Self knowledge: a treatise, shewing the nature and benefit of that important science, and the way to attain it; intermixed with various reflections and observations on human nature / by John Mason, A.M.

Contributors

Mason, John, 1706-1763. Thomas, Isaiah, 1749-1831 Andrews, Ebenezer Turrell, 1766-1851 Wilson, James, 1764-1841 National Library of Medicine (U.S.)

Publication/Creation

Printed at Boston: By I. Thomas and E.T. Andrews, Faust's Statue, no. 45, Newbury Street, 1793.

Persistent URL

https://wellcomecollection.org/works/nck45byb

License and attribution

This material has been provided by This material has been provided by the National Library of Medicine (U.S.), through the Medical Heritage Library. The original may be consulted at the National Library of Medicine (U.S.) where the originals may be consulted.

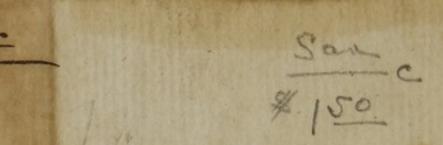

This work has been identified as being free of known restrictions under copyright law, including all related and neighbouring rights and is being made available under the Creative Commons, Public Domain Mark.

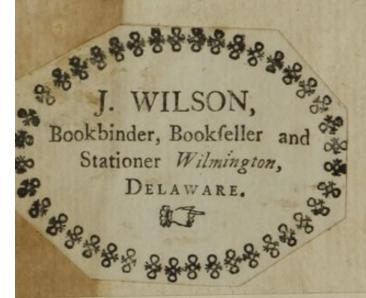

You can copy, modify, distribute and perform the work, even for commercial purposes, without asking permission.

Wellcome Collection 183 Euston Road London NW1 2BE UK T +44 (0)20 7611 8722 E library@wellcomecollection.org https://wellcomecollection.org

SURGEON GENERAL'S OFFICE

LIBRARY

Section ...

Form 113c No. 249892 W.D.,S.G.O.

SELF KNOWLEDGE:

A

TREATISE,

SHEWINGTHE

NATURE and BENEFIT OF THAT

IMPORTANT SCIENCE,

AND

The WAY to attain it.

INTERMIXED

With various Reflections and Observations On Human Nature.

By JOHN MASON, A. M.

The proper Knowledge of Mankind is MAN. POPE.

PRINTED at BOFTON.
BY I. THOMAS AND E. T. ANDREWS, FAUST'S STATUE, No. 45, NEWBURY STREET.

1793.

249892

TO

SAMUEL LESINGHAM, Esq.

TREASURER of ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL.

SIR,

MODESTY and self diffidence are the allowed characteristicks of felf knowledge. If then my presuming to address this piece to you may seem to discover more assurance and self considence than becomes a true acquaintance with the subject I write upon, I have only this to say—your known condescension and candour have encourage

ed

ed that presumption: Nor can any thing animate an address of this nature more, than an affurance that the person to whom it is made, has so good an understanding in the practical part of this subject as will incline him to excuse the defects that may appear in the management of it.

But after all Sir, my own proficiency in this science is so poor, that I dare not be consident I am not wrong in my views, with which I desire this small tract may appear under your patronage. That it may have resuge from the petulance of censure, an encouragement in the publication, and I at the same time, an opportunity of testifying my grateful sense of many past favours, are my open and avowed ends herein. But still, whether an ambition to be known to the world under the advantage of your friendship be not the secret and true motive, I cannot be certain.

However, if in this point I may be miltaken, there is another in which I think I cannot; and that is, that it is at least a pardonable donable ambition; in which I shall certainly stand acquitted by every one who knows your character, the delicacy of your taste in the choice of your friends, and the real honour it does to those you are pleased to admit into that number.

But even this Sir, your penetration will foon discover to proceed from the same vanity I before suspected myself to be guilty of. And the world will judge, that I speak it rather to do myself honour than you. However, I am beforehand with them in the observation. And that I may not be tempted, in this address, to enhance your character (according to the usual style of dedications) in order to do honour to my own, and at once oppress your modesty and expose my vanity, I shall put an end to it, without so much as attempting to describe a character, which I shall, however, always aim to imitate.

But that you may continue to adorn that publick and useful station you are in, and long live a patron and pattern of solid

A 2

and

and difinterested virtue; and that your many charitable offices, and good works on earth, may meet with a large and late reward in heaven, is the hearty prayer of,

SIR,

Your much obliged, and very humble servant.

Dorking, Jan. 31,

J. MASON.

PREFACE.

HE subject of the ensuing treatise is of great importance; and yet I do not remember to have seen it cultivated with that precision, perspicuity and force, with which many other moral and theological themes have been managed. And indeed it is but rarely that we find it professedly and fully recommended to us in a set and regular discourse, either from the pulpit or the press. This consideration, together with a sull persuasion of its great and extensive usefulness, hath excited the present attempt to render it more familiar to the minds of christians.

Mr. Baxter indeed, has a treatise upon this subject; entitled, The mischief of self ignorance, and the benefit of self acquaintance. And I freely acknowledge some helps I have received from him. But he hath handled it (according to his manner) in so lax and diffuse a way, introducing so many things into it that are foreign from it, omitting others that properly belong to it, and skimming over some with a too superficial notice, that I own I found myself and especially those of them that are students and candidates for the sacred ministry; for which they will find no science more immediately necessary (next to a good acquaintance with the word of GOD) than that which is recommended to them in the following treatise; to which every branch of human literature is subordinate, and ought to be subservient. For certain it is, the great end of philosophy, both natural and moral, is to know ourselves, and to know GOD. The highest learning is to be wife, and the greatest wisdom is to be good; as Marcus Antoninus somewhere observes.

It has often occured to my mind in digefting my thoughts upon this subject, what a pity it is that this most useful science should be so generally neglected in the modern methods of education; and that preceptors and tutors both in publick and private seminaries of learning, should forget that the forming the manners is more necessary to a finished education than furnishing the minds of youth, Socrates, who made all his philosophy subservient to morality (b), was of this sentiment; and took more pains to rectify the tempers, than replenish the understandings of his pupils; and looked upon all knowledge as ufeless speculation, that was not brought to this end, to make us wifer and better men. And without doubt, if in the academy the youth has once happily learned the great art of managing his temper, governing his passions, and guarding his foibles, he will find a more folid advantage

⁽b) Totam philosophiam revocavit ad mores. Sen. Epift. p. 722.

rantage from it in after life, than he could expect from the best acquaintance with all the systems of ancient and modern philosophy.

It was a very just and sensible answer, which Agefilaus, the Spartan King, returned to one who asked him What it was in which youth ought principally to be instructed? He replied, that which they have most need to practife when they are men (c). Were this fingle rule but carefully attended to in the method of education, it might probably be conducted in a manner much more to the advantage of our youth than it ordinarily is. For as Dr. Fuller observes, that pains we take in books or arts, which treat of things remote from the use of life, is but a busy idleness (d). And what is there in life which youth will have more frequent occasion to practife than this? What is there which they afterwards more regretthe want of? What is there in which they want more direction and affistance than the right gov-1 ernment of their passions and prejudices? And what more proper scalon to receive those affishances, and to lay a foundation for this difficult but very important science, than the early part of vouth?

It may be said, "it is properly the office and care of parents to watch over and correct the tempers of their children in the first years of their infancy, when it may easiest be done." But if it be not done done effectually then (as it very seldom is) there is the more necessity for it afterwards. But the truth is, it is the proper office and care of all who have the charge of youth, and ought to be looked upon as the most important and necessary part of education.

⁽c) See Plutarch's Laconick Apothegms, under the word Agef-

⁽d) Rule of life, page 826

It was the observation of a great divine and reformer, that he who acquires his learning at the expense of his, morals is the worse for his education (e). And we may add, that he who does not improve his temper, together with his understanding, is not much the better for it. For he ought to measure his progress in science by the improvement of his morals; and remember that he is no further a learned man than he is a wife and good man; and that he cannot be a finished philosopher till he is a christian (f). But whence is it that moral philosophy, which was fo carefully cultivated in the ancient academy, should be forced in the modern to give place to natural, that was originally defigned to be subservient to it? Which is to exalt the handmaid into the place of the mistress (g). This appears not ono add made concer than to we

⁽e) Qui proficit in literis et deficit in moribus, non proficit see deficit. Oecolampadius. See Hist. of Pop. Vol. ii. p. 337.

⁽f) Te in scientia profecisse credas quantum in moribus sueris emendatior; eo usque doctum, in quantum bonum: Ita philosophum, ut christianum. Præs. ad Nem.

⁽g) Things were coming to this pass so early as Seneca's time; who laments that plain and open truth was turned into a dark and intricate science. "Philosophy (says he) is turned into philology; and that through the fault of both masters and scholars; the one teach to dispute, not to live; and the other come to them to mend their wite, not their manners. Whereas philosophy is nothing else but a rule of life. Quid autum philosophia, nist vit se lex est."

Iy a preposterous, but a pernicious method of institution. For as the mind takes a turn of thought in future life, suitable to the tincture it hath received in youth, it will naturally conclude, that there is no necessity to regard, or at least to lay any stress upon what was never inculcated upon it as a matter of importance then. And so will grow up in a neglect or disesteem of those things which are more necessary to make a person a wise and truly understanding man, than all those rudiments of science he brought with him from the school or college.

It is really a melancholy thing to fee a young gentleman of shining parts, and a sweet disposition, who has gone through the common course of academical studies, come out into the world under an absolute government of his passions and prejudices: Which have increased with his learning, and which, when he comes to be better acquainted with human life and human nature, he is foon fenfible and ashamed of; but perhaps is never able to conquer as long as he lives, for want of that affistance which he ought to have received in his education. For a wrong education is one of those three things to which it is owing (as an ancient christian and philosopher justly observes) that so few have the right government of their passions (h).

Ι would

(h) Εγγινονίαι δε τα φαυλα τα θη τη ψυχη δια

τριων τουτων δια κακης αγωγης, εξ αμαθιας, νπο

καχεξιας μη αχθενίες γαρ καλως εκ ταιδων ως

Β δυνασθαι

I would not be thought to depreciate any part of human literature, but should be glad to see this most useful branch of science, the knowledge of the heart, the detecting and correcting hurtful prejudices, and the right government of the temper and passions, in more general esteem; as necessary at once to form the gentleman, the scholar and the christian.

And if there be any thing in this short treatise which may be helpful to students, who have a regard to the right government of their minds, whilst they are furnishing them with useful knowledge, I would particularly recommend it to their perusal.

I have nothing further to add, but to defire the reader's excuse for the freedom with which I have delivered my sentiments in this matter, and for detaining him so long from his subject; which I now leave to his candid and serious thoughts, and the blessing of Almighty GOD to make it useful to him.

CONTENTS.

δυνασθαι κραζειν των παθων εις την αμεριαν αυζων εμπιπζομεν'—Bad passions spring up in the mind three ways; wiz. through a bad education, great ignorance, or a disorder in the animal frame. 1. From a bad education. For if we have not been taught from our childhood to govern our passions, with all possible care, they will soon come to have the government of us. Names. de Nat. Hom. page 182.

CONTENTS.

PART I.

对关于 对自己的 医多种性 医多种性 医多种性 医多种性 医多种性 医多种性 医多种性 医多种性
CHAP. I. THE Nature and Importance of the CHAP. I. THE Nature and Importance of the Subject. p. 19
CHAP. II. The several Branches of Self Knowledge.
We must know what Sort of Creatures we are, and what we shall be. p. 29
CHAP. III. The several Relations in which we stand to GOD, to CHRIST, and our Fellow Creatures.
p. 37
CHAP. IV. We must duly consider the Rank and Station of Life in which Providence bath placed us, and what it is that becomes and adorns it. p. 51 CHAP V. Every Man should be well acquainted with bis own Talents and Capacities, and in what Manner they are to be exercised and improved to the greatest Advantage. p. 54
est Advantage. p. 54 CHAP. VI. We must be well acquainted with our Inabilities, and those Things in which we are naturally deficient, as well as those in which we excel.
p. 57
CHAP. VII. Concerning the Knowledge of our Constitutional Sins.

p. 60

CHAP. VIII. The Knowledge of our most dangerous Temptations necessary to Self Knowledge. p. 66
CHAP. IX. Self Knowledge discovers the secret Prejudices of the Heart. p. 70 CHAP. X. The Necessity and Means of knowing our Natural Temper. p. 83
CHAP. XI. Concerning the secret Springs of our Actions. III A 4 9 p. 88 CHAP. XII. Every one that knows himself, is in a particular Manner sensible how far he is governed by a Thirst for Applause. p. 90.
CHAP. XIII. What kind of Knowledge we are already furnished with, and what Degree of Esteem we set upon it. p. 95.
CHAP. XIV. Concerning the Knowledge, Guard, and Government of our Thoughts. p. 100
CHAP. XV. Concerning the Memory. p. 114.
CHAP. XVI. Gencerning the Mental Tafte. p. 118
CHAP. XVII. Of our great and governing Views in Life. p. 122.
CHAP. XVIII. How to know the true State of our Souls; and whether we are fit to die. p. 125 and a company of the

PART II.

SHEWING the great Excellence and Advantage of this kind of Science.

p. 129
CHAP. I. Self Knowledge the Spring of Self Possession.

p. 130
CHAP. II. Self Knowledge leads to a wife and steady Conduct.

134.

CHAP. III. Humility the Effect of Self Knowledge.
p. 135
CHAP. IV. Charity, another Effect of Self Knowledge.
138
CHAP. V. Moderation the Effect of Self Knowledge.
140
CHAP. VI. Self Knowledge improves the Judgment.
p. 143
CHAP. VII. Self Knowledge directs to the proper Exercises of Self Denial. p. 145
CHAP. VIII. Self Knowledge promotes our Usefulness in the World. p. 149
CHAP. IX. Self Knowledge leads to a Decorum and Consistency of Character. p. 151
CHAP. X. Piety the Effect of Self Knowledge. p. 154 CHAP. XI. Self Knowledge teaches us rightly to perform the Duties of Religion. p. 155 CHAP. XII. Self Knowledge the best Preparation for Death. p. 158
p. 150
PART III.
SHEWING how Self Knowledge is to be attained.
p. 160
CHAR I Salf Examination was Cary to Salf Known!

edge. p. 164 CHAP. II. Constant Watchfulness necessary to Self Knowledge. p. 179 CHAP. III. We should have some Regard to the Opinions of Other Us concernings, particularly of our Enep. 180

mies. B 2

CHAP. IV. Frequent Converse with Superiours a Help to Self Knowledge. p. 185 CHAP. V. Of cultivating fuch a Temper as will be the best Disposition to Self Knowledge. p. 186 CHAP. VI. To be sensible of our False Knowledge a good Step to Self Knowledge. p. 189 CHAP. VII. Self Inspettion peculiarly necessary upon some particular Occasions. p. 191.
CHAP. VIII. To know our selves we must whol'y ab-
Aract from external Appearances. p. 196
CHAP. IX. The Practice of Self Knowledge a great Means to promote it. p. 199
CHAP. X. Fervent and frequent Prayer the most effectual Means for attaining true Self Knowledge.
2. 206

A Cline Berth Suglan While Salays mergang as bert

Julieras Ille We front of book from Region to who Chin-ser of their to community, purished by the thin.

9. 150

ATREATISE

TREATISE

OF

SELF KNOWLEDGE

CHAP. I.

The Nature and Importance of the Subject.

DESIRE of knowledge is natural to the mind of man. And nothing discovers the true quality and disposition of the mind more, than the particular kind of knowledge it is most fond of.

Thus we see that low and little minds are most delighted with the knowledge of trisses; as in children. An indolent mind, with that which serves ferves only for amusement, or the entertainment of the fancy. A curious mind is best pleased with salls. A judicious penetrating mind, with demonstration and mathematical science. A worldly mind esteems no knowledge like that of the world. But a wise and and pious man before all other kinds of knowledge perfers that of GOD and his own soul.

But some kind of knowledge or other the mind is continually craving after. And by considering what that is, its prevailing turn and temper may easily be known.

This defire of knowledge, like other affections planted in our nature, will be very apt to lead us wrong, if it be not well regulated. When it is directed to improper objects, or pursued in a wrong manner, it degenerates into a vain and criminal curiosity. A fatal instance of this in our first parents we have upon sacred record; the unhappy effects of which are but too visible in all.

Self knowledge is the subject of the ensuing treatise. A subject which the more I think of, the more important and extensive it appears. So important that every branch of it seems absolutely necessary to the right government of the life and temper. And so extensive, that the nearer view we take of its several branches, the more are still opening to view, as nearly connected with it as the other. Like what we find in microscopical observations on natural objects. The better the glasses, and the nearer the scrutiny, the more wonders we explore; and the more surprising discoveries we make of certain properties, parts or affections belonging to them, which were never before thought of. For in order to a true felf knowledge, the human mind, with its various powers and operations, must be narrowly inspected; all its fecret bendings and doublings displayed. Otherwise our felf acquaintance will be but very partial and defective; and the heart after all will deceive us. So that in treating this subject there is no small danger, either of doing injury to it, by flight and superficial inquest on the one hand, or of running into a research too minute and philosophical for common use on the other. The two extremes I shall keep in my eye, and endeavour to steer a middle course between them.

Know thyfelf, is one of the most useful and comprehensive precepts in the whole moral system. And it is well known in how great a veneration this maxim was held by the ancients; and in how high esteem the duty of felf examination as necessary to it.

Thales the Milesian is said to be the first author of it (a). Who used to say, that for a man to know himfelf is the hardest thing in the world (b). It was afterwards adopted by Chylon the Lacedemonian; and is one of those three precepts which Pliny affirms to have been consecrated at Delphos in golden letters, It was afterwards greatly admired and frequently

(b) See Stanley's Life of Thales.

⁽a) He was the prince of the philosophers, and flourished about A. M. 3330, and was cotemporary with Josiah king of Judah, used by others (c). Till at length, it acquired the authority of a divine oracle; and was supposed to have been given originally by Apollo himself. Of which general opinion Cicero gives us this reason; "Because it hath such a weight of sense and wisdom in it as appears too great to be attributed to any man (d)." And this opinion of its coming originally from Apollo himself, perhaps was the reason that it was written in golden capitals over the door of his temple at Delphos.

And

(c) Respue quod non es : tollat sua munera cerdo. Tecum habita : et noris quam sit tibi curta supellex.

Pers. Sat. 4.

Nec te quæsiveris extra. Id. Sat. 1.

Teipfum concute. Hor. lib. 1. Sat. 3.

Bellum est enim sua vitia nosse. Cic. Epist. ad Atticum. lib. 2.
Illud (γνωθι σεαυίοη) noli petare ad arrogantiam minuendam solum ette dictum, verúm etiam ut bona nostra norimus. Id.
Epist. ad Mar. Q Fratrem, lib. 3 Epist. 6.

Id enim maximé quemque decet quod est cujusque subm maxime. Quisque igitur noscat ingenium, acremque se et bonorum et vitiorum suorum Judicem præbeat. Id. de offic. lib. 1.

Intrandum est igitur in rerum naturam, et penitus, quid ca postulat pervidendum; aliter enim nosmet ipsos nosse non possumus.

Id. de finibus, lib. 5.

(d) Hæc enim (i. e. philosophia) nos cum cæteras res omnes tum quod est disficilimum, docuit; ut [NOSMET IPSOS] nosceremus. Cujus præcepti tanta vis, tanta sapientia est, ut ea non homini cuipiam, sed Deiphico Deo tribueretur.

Cicero de legib. lib. 1.

Quod præceptum quia majus erat quam ut ab homine videretur idcirco assignatum est Deo: Jubet igitur nos Pythius Apollo, nos-cere [NOSMET IPSOS] Idem de Finihus, lib. 5. cap. 16.

And why this excellent precept should not be held in as high esteem in the christian world as it was in the heathen, is hard to conceive. Human nature is the same now as it was then. The heart is as deceitful; and the necessity of watching, knowing, and keeping it, the fame. Nor are we less affured that this precept is divine. Nay, we have a much greater affurance of this than heathens had; they supposed it came down from heaven, we know it did; what they conjectured, we are fure of. For this facred oracle is dictated to us in a manifold light, and explained to us in various views by the holy spirit, in that revelation which GOD hath been pleased to give us as our guide to duty and happiness; by which as in a glass we may furvey ourselves, and know what manner of persons we are.*

This discovers ourselves to us; pierces into the inmost recesses of the mind: Strips off every disguise; lays open the inward part; makes a strict scrutiny into the very soul and spirit; and critically judges of the thoughts and intents of the heart (e). It shews us with what exactness and care we are to search and try our spirits, examine ourselves, and watch our ways, and keep our hearts, in order to acquire Et nimirum hanc habet vim præceptum apollinis, quo monet ut se quisque noscat—hunc igitur nosse, (i. e. animum) nisi divinum esset, non esset hoc acrioris cujusdam animi præceptum, sic ut tributum Deo sit: hoc est seipsum posse cognoscere. Idem Tuscul. Quælt. lib. 5.

