtaroth, and Carreau : yea hee out-dared Lucifer himſelfe, telling him that it was fit Almighty God ſhould bee obeyed, and not Lucifer or Hell, or the reſt of the Diuels. Hee would oftentimes cry aloud, Belzebub thou art my maſter, and I am a vaſſall of thine when I am employed from Lucifer, but now I haue my abode here by the appointment of God : hence it is that I ſpeake ſo arrogantly before my Prince, and doe braue all Hell, ſaying to Belzebub, Belzebub I charge thee in the name of Almighty God that thou lie all along vpon the ground ; and ſo treading vpon him, Verrine vttered theſe words full of arrogancy and pride : where are thy Princes now Belzebub ? and you that are there abiding, what is become of you now (ſpeaking to the Diuels) you are all of you Princes, at the leaſt fiue of you : if you haue any command or authority, I charge you anſwere me, I giue you leaue to call Lucifer to your aide, now hee hath an excellent occaſion to ſhew himſelfe. How now Belzebub, wilt thou ſuffer thy ſlaue to tread thus diſdainfully vpon thee ? Then crying to all the aſſembly hee ſaid : Theſe are my Princes, but now I doe not acknowledge them to be ſo, but I do this by compulſion not by loue, by conſtraint, not by grace. Belzebub anſwered him not a word, but ſtood full of ſhame and confuſion, and was able to reſiſt no longer. Verrine then began to ſpeake aloud to thoſe that were there preſent (for there was much much people there) come all of you, come, come, I say and feare not to triumph ouer Gods enemies and yours. Then the Company came and trod vpon him, Belzebub not daring to reply against it, or to mutter one word, but remaining exceedingly dismayed. Many other discourses were deliuered by him, the relation of which would take vp too much time; come you if you please, and you shall bee more particularly acquainted with him. Your most humble and most affectionate seruant Francis Billet Priest of the Christian doctrine, hath written this letter. Then hee signed it, as did also Franciscus Domptius, and a good distance below it was written. I Magdalene of Demandoul doe testifie and confirme that all which is written in this letter is true, especially that which mentioneth my repose of conscience. I find my selfe much changed, blessed be God and his sacred mother; for I assure you shee hath much assisted me. Pray vnto God that hee will giue me perseuerance, and his grace, that I may be a thankfull acknowledger of his manifold blessings which in such plenty he hath heaped vpon me.

The Acts of the 20. of December.

THis day Louyse and Magdalene were exorcised, and in the middle of the Exorcismes, x Leuiathan entred into the lists of discourse, and said vnto Verrine. O Verrine now thou hast nothing to say: then Verrine replyed, it is not for thy sake I speake, I now belong vnto a greater master then thy selfe, and him am I to obey.

x The conference between Verrine and Leuiathan.

Leuiathan said, hold thy peace thou art a proud spirit. To this Verrine replied, it is true, wee are all the children of pride. But is it not true, haue not I humbled thee? No said Leuiathan, thou hast not been any cause thereof; I tell thee it was the creature whom thou hast humbled. Verrine said, thou liest, it was not that creature: whatſoeuer hath been done, hath been done for thy confuſion and her conuerſion. Wretched caitiffe as thou art, I am heere an Embaſſadour from the liuing God, and thou an agent from Lucifer; dareſt thou deny this ſaid Verrine to Leuiathan.

Not I, ſaid Leuiathan: then Verrine ſaid, I am an Ambaſſadour from God, who hath ſent mee hither to put his will and not mine owne ends in execution. To this Leuiathan replyed, are there not other Ambaſſadours? There are Angels, and there are Preachers, is it not ſo? It is true ſaid Verrine, but thou art not ignorant that when a King would employ an Ambaſſadour, hee hath choice of Princes, great Lords, and Gentlemen; yet if his pleaſure be to ſend ſome Lackey; why, he is a King, and may command and doe what ſeemeth good vnto him; for he may vſe ſmall things to effect matters of great waight and importance.

Leuiathan anſwered, there is a great difference betweene them. True (ſaid Verrine) yet if the Kings of the earth be inueſted with this power, how abundantly more ſhall the King of glory poſſeſſe the ſame. It is true, there are Princes, there are Angels, and great Preachers: yet if his pleaſure be to command his meaneſt ſlaue, who ſhall hinder him to doe it, ſince hee is Omnipotent? yet is he not a whit the leſſe King, or the leſſe great, this doth not diminiſh or bring an ebbe vpon his glory: nay it is ſo different from that, that it is a touch of his greatneſſe to bee able to force our will, for of our ſelues we are all wicked, but God is able to tranſforme our rebellious nature into obedience, yea to make thee Leuiathan, and thee Lucifer to ſtoope and double vnder the yoke of ſubiection; for hee is aboue you all and can eaſily force obedience from you. Leuiathan ſaid, What? doſt thou looke to draw mens attention vnto thee? thou art but a Diuell.

True (ſaid Verrine) I am but a Diuell, but being by God compelled to deliuer a truth, I cannot but performe forme it. Knoweſt thou not, that hee raiſed Lazarus from the dead, and that his all-powerfull word in ſpeaking a fiat, framed whatſoeuer ſeemed good vnto him? Yes, (ſaid Leuiathan) but Lazarus did not hinder or reſiſt that miracle that was wrought vpon him, but theſe creatures here doe impeach and ſtoppe (as much as in them lieth) the execution of Gods pleaſure. Verrine anſwered, He is omnipotent, and changeth euill into good, nay, hee is of more force to attract and expreſſe grace out of ſinne, then hell is of malice, to draw ſinne out of grace: for he is king of the whole earth, and when he commandeth whatſoeuer ſuteth with his good pleaſure, I ſee he is obeyed; becauſe he that doth command it, is a King. God were not himſelfe, if he were not more powerfull then his creatures, nay I affirme, that then the Diuell would be mightier then God, for he can worke euill out of good, and cannot God worke good out of euill? You ſee how bold I am. Leuiathan ſaid: God doth indeed call y men vnto him by many ſecret inſpirations, by the teaching and inſtructions of learned men, by the threatning of his iudgements, and by the Angels themſelues, yet for all this they are ſo hardned in ſinne, and ſo groſſe of heart, that although they ſee themſelues hemmed in on all ſides, and cannot auoid to be conuerted vnto their God, yet in their arrogancy and flintineſſe of heart, they will not ſticke to ſay, Lord thou art willing to receiue me, but I am not deſirous to come vnto thee, for I haue nought to doe with thee. I had rather be a pray vnto the diuels, and haue a full fruition of all ſorts of pleaſure, then bee receiued of thee, and caſheere them.

y Againſt ſinners.

It is true, ſaid Verrine, that thou haſt ſpoken. There be ſinners of that improuident obſtinacie, that they will remaine determinately ſetled for many yeeres together in their wickedneſſe, ſo that God is incited to a kind of anger, and would be full of impatiencie at it, if ſuch paſſions could take place in God.

But I affirme, that they cannot reſide in God, for they would argue an imperfection in him: but if God were capable of impatiencie, or if he could bee grieued, I ſay, hee would weepe when hee beholdeth thoſe obſtinate ſoules. But God is not ſubiect vnto griefe: for they who affirme that the ſinnes of men doe ſtrike a ſadneſſe into the holy Ghoſt, are not to be vnderſtood as if the holy Ghoſt were indeed grieued, it is a ſinne to thinke ſo, but that he doth diſlike and abhorre theſe abominations; yet being an excellent painter, he is able, when he pleaſeth, to correct any deformitie in this his portraicture. Thou knoweſt Leuiathan that this is true, and that I am here by the appointment of God, but am tied and bound from reuealing of ſinnes. Leuiathan ſaid, Thou lyeſt, for thou haſt diuulged them, and art now conuicted of a manifeſt vntruth. It is true, (ſaid Verrine) but this is done for the good of theſe ſinners, neither could the miracle be manifeſted, if the ſinnes were not diuulged. Then turning himſelfe to Saint Magdalene, hee ſaid theſe words: It is true Magdalene, thou wert a ſinner, neither doth it redound vnto the diſhonor of God, or lay any diſreputation vpon thee that thou wert ſo, nor is there any diminution of thy happineſſe becauſe thou diddeſt formerly offend. That is true, ſaid Leuiathan, but there is a great difference betweene this and that Magdalen: ſhe needed no Diuels to conuert her, but was reclaimed by her owne care and induſtry, and therefore it is not probable that God hath ſent thee into this body for the conuerſion of theſe two ſoules, ſince there be many other meanes to bring this to paſſe without thy helpe who art the father of lies, and whom no man will ſcarce beleeue. Hold thy peace (ſaid Verrine) accurſed ſpirit as thou art, and giue me audience. It is true, I am in this body, God hauing ſuted and fitted his pleaſure to the deſire of this creature: I am here expreſſelie from Almightie God, for his glory, and particularlie for the conuerſion of theſe two ſoules, and miſerable

ſhall

ſhall they bee if they bee not conuerted.

Thou telleſt me, that Saint Magdalene was not conuerted by the Diuell, it is true, but wee liue not now in that time when God came downe from heauen, and with his Humanitie and Deuinitie did labour the conuerſion of ſoules: but I ſay withall, that he is ſtill the ſame God; and therefore is able to giue birth vnto thoſe works, whoſe greatneſſe may equall the former.

It is a truth (ſaid Leuiathan) that God is not in the world as in times paſt, yet hath he bequeathed vnto his Church his Sacraments, Preachers, and many other remedies which were not practiſed in thoſe daies. But none did euer reade that God made Diuels his inſtruments to conuert ſoules, ſince they are the fathers of lies, and ſtuffed with all kind of malice and falſehood. Who without great difficultie would giue credite vnto them? there is no man but would be readie to obiect, that God hath many other meanes to gaine ſoules vnto him, without taking the ſeruice and furtherance of the Diuels.

It may be ſo (ſaid Verrine) but tell me Leuiathan, are there not oathes whereby a truth may be auerred. Leuiathan anſwered, Knoweſt thou not that we[z] neuer ſticke to take a falſe oath? I am ſure thou knoweſt it; witneſſe the oath that was lately taken amongſt the Capuchins, you know my meaning. To this Verrine ſaid, Either make it appeare vnto mee that there is no oath that may bind and ſtand in full ſtrength, or elſe thou art vanquiſhed. For I ſay, that an oath taken according to the meaning of God and his Church, with all other due ceremonies and circumſtances requiſit thereunto, doth bind and is in force, and whoſoeuer will deny this, muſt deny the omnipotencie of God, all the authoritie of the Church, and all the bookes of Exorciſmes.

To what purpoſe doe men exorciſe, and make interrogatories vnto diuels, if their replies be neuer conſonant vnto truth? It were an idleneſſe to be prodigall of so much time, and to waſt so many yeeres, if this were so. It were much better that Exorcists should spend their time otherwise, and take vpon them some other course of study. To this Leuiathan answered, I haue affirmed, that all oathes are not true, because of the sinister and peruerse meaning and reseruations of the Diuels. I confesse (said Verrine) all are not true, because when the Exorcists are not heedy and well aduised of what they goe about, wee are so mischeeuous that wee reserue some secret and sinister intention, but when we are enforced like gally-slaues by the power of God, I tel thee wee must obey his pleasure; and therefore Leuiathan thou art confounded. For I my selfe, not from my owne will, but vpon constraint from God, haue lessoned and warned the Exorcists to apprehend aright all the intentions and ceremonies whatsoeuer that are requisite in the making vp of a true oath.

[z] Of theſe falſe oathes, ſee the acts of the 18. of December.

Then said Leuiathan, How darest thou speake thus in my presence, knowest thou not that I am mightier then thy selfe. I grant it, (said Verrine) thou art mightier then I to do a mischiefe, for thou hast more knowledge to doe it, thou being of the order of Seraphins, and I onely of the order of Throanes. I am one of your slaues, but let me tell you I doe not now respect any of you, (meaning the princes that were in the body of Magdalen, euery one of whom hee braued one after another.) What? (said he) answere you nothing? Are you such gallant doctors, and can you make no reply? Ha, you would answere now if you knew what. Come on, speake, speake.

[a] Leuiathan replied, knowest thou not that when sinners are obstinate, they are vncapable of conuersion: nay, God himselfe is not able to winne them vnto him; witnesse Iudas, whom our Lord could not conuert. How canst thou then conceiue, that a Diuel should bring this to passe, when God himselfe by the practise of all his art and cunning cannot accomplish the same. Verrine said,

I haue

[a] The answere vnto this blasphemie is set downe in the following discourse.

I haue affirmed that God is omnipotent, and may make an alteration in the free will of man, and change it from euill to good. Knoweſt thou not that God is a cunning Painter, who can faſhion and make vp a picture when it ſeemeth good vnto him, and is contented, if they doe but leaue him the table to worke vpon. It is true (ſaid Leuiathan) if the creature doe not hinder it; for God hath created man without his aide, but cannot ſaue him vnleſſe he co-operate and giue aſſiſtance vnto it. Verrine anſwered, If the body and ſoule doe remaine together, it is all that God deſireth, who well knowes when to take his pencels to correct and perfect vp this table. I affirme further, that if he will he is able to make it more beautifull and more goodly then euer it was before, which he may eaſily doe by laying on colours of more freſhneſſe and luſter. Knoweſt thou not that hee is the father of the prodigall child? If the fathers of this world be thus louing towards their children, and doe cheriſh them, and yet doe ſometimes threaten them, not to hurt them thereby but to make them wiſer and better aduiſed: how much more ſhall hee ſhake the rodde of his iudgements ouer them to preſerue them from the hands of Iuſtice.

And when the child of God ſhall acknowledge his fault, then ſhall he returne vnto his father, and humble himſelfe before him; for as the prodigall child did demand his patrimony to be giuen vnto him, which when he had gotten from his father into his owne hands, hee waſted all in riot, and was at length driuen to ſuch neceſſitie, and extreame penurie, that he was forced to feed with hogges: ſo fareth it with ſinners, God heapeth on them ſuch plentie of his bleſſings, that they are euen glutted with the multitude of them: yet when they haue conſumed all in the heighth of prodigalitie, this gratious father embraceth them, and taketh them vnto him, if they will not adde wilfulneſſe vnto their waſt. For if worldly fathers are ſo louing, ſhall not God who hath created them, bee much more gracious and good then they? I grant (ſaid Leuiathan) that there are many prodigall children, but very few propoſe that firſt prodigall child for their imitation, that like vnto him they may returne to God. For when they haue trifled and melted away all their goods, and haue faſhioned themſelues to take the impreſſion of all manner of impieties, yet doe they remaine in their obſtinacie, and are ſtill nailed faſt to whatſoeuer ſauoureth of malice and miſchiefe: and notwithſtanding that God calleth vpon them by many inſpirations, yet are they reſolued to reply vnto theſe his holy motions; We will take our fill of all worldlie pleaſures, whatſoeuer it coſt vs. It is true, ſaid Verrine, but yet when God will, he can worke good out of euill, for otherwiſe he could not be Omnipotent. It is no impotencie or imperfection that he is not able to ſinne or lie; it is rather an argument of his Omnipotencie, and of his tranſcendent perfection. We are both of vs Sargeants, and doe both execute our commiſſion, though after a different manner: for thou doeſt here fulfill the will of Lucifer, but I doe accompliſh the good pleaſure of the Almightie. Thou maieſt thinke that I doe braue thee; I tell thee ſtill that wee are Sargeants ſent, as it were, from two ſeuerall parties, and doe the wil of them that ſent vs: and although we doe not both execute the ſame cõmand, yet are we ſtil Sargeants. So if two preach, and both think they deliuer truth: as for exãple, a Preacher of the Church, and a Miniſter, although the action of preaching be commõ vnto them both, yet doth it not proceed frõ the ſame ſpirit, becauſe the Preacher of the Church vttereth the truth, but the Miniſter hath his vnderſtanding peruerted by errors, and doth interpret diuers paſſages of the Scripture according to the giddines of his priuat fancy, and is ſo ſelf-conceited (for they haue al of them a touch of curioſity) that he doth imagine he is able to bound in the Omnipotencie of the Father, the wiſdome of the Son, and the goodnes of the holy Ghoſt within within the narrow limmets of his owne vnderstanding. But such come far short, and haue their braine too much scantled, to comprehend God & his infinite perfections. God is wise, for he is Wisdome it self, & needeth not the aduise either of Angels or men, much lesse of diuels. I tel thee Leuiathan, that I am but the bare reporter of these things, and to effect this I doe thus trouble her that is possessed: for except God did put in vse his authoritie and force which he hath ouer Diuels, he were not God. I am of opinion, that those who will not humble themselues, might doe well to assault God, and take his glorie from him, and translate Lucifer from hell to seat him in Paradise. It is a grosse errour to conceiue that God is not more able to conuert euill into good, then the diuell is to change good into euill. I affirme that God is omnipotent, and therfore may do al things, and when he pleaseth to put his power in practise, he can force the Diuel as a Gally-slaue, & as like vnto a Iudge, can make the malefactor to tremble before him, and can compell him to accomplish his will when it seemeth good vnto him. They that do not beleeue this, are accursed, & want the first article of their Creede, which saith, that God is almighty. I submit my selfe to these things, because God himself obeyed his Executioners when they nailed him to the crosse. The Saints, whē they were lead to the place of their Martyrdome, obeyed the will of their executioners, and yet thereby they did not intend any glory either to the hangman, or to the Diuell, no more then did our Lord, vnto whom the vertue of obedience is most pleasing and acceptable: whereof I will now speake.

I resisted as much as I could, and said vnto our Lord, no, I will not deliuer this truth: hee told me, thou shalt be inforced thereunto. I answered, No, no, they haue bookes enough that doe plentifully declare this argument, but hee constrained me so that I must now begin with the vertue of obedience. Then Verrine began to say. What say you now to this point, learned Doctor (speaking (speaking to Leuiathan:) Thou art the Doctor of the [b] Hereticks, come and deliuer your opinion. And thou Belzebub, thou art that proud one, and doest fill men with curiositie, and cocker them vp in their arrogancie: And thou Balberith, thou art hee that saiest, Hee that loueth God, will haue him often in his mouth, and by this meanes makest mē to forsweare God: And thou Asmodee, thou art he who doest corrupt youth with thy loose speeches, and lasciuious lookes: And thou Astaroth, thou art he who assaultest men with idlenesse, especially you that are Religious persons: and thou Carreau, thou hardnest mens hearts, and thinkest to gaine all before thee: knowest thou not that with one poore word, with a Fiat, he can doe whatsoeuer seemeth good vnto him? doest thou not know that he is able to raise the dead? I tell thee it is very easie for him to doe it; witnesse the daughter of the chiefe Ruler of the Synagogue, when he tooke her by the hand and bad her rise; which signifieth vnto vs, that a sinne committed in thought, and only knowne vnto God and onely hurtfull vnto the soule alone of him that doth commit the same, is easilie pardoned.

[b] The places and offices of diuels are distinct.

[c] There are three sorts of dead men, as there are three sorts of sinnes: For there is the child of Naym the widow, whom they carried out to be buried: thereby intimating vnto vs, that there are some who are dead in vaine speaches, and they are carried out of the citie, that is: they flow from the soule into the mouth, and are there vttered, and the offence thereof commonly tendeth to the scandall of their neighbours. This is represented vnto vs by that young man, whom our Lord commanded to rise, and gaue him to his mother. Where by hee gaue signification vnto sinners, that when they haue offended, they are to be presented vnto their mother, which is the Church, as God commanded to bee done by the young man, as you well know. There are others that are dead in works, who are, for the most part, part, those that dwell in their sinnes, and remaine obstinate in them 20.30.40.50. yeeres, represented by Lazarus who had a stone laid ouer his graue And the reason why God commandeth to vnbind him is, that hee might declare how much authoritie hee hath bequeathed vnto his Church, and how much Priests ought to be had in honour and estimation; in reproofe of those who say they will not confesse themselues, obiecting, why should I humble my selfe before a Priest? is he not a man, nay, is hee not a sinner as well as I? why then should I declare my sinnes before a Priest? God is gratious, and will pardon me without confession. Then Verrine began to speake of obedience in this manner. [d] Obedience of all vertues is the most pleasing vnto God. Charitie is a great vertue, because without it there is no entrance into Paradise. Faith is also a necessarie vertue, for without faith it is impossible to please God. Hope also holdeth the same ranke, because it is our guide to heauen. Humilitie also is the groundworke of all vertues. To bee briefe, all morall vertues are profitable, good and praise-worthie: for I doe not affirme that a man may attaine vnto heauen without Humilitie, and without Charitie and other vertues; but I auerre, that hee who stands possessed of obedience, is garnished with all other vertues whatsoeuer. Obedience is the most excellent of all vertues, I meane perfect Obedience, for he that is perfectly obedient, is humble and charitable, he is confident, and perseuereth vnto the end: nay, I say further, he that is truely obedient cannot die, I meane an eternall death. For some may obiect vnto me, that Isaac was very obedient vnto his father Abraham, yet did he finish the course which nature had proportioned for him, and died. I say no, for Saint Paul saith, that those that are blessed from aboue doe not dye, but saith they sleepe as it is true. Isaac, thou sleepest, and shalt bee awakened at the day of iudgement. If thou haue the integritie of Obedience, there will

[c] Three sorts of dead men.

[d] Touching Obedience.

will be no oppoſition againſt thee: conſider this well you that are Religious perſons, and haue vndertaken the vow of Obedience. Remember that your God was obedient euen vnto the death, I ſay vnto the death of the Croſſe: he did not murmure againſt his Father, and ſay, Father this Mountaine is too ſteepe and vneaſie to come vnto (meaning Mount Caluary) no, hee ſaid not ſo. He did not ſpeake vnto his Father that he ſhould ſo prouide that he might ſuffer death in a Chamber or in a Hall, becauſe this mountaine was ſo loathſome, and ſo full of diſpleaſing obiects that it ſeemeth a very compound of noyſome ſauours. No, no, with a full deſire and free acceptation hee embraced death for the loue which he bare vnto you.

You that are religious perſons learne to obey your Superiours when they impoſe any thing vpon you, and ſay not my Superiour commandeth mee things of ſuch vneaſie performance, yea, almoſt ſo impoſſible to bee done that I know not how to turne mee vnto them. A religious perſon will not ſtick to ſay: Ha, my Superiour commandeth mee to declare my fault openly before people: this will edifie my neighbour but a litle. Let his Superiour command him to goe to Rome, and hee ſhall ſay, I know not the way thither: let him inioyne him to faſt, and hee will ſay, Ha, my father, I am of ſo tender a conſtitution that if this pennance bee impoſed vpon me, I ſhall be ſick: how harſh and vnpleaſing is it to be put to weare ſhirts of hayre. My Superiour is ſo froward that he is not to be endured. If the Superiour ſhall ſay vnto him, thou ſhalt vndertake to murther one of thy brethren, and the other not knowing the intention of his Superiour, who ſpeaketh this from his mouth not from his heart, onely to prooue him, will gaine-ſay him, he is not obedient, and therefore not humble: for obedience is the daughter of humilitie, and hee that is truely humble is alwayes obedient.

Learne you that are Monkes and Fryars, and read in this this excellent booke, that is to say, vpon the tree of the Crosse: It is your God who hath obserued his three vowes carefully, and as he ought; the vow of Chastity, for hee is puritie it selfe, and surpasseth all the Angels and creatures whatsoeuer as one that is immaculate and without blemish.

Touching the vow of Pouertie, he hung naked vpon the Crosse. He might haue beene accompanied with his traine of Princes (which are the Angels) hee might haue had garments to couer him, and whatsoeuer else was needfull, yet hee despised all, to demonstrate vnto you that are Religious, that you ought to surrender your purse and treasure vnto him, and suffer your Father to prouide for that which is necessary for his children.

Touching the vow of Obedience, he hath been more obedient then euer any was. I speake this to you Preists and Monkes: behold your selues well in this glasse, and read ouer this booke aduisedly, it consisteth but of two leaues, and yet containeth all perfection: there are but two words within this Booke, Obedience and Humilitie, yet if a man be rightly informed how to draw out the quintessence of this Booke, he shall there finde all sorts of vertue that may any way further or yeeld conducement, to the attaining of so high and sublime a perfection. To what end doe you exhaust your selues with studying, and doe so painefully imploy your selues in reading of bookes? Be but conuersant in this booke and you shall be able to performe the will of God.

If a seruant obey his Master, how much more ought a childe so to doe? Wee that are Deuils are as seruants or rather slaues, and doe nothing but constrainedly and by compulsion: but you that hope for an heritage in Heauen, are bound to loue and serue him. I further say, that God hath three sorts of seruants: There are that serue him onely by constraint, and those are such as onely feare Hell, and if that stumbling block were away, they would not care to drench themselues

in

in the puddell and pollution of any sinnes whatsoeuer. Others serue like hirelings, as doe those whose scope and aime is the attainement of Heauen, saying, God hath promised vnto vs Paradisus therefore we shall doe well to obey him. But there are a third sort more aduised, who doe not make either Paradise or Hell their scope, but doe the wil of their father purely out of loue, and haue not their end mixed with any secondary regarde of recompence: they set their confidence in God with their whole heart, and beleeue his prouidence in preparing for thē whatsoeuer is necessary: for (say they) if his care descend to birds and beasts, how much more will this his care extend to vs? God heerein behaueth himselfe like a Marchant who separat's farthings from sous, crownes from peeces of fower, setting euery sort a part by it selfe against the time he shall haue imployment for them, yet doth he not contemne his other money. So fareth it with God, hee taketh Religious persons, and those whom hee hath marked foorth for his seruice, and putteth them to his vse and imployment, that they may performe some seruice of importance for his glory: yet doth he not despise the lay-men, but receaueth them all if they walke in his commandements, as doth the Marchant all the rest of his money. Those that are refractary would haue their Superiour to bee obedient vnto them and not they vnto him: this is not well. No, they must be obedient beyond others, for know you not that they are tempted by the Deuill beyond others? If a great Prince or a great Lord offer to appropriate himselfe to the seruice of God, presently doe wee oppose and affront this his godly designement, we tempt him and say, Sir you leaue at ease in your own house, you haue thus many Pages, and thus many Gentlemen that waite vpon you, besides many groomes and Lackies: you are able to liue plentifully and neuer trouble your selfe: besides you are of a great house: Sir, doe not slaue your selfe when you may liue in libertie.

bertie. You ſhall haue a Superiour of baſe parentage, will you euer endure to obey him? You muſt beare the ſcrip vp & downe the towne: you muſt weare a ſhirt of haire, and muſt diſcipline your ſelfe. Ha Sir, this is too great a burthen, you will neuer be able ro hold on this courſe: diuert this reſolution, beleeue mee (ſaith the World) and they are not a few that beleeue and follow theſe perſwaſions. The childe in reaſon ought rather to obey his Father then the ſlaue his Maſter. The Maſter and Miſtreſſe, when they haue diſobedient and ſtubburne ſeruants, doe preſently pay them their wages, and ſay vnto them, you are not for our turne, you are to depart and goe forth of our doores: ſo ſhould a Superiour demeane himſelfe to his inferiours when he ſeeth them inclined to contumacy and rebellion, Get you gone, goe foorth of doores, for you are not to be heere to follow your owne fancy, thoſe that behaue themſelues vnduetifully are not to abide heere. But they may obiect that it is lawfull to propound vnto the conſideration of their Superiour ſome kinde of commands whoſe lawfulneſſe may be queſtionable, and ſay, Father, in my opinion ſuch a thing may be better done this way. No, beware of replications, for ſuch a one ought to ſubmit himſelfe and thinke that his iudgement may eaſily goe awry. I grant, that in ſome caſes hee may modeſtly reprehend his Superiour, but alwaies in great charitie, not by way of reprehenſion but by way of aduiſe, ſaying. Father, it ſeemeth vnto mee that you haue done ſuch a thing, or haue vttered ſuch a ſpeach, which in my opinion might better haue beene done or ſpoken after this manner. But this is to be done in great humilitie and feare, as if he were to ſpeake before God. Becauſe Superiours are Gods on earth, and thoſe that yeeld vnto them obedience cannot doe amiſſe, prouided alwayes, that the thing which is commanded bee not e againſt God or the Rules of his order or againſt himſelfe: for in this caſe he is not tyed vnto obedience. Nay, I ſay further, e In what caſe the Superiour is not to bee obeyed.

ther, he is bound to slight him, to oppose him, and to reprehend him if hee should command any thing that might directly derogate from God or the good of his neighbour, that is to say, he is to speake home vnto his Superiour, to open his fault and lay it before him if the fault be publick, as if he should command any one to preach heresies, or to doe something contrary vnto his Vowes, I affirme that in this case it is lawfull for the inferiour to reprehend his Superiour.

In the euening, Louyse and Magdalene were exorcised by Father Francis, and the Priest who exorcised them recited many appellations of God.

Then Verrine said, Say but the God of the Christians, and thou hast reckoned them all, for that is the beginning and the end of them. All these names of perfection and ten hundred thousand more doe agree vnto him: these are no matters of scorne or mockery, cursed are al they that doe not beleeue it. Then God being willing that [f] Verrine should speake something touching Confession that mens soules might be instructed and bettered by it. Verrine answered God, that they had banqueted sufficiently, and that there was no reason why Deuils should be mens Phisitians: they will not beleeue Angels, nay they wil giue no credit vnto God himselfe: for they haue said, that he was a dronkard, and a foole, much more will they affirme that the Deuill is a liar.

If thou saiest, that then by a consequent they must deny thy power, the authority of thy Church, and the vertue of Exorcismes, I answere, that they doe already deny the communion of Saints and the Sacraments. And if thou saiest that thou wilt guide them with thy light, I answere that they neither search nor seeke after the same. The Turkes may haue some shadow of excuse, and may pretend ignorance, but Christians may learne (if they will) those things, which they are to beleeue and take knowledge of. You are the Pictures of this master-painter; and vnhappy are they that suffer themselues ſelues to bee ſoothed vp by thē faire ſemblances of the Diuell. g Curſed be the houre wherein I am thus forced to open the meanes how men are to confeſſe themſelues.

[f] By way of Reuelation or intrinsick intelligence.

* Thou art hee Leuiathan who makeſt ſome to deny the wiſedome, others the goodnes, and many the power of God: thou art hee who teacheſt them new interpretations, which antiquity neuer heard of; thou art the author of all hereſies that euer were, are, and ſhall bee. Thou art accurſed, and wouldeſt haue plucked God from his Throne: thou art blinde, and thoſe that follow thee, ſay Credo without Credo; and when the blinde leadeth the blinde, both fall into the pit. Thou art the Doctor of the falſe Church, and although the father and mother ſhould forſake their owne childe, yet would God neuer abandon his Church.

h A father is not to anſwere for the ſinnes and faults of his childe; but hee that is a father of ſoules muſt bee accountable for the tranſgreſſions that are committed by his children. You therefore that are the Father and chiefe Paſtour, looke you vnto your charge. Confeſſion is to preceede the holy Communion, and Humility muſt take poſſeſſion in your harts, if you will haue your requeſts granted vnto you. If a King be to be intertained in your houſe, you will preſently decke foorth the ſame, and make your preparations ſutable to ſo great a State; and how dare you then receiue into your vncleanſed houſes the King and Lord of glory, when your Conſciences are defiled with all manner of pollutions? It is as if you would lodge God in Hell. For the ſinfull ſoule is the habitation and cage for Diuels, and is a Chriſtian ſoule, not indeed, but by appellation onely. You come into a Church and kneele vpon the ground, and wiſh that Maſſe may bee quickly finiſhed, but you doe not conſider that the Prieſtly dignity ſurmounteth the ranke and condition of Angels. I tell you, you are to bow your knees as oft as you ſhall heare the name g The cōſtraint which the Diuels ſuffer whē God commandeth them.

* Againſt Leuiathan the ſeducer.

h He meaneth a childe that is at liberty, and keepeth houſe of himſelfe: for then the father is not bound to cary an eie ouer his child, but the Paſtour of his ſoule is to take care ouer him, as long as he liueth.
* Of Confeſſion and Pennance.

of Ieſus: wee are a great deale better then you, for although wee obey not God for loue, yet doe wee yeeld vnto his pleaſure by conſtraint, and in the vertue of Exorciſmes.

If a Harbinger of Court ſhould come and tell thee, behold the King is deſirous to come and lodge in thy houſe; thou wouldeſt make many excuſes, becauſe thou doſt eſteeme thy ſelfe vnworthie of ſuch honour; and wouldeſt labour to garniſh thy houſe with whatſoeuer might be pleaſing, or might adde any beawty vnto thy habitation. So ſhould you take the broome of true contrition and repentance, to bruſh and ſweepe the chambers and roomes of your ſoule, that when the King ſhall come to reſide there, hee may make it his Palace.

You that are poore and ignorant people, you muſt not ſay when you kneele to the Prieſt in Confeſſion. Father, declare vnto me my ſinnes; this is no good forme of prooceeding: for if in matters of ſlight importance concerning the body, euery man hath his vnderſtanding [i] quick and able, much more ſhould their conceptions bee free from dulneſſe and earthineſſe, in thoſe things that appertaine vnto the benefite of their ſoules, and which are of a higher conſequence: yet contrariwiſe men for the moſt part are inſenſible and dull in the apprehenſion of them. There are thoſe that doe daily confeſſe themſelues, and doe yet forget many of their offences; how then ſhall they giue an exact account of them, that confeſſe themſelues but from yeare to yeare, or from ſix moneths to ſix moneths? Thou wilt not ſhame to ſay, Father I doe not remember my ſinnes, let me heare you to aske and examine mee. O deafe and blinde caitife! art thou able to giue audience vnto the Diuell, and to fall into thoſe ſinnes, which hee inticeth thee to plunge into, and doſt thou refuſe to harken vnto the voice of God, who deſireth to breath into thee the remembrance of thy miſdeeds?

[i] Signatum eſt ſuper nos lumen vultus tui Domine. Rom. 2. Conſcientia accuſante, aut etiam defendente.

Others

Others say, To what purpose should I confesse my selfe? Is not the Priest a sinner as I am? Haue I nothing to doe but to expose my sinnes to his knowledge? Beware of these contempts, I tell you they are instigations of Sathan, framed purposely to bring Priest-hood into disgrace, which is a calling more high and noble then is the dignity of Angels: for the Angels doe indeed contemplate the face of their God, but he [k] discendeth from Heauen vpon the Altar, at the consecration made by a Priest.

Your processe that is entred in the high Court of Heauen, is full of difficultie and doubt, so that the euent thereof is not knowne to the Saints themselues: yet is the Mother of God a party with you, who together with your guide-Angels is euer pleading on your behalfe, and saying, Lord take compassion on them.

Before the time of Confession, prooue your selues, examine your owne consciences, pray vnto God with teares, and make your intercessions vnto Peter, Magdalene, and the good theefe. The good theefe of his owne accord confessed his sinne, and reproued his companion, What? hast thou no feare of God? He was also pricked in heart by contrition, saying, Domine memento mei. Lord remember me, he also did in a sort satisfie by dying, for hee linked and mingled his death and torments with the death and torments of Christ Iesus.

Your God doth endeuour to draw you vnto him by many admirable meanes, he will diuide the contrition, and acknowledgment of your sinnes amongst you, and will stirre you vp to recall them into remembrance, if you will giue eare vnto him. You should be patient in whatsoeuer aduersity may befall you: you should euer stand before your iudge, like vnto men that are guilty of high treason, and should thinke that the paines of Hell are not of equall proportion vnto your demerits, and that you are not worthy to [l] suffer them.

[k] It is a phrase of speech vsed in ỹ Scripture where it is often said, that God descẽded on earth, or the Word came from Heauen, as also the same phrase is giuen to the holy ghost, although they stirre not frõ thence, neither moue they by a natural & locall motion, but they are here often in the truth.

[l] That is to say, they are worthy of a higher punishment, & that to indure them, is a fauour in respect of their deseruings: as a Parricide is not worthy of whipping.

God is better knowne vnto them that cast downe their eies on the * earth, then to those that stare vp to heauen. For what are you but a compound of dust and ashes? meate for wormes, and a pitcher of hansome earth, apt to breake, and subiect to a thousand miseries and mischances? You are therefore to abstract your cogitations, and to place them aboue vpon the goodnesse of God, who for your sakes hath created the Heauens, and filled vp the number of Angels, yet are you still hardned in your iniquities.

* The example of the Publican and the Pharisie in S. Luke 18. cap.

God pardoneth mans offences easily, if so bee that hee lendeth his helpe and forwardnesse vnto it: for God is hee that doth operate, and man doth co-operate with him.

If you should dwell in a darksome house, and would faine enioy the benefit of the light, you ought to open the doore vnto him that bringeth his torch lighted vnto you, for hee is not worthie to bee enlightned by the torch, that will refuse to open the doore to him that bringeth it. And if hee should afterwards complaine, that hee sitteth in darknesse, and by meanes of being depriued of this light, hee is not able to worke, hee will bee answered, that himselfe is the cause of his owne misery, and that hee iustly looseth the light of the day, because he shutteth his doores against it. Thus when God speaketh to the soule that is ouercast with mists and darknesse; open thou poore blinde soule, open the gates of thy will vnto mee, I am that Sunne of Iustice, which will [m] illuminate and shine vpon thee: yet will not the soule open vnto mee, but chuseth rather to bee wrapped vp in darknesse. And why? because if I should enter in, I should discouer by the cleernesse of my light whatsoeuer lieth buried in obscurity, and should chase thence that palpable darksomnesse, wherein the soule is so dangerously muffled. But alas! it rather laboureth to be shadowed with darknes, and to wallow stil in voluptuousnesse and delights, (which are lost in their very fruition) fruition) then by paines and industry to bee blest with the full possession of a perfect light.

[m] Dilexerunt homines magis tenebras quam lucem.

Confession followeth contrition, and before Confession euery one ought to examine himselfe, and say, O my God! what am I, that I should receiue such manifold blessings at thy hands? Thou hast redeemed mee from the clawes of Sathan, and hast retired mee vnder the couerture of thy wings. Good God, I esteemed my selfe a malefactour waiting to heare the sentence of death pronounced against mee, and yet hast thou in goodnesse repriued mee from this prison, which is narrow, darke, and full of horrour, and besides the free donation of my life, thou hast infranchised mee with the seruants of God. Good God, I was a malefactour and stood conuicted of grieuous and master-sinnes, yet was it thy good pleasure to remit them vnto mee.

After [n] Confession, euery one is to looke vnto satisfaction, but how many are there that hold not themselues endebted to God, but that God is a debtour vnto them? Who so demeaneth himselfe in this sort, let him know, that Heauen is barred against him, except hee labour to strengthen himselfe with good workes, and not to appeare empty-handed before his God. For to what purpose serue the commandements, if good workes be not necessary to saluation? You goe awry, if you imagine to bee saued by doing of nothing; for God cannot lie. Therefore you may boldly say vnto him, Ha! my God, with what aboundant mercy hast thou brought back my soule from Hell, and endowed it with thy sanctified grace? Good God what haue I miserable creature deserued to haue thy fauours doubled and heaped vpon me? O infinite and immense eternitie, thy benefits towards mee know neither end nor number, and I frankly confesse my incapacity to comprehend them. God of mercy, thou hast condemned those once-beawtifull and goodly Angels to the pit of Hell, for one sinne of pride, and doest thou take compaſſion of me? what of me, that haue ſo often tranſgreſſed againſt thee?

[n] Satisfaction.

After [o] this diſcourſe God commanded Verrine to giue the aſſembly there preſent the laſt courſe of confections and ſweet meats. Then began Verrine to confeſſe and ſay, I am able to ſay no more, let them goe to the Apothecaries if they will, and buy them comfeits. What regard I whether their mouthes be ſweetened or diſtaſted; for my part I would they might bee all dragged by vs to hell, they ſhould ſee how well wee would entertaine them. God anſwered him, This ſupper is not dreſſed for thee. I command thee to ſay and doe that which I haue now decreed. After much reſiſtance, Verrine ſaid, I can reſiſt no longer, he is farre ſtronger then I, and being omnipotent as he is, he will bee obeyed by faire meanes or foule, otherwiſe he could not be omnipotent. Then ſaid Verrine, God himſelfe hath inſtituted the bleſſed ſacrament of the Euchariſt, I ſpeake it as forced vnto it, and againſt my cuſtome, and the faſhion of the other Diuels. For when they were to ſpeake of God, or of Mary, they were all accuſtomed to ſay, him and her, without any other addition; but I who take Gods part, and am not now ſided with hell, am conſtrained to ſpeake theſe words, Sacred, and Saint, and Paradiſe, for confirmation of which I am ready to take my oath.

Then before the Communion of the Prieſt, Verrine added; Ponder in your ſelues how God ſaith, open mee thy heart: for to you doth it belong to open, and garniſh it with faith, hope and charity; and to beleeue that Chriſt Ieſus is in the bleſſed Sacrament with his humanity and diuinity.

You will aske mee, how or by what meanes is hee there? I tell you, you are not with ſuch curioſity to pry into the meanes. Beleeue ſimply that hee is a glorified body, and taketh vp no place, and therefore may eaſily lie hidden vnder the ſpecies of bread.

Hauing

[o] By intelligence and reuelation. See the following Act. This is alſo a diſcourſe of the bleſſed Sacrament: but hauing mentioned by compulſion the ſame things formerly, he was vnwilling to begin another diſcourſe of an argument ſo full of diſguſt vnto him: and touching which he had as yet no commiſſion to ſpeake of.

[p] God leauing him to his naturall diſpoſition, and not employing his abſolute force againſt him.

[q] Of the bleſſed Sacrament.

Hauing ſpoken thus, hee ſaid vnto the Prieſts that were there preſent: You that are Prieſts, how could you dare to touch your God, if hee were there viſibly and not vnder the forme of bread? I tell you, you could not be ſo hardy as once to approch vnto ſo great a light: for his ſacred mother on the day of his natiuity, dared not as it were to touch his hands, although ſhe had carried him nine moneths in her wombe. Know ye not that Moſes when hee came downe from the Mountaine, and had ſpoken with God, was faine to couer his face with a vaile; for otherwiſe the people could not endure to ſpeake with him, ſo brightſome was the light that beamed and proceeded from his face? Then he ſuddenly turned to Leuiathan, one of the Diuels in the body of Magdalene, and ſaid, Hola! you that are ſuch an illuminate doctor, what is it you now ſay? pleade now thine owne cauſe (O Doctor) in a cloſe corner of Hell, as heereafter I my ſelfe may chance to doe, but now I am a partiſan with the Doctor of doctors, who is alſo wiſedome it ſelfe. Then againe hee turned his ſpeech and ſaid, Beware, beware [r] you that approch vnto the holy Communion, how you receiue God in your harts, whom the heauen of heauens cannot containe. If the King of France (O man) were deſirous to come to thy houſe, wouldeſt not thou preſently ſay, Ha, ſir, my houſe is too little to giue entertainment or harbourage vnto your Maieſty; I beſeech you ſir, ſpare your paines to viſit my poore cottage, and haue reſpect vnto my wants and pouerty. To this ſome or other will anſwere, It is the Kings pleaſure to haue it ſo, hee is wealthy enough, and will cauſe whatſoeuer is neceſſarie to bee conueyed vnto thy houſe, for hee hath his Pages, ſeruants, and traine, that will take care of theſe things; he hath no need to borrow thy goods, or any thing elſe that belongeth vnto thee, it ſhall ſuffice that thou lend him thy houſe; and becauſe where the King is, there is the Court alſo, by a conſequent the King honouring thy thy houſe with his preſence, it ſhall put on the nature and appellation of a Palace. So doth God when hee commeth to thy ſoule, if thou doe but bequeath vnto him the habitation of thy will, he will hang the roomes thereof with the rich Tapiſtrie of all ſorts of vertues. The holy Communion is the table of the King of glory, yet do you careleſly venture vpon the ſame, as if it were the common boord of an Inne, or as if it were a may-game, and place to dance in. The Pages and ſeruitours of this table are the Angels, yet not regarding all this, you giue a thouſand occaſions of ſcandall in the Church, to wit, by thoughts, words, and other miſdemeanours which I will not ſpeake of, yea you there act diuers villanies and vncleanneſſes, whereof the Turkes would bluſh to be found guilty. Aske therefore thoſe ſweet fruits, the ſeuen guifts of the holy Ghoſt, and ſo ſhall God water you with the dew of his grace in this world, and cloth you with eternall glory in the world to come. How eaſily would you loath all the pleaſures of the world, if you had reliſhed your mouthes neuer ſo little with the delicacies of your God. You that are poore are many times riotous, and ſpend in an howre all that you haue gotten in a whole weeke for the maintenance of your families. A Chriſtian ſhould imitate Chriſt Ieſus; and ſince that reward is the fruit of labour, in vaine doth hee who will not labour expect a reward. Thinke againe and againe vpon this fearfull ſentence, which God will one day pronounce Ite maledicti, then all proceſſes ſhall bee ended, And there ſhall bee no more Appeales. Giue thankes vnto God after you haue receiued the Communion, for it is a great bleſſing, which hee beſtoweth vpon you, in that he hath vouchſafed to admit you to the participation of his body.

[r] Of the holy Communion.

Qui manducat indigne, &c

It were a clemency not eaſily parallelled, if a King ſhould grant life and liberty to a man that ſtands conuicted of high treaſon; but it is a greater wonder to withdraw

draw ſoules from ſinne, and to winne them to grace: for ſinne is of a greater diſtance from grace then heauen is from earth: hence it is that the remiſſion of one onely ſinne, doth chalenge from you a perpetuall giuing of thankes.

The leaſt bleſſing that God beſtoweth vpon a man is of more worth, then if a mighty King would make a free donation vnto him of all his dominions. And what thinke yee? Did not God giue you a ſoule accompanied with the three goodly faculties thereof, that you might vſe it and them to his glory?

The ſinne that is committed out of frailty is againſt the Father, and is eaſily pardonable: the ſin againſt the Sonne, who is the eternall wiſedome of his father, is out of ignorance, and is excuſable: but the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, who is that euerlaſting goodneſſe is hardly pardoned; ſome may bee reclaimed that offend this way, but very rarely.

After this, Verrine by a moſt ſolemne oath confirmed all which is aboue rehearſed, and in honour of the fiue wounds he ſaid fiue ſeuerall times, Adoramus te Chriſte, &c. and towards the end ſaying this word, Redemiſti, he ſubioyned Redemiſti, that is, you, and not vs Diuels, who are in hell. Then hee ſaid, Great God I adore thee, who art heere couered vnder a little Hoſt; curſed be that Chriſtian, who reputeth himſelfe to bee a Chriſtian, and doth not beleeue it, hee is farre worſe then a Diuell.

This ſame day in the morning, Belzebub departed out of the body of Magdalene and ſaid vnto her, farewell, I goe to ſee thy friend who is in great perplexity: and ſo he went to Marſeille to aide the Magician (as he ſaid) againſt thoſe, that did aduiſe him from father Michaelis, to haue regard vnto his conſcience. The ſame day father Iames de Rets came from Aix to S. Baume, and brought newes that father Michaelis had [t] conſulted at Aix with the Capuchin Fathers, touching this particular, particular, and that hee had ſent diuers vnto Marſeille and willed them to bee carefull in a buſineſſe of ſo rare and high a conſequent.

[f] The Diuels and the damned are witneſſes of this.

[t] A conſultation of this buſineſſe with ſundry religious perſons.

The Acts of the 21. of December.

This day in the morning the Dominican father did exorciſe; and aſſoone as the Exorciſmes began, one of the Diuels which was in Louyſe asked him saying, In the name of God, why doſt thou exorciſe mee? who gaue thee authority to doe it? the Exorciſt answered him, God and his Church. Then ſaid the Diuell, can God compell a Diuell to deliuer truth? The exorciſt replyed, that he could. To this Verrine ſaid, Beleeue it not, for we are all the fathers of lies. True (ſaid the Exorciſt) you are the fathers of lies when you ſpeake from your ſelues and that which is your owne; but when you are conſtrained by Almighty God, I affirme that then you may ſpeake truth. Verrine replyed vnto him. Tell me if there bee any power or authority in the bookes of Exorciſmes to force vs to take a true and a binding oath, anſwere mee now to this? Is it true, that we may take a true oath? as for example, when you interrogate vs in the name of God Almighty, and by the authority of the Church, tell me if in that caſe God hath giuen that power vnto you, to force vs to take an oath that bindeth, to wit, according to the purpoſe of God, and the meaning of the Church. It is a truth (anſwered the Exorciſt) that God hath beſtowed this power vpon his Church, and vs. Verrine replyed; I ſpake this in confutation of thoſe that auerre, that Diuels cannot ſpeake truth: I tell you that ſuch doe in effect denie the omnipotencie of God; and therefore they may ſaue a labour in ſaying their Creed: and if they doe ſay it, it is after the Hereticks cut, that ſay their Credo without a Credo, for they ſay it with their mouth, and deny it in their heart. I therefore auow, that ſince God is omnipotent, tent, he may easily constraine the Diuell to execute his will.

u Then did Verrine turne himselfe towards Leuiathan, and said: Speake Leuiathan, if thou hast any thing to say for thy selfe. Leuiathan answered: I shall loose of mine honour, to hold discourse with my slaue, I am not disposed to talke. Thou art faine to say this (said Verrine) because thou hast not wherewithall to oppose or thwart that, which on Gods behalfe I haue deliuered. Leuiathan answered: God doth not vse to send diuels abroad to preach. That is true, (said Verrine) x neither is my errant hither, to bee a Preacher. Leuiathan answered: What need all these words then? They are no words of mine (said Verrine) all my knowledge is nothing auaileable vnto me; but he who causeth me to speake, is wisedome it selfe, and all these things doe proceed from the Almightie. Speake now (illuminate doctor) defend thy selfe, O thou doctor of Heretickes? I doe heere my dutie, and discharge my commission, speaking meerely from the strength of that which God commandeth, and not out of any fancie I haue thereunto: I haue not so much charitie in me, as to speake it from my selfe, but what I haue deliuered, is wrung out of me by maine force and compulsion. Speake now vnto this, perchance you may get aduantage by that which I haue spoken.

Then said Leuiathan, If I did see here any one whom I might call mine, (meaning Heretickes) I would not make daintie to speake. Thinkest thou (answered Verrine) that God is like vnto men, who are curious and choise in their phrases, and lay a varnish of eloquence vpon their speeches? I y tell thee, that with one sole motion of his will, he reuealeth by an intrinsicke manner of vnderstanding, whatsoeuer he pleased shal be accomplished: but the truth is, thou art pusillanimous, and hast nothing to replie. Leuiathan answered, I neither feare God nor his Angels, and why then should I feare thee, u A Dialogue betweene Verrine and Leuiathan.

x See the answere to the first obiection after the Epistle to the Reader.

y Obserue the maner of speaking when God will discouer any thing to Spirits, or will keepe any thing close from them. Dicta & facta sunt.

thee who art but as it were a lackey. It is true (ſaid Verrine) I am but as thy lackey, yet mighteſt thou anſwere if thou haſt any courage reſiding in thee. But thou art a very illiterate doctor, and thoſe that follow thee, muſt needs ſtumble in the darke, ſo full of obſcureneſſe and falſehood is all thy doctrine. Dareſt thou ſweare that thy doctrine is conſonant vnto truth, as I wil ſweare that whatſoeuer I haue here deliuered, proceedeth from the liuing God? Leuiathan anſwered, Yes, I affirme, that it is all true. Verrine replied, Accurſed ſpirit, dareſt thou ſweare as I will? Yes, that will I, ſaid Leuiathan. Verrine anſwered him, thou canſt not without reſeruing ſome priuate and malitious meaning. Leuiathan then ſaid. Well, let vs breake off this diſcourſe. To which Verrine anſwered: If thou mighteſt be let alone, I doe eaſily conceiue thy inclination to ſweare falſely; and the reaſon is cleare, for thy doctrine is falſe, and if thou [a] ſhouldeſt take thine oath, thou wouldeſt ſweare falſelie, and not according to the intention of God and his Church, Not ſo (ſaid Leuiathan) I tell thee I wil ſweare according to the meaning of the Church. Wilt thou ſweare according to the meaning of the Catholicke, Apoſtolicke and Romane Church, ſaid Verrine? Leuiathan replied: What neede all theſe cautions and reſtrictions. They doe declare (ſaid Verrine) that thou are vanquiſhed: for thy intendment was to haue ſworne according to the Church that is called the Reformed Church; and is the Church of Caluin, Beza, Luther, Arius, and the like Heretikes. You may doe well (ſaid Leuiathan) to beleeue this babler, you may perhaps find him to be a great Prophet. Verrine ſaid: It is true, I am of my ſelfe a [b] miſerable Diuell, as thou art, but after much reſiſtance, and long diſputation againſt God, I was at laſt conſtrained to ſpeake the truth: for God is the Prophet of Prophets, and hee it was, that made Balaams Aſſe to ſpeake. Leuiathan anſwered: What? doth God interchange commerce of language and conference

[a] God is neuer a witneſſe vnto falſehood.

[b] Verrine in all his diſcourſes confeſſed himſelfe to bee a Diuell.

rence with a Diuell? Yes, that he doth (said Verrine) but by a secret kind [c] of intelligence, and we resist (as much as is possible for vs) his commandments, yet at length we are of necessitie tied vnto obedience. Then answered Leuiathan: For mine owne part, I frequent no companie, but the societie of braue and worthie fellowes. Accursed spirit as thou art (replied Verrine) knowest thou not that when God doth worke, hee worketh not for the bodies sake, but from his regard vnto the soule? I tell thee, the soule of a pesant that is endowed with the grace of God, is as pretious before his Creator, as is the soule of a great King or Monarch. It cannot bee denied but they are poore, yet God is able to inrich them, and to store vp much grace within them. Speake now Leuiathan, It may be thou shalt gaine some one or other vnto Lucifer, and shalt not loose all thy labour. Leuiathan answered, Ha Verrine, thou knowest well, that I gaine more vpon great personages, then vpon pesantly and base people. It cannot bee gainesaid (quoth Verrine) but that a man of note and qualitie is more incumbred to cleere himselfe of euill, and to applie all his actions vnto good, then is a poorer man: yet may an honest plaine Countrie man be a cause of much good; as a clowne of a wicked disposition may bee apt enough to practise a great deale of mischiefe. Poore and rich are indifferently equall in Paradise, for there is no distinction in that place betweene them. And least any one should mis-understand mee, and conceiue that there is an errour in my words, I do explaine my selfe; I do not say, that there shall be no diuersitie amongst them in the seuerall degrees of glory, for who so in this world is stored with most grace, shall in that other world attaine vnto a great portion of glory: as appeareth in Magdalene, who hauing loued much, had much sinne remitted vnto her; and therefore she is the second person after the [d] mother of God, and so is it also decreed and ordered by the Church in the Letany. O [e] Dominicke, thou

[c] Obserue, that it is by intelligence.

[d] There is nothing repugnant hereunto why this should not be so.

[e] S. Dominick an enemie to Verrine.

thou art my mortall enemie, and art now dwelling amongſt the Thrones, and holdeſt that place, which formerly did appertaine vnto me: I ſay not that thou art there as an Angell, but as a Saint bleſſed for euermore: for as there fell Angels of euery Order ſome, ſo God to fill vp the ſeates that were void by the downefall of Angels, hath placed the ſoules in them, diuiding vnto euery one that place of glory which he iudged they had deſerued. Then ſaid Leuiathan, What haue I to doe with this preacher? Verrine anſwered, I came not to preach, and thoſe who vnderſtand me, cannot ſay that they haue heard a [f] Sermon, but that they haue ſeene two perſons poſſeſſed to bee exorciſed, and that the Diuell in one of them did ſpeake and diſcourſe variouſlie.

[f] Verrine denieth that he is a preacher. See the anſwere to the firſt obiection after the Epiſtle to the Reader.

Then Verrine ſpake to the Exorciſt, and ſaid: Why doeſt thou not command Leuiathan to ſpeake. Vpon this the Exorciſt ſaid, Leuiathan, why ſpeakeſt thou not. Verrine anſwered, becauſe hee hath nothing to replie. Then ſaid Leuiathan, I doe warrant it vnto you, that my doctrine is the truth, & not the doctrine of the Church of Rome. True, ſaid Verrine, according to thy perplexed and curſed intention. I tell thee, that although the Biſhop of Rome ſhould leade an vngodly and a vitious life, (which yet I affirme not, for I touch vpon no man in particular) but ſuppoſe that it were ſo, yet ſhould not the authoritie and the power that God hath delegated vnto his Church be hereby diminiſhed or impaired: for the power is alwaies the ſame, as in the Church the ſacrifice is alwaies the ſame be the Prieſt good, or be he bad that doth ſacrifice: for the Prieſt deriueth his power from God, not God from the Prieſt.

Then he cried, hola Lucifer, come hither, for I will diſpute with thee of the Maſſe, of Purgatorie, and of Inuocation of Saints: my doctrine iſſueth from a fountaine which is neuer dried vp, to wit, Ieſus Chriſt, who is the light of the world, as ſaith Iohn the Euangeliſt.

Leuiathan,

Leuiathan, among the ſupreame Seraphins, thou wert the third after Lucifer: What ſayeſt thou now learned doctor? Dareſt thou affirme, that in the Sacrament of the Euchariſt Chriſt Ieſus is not really and truly there. I my ſelfe am able to tell thee, O doctor without knowledge, that God being Omnipotent, may make his bodie deſcend vpon an hundred thouſand ſeuerall Altars. Doeſt thou vſe thus to baite mens ſoules with thy faire ſpeeches, ſteeped in all alluring ſweetneſſe?

And thou Balbarith, who doeſt make the Gentrie to beleeue that it is a peece of vallour to ſweare and blaſpheme the name of God without intermiſſion, ſpeake if thou wilt. Approch thou alſo Aſtaroth, who art the maſter of idleneſſe. And thou Aſmodee, who doeſt vndoe and debauch youth by thy continuall allurements. And thou Carreau, who hardneſt mens harts. I perceiue you haue nothing to ſay for your ſelues, and yet doe you labour ſecretly the ſubuerſion of men. Vpon this Verrine turned him to the aſſembly and ſaid: Looke you obſerue the commandements of God, and of his Church, which is not ſubiect vnto errour: for Chriſt Ieſus her Spouſe is euer with her, and guideth her by that cleere light which euer ſtreameth from him. Bee attentiue vnto Sunday and Holi-day Maſſes, for thoſe that obſerue them not, hauing no maine or canonicall impediment to hinder them, doe ſinne mortally. The Church is more ſolicitous to inſtruct you then a naturall mother can be ready to ſuccour her child that is in danger. There are who goe to heare Maſſe as a labouring man goeth to his worke without preparation, or as if a man would goe to Plaies or Reuels. Conſider, conſider theſe things that are ſo full of admiration; I Verrine, as I am a Diuel, would rather chuſe to ſuffer the paines of hell 20. 30. 40. 50. yeeres, then to tell you one word ſutable vnto what I now ſpeake: and if this creature here were of force and ſtrength ſufficient, I would crie ſo loud in her, that men ſhould heare mee halfe a league league off. Conceiue of me as of one that is nothing elſe but a fire-brand in hell, not worthie to be burned in that fire: and in theſe contemplations thinke of your ſelues, and the paines of that other world, as a malefactor would doe that waiteth hourely for the ſentence of his death. I tell you that this expectation is many times more grieuous then the torment it ſelfe, and doth oft preuent puniſhment by haſtening on of death.

§ The diſtinct offices which Diuels haue in tentations.

Say vnto your ſoule, Soule remember thy worth, and conſider how God hath created thee capable of eternal bliſſe. How expedient then is it, that thou walke in the commandements of thy God, and that the Bride ſhould be obſeruant of her Spouſe? Al that thou canſt performe is not able to ballance the leaſt of his mercies; yea, hee ſhould ſhew compaſſion towards thee, in puniſhing thee with the tortures of hell.

You that goe to Church to heare Maſſe, are to ſay, Soule whether goeſt thou? Thou goeſt to receiue either thy ſaluation or damnation. I doe not ſay (ſaid Verrine) that ſinners offend God afreſh in going to heare Maſſe, but I affirme that they are like vnto thoſe, who when a ſhower of raine falleth, ſtop all the ſpouts and conduit-pipes of their ciſterne, for feare leſt the water ſhould be conueied into it. If thoſe are not watered with the dew of Gods grace, the Prieſt is no cauſe thereof but they themſelues, whoſe heart is faſhioned out of ſtone, not compoſed of earth which is apt to bring foorth fruit.

Say further: Soule, let vs goe and craue pardon of God: for being a wretched malefactor, and worthie of condemnation, it is reaſon the ſoule ſhould proſtrate it ſelfe and implore his mercie. Yet fareth it not with ſinners as with malefactors, who appeale vnto the Court and Counſell of the King at Paris, for oftentimes, notwithſtanding their delaies and paines, they looſe their life, and the firſt ſentence of death is ratified againſt them. But your God doth inuite you vnto him, ſaying:

Come

Come vnto me and I will refresh you: aske and I will giue you. Notwithstanding, the requests which you present vnto me, must be of vertues and of spiritual blessings which concerne the saluation of your soules, not of earthly goods, or of riches, or of knowledge, or of any curiositie whatsoeuer. Search after the light of your soules, for God doth communicate it to all the world, to rich and poore, to noble, and to men of base condition. Your memorie [h] resembleth the eternall Father, your vnderstanding the Sonne, your will the holy Ghost, and all your soule the sacred Trinitie. The Father saith vnto you, call to mind the benefits which I haue diuided amongst you: the Sonne saith, in these benefits which you haue receiued from your God contemplate his power, and his mercie, his wisedome and his iustice: the holy Ghost pusheth you on to the feare and loue of your God. The memorie, the vnderstanding and the wil are three things, and yet but one thing: the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost are three persons, and yet but one God. When you heare Masse, enter you into a deepe meditation, and say thus vnto your selues: Infinit God, and Saint of Saints, I do not know but this may be the last Masse that euer I shall heare: for you are to take a strict account of your conscience, as if your last houre were pronounced against you, since that death doth threaten you all, at all times, and in all places. But alas, what man thinketh vpon these things: the Angels tremble before the Maiesty of God, and the malefactors are lulled asleepe in their stupide repose and securitie: the first borne do honour their Creator with all awfull reuerence, and the seruants go on in their vneuen courses without any feare at all.

[h] Touching the blessed Trinitie.

Then he cried vnto God, saying: of a truth thou art the God of might and puissance, and makest thy selfe to bee obeyed by men and Angels, yea, by the Diuels themselues, as it plainely appeareth at this instant. Herein thy Omnipotencie doth make full declaration of it ſelfe, and amazeth the world with this new wonder: for, O great God, thou doeſt not eſteeme the wiſdome of this world, but al they that humble themſelues ſhall participate of thy light, and thoſe that are puffed vp ſhall remaine obſtinate in their pride.

You ſhould demand three things from your God before all things elſe whatſoeuer: firſt the glory of heauen, then whatſoeuer appertaineth to your ſaluation, and thirdly the good of your neighbour.

You are alſo to beg of your Creator in humility of ſpirit, that hee will make you proſper and grow by the dew of his grace, and this you are to doe as malefactors vpon your knees with an halter about your necke, and muſt ſay: My God and my Lord, grant me thy light to conſider & confeſſe my ſins, implant within me a penitent and broken heart, that I may bewaile my offences, and haue my ſinnes in deteſtation, that ſo I may bee accounted worthy to receiue abſolution from the Prieſt. If thy body may ſtand thy brother in ſtead to ſaue his ſoule, doe not delay to beſtow it vpon him, or if his body haue need of ſuſtentation by thy goods, thou art not to deny them vnto him: for it is not the will of God that you ſhould giue a ſoule for a ſoule, or a body for body, or goods for goods, but that you ſhould preferre the ſaluation of a ſoule before the life, and the life before goods and worldly poſſeſſions: not that you ſhould alwaies be tied vnto this but that hee who putteth it in practiſe doth doe the will of God: for God hath ſaid, thou ſhalt loue thy neighbour as thy ſelfe, but how few are there that doe this?

Then he cried out, and alleaging an example anſwerable vnto what he formerly ſpake, he ſaid, Ha Thomas, thou wert not ignorant of the death of thy maſter: thou kneweſt well that hee was to riſe againe, yet diddeſt thou ſay, except I touch the prints of the nailes, and put my hand into his ſide, I will not beleeue. I doe not ſpeake this to diſgrace thee; but I ſay, that if thou haddeſt deſt beene more pregnant to beleeue, thy Sauiour had not reproued thee: neither ſhouldeſt thou, as afterward thou diddeſt, haue had experience of thy frailty, yet wert thou named in the roll of the Apoſtles as well as the reſt, and diddeſt afterward conſtantly ſuffer death in confirmation of that truth whereof thou haddeſt formerly doubted. God pardoned Dauid, that you might know he hath power to remit ſinnes: hee did eate with the Publican, to declare that hee came not meerely for the iuſt: nay, I ſay further, that your God doth make narrower ſearch and inquiſition after the loſt ſheepe, which is the ſinfull ſoule, then after that ſoule that ſtandeth in her ſanctity and innocency. O great God, thou art that true ſhepheard who hath laid downe his life for the ſaluation of his wandring flocke: thou haſt ſearched and at laſt found thy ſheepe, which ſtragled away from the paſturage of their ſhepheard.

The ſame day Magdalene ſaid, that there came a certaine Diuell from abrode to ſpeake with Carreau, who was one of thoſe that reſided in her body, ſaying, come quickly, for Belzebub calleth for thee, and forthwith Carreau flew forth from her like lightening. She alſo ſaid that Belzebub was departed from her body all that day, and had neuer ſtayed from her ſo long. And that ſhe ſaw Belzebub to returne, while ſhe was reading a letter, that made mention of the mother of God.

The ſame day alſo, father d'Ambruc ſub-Prior of the Couent of S. Maximin came to S. Baume, to informe himſelfe touching Louyſe, becauſe many gaue out that ſhe was not poſſeſſed. And the ſame day towards euening were the two women exorciſed by Father Francis Billet, whereupon Verrine began to ſpeake in this manner.

What Belzebub, art thou returned? Belzebub anſwered, whence had'ſt thou notice of my returne? Verrine ſaid, the ſeruant knoweth his maſter: and added, The head draweth after it the whole body, ſo that if it fall into a pit the body must of necessity follow after. The flocke of sheepe goeth after the shepheard, witnesse vs accursed spirits who haue beleeued Lucifer as our head, and as our shepheard. I haue been desirous to gaine thus much vpon the beleefe of Louyse that shee would conceit her selfe not to be possessed, and that I am heere by the appointment of Lucifer: for this day haue wee compassed her in with these tentations, telling her, that shee of her selfe gaue life to all these actions and gestures, and that a woman might of her selfe deliuer all such discourses as these. There are those that say, put case that God would conuert a soule, or reueale some truth vnto his Church, is it probable that hee would make the Diuell his agent in an employment of so high a nature?

But I auerre that the Church hath receiued the Inuestiture of authority from God, whereby it is enabled to command Diuels, and to enforce them in the vertue of Exorcismes to deliuer truth, and that the Diuell by his oath may giue assurance of the truth, if so be hee bee forced thereunto by the power of God communicated vnto his Church, and by the vertue of Exorcismes, and that all the conditions and ceremonies of a solemne oath be performed: yet for all this there is a religious person who saith, that I am not able to speake a truth: I answere him, that as I am a Diuell I cannot speake truth indeed, but am herein of his opinion: yet as I am sent from God who is able to draw good out of euill I am constrained to deliuer truth, and to take an oath for the further ratification thereof. He must deny the first Article of his faith, and in stead of Credo, say Non credo, if it be false that the Diuell may be forced to vtter a truth: for God hath giuen all his authority to the Church to command Diuels, and to constraine them to obey the charge which is laid vpon them. But I am not a whit abashed, if this woman stand doubtfull whether shee bee possessed or no, when the religious persons themselues ſelues make queſtion of the ſame.

i Then he ſpake to God and ſaid, I could endure with more eaſe the torments of hell 50. yeeres together, then to pronounce thy name onely one time; yet doeſt thou force from my mouth ſpeeches of reuerence vnto thy Saints, which is much againſt the nature and cuſtome of Diuels. Giue this charge to thy children who looke for a ſhare in thy heritage, and expect a recompence for their obedience vnto thee. They haue ſo many famous and notable Preachers, and many bookes furniſhed and fraught with al variety of learnings, and wilt thou haue me then to ſpeake to men of all ſorts both wiſe and fooliſh, who waite for no other retribution but the torments of hell? It is no wonder if the Diuels ſeeke to withſtand God, when his very children who haue a portion in Paradiſe declare themſelues heady and refractary againſt him. Was it euer knowne that Diuels ſhould aduiſe men to inuocate the Saints, yet am I conſtrained to perſwade you to pray vnto them, eſpecially vnto S. Dominicke. Curſed k be thy deuotion Dominicke which thou diddeſt beare towards the Virgin Mary the mother of God. Curſed bee thoſe religious perſons that haue entred into thy Order; I would rather be tortured in hell, then to ſound forth thy praiſes and the commendations of Bernard. Let me poſſeſſe you with this truth, that the Saints make interceſſion for you, and that Dominicke is one of the intimate friends to the Virgin, as alſo is Bernard. It is thou great God that conſtraineſt me to exalt Dominicke my greateſt enemy, and wouldeſt make it cleere vnto all, how bleſſed and good a thing it is to honour and loue thy mother, and haſt enforced me to make thus much familiar vnto men, that they may with the greater feruency of deuotion ſerue her.

Dominicke I hate thee as I doe the plague, and I ſhould take more contentment in that externall darkeneſſe of the bottomleſſe pit of hell, then in theſe diſi Verrine conſtrained to ſpeake.

k Touching S. Dominicke.

courses which I lanish thus vpon thy praises. Thou wert neuer very deuout vnto the Virgin, as were also Bernardus, Staniſlaus, Anſelmus, and thou Stephanus who hast contracted great familiarity with her. He that will bee beloued by the bleſſed mother of God muſt ſerue Dominicke in feruency of ſpirit: you are firſt to craue the mediation of the mother, and then to make your redreſſe vnto the Sonne. There are many who are deuout to their Creator but few vnto the Virgine, yea there are not many amongſt women themſelues that conſecrate their deuotions vnto her: and yet hee that will gaine eternall life muſt make his approch vnto this Mary. Mary is the [m] ladder of heauen, & the Saints are the ſteps of this ladder, ſo that hee who will enter into the Pallace of the King muſt firſt aſcend by theſe ſtaires. You are all guilty of high treaſon, and there is not any that can coniecture what will bee the ſtate and iſſue of your cauſe but God onely: therefore preſent your ſelues before Mary with all humble and ſubmiſſiue behauiour, before you approch vnto her Sonne: and firſt take the aduiſe of Dominicke before you proſtrate your ſelues to the mother of God. For it would ſauour of intruſion and much preſumption to thruſt into the conference of a Queene, and not to prepare her vnto the ſame by a Mediatour. Bee you therefore regardfull to gaine the good opinion of ſome one of her familiars and fauourites, by meanes of whom you may more confidently get acceſſe and admittance into her chamber, and haue ſpeedier audience when you are preſented vnto her, whereby your requeſt ſhall bee with greater expedition granted vnto you: for this is the will of him who is the fountaine of all grace.

Dominicke, though thou be my ſworne enemy aboue all that are in heauen, yet am I compelled to depaint thy praiſes and haue already made worthy mention of thy Order vpon the day of the conception of the Virgin: and it is Gods pleaſure that men ſhould now bee more [l] The Saints who are moſt deuoted to the Virgine.

[m] Scala Cœli, ſo Fulgentius calleth her in his Sermon of the Virgins praiſes: for without the fruit which ſhe carried there had been no ladder for vs to mount vp into heauen, and the tree was as a ladder whereby we were enabled to plucke this fruit.

more deuout & addicted vnto thy Order then euer formerly they haue been, becauſe thou art the Virgins darling, and art able to preuaile much with her in mens behalfe.

You will tell me, that God hath created heauen not for beaſts, nor for Turkes, but for Chriſtians; I grant it, yet for all this your deuotion muſt not coole within you, neither muſt your life bee beſtiall, nay worſe then the conuerſation of Infidels.

The Saints who are full of charity and all perfection will obtaine ſanctification for you, if you direct your prayers to them for that purpoſe, and doe not make interceſſion for theſe temporall and momentary commodities. By performance whereof you ſhall fulfill the will of the Saint of Saints.

You may peraduenture conceit that God will come downe from heauen and take you by the hand, and ſo leade you with him to his kingdome: hee doth indeed behold you a great way off, and goes before you with open armes, but before you bee entertained with his embracements, you muſt haue recourſe vnto Dominick, Staniſlaus, Bernardus, Anſelmus, Stephanus, and to your guard-Angell, and entreat them to conuey you into the Palace of his Maieſty. Alſo thoſe that are deſirous to ſpeak vnto the Queene muſt run the ſame courſe: for it is ſhe aboue all that maketh interceſſion for you, neither is there any better acquainted with the pangs and torments which her deare Son ſuffered for your ſakes, then is her ſelfe. [n] Honour the Angell that is your guardian, for hee is one of the Pages of your Soueraigne King, and alwaies beholdeth the face of God in his full Maieſty and glory. Be euer carefull of your ſaluation, and ſay vnto him, O my good Angell that takeſt charge of me, lend me thy hand and bring me the directeſt way vnto the Court of this King; and doe me this fauour as to make my introduction vnto ſome grace with your Prince. I tell you that all Saints are Kings and Princes, and haue great authority and power in the Court of that Soueraigne King. The body of a man is not more different from the ſoule, then is the Court of this world from that celeſtial manſion. If you had but taſted the delicacy of the wine of loue which was broached in the Mount of Tabor, without doubt you would deſpiſe all things in cõpariſon of it. This wine is at one time both delicate and pure; but the wine of voluptuouſneſſe is mingled and ſophiſticated with water, and retaineth no ſweetneſſe or ſauour. Who ſo drinketh of the wine of heauen, ſhall quench his thirſt as Magdalene did, who dranke at the feet of our Sauiour.

[n] Touching the Angels that are guardians vnto men.

The Court gates of the King of glory are very narrow, and euery one that will, cannot enter in thereat. For firſt a man muſt knocke at the gate of mercy, taking an Angell for his guide, and humility and obedience for his two companions; for you can haue no admittance into the kingdome of heauen if you bee not aſſociated with theſe two vertues. The Sonne of God is the protector thereof, who died obediently vpon the Croſſe: nay more, in being obediẽt vnto his executioners he was obedient vnto the inſtrument of the Diuell, & may therefore in right now challenge obedience frõ him. He who ſhall deuoutly ſerue the mother of God, and Dominick, ſhall bee ſure to obtaine plenary remiſſion for his ſins.

After all this, Verrine confirmed all with an oath which he tooke very ſolemnly, imprecating the wrath of God vpon himſelfe and all hell. Then hee ſaid three ſeuerall times, but with a great deale of reſiſtance, Aue Maria, and in ſaying of Ora, he added, Ora pro illis miſeris peccatoribus nunc, & in hora mortis, to the honour of the mother of God and of Dominicke. And then hee cried, O Dominicke, neuer diddeſt thou receiue ſo much honour from a Diuell, but thou doſt merit this and much more; and turning to the Sub-prior, he ſaid: curſed bee thy comming hither, which hath brought ſuch ſhame and confuſion vnto Diuels.

The Acts of the 22. day of December.

This day in the morning the Dominican father did exorcise; in the beginning whereof there happened a disputation between father Peter d' Ambruc, Sub-prior of the Couent royall of S. Magdalene at S Maximin of the order of S. Dominicke, and the Diuell Verrine, who was one of those that possessed Louyse Capeau. The said Sub-prior affirmed, that hee could conceiue no true proofe or demonstration, to induce him to beleeue, that the said Louyse was possessed. Verrine answered him, Thou pleasest me well in not beleeuing it, and in affirming that all these extraordinary actions and gestures doe expresly proceed from her selfe. The said Father said, I will neuer beleeue her possession. I perceiue well (answered Verrine) what thou beleeuest, thou saiest Credo, and non Credo, and art indeed irresolute and doubtfull. Thou maiest tell mee that thou art bound to beleeue it, because it is an Article of faith. but what commendation is this vnto thee, when thou doest not beleeue it? The said father replyed; thou art not able to speake Latine: to which Verrine answered, God will not haue it so, but constraineth me to speake in the vulgar tongue. Then said the father, Thou lyest in saying so. I lie not (said Verrine,) I tell thee againe, God will not haue it so, that Louyse may be the more abundantly humbled, and that wee might haue the greater power to tempt her concerning this point; that so shee might for a time giue easie credit vnto those, who tell her, that either this which shee doth, proceedeth from God, or from the Diuell alone, or that all these strange deportments, and discourses, are made and counterfaited by her selfe. No no, Gods pleasure is that she should be deiected; for it is no matter of difficulty to beleeue that which a man beholdeth. Then replyed the said father, It is false, and thou giuest my iealousies no satisfaction faction. Verrine anſwered, What deſireſt thou to build and firme in thee a beleefe that Louyſe is poſſeſſed? Doeſt thou beleeue it, or doeſt thou not? I doe very well perceiue that thou art not haſty to beleeue; yet is this a very vnuſuall accident, neither is ſhee poſſeſſed after the ordinary faſhion of many, who ſtriue to expreſſe themſelues with eloquent and affected phraſes, and ſo make a cheate vpon mens beleefe and vpon their ſoules alſo: but I am heere on Gods behalfe, to conuert ſoules, and not to deceiue them.

Then the Exorciſt holding the Booke of Exorciſmes in his hand, commanded him in the Name of God to anſwere vnto ſuch things, as hee would demand of him. But Verrine ſnatched away the booke by violence, and threw it to the ground, ſaying, What? Wilt thou exorciſe Louyſe, when ſhee is not poſſeſſed? Then hee ſaid vnto her that was poſſeſſed. No Louyſe, doe not ſuffer thy ſelfe to be exorciſed any longer, thou art a foole, and art not poſſeſſed. If thou permit them to exorciſe thee, I will cry aloud, that thou art giuen ouer vnto the Diuell; but I will take heed how I ſweare this. Notwithſtanding this, the Exorciſt gaue not ouer to exorciſe and to adiure him that he ſhould anſwere.

Verrine then ſaid vnto him, What wouldeſt thou haue mee anſwere vnto? Afterward hee turned to the Subpriour, hauing firſt made anſwere vnto certaine Latin words in the exorciſme, and ſaid, Thou art well skilled in latin, is this latin of the vulgar kinde or no? Louyſe vnderſtandeth all this paſſingly well, her Father and Mother haue brought her vp to ſpeake a great deale of latin, haue they not? And ſo mocking him, hee continued on his ſpeech, The Hereticks haue a cuſtome to teach and inſtruct their children in the latin tongue: doeſt thou not know this? Ha! it is but a litle time ſince Louyſe firſt learned her Confiteor, and was not able to read the office of the Virgin. All this while the Exorciſt ceaſed not to adiure him: vnto whom Verrine ſaid, I will

will not answere to any thing, but am resolued to resist as long as I am able, and when I can resist no longer, I will prostrate my selfe on the earth, and will withstand God with all the force I haue. This he spake in an extreame fury and violence, making semblance as if hee would flee from his place of abode. Then Verrine began to speake vnto God, saying, No, no, I will doe nothing. I will oppose my selfe against thee with the greatest reluctancy that I possibly may, I haue no stomach to praise and doe honour vnto mine enemy. o Why should I praise him, whom I would, if it lay in my power, willingly displeate from the place he holdeth? I will doe nothing, it is in vaine, especially since some of his Order are heere present; I will doe nothing, I will not giue them so great an occasion of consolation. After this he said, Hee hath commanded mee to quyet my selfe, and therefore like a gally-slaue I am constrained to doe Gods pleasure, and to say to my confusion and despite, that Dominick hath obtained a grant from the Mother of God, that those of his Order may liue in great perfection; yea, that they shall liue vntainted from the pollutions of any mortall sinne. p Yet before hee spake this, in that disputation betweene the Subpriour and him, he had affirmed, that the walls and inclosures did not sanctifie mens soules, and that many times, much villany was hatched in Cloysters: but his purpose was not to accuse any in particular, and that those who were naught did not blemish or lay any aspersion of infamy vpon the good. Then the Sub-priour said, Are not we to commit any mortall sinne by our Rule? Verrine answered, No. And being asked if the Order of S. Francis might beare a mortall sinne. Verrine said that it might: as might also the Order of Claire. Then he subioyned, that the Diuell did more cast about to circumuent a man that was in a Religious Order, then to triumph and get the victory of a thousand others: because (said he) wee priuily vndermine the wordlings of these times

o S. Dominick an aduersary vnto Verrine.

p It is a great perfection not to omitt to doe wel: because omission doth not necessarily imply a mortal sinne.

times, and doe manage them as wee please, and as the mother would doe her childe: wee suggest vnto yong women, that they should not be so strict in obseruance of the Masse vpon Sundaies and Holydaies, but should bequeath that time to the decking vp and imbellishing of themselues, and to other vanities. To yong Gentlemen wee say, thou art yong, now or neuer thou must abandon thy selfe to thy pleasures, make much of thy selfe, and frequent Tennis-courts, and publick meetings for dancing. Thus doe we take them off from deuout meditations, and quench in them any motion and desire to be present at Euening-song, or to doe that which is the duety of a Christian to performe; but contrariwise wee doe present vnto them a thousand occasions to commit villany. But when wee labour to seduce a Religious person, wee vse more warinesse and circumspection: Astaroth is he that then bestirres himselfe, sometimes suggesting, that hee neede not make such haste to say Masse; sometimes endeauouring to make him careless in his deuotions, and telling him that it is a matter of slender consequence, and that he should not make it so haynous, to bee wanting sometimes in the obseruation of these petty duties. Much cunning is to be spent in hooking in one of these, wee must knock at his gate, and at his windowes, that we may get entrance into his mansion: yet are wee for all these attempts oftentimes crossed of our designement, so surely doe they shut vp all the passages that lead into them. I speake it not, as if all did so, there are not a few that giue easie entrance and accesse to Astaroth.

Then ¶ hee said, that there were three Exorcismes made against him in Heauen, one from God, another from the Virgin, and the third from Dominick.

Hereunto hee added, that if hee had power hee would disgorge all his curses against him, who first began the reformation, and against all his inspirations.

Ha Michaelis! thou hast neuer seene Louyse, yet doe we

¶ It is an allusion to ỹ constraint which was forced vpon him by the Exorcismes. As if hee should haue said that he was compelled three manner of waies, by the will of God, by the merits of the Virgin, and by the intercessions of S. Dominick, all this being acted in a church of his Order.

we ſtriue to gaine ſo farre vpon the beleefe of men, as to perſwade them, that Romillon and Michaelis haue taught and leſſoned Louyſe, but ſhe ſhall bee better examined.

I am not abaſhed, that there are many who beleeue not theſe things, for it is the maner in all new miracles of God, to finde ſome ſtoppe and contradiction, as appeareth in the miracles of Chriſt Ieſus, and in thoſe which were afterwards wrought by the Apoſtles, as alſo in thoſe that were of olde performed by the Prophets.

The workes that proceed from the Diuell are intertained gladly; ſo that when a great euent befalleth, and receiueth no [r] affront or repugnancy, it is an argument that it commeth not from God. Great God, thou haſt many friends at thy table, but how is their number diminiſhed when thou commeſt to ſuffer on the Croſſe? The Kings of the earth vſe to eate alone, but the King of glory with company. Peter, when thou diddeſt deny thy maſter, then diddeſt thou begin to ſuffer with him. What ſhould become of the miſerable ſinner, if that all the Saints had liued in innocency? Magdalene, what ſhould become of the penitent, if thou haddeſt beene as Catherine of Sienna.

O bleſſed Mother of God, thou waſt conceiued without originall ſinne, and haſt alone liued without [ſ] any ſpot or taint at all. Martha did follow thee in thy example of virginity, and is a great familiar of thine; as Magdalene is of thy ſonnes. Miracles doe euer meete with ſome oppoſition, as appeareth heere in this: for this is a new miracle, & an euident demonſtration of the Omnipotency of God, the like whereof hath not been wrought ſince the firſt being of the world, and yet can God worke a hundred and a hundred miracles, fuller of aſtoniſhment and rareneſſe, then this is. This miracle was wrought by God, at the particular inſtance and ſolicitation of the Virgin, of Magdalene and of Dominick, and intended primarily for the reformation of his his order. And curſed bee him that doth reforme it, for they are not few that will redreſſe all diſorders both in themſelues and in their fellowes, eſpecially in the Order of Dominick: and whoſoeuer ſhall remaine vnconformable to this reformation, ſhall be in great and imminent danger. Some will ſay, I haue nothing to doe with the reformation; another will obiect, I am of a tender and delicate conſtitution: another will excuſe himſelfe with, Father, I am too yong, and this is too hard for me to vnder-goe. Neuertheleſſe, many ſhall take vpon them the Order of Dominick, becauſe his Rule cannot tollerate any mortall ſinne, and becauſe of the Reformation of his Order. And they will make choice of this Order, when they ſhall vnderſtand what great immunities and priuiledges Dominick hath obteined for it at the hands of the ſacred Mother of God: vnto whom he was euer exceedingly deuoted, and is beloued againe by the Virgin for his continency and puritie. Many alſo ſhall enter into this Habit when they ſhall heare of the perfection of this Order, and what a ſweete ſauour it rendreth vp vnto the Almightie. In like manner ſhall the Congregations of the Chriſtian Doctrines and of Vrſula flooriſh and ſpread their branches, yet without any preiudice vnto other Orders, and the Reformed ſhall liue in puritie as the Angels of God. At the end of the Exorciſmes it was held fit that Verrine ſhould ſolemnly ſweare vpon the bleſſed Sacrament, for confirmation of that which he had aboue ſpoken.

[r] This for the moſt part falleth out to be ſo.

[ſ] Original, actuall and veniall.

And firſt they asked him in what manner he had ſpoken of the Conception of the Virgin: to which hee anſwered in theſe words. Thoſe who are heere preſent are of different opinions. The Exorciſt commanded him to expreſſe himſelfe diſtinctly and cleerly, if it were the will of God that he ſhould vtter the truth herein, and if God had reuealed any thing vnto him concerning this point. Then he plainly told them that [t] ſhe was immaculate from the beginning. Then did the Exorciſt com-

[t] Touching the conception of the Virgin.

command him againe, that hee ſhould more amply diſcourſe of this point before them all: whereupon he beganne to ſpeake in this manner. I affirme that the Eternall Father when hee was reſolued to ſend his Word vpon the earth to repaire the breach of mankinde, and that the Word was ready to doe the will of his Father, then did he determine to create a creature particularly for that purpoſe, to be the bleſſed Mother to his Sonne: who being alſo that King of power, was able ſo to fit all things, that his Mother ſhould co-operate together with thoſe bleſſings and guifts which he would endow her with all; which was iuſt and agreeable vnto reaſon. I ſay, that when hee ſaw and knew (for hee is the wiſedome of his Father) that his bleſſed Mother would not oppoſe againſt that which hee had decreed to doe in a matter of ſuch conſequence and importance, as was the Coniunction of the Diuine nature vnto the nature of man, he iudged it fit and expedient that ſhee ſhould be for euer exempted from the vaſſalage of ſinne, whether it were originall, actuall, mortall or veniall: hence it commeth, that ſhe neuer did treſpaſſe againſt God her Father. And if Iohn Baptiſt and Ieremie were ſanctified from their mothers wombe, how much more ſhould the ſacred Mother of God out-ſhine them in puritie, when amongſt al the creatures that were euer faſhioned by the hands of the Almighty, ſhee is the moſt eminent and perfect, next vnto the humanitie of her Sonne. And as in God there is no time either paſt or to come, but all is preſent with him, and being beſides a cleere and ſpotleſſe criſtall, that is neuer miſted ouer or made dimme by darkneſſe, he fore-ſaw in this Idea or glaſſe, that his bleſſed Mother ſhould in the whole race of her life gently ſubmit her ſelfe to his good pleaſure, and obey the Angell when hee came vnto her. For if Eue had her creation exempted from ſinne, it ſtandeth with reaſon that the ſecond Eue ſhould haue a greater dowry of integritie then euer the firſt had. And as the firſt Adam dam, being the type and figure of Ieſus Chriſt, was created without ſinne, and from a mould of earth that neuer was mingled with vncleanneſſe; how much more ſhall this ſecond Adam ſurmount the firſt in the excellency of his humanitie. And as God tooke from the firſt Adam when hee was a ſleepe one of his ribbes, and thereof created Eue, ſo God the Father while the ſecond Adam that was to come ſlept in his boſome, [u] tooke one of his ribbes and framed [x] another Eue from the ſame, that is, the bleſſed Mother of God. The Father contributed thereunto his power, the Sonne his wiſedome, and was content that ſhee ſhould haue a greater portion of wiſedome then the Seraphins or any other creature whatſoeuer, next to his humanity that was to come, and manifeſt it ſelfe vnto the world. And the ribbe which Almightie God tooke from Adam when hee ſlept did prefigure and fore-ſhew what I haue aboue declared. In like manner the holy Ghoſt did communicate his goodneſſe vnto her, not that eſſentiall goodnes which is co-eternall with him, but a goodnes of that proportion and magnificenſe as could poſſibly be beſtowed vpon a pure and immaculate creature. After this diſcourſe, Verrine did dictate the forme that was to be held, to giue teſtification that all this was ſpoken and vnderſtood in this manner.

[u] By his eternal knowledge & foreſight into things.

[x] By his intimate graces which are communicable vnto a creature. And it is a metaphore borrowed from the ribbe of Adam

Wee whoſe names are vnder-ſigned haue heard and ſeene all that which hath beene ſpoken by the mouth of Louyſe Cappeau who is poſſeſſed by three Diuels by ſome witch-craft that together with them was giuen vnto her: and further we haue heard one of the Diuels named Verrine, after much reſiſtance and renitency againſt God and the Exorciſmes, yet being at the length forced by God vnto the ſame, to deliuer all that is heere written touching the bleſſed Mother of God and the Eternall Word, to their glory and the ſaluation of Soules.

He further confeſſed in a great agony and chafe, that there there was no saluation out of the Church of Rome: that there was but one God, and one holy Baptisme, and therefore by a consequent but one Church.

Afterward he said that al these acts were, to confirme that which he had formerly touched, concerning the Order of Dominick, and to show how agreeable his rule was to God, and his blessed Mother, and that this Miracle was wrought in fauour of that Order. Obserue heere, that this was spoken, after that Verrine had said that this Miracle was wrought for the glory of God, and for the honour of his blessed Mother, Magdalene and Dominick.

Then to confirme whatsoeuer he had aboue spoken, he tooke an oath the strongest and most binding that a Deuel possibly could take, and if euer an oath had power to tye, it was this oath. And added, that there were some of opinion, that no oath was of validitie before God; yet when hee said vnto his Apostles that they should cast out Diuels, and foresaw that these Diuels being full of all iniquity, would not by their good will obey the commands of the Church, vnlesse they were adiured in the Name of Almighty God, hee gaue his Church authority ouer Diuels, to bee able to constraine thē by the vertue of Exorcismes. I affirme therefore, that the oathes of Diuels are in force whē they are discreetly ministred vnto thē. And the oath now inquestion is taken with as great solemnitie as possiblie may be in such a case, I hauing sworne vpon the honoured and blessed Sacrament in the Name of the Father Almighty, in the name of the Eternall Wisedome, which is the Sonne; and in the name of that infinite goodnes, which is the holy Ghost. It is also taken according to the intention of the whole Church militant and triumphant against the meaning of Hell, and any sinister or reserued purpose whatsoeuer, whereof the Diuels many times make their aduantage if the Exorcist doe not looke about him with great warinesse. And after hee had taken this oath, hee called for the wrath of God, of the bleſſed Trinitie, and of the whole Church militant and triumphant to fall vpon him. The like imprecation he made againſt all Hell, and that in the preſence of the whole Aſſembly.

You may heere behold the liſt of thoſe that were preſent and heard that which is aboue ſpoken, and who ſigned their names vnto the ſame, Frier Peter Dambruc, Francis Billet Prieſt of the Chriſtian Doctrine the Exorciſt, Romillon Prieſt vnworthy, Godam Doctor in Diuinity, Frier Peter Foruer, Vicar of S. Baume, A. Porchieres, Lange, Carret, Baltazar Charuaz, A. Lymory Prieſt, Honorat, Bœuf, Iohn Flotte Prieſt, Denis Guillemini Priour of Romoules, Frier William Cadry.

Then in confirmation of whatſoeuer he had ſpoken, Verrin was conſtrained to worſhip the holy and bleſſed Sacrament, and to ſay three times, Adoramus te Chriſte, quia per Sanctam Crucem tuam redemiſti hos, non autem nos.

After the ſaid oath, hee ſaid as hee did the day before three times, Aue Maria: and then he ſaid other three times, Ora pro illis Sancta Mater Dei: and againe other three times, Ora pro illis ſancta Magdalena: and other three times, Ora pro illis ſancta Martha: and other three times, Ora pro illis ſancte Lazare. But in the Salutation of the Virgin he refuſed to ſay Mater Dei, becauſe (ſaid hee) it is a name of the greateſt excellency and perfection amongſt all the attributes of her praiſes.

After dinner in the preſence of the Sub-Prior afore named while he was ſpeaking to Magdalene, Belzebub returned & entred into the body of the ſaid Magdalene, & bad Leuiathan come forth, who preſently [y] performed the ſame; he ſaid the like to Aſmodee, who came foorth like a flame of fire mingled with ſulphure: hee further ſaid to Aſtaroth, come thou foorth likewiſe, and he flue out of her with an extreame ſtinke of roſen & ſulphure.

[y] Thus did Magdalene afterward report.

After

Afterward, as Verrine did dictate the disputation that happened betweene him and the Sub-prior afore said, Belzebub came and demaunded to haue the two Diuels that were with Verrine, to wit Gresill and Sonneillon. Verrine told him they will doe you no good, for thou seest that the Princes who are with thee are able to stand thee in no stead. Belzebub said vnto him, come thou also along with me. Verrine told him, I cannot yet leaue my master, let it suffice thee that I bestow my seruants vpon thee, and immediatly Gresill and Sonneillon came out of the body of Louyse, and shee sensibly felt that they came from her in the manner of winde. Yet did not Belzebub leaue intreating of Verrine to goe with him. Verrine answered, Why doest thou thus intreat mee? I cannot goe, and if I should goe, my [a] presence would preiudice your dessignement. Belzebub said, speake not thus, for we are companions. Not altogether so (said Verrine) the Diuell hath seduced her and the Diuell shall bring her home to the confusion of all Hell. Then said Verrine, wel I must goe then, but it shal be to conuert the Magician, and bid the Exorcist to [b] take the booke of Exorcismes, and to command him in the name of God to goe thether, which the Exorcist did, and presently Verrine came foorth, saying, I goe against Belzebub. Then did Louyse feele his departure from her like vnto a winde. But as he was comming foorth, hee said, I doe not leaue thee altogether. Being departed from her, Louyse remained in her ordinary temper resenting onely the paines that proceeded from the witchcraft.

The same day in the euening were these two women exorcised by father Francis Priest of the Doctrine, and Verrine began to speake as followeth.

Souldiers follow their Captaine, and when Belzebub departed wee went after him. God would winne vnto him the soules of such as are growne stony in their obstinacy: his desire is that you would shunn that which is naught, and apply your ſelues vnto that which is good. Wee haue been at Marſeille, and haue diuerſe times knocked at his gate, and Belzebub, obſerue how ſlender thy forces are when thou doeſt demand for help of my ſeruants. Belzebub, thy affaires runne in a low ebbe, and this is the reaſon why thou art now ſo ſad and dumpiſh, Belzebub thou art at thy wits end what to follow. Then he ſpake to Magdalene and ſaid, Magdalene, let not thy courage be abated for thoſe few torments which thou now endureſt, for the paines of Hell are farre more grieuous. After this hee ſpake vnto the Diuels, and ſaid, come all yee Diuels of the aire, all yee Diuels of the earth, and all the Diuels of hell, come all to helpe and ſuccour Belzebub; but your comming wil be to no purpoſe, and your aſſiſtance not worth your comming, for all of you are in compariſon, but as leaues of trees.

[a] He speaketh of Lewes the Magitian.
[a] See the answere vnto the 5. doubt after the epistle to the Reader.
[b] They that were thus possessed felt thēselues much lighter and in greater ease, when the euill spirits departed from them.

Then turning to Belzebub, he ſaid: be of good cheere Belzebub, knoweſt thou not, that where thou looſeſt one, thou ſhalt gaine tenne: ha curſed ſpirit, oughteſt thou not to conſider, that theſe ſoules were not created by thee? Doeſt thou not ſee, that God will take them vnto himſelfe? Thou haſt inueagled thouſands from him, and thinkeſt thou that hee will euer diſſemble this?

[c] An inuectiue againſt the Magician.

If [c] it were poſſible that leaues of trees could weepe, they would ſhed forth teares of blood for this wretched ſinner, ſo vaſt are his offences before God.

Then Verrine turned his diſcourſe to God, and ſaid: great God! how good, how bountifull, and how ſweet art thou? I am tortured and tormented, and haue not the patience to behold thy great goodneſſe towards the groſſeſt ſinners, eſpecially towards this man whom I am forbidden to name. O all-powerfull God, why doeſt thou not vntie and let out thoſe heapes of water, or hurle downe thy lightning from heauen to deſtroy this wretch, and to bring him to vtter perdition, who ſen-

deth

deth ſoules to hell more in number, then the haile that falleth vpon the earth? I tell you, God can diſſemble this no longer, neither will he any more indure his execrable villanies: but his pleaſure is, that he be either conuerted or puniſhed. The impatiencie which God taketh at the loſſe of theſe and other obſtinate ſoules, is not ſuch a kind of impatiency as may any way darken or preiudice his perfections, but it is rather an argument in him of vnblemiſhed goodneſſe: for God in iuſtice ſhould dart downe lightning from heauen to deſtroy them, or ſuffer the earth to gape and ſwallow them vp, who haue better deſerued this puniſhment then Dathan and Abiran, whom the earth deuoured vp for their rebellion. O Lord God, he cannot flie from thee; whether he deſcend to hel, for according to thy eſſence thou art there, or whether he doth imagine to ſtray from thee by wandring like a vagabond vp and downe the world, for thou ſeeſt all, and art euery where: or if he would aſcend vnto heauen, for there the gates are ſhut againſt him. So that if he be not repentant, hee may perchance flie, but he cannot euade.

Great God, thou haſt made reſeruation of three things to thy ſelfe, and wouldeſt not that ſinners ſhould intermeddle or dip their fingers in them, to wit, thy glorie, iudgement and vengeance.

And becauſe the guidance and gouernement of things is moſt proper vnto him, you muſt let him alone in his courſe of gouernement, for he knoweth wel when to take the cauſe of innocencie into his owne protection. What? thinke ye that God will ſuffer this iniquitie to branch vp higher? I tell you he is wearied with his long ſufferance; and therefore wil ſee the end of this inditement, and howſoeuer this buſines ſhal fal, he wil be ſure to faſhion and ſhape it to his glory, & the ſaluation of ſoules.[d] I ſay further, that if he be not conuerted, he ſhal be burned aliue: if he wil needs periſh, God will leaue him to himſelf, for this good God for his part was not not wanting to him in any thing. God reſembleth a father of many children, who are all ſtubborne and rebellious againſt him, and will not obey him neither by allurements, nor by threats: then doth this father ſay vnto them that they deſerue to be puniſhed, becauſe they are diſobedient to their father, and will not harken vnto him, neither for hope of inheritance, nor for any other admonitions or inducements that may bee laid before them, but doe continue on in their contempt againſt him.

[d] A prediction that the Magician ſhould be burned.

It is a thing full of aſtoniſhment, that God ſhould prouide this great remedy for you miſerable and accurſed ſinners, and yet the number of thoſe that lay hold vpon it ſhould be ſo ſmall. There are ſome that conceiue that God is indebted vnto them, thinking with themſelues, that hee hath promiſed Paradiſe vnto them, and that heauen was not deſtinated to intertaine beaſts or Infidels, but for Chriſtians. It is true, God is vexed with a holy kind of impatience, when he conſidereth the miſchieuous and malitious purpoſes of men: he hath purchaſed their ſoules at an high and ineſtimable rate; for the ſatiſfying of which paiment, it was expedient that diuinitie ſhould be vnited vnto a humane nature. Thou alſo, who art the powerfull mother of God, did'ſt ſuffer much for their ſakes, and wert vnder the Croſſe, and neere vnto thy Sonne: yet for all this, do they renounce thy Paſſion (O God) the nailes, and al other inſtruments of thy torments; and doeſt thou ſtill hearken after them, and willingly ſubiect thy ſelfe to death, to ſaue them? Why art thou ſo fond ouer them; is not thy bleſſed Mother in heauen with an infinite number of Saints and Angels? If all the drops of water in the ſea, all the leaues of trees, all the Starres of heauen were capable to ſound forth thy praiſes, they would all bleſſe thee, O God, and giue thee thanks for thoſe manifold benefits which thou haſt conferred vpon men: yea, the bleſſing of their creation alone doth challenge euerlaſting giuing of thankes.

thanks. Beſides this, he hath giuen his Angels charge ouer you, who doe euer intercede on your behalfe, and ſay, they will be conuerted, they will be conuerted, you muſt haue a little patience. The Virgin Marie is alſo euer mediating for you, yet are you regardleſſe of all this, eſpecially this wretch, who ſhall either be burned, or be conuerted: for God can no longer ſuffer or looke on villanies of ſo foule a nature; and this will be the end of this buſineſſe.

