IT'S A STANLEY COX PRODUCTION

SUPERPOSED CURRENTS

One of the currents which hitherto has not been used in combination with other currents, is the High Frequency current as used for Diathermy—not that it is inadvisable or unwanted, but because of the likelihood that the high tension employed might spoil the rather more delicate apparatus used for the production of the superposed current. By the introduction of a special filtering device, however, it has now been possible to combine Diathermy with any other current used in Electro-Therapy. The advantages of combined Diathermo-Therapy can easily be appreciated. In lumbago, to mention one example, the simultaneous application of surging faradism is most valuable, while in the treatment of anterior poliomyelitis, the warming action of the Diathermy current in addition to a superposed slow sinusoidal or surged Leduc's current, is ideal for the stimulating of nutrition, and circulation through the paralysed muscles. Other instances of the importance of associating Diathermy with other currents are the combination of Lithium ionisation and Diathermy in gout—Calcium ionisation and Diathermy in spasmodic conditions—sinusoidal current and Diathermy in vaso motor disturbances, etc.