[#] James i. 23.

⁽e) Και κρίδικος ινθυμησεων και εννοιων καρδίας.

Heb. iv. 12.

acquire this important felf science; which it often calls us to do. Enamine yourfelves .- Prove your own fetves; know you not your fetves (f)? Let a man examine himfelf. Our saviour upbraids his disciples with their felf ignorance, in not knowing what manner of spirits they were oft. And saith the apostle, If a man (through self ignorance) thinketh himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself. every man prove his work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself, and not in anothert. Here we are commanded, instead of judging others, to judge ourselves; and to avoid the inexcufable rashness of condemning others for the very crimes we ourselves are guilty of, Rom. ii. 1, 21, 22. which a felf ignorant man is very apt to do; nay to be more offended at a small blemish in another's character, than at a greater in his own; which folly, felf ignorance, and hypocrify, our faviors with just feverity animadverts upon, Matt. vii. 3-5.

And

(f) Early doninales. 2 Cor. xiii. 5.—Tho' doninales for fignifies to approve as well as to prove, yet that our translators have hit upon the true sense of the word here, in rendering it prove yourselves, is apparent, not only from the word immediately preceding (early mespales) which is of the same import, but because self probation is always necessary to a right self approbation.

"Every christian ought to try himself, and may know himself if he se faithful in examining. The frequent exhortations of scripture hereunto imply both these, viz. that the knowledge of ourselves is attainable, and that we should endeavour after it. Why should the apostle put them upon examining and proving themselves, unless it was possible to know themselves upon such trying and proving?" Bennet's Christ. Oratory, p. 568.

" 1 Cor. xi. 28. † Lukeix. 55. 1 Gal. vi. 3. 4.

And what stress was laid upon this under the Old Testament dispensation appears sufficiently from those expressions.—Keep thy heart with all diligence.* Commune with your own heart.† Search me, O GOD, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts.‡ Examine me, O LORD, and prove me; try my reins and my heart. Let us fearch and try our ways. Recollect yourselves, O nation not desired (g).—And all this is as necessary to that self acquaintance which is the only proper basis of solid peace (h).

Were mankind but more generally convinced of the importance and necessity of this felf knowledge, and possessed with a due esteem for it; did they but know the true way to attain it; and under a proper sense of its excellence and the satal effects of self ignorance, did they but make it their business and study every day to cultivate it; how soon should we find a happy alteration in the manners

^{*} Prov. iv. 23. † Pfal. iv. 4. f Pfal. cxxxix. 23. { Pfal. xxvi. 2. § Lam. iii. 4.  Zeph. ii. 1.

⁽g) Will live Interest (wwp) properly Egnifies to glean, or gather together scattered slicks or straws; as appears from all the places where the word is used in the Old Testament. (Exod. v. 7, 12. Numb. xv. 32. I Kings, xvii. 10.) Hence by an easy metaphor it signifies to recoliect, or gather the scattered thoughts together; and ought to be so rendered, when used in the restessive form, as here it is. So saith R. Kimchi, (wwp) est proprié stipulas colligere. Id sit accurata scrutatione, hinc dicitur de qualibet inquisitione. Whence I think it is evident that the word should be rendered as above.

⁽b) Clement Alexandrinus saith, that Moses by that phrase, so common in his writings, Take beed to thyself (Exod. x. 28. xxxiv. 12. Deut. iv. 9.) means the same thing as the ancients did by their Lucius of according. Strom. lib. 2. cap. 5.

ners and spirits of men!——But the misery of it is, men will not think; will not employ their thoughts in good earnest, about the things which most of all deserve and demand them. By which unaccountable indolence and aversion to self reslection, they are led blindfold and insensibly into the most dangerous paths of insidelity and wickedness, as the Jews were heretofore; of whose amazing ingratitude and apostacy GOD himself assigns this single cause—*My people do not consider (i).

Self knowledge is that acquaintance with ourselves, which shews us what we are, and do, and ought to be, and do, in order to our living comfortably and usefully here, and happily hereafter. The means of it is, self examination; the end of it self government, and self fruition.—It principally consists in the knowledge of our souls; which is attained by a particular attention to their various powers, capacities, passions, inclinations, operations, state, happiness and temper. For a man's soul is properly himself, Matt. xvi. 26. compared with Luke ix. 25. (k). The body is but the house, the soul is the tenant that inhabits ^{*} Ifa. i. 3.

⁽i) "There is nothing men are more deficient in, than knowing their own characters. I know not how this science comes to be so much neglected. We spend a great deal of time in learning useless things, but take no pains in the study of ourselves; and in opening the folds and doubles of the heart." Resections on Ridicule, page 61.

⁽k) Præceptum Apollinis quo monet, ut se quisque noscat, non enim, credo, id præcipit; ut membra nostra aut staturam figuramque noscamus: neque nos corpora sumus; neque ego, tibi di-inhabits it; the body is the instrument, the soul the artist that directs it (1).

This science, which is to be the subject of the ensuing treatise, hath these three peculiar properties in it, which distinguish it from, and render it preserable to all other.—1. It is equally attainable by all. It requires no strength of memory, no force of genius, no depth of penetration, as many other sciences do, to come at a tolerable degree of acquaintance with them; which therefore renders them inaccessible by the greatest part of mankind. Nor is it placed out of their reach through a want of opportunity, and proper assistance and direction how to acquire it; as many other parts of learning are. Every one of a common capacity hath the opportunity cens hoe, corpori tuo dico: cum igitur NOSCE TE dicit, hoc dicit, nosce aminum tuum. Nam corpus quidem quasi vas est, aut aliquod animi receptaculum; ab animo tuo quicquid agitur id agitur a te. Cic. Tuscul. Quæst. lib. 1.

(1) 2 Cor. v. τ. Rom. vi. 13.—η δυναμις ψυχης, το δε οργανον σωμαĵος. Nemes. de Nat. Hom. cap. 6.

Mnderole συμπεριφανίαζε το περικειμενον αγγειωδες και τα εργανια ταυία τα περιπεπλασμενα, ομοία γαρ εςι σκεπαρνω, μονον δε διαφερονία, καθοίι προσφυν εςιν. Mar. Anton. lib. x. § 37. When you talk of a man, I would not have you tack flesh and blood to the notion, nor those limbs neither which are made out of it; these are but tools for the soul to work with: And no more a part of a man, than an axe or a plane is a piece of a carpenter. It is true, nature hath glued them together, and they grow as it were to the soul, and there is all the difference. Collier.

tunity and ability to attain it, if he will but recollect his rambling thoughts, turn them in upon himfelf, watch the motions of his heart, and compare them with his rule .- 2. It is of equal importance to all -and of the highest importance to every one (m). Other sciences are suited to the various conditions of life. Some, more necessary to some; other, to others. But this equally concerns every one that hath an immortal foul, whose final happiness he desires and seeks .- 2. Other knowledge is very apt to make a man vain ; this always keeps him humble. Nay, it is for want of this knowledge that men are vain of that they have. Knowledge puffeth upt. A small degree of knowledge often hath this effect on weak minds. And the reason why greater attainments in it have not fo generally the same effect is, because they open and enlarge the views of the mind fo far, as to let into it at the same time a good degree of felf knowledge. For the more true knowledge a man hath, the more fensible he is of the want of it; which keeps him humble.

And now, reader, whoever thou art, whatever be thy character, station, or distinction in life, if thou art asraid to look into thine heart, and hast no inclination to self acquaintance, read no farther; lay aside this book; for thou wilt find nothing herethat will statter thy self-esteem; but perhaps something

⁽m) 'Tis virtue only makes our blifs below,
And all our knowledge is OURSELVES TO KNOW.

Pope's Estay on Man.

^{+ 1} Cor. viii. I.

to cultivate this important kind of knowledge, and to live no longer a stranger to thyself, proceed; and keep thy eye open to thine own image, with whatever unexpected deformity it may present itself to thee; and patiently attend, whilst, by divine assistance, I endeavour to lay open thine own heart to thee, and to lead thee to the true knowledge of thyself in the following chapters.

CHAP, II.

The several Branches of Self Knowledge. We must know what Sort of Creatures we are, and what we shall be.

HAT we may have a more distinct and orderly view of this subject, I shall here consider the several branches of self knowledge; or some of the chief particulars wherein it consists. Whereby perhaps it will appear to be a more copious and comprehensive science than we imagine, And,

1. To know ourselves, is to know and feriously consider what fort of creatures we are, and what we shall be.

1. What we are.

Man is a complex being, TPIMEPNS UTOSAGIS, a tripartite perfon; or a compound creature made up of three distinct parts, viz. the body, which is the earthly or mortal part of him; the foul, which is which is the rational and immortal part.*—Each of these three parts have their respective offices assigned them. And a man then acts becoming himself, when he keeps them employed in their proper sunctions, and preserves their natural subordination.—But it is not enough to know this merely as a point of speculation; we must pursue and revolve the thought, and urge the consideration to all the purposes of a practical self acquaintance.

We

* This doctrine, I think, is established beyond all dispute, not only by experience, but by authority. It was received by almost all the ancient philosophers. The Pythagoreans; as we learn from Jamblicus, vid. Protrept. p. 34, 35. The Platonists; as appears from Nemefius, Saluft, and Laertius, vid. Di. Laertius, lib. 3. po-219. The Stoicks; as appears from Antoninus, who faith expressly, There are three things which belong to a man; the body, foul, and the miad. And as to the properties of the division, sensation belongs to the body, appetite to the foul, and reason to the mind : Σωμα, ψυχη, νες, σωμαίος αισθησεις, ψυχης ορμαι, νε δογμα a." lib. 3. § 16 lib. 2. § 2. lib. 12. § 3.-It appears also to have been the opinion of most of the Fathers. vid. Irenæus, lib. 5. cap. 9. lib. 2. cap. 33. Ed. Par. Clem. Alex. Strom. 3. p. 542. Ed. Oxon. Origen. Philocal. p. 8. Ignat. Ep. ad. Philadelph. ad calcem. See also Joseph. Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 2. p. 5. Constitut. Apostol, lib. 7. cap. 34. - But above all these, is the authority of scripture, which, speaking of the original formation of man, mentions the three distinct parts of his nature. Gen. ii. 7. viz. דורה לפר מן־האדמה the dust of the earth, or the body: היה WE the living foul, or the animal and fenfitive part : And ושמות the breath of life, i. e. the spirit or rational mind. In like manner the Apostle Paul divides the whole man into (70 πιευμα, ηψυχη, και το σωμα) the Spirit, the Soul, and the body, I Theff. v. 23. and what he calls (TREUMA) here he calls (885.)

We find we have a more noble nature than the inanimate or brutal part of the creation. We can not only move and act freely, but we observe in ourfelves a capacity of reslection, study, and forecast; and various mental operations, which irrational animals discover no symptoms of. Our souls therefore must be of a more excellent nature than theirs; and from the power of thought with which they are endowed, they are proved to be immaterial substances. And consequently in their own nature capable of immortality. And that they are actually immortal, or will never die, the sacred scriptures do abundantly testify (m).—Let us then hereupon seriously recollect ourselves in the following soliloquy.

" O

(ves) Rom. vii. 24. the word which Antonious uses to denote the same thing.—They who would see more of this, may consult Nemefius de Natura Hominis, cap. x. and Whiston's prim. Christ. vol. 4. pag. 262.

All the observation I shall make hereupon is, that this consideration may serve to soften the prejudices of some against the account which scripture gives us of the mysterious manner of the existence of the divine nature: Of which every man (as created in the image of GOD) carries about him a kind of emblem, in the threefold distinction of his own; which, if he did not every minute find it by experience to be fact, would doubtless appear to him altogether as mysterious and incomprehensible as the scripture dostrine of the trinity.

"Homo habet tres partes, spiritum, animam, et corpus; itaque Homo est Imago S. S. Trinitatis." August. Tractat, de Symbolo.

(m) As nature delights in the most easy transitions from one class of beings to another, and as the nexus utriusque generis is observable in several creatures of ambiguous nature, which seem

"O'my foul, look back but a few years, and thou wast nothing !- And how didst thou spring out of that nothing ?- Thou couldst not make thyself. That is quite impossible.-Most certain it is, that that Almighty, self existent and eternal power, which made the world, made thee also out of nothing. Called thee into being when thou wast not; gave thee these reasoning and reslecting faculties, which thou art now employing in fearthing out the end and happiness of thy nature. It was He, O my foul, that made thee intelligent and immortal. It was he that placed thee in this body, as in a prison; where thy capacities are cramped, thy defires debased, and thy liberty lost .- It was he that fent thee into this world, which by all circumstances appears to be a state of short discipline and trial. And wherefore did he place thee here, when he might have made thee a more free, unconfined, and happy spirit ?- But check that thought; it looks like a too presumptuous curiosity. A more needful and important inquiry is-What did he place thee here for ?-And what doth he expect from to connect the lifeless and vegetable, the vegetable and animal, the animal and rational worlds together; (See Nemessus de Nat. Hom. cap. 1. p. 6.) why may not the souls of brutes be considered as the nexus between material and immaterial substances, or master and spirit, or something between both? The great diffimilitude of nature in these two substances, I apprehend, can be no solid objection to this bypothesis, if we consider (beside our own ignorance of the nature of spirits) but how nearly they approach in other instances, and how closely they are united in man.

from thee whilst thou art here?-What part hath he allotted me to act on the stage of human life; where He, angels, and men, are spectators of my behaviour? The part he hath given me to act here is, doubtless, a very important one; because it is for eternity (n). And what is it, but to live up to the dignity of my rational and intellectual nature; and as becomes a creature born for immortality ?

" And tell me, O my foul, (for as I am now about to cultivate a better acquaintance with thee, to whom I have been too long a stranger, I must try thee, and put many a close question to thee,) tell me I fay, whilft thou confineit thy defires to fenfual gratifications, wherein dost thou differ from the beafts that perish? Captivated by bodily appetites, dost thou not act beneath thyself? Dost thou not put thyself upon a level with the lower class of beings, which were made to serve thee, offer an indignity to thyself, and despise the work of thy Maker's hands? O remember thy heavenly extract; remember thou art a spirit. Check then the solicitations of the fiesh; and dare to do nothing that may diminish thy native excellence, dishonour thy high original, or degrade thy noble na-

(n) It is faid when the prince of the Latin poets was asked by his friend, why he fludied so much accuracy in the plan of his poem, the propriety of his characters, and the purity of his diction; he replied, in æternum pingo, I am writing for eternity. What more weighty confideration to justify and enforce the utmost vigilance and circumspection of life, than this; in æteroum vivo, I am liwing for eternity,?

O my foul, that thou art an immortal spirit. Thy body dies; but thou, thou must live forever, and thine eternity will take its tincture from the manner of thy behaviour, and the habits thou contractest, during this thy short copartnership with steff and blood. O! do nothing now, but what thou mayest with pleasure look back upon a million of ages hence. For know, O my soul, that thy self consciousness, and reslecting faculties, will not leave thee with thy body; but will follow thee after death, and be the instrument of unspeakable pleasure or torment to thee in that separate state of existence."

2. In order to a full acquaintance with ourselves, we must endeavour to know not only what we are, but what we shall be.

And O! what different creatures shall we foon be, from what we now are! Let us look forwards then,

(o) Major sum, et ad majora natus, quam quod sim corporis mancipium. Quod equidem non aliter aspicio quam vinculum libertati meæ circumdatum. Sen. Ep. 66.

"I am too noble, and of too high a birth" (faith that excellent moralist) "to be a flave to my body; which I look upon only as a chain thrown upon the liberty of my foul."

As it is not the defign of this treatife to enter into a nice and philosophical disquisition concerning the nature of the human soul, but to awaken men's attention to the inward operations and affections of it, (which is by far the most necessary part of self knowledge) so they who would be more particularly informed concerning its nature and original, and the various opinions of the ancients about it, may consult Nemes. de Nat. Hom. cap. 1. and a treat-tise called The Government of the Thoughts, chap. 1, and Chambers's Cyclopædia, under the word SOUL.

then, and frequently glance our thoughts towards death; though they cannot penetrate the darkness of that passage, or reach the state behind it. That lies veiled from the eyes of our mind; and the great GOD hath not thought sit to throw so much light upon it, as to satisfy the anxious and inquisitive desires the soul hath to know it. However, let us make the best use we can of that little light which scripture and reason have let in upon this dark and important subject.

"Compose thy thoughts, O my soul, and imagine how it will fare with thee, when thou goest a naked, unimbodied spirit into a world, an unknown world of spirits, with all thy self consciousness about thee, where no material object shall strike thine eye; and where thy dear partner and companion the body cannot come nigh thee. But where without it thou wilt be sensible of the most noble satisfactions, or the most exquisite pains. Embarked in death, thy passage will be dark; and the shore on which it will land thee, altogether strange and unknown.—It doth not yet appear what we shall be (p.)"

That

Through unexperienc'd scenes, and myst'ries strange:

Dark the event, and dismal the exchange.

But when compell'd to leave this house of clay,

And to an unknown somewhere wing thy way;

When time shall be eternity, and thou

Shalt be thou know'st not what, nor where, nor how,

Trembling and pale, what wilt thou see or do?

Amazing

That revelation, which GOD hath been pleafed to make of his will to mankind, was defigned rather to fit us for the future happiness, and direct our way to it, than open to us the particular glories of it; or distinctly shew us what it is. This it hath left still very much a mystery; to check our too curious inquiries into the nature of it, and to bend our thoughts more intently to that which more concerns us, viz. an habitual preparation for it. And what that is, we cannot be ignorant, if we believe either our bible or our reason. For both these assure us, that that which makes us like to GOD, is the only thing that can fit us for the enjoyment of him. Here then let us hold. Let our great concern be

Amazing state!—No wonder that we dread
The thoughts of death or faces of the dead.
His black retinue forely strikes our mind;
Sickness and pain before, and darkness all behind.

Some courteous ghost, the secret then reveal;
Tell us what you have selt, and we must seel.
You warn us of approaching death, and why
Will you not teach us what it is to die?
But having shot the gulph, you love to view
Succeeding spirits plung'd along like you;
Nor lend a friendly hand to guide them through.

When dire disease shall cut, or age untie
The knot of life and suffer us to die:
When after some delay, some trembling strife,
The soul stands quiv'ring on the ridge of life;
With sear and lope she throbs, then curious tries.
Some strange bereaser, and some hidden skies."

:Norris.

we fure to enjoy him, in whose light we shall see light. And be the future state of existence what it will, we shall some way be happy there. And much more happy than we can now conceive; though in what particular manner we know not, because GOD bath not revealed it.

CHAP. III.

The several Relations wherein we stand to GOD, to CHRIST, and our fellow creatures.

II. SELF knowledge requires us to be well acquainted with the various relations in which we fland to other beings, and the several duties that result from those relations. And,

1. Our first and principal concern is to consider the relation wherein we stand to him who gave us being.

We are the creatures of his hand, and the objects of his care. His power upholds the being his goodness gave us. His bounty accommodates us with the blessings of this life, and his grace provides for us the happiness of a better.—Nor are we merely his creatures, but his rational and intelligent creatures. It is the dignity of our natures, that we are capable of knowing and enjoying him that made us. And as the rational creatures of GOD, there are two relations especially that we bear to him; the frequent consideration of which is absolutely necessary to a right self knowledge. For as our Creator, he is our king and father. And as his creatures we are the subjects of his kingdom, and the children of his family.