The meſſengers of the King haue been at his gate and haue diuers times knocked there: I my ſelfe alſo was preſent, but not any way to further the proiect of Belzebub.

Then he ſpake to Belzebub, and ſaid: Accurſed feind, thou diddeſt imagine that I would combine with thee, but thou art deceiued: for I cannot ſwarue from the commiſſion of my Maſter. I did indeed ſuffer my ſeruants to giue thee aſſiſtance, but for my ſelfe I tooke part againſt thee, and made that iourney of ſet purpoſe to declare vnto him, that as the Diuel had ſeduced him, ſo the Diuell ſhould bee an occaſion to ſet him right in the true way. Then hee tooke a ſolemne oath, that whatſoeuer hee had now vttered, was agreeable vnto truth.

The ſame day, when Verrine was dictating that which hee had formerly deliuered touching the immaculate conception of the bleſſed Virgin Marie, the Mother of God, he was asked what he meant in ſaying, that the humanitie of the Sonne of God did repoſe it ſelfe in the boſome of his Father, and that then God did forme his bleſſed Mother out of one of his ribs. To this Verrine anſwered; You may here cauill and ſay, that then this propoſition muſt bee true, the Sonne is before his Mother. I tell you, that the humanitie of Chriſt Ieſus (as all other things whatſoeuer are) was alwaies preſent with his celeſtiall Father: for with him nothing can bee ſaid to bee paſt, or to come, but all is preſent: the Sonne is before his Mother, [e] because the Father did first [f] behold the humanitie of his Sonne, before hee beheld his mother: yet for all this you cannot properly say, that the one precedeth the other, for in God all things are present.

[e] That is, with the eye of his grace.
[f] Because of his dignity.

The Acts of the 23. of December.

THis day Verrine began to make a furious inuectiue [g] against the Magician, saying with great out-cries:

[g] An inuectiue against the Magician.

Accursed wretch, thou deseruest to haue thy life restored vnto thee tenne thousand times, that thou mightest so many times suffer death; yea, thou shouldest die as oft as thou hast sacrilegiously offended.

Notwithstanding, God would yet deale fauourable with thee, if thy selfe giue no stop thereunto.

Ha you Capuchins! you shall bee punished with temporall calamities, because you did vary from the forme which was prescribed vnto you. You might well conceiue, that Almighty God hath communicated power vnto his Church, to bee able to command Diuels: and your charity that you should beare vnto your neighbours might haue perswaded you hither, that you might take information of all things; but hee is not alwaies absolute, that conceiteth hee is already sufficiently informed.

Then said Verrine to the Dominican Father (who euer wrote what hee deliuered) I must goe thither the third time; consider how God loueth this soule: Before Christmas you shall see the bottome of this sacke emptied, there was neuer such villany seene, neither was there euer the like miracle, or the like remedy. Verrine also said vnto the Dominican Father, in the presence of the aboue-mentioned Sub-prior. [h] Take the booke of Exorcismes, and enioyne me in the name of God to goe the third time to Marseille, to solicite and labour labour the conuersion of the Magician. When Verrine issued forth, Gresil who held his place, declared that he would speake to the Magician in another manner then he did to Magdalene. And as Magdalene at the first would not beleeue, because the Diuell busied himselfe in the cause of God; or rather because Louyse did take vpon her to teach and instruct her, or else some Diuell in her (as was reported) so should not this Magician regard any thing which should be spoken for his reformation.

[h] See the Apology vnto the 5. doubt.

The same day in the morning the Dominican Father did exorcise, & Verrine began to speake in this manner,

The will that is guided by the grace of God is able to compasse any thing, and is mightier then the powers of hell it selfe. How Idle then are they that say, I cannot be conuerted? It is vnbeseeming to adde excuses to your sinnes, it was the old dotage of Adam and Eue.

Adam thou haddest sufficient grace to keepe thy selfe vntainted, but thou diddest suffer thy selfe to bee abused, as many wretched sinners doe euery day.

The soule is the mistrisse, and the body as the Chambermaid: yet when the soule shall say, let vs rise betimes to pray and serue God, the body will forthwith oppugne it, and say, I am yet but young, let old age first approch: we shall haue leisure and time enough before vs, to be repentant.

The memory will say, let vs call to mind the blessings which are showred vpon vs from aboue: the vnderstanding will thereunto adioyne, let vs contemplate the goodnesse, wisedome and power of the Creator in these his blessings; and the will is ready to push vs on, to loue and feare this good God, because he is the sourse and first originall of all your happinesse.

The soule will say, I will heedfully obserue thy diuine inspirations, and will bequeath my selfe vnto thy seruice, I will endure no longer that my seruant should inuade the gouernment of my house. To which the chambermaid chambermaid will reply, Ha miſtriſſe! what meane you to doe with your ſelfe? take compaſſion of your tenderneſſe, you are of too delicate a compoſition, to bee martyred with ſuch auſtere courſes of life: you haue time enough to repent you, ſolace and glut your ſelfe with delights, whiles occaſion is offered, and vſe your goods with freeneſſe and profuſeneſſe, that you may varie and runne through all manner of paſtimes, whiles the time will giue this liberty vnto you. Then Verrine ſaid, My words (you ſee) ſauour of the ſpirit, and doe maintaine, that the ſoule is and ought to be the miſtriſſe of the body. It is certaine that where the chambermaid holdeth the raines of gouernment in her hands, the family will ſoone ſinke and fall to decay: therefore it ill beſeemes the body to beare ſway, becauſe it reſembleth a woman, who wanteth diſcretion to gouerne her ſelfe; and God will not exact a reckoning from the body, but from the ſoule, and the ſoule ſhall haue the precedency of the body both in the reward and in the puniſhment; becauſe the ſoule ought rather to beleeue him that framed it, then the ſeruant. A blind man is vnfit to raigne, and why? becauſe he is blind. i The ſoule is a commonwealth, and if the conſcience bee in quiet, all the reſt is the more peaceable: Hence it is that the ſoule ſhould gouerne and not the body, becauſe it is deuoid of all true apprehenſion of the miſery which it may ſuffer. Eue ſpake but once in excuſe of her fault, but the body grumbles and kickes perpetually.

i The ſoule compared to a Commonwealth.

Your God hath an armory garniſhed with all perfections, and can euery day preſent new graces, to thoſe that demand them of him, for hee keepeth them in his ſtorehouſe to beſtow them vpon his children. In like manner hath your God giuen the holy Scriptures, the new Teſtament, and the liues of Saints vnto his Church, yet he reſteth not heere, but doth euery day offer new preſents vnto her.

Embrace your God, who for you hanged naked vp-on

on the Crosse; for he is your father, and the blessed mother of God is your aduocate, Angels and Saints are your brethren, and their pedigree is very noble. God will also ennoble you after the same manner, and this nobility is more venerable then all the royalty of descents that may bee giuen to the Kings of the earth.

[k] The King of France lately deceased did worthily esteeme of this nobilitie; he did humble himselfe, and call vpon his God, demeaning himselfe in his presence as a malefactor, and oftentimes heard Masse with much deuotion and effusion of teares. I tell you, many Priests doe not so attentiuely meditate vpon the greatnesse and excellency of God, as he did; therefore was his death a kinde of martyrdome, because hee would rather suffer death for the regard and reuerence which he bare vnto his God, then giue credit to that which the Magicians had foreshowne vnto him, and in dying hee pronounced the word Iesus, and recommended his soule into the hands of God. Hee had offended his God, as Dauid had done before him, and was guilty as hee was, and they were both Kings of mighty Nations: but this had been infected with heresie, as thou Louyse formerly wert: yet O Henry, it is a truth, thou art now in Paradise. Be glad Marie of Medicis, for thou hast the honour to haue wedded a King, who is now a Saint in heauen: and if thou shalt imitate his godly end, God will inuest thee with the same honour: and thou Dauphin now a young tender King, bee thou an imitator of the rare indowments of thy father, who was so solicitous to giue thee vertuous education. And doe you all loue this Prince, for he well deserueth to bee loued by you

[k] See the Apology vnto the 5. doubt: there is further mention made hereof in the pag.

A discourse touching the late King. Mounsieur Boutereau Aduocate in the Counsell, doth elegantly (as his manner is) expresse this Saint, in the life of Henry the 4 lately deceased, which was composed by him: who did expresly send into Flanders to father Francis Domptius, that faithfully collected this history, to be informed of that which is heere spoken: which for the better assurance and attestation of the truth, hee sent vnto him word for word: Although there be also other witnesses thereof. The two discourses in Latine and French did containe this relation heere word for word: so that we dared not to change one title hereof, as we haue forborne the like alteration through the whole frame and body of this history. God turne it all to his Glory.

you, and curſed be him that ſhall bandy or plot againſt this Prince, and will not yeeld all dutifull obedience vnto him, eſpecially vnto a Prince of ſo ſweet and harmeleſſe a nature as this is: who will proue another Lewes in France, that for his great vertue was canonized a Saint. Reioyce little King, for thy father is high in the glory of heauen. I ſpeake now to you, that are but wormes of the earth, examine well your ſelues; for if your Prince did ſo humble and deiect himſelfe, how much more ſhould you be proſtrated in the lowlineſſe of ſpirit? thinke and conſider ſeriouſly of theſe things.

[l] He is called Seruus ſeruorum.

Since alſo the holy Father doth humble himſelfe, who knoweth no ſuperiour in this world, it is to be admired that you ſhould bee negligent or dainty in humbling of your ſelues.

The ſame day Verrine went againe to the Magician; but before hee departed from the body of Louyſe, hee diſcourſed of the wretched eſtate of the Magician, and of the mercy of God towards him, almoſt in theſe very words.

[m] A mauellous Apoſtrophe vnto the Magician.

Certainly Lewes thou art an hypocrite, and a Phariſie, and vnder the ſhew of piety thou haſt heaped vp ſuch a multitude of tranſgreſſions and other damnable ſacrileges, that they are not to bee numbred. Of a truth Lewes, thou doſt out-ſtrip all magicians in malice and impiety, and art the chiefe of all their ſabbaths and aſſemblies. Of a truth Lewes the Diuels are of opinion, that hell it ſelfe will not bee ſufficient to afford puniſhments for thee proportionable vnto thy villanies. I tell thee Lewes, they will proteſt againſt God, if thou bee not conuerted, & will beg of him, that he would make Hell ſix times more horrid and terrible then it is, that thou mighteſt be tormented there for euermore. Of a truth Lewes, Cain, and Iudas ſhall bee adiudged innocents in compariſon of thee: for Chriſt Ieſus had not as then ſhed his blood for them, as he hath done for thee. I tell

tel thee Lewes, thy abominations are of that heighth & vnsufferable presumption: that God himselfe would bewaile thy wretched estate, if hee were capable of teares: and euery one would willingly bring a fagot to burne thee, and would say; Iust God make this impious villaine to liue a thousand times, and so many times to suffer death: yet is it a certaine truth, Lewes, that this good God is ready to die againe for thee, and would, if need were, come now downe from heauen, and suffer himselfe to be crucified on this [n] Crosse.

[n] He meaneth the Crosse set vp in S. Baume.

Besides the blessed mother of God and all the Saints doe of pure pitty plead thy cause, I tell thee truth Lewes, not that they haue any need of thee, but that thou mayest bring backe those soules which thou hast led into perdition. Of a truth Lewes God hath sent his messengers and guard vnto thee, and they haue cast the rod of their power into thy house. Nay, I say more, vnreasonable creatures would beg mercy for thee at Gods hands, if they were endowed with reason. What I deliuer is most true, for nothing is impossible to God, who is able to make a Diuell of an Angell, and a Saint of a sinner.

The same day in the euening father Francis Billet did exorcise, at the beginning whereof Magdalene moued all the assembly to commiserate her case, by reason of the deepe and extraordinary sighs which shee pitifully breathed forth, whiles the Diuels were inwardly torturing her. And Verrine said, you that hope for a future reward, see you obey your God, and you that are already Saints with him in heauen, and haue now the full fruition of grace and eternall glory, as the end and vp-shot of your labours, bee you also plentifull in your duty and obedience towards him. But I damned [o] wretch as I am, expect no recompence of my paines and trauell.

[o] Verrine confesseth himselfe to be damned.

The Acts of the 24. of December being Christmas-Eue.

THis day in the morning the Dominican Father did exorcise, and Verrine discoursed in these words.

Gods pleasure is that all men vnderstand, that the Diuels themselues doe obey him, and tremble before him. I tell you P God was wearied with your impieties, and therefore leaped downe from Heauen to earth in the wombe of his blessed Mother that hee might redresse them. Blessed Mother of God, thy Sonne was impatient to be inclosed vp so long in thy flesh, not for that he deprehended in thee any thing which might distast him, but because his desire was to come into the world, and to yssue foorth from thy holy prison with all the speed hee might, to giue light vnto the world that remained darke, and to make his brightnes communicable vnto his creatures. Of a truth Mary thou art the Moone, and thy Sonne the Sunne of this world: the Saints are also the starres that shine in the same. And therefore was this Sunne sent by the celestiall Father not onely to illuminate and deriue part of his light to the Moone and Starres, but to giue light vnto euery man that commeth into the world: which illumination could not spread it selfe ouer the earth, vnlesse he had manifested himselfe to the earth by his natiuity. Wonder not that I haue often said, that this was a worke of admiration: for Kings haue their Pallaces and bedds furnished euen to prodigality, but good God, thou couldest scarce finde a place to bee borne; yet mightest thou haue built for thy selfe a Paris, or haue chosen the cittie of Rome in her greatnes, or haue caused some Royall Palace to bee prepared for thee, for thou art wisedome and goodnes it selfe, and hast created heauen and earth of nothing: Neuertheless, though the guide and prouidence of all things depend of thee, yet wouldest thou not make choise choise of eminent and magnificent places for thy Natiuitie, nor of Queenes and Princesses that might be assistant vnto thy Mother in the time of her trauell.

P A discourse vpon ỹ natiuity of Christ Iesus very obseruable & worth the reading.

Great God, thou art more powerfull then all the great ones of the earth, and yet how il doe thy creatures demeane themselues towards thee.

Ioseph q thou diddest doubt at first the veritie of these things, but wert afterwards fully satisfied that the Mother of God was a Virgin before her deliuery, at her deliuery, and after her deliuery. Thus r doe many now question this very miracle which God hath wrought among you, to wit, that the Diuell should tell the truth, but so is the wil of the most Highest, who by his meanes would renue the league and amitie which is betweene his loue and his creatures. O blessed Mother of God, thy Sonne is the true God, begotten of his Father. Let it enter into thy consideration, how choise and exquisite a Mansion did so mighty a Father prouide for this onely and welbeloued Sonne, in whom he was so well pleased: and thinke with thy selfe, what presentments did thy deare Sonne prepare to offer vnto thee as his Mother? Blessed Spirit, where was the goodly beds with all the rich and pompous furniture which thou diddest prouide for thy Spouse? Where were thy easie Litters to carry her? Where were the Caroches? Where were the horses? There was but an Oxe and an Asse there present, for other liuing creatures are too proud to be witnesses to such humility. I say that God refused those creatures that were proud, as is the horse: he reiected the Lyons, who figure vnto vs arrogancy: he cared not for Mules, who are the Hieroglyphicks of malice: hee was onely contented that the Oxe and the Asse should be present, who are beasts full of simplicity and deuoid of maliciousnesse. The Asse pointeth out vnto vs the body, the Oxe the vnderstanding, so as, when the Asse and Oxe doe draw together, they doe beare the yoake of the Lord. The Angels were there the Princes, Lords and Courq S. Gregory in his 26. Homily maketh a comparison between Ioseph & S. Thomas, for both of them were scrupulous & doubtful of the truth for a season. God permitting such staggerings sometimes in our vnderstādings, to the end that our assurance may bee the stronger.

r The doubt that some haue of this History.

Courtiers, which is euidently declared vnto vs by that melodious song, Gloria in excelsis Deo. Thou Francis, couldest well haue distinguished the difference betweene the musick of this world, and such celestiall harmony, for thou diddest so well apprehend the sweetnes of that heauenly Instrument, that vpon the touch of one onely string thou diddest forget nature and those necessary actions of eating and drinking. For it is most certaine, that who so hath but a tast of the sweetnesse of Heauen will haue all the pleasures of the earth in no estimation. Great God! all things are subiected vnto thy will, for doe thou but speake the word, and what is there that dareth resist thee? Hence it is that thou mad'st choice of a poore and contemptible Virgin to bee thy Mother, because thou wouldest paterne and square foorth from thy selfe, a perfect example of humility vnto others.

Who would euer haue affirmed, that such a one as shee should bee the Mother of Almighty God? Who would euer haue thought that her Sonne which she carried in her armes had beene the liuing God, Creator of Heauen and Earth?

In like manner diddest thou yssue foorth from that chast wombe of thy blessed Mother, without any taint or corruption of thy integrity, as a Sun-beame passeth through the glasse without breaking of the same, but rather maketh it more cleere and brightsome.

Great God, thy blessed Mother and Ioseph, when they were at Bethlem were forced to vse an vnknown stable for their dwelling place.

I am much displeased at this thy too great humility, when I obserue the haughtines which swelleth mankind; I meane not Kings and Princes, but I speak of baser and more subordinate fellowes, who are indeed very shrubbs and flyes, yet if they faile in their expectation of the smallest commoditie that may befall them, they presently fall a murmuring, and thinke thou doest them wrong

wrong, although it be nothing so, and that these cogitations are miscreated in them by errors & the wrongfull mis-apprehension of things.

O Ioseph, thou diddest enquire after some lodging wherein you might retire your selues, but there was no roome in the Inne, and why? because they knew you not: for if they had had aduertisement who you were, they would assuredly haue lodged you in their house.

But God was content to take harborage in a poore beggerly lodging, being almost vntiled and open euery where, and not being locked and made sure for their safety. You therefore that are poore can haue no place for excuse of your intemperatnesse and impatiency, but you are to be contented if you haue but where-with-all to intertaine your life and soule together. You are not without a stable and a cratch wherein to lodge the King of glory, the stable is your soule, and the cratch your heart.

Ioseph and Mary accepted of the stable, although Christ for his part could haue beene contented to bee borne without doores in the open fields: but hee made election of a stable, not because hee had need of it, but in regard that it had need of him, that so it being honoured by his presence, might bee a place of more renowne then all the Kings Palaces of the world. If God had permitted the ordering and determination of this affaire to the will of the Seraphins, or Sages of this world, I tell you they would haue runne a cleane contrary course vnto that which God had ordained. But good God, thou diddest by inspiration put it into Iosephs heart to chuse the stable, because thou wouldest publish vnto the world, that thou doest not despise the soule of any man, that so, all pretext and shadow of excuse might be taken away from those that would otherwise obiect, I am too poore, I am not fitt to lodge my God: for the soule of a poore man is as acceptable vnto him as is the soule of a King, if it stand established in the grace of God. The place where God was borne, is no more a ſtable, it is a Palace, and a Church, and many account it a great happineſſe to behold it: ſo thy ſoule ſhall no longer remaine a ſtable, but ſhall become a Temple and a Palace when God ſhal take vp his lodgeing in the ſame. Prophane not therefore this ſtable with mortall ſinne, but rather ſanctifie it, and make it more venerable then this Baume, into which no man may enter but bare-footed.

Bid ſinne and Satan, when they labour to thruſt themſelues into that place, to depart from thence, becauſe it is a ſtable reſerued onely for God, to come and take his repoſe therein. Then will your God come vnto you as a little childe, wrap him vp charily in his ſwathling bands, make much of him, cheriſh him, and handle him with gentlenes and deuotion.

Mary brought him forth into the world, yet did ſhe not dare once to touch him, much leſſe would you be ſo hardy to handle him if you were acquainted with him: but feare without loue is fruitles and vnprofitable, and if loue ſhould not ſurmount feare, what man is hee that would haue the boldneſſe to appeare before him? Thou that art his Church, how vngratefull a Spouſe ſhouldeſt thou be, if thou diddeſt not make acknowledgement of thy husbands benefits towards thee. Art thou ignorant what the Lord ſaid to Peter? Feede my ſheepe, for you that are Preiſts could not be true Shepheards, vnleſſe you were careſull to feede and giue ſuſtentation vnto your flocke. I doe not ſpeake this, as if I would haue you conuey them into ſome fat paſturage of this world, but my meaning is, that you ſhould communicate the Doctrine of their God vnto them.

It is true Iohn the Euangeliſt, that thou wert priuy to many myſteries, and haſt not buried thy Talent nor fed vpon theſe royall viands alone, but thy reſolution euer was, to make diſtribution of the ſame to others: and dare you, proud and haughty wretches, conceaue that you

you are humble, and yet will not diuide some portion of your knowledge vnto your neighbours?

Besides ô Iohn, thou hast diuulged the visions which thou hast seene and thou Iohn Baptist, thou hast not bin silent all this time of aduent, but hast said, let all mountaines be humbled, and yet how many mountaines are there that extoll themselues?

Michaelis, thou hast also enlarged thy voice at Aix in imitation of Iohn Baptist saying: Make straight the way of the Lord: yet haue there bin those, that were present at thy Sermons, that carpe at thee, and say, that thou hast not a glib and eloquent toung: Others there are, who haue bin meerely incited out of curiosity to harken vnto thee: others murmure, that thy gesture which thou doest vse in preaching, is not gracefull: to some others they obiect, that their vaine of preaching is too domesticke and familiar, and say, they had rather heare young Diuines preach, because they are more curious and neate in their composures. These are not worthy to heare the word of God, and deserue to be shut vp in the dungeon of Hell, because they will not harken vnto Gods word, whereby they may be nursed vp to saluation.

ſ Then he said, accursed wretches, do you deeme that the trauells of Preachers are nothing? I tell you, they many times forbeare to feede when hunger seaseth vpon them, and to repose themselues when sleepe doth ouertake them: they warme not themselues when they are benummed with colde, and doe trauaile a fresh when they are already tyred and wearied. Wherein they doe like faithfull children who are not allured by the promises of Heauen, nor yet affrighted with the threats of Hell; But as a dutifull childe obeyeth his father, not out of any second respect but meerely out of affection, so the true children of God respect not their particular interests, neither do they decline those laborious courses which they haue vndertaken, but discharge that duty whereunto God by a sanctified vocation hath called them. And of this number are Preists, Religious persons, and Preachers.

ſ Touching the labours and paines taken by Preachers.

[t] A signe of predestination.

[t] One signe and infallible argument of eternall predestination, is to heare the word of God with willingnes and alacritie, to make a free confession of himselfe, to communicate, and to serue Mary the Mother of God, with all submissiueneſſe and deuotion. [u] Then he said, it standeth with good reason, that he who was to be the Guardian vnto the Virgin should be inuested with a prerogatiue of greater excellency then all other Saints, and was to haue precedency of Iohn Baptist and the Prophet Ieremy. For hee was to bee the Spouse vnto the Mother of God: and was to be the maintainer and putatiue Father of her son. Mary was indeed thy sister, Ioseph and thou doest alwaies shew thy selfe a deare and trusty associate vnto her. He said further, that Ioseph had for a space a touch of feare and iealousie vpon him, not vnderstanding the mistery which lay vailed ouer in silence, neither doe I wonder at it (said he) for Mary was not of the humour of the women of these times, who doe blab and discloſe vnto their husbands all they know: shee was of a contrary straine, and did commit all that was reuealed vnto her by Gabriell the Archangell who came from that supreme Counsell of the blessed Trinity, vnto the close custody and guard of secrecy and silence. Al her words that came from her were full of waight and wisedome, for Mary was not like vnto Eue, a multiplyer of words and impertinent discourses.

[u] Gerson and some others hold this tenent, that he was sanctified from his mothers wombe.

At dinner also Verrine spake of sundry subiects, tending much to edification: and amongst the rest he discoursed, that the soules in blisse did more thirst after the saluation of our soules, and the enioying of our company with them in Paradise, then Hell and all the Diuels together could after their ouer-throw and perdition; for the power and efficacy of the Saints in Heauen, farre sursurmounted the impiety and malice of the damned. He further said, When you sit downe to eate, imagine that those blessings which are set before you doe point out vnto you three things, Accipe, Redde, Time. Accipe, take thy refection; Redde, giue thanks vnto God; and Time, beware how thou bee found vngratefull for such manifold blessings.

In the meane space some or other had giuen part of a honny-combe to these two women, which they had found lying on the ground, and was blowne downe from a tree by the winde. And Verrine from this honny-combe tooke occasion to discourse, and to say vnto Magdalene, Magdalene thou shouldest propose the Bee vnto thy imitation, which silently flieth vp and downe and gathereth the extraction of whatsoeuer iuice is most precious among the flowers, by this I meane vertues.

Magdalene x goe thou likewise to Saint Vrsula, and from euery one of thy sisters pluck a vertue: from one gather Humility, from another Patience, from another an vpright intention, from another Charity, from another Obedience: for thus, Magdalene doth that industrious honny-fly demeane himselfe, & sometimes dieth through his laboriousnes and trauell, for hee was framed to take paines. You are to doe the like, and should die after the same manner. Then he spake further of the blessed Virgin saying, O immense God! Mary did beare thee according to thy humanity, and thou diddest support her according to thy diuinity: for of a truth thou wer't at one time a litle Childe, and a mighty God.

x Acquisition of vertues.

God y would haue the creature to co-operate with him, as is verified in thee O Mary: vnto whom although God did inlarge his bounty, and did garnish thy minde with rare and inestimable indowments, yet diddest thou still appeare more humble, and shouldest not indeed be the Mother of God vnlesse thou haddest contributed some-what of thine owne vnto his working:

y The co-operation of the creature with God.

it being his good pleasure that his creatures should euer make contribution of some-thing. You haue nothing to bestow vpon him but your will, from which no man is to exempt himselfe: giue him therefore your body and soule, for that will content him.

The same day Verrine compared himselfe to a barren and withered tree, and although (said he) God hath spouted such sappe into mee, that by the power of it I doe bring foorth sweete and wholesome fruite, yet am I still a barren and an accursed tree; and shall neuer behold the face of God, but shall alwaies remaine a Diuell: yet thus much I may say, that there was neuer any Deuill raised to the like honour as to laud the Name of God, and to accomplish his pleasure, as I now am: And he further said, that he had promised vnto him a diminution [z] and abatement of some degrees of his punishment, if he did his duty with faithfulnesse.

[z] See the answere vnto the doubts, the 10. obiection.

The Acts of the 25. of December being Christmas day.

[a] A pious discourse vpon the feast of Christmas.

ON Christmas day, towards midnight the three Diuels which were in Louyse were commanded to goe to Marseille, to labour the conuersion of Lewes the Magician. At that time was Magdalene lulled, and as it were, benummed with a heauy slumber, which proceeded from the Diuell, and indured all the time that Masse was saying, and the Masse once ended shee returned againe to her accustomed temper.

[b] Spirits doe goe and come with incredible celerity.

The same day, and houre aforesaid, the Dominican Father did exorcise Louyse and Magdalene; and then [b] Verrine began to speake in this manner. Hee that will come to the knowledge of his God, must looke for him vpon the earth, and make inquiry after the litle childe which lieth in the stable: as hee is your Iudge, you must looke vp to Heauen, and tremble at his Diuinity, but as hee is a litle childe, you must intertaine him

in

in your affections. According to his Humanity he is but litle, but according to his Diuinity hee is a great God, and worthy to be praised. Euery one may (if hee will) dedicate his seruice vnto this litle childe, neither can any excuse himselfe from the same, for there is no man but hath an Oxe and an Asse; the Asse signifieth the body, the Oxe the soule; for the soule resembleth the Oxe, that easily knoweth his masters cribb. This Oxe and this Asse must vngrudgingly beare the yoak that their master laieth on them, that is to say, all mortifications, afflictions and troubles, and whatsoeuer else hapeneth vnto a man by the will of God, all which may bee said to be the yoake of the Lord. This yoake is sweete, and this burthen light to all those that doe perfectly loue him: you must not therefore say, I am not able to beare it, for God commandeth nothing that is impossible. It is a truth, that hee indeed was loaden with a yoake that was very comberſome, and with a burthen exceedingly heauy, for his Crosse did ouerlay him with an intollerable pressure; yet did hee not call vnto you, behold my Crosse, carry you it as I haue done: No, hee saith not so, because hee knoweth your debilitie will easily sinke vnder the same; but hee saith, carry my yoake, because the burthen thereof is very portable, to those that loue God and serue him as they ought. God hath his troopes of Angels and Saints about him, neither is it to bee wondred that Angels obey him, and that men put his will in execution, but that Deuils, who are already condemned to the Gallies of Hell should yeeld him their obedience, heere is it that doth amaze vs with astonishment and admiration. Great God, why doest thou not cause these things to be deliuered by some Seraphin, or some learned Preacher, and not to bee divulged by the mouth of this silly woman? Or why should I bee constrained to disclose my name in an action that is directly preiudiciall vnto Hell, and to my great griefe, that am forced to pronounce it? Then he said, many beleeue not this; but I answere them, they haue not seene God nor Paradise, and yet they beleeue both the one and the other. Certainly Thomas thy God (vnto whom it is impossible that hee should tell a lie) hath said, that hee would rise the third day: and what? did hee not rise the third day? Certainly hee did, but because thou diddest not see it, thou wouldest not beleeue it, but diddest say, I will not beleeue it, except I may touch the prints of the nayles. There is none among you that euer saw him die in person, yet doe you beleeue that he suffered death for you. Know you not what God said to Thomas, blessed are they that shall not see these things that thou seest, and shall beleeue. There is no neede of faith in those things which wee manifestly and plainly see: as if I should tell you that this Priest is standing at the Altar, I imagine you would beleeue mee, neither should this faith of yours containe any great matter of merite, because you see this together with mee. All the fruitlesse sciences and speculations of Cicero, Plato, and the other Heathen Philosophers, to what purpose serue they, but to trauell and consume the spirits of a man by imaginary contemplations? These waters cannot appease the thirstinesse of the soule, and by consequence are not powerfull to yeeld due and conuenient refreshments: but the smallest delights of a spirit indued with vertue, doth surpasse all worldly delectations: and cursed may they bee, who for the fruition of momentary pleasures heere, hazard the losse of that eternall felicity. Your God is a cunning Surgeon, and of the choisest esteeme amongst those that are most famous: hee well knowes when to serch the wound, and forecasteth how it may be healed: and apprehending the meanes, he presently commeth furnished with such salues and medicaments, as hee conceiueth most proper for the cure. God is Father vnto two daughters, Mercy and Iustice; but mercy obtained the right of eldership in the house of God, and you know those that are the elder haue a kinde of pre-

prerogatiue ouer the other. Mercy is ſiſter vnto Chriſt Ieſus, and ſhee it was that ſaid vnto him, that it was fit that he ſhould ſuffer al thoſe torturings and contempts, which afterward he ſubiected himſelfe vnto in his Paſſion. And although both theſe ſiſters proceeded from the ſame father and mother, yet is it a certainty, that the one is in more grace and neereneſſe then the other. For God the Father was more indulgent vnto mercy then iuſtice, yet are they ſiſters, and both daughters vnto him; becauſe he is no leſſe iuſt in exerciſing his iuſtice, then he is gracious in declaring his mercy. It is no argument of imperfection in God, that he powreth down the viols of his wrath vpon the wicked, and rewardeth the good endeauours of the iuſt, it is rather a demonſtration of his omnipotency, to render vnto euery man according to his workes.

Of a truth thy inward parts (O mother of God) are as the ſhop of an Apothecary full of fragrant and aromaticall odours, which the holy Ghoſt hath furniſhed with all varieties of perfumes and ſpices; that is to ſay, with his fruits, and with the adundance of vertues and graces. I further ſay that Mary is an incloſed garden, and the holy Ghoſt is the gardener, who could well tell how to manure this bleſſed plot of earth, ſowing therein all kinds of beautifull flowers, and ingraffing goodly and vernant trees, charged with excellent flowers and fruits. Thou (Mary) art alſo a tree, thy holy cogitations are the leaues, thy feruent deſires are the flowers, and thy little Ieſus is the fruit that was brought forth for your ſaluation. The nature of this fruit is admirable, ſo that it was accounted worthy to bee made a Preſent for the eternall Father, on the tree of the Croſſe, for the expiation of your ſinnes. Let your memory recall into your remembrance theſe bleſſings of your God, and let Ioſeph who ſignifieth your vnderſtanding, bow his knees in a corner of the ſtable, and take in ſo high a myſtery with his moſt attentiue contemplation. Mary as hauing hauing a greater portion of light, is of more neereneſſe, and figureth vnto vs the will: the vnderſtanding laboureth to comprehend him, but the will ſhunneth ſuch wild conceptions, and demeaneth it ſelfe like vnto the mother of Chriſt Ieſus, who dared not at the firſt to touch him, but at length Mary who is the will, taketh him in her armes, and beareth him vp and downe; for loue at the laſt ouercommeth feare. Take therefore the Child Ieſus, play with him, and wrap him charily in his ſwathling bands, hee is but a little one, and therefore very tractable; endeauour then to bee diligent about him, bring with you little bands to roule him in; and to be breefe, prouide your ſelues of what ſoeuer may bee needfull for him. Hee is a little child, and yet a great God, as it is written, Vnto you a child is borne, and vnto you a ſonne is giuen. Hee is young and tender, his hands are ſwathled vp, ſo that hee cannot ſtrike, come therefore and draw neere vnto him; but withall conſider that he is alſo a ſeuere Iudge to thoſe that refuſe to obey his will. If Abraham ſhould haue reaſoned the caſe with God, when hee commanded him to ſacrifice his well-beloued ſonne Iſaac, and ſhould haue ſaid, how or in what manner is this poſſible to bee done? I tell you, he had not merited to bee the father of the faithfull. Bee you humbled therefore before this God, and beleeue that he is yonder in the bleſſed Sacrament, for his body is a glorified body, and taketh vp no place.

I ſay further, that it is not enough to haue this child Ieſus wrapped vp and ſwathed in his clouts, but you muſt warme him with the milde heate of perfect deuotion, which is a permanent and ſtanding feruency of the bleſſed ſpirit.

He alſo ſpake many other things; to wit, that thoſe that were moſt humble are moſt high in Paradiſe, as Chriſt Ieſus and Mary doe well exemplifie vnto vs, that loue allayeth and extenuateth labour, for the Di-

uels

uels [c] failing in the point of loue, are more grieued and extremely cruciated in saying an Aue Maria, then in suffering the torments of ten thousand yeeres in hell. It standeth also with reason (said hee) that if Princes bee forced vnto obedience, the inferiour seruants doe not stand out in defiance. Hee further said, that if a man could but see the soule that standeth in the state of grace, and haue a full view of the totall beauty thereof, he would sinke downe and die for ioy and admiration, thinking that he beheld the glorious Deity: but this is a request not fit to be demanded. If thy body complaine of thy hard vsage, say vnto thy soule, Soule, thou must not groane and sinke vnder this burthen, take notice of thy owne worth, how thou art created to sway and haue dominion: be thankfull therefore vnto him that hath framed thee, God is not like vnto men, for a man doth many times omit to doe a good turne to him that hath deserued it from him, and is ingratefull for those benefits which hee hath receiued: but your God foresaw the ingratitude of men, and heard with his eares their sinnes that cried loud for vengeance, yet for all this his resolution was firme to giue his Sonne vnto you. Your Redeemer was borne at midnight, receiue him in to you: your body is the stable, your soule the cratch to entertaine him: and although hee bee a King, yet doth hee not disdaine so meane a place as a stable: There is no man therefore that can excuse himselfe. You are to warme this little child, and doe not say, I haue no fier to warme him by, for the holy Ghost is a burning furnace, and will let you haue fier enough if you will but lend him fuell, that is to say, your sinnes, whom hee will cast and consume in the neuer-dying flames of his loue. After all these and many other discourses in a great rage and violent agitation, hee made this abiuration as followeth.

I Verrine in the name of all Magicians of both sexes, sorcerers, and sorceresses doe renounce and disclaime all [c] As a man that being obstinately set and bent on a thing, will rather be plucked asunder in peeces, then be beaten off the same.

all the abiurations which they haue made againſt the power of the Father, the wiſedome of the Sonne, and the goodneſſe of the holy Ghoſt: I do further renounce all the abiurations by which they haue diſclaimed and forſaken the bleſſed Virgin, all the Angels, and all the Saints in Paradiſe. I alſo renounce all their abominable impieties through which they haue made choice of hell for their eternall habitation, and haue told God that they did not regard his inſpirations and graces, but deſired an euerlaſting ſequeſtration from him and his Angels. Then in the name and right of all Hell hee cried, I diſclaime all donations and ſchedules which they haue made vnto the Diuell. Afterwards he ſaid, Beleeue me, God is ſo powerfull, that hee is able to cauſe the Diuels to bring together in this Church the bodies of all Sorcerers and witches, that they may heare their ſentence and iudgement pronounced againſt them. I ſpeake in generall, not in particular. Then [d] he added, that therefore God would not vſe the miniſterie of an Angell, becauſe if hee ſhould come inuiſibly, men would ſay that hee was a Diuell: but if hee ſhould appeare in the forme of a man, they would ſay, This is but a man, and would not regard his meſſage. God herein reſembleth a King, who hauing many Princes, ſubiects and ſeruants waiting on him, taketh one of a more ordinary and cheape condition, to bee employed in his ambaſſage: and this hee doth, not ſo much to honour this ſeruant of his, but rather to manifeſt and magnifie his greatneſſe; for he needeth not the countenance or authority of his Ambaſſadour, becauſe all the power and ſplendour wherewithall hee goeth is deriued vnto him from the King. So God would not chuſe any Prince or great ſubiect of his Court, but was pleaſed to ſerue his turne with the moſt ſordide and baſe ſlaues hee could thinke vpon, who are the Diuels, not thereby to honour them with the fame of his employments, but to publiſh the more his greatneſſe and abſolute command, vn-

[d] Why a Diuell was employed in this worke, he being but a contemptible and ſlauiſh caitife.

to

to the world. For God compelleth the diuell to bee the instrument of effecting his will, and giueth him authority to bring that to passe, which hee shall adiudge fit, to his greater glory, and to the vtter confusion of all hell. Hence it ariseth, that God is pleased to make experience of a new remedy, for the conuersion of soules, and for the more ample expression of his bounty. When Verrine had done, Gresill his companion made the like abiuration, as afore-said, & that was also made by the mouth of Louyse whom he possessed. After him the third Diuell, that was in the same body, and was called Sonneillon, made his renunciation like vnto the former; and added, that when the Magicians and witches were there present, they were mightily dismayed to see and heare these things: and that this would turne either to their greater condemnation, or else to their conuersion, if they would apply their wills thereunto.

Then did they all three confirme that which they had auowed by a solemne oath, and added, that something or other they were to discourse of, at the celebration of euery Masse.

At the morning Masse, the Dominican father began to exorcise, and Verrine spake in this manner,

Man is the head and chiefe of his family; it is a thing vnsightly and full of indecency, that the gouernment should bee put into the hands of a woman, for women are to bee subiect vnto their husbands. It therefore is proper vnto the head to gouerne, and vnto the master to command: the soule is the head, the body but the woman: the soule is the mistrisse, and the body but the chambermaid: yet doth the body euer grudge and grumble against the soule, saying, Why doe we disquiet our selues with this early rising? we should now take our repose, and make vse of the creatures for our pleasures and contentments, while wee haue time to doe it; and in the declination and setting of our age wee may haue leisure enough to thinke of our conuersion. If the mistrisse mistrisse bee discreet and well aduised, shee will keepe this chambermaid no longer, that taketh thus vpon her to prescribe and giue directions, but will turne her out of her house. Thus ought the soule to demeane it selfe towards the body, when it complaineth, and ought to say, Flesh, thou art but the chambermaid, and not the mistrisse; it is thy duty to serue, not to command. I tell thee, if thou wilt eate hereafter with me of those choice and rare delicacies, whose plenty knoweth no satiety, thou must not now grudge and repine at labour. Knoweſt thou not, that it will bee said vnto me, Soule, render me an account of what thou hast done, thou wer't the mistrisse, and shouldest therefore manage thy gouernment with discretion. A man that chanceth vpon a sober discreet wife, is in reason to intrust her, and not his seruant with the domesticke and home-businesses of his family: but thou hast done cleane contrary. You that are men are iust of the same humour and say. Wee are tender and of a delicate composition, and must a little cherish and make much of our selues. Others will say, let vs bee frolicke, I can liue without working; I haue many goodly possessions; I am noble in my blood, and am descended from such a race: I am able to keepe thus many horses; maintaine thus many gentlemen in my attendance, and bee waited on with thus many Pages and Lackeies. Another will complaine of his old age, and how vnable hee is to vndergoe the burthen of penance at those yeeres. For this cause do those families perish and lie buried in their ruines, where this cursed chambermaid beareth sway. Do not you resemble those that as the Prouerbe noted of them, are facete and pleasant abroad, but sullen in their owne houses. Then Verrine speaking to the assembly said, you promise Paradise vnto your selues; but thinke you not to attaine vnto it without much sufferance and aduersities in this world: for the seruant is not greater then his master: And if God was first to suffer, and then to haue admittance into glory, would you expect to enter into heauen on horſe-backe, or in your Caroach? I tell you nay; but you are to come thither on foot, and to bee beſides loden with ſtore of good workes: otherwiſe it will be told you, I know you not, you cannot come in, for I and my children are in bed. Whereby you are not to conceiue, that theſe beds are beds of doune and delicacy, as ſome lazy perſons might apprehend it; No, theſe words ſhall be ſpoken to the ſtuborne and obſtinate ſinner, that hateth to be conuerted. If you will bee ſaued, you muſt not abandon your ſelues vp to wantonneſſe, which doth emaſculate and weaken all vertuous deſires in you. You all ſtand charged with the heauie burthen of your ſinnes, proſtrate your ſelues before this little child, which lieth in the manger, and come vnto him with the full burthen of your tranſgreſſions, that hee may vnload you. If you ſay vnto mee, you haue no ſinne; I muſt tell you, that it is falſe, for all men are ſinners. Sinne is like vnto wood, pile it vp and lay it on a heape, that when the holy Ghoſt commeth, hee may ſet fire to the ſame, I meane the fire of his loue, which ſearcheth ſtill for ſtubble, and other ſuch combuſtible matter, that it may conſume and burne it. What man can heere excuſe himſelfe? hath not euery one a ſtaffe in his hand, whereon to leane and ſupport himſelfe, which is the will? whatſoeuer you haue beſides, you owe vnto God, but this will is your owne, ſince God hath made it ouer vnto you; and therefore take this ſtaffe vnto you: For God is the ſhepheard and you are the ſheepe of his paſture, whom if the woolfe come to rauin vpon and to deuoure, hee will take the ſtaffe of your will, and will ſwinge him ſo ſoundly, that hee ſhall neuer returne for his prey, but to his owne confuſion.

tance

Then did Verrine inuite all the creatures of Heauen, all the Quires of Angels, all Saints, eſpecially the bleſſed mother of God, as alſo the whole Church triumphant phant and militant, to praiſe God for the repentance of ſinners, eſpecially of thoſe that were obſtinate, as Magicians and Witches, Sorcerers and Sorcereſſes, in theſe words. Verrine in the name of al Magicians & Witches, Sorcerers and Sorcereſſes, and by the appointment of that Soueraigne God ſaith, O yee foure elements praiſe yee the Lord, all creatures reaſonable and vnreaſonable praiſe the Lord, whatſoeuer hath grouth or motion laud the name of God: Earth, Sea, Aire and Fire, trees and ſtarres praiſe ye all the Lord, &c. I tell you, that if all the creatures of the world could make their eies guſh foorth with teares of bloud, they would bewayle as much as in them lyeth the impieties of Magicians and Witches, ſo abominable are their courſes before God. All theſe things were pronounced by him whileſt the Prieſt held the bleſſed Sacrament in his hands to giue the Communion to Louyſe and Magdalene. After this he renounced thoſe abiurations of Magicians and Witches, Sorcerers and Sorcereſſes, as he had formerly done at midnight Maſſe. Greſill and Sonneillon did alſo the ſame three ſeuerall times, once when the Crede was ſaid in the Maſſe, another time at the eleuation, and the third time at the Communion. In like manner theſe three Diuels confirmed by oath all that was aboue mentioned, in the ſame manner as at the midnight before. The ſame day the Dominican Father wrote a letter to father Michaelis in anſwere vnto one of his, written the 13. of this moneth, wherein hee intreateth him to come to S. Baume.

The ſame day Verrine ſaid vnto the Dominican Father, command mee in the Name of God, and by the authority of the Church triumphant and militant to goe foorth about an imployment which God hath impoſed vpon mee: then hee called father Romillon and father Andrew Godan of the Order of S. Dominick to be witneſſes hereunto and then departed.

Moreouer, there happened a very memorable accident

dent on the same day, for Belzebub began to speake in this strange manner as followeth. Verrine not long agoe cryed out that all Hell was constrained by God to renounce whatsoeuer the Magicians and Witches had proiected; and I [e] Belzebub cheefe of the Diuels that are in the body of Magdalene, am compelled by the Almighty to make the like abiuration in effect, contrary to my resolution, and the greatnesse of my pride. [f] Yes, yes, yes, in despight of my selfe, and against my customary pride and rebellion in the name of all my companions, I renounce, I renounce, I renounce, I say, whatsoeuer I haue suggested vnto Magdalene, aswell for the time past as for the time to come, both against her God and conscience: Yes, yes, yes, I reuoke it all, I condemne and disclaime it now at this very instant.

e Belzebub constrained to make an abjuration.

f Before the tribunall of God all things are so exactly waighed in al the circumstances that the Diuels haue nothing to reply against it.

The same day at high Masse were the two women that were possessed exorcised by the Dominican father, and Verrine began to speake in this manner. Thou God of power, cause now an Angell to descend from Heauen, vpon this Altar that these men may beleeue. what meanest thou to doe? Wilt thou vse the ministry of a Diuell in a businesse of this importance? Thou hast here Doctors able and ready to say the same that I say, men will euer bee saying that Louyse is not possessed, cursed be her folly, I could endure Hell better then her.

Then [g] the said Verrine began to scoffe at Belzebub and his Princes in this manner, What Belzebub, art thou the master of Pride, and doest thou now slinke away in this sort? Thou art he that doest suggest vnto the Nobility: What sir? will you yeeld to him, you are noble and of an ancient stock, why will you abase your selfe before a fellow of such cheapenesse? You must not doe it, it doth detract from your nobility. Miserable Belzebub, was it not thou that wouldest haue throwne God from his seate of Maiesty? How art thou now abased, hauing nothing to reply, and being swallowed vp in shame and confusion. And thou Leuiathan the g The temptation vsuall against Nobility.

Arch-Doctor of [h] Hereticks, art thou not hee that beſtoweſt vpon them the apparance and ſhew of light? But thy light is nothing elſe but darkneſſe, for no man can giue that which hee hath not. Thou bringeſt an itch vpon the curious, to diſpute of this place, and of that place of Scripture, becauſe it is not interpreted as it ought to bee; and ſeing them to bee proud beyond meaſure, thou diddeſt by this ſcourſe hinder them from humbling themſelues. I tell thee that the proud and curious ſhall not enter into Paradiſe vnleſſe they become humble and lay aſide their curioſity. What anſwereſt thou vnto this, thou art a iolly doctor, and very pregnant in replyes: but I ſee thou haſt litle to ſay for thy ſelfe and giueſt ſufficient proofe of thy inſufficiency. There bee heere very able men that would gladly heare thee argue, but it appeareth that thou art confounded as much as thy companion.

[h] The temptation vſuall againſt Hereticks.

And [i] thou Balberith that doeſt ſecretly whiſper in the eares of Gentle-men, and doeſt tell them, that what they loue in their hart they ſhould oftētimes vſe in their mouth: and by this meanes thou makeſt them to deny and foreſweare God from the head to the ſoale of the foote. Thou doeſt alſo ſuggeſt vnto them; what ſir? doe you not meane to defend your reputation? Can you endure ſuch an affront? Remember ſuch and ſuch ſpeaches, and how he thus and thus belyed you: hee is a baſe fellow, and in an vnder-ranke vnto you; I tel you you muſt reuenge your ſelfe vpon him, and call him into ſingle combate. Thus though they be forbidden by God, excommunicated by the Church, and prohibited by the Kings Edicts, yēt are they tranſported beyond their tempet and reaſon, and doe deſire nothing but to come to blowes: neither lyeth it in the power of man to giue preuention vnto theſe miſchances.

[i] Temptations to ſingle combats.

Then Verrine ieſted at Aſmodee, and ſaid, and thou (accurſed fiend) doeſt perſwade yong folke that it is no ſinne to offend God, and ſo doeſt ſpread a vaile ouer their [k] Temptations againſt youth.

their eies, that they cannot haue the light to bee their guide, but are forced to ſtumble in the darke.

And thou Aſtaroth, maſter of the ſlouthfull, be thou their ſpeaker, & defend thy cauſe, for thou art a powerfull Prince, and doeſt excuſe no man: Kings and Clergy-men are allured by thy blandiſhments, and thou haſt acceſſe euery-where, euen when the gates and windowes of mens hearts are locked vp.

And [l]thou Carreau art he that maintaineſt that Lazarus could not be raiſed vp to life, by Lazarus meaning the obſtinate ſinner: but I doe hold it as a truth, that he may bee raiſed againe, not of himſelfe, but by the aſſiſtance of the Church and of God, who ſaid, Lazare veni foras, and ſo commanded the ſtone to be taken away. Hee it is, that is able without paine vnto him, to doe whatſoeuer ſeemeth pleaſing in his ſight.

[l] Temptations to hardneſſe of heart.

I affirme that God is able to take away the ſtone from the heart of an vnrepenting ſinner: but hee muſt confeſſe himſelfe & receiue abſolution from the Prieſt, according vnto that authority which God hath giuen vnto his Church: and in this manner is the dead raiſed vp to liſe.

Then he ſaid, hee that wants charity is not truely noble, for true nobility commeth from aboue.

All the Citizens of heauen did reioyce at the birth of the Sonne of God; neither is there any difference there put betweene the ſoule of a King and of a begger, if it ſtand in the ſtate of grace.

[m] A breeſe diſcourſe touching the feaſt of Chriſtmas.

Vnto you a child is borne, and to you a ſon is giuen: he is both a King & a Iudge, yet but litle in his natiuity, that it might be publiſhed vnto all, how tractable he is and how eaſie to be appeaſed, euen with an apple. The apple ſignifieth the ſoule with the three powers thereof; the Memory pointeth out vnto vs the Father: the Vnderſtanding, the Son: and the Will, the holy Ghoſt. Dedicate and bequeath your thoughts, your deſires, and your workes, to this Childe, whereby you ſhall alſo offer vp vnto him, the odour, ſweetneſſe and bewty of this apple: this is the preſent that will appeaſe and ſtill him; and for this cauſe was hee made contemptible that you might bee bold to tender the ſame vnto him. He is co-eternal with his Father, which Marie, and none but ſhee did at the firſt vnderſtand, yet had he not where to lay his head; giue therefore now vnto him the ſtone of your heart, that hee may make a pillow of the ſame whereupon to repoſe himſelfe. If the deceaſed King of glorious memory ſhould haue giuen his Sonne the Dauphin vnto you, it is to be conceiued, that you would haue receiued him with great ioy and applauſe: the celeſtiall Father hath giuen vnto you the Dauphin of heauen, equall to himſelfe in Maieſty; the Kings of the Eaſt came from a farre to ſeeke after him and to worſhip him, and doth it not become you to adore him in like manner? The time is at hand, that God will fill the voide ſeates of heauen; that great day of the Lord approacheth, wherein hee will place you in Paradiſe for euermore.

Then Verrine ſaid, I Verrine doe renounce, &c. as is before mentioned at midnight Maſſe. After that, he inuited againe all creatures to praiſe God, for his vnexpreſſeable bounty and infinite mercy, as is afore written. When he[i] had finiſhed his abiurations, Greſill followed with the like, and laſt of all Sonneillon did the ſame: who further added, Almighty God mai'ſt thou be pleaſed to create a thouſand hells anew for all thoſe that will not be conuerted, giue vnto them a thouſand liues, and as many as there bee ſtarres in the firmament (for all this is very poſſible vnto thee, that they may ſuffer as many ſeuerall deaths, as they had ſeueral liues beſtowed vpon them.

[b] Diuers iudgements touching this hiſtory ſee the pag. 27.28.

The ſame day in the euening the two poſſeſſed women were exorciſed by Father Francis Billet Prieſt of the Doctrine, and Verrine began to diſcourſe thus. The heate of hell is not more vnſupportable vnto mee, then are

are thy Exorciſmes, and would God, I had beene deafe when I was firſt exorciſed. Then he ſaid, Belzebub, thou tormenteſt Magdalene, yet let it not trouble thee Magdalene, for it is now our cuſtome to doe thus, becauſe wee were guided neither by reaſon nor counſell. The Exorciſt ſaid vnto him, Recede maledicte, who anſwered him in latine, Non eſt tempus. And when the Exorciſt ſaid, Angeli decantauerunt, Gloria, Verrine ſpake theſe words, the Diuels themſelues did ſay, Gloria in excelſis Deo, for that it was no wonder that the Angels did ſing, Gloria in excelſis Deo, but the miracle was, to heare this Gloria chanted forth by the Diuels: and if it were put to their choice, they would rather make election to ſuffer all the torments of hell then once to pronounce this Gloria. Hee [m] farther ſaid, ſome men doe cauill and ſay, that the Diuels cannot deliuer a truth, miſerable and ſtûpid wretches, is not God powerful to make Angels and men and diuels to obey him? Others ſay, that theſe are meere iuglings and fables: Others, that they are ſtage-playes and inuentions: Others murmur, becauſe they ſee no ſigne, and becauſe thoſe that are poſſeſſed doe not ſpeake all kinde of languages: Others beleeue that Louyſe might cary away theſe diſcourſes which ſhee had vttered from the many ſermons which ſhee had heard. It is not to bee wondred that men beleeue it not, for it is a thing full of nouelty and rareneſſe. And thou [n] Michaelis art to examine all this, and then the cenſure of the Church muſt paſſe vpon it. But as hee was eſteemed healthie who was indeed infirme before God, as appeared by the Phariſie, ſo hee eſteemed himſelfe infirme before God, who was indeed ſound and healthy, witneſſe the Publican.

O bleſſed mother of God, thou didſt not imitate Eue, nor queſtioned the Angell with [o] quare & quomodo, but thou diddeſt forthwith ſay Ecce ancilla Do- [m] Diuers iudgements touching this Hiſtory ſee the pag. 27. & 28.

[n] He did examine this, two ſeueral times, firſt at S. Baume in ỹ moneth of Ianuarie then next enſuing, where he looked into the verification of all theſe diſcourſes, and tooke knowledge of the witneſſes that had been preſent at the acts. In the ſecond place hee did read with great aduiſednes and attention this whole cõpoſure written in the Latine & French copies. There is a likelihoode alſo that the whole body of this hiſtory wil be re-examined at Rome by the authority of the ſupreme Inquiſition.

[o] After the Angel had once ſaid, Spiritus ſanctus ſuperueniet in te, &c. ſhee neuer replide againſt it with the quomodo of infidelity.

mini. The Serpent ſuggeſted vnto Eue, God hath giuen you to eate of all the fruit of theſe trees that are in Paradiſe: whereunto Eue anſwered, he hath commanded vs, not to eate of this fruit, and added much idle language beſides, ſo that at the laſt ſhee gaue credence vnto the ſerpent, whereupon Adam fell alſo by the perſwaſions of Eue; but he ſhould haue ſaid, that it was not lawfull for her to take the apple, that he had no commandement from God to do it, nay that he was expreſly forbidden. Wretched ſinner if thy body ſay vnto thee take and eate there is no offence in it, thy ſoule as Miſtriſſe of the body muſt giue checke vnto it, and ſay, I will not venture vpon it, for God himſelfe hath prohibited it: And if thou chance to be ſo ſeduced, beware how thou follow the dangerous tract wherein Adam walked, but humble thy ſelfe without asking quare & quomodo, but rather confeſſe thy ſelfe to be vnworthy to ſuffer euen the paines of hell for thy ſinnes. Then he ſaid, there are many that ſay vnto the Preiſt, Father reueale and remember vnto mee my ſinnes, but the Preiſt muſt in reaſon anſwere them, it is your part to examine your ſelues, and to diſcloſe vnto mee what your tranſgreſſions are, for I am not God or a Prophet, that I ſhould be able to know the ſecrets of your conſciences; your cauſe is heere to be heard and pleaded, the client ought to furniſh his Aduocate with inſtructions. I tell you in this caſe the Preiſt is to demand his abſolution from him, becauſe he is confeſſed and not the penitent perſon: and men of this humor are worſe then vnreaſonable beaſtes. The Confeſſour is ſharply to reprehend ſuch kind of men, but his reproofes muſt be interlaced with diſcretion, and muſt ſay vnto them that they wittingly, and willingly haue offended, and therefore they are to pray vnto God, for his illumination, who is not dainty to grant the ſame to thoſe, that beg it of him in humilitie: wee muſt ſearch for this light if wee will finde it; and knocke at

Gods

Gods mercie-gate that we may attaine vnto it. For it is the sister of that eternall Word, which doth easilie open this gate vnto you : nay I say farther that this word is mercie it selfe, and yet it is enuironed with awfull Iustice. Iustice is the sister of mercie, and the indiuiduall companion of Princes : take away the punishments of offenders and behold all order in confusion, and all ciuill Policie trampled vpon and contemned.

P After this hee spake to Magdalene, and said, Magdalene keepe this childe with all the charinesse that may bee, wrap him vp in the swathling bands of the mortification of the fiue senses, for hee is euer presenting his fiue woundes to God the Father in thy behalfe, which he receaued vpon the crosse for thy saluation. These are those pretious pearles whose estimate is so beyond all value, that God the Father casting but his eyes aside vpon them can deny no suite which he propoundeth vnto him. Iesus is a goodly flower in the garden of Mary, and alwayes standeth in the sight and presence of his Father. Marcella, it was thou that diddest cry, blessed is the wombe that did beare thee, but the diuine word answered, rather blessed are they which heare the word of God and diligently keepe the same.

P An Apostrophe vnto Magdalene.

Then hee said, O yee Kinges of the East, you haue worshipped this childe; what pompe found you with Ioseph and Mary his Mother, surely nothing but an Asse and an Oxe in a stable. Who reuealed vnto you that the King of glory was there? you did certainly behold the brightnesse and radiature of his face as the witnesse of his Diuinity, with this he strucke the souldiers to the ground who came to apprehend him, and to binde him with cordes. And thou good Theise, who told thee, that hee that was crucified vpon the crosse with thee, was a King ? I am sure thou didst not behold any Crownes, Scepters and Triumphes, or any such customarie pompes and preparations : yet didst thou thou not desist from crying Memento mei cum veneris in regnum tuum. For although hee had a crowne of thornes platted vpon his head, yet insteed thereof hee hath acquired for you a crowne of immortalitie, and in stead of his nakednes, hee hath clothed you with the robes of glory. If a King should say vnto a Gallie-slaue, I will take thee for my adopted sonne, were not hee senseleſſe and disheartted, if he should replie vnto the King; Sir, I am tyed vp heere with a chayne and therefore I will not bee called your sonne. You are all guiltie of high treason, and your estate baser and more full of slauerie then those that rowe in Gallies, for they at the least canne beholde the Heauen and Earth, but you that are sinners are ouertaken, and incompassed with darkneſſe. God saith vnto you I will make you Kings, I will enroll you in the catalogue of my children, I will set you at mine owne table, and will inrich you with all my treasures, onely clense your selues, and purge your soules from those filthy and ill sauouring ordures wherewithall it is is defiled. O Christians, bee not solicitous how to nourish your bodies, but be you carefull for the foode of your soules, receaue the Communion often, for Christ Iesus is many times consecrated, and many times sacrificed. Before you doe communicate, see that you diligently examine your selues, for you cannot too worthily approach vnto this table, for although you should liue a 100000. yeares, yet ought you euer to prepare your selues: Let your humility keepe wing with Gods mercie, for so you shal draw vnto you the humanity and diuinity of your God. O blessed mother of God you haue attracted the God of Gods from heauen to be conuersant vpon the earth: he made this great leape (as a Giant) because you became the seruant of seruants, whose humility when hee had once perfectly vewed, hee presently made choice of you for his Mother.

The holy Ghost is the God of loue, of deuotion, of good good desires and of compunction: knock at his gate, and hee will giue you whatsoeuer you shall demand of him, as he did inlarge his bounty to Magdalene, Peter, Dauid, and the good theefe. Besides, all these Saints are most ready to fly to your aide, and doe desire your saluation an hundreth thousand times more then your selues.

God hath made three things, vnto whose greatnesse no other worke of his can aspire vnto: that is, Heauen, the humanity of his Sonne, and his Mother. Ioseph noteth vnto vs the vnderstanding, and Mary the will: Say therefore vnto Mary, teach mee to obey and loue my brother: Say vnto Ioseph, (who is Maries guardian) make me to apprehend and to bee sensible of my misery: and then will this childe streame downe vpon you the dew of his grace, and feare; of his loue, and obedience. Your Redeemer obeyed his Mother and Ioseph, yea he was content to stoope vnto the commands of the ministers of Satan, not that he would thereby adde any reputation vnto him or his kingdome, but because hee would be a president vnto the proud of his great humility. The Diuell doth heere discourse of wholsome and vsefull obseruations, do you cull out the things that are good (as if a wicked Priest should propose these exhortations vnto you) and if you will not, I tell you, you shall not be by me [a] constrained thereunto. After all this he tooke his oathe, and did call the wrath of God vpon himselfe, if he had not sworne sincerely and in truth: he also added Sancta Maria ora pro eis, Sancte Ioseph, Sancta Magdalena, Sancte Dominice, Sancte Stephane, the arch-enemy vnto Sonneillon, orate pro eis. Cursed bee they who say, that the blessed Saints doe not make intercessions for you

[a] Obserue that he tyeth no man to beleeue him. See the answere vnto the 2. obiection after the Epistle to the reader.

The

The Acts of the 26. of December being the Feaſt of Saint Steuen.

THis day in the morning the Dominican Father did exorciſe, and at the beginning of the Exorciſmes, Sonnetillon who was in the body of Lonyſe began to diſcourſe in this manner.

I am conſtrained to ſpeake of Stephen, and concerning ſuperſtition. Come hither Aſmodee. Thou art that accurſed one which teacheſt Magicians to vſe ligaments, portractures & reſemblances of wax, braſſe and ſtone, together with other abominations of the like nature, to the end that they may fire men and ſet an edge vpon all fleſhly prouokements vnto luſt. Then doeſt thou cauſe the Prieſt who is the Magician, to baptiſe theſe ſtatues, wherein he doth commit a moſt greeuous ſinne, ſo that he that ſhould baptiſe a Doue, an Eagle, or any other foule of the aire, ſhould come farre ſhort of the abomination of the ſame: for the birds doe after a ſort bleſſe God by their melody and voices; although they haue not a capacity of being baptiſed, becauſe they are beaſts and are without vnderſtanding: yet doe I affirme, that thoſe who ſhould doe this, ſhould bee leſſe culpable and ſinfull, then thoſe that baptiſe theſe idols which are the ſtatues of Diuels. O execrable Prieſt how careleſſe art thou of thy dignity and calling? I ſpeake of wicked Prieſts not of thoſe that are good, in generall not in particular, and I doe aduertiſe you, that they are Magicians, and by a conſequent, ſlaues vnto ſinne and Satan.

[a] The ſlights and ſubtleties of Aſmodee.

[b] There are many ſorts of Magick, of Magicians and Witches, Sorcerers and Sorcereſſes. Ha wicked Aſmodee, thou blindeſt and ſeduceſt the great ones of the world, by telling them: you are mighty and powerfull, who will call you to an account if you offend God? You may doe whatſoeuer your heart deſireth, none dare rereproue you. The law is not made to cage in or controule such as you, you are he that made the law: who then dareth to wagge his tongue or to attempt any thing against you? There are also some great personages that giue eare vnto Magicians, and are schollers of this Diabolicall Art, that by the assistance thereof they may aspire vnto places of greater eminency.

Asmodee thou art euer whispering in their eares, and saying, Sir you are a Prince, sublime your braue conceptions, and lift them vp to a kingdome, then you are to thinke of an Empire, and then you must conquere the whole world, like another Alexander. By these meanes their repose is disseasoned with these wilde and whirling apprehensions: and they are many times so forgetfull of man, which they continually beare about them, that they giue commandement to be adored as Gods: as appeareth by him, who waded into the Sea, to see if any thing were mightier, and more powerfull then himselfe. The Deuill doth cherish all ambition, and whatsoeuer sauoureth of goodnesse he hath in detestation: hee doth euer solicite all sorts of men of what quality or condition soeuer they bee. But would to God hee onely insinuated himselfe vnto the houses of great personages, hee is euery-where, and tempteth all persons without choice or distinction of sexes. This [b] appeareth in Nabuchodonosor, who was tempted with a desire, that whatsoeuer hee did eate, might be conuerted either into gold, or into the semblance and shew of gold; who for his pride was afterwards by Gods permission transformed into a beast, and so at last became humble: for when he remembred what he was, and grew penitent for his excessiuenesse of pride, hee afterward was thought worthy to be saued, [c] Salomon, I can tell you, was the worlds wisedome, yet did the Diuels intrappe and take him by Magicians and women, so that he is now burning in the flames of hell becauſe he neuer was bruised and humbled with such repen-

[b] This is a description of pride and selfeloue, which esteemeth that the hayres and nayles, nay the very excrements themselues are as gold or precious stones.

[c] Touching the point of Salomons saluation there appeareth no certainty of any thing touching ỹ same in the Scripture. There are arguments of both sides, and the Doctors of the Church do differ in their opinions vpon this particular. It is euident that Nabuchodonosor repented. See the Apology vnto the 4. doubt, after the Epistle to the reader.

repentance as deſerued acceptance from God. Dauid indeed offended his God, but hee did ſeriouſly repent, dewing and watering his couch with teares, and eating his bread mingled with aſhes, that hee might declare vnto all, how much his heart was humbled and made tender.

He further ſaid to Aſmodee, Accurſed ſpirit, thou art alſo he, that doeſt vaile and caſt a miſt ouer the eyes of ſuch ſoules as are ſeduced by thee, and then thou lockeſt vp their eares, that Gods word may not pierce and penetrate euen to the pith and inmoſt part of the heart: that ſo being both deafe and blind, they may loſe all hope of their ſhare in the kingdome of God. I meane not the deafneſſe and blindneſſe of the body, but a ſpirituall deafneſſe and blindneſſe, for it is not doubted but thoſe that are corporally blinde may enter into the kingdome of heauen, neither is the light of this world neceſſarie thereunto: elſe what ſhould become of the poore men that are blind? there ſhould not one of them be ſaued; therefore I ſay that God ſpeaketh not of the light which wee ſee and comprehend, but of the light of faith. Then he [a] ſpake to Baalberith and ſaid, Impious and accurſed Baalberith, thou art he that doeſt continually make Gods name to be blaſphemed. Thou alſo ſuggeſteſt. What? are not you a great counſellor? doe not you moderate the ſcales of Iuſtice? are not you a great familiar of the Kings? whereof ſhould you ſtand in feare: Vpon theſe ſuggeſtions doeſt thou lay the firſt foundations of ſingle combats and Magicke. But thou thy ſelfe being blinde and full of villany, doeſt make thoſe to fall, that followes the paths wherein thou doeſt trace. Thou doeſt alſo ſay, Your ranke and quality will beare thus many Lackeys, thus many Horſes, thus many Pages: for from theſe externall apparances will men iudge of your true Nobility: but I tell thee, [b] true Nobility is euer accompanied with liberality, and as it is ſtudious to act thoſe deeds that ſauour of charity and bounty; bounty; so doth it hate all viciousnesse and prodigality. Thou wilt neuer stand forth to answere for thy Disciples, when God shall demand of them an account of their workes. Resist the Diuell and he will fly from you: there are too too many that suffer themselues to bee deceiued: for some will chafe at the poore that beg almes of them, and tell them they are too importunate; yea they will not stick many times not onely to withdraw their almes, but to bestow many stripes and blowes vpon them: others say vnto the Diuels, giue vs a dinner in this world, and wee will bestow a supper vpon you in the world to come: others there are that will lay an imputation vpon a whole company, for the default of some one that doth not orderly demeane himselfe. Behold Baalberith, cursed are all thy doctrines and instructions. Hee [c] further said, There are those who when their children are bewitched, will vse vnlawfull meanes to know who the witch is that did it, and in stead of hauing recourse vnto God that hee may by his good blessing cure the same, they goe vnto a witch, and entreate him to come and heale their children: wretches as you are, your misfortune proceedeth from the Diuell, and you with your children were innocent, but are now partakers of the euill. Ought you not to goe to God, who knoweth the reason why he hath permitted this euill, and not to the Diuell or the sorcerer, to vnderstand from them the remedy? you ought not to haue familiarity with him, but to giue the Church notice of the same, and seeke redresse from them, who haue the care and charge of soules: But cleane contrary vnto this, you eate and drinke with sorcerers, and by a necessary inference with the Diuell, vnto whom they haue abandoned themselues bodies and soules, surrendring vp their part of Paradise, and all the pretensions they may haue for heauen. [d] Nay I say further, they are of that impious and execrable disposition, that if it lay in their power, they would betray God into the hands of Diuels.

[a] The ſlights and tentations of Baalberith.

[b] Touching true nobility.

[c] Against those that goe to witches.

[d] The outragious madnesse of Magicians.

Diuels. The [e] Diuels doe alſo cauſe them to renounce that natural affection which they ſhould carry towards their fathers and mothers, and to all thoſe vnto whom they are tyed vnto by propinquity of blood: they forbid them to pray for them, and which is more to bee abominated, they doe many times command them to murther them: for it is the cuſtome of Diuels, to miſchieue thoſe whom they ſhould loue, and to returne euill for good; as it is the property of God to render good for euill. I ſay further, that the children of darkeneſſe, doe ſerue the diuell with more diligence then the children of light doe their God; [f] yet is there a great difference betweene the ſeruice of God, and the ſeruice of the Diuell. for your ſeruice vnto God is aſſociated with a ſetled and in-diſturbed repoſe, but the bondage of the Diuell is full of great vexations: for he commandeth them day and night, winter and ſummer, in ſickneſſe and in health, and in what ſtate ſoeuer they bee, they muſt make their apparance, and if they faile but the leaſt ſcruple or minute of time, I tell you they are well beaten for their ſlackneſſe, ſo that a gally-ſlaue is not ſo manicled and bechained, nor a lackey ſo buffetted and beaten, as they are chained and beaten, that make but the leaſt omiſſion in the Diuels ſeruice: and which is worſe, he giueth leaſt recompence vnto thoſe that ſerue him moſt, for he hath nothing indeed to beſtow vpon them. Doe you ſerue him with the greateſt faithfulneſſe that may bee, yet all the reward you ſhall gaine thereby, is nothing but the horrid paines of hell; witneſſe thoſe that haue died without confeſſing themſelues, and ſuch as haue departed the world in the like ſort: I ſpeake in generall not in particular. The children of God when they die, doe recommend their ſoules vnto God, ſaying, In manus tuas, &c. But the laſt words that the children of Satan breath forth are, [g] The Diuell take me body and ſoule. This is the recompence which they demand of him, whom they haue ſo induſtri-

[e] The witches that were conuerted did aſſure vnto vs that this was true, ſo that they are but plagues and the authors of miſchiefe in the houſe where they abide.

[f] It is a toyle to ſerue the Diuell, but it is a repoſe and contentment to ſerue God.

[g] The finall obſtinacy and hardneſſe of heart of witches, together with their blindneſſe of vnderſtanding.

induſtriouſly ſerued, and this is it which he hath promiſed to beſtow vpon them. And certainly they doe well deſerue hell.

Then he ſaid to Aſmodee. What ſaieſt thou? Is it not all true which I haue here deliuered? Aſmodee anſwered, that it was ſo. Sonneillon replyed, ſweare (Aſmodee) that it is true, and I will take my oath with thee. Aſmodee ſaid, I will not ſweare with thee. [h] Sonneillon anſwered, ſweare thou then by Lucifer, and I will take mine oath on the behalfe of God. To this Aſmodee replied, I tell thee I will not ſweare, yet I confeſſe and doe aſſure euery body that what thou haſt ſaid is conſonant to the truth. Then ſaid Sonneillon, doe you not perceiue the malice of this accurſed fiend. Hee vſeth theſe tergiuerſations and delaies, to ſtagger your beleefe; and it is Gods pleaſure that you ſhould merit more in that God (to try you) will not command him to ſweare, then if hee had actually commanded him to take his oath; for then hee muſt of neceſſity obey. But let it ſuffice, that I doe ſweare by the liuing God, that whatſoeuer I haue aboue ſpoken is moſt true, and therefore let this ſatisfie you; which being ſpoken he accordingly tooke his oath. [i] Hee further ſaid, I will alſo ſweare that the Church will approue of all this, and that neuer Diuell ſpake in the preſence of his Princes as I haue done: hence it is that I ſhall [k] receiue an abatement and mitigation of my torments. Beſides, God would neuer endure that this ſhould be acted if it were counterfaited, becauſe it would ſet open a vaſt gap, to let in the perdition of many ſoules.

He further ſaid, conſider heere the goodneſſe of your God, whoſe manner is to ſet firſt before you thoſe things that are worſt: for you know that hither-vnto, the viands which were ſerued in vnto you, haue not been very pleaſing, becauſe wee did nothing but ingeminate your offences. Wee muſt therefore now ſerue in vnto you a banquet of confections. Then [l] he ſaid, God hath [h] The Dialogue between Sonneillon aud Aſmodee.

[i] This oath containeth foure remarkable points and obſeruations.

[k] See the Apology vnto the doubts. the 10. obiect. after the Epiſtle to the Reader.

[l] A diſcourſe touching S. Stephen.

hath commanded me, who am a great enemy vnto Stephen, to praise those that in imitation of Stephen doe forgiue their enemies; he pardoned those that maliced him after the example of his great master Christ Iesus, saying, Pater ignosce eis, quia nesciunt quid faciunt. But O great God, why diddest thou not first recommend thy mother to Iohn, and Iohn vnto thy mother? the reason was, not because thou wouldest not doe it, but because thou wouldest giue an example vnto all the world, of remitting and pardoning the iniuries done by their enemies.

The riches of this world are but trash and of-scowring in comparison of Paradise. You will heere obiect: What, is there filthinesse in Paradise? I say vnto you, that there is not, for no vncleane or imperfect thing can enter into heauen, but I call riches trash, because the Elect make no account of them, and the blessed Saints doe not esteeme of siluer, gold, precious stones, and all the riches of the world.

The seruant is not greater then his master: the Master entred not into heauen on horsebacke, but naked, and hanging vpon the tree of the Crosse. Why therefore should you tremble at afflictions, troubles, persecutions, or whatsoeuer may deiect and make you humble? it is for your good and his glory that these crosses make you thus to double vnder the waight of them, for by this meanes will he place your soules and bodies in Paradise.

O wondrous accident! the world is conquered with the desires of it, Satan is an enemy to Satan, and his kingdome is rent and diuided within it selfe, not by his consent, but by an vnresistable compulsion. After all this discourse he said vnto God, [m] Ho! cause an Angell to speake, or a man to deliuer these things, and let mee be freed from this vnpleasing office. There are indeed many Preachers, but few harken vnto them, and if any goe to heare them, they goe to surprise and entrap them

[m] Sonneillon his constraint.

them in their sermons, and to quote their gestures and actions. O blindnesse! that men should bee more attentiue to the voice of the Diuell, then to the word of God vttered by a Preacher. Imitate Stephen and pray for your enemies, for by this prayer did he merit to behold the Sonne of God, and did win Saul to the bosome of the Church, who before was a persecutor of the same, and did keepe the garments of those that stoned him: And Saul thou knowest, that his charity did plead for thee at the barre of the Almighty. Stephen whiles hee was yet young was one of the first Deacons and Treasurers of the Church, a louer of the poore as if they were his brethren, and a great familiar of God: it was therefore needful that he should suffer, as did you Margaret, Vrsula, and the 1100. Virgins, and also you Catherine, Barbara, and Catherine of Sienna: that so by your examples others might be lessened to be filled with sufferance and patient bearing of whatsoeuer tribulations should bee laid vpon them. And thou Stephen if thou haddest not been such a notable instrument of Gods glory, as thou wert', the Apostles would neuer haue thus esteemed and honoured thee. Say but (Father) euery day for thine enemies, and it is sufficient, for it is a powerfull prayer and full of efficacy. The abridgement of all perfection is, to pray for your enemies, and it is a [n] well-pleasing sacrifice vnto God, for he loueth the soules of his enemies a hundreth times more, then he doth the bodies of his friends: and one Aue said for your enemies is of more waight and importance, then an hundred (Pater) for your friends. It is an easie matter to pray for your friends, but it is harsh and vnpleasing to pray for your enemies and such as go about to kill you: this is a morsell not easily swallowed, yet doth it exceedingly conduce vnto saluation, and is the path which chalketh out vnto you the way of life; if it be done in vprightnesse of intention, in purity of conscience, and in charity, for the glory of God and salua-

[n] The powerfulnesse of prayer for our enemies.

tion of ſoules. I tell you ſuch prayers are no leſſe effectuall then the prayers of many Saints; yea then extaſies and rauiſhing in ſpirit, and other ſuch admirable myſteries. Hee that prayeth for another, hath ſaid enough for himſelfe. Then hee ſaid vnto Belzebub, thou art ſtartled at that which I haue ſpoken, I plainly ſee that it doth much diſquiet thee: what anſwereſt thou vnto theſe things? And thou Aſmodee, make thy part good if thou haſt what to reply: but I ſee you are tongue-tied and cannot anſwere, therefore I will proſecute theſe things further. Then he ſwore that al which he had ſpoken ſhould by publicke approbation bee allowed: and ſpeaking to himſelfe, he ſaid: O[o] Sonneillon, thou art hee which tempteſt men with enuie, and doeſt withdraw men from praying for their enemies: for this cauſe Gods pleaſure is thou ſhouldeſt ſpeake againſt thy ſelfe and againſt all hell, hee hath taken thy owne weapons and forced thee to beate thy ſelfe with them. Then he was asked touching three Articles, firſt of the ſtate of Nabuchadonoſor, next of the ſtate of Salomon, and then whether hee had ſaid that S. Stephen was broiled vpon a gridiron, for thus did ſome vnderſtand him. He directly made anſwere, that Nabuchadonoſor was ſaued, and Salomon damned, that this opinion was a [p] probleme in the Church, and that his damnation was reuealed to many Saints, but in modeſty they would not attempt to make it knowne: that now God will haue his Church to be certified of the truth therof, for many reade his fault, but no man euer ſaw any mention of his repentance: that God would cleere vp and diſpell all the doubts that ſhadow his Church, before the conſummation of the world: for he will endow his Church with ſome new donations, and will enrich his faithfull Spouſe with ſome freſh remembrances of his affection. And this ſtandeth with reaſon; for if a King to grace his Queene will make expreſſion of the affection which he beareth towards her by new gifts and preſentments, sentments, how much more shall God being more great and good then the Kings of the earth haue both ability and will to enrich his Church with new immunities and endowments. Iohn the Euangelist, thou art an Eagle and hast soared higher vpon the wings of diuine wisedome then any other: and although many mysteries haue been reuealed vnto thee, yet diddest thou not vnderstand all of them, for the Armory of God is inscrutable and full of hidden perfections, and hee may from thence, when it seemeth good vnto him, bring forth many strange nouelties. I affirme further, that neither the highest Seraphin, nor the blessed mother of God her selfe doe comprehend all the secrets of her Sonne, or of his humanity. For God is aboue all, and after him is Mary, who although she be a woman, yet is shee the second after God, and is neuertheless the mother of God.

[o] The tentations of Sonneillon.

[p] It is a probleme in the Church.

After dinner, Sonneillon vttered many things tending to edification, that Vertue was ascended vp to heauen, and in her ascent had let her [q] mantle fall, which, Impiety that remained vpon the earth, tooke vp and clothed it selfe therewithall: vnder which couerture and maske it commeth abroad to deceiue men, who otherwise would decline the rock of such seducements. He further said that the damned should bee punished in all the faculties of their soule, in their memory, vnderstanding, and will, together with their fiue senses, and all this by the vision of Diuels. At the euening Verrine said, that the time would come that his [r] name should bee rased out, and that many men should see the same. The same euening Louyse was not exorcised, but Verrine made a terrible inuectiue against Magdalene, because she grew coole in the acknowledgement of Gods mercie towards her, and had not yet humbled her selfe with a full and perfect repentance. Then he admonished euery one in particular, how they should discreetly carry themselues in that great businesse of their saluation.

[q] The mantle of impiety.

[r] He repeated this ouer diuerse times, time will make the truth thereof to appeare.

The Acts of the 27. of December being the feast of S. Iohn.

THis day in the morning, the Dominican Father exorcised, and Verrine after his acustomed manner began to speake thus.

Harken and be attentiue, the [f] houre of that great day of Iudgement is at hand, for Antichrist is borne and brought forth some moneths past by a Iewish woman. [t] God will rase out Magick & al Magicians, and witches shall returne home vnto him: the Soueraigne high Priest shall giue them plenary absolution, and all their complices shall be laid open vnto the world. These are not fables or fancies, or words of iest and derision: I foretell you these things by the appointment of the holy Ghost, all which is true, I beare but the name thereof, and the Church shall hereafter admit it as a Reuelation. God would preuent the Diuel, and therefore he doth cause this annunciation to be made, that the day of [u] Iudgement is at hand, and that [x] Antichrist is borne. Seauen yeares before the great day of the Lord, the earth shall bring forth no fruite, the women shall not conceiue, and many signes and wonders shall bee seene as is in part already made manifest. For the sonne rebelleth against his father, the daughter against her mother, as you see by experience euery day, and that now there are some of all Nations vnder Heauen who are conuerted.

Iohn the Euangelist, thou hast beene intrusted with many celestiall secrets: thou wert a doue in thy simplicity, and diddest leane vpon the breast of thy Redemer at his last supper, and doest now take thy rest in Paradise [y]. Moses, Enoch and Elias you are there also, for your bodies were neuer found vpon the earth.

[f] The reuelation hereof (if it be true) was reserued for the feast of S. Iohn the Euangelist.

[t] These are Predictions whose truth or falshood time wil bring to light, in the meane time we must hold vs to that which the Church teacheth and practiseth.

[u] After the signes of the last iudgment, there shal come a short time wherein all things shall be husht & quiet, in which men shall lull themselues in securitie and sleep as in the time of Noah. Luk. 17.

[x] See the Apology vnto the 3 doubt after the epistle to the reader.

[y] Some Doctors are of opinion that S. Iohn is in Paradise body and soule, but in the parallell with the three following he meaneth that his body is in that terrestrial Paradise with the body of Moses.

Great

Great God of the Christians, thy Saints haue many reuelations, but such a one as this was neuer disclosed vnto them, because the time of this Reuelation was not then come, and the sonne of perdition was vnborne.

I tell thee O Spouse of God, thou shalt bee beyond measure vngratefull if thou make nice to receiue so excellent a present sent vnto thee by thy husband, but I am assured thou wilt receiue it, as shal also the chief dealers in Magick, if they will bee conuerted, whereby they shall reape much mercy and fauour, and then the secular arme shall haue no power to inflict the rigour of iustice vpon them. It is the good pleasure of God, that his goodnesse should be founded forth by them, and that they should bee the meanes of the conuersion of many soules, as they were the instruments of their perdition. The [z] Priests duety is to absolue Magicians and Witches that shall repent, and craue of God the remission of their sinnes. And thou [a] Prince of Magicians shalt be particularly sifted and examined, and God shal menace and affright thee by the Diuell, because other creatures haue no force to worke vpon thee. France is infected with this dangerous Art of Magick: all the sisters of the company of Vrsula are bewitched at Marseille, at Aix, and at many other places, so that the country swarmeth with the multitude of charmes. Come, and draw neere vnto the childe Iesus, his hands be tender and cannot gripe you hard: yet euer haue you in remembrance that this childe onely shall be your Iudge: that of all Nations some shall bee conuerted, and that this miracle shall bee spread abroad ouer all the world. There are yet many voyd seates in Heauen which God will haue filled. Lucifer [b], thou goest about to get those soules, for whom thou hast payed no ransome, but God hath fully shewed that no man can wring that out of his hands which hee hath determined to saue. In this, God doth offer vnto consideration a new tract of his wisedome, power and authority, which thou couldest not perceiue: for hee confoundeth and beateth thee by a Diuell, who is thy ſeruant and ſubiect, and by two women hee doth conuert ſoules, and ſet all hell in an vproare and diſtraction. For ſince the time of this accident, more then a thouſand ſoules haue beene conuerted to the faith: yet diddeſt thou accurſed ſpirit think, that thou knoweſt all things, when as I tell thee, Marie her ſelfe knoweth not all, although ſhe be inriched with perfection, and hath much authority and power in heauen. Theſe diſcourſes are not drawne from the pit of Hell, for the tree is knowne by the fruite. When God giueth the fire of Charitie, he alſo adioyneth thereunto the cinders of humility; for the fire is conſerued vnder the aſhes.

[z] The conuersion of Magicians.

[a] This was put in practise at Aix, as it shall afterward appeare.

[b] The brauado of Verrine to Lucifer.

Then hee ſpake to Carreau, and ſaid; thou alſo art a wretched ſpirit; thou art he that ſaieſt that God was not able to raiſe Lazarus to life, I tell thee thou lieſt, and he ſhall conuert the Cheifes and ring-leaders in Magick, and God ſhall be praiſed for his great goodnes by thoſe that ſhall behold the ſame.

[c] God perceaueth, that men eſteeme not of his Preachers, and therefore ſent the Diuell to deliuer his truth by the mouth of a woman: Phiſitians to new maladies haue new remedies and appliances: ſo becauſe this ſickneſſe of men went beyond ordinary, it was expedient, for the cure thereof to apply extraordinary remedies, eſpecially to thoſe whom the Diuell had deceaued and conquered. I affirme, that it is neceſſary to goe to Rome, for God will haue this buſineſſe examined and looked into.

Then he deſired to haue his oath miniſtred vnto him; and becauſe hee had reuealed diuerſe things full of nouelty and admiration, it was thought fit, that he ſhould ſweare vpon the bleſſed Sacrament. And whileſt the Prieſt was holding the ſame, Verrine ſpake of diuers matters, and amongſt the reſt, that the [d] company of the Chriſtian Doctrine, and of Saint Vrſula, and the order of [c] A great reprehenſion & inuectiue againſt men. See the Apology why this is the higheſt ſignall of Gods indignation.

[d] Touching religious orders.

of Saint Dominicke ſhould ſprout vp and flouriſh, (alwaies without offence vnto other Orders, as vnto the Ieſuits and the like) that the Father, Mother, Vncle and Aunt, and almoſt all the kindred of Louyſe were damned; that it was thought fit that ſhee ſhould ſpeake this with her owne mouth, and that he himſelf was conſtrained to reueale, that they were damned, ſaying, [e] Louyſe of a truth thy father and mother are damned in Hell. Who would euer haue told Iohn Cappeau, and Louyſe de Baume that their daughter would openly publiſh vnto the world their eternall damnation. I doe not conceiue Louyſe that thy heart is made of ſtone.

Then Louyſe wept very bitterly ſo that the Aſſembly was ſo melted with compaſſion, that they all fell a weeping alſo.

After that Verrine had for a ſeaſon kept ſilence, vpon the ſudden he cryed out againe, the father of thy father, the father of thy mother, the father of thy grandfather, and the father of thy grand-mother, and all thy kindred be damned: then hee ſaid, the King [f] of France of happy memory was an Heretick, but died in the ſtate of grace: father Romillon, the ſuperiour of Louyſe was alſo an heretick, but now he is her ſpirituall father; alſo Louyſe her ſelfe was at the firſt brought vp after the faſhion of hereticks.

Then Verrine began to cry, that God might do well to vſe the ſeruice of a Queene, or a Princeſſe in a worke of this nature, in the which if hee had made choice of Urſula who was a Queene or ſome ſuch as ſhee was, it were not to be wondred. And directing his ſpeech vnto God, hee ſaid, Why diddeſt thou not rather chuſe a Queene or an Empreſſe, then this worme here? But thou wilt reply, that thou haſt no need of thy creatures, but that they haue neede of thee, that thou art alwaies ready to beſtow vpon thē, if they wil further & co-operate with thy heauenly pleaſure, that it ſufficeth thee to finde a ſoule framed & diſpoſed vnto that which thou would-deſt impoſe vpon it. Of a truth Louyſe, thou haſt begged at Gods hands to ſuffer the paines of hell, if it might be agreeable vnto him, and this thou haſt deſired for the enlarging of his glory: yet that this might bee without any finall depriuation of the ſight of God, according to thy requeſt, God hath yeelded vnto thy petition, becauſe thou diddeſt put thy ſelfe vpon his pleaſure, and diddeſt not indent with him to ſuffer after ſuch & ſuch a faſhion, but diddeſt make a free offer of thy ſelfe to be diſpoſed by him as hee pleaſed. And the truth is, all ſhall redound to the glory of God, to the exaltation of his Church, and to the aduancement of thy calling: yet art thou to expect nothing but confuſion and ſhame hereby, which thou doeſt confeſſe thou haſt well deſerued, to wit, all ſorts of iniuries and reproachfull contempts which thou canſt ſuffer for his loue. g It is true Michaelis, thou diddeſt indeed affirme that thou haddeſt an inſpiration infuſed into thee, to put ſuch an intended reformation in practiſe; I tell thee, it is rather a reuelation, but thy humility was pleaſed to giue it that modeſt appellation, for thoſe that are humble, had rather call it by that name.

[e] It were a ſtrāge wonder that a woman honourably deſcended ſhould ſpeake this of her father and mother in publick from her ſelfe, out of her fits ſhe is of a compoſed vnderſtanding & very ſenſible in her diſcourſe.

[f] See the page 219. touching King Henry the fourth.

g When his diſcourſe is not drawne from Scripture the Diuel conſtraineth no man to beleeue. And we conceaue that this which is here ſo ſpoken is ſpoken out of flattery.

I tell you, that the Reuelation of Michaelis, the inſpiration of Romillon, and the will of God, doe make a Trinitie, that is, one thing in three, for the other two are diſſolued into the will of God. If two different perſons do meet in the concurrence of friendſhip, I affirme that there is but one heart and one ſoule, ſo when the creatures conforme their wil vnto the wil of God, they haue then the ſame will with God.

After many other diſcourſes hee ſwore in behalfe of the ſacred Trinity, and of all the church triumphant and militant to the confuſion of all Diuels, and to his owne vtter diſgrace and ſhame; which oath he tooke in great ſolemnity vpon the bleſſed ſacrament, diſauowing all double and ſiniſter intention. Moreouer he called Belzebub, and all his companions, ſaying vnto them, ſpeake now if you haue any thing to reply, if I haue kept in any thing that is fit to be reuealed, I promise you to deliuer it, for all this not one of them dared so much as to grumble. Then Verrine began to cry in the presence of the blessed Sacrament, how admirable is thy power great God, who hast permitted, yea and commanded the Diuels to bring hither to his Church Magicians and witches to bee informed of that which from thee I am constrained to speake against them. Hell is diuided and in distraction, it waxeth feeble, and the cousonages and subtleties thereof are dismasked. [h] Lewes the Magician shall exorcise, the witchcrafts of the house of S. Vrsula are at an end, and all the sisters shall be deliuered, except Louyse and Magdalene, who are to goe to Rome where Verrine by the mouth of Louyse with Magdalene shall make his declarations.

The same day Verrine said to Magdalene, giue the keyes of thy house to God, who is the father of thy family, as the soule is the mistresse, and the body the seruant of the same: giue the keyes to God the Father, the staffe of command vnto the Sonne, and the fewell that is in thy house vnto the holy Ghost, for they will setle a good order there, which is beyond the spheare of thy power to accomplish. The same day also Verrine was asked how hee meant that Moses was in the terrestriall Paradise, because the Scripture mentioneth his death. Hereunto he answered, [i] Hee may well be dead, and yet be in the terrestriall Paradise too, according to his body, for God might raise him vp to life, because he is one of the foure trumpets, who are appointed in the last daies of the world to denounce the iudgements of God to the foure parts of the earth: and it is certaine that neither his body nor the body of Iohn the Euangelist could euer be found. But some man may heere cauill that the Apocalypse mentioneth but two witnesses, to wit Enoch and Elias whom Antichrist shal put to death. Verrine answered, that which Iohn hath said of the two

h He did exorcise when he was at S. Baume as shal be seene afterwards in the acts of the last of December. pag i This is a new reuelation.

two witneſſes is a firme truth, yet doth hee not exclude others but maketh mention onely of them that were to giue teſtimony of God by their death, and not of Iohn or Moſes who had already taſted of the ſame.

k The fall of the Angels.

k Then he ſaid, that his ranke was amongſt the number of Thrones, and that hee had command ouer three legions of Angels. That the greateſt ruine and downfall that was in heauen was the fall of Thrones: that all the Princes and heads of all the orders were fallen, that the greateſt breach was made by the ruine of Thrones, and that therefore God would fill vp his breach by the meanes and labours of Thrones.

He further added, that Belzebub had tempted Adam and himſelfe Eue, and ſpake to her in the ſhape of the Serpent, but in all his temptations which hee vſed towards her, hée euer retained the face of a gitle.

The ſame day in the euening the Dominican father exorciſed, in the beginning whereof Verrine began to gibe and to be pleaſant with Belzebub, ſaying, A Princes faſhion is not to beate a baſe fellow himſelfe, but commandeth one of his meaneſt ſeruants to doe it: ſo fareth it with thee Belzebub, thou art not worthy that I ſhould auenge my ſelfe vpon thee; I doe not care if I bid my ſeruant to doe it. Then he ſpake to Greſill and ſaid, Cudgell me this Belzebub, wicked wretch as hee is, that would dare to pluck God from his Throne, but therein his forces and deſignements were broken and cruſht to peeces.

I am Gods Apparitor, I will bee paid with good money, yet ſhall neither thou, nor I euer attaine to Paradiſe, although he were willing to beſtow it vpon mee. I doe not ſay that he will giue it me, but I affirme, that I ſhall be more happy then thy ſelfe, becauſe there is a reward that attendeth vpon my labors and paineful endeauours: ſo that although I ſhall not enioy felicity, yet at the leaſt I ſhall not bee tormented with the like extent of puniſhment; for God hath promiſed to allay and giue [l] mitigation to the ſame.

and

Moreouer he ſaid, wretched Belzebub, I ſee thou wilt ſpeake, ſpeake on, for all will light vpon thy owne head. Belzebub replyed, I ſpeake not to thee. Ha Belzebub, ſaid Verrine, I perceaue it goeth hard with thee, the keyes of Magdalens ſoule are not now in thy cuſtody, for the gates are ſhut vp, and the rod of command is taken from thee.

Then the Exorciſt ſpake theſe words, Ecce non dormitabit, whereupon Verrine ſaid, true, the Diuel neuer ſleepeth, but is euer wakefull to doe a miſcheefe: God neuer ſleepeth alſo, but hee alwaies is vigilant to doe good, for his goodneſſe is greater then the iniquity and malice of all hell.

Iohn, thou wert the diſciple of Loue, and Magdalene the hand-maid of Affection.

[m] Antichriſt when he commeth ſhall cauſe himſelfe to be adored, and ſhall haue Kings and Princes to bee attendants in his traine, but what reward ſhall they haue of him? iuſt nothing. Hee ſhall cauſe himſelfe to bee carried pompouſly in the aire, and ſay that hee is Chriſt and the Meſſias, but hee ſhall be conuicted of a lie, and be prooued to be Antichriſt. Then ſhall there be diſcerned the difference and diſtinction betweene the children of God and the children of Satan. The Iewes were once Gods beſt beloued children, but becauſe they would not take knowledge of their God, but after a flood of ſo many bleſſings, did crucifie him vpon the Croſſe, for this cauſe did God repudiate and reiect them. Chriſt Ieſus was promiſed vnto them, but they would none of him, no not when hee prayed for them, therefore they are deſeruedly depriued of ſo glorious a light; for he that hateth that which is good ſhall in the end be ſeaſed vpon by that which is euill: the patient is well enough ſerued, if the Phiſitian leaue him, when he refuſeth and ſcoffeth at his counſell.

[n] You are all ſubiect to ſickneſſes, ſome are infirme in their [l] See the Apology, the 10. doubt after the Epiſtle to the Reader.

[m] The action of Antichriſt.

[n] The ſeuerall ſickneſſes of men.

their head, others in their braine, some in their eyes, others in their eares. Now if God who is the true Physition of your soules, shall aske you whether you be sicke or no, will you answere you are not sicke when you are? for hee well knoweth by your pulse how you are affected. To those that are troubled with a paine in their head, that is to say to the proud, he ministreth the sweet and gentle physicke of deepe humility; to others that are sicke of impatiency, of curiosity, or the like diseases, he doth [o] ordaine and point forth for euery man a particular remedy according to the nature of his infirmity. But there is alwaies some bitternesse in these potions, which breedeth a difficulty in the Patient to take them. Mis-conceiue me not, as if I should speake of corporall medicaments which are composed of hearbs and simples, I speake spiritually of all sorts of vertues, which are the true receits to cure languishing soules; take therefore and taste this medicine, I dare assure you it wil make you whole, although you were sicke euen vnto death, for you haue a very cunning Physition.

[o] The medicines for these sicknesses.

[p] Then he said, alas, behold the great day of Iudgement is at hand, for Antichrist is borne. If vertue seeme bitter vnto your taste God will sweeten your mouthes with diuine consolations, and will not that you should rise from his table with your palate disseasoned. It is high time O yee Christians to surrender and giue vp your will into the hands of your Creator: giue vnto him the three powers of your soule, your memory, that you may haue him in remembrance, your vnderstanstanding, that you may thinke vpon his benefits, and your will, that you may be obedient vnto him. Imitate the Oxen who feede all the day and chew the cud, or ruminate in the night: and let the seruant no longer gouerne your house. The holy Ghost is at your beds side, and hath in his hand a potion for the health of your soules: the ingredients are, a little humility, a little charity, a little patience, a little perseuerance, a little hope,

[p] See the Apology, the first doubt after the Epistle to the Reader.

hope, and a little resignation. This potion is not without some bitternes and mortification, but he is at hand with the sugar of his consolations to sweeten and allay the offensiueneſſe thereof. Ought you not first to goe vnto Mount Caluary, and there taste vineger and gall, befor you feed on those delicious viands, and drinke that sweet wine and hipocras of heauen, or haue the fruition of the vision of that eternall brightneſſe? Receiue therefore the Sacrament of the Altar, for it will preserue you, it will restore you, it will consolidate whatsoeuer is loose and disioynted within you: yet must euery one of you alwaies say vnto himselfe, I am a miserable sinner, and most vnworthy to receiue my Creator. Thou Iohn Baptist was by wer't this great Sacrament was first instituted; thou diddest rest thy selfe vpon the breast of the Sonne of God, at what time there were many celestiall secrets reuealed vnto thee: thou knowest full well that this is a Sacrament of loue, and that the best aduice that may be giuen is, that men frequent the same euery q fifteenth day, and haue this meditation continually in their mindes, that Antichrist is borne. You are therefore to play the parts of valiant and able souldiers, and not to shew your selues base or womanish: nay I say further, that Virgins and married women are likewise to arme themselues against him: for r the Church had neuer such plenty of martyrdomes as shall bee in the time that is prepared for the same. There shall bee two bands and two armies, the one belonging to God, the other fighting for the Diuell, and in this army shall Antichrist bee. God would saue his whom he hath redeemed with the price of his blood: on the other side, the Diuell would rauine vpon that, which is none of his owne. Nothing happeneth but by the prouidence and will of God, and his pleasure it is that this time should come. When Antichrist shall be in his ruffe and brauery, hee will say, I am Christ, I am the Messias, and he will haue many associates that will auow q The frequenting of the blessed Sacrament.

r The time that is prepared for martyrdome.

auow the ſame: but the true Chriſtians ſhall tell him, thou art not hee, thou art Antichriſt. The ſame God who ſaid vnto the Niniuites, repent, doth now call vpon you, my iudgement is at hand, repent therefore and be conuerted. Children, obey the voice of your father: ſhut, ſhut, O ſhut your gates againſt Satan, if he would enter, ſay that God hath the keyes. If the Diuell be importunate, if he knocke with impatience, if hee would enter by violence, goe preſently to the maſter of the houſe, and tell him, Sir, you are our good ſhepheard, there are ſtrangers without that would enter forcibly vpon vs, and if we bee not miſtaken, there bee wolues without at the gate. Sir, you haue the keyes, you haue the ſtaffe to beate them hence, you are able with the leaſt winke of your eye to make them auoid the place: vpon this information he will riſe and chaſe them away to their confuſion. Haue your recourſe to the Child Ieſus, he will bee your Purueier and ſupply your neceſſities. Preſent your ſeruice to Mary, and ſhee will aide you. Why doe you rather chuſe to lauiſh away your time, then to pray for the health of your ſoules? you are firſt to honour the bleſſed mother of God, S. Iohn, and Magdalene, and then the loue of God ſhall be conferred vpon you. Is it not good reaſon to reuerence the bleſſed mother of God ſince that you are her children? I aſſure you, that no man liuing can make a bad end who hath honoured and reuerenced the mother of God, Magdalene, Martha, Catherine, Vrſula, Dominicke, Anſelme, Staniſlaus, Stephen, Anthony of Padua, and the Innocent children, but be wary, for in the greateſt feaſts and ſolemnities there is moſt vnruline ſſe and diſorder.

