

'The military operations at Cabul, which ended in the retreat and destruction of the British Army, January 1842, with a journal of imprisonment in Afghanistan', by Lieutenant Vincent Eyre, Bengal Artillery, late Deputy Commissary of Ordnance at Cabul (Kabul)

Publication/Creation

1843

Persistent URL

<https://wellcomecollection.org/works/vtjun23c>

License and attribution

You have permission to make copies of this work under a Creative Commons, Attribution, Non-commercial license.

Non-commercial use includes private study, academic research, teaching, and other activities that are not primarily intended for, or directed towards, commercial advantage or private monetary compensation. See the Legal Code for further information.

Image source should be attributed as specified in the full catalogue record. If no source is given the image should be attributed to Wellcome Collection.

Wellcome Collection
183 Euston Road
London NW1 2BE UK
T +44 (0)20 7611 8722
E library@wellcomecollection.org
<https://wellcomecollection.org>

Captain Charles Bellew Judge - 1892

~~695~~ RANC (690)

~~15~~

The name of my Grandfather, Captain (75th Regt) H.W. Bellen will be found to be mentioned on pages 43.⁵⁷ 184.¹⁰² 232. 260. 387 of this volume - C.B.T.

R.A.M.C. Historical Museum,
Queen Elizabeth Barracks, Crookham,
Fleet 971. Hants.

From Mr. E. Tilligan

6

THE
MILITARY OPERATIONS AT
C A B U L,

WHICH ENDED IN THE RETREAT AND DESTRUCTION OF THE BRITISH ARMY, JANUARY 1842.

WITH A JOURNAL OF IMPRISONMENT IN AFFGHANISTAN.

BY LIEUT. VINCENT EYRE, BENGAL ARTILLERY,
LATE DEPUTY COMMISSARY OF ORDNANCE AT CABUL.

LONDON:
JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

MDCCCXLIII.

LONDON:
Printed by A. SPOTTISWOODE,
New-Street-Square.

TO
MAJOR-GENERAL W. S. WHISH, C.B.

LATE COMMANDANT OF THE BENGAL ARTILLERY,

This Work is dedicated,

AS A SLIGHT MARK OF ESTEEM FOR HIS PUBLIC AND PRIVATE WORTH,

AND OF GRATITUDE FOR PAST KINDNESSES,

BY

HIS SINCERE FRIEND,

VINCENT EYRE.

NOTICE BY THE EDITOR.

THE original manuscript of this Journal was sent by Lieutenant Eyre in parts, as it was finished, and as opportunity offered, to a military friend in India. Even when the last part reached his hands, the eventual liberation of the Cabul prisoners was a matter of painful uncertainty ; and his judgment prompted him to transmit it entire, and without comment, to the Author's immediate relations in this country. There is a point connected with its publication now, which must not be thought to have been disregarded from any anxiety that this account should be the first : — it is, the question whether it should have been withheld until the result of the inquiry now pending in India should be known. It is considered that sufficient delay has been already incurred to insure this end, and that all such investigations will have been closed before a copy of this book can find its way to India. The Journal is therefore at once printed as it came, in concurrence with the writer's own idea that it cannot fail to interest the British public.

E. E.

Athenæum Club,
Dec. 29. 1842.

PREFACE BY THE AUTHOR.

THE following notes were penned to relieve the monotony of an Affghan prison, while yet the events which they record continued fresh in my memory. I now give them publicity in the belief that the information which they contain on the dreadful scenes lately enacted in Affghanistan, though clothed in a homely garb, will scarcely fail to be acceptable to many of my countrymen, both in India and England, who may be ignorant of the chief particulars. The time, from the 2d November, 1841, on which day the sudden popular outbreak at Cabul took place, to the 13th January, 1842, which witnessed the annihilation of the last small remnant of our unhappy force at Gundamuk, was one continued tragedy. The massacre of Sir Alexander Burnes and his associates, — the loss of our commissariat fort, — the defeat of our troops under Brigadier Shelton at Beymaroo, — the treacherous assassination of Sir William Macnaghten, our envoy and minister, — and lastly, the disastrous retreat and utter destruction* of a force consisting of 5000 fighting men and upwards of 12,000 camp-followers, — are events which will assuredly rouse the British Lion from his repose, and excite an indignant spirit of inquiry in every breast. Men will not be satisfied, in this case, with a bare statement of the facts,

* In the late accounts from Gen. Pollock's army at Cabul, it is stated that the number of skeletons found on the line of march was very small compared with the thousands which had been reported and believed to have perished. But too few have as yet made their appearance to require that the above statement should be qualified. The reader who continues to the end will have little hope that it can ever prove very incorrect. — EDITOR.

but they will doubtless require to be made acquainted with the causes which brought about such awful effects. We have lost six entire regiments of infantry, three companies of sappers, a troop of European horse artillery, half the mountain-train battery, nearly a whole regiment of regular cavalry, and four squadrons of irregular horse, besides a well-stocked magazine, which alone, taking into consideration the cost of transport up to Cabul, may be estimated at nearly a million sterling. From first to last, not less than 104 British officers have fallen: their names will be found in the Appendix. I glance but slightly at the political events of this period, not having been one of the initiated; and I do not pretend to enter into minute particulars with regard to even our military transactions, more especially those not immediately connected with the sad catastrophe which it has been my ill-fortune to witness, and whereof I now endeavour to pourtray the leading features. In these notes I have been careful to state only what I know to be undeniable facts. I have set down nothing on mere hearsay evidence, nor anything which cannot be attested by living witnesses, or by existing documentary evidence. In treating of matters which occurred under my personal observation, it has been difficult to avoid altogether the occasional expression of my own individual opinion: but I hope it will be found that I have made no observations bearing hard on men or measures, that are either uncalled for, or will not stand the test of future investigation. To Major Pottinger, C.B., the well-known hero of Herat, whose subsequent acts have amply sustained the fame which he there acquired, I am much indebted for a great deal of interesting matter relative to the events at Charekar. To Captain Colin Mackenzie of the Madras army, political assistant at Peshawur, my obligations are greater than I can express, for his most valuable aid in the preparation of these notes, as well as for his excellent account of the attack on Brigadier Anquetil's fort, and the sad detail of the Envoy's cruel murder, and the circumstances therewith connected. To Captain Lawrence, late military secretary to the Envoy, and to Captain Troup, late Brigade-Major to the Shah's force, I am likewise bound to offer my best acknowledgments for much important information.

The plan of cantonments and of the surrounding country, being drawn entirely from memory, requires indulgent criticism; but I trust it is sufficiently accurate to give the reader a tolerably correct idea of the nature of our position.

CONTENTS.

INTRODUCTORY CHAPTER.

Internal State of Affghanistan in 1841. — The Eastern Giljyes unsubdued. — Disaffection in Kohistan. — Military Operations there. — March of Gen. Sale from Cabul en route for India. — He is attacked, and has to fight his Way to Jellalabad. — Major Griffiths, escorting him with 37th N. I.; the like, in returning to Cabul. — Our great Foes Ameenollah Khan and Abdoolah Khan. — Character of the Giljyes. — Mistaken Security of our Government. — Premonitory Symptoms disregarded - Page 3

CHAP. I.

Proceedings of November 2d. — Outbreak of the Rebellion. — Murder of Sir A. Burnes, Lieut. Burnes, and Lieut. Broadfoot. — Gen. Elphinstone called upon to act. — Troops ordered from the Camp. — Sir A. Burnes's fatal Security and Incredulity. — Attack on Brigadier Anquetil's Fort. — Murderous Attack on Capt. Lawrence and on Lieut. Sturt. — Irresolute and inefficient Measures on our Part. — Gen. Elphinstone's State of Health, and Incapacity thereby. — His Character. — The Envoy's Misapprehension as to the serious Nature of the Outbreak. — Our defensive Preparations. — Description of Cantonments. — Commissariat Fort. — Camp at Seeah Sung. — Great Faults of our Position - - - 19

CHAP. II.

Nov. 3d to Nov. 10th. — Return of 37th N. I. from escorting Gen. Sale. — Fighting all the way. — Desultory fighting between Cantonment and Bala Hissar. — Reinforcements sent for from Candahar. — Sale recalled. — Murder of Lieuts. Maule and Wheeler. — Attack on Commissariat Fort. — Its inefficient Defence and Abandonment. — Enemy gain Possession of all our Stores. — Great moral Effect of this against us. — Indignation and Eagerness of Troops to retake this Fort. — Ill-concerted Measures for this End, and Failures. — Capture of Mahomed Shereef's Fort. — Sundry Skirmishes without Result. — Mackenzie's Juzailchees. — Our alarming Destitution as to Provisions. — Enemy's Design to starve us out. — The Town cannonaded from Bala Hissar. — Skirmishing about Guns. — Brigadier Shelton sent for to Cantonment - Page 35

CHAP. III.

Nov. 10th to 15th. — Troops dispirited. — Attack on Rikabashee Fort. — Desperate Conflict. — Gallantry of Brigadier Shelton, Major Scott, and Lieut. Bird. — Col. Mackerell slain. — The Fort taken, and four others. — A small Supply thus obtained. — Skirmishes at Seeah Sung. — Action on Western Heights. — Want of Spirit in our Troops. — Enemy's Guns captured. — Bad Practice of our Musketry - - - - 54

CHAP. IV.

Nov. 3d to 15th. — Collateral Events in Kohistan. — Treacherous Murder of Lieut. Rattray at Lughmanee and Attack on Major Pottinger's Fort there. — He is reinforced from Charekar. — Gallantry of Lieut. Haughton — Major Pottinger withdraws to Charekar. — Attack on the Posts

there. — Major P. wounded. — Captain Codrington slain. — The Garrison closely invested. — Their Distress. — Sorties. — Lieut. Haughton treacherously cut down. — They resolve to retire on Cabul. — Dr. Grant's gallant and useful Services. — His Disappearance. — The Force disorganised, drops off, and disperses. — Major P. and Lieut. H. push on for Cabul. — Their painful Journey, and wonderful Escapes. — They reach Cabul. — The Ghoorka Regiment all cut up - - - Page 68

CHAP. V.

Nov. 16th to 23d. — Inconvenience of Cantonment. — Cold setting in. — Question of retiring to Bala Hissar. — Arguments for and against. — Gen. Sale finds Return to Cabul impracticable. — Mahomed Khan's Fort. — Its Importance. — Annoyance from it. — Discussion, and Show of taking it, but left in Enemy's Possession. — Envoy's Communications with Gen. Elphinstone as to Course to be taken. — Village of Beymaroo. — Its Importance to us. — Actions there. — No Result. — Mahomed Akber Khan arrives at Cabul - - - 89

CHAP. VI.

Nov. 23d. — Operations against Beymaroo, under Brigadier Shelton. — Severe Fighting all the Day. — Ends in our Discomfiture and Retirement with great Loss to Cantonments. — Observations on this Day's Errors - 101

CHAP. VII.

Nov. 24th to Dec. 12th. — The Enemy set about destroying the Bridge. — Nothing done to prevent them. — Retirement to the Bala Hissar mooted and argued. — The Enemy offer Terms. — The General advises Negotiation. —

Conference between the Envoy and Chiefs — broken off. — Other more humiliating Terms offered, and rejected. — Attempts, by the Enemy, on the Bala Hissar and on Mahomed Shereef's Fort — repulsed. — Enemy fires into Cantonments. — Bridge wholly destroyed. — No Steps to save it. — Disgraceful Abandonment of Mahomed Shereef's Fort. — Like Conduct of the Shah Bazar Garrison. — Letters between Envoy and General. — Provisions very short. — Steps determined on, but nothing done. — Small Supplies obtained from Bala Hissar. — Negotiations again opened. — Conference between Envoy and Chiefs. — Terms proposed, and agreed to - - Page 118

CHAP. VIII.

Dec. 12th to 24th. — Sir W. Macnaghten and Gen. Elphinstone. — Their respective Conduct and Characters. — Deputation of Chiefs to the Envoy. — Their fresh Propositions. — Evacuation being agreed on, disorderly ransacking of the Magazines. — The Bala Hissar evacuated by our Troops there. — Mahomed Akber's Attempt to seize it. — Delay of the Chiefs in bringing the promised Supplies. — They insist on Evacuation of all the Forts. — These given up. — More Conferences and more Demands of us. — The Relief from Candahar fails. — Preparations for Evacuation. — We give Hostages. — Chiefs help themselves from Magazine. — Envoy sends his Carriage to Mahomed Akber. — New Proposals from him. — Their Purport. — Apology for the Envoy's Conduct in listening to them. — Conference for carrying them out. — Treacherous Seizure of the Party. — Murder of the Envoy and Capt. Trevor. — Other Atrocities - - - 142

CHAP. IX.

From Dec. 2d to Jan. 6th. — Extraordinary Remissness of our People during these Atrocities. — Cowardly Desertion of the Envoy by the Body Guard. — Suspense in Cantonment as to his Fate. — His Death certified. — Major Pottinger takes Political Charge. — Negotiations renewed. — Council of War. — Major Pottinger proposes Retreat to Jellalabad. — This rejected. — Treaty then accepted. — Chiefs demand Hostages. — Six given. — Sick and wounded left. — Some guns given up. — Our Departure postponed from Day to Day. — Appeal of the King against deserting him. — Observations - Page 180

CHAP. X.

Jan. 6th to Jan. 14th. — Preparations for the March. — Extreme cold, &c. — Order of March. — Confusion. — Camp-followers. — Delays. — Plunder and burning of Cantonments. — Attacks on the Force immediately. — Mahomed Akber's treacherous Delays. — Extreme Sufferings of the Troops in every way. — Mahomed Akber takes more Hostages — and the Ladies, &c. — Retreat continues from Jan. 6th to 13th, and ends in Annihilation of the Force - - - - 195

ROUGH NOTES DURING IMPRISONMENT IN AFF-GHANISTAN - - - - 235

APPENDIX :

List of Civil and Military Officers killed during the Rebellion at and near Cabul - - - 321

GLOSSARY.

The following LIST OF WORDS used in this volume, with their meanings, may be useful to the English reader.*

Akukzye, or Atchakzye, the name of one of the great Affghan tribes.

Ameer, commander or chief; title assumed by Dost Mahomed Khan.

Atta, ground wheat.

Ayah, a nurse.

Bala Hissar, royal citadel, upper citadel.

Barukzye, name of one of the five great Dúráni or Dooranee tribes.

Bourge, tower.

Buniah, a trader, generally in grain.

Cafila, a convoy.

Char Chouk, public bazar. Chaháa, or char, means house, the bazar being introduced at right angles in the centre.

Chouk, bazar.

Chuprassie, a servant bearing a badge or brass plate.

Chuppao, a night surprise, or plundering attack.

Cossid, a messenger.

Debashee. Query whether this is an Indian or Kâbul term.

Bashé means principal, as Káfila Bashé, the principal of the convoy, &c.

Dewan Kaneh, hall of audience.

Doohlie, palanquin for carrying sick.

* The Editor, having compiled this in haste from the information of Indian friends, begs that inaccuracies may be excused.

Dooranee, name of five great tribes, the Popul-zai, Barak-zai, Núr-zai, Báirmi-zai, and Abkhu-zai.

Ensofzyes, an Affghan tribe holding the territory north of Pesháwur.

Feringhee, European.

Ghuzee, champion of religion.

Giljye, name of a great Affghan tribe.

Godown, storehouse.

Goorkha, a native of Népâl.

Havildar, a sergeant.

Hazirbash means "Be present."

Hurwah (uncertain); if Khurwah, might mean a weight.

Janbaz, Affghan horse.

Jeergha, council.

Jemandar, a native officer.

Juzail, long rifle.

Juzailchee, rifleman.

Kafir, infidel.

Khan, nobleman: the title in Kâbul is assumed by every one, even the lowest.

Kirkhee, a wicket, window.

Kujawur, a pannier carried on camels.

Kuzzilbash, descendant of the Persians, wearing a red cap.

Lascar, Indian term, an attendant on guns, magazines, &c.

Maund (of grain), 80 lb. weight.

Meerza, an appellation generally given to Mahomedan writers.

Meer Wyze (The) means a teacher; generally conferred on some one eminent for sanctity.

Mehmandar, a man of all work; one who has charge of receiving guests, visitors, &c.

Moollah, priest.

Moonshee, interpreter or secretary.

Musjeed, a temple, place of worship.

Naib, deputy.

Nalkee, a sort of palanquin.

Nazir, steward.

Neencha, coat.

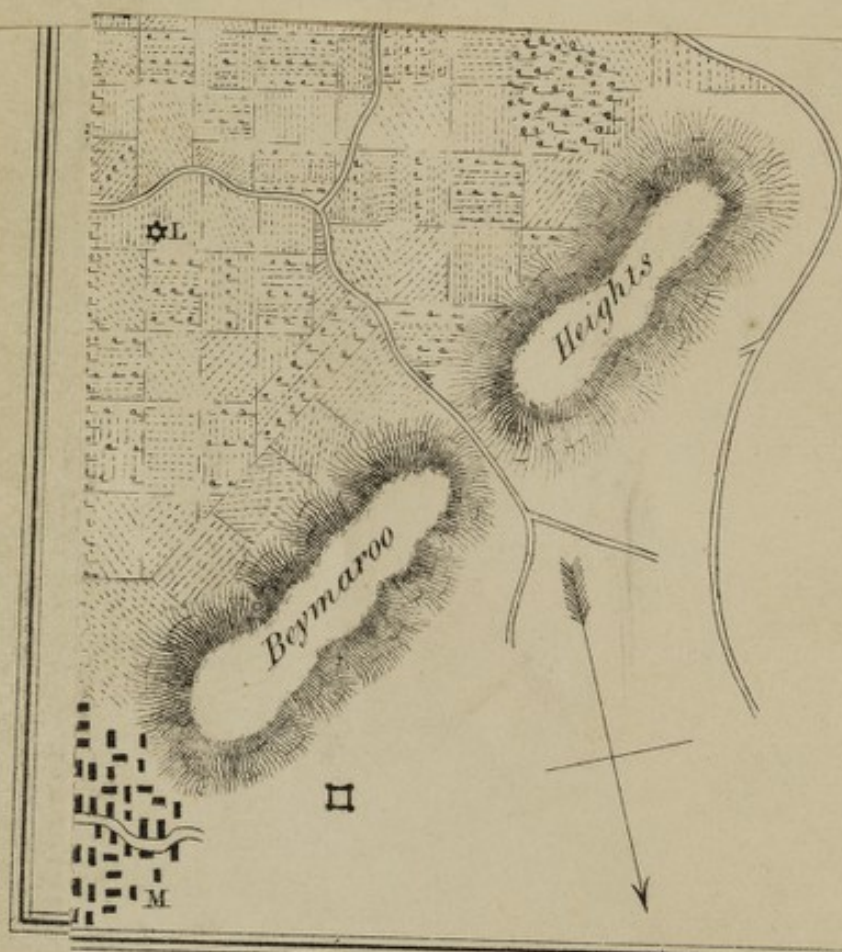

- Nuwab*, prince.
Pilão, a dish of fowl with rice, &c.
Postheen, a sheepskin cloak.
Rajah, prince, an Indian term.
Ressala, a troop.
Sepoy, soldier, an Indian term; always native soldier.
Shah bagh, king's garden.
Shroff, a native banker.
Sirdar, a chief.
Subschoon, or Shub-khoon (the proper term), night surprise.
Sunga, stone breastwork.
Surwon, a man who takes care of camels.
Synd (uncertain); if Sind, the name of a country.
Wuzeer, vizier.
Yaboo, Affghan pony.
Zuna, dwelling; (Kuneh) private dwelling.

- A. Cantonment
- B. Mission Residence
- C. D^o Offices
- D. Magazine Fort (unfinished)
- E. Commissariat Fort
- F. Mahomed Sherief's Fort
- G. Rikabashie Fort
- H. Mahmood Khan's Fort
- I. Zoolficar's Fort
- J. Camp at Seah Sung
- K. King's Garden
- L. Mujeed
- M. Village of Beymaroo
- N. Private Garden
- O. Bazar
- P. Kohistan Gate of City
- Q. Empty Fort near Bridge
- R. Brig. Anquetil's Fort
- S. Magazine in Orchard
- T. Baboo Khan's
- V. Capt. Trevor's Tower
- W. Sir A. Burnes' House
- X. Lahore Gate of City
- Y. Ruins of Serg. Deane's House
- Z. Capt. Johnson's Treasury

* Denotes the spot where the Envoy was murdered.

J. & C. Walker, Lith. 9, Castle St.

OPERATIONS OF
THE BRITISH ARMY
AT CABUL.

NOTES OF OPERATIONS,

ETC.

INTRODUCTORY CHAPTER.

CONDITION OF AFFGHANISTAN IN 1841. — FIRST SYMPTOMS OF DISTURBANCE. — EXPEDITION TO THE ZOORMUT VALLEY. — ARRIVAL OF MAHOMED AKBER KHAN AT BAMEEAN. — FORCE OF THE PASS AT BOOTKHAK. — TREACHERY OF HUMZA KHAN. — PERSONAL DISLIKE OF EUROPEANS EVINCED BY THE AFFGHANS. — MARCH OF GENERAL SALE TO GUNDAMUCK. — INSURRECTION AT CABUL.

WHEN Major-Gen. Elphinstone assumed the command of the troops in Affghanistan in April, 1841, the country enjoyed a state of apparent tranquillity to which it had for many years been a stranger. This remark applies more particularly to those provinces which lie north-east of Ghuznee, comprehending Cabul proper, Kohistan, Jellalabad, and the neighbouring districts. The Giljye tribes, occupying a large portion of the country between Ghuznee and Candahar, had never been properly subdued, and the permanent occupation of Khelat-i-Giljye by our troops had so alarmed their jealous love of independence, as to cause, during the months of July and August, a partial rising of the tribes, which, however, the valour of our Hindoostanee troops, under Colonel Wymer, at Huft-aseer, and of the 5th Bengal Cavalry under Col. Chambers at Mookoor, speedily suppressed. Some of the principal chiefs delivered themselves up as hostages, and quiet was restored. To the west of Candahar, a notorious freebooter, named Akter Khan, having collected about 7000 followers, horse and foot, was signally defeated near Girhisk, on the banks of the Heermund, in the month of July, by a detachment of the Shah's regular troops under Capt. Woodburn, consisting of only one infantry regiment, two H. A. guns, under Lieut. Cooper, besides two regiments of Janbaz, or Affghan horse: the latter, however, behaved ill, and can hardly be said to have shared in the glory of the unequal conflict. Capt. Griffin, with the Bengal 2d Native Infantry, was, a few days after, equally successful in an attack on the enemy in the same quarter. Akter Khan fled to the hills with a few followers, and the land again enjoyed repose. Kohistan, whose wild and turbulent chiefs had sturdily maintained their independence against the late ruler, Dost Mahommed Khan, seemed at last to have settled down into a state of quiet, though unwilling, subjection to Shah Shoojah. The Nijrow chiefs formed an almost solitary exception to this show of outward submission; and Sir William Macnaghten had strongly urged upon Lord Auckland, at an early period of the year, the expediency of sending a force into that country as soon as practicable. Since our first occupation of Cabul, Nijrow had become a resort for all such restless and discontented characters as had rendered themselves obnoxious to the existing government. The fact of our having permitted them so long to brave us with impunity, had doubtless been regarded by the secret enemies of the new rule as a mark of conscious weakness, and may have encouraged them, in no slight degree, to hatch those treasonable designs against the state which were so suddenly developed in November, 1841, and which were for the time, unhappily, but too successful.

Major Pottinger, having been appointed political agent in Kohistan, arrived from Calcutta in May, 1841, and was one of the first to prognosticate the coming storm. He lost no time in representing to the Envoy the insufficiency of our military force in Kohistan, consisting at that time of merely two 6-pounder guns, and the Kohistanee regiment raised by Lieut. Maule of the Bengal Artillery; which excellent young officer was, on the first outbreak of the rebellion, cruelly butchered by his own men, or, which is the same thing, with their consent. This regiment was stationed at Charekar, a post of no strength, and ill adapted for making a protracted defence, as was afterwards proved. The Major was, however, considered in the light of an alarmist, and he only succeeded in procuring a few Hazirbash horsemen and a 17-pounder gun, with a small detachment of the Shah's artillery, and a very scanty supply of ammunition.

About the end of September, Major Pottinger came to Cabul for the purpose of impressing on the Envoy that, unless strong measures of prevention were speedily adopted, he considered a rise in Kohistan as in the highest degree probable. His apprehensions were considered by the Envoy as not altogether unfounded, and he was empowered to retain as hostages the sons of the leading chiefs, whose fidelity he suspected. The first interruption to the state of outward tranquillity, which I have described above, occurred early in September. Capt. Hay, in command of some Hazirbashes, and Lieut. Maule, with his Kohistanee regiment, (which had been relieved at Charekar by the Goorkah, or 4th regiment, Shah's subsidized force officered from the line, under Capt. Codrington,) and two 6-pounder guns, had been sent into the Zoormut valley to collect the annual revenue, with orders likewise to make an attempt to seize certain noted plunderers, among whom were some of the murderers of Col. Herring, who had long infested the road between Ghuznee and Cabul. The revenue was in the course of being quietly paid, when Capt. Hay was mischievously informed by Moollah Momin, collector of revenue in Zoormut (who shortly after distinguished himself as one of our bitterest foes), that the men, whom he wished to seize, were harboured in a certain neighbouring fort of no strength whatever, and that the inhabitants would doubtless give them up rather than risk a rupture with the government. Capt. Hay immediately proceeded thither, but found the place much stronger than he had been led to expect, and the people obstinately prepared to resist his demands. On approaching the fort, he was fired upon; and finding the six-pounder shot, of which he gave a few rounds in return, made no impression on the mud walls, he had no alternative but to retreat.

The Envoy, on receiving Capt. Hay's report, immediately despatched a sufficient force to punish the rebels. It consisted of 200 of H. M. 44th Inf., 5th N. I., 6th regt. S. S. F., 4 guns of Abbot's battery, 2 iron nine-pounders mountain train, 2 comp. Shah's Sappers, and 2 squadrons of Anderson's horse. These were under the command of Lieut.-Col. Oliver, and were accompanied by Capt. G. H. Macgregor, the political agent at Gundamuck, who happened to be then at Cabul on business. The force commenced its march on the 27th September, and reached the Zoormut valley without the slightest interruption. On the approach of our troops the rebels had fled to the hills in the greatest consternation, leaving their forts at our mercy. The principal strongholds were destroyed with powder, and the force prepared to return to Cabul.

Meanwhile the hydra of rebellion had reared its head in another far more formidable quarter. Early in October three Giljye chiefs of note suddenly quitted Cabul, after plundering a rich Cafila at Tezeen, and took up a strong position in the difficult defile of Khoord-Cabul, about ten miles from the capital, thus blocking up the pass, and cutting off our communication with Hindostan. Intelligence had not very long previously been received that Mahomed Akber Khan, second son of the ex-ruler Dost Mahomed Khan, had arrived at Bameean from Khooloom for the supposed purpose of carrying on intrigues against the government. It is remarkable that he is nearly connected by marriage with Mahomed

Shah Khan and Dost Mahomed Khan*, also Giljyes, who almost immediately joined the above-mentioned chiefs. Mahomed Akber had, since the deposition of his father, never ceased to foster feelings of intense hatred towards the English nation; and, though often urged by the fallen ruler to deliver himself up, had resolutely preferred the life of a houseless exile to one of mean dependence on the bounty of his enemies. It seems therefore in the highest degree probable that this hostile movement on the part of the Eastern Giljyes was the result of his influence over them, combined with other causes which will be hereafter mentioned. The march of Gen. Sale's brigade to their winter quarters at Jellalabad, and ultimately to India, had only been deferred until the return of the force from Zoormut, but was now hastened in consequence of this unwelcome news. On the 9th October the 35th regt. N. I. under Col. Monteath, C.B., 100 of the Shah's Sappers under Capt. G. Broadfoot, a squadron of the 5th cavalry under Capt. Oldfield, and 2 guns of Capt. Abbott's battery under Lieut. Dawes, were sent on in advance to the entrance of the pass at Bootkhak, where, on the following night, it was attacked by a large number of rebels, who, taking advantage of the high ground and deep ravines in the neighbourhood of the camp, maintained a sharp fire upon it for several hours, by which 35 Sepoys were killed and wounded.

* This chief must not be confounded with the ex-ruler of the same name.

On the morning of the 11th Gen. Sale marched from Cabul with H. M. 13th Lt. Inf. to join the camp at Bootkhak, and on the following morning the whole proceeded to force the pass. Intelligence had been received that the enemy, besides occupying the heights of this truly formidable defile, which in many places approach to within fifty yards of each other, rising up almost perpendicularly to an elevation of 500 or 600 feet, had erected a sunga, or stone breastwork, in the narrowest part of the gorge, flanked by a strong tower. The advance guard, consisting of the Shah's Sappers, a company of H. M. 13th foot, another of the 35th N. I., and 2 guns under Lieut. Dawes, was met about midway through the pass, which is nearly five miles long, by a sharp and continued discharge of juzails from the strong posts of the enemy. This was returned by our men with precision and effect, notwithstanding the disadvantages of their situation; flanking parties gallantly struggled up the height to dislodge the enemy from thence, while the Sappers rushed on to destroy the above-mentioned breast-work: through this, however, the stream which flows down the middle of the defile had already forced a passage; and, as the enemy abandoned it, as well as the flanking tower, on the approach of our troops, Lieut. Dawes passed his guns through the interval at full speed, getting them under the shelter of a rock beyond the sustained and murderous fire of the enemy's juzailchees, it being impossible to elevate the guns sufficiently to bear upon them. The flankers did their duty nobly, and the fight had lasted for about half an hour, during which the conduct of the Shah's Sappers under Capt. Broadfoot was creditable in the highest degree, when the approach of the main column under Gen. Sale, who had been already shot through the leg, enabled Capt. Seaton of the 35th regiment, who commanded the advance guard, to push on. This he did, running the gauntlet to the end of the pass, by which time the enemy, fearful of being taken in rear, abandoned their position, and retired towards Kubbur-i-Jubbar, on the road to Tezeen. The 35th regiment, Shah's Sappers, Lieut. Dawes's guns, and a party of Hazirbash under Capt. Trevor, encamped at Khoord-Cabul, H. M.'s 13th Lt. Inf. returning to Bootkhak. During their return, parties who still lurked among the rocks fired upon the column, thereby doing some mischief.

In these positions the divided force remained encamped for several days, awaiting the return to Cabul of the troops from Zoormut. During this time several shub-khoons, or night attacks, were made on the two camps, that on the 35th regiment at Khoord-Cabul being peculiarly disastrous from the treachery of the Affghan horse, who admitted the enemy within their lines, by which our troops were exposed to a fire from the least suspected quarter: many of our gallant Sepoys and Lieut. Jenkins thus met their death.

On the 20th October, Gen. Sale moved with his force to Khoord-Cabul, having been previously joined by the 37th regiment under Major Griffiths, Capt. Abbot's guns, the mountain train under Capt. Backhouse, 100 of Anderson's irregular horse under Lieut. Mayne, and the remainder of the Shah's sappers and miners. About the 22d the whole force there assembled, with Capt. Macgregor, political agent, marched to Tezeen, encountering much determined opposition on the road.

By this time it was too evident that the whole of the eastern Giljyes had risen in one common league against us. Their governor, or viceroy, Humza Khan, had in the interval gone forth under pretence of bringing back the chiefs to their allegiance; on his return, however, which took place nearly at the time at which Gen. Sale marched from Khoord-Cabul, the treacherous nature of his proceedings had been discovered, and he was placed by the Shah in confinement: he was suspected, indeed, before. Gen. Sale remained at Tezeen until the 26th October.

It must be remarked that, for some time previous to these overt acts of rebellion, the always strong and ill-repressed personal dislike of the Affghans towards Europeans had been manifested in a more than usually open manner in and about Cabul. Officers had been insulted and attempts made to assassinate them. Two Europeans had been murdered, as also several camp followers; but these and other signs of the approaching storm had unfortunately been passed over as mere ebullitions of private angry feeling. This incredulity and apathy is the more to be lamented, as it was pretty well known that on the occasion of the shub-khoon, or first night attack on the 35th N. I. at Bootkhak, a large portion of our assailants consisted of the armed retainers of the different men of consequence in Cabul itself, large parties of whom had been seen proceeding from the city to the scene of action on the evening of the attack, and afterwards returning. Although these men had to pass either through the heart or round the skirts of our camp at Seeah Sung, it was not deemed expedient even to question them, far less to detain them.

On the 26th October, Gen. Sale started in the direction of Gundamuck, Capt. Macgregor, political agent, having, during the halt at Tezeen, half frightened half cajoled the refractory Giljye chiefs into what the sequel proved to have been a most hollow truce; for the term treaty can scarcely be applied to any agreement made with men so proverbially treacherous as the whole race of Affghans have proved themselves to be from our first knowledge of their existence up to the present moment. Of the difficulties experienced by Gen. Sale during his march to Gundamuck, and of the necessity which induced him subsequently to push on to Jellalabad, the public are aware. On the day of his departure from Tezeen the 37th N. I., 3 companies of the Shah's sappers, under Capt. Walsh, and 3 guns of the mountain train, under Lieut. Green, retraced their steps towards Cabul, and encamped at Kubbur-i-Jubbar, to wait as an escort to the sick and convalescent. The sappers continued their march back to Cabul unopposed; the rest remained here unmolested until the 1st November, when they broke ground for Khoord-Cabul. Here, in the afternoon of the 2d, Major Griffiths, who commanded the detachment, received a peremp-tory order from Gen. Elphinstone to force his way without loss of time to Cabul, where the insurrection had already broken out in all its violence. While striking his camp he was attacked by the mountaineers, who now began to assemble on the neighbouring heights in great numbers; and his march through the pass from Bootkhak to Cabul was one continued conflict, nothing saving him from heavy loss but the steadiness and gallantry of his troops, and the excellence of his own dispositions. He arrived in cantonments before daybreak on the morning of the 3d November.

The two great leaders of the rebellion were Ameenollah Khan, the chief of Logue, and Abdoollah Khan, Achukzye, a chief of great influence, and possessing a large portion of the Pisheen valley.

Ameenollah Khan had hitherto been considered one of the staunchest friends of the existing government; and such was the confidence placed in him by the wuzeer, that he had selected him to take charge of Humza Khan, the lately superseded governor of the Giljyes, as a prisoner to Ghuznee. This man now distinguished himself as one of our most inveterate enemies. To illustrate the character of his coadjutor, Abdoollah Khan, it will be sufficient to relate the following anecdote. In order to get rid of his elder brother, who stood between him and the inheritance, he caused him to be seized and buried up to the chin in the earth. A rope was then fastened round his neck, and to the end of it was haltered a wild horse: the animal was then driven round in a circle, until the unhappy victim's head was twisted from his shoulders. This same man is also mentioned in terms of just abhorrence by Capt. A. Conolly in his Travels.

But though the two above-named chiefs took a leading part in the rebellion, there can be little doubt that it had its origin in the deep offence given to the Giljyes by the ill-advised reduction of their annual stipends — a measure which had been forced upon Sir William Macnaghten by Lord Auckland. This they considered, and with some show of justice, as a breach of faith on the part of our government: at all events, that was surely mistaken economy which raised into hostility men, whose determined spirit under a sense of wrong the following anecdote may illustrate. When oppressed by Nadir Shah, the Giljye tribes, rather than succumb to the tyrant's will, took refuge in the mountains amidst the snow, where with their families they fed for months on roots alone: of these they sent a handful to Nadir, with the message, that, so long as such roots could be procured, they would continue to resist his tyranny. Such were many of the men now leagued together by one common feeling of hatred against us.

A passage occurring in a posthumous memorandum by the Envoy, now in Lady Macnaghten's possession, requires insertion here.

“The immediate cause of the outbreak in the capital was a seditious letter addressed by Abdoollah Khan to several chiefs of influence at Cabul, stating that it was the design of the Envoy to seize and send them all to London! The principal rebels met on the previous night, and, relying on the inflammable feelings of the people of Cabul, they pretended that the king had issued an order to put all infidels to death; having previously forged an order from him for our destruction, by the common process of washing out the contents of a genuine paper, with the exception of the seal, and substituting their own wicked inventions.”

Such at least is the generally received version of the story, though persons are not wanting who would rashly pronounce the king guilty of the design imputed to him.

But, however that may be, it is certain that the events, which I have already narrated, ought to have been enough to arouse the authorities from their blind security. It ought, however, to be stated that, alarmed by certain symptoms of disaffection in different parts of the country, and conscious of the inadequacy of the means he then possessed to quell any determined and general insurrection, Sir William had, a few months previously, required the presence of several more regiments: he was however induced to cancel this wise precautionary measure. But, even had this additional force arrived, it is next to certain that the loss of British honour, subsequently sustained, could only have been deferred for a period. A fearfully severe lesson was necessary to remove the veil from the eyes of those, who, drawing their conclusions from their wishes, would consider Affghanistan as a settled country. It is but justice to Sir William Macnaghten to say that such recommendations from him as were incompatible with the retrenching system were not received at head-quarters in a way encouraging to him as a public officer.

CHAPTER I.

MURDER OF SIR ALEXANDER BURNES. — UNHAPPY WANT OF PROMPTITUDE IN CHECKING THE REBELLION. — ATTACK ON CAPT. LAWRENCE AND LIEUT. STURT. — CHARACTER OF GEN. ELPHINSTONE. — UNMILITARY POSITION AND CONSTRUCTION OF THE CANTONMENT AT CABUL.

November 2d, 1841. — At an early hour this morning, the startling intelligence was brought from the city, that a popular outbreak had taken place; that the shops were all closed; and that a general attack had been made on the houses of all British officers residing in Cabul. About 8 A. M. a hurried note was received by the Envoy in cantonments from Sir Alexander Burnes*, stating that the minds of the people had been strongly excited by some mischievous reports, but expressing a hope that he should succeed in quelling the commotion. About 9 A. M., however, a rumour was circulated, which afterwards proved but too well founded, that Sir Alexander had been murdered, and Capt. Johnson's treasury plundered. Flames were now seen to issue from that part of the city where they dwelt, and it was too apparent that the endeavour to appease the people by quiet means had failed, and that it would be necessary to have recourse to stronger measures. The report of firearms was incessant, and seemed to extend through the town from end to end.

* The Envoy lived in the cantonment, and Sir A. Burnes in the city.

Sir William Macnaghten now called upon Gen. Elphinstone to act. An order was accordingly sent to Brigadier Shelton, then encamped at Seeah Sung, about a mile and half distant from cantonments, to march forthwith to the Bala His-sar, or royal citadel, where his Majesty Shah Shooja resided, commanding a large portion of the city, with the following troops; viz. one company of H. M. 44th foot; a wing of the 54th regiment N. I., under Major Ewart; the 6th regiment Shah's infantry, under Capt. Hopkins; and 4 horse artillery guns, under Capt. Nicholl; and on arrival there to act according to his own judgment, after consulting with the King.

The remainder of the troops encamped at Seeah Sung were at the same time ordered into cantonments; viz. H. M. 44th foot under Lieut-Col. Mackerell; 2 horse artillery guns under Lieut. Waller; and Anderson's irregular horse. A messenger was likewise despatched to recall the 37th

N. I. from Khoord-Cabul without delay. The troops at this time in cantonments were as follows: viz. 5th regiment N. I., under Lieut.-Col. Oliver; a wing of 54th N. I.; 5 six-pounder field guns, with a detachment of the Shah's artillery, under Lieut. Warburton; the Envoy's body-guard; a troop of Skinner's horse, and another of local horse, under Lieut. Walker; three companies of the Shah's sappers, under Capt. Walsh; and about 20 men of the Company's sappers, attached to Capt. Paton, Assist.-Qr.-Mast.-Gen.

Widely spread and formidable as this insurrection proved to be afterwards, it was at first a mere insignificant ebullition of discontent on the part of a few desperate and restless men, which military energy and promptitude ought to have crushed in the bud. Its commencement was an attack by certainly not 300 men on the dwellings of Sir Alexander Burnes and Capt. Johnson, paymaster to the Shah's force; and so little did Sir Alexander himself apprehend serious consequences, that he not only refused, on its first breaking out, to comply with the earnest entreaties of the wuzer to accompany him to the Bala Hissar, but actually forbade his guard to fire on the assailants, attempting to check what he supposed to be a mere riot, by haranguing the attacking party from the gallery of his house.

The result was fatal to himself; for, in spite of the devoted gallantry of the Sepoys, who composed his guard, and that of the paymaster's office and treasury on the opposite side of the street, who yielded their trust only with their latest breath, the latter were plundered, and his two companions, Lieut. William Broadfoot of the Bengal European regiment, and his brother Lieut. Burnes of the Bombay army, were massacred, in common with every man, woman, and child found on the premises, by these bloodthirsty miscreants. Lieut. Broadfoot killed five or six men with his own hand, before he was shot down.

No man, surely, in a highly responsible public situation—especially in such a one as that held by the late Sir Alexander Burnes—ought ever to indulge in a state of blind security, or to neglect salutary warnings, however small. It is indisputable that such warnings had been given to him; especially by a respectable Affghan named Taj-Mahomed, on the very previous night, who went in person to Sir A. Burnes to put him on his guard, but retired disgusted by the incredulity with which his assertions were received. It is not for me to comment on his public character. It is the property of the civilized portion of the world; but it is due to another, little known beyond the immediate sphere in which he moved, to say that, had this outbreak been productive of no effects beyond the death of Lieut. William Broadfoot, it could not be sufficiently deplored : in him was lost to the state not only one of its bravest and most intelligent officers, but a man who for honesty of purpose and soundness of judgment, I may boldly aver, could not be surpassed.

The King, who was in the Bala Hissar, being somewhat startled by the increasing number of the rioters, although not at the time aware, so far as we can judge, of the assassination of Sir A. Burnes, despatched one of his sons with a number of his immediate Affghan retainers, and that corps of Hindoostanees commonly called Campbell's regiment, with two guns, to restore order : no support, however, was rendered to these by our troops, whose leaders appeared so thunderstruck by the intelligence of the outbreak, as to be incapable of adopting more than the most puerile defensive measures. Even Sir William Macnaghten seemed, from a note received at this time from him by Captain Trevor, to apprehend little danger, as he therein expressed his perfect confidence as to the speedy and complete success of Campbell's Hindoostanees in putting an end to the disturbance. Such, however, was not the case ; for the enemy, encouraged by our inaction, increased rapidly in spirit and numbers, and drove back the king's guard with great slaughter, the guns being with difficulty saved.

It must be understood that Capt. Trevor lived at this time with his family in a strong bourge, or tower, situated by the river side, near the Kuzzilbash quarter, which, on the west, is wholly distinct from the remainder of the city. Within musket shot, on the opposite side of the river, in the direction of the strong and populous village of Deh Affghan, is a fort of some size, then used as a godown, or storehouse, by the Shah's commissariat, part of it being occupied by Brigadier Anquetil, commanding the Shah's force. Close to this fort, divided by a narrow watercourse, was the house of Capt. Troup, Brigade Major of the Shah's force, perfectly defensible against musketry. Both Brigadier Anquetil and Capt. Troup had gone out on horseback early in the morning towards cantonments, and were unable to return; but the above fort and house contained the usual guard of Sepoys; and in a garden close at hand called the Yaboo-Khaneh, or lines of the baggage-cattle, was a small detachment of the Shah's sappers and miners, and a party of Captain Ferris's juzailchees. Capt. Trevor's tower was capable of being made good against a much stronger force than the rebels at this present time could have collected, had it been properly garrisoned.

As it was, the Hazirbash, or King's life-guards, were, under Capt. Trevor, congregated round their leader, to protect him and his family; which duty, it will be seen, they well performed under very trying circumstances. For what took place in this quarter I beg to refer to a communication made to me at my request by Capt. Colin Mackenzie, Assistant Political Agent at Peshawur, who then occupied the godown portion of the fort above mentioned, which will be found hereafter.*

I have already stated that Brigadier Shelton was early in the day directed to proceed with part of the Seeah Sung force to occupy the Bala Hissar, and, if requisite, to lead his troops against the insurgents. Capt. Lawrence, military secretary to the Envoy, was at the same time sent forward to prepare the King for that officer's reception. Taking with him four troopers of the body-guard, he was galloping along the main road, when, shortly after crossing the river, he was suddenly attacked by an Affghan, who, rushing from behind

* I am sorry to say that this document has not reached me with the rest of the manuscript. I have not struck out the reference, because there is hope that it still exists, and may be yet appended to this narrative. The loss of any thing else from Capt. Mackenzie's pen will be regretted by all who read his other communication, the account of the Envoy's murder. — EDITOR.

a wall, made a desperate cut at him with a large two-handed knife. He dexterously avoided the blow by spurring his horse on one side; but, passing onwards, he was fired upon by about fifty men, who, having seen his approach, ran out from the Lahore gate of the city to intercept him. He reached the Bala Hissar safe, where he found the King apparently in a state of great agitation, he having witnessed the assault from the window of his palace. His Majesty expressed an eager desire to conform to the Envoy's wishes in all respects in this emergency.

Capt. Lawrence was still conferring with the King, when Lieut. Sturt, our executive engineer, rushed into the palace, stabbed in three places about the face and neck. He had been sent by Brigadier Shelton to make arrangements for the accommodation of the troops, and had reached the gate of the Dewan Khaneh, or hall of audience, when the attempt at his life was made by some one who had concealed himself there for that purpose, and who immediately effected his escape. The wounds were fortunately not dangerous, and Lieut. Sturt was conveyed back to cantonments in the king's own palanquin, under a strong escort. Soon after this, Brig. Shelton's force arrived; but the day was suffered to pass without any thing being done demonstrative of British energy and power. The murder of our countrymen, and the spoliation of public and private property, was perpetrated with impunity within a mile of our cantonment, and under the very walls of the Bala Hissar.

Such an exhibition on our part taught the enemy their strength — confirmed against us those who, however disposed to join in the rebellion, had hitherto kept aloof from prudential motives, and ultimately encouraged the nation to unite as one man for our destruction.

It was, in fact, the crisis of all others calculated to test the qualities of a military commander. Whilst, however, it is impossible for an unprejudiced person to approve the military dispositions of this eventful period, it is equally our duty to discriminate. The most responsible party is not always the most culpable. It would be the height of injustice to a most amiable and gallant officer not to notice the long course of painful and wearing illness, which had materially affected the nerves, and probably even the intellect, of Gen. Elphinstone; cruelly incapacitating him, so far as he was personally concerned, from acting in this sudden emergency with the promptitude and vigour necessary for our preservation. Major-Gen. Elphinstone had some time before represented to Lord Auckland the shattered state of his health, stating plainly and honestly that it had unfitted him to continue in command, and requesting permission to resign. Lord Auckland at first pressed him to remain, but ultimately acceded to his wishes; and the General was on the point of returning to India, thence to embark for England, when the rebellion unhappily broke out. No one, who knew Gen. Elphinstone, could fail to esteem his many excellent qualities both in public and private life. To all under his command, not excepting the youngest subaltern, he was ever accessible, and in the highest degree courteous and considerate: nor did he ever exhibit, either in word or practice, the slightest partiality for officers of his own service over those of the Company. His professional knowledge was extensive; and, before disease had too much impaired his frame for active exertion, he had zealously applied himself to improve and stimulate every branch of the service. He had, indeed, but one unhappy fault as a general — the result, probably, of age and infirmity — and this was a want of confidence in his own judgment, leading him to prefer every body's opinion to his own, until, amidst the conflicting views of a multitude of counsellors, he was at a loss which course to take. Hence much of that indecision, procrastination, and want of method, which paralyzed all our efforts, gradually demoralised the troops, and ultimately, not being redeemed by the qualities of his second in command, proved the ruin of us all. I might add that, during the siege, no one exposed his person more fearlessly or frequently to the enemy's fire than Gen. Elphinstone: but his gallantry was never doubted. Unhappily, Sir William Macnaghten at first made light of the insurrection, and, by his representations as to the general feeling of the people towards us, not only deluded himself, but misled the General in council. The unwelcome truth was soon forced upon us, that in the whole Affghan nation, we could not reckon on a single friend.

But though no active measures of aggression were taken, all necessary preparations were made to secure the cantonment against attack. It fell to my own lot to place every available gun in position round the works. Besides the guns already mentioned, we had in the magazine 6 nine-pounder iron guns, 3 twenty-four pounder howitzers, 1 twelve-pounder ditto, and 3 5½-inch mortars; but the detail of artillerymen fell very short of what was required to man all these efficiently, consisting of only 80 Punjabees belonging to the Shah, under Lieut. Warburton, very insufficiently instructed, and of doubtful fidelity.

To render our position intelligible, it is necessary to describe the cantonment, or fortified lines so called. It is uncertain whether, for the faults which I am about to describe, any blame justly attaches to Lieut. Sturt, the engineer, a talented and sensible officer, but who was often obliged to yield his better judgment to the spirit of false economy which characterised our Affghan policy. The credit, however, of having selected a site for the cantonments, or controlled the execution of its works, is not a distinction now likely to be claimed exclusively by any one. But it must always remain a wonder that any Government, or any officer or set of officers, who had either science or experience in the field, should, in a half-conquered country, fix their forces (already inadequate to the services to which they might be called) in so extraordinary and injudicious a military position. Every engineer officer who had been consulted, since the first occupation of Cabul by our troops, had pointed to the Bala Hissar as the only suitable place for a garrison which was to keep in subjection the city and the surrounding country; but, above all, it was surely the only proper site for the magazine, on which the army's efficiency depended. In defiance, however, of rule and precedent, the position eventually fixed upon for our magazine and cantonment was a piece of low swampy ground, commanded on all sides by hills or forts. It consisted of a low rampart and a narrow ditch in the form of a parallelogram, thrown up along the line of the Kohistan road, 1000 yards long and 600 broad, with round flanking bastions at each corner, every one of which was commanded by some fort or hill. To one end of this work was attached a space nearly half as large again, and surrounded by a simple wall. This was called the "Mission Compound:" half of it was appropriated for the residence of the Envoy, the other half being crowded with buildings, erected without any attempt at regularity, for the accommodation of the officers and assistants of the mission, and the Envoy's body-guard. This large space required in time of siege to be defended, and thus materially weakened the garrison; while its very existence rendered the whole face of the cantonment, to which it was annexed, nugatory for purposes of defence. Besides these disadvantages, the lines were a great deal too extended, so that the ramparts could not be properly manned without harassing the garrison. On the eastern side, about a quarter of a mile off, flowed the Cabul river in a direction parallel with the Kohistan road. Between the river and cantonments, about 150 yards from the latter, was a wide canal. Gen. Elphinstone, on his arrival in April, 1841, perceived at a glance the utter unfitness of the cantonment for purposes of protracted defence, and when a new fort was about to be built for the magazine on the south side, he liberally offered to purchase for the government, out of his own funds, a large portion of the land in the vicinity, with the view of removing some very objectionable inclosures and gardens, which offered shelter to our enemy within two hundred yards of our ramparts; but neither was his offer accepted, nor were his representations on the subject attended with any good result. He lost no time, however, in throwing a bridge over the river, in a direct line between the cantonments and the Seeah Sung camp, and in rendering the bridge over the canal passable for guns; which judicious measure shortened the distance for artillery and infantry by at least two miles, sparing, too, the necessity which existed previously of moving to and fro by the main road, which was commanded by three or four forts, as well as from the city walls. Moreover, the Cabul River being liable to sudden rises, and almost always unfordable during the rainy season (March and April), it will easily be understood that the erection of this bridge was a work of much importance. But the most unaccountable oversight of all, and that which may be said to have contributed most largely to our subsequent disasters, was that of having the commissariat stores detached from cantonments, in an old fort which, in an outbreak, would be almost indefensible. Capt. Skinner, the chief commissariat officer, at the time when this arrangement was made, earnestly solicited from the authorities a place within the cantonment for his stores, but received for answer that "no such place could be given him, as they were far too busy in erecting barracks for the men to think of commissariat stores." The Envoy himself pressed this point very urgently, but without avail. At the south-west angle of cantonments was the bazar village, surrounded by a low wall, and so crowded with mud huts as to form a perfect maze. Nearly opposite, with only the high road between, was the small fort of Mahomed Shereef, which perfectly commanded our south-west bastion. Attached to this fort was the Shah Bagh, or King's garden, surrounded by a high wall, and comprising a space of about half a square mile. About two hundred yards higher up the road towards the city, was the commissariat fort, the gate of which stood very nearly opposite the entrance of the Shah Bagh. There were various other forts at different points of our works, which will be mentioned in the course of events. On the east, at the distance of about a mile, was a range of low hills dividing us from the Seeah Sung camp; and on the west, about the same distance off, was another somewhat higher range, at the north-east flank of which, by the road-side, was the village of Beymaroo, commanding a great part of the Mission Compound. In fact, we were so hemmed in on all sides, that, when the rebellion became general, the troops could not move out a dozen paces from either gate, without being exposed to the fire of some neighbouring hostile fort, garrisoned too by marksmen who seldom missed their aim. The country around us was likewise full of impediments to the movements of artillery and cavalry, being in many places flooded, and every where closely intersected by deep water-cuts.

I cannot help adding, in conclusion, that almost all the calamities that befel our ill-starred force may be traced more or less to the defects of our position; and that our cantonment at Cabul, whether we look to its situation or its construction, must ever be spoken of as a disgrace to our military skill and judgment.

CHAP. II.

THE 37TH REGIMENT ATTACKED ON ITS RETURN FROM KHOORD-CABUL. — MURDER OF LIEUTS. MAULE AND WHEELER. — LOSS OF THE COMMISSARIAT FORT. — THE GENERAL'S INDECISION. — MAJOR THAIN AND CAPT. PATON. — SUCCESSFUL ATTACK ON THE FORT OF MAHOMED SHEREEF. — ENGAGEMENTS WITH AFFGHAN HORSE AND FOOT. — THE ENEMY'S PLAN TO REDUCE THE BRITISH BY STARVATION. — BRIGADIER SHELTON SENT FOR FROM BALA HISSAR.

November 3d. — AT 3 A. M. the alarm was sounded at the eastern gate of cantonments, in consequence of a brisk file-firing in the direction of Seeah Sung, which turned out to proceed from the 37th regiment N. I. on its return from Khoord-Cabul, having been closely followed up the whole way by a body of about 3000 Giljyes. The regiment managed, nevertheless, to save all its baggage excepting a few tents, which were left on the ground for want of carriage, and to bring in all the wounded safe.

A more orderly march was never made under such trying circumstances, and it reflects the highest credit on Major Griffiths and all concerned. This regiment was a valuable acquisition to our garrison, being deservedly esteemed one of the best in the service. Three guns of the mountain train under Lieut. Green accompanied them, and were of the greatest use in defending the rear on the line of march. In consequence of their arrival, a reinforcement was sent into the Bala Hissar, consisting of the left wing 54th N. I., with Lieut. Green's guns, 1 iron nine-pounder, 1 twenty-four-pounder howitzer, 2 $5\frac{1}{2}$ -inch mortars, and a supply of magazine stores. They all reached it in safety, though a few shots were fired at the rear-guard from some orchards near the city. Brigadier Shelton was ordered to maintain a sharp fire upon the city from the howitzers and guns, and to endeavour to fire the houses by means of shells and carcasses from the two mortars; should he also find it practicable to send a force into the city, he was to do so.

Early in the afternoon, a detachment under Major Swayne, consisting of two companies 5th N. I., one of H. M. 44th, and 2 H. A. guns under Lieut. Waller, proceeded out of the western gate towards the city, to effect, if possible, a junction at the Lahore gate with a part of Brigadier Shelton's force from the Bala Hissar. They drove back and defeated a party of the enemy who occupied the road near the Shah Bagh, but had to encounter a sharp fire from the Kohistan gate of the city, and from the walls of various enclosures, behind which a number of marksmen had concealed themselves, as also from the fort of Mahmood Khan commanding the road along which they had to pass. Lieut. Waller and several Sepoys were wounded. Major Swayne, observing the whole line of road towards the Lahore gate strongly occupied by some Affghan horse and juzailchees, and fearing that he would be unable to effect the object in view with so small a force unsupported by cavalry, retired into cantonments. Shortly after this, a large body of the rebels having issued from the fort of Mahmood Khan, 900 yards south-east of cantonments, extended themselves in a line along the bank of the river, displaying a flag; an iron nine-pounder was brought to bear on them from our south-east bastion, and a round or two of shrapnell caused them to seek shelter behind some neighbouring banks, whence, after some desultory firing on both sides, they retired.

Whatever hopes may have been entertained, up to this period, of a speedy termination to the insurrection, they began now to wax fainter every hour, and an order was despatched to the officer commanding at Candahar to lose no time in sending to our assistance the 16th and 43d regiments N. I. (which were under orders for India), together with a troop of horse artillery, and half a regiment of cavalry; an order was likewise sent off to recall Gen. Sale with his brigade from Gundamuck. Capt. John Connolly, political assistant to the Envoy, went into the Bala Hissar early this morning, to remain with the King, and to render every assistance in his power to Brigadier Shelton.

On this day Lieut. Richard Maule, commanding the Kohistanee regiment, which on its return from Zoormut had been stationed at Kahdarra in Kohistan, about twenty miles north-west of Cabul, with the object of keeping down disaffection in that quarter, being deserted by his men, was, together with local Lieut. Wheeler, his adjutant, barbarously murdered by a band of rebels. They defended themselves resolutely for several minutes; but at length fell under the fire of some juzails. Lieut. Maule had been previously informed of his danger by a friendly native, but chose rather to run the risk of being sacrificed than desert the post assigned him. Thus fell a noble-hearted soldier and a devout Christian.

November 4th.—The enemy having taken strong possession of the Shah Bagh, or King's Garden, and thrown a garrison into the fort of Mahomed Shereef, nearly opposite the bazar, effectually prevented any communication between the cantonment and commissariat fort, the gate of which latter was commanded by the gate of the Shah Bagh on the other side of the road.

Ensign Warren of the 5th N. I. at this time occupied the commissariat fort with 100 men, and having reported that he was very hard pressed by the enemy, and in danger of being completely cut off, the General, either forgetful or unaware at the moment of the important fact that upon the possession of this fort we were entirely dependent for provisions, and anxious only to save the lives of men whom he believed to be in imminent peril, hastily gave directions that a party under the command of Capt. Swayne of H. M.'s 44th Regt. should proceed immediately to bring off Ensign Warren and his garrison to cantonments, abandoning the fort to the enemy. A few minutes previously an attempt to relieve him had been made by Ensign Gordon, with a company of the 37th N. I. and eleven camels laden with ammunition; but the party were driven back, and Ensign Gordon killed. Capt. Swayne now accordingly proceeded towards the spot with two companies of H. M.'s 44th; scarcely had they issued from cantonments ere a sharp and destructive fire was poured upon them from Mahomed Shereef's fort, which, as they proceeded, was taken up by the marksmen in the Shah Bagh, under whose deadly aim both officers and men suffered severely; Capts. Swayne and Robinson of the 44th being killed, and Lieuts. Hallahan, Evans, and Fortye wounded in this disastrous business. It now seemed to the officer, on whom the command had devolved, impracticable to bring off Ensign Warren's party, without risking the annihilation of his own, which had already sustained so rapid and severe a loss in officers; he therefore returned forthwith to cantonments. In the course of the evening, another attempt was made by a party of the 5th Lt. Cavalry; but they encountered so severe a fire from the neighbouring enclosures as obliged them to return without effecting their desired object, with the loss of 8 troopers killed and 14 badly wounded. Capt. Boyd, the Assist.-Com.-Gen., having meanwhile been made acquainted with the General's intention to give up the fort, hastened to lay before him the disastrous consequences that would ensue from so doing. He stated that the place contained, besides large supplies of wheat and atta, all his stores of rum, medicine, clothing, &c., the value of which might be estimated at four lacs of rupees; that to abandon such valuable property would not only expose the force to the immediate want of the necessaries of life, but would infallibly inspire the enemy with tenfold courage. He added that we had not above two days' supply of provisions in cantonments, and that neither himself nor Capt. Johnson of the Shah's commissariat had any prospect of procuring them elsewhere under existing circumstances. In consequence of this strong representation on the part of Capt. Boyd, the General sent immediate orders to Ensign Warren to hold out the fort to the last extremity. (Ensign Warren, it must be remarked, denied having received this note.) Early in the night a letter was received from him to the effect that he believed the enemy were busily engaged in mining one of the towers, and that such was the alarm among the Sepoys that several of them had actually made their escape over the wall to cantonments; that the enemy were making preparations to burn down the gate; and that, considering the temper of his men, he did not expect to be able to hold out many hours longer, unless reinforced without delay. In reply to this he was informed that he would be reinforced by 2 A. M.

At about 9 o'clock P. M. there was an assembly of staff and other officers at the General's house, when the Envoy came in and expressed his serious conviction that, unless Mahomed Shereef's fort were taken that very night, we should lose the commissariat fort, or at all events be unable to bring out of it provisions for the troops. The disaster of the morning rendered the General extremely unwilling to expose his officers and men to any similar peril; but, on the other hand, it was urged that the darkness of the night would nullify the enemy's fire, who would also most likely be taken unawares, as it was not the custom of the Affghans to maintain a very strict watch at night. A man in Capt. Johnson's employ was accordingly sent out to reconnoitre the place; he returned in a few minutes with the intelligence that about twenty men were seated outside the fort near the gate, smoking and talking; and from what he overheard of their conversation, he judged the garrison to be very small, and unable to resist a sudden onset. The debate was now resumed, but another hour passed and the General could not make up his mind. A second spy was despatched, whose report tended to corroborate what the first had said. I was then sent to Lieut. Sturt, the engineer, who was nearly recovered from his wounds, for his opinion. He at first expressed himself in favour of an immediate attack, but, on hearing that some of the enemy were on the watch at the gate, he judged it prudent to defer the assault till an early hour in the morning: this decided the General, though not before several hours had slipped away in fruitless discussion.

Orders were at last given for a detachment to be in readiness at 4 A. M. at the Kohistan gate; and Capt. Bellew, Deputy Assist.-Quar.-Mast.-Gen., volunteered to blow open the gate; another party of H. M.'s 44th were at the same time to issue by a cut in the south face of the rampart, and march simultaneously towards the commissariat fort, to reinforce the garrison. Morning had, however, well dawned ere the men could be got under arms; and they were on the point of marching off, when it was reported that Ensign Warren had just arrived in cantonments with his garrison, having evacuated the fort. It seems that the enemy had actually set fire to the gate; and Ensign Warren, seeing no prospect of a reinforcement, and expecting the enemy every moment to rush in, led out his men by a hole which he had prepared in the wall. Being called upon in a public letter from the Assist.-Adj.-Gen. to state his reasons for abandoning his post, he replied that he was ready to do so before a court of inquiry, which he requested might be assembled to investigate his conduct; it was not, however, deemed expedient to comply with his request.