- 1. We are the subjects of his kingdom. And as such we are bound,
- 1. To yield a faithful obedience to the laws of his kingdom. And the advantages by which these come recommended to us above all human laws are many .- They are calculated for the private interest of every one, as well as that of the publick; and are designed to promote our present, as well as our future happiness .-- They are plainly and explicitly published; easily understood; and in fair and legible characters writ in every man's heart; and the wisdom, reason, and necessity of them are readily discerned.—They are urged with the most mighty motives that can possible affect the human heart. And if any of them are difficult, the most effectual grace is freely offered to encourage and affift our obedience: Advantages which no human laws have to enforce the observance of them, -2. As his subjects we must readily pay him the homage due to his fovereignty. And this is no less than the honge of the heart; humbly acknowledging that we hold every thing of him, and have every thing from him. Earthly princes are forced to be content with verbal acknowledgments, or mere formal homage. For they can command nothing but what is external. But GOD, who knows and looks at the hearts of all his creatures, will accept of nothing but what comes from thence. He demands the adoration of our whole fouls, which is most justly due to him who formed them, and gave them the very capacities to know and adore him .- 3. As faithful fubjects, we must cheerfully pay him the tribute he requires of us. This is not like the tribute which earthly kings exact; who as much depend upon their subjects for the support of their power, as their subjects do upon them for the protection of their property. But the tribute GOD requires of us, is a tribute of praise and nonour, which he stands in no need of from us: For his power is independent, and his glory immutable; and he is infinitely able of himself to support the dignity of his universal government. But it is the most natural duty we owe to him as creatures. For to praise him, is only to shew forth his praise; to glorify him, to celebrate his glory; and to honour him, is to render him and his ways honourable in the eyes and esteem of others. And as this is the most natural duty that creatures owe to their creator, so it is a tribute he requires of every one of them in proportion to their respective talents and abilities to pay it .- 4. As dutiful subjects, we must contentedly and quietly submit to the methods and administrations of his government, however dark, involved or intricate. All governments have their arcana imperii, or fecrets of flate; which common subjects cannot penetrate. And therefore they cannot competently judge of the wisdom or rectitude of certain publick measures; because they are ignorant either of the springs of them, or the ends of them, or the expediency of the means arifing from the particular fituation of things in the prefent juncture. And how much truer is this with relation to GOD's government of the world; whose wisdom is far above our reach, and whose ways are not as ours. Whatever then may be the present aspect and appearance of things, as dutiful fubjects we are bound to acquiesce; to ascribe wisdom and righteousness to our maker, in confidence that the king and judge of all the earth will do right .- Again, 5. As good subjects of GOD's kingdom, we are bound to pay a due regard and reverence to his ministers; especially if they discover an uncorrupted fidelity to his cause, and a pure unaffected zeat for his honour; if they do not feek their own interest more than that of their divine master. The ministers of earthly princes too often do this, and it would be happy if all the ministers and ambassadors of the heavenly king were intirely clear of the imputation. It is no uncommon thing for the honour of an earthly monarch to be wounded through the fides of his ministers. The defamation and flander that is directly thrown at them is obliquely intended against him; and as such it is taken. So to attempt to make the ministers of the gospel, in general, the objects of derision, as some do, plainly shews a mind very dissolute and disaffected to GOD and religion itself; and is to act

a part very unbecoming the dutiful subjects of his kingdom. Lastly. As good subjects, we are to do all we can to promote the interest of his kingdom; by defending the wildom of his administrations, and endeavouring to reconcile others thereunto, under all the darkness and difficulties that may appear therein, in opposition to the profane cenfures of the prosperous wicked, and the doubts and dismays of the afflicted righteous. This is to act in character as loyal subjects of the king of heaven. And whoever forgets this part of his character, or acts contrary to it, shews a great degree of felf ignorance.

But, 2. As the creatures of GOD, we are not only the subjects of his kingdom, but the children of his samily. And to this relation, and the obligations of it, must we carefully attend, if we would attain the true knowledge of ourselves. We are his children by creation; in which respect he is truly our father. * But now, O LORD, thou art our father, we are the clay, and thou our potter; and we all are the work of thine hands. And in a more special sense we are his children by adoption. + For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. And therefore, 1. We are under the highest obligations to love him as our father. The love of children to parents is founded on gratitude for benefits received, which can never be requited; and ought in reason to be proportioned to those benefits. And what duty more natural than to love our benefactors? What love and. gratitude gratitude then is due to him, from whom we have received the greatest benefit, even that of our being, and every thing that contributes to the comfort of it ?-2. As his children we must honour him; that is, must speak honourably of him, and for him; and carefully avoid every thing that may tend to dishonour his holy name and ways. fon bonoureth his father: -- If then I be a father, where is mine honour ?- 3. As our father we are to apply to him for what we want. Whether should children go, but to their father, for protection, help and relief in every danger, difficulty and diffres? -And 4. We must trust his power and wisdom, and paternal goodness, to provide for us, take care of us, and do for us, that which is best; and what that is he knows best. To be anxiously fearful what will become of us, and discontented and perplexed under the apprehensions of future evils, whilst we are in the hands and under the care of our father which is in heaven, is not to act like children. Earthly parents cannot avert from their children all the calamities they fear, because their wisdom and power are limited; but our all wise and almighty father in heaven can. They may possibly want love and tenderness, but our heavenly father cannot. Ifa. xlix. 15 .- 5. As children, we must quietly acquiesce in his disposals, and not expect to see into the wisdom of all his will. It would be indecent and undutiful in a child to dispute the authority, or question the wisdom, or neglect the orders of his parents every time he could not discern the reason and design thereof. Much more unreasonable and unbecoming is such a behaviour towards GOD, who giveth not account of any of his matters; whose judgments are unsearchable, and whose ways are past finding out.*-Lastly, As children, we must patiently submit to his discipline and correction. Earthly parents may sometimes punish their children through passion, or for their pleasure; but our heavenly father always corrects his for their profit, + and only if need be, ‡ and never fo much as their iniquities deserve. \ Under his fatherly rebukes then let us be ever humble and fubmissive. - Such now is the true filial disposition. Such a temper, and fuch a behaviour should we shew towards GOD, if we would act in character as his children.

† Gal. ili.,26. *-Ifa. lxiv, 8.

These then are the two special relations, which as creatures, we stand in to GOD. And not to alt towards him in the manner beforementioned, is to shew that we are ignorant of, or have not yet duly considered our obligations to him as his subjects and his children; or that we are as yet ignorant both of GOD and ourselves.—Thus we see how directly the knowledge of ourselves leads us to the knowledge of GOD. So true is the observation of a late pious and very worthy divine, that "He that is a stranger to himself, is a stranger to GOD, and to every thing that may denominate him wise and happy (q)."

* Job xxxiii. 13. Rom. xi. 33.

+ Heb. xii. 10. ‡ 1 Pet. i. 6. § Ezra ix. 131

(9) See Mr Baxter's dedicatory epistle, prefixed to his treatise on the benefits of self acquaintance.

But, 2. In order to know ourselves there is another important relation we should often think of, and that is, That in which we stand to JESUS CHRIST our Redeemer.

The former was common to us as men; this is peculiar to us as christians, and opens to us a new scene of duties and obligations, which a man can never forget, that does not grossly forget himself. For as christians, we are the disciples, the followers, and the servants of Christ, redeemed by him.

And 1. As the disciples of Christ, we are to learn of Him. To take our religious sentiments only from his gospel, in opposition to all the authoritative dictates of men, who are weak and fallible as ourselves. Call no man master on earth. While some affect to diftinguish themselves by party names, asthe Corinthians formerly did, (for which the Apostle blames them) one faying, I am of Paul; another, I am of Apollos; another, I am of Cephas,* let us remember that we are the disciples of Christ; and in this sense make mention of his name only. It is really injurious to it, to feek to distinguish ourselves by any other. There is more carnality in fuch party distinctions, denominations and attachments, than many good fouls are aware of; though not more than the Apostle Paul (who was unwillingly. placed at the head of one himself) hath apprised them of. t-We are of Christ; our concern is, to honour that superiour denomination, by living up to it. And to adhere inflexibly to his gospel, as the only rule of our faith, the guide of our life, and the foundation of our hope; whatever contempt or abuse we may suffer either from the profane or bigotted part of mankind for so doing .- 2. As christians we are followers of CHRIST; and therefore bound to im tate him and copy after that most excellent pattern he hath fet us, who hath left us an example that we should follow his steps.* To see that the same holy temper be in us which was in him; and to discover it in the same manner that he did, and upon like occasions. To this he calls us, ‡ and no man is any further a christian than as he is a follower of Christ; aiming at a more perfect conformity to that most perfect example which he hath set us of universal goodness .- 3. As christians, we are the fervants of CHRIST; and the various duties which servants owe to their masters in any degree, those we owe to him in the highest degree; who expects we should behave ourselves in his service with that fidelity and zeal, and steady regard to his honour and interest, at all times, which we are bound to by virtue of this relation, and to which his unmerited and unlimited goodness and love lays us under infinite obligations .- Lastly, We are moreover his redeemed servants; and as such are under the strongest motives to love and trust him.

This deserves to be more particularly considered, because it opens to us another view of the human nature, in which we should often survey ourselves, if we defire to know ourselves; and that is, as de-

praved

praved or degenerate beings. The inward contest we fo fenfibly feel, at some seasons especially, between a good and a bad principle, (called in scripture language the flesh and the spirit,) of which some of the wisest heathens seemed not to be ignorant :* This, I fay, is demonstration that some way or other the human nature has contracted an ill bias, (and how that came about the facred scriptures have sufficiently informed us) and that it is not what it was when it came originally out of the hands of its maker; fo that the words which St. Paul spake with reference to the Jews in particular, are justly applicable, to the present state of mankind in general, there is none righteous, no not one; -they are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable, there is none that doeth good, no not one. +

This is a very mortifying thought; but an undeniable truth, and one of the first principles of that science we are treating of, and very necessary to be attended to, if we would be sensible of the duty and obligations we owe to Christ as the great REDEEM-ER; in which character he appears for the relief and recovery of mankind under this their universal depravity.

The two miserable effects of the human apostacy are, 1. That perverse dispositions grow up in our minds

A fatal inbred strife does lurk within, The cause of all this misery and fin. † Rom. iii. 19, 12.

^{*} Λυγρη γαρ συνοπαδος ερις βλαπίεσα λεληθεν Συμφύι. Pythag. Aur. Carm.

minds from early infancy, foon fettle into vicious habits, and render us weak, and unwilling to obey the dictates of conscience and reason: This is commonly called the dominion of fin. Now in both these respects did Christ the Lamb of GOD come to take away the fin of the world; that is, to take away the reigning power of it by the operation of his grace; and its condemning power by the atonement of his blood; to sanctify us by his spirit and justify us by his death; by the former he reconciles us to GOD, and by the latter he reconciles GOD to us (r), and is at once our righteoufness and strength. He died to purchase for us the happiness we had forfeited, and fends his grace and spirit to fit us for that happiness he hath thus purchased. So complete is his redemption! so precisely adapted is the remedy he hath provided, to the malady we had contracted !--- O bleffed Redeemer of wretched ruined creatures, how unspeakable are the obligations I owe thee! But ah! How infensible am I to those obligations! the saddest symptom of degeneracy I find in my nature, is that base ingratitude of heart which renders me so unaffected with thine aftonishing compassions. Till I know thee, I cannot know myself: And when I survey myfelf myself may I ever think of thee! May the daily consciousness of my weakness and guilt lead my thoughts to thee; and may every thought of thee kindle in my heart the most ardent glow of gratitude to thee, O thou divine, compassionate friend, lover, and REDEEMER of mankind!"

(r) By this phrase I do not mean that GOD was implacable or absolutely irreconcilable to us till he was pacified by the vicarious sufferings of his son; for how then could he have appointed him to die as our propitiatory sacrifice? But that the death of Christ is the clearest demonstration of GOD's willingness to be actually reconciled to us.

Whoever then he be that calls himself a christian, that is, who professes to take the gospel of Christ for a divine revelation, and the only rule of his faith and practice; but at the same time, pays a greater regard to the dictates of men, than to the doctrines of CHRIST; who loses sight of that great example of Christ, which should animate his christian walk, is unconcerned about his fervice, honour, and interest, and excludes the consideration of his merits and atonement, from his hope of happiness; he forgets that he is a christian; he does not consider in what relation he stands to CHRIST, (which is one great part of his character) and consequently discovers a great degree of self ignorance.

3. Self knowledge moreover implies a due attention to the several relations in which we stand to our fellow creasures: And the obligations that refult from thence.

If we know ourselves, we shall remember the condescension, benignity, and love that is due to inferiours: The affability, friendship and kindness we ought to shew to equals: The regard, deference and honour which belong to superiours: And the candour, integrity, and benevolence we owe to all.

The particular duties requisite in these relations are too numerous to be here mentioned. Let it suffice to say, that if a man doth not well consider the several relations of life in which he stands to others, and does not take care to preserve the decorum and propriety of those relations, he may justly be charged with self ignorance.

And this is so evident in itself, and so generally allowed, that nothing is more common than to fay, when a person does not behave with due decency towards his superiours, such an one does not underfland himself. But why may not this with equal justice be faid of those who act in an ill manner towards their inferiours? The expression, I know, is not so often thus applied; but I see no reason why it should not, fince one is as common, and as plain an instance of self ignorance as the other. Nay, of the two, perhaps men in general are more apt to be defective in their duty and behaviour towards those beneath them, than they are towards those that are above them. And the reason seems to be, because an apprehension of the displeasure of their superiours, and the detrimental consequences which may accrue from thence, may be a check upon them, and engage them to pay the just regards which they expect. But there being no such check to restrain them from violating the duties they owe to inferiours, (from whose displeasure they have little to fear) they are more ready under certain temptations to treat them in an unbecoming manner. And as wildom wisdom and self knowledge will direct a man to be particularly careful, lest he neglect those duties he is most apt to forget; so as to the duties he owes to inferiours, in which he is most in danger of transgreffing, he ought more strongly to urge upon himfelf the indispensable obligations of religion and conscience. And if he does not, but suffers himtelf through the violence of ungoverned passion, to be transported into the excesses of rigour, tyranny, and oppression, towards those whom God and nature have put into his power, it is certain that he does not knew himself; is not acquainted with his own particular weakness; is ignorant of the duty of his relation; and whatever he may think of himfelf, hath not the true spirit of government; because he wants the art of felf government. For he that is unable to govern himself, can never be fit to govern others.

Would we know our felves then, we must consider ourselves as creatures, as christians, and as men; and remember the obligations which, as such, we are under to GOD, to CHRIST, and our fellow men; in the several relations we bear to them, in order to maintain the propriety, and fulfil the duties of those relations.

Cardinal Commission of State Commission of the C

(Satisfic and the same of the same of the same areas)

C H A P. IV.

We must duly consider the Rank and Station of Life in which Providence has placed us, and what it is that becomes and adorns it.

MAN that knows himself, will det be ately consider and attend to the particular rank and station in life in which providence hath placed him; and what is the duty and decorum of that station; what part is given him to all; what character to maintain; and with what decency and propriety he alls that part, or maintains that character.

For a man to assume a character, or aim at a part that does not belong to him, is affectation. And whence is it that affectation of any kind appears fo ridiculous, and exposes men to universal and just contempt, but because it is a certain indication of self ignorance? Whence is it that many seem so willing to be thought fomething when they are nothing; and feek to excel in those things in which they cannot; whilst they neglect those things in which they may excel? Whence is it that they counteract the intention of nature and providence; that when these intended them one thing, they would fain be another? Whence, I fay, but from an ignorance of themselves, the rank of life they are in, and of the part and character which properly belong to them?

It is a just observation, and an excellent document of a moral heathen, that human life is a "Drama,

" Drama, and mankind the actors, who have their several parts assigned them by the master of the theatre, who stands behind the scenes, and observes in what manner every one acts. Some have a thort part allotted them, and fome a long one; fome a low and some a high one. It is not he that acts the highest or most shining part on the stage, that comes off with the greatest applause; but he that acts his part best, whatever it be. To take care then to all our respective parts in life well, is ours; but to choose what part in life we shall act, is not ours, but GOD's (r)."-But a man can never all his part well, if he does not attend to it; does not know what becomes it; much less, if he affect to act another, which nature never designed him. It is always feif ignorance that leads a man to act out of character.

Is it a mean and low station of life thou art in?
Know then, that providence calls thee to the exercise of industry, contentment, submission, patience, hope, and humble dependence on him, and a respectful deference to thy superiours. In this way thou mayest shine through thine obscurity; and render thyself amiable in the sight of GOD and man. And not only so, but find more satisfaction, safety and self enjoyment, than they who move in a higher sphere, from whence they are in danger of salling.

But

(r) Epictet. Enchir. cap. 23.——Quomodo fabula, sic vita; non quam diu, sed quam bene acta sit, refert. Sen. Ep. 69, ad. sin. Life is a stage play; it matters not bow long we att, so we att well.—Non est bonum, vivere, sed bene vivere. Id. de. benes. lib. 3. cap. 31. It is not life but living well, that is the blessing.

But hath providence called thee to aft in a more publick character, and for a more extensive benefit to the world?——Thy first care then ought to be, that thy example, as far as its influence reaches, may be an encouragement to the practice of universal virtue. And next to shine in those virtues especially which best adorn thy station; as benevolence, charity, wisdom, moderation, firmness, and inviolable integrity; with an undismayed fortitude to press through all opposition in accomplishing those ends which thou hast a prospect and probability of attaining for the apparent good of mankind.

And as felf acquaintance will teach us what part. in life we ought to act, fo the knowledge of that will shew us whom we ought to imitate and wherein. We are not to take example of conduct from those who have a very different part assigned themfrom ours; unless in those things that are univerfally ornamental and exemplary. If we do, we shall but expose our affectation and weakness, and ourselves to contempt for acting out of character. For what is decent in one may be ridiculous in another. Nor must we blindly follow those who move in the same sphere, and sustain the same character with ourselves; but only in those things that are befitting that character. For it is not the person, but the character, we are to regard; and to imitate him no farther than he keeps to that,

This

This caution particularly concerns youth, who are apt to imitate their superiours very implicitly, and especially such as shine in the profession they themselves are intended for; but for want of judgment to distinguish what is sit and decent, are apt to imitate their very soibles; which a partiality for their persons makes them deem as excellencies: And thereby they become doubly ridiculous, both by asting out of character themselves, and by a weak and service imitation of others in the very things in which they do so too. To maintain a character them with decency, we must keep our eye only upon that which is proper to it.

In fine, as no man can excel in every thing, we must consider what part is allotted us to act, in the station in which providence hath placed us, and to keep to that, be it what it will, and seek to excel in that only.

C H A P. V.

Every Man should be well acquainted with his own Talents and Capacities; and in what Manner they are to be exercised and improved to the greatest Advantage.

IV. A MAN cannot be faid to know himself, till he is well acquainted with his proper talents and capacities; knows for what ends he received them, and low they may be most sitly applied and improved for those ends.

A wife and felf understanding man, instead of aiming at talents he hath not, will set about cultivating those he hath; as the way in which providence points out his proper usefulness.

As, in order to the edification of the church, the spirit of God at first conferred upon the ministers of it a great variety of spiritual gifts,* so, for the good of the community, GOD is pleased now to confer upon men a great variety of natural talents; and every one hath his proper gift of GOD; one after this manner, another after that.† And every one is to take care not to neglect, but to stir up the gift of GOD which is in him.‡ Because it was given him to be improved. And not only the abuse, but the neglect of it must hereaster be accounted for. Witness the doom of that unprositable servant, who laid up his single pound in a napkin; so and of him who went and hid his talent in the earth.

It is certainly a fign of great felf ignorance, for a man to venture out of his depth, or attempt any thing he wants opportunity or capacity to accomplish. And therefore a wife man will confider with himself, before he undertakes any thing of consequence, whether he hath abilities to carry him through it, and whether the iffue of it is like to be for his credit; lest he fink under the weight he lays upon himself, and incur the just censure of rashness,

^{* 1} Cor. xii. 8-10. † 1 Cor. vii. 7. ‡ 1 Tim. iv. 14, 2 Tim.
i. 6. § Luke, xix. 20, 24. | Matt. xxv. 25, 30.

rashness, presumption and folly. See Luke xiv. 28-32. (s)

It is no uncommon thing for some who excel in one thing, to imagine they may excel in every thing. And not content with that share of merit which every one allows them, are still catching at that which doth not belong to them. Why should a good orator wish to be thought a poet? Why must a celebrated divine set up for a politician? Or a statesman affect the philosopher? Or a mechanick the scholar? Or a wise man labour to to be thought a wit? This is a weakness that slows from self ignorance, and is incident to the greatest men. Nature seldom forms a universal genius; but deals out her savours in the present state with a parsimonious hand,—Many a man by this

Noscenda est mensura suz, spectandaque rebus
In summis, minimis,

Juv. Sat. 11:

Quid valeant humeri.

He that takes up a burden that is too heavy for him, is in a fair way to break his back.

Hor. de. Art. Poet.

Ανθρωπε, πρώθον επισκεψαι, οποιον εσθι το πραγμα ειτα και την σεαύθε φυσιν καθαμαθε, ει δυνασαι βασθασαι. Ερίει. Enchir. cap. 36.

In every business consider, first, what it is you are about; and then your own ability, whether it be sufficient to carry you through it. this foible hath weakened a well established repu-

CHAP. VI.