ſ The reprehenſion of the wiſe men of this world.

ſ You deceiue your ſelues when as you ſay, that if God would haue reuealed theſe things vnto his Church, he would haue choſen the miniſtry of Preachers, not of Diuels: but God is wiſe enough, yea hee is wiſdome it ſelfe, and doth little need to haue your ad-uice,

uice, or the counsell of Angels themselues. If he would haue taken the aduice, either of Angels or of men, when he selected and culled forth his blessed mother from all women, they would haue told him, that it had been better to chuse a Queene or a Princesse; for the blessed Virgine was accounted meane and contemptible in the eyes of the world. In like manner, if hee had taken any to aduise with all, touching the place of his Natiuity, they would haue told him, what Lord, chuse a stable? can you not with as much ease chuse a Palace? But it is the custome of God to doe that which seemeth good vnto him, and not to follow the fancies and giddy conceits of men. Then did Verrine take his oath, that all this aboue mentioned was true, as hee formerly vsed to doe.

The Acts of the 28. of December being the Feast of Innocents.

ON this day the Dominican father exorcised, and Verrine began to speake in this manner: There are two bookes, [t] God keepeth the booke of life, the Diuell the booke of eternall death, in which hee registreth downe all mens sinnes, as God in the other booke setteth downe all mens good workes, whereof S. Martin is witnesse. The Diuell ruineth all, and God restoreth all, for from a worke of basenesse he draweth actions of wonder, and maketh that which is vnfruitfull to become fertile.

The way of life vnto death is a broad and beaten way, but the way to returne from sinne to grace is full of mistakes and windings. It is not Gods manner to imploy the seruice of those that are drenched in mortall sinne, when hee would bring about some important worke for the aduantage and good of his Church: as also the Diuell doth not effect any great matter for the aduancement and augmentation of the kingdome of Hell

[t] The booke of death kept by Satan is nothing else but the sleights and deuices which he hath to ensnare vs. But if by this booke of death you vnderstand reprobation, then is this booke in the eternity of God as the booke of Predestination is.

Hell when he vseth the ministry of one that is setled in the grace of God. For there is a sympathie and consent betwixt God and his creature, whom hee employeth in his businesse.

God being omnipotent can easily out of vnfruitfulnesse, nay out of a straw worke plenty of wonders, yet is it requisite, that this straw do not let or giue hinderance thereunto: for the reasonable creature hath free will giuen him by God, that by doing well he may merit, as by stooping to that which is nought, hee may be punished.

It is not with men as it is with Diuels, for we are forced to doe the commandement of God, which men absolutely are not, although God being the Lord of all, and their Creator, Redeemer and Sanctifier may lay his command vpon them: but the Diuell whose nature is depraued and deuoid of the grace of God, doth nothing but by compulsion. God hath created his creatures without any consent or approbation of theirs, yet hee doth not operate in his creatures without them, neither shall any be haled into the kingdome of heauen if hee haue no minde to goe thither: God will open many meanes for the attainement of that endlesse blisse; but if a man will none, [u] God will leaue him to himselfe, and then hee is vtterly cast away. This shipwracke of himselfe commeth not from God, but from the creature, who out of pure malice doth abandon the Mansion of his father, that by his precipitate courses, hee may cast himselfe into the fier of Hell. A good King maketh a good subiect. The [x] deceased King of famous memory was a louer of peace in his life time, and therefore God did crowne him with glory and peace in that other world. Doe not contend and cauill, whether hee were an hereticke or a Catholike, for the end crownes the worke: hee had offended with Dauid, and God shewed mercy vnto him as he did vnto Dauid.

It is the Diuels property to bring men from euill to worse, [u] The shipwrack of men commeth from themselues.

[x] Concerning the deceased King Henry 4. see more at large in the page 219.

worſe, but God nurſeth men vp from good to better; for no vncleane thing ſhall enter into heauen.

Then Verrine ſaid, at the pronouncing of theſe words of the Exorciſmes, Tu Innocentium perſecutor. Of a certainty Herod, thou waſt a blood-thirſty man, thou wouldeſt haue thy ſelfe ſtiled the Meſſias, and yet diddeſt endeauour to ſlay the true Meſſias indeed, in that maſſacre of Innocents: And although hee was able enough to defend himſelfe from thy murtherous deſignements, yet would hee decline thy rage, that hee might teach vs not to tempt the prouidence of God.

Herod thought to kill Chriſt Ieſus, yet on the other ſide the Kings of the Eaſt came to worſhip him. Good Kings! what ſaw you in him to draw you to ſuch an action ſo derogatory (as it might haue ſeemed) from your States? Hee appeared vnto you but a little childe: Mary was no Queene, and there was no traine, onely Ioſeph, an Oxe and an Aſſe. Where was his Crowne, where was his Scepter, where were his hangings of Tapiſtry? where was the royall bed? what could you behold there but cob-webs of ſpiders ſticking on the rafters, and an Oxe that heated the child with the abundance of his vaperous breath.

Thus you muſt doe. The holy Ghoſt breatheth on you the breath of deuotion, and doe you lend your breath vnto the little Infant, and being ioyned together, he ſhall be the fire and you the aſhes. The breath of the holy Ghoſt is a fire, and repreſenteth vnto vs charity; and your breath is the aſhes of the meekeſt humility, for vnder the aſhes is the fire preſerued. Learne hence to ſpeake of ſacred things, aduiſedly, and ſeriouſly according vnto truth, and beware whether you bee rich or poore, how you blaſpheme againſt him. The pouerty of this world is not the meanes to make you happie, neither doth God eſteeme much of this pouerty, for there be many that are now howling & frying in thoſe infernall flames, that repoſed too much confidence in y Which kinde of pouerty is the beſt.

this pouerty. Bleſſed bee the poore, but they muſt bee poore in ſpirit, for theirs is the kingdome of heauen. Are you ignorant in what this pouerty of ſpirit conſiſteth? It conſiſteth in this, to poſſeſſe no other thing but God and him alone, for there are many poore people in the eſtimation of the world, who are rich enough in their ambition, and yet are there many Kings, Princes, and Noble perſonages, who are owners of nothing but of God and themſelues: For riches are amongſt indifferent things, neither hurt they thoſe that make good vſe and appliance of them, according vnto the Commandement of God, [z] Then Verrine turned to the poore that were there, and ſaid, There is not one amongſt you, but is better accommodated for his neceſſities, then was the Sonne of God when he lay in the manger. you ſhould therefore ſay vnto him, when hee profereth his kingdome vnto you. Good God, I am not capable of ſuch a bliſſe, and ſtill you are to acknowledge your owne infirmitie: you muſt alſo deſcend downe as it were to hell, which you are to doe either in this life, or after you are dead: when therefore you are afflicted with aduerſities ſay vnto him, I am ready to ſuffer with my Redeemer, for I haue deſerued much more, yet doth he compaſſion my tottering and diſtracted eſtate, and cheereth me vp with the beames of his mercy. I aſſure you, that both I & you haue to do with a ſeuere Iudge, therefore humble your ſelues and you ſhall enter into the kingdome of heauen. Grudge not that God hath made ſuch an one rich and thee poore, or that hee hath endowed ſuch with wiſedome, and hath left vnto thee nothing but fooliſhneſſe. For hee created the Angels and marſhalled them in their orders, there are the Seraphins, The Cherubins, and the Thrones, &c. euery one in their ſeuerall ranke and ſtation, and although there bee ſuch variety and diuerſity amongſt them, yet you cannot ſay that they are ſubiect to confuſion. If you direct and leuell your actions by an vpright intention,

[z] Conſolation vnto the poore

that

that is to say, if you square all your doings by the rule of Gods glory, the saluation of your soule, and good of your neighbour, Satan will easily flee from you. Let your soule be furnished with three things, with vpright intention in your memory, with pure affection in your will, and with sincerity of conscience in your vnderstanding. The memory by calling to remembrance some wicked thing, offendeth not God; the vnderstanding by considering thereof, incurreth no mortal sinne; but when the will interposeth it selfe, then is there a consummation of the sinne.

[a] Read diligently the booke of the Crucifix, for in this booke you shall learne pouerty, patience, humility, and al vertuous knowledge: be not curious to make inquisition after humane literature, for this shall bee sufficient for your full instruction. He further said, that if a damned soule could breake from hell, hee would indure all torments whatsoeuer in hope to inioy the vision of God, yea, this soule would say, that all these torments were but as flowers and roses. Then hee added, God is vnited vnto his Church, as the nayle vnto the finger of the hand.

[a] The booke of the Crucifix.

The acts of the 29. of December.

ON this day while the Dominican father was saying Masse, Verrine held disputation with God, and on the sudden hee thus expressed himselfe by the mouth of Louyse.

[b] Great God, I offer vp vnto thy Maiesty all the sacrifices that haue beene offered vnto thee from the first creation of the world, and doe also make tender of all those that are or shall bee presented before thee, vntill the consummation of time bee ended, and all this will I doe for Lewes. I also present vnto thee all the teares and repentance of all the Saints that are in thy Court triumphant and militant; and all this will I doe for Lewes. I offer

[b] On this day Lewes the Magician was vpon his way iourneying towards S. Baume This was vttered with an admirable vehemency of spirit, so that the woman was all ouer in a great sweate. He seemeth to lesson vs with what feruency of spirit and charity we should pray vnto God for such mis-led & wandering soules. And hee made Louyse pray, by mooving her tongue, as also he caused her to dictate letters in ỹ name of Louyse, not in his owne name, to which the said, Louyse gaue consent as vnto a thing which shee much desired. See the annotations vpon the 304. pag.

offer all the praiers which haue beene, are or ſhall bee made vnto thee, and al this wil I doe for Lewes. I further tender vnto thee all the extaſies and rauiſhments in ſpirit, as well of men as of Angels, which haue beene, are or ſhall bee ſent vnto them, and all this will I doe for Lewes. Moreouer, I would (by Gods appointment I ſpeake this, and not as I am a Diuell) that the multitude of ſuch as offer, were mightily inlarged in their number that ſo the oblation might be the greater, and all this I deſire for Lewes. Then he ſaid, Euerlaſting father, I now preſent and lay before you your wel-beloued Sonne, who is in the hands of the Prieſt that now ſaieth Maſſe, and all for Lewes. [c] I doe further offer vnto you all the merits of his bleſſed, and dolourous paſſion, truſting that you wil take compaſſion on him. After this he ſaid, Pater de cœlis Deus miſerere Lodouici, Fili redemptor mundi Deus, miſerere Lodouici, Spiritus ſancte Deus, miſerere Lodouici: Sancta Trinitas vnus Deus, miſerere Lodouici. Sancta Dei genitrix ora pro Lodouico, Sancta Virgo virginum ora pro Lodouico: Sancta Maria ora pro Lodouico: Sancti Angeli & Archangeli, orate pro Lodouico: Sancti Patriarchæ & Prophetæ orate pro Lodouico: Sancti Apoſtoli & Euangeliſtæ, orate pro Lodouico: Sancti Martyres orate pro Lodouico: Sancti Confeſſores orate pro Lodouico: Sanctæ Virgines & Viduæ, orate pro Lodouico: omnes Sancti & Sanctæ Dei orate pro Lodouico. O Lodouice veni, veni Lodouice. [d] Why doeſt thou linger thus to be conuerted vnto thy God? God is wearied, God is thirſty, and craueth to haue his thirſt ſlaked by thee Lewes, but thou like vnto the woman of Samaria refuſeſt him, and ſaieſt, thou haſt not a pitcher wherewithall to draw water for him. Yet is not this a ſufficient excuſe, becauſe he deſireth to drinke of the water of thy ſoule, which thou maieſt miniſter vnto him by thy conuerſion. Lewes, Lewes, Lewes, take the ſpeedieſt and ſwifteſt courſers that thou canſt get, and come quickly, for if thou wilt thou maieſt yet bee conuerted. God is more more powerfull then the Diuel, neither can any one pul by violence from him that which hee hath reſolued to retaine vnto himſelfe.

[c] See the Apology and the anſwere vnto the 9. doubt.

[d] A prediction of the comming of Lewes.

After this was ſpoken, the Dominican father did exorciſe, and at the beginning of the Exorciſmes, Verrine was very pleaſant with Belzebub, and ſcoffed at him ſaying.

Hola Belzebub! I pray thee relate vnto vs in what eſtate are the affaires of Hell: if I bee not deceiued thou droopeſt, and ſeemeſt to bee troubled with the headache: it may bee that theſe honeſt men haue affrighted thee. Thou doeſt not imitate my example, who deſire the cenſure of the Inquiſitour of the faith, and of mine owne accord cal for the moſt penetrating and iudicious perſons that are. But I perceiue thy ſtinge is taken from thee, yet is it not fiftene dayes agoe, that thou diddeſt conceite with thy ſelfe, that thou wer't able to chaſe God away from S. Baume. I would haue thee now expreſſe thy ſelfe.

Belzebub anſwered. I will ſpeake when I ſee cauſe, and not when thou wilt haue me. Well, well, ſaid Verrine, I ſee thou haſt nothing to anſwer. Then hee ſaid to Carreau, thy weapons are wreſted from thee, for that ſtone which was before ſo hard, is now mollified, and the bloud of the lambe ſhall ſouple and ſoften the ſame. Lewes ſay, Miſerere mei, for thou art yet blinde, but at thy arriual hither, [e] peraduenture thou ſhalt haue a greater portion of illumination. O poore Princes, where is now your ſtate and power, how curſed is hee that lendeth his eare vnto your ſly ſuggeſtions? What? can you giue away that which you haue not? Ha, ha, if the Princes bee aſtoniſhed and at their wits end, what ſhall the poore lackeies then doe? I tell you, that ſince God hath appointed me to be heere, I will diſ-mantle and vnfould all your ſubtleties.

[f] I doe not wonder if this ſeeme harſh vnto ſome mens beleefe, for if a man ſhould ſhew vnto another that is altogether ignorant and vnexperienced, the egges of ſilke-wormes, and that this man had neuer ſeene or heard what manner of thing this ſilke or theſe wormes were, and ſhould bee told, that by the aſſiſtance of that induſtry which God hath beſtowed vpon man, there ſhould wormes bee ingendred of theſe egges, which being fomented and diligently cheriſhed, would in time ſpinne and make ſilke, whereof excellent veluets and taffaties ſhould bee made, from a peece of which a fair Altar-cloth might be taken: I ſay, that this ruſtical fellow being deuoyd of iudgement to apprehend theſe particulars, and altogether vnpractiſed in this art, would in concluſion ſay, that hee did not beleeue one word of this, for it is a difficult matter to beleeue that which a man cannot comprehend. But he that is conuerſant heerein doth very well vnderſtand the art of cheriſhing and bringing them to their perfection. Your Merchants alſo doe eaſily beleeue it, for they know the manner how the wormes make ſilke, and the art how to dreſſe a faire peece of damaske from the ſame, yet they had neede of great patience before they can ſee a peece perfected vp and finiſhed.

[e] He neuer aſſured the conuerſion of Lewes.

[f] A ſimile againſt thoſe that are ſcrupulous in beleeuing this wonder.

g The application of the ſimile.

g So fareth it with God in this worke, he hath taken a litle graine ſuch a one as my ſelfe (ſaid Verrine) and another abiect creature a litle graine alſo, called Louyſe, and will from their weakneſſe draw workes of power and wonder, that you may know that hee needeth not the helpe of his creatures when he would put any great deſigne in execution: for being Almightie, and the ſoueraigne maſter-fencer, hee doth alwaies reſerue ſome blowes and paſſages of his art, of his power, and of his wiſedome to the confuſion of all Hell: but the Diuell doth preſently teach all the skill hee hath to thoſe that giue themſelues vnto him.

Moreouer he ſaid, you are all of you prodigall children, for ſome of you will not tary at home in your fathers houſe, other of you that tary at home, lead a debauched bauched and vicious life, and at the last are forced to dyet with hoggs. Wallow not in these your delights, for they are but the outward pills and rindes of akornes, the fragments of the feeding of hoggs: let it enter into your consideration, that the composition of your soules is very noble, and that it standeth neither with decency nor honesty to serue Kings with huskes, for if the steward should serue them so, he should well deserue to bee sharpely punished. It is not Gods pleasure that you should feed vpon such course and sordid viands; he hath set you at his table, and will feede you with the bread of Angels. The tables of great personages are abundantly profuse in delicacies, but what agreemēt is there betwixt Christ and Belial? The loftiest trees are most obnoxious to stormes and falling, but the low shrubbs stand safe vpon the ground. It is not enough to be seemingly honest in the eies of men, as the Pharisie was, and yet to haue a heart steeped in the gall of malice before God. Then Verrine said, that hee would discourse no more as hee had done, but bade them ruminate well on that which he had said, for Louyses voice was to bee preserued for other occasions. The same day in the euening the Dominican father exorcised, in the beginning whereof, Verrine and Belzebub did dialogue-wise confer one with the other, their speech was touching the state of Magicians and witches, and of diuerse kinds of superstitions to the astonishment and admiration of the whole assembly. Hee further said that very euening, that father Michaelis had been dogged and pryed into by foure Diuels and so many Witches, to bewitch him, and that the charme was so violent in operation, that if hee had once taken it he could not haue outliued it three dayes.

The acts of the 30. of December.

THis day in the morning the Dominican father did exorcise the two women that were possessed, and before the Exorciſmes began, the ſaid father did humble himſelfe before them all, and craued pardon of the aſſembly, in that he had the day before, beene guilty of ſome open impatience.

Then Verrine ſaid, many times the miſtreſſe is as fooliſh as the chamber maide, and doth nothing that is pleaſing in the eies of the maſter, but is too much addicted to her eaſe and delicacies. What then doth the maſter, he complaineth on them both, and taketh away the keies of the houſe from them, yet without any manner of violence. h The ſame doth God by the ſoules of men, for when he perceiueth that neither the chamber-maide who is the body, nor the miſtreſſe who is the ſoule, doth performe any action agreeable vnto him, he (as maſter of the houſe) takes the keyes from them, and ſhut's the gates and windowes himſelfe, that theeues might not breake in vpon them: yet doth hee all this without violence or noiſe, and patiently cauſeth the ſaid keyes to be deliuered vp vnto him. Then he laboureth an attonement and reconciliation betweene the miſtreſſe and the ſeruant, but in caſe they ſhould reſiſt and grow refractary, then doth hee ſuffer them to fall, through their owne default into the bottomleſſe pit of hell: for as the prouerb hath it, they that neglect to doe good are at length ouertaken with euill; and hee who doth not chuſe Chriſt Ieſus for his hoſt, ſhall haue the Diuell to be his companion.

h The goodnes of God, and the malice of men.

Chriſt Ieſus is the good ſheep-heard that leadeth his ſheepe into paſtures fatned by his body and blood: hee is a ſheepe-heard and a lambe together, and was offered vp as a ſacrifice for your ſinnes: giue him the ſtaffe of your will, and leaue the guide and gouernement of your ſelues vnto him, for he will preſerue you from the fury of rauening wolues. Curſed be the ſheepe that doth not ſuffer it ſelfe to be guided by him, it doth well deſerue to be deuoured.

The ſheepe doth graze and chew the cudde, ſo (ſaith Chriſt Christ Iesus) must you take and eate not flesh that is dead, but the liuing and celestiall foode of his body, there is no dainty in the world comparable to this viande. Paul in his extasie of spirit had an essay thereof, so had also some others after him: yet is there stil plenty of this food, and the treasure of Gods mercies is so infinite, that the Seraphins themselues cannot sound the depth or know the end of his riches: for they doe euer see new and vndiscouered perfections in God, maruell not therefore if hee bestow a new re sent vpon his Church.

Then he turned to the image of S. Magdalene, and said, O Magdalene, thou wer't abiding in this Baume, where thou diddest repent, neither is it lawfull for any man to enter into the litle caue where thou diddest lye, but vpon his bare feete, and I Verrine am of opinion that God will hardly giue way to a man hardened in his sin to passe into that sacred place. God spake to Moses from the fiery bush, Put off thy shooes, for the place whereon thou treadest is holy ground, and I also affirme that this place is no lesse sacred then that, because the Sacrament resteth here which is the Saint of Saints, and [i] Christ Iesus himselfe in his diuinity & humanity came downe from heauen to visite Magdalene in this Baume. Consider therefore seriouslie you that approach vnto the Communion, how pretious a foode it is which is administred vnto you; to the seruing in of which the Angels themselues are assistant as the seruants and pages of God. O Marie, sacred mother of God, thou wer't the first that diddest taste of this meate, and wer't more familiar therewithal then any other creature whatsoeuer, for thou diddest humble thy selfe at the comming and salutation of the Angell, and diddest repute thy selfe vnworthy to be the seruant of seruants of the Lord. It is the custome of God where hee bestowes other vertues to circle them in all with perfect humility, to the end that the soule bee not stayned with the spots or pollutions ons of ingratitude, but may acknowledge thoſe benefits which it hath receaued. For the grace of God is a waight by which a man ſinketh into the gulfe of his nothing, and is drawne vp againe on high to make a coniunction and concurrence of the creatures will to the good pleaſure of the Creator: by this meanes alſo doth he vnderſtand how ſlauiſh and fearefull his condition were, if that God did not wing and protect him from all danger. Mary, thou art ſhee that like a waight diddeſt draw downe thy Sonne from heauen to earth, not for thy owne ſake alone, but for all other diſtreſſed ſinners, ſo that he who will enioy euerlaſting life, muſt haue recourſe vnto thee. God indeed is that fertile cloud from whence all vertues drop downe vpon men. Thy ſonne doth indeed preſent his wounds before his father, and thou art a remembrancer vnto thy ſonne of all the ſeruices and offices which thou haſt done vnto him, not by way of oſtentation, but out of loue, and to the end thou maieſt obtaine mercy and forgiueneſſe for comfortleſſe ſinners. Whileſt thou liued'ſt in this world thou wer't fired with zeale and charity, how much more now when thou art ſo neere vnto the furnace of loue, and the fountaine of mercy. [k] Then hee ſaid, Lewes hath committed an infinite number of ſacrileges againſt God, and hath cauſed a thouſand and a thouſand perſons to deny their Sauiour: but God is deſirous to expect a litle longer the euent of things. Magick is the moſt pernitious and diabolicall art that may be. France hath taken a ſtrong & ſpreading infection of the ſame, and at Paris the ſchooles of Magick are more frequented then the diuinity lectures in Auignon.

[i] An authentical history reporteth this.

[k] An inuectiue againſt Lewes the Magician.

God hath oftentimes offered himſelfe and as it were way-laid the ſoule of Lewes, ſometimes by preaching, and ſometimes by other inſpirations, but he would not giue him a drop of drinke.

Belzebub drew him on to practiſe Magick and inchantments, the ſchedules are now in his hand, he hath been the occasion that many haue died very strange and sudden deathes; and although God doth labour his conuersion, yet doth hee thrust away and reiect the same.

beene

All that which hath beene aboue spoken, began vpon the day of the conception of the Virgine in the very place of pennance, to figure out vnto you, that you are first to receiue into your embracements repentance, represented vnto you in Mary Magdalene; and then innocence, pointed out by Mary the mother of God. When hee had thus said, hee tooke his oath as hee was accustomed.

The same day in the euening were these two possessed women Exorcised; whereupon [l] Belzebub said, I am assured that about this time they hold their synod and assembly, will he relinquish this charge, to come hither? I must goe see. Then Asmodee issued forth to giue aduertisement vnto the Magicians and witches, as he said.

[l] He spake of the Magician.

The same time, which was about nine of the clocke at night, father Michaelis came to S. Baume, from Aix, whence hee came with his companion father Anthony Boilletot, and the master of the Chapter-house at Aix, hauing finished his sermons for the Aduent. Vpon whose arriuall, there was inquiry made after Lewes, for father Michaelis did imagine that Lewes was come, because hee set forth from Aix the day before, in the company of two Capuchin fathers: but hee was not as then arriued.

[m] The arriuall of father Michaelis to S: Baume.

The Acts of the 31. of December. 1610.

THis day in the morning were the two possessed women exorcised by father Domptius the Dominican: and Verrine began to speake in this manner.

Blessed mother of God, Veni Maria, veni in adiutorium Lodouico; Sancta Maria Magdalena, veni in ad iutorium [n] This is to be vnderstood, as in the precedent Acts.

iutorium Lodouico : Sancte Ioannes Euangeliſta, veni in adiutorium Lodouico : Sancta Martha veni in adiutorium Lodouico. Then he ſaid, Moſt ſacred mother of God, thou knoweſt thoſe inſupportable paines which thy Sonne ſuffered on the Croſſe; Verrine alſo did inuocate many other Saints, that were aſſiſtant vnto Chriſt at his paſſion on mount Caluary. Afterwards he added, O ſacred humanity, I adiure and charge thee in the name of thy eternall father, that thou offer thy wounds for Lewes: I charge thee, that thou preſent before him, all the paines, puniſhments and tortures, which thou diddeſt ſuffer, for Lewes; make thou profer alſo of that thirſtineſſe which cauſed ſuch a drought in thee vpon the tree of the Croſſe. And continuing his ſpeech to Chriſt Ieſus hee ſaid, What Lord? are you thirſty? you are a fountaine that can neuer be drawne dry, you are a ſea of waters; you are the ſeller of all ſorts ſo excellent wines, and doe you cry Sitio? Lord the ſoules that are in Paradiſe are able to quench this thirſt. But ſome one will obiect, what? can Chriſt Ieſus bee ſubiect to thirſt, and ſuch naturall infirmities? is not his body glorified? ſaid he not, that the Saints in heauen ſhould no more hunger and thirſt? how can God who is the center of all perfections, haue vpon him ſuch an impotency in nature? Verrine anſwered, God is wearie without wearineſſe, he is impatient without haſtineſſe; he was thirſty on Mount Caluary, but it was after the ſaluation of ſoules, for whoſe ſake if it were expedient hee would once againe be re-crucified, on this very ◦ Croſſe of S. Baume, if his body were paſſible and ſubiect to ſuffering: O how vnexpreſſable is his compaſſion towards you? Then he ſaid, This is the Friday of your redemption, and the day of Lewes his iuſtification, if he pleaſe: let him ponder vpon theſe words, Remittuntur tibi O Lodouice peccata tua: and alſo theſe, Vade in pace. Lewes why doeſt thou thus fore-ſlow thy comming? O ye Capuchins, Capuchins, Capuchins, haſten your pace, and come come quickly. But you will obiect, that you are barefooted, and that it is impossible for you to make such festination. P indeed Hell did yesterday and to day raise such a storme, and made the clouds to spout downe raine after that vnmeasurable manner, that the Diuels had well hoped to giue some stop vnto thy worke (O God) but thou art euer omnipotent, and doest make thy creatures to stoope vnder thy commands, although they be most rebelliously bent against thee.

◦ There is a great faire Croſſe at S. Baume.

P The stop which was laid to hinder the Magicians comming by great store of raine, that fell downe in great plenty two daies together.

Then speaking to Magdalene he said, Sigh not thus, God hath the key of thy soule, and will giue thee meate from his owne table. Thou Belzebub art heauie, but I am glad; knowing that whatsoeuer is held by the puissant hand of God, cannot be plucked from him, by the strength or policy of hell.

q The soule is a goodly Vineyard, purchased at an high rate, but the number of those that manure and labour the same, is small and not worthy to come into consideration: yea some of the labourers themselues suffer the Wolfe to steale in, and to make hauocke in this Vineyard: the master whereof is the Sonne of God, who is without mother in Heauen, and without father on earth, a second Adam, conceiued of a Virgine without sinne. The Eucharist is the Sacrament of loue, and the nourishment of soules, translating you vnto glory, and making you as Gods. Paradise is the habitation of Saints: but if thou wouldest be absolute and compleate in perfection, descend by contemplation as low as Hell, and say, I am vnworthy to suffer the paines of Hell, although that horrible pit of sulphure was built for such as I am, who carry in my bosome the well-spring of all sinnes and wickednesses. But how few are there that arriue to this point of humiliation, and vnder-valuing of themselues, although it bee the center from whence they are to begin, and the highest assent whereunto they are to climbe: yet this debasement of themselues taketh little roote with the greatest sort of men. Who is he q The soule is a Vineyard.

hee that will beleeue that himselfe is the cause of all the euils, paines and iudgements, that haue been so fearefully rained downe vpon you! especially if hee haue from his youth liued in some religious Order, and obserued the rules and precepts of his Superiors? yet is this humility the extract of all perfection, & the Queen that draweth after her, all the other Princesses, Ladies, and Damsels: and which is more, the mother of God is humility it selfe, and doth therefore the rather exact it from you. God hath giuen two wings vnto the soule, the one of feare, the other of loue; the first hath regard vnto sinne, the second doth apprehend the goodnesse of God.

Hee that eateth at a Kings table, will not sit with soule and vn-washed hands, though otherwise hee bee of a rude and boysterous behauiour: and will not you be careful to wash your hands with the water of contrition, and make confession of your sinnes? Christ Iesus at the first institution of the blessed Sacrament, did wash the feet of his Apostles, and Peter at the beginning would haue hindered him; but when hee saw, it was the good pleasure of his master, hee then subiected himselfe thereunto. Iudas himselfe set his feet vpon the breast of the Sonne of God, that they might be washed, yet would he not for all this be conuerted. Iohn leaned vpon the heart of his master, and therefore had the wings of an Eagle giuen vnto him; so that hee was afterwards the adopted Sonne of the blessed Virgine. The iudgements of God and men are infinitely different; for many are sickly, and in a consumption by their sinnes before God, who in the estimation of men are very healthfull: and contrariwise those that are sound before God, are feeble before men. God will come to iudgement with terrour and power, all things shall tremble before his face; the [r] Angels and the righteous shall go before him like burning Torches, all creatures shall behold this awfull spectacle, and shall bee arrested before this this Maiesty. Then shall the bookes bee vnfoulded, and all shall be laid open in publike. You haue many heere that are shamefast and nice to confesse their sinnes: in the meane time the Diuell booketh downe all that is actionable, and hath euer his pen and ink-horne ready, so that he omitteth nothing, and intendeth to obiect it against you openly and to your disgrace. It were a folly beyond pardon to beg a straw of a mighty King, for Princes Presents are like themselues, magnificent, and they are not to be disseasoned with petty suites: Thus, should not you craue the straw and stubble of temporary blessings from the King of Kings, but you should beg of him the treasures of heauen, which hee himselfe is contented you should request at his hands. Pray him to giue you patience, humility, and other vertues; and bee not euer solliciting him for faire weather, for raine, for the riches and preferments of this world. Whether it raine, or whether it bee faire, bee thankfull vnto God, and co-operate with him in al things, so shall you giue best satisfaction vnto him.

[r] Touching the day of iudgement.

[f] This day in the euening there came to S. Baume, Lewes Gaufredy with father d' Ambruc sub-priour of the couent at S. Maximin, and two Capuchin fathers: where it was thought fit that Lewes the Priest should exorcise Louyse, and to that end father Michaelis granted vnto him all his power and authority. Whereupon Verrine made Louyse to cry very loud, and began a prayer full of zelousnesse and deuotion, desiring Christ Iesus to take compassion on Lewes: And hee pronounced this prayer so passionately, and with such affection, that he made many mens hearts to throb and melt with compassion: yet some others did breake off this prayer, & said, that it was not fit to suffer Verrine to make such praiers. Notwithstanding after these interruptions were blowne ouer, Verrine propounded certaine interrogatories vnto [t] Lewes, saying: Primo, Whether God bee omnipotent or no? to which Lewes answered, That hee was was omnipotent. Secundò he demanded of him, Whither the Church hath power and authority to command Diuels? Lewes answered, that the Church had such power. Tertiò hee asked him, Whither Diuels may be inforced to vtter a truth. Lewes answered that they might. Quartò he demanded, Whither the oathes which are taken by the Diuel, with all the conditions and solemnities requisite vnto the same be of validity or no? To which Lewes answered, that they were of validity.

[f] The arriuall of the Magician.

[t] The Diuels interrogatories vnto the Magician.

[u] Then said Verrine to the fathers that were present. Marke well with me what he hath heere granted. And so he bade Lewes to exorcise him, which accordingly [x] hee did. But not being able to read, and being altogether vnacquainted with matters of Exorcismes, at euery word he asked of father Michaelis, must I say thus and thus: to which the said father answered, yes; and bad him to proceed.

Here is to be obserued, that the fathers, Michaelis and the rest questioning with him of the truth of the fact, whither he were indeed a Magician or no, with other interrogatories vpon that point, insteed of inuocating the name of God, he bad all the Diuels of hell to fetch him, if it were true: which he oft repeated to all the questions that were propounded vnto him, and made shew as though he wept, yet as experience taught vs, and as Belzebub himselfe did aduertise vs, he did not shed a teare. About the end of this exorcisme, Verrine exhorted Lewes to renounce all Magick, and to turne vnto his God, and to this purpose laid before him many pregnant motiues and inducements.

It befell, as the said Lewes was exorcising Magdalene, Belzebub and Verrine beganne both together to laugh a loud, saying, Who would euer haue thought that Lewes would haue exorcised Magdalene & Louyse? At the Exorcismes that were said by Lewes, and also when they were ended, Magdalene shut her eies, because shee [z] would not see him, hauing him in detesta-

tion

[u] The Diuels inference vpon the Magician.

[x] Lewes performeth the office of an Exorcist, which was according to the prediction mentioned in the page 265.

[y] Belzebub and Verrine laugh at the Magician, for that hee was become an Exorcist.

[z] The feare that Magdalene had to looke vpon the Magician.

tion, because he was a seducer, a Magician, and a man so execrable, as indeed he prooued.

[a] When Verrine had once layd him open, who hee was, to wit, that he was a Magician, that he had seduced Magdalene, that he was the Prince of them all, and many other particulars touching the art of Magick, and the charmes which he gaue as well to the house of S. Vrsula, as to many other persons and places, he tooke his oath vpon the blessed Sacrament, that all these things were most true. Also [b] Magdalene confirmed the same by a double oath, and that vpon the blessed Sacrament also. After al this Verrine said, that they might do wel to shut vp Lewes in the place of penance, and that it might bee locked fast vpon him, with a lock of iron, and that two Priests should lye and watch with him in the said place of penance, and two should remaine without that he might be safely kept from making an escape.

[a] The Diuel reproueth the Magician and telleth him his wicked acts.

[b] Magdalene and the Diuel doe both accuse the Magician.

The acts of the first of Ianuary being the feast of Circumcision. 1611.

THis day in the morning father Michaelis together with the two Capuchin fathers, father d' Ambrue Sub-Priour of the couēt of preaching Friers at S. Maximin, and two other Priests M. Gaubert and M. de Rets, held a [c] counsell at the Kings chamber, where it was concluded that father Romillon, father Francis Billet, and father Francis Domptius the Dominican, who had assisted these two possessed women since the beginning of Aduent, should bee excluded from the counsell, because the said father Michaelis ment to proceed legally, and to that [d] purpose had sequestred and examined seuerally the said women, that the verity of this fact might be sifted and found out, and that nothing but the pure truth might be published.

The same day father Michaelis did minister the Communion to Louyse, and Verrine against the commande-

[c] A counsell held for the verification of the precedent acts, with the exclusion of the fathers, the Exorcists and Confessors.

[d] The two women that were possessed are separated that they might bee examined.

mandement that was impoſed vpon him not to ſpeake, began to diſcourſe and ſay, that God by reuelation bad him make declaration of thoſe admirable diſcourſes, which hee muſt vtter to thoſe that were come purpoſely to heare him.

e The Dominican father was a litle diſcontented becauſe he was excluded from the counſell, for he deemed that they did him wrong as ſuſpecting him of partiality.

e The Dominican father who was the Exorciſt demanded leaue and licence of father Michaelis his ſuperiour to goe home to his country, but not with that modeſty which is wont to be vſed to one of his ranke: yet did he proſtrate himſelfe to the feete of the ſaid father, after the faſhion of his Order, in the preſence of the Capuchin fathers, not without ſome appearance of ſpleene and anger. His reſolution was to get him home, becauſe father Michaelis gaue order that he ſhould not bee preſent at the conſultations, nor heare or examine that which had been declared by Verrine: for his purpoſe was to examine and looke into theſe particulars himſelfe, together with the aboue mentioned fathers. And this was done by good aduice and reaſon: for the ſaid father was a party and wrote all that Verrine had ſaid during the whole time of Aduent, ſo that it ſtood not with conueniency that he ſhould be preſent at theſe examinations, that it might bee the more fairely carryed and not obnoxious to any partiality or paſſion.

f The audience of Magdalene.

f The ſame day in the preſence of the ſaid father Michaelis the Capuchin fathers, and the others aboue named, Magdalens deſpoſition was heard, who, in perfect ſenſe & memory and in the preſence of Lewes Gaufridy deſpoſed many things againſt him touching her poſſeſſion, ſeducement, and the like, deſcribed at large in the acts that were gathered by father Michaelis from the eleuenth of Ianuary vntill almoſt the laſt of Aprill. Furthermore, ſhe ſhewed the marke which ſhee had in her feete, which to outward appearance ſeemed to haue loſt all ſenſe, as experience made it cleare when they made proofe thereof, by putting pinnes into them.

Not-

Notwithstanding this deposition, Lewes would by no meanes make acknowledgement of his fault, but in a menacing sort he said, that in time hee doubted not but to haue reason against those that had accused him, and that he would neuer desire to stirre aliue from S. Baume, if he were not found innocent.

g This euening father Michaelis did exorcise the two women that were possessed, whereupon Lewes, by the aduice of some of his friends, renounced the art of Magick, and at euery renunciation Verrine answered, Amen: and in disclayming all the scheduls Verrine likewise answered, Amen, and said vnto him, Lewes, prepare thy soule, and God will giue thee the light of his grace.

g The Magicians renouncing of Sorcery.

As father Michaelis in the exorcismes was saying these words, Qui inferni triumphator fuit, Verrine replyed, he shal triumph of hel againe which is now ful of anguish and distraction; and when the Exorcist said, Quem ad imaginem suam fecit, Verrine spake and said, it was a goodly Image indeed before it was defaced, but God doth once againe take his pencills and colours to repaire and make full those lineaments that are impared. After this Verrine spake to Lewes and said h Adam vbi es? Adam vbi es? Cry vnto God from the bottome of thy heart, and he will heare thee, pray vnto him that thou maiest goe where the quier of heauen doth sing Sanctus, Sanctus, and not where they curse father and mother, and the euer-liuing God himselfe. Then he said to Belzebub this house is yet open, and full of ruines, but if Lewes will but lend the table of his heart to God, he is so good a workeman that hee will depaint a liuely portraicture vpon the same.

h Verrine would often say that the Magician was the losse of an infinite number of soules, as Adam in times past had been.

After this father Francis the Dominican tooke the stole and demanded Astaroth why he spake not; whereunto Verrine answered, thou seekest truth of him that taketh part with Lucifer, and not of him that taketh part with God. Then did Verine exhort Lewes and en-deauoured to perſwade him to bee conuerted, inuiting the Sonne of God to preſent his wounds vnto his father: the Virgin Mary, to ſhew her breaſts vnto her Sonne: Peter and Magdalen, to obtaine grace for Lewes by their teares, repentance, ſorrowes, and contritions.

[i] Wee are heere to note, that Verrine ſaid to Lewes, thou art like a deſperately ſick man that lyeth at the point of death, who although he haue the vſe of none other of his members but of his tongue and eares onely, yet if when the Phiſitian doth aske him touching the cauſe and progreſſe of his maladie, and hee ſhall anſwere that hee knoweth nothing, and that hee hath loſt the vſe of his memory, notwithſtanding all this he may recouer as long as his ſoule is in coniunction with his [k] body: for it ſufficeth the Phiſitian that the patient conceaueth himſelfe to haue neede of helpe, and permitteth that they miniſter vnto him thoſe remedies that are fit for his recouery. So Lewes, the Diuels haue taken away thy [l] memory, but it is ſufficient to recouer thy health if thou wilt but bequeath the manage of thy ſelfe vnto the true Phiſitian of ſoules, who will incontinently apply thoſe medicaments vnto thee, by the force whereof thou ſhalt eaſily recouer.

[i] Verrines exhortation to Lewes.

[k] That is to ſay there is nohope of men after they are dead.

[l] The Magician told vs, that if we did vnderſtand his condition wee would be amazed at it, for he had no memory. But in this he did co-operate with the Diuell, & gaue his conſent there-unto, whichbeing by the Diuels oftentimes practized vpon Magdalen they could neuer by any charmes bring the ſame about (as ſhall be ſeene heereafter) becauſe ſhe would neuer conſent there-unto.

[m] Belzebub accuſeth Lewes the Magician.

The acts of the ſecond of Ianuary being Sonday.

THis day in the morning the Dominican father exorciſed, whereupon Belzebub told them that hee was bound by an oath which Lewes had takē, but being diſcharged and vnbound he ſwore very ſolemnly, [m] that Louyſe was really poſſeſſed, that Lewes was the Prince of Magicians, and that he himſelfe had ſuckt vpon him certaine vndiſcerneable markes; one in his head, and another in his ſide: that Lewes had bewitched Louyſe, and that by a charme of his, ſhee was poſſeſſed. And this charme hee gaue vnto her to cauſe her to commit

ſome

some foule cryme against her God, but hee of his meere grace had preserued her. Verrine also confirmed the said oath of Belzebub, and called vpon all sorts of creatures to take vengeance of Lewes, if hee were not conuerted. Then hee rendred the reason, why God would make vse of him in the discouerie of Lewes, because (said hee) hee had renounced all things that might conuert and discouer him except the Diuell. Then Verrine by the tongue and consent of Louyse presented before God the father, the[n] wounds of his sonne, and said, if thou wilt thou canst pardon Lewes, and a drop of thy Sonnes blood is able to appease thee. Hee further said, Mother of God, restore vnto this poore infirme wretch the vse of his senses, and to this blinde man the light of his vnderstanding: plunge thy selfe Lewes into the wounds of thy Redeemer, and hee will receaue thee into his protection.

Then he turned to the assembly and said, There are of you that shall see the time of the persecution which shal bee made by [o] Antichrist, and many shall then suffer martyrdome.

Then he said, it is not so difficult a matter to purchase back the soules of Cain, Pilate, Herod and Iudas fro m hell, or the Diuels themselues, who are too wel acquainted with the torments of that place, as to withdraw the soule of Lewes from his abominations whereunto it is so strongly glewed. [p] Lucifer himselfe, and the whole rabble of Diuels would not resist with so setled and resolued obstinacy, if God were to call them to repentance, as this Lewes now doth.

[q] The same day there was a consultation held, wherein father Michaelis made this proposition, that his intendment was to exorcise Louyse, and Magdalen, that he might haue certaine information whither they were really possessed or no: which particular the Presidents and Counsellors of the Citty of Aix were very desirous to vnderstand. Heere-upon it was concluded that they [n] Louyse related vnto vs that she vnderstood wel al that Verrine had prompted vnto her, and did readily co-operate and gaue her assistance to all the praiers that were powred forth for the conuersion of the Magician.

[o] Touching Antichrist see the Apology vnto the doubts.

[p] The hardnesse of the Magicians hart

[q] The aduice for the seperation of the women possessed.

should be separated, that Magdalene should remaine in the Kings chamber, and Louyse in another chamber, both of them attended by certaine women appointed for that purpose that they might not speake one to the other: that father Romillon, father Francis Domptius, and father Francis Billet might not be present at the consultation, nor at the examinations which should be taken of them, but should onely bee admitted to the Exorcismes, that so all suspition and doubt might bee remoued, which some iealous braines might conceiue of this fact.

[r] The Exorcist changed.

[r] The same day in the euening, father Paul, Priest of the doctrine who was purposely come about this businesse, a man of extraordinary note, did exorcise, in the beginning whereof Verrine spake as if hee had been Louyse her selfe, saying; Exorcise me no more, for I am not possessed. Then the Exorcist demanded Leuiathan what was become of Belzebub, hee answered that hee was entred into the body of Lewes: To this the Exorcist replyed: Why doest not thou get thee out of this body which is none of thine? Leuiathan answered, that hee would not goe forth, because hee was destinated thither for to torment her. Then father Michaelis asked him, Quod tibi nomen: he answered, Leuiathan: Then he demanded of him againe; How many are there in her? There are of vs (said he) in euery part of her body. Whereupon, asking him againe, Why they did not get them gone. He replyed, we cannot goe from hence vntill the schedules bee deliuered. Then hee was asked where these schedules were. Hee [t] answered that hee would not tell them. Then Lewes who was in a chamber hard by was called for to come into the Church, and to renounce all the property and right which hee might pretend to haue by those schedules; whither being come, he made his renunciation accordingly. Then Leuiathan said, this renunciation commeth not from his heart. After all this, a Capuchin father began to exorcise

[s] Leuiathans answeres.

[t] He said this because hee was put to silence vpon the accusations against Lewes, for a season.

Lewes:

Lewes: and when Verrine profered him his assistance, and the meanes to doe it, the Capuchin father said, I haue to doe with thy master, Obmutesce maledicte. Ha Michaelis (quoth Verrine) God hath vnlooſed mee, and doeſt thou tie me vp? Then the Exorciſt ſaid againe vnto him, Obmutesce maledicte. But Verrine would not hold his peace, and turning him to Lewes hee ſaid, Whence ariſeth it that thou art not able to impoſe ſilence vpon the Diuels which are in the body of Louyſe, and yet haſt power to chaine vp thoſe that are in the body of Magdalene? As I am a Diuell I cannot know thy inward thoughts and apprehenſions, but as I am heere by Gods appointment, I doe eaſily diue into thy moſt reſerued cogitations.

The Acts of the 3. of Ianuary.

THis day in the morning (after that Lewes had been with father Michaelis in his chamber, and made ſemblance to weepe, although he played the hypocrite in all this) Magdalene being much tormented with the Exorciſme, Verrine began to ſpeake in this ſort:

Almighty God, why doeſt thou not ſend an Angell, or ſome famous Preacher to vnfould theſe myſteries, but doeſt thus make a ſeely woman the inſtrument of thy glory? but it is enrolled in thy eternall decrees, that thou wilt vtterly confound the damned Art of Magick, by the meanes of poore and diſ-reſpected creatures. Make me to change ſtates with the Magician, and I will aſſure thee that I will repent mee of my ſinnes: for if I might obtaine this grace at thy hands, I do not ſay that I will proſtrate my ſelfe onely at thy feet, but would alſo humble my ſelfe to the loweſt depth of the pit of Hell, and pray thus vnto thee: Good God, erect a ladder from the bottome of Hell, which may reach vnto the Heauens, and let all the ſteps bee framed of the ſharpeſt razors, and I will with all my heart paſſe vp and downe vpon the same, ascending and descending til the day of doome shall aproach: all which I would esteeme as easie as to tread on flowers and Roses, and should accept thereof as of a high and singular fauour. This Magician Lewes (O God) hath somtimes pronounced the words of consecration, and at other times not, he plaies the hypocrite and Pharisie, making iourneyes into Turkey and Flanders, to visit the Synagogues and assemblies of Satan. It is not for mee (good God) to finde fault with thy Maiesty, yet I wonder why thou wouldest permit such prodigious villanies to bee contriued and acted. Of a truth I see thou wilt shew hereby the vn-exhausted riches of thy bounty, as thou diddest in times past to Peter and Dauid. A wicked life and a good end doe seldome follow one the other: hee that will die well, must liue well.

[u] The Diuels exclamation and inuectiue againſt the obdurateneſſe of the Magician.

Then he said vnto S. Magdalene. Magdalene, thou haddest once thy body possessed by Diuels, but not after the manner that Magdalene heere is possessed. Thou wer't once a Courtizan, and wert amorously enclined to keepe company with proper and handsome men, but at the last thou diddest fall in loue with the fairest among the sonnes of men, as this Magdalene now doth.

x The hypocrisie of the Magician.

x Then Verrine said, Lewes vnto outward appearance seemeth to be a Saint, but inwardly he is full of all impiety: he pretendeth abstinence from flesh, yet doth he glut himselfe with the flesh of Infants.

Heere is to bee noted that Belzebub also witnessed the same at an Exorcisme: wherein it was demanded of him what the reason was, that during the space of nine or ten daies, that Lewes remained at S. Banme, taking his meales with the religious persons there, he euer left his meate vpon his trencher and would eate nothing: to which hee answered, sporting and gibing at him, Tush, hee little regardeth your pottage and egges, hee feedes vpon good flesh, the bodies of Infants, which are inuisibly sent vnto him from the synagogue.

Moreouer

y Moreouer Verrine said Louyse shall not liue long to enioy the glory and good of this action: for z shee shall die soone after the Church hath approued of these acts.

You aske to haue signes shewed vnto you of her possession: some would haue mee speake Greeke, others Spanish, and many aske questions of me in Latine; but I tell you this worke is very farre distant from the admittance of any curiosity. I haue foretold you many things already happened, as that Louyse should be examined, and Magdalene conuerted, and doe you yet with the Pharisies hunt after signes and wonders?

Then he said, all the conuentions of Sorcerers are in an vprore, and Hell it selfe is in confusion, seeing that the conuersion of their Prince Lewes Gaufridy is so closely pressed: they are more distracted then the Kingdome of France would bee, if her most Christian King should become a Sarazen, or then the Church would be, if the Pope should proue an Hereticke.

He further said, God will roote out this cursed race, and will fill vp the seates of the Angels that fell, because the day of iudgement is now at hand, and a Antichrist is already borne of a Iewish woman that was got with child by an Incubus. God will now prepare his souldiours for the field, and the Diuell his: Magicians shall be the forerunners and Prophets of Antichrist.

b This day about three of the clock in the afternoone the two Capuchin fathers departed to goe to Marseille, which iourney they vndertooke both by the aduice of father Michaelis, and of their owne voluntary desire, to informe themselues of the life and manners of Lewes Gaufridy, and to search his chamber and bookes, if peraduenture amongst them any schedules or characters of Magicke might there be found.

The same day in the euening whiles father Michaelis was exorcising, Belzebub cried out, see, see, the c witches, that are come to visit their Prince Lewes: to which y This is very obseruable, for he made repetition diuerse times of the same.

z The death of Louyse.

a Touching Antichrist, see the doubts after the Epistle to the Reader.

b Two Capuchin fathers go to Marseille.

c Witches are carried inuisibly.

which Verrine said, their Prince called for them, but God muzleth vp the wolfe that commeth to deuoure the sheepe. It is the dogs duty to obey his shepheard, and to barke and giue notice vnto him of the wolfes comming, and [d] thereupon he presently fell a barking like a dog, which hee did at sundry other times when the Magicians and witches came to S. Baume inuisibly. Then he said, will you not suffer mee to talke, who am an instrument in the discouery of these witches? And Belzebub being asked what they were that were lately come thither, and from whence they came, he answered I am bound to silence. Whereunto Verrine said, do not wonder that he speaketh not, it is by reason of your vnbeleefe; would you haue God come downe from heauen and leade you vp and downe by the hand. You haue the Prince of Magicke in your hands, will not this satisfie you? But you are so blind you will beleeue nothing. then he cried with a loud voice, Magicians & witches, God confound the whole rout of you: what seeke you heere in this Church? this is not a place for your cursed Synagogue: but I see your [e] proiect is to checke the Diuell and keepe him from speaking, and thou accursed Magician, the ringleader of this rabble; God confound thee thou stinking Goate. Then hee tooke his oath that the Diuels in Magdalene were bound, and could not speake, and that hee was free from the same, and therefore (said hee) you ought to listen vnto mee who am of a contrary faction vnto them. Vpon this hee was bid to discouer the ambushments of the Diuell: whereunto Verrine said, since you will needs haue mee to expresse and explaine vnto you what I formerly had said, listen vnto me. It is the pleasure of God, that all men know what I haue said this morning, and not the confessors of Louyse onely: for God will now make demonstration of his exceeding bounty. The truth is Magdalene is not throughly conuerted, but is perpetually vexed with the Incubi, who commit a thousand impurities

[d] Verrine barketh like a dogge.

[e] The superiour Diuels doe tye and binde vp those that are inferiour and in subordination vnto them, as amongst men the stronger bindeth him that is weaker, and maketh him to hold his peace. So amongst liuing creatures, one by the instinct of nature, doth master another.

purities with her. It is true [f] Michaelis that God will bee offended with thee, vnleſſe thou take ſome order that this be redreſſed: and doe not thinke that I ſpeake it for her behoofe, or for the ſake of her heere, whom I now poſſeſſe: for if ſhee bee not poſſeſſed, why doe you exorciſe her, were it not better to ſend her backe into the kitchen? She would be contented with ſuch a place, as ſhe was formerly before ſhe came hither. What think you, why doth not Magdalene harken now vnto mee: The reaſon is, becauſe I ſpeake the truth and ſhee is not yet throughly conuerted: ſhee obeyeth not her ſuperiours, and confeſſeth her ſins with niceneſſe and affectation like a Player. Magdalene you muſt not confeſſe them ſo, but you are to reueale them vnto the Prieſt with much penitency and compunction. Then Verrine was commanded to ſpeake lower; for he cried as loud as poſſibly the forces of a woman could giue aſſiſtance thereunto. Vnto which Verrine anſwered, when I ſpeak low you deſpiſe mee, and when I talke aloude you put me to ſilence. Sodome, neuer were ſuch abominations ſpoken by thee; nor in the time of the flood did there euer happen ſo ſtrange a fact as this is, yet were they drowned in the waters, and burned with the fire. Was it euer heard of before, that the Diuell ſhould come to reprehend ſinners? You know there is a [g] difference to haue a Diuell in the body, and to haue a Diuell in the ſoule, or to haue him in the body for the conſeruation of the ſoule. Afterward when ſome or other had told him that hee was to obey the Church as the ſpouſe of God, hee anſwered that this ſpouſe alſo was to humble her ſelfe before her husband. God goeth about to enlighten you with the brightneſſe of his grace, yet do you euer cry vnto me Verrine [h] obmuteſce. I tell you I will ſpeake, but it ſhall be for the glory of God. Did I euer bid you worſhip Verrine? no, I euer told you that I was a damned Diuell. If I haue ſpoken euill, reproue me of this euil; but good God (ſaid hee) command me

[f] We were yet in indifferency, and were at that time making inquiry after theſe things.

[g] The difference of Diuels.

[h] By this often reprouing of the Diuell they gaue intimation vnto him that they did not beleeue him.

me to speake Hebrew, or to doe some other prodigious and amazefull act, for these poore blind caitiffes are yet calling vpon me for a signe. But what did you Lord to those that asked a signe of you: you could haue giuen them signes from heauen which their curiosity did itch after, but you would not satisfie their brain-sicke fancies herein, because they wanted faith, which should be in men.

Michaelis, the young sucking Infants which they haue eaten, and others which they haue strangled, and digged vp from graues to make pies withall, cry loud for vengeance before God, for crimes so punishable, and full of execration. Yet are not these accursed Magicians contented, but will plucke God from his Throne: they worship a [i] Goate, and sacrifice vnto him euery day. What? Thinke ye not that God is exceedingly incensed by these audacious prouocations? At their tables and meales they vse no kniues, because they will not pare off their imperfections: they vse no salt, because they hate the vertue of wisedome, they haue no Oliues nor oyle, because they loue nothing but crudities and cruelties. In this very Baume doe they keepe their Sabbaths: in this very Baume doe they deuoure mans flesh: in this very Baume do they belch forth vnconceiueable blasphemies against the sacred Trinity, the Sacraments, the mother of God, and all the Saints in Paradise. Hath not God then iust occasion to bee incensed against them? The Turke with his vnbeleefe; the Iewes with their expectation of the Messias, the Heretickes with their adorations of the bastardly figments and conceptions of their owne braines, are not to bee held in such detestation as these Magicians heere: for they doe day by day renounce God, and there passeth not a minute wherein they crucifie him not. I do further affirme, that if this which hath been pronounced and published in S. Baume had been declared at Geneua, they would haue shaken off the chaines and fetters of their obstinacy:

[i] The adoration of a Goat in their Synagogues.

cy: yet doe the children of the Church keepe the Magician from mee, and will not suffer mee to speake vnto him. O Michaelis, the Magician is now in thy custodie, haue a curious and quick regard ouer him, for hee doth yet put Magdalene to shrewd plunges. After this Lewes was sent for from his chamber to come vnto the Church, and as he entred [k] Verrine did barke and bay wondrous like a dogg, and said, Meruaile not that I thus barke, for I see the woolfe. Then he spake to Lewes and said, thou art a Magician, thou art an execrable Sorcerer, I lay it heere before thee, that if thou be not speedily conuerted thou [l] shalt bee burned: and these two women heere must bee exorcised before the Parliament at Aix. If Lewes be not conuerted within eight dayes, I tell you heere before hand, and doe call to witnesse the blessed mother of God, the Seraphins, Martyrs, Virgins, Saints, and as many as be of you, that [m] he shall be deliuered vp into the hands of the gouernour of Marseille, and then let them speak whither Louyse were possessed or no.

[k] Verrine barketh against Lewes.

[l] The prediction that Lewes should bee burnt, and the two women exorcised at Aix, as it afterward happened.

[m] He was degraded by the Bishop of Marseille, who was also deputed a Commissary at the hearing of his cause.

Heere is to bee obserued, that the Capuchin fathers found not any thing in the chamber of Lewes that might any wayes concerne Magick, and this search displeased many at Marseille, and presently it was bruted abroad through all the citty, that father Michaelis was the author of all this.

You must further note, that the Magicians and Witches which came inuisibly into S. Baume left very vile and offensiue sauours behind them, and cast, now vpon one, and now vpon another certaine powders and oyles once vpon father Francis Billet, and twice vpon father Anthony Boilletot, who found himselfe benoynted ouer the lippes, and when hee asked Lewes what the meaning thereof might bee, hee onely laughed at the same. They also threw such kinde of stuff vpon sister Catherine, who was co-adiutour of the company of S. Vrsula, so that shee was a long time greeuously sick vpon vpon the same.

n The prediction of the execution & death of the Magician ratified by a solemne oath which prediction the Diuel gaue as a signe.

n Besides all this, Verrine tooke his oath on Gods behalfe, the Creator of heauen and earth, and on the behalfe of the blessed mother of God, and of Angels, Patriarches, Apostles, Martyrs, Doctors, Confessors, Virgins and Widowes, and on the behalfe of the whole Church triumphant and militant, and to the irreparable confusion of all hell, that except Lewes Gaufridy be conuerted he should be taken, bound, and burnt. And added, that if euer oath were in force and validity, it was this which he had taken: and therefore (said hee) doe not aske further for any signes, and so inuocated the wrath of God vpon himselfe if it were not true. He further said, that if he would be conuerted, there should no harme betide vnto him; but it was more probable that he should be punished.

The acts of the 4. of Ianuary.

o The difficulty which the fathers made of the truth hereof.

THis day, during the time of Masse which Louyse heard, Verrine cryed Lord, suffer me to speake Spanish or Greeke, for they o are euer demanding signes of me: or permit this Sub-Prior who is so ful of doubts and incredulity to be blinde of an eie, or this father who is a Capuchin to fall presently lame, or command fire from heauen, so they shall haue signes enough. Then he said, if you make a doubt of the wisedome and discretion of your God, you were best to helpe him with your aduice. They demand signes, and say, that whatsoeuer is done or spoken, proceedeth onely from Louyse, notwithstanding they suffer her to receaue the Communion, who hath so many times called for the wrath of God to fall vpon her. I would say thus, if she be not possessed (as some would haue it) she is worse then Lucifer, and deceaueth the Church of God by vnfoulding so many propositions that are wrapt vp in admiration and astonishment: as that Salomon is damned, and Anti-christ borne. Shee were worthy to bee taken and burnt, or that God should open the wombe of the earth to swallow her vp aliue, if shee should bee guilty of a practise so full of insolency and boldnesse. Then Verrine spake to Louyse and said.

christ

Poore wretch looke well to thy selfe, alas, who will defend thee? Thou art but a simple woman, and doest put thy selfe in hazard of thy life, if thou say that thou hast in all these discourses spoken no heresie. But I tell you that there was neuer seene a thing like vnto this which you now behold. What saiest thou Louyse? speakest thou nothing? Thou must bee apprehended and burnt in steed of the Magician. O miserable blindnesse! it is no wonder if hereticks beleeue not, since you your selues after my relations of so many admirable things, and after the booke which is already written, doe thus stagger in your beleefe? Michaelis thou knowest well whither Louyse spake this or no, for thou art priuy to all her confessions.

Then he said, take heed good Christians, for euery one that thinketh himselfe to bee in the bosome of the Church shall not be saued, neither shall all those that be in religious orders enter into the kingdome of heauen: and added, I protest before thee, O Lord, that I haue faithfully discharged thy commission. See you not that Belzebub is contrary vnto mee, and I to him? Come, come, accursed P Magician, thou wilt be said to be innocent, and then shall they suffer thee to depart.

P The prediction that the Magician should be enlarged vpon supposition of his innocence: which was verified the 14. & 15. of Ianuary.

The acts of the 5. of Ianuary.

VPpon this day was Magdalene exorcised by the Dominican father, whereupon q there went out of the body of Magdalene two and twenty Diuels, being commanded thereunto by the Prince that was within: yet so as they were to returne thither againe after a certaine space. And in their issuing forth one after the other q These departures were very sensible, as well by the blast which brake forth frō her mouth as by their names which in their issuing forth they gaue themselues.

ther, they made a ruſling and noyſe, euery one calling himſelfe by his owne name, as Agrotier, Perdiguier, and ſo of the reſt as they are afterward ſet down in the following acts of the moneth of Ianuary. Then Aſtaroth ſaid in the latine tongue that Belzebub, Leuiathan and Carreau, were entred into the body of Lewes, ſaying: Belzebub eſt in intellectu, Leuiathan in voluntate, Carreau in corde.

The acts of the 6. of Ianuary.

VPon this day was Magdalene exorciſed by father Paul Prieſt of the Chriſtian doctrine: whereupon Belzebub ſaid, as long as Magicians are partizans with vs, we doe neuer vſe to poſſeſſe them, at the leaſt not viſibly, but [r] when they begin to apoſtate from vs and relinquiſh our Synagogue, then we do begin to torment them, and if I had leaue to tyrannize vpon the body of Magdalen, and to let out my rage againſt her at the ful, I would handle her in ſuch an impetuous manner, that ſhe ſhould neuer depart from hence with her life. And when hee was bid to point forth the Magician that had bewitched Magdalene, he anſwered, he is not far from hence: and added, I am bound.

[r] Magicians are not poſſeſſed.

After dinner was Louyſe exorciſed by father Francis Domptius the Dominican: whereupon Verrine ſaid, you will not yet beleeue, but at the end and Cataſtrophe of this hiſtory, which is not yet perfected, you will giue credence thereunto: God hath reſerued to himſelfe an illuſtrious manner of working, by which in concluſion he will get the vpper hand. They are to [f] goe to Marſeille & to Auignon before the Vicelegate, & there it ſhall be ſeene whether the witch-craft of Louyſe bee imaginary onely, and builded vpon a coniecturall conceite (as it was giuen out at S. Baume) and whether the ſcope whereunto ſhee doth addreſſe her actions, bee ambition or no. The ſchedules alſo muſt be reſtored, other-otherwise these two cannot be freed. Then one of the company said, thou art not to presse that too farre: whereunto Verrine suddenly replyed without being questioned thereof, call to minde the miracle of Theophilus and [t] Basill, it could not indeed stand with expediency to presse this, if no man should haue notice where they were, but it is well knowne where these are, and in whose custody they lye. I tell you God is now more angry then hee was in the time of the Niniuites, for the aire is infected with their malice, and the earth can no longer bury in silence the death of so many children which they haue deuoured: they please their appetites with the relish of this delicate flesh which doth cost them nothing.

[f] This is to be ſeene.

[t] There were schedules rendered to Theophilus the Magician, and to S. Basil for an other Magician, as is set downe at large in their liues.

The same day in the euening was Magdalene exorcised by Mr. Paule, whereupon Belzebub being demanded whither the Diuell did torment Magicians or no? He made answere that they did not, except when they were conuerted, or when they were in the way to conuersion: but whensoeuer such conuersions should happen, they might well bee filed in the lyst and catalogue of Myracles. There be an hundred and an hundred that are dead, and yet but one onely Parisian that in visiting of Lazarus was conuerted, and three dayes after hee dyed. And being asked touching the witch-craft of Louyse, hee answered, that it was two yeares since shee had these charmes vpon her, and that shee had on her body inchantments, markes, ligatures and oyntments.

The acts of the 7. of Ianuary.

THis day before the Communion Verrine played many prankes full of resistance and insolency, saying, Louyse, thou art lunatick as they report of thee: thou art foolish, thou doest counterfait and vse much iugling: doest thou think to put a trick vpon the whole world? Then he added, what, doe madd women receaue the Communion? Then he spake to father Michaelis, and said, Michaelis command mee, [u] for I am as much tyed to obedience vnto thee, as is Louyse.

[u] Being in a Church of his iurisdiction.

[x] The same day Verrine disputed with God, as was collected by his speaches saying, Great God, they are not content to heare thy Ambassage from me, send vnto them a blessed Angell: bid Gabriel, Raphael, or Michael, or else Rasael, who was Adams good Angell, to goe in this errand, that they may bring back and conuert this third Adam. God answered him, I will not send my Angels, for if hee whom I should send should speake vnto them in an inuisible forme, they would say that he were a Diuell: if in a humane and visible shape they would cauil that he were a man. Then said Verrine, send vnto them the mother of thy Sonne: God answered, that this mission would not bee auaileable, no not if I should send my Sonne againe amongst them, for if he should come downe from heauen visibly, they would againe crucifie him. Whereunto Verrine answered, send then vnto them some famous preacher. God replyed, No, it is my will that this imployment should be vndertaken by thee. Lord, said Verrine, they will not beleeue mee, but doe euer aske for signes. God answered, leaue that to me, I will prouide them signes sufficient to create a beleefe in them.

[x] Verrines complaint vnto God.

Then Verrine applying his speach vnto the time, which was the day of the Kings, said to those that were present. Euery one must make enquiry after the childe Iesus in the company of the three Kings, who represent vnto you your three faculties: for the memory offereth the mirrh of contrition by calling your sinnes vnto remembrance: the vnderstanding presenteth incense by contemplating and thinking vpon the blessings of God: and the will giueth the gold of charity, but the starre of faith must guide you and goe before you, for good workes without faith, are barren and vneffectuall.

Heere

Here is to bee obſerued, that all the time that Lewes Gaufridy remained at S. Baume, which was nine or ten daies, they read certaine chapters of the Bible while they ſate at dinner and ſupper, according to the cuſtome of the Order of Preaching Friers, and by meere chance lighted vpon the [y] Prophecie of Ezechiel, where the chapters that were read for the ſpace of nine or tenne daies (being a thing chanceſull and not premeditated) did all point out the conuerſion of a ſinner, and laid downe the threatnings againſt thoſe that ſhould be obſtinate, and the mercy vnto thoſe that ſhould proue penitent, to ſo good purpoſe, and ſo expreſſed to the life that we were all amazed at the ſame, and thought of no other thing while we ſate at meate. Notwithſtanding this, and all other exhortations, which ſomtimes one father, and ſomtimes another gaue vnto the ſaid Lewes; yet were they not of any force to mollifie and ſoften him, the chapters that were read were continued from the 18. to the 40.

[y] The prophecie of Ezechiel accidentally lighted on and read.

The Acts of the 8. of Ianuary.

THis day Lewes Gaufridy after dinner departed from S. Baume to returne to Marſeille: the [z] Biſhop of which place had ſent foure of his Canons to ſeeke him out, who came to S. Baume vpon Friday being the ſeuenth of that moneth, in the euening. Then Belzebub triumphed, thinking that hee had gained the better of the cauſe, becauſe the Magician was ſuffered to depart as innocent, and the precedent Acts were in a manner condemned, ſo that Verrine for a ſeaſon was put to ſilence: and euery one expected to ſee the cenſure which father Michaelis, and the fathers that were with him would paſſe vpon this fact, that they might enforme the Court of Parliament at Aix of the truth thereof, as Monſieur du Vair the firſt Preſident, and the reſt of the Councell did deſire: ſo that father Demptius the Dominican and Exorciſt in the time of Aduent was commanded to ſurrender all the papers which hee had written; which he denied to do, conceiuing that father Michaelis would either teare or burne thē, in ſo much asthey were cōſtrained to force open his chamber dore, to get into their hands all the Acts that were paſt euen to this day, [a] and all for the ſtricter examination of the cauſe. The ſaid father being thus incenſed was commanded to his chamber for certaine houres, and was afterwards prouoked by the mockes and taunts of ſome of the ſaid fathers, who made a ieſt of that which hee had written, and told him that there was nothing contained in thoſe writings but fables and falſhoods. They alſo were euer contradicting him in many particulars, and hoped by ſome tricke and deuice of theirs to cauſe the ſaid Acts to be aboliſhed in the Synod of the Right Reuerend father the Biſhop of Marſeille, and in the meane time to giue it out, that all was meere gullery and cheating: but this deuiſe of theirs tooke not, as ſhall appeare hereafter, although that Lewes, together with ſome that were dealt withall by thoſe aboue named, did not long after goe to [b] Auignon, and to Aix, to declare and make intimation of his innocency, affirming that the whole body of this fact was meerely practiſe and foolery.

[z] Theſe Canons did alleage that Lewes was a Prieſt appertaining to the Dioceſſe of the Biſhop of Marſeille; to whom we anſwered, that hee was come thither not vpon command but by aduice.

The ſame day the ſaid father Domptius went to Auignon, although hee gaue out that hee would goe to Marſeille with the fathers aforeſaid, that hee might from thence returne to his countrey of Flanders; where being come, he communicated all this buſineſſe with the Reuerend father the Chaplaine vnto the moſt Reuerend the Archbiſhop of Auignon: where all his allegations and reaſons which he could enforce for the cleering vp of the truth of theſe acts, were heard at large, but they remitted him to [c] father Michaelis inquiſitor of the faith in all the Legateſhip of Auignon, being willing to put off from themſelues the proſecution and examination

[a] Inquiſition into the verity of the writings.

[b] Lewes the Magician went away to Auignon with ſome others to make declaration of his innocency, but he was remitted backe againe.

[c] Father Domptius ſent backe vnto his ſuperiour.

examination of this busines. Whereupon father Domptius returned to Aix, and entred into the same communication which Monsieur Garandeau Vicar generall to the most Reuerend the Archbishop of Aix, and afterward deputed for a commissary in the cause of Lewes the Magician, as Monsieur Thoron the counsellor also was; but the said Monsieur Garandeau sent him backe to father Michaelis as belonging vnto him who was his Superiour, and vnto whom he was bound to render all obedience. Then the said father Domptius the Exorcist returned to S. Baume, and humbly submitted himselfe to whatsoeuer should bee determined by the said father Michaelis, as Inquisitor of the faith and his superiour.

All these Acts being throughly examined, and the two women found to bee possessed, the Court was then certified of the whole; and father Michaelis contrary to the opinion of many men gaue backe the Acts vnto father Domptius to dispose them into order and method against the end of the moneth of Ianuary. Yet was there prosecution made of the same for the more ample verification of these things from the eleuenth of the said moneth vntill about the end of April, as shall afterward appeare.

The end of the first part.

THE ACTS THAT WERE COLLECTED AND DISGESTED INTO ORDER BY FAther Michaelis Priour of the Couent Royall of S. Maximin, and of S. Baume; who came thither after Christmas, in the yeere 1611. Returning from Preaching his Aduent Sermons in the towne of Aix in Prouince.

The Acts of the 11. of Ianuary. 1611.

AFter wee had read the Acts that were formerly taken by father Francis Domptius, and were verified by many eye-witnesses, men fearing God, and worthy to bee beleeued, who had euer been in presence and had an eye vpon the two women that were possessed: wee then proceeded vnto the Exorcismes and continuation of administring the Sacrament, and for the more ample verification of possession by wicked spirits, we narrowly sifted and pryed into the words and gestures which they vsed. Vpon the eleuenth day of Ianuary after Masse was said, Magdalene was exorcised, and Belzebub being charged to come forth, answered: Vpon the day of the exaltation of the holy Crosse last past, at the Exorcisme performed at Aix in the Chapell of the doctrine ctrine, thou holding the bleſſed Sacrament in thy hand (ſpeaking to father [d] Francis Billet who did Exorciſe) by vertue of the ſame, and by the power of the holy Croſſe, as alſo by the Virgine Maries interpoſing her ſelfe by her entreaties, there iſſued forth out of this body 6660 Diuels, very priuately and without noyſe, who are not returned backe vnto this place, ſo that now there are of vs ſtill remaining ſeuen Princes, and 100. inferiour Diuels within and without. And being asked when and how theſe Diuels came out of her, he would anſwere nothing thereunto, but onely that they iſſued forth by the powerfull prayers of Mary, Magdalene, Dominicke, and Francis. Whileſt the Exorciſmes were pronouncing, he drew backe and was euer flying away, in ſo much that Magdalene was faine to bee ſtopt and held faſt by maine force.

At the ſecond Exorciſme in the euening, Belzebub made anſwere vnto nothing, onely hee ſeemed ſad and compoſed the face of Magdalene to melancholineſſe. Whereupon Verrine ſaid, Belzebub, I gueſſe at the cauſe of thy ſadneſſe, it is becauſe there are foure Magicians with many others as well men as women at Marſeille, at Aix & elſe where, in the high way to cõuerſion. Then the Exorciſt admoniſhed Magdalene to renounce the Diuell, & all the ſchedules which ſhe had made vnto him, which ſhe did in very ample maner, ſaying: I Magdalene of Demandoul do renounce [e] Lucifer, Belzebub, Leuiathan, Aſmodee, Balberith, Aſtaroth, Carreau, and all the Diuels of hell, together with all thoſe that liue in the ayre, in the water, & in the earth: and all thoſe which are in ſy bodies of ſuch as are poſſeſſed. I do alſo renounce all the ſchedules which I haue made vnto them, and do proſtrate my ſelfe at the feet of my Redeemer Chriſt Ieſus, putting my ſelfe vnder his protection, and humbly crauing pardon for my enormous tranſgreſſions: and for the better attainement hereof, I doe implore the [f] aide of the glorious mother of God, Queene of all

[d] This was a Prieſt of the Doctrine, Confeſſor in ordinary to the ſiſters of S. Vrſula and particularly to Magdalene ſince her poſſeſſion: A man godly and learned, and at this preſent Superiour in the houſe of the Prieſts of the Doctrine in the city of Aix in Prouince, who did Exorciſe Magdalene in his Church.

[e] She named all the wicked ſpirits in their order as readily as any one could reade them in a booke.

[f] This was her vſuall prayer when ſhe was among the ſiſters of her Order which ſhe ſaid by heart.

the Angels of S Michal, and the Angels of Ioseph, and all the Patriarches, of S. Peter, and all the Apostles and Euangelists, of S. Stephen and all the Martyrs, of S. Gregory and all the Doctors, of S. Martin and all Bishops and Confessors, of S. Anthony and all Monkes and Hermites, of S. Dominicke, and S. Francis, and all Friers, of S. Vrsula and all virgins, of S. Monica, and all widowes, of the glorious S. Magdalene and all penitent sinners; promising vnto God by the assistance of his grace, neuer to adhere more or to giue my consent vnto the Diuell. § Whilest shee made these renunciations, Belzebub did tosse and wreath her body after a strange manner, the agitation whereof was such, that it made her tremble ouer all her body: neuertheless she did resoluedly continue on her abiuration although her voice trembled by reason of this extraordinary shaking. Then Verrine by the mouth of Louyse said, Belzebub, thou hast now good cause to bee sad; for Magdalene hath from her heart renounced thee and all the rest of vs.

§ Belzebub strangely shaketh Magdalene.

The Acts of the 13. of Ianuary being the day of the octaue of Epiphany, 1611. for vpon the day before, which was the 12. Belzebub spake nothing, Verrine telling vs that he was bound by the Magician.

THe 13. day about seauen a clocke at night, when Belzebub was pressed and vrged to speake, at the beginning of the Exorcismes, he tooke Magdalene by the throate as if he would haue strangled her. And this endured a long time, vntill hee was commanded to get him downe and to leaue her.

After the Exorcisme, Magdalene being retired vnto her chamber, and all of vs keeping her company (because it was not yet time to withdraw our selues,) Belzebub, by the toung of Magdalene, as being now vn-

looſed

looſed, (for he had bin tyed onely during the time of Exorciſme) ſaid that he would now ſpeake. [h] I my ſelfe (ſaid he) am he that tempted Adam, and [i] Aſmodee taking on him the face of a hanſome woman, did with ſweete and ſugered ſpeeches ſteale into Eue by his temptations, and perceauing that ſhe began to fluctuate, and was yet but a Nouice in the world, he was incouraged to inforce and double his temptations and ſo at length remained victorious. I am he (ſaid Belzebub) that tempted Chriſt Ieſus in the wilderneſſe with the two firſt temptations: at the third which was the ſtrongeſt to witt, to cauſe him to fall downe and worſhip me, I tooke Leuiathan for my coadiutor, but not being able to gaine vpon him, we had a ſtrong coniecture and ſuſpition that he was the Meſſias, whereas before wee onely eſteemed of him as of a great and perfect Prophet, for although ſome called him Chriſt, yet did they ſpeake it either doubtfully, or flatteringly. But we began to doubt no longer of him when he once prayed for his enemies, after they had at my inſtigation (ſaid Belzebub) ſo blaſphemouſly reuiled him, whom alſo I animated, to caſt him downe headlong vpon the ſtones as a blaſphemer. I was on the right ſide of the Croſſe, Aſmodee at the foote, and Leuiathan on the left ſide, but he ouercame vs all. [k] Leuiathan is the Prince of Hereticks, Aſmodee of wantons, and I (ſaid Belzebub) am the Prince of pride, yet did he ouercome thoſe three mighty aduerſaries, the world, the fleſh, and pride. They faſtned the Croſſe with cords, and in ſetting it vp in the hole which was forced into the rocke, by the ſhaking and ſhogging of the ſame they opened againe all his wounds, he was nayled with [l] three long nayles, hauing one foote nayled ouer the other to augment the greatnes of his torment: and in crucifying him they turned the Croſſe and his face towards the earth, to fitt and faſten the nayles on the other ſide. This Croſſe (ſaid he) was very high, of the height of the Croſſe which [h] This was ſaid after the Exorciſmes were paſt.

[i] Belzebub vaunteth that he had tempted Adam, and Chriſt Ieſus.

[k] The diſtinct places, and Office of Diuels.

[l] Some Doctors are of opinion, that he was faſtned with foure nailes.

which you haue below at the comming in vnto Saint Baume, if you adde the height of a foote thereunto, and was two foote broader then that. The forme of this Croſſe was not made in the manner of a [T] but it had a beame of wood aboue, and the Iewes turning the Croſſe downe on the other end did hoiſe vp his leggs aboue his belly.

Of a truth (ſaid he) your God hath ſuffered more for you then you imagine. After hee was dead, hee viſited the fathers in Lymbo, and all hell trembled at his arriuall. Adam and Eue were the firſt that preſented themſelues vnto him, who came with great contrition, and hartely prayed him to pardon their ſinnes that had occaſioned thoſe manifold torments which he ſuffered. He deliuered, like a great King, all the ſoules aſwell of thoſe that were in Lymbo, as of thoſe that were in [m]Purgatory, but the bodies which he had raiſed did vpon this deliuerance dye againe. When Belzebub had ſaid this, vpon the ſudden hee blew out the candle which ſtood on the table, whereat we were ſomewhat abaſhed, for it was night: and crying with a loude voice, he ſaid, Lodouice veni, veni, for the Magician was indeed come, as Magdalene who ſawe him when he came, recited vnto vs. And Belzebub ſaid to Magdalene, thou haſt not ſeene him ſince he hid himſelfe behind the bed, when thou wouldeſt haue done him ſome outrage, but he went away as he entred in, and was carried from hence through the chimney.

After this we went to the Church to ſay Matines as our maner is, which being ended, father Romillon aduertiſed vs that Belzebub played ſtrange horſe-play in the chamber, and would not ſuffer Magdalene to confeſſe her ſelfe, nor to kneele vpon the Earth. Then father Michaelis flung towards her chamber, and there did threaten him that he ſhould bee brought into the houſe of holy penance, and cauſing it to bee done accordingly Belzebub cryed, that he would rather bee there there all night long, then suffer her to bee confessed. Yet at the presence of the blessed Sacrament which was shewed vnto him, and by the holinesse of the place, hee was so dispirited and his forces so farre spent, that shee confessed her selfe in that very place to father Michaelis with great contrition and deuotion to the singular comfort of her soule: and performed diuers actions of humility and submission to all those that were there present, especially to father Romillon whom shee had resisted in her chamber, and so remained reposedly, and in good quiet that night till about an hower after midnight: at which time Lewes the Magician came againe vnto her as she afterward auowed, and cast a caracter vpon her head to trouble her imagination, memory, and other faculties of her soule, that they might stand her in no steed against him in the accusations of the crimes wherewith he was burthened.

[m] Some ſchoole men do hold, that he did not deliuer all the ſoules that were in Purgatory, but all thoſe that were in Lymbo, otherwiſe called Abrahams boſome.

The Acts of the 14. of Ianuary. 1611.

THis morning at the Exorcismes, Belzebub made all the body of Magdalene to swell, and caused her [n] visage to bee exceeding red, so that shee cast about strange and diabolicall lookes, hauing her eyes sparkling and fiery, her lippes open, her necke swollen like a toade: sometimes hee was ready to strangle her, and sometimes tumbled her on the ground, sometimes hee made her laugh, and sometimes he made her cry. Being exorcised, and asked wherefore the night before, when Magdalene was brought to the holy Penitence he cried and repeated it diuers times, that she was not to haue absolution after her confession, because shee had committed a sacriledge, he would not make answere thereunto vntill his paines were augmented by a new coniuration. And then hee answered, that hee had said it to make her fall into despaire, by suggesting this scruple vnto her, that he had caused her to enter hastily into the holy holy penitence, ſo that ſhe forgot to put off her ſhooes as the maner is.

[n] The horrible gestures of Belzebub in the body of Magdalene.

After this Verrine ſpeaking by the mouth of Louyſe, ſaid: the laſt Euening, when at the time of Exorciſmes you heard a great cry aboue o vpon the Church, it was a great number of Magicians that came thither, ſome becauſe they beleeued not that Magdalene was conuerted, others to liſten what was ſaid, others to ſpread abroad their charmes and ſo to deceiue her, others to ſee a thing ſo worthy of admiration, that Verrine an inferiour Deuill ſhould braue Belzebub who was his ſuperiour. Then Verrine began to barke like a hunting dogg, ſaying: that the Wolues were come againe, thereby meaning the Magicians whom hee ſaw carried thither by the Deuils.

o Great cries heard on the top of the Church.

Then ſaid Verrine, The world is turned vpſide downe, for the Deuils do now labour to preſerue men, and to pleade for them as their Aduocates and Proctors: ſo that it is now no wonder, if God, the Angels, and the Saints do ſuccour and giue aſſiſtance vnto them: And added, that this was like the time of Antichriſt, when Nations ſhould riſe againſt Nations, ſo do now the Deuils bandy themſelues againſt Deuils.

Then he inueighed againſt Magicians & reprehended them for their great folly to combine and oppoſe themſelues againſt God: Then he turned to Belzebub and ſaid: I am not ignorant that thou Belzebub with thy companions haue determined to torment and beate me greeuouſly when I am once departed out of this body, but I regard it not as long as I do my duety, and for the time to come, let it hap as hap will. But ſee my braue Princes, the Princes of P Tharaſques (for ſo he called the Sorcerers) you haue now no more force then a flie, or a piſmire, although you were of the Seraphins and my ſelfe but of the Thrones, and thou Belzebub wert faine to intreate me to ſide with thee, or at the leaſt that I would giue thee my two companions Greſill, and Son-

P Tharaſque was a monſtrous Dragon that deuoured men in Tharaſcon in Prouince.

nettlon

neillon to aide thee, in ſoliciting the Magicians to hold out, but I refuſed thee, for I heere take part with God.

At the ſecond Exorciſme at Euening Aſmodee by the commandement of Belzebub (who was the cheefe in her body) did ſhake and tumble Magdalene after a q beaſtly and odious manner, that hee might ſhame her, and ſo bring her backe vnto him, by perſwading her to auoide the ſhame and imputation of theſe things which were done in the ſight and preſence of men. And he continued theſe courſes aboue 15. daies, ſo that in concluſion Magdalene vtterly refuſed to go to Exorciſmes, when there were any ſtrangers by. In the meane time Verrine reproched Belzebub, that hee was now driuen to his laſt ſhiftes, and that the Magicians and Witches did nothing but runne in and out, to hinder the working of God: which yet they were very vnable to bring to paſſe.

Then he ſaid, there are at Marſeille, and elſewhere, many perſons of good ranke and place, that go to Maſſe, and do neuertheleſſe traficke with the Deuill: yet if they will be conuerted, God is not deſirous they ſhould be puniſhed or burnt, and doth therefore force the Deuils to carry them heere to S. Eaume, that they might heere vnderſtand our diſcourſes: And then hee added. O r you that are come from Marſeille (we ſilence your names for your credits ſake) to bring backe the Magician, and to giue out that hee is a holy and innocent man, retire your ſelues, retire your ſelues you ſhall ſee the end. The ſilke-worme doth but now begin to weaue the materials, but the tapiſtry that muſt bee made thereof, is not yet finiſhed.

q The filthy geſtures cauſed by Aſmodee.

r Six Knights came from Marſeille to lead with them the Magician, whom they fauoured and gaue countenance vnto, as their ſpeciall friend.

The Acts of the 15. and 16. of Ianuary, being Saturday and Sunday.

VPon the Saturday, which was the day wherein the friends and fauourers of Lewes, did lead him to Marseille that hee might there iustifie and cleere himselfe, all was in an vprore at Saint Baume. Verrine did nothing but cry as loud as Louyses forces would permit, that the Prince of Magicians was like to bee declared guiltlesse: saying, O my Lord of Marseille, why haue you licensed these men to carry Lewes away with them? you do not rightly vnderstand the businesse, but do offend through ignorance. There were also many men on this day tempted to distemperatnesse, and much impatiency, for the Deuill had been sowing his tares amongst those that were at S. Baume, although through the prouidence and grace of God, they were quickly choaked.

The Sunday morning, Belzebub spake not, except when the Exorcist did reckon vp all the parts and members of her that was possessed, saying, A capite, a collo, ab oculiis, a naribus, ab arteriys, a pulmone, a spatulis, a corde, &c.

Whereupon Belzebub said (expressing a sensible gesture in euery part of the body, iust when it came to bee named, as stamping with the feete, when they were named, and lifting vp the knees, when they were pronounced, and so of the rest) There are charmes in euery part of her, he that wanteth any, let him come to Palud, for shee hath them in abundance.

At the same Exorcisme Verrine cryed, and tooke on very terribly, when the Exorcist set his hand on Louyses head, saying, take of this hand (which hee repeated diuers times) you should torture rebels, such as Belzebub is, and not mee. And added, I onely am tormented, and not my two companions Gresill and Sonneillon.

Being

Being exorciſed, and adiured, to ſpeake, why he was tormented, he ſaid, that the laſt night he was exceedingly importuned by Lucifer, to take his part, which hee ſ had promiſed to do. He had alſo tempted Louyſe to pray no more for Magdalene, and had made her fall into a mortall ſinne by procuring her conſent; hee alſo had made Louyſe to ſay, that one of the fathers was a proud fellow: and ſhee had deceiued her Confeſſour, with a confeſſion which himſelfe counterfeited, and was not made by Louyſe: for all which delinquencies (ſaid hee) Dominicke my aduerſary hath procured from God, that I ſhould receiue due chaſtiſement.

ſ Out of his commiſſion we might eaſily conceaue him to bee a true Deuill, when hee was left to his owne nature; the iudgement of God permitting this to happen, leaſt otherwiſe men might miſtake, and beleeue him to be no Deuil.

Being commanded by Exorciſmes to ſweare as aboueſaid, hee anſwered, with all my heart, I will take mine oath, for Dominicke hath alſo obtained this fauour from God. Then the Exorciſt commanded him to put both his hands vpon the words of the conſecration of the Chalice, and preſented vnto him the Canon of the Maſſe in folio. Louyſe who was altogether vnlearned, did neuertheleſſe put both her hands vpon the ſaid wordes. Then did the Exorciſt command him againe to put them vpon the ſecond prayer, which the Preiſt had ſaid before the Communion, which he accordingly did, and withall added, what art thou yet ſatisfied? and ſo beginning his oath he ſaid.

I ſweare vnto thee by the power of the Father, by the wiſedome of the Sonne, and by the goodneſſe of the holy Ghoſt, according to the intention of the Church triumphant & militant, and according to thy meaning, and the meaning of all theſe heere, without reſeruation of any ſiniſter intention whatſoeuer, that what I haue now ſaid is true, to witt, &c. repeating that which hee had before deliuered.

The ſame day at the Euening Exorciſmes Belzebub did ſhake Magdalene, as hee was accuſtomed, alwaies drawing backe her head, when the Exorciſt would make the ſigne of the Croſſe; and ſnatching the booke of of Exorcismes out of the Exorcists hands, he threw it to the ground, and cryed, get you gone, and open the doore for Romillon, for he would come in; which indeed they found to be true.

[t] They try the Deuils, whether they would contradict themselues.

[t] Being asked, which of them two was the greater and of most authority, himselfe or Verrine, hee answered, It is a friuolous question, and sauoureth of nothing but of impertinency, and is not worth an answere.

When the Exorcist was naming all the parts of her body, as is already declared, mentioning the reines, the Deuill did strangely shake and stirre the same, saying: That the day before Blanche a Witche of Marseille, had laide a charme made of golde and siluer, and other ingredients, vpon Magdalens reines, and had cast another through a trunke vpon her eyes, that vpon whomsoeuer Magdalene should looke, he should appeare to her to be the Magician Lewes. [u] And Magdalen being at her good times questioned vpon the same, confessed, that it was the greatest torment vnto her that could be, to haue that obiect and apparition of Lewes euer before her eyes, when any one came in her sight, although it were her Confessour, or the Priest at Masse. But this charme wrought not on her aboue 8. dayes, through the assistance of God and by the efficacy of her frequent receiuing of the Communion, which they ministred vnto her euery day: for this is the soueraigne remedy to scape, or to take away the force of charmes, as the Deuils themselues in the vertue of Exorcismes would not sticke to confesse: and did further affirme, that the Priests which did celebrate the Communion euery day, could not be charmed.

[u] Charmes cast into the eyes of Magdalene. Saint Clement in his recognitions reciteth the like of his mother, who thought, that she had euer Simon Magus before her eyes.

The same day Verrine said, [x] wee vnderstand and know God better then you, but in loue vnto him, I must confesse you do out-strippe vs; but if you knew God as well as wee, you would be fond of him. We tempt euery body, and albeit they thereby fall into mortall sinne, yet are not wee punished for the same, if we exceed not [x] The difference of the knowledge of God.

our

our limits, or the expresse commandement of God, intimated vnto vs by his Angels; because it is in their owne choice whether they will sinne, or no; but we are sure to pay for it, when we are the cause that they are exorcised, and stirre vp rebellion in them: [y] and these paines are accidentall, and do indure but for a season, as for an hower, or a day, &c.

[y] The accidentall paines of the Deuils.

Being asked, whether hee had borne the name of Verrine from the beginning, he [z] answered that the Deuils haue no names, for they know one another perfectly well, but they then take a name vpon them, when they enter into a body; and it is for distinctions sake: they do also change their names as they please, when as they enter into other bodies. To conclude (said hee) I am a spirit of the aire, and therefore lesse malicious then those that are lower in hell: the most malicious of vs all is Lucifer, who although hee be [a] chained vp in hell, yet hath he aduertisements from all the quarters of the Earth, and commandeth and giueth directions vnto others.

[z] From whence the names of Deuils haue their originall. Tertullian saith, Ibi nomen, vbi pignus.

[a] Lucifer chained vp in hell.

Being demanded, how Lucifer could vnderstand all the occurences of things if he bee thus chained vp, hee began to laugh, and said, you are deuoid of sense, and ordinary apprehension: doth not a King that abideth in his Palace, know whatsoeuer passeth in his kingdome, by meanes of Ambassadors, messengers, and Postes? So the Deuils go to hell, (for they are there very speedily) and take instructions from Lucifer, who is more knowing, and of greater command then them all.

The Acts of the 17. of Ianuary, which was Munday, being the Feast of S. Anthony.

WHiles Masse was saying, there grew a great contestation betweene Belzebub, and Verrine, Belzebub did intellectually and by an intrinsicke conference with Verrine, make impression in his vnder-standing to desire him to go with his associates to Marseille, and to lend him his helping hand to harden the Magicians and Witches, that were now at a stand, and very shreudly shaken in their former resolutions, because their Prince was detected and named. Vnto whom Verrine audibly made answere, that hee would not go; saying, that hee had sworne allegeance vnto God, and did not therefore feare the paines which they threatned him withall: that hee might go thither himselfe, if hee had any fancy thereunto: and that since hee would needs boast his greatnesse and command, hee should do well to try his forces. But as for mee, and my companions (said hee) God hath hired vs yesterday morning, as a man will hire a labouring man to dresse and trimme his Vineyard: so that thou commest to late to hire vs to thy seruice: thou wert lazy and diddest slip thy time, I do not meane to worke at thy request: for when I haue industriously wrought for thee, what reward canst thou giue me but the paines of hell? thou hast no other thing to bestow. But [b]God hath promised vnto me [b] an asswagement and lessening of my paines, and therefore I will labour for him in this businesse: tempt not mee nor my companions any more. O what braue Princes you are, that do neither defend nor gouerne your people any better! It is very obseruable, that Verrine being the night before tempted in the same nature, tooke on, and plained himselfe like a child, saying: They will force me to go to Marseille to strengthen the Magician, God will punish mee, if I do it. And after some distances he would often repeate these words, no, no: so that it seemed, that God had restored some part of his [c] former force to Belzebub, that hee might labour Verrine, and almost constraine him to his pleasure: and he did once in a manner consent vnto him (as wee haue formerly obserued) for the which he was well beaten.

After Masse Belzebub, being departed from the body of Magdalene, as it seemed to go to Marseille for the aboue [b] See the Apology vnto the 10. doubt after the Epistle to the Reader.

[c] God bindeth and vnbindeth the Deuils, how and when it pleaseth him: yet he doth this but at times, permitting them sometimes to do whatsoeuer their naturall power can accomplish; at other times he weakneth this power of theirs, as seemeth good vnto him. Examples heereof are in the 1. of Iob in the 7. and 20. of the Apocalypse, and elsewhere.

aboue named purpoſes, the Exorciſt demanded, which of the Deuils did then beare ſway in her body. One of them anſwered, that it was Balberith. And being aſked of what order he was, he made very dainty to vtter it, yet at laſt he ſpake theſe words. I am conſtrained by God vpon the interceſſions of the Virgin Mary, of Magdalene, of Michael, and of Francis, to declare this, and other things of the like nature vnto you.

1. Belzebub was Prince of the Seraphins, and next vnto Lucifer: for all the Princes, that is to ſay all the cheefe of the nine quiers of Angels are fallen, and of the quire of Seraphins there fell the three firſt, to witt, Lucifer, Belzebub, and Leuiathan, who did all reuolt, but the fourth who was Michael, was the firſt that reſiſted Lucifer, and all the reſt of thoſe good Angels followed him: ſo [d] that now hee is the cheefeſt amongſt them all. Lucifer when Chriſt deſcended into hell, was there chained vp, where hee commandeth all, and euery one of them knoweth how to traficke in his owne trade.

[d] Michael the cheifeſt of the Angels.

[e] Belzebub tempteth men with pride: And as Iohn Baptiſt holdeth Lucifers place in Paradiſe, becauſe hee was the greateſt amongſt men, and had obtained this great fauour by his ſingular humility, oppoſite vnto the pride of Lucifer: ſo Belzebub hath Frauncis for his aduerſary in heauen, who was father and founder of the Friars minorites, and a great example of humility.

[e] What the temptations of Deuils are, and who are their aduerſaries in heauen.

2. Leuiathan, is a Prince of the ſame order, and is the ring-leader of the Hereticks, tempting men with ſins, that are directly repugnant vnto faith, hee hath Peter the Apoſtle, who is Vicar of Chriſt Ieſus, and chiefe Biſhop in the Church, for his aduerſary: vnto whom the promiſe was made, Portæ inferi non præualebunt.

3. Aſmodee is of the ſame order, hee continueth a Seraphin to this day, that is, he burneth with the deſire to tempt men with his ſinne of luxurioufneſſe, and is the Prince of wantons. Iohn Baptiſt is his aduerſary in heauen, who liued and died a perfect Virgin.

Balberith. Indg. 9.

4. [f] Balberith is Prince of the Cherubins, hee tempteth men to commit homicides, and to be quarrelsome, contentious and blasphemous. His enemy in heauen is Barnabas the Apostle, because of his great modesty.

5. Astaroth Prince of the Thrones, is alwaies desirous to sit idle and bee at ease: hee tempteth men with idlenesse and slouth. Bartholomew the Apostle is his enemy in heauen, who prayed to God, a hundred times a day, and a hundred times a night, kneeling in great humility vpon the earth. Hee did also vanquish that idole Astaroth.

6. Verrine is also one of the Thrones, & next in place vnto Astaroth, and tempteth men with impatience. His aduersary in heauen is Dominick your father, who was singularly patient in all iniuries and aduersities.

7. Gressil is the third in the order of Thrones, and tempteth men with impurity and vncleanesse, and his aduersary in heauen is Bernard, whose conuersation was vnblameable and full of purity.

8. Sonneillon is the fourth in the order of Thrones, and tempteth men with hatred against their enemies. His aduersary in heauen is Stephen, who prayed for his enemies.

9. Carreau Prince of Powers, tempteth men with hardnesse of hart, his aduersaries in heauen are the two Vincents, the one a Martyr, the other surnamed Ferrier, of the order of preaching Friers, whose hearts were full of tendernesse and softnesse. And this Diuell is euer about Magdalene, laying the nets of his temptations to make her obstinate.

10. Carniueau is also a Prince of Powers, and doth tempt men to obscenitie and shamelesnesse. His aduersary in heauen is Iohn the Euangelist, who was a virgin.

11. Oeillet is a Prince of Dominations: he tempteth men to break the vow of pouerty. His aduersary in heauen is Martin, who gaue halfe his cloake to a begger.

12 Ro-

12. Rosier is the second in the order of Dominations, and by his sweet & sugered words, he tempteth men to fall in loue. His aduersary in heauen is Basil, who would not listen to amorous and inchanting language.