It is beyond a doubt that our feeble and ineffectual defence of this fort, and the valuable booty it yielded, was the first fatal blow to our supremacy at Cabul, and at once determined those chiefs — and more particularly the Kuzzilbashes — who had hitherto remained neutral, to join in the general combination to drive us from the country.

Capt. Trevor, having held out his house against the rebels until all hope of relief was at an end, was safely escorted into cantonments this morning, with his wife and seven children, by his Hazirbash horsemen, who behaved faithfully, but now, out of regard for their families, dispersed to their houses. Capt. Mackenzie likewise, after defending his fort until his ammunition was expended, fought his way into cantonments late last night, having received a slight wound on the road. His men had behaved with the utmost bravery, and made several successful sallies. See his own account.*

November 5th.—It no sooner became generally known that the commissariat fort, upon which we were dependent for supplies, had been abandoned, than one universal feeling of indignation pervaded the garrison; nor can I describe the impatience of the troops, but especially the native portion, to be led out for its recapture—a feeling that was by no means diminished by their seeing the Affghans crossing and re-crossing the road between the commissariat fort and the gate of the Shah Bagh, laden with the provisions upon which had depended our ability to make a protracted defence. Observing this disposition among the troops, and feeling the importance of checking the triumph of the enemy in its infancy, I strenuously urged the General to send out a party to capture Mahomed Shereef's fort by blowing open the gate, and volunteered myself to keep the road clear from any sudden advance of cavalry with two H. A. guns, under cover of whose fire the storming party could advance along the road, protected from the fire of the fort by a low wall, which lined the road the whole way. The General agreed; a storming party under Major Swayne, 5th H. I., was ordered; the powder bags were got ready; and at about 12 mid-day we issued from the western gate: the guns led the way, and were brought into action under the partial cover of some trees, within one hundred yards of the fort. For the space of twenty minutes the artillery continued to work the guns under an excessively sharp fire from the walls of the fort; but Major Swayne, instead of rushing forward with his men, as had been agreed, had in the mean time remained stationary under cover of the wall by the road side. The General, who was watching our proceedings from the gateway, observing that the gun ammunition was running short, and that the troops had failed to take advantage of the best opportunity for advancing, recalled us into cantonments: thus the enemy enjoyed their triumph undiminished; and great was the rage of the Sepoys of the 37th N. I., who had evinced the utmost eagerness to be led out, at this disappointment of their hopes. It must be acknowledged that the General was singularly unfortunate in many of the coadjutors about him, who, with all the zeal and courage which distinguish British officers, were sadly lacking in that military judgment and quicksightedness which are essential to success in a critical moment. Let me here, however, pay a just tribute to the memory of two of his staff officers, now, alas! no more. Few men have ever combined all the excellent qualities which constitute the good soldier and the good man more remarkably than did Major Thain of H. M.'s 21st Fusileers, A. D. C. to Gen. Elphinstone; while of Capt. Paton, Deputy Quartermaster-general, it may be safely affirmed, that in solid practical sense and genuine singleness of heart he was never surpassed. Would that all, to whom the General was in the habit of deferring, had been equally wise to counsel and prompt to execute with the two above-named gallant men!

* I have already stated with regret that this interesting paper is missing. — EDITOR.

November 6th.—It was now determined to take the fort of Mahomed Shereef by regular breach and assault. At an early hour, 3 iron nine-pounder guns were brought to bear upon its north-east bastion, and 2 howitzers upon the contiguous curtain. I took charge of the former, and Lieut. Warburton of the latter. In the space of about two hours a practicable breach was effected, during which time a hot fire was poured upon the artillerymen from the enemy's sharpshooters, stationed in a couple of high towers which completely commanded the battery, whereby, as the embrasures crumbled away from the constant concussion, it became at length a difficult task to work the guns. A storming party, composed of 3 companies, viz. 1 comp. H. M. 44th, under Ensign Raban, 1 comp. 5th N. I. under Lieut. Deas, 1 comp. 37th under Lieut. Steer, the whole commanded by Major Griffiths, speedily carried the place. Poor Raban was shot through the heart, when conspicuously waving a flag on the summit of the breach.

As this fort adjoined the Shah Bagh, it was deemed advisable to dislodge the enemy from the latter, if possible. Learning that there was a large opening in the wall in the north side of the garden, I took a six-pounder gun thither, and fired several rounds of grape and shrapnell upon parties of the enemy assembled within under the trees, which speedily drove them out; and had a detachment of infantry taken advantage of the opportunity thus afforded to throw themselves into the building at the principal entrance by the road side, the place might have been easily carried permanently, and immediate repossession could have been then taken of the commissariat fort opposite, which had not yet been emptied of half its contents. While this was going on, a reconnoitring party under Major Thain, A. D. C., consisting of 1 H. A. gun, 1 troop 5th cavalry, and 2 comps. of infantry, scoured the plain to the west of cantonments; and having driven the enemy from several enclosures, were returning homeward, when large numbers of Affghan horse and foot were observed to proceed from the direction of the city towards the south-west extremity of a hill, which runs in a diagonal direction from north-east to south-west across the plain, to the west of cantonments. A resallah of Anderson's horse had been stationed on the summit of this hill all the morning as a picket, whence they had just been recalled, when a large body of the enemy's horse reached the base, and proceeded to crown the summit. Major Thain's party, observing this, came to a halt; and a few minutes afterwards a reinforcement opportunely arrived, consisting of 1 resallah of irregular horse under Capt. Anderson, 1 troop of ditto under Lieut. Walker, and 2 troops 5th cavalry under Capts. Collyer and Bott. I now considered it my duty to join the H. A. gun, which had no officer with it, and I accordingly left the six-pounder gun under the protection of Capt. Mackenzie, who, with a few of his juzailchees, had now joined me, having been engaged in skirmishing across the plain towards the west end of the Shah Bagh, where, finding an opening, he had crept in with his men, and cleared that part of the garden, but, not being supported, had been obliged to retire with a loss of 15 killed out of 95.

I now advanced with the H. A. gun, supported by a troop of the 5th cavalry, to the foot of the hill, and opened fire upon the enemy, while the rest of the cavalry, headed by Anderson's horse, rode briskly up the slope to force them off. The officers gallantly headed their men, and encountered about an equal number of the enemy, who advanced to meet them. A hand to hand encounter now took place, which ended in the Affghan horse retreating to the plain, leaving the hill in our possession. In this affair Capt. Anderson personally engaged, and slew the brother-in-law of Abdoolah Khan. Meanwhile the enemy began to muster strong on the plain to the west of the Shah Bagh, whence they appeared to be gradually extending themselves towards the cantonments, as if to intercept our return; it was therefore deemed prudent to recall the cavalry from the height, and show front in the plain, where they could act with more effect. A reinforcement of two companies of infantry and one H. A. gun was sent out, and the whole force was drawn up in order of battle, anticipating an attack, with one gun on either flank. In this position a distant fire was kept up by the enemy's juzailchees, which was answered principally by discharges of shrapnell and round shot from the guns; the heights, too, were again crowned by the Affghan horse, but no disposition was manifested by them to encounter us in open fight, and, as the night gradually closed in, they slowly retired to the city. On this occasion about 100 of the enemy fell on the hill, while the loss on our side was 8 troopers killed, and 14 wounded.

It will be remembered that I left a six-pounder gun at the opening in the wall of the Shah Bagh. After my departure, large numbers of the enemy's infantry had filled the west end of the Shah Bagh, and, stealing up among the trees, and close to the high wall, towards the gun, kept up so hot and precise a fire as to render its removal absolutely necessary. Capt. Mackenzie had been joined by a party of H. M.'s 44th; with whom, and with a few of his own men, he endeavoured to cover the operation, which was extremely difficult, it being necessary to drag the gun by hand over bad ground. Several of the Shah's gunners were killed, and many of the covering party knocked over, the gun being barely saved. I may here add, that from this time forward the juzailchees, under the able direction of Capt. Mackenzie, who volunteered to lead them, were forward to distinguish themselves on all occasions, and continued to the very last a most useful part of our force.

November 8th. — An attempt was made by the enemy to mine one of the towers of the fort we captured on the 6th, which could not have happened had we taken possession of the gate of the Shah Bagh at the same time. Our chief cause of anxiety now was the empty state of our granary. Even with high bribes and liberal payment, the Envoy could only procure a scanty supply, insufficient for daily consumption, from the village of Beymaroo, about half a mile down the Kohistan road, to the north. The object of the enemy undoubtedly was to starve us out; to effect which the chiefs exerted their whole influence to prevent our being supplied from any of the neighbouring forts. Their game was a sure one; and, so long as they held firmly together, it could not fail to be sooner or later successful. During the short interval of quiet, which ensued after our capture of the fort, the rebels managed to rig out a couple of guns which they procured from the workyard of Lieut. Warburton (in charge of the Shah's guns), situated, unfortunately, in the city. These they placed in a position near Mahmoud Khan's fort, opposite the south-east bastion of cantonments. All this time a cannonade was daily kept up on the town by Capt. Nicholl of the Horse Artillery in the Bala Hissar; but, though considerable damage was thereby done, and many of the enemy killed, it required a much more powerful battery than he possessed to ruin a place of such extent. On the morning of the 2d, when the rebellion commenced, the two guns, which were sent with Campbell's Hindoostanees into the city, had been left outside the gate of the Bala Hissar in the confusion and hurry of retreat, where they had ever since remained. So jealous a watch was kept over these by the enemy from the houses of the Shah Bazar, that it was found impossible to get them back into the fort; and it was necessary for our troops to maintain an equally strict watch to prevent their being removed by the enemy, who made several desperate efforts to obtain them. An attempt of this kind took place to-day, when the rebels were driven back into the city with considerable loss.

November 9th. — The General's weak state of health rendering the presence of a coadjutor absolutely necessary, to relieve him from the command of the garrison, Brigadier Shelton, the second in command, was, at the earnest request of the Envoy, summoned in from the Bala Hissar, in the hope that, by heartily co-operating with the Envoy and General, he would strengthen their hands and rouse the sinking confidence of the troops. He entered cantonments this morning, bringing with him 1 H. A. gun, 1 mountain train ditto, 1 company H. M. 44th, the Shah's 6th infantry, and a small supply of atta.

CHAP. III.

DESPONDENCY IN CANTONMENT. — DIFFERENCE OF OPINION BETWEEN BRIGADIER SHELTON AND SIR WILLIAM MACNAGHTEN. — ANNOYANCE FROM THE FIRE OF THE ENEMY OUT OF SEVERAL FORTS. — STORMING OF THE RIKA-BASHEE FORT, UNDER BRIGADIER SHELTON. — PERILOUS SITUATION AND BRAVERY OF LIEUT. BIRD. — FURTHER ENGAGEMENTS WITH THE ENEMY. — SUPERIORITY OF THE AFFGHANS IN THE USE OF FIRE-ARMS.

November 10th.—HENCEFORWARD Brigadier Shelton bore a conspicuous part in the drama upon the issue of which so much depended. He had, however, from the very first, seemed to despair of the force being able to hold out the winter at Cabul, and strenuously advocated an immediate retreat to Jellalabad.

This sort of despondency proved, unhappily, very infectious. It soon spread its baneful influence among the officers, and was by them communicated to the soldiery. The number of croakers in garrison became perfectly frightful, lugubrious looks and dismal prophecies being encountered every where. The severe losses sustained by H. M.'s 44th under Capt. Swayne, on the 4th instant, had very much discouraged the men of that regiment; and it is a lamentable fact that some of those European soldiers, who were naturally expected to exhibit to their native brethren in arms an example of endurance and fortitude, were among the first to lose confidence and give vent to feelings of discontent at the duties imposed on them. The evil seed, once sprung up, became more and more difficult to eradicate, showing daily more and more how completely demoralising to the British soldier is the very idea of a retreat.

Sir William Macnaghten and his suite were altogether opposed to Brigadier Shelton in this matter, it being in his (the Envoy's) estimation a duty we owed the Government to retain our post, at whatsoever risk. This difference of opinion, on a question of such vital importance, was attended with unhappy results, inasmuch as it deprived the General, in his hour of need, of the strength which unanimity imparts, and produced an uncommunicative and disheartening reserve in an emergency which demanded the freest interchange of counsel and ideas.

But I am digressing. — About 9 A.M. on the 10th the enemy crowned the heights to the west in great force, and almost simultaneously a large body of horse and foot, supposed to be Giljyes, who had just arrived, made their appearance on the Seeah Sung hills to the east, and, after firing a feu de joie, set up a loud shout, which was answered in a similar way by those on the opposite side of us. This was supposed to be a preconcerted signal for a joint attack on the cantonments. No movement was however made on the western side to molest us, but on the eastern quarter parties of the enemy, moving down into the plain, took possession of all the forts in that direction. One of these, called the Rika-bashee fort, was situated directly opposite the Mission Compound, at the north-east angle of cantonments, within musket shot of our works, into which the enemy soon began to pour a very annoying fire; a party of sharpshooters at the same time, concealing themselves among the ruins of a house immediately opposite the north-east bastion, took deadly aim at the European artillerymen who were working the guns, one poor fellow being shot through the temple in the act of sponging. From 2 howitzers and a 5½-inch mortar, a discharge of shells into the fort was kept up for two hours.

At this time not above two days' supply of provisions remained in garrison, and it was very clear that, unless the enemy were quickly driven out from their new possession, we should soon be completely hemmed in on all sides. At the Envoy's urgent desire, he taking the entire responsibility on himself, the General ordered a force to hold themselves in readiness under Brigadier Shelton to storm the Rika-bashee fort. About 12 A. M. the following troops assembled at the eastern gate : — 2 H. A. guns, 1 mountain train gun, Walker's horse, H. M.'s 44th foot under Col. Mackerell, 37th N. I. under Major Griffiths, 6th regiment of Shah's force under Capt. Hopkins. The whole issued from cantonments, a storming party consisting of two companies from each regiment taking the lead, preceded by Capt. Bellew, who hurried forward to blow open the gate. Missing the gate, however, he blew open a wicket of such small dimensions as to render it impossible for more than two or three men to enter abreast, and these in a stooping posture. This, it will be seen, was one cause of discomfiture in the first instance ; for the hearts of the men failed them when they saw their foremost comrades struck down, endeavouring to force an entrance under such disadvantageous circumstances, without being able to help them. The signal, however, was given for the storming party, headed by Col. Mackerell. On nearing the wicket, the detachment encountered an excessively sharp fire from the walls, and the small passage, through which they endeavoured to rush in, merely served to expose the bravest to almost certain death from the hot fire of the defenders. Col. Mackerell, however, and Lieut. Bird of Shah's 6th infantry, accompanied by a handful of Europeans and a few Sepoys, forced their way in; Capt. Westmacott of the 37th being shot down outside, and Capt. M'Crae sabred in the entrance. The garrison, supposing that these few gallant men were backed by the whole attacking party, fled in consternation out of the gate, which was on the opposite side of the fort, and which ought to have been the point assailed. Unfortunately, at this instant a number of the Affghan cavalry charged round the corner of the fort next the wicket: the cry of "Cavalry!" was raised, a cry which too often, during our operations, paralyzed the arms of those, whose muskets and bayonets we have been accustomed to consider as more than a match for a desultory charge of irregular horsemen; the Europeans gave way simultaneously with the Sepoys—a bugler of the 6th infantry, through mistake, sounded the retreat—and it became for the time a scene of saue qui peut. In vain did the officers, especially Major Scott of H. M.'s 44th, knowing the fearful predicament of his commanding officer, exhort and beseech their men to charge forward—not a soul would follow them, save a private of the 44th named Steward, who was afterwards promoted for his solitary gallantry. Let me here do Brigadier Shelton justice: his acknowledged courage redeemed the day; for, exposing his own person to a hot fire, he stood firm amidst the crowd of fugitives, and by his exhortations and example at last rallied them; advancing again to the attack, again our men faltered, notwithstanding that the fire of the great guns from the cantonments, and that of Capt. Mackenzie's juzailchees from the N. E. angle of the Mission Compound, together with a demonstration on the part of our cavalry, had greatly abated the ardour of the Affghan horse. A third time did the Brigadier bring on his men to the assault, which now proved successful. We became masters of the fort. But what, in the mean time, had been passing inside the fort, where, it will be remembered, several of our brave brethren had been shut up, as it were, in the lions' den?

On the first retreat of our men, Lieut. Bird, with Col. Mackerell and several Europeans, had hastily shut the gate by which the garrison had for the most part evacuated the place, securing the chain with a bayonet: the repulse outside, however, encouraged the enemy to return in great numbers, and, it being impossible to remain near the gate on account of the hot fire poured in through the crevices, our few heroes speedily had the mortification to see their foes not only re-entering the wicket, but, having drawn the bayonet, rush in with loud shouts through the now re-opened gate. Poor Mackerell, having fallen, was literally hacked to pieces, although still alive at the termination of the contest. Lieut. Bird, with two Sepoys, retreated into a stable, the door of which they closed; all the rest of the men, endeavouring to escape through the wicket, were met and slaughtered. Bird's place of concealment at first, in the confusion, escaped the observation of the temporarily triumphant Affghans; at last it was discovered, and an attack commenced at the door. This, being barricaded with logs of wood, and whatever else the tenants of the stable could find, resisted their efforts, while Bird and his now solitary companion, a Sepoy of the 37th N. I. (the other having been struck down), maintained as hot a fire as they could, each shot taking deadly effect from the proximity of the party engaged. The fall of their companions deterred the mass of the assailants from a simultaneous rush, which must have succeeded; and thus that truly chivalrous, high-minded, and amiable young gentleman, whose subsequent fate must be ranked among the mysterious dispensations of Providence which we cannot for the present fathom, stood at bay with his equally brave comrade for upwards of a quarter of an hour, when, having only five cartridges left, in spite of having rifled the pouch of the dead man, they were rescued as related above. Our troops literally found the pair "grim and lonely there," upwards of thirty of the enemy having fallen by their unassisted prowess.

Our loss on this occasion was not less than 200 killed and wounded. Four neighbouring forts were immediately evacuated by the enemy, and occupied by our troops: they were found to contain about 1400 maunds of grain; in removing which no time was lost, but as it was not found practicable to bring off more than half before night-fall, Capt. Boyd, the Assist.-Com.-Gen., requested Brig. Shelton that a guard might be thrown into a small fort, where it must be left for the night; this was, however, refused, and on the following morning, as might have been expected, the grain was all gone: permanent possession was, however, taken of the Rika-bashee and Zulfekar forts, the towers of the remainder being blown up on the following day.

Numbers of Giljie horse and foot still maintaining their position on the Seeah Sung heights, Brig. Shelton moved his force towards that quarter. On reaching the base of the hill, fire was opened from the two H. A. guns, which, with the firm front presented by our troops, caused the enemy shortly to retire towards the city, and ere we turned homeward not a man remained in sight.

November 13th. The enemy appeared in great force on the western heights, where, having posted two guns, they fired into cantonments with considerable precision. At the earnest entreaty of the Envoy, it was determined that a party, under Brigadier Shelton, should sally forth to attack them, and, if possible, capture their guns. The force ordered for this service was not ready until 3 P. M. It consisted of the following troops:—2 squadrons 5th Light Cavalry, under Col. Chambers; 1 squadron Shah's 2d Irregular Horse, under Lieut. Le Geyt; 1 troop of Skinner's Horse, under Lieut. Walker; the Body Guard; 6 companies her Majesty's 44th, under Major Scott; 6 companies 37th, under Major Swayne; 4 companies Shah's 6th Infantry, under Capt. Hopkins; and 1 H. A. gun and 1 Mountain Train do. under myself, escorted by a company of 6th Shah's under Capt. Marshall. After quitting cantonments, the troops took the direction of a gorge between the two hills bounding the plain, distant about a mile (the enemy's horse crowning that to the left), and advanced in separate columns at so brisk a pace, that it seemed a race which should arrive first at the scene of action. The infantry had actually reached the foot of the hill, and were on the point of ascending to the charge, ere the H. A. gun, which had been detained in the rear by sticking fast in a canal, could be got ready for action; nor had more than one round of grape been fired, ere the advance, led on by the gallant Major Thain, had closed upon the foe, who resolutely stood their ground on the summit of the ridge, and unflinchingly received the discharge of our musketry, which, strange to say, even at the short range of ten or twelve yards, did little or no execution! From this cause the enemy, growing bolder every moment, advanced close up to the bayonets of our infantry, upon whom they pressed so perseveringly, as to succeed in driving them backwards to the foot of the hill, wounding Major Thain on the left shoulder, and sabring several of the men. Several rounds of grape and shrapnell were now poured in, and threw them into some confusion, whereupon a timely charge of our cavalry, Anderson's horse taking the lead, drove them again up the hill, when our infantry once more advancing carried the height, the enemy retreating along the ridge, closely followed by our troops, and abandoning their guns to us. The H. A. gun now took up a position in the middle of the gorge, whence it played with effect on a large body of horse assembled on the plain west of the hill, who forthwith retreated to a distance.

Our troops had now got into ground where it was impracticable for Horse-Artillery to follow. I accordingly pushed forward with one artilleryman and a supply of drag-ropes and spikes, to look out for the deserted guns of the enemy; one of these, a 4-pounder, was easily removed along the ridge by a party of the Shah's 8th Infantry; but the other, a 6-pounder, was awkwardly situated in a ravine half way down the side of the hill, our troops, with the Mountain-Train 3-pounder, being drawn up along the ridge just above it. The evening was now fast closing in, and a large body of Affghan infantry occupied some enclosures on the plain below, whence they kept up so hot a fire upon the gun, as to render its removal by no means an easy task; but the Envoy having sent us a message of entreaty that no exertions might be spared to complete the triumph of the day by bringing off both the enemy's guns, Major Scott, of her Majesty's 44th, repeatedly called on his men to descend with him to drag the 6-pounder away; but, strange to say, his frequent appeals to their soldierly feelings were made in vain: with a few gallant exceptions they remained immovable, nor could the Sepoys be induced to lead the way where their European brethren so obstinately hung back. Meanwhile it became nearly dark, and the further detention of the troops being attended with risk, as the enemy, though driven from the hill, still maintained a threatening attitude below, I descended with the Horse Artillery gunner, and, having driven in a spike, returned to assist in making sure of the captured 4-pounder. This, from the steepness of the hill, and the numerous water-cuts which every where intersected the plain, proved a somewhat troublesome business. Lieut. Macartney, however, with a company of the Shah's 6th Infantry, urged on his men with zeal, and we at last had the satisfaction to deposit our prize safe within the cantonment gates. Meanwhile the enemy, favoured by the darkness, pressed hard upon our returning troops, and by dint of incessant firing and shouting rendered their homeward march somewhat disorderly, effecting, however, but little damage.

It was no small disadvantage under which we laboured, that no temporary success of our troops over those of the enemy could be followed up, nor even possession be retained of the ground gained by us at the point of the bayonet, owing to the necessity of withdrawing our men into their quarters at night. On reaching the cantonment, we found the garrison in a state of considerable alarm, and a continual blaze of musketry illuminating the whole line of rampart. This had arisen from a demonstration of attack having been made by the enemy on the south-west bastion, which had been immediately checked by a few rounds of grape from the guns, and by a well-directed fire from the juzailchees under Capt. Mackenzie; but it was long ere quiet could be restored, the men continuing to discharge their pieces at they knew not what.

Our infantry soldiers, both European and Native, might have taken a salutary lesson from the Affghans in the use of their fire-arms; the latter invariably taking steady deliberate aim, and seldom throwing away a single shot; whereas our men seemed to fire entirely at random, without any aim at all; hence the impunity with which the Affghan horsemen braved the discharge of our musketry in this day's action within twelve yards, not one shot, to all appearance, taking effect. In this affair Capt. Paton, Assist.-Quart.-Mast.-Gen., had the misfortune to receive a wound in the left arm, which rendered amputation necessary, and the valuable services of one of our most efficient staff officers were thus lost. This was the last success our arms were destined to experience. Henceforward it becomes my weary task to relate a catalogue of errors, disasters, and difficulties, which, following close upon each other, disgusted our officers, disheartened our soldiers, and finally sunk us all into irretrievable ruin, as though Heaven itself, by a combination of evil circumstances for its own inscrutable purposes, had planned our downfall. But here it is fit I should relate the scenes that had all this while been enacting at our solitary outpost in Kohistan.

CHAP. IV.

EVENTS IN KOHISTAN, AS RELATED BY MAJOR POTTINGER.

—TREACHERY OF THE NIJROW CHIEFS.—MURDER OF LIEUT. RATTRAY.—GALLANTRY OF LIEUT. HAUGHTON.
—ATTACK BY THE ENEMY ON THE CHAREKAR CAN-TONMENT.—MAJOR POTTINGER WOUNDED.—DEATH OF CAPT. CODRINGTON.—DEPLORABLE SCARCITY OF WATER.
—DISAPPEARANCE OF DR. GRANT.—RETREAT TO-WARDS CABUL.—PERILS OF MAJOR POTTINGER AND LIEUT. HAUGHTON.—THEY ESCAPE TO CANTONMENT.

ON the 15th November, Major Pottinger, C. B. and Lieut. Haughton, Adjt. of the Shah's 4th, or Goorkha regiment, came in from Charekar, both severely wounded, the former in the leg, and the latter having had his right hand amputated, besides several cuts in the neck and left arm. Their escape was wonderful.

The following is an outline of what had taken place in Kohistan, from the commencement of the insurrection up to the present date.

It appears, from Major Pottinger's account of the transactions of that period, that it was not without reason he had so urgently applied to Sir William Macnaghten for reinforcements. Towards the end of October, premonitory signs of the coming tempest had become so unequivocally threatening as to confirm Major Pottinger in his worst suspicions, and in his conviction that order could not possibly be restored without a departure on the part of government from the long-suffering system which had been obstinately pursued with respect to Nijrow in particular; but his conviction alone could do little to stem the torrent of coming events.

About this time Meer Musjeedee, a contumacious rebel against the Shah's authority, who had been expelled from Kohistan during General Sale's campaign in that country in 1840, and who had taken refuge in Nijrow after the fashion of many other men of similar stamp, obstinately refusing to make his submission to the Shah even upon the most favourable terms, openly put himself at the head of a powerful and well-organised party, with the avowed intention of expelling the Feringees and overturning the existing government. He was speedily joined by the most influential of the Nijrow chiefs. A few of these made their appearance before Lughmanee, where Major Pottinger resided, and proffered their services towards the maintenance of the public tranquillity. It will be seen that their object was the blackest treachery.

I shall here relate Major Pottinger's story, almost in his own words, as given to me.

In the course of the forenoon of the 3d of November, Major Pottinger had an interview with a number of the more influential chiefs in his house or fort, and, about noon, went into the garden to receive those of inferior rank, accompanied by his visitors: here they were joined by Lieut. Charles Rattray, Major Pottinger's Assistant. In discussing the question of the rewards to which their services might entitle them, the head men declared that, although they were willing to agree to Major Pottinger's propositions, they could not answer for their clansmen, and the above-mentioned petty chiefs, who were awaiting the expected conference at some little distance. Mr. Rattray, accordingly, in company with several of the principal, joined the latter, and, shortly after, proceeded with them to an adjoining field, where numbers of their armed retainers were assembled, for the purpose of ascertaining their sentiments on the subject of the conference. While thus engaged, this most promising and brave young officer apparently became aware of intended foul play, and turned to leave the field, when he was immediately shot down. At this time Major Pottinger was still sitting in his garden, in company with several of the above-mentioned chiefs, and had just received intelligence of the purposed treachery from Mahomed Kasim Khan, a debashee of Hazirbash, a small detachment of which composed a part of his escort: he had with difficulty comprehended the man's meaning, which was conveyed by hints, when the sound of firing was heard:—the chiefs that were with him rose and fled, and he escaped into the fort by the postern gate; which having secured, he, from the terre-plein of the rampart, saw poor Mr. Rattray lying badly wounded in the field at the distance of some 300 yards, and the late pretended negotiators making off in all directions with the plunder of the camp of the Hazirbash detachment. Of these plunderers a party passing close to Mr. Rattray, and observing that life was not extinct, one of them put his gun close to his head, and blew his brains out,—several others discharging their pieces into different parts of his body.

Major Pottinger's guard, being by this time on the alert, opened a fire, which speedily cleared the open space; but the enemy, seeking shelter in the numerous watercourses, and under the low walls surrounding the fort, harrassed them incessantly until the appearance of Lieut. Haughton, adjutant of the Goorkha regiment, who, advancing from Charekar, where the corps was cantoned, distant about three miles, speedily drove the assailants from their cover. Capt. Codrington, who commanded the regiment, chanced to be in Lughmanee at this very time; and, on Mr. Haughton's approach, he led out a sortie and joined him: the skirmish was sharp, and the enemy suffered severely, Capt. Codrington remaining in possession of an adjacent canal, the bank of which was immediately cut, to supply the tank of the fort with water in case of accidents.

The evening had now closed in, and the enemy had retired, taking up a position which seemed to threaten the Charekar road. Capt. Codrington accordingly left Lughmanee in haste, strengthening Major Pottinger's party to about 100 men, these having to garrison four small forts. He promised, however, to relieve them the next morning, and to send a further supply of ammunition, of which there only remained 1500 rounds. Capt. Codrington reached Charekar unmolested; and the enemy, returning to their former point of attack, carried off their dead with impunity, the garrison being too weak to make a sally. On the morning of the 4th, Capt. Codrington despatched four companies with a six-pounder gun, according to promise. Their march caused numbers of the enemy now assembled on all sides to retreat; but one large body remained in position on the skirts of the mountain range to their right, and threatened their flank. Mr. Haughton, who commanded, detached Ensign Salisbury with a company to disperse them, which, in spite of the disparity of numbers, was effected in good style. Unhappily the Goorkhas, being young soldiers, and flushed with success, pressed forward in pursuit with too much eagerness, regardless of the recalling bugle, when at last Mr. Salisbury with difficulty halted them, and endeavoured to retrace his steps. The enemy, observing the error they had committed in separating themselves too far from their main body, rallied and followed them in their retreat so closely, as to oblige Mr. Salisbury to halt his little band frequently, and face about. Mr. Haughton, consequently, in order to extricate the compromised company, halted his convoy, and despatched the greatest part of his men in the direction of the skirmish. All this encouraged the other parties of the enemy who had retired to return, against whom, in numbers not less than 4000 men, Mr. Haughton maintained his ground until rejoined by his subaltern, when, seeing the hopelessness of making good his way to Lughmanee, he retreated, and regained in safety the fortified barracks at Charekar. Many of the men fell in this expedition, which would have proved infinitely more disastrous, from the number of the enemy's cavalry, who latterly seemed to gain confidence at every stage, but for the extraordinary gallantry and conduct of Mr. Haughton, who, with a handful of men and a gun, protected the rear of our over-matched troops. Mr. Salisbury was mortally wounded, and the trail of the gun gave way just as the party reached Charekar.

This disappointment led Major Pottinger to believe that no second attempt would be made to relieve them; and as he had no ammunition beyond the supply in the men's pouches, he determined to retreat on Charekar after dark: the better to hide his intention, he ordered grain to be brought into the fort. Meantime the Charekar cantonment was attacked on all sides, and in the afternoon large bodies of the enemy were detached thence, and joining others from that part of the valley, recommenced their investment of Lughmanee. That part of the Major's garrison, which occupied the small fort to the east of the principal one, defended by himself, although their orders were not to vacate their posts until after dark, being panic-stricken, did so at once, gaining the stronger position, but leaving behind several wounded comrades and their havildar, who remained staunch to his duty: these, however, were brought off. Major Pottinger then strengthened the garrison of a cluster of adjacent huts, which, being surrounded by a sort of rude fortification, formed a tolerably good out-work; but the want of European officers to control the men was soon lamentably apparent, and in a short time the Goorkhas, headed by their native officer, abandoned the hamlet, followed as a matter of course by the few Affghan soldiers attached to Capt. Codrington's person, who had remained faithful until then. This last misfortune gave the enemy cover up to the very gate of the main stronghold, and before dark they had succeeded in getting possession of a gun-shed built against its outer wall, whence they commenced mining.

As soon as night had fairly closed in, Major Pottinger drew together the Goorkha garrison outside the postern gate, under pretence of making a sortie, and thus separated them from the Affghans and their followers, who remained inside; he then marched for Charekar, the garrison of the remaining fort joining him as he drew on; he passed by the investing posts in perfect silence, taking his route along the skirts of the mountains to avoid the main road, and arrived in safety at Charekar. In Lughmanee he abandoned the hostages whom he had taken from the Kohistan chiefs, two boxes of treasure containing 2000 rupees, about sixty stand of juzails, all his office records, Mr. Rattray's, Dr. Grant's, and his own personal property, and a number of horses belonging to himself, and the above-mentioned two officers, and to some horsemen who had not deserted; for the greater part of his mounted escort had fled in the beginning of the affray. The Heratees, and seven or eight Peshawarees, were the only Affghans who adhered to him; the Cabulees had deserted to a man immediately on the murder of Mr. Rattray; they had been much disgusted the preceding month, as well as their comrades who proved unfaithful too, by the sudden reduction of a portion of his escort; which naturally led them to apprehend that their livelihood from the British service was of a precarious nature.

On the morning of 5th Nov. large bodies of the enemy closed in round the Charekar barracks, and about 7 o'clock they attacked the outposts with a spirit engendered by the success of the preceding evening. Capt. Codrington requested Major Pottinger to take charge of what artillery he had, and to move a squadron in support of the skirmishers, which he did. The skirmishers were driven in, and, while retreating, Major Pottinger was wounded in the leg by a musket shot. Encouraged by this, and by the unfinished state of the works round the barracks, in the entrance of which there was no gate, the enemy advanced with great determination to the attack, and dislodged the Goorkhas from some mud huts outside, which were still occupied by a part of the regiment. In this affair Capt. Codrington, an officer of whose merits it is difficult to speak too highly, fell mortally wounded. The main post was, however, successfully defended, and the enemy driven back with considerable loss; upon which Mr. Haughton (who had now succeeded to the command, the only remaining officer being Mr. Rose, a mere youth,) made a sortie and drove the enemy out of the gardens occupied by them in the morning, maintaining his ground against their most desperate efforts until after dark. Relief was then sent to the garrison (consisting of about 50 men) of Khaja Meer's fort, which it had been found expedient to occupy previously, because it commanded the interior of the barracks on the southern side.

From this time the unfortunate horses and cattle of the garrison were obliged to endure the extremity of thirst, there being no water for them, and the supply for even the fighting men scanty in the extreme, obtained only from a few pools in the ditch of the rampart, which had been formed by a seasonable fall of rain. During the 6th the enemy renewed their attack in augmented numbers, the whole population of the country apparently swarming to the scene of action. Notwithstanding two successful sorties, all the outposts were driven in by dark, and thenceforth the garrison was confined to the barrack itself.

On the 7th the enemy got possession of Khoja Meer's fort: the regimental monshee had been gained over, and through him the native officer was induced to surrender. From the towers of that fort, on the 8th, the enemy offered terms, on the condition that all the infidels should embrace Mahomedanism. Major Pottinger replied, that they had come to aid a Mahomedan sovereign in the recovery of his rights; that they consequently were within the pale of Islam, and exempt from coercion on the score of religion. The enemy rejoined, that the King himself had ordered them to attack the Kaffirs, and wished to know if Major Pottinger would yield on receiving an order. He refused to do so, except on the production of a written document. All this time the garrison was sorely galled from the post of vantage in possession of the enemy.

On the 9th, the enemy were enabled by the carelessness of the guard to blow up a part of the south-west tower of the barracks; but, before they could profit by the breach and the panic of the men, Mr. Haughton rallied the fugitives, and, leading them back, secured the top of the parapet wall with a barricade of boards and sand-bags.

On the 10th, the officers drew their last pool of water, and served out half a wineglass to each fighting man.

On the 11th, all could not share even in that miserable proportion, and their sufferings from thirst were dreadful. During the night a sortie was made, and some of the followers brought in a little water from a distant place, the sight of which only served to aggravate the distress of the majority ; still, however, the fortitude of these brave and hardy soldiers remained unshaken, although apathy, the result of intense suffering, especially among Hindoos, began to benumb their faculties.

On the 12th, after dark, Mr. Haughton ordered out a party to cover the water-carriers in an attempt to obtain a supply ; but the over-harassed Sepoys, unable to restrain themselves, dashed out of the ranks on approaching the coveted element, instead of standing to their arms to repel the enemy, and, consequently, the expedition failed in its object. Another sortie, consisting of two companies under Ensign Rose, was then ordered out, one of which, having separated from the other, dispersed in search of water ; that under Mr. Rose himself fell on a post of the besiegers, every man of which they bayoneted; but, being unaccountably struck with a panic, the men fled back to the barracks, leaving Mr. Rose almost alone, who was then obliged to return, having accomplished his object but partially. These circumstances were communicated by Mr. Haughton to Major Pottinger (whose wound had disabled him from active bodily co-operation in these last events), together with the startling intelligence, that the corps was almost wholly disorganised from the large amount of killed and wounded, the hardships it had undergone, the utter inefficiency of the native officers, who had no sort of control over the soldiers, the exhaustion of the men from constant duty, and the total want of water and provisions.

Relief from Cabul, for which Major Pottinger had written repeatedly, seemed now hopeless, and an attempt at protracted defence of the post appeared likely to ensure the destruction of its brave defenders. Major Pottinger considered that the only remaining chance of saving any portion of the regiment was a retreat to Cabul; and, although that was abundantly perilous, he entertained a hope that a few of the most active men who were not encumbered with wives and children might escape. Then was felt most bitterly, the impolicy of the encouragement which had been held out to all the recruits to bring their families with them, on what, even at the time of their being raised, was looked on by the most able officers as likely to prove a campaign of several years. Mr. Haughton coincided in the Major's views, and it was agreed, to ensure secrecy, that the men should not be informed of their intentions until paraded for the march.

This wretched state of things continued until the afternoon of the 13th, when Mr. Haughton discovered amongst the Punjabee artillerymen two who had deserted a few days previously, and who apparently had returned for the purpose of seducing their comrades. He immediately seized them ; but, while he was in the act of their apprehension, the jemadar of the artillery, himself a Punjabee Mussulman, snatched a sword from a bystander, and cut down that officer, repeating his blows as he lay on the ground. Before the astonished Goorkhas could draw their knives or handle their muskets, this miscreant, followed by all the artillerymen and the greater number of the Mahomedans in the barracks, rushed out of the gate and escaped. The tumult and confusion occasioned by this impressed Major Pottinger with the idea that the enemy had driven the men from the walls ; under this impression, he caused himself to be carried to the main gate, but on his arrival he found that Dr. Grant had secured that point, and rallied the men. The native officers immediately gathered round him, with many of the Sepoys, to assert their fidelity ; but demoralization had evidently progressed fearfully, as may be judged from the fact that the garrison had plundered the treasure and the quarters of the deceased Capt. Codrington the instant the Major had left them, and that in the face of the enemy's fire they had pulled down the officers' boxes, which had been piled up as traverses to protect the doorway, broken them open, and pillaged them. Dr. Grant then amputated Mr. Haughton's right hand, and hastily dressed the severe wounds which he had received in his left arm and on his neck. In the evening the doctor spiked all the guns with his own hands, and the garrison then left the barracks by the postern gate. The advance was led by Major Pottinger (Mr. Haughton, who accompanied him, being unable to do more than sit passively on his horse), Dr. Grant brought out the main body, and Ensign Rose, with the Quart.-Mast.-Serjt., commanded the rear.

Notwithstanding the previous sufferings of these unfortunate men, it may be said that here commenced their real disasters. In vain did Major Pottinger attempt to lead his men to seize a building generally occupied by the enemy after night-fall, by the possession of which the exit of the main body from the barracks might be covered. In fact, it was with much difficulty that he eventually succeeded in halting them at about half a mile from the barracks until the main body and rear should close up. The men were naturally occupied entirely with their families, and such property as it had been impossible to prevent their bringing away; and discipline, the only source of hope under such circumstances, was at an end.

After the junction of the main body and rear, Dr. Grant suddenly disappeared, and was not afterwards seen.

The regiment then proceeded along the road to Sinjit Durrah, where Major Pottinger knew that water could be procured. On reaching the first stream, the last remnant of control over this disorderly mob was lost; much delay took place, and, in moving on, the advance became suddenly separated from the main body. After an anxious search Major Pottinger effected a rejunction.

At Sinjit Durrah they quitted the road to avoid alarming the villages, and any outposts that might be stationed there; and much time was lost in regaining the track from the other side: at Istalif the same manœuvre was practised. Major Pottinger now found very few inclined to push on; exhaustion from the pain of his wound precluded the possibility of his being of any further use as a leader; and he determined to push on with Mr. Haughton towards Cabul, although with faint hope, that the strength of either would prove adequate to the exertion. Having no guide, they got into many difficulties; and day was breaking by the time they reached the range of mountains half way between Charekar and Cabul. Men and horses were by this time incapable of further endurance: the latter, it must be remembered, had been ten days without water previously to starting, and five days without food; they were still upwards of twenty miles from any place of safety; their sufferings from their wounds, fatigue, hunger, and thirst, made life a burden, and at this time despair had almost obtained a victory—but God sustained them. By Mr. Haughton's advice they sought shelter in a very deep but dry ravine, close to a small village, hoping that their proximity to danger might prove a source of safety; as it was probable that the inhabitants, who by this time must have been on the alert, would scarcely think of looking for their prey close to their own doors. The companions of Major Pottinger and Mr.

Haughton were a sepoy of the regiment, a moon-shee, and the regimental buniah. In the forenoon they were alarmed by a firing on the mountains above them; the cause of this, as it appeared afterwards, was that a few of the fugitive Goorkhas had ascended the hills for safety (which, indeed, it was Major Pottinger's wish to do, until he yielded to the arguments of his companion), whither they were pursued and massacred by the country people. The rest of the day passed in tranquillity; and again, under the friendly shroud of darkness, having previously calculated their exact position, did this sorely-bested little party resume their dangerous route. It was providential that Major Pottinger had, from his habits as a traveller through unknown and difficult regions, accustomed himself to ascertain and remember the bearings of the most conspicuous landmarks of the countries he traversed; it was therefore comparatively easy for him to lead the way over the steep and rugged peaks, by which alone they might hope to find a safe path, — for the main road, and even the more accessible tracks across the tops of the mountains, were closely beset, and watch-fires gleamed in all directions. Indeed Gholam-Moyun-ood-deer, a distinguished partizan in the service of the rebels, had been despatched from Cabul, with a number of his most active followers, purposely to intercept and seize the Major, of whose flight intelligence had been early received, and actually was at that time patrolling those very heights over which the fugitives passed. But the protecting hand of Providence was displayed not only in leading them unharmed through the midst of their enemies, but in supplying them with mental fortitude and bodily strength. Weak and exhausted, their hardy and usually sure-footed Toorkman horses could scarcely strain up the almost impracticable side of the mountain, or preserve their equilibrium in the sharp sudden descents which they encountered, for path there was none. On one occasion Mr. Haughton, whose desperate wounds I have already described, fell off, and, being unable to rise, declared his determination of awaiting his fate where he lay. The Major refused to desert him, and both slept for about one hour, when, nature being a little restored, they pushed on until they descended into the plain of Alifat, which they crossed, avoiding the fort of that name, and struggling up the remaining ridge that separated them from the plain of Cabul, they entered it by the Southern end of the Cabul lake. Intending now to cross the cultivation, and to reach cantonments by the back of the Shah's garden, Major Pottinger missed his road close to Kila-i-bolund, and found himself within the enemies sentries; but being unwilling to alarm them by retracing his steps, after discovering his mistake, he led the way towards Deh Affghan. Here they were challenged by various outposts, to whom they answered after the fashion of Affghan horsemen; but they were compelled, in order to avoid suspicion, actually to enter the city of Cabul, their only hope now being in the slumberous security of the inhabitants at that hour (it being now about 3 A. M.), and in the protection of their Affghan dress and equipments. The Goorkha sepoy, who, strange to say, had kept up with them on foot, had his outward man concealed by a large postheen, or sheep-skin cloak. They pursued their way through the lanes and bazar of the city, without any interruption, except the occasional gruff challenge of a sleepy watchman, until they gained the skirts of the city. There they were like to have been stopped by a picket which lay between them and the cantonment. — The disposition to a relaxation of vigilance as the morning approaches, which marks the Affghan soldier, again befriended them; they had nearly passed the post before they were pursued. — Desperation enabled them to urge their wearied horses into a pace, which barely gave them the advantage over their enemies who were on foot; and they escaped with a volley from the now aroused picket, the little Goorkha freshening his way in the most surprising manner, considering his previous journey. A few hundred yards further brought them within the ramparts of our cantonment, where they were received by their brethren in arms as men risen from the dead.

CHAP. V.

CONTEMPLATED WITHDRAWAL FROM THE CANTONMENT AT CABUL, AND REMOVAL TO THE BALA HISSAR. — THIS MOVEMENT OPPOSED BY BRIGADIER SHELTON. — DISAPPOINTED EXPECTATION OF RECEIVING AID FROM GENERAL SALE. — MAHMOOD KHAN'S FORT STRANGELY ALLOWED TO REMAIN IN THE POSSESSION OF THE ENEMY. — LETTER FROM THE ENVOY TO THE GENERAL. — UNPROFITABLE OPERATIONS AT THE VILLAGE OF BEYMAROO. — ARRIVAL OF MAHOMED AKBER KHAN AT CABUL.

November 16th. — THE impression made on the enemy by the action of the 13th was so far salutary, that they did not venture to annoy us again for several days. Advantage was taken of this respite to throw magazine supplies from time to time into the Bala Hissar, a duty which was ably performed by Lieut. Walker, with a resalah of irregular horse under cover of night. But even in this short interval of comparative rest, such was the wretched construction of the cantonment, that the mere ordinary routine of garrison duty, and the necessity of closely manning our long line of rampart both by day and night, was a severe trial to the health and patience of the troops; especially now that the winter began to show symptoms of unusual severity. There seemed, indeed, every probability of an early fall of snow, to which all looked forward with dread, as the harbinger of fresh difficulties and of augmented suffering.

These considerations, and the manifest superiority of the Bala Hissar as a military position, led to the early discussion of the expediency of abandoning the cantonment and consolidating our forces in the above-mentioned stronghold. The Envoy himself was, from the first, greatly in favour of this move, until overruled by the many objections urged against it by the military authorities; to which, as will be seen by a letter from him presently quoted, he learned by degrees to attach some weight himself; but to the very last it was a measure that had many advocates, and I venture to state my own firm belief that, had we at this time moved into the Bala Hissar, Cabul would have been still in our possession. The chief objections urged were, 1st, the difficulty of conveying our sick and wounded; 2dly, the want of firewood; 3dly, the want of forage for the cavalry; 4thly, the triumph that our abandonment of cantonments would afford the enemy; 5thly, the risk of defeat on the way thither. On the other hand it was advanced, 1st, that, though to carry the sick would be difficult, it still was not impossible; for so short a distance two, or even three, men could be conveyed on each doolie; some might manage to walk, and the rest could be mounted on the yaboos and camels, on top of their loads; 2dly, although wood was scarce in the Bala Hissar, there was enough for purposes of cooking, and for the want of fires the troops would be amply compensated by the comparative ease and comfort they would enjoy in other respects; 3dly, the horses must, in the case of there being no forage, have been shot; but the want of cavalry would have been little felt in such a situation; 4thly, as we should have destroyed all that was valuable before leaving, the supposed triumph of the enemy would have been very short-lived, and would soon have given way to a feeling of disappointment at the valueless nature of their acquisition, and of dismay at the strength and security of our new position; 5thly, the distance did not exceed two miles, and one half of that distance was protected by the guns of the Bala Hissar. If we had occupied the Seeah Sung hills with a strong party, placing guns there to sweep the plain on the cantonment side, the enemy could have done little to impede our march, without risking a battle with our whole force in a fair field, to which they were generally averse, but which would, perhaps, have been the best mode for us of deciding the struggle.

To remove so large a force, clogged with so many thousands of camp followers, without loss of some kind, was, of course, next to impossible; but ought such considerations to have interfered with a step, which would have been attended in the long run with such great military and political advantages? Our troops, once collected in the Bala Hissar, could have been spared for offensive operations against the city and the neighbouring forts, by which means plenty of food and forage would in all probability have been readily procured, while the commanding nature of the position would have caused the enemy to despair of driving us out, and a large party would probably have been ere long formed in our favour. Such were the chief arguments employed on either side; but Brigadier Shelton having firmly set his face against the movement from the first moment of its proposition, all serious idea of it was gradually abandoned, though it continued to the very last a subject of common discussion.

November 18th.—Accounts were this day received from Jellalabad, that Gen. Sale, having sallied from the town, had repulsed the enemy with considerable loss. At the beginning of the insurrection, Gen. Sale's brigade was at Gundamuk; and I have already mentioned, that an order recalling it to Cabul was immediately despatched by the Envoy. Gen. Sale, on receipt of it, summoned a council of war, by whom it was unanimously agreed to be impracticable to obey the order. The circumstances of his march to Jellalabad are already well known to the public. The hope of his return had tended much to support our spirits; our disappointment was therefore great to learn that all expectations of aid from that quarter was at an end. Our eyes were now turned towards the Candahar force as our last resource, though an advance from that quarter seemed scarcely practicable so late in the year.

Much discussion took place this evening regarding the expediency of taking Mahmood Khan's fort. There were many reasons to urge in favour of making the attempt. It was one of the chief resorts of the rebels during the day, and they had established a battery of two guns under the walls, from which they constantly fired upon our foraging parties, and upon the south-east bastion of cantonments. It was about 900 yards distant from our rampart, which was too far for breaching with the 9-pounders, but a dry canal, which ran towards it in a zigzag direction, afforded facilities for a regular approach within 300 yards, of which advantage might have been taken to enable the artillery to make a breach. Secondly, this fort commanded the road all the way up to the Bala

Hissar, and the possession of it would at once have secured to us an easy communication with that place, and with the city. Thirdly, the Envoy declared his opinion that the moral effect derived from its possession would be more likely to create a diversion in our favour, than any other blow we could strike, as the Affghans had always attached great importance to its occupation. These considerations had decided the General in favour of making the attempt this very night, by blowing open the gate, and a storming party was actually warned for the duty, when Lieut. Sturt, the engineer officer, raising some sudden objection, the plan was given up, and never afterwards resumed by the military. It was, however, the cause of no small astonishment to the officers in the Bala Hissar, who, from their commanding situation, could observe all that took place on both sides, that Mahmood Khan's fort should have been suffered to remain in the hands of the enemy, though at night it was often garrisoned by a mere handful of men. This fort, nevertheless, gave abundant occupation to the artillery, who, when nothing else was going on, were frequently employed in disturbing the enemy in that quarter with one of the iron 9-pounders, and an occasional shelling from the mortar.

November 19th.— A letter was this day received by the General from the Envoy to the following effect : — “ That, all hope of assistance from Jellalabad being over, it behoved us to take our future proceedings into consideration. He himself conceived it our imperative duty to hold on as long as possible in our present position, and he thought we might even struggle through the whole winter by making the Mahomedans and Christians live chiefly upon flesh, supposing our supplies of grain to fail ; by which means, as the essentials of wood and water were abundant, he considered our position might be rendered impregnable. A retreat towards Jellalabad would seem not only with disaster, but dishonour, and ought not to be contemplated until the very last extremity. In eight or ten days we should be better able to judge whether such extremity should be resorted to. In that case, we should have to sacrifice not only the valuable property of Government, but his majesty Shah Shoojah, to support whose authority we were employed by Government ; and even were we to make good our retreat to Jellalabad, we should have no shelter for our troops, and our camp followers would all be sacrificed. He had frequently thought of negotiating, but there was no party of sufficient power and influence to protect us. Another alternative would be to throw ourselves into the Bala Hissar ; but he feared that would be also a disastrous retreat, to effect which much property must be necessarily sacrificed. Our heavy guns might be turned against us, and food and fuel might be scarce, for a further supply of which we might be dependent on sorties into the city, in which, if beaten, we must of course be ruined. On the whole, he was decidedly of opinion that we should hold out; it was still possible that reinforcements might arrive from Candahar, or something might turn up in our favour; there were hopes, too, that, on the setting in of winter, the enemy would disperse. He had been long disposed to recommend a blow being struck to retrieve our fortunes, such as taking Mahmood Khan's fort; but he had since reason to believe this would not answer. In eight or ten days, he concluded, it would remain for the military authorities to determine whether there was any chance of improving our position, and to decide whether it would be more prudent to attempt a retreat to Jellalabad, or to the Bala Hissar. If provision sufficient for the winter could be procured, on no account would he leave the cantonment."

November 22d.—The village of Beymaroo, (or "husbandless," from a beautiful virgin who was buried there,) was situated about half a mile to the north of cantonments, on the Kohistan road, at the north-east extremity of a hill which bounded the plain to the west. As it was built on a slope, and within musket shot, the upper houses commanded a large portion of the Mission Compound. From this village we for a long time drew supplies, the Envoy largely bribing the proprietor, to which, however, the enemy in some measure put a stop, by taking possession of it every day. This morning, large bodies of Affghan horse and foot, having again issued from the city, proceeded to crown the summit of the above-mentioned hill. It was determined, at the recommendation of the Envoy, to send a party of our troops to forestall the enemy in the occupation of the village, and Major Swayne, 5th N. I., was appointed to that duty, with a detachment composed as follows:—a Wing 5th N. I., 2 Resallas Irregular Horse, 1 Resalla 5th Light Cavalry, and one Mountain train gun. The party had already reached the village, when it was deemed proper to send after it a Horse Artillery gun, which I was requested by the General to accompany. Major Swayne, however, it would seem by his own account, found the village already occupied by a body of Kohistanees, and the entrance blocked up in such a manner that he considered it out of his power to force a passage. On arriving at the place with the H. A. gun, I found him in an orchard on the road side, the trees of which partially protected the men from a very sharp fire, poured in amongst them from the houses. There being no shelter for the gun here, nor any mode of employing it to advantage, it was ordered to cross some fields to the right, and take up a position where it could best fire upon the village, and upon the heights above it, which were now crowded with the enemy's infantry. In order to protect the horses, I drew up the gun near the fort of Zoolfa Khan, under the walls of which they had shelter; but for the gun itself no other position could be found than in the open field, where it was exposed to the full fire of the enemy posted in the village and behind the neighbouring walls. The Mountain-train gun was also with me, and both did some execution among the people on the summit of the hill, though to little purpose.

Major Swayne, whose orders were to storm the village, would neither go forward nor retire; but, concealing his men under the cover of some low wall, he all day long maintained an useless fire on the houses of Beymaroo, without the slightest satisfactory result. The cavalry were drawn up in rear of the gun on the open plain, as a conspicuous mark for the Kohistannees, and where, as there was nothing for them to do, they accordingly did nothing. Thus we remained for five or six hours, during which time the artillery stood exposed to the deliberate aim of the numerous marksmen who occupied the village and its immediate vicinity, whose bullets continually sang in our ears, often striking the gun, and grazing the ground on which we stood. Only two gunners, however, out of six were wounded, but the cavalry in our rear had many casualties both among men and horses.

Late in the evening, a party of Affghan horse moving round from behind Beymaroo, proceeded towards a fort in our rear, whence a cross fire was opened upon us. Brigadier Shelton now joined, bringing with him a reinforcement from the 5th N. I., under Col. Oliver. Major Swayne, with two companies, was then sent to reconnoitre the fort whence the fire proceeded, and the H. A. gun was at the same time moved round, so as to bear upon the Affghan cavalry, who hovered among the trees in the same quarter. While engaged in this operation, I received a bullet through the left hand, which for the present terminated my active services. Shortly after this the troops were recalled into cantonments.

It is worthy of note, that Mahomed Akber

Khan, second son of the late Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan, arrived in Cabul this night from Bameean. This man was destined to exercise an evil influence over our future fortunes. The crisis of our struggle was already nigh at hand.

CHAP. VI.

A SECOND EXPEDITION TO BEYMAROO. — INCREASING NUMBERS AND VIGILANCE OF THE ENEMY. — OUR FORCE DRIVEN BACK WITH SEVERE LOSS. — OBSERVATIONS.

November 23d. — THIS day decided the fate of the Cabul force. At a council held at the General's house on the night of the 22d it was determined, on the special recommendation of the Envoy, that, in consequence of the inconvenience sustained by the enemy so frequently taking possession of Beymaroo, and interrupting our foraging parties, a force, under Brigadier Shelton, should on the following morning take the village by assault, and maintain the hill above it against whatever number of the enemy might appear. Accordingly, at 2 A. M. the under-mentioned troops* moved out of cantonments in perfect silence by the Kohistan

- * 1 H. A. gun, under Sergt. Mulhal.
- 5 Cos. H. M. 44th, under Capt. Leighton.
- 6 Cos. 5th N. I., under Lieut.-Col. Oliver.
- 6 Cos. 37th N. I., under Major Kershaw, H. M. 13th.
- Sappers, 100 men, under Lieut. Laing.
- 1 Squadron 5th Lt. Cav., under Capt. Bott.
- 1 Ditto Irregular Horse, under Lieut. Walker.
- 100 men, Anderson's Horse.

gate, and skirting the musjed immediately opposite, which was held by a company of Her Majesty's 44th, took the direction of the gorge at the further extremity of the Beymaroo hill, which they ascended, dragging the gun to the top with great difficulty, from the rugged and steep nature of the side, which labour was greatly facilitated by the exertions of 200 commissariat surwoons, who had volunteered for the occasion. The whole force then moved to the knoll at the N. E. extremity of the hill, which overhung the village of Beymaroo. The gun was placed in position commanding an enclosure in the village, which, from its fires, was judged to be the principal bivouac of the enemy, and a sharp fire of grape commenced, which evidently created great confusion, but it was presently answered by a discharge of juzails; the enemy forsaking the open space, and covering themselves in the houses and towers: to this we replied in the intervals of the cannonade by discharges of musketry. It was suggested by Capt. Bellew and others to Brigadier Shelton to storm the village, while the evident panic of the enemy lasted, under cover of the darkness, there being no moon: to this the Brigadier did not accede.

When the day broke, parties of the enemy were descried hurrying from the village, and taking across the plain towards the distant fort, their fire having previously slackened from the failure of their ammunition. At this time, certainly, not above 40 men remained in the village. A storming party, consisting of 2 companies 37th N. I. and some Europeans, under Majors Swayne and Kershaw, were ordered to carry the village; but Major Swayne, taking a wrong direction, missed the principal entrance, which was open, and arrived at a small kirkhee, or wicket, which was barricaded, and which he had no means of forcing, so that he was obliged to cover himself and his men as well as he could from the sure aim of the enemy's marksmen, by whose fire his party suffered considerably, himself being shot through the neck.

After remaining thus for about half an hour, he was recalled by the Brigadier, who observed large bodies of armed men pouring out from the city towards the scene of conflict. Meanwhile Lieut. Walker had been directed to lead his irregular horse down into the plain on the west side of the hill, to cut off such fugitives from the village as he might be able to intercept, and to cover himself from the fire of infantry under the walls of an old fort not far from the base of the hill. Brigadier Shelton, leaving three companies of the 37th N. I. in the knoll above Beymaroo as a reserve, under Major Kershaw, moved back with the troops and guns to the part of the hill which overlooked the gorge.

Shortly after this it was suggested to raise a sunga, or stone breastwork, for the protection of the troops wholly exposed to the distant fire of the enemy's juzails, but this proposition was not acted on. Immense numbers of the enemy issuing from the city, had now crowned the summits of the hill opposite the gorge,—in all, probably 10,000 men. The plain on the west of the two hills was swept by swarms of their cavalry, who evidently designed to cut off the small party of Irregular Horse under Lieut. Walker; while the failure of our attempt to storm the village had rendered it easy for the enemy to throw strong reinforcements into it, and to supply the ammunition of which they had been in great want.

About 7 A. M., the fire from the enemy's hill was so galling, that the few skirmishers sent to the brow of our hill could with difficulty retain their posts. As an instance of the backwardness which now began to develop itself among our men, it must be mentioned, that Lieut.-Col. Oliver endeavoured to induce a party of his own regiment to follow him to the brow of the hill, to keep down the sharp fire of a number of the enemy, who had ensconced themselves in a small ravine commanding the foremost square; not a man would follow him, — and it was only after that brave officer had gone forward himself into the thickest of the fire, saying, “Although my men desert me, I myself will do my duty,” that about a dozen were shamed into performing theirs. The remainder of the troops (the infantry formed into two squares, and the cavalry being drawn up en masse immediately in their rear,) suffered severely without being able to retaliate, from the comparatively short range of the musket. Our single gun maintained as hot a fire on the masses of the enemy as possible, doing great execution; but the want of a second gun, to take up the fire was sensibly felt, inasmuch as, after a short time, the vent became too hot for the artillerymen to serve. This state of things continued until between 9 and 10 o’clock, when a large party of the enemy’s cavalry threatened our right flank, and, to prevent his destruction, Lieut. Walker was recalled. This demonstration, however, was repulsed by a well-directed discharge of shrapnell from the H. A. gun, by one of which a chief of consequence, supposed to be Abdoollah Khan, Achukzye, was mortally wounded.

By the recall of Lieut. Walker the enemy were enabled to surround our position at all points, except that facing the cantonments; our gun ammunition was almost expended, and the men were faint with fatigue and thirst (no water being procurable), while the number of killed and wounded was swelled every instant.

About this time (between 10 and 11 A. M.), large bodies of the enemy's infantry advanced across the plain from the Shah Bagh to the end of the hill, to cut off the supplies of ammunition coming from cantonments, as also the dhoolies on which we endeavoured to send off a few of the wounded. These, however, were checked by a party of our troops in the musjed, opposite the Kohistan gate, and by about fifty juzailchees under the temporary command of Capt. Trevor, (Capt. Mackenzie, their leader, having been requested by Brigadier Shelton to act as one of the staff for the day,) who lined some low walls and watercourses, as well as by frequent discharges of round shot and shrapnell from the cantonment guns under Lieut. Warburton.