We must be well acquainted with our Inabilities, and those Things in which we are naturally descient, as well as those in which we excel.

V. WE must, in order to a thorough self acquaintance, not only consider our talents and proper abilities, but have an eye to our frailties and desiciencies that we may know where our weakness, as well as our strength lies. Otherwise, like Samson, we may run ourselves into infinite temptations and troubles.

Every man hath a weak side. Every wise man knows where it is, and will be sure to keep a doubble guard there.

There is some wisdom in concealing a weakness. This cannot be done, till it be first known, nor can it be known without a good degree of self acquaintance.

It

(1) _____non omnia possumus omnes. Virg.

Cæcilius, a famous Rhetorician of Sicily who lived in the time of Augustus, and writ a treatise on the sublime (which is censured by Longinus in the beginning of his) was a man of a basty and enterprising spirit, and very apt to overshoot himself on all occasions; and particularly ventured out of his depth in his Comparison of Demostrenes and Cicero. Whereupon Plutarch makes this sage and candid remark. "If (saith he) it was a thing obvious and easy for every man to know himself, possibly that saying, yout oexulor, had not passed for a divine oracle."

Plut, Liv. Vol. vii. page 347.

It is strange to observe what pains some men are at to expose themselves; to signalize their own folly; and to set out to the most publick view those things which they ought to be ashamed to think should ever enter into their character. But so it is; some men seem to be ashamed of those things which would be their glory, whilst others glory in their shame.*

The greatest weakness in man is to publish his weakness and to appear fond to have them known. But vanity will often prompt a man to this; who, unacquainted with the measure of his capacities, attempts things out of his power, and beyond his reach; whereby he makes the world acquainted with two things to his disadvantage, which they were ignorant of before; viz. his desciency, and his self ignorance in appearing so blind to it.

It is ill judged (though very common) to be less ashamed of a want of temper than understanding. For it is no real dishonour or fault in a man to have but a small ability of mind, provided he have not the vanity to set up for a genius (which would be as ridi culous, as for a man of small strength and stature of body, to set up for a champion) because this is what he cannot help. But a man may in a good measure correct the sault of his natural temper, if he be well acquainted with it, and duly watchful over it. And therefore to betray a prevailing weakness of temper, or an ungoverned passion, diminishes a man's reputation much more than to discover a weakness of judgment or un--derstanding .- But what is most dishonourable of all is, for a man at once to discover a great genius and an ungoverned mind. Because that strength of reason and understanding he is master of, gives him a great disadvantage for the government of his passions. And therefore his suffering himself notwithstanding to be governed by them, Thews, that he hath too much neglected or mifapplied his natural talent; and willingly submitted to the tyranny of those lusts and passions, over which nature hath furnished him with abilities to have fecured an eafy conquest.

A wife man hath his foibles as well as a fool. But the difference between them is, that the foibles of the one are known to himself, and concealed from the world; the foibles of the other are known to the world, and concealed from himself. The wife man sees those frailties in himself, which others cannot; but the fool is blind to those blemishes in his character, which are conspicuous to every body elfe. Whence it appears, that felf knowledge is that which makes the main difference between a wise man and a fool, in the moral sense of that word. hvory man hach timoth rec of his wind, which definguith as were at wood of A sylved all to being illego rains trace of locally home of light when too wheel To neity render

CHAP. VII.

* Concerning the Knowledge of our Constitutional Sins.

VI SELF acquaintance Thews a man the particular fins he is most exposed and addicted to; and discovers not only what is ridiculous, but what is criminal, in his conduct and temper.

A man's outward actions are generally the plainest index of his inward dispositions. And by the allowed sins of his life, you may know the reigning vices of his mind. Is he addicted to luxury or debauch? Sensuality then appears to be his prevailing taste. Is he given to revenge and cruelty? Choler and malice then reign in his heart. Is he consident, bold and enterprising? Ambition appears to be the secret spring. Is he sly and designing, given to intrigue and artisice? You may conclude, there is a natural subtilty of temper that prompts him to this; and this secret disposition is criminal, in proportion to the degree in which these outward actions, which spring from it, transgress the bounds of reason and virtue.

Every man hath something peculiar in the turn or cast of his mind, which distinguishes him as much as the particular constitution of his body. And both these, viz. his particular turn of mind, and constitution of body, not only incline and dispose him to some kind of sins, more than to others, but render the practice of certain virtues much more eafy.*

Now these fins to which men are commonly most inclined, and the temptations which they have the least power to refist, are, and not improperly, called their constitutional fins; their peculiar frailties; and, in scripture, their town iniquities, and the fins which I do most easily beset them (u).

66 As

* Men, with regard to their bodies, and bodily appetites, are pretty much alike; but with regard to their fouls, and their mental taftes and dispositions, they are often as different as if they were quite of another species; governed by different views, entertertained with different pleasures, animated with different hopes, and affected by different motives, and diftinguished by as different tempers and inclinations, as if they were not of the same kind. So that I am very ready to believe, that there is not a greater difference between an angel, and some of the best and wisest of men; or between a devil, and fome of the worst and wickedest of men, with regard to their tempers and dispositions, than there is between fome fort of men, and some others. And what inclines me to this fentiment is, confidering the easy transition which nature always observes in passing from one order or kind of beings to another (which I have before taken notice of) together with the prodigious difference there appears to be between some and others of the human species, almost in every thing belonging to their souls. For some there are "in whom" (as one expresses it) " one would think nature had placed every thing the wrong way;" depraved in their opinions, unintelligible in their reasoning, irregular in their actions, and vicious in every disposition. Whilft in some others we fee almost every thing amiable and excellent that can adorn and exalt the human mind, under the disadvantages of mortality.

+ Pfalm. xviii. 32. I Heb. xii. 1. (u) Hauaplia suwspisalo, the well circumstanced sin.

" As in the humours of the body, so in the vices of the mind, there is one predominant; which has an afcendant over us, and leads and governs us. It is in the body of fin, what the heart is in the body of our nature; it begins to live first, and dies last. And whilst it lives, it communicates life and spirit to the whole body of fin; and when it dies, the body of fin expires with it. It is the fin to which our constitution leads, our circumstances betray, and custom inslaves us; the fin to which not our virtues only, but vices too, lower their topfail, and fubmit; the fin, which when we would impose upon GOD and our consciences, we excuse and disguise with all imaginable artifice and sophistry; but, when we are fincere with both, we oppose first, and conquer last. It is, in a word, the sin which reigns and rules in the unregenerate, and too often alarms and disturbs (ah! that I could say no more) the regenerate (w).

Some are more inclined to the fins of the flesh; fensuality, intemperance, uncleanness, sloth, self indulgence, and excess in animal gratifications. Others to the fins of the spirit; pride, malice, covetousness, ambition, wrath, revenge, envy, &c. And I am persuaded there are few, but, upon a thorough search into themselves, may find that some one of these fins bath ordinarily a greater power over them than the rest. Others often observe it in them if they themselves do not. And for a man not to know his predominant iniquity is great felf ignorance indeed; and a fign that he has all his life lived far from home; because he is not acquainted with that relating to himself, which every one who is but half an hour in his company, perhaps may be able to inform him of. Hence proceeds that extreme weakness which some discover in censuring others, for the very same faults they are guilty of themselves, and perhaps in a much higher degree; on which the Apostle Paul animadverts, Rom. ii. 1. (x).

It must be owned, it is an irksome and disagreesble business for a man to turn his own accuser; to search after his own faults, and keep his eye upon that which gives him shame and pain to see. It is like tearing open an old wound. But it is better to do this, than to let it mortify. The wounds of the conscience, like those of the body, cannot be well cured till they are searched to the bottom; and they cannot be searched without pain. A man that is engaged in the study of himself, must be content to know the worst of himself (y).

Do

(x) Quis tulerit Gracchos de seditione querentes?

Clodius accuset machos? Catilina Cetnegum?

Juv. Sat. 2.

(y) O nimis gravis angustia! Si me inspicio, non toloro, meipfum: Si non inspicio, nestio meipfum. Si me considero, terret me sacies mea: Si me non considero, sallit me damnatio mea. Si me video, horror est intolerabilis: Si non video, mors est inevitabilis. O grievous streight! If I look into myself, I cannot endure myself, If I look not into myself, I cannot know myself. If I consider myself, my and face affrights me: If I consider not myself, my damnation deceives me. If I see myself, my borror is intolerable: If I see not myself death is unavoidable. Anselme.

Do not therefore that your eyes against your darling fin, or be averse to find it out. Why should you study to conceal or excuse it; and fondly cherish that viper in your bosom ?--- " Some men deal by their fins, as some ladies do by their perfons. When their beauty is decayed, they feek to hide it from themselves by false glasses, and from others by paint. So, many feek to hide their fins from themselves by falle glosses, and from others by excuses, or false colours (z)." But the greatest cheat they put upon themselves. *They that cover their fens shall not prosper. It is dangerous self flattery to give foft and fmoothing names to fins, in order to difguise their nature. Rather lay your hand upon your heart, and + thrust it into your bosom, though it come out (as Moses's did) leprous as snow (a).

And

(z) Baxter. * Prov. xxviii. 13. + Exod. iv. 6.

(a) Initium est salutis, notitia peccati: Nam qui peccare se nessit, corrigi non vult. Deprehendas te oportet, antequam emendes. Quidam vitiis gloriantur: Tu existimas aliquid de remedio cogitare, qui mala sua virtutum loco numerant? Ideo quantum potes teipsum coargue: Inquire in te: Accusatoris primum partibus sungere, deinde judicis, novissimé deprecatoris. Aliquando te offende. Sen. Epist. 28.——The knowledge of sin is the sirst step towards amendment; for he that does not know he hath estended, is not willing to be reproved. You must therefore sind out yourself, before you can amend yourself. Some glory in their vices. And do you imagine they have any thought about reforming who place their very vices in the room of virtues? Therefore reprove thyself; search thyself very narrowly. First turn accuse to thyself, then a judge, and then a suppliant. And dare for once to displease thyself.

And to find out our most beloved sin, let us consider what are those worldly objects or amusements which give us the highest delight; this, it is probable, will lead us directly to some one of our darling iniquities, if it be a sin of commission: And what are those duties which we read, or hear of from the word of GOD, to which we find ourselves most disinclined? And this, in all likelihood, will help us to detect some of our peculiar sins of omission; which, without such previous examination we may not be sensible of. And thus we may make a proficiency in one considerable branch of self knowledge (b).

CHAP.

(b) Ethocipsum argumentum est in melius translati animi quod vitia sua, quæ adhuc ignorabat, vicet. Sem. Epist. 6.——It is a good argument of a reformed mind, that it sees these vices in itself, which it was before ignorant of.

A man's predominant fin usually arises out of his predominant passion; which therefore he should diligently observe. The nature and soice of which is beautifully described by a late great mafter of English verse."

On different senses different objects firike,

Hence different passions more or less enslame,

As strong or weak, the organs of the frame:

And hence one master passion in the breest,

Like Aaron's serpent swallows up the rest.

Nature its mother; habit is its nurse;

Wit, sirit, saculies, but make it worse;

Reason itself but gives it edge and pow'r,

As heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more sour.

Ah! if she lend not arms as well as rules,

What can she more than tell us we are sools?

Teach us to mourn our nature, not to mend;

A sharp accuser, but a kelpless friend!

Pope's Essay on Mans.

CHAP. VIII.

The Knowledge of our most dangerous Temptations, necessary to Self Knowledge.

VII. A MAN that rightly knows himself, is acquainted with his peculiar temptations; and knows when, and in what circumstances, he is in the greatest danger of transgressing.

Reader, if ever you would know yourfelf, you must examine this point thoroughly. And if you have never yet done it, make a pause when you have read this chapter, and do it now. Consider in what company you are most apt to lose the possession and government of yourself; on what occasions you are apt to be most vain and unguarded, most warm and precipitant. Flee that company, avoid those occasions, if you would keep your conscience clear. What is it that robs you most of your time and your temper? If you have a due regard to the improvement of the one, and the preservation of the other, you will regret such a loss; and shun the occasions of it, as carefully as you would a road beset with robbers.

But especially must you attend to the occasions which most usually betray you into your favourite vices; and consider the spring from whence they arise, and the circumstances which most favour them. They arise doubtless from your natural temper, which strongly disposes and inclines you to them. That temper then, or particular turn of desire, must be carefully watched over as a most dangerous quarter. And the opportunities and circumstances which favour those inclinations must be resolutely avoided, as the strongest temptations. For the way to subdue a criminal inclination is, first, to avoid the known occasions that excite it; and then to curb the first motions of it (c). And thus having no opportunity of being indulged, it will of itself in time lose its force, and fail of its wonted victory.

The furest way to conquer, is sometimes to decline a battle; to weary out the enemy, by keeping him at bay. Fabius Maximus did not use this stratagem more successfully against Hannibal than a christian may against his peculiar vice, if he be but watchful of his advantages. It is dangerous to provoke an unequal enemy to the fight, or run into such a situation, where we cannot expect to escape without a disadvantageous encounter.

It is of unspeakable importance, in order to felf knowledge and felf government, to be acquainted with all the accesses and avenues to fin, and to observe which way it is that we ourselves too often approach it; and to set reason and conscience to guard those passes, those usual inlets to vice, which if a man once enters, he will find a retreat extremely difficult (d). "Watchfulness,

(c) Principiis obsta: Serò medicina paratur,

Cum mala per longas invaluere moras.

Ovid.

Omnia te adversum spectantia, nulla retrorsum. Hor.

Facilis descensus averni.

Sed revocare gradum, &c.

Virg.

Watchfulness, which is always necessary, is chiefly so when the first assaults are made. For then the enemy is most easily repulsed; if we never suffer him to get within us, but upon the very first approach draw up our forces, and fight him without the gate. And this will be more manifest, if we observe by what methods and degrees temptations grow upon us .- The first thing . that presents itself to the mind is a plain single thought; this straight is improved into a strong imagination; that again enforced by a fensible delight; then follow evil motions; and when these are once flirred there wants nothing but the affent. of the will, and then the work is finished. Now the first steps to this are seldom thought worth our. care; fometimes not taken notice of; fo that the enemy is frequently got close up to us, and even within our trenches, before we observe him." (e)

As men have their particular fins, which do most easily beset them; so they have their particular temptations, which do most easily overcome them. That may be a very great temptation to one, which is none at all to another. And if a man does not know what are his greatest temptations, he must have been a great stranger indeed to the business of self employment.

As the subtle enemy of mankind takes care to draw men gradually into sin, so he usually draws them them by degrees into temptation. As he difguiles the fin, so he conceals the temptation to it; well knowing, that were they but once sensible of their danger of fin, they would be ready to be on their guard against it. Would we know ourselves thoroughly then, we must get acquainted not only with our most usual temptations, that we be not unawares drawn into fin, but with the previous steps and preparatory circumstances, which make way for those temptations, that we be not drawn unawares into the occasions of fin; for those things which lead us into temptations are to be confidered as temptations, as well as those which immediately lead us into fin. And a man that knows himself will be aware of his remote temptations, as well as the more immediate ones; e.g. If he find the company of a passionate man is a temptation (as Solomon tells us it is, Prov. xxii. 24, 25.) he will not only avoid it, but those occasions that may lead him into it. And the petition in the Lord's Prayer makes it as much a man's duty to be upon his guard against temptation, as under it. Nor can a man pray from his heart that GOD would not lead him into temptation, if he take no care himself to avoid it.

⁽e) Stanhope's Thomas à Kempis, page 22.

CHAP.

C H A P. IX.

Self Knowledge discovers the secret Prejudices of the

VIII. A NOTHER important branch of self knowledge is, for a man to be acquainted with his own prejudices; or those secret prepossessions of his heart, which, though so deep and latent, that he may not be sensible of them, are often so strong and prevalent as to give a mighty, but imperceptible bias to the mind.

There is no one particular that I know of wherein felf knowledge more eminently confists than it does in this. It being therefore so essential a branch of my subject, and a point to which men seldom pay an attention equal to its importance, I beg leave to treat it with a little more precision.

These prejudices of the human mind may be considered with regard to opinions, persons, and things.

1. With regard to opinions.

It is a common observation, but well expressed by a late celebrated writer, "that we set out in life with such poor beginnings of knowledge, and grow up under such remains of superstition and ignorance, such influences of company and samion, such infinuations of pleasure, &c. that it is no wonder, if men get habits of thinking only in one way; that these habits in time grow rigid and confirmed; and so their minds come to be overcast with thick prejudices, scarce penetrable by any ray of truth, or light of reason (f).

(f) See religion of nature delin. Page 129.

There is no man but is more attached to one particular set or scheme of opinions in philosophy, politicks, and religion, than he is to another; I mean if he hath employed his thoughts at all about them. The question we should examine then is, how came we by these attachments? Whence are we so fond of these particular notions? Did we come fairly by them? Or were they imposed upon us, and distated to our easy belief, before we were able to judge of them? This is most likely. For the impressions we early receive generally grow up with us, and are those we least care to part with. However, which way foever we came by them, they must be reexamined, and brought to the touchstone of found sense, solid reason, and plain scripture. If they will not bear this after hard rubbing, they must be dismissed, as no genuine principles of truth, but as counterfeits imposed upon us under the guife and femblance of it.

And as reason and scripture must discover our prejudices to us, so they only can help us to get rid of them. By these are we to rectify, and to these are we to conform, all our opinions and sentiments in religion, as our own standard, exclusive of all other rules, light or authority, whatsoever.

And care must further be taken that we do not make scripture and reason bend and buckle to our notions; which will rather confirm our prejudices than cure them. For whatever cannot evidently be proved, without the help of overstrained metaphors, and the arts of sophistry, is much to be sufpected; pected; which used to make archbishop Tillotson fay—Non amo argutias in Theologia; I do not love subtilties in divinity. But,

2. The human mind is very apt to be prejudiced either for or against certain persons, as well as certain sentiments. And as prejudice will lead a man to talk very unreasonably with regard to the latter, so it will lead him to all as unreasonably with regard to the former.

What is the reason, for instance, that we cannot help having a more hearty affection for some persons than others? Is it from a similarity of taste and temper? Or something in their address, that flatters our vanity? Or something in their humour, that hits our fancy? Or something in their conversation, that improves our understanding? Or a certain sweetness of disposition, and agreeableness of manner, that is naturally engaging? Or from benefits received or expected from them? Or' from some eminent and distinguished excellency in them? Or from none of these; but something else, we cannot tell what ? - Such fort of inquiries will shew us whether our esteem and affections be rightly placed; or flow from mere inflinct, blind prejudice or fomething worfe.

And so on the other hand, with regard to our disaffection towards any one, or the disgust we have taken against him; if we would know ourselves, we must examine into the bottom of this; and see not only what is the pretended, but true cause of it: Whether it be justifiable, and our re-fentments.

fentments duly proportioned to it .- Is his manner in thinking, talking, and acting, quite different from mine, and therefore what I cannot approve ? Or have I received some real affront, or injury from him? Be it so, my continued resentment against him, on either of these accounts, may be owing notwithstanding, more to some unreasonable prejudice in me, than to any real fault in him.