13. Verrier is Prince of Principalities and tempteth men against the vow of obedience, and maketh the neck stiffe and hard as iron, and vncapeable to stoope vnder the yoake of obedience. His aduersary in heauen is Bernard a great friend of the Virgin's, and indeed an imitator of her in her obedience. Fiat mihi, &c.

14. Belias Prince of the order of Vertues tempteth men with arrogancy. His aduersary is Francis de Paule for his great and doue-like humility. He also tempteth gentle-women to pranke vp themselues with new fangled attires, to make wantons of their children, and to prattle vnto them whiles Masse is saying, and so to diuert them from the seruice of God.

15. Oliuier Prince of the Arch-angels tempteth men with cruelty and mercilesnesse towards the poore. His aduersary in heauen is Laurence, Qui dispersit & dedit pauperibus.

16. Iuuart is Prince of Angels, but hee is in another body, and hath not his aboade heere.

This euening Balberith was coniured by the vertue of exorcismes to name all the Diuels which were in the body of Magdalene, who answered, I will name the chiefe of them, but not the whole rabble who are heere in great number, and are as pettie lackies who deserue not to be named. Besides the twelue which I haue already named to be in this body, there are also,

Carton, Arangier, Bladier, Baal, Agrotier, Raher, Coustelier, Perdiguier, the two Planchers, Potier, Stone-strong, Hard-hart, Stop-mouth, Fire-stone. There you haue seauen and twenty of them: and adding vnto them the three which are in Louyse, they make vp the number of thirty. I will reckon vp no more.

Being coniured to say what their temptations were, and what Saints were their aduersaries, he constrainedly made answere. [a] Carton doth tempt men with vanity and pride. His aduersary is Iames the Hermite, who held all the vanities pompe and preferment of the world in mispriſion.

Arangier doth tempt men with pleasures. His aduersary is Sebastion, who did shun the allurements of earthly contentations, and lued in great continency.

Bladier was the ninth in the order of Cherubins: hee tempteth men against their vocation, and maketh them weary of Inspirations and Confessions. His aduersary is Ioseph the husband of Mary, who was very constant in his vocation sweetly reposing himselfe in good inspirations, and was very diligent in his charge, without grudging at the same.

Baal was the 50. in the order of Thrones. He tempteth men to commit murther. His aduersary is Raymond of Capua, confessor vnto Catherine of Sienna, who was of your order, vpon whom wee could neuer gaine or fasten any of our purposes, for hee loued euery body with all his heart.

Agrotier tempteth men with a thirst of honor. Hee is of the order of dominations, and his aduersary is Ierome, who contemned all the honors of the world.

Raher was the third Arch-angell. Hee tempteth men to hardnesse of heart as Carreau doth: his aduersary is Vincent Ferrier, who continually remained penitent, and was of your order.

Cousselier was of the order of Vertues: he tempteth men with contentions, wranglings and making of processes. His aduersary is Peter the Martyr one of your order also, who was of an admirable sweete and clement disposition, and frankly forgaue all iniuries.

Perdiguier was of the order of Powers: he tempteth men also with impurity, for one cannot be euery where with those of his troope. His aduersary is Bennet for his great purity.

[a] Obserue the order which he here keepeth in numbring of them in the same place & ranke as when hee first deliuered them.

Plancher

Plancher was of the order of Arch-angels; hee tempteth men with disobedience. His aduersary is Iames that was of your order, who in writing left the letter (O) imperfect thereby to shew his obedience.

Potier is the second in the order of Cherubins: hee hardneth mens hearts that they should not pray to God nor meditate vpon his mercies. His aduersary is Victor the Martyr who is euer praying or meditating.

Stone-strong was the eight in the order of Thrones: he tempteth men with the difficulties and molestations which they must meete withall in the attainement of vertues, especially of humility. His aduersary is Iohn Chrysostome, which euer practised himselfe in all sorts of vertues.

Hard-hart is the 15. in the order of Arch-angels: he impeacheth men from lifting vp their harts vnto God. His aduersary is William of the order of Augustine, who euen at his time of meales did euer lift vp his heart vnto God.

Stop-mouth is the second in the order of Angels, hee tempteth men with friuolous and impertinent speaches, breeding a disgust in men that would speake of God, and endeauouring to interrupt the current of all vertuous language. His aduersary is Cyprian the Martyr and Doctor, who was euer talking and meditating vpon God.

Plancher is the 15. in the order of Powers, who together with the other Plancher, the order of Arch-angels doth tempt men to doe good workes for sinister and reserued intentions. His aduersary is Marke the Euangelist, whose intention in all things was euer vpright and pure.

Fire-stone is the 20. of the order of vertues: he tempteth men to choller and anger. His aduersary is Alexius, who practised his patience in the house of his father by his meekenes, and by the sufferance of those insolencies which his seruants offered vnto him.

Belzebub in his discourse to the other Diuels which were with him in the body of Magdalene, named the two familiar spirits of Lewes the Magician, to wit Candelier and Ferrier.

The Acts of the 18. of Ianuary being Tewsday.

AS soone as the two that were possessed had kneeled vpon the ground before the Altar at S Baume, Belzebub turning towards Louyse, said vnto Verrine, Behold our learned Preacher, that doth so much boast of his sufficiency in making of sermons. Whereunto Verrine replyed, [b] Thou lyest, I neuer said that I made sermons, or that I was a Preacher. Goe to thou cursed lyar, remember that I euer maintained, that I was sent from God to publish and disclose a truth, and to dismaske thy knauery. Diddest not thou (said Belzebub) affirme that God hath promised Paradise vnto thee? Thou lyest (answered Verrine) I neuer said so, onely I did auow thus much, that God by [c] his absolute and boundlesse power hath granted vnto me diminution of my torments. Then he said to Magdalene, be of good cheere, for God hath hyred thee and the three faculties of thy soule, to be imployed about his seruice. No (said Belzebub) shee is hyred by me. Verrine answered, thou lyest, and shalt not gaine that for which thou now pretendest. And if it were not for feare of Michaelis, master of this place, I would lay open such a throate, as the whole frame of this house should tremble. Thou beарest Magdalene in hand that thou wilt cure her, I pray thee, take thou no thought for her health, for shee is sufficiently prouided of good Phisitians of her owne, let her (a Gods name) beleeue her Confessours.

It was obserued by some, that shee vsed a particular kinde of gesture and motion with the finger of her hand, on which shee did weare a ring of siluer; and thereupon Verrine said, Take [d] away that ring from her for [b] Verrine denyeth that he is a preacher. See the 1. doubt after the Epistle to the reader.

[c] The absolute power of God.

[d] A charmed ring.

for it is charmed: but when they endeauoured to pluck it from her finger, they were not able, by reason that her finger was swollen so big, that they were faine to cut it asunder with a paire of sizers. And we found that in the middest of the ring within side, there was engrauen the head of an Owle in a circle, and right opposite against it, there was engrauen the name of Iesus: which was cut in peeces and cast into the fire.

After dinner, it was thought fit, to take aduantage of the time, and to purge the soule of Magdalene, from those leprosies and pollutions, where-withall it was tainted, and by this meanes to delude Belzebub and his adherents. Whereupon the Friers together with the fathers of the doctrine came priuatly into Magdalens chamber, hauing in their company an ancient Matrone of S. Vrsula's order, called sister Catherine of France, and another that was an associate or coadiutor there. And as we exhorted her to name all the witches which she had formerly seene in their Synagogue, the Diuell spake vnto her, when shee was opening her mouth to reueale them vnto vs, and said, If thou offer to prate of this, I will strangle thee. Yet for all this, shee began to speake, where-upon [e] the Diuell came vp about the bignesse of a toade, and seazed her throate in so terrible a manner, that hee was like to choake her, in so much as she lost her speech, and turned vp the white of her eies, as if shee should instantly haue died. But herselfe remembring to make the signe of the Crosse, and the Exorcist saying that part of the Gospell In principio erat verbum, and the whole assembly addressing themselues to prayers, the Diuell at last was forced to quit her, after the space of a quarter or halfe a quarter of an houre; and then he would returne to racke and torture her: which [f] cruell handling indured the space of the three weekes, wherein the examination of these things was to passe vnder the censure of the fathers. When shee came againe to herselfe shee followed on her discourse, as if shee

[e] Magdalens throte seased on by the Diuel.

[f] The tortures which Magdalen suffered.

ſhee had felt no hurt, and had receiued no interruption. But when the Magician ſaw her reſolution to ſtand in that ſteddy courſe of repentance, he ſent vnto her many Sorcerers and Witches, which were ſenſible vnto her and not vnto vs, who came to caſt their charmes vpon her, that ſhee might looſe her memory or wits: they came in at the chimney as Magdalene reported; and when the charme had ſeazed her, ſhe remained a long time, as if ſhee had been in a trance, or were halfe dead. But this being alſo blowne away by the power of Exorciſmes, ſhee was then asked, what was the cauſe of theſe trances: whereunto ſhee made anſwere, you ſhall perceiue how this comes vnto mee, when as I open my mouth. It is the [g] Diuell that cauſeth this in mee, to force mee to take thoſe charmes, which they blow into mee through a cane; which you might obſerue by my ſneezing and coughing, as though there were ſomething ſticking in my throte which I would faine ridde my ſelfe of. All this happened againe preſently after that ſhe was queſtioned touching another confederacy ſo that father Peter Fournez an ancient graue man, and Vicar of S. Baume being cloſe vnto her, and ſeeing her to begin to gape, hee put his hand ouer her mouth, and the charme was ſeene to fall viſibly vpon the apron of her that was poſſeſſed, which father Michaelis tooke vpon his knife, and ſhewed it to all that were there preſent, to their great aſtoniſhment and admiration. The charme appeared to bee a glutinous kinde of matter, as it were a mingle of hony and pitch.

[g] Charmes caſt into Magdalene which ſhe reuealeth.

When all the fathers that were there preſent had ſeene this, and knew for a certainty that theſe were realities and not ſhewes, they determined to furniſh the houſe with [h] ſwords and halbards to defend themſelues againſt theſe wicked aſſaylants. And the ſame accident happening againe not long after, a valiant gentle-man called Monſieur Gombert kept cloſe to the chimney with a ſword in his hand, euer beating and thruſting into into it, and others betooke them to their halberds, striking and laying about them ouer all the chamber. But vpon the sudden Magdalene cryed out, Alacke poore Mary, what makest thou heere? and made an out-cry like vnto a woman that seeth one man murthering another, beating her thighes with her hands, and plucking her selfe by the haire. When this was passed ouer, she was asked the reason of her out-cry, who made answere, that a companion of hers whom shee loued the best of al the Synagogue (for she was of a very gentle and courteous disposition) called Mary of Paris came into her chamber with a seruant of hers named Cecile, to bring her a loue-letter from the Magician, which she refused to receiue. And they being fearefull to returne through the chimney, were carryed vp and downe the chamber by the Diuels, skipping and flinging about for feare of being wounded. Mary (said shee) was stricken ouer the breast with a halbard, and also hurt on the left side, and Cecile was wounded in the back, and I feare me, Mary is dead. Being asked why they had not broken through the leaues of the[i] window which were made of paper: shee answered, that the Diuell hath no power to breake or make a forcible passage through any thing, without the permission and consent of the master of the house; but if there bee a passage, or if the windowes stand open, then indeed hee hath a deuice to make the witches passe through, prouided that the hole through which they are to passe be of that capacity and bignesse that a reasonable great cat may get in and out through the same:

[h] Either to beat vp and downe in the aire with them, or to defend themſelues againſt ſuch attempters.

Vpon Sunne set, wee heard through the window a [k] lamentable voice of a woman that seemed to be ready to giue vp the ghost: and as we thought, it came from an adioyning mountaine iust ouer against S. Baume, these lamentations continued for a long season, so that we called for Magdalene to vnderstand of her what the matter was: who when shee came to the window, shee said)

[i] O the goodnesse of God that will not so much as suffer the Diuell to force through a casement of paper. What ought the christian to conceaue of his wil which is of an infinite resistance when he saith, Nolo.

[k] The doleful cry of one giuing vp the ghost.

said, looke, looke, doe not you see Lewes the Magician that holdeth Mary vpon his knee to comfort her? For shee is ready to dye, and her father and mother with much other company are very busie about her.

About nine of the clock at night, the fathers with certaine women there present did see in the aire great store of [m] torches and candles burning very bright, and carryed in manner of Processiõ towards Marseille.

[m] Torches seene in the aire.

The acts of the 19. of Ianuary.

THis morning was Belzebub exorcised, and diuers times questioned, and charged to tell who that creature was which the day before did so lamentably bemone her selfe. In conclusion, being constrained to answere, he said, that it was a young woman which was wounded: whereupon it was demanded of him in what part of the body shee had receaued this wound; vnto which, after many refusals, he made answere that it was about the heart: then they asked him whether the wound were mortall or no: at which question hee began to laugh, and told them that she was already dead. Being demanded where shee dyed; hee answered, in yonder adioyning hill that is opposite vnto S. Baume. Being asked, what time she dyed; hee answered, about eight of the clock at night. Being questioned where they had buried her, hee made answere, that shee was cast[n] into the sea behind the Abbey of S. Victor at Marseille, where all the Magicians and Witches were assembled at her buriall. Beeing asked of whence this young woman was, hee answered, that she was a Parisian, and her fathers name was Henry Alhponsus, a gentle-man dwelling neere the Louure vpon the left hand. Being asked whether she were damned, he laughed and said, I beleeue she is so. Being asked if any other had receiued hurt, hee replyed that the chamber-maide of the same Mary, whose name was Cicile was hurt in the [n] The sea the graue for Sorcerers.

the back, but the wound was not mortall. After Belzebub had deliuered all this, hee came forth through the mouth of her that was possessed, and in his issuing forth he made a noyse much like vnto a belch saying these words, he is departed. When this was ended, the Exorcist began to adiure the Diuell that did then gouerne in the body of Magdalene. Then did one of the Diuels begin to neigh like a horse, and presently added, this is Leuiathan whom you heare. Then he was demanded, who it was that issued forth of her body: he made answere, that it was Belzebub. Being asked, if hee would sweare & auow that which Belzebub had said, he answered that he would, and to that purpose had receaued commission and leaue from him to doe it: so causing him to put both the hands of Magdalen vpon the holy Gospel, he swore thus.

I sweare according to God and the truth, and according to the Churches intention and yours without reseruation of any secret, sinister, or contrary meaning to my selfe, that all which Belzebub hath said is certainely true.

Then hee was againe questioned and adiured to tell, whether any other besides them, which Belzebub spake of, were hurt or no. After many refusals and impositions of a thousand degrees of paines, and by as many Martyrs as euer suffered since S. Stephens time, he answered that one Briget of Marseille had some dayes since receaued a hurt on her right side, but was now recouered of the same. Also a woman of Carpentras was wounded on her left side, but hee made dainty to tell her name, saying, that shee dwelt neerer to them then Paris: but they imploring the aide and assistance of the sacred Virgin, S. Magdalene and of the Angels especially of S. Michael, and hauing shut vp Magdalene within the holy Penitence, and put the holy Pix vpon her head after much adiuration and charging of him, at last hee spake disdainefully, and said, shee is called Cecile of

Monts

Monts: whereupon wee preſently diſpatched away a meſſenger thither to enquire the truth thereof, but ſome were of opinion that there ſhould no enquiry bee made after theſe things, for feare leaſt the Diuell ſhould accuſe ſome body wrongfully, and ſo bring many innocents into danger.

After dinner about two of the clocke in the afternoone Magdalene was queſtioned touching the manner and faſhion which they held in their Sabbath, who anſwered, Since my conuerſion there is a Sabbath held euery day, but before, it was kept but three times in the weeke, beginning at eleuen of the clocke at night, and continuing till three of the clocke after midnight, ſometimes more, ſometimes leſſe: the alteration of the place is day by day appointed by the Prince of the Synagogue, and the witches are gathered together by the ſound of the Cornet which is winded by a Diuell. And this ſound doth tingle and ring in the eares and vnderſtandings of Sorcerers in what part of the world ſoeuer they be: then the Sorcerers by the power of a certaine oyntment whith they vſe are carried in the ayre and brought cloſe vp to the Prince of Sorcerers, who is ſupported in the aire by Diuels in the mid-way, and paſſing by him they bow vnto him and make him reuerence, and ſo are hurried to the Synagogue at the place deſigned: where being aſſembled, Firſt the hagges and witches, who are people of a ſordid and baſe condition, and whoſe trade and cuſtome is to murther infants, and to bring them to the Sabbath, after they haue been buried in their graue, are the firſt that come to adore the Prince of the Synagogue who is Lucifers lieftenant, and he that now holdeth that place is Lewes Gaufridy: then they adore the Princeſſe of the Synagogue who is a woman placed at his right hand. Next they goe and worſhip the Diuell who is ſeated in a Throne like a Prince. In the ſecond place come the Sorcerers and Sorcereſſes, who are people of a middle condition, whoſe office office is to bewitch and ſpread abroad charmes, and theſe performe the ſame kind of adoration with the former, kneeling vpon the ground, but not proſtrating themſelues as doe the other; although they kiſſe the hands and feet of the Diuell as the firſt likewiſe doe. In the third place come the Magicians who are Gentlemen and people of a higher ranke: their office is to blaſpheme God as much as they can, and are poſſeſſed with a madneſſe like vnto the raging of a mad dogge; theſe are full of a diabolicall hatred, fretting and fuming when they cannot plucke the Deity in peeces, eſpecially the precious humanity of Chriſt Ieſus. Their duty alſo is to renounce the ſacred Trinity, their Baptiſme and all inſpirations which God may infuſe into them, as alſo all the Sacraments, Preachings, Prayers, Confeſſions, and whatſoeuer elſe God might vſe as the meanes and inſtruments of their ſaluation. Euery one of theſe haue their ſeruants or chambermaids to diſperſe abroad their charmes: for at euery Sabbath the Prince of the Synagogue (vpon the ſuggeſtion of the Diuell who roundeth him in the eare) commandeth and appointeth what charmes euery one ſhall haue to throw about the next day, which euery one performeth in his owne perſon, except the Magicians who leaue the execution hereof to their ſeruants and chambermaides.

[m] This being performed, in the ſecond place they prouide a banquet, ſetting three tables according to the three diuerſities of the people aboue named. They that haue the charge of bread, doe bring in bread made of corne which inuiſibly they pilfer and ſteale from diuers places. The drinke which they haue is Malmſey, to prouoke and prepare the fleſh to luxurious wantonnes: and this liquor is brought by certaine deputed for that purpoſe from ſellers whence they ſteale the ſame. The meate they ordinarily eate is the fleſh of young children, which they cooke and make ready in the Synagogue, ſomtimes bringing them thither aliue by ſtealing ling them from those houses where they haue opportunity to come. They haue no vse of kniues at table for feare least they should bee laid a crosse, and emblematically to shew that they must not cut off the foreskin of their damnable customes and habits: and it may bee also to auoide the massacring one onother in the Sabbath by reason of some enmity or hatred. They haue also no salt, which figureth out wisedome and vnderstanding; neither know they the vse of oliues or oyle which represent mercy.

[m] The banquet of the Synagogue.

n The songs vsed in the Sabbath.

n When this is done, the Magicians and those that can reade, sing certaine Psalmes as they doe in the Church, especially Laudate Dominum de Cœlis: Confitemini domino quoniam bonus, and the Canticle, Benedicite, transferring all to the praise of Lucifer and the Diuels: And the Hagges and Sorcerers doe houle and vary their hellish cries high and low counterfaiting a kinde of villanous musicke. They also daunce at the sound of Viols & other instruments, which are brought thither by those that were skild to play vpon them.

o The abominable sensuality practised in the Sabbaths.

o Finally, they committed vncleanneſſe one with another: vpon Sundaies they pollute themselues by their filthy copulation with Diuels, that are Succubi and Incubi: Vpon Thursdayes they contaminate themselues with Sodomy: Vpon Saturdaies they doe prostitute themselues to abominable bestiality: vpon other daies they vse the ordinary course which nature prompteth vnto them. When this is finished, about three of the clocke after midnight euery one is caried to his owne home, and those that are seruants doe carry the Prince and the Princesse in State, some supporting the body, others the feet, and the rest the head. Vpon Wednesdaies and Frydaies, their Sabbathes of blasphemies and reuenge are held, where they doe nothing but blaspheme God and the Saints, and by all the contriuances of their braine they study to take vengeance of their enemies.

Magdalene also said, that all Magicians, Sorcerers, &c. are ordinarily marked in three places, vpon the braine, vpon the heart, and vpon the reines, and sometimes in other parts; but commonly the markes of the Prince and Princesse are more inward that they may not be found.

She further said, that that accursed Magician Lewes instigated thereunto by the outragiousnesse which raigned in him,& which might parallel that of Lucifer, pdid first inuent the saying of Masse at the Sabbaths,and did really consecrate and present the sacrifice to Lucifer, and in the distribution of the consecrated bread euery one trampled it vnder his feet, and then they cast it vnto dogs, which the hagges and witches brought with them from their granges.

She said that vpon a certaine day the Magician commanded a great Mastiffe to be brought to eate the consecrated bread which he made vp into a lumpe to be deuoured by him: but the dog being brought before the blessed Sacrament,he as it were kneeled with his hinder feet,& closed his two fore feet together,bowing downe his head as if hee had worshipped the same; in so much as they could not beate him from thence, neither with blowes of staues, nor stones: whereupon many of them fell a weeping, so that it was ordained, that from that time forward they should bring no more dogs to these assemblies.

She also related, that the said Magician did sprinkle the consecrated wine vpon all the company, iust like the Priest when he deales about the hallowed water, at which time euery one cryeth, Sanguis eius super nos & filios nostros.

She further said, that one of the handsomest fellowes in all that troope crying vpon a time as high as possibly he could, Sanguis eius, &c. a rocke, vnder which hee stood, brake in peeces at the top, so that a stone thereof fell vpon his head, and did shrewdly cut him. But hee p O prodigious and vnheard of impiety, but this accursed Magician deceaued himselfe, for he could not consecrate. Saint Thomas saith that those who crucified Christ Iesus, could not be said to sacrifice, although in their action Christ Iesus was the host and oblation, because their intention was not in their offering to present this their action vnto God, for they did this out of pure malice. 3 pag.q.47.art: 4.ad 2.

continuing his cry, it thundred so terribly in the ayre, and the ratling of the thunder was so fearefully intermingled with flakes of fire, that they were all amazed at it. But he still persisting in his blasphemous cry, Sanguis eius, &c. was hurried away in the ayre, euer keeping the same cry, so that at the last he was carried out of the sight of all the spectators, and neuer afterward appeared: whereupon many of them were conuerted.

The Acts of the 20. of Ianuary.

AS Magdalene was confessing her selfe in the morning in her chamber, Belzebub cryed out diuers times, and endeauoured to interrupt the confession, and would by no meanes permit that they should giue absolution vnto her; saying aloud, that he had rather bee in hell then suffer it, and that this absolution did burne him more then the fire of Hell did, which hee also sundry times repeated when the said Magdalene went to confession.

He also said, some daies before, that he had rather be shut vp in Hell then enter into the Church of S. Baume, especially into the place of Penitence, where the Sorcerers had no power to spread and cast abroad their charmes and enchantments: whereunto Verrine added, that none were to enter thither but such as were in the state of grace, and those were to goe in bare-footed. It happened towards the euening at the time wherin Magdalene was accustomed to come to S. Baume to be exorcised, they found her stiffe as a statue of marble in all her limmes, and very dull and drowsie, so that they were forced to carry her betweene foure to the Church, where shee remained a good space at the foote of the high Altar, and could not bee brought to her selfe, till they carried her to the place of the blessed Penitence, applying and laying the holy Pix vpon her face, face, whereupon she came to her selfe and went forth to be exorcised.

This euening at the second Exorcisme, Belzebub was sullen and would not speake a word: whereupon Verrine said; he doth this to make you leaue your exorcising; for hee feareth lest being enforced to speake, the Magicians who are oftentimes carried hither by Diuels, should reuolt from him and bee conuerted, as diuers of them haue already done.

The Acts of the 21. of Ianuary.

AT the euening Exorcismes Belzebub was questioned whether hee were in the body of Magdalene or no: who answered that he was. Being asked why he together with his companions left not that body, and being many times adiured to make his answere vnto the same, he would say nothing thereunto. Yet after that the Priests had powred forth their prayers before God, and had laid many grieuous paines vpon him, hee made answere in a great rage: Haue not I told thee that the obstinacy of Lewes the Magician was the cause hereof, and that wee would neuer depart from hence, vntill he bee conuerted, or dead, or else punished by iustice? being asked what the reason was that this Magician was so hardened in his sinne, and had such a cauterized conscience, shut against all good admonitions, and what aduantage hee did conceiue would redound from hence vnto him; hee would make no answere a long time, till at last by encreasing the degrees of his punishments vnto the number of daies that S. Magdalene had remained in the place of her pennance, hee answered, It proceedeth from the hatred hee beareth vnto God, and because hee would still liue in his licentiousnesse, without the checke and controule of his conscience.

Being asked if any Sorcerers or witches had beene hurt the day before after dinner, when the charmes that were vsually throwne against Magdalene were dispersed, hee made answere, that there were two hurt and they were called Rousse and Marine. Being demanded in what place they had their abode, hee answered, In the City where the Prince of the Turkes remaineth: for the Prince of the Magicians commandeth all those of France, Spaine and England (where their number is greater) as also those of Turkey, his power reacheth vnto them also.

This being said, Belzebub and Leuiathan did very sensibly depart from her as they vsed to doe.

The Acts of the 22. of Ianuary being Saturday.

After dinner Belzebub committed many outrages in the chamber, dauncing and singing, and within a while hee ranne suddenly, and hauing opened the doore, hee made Magdalene to runne very nimbly towards the great gate of S. Baume, but she was presently followed and taken.

Afterward Belzebub being exorcised with the stole, to make answere why hee had so done, at length replyed, that the Magician Leures and his lieftenant stayed for her at the fountaine, to the end they might transport her together with themselues, if shee would yeeld consent therunto, pretending they would giue her a charme to that purpose: And this happened three or foure seuerall times.

At night after the Exorcismes, Belzebub fell to his old trickes, by reason whereof they were inforced to bring her into the holy house of Penance, where being once setled, she fell so soundly a sleepe, that she seemed for a while to be dead, but in the end the holy Host being applyed vnto her, shee awoke and was againe exorcised.

The acts of the 23. day of Ianuary being Sunday.

AT the morning Exorciſme Belzebub being often adiured and not willing to anſwere, yet at length (and ſurely wee haue often tried it, that long patience with perſeuerance in prayer ouercomes the wicked ſpirits, and that as well at Confeſſion, as at the time of Exorciſmes and the Communion) after wee had impoſed as many degrees of puniſhments on him as there were Maſſes ſaid that day in the Catholicke Church, (it was then about eleuen before noone) hee anſwered By my pride I deſpiſe as much as I can your exorciſmes, and in what I can doe obey the Magician, who commands me in the name of Luciſer my Maſter.

Being put to the queſtion why they delayed to goe forth before the Magician were either conuerted or dead: hee anſwered, if wee goe forth, who is it that would induce him to conuerſion, or make his deſignes manifeſt? Verrine added, we are indeed confined hither by inchantment, but God hath turned it to the aduancement of his glory, and the conuerſion of Magicians.

Belzebub being againe adiured to leaue Magdalene, and to goe and torment the Magician corporally, fell a laughing, and anſwered, ſure a likely matter that I ſhould goe and torment him, q ſithence we neuer torment or poſſeſſe Magicians, for they are ours already; and for the body we care not much, ſo wee poſſeſſe the ſoule: but being poſſeſſed of the body and not of the ſoule, (as it falleth out in this caſe) wee deſire rather to remaine in hell, where wee feele onely our ordinary puniſhment, then heere where we ſuffer daily addition to our vſuall torments. Notwithſtanding hauing hope to gaine a ſoule to hell, wee care not what torture wee vndergoe.

q Magicians not poſſeſſed.

Whiles the Exorciſt was reading his Exorciſme in-tituled Luciferiana not marking the rubrique which directed him to the pronouncing of certaine words in the eare of the poſſeſſed with a lowe voice, and paſſing beyond it in the ſame tenor of ſound, Belzebub cryed out, thou ſhouldeſt haue ſpoken that in her eare, and it being looked into, it was indeed found to bee ſo. Being demanded to what end the day before after dinner, ſo many charmes were in Magdalens mouth, he ſet himſelfe to laugh ſaying, It is to very good purpoſe. Afterward beeing often adiured and hauing grieuous puniſhments impoſed on him for the ſpeaking of the truth, to what end hee threw ſo many powders and liquors vpon her, he anſwered, what meane you by powders and liquors. I vnderſtand it not, vnfold it to mee. I meane (quoth the Exorciſt) charmes and inchantments, then hee replyed, it was to prouoke her to the loue of one who was not far from thence, for ſhe loues the Magician no more but rather hates him. And it is to bee obſerued, that a certaine perſon came thither within a while after, who confeſſed that hee had been extremely affected in that kind, and did penance for it.

The acts of the 24. of January being Munday.

AFter this Magdalene complained that ſince midnight ſhe had been vexed with viſions, as namely, that the Magicians liuetenant had brought her letters frō the Magician himſelfe, written in characters of gold to incenſe her to loue the Magician, as ſhee had done in former times, which ſhe refuſed to read. After that a young maid of Paris her familiar friend and ancient acquaintance at the Synagogue, brought her from the ſame Magician a faire picture of our Lady, which ſhee had brought from Paris for Magdalene to behold, and to pray vnto, for the loue of the Magician: but ſhee vtterly refuſed once to looke on it as knowing, that this were to yeeld cōſent to the ſuggeſtion of the Diuel, vpon on this occasion Belzebub was adiured to tell the place where the meeting had been held the night before. He answered, that it was kept at the holy pillar in the cleft of the rock of S. Baume, where were assembled all the Magicians of Prouince, of Dophine & Languedoc, to consult what course they should take for the regaining of Magdalene, and at last it was concluded that a charme should be made her of hote spices, as Peper, Cinnamon, Ginger & the like, to inflame her to lust: and it was indeed found to be true, as both Magdalen her selfe confessed & those who watched with her obserued, where we may note that Verrine affirmed, that the matter or stuff of charmes worketh nothing, but that there are three Diuels bound, as it were, or fettered to euery charme, which according as occasion presents, worke, for the effecting of his intention who made it: and further, we may obserue that inchantments or charmes are giuen for two respects, either for the vexation of the body, as are Palsies, choliques, turning of the guts, deafnesse, and the like, and these God permits sometimes to be inflicted vpon the iust (as he did vpon Iob) seruing for merits and satisfaction for their sinnes, and in that case we must arme our selues with patience, as he that lay sick of the palsie at the poole of Bethesda, and pray to God either for deliuerance or patience: and these mischieses which meerely concerne the body, are common to all, euen to young infants in their cradles when they are newly baptised. Other charmes are spred to moone mens passions, as ambition, hatred, reuenge, carnall lust, and to set men head-long after these affections; and when a christian perceaueth that those passions are beyond measure, irregular and altogether extraordinary he ought to feare, lest they be wrought by charmes and inchantments, and in such cases hee ought to haue recourse to the vse of his free will, and the inuocation of Gods grace, by meanes of which (as S. Paul speakes) he is enabled to doe what he doth. And this second kinde also may seaze vpon good men, for their triall and the increase of their merit, as it befell S. Paul, to whom was sent the Angell of Satan to buffet him with the sting of the flesh. Notwithstanding, the assaults of the Diuell vpon iust men, haue alwaies prooued vneffectuall, [r] and the Diuels themselues haue confessed, that their charmes haue no power vpon Presidents, or Iudges, or Bishops, or Generals of Orders, which we haue tryed by experience, for almost all the Nunns of S. Vrsulaes order in the cittie of Aix were bewitched by the cunning of the Magician, who desired to dissolue that societie, excepting their Abbesse named Cassandra, and the Abbesse of the conuent of Marsielles named Catherine of France. Moreouer themselues haue confessed and Verrine by name, that since in Languedoc they haue often assayed to bewitch father Michaelis, and that to death within two dayes, which notwitstanding they were not able to performe, by reason he was a Superiour, and the Magician himselfe confessed being in prison, and conferring with the Capuchins, the one a Gardian in the citty of Aix called father Celsus, and the other his companion (who did him that charitable fauour as to lie with him in prison and exhort him to conuersion) that being at S. Baume. he often set his Diuels a worke to breake father Michaelis and father Romillons neck, but they could not effect it, because they were Superiours.

[r] Superiours not to be bewitched.

They haue also made it knowne in their exorcismes that the true [s] remedy to auoide inchantments is, the frequenting of the Sacraments, and that the Priests which offer worthelie euerie day, can hardly bee inchanted.

[s] The remedy against inchãtments.

The euening following, whiles they were at seruice in the Quier, the Clarke of S. Baume named Iohn Palouse of the age of 21. yeares came into the Quier, like a man affrighted [t] affirming that newes was brought that the witches were heard crying belowe in S. Baumes wood [t] The noise of the witches plainly heard.

wood: where-upon the Priour Sebastian Michaelis went downe and hearing the noise, caused the Vicar of S. Baume Peter Fornez to be sent for, and Frier Anthonie Boilletot companion to the said Michaelis, and some others who plainly heard diuers voices of men and women and children, who seemed to be in number about an hundred, and cryed loud as if they had beene singing the black sanne, and this hubub lasted a long time, which confirmeth the truth of that opinion that holdeth that witches keepe their assemblies in woods and forrests,

The acts of the 25. of Ianuary being Tewsday.

Belzebub being demanded and adiured in the exorcisme to tell why the day before hee had cast powder in the eies, and hands, and mouth of Magdalen: he answered, that they[u] were three Magicians, the one cast powder in her eies, that shee might no more know those who came vnto her, the second in her mouth, that she might not bee able to speake, the third vpon her hands, thereby to incite her to vnchast touchinges, and another powder was cast vpon her to make her loathsome to those who attended her, which indeed came to passe; and another made of the haire and the vrine of a certaine person, with whom they tempted her.

[u] The damnable industriousnesse of Sorcerers to diuert Magdalen.

Being demanded touching the Magicians who came thither the night before, to what purpose their comming was: hee answered with great skorne, no, no; as who would say, hee would not answere. And continuing in his obstinacy, Verrine asked him, vnhappy creature why answerest thou not? it is a matter of importance which is demanded of thee, Belzebub replyed, tell it thy selfe. Verrine answered I know it as well as thou vnhappy creature. Take the goune and the cap and exorcise mee, and I will tell it, which was as much as if he had said, he had no commission to doe it. Then

Bel-

Belzebub held his peace, and being diuers times adiured, at length he ſpake in the eare of the Prieſt as vnwilling to be heard. The Synagogue adored the picture of Magdalene as of a Princeſſe, which was ſet in the ſame place where her ſelfe was wont to ſit in the Synagogue, and al reuerence was performed to her ſuppoſed preſence, as if ſhe had been really preſent all which was done to mooue her to returne vnto them, conſidering the honour which they did her picture. Farther it was confeſſed that euery night they held a meeting about S. Baumes church to that purpoſe, and euery night ſhee was inchanted to hinder her from confeſſing and the exerciſe of thoſe vertues which were inioyned her, and to draw her to the hatred of them, and to cauſe in her a weariſomneſſe of praying vnto God and ſpeaking of him, together with a delight to be talking of the Diuel.

Being demanded what company there was in that aſſembly, he anſwered, they came together from many quarters, as Paris, Lions, Marſeilles, Turkie.

Being demanded how it came to paſſe that he trembled not, nor made any adoe during the exorciſme (as hee had wont to doe formarly euer ſince hee was firſt exorciſed) he began to make it very dainty, and after many ſhiftes and much reſiſtance, and many puniſhments impoſed vpon him, being inforced hee at length made anſwere, My pride it was to diſſemble the torments I ſuffered, and in ſo ſaying, he feched a deepe ſigh turning his neck and ſcratching his head.

Afterward going out of the Church, and being followed by company, would you know (ſaith hee) where the Synagogue was held? Behold the place & vpon that bench ſat the Prince, hauing by his ſide the image of that miſerable woman which all the Sorcerers adored.

Being demanded whether or no they conceiued it not to be a great madneſſe to adore a mortall and corruptible creature, carying nothing but durt and excrement within her, who muſt ſhortly alſo die when it pleaſed pleased God, hee there-upon turned aside his face and answered nothing.

The Acts of the 26. of Ianuary, being Wednesday.

AFter many out-cryes made as well by Verrine as Belzebub during the holy Masse celebrated by father Anthony Billetot, they cryed and said, wee will get vs from hence, wee had rather be in hell then in this body. Then did Verrine fall a blowing, giuing vs to vnderstand that hee was in an hoate place, and cryed out vpon the pronouncing of the word (hell) in the exorcisme and said, hold thy tongue, speake not that word, cursed are they that now are or hereafter shall be in hel. Thou tellest vs that in hell death is euerlasting, hold thy tongue, wee knowe that well enough, wee I say, who are accursed as are all those who seek after it.

Belzebub being demanded what charmes had beene cast vpon Magdalene the day before, answered, that x one was cast into her right eare to make her hate the word of God and not to harken vnto it; another into her left eare, to make her impatient of correction and exhortation: the third into her mouth, to make her out of loue with the holy eucharist, the mercy and the goodnesse of God.

x Another charme cast vpon Magdalen and why.

Being demanded if any other were giuen her to other ends. after many denials he was adiured in the behalfe of Magdalene, and by the merits of her patience and penance, whereupon he answered, that the charme also tended to hinder her from the discouering of their iugling and from the receauing of grace by the Sacrament, and to make her vnable to resist them.

Verrine being put to the question in these words, Cur miser vt soleb as non contremiscis? he answered, I am a poore ignorant idiot which vnderstand not latine. Then said Belzebub, sir, you vnderstand it not, because you will not, knowe you not what Contremiscis meaneth neth: it is, why tremble you not? I haue interpreted it, now speake. Well quoth hee, I see he playes the counterfait, Scobillon who is the least of the Diuels in hell vnderstands that latine. Verrine replied, answere thou who art more learned then I, I giue thee leaue to speake. Belzebub answered with some indignation, [y] true sir, it is fit indeed that I should obey you.

The Acts of the 27. of Ianuary being Thursday.

AT the very entrance of the Exorcisme the wicked spirits which possessed the body of Magdalene hauing cunningly dissembled their feare two dayes before, began now to tremble strangely, manifesting that outwardly which inwardly they suffered, and Belzebub beeing adiured to speake, which of the Saints were the greatest aduersaries to the Synagogue of the Magicians, refused to answere a long time, but after sundry punishments inflicted on him for his often refusals, at length hee answered, that they were specially two, namely [z] Cyprian and Gregorie Nazianzen. Cyprian, by reason that he had beene a Magician labouring to seduce Iustin: and Gregorie who persecuted the Magicians in his Country, and wrote an history of Cyprian the Magician: but (said hee) of those kinde of people there are many more now adayes, then were in those tymes.

[a] Afterwards Verrine being demanded and adiured to tell, wherefore he had been so bitter against S. Chrysostome (it fel out then to be his holiday) he answered, that there were other aduersaries of the Magicians, as [b] Aegidius of your order, (who was himselfe a Magician) and Theophilus, but aboue all Peter the Apostle, who incountred Simon the first Magician in the Church, yet for mine owne particular, my speciall aduersaries are [y] Behold here the pride that is amongst wicked spirits.

[z] The Saints that are aduersaries vnto the Synagogue of witches.

[a] He had raged and stormed against S. Chrysostome.

[b] This Aegidius whiles he liued gaue himselfe to the Diuell, that he might be a skilful Physitian. He was a Portugese, and his history was made by father Sampaye of Portugal also. we wondered that an illiterate woman could relate such an history that is almost vnknown vnto all men: and came not forth in print, but a while since, and was written and published in latine by a Portugese, after it had lyen a long time obscurely among the manuscrips of our Library.

Do-

Dominicus, Sebastianus, and Chrysostome (but aboue all Dominicus) by reason of their great patience.

[c] Being adiured to tell wherefore he said, that he had tempted Eue, and what garment she wore: he answered a garment of innocencie, all made of one peece by a master-worke-man, and innocency (quoth hee) hath no need of couering.

[c] Verrine did scarce euer refuse to answere at the Exorcismes.

Being demanded wherefore the day before Belzebub was mute; he answered in latine, erat ligatus.

Being demanded wherefore Belzebub suffered himselfe to be bound by a Magician, sithence he was Princeps dæmoniorum: hee answered, the one bestowes a dinner vpon the other, and the other againe a supper vpon him, as much to say, that by the power of Lucifer the Magician bound Belzebub, but otherwise Belzebub mastered him.

Being demanded how it came to passe that himselfe was neuer bound by the Magician, hee answered, because he cannot bind me being heere on Gods behalfe.

Towards the euening Magdalene fell a singing and dancing, and playing many tricks in the chamber, so that they threatned to carry her to the holy house of Penance, which being done, Belzebub made her sleepe so soundly, as if she had been dead for the space of three or foure houres. At last after many Prayers, Psalmes, Letanies and Exorcismes, fetching a deepe sigh she began to awake, affirming that the Magician had againe inchanted her, and would haue strangled her, and indeed shee was like to die at that instant, feeling herselfe extremely perplexed, yet recommending her selfe to God, the Diuels power ceased, and howbeit the night before whiles they held their assembly, the [d] Magician had presented himselfe vnto her vpon his knee, with an haltar about his neck, praying her to returne vnto him, not to discouer him and the other Magicians, and in her presence had adored her statue all gilded ouer, drawing bloud out of the hands of the Witches with rasors raſors, and ſaying vnto her, behold what honour wee would doe your perſon, conſidering wee doe ſo much to your picture, yet would ſhee by no meanes yeeld her conſent, but remained victorious. O that wee were ſo carefull, and would take ſo much paines for the conuerting and the ſauing of ſoules as theſe Magicians doe to peruert and deſtroy them, for they watched euery night during the moneth of Ianuary, to recouer to thẽ-ſelues this poore ſoule! Magdalene added that the Magician ſeeing her continue in her conſtancy, cryed out, ſaying to the whole company, is there any heere preſent that would die for her, and preſently there preſented himſelfe a young man, declaring that himſelfe was ready for that purpoſe whom the Magician twice ſtabbed with a poniard: yet would ſhee by no meanes yeeld her conſent. Now whether this Hiſtory were acted truely and indeed, or onely in imagination, yet was it ſurely for her a very great temptation.

[d] The diligence of the Magicians to diuert Magdalene

The Acts of the 28. of Ianuary being Friday.

AT the morning Exorciſme Verrine began to cry out againſt thoſe who voluntarily offend God, giuing themſelues to the Diuell of their owne accord. O Belzebub (quoth he) thou alwaies gaineſt ſome one or other, and regiſtreſt him in thy bookes. And as the Exorciſt made mention of the paines of hell, Verrine cryed out vpon there damnable ſtate, who rather chuſe the paines of hell then the ioyes of heauen: O Belzebub, thou art eaſed of much paine which the Magician Lewes beareth for thee. For we muſt vnderſtand that Belzebub being commanded by the Magician to torment Magdalen in all ſorts that might be, to the end to conſtrain her to reſume her former courſe of magicke, or at leaſt wiſe to make her mad & ſottiſh: his anſwere was, that the Exorciſt would then impoſe ſo much puniſhment on him as he ſhould not be able to endure it: the Magician replyed, that hee would vndergoe the third part of the torments which were imposed on him, and oftentimes hath Belzebub spoken to father Michaelis when he imposed punishments on him, impose them on the Magician who is the cause of that which I doe, and oftentimes they haue confessed in their Exorcismes that the Magician suffered inwardly so great tortures, that he would willingly haue taken his bed vpon it, had it not been for feare of discouering himselfe, and yet notwithstanding was hee euery day more obstinate then other.

Magician

During the Masse father Michaelis came from the Cloister to the Church, the doore of the cloister being shut, at which Belzebub cried out, behold father Michaelis is come, and instantly the said father opened the doore and entred into the Church to the astonishment of all the beholders.

The same morning Belzebub discouered another peece of businesse as strange as the former. The day before being the 27. of Ianuary, there came thither two men of Marseilles, and one of them desired to heare newes of his wife, who rysing very early in the morning, [e] tooke leaue of him vpon Innocents day, and returned not since, who receaued answere of father Michaelis, that it became him not in that holy place to demand such curiosities of Diuels, but hee should rather recommend both himselfe and his wife vnto God, who would not faile to help him. As soone as they were once entred the Church, Belzebub began to cry out, turning himselfe towards the husband, and saying, you haue wel sought your wife, she walkes through the cloudes in the aire, and was heere two or three dayes since in company of some others, and there-with-all comming neere him, hee touched him, saying againe, you haue well sought your wife? haue you not? There were present at this action father Francis Billet, and father Peter Fournez Vicar of S. Baume, and a good company besides.

[e] A woman that was lost, and sought after, and the place where she was abiding.

This

This being done, the ſaid men came to father Michaelis to certifie him of that which paſſed to whom he anſwered, I did indeed make a doubt thereof before, for about 10. or 12. dayes ſince, the father of the loſt woman being come to the ſame place to ſeeke her, the poſſeſſed ſaid that ſhee had ſeene her with ſome other witches vpon the hill ouer againſt S. Baume, and moreouer that ſhe had [f] ſtrangled two yeares ſince a daughter of her owne named Margarite, of the age of two yeares a fair childe, and that ſhe did this at the inſtance of the Magician, who told her that hee longed to eate of her childes fleſh; whereupon ſhee was taken out of her graue by the reſt of the witches and carried to the aſſembly. O bloudy tyrannie of the Diuell and his vnder officers, more cruell then that of Pharaoh! and O the miſerable eſtate of them who put their necks vnder his yoke. The woman that was poſſeſſed ſaid farther, that this woman was lifted vp in the aire thereby, to be the better inabled with her companions to caſt inchantments againſt her, which becauſe ſhee would not doe, fearing to receaue hurt as the reſt did, the Diuell broke her neck and caſt her into a vally betweene two hils. And indeed ſince that time ſhee hath not beene found. The two men which ſought after this woman were honeſt Citizens of Marſeilles, whoſe names the Parliament of Aix noted in their proceſſe againſt the Magician.

[f] The ſaid fellow and father of this child, ſaid that he had indeed a daughter called Margaret that died two yeares agoe.

The acts of the 29. of Ianuary being Saturday.

AT the morning Exorciſme Belzebub was very inſolent, not ſuffering Magdalene a long time to kneele before the altar, and when the exorciſt would haue inforced her, ſhee knocked him on the ſhinnes with her feet; and when he would hold her hands, ſhee ſcratched him till the bloud came, which was a cleare argument that the Diuell had gained more footing in her her the night past. Afterward Magdalene turned her selfe toward the Church doore looking earnestly vpon the hill ouer against it, and being demanded why shee did so; shee answered, that it was the place where the Magician Lewes offered sacrifice to Lucifer, which hee performed on Thursday, Saturday, and Sunday.

About two of the clock in the afternoone, father Michaelis, and father Francis Billet, and father Anthony Boilletot discoursing with Magdalene being then in her sound and perfect iudgement, about the Princes of the 9. companies of Angels, whether or no she had not heard Verrine say, that hee was a Prince of the Thrones, (which they demanded thereby to vnderstand what any of the Diuels which haunted Magdalene, and were Verines oppositswould answere thereunto) vpon the suddaine, Magdalene ratled in the throate, and Astaroth mounted into her tongue, neighing as it had bin a feirce horse, and saying, heere am I Astaroth, the Prince of Thrones, and not Verrine who is but a base companion.

Being demanded why Verrine spake not Latine, sithence he was a spirit, hee answered it is for reasons which I could now declare: but one day you shall see Verrine to bee Verrine.

Astaroth being retired and Magdalene retutned to her selfe, shee demanded in writing the names of those Saints which were oppositsto the wicked Spirits that possessed her, that she might call vpon them for helpe, for when we called vpon them, shee perceiued that the Deuils stirred and vexed themselues: Belzebub said she possesseth the braine, Asmodeus the reines, Carreau the heart, and in like sort others whom she named, and as we discoursed vpon the reason and cause of there opposition, whether it proceeded from the holding of there place in Paradise, or for the contrarietie of their vertues to the others vices, which they exercised most, father Michaelis arguing, that it could not bee the former cause, in as much as Saint Bartholomew was the Saint contrary to Astaroth, who was but of the order of Thrones, and Saint Francis to Belzebub, who was of the order of Seraphins; whereupon Astaroth instantlie mounted vp into her tongue againe, and said: Bartholomew is mine opposite, because he defaced the Idoll of Astaroth, and since that time he hath alwaies opposed himselfe against me. And being about to retire, now saith he, I will make Magdalene feele my furie, and therewith she began to rage and foame, being wholie plunged as it were and swallowed vp in the torments which she suffered, but it lasted not long, Astaroth being threatned with an hundred thousand degrees of punishments, if he withdrew not himselfe, for that is it which they most feare, damnes credunt & contremiscunt. And it is [g] surely worth the obseruing, that the like punishments may also bee imposed on Magicians, who haue spred abroad their inchantments, which wee well vnderstood, because the Diuels desired that the punishment which was imposed on them, might bee turned ouer vpon the Magician as being the principall author of that Tragedie, which it behooues Preists cheifely to remember, it being of good vse in dispossessing, my meaning is that [h] after the inuocation of Gods assistance, the true remedie to stop the inchantment is to impose greiuous and fresh punishments vpon the author of the mischeife.

[g] Notable instructions for Preists, to hinder the working of charmes.

[h] Experience teacheth that Sorcerers being menaced or beaten do make the charmes to cease.

Oderunt peccare mali formidine pœna.

Experience teacheth vs out of the Confessions of the wicked spirits themselues, that neuer yet any Exorcist imposed any degree of punishment on them, but the dew execution thereof followed vpon the same by Gods iust iudgement, who hath said to his Church dedi vobis potestatem, calcandi supra serpentes & supra damonia.

The same day after Euen song, Belzebub being demanded how it came to passe that the Magician being at Saint Baume, for the space of 10. dayes (whether he was called by i father Michaelis) became so pale, that thereupon father Anthony Boilletot exhorted him to repentance: hee answered, that it was by reason hee had touched him to the quicke in his conscience, hauing at that time many inspirations.

at

Being demanded why the Magician so often opened the window of the refectorie where he abode, and that in the midst of Winter he answered, because that sometimes their assemblie is held aboue on the top of the house, and then hee had commerce with the Witches calling vpon the Diuels for fauour and saying: Diabolos venite in adiutorium meum; being reproued for his incongruitie of speech, he answered that he reported the words of the Magician, in the same sort as he pronounced them, for he can not speake Latine, said he.

Being demanded wherefore he went so often to the garden next the refectorie, hee answered, that all the while he stayed at Saint Baume: the assemblie of Witches was alwayes held the neerest they could to the place where hee was, to the end they might the more easily haue conference with him.

Being demanded whence it came to passe, that eating with vs in the refectorie, hee left vpon his trencher all the meate that was giuen him, he answered smiling is he a man fit to feede vpon your fish? he eates of the flesh of pies, which we bring him from the assemblie inuisible.

Being demanded why hee walked so often with his head hanging downe: hee answered, that he then walked with the witches.

Being demanded wherefore hee being inioyned to lie all night in the holy house, could not abide there but a litle while: hee answered, that it was because the i Father Michaelis sent for him thither to purge himselfe from those publike defamations, which the Deuils with open throate daily proclaimed against him. And the two good Capuchin fathers, into whose familiarity he had wonne himselfe the better to couer his villianies, did beare him company. Hee remained with vs 10. dayes, vntill there came some persons, and carried him from thence in great scorne. Wee caused him to exorcise both the one and the other, of those that were possessed: and thereupon the Deuils began to sport at it saying, who would euer haue thought that thou shouldest exorcise vs? Afterwards he pretended as though he could not read, and intreated father Michaelis to read the Exorcismes for him.

assembly could not be held there, which he must of necessity be present at.

At night at the second exoreisme Belzebub being demanded and adiured to tell how it came to passe, that so great a number of Princes were in the body of Magdalene: hee answered, shee is a Princesse and deserues well to be honoured of Princes.

Being demanded whether the punishments imposed on the Magician were not of force to bring him to some grieuous disease or to death: he answered, yes for that he suffered from the head to the foote, as if he had been in a continuall fire. [k] Notwithstanding out of his great obstinacy, hee had demanded whether hee could not liue till the comming of Antichrist to assist him, and to whet his rage and malice against Iesus Christ. To which I answered (said hee) that he could not, it being onely in Gods power to effect that; neuertheless hee should comfort himselfe in this, that he did as great iniuries to Iesus Christ, as Antichrist himselfe should bee able to doe and greater too; but Antichrist cannot be begotten by thee as thou desirest (said he) for hee shall be borne of a Iewish woman, and conceiued far enough from hence.

Being demanded whether the paines hee indured softned his heart: he answered that they rather hardned him the more, and that he would be well content to indure all the paines of the damned vpon condition, hee might regaine Magdalene. There is extant an example hereof in the hardnes of Pharaos heart, among the plagues which God sent vpon him.

[l] Being demanded whether his paines should bee grieuous after his death: he answered, if he be damned, his punishment shall be more heauie then that of Lucifer, for with more malice and lesse respect hath he been iniurious * to Iesus Christ.

[k] Magdalene reported vnto vs, that in deflouring of women in the Synagogue, hee had this end & scope, to be the father of Antichrist. But the Diuels made him to vnderstand his ignorance of the Scriptures.

[l] The Diuell first blindeth them, and then (when they are thus hoodwinkt) he scoffeth at them.

* Because he had prophaned the holy Host.

The acts of the 30. of Ianuary being Septuagesima Sunday.

IN the morning Magdalene being willing to present her selfe for confession (as shee was wont) to father Michaelis, Belzebub would not suffer her to kneele, but ran diuers times towards the Church doore; yet at length the forenamed father imposing on him very grieuous punishments, if he suffered her not to confesse. Hee replyed, impose all these punishments on the Magician, who commanded me to doe it, and command him also to forbeare me, if I shall suffer her to confesse. Which when the said father had performed in the vertue of Gods name, and the bloud of Iesus Christ, Magdalene returned to her selfe, and being in her sound and perfect sense made her confession.

After this at the Masse of father Francis Billet he comited great outrages, plucking the Priest by his cope, and taking hold of him, hee also cryed aloud and hindred his deuotion.

Being exorcised after the Masse, and adiured to yeeld the reason of his vnusuall out-rage, hee answered vpon Sunday the Magician endeuoureth to doe the greatest iniury he can to Iesus Christ. Hee came to me this morning and said, in despite of God I will vse my greatest rage in the Church this day, doe thou the same at the Masse of thine Exorcist. He hath confessed to day (said he) at[m] Acoules, and cast forth gentle soft cries as he was taking the confessions; and being demanded by the women whose confessions he tooke, why he did so: he answered that hee found himselfe some-what ill, but in very deed his greatest torments were the punishments imposed on him by the Priest. Being adiured diuers times in the name of God, to shew the meanes how the Magician might be inforced to render back Magdalens obligations, he would answere nothing, remaining as it were dumbe: at laſt after many grieuous puniſhments impoſed, he anſwered, that they ſhould neuer be rendred, vnleſſe that he were either conuerted or puniſhed by iuſtice, or dead of a naturall death, and yet (ſaid he) after death they cannot be reſtored neither, being buried deepe in the earth.

[m] Parish church in Marseille.

Being demanded why hee had not rendred them when hee was commanded by father Michaelis, being Priour of the place, and Inquiſitour of the faith, hee anſwered, that Lewes was not ſubiect to him, but to his Biſhop.

Being adiured and commanded to goe to Marſeille, and to bring the writings thither: hee anſwered, that it could not bee done without the conſent of the Magician, who had them in keeping. And further added, that in vaine men ſeeke after thoſe kinde of writings, for before they can come to the houſes where they are, the Diuels conuay them ſome-where elſe: [n] in vaine alſo (quoth he) doe they ſearch after thoſe who are either ſlaine or wounded, for they caſt the dead carkaſes either into the ſea, or into ſome riuer neere adioyning: and for ſuch as are hurt, if the wound bee not deadly, they know how to couer and heale it with an oyntment, notwithſtanding they remaine ſick; and when the wound is deadly, they conuay away the witches ſome-where elſe, and in this faſhion many women are made away, if heed were taken of it.

[n] What become of Magicians when they are either hutt or ſlaine.

[o] At night at the entrance of the Exorciſmes, Belzebub began to torment Magdalene in fearfull manner, cauſing her to tremble euery ioint, and making her head to tumble, ſome-while backwards, and againe ſuddenly forward, euen to her belly, beating the earth with both her hands, in ſo much as they were inforced to put a cuſhion vpon the ground for her to beat vpon, notwithſtanding ſhee ſtill vexed her ſelfe, and this continued for the ſpace of aboue halfe an houre. Being adiured to tell why he tormented her ſo terribly, hee anſwered swered, that it was because shee had submitted her selfe to her superiour. Afterwards Belzebub himselfe was sorely tormented, in so much that he cried out aloud for very paine: and being demanded why he did so, he answered, that the Angell Michael and Cleare-sight the gard Angell of the Exorcist, and Fortitude the gardian of Magdalene tormented him, and added force to the flames in which hee fried, because some daies since hee had hindered Magdalene from her confessions, and had made her insufferable to her superiour, and all that resorted vnto her, whereof although he had receiued expresse prohibition from God, yet did he rather desire to obey the Magician then the Almighty.

[o] The torméts of Magdalen.

Being demanded wherefore the night before the wicked spirits would haue choaked father Francis Fillet: he answered, because he prayed, and strongly assisted Magdalene against vs. Not long after Magdalene craued pardon of Louyse, for those malicious wrongs whereby shee had offended her, and so reconciled her selfe vnto her, whereat the Diuels began to cry out, We haue spunne a p webb to catch this flie, tempting her to hate Louyse, but shee hath now broken the webb, and we haue lost our labour. The same afternoone Belzebub and his companions expressed a great rage, whiles Magdalen demanded pardon of father Romillon for her stubbornesse and obstinacy against him.

p Reconciliation doth frustrate ỹ attẽpts of the Diuell.

The acts of the 31. of Ianuary being Monday.

AT the morning Exorcisme, Belzebub did maruellously torment Magdalene, making her to bow her head downe wards, rubbing the earth with it, but not striking it against the ground. Hee continued the said motions by the space of an houre, during the Exorcismes, and the like shee did with her hands. Then the woman that was possessed began to complaine, and Belzebub told her, it was to accomplish her punish-q The great tortures which Magdalene indured, and the reason why.

The hate which the one did beare vnto the other was so great, that they could not indure to bee neere one another: so that we were constrained to exorcise them apart for a certaine season.

ments. Afterwards taking her by the throte, hee would haue ſtrangled her, but hauing an hundred thouſand degrees of puniſhments impoſed on him, if hee forſoke not his hold, he let goe his gripe, and mounted into her tongue.

Being adiured to tell why he tormented her ſo vehemently, after many refuſals, he anſwered, it is to gaine that from her by torments, which cannot be compaſſed by other meanes: and beſides, the chiefe of the Magicians commands me to doe ſo, who is heere preſent in the Church, but not to bee ſeene of you: hee now preſents to Magdalene ſo filthie a thing, that ſhee is forced to turne her eies aſide, yea euen at this inſtant hee commandeth vs to torment her yet more grieuouſly. And turning himſelfe to the Magician, hee ſaid, what wilt thou that I doe? Her body is ſo weakned already, as ſhe can indure no more. A while after hee got him vp againe into her throte, but hauing inuocated the name of Ieſus Chriſt, and the aſſiſtance of the holy Virgin, and impoſed as many degrees of puniſhment on Belzebub and the Magician, as there are Angels in heauen. Belzebub forſoke his holde, but ſaid, loe heere the Magician who mocketh at Michaelis and the Exorciſt for that they ſee him not.

After this Belzebub began to blowe and to ſhew by manifeſt tokens that himſelfe was ſorely tormented; being adiured to tell why. It is Fortitude (quoth he) Magdalens good Angell, who torments both mee and my companions, becauſe wee tempted her to indeuotion and blaſphemie.

Being demanded whether thoſe Sorcerers and Witches which Magdalene named in the afternoone the day before, were ſuch indeed: hee anſwered yes, and ſwore vpon the booke of Exorciſmes, reſeruing to himſelfe no finiſter or ſecret intention, to their vtter confuſion and damnation.

Being [a] adiured to tell and to name the good Angel, of [a] The Angels who are gardians vnto men, are of an inferiour degree of Angels, & are commanded and ſent by their ſuperiour Angels.

of Frier Peter Fournez Vicar of S. Baume: he answered, hee is called the Vision of God, and is the thousandth of the order of Vertues.

Being demanded if they knew one another, both the good and the bad, hee set himselfe to laugh, and said, I beleeue it well, wee were all created together. Being adiured to name the good Angell of father Michaelis, he answered: hee hath three, his good Angell from his natiuitie is the hundreth of the Powers, and is called Iesia; as he is Inquisitor he hath an Arch-angell, which is the 2000. of the same Order: as Superiour and Prelate of the rest, hee hath for his guardian the hundreth of the order of Throes. The Angell of father Frier Anthonie Boilletot is the 15. of th'Arch-angels, and is called Simplicity. The Angell of father Romillon, is the 4000. of the Arch-angels, called Burning inflammation. The Angell of father Francis Billet is the 4001. of the Arch angels named Cleere-sight. Magdalene being demanded if shee patiently indured all those paines, answered yes, and that shee suffered all in hope of the remission of her sinnes: and told vs that the same day after dinner Lewes the Magician according to his wont came vnto her, together with diuers others, telling her that hee was exceedingly tormented, notwithstanding he willingly indured all those torments for her sake, howbeit she refused him.

At euening during the time of the second Exorcisme Belzebub tormented her that was possessed in like manner as hee had done in the morning, affirming that the Magician was there present, and inioyned him to do as he did; and as if he had compassion on her, he said, she can indure no more, if this last but one halfe houre, all this tragedie will be ended.

Being demanded in what state the Magician then was: he answered with indignation, goe looke, hee is tormented in all his body, particularly in his head, his reines and his heart, and yet not visibly before men, but secretly ſecretly in his chamber from 10. at night vntill the morning, and would keepe his bed were it not for feare of diſcouering his griefe. Then ſaid Verrine, the Magicians are worſe then Diuels, for the Diuels adore God, and tremble, ſpecially when the poſſeſſed receaue the Communion, hiding and retiring themſelues, or getting vnder the tongue to let their Mr. paſſe ouer; and if God ſhould create a thouſand hell's, the Magician were worthie of more puniſhment then they all could inflict vpon him.

Being demanded by what meanes hee might be conuinced to be the man: by this meanes (quoth he) if he be apprehended and impriſoned by the Biſhop of Marſeille, you ſhall finde that hee is marked on the head with the marke [f] of the Diuel, as Prieſts and religious perſons carry ſhauen crowns for the marke of Ieſus Chriſt. Then ſaid he, there is one come hither vnder the pretence of deuotion, but indeed to ſee Magdalene, with whom he is [t] ſottiſhly fallen in loue ſince her poſſeſſion, yet at length it may be out of deſpite, he will be drawen to accuſe the Magician.

[f] The markes which witches haue vpon them.

[t] It fell out ſo indeed about 3. moneths after.

The Acts of the firſt of February, being Tewſday.

BElzebub at the morning Exorciſme, tormented Magdalene in the ſame faſhion as he had done the day before, ſaying, This is enough to make an end of thee; and being adiured, he ſaid, that he was commanded to doe ſo, and that the Magician was there preſent, and ſo tormented her ſtill more vehemently, by reaſon whereof they brought him into the holy houſe where Belzebub vttered theſe ſpeeches: Thou ſaieſt, that I muſt go fetch the writings, I go, and there-with all he iſſued out of her body very ſenſiblie. In the meane ſeaſon Magdalene renounced the Diuell and all writings made vnto him after her wonted manner, Belzebub was obſerued vpon his returne to bring the writings to the the Magician, requyring him to ratifie them a new for the farther hardning of her to be of the Diuels side, and to resist the inspirations of God.

At the euening Exorcismes Belzebub continued to torment Magdalene, and a litle after he said, What wilt thou? I can torment her no more, for shee wanteth strength; if shee had as much strength as the maide of Aix, I would worke more powerfully vpon her, and as we vnderstood it, he talked to the Magician: but in the [u] meane time hee ceased not to torture her, casting her somewhiles downe to the ground vpon her belly, and sometimes againe vpon her back, and that with great violence; and after that hee tooke her three or foure times by the winde-pipe to choake her, but by the strength of the prayers of those which were present, and specially of those words, Et verbum caro factum est, he forsoke his hold.

After this Belzebub by the hand of the maide opened the yron doore of the holy house saying, get in quickly: we vnderstood thereby that he let in the Magician to ratifie (as he had said) the writings brought from Marseille, and then issued forth, as if hee had crept through the hole of the yron gate, crying and saying, within there it is too hote, and they which abide there, burne; for the heate is too great to abide it any long time.

The acts of the 2. of Feb uary being Wednesday and the Purification of our Lady.

AT the morning Exorcisme Belzebub continued his wonted outrages, laughing, dancing and singing loue-songs thereby to prophane the holiday according to his wont, yet did hee not torment Magdalene in that high degree as hee had done the dayes before, saying that Lewes was then hindred from being present by reason that he heard diuers confessions at Marseille, being taken vp with businesse there all the morning.

At

[u] God permitted these extraordinary tortures which indured vntill the Magician was vpon the last of April burned, that Magdalene might be truely conuerted, who had escaped from a great gulfe of voluptuousnesse and sins. To breake therefore these euill habits, which long custome had made familiar vnto her, shee needed great mortifications, and that which was said of the Canaanitish woman may well be said of her. Malè à dæmonio vexatur.

At the Euen-song as they were singing Magnificat, and being come to that verset y Deposuit potentes de sede, he beganne to cry aloud, and to grunt and shewed himselfe much moued as he had done to the former part of the Euen-song the day before, yet all this day was Magdalene quiet.

y He made this out-cry, because he was occasioned to remember his fall.

Being demanded and adiured to tell whether or no we had inclosed the Magician, when we shut the doore of the holy house the last night, and opened it not afterwards, he answered, goe looke. Being demanded whether he would sweare that he was not there: he answered, I wil neither sweare that he is there, nor that hee is not there.

Being adiured with punishments imposed, he answered, he indeed entred, but he came presently forth againe. After this Magdalen fully renounced the Diuels, and all the powers of hel, imploring the mercy of Iesus Christ, and calling vpon the Saints in manner as wee haue formerly declared.

The acts of the 3. of February being Thursday.

AT the morning Exorcisme Belzebub sharply tormented Magdalene, as hee had done the dayes before.

Being demanded whether the Magician Lewes were shut into the holy house: he answered, he is so far from that, that behold him there, pointing with his finger to the middle of the Church, he is there (quoth hee) with his liuetenant, they entred indeed but fearing to be taken, they made no stay, but pronounced whiles they abode there these speeches: I renounce God, and ratifie the writinges made vnto Lucifer, and all that I haue promised and sworne vnto him. Being commanded to sweare vpon the third prayer of the Canon, which the Priest saies after the Communion, without any more adoe he laid his hand on the booke, and swore with the the conditions required. adding farther, I sweare that we will not goe forth hence till the Magician Lewes be either conuerted or dead, for by this meanes God will root out al the Synagogue of Magicians and witches, such is his will, and so hee hath reuealed it vnto vs.

Being demanded if hee would sweare by the words of the Consecration of the bloud, hee presently put his hands vpon those words, saying, I Belzebub sweare in the name of the Father, the Sonne and the holy Ghost, that it is Gods pleasure, we should not depart from the possession of this body, vntill Lodouicus Prince of the Magicians be either conuerted or dead, as well for the rooting out of his Synagogue, as for the confusion of Lucifer, and this I sweare according to your meaning and the intention of the Church triumphant and militant, without any sinister reseruation whatsoeuer.

Being demanded whether the Magician knew the will of God in that behalfe, or vnderstood what had then been sworne: he answered laughing, yes, for hee is euen now here present, but skornes all that hath been said, affirming that hee will liue a Magician in despite of God.

The Exorcist being about to impose punishments on him, why (said he) should you impose punishments on me since I obay you: impose it on the Magician who would hinder mee from obeying, and command him not to beat me for obeying, and likewise command his liuetenant the same, who beats mee in his absence, and so it was done accordingly.

Being demanded how it came to passe that all yesterday Magdalene was quiet. It was (quoth hee) because the Magician could not be present, being [z] taken vp in the morning (it being the holiday of his Church) with confessions, and at night with the Priests of his Church, but as for me God hath preuailed against me, and Fortitude the good Angell of this Maide was the instrument of the victory.

[z] The day of the Purification was the feast of the Church of Aconles at Marseille.

The

The Acts of the fourth of February, being Friday.

AT the Euening Exorcisme (for at that in the Morning, there was no new thing deliuered) Belzebub was adiured to name the good Angell of father [a] Friar Honore Lyon (who was newly come thither) & turning towards him he said: his good Angell is called Agilitie; and (quoth hee) if thou wert so nimble to serue God and to obserue his Commandements, thou wouldest be a braue fellow.

Being demanded wherefore that Euening hee committed so many outrages, laughing and playing of tricks: It is (quoth he) because this day which is Friday, Lewes hath offered great iniurie to the Consecrated host in despight of Christs passion, of which this day is a commemoration: he farther added, that [b] all the Nunnes of Saint Vrsula should bee deliuered, either from the Deuils which possessed them (there being fiue of them possessed) or from their inchantments, but that Magdalene should not be deliuered till the whole processe of the Magician was ended: but yet she should not be so tormented as now she was.

Being adiured to tell with whom he talked that afternoone: for he answered some body, and yet we perceaued not the voice of any that talked with him, he replied that it was with Fortitudo the good Angell of Magdalene, and after many refusals and punishments imposed on him, he answered farther that he had reuealed vnto him from God, that the Almighty had decreed that the Magician should be discouered with all his Complices if they repented not; and that all his Synagogue should be dissolued, & that by one of these three meanes: [c] either that Belzebub when the Magician was at Aix, should crie alowde by the mouth of Magdalene in the presence of an honorable company, and some Iudges of the Parliament, giuing them to vnderstand

[a] Hee is one of the ancients, in the Couent at Saint Maximin.

[b] This prediction fell out afterward to be true.

[c] This happened at Aix many dayes together in the Archbishops Chappell when they said Masse: for hee then would cry as lowde as he could, that he renounced Christ and his passion in the name of Lewes Gaufridy Prince of Magicians. Many heard the same, and some Iudges of the Court were there also. See the Acts of the 1. day of March.

vnderstand that Lewes Gaufridy was prince of the Magicians;and he would be so lowde,that they should be very deafe if they heard him not. Or if he escaped from them, that then whiles the forenamed Lewes was saying Masse at Acoules in Marseille, when hee should turne himselfe to the people, and should say orate fratres,Belzebub by his mouth would crie alowd; Lewes Gaufridy Priest of Acoules in Marseille is the cheife of the Magicians. Or lastly, Belzebub going foorth of Magdalene, would take vpon him the shape of a man (because that function belongs not to women) and going vp into the pulpit would preach publiquely in the Church of Acoules, where the said Gaufridy abode, that Lewes Preist of Acoules was the Prince of Magicians,and would withall lay open all his knaueries and inchantments, which hee had practised since the time he first tooke that profession vpon him. Being demanded when that would come to passe, hee answered [d] that it was onely reuealed to him.

[d] The fact, not the time reuealed.

He farther said and swore, that Fortitudo holding a sword in his hand, forbad him on Gods behalfe to tempt Magdalene any more to vnchast behauiour by making the inchantment to worke in her for that purpose; and in this (said hee) I could not resist the will of God intimated vnto mee by [e] Fortitudo, and howbeit the Magician hath sollicited me to do so,threatning me in the name of his Master Lucifer, yet I answered him that I could not and that God hindred me, telling him farther that if he knew that which was reuealed vnto mee it would astonish him, yet did I not tell him that which I knew, though now I haue vttered it being forced by the vertue of Exorcismes.

[e] The good Angell is assisting vnto Magdalene.

He farther said and swore vpon the Canon of the Masse,laying his hands (being first commanded thereunto) vpon the prayer made after the offering (howbeit the [f] Exorcist shewed him another to trie what he would doe) that the last night as the Magician was saying saying Masse to the assemblie of the Witches, Magdalene looked on, but was not able to moue her selfe or to crie out that her assistants might take notice of it: And he brought and presented vnto her the consecrated host to receiue it at his hand, which shee refused to do or any way to yeeld consent vnto it, and as the said Magician continued instantly to importune her, shee g saw within the Host a little infant, marueilous faire, shining and casting forth very pleasant beames and saying vnto her, I will not my daughter that thou receiue mee from the hands of mine enemies, but onely from the hands of my seruants; with which shee was exceedingly comforted and strengthened. This did Belzebub when hee went out of her, report to the Magician and to his adherents, who sawe not the miracle, which as soone as they heard they began to weepe, foreseeing their ruine: notwithstanding they came againe to Magdalene and prayed her to receiue the Host, in as much as shee was conuerted, and that it might be shee had some vision, which was but an illusion, yet she still refused it, and though the diuell opened her mouth by force, yet had not the Magician the power to put the Host into it. But after that shee had long resisted, at length the foresaid child shut her lippes. h After this the Magician desired an haire of her head, which she refused to giue; knowing that that were to do homage to the Deuill if any thing were giuen him: after that againe he demanded halfe an haire, which when shee refused to doe, he then caused her to suffer grieuous punishments, in so much as she rested not all that night, nor fiue dayes after during the Exorcismes; which notwithstanding shee indured with great patience, for the loue of God, and the remission of her sinnes.

[f] The triall of the Deuill.

g A vision in the holy Host.

h We must not consent or giue way vnto the Deuill in the least thing that is: so that if he come and demand but a rush of vs, wee are not to giue it vnto him.

The assistants who watched with her all the night, witnessed that shee lay still as one in a dreame not able to speake so much as one word, and Magdalene her selfe confessed that it was all true which hath bin deliuered

deliuered of the Hoſt.

The Acts of the 5. of February being Saturday.

AT the morning Exorciſme there being a Frier of the order of S Francis come thither, and bringing with him ſome Reliques which [i] a Cardinall had giuen him at Rome, hee laid them ſoftly and ſecretly on Magdalenes back, at which the Diuell began to cry out that they ſhould take that away, for it burned him

Being adiured to tell what it was: he anſwered there are two things which I ſpecially feare, the wood of the Croſſe, and a bone of S. Lawrence, the others I feare not much, and it was indeed found to bee true which he had ſaid.

The ſame day after dinner father Michaelis with his companion father Frier Anthony Boilletot, parted from S. Baume to goe to S. Maximin, and from thence to Aix to preach there the Lent following; and being arriued at Aix, he went preſently to ſalute Monſieur du Vair chiefe Preſident of the court of Parliament, giuing him to vnderſtand what had paſſed at S. Baume from the firſt of Ianuary 1611. to the fifth of February, touching the trial whether thoſe two maides (of whom there was ſo much talke in all the Country) were indeed poſſeſſed or not, and vpon triall hee found that they were in very truth poſſeſſed, and to that purpoſe he had diſcouered three reall tokens in Magdalene: the firſt that ſhee was truely poſſeſſed, as appeared by ſundry vndoubted effects: the ſecond, that being of the age of nineteene yeares, ſhe was found to be defloured, as her ſelfe confeſſed: the third, that ſhee had the markes of the Diuell vpon her bodie, which were depriued of ſenſe and feeling, as himſelfe had diſcouered at S. Baume: and that beſides this the wicked ſpirits which poſſeſſed both Louyſe and Magdalene, proteſted that all this hapned by the inchantments of one Lewes Gaufridy fridy chiefe of the Magicians and dwelling at Marseille. Which as soone as the forenamed President vnderstood, he thought good to send for the two maides to Aix, [k] who arriued there the 16. of the same moneth of February.

[i] Another trial of the Diuel.

[k] The arrival of the two women that were possessed at Aix.

The acts of the 17. day of February, being Thursday and the day after Ashwednesday.

THis day after dinner Monsieur du Vair chief President, came to the Arch-bishops palace where Magdalene was; there being also come thether Garandeau Vicar to the Lord Arch-bishop of Aix, and some others, and began to put Magdalene to certaine interrogatories, assuring her shee should finde fauour and escape vnpunished, if she would tell the truth how matters had passed from the beginning to the end. And as she began to relate how the Magician first seduced her, the [l] Diuel caught her by the winde-pipe within, thereby not suffering her to speake, and making as if hee meant to choake her, he made her eies to turne in her head, and this lasted a pretty while. At which the said President and the other beholders much merueiled. After certaine Exorcismes the Diuell left his hold, and Magdalene went on with her discourse, which beeing ended she shewed the marke of the Diuell in her foote, and the said President thrusting a pinne into it vp to the very head, Magdalene felt nothing neither did any bloud issue forth, but at the thrusting in of the pinne they might easily perceaue a noise as it had beene the pearcing of parchment. He saw besides this another euident proofe, which was that Belzebub held himselfe in the former part of her head, making there a continuall motion, and heauing vp that part in such sort that a man laying his hand on it might easily perceaue it. And Belzebub being commanded by the Exorcist (who was for that time father Michaelis) to leaue her by the space of

[l] The signes of Magdalens possession and her markes.

of one Miserere, he presently left her, issuing sensiblie out of her mouth, and thereupon instantly the motion of her head ceased, as the said President found by laying his hand on the place. The time prefixed being expired, he returned again, making a great noise in token of his repossession, where-upon hee presently felt the motion againe as before. The same passages played Leuiathan who held the hinder part of the head, and if they were commanded to leaue her for the space of three Misererees, they exactly obserued their time; and this was euery day tried by the iniunction of the Exorcist, when any personages of note came thither to see her. And besides this, [m] Monsieur Fonteine Doctour of Physick and the Kings professour, made the same experiment and found it to bee true the 19. of February. The like did the other Phisitians of the same citty, namely Merindol and Grassi Doctours and professours in Physick, together with Monsieur Bon-temps a skilfull Surgeon and Anatomist of the same cittie, all iudging it to be a matter aboue the ordinary course of nature.

[m] The witnes of Physicians and Surgeons.

The Acts of the 18. and 19. of February being the Friday and Saturday.

THe said Monsieur Fonteine beeing come thither to make triall of that which we haue spoken of vpon the possessed, wore a goune that he had and said, if thou be Belzebub I am the Curat of a village not farre from hence, and am come to exorcise thee. Then answered [n] Belzebub (for the maid had neuer seen him nor knowne him in all her life) if thou bee a Priest take thy stole and shew mee thy shauen crowne; but thou art of the number of them which Cure when they can, and when they can not they giue ouer.

[n] He speaketh vnto Monsieur Fonteine the Physitian.

At the Masse the Priest hauing forgotten to put wine in the Chalice, Belzebub cryed out, Wilt thou say Masse without Masse. Where-upon the Priest looking into it, put wine in his Chalice.

The same day Belzebub played his olde trickes, and father Romillons seruant being about to binde Magdalene with the tippet, Belzebub strucke him saying, Is it for thee to binde me? Where-upon the Priest himselfe tooke it and bound him without any resistance. In the meane time, whiles the o Commissioners Seguiran and Rabasse the Kings Aduocate parted from Aix to Marseille to fetch the Magician: Belzebub and the other Diuels ceased not to cry and howle, not suffering Magdalene to confesse or communicate.

o The Commissioners that were deputed to fetch the Magician.

The Acts of the 20. of February being Sunday.

THe Magician being that day come and clapt vp in prison about ten of the clocke at night, there was heard the skriching of a great Owle from the top of the prison tower, and many dogs howled about the prison.

The Acts of the 22. 23. and 24. of February

Belzebub being demanded at the exorcisme where the Magician was, and what he then did; he answered, he is now no longer in the dungeon, yet is hee very sad: and so he was indeed found: for Monsieur Seguiran one of the Commissioners gaue order to set him at large with the rest of the prisoners. And Seugiran comming to the Arch-bishops Palace after dinner, Belzebub told him all that hee had done p at Marseille, whereat hee was exceedingly astonished: as first that Lewes freely and of his owne accord rendred himselfe vnto him, as it had beene an innocent lambe: and that the Ladie Liberta and other gentle-women became suiters vnto him in the behalfe of Lewes, affirming that he was a very honest man, and alleging other such matter to the like purpose. He farther said, that hauing aduertised Lewes of the Commissioners comming thi-p Belzebub reciteth things that were acted in remote places.

ther. Lewes answered, what should I doe? shall I goe any where from hence? Where-unto he answered, that it behoued him to take heed to that, for by this meanes he would make himselfe guilty. Yea, but said the Magician, they will put mee to the rack. Belzebub answered, I will take order that thou shalt haue no feeling of that. Then the Magician replyed, it may be so, but yet many dye there-with. Belzebub reioyned, what is that to the purpose, if thou imploy thy life in the seruice of so great a Lord as Lucifer, who hath done so much for-thee? Heere-upon the Magician was silent, and resolued to doe as Belzebub perswaded him. After this day the wicked spirits began to put Magdalene to the rack, turning and wresting her armes and legs, lifting her vp on high, and laying on her many tortures three or foure times a day. And this spectacle some of the Presidents and Counsellors, as well of the one Court as of the other, stood by, and looked on diuers times, hearing him say withall, Thou wilt cause Lewes to be put to the rack, it is good reason then that I put thee to the rack, and at the Exorcismes hee made her to cry so loud and so long, that they feared least shee had broken a vaine.

[a] See the impudence of Diuels.

The Acts of the 25. of February being Fryday.

Belzebub beeing at the Exorcisme adiured to tell whence hee came the day before, being Thursday, and the 24. of February, when as he had left the possessed woman for a time: hee answered, from visiting our Mr. Lewes, who is in prison very sad.

Being adiured to tell what conference he had with him there: Hee answered, he delt with mee to hide the markes of his body, and to turne them inward: as also those of Magdalene that they might not serue as testimonies against him, which I promised him to doe.

Being demanded whether it was in his power to doe

it: he anſwered, yes, and that he would doe it to make men beleue that ſuch markes were but imaginary. And further, I haue promiſed (quoth hee) to free him from priſon within theſe eight daies. We haue found by experience that this was a fallacy, for it is true indeed [r] that he departed out of priſon eight daies after he was committed, but it was to bring him to the Palace there to confront him with Magdalene, and afterwards to ſearch for his markes.

[r] The Diuell is a couſener and deceiueth euen thoſe that he calleth his. Yet here it was no deceite, but an impotency and want of ability: God gaue hinderance here vnto by his good Angell, becauſe the Magicians markes might be found out.

The Acts of the 26. of February being Saturday.

ABout foure of the clock in the after-noone the Phiſitians Founteine and Graſſi, together with Bontemps the Surgeon and Anatomiſt found againe the motion in the [f] forenamed parts of Magdalens head, as if it had been Frogs mouing in the inſide, but Belzebub being once departed out of her, they found the beating of the braine to ceaſe, and to be in her as in other men. And hauing felt her pulſe in both armes, and found that it beat equally without any alteration, they thereupon concluded, that the foreſaid motion was not naturall, but aryſing rather from voluntary then naturall ſpirits.

[f] Another trial made by the Phyſitians.

At the ſame time Aſmodeus the cheiftaine of Luxurie began to moue Magdalene to wanton and vnchaſt actions, as hee had often done at S. Baume, thereby to bring her to ſhame. After this the ſaid Phiſitians and Surgeons cauſed her ſometimes to walke, and then to ſit and to make repreſſion of thoſe motions as much as ſhe could, but ſhe being then in her right ſenſes anſwered, that ſhe could not by any meanes hinder it, nor could they themſelues withſtand or remedy this ſame whence they inferred that by the courſe of nature this could not be.

[t] A notable & ſenſible effect of the bleſſed Sacrament.

[t] It is obſeruable, that euery day during the holy Maſſe the Diuell aſſaulted her extremely in all the parts of

of her body, and it was maruelous to the beholders to see, that when shee had once receaued the holy Communion, presently those motions ceased, and there followed a great calme as well in her soule as in her body.

The same day one of the Diuels, who called himselfe Carton, cried and howled saying, that hee was beaten and burned.

Being adiured to yeeld the reason why, he onely answered, it is that accursed Fortitude the good Angell of Magdalene which beats mee often repeating, Accursed [u] Fortitude let mee alone, and this lasted by the space of an houre.

[u] The Diuell wel swinged by the good Angel.

The acts of the 27. of February being Sunday.

FAther Francis Billet saying Masse, and being come to his memento, Belzebub cryed out foure times, Why [x] prayest thou for Magdalene? And when Masse was ended, the Priest assured vs that hee then prayed for her. Afterward the Diuell would not suffer her to set her knee on the ground. And as they forced her to doe it, Belzebub said, no, it is not yet time: but as soone as the Priest had ended the last words of the Consecration, presently he made her kneele saying, loe there.

[x] He felt the vertue of the prayer, for he cannot vnderstand or diuine the secrets of the heart.

After dinner the markes of the woman that was possessed were searched which shee had in her feet, in her reines and right ouer against her heart, and they were all found to be voyd of sense. Then said Belzebub, I laboured to make them sensible, but God hath hindred me, After this the Diuels put Magdalene to the rack very sorely by the space of a quarter of a houre, in the presence [y] of Monsieur Thoron Counsellor in the Court of Parliament, and deputed for a commissioner in this businesse, and Monsieur Garandean Vicar generall vnto the most reuerend the Arch-bishop of Aix, and also one of the deputed Commissioners, there being withall present Thomassin the Aduocate generall in the Court of of accompts and de Calas of the Kings Counsell in the Parliament of Aix.

[y] Diuers men of quality present at Magdalenes tortures.

Concerning the foresaid [z] markes it is worth the marking, that Monsiour Simeonis, an honest man and a wise, well knowen in that Citty, who managed all the affaires of the Arch bishop, told father Michaelis, that after the markes were found vpon the Magician, hee went to see him, beeing of his acquaintance since his youth, who in a familiar manner assured and told him, I shall but mock the world in comming thither, for I haue a spirit at my command who can free me from all men liuing and couer my markes. And hee demanding how they were then found. The Magician answered, Gods finger is in it.

[z] Witnesse of the Magicians markes.

[a] This is the accomplishment of Verrins prediction, who foretold at S. Baume that Belzebub himselfe should discouer the Magician in a Church, in the presence of Iudges and Counsellors of the Parliamẽt, and should cry so loud, that they should be very deafe who heard it not. And that if after all this they did not execute iustice vpon him, God would vse two other meanes in the citty of Marseille. See the Acts of the 4. of February aboue written.

The acts of the first of March being Tewsday, vntill Sunday.

FRom that day vntill the 15. of the same moneth, during the holy Masse, Belzebub began to make his [a] renouncements in behalfe of the Magician, as Lewes had giuen him cõmission to do, thereby to assure his obstinacy and fastnesse to him. But hauing in charge to do it inwardly, God intended to manifest his malice by the ministery of Fortitude, and therefore caused them to make them outwardly with as loud a voice as the maide could cry, in so much as it was doubted, least shee had broken a vaine, terrifying all the beholders, and driuing away some who were the more fearefull.

He cryed saying, I renounce Paradise in the behalfe of Lewes Gaufridy. I renounce the Trinity, the Father, the Sonne and the holy Ghost, in the behalfe of Lewes Gaufridy. I renounce the Eucharist, all holy Inspirations, all the members of Iesus Christ (naming them all from the head to the feet, and particularly renouncing euery particular member) all the Masses and Prayers which were said for him, and any thing that might serue as a meanes for his saluation. After this hee added I renounce the Virgin Mary, I renounce Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, Uriel, Fortitude, and all the Quiers of Angels. Peter and all the Apostles. Lawrence and all the Martyrs. Gregory and all the Doctours. Lazarus and all the Bishops. Dominique and Francis with all the Confessours and Votaries. Mary Magdalene and all Penitents. Martha and all Virgins, all Instructions and Sermons, adding to euery one, In the behalfe of Lewes. Lastly hee concluded, with the [b] Masses of Michaelis, Romillon, Francis Billet, and Anthony Boilletot.

serue

And when the Chalice was eleuated, hee cryed out sundry tymes, Lord, I renounce thee and thy bloud, and let the bloud of the Iust one fall vpon me in the behalfe of Lewes Gaufridy.

[c] There was at that present an Heretick walking in the hall which ioynes vpon the Chapell of the Palace, whom his brother being a Catholike, had brought thither to beholde these strange sights, but hee durst not enter the Chapell. Then Belzebub cryed, make that Heretick come in, whereat the by-standers were much astonished. Then said the brother of the Heretick who was there present, he speakes truth, for my brother who is an Heretick walkes in the hall.

[d] Thus continued he all the dayes following, during which time the Magician Lewes was brought to the Chappel, to the end he might vnderstand the renouncements which Belzebub made on his behalfe. And as Lewes beheld Magdalene thus tormented of the Diuel, Belzebub turning himselfe towards him, said, Come hither my friend, and see if I doe not torment her as much as thou desirest At this passage was present Monsieur Thoron Counsellour of the Court of Parliament, and Commissioner in this businesse, with diuers others. This hapened on Saturday after Masse.

[e] The same Saturday after dinner, the Magician was againe brought to speake with Magdalene face to face

[b] It is to bee noted, that these 4. had on this day said Masse in the Chapel of the Arch bishops Pallace at Aix for his conuersion.

[c] The Diuels knowledge of things absent.

[d] Lewes the Magician brought into the Chapel.

[e] They were faine to keepe the Chapel doore shut, because of the throng of people.

face, who ſtill maintained ſtoutly and ſtifly all that ſhee had before deliuered againſt him, f The markes found by the Phyſitians vpon the Magician.

f This done at euening hee was viſited by the three Phiſitians Founteine Merindol and Graſſy, and two Chirurgeons Bontemps and Pronet: and hauing ſtripped him in the preſence of Thoron and Garandeau, the forenamed Commiſſioners, they found him in a ſhamefull and odious faſhion, whereat they were aſhamed themſelues, and turned their faces aſide. Afterwards being blindfolded they ſearched him with needles, and when they touched the ſenſible parts, hee cryed ſaying, You hurt mee; and when hee cryed not, they thurſt in the needle vp to the head without any appearance of ſenſe. By which meanes they found vpon his body three markes, where-upon hauing his eies vnmufled, and being re-apparelled, hee thought that they had found no markes on his body, and ſo returned very merry to the priſon: but two dayes after being aduertiſed of the relation which the forenamed Phiſitions and Surgeons had made, he was much diſmaid at it, g and would needs moue a queſtion, whether the Diuell had power to marke a Chriſtian without his conſent. Then ſaid father Michaelis to Monſieur Thoron, if this man were in Auignion he ſhould be burnt to morrow next, for ſuch markes doe plainely conuince him, and they are neuer found but vpon Magicians. For God permitteth not that his children who are members of the myſticall body of Ieſus Chriſt, ſhould beare the marke of his enemie, but hee markes them inwardly by the holy Ghoſt, and the character of Baptiſme, and outwardly in the forehead by the chriſme and the ſigne of the Croſſe, and by this marke hee diſtinguiſheth the elect from the reprobate in the 7. of the Reuelation. And as it is ſaid in the ſame booke, he will not ſuffer his elect to carry the marke of the beaſt, ſome being willing to diſpute vpon the point, alleaged that God permitted Satan to ſtrike Iob in all his bodie. To which the ſaid father anſwered, g The friuolous queſtion of the Magician.

there

there is great difference betwixt a blow or a ſtripe, and a marke; the blow is giuen for correction, the marke in token of ſubiection: the ſlaues of Turkie carry their maſters marke in their forehead, burnt with an hoat yron, but it is another matter when their maſters whip them till the bloud come. S. Antony and other holy men haue beene beaten by Diuels as Iob was: but you ſhall neuer finde that the Diuell ſtamped markes vpon their bodies, the ſtripes ceaſe, but the markes remaine, and if that could be, the Diuell would marke the Pope himſelfe and all the Iudges, and who is that father of a family who would ſuffer his ſheepe or bull to carry another mans marke? and ſo the queſtion was at an end.

[h] The ſelfe ſame Saterday at the confronting of the one againſt the other. Magdalene ſaid vnto the Magician, Thou canſt not deny foure things: firſt thou canſt not but remember how thou diddeſt abuſe my body, and take away my virginity at my fathers houſe in Marſeille. Secondly, how thou diddeſt lead me to the Synagogue, and with thine owne hand diddeſt baptiſe me in the name of the Diuell, and anoynt me with their execrable Chriſome, cauſing me to renounce God, and my portion in Paradiſe, and to make all other renounciations which they vſe to doe in Synagogues. Thou diddeſt alſo ſtampe the Diuels markes vpon me, which I ſtill carry in my body. Thirdly, thou haſt giuen me an [i] Agnus Dei, and a peach charmed. Fourthly, how thou haſt ſent the Diuels vnto mee, which doe now poſſeſſe mee, becauſe I would enter into the order of S. Vrſula. To theſe accuſations, Lewes the Magician made anſwere, that they were all falſe, and that hee would take his oath in the name of God, the Virgin, and S. Iohn Baptiſt that it was moſt maliciouſly vntrue. Then ſaid Magdalene, I vnderſtand you well. This is the oath of the Synagogue, where, by God the Father, you meane Lucifer: by the Sonne, Belzebub: by the holy Ghoſt, Leuiathan: O damned villaine. By the Mother of God, thou

[h] Magdalenes accuſation and ſtoutneſſe againſt the Magician.

[i] Magdalene did afterwards make relation of this vnto vs, for we were not preſent at their confrontments, but the commiſſiaries haue the acts of theſe things in their hands.

thou meaneſt the mother of Antichriſt, and thou calleſt the Deuill, who is the forerunner of Antichriſt Saint Iohn Baptiſt. Whereupon the ſaid Magician remained much confounded.

And for the more ample demonſtration of his villany. It is to be noted that in an Exorciſme performed at Saint Baume within the holy Penitence Belzebub ſaid, that this Magician was more ſwolne with rancor and malice againſt Chriſt Ieſus then themſelues were: for they did abhorre and hold in deteſtation, the more then deuelliſh inuentions which hee daily deuiſed: hee alſo made certaine accurſed memorialls to helpe the remembrance of thoſe that were in the Synagogue, that they might more abundantly and readily blaſpheme, and do villany to Chriſt Ieſus, eſpecially during the time that he liued vpon the Earth. But (ſaid he) he hath couſened himſelfe, for we haue deceaued him in the ſchedule which he hath made vnto vs, wherein it is couenanted, that after the tearme of 24. yeares he was to be ours, and we were to carry him away body and ſoule: but wee haue ſo cunningly changed the number of yeares that there are but two yeares remaining. It is 14. yeares agoe ſince he was firſt a Magician, and now we haue reduced the ſchedule to ſixteene yeares. It is to be obſerued that Magdalene did vpon this occaſion tell vs that ſhe had vnderſtood by him, that at the firſt he was but a ſorcerer, but the Synagogue ſeeing that he had a practicke head, and did performe the deuilliſh acts that were enioyned him to their content and liking, as alſo becauſe he was a great inuenter of new deuices, thereby to aduance the kingdome of Sathan, they made him a Magician, and at laſt they made choice of him for their Prince.

[k] In the whole courſe and current of the Magicians obſtinacie we haue obſerued: that as the true Chriſtian hath a true ſympathie with the hart of Chriſt Ieſus, and therefore his heart is humble, charitable, patient, &c.

ſo

[k] The difference betwixt the heart of a Catholicke and the heart of a Magician. When God doth not operate all is endarkned; but when he beginneth to put his operations in act, euery thing thereby receaueth life and light, as appeareth in the worke of the Creation. Gen. 1. Now by reaſon of this participation of Magicians with Lucifer, they are not onely poſſeſſed with obſtinacy and blindneſſe, but alſo with a diabolicall rage, which we haue formerly touched.

So the Magicians haue in their heart a participation of the obstinacy of Lucifer, vnto whom they haue dedicated themselues: but this is not by any infusion, for that were impossible, but by adhering and consenting to the ceasles batteries and temptations of the Deuill, by which they are endarkned and remooued from the beame of grace.

The Acts of the 6. of March being Sunday.

AS well at the Exorcismes as at all the Masses which were said this day in the Chapel of the Archbishops Palace, Belzebub did not cease to make diuers renunciations in the name and behalfe of Lewes Gaufridy, as wee haue formerly noted vpon the first of March: but now he vsed more vehemency and cryed so lowde that Magdalene grew hoarse, so that her words could hardly be vnderstood, yet did the Deuill still go on with that impeatuous course of speaking.

The same day Belzebub made recitall of the conference he had with Lewes in prison, after that hee was searched whether he had any markes vpon him, or no, saying vnto him, if thy markes be found betake thy selfe presentlie to renounce God, and all other things as before, and bequeath thy selfe wholy to the seruice of Lucifer. Vnto whom Lewes made answere, Why if the markes be found. I do not possitiuely affirme this, said Belzebub, but I say and demand, if such a thing should happen, wouldest thou endeauour thy selfe to renounce God as formerly thou hast done? To which the Magician replied, I will renounce him for euer, and will for euer serue Lucifer. It is worth obseruation, that when as at sundry times he recited vnto vs things of the like nature tending to the dismasking and opening of the Magician, and we would aske him, why hee made detection of these things that did so much preiudice his confederate and seruant, he made answere, I am constrained thereunto thereunto by your Exorcismes: when I am with him I make shew of great friendship, and seeme ready to do for him whatsoeuer he will command me, but when I am here with you I betray him and make a mocke of him. Know you not that there are Traytors amongst men, and that there is no sinne which a man may commit that is not more amply residing in Deuils, or at the least committed by their instigations and suggestions? If men be Traytors wee deuils are so too: if men bee proud, we goe beyond them also in pride and arrogancy.

l O wretched Magicians! can you haue any affiance in Deuils? put your trust in your good God, Quia fidelis Dominus in omnibus verbis suis, & sanctus in omnibus operibus suis.

The Acts of the 7. of March being Munday.

Belzebub still continuing to make the renunciations aforesaid at the time of Masse, Magdalene grew hoarse more and more, so that she could scarsly speake a word. Vpon this there came in by chance a certaine honest Priest an Almner vnto a Bishop, vnto whom Belzebub turned himselfe, and said: behold a m true Priest, who goeth in good clothes, and is not like one of these poore snakes ill fauouredly attired and al to be tattered: nay, which is more he hath crownes in his purse. All which was found to be true, the said Priest confessing that he had indeede certaine crownes about him. So that it appeareth that the gaudy and soft rayments of Priests is pleasing to Belzebub, who is wonderously contented to see silkes and veluets worne by Priests in their owne clothes which they vsually weare: but hee cannot endure to see them worne in the Priestly vestments that belong vnto the Altar.

m The Vestments of Priests.

The Acts of the 8. and 9. of March being Tewsday and Wednesday.

VPon these two daies Belzebub at the time of Masse did make Magdalene to skud and runne vp and downe downe the Chapel from one end to the other, although [m] she were vpon her knees, laughing and making mouthes, which was very wonderfull to behold. At the Gospell, Belzebub held her in, and beganne to make his accustomed renunciations as afore said, crying and making repetition of them in behalfe of Lewes Gaufridy. And Monsieur Perrin a Burgesse of Marseille chancing to come into the Chapel, hee disclosed vnto him [n] that his wife was beset and inuironed with a dreadfull troope of Diuels.

Vpon Wednesday about foure of the clock in the after noone, there came a certaine man of Marseille into the chamber where Magdalene remayned of purpose to see her. At which very time all the Diuels which were in Magdalens body were [o] in an vprore against the Magician, and did endeuoure to expresse their rage by crying and making a noyse as Magdalene reported, who affirmed that shee strugled with all her forces to hinder them from making this out-cry, so that her face became extreamly red there-with-all, as the Reuerend father Celsus, Gardian of the Capuchin fathers at Aix, and another Frier his companion together, with many others who heard this report, did rightly obserue.

[p] At the morning Exorcisme father Francis the Capuchin being assisted by father Lawrence of the same order, did adiure Belzebub by the power of God, to disclose what the nature of that strãge sicknes was, wherewith father Angel the Capuchin was for the space of foure yeares so grieuously tormented. After much renitency and imposition of punishments, hee answered, that he was charmed at Marseille, when he sat at supper in the house of Monsieur de Greau, where Lewes Gaufridy and Magdalene, were also present, where the said Lewes caused the charme to bee put in the said fathers glasse by the inuisible assistance of Diuels, which was compounded of many powders, and of the bones of young children which they had eaten in their Sabbaths.

And

[m] The strange manner of Magdalens running vpon her knees.

[n] This woman was bewitched by the Magician, concerning which, there is mention made in the sentence giuen against the said Magician.

