break the chain

Thousands of wild monkeys are cruelly trapped, packed into tiny wooden crates and flown thousands of miles to be used in crude, cruel experiments in British laboratories every year. Most of the monkeys that are captured never make it that far. As many as nine out of ten die of disease, are killed during trapping or are slaughtered by dealers because they are unsuitable for laboratory needs - being too young, too old or pregnant.

The survivors suffer the loss of their jungle homes in countries such as Indonesia and the Philippines, in exchange for a cramped bare metal cage, despair and death.

Once wild and free, these sensitive and intelligent animals end their short lives as living test tubes - force-fed chemicals, dosed with drugs or used in other painful and pointless tests.

It's a far cry from the Paradise they have lost.