For as to the former, his way of thinking, talking and acting, may possibly be juster than my own; which the mere force of custom and habit only makes me prefer to his. However, be it ever so wrong, he may not have had the fame advantage of improving his understanding, address, and conduct, as I have had; and therefore his defects herein are more excusable. And he may have many other kind of excellencies which I have not. --- "But he is not only ignorant and unmannered, but unsufferably vain, conceited and overbearing at the same time." Why, that perhaps he cannot help. It is the fault of his nature. He is the object of pity rather than resentment. And had I fuch a disposition by nature, I should, perhaps, with all my felf improvement, find it a difficult thing to manage. And therefore, though I can never choose such a one for an agreeable companion, yet I ought not to harbour a dislike to him, but love, and pity, and pray for him, as a person under a great misfortune; and be thankful that I am not under the same .--- "But he is quite blind to this fault of his temper, and does not appear to be in the least sensible of it."-Why, that is a great misfortune still; and he ought to be the more pitied. And as to the other pretended ground of difgust, "he hath often offended and injured me." Let me consider, 1. Whether any offence was really intended; whether I do not impute that to ill nature, which was only owing to ill manners; or that to defign, which proceeded only from ignorance. Do I not take offence before it is given? If fo, the fault is mine, and not his. And the refentment I have conceived against him, I ought to turn upon myself (g) .- Again, 2. Did I not provoke him to it, when I knew his temper ? The fault is still my own. I did, or might know the pride, paffion or perverseness of his nature; why then did I exasperate him? A man that would needlessly rouse a lion, must not expect always to come off so favourably as the hero of La Mancha. But, 3. Suppose I were not the aggressor; yet, how came I into his company? Who led me into the temptation? He hath acted according to his nature in what he hath done; but I have not afted according to my reason, in laying myself so open to him. I knew him; why did I not shun him, as I would any other dangerous animal that does mischief by instinct? If I must needs put my finger into a wafp's

(g) For every trifle scorn to take offence;
That always shews great pride, or little sense.
Good nature and good sense must always join;
To err is human, to forgive divine. Pope.

wasp's nest, why should I blame them for stinging me?---Or, 4. If I could not avoid his company, why did I not arm myfelf? Why did I venture defenceless into so much danger? Or, 5. Suppose he hath done me a real and undeserved injury, without my fault or provocation; yet does not my discontent aggravate it? Does it not appear greater to me, than it does to any body else? Or than it will to me, after the present ferment is over ?-And lastly, after all, must I never forgive? How shall I be able to repeat the Lord's Prayer, or read our faviour's comment upon it, Mat. vi. 14, 15. with an unforgiving temper? Do I not hope to be forgiven ten thousand talents; and cannot I forgive my fellow servant thirty pence? When I know not but he hath repented, and GOD hath forgiven him, whose forgiveness I want infinitely more than my greatest enemy does mine.*

Such

* A man despises me: What then? Did he know me more, he would perhaps despise me more. But I know myself better than he can know me; and therefore despise myself more. And though his contempt in this instance may be groundless, yet in others it would be but too well founded. I will therefore not only bear with, but forgive it.—Contemnendus est ipse contemptus, saith Seneca. But such retorted scorn is more becoming the character of a stoick than a christian.

It has been reckoned a wife and witty answer which one of the philosophers returned to his friend, who advised him to revenge an injury that had been done him: "What (says he) if an ass kicks me, must I needs kick him again?" And perhaps there is more witthan wisdom in that reply. It seems indeed to carry in it something of a true greatness of mind; but does it not at

Such confiderations are of great use to soften our prejudices against persons; and at once to discover the true spring, and prevent the bad effects of them. And happy would it be for a christian, could he but call to mind and apply to his relief, half the good things which that excellent heathen emperour and philosopher Marcus Antoninus could say upon this subject. Some of which I have, for the benefit of the English reader, extracted, and thrown into the margin. (h)

3. The

the fame time discover a kind of haughty and contemptuous spirit? The truth is, (as a judicious writer observes upon it) "it is at best but a lame and misshapen charity; it has more of pride than goodness. We should learn of the holy Jesus, who was not only meek but lowly. We should contemn the injury, and pity the weakness; but should not disdain or dispise the persons of our enemies. Charity vaunteth not himself, is not pussed up, doth not behave itself unseemly." See Scougas's duty of loving our enemies.

(b) In the morning remember to fay to thyself; this day perhaps I may meet with some impertinent, ungrateful, peevish, tricking, envious, churlish sellow. Now all these ill qualities in them proceed from their ignorance of good and evil. And since I am so happy as to understand the natural beauty of a good action, and the deformity of an ill one, and since the person that obliges me is of near kin to me; and though not just of the same blood and samily, yet of the same divine extract as to his mind; and sinally, since I am convinced that no one can do me a real injury, because he cannot force me to do a dishonest thing; for these reasons I cannot find in my heart to hate him, or so much as to be angry with him. Marc. Anton. Medit. Book 2. § 1.

You are just taking leave of the world; and have you not yet learned to be friends with every body? And that to be an honest man, is the only way to be a wise one? Id. book 4. § 37.

g. The mind is apt to be prejudiced against or in favour of certain things and actions, as well as certain fentiments and persons.

Do you not sometimes find dull disagreeable ideas annexed to certain places, feafons, or employments, which give you a fecret aversion to them? These arise from the remembrance of some unpleasing incidents you have heretofore met with, and which you apprehend may again befal you on fuch occasions. But they are nothing more than the mere misrepresentations of fancy; and ought to be repelled, because they will be apt to lead you to neglect the duties of your character.

To expect an impossibility is madness; now it is impossible for ill men not to do ill things. 11. Book 5 $ 17.

It is the privilege of human nature above brutes to love those that offend us ; in order to this confider, 1. That the offending party is of kin to you; 2. That he acts thus, because he knows no better ; 3. He may have no defign to offend you ; 4. You will both of you quickly be in your graves; but above all, 5. You have received no harm from him : For your mind or reason is the same as it was before. Id. Book 7. § 22.

Think upon your last hour, and do not trouble yourself about other people's fau'ts, but leave them there where they muft be anfwered for. Id. Book 7. $23.

Do not return the temper of ill natured people upon themfelves, nor treat them as they do the reft of mankind. Id. Book 7. $ 55.

Though the gods are immortal, yet they not only patiently bear with a wicked world through fo many ages; but what is more, liberally provide for it: And are you, who are just going off the stage, weary with braring, though you are one of those unhappy mortals yourfelf? Id. Book 7. $ 70.

Never difturb yourfelf; for men will do the same untoward actions over again, though you burft with feleen. Id. Book 8. 64.

Reform

If therefore you find in yourself a secret difinclination to any particular action or duty, and the mind begins to cast about for excuses and reasons to justify the neglect of it, consider the matter well: Go to the bottom of that reluctance; and fearch out what it is that gives the mind this averfion to it. Whether it be the thing, or action itself, or some discouraging circumstances that may attend it; or some disagreeable consequences that may possibly flow from it; or your supposed un-

Reform an injurious person if you can; if not remember your patience was given you to bear with him. That the gods patiently bear with fuch men, and fometimes bestow upon them health, and fame, and fortune. Id. book 9. § 11.

When people treat you ill, and show their spite, and slander you, enter into their little fouls, go to the bottom of them, fearch their understandings and you will soon fee, that nothing they may think or fay of you need give you one troublesome thought. Id. Book 9. $ 27.

That is the best thing for a man which GOD sends him; and that is the best time when he fends it. Id. Book 10. $ 2.

It is sometimes a hard matter to be certain, when you have received ill usage or not; for mens actions oftentimes look worse than they are : And one must be thoroughly informed of a great many things, before he can rightly judge. Id. Book 11. § 13.

Confider how much more you often fuffer from your anger and grief, than from those very things for which you are angry and grieved. Id. Book 11. § 18.

When you fancy any one hath transgressed, say thus to yourfelf: " How do I know it is a fauft ? But admit it is, it may be his conscience hath corrected him; and then he hath received his punishment from himself." Id. Book 12. § 16.

To thefe I shall add two more quotations out of the facred writings, of incomparably greater weight and dignity than any of the the start per master the fatter of the forementioned.

fitness for it at present. Why, all these things may be only imaginary. And to neglect a plain and politive duty upon such confiderations, shows that you are governed by appearances more than realities, by fancy more than reason, and by inclination more than conscience,

But let fancy muster up all the discouraging circumstances, and set them in the most formidable light, to bar your way to a supposed duty; for instance, "It is very difficult, I want capacity, at least am so indisposed to it at present, that I shall make nothing of it; and then it will be attended with danger to my person, reputation or peace; and the opposition I am like to meet with is great, &c." But after all, is the call of providence clear? Is the thing a plain duty? Such a reason, conscience, and scripture; your office, character. or personal engagements call upon you to difcharge? If so, all the aforesaid objections are vain and delufive; and you have nothing to do, but to fummon your courage, and in dependence on divine help, to fet about the bufiness immediately and in good earnest, and in the best and wisest manner you can; and you may depend upon it, you will find the greatest difficulty to lie only in the first attempt; these frightful appearances to be culla motive to itis fire antique alles forementioned. Prov. xix. 11. The discretion of a man defereth his anger; and it is his glory to pass over a transgression. Rom. xii. 20, 21. If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirft, give him drink : For in fo doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good, the farty at a grown mile seed at a strate (1)

all visionary, the mere figments of fancy turning lambs into lions, and mole hills into mountains; and that nothing but sloth, folly, and self indulgence, thus set your imagination on work to deter you from a plain duty. Your heart would deceive you, but you have found out the cheat, and do not be imposed upon. (i)

Again, suppose the thing done; consider how it will look then. Take a view of it as past; and whatever pains it may cost you, think whether it will not be abundantly recompensed by the inward peace and pleasure, which arise from a consciousness of having asted right. It certainly will. And the difficulties you now dread will enhance your future satisfaction (k). But think again how you will bear the reslections of your own mind if you wilfully neglect a plain and necessary duty; whether this will not occasion you much more trouble than all the pains you might be at in performing it. And a wise man will always determine himself by the end; or by such a retrospective view of things, considered as past.

Again, on the other hand, if you find a strong propension to any particular action, examine that with the like impartiality. Perhaps it is what neither your reason nor conscience can fully approve. And yet every motive to it is strongly urged, and every objection

⁽i) " The wife and prudent conquer difficulties,

[&]quot; By daring to attempt them. Sloth and folly

[&]quot; Shiver and fhrink at fight of toil and danger, [&]quot;And make th' impossibility they fear." Rowe.

(k)-forfan et hæc olim meminisse javabit. Virg.

jection to it flighted. Sense and appetite grow importunate and clamorous, and want to lead, while reason remonstrates in vain. But turn not aside from that faithful and friendly monitor, whilst with a low, still voice, she addresses you in this fost but earnest language. -- " Hear me, I beseech you, but this one word more. The action is indeed out of character; what I shall never approve. The pleasure of it is a great deal over rated; you will certainly be disappointed. It is a false appearance that now deceives you. And what will you think of yourself when it is past, and you come to reflect feriously on the matter? Believe it, you will then wish you had taken me for your counsellor, instead of those enemies of mine, your lusts and passions, which have so often misled you, though you know I never did."

Such thort recollections as these, and a little leisure to take a view of the nature and consequences of things or actions, before we reject or approve them, will prevent much salse judgment and bad conduct; and by degrees wear off the prejudices which sancy has fixed in the mind, either for, or against any particular action; teach us to distinguish between things and their appearances; strip them of those salse colours that so often deceive us; correct the sallies of the imagination, and leave the reins in the hand of reason.

Before I dismiss this head, I must observe, that some of our strongest prejudices arise from an excessive self esteem, or too great a complacency in our own good fense and understanding. Philautus in every thing shews himself well satisfied with his own wisdom; which makes him very impatient of contradiction, and gives him a distaste to all who shall presume to oppose their judgment to his, in any thing. He had rather persevere in a mistake than retract it, lest his judgment should suffer; not confidering that his ingenuity and good fense suffer much more by such obstinacy. The fulness of his felf sufficiency makes him blind to those imperfections which every one can see in him but himself. So that however wife, fincere and friendly, however gentle and feafonable your remonstrance may be, he takes it immediately to proceed from ill nature or ignorance in you, but from no fault in him.

Seneca, I remember, tells us a remarkable story, which very well illustrates this matter. — Writing to his friend Lucilius, "My wife (says he) keeps Harpastes in her house still, who, you know, is a sort of samily food, and no small incumbrance upon us. For my part I am far from taking any pleasure in such prodigies. If I have a mind to divert myself with a fool, I have not far to go for one; I can laugh at myself. This silly girl, all on a sudden, lost her eye sight: And (which perhaps may seem incredible, but it is very true) she does not know she is blind; but is every now and then desiring her governess to lead her abroad, saying the house is dark. —Now what we laugh at in this poor creature, creature, you may observe happens to us all. No man knows that he is covetous or infatiable. Yet with this difference; the blind feek fomebody to lead them, but we are content to wander without a guide,-But why do we thus deceive ourselves? The disease is not without us, but fixed deep within. And therefore is the cure so difficult, because we do not know that we are fick (1)."

CHAP. X.

The Necessity and Means of knowing our Natural Temper.

IX. A NOTHER very important branch of felf knowledge is, the knowledge of those governing passions or dispositions of the mind, which generally form what we call a man's natural temper.

The difference of natural tempers seems to be chiefly owing to the different degrees of influence, the several passions have upon the mind. e.g. If the passions are eager and soon raised, we say the man is of a warm temper; if more fluggish and flowly raised, he is of a cool temper; according as anger, malice or ambition prevail, he is of a fierce, churlish, or haughty temper; the influence of the fofter paffions of love, pity and benevolence, forms a fweet, sympathifung and courteous temper; and when all the passions are duly poised, and the milder and pleasing ones prevail, they make what is commonly called a quite good natured man.

So that it is the prevalence or predominance of any particular passion which gives the turn or tinsture to a man's temper, by which he is distinguished, and for which he is loved or esteemed, or shunned and despised by others.

Now what this is, those we converse with are soon sensible of. They presently see the fault of our temper, and order their behaviour accordingly. If they are wise and well mannered, they will avoid striking the string which they know will jar and raise a discord within us. If they are our enemies they will do it on purpose to set us on tormenting ourselves. And our friends we must suffer sometimes with a gentle hand to touch it, either by way of pleasant raillery or faithful advice.

But a man must be greatly unacquainted with himself, if he is ignorant of his predominant passion, or distinguishing temper, when every one else observes it. And yet how common is this piece of self ignorance? The two apostles, James and John, discovered it in that very action wherein they meant to express nothing but a hearty zeal for their master's honour; which made him tell them, that they knew not what manner of spirit they were of, Luke ix. 55. i. e. that, instead of a principle of love and genuine zeal for him, they were at that time governed by a spirit of pride, revenge and crucky; and yet knew it not. And that the apostle John should be liable to this censure, whose temper seemed to be all love and sweetness, is a memorable instance how on the wife of

difficult

his own spirit; and that that passion, which seems to have the least power over his mind, may on some occasions insensibly gain a criminal ascendant there.

The necessity of a perfect knowledge of our reigning passions appears further from hence; that they not only give a tincture to the temper, but to the understanding also; and throw a strong bias on the judgment. They have much the same essect upon the eye of the mind, as some distempers have upon that of the body. If they do not put it out, they weaken it; or throw salle colours before it, and make it form a wrong judgment of things. And, in short, are the source of those forementioned prejudices, which so often abuse the human understanding.

Whatever the different passions themselves that reign in the mind may be owing to, whether to the different texture of the bodily organs, or the different quantity or motion of the animal spirits, or to the native turn and cast of the soul itself; yet certain it is, that men's different ways of thinking are much according to the predominance of their different passions; and especially with regard to religion. Thus, e. g. we see melancholy people are apt to throw too much gloom upon their religion, and represent it in a very uninviting and unlovely view, as all austerity and mortification; whilst they who are governed by the more gay and cheerful passions, are apt to run into the other extreme, and too much to mingle the pleasures of sense with those of religion; and are as much too lax, as the other are too severe. And thus, by the prejudice or bias of their respective passions, or the sorce of their natural temper they are led into different mistakes.

"So that would a man know himself, he must study his natural temper; his constitutional inclinations, and favourite passions; for by these a man's judgment is easily perverted, and a wrong bias hung upon his mind: These are the inlets of prejudice; the unguarded avenues of the mind, by which a thousand errors and secret faults find admission, without being observed or taken notice of (m)."

And that we may more easily come at the knowledge of our predominant affections, let us consider what outward events do most impress and move us; and in what manner. What is it that usually creates the greatest pain or pleasure in the mind?—And as for pain, a stock indeed may tell us, "that we must keep things at a distance; let nothing that is outward come within us; let externals be externals still." But the human make will scarce bear the rigor of that philosophy. Outward things, aster all, will impress and affect us. And there is no harm in this, provided they do not get the possession of us, overset our reason, or lead us to ast unbecoming a man or a christian. And one advantage we may reap from hence is, the manner or degree in which

which outward things impress us, may lead us into a better acquaintance with ourselves, discover to us our weak side, and the passions which most predominate in us.

Our pleasures will likewise discover our reigning passions, and the true temper and disposition of the foul. If it be captivated by the pleasures of sin, it is a fign its prevailing tafte is very vicious and corrupt; if with the pleasures of sense, very low and fordid; if imaginary pleasures, and the painted. scenes of fancy and romance do most entertain it, the foul hath then a trifling turn; if the pleasures of science or intellectual improvements are those it is most fond of, it has then a noble and refined tafte ; but if its chief satisfactions derive from religion and divine contemplation, it has then its true and proper taste; its temper is as it should be, pure, divine, and heavenly; provided these satisfactions spring from a true religious principle, free from that superstition, bigotry and enthusiasm, under which it is often disguised.

And thus, by carefully observing what it is that gives the mind the greatest pain and torment, or the greatest pleasure and entertainment, we come at the knowledge of its reigning passions, and prevailing temper and disposition.

"Include thyfelf then, O my foul, within the compass of thine own heart; if it be not large, it is deep, and thou wilt there find exercise enough. Thou wilt never be able to found it; it cannot be known,

known, but by Him, who tries the thoughts and reins. But dive into this subject as deep as thou canst. Examine thyself; and this knowledge of that which paffes within thee, will be of more use to thee, than the knowledge of all that passes in the world. Concern not thyself with the wars and quarrels of publick or private persons. Take cognizance of those contests which are between thy slesh and thy spirit; betwixt the law of thy members, and that of thy understanding. Appeale those differences. Teach thy flesh to be in subjection. Replace reason on its throne; and give it piety for its counsellor. Tame thy passions, and bring them under bondage. Put thy little state in good order; govern wisely and holily those numerous people which are contained in so little a kingdom; that is to fay, that multitude of affections, thoughts, opinions and passions which are in thine heart (n)."

C H A P. XI.

Concerning the secret Springs of our Actions.

X. A NOTHER considerable branch of self acquaintance is, to know the true motives and secret springs of our actions.

This will sometimes cost us much pains to acquire. But for want of it, we should be in danger of passing a false judgment upon our actions, and of entertaining a wrong opinion of our conduct.

(1) Jurieu's Method of Christian Devotion, Part iii. Chap. iii.

It is not only very possible, but very common, for men to be ignorant of the chief inducements of their behaviour; and to imagine they act from one motive, whilst they are apparently governed by another. If we examine our views, and look into our hearts narrowly, we shall find that they more frequently deceive us in this respect than we are aware of; by perfuading us that we are governed by much better motives than we really are. The honour of GOD, and the interest of religion, may be the open and avowed motives; whilft fecular interest and secret vanity may be the hidden and true one. While we think we are ferving GOD, we may be only facrificing to Mammon. We may like Jehn, boast our zeal for the Lord, when we are only animated by the heat of our natural paffions (0); may cover a censorious spirit under a cloak of piety; and giving admonition to others, may be only giving vent to our spleen.

Many come to the place of publick worship, out of custom or curiosity, who would be thought to come thither only out of conscience. And whilst their external and professed view is to serve GOD, and gain good to their souls, their secret and inward motive is only to shew themselves to advantage, or to avoid singularity, and prevent others making observations on their absence. Muniscence and almsgiving may often proceed from a principle of pride and party spirit, and seeming acts of friendship from a mercenary motive.

By thus difguifing our motives we may impose upon men, but at the same time we are imposing upon ourselves; and whilst we are deceiving others, our own hearts deceive us. And of all impoftures felf deception is the most dangerous, because least suspected.

Now, unless we examine this point narrowly, we shall never come to the bottom of it; and unless we come at the true spring and real motive of our actions, we shall never be able to form a right judgment of them; and they may appear very different in our own eye, and in the eye of the world, from what they do in the eye of GOD. For the Lard feeth not as man feeth: For man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart.* And hence it is, that that which is highly efteemed among men, is oftentimes abomination in the fight of GOD.+ Every way of man is right in his own eyes; but the LORD pondereth the hearts. I

CHAP. XII.

Every one that knows himself is in a particular Manner fenfible how far he is governed by a Thirst for Applause.

XI. A NOTHER thing necessary to unfold a man's heart to himself is, to consider what is his appetite for fame; and by what means he feeks to gratify it. This a 3 Sam. zvi. 7. + Luke xvi. 15. 1 Prov. zxi. 20.

This passion in particular having always so main a stroke, and often times so unsuspected an influence on the most important parts of our conduct, a perfect acquaintance with it is a very material branch of self knowledge, and therefore requires a distinct consideration.

Emulation, like the other passions of the human mind, shows itself much more plainly, and works much more strongly in some than it does in others. It is in itself innocent; and was planted in our natures for very wise ends, and, if kept under proper regulations, is capable of serving very excellent purposes; otherwise it degenerates into a mean and criminal ambition.

When a man finds fomething within him that pushes him on to excel in worthy deeds, or in actions truly good and virtuous, and pursues that defign with a steady unaffected ardour, without referve or falsehood, it is a true sign of a noble spirit. For that love of praise can never be criminal that excites and enables a man to do a great deal more good than he could do without it. And perhaps there never was a fine genius or a noble spirit, that rose above the common level, and distinguished itself by high attainments in what is truly excellent, but was secretly, and perhaps insensibly prompted, by the impulse of this passion.