Previously to this, numbers of the most daring Ghazees had descended into the gorge, and, taking advantage of some hillocks on the ascent towards our position, had crept gradually up, maintaining a deadly fire on our skirmishers, who were, unfortunately, wholly exposed; they became at length disheartened, and gave way. At this moment the Brigadier offered a reward of 100 rupees to any man who should take a flag of the enemy, which had been planted behind a tumulus about thirty yards in front of the square, and he fruitlessly endeavoured to induce the men to charge bayonets; several of the officers at the same time advanced to the front, and actually pelted the enemy with stones.* All attempts, however, to encourage our men were in vain. The attacking party were now emboldened to make a rush upon our gun; our cavalry were ordered to charge, but again in vain, for the men would not follow their officers.† The panic spread, and our troops gave way, except the second square, which had been formed about 200 yards in the rear, and three companies under Major Kershaw at the other extremity of the hill; behind this second square the officers with great difficulty rallied the fugitives, leaving the

* The names of this little band of heroes deserve to be recorded: they were Capt. Macintosh and Lieut. Laing, who were almost instantly killed, and Capts. Mackenzie, Troup, and Leighton; the latter fell in the retreat of the army from Cabul, the other two happily still survive to fight their country's battles: of such men the Indian army may well be proud.

† Capts. Bott and Collyer, 5th Light Cavalry, Lieut. Walker, Irregular Horse, Russular Ishmael Khan, Jemadar Synd, Mahomed Synd, and Mirza Musseer Bey, of Anderson's Horse.

gun in the hands of the enemy, who lost no time in walking off with the limber and horses.

By this time the news of Abdoolah Khan's wound had spread among the ranks of the enemy, causing great confusion, which extended to the Ghazees now in possession of the gun. This, and the tolerably firm attitude resumed by our troops, induced them to content themselves with the limber and horses, and retire. Their retreat gave fresh courage to our disheartened soldiers, who again took possession of the gun, and advanced to the brow of the hill, where were found the bodies of Capt. Macintosh and Lieut. Laing, as well as those of the soldiers slain in the onset, including two H. A. men, who, with a devotedness worthy of British soldiers, had perished while vainly endeavouring to defend their charge. Some fresh gun-ammunition having now arrived from cantonments, carried by Lascars, a fire was again opened on the ranks of the enemy; but we were unable to push the advantage gained by the momentary disorder alluded to above, because, in fact, the cavalry would not act. In the observations on this action, made hereafter, there will be found some palliation for the backwardness of the cavalry on this occasion, in spite of the gallant bearing of their leaders; the infantry were too few, and too much worn out and disheartened, to be able to make a forward movement. The consequence was, that not only did the whole force of the enemy come on with renewed vigour and spirits, maintaining at the same time the fatal juzail fire which had already so grievously thinned our ranks, but fresh numbers poured out of the city, and from the surrounding villages, until the hill occupied by them scarcely afforded room for them to stand.

This unequal conflict having lasted until past noon, during which period reinforcements and an additional gun had been in vain solicited from the cantonments, Brigadier Shelton sent Capt. Mackenzie to request Major Kershaw to move up his reserve, (which could scarcely so be called, having been the whole day hard pressed by large bodies of the enemy in the village, and by parties occupying ruins and broken ground on the skirts of his position). The Major, fearing that, if he abandoned the knoll on which he had been stationed, our retreat to the cantonments (then becoming more and more imperatively necessary) might be cut off, made answer, that "he begged to suggest, that the Brigadier should fall back upon him." Before this message could be delivered, the front ranks of the advanced square, at the Brigadier's extremity of the hill, had been literally mowed down; — most of the artillerymen, who performed their duty in a manner which is beyond praise, shared the same fate. The manœuvre practised by the Ghazees previously was repeated by still greater numbers. The evident unsteadiness of our troops, and the imminent danger to which the gun was a second time exposed, induced the Brigadier, after repeated suggestions from Serg. Mulhall, who commanded the battery, to order the gun to be limbered up—a second limber having arrived from cantonments—and to retire towards Major Kershaw's position. Scarcely had this movement been commenced, when a rush from the Ghazees completely broke the square;—all order was at an end:—the entreaties and commands of the officers, endeavouring to rally the men, were not even listened to, and an utter rout ensued down the hill in the direction of cantonments, the enemy closely following, whose cavalry, in particular, made a fearful slaughter among the unresisting fugitives. Major Kershaw's party, perceiving this disaster, endeavoured to escape; but strong parties, issuing from the village, cut off their retreat, and thus great numbers of our Sepoys perished: the grenadier company, especially, was all but annihilated. The mingled tide of flight and pursuit seemed, to those who manned the walls of cantonment, to be about to enter the gate together; and, by some fatality, the ammunition of the great guns in battery within the cantonments was almost expended. A heavy fire, however, was opened from the Shah's 5th Infantry in the Mission Compound; a fresh troop of the 5th Cavalry, under Lieut. Hardyman, charged across the plain towards the enemy, joined by Lieut. Walker, who had rallied fifteen or twenty of his own men; during which gallant effort this most promising and brave young officer received a mortal wound. These operations, assisted by a sharp discharge from the juzailchees under Capt. Trevor, contributed to check the pursuit; and it was observed at the time, and afterwards ascertained to be correct, that a chief (Osman Khan) voluntarily halted his followers, who were among the foremost, and led them off; which may be reckoned, indeed, the chief reason why all of our people, who on that day went forth to battle, were not destroyed. Our loss was tremendous; the principal part of the wounded having been left in the field, including Lieut.-Col. Oliver, where they were miserably cut to pieces. Our gun and second limber, which, while endeavouring to gallop down the hill, had overturned on rough ground, we had the mortification to behold triumphantly carried off by the enemy.

About half an hour previous to the flight of our troops, a note had been written to the Assist.-

Adj.-Gen. by Capt. Troup, earnestly requesting that the Mountain-train gun, which had by that time been repaired, might be sent out with the least possible delay, and the first idea that suggested itself to that officer after our defeat was, that by quickly bringing this gun to bear upon the H. A. gun, then in the hands of the enemy, the latter might still be saved. He therefore galloped with speed to cantonments, where finding the Mountain-train gun just ready to start, he was on the point of leading it out of the gate, when his progress was interrupted by the Assist.-Adj.-Gen., on the plea that it would now be of no use. This is the more to be lamented, as from the spot occupied by Capt. Trevor's juzailchees, who, protected by a low wall, still kept up a sharp and effectual fire on the enemy, the range to the side of the hill whence the Affghans were endeavouring to carry off the captured gun, about which they clustered in thousands, was so short, that grape, even from a small calibre, must have prevented the execution of their intentions. Had the company of fresh infantry, which was drawn up outside the gate under command of Lieut. Alexander, moved forward in company with the mountain gun to the support of the above gallant handful of juzailchees, excellent service might have been rendered. But it seemed as if we were under the ban of Heaven.

OBSERVATIONS.

In this miserable and disastrous affair no less than six great errors must present themselves, even to the most unpractised military eye, each of which contributed in no slight degree to the defeat of our troops, opposed as they were by overwhelming numbers.

1st, The first and perhaps most fatal mistake of all was the taking out a single gun. The General Order by the Marquess of Hastings, expressly forbidding less than two guns to take the field, under any circumstances or on any pretence whatever, when another is available, must be well known at least to every officer who has served in India. This positive prohibition was the offspring of dearly-bought experience, and the action of Beymaroo affords another convincing example of the risk to which a single gun is exposed, when unsupported by the fire of a second. It was certainly the Brigadier's intention to take the mountain gun also; but this had unfortunately been disabled on the previous day, and it had been twice specially reported, both to the Brigadier and to the General the foregoing night, by Capt. Troup, that it could not be got ready before 12 A.M. on the following day.

2dly, The second error is scarcely less evident than the first. — Had immediate advantage been taken of the panic which our unexpected cannonade created among the possessors of the village, — whose slack fire afforded sufficient evidence of the actual fact that they were not only contemptible in numbers, but short of ammunition, — had, I say, a storming party been led to the attack under cover of the darkness, which would have nullified the advantage they possessed in being under cover, the place must inevitably have fallen into our hands, and thus would the principal object of the sally have been gained, and a good line of retreat secured for our troops in case of necessity.

3dly, The third error was so manifest as to be quite unaccountable. A party of 100 sappers had accompanied the force for the express purpose of raising a sunga. The fittest place for such a work would have been half way along the ridge occupied by us, where our troops would then have been wholly protected from the fire of the juzails from the opposite hill, while the enemy could not have advanced to the attack without exposing themselves to the full effects of our musketry and grape. It would, in fact, have infused into our troops a sense of security from any sudden charge of the enemy's horse, and at the same time have enabled our own cavalry to issue forth with the assurance of having in their rear a place of defence, on which to fall back, if hard pressed by the enemy. It has been seen that no such defence was raised.

4thly, All have heard of the British SQUARES at Waterloo, which defied the repeated desperate onsets of Napoleon's choicest cavalry. At Beymaroo we formed squares to resist the distant fire of infantry, thus presenting a solid mass against the aim of perhaps the best marksmen in the world, the said squares being securely perched on the summit of a steep and narrow ridge, up which no cavalry could charge with effect. A Peninsular General would consider this to be a novel fashion; yet Brigadier Shelton had the benefit of peninsular experience in his younger days, and, it must be owned, was never surpassed in dauntless bravery.

5thly, Our cavalry, instead of being found upon the plain, where they might have been useful in protecting our line of communications with the cantonments, and would have been able to advance readily to any point where their services might have been required, were hemmed in between two infantry squares, and exposed for several hours to a destructive fire from the enemy's juzails, on ground where, even under the most favourable circumstances, they could not have acted with effect. This false and unsatisfactory position of course discouraged the troopers; and, when the infantry finally gave way, the two arms of the service became mixed up in a way that greatly increased the general confusion, and rendered it impossible for the infantry to rally, even had they been so disposed. The truth is, that the cavalry were not allowed fair play, and such a position must have disgusted and dispirited any troops.

6thly, Shortly after our regaining possession of the gun, one of the Brigadier's staff, Capt. Mackenzie, feeling convinced that, from the temper of the troops, and from the impossibility of rectifying the false position in which the force was placed, not only was success beyond hope, but that defeat in its most disastrous shape was fast approaching, proposed to the Brigadier to endeavour to effect a retreat, while it was yet in his power to do so with comparative impunity. His reply was, "Oh, no! we will hold the hill some time longer." At that time, even if the slaughter of the soldiery, the loss of officers, the evident panic in our ranks, and the worse than false nature of our position, had not been sufficient to open all eyes as to the impossibility even of partial success, (for the real object of the expedition, viz. the possession of the village of Beymaroo, had been, as it were, abandoned from the very first,) the weakness and exhaustion of both men and horses, who were not only worn out by bodily fatigue, but suffering grievously from extreme thirst, and the debility attendant on long fasting, ought to have banished all idea of further delaying a movement, in which alone lay the slightest chance of preserving to their country lives, by the eventual sacrifice of which not even the only solace to the soldier in the hour of misfortune, the consciousness of unimpaired honour, was likely to be gained.

CHAP. VII.

OUR PASSIVENESS. — CONFERENCES AND NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE INSURGENT CHIEFS. — LOSS OF MAHOMED SHEREEF'S FORT. — TERMS AGREED ON.

November 24th.—Our troops had now lost all confidence ; and even such of the officers, as had hitherto indulged the hope of a favourable turn in our affairs, began at last reluctantly to entertain gloomy forebodings as to our future fate. Our force resembled a ship in danger of wrecking among rocks and shoals, for want of an able pilot to guide it safely through them. Even now, at the eleventh hour, had the helm of affairs been grasped by a hand competent to the important task, we might perhaps have steered clear of destruction ; but, in the absence of any such deliverer, it was but too evident that Heaven alone could save us by some unforeseen interposition. The spirit of the men was gone ; the influence of the officers over them declined daily ; and that boasted discipline, which alone renders a handful of our troops superior to an irregular multitude, began fast to disappear from among us. The enemy, on the other hand, waxed bolder every day and every hour, nor was it long ere we got accustomed to be bearded with impunity from under the very ramparts of our garrison.

I have already mentioned the new bridge thrown over the river by Gen. Elphinstone: this the enemy, advancing up the bed of the river under cover of the bank, to-day began to demolish. I must do Brigadier Shelton the justice to say that he, seeing the vast importance of the bridge in case of a retreat (an alternative of which he never lost sight), had strongly urged the erection of a field-work for its protection; in fact, there was a small unfinished fort near at hand, which one night's work of the sappers would have rendered fit for the purpose, and a small detachment thrown into it would have perfectly commanded the bridge. But madness was equally apparent in all that was done or left undone: even this simple precaution was neglected, and the result will be seen in the sequel.

Capt. Conolly now wrote in from the Bala Hissar, strongly advising an immediate retreat thither, on which movement several of the chief military and all the political officers considered our only hope of holding out through the winter to depend. But the old objections were still urged against the measure by Brigadier Shelton and others; and the General, in a letter this day addressed to the Envoy, expressed his opinion that "the movement, if not altogether impossible, would be attended with great difficulty, encumbered as we should be with numerous sick and wounded. The enemy would doubtless oppose us with their whole force, and the greater part of the troops would be required to cover the operation, thus leaving the cantonments imperfectly defended; that the men were harassed, dispirited, and greatly reduced in numbers; and failure would be attended with certain destruction to the whole force. To remove the ammunition and stores would be the work of several days, during which the enemy would hover around, and offer every obstacle to our operations. Our wounded were increased, whilst our means of conveying them were diminished. Would the Bala Hissar hold the force with all the followers? Water was already said to be selling there at a high price.* We had barely twenty days' supply of provisions in the cantonments; and, even supposing we could find means to carry it with us, there was no prospect of obtaining more in the Bala Hissar. A retreat thence would be worse than from our present position, after having abandoned our cattle; and the sick and wounded must be left behind us." In these opinions Brigadier Shelton entirely concurred. An appalling list of objections, it must be confessed, but insufficient to shake my belief that a removal of the force into the Bala Hissar was not only practicable but necessary for our safety and honour, while the risks attending it, though formidable, were only such as we ought, as soldiers, to have unhesitatingly incurred. Shah Shoojah had moreover declared himself impatient to receive us; and, even had the dreaded ruin overwhelmed us in the attempt, would it not have been a more manly and honourable course, than the inglorious treaty we shortly afterwards entered into with a treacherous band of rebels, by which we deserted the sovereign whom it was our duty to protect to the last drop of our blood? Had we boldly sallied forth, preferring death to dishonour, would not the fate of our poor fellows have been an hundred-fold happier than that they subsequently experienced, in their miserable retreat, inasmuch as they would have died in the consciousness of having bravely done their duty? Never were troops exposed to greater hardships and dangers; yet, sad to say, never did soldiers shed their blood with less beneficial result than during the investment of the British lines at Cabul. While, therefore, justice is done to the memory of the dead, and those, who encountered a thousand perils in the brave and skilful performance of their duty, must be held up to that honour which is their due — while the tear of pity may well be shed at their untimely fate — the blame and discredit also must be theirs, who rendered nugatory all the oblations of blood that were offered, all the advantages that were gained, and finally involved a still formidable force in ruin and disgrace. But to return to my narrative.

* This report was entirely untrue.

A letter to the address of the Envoy was this day received from Osman Khan *, Barukzye, a near relative of the new King, and generally supposed to have a favourable bearing towards us, wherein he took credit to himself for having “checked the ardour of his followers in their pursuit of our flying troops on the preceding day, when, by following up their success, the loss of our cantonments and the destruction of our force was inevitable; but that it was not the wish of the chiefs to proceed to such dreadful extremities, their sole desire being that we should quietly evacuate the country, leaving them to govern it according to their own rules, and with a king of their own choosing.” On the receipt of this friendly communication, the Envoy requested the

* This chief had sheltered Capt. Drummond in his own house since the first day of the outbreak.

General to state his opinion regarding the possibility, in a military point of view, of retaining our position in the cantonments; as, in case of a negative reply, he might be able to enter into negotiations with the existing rulers of the country.

The General replied to the effect that "we had now been in a state of siege for three weeks; our provisions were nearly expended, and our forage entirely consumed, without the prospect of procuring a fresh supply; that our troops were much reduced by casualties, and the large number of sick and wounded increased almost daily; and that, considering the difficulty of defending the extensive and ill-situated cantonment, the near approach of winter, the fact of our communications being cut off, and that we had no prospect of reinforcement, with the whole country in arms against us; he did not think it possible to retain our present position in the country, and therefore thought the Envoy ought to avail himself of the offer to negotiate, which had been made him."

November 27th.— Nothing else of consequence took place until this morning, when two deputies from the assembled chiefs, having made their appearance at the bridge, were ushered into cantonments by Capts. Lawrence and Trevor, the Envoy having agreed to confer with them, on condition that nothing should be proposed which it would be derogatory in him to consider. The interview took place in the officers' guard-room at the eastern gate; the exact particulars did not transpire, but the demands made by the chiefs were such as it was impossible to comply with, and the deputies took leave of the Envoy with the exclamation that "we should meet again in battle!" "We shall at all events meet," replied Sir William, "at the day of judgment." At night the Envoy received a letter from the chiefs proposing terms of so disgraceful and insulting a nature, as seemed at once to preclude all hope of terminating our difficulties by treaty. The tenor of them was as follows: "That we should deliver up Shah Shoojah and his whole family; lay down our arms; and make an unconditional surrender; when they might perhaps be induced to spare our lives, and allow us to leave the country on condition of never returning." The Envoy's reply was such as well became the representative of his country's honour. "He was astonished," he said, "at their departing from that good faith for which he had given them credit, by violating the conditions on which he had been led to entertain proposals for a pacific arrangement; that the terms they proposed were too dishonourable to be entertained for a moment; and that, if they persisted in them, he must again appeal to arms, leaving the result to the God of battles."

December 1st.—No active renewal of hostilities took place until to-day, when a desperate effort was made by the enemy to gain possession of the Bala Hissar, which they endeavoured to effect by a night attack, in the first instance, on the Bourge-i-lakh, an isolated tower forming an out-work to the fortress, and from its elevated position commanding almost the entire works. This point was, however, strongly reinforced without delay by Major Ewart, commanding the garrison, and notwithstanding the determined spirit exhibited by the enemy, who made repeated charges up the hill, they were repulsed with considerable slaughter.

December 4th.—At an early hour the enemy moved out in force from the city, and, having crowned the Beymaroo hills, posted two guns in the gorge, from which they maintained a tolerably brisk fire for several hours into the cantonments, effecting fortunately but little mischief; in the evening they, as usual, retired to their respective haunts. During the night a rush was suddenly made by a party of Affghans to the gate of Mahomed Shereeff's fort, garrisoned by our troops, which they attempted, in imitation of our own method at the taking of Ghuznee, to blow open with powder bags, but without success.

December 5th.—This day the enemy completed the destruction of our bridge over the river, which they commenced on the 24th ult., no precaution having been taken to prevent the evil. Day after day we quietly looked on without an effort to save it, orders being in vain solicited by various officers for preventive measures to be adopted. In consequence of the enemy having commenced mining one of the towers of Mahomed Shereeff's fort, the garrison was reinforced, and Lieut. Sturt succeeded during the night in destroying the mine. This, however, could only be effected at the expense of opening a passage under the walls, which it became necessary to barricade; and although this measure of precaution was efficiently executed, such was the nervous state of the party composing the garrison, that no reliance could be placed on their stability in case of an attack.

December 6th.—The garrison of Mahomed Shereeff's fort was relieved at an early hour by one company of H. M.'s 44th, under Lieut. Grey, and one company 37th N. I. under Lieut. Hawtrey, an amply sufficient force for the defence of the place against any sudden onset; but, unhappily, the fears of the old garrison were communicated to the new, and, owing to the representations of Lieut. Hawtrey, the defences were minutely examined by Lieut. Sturt, the garrison engineer, and by him pronounced to be complete. Scarcely, however, had that officer returned to cantonments, ere information was conveyed to the General that the detachment, having been seized with a panic, had taken flight over the walls, and abandoned the fort to the enemy. It would appear that a small party of juzailchees, having crept up to the undermined tower under cover of the trees in the Shah Bagh, had fired upon the garrison through the barricaded breach which I have above described, unfortunately wounding Lieut. Grey, upon whose departure for medical aid, the Europeans, deprived of their officer, lost what little confidence they had before possessed, and collecting their bedding under the walls, betrayed symptoms of an intention to retreat. The enemy meanwhile, emboldened by the slackened fire of the defenders, approached momentarily nearer to the walls, and, making a sudden rush to the barricade, completed the panic of the garrison, who now made their escape over the walls in the greatest consternation, deaf to the indignant remonstrances of their gallant commander, who in vain entreated them not to disgrace themselves and him by such cowardly proceedings. Even the Sepoys, who at first remained staunch, contaminated by the bad example set them by their European brethren, refused to rally; and Lieut. Hawtrey, finding himself deserted by all, was obliged reluctantly to follow, being the last to leave the fort. It is, however, worthy of mention, that two Sepoys of the 37th N. I. were left dead in the fort, and two others were wounded, while not a man of the 44th was touched, excepting one, whose hand suffered from the accidental explosion of a grenade.

The enemy, though at first few in numbers, were not slow to avail themselves of the advantage afforded them by this miserable conduct of our troops, and their banner was soon planted in triumph on the walls, amidst the exulting shouts of hundreds. Much recrimination took place between the Europeans and the Sepoys engaged in this affair, each declaring the other had been the first to run; and a court of inquiry was assembled to investigate the matter, the result of which, though never entirely divulged, was generally supposed to be favourable to the Sepoys, it being a known fact, that the Europeans had brought off nearly all their bedding safe, whilst the Sepoys had left everything behind. At all events, a circumstance soon occurred, which abundantly testified the impression made on those in command. At this time the bazar village was garrisoned by a party of H. M.'s 44th, who, on observing the flight of the soldiers from Mahomed Shereeff's fort, were actually on the point of abandoning their own post, when they were observed and stopped by some officers, of whom one was Lieut. White, the adjutant of the regiment; but so little dependence could now be placed on their stability, that a guard from the 37th N. I. was stationed at the entrance of the bazar, with strict orders to prevent the exit of any Europeans on duty in the place.

December 7th. — The European garrison was this day withdrawn from the bazar, and a company of the 37th N. I. substituted in their room! This, being the weakest point of our defences, had hitherto been protected entirely by parties of H. M.'s 44th, which post of honour they were now considered unworthy to retain.

I may here be excused for offering a few brief remarks.

In the course of this narrative, I have been compelled by stern truth to note down facts nearly affecting the honour and interests of a British regiment. It may, or rather I fear it must inevitably happen, that my unreserved statements of the Cabul occurrences will prove unacceptable to many, whose private or public feelings are interested in glossing over or suppressing the numerous errors committed and censures deservedly incurred. But my heart tells me that no paltry motives of rivalry or malice influence my pen; rather a sincere and honest desire to benefit the public service, by pointing out the rocks on which our reputation was wrecked, the means by which our honour was sullied and our Indian empire endangered, as a warning to future actors in similar scenes. In a word, I believe that more good is likely to ensue from the publication of the whole unmitigated truth, than from a mere garbled statement of it. A kingdom has been lost — an army slain; — and surely, if I can show that, had we been but true to ourselves, and had vigorous measures been adopted, the result might have been widely different, I shall have written an instructive lesson to rulers and subjects, to generals and armies, and shall not have incurred in vain the disapprobation of the self-interested or the proud. It is notorious that the 44th foot had been for a long time previous to these occurrences in a state of woful deterioration. I firmly believe that in this, and in every other respect, they stood alone as a regiment of that noble army, whose glorious deeds in all quarters of the globe have formed, with those of the British navy, the foundation of our national pride, and have supplied for ages to come a theme of wonder and admiration. The regiment in question fell a prey to a vital disease, which the Horse Guards alone could have remedied, and which is now beyond the reach of proper investigation. May a redeeming glory and renown rise from its ashes!

The alarming discovery having been made that our supply of provisions had been materially overrated, and that not even a sufficiency for one day remained in store, Capt. Hay was despatched with a convoy of military stores into the Bala Hissar, with orders to bring back the animals laden with grain. He started several hours before daybreak, but on reaching the Seah Sung hill, a few straggling shots being fired upon his rear, the men riding the laden yaboos (Affghan ponies) were panic-stricken, and, hastily casting the loads to the ground, galloped for safety to the front. Much private property was lost at the same time, for, notwithstanding all the opposition that had been made to the proposal of a retreat to the Bala Hissar, the General in some degree deferred to the opinions of those who favoured the movement, by adopting the half-measure of sending in magazine supplies from time to time by dribblets. This led many to suppose that the whole force would sooner or later retreat thither, and accordingly advantage was taken of every opportunity to send in a few private necessities in advance. On this occasion the attempt failed in the manner I have above related; but Capt. Hay nevertheless accomplished the primary object of his journey, by bringing back as much provisions as could be collected on so short a notice.

December 8th.—The Envoy, having addressed a public letter to the General, requested him to state “whether or not it was his opinion that any further attempt to hold out against the enemy would merely have the effect of sacrificing both His Majesty Shah Shoojah and ourselves; and whether, supposing this to be so, the only alternative left was not to negotiate for our safe retreat out of the country, on the most favourable terms possible?” The General, in reply, stated his conviction that “the present situation of the troops was such, from the want of provisions and the impracticability of procuring more, that no time ought to be lost in entering into negotiations for a safe retreat from the country: That, as regarded the troops at Candahar, and the rumours of their approach to our assistance, he would be sorry, in the absence of all authentic information, to risk the sacrifice of the troops by waiting for their arrival, when we were ignorant even of their having commenced their march, and were reduced to three days' supply of provisions for our Sepoys at half rations, and almost without any forage for our horses and cattle: That our number of sick and wounded in hospital exceeded 600, and our means for their transport were far from adequate, owing to the death by starvation of so many of our camels, from which cause also we should be obliged, at this inclement season, to leave their tents and bedding behind, with such a march before us: That, as regarded the King, he must be excused from entering upon that point of the Envoy's letter, and leave its consideration to his better knowledge and judgment; but he might be allowed to say that it little became him, as commanding the British troops in Affghanistan, to regard the necessity of negotiation in any other light than as concerned their honour and welfare, for both of which he should be answerable, by a further stay here, after the sudden and universal rebellion against His Majesty's authority which had taken place throughout his dominions: That the whole of the grain and forage in the vicinity was exhausted, and the defence of the extensive and ill-selected cantonment would not admit of distant expeditions, to obtain supplies from the strongly fortified dwellings of an armed and hostile population; our present numbers being insufficient for its defence, and obliging the whole of the troops to be almost constantly under arms. In conclusion, he could only repeat his opinion that the Envoy should lose no time in entering into negotiations." This letter was countersigned by Brigadiers Shelton and Anquetil, and Colonel Chambers, who entirely concurred in the opinions it expressed. Meanwhile starvation stared us in the face, and it became necessary to adopt immediate measures for obtaining a further supply of provisions. A consultation was accordingly held with this object at the General's house, and it was determined that an attack should be made on the neighbouring fort of Khoja Ruwash at an early hour the following morning.

December 9th. — The morning dawned, but no signs of preparation appeared for the proposed enterprise; no bridge was laid down for the passage of the guns and cavalry; no troops were in readiness to march; and it was plain that either no orders had been given, or no attention had been paid to them. Thus, notwithstanding the importance of its object, the expedition was suffered to die a natural death.

Upon this subject I shall only remark that Brigadier Shelton commanded the garrison, and that with him the necessary arrangements rested.

Intelligence having been this day received of a decisive victory gained over the enemy by Gen. Sale at Jellalabad, the Envoy conceived it might have the effect of modifying the General's opinion, regarding the immediate necessity of negotiating with the rebel chiefs, and addressed him a letter on the subject. The General, however, declared in reply, that, pleasing as the intelligence was, it could not in the slightest degree influence our position, so as to affect the expediency of our treating; in forming which opinion he was much influenced by the joint representations that had been just made to him by Capts. Boyd and Johnson, the respective heads of the Company's and Shah's commissariat, wherein they declared their utter inability to procure grain or forage within three or four miles, and that, although three days' supply of atta (ground wheat) might still be procurable from the Bala Hissar, yet every additional day's delay now crippled the cattle more and more, and rendered our position more perilous. Notwithstanding these apparently conclusive arguments, there existed strong grounds for believing that the Bala Hissar contained a much larger supply of provisions than was generally supposed.

December 10th. — Another convoy of military stores was despatched to the Bala Hissar this morning under command of Lieut. Le Geyt, by whom a further supply of atta was brought back in return.

December 11th. — The rebel chiefs having manifested an inclination to treat, the Envoy, accompanied by Capts. Lawrence, Mackenzie, and Trevor, went out to meet them on the plain towards Seah Sung. There were present Mahomed Akber Khan, Osman Khan, Mahomed Khan Naib Ameer (commonly called Naib Ameer), Barukzyes; — Mahomed Shah Khan, Humza Khan, Khooda Bux Khan, Giljyes; — Juayut Oolol Khan, Populzye; — Khan Shereen Khan, Kuzzilbash; — and several others of inferior note, but all heads of tribes. After the exchange of salutations, Sir William addressed the assembled Khans, alluding to past times, during which relations of perfect cordiality and friendship had existed between them and the English. He greatly lamented that feelings of so pleasant and mutually beneficial a nature should have been thus rudely interrupted; but professed himself wholly ignorant of the causes of such interruption. He proceeded to state that sentiments of good will towards the Affghan nation had principally induced the British government to lend their aid, in restoring to the seat of his ancestors a king, who, notwithstanding his misfortunes, originating in causes to which he would not then allude, had ever reigned in the hearts of the mass of his people ; that the restoration of their monarch had apparently given the utmost satisfaction to all classes throughout his dominions. — If, however, that satisfaction had passed away, and given place to emotions of a wholly contrary nature (and he supposed that the assembled Sirdars and Khans might be considered the mouth-piece of the people), it no longer became the British Government to persist in a course so displeasing to those chiefly interested in the result. On this account he was willing to enter into negotiations, for the smoothing over of present difficulties, and for the adopting of such measures as were likely to be the most conducive towards the re-establishment of that mutual friendship between the British and Affghan governments, the maintenance of which, he felt assured, must be earnestly desired by both parties. — To all these propositions Mahomed Akber Khan and Osman Khan, as the principal personages present, expressed, with the hearty concurrence of the inferior chiefs, their entire assent, adding many expressions of their personal esteem for the Envoy himself, and their gratitude for the way in which the exiled Ameer had been used. The Envoy then requested permission to read to them a paper containing a general sketch of the proposed treaty. This being agreed to, the articles of the treaty were read and discussed. Their general purport was to the effect—That the British should evacuate Affghanistan, including Candahar, Ghuznee, Cabul, Jellalabad, and all the other stations absolutely within the limits of the country so called;—that they should be permitted to return not only unmolested to India, but that supplies of every description should be afforded them in their road thither, certain men of consequence accompanying them as hostages;—that the Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan, his family, and every Affghan now in exile for political offences, should be allowed to return to their country;—that Shah Shoojah and his family should be allowed the option of remaining at Cabul or proceeding with the British troops to Loodiana, in either case receiving from the Affghan government a pension of one lac of rupees per annum;—that means of transport for the conveyance of our baggage, stores, &c., including that required by the royal family, in case of their adopting the latter alternative, should be furnished by the existing Affghan government;—that an amnesty should be granted to all those, who had made themselves obnoxious on account of their attachment to Shah Shoojah and his allies, the British;—that all prisoners should be released ; — that no British force should be ever again sent into Affghanistan, unless called for by the Affghan government, between whom and the British nation perpetual friendship should be established on the sure foundation of mutual good offices.

To all these terms the chiefs cordially agreed, with the exception of Mahomed Akber, who cavilled at several, especially that of the amnesty, but was over-ruled by his coadjutors. He positively refused to permit the garrison to be supplied with provisions until it had quitted cantonments, which movement he clamorously demanded should take place the following morning. His violence caused some confusion ; but the more temperate of his party having interfered, it was finally agreed that our evacuation of the cantonments should take place in three days — that provisions should be supplied — and that to all the above-mentioned articles of this new treaty a formal assent in writing should be sent, with all the usual forms of a restored peace. The chiefs, on returning to the city, took with them Capt. Trevor as a hostage for the sincerity of the Envoy. During the whole of this interview, which took place not far from the bottom of the Seah Sung hills, great anxiety was felt in the cantonments from the apparent danger to which the Envoy was exposed, — he being accompanied only by a few troopers of the body-guard,—and from the circumstance of large bodies of the enemy's horse and foot being seen to pass towards the scene of conference from the city, their leaders evidently with much difficulty restraining their advance beyond a certain point. Sir William, however, although not unaware of the perfidious nature of those he had to deal with, nor insensible to the risk he ran, (a shot in fact, from the fanatic multitude, having whistled over the heads of the gentlemen in attendance on him, as they advanced towards the rendezvous,) wisely imagined that a display of confidence was the best mode of begetting good faith. It is, however, pretty certain that the tumultuary movements of the Affghan troops, whose presence was in direct violation of the stipulations under which the conference was held, were not without their cause, it having been the earnest desire of Mahomed Akber to seize upon the Envoy's person at that very meeting, from which step he was with difficulty restrained by the other Khans. But no sense of personal danger could have deterred a man of Sir William's truly chivalrous and undaunted character from the performance of any duty, private or public.

Would that he had been more alive to the apprehensions which influenced common men!

We might not then have to mourn over the untimely fate of one, whose memory must be ever cherished in the hearts of all, who knew and were capable of appreciating him, notwithstanding the disastrous termination of his political career, as that of a good, and, in many essential points, a great man.

CHAP. VIII.

PREPARATIONS FOR EVACUATING. — MORE CONFERENCES. — MORE DELAYS. — MORE DIFFICULTIES. — MAHOMED AK-BER'S PLOT AGAINST THE ENVOY. — HIS MURDER.

December 12th. — It is undeniable that Sir William Macnaghten was forced into this treaty with men whose power he despised, and whose treachery was proverbial, against his own judgment, by the pressing representations of our military heads. It is no less true that, whatever may have been his political remissness or want of foresight before the rebellion broke out, he had, throughout the perils that afterwards beset us, displayed a truly British spirit of unflinching fortitude and indefatigable energy, calculated, under more auspicious leaders, to have stimulated the zeal and valour of the troops, and to have cheered them under the trials and hardships they were called on to endure; and I can safely add, without fear of contradiction, that scarcely an enterprise was undertaken throughout the siege, but at the suggestion, and even the entreaties, of the Envoy, he volunteering to take on himself the entire responsibility. Justice demands this tribute to the memory of one, whose acts, as they will assuredly undergo the severe scrutiny of his countrymen, it therefore becomes the duty of every eye-witness, who bears testimony on the subject, not only to shield from misrepresentation, but, where they are deserving of it, to hold up to public admiration. I am led to write this solely by my public knowledge of the man. If I could bring myself, on matters of such vital importance, to follow the dictates of mere private feeling, my bias would be altogether on the side of my late lamented military chief, who honoured me with his friendship, and for whose infirmities every allowance ought, in common justice, to be made. With a mind and talents of no ordinary stamp, and a hitherto unsullied fame, he committed the fatal error of transporting himself suddenly from a state of prolonged luxurious repose, at an advanced age, to undertake the fatigues and cares inseparable from high military command, in a foreign uncongenial climate; he thus not only ruined his already shattered health, but (which to a soldier was a far worse calamity) grievously damaged that high reputation which his early services had secured for him. His fate ought to serve as a warning to others of his class, who, priding themselves on a Peninsular fame of some thirty years' standing, are too apt to forget the inroads that time may have meanwhile made on mind and body; and who would do well to bear in remembrance that, of two of the most iron intellects of their day — one of them was even the greatest general of his age — it was written with too much truth,—

“From Marlborough's eyes the tears of dotage flow,
And Swift expires a driveller and a show.”

—The terms of the new treaty were immediately made known to Shah Shoojah, by which that unfortunate monarch found himself once more doomed to an old age of exile and degradation. The first step towards its fulfilment was the withdrawal of our troops from the Bala Hissar, which was to have taken place this very day, but was postponed for a short time longer, to admit of the necessary preparations being made. A deputation of chiefs had an interview in the close of the day, who were the bearers of a most unexpected proposition, to the effect that Shah Shoojah should continue king, on condition of intermarrying his daughters with the leading Affghan chiefs, and abandoning the offensive practice of keeping the chief nobles of his kingdom waiting for hours at his gate, in expectation of audience. The Affghans hate ceremony, which Shah Shoojah carried at all times to an absurd extent; hence much of his unpopularity. This arrangement was not intended to annul those parts of the treaty, which related to our immediate evacuation of the country, for the fulfilment of which some married families were demanded as hostages.

December 13th. — Such was the inveterate pride of the king, that he yielded a most reluctant consent to the above-mentioned proposals, notwithstanding that the only alternative was the instant resignation of his kingdom. Little confidence was, however, placed by the Envoy in the sincerity of the chiefs, whose hatred of the Dora-nee ruler was notorious. As our retreat was now fully decided on, and our well-stocked magazine was shortly to fall a prey to our enemies, the General ordered that some ammunition should be distributed to certain of the camp-followers; and commanding officers were directed to indent for new arms and accoutrements, in exchange for such as were old and damaged. The reins of discipline had, however, by this time become so terribly relaxed, and so little attention was paid to superior orders by either officers or men, that many of the officers in command of companies rested content with sending their men to the magazine, to help themselves at will, the stores being unfortunately, in the absence of any finished building for their reception, arranged under the trees of an orchard, in charge of a small guard. The consequence was, as might have been expected, a scene of disgraceful confusion and plunder, which was rendered worse by a rush of camp-followers, who, imagining that a licence had been given for every one to take whatever he pleased, flocked in hundreds to the spot, and terribly increased the tumult; insomuch that the authority of several officers, who, observing what was going on, exerted themselves to restore order, was for several minutes set at open defiance. At last, however, the place was cleared of the intruders, and the greater portion of the stolen articles were recovered the same evening. But this event may be taken as an instance of the unsteadiness of the troops, and of the recklessness that now began to extend itself amongst all ranks of the force.

At 2 P. M. the troops in the Bala Hissar, consisting of the 54th N. I., half of Capt. Nicholl's troop of horse artillery, and a detachment of the mountain train, with 2 howitzers, under Lieut. Green, commenced their evacuation of that fortress. They were also encumbered with an iron nine-pounder gun, and a twenty-four pounder brass howitzer, drawn by bullocks, which it was the General's wish should have been left behind, but his order to that effect had by some accident missed its destination. As the utmost scarcity of provisions prevailed in cantonments, Capt. Kirby, the commissariat officer, had zealously exerted himself to collect a supply of about 1600 maunds of wheat and flour to carry thither. Much delay, however, occurred in packing and loading; and, the best part of the day being nearly spent ere above one third of that quantity was ready, Major Ewart deemed it advisable to move off without further loss of time. He found Mahomed Akber Khan in waiting with a small body of followers outside the gate, for the purpose of escorting him to cantonments; and, as evening drew nigh, a dense crowd of armed Affghans had been observed to collect on the Seah Sung hill, along the base of which our troops must pass, giving rise to suspicions of some meditated treachery. While the rear-guard, with the mountain train gun and a portion of the baggage was leaving the gate, some of Mahomed Akber's followers, pushing quietly past them, endeavoured to effect an entrance into the fort; but on their being recognized by the king's guard, the gates were immediately shut, and a round or two of grape fired upon the intruders, with so indiscriminate an aim as to endanger the lives of Capt. Conolly and several of the Sepoys, of whom some were severely wounded. It can scarcely be doubted that Mahomed Akber's intention was to have seized the gate with a few of his men, until a rush of the Affghans from the hill should have enabled him to carry the body of the place by storm. The vigilance of the garrison having defeated this plan, the wily chief, imagining that the gates would again be opened to re-admit our troops, informed Major Ewart that, owing to the lateness of the hour and the threatening attitude assumed by the crowd on the hill, it would be necessary to postpone his march until the following morning. In consequence of this sudden ill-timed announcement, Major Ewart applied to the King for the immediate readmission of his troops for shelter during the night; but the monarch, whose suspicions of foul play on the part of Mahomed Akber were now fully awakened, positively refused to accede to the request. The prospect of passing the night in the low marshy ground under the walls, without tents, bedding, firewood, or food, for officers or men, was sufficiently cheerless; while the fear of treachery on the part of Mahomed Akber, and the dangerous vicinity of an armed multitude, whose watch-fires already gleamed on the adjacent hills, tended but little to relieve the discomforts of such a situation. The cold was intensely bitter, and perhaps so miserable a night had never before been spent by Indian troops.

December 14th. — At an early hour this morning, Mahomed Akber having declared his readiness to proceed, the troops commenced their march. The advance-guard was suffered to proceed unmolested; but the rear-guard, on reaching the base of the Seah Sung hill, was fired upon by the enemy, who crowned the ridge; and the iron nine-pounder being for a few moments accidentally separated from the column in crossing a water-cut, an instantaneous rush was made upon it by a number of Affghans, and a poor sick European artillery-man, who, for want of a more suitable conveyance, had been lashed to the gun, was unmercifully butchered. The approach of the rear-guard, and a round or two of grape from the mountain train howitzer, drove off the assailants; and they were restrained from offering any additional annoyance by the exertions of Mahomed Akber himself, who, galloping in amongst them with a few followers, threatened to cut down any, who dared to be guilty of further opposition to the progress of the detachment, which accordingly reached cantonments safe at about 9 A. M.

December 16th. — Shah Shoojah having, for reasons best known to himself, withdrawn his consent to the arrangement which was to have continued him in the possession of his rights, the treaty resumed its original form; but the chiefs positively refused to supply provisions or forage, until we should further assure them of our sincerity, by giving up every fort in the immediate vicinity of cantonments. Forage had for many days been so scarce, that the horses and cattle were kept alive by paring off the bark of trees, and by eating their own dung over and over again, which was regularly collected and spread before them. The camp-followers were destitute of other food than the flesh of animals, which expired daily from starvation and cold. The daily consumption of atta by the fighting men was about 150 maunds, and not above two days' supply remained in store. By giving up the forts in question, all of which commanded the cantonment, we should place ourselves entirely at the mercy of the enemy, who could at any time render our position untenable. But our leaders now seemed to consider that we had no other chance left than to concede to the demands of the chiefs, however unreasonable; and our troops were accordingly withdrawn from the Rikabashee, Magazine, and Zoolfekar's forts, and from the Musjeed opposite the western gate, all of which were forthwith occupied by the Affghans, who, on their part, sent in Nussuroollah Khan, a brother of Nuwab Zuman Khan, as a hostage, and a supply of about 150 maunds of atta for the troops. They likewise promised us 2000 camels and 400 yaboos for the march to Jellalabad.

December 18th. — The delay of the chiefs in furnishing the necessary carriage, and the Shah's dilatoriness in deciding on his future course, compelled us from day to day to postpone our departure. Meanwhile the increasing severity of the winter rendered every hour's procrastination of the utmost consequence; and this morning our situation was rendered more desperate than ever by a heavy fall of snow, which covered the ground to the depth of five inches, and never afterwards disappeared. Thus a new enemy entered on the scene, which we were destined to find even more formidable than an army of rebels.

December 19th. — The Envoy wrote an order for the evacuation of Ghuznee, and it was arranged that the 27th N. I., which garrisoned the place, should march through the Zoormut valley, and pursue the route of Dera Ishmael Khan. The 22d was fixed for our departure.

December 20th. — The Envoy had an interview with the chiefs, who now demanded that a portion of our guns and ammunition should be immediately given up. They also required Brigadier Shelton as a hostage. It was proposed by Lieut.

Sturt to the General to break off the treaty, and march forthwith to Jellalabad, devoting all the means of transport we possessed to the service of the sick, and the conveyance of such public stores as were absolutely necessary. But neither the General nor his immediate advisers could bring themselves to adopt a course which would have saved the national honour, at the risk of sacrificing our whole force.

It has been truly said that a council of war never fights.—A door of hope had, until this day, still remained open to us in the approach of Col. Maclaren's force to our assistance from Candahar; we now heard with despair of its retreat from Tazee, in consequence of the snow.

December 21st.—The Envoy met Osman Khan and Mahomed Akber Khan on the plain, when four hostages were fixed upon, two of whom (Capts. Conolly and Airey) were at once given over. Brigadier Shelton, having expressed a decided objection to undertake the duty, was not insisted upon. In the evening Capts. Trevor and Drummond were permitted to return to cantonments, the latter officer having been concealed in the city since the 2d of November.

December 22d.—I was ordered to conduct an officer of Nuwab Zuman Khan over the magazine, that he might make choice of such stores as would be most acceptable to the chiefs. I recommended a large pile of 8-inch shells to his notice, which I knew would be of no use to the chiefs, as the mortars were with Capt. Abbott's battery at Jelalabad. He eagerly seized the bait, and departed in great glee, with his prize laden on some old ammunition-waggons.

The Envoy at the same time sent his carriage as a present to Mahomed Akber Khan. That same night the last-named chief spread the net, into which Sir William Macnaghten was, on the following day, so miserably lured to his destruction. Capt. Skinner, at this time living under Mahomed Akber's protection, was made the bearer of proposals to the Envoy, of so advantageous a nature, as to prove, in his forlorn circumstances, irresistibly tempting.

Amenoollah Khan, the most influential of the rebels, was to be seized on the following day, and delivered up to us as a prisoner. Mahomed Khan's fort was to be immediately occupied by one of our regiments, and the Bala Hissar by another. Shah Shoojah was to continue king; Mahomed Akber was to become his wuzeer, and our troops were to remain in their present position until the following spring.—That a scheme like this, bearing impracticability on its very face, should have for a moment deceived a man of Sir

William's usual intelligence and penetration, is indeed an extraordinary instance of infatuation, that can only be accounted for on the principle that a drowning man will catch at a straw. Our fortunes were now at their lowest ebb; the chiefs were apparently delaying our departure, until the snow should have formed an impassable barrier to the removal of our troops, who, even in the absence of an enemy, would but too probably perish from cold and famine. A treaty formed with men famed for falsehood and treachery, and who had already shown an utter disregard of some of its most important stipulations, could be regarded as little better than so much waste paper; added to which considerations, Sir William felt that his own fame was deeply involved in the issue of that policy*, of which he had from the very first been the prime advocate and upholder, and that with it he must stand or fall. The specious project of Mahomed Akber offered a solution to the difficulties that beset his path, at which he grasped with an eagerness engendered by despair. The strength of the rebels had hitherto lain in their unanimity; the proposed stroke of policy would at once dissolve the confederacy, and open a road by which to retrieve our ruined fortunes. On either hand there was danger; and, miserable as Sir William's life had been for the past six weeks, he was willing to stake his all on the issue of a plan which seemed to offer a faint hope of recovering the ground we had lost.

* That of invading Affghanistan for the purpose of restoring Shah Shoojah as king.

In a fatal hour he signed his name to a paper consenting to the arrangement. — His doom was sealed. — The whole was a scheme got up by the chiefs, to test his sincerity.

December 23d. — At about noon Sir William Macnaghten, attended by Capts. Lawrence, Trevor, and Mackenzie, left the mission-house to attend a conference with Mahomed Akber Khan on the plain towards Seah Sung. Previously to this he had requested the General that two regiments and two guns might be in readiness for secret service, and that, as the interview would be of a critical nature, the garrison might be kept well on the alert, and the walls strongly manned. In leaving the cantonments, Sir William expressed his disappointment at the paucity of men on the ramparts, and the apparent inertness of the garrison at such a critical moment, saying, "However, it is all of a piece with the military arrangements throughout the siege." On his leaving the gate only sixteen troopers of the body-guard were in attendance, but the remainder shortly afterwards joined, under Lieut. Le Geyt.

Sir William now for the first time explained to the officers who accompanied him the objects of the present conference, and Capt. Lawrence was warned to be in readiness to gallop to the Bala Hissar, to prepare the King for the approach of a regiment.

Apprehensions being expressed of the danger to which the scheme might expose him, in case of treachery on the part of Mahomed Akber, he replied, "Dangerous it is; but if it succeeds, it is worth all risks: the rebels have not fulfilled even one article of the treaty, and I have no confidence in them; and if by it we can only save our honour, all will be well. At any rate I would rather suffer an hundred deaths, than live the last six weeks over again."

Meanwhile crowds of armed Affghans were observed hovering near the cantonment and about Mahomed Khan's fort, causing misgivings in the minds of all but the Envoy himself, whose confidence remained unshaken. On arriving near the bridge, they were met by Mahomed Akber Khan, Mahomed Shah Khan, Dost Mahomed Khan, Khooda Bux Khan, Azad Khan, and other chiefs, amongst whom was the brother of Amenoollah

Khan, whose presence might have been sufficient to convince Sir William that he had been duped.

The usual civilities having passed, the Envoy presented Akber Khan with a valuable Arab horse, which had only that morning been purchased for 3000 rupees. The whole party then sat down near some rising ground, which partially concealed them from cantonments.

Capt. Lawrence having called attention to the number of inferior followers around them, with a view to their being ordered to a distance, Mahomed Akber exclaimed, "No, they are all in the secret;" which words had scarcely been uttered, when Sir William and his three companions found themselves suddenly grasped firmly by the hands from behind, whilst their swords and pistols were rudely snatched away by the chiefs and their followers. The three officers were immediately pulled forcibly along and compelled to mount on horseback, each behind a Giljye chief, escorted by a number of armed retainers, who with difficulty repelled the efforts of a crowd of fanatic Ghazees, who, on seeing the affray, had rushed to the spot, calling aloud for the blood of the hated infidels, aiming at them desperate blows with their long knives and other weapons, and only deterred from firing by the fear of killing a chief. The unfortunate Envoy was last seen struggling violently with Mahomed Akber, "consternation and horror depicted on his countenance."

On their nearing Mahomed Khan's fort, renewed attempts were made to assassinate the three captive officers by the crowd there assembled. Capt. Trevor, who was seated behind Dost Mahomed Khan, unhappily fell to the ground, and was instantly slain. Capts. Lawrence and Mackenzie reached the fort in safety, but the latter was much bruised in various parts of his body, and both were greatly exhausted from the excitement they had undergone.

At the entrance of the fort, a furious cut was aimed at Capt. Mackenzie's head by a ruffian named Moollah Momin, which was warded off by Mahomed Shah Khan, that chief receiving the blow on his own shoulder. Being taken into a small room, they found themselves still in continual jeopardy from repeated assaults of the Ghazees without, who were with the greatest difficulty restrained from shooting them through the window, where the hand of some recent European victim (afterwards ascertained to be that of the Envoy himself) was insultingly held up to their view. Throughout this trying scene they received repeated assurances of protection from the Giljye chiefs; but Amenoollah Khan coming in gave vent to a torrent of angry abuse, and even threatened to blow them from a gun. It is deserving of notice, that, amidst the congratulations which on all sides met the ear of Mahomed Shah Khan on the events of the day, the solitary voice of an aged Moollah was raised in condemnation of the deed, which he solemnly pronounced to be "foul," and calculated to cast a lasting disgrace on the religion of Mahomed. At midnight they were removed to the house of Mahomed Akber Khan. As they passed through the streets of Cabul, notwithstanding the excitement that had prevailed throughout the day, it resembled a city of the dead; nor did they meet a single soul.

By Akber Khan they were received courteously, and were now informed for the first time by Capt. Skinner of the murder of the Envoy and Capt. Trevor. That Sir William Macnaghten met his death at the hands of Mahomed Akber himself there can be no reasonable doubt. That chief had pledged himself to his coadjutors to seize the Envoy that day, and bring him into the city, when the chiefs hoped to have been able to dictate their own terms, retaining him as a hostage for their fulfilment. Finding it impossible, from the strenuous resistance Sir William offered, to carry him off alive, and yet determined not to disappoint the public expectation altogether, — influenced also by his tiger passions, and the remembrance of his father's wrongs, — Mahomed Akber drew a pistol, the Envoy's own gift a few hours before, and shot him through the body, which was immediately hacked to pieces by the ferocious Ghazees, by whom the dismembered trunk was afterwards carried to the city, and publicly exposed in the Char Chouk, or principal mart. The head was taken to the house of Nuwab Zuman Khan, where it was triumphantly exhibited to Capt. Conolly.

Such was the cruel fate of Sir William Macnaghten, the accomplished scholar, the distinguished politician, and the representative of Great Britain at the court of Shah Shooja-Ool-Moolk.

It cannot but be acceptable to my readers, if I here present entire the interesting and important letters of Capts. Mackenzie and Lawrence on this melancholy subject.

Letter addressed by CAPTAIN C. MACKENZIE to LIEUTENANT VINCENT EYRE.

MY DEAR EYRE,

YOU ask for a minute account of the circumstances attending the assassination of the late Sir William Macnaghten, and my own detention and imprisonment on that occasion. You may remember that, for many days previous to the fatal 23d December, the poor Envoy had been subjected to more wear and tear, both of body and mind, than it was possible for the most iron frame and the strongest intellect to bear without deeply feeling its effects. He had fulfilled all the preliminary conditions of the treaty which had been proposed between the British and the Affghan insurgents, whereas the Khans had in no one particular adhered to their engagements. Bad faith was evident in all their proceedings, and our condition was a desperate one; more especially as Sir William had ascertained, by bitter experience, that no hope remained in the energies and resources of our military leaders, who had formally protested that they could do nothing more. Beset by this disgraceful imbecility on the one hand, and by systematic treachery on the other, the unfortunate Envoy was driven to his wits' end, and, as will be seen, forgot, in a fatal moment, the wholesome rule which he had theretofore laid down for himself, of refusing to hold communication with individuals of the rebel party, especially with him who was notorious, even amongst his villanous countrymen, for ferocity and treachery, to wit, Mahomed Akber Khan. Late in the evening of the 22d December, Captain James Skinner, who, after having been concealed in Cabul during the greater part of the siege, had latterly been the guest of Mahomed Akber, arrived in cantonments, accompanied by Mahomed Sudeeq Khan, a first cousin of Mahomed Akber, and by Sirwar Khan, the Arhanee merchant, who, in the beginning of the campaign, had furnished the army with camels, and who had been much in the confidence of Sir A. Burnes, being, in fact, one of our staunchest friends. The two latter remained in a different apartment, while Skinner dined with the Envoy. During dinner, Skinner jestingly remarked that he felt as if laden with combusti bles, being charged with a message from Mahomed Akber to the Envoy of a most portentous nature.

Even then I remarked that the Envoy's eye glanced eagerly towards Skinner with an expression of hope. In fact, he was like a drowning man catching at straws. Skinner however referred him to his Affghan companions, and after dinner the four retired into a room by themselves. My knowledge of what there took place is gained from poor Skinner's own relation, as given during my subsequent captivity with him in Akber's house. Mahomed Sudeeq disclosed Mahomed Akber's proposition to the Envoy, which was, that the following day Sir William should meet him (Mahomed Akber) and a few of his immediate friends, viz. the chiefs of the Eastern Giljyes, outside the cantonments, when a final agreement should be made, so as to be fully understood by both parties; that Sir William should have a considerable body of troops in readiness, which, on a given signal, were to join with those of Mahomed Akber and the Giljyes, assault and take Mahmood Khan's fort, and secure the person of Ameenollah. At this stage of the proposition Mahomed Sudeeq signified that, for a certain sum of money, the head of Ameenollah should be presented to the Envoy; but from this Sir William shrunk with abhorrence, declaring that it was neither his custom nor that of his country to give a price for blood. Mahomed Sudeeq then went on to say, that, after having subdued the rest of the Khans, the English should be permitted to remain in the country eight months longer, so as to save their purdah (veil, or credit), but that they were then to evacuate Affghanistan, as if of their own accord; that Shah Shoojah was to continue king of the country, and that Mahomed Akber was to be his Wuzeer. As a further reward for his (Mahomed Akber's) assistance, the British Government were to pay him 30 lacs of rupees, and 4 lacs of rupees per annum during his life! To this extraordinary and wild proposal, Sir William gave ear with an eagerness which nothing can account for but the supposition, confirmed by many other circumstances, that his strong mind had been harassed, until it had, in some degree, lost its equipoise; and he not only assented fully to these terms, but actually gave a Persian paper to that effect, written in his own hand, declaring as his motives that it was not only an excellent opportunity to carry into effect the real wishes of government, which were to evacuate the country with as much credit to ourselves as possible, but that it would give England time to enter into a treaty with Russia, defining the bounds beyond which neither were to pass in Central Asia. So ended this fatal conference, the nature and result of which, contrary to his usual custom, Sir William communicated to none of those who, on all former occasions, were fully in his confidence, viz. Trevor, Lawrence, and myself. It seemed as if he feared that we might insist on the impracticability of the plan, which he must have studiously concealed from himself. All the following morning his manner was distracted and hurried in a way that none of us had ever before witnessed. It seems that Mahomed Akber had demanded a favourite Arab horse, belonging to Captain Grant, Assist-Adj.-Gen. of force. To avoid the necessity of parting with the animal, Captain Grant had fixed his price at the exorbitant sum of 5000 rupees; unwilling to give so large a price, but determined to gratify the Sirdar, Sir William sent me to Captain Grant to prevail upon him to take a smaller sum, but with orders that if he were peremptory, the 5000 rupees should be given. I obtained the horse for 3000 rupees, and Sir William appeared much pleased with the prospect of gratifying Mahomed Akber by the present.

After breakfast, Trevor, Lawrence, and myself were summoned to attend the Envoy during his conference with Mahomed Akber Khan. I found him alone, when, for the first time, he disclosed to me the nature of the transaction he was engaged in. I immediately warned him that it was a plot against him. He replied hastily, "A plot! let me alone for that, trust me for that!" and I consequently offered no further remonstrance. Sir William then arranged with General Elphinstone that the 54th regiment, under Major Ewart, should be held in readiness for immediate service. The Shah's 6th, and two guns, were also warned. It is a curious circumstance, and betrays the unhappy vacillation of poor Elphinstone, that, after Sir William had actually quitted the cantonment in full expectation that every thing had been arranged according to his desire, he (the General) addressed a letter to him, which never reached him, remonstrating on the danger of the proposed attack, and strongly objecting to the employment of the two above regiments. About 12 o'clock Sir William, Trevor, Lawrence, and myself set forth on our ill-omened expedition. As we approached the Seah Sung gate, Sir William observed with much vexation that the troops were not in readiness, protesting at the same time, however, that, desperate as the proposed attempt was, it was better that it should be made, and that a thousand deaths were preferable to the life he had lately led.

After passing the gate, he remembered the horse which he had intended as a present for Akber, and sent me back for it. When I rejoined him, I found that the small number of the body guard who had accompanied him, had been ordered to halt, and that he, Trevor, and Lawrence, had advanced in the direction of Mahmood Khan's fort, being some 500 or 600 yards from the eastern rampart, and were there awaiting the approach of Mahomed Akber and his party, who now made their appearance. Close by were some hillocks, on the further side of which from the cantonment a carpet was spread where the snow lay least thick, and there the Khans and Sir William sat down to hold their conference. Men talk of presentiment; I suppose it was something of the kind which came over me, for I could scarcely prevail upon myself to quit my horse. I did so, however, and was invited to sit down among the Sirdars. After the usual salutations Mahomed Akber commenced business, by asking the Envoy if he was perfectly ready to carry into effect the proposition of the preceding night? The Envoy replied, "Why not?" My attention was then called off by an old Affghan acquaintance of mine, formerly chief of the Cabul police, by name Gholam Moyun-ood-deen. I rose from my recumbent posture, and stood apart with him conversing. I afterwards remembered that my friend betrayed much anxiety as to where my pistols were, and why I did not carry them on my person. I answered that although I wore my sword for form, it was not necessary at a friendly conference to be armed cap-à-pee. His discourse was also full of extravagant compliments, I suppose for the purpose of lulling me to sleep. At length my attention was called off from what he was saying, by observing that a number of men, armed to the teeth, had gradually approached to the scene of conference, and were drawing round in a sort of circle. This Lawrence and myself pointed out to some of the chief men, who affected at first to drive them off with whips; but Mahomed Akber observed that it was of no consequence, as they were in the secret. I again resumed my conversation with Gholam Moyun-ood-deen, when suddenly I heard Mahomed Akber call out, "Begeer, begeer," (seize! seize!), and turning round, I saw him grasp the Envoy's left hand with an expression in his face of the most diabolical ferocity. I think it was Sultan Jan who laid hold of the Envoy's right hand. They dragged him in a stooping posture down the hillock, the only words I heard poor Sir William utter being, "Az barae Khooda" (for God's sake)! I saw his face however, and it was full of horror and astonishment. I did not see what became of Trevor, but Lawrence was dragged past me by several Affghans, whom I saw wrest his weapons from him. Up to this moment I was so engrossed in observing what was taking place, that I actually was not aware that my own right arm was mastered, that my urbane friend held a pistol to my temple, and that I was surrounded by a circle of Ghazees with drawn swords, and cocked juzails. Resistance was in vain, so listening to the exhortations of Gholam Moyun-ood-deen, which were enforced by the whistling of divers bullets over my head, I hurried through the snow with him to the place where his horse was standing, being despoiled en route of my sabre, and narrowly escaping divers attempts made on my life. As I mounted behind my captor, now my energetic defender, the crowd encreased around us, the cries of "Kill the Kafir" became more vehement, and, although we hurried on at a fast canter, it was with the utmost difficulty Gholam Moyun-ood-deen, although assisted by one or two friends or followers, could ward off and avoid the sword cuts aimed at me, the rascals being afraid to fire lest they should kill my conductor. Indeed he was obliged to wheel his horse round once, and taking off his turban (the last appeal a Mussulman can make), to implore them for God's sake to respect the life of his friend. At last, ascending a slippery bank, the horse fell. My cap had been snatched off, and I now received a heavy blow on the head from a bludgeon, which fortunately did not quite deprive me of my senses. I had sufficient sense left to shoot ahead of the fallen horse, where my protector with another man joined me, and clasping me in their arms, hurried me towards the wall of Mahomed Khan's fort. How I reached the spot where Mahomed Akber was receiving the gratulations of the multitude I know not, but I remember a fanatic rushing on me and twisting his hand in my collar until I became exhausted from suffocation. I must do Mahomed Akber the justice to say, that, finding the Ghazees bent on my slaughter, even after I had reached his stirrup, he drew his sword and laid about him right manfully, for my conductor and Meerza Bàoodeen Khan were obliged to press me up against the wall, covering me with their own bodies, and protesting that no blow should reach me, but through their persons.

