one world

One world suggests our universal vulnerability to HIV, and one hope suggests the universal desire to eliminate this disease from the world. I hope that an effective vaccine will be developed soon. There are many other things to hope for related to AIDS in the world, but this for me is fundamental. Jeremy, Chiang Mai One day everyone will assume their responsibility in the fight against the disease and ignorance will be tolerated no longer. Stephanie, Stoke The world will overcome prejudice towards people who are HIV positive and treat every human being with the respect and compassion that they deserve. Vicky, Stoke People with HIV or AIDS are treated with respect and dignity instead of stigmatised, feared and neglected. Emma, Stoke

People don't automatically think of AIDS as connected with gays and drugs. Anon

Children receive information earlier about HIV/AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases. Sally, Preston

Love and courage will overcome fear and prejudice. Pat, Clayton That there will be a growing awareness of the illness, its causes and prevention and more of a spirit of care and solidarity William, Madrid HIV/AIDS affecting people in non-Western countries gets media coverage and money that reflects its impact on poorer populations. John, Smallthorne All prejudices be dropped, so people join together to beat AIDS. Amanda, Newcastle People would learn and understand what HIV means and not generalise. Claire, Bristol For there to be equality in all areas of life for all. Anon I never again hear the ignorant words; 'It is a gay disease and it serves them right'. Marie-Luiza, Stoke I hope that my friends with HIV will find ways to live long, happy and productive lives. I also hope that young people have enough self-esteem to use protection and prevent AIDS. Shara, San Francisco

My hope is that people won't be discriminated against. Phillip, Bucknall People would not judge. Karen, Milton

People become more aware of it and try to stop it. Anon A lot of money is raised because it is for a good cause. Anon

A cure for AIDS could be found and also that some sort of vaccination could be found in order to protect against it. Elicia, Middlewich That all who have suffered find peace, that all who are ill will be cured, that all who fight against HIV will succeed and that we will learn something from this tragedy that makes us better persons. Jack, USA Whatever the matter or illness or colour everyone should be treated equally. Anon All people who are HIV positive or have AIDS are treated equally and given the chance to do the most with the life they lead. Anon People will have a further understanding of the emotional problems associated with AIDS and not just the physical aspect. Elaine, Stoke AIDS can be combated and we fight against the HIV virus. Anon I hope that rich countries will be able to help Africa more, although a lot of money must be put in. Alex, Russia

Monetary and political objectives are overcome by the basic human need for a disease free existence. Andy, Stoke

All I want is a cure and my friends back. Brian Wipe out & destroy HIV and AIDS. Matt, Oklahoma

Funds will be allocated to educate all properly and in a positive way about AIDS. Kate, Dresden Care for each other, love each other, heal each other. Darryl, USA My one hope would probably be to find a cure, end the pain. But that's long term, so my immediate hope would be not to lose hope. Keith, Dallas