But, on the contrary, if a man's views centre only in the applause of others, whether it be deserved or not; if he pants after popularity and fame, not regarding how he comes by it; if his passion for praise urge him to stretch himself beyond the line of his capacity, and to attempt things to which he is unequal; to condescend to mean arts and low diffimulation for the fake of a name; and in a finister, indirect way, sue hard for a little incense, not caring from whom he receives it; his ambition then becomes vanity. And if it excite a man to wick. ed attempts, make him willing to facrifice the efteem of all wife and good men to the acclamations of a mob; to overleap the bounds of decency and truth, and break through the obligations of honour and virtue, it is then not only vanity, but vice: And vice the most destructive to the peace and happiness of human society, and which of all others hath made the greatest havock and devastation among men.

What an instance have we here of the wide difference between common opinion and truth? That a vice so big with mischief and misery should be mistaken for a virtue! And that they who have been most insamous for it should be crowned with laurels, even by those who have been ruined by it; and have those laurels perpetuated by the common consent of men through after ages! Seneca's judgment of Alexander is certainly more agreeable to truth than the common opinion; who called him a publick cut throat rather than a hero; and who, in seeking only to be a terrour to mankind, arose to no greater an excellence, than what belonged to the most hurtful and hateful animals on earth (p)."

Certain it is, that these salse heroes, who seek their glory from the destruction of their own species, are of all men most ignorant of themselves; and by this wicked ambition entail infamy and curses upon their name, instead of that immortal glory they pursued. According to the prophet's words.—Wo to him who coveteth an evil covetousness to his house, that he may set his nest on high; that he may be delivered from the power of evil. Thou hast consulted shame

(p) Quid enim simile habebat vesanus adolescens, cui pro virtute erat selix temeritas?——Hic a pueritia latro, gentiumque vastator, tam hostium pernicies quam amicorum. Qui summum bonum duceret terrori esse cunctis mortalibus: Oblitus non ferocissima tantum, sed ignavissima quoque animalia, timeri ob virus malum. Sen, de Benef. cap. 13.

How different from this is the judgment of Plutareb in this matter? who, in his Oration concerning the fortune and virtue of Alexander, exalts him into a true bero, and justifies all the waste he made of mankind under (the same colour with which the Spaniards excused their inhuman barbarities towards the poor Indiana, viz.) a pretence of civilizing them. And in attributing all his success to his virtue, he talks more like a foldier serving under him in his wars, than an historian who lived many years afterwards, whose business it was to transmit his character impartially to success and in whatever other respects, Mr. Dryden may give the preference to Plutareb before Sineca, (which he does with much zeal in his Preface to Plutareb's Lives) yet it must be allowed that in this instance at least, the latter shows more of the Philosopher. See Plut. Mor. Vol. I. ad sin.

shame to thine house, by cutting off many people; and hast sinned against thy soul. (9)

Now no man can truly know himself till he be acquainted with this, which is so often the secret and unperceived spring of his actions, and observes how far it governs him in his conversation and conduct; virtue and real excellence will raise to view, though they be not mounted on the wings of ambition, which, by soaring too high, procures but a more fatal fall.

And to correct the irregularity and extravagance of this passion, let us but reslect how airy and unsubstantial a pleasure the highest gratifications of it afford; how many cruel mortifications he exposes us to, by awakening the envy of others; to what meanness it often makes us submit; how frequently it loseth its end by pursuing it with too much ardour; and how much more solid pleasure the approbation of conscience will yield, than the acclamations of ignorant and mistaken men, who, judging by externals only, cannot know our true character; and whose commendations a wise man would rather despise than court. "Examine but the size of people's sense, and the condition

(9) Hab. ii 9, 10. YT YYT YYT that gaineth a wicked gain...
Oh sons of earth! Attempt ye still to rise,
By mountains pil'd on mountains, to the skies?
Heav'n still with laughter the vain toil surveys,
And buries madmen in the heaps they raise,
Who wickedly is wife or madly brave,
Is but the more a sool, or more a knave.

Pope's Effay on Man.

of their understandings, and you will never be fond of popularity, nor afraid of censure; nor folicitous what judgment they may form of you, who know not how to judge rightly of themselves." (r)

C H A P. XIII.

What Kind of Knowledge we are already furnished with, and what Degree of Esteem we set upon it.

A MAN can never rightly know himself, unless he examines into his knowledge of other things.

We must consider then the knowledge we have; and whether we do not fet too high a price upon it, and too great a value upon ourselves on the account of it; of what real use it is to us, and what effect it has upon us; whether it does not make us too stiff, unsociable, and affuming; testy and supercilious, and ready to despise others for their fupposed ignorance. If so, our knowledge, be it what it will, does us more harm than good. We were better without it; ignorance itself would not render us so ridiculous. Such a temper with all our knowledge, shows that we know not ourfelves.

" A man is certainly proud of that knowledge he despises others for the want of."

How

(+) Διελθε εσω εις τα ηγεμονκα αυλων, και οψει τινας κρίλας φοθη οικς και περι αυλων ονλας κρίλας. Mark Anton. lib. ix. § 18.

How common is it for some men to be fond of appearing to know more than they do, and of feeming to be thought men of knowledge? To which end they exhaust their fund almost in all companies, to outshine the rest. So that in two or three conversations they are drawn dry, and you fee to the bottom of them much sooner than you could at first imagine. And even that torrent of learning, which they pour out upon you at first fo unmercifully, rather confounds than fatisfies you; their visible aim is not to inform your judgment, but display their own; you have many things to query and except against, but their loquacity gives you no room; and their good sense, set off to so much advantage, strikes a modest man dumb : If you infift upon your right to examine, they retreat either in confusion or equivocation; and, like the scuttle fish, throw a large quantity of ink behind them, that you may not fee where to purfue. Whence this foible flows is obvious enough. Self knowledge would foon correct it.

But, as some ignorantly affect to be more knowing, so others vainly affect to be more ignorant than than they are; who, to shew they have greater insight and penetration than other men, insist upon the absolute uncertainty of science; will dispute even first principles; grant nothing as certain, and so run into downright Pyrrhonism; the too common effect of abstracted debates excessively refined. (s)

Every

⁽s) Socrates's faying, Nihil se scire, nish id ipsum, savoured of an affected humility. But they that followed went further; and particularly

Every one is apt to fet the greatest value upon that kind of knowledge, in which he imagines he himself most excels; and to undervalue all other in comparison of it. There wants some certain rule then, by which some men's knowledge is to be tried, and the value of it estimated. And let it be this. " That is the best and most valuable kind of knowledge, that is most subservient to the best ends; i. e. which tends to make a man wiser and better, or more agreeable, and useful both to himself and others."-For knowledge is but a means that relates to some end. And as all means are to be judged of by the excellency of the end, and their expediency to produce it; fo that must be the best knowledge that hath the directest tendency to promote the best ends; viz. a man's own true happiness, and that of others; in which the glory of GOD, the ultimate end, is ever necessarily comprised.

Now, if we were to judge of the feveral kinds of science by this rule, we should find, 1. Some of them to be very hurtful and pernicious; as tending to pervert the true end of knowledge; to ruin a man's own happiness, and make him more injurious to fociety. Such is the knowledge of vice, the various temptations to it, and the fecret ways particularly Arcefilas, Negabat effe quicquam, quod fciri poteft; ne illud quidem iofum quod Socrates fibi reliquisset. And thus theabfurdity grew to a fize that was monftrous. For to know that one knows nothing, is a contradiction. And not to know that he knows even that, is not to know but that he may know fomething. Relig. of Nat. delin. Page 40.

of practifing it; especially the arts of dissimulation, fraud, and dishonesty. 2. Others will be found unprofitable and useless. As those parts of knowledge, which though they may take up much time and pains to acquire, yet answer no valuable purpose; and serve only for amusement, and the entertainment of the imagination. For instance, an acquaintance with plays, novels, games, and modes, in which a man may be very critical and expert, and yet not a wit the wifer or more uleful man. 3. Other kinds of knowledge are good only relatively, or conditionally, and may be more useful to one than to another; viz. a skill in a man's particular occupation or calling, on which his credit, livelihood, or usefulness in the world depends. And as this kind of knowledge is valuable in proportion to its end, fo it ought to be cultivated with a diligence and esteem answerable to that. Lastly, other kinds of knowledge are good absolutely and universally; viz. the knowledge of GOD and ourfelves. The nature of our final happiness, and the way to it. This is equally necessary to all. And how thankful should we be, that we, who live under the light of the gospel, and enjoy that light in its perfection and purity, have so many happy means and opportunities of attaining this most useful and necessary kind of knowledge!

A man can never understand himself then, till he makes a right estimate of his knowledge; till he examines what kind of knowledge he values himfelf most upon, and most diligently cultivates;

how high a value he fets upon it; what good it does him; what effect it hath upon him; what he is the better for it; what end it answers now; or what it is like to answer hereafter.

There is nothing in which a man's felf ignorance discovers itself more, than in the esteem he hath for his understanding, or for himself on the account of it. It is a trite and true observation, that empty things make the most sound. Men of the least knowledge are most apt to make a show of it, and to value themselves upon it; which is very visible in forward confident youth; raw conceited academicks, and those who, uneducated in their childhood, betake themselves in later life to reading, without taste or judgment, only as an accomplishment, and to make a show of scholarship; who have just learning enough to spoil company, and render themselves ridiculous, but not enough to make either themselves or others at all the wifer.

But beside the formentioned kinds of knowledge. there is another which is commonly called false knowledge; which, though it often imposes upon men under the show and semblance of true knowledge, is really worfe than ignorance. Some men have learned a great many things, and have taken a great deal of pains to learn them, and stand very high in their own opinion on account of them, which yet they must unlearn before they are truly wife. They have been at a vast expense of time, and pains, and patience, to heap together, and to confirm themselves in a set of wrong notions, which they lay up in their minds as a fund of valuable knowledge; which if they try by the forementioned rules, viz. " the tendency they have to make them wifer and better, or more ufeful and beneficial to others," will be found to be worth just nothing at all.

Beware of this false knowledge. For as there is nothing of which men are more obstinately tenacious, fo there is nothing that renders them more vain, or more averse to seif knowledge. Of all things, men are most fond of their wrong notions.

The Apostle Paul often speaks of these men, and their felf fufficiency, in very poignant terms; who, though they feem wife, yet (fays he) must become fools before they are wife.* Though they think they know a great deal, know nothing yet as they ought to know. + But deceive themselves, by thinking themselves something when they are nothing. I And whilst they defire to be teachers of others, understand not what they fay, nor whereof they affirm. & And want themselves to be taught what are the first rudiments and principles of wisdom.

ショウは出るののです。

CHAP. XIV.

Concerning the Knowledge, Guard, and Government of our Thoughts.

NOTHER part of self knowledge consists in a due acquaintance with our own thoughts, and the inward workings of the imagination.

1 Cor. iii. 18. † 1 Cor. viii. 2. 1 Gal. vi. 1. § 1 Tim. i. 7. | Heb. v. 12.

The right government of the thoughts requires no small art, vigilance, and resolution. But it is a matter of such vast importance to the peace and improvement of the mind, that it is worth while to be at some pains about it. A man that hath so numerous and turbulent a family to govern as his own thoughts, which are too apt to be at the command of his passions and appetites, ought not to be long from home. If he be, they will foon grow mutinous and disorderly under the conduct of those two headstrong guides, and raise great clamours and disturbances, and sometimes on the slightest occasions. And a more dreadful scene of misery can hardly be imagined, than that which is occafioned by fuch a tumult and uproar whithin, when a raging conscience or inflamed passions are let loofe without check or control. A city in flames, or the mutiny of a drunken crew aboard, who have murdered the Captain, and are butchering one another, are but faint emblems of it. The torment of the mind, under such an insurrection and ravage of the passions, is not easy to be conceived. The most revengeful man cannot wish his enemy a greater.

Of what vast importance then is it for a man to watch over his thoughts, in order to a right government of them! To consider what kind of thoughts find the easiest admission, in what manner they infinuate themselves, and upon what ocIt was an excellent rule which a wife heathen prescribed to himself, in his private meditations; manage (saith he) all your actions and thoughts in such a manner, as if you were just going out of the world. (t) Again, (saith he) a man is seldom, if ever, unhappy for not knowing the thoughts of others; but he that does not attend to the motions of his own, is certainly miserable. (u)

It may be worth our while then to discuss this matter a little more precisely; and consider, 1. What kind of thoughts are to be excluded or rejected. And 2. What ought to be indulged and entertained.

I. Some thoughts ought to be immediately banished as foon as they have found entrance.—And if we are often troubled with them, the safest way will be to keep a good guard on the avenues of the mind by which they enter, and avoid those occasions which commonly excite them. For sometimes it is much easier to prevent a bad thought entering the mind, than to get rid of it when it is entered. More particularly,

1. Watch against all fretful and discontented thoughts which do but chase and corrode the mind

⁽¹⁾ Marc. Anton. Medit. lib. 2. § 11.

⁽u) Marc. Anton. lib. 2. § 8.

[&]quot;Nothing can be more unhappy than that man who ranges every where, ranfacks every thing, digs into the bowels of the earth, dives into other men's bosoms, but does not confider all the while that his own mind will afford him sufficient scope for inquiry and entertainment, and that the care and improvement of him-self will give him business enough." Id. lib. 2. § 13.

[&]quot;Your disposition will be suitable to that which you most frequently think on; for the soul is, as it were, tinged with the col-to no purpose. To harbour these is to do yourself more injury than it is in the power of your greatest enemy to do you. It is equally a christian's interest and duty to learn, in whatever state he is, therewith to be content.*

2. Harbour not too anxious and apprehensive thoughts. By giving way to tormenting fears, suspicions of fome approaching danger or troublesome event, we not only anticipate, but double the evil we fear; and undergo much more from the apprehension of it before it comes, than from the whole weight of it when present. This is a great, but common weakness; which a man should endeavour to arm himself against by such kind of reflections as these; --- " Are not all these events under the certain direction of a wife providence? If they befal me, they are then that share of suffering which GOD hath appointed me; and which he expects I should bear as a christian. How often hath my timorous heart magnified former trials? which I found to be less in reality than they appeared upon their approach. And perhaps the formidable aspect they put on, is only a stratagem of the great enemy of my best interest, designed on purpose to divert me from fome point of duty, or to draw me into some sin to avoid them. However, why should I torment myfelf to no purpose? The pain and affliction the dreaded evil will give me when it comes, is of GOD's sending; the pain I feel in the apprehension of it before it comes, is of my own procuring. Whereby I often make my fufferings more than double ;

double; for this overplus of them, which I bring upon myself, is often greater than that measure of them which the hand of providence immediately brings upon me."

3. Dismiss as soon as may be, all angry and wrathful thoughts. These will but canker and corrode the mind, and dispose it to the worst temper in the world, viz. that of fixed malice and revenge. Anger may steal into the heart of a wife man, but it rests only in the bosom of fools.* Make all the most candid allowances for the offender. Confider his natural temper. Turn your anger into pity. Repeat 1 Cor. xiii. Think of the patience and meekness of Christ, and the petition in the Lord's prayer; and how much you stand in need of forgiveness yourfelf, both from GOD and man; how fruitless, how foolish is indulged refentment; how tormenting to yourfelf? You have too much good nature willingly to give others so much torment; and why should you give it yourself? You are commanded to love your neighbour as yourfelf, but not forbidden to love yourself as much. And why should you do yourfelf that injury, which your enemy would be glad to do you? ?+

But,

* Ecclef. vii. 9.

† The christian precept in this case is, Let not the sungo down apon your wrath, Eph. iv. 26. And this precept Plutarch tells us the Pythagoreans practifed in a literal sense: "Who, if at any time in a passion they broke out into opprobious language, before sunset gave one another their hands, and with them a discharge from all injuries; and so with a mutual reconciliation parted friends." Plut. Mor. Vol. iii. pag. 89.

But, above all, be fure to fet a guard on the tongue whilst the fretful mood is upon you. The least spark may break out into a conflagration, when cherished by a refentive heart, and fanned by the wind of an angry breath. Aggravating expressions, at such a time, are like oil thrown upon flames, which always make them rage the more (w). Efpecially,

4. Banish all malignant and revengeful thoughts. A spirit of revenge is the very spirit of the devil, than which nothing makes a man more like him; and nothing can be more opposite to the temper which christianity was designed to promote. If your revenge be not satisfied, it will give you torment now; if it be, it will give you greater hereafter. None is a greater felf tormentor than a malicious and revengeful man, who turns the poison of his own temper in upon himself (x).

Drive from the mind all filly, trifling, and unreasonable thoughts; which sometimes get into it we know not how, and seize and possess it before we are aware; and hold it in empty, idle amusements, that yield neither pleasure nor profit, and turn to no manner of account in the world; only confume time, and prevent a better employment of the mind.

⁽τι) Αγαθον μεν εςι εν πυρείω, δε εν οργη την γλωτ-Ίαν απαγην εχειν και λειαν. Plutarch. de Ira Cohiben. It is good in a fever, much better in anger, to have the tongue kept clea and fmooth.

⁽x) Malitia ipfa maximam partem veneni fui bibit.-Illud venenum quod ferpentes in alienam perniciem proferunt, fine fua continent. Non eft huic smile; hoc habentibus pestimum eft. Sen . Epift. 82.

And indeed there is little difference whether we fpend the time in sleep, or in these waking dreams. Nay, if the thoughts which thus insensibly steal upon you be not altogether absurd and whimsical, yet if they be impertinent and unseasonable, they ought to be dismissed, because they keep out better company.

6. Cast out all wild and extravagant thoughts, all vain and fantastical imaginations. Suffer not your thoughts to roam upon things that never were, and perhaps never will be; to give you a visionary pleasure in the prospect of what you have not the least reason to hope, or a needless pain in the apprehension of what you have not the least reason to fear. The truth is, next to a clear conscience and a found judgment, there is not a greater bleffing than a regular and well governed imagination; to be able to view things as they are, in their true light and proper colours; and to distinguish the false images that are painted on the fancy, from the representations of truth and reason. For how common a thing is it for men, before they are aware, to confound reason and fancy, truth and imagination together? To take the flashes of the animal fpirits for the light of evidence? and think they believe things to be true or false, when they only fancy them to be so? and fancy them to be so, because they would have them so? Not considering that mere fancy is only the ignis fatuus of the mind; which often appears brightest, when the minu is most covered with darkness; and will be fure to lead them astray, who follow it as their guide. Near akin to these are,

7. Romantick and chimerical thoughts. By which I mean that kind of wildfire, which the brifkness of the animal spirits sometimes suddenly slashes on the mind, and excites images that are so extremely ridiculous and abfurd, that one can scarce forbear wondering how they could get admittance. These random flights of the fancy are foon gone; and herein differ from that castle building of the imagination before mentioned, which is a more fettled amusement. But these are too incoherent and fenseless to be of long continuance; and are the maddest fallies, and the most ramping reveries of the fancy that can be. I know not whether my reader understands now what I mean; but if he attentively regards all that paffes through his mind, perhaps he may hereafter by experience.

8. Repel all impure and lascivious thoughts; which taint and pollute the mind; and though hid from men, are known to GOD, in whose eye they are abominable. Our faviour warns us against these as a kind of spiritual fornication (y), and inconsistent with that purity of heart which his gospel requires.

9. Take care how you too much indulge gloomy and melancholy thoughts. Some are disposed to see every thing in the worst light. A black cloud hangs hovering over their minds; which, when it falls in showers through their eyes, is dispersed; and all within is serene again. This is often pure ly mechanical; and owing either to some fault in the bodily constitution, or some accidental diforder in the animal frame. However, one that confults the peace of his own mind will be upon his guard against this, which so often robs him of it.

10. On the other hand, let not the imagination be too sprightly and triumphant. Some are as unrealonably exalted, as others are depressed; and the fame person at different times often runs into both extremes; according to the different temper and flow of the animal spirits. And therefore the thoughts, which so eagerly crowd into the mind at fuch times, ought to be suspected and well guarded; otherwise they will impose upon our judgments and lead us to form fuch a notion of ourselves and of things, as we shall soon see fit to alter, when the mind is in a more settled and sedate frame.

Before we let our thoughts judge of things, we must fet reason to judge our thoughts; for they are not always in a proper condition to execute that office. We do not believe the character which a man gives us of another, unless we have a good opinion of his own; so neither should we believe the verdict which the mind pronounces, till we first examine whether it be impartial and unbiaffed; whether it be in a proper temper to judge, and have proper lights to judge by. The want of this previous act of felf judgment, is the cause of much self deception and false judgment.