Pride, however, overcam Mahomed Akber's sense of courtesy, when he thought I was safe, for he then turned round to me, and repeatedly said in a tone of triumphant derision, "Shuma moolk-i-ma me geered!" (You'll seize my country, will you!) he then rode off, and I was hurried towards the gate of the fort. Here new dangers awaited me, for Moollah Momin, fresh from the slaughter of poor Trevor, who was killed riding close behind me, — Sooltan Jan having the credit of having given him the first sabre cut, — stood here with his followers, whom he exhorted to slay me, setting them the example by cutting fiercely at me himself. Fortunately a gun stood between us, but still he would have effected his purpose, had not Mahomed Shah Khan at that instant, with some followers, come to my assistance. These drew their swords in my defence, the chief himself throwing his arm round my neck, and receiving on his shoulder a cut aimed by Moollah Momin at my head. During the bustle I pushed forward into the fort, and was immediately taken to a sort of dungeon, where I found Lawrence safe, but somewhat exhausted by his hideous ride and the violence he had sustained, although unwounded. Here the Giljye chiefs, Mahomed Shah Khan, and his brother Dost Mahomed Khan, presently joined us, and endeavoured to cheer up our flagging spirits, assuring us that the Envoy and Trevor were not dead, but on the contrary quite well. They stayed with us during the afternoon, their presence being absolutely necessary for our protection. Many attempts were made by the fanatics to force the door to accomplish our destruction. Others spit at us and abused us through a small window, through which one fellow levelled a blunderbuss at us, which was struck up by our keepers and himself thrust back. At last Amee-noollah made his appearance, and threatened us with instant death. Some of his people most officiously advanced to make good his word, until pushed back by the Gilje chiefs, who remonstrated with this iniquitous old monster, their master, whom they persuaded to relieve us from his hateful presence. During the afternoon, a human hand was held up in mockery to us at the window. We said that it had belonged to an European, but were not aware at the time that it was actually the hand of the poor Envoy. Of all the Mahomedans assembled in the room discussing the events of the day, one only, an old Moollah, openly and fearlessly condemned the acts of his brethren, declaring that the treachery was abominable, and a disgrace to Islam. At night they brought us food, and gave us each a postheen to sleep on. At midnight we were awakened to go to the house of Mahomed Akber in the city. Mahomed Shah Khan then, with the meanness common to all Affghans of rank, robbed Lawrence of his watch, while his brother did me a similar favour. I had been plundered of my rings and every thing else previously, by the understrappers.

Reaching Mahomed Akber's abode, we were shown into the room where he lay in bed. He received us with great outward show of courtesy, assuring us of the welfare of the Envoy and Trevor, but there was a constraint in his manner for which I could not account. We were shortly taken to another apartment, where we found Skinner, who had returned, being on parole, early in the morning. Doubt and gloom marked our meeting, and the latter was fearfully deepened by the intelligence which we now received from our fellow-captive of the base murder of Sir William and Trevor. He informed us that the head of the former had been carried about the city in triumph. We of course spent a miserable night. The next day we were taken under a strong guard to the house of Zeman Khan, where a council of the Khans was being held. Here we found Captains Conolly and Airey, who had some days previously been sent to the hurwah's house as hostage for the performance of certain parts of the treaty which was to have been entered into. A violent discussion took place, in which Mahomed Akber bore the most prominent part. We were vehemently accused of treachery, and every thing that was bad, and told that the whole of the transactions of the night previous had been a trick of Mahomed Akber, and Ameenollah, to ascertain the Envoy's sincerity. They declared that they would now grant us no terms, save on the surrender of the whole of the married families as hostages, all the guns, ammunition, and treasure. At this time Conolly told me that on the preceding day the Envoy's head had been paraded about in the court yard; that his and Trevor's bodies had been hung up in the public bazar, or chouk; and that it was with the greatest difficulty that the old hurwah, Zuman Khan, had saved him and Airey from being murdered by a body of fanatics, who had attempted to rush into the room where they were. Also that previous to the arrival of Lawrence, Skinner, and myself, Mahomed Akber had been relating the events of the preceding day to the Jeerga or council, and that he had unguardedly avowed having, while endeavouring to force the Envoy either to mount on horseback or to move more quickly, struck him, and that, seeing Conolly's eye fastened upon him with an expression of intense indignation, he had altered the phrase and said, "I mean I pushed him." After an immense deal of gabble, a proposal for a renewal of the treaty, not however demanding all the guns, was determined to be sent to the cantonments, and Skinner, Lawrence, and myself were marched back to Akber's house, enduring en route all manner of threats and insults. Here we were closely confined in an inner apartment, which was indeed necessary for our safety. That evening we received a visit from Mahomed Akber, Sultan Jan, and several other Affghans. Mahomed Akber exhibited his double-barrelled pistols to us, which he had worn the previous day, requesting us to put their locks to rights, something being amiss. Two of the barrels had been recently discharged, which he endeavoured in a most confused way to account for by saying, that he had been charged by a havildar of the escort, and had fired both barrels at him. Now all the escort had run away without even attempting to charge, the only man who advanced to the rescue having been a Hindoo Jemadar of Chuprassies, who was instantly cut to pieces by the assembled Ghazees. This defence he made without any accusation on our part, betraying the anxiety of a liar to be believed. On the 26th, Capt. Lawrence was taken to the house of Ameenollah, whence he did not return to us. Capt. Skinner and myself remained in Akber's house until the 30th. During this time we were civilly treated, and conversed with numbers of Affghan gentlemen who came to visit us. Some of them asserted that the Envoy had been murdered by the unruly soldiery. Others could not deny that Akber himself was the assassin. For two or three days we had a fellow-prisoner in poor Sirwar Khan, who had been deceived throughout the whole matter, and out of whom they were then endeavouring to screw money. He of course was aware from his countrymen that, not only had Akber committed the murder, but that he protested to the Ghazees that he gloried in the deed. On one occasion a moon-shee of Major Pottinger, who had escaped from Charrekhar, named Mohun Beer, came direct from the presence of Mahomed Akber to visit us. He told us that Mahomed Akber had begun to see the impolicy of having murdered the Envoy, which fact he had just avowed to him, shedding many tears either of pretended remorse, or of real vexation, at having committed himself. On several occasions Mahomed Akber personally, and by deputy, besought Skinner and myself to give him advice, as to how he was to extricate himself from the dilemma in which he was placed, more than once endeavouring to excuse himself for not having effectually protected the Envoy, by saying that Sir William had drawn a sword stick upon him. It seems that meanwhile the renewed negotiations with Major Pottinger, who had assumed the Envoy's place in cantonments, had been brought to a head, for on the night of the 30th, Akber furnished me with an Affghan dress (Skinner already wore one) and sent us both back to cantonments. Several Affghans, with whom I fell in afterwards, protested to me that they had seen Mahomed Akber shoot the Envoy with his own hand; amongst them Meerza Báooden Khan, who, being an old acquaintance, always retained a sneaking kindness for the English.

I am, my dear Eyre, yours very truly,

C. MACKENZIE.

Cabul, 29th July, 1842.

(True copy.)

Vint. Eyre, Lieut. Bengal Artillery.

*Letter addressed by CAPTAIN G. ST. P. LAWRENCE, late Military Secretary to the Envoy, to MAJOR
E. POTTINGER, C.B., late in charge of the Cabul Mission.*

SIR,

IN compliance with your request, I have the honour to detail the particulars of my capture, and of the death of my ever-to-be-lamented chief.

On the morning of the 23d December, at 11 A.M., I received a note from the late Sir W. H. Macnaghten, warning me to attend, with Captains Trevor and Mackenzie, an interview he was about to have with Sirdar Mahomed Akber Khan. Accordingly, with the above-named officers, at about 12, I accompanied Sir William, having previously heard him tell Major-General Elphinstone to have two regiments of infantry and two guns ready for secret service. In passing through cantonments, on my observing that there were more Affghans in cantonments than usual, or than I deemed safe, the Envoy directed one of his Affghan attendants to proceed and cause them all to leave, at the same time remarking, how strange it was that, although the General was fully acquainted with the then very critical state of affairs, no preparations appeared to have been made, adding, "however, it is all of a piece with the military arrangements throughout the siege." He then said, "There is not enough of the escort with us," to which I replied, that he had only ordered eight or ten, but that I had brought sixteen, and that I would send for the remainder, which I accordingly did, asking Lieut. Le Geyt to bring them, and to tell Brigadier Shelton, who had expressed a wish to attend the next interview, that he might accompany them. On passing the gate, we observed some hundreds of armed Affghans within a few yards of it, on which I called to the officer on duty to get the reserve under arms, and brought outside to disperse them, and to send to the General to have the garrison on the alert. Towards Mahmood Khan's fort, were a number of armed Affghans, but we observed none nearer.

The Envoy now told us that he, on the night previous, had received a proposal from Sirdar Mahomed Akber Khan to which he had agreed, and that he had every reason to hope it would bring our present difficulties to an early and happy termination; that Mahomed Akber Khan was to give up Naib Ameenollah Khan as a prisoner to us, for which purpose a regiment was to proceed to Mahmood Khan's fort, and another corps was to occupy the Bala Hissar. Sir William then warned me to be ready to gallop to the king with the intelligence of the approach of the regiment, and to acquaint him with Akber's proposal. On one of us remarking that the scheme seemed a dangerous one, and asking if he did not apprehend any treachery, he replied: "Dangerous it is, but, if it succeeds, it is worth all risks; the rebels have not fulfilled even one article of the treaty, and I have no confidence in them, and if by it we can only save our honour, all will be well; at any rate, I would rather suffer an hundred deaths, than live the last six weeks over again." We proceeded to near the usual spot, and met Sirdar Mahomed Akber Khan, who was accompanied by several Giljye chiefs, Mahomed Shah

Khan, Dost Mahomed Khan, Khoda Bux Khan, Azad Khan, &c. After the usual salutations, the Envoy presented a valuable horse which Akber had asked for, and which had been that morning purchased from Capt. Grant for 3000 rupees. The Sirdar acknowledged the attention, and expressed his thanks for a handsome brace of double-barrelled pistols which the Envoy had purchased from me, and sent to him, with his carriage and pair of horses, the day before.

The party dismounted, and horse clothes were spread on a small hillock which partially concealed us from cantonments, and which was chosen, they said, as being free from snow. The Envoy threw himself on the bank with Mahomed Akber and Captains Trevor and Mackenzie beside him; I stood behind Sir William till, pressed by Dost Mahomed Khan, I knelt on one knee, having first called the Envoy's attention to the number of Affghans around us, saying that if the subject of the conference was of that secret nature I believed it to be, they had better be removed. He spoke to Mahomed Akber, who replied, "No, they are all in the secret." Hardly had he so said, when I found my arms locked, my pistols and sword wrenched from my belt, and myself forcibly raised from the ground and pushed along, Mahomed Shah Khan, who held me, calling out, "Come along, if you value your life." I turned, and saw the Envoy lying, his head where his heels had been, and his hands locked in Mahomed Akber's, consternation and horror depicted in his countenance. Seeing I could do nothing, I let myself be pulled on by Mahomed Shah Khan. Some shots were fired, and I was hurried to his horse, on which he jumped, telling me to get up behind, which I did, and we proceeded, escorted by several armed men who kept off a crowd of Ghazees, who sprang up on every side shouting for me to be given up for them to slay, cutting at me with their swords and knives, and poking me in the ribs with their guns: they were afraid to fire, lest they should injure their chief. The horsemen kept them pretty well off, but not sufficiently so to prevent my being much bruised. In this manner we hurried towards Mahomed Khan's fort, near which we met some hundreds of horsemen who were keeping off the Ghazees, who here were in greater numbers, and more vociferous for my blood. We, however, reached the fort in safety, and I was pushed into a small room, Mahomed Shah Khan returning to the gate of the fort and bringing in Capt. Mackenzie, whose horse had there fallen. This he did, receiving a cut through his neencha (Scother coat) on his arm, which was aimed at that officer, who was ushered into the room with me much exhausted and bruised from blows on his head and body. We sat down with some soldiers who were put over us with a view to protect us from the mob, who now surrounded the house, and who till dark continued execrating and spitting at us, calling on the men to give us up to be slaughtered.

One produced a hand (European) which appeared to have been recently cut off; another presented a blunderbuss, and was about to fire it, when it was knocked aside by one of our guard. Several of the Sirdars came in during the day, and told us to be assured that no harm should befall us; that the Envoy and Trevor were safe in the city (a falsehood, as will be afterwards seen). Naib Ameenoollah Khan and his sons also came. The former, in great wrath, said that we either should be, or deserved to be, blown away from a gun. Mahomed Shah Khan and Dost Mahomed Khan begged he would not so talk, and took him out of the room. Towards night food was given to us, and postheens to sleep on: our watches, rings, and silk handkerchiefs were taken from us; but in all other respects we were unmolested. The followers of Mahomed Shah Khan repeatedly congratulated him on the events of the day, with one exception, viz. an old Moollah, who loudly exclaimed that "the name of the faithful was tarnished, and that in future no belief could be placed in them; that the deed was foul and could never be of advantage to the authors." At midnight we were taken through the city to the house of Mahomed Akbar Khan, who received us courteously, lamenting the occurrences of the day: here we found Captain Skinner, and for the first time heard the dreadful and astounding intelligence of the murder of the Envoy and Captain Trevor, and that our lamented chief's head had been paraded through the city in triumph, and his trunk, after being dragged through the streets, stuck up in the Char Chouk, the most conspicuous part of the town. Captain Skinner told us, that the report was, that on Mahomed Akbar Khan's telling Sir William to accompany him, he refused, resisted, and pushed the Sirdar from him; that in consequence he was immediately shot and his body cut to pieces by the Ghazees; that Captain Trevor had been conveyed behind Dost Mahomed Khan as far as Mahomed Khan's fort, where he was cut down, but that his body was not mangled, though carried in triumph through the city. On the following morning (24th)

we (Captain Skinner, Mackenzie, and self) were taken to Nuwab Zuman Khan's house, escorted by Sultan Jan and other chiefs, to protect us from the Ghazees; there we met Captains Conolly and Airey (hostages) and all the rebel Sirdars assembled in council. The Envoy's death was lamented, but his conduct severely censured, and it was said that now no faith could be placed in our words. A new treaty however was discussed, and sent to the General and Major Pottinger, and towards evening we returned as we came to Mahomed Akber's, where I remained a prisoner, but well and courteously treated till the morning of the 26th. when I was sent to Naib Ameenollah Khan. On reaching his house I was ushered into his private apartment. The Naib received me kindly, showed me the Envoy's original letter in reply to Mahomed Akber's proposition, touching his being made Shah Shujah's Wuzeer, receiving a lack of rupees on giving the Naib a prisoner to us, thirty lacks on the final settlement of the insurrection, &c. To this the Naib added that the Envoy had told Mahomed Akbar's cousin that a lack of rupees would be given for his (Ameenollah Khan's) head. I promptly replied "'tis false," that Sir William had never done so, that it was utterly foreign and repugnant to his nature, and to British usage. The Naib expressed himself in strong terms against the Envoy, contrasting his own fair and open conduct with that of Sir William. He told me that General Elphinstone and Major Pottinger had begged I might be released, as my presence was necessary to enable them to prepare bills on India, which it had been arranged the Sirdars were to get. After some delay, consequent on my asking for Captain Mackenzie to be released with me, and Mahomed Akber's stoutly refusing the release of either of us, I was sent into cantonments on the morning of the 29th, escorted by the Naib's eldest son and a strong party of horse and foot, being disguised as an Affghan for my greater protection. I must here record that nothing could exceed the Naib's kindness and attention to me while under his roof.

I have, &c. &c.

(Signed) G. St. P. LAWRENCE, Military Secretary,
Late Envoy and Minister.

*Camp Zoudah,
Ten miles south of Tezeen.
10th May, 1842.*

(True copy.)

Vint. Eyre, Lieut. Bengal Artillery.

CHAP. IX.

HOW WE AVENGED HIM! — COUNCIL OF WAR. — TERMS ACCEPTED. — HOSTAGES GIVEN. — POSTPONEMENT OF DEPARTURE.

BUT what were our troops about all this time? Were no steps taken to rescue the Envoy and his friends from their perilous position? Where was the body-guard which followed them from cantonments?—These questions will naturally occur to all who read the foregoing pages, and I wish it were in my power to render satisfactory answers.

The body-guard had only got a few hundred yards from the gate in their progress to the scene of conference, when they suddenly faced about and came galloping back, several shots being fired at them in their retreat. Lieut. Le Geyt, in passing through the gate, exclaimed that the Envoy had been carried off, and it was believed that, finding his men would not advance to the rescue, he came back for assistance. But the intelligence he brought, instead of rousing our leaders to instant action, seemed to paralyze their faculties; and, although it was evident that our Envoy had been basely entrapped, if not actually murdered, before our very gate, and though even now crowds of Affghans, horse and foot, were seen passing and repassing to and fro in hostile array, between Mahomed's fort and the place of meeting, not a gun was opened upon them; not a soldier was stirred from his post; no sortie was apparently even thought of; treachery was allowed to triumph in open day; the murder of a British Envoy was perpetrated in the face and within musket-shot of a British army; and not only was no effort made to avenge the dastardly deed, but the body was left lying on the plain to be mangled and insulted, and finally carried off to be paraded in the public market by a ruffianly mob of fanatical barbarians.

Intense was the anxiety and wretched the suspense felt by all during the rest of the day. A number of Affghans, who were trafficking in cantonments at the time of the conference, on hearing the report of fire-arms in that direction, endeavoured to escape, but were detained by the officer at the gate. No certain tidings regarding the Envoy could be obtained: many confidently affirmed that he was alive and unharmed in Mahomed's fort; but Lieut. Warren stoutly maintained that he had kept his eye upon Sir William from the moment of his leaving the gate, and had distinctly seen him fall to the ground, and the Affghans hacking at his body. The agony of his poor wife during this dread interval of suspense may be imagined.

December 24th. — The fate of the Envoy and his three companions remained a mystery, until the arrival of a note from Capt. Conolly notifying his death and that of Capt. Trevor, and the safety of Cpts. Lawrence and Mackenzie.

The two latter officers had been that morning escorted to a conference of chiefs at the house of Nuwab Zuman Khan, where the late Envoy's conduct was severely commented on; but his death was nevertheless lamented. The treaty was again discussed; and, after a few alterations and additions had been made, it was sent to Gen. Elphinstone, with an explanation of the breach of faith which had cost the Envoy his life.

Gen. Elphinstone now requested Major Pottinger to assume the office of political agent and adviser, which, though still suffering greatly from his wound, and incapacitated from active bodily exertion, that gallant officer's strict sense of public duty forbade him to decline, although he plainly perceived our affairs to be so irretrievably ruined, as to render the distinction anything but enviable, or likely to improve his hardly-earned fame.

The additional clauses in the treaty now proposed for our renewed acceptance were — 1st. That we should leave behind all our guns, excepting six. 2nd. That we should immediately give up all our treasures. 3rd. That the hostages should be all exchanged for married men, with their wives and families.— The difficulties of Major Pottinger's position will be readily perceived, when it is borne in mind that he had before him the most conclusive evidence of the late Envoy's ill-advised intrigue with Mahomed Akber Khan, in direct violation of that very treaty, which was now once more tendered for consideration.

December 25th. — A more cheerless Christmas-day perhaps never dawned upon British soldiers in a strange land; and the few whom the force of habit urged to exchange the customary greetings of the season, did so with countenances and in tones indicative of anything but merriment. At night there was an alarm, and the drum beat to arms, but nothing occurred of any consequence.

December 26th. — Letters were received from Capt. Mackeson, political agent at Peshawur, announcing the march of strong reinforcements from India. An offer was made by Mahomed Osman Khan to escort us all safe to Peshawur for five lacs of rupees; and shortly after this the Naib Ameer arrived, with a verbal agreement to certain amendments which had been proposed in the treaty by Major Pottinger. He was accompanied by a Cashmeer merchant and several Hindoo shroffs, for the purpose of negotiating bills to the amount of fourteen lacs of rupees, payable to the several chiefs on the promise of the late Envoy.

Major Pottinger being altogether averse from the payment of this money, and indeed strongly opposed to any treaty binding the Indian government to a course of policy, which it might find inconvenient to adopt, a council of war was convened by the General, consisting of himself, Brigadiers Shelton and Anquetil, Col. Chambers, Capt. Bellew, Assist. Qr.-Mast.-Gen., and Capt. Grant, Assist. Adjt.-Gen. In the presence of this council, Major Pottinger declared his conviction that no confidence could be placed in any treaty formed with the Affghan chiefs; that, under such circumstances, to bind the hands of government, by promising to evacuate the country, and to restore the deposed Ameer, and to waste moreover so much public money, merely to save our own lives and property, would be inconsistent with the duty we owed our country and the government we served; and that the only honourable course would be either to hold out to the last at Cabul, or to force our immediate retreat to Jellalabad.

This, however, the officers composing the council, one and all, declared to be impracticable, owing to the want of provisions, the surrender of the surrounding forts, and the insuperable difficulties of the road at the present season; they therefore deemed it preferable to pay any sum of money, rather than sacrifice the whole force in a hopeless prolongation of hostilities. It was accordingly determined, nem. con., that Major Pottinger should at once renew the negotiations which had been commenced by Sir William Macnaghten, and that the sums promised to the chiefs by that functionary previous to his murder should be paid.

Major Pottinger's objections being thus overruled, the tendered treaty was forthwith accepted, and a requisition was made for the release of Capt. Lawrence, whose presence was necessary to prepare the bills on India. Four married hostages, with their wives and children, being required by the chiefs, a circular was sent round, to ascertain if that number would volunteer to remain, a salary of 2000 rupees per month being guaranteed to each, as an inducement.

Such, however, was the horror entertained of Affghan treachery since the late tragical occurrence, that some officers went so far as to say they would sooner shoot their wives at once, than commit them to the charge of men, who had proved themselves devoid of common honour and humanity. There were, in fact, but one or two who consented to stay, if the General considered that by so doing they would benefit the public service.

December 27th. — The chiefs were informed that it was contrary to the usages of war to give up ladies as hostages, and that the General could not consent to an arrangement, which would brand him with perpetual disgrace in his own country.

December 29th. — The Naib Ameer came in from the city with Capt. Lawrence and the shroffs, when the bills were prepared without farther delay. Capts. Drummond, Walsh, Warburton, and Webb, having been accepted as hostages, were sent to join Capts. Conolly and Airey at the house of Nuwab Zuman Khan. A portion of the sick and wounded, amongst whom was Lieut. Haughton of the Goorkha regiment, were likewise conveyed to the city, and placed under the protection of the chiefs. Three of the Shah's guns, with the greater portion of our treasure, were made over during the day, much to the evident disgust of the soldiery.

December 30th. — The remainder of the sick went into the city, Lieut. Evans, H. M.'s 44th foot, being placed in command, and Dr. Campbell, 54th N. I., with Dr. Berwick of the Mission, in medical charge of the whole. Two more of the Shah's guns were given up. It snowed hard the whole day. A crowd of armed Giljyes and Ghazees took up a threatening position close to the eastern gate, and even attempted to force an entrance into cantonments. Much annoyance was daily experienced from these people, who were in the habit of plundering the peaceable dealers, who flocked in from the city with grain and forage, the moment they issued from the cantonments; they even committed frequent assaults on our Sepoys, and orders to fire on them on such occasions were repeatedly solicited in vain, although it was well known that the chiefs themselves advised us to do so, and the General had given Brigadier Shelton positive instructions to that effect, whenever circumstances might render it advisable. The consequence was that our soldiers were daily constrained to endure the most insulting and contemptuous taunts and treatment, from fellows whom a single charge of bayonets would have scattered like chaff, but who were emboldened by the apparent tameness of our troops, which they doubtless attributed to the want of common pluck, rather than to the restraints of discipline. Capts. Mackenzie and Skinner obtained their release this evening, the latter officer having, since the outbreak of the rebellion, passed through some curious adventures, in the disguise of an Affghan female.

January 5th. — Affairs continued in the same unsettled state until this date. The chiefs postponed our departure from day to day on divers pretexts. It had been agreed that Nuwab Jubbar Khan should escort us to Jellalabad with about 2000 followers, who were to be entertained for that purpose.

It is supposed that, up to the very last, the majority of chiefs doubted the reality of our intention to depart: and many, fearful of the civil discords for which our retreat would be the signal, would have gladly detained us at Cabul. Attempts were made continually by Akber Khan to wean the Hindoostanees from their allegiance, and to induce them to desert. Numerous cautions were received from various well-wishers, to place no confidence in the professions of the chiefs, who had sworn together to accomplish our entire destruction. Shah Shoojah himself sent more than one solemn warning, and, finding we were bent on taking our own course, used his utmost endeavours to persuade Lady Macnaghten to take advantage of his protection in the Bala

Hissar. He also appealed to Brigadier Anquetil, who commanded the Shah's force, "if it were well to forsake him in the hour of need, and to deprive him of the aid of that force, which he had hitherto been taught to consider as his own?" All was however unavailing. The General and his council of war had determined that go we must, and go we accordingly did.

In the foregoing chapters I have offered what I honestly believe to be a faithful narration of the dismal train of events which preceded the evacuation of Cabul, and the abandonment of Shah Shoojah, by the British army. In taking a retrospective view of those unprecedented occurrences, it is evident that our reverses may be mainly attributed to a lack of ordinary foresight and penetration on the part of the chief military and civil authorities, on their first entering on the occupation of this country; a country whose innumerable fortified strongholds and difficult mountain passes, in the hands of a proud and warlike population, never really subdued nor reconciled to our rule, though unable to oppose the march of a disciplined army through their land, ought to have induced a more than common degree of vigilance and circumspection, in making adequate provision against any such popular outbreak as might have been anticipated, and did actually occur. But, instead of applying his undeniable talents to the completion of that conquest, which gained him an illustrious title and a wide renown, Lord Keane contented himself with the superficial success, which attended his progress through a country hitherto untraversed by an European army, since the classic days of Alexander the Great; he hurried off, with too great eagerness to enjoy the applause which awaited him in England, and left to his successors the far more arduous task of securing in their grasp the unwieldy prize, of which he had obtained the nominal possession.

On his return to India, Lord Keane took with him a large portion of the Bengal force, with which he had arrived at Cabul; the whole of the Bombay troops made a simultaneous homeward movement; and the army, with which he had entered Affghanistan, was thus reduced to a miserable moiety, before any steps had been taken to guard against surprise by the erection of a stronghold on the approved principles of modern warfare, or the establishment of a line of military posts to keep open our communications with India, on which country the army must necessarily for a long time have been entirely dependent for the munitions of war. The distance from Cabul to Ferozepore, our nearest Indian station, is about 600 miles. Between Cabul and Peshawur occur the stupendous and dangerous defiles of Khoord-Cabul, Tezeen, Purreedurrah, Jugdulluk, and Kyber, throughout whose whole extent food and forage are procurable only at long intervals, and even then with much difficulty.

From Peshawur to Ferozepore is the Punjab, or country of the Seiks, traversed by five great rivers, and occupied by a powerful nation, on whose pacific professions no reliance could be placed. Along this extended line of communication Lord Keane established but one small solitary post, in the fort of Ali Musjed, in the heart of the Khyber pass. He left behind him, in fact, an army, whose isolated position and reduced strength offered the strongest possible temptation to a proud and restless race, to rally their scattered tribes in one grand effort to regain their lost independence.

In Lord Keane's successors may be seen the same disposition to be too easily satisfied with the outward semblance of tranquillity. Another brigade was ere long withdrawn from a force already insufficient for any great emergency ; nor was their position for holding in subjection a vanquished people much improved by their establishment in an ill-situated and ill-constructed cantonment, with their commissariat stores separated from their lines of defence. To the latter mentioned error may be mainly attributed the evacuation of Cabul and the destruction of the army; for there can be no doubt that, notwithstanding all the difficulties of our position, and the incompetence of our commanders, had the cantonments been well supplied with provisions, the troops could have easily held out until the arrival of reinforcements from India. The real cause of our retreat was, beyond all question, famine. We were not driven, but starved, out of Cabul; and although, in my relation of our military transactions, I have been compelled by a regard to truth unwillingly to record proceedings which must be condemned by all, I do not the less feel most sensibly that every allowance ought in common justice to be made for men, who from the very commencement of the conflict, saw the combined horrors of starvation and a rigorous winter frowning in their face,—no succours within reach,—their retreat cut off,—and all their sanguinary efforts either altogether fruitless, or at best deferring for a few short days the ruin which on every side threatened to overwhelm them.

In connection with this subject, I may be excused for quoting, in conclusion, the powerful reasoning of a recent writer in the Bombay Times : —

“ When a soldier finds that his every movement is directed by a master mind; that, when he is apparently thrust into the greatest danger, he finds, in truth, his greatest security; that his march to engage an apparently superior force is not a wild sacrifice, but the result of a well-calculated plan; when he knows that, however appearances may be, he is sure to come off with honour, for his brethren in arms are already in progress to assist him, and will not fail to be forthcoming at the hour appointed; when he sees that there is a watchful eye over him, providing for all his wants, assisting him to overcome all his difficulties, and enabling him to reap the fruit of all his successes; when he finds that even retreat is but a preparation for victory, and, as if guided by Providence, all his movements, though to him incomprehensible, are sure to prove steps to some great end; — when the soldier finds this, he rises and lies down in security, and there is no danger which he will not brave. But when, in every thing they undertake, they find the reverse of the picture I have drawn; when they are marched, as they imagine to glory, but find it is only to slaughter ; when even victory brings no fruit, and retreat they discover to be flight ; when the support they hope for comes not, and they find their labours to be without end or purpose ; when the provisions they look for daily are issued to them no more, and they see all their efforts paralysed ; when an army of thousands finds itself delivered, bound hand and foot, into the hands of a man without system, foresight, or military knowledge enough for a sergeant of police, the stoutest heart will fail, the bravest sink ; for the soldier knows that, do what he will, his efforts can only end in ruin and dishonour."

CHAP. X.

THE RETREAT OF THE ARMY, AND ITS ANNIHILATION.

January 6th.—AT last the fatal morning dawned, which was to witness the departure of the Cabul force from the cantonments, in which it had sustained a two months' siege, to encounter the miseries of a winter march through a country of perhaps unparalleled difficulty, where every mountain defile, if obstinately defended by a determined enemy, must inevitably prove the grave of hundreds.

Dreary indeed was the scene, over which, with drooping spirits and dismal forebodings, we had to bend our unwilling steps. Deep snow covered every inch of mountain and plain with one unspotted sheet of dazzling white, and so intensely bitter was the cold, as to penetrate and defy the defences of the warmest clothing.

No signs of the promised escort appeared: but at an early hour the preparations commenced for our march. A cut was made through the eastern rampart, to open an additional passage for the troops and baggage, a sufficient number of gunwaggons and platform planks were taken down to the river for the formation of a temporary bridge, and every available camel and yaboo (the whole amounting to 2000) was laden with military stores, commissariat supplies, and such small proportion of camp-equipage as was indispensably necessary to shelter the troops in a climate of extraordinary rigour.

The strength of the whole force at this time was, so far as can now be ascertained, very nearly as follows:—

1 troop of horse artillery	-	-	90	} 690 Europeans.
H. M.'s 44th foot	-	-	600
5th regt. light cavalry, 2 squad.	-	-	260
5th Shah's irreg. do. (Anderson's)	-	-	500	} 970 cavalry.
Skinner's horse, 1 ressala	-	-	70
4th irreg. do. 1 do.	-	-	70
Mission escort, or body-guard	-	-	70
5th native infantry	-	-	700	} 2840.
37th do.	-	-	600
54th do.	-	-	650
6th Shah's infantry	-	-	600
Sappers and miners	-	-	20
Shah's do.	-	-	240	} 4500 fighting men.
Half the mountain train	-	-	30
Total			-
6 horse artillery guns.
3 mountain train do.

Besides the above, the camp followers amounted, at a very moderate computation, to about 12,000 men, besides women and children. These proved from the very first mile a serious clog upon our movements, and were, indeed, the main cause of our subsequent misfortunes. It is to be devoutly hoped that every future commander-in-chief of the Indian army will adopt decisive measures, to prevent a force employed on field service from being ever again afflicted with such a curse.

The order of march was as follows:—

H. M.'s 44th foot -	-	-	-	} The advance, under Brigadier Anquetil.
Sappers and miners -	-	-	-
Irreg. horse, 1 squad. -	-	-	-
3 mountain train guns -	-	-	-
The escort, with the ladies -	-	-	-	} Main column, under Brigadier Shelton.
The invalids and sick -	-	-	-
2 horse artillery guns -	-	-	-
Anderson's irreg. horse -	-	-	-
37th native infantry, with treasure -	-	-	-
5th native infantry, with baggage -	-	-	-	} Rear-guard, under Col. Chambers.
54th native infantry -	-	-	-
6th Shah's infantry -	-	-	-
5th light cavalry -	-	-	-
4 horse artillery guns -	-	-	-

All being ready at 9 A. M., the advance commenced moving out. At this time not a single Affghan was to be seen in any direction, and the peaceable aspect of affairs gave rise to strong hopes that the chiefs intended to remain true to their engagements.

At 10 A. M. a message was brought from Nuwab Jubbar Khan, requesting us to defer our departure another day, as his escort was not yet ready to accompany us. By this time, however, the greater part of the force was in motion, and a crowd of Affghans, who had issued from the village of Beymaroo, impatient for plunder, had forced their way into the northern cantonment, or mission compound (which, owing to some mistake, had been evacuated too soon by the Shah's 6th infantry), and were busily engaged in the work of pillage and destruction. The advance was delayed for upwards of an hour at the river, having found the temporary bridge incomplete; and it was noon ere the whole had crossed over, leaving a clear road for the main column to follow.

The order of march, in which the troops started, was, however, soon lost, and the camp followers with the public and private baggage, once out of cantonments, could not be prevented from mixing themselves up with the troops, to the utter confusion of the whole column.

The main body, with its long train of laden camels, continued to pour out of the gate until the evening, by which time thousands of Affghans, the majority of whom were fanatical Ghazees, thronged the whole area of cantonments, rending the air with their exulting cries, and committing every kind of atrocity. The rear-guard, being unable to restrain them, was obliged to provide for its own safety by taking up a position outside, on the plain, where a great quantity of the baggage had been brought to a stand-still at the canal (within 150 yards of the gate), whose slippery sides afforded no safe footing for the beasts of burden. The bridge across the river, being by this time impracticable, occasioned additional delay.

The Affghans, who had hitherto been too busily engaged in the work of plunder and destruction to take much notice of the troops, now began to line the ramparts, and annoy them with a mischievous fire of juzails, under which many fell; and it became necessary, for the preservation of those who remained, to spike and abandon two of the horse artillery guns.

Night had now closed around; but the Ghazees, having fired the residency and almost every other building in the cantonment, the conflagration illuminated the surrounding country for several miles, presenting a spectacle of fearful sublimity. In the mad fervour of their religious zeal, these ignorant fanatics even set fire to the gun-carriages belonging to the various pieces of ordnance, which we had left in position round the works, of whose use the Affghan chiefs were thus luckily deprived. The general had been often urged to destroy these guns, rather than suffer them to fall into the enemy's hands, but he considered that it would have been a breach of the treaty to do so. Before the rear-guard commenced its march, Lieut. Hardyman of the 5th light cavalry, with fifty rank and file, were stretched lifeless on the snow. Much baggage was abandoned at starting, and much was plundered on the road. Scores of worn-out Sepoys and camp followers lined the way, having sat down in despair to perish in the snow. It was 2 A. M. ere the rear-guard reached camp at Bygram, a distance of only five miles. Here all was confusion. The tents had been pitched without the slightest regard to regularity, those of different regiments being huddled together in one intricate mass, mixed up with baggage, camp-followers, camels, and horses, in a way which beggars description. The flimsy canvass of the soldiers' tents was but a poor protection from the cold, which towards morning became more and more intense; and thousands of poor wretched creatures were obliged to lie down on the bare snow, without either shelter, fire, or food. Several died during the night; amongst whom was an European conductor of ordnance.

About twenty juzailchees, who still held faithfully by Capt. Mackenzie, suffered less than the rest, owing to their systematic mode of proceeding. Their first step on reaching the ground was to clear a small space from the snow, where they then laid themselves down in a circle, closely packed together, with their feet meeting in the centre ; all the warm clothing they could muster among them being spread equally over the whole. By these simple means sufficient animal warmth was generated to preserve them from being frost-bitten ; and Capt. Mackenzie, who himself shared their homely bed, declared that he had felt scarcely any inconvenience from the cold. It was different with our Sepoys and camp followers, who, having had no former experience of such hardships, were ignorant how they might best provide against them, and the proportion of those who escaped, without suffering in some degree from frost-bites, was very small. Yet this was but the beginning of sorrows !

January 7th. — At 8 A.M. the force moved off in the reverse order of yesterday — if that could be called order which consisted of a mingled mob of soldiers, camp-followers, and baggage-cattle, preserving not even the faintest semblance of that regularity and discipline, on which depended our only chance of escape from the dangers which threatened us. Even at this early stage of the retreat scarcely one half of the Sepoys were fit for duty ; hundreds had, from sheer inability to keep their ranks, joined the non-combatants, and thus increased the confusion. As for the Shah's 6th inf., it was no where to be found; only a few straggling files were perceptible here and there; and it was generally believed that the majority of the regiment had absconded during the night to Cabul.

At starting, large clods of hardened snow adhered so firmly to the hoofs of our horses, that a chisel and hammer would have been requisite to dislodge them. The very air we breathed froze in its passage out of the mouth and nostrils, forming a coating of small icicles on our moustaches and beards.

The advance proceeded onward without molestation, though numerous small bodies of Affghan horse and foot were observed hanging about our flanks, and moving in a parallel direction with ourselves. These were at first supposed to form a part of our escort, but the mistake was soon discovered by their attacking the rear-guard, commanded by Brigadier Anquetil, consisting of H. M.'s 44th, Lieut. Green's mountain train guns, and a squadron of irregular horse. Much baggage fell into the enemy's hands, who, though in some degree kept in check by the guns, exhibited a bold front, and maintained a harassing fire on our troops, whose movements were terribly crippled by the disorderly multitude that thronged the road in front. The latter being for several minutes brought to a stand-still by a deep water-cut which intersected the road, the mountain-train guns endeavoured to pass clear of them by making a short detour, in doing which they got separated from the infantry, and — one happening at this unlucky moment to upset — the enemy seized the opportunity to rush forward and capture them, before H. M.'s 44th, who saw too late their awkward predicament, could render effectual assistance.

Their re-capture might still have been effected, could the soldiers have been prevailed upon to make the attempt, a gallant example being shown them by Lieut. Green and his few artillerymen, who made a sudden charge upon the foe and spiked the guns, but, not being supported, were obliged a second time to abandon them. Lieut. White, the Adjutant of H. M.'s 44th, received a severe wound through the face on this occasion.

Brigadier Anquetil now sent to the front for reinforcements, which, however, it was found impracticable to furnish, from the crowded state of the road. The Affghan horse shortly after this charged into the very midst of the column of baggage, and carried off large quantities of plunder, creating the greatest confusion and dismay.

Numbers fell from wounds, and still greater numbers from mere bodily weakness produced by cold, fasting, and fatigue. It was found necessary to spike and abandon two more horse-artillery guns, which the horses were found perfectly incapable of dragging any further through the deep snow.

On the arrival of the advance at Bootkhak, the General, having been informed that the rear was in danger of being entirely cut off, ordered a halt, and sent back all the troops that could be spared, together with the two remaining guns, to drive off the enemy, who had now assembled in great numbers in the rear, and were proceeding to crown some heights on the right commanding the road. This was, however, prevented by our troops under Brigadier Shelton, who took possession of the nearer heights, and kept the enemy in check for upwards of an hour. On this occasion, Lieut. Shaw, of the 54th N. I., was wounded severely in the thigh. Meanwhile Capt. Skinner had fallen in with a follower of Mahomed Akber Khan, from whom having learned that the chief was encamped near at hand, he accompanied the man to his master's presence. Mahomed Akber now informed Captain Skinner that he had been sent by the chiefs to escort us to Jellalabad, and declared that we had been attacked in consequence of having marched contrary to their wishes. He insisted on our halting at Bootkhak till the following morning, in which case he would provide food, forage, and firewood for the troops; but he said that he should expect six hostages to insure our not marching beyond Tezeen, before tidings should be received of Gen. Sale's evacuation of Jellalabad, for which an order had been already despatched to that officer, in compliance with the stipulations of the treaty.

These terms having been agreed to, the firing ceased for the present, and the force came to a halt on some high ground near the entrance of the Khoord-Cabul pass, having in two days accomplished a distance of only ten miles from Cabul.

Here, again, the confusion soon became indescribable. Suffice it to say that an immense multitude of from 14,000 to 16,000 men, with several hundred cavalry horses and baggage cattle, were closely jammed together in one monstrous, unmanageable, jumbling mass. Night again closed over us, with its attendant train of horrors, — starvation, cold, exhaustion, death; and of all deaths I can imagine none more agonising than that, where a nipping frost tortures every sensitive limb, until the tenacious spirit itself sinks under the exquisite extreme of human suffering.

January 8th. — At an early hour the treacherous

Affghans again commenced to molest us with their fire, and several hundreds having assembled in hostile array to the south of the camp, the troops were drawn up in expectation of an attack. Major Thain, putting himself at the head of the 44th foot, and exhorting the men to follow him, led them boldly on to the attack; but the enemy did not think proper to await the shock of bayonets, and effected a hasty retreat. In this business it is satisfactory to be able to state that H. M.'s 44th foot behaved with a resolution and gallantry worthy of British soldiers, and plainly proved that, under an able and judicious leader, they could yet redeem their injured reputation.

Capt. Skinner again went to communicate with Mahomed Akber Khan, who demanded that Major Pottinger and Capts. Lawrence and Mackenzie should immediately be made over to him, which was accordingly done, and hostilities again ceased; the Sirdar promising to send forward some influential men to clear the pass from the Giljyes, who occupied it, and were lying in wait for our approach. Once more the living mass of men and animals was in motion. At the entrance of the pass an attempt was made to separate the troops from the non-combatants, which was but partially successful, and created considerable delay.

The rapid effects of two nights' exposure to the frost in disorganising the force can hardly be conceived. It had so nipped the hands and feet of even the strongest men, as to completely prostrate their powers and incapacitate them for service; even the cavalry, who suffered less than the rest, were obliged to be lifted on their horses. In fact only a few hundred serviceable fighting men remained.

The idea of threading the stupendous pass before us, in the face of an armed tribe of blood-thirsty barbarians, with such a dense irregular multitude, was frightful, and the spectacle then presented by that waving sea of animated beings, the majority of whom a few fleeting hours would transform into a line of lifeless carcasses to guide the future traveller on his way, can never be forgotten by those who witnessed it. We had so often been deceived by Affghan professions, that little or no confidence was placed in the present truce; and we commenced our passage through the dreaded pass in no very sanguine temper of mind. This truly formidable defile is about five miles from end to end, and is shut in on either hand by a line of lofty hills, between whose precipitous sides the sun at this season could dart but a momentary ray. Down the centre dashed a mountain torrent, whose impetuous course the frost in vain attempted to arrest, though it succeeded in lining the edges with thick layers of ice, over which the snow lay consolidated in slippery masses, affording no very easy footing for our jaded animals. This stream we had to cross and recross about eight-and-twenty times. As we proceeded onwards, the defile gradually narrowed, and the Giljyes were observed hastening to crown the heights in considerable force. A hot fire was opened on the advance, with whom were several ladies, who, seeing their only chance was to keep themselves in rapid motion, galloped forward at the head of all, running the gauntlet of the enemy's bullets, which whizzed in hundreds about their ears, until they were fairly out of the pass. Providentially the whole escaped, with the exception of Lady Sale, who received a slight wound in the arm. It ought, however, to be mentioned, that several of Mahomed Akber's chief adherents, who had preceded the advance, exerted themselves strenuously to keep down the fire; but nothing could restrain the Giljyes, who seemed fully determined that nobody should interfere to disappoint them of their prey. Onward moved the crowd into the thickest of the fire, and fearful was the slaughter that ensued. An universal panic speedily prevailed, and thousands, seeking refuge in flight, hurried forward to the front, abandoning baggage, arms, ammunition, women, and children, regardless for the moment of every thing but their own lives.

The rear-guard, consisting of H. M.'s 44th and 54th N. I., suffered severely ; and at last, finding that delay was only destruction, they followed the general example, and made the best of their way to the front. Another horse-artillery gun was abandoned, and the whole of its artillerymen slain. Capt. Anderson's eldest girl, and Capt. Boyd's youngest boy, fell into the hands of the Affghans. It is supposed that 3000 souls perished in the pass, amongst whom were Capt. Paton, Assist.-Qr.-Mast.-Gen. ; and Lieut. St. George, 37th N. I. ; Majors Griffiths, 37th N. I., and Scott, H. M.'s 44th ; Capts. Bott, 5th cavalry, and Troup, Brigadier-Major Shah's force. Dr. Cardew and Lieut. Sturt, engineers, were wounded, the latter mortally. This fine young officer had nearly cleared the defile when he received his wound, and would have been left on the ground to be hacked to pieces by the Ghazees, who followed in the rear to complete the work of slaughter, but for the generous intrepidity of Lieut. Mein of H. M.'s 13th light infantry, who, on learning what had befallen him, went back to his succour, and stood by him for several minutes, at the imminent risk of his own life, vainly entreating aid from the passers by. He was at length joined by Sergt. Deane of the Sappers, with whose assistance he dragged his friend on a quilt through the remainder of the pass, when he succeeded in mounting him on a miserable pony, and conducted him in safety to camp, where the unfortunate officer lingered till the following morning, and was the only man of the whole force who received Christian burial. Lieut. Mein was himself at this very time suffering from a dangerous wound in the head received in the previous October, and his heroic disregard of self, and fidelity to his friend in the hour of danger, are well deserving of a record in the annals of British valour and virtue.

On the force reaching Khoord-Cabul, snow began to fall, and continued till morning. Only four small tents were saved, of which one belonged to the General: two were devoted to the ladies and children, and one was given up to the sick; but an immense number of poor wounded wretches wandered about the camp destitute of shelter, and perished during the night. Groans of misery and distress assailed the ear from all quarters. We had ascended to a still colder climate than we had left behind, and were without tents, fuel, or food: the snow was the only bed for all, and of many, ere morning, it proved the winding-sheet.

It is only marvellous that any should have survived that fearful night!

January 9th. — Another morning dawned, awakening thousands to increased misery; and many a wretched survivor cast looks of envy at his comrades, who lay stretched beside him in the quiet sleep of death. Daylight was the signal for a renewal of that confusion, which attended every movement of the force. The General had intended us to march at 10 A. M., but a large portion of the troops, with nearly all the camp, followers, moved off without orders at 8 A. M., and had advanced about a mile from the camp, when they were recalled by the General, in consequence of a communication from Mahomed Akber Khan, who promised to use every endeavour to furnish us with supplies; but strongly recommended us to halt until he could make some proper arrangements for escorting us down safely. There can be no doubt that the general feeling in camp was adverse to a halt, there being scarcely even a native soldier, who did not plainly perceive that our only chance of escape consisted in moving on as fast as possible. This additional delay, therefore, and prolongation of their sufferings in the snow, of which one more march would have carried them clear, made a very unfavourable impression on the minds of the native soldiery, who now for the first time began very generally to entertain the idea of deserting; nor is it at all astonishing that these symptoms should have first developed themselves amongst the Shah's native cavalry, who were, for the most part, exceedingly young soldiers, and foresaw full well the fatal result of all these useless and pernicious delays. The love of life is strong in every breast.

These men had hitherto behaved remarkably well, notwithstanding the numerous efforts that had been made to detach them from their duty; and, if their fealty at last gave place to the instinct of self-preservation, be it remembered in their favour, that it was not until the position of the force, of which they formed a part, had become altogether desperate beyond the reach of cure.

Towards noon Capt. Skinner arrived in camp with a proposition from Mahomed Akber Khan that all the widowed ladies and married families, whose destitute situation in camp rendered them objects of universal pity and sympathy, should at once be made over to his protection, to preserve them from further hardships and dangers; in this case he promised to escort them down safely, keeping them one day's march in rear of the army. The General, though not himself disposed to place much confidence in Mahomed Akber's friendly professions, was strongly recommended by Capt. Skinner to trust him on the present occasion, as he felt assured that such a mark of confidence would be attended with happy results to the whole force. Anxious at all events to save the ladies and children from further suffering, the General gave his consent to the arrangement, and told Capt. Skinner to prepare all the married officers and ladies to depart immediately with a party of Affghan horse, who were in waiting to receive them. His intention also was that all the wounded officers in camp should have had the option of availing themselves of the same opportunity to seek Mahomed Akber's protection; but the others were hurried off by the Affghans before this had become generally known, and only two were in time to join them.*

Up to this time scarcely one of the ladies had tasted a meal since leaving Cabul. Some had infants a few days old at the breast, and were unable to stand without assistance. Others were so far advanced in pregnancy, that, under ordinary circumstances, a walk across a drawing-room would have been an exertion; yet these helpless women, with their young families, had already been obliged to rough it on the backs of camels, and on the tops of the baggage yaboos: those who had a horse to ride, or were capable of sitting on one, were considered fortunate indeed. Most had been without shelter since quitting the cantonment — their servants had nearly all deserted or been killed — and, with the exception of Lady Macnaghten and Mrs. Trevor, they had lost all their baggage, having nothing in the world left but the clothes on their backs; those, in the case of some of the invalids, consisted of night dresses in which they had started from Cabul in their litters. Under such circumstances a few more hours would probably have seen some of them stiffening corsees. The offer of Mahomed Akber was consequently their only chance of preservation. The husbands, better clothed and hardy, would have infinitely preferred taking their chance with the troops; but where is the man who would prefer his own safety, when he thought he could by his presence assist and console those near and dear to him?

* Capt. Troup, Brigadier-major Shah's force, and Lieut. Mein, H. M.'s 13th Light Inf., who went as Lady Sale's protector.

Lieuts. Waller and Eyre were likewise suffering from severe and painful wounds received in action at Cabul, which totally disabled them from active service.

It is not therefore wonderful that, from persons so circumstanced, the General's proposal should have met with little opposition, although it was a matter of serious doubt whether the whole were not rushing into the very jaws of death, by placing themselves at the mercy of a man, who had so lately imbrued his hands in the blood of a British Envoy, whom he had lured to destruction by similar professions of peace and good-will.

But whatever may have been the secret intent of Akber's heart, he was at this time our professed friend and ally, having undertaken to escort the whole force to Jellalabad in safety. Whatever suspicions, therefore, have been entertained of his hypocrisy, it was not in the character of an enemy that he gained possession of the married families; on the contrary, he stood pledged for their safe escort to Jellalabad, no less than for that of the army to which they belonged; and by their unwarrantable detention as prisoners, no less than by the treacherous massacre of the force, he broke the universal law of nations, and was guilty of an unpardonable breach of faith. Shortly after the departure of the married families, it was discovered that the troopers of the Shah's irregular cavalry and of the mission escort were deserting in great numbers, having been enticed away, as was supposed, by Mahomed Akber, to whom a message of remonstrance was in consequence sent. He assured the General, in reply, that not only would he refrain from enticing the men away, but that every future deserter from our camp should be shot.

Meanwhile a large body of Affghan horse had been observed in the vicinity of camp, in company with the cavalry deserters; and, fears being entertained that it was their design to attack the camp, a general parade of the troops was ordered for the purpose of repelling them. The 44th foot at this time was found to muster 100 files, and the native infantry regiments, on an average, about 60 files each. Of the Irregular Horse not above 100 effective troopers remained, and the 5th Light Cavalry, though more faithful to their salt, had been reduced by casualties to about 70 fighting men. On the arrival of Mahomed Akber's answer to the General's message, the opportunity was taken of the troops being paraded, to explain to them its purport, and to warn them that every man, who might be discovered deserting, would be shot. At this very time, a Chuprassie of the mission, being caught in the act, was instantly shot, as an example to the rest, by order of the General, and the crime thus received a salutary check. Capt. Mackay, having been chosen to convey to Gen. Sale a fresh order for the evacuation of Jellalabad, was sent over in the evening to the Sirdar with that view. The promises of Mahomed Akber to provide food and fuel were unfulfilled, and another night of starvation and cold consigned more victims to a miserable death.

January 10th. — At break of day all was again confusion, the troops and camp-followers crowding promiscuously to the front, so soon as the orders for a march were given, every one dreading, above all things, to be left in the rear. The European soldiers were now almost the only efficient men left, the Hindoostanees having all suffered more or less from the effects of frost in their hands and feet; few were able even to hold a musket, much less to pull a trigger; in fact, the prolonged delay in the snow had paralysed the mental and bodily powers of the strongest men, rendering them incapable of any useful exertion. Hope seemed to have died in every breast. The wildness of terror was exhibited in every countenance.

The advanced guard (consisting of H. M.'s 44th foot, the sole remaining horse-artillery gun, and about fifty troopers of the 5th cavalry) having managed, with much difficulty, to push their way to the front, proceeded a couple of miles without molestation, as far as a narrow gorge between the precipitous spurs of two hills, through which flowed a small stream. Towards this point numbers of Affghan foot had been observed hurrying, with the evident intention of opposing the passage of the troops, and were now found to occupy the height on the right in considerable force. No sooner did the advance approach within shot, than the enemy, securely perched on their post of vantage, commenced the attack, pouring a destructive fire upon the crowded column, as it slowly drew nigh to the fatal spot. Fresh numbers fell at every volley, and the gorge was soon choked with the dead and dying: the unfortunate Sepoys, seeing no means of escape, and driven to utter desperation, cast away their arms and accoutrements, which only clogged their movements without contributing to their defence, and along with the camp-followers fled for their lives. The Affghans now rushed down upon their helpless and unresisting victims sword in hand, and a general massacre took place. The last small remnant of the Native Infantry regiments were here scattered and destroyed; and the public treasure, with all the remaining baggage, fell into the hands of the enemy. Meanwhile, the advance, after pushing through the Tungee with great loss, had reached Kubbur-i-Jubbar, about five miles ahead, without more opposition. Here they halted to enable the rear to join, but, from the few stragglers who from time to time came up, the astounding truth was brought to light, that, of all who had that morning marched from Khoord-Cabul, they were almost the sole survivors, nearly the whole of the main and rear columns having been cut off and destroyed. About 50 horse artillerymen, with one twelve-pounder howitzer, 70 files H.M.'s 44th, and 150 cavalry troopers, now composed the whole Cabul force; but, notwithstanding the slaughter and dispersion that had taken place, the camp-followers still formed a considerable body.

The approach of a party of Affghan horse induced the General to draw up his little force in line, preparatory to an expected attack; but on its being ascertained to be Mahomed Akber Khan and his followers, Captain Skinner was despatched to remonstrate with him on the attack on our troops, after a treaty had been entered into, and their safety guaranteed.

In reply, he expressed his regret at what had occurred, but said that, notwithstanding all his endeavours, he found it impossible to restrain the Giljies, who were in such a state of excitement as to be beyond the control even of their own chiefs. As a last resource, he recommended that the few remaining troops should lay down their arms, and place themselves entirely under his safeguard, in which case he could ensure their safe escort to Jellalabad; but that as the camp-followers still amounted to some thousands, and far outnumbered his own people, there was no alternative but to leave them to their fate. To these terms the General could not bring himself to consent, and the desperate march was resumed. Here Captain Mackay rejoined the troops, as the Sirdar considered it impossible for him at present to make his way safe to Jellalabad.

About five more miles led down the steep descents of the Huft Kotul, into a narrow defile, or confined bed of a mountain stream.

A ghastly sight here met the eye, the ground being strewn with the bodies of a number of camp-followers, with whom were several wounded officers and soldiers, who, having gone on ahead of the column, were attacked on reaching the foot of the hill, and massacred. The heights commanding the defile (which was about three miles long) were found crowned with the enemy. Mahomed Akber and his train had taken a short cut over the hills to Tezeen, and were followed by the few remaining troopers of the Irregular Cavalry. Dr. Magrath, seeing them take, as he thought, a wrong direction, hastened to recall them, and was taken prisoner by a Giljye chief. In their passage down the defile, a destructive fire was maintained on the troops from the heights on either side, and fresh numbers of dead and wounded lined the course of the stream. Brigadier Shelton commanded the rear with a few Europeans, and but for his persevering energy and unflinching fortitude in repelling the assailants, it is probable the whole would have been there sacrificed.

The diminished remnant reached the encamping ground in the Tezeen valley at about 4 P. M., having lost since starting from Cabul, inclusive of camp-followers, about 12,000 men; no less than 15 officers were killed and wounded in this day's disastrous march.

Although it was now sufficiently plain that Mahomed Akber either could not or would not act up to his friendly professions, the General endeavoured to renew his worse than useless negotiation with that chief, in the faint hope that something might still be done to better the situation of the troops; but Capt. Skinner, who was deputed on the occasion, returned with precisely the same answer as before; and as the General could not in honour accede to his proposal, all hope of aid from that quarter was at an end.

It was now determined to make an effort, under cover of darkness, to reach Jugdulluk, a distance of twenty-two miles, by an early hour on the following morning, the principal object being to get through the strong and dangerous pass of that place, before the enemy should have sufficient notice of their intention, to occupy it in any force. As there existed a short cut from Tezeen to Jugdulluk over the hills, the success of the attempt was very doubtful; but the lives of all depended on the issue; and at 7 P. M. the little band renewed its forlorn and dismal march, word having been previously sent to Mahomed Akber that it was the General's intention to move only as far as Seh Baba, distant seven miles. On moving off, the last gun was abandoned, and with it Dr. Cardew, who had been lashed to it in the hope of saving him. This gentleman had rendered himself conspicuous from the commencement of the siege for his zeal and gallantry, and had become a great favourite with the soldiery in consequence, by whom his hapless fate was sincerely lamented. Dr. Duff, the superintending surgeon of the force, experienced no better fortune, being left in a state of utter exhaustion on the road midway to Seh Baba. Little or no molestation was experienced by the force until reaching Seh Baba, when a few shots being fired at the rear, there was an immediate rush of camp-followers to the front, and the main body of the 44th European soldiers, who had hitherto been well in advance, getting mixed up in the crowd, could not be extricated by withdrawing them to the rear, owing to the narrowness of the road, which now traversed the hills to Burik-àb. Bodies of the neighbouring tribes were by this time on the alert, and fired at random from the heights, it being fortunately too dark for them to aim with precision; but the panic-stricken camp-followers now resembled a herd of startled deer, and fluctuated backwards and forwards, en masse, at every shot, blocking up the entire road, and fatally retarding the progress of the little body of soldiers who, under Brigadier Shelton, brought up the rear.

At Burik-àb a heavy fire was encountered by the hindmost from some caves near the road-side, occasioning fresh disorder, which continued all the way to Kutter-Sung, where the advance arrived at dawn of day, and awaited the junction of the rear, which did not take place till 8 A. M.

January 11th. — The distance from Jugdulluk was still ten miles; the enemy already began to crown the surrounding heights, and it was now evident that the delay occasioned by the camp followers had cut off the last chance of escape.

From Kutter-Sung to Jugdulluk it was one continued conflict; Brigadier Shelton, with his brave little band in the rear, holding overwhelming numbers in check, and literally performing wonders. But no efforts could avail to ward off the withering fire of Juzails, which from all sides assailed the crowded column, lining the road with bleeding carcasses. About 3 P. M. the advance reached Jugdulluk, and took up its position behind some ruined walls that crowned a height by the road-side. To show an imposing front, the officers extended themselves in line, and Capt. Grant, Asst.-Adjt.-Gen., at the same moment received a wound in the face. From this eminence they cheered their comrades under Brigadier Shelton in the rear, as they still struggled their way gallantly along every foot of ground, perseveringly followed up by their merciless enemy, until they arrived at their ground. But even here rest was denied them; for the Affghans, immediately occupying two hills which commanded the position, kept up a fire from which the walls of the enclosure afforded but a partial shelter.

The exhausted troops and followers now began to suffer greatly from thirst, which they were unable to satisfy. A tempting stream trickled near the foot of the hill, but to venture down to it was certain death. Some snow that covered the ground was eagerly devoured, but increased, instead of alleviating, their sufferings. The raw flesh of three bullocks, which had fortunately been saved, was served out to the soldiers, and ravenously swallowed. At about half past three a message having been brought from Mahomed Akber to Capt. Skinner requesting his presence, that officer promptly obeyed the call, hoping thereby, even at the eleventh hour, to effect some arrangement for the preservation of those who survived. The harassed and worn-out troops, in the expectation of a temporary truce during his absence, threw themselves down to snatch a brief repose; but even this much-needed luxury was denied them by their vigilant foes, who now, from their commanding position, poured into the crowded enclosure death-dealing volleys in rapid succession, causing the utmost consternation among the terrified followers, who rushed wildly out in the vain hope of finding shelter from the fire. At this perilous juncture Capt. Bygrave, with about fifteen brave Europeans, sallied forth in the full determination to drive the enemy from the heights, or perish in the attempt. Unflinchingly they charged up the hill, the enemy retreating before them in the greatest trepidation. The respite, however, thus signally gained was of but short duration, for the heroic little band had no sooner returned, than the enemy reoccupied their posts of vantage, and resumed their fatal fire. Thus passed the time until 5 P.M., when Capt. Skinner returned from his interview with Mahomed Akber, bringing a message to the General from that chief, who requested his presence at a conference, and demanded Brigadier Shelton and Capt. Johnson as hostages for the evacuation of Jellalabad. The General, seeing no alternative, made over temporary command to Brigadier Anquetil, and departed with the two above-named officers under the escort of Mahomed Shah Khan. The troops witnessed their departure with despair, having seen enough of Affghan treachery, to convince them that these repeated negotiations were mere hollow artifices, designed to engender confidence in their victims, preparatory to a fresh sacrifice of blood. The General and his companions were received by the Sirdar with every outward token of kindness, and no time was lost in supplying them with the bodily sustenance they so greatly needed; they were likewise assured that immediate arrangements should be made for the supply of food to the famishing troops, and for their safe escort to Jellalabad, after which they were shown into a small tent, to enjoy, for the first time since leaving Khoord-Cabul, a quiet and refreshing sleep.

January 12th. — Numerous Giljye chiefs, with their attendant clansmen, flocked in from the neighbouring parts to pay their homage to Mahomed Akber; and about 9 A. M. a conference was held, at which the three British officers and all the influential chiefs were present. All the latter were loud and profuse in their expressions of bitter hatred against the English, and for a long time the Sirdar's efforts to conciliate them seemed to be unsuccessful; but the offer of two lacs of rupees appeared at last in some measure to appease them, of which sum Mahomed Akber promised to advance one lac himself, and to be security for the other. The day nevertheless wore on without anything decisive having been agreed upon. The General became impatient to rejoin his force, and repeatedly urged the Sirdar to furnish him with the necessary escort, informing him at the same time that it was contrary to British notions of military honour, that a general should be separated from his troops in the hour of danger; and that he would infinitely prefer death to such a disgrace. The Sirdar put him off with promises, and at 7 P. M., firing being heard in the direction of the pass, it was ascertained that the troops, impatient of further delay, had actually moved off. From the time of the General's departure the situation of the troops had been in truth one of dark and cruel suspense, unlightened by one solitary ray of hope. At an early hour in the morning, before the enemy had yet made their appearance on the hills, Major Thain, accompanied by Capt. Skinner, rode out a few hundred paces in the direction of Mahomed Akber's camp, in expectation of meeting a messenger from the Sirdar to the last-named officer; a Giljye soldier suddenly made his appearance, and, passing Major Thain, who was several yards in advance, went close up to Capt. Skinner, and shot him with a pistol through the face. Major Thain instantly returned to camp, and announced this act of treachery. The unfortunate officer was carried inside the enclosure, and lingered in great pain till 3 P. M. In him the state lost an officer of whose varied merits as a soldier and a man it is difficult to speak too highly. A deep feeling of anguish and despair now pervaded the whole assemblage. The extremes of hunger, thirst, and fatigue were suffered alike by all; added to which, the Affghans again crowned the heights and recommenced hostilities, keeping up a galling fire the whole day with scarcely half an hour's intermission. Sally after sally was made by the Europeans, bravely led on by Major Thain, Capt. Bygrave, and Lieuts. Wade and Macartney; but again and again the enemy returned to worry and destroy. Night came, and all further delay in such a place being useless, the whole sallied forth, determined to pursue the route to Jellalabad at all risks.

