Translation of letter received from Richard Furst Kurfursten Street
80 Berlin W, 62 Germany. Dated 18 July Received 20 July 1910.

In reply to your favour of the 13 inst. we are sending you enclosed a copy of Adams' picture from the Art Exhibition and beg to inform you at the same time that the artist John Quincy Adams does not reside in Berlin but in Vienna, 5 Theresien Street. The picture without frame is 210 cm. high and 200 cm. wide. The frame in which the picture is at present put is 20 cm. wide. The price required is 15000 marks. It seems to us however that Adams' or the office will somewhat reduce the price if a serious buyer would apply. All negotiations as regards sale must go through the selling office of the Great Berlin Art Exhibition 1910 of this town. We are prepared with pleasure to give you any further information you would like to have on this matter.

Yours etc.

Aus einer englischen Zeitung erfahre ich, dass auf der gegenwärtig stattfindenden grossen Berliner Kunstausstellung ein Bild eines englischen Künstlers namens John Quincey Adams unter dem Titel "Ein Operationssaal" ausgestellt ist. Sie würden uns zu grossem Dank verpflichten, wenn Sie die Ausstellung einmal besuchen würden, oder einen Vertreter hinsenden wöllten, um mir für Herrn Wellcome eine Beschreibung dieses Bildes zu senden mit Angabe der annähernden Grösse, und, falls Sie dies in Erfahrung bringen können, den vom Künstler dafür verlangten Preis. Irgend eine Beschreibung des Bildes würde uns willkommen sein. Ich bitte Sie auch, während Ihres Besuches in der Ausstellung die nötigen Nachforschungen anzustellen, um die Adresse des Künstlers, der gegenwärtig in Berlin wohnen soll, Ausfindig zu machen.

Ich wäre Ihnen für diese, sowie alle anderen Angaben recht dankbar und empfehle mich

Urgent. Please translate into German and return to the Library.

18th July 1910.

Gentlemen,

At the large Exhibition of modern pictures which is now open in Berlin, I understand from an English newspaper there is a picture by a British artist named John Quincey Adams, entitled "An operating theatre." Would you oblige us by visiting the Exhibition or sending a representative to do so at any spare moment and sending me for Mr. Wellcome a description of this picture, also the approximate size and the price, if it can be ascertained, the artist requires. Any description of the picture you could give would also be an assistance. Could you also make enquiries while at the Exhibition and obtain the address of this artist, who, I understand, is living in Berlin at the present time.

These and any other ~~other~~ details you may be able to furnish will much oblige.

Faithfully yours,

Messrs. Fürst & Co.,
Kurfürsten Strasse, 80,
Berlin. W. II.

particularly good. Grassel and Koester have some clever sunlight pictures of white ducks swimming in the water, and Bergmann, to whom a whole room is devoted, shows a preference for sheep and cattle. His grey moonlight scenes are very poetical, and are a contrast to his spirited sketch of barge horses towing up the river. There is a clever, sunny picture by Vacatko, and some wild-animal studies by Kuhnert.

John Quincey Adams, one of the very few English artists represented, sends an excellent portrait group of himself and family. The artist is sitting in an armchair sketching his little boy, who stands bashful and unclad before him, while his wife and daughter are leaning over his chair watching him at work. The grouping is well thought out, and the colour scheme very successful. There is another large and powerful canvas by the same artist, though the unpleasant subject, "An Operating Chamber," somewhat detracts from the picture. A liquid, airy landscape, "By the Sea," by Emory Leschke, represents the great infinity of clouds and water compared with the two small specks of humanity on the beach. The painting is fresh and decoratively handled. Hans Bartels has a remarkably strong water-colour, "Dutch Fisherwives Awaiting the Return of the Boats," and his other small Dutch interior can also hold its own in spite of the surrounding oil canvases.

Two children's portraits in Room I deserve attention. "A Little Boy," by Burger—a moderate imitation of Mancini—is animated and broadly treated, as is also the delicate child's profile by Von Marr, called "Our Dorli."

Rooms 42 and 43 are devoted entirely to a loan collection of Hungarian pictures, headed by an enormous historical painting of the Austrian Emperor and Empress receiving the allegiance of Hungary. The picture is interesting more for the significance of the event than for its technical value, though among works of its kind it ranks above the average. Hungarian art has not yet found itself; judged as a whole, it is weak and immature; with a few happy exceptions. Some portraits are very good: "An Old Gentleman," by Ballo, "The Lady with the Fan," by Stettka, "The Portrait of a Young Author," by Kurwald, and an unfinished sketch by the well-known Philip László. There is an exquisite Breton seascape by Von Munkácsy, and a romantic moonlight picture of a ruined castle reflected in the water by Kácziany, and some woodland scenes by Von Paal, worth mentioning.

Unfortunately space does not permit me to deal with the sculpture, etchings, or charcoal drawings, which are numerous and interesting; but before conclusion a word of this