Lastly. With abhorrence reject immediately all profane and blafphemous thoughts; which are sometimes

times suddenly injected into the mind, we know not how, though we may give a pretty good guess from whence. And all those thoughts which are apparently temptations and inducements to fin, our Lord hath, by his example, taught us to treat in this manner (z).

These then are the thoughts we should carefully guard against.——And as they will (especially some of them) be frequently infinuating themselves into the heart, remember to set reason at the door of it to guard the passage, and bar their entrance, or drive them out forthwith when entered; not only as impertinent, but mischievous intruders.

But, II. There are other kinds of thoughts which we ought to indulge and with great care and diligence retain and improve.

Whatever thoughts give the mind a rational or religious pleasure, and tend to improve the heart and understanding, are to be favoured, often recalled, and carefully cultivated. Nor should we dismiss them, till they have made some impressions on the mind, which are like to abide there.

And to bring the mind into a habit of recovering, retaining, and improving fuch thoughts, two things are necessary.

- 1. To habituate ourselves to a close and rational way of thinking. And 2. To moral restections and religious contemplations.
- 1. To prepare and dispose the mind for the entertainment of good and useful thoughts, we must take care to accustom it to a close and rational way of thinking.

When you have started a good thought, pursue it; do not presently lose sight of it, or suffer any trisling suggestion that may intervene to divert you from it. Dismiss it not till you have sisted and exhausted it; and well considered the several consequences and inserences that result from it. However, retain not the subject any longer than you find your thoughts run freely upon it; for to consine them to it when it is quite worn out, is to give them an unnatural bent, without sufficient employment; which will make them slag, or be more apt to run off to something else.

And to keep the mind intent on the subject you think of, you must be at some pains to recal and resix your desultory and rambling thoughts. Lay open the subject in as many lights and views as it is capable of being represented in. Clothe your best ideas in pertinent and well chosen words, deliberately pronounced; or commit them to writing.

Whatever be the subject, admit of no inferences from it, but what you see plain and natural. This is the way to surnish the mind with true and solid knowledge. As, on the contrary, false knowledge proceeds from not understanding the subject, or drawing inferences from it which are forced and unnatural; and allowing to those precarious inferences, or consequences drawn from them, the same degree of credibility as to the most rational and best established principles.

Beware

Beware of a superficial, slight, or confused view of things. Go to the bottom of them, and examine the foundation; and be satisfied with none but clear and distinct ideas (when they can be had) in every thing you read, hear, or think of. For resting in imperfect and obscure ideas, is the source of much consusion and mistake.

Accustom yourself to speak naturally, pertinently, and rationally, on all subjects, and you will soon learn to think so on the best; especially if you often converse with those persons that speak, and those authors that write in that manner.

Such a regulation and right management of your thoughts and rational powers, will be of great and general advantage to you, in the pursuit of youthful knowledge, and a good guard against the levities and frantick fallies of the imagination. Nor will you be sensible of any disadvantage attending it, excepting one, viz. its making you more fensible of the weakness and ignorance of others who are often talking in a random, inconfequential manner; and whom it may oftentimes be more prudent to bear with, than contradict. But the vast benefit this method will be of in tracing out truth, and detecting errour, and the fatisfaction it will give you in the cool and regular exercises of self employment, and in the retaining, pursuing, and improving good and useful thoughts, will more than compensate that petty disadvantage.

2. If we would have the mind furnished and entertained with good thoughts, we must inure it to religious and moral subjects.

It It is certain the mind cannot be more nobly and usefully employed than in such kind of contemplations. Because the knowledge it thereby acquires, is of all others the most excellent knowledge; and that both in regard of its object and its end; the object of it being GOD, and the end of it eternal happiness.

The great end of religion is to make us like GOD, and to conduct us to the enjoyment of him. And whatever hath not this plain tendency, and especially if it have the contrary, men may call religion (if they please) but they cannot call it more out of its name. And whatever is called religious knowledge, if it does not direct us in the way to this end, is not religious knowledge; but something else falfely so called. And some are unhappily accustomed to such an abuse of words and understanding, as not only to call, but to think those things religion, which are quite the reverse of it, and those notions religious knowledge, which lead them the farthest from it.

The fincerity of a true religious principle, cannot be better known, than by the readiness with which the thoughts advert to GOD, and the pleasure with which they are employed in devout exercises. And though a person may not always be so well pleased with hearing religious things talked of by others, whose different taste, sentiments, or manner of expression may have something disagreeable; yet is he have no inclination to think of them himself, or to converse with himself about them, he hath great reason to suspect that his heart is not right with GOD. But if he frequently and delightfully exercise his mind in divine contemplations, it will not only be a good mark of his fincerity, but will habitually dispose it for the reception of the best and most useful thoughts, and fit it for the noblest entertainments.

GOD_

Upon the whole then, it is of as great importance for a man to take heed what thoughts he entertains as what company he keeps; for they have the same effect upon the mind. Bad thoughts are as infectious as bad company; and good thoughts folace, instruct, and entertain the mind, like good company. And this is one great advantage of retirement; that a man may choose what company he pleases from within himself.

As in the world we oftener light into bad company than good, so in solitude we are oftener troubled with impertinent and unprofitable thoughts, than entertained with agreeable and useful ones. And a man that hath so far lost the command of himself, as to lie at the mercy of every foolish or vexing thought, is much in the fame fituation as a hoft, whose house is open to all comers; whom, though ever so noify, rude and troublesome, he cannot get rid of; but with this difference, that the latter hath some recompense for his trouble, the former none at all; but is robbed of his peace and quiet for nothing.

Of such vast importance to the peace, as well as the improvement of the mind, is the right regulation of the thoughts. Which will be my apology for dwelling fo long on this branch of the subject; which I shall conclude with this one observation more; that it is a very dangerous thing to think, as too many are apt to do, that it is a matter of indifference what thoughts they entertain in their hearts; fince the reason of things concurs with the testimony of the holy scriptures to assure us, that the allowed thought of folishness is sin*(x).

C H A P. XV.

Concerning the Memory.

XIV. A MAN that knows himself will have a rethoughts, but the improvement of his memory.

The memory is that faculty of the foul, which was defigned for the storehouse or repository of its most useful notions; where they may be laid up in lafety, to be produced upon proper occasions.

Now a thorough felf acquaintance cannot be had without a proper regard to this in two respects. 1. Its furniture. 2. Its improvement.

1. A man that knows himself will have a regard to the furniture of his memory; not to load it with trash and lumber, a set of useless notions or low conceits, conceits, which he will be ashamed to produce before persons of taste and judgment.

Prov. xxiv. 9.

⁽a) Nam scelus inter se tacitum qui cogitat ullum Facti crimen habet. Juv. Sat. 14. Guard well thy thoughts; our thoughts are heard in heav'a.

If the retention be bad, do not crowd it. It is of as ill confequence to overload a weak memory, as a weak stomach. And that it may not be cumbered with trash, take heed what company you keep, what books you read, and what thoughts you favour; otherwise a great deal of useless rubbish may fix there before you are aware, and take up the room which ought to be possessed by better notions. But let not a valuable thought slip from you, though you pursue it with much time and pains before you overtake it. The regaining and refixing it may be of more avail to you than many hours reading.

What pity it is that men should take such immense pains, as some do, to learn those things which, as soon as they become wise, they must take as much pains to unlearn!—A thought that should make us very curious and cautious about the proper furniture of our minds.

2. Self knowledge will acquaint a man with the extent and capacity of his memory, and the right way to improve it (y).

There is no small art in improving a weak memory, so as to turn it to as great an advantage as many do theirs which are much stronger. A few short rules

(y) Tribus rebus potissimum constat optima memoria, intellectu, ordine, cura, siquidem bona memorize pars est rem penitus intellexisse; tum, ordo sacit, ut quæ semel exciderent, quasi postliminio in animum revocamus; porro eura omnibus in rebus, non hic tantum plurimum valet. Brasm, de rat. stud. ad calc. Ringelbergii, p. 168. rules to this purpose may be no unprofitable digression.

- 1. Beware of every fort of intemperance in the indulgence of the appetites and passions. Excesses of all kinds do a great injury to the memory.
- 2. If it be weak, do not overlade it. Charge it only with the most useful and solid notions. A small vessel should not be stuffed with lumber. But if its freight be precious, and judiciously stowed, it may be more valuable than a ship of twice its burden.
- 3. Recur to the help of a common place book, according to Mr. Locke's method; and review it once a year. But take care that by confiding to your minutes or memorial aids, you do not excuse the labour of the memory; which is one disadvantage attending this method.
- 4. Take every opportunity of uttering your best thoughts in conversation, when the subject will admit it; that will deeply imprint them. Hence the tales which common story tellers relate, they never forget, though ever so filly. (2)
- 5. Join to the idea you would remember, some other that is more familiar to you, which bears some fimilitude to it, either in its nature, or in the sound of

(2) Quicquid didiceris id confestim doceas; sic et tua sirmare, et prodesse aliis potes. Ringelbergius de ratione studii, p. 23.

Postremo illud non ad unum aliquid, sed ad omnia simul plurimum conducet, si frequenter alios quoque doceas. Nusquam enim melius deprehenderis quid intelliges, quid non. Atque interim nova quæque occurent, commentanti differentique, nihil non altius insigitur animo, Erasin. Rot, de rat. stud. p. 170. of the word by which it is expressed; or that hath some relation to it either in time or place. And then by recalling this, which is easily remembered, you will, (by that concatenation or connection of ideas which Mr. Locke takes notice of) draw in that which is thus linked or joined with it; which otherwise you might hunt after in vain.—This rule is of excellent use to help you to remember names.

- 6. What you are determined to remember, think of before you go to sleep at night, and the first thing in the morning when the faculties are fresh. And recollect at evening every thing worth remembering the day past.
- 7. Think it not enough to furnish this store-house of the mind with good thoughts, but lay them up there in order, digested or ranged under proper subjects or classes; that whatever subject you have occasion to think or talk upon, you may have recourse immediately to a good thought which you heretofore laid up there under that subject. So that the very mention of the subject may bring the thought to hand; by which means you will carry a regular common place book in your memory. And it may not be amiss sometimes to take an inventory of this mental furniture, and recollect how many good thoughts you have treasured up under such particular subjects, and whence you had them.

Lastly. Nothing helps the memory more than often thinking, writing or talking on those subjects you would remember.—But enough of this.

CHAP.

CHAP. XVI.

Concerning the Mental Tafte.

AN MAN that knows himself, is fensible of, and attentive to the particular taste of his mind, especially in matters of religion.

As thelate Mr. Howe judiciously observes, "there is befide bare understanding and judgment, and diverse from that heavenly gift, which in the scripture is called grace, fuch a thing as guft and relift belonging to the mind of man, (and, I doubt not, with all men, if they observe themselves) and which are as unaccountable, and as various as the relishes and disgusts of sense. This they only wonder at who understand not themselves, or will consider nobody but themselves .- So that it cannot be said univerfally, that it is a better judgment, or more grace that determines men the one way or the other; but fomewhat in the temper of their minds distinct from both, which I know not how better to express than by MENTAL TASTE .- And this hath no more of mystery in it, than that there is such a thing belonging to our natures as complacency and difplacency in reference to the objects of the mind. And this, in the kind of it, is as common to men as human nature; but as much diversified in individuals as men's other inclinations are." (a)

Now this different tafte in matters relating to religion, (though it may be sometimes natural or what is born with a man, yet) generally arises from the difference difference of education and custom. And the true reason why some persons have an inveterate disrelish to certain circumstantials of religion, though ever fo justifiable, and at the same time a fixed esteem for others that are more exceptionable, may be no better than what I have heard some very honestly profess, viz. that the one they have been used to, and the other not. As a person by long use and habit acquires a greater relish for coarse and unwholesome food than the most delicate diet; fo a person long habituated to a set of phrases, notions, and modes, may, by degrees, come to have fuch a veneration and esteem for them as to despise and condemn others which he has not been accustomed to, though perhaps more edifying and more agreeable to scripture and reason.

⁽a) See his humble request both to conformists and dissenters.

This particular taste in matters of religion differs very much (as Mr. Howe well observes) both from judgment and grace.

However, it is often mistaken for both: When it is mistaken for the former, it leads to errour; when mistaken for the latter, to censoriousness.

This different taste of mental objects is much the same with that, which, with regard to the objects of sense we call fancy; for as one man cannot be said to have a better judgment in food than another, purely because he likes some kind of meats better than he; so neither can he be said to have a better judgment in matters of religion purely because he hath a greater fondness for some particular doctrines and forms.

But though this mental taste be not the same as the judgment, yet it often draws the judgment to it; and sometimes very much perverts it.

This appears in nothing more evidently than in the judgment people pass upon the sermons they hear. Some are best pleased with those discourses which are pathetich and warming, others with what is more folid and rational, and others with the fublime and mystical; nothing can be too plain for the taste of some, or too refined for that of others. Some are for having the address only to their reason and understanding, others only to their affections and passions, and others to their experience and consciences. And every hearer or reader is apt to judge according to his particular taste, and to esteem him the best preacher or writer who pleases him most; without examining first his own particular taste, by which he judgeth.

It is natural indeed for every one to defire to have his own taste pleased, but it is unreasonable in him to set it up as the best, and make it a test and standard to others. But much more unreasonable to expect that he who speaks in publick should always speak to his taste; which might as reasonably be expected by another of a different one. It is equally impossible that what is delivered to a multitude of hearers should alike suit all their tastes, as that a single dish, though prepared with ever so much art and exactness, should equally please a great variety of appetites; among which there may be some, perhaps, very nice and sickly.

It is the preacher's duty to adapt his subjects to the taste of his hearers, as far as fidelity and conscience will admit : because it is well known from reason and experience, as well as from the advice and practice of the apostle Paul, (b) that this is the best way to promote their edification. But if their taste be totally vitiated, and incline them to take in that which will do them more harm than good, and to relish poison more than food, the most charitable thing the preacher can do in that case is, to endeavourite correct so vicious an appetite, which loathes that which is most wholesome, and craves pernicious food; this, I say, it is his duty to attempt in the most gentle and prudent manner he can, though he run the risk of having his judgment or orthodoxy called into question by them, as it very possibly may; for commonly they are the most arbitrary and unmerciful judges in this case, who are least of all qualified for that office.

There is not perhaps a more unaccountable weakness in human nature than this, that with regard to religious matters our animolities are generally greatest where our differences are least; they who come pretty near to our standard, but stop short there, are more the objects of our disgust and censure, than they who continue at the greatest distance from it. And in some cases it requires much much candour and self command to get over this weakness. To whatever secret spring in the human mind it may be owing, I shall not stay to inquire; but the thing itself is too obvious not to be taken notice of.

⁽b) Rom. xv. 2. Let every one of us please his neighbour for his good to edification. I Cor. ix. 22. To the weak, became I as weak, that I might gain the weak : I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means fave fome.

Now we should all of us be careful to find out and examine our proper tafte of religious things; that if it be a false one, we may rectify it; if a bad one, mend it; if a right and good one, strengthen and improve it. For the mind is capable of a false gust, as well as the palate; and comes by it the fame way; viz. by being long used to unnatural relishes, which by custom become grateful. And having found out what it is, and examined it by the test of scripture, reason and conscience, if it be not very wrong, let us indulge it, and read those books that are most suited to it, which for that reason will be most edifying. But at the same time let us take care of two things, 1. That it do not bias our judgment, and draw us into errour. 2. That it do not cramp our charity, and lead us to cenforiousness.

CHAP. XVII.

Of our great and governing Views in Life.

XVI. A NOTHER part of felf knowledge is, to know what are the great ends for which we live.

We must consider what is the ultimate scope we drive at; the general maxims and principles we live by; or whether we have not yet determined our end, and are governed by no fixed principles; or by fuch as we are ashamed to own.

The first and leading dictate of prudence is, "that a man propose to himself his true and best interest for his end; and the next is that he make use of all those means and opportunities whereby that end is to be obtained. This is the most effectual way that I know of to fecure to one's felf the character of a wife man here, and the reward of one hereafter. And between these two there is such a close connexion, that he who does not do the latter, cannot be supposed to intend the former. He that is not careful of his actions shall never persuade me that he seriously proposes to himself his best interest, as his end; for if he did, he would as feriously apply himself to the other, as the means." (c)

There are few that live fo much at random as not to have some main end in eye; something that influences their conduct, and is the great object of their pursuit and hope. A man cannot live without some leading views; a wife man will always know what they are, whether it is fit he should be led by them or no; whether they be fuch as his understanding and reason approve, or only such as fancy and inclination fuggest. He will be as much concerned to all with reason, as to talk with reason; as much ashamed of a solecism and contradiction in his character, as in his conversation.

Where do our views centre? In this world we are in; or that we are going to ? If our hopes - and joys centre here, it is a mortifying thought, that we are every day departing from our hoppiness: but if they are fixed above, it is a joy to think that we are every day drawing nearer to the object of our highest wishes.

Is our main care to appear great in the eye of man; or good in the eye of GOD? If the former, we expose ourselves to the pain of a perpetual disappointment. For it is much if the envy of men do not rob us of a good deal of our just praise, or if our vanity will be content with that portion of it they allow us. But if the latter be our main care, if our chief view is to be approved of GOD, we are laying up a fund of the most lasting and solid fatisfactions. Not to fay that this is the truest way to appear great in the eye of men; and to conciliate the esteem of all those whose praise is worth our with.

"Be this then, O my foul, thy wife and steady pursuit; let this circumscribe and direct thy views; be this a law to thee, from which account it a fin to depart, whatever difrespect or contempt it may expose thee to from others (d); be this the character thou resolvest to live up to, and at all times to maintain both in publick and private (e), viz. a friend

(a) Οσα ωρολιθέλαι, τέλοις ως νομόις, και ως, ασεξησων αν σσαραβης τι τελων εμμενε. Ολι δ' αν ερη τις wepl σ & μη επιςρεφε. Epict. Ench. cap. 74 .- What you have once wifely proved flick to, as a law not to be violated' without guilt. And mind not what others fay of you.

(e) Ταξου τινα ηδη χαρακίπρα σεαύίω, και τυπον, ου φυλάξης επι τε σεαύν, και αυθρωποις ενθυχανων. Idem. cap. 40 .- Fix your character, and keep to it; whether alone or in company.

friend and lover of God; in whose favour thou centerest all thy present and future hopes. Carry this view with thee through life, and dare not in any instance to act inconsistently with it."

CHAP. XVIII.

How to know the true State of our Souls; and whether we are fit to die.

ASTLY, The most important point of felf knowledge, after all, is to know the true state of our souls towards GOD; and in what condition we are to die.

These two things are inseparably connected in their nature, and therefore I put them together. The knowledge of the former will determine the latter, and is the only thing that can determine it; for no man can tell whether he is fit for death, till he is acquainted with the true state of his own foul.

This now is a matter of such vast moment, that it is amazing any confiderate man, or any one who thinks what it is to die, can be fatisfied, fo long as it remains an uncertainty. Let us trace out this important point then with all possible plainness; and see if we cannot come to some satisfaction in it upon the most folid principles.

In order to know then whether we are fit to die, we must first know what it is that fits us for death. ----And the answer to this is very natural and easy; 12 easy; viz. that only fits us for death, that fits us for happiness after death.

This is certain. But the question returns. What is it that fits us for happiness after death?

Now in answer to this, there is a previous question necessary to be determined; viz. What that haptinefs is ?

It is not a fool's paradife, or a Turkish dream of sensitive gratifications. It must be a happiness suited to the nature of the foul, and what it is capable of enjoying in a state of separation from the body. And what can that be, but the enjoyment of GOD, the best of beings, and the author of ours?

The question then comes to this; What is that which fits us for the enjoyment of GOD, in the future state of separate spirits?

And methinks we may bring this matter to a very fure and short issue; by faying it is that which makes us like to him now .--- This only is our proper qualification for the enjoyment of him after death, and therefore our only proper preparation for death. For how can they, who are unlike to GOD here, expect to enjoy him hereafter? And if they have not just ground to hope that they shall enjoy GOD in the other world, how are they fit to die?

So that the great question, Am I fit to die? Refolves itself into this, Am I like to GOD? For it is this only that fits me for heaven, and that which fits me for heaven, is the only thing that fits me for death.

Let this point then be well fearched into, and examined very deliberately and impartially.