The sick and wounded were necessarily abandoned to their fate. Descending into the valley of Jugdulluk, they pursued their way along the bed of the stream for about a mile and a half, encountering a desultory fire from the Giljyes encamped in the vicinity, who were evidently not quite prepared to see them at such an hour, but were soon fully on the alert, some following up the rear, others pressing forward to occupy the pass. This formidable defile is about two miles long, exceedingly narrow, and closed in by lofty precipitous heights. The road has a considerable slope upwards, and, on nearing the summit, further progress was found to be obstructed by two strong barriers formed of branches of the prickly holly-oak, stretching completely across the defile. Immense delay and confusion took place in the general struggle to force a passage through these unexpected obstacles, which gave ample time for the Giljyes to collect in force.

A terrible fire was now poured in from all quarters, and a massacre even worse than that of Tunga Tareekie commenced, the Affghans rushing in furiously upon the pent-up crowd of troops and followers, and committing wholesale slaughter. A miserably small remnant managed to clear the barriers. Twelve officers*, amongst whom was Brigadier Anquetil, were killed. Upwards of forty† others succeeded in pushing through, about twelve‡ of whom, being pretty well mounted, rode on ahead of the rest with the few remaining cavalry, intending to make the best of their way to Jellalabad. Small straggling parties of the Europeans marched on under different officers; the country became more open, and they suffered little molestation for several miles, most of the Giljyes being too busily engaged in the plundering of the dead to pursue the living. But much delay was occasioned by the anxiety of the men to bring on their wounded comrades, and the rear was much harassed by sudden onsets from parties stationed on the heights, under which the road occasionally wound. On reaching the Sourkab river, they found the enemy in possession of the bridge, and a hot fire was encountered in crossing the ford below it, by which Lieut. Cadet, H. M.'s 44th, was killed, together with several privates.

January 13th.—The morning dawned as they approached Gundamuk, revealing to the enemy, who had by this time increased considerably in their front and rear, the insignificance of their numerical strength. To avoid the vigorous assaults that were now made by their confident foe, they were compelled to leave the road, and take up a defensive position on a height to the left of it, where they made a resolute stand, determined to sell their lives at the dearest possible price. At this time they could only muster about twenty muskets.

* Appendix.

† Ibid.

‡ Ibid.

Some Affghan horsemen, approaching from the direction of Gundamuk, were now beckoned to, and an attempt was made by Lieut. Hay to enter upon some pacific arrangement. Hostilities were for a few minutes suspended, and, at the invitation of a chief, Major Griffiths, the senior officer, accompanied by Mr. Blewitt to act as interpreter, descended the hill to a conference.

Several Affghans now ascended the height, and assumed a friendly tone towards the little party there stationed; but the calm was of short duration, for the soldiers, getting provoked at several attempts being made to snatch away their arms, resumed a hostile attitude, and drove the intruders fiercely down. The die was now cast, and their fate sealed; for the enemy, taking up their post on an opposite hill, marked off man after man, officer after officer, with unerring aim. Parties of Affghans rushed up at intervals to complete the work of extermination, but were as often driven back by the still dauntless handful of invincibles. At length, nearly all being wounded more or less, a final onset of the enemy, sword in hand, terminated the unequal struggle, and completed the dismal tragedy. Major Griffiths and Mr. Blewitt had been previously led off to a neighbouring fort, and were thus saved. Of those whom they left behind, Captain Souter alone, with three or four privates, was spared, and carried off captive, having received a severe wound in the shoulder; he had tied round his waist before leaving Jugdulluk the colours of his regiment, which were thus miraculously preserved.

It only remains to relate the fate of those few officers and men, who rode on ahead of the rest after passing the barriers. Six of the twelve officers, Capts. Bellew, Collier, Hopkins, Lieut. Bird, Drs. Harpur and Brydon, reached Futtehabad in safety, the other six having dropped gradually off by the way and been destroyed. Deceived by the friendly professions of some peasants near the above-named town, who brought them bread to eat, they unwisely delayed a few moments to satisfy the cravings of hunger; the inhabitants meanwhile armed themselves, and, suddenly sallying forth, cut down Capt. Bellew and Lieut. Bird; Capts. Collyer and Hopkins, and Drs. Harpur and Brydon, rode off, and were pursued; the three former were overtaken and slain within four miles of Jellalabad; Dr. Brydon by a miracle escaped, and was the only officer of the whole Cabul force, who reached that garrison in safety.

Such was the memorable retreat of the British army from Cabul, which, viewed in all its circumstances,—in the military conduct which preceded and brought about such a consummation, the treachery, disaster, and suffering which accompanied it, — is, perhaps, without a parallel in history.

CHAPTER I

THE first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the train at the station was the cold. It was a sharp contrast to the warm, humid air of the city I had just left. The station was a large, ornate building with a high ceiling and a vaulted roof. The air inside was stale and the floor was polished to a mirror shine. I looked around at the people waiting for their trains. Some were standing in long lines, while others were sitting on the benches. I felt a little out of place among them. I was a stranger in a strange land.

I had heard that the city was beautiful, but I didn't know what to expect. The people were friendly, but I could tell they were used to a different way of life. I was a little nervous, but I decided to give it a try.

I had heard that the city was beautiful, but I didn't know what to expect. The people were friendly, but I could tell they were used to a different way of life. I was a little nervous, but I decided to give it a try.

I had heard that the city was beautiful, but I didn't know what to expect. The people were friendly, but I could tell they were used to a different way of life. I was a little nervous, but I decided to give it a try. I had heard that the city was beautiful, but I didn't know what to expect. The people were friendly, but I could tell they were used to a different way of life. I was a little nervous, but I decided to give it a try. I had heard that the city was beautiful, but I didn't know what to expect. The people were friendly, but I could tell they were used to a different way of life. I was a little nervous, but I decided to give it a try.

ROUGH NOTES

DURING

IMPRISONMENT IN AFFGHANISTAN.

EDITOR'S NOTICE.

THE following "rough notes" will be found a very interesting sequel to the foregoing narrative. They are strictly what they profess to be — penned in haste, to be despatched when opportunity should serve, as perhaps the last proof of his existence, which the writer might give his friends for many a day. How narrowly the Cabul prisoners did at last escape an indefinitely prolonged captivity, is known to all. And now that a gracious Providence has so restored them, it is hoped that the Author will, at a future opportunity, be enabled to add more particulars of an every-day life with such a party in an Affghan prison, and to fill up the gap which necessarily now remains between the 29th of June, when these Notes break off, and the 21st of September, on which happy day they again breathed the air of freedom.

ROUGH NOTES

DURING

IMPRISONMENT IN AFFGHANISTAN,

1842.

January 9th.—IN my notes on the retreat of the British force from Cabul, I have already mentioned the departure, from Gen. Elphinstone's camp at Khoord-Cabul, of the ladies, with their husbands and other officers, to the proffered protection of Mahomed Akber Khan; but it may be expedient briefly to remind the reader of the mode in which this event was brought about. I have been assured by Major Pottinger that, on the night of the 8th, the Sirdar, having spontaneously entered on the subject, expressed to that officer his serious apprehensions of the peril to which the ladies and children would be exposed by remaining in camp (it being impossible to restrain the Giljyes from a continuance of hostilities), and that, with a view to prevent further misery and suffering to the individuals in question, he should lose no time in proposing to the General that all the ladies and married families might be made over to his care, for safe escort to Jellalabad, keeping one march in rear of the army. Major Pottinger having declared his entire approval of the Sirdar's humane intentions, advantage was taken of Capt. Skinner's return to camp on the following morning, to make known the proposal to Gen. Elphinstone; and a small party of Affghan horse was sent with him, to escort all such as might be able to avail themselves of the offer. The General, hoping that so signal a mark of confidence in Mahomed Akber's good faith, might be attended with beneficial results to the army, and anxious at all events to save the ladies from a prolongation of the hardships they had already endured, readily consented to the arrangement; and, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, deemed it incumbent on him to send their husbands also, more especially as some were helpless from severe wounds. The whole ^a were

^a Lady Macnaghten, Lady Sale *,
Mrs. Sturt, her daughter,
Capt. Boyd, wife, and child,
Capt. Anderson, ditto, ditto, accordingly ordered to depart immediately with the Affghan escort, by whom we were impatiently hurried off, before the majority had been made clearly to comprehend the reason of their being so suddenly separated from their companions in trouble. At that time so little confidence was placed by any of us in Mahomed Akber's plausible professions, that it seemed as though we were but too probably rushing from a state of comparative safety into the very jaws of destruction; but, placing our dependence on a watchful Providence, we bade a hasty, and as it proved to many, an eternal, farewell to our friends, and mournfully followed our conductors to the place allotted for our reception, about two miles distant from camp. The road lay through ravines and wilds of the most savage description, one universal garb of snow clothing the dreary and uninviting scene. On the way we passed seve-

Lieut. Waller *, ditto, ditto,
 Lieut. Eyre *, ditto, ditto,
 Mr. Ryley, ditto, ditto,
 Mrs. Trevor and seven children,
 Mrs. Mainwaring and child,
 Capt. Troup *,
 Lieut. Mein *,
 Serjt. Wade and family.

N.B. Those marked thus * were wounded.

ral hundred Giljye horse drawn up in line, as if in readiness for an attack on the camp. Half an hour's ride brought us to a small fort perched on the edge of a precipitous bank, which we ascended by a slanting slippery path, and entered the gate with a mistrust by no means diminished by the ferocious looks of the garrison, amidst a circle of whom some of us were kept standing for several minutes, during which our sensations were far from agreeable. At last, however, we were shown into a small inner court, where, to our great relief, we found our three countrymen, Major Pottinger, and Capts. Mackenzie and Lawrence, who had been made over as hostages at Bootkhak, and in the midst of whom sat, to the inexpressible joy of his parents, the youngest boy of Capt. and Mrs. Boyd, who, having been picked up in the Khoord-Cabul pass on the previous day by one of Mahomed Akber's followers, had been committed by that chief to Major Pottinger's protection. The accommodation provided for us, though the best the place afforded, was of the most humble description, consisting of three small dark hovels, into which ladies and gentlemen were promiscuously crowded together, the bachelors being, however, separate from the married families. But even this state of things was heaven itself compared with the cold and misery we had been suffering in camp on the bare snow, and we felt most thankful for the change. The courtyard was all day crowded with the friends and relations of Mahomed Akber, whose bearing towards us was exceedingly kind and courteous; but their presence obliged the ladies to remain closely immured in their dark cells. In the course of the afternoon the chief himself made his appearance, and, having requested an interview with Lady Macnaghten, expressed to that lady his sorrow at having been instrumental to her present misfortunes, and his desire to contribute to her comfort as long as she remained his guest. But an Affghan nobleman's ideas of comfort fall very far short of an English peasant's; and we soon learned to consider spoons, forks, and other table gear as effeminate luxuries, and plunged our fingers unhesitatingly into the depths of a greasy pilao, for which several of us scrambled out of one common dish. The warmth of a wood * fire, though essential to protect us from the severe extremes of cold, could only be enjoyed at the expense of being blinded and half stifled by the smoke; the bare ground was our only bed, and postheens (or sheepskin cloaks) our only covering; but these and various other inconveniences were indeed of small moment, when weighed in the balance against the combination of horrors we had escaped, and which still encompassed our unhappy countrymen and fellow soldiers in camp.

* The Affghans are in many parts of the country almost entirely dependent for fuel on a species of Artemisia, or southernwood, which grows everywhere in the greatest profusion, and scents the whole atmosphere with its powerful fragrance.

January 11th.—At about 11 A. M. we started, under an escort of about 50 horse, for Tezeen, having been previously cautioned to use our swords and pistols in case of need, as an attack might be expected from the bloodthirsty Ghazees, who thronged the road. The retreating army had marched over the same ground on the previous day, and terrible was the spectacle presented to our eyes along the whole line of road: the snow was absolutely dyed with streaks and patches of blood for whole miles, and at every step we encountered the mangled bodies of British and Hindoostanee soldiers, and helpless camp-followers, lying side by side, victims of one treacherous undistinguishing fate, the red stream of life still trickling from many a gaping wound inflicted by the merciless Affghan knife. Here and there small groups of miserable, starving, and frost-bitten wretches, among whom were many women and children, were still permitted to cling to life, perhaps only because death would in their case have been a mercy. The bodies of Majors Scott and Ewart, and of Dr. Bryce, were recognized. Numerous parties of truculent Ghazees, the chief perpetrators of these horrors, passed us laden with booty, their naked swords still reeking with the blood of their victims. They uttered deep curses and sanguinary threats at our party, and seemed disappointed that so many of the hated Feringhees should have been suffered to survive. We reached Tezeen, a distance of sixteen miles, at close of day, where the fort of Mahomed Khan received us for the night. Here we found Lieut. Melville of the 54th N.I., who had delivered himself up to Mahomed Akber on the previous day, having received some slight sword cuts in defending the colours of his regiment. We were also sorry to see no less than 400 of our irregular Hindoostanee horse encamped outside the fort, having deserted to the enemy on the 9th and 10th. They belonged chiefly to Anderson's horse and the body-guard.

January 12th.—At 10 A. M. we again proceeded on our journey down the Tezeen valley preceded by the cavalry deserters. At Seh Baba, striking off from the high road, which here crosses some hills to the right, we kept our course along the stream *, to the fort of Surroobee, a distance of sixteen miles. Between Tezeen and Seh Baba we encountered the same horrifying sights as yesterday; we passed the last abandoned horse-artillery gun, the carriage of which had been set on fire by the Ghazees, and was still burning; the corpse of poor Cardew lay stretched beside it, with several of the artillery men. A little further on we passed the body of Dr. Duff, the superintending surgeon to the force, whose left hand had suffered previous amputation with a pen-knife by Dr. Harcourt! Numbers of worn-out and famished camp-followers were lying under cover of the rocks, within whose crevices they vainly sought a shelter from the cold. By many of these poor wretches we were recognized, and vainly invoked for the food and raiment we were unable to supply. The fate of these unfortunates was a sad subject of reflection to us, — death in its most horrid and protracted form stared them in the face; and the agonies of despair were depicted in every countenance. The fort of Surroobee belongs to Abdoolah Khan, Giljye. Near Seh Baba we were overtaken by Dr. Macgrath of the 37th N. I., who had been taken prisoner on the 10th, and was now sent to join our party; we were thus unexpectedly furnished with medical assistance, of which the sick and wounded had sorely felt the want.

* I have not particularised the features of such portions of the high road as we traversed, because they were already well known.

January 13th. — Resuming our march at 10 A. M., we crossed the hills in a south-east direction towards Jugdulluk. The road in many places was very steep, and for several miles traversed a high table-land, presenting no signs of cultivation or human propinquity. Within about five miles of Jugdulluk, we again entered the high road, along which our army had recently passed; and the first sight that presented itself was the body of a fine European soldier:— Again our path was strewn with the mangled victims of war.— We reached Jugdulluk late in the evening; and, passing by the ruined inclosure within which the remnant of the force had so hopelessly sought shelter, we beheld a spectacle more terrible than any we had previously witnessed, the whole interior space being one crowded mass of bloody corpses. The carnage here must have been frightful. The body of Capt. Skinner was recognized, and an Affghan was persuaded by Capt. Lawrence to inter it during the night, Mahomed Akber's consent having been previously procured. About two hundred yards below this fatal spot we found three ragged tents pitched for our reception, Ma-homed Akber Khan being encamped hard by ; and we now learned for the first time that Gen. Elphinstone, Brigadier Shelton, and Capt. Johnson, were hostages in his hands, the rest of the force having been annihilated. Mr. Fallon, an assistant in one of the public offices, had also been taken prisoner at the same time.

January 14th. — Shortly after sunrise we pursued our journey, accompanied by Akber Khan, with his hostages, or rather prisoners, and about 600 horse, of whom the Hindoostanee deserters formed a part. The road took a northerly direction up a gorge in the hills, and thence proceeded for five or six miles up a narrow defile, through which runs a small stream whose upper surface was covered with ice. Throughout these regions of snow the cold was intense, and we passed several springs whose waters, arrested by the frost, hung suspended in long glittering icicles from the rocks, exhibiting a spectacle whose brilliancy would, under less depressing circumstances, have called forth exclamations of wonder and admiration, which we had not now the heart to utter. After clearing this defile, our course became somewhat easterly, through a more open country, and over a tolerably good road, for four or five miles, when we entered another short defile leading over a rocky ghat, after surmounting which the road again improved, until we reached the steep and difficult pass of Udruk-budruk. The ascent was about 1000 feet, up a narrow winding path, which, from the sharp and jagged nature of the rocks, scarcely afforded a practicable footing for our horses and camels. From the summit we had an extensive view of the country to the north, bounded by lofty snow-clad hills, the intervening space being broken up into innumerable ravines, whose barren surface was unrelieved by a single tree, the only signs of vegetable life being confined to the banks of the Cabul river, which partially fertilised the narrow valley immediately below us. The descent into this plain, down the rugged mountain side, was infinitely more tedious, and attended with greater peril, than the previous ascent, our jaded beasts threatening to cast their riders with violence on the rocks at every step. It was dark ere we reached the fort of Kutz, after a fatiguing journey of twenty-four miles, which had occupied no less than ten hours. This place belongs to Mahomed Ali Khan, Giljye, and is situated near the right bank of the Punjsheer river. Although the clouds threatened rain, we were refused admittance within the walls, and were consequently obliged to repose in the open air, exposed the whole night to a high cutting wind. Fortunately we had now descended into a milder climate, or the poor ladies and children must have suffered severely. At midnight we were roused up by the arrival of our daily meals, consisting of half-baked cakes of unleavened bread, and untempting lumps of tough mutton; but our servants had by this time prepared us some hot tea, which was far more satisfactory to wearied travellers than the solid fare of Affghan cooks.

January 15th. — At an early hour we were again on the move, and a few hundred yards brought us to the Cabul river, which at the ford was divided into two branches, the last extremely rapid, and the water reaching up to our saddle-girths; many of the ladies, being mounted on ponies, were obliged to dismount, and ride astride on the chargers of their Affghan acquaintance, to avoid getting wet. Nothing could exceed the politeness and attention of Mahomed Akber on this occasion, who manifested the greatest anxiety until all had crossed over in safety. Several men and ponies were swept down by the violence of the current and drowned; a whole host of camp dogs, whose masters had been slain, and who had attached themselves to us, remaining on the other side, to our great relief. — Our course was now north-easterly, over a barren undulating country, for about ten miles, until we reached the fertile valley of Lughmanee, at the border of which we crossed a wide and rapid stream; the whole plain beyond was thickly studded with small high-walled forts and villages, by whose inhabitants we were greeted, en passant, in no measured terms of abuse, in which exercise of speech the fair sex, I am sorry to say, bore a conspicuous part, pronouncing the English ladies not only immoral in character, but downright "scarecrows" in appearance, and the gentlemen, "dogs," "base-born," "infidels," "devils," with many other unpronounceable titles equally complimentary, the whole being wound up with an assurance of certain death to our whole party ere many hours should elapse.

We also passed within a mile of a plain white building on our left, which was pointed out as the tomb of Lamech the father of Noah, and a favourite place of pilgrimage with the Affghans. At about 3 P.M. we reached the walled town of Turghurree, within which we found lodging, after a march of about sixteen miles. We found the Affghan gentry most agreeable travelling companions, possessing a ready fund of easy conversation and pleasantry, with a certain rough polish and artless independence of manner, which, compared with the studied servility and smooth-tongued address of the Hindoostanee nobles, seldom fails to impress our countrymen in their favour.

January 16th. — We were well pleased to find that a day's halt had been determined upon, which was no less acceptable for the needful rest it secured for man and beast, than for the opportunity it afforded us of performing our Sabbath devotions, which, under present circumstances, could not fail to be a source of more than ordinary comfort. Some disturbance was occasioned during the day by a party of Giljyes threatening to attack the town, and a few shots were exchanged from both sides, by which two or three men were said to have been killed. The affray was believed to have originated in discontent at the division of the spoil of our army. This place has a small bazar, and many poor wanderers from our camp were permitted to take refuge within the walls, where a meal was dealt out to them daily by some charitable Hindoo residents.

January 17th. — The Sirdar's intention had been to keep us at Turghurree for several days; but, owing to the hostile spirit evinced towards us by the populace, he was obliged to hurry us away. At 11 A. M. we accordingly resumed our journey, under a guard of about 200 Juzailchees, whom it had been necessary to collect for our protection. Crowds of Affghans lined the walls to witness our departure, and some of our small remains of baggage fell a prey to the insatiable love of plunder, for which the Giljyes are notorious. Many of our Hindoostanee servants, who had hitherto followed our fortunes, now left us, under the idea that the Sirdar had decided upon our destruction. We pursued a north-easterly course along the valley, passing numerous forts, and at 2 A.M. reached Buddeeabad, a distance of eight miles, where one of the chief strongholds of Mahomed Shah Khan, Gyljye, had been vacated for our reception. The accommodation provided for us here was better than we had hitherto experienced. The fort was of a square form, each face about 80 yards long, with walls 25 feet high, and a flanking tower at each corner. It was further defended by a faussebray and deep ditch all round, the front gate being on the south-west face, and the postern on the north-east, each defended by a tower or bastion. The Zuna-Khaneh, or private dwelling, occupied two sides of a large square space in the centre, shut in by a high wall, each wing containing three apartments raised about eight feet from the ground, and the outer side of the principal room, consisting entirely of a wooden framework, divided into five compartments, with ornamented panels in each, made to slide up and down at pleasure. All the better sort of houses in the country have the chief rooms constructed in this manner, which is better adapted for the summer than the winter season, as it admits of a free circulation of air, but is an insufficient barrier against the cold. There was no supply of water inside the fort, but a small river ran past, at the distance of half a mile on the south-east side, and a little stream or canal about 100 yards outside the walls. It is singular that few Affghan forts have wells, notwithstanding the general abundance of water near the surface in all the cultivated valleys; and it would, generally speaking, be very easy to cut off the external supply of that necessary element, thus forcing the garrison to surrender without expending a shot. This fort is quite new, having been built since our occupation of the country. The owner, Mahomed Shah Khan, is father-in-law of Mahomed Akber Khan, and is one of the few chiefs who never deigned to acknowledge Shah Shooja. Insatiable avarice and ambition are his ruling passions, and, as our conquest put an end to his promising schemes of aggrandisement, his hatred towards us is intense. Unhappily he exercised great influence over his son-in-law, of whose cause in fact he was the chief supporter; and he was generally admitted to have been the principal instigator to the treacherous seizure of our envoy, for whose murder, however, which was committed in the heat and impulse of the moment, he is not answerable. Mahomed Akber and his cousin Sultan Mahomed Khan, familiarly called Sultan Jan, accompanied us to Buddeeabad, where they endeavoured to arrange matters for our comfort to the utmost of their power. Sultan Jan is eminently handsome, proportionately vain, and much given to boasting. Both he and the Sirdar were equally kind and courteous; but the latter is in manner a more perfect gentleman, and never, like his cousin, indulges in comparisons to the disadvantage of the English, of whom he invariably speaks with candour and respect.

The Sirdar has been completely baulked in his plans by the refusal of Gen. Sale to vacate Jellalabad, on which he had by no means calculated; even now he could not be persuaded that an order from Major Pottinger would not be obeyed by Capt. Macgregor, the political authority there, although the Major constantly assured him that with us a prisoner, however exalted his rank, not being considered a free agent, has no power or control over any public officers of government, however much his inferiors in rank and station. I have no doubt his hope was that General Sale, yielding to the apparent necessities of the case, would have vacated the town and forthwith retreated to Peshawur, in which case he made pretty sure of the assistance of the Khyberries, in completing the annihilation of the British force.

January 18th. — Mahomed Akber and Sultan Jan departed, with the professed object of attempting the reduction of Jellalabad, and apparently very confident of success. — As we remained immured in the fort of Buddeeabab until the 11th of April, I can scarcely expect that a minute detail of daily occurrences during that period would interest the reader. It would be equally idle to note down the various reports that reached us from time to time of passing events. The Affghans excel all the world in the ready fabrication of falsehoods, and those about us were interested in keeping us in the dark as much as possible. Nevertheless the truth could not always be concealed, and we managed, notwithstanding all their vigilance, to obtain pretty accurate intelligence of what was passing in the world without, though of course it was difficult entirely to separate the wheat from the chaff. On our first arrival we suffered some inconvenience from the want of clean linen, having in our transit from fort to fort been much pestered by vermin, of which, after they had once established a footing, it was by no means an easy matter to rid ourselves. The first discovery of a real living l-o-u-s-e was a severe shock to our fine sense of delicacy; but custom reconciles folk to anything, and even the ladies eventually mustered up resolution to look one of these intruders in the face without a scream. The management of our household matters, as well as the duty of general surveillance, was committed to a Mehmandar, who generally took advantage of his temporary authority to feather his own nest, by defrauding us in respect to the quality and quantity of our needful supplies. Moossa Khan was the first agent of this kind with whom we had to deal; and he was so little restrained by scruples, as to pass for a most consummate rogue even among Affghans. For mere ordinary civility the unfortunate widow of the murdered envoy found it her interest to repay him with costly presents of Cashmere shawls, &c., and was twice induced to pay twenty rupees for the recovery of a favourite cat, which Moossa Khan had actually stolen from her himself, for the sake of the expected reward. This man was, nevertheless, much trusted by Mahomed Akber, who valued him no less for his capacity for intrigue, than for his unscrupulous zeal in the performance of the meanest or wickedest purposes. Such a coadjutor could not long be spared from his master's side in attendance upon us, and he was accordingly relieved on the 20th January, for the purpose of carrying on intrigues against the British with the leading chieftains of the Punjab. His successor was an old acquaintance of Capt. Troup, named Meerza Bawndeen Khan, who in peaceful times styled himself Synd, but now for a time sunk his religious distinction in the more warlike title of Khan. This man had, at the outbreak of the rebellion, been imprisoned on suspicion of favouring the English, but was released immediately on the arrival of Mahomed Akber, whom he had befriended during that chief's confinement at Bokhara, and to whose fortune he now attached himself. His manners were exceedingly boorish, and he took little pains to render himself agreeable, though, from his previous conduct, there was reason to believe that, under all his roughness of exterior, there lurked a secret preference for our cause. In most respects we certainly benefited by the change.

On the 21st we had rain, and on the 22d snow fell on the neighbouring hills.

On the 23d there was snow in the fort itself, a proof of the unusual severity of the winter, being quite a rare occurrence in this valley.

We had hitherto received our food at the hands of Affghan cooks, who little consulted the delicacy of the European palate. Our daily diet consisted of boiled rice, mutton boiled to rags, and thick cakes of unleavened dough ; which, for ladies and children, was not the most enviable fare, whilst the irregular hours at which it was served up interfered greatly with our own comforts. It was now arranged, however, greatly to the satisfaction of all concerned, that our meals should be prepared by our own Hindoostanee servants, the Affghans furnishing materials.

We had a visit from the Sirdar and Sultan Jan on the 23d, the chief having his head quarters at present at Trighurree, where he was making preparations for the siege of Jellalabad. Major Pottinger, at his request, wrote a letter to Capt. Macgregor, explaining all that had occurred since the army left Cabul.

On the 24th, the Sirdar, having heard that we were much in want of money, sent 1000 rupees to be distributed among us.

On the 27th, he paid us another visit, his principal object being to induce Major Pottinger to make some alterations in the letter for Capt. Macgregor.

January 29th. — This day was rendered a joyous and eventful one to us, by the arrival from Jellalabad of a budget of letters and newspapers from our brother officers there garrisoned, who had likewise generously subscribed a quantity of clothes and other comforts from their little store for our use. It was truly gratifying to receive these proofs of sympathy from our countrymen, and to have a door of communication opened once more with the civilised world. Some of our friends managed to inform us of all that was going on, by dotting off letters of the alphabet in the newspapers, which is an easy mode of carrying on secret correspondence, and not likely to be detected by an Asiatic. In this manner we became acquainted with Brigadier Wild's failure in the Khyber pass, and with General Pollock's march from India: we also heard now for the first time that Dr. Brydon had reached Jellalabad alive, being the only officer who escaped out of the whole army which had left Cabul. Captains Collyer and Hopkins, with Dr. Harpur, were found dead within four miles of the town of Jellalabad. It is said that, one of the ill-fated trio having been wounded, the remaining two went back to his assistance; but for which act of charity they would probably have been saved. It is singular that Dr. Brydon was mounted on a miserable pony, and seemed, humanly speaking, one of the most unlikely persons of the whole force to effect so wonderful an escape. Capt. Bellew, Lieut. Bird, and 2 or 3 other officers, with several European soldiers, were killed near Futtehabad, having imprudently delayed at a village to satisfy the cravings of hunger, and thus given the inhabitants time to arm themselves and overpower them.

They had been without any food for seven days

February 15th.—The tedium of a prison life was again relieved to-day by the arrival of Abdool Guffoor Khan and Dost Mahomed Khan from the Sirdar, bringing with them Major Griffiths of 37th N. I. and Mr. Blewitt, a clerk of the pay office, both of whom, with the Sergt.-Major of the 37th N. I., were taken prisoners at Gundamuk, after witnessing the massacre of almost all the officers and men who reached that place. Capt. Souter, H. M. 44th regiment, was led off at the same time by another chief, having preserved the colours of his regiment by tying them round his waist. The Sergt.-Major was so fortunate as to be set at liberty on the payment of certain rupees as a ransom, and a similar arrangement was on the point of being made for the release of Major Griffiths and Mr. Blewitt, when they were demanded by Mahomed Akber, and unwillingly delivered up by their captor. Major Griffiths had received a severe wound in the arm from a bullet. We were also delighted to learn that Capt. Bygrave, paymaster to the force, was safe, and would soon join us.

By command of Mahomed Akber we were this day ordered to deliver up our arms, which we had hitherto been permitted to retain. The cause of this was declared to be the discovery of a clandestine correspondence, carried on between Major Pottinger and Capt. Macgregor, which had so much displeased the Sirdar, that he sent a solemn warning to the Major to desist from such practices in future, significantly reminding him of the tragical fate of Sir William Nacnaghten. Major Pottinger boldly acknowledged the fact of his having written privately to Jellalabad, and justified it on the plea that he had given no promise to the Sirdar to refrain from so doing. By Abdool Guffoor Khan we again enjoyed the gratification of receiving letters from our friends at Jellalabad. This chief was supposed to be friendly to our interests, having materially assisted Gen. Sale with supplies for his force. He was evidently much suspected by the Affghans about us, who maintained a strict watch over every word he uttered during his visit.

February 15th. — Captain Souter joined us to-day, having been made over to the Sirdar by the chief who captured him.

February 19th. — On the 6th, we had a heavy fall of rain, since which the weather had become exceedingly close. This morning it was remarked that an unusual degree of heat and stillness pervaded the air. Whether these were premonitory symptoms of what was shortly to happen it is impossible to determine; but at 11 A. M. we were suddenly alarmed by a violent rocking of the earth, which momentarily increased to such a degree that we could with difficulty maintain our balance. Large masses of the lofty walls that encompassed us fell in on all sides with a thundering crash; a loud subterraneous rumbling was heard, as of a boiling sea of liquid lava, and wave after wave seemed to lift up the ground on which we stood, causing every building to rock to and fro like a floating vessel. After the scenes of horror we had recently witnessed, it seemed as if the hour of retribution had arrived, and that Heaven designed to destroy the blood-stained earth at one fell swoop. The dwelling in which we lodged was terribly shaken, and the room inhabited by Lady Sale fell in, — her ladyship, who happened to be standing on the roof just above it, having barely time to escape. Most providentially, all the ladies, with their children, made a timely rush into the open air at the commencement of the earthquake, and entirely escaped injury. Gen. Elphinstone, being bedridden, was for several moments in a precarious position, from which he was rescued by the intrepidity of his servant Moore, a private of H. M. 44th, who rushed into his room and carried him forth in his arms. — The poor General, notwithstanding all that had occurred to cloud his fame, was greatly beloved by the soldiery, of whom there were few who would not have acted in a similar manner to save his life. — The quaking continued for several minutes with unabated violence, and a slight tremor in the earth was perceptible throughout the remainder of the day. The Affghans were, for the time being, overwhelmed with terror; for, though slight shocks of earthquake are of common occurrence every year during the cold season, none so fearful as this had visited the country within the memory of the present generation. We shortly learned that our fort had been singularly favoured, almost every other fort in the valley having been laid low, and many inhabitants destroyed in the ruins. The town of Turghurree especially seems to have suffered severely, scarcely a house being left standing, and several hundreds of people having been killed in the fall.

The first idea that struck the Affghans, after their fears had subsided, was, that the defences of Jellalabad must have been levelled to the ground, and a high road made for the Sirdar and his followers to walk in. Elevated by this hope, they confidently attributed the late phænomenon to a direct interposition of the Prophet in their favour.

We all passed the night in the open air, being afraid to trust the tottering walls of our habitation, especially as shocks of earthquake continued to occur almost every hour, some of which were rather severe.

February 21st.—The swords of Gen. Elphinstone and Brigadier Shelton were this day returned to them by order of the Sirdar.

February 23d.—Capt. Bygrave joined us in a very weak state, having suffered much from frost in one foot, and having entirely lost the ends of his toes. His adventures, after leaving Jugdulluk, were perilous, and his ultimate escape wonderful. After starting from Jugdulluk on the night of the 12th January, he was one of the first to surmount the strong barriers of prickly holly-oak which choked the pass. Collecting a small party of the men, who were similarly fortunate, he harangued them on the absolute necessity of their holding firmly together in the bond of discipline, for the preservation of their lives, declaring his willingness to lead them, if they would only obey orders, and act with spirit adequate to the emergency. The men, thus addressed, set up a loud cheer, and protested their intention to be guided solely by his commands and wishes. For three or four miles they steadily kept their ranks, and held the pursuing enemy at bay; but at length the repeated onsets of the Affghan horsemen, who every moment increased in number in their rear, threw the little band into confusion, which Capt. Bygrave exerted himself in vain to remedy. The men would neither hold together, nor pursue their march with that steadiness of purpose, on which hung their only chance of safety. Capt. Bygrave, at length finding all his efforts to save them unavailing, and foreseeing the inevitable destruction of the whole party, determined, as a last resource, to strike off the high road and endeavour to make his way over the hills to Jellalabad. Mr. Baness, an enterprising merchant, who had become involved in the difficulties that beset our army, was induced to accompany him in this hazardous undertaking. Their course for the first few miles was altogether north, in order to get as far as possible from the track of the pursuing Giljyes: by day they sought close cover — now among long rushes in the low bed of a mountain stream, and now under the thick foliage of evergreen shrubs on the summit of some lofty snow-clad peak. Their sole subsistence was a few dry grains of coffee, of which Mr. Baness had a small supply in his pocket, with an occasional bit of wild liquorice root, which they fortunately discovered growing in the bed of the Soorkab river. Travelling entirely at night, they experienced great difficulties in steering a direct course among the tortuosities of the innumerable ravines, which everywhere intersected their desultory track; on one occasion they found themselves suddenly upon the high road, where the first sight that offered itself was the mangled body of an European soldier; and, fearing to proceed along a path so lately beset with enemies, they were obliged to avoid the danger by retracing their steps for many miles. Thus passed four wearisome nights and days, during which time Capt. Bygrave, with frost-bitten feet, and worn-out shoes, had suffered so much from lameness, as to become more and more incapable of progressing; until at last, in the extreme of weakness and misery, having declared to Mr. Baness his inability to proceed further, he endeavoured to persuade that gentleman to seek with him the nearest village, and throw themselves on the protection of a chief. Mr. Baness would not, however, consent to run such hazard, and declared his intention to pursue his course to Jelalabad, if possible. Loth, however, to forsake his companion, he urged him unavailingly to fresh exertion; and at length, declaring that for the sake of his large family he was bound to proceed onward without delay, he took a mournful leave of his fellow-traveller, and, after twice returning in the forlorn hope of prevailing on him to move, departed on his solitary way. Left to himself, under such helpless circumstances, Capt. Bygrave almost yielded to despair, — but, after a prolonged slumber, found himself strong enough to walk, or rather crawl, a few miles further. The second night after Mr. Baness's departure brought him to a Giljye village*, where, lying concealed till morning under some straw in a cave, he gave himself up to the first person who came near, who, being easily conciliated by the offer of some gold, conducted him to a neighbouring hut; — hence, after partaking of some refreshment, he was led to the residence of the chief of the village, Nizam Khan, who received him hospitably, and treated him with the utmost kindness for several days, when he was delivered up to the Sirdar, then encamped at Charbagh, in the neighbourhood of Jellalabad. There he found the chief actively employed in preparing gun-ammunition for the proposed siege; several of our captured guns were there, from which the Affghan smiths managed to extract the spikes in a very few hours.

March 3d. — Severe shocks of earthquake every day. The Meerza, professing to have received an order from the Sirdar, insisted on searching the boxes of Lady Macnaghten and Capt. Lawrence. Unfortunately, the former had a great number of valuable Cashmere shawls, all of which were critically examined in order to ascertain their probable worth: but much disappointment was evinced that no jewels were forthcoming, as it was generally believed that her ladyship possessed a large assortment. Nothing was taken from her on this occasion; but it might easily be foreseen that such booty would ere long prove an irresistible temptation to our Giljye friends.

* Kutch Soorkab, four miles north of Gundamuk.

A cruel scene took place after this, in the expulsion from the fort of all the unfortunate Hindoostanees, whose feet had been crippled by the frost. The limbs of many of these poor wretches had completely withered, and had become as black as a coal; the feet of others had dropped off from the ankle; and all were suffering such excruciating torture as it is seldom the lot of man to witness. Yet the unmerciful Giljyes, regardless of their sufferings, dragged them forth along the rough ground, to perish miserably in the fields, without food or shelter, or the consolations of human sympathy. The real author of these atrocities was generally believed to be the owner of the fort, Mahomed Shah Khan. The Meerza, however, though compelled to carry the order into effect, re-admitted several of the unfortunate victims at night.

March 10th.—In consequence of the repeated earthquakes, we deserted the house, and took up our abode in some small wooden huts constructed by our servants. To-night our slumber was broken by loud cries of "Murder!" which were found to proceed from Lady Sale's Hindoostanee ayah, whom one of her admirers, in a fit of jealousy, had attempted to strangle in her sleep. The wretch, failing in his purpose, jumped over the wall, which was about twenty feet high, and, being discovered in the morning, narrowly escaped a hanging by Lynch law at the hands of the Meerza, who was with difficulty persuaded to alter his sentence to banishment from the fort.

March 11th.—Dost Mahomed Khan, accompanied by Imam Verdi, arrived from the Sirdar, and held a long private conference with Major Pottinger. It was generally supposed that Mahomed Akber had made some overtures to the Indian government relative to the return of the Ameer his father. Reports were in circulation of the fall of Ghuznee, which afterwards proved too true. We also learned on good authority that Khoda Bux Khan, a powerful Giljye chief, had left the Sirdar, whose cause seemed on the decline.

March 12th. — Very heavy rain. Heard of Gen. Sale's sortie from Jellalabad in consequence of a supposed attempt on the part of the Affghans to mine the walls; — many of the enemy killed.

March 13th. — A report abroad, which turned out true, that the Sirdar was wounded in the left arm by one of his own followers, who had been bribed with a lac of rupees by Shah Shooja. The assassin was ripped open, according to Affghan custom in such cases.

March 18th. — The Meerza was this day recalled by the Sirdar, and his place filled by the Nazir of Mahomed Shah Khan, Saleh Mahomed. We heard of the murder of Shah Shooja by the hand of Shooja Dowla, eldest son of Nuwab Zeman Khan, who shot the unfortunate old king with a double-barrelled gun, as they were proceeding together to the royal camp at Seah Sung. It is a curious fact that Shah Shooja was present at the birth of his murderer, to whom he gave his own name on the occasion.

March 21st. — The inhabitants of this valley are said to be removing their families and property to the hills for safety. The Safees, a mountain tribe in the neighbourhood, were said to have created much alarm, having been bought over by Capt. Macgregor.

March 24th.—The Nazir endeavoured to find out what amount of ransom was likely to be paid for us, and gave out that two lacs of rupees would be accepted. This, however, seemed to us all a mere ruse to fathom our purses, and he was referred to Capt. Macgregor for the information he required.

March 29th.—Sooltan Jan is said to have gone to oppose General Pollock with 1000 horse.

April 1st.—We received letters from Jellalabad, by which we learned that Gen. Pollock had authorised Capt. Macgregor to ransom us. A severe thunder storm at night.

April 3rd.—Heard of the destruction of the 27th N. I. at Ghuznee, and of another successful sortie made by Gen. Sale at Jellalabad, by which he obtained a large supply of cattle.

April 9th.—Tidings brought of Mahomed Akber's camp at Char Bagh having been surprised by Gen. Sale, when his whole force was completely routed, three guns recaptured, and the Sirdar himself and friends barely managed to save themselves by flight. The arrival of Mahomed Shah Khan this evening confirmed this joyful intelligence. It had been reported to us this morning that at a council of chiefs held at Tirghurree on the previous night, much debate had taken place regarding the disposal of their prisoners, when it was proposed by some to destroy us at once: our anxiety was, therefore, intense all day, until the Khan by his friendly manner somewhat reassured us. He had a long interview with Major Pottinger, who endeavoured to propose terms for our release; to which, however, the Khan would not listen for a moment, but said we must follow the Sirdar's fortune, who would start for the hills early next morning.

April 10th.—We were all ready for a start at an early hour, but no camels came till 3 P. M.; meanwhile a scene of pillage went on, in which Mahomed Shah Khan acted the part of robber-chief. His first act was to select all our best horses for himself, after which he deliberately rummaged Lady Macnaghten's baggage, from which he took shawls to the value of 5000*l.* He next demanded her jewels, which she was obliged reluctantly to give up, their value being estimated at 10,000*l.*, or a lac of rupees. Not satisfied even with this rich plunder, he helped himself freely out of Capt. Lawrence's boxes to every thing that took his fancy; after which, being well aware of the poverty of the rest, he departed. Fortunately my own riding horse was spared, through the kind interference of the Meerza who accompanied the Khan. This characteristic little drama having been acted, the signal was given for our departure, the European soldiers being left behind, with a promise of release on the payment of a ransom.

It was a treat to get free of the dismal high walls, within which we had been so long immured; and as we had arrived in the depth of winter, when all was bleak and desolate to the eye, the universal verdure with which returning spring had now clothed the valley struck us with all the force of magic. We had proceeded about four miles on the road towards Alishung, when our progress was arrested by a few horsemen, who galloped up waving their hands joyfully, and crying out "Shabash!" "Bravo!" "All is over! the Feringhee army has been cut up in the Khyber Pass, and all their guns taken by Sultan Jan!" The mutual joy of the Affghans seemed so perfectly sincere, that, notwithstanding the improbability of the story, we felt almost compelled to believe it, especially when the order was given to return forthwith to our old quarters at Bud-deeabad. On the way back the new comers entered into full-length particulars regarding the alleged defeat of our army. The Ensofzyes, they said, had agreed to take three lacs of rupees for the free passage of our troops through the Khyber, of which half was paid in advance. They had no sooner fingered the cash, than they laid a trap with Sultan Jan for the simultaneous attack of the front and rear of the army in the narrowest part of the pass, which had proved entirely successful.—We found the poor soldiers delighted to see us again; for, having heard several shots fired after our departure, they imagined we had all been killed. We were not long in discovering that the story we had heard was all a hoax, the real cause of our sudden return being some dispute among the chiefs, in consequence of which an attack on our party was anticipated; but we were told to hold ourselves in readiness for a fresh start on the following morning.

The whole population of the valley are in the greatest consternation for fear of an attack from the English force, and are bundling their families up to the hills for safety.

April 11th.—We were off again at 12 A. M. The first three miles were along the Tirghurree road, after which we struck off to the hills to the right. Our course now became westerly, and skirting the base of the hills for four or five miles, we crossed a low ridge into the cultivated valley of Alishung; where, after crossing a rapid, we passed close by Mahomed Akber Khan on the opposite bank, seated in a nalkee on a knoll by the road side. He looked ill and careworn, but returned our salutes politely. A little further in we found three tents pitched for our reception, on which we had scarcely time to take shelter ere the rain fell in torrents, and continued all night. A very indifferent dish of tough mutton constituted our meal for the day. In the course of the evening Sultan Jan arrived in camp, with only about thirty horsemen left of the thousand with whom he went forth to battle; the rest had all fled. He seemed grievously crest-fallen, and, unlike the Sirdar, exhibited his malice and spleen by cutting our acquaintance. Mahomed Akber, with the liberality which always marks the really brave, invariably attributes his own defeat to the fortune of war, and loudly extols the bravery exhibited by our troops led on by the gallant Sale. The guard around our camp consisted entirely of Seiks, under a Musulman Rajah, who, having been banished many years ago by Runjeet Sing, was befriended by Dost Mahomed Khan, the then ruler of Cabul, to whose family he has ever since attached himself. He was a splendid looking fellow, with very prepossessing manners, and expressed himself much disgusted with the Affghans, who took advantage of his going out to fight at Char Bagh to plunder his camp. Altogether, he seemed well disposed towards us, which, under our present circumstances, was cheering.

April 12th.—At our first starting this morning the bachelors were separated from the married families and ladies, and we went off by different roads. This sudden separation being very disagreeable to us all, Capt. Lawrence besought the Sirdar to permit us to proceed together as before. He also remonstrated with him for dragging the ladies and children with him all over the country, when they were so ill able to bear up against fatigue and exposure, representing that it would redound more to his honour to release them at once. Mahomed Shah Khan, who was present, upon this flew into a rage, and declared that “wherever he went we must all follow; that if our horses failed, we must trudge on foot; and that if we lagged behind, he would drag us along by force.” He is the greatest enemy we have, and seems at present to govern the Sirdar completely. He was, however, taken to task by Mahomed Akber for his rudeness, and we were allowed to proceed all together, as heretofore. The road lay among low hills over a sandy soil, with several slight ascents and descents, one ascent being rather steep and long. About half way we crossed a small stream, and, after travelling about twelve miles, found the camp pitched in a narrow ravine, through which flowed a rivulet, the ground being covered with bunches of tall reeds, to which the Affghans set fire at night. Two old goats were sent us for dinner, which, not being fit to eat, we returned, and were afterwards supplied with an awfully tough old sheep in exchange.

April 13th.—The road again lay over steeps. On the left we saw the pass of Udruk-budruk in the distance. We gathered quantities of a curious herbaceous plant, the under surface of whose leaves was covered with a beautiful crimson dewy-looking substance, which the Affghan ladies use as rouge. About twelve miles brought us to a small scantily-cultivated valley, in which were two small forts partially ruined by the earthquake. The inhabitants enjoy the credit of being the greatest thieves in the whole country, so they must be bad indeed. Our whole march was about fourteen miles.

April 14th.—At starting we crossed the pass of Bad-push, the ascent up which was not less than 1600 feet over a very steep and rocky road. The descent was less abrupt and comparatively short. On these hills grew the hollyoak, wild almond, and a terebinthaceous tree called Khinjuck, yielding a fragrant medicinal gum, which I imagined might be the myrrh or balsam of commerce. It is, at all events, in great repute among the Affghans, who find it efficacious for sabre wounds. A species of mistletoe grew in great profusion on its branches; the flower somewhat resembled that of the mango, and the young leaves were oblong, lanceolate, opposite, and slightly serrate. An evergreen shrub, with a jasmine-like flower, was very abundant.

Following the course of a stream about six miles, we reached the left bank of the Cabul river, which here issued from between some precipitous hills with an exceedingly rapid current. About a hundred yards from the bank stood a small fort. We crossed on a raft of inflated bullock hides, the motion of which we found exceedingly pleasant. The horses crossed by a ford some distance higher up and about four miles round. On the right bank we found Mahomed Akber in his nalkee, to whom we paid our respects. The stream is about a hundred yards broad, and a few Affghans swam their horses over, though with some difficulty. The river is not navigable from this to Jellalabad, owing to the number of rapids and whirlpools.

April 15th.—We were kept waiting until noon for our horses, and in the mean time were amused by seeing a herd of cattle swim over the river; in attempting which they were all carried violently down a rapid, and several, failing to effect a landing, were obliged to return along the bank and make a second effort. No camels were brought with kujawurs for the weak ladies and the sick, who were accordingly forced to ride on horseback. Poor Gen. Elphinstone, who left Buddeeabad in a most precarious state of health, was much shattered by the fatigues of travelling, and seemed to be gradually sinking to the grave. The road ran for a mile along the bank of the river, and then suddenly turned up a ravine to the right. Two miles more led to a valley communicating with that of Tezeen, about a mile up which we encamped outside the fort of Surroobee, where we had previously halted on the 12th of January. Here was one of the mountain-train guns which had been captured on the retreat. We found that our Hindoostanee servants, who remained behind here, had been well treated by Abdoolah Khan, but the majority had died from the effects of frost-bites.

April 16th.—Mahomed Akber fortunately found it convenient to halt here, which proved seasonable both to man and beast; but we were told to expect a long journey unto the hills in the neighbourhood of Tezeen, where it is the Sirdar's intention to conceal us. An Affghan, lately arrived from Cabul, informed us that the city was divided into two great parties, of whom the Dooranees and Kuzzilbashes formed one, and the Barukzies and Giljyes the other.

April 17th. — Another halt enabled us to enjoy a quiet Sunday. The Sirdar and a portion of his followers paid a visit to some neighbouring chiefs, but his people were deserting him fast. The Giljyes have been trying hard to excite the fears of the peasantry against the English by tales of our cruelty and oppression.

April 18th. — Having been warned last night to be ready for a march at dawn of day, we were all on the alert; but, after waiting a long time for orders to mount, we received a message from Mahomed Akber that we should await his return.

April 19th. — It rained hard all night and continued to pour the whole day, but we were obliged, nevertheless, to march sixteen miles to Tezeen. The road was up a narrow valley the whole way, crossing a stream twice before reaching Seh Baba, which we passed half way, after which we crossed the stream continually. At Seh Baba we encountered a putrid smell from the decomposed bodies of those who fell on the retreat, which lined the whole road. In some places we passed high piles of human bodies still fresh, the remains probably of those unfortunate beings who, having escaped the knives of the Ghazees, had struggled for existence until they sunk under the combined miseries of famine and exposure. The Affghans informed us that many had been driven to the miserable expedient of supporting life by feeding off the flesh of their deceased comrades ! — From Seh Baba to Tezeen is one continued rise, the valley being about half a mile broad and shut in by lofty heights on both sides. The stream is at this season a perfect torrent from the melting snow. We passed several encampments of the wandering Giljyes, whose flocks browsed on the neighbouring hills. We were all wet to the skin in spite of our posteens, or sheep-skin cloaks, and, on arriving at Mahomed Khan's fort at Tezeen, we found it so much dilapidated by the earthquake as to afford only the most scanty accommodation. The poor ladies were at first crammed into a small dirty room, filled with Affghan women, where they sat in their dripping clothes until, after much delay and trouble, they were accommodated with a separate apartment. As for the gentlemen, they had to scramble for shelter in a dark confined hovel, Capt. Mackenzie and myself preferring to pass the night in a stable with our horses, the rain dripping over us until morning.

This day's exposure decided the fate of Gen.

Elphinstone, who reached the fort in a dying state.

Captain Mackenzie received an intimation this night of the Sirdar's intention to send him on a mission to Gen. Pollock's camp at Jellalabad.

April 20th.—It rained the whole day, and, having nothing dry to put on, we were more uncomfortable than ever. Mrs. Waller was delivered of a daughter. This was the fourth addition to our number of captives; Mrs. Boyd, Mrs. Riley, and a soldier's wife named Byrne, having been confined during our sojourn at Buddeeabad. A peculiar Providence seemed on all occasions to watch over the ladies, and nothing surprised us more than the slight nature of their sufferings on these occasions.

There was a severe shock of earthquake again to-day. These shocks have always appeared to me to be in some way connected with heavy rain beforehand.

April 21st.—Some tents having been pitched outside the fort, the whole of our party removed into them, with exception of the Wallers, ourselves, Gen. Elphinstone, Major Pottinger, Capt. Mackenzie, and Dr. Magrath, to all of whom permission was given to remain for the present in the fort. Atta Mahomed Khan, the owner of the place, expressed to us much annoyance at the conduct of his kinsman Mahomed Shah Khan in stirring up the rebellion, and hinted at his own desire to be on friendly terms with our government. It seems he was promised remuneration by Capt. Macgregor for the damage done to his property by Gen. Sale's force in October 1841, to the fulfilment of which pledge he still looked forward.

The Sirdar was holding a levée to-day, at which Major Pottinger was present, when he burst into a violent passion, and declared that his own countrymen had basely deserted and betrayed him, although he had all along acted entirely at the instigation of the chiefs at Cabul, especially in the murder of the Envoy and the destruction of our army; yet these very men now refused to support him; and he solemnly swore that, if ever he had the power, a severe example should be made of them.

A part of the outer wall fell to-day from the effects of yesterday's earthquake. At night the ladies of Mahomed Shah Khan, and other chiefs who were travelling in our company, invited Mrs. Eyre to dinner. She found them exceedingly kind in manner and prepossessing in outward appearance, being both well dressed and good looking. They asked her the old question as to the gender of the Company Sahib, and were greatly wonderstruck to learn that England was governed by a woman. They expressed the utmost dread of Capt. Macgregor, whom they regard in the same formidable light in which a child does the giant of a nursery tale.

April 22d. — A great bustle was created at an early hour this morning by the arrival of a messenger from the Sirdar to Dost Mahomed Khan, who was awakened from his slumbers in the General's room and immediately hurried away. Our fellow-captives in camp marched shortly afterwards for the Zanduk valley, near the Aman Koh, about eight miles south of Tezeen. There was apparently some apprehension entertained of a surprise from Cabul, as we ourselves were hurried off at about 9 A. M. to a small fort two miles higher up the valley, whither the Sirdar had preceded us. This sudden movement was a death-stroke to the General, who, though so weak as to be unable to stand, was made to ride on horseback the whole way.

April 23d. — Mahomed Akber received about 6000 rupees from Cabul, probably sent by his uncle, Nuwab Jubbar Khan. Fatty Jung, the eldest son of the murdered monarch, retained possession of the Bala Hissar, and demanded from the Sirdar that all the European prisoners should be rendered up to him. The residents of Cabul, we learned, were deserting the city in great numbers, from dread of our army, and all efforts to induce the people to oppose Gen. Pollock's advance were fruitless. This information at once decided the Sirdar to send Capt. Mackenzie to treat with Gen. Pollock without further delay, and that officer was warned to be in readiness to start at a moment's notice.

Some one having told the Sirdar that I could draw faces, he sent for me on that pretence; but to my surprise pumped me for half an hour on artillery matters, being very inquisitive as to the manufacture of fuses and port-fires, the mode of throwing shells from mortars and howitzers, and the mode of regulating the length of fuze for different distances, on all which subjects I enlightened him just enough to render his darkness visible. Before I went, he requested me to take the likeness of one of his followers, and of a favourite Arab horse, and, though my performance was very indifferent, he expressed himself pleased. I was afterwards called to examine a sextant which had been just brought to him: it was greatly damaged, but I explained its uses; after which, finding he could make no better use of it, he made me remove the coloured glasses, which he proposed to convert into spectacles to preserve his eyes from the glare.

About 7 P. M. Major-Gen. Elphinstone breathed his last,— a happy release for him from suffering of mind and body. Deeply he felt his humiliation, and bitterly regretted the day when he resigned the home-born pleasures of his native land, to hazard the high reputation of a proud name in a climate and station, for which he was constitutionally unfit. Of his merits I have already spoken at large in another place ; but it is due no less to the memory of the dead than to the large circle of living friends and relatives, who, I feel assured, will mourn his loss, that I should record how, to the very last moment of his being, he exhibited a measure of Christian benevolence, patience, and high-souled fortitude, which gained him the affectionate regard and admiring esteem of all who witnessed his prolonged sufferings and his dying struggles, and who regarded him as the victim less of his own faults, than of the errors of others, and the unfathomable designs of a mysterious Providence, by whom the means are always adapted to the end. The Sirdar seemed to have been unconscious of the General's extreme danger until this morning, when he offered, too late, to grant him his release. Had he listened to the advice of those who wished him well, he would have adopted this generous course at Budd-eabad ; but his chief supporters were interested in keeping him in the dark, and in frustrating every scheme that tended to reconcile him to the British nation; so the timely counsel was unheeded. His eyes at last were opened to the truth; and he now endeavoured to make all the amends in his power by offering to send the remains for honourable interment at Jellalabad. At 8 A. M. Capt. Mackenzie departed on his mission, which related principally to the release of the ladies and children.

April 25th.—A rude framework having been constructed by an Affghan carpenter, the General's body, after being well covered up in felt blankets, was packed in it, and the vacant spaces filled with the highly scented leaves of wormwood. At 2 P. M., all being ready, it was slung across the back of a camel, and sent off under a small guard of Giljyes, accompanied by one of the European soldiers who attended the deceased, whom the Sirdar thought likely to pass unnoticed in the common costume of the country. The Sirdar afterwards invited us all to sit with him outside the fort. Whilst we were engaged in conversation, a messenger arrived with letters from Loodianah, informing him that his family had been starved for a whole week. On being told the contents, we all immediately pronounced the whole a mischievous fabrication; upon which the Sirdar somewhat bombastically proclaimed his disregard whether it were true or false, for that the destruction of his whole family should not alter his resolutions. He then resumed the previous conversation as if nothing had occurred, in the course of which he told me that the daily loss of life, by the fire of the cantonment guns during the siege, was between thirty and forty, but he declared that the shells fired from the Bala Hissar into the city did little or no damage to life or property.

April 26th.—Sad to say, the poor General's body was interrupted on its journey near Jugdulluk. It seems that the party in charge, on approaching the camp of some wandering Giljyes, were challenged, and thought that the best way to avoid discovery would be to assume confidence, and come to a halt there for the night. The European soldier was covered up with blankets, and warned to remain quiet until morning. About 10 P. M., however, he was roused by a tumult of angry voices, in which the words "Feringhee" and "Kafir" were frequently repeated. A rush was shortly after made to where he was lying, and the covering being snatched from off his head, he was immediately attacked, and wounded in the arm with a sword, nothing saving his life but the thick blanket of felt which covered his body, and the interposition of a chief who hurried him off to his tent. The bigotted savages next stripped the body of the General, which they pelted with stones, and would have burned, but for the remonstrances of the Sirdar's men, who threatened them with the vengeance of their master. Mahomed Akber's annoyance was great on receiving these awkward tidings, but he lost no time in despatching as large a party as he could spare, to rescue the European and re-pack the body.

In the course of conversation with Major Pottinger, the Sirdar asked him whether he would take his oath that he had never written anything to Jellalabad, but what had come to his (the Sirdar's) knowledge. The Major maintained a significant silence, but shortly afterwards, having occasion to remark that, if the treaty had been fulfilled, not a British soldier would now have remained in Affghanistan, the Sirdar emphatically asked him if he would swear to the truth of what he uttered, to which the Major readily consenting, the Sirdar seemed now for the first time to believe what he had before utterly discredited, and looked around upon his followers with an expression of face which seemed to say, "What a miserable fool then have I been!"

April 27th. — The Sirdar started with Major Pottinger to visit our fellow-prisoners in the Zanduh valley. Lieut. Waller and myself, in the course of our evening stroll, amused ourselves in observing some Juzailchees firing at a mark about 100 yards distant: almost every shot was well directed, but they were all so dilatory in loading, that a British soldier could have fired four or five shots to their one.

The European soldier who accompanied the General's body returned this evening, having been rescued by the Sirdar's men from the savages who had detained him, and who now professed great contrition for having offended the Sirdar. The body, after being re-packed, had been forwarded on its way to Jellalabad.

April 28th. — A cossid, bearing a letter from Capt. Conolly to Gen. Pollock, was intercepted and severely beaten by the Sirdar's men, and detained a prisoner until his return.

April 29th. — A wild sheep was brought in, having been shot in the neighbouring hills. Its horns resembled those of a common ram, but its face and general outline were not unlike an antelope, though more coarse and clumsy.

April 30th. — The Sirdar and Major Pottinger returned from their excursion. Whilst at Zanduh, Ameenollah Khan and other chiefs sent to demand that Major Pottinger should be delivered up to him, or twelve lacs of rupees in his stead.

The bills given by the Major on the Indian Government, payable on the safe arrival of the Cabool force at Jellalabad, having been dishonoured, the chiefs have been endeavouring to extort the money from the Hindoo shroffs.

May 1st.—To-night the Sirdar sent us a large supply of English letters and newspapers which had just come from Jellalabad, where Capt. Mackenzie had arrived safe. These were the first letters we had received for eight months, and we sat up the greater part of the night devouring their contents.

May 2d.—I was sent for by the Sirdar to examine a cavalry saddle, as he was anxious to know whether it was made of hog's skin. I told him it was a difficult question to decide, as both hog and cow skins were used, and could not easily be distinguished. As he gave me some knowing winks, and was evidently most unwilling that a good saddle should be sacrificed to the religious scruples of his moolah, who was seated in the room, I voted in favour of the cow; and, as Lieut. Waller afterwards declared himself on the same side, the Sirdar, considering that two witnesses decided the point, determined to hold his own: and I believe in his heart he cared little about the natural history of the hide, so long as it suited his purposes.

