Three figures representing the Clyster (fol.28). Large gold letter at the commencement of the first treatise.

The first treatise, an introduction to practical medicine, is the work of a celebrated doctor of Padua, Professor of the University of that City. The Manuscript, contemporary with the composition of the work (contemporain de la composition de l'ouvrage) has been drawn up perhaps for the master himself by one of his people as it goes on to explain: Explicit introduction sive janks ad opus practicum medicine, compillatum per magistrum Christophorum de Barziziis de Pergareo doctorum excellentissimium ad laudem domini nostri Jhesti Christi et gloriose eius Matris Virginis Marie. The treatise on the signs of death and of critical days of Gentile de Foligho, illustrious doctor of Florence of the 14th cent., called Speculator on account of the fame of his teaching does not appear to have been printed in his works. The second treatise has been written some days before that of Ch. de Barbeziis: "Tractatus Centilis de crisi explicit, quem XVI junii 1449 scripsi". MEDICAL MANUSCRIPT. Tractatus de febribus, XVth cent. In fol. (30 x 24 cm) papier, large margins, 40 ff., fine state.

Written in Gothic script of 1450 (about). Large gold initial letter, red others.

This work on fevers is dedicated by the author to his brother Antonius Maglanus. The author is inspired by the Arab doctor Abu Ali, without however ignoring the precepts and teaching of his own time - the teaching of the professors of Padua such as Eartholomeus Montagnana, who wrote in 1438 a medical treatise, which he cites as an opinion on fol. 37. He enumerates the different forms taken by the fever (pestilence etc.) and the correct remedy for each of them, and gives a propos of this, an infinite variety of remedies and the exact composition of each one. He cites the remedies of which he has made personal use and relates (f.19) that he has had a discussion two days before at the bedside of Francescus Salvagii who was suffering from intermittent fever (fibvre-quatre), with his colleague Jacobus Judeus on the subject of the diagnosis of the malady. These examples taken 'sur le vif' make this work much more important than a compilation, and render it particularly precious and of the highest importance.

Incipit (preface): Tui amoris gratia, mi Antonii Maglane, ad hunc deveni locum.....(traité) cum mee sit intentionis hoc in summario febris: negocium patrebus ine una cum principe Abgali.

Tractatus de apostemalibus, vulveribus et . XVth cent. In fol. (30 x24cm) papier 60 ff. Large margins.

Written in Gothic characters about 1450. Large gold initial letter. The author - without doubt e doctor of Padua - of this work or treatise on abscesses and wounds - enumerates all kinds of varieties - phlegnons, apostaxis, buboes, glands, scrofula, wounds, negader, extraction of arrows, burne, ulcers, fistulas, fractures, "Fistula lacrymal45', maladies of the eye, polypus, maladies of the ear, of the genital organs, of the anus and of the tongue, etc. He gives remedies for them especially those cited by the Arab writers, and those given by his contemporaries - viz - Henri de Sallicet, Rogerius, Guy (de Chaulisc), Gulielmus, Placentivus, Eorengerius de Varina, etc.

The treatise is followed by two pages, written by the same hand, commencing in Latin and terminating in Italian on the signs of the Peste, and the remedies against the Peste.