[o] It is the manner which some haue well obserued to be vsuall among Diuels, that they hate others that come vpon their ground & possessions: which proceedeth from their pride & enuy.

[p] A charme giuen by the Magician.

And the said charme did inuade his whole body, so that he is not yet able to helpe himselfe, and hath no Diuels in his body, but without. Also one named Cordon fell sick, & lay bound in his body, to the end that a charme which the Magician gaue him, out of hatred that he had been reproued by him, when he preached at Marseille and lodged in his house, about his ouer much familiarity with women, might haue the better operation.

It is a note very obseruable, that this day there was a new charme cast vpon Magdalene to breed in her a loathing of eating flesh, fish, or eggs, and of drinking wine, to the end that by dis-seasoning and distempering her, shee might die for hunger, or at the least make retraction of her depositions against the Magician. And q the truth is, that as soone as shee to shew her obedience did offer to taste the least bitt of those things, the Diuell presently pulled her from the table, and r racked her in a horrible manner, wresting backward her legs and armes, and making her bones to crack and grate one against the other, and making her fingers crooke sundry ways, which indured sometimes for the space of halfe an houre, sometimes a quarter of an houre, and sometimes an houre. And this terrible handling continued till the end of Aprill, at what time the Magician confessed the fact. There also came much people of the best note in the citty of Aix, at the time when Magdalene vsed to dine and sup purposely to see this spectacle.

One day after dinner a Ladie brought her some drage powder, and some Syrope to giue her to drinke, but the Diuell would by no meanes permit her, shutting her teeth and saying, All such things are too nourishing.

q Ye that are sinners consider seriously how grieuous the punishments are vnto which your sins make you liable.

r The horrible and rude handling vsed by the Diuels towards Magdalene.

The Acts of the 10. of March being Thursday.

VPon this day Magdalene reported to vs, that about midnight last past, shee being not able to take her rest, walked vp and downe in her chamber, and vpon the sudden found her selfe circled & ringed in by a troope a troope of Diuels, who all perſwaded her to returne vnto them. Vpon her refuſall, they bad her call to remembrance, whether the day before being the wedneſday in mid-lent, ſhee and ſome others had not bequeached halfe their hearts vnto the Diuell, and the other halfe to the Prince of Magicians, and whether ſhee had not done the like by her body? Which ſhee did remember by this accident, although formerly ſhee had not thought vpon the ſame: but hauing many tymes renounced all theſe Diabolicall donations, the Diuels preſently vaniſhed away.

At the morning Exorciſme Belzebub cryed with a loud voice, the Diuell take all Magicians, who are the cauſe of theſe ſo vnſupportable torments which I endure: for wee might eaſily perceaue that hee was grieuouſly tormented by his puffing, and fuming, and turmoyling himſelfe, as if hee had been in a hot boyling caldron. Then taking Magdalene by the throate, as his manner was, making ſhew as if he would ſtrangle her, father Anthony Boilletot ſ did put two of his conſecrated fingers vpon her throte, where-upon Belzebub cryed, the Diuel take theſe conſecrated fingers that doe put me to this paine.

ſ The Diuels haue no power to bite conſecrated fingers.

Here is to be noted, and experience it ſelfe doth cleer it vp vnto vs, that when a Prieſt doth put his conſecrated fingers in the mouthes of thoſe that are poſſeſſed, and betwixt their teeth, the Diuels dare not byte them, and are at a ſtand, as an horſe checkt with a bit, crying and ſaying, Put other fingers heere, and thou ſhall ſee how wee will vſe them. This experience ought to put the Miniſters of Hereticks with all their adherents to vtter ſhame and confuſion.

The Acts of the 11. and 12. of March being Fryday and Saturday.

THe Magician Lewes did vpon Fryday intreate Monſieur Garandeau, and Monſieur Thoron, two of the Comissaries to send vnto him Monsieur Gombert Priest of Nostre Dame de Grace, and of the congregation of the Oratory, that he might confesse himselfe vnto him, hauing at that time some glimpse and dawning of that diuine light, although afterward there could no great signe of contrition be perceaued in him.

The same Fryday after dinner, a certaine gentleman publickly knowen to bee an Heretick through all the city of Aix, came vnto Magdalen and said vnto her, Wench take away all these Crosses that thou hast about thee, and thou wilt presently be deliuered, for all is nothing but [u] imaginatiõs: for my part I could wish that al the Diuels which are in thy body might enter and take possessiõ of me, this was thought to be a very rash speech.

Vpon Saturday Monsieur Garandeau did question Magdalene, what those red pimples were which were found vpon the reines and shoulders of Lewes. She answered, I know thẽ wel, for euery Wednesday and Friday in the moneth of March, the Magicians are marked by Diuels with a peece of hote yron in contempt of the wounds of Christ Iesus. In discoursing thus, the Diuell who euer since Thursday was silent, and had withdrawne himselfe, leapes vp into her tongue and said furiously, thou makest a discouery of me.

Being asked who it was that spake: she answered, It was Balberith, who in Scripture is called Baalberith. Iudg. 9.

The Acts of the 13. 14. 15. and 16. of March being Sunday, Monday, Tewsday and Wednesday.

DVring these foure dayes there happened no new occurrents, but onely certaine strange gestures, and some renunciations as vpon former dayes.

[t] Mens conuersions from those faults that are enormous, doe ordinarily goe by degrees & succession, as hath been experienced in the conuersion of Magdalene, which at length was perfected vp & approoued by the markes that departed from her. A demonstration or externall emblem hereof is in the blinde man in S. Mark chap. 8. vpon whom Christ Iesus laid his hands two seuerall times, & so at first he began to see imperfectly, afterwards his sight became more perfect.

[u] He conceited that it was nothing but imagination, not hauing been much conuersant with her that was possessed. The Diuels that were in the bodies of some harmelesse and innocent sisters of S. Vrsula, vpon their being Exorcised did say, wee will depart from hence in time, but wee are already prouided of a body to enter into it at our pleasure. Yet would we not iudge this to be ment de individuo.

The Acts of the 17. and 18. day of March being Thursday and Fryday.

THe Thursday at night, because the Sexton of the Cathedrall Church at Aix called S. Saviour, which is ioyning vpon the Arch-bishops house, had reported vnto Monsieur Garandeau, that in the Chapel which is called the Chapel of S. Saviour, and is the most priuate place of all the Church, and the most charily kept, there was a Reliquary locked with a key, where there were many bones decently and reuerently ranked, and no man knew what it was, but that there was a likelyhood that it might be the Relicks of Saints, the said Garandeau was of opinion to haue her that was possessed to be brought thither, and to exorcise her in that very place, to see the countenance and the portment of the Diuell. Being come thither, they tooke two skulls, one of a lesser size and another greater, and applyed them one after the other vnto her that was possessed: where-upon she wagged her head from one side to the other, and could not stand quyet, but euer said, take this away.

The Diuell being many times exorcised to tell what Relicks these were. He answered, with some renitency: they are the Relicks of Bishops: would to God that I were as holy as they, yet are they at deadly feud and enmity with me. He that spake this was Belzebub. Then he cryed. I can indure this no longer, I must get mee gone, and so he departed as he was accustomed. And when the Priests that were there present, had giuen thankes vnto God, saying, Te Deum, and the prayer to the blessed Trinity, Monsieur Garandeau began againe to Exorcise, and applied vnto her the said skulls, where-upon shee turned her head heere and there, as shee had formerly done, saying, Touch mee not, I doe very sufficiently feele the vertue that is in them.

Being asked who it was that spake, the Deuill answered, I am Oscillon that doe now speake, for Belzebub is gone to giue the Magician aduise to weepe (because it was commonly said, that Magicians doe neuer weepe) and Magdalene being questioned concerning the same, when the Priests had left Exorcising, she confessed, that when Magicians or Sorcerers would weepe, they put the two fingers next the thumbe vpon the two temples of their head, and then they fall a weeping presently, but not from apprehension of greefe as others doe, albeit they see themselues in danger of death, but coldly and forcedly, so that you shall scarsly see their teares to descend lower then their cheekes.

Father Celsus, Gardian of the couent of the Capuchins at Aix, being together with his companion, aduertised hereof, * who did conuerse in prison with the Magician, and kept him company all the time of Lent vntill his death, remaining with him at night to comfort him & to exhort him to repent, that so he might dis-engage himselfe from those wicked spirits, which should come to visit him for further confirmation of his obstinacy, which they did with great charity and mortification. God so blessing them that they did not loose their paines, but were the instruments of the acknowledgement which he made of his sinnes, and of the confessions and depositions which hee afterward set downe: these two charitable fathers (I say) hauing had information heereof, did forbid him to put his fingers vpon the said places, where-upon his weeping left him.

* The great charity of two Capuchin fathers.

But returning to our former purpose, Oscillon was adiured to tell whose these two skulls were: where-upon he answered, thou together with thy Relicks shalt not know this, onely thus much I will giue you to vnderstand, that they vnto whom these skulls did formerly belong, did master the Diuels better then all you; looke and you shall finde others also. Then they applyed againe vnto her the lesser skull of the two, where-upon

he

he said: this is the head of an Archbishop who is my Arch-enemie: and so the Deuill retired himselfe and would speake no further. Magdalene being demanded what she felt in her body when the skulls were applied vnto her, she answered that she felt as it were a great flame of fire in her body, and that she heard the Deuils speake within her, that the lesser skull did sometimes appertaine vnto one that was a great enemy of Oscillon, and the most mortall foe that Belzebub had: so growing very late euery man retyred himselfe to his owne home.

The next day which was Friday at the morning Exorcisme performed in the Chapel belonging to the Arch-bishop, Belzebub was adiured, who without making any great resistance, after the application of the two skulls which they had purposely brought thither, said thus. The greater skul is Raymonds Bishop of Arles: [z] the lesser is Anthonies, Bishop of Aix. I wonder (said he) you did not also bring the head of Charles: whereupon, they afterward looking among the said bones did indeede finde another head.

The said Monsieur Garandeau Vicar generall of the Arch-bishopricke, commanded a Priest of the Church called Master Claude Meffredy to bring a skul from the Church-yard, which being applied as the former Belzebub laughed at it, and suddenly issued forth being called (as it seemed) by the Magician as he was wont.

The Diuell being againe Exorcised, Oscillon came forth and said; This is the skull of one that is damned, whom we burne and fry in Hell: but these heads of Anthony and Raymond do burne me more greeuously then the fire in Hell, and so he wreathed her head from one [y] In the Acts of the Apostles the 19. chapter. The handkerchifes of Saint Paule being applied vnto those that were possessed, did chace away euill spirits.

[z] The Deuils are oftentimes constrained to reueale the bodies & relicks of Saints: as appeareth by the Ecclesiasticall histories, concerning the bodies of those notable Saints Iohn and Paule whom Iulian the Apostata had caused secretly to bee hid: as he also endeauoured to silence the memoriall of their Martyrdome. But they were knowne by an vndeceiuable marke, which is by the miracles that were wrought by them: which doe beare a more assured witnesse of them when they are dead, then when they are aliue: as was seene in the person of Christ Iesus: for in mens life time they are not alwayes ineuitable arguments of predestination. Mat 7. 1. Cor 13. but they are certaine tokens of the same after their death. And by this point shall Antichrist be discouered, euen by his own that shall beleeue in him.

side to another, shaking it and causing it neither to stand nor to lye still, as long as those two skulls were vpon her, and said: these skulls ought to bee had in as much veneration, and deserue aswell to be inchased in gold, as those that are below in the vestry of Saint Saviour; And he chollerickly added, the Sabbath could not bee kept heere in her chamber for feare of these two skulls. For the truth is, these two skulls were brought and laid all night in Magdalenes chamber.

The Acts of the 19. 20. 21. 22. and 23. of March, being Saturday, Sunday, Munday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

DVring these fiue dayes there happened no new passage: onely the Sunday after dinner as Magdalene was walking in the gallery which was ioyning vpon her chamber, there came vnto her a Magician called Iohn Baptista, who with a pin did pricke the finger which is next to the little finger, and tooke some blood from her and presently vanished. At that time Father Francis Billet, and Fryer Anthony Boilletot did walke in the said gallery, and Magdalene stood at the window looking downe into the base court and leaning with her hand vpon the window: as soone as the thrust was giuen she went vnto the said fathers, and shewed them the blood which still dropped from her finger, and they saw three dropps of blood vpon the window. And being astonished herewithall, they acquainted Monsieur Thoron the Commissary and Monsieur Grassy a Physitian, who were in the Hall, with this accident. This blood was drawne from her to make a charme therewithall against her, because her loue to the Magician grew cold: which charme did worke the next day so vehemently, that it caused her to leape and skipp with great violence, so that foure men could not hold her in: and being gotten vp vpon an high place, if she had not beene by fine force force taken from thence, she had been in danger to haue fallen and hurt her selfe. Also, the said charme did breed great paines in her inward parts, so that shee oftentimes fell into a swoune: which did thenmore especially happen, when any mention of this charme was made vnto her.

After dinner the singing-men and Musitians of S. Saviour came to solace & refresh the poore possessed woman: & as they were singing a straine of Musick, the Diuel was sore vexed, and tormented her al the time of the singing, with extraordinary violence. Besides, the said charme tooke away from her her appetite to eate, and being commanded by father Romillon to eat vpon paine of disobedience, and in despite of the Diuell, she obeyed the same, and was presently racked by the Diuels, as she had been before when she would offer to taste any fish or wine, for they wrested her armes and leggs backward, and lifted them vp on high in a very strange manner.

The Acts of the 24 25. and 26. of March, being Thursday, Fryday and Saturday.

ON Thursday was Magdalene in token of her humility and obedience commanded to sweepe the Chapel: which when shee accordingly performed, the Diuell made her cast the besome on the ground, and then tortured her, as hee had done the day before. For God had permitted him to redouble her torments euery day twice, that shee might mortifie her selfe, and giue satisfaction for her sinnes.

The next day in the morning about 7. of the clock, she was desirous in token of her obedience, to sweepe the Church: but the Diuell being impatient to see this her humility, did grunt and grumble, crying, the Diuel take him that is the cause of this, and so she began to be at quiet, and remained very well comforted.

On these three dayes, whensoeuer the blessed Sacrament was tendered vnto Magdalene, the Diuell would draw back her head, and make her to haue the Hick-cough which continued for a long season, vntill the Exorcismes and patience of the Priest did master him: and then she remained in good comfort.

The Saterday which was the Vigil or Eue of Palme-Sunday, father Michaelis would haue confessed Magdalene in the Chapel, but the Diuell would none, running and skipping from one corner of the Church vnto the other.

[a] An excellent dialogue betweene one of the fathers and the Diuell.

Then did the said father Exorcise him, and adiured him to tell his name, who answered, [a] I am Carreau, that harden mens hearts, and am commanded to make her heart hard as steele, that shee may not this day confesse her selfe or communicate. Then did the said father reply, Cursed spirit, art thou not ashamed to resist thy God and thy Creator? To which he answered with a smal complaining womanish voice, I remember indeed that God hath created me, and then hee presently after sent me to hell. And deseruedly (said the father) because after so great a blessing, thou wouldest by defection fall from him. Carreau said, wee were at such ease, and were such goodly creatures, that wee would not bee in subiection vnto man. But since (said the father) such is the pleasure of God, Why then resistest thou? Carreau answered, When a Captaine leadeth a band of Souldiers, they doe all follow him, and doe not you obey your Kings when they command you? Then (said the father) True, but it must be according to our high Soueraignes intention, and the obedience which we owe vnto him; Lucifer did not create thee. I grant it (said Carreau) but let a man all daies of his life treasure vp a multitude of impieties for the wrath of God to take vengeance on, yet doth he euer finde mercy, and [c] we committed but one sinne, & were forthwith damned. God (answered the father) doth obserue that

[b] As if this miserable, obstinate and blind spirit should say, that there was good cause of their reuolt, so to excuse and make good his sin.

[c] He returneth to his first speech where he complaineth of God.

men

men are full of ignorance and frailty, but your offence was founded vpon meer malice. But (said Carreau) they returne to their vomit, and doe more transgresse then wee that are Diuels. Then (said father Michaelis) Come hither, when the soule is diuorced from the body, it is as pure a spirit as are your selues, doth God euer take pitty vpon them then? To which the Diuell answered. He doth not, and so presently held his peace, and Magdalene had liberty to confesse her selfe, and receiue the Communion.

The Acts from the 27. of March being Palm-sunday, till Good-fryday being the 1. of Aprill, VPon Sunday at morning Masse, there came a wicked spirit sent from the Magician, and entered into the body of Magdalene, his name was Aurey, and he said that hee was the sixth in the order of Seraphins, who laughingly and in iesting manner told them, that he would not leaue her tongue vntill hee had executed his commission. Being adiured to tell why hee laughed so immoderatly: because (said he) yesterday about 12. of the clock, it is iust 15. yeares agoe since Lewes gaue himselfe vnto the Diuell, and to day this very houre it is so long agoe since hee made vnto vs his first schedule written with his bloud, drawing the same from the fingar of his left hand where the veynes of his hart do lye.

This being done, hee began to make his renunciations in the name of Lewes, as hath formerly beene declared, crying aloud so that hee was heard a great way off: and when they applyed vnto her back a crosse of gold, he said, take away this, there is a crosse behind me, and touched one of the nayles of the feete in the said crosse. After dinner there was a man brought to Marseille who was much doubted to be possessed. And as soone as he entred into the chamber, the Diuels that were in Magdalene began to bussell a litle, and at last fell fell a bellowing, one of them ſaying, this man hath 15. Diuels within him, and a legion that watch him without: if he bee not looked vnto, he will within theſe 15. dayes bee vtterly vndone. Hee was poſſeſſed vpon the feaſt of S. Michael 1610. they that gouerne and are the cheefe within are two, Garanier and Sandrié.

It is to be noted, and we haue had experiment of the ſame, that the Diuels who are in diuers bodies cannot indure to be together; if they doe, they [d] grumble one againſt the other, and ſeeme to be ready to deuoure one another, like wolues and hogs. Hence was it, that wee were forced to ſeparate Magdalene and Louyſe, which proceeded from their pride and malice.

[d] Like vnto ſundry theues that are poſſeſſed with diuers towers, euery one ſtanding vpon his owne guard: or like two doggs ſnarling one againſt the other, when they both are gnawing of a bone.

Vpon holy Munday in the morning Magdalene was ſhrewdly tempted to deny Confeſſion vnto her owne Confeſſor father Francis Fillet, and this temptation continued from the morning till eleuen of the clock, when the Diuell being ouercome by the patience and perſeuerance of the ſaid Prieſt, did giue ouer his aſſault, and ſhee acknowledging her fault, confeſſed her ſelfe vnto the ſaid father, although ſhee had before proteſted that ſhe would more willingly confeſſe her ſelfe to any other.

Where by the way wee may note, that to change our Confeſſors is many times a temptation of the Diuell. About this time, he of Marſeille that was poſſeſſed was brought vnto the chapel, where-upon the Diuels that were in Magdalene began to bellow ſo hideouſly that they were forced to conſtraine him to goe out of the Chapell. Heerein the Diuell behaueth himſelfe like vnto a tyrant, who cannot indure to haue a great Lord dwell neere him: ſo high is his heart ſwollen with malice and arrogancy.

After dinner Belzebub made Magdalene take a knife and ſet it againſt her breaſt, tempting her to kill her ſelfe with her owne hand. When the knife was taken away, hee cauſed her to lay hold on her owne throate, and would haue ſtrangled her, if they had not hindered him.

throate

About two of the clock in the after-noone Belzebub cryed ſo hideouſly, that father Michaelis and his companion heard it into their lodging, which was on the other ſide of the Arch-biſhops houſe a great way off: which when they heard, they ranne thither, and being adiured by the ſaid father to tell what the reaſon of this ſo terrible an out-cry was: he anſwered, I cannot but bee mad that Magdalene doth thus ſurrender vp and make [e] reſignation of her owne will.

[e] Behold the conſummation and perfection of true contrition, abneget ſemetipſum.

Vpon this day Monſier Thoron the Commiſſary did relate vnto vs, that the Saturday laſt paſt beeing Palme-Sunday eue, the court, as their manner is, went in viſitation of the priſoners, where Lewes Gaufridy to excuſe himſelfe ſaid vnto them, that hee did giue himſelfe wholy to the Diuell, if hee were not innocent, which is agreeable vnto that which Aurëy ſaid on Palme-Sunday when he laughed, and was ſo merry that the Magician had giuen himſelfe vnto the Diuell. Then the ſaid Monſieur Thoron ſaid vnto him Speake not after this manner, for hereby you doe but ſettle and confirme your ſin with greater aſſurednes. Vpon holy Tewſday in the morning Carreau whoſe imployment is to harden mens hearts, did withhold Magdalen from confeſſion, ſo that the combate continued till twelue a clock againſt him, and when the Exorciſt did impoſe more puniſhments vpon him, he ſaid he was a torturer and a hangman, but in concluſion they remained with the victory againſt Satan.

Vpon holy Wedneſday in the morning Monſieur de Segoyer one of the Counſellors of the King ſeing the ſtrange geſtures and torments which Magdalene, according to her cuſtome, did ſuffer during the time of Maſſe, hee being on his knees did priuatly and a-part powre out his prayers to God in behalfe of her that was poſſeſſed, which hee did very heartily and with much much affection. Then Belzebub turned himſelfe towards him and ſaid, Pray for thy ſelfe and let her alone. Whereat this Counſellor was much abaſhed, for hee prayed with great ſilence.

On this day Magdalene was asked by the two aboue named charitable Capuchin fathers (who tooke the paines to remaine all night in priſon with the f Magician, to ſee if they could conuert him) what the reaſon was that the Magician did ſo often fix his eies vpon the ground when they ſpake vnto him. Where-unto ſhe anſwered, a Magician may be knowen by his eies when hee looketh fixedly vpon the earth, and cannot endure to ſettle his eies vpon thoſe that looke vpon him. They are alſo knowen (ſaid ſhe) when they ſtoope downe to the ground and take vp a ſtraw, for then they aske aduice of the Diuell, and doe homage vnto him by bowing for this ſtraw. Which being once obſerued by the ſaid Capuchin fathers, they found that the Magicians cuſtome was to doe ſo.

f Oculos ſuos ſtatuerunt declinare in terram.

Vpon holy Thurſday the Diuels did torment and vex themſelues during the time of Exorciſmes, toſſing the woman that was poſſeſſed heere and there to her great diſquiet. After the Communion was ended, ſhee preſently found eaſe.

The Acts of the firſt and ſecond of Aprill being holy Fryday and Saterday.

g Holy Fryday a day fit & apt for remiſſion of ſinnes.

VPon g holy Fryday in the morning the Magician, by diuine grace and the particular influence of that celeſtiall light, began to confeſſe his ſinne to the two Capuchin Fathers who had watched with him in priſon, after they had all the time of the Lent by many perſwaſions diligently exhorted him there-unto, ſaying, that hee who had as vpon that day forgiuen thoſe that had crucified him, would take pitty vpon him, that had handled him a thouſand-fold more ſtrangely and ig-ignominiously, so that the Magician was determinatly bent to make confession of his witch-craft vnto Iustice, as afterwards he accordingly performed. This Crosse is the instrument, and this death of Christ Iesus is the efficient cause of the remission of all our sinnes, be they neuer so enormous or numberlesse.

As Magdalene was hearing the Passion sermon at a window of the Arch-bishops house, otherwise called the Chapter-house, father Michaelis who was at that time the preacher did inueigh against Magicians, whereupon Belzebub began to say aloud, there is no small number of them in the citty of Aix, and afterward added, there is a Frier in this assembly that is fallen a sleep. and indeed they found that one of those, who was wont to watch with the said Magician in prison, did at that time slumber a little being sate amongst the people.

Vpon holy Saturday Magdalene, in token of her humility and obedience, tooke the besome to sweepe the chamber, whereat the Diuell grumbled and cryed very fiercely. And when the Confessor would haue confessed her, Belzebub did so dull her and make her sleepie, that she remained without motion iust as a pillar of brasse. And after many Exorcismes, Prayers and Impositions of punishments shee came to her selfe, and Belzebub departed from her. Whilest the Exorcisme yet continued he returned againe, and thrust a pinn in Magdalenes eare, which caused much paine and anguish vnto her, shee crying and pointing to the said pinne, but they could not pluck it forth with their fingers, and were forced to haue litle pincers to draw it forth by maine strength.

Belzebub being adiured to tell what his purpose was in bringing the said pinne thither. Hee answered, I haue taken the same from vnder the heart of the Magician, and it was put there to shut vp his heart and make it obstinate, for it is charmed and inchanted. And I haue put it into the eare of this Dragon [h] Tharasque (for so he he called Magdalene) to hinder her from hearing the word of God, and all wholesome instructions.

[h] Tharasque is a monsterous Dragon that deuoured men at Tharascon in Prouince, and afterwards was slaine by S. Martha.

The Acts of the third of Aprill being Sunday and Easter-day.

VPon Easter day, Belzebub at the time of Masse did in a restlesse manner vex and torment himselfe, casting himselfe on the ground crying and offering to goe out of the Chapel, and at the last hee slipped out indeed. That night at supper Belzebub did nothing but grumble, and father Francis Billet said vnto him, Why doest thou snarle thus? Canst thou not let the poore woman suppe in quyet? Then hee answered, I haue a secret to tell thee whether I will, or no. In the morning when I did so turmoyle my selfe at Masse, the reason was, because that [i] Fortitude did lay his command vpon mee, offering to force mee to take off my markes from Magdalene, which I was constrained to doe presently after the Communion. Question her, whether shee did not suffer great anguish and paine in euery part about her, vpon which these markes were branded, when I tooke them off from her: which the woman confessed, but did not then know any reason of the same: the places also where these markes remained were searched, which then had sense and feeling, and were able then to yeeld bloode, whereas before they were deaded vp and made insensible, and not a drop of bloud would fall from them, but would rattle and make a noise like parchment, when it is pierced with a knife.

Magdalene further said, since my conuersion I was much agreeued with my selfe to haue the Diuels marks still stamped vpon mee, but I dared not to pray vnto God for the abolishment of them, although hee then knew, and hath since granted my desire.

Belzebub being againe adiured did deliuer, that Fortitude had reuealed vnto him, that this was obtayned by [i] O notable Miracle being performed vpon the blessed day of Easter at the time of holy Masse, & by the vertue of the worthy receauing of the body of Christ Iesus: al being wrought by the power of God, who is alone able to enlifen that whith is dead, the Diuel hauing no power to quicken the least branch of a tree, after it is once withered vp and dryed. Thus doth God by his bounty and Omnipotency take from vs the stampe of the Diuel, which is sin, & in steed thereof setteth vpon vs the seale of his grace by quickning & putting life into our soules. These are notable hansels and tokens of Easter day.

by the prayers of the blessed Virgin, S. Iohn Baptist, S. Michael, S. Peter and S. Paul, and they that did execute this commandement were Fortitude and Cleare-sight. He further said, that God had extended this singular fauour towards her, to take away the opinion of some, who conceaued that Magdalene was not yet thorowly conuerted, and to giue assurance vnto her that she was no longer in the Diuels clawes, that so she might with courage and resolution persist in that, which was so well begunne.

The Acts of Easter-Monday being the 4. of Aprill.

AT the morning exorcismes the Chapel was locked vp by reason of the preasse of people that flocked thither. And Frier Anthony Boilletot the companion of father Michaelis comming towards the Chapel, Belzebub cryed, Open the doore, for behold Tony would come in (for so he called the said father after the rude manner of the pesants in the countrey of Prouince) and iust as he said, so it was. And there being put vnto his back de ligno crucis, Belzebub cryed out and said, I doe wonderfully feare and tremble at this, and being adiured to tell why, hee said, It was part of the wood that touched the back of Christ Iesus.

k For Antony they say Tony.

The Acts of Easter-Tewsday being the 5. of Aprill.

MOnsieur Garandeau Vicar generall died this day in the morning, and Belzebub whilest Masse was saying, spake aloud these words, Garandeau is dead: I was at his death to try whether I could gaine him, and laboured to flagger his faith, but I could doe no good vpon him: he is now in the hands of the Almighty. A good honest woman who was there present, hauing heard what hee had spoken, said, I make no doubt but he is now in Paradise: where-unto the Diuell said, Soft

l and

[1] Meaning that men doe not goe so presently to Paradise.

[1] and faire, soft and faire. It is to be remembred that all this while Magdalene was racked and exceedinglie tormented.

The Acts of Wednesday being the 6. of Aprill.

AS the Father who was Gardian of the Capuchins was searching after a marke in one of Magdalenes feete, Belzebub gaue him a box on the eare, where-upon being exorcised and adiured, he was constrained with great submission and sorrow to aske him forgiuenesse.

At the euening Exorcisme Belzebub said, that on Easter day at 4. of the clock in the morning, hee went to hell to craue counsell of Lucifer, what hee should doe with Lewes, who already began to shake and prooue irresolute: he told him that he was to perswade Lewes to recant, that so hee might haue his life saued, otherwise he was but a dead man, and bid him sit vpon his tongue and speake for him, because (said he) he is a very dotterell (which is a foolish kinde of bird) stopping and stammering at euery word. But in other things Belzebub was to make him as meeke as a lambe, that men might haue a good opinion of him.

The Acts of Thursday being the 7. of Aprill.

FAther Romillon was of opinion, that it was fit to cut close Magdalens haire, because shee tooke such delight in the yellow and golden colour of the same. Whereat Belzebub was exceeding angry, and tormented her without intermission all the time of the Exorcismes, making her to plunge with her head downe to the ground, and by a continuall forced motion to bow it arch-wise, sometimes forward and some-times backward, and constrained her to beate her face with her fist saying, I will teach thee to cut thy haire, for if I loose

this

this hold, where ſhall I next betake my ſelfe?

The next enſueing time about midnight, the Diuels did forceably cauſe her to tumble and leape, that ſo they might get her out of the chamber, where they that watched with her, did lye: but it was perceaued by father Francis Billet, who cauſed her to returne. Yet when he was departed to take his reſt, the Diuels would haue caryed her through the chimney, and ſhee was found with her head againſt the wall of the chimney, as though ſhee had beene by violence lifted vp thither. But Fortitudo her good Angell did withſtand theſe their attempts.

The Acts of the 8. and 9. of Aprill, being Fryday and Saturday.

EVer ſince good Fryday the Diuels did torture Magdalene beyond ordinary, becauſe that day about noone, the Synagogue that was held at Marſeille had decreed, that ſhe ſhould dy through the vnſufferablenes of her torments. And that this was true, Belzebub tooke his oath with all the circumſtances and ceremonies belonging there-unto, and without reſeruation of any malicious meaning what-ſo-euer, as experience it ſelfe hath ſince declared. For at the beginning of dinner they tortured her halfe an houre, and ſo againe at the end of dinner; and in the middle they did euer diſquiet her with continuall plunges of her head towards the ground. And at ſupper they tortured her after the ſame manner for the ſpace of an houre, wreathing her armes and leggs backward, and making a generall diſlocation of all the parts of her body: they did alſo make her bones to crack and clatter one againſt the other, and did diſplace her bowels and turned them topſie turuy (as ſhe her ſelfe afterwards reported) ſo that the ſound of theſe vnnaturall motions was eaſily heard. When theſe tortures were ended, then did they caſt her into a dead sleepe or lethargie, so that shee seemed stark dead: and when she came to her selfe, and for obedience sake offered to eate her supper, they caused these strange motions of her head towards the ground to bee put in practise as before. The same was likewise done after the two Exorcismes euery day, making her to cast her head towards the ground forward and backward, with which violent agitations, her face became as read as a coale of fire. In this fashion continued these torments till our departure from Aix, which was the fiue and twentieth of Aprill.

On Saturday the ninth of Aprill, they caused her iawes to wag by extraordinary and vnnaturall motions, as Monsieur Fonteine, a learned and skilfull Physitian, who was there present did obserue. The same day Belzebub at the Exorcismes tooke his oath that he and his companions were to bee constrained to yssue forth as soone as euer the schedules were deliuered.

The same day the Lo. Arch-bishop of Aix his Almner did bring a certaine instrument of glasse made triangle wise, and none of the assembly did vnderstand for what purpose that instrument serued.

Where-upon Belzebub being asked what it was, he readily made answere, It is an optick glasse to make a man see that which is not: which saying of his was found agreeable vnto truth, for it caused men to see Woods, Castels and Arches in the aire of all manner of colours and other things of the like nature.

The Acts of the 10. of Aprill being Sunday.

Belzebub did take on and yell very hideously at these Exorcismes, and being adiured to tell the reason thereof, he said, Fortitudo and Cleare-sight doe beat me by the power of the praiers of your Lady Mary, because, hauing had warning from God not to touch Magdalene the night past, I plucked three haires from her her head, which shee had diuers times refused to giue me. My purpose heerein was to lead her on to desperation, and to perswade her, that God had abandoned her since he suffered me to haue power ouer her. They did also beat mee, because I would not suffer her last night to take her refection, that I might weary the patience of the Fathers which gouerned her, and so at last get the vpper hand of them. Being charged to returne those three haires, he answered, I can not doe it, for I haue giuen them vnto Magicians to make a charme thereof, which for some malicious purpose is already cast against the Exorcists.

The Acts of the 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. and 16. of Aprill, till the 17. and 18. day being Sunday and Monday.

THe said torments did still continue on, at dinners and suppers daily increasing more and more, which made the poore woman to cry so loud, that her voyce was heard a great way off, and did affright those that heard the same. Belzebub also vexed her inwardly by strong batteries and temptations of dispaire (as shee her selfe reported vnto vs) suggesting vnto her that she had neuer made a perfect confession, or that her confessions were spyced and intermingled with much hypocrisie and dissemblance, egging her on to cast her selfe out at the window as shee stood there, or to stabb her selfe with a knife when she was alone. The night before he would haue had her burne her selfe, and when shee would not consent vnto it, hee cast her against the fire, where shee was found lying in a sound with her head close against the fire.

Euer at the Exorcismes the gestures and torments did continue, but as soone as she had receaued the blessed Sacrament these motions and gestures did forthwith cease to the admiration of all men. Vpon Fryday he tortured her in the Chapel it selfe, but when the blessed Sacrament was presented vnto her, and vpon the receauing of the same, the wicked spirits did presently leaue her. At which tyme Monsieur d' Opede one of the Kings Counsellors, and three gentle-men Heretickes, together with many Catholicks were there present.

Vpon Saturday, Sunday, Monday, Tewesday, and Wednesday shee was tortured [m] foure seuerall tymes with strong and extreame torments, as well in the chapel as in her chamber.

[m] Obserue heere good Christian, by these forepassed euents, and by those accidents that doe now happen, & shall hereafter follow, what extraordinary torments God by his iust iudgments imposeth vpon those that haue transgressed against him. For whē he would seate this distressed sinner in the state of grace, he loaded her patience with many paines that did draw neer vnto the torments of hell, and that by the ministery of her cruell enemies the Diuels, and without compassion vnto the outward man, Secundum mensuram delicti, &c.

The Acts of the 18. of April being Monday.

THere was a certaine young man of the age of two and twenty yeares, being a natiue of the citty of Geneua called Dauid Meyrot, the sonne of Peter and Susan Manteliere, who presented himselfe before father Michaëlis as Inquisitor of the faith, that he might be receaued into the bosome of the Church. As hee came into the Chapel, the Diuell said vnto him, beware how thou be conuerted, stick close to thy Religion, and leaue mee not, for thou art of our side: this language did occasion in him a more setled confirmation to returne vnto the Church, then before, because shee had neuer seene him, neither did she know the cause of his comming. Being vpon his knees before father Michaëlis, he was asked whether he did abiure and renounce with all his heart, and as long as hee should liue the Heresies of Luther, Caluin, and all other Hereticks, the Diuel cryed, O, not for so long a time. And as the said father continued on to aske him whether hee beleeued the Catholick, Apostolick, and Romane Church, the Diuel cried, Doe not say the Romane Church: and being full of fretting and fuming at what was done, hee violently would pluck her by the haire, whilest the man was making his recantation. When he had made profession feſſion of his faith, Monſieur Merindol a Phyſitian and the Kings Profeſſor, for the ioy hee tooke of the gaining in this new conuert, prayed vnto God to ſend him his grace to liue and dye in this faith. Whereupon the Diuell roſe vp in a great furie and cried, Merindol, if I come at thee I will miſchiefe thee; and ſo running towards him, he was held in by thoſe that were preſent, which might be ſome tenne in number. Then ſaid the Diuell, if Belzebub were heere hee would crie and bee more outragiouſlie furioũs then I am. Being asked where Belzebub was, hee anſwered; He is gone foorth in a great chafe at the time of the Exorciſme, becauſe ſhe that is poſſeſſed was commanded to pricke his name with a pinne, and in contempt to tread it vnder her foote: which diſgrace Belzebub could in no wiſe endure. Belias alſo is iſſued foorth, fearing leſt hee might be ſo ſerued alſo, becauſe his name was knowne.

The Acts of the 19. of Aprill being Tueſday.

AT theſe Exorciſmes the Diuell brought vp a new faſhion of torments, making Magdalene to leape when ſhe was vpon her knees, and as ſhe was kneeling he cauſed her to giue great iumpes, ſo that ſhe broke the ſtoole which was vnder her knees, although they had laid two cloakes vpon the ſame. His meaning was to haue broken her legges, as he afterwards declared: for Lucifer did euer feede them with new experiments.

The Acts of the 20. of Aprill being Wedneſday.

BElzebub being asked and adiured to tell whether Magdalene were truly conuerted, or no, (for ſome made a doubt thereof) hee anſwered that ſhe was, and that Verrine and he did iumpe and agree in this: You may easily beleeue it (said he) since by the commandement of God I haue taken away those markes that were vpon her, which is a great miracle, and an infallible argument of her conuersion.

Being adiured to tell whether the Magician were conuerted, or no, he answered: Not very soundly.

Being adiured to tell whether he would surrender vp the scheduls, or no, he said: Yesterday by reason of an act of humilitie and obedience that Magdalene had performed, Fortitudo did aduertise me from God, that if the Magician were conuerted hee should surrender them himselfe: if not, then Belzebub should bee constrained to present them openly in the face of the Court both Ecclesiasticall and Ciuill, and then all Charmes and possessions should haue an end. Then they applied a Relique vnto the backe of Magdalene, whereupon hee cried; Take her away from me, for she is an enemie vnto the Synagogue. Being adiured to explaine the meaning hereof, hee answered. The Synagogue hath three great enemies, Magdalene, for her repentance, Catherine of Sienna, for her charitie towards her neighbours, and Catherine of Boulongne, for her puritie and great humilitie. And the Reliques doe belong vnto this last.

The Acts of the 21. of Aprill being Thursday.

VPon this day Magdalene was seuen sundrie times tormented very cruelly both in the Chapell and in her chamber: and at supper time she had some rest. But presently after supper Leuiathan came and said: Belzebub and I cannot be here, for we are busied at the prison. Then he said, Mistresse, since you haue not been made much of all supper time, we will now bestow the rack vpon you: and incontinently foure Diuels, whō she visibly saw, did giue her the racke for the space of three quarters of an houre, after such a cruell manner, that three three men, who kept her from falling, were all in a bath with sweating and labouring about her, so that they could endure the toyle thereof no longer. That which most disquieted her (as she afterward told vs) was the [n] vehement temptations wherewith they did inwardly assault her, which alwaies happened when she was not corporally tormented: so that she was vncessantly assaulted either within or without.

[n] It is a great light of God when corporal torments are not so much esteemed as internall temptations.

The Acts of the 22. of Aprill being Friday.

After dinner there was an assembly held to proceed legally against Belzebub, and to commaund him and his companions to auoid, or else to giue in the reasons of their refusals. But as this decree was ready to be pronounced, Belzebub came foorth of the body and fled away, (as he had oftentimes formerly done at these assemblies) for he would not answere but hid himselfe, and seldome caused those accustomed motions in her braine, but rather for the most part absented himselfe from thence altogether: and when she made signes that hee was there, hee would presently thereupon depart from her. In this assemblie was Monsieur Ioseph Pelicot, Prouost of the Cathedrall Church of S. Sauiour at Aix, Vicar generall in the Archbishoprick of Aix, and in this businesse Vicar surrogate to the Bishop of Marseille, because the prisoner was a Priest belonging vnto that Sea. There was also father Michaelis as Inquisitor of the faith, father Laurence Prouincial of the Capuchins, father Celsus Gardian of the Couent of the Capuchins at Aix with his companion; father Iohn la Tour, Corrector of Minime Friers at Aix, who had been imploied to heare the prisoners confession, and to labour as much as possibly he could his conuersion; father Iohn Francis a Minime Frier, who did exorcise in this assemblie; father Romillon, Superiour of the Priests of the Doctrine;

father Francis Billet Priest of the said Doctrine, the ordinarie Confessor and Exorcist of this woman that was possessed; Master Mesfredy, Almner to the Archbishop of Aix; Master Lewes Frank, Sexton of S. Sauiour; father Francis Domptius, Doctor in Diuinitie of the Order of preaching Friers, with father Anthony Boilletot of the same Order. Louyse being brought before them, Verrine in the Exorcisme was asked where Belzebub was; he answered, that he stood close to Lewes Gaufridy his right eare, who was there present. Father Iohn Francis being exorcising, commanded Verrine to declare by externall and visible gestures the manner of the Seraphins adoration of God, who answered; How is it possible for me to shew it, for they haue no bodies? Being againe commanded vnto it, hee forcibly stretched foorth both his armes, and moued with them as birds vse to wag their wings when they flie, making expression by sundrie gestures of some great and inward affection, as one that did mightily long for something: in which action he bore himselfe strait and stedie.

Being commanded to reueale the adoration vsed by Cherubins, he stretched out his armes as before, but not with so great vehemencie. Being commanded to shew the adoration vsed by Thrones, hee cast himselfe with incredible swiftnes flat vpon the ground, and stretched out his armes as wide as possibly he could.

The Acts of the 23. of Aprill being Saturday.

VPon this day the Masses which were celebrated thorow the whole citie of Aix, for the conuersion of the Magician, were ended: for Monsieur Pelicot, Prouost and Vicar generall aforesaid, had commanded thorow all the Parish Churches, Priories and other like places of Religion in the citie of Aix, that vpon the Thursday all the Priests should sing the Holy Ghost,

vpon

vpon the Friday halfe the Priests should sing the Conuersion of S. Paul, and the other halfe the Conuersion of S. Magdalene: vpon the Saturday all should sing the Hymne of our Ladie: by the power and efficacie of all which, and through Gods assistance, Lewes Gaufridy the Magician was found in better case touching his conuersion.

The Monday following being the 25. of Aprill, father Michaelis departed from Aix with the rest of his companions, hauing receiued directions from the most reuerend the Generall of his Order, to be present at the publike Synod held at Paris the feast of Pentecost then next ensuing. Whither being come, hee receiued aduertisement, that the said prisoner was burned at Aix the last day of Aprill by vertue of the Arrest, which was pronounced against him. The tenour whereof heere ensueth.

THE

THE ARREST OF THE COVRT OF PARLIAment of Prouence, giuing sentence of death against Master Lewes Gaufridy.

IT hath pleased the Court to examine and search into the criminall processe and other proceedings, made by the authoritie of the said Court, at the instance and procurement of the Kings Attorney Generall Complainant, in the case & crime of Rape, Seducement, Blasphemie, Magick, Witchcraft, and the like abominations, against Master Lewes Gaufridy, originally descended from Beauvezer lez Colmats, Priest, and beneficed in the Church of Acoules in the Citie of Marseille, defendant and prisoner in the prison that belongeth vnto the Palace.

The verball processe of the proofes and arguments is, that Magdalene of Demandoulz, otherwise of Pallud, one of the Sisters of the Companie of S. Vrsula, was possessed, and held to be really possessed by wicked spirits, that were knowne and obserued to haue remained within her at S. Baume, from the first of Ianuary last past till the fifth of February, by Frier Sebastian Michaelis Doctor of Diuinitie, Vicar generall of the reformed Congregation of preaching Friers, and Prior of the Couent Royal at S. Maximin: which attestation was formallie, and dulie confirmed by diuers other Fathers, bearing date the 20. of the said moneth.

The decree of the Court containing the granting out of a Commission to Master Anthony Seguiran Counsellor sellor in the said Court, to take informations which might concerne the fact of the said Accusation, and to attach the said Gaufridy and commit him to the prison of the Palace: vpon the 19. of the said moneth.

The Informations and Inquisitions taken by the said Commissarie, and the verball Processe of the apprehension and commitment of the said Gaufridy.

Another decree of the said Court, which containeth a Commission granted foorth vnto Master Anthonie Thoron a Counsellor likewise in the said Court, to heare the said Magdalene of Pallud, and to take particular information of the proofes and principall allegations giuen in by the Atturney generall; and himselfe, together with Monsieur Garandeau Vicar vnto the Archbishop of Aix, to indite the said Gaufridy: vpon the 28. of the said moneth.

The hearing, deposition, and confessions of the said Magdalene touching the said rape, seducement, and subornation of her to practise those impieties which belong to Magicke: as also touching the contract and promises made vnto the wicked Spirits, besides many other abominations, mentioned in the verball Inditement of the 21. of the said moneth.

Another Libell of Informations taken by the said Commissarie the 23. of the said moneth.

The attestation of Master Anthonie Merindol Doctor of Physicke and the Kings Professor in the Vniuersitie of the citie of Aix, touching the strange and extraordinarie gestures and passages that happened vnto the person of the said Magdalene of Pallud during the time that he had her in cure, and before the manifestation of her possession: vpon the 24. of the said moneth.

The report made by the appointment of the said Commissaries, and giuen into the Court by Master Iames Fonteine, Lewes Grassy, and the said Merindol Doctors and professors of Physicke, and Peter Bontemps Surgeon

Surgeon and profeſt Anatomiſt in the ſaid Vniuerſitie, touching the qualitie and nature of thoſe extraordinary motions, which at ſet times and pauſes did affect the head and braine of the ſaid Magdalene of Pallud, and what might be the cauſe of them: as alſo touching the nature, cauſes, and reaſons of thoſe markes in her bodie, which made the place deuoid of the ſenſe of feeling where they were, and which were alſo ſhewed by her: as alſo touching her virginitie and her being defloured: vpon the 26. and 27. of the ſaid moneth, and the 5. of March laſt paſt. The Interrogatories and Anſwers of the ſaid Gaufridy vpon the 26. of February, and the 4. of March laſt.

Another decree of the ſaid Court, that the ſaid Maſter Anthony Thoron, who was formerly deputed to be Commiſſarie, ſhould take the full view and information of the ſaid Inditement: vpon the 4. of March.

The verball Proceſſe of the confronting and perſonall conteſtation betweene the ſaid Magdalene of Pallud, and Gaufridy aboue named: vpon the 5. of the ſaid moneth.

The report of the markes found vpon the body of the ſaid Gaufridy: following the inſtructions and directions of the ſaid Magdalene, vpon the 8. of the ſaid moneth of March.

The publication of the ſaid report, with the confronting of him, with the ſaid Phyſitians and Surgeons, deputed and commanded thereunto by the ſaid Commiſſioners.

The re-examination and confronting of other witneſſes, vpon the 8. of March.

Another Libell of Informations taken in the citie of Marſeille: vpon the fifth, ſixth, and ſeuenth of Aprill laſt paſt.

The hearing of Miſtris Victoire de Courbier, ſaid and pretended to haue been bewitched by the ſaid Gaufridy, by reaſon of the craſineſſe and indiſpoſition of her vnder-vnderstanding, as also because of her disordinate and scandalous affection to the said Gaufridy: vpon the sixth of Aprill.

The second Interrogatories made vnto the said Gaufridy touching the truth of the said Information, which contained his confession, that hee had bewitched the said Victoire by breathing vpon her: the twelfth and sixteenth of the said moneth of Aprill.

The verball Processe of the voluntarie confessions made by the said Gaufridy, touching other facts and crimes laid vnto his charge, the 14. and 15. of the said moneth.

The retractations of the said Gaufridy, the fifteenth day of Aprill aforesaid, in the afternoone.

The letters of the Bishop of Marseille to Master Ioseph Pellicot, Prouost of the Metropolitane Church of the citie of Aix, and also Vicar vnto the Arch-bishop of Aix, that in his name, authoritie and place, he should proceed iudicially against the said Gaufridy, belonging vnto his Dioceese, in such ample and full manner as the Bishop himselfe might doe if hee were there present in his owne person: vpon the 17. of the said moneth.

The deputation of a Proctor made by the said Gaufridy before the said Prouost, who by vertue of the foresaid letter was his Ordinary, that so prosecution might bee made for the restitution of those Schedules, which are aboue mentioned, in the informations there contained.

The order of the said Counsellor and Commissarie, and of the said Master Pellicot, as well by vertue of his place of being Vicar to the said Bishop of Marseille, as also by reason of his being Vicar vnto the Arch-bishop of Aix: that the said Magdalene of Pallud should be re-examined concerning her allegations and depositions, and should bee againe confronted with the said Gaufridy.

Diuers

Diuers other new confeſſions made and reſpectiuely repeated by him the 22.and 23.of Aprill, conformable vnto the former.

Another report of the foreſaid Doctors of Phyſicke and Surgeons touching the aboliſhment and taking away of the markes of the ſaid Magdalene of Pallud; with the re-eſtabliſhment and confirmation of the manner of them, laid open in the former report of the 23.of March. The verball proceſſe of the interruptions and extraordinarie accidents which happened vnto the ſaid Magdalene during the time of her confeſſion: the tortures and torments which ſhe ſuffered, and the words which proceeded from her: Beſides the matters contained in the Interrogatories and anſweres, the proofe and witneſſe of the abol ſhment of the markes, the re-eſtabliſhment and confirmation of the ſame, on Eaſter day, and the Feaſts following, during the celebration of the bleſſed Maſſe. The iudgement of theſe obiects, and the concluſions of the Kings Atturney generall thereupon: the day of hearing of the ſaid Gaufridy in the Chamber, and the report of the Commiſſarie deputed for the ſame.

Whereupon it was publiſhed: That the Court hath and doth declare the ſaid Lewes Gaufridy attainted, guiltie, and conuicted of the caſes and crimes aforeſaid, where-with-all he hath been burthened: and to make ſome amends and reparation for the ſame, the ſaid Court hath and doth condemne him to be deliuered vp into the hands of the Executioner for matters capitall, and to bee led thorow all the vſuall ſtreetes and quarters of the citie of Aix, and before the great gate of the Metropolitane Church of S.Sauiour to performe this penance, that is, to goe thither bare-headed, and bare-footed, with a linke burning in his hand, and a rope about his necke, and vpon his knees to aske forgiuenes of God, the King, and Iuſtice. Which being performed he is to be brought to the place of Preaching in the said towne, and there to be burnt aliue in a pile of wood, (which shall be prepared for that purpose) vntill his bodie and bones be consumed and turned to ashes, which are also afterward to be scattered and cast into the winde, and all his goods and euery parcell thereof to be seazed vpon and confiscated to the King. And before he be executed, hee shall be tortured and put vpon the racke both after the ordinarie and extraordinarie manner, to force from his mouth the true detection of his complices.

in

Neuertheleſſe, before he haue the said execution of death performed vpon him, hee shall be giuen vp into the hands of the Bishop of Marseille, his Diocesan, or in his absence, into the hands of any other Prelate of qualitie befitting the same, to be degraded from his Orders, according to the accustomed manner in such cases prouided.

Giuen in the Parliament of Prouence residing at Aix, and published at the barre of Iustice, and to the said Gaufridy in the Palace-prison: who at the same time was put to the racke both after the vsuall, and extraordinarie manner, the Commissaries that were deputed vnto the same being there present. And about fiue of the clocke in the afternoone he was put to death, being first degraded by the L. Bishop of Marseille his Diocesan in the Church of preaching Friers at Aix, in the presence of the said Commissaries, following the forme and tenour of this present Arrest, the last of Aprill. 1611.

Signed MALIVERNY.

IN the moneth of Iuly, father Michaëlis was aduertiſed by letters from father Romillon, and father Francis Billet, who had beene both Exorciſts vnto Magdalen, as alſo from the Gardian of the couent of Capuchin fathers at Aix, and of another of the Capuchins; wherein they declared diuerſe admirable occurrences, which by the permiſſion of God did befall Louyſe and Magdalene, ſince his departure from them. And alſo, that the very ſame day vpon which the Magician was burnt, ſiſter Margaret Burle, a very honeſt woman, and of the company of S. Vrſula was deliuered from three Diuels, and from the charmes which ſhe had in her body. After certaine dayes, there was another woman, and after her there was alſo another freed from the like ſlauery, who had been formerly poſſeſſed by the force of charmes and witch-craft. Moreouer, that two Diuels, to wit, Greſil and Sonneillon had quite left the body of Louyſe, ſo that there remained none behind but Verrine, who ſaid, that the end of the Hiſtory was not yet come. Alſo, that Magdalene had beene for many dayes together depriued of her ſight and hearing, and could not eate: neuertheleſſe, by reaſon of the good hap which againe befell vnto her on that [a] bleſſed feaſt of Whitſuntide, ſhee hath recouered all againe, and is moreouer deliuered of the Diuell Aſmodeus and two other Diuels, and that afterward ſhe was no more troubled with thoſe Incubi that were wont to haunt her: that Belzebub did ſtill poſſeſſe her, and had ſtrangely forced her tongue downe into her throat, tormenting her more and more with his accuſtomed rackings and tortures: that by reaſon of the letters which were written, ſhee was now deliuered from all her torments, and that ſhee held Belzebub bound and chained vp in her body by the permiſſion of God, and that when he would intreate her to giue him licence to goe forth of her body but for a quarter of an houre onely, that he might ſet ſome ſtay touching his Sabbaths and meetings, tings, she would by no meanes allow him so to doe.

[a] In like manner vpon the bleſſed feaſt of Eaſter, the markes of the Diuell were perfectly taken from her as the tokens and hanſell of her conuerſion.

It was further aduertised in these letters, that Magdalene had a vision of the state of Lewes Gaufridy, how he was continually tormented in hell, with more extremitie then euer was Iudas. And that this vision was the cause that shee became an vnfeined penitentiary: for shee would goe along to the wood with the poore women of Carpentras (whether she was fled) bare-footed, and would gather bundels of sticks, and would sell them in the market place, and would giue the money that did arise from hence vnto the poore, besides that which shee daily sent to bee giuen at the porch of the great Church. Moreouer, that shee made great reckoning of any act of humility and patience, and was afflicted and disfauoured by those that were neerest of her blood, by reason that shee thus debased her selfe.

They farther aduertised, that Verrine began already to bewray the cõplices and associats in Magick by their names and sur-names: and amongst others a woman called Honoria that was blind of both her eies, who being apprehended had the markes found vpon her, and was conuicted of witch-craft and so burnt, although she died with great contrition and sense of her sinnes.

Let vs therefore pray vnto God, that all may redound to his glory, and the good of the Church, and to the vtter ruine and desolation of the kingdome of Satan. Amen.

THE CONCLVSION.

THe end and scope of this History (which is the discouery of a Magician by the Diuell, and his execution which followed there-upon) doth cleerly demonstrate the vndoubtable truth contained in the same, since there was nothing in the world more secret and incogitable then that the said Gaufridy was a Magician: but contrariwise, hee stood fauoured and well esteemed of, by gentle-men and others of his owne quality, the Diuel infusing into him an insinuating and well fashioned deportment of himselfe, with so winning a manner of conuersation, that hee was wel-be-loued and well entertaine dby all men. But God would not suffer such hypocrites to lurke in his Church vndiscouered and vnpunished, as wretched Iudas gaue the first proofe thereof; be it spoken without offence and preiudice to S. Peter and the rest of the Apostles. God be blessed and praised for euer, for all those miracles which he hath been pleased in his good time to worke amongst vs, for his glory, and the further instruction of his Church. Amen.

The whole is submitted to the iudgement of the Church.

THE APPROBATION.

WE the vnder-written Doctors in the sacred facultie of Diuinity at Paris, doe certifie that we haue fully and diligently suruayed and read this present treatise, intituled, The admirable History of the possession and conuersion of a penitent woman, seduced by a Magitian. The collections whereof were gathered by the reuerend father Michaëlis Doctor, Preacher, and Inquisitour of the Catholicke, Apostolicke and Romane faith, established by our holy father the Pope. In which treatise and collections wee finde nothing which is not orthodox, and conformable vnto the decrees and orders of our holy mother the Church. Yea, wee haue therein obserued many notable things, that may tend to the great comfort and edification of all faithfull Christians, as well Temporall as Spirituall, and may induce and spurre vs on to repentance, and to the practise of vertue. From our Studies in Paris this present Tewsday the 10. of Iuly in the yeare of grace 1612.

G Froger, Fr. P. Dum.

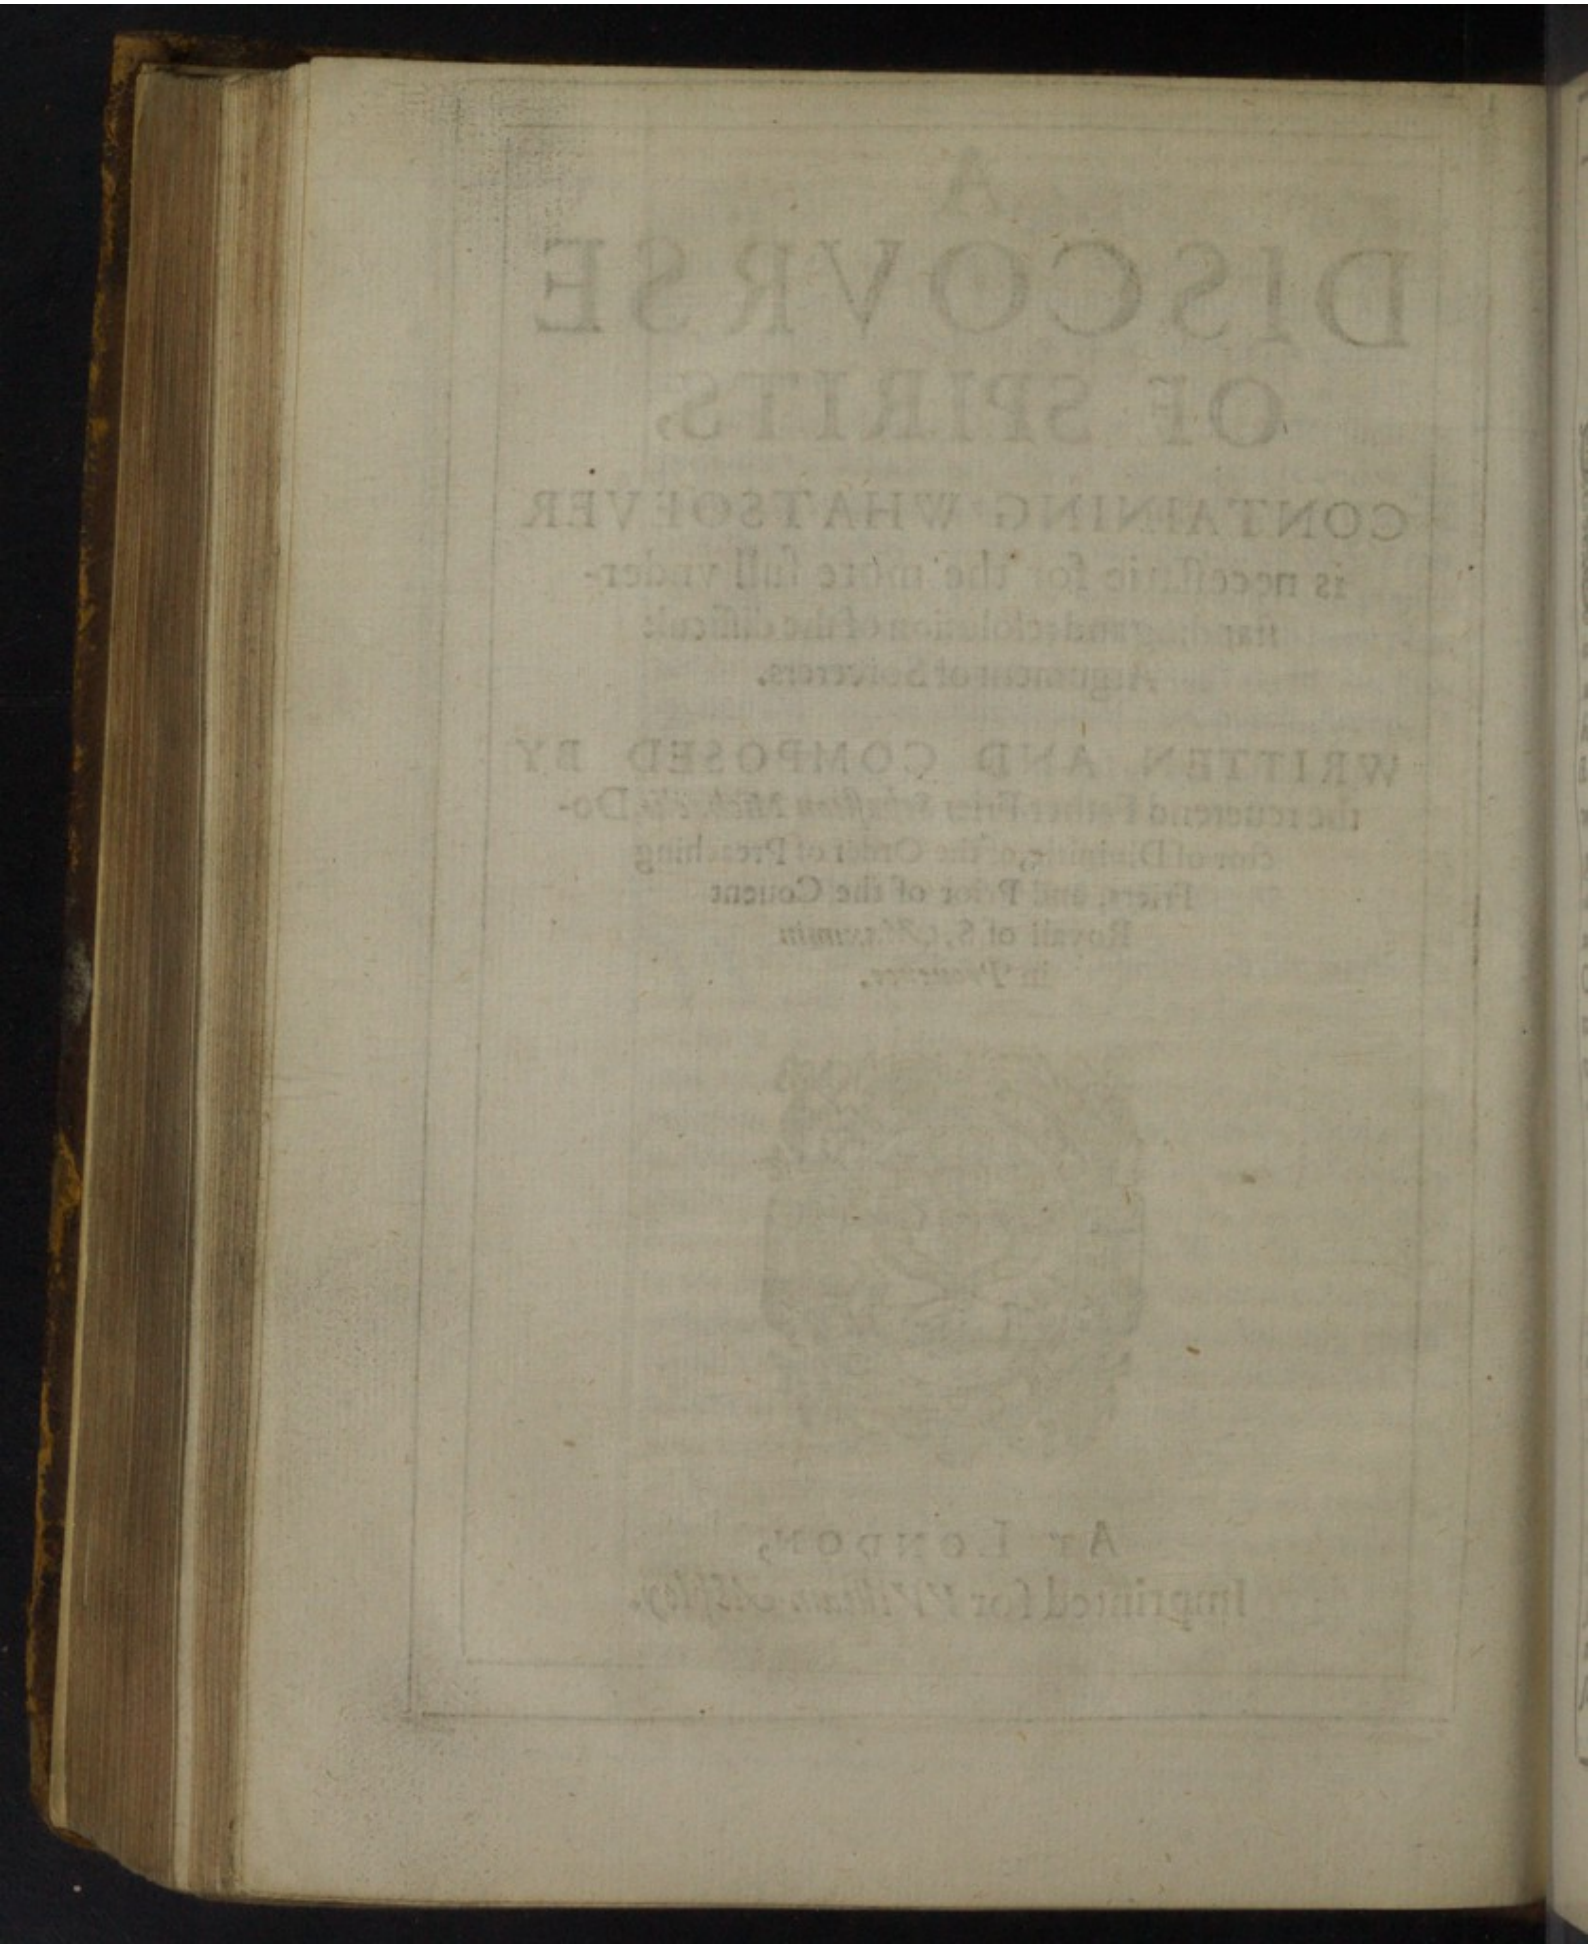

A DISCOVRSE OF SPIRITS,

CONTAINING WHATSOEVER is neceſſarie for the more full vnderſtanding and reſolution of the difficult Argument of Sorcerers.

WRITTEN AND COMPOSED BY the reuerend Father Frier Sebaſtian Michaëlis, Doctor of Diuinitie, of the Order of Preaching Friers, and Prior of the Couent Royall of S. Maximin in Prouence.

AT LONDON,
Imprinted for VVilliam Aſpley.

THE PREFACE.

FRiendly Reader, I doe proteſt with Tertullian, that in the Argument of Sorcery, (which is the ſubiect of this diſcourſe) I neuer was ſo farre tranſported with curioſity, as to plunge my ſelfe into an ouer-diligent intelligence of the ſame: becauſe it is a Science that ſerueth for nothing but to diſſeaſon and perplex my ſpirit, as being an enemy vnto my ſoule, and therefore the vnderſtanding thereof diſtaſtfull to mee. The conſideration whereof is common to all thoſe, who leuell their actions to godly purpoſes, whereof that holy and ancient Father doth draw a learned and generall deduction in theſe notable words. Nos ſpiritualia nequitiæ, non quidem ſocia Conſcientia, ſed inimica ſcientia nouimus: nec inuitatoria operatione, ſed expugnatoria dominatione tractamus, multiformem luem mentis humanæ, totius erroris artificem, ſalutis pariter animæque vaſtatorem. In which he hath ſpoken a certaine truth: for what other thing can a man gaine by this vnneceſſary, yet dangerous knowledge, but a true plague of man-kind, a palpable blindneſſe in all ſorts of error, and laſt of all, an ir-recouerable ſlide and downe-fall both of body and ſoule, into the pit of Hell? Notwithſtanding the Theorick and contemplation of theſe things is not vnneceſſary vnto vs that are Clergymen, becauſe we are expreſly commanded by Chriſt Ieſus, in the perſons of his Apoſtles, to caſt out and chaſe away all wicked and vncleane ſpirits by the powerfulneſſe of his name: for his pleaſure is, that wee ſhould be in direct oppoſition againſt Magicians, who doe call vpon them and wooe them to appeare vnto them by their ſofteſt and ſweeteſt ſupplications. But we (as is already ſaid) Non inuitatoria Tertul. lib. de anima.

Marc. 16.

ria operatione, sed expugnatoria dominatione ipsos tractamus. So that the admirable effects which doe continually flow from so high and weighty a charge, may giue full answere and solution to the obiection of Paynims, who were wont, by way of reproch, to aske the Primitiue Christians, wherein their knowledge of wicked spirits did excell and surmount other mens. Vnto whom the same good father Tertullian answereth: that it was necessary that Christians should haue a greater knowledge of Diuels, because (as experience did well witnesse) none but Christians had authority and power to cast them out with violence and in despite of them. For as a Lord, or Master who is euer labouring to tame his slaue that is refractary and rebellious against him, hath occasion to know his peruersnes more thorowly then other men: euen so fareth it with Christians in respect of vncleane spirits. Dæmonia itaque affirmamus esse, inquit, sane quasi non & probemus, qui ea soli de corpore exigimus. Hence wee may make this deduction, that for the readier way to dissipate and ouerthrowe the kingdome of Satan, this kinde of Science is necessarily required in Church-men: as the knowledge of Heresies is necessary vnto Catholick Doctors, that they may the better confute them, and those diseases that are pestilentiall must be vnderstood by Phisitians, if they hope to expell them. I doe heere desire, that in a subiect of this nature, there might bee a methode obserued in our manner of speaking, as the Stoicks anciently did in their discourses of the world, esteeming it as a great abuse to call things that in themselues were odious and filthy, by honest names, or things that were vertuous and honest, by filthy names: but instead thereof, euery thing was to be expressed by words and appellations apt and proper to figure out the same. For vertuous actions were to bee expressed by termes that should breath and sound forth nothing but a decent and equall commendation, but vicious and discommendable actions were to be set forth with such fit and conuenient epithetes, as might breed an horrour and detestation of their

Tertul.lib.de Testim.animæ

Hierom.lib,15. commen. in Esai.ad c.47.

filthi-

filthinesse. Neither doe I desire this without iust cause, since that the malice of our times hath mis-applied the names of things that are Sacred to that which is base and ridiculous: and contrariwise, those things which are stayned with pollutions much vnworthy of Christians, are many times graced with goodly and glorious appellations. Hence it ariseth, that many haue so farre ouer-shot themselues, that they hold those for barbarous and illiterate fellowes, who in speaking of the Diuell doe vse the proper Greeke name, Diabolus, or the Hebrew name, Satan, or the word borrowed from the Latins, Malignant, which signifieth an aduersary, a back-biter, and one repleat with all maliciousnesse: names so proper and proportionable vnto their nature, that the holy Scripture doth sundry times vse the same: yet is the vse thereof so discontinued in these times that we finde no mention of them in any Bookes. Euery one doth contend to sound forth no other name then the goodly appellation of Dæmon, which signifieth one learned and wise: and indeed Plato and other great Philosophers and Poets haue vsed it as a name of God, who knoweth all things, as Tertullian obserueth: whereas insteed thereof they might vse plenty of names very frequent in the Scriptures, and particularly recited by S. Ierome; such as are the Diuell, Satan, Beliall, the Aspe, the Basiliske, the roaring Lyon, the great Dragon, the Apostate, the Deceauer, and the like, which make a singular expression of his bloody and malicious nature. I could also wish, that in our French language, men should haue the vse of those names that would best befit the ordure and infamy of the desperate condition of these blinde and more then beastly Sorcerers. For the tearme of Sorcerer signifieth nothing else, but one that casteth lot, being drawne from the Latine word Sors, which is sometimes taken in good part, and may safely and religiously bee vsed, as these passages of the Scripture doe clearely shew vnto vs. Mittens super vtrumque hircum sortem. Cuius sors exierit Domino offeres. Iosua sorte terram diuidet, sorte exiit vt incensum Tertul. lib. de anima. Hierom. lib. 8. in Esai. ad cap. 27.

Leuit. 15. Deuter. 1. Luc. 1. Act. 1. S. Thom. 2. 2 9 95. art. 8.

sum poneret. Cecidit sors super Mathiam. So that there may yet be vse of lots in the administration of Ecclesiasticall affaires, which are of most importance, as S. Thomas after S. Augustine doth notably obserue. Heereupon it is that I desire the imposition of some tearme, that should not thus gild-ouer this abominable art, but as they that practise the same are the most filthy and brutish creatures of the world, so should their appellation bee so odious, that it should import nothing but downe-right villany, and should strike an horrour and detestation of them, into those that speake of them, or heare them mentioned.

Auguſt. ſerm. 2. in Pſal. 30.

Plat. in Cratil.

And this was the opinion of Plato and the Stoicks, when they would labour to prooue that the first institution of names, did signifie according to the natures of things, and had not their imposition by chance, which they also euince by experience. For (said Plato*) when I say* Mee, I draw in my voice towards my selfe, but when I say, Thee, I retort and let it out against him vnto whom I speake. And these subtle touches of Philosophy are experienced to bee true, not onely in the Greeke tongue, in which Plato wrote, but also in the two other principall tongues the Hebrew and the Latine. If therefore these people had the stampe of these appellations vpon them, Men enthralled vnto Diuels, the slaues of Satan: or as S. Augustine calleth them, Worshippers of Diuels, or by such like tearmes as may best sute with their natures, they should be expressed vnto the world a great deale more naturally and more vnto the life, then by misterming them by the name of Sorcerers, which is deriued from the latine word Sortilegus: and by this meanes men would haue the malice and villany of such kinde of people in more horrour. For if wee narrowly sift and looke into them, it will be found, that there is no appearance or remnant of goodnesse in them, but onely they are good in their naturall essence, like vnto Diuels: and of a truth they are the most grosse and impure Idolaters that euer were or may bee found, since that they worship the Diuell, and know him to be the Diuell. Whereas when Idolaters did worship him,

S. Auguſt. in Epiſt. 102. calleth them Demonicolas, Δαιμονολάτρας. worshippers of Diuels. Vpon the 96. Pſal. where he tearmeth them worse then Idolaters.

him, they had euer an opinion that he was God. And therefore (saith S. Augustine) the ignorant people that are Idolaters, doe not sinne so grieuously, as doe your learned Philosophers: for the simple people doe not apprehend the spring and first originall of these Idolls, but Philosophers doe well know the head from whence they flow, which proceeded from vncleannesse and from the vices and inuentions of men: so that without comparison, the Christians who are more particularly acquainted with the will of God, shall bee in a farre more damnable estate then the former. August. lib. 20. contr. Faust.

After this discourse touching their names, I come now vnto the fact. I am not ignorant, that many haue formerly trauelled their spirits and pennes in this Argument of Sorcerers, so that I might quit this labour, and repute my selfe vnworthy to publish my gleanings after their haruest: yet may I iustly vse the excuse of Lactantius Firmianus, who crauing pardon in that hee had vndertaken to write against the Gentiles in fauour of Christian Religion, since that such great and learned personages, as Iustin, Origen, Tertullian and Arnobius had formerly written of the same; I haue done it (said hee) as it were vpon constraint, and to giue relish and contentment vnto the variety of mens wills, because wee are bound to fit and accommodate our selues both to the learned and vnlearned, for the aduancement of the common good. Some (said he) haue written against the Gentiles, meerly from the grounds and authority of Scripture, in which they giue no satisfaction vnto the Gentiles, in that they doe repudiate the same, but doe onely confirme the Christians and partly the Iewes. Others haue argued the case, and grounded the iudgment of their conceptions vpon naturall reason, wherein those doe finde a main and an extraordinary delinquency, who doe sagely and soberly prefer the Scripture, before all other humane reason whatsoeuer. But none (saith he) did euer mingle both together in any Authour, which is it that now remaineth to be done. And thereupon Lactantius concludeth, that if hee hee did make a hanſome medlie or mingle of all theſe diuerſities, he hoped to giue contentment to euery body, euen downe to the Atheiſt. All which I apply vnto my ſelfe for my lawfull excuſe. For ſome haue intreated of Sorcerers onely by way of a bare collection of Hiſtories, and of the criminall proceedings againſt them, together with the relation of their owne auerments and confeſſions. Others haue proceeded more ſcholaſtically, and haue not departed or ſwarued from the Commentaries which are made vpon the 4. bookes of the Sentences. A third ſort, not relliſhing this manner of proceeding, haue followed the ſteps and opinions of ſome auncient Paynim Philoſophers, as Mercurius, Proclus, Iamblicus, whom they doe too much adhere vnto, euen where they thwart the authority of the holy Scripture. Whereupon I did apprehend, that there was yet left vntraced another way a great deale more ſafe and lawfull, and more apt for the courſe and ſcope of my ſtudies, (who for the glory of God, and releeſe of the Church againſt the oppoſition of hereſies, haue for the ſpace of 40. yeares giuen ouer the reading of all ſorts of bookes, but the holy Scriptures, and the fathers of the Church) to wit, that this diſcourſe ſhould be drawne from the Scriptures, and from the reading of auncient fathers: vpon which we are to ground the principall foundation, although other authours bee alleaged on the By, to adde ſtrength and illuſtration thereunto. For touching the firſt, they doe nakedly report the fact, but produce no proofes of the ſame. The ſecond, doe propound their ſcholeſticall reſolutions of this point, but the niceneſſe of theſe times will not digeſt ſuch fare. As for thoſe of the third ſort, wee will oppoſe againſt them by way of admonition, that which Tertullian ſaith, Dæmonem ſoli nouerunt Chriſtiani, vel quæcunque apud Dominum ſecta. And in another place he rendreth a reaſon of this, ſaying, Cui veritas comperta ſine Deo? cui Deus cognitus ſine Chriſto? cui Chriſtus exploratus ſine Spiritu Sancto? cui Spiritus Sanctus accommodatus ſine fidei Sacramento? By which Gradation hee pointeth out vnto vs, that no man could euer exactly and without grosse errour know what belongeth vnto the soule, or vnto good and bad spirits (for hee speaketh of such in these aboue-cited passages) vnlesse he haue dranke of the water of Christ Iesus. Philosophers (saith he) haue sometimes chanced vpon the truth, yet was it neuer without some mingle of errour, or else they did draw and borrow it from the Scripture, or it fared with them as with one that hath lost himselfe in a maze or labyrinth, who if after many crookings and distractions, he chance to light vpon the right way out, it is to be attributed to hap and not to election; for they haue no assurance and certainty in whatsoeuer they say or inuent: and therefore the Academicks doe rather freely confesse, that they haue no certaine knowledge of any thing. S. Augustine is iust of Tertullians opinion: if Mercurius Trismegistus (saith hee) or any other doe deliuer any thing that is good, it is not of authority sufficient to teach vs a wholesome doctrine, but it is onely able to conuince and disproue the Infidels. And as concerinng their sayings, that they are agreeable vnto truth, there is no lesse discrepancy and distance between their authority and the authority of the Prophets, then there is between Diuels and Angels. For the Diuels haue sometimes spoken truth, yet are we not presently to build a conclusion of Catholick doctrine vpon the same. The question then in hand is to be debated by that which is conformable to the holy Scriptures, and which hath been taught by the auncient fathers of the Church: which is the onely scope vnto which I aime in this worke, where we will also alleage (when there shall be a conueniency thereof) certaine Philosophers (which for the most part are already cited by S. Thomas) as farre as we shall finde them in conformity and league with Scriptures and the fathers. And if any shall oppose against them, they shall find themselues repelled and confuted by the ponderous and waighty allegations of naturall reason, to content and gaine in, or confound the Atheists, whose number is farre greater then it should be, although much inferiour vnto those (to my Augustin. lib 13. contr. Faust. Mani. cap. 15.

Tertul. lib. de teſti. ani.

Tertul. lib. de anima.

my great greefe I ſpeake it) that doe ſymbolize and comply themſelues to Sorcerers, and adhere vnto them by an infinite number of ſuperſtitions: in which foule crimes men of the beſt ranke do ſundry times inbarke themſelues. So that I may well ſay with Chryſoſtome, that if it were as eaſie to execute iuſtice vpon the great ones, as it is vpon the baſer ſort, all the priſons would be preſently ſtuffed with Magicians and Sorcerers. And elſe-where doth this good father with large effuſion of teares deplore the blindneſſe of ſuch people, where he ſaith, Lachrymis & gemitibus digna vaticinia, obſeruationes geneſis, ſigna, ligaturæ, diuinationes, incantationes, & cætera huiuſmodi. Quæ omnia magno profecto ſcelere præſumuntur, denique iram prouocare conſueuerunt, atque eò magis, quo poſt ingentis beneuolentiæ & inſignis miſerationis indicia, poſtquam ille filium ſuum pro redimendis hominibus miſit, hæc nefario auſu admittimus. To this purpoſe doth S. Auguſtine prettily teach vs, that this is a thing which God permitteth, thereby to occaſion vs to fly into the cloſe embracements of Chriſt Ieſus our Mediatour, when we ſhal vnderſtand, how ſhameleſly and brutiſhly the Diuell doth dragge vs vnto him, and worrieth vs as a famiſhed Wolfe doth the harmeles ſheepe. Quantò quippe in hæc ima (inquit) poteſtatem dæmonum maiorem videmus, tantò tenacius mediatori eſt inhærendum, per quem de imo ad ſumma contendimus. It remaineth that I ſhould alſo handle, whether thoſe things, which are ſpoken of Sorcerers, doe proceed from dreames and illuſions, or whether they are reall and true. But fearing a glut of words in this long Epiſtle, which may perhaps ſeeme vnto ſome more wearyſome then delightfull, I haue remitted and fitted that diſcourſe to the concluſion of this booke. hauing euer before me that which S. Auguſtine wittily obſerueth, that a reader, when hee ſeeth the end of a booke, or a chapter, is as glad, as a paſſenger to ſee the ſigne of his Inne, where hee is to repoſe himſelfe.

Chryſoſt. hom. 21. Epiſt. ad Heb. hom. 10. in 1. Epiſt. ad Timoth.

Aug. lib. de. ciuit. Dei cap. 18.

A DISCOVRSE OF SPIRITS, CONTAINING WHATSOEVER IS NECESSARY for the more full vnderstanding and resolution of the difficult Argument of Sorcerers.

CHAP. I.

Whither there be Spirits or no: There are foure points to be obserued touching Spirits: that there are Spirits; what their nature is, from whence they came; and the end why they are.

TOuching the first point; it is an ordinarie method in all things which men are desirous to comprehend, first to search into their causes: otherwise they shall not want occasions to remaine vnresolued and doubtfull, and their spirits will not cease to be full of discontentment and perplexitie. For this is the nature of man, especially when hee seeth vnusuall and extraordinary effects; as is cleere by the example of countrie people, set downe and expressed by Aristotle; who when they see an eclipse of the Sunne or Moone, they are presently stricken with admiration, like vnto the Children of Israel, who wondred at the new foode of Manna, and demanded what it was. And such kindes of admiration (saith Aristotle) haue been the seed-plot, and head of all Philosophie: for those spirits that had a touch

Lib. 1. Metaph. cap. 1.

Exod. 16.

touch of generousnes and industrie, did presently endeuour to comprehend the cause of those vnusuall euents. The like course of proceeding is here to bee obserued, and the rather, because it seemeth so much the more admirable and incredible, by how much the more distant the knowledge and experience thereof is from the best and soundest part of men. We are therefore to diue into the causes, which when we once shall steddily comprehend, it will easily bow and incline our vnderstandings to the beleefe of those things, and make vs conceiue them not only to be possible, but of a more ordinarie frequencie then hath hitherto bin beleeued. And in regard that Spirits are the cause of these euents; wee are first to know, whither there are Spirits, or no. There are three sorts of men that haue denied Spirits: the first are Philosophers; the second are the Sadduces, and the third are Atheists. Touching Aristotle the prince of Philosophers, hee is of opinion, that there is one supreme cause not tyed to the pressure and incumbrance of a bodie: And he sets downe 47. Spirits subordinate to that supreme cause, according to the number of motions, which he obserued in the celestiall Orbes of heauen, thinking with himselfe that those heauenly bodies could not so ordinately moue, vnlesse they were animated and quickened thereunto by some Spirits of life. Now whither hee had stolne this out of the holie Scripture, (or at the least had borrowed it from his Master Plato, who might take it from thence) because it is said in Ezekiel, speaking of the celestiall bodies, which are there called wheeles, Spiritus vitæ erat in rotis; or whether hee had inuented the same by the collections which his experience had made from his frequent obseruing of them, I cannot tell; but surely he said truth, except where hee seemeth by exclusion to shut out the rest, as if there were no more then those that he recited. Wherein he might consider, that if those Spirits were necessarie for the vniforme and vncessant motions of the

Lib. 8. Physic.

Lib. 12. Metaph. text. 43.

Ezech. 1.

S. Thom. lib. 2. cont. gent. c. 92

the Spheares, and by a consequent for the seruice of man, Qui est quodammodo finis omnium, much more is it conuenient, that this first and supreme cause, whom hee calleth the alone Prince of all things, should be waited on with an infinite number of them, for his owne vse and seruice. Whereunto agreeth that of Daniel, who teacheth vs, that [a] Millia millium ministrabant ei, & decies centena millia assistebant ei: Thousand thousands ministred vnto him, and tenne thousand times tenne thousand stood before him. Whereof Dauid giueth the naturall reason, saying, Ministri eius vt faciant voluntatem eius: and this doth tacitely agree with the saying of Ezechiel: Spiritus vitæ erat in rotis. Mercurius Trismegistus, as S. Thomas recites him, doth determinately denie that there are good Spirits, except those who wheele about the heauens: And in this he agreeth with Aristotle, although hee was a better Diuine then the other, because he yeeldeth, that God did make and create them, which Aristotle seemed to deny, who frameth to himselfe an eternitie euen of thistles and butter-flyes: but touching the number of Spirits they are both of one opinion. Aristotle doth deny that there are wicked Spirits; whose authoritie Physitians did follow and adhere vnto, as Psellus witnesseth, intending those that were not Christians, or which had apostated from the true Religion. This sort of men doth ordinarily fall into two grosse errors; the one against the immortalitie of the soule, as it is recited in the 2. of Wisedome, saying, that the soule doth altogether resemble the flame that is nourished from the lampe: the other is against Spirits; for when they are shewed the effects wrought really by the Diuell in the bodies of those hee doth possesse, they do adiudge of it more meanely then Aristotle did, and affirme, that these incongruities doe happen through the indisposition and depraued temper of humours and vitall spirits. And thus as they doe by the immortalitie of the soule, so heere also they change

Lib. 2. Metaph. & lib. 2. de anima.

[a] Dan. 7.

Psal. 102.

Ezech. 10.

S. Thomas.

S. Thom. 1. p. q. 115. art. 5. Psell. lib. de energia Dæmonum, c. 14.

Sap. 2.

change an immortall and incorruptible spirit into a spirit more earthly: and which they would haue to bee quintessented from the temperament of naturall qualities, which indeed is nothing else but a blast or smoake. Hence it is that S. Augustine doth to this purpose fitly alleage the historie of a Physitian, who, saith hee, was constrained to confesse the immortalitie of soules by a vision which hee had when he lay asleepe, wherein hee saw, although the casements of his eyes were shut vp; and heard, although his sense of hearing was tied vp and possessed by sleepe, his good Angell speaking vnto him, and making him to consider, that his soule of it selfe without the aide or seruice of the bodie, or any of the organs thereof, did see and heare. And this is the reason why such kinde of people doe relie and leane too much vpon Philosophie, and causes in nature. The Sadduces also may be ranked with them, because they also denie Spirits, as it is recited in the Acts of the Apostles: from thence they fall into another inconuenience, and that is, to deny the immortality of the soule: whereupon it followeth of necessitie, that they must deny the resurrection of the body; which three points are common vnto Atheists, and all those that deny Spirits. Others there are, that are not so frontlesse and grosse in their opinions, as the former, but grant, that as there are good Spirits, (for the motion of the heauen doth force from them that confession, in that so good and necessarie a worke cannot proceed but from a good agent) so there are also bad Spirits, and ỹ from them many actiõs of villany and naughtinesse doe proceed. Of these Porphiry maketh mention in Epistola ad Anebuntem, cited by S. Thomas, saying, that these are the Matters of Sorcerers, and of all that vse witchcraft, and that they neuer direct any man in a course of goodnesse, but giue all passage and furtherance vnto those, who haue any propension to doe mischiefe. Plato also and his sect doe grant that there is a great number of Spirits, whose residence

Auguſt. epiſt. 100. ad Euodium.

Act. 23. Matth. 23.

Iuſt. Apolog. 2. hæc tria vnico medio probat.

S. Thom. lib. 3. contr. gent. cap. 107. & 108. & Auguſt. lib. 10. de Ciuitat. cap. 11. & Euſeb. lib. 5. de præparat. Euang. cap. 6.

sidence is in the highest region of the aire, as birds haue their abiding place in the low and middle region, and fishes in the water: but they doe heere intermingle many absurdities, as wee will declare heereafter. To conclude, none haue euer perfectly knowen the nature of Spirits, but those that haue receiued and vnderstood the holy Scripture. Now against Philosophers and Painims wee haue experience: against the Saduces who are hereticks amongst the Iewes (as Tertullian saith) wee haue the fiue bookes of Moses which they themselues admit: and for Catholicks and Christians, wee haue the consent of all the holy Scriptures, both of the old and new Testament. S. Thomas in his third booke against the Gentiles doth solidly and learnedly dispute against all the arguments of the Philosophers, who affirmed, that when any prodigie in nature did happen, it was to be attributed to the influence of celestiall bodies, which are able to bring forth many things that are hidden and buried from our knowledge. It is true (saith hee) that nature is able to doe much, yet notwithstanding it is bounded in and limited so strongly, that for the most part it is tyed to the production of one manner of effects, either from the property of the efficient cause, or from the impotency or vnaptnesse of the matter which hath no capacity but to bring forth one thing: as the Sunne, and all the heauens cannot in the sapp of a vine shape vp or bring forth any other thing but grapes, nor from an apple tree any thing but apples. Whereupon it must bee granted, that there are many effects which are against and aboue the power of nature: as Oracles which were nothing else but statues that did speake and giue resolution vnto those doubts that were propounded vnto them, and did vnfold many things that were absent, hidden, and to come: as also that some men haue suddenly, and without any study or paines taking therein, spoken Hebrew, Greeke and Latine, Syriac, Chaldey, and all other languages, citing Tertull. de præscript. heretic.

Helias in Thisbi dictione Quarain.

S. Thom. cont. Gent. lib. 3. cap. 104. 105.

Mercurius Trismegist. in Asclepio.

Lactan. lib. inst. & Aug. lib. de ciuit. 16.

sentences of Poets and Orators, although they neuer were conuersant in them or in any other kinde of literature: that Oxen and Asses should speake, and other prodigious accidents should happen, against the power and course of nature; that a vestall Virgin, being suspected of light behauiour and wantonnes, should in witnesse of her chastitie cary vp and downe before the Romans a siue full of water. Claudia also vpon the same occasion did draw a great ship after her with her girdle, and Actius Nauius did with a rasor cut a whet-stone in peeces.

It hath been found true by experience, and mention is made of the same in the lawes of the 12. Tables, that a certaine Island did fleet vp and downe from one place to another. It is also knowen by obseruation, that they who practise such things as these, do vse certaine words, characters, prayers, protestations, and other manners of behauiour, which cannot without folly and vanity be presented vnto any, but vnto substances that haue vnderstanding and reason. From whence hee draweth this conclusion, that it is euident that al these prodigies doe proceed from Spirits, and therefore there are Spirits. And if the authority of the Scripture may heere take place (which they may admit of at the least as any other History) it is impossible to conceiue, that the course of the Sunne should be stayed, and that the heauen should goe backward in the time of Iosua, and Ezechias by any naturall force or power. For Aristotle himselfe saith, that this is impossible euen for Intelligences themselues, to wheele back the heauen, as it is impossible for the soule to yssue forth of the body at pleasure, or not to enlifen and actuate the body, whiles it remaineth in it, because there is a necessity in nature that compelleth the same. Therefore it is plaine, that these euents proceed from some thing else then from the motion of the heauens: and it must necessarily be granted, that prodigies ought not to be appropriated

Ariſt. lib. 8. Phyſ. & lib. de Cœlo & Mundo.

Vide Auguſt. lib. 8 de ciuit. cap. 23.

priated to the motion of the heauens, but to some other secret causes, which staud inuolued with much ambiguity and mistinesse. Mercurius Trismegistus would indeed haue answered that argument touching Oracles, in saying, that it was true that God did create as many Spirits as are in nature, yet it was the art of men to make the Oracles to speake, by fitting thereunto certaine influences of the heauens: for (saith hee) such statues might be so aptly accommodated to certaine aspects of the heauens, as that they might speake, diuine, and foretell, and might strike men with diseases, and heale them againe, and might in breefe worke miracles. But it fareth heere with him, as it doth with Plutarch, who endeuouring to giue a reason why Oracles did cease to doe those wonders, which they were wont, (letting slippe the true reason, which was the comming of Christ Iesus in the flesh, by whom the kingdome of Satan was vtterly ruined) he maketh a booke expresly to shew the reason of their cessation and silence: but hee falleth so short in his discourse, that hee alleageth no reasons but such, whose insufficiency and weakenesse may bee easily confuted, nay which is more, the most of them are ridiculous, and vnworthy of so great a Philosopher: in so much as he is driuen to say, that they were nourished by exhalations drawne vp from the earth, which when they ceased and were exhausted, those Oracles were famished, and dyed for want of their accustomed sustenance. In the same maze wandereth Trismegistus, when hee would yeeld a reason of their ouerthrow: for it may be easily demanded of him, first, why men in these times may not doe the like (as those of former ages haue done) by the same obseruations of the heauens, since now they are more skilled in their motions, then formerly they haue beene: and whē now our modern Astrologers haue conuicted both Aristotle and Ptolomy of many errours. Againe, how may it bee possible that the cause should be of lesse ex-

Plutarch. lib. de taciturn. oracul.

celleney then the effect; and if a man (as hee affirmeth) can by his industry make such oracles, it will in sound Philosophy bee necessarily inferred, that hee may also produce and worke the same thinges in another man. And if it be replyed, that there must bee a concurrence of the heauens influence vnto such a worke, I answere, Why may not the like influence as well happen vnto a man, as vnto a statue of wood? Nay, why should it not rather agree vnto him, as being more capable of reason, speech, and all other actions, then a statue? Since then it was neuer knowen that a man was an oracle, we may conclude, that this reason is most insufficient; for it is certaine that in all ages there haue beene some, who would not haue desired a better purchase, then by this meanes to bee esteemed Gods, wherein they retaine a remnant of that poyson, wherewith the Serpent infected our first parents, telling them, Eritis sicut Dij; and Gregory Nazianzene allegeth a number of examples, as of Aristeus, Empedotimus, and Trophonius, who hid themselues vnder ground, that they might be esteemed Gods, Empedocles also cast himselfe head-long into the sulphurous mountaine of Sicily, which perpetually vomited forth flakes of fire: and Iulian the Apostate was incited with the same desire, and did so burne with the cogitation of the same, that hee would haue drowned himselfe in a great riuer. Aristotle himselfe who laboured to giue a reason in nature for all things, could not comprehend the true and satisfying cause of the ebbe and flow of the Sea Euripus, now called Negrepont, wherewith hee was so vexed, that hee threw himselfe violently into the same, crying, Because Aristotle cannot containe this Sea, this Sea shall conteine Aristotle (as Iustin Martyr writeth of him.) Hence it is that hee studied to render a naturall reason for those memorably strange accidents in man, which cannot be attributed to any cause, but either to God or Spirits; and therefore he affirmed that the Sibills and those excellent Empe-

Genes. 3.

Gregor. Nazian. orat. 1. 2. in Iulian Apostat.

Iust. Mart. orat parænetic. ad gentes.

Arist. Prob. sect. 30.

rors

rors and great Philosophers were dis-affected by a melancholick humour, through which they spake and did many strange things. In which words hee seemeth to preuent the argument, which might be obiected against this his assertion, touching Demoniaks and possessed, which is a cleare and vnresistable experience against all the Philosophers of the world: for it is infallible that before Aristotles time there was possession, since Salomon himselfe did teach men exorcismes to cast out Diuels from mens bodies, as Iosephus and others doe witnesse. How then can all this be attributed to a melancholick humour? But will Aristotle dare to auow that this grosse and earthy humour is more excellent in a man, then his vnderstanding and reason? Now if reason can by no meanes whatsoeuer discouer those things which it hath neuer learned, nor speake any other language, then that which for a long time it hath been vsed vnto; nor diuine of future euents, nor alleage or interprete sentences, which it hath neuer conceiued, how is it possible that this muddy and grosse humour should bee so cleared as to doe all these thinges? especially when they are the proper effects that flow from reason. And if a man should require from them the cause, why such an humour should comprehend that which is farre remote from vs, both by distance of place and time, rather then reason, they could make no answere thereunto. To which may be added that these are things which doe as vsually happen vnto those that are of a different complexion, as vnto melancholick men. For it is probable that the Corinthian fornicatour who was possessed with a Diuell, was of no melancholick and lumpish constitution, but rather of a more pleasant and iouiall behauiour: which is not barely coniecturall, because S. Paul reproueth the Corinthians for that they laughed and were merry with him, before he was possessed; which may make vs to conceiue, that he was witty and pleasant, as also all the Epicures were Tertull. lib. de testimonio animæ.

Ioseph. lib. antiquit.

1. Corinth. 5.

1. Corinth. 15.

who were wont to say, Comedamus & bibamus cras enim moriemur, & post mortem nulla voluptas. In like manner were Alexander and Hymenæus possessed, who were much like vnto the former. Moreouer, it were a ridiculous thing to say, that when the Diuels were cast out of an humane body, and entered into the swine, the melancholy of the man did descend into the hogs; so that it doth fully appeare, that these experiẽces aforesaid are sufficiently powerfull to confute all Philosophers, that there are Spirits who doe secretly conuerse with men, and doe many times visibly appeare vnto them: which Aristotle could not deny to haue happened vnto Socrates, Platoes master, who from his infancy had a Spirit that did at times appeare vnto him: as Tertullian hath obserued, lib. de anima. in these words, Socratem Puerum, adhuc Spiritus dæmoniacus inuenit. Let vs now come to the Saduces, of the which sect there is yet a great multitude of Iewes in Constantinople, and in the kingdome of Persia, where almost all the Iewes doe adhere to their opinion. It is strange in them, that they should deny Spirits, whẽ in the fiue bookes of Moses, which they onely admit of as the sacred writ, there is nothing more common then the mention of Spirits, and there is more spoken of that argument, in those bookes then in the whole Scripture besides. Wee will anone yeeld the reason why Moses did not mention their creation or fall, although in the beginning as it were of his booke, hee bringeth in the Serpent, speaking and discoursing with such craftinesse and cunning, as that hee made a conquest vpon the vnderstanding, and perswades the will both of the woman and the man. Now there is nothing more discerneable, then that this was no vnreasonable beast, that spake from his owne braine and apprehension, because nothing is more disproportionable and auerse from beastes then speach and reason: Heereupon it is that Orators doe properly tearme them Animalia muta, because speech

Marc. 4.

Tertul. lib. de anima.

D. Genebrard. in Chronol.

Gen. 3.

is

is the expresser and interpreter of inward reason, and can proceed from no cause but from thence. But put the case they should bee so stupide as to say that in those times beastes could speake, as Plutarch seemeth to intimate in his booke which is intituled, That beasts are not denoide of reason, and as some grosse capacities conceiue of Æsops fables, and the like, being it may be drawne to beleeue it from S. Basils opinion, who holdeth that before the temptation the Serpent had feete, and did goe vpon his legs as other foure footed beastes vse to doe, and that as soone as it was told him supra pectus tuum gradieris, the vse of feete was taken away from him and all his kinde, because that curse did descend downe to all posterity and succession: as it is said, Inter semen tuum, & semen illius. But where doe wee finde, I pray, that God saith vnto the Serpent, thou shalt speake no more, but shalt bee mute and vtterly depriued of discourse and reason? which hee might in reason haue said, since it was not the outward forme and shape of the Serpent that beguiled our first fathers, but the reasons that he alleaged, & the promises which he made vnto them. But touching this the Scripture speaketh nothing, for besides the ridiculousnesse of such a conceite, it would breed a manifest repugnancy in the Scripture, which saith that God created liuing creatures, but hee afterwards made man after his owne image and likenesse, which similitude lyeth onely in this pointe, that hee framed him with the indowment and vse of reason, whereby hee might direct himselfe and euery other thing, as God doth guide and gouerne all things by his wisedome and prouidence. And this is it (as S. Augustine hath notably obserued) which is presently there added, vt præsit piscibus maris, & volatilibus cœli, & vniuersis animantibus quæ mouentur super terram. It must needs therefore be an intellectuall substance, that made the Serpent to speake, for it was neither man nor woman, because there were none but

S. Basil. in Examer.

August. lib. 5. de Gen. ad lit. cap. 12.