Late at night I was roused from bed by a message from the Sirdar, who pressed me hard to go and fight for him at Cabul against Ameenollah Khan and Futtu Jung. He was perfectly aware, he said, that no Englishman would serve against his own countrymen, but that in this case his enemies were equally hostile to the British; so that, in fighting for him, I should be serving my own country. I replied that I was already badly wounded and tired of fighting for the present; that I was quite incompetent, from my ignorance of Affghan politics, to form an opinion as to the rights and merits of the case; and that, even were I ever so much disposed to embrace his cause, no English officer or soldier could legally take arms under a sovereign power, without having first obtained the consent of his own Sovereign. My refusal apparently annoyed him a good deal, and I was obliged to repeat it several times before he would allow me to return to rest.

May 3d.—The Wallers and ourselves started for the Zanduh valley after breakfast, and had just mounted our horses, when Capt. Mackenzie made his appearance on his return from Jellalabad. His mission had not opened any immediate prospect of release for us, though the negotiation was, on the whole, of a friendly nature. After the exchange of a few words, he was hurried off to the Sirdar, and we pursued our way to Zanduh. The road ascended the hills in a southeasterly direction, and was very steep and undulating for about three miles, when it descended into the narrow bed of a stream, one of the ramifications of the Tezeen valley, up which our course was southerly for the rest of the march. Four or five miles further brought us to camp, where the valley was a little wider, with cultivated steppes of land, on which the tents were pitched. Snow was still lying on the neighbour-heights, and about four miles further south the lofty mountain peak of Aman Koh reared its pine-clad crest. On our way we noticed the juniper, which universally prevails in these hills, attaining in some spots the size of a goodly tree. Here and there we passed a few stunted pines, which might be considered as mere stragglers from the neighbouring forests of Suffed Koh. The wild almond, a showy and fragrant species of Edwardsia; a shrubby cratægus-looking plant, covered with blossoms; the yellow dog-rose, the sweet-brier, the artemisia, the white tulip, and a very pretty iris, constituted the prominent botanical features of the road over which we travelled. We found our friends enjoying themselves during the heat of the day, in shady bowers formed of juniper: the climate seemed delightful.

May 4th.—The Sirdar sent for Capt. Troup to accompany him and Major Pottinger to Cabul. Capt. Mackenzie was to start immediately on a second mission to Jellalabad.

May 5th.—The English hostages at Cabul were said to be under the protection of a Synd, son of the chief moolah; and Ameenollah Khan, having endeavoured to seize them, had been driven into the Bala Hissar by Nuwab Zeman Khan, and his house in Cabul burned to the ground.

May 7th.—A hard frost this morning! the shrubs and herbs within reach of the spray of the stream being covered with large icicles. Our keeper now was Mahomed Rufeek, whose family resides at Candahar. From his pleasing manners, and constant civility and kindness, he soon became a general favourite. I took a long walk with him to-day among the hills south of camp; we saw nothing but juniper trees, anemones, and wild geraniums, the spring having only just commenced in that elevated region. The rocks were chiefly of limestone, with vertical strata.

May 8th.—This morning I was agreeably surprised by an Affghan bringing some of my own books and sketches for sale, of which I immediately possessed myself. In the forenoon a few drops of snow fell! The last three days were bitterly cold, and we enjoyed a blazing fire at night.

May 9th.—Enjoyed another walk in the hills, with a fine bracing air, and a magnificent view in the direction of Hindoo Khoosh, whose everlasting snows and jagged peaks bounded the scene. On our return we heard the cheerful note of the cuckoo. I found a curious parasite on the juniper.

May 10th.—Capt. and Mrs. Anderson were agreeably surprised by the arrival of their eldest girl from Cabul. It will be remembered that she was lost in the Khoord-Cabul pass during the retreat on the 8th of January; since which she had been an inmate of Nuwab Zeman Khan's family, where she was treated with the greatest possible kindness. She had been taught to say "My father and mother are infidels, but I am a Mussulman." Capt. Troup, who had obtained her release, wrote word that he and Major Pottinger were in Nuwab Jubbar Khan's house at Cabul; that the city was in a most unquiet state, and the opposite parties fighting every day, the Cabulees siding alternately with whichever side paid them best. At night, a note was received from Major Pottinger, who had just witnessed an engagement between the Barukzyes and Doo-ranees, in which the former were victorious; but he described the affair as more ludicrous than tragical, having been a forcible representation of the "battle of spurs."

May 12th.—Capts. Boyd, Waller, and myself, accompanied by two Affghans, ascended some lofty hills to the west. Some Giljyes of the Jubbar Khail overtook us, and offered to escort us to Jellalabad. Our attendants, instantly taking alarm, hurried us away homewards. We had a fine view of Hindoo Koosh to the north, and Suf-feed Koh to the south. At the height of 2000 feet above our camp, the husbandmen were only now ploughing the ground, whilst in the Zandu valley, immediately below, the crops were green. We descended by the bed of a stream, on whose steep sides a species of wild onion grew abundantly. A beautiful fritillaria was also common; and an asphodelous plant bearing a gigantic spadix of yellow flowers, which I took for an ornithogalum. On our return, Dost Mahomed Khan, who was encamped near us, rated Mahomed Rufeek severely for allowing us to stray so far. This chief is a thorough boor in his ideas and manners, and is always exhibiting some mean and silly suspicion of our intentions: had it depended on him, we should all have been shut up in dark cells or narrow cages long ago.

May 16th.—Capt. Mackenzie returned from his second trip to Jellalabad, where Gen. Elphinstone's body had arrived safe and been interred with due military honour. It does not appear that much was done towards effecting our release. The terms the Sirdar proposed to Gen. Pollock for our release were, — that he should be made governor of the Lughman province, and be exempted from attendance at court, and uncontrolled by our political officers. Of this proposal Gen. Pollock very properly took not the smallest notice. It seems that a despatch from the Sirdar, in which an offer was made to release the ladies and children unconditionally, which was sent after Capt. Mackenzie, did not reach him, having been intercepted, as was supposed, by Mahomed Shah Khan. Gen. Nott was expected to march for Cabul from Candahar on the 17th instant.

May 17th. — Capt. Mackenzie left for Cabul, to communicate the result of his mission to the Sirdar.

May 18th. — Dost Mahomed Khan was much struck by hearing Mahomed Rufeek read a Persian translation of the "Sermon on the Mount" out of Gladwain's "Moonshee." He was fervent in his admiration of the Lord's Prayer, as well as of several other passages; and the injunction to pray in private seemed to throw light on our apparent neglect of outward observances. Corporal Lewis of H. M. 44th, who had been kept a prisoner at Tezeen in the fort of Khooda Buxkhan, was allowed to visit our camp to-day. The poor fellow had been starved and illtreated by his savage captors, until he made an outward profession of Mahomedanism, when he received the name of Deen Mahomed, and was made to attend prayers daily with the faithful.

May 20th.—A beacon-light was burning all night on the hill above us, and pickets were thrown out in all directions. It was supposed that a chuppāo, or night surprise, was expected.

May 22d.—Our horses arrived from Cabul, for which city we received notice to march next morning.

May 23d.—Marched about 9 A. M. Three of us obliged to walk for want of horses. Ladies travelled in kujawurs, laden on mules. We retraced our former track down the bed of the stream, and across the hills, to the fort where Gen. Elphinstone died. A few miles of descent made a great difference in the climate and the progress of vegetation; the wild roses were every where in full bloom, and, with other gay flowers, scented the air and enlivened the scene. We crossed a branch of the Tezeen valley; a short cut over the hills led us to the foot of the Huft Kotul, or hill of seven ascents. Here we once more encountered the putrid bodies of our soldiery, which thenceforward strewed the road as far as Khoord Cabul, poisoning the whole atmosphere. A little beyond Kubbur-i-jubbar we passed two caves, on opposite sides of the road, full as they could hold of rotten carcasses. Thence to Tungee Tureekie the sight became worse and worse. Mahomed Rufeek asked me whether all this would not excite the fury of Gen. Pollock's army; I told him he need not be surprised if every house in Cabul were levelled to the ground. From the last-mentioned spot we turned off the high road to the left, and, passing a large ruined village, arrived at the fort of Khoord Cabul, — where we had previously lodged on the 9th of January, — after a fatiguing march of twenty-two miles. The contrast between the summer and winter aspect of the valley immediately below the fort was striking: the whole now presenting one red field of cultivation.

May 24th. — Again on the move at 9 A. M. The Khoord Cabul pass being now absolutely impassable from the stench of dead bodies, we took the direct road towards Cabul, having Alexander the Great's column in view nearly the whole way. The first three or four miles were over a barren plain, when the road entered among hills crossing a ghat of moderate height into a valley about three miles in width, in the middle of which we halted for half an hour at a deliciously cool and clear spring, which supplied a small tank or pond: just above this, crowning the hill to the left, stood a ruined Grecian tope. Resuming our way, we again entered some hills, the road making a continuous ascent for about a couple of miles to Alexander's pillar, one of the most ancient relics of antiquity in the East, and conspicuously situated on the crest of a mountain range which bounds the plain of Cabul on the south-east. It stands about seventy feet high; the shaft is of the Doric order, standing on a cubic pedestal, and surmounted by a sort of urn. As we reached this classic spot, a view of almost unrivalled magnificence burst suddenly upon our sight. At the distance of some two thousand feet below, the whole picturesque and highly cultivated valley of Cabul was spread before us like a map: the towering mountain ranges of Kohistan and Hindoo Khoosh, clad in a pure vesture of snow, bounded the horizon, at the distance of nearly a hundred miles. The Bala Hissar was dimly discernible in the distance, from whose battlements the roar of cannon broke ever and anon upon the ear, betokening the prolongation of the strife between hostile tribes and ambitious chiefs. The descent was very long and tedious, and the road about midway very steep and bad. On the way down another Grecian pillar was discernible among the hills on the left. The rocks were chiefly of micaceous schist, and a dark stone resembling basalt. The gum-ammoniac plant grew here; the young flower was clustered together not unlike a small cauliflower. It is an umbelliferous plant, growing to the height of six feet, and in its general appearance and mode of growth resembling an heracleum. It has a strong disagreeable scent, which reminded me slightly of assafoetida. The gum exudes plentifully, and is at first milky, but afterwards turns to yellow, and has a bitter nauseous taste. The plant is called by the Affghans gundēlē, and the gum is sold in the Cabul bazar under the name of feshook.

At the foot of the hill we rested at a tank or pond supplied by a large spring which gushes from under the rock; another ruined Grecian tope crowned a small eminence at a few hundred yards' distance. The road now skirted the base of the hills to the left for about four miles, when we reached the fort of Ali Mahomed, Kuzzilbash, distant three miles from Cabul, and close to the Logur river, where we were accommodated for the night, having marched altogether about twenty miles.

May 25th.—The ladies of Ali Mahomed having removed to a neighbouring fort, we occupied their apartments, which lined two sides of an inclosed square, and were very commodious, and decidedly the best quarters we have yet enjoyed. The valley about here is thickly studded with forts, and very highly cultivated.

May 26th.—Captain Troup paid us a visit. He told us the Sirdar was living in the outskirts of the city about two miles from us, that Amenoollah Khan had joined him, but that Futtu Jung still held out in the Bala Hissar, in hopes of being soon relieved by the arrival of our army. Mahomed Akber is desirous to obtain possession of the citadel principally on account of the treasure within it, as he never professed to dream of resisting our arms. He earnestly desired to be on friendly terms with the British government, and often said that he wished he had been so fortunate as to become acquainted with the English in early life, as he had been filled with prejudices against them which had greatly influenced his conduct, but which he now saw to be unfounded. It seems that Gen. Pollock offered on his own responsibility to release the ladies and children of his family from their confinement, but in his present precarious state of life the Sirdar has declined the offer.

Hundreds of Hindostanees crowded the streets of Cabul begging for bread, which was daily served out to them by Nuwab Jubbar Khan and Zeman Khan. The civility of all classes to the European hostages and prisoners in and about Cabul was remarkable.

May 27th. — We all received permission to walk in the adjacent garden, and the gentlemen were allowed to bathe in a running canal near the fort, which, now that the weather had become sultry, were real luxuries.

May 29th. — Shuja Dowlah, the assassin of Shah Soojah, paid us a visit. He was a handsome quiet-looking man, whom few would have guessed to be the perpetrator of such a deed. He tried hard to persuade us that the Shah had played us false, and that he had committed a praiseworthy action in getting rid of him. The murder was committed at the instigation of Dost Mahomed Khan, Giljye, by way of retribution for the attempt on Mahomed Akber's life at Charbagh by an agent of Shah Soojah; but the act is much reprobated by all classes at Cabul, and by no one more than the Nuwab Zuman Khan, who has banished Shuja Dowlah from his house ever since.

May 30th. — Shah Dowla, another son of Nuwab Zuman Khan, paid us a visit, and inquired particularly if we were well treated by the Sirdar. We were informed that, in consequence of the Sirdar having demanded the persons of the Naib Shereef Mohun Loll and the late wuzeer, the Kuzzilbash had risen in a body against him, and declared their intention to hold their part of the city until the arrival of our troops. We heard a great deal of firing to-night, and the extreme vigilance of our guard led us to suppose that the Sirdar's affairs were not prospering. Dost Mahomed Khan arrived in the fort at night.

May 31st. — Guns were heard all night, and we were refused permission to leave the fort, as usual, to-day. Mahomed Rufeek, we were sorry to learn, had incurred suspicion, from his family having aided Gen. Nott at Candahar. He determined to throw up the Sirdar's service in consequence.

June 1st. — Dost Mahomed Khan departed for the city accompanied by Mahomed Rufeek. Permission was again given us to go into the garden, and to bathe in the canal as before.

June 2d. — Intelligence was brought us that Gen. Nott had obtained a victory at Kelat-i-Gilje, in which 2000 of the enemy were killed.

June 3d. — It was reported that Fatty Jung had offered a large reward to any one who would seize and escort us all to the Bala Hissar. The Sirdar made a fierce attack on the Bala Hissar in the evening, and a brisk cannonade was kept up on both sides for several hours, but without any decisive result.

June 4th. — Capt. Troup paid us a visit, bringing with him several necessaries, for which we had previously written to the Sirdar. It was believed in the city that one of the bastions of the Bala Hissar had been mined, but that the Sirdar was deferring its explosion in the hope that he might succeed without it, being unwilling to injure the defences of the place. But this report was probably set abroad for the purpose of intimidating the defenders, of whom only two men had been wounded during the whole siege up to this date.

A messenger arrived this morning from Jellalabad with letters for Futtu Jung and Lady Sale. From the latter we learned that Gen. Pollock had written to Mahomed Akber, declaring it to be contrary to the laws of nations to make war against women and children, which it was hoped might shame him into the release of that portion of his prisoners, who came under the benefit of the rule.

Hopes began to be entertained of the safety of Dr. Grant of the Goorkha regiment, who was supposed to be concealed in Cabul. A shock of earthquake felt to-day.

June 6th. — About 5 P. M. a good deal of firing was heard, and our garrison was in a state of great excitement. Fatty Jung said to have sallied from the Bala Hissar and carried off a quantity of Mahomed Akber's military stores and camels. At night we heard that the Sirdar had seized Amenoolah Khan, whom he suspected of intriguing with Fatty Jung, probably with good foundation. The Khan said to be worth 18 lacs of rupees, which it was the Sirdar's intention to make him disgorge. Amenoolah Khan was originally the son of a camel-driver, but by dint of his talents, bravery, and cunning, rose to be one of the most powerful nobles in the country. The late Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan feared and suspected him so much as to forbid him to enter Cabul. He possessed the whole of the Logur valley, and could bring 10,000 men into the field. The accession of such a man to his cause was of much importance to Mahomed Akber, and his seizure was a dangerous step, being likely to provoke the hostility of his sons. Amenoolah Khan was the chief instigator of the rebellion, and of the murder of Sir Alexander Burnes; after which he lent the weight of his influence to each party alternately, as it suited his purpose. Such a vacillating wretch was not long likely to escape retributive justice.

June 7th. — Contradictory reports were in cir-culatation all day. Some affirm the Bala Hissar to have been taken ; others that the Sirdar had sustained a ruinous defeat, and that he was engaged in plundering the city, prior to taking flight. That something extraordinary had occurred was evident from the mysterious deportment of the Affghans, and their anxiety to prevent our receiving any communication from without. A parcel of useful articles arrived for us from our good friends at Jellalabad, but every thing was opened by the guard at the gate, who gave us only what they chose, and seized all the letters, to send to the Sirdar. There was no firing from the Bala Hissar to-day as usual. The climate in this part of the valley we found delightfully cool and pleasant, which may have arisen in part from the luxuriant cultivation round about. The most common trees are the poplar, willow, mulberry, and oleaster, or sinjut, the bright silvery foliage of the latter contrasting strikingly with the deep green of the rest, and its flowers scattering a powerful and delicious perfume through the surrounding air. Purple centaurias adorned the corn fields, and a handsome species of hedysarum, with a lupin-like flower, enlivened the border of every field and water-course ; whilst a delicate kind of tamarisk ornamented the banks of the neighbouring river. In the garden I found a very beautiful oro-banche growing parasitically from the roots of the melon.

June 9th. — Capt. Mackenzie paid us a visit. From him we learned positively that the Sirdar sprung a mine under one of the towers of the Bala Hissar, near the Shah Bazar, on the 6th; that the storming party was driven back with a loss of sixty men killed, and that much damage was done in the adjacent part of the town by the explosion. On the following day, Futtu Jung, finding his people disinclined to support him any longer, made terms with Mahomed Akber and the other chiefs, giving up a tower in the Bala Hissar to each, and himself retaining possession of the royal residence. Thus the citadel was now divided between the Dooranees, Barukzyes, Gilgyes, and Kuzzilbashes, represented by Futtu Jung, Mahomed Akber, Nuwab Zeman Khan, Mahomed Shah Khan, and Khan Shereen Khan. A curious arrangement, truly! and calculated to facilitate the union of parties already jealous of each other, and each of whom had, doubtless, an eye to the rich treasure of money and jewels still in Futtu Jung's possession. The story of Amenoolah Khan's seizure turned out to be untrue. There was a violent quarrel a few days back between the two old Nuwabs, Zeman Khan and Jubbar Khan, when the former seized hold of the latter's beard, exclaiming, "You are the fellow who first brought the Feringhees into the country, and to whom, therefore, all our troubles may be attributed." Abdool Glujas Khan, the son of Jubbar Khan, being present, drew a pistol and threatened to shoot Zeman Khan for the indignity offered to his father. Mahomed Akber sat by the whole time, laughing heartily at the scene.

June 10th. — A smart shock of earthquake during the night.

June 11th. — Capt. Mackenzie returned to the city. It was supposed he would start in a day or two on a fresh mission to Jellalabad.

June 20th. — Heard from Capt. Mackenzie that Mahomed Akber was waging war with Nuwab Zeman Khan; also that Gen. Nott had seized the person of Sufter Jung, the rebel son of Shah Shooja-ool-moolk. Ali Mahomed assured us that it was the Sirdar's intention shortly to march to Jellalabad, to pay his respects to Gen. Pollock! From other quarters we heard that he meditated carrying us all off to the banks of the Oxus.

June 21st. — We were told by Ali-Mahomed that the Sirdar had taken Nuwab Zeman Khan and his two sons prisoners, and, after seizing all his guns, treasure, and ammunition, had released them again.

June 25th. — Capts. Mackenzie and Troup paid us a visit. Mahomed Akber's late successful conflict with Nuwab Zeman Khan had rendered him, for the time being, supreme in Cabul. The Kuzzilbashes had tendered their unwilling submission, and had delivered up Mohun Loll, who was immediately put to the torture. Jan Fishan Khan, the laird of Purghman, a staunch friend of the British, had been obliged to fly for his life, his two sons having been slain in the fight. Khoda Bux Khan, and Atta Mahomed Khan, Giljyes, fought against Mahomed Akber on this occasion. Both Capt. Troup and Capt. Mackenzie had since been allowed to visit the hostages, whom they found in the house of the Meer Wyze, the chief moollah of the city, to whose protection they had been committed by Zeman Khan, in consequence of the desperate efforts of the Ghazees to slay them. During their stay in the good Nuwab's house, their lives were in constant danger from those fanatics, who on one occasion actually forced their way into the building to accomplish their purpose, and were only hindered by the Nuwab falling on his knees, casting his turban on the ground, and entreating them not to dishonour his roof by committing violence to those under its protection. Before sending them to the Meer Wyze, which was done at night, he took the precaution to line the streets with his own followers, with strict orders to fire upon every one who should so much as poke his head out of a window; and he not only accompanied them himself, but sent his own family on ahead. Capt. Conolly had obtained convincing proof that Shah Shoojah originated the rebellion with a view to get rid of Burnes, whom he detested, and of several chiefs, whom he hoped to see fall a sacrifice to our vengeance; little anticipating the ruinous result to himself and to us. Poor Burnes had made but few friends among the chiefs, who now never mention his name but in terms of the bitterest hatred and scorn. He seems to have kept too much aloof from them; thus they had no opportunity of appreciating his many valuable qualities, and saw in him only the traveller, who had come to spy the nakedness of the land, in order that he might betray it to his countrymen. The King considered him as a personal enemy, and dreaded his probable succession to the post of Envoy on the departure of Sir W. Macnaghten.

Of Mahomed Akber Khan, I have been told from an authentic source that, on the morning of the departure of the army from Cabul on the 6th of January, he and Sultan Jan made their appearance booted and spurred before the assembly of chiefs, and being asked by Nuwab Zeman Shah where they were going, Mahomed Akber replied, "I am going to slay all the Feringhee dogs, to be sure." Again: on the passage of our troops through the Khoord-Cabul pass on the 8th, he followed with some chiefs in the rear, and in the same breath called to the Giljyes in Persian to desist from, and in Pushtoo to continue, firing. This explains the whole mystery of the massacre, and clears up every doubt regarding Mahomed Akber's treachery.

June 26th.—We were somewhat surprised this day by the arrival of the European soldiers, whom we had left behind at the fort at Buddeeabad, and of whom we had been told that they had been ransomed by Gen. Pollock. They all looked miserably thin and weak, and were delighted, poor fellows, to join fortunes with us once more. The tale of their treatment and sufferings after our departure was a doleful one. It would seem that we had scarcely left the place, ere Mrs. Wade, wife of Sergeant Wade, declared her intention to forsake her husband, and turn Mahomedan! Every argument was used to dissuade her from carrying her disgraceful purpose into effect; but the devil seemed to have established absolute sway over her mind, and that same night she betook herself to Mahomed Shah Khan's nazir (steward), who was in charge of the prisoners.

Next morning she appeared in Affghan costume, and thenceforward took every opportunity to use her newly acquired influence to destroy and persecute her unhappy countrymen, whom she accused of having entered into a conspiracy to seize the fort and murder the guard. This was immediately made a pretext for stripping them of the few clothes and necessities they possessed.

A few rupees, which the officers had subscribed before starting, for their messing, they were made to give up; and Mrs. Wade having informed the nazir of three gold pieces, which she herself had sewn up some time previously in her husband's boot, the poor man was obliged to produce them. Treachery worse than this has probably never been recorded of a woman; English ladies will, therefore, learn with some satisfaction that she was born of an Indian mother, and had passed the years of her childhood almost entirely among low-born natives, from whom she could imbibe nothing but vice and cunning. Shortly after this, about 1200 rupees were offered by Gen. Pollock as a ransom, and would have been accepted, but for a mischievous hint from Mrs. Wade, that a much larger sum would be given, if demanded. The consequence was that, Gen. Pollock refusing to raise his terms, the negotiation was dropped; and the poor soldiers, after having had their hopes raised high of a speedy deliverance, were again cast into the depth of despondency. Their allowance of food was now shamefully reduced, their lives were not unfrequently threatened, and, to crown their misery, a virulent fever broke out, and would have probably proved fatal to them all, had not Mr. Blewit, a quondam apothecary, administered a copious bleeding, with a common pen-knife, to each patient on the first appearance of the symptoms. This, and starvation, providentially did the work of physic, and all gradually recovered. Mahomed Akber's order arriving for their removal to Cabul rescued them from the hands of the brutal nazir, who, it was now discovered, had been defrauding the prisoners of the greater part of the provisions for which he had all the time been charging exorbitantly on their account. Mahomed Akber either was, or professed to be, very much astonished to hear of the shabby treatment they had experienced; but we never heard that any punishment was inflicted on the rascally nazir. Mrs. W. having accompanied the latter to Cabul, the story of her apostacy and profligacy became notorious throughout the whole city, and was spoken of in a tone of evident triumph by the chiefs in Durbar. The effect was mischievous in the extreme. Loose jests at the expense of Englishwomen were sported with malicious intent by men, who, from the intense hatred which they bore us, would gladly have made all the prisoners the victims of their brutality.

July 1st. About this time Capt. Mackenzie was taken alarmingly ill, and Mahomed Akber, now called the Wuzeer, made choice of Capt. Troup as his agent to negotiate with Gen. Pollock, warning him to be ready for a trip to Jellalabad at an early date.

The advance of our army from that quarter was now confidently expected; and it was believed that Mahomed Akber had actually made every preparation for a flight to Toorkistan. It was also privately intimated to Capt. Troup by a friendly chief that, in the event of the Wuzeer bending his course thither, he would not be permitted to take us with him.

July 10th. We were agreeably surprised by a visit from Capt. John Conolly, who, as we now learned for the first time, had, with the other five hostages, been purchased by the Wuzeer from the Meer Waiz for four hundred sequins.

In delivering them up for so paltry a sum, the high priest of Cabul proved himself a fool as well as a villain. On first receiving charge of them from Newab Zeman Khan, he swore by all that was holy that he would never give them up to their enemies. Had he been disposed to keep his word, so great is the influence attached to his sacred office, that not all the threats or attempts of Akber could have wrested them from him; and he would have eventually secured for himself a splendid reward from the British government. By selling them to Akber he not only cast an indelible stain of infamy on the faith of Islam, but made a very wretched bargain for himself in a mere mercenary view. The Wuzeer lost no time in removing his new purchases to the Bala Hissar, whither he was also obliged to betake himself a few days ago, at the pressing solicitations of the chiefs. There he allowed Futtý Jung to retain the empty title of king within the precincts of his palace, whilst he himself, as Wuzeer, wielded the power, and enjoyed all the solid advantages of a real monarch.

Capt. Conolly informed us that Akber lately held a Council of Chiefs, when Major Pottinger, who was (unknown to most of them) in an adjoining room, overheard a Kohistanee chief propose that all the English prisoners should be slain, on hearing which Akber immediately got up in a rage, and turned the man out of the assembly.

July 13th. — Major Pottinger came in last night from the Bala Hissar, and informed us that Capt. Troup, with Hajee Buktyar, started on a mission to Jellalabad on the night of the 10th; also that on the same date the Wuzeer had wedded a daughter of Ameenoolah Khan. Within the last few days sickness had increased to an alarming extent amongst us. Capt. Mackenzie's life was in imminent danger from typhus fever; and Capt. Waller, Dr. M'Grath, and several ladies, were attacked by the same disease in a somewhat modified form: several of the private soldiers also suffered.

At our earnest request, the Wuzeer sent out Dr. Campbell to afford us medical aid, but our supply of medicines was lamentably scanty in proportion to the extensive demand. The fever probably originated in the malaria of the rice-fields, which surrounded the fort up to the very walls, and presented a wide surface of stagnant water, sufficient to poison the air for miles around. Our sedentary life, and confined space, and poor diet, no doubt, had each its share in predisposing us to disease.

July 15th.—Capt. Conolly again came to see us, and brought with him a letter he had lately received privately from Gen. Pollock, in which the General stated that he had written to Mahomed Shah Khan, offering an exchange of prisoners without reserve (including of course the Dost). He had also demanded that all our guns should be restored. He added that his own force at Jellalabad now amounted to 20,000 men; that of Gen. Nott, at Candahar, to 15,000; in addition to which an army of reserve, amounting to 25,000 men, were soon to assemble at Ferozepore, and that 10,000 European troops were on their way from England.

July 18th.—To-day we were honoured by a visit from the Wuzeer himself, accompanied by Mahomed Shah Khan, Sultan Jan, and a few other chiefs. His object seems to have been to make us acquainted with the proposal of Gen. Pollock for an exchange of prisoners, and to ascertain from us what would be the probable result to himself of his acceding to it. On this subject, however, we could not enlighten him, and he left us in the dark as to the course he intended to pursue; but we derived no small encouragement from Mahomed Shah Khan declaring his intention to restore to Lady Macnaghten all her jewels.

July 19th.—Mahomed Shah Khan was as good as his word, and actually brought back the jewels. We had good reason to believe that he had several times tried, without success, to raise money by them in the city; but finding nobody to appreciate their value, and hoping to establish a claim to the favourable consideration of our government, he made a merit of their restitution to the right owner. In a private conversation with Capt. Conolly, he declared himself favourable to the proposed exchange of prisoners.

July 22d. — Dost Mahomed Khan, Giljye, came to-day, and stated that we should all be released in twenty-six days, provided Gen. Pollock should agree to evacuate the country. We derived very little comfort from this, feeling persuaded that our armies could not, with honour, return to India, without first having redeemed the credit of our arms by marching boldly up to Cabul, and avenging the fate of their comrades. Our guard was changed in the afternoon, and increased to fifty men. A man named Ahmed Khan was at the same time substituted as our keeper, in place of Mahomed Ali Khan. The object of these frequent changes was of course to prevent our forming any plots to escape.

July 24th. — A note from Major Pottinger informed us that Gen. Pollock had entered into a truce with the Affghans, until the reply of Lord Ellenborough should be received regarding an alliance with the existing Affghan government, and an exchange of prisoners. Major Pottinger had likewise received an intimation from Jellalabad that, his political functions having ceased, he was on no account to interfere with the future arrangements that might be entered into regarding us.

July 27th. — Capt. Troup returned from Jellalabad. His news was not very consolatory. It seems that, just when Gen. Pollock was on the very point of settling with the Cabul government for our exchange, and the withdrawal of our troops from this country, he received an order to push on to Cabul simultaneously with the force from Candahar under Gen. Nott. It would seem that, previous to this, the intention had been that our armies should return to India without striking a blow! Gen. Pollock, although delighted at the prospect of earning fresh laurels, found himself in an awkward predicament with regard to the pending negotiations; and Capt. Troup was sent back without any definite reply. He was evidently much puzzled as to what he should find to say to the Wuzeer, who would expect a favourable result to his mission. We were much vexed to learn that several boxes, filled with letters and necessaries for the prisoners, had been plundered on the road from Jellalabad.

After an hour's rest, Capt. Troup went on to the Bala Hissar, having travelled forty-five miles since morning.

July 28th. — Capt. Troup came in from the Bala Hissar, to prepare Capt. Lawrence to accompany him on a second trip to Jellalabad. He told us that Akber was, as might have been expected, much disappointed at Gen. Pollock's refusal to conclude the treaty in writing; and so anxious was Akber to bring the matter to a favourable close, that he offered to release us all at once, if Capt. Troup would only guarantee that Gen. Pollock should act up to his word, and forthwith return to India. This offer Capt. Troup could not, of course, accept, knowing, as he did full well, the intention of the General to advance. The sole object of this mission seemed to be, to reiterate Akber's acceptance of the proffered terms, and his desire that Gen. Pollock should at once sign a written document, to prevent any misunderstanding, immediately on receipt of which the prisoners would be set at liberty.*

* Lord Ellenborough's views would appear to be explained by the following extract from the letter of Gen. Pollock, dated, 29th July 1842. Parl. Pap. No. 435. "These circumstances (the collecting of all the prisoners into Mahomed Akber's individual keeping) afford better hopes of the ultimate recovery of all the prisoners: but I must impress upon you, that no trust whatever is to be placed in any Affghan; and that all military operations must proceed as if no negotiation was in progress.

"When every gun, and colour, and military trophy, and every prisoner within the reach and power of the de facto government of Cabool, has been surrendered to you, then, and not till then, you may give orders suited to a state of returning peace."

July 29th.—Capts. Lawrence and Troup had an interview with Akber. He had just heard that Gen. Nott was preparing to advance on Cabul, and declared in great wrath before the whole durbar that the first movement of either army towards Cabul should be the signal for our removal to Toorkistan, where he would distribute us as slaves to the different chiefs. He was loud in his condemnation of Gen. Pollock, whom he suspected of deceiving him. To show, however, his determination to leave the General no handle against him, he released Mohun Lall, and restored to him 18,000 rupees that had been taken from him. This he did in consequence of Gen. Pollock having expressed great displeasure at the seizure of that individual. Having received their final instructions, the two officers departed at night for Jellalabad.

This negotiation, although commenced by Gen. Pollock in the humane desire to accomplish our liberation by peaceable means, seemed now, by the sudden turn that had taken place, likely to plunge us into a dangerous dilemma,—Mahomet Akber being notorious for stopping at no atrocity, when his angry passions were once aroused, as we knew they soon would be, when he should hear of the advance of both generals, with their overwhelming forces.

There seems to have been a mutual unwillingness to sign and seal. For some interesting illustrations of this subject, see App. C.—EDITOR.

In fact, we now fully made up our minds that death or slavery would soon be our probable lot, unless Providence should interfere to prevent it; which, indeed, was our best and only spring of hope.

August 2d. — A shock of earthquake at 3 P.M., accompanied by a loud rumbling noise. The flies by day and the mosquitoes by night swarmed to such a degree, as to banish all rest and enjoyment.

Capt. Conolly was this day taken seriously ill.

We were informed that Gen. Pollock had addressed a letter to Khan Shereen Khan, Kuzzilbash, and other chiefs, promising them a free pardon on condition of their preventing our removal from Cabul, and threatening, on the other hand, to raze the city to the ground, in case of our being carried off by Akber.

August 7th. — Poor Conolly breathed his last at half-past twelve this morning, sincerely lamented by us all. His amiable character had speedily converted those, who formerly had only been slight acquaintances, into warm friends; and his merits as a public officer gave early promise of a distinguished and useful career. By the Affghans he was universally respected; and, with the abundant information he possessed on all matters connected with the late deplorable events, his death at this crisis may be deemed a public loss. But for his influence and exertions, the detachment of sick Europeans, left behind at Cabul under Lieut. Evans, would long ago have been starved to death, or destroyed by violence. Large sums were advanced for their support and protection by various individuals, on the security of his bare word; and both he and the other hostages had refused to avail themselves of several opportunities to escape to India, out of consideration to the above-mentioned detachment, who would then have been exposed to the cruelty of the merciless mob. Capt. John Connolly, with his two elder brothers, Arthur and Edward, accompanied Sir John Keane's army into Affghanistan in 1839, and all three were speedily advanced to political employment by their distinguished relative, Sir William Macnaghten. A bright prospect of wealth and distinction lay before them. In the course of three years, one was shot through the heart at the assault of a fort in Kohistan—one died in an Affghan prison—and the eldest, the celebrated traveller, is supposed to have experienced a similar fate in a prison at Bokhara, to which city he had been enticed by the king, and, being lured into the trap, was immediately shut up in a loathsome dungeon, in company with Col. Stoddart. The latter officer, it will be remembered, was sent on a mission to Bokhara, in 1838, by the British Envoy at the court of Persia. Having innocently excited the displeasure of the king, than whom a more execrable tyrant never existed, he was shut up for several months in a well, full of disgusting vermin and noxious reptiles, and would eventually have been buried alive, had he not at length so far given way to human weakness, as to make an outward profession of Mahomedanism. After this he was restored to liberty, and became a great favourite at court, until the news of our fatal disasters at Cabul reached the ears of the king, who, supposing that God had given over all infidels to destruction, again doomed poor Stoddart to be immured in a dungeon, where he was soon joined, as has been seen, by his countryman, Arthur Conolly. In a letter, which the latter managed soon afterwards to write to his brother John, it was stated that himself and his fellow prisoner had been without change of raiment for upwards of eighty days, — that poor Stoddart was reduced to a skeleton, and eaten up with vermin; and that, unless they should be released soon, a miserable death must be their inevitable fate. Authentic intelligence has since been received of the death of Conolly, but of his companion in misery nothing has been heard.* It may not be generally known that Col. Stoddart was one of the most able, patriotic, and noble-minded soldiers that the British army ever produced; an ornament to his profession, and an honour to his country. All who knew him will readily acknowledge the justice of this encomium, and will join in lamenting that such a man should be sacrificed with impunity to the savage whim of a petty Oriental despot.

August 9th. — Mahomed Akber having promised to send Capt. Conolly's body for burial to Jellalabad, Major Pottinger sent to inquire this morning when it was to start, and received for answer from Akber that, "until Pollock should make peace, neither living nor dead should be suffered to go." The body was, therefore, buried this evening in the garden adjoining the fort. Capts. Troup and Lawrence returned from Jellalabad, and spent the night in the Bala Hissar.

August 10th. — The above-named officers rejoined us this morning, and informed us that their mission had led to no useful result. Gen. Pollock still demanded that all the prisoners should be sent down immediately, which Akber as positively refused to do without a written agreement. The crisis of our fate was consequently nigh at hand. About this time Mahomed Akber, having made several fruitless attempts to collect revenue in the Zoormut valley, at last sent the Meer Waiz, or high priest, thither for the purpose; but "his holiness" met with so little respect on this unpopular mission, that his horse was stolen, and he was obliged to return to Cabul on foot. Akber, demanding that the animal should be restored, was told that the owner must "come and fetch him." Such is royalty in Affghanistan. If Akber's merits as a ruler may be judged by the following anecdote, the future prospect of Affghanistan under his sway are poor indeed. Shortly after his last assumption of power, under the title of Wuzeer, some Lohannee merchants, whose trade had been entirely stopped by the late anarchy, ventured to Cabul with a few goods, to feel their way. Akber no sooner heard of their arrival, than he sent for them to his house,—bought up all their stock—paid them honestly—gave them dresses of honour—and, having urged them to return shortly with their richest wares, dismissed them to their homes rejoicing. Of course they gave out every where that such a first-rate fellow as Akber had never before appeared in any age or country. No time was lost in despatching a valuable cafila from Dera Ishmael Khun to Cabul, which was accompanied by many of the richest Lohannees in person. Akber's eager eye was on the look-out for their coming; and scarcely had they set foot within the city, before he pounced upon them like a hawk upon his prey, despoiled them of all their merchandize, and levied a heavy fine upon the chiefs of the party.

* The death of both these unfortunate officers is now beyond reasonable doubt.—ED.

August 11th.—We were thrown into no slight dismay this morning by the sudden stoppage of our supplies. No time was lost in sending information to Akber, when it was discovered that the nazir, or steward, employed to supply us, being desirous to obtain payment for past expenses, had adopted this method of reminding Akber of his claims. The matter was soon settled, and our minds, as well as bodies, relieved. It was reported to us that an English officer had been seized in the disguise of a butcher in the Cabul bazar. This afterwards turned out to be a hajee, whom a thirst for adventure had brought from Arabia, viâ India, and being very fair, he was mistaken for an European. Some would have it that he was a Russian spy. This morning Mahomed Akber placed the sacred person of Futtu Jung, his royal master, in durance vile, having intercepted a letter from him to Gen.

Pollock, urging the latter to march up at once, when all would be well; but warning him that, if he delayed much longer, an army would be collected to oppose him.

August 12th.—Major Pottinger, together with the five hostages, joined us, bag and baggage, from the Bala Hissar, by command of Akber, who rudely told his people to “take those dogs away.” This we supposed to be preliminary to our removal to Bameean or elsewhere. Mrs. Anderson was pronounced in imminent danger to-night.

August 13th.—Lawrence waited on Akber to ask him to give us two days’ warning before taking us off; but he was told that we must be content with one hour’s notice. Akber also declared that all further negotiation with Gen. Pollock for our release being at an end, he should permit no more correspondence to take place between us and our friends. He intended, however, as a last resource, to write a letter to Lord Ellenborough direct.

He mentioned having heard that Gen. Nott was positively en route from Candahar by the road of Dera Ishmael Khan; but whether he would turn off to Cabul, or pursue that road to India, was at present a mystery. Should his destination prove to be Cabul, we must be prepared to be hurried off to some far distant country. Such was the information brought us by Capt. Lawrence.

August 16th.—Futty Jung, of whose death by violence we had been hourly expecting to hear, was so fortunate as to effect his escape last night from Mahomed Akber's clutches. The latter, it was said, immediately despoiled the prince's wife and sisters of all their jewels.

August 17th.—Mrs. Smith, a poor European widow, servant to Mrs. Trevor, died of fever. Scarcely a single lady, officer, soldier, or child, had now escaped the disease, and we began to resemble a company of ghosts on a visit from the other world.

August 19th.—Our stock of medicines being by this time almost entirely exhausted, Capt. Troup went to urge Akber to send a list of our wants to Jellalabad, which, however, he positively refused to do, so long as Gen. Pollock continued to treat him as an enemy; but he promised that sufficient carriage should be provided for us all, in case of a march. Our servants were now strictly prohibited from going to the city, in consequence of their spreading reports to Akber's detriment, and there is no doubt that the inhabitants were by this time perfectly sick of their new ruler, and were longing for the re-establishment of British influence.

At midnight there was a thunder-clap in the hill above us, which so shook the house as to be at first mistaken for an earthquake ; and the rain fell so suddenly, that Captain Boyd, who happened to be sleeping on the roof, had no time to escape, and was drenched to the skin in his bed.

August 23d. — The report was prevalent of an action having taken place near Gundamuck, from which several Affghans were said to have returned to Cabul wounded. Mahomed Akber, we learned, was at last preparing in earnest to meet Gen. Pollock in the field.

Great was our surprise this morning, and unfeigned our delight, at the unlooked-for arrival amongst us of the nine officers taken prisoners at Ghuznee on the capitulation of the garrison of that fortress. They were, Col. Palmer, Capts. Alston and Poett, Lieuts. Harris, Nicholson, and Williams, of the 27th N. I., and Capt. Burnet and Lieut. Crawford, of the Shah's service. The joy of the meeting was mutual, as they had heard most extravagant accounts of our ill treatment, as had we of theirs ; and it was a satisfaction to find that matters had not been quite so bad as represented. On comparing notes, however, we found that their treatment had been much more harsh than our own, inasmuch as they had been kept closely shut up in a small room, without the advantage of air and exercise; Col. Palmer, too, had once been subjected to torture, to force from him a disclosure as to the treasure, which he was suspected to have buried in the citadel. They were hurried off hither on the 20th, during the absence of Shumshooden Khan, the governor, who had marched towards Candahar, to oppose Gen. Nott; and it was supposed that Mahomed Akber had taken advantage of that chief's absence, to carry them away by stealth, through the agency of his own friends. They arrived in the Bala Hissar last night, and were received with great courtesy by Akber, who inquired closely into the treatment which they had experienced. Akber and Shumshooden had not been on good terms for some time past. It will be remembered that Ghuznee was invested by the insurgents early in November, 1841. The city was defended for several weeks with great spirit, but the enemy gained admittance through the treachery of the Affghan inhabitants, by a hole made through the wall of a house adjoining the rampart. The enemy once in the town, the garrison was obliged, after several ineffectual endeavours to dislodge the overwhelming foe from the posts of vantage they occupied, to retire within the citadel. There they held out bravely, until their water failed; when, being hemmed in by snow, and with no possibility of retreating, they had no other course left but to capitulate or perish. Gen. Elphinstone had sent a written order to Col. Palmer to evacuate the place, in compliance with the treaty concluded at Cabul. To this order Col. Palmer attended only when he had no other course left, and by so doing he saved the greater portion of his garrison. No blame can possibly attach to him; and though, as a matter of form, he must be tried, his honourable acquittal is certain: Affghan treachery was as conspicuous at Ghuznee as at Cabul. On an appointed day the garrison marched out to a quarter of the city allotted for their reception, Shumshoodeen Khan standing pledged to regard their lives and liberty. Lieut. Lumsden remained behind the rest with the rear guard, and was in a house with his wife awaiting the moment to march, when the murderous mob burst into the place and put the whole party to death. The regiment, too, after being separated from its officers, was called upon to surrender its arms, which several sepoy refusing to do, they were slaughtered and the rest made captives. Such was the melancholy tale to which we now listened for the first time.*

August 25th.—In the morning we were told that we should probably march at night. We therefore packed up our few necessities, and got ready for a start. In vain we indulged in glimmering hopes of a rescue. Too well we knew that no one had sufficient energy to attempt it. In the evening Captain Troup came from Akber, to see us off. Major Pottinger, being no favourite with the Wuzeer, was sent back to us; and Capt. Bygrave was ordered to remain with him in the Major's stead.

At dusk our cattle arrived, and kujawurs (camel-litters) for the sick. Mrs. Anderson and Mrs. Trevor, being too seriously ill to undertake a journey, without incurring certain death, were, with the utmost difficulty, allowed to remain behind with their families, and with Dr. Campbell as their medical attendant. All the rest, sick and otherwise, were forced to be on the alert; and at half-past ten P.M., the moon being well risen, we started,—some in kujawurs, some on horseback. Our escort consisted of between 300 and 400 men, armed with muskets, and formed into a regiment, under the command of one Saleh Mahomed Khan, formerly a subadar in Capt. Hopkins's Affghan levy, who had rendered himself famous, or rather infamous, by deserting with all his men to Dost Mahomed at Bameean, in 1840. About half-a-dozen Hindoostanees, with bugles, fifes, and drums, formed a rude sort of band, and marched off in state at the head of the regiment. At another time we might have indulged in merriment at their expense; but now we were too sick in heart and frame to exercise our sense of the ludicrous. Passing through the Logur gorge we crossed the Logur river by a bridge, and, pursuing a westerly course, reached the rich valley of Chardeh.

* See Appendix for Lieut. Crawford's own account.—ED.

August 26th.—At 9 A.M. we came to a halt at Killa Kazee on the Ghuznee road, after a journey of about sixteen miles. Part of our way was through narrow lanes, overhung by mulberry trees, under which the camels could not find a passage without subjecting the luckless inmates of the kujawurs to very rough treatment from the branches. Mrs. Mainwaring had the skin of her arm rubbed off in this manner, and some of the other ladies got severe knocks on the head; the heedless surwan, or camel-driver, meanwhile pursuing his course most philosophically, taking no notice whatever of the accidents in his rear, except now and then to give a malicious grin of satisfaction. I should have mentioned that most of the ladies now, for the first time, adopted in part the Affghan dress, the outer garment of which consists of a large and white sheet completely shrouding the body, to which is attached the bourkha, or veil, of white muslin, with only a small open space of network opposite the eyes, to peep through.

Hitherto they had all preferred adhering to their own costume, but now that they were going into unknown regions, where it would be desirable to attract as little notice as possible, the adoption of the national dress, when travelling, became a matter of expediency. At Killa Kazee we found Sultan Jan halting to breakfast, en route to Ghuznee, with about 50 followers, with full purpose to annihilate Gen. Nott. He having possession of the serai, our whole party were obliged to seek shelter under the scanty shade of three or four mulberry trees. Soon after Sultan Jan's departure, one of the officers went to the serai to beg for a room for the ladies and children, but was repelled with scorn, and asked, "what he, an infidel, meant by entering the place with his shoes on?" At noon we were joined by Dr. Berwick, with about thirty European soldiers of the sick detachment, under Lieut. Evans, H. M. 44th Foot. That officer, with Lieut. Haughton of the late Goorkha regiment, came up a few hours afterwards, both in a very sickly state. It will be remembered that poor Haughton lost his right arm from a wound received at Charekar, during the gallant defence of that place, in November, 1841. He had suffered the torture of a second amputation, the first having been too hastily performed, and his subsequent sufferings had been severe. It is to be sincerely hoped that his unfortunate case will meet with the generous consideration of the Indian government. Major Pottinger received a letter to-day, by stealth, from Major Rawlinson, political agent at Candahar, informing him of Gen. Nott's advance on Cabul.

No provisions were served out the whole day to man or beast. In the evening Saleh Mahomed's band committed deliberate murder on some old regimental tunes.

August 27th.—We set out again at about 2 A. M. The road lay over the hill pass of Suffed Khak, into the small but beautiful valley of Maidan. We halted for a few minutes under a splendid grove of spreading poplars. About a mile beyond this we encamped at Kat Ashroo, near the banks of a clear crystal stream, shaded by lofty poplars. Lower down the declivity, about the middle of the valley (which was here about a mile wide), there ran a small river carrying fertility along its banks. Picturesque clumps of poplars and willows here and there broke the view, the intervening space being filled up with green and yellow fields of cultivation. Bare and rugged mountains every where bounded the landscape. Here, as we reclined our wearied limbs, and looked around on the smiling scene which every where charmed the eye, we wondered that the inhabitants of so favoured a spot should be insensible to the blessings of peace; — that the loveliness of nature, and the quiet occupations of husbandry, should have so little power to soften the heart, and subdue the fierce passions of savage men, who here, as elsewhere throughout Affghanistan, have, like the untameable descendants of Esau, “their hand against every man, and every man’s hand against them.” We were told that the whole of this seemingly peaceful valley was so distracted by blood feuds, that the inhabitants scarcely dared to venture a few hundred yards from their own dwelling.

August 28th. — We moved on again at 2 A. M. The road continued up the valley, which, if possible, improved in beauty as we proceeded. We halted within 4 miles of Sur Chusma, at Tak Khana, in a field bounded on one side by shady poplars, and on the other by a fine clear stream. This being the high road to Balk, we constantly met groups of asses laden with merchandise for the Cabul market, among which we could not be unconscious of the presence of assafoetida, which diffused its powerful and oppressive odour far and wide. Grapes, apples, pears, and apricots, were brought to us in great plenty for sale from the villages, and furnished a seasonable refreshment after our journey of about 14 miles. No tents were pitched, and the fever patients suffered greatly from the damp air at night.

August 29th. — We started at daybreak. A short march of nine miles to Oonai, within two miles of which place we passed a well-built fort, belonging to a Kuzzilbash chief, who, having heard of our approach, had kindly prepared a quantity of small cakes, which were distributed to us as we passed along. The road had a gradual ascent the whole way. We had now entered the country of the Huzarehs, a hardy independent race of people inhabiting the extensive mountainous tracts, which extend from that spur of the Hindoo Koosh which forms the western barrier of Kohistan, to within a few miles of Herat. They are divided into sects, one professing the Soonee, the other the Sheeah tenets. The Kuzzilbashes of Cabul, being Sheeahs, exercise considerable influence over the Huzarehs of that persuasion, who hold the best parts of the Bameean valley and its neighbourhood. The knowledge of this fact gave us some hopes of a rise in our favour, in the event of Akber sustaining any signal defeat, the Kuzzilbashs having all along been our secret friends.

August 30th. — We pursued our march at 3 A. M., and after the first mile we commenced ascending the Oonai pass, consisting of several steep ascents and descents for five miles. Here we came in sight of the Koh-i-baba, a lofty snow-clad mountain of the Indian Caucasus. The latter part of the road was more level, descending gradually to the bed of the Helmund river, on the right bank of which we encamped at Gurdundewal. The Helmund was here about twenty-five yards broad, at this season, and about two feet deep. Some of the guard had a skirmish with a few Huzareh thieves, one of whom was killed, and two taken prisoners. The march to-day was about twelve miles, but very tedious. A beautiful species of Salvia was very abundant.

August 31st. — We started about 4 P. M. The road lay for six miles up the stony bed of a large stream, one of the tributaries of the Helmund. Here we passed a chalybeate spring, the water of which was greatly discoloured, and sparkled like soda water, which it very much resembled in taste. For the rest of the way we had gentle ascents. We passed much barley cultivation still green in the ear, and encamped in the narrow valley of Kar-zar, where we found a fort in a state of siege, and the hill-sides covered with Huzarehs. It seems that the Chief of Gurdun-dewal demanded the toll of the road as his right, and was enforcing his claims with his armed retainers.

September 1st. — We ascended the pass of Hajeeguk, the summit of which is 12,400 feet above the sea. The ascent was gradual and easy enough, but the descent very steep and long. About three miles led us into the valley of Kaloo, studded with a few poor-looking forts, and tolerably well cultivated with wheat and barley; but the crops seemed very backward, being still green in the ear. In these cold regions winter sometimes treads on the heels of summer, pushing autumn out of the way altogether; and a severe frost will destroy the fruits of the husbandman's industry, before the grain is yet ripe for the sickle. We crossed two broad and foaming torrents, the last a tributary of the Oxus. Boulders of granite were of frequent occurrence. The Koh-i-baba was now within a few miles on our left, and is probably composed of that rock. About the tenth mile brought us to the foot of the Kaloo pass, where the camp was pitched close to a small fort. A Hindoo servant of Col. Palmer, having offended some of our guard, was with difficulty rescued from a violent death.

September 2d.—At daybreak we commenced the ascent of the Kaloo mountain, forming part of the principal chain of the Indian Caucasus. The road being unsafe for camels, all the Kujawurs were filled with baggage, that the ladies and sick might ride on the ponies. The length of the ascent was about two miles, and the road very narrow and precipitous in many places. The summit is 13,400 feet above the sea. The view to the north presented a boundless chaos of barren mountains, probably unequalled in wild terrific grandeur.

Bameean and its caves were dimly discernible in the distance. Some of the sick soldiers, who were forced to walk, were quite exhausted; and one poor fellow, who was too weak even to sit on a horse, it was found necessary to bind on a camel. The descent was very tedious and steep, and almost four miles in length. At the foot of the hill we enjoyed a few minutes' rest, under the shade of some old willows by the side of a delicious stream. These willows had straight spreading branches, and were totally unlike any others I had ever seen. We now entered a small cultivated valley with two small forts. Encamped at Killa Topchee.

September 3d.—Saleh Mahomed Khan made his appearance this morning in a European officer's blue frock coat, with shoulder-scales; and his second-in-command blazed forth in an infantry officer's full-dress scarlet uniform. This display of finery must have been intended to make a favourable impression on the inhabitants of Bameean.

Our route lay down a narrow cultivated valley enclosed by low hills of red indurated clay, assuming occasionally the most fantastic forms, until we reached the Bameean river, flowing eastward, which we crossed by a bridge, and then commenced to ascend the valley down which it takes its course. The cultivation along its banks was richer than we expected to see, and the Tir-hiskh, or barberry, grew wild in great abundance, in company with a species of Hippophæe, bearing a plentiful crop of small bright yellow berries. Seven miles more took us to Bameean, the approach to which was very remarkable. The same clay hills lined the valley on either side, alternating in shade from deep red to bluish grey, and forming here and there long lines of perpendicular cliff.

The vast assemblage of caves, for which the place is celebrated, became visible at a great distance, and the ancient citadel of Gulguleh, with its lofty ruined towers, crowning an isolated pyramidal hill, rising behind the scene, formed a striking and imposing object. We passed several small Affghan forts, and halted at one somewhat better than the rest, where we had just got our tents pitched and our breakfast in a state of forwardness, when we were peremptorily ordered to remount and move a few miles higher up the valley. We were very loth to obey; but neither sulky looks, nor open remonstrances, had any effect on Saleh Mahomed, and onward we travelled in that sort of temper peculiar to hungry men disappointed of their morning's meal. On our way we passed close by the famous colossal images, sculptured in a cliff, which was about 300 feet in height, and perforated with hundreds of caves rising one above the other in irregular stories. The first figure we passed was that of a female, 120 feet high; the body covered with a clever representation of thin drapery; the position easy and natural. The upper part of the face is entirely destroyed.

About 400 yards further on, in the same cliff, stands the male figure, about 160 feet high, and clothed in a similar fashion with a light drapery. The mouth alone remains a perfect feature of the face, and is well formed. Each figure is sculptured in a deep recess, having an ornamented ceiling, on which are painted what seem intended to represent ancient kings and queens, and a variety of emblematic personages, whose mystery it would be difficult, at this remote date, to clear up to the satisfaction of the Society of Antiquaries. There are openings at the head and feet of both images, which are connected by galleries and stairs cut inside the rock. The whole long line of excavations forms a wonderful scene, and carries the fancy back thousands of years, to a date at which a widely different race peopled the country from any now existing.

A few of the caves were still inhabited by the lower orders. About a mile beyond this spot we halted at a small fort, in which the ladies were offered quarters, but of so unprepossessing an appearance, that they earnestly requested permission to remain in the tents, preferring solar heat, with pure air, to the darkness and filth of a mud hovel confined within close walls. The place was therefore made over to the poor soldiers, to whom it was really acceptable.

The soaring snow-clad peaks of Koh-i-baba have a majestic aspect from this point of view; although from the south side they had somewhat disappointed our expectations.

The ancient city of Gulguleh was destroyed by Khenghis Khan in the thirteenth century. Its ruins cover a considerable extent of ground. The place then sunk into a state of insignificance, from which it has never emerged; and the scanty population is now dispersed over the valley, among a few small forts belonging to Huzareh chiefs.

This evening Saleh Mahomed Khan boasted aloud before his men, that Gen. Nott's force had been entirely cut up at Ghuznee, by Shumshooden. This was probably intended to check desertion, to which many of them seemed much inclined, in consequence of irregular pay and scanty food.

The only fuel here attainable is a small round prickly plant, as impenetrable as a hedgehog, called by the natives "Khola-i-Huzareh," or the Huzareh's Cap. It seemed a species of acanthophyllum. The portion served out to each mess barely sufficed to boil a kettle.

September 4th.—Saleh Mahomed took Capt. Lawrence this morning to look at another fort, which he proposed as a habitation for the ladies and officers; but Lawrence told him that, although it might be fit for Affghans and cattle, it certainly was not so for us,—being full of filth and vermin. Saleh Mahomed, upon this, declared that, if any of us should escape, he would kill the rest. He was evidently anxious, for some reason or another, to get us into a place of security, and much annoyed by our squeamishness on the subject. A little rain fell during the night.

Sept. 5th.—I obtained leave to visit the caes and images, one of the guard accompanying me. A walk of one mile brought me to the base of the male figure, the size of which on a near approach seemed really stupendous. Along the sides of the recess, in which it is carved, are ranges of large circular chambers with vaulted ceilings. The image has been greatly mutilated by cannon shot, for which act of religious zeal credit is given to Nadir Shah. One circumstance struck me as remarkable,—which was, that in all those parts where the limbs are deficient, there are regular rows of small holes, in which pieces of wood have been stuck, for the evident purpose of making plaster adhere. From this it would appear either that an attempt had been made to restore the mutilated parts by these means, or that the figure was originally only partially sculptured in the rock, and the deficiencies made up with plaster in the manner I have mentioned. From the apparent facility with which, from the softness of the rock, the image might have been chiselled perfect at the first, I incline to the belief that an attempt has been since made to repair the work of destruction, during some temporary success of the heathen inhabitants against their Mahomedan invaders. The cliff is composed of that species of conglomerate known by the name of pudding-stone, consisting of very hard clay, thickly studded with various kinds of rounded pebbles.

I ascended to the top of the female image by a series of stairs and galleries, the labour of excavating which through the solid rock must have been immense. From the main gallery others branched off in all directions, communicating with distant chambers. While sitting on the lady's crown, enjoying a splendid view of the country, I was joined by some of the inhabitants, who were very inquisitive to know what was written in our books concerning the place. I told them it was generally supposed that Alexander the Great founded a city there. His fame is diffused so generally among all classes in Affghanistan, that I was pretty certain my information would prove satisfactory. After a long chat on late events, these men assured me that the whole population of the valley were favourable to the English, whose rule they preferred to any other, and that all the chiefs were most anxious we should be released and peace be restored. On my return I found Saleh Mahomed's band hammering away at their only tune, with extraordinary zeal and perseverance, to an admiring crowd of strangers, who seemed perfectly entranced by the brilliant performance. The Affghans have a decided taste for music, and quickly discern the beauties of a tune to which a Hindoo would listen with utter indifference. At Cabul the band-stand of Her Majesty's 13th was a favourite resort with the respectable classes, and their own national melodies, when chaunted in the open air, are by no means displeasing to an European ear. — Gunner M'Crae, of the Artillery, was buried this evening.

September 6th.—I accompanied Lady Sale on a second trip to the caves. Her Ladyship, who is well skilled in numismatics, at the first glance pronounced the figures painted on the ceiling over the images to be identical with those on many Sassanian coins. This, if really the case, may throw considerable light on the history of these curious relics of antiquity. After our return to camp, a feu-de-joie was fired by the guard for the evacuation of Candahar by our troops.

September 8th.—Several desertions took place from among the men of our guard, and Saleh Mahomed at last insisted on our moving into a fort for better security. One of his subordinate officers, having spoken insolently on parade, was condemned to part with his long black beard, and the barber was summoned to carry the sentence into effect before the men. This is the greatest indignity which a Mahomedan can suffer, and the fellow looked not a little disgusted, but was forced to submit amidst the jeers of his comrades.

Sept. 9th.—A fort being reported ready for our reception, we moved into it. The interior space was crowded with low and filthy mud hovels, lately the abode of sheep and oxen. On entering our new apartments, we found ourselves for a few minutes in total darkness, until, our eyes becoming reconciled to the gloom, we discerned small holes in the roof, intended to represent windows, through which a few questionable rays of light struggled for admittance. In Affghanistan air and light are considered superfluous luxuries in a dwelling-house: but, to make up for these deficiencies, our olfactory nerves were brought into active exercise.

Although very much disgusted in heart, we had no alternative but to grin and bear it. Five respectable Lohanee merchants, who happened to be strolling near the walls of the fort, were seized by Saleh Mahomed, on pretence of having been discovered holding secret communication with us, but in reality for the purpose of extorting money from them.

Sept. 10th.—Zoolficar Khan, the governor of Bameean, came early in the morning to demand the release of the Lohanee merchants. Saleh Mahomed, however, assumed very consequential airs, and said he would imprison the Governor himself should he be convicted of a similar offence. After much bravado of this kind, he released the men, and Zoolficar Khan took his departure, not over-pleased at his uncourteous reception.

Sept. 11th. — The crisis, which we had so long been anticipating with dread, at length arrived. A decisive order was received by Saleh Mahomed, from Mahomed Akber Khan, for our instant march to Kooloom. All hope of deliverance seemed now at an end, and we endeavoured calmly to resign ourselves to a fate that seemed inevitable. But Providence had mercifully ordained otherwise.—At 10 A.M., to our unbounded astonishment, Major Pottinger came to inform us that Saleh Mahomed Khan had offered to make us over to the British General, on condition of our securing to him the payment of 20,000 rupees in ready cash, and 1000 rs. per mensem for life. Major Pottinger, together with Capts. Lawrence and Johnson, had immediately closed with his offer, and had signed their names to a document, whereby they guaranteed the payment of the above reward. To this Capt. Mackenzie, on becoming acquainted with the circumstances, became likewise a party; and the rest of us (with the exception of one, who refused to co-operate, on the ground of the measure being *precipitate, but who did, I believe, afterwards join in it,) signed another paper, in which we stood pledged to save those four officers from loss, in case the government should refuse to sanction the expenditure. We afterwards learned that we were in a great measure indebted for this sudden turn of affairs in our favour to Ali Kuzul Khan, and other Kuzzilbash chiefs, in concert with Mohun Lall (late Moonshee to Sir Alexander Burnes), who sent Syud Moorteezzer to Bameean to negotiate with Saleh Mahomed for our release, Mohun Lall promising a liberal reward in the name of the British government.† Saleh Mahomed's offer to Major Pottinger was the result of the Syud's mission, which the news of Gen. Pollock's triumphant advance on Cabul tended, without doubt, to facilitate. It also fortunately happened that Saleh Mahomed's family at this time inhabited the Chundoul, and the Kuzzilbashes threatened to visit on them any injury he should suffer to befall us, the fear of which had induced

* Major Pottinger says, that Major General Shelton and Colonel Palmer declined affixing their signatures to any such paper, lest they should implicate themselves with Mahomed Akber. See his letter to General Pollock, Parl. Pap. No. 512. — EDITOR.

