Dear Sirs,

Against the B. H. price,
I do not like having two prices as I detest bargaining. Moreover in time past these items were much more costly.

But under present conditions & lessening of my own activities I will cede the item to you for your offer of 10/6

Dear Sir,

Thanks for sending the copper touch-piece(?) which we have submitted to our client. We must, however, differ with you as regards its use. The copper, and copper and bronze pieces similar to the one you sent were not used as actual touch-pieces, but as tallies for entrance to the ceremony of touching for the King's Evil.

We have had two of these through our hands recently, and are sorry we cannot offer you more than 18/6 for the one you have sent us. If you agree to accept this, we will forward you a cheque by return, but this is our best offer for the same.

Faithfully yours,

Dear Sirs,

As requested I enclose the T. II piece & trust it will suit.

This was used for a
"Touch-piece" & when so was pierced & hung by a riband like the others.

I have occasionally had them so but at very very rare intervals albeit Touch-pieces have been a specialite with me & I have captured most that have offered.

Now & then the gold ones
are met with unpierced.

I assume these copper were used for economical reasons for the poorer subjects, but they only happen in the reign of Chas II.

Dear Sir,

We desire to thank you for reporting the touch-pieces, and we have referred the matter to our client. We find he has a silver James Stuart (James III) already in his collection, but would like to see the copper Charles II. If you will kindly send us the same on approval, we will let you have a decision as early as possible.

Dear Sir,

We desire to thank you for so kindly sending the Night-a bronze specimen, so the one you send is no use to us, and we are returning it herewith.

With reference to the touch pieces, it is the copper one of Charles I that we wish to obtain, but we should be glad to hear of any that you come across so that we might have the refusal of them.

Thanking you in anticipation,

You wrote for the

P.S. Ancient touch - pieces, you refer to the copper one struck in the Stuart period, do you mean the Charles II or the Pretender one?

If the latter it is not of the time but a re-strike from old dies worn out but re-furbished.

Henry J. Wellcome, Esq.

Dear Sir,

Many thanks for your letter of today to which permit me to say it puzzles <sup>me</sup> to understand where you can find an "expert" in my line with a greater or as great a knowledge of the value of coins & medals in an all round way. Now I possess, particularly of items he has probably never met with before!

I began when I was in petticoats & have been best part of my life engaged therein & I give way to no one in my judgement thereof. Only recurrent items can be hazarded to be worth "20 + 20"

There is no logic in prices for one would throw away what another would pay a great deal for!

I only write this to justify myself and to worry you with trifles.

Therefore excuse the trouble
I give you of reading it.

Dear Sir,

In reply to yours of 20th inst., with respect to your remarks about reduction in price, I may say that objects of the kind you submit to me, I always have valued by an expert, who, I have no reason to doubt, appraises the articles at a reasonable price.

It is always open to the vendor to refuse the offer made if he thinks it inadequate.