Adam and Eue, as the text saith, Erunt autem ambo nudi. Moreouer there is mention made of a Cherubin, who was appointed to keepe the doore of Paradise, for feare least man should returne back againe, and should eate of the fruit of life; and in his hand he held a bright flaming sword, to strike a terrour into man, if hee should be so presumptuous. This could not be a man, as we haue declared, and must therefore be a Spirit. There is also frequent mention made of the Angels of God, who appeared vnto men, as vnto Abraham, Lot, Iacob, and others, foretelling them of things, which was beyond the compasse of mans knowledge, as that an olde barren woman should conceiue; that Sodome and Gomorra should be destroied, and the like. As also that the people of Israel should be led through the wildernesse by a cloud, and by a pillar of fire: there could no other reason be giuen heereof, but that they were Spirits sent as guides by God vnto them. Præcedet te (said God to Moses) Angelus meus: and Moses replyed saying, Nisi tu ipse præcedas nos, so that it appeareth that these spirits were the messengers of God. The experience also of those that are possessed, is a sufficient argument to confute the Saduces. Heereupon it came (saith Iansenius) that Christ Iesus did permit the Diuels in his time to inuade not onely men, but swine also, for conuiction (saith hee) of the errour of the Saduces, whom Christ Iesus was faine to traine vp by such tutourage, as knowing, that if a man did once apprehend there were Spirits, hee would forth-with beleeue that there is another world, where they make their abode, and from thence would easily bee induced to admit the immortality of the soule, and the resurrection of the body. Whereas contrariwise, hee who doth not beleeue that there are Spirits, can hardly conceiue that there is another world, or that the soule is immortall, or that it is possible for God himselfe to call men vnto him by resurrection from the dead. Heereupon S. Luke reci-

Exod. 13. 23. 33.

Iansen. lib. concord. Euang.

Acts 23.

reciting the principal errours of the Saduces, doth ioyne these three points together.

Concerning Christians and Catholicks, besides the aboue named bookes, they haue S. Stephen in the Acts of the Apostles, and S. Paul in the 3. to the Galathians, to witnes that the Law was giuen to Moses and the people by the ministery of Angels: that God hath appointed good Angels to guard vs from the perrills of this world, and from the attempts of wicked Spirits against vs, in the 90. Psalme. Moreouer, that they ayde and succour vs so farre as to combate for vs: none (said an Angel to Daniel) did aide me in the people of Israels deliuerance but Michaël Prince of this people; and that the number of them is exceeding great, doth clearly appeare by the history of Helizeus when he opened the eies of his disciple, & made him see the great multitude of Angels, at what time he was afraide of the huge army of the Assirians. Plures (saith he) nobiscum sunt quã cum illis. The same spake Iacob who saw himselfe circled in with an heauenly army when hee stood in feare of his brother Esau; Castra (inquit) Dei sunt hæc. Their office is to praise God vncessantly, as Esay and Ezechiel doe declare, the one speaking of Seraphins, the other of Cherubins. He that shall sound the trumpet to raise the dead shall bee an Arch-angell, and presently there shall come a great troope of Angels to collect and gather in the elect from all quarters of the world, and to assemble them in one place. Touching wicked Spirits, it is declared in the history of Achab, that a spirit did offer himselfe to be a spirit of lyes: and Satan tempted Dauid to number his people in the pride of his heart, and did much mischiefe in Egypt, as being there the hang-man of God, Immissiones (saith Dauid) per Angelos malos. God also frequently forbiddeth in the law to sacrifice vnto Diuels, which hee would not doe but that there were Diuels. It was the Diuell that did afflict Iob in his body, goods, children and seruants: It was Theodor. lib. 5 in Epitom. diuin. decret. Act. 6.

ad Gal. 3.

Dan. 10.

4. Reg. 6.

Gen. 32.

Esai. 6.
Ezech. 1.
ad Thes. 4.
Marc. 13.

3. Reg. 22.
2. Paralip. 18.
2. Reg. 24.

Psalm. 77.

Iob. 1. 2.

Matth. 4.

was he that dared to tempt Christ Iesus, and did exact adoration from him as if he were a God: it is hee, that by his commandement and by the prayers of the Apostles hath beene so often cast out from mens bodies; and for conclusion, (for the places that may heere bee brought are numberlesse) God will say at the last day to the reprobate: Ite maledicti in ignem æternum, qui paratus est Diabolo & Angelis eius. Being then ascertained that there are Spirits both good and bad as well from the grounds of naturall reason, as from inuincible experiences, and especially from the authority of the holy Scripture, we are in the next place to know whether they haue bodies, or no.

CHAP. II.

Whether Spirits haue bodies.

THis question beareth with it more difficultie then any other, either in Philosophy or Diuinity next after the question of the Diuine nature: first, because Spirits do approch neerer vnto the nature of God then any other creature: as also, because it is impossible to see or comprehend them but onely by their effects; as by the print of the foote which is left in the sand wee know that a man hath passed that way, yet haue we not a possibility to conceiue of his vertue, knowledge, force, beauty, or constitution thereby: and hence it ariseth, that so many ingenuous Spirits as haue laboured in this argument haue almost all of them missed their scope, and run into some errour. For if (as Saint Augustine teacheth) it bee one of the most difficult things in the world to know the essence of the soule, which Aristotle also toucheth in his first booke of the soule, where he reciteth an infinitie of opinions together with their seuerall mistakes, and exorbitances from the truth, much Auguſt. lib. de orig. animæ.

Ariſt. lib. 1. de anima.

much more shall this argument of Spirits be incumbred with many difficulties, since there is no man who hath not daily experience of the nature of soules euen in their very dreames. Which maketh me say with Saint Thomas of Aquin, that Themistius the Philosopher hath more grossely ouer-shot himselfe in this point then any others. For he did not onely teach it for a truth, that in this mortall life we might attaine vnto the full and complete knowledge of Angels, but also that this kinde of knowledge was more facile then any other, by reason of their constancy and naturall stabilitie, whereby it commeth to passe, that they are not so obnoxious vnto change, as all other elementary bodies are. Against this Saint Thomas doth learnedly oppose himselfe, laying downe demonstratiuely, that whatsoeuer knowledge a man might attaine vnto in this mortall life (for after this life our knowledge shall, without comparison be farre more excellent by the contemplation of that great Myrrour that comprehendeth all things) it doth all necessarily proceed and flow from the outward senses and in the intermission of their working, a man doth afterward apprehend a conception of that which was offered and imprinted into his sense; The truth of this may be obserued in a man that is blind and deafe from his natiuitie, who hath no knowledge of any thing whatsoeuer. Since then Spirits haue no bodies, they cannot be seene by the eye nor receaued into any externall sense: and thereupon it ariseth, that a man cannot forme them in his imagination, vnlesse it bee because we see them dimly by their effects: Saint Augustine himselfe confesseth, that it is one of the hardest questions in the world; and is not ashamed to vse these words: Fateor excedere vires intentionis meæ, and Aristotle as it were to preuent Themistius, doth declare that this obscurity doth not proceede from Spirits, but from the imbecility both of our senses and vnderstanding, which as he prettily noteth, resembleth the eye of an Oule that cannot

S. Thom. lib. 3. contra Gent. cap 45. ex commentatore comment 63. & lib. 3. de anima.

Imaginatio non transcendit continuum.

Aug lib. 3. de Trinit cap. 1. Arist. lib. 2. Metaph.

cannot endure the brightnesse of the Sunne, although it be the most conspicuous thing that is. Hence it is that as many as haue laboured to discouer the intricacy of these subtilties do resemble those that by a mathematicall demonstration would prooue, quadraturam circuli: for being not able to reach vnto it, they haue an infinity of false hypotheses and suppositions. Among these the two Arabicke Philosophers may be numbred, Aben Rois (whom some by corruption of speech cal Auerrois) and Aben Pace, whose opinions are largely confuted by Saint Thomas. But to come to those who haue drawne neerer vnto the truth, Aristotle doth affirme and prooue, that those few Spirits whom he had knowledge of, were certainely free from any Masse or pressure of bodies, and were substances separated and abstracted from all composition of elements: for he well knew that a corporeall forme ought to be proportioned vnto the body wherein it doth act and produce motion. If then the Intelligences who moue the heauens were corporeall, it must needs be, that their bodies should be proportionable vnto the quantity of the heauenly bodies, which is so great that it comprehendeth and compasseth in all the world, and as touching the outward superficies it is contained in no place. If then these Spirits should be fashioned to such greatnes, they would be exceeding monstrous and hideous to looke vnto: which is not to be conceited of these substances which are the most noble and excellent of all others. They moue then the heauens, as the reasonable soule doth our bodies, that is, meerely by their will, which the body in his corporall motions cannot possibly resist, if so be it be furnished with Organs proper for the same, mouet voluntate non tactu: which manner of working is strange and incomprehensible, because it is a spirituall kind of working and not a corporall. Many other reasons are alleaged by Aristotle, but because they are drawne from naturall Philosophy, and cannot easily be vnderstood vnderstood, but by those that are well versed in the Maximes of that science, it shal be sufficiẽt that we haue alleadged these few. Plato seemeth to himselfe to haue soared higher in his Philosophy, but he is not without his errours: for hauing got the sight of the holy Scriptures and taking the words according to the rigor of the letter, he affirmeth that these excellent Spirits haue a thinne and subtile kinde of body, made of fire or ayre; wherein he followeth the Scriptures which seeme to say that they are made of winde, or of a flame of fire, and do alwayes mention their appearing to be clothed in such materiall shapes, as when they speake of the Angell that conducted the people in the wildernesse, it is said that hee was as a pillar of fire vnto them in the night, and as a cloud in the day. Besides in the mountaine of Sinay there were seene lightnings, lampes and flames of fier, as also the two Cherubins of the Mercies seate resembled two yong boyes with winges, and Helias, his taking vp to heauen was by Horses of fire. But Plato vnderstood not, that it is an vsuall thing with the holy Scripture to set before vs the highest mysteries by metaphors borrowed from things that are more vile, so they be more familiar vnto vs. In like manner are the fowre Elements, the seauen Planets, and that supreame heauen of all, where God and his Saints do dwell blessed for euermore, are represented vnto vs in the Mercies seate by artificiall things: the seauen Planets by the seauen Lampes, in the middest of whom one was more bright and conspicuous then the rest, and that represented the Sunne: the like may be said of other things, as that in the garments of Aaron the High Priest, there was representation made of the whole world, and a kinde of expression of the Maiesty of God, as the wise man saith, In veste Aaron erat descriptus orbis terrarum: The linen breeches did betoken the earth, not onely because the earth bringeth forth flaxe and linnen, but also because it is one of the worst stuffes that is there described:

S. Thom. li. 3. cont. gent. cap. 41. 42. 45. Aristot. li. 8. Physic. & li. 12. Metaph.

Psalm.103.

Exod.13.20.

1. Par.18.
4 Reg.2.

Exod.25.26.

Sap.18.
S. Thom.1.2. quæst.102. art. 4. ex probatiss. Rabin. & Clement. Alexandr.lib.5. strom.

scribed: the large girdle wherewithall the Priest did engirt himselfe, represented the Ocean sea that compasseth all the earth: the coate of blew veluet with the little bells of pomegranets, the aire which is of the same colour, and is the shopp where all thunders and lightnings are hammered: the Rochet that was vpon his shoulders beautified with all variety of precious colours, the heauen, where all the Starres do like spangles beautifie that place: the twelue precious stones that were set into this garment, the twelue signes of the Zodiacke: the Miter vpon his head, the highest heauen, and the plate of gold in which the ineffable name of God was ingrauen, and which was vpon all the rest did represent the Maiesty of God. In the like manner God is shadowed out vnto vs with eyes, eares, and hands, that is to say, seeing, hearing, and doing all things: which these Anthropomorphites not vnderstanding, did maintaine; (wherein they fell into Platoes errour) that God had also a body, but how monstrous a body must this be, since God himselfe is euery where. They may as well say, that he is a Lambe, a Lyon, or a Beare, and the like, then which borrowed speeches nothing is more frequent in Scripture. So that when Angels are figured out with winges, and are said to be clothed with winde or fire, it signifieth nothing else vnto vs, but that they are swift and ready to execute the will of God, as the Psalmist doth explaine it, speaking of Angels and saying, Potentes robore seu virtute ad audiendam vocem sermonum eius. The Ethnicks also, hauing stolne the same from the Iewish antiquities (as Iosephus calleth them) that is to say from the holy Scripture, doth set forth Mercury with winges, and describe the winde in the shape of a man hauing winges, thereby to expresse the swiftnesse and celerity which they conceiued and saw in these things. And Homer when he would speake of Gods descent vpon the earth (whom he alwayes calleth Iupiter) hee bringeth him downe coifred and wrapped Cassian. collatio. 10. cap. 2. 3.

Psalm. 102.

wrapped in a cloud: which he stole from the bookes of Moyses where God is alwayes said to come downe in a cloud, Descendebat columna nubis ad ostium Tabernaculi, and as King Dauid saith, Descendit dominus & caligo sub pedibus eius. The winde also is figured out to be a man with winges which is drawne from that place, Qui ambulas super pennas ventorum. And that we may more fully vnderstand the Maiesty and antiquity of the holy Scripture, from whence the opinions of Plato had their first ground and originall, and which the most famous Philosophers and Diuines haue followed in part, as we will by and by demonstrate, it is expedient to obserue breefely that which the ancients haue more largely expressed vnto vs, especially Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, Eusebius, and Tertullian: and that is, that whatsoeuer Poets and Philosophers whether they were Greekes or Latines haue truly and excellently left vnto posterity, they haue stolne or borrowed the same from the customs of the people of Israel. S. Chrysostome commendeth the inuention of Poets, in describing the sonne drawne in a burning Chariot by foure horses running at full speede: this is not a meere fable saith he, if it be rightly vnderstood: because the Sunne in Greeke is called Helios. For finding that Helias was carried to heauen in a firy Chariot drawne with foure horses, they applied this vnto the Sunne, conceiting that the Scripture spake metaphorically, and by Helias meant Helion, that is the Sunne. The Cherubins also are said to be drawne in a Chariot, and Abacuc calleth them the horses of God, saying: Qui ascendis super equos tuos; This the Poets would expresse when they say, that the heauens are wheeled and rowled about by Angels, as if they were drawne by swift horses. Moreouer, whereas the Iewes had within their Temple two manner of Oracles, the one vocall, the other mute and without a voyce: the first was when God spake out of the midle of the Tabernacle to Moyses, the other when from the Exod. 33.

Psal. 17.

Clem. Alexand. in Strom. Origen. cont. Celsum. Euseb. de præpar. Euang. Tertul. de præscrip. & in Apologet. Chrysostom: Hom. de Ascensione Heliæ.

1. Paral. 28. Aback. 3.

Num.3.

1.Regum.30.

Hieron.sub fin. lib.in Epist.ad Ephes.

Ouid.in Fast. lib.1.

the precions stones of the high Priests Ephod, their beamed forth a certaine splendor that betokned good fortune, which is mentioned in the 1. of Kings. The Gentiles herein endeauoured to imitate the Iewes, and had also two manner of Oracles, the one which spake and was called Oraculum Dodoneum, the other which spake not, and was called Oraculum Hammonium: which word Oracle signifieth in the Hebrew nothing else, but a place of speaking, and where answeres are commonly giuen, for it is called Debir : in Greeke it may be called λαλίφιον, in Latine Loquutorium, as Saint Ierome hath obserued. And as it is commanded in the Law that they should offer cakes vnto God in their sacrifices, but that no sacrifice should be without salt, so doth Pliny also note of the Gentiles, omnibus sacrificijs adhiberi solitam molam salsam, which is also witnessed by Ouid: Ante deos homini quod conciliare valebat far erat, & puri lucida mica salis. Hence haue the customes of the Gentiles there beginning, and this Plato hath more excellently and accurately followed then any other: whereupon he gained the surname of Diuine being commonly styled Diuinus Plato. We are not then to wonder though Plato do affirme that Angels haue bodies of fire or ayre, since that the Scripture doth so cleerely and frequently make repetition of the same: and it may be that he vnderstood those speeches according to the sense and meaning of the Scripture, that is to say metaphorically, because either they are not so grosse and heauy as humane bodies which indure wearinesse in their motion, or rather, because they are like birds or clouds in the ayre, or else because they appeare to men in such formes and fashions. For if it bee lawfull for Moyses to say that God is a fire: Deus noster (inquit) ignis consumens est, because he was thus represented vnto him in the bush and vpon the mountaine, why may it not be lawfull for vs to say that Spirits are made of aire or fire, because in their apparitions they euer take take an airie or a firie body vpon them? And thus wee are to vnderstand S. Augustine, when he seemeth to affirme that spirits haue bodies: and thus S Bernard also is to bee interpreted, that is, that spirits are then said to haue bodies, when they would appeare vnto vs: for they can haue no other meaning, since our eye hath no proportion with spirituall substances. It may well be, that some haue thus spoken of them, thereby to intimate that spirits are not pure qualities, but essences subsisting of themselues: which maketh much against the error of the Sadduces, who reduced all the apparitions recited in the fiue bookes of Moyses, to the imaginations and fancies of men; whereas indeed, Angels doe vnderstand, conferre, and direct men, managing, and gouerning Prouinces and kingdomes, and as our Sauiour saith, they doe alwaies behold the face of God the Father which is in heauen. Thus ought Tertullian to be vnderstood when he saith, that God hath a bodie, not that he hath the least composition of matter, but he is a body, that is to say, a thing really subsisting, accommodating his manner of speaking to the weakenes of ruder apprehensions, and it may bee to the vnderstandings of certaine Anthropomorphites, who, as Cassianus saith, by reason of their great dulnesse and simplicitie, could not conceiue that any thing could bee reallie subsisting, vnlesse it had a body, not being able, as wee are vsed to say, to iudge further then their nose. Notwithstanding the experiẽce of the soules working, may be sufficient to sublime mens thoughts from such earthie conceptions touching Spirits, since the soule doth discourse and worke, although the body be fallen into a sound sleepe. Adam, when he sleeped very profoundly, saw God when he tooke from him one of his ribbes thereof to make the woman, and when the soule at the houre of death is diuorsed from the body, it cannot bee seene by any because it is a spirit, as Christ himselfe vpon such an occasion did say: Pater in manus tuas commendo Augustlib.3. de Trinit. Bernard.in Cantic.Cant. & lib.de consideratad Eugenium.

Augustlib.de hæresib.hæres.28. S.Thom lib.10 cont.Gent.cap. 20.ait sic tenuisse; sed Augustlib.de hæres.50.& 86. conatur excusare. Cassian. collat. 10.c.2.3.4.

Matth.26.

Ioan.19.

mendo spiritum meum, and afterward, & inclinato capite emisit spiritum. That we may vse these phrases of speaking in a good sense, it appeareth by that which wee haue formerly said, for wee cannot doe amisse in vsing Scripture-phrases, if so bee they bee taken according to the meaning of the Scripture, as Christ Iesus himselfe declareth in S. Iohn, chap. 10. where he argueth against the Pharisies, who in those daies stood nicely vpon words, as wee haue many of that captious brood amongst vs in these times. Againe, it is not to be conceiued, that so great and learned personages should be so ignorant as not to be conuersant in the texts of the new Testament, which doe cleerely declare that they haue no bodies. In the third place, they doe for the most part expresse and interpret themselues, as S. Athanasius amongst the rest, who in his definition of Angels, doth briefly say, Angelus est animal rationale; but because the word (Animal) doth signifie a bodily substance, he doth therefore afterwards explane himselfe and say, Est autem expers materiæ. Wherein although he seemes to contradict himselfe, yet his meaning is, that since the holy Scripture doth stile these spirits Animalia, in Exodus, and Abacuc; In medio duorum animalium, it is no absurditie to giue vnto them the same appellations: but these places are to bee vnderstood metaphorically, and then there can be no inference of bodily substance fastened vpon them. Thus doth Didymus, S. Ieromes Master, say, that an Angell can bee but in one place at one time: and lest any man should misconceiue him, as though he should maintaine them to be corporeall, because it is the propertie of a body to be circumscribed in a place, hee addeth in that very passage, that they are not properly inuironed or bounded in, by any place; thereby letting vs vnderstand, that his meaning was not to attribute any bodily substance vnto them. The like may be obserued out of S. Ierome, who saith with Saint Paul, that Angels and soules doe bow their knees before Athanas. lib. de communi essentia Patris & Filij.

Abac. 3.

Didym. lib. 1 de Spiritu sancto.

Hieron. lib. 1. comment. in epist. ad Ephes. ad cap. 3.

fore God; yet are wee not here (saith he) to conceiue, that they haue their members and dimensions like vnto vs.

Before wee descend to the proofes out of Scriptures, wee shall doe well to examine, whether the opinion of those that take the Scripture-phrase according to the rigour of the letter, may bee defended. S. Thomas disputeth against it, and saith that it cannot be defended. For first, if they had bodies made of aire (as Apuleius dreamed) they could not bee immortall, but would in the end fall into corruption, as we doe: because whatsoeuer is compounded of elementarie qualities, must of necessitie be framed of contrary and repugnant natures, which in the end by their perpetuall opposition and fight do ruine one the other; and this truth is beyond exception. Secondly, the aire is a body, which the Philosophers terme homogeneall, that is, whose least part is of the same nature and condition with the whole, as euery drop of water is water, as well as whole riuers or the sea: from whence this absurditie would follow their opinion, that the whole bodie of the aire must be one immense Angelicall substance. Thirdly, the members of a liuing bodie, must haue seuerall organes fit for the performance of those functions, whereunto nature doth ordaine them, which cannot be true of the aire: and if they were made of aire, they may thē be dissolued and melted into water as the clouds are, they should also be hot & moist like vnto the aire; as if they were cōposed of fire, then must they burne. All which absurdities doe euidently shew, that they are said to bee airie only, because they abide for the most part in the aire. And therfore Saint Paul writing vnto the Ephesians, who were great Philosophers, and much addicted vnto Magicke, (as S. Ierome obserueth) giueth them to vnderstand, that this opinion was not repugnant vnto Christianitie, but that they were to hold it for a truth, that there are a great number of Spirits in the airie region, against whom they were to combat: insinuating thereby, that they may in this sense bee called airie, if thereby wee meane that they are Spirits, without flesh and bones.

S. Thom. cont. Gent. vbi supr.

Hieron. in Epist. ad Ephes. in prologo.

Ephes.6. Non est nobis (saith he) colluctatio aduersus carnem & sanguinem. sed aduersus principes & potestates aëris huius: he also calleth them, Spiritalia nequitiæ in cœlestibus. Wee may safely (saith that Father) call them airie or heauenly, but wee must alwaies suppose them to be Spirits. In this sense doe the Hebrewes call birds the fowles of the heauen and of the aire, and men are by them stiled terrestriall: not that birds haue bodies of aire, or men of earth, but because they doe inhabite in the aire and dwell vpon the earth. For conclusion of this point, let vs hearken what the holy Scriptures say; and for the old Testament, King Dauid calleth them Spirits, where he saith, Qui facis angelos tuos spiritus: as if he should haue said, Lord thou hast ordained that those whom wee call Angels, should be Spirits. Now there is a contradiction and Antithesis betweene a bodie and a spirit, so that the consequence by negation doth necessarily follow one vpon the other: as if such a thing be a bodie, it will be negatiuely inferred, then is it not a spirit; and contrariwise if it be a spirit, then is it not a bodie: which conclusion Christ himselfe maketh vnto his Apostles, when after his resurrection they conceiued him to be a spirit: Touch me (said he) and looke what I am (being risen with my true bodie) for a spirit hath neither flesh nor bones, as you see I haue. So that this were sufficient to proue, that a spirit hath no body, although there should bee no other place or text to strengthen the same. And lest wee should fall into the opinions of certaine Stoicks, who maintained diuersities of kindes in Angels, and that some had bodies, and others had not, S. Paul doth direct vs vnto this generall Maxime, which is without exception, when hee pronounceth this sentence: Omnes sunt administratorij spiritus; and in another place he saith, that amongst Gods

Pſal.103.

Luke 24.

Heb.1.

creatures

creatures there are some visible, and some inuisible, such as are Thrones, Dominations, Principalities, & Powers: for confirmation whereof wee may adde that, which we haue alreadie alleaged out of the Epistle vnto the Ephesians, where there is an opposition expressed between the things that appertaine to flesh and blood, and the things that belong vnto the spirit. Touching Diuels, they are also called Spirits; but to put a difference betweene the good and them, there is euer subioyned some restriction; as in the historie of Achab, one of them speaketh in this manner: Ero spiritus mendax in ore prophetarum. Christ Iesus often calleth them vncleane spirits, or the Diuels angels; conformable whereunto S. Paul termeth them the angels of Satan, which must be vnderstood to proceed from their imitation, not from their creation. But it may be obiected, that they haue a body, and are tyed so really vnto the same, that Abraham washed their feete, they tooke Lot by the arme, and by strong hand drew him forth out of Sodome; and Iacob wrestled a whole day with them. It is true indeed, they are supported sometimes by a body, for otherwise they could not be seene, because of themselues (as S. Paul saith) they are inuisible: yet wee are not to detract from the authoritie of Scriptures, that do cleerely teach vs that they haue no bodies of their owne: for wee must affirme with Tertullian: Habere corpora peregrina sed non sua: They haue bodies (saith he) which they borrow, but haue none in their owne nature. Wee know that a Spirit did appeare vnto our grandmother Eue in the forme of a Serpent: yet was there neuer any of so blunt & earthy an apprehension, that would affirme that this body of a Serpent was the body of an Angell. Wee are then to say, that this body was framed of one of the foure elements, not of fire, for it would burne: nor of water, for such a body would easily fleet away and be dissolued: nor of earth, for that would remaine sollid vnto the view, and should afterward

3. Reg. 22.

Matth. 12.

2. Cor. 12.

Tertul. de carne Christi.

Tertul. de carne Christi.

ward also bee found: it must therefore necessarily bee framed of aire, both because Spirits haue their places of abode from aboue, the good Spirits dwelling in heauen, and the bad in the aire, as also for that this element doth easily take the impression of all colours & formes: as we see what great variety of colours are in the rainebow, and what diuersities of shapes and semblances bearing the formes of Dragons, Serpents, and the like, are represented vnto vs in the clowds. And these formes are dissolued into that from whence they were exhaled and drawne, saith Tertullian: Eadem ratione species illa intercepta est, qua & edita fuerat, si non fuit initium visibile, nec finis. By which it appeareth that the Doue, that descended from heauen and lighted vpon Christ Iesus, was fashioned of aire, and not of earth: for it is said, Descendit spiritus sanctus corporali specie sicut columba in ipsum. The like may be said of the fiery tongues, that sate vpon the Apostles at the feast of Whitsontide: Factus est repente de cœlo sonus tanquam aduenientis spiritus vehementis. So that it is cleere that these apparances are framed of aire, as the cloud out of which God the Father spake to his Sonne in his transfiguration, which vanished into aire, as did Moyses also, whose body in that apparition was composed of the same element: and whiles the Apostles eyes were fixed on these obiects it vanished, and they saw none but Christ Iesus alone. So when the Angell appeared to Manoah the father of Samson, he mounted vp into heauen in a flame of fire, and in his ascent was visibly seene of him: but by little and little Manoah and his wife lost the sight of him, because his body began to dissolue into the first matter whereof it was framed. Thus did the Angell that accompanied Tobias in his iourney, It is now time (said hee) for me to returne to him that sent me; and presently hee vanished from them. And for addition vnto the truth hereof, some alleage experience, saying, that if a man should cut such airie bo-

Tertul. lib. de carne Christ.

Matth. 3.

Act. 2.

Iudic. 13.

dies

dies, it would fare with them as it doth with the Sunbeame, which doth runne together, and presently vnite it selfe, without any signe of such separation: which very well agreeth with the nature of aire, and is fit to confute the error of Psellus, who in the seuenth chapter of his booke, maintaineth that they haue a naturall body, yet in the 23. chapter he granteth, that such bodies being smit asunder, doe ioyne againe, as doth the aire when it is diuided; whence he might easily haue collected, that these bodies must bee made of aire, and not proper vnto Angels. For touching the reason which he bringeth, that if they had not bodies, they could not be tormented with fire, it is certaine, that the diuine prouidence may easily bring to passe, that a body may really worke vpon a spirit, and likewise the contrary: which no Christian can deny, to bee by diuine prouidence wrought in the Sacrament of Baptisme, where the water as the instrument of the diuine bountie, doth really and truly wash and purge the soule that is a spirit: and experience teacheth vs this truth in nature, for imaginations, which are corporall things, doe depresse the soule and make it heauie euen vnto death, as Christ Iesus himselfe said. Besides, by this reason we should say, that the soules of the damned being departed from this world, are not cast into hell-fire because they haue no bodies, and must therefore bee impassible: And so wee shal fall into their heresie, that maintaine that the soules lie sleeping till the day of iudgement, which doth directly oppose the holy Scriptures; which shew vnto vs, that the soules of good men returne vnto God who hath created them, to be at quiet in his hands and vnder his protection; as S. Stephen saith, Domine suscipe spiritum meum: and S Paul wished for death to no other end, but to be with Christ, Cupio, inquit, dissolui & esse cum Christo: which is confirmed by S. Iohn in the Reuelation, saying, Henceforth doe the soules rest from their labours, for their good workes follow them; and Psell. lib. 1. de energia Dæmon. c. 7. & 23.

Act. 7.
Philip 3.

Apocal 14.

death (saith S. Paul) shall be gaine vnto me: on the other side they teach that the soules of the reprobate are tormented in the flames of hell, as appeareth in the Gospell by the rich Glutton, and by the saying of Saint Iohn Baptist, who told the Pharisies, that the axe was alreadie applied vnto the roote of the tree, and euery tree that brought not foorth good fruite, should bee hewen downe and cast into the fire. This S. Iude affirmeth is already happened to the Sodomites, as also to Chorah, Dathan, and Abiron with their complices, and that they went quicke downe to hell.

Iud. in Canonic.

But here may an obiection be made, how Spirits are able to frame vnto themselues such bodies at their own pleasure? S. Augustine answereth, that Spirits by a certaine agilitie and naturall power can bring to passe whatsoeuer may be done in nature: for they doe perfectly know not onely the effects of nature, but the causes also; which proceedeth from the refinednesse and subtilitie of spirit, wherewith they are indowed: which they so well know how to manage and applie, that whatsoeuer nature maketh successiuely and at leisure, they doe the same in an instant. We see the aire diuers times being disposed thereunto by certaine causes, is variously depainted with colours and diuers semblances; and in the sommer wee sometimes see toades and frogs fall with the raine, which proceedeth frō the corruption of the aire, from whence also butter-flyes and catterpillers, and the like vermine are ingendred; all which is produced from the successiue operations of nature. The like effects may bee produced by Spirits, by vniting of causes, whereupon the effects doe necessarily follow. Thus we reade that the Diuell tooke vpon him the forme of a Serpent, which cannot be denied; as also that Pharaohs Magicians, by the assistance of Satan, did make serpents and frogs appeare before the people: and surely they may in the like manner shape and counterfeit any other figure, yea of a man himselfe, as is cleere

by

by the apparitions recited in the book of Genesis. From whence we must draw this necessarie conclusion, that it is contrary both to naturall reason, and to Scripture, that Spirits should haue bodies, but that they are incorporeall and inuisible. The resolution of all this discourse may bee had in the booke intituled, De Ecclesiasticis dogmatibus, which is amongst the workes of S. Augustine, where in the 11. chapter he saith: We beleeue that God is inuisible and incorporeall, because hee is euery where, and is present in all places, yet not bounded in by any place: but we beleeue that intellectuall substances are corporeall, because they are circumscribed in a place, as the soule within the body: and hence it is that they are called corporeall, because they are limited in their substances. It remaineth that wee endeuour to know when they were created, since Moyses maketh no mention of it; and from whence it proceedeth, that there is a difference betwixt Spirits, so that some are good and some bad.

CHAP. III.

Of the Creation, goodnesse, or maliciousnesse of Angels.

SAint Athanasius when he was to giue his full resolution and opinion concerning Spirits vnto Prince Antiochus, demandeth in the first place, whether Angels were created, or no; for Moses maketh no mention thereof in the first chap. of Genesis where hee purposely laboureth to magnifie the power and goodnesse of God in the worke of Creation. And in good reason doth he take his beginning from this question, since the weightiest argument that Saduces and Atheists can alleage for themselues is, that Moses speaking of all the creatures of God, and of the heauens Athanas q. 1. ad Antioc. princip.

uens themselues doth yet make no mention of Angels: whereupon the ancients haue endeauoured to giue a satisfying resolution heereunto, as S. Chrysostome, S. Athanasius, Theodoret and others. S. Chrysostome particularly in two passages doth determine this point. I know well (saith hee, speaking vnto the people) that you are accustomed to demand, why it is not said, In principio creauit Deus Angelos & Archangelos, as well as it is written, In principio creauit Deus cœlum & terram, especially since Angels and Archangels are vndoubtedly compositions of more noblenesse and puritie then heauen or earth. You are to know (saith hee) that the holy Scripture is nothing else but a letter missiue, which God by his Ministers doth send vnto vs: no lesse then when wee read that Helias was sent from God vnto Ioram king of Israell with a letter missiue to reclaime him from his faults, and to instruct him in the will of God. Now when a great Lord writeth his letters missiue, hee doth accommodate the stile and matter of them vnto the qualitie and capacitie of the person vnto whom he doth addresse them: for hee must write to a Prince after one fashion, and after another fashion vnto a Philosopher, and in a different maner from these, when hee writeth to his wife or to his children. Now the first letter missiue, which God in his goodnes sent vnto man, was the fiue bookes of Moses, which hee directed to the people of Israel. This people of Israel, vnto whom the letter was addressed, was a rude and an ignorant people, because they were newly infranchised from the slauery and seruitude of Egypt, where they had been for the space of 400 yeares very cruelly oppressed, being all of them constrained to apply themselues to manuall trades and workes, as to gather straw and clay, & to carry great baskets vpō their shoulders ful of such stuffe, wherof they were afterwards to make bricks, and then to carry them where the Cities and Pyramides of Ægypt were a building: and this they daily did, not ha-

uing

Chrysost homil. 2. in Gent. & homil. de ieiunio, & gen. lect.

2. Paral 21.

Exod. 1.

uing leasure to breath or to serue their God one day, as may be easily seene in the beginning of Exodus so that whatsoeuer was said of Ioseph, may very appositly be applied vnto this people: Diuertit ab oneribus dorsum eius, manus eius in cophino seruierunt. Which was the cause that they were a rude nation, & altogether vnacquainted with good literature. And this is the peculiar slight of tyrants (as Aristotle writeth in his Politicks) who will not permit their subiects to study and attaine vnto learning: which was the practise of Iulian the Apostata against the Christians. They were all then very ignorant except Moses who was exempted from such rudenesse, because he had his education in the Kings Palace, and was the adopted sonne of King Pharaoes daughter, and this S. Stephen well obserueth, saying, Erat Moses doctus in omni scientia Ægyptiorum: for he had skill in Astronomy, Geometry, and the Mathematicks, but the rest of the people were exceedingly ignorant, and could not conceiue of any thing but what they could see with their eyes, which is the ordinary fashion of illiterate people, who are not able to eleuate their spirites higher then the earth, and laugh at Philosophers when they dispute of the roundnesse of the Sunne, of the height of heauen, and of the spherical forme of the sea and earth: and heereupon it is that Moses saith to God, alas Lord, I assure my selfe that they will not beleeue that which I shall say vnto them, for when I shall speak of thee Lord, what fashion shall I hold in my discourse to make thy Maiesty knowen vnto them, since their apprehensions doe sauour so much of earth and dulnesse. But God answered him, it shall be sufficient for thee to tell them, that hee (who is) hath spoken vnto thee: for hee would not that hee should speake vnto them in a higher straine then of his being onely, which is a thing common and agreeable to the least creature of the world, although if these words bee vnderstood by nature, not by participation,

Psal. 80.
Arist. Polit. lib. 5.
Socrat. lib. 3. Hist Eccles. cap. 10.
Act. 6.
Exod. 3.

pation, they haue a high and mysterious meaning: but this distinction was not mentioned vnto them, because he would fit his discourse to their vnderstandings. And this is the very opinion of S. Dydimus, who sheweth, that according to the diuersitie of tymes and persons there came Prophets and others in the name of God: some with the name of him that was Almighty, others with the name of him that was repleniſhed with all goodnes, and others with the name of vnappeasable rigour and iustice. And thus (saith hee) was Moses sent vnto this rude people with the name of him That is, for God would at that time exact nothing from them, but that they should vnderstand that the God of their fathers is, and was not like the false Gods of Egypt, who indeed were not, because they had not so much as an existence which is the least that any thing may haue. In like manner when Christ Iesus did addresse himselfe vnto the seauen Churches of Asia, hee set downe diuers attributes of his Maiestie in the beginning of those letters according to the diuersitie of persons. And S. Paul preaching at Athens among the Philosophers did purposely decline to make particular mention of the Trinity, but thought it sufficient to expresse vnto them that there was a God who created heauen and earth: Deus (inquit) qui fecit mundum, & omnia quæ in eo sunt cœli & terræ Dominus, non in manu factis Templis habitat. S. Peter also in his first sermon to the Iewes, doth not at the first cast plainely expresse that Christ Iesus was the true God, but accommodating himselfe vnto them hee is contented, if at the first he may winne thus much vpon their beleefe, that Christ Iesus was a holy and innocent man sent from God, Iesum (inquit) Nazarenum virum approbatum a Deo signis & virtutibus: but afterwards he speaketh vnto them in a higher straine, hauing once prepared them for more diuine instructions. And so heere likewise in processe of time did God manifest vnto this people, that there were Angels, and Dydimus lib. 2 de Spiritu S.

Apoc. 2. 3.

Act. 17.

Act. 2.

that

that they had their creation from him, as wee shall presently see. Which is also more expresly vnfoulded in the new Testament, at what time men grew more familiar and better acquainted with the secrets of God. This is S. Chrysostoms reason which is very probable and fit to be admitted. S. Athanasius yeeldeth another reason saying, that this people was exceeding ready to beleeue and admit plurality of Gods, which in processe of time they tooke from the superstitions of the Egyptians: which conceite being once growne into an habite and custome, it did at length become almost naturall vnto them, and brake out openly in the desert, when they said in the plurall number, Hi sunt dij tui Israel qui te eduxerunt de terra Ægypti. And hereupon God tooke occasion to insist vpon the explication of this in the first commandement of the Law, (which saith, Dominus Deus tuus Deus vnus est) longer then vpon all the rest of the commandements, because the people were so much inclined to this plurality of Gods, and had then lately made and worshipped a Calfe. Which they may doe well to obserue, who because it is afterwards said, Thou shalt not make any likenesse of any thing that is in heauen or in earth, doe conceite that this is the second commandement, and aske the cause why Curats doe not so pronounce the same in their seruice, not vnderstanding that the Curate doth pronounce but a short summary of the commandements of God, and that this whereof they complaine, is not properly a commandement, but a more ample exposition of the first commandement, against which the people had for a long time most transgressed. Therefore doth S. Athanasius well obserue, that it was not safe to mention Angels vnto them, because they would presently haue thought them Gods: which Carpocrates, Basilides, and other disciples of Simon Magus also did, as S. Ireneus and Tertullian haue written. Whereunto we may adde a third reason drawne from the more moderne diuines, and Athanas. 41. ad Antioc. princip.

Exod. 32. Deut. 6.

Exod. 20.

Iren. lib. 1. Tertul. de præscript. hæret.

Iacob. Christopolitanus Episcop. in Psal. 81.
Rom. 10.
Heb. 2.

and that is, that Christ Iesus was the end and scope of the law, who was to take vpon him the flesh of Adam, and not the nature of Angels as S. Paul noteth, Finis legis Christus & nusquam Angelos apprehendit, sed semen Abrahæ apprehendit. Since then Christ Iesus was not to be the Redeemer of Spirits, but of men. Moses did with good reason passe ouer Angels in silence, and bounded his discourse with the mention of visible creatures, ouer whom man had dominion, that in conclusion hee might inferr that man alone had the priuiledge to bee made after Gods image and likenesse, that in the end hee might be deifyed and made a partner in the diuine nature thorow Iesus Christ. By which hee thought to leade and conduct man the more easily vnto the knowledge of the grace of God towards him, since that he had more remembrance of him then of the Angels themselues, who were iustly passed ouer without mentioning, if wee consider hou much our humane nature was honoured by the diuine word: so that hee who is God adored by all, is a man as wee are; being as absolutely man as I am, and being as truely man, as he is truely God. And this is the conclusion which S. Paul maketh against the Iewes when he speaketh of Angels: Nusquam Angelos apprehendit, sed semen Abrahæ. It is also manifest that the old Testament maketh no mention of the sinne of Lucifer and his adherents, but indirectly and by glances, as when the haughty minded men are compared vnto him, so in Esai the 14. chap. where mention is made of Nabuchodonosor King of Babilon, and in Ezechiel 18. where the King of Thir is described, both of them being meruailous proud and presumptuous against God; they are (saith the Scripture) like vnto Lucifer. But of set purpose there is no relation made hereof except it bee incidentally, and (as wee say) per accidens. For Christ Iesus did pay no ransome for wicked Spirits as he had done for men, but he hath clearly declared himselfe, that hell fire is from all

Esay. 14.
Ezechiel. 18.
Matth. 25.

eternity

eternity prepared Diabolo & Angelis eius. But although Moses did not make direct mention of them, yet did hee tacitly insinuate the same, when hee saith of the seauen daies, that they followed one the other, and that the heauens went on in their course, making day & night, euening and morning, which could not possibly be without the ministry and helpe of Angels. Moreouer when he concludeth Igitur perfecti sunt, cœli & terra & omnis ornatus eorum, by the perfect ornament of heauen he meaneth Angels. For that excellent ornament which addeth such grace vnto the heauens is their motion, without which (as Aristotle himselfe well knew) the heauen could beame downe no influence vpon the earth, as is intimated by S. Iohn when hee saith, Iurauit per viuentem in secula quod non erit amplius tempus. For if wee should say, behold a perfect man, this speech doth import that hee hath a soule, and that his body is disposed and fitted for those motions which are naturall vnto man. Whereupon S. Chrysostome admonisheth that by this ornament wee are not to vnderstand the light or starrs onely, but many other perfections, both of higher and baser consideration. But because this manner of speaking is very obscure, S. Athanasius, Theodoret and S. Chrysostom moue the question, whether the Scriptures doe directly say that the Angels were created by God or no: and their resolutions are that they doe so say. First King Dauid maketh vs an expresse Psalme touching the creation of the world, where hee speaketh generally of all creatures, Spirituall, rationall, sensible, terrestriall; as also those creatures who haue their being in the water and aire in the 103. Psalme, where he beginneth to speake of the Maiestie of God in this manner, Confessionem siue maiestatem & decorem induisti, amictus lumine, sicut vestimento: next hee speaketh of the heauens saying, Thou hast stretched them out ouer vs like a tent; then doth hee adioyne the Angels, Qui facis Angelos tuos Spiritus, who makest (saith

Genes. 1,

Genes. 2.

Apocal. 10.

Chrysost. homil. in Genes.

Theodoret. in Epitom diuin. decret. lib. 5.

Psal. 103.

(saith he) thy Angels Spirits. Where by the way wee may obserue for our better information in this and the like places of Scripture, that the Hebrewes haue but three tenses in their verbes, the Præter-perfect tense, the present, and future tense; and haue not the vse as the Greeks and Latins haue of the præter-imperfect and præterpluperfect tenses, whence it ariseth that the present tense with the Hebrewes may (as the sentence will beare it) bee translated by the præterimperfect tense, as also by the præterperfect, and by the præterpluperfect tense. And this is practised by the Hebrewes in this very passage of Scripture, as if they should say in latine, Qui faciebas Angelos Spiritus; that is to say, Lord in the time of creation thou diddest make and fashion these Spirits, to bee the messengers and ministers of thy good pleasure. By which place Dauid doth not onely shew that God created Angels, but also, contrary to the opinion of the Greekes and Latins, that the Angels were created, when God made heauen and earth, and not as some would say, many thousands of yeares before: so that it is not chancefully done, that he first made mention of the essence of God, and then of Angels, and last of all of other creatures. The same methode he obserueth in the 148. Psalme, where he inuiteth all things to praise their Creator, and doth not omit the Angels, but placeth them in the first rank, saying, Laudate eum omnes Angeli eius, laudate eum omnes virtutes eius, and concludeth that God fashioned and created them as hee hath done all other creatures, quoniam ipse dixit, & facta sunt, ipse mandauit, & creata sunt. The same order is obserued by the three men that were cast into the firy furnace at Babilon, who in their thanksgiuing doe inuite all the workes of Gods hand to blesse their Creator, and descending to particulars, they bring in the Angels as the excellentest creatures of all, harmoniously to sing and say, Benedicite omnia opera Domini Domino, cantate & superexaltate

Hierom. in Epistol. ad Titum.
S. Thom. 1. p. q 61. ap. 3.
Psal. 148.
Dan. 3.

tate eum in secula. Benedicite Angeli Domini, Domino; Benedicite cœli Domino. Where it is very remarkable, (that we may not digresse from the argument in hand) against those who conceite that the creation of Angels was long before the creation of heauen, that therefore in this place and some others, the heauen is said to bee set after the Angels, thereby to figure out vnto vs the transcendency of Angels aboue all other creatures: neither can we giue any other probable and literall reason why the heauens should bee preferred before the Angels, then this which we haue already alleaged. S. Chrysostome affirmeth that S. Iohn made mention of the creation of Angels, where he saith, Omnia per ipsum facta sunt, & sine ipso factũ est nihil. And S. Paul doth, as it were comment vpon this sentence of S. Iohn, as hauing bin wrapt vp to heauen after him, in his Epistle to the Colossians, Quoniam in ipso condita sunt vniuersa in cœlis & in terra visibilia, & inuisibilia, sive Throni, sive dominationes, sive principatus, sive potestates, omnia per ipsum & in ipso creata sunt. And this doth vndoubtedly confute all the Manicheans, Marcionists, and other sectaries and disciples of Simon Magus, so that wee may from hence conclude, that God did create all Angels good at first, that is, perfect in all goodnesse both of nature and grace: for whatsoeuer God made, he saw that it was passing good, as Moses expresseth it: and towards the end of his bookes hee giueth a reason of the same vnto the people, saying, Dei perfecta sunt opera: whereunto agreeth the wise-man, who giueth vs to vnderstand, that God made all things in number, waight, and measure, in which the most captious can not finde the least discord or blemish. And Christ Iesus himselfe doth assure vs, that the Diuell did not persist in the truth, that is, in his first integrity wherein hee was created: and that he was once in heauen, but was fallen from thence like lightning. S. Peter and S. Iude doe giue the reason of this fall, because, say they, hee Chrysost hom. de ieiunio. Genesi lect. Ioan. 1.

Coloss. 1.

Genes. 2. Deut. 32. Sapient. 11. Ioan. 8. August. lib. 11. de ciuit. cap. 18

Iud. in canon. 2. Petri. 2.

sinned against God, which sinne being folded vp in the pleates of malice and obstinacy, was without the proportion of remission and pardon. The same meaning hath Iob in the 4. chapter, In Angelis suis reperit prauitatem. And although there were no other text sutable vnto this purpose, then that which is alleaged in Saint Matthew, where Christ Iesus doth foretell, that he will cast the Diuell and his Angels into hell fire, yet would this bee an argument sufficient (as Theodoret well inferreth) to prooue that he was created in perfection and goodnesse, but that from his owne desire and malice he made choice of euill, by his rebellion against God. Non est enim (saith hee) iusti Dei proprium eum punire qui necessitate malus sit. And certainly it is repugnant vnto the nature, goodnesse and iustice of God, who neuer condemneth any, that doe not through malice deserue such punishment. Hence it is that S. Augustine doth worthily reprooue Porphiry the Philosopher, because his assertion was, that there were a kinde of Spirits, who from their first nature were originally euill and deceitfull. This proceeded not from their nature (saith he) but from their will. It remaineth now, that we declare what manner of sinne it was, whereof they were conuicted. S. Augustine giueth vs the resolution heereof, saying, Since they are Spirits, wee are not to conceiue, that they were fornicatours, drunkards, or addicted to any of those grosse vices, which haue their sting in the flesh: but wee are to obserue, that there are two sorts of sinnes; the first are spirituall, because they are proper to spirituall substances, such as are pride, and enuy: the other are carnall, and proceed from the flesh. S. Augustine spake not this of his owne head, but grounded it vpon the Scripture, which specifying the sinnes that are peculiar vnto Satan, maketh mention of these; as Esai and Ezechiel when they would exaggerate the great ouer weening and pride of the Kings of Babylon and Thir, he maketh a comparison betwixt Lucifer

Iob. 4.

Matth. 25.

Theodoret. lib Epitom. diuin. decret.

Augúst. lib. 14. de ciuit. cap. 3.

August. lib. de ciuit. 15.

Esay 14. Ezech. 18.

cifer and them. And our Sauiour when he saw his Apostles to be a little puffed vp and swolne in spirit, because at their words and commandement the Diuels were cast out, Reioyce not (saith hee) in this, for I saw Satan fall from heauen like lightning: by which words hee insinuated thus much, that the downe fall of the Diuell proceeded from pride. S. Paul also in his admonition vnto Bishops that they should be humble, doth charge the Bishop not to bee puffed vp with pride, least hee should fall into the same condemnation with the Diuell. Touching the sinne of enuy, it is also written Inuidia Diaboli mors intrauit in orbem terrarum. And the reason why mention of mankinde is made heerein, is, to giue vs to vnderstand, that the Diuell fell not into the sinne of enuy, till after the creation of man, and that pride was his peculiar sinne, for the which he was thrust out of heauen. Now whether it were, that by reason of his great endowments of nature, hee did so farre ouerballance his owne worth, that hee might conceite that hee was able to make himselfe an associate and partaker in the diuine nature (which is the highest degree whereunto an intellectuall substance may aspire) and that by his owne naturall and peculiar forces (as Esai and Exechiel doe seeme to imply) or whether he would not acknowledge Christ Iesus the Mediatour of men and Angels for his head, which mystery might by reuelation be proposed vnto him, (as it was afterwards also vnfolded vnto Adam and all the fathers of the old Testament) it is most certaine that from his owne will, and in the pride of his heart, he rebelled against God, so that there was a battell fought in heauen, after the manner that Spirites combat one against another, by a strong renitency and resistance of the ones will against the others, euen as wee also fight against them. But the good Angels would by no meanes adhere or fauour that damnable attempt, but resisted it with all their forces, accomplishing that which is written of

Luc. 10.

1. Tim. 3. cap. 2

Psal.102. them. Benedicite Domino omnes Angeli eius potentes virtute, qui facitis verbum eius, ad audiendam vocem sermonum eius. Thus were the euill Spirits thrust out of heauen for their pride, whereas the good Spirits were still made blessed in the participation of the vision and presence of God. This did Christ signifie vnto his Apostles, when out of pride they demanded of him, who among them should bee the greatest in the kingdome of heauen: hee tooke a litle childe by the hand saying, if you become not like vnto this litle childe, yee cannot enter into that kingdome: and beware how you offend one of these litle ones, for their Angels doe alwayes see the face of my Father which is in heauen: whereby he giueth to vnderstand, that children by reason of their naturall humility are like vnto Angels, which Angels by this meanes doe see the face of God. Since this great reuolte in heauen, there hath euer been a contrariety and warre betweene the will's of good and bad spirits, and betweene good and bad men also: as between Abel and Cain: Isaac and Ismael: Iacob and Esau. And this is it which S. Iohn speaketh of in the Apocalypse, that there was a great battell in heauen between Michael and his Angels, & the Dragon with his Angels: and S. Iude bringeth in the same Michael, disputing and chiding with Satan. Since therefore hee is full of wickednesse, and altogether depriued of the grace of God, he can doe nothing but what is naught, and becausse hee cannot wreake his malice vpon the Saints in Paradise, hee conuerteth his fury against man, that is made after the image of God, and is heere seated vpon the earth, that hee may worship his Creator, and acknowledge and serue him with his whole heart, that so he may at length participate of that diuine glory and felicity, which the Diuell by reason of his pride is vtterly depriued of, as we haue already alleaged. And this is the next pointe, which offereth it selfe to consideration, in the ensueing chapter.

Matth.18.

Apoc.12.

Iudic. in Canonic.

CHAP.

CHAP. IIII.

The meanes which Diuels haue, to appeare and come vnto vs; in what part of the world they reside; how they are bound; and their sundrie waies to tempt men.

TOuching the meanes which Spirits haue to performe this, the scripture teacheth vs, that in their downe-fall from heauen, some remained in the middle region of the aire, which is darksome & obscure, because the Sun-beames passe through the same without refraction of any solid body, which by repercussion might double their force and light, and without which they shine not at all: as is euidently seene in a caue, where there is no light at all perceiued, but in the place where the sunne-beame doth fall. And although we had no other proofe, then that generall rule of Saint Ierome, it might sufficiently euince the same: for these are his very words; Omnium doctorum opinio est, quod aër iste, qui cœlum & terram medius diuidens, inane appellatur, plenus sit contrarijs fortitudinibus. Since then there was neuer any Doctor of the Church, which made scruple of the truth hereof, wee must thinke that they had good warrant for the same from the Scripture. They did no doubt consider, that our Lord in the parable of the seede, did by the birds of heauen, which deuoured the corne, vnderstand and also interpret it to be the Diuels, whom he calleth the birds of heauen, thereby meaning the aire, according to the vsuall Hebrew phrase, and agreeable vnto our maner of speech also, who commonly say, the raine falleth from heauen, when the meaning is, from the aire. For as S. Ierome hath well obserued, all Philosophers doe agree in their opinions, that the clouds (by the dissoluing of which the raine is engendred) are not drawne vp aboue two miles at the most from the earth, whereas the distance betwixt heauen and earth is incompa-

Of the place or residence of wicked spirits.

Hieron. lib. 3. in Epist. ad Ephes. ad cap. 6.

Luke 8.

Hieron. vbi supra.

rably greater. And this is S. Pauls meaning, when hee telleth the Ephesians, that our fight is not chiefly against men, but against the princes of this world, which are the wicked spirits, that haue their abode aboue in high places: and as himselfe expla-neth all these authorities in the second chapter of the same Epistle, by these high places he meaneth the aire: Secundum seculum mundi huius (saith hee) secundum principem potestatis aëris huius, spiritus qui nunc operatur in filios diffidentiæ. (Which is also declared by S. Iude in his Canonicall epistle) shewing that these wicked spirits are abiding in that darksome aire, & are there reserued for the day of iudgement, when they shall heare these words, Goe yee cursed into hell fire, which is from the beginning prepared for the Diuell and his angels. His words are these: Angelos qui non seruauerunt suum principatum, sed dereliquerunt suum domicilium in iudicium magni diei, vinculis æternis sub caligine reseruauit. And here may be fitly alleaged that which is written in S. Luke, where it is related, that the Diuels besought Christ Iesus, not to send them out into the deepe, but rather into the heard of swine: and they doe likewise complaine vnto our Sauiour, saying, Vt quid venisti ante tempus torquere nos? As if they should haue said, we are assured of our totall and vtter damnation, but the time thereof is not yet come, for this shall bee put in execution at the last day of iudgement, which being not yet present, thou maist doe well to leaue vs in these parts, vntill that time approch. The like may be said of that place in the Reuelation, Vah mari & terræ, quia descendit diabolus ad vos, habens iram magnam: and it is againe declared in the same booke, that our aduersarie the diuell was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone. And that wee may resolue, what the difference is betweene the diuels that are in hell, and those whose abode is in the aire, although S. Ierome maketh daintie to meddle with it, because he conceiued it to be from the matter, whereof he intreated, Ephes. 6.

Iud. in canonic. 2. Pet. 2.

Luke 8. Matth. 8.

Apoc. 12.

intreated, as also for that hee feared (as himselfe excuseth it) lest hee should trespasse too farre vpon the readers patience, in dwelling so long vpon this argument; yet will we speake somewhat of the same, because this present discourse doth demaund it. It is an infallible truth, that there are great multitudes of wicked spirits, who abide in that gloomie region of the aire, and come also lower and neerer vnto vs, which God in his prouidence hath and doth permit. First, because himselfe imployeth these his creatures, although it be in base and seruile offices; as a King or ciuill Iustice are accustomed to condemne certaine malefactors not vnto death, but vnto the performance of some worke, which aduantageth these offenders nothing at all, but is onely charged with laboriousnesse and toyle, and tendeth meerely to the publike good. Thus were many in times past banished, or confined to some Isle or mountaine, to labour and digge in the Quarries of Marble, for the Princes profit and behoofe, and did euer carrie their chaines of iron on their feete, and had a good guard to watch them. The like is done vnto those that are slaues in the Galleys. Secondly, for our exercise, as S. Bernard hath it, and it is also the obseruation of S. Hierome, who applieth this vnto the Iebusites, Philistins, and other barbarous people, that by diuine permission were left in the borders and skirts of the land of promise, to exercise the people of ℣ Iewes, who otherwise would haue spurned at Gods commandements: and these were the type and figure of those wicked spirits, that Christ Iesus after his death and passion, was to leaue in the aire, to exercise vs in whatsoeuer is good and praise-worthy: as sand which of it selfe is fruitlesse and barren, yet serueth very fitly to scoure and make bright the vessels of gold or of siluer, which are carefully looked vnto in the great house of a father of a familie. Thus was Iob exercised, and thus haue all good men been tried, as S. Paul witnesseth of himselfe and saith, that hee endured the buffetings of Hieron. lib. 3. comment. in epist. ad Ephes.

Bernard. Hieron. loco citato. & August. contra Faust. Manich.

Iob 1. 2. Cor. 12.

Satan: and doth conclude in the Epistle aboue cited, where he mentioneth these things, that Christ our Redeemer, doth by the merits of his death and passion lend vnto vs all, a compleate armour, that so we may be the true champions of God. The sword is the word of God (saith he) the helmet, hope: the corslet, charitie: and the shield, faith, as S. Peter saith, Cui resistite fortes in fide. To be briefe, if wee be thus armed, the Diuell shall haue no power ouer vs, as S. Augustine obserueth. First, because as soone as wee brandish these spirituall weapons against him, hee presently turneth his backe and flieth from vs, which S. Iames also witnesseth, Resistite (saith he) Diabolo, & fugiet à vobis. Secondly, because he can doe no good vpon those that doe resist him, and onely gaineth on those that make no preparation to stand against him, Non vincit nisi volentem. Being houering so neere about vs, they haue yet a curbe & snaffle to restraine them, and that is Gods prouidence, which either by the ministerie of good Angels, or otherwise as it shall seeme good vnto him, doth hold in their rage and malice with so strong a hand, that they haue no power to do that which is within the compasse of their naturall forces, and like slaues they are faine first to aske leaue of God, before they dare attempt any thing. Thus we see the Diuell asked leaue of God to afflict Iob in his person and goods; and the Diuels mentioned in the Gospell dared not to enter into the swine, vntill they had gotten particular license from Christ Iesus, as Tertullian sheweth at large. Of this curbe S. Paul speaketh, when he saith, Fidelis Deus qui non patietur vos tentari supra id quod potestis. He permitteth Satan to do many things, but with such limitations, that those assaults wherwithal he would force vs, are neuer aboue our abilities of resistance. We are not therefore to dispute, and aske the reason why God afflicteth one man more then another, and that by such diuersities of temptations, let it suffice that he knoweth, when a young man like Ephes. 6.

1. Pet. 5.

August. lib. de natura & gratia, cap. 58.

Iames 4.

Tertul. lib. de fuga in persecut.

Iob. 1.

Matth. 8.

1. Corinth. 10.

vnto

vnto Dauid, hath both courage and force to encounter with the Giant Goliah, which attempt would haue crushed in peeces the strongest men in Israel, as flesh and blood would haue conceiued. The Diuell doth thus trie and exercise vs, both out of malice which hee beareth towards God, and out of enuie which hee carrieth vnto vs; by which hee doth daily make full the measure of his punishments. For wee are to note, that those Diuels, who after their creation offended most by their pride, malice and ingratitude, were cast into the deepest dungeon of hell, and are already tortured with all the extremitie that may bee; but they that did not transgresse in that heighth of wickednesse, fell no lower then the aire, and do there acquire vnto themselues new damnation, not in their depriuation of the vision of God, for that is common to them all, but in the accession and increase of paine in the pit of hell. And this the Doctors of S. Ieromes time were wont to relate, saying, that if a Christian did resist the Diuels temptations, he doth not only aduantage himselfe thereby, but doth doe a good turne vnto the Diuell his aduersarie, because by this meanes hee is not punishable with so great torments, as if hee had ouercome the Christian: whereas else he should be plagued for the same, in that he was the cause of that sinne. Hereupon it is that the Diuels were afraid to be sent into the deepes, after they had a long time tempted and tormented the poore Iew. This prouidence of God hath in like sort withheld it selfe from casting them all into the lowest bottome of the pit of hell, although they are tied vp for the most part in some quarter of the world: which is nothing else, but when God commandeth them not to budge from a certaine set place, and restraineth their workings elsewhere. And this ligation, or chaining vp, is the greatest torment vnto them that may be: in regard that they are Spirits, and therefore of a generous and actiue nature, fashioned with all free scope and libertie to worke in Hieron. lib. 1. comment. in Matth. cap. 5.

Luke 8. The chaine wherewithall they are boũd.

in all places, which they haue a minde vnto. And therefore doth Tertullian call them quodammodo volucres, because they are of a more excellent agilitie, then the swifteſt bird when he is vpon his wing. So that wee are to conceiue, that by this reſtraint and confinement they are as it were cooped vp in a cage; and are not able to flie vp and downe to execute their purpoſes, by reaſon of this compulſorie detainment: but are infinitly vexed at this commandement which God impoſeth vpon thē. Thus muſt the paſſage in the booke of Tobias be vnderſtood, where it is ſaid, that Raphael tooke the Diuell Aſmodeus (which in Hebrew ſignifieth a baniſhed man) and baniſhed him into the deſert of the vpper Ægypt: and in like manner that paſſage in the Apocalypſe is thus to be interpreted, where it is ſaid that Satan was bound and looſed againe: which importeth nothing but this, that all his power and actiuitie was for a time taken from him by God, and was afterwards reſtored vnto him againe. For in the laſt daies of the world he ſhall be vntied, and ſhall haue full permiſſion giuen vnto him to powre foorth all his rage and venome vpon the children of God, yea ſo farre ſhall the authoritie of Antichriſt gaine vpon the world, as that they ſhall be able to worke miracles, as to make fire viſibly to deſcend from heauen, and ſuch like wonders, deſcribed at large by S. Iohn in the Reuelation. But the Diuell is now tied vp from doing of theſe things, although in his owne nature he be able to doe as much miſchiefe as hee did in Iobs time, and as hee will doe, when Antichriſt ſhall bee borne. Hee was confined and chained vp by the death and paſſion of Chriſt Ieſus, from ſpeaking any more by Oracles, as appeareth by the Apocalypſe, and as experience it ſelfe teacheth vs: but when the end of the world ſhall approch, hee ſhall ſpeake vnto men in a more familiar manner, and ſhall appeare vnto them in a viſible ſhape. All which diſcourſes are epitomized in a word by Saint Thomas,

Tertul. lib. de anima, cap. de Somnijs.

Tob. 8.

Apoc. 20.

Apoc. 16. & 2. ad Theſſ. 2.

Apoc. 20.

when

when he saith, Dæmones dicuntur ligari quando impediuntur agere, quæ naturaliter possunt, & solui, quando permittuntur. The Diuell then hauing this permission, like a subtle serpent, and one that well vnderstandeth his grounds whereupon hee buildeth his attempts, hee practiseth diuers and cunning slights to inueagle and gaine vpon the sillines of men: which we may manifestly see in two visible apparitions set downe in the Scriptures, the one in the old, the other in the new Testament; and this ought to be sufficient to informe our beleefe heerein. It also plainly appeareth by the experience which the good old father Anthonius Monachus had thereof, whose history is written at large by Saint Athanasius: for in that discourse it seemeth, that this good man was selected by God himselfe, expresly to indure the assaults of Satan both sensibly and visibly so that we may learne from him what the subtilties of the Diuell are, and what meanes we haue to keepe vs from his snares and ambushes. Touching the first visible apparition of Satan, which is described in the third chap. of Genes. it thereby appeareth that he may take a visible body vpon him, and so appeare vnto men, not that it is in his power to take a body vpon him when hee pleaseth, for the confusion and danger that might grow thereby would be exceeding great. Repræsentaret enim se vxori tanquam maritus, seruo tanquam Dominus, religioso tanquam Prælatus, pœnitenti tanquam Confessarius, & sic nullus esset securus, & tentaremur supra id quod possemus, 1. Corinth. 10. Et esset contra prouidentiam Dei. He is therefore inhibited and restrained by the omnipotencie of God, as both S. Augustine, and S. Thomas doe notably shew: but God doth sometimes permit the same, partly to force a beleefe vpon our vnderstandings, that there are wicked spirits, which practise nothing else then how they may destroy vs, and partly to informe vs how foule and vgly these vncleane spirits bee, since the time that they were chased from God,

S. Thom. in quæst. de potent. q. 6. art. 5. & August. lib. 10. de ciuit. cap. 8. vide locum.

Their meanes to tempt and deceiue vs.

Athan. in vita Anth.

Genes. 3.

Chrysost hom. 4. de Lazaro. August. lib. 2. de gene. ad litt. S. Thom. 2. 2. q. 165. art. 2. ad 2.

God, and tooke armes against him. For now the Diuell appeares in a fearfull and hideous shape, as in the forme of a Serpent, or some such deformed beast. And therefore in the beginning of the Bible he is set foorth vnto vs like a venomous snake, which is agreeable vnto the second reason, and in the beginning of the Gospell preached by Christ Iesus, he is described to be one full of talke and pratling (which answereth the first reason) but he hath no other end in this talke then to snare vs, and to breake our neckes. And from the abundance of his cunning, his custome is to accommodate and fit himselfe vnto the humour of those whom hee would circumuent; wherein he sheweth himselfe to bee Gods ape, who doth descend vnto our capacitie and imperfection, and doth practise that saying of Paul: Omnia omnibus factus sum, vt omnes lucri facerem. Thus when the Diuell commeth vnto a silly woman that hath little knowledge, but what by nature and sense is prompted to her, he wil straight begin to derogate from God, and to make it questionable whether those things that are affirmed of him be true, or no. And because he knoweth that this sex is very liquorous of honour and greatnes, he will not stick to make large promises vnto them. And in the third place, beside the exquisite meates and drinkes, he further promiseth vnto them all sensuall and fleshly pleasures whatsoeuer: all which temptations are easily discerned in the assaults which hee vsed, to tempt the first woman, who representeth vnto vs all those that forget God and his blessings. For it is a certaine truth, that if hee had applied himselfe vnto Adam, hee would haue laboured his subuersion by more couert & guilefull meanes then hee vsed towards the woman. And therefore S. Paul attributeth the glory of this conquest to haue proceeded from a womanish simplicitie, concluding in these words: Ne sicut serpens seduxit Euam, ita seducantur sensus vestri à simplicitate quæ est in Christo Iesu. But when he was to tempt Christ Iesus, he

1. Cor. 9.

Genes. 2.
2. Cor. 11.

tooke

tooke another course, for without any derogation from God (because a man of a setled vnderstanding and faith doth abhorre such grossenes, and stoppeth his eares against it) hee beginneth with that which seemeth to haue no apparancie of euill, but rather to haue bin vsed by holy men, as Moyses did by his prayer change the blood of the riuer into water, and made the rocke to gush forth with fresh and wholesome streames, as it is written: Qui conuertit petram in stagna aquarum, for then the people were in great extremitie for water. So he laboured to perswade Christ Iesus to make the stones bread, when as it might seeme hee had neede of sustenance, and was in the desert as Moyses was. Secondly, knowing that Christ Iesus was conuersant in the holie Scriptures, and would be most attentiue vnto them, he alleageth diuers passages from thence. And being able to doe no good that way, he offereth vnto him the Monarchie of the world; knowing, that science puffeth vp those that haue no charitie, and maketh them beleeue that they are able to sit at the sterne, and gouerne the whole world better then any other whatsoeuer. To conclude, he resembleth the Crocadiles of Ægypt, who when they perceiue a traueller neere vnto Nilus, they begin to faine the voyce of a man, weeping and taking on as if they had great neede of succour, and when the poore man shall simply make his approch, he is suddenly deuoured. S. Athanasius reciteth, that on a time the Diuell did thus plaine himselfe, neere vnto the Cell of of that godly Father Antonius, who demanding him what he was, hee answered (when hee saw that hee was discouered) that he had iust cause to complaine, for all the world did taxe and burthen him to be the author of all the villanies that were done, although he were very innocent and free from any such matter. And sometimes hee would sing Psalmes, the better to insinuate himselfe vnto him; but hee stopped his eares against him, and would take no heed what the Diuell did sing, practising

Psal. 113.

Matth. 4.

Athan. in vita Ant.

Psal.37. practising that which is written, Ego autem tanquam surdus non audiebam. At other times he presented himselfe before him with great glorie, transforming himselfe into an Angell of light; but he shut his eyes, and would not gaze vpon the beautie of Satan: so that when hee perceiued that he could gaine nothing by all these baites and allurements, (for by his often prayers, weeping, and fasting, hee had obtained the gift which 1.Cor.12. S.Paul calleth discretio spiritum) he then came vpon him with a hideous noise to affright him, sometimes appearing in the semblance of a Dragon, and sometimes in the shape of some other dreadfull beast: and then he would stand before him like a man, but of such an enormous and vast size and stature, that he seemed greater then any giant, and did touch the cloudes with his head, although his feete stood vpon the ground. Then would hee make a great noise as if the Cell had been inuironed with horses, chariots, and armed men; but he euer recommended himselfe vnto God, and regarded not these collusions of the Diuell, remembring Psal.19. that which is written: Hi in curribus, & hi in equis, nos autem in nomine Domini nostri inuocabimus. The Diuell forgot not to cast wedges of gold in his way by which he was to passe, that so he might baite him with auarice, yet at the signe of the crosse (saith S.Athanasius) they all presently vanished. He also appeared vnto him in the shape of a woman to tempt him vnto the sin of the flesh; and when by none of these meanes hee could preuaile against him, hee then began to exhort
Vide Aug.lib.2 de ciuit.c 26. him to watch, and spend the whole night in prayers, to fast often, and to practise all other spirituall exercises, that so hee might either breed a disgust of these things in him, as being perswaded thereunto by the enemie of nature, or at the least, that hee might seeme to do something at his request: but this holy man, who might well 2.Cor.2. say with S.Paul, non ignoramus astutias eius, did not for all that, disaccustome his holy exercises, but rather encreased

encreased his deuotion, not because the Diuell commanded it, but because Christ Iesus taught it both by word and example: knowing well that whatsoeuer the Diuel saith or doth, it is for an ill purpose, and therefore by how much the lowder hee was in his confession, that Christ Iesus was the Sonne of God, by so much the more did Christ check his speech, and commanded him to silence. The last way which hee vsed was in chiding him for his austerity of life, shewing vnto him that this was a rigorous, strict & burthensome way, and it would be a means to hasten his destruction being one of Gods creatures, rather then to enable him for his seruice, and that it was no sin to vse the creatures of God freely with thanksgiuing, so that there were no excesse or gormundizing in the same. Lastly, hee threatned to beate him and to kill him by breaking his neck. But hee was readily answered, that since hee could not hurt the least sheepe that Iob had, nor enter into the heard of swine without leaue, much lesse could he endamage a man who is sheltered vnder the wing of Gods protection, and who hath the haires of his head numbred, so that not one of them can fall to the ground without the expresse will of God.

Luc. 4.

Iob. 1. Matth. 8. Luc. 8.

CHAP. V.

That the Diuels scope is to make himselfe to be worshipped as a God, and to deceiue men: that the Diuell knoweth not things to come, neither can he penetrate or dive into the secrets of mans heart.

The Diuell chalengeth adoration.

WHen we would speake definitiuely of the Diuell, and inquire into his nature, we must euer call to minde those two sinnes which are peculiar vnto Satan, and that is, Pride and Enuy: for from these two spirituall vices, all other effects doe streame forth as from

Esa. 14

from two plentifull fountaines. Therefore as at the first he, together with his Angels did sinne thorow pride, and would iniuriously inuade God, and share with him in equality of glory, so doth he still persist in this peruersenes, and remaineth hardned thorow the great impenitency and obduratnesse which swayeth in him, in somuch that he doth not yet forbeare to say in his heart, Similis ero altissimo. This he practised from the beginning, for if we behold what manner of conference hee held with the woman, it is easily seene, that hee did driue all vnto this head, that she would worship him as a God. When a tyrant would by vsurpation take vpon him another mans kingdome, hee laboureth to eclipse the naturall Prince, and to perswade all men that himselfe ought to be receiued and acknowledged for their true soueraigne: so when Satan would perswade Eue, that God did grudge and enuy them, and would be very much grieued that they should bee aduanced vnto that height, whereunto their owne excellency did carry them, the conclusion and inference that was to bee made thereupon, could imply nothing else but that they were to conceiue that this God was not the true God, because the true God like a true father wil straine his vttermost endeauours, to set his childrens fortunes high and in the top of honour: and further, since he desired to bee thought such a one as did long for nothing more then their aduancement, and seemed for that purpose to appeare, and to speake familiarly vnto them, although hee was of an inuisible nature, and of a substance more refined and excellent then theirs, yet did he make shew that hee was willing to direct and guide them to the supreamest felicity, euen to bee like vnto God; from thence he might easily conclude that he was the true God, and therefore as the true God was to be worshipped by them. Neither was his purpose wholly frustrated, for many nations haue since conceiued, that the Serpent, which spake by the Serpent, was the true

God:

God: insomuch as the Greeks haue from hence drawne their etymologie of Serpents, as S. Athanasius hath well obserued, for (saith he) ὄφις, that is to say, a Serpent is so called from ὁ φὰς, that is to say, one that speaketh, because it was the Serpent that spake to our first parents. For they had an opinion that this speech was for the great benefit and good of mankinde: which conceite was not onely intertayned by the Grecians, but passed for currant thorow the whole Romane Empire, after that an Oracle had told them that the plague which raigned in Rome should haue no end, vntill they had sent vnto the God Æsculapius. The Ambassadors who were purposely designed for this imployment, being come vnto the place which the Oracle had pointed out vnto them, found a great Serpent, which they tooke into their ship and carryed to Rome, where he remained for the space of three dayes. And Valerius Maximus maketh sober and serious mention of the same, as being a matter that much conduced vnto the worship of the Gods, and Ouid shameth not to call it his God

Athan. in definicion prici.

Valer. Maxim. lib. 1.

Cum cristis aureus altis
In Serpente Deus prænuncia sibila misit.

Ouid. lib. Metamor.

Lucian hath composed a treatise heereof, and affirmeth that the Oracles, which proceeded from the mouth of a certaine Serpent, lead vp and downe by a Magician called Alexander, were more diuine, and to be held in greater veneration then those that came from Priests, because (saith hee) these came immediatly from the very mouth of God. Nay, which is more to be wondered, there were hereticks in the primitiue Church that affirmed so much, and were perswaded that the Serpent which spake vnto Eue was a true God: and therefore their custome was to place a Serpent vpon their Altar, vnto whom they offered their sacrifices, and heereupon were called Ophites, that is to say, Serpentines, or people that adored Serpents. Of farre greater probabilitie was the conceite of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, and other Lucian.

Epiph. lib. 1. cont. hæreses.

Easterne nations, who affirmed (as appeareth by the writings of Pherecides Syrus) that the great God of heauen hath chased away all the Diuels from thence, whose captaines name was Ophianus, that is to say in latine Serpertinus: these Ophites haue in this (as Lactantius well answereth the Idolaters) much abused themselues mistaking black for white, and the Prince of Diuels for the Prince of men who is God alone. All this digression tendeth to no other end, then to declare that the true intendment of that old Serpent the Diuel, was, to make himselfe to bee adored as a God, which doth clearly appeare in the whole progresse of those temptations which he vsed against Christ Iesus: for the last assault he reserued these words, which were indeed the very marke and scope whereunto he leuelled all his temptations, Si cadens adoraueris me. From heuce it ariseth that he hath caused Temples to be built for him, Altars to be erected, feasts to be ordeined, Priests to be interteined, and Sacrifices to bee presented vnto him, because he seeth that God hath ordeined the same for his seruice; not (as S. Augustine well sheweth) that hee is pleased with the smell of the roft proceeding from these creatures or the like, but because hee is much delighted that the honours which are due vnto God should be mis-applyed vnto him. Wherein he feedeth himselfe with a fantasticall shew of contentment to see himselfe in apparence honoured for a God, although he be damned and tortured for euermore. Damones non cadauerinis nidoribus (saith S. Augustine) sed diuinis honoribus gaudent. To maintaine himselfe in this state and greatnesse, he could not deuise a readier way then to speake familiarly to men, and to tell them those things which were secret and hidden; and this hee doth by way of Oracles, the first whereof we may tearme the Oracle of the Serpent speaking vnto Eue. For what importeth it whether hee entered into the body of a Serpent, or into a statue of marble? This hindereth not, but Vide Plinium lib. 8. natural. historiæ. Lactan. in diuinis institutionibus.

Matth. 4.

Aug. lib. 10. de ciuit.

The Diuel is ignorant of things to come Genes. 2.

but that a man may well say, that the first Oracle was, when hee spake vnto the first woman. And therefore doth Tertullian iustly place the first woman in the first catalogue of hereticks, because to speake so familiarly vnto the Diuell, was an apostacy. After the flood, Oracles began to be more frequent, and had their originall from the posterity of Cham: whereupon it came that the most auncient Oracle which wee find in Authors is Oraculum Hammonium, as if we should say, Oraculum Chammonium: for the name of Cham is written in Hebrew with a strong aspiration, and therefore our translatour rather maketh it Cham then Ham, although it be all one in sense, and the very name doth sufficiently shew that the antiquity and originall of Oracles after the flood came from Cham, who was cursed of God, and of his father: and this inuention of worshipping the Diuell was found out by him to build vp the city of the Diuell, as Cain had formerly begun to oppugne the city of God built by Abel and continued vntill Noah. We also see in the Scripture that wicked Kings did send vnto the Oracles of the Gentiles, as vnto Acharon and other places to haue their doubts and questions resolued and answered. Thus Satan hath not forgotten his old wont, but as hee would at the first haue inuaded Gods honour, by predictions of hidden and future things vnto the first woman, Apperientur (saith he) oculi vestri & eritis sicut Dij scientes bonum & malum, so now also would hee continue his cosenage amongst men who haue a naturall desire and curiositie to know secret and future things, which they drew from Adams depraued nature, who desired to become as God, knowing that the property of God is to diue into all hidden euents, especially to vnderstand mens thoughts and things to come. The Scripture teacheth vs these two points: the first in Ieremy, Inscrutabile est cor hominis, & quis cognoscet illud? Ego Dominus probans renes & corda. And for the second point Esay saith, Annunciate

Tertull. de præscrip. hæret.

Genebrar. in Chron.

4. Reg. 1.

Ierem. 17.

Esay.41. nunciate nobis quæ ventura sunt, & dicemus, quia dij estis vos. So that if we shall more narrowly sift into the passages of histories, we shall find that Oracles tended to no other end then to beget an admiration in men, and to relish and giue contentment vnto that pride which naturally is rooted in them. Yet the truth is, that the Diuels neuer vnderstood either the one or the other of these points of knowing things hidden or to come: which we will a little enlarge, that the curious of these times may know how much they abuse themselues, in thinking that they are able to attaine vnto the knowledge of these two things, either by a secret league or familiarity with the Diuell, or otherwise by superstitions and Magick. For the first, Diuines haue learnedly laboured in the same, grounding their discourses vpon that sentence of Ieremy, and vpon the saying of S. Paul, 1.Cor.2. Nemo scit quid sit in homine, nisi spiritus hominis qui in ipso est: and Dauid also doth often appropriat that vnto Psal.7. God alone, Scrutans corda & renes Deus. So that man alone doth by nature know what hee thinketh in his heart, which no other substance can search into but Dan.2. God onely. This is well verified in the history of Nabuchodonosor, who when hee had forgotten his dreame, would haue had his southsayers to diuine what it was: but it was told him that he demanded an impossibility. Sermo enim quem tu quæris res grauis est, nec reperietur quisquam qui indicet illum in conspectu Regis, exceptis dijs quorum non est cum hominibus conuersatio. Where it is very obseruable, that hee had assembled not onely Philosophers and Astrologers, but Magicians also, as the text expresly declareth: and although it be certaine that these Magicians had contracted secret familiarity with wicked spirits, whom peraduenture they might conceite to be Gods, yet doe they set a distance and difference betwixt the Gods that doe sometimes conuerse with men, and those who hold no traffick or intercourse with them: nay they doe confesse that those who

who familiarly conuerse with men, can by no meanes vnderstand that which is hidden in mens hearts: but in the end Daniel gaue the resolution of it, saying, Mysterium quod Rex interrogat, sapientes, magi, areoli, & aruspices nequeunt indicare regi, sed Deus est in cœlo reuelans mysteria, qui indicauit tibi Nabuchodonosor quæ ventura sunt nouissimis temporibus. Dydimus Saint Ieromes master doth of set purpose handle this pointe, proouing that the holy Ghost is therefore the true God, because he entereth into the chamber of the heart, and openeth the most secret cogitations there. And hee giueth the naturall reason of this, for the soule hath no quantity or corporall dimensions, but is a pure and spiritual substance, not bounded in by any limits whatsoeuer, but only by that natiue pureneſſe wherin it was created, so that it must needs follow, that if any thing doe penetrate this substance, it must bee the very vncompounded substance of the soule, or that quickning vertue which was able to put life into the same: so that there are but these two things absolutly simple and without mixture in the soule. The Diuel thē can neither be the substance, nor the life of the soule, and therefore cannot penetrate into it: but God it is who giueth this vertue of life vnto the soule, and without whose concurrence the essence and life of the same would presently be consumed to nothing, and be as it was before the creation of it: whereupon Dydimus saith, Imparticipabilis Diabolus est non creator sed creatura subsistens, introiuit ergo in cor Iudæ, non secundum substantiam, sed secundum operationem, quia introire in aliquem increatæ est substantiæ. Heereupon hee concludeth, that whereas we finde that the Diuell entred into the heart of Iudas, it must bee vnderstood of Iudas his will: and whereas he is said to fill the heart of Ananias, the meaning is, that he filled it with his suggestions of malice, of auariciousneſſe, and the like enormities: which can not enter into a man, vnleſſe he set his heart open, and Dydim. lib. 2. de Spirit. sanct.

Ioſ. 13.

giue consent to these temptations. And the very word (to tempt) importeth nothing else but an essay or triall of something. Satan then doth endeauour to informe himselfe of our goodnesse or naughtinesse, and if hee may coniecture, that there are some seeds of goodnesse in the heart, hee imployeth all his forces to shake the same by those obiects and deuises which hee daily practiseth. S. Ierome, Dydimus his scholler hath learnedly opened this point, and as it were commented vpon that which his master obscurely deliuered. They that conceite (saith he) that wicked thoughts proceed from the Diuell, and not rather from their owne depraued will, are worthy to bee sharpely reprooued: for the Diuell may suggest and occasion wicked thoughts in men, but cannot be the author of them. Hee is indeed an Incendiary, and setteth our flesh on fire with burning sensualitie, yet can he not reach the inward part of our heart, but doth coniecture of the same by the habite and behauiour which hee obserueth in vs: as when hee seeth a man gazing often vpon a woman, and applying himselfe wholly vnto her, he presently from hence doth surmise, that he beginneth to commit adultery in his heart, whereupon hee doth forthwith minister vnto him occasion of incouragement, putting many fancies into his head, which when hee reiecteth not, but rather delighteth to entertaine them still, of himselfe and from his owne freewill he sendeth them vnto his soule. The Diuell abuseth those that are made to beleeue, that hee knowerh the secresies of the heart; hee may peraduenture haue some coniecturall knowledge, but because it is in the liberty of mans freewill to abandon and giue ouer such fancies when hee pleaseth, the Diuell is oft cousened of his aime, and prooueth a notorious lyar. S. Augustine hath made a treatise of this very argument, intituled, De scientia dæmonum, where hee largely handleth the same, and concludeth, that they can no more foretell of things to come, then they are able to discerne

Hieron. lib. 2. comment. in Matth. ad c. 15.

Auguſt lib. de ſcientia dæmonum.

discerne the thoughts that are within vs. Yet would the Diuell seeme to make predictions of future accidents, by the answeres of Oracles. The king Ochosias did purposely send messengers vnto them, to vnderstand whether hee should recouer his sickenesse, or no: and Saul did the like, that hee might bee informed, what should be the yssue of the battell which he was to fight against the Philistims, whereby they offended against the expresse word of God, which saith, Non accedetis ad Magos, neque abiharioli aliquid sciscitabimini. And this was the occasion of their ruine, where we may obserue, that it ordinarily by Gods permission so falleth out, that if the Diuell (whether it be personally by himselfe, or by any oracle of his, be it liuing or be it dead) do foretell any good fortune, it seldome falleth out to bee true, but if hee foretell any mischance, it doth assuredly prooue to bee so, because commonly such misfortune is the punishment of this Apostasie. And this is easily discerned in the history of Saul, and must remaine vnto vs as a Maxime or generall rule, which is also the obseruation of S. Chrysostome, Vide locum in fine huius capituli. Also S. Athanasius in his resolution of this pointe to the Prince of Antioche, doth soberly proceed in his discourse by experiences. There be two things (saith he) which neither the good nor the bad Angels are able to vnderstand, and they are, the secrets of the heart, and things that are to come. It is true (saith hee) that sometimes Magicians (whom I tearme the liuing oracles of the Diuel) doe foretell that which doth afterwards happen, by the fore knowledge and reuelations of Diuels, but their predictions are of euents that are already happened in other places; as for example, when they see it raine in India, and that the weather is fit and likely to carry those cloudes towards Egypt, he maketh his oracles to foretell, that it will very shortly raine in Egypt: so when he obserueth the abundance of snow that lieth vpon hills, is melted, or beginneth to melt, he

4. Reg. 1. & 1. Reg. 28.

Leuit. 19.

Athanas. q. 27. ad Antioch. Princ.

he foreſheweth that Nilus or ſome ſuch great riuer, will ouerflow their bankes : ſo that he telleth nothing but what he ſeeth, onely this aduantage he hath, that by his nimbleneſſe hee preuenteth the effects, which birds themſelues might do, if they were indued with naturall reaſon : yea many times they do foretell things in their flight from one climate to another; in ſo much as many Philoſophers haue bin held in admiration, for their diuinations of thoſe things : which they obſerued by their knowledge of the nature of theſe birdes. Therefore Saint Athanaſius doth conclude. Reſolue with your ſelues to do ſomething, whereof none can haue the leaſt coniecture, and then go vnto the Deuils Oracles, who are the Magicians, and aske them if they can informe you of this which you haue determined to do, and you ſhall finde them vtterly ignorant, and vnable to ſatisfie you. Saint Athanaſius had heard Anthonius Monachus diſcourſe of this argument, and it is probable, that he had moſt of his reſolutions from him, as from one that had the beſt experience heereof of any man in the world: for we finde that hee heere reciteth all moſt the very ſame ſentences which hee did formerly alleage in the diſcourſe of Anthonies life : where hee addeth, that the Deuils do no more, then one that rideth poſt and aduertiſeth vs of ſome things that are done farre from vs ; or as a Phyſitian who by feeling a mans pulſes, will ſhew him that hee is likely to fall into a feauer : or as a husband-man who ſeeing a glutt and ouerflow of waters, will foretell a ſcarcity of corne to enſue : to conclude (ſaith he) they know whatſoeuer is already done, not what is to come : yet from hence did Idolatry and all thoſe newe Gods of the heathen take their beginning, and they were eſteemed by the ſimple people to be the true Gods. And this aſſertion which is ſo waighty, and of ſuch importance, may be ſtrengthened both by Scripture, & by prophane authors alſo: for the moſt famous Oracles that euer were,

Athanaſ. in vita Anthon.

did

did flourish in the time of Cyrus, in Affricke, and in Greece, as Herodotus writeth: in which times the Prophets Esay, Ezekiel, Daniel, and others had foretold diuers great mutations, which were to befall the most renowned Nations of the world, as the Assyrians, the Babylonians, the Grecians, and the Romanes: yea they were so plaine as to point out the Grecians, and to call Cyrus by his proper name; the like did the Sybilles also foreshowe. Now when the Deuils were thus armed, they then began to foretell that which they had stollen from the Reuelation of Prophets, and to deliuer the great euents of things. But if a man did offer to decline from these paths, and did question them of lesse affaires, and of particular businesses, whereof they could haue no knowledge or coniecture, they did so mince and perplexe their predictions with ambiguous speeches, that whatsoeuer should happen, they would still haue a hansome shift and euasion. Many graue authors both amongst the Greekes and Latins, haue handled this pointe, and amongst the Latins, we haue many notable passages of Lactantius; and of S. Ierome, who hath descended vnto some particulars heerein; saying Apollo Delphicus & Loxias, Deliusq;, & Clarius, & catera Idola, futurorum scientiam pollicentes, reges potentissimos deceperunt: and hee alleageth many examples of their ignorance: but (saith hee) if there were no other thing to discouer their weakneſſe but this, that they could not foretell their owne ruine vpon the comming of Christ Iesus in the flesh, it would sufficiently prooue their imbecillity in the apprehension of things to come. It is reported, that a good vnderstanding man, who was desirous to trie the blockishnesse of a Magician, or Chiromantick, did shew him his left hand, to haue his fortune told him; and as the Magician was attentiuely vewing the lineaments of his hand, hee strooke him with his right hand a sound boxe on the eare saying vnto him, if thou knowest things that are to come, why dost Herod. in initio.

Esay 23.14.45.
Ierem. 23.
Dan. 8.10.

Lactant. lib. diuin. institut.
Hieron. lib. 12. comment. in Esaiam. ad cap. 41.

dost thou not first learne that which doth concerne thy selfe? this saith Saint Ierome of Oracles. Where by the way we may see, how grossely they are abused, who make any compacts and bargaines with this vncleane Spirit, vpon promise to vnderstand from them those euents that are afterwards to follow: as also how greeuously they offend, who addresse themselues vnto such kind of people, which is no lesse then to apply themselues vnto the Oracles themselues, as the Idolaters of former times did, since the Deuill is he that speaketh both in the one and in the other: And this is that fearefull Apostasie from the faith, which is so frequently forbidden in the law of God. But saith this good father Anthonius, what good shall a man get in suffering himselfe to bee palpably cousened, and in stead of a Carkanet, to buy a bracelet of cockles? especially since this is the way to estrange him from God, and to make him sell his poore soule vnto the Deuill for meere lies and gulleries. But put case, that hee told vs truth, yet should we not labour to get this knowledge from the enemy of God and mankinde, for feare he conuey poyson into this hony, as hee did vnto our first parents. Hereupon it was that our Sauiour commanded the Deuill to hold his peace, although hee spake pure truth. And albeit (saith this good Monke Anthonius) hee should appeare vnto vs full of splendour and brightnes, as sometimes he transformeth himselfe into an Angell of light, yet are we to shut our eyes, and to turne aside our face from the light which proceedeth from the Deuill. The history of Saul doth declare, that hee had done what lay in his power, to know that which did so much import him, and had addressed himselfe vnto God and vnto the Preists, and Prophets, till at the last when he saw, that God would make him no answere, he went as at the last cast vnto a witch, and that hastened on his ruine. Let vs learne then to make our addresse vnto God, and if he do not aide vs forth-with, yet to hope Athanas. de vita Anthon.

Luk. 4.

Chrysost. Homil. 8. in. 2. epist. ad Timoth.

hope still in him, and to waite his leasure with patience: knowing that all doth worke together for our good: But wee will speake heereof more at large in the ensuing Chapter. There is another obseruation which Saint Chrysostome noteth, and suteth notably with this argument, Nemo quum fallunt, attendit: sed solum si quid verum prædixerint, aspicit. And againe he saith, Quia homo se dedit Diaboli potestati; Deus id permittit accidere. Men take no heede vnto their falshoods, but do onely looke to that which falleth out to bee true; but (saith he) touching the misfortunes which do fall vpon them, God doth iustly permit them to happen, as the scourge and punishment for their sinne.

CHAP. VI.

That Sorcerers are as detestable, and as much forbidden by the law of God, as the very Oracles of the Heathen and their Idols were: that it is an idle speech which is giuen out of Sorcerers, that Princes should take heed of them: the diuersities of customes, which the Sorcerers vsed in the olde time: all proued by the Scripture.

Sorcery a greeuous and abhominable sin. Plin. lib. 30. natur. hist. c. 1.

ALthough Pliny was of opinion, that Magicke was really nothing, but meerely a bare name without a thing, and was no more in nature then is a Chimæra: which hee goeth about to prooue by the experience of Nero, who was so hot in the pursuite of these curious Arts, that hee did initiate and dedicate himselfe vnto this trade, and yet for all this he could neuer giue satisfaction vnto himselfe in this kinde, although hee wanted neither wit nor will, much lesse authority, riches, and the most knowing men in these Artes, that he could get from all the quarters of the East. Yet ought we not to entertaine this opinion that Pliny hath, no more then his blasphemous conceite of the Deity, (for hee he affirmeth that there is no other God but the Sunne) or his gibing at the resurrection of the flesh, which hee thinketh a meere ridiculous fancy : for in these two points he playeth the part of an Atheist, as indeede hee was; but the rule in Logicke doth easily ouerthrow his collection, when from a particular instance he would inferre an vniuersall proposition : for as wee say, Ex particularibus nihil concludi potest, & a particulari ad vniuersale conclusio nulla. We could also allow vnto him the history of Iulian the Apostatate, who had as much authority, riches, wit, and as many masters as Nero euer had, and a great deale of more will, but by the permission of God, he grew more weary of the incertainty and barrennesse thereof, then hee was before heated with the desire of knowing it. And this did rather happē vnto them both (that we may answere the obiection of Pliny) because their maine drift and designe was, to abolish and annihilate the memory of Christ Iesus, and to prooue him a lyar, in that he had said, Ecce ego vobiscum sum vsque ad consummationem seculi. But thereupon to deny the effects of the Deuill practised by his instruments the witches, it would sauour of too much rashnesse, especially since many authors so ancient and so renowned, are full of them. Let it suffice to haue alleaged for confirmation heereof certaine passages out of Lactantius and Saint Augustine, who giuing a reason of such admirable effects, do attribute them to wicked Spirits. We will onely adde that which Philostratus hath written of a sorceresse, who by her art did prouide a sumptuous banquet for her louer Menippus : who being sate at table with many others, and hauing a good appetit to taste of those delicacies, vpon the suddaine all was taken away, and they were forced to rise more hungry then they were before. But wee will draw our proofes from the Scripture, least some should with Pliny conceite this relation to bee fabulous. First Saint Paule maketh mention of the Iamnes, and Iambres, Philostrat. lib. 4.

2. Timoth. 3.

bres, whose history is recited in the booke of Exodus, that they resisted Moyses, and did worke by Magicke, whatsoeuer Moyses could do by Diuine power : they changed their roddes into serpents, and water into blood : they also made frogges to come and couer the land of Ægypt : yet at the third plague (not at the third signe, as it is vulgarly receiued) they could not do as Moyses did before them: not because (as the Hebrewes would alleage) the Deuill cannot counterfeit any thing that is lesse then a barly corne, in regard that those things that are least require (say they) greatest subtilty to shape them, and therefore although the Magicians did make great snakes and frogges, yet they could not bring lice vpon the land of Ægypt as Moyses did ; for this opinion is not iustifiable, because afterwards they could not make great flyes, nor raise those hugh botches and tumours which were in the bodies of men, neither could they make haile, or lightning to descend from heauen, or cause the windes to blow and combate against themselues, which neuertheless he did in Iobs time : but the reason was, because at the third time, God tyed vp the power of Satan, and restrained him from passing further, as hee also inhibited him in the like case to put Iob to death, as he did his children. And this the Magicians were forced to confesse, saying, Digitus Dei est hic. From hence it is apparant, that there are those who contract secret familiarity with the Deuill, and by this meanes worke strange things, although for the most part they are ordained vnto wicked purposes. The Prophet Dauid doth take his similitude from the charmer who by his arte doth charme serpents ; so that this is a truth not to bee gaine-said, especially since God himselfe doth no lesse detest and prohibite such kinde of men in his law, then he doth Idols and Oracles of the Deuill. For when Sathan sawe that the people of God did abhorre his Oracles that were senselesse, and framed by the hands of men, hee insinuated himselfe amongst them

Exod. 7. & 8.

Rabbi, Leui, Ben. Gerson in cap. 8. Exod.

Psalm. 57.

them by another way more subtile then the former, by speaking vnto men, and making himselfe to be secretly adored by them. This is it which is so strictly forbidden in Leuiticus, Non declinetis ad magos, nec ab Hariolis aliquid scisscitemini, ne polluamini per eos. And hee repeateth the same afterwards, Anima quæ declinauerit ad magos & Hariolos, & fornicata fuerit cum eis, ponam faciem meam contra eam, & interficiam eam de medio populi sui. Also it is said in Exodus, Maleficos non patieris viuere, where the Hebrew word doth particularly apply it selfe vnto witches. And in Deutronomy God speaketh thus vnto his people. Quando ingressus fueris terram quam Dominus Deus tuus dabit tibi, caue ne imitari velis abominationes illarum gentium, nec inueniatur in te qui lustret filium suum, aut filiam ducens per ignem, aut qui ariolos scisscitatur & obseruat somnia atque auguria, nec sit maleficus, nec incantator, neque qui Pythones consulat, nec diuinos, & quærat à mortuis veritatem. Omnia hæc abominatur Dominus, & propter istiusmodi scelera delebit eos in introitu suo : perfectus eris & absque macula cum Domino Deo tuo, gentes istæ quarum possidetis terram, augures & diuinos audiunt, tu autem à Domino Deo tuo aliter institutus es. To bee breife, the Scripture doth often speake of these people, in so much as there is scarce a booke in the whole Bible, where mention is not made of them. Besides the passages already cited, those that are desirous may see. Num. 23. Ios. 13. 1. Reg. 15. and 28. 2. Paral. 33. Esay 47. and 44 Mich. 5. Nahum. 3. In the new testament there is Simon Magus, Elimas the south-sayer, Barieu, and a woman who had a familiar Spirit, and did foretell many things, by which meanes she brought in much gaine vnto her masters. There is also mention made of the Ephesians, who were exceedingly addicted to all kinds of curious artes, and these were nothing else amongst the Ancients but the artes of Magicke. but when they had their vnderstandings rectified by Saint Paules instructions,

Leuitic. 19. & 20.

Exod. 22.

Deut. 18.

Act. 8. 13. 16. 19

Hieron. prolog. in epist. ad Ephes.

structions, they burned all their bookes, that were valued at 50. thousand peices of siluer. When good King Iosias would reduce the religion of God into that first integrity, wherein it formerly stood, thereby to appease the wrath of God against the people of the Iewes, hee called a generall Councell in the temple at Hierusalem, where amongst other things fit to be redressed, it was decreed, that all sorcerers and witches should be put to death: which the good King accordingly practised. Pythones (saith the text) & ariolos, & figuras idolorum, & immunditias, & abominationes, quæ fuerunt in terra Iudæ & Hierusalem, abstulit Iosias, vt statueret verba legis. After his raigne all good Princes did the like, the law of God hauing expressely forbidden the vse of the same. As also in the Codices there are many lawes religiously ordained by Christian Emperours, as Constantius and others, against witch-craft and Mathematicians. And how could they bee wanting in this duty, since the Heathens themselues haue made the practise of them punishable. Cornelius Tacitus doth relate, that there was a law made in Roome, by which all Mathematicians and Magicians were banished from all Italy, as excommunicated persons, and not worthy to liue amongst honest men. Which law was put in execution in the time of Christ Iesus, not without a mysterious and Diuine meaning: for as our Sauiour by his comming into the world, did driue away and cast out the Deuils, so his pleasure was, that their speciall attendants and worshippers, should by earthly Princes bee banished out of their Dominions: which action did belong vnto the externall seate of Iustice. Appollonius Thianeus a great Magician was cited to appeare before the Emperour Domitian, because hee was a sorcerer; as was Apuleius also before the gouernour of Affricke in the raigne of Antonius Pius; and was faine to purge himselfe by two Apologies which he made to cleere this accusation, or else he had beene put to death.