† See Mohun Lall's letter, Appendix E. — EDITOR.

one of his brothers to come out to Bameean, for the purpose of prevailing on him to accede to the terms proffered for our release. The bait proved, as has been seen, irresistible, and we were all now, with him at our head, fairly embarked in the dangerous vortex of an Affghan conspiracy. The first point to be settled was, how to deal with a man called the Meer Akhor, who had accompanied our party from Cabul, as a sort of political colleague to Saleh Mahomed Khan. He was well known to be one of Mahomed Akber's most faithful and confidential adherents; of his co-operation we could, therefore, entertain no hope, and of his continued presence, as he commanded a party of 100 Ghiljie horse, it was desirable to get rid as soon as possible. It was accordingly contemplated to seize his person on the first fair occasion that might offer. In the evening Saleh Mahomed paraded his men, when they were very clamorous for pay, and declared their intention to proceed no further, unless their wants were supplied. This little scene was probably got up as a blind for the Meer Akhor.

Sept. 12th. — At an early hour Saleh Mahomed's flag of defiance was displayed on one of the towers of our fort. A supply of money being much wanted, to keep the troops in good humour, a cafila was intercepted from Bokhara, and about 400 rupees extorted by way of tax. Major Pottinger next adopted the bold step of appointing a new governor of the province, in the name of the British government. Presents and promises were at the same time liberally dispensed to the neighbouring Huzareh chiefs, who almost unanimously declared in our favour.

In the evening Zoolficar Khan himself (the old governor) thought it advisable to send and tender his submission. Major Pottinger, in reply, reminded him that he owed his advancement originally to the English, and now had an opportunity to prove himself a friend, in which case his reward should be proportionate to his services. At night we were assured that the whole Huzareh population of the valley were on our side, and ready to take up arms against Akber, even should he appear with a thousand horse to back him.

Altogether the plot prospered beyond our most sanguine expectations.

Sept. 13th. — The two small forts at this time occupied by ourselves and the European soldiers, and which were only one hundred yards apart, being deemed by Saleh Mahomed ill-adapted for defence, he proposed removing us to another fort about two miles lower down the valley, which prevented our making immediate preparations for a siege.

As Mahomed Akber's arrival was to be hourly expected (in flight from Gen. Pollock's army), we were impatient to get every thing in proper trim against a surprise ; and it seemed to us that Saleh Mahomed was much too dilatory in taking the necessary precautions. We now learned, for the first time, that he had yesterday received a second letter from Mahomed Akber, urging him to hurry us off to Kooloom without delay, and instructing him to put to death all who, from sickness or the want of a conveyance, might be unable to travel. It is but fair to add that none of our party actually saw this letter, and that we have since had reason to doubt whether Saleh Mahomed really received any such murderous order. The story was most probably an invention of his own, to enhance the value of his services.

The Meer Akhor had meanwhile become aware of what was passing, and wisely took himself off to the fort of Zoolficar Khan. In the course of the day he sent to assure Major Pottinger that he was his very dutiful servant. Saleh Mahomed, distrusting his professions and those of Zoolficar Khan, kept the troops under arms all the morning, and paraded them about for two or three hours, with drums beating and colours flying, hoping by this display of strength to intimidate his adversaries.

Some members of the Meer Waiz's family, amongst whom were several females, passing along the road en route from Cabul to Toorkistan, Saleh Mahomed ordered them to halt. Two men of the party, upon this, rode up to remonstrate. One grave, conceited Moollah was instantly pulled from his horse to the ground, where he lay for some minutes looking most ludicrously astounded; the soldiers meanwhile venting their abuse at the pitiful scoundrels, who, as they declared, "having been foremost in exciting their countrymen to rebel, were now sneaking off with their families to a place of safety, leaving their deluded followers to be destroyed."

After a short detention they were permitted to proceed on their way; Saleh Mahomed probably thinking it impolitic to offer any further indignity to relations of so powerful a personage as the High-Priest of Cabul. Saleh Mahomed, in the course of conversation with some of the officers to-day, said that he supposed we should no sooner find ourselves fairly out of his clutches, in the British camp, than we should turn round upon him and exclaim, "You be d—d!" (using the English words). Major Pottinger both to-day and yesterday wrote to communicate our situation to Gen. Pollock, of whose arrival at Cabul we now daily expected to hear.

Sept. 14th.—It being at length settled that we should remain in our present position, we lost no time in preparing the two forts for a siege. Our first step towards this was to raise a subscription amongst ourselves of 500 rupees, as a common fund for provisioning the two garrisons. Saleh Mahomed likewise busied himself in laying in supplies for his men. The water was turned into the ditches, and a promise was made of arms for officers and men, if procurable. Meanwhile we received ample encouragement from all quarters, and were assured that the whole country from Sir-i-chushm to Syghan was friendly to our cause. This evening several chiefs had a conference with Saleh Mahomed and Major Pottinger, when they solemnly commenced their proceedings by repeating the Futtiah, — a prayer used by the faithful on all important occasions, — and they concluded with an oath of fidelity to us throughout the present undertaking. Towards midnight we were all aroused from sleep by the drums beating to arms, and we rushed out in haste, making sure that Akber was in sight.

We were told that 100 horsemen had been discerned, in the direction of the caves, by Saleh Mahomed's brother, and that, on being challenged, they had returned no answer. All were soon on the alert, and skirmishing parties were sent out in all directions to reconnoitre. We spent an anxious hour, expecting every instant to be attacked, but all remained quiet; and, as the scouts reported the coast clear, we resumed our broken slumbers.

Sept. 5th.—This evening we heard that Gen. Nott had taken and destroyed Ghuznee; that Gen. Pollock's army was fast drawing near to Cabul; and that M. Akber was a fugitive in Kohistan. Saleh Mahomed, conceiving that the time had at length arrived when we might commence our retrograde movements with tolerable safety, gave us notice to be prepared for a march on the following morning. In the afternoon the Huzarehs brought us horses for sale, though at most exorbitant prices, and a few swords and muskets were distributed among the officers and men.

Sept. 16th.—With hearts fluttering between hope and anxiety, we issued forth from our comfortless prison, and at sunrise commenced our flight. The inhabitants of the several forts lined the road to witness our departure, and to express their good wishes for our success. Several of our party were still suffering from relapses of fever, and, sad to relate, a poor private of H. M. 44th expired on the journey. Retracing our steps down the Bameean valley, we reached our former encampment at Killa Topchee. Here a Persian letter to Major Pottinger's address was received, giving a confused and imperfect, but still very acceptable, detail of Gen. Pollock's victory at Tezeen. At night we were still further elated by the arrival of a note from Sir R. Shakespear, military secretary to Gen. Pollock, dated at Sir-ichushm, and stating that he had advanced thus far on his road to our relief, with a party of 600 Kuzzilbash horsemen.

Sept. 17th. — Recrossing the Kaloo mountain, we encamped near a fort about three miles from its base, where we had rested only a couple of hours, when a body of horse were descried descending into the valley down the distant pass of Hajeejuk. In an instant all were on the alert, straining our eyes to catch a glimpse of (as we fondly believed) our expected liberators; nor were our hopes disappointed.

The nearer approach of the party, as they crossed the valley, enabled us to recognise the friendly banner of the Kuzzilbash streaming in the air. Saleh Mahomed had by this time formed up his men in martial array, ready to receive friend or foe, as the case might be. A few minutes more of eager suspense elapsed, when Sir Richmond Shakespear, galloping up to where we stood, bade us rejoice at our accomplished delivery, and dissipated every doubt.

At length we felt the blessed assurance of freedom; the heavy burden which had oppressed our hearts for nine tedious months was removed; and from that moment we were altered beings. Our gallant countryman was greeted on our side with no boisterous cheers of triumph, for all seemed alike conscious that the utterance of such sounds would but inaptly express the deep feelings of gratitude, that agitated our inmost hearts. Our joy was too great, too overwhelming, for the tongue to utter, as it is for my feeble pen to describe. That we should have escaped unhurt, with so many delicate women, young children, and tender infants, through such numerous perils, fatigues, and privations, and above all, from the hands of such merciless enemies as Akbar Khan and his Giljye confederates, seemed at first too much for the senses to realize; nor could even the most thoughtless among us fail to recognize and acknowledge, in all that had befallen us, the distinguishing grace and protecting providence of a forbearing and merciful God. We now for the first time learned that Gen. Pollock had reached Cabul on the 15th instant, where one of his first acts had been to hasten the departure of the Kuzzilbashes to our aid, by a donation of 10,000

rupees. To pay this sum, Sir R. Shakespear had been despatched to the Chandoul, the Kuzzilbash quarter of Cabul, where finding a party in readiness to start for Bameean, and rightly judging that the presence among them of an English officer would quicken their energies and accelerate the completion of their designs, he forthwith determined to act on his own responsibility; and exchanging his English uniform for a respectable Affghan costume, he joined them in quest of his captive countrymen. Saleh Mahomed Khan, although at first somewhat jealous that the Kuzzilbashes should have deprived him of the sole credit of our release, was speedily reassured by the lavish praises of Sir Richmond, who, as a mark of the highest honour that a superior can pay to an inferior, lifted the turban from off his own head, and placed it on that of the Affghan.*

Sept. 18th. — Mahomed Akber and many of his most powerful adherents being still at large, it seemed highly probable that they would yet make a desperate effort to recover their lost prey, and that all their remaining influence would be exerted to intercept our flight.

Sir R. Shakespear consequently lost no time in forwarding to Gen. Pollock an earnest request that troops might be instantaneously sent out to our support, especially as the pass of Suffed Khak, through which we must pass, was reported to be occupied by a band of hostile marauders. It was at the same time determined that we should hasten forward by forced marches, for which every facility was liberally afforded by the Kuzzilbash chiefs, in supplying us with fresh horses, our own animals being too ill-conditioned for rapid progress.

* See Appendix F. for a letter from the liberated captives to Sir R. Shakespear, and his reply.

At dawn we accordingly resumed our march, and recrossing the Hajeejuk Pass, the summit of which was now intensely cold, we descended to the banks of the Helmund, stopping to refresh ourselves on the way with draughts of the mineral spring, which I have before mentioned. Some of our Kuzzilbash friends, being told that the water was medicinal, and seeing us drink it with so much apparent zest, immediately fancied it must be a sort of elixir vitæ, or sovereign specific for every human ailment, and tossed it down most greedily. One old fellow in particular, who declared himself to have been a martyr to rheumatism for several years, was in a perfect ecstasy of delight, and, having swallowed as much as would have slaked the thirst of an elephant, trotted on in the full belief that he had at length got rid of his enemy. It would have been cruel to undeceive him.

Sept. 19th. — Our next march was to Tak-khana, a distance of thirty miles. On the way some of us stopped for a few minutes to partake of some sour curds and sweet cakes, which a Kuzzilbash chief had prepared for us by the side of one of those small gushing rivulets, the gladdening murmur of whose crystal waters so constantly greets the traveller's ear throughout Affghanistan. After recrossing the Oonai Pass, we found the hospitable old chief, whose fort stands at the base (and whose attention to us on our journey up to Bameean, under far different circumstances, I have already recorded), awaiting our arrival under the shade of some poplars by the road-side, where carpets were spread for our reception, and some excellent tea was served out to us in small china cups, quite in the European fashion.

Here my friend Capt. Mackenzie being taken ill, I remained with him until evening, when our worthy old host insisted on escorting us to camp in person, the road being too unsafe to admit of our travelling alone. On the way we passed a peasant with some tempting-looking fish, on which the old gentleman having seen us cast a longing eye, immediately commenced bargaining for them; but, having no money on his person, he was obliged to pawn his snuff-box for the price. On our arrival in camp, he insisted on our accepting his purchase, and, as he was an inveterate snuff-taker, this little act of kindness must have cost him no small self-denial, and may not be deemed altogether unworthy of record. At night we obtained information that some hostile chief, with a thousand followers, had reached Kaloo, to intercept our flight a few hours after our departure, and would probably make an effort to overtake us. The Kuzzilbashes, apprehending a night attack, were desirous to remove the ladies into a fort, but we were overruled in this by Sir R. Shakespear, who seemed to think it not unlikely that his fair friends might turn rebellious at the bare idea of being again immured in an Affghan fort, even for one night. Fortunately, no foe appeared to disturb our repose.

Sept. 20th. — At early dawn we started for Argundee, distant twenty-five miles, where we had every hope of finding a British force on their route to our assistance. Once more we traversed the lovely valley of Maidan, and halted about half way, to refresh ourselves by the shady banks of a delicious stream, where we again did ample justice to the rude fare prepared for us by the Kuzzilbashes. Resuming our journey, we presently encountered an English officer, who gave us the welcome information that Gen. Sale's brigade was only a few miles distant on the road to meet us, and, on our shortly afterwards reaching the town of Kot-Ashroo, a body of H. M. 3d Dragoons, with a squadron of the 1st Bengal Cavalry, burst suddenly upon our view, picketed in some adjacent fields. To describe what followed I borrow a passage from one of my own letters to a friend: — "All doubt was now at an end; we were once more under the safeguard of British troops: Gen. Sale was there in person; and his happiness at regaining his long lost wife and daughter can be imagined; the gallant veteran's countenance was an index of his feelings, and apathetic indeed must have been the heart that failed to sympathize with his holy joy. The camp was still a few miles further on, and we formed a procession of glad spirits as we moved along towards the pass of Suffed-Kak, whose heights we could discern crowned with British bayonets. These we found to be a part of the brave 13th Light Infantry, who, as the ladies successively ascended the hill, raised three hearty cheers to each of them, — sounds never to be forgotten, producing a thrill of ecstasy through the whole frame. The Mountain guns, under Capt. Backhouse, wound up the scene with a royal salute." Fervent were our aspirations of praise to Heaven at this happy, and of late unlooked for, termination of all our hardships and anxieties. Surely never has the hand of Providence been more clearly discernible, than in the wonderful preservation of so many ladies and children, through scenes of a nature to quail the stoutest heart and injure the strongest constitution; but more particularly in restraining the wrath of savage men, whose intense hatred of us was only equalled by their unscrupulous cruelty, and who longed to wreak their revenge upon us for the wrongs, whether real or fancied, that they had suffered at the hands of our nation.

Our friends in camp at Argundee received us with overflowing kindness, and we soon found ourselves in circumstances far more favourable than we had known for nine tedious months of suffering and sorrow.

Sept. 21st.—We marched on with the brigade to Killa-Kazee, where we had only a few days before been received with insult and abuse. The very house, that then refused us a shelter, was now in flames; so that vengeance did not, in this instance, tarry long. At 2 p.m. we started for Gen. Pollock's camp, on the plain east of Cabul. Near the tomb of the Emperor Baber we passed Gen. Nott's camp. Our road lay thence through the city. The streets were almost empty, and an unnatural silence prevailed. What a contrast to the noise and bustle of former days! We passed the spot where Sir Alexander Burnes's house had stood. — It was now a heap of rubbish. — The garden, in which he took so much interest and pride, was a desolate waste. It was here that I had last enjoyed his fascinating society, as he pointed out to me the successful results of his labours and experiments, and looked forward with enthusiasm to the rapid amelioration of the country, through the agency of British enterprise and skill.

What an instructive lesson was now before me of the fallacy of human hopes, and the insufficiency of earthly honours, or the objects of even a lawful ambition, to satisfy the soul of man!

We entered Gen. Pollock's camp at sunset. Again the artillery uttered its boisterous notes of welcome, and old friends crowded around us with warm congratulations. For the present our cup of joy was full. Our fellow-captives, whom we had left behind at Shewukkee, were likewise in safety, having been liberated shortly after Akber's defeat by a party of Kuzzilbashs, headed by Jan Fishau Khan, a man whose invariable fidelity to the English has rendered him houseless, childless, and penniless, and who richly deserves the highest honours and rewards that a grateful government can bestow. Capt. Bygrave, who had left us on our departure from Shewukkee to join Akber, alone was wanting, having been made the unwilling companion of that chief's flight to Goorbund. Knowing him to be a favourite with Akber, we felt no doubt of his personal safety, though we knew by experience that his situation must be sufficiently miserable. On the 27th we were relieved from all further suspense and anxiety on his account by his actual arrival in camp, accompanied by our old friend and keeper Mahomed Rufeek. He had been suffering greatly from fever, but had experienced most kind treatment from Akber and the Giljye chiefs who still adhered to him. The wily Akber had betrayed no signs of discomposure at our escape, whatever he may have felt, and even professed himself well pleased to hear of our safety.*

At all events he had the good sense to perceive that the further detention of his sole remaining prisoner could serve no good purpose, while by restoring him to liberty he might found a claim to credit for magnanimity, and perhaps in some degree conciliate the British government. Nor is the act altogether devoid of grace, when it is remembered that clemency to an unbelieving foe is neither a principle of the Mahomedan creed, nor a characteristic of the Affghan people.

* For a complete list of prisoners recovered, see Appendix H.—ED.

It is impossible to take leave of Mahomed Akber Khan without regretting that a man so highly endowed by nature with talents and qualities, which, properly improved and cultivated, might have rendered him both an ornament and a blessing to his country, should, by blindly following the wild impulse of his passions, have perpetrated enormities, which have placed him beyond the pale of even Christian forgiveness, and entailed an incalculable amount of misery on his unhappy country.

By me little more remains to be said. It has been my task to record a tale of unparalleled disaster to the British arms, which had hitherto been identified only with triumph and renown throughout the Eastern world. — The past could not be recalled; but in one short year our wounded honour has been healed, and our martial reputation vindicated. The victorious armies of Pollock and Nott have satisfactorily proved that our soldiers, both European and native, are still invincible. It will be the pleasing task of abler writers to detail the heroic achievements, which terminated in the re-conquest of Ghuznee and Cabul, the recovery of British captives, and the restoration of the deposed Ameer, Dost Mahomed Khan.

APPENDIX.

CONTENTS OF THE APPENDIX.

- A. Letter from Capt. Colin Mackenzie to Lieut. Eyre, giving an Account of his Defence of Brigadiér Anquetil's Fort - - - Page 375
- B. No. 1. Despatch of Major-Gen. Elphinstone to the Secretary to the Government - - - 386
No. 2. and 3. Extracts from Memorandum of Major-
Gen. Elphinstone - - - 388
- C. Parliamentary Papers.
No. 1. Translation of a Communication from Mahomed
Akber to Gen. Pollock - - - 391
No. 2. Conversation between Sirdar Mahomed Akber
Khan, Major Pottinger, and Capt. Troup - 393
No. 3. Gen. Pollock to the Secretary to Government 394
- D. Lieut. Crawford's Account of the Loss of Ghuznee, &c.
396
- E. Letter from Mohun Lall - - - 412
- F. Letter from the released Prisoners to Sir Richmond
Shakespear, and his Reply - - - 417
- G. List of Civil and Military Officers killed at and near Cabul; and also those saved of the Cabul Force 419
- H. List of Prisoners released - - - 424

APPENDIX.

A.

THE following is the communication from Captain Colin Mackenzie referred to in the Author's preface, and at pp. 25. 44., which did not arrive with the first MS. — EDITOR.

LETTER FROM CAPT. COLIN MACKENZIE TO LIEUT. V. EYRE.

MY DEAR EYRE,

As you wish for an account of the manner in which I was besieged in the Kela-i-Nishan Khan, in the breaking out of the Cabul insurrection, I comply, although unwilling to appear so often in the first person, as I necessarily must, in order to give you a clear idea of the fatal nature of the blunder committed, in not sending me assistance from cantonments. I have by me a copy of some notes, which I made at the request of the late Major Thain, then Aide-de-Camp to our lamented chief, General Elphinstone. You are aware that the fort, in which I chanced to be living, contained the godowns of the Shah's commissariat; and that in one part the quarters of Brigadier Anquetil were situated. For the defence of these, a guard of one havildar, two naicks, and eighteen sepoy's had been assigned. The fort itself lies between that quarter of Cabul called the Moorad Khanah and its most western suburb, the Deh-i-Affghan. The Cabul river flows between the fort and the Kuzzilbash quarter (the Chundoul), to the south. Close to it, to the north, divided by a narrow road and a high wall, is a large grove of mulberry trees, known by the name of the Yaboo Khanah, in which the Yaboos of the Shah's commissariat used to be kept; but from which, towards the end of October, 1841, they had fortunately been removed into camp at Seeah Sung. In this Yaboo Khanah was a guard of six suwars; and, by chance, a detachment of a jemadar, and ninety-five men of Captain Ferris's Juzailchees; as also another of the Shah's sappers, consisting of one jemadar and fifty-nine men, including havildars and naicks. These last were encumbered with a host of women and children, brought up from their native country with them by the express orders of the Supreme Government. The house of Captain Troup, late Brigade-Major of the Shah's force, built so as to be capable of a tolerable defence, is about forty yards to the east of the fort, across a narrow canal; and the large tower, occupied by the late Captain Trevor and his family, lies across the river to the south-east, distant about 700 yards. This also, at the time, was perfectly defensible. You will easily perceive that, with these posts in our possession, and commanding, as we did, the open space between us, it was a point of importance to maintain our ground until the arrival of what we hourly expected, a regiment from the cantonment, whose presence would have immediately decided the wavering Kuzzilbashes in our favour, and would have cut off all communication between the insurgent population of Deh-i-Affghan and their rascally brethren in the Moorad Khanah. Spreading far beyond the Yaboo Khanah, in the direction of cantonments, and circling round the west of the fort down to the river's edge, are walled gardens and groves, which afford excellent cover to a lurking enemy, who were enabled to come, without much danger, to within a few yards of my defences.

Early on the morning of the 2d of November, 1841, as I was preparing to go into cantonments with my baggage, intending to accompany the Envoy on the following day down to Peshawur, it was reported to me that an alarming riot had taken place in the town. Brigadier Anquetil and Captain Troup had gone out on their usual morning ride, not supposing the disturbance was of the importance it has since proved to be. I waited for the return of the above two officers for about an hour, previous to adopting decided measures, either for defence or retreat,—at the same time causing all the guards to stand to their arms. Suddenly a naked man stood before me, covered with blood, from two deep sabre cuts in the head, and five musquet-shots in the arm and body. He proved to be a suwar of Sir W. Macnaghten, who had been sent with a message to Captain Trevor, but who had been intercepted by the insurgents. This being rather a strong hint as to how matters were going on, I immediately gave orders for all the gates to be secured, and personally superintended the removal of the detachments in the Yaboo Khanah, with their wives and families, into the fort. At the same time I caused loopholes to be bored in the upper walls of Captain

Troup's house, in which were a naick and ten sepoy. Whilst so employed, the armed population of Deh-i-Affghan came pouring down through the gardens, and commenced firing on us. I threw out skirmishers; but, in order to save the helpless followers, we were obliged to abandon the tents and baggage. In covering the retreat, one of my men was killed, and one badly wounded; while about five of the enemy were killed. The whole of the gardens were then occupied by the Affghans, from which, in spite of repeated sallies made during the day, we were unable to dislodge them; on the contrary, whenever we returned into the fort, they approached so near as to be able, themselves unseen, to kill and wound my men through the loopholes of my own defences. The canal was during the day cut off, and so closely watched, that one of my followers was shot, while trying to fetch some water; but we fortunately found an old well in Brigadier Anquetil's quarters, the water of which was drinkable. Towards the afternoon, having no ammunition, but what was contained in the soldiers' pouches, I communicated with Captain Trevor, who still held his tower, apparently unmolested. Even then, Khan Shereen Khan, the chief of the Kuzzilbashes, and four or five other Khans of consequence, among them the leaders of the Hazirbash regiments, were with poor Trevor, *earnestly expecting that some decided measures on the part of the British would justify them in openly taking our part.

* During the expedition into Kohistan, under General Macaskill, I accompanied it, having been placed by General Pollock in charge of Shahzadee Shapoor and the Kuzzilbash camp. In my frequent communications with Khan Shereen Khan, some Trevor despatched my requisition, for ammunition at least, if not for more effectual assistance, into cantonments, where it arrived safely, the distance not being more than one mile and a half. Shortly after, our spirits were raised by the apparent approach of a heavy cannonade, and volleys of musquetry from the direction of the Moorad Khanah, and by the flight through the gardens of the multitudes who were assailing me, towards Deh-i-Affghan, from which quarter crowds of women and children began to ascend the hill, evidently in expectation of an assault from our soldiery. But these cheering sounds died away, and it was in vain that we strained our eyes, looking for the glittering bayonets through the trees, and round the corners of the principal street leading from cantonments. My besiegers swarmed back with shouts, and it required much exertion on my part to prevent despondency amongst my people, which feeling had been strongly excited by the confirmation of the rumour of the murder of Sir Alexander Burnes, his brother, and Captain Broadfoot; by the sight of the smoke from his burning house; and by the intelligence that the treasury of Captain Johnson, also in the town, had been sacked, and the guard slain. In the evening I of the late Kuzzilbash leaders, and with other chiefs of the Kuzzilbash faction, all the circumstances of the late insurrection were over and over again recapitulated, one and all declaring positively that the slightest exhibition of energy on our part in the first instance, more especially in reinforcing my post and that of Trevor, would at once have decided the Kuzzilbashes, and all over whom they possessed any influence, in our favour. Khan Shereen also confirmed the idea, that an offensive movement on the opposite side of the town by Brigadier Shelton, had it been made in the early part of the fatal 2d of November, would at once have crushed the insurrection.

served out provisions from the government stores. The attacks continued at intervals during the night, and we had most disagreeable suspicions that the enemy were undermining our north-west tower, or bastion. At early dawn we sallied out to ascertain this, but were driven in again, after finding our apprehensions too well verified. There is much dead ground about all Affghan forts, on which it is impossible to bring musquetry to bear; and the towers can always be undermined, in the absence of hand-grenades on the part of the besieged. To meet this attempt, we sunk a shaft inside the ground-floor of the tower, and I placed four resolute men on the brink, ready to shoot the first man who should enter. The extent of the fort required all my men to be on duty at the same time, and some now began to wax weary. The cheerfulness of the remainder was not improved by the incessant howling of the women over the dead and dying. As a trait indicative of the character of the Affghan juzailchees, I must mention, that whenever they could snatch five minutes to refresh themselves with a pipe, one or other of them would twang a sort of rude guitar, as an accompaniment to some martial song, which, mingling with the above notes of war, sounded very strangely.

In the middle of this day (3d November), to my great grief, I saw the enemy enter Captain Trevor's tower; and a report was brought to us by two of his servants, who escaped across the river, that he and his family had all been killed, which, though it afterwards proved to be untrue, had a bad effect on my men, whose ammunition had now become very scarce, in spite of my having husbanded it with the greatest care. The scene of plunder now going on in Trevor's house was evident from our ramparts; and the enemy, taking possession of the top, which overlooked my defences, pitched their balls from their large juzails with such accuracy, as to clear my western face of defenders; and it was only by crawling on my hands and knees up a small flight of steps, and whisking suddenly through the door, that I could ever visit the tower that had been undermined. The guard from Captain Troup's house now clamoured for admittance into the fort; and as Mr. Ballon, that gentleman's writer, called out to me that they were ready to abandon their post, I let them in, barricading my own door with sacks of flour. Against the door and small wicket, on Brigadier Anquetil's side, I had already piled heaps of stones and large timbers.

In the afternoon the enemy brought down a large wall-piece against us, the balls from which shook the upper walls of one of our towers, alarming the juzailchees much, who dread the effect of any species of ordnance. This disposition to despair was increased by the utter failure of ammunition, and by the Affghans bringing down quantities of fire-wood and long poles with combustible matter at the ends, which they deposited under the walls of the Yaboo Khanah, in readiness to burn down my door. Some suwars who were stationed on Brigadier Anquetil's side of the fort, now broke into a sort of half-mutiny, and began pulling down the barricade against his gate, to endeavour to save themselves by the speed of their horses. This I quelled, by going down amongst them with a double-barrelled gun, and threatening to shoot the first man who should disobey my orders. In the evening I was quite exhausted, as were my people; having by that time been fighting and working for nearly forty hours without rest. Indeed, on my part, it had been without refreshment, as eating was impossible from excitement and weariness; and my absence for five minutes at a time from any part of the works disheartened the fighting men. Added to this, my wounded were dying for want of medical aid. I therefore yielded to the representations of my juzailchee jemadar, and of Mr. Ballon, from both of whom I received valuable assistance during the whole affair, and prepared for a retreat to cantonments. This we determined should take place during the early part of the night, at which time, it being then the fast of the Ramazan, we calculated the enemy would be at their principal meal. I ordered the juzailchees to lead, and to answer all questions, in case of encountering a post of the enemy. The wounded were placed on what yaboos I possessed, abandoning every thing in the shape of baggage; these, with the women and children, followed next in order; and I myself proposed to bring up the rear with my few regulars, who, I fondly imagined, would stick by me in case of a hot pursuit. We were to avoid the town, and to follow the course of the small canal above-mentioned, and afterwards to strike off by lanes, and through some fields, in the direction of cantonments. A night retreat is generally disastrous, and this proved no exception to the general rule; but, notwithstanding my strict order that all baggage should be left behind, it being very dark, many of the poor women contrived to slip out, with loads of their little property on their shoulders, making their children walk, whose cries added to the confusion, and to the danger of discovery.

Before we had proceeded half a mile, the rear missed the advance, upon whom a post of the enemy had begun to fire. All my regulars had crept a-head with the juzailchees, and I found myself alone with a chuprassee and two suwars, in the midst of a helpless and wailing crowd of women and children. Riding on by myself along a narrow lane, to try and pick out the road, I found myself suddenly surrounded by a party of Affghans, whom at first I took to be my own juzailchees, and spoke to them as such. They quickly undeceived me, however, by crying out "Feringhee hust," "Here is an European," and attacking me with swords and knives. Spurring my horse violently, I wheeled round, cutting from right to left, for I, fortunately, had my own sword drawn previous to the surprise. My blows, by God's mercy, parried the greater part of theirs, and I was lucky enough to cut off the hand of my most outrageous assailant. In short, after a desperate struggle, during which I received two slight sabre cuts, and a blow on the back of my head from a fellow, whose sword turned in his hand, which knocked me half off my horse, I escaped out of the crush, passing unhurt through two volleys of musquetry from the whole picket, which, by that time, had become alarmed, and had turned out. They pursued me; but I soon distanced them, crossing several fields at speed, and gaining a road, which I perceived led round the western end of the Shah's garden. Proceeding cautiously along, to my horror, I perceived my path again blocked up by a dense body of Affghans. Retreat was impossible; so, putting my trust in God, I charged into the midst of them, hoping that the weight of my horse would clear my way for me, and reserving my sword-cut for the last struggle. It was well that I did so, for by the time I had knocked over some twenty fellows, I found that they were my own juzailchees. If you ever experienced sudden relief from a hideous nightmare, you may imagine my feelings for the moment. With these worthies, after wandering about for some time, and passing unchallenged by a sleepy post of the enemy, I reached the cantonments. During the night many stragglers of my party, principally followers, dropped in. During the whole business, from first to last, including the retreat, I had under a dozen killed, and about half that amount wounded, nearly half the former being followers; whereas about thirty of the enemy had bitten the dust, and gone to their place.

I cannot close this letter to you without remarking that, amongst other lamentable errors which led to our heavy downfall, that of omitting in the first instance to strengthen my post was, next to Shelton's refusal to pour his brigade into the town, while the rioters yet amounted to barely 200 men, the greatest. But the whole blame cannot, in this particular instance, be attributed to our poor friend General Elphinstone. He had not been sufficiently informed as to the importance of my position, nor as to the facility with which a strong reinforcement could have reached me. That he was specially anxious personally as to my safety there could be no doubt, as was shown by the warmth of his reception of me.

I need not remind you of the devoted heroism displayed throughout the siege by Hussain Khan, the juzailchee jemadar, and the handful of brave men who accompanied him, and who personally attaching themselves to me remained under my command to the last. Numbers of them fell; others were disabled; a few departed to their own homes, on the day when I was taken prisoner, and Sir W. Macnaghten was murdered; and, I believe, nearly the sole survivors are some ten or fifteen men, who, with their brave leader, Hussain Khan, are now with us in camp. These proceed with the rest of the juzailchee corps under Captain Ferris to Ferozepore, where we hear they are to be disbanded, and sent back to their own country, to be destroyed by their bloodthirsty countrymen as a reward for their fidelity to us; and yet these were the men, who, during the period I was beleaguered in the fort of Nishan Khan, at a time when I was quite unknown to them, not only refused to listen to the repeated propositions of the Affghans outside to deliver me up to their vengeance, their own safety being thereby insured; but who, during the siege of cantonments, laughed to scorn the most tempting offers on the part of Ameenollah Khan, Mahomed Akbar, and other Affghan chiefs, to induce them to join the general cause of Islam against the Kaffirs, invariably bringing the letters, in which they were conveyed, for my inspection and perusal.*

Yours very sincerely,

C. MACKENZIE.

Camp Rawul Pindee,

En route to Ferozepore, Nov. 19. 1842.

* They were disbanded at Jelum, in the Punjab, each of the old soldiers receiving a donation of twelve months' pay, and the rest a gratuity in proportion to the length of their services, with which they all seemed very well satisfied. — V. E.

B. No. 1.

DESPATCH FROM MAJOR-GEN. ELPHINSTONE, ADDRESSED TO THE SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNMENT.

Buddeeabad.

SIR,—With the deepest regret, I have the honour to forward, for the information of the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council, the annexed memorandum of occurrences preceding and during the insurrection at Cabul, up to this date.

The state of my health and mental sufferings previous to, and consequent on, the unfortunate occurrences, render me little competent to furnish such complete information as I might have done, had it not been for the total destruction of my entire staff and all official documents and memoranda; and I have only been able to remedy the deficiency through the kind assistance of Major Pottinger and Capt. Lawrence, who having aided me with facts and dates, I trust, however meagre the account may be, that its tenor is, upon the whole, perfectly correct.

I beg to be allowed to express my sense of the gallant manner, in which the various detachments sent out were led by Brigadier Shelton, and of the invariably noble conduct of the officers on those occasions, particularly of those who fell leading their men; viz. Col. Mackrell, Capts. Swayne, Robinson, M'Crea, and Lieut. Raban, H. M.'s 44th Foot; Col. Oliver and Capt. Macintosh, 5th N. I.; Capt. Westmacott and Lieut. Gordon, 37th N. I.; Capt. Walker, 4th Local Horse, and Lieut. Laing, 27th N. I.

I hope I may also be permitted to record my sense of the zeal and exertions of my lamented Aide-de-Camp Major Thain, and my acting Quarter-Master-General Capt. Paton, both of whom were severely wounded, as also Capt. Grant, Assist.-Adj.-Gen., and my Aide-de-Camp Capt. Airey. I had inadvertently omitted Capt. Bellew, Assist.-Quarter-Master-General, who, at the storm of the Rika-bashee and Mahomed Sherreef's fort, evinced the greatest gallantry, and volunteered to carry the powder-bags.

From Brigadier Anquetil, commanding the Shah's force, and Col. Chambers, commanding the cavalry, I on all occasions received the most cordial assistance; and I take this opportunity to record the ever-ready zeal and gallant conduct of Capt. Troup, Major of Brigade, Shah Shooja's force.

Throughout the whole siege the utmost zeal was manifested by Lieut. Sturt, Engineers, and by Lieut. V. Eyre, Commissary of Ordnance, who, in consequence of the paucity of artillery officers, on all occasions volunteered his services, and was unfortunately wounded.

Capt. Colin McKenzie, Assist. Political Agent, Peshawur, volunteered to take charge of a body of Juzailchees, and was engaged in every affair, his and their conduct being most conspicuous.

The manner in which the soldiers, European and Native, bore up without a murmur against all privations and very harassing duty, at a most inclement season, was highly creditable to them, and more particularly the horse-artillery, who on all occasions upheld the character of that distinguished corps.

Among the many valuable and promising officers who have fallen in the recent retreat, I would especially mention Captains Skinner and Hay, 61st and 35th N. I. ; Lieut. Le Geyt, Shah's 2d Cavalry ; and Lieut. Bird, Shah's 6th Infantry ; the latter officer distinguished himself in the assault and capture of the Rika-bashee Fort.

Of the surviving officers, my thanks are due to Major Eldred Pottinger, C.B., Political Agent, and Capt. George St. P. Lawrence, Military Secretary to the late Envoy and Minister, for their cordial assistance and co-operation till the death of their lamented chief ; and to Capt. Anderson, Shah's 2d Cavalry, and Capt. Bygrave, Paymaster, for their zeal and alacrity in the performance of their duty, amid trials and difficulties almost unprecedented.

I have the honour, &c.

W. K. ELPHINSTONE.

To the Secretary to Government.

B. No. 2.

The following extracts from a memorandum of Major-Gen. Elphinstone deserve attention, both as supporting some of the Author's statements, and exhibiting in some degree the unfortunate General's disadvantages, as enumerated by himself.—EDITOR.

* * * * *

“I was unlucky in the state of my health ; as, during the whole siege, I was not able to move without difficulty, except on horseback, and then not easily. On the evening of the 2d, going round the guards, I had a very severe fall, the horse falling on me. I was obliged to return home therefore. I then asked Captains Paton and Grant if they thought all had been done, and told them to see that Brigadier Anquetil made the arrangements in the mission compound; and it was a great loss to me that, shortly after his coming into cantonments, he was taken ill, by which I was deprived of his assistance, which he would cordially have afforded me. The extent of the cantonment — the unfinished state of every thing in it — its indefensible position, commanded as it was on every side — particularly the facilities afforded for the approach of matchlocks — added much to our difficulties. The troops were on half rations, and the whole of them on duty every night, and often all day, from threatened attacks. The want of artillery officers, notwithstanding Capt. (Lieut.) Eyre's volunteering, Capt. Waller being wounded early in the business.—On the 9th, not finding myself equal to the duties, particularly at night, when I could not get about on horseback, I recalled Brigadier Shelton from the Bala Hissar. * * * * I was unlucky, also, in not understanding the state of things, and being wholly dependent on the Envoy and others for information." * * * *

B. No. 3.

The passage next quoted clearly shows that it was in obedience to the General's order that the married officers, as well as their wives and children, resigned themselves to Mahomed Akbar. This is, of course, a point of peculiar interest to those officers, especially as misrepresentation upon it has gone forth. — EDITOR.

Extract from a Memorandum by Major-General W. K. Elphinstone, C. B., of the Events preceding and during the Insurrection at Cabul.

“ On the 9th (January) the march was ordered at 10 A. M., but, consequent on a message from the Sirdar, requesting us to halt till he could organize an escort for us, and promising supplies and firewood, it was countermanded. But a similar scene of confusion to that of the day before had taken place, and it was past mid-day before any thing like order was restored.

“ Captain Skinner returned to the Sirdar, by whom he was again sent back with a proposal that the married people and their families should be made over to him, promising honourable treatment to the ladies. I complied with his wish, being desirous to remove the ladies and children, after the horrors they had already witnessed, from the further dangers of a camp, and hoping that, as from the very commencement of negotiations the Sirdar had shown the greatest anxiety to have the married people as hostages, this mark of trust might elicit a corresponding feeling in him.

“(Signed) W. K. ELPHINSTONE, Major-General.”

C. No. 1.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS, No. 322.

Translation of a Paper from Mahomed Akbar Khan, received by Gen. Pollock on the 8th of May, 1842, by the hands of Capt. Mackenzie.

MY FRIEND, — In the letter for Pottinger Saheb, which Mackenzie has brought, there is nothing to give me confidence. I have, therefore, thought it necessary to send Mackenzie Saheb to you a second time.

When first Secunder Burnes came, I did all in my power that the wishes of the English Government might be realized; but the English Government would not agree to give assistance, if a foreign enemy invaded this country, and nothing was settled. After that, when an English army entered my country, I was compelled to be your enemy, and was three years a wanderer, and returned at the end of the confusion (Cabul insurrection). In the time when Pottinger, Lawrence, and Mackenzie Sahebs came, at the stage of Bootkak, I agreed to their wishes, and did all in my power to protect the army, as is well known to the above-mentioned Sahebs: but I could not save them from the hands of the multitude*, as all the army was disorganized, and the British soldiers could not protect themselves on account of the frost, and, moreover, the gentlemen did not attend to my advice.

2dly. If I allow the English, who are my guests, to depart according to your suggestion, or, according to Pottinger Saheb's advice, if I allow the English ladies to depart before the gentlemen, in either case all Mahomedans will look upon me as their enemy, and the whole multitude will be opposed to me. Under these circumstances, I beg you to reflect that, not having come to an understanding with you, and having made enemies of them (Mahomedans), how can I exist? At present my friends and allies have possessed themselves of the government of Cabul, and all of them send daily to me three or four men with oaths and protestations, requesting me to come and be their king, and Mahomed Zeeman, Wuzeer. All the Ghilzies are my friends; and I, from the friendship I bear you, do not consent to be King of Cabul, since to be so must involve the necessity of being your enemy. I prefer your friendship to the throne (of Cabul), because, if I was to go to Cabul now, the men of Cabul would push me forward, and then it would be difficult to release my guests, and to be on friendly terms with you. On this account I have written, to show my friendship to your government. Please God, my services shall exceed the injuries I have done you. On condition that we are friends, let the terms of friendship between me and my friends, such as Mahomed Shah Khan and others, be written out, and be sent before the receipt of my guests in your camp, that I may feel confidence. The other matters have been explained to Capt. Mackenzie verbally, and he will make them known to you. I hope you will write down every article in a treaty signed * and sealed.

* The word alludes to the mob of Affghans, whom the Sirdar means to say he could not govern.

(There is no seal † to this document.)

* "The Sirdar has not signed it, as he fears it may be used against him, in case of your not closing with his terms."—Major Pottinger to Gen. Pollock, Parl. Papers, 320.

† "The circumstance of receiving a Persian memorandum

C. No. 2.

FROM THE PAPERS PRESENTED TO PARLIAMENT ON THE MILITARY OPERATIONS IN AFFGHANISTAN.
No. 461.

Conversation between Sirdar Mahomed Akbar Khan, Major Pottinger, and Capt. Troup, on the Morning of the 29th of July, 1842.

Mahomed Akbar opened the conversation by stating that it was recommended that great men should ask advice of each other, and related the fable of the besieged king. He then told us he wanted advice as to what he should do ; and, in answer to the question what his own wishes were, declared he required only our promise of friendship. Major Pottinger then — premising that he must bear in mind that, though the Vizier had his own authority in full, we were servants, and could, therefore, not give advice if our opinions were contrary to our king's interests — said, however, that, as far as did not clash with our duty, we would be happy to do so, and therefore advised that the prisoners should be at once sent down ; for if a delay took place, it would come within the declaration of Gen. Pollock, “ that the business was off, if any delay took place ; ” however, as the Chief stated he agreed to the General's proposition, it might pass, if he wrote down “ that he agreed to the proposition ; but, as the Affghans considered the statement confused and a little doubtful, he sent a memorandum of what they thought was the meaning, and begged, if it were correct, that the General would kindly inform him of it, by affixing his seal to such a writing." Under these circumstances, the General might not consider the stipulation broken; but, as it would virtually be so, we thought it most advisable for him at once to send down the prisoners, if he really wished to make terms. The Vizier said that he would not give up the prisoners without a written promise, and that the people were all determined to support him; that we must put it out of our thoughts that we could release the prisoners by force; that, as soon as he heard that our troops had reached Charbagh, he would send the ladies, &c. off to Toorkistan, and fight here so long as he could; and that, if obliged to flee, he would take care not one of the prisoners should return to the English, for he would scatter them by twos and threes through Toorkistan with all the chiefs.

without seal or signature does not evince that confidence and good faith, which ought to be shown when a good understanding between parties is desired.” — Gen. Pollock to Major Pottinger, Parl. Papers, 323.

C. No. 3.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS, No. 460.

Major-Gen. Pollock to Mr. Maddock.

Jellalabad, August 6. 1842.

SIR, — * * * I take this opportunity of stating that it is my opinion that Mahomed Akbar's chief object in desiring me to give a sealed paper, specifying that I will withdraw all troops from Affghanistan, is to strengthen himself by the publication of such a document at Cabul, the effect of which would be to thoroughly dishearten such chiefs as look to our assistance for the means of freeing themselves from his tyranny. Were I to say that I should leave this valley in October, the reply would be that the prisoners would be sent then; but such a promise would so strengthen Mahomed Akbar, that I think it probable that he, when the time arrived, finding that our advance on Cabul was impossible for the next seven months, might be tempted to procrastinate, under the idea that we had determined to withdraw our troops, and that, after our departure, he might obtain a large sum as ransom for the prisoners. Apart from this, it is impossible for me to pledge myself to withdraw on a certain date; and I, of course, could not take upon myself to issue any order to General Nott.

The advance of a brigade to Futteeabad will tend to alarm Mahomed Akbar, and make him the more anxious to induce us to quit the country. Capt. Troup has expressed a doubt on this subject, and fears that this step may induce Mahomed Akbar to send the prisoners to Toorkistan; but I cannot think this will occur, as I have reason to suppose there is a strong party at Cabul, which has determined not to allow the removal of our prisoners; and I also believe that the Wallee of Khooloom has written refusing to receive Mahomed Akbar if accompanied by the prisoners.

I have, &c.

G. POLLOCK.

D.

The following account by LIEUT. CRAWFORD, of the 3d Bombay N. I., of the loss of Ghuznee, and the imprisonment of himself and his brother officers, is taken from the Bombay Courier. — EDITOR.

“In my letter of the 8th instant, I promised that at my earliest convenience I would send you a full, true, and particular account of all my adventures during the past year, and I now take up my pen to fulfil my promise, and, without further preamble, commence my narrative at once from the period of my quitting Candahar.

“I left that city on the 30th October last year, having under my charge three state prisoners and seven hostages to be escorted to Cabool; and, for the safeguard of the same, I was accompanied by a troop from my own corps, and about forty Affghan horse under a chief called Guddoo Khan. It was on the 7th November we reached Oha; we had marched rapidly, but in perfect peace, and as little expected to be attacked on the road as I do at this moment. You may imagine, therefore, how thunderstruck I was, when Guddoo Khan entered my tent, bringing with him a native official of that part of the country, styled the Urz Beggie, who gave me an account of the disasters in Cabool on the second of the month, and, as I afterwards found, bad as matters really were at the capital, he made them out to be much more so. He strongly pressed my returning to Khelat-i-Ghilzie, saying that there were 20,000 men round Ghuznee, and to go on would be to certain death. I considered, however, it would never do for an officer to turn back on a mere rumour of danger, and that, should the man's story really be true, still I had a better chance of reaching Ghuznee, which was only fifty-four miles off, than Khelat, which was ninety. Tired though my horses were, they might make Ghuznee in one forced march, but they would not be able to get to the other station under a couple of days; the road lay through the barren and hostile country of the Ghiljies, and, as I subsequently discovered, it proved that Urz Beggie was a traitor; he wished to get me back through the Ghiljie districts, as he himself was a man of that tribe, and would have raised the whole country about my ears; not a man of us would have escaped to tell the tale. After duly considering all the pros and cons of the case, I mounted my detachment at 8 P.M. and moved on toward Ghuznee. We marched rapidly the whole night, and by daylight had reached Nanee, about thirteen miles from Ghuznee; but the first streak of dawn showed us that the people were on the alert; there were videttes on every hill; and in a very short time word was passed from fort to fort, and their inhabitants turned out, hanging on my flanks and rear, and firing with their rifles at us. Their horsemen were bolder; they swarmed round us like wasps, riding up, firing their pieces into our troop, and galloping off to re-load. We were nearly helpless against such a foe; twice we charged and cut up a few, but the rascals always sought shelter near the numerous forts that covered the plain, and then laughed at us. In addition to not being able to catch the villains, we found that every time we charged or halted to show a front, it only gave the enemy time to circle round our flanks and head us; and their footmen also came up from the rear. Accordingly we left the high road altogether, and turned out into the plain, where the foot would scarcely dare to follow us; and indeed by proceeding at the trot we pretty well shook off these gentry, but the horsemen still followed; and, to add to our troubles, I found that the ponies, on which the prisoners were mounted, were exhausted, and could proceed no further. As they knocked up, I doubled the riders on the other animals; but, one after another, they gave in. One prisoner was cut down by a horseman of the enemy (plainly showing there was no collusion between them); two others rolled over in a ditch, where, with their horse a-top of them, and their legs chained under his belly, I left them; indeed, I now found it was impossible I could ever get my charge into Ghuznee alive, and I had only to decide on putting them to death or setting them at liberty. My instructions would have justified my pursuing the former course, but the poor wretches had clearly made no attempt to escape; they were in no manner answerable for the attack made on my party, as was evident from one of their number falling by the sword of our adversaries; and I conceived then, and do now conceive, that, in letting these men go with their lives, I was not only acting according to the strict letter of my instructions, but that justice and humanity required I should not slay them in cold blood. Had I put them to death, then Shumsoodeen or Mahomed Akbar would have been equally justified in taking our lives (the lives of all their prisoners) on the advance of Pollock and Nott on Cabul. I may add, that the court of inquiry, which I called for, after investigating all the circumstances, decided that I had acted perfectly right. But to return to my story. After following and harassing us for miles, the enemy drew off when we got near Ghuznee, and I reached that place about 10 A. M. on the 8th, with the loss of all my baggage and prisoners, and fifteen men and twenty horses killed, and several wounded, out of my little party. Every day now brought us bad accounts from Cabul; and the infatuation, that appears to have seized the chief authorities there, not only hurried them on to ruin at the capital, but also paralysed us at Ghuznee. Can you imagine that the necessary repairs and alterations in the citadel were not sanctioned, nor was Palmer permitted to lay in provisions? At the eleventh hour, the Colonel took the responsibility upon himself, and set to work; but most invaluable time had been suffered to pass unimproved, and, when the enemy made their appearance under our walls, they found us but ill prepared for a siege, especially when it was not man alone we had to combat with, but the rigours of a winter as intense as that of Canada. The enemy and the snow made their appearance together: on the 20th of November the town was surrounded with the one, and the ground covered with the other; but in a week afterwards the insurgents broke up their investment of the place, on report of M'Laren's brigade advancing to our relief. This permitted our destroying the villages and buildings within musket shot of the walls, and also afforded us a week's skating on the ditch; but on the 7th of December the enemy returned in increased numbers, and we were then closely confined to the walls. The necessity and advantage of turning the inhabitants out of the town was not lost sight of; but, unfortunately for us, an idea had got abroad that the townspeople were strongly attached to us, and that the sending out so many poor people to perish in the snow was an act of cruelty too great to be dreamt of. The consequence was, that the townsmen entered into a correspondence with their countrymen on the outside; and on the night of the 16th of December, having dug a hole through the town, they admitted their friends, who poured in by thousands, and compelled us, after fighting all that night and the next day, to retire into the citadel. It so happened that from this day the winter set in with increased severity, and its effects soon told fearfully upon the men. The whole garrison, officers and men, were told off into three watches, one of which was constantly on duty; so that every one in the place was eight hours on duty out of the twenty-four, and you may imagine that such constant work and exposure to the intense cold very soon rendered the sepoy useless. The snow lay deep, very deep, and often in the course of a single night would fall to the depth of a couple of feet! The thermometer sunk to ten, twelve, and even fourteen degrees below zero! and to such weather were the natives of India exposed day and night, with no prospect of relief, and with no comforts to enable them to support their sufferings! We were reduced to half rations of bad flour and raw grain on alternate days, and a seer of wood per man each day was all that could be allowed either for cooking or warmth. The sepoy, constantly soaked and unable to dry themselves, got sickly, and the hospital was crowded with men, whose feet had ulcerated from frost bites. I do think, that if the enemy had had pluck enough to have made a rush upon us, they could at any time, after Christmas-day, have carried the works with very little difficulty ; as it was, however, they contented themselves with keeping up a smart fire with their rifles, and not a man could show his head above the walls for a moment. Up to the 15th of January this work continued, and we lost three or four men daily from the fire of their marksmen ; but on the day mentioned some sort of a truce was entered into, and active hostilities ceased, it being understood we were to evacuate the place on the arrival of Shumsoodeen Khan. This worthy did not arrive till the middle of the following month, and even then the Colonel managed to keep him in play till the beginning of March ; but at last he and his chiefs would stand it no longer, and said that, if we did not give up the place immediately, they would recommence hostilities ; and we, being utterly helpless, having no water in the citadel, and the snow (on which we had depended for a supply) having all vanished, our provisions being exhausted, and there being no prospect of the arrival of succour, had no resource but to make the best terms we could, and trust to Providence that the enemy would abide by them. On the 6th of March we marched out from the citadel, under a treaty signed and solemnly sworn to by all the chiefs, that we should be escorted in safety and honour to Peshawur, with our colours, arms, and baggage, and fifty rounds of ammunition per man. There was still some snow in the passes between Ghuznee and Cabul ; and till that should melt, and the necessary carriage could be procured for us, we were quartered in a portion of the town immediately below the citadel. Scarcely had we entered our new abode, when our enemies flung off the mask, and showed how much they valued oaths made to infidels. At noon on the 7th, whilst nearly every man of ours was cooking, and we were totally unprepared for an outbreak, the Ghazees rushed upon our lines, and succeeded in carrying the houses in which my squadron had been placed. I was in the next house, with Burnett of the 54th, and Nicholson of the 27th, there being no decent room for me in my own proper quarters. On hearing the uproar, I ran to the roof to see what was the matter; and finding what had taken place among my men, and that balls were flying thick, I called up Burnett. He had scarcely joined me, when he was struck down by a rifle ball, which knocked his eye out; and, as he was then rendered hors de combat, I assumed command of the two companies of the 27th that had been under him, and Nicholson and myself proceeded to defend ourselves as well as circumstances would permit. We were on the left of the mass of houses occupied by our troops, and the first and sharpest attacks were directed at us: the enemy fired our house, and gradually, as room after room caught fire, we were forced to retreat to the others, till at last by midnight of the 9th our house was nearly burnt in halves. We were exhausted with hunger and thirst, having had nothing to eat or drink since the morning of the 7th. Our ammunition was expended, the place was filled with dead and dying men, and our position was no longer tenable; but the only entrance, in front of the house, was surrounded by the enemy, and we scarcely knew how to get out, and endeavour to join Col. Palmer. At last we dug a hole through the wall of the back of the house: we had only bayonets to work with, and it cost us much labour to make a hole sufficiently large to admit of one man at a time dropping from it into the street below ; but we were fortunate enough to get clear out of our ruined quarters in this way, and join the Colonel unperceived by the savages round us. As soon as day broke on the 9th, they occupied our abandoned post, and shortly afterwards attacked and carried the next house, in which were poor Lumsden and his wife, and thirty sepoys, every one of whom, and their servants, were put to death. On the morning of the 10th, Poett and Davis were obliged to retire from their posts, and the survivors here now assembled in the two houses, held by Col. Palmer and the head-quarters of the corps. You cannot picture to yourself the scene these two houses presented ; every room was crammed, not only with sepoys, but camp followers, men, women, and children ; and it is astonishing the slaughter among them was not greater, seeing that the guns of the citadel sent round-shot crashing through and through the walls. I saw high-caste men groping in the mud, endeavouring to discover pieces of unmelted ice, that, by sucking them, they might relieve the thirst that tormented them ! Certainly, when that morning dawned, I thought it was the last I should see on this earth ; and so did we all, and proceeded to make a few little arrangements, ere the final attack on us took place. The regimental colours were burnt, to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy, and I destroyed my watch, and flung it, and what money I had, over the wall into the ditch. I also burnt my poor wife's miniature, first cramming the gold frame of it into a musket, being determined that one of the Ghazees should have his belly full of gold ere I died. Hour after hour passed on, and still we sat expecting every minute to hear the shout of the final attack ; but it came not. From our loopholes we saw the enemy swarming all around us in every lane and house, and on the hill of the citadel. The place was black with their masses ; and, as they themselves afterwards told us, there were not less than 10,000 men there thirsting for our blood. But it appears that Shumsoodeen had been affected with some qualms of conscience, and had held a council of his chiefs on the subject of admitting us to quarter. I should tell you that during the three previous days' fighting, Shumsoodeen had repeatedly offered us terms, but they were such as we could not accede to ; inasmuch as they commenced by desiring we would surrender ourselves to him, and abandon the sepoys to the fury of the Ghazees. The sepoys, it appears, had held a consultation among themselves, and, believing they had no chance of their lives, determined on forcing their way out of the town, and endeavouring to get to Peshawur. When we first heard of this mad design, and spoke to the men about it, they denied it ; but on the 10th two native officers came forward, and told us they had made up their minds to go off that night ; that, if we chose to accompany them, they would be exceedingly glad, but if otherwise, they would go alone. It was in vain we pointed out the utter impracticability of their plan ; they had got an idea among them, that Peshawur was not above fifty or sixty miles off across country, and that there was a short cut to it, through the mountains : they immediately commenced digging a hole through the outer wall of the town, by which,

as soon as it got dark, they might march out into the country.

Seeing that our men had now flung off all authority, and were about to desert us, we had nothing further to do but to make the best bargain we could for our lives. Shumsoodeen and all the Ghazee chiefs again swore by all that was holy, that if we laid down our arms we should be honourably treated, and sent to Cabul to the Shah as soon as possible. At 10 P. M. we surrendered. The chief sent and begged the officers to come into the citadel immediately, as the Ghazees were yelling for the blood of the Feringee Kaffirs, and he could not answer for our safety, if we delayed till daylight; and accordingly we went up to the citadel and gave up our swords, the chief placing bodies of his men round our late quarters, to keep the Ghazees from molesting the sepoy. A large party of these latter, however, during the night, endeavoured to put their ridiculous plan of flight into execution, and made their way about two or three miles from the town: it came on to snow heavily; they got bewildered in the fields, and in the morning were all cut to pieces or made prisoners. For the first few days after we had surrendered, we were treated pretty tolerably; the chief and his brother used to visit and condole with us on the change of fortune we had experienced, and expressed their sorrow at the violence of their fanatical followers not having permitted their strict observance of the treaty, on which we had yielded up the citadel to them; but gradually they discontinued their visits; every little thing we had managed to secure, such as watches, penknives, money, &c., was taken from us, and we were strictly confined to a small room eighteen feet by thirteen. In it there were ten of us, so you may imagine we had not much room to spare; indeed, when we lay down at night we exactly occupied the whole floor, and when we wanted to take a little exercise we were obliged to walk up and down (six paces) in turns. Few of us had a change of linen, and the consequence was we were soon swarming with vermin, the catching of which afforded an hour's employment every morning. I wore my solitary shirt for five weeks, till it became literally black and rotten; and I am really surprised none of us contracted any loathsome disease, from the state of filth we were compelled to live in. On the 7th April we heard of Shah Soojah's murder, and from that date the severities of our confinement were redoubled; they shut and darkened the solitary window from which we had hitherto derived light and air; and they also kept the door of our room constantly closed, so that the air we breathed became perfectly pestiferous. On the 21st of the month they tortured Col. Palmer with a tent-peg and rope, in such a manner that it is wonderful he ever recovered the use of his foot. I cannot, in a letter, explain the process of the torture, but we all witnessed it, and it was something on the principle of the Scotch boot described in "Old Mortality." We were told we should each be tortured in our turn, unless we gave up four lacs of rupees, which the rascals swore we had buried; and, in case we continued obstinate, they told us we should be blown from guns, beginning with the junior. This was a pleasant sort of a life to lead, never being certain of that life for twenty-four hours together. I think a little similar experience would do some of the newspaper editors a deal of good, and render them not quite so prone to lavish their criticisms on the conduct of unfortunates like ourselves. They sit under their punkahs, drink lall shrub, and write leading articles, laying down the law and talking as familiarly on military matters "as maids" do "of puppy dogs," — the self-elected, self-constituted judges of mankind. In the end of April, our guards suddenly became particularly civil to us for a few days, and we found out they had a report of the advance of our troops: indeed, on to the period of our actual release, we could always form a pretty shrewd guess of what our troops were about by the treatment we experienced at the hands of our captors: if there was any forward movement among our people, any arrival of reinforcements at Jellalabad or Candahar, &c., then we were treated well for a few days, and we got better food; but if our people appeared to be idle, and things remained in statu quo for a week, then our guards taunted us on the unwarlike spirit of Feringee armies, and boasted how they would exterminate them, if they advanced. Gool Mahomed Khan, the brother of Shumshodeen, who had always behaved more civilly towards us than the big chief, was, unfortunately for us, despatched to Cabul on business about the middle of April; but I believe it was owing to the receipt of a letter from him, that on the 12th May we were permitted to quit our prison room, and walk on the terrace of the citadel for one hour, and we were told that similar kindness would be shown us once a week!!! — namely, on Friday, when Shumshodeen was wont to make a kind of religious nic nic to a neighbouring shrine. Even this we thought a great blessing, and used to count the days and hours to each succeeding Friday, anxiously expecting the moment when our guard would tell us we might breathe God's fresh air, and look out on the green fields for the allotted period. I thought I had always been an admirer of the beauties of nature, but I had never imagined that the time would have come, when the sight of a few ordinary fields of clover and wheat would have caused me such delight in their contemplation !