4. Reg. 23.

Cornelius Tacit.

Apulcius in vtraque Apolog.

So

So that we must not imitate those of Geneua, (which is the well-spring of all Atheisme and diabolicall adorations) where none is accused or condemned to dye, vnlesse hee be conuicted to haue cast abrode some charme hurtfull vnto man or beast, although they know him to be long vnto the Deuils Synagogue. It is certaine, that the greatest exorbitancy in this sinne is, that they who practise the same, do apostate from the true religon of God, and adore the Deuill: which is cleerely prooued in the Scriptures, for they do not much aggrauate this obliquity with any other great inforcement, then that they commit idolatry, which is a sinne directly against the Maiesty of God, and not against our neighbour.

Exod.22. Thus in Exodus 22. a little after these wordes, Thou shalt not suffer a witch to liue, it is added, whosoeuer shall sacrifice vnto other Gods, but the true God, hee

Leuitic.18. shall be put to death. In the 18. of Leuiticus it is said, you shall not go to Magicians, neither shall you aske questions of sorcerers, least you be defiled by them; and the conclusion thereupon inferred is: I am thy Lord thy God. Whereupon it doth follow, that therefore this sinne is so enormous, because it is directly against the Maiesty of God: the same may be noted in the follow-

Leuitic.20. ing Chapter also, which is the 20. The soule (saith God) that shall go vnto Magicians and sorcerers, and shall commit fornication with them, I will set my face against them, and will cut them off from among my people. It followeth, sanctifie your selues therefore and bee holy, for I am the Lord your God. In the 18. Chapter of Deutronomy it is also said: Let there not be found among you that vseth witch-craft, or that asketh counsell of charmers and south-sayers, for this was the sinne of the Gentiles, whom for these abominations I cast out from their land, and placed you in their steed. As for thee thou hast bin otherwise taught by the Lord thy God. And then he addeth, God will raise vp a Prophet vnto you, who shall speake familiarly with you, not as I spake in the mountaine in fire: but hee shall bee like vnto one of you, and vnto him shall you hearken. And whosoeuer will not harken vnto him, I will take vengeance vpon him. It is well worth the obseruation, that both by the letter of the text, as also by the exposition which Saint Stephen in the Acts of the Apostles maketh of the same, by this Prophet is meant Christ Iesus. All which doth sufficiently declare that this impiety is against the Maiesty of God and particularly against the person of Christ Iesus our Sauiour and Redeemer. For when from worshipping of an inuisible substance, these kinde of people do adore the Deuil, when he presenteth himselfe before them in a visible forme, it is manifest that in this he would rob the Sonne of God of his glory, who made himselfe visible, that he might be visibly adored. When Samuel would aggrauate the sinne of rebellion and contempt, which Saul committed against the Diuine Maiesty, he telleth him, that this sinne is like vnto the sinne of Sorcerers and Magicians, he could not compare this disobedience and rebellion to a greater sinne, then that of Witches and Magicians. And the euent declared how odious it was: for when Saul had thus set at nought the commandement of God, he was left vnto himselfe, and could neuer after that receiue any answere either by Preists or by dreames, and nocturnall reuelations, or by Prophets. Yet for all this was he still King of Israel, but when he once did seeke vnto a witch, he fell into the gulph of all impiety, and was the next day slaine with his children, so that none of that stocke did euer after raigne or beare sway in Israel. And which Kings and Princes should regardfully obserue, it is said in the 4. of Kings 23. that good King Iosias hauing laboured all he could to reduce true religion to that first state and integrity wherein it stood, yet was not God fully appeased with this people, but did afterwards deliuer them vp into the hands of the barbarous Babylonians, to be oppressed and in slauery vnto them: which happened by reason of his grand-father Manasses, who did alwayes intertaine Magicians and Witches in the kingdome of Israel, and himselfe also was of that trade. Non est auersus (saith the text) Dominus ab ira furoris sui magni, quo iratus est furor eius contra Iudam propter irritationes, quibus prouocauerat eũ Manasses. The abominations of Manasses are described in the 4. booke of Kinges the 21. Chapter, amongst which there is mention made of his south-saying, and diuinations, and how he had for that purpose a great number of Magicians and Sorcerers about him, labouring to augment and adde reputation vnto that trade: by which abominations, and by other his daily prouocations of God, hee plucked downe the Viols of his wrath vpon him. It is very obseruable, that God for this very fault did sharply chastise the Kings of the earth, who were vtterly vnacquainted with his law: as appeareth in Esay, where God threatneth to destroy the great Citty of Babylon, and the whole Empire thereof, because (saith he) of the great multitude of Witches, that raigne within thee, and of that flintinesse of heart which hardneth thy Inchanters and Sorcerers. And in Ezechiel the King of Babylon is represented vnto vs standing in the middle betwixt two wayes, and by the Arte of Magicke disposing and placing of arrowes, to know what would befall vnto him: but God threatneth to punish him greeuously for the same. And heere may we fitly speake vnto Christian Princes, and say with the Kingly Prophet Dauid, Nunc reges intelligite, erudimini qui iudicatis terram, ne quando irascatur Dominus & pereatis de via iusta. For there is no sinne in the world, that doth more transplant the Crownes and Kingdomes of the Princes of the Earth, especially of christian Princes, then to tollerate by any indulgence or conniuencie whatsoeuer, an impiety so derogatory from God, and Christ his Sonne, and to let it spread in the middest of the Church. Hence Dauid concludeth according to the Hebrew phrase,

Act. 7.

1. Reg. 28.

4. Reg. 23.

4.Reg.21.

Esay 47.

Ezechi.28.

Psal.2.

Kisse

Kisse the Sonne least hee bee angry, and ye perish in the way, when his wrath shall suddenly burne. To kisse and to worship the Sonne, is to adore Christ Iesus with all purity and sincerenesse of heart, who will haue no fellowship or alliance with Beliall, as S. Paul teacheth. We are not to imitate those of Geneua before mentioned, but wee are to execute the rigour and extremity of iustice vpon those that are guilty of this crime, because it is against the diuine Maiesty, and directly contrary to the first commandement of the law, although it be true withall, that this art cannot bee practised without the endammagement of our neighbours, as shall hereafter appeare by their depositions. But the honour of God must take vp the first consideration, and wee are not to inuert and misplace things, or as the common saying is, put the cart before the horse. Yet it is not to be maruelled that the practise of Geneua runneth thus; for besides their rage in depressing as much as in them lies the honour of God and his Saints (which was foretold in the Reuelation, that they should blaspheme God, his tabernacle, the humanity of Christ Iesus, and them that dwelt in heauen, they haue the property that all Hereticks naturally haue, to loue Magicians and Sorcerers; as appeareth by the first Heretick Simon Magus, mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles, and by the rest that followed after him, as Irenæus and others do declare it.

The Turkes (as I conceiue) doe not much esteeme these Arts, but the Sarazens did permit that men should teach this impietie publikely, about a thousand yeeres after Christ. And if Antichrist bee to proceed from the Turkes, whereof there is great likelihood, then is their Monarchie pointed out vnto vs by Babylon and the sauage beast, that was to receiue great power & strength from the great Dragon, by vertue whereof hee might worke wonders, euen to make fire to descend from heauen: all which he should doe through the power of the Diuell, shadowed out vnder the nature of the Dragon.

Psalm. 2. Osculamini filium Adorate pure! Opposite against that damned custome of Sorcerers, who kisse the Diuell in the likenesse of a Goate, as shall afterwards be specified. 1 Corinth. 6.

Apoc. 13.

Iren. lib. 1.

Apoc. 13. The Dragon is bound in the Apocalypse chap 20. that is to say Lucifer.

Touching the meanes, which ſuch kinde of people vſe in their witchcrafts, there can bee no certaine number ſet of them, for they are infinite, and the Diuell is ſo craftie and malicious withall, that (as it is ſaid of a naughty fellow) Habet mille technas, mille nocendi artes. He inuenteth euery day new deuiſes, the more to pleaſe him, whom hee moſt deſireth to hold faſt in his gripe: and ſeeing that ſome are delighted with one thing, and ſome with another, he fitteth all according to their ſeuerall humours. And put caſe that theſe ſeuerall manners of Charmes be not hurtfull vnto the body, yet doe they defile and ſtaine the ſoule of the Sorcerer, becauſe they are euer tyed vnto ſuperſtition, which is a kinde of Idolatrie. Neuertheleſſe, the Diuell ſtriueth as much as hee can, to practiſe thoſe charmes which are hurtfull vnto men, as bloodſhed and murther: but when he meeteth with any (as ſometimes he doth) whoſe conſciences are ſcrupulous to commit murther, or otherwiſe to hurt mens perſons, hee then is contented to applie himſelfe vnto them, that at the leaſt hee may gaine vnto him their beguiled ſoules. And it is probable (ſince there are ſo many diuerſities of them mentioned in the Hebrew Bible) that as the Diuels in the Scriptures take their denominations from the effects that are obſerued in them, ſo haue the Sorcerers their diuerſities of names from the diuerſities of effects and charmes, which they ordinarily practiſe. Thus the Magicians of Pharaoh, to make their charmes more powerfull, beſides the roddes which they had in their hands, to ſhew themſelues equall vnto Moyſes, they alſo vſed (whether ſecretly or openly it is not expreſſed) certaine plates of red-hot iron, newly forged; and their charmes in the 7. chapter of Exodus are called by the word Lahatim, which ſignifieth, burning plates: and ſo is the flaming ſword called which the Cherubin brandiſhed in his hand in the fourth chapter of Geneſis; which is the particular obſeruation of Rabby Dauid Quimhi. And from

Exod. 7.

Geneſ. 4. Rabby Dauid Quimhi.

hence

hence we may gather an excellēt morall, since as S. Paul teacheth vs, the Magicians in this historie did represent Heretikes, as Moyses did shadow forth the Catholike Doctors. Moyses did remaine contented with the rod which he held in his hand, & the catholike Doctor doth shake the rod of Gods word ouer those that doe transgresse against the same. The Heretike likewise holdeth the rod of Gods word in his hand, but hee cannot preuaile with it, except hee also vnsheath that flaming sword, which betokeneth warre, and the effusion of blood. And it may well be, that they mingled the blood of men, in the tempering and making of such swords: which is in these daies practised, and hath been vsuall in former times amōgst the Theraphins. But let vs descend to other passages. In the 19. and 20. chapters of Leuiticus these Magicians are called by this word Aob, which signifieth a pitcher, or a barrell. And it might be, there were a kinde of Sorcerers which did vse such vessels, as many doe in these daies, who cast certaine names into a vessell or bason full of water, to diuine and presage of something. In the 18. of Deuteronomy they are called Menahhesh, which importeth as much as, to vse Serpents, and it is probable enough, that they vsed Serpents in their charmes, as wee haue heretofore noted of the Romanes, who did the like ro rid Rome of the plague. Aben Ezra doth thinke, that it was nothing but certaine figures and characters of Serpents, which such people did vse in their charmes and inchantments. King Manasses, who was the greatest Sorcerer of the world, was accused to bee Mecasheph, which word is deriued from a verbe that signifieth to paint, or by imbellishing the face with colours to attract and deceiue men, which is the propertie of wanton women, as Rabby Dauid Quimhi saith in his Comment vpon Nahum: and thereupon Aben Ezra, who together with Quimhi is quoted by Sanctes Pagninus, and by Munsterus, doth declare, that these are Sorcerers, who make a shew that

2. Timoth. 3.

Vide Heliam Leuitam in Thesb. Dictione Theraphin.

Leuit. 19. & 20.

Deuteron 18.

2. Paral. 33.

Rabby Dauid Quimhi in Naum Prophetam.

Sanctes Pagnin. in Thesauro.

Munsterus in Lexico.

they transshape things, and by this meanes doe grossely abuse those men, whom they doe blinde with their apparitions, and so make them beleeue they see that, which indeed they doe not see: like vnto those loose and light women, who set a glosse of whitenes vpon their face, which is not indeed in their persons. There is another word in the 3. of Michah, that also expresseth these Magicians, and that is Quassam, which Dauid Quimhi (as is to be supposed, by the passages already alleaged) doth interprete to signifie all manner of Charmes and Inchantments. Although then there bee diuers sorts of Charmes inuented by the Diuell, as it may bee conceiued that the superstitious vse of these things tooke strength with time, and grew more familiar, when once the spirit of man was tickled with the delight of them, yet are wee not to thinke, that these Diabolicall Charmes are endued with any naturall efficacie, or that wicked spirits are more delighted with one thing then another, or allured by some speciall charme, to doe whatsoeuer the Sorcerer would haue them: but it is to be attributed, by the third and generall reason, to the malice of the Diuell, who in all things is Gods ape, as Tertullian hath it. For hee cunningly obserueth, that God maketh choyce from his pure and absolute will of certaine materiall substances, thereby to confirme and make effectuall his promises vnto men: as are the bread and wine in the Sacrament of the Eucharist, and water in Baptisme; yet haue these outward elements no natiue force in themselues, to declare that vnto vs, which God by his power worketh in vs: and hereupon the Diuell maketh a voluntary election of such things as he thinketh fittest, whereby as by signes he maketh good those promises which he offereth vnto men, and taketh occasion to shew the greatnesse of his forces. And this is the resolution that is giuen by S. Augustine, Dæmones (inquit) alliciuntur herbis, non tanquam animalia cibis, sed tanquam spiritus signis. An Asse indeed is moued at the Mich. 3.

Tertul. lib. de Baptis.

the sight of Oates, and the sheepe is greedy to browse vpon a tender twig which is set before him; but it is not so with Spirits, for they haue no need of any corporall substance for their necessity, but vse outward things, as signes and pledges, whereby they expresse their pleasure vnto men, who otherwise could haue no aduertisement of the same. For it is the property both of reasonable and intellectuall creatures, to declare their will by externall signes; and therefore we are not to conceiue that it was the sound of Dauids Harpe that droue away the wicked spirit from Saul, or the gall of the fish that made Asmodeus to runne away; for hee standeth not in feare of any corporall thing, in respect that it is corporall, yea it cannot imprint any action into him, nor so much as touch him: yet when such materiall substances are the instruments by which God worketh, and when vertuous people are confirmed by faith, of Gods power herein, then is it effectuall against the Diuell: and then must wee doe as wee are commanded by S. Peter, cui resistite fortes in fide. It is certaine that the Diuell doth somtimes obserue the course of the Moone in his workings, which is a corporall substance: and this is plaine in the fourth, and seuenteenth Chapter of S. Matthew, where mention is made of one that was lunatickly possessed; but herein (saith S. Ierome) he did secretly labour to defame Gods creature, and to make men beleeue, either that it was the Diuels creature, as the Manicheans conceited, of many creatures that were very vsefull vnto man, or else that it was to bee adored as a God, because of the great power it had ouer the bodies of men: whereunto we may adioyne the saying of S. Augustine, that the diuell, as one that is exceedingly cunning and wise (from whence also hee hath his name) when hee would apply naturall causes one vnto the other, for his more easie and ready way, doth obserue the course of the Moone, which doth naturally giue assistance and inclination to such effects, Matth. 4. & 17. Hieron. in Matth. & Chrysost.

August. lib. 21. de ciuitat. S. Thom. 1. p. q. 115. art. 5.

as haue their origine from lunacy. This experience teacheth to bee true in lunatick persons; and therefore the best practised Physitians doe obserue the same course, in the cures which they vndertake of this kind. As for bodily substances, he hath no vse of them, but as they serue for signes to binde Sorcerers vnto his Seruice: as the outward elements in the Sacraments doe serue for tokens of Gods good pleasure in the vse and institution of them: so that such signes are meerly voluntary, although they bee the true images and representations of those, against whom they would practise their Witchcrafts; as we reade in Zonaras that certaine lewd persons had made the very image of Simon Prince of Bulgaria; and as soone as they had cut off the head of the said Image, the Prince was instãtly found dead. Vpon the like occasion did King Lewes cause a certain woman called Claudia, to be burned aliue, because shee had made his resemblance in wax, and would haue set it neerer and neerer vnto the fire, that so as this Image in wax did melt away, so should he by little and little languish and pine away, and at last die. And because this History doth occasion vs to speake of women; let vs see whether they are giuen to these arts as men are.

Zonar.tom.3.

Genebrard. lib.4. Chron.

CHAP. 7.

Of Witches; and that women are more addicted to Witchcraft then men are.

IF the Diuell haue power in a thing so execrable, to gaine men vnto his seruice; it is no wonder if he haue also ensnared and enticed women into his nets, especially because hee doth first labour to win them, whom hee knoweth to be open vnto perswasions, and more easie to be deceiued, in regard of the naturall impotency and simplicity of their sex. And this doth S. Paul signifie, when

2. Corinth. 11.

when he saith, Take heed you be not deceiued through the simplicity that proceedeth from Christ Iesus. Thus did the Diuell tempt Eue, albeit shee was then in her originall integrity; and hee did the rather buckle vp himselfe to giue this onset, because hee knew well how fit an organ she was to draw the man to yeeld his consent vnto her liking. And this hee practised from the beginning, and hath since still obserued that this sex hath this property, to bee exceedingly addicted vnto somthing, be it good, or bee it bad: so that if a woman addict her selfe to well doing, shee is more feruent in it then a man; and so contrariwise, if shee abandon her selfe to euill, she is more obstinate to persist in the same then a man is: which is well obserued by S. Chrysostom, in these words: Contentiosum est (inquit) hoc animal & importunum ac victoriæ amans, siue ad malum declinet, siue ad bonum. So that wee may speake of them as wee speake of Angels in generall, and say with the Diuines, Cui adhærent, immobiliter adhærent. And hereof all Histories are full: it shall bee sufficient amongst profane authors to alleage one example set downe in the Romane histories. Macrina a noble Lady of Rome did resolue not to speake or looke vpon any man liuing, vntill her husband Torquatus, who was sent abroad by the Romans to subdue diuers Cities and Prouinces, should returne home vnto her. It so fell out that eleuen yeeres after, there was a wild or sauage man brought to Rome, who had but one eye in the middle of his brow, and was found in the deserts of Ægypt: which, when shee vnderstood by her chambermaid, she was exceedingly moued with a violent desire to see this nouelty; neuertheless shee did command her longings so well, that she did not interrupt her first resolution. And when vpon a day this sauage man passed by her house, and her selfe was in the chamber, that looked out into the street by which he was to passe, although she heard the noyse and cries in the streets, as the fashion of the common Chrysost. hom. 4. de fide Ann.

mon sort of people is when they see any strange spectacle, yet did shee so strongly represse her passions, that shee would not so much as come vnto the window to see him, whereof she not long afterward died. It shall also be sufficient to select from ecclesiasticall histories that example which Theodoret relateth of the Matrons of Rome, who when they saw that their husbands the Senators and others, dared not to intercede to the Emperour in fauour of Liberius the Pope of Rome, whom he had causelesly banished, for that hee would not consent to the bringing in of Heresie, they resolued among themselues to goe vnto the Court, where with their cries and importunity, they neuer left vntill the Emperour had called back their chiefe Pastor from banishment. The Scripture also is plentifull in these examples. Iudith and Hester will sufficiently exemplifie the goodnesse of women that loue God; and Iosephs mistrisse with Iesabell will fully declare the violence of those that abandon themselues to euill. And as we see by experience euen in these daies, that sober and vertuous women, although in their nature they are most propense vnto compassion, yet they are they that cast the first stones against Sorcerers, and cry louder then the rest to haue them burnt: so contrariwise, Sorceresses are more obstinate, and more addicted vnto witchcrafts, and doe with lesse remorse of conscience plunge themselues into the most execrable facts that may bee, then men: so that it is certaine that women are imployed to strangle children, and to carry and present them to the Diuell, and to make a kind of oyntment of their grease; but Sorcerers and men Witches doe seldome or neuer dip their fingers in these bloody actions. Hence is the reason grounded, why the first prohibition to practise witchcraft, whereof mention is made in the Law of God was addressed to women and not to men, as Sanctes Paguinus hath well obserued, saying; that whereas in the two and twentieth chapter of Exodus, Theodor. lib. histor.

Sanctes Pagninus in Thesauro.

dus, wee haue it in the plurall number, Maleficos non patieris viuere, it is in the fountaine of the Hebrew expressed by the word Mechasheepha, which signifieth a woman witch, and then the sense is thus: Thou shalt not suffer a Sorceresse to liue, because (saith hee) it is a trade more ordinary and vsuall vnto women then vnto men. And this appeareth by the history of Saul, who when he had formerly put to death all manner of Magicians and Witches; yet at the last, seeing himselfe forsaken of God for his iniquities, hee resolued to resort vnto the Diuell, and to that purpose hee demanded his seruants whether there were any woman witch left or no: Looke me out (saith he) one that hath a Spirit that I may goe vnto her, and may by her procurement bee aduertized of what I desire to know. Where we are to obserue that Saul did not aske whether there were a man that was a witch, but whether there were any woman witch: as if he should haue said, that notwithstanding all that he had done against them, it could not be but that there remained yet aliue some woman or other of this occupation: and in truth it is almost impossible to discouer them so easily as men. The conclusion was, Saul was not deceiued in his expectation, for his Courtiers, who doe oftentimes make their repaire vnto such people (as the custome of them is) did redily name one vnto him, vnto whom when Saul came, shee began to make her protestations that she was an honest woman, and would for no good attempt such a thing, which was prohibited both by God and the King: but being a little soothed vp with faire promises, shee quickly made the Diuell to attend this seruice: and therefore the Hebrewes are not contented to tearme them by appellations common vnto them all, both men and women, which we haue particularly collected in the former Chapter, but would marke them out by a peculiar attribute, which properly is to be vnderstood of women, as may be seene in Helias the Leuite in his Thisby, who

1. Reg. 28.

Helias Leuit. in Thisby.

who reporteth according to the traditions of the Iewes, that there are women whom they call the Diuels mothers, and tearme them by this word Lilith, which is deriued from another Hebrew word signifiing the night, because they vse to goe secretly and in the night. And this haue the Latines imitated or borrowed from the Hebrewes, calling them Striges or Lamiæ, which signifieth monsters and stranges birds that vse to goe in the finight. And the said Helias further saith, that a great Lord hauing asked the question of the ancient fathers of the Synagogue, how it chanced that young children that are but eight daies old were so often times found suddenly dead, they answered him, that they were Lilith who put them to death: which is the appellation of Sorceresses, for the Hebrew word is of the feminine gender, as appeareth more plainely by the participle and feminine adiectiue which is ioyned with the word Lilith, and also because hee saith that they were Nashim, that is to say, women. And the Iewish women are so fully perswaded of the truth thereof (for they are the most superstitious women of the world) that they vse to make foure circles with chalke, or with a cole on the outward parts of the chamber walles where they vse to lie, and vpon euery side or quarter of the chamber they make a circle, writing in one of them the name of Adam, in the other the name of Eue, in the third the word Huts, which signifieth (without) and in the fourth the word Lilith: as if they should haue said (as I conceiue it) Adam and Eue are the first Parents and Progenitors of mankind, and therefore get you hence all witchcrafts whatsoeuer. Within the chamber they write the names of the Angels, whom they thinke to bee protectors of their children: to wit, Senoy, Sansenoy, and Samangueloph, saying that Lilith did teach the Iewish women to doe this before shee died: where it is to bee supposed, that this was the name of some great Sorceresse, heeretofore much renouned amongst them, whom therefore they they called Liluth, becauſe ſhee commonly went in the night: and it is probable ſhee taught her daughters or ſome others all the ſuperſtitions and art ſhe had, before her death; and afterward in proceſſe of time ſuch kind of women were called Liluh. How ſoeuer it be, this diſcourſe of Helias the Leuite doth ſufficiently declare the antiquitie of Sorcerers, that goe by night and ſtrangle young children, and hee doth there aſſure vs, that theſe things are no fables. Which relation would receiue ſtrength and acceſſion of authority, if wee will allow that Ieſus the ſonne of Sirac did make that diſcourſe, which doth at large mention all theſe things, and is attributed vnto him in the Hebrew booke. We alſo finde the word Liluth in the Scripture, and particularly in the foure and thirtieth of Eſay, which Saint Ierome tranſlateth and thinketh to be a Sorcereſſe. Ibi cubauit Lamia: whereby is meant ſuch women as vſe to goe in the night. Againe in the Lamentations of Ieremy he interpreteth this word Liluth to be a Sorcereſſe, ſaying, Sed & Lamiæ. Lamia (ſaith Duris) was a woman, who was iealous that her husband had begotten a child vpon another woman, and thereupon in a great furie ſhe gaue ſecret order to haue the child ſtrangled, and did the like by all thoſe whom ſhee could get into her hands: and from her are ſuch kinde of women by the Latines called Lamiæ, whoſe cuſtome was (as Ieremy hath it) to ſhew and offer their breaſts vnto little children, thereby to ſtill them, and to allure them to come vnto them, that ſo they might ſtrangle them with greater ſecreſie. Therefore when God threatneth Babylon or Ieruſalem, that witches ſhould frequent thither, and ſhew their teates; it is but to ſhew that ſuch places ſhould be left deſolate, and vtterly ouerthrowne, becauſe deſolate places are altogether frequented by witches, who come there to make their aſſemblies, and are carried for the moſt part thither by the Diuell, that in ſuch remote corners they might the more freely exerciſe the myſteries of Eſay 34.

Thren. 4.

Duris lib. 2. de rebus Lybicis.

Eſay 34.

of their abominations: like as theeues and murtherers haunt such kinde of sollitude. Pliny lib.25. hist. cap.11. saith that women doe farre exceed men in this trade, and Quintilian in declamat. saith, Latrocinium in viro facilius, veneficium in fœmina. The other kinde of Witches is not so execrable, because there is no expresse bargaine with Satan, but onely a tacite agreement. And against them S. Chrysostome homil. 13. in 1. ad Timotheum teacheth vs to proceed in another fashion. Si quis (inquit) ligaturas inanes, aut aliud quippiam eiusmodi sciens & prudens sequitur, præcepto atque imperio tantum arcendus est, sin vero ignarus in ea inciderit, docendus est. That is to say, We are to informe the ignorant, and to shew vnto them how foule the offence is, where men leaue God to adhere vnto superstitions.

Chrysost.hom. 13.in 1.ad Timoth.

CHAP. VIII.

An answere vnto those that demand what danger there is in craving the assistance and aide of the Diuel.

IT is a general obseruation which is made of those that forget God, to fall (if they doe not returne vnto him speedily) into blindnesse of vnderstanding, and into an obduratnesse of heart, like vnto that of Diuels and the soules of the damned. For as there is a sympathy and participation of good men with those that are in Paradise; so that it may bee said, that liuing in this world, they haue their conuersation in heauen, so are there others, who differ very litle from the damned, insomuch (saith Theodoret) as a man may truely say, that there are Diuels in hel better then they, because they exceed the Diuels themselues in mischiefe and malice. The Diuels doe at the least beleeue and tremble, Dæmones credunt & contremiscunt: but these doe neither beleeue nor feare the iudgements to come. Whereupon the wiseman saith, that when a wicked

Theodoret.in hæretic.fabulis

man

man is come vnto the depth and bottome of sinne, hee scoffeth and maketh a iest of all admonitions. And to digresse no further, the truth hereof is seene by the experience of those, who haue giuen their poore captiue soules vnto the Diuell, and did thinke that these things were meerely fabulous, which did any way remember them of eternall damnation. And what danger is there (say they) to command the Diuell? did not Christ Iesus himselfe the same? doth not God sometimes vse them? and did not the Apostles also serue their turnes with them, by commanding them, as they thought good? Vnto these wee may propose the question, which Saint Athanasius once did to Arrius, Si quis Sathanam adoret, recténe an malè fecerit? Vnto which Arrius replyed, although his vnderstanding was darke and blind, Impius & sine Deo est neque communem sensum habet, nec meretur hominis appellationem. So that by the very confession of a limme of the Diuell, wee haue foure markes of him that adoreth the Diuell. First he is full of all impiety and wickednesse: secondly, hee is a true Atheist: thirdly, he is deuoyd of common sense: and lastly, he is not worthy the appellation of a man. In this Arrius spake wonderously well, being forced vnto this confession by the truth, which ouercommeth all things. For if our first parents fell into such labyrinths, and are euer since stiled hereticks, blinde, senseless, brute beastes, although their simplicity and ignorance was much abused, because they neuer heard talke of the cunning and malice of Satan, how much more ought they to be called by such infamous appellations, who at first dash giue themselues ouer vnto Satan and all his workes, although they are admonished by many passages of the holy Scripture, yea and warned by the mouth of Christ Iesus, his Apostles, and all the Church to auoyd and resist Satan, and to make continuall intercession to God, that they yeeld not vnto his temptations, because hee is euer wakefull, and is fierce like like a roaring and famished Lyon in the wildernesse. But wee liue in so wretched an age that although it were formerly said, happy is he that hath not drunke of the doctrine of Arrius, yet wee are forced to wish the blinded men of our times a conscience of that vprightnesse and sensiblenesse, as the conscience of that accursed Arrius was. For let vs see how deceitfull and how full of lyes their sophistry is. How vntrue is it that a man is to imitate God, and his Sonne Christ Iesus in all things? It is a good note which a certaine ancient father hath: In diuinis rebus quædam sunt credenda, quædam admiranda, quædam verò imitanda: as for example. When we find that Christ Iesus did of bread make his body by his owne might and authority, it is a worke to be apprehended by beleefe, not to be expressed by imitation: when he raised men from the dead, this myracle is proposed vnto vs, onely that wee might admire his diuine power, so that if any one should labour to expresse so much, hee is to bee accounted an vsurper vpon the glory of God, which is the very scope whereunto the Diuell doth by his collusions leade poore blindfolded soules. By this meanes he wrought our first parents destruction, perswading them as himselfe had already practised, to make themselues as God, well knowing that this was the true cause of his expulsion out of Paradise, for hee had said in his heart similis ero altissimo, and laide also this baite for the man and the woman eritis sicut dij. Thus doth he circumuent those, who would assume vnto themselues that authority, which is peculiar vnto God, not remembring that God is the author and creator of all things visible and invisible, as S. Paul well sheweth, ex ipso, & per ipsum, & in ipso sunt omnia, siue quæ in cœlis sunt, siue quæ in terris sunt, visibilia & inuisibilia, & in ipso flectitur omne genu cœlestium, terrestrium & infernorum. So that being the Creator of all things, he may vse and dispose of them as seemeth good vnto him: and this he may doe

Athanas. in disputatione contra Arrium in Niceno concilio

Tertul. lib. 2. cont. Marcio.

Coloss. 1.

by

by the right of creation which hee hath ouer all creatures: by which right he is adored with a supreame and soueraigne worship which is called, Latria, proper and peculiar to him alone, Adorate Deum (saith S. Iohn) qui fecit cœlum & terram, mare & omnia, quæ in ijs sunt: yet would our Luciferians (for so may those that imitate Lucifer bee called) bee parellell vnto God and share with him in this worship, as if they had beene his companions in the creation of visible and inuisible substances, yea they would vse and dispose them to their behoofe and pleasure, without regard or consideration that God hath appropriated diuers things vnto himselfe, which hee would not haue communicable vnto men; as is his glory, whereof he saith, Gloriam meam alteri non dabo. Of the same nature and condition is the knowledge of mens inward cogitations, the auengement vpon our enemies, the soueraigne power which he hath ouer all his creatures, in which number are wicked spirits, which are sustained, and haue their consistence by his prouidence no lesse then the wicked men of this world haue, who doe heere mutiny and arme themselues against him. Another fault that is committed in their sophistry, is their not apprehending that the rule or ballance of all our actions ought to bee directed by the word of God, from which we are not to decline neither to the right hand nor to the left, but the word of God doth strictly prohibite such trafficke and familiarity with Satan: yea, it commandeth that whosoeuer hee bee, that hath recourse vnto Magicians or witches, vpon what occasion soeuer, although he speak not directly vnto the Diuell, yet is that person to bee stoned to death without mercy. By which we are taught that this is direct Idolatry, since in our extremities wee leaue God to haue redresse and succour from his aduersary, and to rely and haue confidence in him, acknowledging that whatsoeuer good betideth vnto vs proceedeth from the Diuell, which is nothing else then worshipping him, and making him practise that which in times past hee said, Hæc omnia tibi dabo, si cadens adoraueris me. And this did open the gapp vnto the ruine of Ochosias, Saul, and many others who might as well haue pleaded for themselues, as the Athiest and Magicians of our times in this manner. What danger is there, if wee serue our turne with them at our need, since God himselfe doth vse them when hee pleaseth. The third fault is, that they are so farre from doing as Christ Iesus did, that they doe cleane contrary vnto that which he practised. For Christ Iesus was so farre from euocating and calling Diuels vnto him, that hee fortified and armed himselfe against their temptations by prayers and admirable fasting: and when Satan appeared vnto him vnsent for, he thrust him back behind him with hard language, saying, Vade retro Sathana, scriptum est, Dominum Deum tuum adorabis, & illi soli seruies. And heereupon the Diuell departed from him, for he cannot indure to stay where he findeth resistance; and therefore Saint Iames glancing at this example of Christ Iesus, doth thus lesson vs, Resistite Diabolo & fugiet à vobis: agreeable vnto that of S. Peter, Cui resistite fortes in fide. Heere we may see what wee are commanded to doe after the example of Christ Iesus: wee are bid to pray, and to fast that hee may not come vnto vs, and in case that hee should present himselfe before vs, we are to resist him by faith, and to push him from vs with all eagernesse, as S. Martin hath done before vs, who as Seuerus Sulpitius reciteth of him, when he saw the Diuell close by him he spake, Quid hic astas cruenta bestia? And this charge was laid vpon man from the beginning of the world, to breed the greater detestation of the Diuell in him. God did make a couenant of enmity betweene men and the Diuell, saying, Inimicitias ponam inter te & mulierem, inter semen tuum & semen illius: I will put mortall hatred (said God) between the Serpent and the seed of the woman: for this great guider

guider and ouerseer of nature did well foreknow, that what faire pretext soeuer the Diuell might pretend, hee hunted after nothing more then after mans destruction, as wee haue already compared him vnto the Crocodiles of Egypt, who doe counterfaite the voice of a man that they may deuoure him. So that a man had neede to learne wisedome of the doggs of Egypt, who knowing their guile and bloody rauenousnesse, doe not tarry long to drink of this riuer, but if they are pressed thereunto by thirst, they giue a lapp and away, keeping on their course without long tarrying. Thus ought a man to auoide all the temptations of Satan, and if at some times he haue wicked thoughts suggested vnto him, he must by no meanes giue way vnto them, but continue on his course, and disburthen his minde of such cogitations, otherwise if hee should giue the least passage vnto them, he will be in danger to be deuoured: for the Diuell neuer goeth any where but with a purpose to swallow vp all that lye faire for his mouth. And therefore our Lord who knew well his bloudy malice would by no meanes permit, that he should confesse him to be the Sonne of God: for he made not this confession (as S. Athanasius well noteth) for any good purpose, but to lay some defamatory suspition vpon Christ Iesus, and to abuse the world by this meanes. The fouth fault is, that men doe not marke what power Christ Iesus gaue vnto his Apostles and their successours ouer Diuels: at first, this power was giuen by God to bruse the Serpents head, and to tread him vnder foote, as hee had foretold, that the seed of the woman should crush his venemous head: and the same doth Christ Iesus say vnto his Apostles, Dedi vobis potestatem calcandi supra Serpentes: which is also witnessed by S. Paul, Deus autem conterat Sathanam sub pedibus vestris. In the second place, this power was giuen vnto the Church thorow the merits of the precious death of Christ Iesus, with a charge to chase and driue him away. Thirdly, this Erasm. in Chiliad.

Luc. 4.

Athan. orat. 1. cont. Arrian.

this power was to be exercised in calling vpon the name of Christ Iesus, which two last points are comprehended in these words: In nomine meo Dæmonia eijcient. But Sorcerers and Magicians doe not vse to resist the Diuell and bruse his head, but they flatter him and call him vnto them by a certaine bargaine or agreement, which directly importeth a subiection and dependancy: and to be briefe, they doe first worship him before hee will come vnto them. Againe, in steed of repelling him, they come vnto him for aduise, aide, or fauour, whereas Christ Iesus would not so much as suffer him to speake: and this is not (as Origen obserueth) to force the Diuell, by inuocation vpon the name of God, it rather argueth a familiarity and intercourse which they haue together. So that if wee doe seriously consider all circumstances, they doe crosse and goe a contrary course vnto Christ Iesus and the Apostles. It cannot bee gaine-said, but that sometimes they will make a semblance as if they wept, although in truth it be nothing so. S. Augustine reciteth the history of a certaine Magician, who boasted much what a command hee had ouer Diuels, saying, that when they were lasie to doe that he commanded them, he threatned to pull the heauens with such violence that they should fall vpon the earth, and thereupon the Diuels would readily execute what he had enioyned them, for feare least they should be bruised betweene heauen and earth, as corne is brused betweene two milstones. But who seeth not that this is the craft and counterfaite weeping of Crocodiles, that is to say Diabolical fictions framed for deceit and couzonage? For first, it is not the power of Angels to make the heauen descend and touch the earth, because vnto them (as S. Paul saith) God hath not subiected the round frame of the world: Non enim (saith he) Angelis suis subiecit Deus orbem. Nay it is so farre from being so, that it is not in the naturall power of all wicked spirits that are, to wheele about the orbe of the Origen. in Numer.

August. lib. 10. de ciuit. cap. 11

the Moone, which is the least of all the rest: for as God hath appropriated the natural operations of mans body vnto a reasonable soule, so that it is not in the power of an Angell to make this body to liue the life of plants, the life of beasts, or the life of man, although he can enter at his pleasure into the same, as we see by experience in those that are possessed: euen so God hath limited the passiue power of the motions of the heauens, vnto certaine Angels whom hee hath destinated thereunto, so that it is a ridiculous thing to conceiue, that Spirits may be bruſed or crushed in peeces. But they doe herein take the aduantage of mens simplicity and their owne craft, by infusing these fables into them, wherein they resemble naughty seruants that wait for an occasion to cut their masters throates. The fifth error that blindeth these Sorcerers is, because they haue a conceite that the Diuell is very ready to doe them seruice: but how is it possible that the Diuell should inuassall himselfe vnto man, that is but a worm of the earth? since that thorow the excessiuenes of his pride, which brooketh no equals, hee scorneth to bee the seruant of God, whom he knoweth to be his Creator. How can he debase himselfe to be mans Lackey, when hee did rather choose to relinquish his portion in Paradise, and to burne euerlastingly in hell fire, then he would acknowledge Christ Iesus for his better. For when it was laid before him that hee should become man, the Diuel said in his heart, no; before I will acknowledge a man and a worme of the earth, I will first be damned: as that deuoute and auncient father S. Bernard hath well expressed it. He doth indeed make shew of seruice vnto man, but to this end, that he may be his master: for if hee be delighted corporally to possesse a man, when hee hath gotten the mastery of his body, how much more is hee pleased when by his subtilties, and by taking from him the knowledge of God, hee getteth possession of his soule? For when hee possesseth the body, this affliction is

1.Cor.5.

many times the instrument of saluation, as S. Paul saith, Tradidi huiusmodi Sathanæ, vt spiritus eius saluus fiat. But when hee possesseth the soule, and withdraweth it from the grace of God, hee is then the instrument of damnation. And therefore the Scripture doth euer figure out Satan vnto vs by things that are both dangerous and dreadfull vnto men, as by a Serpent, by a Dragon, and by a roaring Lyon, for feare least wee should say as Athiests doe, that the Diuell is not so black as men doe paint him: whereas contrariwise, he is so terrible and so dangerous that all the comparisons of Centaures, doggs with three heads, and the like monsters described vnto vs by Poets, fall farre short of his vglinesse. If then any one should be familiar with such furious beasts, might hee not well bee accounted mad and depriued of common sense? Yet Witches and Magicians do ordinarily expose themselues to these things And this horridnesse of Diuels was declared vnto Iob, who had partly experimented the rage and bloody malice of Satan: but hee tryed not all his forces, because God suffered him not to doe, all that he was willing to inflict vpon Iob. God then described Satan vnto him by the similitude of the most great and horrible monster of the world called Behemoth. This beast saith God, is the most fearfull and cruell monster of the world: his body is armed as it were with iron, his flesh is harder then stone, so that hee cannot be crushed or hurt by the violent strokes of hammers, neither can the sharpest launces enter into him, nor pierce him more then so many strawes: if men should goe about to strike him downe with tumbling vpon him great stones from a rock, it would be but lost labour, and hee would be no more endãgered thereby then if they threw balls of flax against him. God further speaketh vnto Iob of this monster: dost thou thinke to put a hooke into his nostrills as men take fishes, or when hee is before thee dost thou conceiue that he is affraide of thee? Nunquid multipli-

Hieron. aduersus vigilant.
Iob.40.41.

cabit

cabit tibi preces, aut loquetur tibi mollia. Will he behaue himselfe like a dogg that flattereth his master, and lyeth at his feet for feare of being beaten; or if hee come to some agreement with thee, doest thou imagine that he doth it to any other end then to deuoure thee? Nunquid feriet tecum pactum, & accipies eum quasi seruum sempiternum? Wilt thou play with him as a bird, and tye a thread about his legg to keep him in, or to let him fly at thy pleasure? Nunquid illudes ei quasi aui? Last of all God saith, Memento belli, nec vltra addas loqui: remember that hee is a murtherer from the beginning, that hee is thy arch-enemy, and doth continually wage warre against thee. Doe not hurt thy selfe by these fooliſh speeches, and by saying that thou vsest him as thy seruant, it is impossible: for hee is to be mastered onely by faith, and not by couenant or agreement. He is a liar, and when hee spieth his aduantage will deceiue thee, and when against his promise he shall breake thy neck, before what Iudge wilt thou bring in thy action, to haue reparation of the wrong hee doth thee. Another thing that offereth it selfe vnto consideration is, that being a lyar, and being not ashamed to lie manifestly to Christ Iesus, in promising him that which hee was not able to performe, saying, Hæc omnia tibi dabo: Men ought not to deceiue themselues, and say, that he would be ashamed to promise vnto a man that which is not in his power to compasse, as not to be slaine in battell, or to warrant and preserue him from all dangers; whereof wee haue an example in Gregory Nazianzen, who reporteth of S. Cyprian that he became a Magician before hee was a Christian, that hee might enioy a young woman whom he loued: and although the Diuell had promised him to satisfie his desire, yet hee was at last constrained by Gods commandemēt to confesse vnto him, that he had promised him a thing which was not in his power to performe, which was the cause of his conuersion to the Christian religion. S. Athanasius who was familiarly

Matth. 4.

Gregor. Nazian. orat. in Cyprian.

Athanas. oration. 1. aduersus Arrian.

liarly acquainted with Antonius Monachus, a second Iob in the time of the Gospell, doth eloquently describe the sleights and subtleties of Satan. He dissembleth and hideth (saith he) that which he is indeed, appearing in a goodly shape, and gracing himselfe with some name of honour, which he shall perceiue to be most pleasing vnto our humour. Wherein he resembleth Pirates, who when they espy any pretty children on the shore, they draw neere vnto them, and flatter them, speaking as faire vnto them as their fathers and mothers possibly could; they shew them apples, and cast vnto them other toyes, which they conceiue may please and stay these children: but when they haue enticed them a shipbord, they presently hoyse saile, and carry them farre enough from father or mother, selling them and making them slaues in a strange countrey as long as they liue. I would haue all those, who haue suffered themselues to be thus abused by Satan, to remember well this discourse of so famous a man; and with the prodigall childe to returne vnto the house of their father, and by some trick or other to make an escape from that bloudy and mercliesse tyrant, that setteth before them nothing but huskes to eate: that is, hee promiseth vaine, friuolous, and vnnecessary things, full of deceitfulnesse and cousonage. But in case they will not returne, then must that be put in execution, which is set downe in the law of God, in the 20. chapter of Exodus, that is, to put them to an extraordinary death, which may strike a terrour into others, and serue as an example for all kinde of people. This was religiously practised in Auignon in the yeere of grace 1582. by the diligence of father Florus Pronin, at that time Inquisitour of the faith in those parts, vnto whom I was an associate in the said Inquisition, where there were 18. men and women executed, who were conuicted and very deseruedly condemned, after they had by their owne depositions and mutuall accusations one of another, giuen sufficient proofe of their

their guiltinesse, as shall appeare by the sentence pronounced against them; the extract whereof ensueth next after this following chapter, to the end that euery one may see how farre these kinde of men are separated from the knowledge of God, and how iustly they deserue to bee burned. For conclusion and resolution of this discourse, let vs onely marke that which Tertullian teacheth vs, to wit, that neither Christ Iesus, nor his Apostles, nor any well deseruing sonnes of the Church, did euer call vnto them wicked Spirits, but rather did repell and driue them from them by the efficacy and power of Gods word. It cleerly appeareth in the Gospel that this was the practise of Christ Iesus: Erat Iesus eijciens Dæmonium; si in digito Dei eijcio Dæmonia: so that whatsoeuer Christ Iesus did in this behalfe, he did it to this end to cast them out, and to make them odious and abominable before men. And as it appeareth in the tenth of Matthew, the power that he gaue vnto his Apostles was onely to cast out Diuels: for it is there said, that hauing chosen them for his Apostles, he sent them forth with authority ouer vncleane Spirits, but limited and restrained vnto this, to repell and cast them out. Dedit eis potestatem (saith the text) Spirituum immundorum, vt eijcerent eos. And againe after his resurrection he sent them abroad vnto all places of the world, and gaue them power ouer Diuels, but with the abouenamed restriction, to cast them out, saying, In nomine meo Dæmonia eijcient. Read the Acts of the Apostles, and you shall finde that they did nothing else but cast out wicked Spirits, neither did any man of worth in the Church of God euer exceed these limits, and those who haue trespassed in passing further, doe shew that they are aliens from the Church of Christ Iesus, and are disciples in the schoole of Satan. And this is it which Tertullian did well note, Nos non inuitatoria operatione, sed expugnatoria dominatione tractamus. And in another place, hee witnesseth, that none but Christians could cast cast out Deuils, insinuating thereby, that Painims and Magicians had trafficke and intercourse with wicked Spirits, but that Christians neuer had to do with them, but according to the power which was bequeathed vnto them by Christ Iesus, to driue and cast them out. And for further illustration hereof, see the passages that are cited in the beginning of the Preface of this booke.

CHAP. IX.

Whether the Articles contained in the depositions of Sorcerers ought to be taken as idely and dreamingly spoken, or whether they ought to be receiued for truth.

THis question is as difficult as it is necessary, it is difficult because I neuer lighted vpon any author ancient or moderne, that hath debated or determined the same: it is necessary, because in this one point the very knot of the difficulty lyeth, which we are now about to vntye, that is to say, whether that which Sorcerers do depose do happen vnto them by dreames and diabolicall illusions, or whether they really practise the same. Iustin Martyr (as Saint Ierome reporteth) made a Treatise in his time touching the nature and property of wicked Spirits: the which but that time hath bin so iniurious vnto vs, as to snatch and as it were rauish it out of our hands, would haue ministred vnto vs (as we may easily coniecture by his other writings that do yet remaine vnto posterity) very ample and cleere resolutions of this doubt, and would teach vs, that what is commonly spoken of Witches, is not fabulously giuen out, but assuredly verified to be true. For in his first Apologie which he made for the Christians, hee is bold confidently and resoluedly to affirme, that wicked Spirits haue had carnall knowledge sometimes with women and sometimes with men. And in his second Hieron lib. de scrip. Eccles.

Apologie

Apologie he saith, that Deuils will seildome do what a man would haue them, except it be with certaine conditions, as in Necromancy hee will haue a boy to bee brought vnto him, that is yong and tender of age. And in the 52. question which he proposeth vnto Christians, he wisheth all men to proceede warily and with all aduised circumspection in this argument of wicked Spirits & of Sorcerers. In which he giueth vs to vnderstand that we are not to goe on inconsideratly in searching after two things, which are very strange vnto the simple people, and which we now will recite out of him: (for we ought to imbrace the aduise of so great a personage, seeing Saint Paul himselfe doth declare vnto vs, 2. Thes. 2. that the workes of Sathan shall bee set out with all signes and wonders, so that they shall exceede all our naturall forces) for resolution hereof wee must heere make a distinction, which many not obseruing haue runne and plunged themselues into many errors. The distinction is this: amongst all the effects that Sathan doth practise in the behalfe of those that owe their seruice vnto him, there are two manners of working: the first doth happen vnto them when they sleepe; the second is practised also when they wake. Hereunto wee might adioyne many sub-diuisions, but it shall suffice hereafter to alleage such as we shall adiudge necessary for this purpose. Now that this happeneth after these two seuerall wayes, the Scriptures in many passages doth confirme it: for numbring vp the workes which Satan practiseth for them, that haue made an expresse couenant with him, they do seildome faile of the one side to alleage the obseruation of dreames, and of the other side the abhomination of charmes; where we may obserue, that diuination from dreames is euer practised by sleeping, and charmes when men are awake. The first place that confirmeth the truth hereof may be taken from the 19. of Leuiticus, where it is said: Leuit. 19. Non augurabimini nec obseruabitis somnia. Another place place is in the second booke of the Chronicles the 33. Chapter, where it is said of King Manasses: Obseruabat somnia, sectabatur Auguria, maleficis artibus inseruiebat, habebat autem secum Magos & incantatores, multaq; mala operatus est. There is another passage in the 27. Chapter of Ieremy, where God saith vnto his people: Vos ergo nolite audire Prophetas vestros, & diuinos, & somniatores, & Augures, & maleficos. The fourth place is in the tenth of Zacharie, where it is said: Diuini viderunt mendacium, & somniatores locuti sunt frustra. And this was the very practise of Balaam, whose custome was first heedfully to obserue his dreames, and when he was awake to make his charmes, as you may see in the 22. Chapter of Numbers. I am not ignorant, that some may here cauil & say, that those dreames were of a different quality vnto the dreames of the Sorcerers of our times: notwithstanding it doth sufficiently make for our purpose, if we declare by Scripture, ỹ among the wicked and prohibited workes, which Satan acteth in those that giue themselues vnto him, some are by way of dreames, and others are done waking, and are really true. And although the natures of dreames may be infinitely varied, (a thing incident to all dreames, whether they be diuine, naturall, or diabolicall, which is the full and complete diuision of dreames, that Tertullian maketh in his booke of the soule in the Chapter de somnijs) yet cannot these seuerall qualities or diuersities, make these dreames that they should not bee the reall workes of Satan, as in like manner the diuersity of them doth not hinder them, to be diuine or naturall. This distinction doth prompt vnto vs another, and that is, that those things which are dreames to some, are truthes to others, and this is also common vnto diuine and naturall dreames, for there is no repugnancy that one man may really practise that, which another man dreameth of himselfe: as in the booke of Iudges, we heare of a souldier who dreamed that Gedeon came to assault and force

2. Paralip. 33.

Ierem. 27.

Num. 22.

Tertul. lib. de Anima cap. de somnijs.

Iudg. 7.

force their campe, and at the same time, Gedeon did indeede come vnto their campe, and did that which the other dreamed. I do purposely let passe diuers other, whether they be diuine, naturall, or diabolicall, which are recited by Tertullian in the place aboue alleaged: let it suffice to relate one discourse out of Saint Augustine very pregnant for the purpose now in hand: where he maketh mention of a certaine man of his time, who was very desirous to vnderstand the meaning of a passage in Plato, that was very obscure vnto him, and to that purpose did oftentimes addresse himselfe vnto a Philosopher, and repared much vnto his house to haue his opinion concerning the same, but he could neuer vnderstand the interpretation of it. At the last, as this man was vp late in his study there came vnto him, as he thought, this Philosopher and began to speake vnto him of the said passage, and in conclusion did so cleerely explaine and vnfold it, that he rested very fully satisfied. It chanced not long after, that this Philosopher came againe vnto him, whereupon hee demanded him, why he would not giue explication of the said passage at home in his owne house, but had rather interpret it in the house of another man. To which the Philosopher replied, I did indeede dreame that I had expounded this passage vnto you, but the truth is I neuer did. From hence Saint Augustine inferreth, that the same thing which is a dreame to one may be a truth to another: for whiles the Philosopher was dreaming that he was expounding the said passage, the other receiued waking the reall words of that exposition. He also telleth of another, who hauing slept diuers dayes together, so that hee could bee waked by no meanes that they could vse vnto him; he told his seruants when he did awake, that he dreamed that hee was changed into an horse, and that hee hid prouender in a certaine field which hee described vnto them, and it was indeede found that such an accident had happened. Vpon these two two suppositions we affirme, that those things which are reported of Sorcerers might bee both dreamed and done, and that which was a dreame to one might bee a truth to another. And for the first, wee are to attribute vnto dreames, whatsoeuer is written in the 26. distinction of the Decretals in cap. Episcopi, which is so often alleaged by those that hold all witch-crafts whatsoeuer to be nothing else but dreames, when as the particulars there recited are not onely false and fabulous, but repugnant vnto Scripture, and impossible to Satan, such as is the raising of Herodias to life: this opinion wee ought to haue of the like sentences and authorities. In the second place we are to ranke all charmes and wicked practises wrought by Sorcerers and Magicians, which the holy Scripture, the Fathers, and a cloud of Histories do mention, as things really put in execution. By which meanes we shall easily reconcile as well the Scriptures, and the Fathers, as Histories also, which otherwise might seeme to crosse and contrary one the other. As for example, Iohn Baptista the Neapolitan in his 2. booke and 26. Chapter, reporteth that himselfe being curious to know the truth of that which witches do depose, he so ordered the matter that he beheld with his owne eyes that which they did, and indeede hauing gotten the consent of an olde witch, hee saw all their manner of proceeding thorow the chinke of a doare, and beheld an olde woman standing naked, and annointing her selfe with a certaine oyntment, which when she had done she fell into such a sound sleepe, that she could not be awaked by the most violent stripes that could be laid vpon her. At the last being awaked, shee affirmed that she had passed ouer the seas, and had seene diuers strange sights which shee recited in his presence, and in the presence of diuers others who together with him came to see the same. And when they shewed vnto her the markes of the stripes which shee had receaued when she was a sleepe, shee would beleeue nothing of these Distinct 26. cap. episc.

Auguſt. lib. 18. de Ciuitat Dei cap. 18.

these things. Apuleius reporteth of himselfe, that being curious to see the fashions of witches, hee was brought by a chamber-maide to a secret place, where he might behold them, and looking in like manner thorow the chinke of the chamber doore, he saw a naked witch besmearing of her selfe with an oyntment which she had, and while she was rubbing and annointing her selfe, she was transformed by little and little (as seemed vnto him) into an Oule, and at the last there appeared winges vpon her, and soone after she flew abroad through the window: of which strange metamorphosis himselfe, as hee said, was the spectator. These two Histories reported by two men curious beyond ordinary to vnderstand the truth of these secrets, do well shew that both the one and the other might be true enough: for we ought not to giue more credite to Iohn Baptista the Neapolitan then to Apuleius the Affrican, since Saint Augustine himselfe dared not to affirme, that those strange things which Apuleius wrote were fables: hee rather sheweth how these things may bee done. Wee may therefore do well to yeeld both to the one and the other, and not from a particular fact to inferre a generall conclusion, as they doe who attribute all these things vnto dreames onely, which is against the rule in Logicke, à particulari ad vniuersale consequentia nulla. There might also be mistakes and mistes in the eyes, as Saint Augustine teacheth in the booke and Chapter before cited: where relating the History of Iphigenia, he saith, that she was not really sacrificed as all the assemblie did imagine, but there was a stagge conueyed in steede of her, which by ỹ charms of the Deuil did appeare vnto the lookers on to bee Iphigenia. It may also fall out, that thorow the same impostures of the Deuill, men may thinke they see the body of a man, when it is nothing so, and hauing their eyes dazeled and disaffected, they may mistake one thing for another. And hereof there are many relations in Saint Clement, which he Apul. de Asino aureo.

August. de ciuitate lib. 18. cap. 18.

Clemens in recognitionib.

he reciteth in his bookes of Recognitions, where hee also describeth sundry feates which he saw Simon Magus to practise. Yet on the contrary part, it is not alwaies true that this happeneth thorow impostures and illusions, as the History of Hermotymus well witnesseth, who sundry times told his wife that in the time of his sleepe hee visited diuers parts and quarters of the world, his soule for a time relinquishing his body, and afterwards returning home vnto him, whereof hee was verily perswaded. His enemies would make triall of the truth hereof by cutting his throat, but as Tertullian ieastingly saith, his soule came not backe againe in time, so that he neuer waked after. Now if this had been done by charmes and delusions, hee had been in no danger to haue died, because they should not haue medled with his body, but with a seeming and supposititious body; but it being otherwise, it appeareth that it was his owne body. So that there are three manners of proceeding; for either they sleepe and dreame, or they goe thither really, or the Diuell putteth himselfe in their place, and carrieth them some where else. Thus may these sundry waies be all true, and such an accident may happen either meerely in a dreame, or really and indeed; or else the body which appeareth to lie asleepe may proue a phantasme, although it may so fall out, that somtimes it is the true body of him, whose wee thinke it to bee. The difficulty then lyeth in the distinguishing and discerning when such a thing really is acted, or when there is but an apparancy of the same by dreames and impostures. S. Augustine in that notable chapter aboue cited, doth if wee marke him well, giue vs the resolution hereof: for hee telleth vs, that in these cases there are three remarkeable rules, that present themselues vnto our obseruations. The first is, that you must iudge of these things by the experience and reality that ensueth thereupon; as if a man would know, whether there were the true and perfect reality of that which Tertul. lib. de anima cap. de Hermotymo.

Caiet. in 2.m 2.æ. q. 95. art. 2.

August. lib. 18. de ciuit. Dei. cap. 18.

which was represented in the sacrifice of Iphigenia, the answere is, that there was not, but that there was another substance by a diabolicall art foysted into her place: for experience (saith he) did afterwards declare that Iphigenia was found in another country farre remote from thence, whether she had been carried aliue by the Diuels, and liued a long time after this accident. By the like experience he concludeth, that the companions of Diomedes were not turned into birds as was conceiued, because, the said birds did build their nests, and multiplyed their kind as other birds vsually doe. Now this propagation of their kind is a reality which giueth sufficient proofe to conclude, that these men were carried into other places by Diuels, and these birds were cunningly and suddenly conueied into their roomes: neither could these birds be meerely apparances, but they were truly as they seemed, and the experience of the reality of their nature doth blow away all suspitions of illusion. Besides, the Diuels impostures (as S. Thomas hath learnedly obserued) can haue no long time of subsistence, because they are not reall natures, but onely common accidents (as the Logicians tearme them) whose property is to bee easily changed by any naturall alteration. This rule giueth vs to vnderstand, that what Moyses did in Ægypt and in the wildernesse was not done by illusion; for the fishes did die indeed in the riuer that was changed into blood, and the Caterpillers and other vermine that spoyled the corne, the barly, the vines, and trees of Ægypt were truly that which they seemed to bee. It also declareth that what the Diuell wrought against Iob was not seemingly done, but really acted with a great deale of malice; witnesse the death of his children and seruants, and the downefall of the house vpon them. This rule we are to practise in the charmes of Witches, and to see if there be any reality in that which they giue out they haue done: which falling out so frequently true, we are no longer to question the verity of the same. There is a reality in their murthering of Infants; for it is confirmed by the report of their parents, that the children which they said they had strangled, were found strangled indeed, as they had themselues deposed. In like manner the dis-interring of their bodies was a truth, because their bones were not found lying in their graues. There is a reality in the mark which they beare in their bodies, the which of all other parts is leprous, and deuoid of sense, and which can bee found vpon none but vpon such as are said to be Witches. There is also a reality in the peece of their garment, which in signe of homage they present vnto the Diuell, and wee haue seene with our eyes, that such a like peece was wanting in their garment, as they themselues had reported. There is a manifest reality in the charmes which they cast vpon man and beast, making them dull and almost dead, and by their words reuiuing and setting them in as good plight as they were before; not (saith Lactantius) that they can heale diseases, for this is not in the compasse of the Diuels power, although it be in their naturall power to infuse an infirmity into any part of a liuing body, as appeareth in the history of the Demoniack that was both dumbe and deafe, and of the woman that was crooked, so that shee could not lift vp her eyes to heauen; and therefore by taking away this impediment they doe not really cure a disease, but withdraw the stop that hindered those operations of nature, God somtimes permitting him by his iust, though hidden iudgement to doe this, although further then this hee cannot passe, as S. Augustine often inferreth. So that it is apparant by the first rule, that the confessions made by Sorcerers are not alwaies dreames, but doe oftentimes containe facts that haue been really practised.

D. Thom.

Exod. 7.

Iob. 2.

Lactan. li. 2. diuinar. inst. cap. 16.
Luc. 11.
Luc. 13.
August. lib. 2. cont. aduersa legis cap 12. & lib. 22. cont. Faust. cap. 72. & lib. de S. Virg. cap. 40. & 42.

The second rule drawne both from S. Augustine, and from S. Thomas is, to obserue whether all that is spoken in this argument, doth lie in the naturall power of the Diuell. This S. Augustine obscurely noteth when in the history of Diomedes hee saith, that this transmutation was by a secret substraction and conueying away of their bodies, because it doth transcend the naturall power of Diuels to change one body into another according to their substance; and therefore it must needs bee that this colluſion was by transporting and placing one body into the roome of another. S. Augustine would not yeeld vnto the first, because as hee had already declared, it was aboue the naturall power of the Diuell: but he granteth the second, in regard that it is within the compasse of his force and working: Neque enim (saith he) dæmonibus iudicio dei permissis huiusmodi præstigia difficilia esse possunt. And as hee expresseth it elsewhere, the Diuell can do this when he will, & how he will, if so be that God doth expresly command him, or doth leaue him to his owne nature: Quando volunt, & quomodo volunt Deo vel iubente vel sinente. S. Thomas betaketh himselfe to this rule when he saith, that if the Diuell should busie himselfe in the resurrection of the dead, or in any other supernaturall workings, wee must be strong that all these things are meere illusions: for although God by his vniuersal prouidence doth imploy wicked Spirits vpon many occasions, yet doth hee neuer vse them in working of miracles, which he reserueth vnto himselfe, and to his, because Diuels haue no capacity to receiue such supernaturall endowments. This rule did distinguish the magicall workes of Simon Magus from those of S. Peter and the other Apostles, as S. Clement, and S. Ireneus doe witnesse: and this rule shall make the workes of Antichrist to bee discerned from those of the Christians. And this rule gaue Saint Augustine occasion to say, that not onely the admirable workes of the Diuell comprehended in the old and new Testament were to bee beleeued, but also many other things were to be credited, which prophane histories, and Poets themselues doe mention of them, and Augustlib. 1. de ciuit. cap. 18.

of

D. Thom. 1. p. q. 114. art. 4. ad 2.

Clemens in recognit. lib. 3. Irenæus lib. 2. cap. 57.

which were in former ages accounted fables: although S. Augustine out of the great subtility of his spirit, and his deepe knowledge in holy Writ, would not venture to say that they were fables; hee rather sheweth that this might bee true either really or in outward apparance. For as Tertullian said: Dæmones, soli nouere Christiani. From whence could the Christians better know this then from the Scriptures? Whereupon it followeth, that none can truly and iudicially determine this point, vnlesse he bee conuersant in the holy Scriptures, and in the ancient Fathers, from whence the true resolution hereof may be drawne. To conclude this point touching the extent of the Diuels naturall power, and how farre it reacheth, it is not my intendment to enlarge my discourse thereof to the full; I will onely say with Saint Thomas who had the soule of S. Augustine, as a mã may say, doubled vpon him, that it is in the Diuels naturall power to doe as much as the vtmost strength of nature can reach vnto: for he is able to vse those meanes which nature accustometh to serue her selfe withall, and applieth one thing vnto another, iust as nature doth: as when a man by applying a torch vnto char-coale doth presently fire the same, which nature would also produce but at more leisure: and this appeareth in the causes of lightning, which are longer ere they produce their effect, whereas wee shoot off our Artillery suddenly and without premeditation. And this we are taught by experience: for the Angels, who wheele about the heauens, by the application of their motions vnto these inferiour elements, doe cause naturall things to bee produced, euer presupposing a matter and forme whereupon to worke, which were immediately created by God himselfe. Hence it is that they are called both in the Psalmes and in the Gospel, Virtutes Cœlorum: for without them the heauens would haue no more efficacie or power in the production of things, then the body hath to worke without a soule; which S. Augustine wel glanceth

Tertul. lib. de anima.

S. Thom. p. q. 114. ar. 4.

Sixtus Senensis Biblioth. Sacræ lib. 3. in Thoma.

Vid. Iustin. q. 24. ad Orthodox.

Psal. 32. Luc. 12.

ceth at in the third Booke against Maximin the Arrian, the seuenteenth chapter: So that those things which Sorcerers depose are within the natural power of Satã; as may be seene in the whole frame of this Booke, especially in the Annotations vpon the ensuing Sentence. Therefore it is plaine that the second rule doth positiuely conclude that all these workings are not meerely dreames: and this is not repugnant to Scripture, Fathers, or Histories, much lesse vnto reason; and for further verification of this second rule, obserue that which is written in the booke of Exodus, where mention is made of Pharaohs Magicians, and also that which is set downe in the first three Chapters of the booke of Iob.

August. lib. 3. cont. Maxim. cap. 17.

Exod.

Iob. 1. 2. 5.

The third rule is grounded vpon generall causes and occurrences. S. Augustine dared not to call these things fables, but amasseth and heapeth together whatsoeuer had been formerly practised, or remained in vse in his time, in all the quarters of the world. Some of those whom he questioned with, did tell him what they had heard related vnto them by very credible persons, others what they had seene and found by their owne experience. See S. Augustine in the 16. 17. and 18. chapters of the eighteenth booke of the City of God. This generality gaue occasion vnto Hippocrates to speake diuinely, of those vniuersall and nationall diseases, saying that a generall plague cannot proceed from ordinarie causes in nature, but must bee attributed to come from God, and from inuisible causes. The same may be said in this theame of Witches, which is no lesse important. It is a wondrous thing, that the Witches of France and of our times, should depose no more nor no lesse, then those of Germany, 60. or 80. yeeres agoe. [redacted] And whereas it may be said that they haue been traded in the bookes which haue been written either in Latine or in the vulgar tongue, by learned men, that haue set downe their behauiours agreeable vnto the truth of their owne depositions: yet wee shall find them to bee

August lib. 18. de ciuit. cap. 16. 17. 18. Hippocrates lib. 2. de morbis, & lib. de affection.

mechanicall persons, so deuoid of all shew of learning, that through the earthinesse of their vnderstandings, they rather seeme to be beasts then men. Hence we may inferre, that this generality and conformity of the facts, doth make a full declaration of the truth thereof, if wee will yeeld vnto probabilities and reason: which is another ground that wee will propound to those that say, that there is a repugnancy in reason against these things. For how can that which happeneth vpon a set day, as vpon a Thursday, or the like, bee said to bee a dreame? if it were so, why might it not as well fall out vpon some other day? yet is it agreed vpon at all hands, that these assemblies of Witches are neuer held but vpon Thursdaies: whereupon we demand, why rather on this day then vpon any other? Againe, if it were but a dreame, how chanceth it that so many people, in such diuersity of places, and dwelling in countries so remote one from another, should in one and the selfe same time haue all one kind of dreame? Physitians hold, that the diuersities of meates, and their seuerall quantities, doe breed and cause the variety we haue in dreames: and is it likely that all those persons, doe at the same time vse the same kinds of meates, and in the selfe same quantity, that they thus iumpe and concurre in dreames of the same chance and nature? They further affirme, that the seuerall complexions of men doe also beget a diuersity in dreames: so that the sanguine man dreameth of pleasant things: the melancholicke of sad accidents: the martialist of warre: in like manner, the dreames of young men are ordinarily different from the dreames of old men; and the dreames of men doe vary from those of women: wherein I appeale to Aristotle, Artemidorus and others, who haue made set Treatises of this argument. Since then for the most part these kind of Witches are different in complexion, age, sex, and sect, how happeneth it that they should all dreame? or if they doe dreame, whence ariseth it that they should all Arist. lib. de Som. Artemidor. de Somnior. interpretatione.

all dreame the selfe same thing, without variation in any circumstance one from another; and which is more, in the same day and houre? It will bee said, that the Diuell is assuredly the cause hereof. Be it so, now you come neere vnto the truth, since you grant that this doth transcend the forces of man, and that it must be attributed to the working of the Diuell. Thereupon I demand, since that it is by them decreed vpon, that this is a true dreame, because it is in the Diuels power to effect such a thing, why are they so precise to acknowledge a reality in the fact, when it is also in the compasse of the Diuels power, to accomplish the same? Besides experience confirmeth it, neither is it against Scriptures, Fathers, or Histories: nay it is foreshowen vnto vs, that at the end of the world, these things should bee more frequent then euer they were before; as we will afterward proue. But it is not probable, that such a generality and conformity should bee a dreame foysted in by the Diuell. For first, one Diuell can worke but in one place at one time, as Iustin Martyr, Didymus, and S. Thomas do declare. So that it cannot be one Diuell alone that is to labour this businesse, but they must bee many, and their number must equall the number of the Sorcerers and Witches that are to dreame; and then must they labour and runne in and out, yea and tye themselues vnto a set day and houre; which is as strange as the reality of the fact. For why should the Diuell denie to doe such a thing, but at a set time, and should tye himselfe vnto this day and houre, rather then to any other? It may happen that the Diuels aduantage shall at that very time lie another way, and there may some great occasion offer it selfe to tempt others in matters of a far more execrable nature then these dreames are, so that they cannot attend this, and then it must needs follow, that many of these Sorcerers cannot dreame, because their Diuels are imployed in more diabolicall negotiations, and vse therein both their art and apprehension. Be-

Iustin Mart. q. 40. Didym. lib. 1. de Som. Thom. 1. p. q.

Ioan. 13. Act. 5. S. Thom 1. p. q. 111. art. 3. ad. 2.m

sides the Diuell may stirre the phantasie of a man as appeareth by the temptations which he presenteth before vs, and as he practised vpon Iudas, Ananias, and Saphira, but he cannot vse our phantasies at his pleasure, and present vnto them whatsoeuer he will, because it is in our power to diuert his working from them. For as S. Thomas saith, he cannot make an impression of colours into the phantasie of one that is borne blind, neither can he make the sound of a voyce in one that is naturally deafe (which is beyond the power of nature her selfe) yet is he able to moue the phantasie, and to offer vnto it, those obiects which it hath formerly receiued. Now the phantasies of all these kinds of people are not in euery respect alike, neither are they at all times, and vpon all occasions equally disposed; so that it will bee very improbable, to attribute this cõfluence of phantasies vnto dreames, yea it will bee more incredible, then to affirme that these things are palpablie and really practised, considering what wee haue already alleaged for confirmation of the same. For there is no absurdity that can follow thereupon, neither is it against the Scripture, Fathers, Histories, or reason. But touching the first assertion, that they are but dreames, there are many inconueniences that doe vnauoidably follow vpon it, as we haue in part declared. One point remaineth vnresolued, which may stagger weake and vnaduised persons in reading the Fathers. Lodouicus Viues of Granada, who hath commented vpon S. Augustines bookes of the City of God, when he vndertaketh to comment vpon that notable and learned chapter, which wee haue so often alleaged, he sheweth himselfe to be a very meane diuine, as indeed he was, although he was well seene in humane learning: and those who reade his Commentaries will perceiue that he was (if I may so speake) rather an Idiot then a Diuine. He then seeing S. Augustine was cleere of opinion, that these things are not alwaies fables, but might fall out indeed; as where Apuleius reporteth porteth of himselfe, that hee was transformed into an Asse; that is to say, hee was couered with the likenesse of that beast; he (I say) not being able to comprehend this with Saint Augustine, doth runne into three grosse faults: First he accuseth S. Augustine of ignorance, and saith that he read not Lucian, because hee cared not for the Greeke language. Secondly, that Apuleius had drawne his discourse from Lucian, who saith that he had made this of his owne head for sport and pastime. The third fault that he committeth (which is the absurdest of all) is, that whereas S. Augustines conclusion is, that these things may either bee fables, or practised truthes (which is the very resolution of our discourse) Vives doth oppose against this, and saith, that it cannot be but that all these things are meerely imaginary and fabulous; and alleageth the authority of Pliny, that they are not to be held for true. Touching his accusation, that S. Augustine was ignorant, and had not read the workes of Lucian; it cannot bee made to appeare that it is so: how many Greeke Authors can wee cite both sacred and prophane, whom Saint Augustine hath fitly and to good purpose alleaged? although it be true, that he did naturally hate the Greeke tongue, as himselfe confesseth in his bookes of Confessions, and did therefore the more apply himselfe vnto Latine. A Commentatour should not lightly burthen his Author, whom he goeth about to explaine, with ignorance, he should rather defend him in whatsoeuer may admit of a defence. Touching the other imputation, that Apuleius had taken his history from Lucian, it is so farre from being true, that it rather appeareth to the contrary. For Lucian saith, that those things which he had written were fables deuised by himselfe: but Apuleius affirmeth confidently, that what hee had set downe, was a certaine truth: hee goeth further, and reproueth those, that conceiue these things to be dreames, and saith that such do shew themselues to be altogether vnpractised in affaires of [redacted] such secrecy

Aug. lib. Conf.

Apul. Apol. 1. & 2.

secretsie and importance. And if Apuleius had conceiued that these things were imaginarie onely, why had hee not, when hee was personally cited before the Gouernour of Africke for witchcraft, and Magicke, made a short resolution of this doubt in both his Apologies, which hee published to cleere himselfe, and said, that it was but a popular report and a very fable. But we see he doth not so, but endeauoureth to purge himselfe from the suspition of being one of those that practised these things. Touching the third; either Viues had not read, or at the least remembred not the sentences of Tertullian and Saint Augustine, alleaged in the Preface vnto this discourse: by the which it is euinced, that Paynims were blind and ignorant in the knowledge of good and bad Spirits; yet doth Viues preferre the opinion of Pliny an Infidell and an Atheist, before Saint Augustines, who was the most celebrious and learned Doctor of the Church of God. Certainely if Viues had continued this fashion down to his last Commentaries, where Saint Augustine doth largely proue, that there shall bee a generall resurrection in the same flesh and bones; Viues might as well haue said that this was not to bee credited, because Pliny is of a contrary opinion, and might haue ieasted also at this as at a thing full of impossibility and falshood. So that whatsoeuer Saint Augustine doth affirme in this behalfe, hee did not take the same from the Schooles of Philosophers, but from the Scriptures, and Schooles of Christians, which he calleth the City of God. This chapter of Saint Augustine hath beene much better explained by a certaine Doctor of Diuinity, well seene in the Scripture, and conuersant in the Fathers, and in the doctrine of Saint Thomas, who commented vpon the said bookes before Viues his time, and although he were not so learned in humane sciences as Viues was, yet was he a better diuine then he. Who when he commeth to the explication of this chapter, he onely giueth Tertul. lib. de Anima. Augustin.

thi

this briefe aduertisement of the same. Hic (inquit) diligenter notandus est modus possibilitatis quem ponit Augustinus in transformationibus hominum & bestiarum, qui à minus studiosis videtur difficilis ad intelligendum. In which hee thwarteth Viues, and toucheth him to the quick, who doth not onely conceite this to be difficult but also impossible. To conclude, he that is desirous to see a large and learned Comment vpon this chapter of S. Augustine, let him read S. Thomas in his first part 114. question, art. 4. In the yeere 1584. a Germane Lawyer, called Mr. George Goldeman did first publickly defend by argument (as himselfe declareth) and afterward caused 80. propositions to bee printed, which wholy tended to prooue, that the things which Sorcerers depose, are nothing else but dreames and fancies. Vnto which it will be needlesse to make a full and distinct answere, because they are all of them confuted in diuers passages of this discourse. Yet wee shall doe well to obserue, that hee affirmeth, that before him no man did make the distinction betweene a Magician, a Sorcerer, and a Poysoner, and that the default of this distinction was the cause that none hitherto could resolue this difficultie. And although hee grant that Magicians and Poysoners are worthy to suffer death, yet hee denyeth that Sorcerers are to be punished with the like, because they haue nothing that is hurtfull in them but meere imaginations and illusions: yea, hee is bold to say, that although, when they are awake, they yeeld their assent vnto such imaginations, yet are they no way culpable either before God or men. And to excuse them the more colourably, he alleageth that they are drawne into it by the deceite and subtletie of Satan, and thorow ignorance and feare: but heerein hee sheweth himselfe too zealous and eager in their defence. For, if there bee a consent and delectation in such fantasies, there can not possibly bee a constraint: and if those concupiscentiall and fleshly cogitations which arise from the corruption

D. Thom. 1. p. q. 114. art. 4.

Ioan. Georgius Goldemanus in disputatione habita Rostochii 26. Februarii anno 1584 in collegio Fratrum excussa, Francofurt: propositione prima, secunda & tertia.

Propositione 11. 12. 14.

Propositione 38. vsque 61.

Exod. 10. Matth. 5.

tion of our nature bee condemned by the law of God, how much more execrable is that impure carnall commixtion with Diuels, although there be onely a desire, delectation or contentment in the same. But to confute him in one word, since in his 12. proposition he maintaineth that Magicians doe really renounce God and their Baptisme, and doe adore the Diuell, doing all which hee commandeth them, and putting their whole trust and confidence in him, so farre as to recommend their soules and bodies vnto him at the point of death: wee would aske a reason of him, why Sorcerers should not be as lyable vnto death as those whō he calleth Magicians, when they trespasse in the same, or in amore abominable manner then the others doe. For example, if a murtherer be guilty of death, much more doth a parricide deserue the same, and if a fornicatour be seuerely punished, a far greater degree of castigation ought to be inflicted vpon him that committeth adultery: but it is certaine that Sorcerers are knowen to do whatsoeuer he conceiueth Magicians are able to performe: nay many tymes they doe a great deale worse, and therefore are more punishable then they. And what letteth it, but that all these things may concurre in one man? since the Scripture it selfe maketh mention of some that were Inchanters, Magicians, Diuiners, Poysoners and Witches altogether, as amongst the rest King Manasses for one. So that we shall do wel to call those sentences to minde which wee haue formerly cited to this purpose, as also those which are alleaged in the 6. chapter of this booke. But this mans errour is, in that he thinketh it an impossibility, that Diuels should carry men or women in the aire, or should haue carnall knowledge with women, or that such kind of persōs should haue the resemblāces of woolfes, doggs or cats, as hee expresseth it in his 68. Proposition, as also in the 69. and 71. All which errours haue their full confutation in this booke. The grace of our Lord be present with vs alwayes. Amen.

THE

THE EXTRACT OF THE SENTENCE GIVEN IN AVIGNON, AGAINST EIGHTEENE men and women Witches, in the yeere of grace 1582. at which I my selfe was present, and was an assistant vnto the Inquisitour of the faith: which is heere set downe in Latine, iust as it was then read and pronounced.

EXEMPLAR SENTENTIÆ CONTRA fascinarios latæ Auenioni, anno domini 1582.

VIsis processibus contra N.N.N.&c. coram nobis constitutos reos accusatos, & delatos, quibus tam per vestram & quorumlibet vestrum relationem ac propriam confessionem iuridicè coram nobis factam sæpius iuramento vestro medio, quàm per testium depositiones eorumque accusationes & alias legitimas probationes, ex dictis actis, & processu resultantes, nobis legitimè constitit & constat, quod vos & vestrum quilibet, Deum nostrum omnium creatorem & opificem, vnum & trinum abnegastis, & immitem diabolum, hostem antiquum humani generis coluistis, vosque illi perpetuò deuouistis, & sacratissimo baptismati, & his qui in eo fuerant susceptores leuantes & proparentes vestraque parti paradisi & æternæ hæreditatis quam pro vobis & toto generi humano dominus noster Iesus Christus sua morte acquisiuit, coram præfato cacodæmone in humana specie existente, abrenunciastis, infundente

A.

B.

C.

fundente ipso rugiente diabolo denuò aquam, quam accepistis, vestro vero mutato nomine, in sacro baptismatis fonte vobis impositio, sicque aliud commentitium nomen vobis
D. imponi fictitio baptismate passi fuistis, & accepistis, atque in pignus fidei dæmoni datæ vestimentorum vestrorum fragmentum & particulam illi dedistis, & vt à libro vitæ vos deleri & obliterari pater mendacij curaret, signa ve-
E. stra propria manu ipso mandante & iubente, in reproborum, damnatorum mortisque perpetuæ libro nigerrimo ad hoc parato apposuistis: & vt ad tantam perfidiam & impietatem vos maiori vinculo deuinciret, notam vel stigma cuilibet vestrum velut rei suæ propriæ inussit, & illius mã-
F. datis & iussis iureiurando super circulo quod diuinitatis symbolum est, in terram sculpto quæ scabellum pedum Dei est, per vos & quemlibet vestrum præstito vos obstrinxistis, signo dominico & cruce conculcato, & illi parendo, admi-
G. niculo baculi quodam nefandissimo vnguento ab ipso diabolo vobis præscripto illiti cruribus, & positi per aëra ad locum constitutum intempesta nocte hora commoda malefactori-
H. bus statisque diebus ab ipso tentatore portati, & translati fuistis, ibique in communi synagoga plurimorum aliorum maleficiorum, sortilegorum, & hæreticorum, fascinariorũ, cultorumque dæmonum accenso igne tetro post multas iu-
I. bilationes, saltationes, comessationes, compotationes, & ludos in honorem ipsius præsidentis Belzebub principis dæmoniorum in formam & speciem fœdissimi & nigerrimi hirci immutati, vt Deum, re & verbis adorastis, & ad illum complicatis genibus supplices accessistis, & candelas piceas accensas obtulistis, & illius fœdissimum ac turpissimũ anum proh pudor! summa cum reuerentia ore sacrilego deosculati estis, illumque sub veri Dei nomine inuocastis, illiusq; auxilium & pro vindicta in omnes vobis vel infensos vel petita denegantes exercenda efflagitastis, atque ab ipso edocti vindictas, maleficia, fascinationes, tum in humanas creaturas, tum etiam in animalia exercuistis, atque homicidia infantium quam plurima commisistis, imprecationes, ablactationis tabes & alios grauissimos morbos ope iam

dicti

dicti ſathanæ immiſiſtis, infanteſque per vos, nonnullis etiam ſcientibus tantum & annuentibus, arte iam dicta malefica, oppreſſos, confoſſos & interfectos fuiſſe, ac denique in cœmeterio ſepultos noctu & clàm exhumaſtis, atque in ſynagogam prædictam faſcinariorum collegium portaſtis: denique dæmoniorum principi in ſolio ſedenti, obtuliſtis, detracta & vobis conſeruata pinguedine, capite, manibus, & pedibus abſciſſis, truncumque decoqui & elixari & interdum aſſari curaſtis, inbentéque ac mandante præfato patre veſtro comediſtis & damnabiliter deuoraſtis, mala denique malis addendo, vos viri cum ſuccubis, vos mulieres cum incubis fornicati eſtis, ſodomiam veram & nefandiſſimum crimen miſerè cum illis tactu frigidiſſimo exercuiſtis, & quod etiam deteſtabiliſſimum eſt, Auguſtiſſimum Euchariſtiæ ſacramentum per vos in Eccleſia ſancta Dei aliquando ſumptum, iam dicti ſerpentis à paradiſo eiecti præcepto in ore retinuiſtis, illudque in terram nefariè expuiſtis, vt cum maiori omnis contumelia, impietatis & contemptus ſpecie Deum noſtrum verum & ſanctum dehoneſtaretis, ipſum verò diabolum eiuſque gloriam, honorem, triumphum & regnum promoueritis, atque omni honore, decore, laudibus, dignitate, authoritate & adoratione honoraretis, decoraretis & honeſtaretis. Quæ omnia grauiſſima, horrendiſſima, ac nefandiſſima ſunt directè in omnipotentis Dei omnium creatoris contumeliam & iniuriam. Quam ob cauſam Nos fratres Florus, prouinciæ ordinis fratrum Prædicatorum, ſacræ Theologiæ Doctor, ac ſanctæ fidei in tota iſta legatione Auenionenſi Inquiſitor generalis, Dei timorem præ oculis habentes, pro tribunali ſedentes, per hanc noſtram ſententiam diffinitiuam quam de Theologorum & iuriſperitorum conſilio more maiorum in his ferimus ſcripti, Ieſu Chriſti Domini noſtri ac beatæ Mariæ Virginis nominibus piè inuocatis dicimus, declaramus, pronunciamus & diffinitiuè ſententiamus, vos omnes ſupra nominatos & veſtrum quemlibet fuiſſe & eſſe veros Apoſtatas, idololatras, ſanctiſſimæ fidei defectores, Dei omnipotentis abnegatores, & contemptores, ſodomiticos & nefandissimi criminis reos, adulteros, fornicatores, sortilegos, maleficos, sacrilegos, hæreticos, fascinarios, homicidas, infanticidas, dæmonúmque cultores, sathanicæ, diabolicæ atque infernalis disciplinæ & damnabilis ac reprobatæ fidei assertores, blasphemos, periuros, infames & omnium malorum facinorum & delictorum conuictos fuisse. Ideo vos omnes vestrúmque quemlibet tanquam sathanæ membra hac nostra sententia curiæ secularireemittimus realiter & in effectu condignis & legitimis pœnis eorum peculiari iudicio plectendos.

ANNOTATIONS VPON THE sentence giuen against the Witches.

Whether the Deuill may at any time visibly shew him selfe.

PEr vestram propriam confessionem, &c. & infra, &c. Cacodæmone in humana specie existente, &c. It appeareth by the inditement, that all both men and women do agree in this, that the Deuill doth appeare vnto them in a humane shape, but the meanes and occasions are diuers. One of the women deposed, that when she was, vpon the losse of a daughter of hers, who was a little before deceased, very melancholicke, and almost distracted, there appeared vnto her a man clothed all in blacke about the age of 25. or 30. yeares, saying: I see good woman that you are in great distresse and much grieued, yet if you will beleeue me, I will shew you the meanes how you shall bee very happy. Others depose, that in the time of the great dearth, when the poorer sort of people were constrained to eate wilde hearbes, and to dry and seeth the dunge of horses and asses: and when they had now no meanes left them to giue sustenance vnto their children, a certaine man appeared to them, all in blacke, saluting them, and speaking vnto them, and being aged as it is aboue mentioned, mentioned, who laboured to draw them vnto him; but the most of them do depose, that at the first they would not condescend vnto his purpose, but yeelded at the second or at the third time, after that they had a little accustomed themselues thereunto. From whence we are to learne how pleasing it is to God, and how profitable vnto our owne soules to succour and giue sustenance vnto the poore in their necessities and disconsolation: since that it is as much as to preserue or gaine them from the iawes of that great infernall Lyon, so that it is not without cause, that the workes of mercy shall bee particularly mentioned at the great day of Iudgement either to our saluation or to our condemnation. For as Saint Iames saith: whosoeuer shall turne a side a soule from the way of perdition, he shall saue his owne soule and shall by this meanes couer a multitude of his sinnes. Which the Apostles well knowing, did ordaine as the first policie in the Church, that there should be men deputed to helpe and minister vnto the poore: and foreseeing that in their time there would a great dearth happen, they gaue order for a generall collection thorow all the Cities and townes where any Christians were, thereby to succour and relieue the necessities of the poore: in which worke Saint Paul did diligently imploy himselfe as appeareth by his Epistles, and money was sent from all quarters, as from Corinth, Thessalonia, and other Townes, to Ierusalem and Iudea, where there was little to be had by reason of the warres, and the Garrisons which were set ouer them by the Romanes: so that as it was said of their preaching. In omnem terram exiuit sonus eorum, the same might be said of their almes, In omnem terram exierunt eleemosynæ eorum. By their example the first Christian Emperors and Princes, as Constantine and others gaue large and goodly temporall possessions vnto the Church, and built many Hospitals: in so much that Iulian the Apostate could not deny but that it was religiously and

Matth. 25.

Iacob. 5.

Act. 6.

Act. 2.

2. Cor. 16.

Psal. 18.

Niceph. hist. Eccles iast.

piously done, and there vpon gaue order that more Hospitals should be founded and plentifully endowed, because he scorned (as he said) to bee in this particular out-stripped by Christians. Those who with-hold the possessions of the Church, and others that haue a conuenient estate where with all to liue in a plentifull and decent manner, and do not releiue the poore, are guilty of this crime: for those necessitous persons, who by reason of their pouerty haue vowed and dedicated themselues vnto the Deuil, shall one day be presented before them, because they haue receiued no succour from them. On the other part, poore people should consider that Christ Iesus himselfe the vndoubted sonne of God and King of glory was content to become poore in this world, to teach vs, that for his sake we are to endure, what necessity so euer he shall be pleased to try vs with all: especially since this pouerty is an instrument of our saluation, and is daily perfecting vp a crowne of glory for vs, enriched with all the treasures and pretious stones which a man can expresse or imagine. Thus it happened vnto poore Lazarus who could not obtaine the crummes of bread which were cast to doggs vnder the table, although he laboured what he could to get the same: but putting his confidence in God, and bearing his pouerty with patience, he was after his death thought worthy to bee carried vnto God by ỹ Angels of Paradise. Christ Iesus himselfe had scarce a pillow whereon to rest his head; and at his birth he was glad to haue a cratch for his cradle, and was faine for his bed to vse straw and hay: to be briefe as Saint Paul saith, Cum diues esset egenus pro nobis factus est. Concerning the visible apparition of the Diuell, we are not to thinke so strangely of it, especially in these dayes of which the prediction goeth: soluetur sathanas. He also appeared visibly vnto Eue, and discourssed familiarly vnto her: touching his assumption of an humane shape, it cannot be denied but that he thus presented himselfe before Christ Iesus: yea hee tooke

Luc. 16.

Matth. 8.
Luk 2.
2. Cor. 8.

Apoc. 20.
Genes. 3.
Matth. 4.

stones

stones and shewed them vnto him saying: Dic vt lapides isti panes fiant. As for the appearing of good Angels, there is no difficulty to bee made hereof, considering that euery where, especially in the booke of Genesis, there is mention made how Angels appeared vnto men in humane shapes, and if the Diuels did represent serpents, froggs, and the like before Pharaoh and all the people, it is not to be wondred, if he shew him selfe vnto a man in a manly semblance: for thus he presented himselfe before Iob during the time of his temptation, as Saint Chrysostome doth well declare saying: That the messengers who came to bring him newes so suddenly one vpon the necke of another, were Diuels in the disguise of men: for otherwise it cannot wel be reconciled, how a man being in a house, which in an instant was vtterly ouerthrowne and demolished, could scape the ruine of this house; nor how these losses being acted so farre one from the other, (as the sheepe which were consumed by the fire that fell from heauen, the Camels that were carried away by the Chaldeans, the house which was rooted vp from the foundations) could bee so timed in the relations of them, that as soone as one had deliuered his newes, another should come at his heeles and tell what detriment Iob had receiued in other places. And since Satan had liberty to kill not onely the sheepe but the sheepheards, and not to ouerwhelme the house alone, but to wrap vp also those that were within it in those ruines, it is not probable, that he who is bloodily minded, a murtherer of men, and a rauening wolfe, that deuoureth whatsoeuer commeth in his way, would let any one of them escape to bring the newes, especially since it was in his power as well to deliuer the message, as to commit the riotts and murther, and since he had leaue to do vnto Iob whatsoeuer hee would, except one onely thing. Tantum (saith God) ne tangas animam eius. So that these newes tempting him most, it were no absurditie to say, that the Diuell Augustin. tra. 42. in Ioh. Diabolus serpente indutus locutus est mulieri.

Exod. 8.

Iob. 2.

Chrysost homil. 3. de patient. Iob.

was the bringer of them: neither doth the text in reciting these crosses make mention of any one that did escape, but onely that he who brought the newes said thus and thus: although as the Amalechite told Dauid that he had slaine Saul, although the truth was that hee had slaine himselfe: Irruit super gladium suum; so might this father of lyes mis-report one thing for another Therefore Saint Chrysostome doth not thinke it strange to say, that the Diuell appeared vnto Iob in the habite of a messenger or seruant, or to be of the age (as it is to bee presumed that such and so swift messengers were) of 25. or 30. yeeres. Saint Augustine doth not onely say that this might be, but also giueth the reason why it might be, and that is by the application of naturall causes, by which he shapeth vnto himselfe what body soeuer he desireth to assume, especially for the quantity and quality which are meere accidents. And this body the Diuell can mooue by a kind of locall motion: yet doth he not viuificate and operate in the same, as the reasonable soule doth in a mans body, for this body is not a liue body, but is onely clothed with externall accidents, and seemeth to haue life by the secret working of these Spirits, euen as the celestiall bodies are turned about by a locall motion which proceedeth from the Angels: and yet cannot such bodies be properly said to liue. This is Saint Augustines resolution: Diabolus optat sibi corpus aliquod tanquam vestem: and in this sort did hee oftentimes visibly appeare vnto Saint Anthony, as Saint Athanasius reporteth, and once to Saint Martin, as Seuerus Sulpitius writeth. To conclude neuer did any father of the Christian Church deny, but that this either might be, or hath bin really practised. The Marcionites and Manicheans, who thought strange that the Deuill should touch Christ Iesus, denied not that the Deuill did visibly and corporally appeare vnto him, but they rather held that Christ Iesus was not clothed with true flesh, but had a body of the same condition as those are, which

2. Reg. 1.

1. Reg. 28.

August. lib. 7. de Trinit. cap. 7. lib. 8. quest. 85.

Athanas. in Anton. Seuerus Sulpit. Epiphan. Tertul. de carne Christi.

which are formed by Spirits. Saint Paul teacheth vs that Satan transformeth himselfe into an Angell of light: the meaning is, that he sometime taketh a comely humane shape as good Angels vse to do, to familiarise himselfe vnto men: as we see in the Gospell that the good Angels, who appeared vnto those godly women that sought Christ Iesus in his sepulcher, were like yong men of 18. or 20. yeeres of age: so that this point is cleere and without controuersie both in the Scripture and amongst the Doctors of the Church. It would therefore appeare to be an ignorance and rashnesse too too grosse, to make doubt of the truth hereof, since there is such a cloud of Histories to giue confirmation of the same vnto vs, as for example: the History recited by Gregory Nazianzen of a Magician, vnto whom the Diuell spake familiarly, and the like. But that we may not exceede the iust limits of Annotations, it shall suffice that we obserue, that among other predictions of the end of the world Saint Hippolytus writeth, that a great number of Diuels shall appeare vnto men in humane shapes, and being thus disguised in borrowed formes, they shall assemble themselues in mountaines, dennes, and desert places; all which predictions do fitly agree vnto the depositions of Sorcerers. It will not be amisse to note the antiquity and authority of this glorious Martyr, for the better resolution of diuers passages in the fore-cited place, which by some might be offensiuely taken. He was more ancient then Origen, at the least he liued in the same time with him, for Saint Ierome telleth in his Homilies how he preached, and how Origen was present at his Sermons. It is then to be presumed that since he tooke vpon him to speake of things to come, which were not expresly comprehended in the Scriptures, he had either the gift of prophesie, wherewith all many were indued in the Primitiue Church, as Saint Paul teacheth, and which endured downe vnto the times of Saint Irenæus, or hee had learned these

2. Cor. 11.

Matth. 18.

Greg. Nazian. de Orat. Cypr.

Hippolyt. Ora. de Antichrist.

Hieron. lib. de scripto Eccles. iast.

1. Cor. 13. 14.

Ireneus.

things from the Disciples of the Apostles: as Saint Ireneus telleth how he writ many things, which he had learned from the Disciples of Iohn the Euangelist, and that it happened vnto him as it did vnto diuers others who liued neere vnto the Apostles time, who hauing faithfully treasured vp those things, which the most familiar Disciples of the Apostles did reueale vnto them, yet there were some that would adde thereunto certaine conceits of their owne braine, which they themselues did coniecture might be deliuered by the Apostles. But in this they notably abused themselues, as wee may plainely see in Ireneus, Papias, and others. The same happened vnto this holy man, in whom wee may obserue many tracts directly flowing from the Spirit of prophesie, and other vsefull instructions proceeding from his owne iudgement. Amongst this later sort of Reuelations from the Apostles, wee are to place that which he speaketh of Antichrist, whom hee saith shall be a Deuill taking vpon him the shape of a man. And this we may easily see to be his drift, for he speaketh not absolutely, but addeth that for his part he is of this opinion. Hanc opinor dilecti carnis suæ substantiam phantasticam assumet organi vice. It may therefore well bee, that all these things were reuealed vnto him by the Disciples of the Apostles saying, that at the end of the world the Prince of Deuils shall shew him selfe vnto men in a humane forme, and shall speake vnto them, as one man doth vnto another, that hee may with the more ease seduce them, and that there shall be a great number of other Diuels with him in the like formes. But the good Father doth from himselfe conclude that such a one Antichrist should be, and therefore addeth the word, opinor; And this is not onely probable but necessary, to excuse so great a personage, who further addeth that there shall be at the end of the world many wicked Spirits in the shape of men. Dæmones (inquit) congregabit humana specie. And this in effect the same which Sor-

Euseb. lib. Histo. Eccles. iast.

Hippolit. orat. de fine seculi.

cerers

cerers doe depose, that there are a great company of Diuels in their assemblies, and both men and women haue euery one a Diuell, to commit abomination with them. S. Augustine out of the obseruation which hee tooke from the Scripture that saith, that in the last three yeeres wherein Antichrist shall raigne, all power shall bee giuen vnto the Diuell, asketh this question, whether those fathers that are Christians shall then bee able to procure their children to bee baptised, and shall haue power to resist the incursions of the Diuels, who at that tyme will bee euery where busied. Tertullian saith, that Diuels haue no naturall impeachment to hinder them from entering into any place, whereunto they haue a fancy, because God hath not circumscribed or limited their nature to any place, and therefore (saith he) it is an vndenyable truth, that Diuels may not onely enter into mens houses, but euen into their very cabinets. Nemo (inquit) dubitauerit, domos quoque dæmonijs patere, nec tantum in aditis, sed in cubiculis homines imaginibus circumuenire. He addeth the reason, Vtique non clausa vis est, nec sacrariorum circumscribitur terminis, vaga & peruolatica, & interim libera est. From whence S. Augustine draweth this conclusion, that because the Diuels shall in those daies bee vnbound, they shall bee able to goe in and out where they please; yet are wee not to vnderstand this, as though they could be at one tyme in diuers places, as Iustin Martyr well declareth in his 40. question. Now wee are witnesses of the beginning hereof, by their frequent appearing vnto those whom they abuse, and in whose behalfe they effect some things which are in themselues meerely diabolicall: and as S. Paul saith of the schollers of Simon Magus, and others of the same condition, Qui & nunc operatur in filios diffidentiæ. To conclude, the Diuell may take vnto himselfe a body made of aire, and may shape it after what forme and figure hee will, and clap it about him as a garment, vnlesse hee be expresly forbidden by Augustin.lib.20. de ciuit.cap.8.

Tertul.lib.de anima c.de somn.

the diuine prouidence, as wee haue formerly vnfolded. And this is the resolution of S. Thomas, who next to Augustine doth thus affirme it, Potest formare corpus ex aëre cuiuscunque formæ & figuræ, vt illud assumens in eo visibiliter appareat. P.P.Q. 114. *art.*4.ad 2. Cardinal Caietan in his Comment vpon S. Thomas doth obserue, that when a wicked Spirit is so hardy, or else hath permission to shew himselfe visibly vnto a man, it is an argument, that such a one is either forsaken of God, and hath one foote in hell already, or that he is a man of an extraordinary holinesse, and God permitteth it to the confusion of Satan, as appeareth by Christ Iesus in the wildernesse.

THE SECOND ANNOTATION.

Whether the Diuell can make men renounce God and their Baptisme?

Deum rerum omnium creatorem & opificem vnum & trinum abnegastis &c. & infra. Et sacratissimo Baptismati &c. It is an ordinary practise of the Diuell to labour and perswade men to deny their God. Venit Diabolus (saith Christ Iesus) & tollit verbum de corde eorum, ne credentes salui fiant. He is the authour of al the heresies that euer were in the world, and amongst other inuentions he brought in the plurality of Gods: and to that end he stirred vp diuers agents of his, as Basilides, Carpocrates, and others. Hee it was that made the Arrians deny the sacred Trinity, and perswadeth Atheists that there is no God; all which hee practiseth, that hee may by vsurpation inuade the glory of God: for he stil holds him to his first pretension, when hee said in his heart, I will be like vnto the Highest. Therefore S. Augustine doth well obserue, that the greatest ambition which the Diuell hath, is that men should performe vn-

Luc.8.