On the 15th of June, Gool Mahomed returned from Cabul, bringing with him some of the ladies of his brother's family. On their account we were told we should be removed to other quarters, and of course we expected a change for the worse ; but, as it eventually proved, we were agreeably disappointed. Just at this period one of our number, Lieut. Davies, 27th N. I., had sickened with typhus fever ; we had no medicines, no comforts for him, and he lay on the ground delirious, raving about home and his family, and every hour proving worse, till, on the 19th, death put an end to his sufferings. We read the burial service over him, and then made his body over to the guard to bury ; but I am afraid they merely flung the poor fellow into a ditch outside the gate. It was a melancholy ceremony that burial service : few among us, I imagine, but thought it might be his turn next, especially now that sickness had broken out in such a shape ; however, on the following day, we were removed to another building, where we had three or four rooms to ourselves, and a court-yard to walk about in, and our guard was replaced by a more civil set. This was a delightful change ; and being greedy of fresh air after so long a deprivation of it, we made the most of our new berth by always sleeping in the open air in the court-yard. It is true, it was utterly impossible to get a minute's rest in any of the rooms allotted to us, as they were swarming with the foulest vermin, so we thought it no hardship to have the stars for a canopy, and for three months we never slept under a roof, or with any other covering beyond our sheepskin cloaks. From this date the conduct of Shumshoodeen towards us improved greatly; he came to see us frequently, and chatted in a kind manner, always telling us we should shortly be set at liberty in exchange for Dost Mahomed, who was returning to Cabul, having been freed by our Government. This gave us renewed hopes of soon again becoming free agents; and, as our circumstances were improved, and our guards more friendly toward us, our captivity was more easily borne; but still as time wore on, and nothing definite was learnt regarding our release, we again began to despair, especially when the middle of August arrived, and we seemed as far as ever from the attainment of our wishes. It was on the 19th of August we had, as usual, wrapped ourselves up in our cloaks, and taken lodgings on the cold ground for the night, when the chief suddenly entered the yard, and told us we were to march immediately for Cabul; and, sure enough, in half an hour afterwards we found ourselves slung in pairs in kujawurs, on each side of camels, and moving towards the capital. How delighted we were to bid adieu to the walls of Ghuznee! I do believe, if we had known we were going to execution, the change would nevertheless have gladdened us. We reached Cabul in three days, without meeting any adventure on the road; but we were abused most grossly by the populace as we proceeded through the streets of the city: fortunately it was in the dusk of the evening, and but few people witnessed our arrival; otherwise they might not have confined their ill treatment to words. We were taken direct to Mahomed Akbar's quarters in the Bala Hissar, and from him we met with the kindest reception. I could not bring myself to believe that the stout, good-humoured, open-hearted-looking young man, who was making such kind inquiries after our health, and how we had borne the fatigues of the journey, could be the murderer of M'Naghten, and the leader of the massacre of our troops. He told us we had come most unexpectedly; that, though he had written repeatedly to have us sent to him (as he had heard we were ill treated by Shumshoodeen), yet no attention had been paid to his orders; and now that we had come, it was without any intimation of our approach: he bade us be of good cheer, as our future comfort would be his care, and we should find ourselves treated like officers and gentlemen. After many similarly civil speeches, he ordered dinner, and sent for Troup and Pottinger to see us. When they arrived, the whole of us, Mahomed Akbar, his chiefs, and ourselves, all sat down to the best meal I had had for many a month. The Wuzeer (as he always styled himself) chatted and joked away on indifferent subjects during the meal, and shortly after its conclusion dismissed us, saying he would make us over to the care of Pottinger and Troup for the night, and we might go and have a chat with them in private, as doubtless we were anxious to do so. On the following morning the arch fiend sent us an excellent breakfast, and horses to carry us out a few miles to the fort where the other British prisoners were living, and he desired a list of our wants regarding clothes, &c. might be made out, and they should be furnished. We found our countrymen living in what appeared to us a small paradise; they had comfortable quarters, servants, money, and no little baggage, and a beautiful garden to walk about in. To our great regret, we had only been four or five days in this Elysium, when we were sent off to Bameean. Being thus away from the immediate care of Mahomed Akbar, we soon found ourselves called on to rough it once more. Tents had been sent for the use of the ladies, but our guards would only pitch them when it suited their convenience, and consequently the poor women and children had frequently to bivouac with us men, and that, too, in the nipping night air of the mountains; none of them, however, I am happy to say, suffered in the least, and they one and all bore their privations most admirably. I see that Johnson and one or two others have already given very good accounts in the public prints of our doings at Bameean, and our return from thence to the blessings of freedom, so I will not inflict a second edition of the tale upon you. The public papers will also, long ere this reaches you, have given you some information about our doings at Istaliff, and our retrograde march from Cabul, during which there was a good deal more fighting than on the advance."

E.

LETTER FROM MOHUN LAL.

(From the Calcutta Englishman.)

Having been favoured with the perusal of a late letter from Mohun Lal to a friend in Calcutta, and been permitted to give the substance of it to the public, we have decided that it will do best in the writer's own language, as he expresses himself with perfect clearness and intelligibility in English, though not with very idiomatic correctness. His summary account of the events from the 2d of November 1841 down to the liberation of the prisoners, cannot be expected to contain much that is actually new to our readers; but still it is both interesting and historically valuable. Mohun Lal's brief and unassuming account of his own exertions, intrepidity, risks, and sufferings, is very little calculated to do him full justice; but his great merits are well known to, and will be amply appreciated and rewarded by, the Government of India. But now let Mohun Lal speak:—

“ Since the year of 1838, I have been in regular correspondence with my patron, Mr. Trevelyan, in London, and had repeatedly written to him, that if we do not rectify our conduct in the policy of Affghanistan, we will excite the whole country against us. These communications I believe have always been shown to the chairman of the Court of Directors, and it is great pity notwithstanding the late lamented Sir William McNaghten and Sir Alexander Burnes were aware of the impending dangers which threatened the British authority, but they never took steps either to prepare to meet the evils or to conciliate the chiefs. Their pay was reduced, and the manner of our proceedings had convinced them that they shall be all banished. In October last the chiefs entered into the solemn agreement with each other, and thus the Eastern Ghiljies stood up against our arms. General Sale bravely defeated the enemy, and forced his road through the different passes down to Jellalabad. While these discontented chiefs were intriguing, we bore every thing silently till the fatal day of the 2d of November arrived, and the houses of Sir Alexander Burnes and myself were surrounded by the rebels. They were not accompanied with more than fifty men, but not a battalion was sent to our protection. After poor Sir Alexander Burnes was murdered and his house set on fire, I made a hole through the neighbouring house and was nearly cut to pieces, had I not been protected by the good-natured Nuwab Mohammed Zeman Khan, and kept secretly a whole day in his house. All my property saved during the last twelve years was plundered, one of my servants murdered, and the house destroyed. For three days not many people had assembled under the flag of the rebels, and the Persians were not joined the enemy.

“From the house of Nuwab Mohammed Zeman Khan, I was conducted by our old friend Nayab Mahomed Sherif Khan to the house of the Persian chief, named Khan Shereen Khan, where I lived most clandestinely. Agreeably to the request of the late Envoy, I was daily in correspondence with him, and discharged my duties at the risk of my life. Nayab Shereef was employed by the Envoy and myself in several negotiations with the Ghiljies and the Persians. Every thing bid fair of our success formerly, and notwithstanding the Ghiljie, Cabulee, Kohistanee, and the Persian chiefs made solemn oaths with us, wrote the agreements on the Holy Koran to take our cause, received abundant money from us, but every body cheated us like a devil. Khan Shereen, the Persian chief, promised to give every assistance, which he never did. In short, every one of us was deceived.

“Mahomed Akbar Khan opened the negotiation with the Envoy, and promised to be useful to us, if we were to appoint him as a minister in Affghanistan ; but I always cautioned the Envoy against Akbar, though I wrote him at the request of Nayab Shereef on part of Mahomed Shah Khan, that the latter will persuade Akbar to attach himself to the British Government. On the 23d of December, about 6 A. M., wrote to the Envoy not to meet Akbar so often, as he will catch and bring him into the city ; but that gentleman, considering the treacherous Akbar as honest as himself, trusted him in every thing, while he became a victim to the pistol of that villain.

“Before the departure of General Elphinstone's force from Cabul, I wrote to Major Pottinger, that if any of us were to move from the cantonment, he will either be murdered or taken prisoner by Akbar ; and so it happened : all the force was destroyed, the ladies and the officers taken prisoners. I was brought again by a friend in the house of Khan Shereen Khan, where I lived all the time corresponding with General Pollock, and was a channel of his communications with the Prince Futeh Jung and the chiefs, under a very great personal risk.

“ When Mahomed Akbar gained an ascendancy, I was caught, closely confined, ill-treated, bastinadoed, threatened to be murdered, and forced to raise and pay him the money. While I was under such suffering, I neither left writing to Gen. Pollock nor relaxed in my exertions to cause the liberty of the prisoners. Finding that my endeavours to induce the chiefs in the city, as well as the letters of Gen. Pollock to their address, availed nothing in behalf of the prisoners, I took the most dangerous step with the full belief either to lose my life or gain my object. To effect this cause I supplicated, and asked Mahomed Akbar Khan to allow me to remain in the house near himself, under the pretence that my visiting him occasionally will show his kindness to me in future. It was agreed, and I was placed under a guard as before, but not sent out of the city; after this I sent for my acquaintance Moortza Shah in the confinement, on the pretence of selling some cloth to me, and told him if he goes to Bameean and speak to Saleh Mahomed on my part to restore the prisoners, I shall give the latter a reward of 20,000 rupees, and to himself of 5000, and besides this they will have some pension from Government for life. Saleh Mahomed was an officer of infantry under Mahomed Akbar, and then proceeding with our prisoners to Toorkistan. Moortza Shah reached Bameean, and Saleh Mahomed happily accepted my offers. In the mean time I stole my escape from confinement, and induced the Persian chiefs to desert Mahomed Akbar Khan. I was joined with about 2000 horsemen in the Afshar Fort; and as soon as Mahomed Akbar was defeated by General Pollock, I forced a party of them to go and meet the prisoners, who, in charge of Saleh Mahomed and my agent Moortza Shah, were returning from Bameean. Sir R. Shakespear also accompanied this party.

“If I would fear [had feared for] my life, there was not a single man to send intelligence to Government at such a crisis; and it is the most wonderful thing that I managed the despatch of letters so regularly and safely, that none of them was ever intercepted by the enemy, while the roads to Jellalabad were watched on every step. If I were not to run the personal risk while myself in confinement, and not induce Saleh Mahomed to restore our prisoners, they would never be released until we were to meet the wishes of Mahomed Akbar Khan, and would by this time be wandering and suffering on the deserts of Toorkistan. If Government take these my humble services into their just, impartial, and favourable view, I hope I shall be highly rewarded, because I have saved the British name, which, if the English ladies and officers were taken into Toorkistan, would deeply suffer. I have not only done this, but spent not the fourth of the money which was offered by General Pollock for recovering the prisoners, and thus saved the Company's cash. I am very proud indeed of what I have done.”

F.

LETTER FROM THE RELEASED PRISONERS TO SIR
RICHARD SHAKESPEAR, AND HIS REPLY.

Sir Richard Shakespear, Military Secretary, &c.

DEAR SIR, — Rescued as we have so lately been from a state of prolonged and cheerless captivity, which threatened soon to terminate in hopeless slavery, in a land where the laws of humanity are unknown or unacknowledged; restored by a wonderful interposition of Providence to country, friends, and all that renders life desirable; it would ill become us, in the midst of our rejoicings, to forget those friends, through whose agency this happy change in our prospects has been effected.

To you we are bound to express our heartfelt thanks, for the promptitude, with which you led a body of Kuzzilbash horsemen to our assistance at a most critical period, to whose timely arrival amongst us at Kaloo it may be chiefly attributed that our flight from Bameean was not intercepted.

To thank you adequately in words for so signal a service would be impossible, but we trust you will accept of this, as a token of the gratitude we feel, and, with every good wish for your happiness and prosperity, we subscribe ourselves,

Yours very faithfully,

Fanny Macnaghten, Florentia Sale,
Alexandrina Sturt,
Jean Boyd,
F. Boyd,

A. Waller,
R. Waller,
G. Mein,
Emily Eyre,
Vincent Eyre,

C. Mackenzie,	J. Nicholson,
Eldred Pottinger,	— Airey,
Edward Webb,	— Souter,
B. Melville,	John Shelton,
Georgiana Mainwaring,	— Evans,
H. Johnson,	T. P. Walsh,
G. St. P. Lawrence,	R. Warburton,
C. Harris,	H. Drummond,
C. Griffiths,	R. L. Burnett,
T. Palmer,	H. M. Williams,
J. S. Alston,	A. Crawford,
T. Thomson,	— Haughton.
J. M'Grath,

Camp Cabul, Sept. 24. 1842.

ANSWER.

To Lady Macnaghten, Lady Sale, &c.

General Shelton and Major Pottinger.

DEAR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN, — I was this morning greatly gratified by receiving a very kind and flattering letter, signed by the ladies and officers, who were lately prisoners at Bameean, and I hasten to request that you will express to them my sincere thanks for the very handsome terms, in which they have spoken of my poor services.

I shall ever consider it one of the happiest events of my life, that I should have had the good fortune to have been in any way instrumental in effecting your escape from Affghanistan.

I remain, dear Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient servant,

R. C. SHAKESPEAR.

Camp Jellalabad, Oct. 26. 1842.

G.

LIST OF CIVIL AND MILITARY OFFICERS KILLED DURING THE REBELLION, AT AND NEAR CABUL,

Between 12th October 1841, and 6th January 1842, the day of leaving Cabul.

Political.

Sir W. H. Macnaghten, Bart.	Murdered at a conference on	23d Dec.
Sir Alexander Burnes	Ditto in his own house in the city on - -	2d Nov.
Capt. Broadfoot, 1st Eng. Regt.	Ditto in Sir A. B.'s house in the city on - -	2d "
Lieut. Burnes, Bombay Infy.	Ditto in Sir A. B.'s house in the city on - -	2d "
Lieut. Rattray - -	- Ditto at a conference at Lughmanee in Kohistan -	3d "

H. M. 44th.

Lieut. Col. Mackrell -	- Killed in action at Cabul -	10th Nov.
Capt. Swayne - -	- Ditto Ditto -	4th "
Capt. M'Crea - -	- Ditto Ditto -	10th "
Capt. Robinson - -	- Ditto Ditto -	4th "
Lieut. Raban - -	- Ditto Ditto -	6th "

5th N. I.

Lieut. Col. Oliver - -	- Ditto Ditto -	23d Nov.
Capt. Mackintosh - -	- Ditto Ditto -	23d "

37th N. I.

Capt. Westmacott - -	- Ditto Ditto -	10th Nov.
Ensign Gordon - -	- Ditto Ditto -	4th "

35th N. I.

Lieut. Jenkins - -	- Ditto at Khoord-Cabul -	12th Oct.
Capt. Wyndham - -	- Ditto at Jugdulluk -	12th "

H. M. 13th Light Infantry.

Lieut. King - -	- Killed at Tezeen -	12th Oct.
-----------------	----------------------	-----------

Local Horse.

Capt. Walker, 1st N. I. -	- Ditto at Cabul -	23d Nov.
---------------------------	--------------------	----------

27th N. I.

Lieut. Laing - - - Killed at Cabul - 23d Nov.

Shah's Service.

Capt. Woodburn, 44th N. I. - Ditto Ditto - 23d Nov.
 Capt. Codrington, 49th N. I. - Ditto at Chareeker - 23d " Ensign Salisbury, 1st V. Regt. - Ditto Ditto - 23d " Ensign Rose, 54th N. I. - Ditto Ditto - 23d " Doctor Grant, Bombay Estab. - Ditto Ditto - 23d " Lieut. Maule, Artillery - Ditto in his camp at Kahdarrah - - - 3d "
 Capt. Trevor, 3d Light Cav. - Ditto at a conference - 23d Dec.
 Local Lieut. Wheeler - Ditto in his camp at Kahdarrah - - - 3d Nov.

From 6th January up to the 12th January 1842 inclusive on the retreat.

Staff.

Dr. Duff, Superin.-Surgeon - Killed between Tezeen and Seh Baba - - - 10th Jan.
 Capt. Skinner, 61st N. I. - Ditto at Jugdulluk - 12th " Capt. Paton*, 58th N. I. - Ditto Khoord-Cabul pass 8th "
 Lieut. Sturt*, Engineers - Ditto Ditto - 8th "

Horse Artillery.

Dr. Bryce - - - Ditto on march to Tezeen 10th Jan.

5th Light Cavalry.

Lieut. Hardyman - - - Ditto outside the cantonment - - - 6th Jan.

H. M. 44th.

Major Scott - - - Ditto on march to Tezeen 10th Jan.
 Capt. Leighton - - - Ditto Ditto - 10th " Lieut. White - - - Ditto Junga Fareekee - 10th " Lieut. Fortye* - - - Ditto Jugdulluk - 10th "

5th N. I.

Major Swayne* - - - Killed at Junga Fareekee - 10th Jan.
 Capt. Miles - - - Ditto Ditto - 10th " Lieut. Deas* - - - Ditto Ditto - 10th " Lieut. Alexander - - - Ditto Ditto - 10th " Lieut. Warren - - - Ditto Ditto - 10th "

* These officers had been previously wounded at Cabul. Captain Paton's left arm had been amputated.

54th N. I.

Major Ewart	-	-	Killed on march to Tezeen	10th Jan.
Capt. Shaw *	-	-	Ditto	Ditto - 10th "
Lieut. Kirby	-	-	Ditto	Ditto - 10th "

37th N. I.

Lieut. St. George	-	-	Ditto Khoord-Cabul pass	8th Jan.
-------------------	---	---	-------------------------	----------

H. M. 44th.

Lieut. Wade	-	-	Ditto Jugdulluk	- 12th Jan.
-------------	---	---	-----------------	-------------

27th N. I.

Dr. Cardew *	-	-	Ditto Tezeen	- 10th Jan.
--------------	---	---	--------------	-------------

After leaving Jugdulluk on the 12th to the final massacre.

Staff.

Major Thain* H. M. 21st Ft. A. D. C.	Jugdulluk Pass	-	-	12th Jan.
Capt. Bellew, 56th N. I.	Futtehabad	-	-	13th "
Capt. Grant, 27th N. I.	Gundamuk	-	-	13th "
Capt. Mackay, Assist. P. M. †	Doubtful.

Horse Artillery.

Capt. Nicholl	-	-	Jugdulluk Pass	- 12th Jan.
Lieut. Stewart	-	-	Gundamuk	- 13th "

5th Light Cavalry.

Lieut.-Col. Chambers	-	-	Jugdulluk Pass	- 12th Jan.
Capt. Blair	-	-	Ditto	- 12th "
Capt. Bott	-	-	Ditto	- 12th "
Capt. Hamilton	-	-	Gundamuk	- 13th "
Capt. Collyer	-	-	near Jellalabad	- 14th "
Lieut. Bazett	-	-	Jugdulluk Pass	- 12th "
Dr. Harpur	-	-	near Jellalabad	- 14th "
Veterinary Surgeon Willis	-	-	Doubtful.

H. M. 44th.

Capt. Dodgin	-	-	Jugdulluk pass	- 12th Jan.
Capt. Collins	-	-	Gundamuk	- 13th "
Lieut. Hogg	-	-	Ditto	- 13th "
Lieut. Cumberland	-	-	Ditto	- 13th "

* These officers had been previously wounded at Cabul.

† Capt. Mackay, Assist. P. M. Shah's Staff, being mentioned in the text twice (pp. 216. 220.), I insert his name thus. It is not in the original list. — EDITOR.

Lieut. Cadett -	-	- Soorkab -	-	- 12th Jan.
Lieut. Swinton -	-	- Gundamuk -	-	- 13th "
Ensign Gray -	-	- Doubtful.
Paymaster Bourke -	-	- Jugdulluk -	-	- 12th "
Qr.-Master Halahan* -	-	- Jugdulluk pass	-	- 12th "
Surgeon Harcourt -	-	- Ditto -	-	- 12th "
Assist. Surgeon Balfour -	-	- Doubtful.
Assist. Surgeon Primrose	-	- Gundamuk -	-	- 13th "

5th N. I.

Capt. Haig -	-	- Doubtful.
Lieut. Horsbrough -	-	- Gundamuk -	-	- 13th Jan.
Lieut. Tombs -	-	- Doubtful.
Ensign Potenger -	-	- Ditto.
Lieut. Burkinyoung -	-	- Ditto.
Dr. Metcalfe -	-	- Gundamuk -	-	- 13th Jan.

37th N. I.

Capt. Rind -	-	- Gundamuk -	-	- 13th Jan.
Lieut. Steer -	-	- Jugdulluk pass	-	- 12th "
Lieut. Vanrenen -	-	- near Soorkab -	-	- 12th "
Lieut. Hawtrey -	-	- Gundamuk -	-	- 13th "
Lieut. Carlyon -	-	- Doubtful.

54th N. I.

Capt. Anstruther -	-	- Doubtful.
Capt. Corrie -	-	- Ditto.
Capt. Palmer -	-	- Ditto.
Lieut. Weaver -	-	- Gundamuk -	-	- 13th Jan.
Lieut. Cunningham -	-	- Ditto -	-	- 13th "
Lieut. Pottinger -	-	- Neemla -	-	- 13th "
Lieut. Morrison -	-	- Gundamuk -	-	- 13th "

H. M. 13th Lt. Inf.

Major Kershaw -	-	- Doubtful.
Lieut. Hobhouse -	-	- Gundamuk -	-	- 13th Jan.

Shah's Service.

Brigadier Anquetil -	-	- Jugdulluk pass	-	- 12th Jan.
Capt. Hay, 35th N. I. -	-	- Gundamuk		- 13th "
Capt. Hopkins, 27th N. I. -	-	- near Jellalabad -	-	- 13th "
Capt. Marshall, 61st N. I. -	-	- Jugdulluk pass	-	- 12th Jan.
Lieut. Le Geyt, Bombay Cav.	-	- Neemla -	-	- 13th "
Lieut. Green, Artillery -	-	- Gundamuk -	-	- 13th "
Lieut. Bird, Madras Estab.	-	- Futtehabad -	-	- 13th "
Lieut. Macartney -	-	- Gundamuk		- 13th "

* This officer had been previously wounded at Cabul.

LIST OF OFFICERS SAVED OF THE CABUL FORCE.

In imprisonment in Affghanistan.Political.

Major Pottinger, C.B. - Wounded at Charekar on - 6th Nov.
 Capt. Lawrence.
 Capt. Mackenzie, Madras Estab. Ditto in action at Cabul on 23d "

Staff.

Major-Gen. Elphinstone, C.B. Ditto on retreat at Jugdulluk 12th Jan.
 (Died at Tezeen on April 23d.)

Brigadier Shelton.

Capt. Boyd, At. Cy. Gl.

Lieut. Eyre, Arty. D. C. O. Wounded in action at Cabul 22d Nov.

Horse Artillery.

Lieut. Waller Ditto Ditto - 4th "

H. M. 44th.

Capt. Souter - - - Ditto on retreat at Gundamuk 13th Jan.

H. M. 13th.

Lieut. Mein - - - Ditto in action under Gen.
 Sale at Khoord-Cabul pass Oct.

37th N. I.

Major Griffiths - - - Ditto on retreat in Khoord-Cabul pass - - 8th Jan.

Dr. Magrath.

Shah's Service.

Capt. Troup - - - Ditto on retreat in Khoord-Cabul pass - - 8th "

Capt. Johnson.

Capt. Anderson.

Paymaster.

Capt. Bygrave - - - The toes of one foot nipped off by frost on retreat.

Mr. Ryley, conductor of Ordnance.

54th N. I.

Lieut. Melville - - Wounded on retreat near Huft Kotul - - 10th Jan.

Shah's Service.

Dr. Brydon - - Escaped to Jellalabad.

H.

LIST OF PRISONERS RELEASED ON THE ARRIVAL OF GENERALS POLLOCK AND NOTT AT CABUL
IN SEPTEMBER 1842.

Majôr-Gen. Shelton, Her Majesty's 44th foot.
Lieut.-Col. Palmer*, 27th Bengal native infantry.
Major Griffiths, 37th Bengal native infantry.
Capt. Troup, Shah's service.
— Anderson, ditto.
— Bygrave, paymaster.
— Boyd, commissariat.
— Johnson, ditto S. S. F., 26th native infantry.
— Burnett, 54th native infantry.
— Souter, Her Majesty's 44th foot.
— Waller, Bengal horse artillery.
— Alston*, 27th native infantry.
— Poett*, ditto.
— Walsh, 52d Madras native infantry.
— Drummond, 3d Bengal light cavalry.
Lieut. Eyre, Bengal artillery.
— Airey, Her Majesty's 3d buffs.
— Warburton, Bengal artillery, S. S. F.
— Webb, 38th Madras native infantry, S. S. F.
— Crawford, Bengal 3d native infantry, S. S. F.
— Mein, Her Majesty's 13th light infantry.

* Those marked thus * were of the Ghuznee garrison.

Lieut. Harris*, 27th Bengal native infantry.
 — Melville, 54th Bengal native infantry.
 — Evans, Her Majesty's 44th foot.
 Ensign Haughton, 31st Bengal native infantry.
 — Williams, 37th Bengal native infantry.
 — Nicholson, ditto.
 Conductor Ryley, ordnance commissariat.
 Doctor Campbell.
 Surgeon Magrath.
 Assistant-Surgeon Berwick, left in charge.
 — Thomson.

LADIES.

Lady Macnaghten.
 — Sale.
 Mrs. Trevor, 8 children.
 — Anderson, 3 ditto.
 — Sturt and 1 child.
 — Mainwaring, ditto.
 — Boyd, 3 children.
 — Eyre, 1 child.
 — Waller, 2 children.
 Conductor Ryley's wife, Mrs. Ryley, 3 children.
 Private Bourne's (13th light infantry) wife, Mrs. Bourne.
 Mrs. Wade, wife of Sergeant Wade.

Major Pottinger, Bombay artillery.
 Captain Lawrence, 11th light cavalry.
 — Mackenzie, 48th Madras native infantry.
 Mr. Fallon, clerk } not in the service.
 — Blewitt, do. }

HER MAJESTY'S 44TH FOOT.

Sergeant Wedlock.	Corporal Bevan.
— Weir.	Drummer Higgins.
— Fair.	— Lovell.
Corporal Sumpter.	— Branagan.

Private Burns.

— Cresham.
 — Cronin.
 — Driscoll.
 — Deroney.
 — Duffy.
 — Matthews.
 — M'Dade.
 — Marron.
 — M'Carthy.
 — M'Cabe.
 — Nowlan.
 — Robson.
 — Seyburne.
 — Shean.

Private Tongue.

— Wilson.
 — Durant.
 — Arch.
 — Stott.
 — Moore.
 — Miller.
 — Murphy.
 — Marshall.
 — Cox.
 — Robinson.
 — Brady.
 — M'Glyn.
 Boys Grier.
 — Milwood.

HER MAJESTY'S 13TH LIGHT INFANTRY.

Private Binding.

— Murray.
 — Magary.
 — Monks.

Private Maccullar

— M'Connell.
 — Cuff.

BENGAL HORSE ARTILLERY.

Sergeant M'Nee.

— Cleland.

Gunner A. Hearn.

— Keane.

Gunner Dalton.

Sergeant Wade, baggage-sergeant to the Cabul mission.

THE END.

LONDON:

Printed by A. SPOTTISWOODE,
 New-Street-Square.

NOTICE BY THE EDITOR.

THE manuscript of the following pages, forming the conclusion of Lieut. Eyre's Journal, reached me only a short time since, having been lost — irretrievably as he thought — from his pocket, on the march towards India. It is issued in the present shape, as most considerate towards the purchasers of the original volume; who, by removing the last eight pages — from 313 to 319 inclusive — and substituting this Supplement, may have their book complete.

The communication by Capt. Mackenzie (referred to in pp. 25. and 44.), will now be found in the Appendix); to which I have also added Lieut. Crawford's account of the imprisonment of himself and his brother-officers at Ghuznee. They were eventually transferred to Mahomed Akber, and released with the prisoners of Cabul. I should have hesitated thus to appropriate what is so deserving of separate publication, but that, as it has appeared in an Indian paper, it seems not to have been destined for another shape; in which case, its adoption here may afford many friends of those officers a gratification, which they might not otherwise obtain.

The other additions to the Appendix, and the few notes, are such only as have been considered strictly illustrative of the Journal. They might even have been usefully increased, but for an unwillingness to swell the work with matter not original. Among these the despatch of Major-Gen. Elphinstone, and some extracts from a memorandum of that officer, deserve attention.

The interest attached to the events, which are the subject of this narrative, has drawn to it much attention, and, of course, some criticism. The author has, on the whole, very much to gratify him in the result of such an ordeal: but there have been a few qualifications of the general praise, which, with this opportunity, should perhaps be noticed.

On the question which has arisen, whether the particulars narrated have been allowed publicity too soon, there may be a fair difference of opinion. For this, as has been before stated, the author is not strictly answerable: but I may be allowed also to say that I consulted, and had the sanction of high military judgment on the point; and I knew besides that the MS. had, in transitu, been seen by individuals of professional discretion and experience, none of whom suggested that it should be, even for a time, withheld. The only doubt I ever entertained had respect to its publication in India, pending "the Inquiry." This, however, was to open soon after Christmas, at Ferozepore, whither no copy of the book can arrive before the middle of April. The danger, then, of "prejudicing the Inquiry" is but small.

"But," say a few, "is it nothing to prejudice the minds of those at home? The minds of those at home had been, in reality, prejudiced, as much as could be done, many months ago. Every one at all interested in these events was possessed of the outline, which Mr. Eyre's history fills up; and both the responsible personages and their acts had been long since dealt with by those at home, in an undiscriminating spirit of condemnation, which his work tends rather to correct. An erroneous analogy, as I think, is resorted to, when "those at home" are likened to a court or a jury, or the author to "a jurymen prematurely delivering his verdict." He cannot be more than a witness; and those at home will carefully compare his testimony with that of others, and with the issue. If he be correct, no one is injured; if not, it can only recoil upon himself; but to state at any time what he knows, though he may have to give it afterwards in evidence, is no offence in a witness, either morally or judicially ; while to suppose of the real court and jury, who must investigate the disasters of Cabul, looking at the constitution of such a court, that their decision could be influenced by this history, is quite impossible. It is, however, very satisfactory to those who have given it to the world, to see how every day proves more and more, as the real truth creeps out, that, had not Lieut. Eyre been restrained by a spirit admitted by a distinguished reviewer to be, " under the circumstances, indeed extraordinary," he might have revealed much more, which he has had the good taste and feeling to withhold.* It is further satisfactory to see already so many of his statements confirmed, as are so, both by the Papers just presented to Parliament, and from private sources ; among these may be particularised the Journal of the Retreat, by Capt. Johnson, another of the prisoners, which has appeared in the Bombay Times. I should, too, in justice to my brother, state that, on finding that his MS. had been sent to me, he hastened to request that, as it had been " written under every sort of disadvantage," I would not hesitate to omit any passage which might by possibility give pain to others. This letter arrived too late for the first edition ; but, though I had myself kept this in view, it was quite impracticable to omit all that any party might wish omitted ; nor would it have been fair, either to the public or the author, so to mutilate a work of so much historic interest. In scenes too, in which all the actors cannot be blameless, blame will often appear to be imputed by the most meagre recital of what was done or left undone ; and so the case is here ; the bare facts are the severest part of all ; but they are such facts as, with the public characters whom they implicate, have ever been the legitimate subjects both of history and criticism ; and the idea, that silence for any time was incumbent on any actor in them, is as new to me, as the circumstances are, happily, new and unprecedented in British annals.

* See particularly a letter from Ferozepore, in the N. & M. Gazette of 18th inst.

One apology, which is found for Lieut. Eyre's "partiality and prejudice," his friends must needs deny him — the suggestion that he writes under the influence of "frustrated hopes and blighted prospects." These terms in no way apply to him. He is in the same service as before ; and nothing that occurred at Cabul can have diminished, at any rate, his professional hopes and prospects.

In the brief remarks which I have to add, I shall confine myself to the few instances in which Lieut. Eyre's veracity, or consistency, is called in question. The following critique appears to me unfair.* "Asserting his correctness, the author tells us—'In these notes I have been careful to state only what I know to be undeniable facts. I have set down nothing on mere hearsay evidence, nor any thing which cannot be attested by living witnesses, or by existing documentary evidence.' Yet, in the face of this declaration, he acknowledges hearsay evidence (certainly of eminent men), from Major Pottinger, Capts. Mackenzie, Lawrence, and Troup; and, after his departure from the retreating army as a prisoner, describes all the motions and casualties of the force with as much minuteness, as if he had continued to be an eye-witness." This is surely an unusual apprehension of what is mere hearsay evidence—information, which he acknowledges as "valuable aid," given by some of the "living witnesses," expressly for historical purposes. Again;—among these living witnesses were some, his fellow prisoners, captured towards the end of the retreat, Major Griffiths, Capts. Johnson and Bygrave, &c. — How can particulars supplied by them be termed "mere hearsay evidence"?

On one other point the author's consistency

* Literary Gazette.

has been impugned, with no more reason, as I humbly think. — Discrediting the existence of a conspiracy throughout Affghanistan and at Cabul against the British, the Edinburgh Review considers that Mr. Eyre on this point contradicts himself. Now, first, as to the conspiracy:— the reviewer does not account in any other way for the simultaneous risings against, and massacres of, our men and officers in widely distant provinces. At Cabul, Charekar, and Ghuznee, no two of which are less than 90 miles from each other, the flame burst forth at the same time; and, on the 2d of November, Sir A. Burnes was murdered, the Ghoorka regiment assailed, and shortly annihilated, Capt. Woodburn and his escort cut off, and Ghuznee surrounded. The reviewer does not dispose of the warnings of Major Pottinger, nor attempt to get over that of Taj-Mahomed, nor notice (he may not have seen it) the concurrent testimony of Mohun Lall.* This individual, to whom we owe so much, says, “In October last, the chiefs entered into the solemn agreement with each other, and thus the Eastern Giljyes stood up against our arms.” But he also agrees with Lieutenant Eyre, in saying that the outbreak at Cabul commenced by an attack of an insignificant force on Sir A. Burnes's house; commenced, not originated. "Yet," observes Mohun Lall, "not a battalion was sent to our protection."—Mr. Eyre terms the same commencement "an insignificant ebullition, which military energy and promptitude ought to have crushed in the bud;"—that is to say,—the train being laid, a spark set fire to it, which spark might and ought to have been trodden upon at once. These statements are surely reconcilable.—Another alleged inconsistency is the following: "In the whole Affghan nation," it is said in one place, "we could not reckon on a single friend;" in another place, that some chiefs, especially the Kuzzilbashes, "remained neutral, until our want of energy, and the booty of the commissariat fort, determined them to join in the general combination to drive us from the country." "This," observes the reviewer, "proves that the other passage is idle talk; we had friends in plenty." Now the friendship of these friends is thus illustrated by Mohun Lall:—"Notwithstanding the Giljye, Caboolee, Kohistanee, and the Persian (Kuzzilbash) chiefs made solemn oaths with us,—wrote the agreement on the Holy Koran to take our cause,—received abundant money from us,—but every body cheated us like devils. Khan Shereen, the Persian chief, promised to give every assistance, which he never did," &c. These Kuzzilbashes, then, were scarcely friends who could be "reckoned on;" — they may have been the best, and better than none, in our distress: but, both in our reverses and our late prosperity, they have verified the poet's comment on the friendship of the world: —

* See his letter, App. E.

"Donec eris felix, multos numerabis amicos; Tempora si fuerint nubila, solus eris."

Lieut. Eyre is consistent enough, but he does not mean Affghan friendship.

Having attempted in these few observations to show that he has not been either inconsiderate or inconsistent, I have lastly to admit that on two or three points he must have been misinformed. They personally concern a distinguished individual, who himself liberally allows that such slight inaccuracies are quite reconcilable with a "desire to state the truth, and nothing but the truth."* The reader will please to receive the following, stated from, of course, the only satisfactory authority, to be the more strictly correct version on the points referred to: —

"P. 5. As to the alleged neglect to send a military force against the Nijrow chiefs, Lord Auckland had nothing to do with it. The Envoy pressed this measure upon Major-Gen. Elphinstone; but he, for prudential reasons, partly on account of the advanced season of the year, objected to this employment of the troops."

* A note to this effect was hastily annexed to the 2d and 3d Editions. It is now repeated here, to insure more general circulation.

"P.16. As to the reduction of the payments to the Giljye chiefs.—This measure did not originate with Lord Auckland, but was one 'to which the narrowness of the king's finances led him, under Sir William Macnaghten's advice, to have recourse.'* Lord Auckland was not aware of it, until after the outbreak at Cabul. Sir William Macnaghten says†, 'the necessities of his Majesty, and the frequent prohibitions I have received against further reliance on the resources of the British government, appeared to admit of no alternative.'"

"P.28. This passage relates to the supposed delay in accepting the resignation by Major-Gen. Elphinstone of his command. It was, in fact, accepted by Lord Auckland as soon as it was sent in officially. The poor General did, however, indisputably wish to resign before; but seems to have had doubts whether he could do so without discredit. The inaccuracy in the text on such a point might easily have originated, and most probably did, in some equivocal expressions of his own."

* Parl. Pap. on Affghanistan. No. 1.

† Ibid. No. 2.

E. EYRE.

Athenæum Club,
1st March 1843.

NOTES ON THE HISTORY

to without discussion, the following in the list contains a brief history of the original, and the probable date of the original, and of the copy, and of the copy of the copy.

London, 1848.

Captain Henry Walter Bellew was the 4th son of Robert Bellew Esq of Ballendiness, near Castle Martyr in the County of Cork (who was descended from the Bellews of Galway and Meath) he entered the Indian Army in 1818. In 1831 he married Anna Jeremie.

Towards the end of 1840 he accompanied Col: Skelton's Brigade to join Genl: Elphinstone's force at Cabul, marching by Karnal (3.11.40) Feroziana (6.11.40) Ferozepore (8.11.40) Chenab (27.11.40) Potas (2.12.40) Hoomook (9.12.40) Peshawar (20.12.40) Jinnah (25.12.40) Jellalabad (18.1.41) and thence to Cabul where he came under the orders of Genl: Elphinstone. Genl: Elphinstone sent him to Bandalahar in the spring of 1841 to join Genl: Holt, there being no vacancy on the staff at Cabul. He left Genl: Holt in Sept^r 1841, and returned to Cabul passing Kelat-i-Ghilzai (9.9.41) and Ghurnee (19.9.41), and on his arrival at Cabul (29.9.41) was sent with General Sale's force down the Khyber Pass, but with orders from Genl: Elphinstone to return to him at Cabul.

Captain Bellew having accompanied General Sale, as 2^d in Command to his force, as far as Futehghur (near Jellalabad) left him to return to Genl Elphinstone at Cabul in accordance with the instructions he had received.

He reached Cabul on the 1st November 1841. On the following day the Siege by the Affghans of the Cabul Cantonments was commenced. Throughout the Siege he acted as Asst. Dir. General.

He left Cabul for the last time with the "ill-fated army" on 6th January 1842, and was amongst the last-killed. He was murdered by the Affghans at Futehabad, close to Jellalabad on the 13th January 1842. The following is the Certificate of his death.

"I hereby certify that I was with Captain Bellet at Futehabad on the morning of the 13th of January 1842. and that I saw him surrounded by the enemy by whom I believe him to have been killed

(Sd) William Brydson
Asst. Surgeon

Camp near Peshawar
Novr 9th 1842.

I leave this with any of the 73uffs one of the 6 hostages, who in case of accident or in the

Cabul Cantts 31st Decr 1841 - 5^{1/2} p.m P.S. 107, 43^d

It seems an age, my tenderly loved Anna, since I wrote to or heard from you. Your last rec^d was I think of the 18th or 18th of August or September. I gave up writing soon after the daks were stopped in the early part of Oct^r. Our siege commenced on the 2nd Nov^r, and for nearly a month we had constant fighting, or at least had all the inconveniences of defending this ill planned - ill situated cantonment. Our mistakes have been gross and glaring - in short we have been in a false position, and the military and political arrangement has been faulty. Macnaughten and Burns have been infatuated, and the former latterly in my opinion became insane, as his conduct (wh^o: was only afterwards known) w^d have been totally disproved at home however successful. His mad plot failed and he was cut off on the 23rd instant. Need I say that you and our loved little ones have been constantly in my mind. I have reckoned on having your prayers in some dangerous undertakings where I have been much exposed to fire. I have often thought of you when my life has been most in danger. I hope with God's blessing to see you again in 2 or 3 months, but if that should not be for me, God, and God wills it otherwise.

Remember that I have paid last month (Nov^r) my subⁿ as major to the mil^y widows fund, and 1/3 of my Donation - agreeably to the Secy's letter of the 23rd of last March. With every blessing for you and yours I am your constant lover and faithful husband H. Bellevue event of my death may be hereafter able to send it. We have now to retire under treaty and the Affghan nation are to be no more interfered with, but friendship is to be eternal. I have written you 12 or 14 letters about the Duty Widow's Fund with copies of the Secy's letter and of my pay statement for November.

And I say how I long again to see you, and as on the morning of our marriage again to join you at the sacramental table - Remember this - If our force should not reach India go home with the children in haste - If I followed my inclination I should as usual write much, but I must be satisfied with a repetition of my usual blessings to you and yours, and fervent prayers to God for your long continued health, wealth and Godliness - Believe me dearest Anna
Yours H. B.

This was the last letter written by Captⁿ Bellew to his wife. It was delivered to her about six months after his death.

The two letters on reverse are copies of two letters that Captⁿ Bellew wrote on thin paper. They were enclosed in quills and carried from Cabul to India by messengers, who probably had to conceal them from the Affghans.

at Memphis that he is well: except the loss of his left arm. Tell Mrs Hallahan to apply for a comm^d for Rob. Mrs D. to write to Canton and Co for amount. Chambers & L.C. well, also Blair, Post, Royal &c. Barrett well also.
Leighton and Wade &c. well and Jack Grey.
Add no more but bless you and yours, & feel more than I can express - your constant & loving H. Bellew

has surprised us. The Genl is still as well as ever. He has lost much and if the men were in health, have still enough to fight our way down, or anywhere else.

28th Dec^r 1841
Major W. Garden C.B.
Q. M. Genl of the Army
H. Bellew Capt
A. Q. M. Genl Simla or Knoxepore

My dear Garden, Excuse me travelling you with this for my wife.
The position of our policy is now changing itself. The troops have behaved well but the policy and measures of Sir W. & Sir A. B.

To, The India Fund Comm^{rs}, Calcutta
Calcutta 19th Nov^r 1841

Gentlemen, Agreeably to your letter no 170 of the 19th March last, I am now a subscriber in the rank of Major; as there may be difficulty in recovering the sums due from me through the Pay Master here, I beg to say that Mrs Bellew residing at Walnut Grove, Missouri will pay the increased subscription &c on demand. My last payment in the grade of Captain is for October last.

Your most obedient Serv^t H. W. Bellew Captⁿ
Asst. 2^d M. Genl

Dearest Anna, The above will in case of accident to me get you the Major's widows pension. We left Calcutta on the 2nd and have been besieged ever since in our country unless a split takes place in all this month among the rebel chiefs our force and position here will be in a very critical ~~dangerous~~ state - With usual love and blessings to you and yours, I am your faithful and loving H. W. Bellew

of great Private Importance

To Mr. Keller
Walnut Grove
Missouri

The Homeward Mail.

LONDON : MONDAY, AUGUST 8, 1892

SURGEON-GENERAL BELLEW.

SUCH distinction as the late SURGEON-GENERAL BELLEW attained cannot be adequately expressed in an obituary notice or in any brief summary of his services. The usefulness of his life to the public, to the Government, to his country, must not be measured by the number of honorific letters after his name. Least of all ought we to rely solely on the official record of his career, or on the amount of consideration shown to him by those in authority. DR. BELLEW—and we prefer to use the name by which he was known so widely—was a man of rare ability, of remarkable attainments, of great force of character; while the chances of official life placed him over and over again in most critical positions. It may be said at once that neither by temperament nor training was he at all like that particular type of official who is sure of promotion. Right or wrong, his convictions and his principles were often incompatible with the precepts of official diplomacy; and as he was not a man whose opinions could be concealed, or altered from time to time to suit the varying moods of politicians in power, it can easily be understood that he was as often as not ignored at headquarters. His advice and assistance would be sought when the Government was in a tight place; he would be thrown over and left unrewarded when the crisis passed away. Yet it is a proof of the sterling quality of his mind that, although a keen and untiring controversialist, he was ever found, not protesting against official neglect or posing as a man with a grievance, but expounding and advocating what he believed to be true principles of policy. He held it a matter of far greater consequence that we should be treating the Afghans unfairly, than that his own prospects of promotion should suffer. With his unrivalled experience and unusual faculties, it is easy to see that, had he only subordinated his own views to those of this and that Governor-General and Foreign Secretary, honours and official rewards would have been showered on him. As it was, he had to be content with a European reputation as a scholar and traveller, and with the approbation of those who understood him.

His career, as told in his books, was a singularly interesting one. His father, MAJOR H. W. BELLEW, was one of that ill-fated army which perished, all but one man, in the disastrous retreat from Cabul. "It seems to have been the will of Providence," wrote one who knew him, "that HENRY WALTER BELLEW should spend his life in efforts for the welfare of that race which deprived him of a father's protection ; for no English name is so revered, and there are no deeds of kindness so treasured up by the Afghans, even as household words, as the name and deeds of BELLEW Sahib." When serving as surgeon with the Corps of Guides, DR. BELLEW was selected to accompany MAJOR, afterwards SIR HARRY LUMSDEN, on a mission to Candahar. During the Mutiny, when the Guides were winning imperishable renown before Delhi, the two LUMSDENS and BELLEW were at the mercy of the Afghans. The rumour reached Candahar that every Englishman in India had been massacred. The Governor, GHOLAM HAIDAR, son of the DOST, consulted his father as to whether the three Englishmen should be put to death. It was very greatly owing to the good name which DR. BELLEW had won for England by the exercise of his professional skill, and by the friendly relations which he had established with leading Afghans, that this catastrophe was averted. He afterwards told the story of the mission in one of his most interesting books, which is still a standard work. Of his earlier labours on the Peshawur frontier, his report on the Eusufzais and his grammar and dictionary of the Pushtu language would be ample evidence. Later on, as civil surgeon at Peshawur, he made the city hospital a centre of civilising influence. In 1869 he was employed as interpreter with SHERE ALI, during the AMEER'S visit to LORD MAYO ; and the AMEER never ceased to speak of him with expressions of respect and warm friendship. Nine years afterwards, when SIR LEWIS PELLY met the Afghan Envoy in conference at Peshawur, the Envoy said to DR. BELLEW, "I reckon you as our friend, and I know that the AMEER esteems you as such, and often speaks of you in terms of commendation. But," he went on to say, "it is different with your government. The AMEER has now a deep-rooted mistrust of the good faith and sincerity of the British Government, and he has many reasons for this mistrust." Previous to this, in 1870, DR. BELLEW served on the Seistan Mission ; and here, too, he has left on record an interesting and valuable record of his experiences. A few years later he accompanied the Forsyth Mission to Yarkund ; and once more he made Englishmen familiar with an almost unknown country. His history of Kashgar and his account of the expedition must be studied by all who wish to understand the past and present of Chinese Turkestan. These works contain information which cannot be found elsewhere. In the last Afghan war DR. BELLEW was employed for a time as political officer with GENERAL ROBERTS. This is not a fitting occasion for inquiring into the secrets of history, but we cannot refrain from the remark that, had DR. BELLEW's advice been taken, more than one serious scandal would have been avoided.

If it could be maintained that in its dealings with Afghanistan the Government of India had been uniformly successful, the inevitable conclusion would be forced on us that, in spite of his wide experience, DR. BELLEW must often have been mistaken. More than once, however, that policy has completely broken down ; and it is beyond question that the causes of failure have at times been precisely those which DR. BELLEW anticipated. In one particular respect we are afraid that the warnings he uttered have been and will continue to be amply justified. He frequently protested against the dangers incurred by our system of frontier management ; of letting the frontier tribes get out of hand and then sending large armies to coerce them into subjugation. The work which was once accomplished by small columns is now undertaken, as in the last Black Mountain campaign, by complete corps d'armée. Generals are sent in command who are absolutely ignorant of the frontier ; and every expedition leaves behind it a legacy of blood-feuds which will go on multiplying till the tribes will either be exasperated beyond endurance or will have to be exterminated. DR. BELLEW's strictures on our Afghan policy may be read in his published works. Unfortunately the policy he advocated, a policy which might have resulted in an alliance based on mutual respect and a sense of mutual benefits, has not been consistently followed ; and the result may be read in the news that is telegraphed daily from India. We are not saying that in every respect and on all occasions he was right. Our contention is that to be successful in dealing with Afghans and Pathans the British Government need be guided only by two main principles: by a knowledge of the Afghans, and by a resolution to maintain the honour and dignity of the English name. These were the principles that DR. BELLEW never ceased to insist on.

At Woking, on Saturday, the body of Dr. H. W. Bellew, C.S.I., was cremated. Among those who attended were his brother, Mr. P. F. Bellew, his nephew, Captain Judge, Mr. Norman M'Gregor, M. Ciardiello, Dr. Fairbank, and a number of Anglo-Indian friends.

July 29.
1892

THE LATE SURGEON-GENERAL BELLEW.

The Memorial in the United Service Institution

On Tuesday afternoon the Commander-in-Chief unveiled the bust of the late Surgeon-General H. W. Bellew, which had been presented to the United Service Institution, Simla, by Mrs. Bellew. His Excellency in his preliminary remarks said:—"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—I propose to commence our proceedings this afternoon by reversing the procedure usual on such occasions. I believe it to be the custom to unveil the statue, bust, or picture at the conclusion, and not at the beginning of the proceedings; but it appears to me to give an air of unreality to keep what is so intimately connected with the subject of the addresses and the proceedings general shrouded in obscurity till all is over. I will, therefore, with your permission, initiate the proceedings by unveiling the bust, so that those who have come here to do honour to the occasion may have the earliest opportunity of seeing the work of the artist, and by its aid recalling the features of the late Dr. Bellew, who were well known in life to many here."

Captain Colomb then withdrew the veil from the bust, and the features, once so well known in military circles in Upper India, were seen to have been accurately reproduced by the sculptor.

Sir George White then said:—"In unveiling the bust of the late Surgeon-General Henry Walter Bellew, it is a pleasure to me to have the opportunity of saying a few words in commemoration of the career of one whose life was spent in work of such varied importance and helpfulness to this great Empire; more especially as I believe that with the exception of the literary works which he has left behind him for the education of those who survive him, none of which are of personal character, little has been written or said of his career."

"Henry Walter Bellew was born in India in 1833, and died in England in 1892. He came of a race of soldiers. His father was Assistant Quarter Master General in the Indian service. He was one of the ill-fated Army of Afghanistan, none of whom returned save one, to tell the tale of the terrible disaster that overtook it, in the depths of the Afghan winter of unusual severity, in the snow-bound passes of the Khurd, Kabul and Jagdalak. Young Bellew was and

THE LATE SURGEON-GENERAL BELLEW.

The Memorial in the United Service Institution.

On Tuesday afternoon the Commander-in-Chief unveiled the bust of the late Surgeon-General H. W. Bellew, which has been presented to the United Service Institution, Simla, by Mrs. Bellew. His Excellency in his preliminary remarks said. "LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—I propose to commence our proceedings this afternoon by reversing the procedure usual on such occasions. I believe it to be the custom to unveil the statue, bust, or picture at the conclusion, and not at the opening of the proceedings; but it appears to me to give an air of unreality to keep what is so intimately connected with the subject of the addresses and the proceedings generally, shrouded in obscurity till all is over. I will, therefore, with your permission, initiate the proceedings by unveiling the bust; so that those who have come here to do honour to the occasion may have the earliest opportunity of seeing the work of art, and by its aid recalling the features of the late Dr. Bellew, which were well known in life to many here."

Captain Colomb then withdrew the veil from the bust, and the features, once so well known in military circles in Upper India, were seen to have been accurately reproduced by the sculptor.

Sir George White then said:—"In unveiling the bust of the late Surgeon-General Henry Walter Bellew, it is a pleasure to me to have the opportunity of saying a few words in commemoration of the career of one whose life was spent in works of such varied importance and helpfulness to this great Empire; more especially as I believe that with the exception of the literary works which he has left behind him for the education of those who survive him, none of which are of a personal character, little has been written or said of his career.

"Henry Walter Bellew was born in India in 1833, and he died in England in 1892. He came of a race of soldiers. His father was Assistant Quarter Master General in the Indian service. He was one of the ill-fated Army of Afghanistan, none of whom returned save one, to tell the tale of the terrible disaster that overtook it, in the depths of an Afghan winter of unusual severity, in the snow-bound passes of the Khurd, Kabul and Jagdalak. Young Bellew was thus left fatherless at an age when he could not realise the full extent of the loss he had sustained. He went through the usual curriculum of a boy's education, and as he approached manhood he selected the medical profession as his career in life. He completed his medical studies at St. George's Hospital, and gained his diplomas. In the year 1854, when he was 20 years old, he volunteered to go out to the Crimean War. He thus laid the foundation of that career of adventure and enterprise which he pursued assiduously for the rest of his professional life. He returned from the Crimea in 1855, and was soon after gazetted as Assistant Surgeon in the Bengal Medical Service.

"On arrival in India he was posted to the Guides, a regiment that has earned special distinction by the number of officers it has educated who have afterwards become an honour to their country (Applause). The Guides were at that time commanded by Henry Lumsden, who, a year or two later, was selected by the Governor-General in Council to take charge of a special political mission ordered to Kandahar. Although the Commandant had had but short knowledge of the young Assistant Surgeon, he had seen enough of him to select him specially as the Medical Officer of the Mission. The third member of that mission was Peter Lumsden, known to many here as Sir Peter Lumsden, late Member of the Secretary of State's Council at the India Office. This Mission started for Kandahar in the commencement of that year of unhappy memories, 1857. During the Mutiny it remained at Kandahar, and it was in the most critical position, being entirely at the mercy of the Afghans. As day by day accounts were received in Afghanistan of the progress of the mutiny, and that the very existence of the British Raj in India trembled on the balances, it is asserted that Gholam Hyder, the Governor of Kandahar, and son of Dost Mohamed, asked his father whether it would not be politic to put the three British Officers to death. Those who have had opportunities of witnessing the gratitude and even affection with which Afghans reward the successful surgical or medical practitioner by whose skill and humanity they have benefitted, will readily understand that the reputation which this clever young surgeon had established amongst the Kandaharis had a large share in saving, not only his own life, but also the lives of the distinguished brothers Lumsden. (Applause.)

"It would but weary you were I to repeat in detail the various missions and other works in which Dr. Bellew played a more or less important part during the time that elapsed between the suppression of the Indian Mutiny and the outbreak of the last Afghan war. It will be sufficient here to say that he added to his reputation in each of them.

AL

7.

the has
, by said.
pro-l on the pen-r of the rally, with ust ;
sion
art, hich

and pper
the

the e to comorks great tion
the
of a reer.

l he iers.

the
of tale i an sses thus n he could not realise the full stained. He went through the ducation, and as he approached ical profession as his career in edical studies at St. George's mas. In the year 1854, when he ered to go out to the Crimean lation of that career of adventure ed assiduously for the rest of his from the Crimea in 1855, and as Assistant Surgeon in the was posted to the Guides, a al distinction by the number of ve afterwards become an honour

The Guides were at that time n, who, a year or two later, was ral in Council to take charge of red to Kandahar. Although the hort knowledge of the young en enough of him to select him er of the Mission. The third eter Lumsden, known to many te Member of the Secretary of Office. This Mission started for nent of that year of unhappy Mutiny it remained at Kandahar, position, being entirely at the by day accounts were received in the mutiny, and that the very ndia trembled on the balances, it the Governor of Kandahar, and is father whether it would not be Officers to death. Those who nessing the gratitude and even eward the successful surgical or skill and humanity they have nd that the reputation which this blished amongst the Kandaharis ot only his own life, but also the ers Lumsden. (Applause.)

were I to repeat in detail the ks in which Dr. Bellew played a ring the time that elapsed beadian Mutiny and the outbreak ll be sufficient here to say that ach of them.

"In the year 1879, when the war clouds again gathered over Kabul, Dr. Bellew's well tried acquaintance with the Afghans and their language, and his knowledge of the politics of Afghanistan, pointed him out to Lord Lytton as the man most fit for the post of Chief Political Officer with the Army in Kabul. This was to him an office of no ordinary difficulty. Conflicting considerations warred in his mind. On the one side were his deep sympathy with the people and the recollection that they had spared his life when many of the more fanatical were anxious to show their sympathy with the mutinous co-religionists in India by wiping out the whole Mission from the Kafirs. On the other hand, Louis Cavagnar had been foully murdered in the streets of Kabul, with the whole of his Mission and escort, in spite of his Ambassador's office, which is held sacred by the most uncivilised people. A great cry for vengeance had arisen, not in India alone, but throughout the length and breadth of England and her Colonies, and an army was ordered to Kabul to demand an account of the blood of our country-men at the very gates of the blood-stained Bala Hissar. A Mission such as that upon which this army was ordered is not one that can be fulfilled by the sprinkling of rose-water. The sterner duties that devolve upon such an expedition are rarely understood, and are often grossly mis-represented by those who are enjoying the calm and quiet security of life in England, and the policy of exchanging a life for a life was fiercely attacked in some quarters. Even our system of patient enquiry and regular trial made the pursuit of justice seem too long drawn out. Under such circumstances, the post of the Chief Political Officer was no viable one.

"Under the strain of this uncongenial work, and the extremes of the Kabul climate, Dr. Bellew's health quite broke down and he was obliged to return to India. He had steered the political ship through rocks and shoals of unusual complexity, and as it was emerging into quieter waters he was forced to resign the helm to a successor who reaped the reward that was liberally bestowed at the conclusion of the campaign for completed work."

"There can be no stronger proof of the disinterested and public spirited way in which Dr Bellew carried out the many important missions and duties entrusted to him without self-seeking or truckling to those who have honours to bestow than the fact that he retired from the service with but one order, that of a Companion of the Star of India. He was an officer of most varied talents and attainments. He was distinguished alike as soldier, surgeon, statesman, ethnologist and linguist. He was a man of the deepest sympathies and

"In the year 1879, when the war clouds again gathered over Kabul, Dr. Bellew's well tried acquaintance with the Afghans, and their language, and his knowledge of the politics of Afghanistan, pointed him out to Lord Lytton as the man most fit for the post of Chief Political Officer with the Army of Kabul. This was to him an office of no ordinary difficulty. Conflicting considerations warred in his mind. On the one side were his deep sympathy with the people and the recollection that they had spared his life when many of the more fanatical were anxious to show their sympathy with their mutinous co-religionists in India by wiping out the whole Mission from the Kafirs. On the other hand, Louis Cavagnari had been foully murdered in the streets of Kabul, with the whole of his Mission and escort, in spite of his Ambassadorial office, which is held sacred by the most uncivilised peoples. A great cry for vengeance had arisen, not in India alone, but throughout the length and breadth of England and her Colonies, and an army was ordered to Kabul to demand an account of the blood of our country-men at the very gates of the blood-stained Bala Hissar. A Mission such as that upon which this army was ordered is not one that can be fulfilled by the sprinkling of rose-water. The sterner duties that devolve on such an expedition are rarely understood, and are often grossly mis-represented by those who are enjoying the calm and quiet security of life in England, and the policy of exacting a life for a life was fiercely attacked in some quarters. Even our system of patient enquiry and regular trial made the pursuit of justice seem too long drawn out. Under such circumstances, the post of the Chief Political Officer was no enviable one.

"Under the strain of this uncongenial work, and the extremes of the Kabul climate, Dr. Bellew's health quite broke down and he was obliged to return to India. He had steered the political ship through rocks and shoals of unusual complexity, and as it was emerging into quieter waters he was forced to resign the helm to a successor who reaped the reward that was liberally bestowed at the conclusion of the campaign for completed work."

"There can be no stronger proof of the disinterested and public spirited way in which Dr Bellew carried out the many important missions and duties entrusted to him without self-seeking or truckling to those who have honours to bestow, than the fact that he retired from the service with but one order, that of a Companion of the Star of India. He was an officer of most varied talents and attainments. He was distinguished alike as soldier, surgeon, statesman, ethnologist and linguist. He was a man of the deepest sympathies and of the firmest convictions, and he had the courage of his opinions. (Applause). His was no changing mood that could adapt itself to the varying requirements of parties in power. Such men, though admirable in their independence of character, are not always the most favourite agents of those whose policy they are forced to carry out. Yet it is the strongest evidence of the sterling quality of his mind that though a keen controversialist, especially on political matters, he was never found complaining of official neglect or posing as a man with a grievance. At the same time he enunciated and advocated what he believed to be the principles of true policy and he adhered to them. Because right was right he followed right, and he deemed it wisdom in its very scorn of personal consequences. (Applause.)

"Many of those here know that Henry Bellew was brother-in-law to Charles Macgregor. (Applause.) The love of adventure, common to these two men, their honest pursuit of truth and contempt of shams made them kindred in spirit and, it may be, paved the way for their closer relationship in life, and I think all present will agree with me that in India, the field of enterprise of both, it is in accordance with the fitness of things that the marble which reproduces the features of the scholarly surgeon should take its stand in this hall hard by the canvas which recalls to the memory of many of us here the strong face and herculean frame of the sterling soldier. (Applause.) The lives of both were devoted to the service of their country, and were beautiful in this singleness of aim: and it has been our privilege, this afternoon, to see that, here at all events, in death they are not divided." (Loud applause.)

Major-General Sir Henry Collen then proposed a vote of thanks to the Commander-in-Chief for having uncovered the bust, and for his eloquent and interesting sketch of Dr. Bellew's career. This was carried, and the proceedings terminated.—
Reprinted from the Pioneer, September 29th, 1894.

A Number of Blank Pages Follow which have not been Photographed.

John J. Kennedy regretted that he was the 1841-42 Afghanistan

During 1841 a revolt occurred, the British Resident & Envoy were murdered and after a series of disasters the British Garrison numbering 4500 Soldiers (about 700 by Europeans) agreed to evacuate the Country. The horrors of their retreat through the snows of the Khyber Pass hampered as they were by 12000 Camp followers including many women & children with the Afghans hanging upon their heels and forming ambuscades in which the unfortunate foreigners were slaughtered.
The ship can never be adequately described.
The force of 4500 men which left Kabul on Jan 6 1842 numbered 20000 men when Pandahat was reached only 1000 lives and of the whole

the 1841 to Afghanistan

During 1841 a revolt occurred, the British Resident & Envoy were murdered and after a series of disasters the British Garrison numbering 4500 Soldiers (about 700 being Europeans) agreed to evacuate the Country. The horrors of their retreat through the snows of the Khyber Pass hampered as they were by 12000 Camp followers including many women & children with the Affghans hanging upon their heels and forming ambuscades in which the unfortunate foreigners were slaughtered like sheep can never be adequately described. The force of 4500 men which left KABUL on Jan 6 1842 numbered 20 muskets when Pandah was reached only 1 week later and of the whole

Army but I was wounded, starving & nearly naked reached Jalalabad

This was Dr. Brydson a member of the Medical Staff