Iren.lib.1. Tertull.lib.aduersus Valentin.

Esa.14.

to

to him those honours which they are accustomed to offer vnto God. Dæmones (inquit) diuinis honoribus gaudent. And this hee can by no meanes wrest and extort from Christians, vnlesse they do first deny the Trinity of persons, because the very beleefe of the blessed Trinity is of sufficiency enough to giue stop vnto all Idolatry: for by it we beleeue an vnitie in trinitie, and a trinitie in vnitie, which when wee once comprehend, it cannot be fastned vpon our beleef to worship or acknowledge any thing for God, except the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost: for our faith is limited to these three persons, and therefore excludeth all other things whatsoeuer, in regard that they are as much inferiour and subordinate vnto these three persons, as the creature is vnto the Creator. And therefore Basilides and others of his likenesse, must first haue lost all beleefe of the blessed Trinity, beefore they could giue admittance vnto this plurality of Gods. The like may be said of the Arrians and Sabellians, who denyed the three persons in vnity of essence and trinity of persons. Hence it ariseth, that neither the Diuell nor any other creature whatsoeuer can be worshipped by a Christian, vnlesse hee first abandon the faith which he hath of the blessed Trinity. So that it is no wonder if the Diuell doth first exact this of Christians in his Synagogue, for if hee should doe otherwise, hee could haue no colour to passe further. Whereupon wee may obserue, that there can scarce an heresie bee found, if a man search narrowly vnto the same, which hath retained the full and intire beleefe of the Trinity. This we see daily practized by the Sabellians of our time, who misconceiue of the distinction of persons, and haue opened a gap to the Trinitarians of this age, to mock and make a ieast of the blessed Trinity, as if it were a Chimera, or a conceite framed and feined in the braine of man. In like manner it followeth of necessity, that they must renounce their Baptisme also, which is administred in the name of the blessed Trinity Augustl.lib.10. de ciuitat.& lib.20.contra Faust. Manich. cap.22.

Sanctes doth treat of the blessed Trinity in his Atheismes. Hippol.orat.de Antichrist.

Trinity. S. Hippolytus a very ancient father and Martyr made no difficulty to grant, that the Diuell should at the end of the world visibly appeare to Christians, and should tell them, I will that thou deny thy Baptisme: for he is of opinion that Antichrist shall bee a Diuell, cloathed with the semblance of an humane body, although there be not many that adhere to this opinion, becausse S. Paul doth plainly affirme, that hee shall bee a true man, and shall at last be put to death by the power of Christ Iesus. Howsoeuer it be, he saith, positiuely that the Diuel shal propose these words vnto the Christians, Nego Creatorem cœli & terræ, nego adorationem à me Deo præstari solitam, nego Baptisma, tibi adhæresco, in te credo. Another reason why the Diuell would haue vs deny our Baptisme is, becausse by baptisme our soules are affianced and wedded to Christ Iesus, and by it wee reciue the ring of faith from him, and therefore by accepting of this, we doe expresly renounce the Diuell and all his workes. There are also certaine Exorcismes vsed against Satan in Baptisme, and therefore hee had rather that men should deny their Baptisme then any other Sacrament, nay, hee hath for a long time had his Baptisme also, euer imitating and aping God Almighty. Tertullian doth well witnesse this, Hic quoque (inquit) studium diaboli recognoscimus res Dei æmulantis cum & ipse baptismum in suis exercet: whence hee concludeth, that many in his time did by experience find it, that the Diuels did for this cause exceedingly haunt fountaines and pooles.

2. Thess. 2.

Tertull. lib. de Baptism.

THE

THE THIRD ANNOTATION.

Whether the wicked Spirit doth cause the names to bee changed which were giuen in Baptisme.

Mutato vero nomine, &c. aliudque commentitium, &c. There are two things to bee considered of in this point, for the better instruction of Parents: The first is to cause such names to bee giuen vnto their children, which may put them in minde to make head against the Diuell: the second is to prouide for them Godfathers and Godmothers of honest report and conuersation. For since the Diuell is not contented to make men renounce their Baptisme, but will haue them also to renounce their Godfathers and Godmothers, and are desirous to change the name which is giuen them in Baptisme, it is an euident signe that these things are very contrary vnto him. And this is certainely true, for if wee marke, the auncient fathers of the Iewes did giue vnto children their names vpon the day of their circumcision, as appeareth in the Gospell by the circumcision of Christ and S. Iohn Baptist: so that then they were wholy deliuered from the bondage of Satan, and were inrolled in the band, and were to fight vnder the banner of the true God, that they might hence foreward manfully combat against his aduersary the Diuell. As therefore souldiers when they are receiued vnder the banner and pay of an Emperour or Captaine, doe presently cause their names to bee registred, that they may be alwaies ready to march when they shall be commanded thereunto, so that in the Monarchie of Roome, Nomen dare, did signifie all that which hath bin now said: in like manner in this Sacrament, men doe giue names vnto children, that they may alwaies remember, what they haue promised, and vnder what banner banner they ought to march. And this was a custome amongst the very Gentiles, as S. Ierome hath well noted, who gouerned themselues morally well according to the law and light of nature, and did not impose idle or friuolous names vpon their children, but rather made choise of certaine names appellatiues, that betokened some vertue, vnto which they would appropriate and dedicate their children, and to admonish them to liue conformeable vnto the signification of their names. Thus wee finde many who haue beene called by these names Victor, Castus, Commodus, Pius, Probus, and amongst the Greekes Sophronius, Eusebius, Theophilus. But the fathers of the old Testament obserued another custome: for although many were called by names which signified good manners, as the word Micah, which signifieth humilitie, yet for the most part they added vnto their names the appellation of God, as in Helisæus, Samuel, Abdias, Zacharias, Esayas: (and this is a generall obseruation to bee noted in Angels, who are called by the names of Michael, Gabriel, Raphael) or at the least, they reteined the name of some holy man, that their childrē might imitate his vertues. And therefore those that were present at the circumcision of S. Iohn Baptist, did wonder why they would call him Iohn, since that there was neuer any man of that ancient and illustrious family who was so called. Which very wel declareth, that they did more religiously retaine the names of their good aunceſtors, then they did the heritage which was left vnto them. Heereupon S. Chrysostome did admonish the people not to vse any superfluous thing in Baptisme, but to looke well vnto this rule, to giue no names vnto their children but the names of Saints: and for the children, that they should retaine this name, and not suffer it to bee changed for any other vpon what occasion soeuer. They must doe as Ioseph did, who notwithstanding that Pharaoh had changed his name after the Ægyptian manner, would yet keepe him

Luc. 1. 2.

Hieron. prolog. in lib. 1. comment. in Micheam.

Chrysost. homil. 12. in 1. ad Corinth. Genes. 45.

him still vnto his first name as appeareth when he said, Ego sum Ioseph frater vester. And the Scripture it selfe doth euer call him by the name of Ioseph, and passeth ouer that prophane appellation which Pharaoh imposed vpon him: the same did Daniel and his three companions, for although Nabuchodonosor had called Daniel by the Chaldean name of Balthasar, and the other three by the names of Sidrac, Misac, and Abednago, yet when Daniel writeth his booke he euer saith, Ego Daniel: as also the three children being in the furnace cryed out, Benedicite Anania, Asaria, Misael Domino, neither did they acknowledge any other names, but these that were giuen vnto them in Iudea. S. Chrysostome giueth the reason heereof. These kinde of names, saith hee, were giuen to children, to put them in minde to imitate holy men whose names they carryed: for if they doe not imitate such and such a Saint, it is an assured truth (as hee said else where) that the prayers and merits of this Saint shall not bee auaileable vnto them for their saluation. From whence this conclusion may be drawne, that it is not lawfull to giue the names of sinfull men vnto children, although they haue beene famous in their generations, or haue been our progenitours and ancestours, because such impositions can serue for nothing, but for spurrs in their sides to prick them on to imitate their pride and wicked conuersation. How worthy then of reprehension are those fathers and mothers, who disdaine the name of Saints, and had rather giue their children the names of Infidels and Idolaters, who are now frying in flames of hell. And it is to be doubted, that if our Lord had specified the name of the rich man in the Gospell, they would rather haue taken it and called their children by the same, then haue giuen the name of Lazarus vnto them: but hee would not mention his name for many waighty reasons, and amongst the rest this may serue for one. It is therefore cleere that this is a meere trick and deuise of Satan, because hee abhorreth the

Daniel 3.

the name giuen in Baptisme, and taken (as the vsual custome of Christians is) from Saints, who vpon this occasion are the readier to aide vs, and to beare a particular fauour vnto vs. The Germanes are obserued to haue for a long tyme retained a barbarous fashion in two things especially: first in eating Bacon without seething it, and feeding vpon horse flesh: the second in giuing Scythian names vnto their children when they were baptised: yet at last vpon better instructions they redressed and mended these faults. It is therefore expedient to chuse honest people for Godfathers and Godmothers, which is an auncient custome in the Church, and practised euer since the time of Pope Thelesphorus, who was but 100. yeeres after the death and passion of Christ Iesus. For in regard that faith in Baptisme is not infused into the childe to operate, but onely to purifie the soule, it behoueth him to haue a Godfather to instruct him in the workes of faith, and to protest in his behalfe that he shall beleeue in Christ Iesus, and shall be one of his Church; and this is to be done although the childe be dumbe and deafe, as S. Ierome hath it. And further, it is to bring him to receiue the Sacrament of Confirmation, where the child, who hath bin baptised, commeth now to ratifie the promise made by his Godfather and Godmother for him at his baptisme, and by a consequent hee commeth to receiue new grace, that hee may bee strengthened to resist all the assaults and temptations of the Diuell. Hence it commeth that because in these dayes this Sacrament is so vniuersally neglected, the Diuell doth deceiue so many people, and maketh them with ease to renounce their baptisme, which they haue not yet confirmed: for hee doth no more but make them say, I am not tyed to that which my Godfathers and Godmothers haue promised for me. And therefore Saint Cyprian doth not wonder that Nouatus had abandoned his faith promised in baptisme, because, saith hee, hee did not ratifie the same by the Genebrard. in Chronolog.

Hierou. in Epist. ad Galat.

Euseb. lib. hist. Eccles. Cyprian. lib. Epi.

the Sacrament of confirmation. Hereupon ought the Pastors of the Church, and fathers and mothers also to be vigilant in this particular, lest it should happen both to the one and to the other as chanced vnto Hely and his children, vnto whom Anna, and little Samuel were directly opposite in their courses. And concerning alteration of names, Magdalene did affirme that all did change their names in the Synagogues, to the end that they might not be discouered by those who perchance might call them into question for the same.

THE FOVRTH ANNOTATION.

Whether the Diuell exacteth any homage or tribute.

Vestimentorum vestrorum fragmentum, &c. The Diuell hath no need of any thing we haue in this world, except the faith and grace of God which is infused into vs: yet because, as wee haue formerly alleaged out of S. Augustine, he is greatly delighted that men should doe him homage as to a God, hee willeth these poore hood-winkt wretches to present vnto him in signe of their acknowledgment some thing or other, as for example a peece of their garment. Hee exacteth this from these poore people, who haue nothing dearer vnto them amongst their earthly fortunes, then is their garment. And therfore God in the old Law doth strictly forbid, that any one should take a poore mans clothes for a pawne: and if he should take them, hee commandeth that they be rendred vnto him againe before Sunset, otherwise he threatneth to take vengeance on such a person. Thus wee see this accursed beast getteth them to offer vnto him the best of what they haue: for of all the goods of fortune, he desireth the garment: of all the gifts of nature, he craueth mens children; and of all the endowments of grace and spirituall blessings, he longeth Deuteron.

3. Reg. 18. eth after faith and Baptisme. He also doth somtimes desire the blood of men, as appeareth by the Priests of Baal, who when they would pray that fire might descend from heauen, they cut and slashe their flesh with Launces. But because most men did abhorre and hold this mangling of themselues in detestation, he did from thence forward content himselfe with mens goods, such as are their garments; and it may be he desireth by this kind of tribute to be acknowledged for a King. For it was the custome of the Iewes, when they would make or proclaime any one King, to put off their vpper garments, and to vse them for the seruice of this King, by putting them vnder his feet for him to tread on: as wee see in the history of Iehu, and in the relation of Christ Iesus his being receiued after a triumphant manner into Ierusalem vpon Palme-sunday. To these poore and blinded wretches we may fitly apply the Greeke prouerbe, which in Latine runneth thus: Veste circumfers ignem. For their garment is an externall signe, that they are for euer chained vnto that eternall fire. And that may well agree vnto them which is commonly said, Vestis virum facit. To the same purpose is that which Tertullian said, Diabolus tunc se regnare putat, quando sanctos à religione Dei deturbat.

3. Reg. 18.

4. Reg. 9. Matth. 21.

Erasm. in Chiliad. 1.

THE FIFTH ANNOTATION.

Whether the Diuell doth marke Witches.

Ignum seu stigma cuilibet vestrum, &c. This point alone is able to conuince those, who conceit that these things are meerely dreames. For experience doth demonstratiuely proue, that this kind of marke which they haue in their bodies is leprous, and deuoid of all sense; in so much (as we haue tried with a needle or a pinne) that if a man doth secretly and finely thrust Tertul lib. 2. aduersus Iudæos ca probat. natiuitat. Christi.

thrust vp a pinne into the same, they feele it no more then if they were direct lepers. But there must good heed be taken that they do not perceiue you, for if they doe, they wil make shew they feele the same when they doe not; but howsoeuer, you shall be sure that you shal draw no blood from those marked parts. And this manner of Satan is very ancient, although it hath receiued diuers changes according to the diuersity of times. Tertullian saith, that the Diuels custome is to marke those that bee his, in imitation of God, who doth inwardly marke vs in Baptisme, by a stampe or character, that doth adheare and cleaue vnto our soules, as both S. Paul and S. Iohn do witnesse: And againe, he doth externally marke vs by the Chrisome and signe of the Crosse. Thus doth Satan stampe in the soules of his seruants the marke of sinne, and not content with this, hee now addeth an outward badge, although it may be very possible, that the Diuell in former ages did not vse to marke his with the like stampes as now hee setteth vpon them. For (as Tertullian saith) it is the Diuels property to excogitate new deuices euery day: and it is cleere in Scripture, that the Diuell laboureth and aspireth as much as in him lieth, to set his badge vpon those that are his. Saint Iohn foreshewth, that at the end of the world there shall be a certaine kind of people, who shall beare vpon them the signe and character of the beast: which is litterally to bee vnderstood, as the text it selfe doth sufficiently declare; for hee saith, that by this marke wee shall haue accesse vnto those wicked men, which carry the same either in their front or in their hand. And although there were no other proofe but this, yet may it sufficiently euince vnto vs, that this and the like texts are thus litterally to bee expounded, which S. Hippolytus doth very well obserue and foreshew in these very words, where he speaketh of the Diuell that should take vpon him a phantasticall and imaginary body. Adducet (inquit) eos ad adorandum ipsum

Tertul. lib. de coron. mili. & de Baptismo.

Ephes. 1. 4.

Tertul. lib. de veland. Virg.

Apocal. 14.

Hippol. Orat. de consummat. mundi.

ac sibi obtemperantes sigillo suo notabit. So that a man would thinke that these poore mis-led Sorcerers and Witches had read this Oration of so glorious a Martyr, so aptly doe their depositions agree with his predictions.

THE SIXTH ANNOTATION.

Whether Magicians make a Circle, or no?

SVper circulo quod diuinitatis symbolum est, &c. The circular figure is the most remote and distant from the figure of the Crosse that can be. The Crosse must of necessity haue foure corners, wheras this hath none at all. The Diuell vseth those markes that are most different and opposite from the signe of our Redemption and his ruine: and if any of his doe vse the same (as Nazianzene writeth of Iulian the Apostate) hee presently leaueth them as soone as they haue made the signe of the Crosse. Whereunto many later Histories doe agree, which report that diuerse who came vnto the assemblies of Witches, when as they had once made the signe of the Crosse, they were left alone in the field. The same also happened (as it is more at large amplified in the inditement made against the Witches at Auignon) vnto a young man, who by his father was carried to the Synagogue where they were to meete: but when hee saw what abominable villanies they did, hee was much affrighted, and making the signe of the Crosse he spake these words, Iesu what is the meaning of this? Whereupon they all vanished away, and the young man remained all alone, and the next day hee came home to the village where he dwelt, which was distant from the Synagogue (as they call it) aboue three leagues, and accused his father for leading of him thither, and euer since those of that Village haue called him him in their language Masquillon, that is to say, a little Witch: and this boy remained in the prison belonging to the pallace of Auignon, at the time that the said execution was done, where he was detained for the discouery of the like practises. Epiphanius hæres. 30. doth report, that a young Magician did fly throw the aire, and iustled against a Christian woman who was washing her selfe in a bath, but shee had no sooner signed her selfe with the Crosse, but she repelled him farre enough from her: And therefore Satan doth cause all Crosses to bee defaced where he commeth, and teacheth his Disciples to vse other markes very different, and (if a man may say it) contrary vnto the signe of the Crosse, as is plaine in the characters of Magicians, which Agrippa a great fauourer of the sect of the Beast did vnhappily publish vnto the world. Wee may further call to mind (for the Diuell vnder one externall thing doth hatch and couer a thousand impieties) what Iulian the Apostate did conceiue hereof, who was a man exceedingly addicted vnto Diuels. He made this interpretation, that when Crosses were enclosed in a Circle, it signified that the religion of Christ Iesus was to bee depressed and abolished, and that not long after such a signe this should be put in execution. Wee also see that the roaring Lion when hee goeth about to deuoure his prey, doth with his taile expresse a circle, out of which the poore beast that is inuironed with the same, dareth not in any sort to stirre, such is the feare that hee conceiueth of his aduersarie. So that we may well apply this short sentence of Peter vnto the Diuell: Circuit quærens quem deuoret. Thus doe these poore and ignorant wretches stand in awe of the Diuell, fearing that since they haue sworne fealty vnto him, hee would breake their necks, if they should back slide from the same, as appeareth by their owne confessions: for they haue voluntarily slaued themselues vnto this cruell Tyrant, and therefore doe, as it is written, Qui facit peccatũ seruus est peccati, à quo

Nazianzen. Orat. 4. cont. Iulian. Apost.

Nazian. Orat. in Iulian Apostat.

1. Pet. 5.

11. Pet. 11.

Iohn 5.
2 Cor.3.

quis superatus est eius & seruus est: as on the contrary it is said vnto those that are religiously giuen, Si manseritis in sermone meo, verè liberi eritis, & vbi spiritus domini ibi libertas.

THE SEVENTH ANNOTATION.

Whether Witches doe vse their staffe and oyntment that they may be transported and carried in the ayre?

ADminiculo baculi, quodã nefandissimo vnguento, &c. That Sorcerers haue for a long time vsed staues, it appeareth by that which Aben Ezra hath written vpon Leuiticus: where it is prohibited to doe any act appertaining or belonging vnto this diabolicall art. And hee expresseth by what meanes this was practised, and saith, (as Sanctes Pagninus hath translated his words) Non facietis experimenta per figuras, per baculos, per opera, per motus, per dies & per horas. In which he seemeth to haue touched the principall points contained in this Sentence and Inditement against Sorcerers. For touching figures, we see they vse the Circle, and for workes, they commit wicked prankes vpon the dead, especially vpon young children, as wee will shew hereafter: for motion, their bodies are hurried from one place vnto another: for daies and houres, they obserue Thursday after midnight, at which time they are onely thus transported, as they all agree and affirme: And the reason hereof may be because the Diuell is desirous to haue the first fruits, and to be acknowledged in the first part of the weeke: For the Turkes celebrate the Friday, the Iewes the Saturday, as the Christians doe the Sunday: But the Diuell hath instituted his Sabbath before them all, that hee may haue the first adoration. This is that arrogancy of Satan, which is spoken of in the Reuelation, blessed are they that haue not knowne Aben Ezra in Leuit.

Leuit.19.
Sanct.Pag.in Thesaur.
Apoc.2.
Apoc.2.

nor nor tried Altitudinem Sathanæ. Last of all, touching the staffe which this Hebrew Doctor doth mention, we see it by experience, that the Sorcerers of our times vse staues, bestriding them, and putting them betwixt their legs. Neither was this opinion of so great and learned a Rabbi without the ground and witnesse of the holy Scripture, as Arias Montanus hath well obserued. For mention hereof is made in Osea, where it is said, Populus meus in ligno suo interrogauit, & baculus eius annunciauit ei. And it may bee that the Diuell did inuent this custome to counterfait Moyses, who vsed a staffe or a rod in the working of his great miracles: and mention is also made of Aarons rod that budded, and miraculously brought forth fruit. As for the oyntment wherewithall they annoint their staues and bodies, it is certaine that the Diuel the better to abuse these people, and to cloake and couer his owne malice doth make a compound of sundry idle and vneffectuall ingredients, as of hearbes, rootes, and the like: for the diuell knoweth full well, that this medley is not a whit powerfull to transport their bodies thorow the ayre from one place to another: and experience it selfe doth also sufficiently auow the same. So that he doth this to couer his malicious ends, and his aime is leuelled at no other marke then to commit murthers, and imbrue their hands in sheading of blood, as doth cleerely appeare by the depositions of all Sorcerers, who doe concurre and agree vpon this point, that at the first it sufficeth, if they can borrow oyntment of their neighbours, but when they are at the assembly, the Diuell doth declare vnto them that they are to haue oyntment of their owne, and that it cannot be effectuall and for their purpose, vnlesse they get the grease of young children that haue been strangled by them. It is then vndoubtedly true that all these hearbes and flowers are nothing else but Parerga, that is to say, things that serue for no vse but to set a glosse and colour vpon that, which is their principall and primary Osea 4. Arias Montan. in Os.

mary intention: as when a Painter draweth some lines or flourishes about the border of a perfect portrature. And these are the goodly workes which Aben Ezra doth in more obscure tearmes mention. Helias the Leuite reporteth, that Lilith, that is to say, a woman that wanders by night, vsed secretly to steale into the bedchambers of those that are newly deliuered, to kill young children, that were not aboue eight daies old. He also saith that the Therasins, whereof the Scripture maketh mention, could not be made without murther. Saint Ierome writeth that Witches cast abroad their charmes by touching of dead bodies. Attingunt (inquit) malefici corpora mortuorum: and Tertullian doth inlarge himselfe in tearmes more perspicuous for our purpose, saying: Pluribus notum est dæmoniorum quoque opera, & immaturas & atroces effici mortes, quas incursibus deputant. And a little before: Per vim (inquit) & iniuriam sæuus & immaturus finis extorsit: where he saith, that the Diuell doth bring to passe all these goodly deuises of his, by the meanes of those who haue vowed themselues vnto his seruice. And therefore S. Augustine wondreth with himselfe, and asketh a reason why God should permit that such massacres should bee committed vpon poore innocent children, yea and vpon those who haue receiued the character of his Baptisme: whereunto he answereth, that this proceedeth from the iudgement of God, which is hidden and remoued from our knowledge, and if there were no other thing but the tribute which wee owe vnto death thorow originall sinne, it would sufficiently conclude that God doth permit this according to all equity. Neither is this so new a thing vnto vs, since by diuine permission so many young children were slaine in Egypt by Pharaoh, and in Iudea by Herod, vnto which these two Tyrants were incited by the instigations of the Diuell. We are further to obserue what Apuleius writeth touching this argument (who was a part of his owne history) by Helias in Thisby.

See Tyran. Genes. 31. Hieron. lib. 1. comment. in Dan ad cap. 2. Tertul. lib. de anima, f. 379.

August. lib. 20. de Ciuit.

Apuleius lib. de Asino aureo. cap. 19.

seeing seeing a young woman that was a Witch playing of her prankes before him: whereupon he was accused to bee a Sorcerer, and because those that were contaminated with this diuelliſh art were then put to death without mercy, he was faine to make two Apologies, thereby to purge himselfe of these crimes before the gouernours of Africke. There are some that conceiue his history to bee meerely fabulous: but as himselfe reporteth of a great Orator, who when hee saw that Apuleius would by no meanes credit, that a man might bee carried thorow the ayre, or transformed into an Owle, tooke him vp short and told him; Friend, you talke like a young man that hath as yet made no experience of things, which are so full of secresie and importance. And he further reciteth that afterward he had experience of the truth of the same. But that which giueth reputation and authority vnto his history is, that S. Augustine doth oftentimes alleage him, and doth not brand him with any hard opinion of lightnesse or fiction. This Apuleius doth declare, that on a certaine euening by the assistance of a chambermaid, hee was brought about midnight to behold the mistrisse of the house, whereunto he was guided, annointing of her selfe with a certaine vnguent which she had within a pot, and when she had made an end of besmearing her selfe shee was changed into an Owle, and began to flie out of the house. He also doth relate what the ingredients of this vnguent were, to wit, certaine aromaticall hearbes, and some parts of dead bodies that had beene buried and were digged vp againe for that purpose: that all was boyled together in a great brason Caldron in Well water together with the milke of a Cow, the hony of mountaines, and other stuffe of the like nature, vsing certaine magicall words ouer the whole compound. And this we found also verified by the Witches that were condemned by the aboue cited sentence, who confessed that they did boyle dead bodies, whom they came and digged vp by night, and with the greaſe of their kidneies and certaine other hearbes they made a certaine oyntment which they did vſe. From hence it did ariſe that the Romãs of Apuleius his time did puniſh witches with death, becauſe they did violate the graues of the dead, to pilfer from thence the bodies of thoſe which lay there interred, which is not onely repugnant to the law of nature, but vnto the law of nations, called, Ius gentium. For if thoſe who forced open Sepulchres, that they might from thence ſteale the iewels and rings which were buried with the dead corps, were without mercy put to death as ſacrilegious perſons; how much more ſeuerely ought they to bee puniſhed, who ſteale away the bodies themſelues? Which Apuleius alſo witneſſeth, relating that it was then the cuſtome to hier certaine men to watch dead courſes, for feare leaſt the Witches ſhould come to gnaw and diſmember them: adding that himſelfe one euening being ſet to watch a Courſe that lay in a certaine Hall, there came a Weeſell to gnaw the ſaid Courſe, but this being diſcouered by him, the Weeſell ran out at the hole thorow which it entred. So that it is authentically true, that the Diuell hath anciently practiſed this villany, for ſeeing that himſelfe cãnot diſcharge his ful malice vpon mã, whom he capitally hateth, he leaueth it to be executed by thoſe that are his members: and it giueth ſome ſatisfaction vnto his ſanguinary nature, that he may wreake his anger vpon the dead. And therefore hee is often called in the Reuelation the red Dragon, to expreſſe how furious, outragious, and blood-thirſty he is, being as Chriſt Ieſus himſelfe ſaith, a murtherer from the beginning. And as God is called by the Grecians φιλάνθρωπος, that is to ſay, a louer of men; ſo by a contrary the Diuell is ſtiled μισάνθρωπος, that is to ſay, a man-hater.

Apul. Apolog. 1. & 2.

Auguſt. de Ciuit. Dei.

THE

THE EIGHTH ANNOTATION.

Whether Witches goe in the ayre?

PEr aëra ad locum constitutum, &c. Some do doubt whether the Deuill can make a humane body to goe in the ayre, or no. But this doubtfulnesse of theirs doth argue a defect and maime in their knowledge, not vnderstanding aright the nature and property of Spirits: nay they are conuinced to be ignorant of the Scriptures themselues, for a Spirit is of a more excellent and noble composition then any body whatsoeuer, and therefore he hath a power in his nature to mooue according as himselfe will. It is certaine that man is sheltred particularly vnder the safegarde and protection of Gods prouidence, yet doth not this hinder, but that God may sometimes suffer this to be done, as it is cleere by Christ Iesus himselfe, who was carried by the Deuill vnto a desert, from thence vnto a pinacle of the Temple, and thence vnto a mountaine. If the Deuill did this to Christ, how much more shall hee be able to effect the same, whē miserable men do quitte the seruice of God, to adore the Deuill? The Deuill also in the wildernesse of Ægypt did bring before Pharaoh and the people many great Serpents: for S. Augustine and after him S. Thomas do agree and conclude, that they were true Serpents. We are also to call vnto remembrance that, which we haue before alleaged out of Apuleius, and which he saith that hee beheld with his owne eyes: and wee are to obserue the points which we haue handled in the sixth Chapter of this booke. For why should any man conceite strangely of this point, since Simon Magus himselfe was carried in the ayre by Diuels? and least any might apprehend that this was meerely fancied and not really done, the History saith that he brake his necke, being forsaken (by the commandement mandement of God and his good Angels) by the Deuils who were about him for his supportation. Semblable hereunto is that which Saint Hippolytus reporteth, saying: that Antichrist shall cause himselfe to bee carried in the ayre by Deuils: whereof there is some probability in the Scriptures. And to descend vnto more moderne Authors, certaine Chroniclers and Historiographers do report, that Berengarius (who was a great Sorcerer) was at Rome at night, and yet the very same night he was found reading of a Lecture at Tours in Touraine: whereunto may bee added that which wee haue noted in the sixth Annotationof the yong man, who leaped in the aire after a woman.

Clemens lib. recogn. Hipp. orat. de Antichrist. Thessalon. Polid. lib. 9. Hist. Aug. Guli. naugiac.

THE NINTH ANNOTATION.

Whether Witches doe eate, drinke, and dance in their Synagogue.

Gal. 5.

Exod. 34.

Hierony. lib. 3. commen. in Epist. ad Ephes. ca. 4.

Altationes, compotationes, comessationes, &c. The workes of Satan or of the flesh are as Saint Paul saith, gluttony, drunkennes, and whoredome, and this was the people of Israels case when they danced before their calfe, as our Sorcerers do before their Deuill: for it is said of them; comederunt & biberunt, & surrexerunt ludere, id est, fornicari, euen so the Deuill doth make his seruants leape and dance, and afterward he causeth them to banquet and make merry, and at last as we shall see, to commit fornication and all vncleannesse, And this is Saint Ieroms obseruation, when hee writeth these very words: Nam & barbara quædam nomina eorum esse dicuntur, vt sæpe confessi sunt hi, quos verè vulgus maleficos vocat: & incantationes, & preces, & colores varij & diuersa vel metallorum vel ciborum, ad quæ inuocati assistere dæmones, & infelices animas capere memorantur. Now whereas S. Ierome saith that the Deuils do agree

vpon

vpon a set place to receiue certaine victuals which are promised vnto them, this is to be vnderstood of the dead bodies, which the Witches do dedicate and set before them in a place that shall be designed for that purpose: where they cause them to be sodd and afterward eaten by the whole assembly after an abhominable kind of Anthropophagy: and in all likelie-hood this is done to shake the Article of the Resurrection. For as Pliny doth atheistically argue, how can those bodies rise againe in their owne substance, although God put his finger thereunto, when as now the flesh is eaten by others, and is changed into the substance of those who haue deuoured the same. Besides, by this barbarous and brutish manner of feeding, he maketh them to transgresse the very law of nature, and so indeede maketh them like vnto beasts, so that when Saint Ierome writeth that the Deuils are very seruiceable vnto those, that will promise vnto him such kind of victuals, it is not to bee conceiued that they do eate any thing, for they are Spirits, but ỳ they induce & perswade others to eate of these diabolicall viands, because they know the impiety and wickednes of such an execrable diet: for it is directly against the first commandement which God gaue vnto man after the flood, to re-establish the law of nature, which by Giants and other wicked people had been much violated and prophaned. I giue you leaue (saith he) to eate of all liuing creatures vpon the face of the earth, but I forbid you to spill the blood of man; that is, to eate and deuoure mans flesh. For in this passage of Genesis, as the text it selfe declareth it, there was no question or mention of murther, but onely touching the diuersity and vse of meates. So that by this text, Anthropophagy, or eating of mans flesh is expresly forbidden, and therefore the Deuill hath brought vp the practise thereof amongst his people, because it is a thing against humanity and reason: and this is the cause why hee gathereth them together, and inciteth them

Genes. 9.

them to those abominable banquets and meriments. Touching other victuals and refreshments which hee causeth them to take, although in the eating of them they please and giue contentment vnto their tast, yet when these poore wretches returne vnto their owne homes, they are then as much or more hungry then they were before. Conformable hereunto is the obseruation of Saint Thomas, who saith, that although all naturall bodies in respect of motion and quality are vnder the command of Spirits, yet can they not change the substances of them, of which God is the sole creator, but are onely powerfull to make an alteration or change in the accidents. And therefore the Deuill cannot make a stone bread: so that we may hence conclude, that this is out of the compasse of his naturall power, and that such meates are so onely in apparancy, being clothed with certaine qualities of bread, wine, or flesh: & these qualities are but of short continuance, for as Saint Thomas saith, the workes of the Deuill cannot be permanent, because they haue not the prop and ground worke of true substances. So that this was it, that shewed Christ Iesus to be the true God, because he had not onely caused fiue thousand to eate, but had also fed and filled them for a long time after. Thus the bread that was baked in the ashes and eaten by Helias, was framed by the fingar of God, because in the strength thereof he walked 40. dayes and forty nights. The same may be said of the Manna in the desert, which did fill and satisfie those that did eate of the same, as it is said, Pane cæli saturauit eos. Therefore it is a property peculiar vnto God alone to giue corporall foode and sustenance vnto men, either by the meanes of his creatures, or by some other extraordinary power. Iacta (said Dauid) super Dominum curam tuam, & ipse te enutriet; & aperis tu (domine) manum tuam, & imples omne animal benedictione. This being altogether hid from these miserable creatures, they goe a whoring after Satan

1. Reg. 19.

Psal. 54.

tan in the time of their necessitie, and imagine that it is in his power to keepe them from hunger or from any other want, wherewith they are pinched, by giuing vnto them victuals or mony according to his promise: from which we may also draw this conclusion with S. Thomas: that when these kind of people are changed into cats, wolfes, or any of the like resemblances, (as Witches haue deposed, and Saint Augustine doth largely make mention of the same, as of a truth in his time beyond exception, and as Apuleius Vincentius in his history, and Ephordiensis do all witnesse) we are not to conceiue that the true substance of the man or of the woman is changed into the nature of these beasts, (for this doth surmount the power of the Deuill) but that the Deuill doth couer and cloth their bodies with a cloud of ayre, hauing the resemblance of such a beast. For as he sometimes seemeth to bee a perfect man, because he hath taken such an airy forme vpon him, so doth it also appeare vnto those that behold these Witches, and vnto themselues also that they are perfect beasts, although in truth it bee otherwise: and thereupon S. Thomas doth thus conclude. Illæ transmutationes corporalium rerum quæ non possunt virtute naturæ fieri, nullo modo operatione dæmonum secundum rei veritatem perfici possunt. sicut quod corpus humanum mutetur in corpus bestiale, &c. And afterward hee commeth to describe the meanes how this is done, in apparancy and shew. Cum dæmon possit formare corpus ex aëre, cuiuscunque formæ & figuræ vt illud assumens in eo visibiliter appareat: potest eadem ratione circumponere cuiuscunq; rei corporeæ quamcunque formam corpoream, vt in eius specie videatur. And this is farther prooued by the sentence taken out of S. Augustine in the 18. booke of the Citty of God. It may also very well be, that the Deuill may imprint into their fantasies such kind of shapes, and then they will apprehend them as though they were true and reall formes: the experience whereof we are taught

P.p.q.114. art.4.

taught by those that are frantick, who thinke they see Toads, Serpents and Dragons flying and crawling vp and downe their chambers where they lye, neither can any one perswade the contrary vnto them, because these shapes are as properly inherent in the common sense as in the phantasie it selfe, whether they are sent by transmission from the eies. Neither ought wee to thinke that Nabuchodonosor was substantially changed into a beast, although that this happened vnto him by the power and finger of God, but that hee was rather depriued for a tyme of his vnderstanding, thereby to chastise and humble him for his transgressions, and was afterward by speciall grace re-setled in his former senses. And the text affirmeth not that his substance was changed, but his heart, which himselfe doth afterward interpret, when he saith, Sensus meus reuersus est ad me. Whereupon S. Ierome saith, Quando dicit sensum sibi fuisse redditum, ostendit se formam non amisisse, sed mentem. As therefore a man whose senses are taken from him, doth not care if he cohabite with beasts, and feed amongst them, the same was Nabuchodonosors case vntill God had compassion of him, at what time hee was reclaimed and reduced vnto himselfe, and craued pardon of Almighty God. Touching Lots wife, thee was indeed changed into a pillar of salt, but it was either after her death, or vpon the very instant of the same, and her body in succession of tyme was turned into the mould from whence it was taken. Thus we see the Diuels disabilitie in changing the substance or shape of man, although he may counterfaite and couer the same with his shewes and apparances. Of this nature shall the myracles of Antichrist be, which shall be lying signes, framed to all kinds of deception by the industriousnes and arte of Diuels. Thus when S. Augustine reciteth the history of the Hostesses of Italy, who vsed to giue a certaine kinde of broth vnto their guestes of their owne making, which when they had once eaten, they were

Hieron. in Dan.

pre-

presently changed into Horses, Mules, or Asses, and were made to carry all burthens and loads which they pleased to put vpon them, till they came to a certaine place; wee must not thinke that these men lost the vse of their naturall reason, because by vertue thereof they saw and conceiued themselues to bee beasts according to their bodily shapes, and being come vnto the said place they returned vnto their former estate. Saint Augustine saith not that these things are fables, but that they may either bee so indeed, or else may seeme to bee what they are not, by charmes and collusions. And concludeth, that when it is so indeed, wee are not to thinke that the substance of the man is turned into the substance of the beast, but that it is onely thus in externall appearance by the working of the Diuell, Nec sane (inquit) Dæmones naturas creant, si aliquid tale faciunt de qualibus factis ista vertitur quæstio: sed specie tenus, quæ à vero Deo sunt creata commutant, vt videantur esse quod non sunt. And speaking of Apuleius, whom he reporteth to haue beene turned into an asse, hee saith, that either Apuleius did counterfaite and deuise such a thing, or did set it downe in writing as it really happened. Iste (inquit) aut iudicauit aut finxit. And for the burthens which he carryed, it was (said hee) the Diuell who did beare and vndergoe them for him.

THE TENTH ANNOTATION.

Whether witches worship the Diuel in the forme of a Goate?

Oluistis & adorastis in formam & speciem fœdissimi & nigerrimi hirci, &c. That the Diuell is ambitious of nothing more then to bee worshipped as a God, wee haue formerly at large declared, and concerning the visible forme in which hee doth appeare, wee haue likewise shewed out of S. Augustine, that it is not permitted permitted vnto him to inueſt himſelfe with what forme he will or naturally can take vpon him, but hee is limited vnto ſuch ſemblances as God is pleaſed to permit vnto him: and therefore ſaith S. Auguſtine, there is no queſtion but he would haue taken a goodlier and more ſpecious reſemblance vpon him, then the forme of the Serpent was, if God would haue ſuffered him ſo to doe: but God would not haue it ſo. When hee comes to bee adored, he appeareth not in a humane forme, but as the Witches themſelues haue depoſed, as ſoone as they are agreed of the time that he is to mount vpon the altar (which is ſome rock or great ſtone in the fields) there to bee worſhipped by them, hee inſtantly turneth himſelfe into the forme of a great black Goate, although in all other occaſions hee vſeth to appeare in the ſhape of a man: for God will not ſuffer him thus to abuſe the nature of man, becauſe Chriſt Ieſus his onely Sonne is a true man, and worſhipped as God and man both together: for the Hypoſtaticall vnion of both natures is ſo indiſſoluble and ſo faſt linked one to the other, that there is but one eſſence or perſon that ariſeth from both natures. Againe, if the Diuell had preſented himſelfe in an humane forme, our firſt parents might haue conceited him to haue beene the Meſſias, who was already reuealed and fore promiſed to Adam, as Saint Paul expreſſeth it. Hence it is that God will not ſuffer him to aſſume the forme of the Sonne of God when hee goeth about to bee worſhipped, but onely of a beaſt, or of ſome ſuch monſtrous and il-fauoured ſhapes, which are one halfe of them beaſts, and the other addition of a different forme vnto it, as are Centaures and other ſuch prodigious reſemblances, which were indeed nothing elſe but Diuels: and many times they appeare, as Pliny ſaith of ſea monſters, with a long taile of a Serpent, by which exorbitant parts and ſo vnuſuall in the courſe of nature, they are knowen to be true monſters. And this is S Iohns meaning when in the Reuelation hee doth ſo often Geneſ. 2.

Epheſ. 5.

Apoc. 3.

often ingeminate, that men shall come and worship the Beast: by which a man may probably gesse that hee meaneth Satan changing himselfe into a beast: for wee need not to make inquiry after a mysticall sense of such places as these, when literally a man may interpret the Scripture. Touching the forme of the beast, which hee ordenarily assumeth vnto himselfe, it is a thing not to bee controuerted that hee presenteth himselfe in the forme of a Goate. And heere we are to note, that there are three or foure passages in the Scripture which haue a great resemblance and affinity with this point. The first is in the 17. of Leuiticus, where it is said, Nequaquam vltra immolabunt hostias suas dæmonibus. Leuit.17. The second and third passage is in the 30. and 34 of Esay. Pilosi saltabunt ibi. Esa.13.34. In which places the Hebrew word Sehir signifieth three seuerall things; first a Goate, secondly something that is hairie, as Esau was for his hairynesse surnamed Sehir, and the mountaines vnto which hee vsed to resort were called, Montes Sehir: thirdly, it signifieth the Diuell, and thus doth S. Ierome render the word in the 17. chap. of Leuiticus: the like also doth the author of the Chaldean translation. Versio. Cada. Touching the two first significations, it appeareth that the one hath a dependance vpon the other, because a Goat is the most shaggie beast of al other creatures: but why the Diuel should be called by the name of Goate, or of a beast that is shaggie, Rabby Quimbi, the best interpreter of Hebrew words amongst the Iewes, rendereth this reason, because hee appeareth in the shaggie forme of a Goate to those that put their confidence in him. This is the obseruation of S. Thomas 12. q. 102. *art.*3. Rabbi Quimhi in lib. radit. And Doctor Lyranus vpon the 12. of Exod. and 1. Reg. 30. Hence it is that the Chaldean interpreter and S. Ierome haue by this word Goate, meant and interpreted the Diuell, and thus is hee called by the Witches themselues, as is euinced out of their owne depositions. So that it is no new thing that the Diuell doth shew himselfe in the forme of a Goate to those that haue slaued themselues vnto him, and doe him homage and seruice. Sanctes Pagninus following the same signification vpon the place of the 30. and 34. of Esay, where the text saith, that the Sebirins shall leape and daunce in the wildernesse, doth thus interpret the same. The Diuels shall daunce there. And this also is verified by the witnesse of Witches, who affirme that this goatish Diuell doth leape and daunce amongst them in their night assemblies in the deserts. Moreouer, it is very remarkable that the Septuagint Interpreters haue rendered this Hebrew word of the 17. of Leuit. by the Greeke word, ματαίους, that is to say, fooles: and the Italians borrowing that word from the Grecians, doe call those that are ridiculous and impertinent in their behauiour, Matos, that is to say, fooles. And the truth is, men doe now in the countrey of Prouince call such Spirits fooles, or mad-capps, because they play many fond prankes, as laughing, leaping, dauncing and whisteling: and in this respect haue the Septuagints trãslated the word ματαίους. To this purpose is the saying of S. Thomas, who affirmeth that the Diuels doe shew many light and careless behauiours, as laughing, leaping & whisteling which are but veniall sinnes in men, but the Diuels vse these kind of gestures thereby to familiarize themselues with men, and in conclusion to intice them into his nets by these semblances of merriment. Thus S. Athanasius maketh mention of Diuels that sung songs. In prophane histories wee find that the two most auncient Oracles, the one called Hammonium, which commeth from the word Ham, or as wee pronounce it Cham: the other called Dodonæum, which commeth from the word Dodonum, of whom mention is made in the tenth of Genesis amongst the grand-children of Noah, the first of them was in the forme of a Goate, and the second in the shape of a Ramme with great hornes. So that it is no nouelty to affirme that the Diuell doth cause

Esa. 13. 34. S. Pagnin.

Septuagint. interpret.

S. Thom. 1. 2. q. 86. art. 4. ad 3.

Athanas. in vita Anthon.

Genes. 10.

cause himselfe to be adored in the forme of a Goat. And to descend to our more moderne relations, Alphonsus de Castro doth report that in the countrey of Biscay they haue found it to bee certaine, that diuers women and some men haue assembled themselues together in a Mountaine, where a black Goate did visibly present himselfe before them, whom they all worshipped. In this late history of the Magician Gaufridy, Belzebub repining at the too abundant mercy of God, doth reprehend the Magicians for their adoring of a Goate.

Alphons. de Castro. aduers. Hæres. lib. 1. cap. 15.

THE ELEVENTH ANNOTATION.

Whether there be Incubi and Succubi?

VOs viri cum succubis, vos mulieres cum incubis fornicati estis, &c. From hence wee may learne the reason why the Diuel appeareth in the forme of a Goate, because hee is the most ranke and the most lustfull of all other creatures whatsoeuer, neither doth hee euer obserue set times for his hot luxurious nature, as all other beasts vse to doe. The Diuell doth assemble his people in a place designed for such a purpose, and there maketh them to commit vncleanesse, and himselfe is the first and forwardest to practise the like abominations, and appeareth vnto women in the shape of a man, and vnto men in the fashion of a woman, by which meanes hee induceth them to defile themselues with those diuelish and execrable copulations with him; not that hee receiueth any delectation or pleasure from the same, but as S. Thomas saith, (giuing the reason why S. Augustine did affirme, that the Diuell tooke more delight in Idolatry and fornication, then in any other sinne whatsoeuer) hee therefore is delighted with them both, because by the first he vsurpeth vpon the glory of God, which is his first and principall intention: and secondly August. in Leuit.

S. Thom. 1. 2. q. 73. art. ad. 2.

condly, he keepeth both men and women in his clawes with more security, by fastning them vnto him through the sinne of lust; for by reason of the strong and vehement delectation which it carryeth with it, hee maketh them to sticke close vnto him, so that when they fall into the same, they will bee hardly able to recouer themselues againe. Hee also maketh them to loose the vse of their reason, so that they haue no more command and soueraignty of themselues, then the very beastes haue: especially when they are once enured to these sensuall delights which are so vehement, that Tertullian was of opinion, that as the body of an Infant is ingendred from a portion of corporeall substance, so is the soule also begotten from a part of his soule that doth beget: for (saith he) wee see that in the act of generation, the soule, as if it were diuided into portions, hath not the power to produce any act of reason. And heereupon it groweth, that the Diuell is so much taken with this filthy and vncleane sensuality, as appeareth by the reasons which we haue alleaged. Neither are we to question whether such a thing may bee practised by the helpe and working of the Diuell, since it is out of all controuersy, that he doth and may take (when he is not in the act of adoration) any externall forme, that he pleaseth to inuest himselfe withall, especially amongst those who haue abandoned themselues vnto him, and haue done him fealty and homage. And although there were no other proofe then that two of the most famous Doctors, the one amongst the fathers, the other amongst the Schoolemen, that is to say, S. Augustine and S. Thomas doe concurre and agree vpon this point, and doe expressly auerre, that it were impudence to deny the cleerenesse of this truth, yet is this confirmation enough to create a beleefe in men, that it is a certaine and vndoubted verity. And heereupon it is, why the Turkes do not thinke it strange which we haue amõgst the Articles of our Creed, that a Virgin should bee con-

Tertull. de anima.

August. lib. 15. de ciuit. cap. 88 Thom. p. q. 51. art. 3. ad 6.

conceiued by the holy Ghost, because they thinke that this may bee easily done vnto all Virgins, since they are assured by experience, that bee there Virgins neuer so closely restrained and kept from the company of men, yet are they many times found to bee with childe: and this is the cunning and practise of the Diuell, Qui surrepit ac demum infundit semen. Moreouer this is shadowed out vnto vs by the auncient Histories and Poets, who doe frequently mention, that their Gods came downe from heauen to commit folly and vncleanneſſe with their faireſt women, and had oftentimes yſſue by them. The like doth Apuleius report of his times: and theſe Gods (as they tearmed them) are nothing elſe but Diuels, as it is written, Omnes Dij gentium Dæmonia. To conclude this and the precedent Annotation, I ſhould thus remember theſe kinde of people, that God doth permit the Diuell to appeare vnto them in the forme of a Goate, thereby to put them in minde, that they are to aſſure themſelues they ſhall bee placed amongſt the Goates in that great and laſt day of iudgement, becauſe they haue leagued and combined themſelues with Goates in this world, and haue committed execrable idolatry vnto them, as if they had beene Gods. Wee will onely adde, that the greateſt part of the auncient Greeke and Latine Poets are cleare of opinion, that Diuels doe deſire and practiſe to haue carnall knowledge with women: yea S. Ierome himſelfe vſeth theſe words. Dæmones quibuſdam amoribus ſeruiunt, &c. And Iuſtin Martyr ſaith that this is not peculiar to women alone, but is common vnto men alſo, whereby he doth plainly expreſſe himſelfe, that Deuils doe vary ſexes: which is alſo the opinion of S. Auguſtine. For although they, that did labour to interpret and accommodate the ſixth chapter of Geneſis to this particular, are worthily reproued by him, becauſe the precedent and following paſſages doe declare, that the mention which is there made, is of men, and not of Angels: as S. Augustine well sheweth, yet doth hee not disapproue the opinion of the ancients touching this carnall commixtion, but on the contrary hee affirmeth, that it is an impudency to deny it. Iustin the Historian in his 11. Booke relateth, that Olympias mother vnto Alexander the great, did freely confesse vnto her husband, that Alexander was no sonne of his, but was begotten by a serpent, with whom she had carnall knowledge. And heereupon did her husband repudiate her as an adultresse, and euer after would Alexander stile himselfe the sonne of the Gods, and not of Philip. Hee also reporteth in his 15. Booke, that Loadice mother vnto Seleucus did affirme, that shee kept company with the God Apollo in her sleepe, who (as shee thought in her dreame) gaue a ring vnto her, and when she awoke in the morning, shee found the ring in her bed. But such kinde of women, are full of impiety, and God hath vterly abandoned and giuen them vp vnto themselues.

FINIS.

Ad Authorem Epigramma.

ANgelicum nomen claris virtutibus æquas
Conueniunt rebus nomina sæpe suis,
Angelus vt Domini magna virtute Draconum
Turbam deuicit, corpora fœda necans.
Sortilegos tua sic vincit doctrina Michaël,
Quæ clarè illorum dogmata falsa probat.
Angelicæ laudi tua credito gloria par est,
Dæmonis astutiam fortis vterque fugat.

BAPTISTA BADERVS Parisiensis in eodem Parisiensi Senatu Patronus.

AN ALPHABETICALL TABLE OF THE principall matters contained in the first part.

A

Abominations of the synagogues of magicians. 302.305
Abraham sacrificeth his sonne. 107
Absolution required in him that confesseth himselfe. 127
Abyron & Dathan swallowed vp by the earth for their impieties. 213
Accusation of Sorcerers. 8
The acts of Adoration of Verrine. 3.143.185
An Act of humility in Magdalene. 149
Adoration of Verrine. 3.143.185
Adiuration of Verrine. 103.123
Adam driuen out of Paradise for his disobedience. 133
Adams Repentance. 115
Adam, and what he did. 44.217.246.106
Adoration of the Eucharist. 26.33
Adoration of the Goat in the synagogue. 302
Adoration of God by a Diuell in a miracle. 89
An aduertizement vnto Monkes and Priests. 133.144
An aduice to write that which the Diuell deliuered. 30
An aduice giuen to Priests. 104. and vnto religious persons. 172. and generally vnto all men. 192.238.274
The Age wherein we are to doe penance. 237
Agnus dei is a lambe for true Christians, but a roaring Lion for Diuels. 24
Against such as addresse themselues to Witches. 253
Allusion made by the Diuell touching the constraint which he suffereth in exorcismes. 204

Saint Andrewes day appointed by the Diuels to carry away Magdalene. 1.2
Angels of heauen and their force. 36
Angels which are our guardians ought to bee worshipped, and why? 199
Angels and Saints are our aduocates. 147
Angels are not able to sing at full the praises of God. 136
Angels that were goodly creatures condemned to hell for their pride. 181
Angels are waiters at the table of God. 184
Aesxers of the diuels which were in the body of Louyse. 2.3
Antichrist borne. 260.268.269.299.305
Antichrist will cause himselfe to bee adored, and the Kings of the earth shall serue him. 267
Apostrophe vnto S. Magdalene. 298
Apostrophe to the laity. 145.274
Arriuall of Lewes to S. Baume. 287
Arriuall of S. Magdalenes mother to S. Baume. 13
Arriuall of Father Michaëlis to S. Baume. 283
Arriuall of Magdalene to S. Baume. 1
The Attributes giuen to diuine persons. 46
Audience giuen to Magdalene. 290
An Auie said for our enemies waighes more then a Pater for our friends. 257
Authority of the Church. 171
Authority of Priests. 190

B

Balberith is he that tempteth mẽ to blaspheme God. 252
S. Baume ought to be reuerenced. 226.281
Baptisme not regarded. 123
Barbarous nations liue in darkenesse 123
The Bee ought to be proposed to our imitation. 229
Beatitude not essentiall but accidentall may bee augmented. 96
Belzebub tosseth Magdalene from one side to another 21
Belzebub belloweth like a bull, and casteth Magdalenes shooes at Louyse head. 6

Belzebub maketh an outcry when he heard these words Ecce Ancilla domini. 24
Belzebub sweareth that Louyse is possessed. 294
Belzebub in speaking to another Diuell doth imitate the Exorcist. 66
Belzebub humbled and troden vnder feete. 86.124
Belzebub complaineth to God of his too great mercy. 62.63.73.74
S. Bernard a great familiar of the Virgins. 194
Beauty of Paradise. 38.281
Beades without workes are of none auaile. 80.81
Birds of the aire blesse God. 250
Blindnesse of men. 188
He is Blind who neither hath vnderstanding nor will to do the good. 141
Booke of life and death in Gods keeping. 271
The Booke of the Crucifix. 145.275
The Booke with two leaues. 173
Bread taken for the species and forme of bread. 151

C

Arrenists beleeue not the Church of Rome. 39
Capuchins goe to Marseille. 299
Carrean one of the Diuels. 243.116
Catherine of France gardian vnto Magdalene. 6
Caroches enter into hell, but men goe to Paradise on foote. 21.124
A Change in the life of Magdalene. 132
The Charity of Saints. 37
The Charity of Christ Iesus. 77
Charity the daughter of God. 44
Christians that serue not God are miserable. 17
The Church shall examine all these things. 116
Out of the Church there is no saluation, and it is but one. 209
Single Combats prohibited by God. 135.242
Confession of Magdalene. 8
The holy Communion the table of the King of Kings. 183

Confession without due preparation is not good. 126
Confessours and Exorcists are excluded from the consultations. 289
Consultation touching the verification of the acts. 289
Considerations to bee thought vpon when wee sit at table. 228.229
Consultation touching the businesse of the Magician. 185
Conuersion of Magicians. 261. It is a miracle. 305
Constraint of Verrine. 18.20.57.58.64.106
Constraint of Belzebub to renounce the actions of the Magicians. 241
Constraint of the Diuels to speake truth. 42.43.91. and to humble themselues. 63.92.93.160.186.
Contradiction when the miracles of God are wrought. 205
Contradiction of Leuiathan 152
Cooperation of the creature with God. 229
Fiue Counsels or instructions giuen to Louyse. 40. and to Magdalene. 40
The Contrition of Magdalene. 10
Another Consultation how to proceed in case that the Magician would not confesse. 106
The Contempt of Diuels towards our Lady. 5.182.
The Contempt which some haue of Priests is not to bee regarded by Priests. 135
The Crosse a glasse in which we are all to looke, 145. Christ Iesus is the same also. 146
The Cruelty of the Magician Lewes. 298
All Creatures obey God. 60
Damnable Curiosity touching the blessed Sacrament. 90
The Curious fall into a pit out of which they cannot get when they will. 116.90.133
The Custome of the Dominicãs in saying of their Rosary. 3

D

Damnation the recompence of Diuels. 60.61
Dathan and Abyron swallowed vp for their impieties. 213
Death, and the sundry sorts thereof. 170

The Deformity of Diuels and the damned. 38.61
The Diuell begins to speake at the first exorcismes, but by constraint. 2.3.157
The Diuell boweth himselfe to worship God. 3
The Diuell that is inferiour, dareth not speake before his superiour. 6
Diuels make dainty to tell their names, for feare of being exorcised, commanded and punished. 66
The Diuell seene by Magdalene. 14
The Diuels beaten. 24.25
The Diuels are constrained to speake at S. Baume. 30
The Diuels would ouerthrow the cõpany of S. Vrsula. 34.89
The principall Diuels that were in Magdalene. 39
The Diuels condemned for one onely sinne, and why. 93.64
Diuels are theeues. 90
Diuels are vncapable of conuersion. 90
The Diuel commandeth not: neither are we to obey him. 94
The Diuell doth falsely affirme that Lewes was no Magician, and that Magdalene was not bewitched. 131
The Diuell imployed by God, and why? 236
The Diuels that tempted our first parents. 266
The Diuell exprobateth Lewes with his villaines. 289
The Diuels are bound. 300.304
The Diuell resisteth and disputeth against God. 24.143
The Diuell is proud, and is vexed that God would chuse a woman to be the instrument of so important a businesse. 85.54
The Diuell issueth forth like a blast from the body of Louyse. 210.211
The Diuels keepe Magdalene bound in all her body to make her to despaire. 84
Diuels who are forced by God or his Church to sweare a truth cannot lie. 29.88.91.92.95.153.154
Diuels doe laugh at those who are curious. 51
The Diuels and their number which was in the body of Louyse. 3
A Dialogue of the soule and the body. 217

A D

A Dialogue betweene Verrine and Leniathan. 161.187
A Dialogue betweene Verrine and Belzebub. 62
A Dialogue betweene Verrine and the Exorcist. 186
A Dialogue between Leniathan & one of the fathers. 296
That it is difficult to beleeue what wee cannot comprehend. 277.278
The Difference of possession. 301
The first Discouery of the Magician. 82
Discourse touching the blessed Trinity. 43.44. and of their consultation. 45
Discourse touching the French King lately deceased. 219.263.272
Discourse touching the possession of Louyse and the progresse thereof. 137.138
Discourse vnto the people 145
Discourse touching the three Kings. 306
Discourse of the paines of hell. 19.20
Discourse of the birth of our Lord well worthy to bee read. 230.243.244
Discourse of Verrine touching Saints. 68.69
Disputation betweene one of the Fathers and Verrine. 90.91.201
Disputation betweene the Exorcist and the Diuell. 186
Disputation of Leniathan with Verrine. 151.152.154
Disputation of Belzebub with Verrine. 62.63
Diuersities of offices amongst the Diuels. 170.191
S. Dominick with the good Angell of Magdalene intercede for her. 13.15
Verrines enemy. 37.189.203
S. Dominicks praises. 190.197.198.203.
Doubt of the truth of this history. 223

E

THe Earth made of nothing. 222
The End crowneth the worke. 272
Enmity betweene Diuels. 6
Eucharist. 90.151.182.183.191
Eue created without sinne. 207

Examina-

Examination of the acts. 308
Example of the Publican and Pharisee in S. Luke. 180
Exclamation touching the conception of our Lady. 4
Exclamation vpon the praises of God. 6
Exclamation touching the day of Iudgement. 16
Exclamation of Verrine to God who constrained him. 27
Exclamation against the proud and curious. 28
Exclamation vnto the Church. 97
Exclamation of the Diuell. 6.21.24.78
Exhortation to Magdalene. 10.91.147
Exhortation to the poore. 31.225
The Exorcist demaundeth the Diuell Verrine what Saints did most trouble him. 3
The Exorcist changed. 296

F

Faith sufficient in receiuing of the Sacrament. 90
Fasts recommended. 122
Father d' Abruc commeth to S. Baume. 195.287
A father is not to answere for his sonnes offences, and of what sonne this is to be vnderstood. 177
Feare is not auaileable without loue. 226
A feeling of deuotion and strength at the prayers of the Saints. 3
Force of Diuels limited. 35
The force of Louyse. 71
Francis Billet exorciseth at Saint Baume. 90
Francis Billet vseth much patience. 2
Francis Billet writeth to the Priests of the doctrine a letter, and the tenure thereof. 155.156
The friends that God hath at his table the foure feastes of the yeere. 121
Frequenting of the Sacrament. 269
The Fright wherein Magdalene was. 30

G

Gally-slaues are more happy then sinners, and why? 248
The Guardian of Magdalene. 6
The Guardian of Mary was Ioseph. 249

The Gates of Paradise very narrow. 124.200
The holy Ghost called a fire. 235
Gloria in excelsis sung at the birth of our Sauiour. 224
Gloria in excelsis to bee sung by Diuels is a great miracle. 245
God adored in the cratch with bowing downe of the knees. 233.247
Gods goodnesse towards men. 96. his mercy. 101. 115. 268. and goodnesse towards Magdalene. 84
God is a Physitian. 268
God speaketh by an inward intelligence. 187.189
God resisteth the proud, & giueth grace to the humble. 40
God is neuer a witnesse vnto falshood. 188
God preuenteth the sinner. 115
God is so beautifull that the Diuels would willingly endure all torments to haue but one glance of him. 12
God maketh reseruation to himselfe of three things. 213
God is incomprehensible. 96.136.259
God calleth no man to reiect him afterwards. 10
God cannot lie. 31
God is mercifull. 99.120.167
God is not to be serued out of expectation of recompence, but rather out of loue. 122
God doth expresly command that they who keepe not his law should be punished. 109. 110
God is obeyed by all his creatures. 135.136
God created the creature without any consent of it. 272
God descendeth vpon the earth, and how. 179
The gouernment of a family appertaineth not to women but to their husbands, vnlesse they doe prudently manage things. 237
The grace which was giuen to the Virgin. 208.281.282
Grace is farre remoued from the sinner. 185
A Great reprehension of men. 262
A Great sinner needeth great repentance. 98
Gresill a name of one of the Diuels. 237

H

Hardnesse of Magdalenes heart. 7
Hell in an vproare. 62.66
An Hereticke withdraweth himselfe much confounded. 155
An Hereticke reproued; as also those that are curious. 133.134.154
This History is to be published vnto all. 245
This History found fault withall. 245
Honour ought to be shewed vnto priests. 129
Honour ought to be giuen vnto Baptisme. 123
Humility representeth the birth of God. 124
Humility recommended vnto vs. 70.117.134.135. 220.285
The Humility of our Lady. 36.281.248
The Humility of Magdalene. 129

I

Ieremias sanctified from his mothers wombe. 207
Iesus Christ hath a glorified body in the Sacrament, which taketh vp no place. 182
Iesus Christ descends in his diuinity and humanity in Saint Banme to visit Saint Magdalene. 281
Iesus Christ a King. 247.248
Iesus Christ is before his mother, and how? 215.216
Iesus a Painter. 148.167
Incredulity reproued. 132.232.234.246.
Ingratitude of men. 26.35.146
Intellectuall conferences internally expressed. 27.28. 53.56.57.176
Interrogatories propounded to Lewes. 287
Interrogatories of the Exorcist. 3
Interrogatories of the Exorcists to Magdalene. 11
An Inuective against the Magician. 216.220
Iohn the Euangelist compared to an Eagle and his prerogatiues. 259.260
Ioseph is in doubt, 223. and is sanctified. 228

The Iudgement day of God will be very terrible. 10.11 286.287

Iudgement that is rash is naught. 136

K

THe King of the Nineuites did wisely take sack-cloth and ashes, to appease the wrath of God. 119

L

A Letter of Magdalene vnto the Virgin changed and corrected. 40.41.42

A Letter of Magdalene to Saint Magdalene, and the tenour thereof. 22

A Letter sent to sundry persons. 59 100.104.107.108.

Lewes vnlearned. 288

Lewes despised of the Diuels. 288

Lewes striketh an horror into Magdalene. 288.289

Lewes had no memory in him. 292

Lewes accused by Belzebub to be a Magician. 292

Lewes accused by Leuiathan. 296. and by Verrine. 301

Lewes goeth to Auignon and Aix, there to bee declared innocent. 308

Lewes is shut vp in the place of holy penance, which was locked with a key. 289

Lewes very familiar and deare vnto the Capuchin fathers. 102

Lewes playeth the Hypocrite and Pharisee. 288.297.298

Light what it signifieth. 143

The Loue of God and the recompence that attendeth it. 123

The loue of a mans selfe. 251

Louyse reciteth to her superiour all her tentations and intrinsick speakings. 58

Louyse to be examined. 94

Louyse exorcised by Father Francis Domptius. 2. Baptized in a Kitchin. 55

Louyse was an Huguenot. 32.55.149.263

Louyse possessed for Magdalenes sake. 29.157

In Louyse many signes of possession. 106.120.138.263. She is at peace with conscience although she be possessed. 57

Louyse exorcised by Lewes the priest. 287
Louyse is possessed for the conuersion of two soules especially, and by a consequent of many others. 120
Louyse offreth her praiers to God for Lewes. 275.283.287
Lucia forsaketh all for the loue of God. 49

M

Magdalene troubled with Incubi. 33.300
Magdalene shall be repentant. 129
Magdalene contemneth and resisteth the Diuels. 33
Magdalene brought to the holy place of penance to auoid a danger. 2
Magdalene spitteth at the perswasion of the Exorcist. 11
Magdalene strongly tempted by Belzebub at the time of communion. 49
Magdalene changed. 147
Magdalene at times wauereth. 116.118.119
Magdalene weepeth and prostrateth her selfe at the feet of the Dominican. 8.10
Saint Magdalene the first among sinners. 36. and in heauen is the next after the mother of God. 189
Magdalene a table. 148
Magdalene giuen to the Diuell and by whom. 116
Magdalene falleth downe at her mothers feet. 14
S. Magdalene intercedeth for Magdelene. 13
Magicians are not possessed. 304
Magicians spread abroad ill sauours, and cast some of their stinkes vpon two Fathers. 301
Magick much vsed. 282
Maladies of men. 267.268
Malice of this world. 26
Maliciousnesse of Lewes. 282.297.298
Man is endowed with free will. 272
The manner of Magdalenes transformation in soule, and of others also. 147
The Mantle or cloake of impiety. 259
Mary the Moone, and her sonne the Sunne. 222. and the Saints, Starres. ibid.

Mary intercedeth for sinners. 9
Mary conceiued without originall sinne. 205.206
Mary the sinners aduocate. 41.42.128.147
Mary the goodliest creature that euer God made. She is a garden. 4.47.233
Mary is a ladder. 19.8.
Mary is all in all. 5. She is the temple of the blessed trinity. 4.5
Maries praiers. 233.270
Martha next after the mother of God, and why? 50. She is loued by Mary. 53
Martyrdome of S. Lucia and the Virgins. 49
Martyrs ten thousand went in one day to Paradise. 125
The Masse of a wicked Priest is good. 32
Memory representeth the eternall father. 193
Menaces of the Diuell to carry away Magdalene. 2
Menaces of Belzebub. 10
Menaces of Lewes the Magician. 291
The Mercy of God. 11.73.77. and his iustice. 44
The Mercy of Christ Iesus. 45.48.62. and of our Lady. 78
Mercy and Iustice the two daughters of God. 44
Miracles discouered. 34.43.68.88.143.205
Miracles oppugned. 205
A great miracle that the Diuell should praise heauen. 20
A great Miracle, that God by the pronouncing of foure words should descend vpon the Altar. 133
Miserable is he who giueth good counsell vnto others, and keepeth none for himselfe. 110.112.113
Mortification recommended vnto vs. 68.130
The Mother of God euer intercedeth for Magdalene. 9
The Mother of God dared not to touch him vpon his birth day. 183
Moses one of the foure trumpets, who together with Saint Iohn shall come and summon men to iudgement. 265

N

NAbuchodonosor turned into a beast, and is saued. 251.258

Names of the Diuels which were in the body of Louyse. 3
The name of Verrine shall be rased forth. 259
Neighbours necessities to be relieued. 226.227
Euery night two Priests watch with Magdalene 84
No man without sinne. 239
True nobility. 252
True nobility commeth from heauen. 243
Nonnus would not baptize Pelagia. 40
Nostre Dame de grace, the place where Magdalene was exorcised. 1

O

THe Oath of the Diuell. 131
Oathes that are of validity. 92.165.209.304
The Oathes of Belzebub and Verrine. 35.63.64
Without Obedience no Paradise. 40
Obedience in some cases not to be giuen. 175
Obedience recommended. 126.133.134.171
Obstinacy and hardnesse of heart in Magicians accompanied with a great blindnesse. 254
Offices to be performed by religious persons. 144
Offices of the Diuels. 170.191
The order of S. Dominicke admitteth not mortall sin. 206
The Order of S. Dominick extolled. 206.263
The Order that is Hierarchicall and appertaining to the Church is not among the good Angels themselues. 93
Order among the Diuels. 80

P

THe paines of hell are not so vnsufferable as the wrath of that great God 17
The paines of hell. 19.60.61.121.122
Paines of this world as flowers, but the paines of hell are truly punishments. 133
Gates of Paradise very narrow. 124.200
Pardoning our enemies. 256
The pastour is to giue an account of his sheepe. 177
Patrons of Prouince. 65

Pennance recommended. 177.181.120.208
People ſlocke by troupes to S Baume. 124
A great perfection to omit nothing that is good. 203
Perſwaſion of Verrine to Magdalene. 12
Phyſitians of the ſoule. 268
The holy pillar. 130
A Plot to ruine the companies of the doctrine, and S. Vrſula. 55
Poſſeſſed perſons are much eaſed at the departure of Diuels. 211
Poſſeſſion by witchcraft. 3
Poſſeſſion of Magdalene by her ſpirituall father. 88
The power of God towards ſinners. 64
The Power of God. 73.151.163.168.169
Prayers powred forth by Verrine vnto God. 240
Prayers for our enemies. 48.257
Prayers cauſe teares. 8
Prayers for Magdalene. 98
Prayers made by Magdalene vnto the Virgin, by the aduiſe of her Conſeſſour. 15
Preachers labour much, & haue not ſuch eaſie liues as ſome imagine. 227
The Praiſes of the Nunnes of S. Vrſula. 34.50.51 55.65.118
Prediction of the puniſhment and death of the Magician, bound with a ſolemne oath. 88.89.213.301
Prediction yet to come. 260.262.263.304
Predictions already happened. 265 278.299.303 304.305
Prieſts ought to be had in reuerence. 133.171
Prieſts ought to ſtudy and preach, becauſe they are ſeparated from the world. 133
The Prieſt is not the cauſe why ſinners receiue no grace by hearing of the Maſſe, but they themſelues. 192
Pride of the Diuell. 24.66
Fiue Princes of the Diuels in the body of Magdalene. 39

Proceedings to conuert the Magician very charitable and repugnant vnto Diuels. 102.106
Promise of Witnesses to keepe Lewes his sinnes secret. 102
The proud shall not enter into Paradise. 242
The great Punishments of those that doe not obey God. 119 153
Purgatory. 186
Purity recommended.

R

THe Rage of the Magicians.. 73.74.116.236. 254.302
The rebels person displeaseth God. 133
Recompence which the Diuell giueth to those that serue him. 254.255
Redemption of man. 145.146
Reformation. 204.206
Refusall of father Francis Domptius to exorcise, & why. 2
To Render euill for good is the property of Diuels. 254
Renunciations of Magicians. 74.75. and of Verrine. 235.236
Reprehension of Magdalene. 7.8.116.119
Reprehension of Christians. 16.93
Resignation of Louyse. 56.94
Resistance to withstand their comming to Saint Baume. 112
Resistance of the Diuell at the Communion. 24
Returne of Lewes to Marseille as innocent. 308
Riches of this world the offscourings of Paradise. 256
Father Romillon could not hold in Magdalene but crieth for helpe. 2 266
Ruine of Angels.

S

THe Sabbath held in Saint Baume. 119.132
The same Sacrifice is alwaies seene in the Church. 190
Sacrifices that are publicke, and why they are offered. 114
Saints deuoted to the Virgin. 198

Saints and their vertues. 68. 69. 70. They pray for vs. 150
Salomon the worlds wisedome damned. 251. 258. 304
Satisfaction followeth confession. 181
Schedules restored to Theophylus and others. 305
Science of Diuels full of malice. 25
Science of God knoweth all things. 46
Science of Cicero and Plato to what vse they serue. 232
Separation of the two women. 289. 295
The seruice of Diuels is laborious, but the seruice of God delightfull. 254
The shame which Magdalene tooke to bee proclaimed a Witch before all people. 10
Signes of the day of Iudgement. 260
Signe of Predestination what it is. 228
Signes of Magdalenes possession. 39. 93. 305
Signes of Louyses possession. 201. 202. 261. 265. 276. 287. 300 Sinners are not punished according to their offences. 181.
Sinners reprehended. 163. 278. 279
He Sinneth mortally who heareth not Masse vpon Holy-daies and Sundaies. 191
The Sinnes of Magdalene. 116
Sonneillon the name of a Diuell, and to what hee tempteth men. 258
Sorcerers abominable before God. 240. their superstitions. 250. They goe inuisible. 299. 300
The sorrowes of Christ Iesus in his passion. 48
The sorrow of Verrine to be constrained. 20. 36. 231
The Soule of a poore man as welcome to heauen as the soule of a King, so that it stand in the grace of God. 225
The soules in heauen doe thirst after the saluation of our soules. 57. 100
The soule is a mistrisse, and the body as a chambermaid. 237. 238
The soules of the damned were faire at the first, but afterwards by sinne grew most deformed. 122

Euery soule belongeth to God. 192
The Soule representeth the sacred Trinity. 193
The soules fall as thick into hell as flower doth from the milstone. 125
The soule is a vineyard. 285
The soule compared to a Common-wealth. 218.86
The souldier to kill himselfe is an extraordinary accident. 18
Spirits goe and come exceeding swiftly. 230
The stable made honourable by the birth of our Sauiour. 226
Three suffrages presented by the Dominican father to three seuerall Saints. 3
We are to Suffer for to raigne. 114
The Sunbeame doth not breake glasse, but addeth a brightnesse vnto it. 224
Suspicions of a certaine father. 91
Sympathy betweene God and his creatures. 272

T

TE Deum sung by the assembly to giue thankes vnto God. 14
Temptation of some persons. 140
Temptation to hardnesse of heart. 243
Temptation of the world. 174.175
Temptation to single combats, and against youth. 121.242
Temptations of diuers sorts. 204.251.252
Temptation against the gentry and hereticks. 241.242
Temptation of the Diuell to Magdalene. 98
Thanksgiuing ought to be vsed after the communion. 184
The Thirst of Christ Iesus. 284
S. Thomas was not ignorant of the death of his master. 194
Three things we are to aske of God. 194
Three sorts of people serue God. 122.174
Time past or future is not in God. 46
The Time prepared for Martyrs. 269
Torments of hell. 19.60.61
Torments of the Diuels. 24.33.79

Torments of Magdalene. 90.91

V

VErity a morall vertue. 91
Verrine doth nothing but at the command of the Exorcist. 10
Verrine causeth that which was spoken & disputed by him, to be written. 30
Verrine doth dictate word by word that which he spake vnto the Dominican. 41.42
Verrine maketh excellent discourses, leauing all men full of astonishment at the same. 11
Verrine doth renounce all Magicians of both sexes, Sorcerers and Sorceresses. 235
Verrine remaineth mute and silent; and why. 51
Verrine confesseth God to be in the Host, and in the Chalice with his blood and bones, with his humanity and diuinity. 52.126
Verrine disputeth with God. 52.53.176.275
Verrine braueth Belzebub. 93.261.266
Verrine neuer said Miserere mei. 87
Verrine curseth S. Baume. 87
Verrine the executioner of Gods Iustice. 89
Verrine incapable to be prayed for. 89
Verrine denieth that God is his redeemer. 93.185
Verrine denyeth that he is a Preacher. 93.187
Verrine Gods sergeant. 119.127. & his Ambassadour. 162
Verrine craueth to be commanded. 126.211.240
Verrine constrained. 18.57.106.197
Verrine asketh his owne confusion. 129
Verrine an accursed Diuel. 28. and a lyar when he speaketh besides his commission. 51. is damned. 92.188.221
Verrine a naughty and barraine tree. 230
Verrine saith he shall haue diminution of his torments. 230
Sonneillon saith the same. 255
Verrine forceth no man to beleeue. 249
Verrine is angry at vnbeleeuers. 301

Verrine complaineth that he is made the instrument of this History, by the mouth of Louyse. 263
Verrine barketh like a dog. 300.303
Verrine neuer assured the conuersion of Lewes. 277
Verrine resisteth God. 169.203
Verrine turneth towards Magdalene, and crieth as much as he can. 6
Verrine crieth out when he heard them say; in principio. 43
Verrine disputeth with Bezebub. 114.115
Verrine one of the Diuels in Louyse body, and why. 3.94 164
Vertues recommended. 171.229
Vertues properly tearmed the physicke of the soule. 268
Vices are as Princes. 86
Virgins 11000. went in one day to Paradise. 135
Virgins praised. 53
Vision of the damned very fearefull. 17
A Vision which struck a great fright into Magdalene. 155
The Vnderstanding representeth the Sunne. 295.297
Vnion of the humane nature with the diuine. 44
Vnion of God with his Church. 275
Vocation and the first grace, is from the meere and sole fauour of God. 17

W

WOmen possessed of the company of S. Vrsula. 56
Wicked Spirits laboured to carry away Magdalene by maine force. 2
The Will desireth to doe well. 20
The Will representeth the holy Ghost. 193
The Will and power thereof. 217
The wings which carry vs into heauen, is loue and feare. 289.130
Witchcraft changed into a blessing. 30.67
Witnesses of the acts. 18.102.142.289
The words of Verrine. 4.5.291.301

The

The Words of Verrine to Magdalene. 7. 265. 8. 9. 10, &c. 247

The words of Verrine to Lewes. 288. 292. 300

The words of Verrine to Louyse. 305

The words that sinners are to say when they are conuerted. 117. 118

Y

THe Yoke of our Lord is easie and his burthen light. 231

Young people doe not thinke it a sinne to offend God. 242

AN ALPHABETICALL Table of the principall matters contained in the second part of this Booke.

A

ABnegare seipsum, is the perfection of true contrition.

Acoules a parish in Marseille. 395

Acts of humility performed by the woman that was possessed. 357

Adam was the first that presented himselfe to Christ Iesus in Lymbo. 315

Adoration of the Eucharist by the Diuell. 314

Ægidius giueth himselfe to the Diuell that hee might bee a skilfull Physition. 375

Affectation of Priests in their cloathes very pleasing to Belzebub. 384

An Agnus dei charmed and giuen by a Magician to Magdalene. 382

An Angell assisteth Magdalene. 379

Angels who are Gardians vnto men are of an inferiour order, and are commanded by the superiour Angels. 367 360

The

The Angell which is Magdalens Gardian tormenteth the Diuell, and why. 360.375
Father Angell the Capuchin bewitched at Marseille. 383
Anthony bishop of Aix. 389
Arrest of the Court of Parliament in Prouince against Lewes Gaufridy. 410
Arrinall of the women that were possessed at Aix. 370
Asmodee tempteth Eue taking on the shape of a girle. 313
Asmodee Prince of wantons and his tentations. 313.323
Asmodee shaketh Magdalene by the commandement of Belzebub with vncleane gestures. 317.374
Astaroth tempteth men to lazineſſe, and his enemy in heauen is S. Bartholomew. 324
Aurey the name of a Diuell. 393

B

Balberith tempteth men to single combats and his enemy in heauen is Barnabas. 324
The banquets in the Synagogue. 335
Saint Baume held in detestation by the Diuels. 338
S. Baume to be reuerenced. 338
Belias the Diuel prince of vertues, and his tentations. 325
Belzebub taketh Magdalene by the throat to strangle her. 315
Belzebub saith that many Diuels did issue forth vpon the day of the exaltation of the holy Crosse. 311
Belzebub was he that tempted Adam and Christ. 313
Belzebub goeth forth out of the body of Magdalene. 322
Belzebub goeth to the Magician to teach him to weepe. 388
Belzebub the prince of pride, and his tentations. 323
Belzebub beginneth to speake. 313
Belzebub saith that absolution burned him more then hell fire. 338
Belzebub shaketh Magdalene. 312
Belzebub bound. 313
Belzebub interrupteth confession. 338.357

Belzebub discourseth of diuers things that were absent. 372
Blood drawne from the finger of the left hand, where the vaines of the heart are, of Lewes the Magician to write the schedule. 393
The body of Magdalene swolne by Belzebub. 315
The brauado of Verrine vnto the other Diuels. 316
The broome, wherewith Magdalene (to shew her obedience) swept the Church, is by the Diuell cast vpon the ground. 391

C

THe Charity of two Capuchin fathers. 388
Charmes to what end they are giuen. 343. and the remedy against them. 344
Charmes spread abroad by Sorcerers, 320.347
Charmes blowne through a cane by Sorcerers. 300.383. and the composition and ingredients of them. 330
Charmes in the eyes of Magdalene. 320
The Cherubins manner of adoring God. 408
Commissaries deputed to apprehend the Magician. 372
Confession of the Magicia vnto the Capuchin fathers. 396
Confronting of Magdalene and the Magician. 379
Contrition truly practised. 394
Conuersions of men successiuely and by degrees. 90.386
Cries of Magdalene. 331
Cries of Belzebub. 364
The Crosse of our Sauiour very high. 313
The Crosse not made in the forme of a τ. 314
The Crosse applyed to the back of her that was possessed. 393

D

DEfence prepared against the sorcerers that came inuisibly to Saint Baume. 330
Diuels tied to charmes, and the remedy against them. 343
The Diuell runneth in and out in the Chapell, when the woman which he possessed was to be confessed. 382.383
One of the Diuels answereth the Exorcist, and reuealeth many things vnto him. 323.324

Diuels not able to bewitch men that are superiours, as Bishops, Abbots, &c. 344
The Diuell first blindeth men, and after iests at them, and why. 354
The Diuell complaineth of God. 392
The Diuell excuseth his sinne. 392
Diuels are deceiuers. 374
Diuels by constraint may speake truth. 389
Diuels bound. 349
Diuels tormented. 321.375
Diuels feare the relicks of Saints. 369
Diuels feele the efficacie of prayers. 375
Diuels change their names as they please, when they enter into sundry bodies. 321
Diuels haue no names, and why. 321
The Diuels by constraint haue reuealed the bodies and relicks of Saints. 389
The Diuel answereth that God was purposed that the Magician and his adherents should be discouered. 366
Diuels labour to bewitch father Michaelis and cannot.. 344. the cause, ibid.
15. Diuels in a body of a certaine man. 394.
30. Diuels in the body of Magdalene besides inferiour Diuels . 325
A Dialogue between Belzebub and the Magician. 373
An excellent dialogue betweene one of the fathers and the Diuell. 392
The difference between a marke and a stripe. 379
Difference in the knowledge of God. 320
Diligence of the Sorcerers to turne Magdalene vnto them. 345.349
Diuers tentations of Diuels. 323.324.325.&c
Some Doctors hold that our Lord was nayled to the crosse with foure nayles. 313
A dog kneeleth before the blessed Sacrament. 337
Doggs forbidden to be brought to the Sabboth. 337
The dueties of those who goe to the Sabboth. 334

The

E

THe excellent effect of consecrated fingers. 385
The Exhortation of the Exorcist vnto Magdalene to renounce the Diuell. 311
An Exorcisme called Luciferiana. 342
Exorcismes, and the Diuels answers vnto them. 318.319
The Exorcist called Hangman by the Diuel. 395
Experience teacheth that Witches being beaten or threatned doe make their withcrafts cease. 354

F

FIngers that were consecrated put vpon Magdalens throat. 385
Fontaine the Physitian counterfaiteth himselfe a Priest to deceiue Belzebub. 371
The forces of Magdalene fayle her. 381.363
Force of Exorcismes. 367
Fortitudo Magdalens good Angell. 360
Father Francis the Capuchin doth Exorcise Magdalene, and what he asked her. 383
A Franciscan putteth reliques vnto Magdalens back. 369 and what reliques they were. Ibid.
Frequencie of the Sacraments a true remedy against witchcraft. 320.344.
Holy Friday apt for the remission of sinnes. 396

G

A Gallery neere Magdalens chamber to which she vsed to come. 390
Monsieur Garandeau leadeth the woman that was possessed into the Chapel of S. Sauiour. 387
Garandeau Vicar generall vnto the Arch-bishop of Aix doth question Magdalene. 370
Garanier the name of a Diuell. 394
Gaufridy Prince of Magicians Priest of Acoules. 367
A gentleman of the pretended religion speaketh vnto Magdalene, and the summe of his discourse. 386
A girle digged out of her graue by witches 352

God bindeth and looseth Diuels when and how he pleaseth. 322
Gombert Priest of noſtre Dame de Grace is ſent to confeſſe the Magician. 386
The Gormundizing of Lewes. 355
Great ſtore of Magicians come and make a noiſe at Louyſes Exorciſmes. 316
Great iniurie done to the Hoſt by Lewes. 366
A Great light ſent from God, when corporall puniſhments are leſſe eſteemed then ſpirituall tentations. 407
Great ſtrokes giuen by the Diuell to Magdalene, being on her knees. 405
Graſſy a doctor of Phyſick tryeth Magdalene, and is helped by other Phyſitians. 371.374
Greſill and his temptations 324
The Grumbling of the Diuels when they are together. 394

H

THe hate of Magdalene infuſed into her by the Diuell. 359
The head of an Owle engraue̅ within a circle in a ring. 328
Henrie Alphonſus the father of Marie. 332
An Heritick ſpied out by the Diuell as he came to ſee theſe wonders. 377
The Hoſt could neuer be put into Magdalens mouth by the Magician, although her mouth was forced open by the Diuell. 368
The Hoſt preſented by the Magician in the ſabbath vnto Magdalene, and her refuſall of it. 368
In the Hoſt a young childe is ſeene by Magdalene, and what he ſaid vnto her. ibid.
The Hickcough in Magdalene when ſhe ſhould communicate. 392
Honore Lyon of the couent of S. Maximin lately arriued and his Angell. 366
Horrible geſtures vſed by Belzebub towards Magdalene. 315

I

IAmes the Hermit despised all honour and dignities. 326
The Image of our Ladie brought by Mary, one of Magdalens acquaintance, vnto her. 342
Imploring of helpe from the Virgin. 333
Imploring of aide from the blessed Virgin and all Angels by Magdalene. 311.312
Impotencie of Diuels. 331
Impudence of Diuels. 373
Insolence of Belzebub. 349.352.357.363
An instrument of glasse foure cornered, and the vse of it. 42
Intellectuall conferences externally expressed. 321
Interrogatories put vnto Belzebub and his answers. 332
The iumping of Magdalene vpon her knees. 383

K

SIx Knights came from Marseille to leade away the Magician, and fauoured him, as their speciall friend. 317
Knowledge of things absent. 377

L

LAdies and other women intercede for Lewes Gaufridy. 372
Laudate Dominum sung by Magicians. 336
Father Lawrence Prouinciall of the Capuchins 407
Letanie sung to awake Magdalene. 349
A letter brought vnto Magdalene by the Magicians lieutenant. 342
Leuiathan neigheth like an horse. 333
Leuiathan Prince of Hereticks. 323
Lewes is ignorant. 355
Lewes celebrateth Masse in the Sabbath. 337
Lewes the Magician throweth a character vpon the head of the woman that was possessed. 315
Lewes tormented. 361.362
Lewes vsed Magick 14. yeares. 380
Lewes gaue himselfe to the Diuel 15. yeares past. 393

Lights and candles seene in the ayre. 332
Lucifer chained vp in hell. 321.323
Lucifer knoweth whatsoeuer is done in the world, and how? 321

M

MAgdalene relateth that the Diuels were in euery part of her body. 353
Magdalene confesseth her selfe and doth communicate. 393
Magdalene called Tharasque (a Dragon) by Belzebub. 397
Magdalene beaten by the Diuell because she cut her haire. 400
Magdalene is not suffered to eate by the Diuell. 384
Magdalene maintaineth her accusation against the Magician. 379
Magdalene recouereth her hearing, sight and appetite on Whitsontide. 416
Magdalene prickt in the heart finger by Iohn Baptista a Magician. 390
Magicians cannot looke directly vpon a man. 396
Magicians not possessed, and why? 341
Magicians are marked vpon Wednesdaies and Saturdaies by Diuels, and with what? 386
Magicians beaten or threatned, make their charmes to cease. 354
The Magician searched by surgeons with pins, and found very vgly to be looked vpon. 378
The Magician is greatly tormented inwardly. 351
The Magician sprinckleth a kind of consecrated wine vpon the whole assembly. 337
The Magician commeth to Magdalene with a cord about his neck. 349
The Magician marked in the head by the Diuell. 362
Magicians wounded to death, and what becomes of them. 358
Magicians compared to Woolues. 316

Magicians worse then Diuels. 362
The Magicians watch euery night through the moneth of Ianuarie to turne Magdalene. 346
Malice of the Magician. 380
The Man sick of the palsie calleth for the mercy of God to be deliuered from his miseries. 343
Mary of Parise carrieth a loue-letter to Magdalene and is wounded. 331
Markes made by the Diuels, and found vpon her that was possessed. 370.398
The markes of Witches. 337
The Markes of Lewes the Magician. 362.376.378
The matters whereof charmes are made are of no vse or power. 343
Memorials made by the Magician to blaspheme Christ Iesus. 380
Foure men cannot hold Magdalene. 390
Men offend God daily. 392
Men are fraile and ignorant. 393
Menaces of the Diuell in Magdalene. 329
Mention of the parts of the body of her that was possessed, by the Exorciſt. 318
Merindol, Fontaine and Grassie try Magdalene. 374
Saint Michael the chiefe of Angels. 323
Father Michaelis threatneth the woman that was possessed to bring her into the place of penitence. 314
Miracle of the blessed Sacrament. 337
Musitians sing to cheare vp Magdalene who was tormented. 391

N

NAmes taken by the Parliament of Aix of two that scratched a woman. 352
At night the Diuels make Magdalene leaue her chamber, but she is fetched backe by father Francis Billet. 401
No consent to be giuen to any thing which is offered by the Diuell, or Magicians. 368
Notable instructiõs for priests to make charms to cease. 354

The Number of Magicians exceeding great in Spaine, France and England. 340

O

THe Oath which was taken by the diuel. 319.333.367
An Oath taken by the Diuell not to depart from Magdalenes body vntill Lewes were either conuerted or dead. 365
Obedience vnto superiours commanded. 392
Obstinacy of the Magician and the cause. 356.365.380
OEillet the name of a Diuell and his tentations. 324
Offices of Diuels. 313
The operation of the blessed Sacrament. 374
Oscillon the name of a Diuell. 388
An Owle and dogs heard at the arriuall of the Magician. 372

P

PAines imposed vpon Diuels. 341.342.344.354.360
Paines that accidentally befall Diuels. 321
Much People come from all quarters to the Sabbath, and what they doe there. 346.377.399
Much people heare the voices that cried in the wood. 344.345
Red Pimples found on the veines of the Magician. 386
A Pinne put into Magdalenes eare by Belzebub. 397
The holy Pix applied vnto Magdalene maketh her to come vnto her selfe. 333.340
A Prayer which Magdalene often vsed. 311.312
Vpon the Prayers of the blessed Virgin, Belzebub leaueth his hold on Magdalenes throat. 360
Prayers of the assembly aided to chase away the Diuel. 329
Predictions which afterward happened. 366.372.376
Priests be bewitched, and why? 344
The pride of the Diuell, and all wicked spirits. 348.353
The Prince of the Magicians commandeth all the Witches in Spaine, France and England.. 340
The principall Diuels are related and named who are in Magdalenes body. 323

Proceedings of the Diuell for the discouerie of the Magician Lewes. 366.367
Proceeding in the Exorcismes. 310
Promise of Belzebub vnto Lewes. 373
Promise of Magdalene to cleaue no longer to the Diuell. 312
Proofe and triall of the Diuels. 320.353.367
Purification the feast of Acoules. 311

Q

A Question friuolously asked by the Magician touching his markes. 378

R

Rabasse the Kings Aduocate goeth from Aix to Marseille to fetch the Magician. 372
The Rack giuen to Magdalene by the Diuell. 373
The Rage of Lewes. 337.345.356.368
Raymond Bishop of Arles. 389
Three Realities found in Magdalene by father Michaelis 369
Recommending of a mans selfe to God in his aduersities, the aduise of father Michaelis. 351
Reconciliation doth frustrate the Diuels purposes. 359
Relicks applyed vnto Magdalene. 369.389
Remedy against witchcraft. 344.354
Remedy against the peruersnesse of the Diuell at Exorcismes. 333.349
Renunciation which Magdalene maketh of Diuels, hell and the schedules. 362
Renunciation of Paradise made by the Diuell in behalfe of Lewes. 376
Reuerence due to the place of penitence of Saint Magdalene. 315.316
Reuelation of the fact, not of the time. 367
A Ring enchanted, and what was found within it. 328
The Robes of Eue what they were. 349
Rosier the name of a Diuell, and his tentations. 325

S

THe Sabbath not kept in the chamber of Magdalene because of two skulles. 390
The Sabbath in what place it is kept, and what the Witches doe there. 334.346
The Sabbath how many times kept in a weeke. 334.335.336
The Sabbath of blasphemy and reuenge. 335
The Sabbath kept at Saint Baume. 355
Saints aduersaries to the Synagogue, who they are. 384
Sandrie the name of a Diuell. 394
Some Schoolemen hold that Christ Iesus did not deliuer all the soules that were in Purgatory, but all the soules in Lymbo he did deliuer. 314
The Schedule of the Magician reduced to 16. yeeres. 380
The Sexton reporteth to the vicar generall what reliques and bones he had in the Chapell of S. Sauiour. 387
Segoyer prayeth vnto God for her that is possessed, and what the Diuell said thereupon. 395.396
Signes of Magdalens possession. 365.366.367.370.371.318.320.369.319
Signes of Louyses possession. 329.384
Signe of the Crosse chaseth away the Diuels. 311
Six thousand six hundred and sixty Diuels depart from the body of Magdalene. 387
Skulles applyed to her that was possessed. 336
Songs at the Sabbath. 332
Sorcerers are damned. 316
Sorcerers called Tharasques by Verrine. 332
Sorcerers buriall. 374
Surgeons proue Magdalene. 384
A Syrrope brought vnto Magdalene by a woman.

T

TE deum sung with a prayer vnto the sacred Trinity. 387

The Teares which Witches ſhead, fall no lower then their cheekes. 388
Tentation of the Diuell to change our confeſſours. 394
Tentations of ſundry Diuels, and the Saints oppoſite vnto them. 323.324
The time of Antichriſt. 316
Mounſieur Theron is preſent at the Exorciſme. 375
The Throat of Magdalene quitted by the Diuell. 329.363
Tortures and the rack giuen vnto Magdalene by Diuels. 329.373
Tortures which the Diuels inflicted vpon Magdalene. 400.401
Torments which Magdalene endured more then ordinary. 358.359.362
Torments redoubled vpon Magdalene twice a day. 391
A Tyrant will not ſuffer any great Lord to dwell neere him. 394

V

VErrine a Diuell, and Prince of Principalities, with his tentations. 325
Verrine tormented, and why? 322
Verrine ſaith he ſhall haue diminution of paines. ibid.
and 328
Verrine and his tentations. 324
Verrine ſaith not that he is a Preacher. 328
Verrine ſaith, he is ſent of God to ſpeake truth. 328
Verrine was neuer bound, and the reaſon. 349
Verrine crieth aloud becauſe ſome would declare the Magician to be innocent. 318
Verrine barketh like a dog. 316
The Vertue of the bleſſed Sacrament. 315
Veſtments of Prieſts. 382
Villanies committed in the Sabbath by Witches. 337
Violins and other inſtruments of muſick vſed in the Sabbath. 336
Viſion of the bleſſed Hoſt. 368

The Vision of Magdalene red as fire. 402
The voice of a woman dying. 331
The voices of the Witches plainly heard. 344

W

WAntonnesse of the Sabbaths. 336
Weeping of Witches, and the manner. 388
Wicked Spirits cannot be consecrated fingers. 385
Witchcrafts and Charmes cast into Magdalens eares, and why? 347
Witchcrafts and Charmes giuen to two ends. 343
Witnesse of Physitians and Surgeons. 371
Witnesses of the markes of the Magician. 376
Witnesses touching those that were possessed. 375
A Woman lost and sought after, and the place where shee was. 351
A woman bewitched. 383
The working of Diuels is in vaine against the iust. 344
When God worketh not, all is darke, but when hee worketh, euery thing is full of light. 380

Y

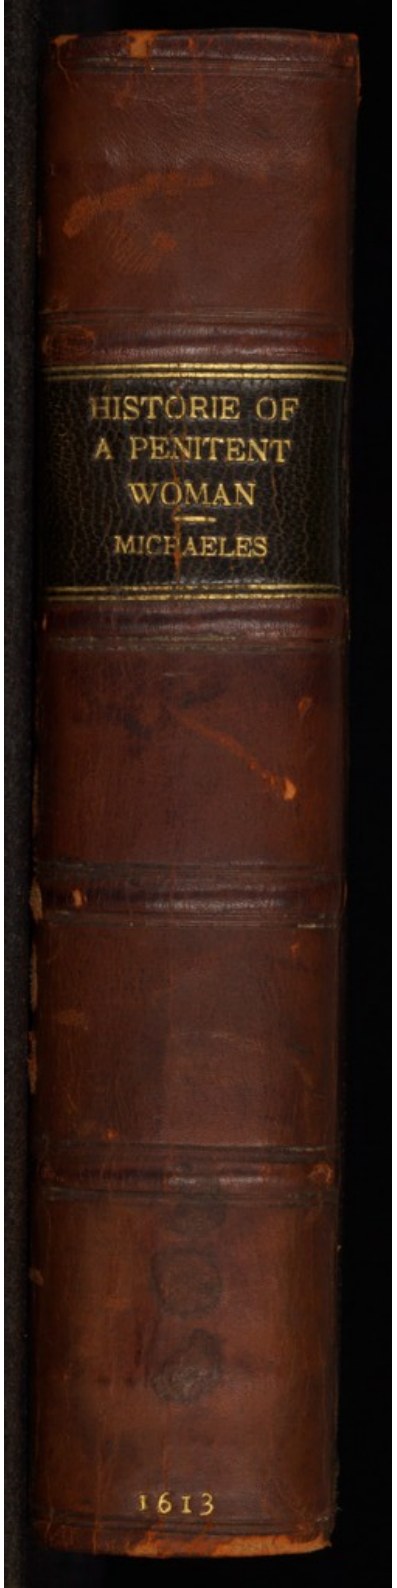

A young man that was an heretique, confirmed the more in the Catholick religion by the words of the Diuell. 404. and is conuerted by father Michaëlis. ibid.

The end of the table.

A TABLE OF THE CHAPTERS contained in the Discourse of Spirits.

1. WHether there be Spirits or no: There are foure points to be obserued touching Spirits: that there are Spirits; what their nature is, from whence they came; and the end why they are. 1
2. Whether Spirits haue bodies. 14
3. Of the Creation, goodnes, or maliciousnes of Angels. 29
4. The meanes which Diuels haue, to appeare and come vnto vs; in what part of the world they reside; how they are bound; and their sundry waies to tempt men. 41
5. That the Diuels scope is to make himselfe to bee worshipped as a God, and to deceiue men: that the Diuell knoweth not things to come, neither can he penetrate or diue into the secrets of mans heart. 51
6. That Sorcerers are as detestable, and as much forbidden by the law of God, as the very Oracles of the Heathen and their Idols were: that it is an idle speech which is giuen out of Sorcerers, that Princes should take heed of them: the diuersities of customes, which the Sorcerers vsed in the old time: all proued by the Scripture. 63
7. Of Witches; and that women are more addicted to witchcraft then men are. 76
8. An answere vnto those, that demand what danger there is in crauing the assistance and aide of the Diuell. 82
9. Whether the Articles contained in the depositions of Sorcerers ought to be taken as idely and dreamingly spoken, or whether they ought to bee receiued for truth. 94

FINIS.

HISTORIE OF A PENITENT WOMAN
MICHAELES
1613