Most certain it is, that GOD can take no real complacency in any but those that are like him; and it is as certain, that none but those that are like him can take pleasure in him. --- But GOD is a most pure and holy being; a being of infinite love, mercy and patience; whose righteousness is invariable, whose veracity inviolable, and whose wisdom unerring. These are the moral attributes of the divine being, in which he requires us to imitate him; the express lineaments of the divine nature, in which all good men bear a refemblance to him; and for the fake of which only they are the objects of his delight: For GOD can love none but those that bear this impress of his own image on their fouls. Do we find then these visible traces of the divine image there? Can we make out our likeness to him in his holiness, goodness, mercy, righteousness, truth and wisdom? If so, it is certain, we are capable of enjoying Him, and are the proper objects of his love. --- By this we know we are fit to die; because by this we know we are fit for happiness after death.

Thus then, if we are faithful to our consciences, and impartial in the examination of our lives and tempers, we may foon come to a right determination of this important question, What is the true flate of our fouls towards GOD? and in what condition we are to die?* Which as it is the most important, so it is the last instance of felf knowledge I shall mention: And with it close the first part of this subject.

^{* &}quot; Nor do I apprehend the knowledge of our state (call it affurance if you please) to uncommon and extraordinary a thing as

Some are apt to imagine. Understand by affurance and satisfactory evidence of the thing, fuch as excludes all reasonable doubts and disquieing fears of the contrary, though, it may be, not all transient fufpicions and jealoufies. And fuch an affurance and certainty multitudes have attained, and enjoy the comfort of; and indeed it is of fo high importance, that it is a wonder any thoughtful christian that believes in eternity can be easy one week or day without it. Bennet's Chrift. Orat. pag. 569.

e guardhadatha has now he

A

TREATISE

OF

SELF KNOWLEDGE.

PART II.

Shewing the great Excellency and Advantages of this Kind of Science.

AVING in the former part of the subject laid open some of the main branches of self knowledge, or pointed out the principal things which a man ought to be acquainted with, relating to himself; I am now, reader, to lay before you the excellency and usefulness of this kind of knowledge, as an inducement to labour after it, by a detail of the several great advantages attending it, which shall be recounted in the sollowing chapters.

CHAP.

CHAP. I.

Self Knowledge the Spring of Self Poffession.

I. ONE great advantage of felf knowledge is, that it gives a man the trueft and most constant self posfession.

A man that is endowed with this excellent knowledge is calm and eafy.

1. Under affronts and defamation. For he thinks thus: "I am fure I know myself better than any man can pretend to know me. This calumniator hath, indeed, at this time missed his mark and shot his arrows at random; and it is my comfort, that my conscience acquits me of his angry imputation. However, there are worse crimes which he might more justly accuse me of; which, though hid from him, are known to myself. Let me set about reforming them; lest, if they come to his notice, he should attack me in a more desenceless part, find something to fasten his obloquy, and fix a lasting reproach upon my character (f).

There is a great deal of truth and good sense in that common saying and dostrine of the Stoicks, though they might carry it too far, that it is not things things but thoughts that diffurb and hurt us (g). Now as felf acquaintance teaches a man the right government of the thoughts (as is shewn above, Part I. Chap. XIV.) it will help him to expel all anxious, tormenting and fruitless thoughts, and retain the most quieting and useful ones; and so keep all easy within. Let a man but try the experiment, and he will find, that a little resolution will make the greatest part of the difficulty vanish.

(f) Ear τις σοι απαίγειλη, οδι ο δεινα σε κακως λεγει, μη απολογε ωρος τα λεχθενία αλλ' αποκρινε, οδι ηγύσει γαρ τα αλλα ωροσούλα μοι κακα, επέι εκ αν ταυθα μονα ελεγεν. Epicl. Ench. cap. 48.——If you are told that another reviles you, do not go about to vindicate your felf, but reply thus: My other faults I find are hid from him, elfe I should have beard of them too.

2. Self knowledge will be a good ballast to the mind under any accidental hurry or disorder of the passions. It curbs their impetuosity; puts the reins into the hands of reason, quells the rising storm, ere it makes shipwreck of the conscience; and teaches a man

(g) Ταρασσει της ανθρωπης, η τα ωραγμαζα, αλλα τα ωερι των πραγμαζων δογμαζα. Id. cap. 10. It is not things, but mens' opinions of things that disturb them.

Μεμινησο οι ουκο λοιδορων η τυπίων υξριζει, αλλα το δογμα το σερι τουίων ως υξριζονίων, id. cap. 27. Remember, it is not be that reviles or affaults you, that injures you, but your thinking that they have injured you. — Σε γαρ αλλος ου βλαψει, αν μη συ θελης τοίε δε εση βεξλαμμενος, διαν υπολαξης βλαπίεσθαι. Id. p. 37. No man can burt you unless you please to let him; then only are you burt when you think yourself so.

Τα τραγμαία ουκ απίείαι της ψυχης, αλλ' εζω εςηκεν αιρεμουνία αι δε οχλησεις, εκ μονης τμς ενδου υποληψεως. Marc. Anton. Med. lib. 4. § 3. Things do not touch the mind, but stand quietly without; the vexation comes from within, from our suspicions only.——Again, Τα πραγμαία αυία εδ' οπωςιεν ψυχης αμιείαι αδε εχει εισοδον προς ψυχην εδε τρεψαι εδε κινησαι ψυχην δυναίαι τρεπει δε και κινει αυίη εαυίην μονη. Id. lib. 5. § 19. Things themselves cannot affect the mind; for the bave no entrance into it, to turn and move it. It is the mind alone that turns and moves itself.

man to leave off contention before it be meddled with, * it being much fafer to keep the lion chained than to encounter it in its full strength and fury. And thus will a wife man, for his own peace, deal with the passions of others, as well as his own.

Self knowledge, as it acquaints a man with his weakneffes and worst qualities, will be his guard against them; and a happy counterballance to the faults and excelles of his natural temper.

- 3. It will keep the mind fedate and calm under the surprise of bad news. or afflicting providences.
- " For am I not a creature of GOD? And my life and comforts, are they not wholly at his disposal, from whom I have received them; and by whose favour I have so long enjoyed them; and by whose mercy and goodness I have still so many left?

A heathen can teach me, under fuch losses of friends, or estate, or any comfort, to direct my eyes to the hand of GOD, by whom it was lent me, and is now recalled; that I ought not to fay, it is lost but restored. And though I be injuriously deprived of it, still the hand of GOD is to be acknowledged; for what is it to me, by what means, he that gave me that bleffing, takes it from me again (h).

He that rightly knows him jelf will live every day dependent on the divine author of his mercies, for the continuance and enjoyment of them. And will learn from a higher authority than that of a heathen moralist, that he hath nothing he can properly call his own, or ought to depend upon as such. That he is but a fleward employed to dispense the good things he possesses, according to the direction of his Lord, at whose pleasure he holds them; and to whom he should be ready at any time cheerfully to resign them, Luke xvi. 1.

4. Self knowledge will help a man to preserve an equanimity and self possession under all the various scenes of adversity and prosperity.

Both have their temptations: To some the temps tations of prosperity are the greatest; to others, those of adversity. Self knowledge shews a man which of these are the greatest to him: And, at the apprehension of them, teaches him to arm himself accordingly that nothing may deprive him of his constancy and self possession, or lead him to act unbecoming the man, or the christian.

We commonly say, no one knows what he can bear till he is tried. And many persons verify the observation, by bearing evils much better than they feared. Nay, the apprehension of an approaching evil often gives a man a greater pain than the evil itself. This is owing to inexperience and self ignorance.

A man that knows himself, his own strength and weakness, is not so subject as others, to the melancholy presages of the imagination; and whenever they intrude, he makes no other use of them than to take the warning, collect himself, and prepare for the coming evil; leaving the degree, duration, and the issue of it with him, who is the sovereign disposer of all events, in a quiet dependence on his power, wisdom and goodness.

Such felf possession is one great effect and advantage of felf knowledge. CHAP.

C H A P. II.

Self Knowledge leads to a wife and steady Conduct.

II. A S felf knowledge will keep a man calm and equal in his temper, fo it will make him wife and cautious in his conduct.

A precipitant and rash conduct is ever the effect of a consused and irregular hurry of thought. So that when by the influence of self knowledge, the thoughts become cool, sedate and rational, the conduct will be so too. It will give a man that even, steady and uniform behaviour in the management of his affairs, that is so necessary for the dispatch of business; and prevent many disappointments and troubles which arise from the unsuccessful execution of immature or ill judged projects.

In short, most of the troubles which men meet with in the world may be traced up to this source, and resolved into self ignorance. We may complain of providence, and complain of men; but the fault, if we examine it, will commonly be sound to be our own. Our imprudence, which arises from self ignorance, either brings our troubles upon us, or increases them. Want of temper and conduct will make any affliction double.

What a long train of difficulties do sometimes proceed from one wrong step in our conduct, into which self ignorance or inconsideration betrayed us? And every evil that befals us in consequence of that, we are to charge upon ourselves.

CHAP.

C H A P. III.

Humility the Effect of Self Knowledge.

III. RUE felf knowledge always produces humility.

Pride is ever the offspring of felf ignorance. The reason men are vain and self sufficient is, because they do not know their own failings; and the reason they are not better acquainted with them is, because they hate self inspection. Let a man but turn his eyes within, scrutinize himself, and study his own heart, and he will soon see enough to make him humble. Behold I am vile,* is the language only of self knowledge (i).

Whence is it that young people are generally so vain, self sufficient and assured, but because they have taken no time or pains to cultivate a self acquaintance? And why does pride and stiffness appear so often in advanced age, but because men grow old in self ignorance? A moderate degree of self knowledge would cure an inordinate degree of self complacency (k).

Humility is not more necessary to salvation, than self knowledge is to humility (1).

* Job xi. 4.

(i) Qui bene seipsum cognoscit sibi ipsi vilescit, nec laudibus dilectatur humanis. Tho. à Kemp. de Imit. Chr. lib. 1. cap. 2.

(k) Quanto quis minus se videt, tanto minus sibi displicet. Greg.

(1) Scio neminem absque sui cognitione salvari, de quâ nimirum mater salutis, humilitas oritur, et timor domini. Bernard.—— Utraque cognitio Dei, scilicet et tui, tibi necessaria est ad salutem; quia sicut ex notitià tui venit in te timor Dei, atque ex Dei notitia itidem amor; sic è contra, ex ignorantia tui superbia, ac de Dei ignorantia venit desperatio. Idem. in Cantic.

It would effectually prevent that bad disposition which is too apt to steal upon, and infect some of the best human minds (especially those who aim at singular and exalted degrees of piety) viz. a religious vanity or spiritual pride; which without a good deal of self knowledge and self attention will gradually infinuate into the heart, taint the mind, and sophisticate our virtues before we are aware; and in proportion to its prevalence make the christian temper degenerate into the Pharisaical.

" Might I be allowed to choose my own lot, I fhould think it much more eligible to want my spiritual comforts, than to abound in these at the expense of my humility. No; let a penitent and contrite spirit be always my portion; and may I ever fo be the favourite of heaven, as never to forget that I am the chief of finners. Knowledge in the subtime and glorious mysteries of the christian faith, and ravishing contemplations of GOD and a future itate, are most desirable advantages; but still I prefer charity which edifieth before the highest intellectual perfections of that knowledge which puffeth up.* ---Those spiritual advantages are certainly best for us, which increase our modesty and awaken our caution, and dispose us to suspect and deny ourselves .- The highest in GOD's esteem, are meanest in their own. And their excellency confists in the meekness and truth, not in the pomp and oftentation tentation of piety which affects to be seen and admired of men (m)."

CHAP.

(m) Stanhope's Tho. à Kemp. B. 2. ch. 11.

[CHRIST.] " My fon, when thou feelest thy foul warmed with devotion and holy zeal for my fervice, it will be advisable to decline all those methods of publishing it to the world, which vain men are fo industrious to take, and content thyself with its being known to GOD and thine own conscience. Rather endeavour to moderate and suppress those pompous expressions of it, in which some place the very perfection of zeal. Think meanly of thy own virtues .-- Some men, of a bold, ungoverned zeal, aspire at things beyond their ftrength, and express more vehemence than conduct in their actions. They are perfectly carried out of themselves with eagerness; forget that they are fill poor infects upon earth, and think of nothing less than building their nest in heaven. Now these are often left to themselves, and taught by sad experience, that the faint flutterings of men are weak and ineffectual; and that none foars to heaven except I affift his flight, and mount him on my own wings .-- Virtue does not confift in abundance of illumination and knowledge; but in lowliness of mind, in meekness and charity; in a mind intirely refigned to GOD, and fincerely disposed to serve and clease him; in a just sense of every man's viteness; and not only thinking very meanly of one's felf, but being well content to be fo thought of by others. Id. book. 3. chap. 8.

It is a dangerous drunkenness, I coases, that of wine; but there is another more dangerous. How many souls do I see in the world drunk with vanity, and a high opinion of themselves? This drunkenness causes them to make a thousand false steps, and a thousand stumbles. Their ways are all oblique and crooked. Like men in drink, they have always a great opinion of their own wisdom, their power, and their prudence; all which often fail them.—

Examine well thyself, my soul; see if thou art not tainted with this evil. Alas! if thou deniest it, thou provest it. It is great pride to think one has no pride; for it is to think you are as good indeed, as you esteem yourself. But there is no man in the world but esteems himself better than he truly is.

C H A P. IV.

Charity another Effect of Self Knowledge.

IV. SELF Knowledge greatly promotes a spirit of meekness and charity.

The more a man is acquainted with his own failings, the more he is disposed to make allowances for those of others. The knowledge he hath of himself, will incline him to be as severe in his animadversions on his own conduct, as he is on that of others; and as candid to their faults as he is to his own.*

There is an uncommon beauty, force, and propriety in that caution which our faviour gives us, And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, let me pull out the mote out of thine eye, and behold the beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye, † In which words these four things are

Thou wilt say, it may be, thou hast a very ill opinion of thyself. But be assered, my soul, thou dost not despise thyself so much as thou art truly despicable. If thou dost despise thyself indeed, thou makest a merit of that very thing; so that pride is attached to this very contempt of thyself." Jurieu's Method of Devotion, p. 1. ch. 10.

* "The great GOD feems to have given that commandment (KNOW THYSELF) to those men more especially, who are apt to make remarks on other men's actions, and forget themselves." Plutarch's Mor. Vol. I. p. 273.

† Matt. vii. 3-5.

are plainly intimated; 1. That some are much more quick sighted to discern the faults and blemishes of others, than their own: Can spy a mote in another's eye, sooner than a beam in their own. 2. That they are often the most forward to correct and cure the soibles of others, who are most unqualified for that office. The beam in their own eye makes them altogether unsit to pull out the mote from their brother's. A man half blind himself should never set up for an Oculist. 3. That they who are inclined to deal in censure should always begin at home.

4. Great censoriousness is great hypocrify. Thou hypocrite, &c. all this is nothing but the effect of wo-ful self ignorance.

This common failing of the human nature, the heathens were very sensible of (n); and imaged it in the following manner: Every man, say they, carries a wallet, or two bags with him; the one hanging before him, and the other behind him; into that before, he puts the faults of others; into that behind, his own; by which means he never

Stultus et improbus hic amor est, dignusque notari.

Cum sua prævideas ocu is mala lippus inunclis,

Cur in amicorum vitiis tam cernis acutum,

Quâm aut aquila, aut Serpens Epidaurius?

Hor. Sat. 3. lib. 1.

Fit enim, nescio quomodo, ut magis in aliis cernamus quam in nobismet ipsis, siquid delinquitur. Cicero.

fees his own failings, whilft he has those of others always before his eyes. (0)

But felf knowledge now helps us to turn this wallet; and place that which hath our own faults before our eyes, and that which hath in it those of others, behind our back. A very necessary regulation this if we would behold our own faults in the same light in which they do. For we must not expect that others will be as blind to our foibles as we ourselves are. They will carry them before their eyes, whether we do, or no. And to imagine that the world takes no notice of them, because we do not, is just as wise as to fancy that others do not see us, because we shut our eyes.

CHAP. V.

Moderation the Effect of Self Knowledge.

V. A NOTHER genuine offspring of felf knowledge is moderation.

This indeed can hardly be conceived to be separate from that of meekness and charity beforementioned; but I choose to give it a distinct mention, because I consider it under a different view and operation, viz. as that which guards and influences our spirits in all matters of debate and controversy.

Moderation

(0) Sed præcedenti spectatur mantica tergo. Per. Sat. 4.
Non videmus id manticæ quod in tergo est. Catul. Carm. 22.

Nostram peram non videntes, aliorum (juxta Persium) manticam consideramus. D. Hieren. Epist. 91.

Moderation is a great and important christian virtue, very different from that bad quality of the mind under which it is often mifrepresented and disguised, viz. lukewarmness and indifference about the truth. The former is very confistent with a regular and well corrected zeal, the latter confifts in the total want of it; the former is sensible of, and indeavours with peace and prudence to maintain the dignity and importance of divine doctrines, the latter hath no manner of concern about them; the one feels the fecret influences of them, the other is quite a stranger to their power and efficacy; the one laments in secret the fad decay of vital religion the other is an instance of it. In short, the one proceeds from true knowledge, the other from great ignorance; the one is a good mark of fincerity, and the other a certain fign of hypocrify. And to confound two things together, which are so esfentially different, can be the effect of nothing but great ignorance, inconfideration, or an overheated, injudicious zeal.

A self knowing man can easily distinguish between these two. And the knowledge which he has of human nature in general, from a thorough contemplation of his own in particular, shews him the necessity of preserving a medium (as in every thing else, so especially) between the two extremes of a bigotted zeal on the one hand, and indolent lukewarmness on the other. As he will not look upon every thing to be worth contending for, so he will look upon nothing worth losing his temper for in the contention contention; because, though the truth be of ever so great importance, nothing can do a greater disservice to it, or make a man more incapable of defending it, than intemperate heat and passion; whereby he injures and betrays the cause he is over anxious to maintain. The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of GOD.*

Self knowledge heals our animofities, and greatly cools our debates about matters of dark and doubtful speculation. One who knows himself fets too great a value upon his time and temper, to plunge rashly into those vain and fruitless controversies, in which one of them is sure to be lost, and the other in great danger of being fo; especially when a man of bad temper and bad principles is the opponent; who aims rather to filence his adversary with over bearing confidence, dark unmeaning language, authoritative airs, and hard words, than convince him with folid argument; and who plainly contends not for truth but victory. Little good can be done to the best cause in such a circumstance. And a wife and moderate man who knows human nature; and knows himself, will rather give his antagonist the pleasure of an imaginary triumph, than engage in fo unequal a combat.

An eagerness and zeal for dispute, on every subject, and with every one, shews great self sufficiency; that never failing sign of great self ignorance. And true moderation, which creates an indifference to little things, and a wise and well proportioned zeal for things of importance, can proceed

from

from nothing but true knowledge, which has its foundation in felf acquaintance.

CHAP. VI.

Self Knowledge improves the Judgment.

VI. A NOTHER great advantage of being well acquainted with ourfelves is, that it helps us to form a better judgment of other things.

Self knowledge indeed does not inlarge or increase our natural capacities, but it guides and regulates them; leads us to the right use and application of them; and removes a great many things which obstruct their due exercise, as pride, prejudice, and passion, &c. which oftentimes miserably pervert the rational powers.

He that hath taken a just measure of himself, is thereby better able to judge of other things.

ture better.—For human nature, fetting aside the difference of natural genius, and the improvements of education and religion, is pretty much the same in all. There are the same passions and appetites, the same natural infirmities and inclinations in all mankind; though some are more predominant and distinguishable in some, than they are in others. So that if a man be but well acquainted with his own, this, together with a very little observation on human life, will soon discover to him those of other men; and shew him very impartially their particular particular failings and excellencies, and help him to form a much truer fentiment of them, than if he were to judge only by their exterior, the appearance they make in the eye of the world, or the character given of them by others; both which are often very fallacious.

- 2. Self knowledge will teach us to judge rightly of facts as well as men. It will exhibit things to the mind in a proper light, and true colours, without those false glosses and appearances which fancy throws upon them, or in which the imagination often paints them. It will teach us to judge not with the imagination, but with the understanding; and will set a guard upon the former, which so often represents things in wrong views, and gives the mind false impressions. See Part I. Chap. IV.
- 3 It helps us to estimate the true value of all worldly good things. It rectifies our notions of them, and lessens that enormous esteem we are apt to have for them. For when a man knows himself, and his true interest, he will see how far, and in what degree, these things are suitable to him, and subservient to his good; and how far they are unsuitable, infnaring, and pernicious. This, and not the common opinion of the world, will be his rule of judgment concerning them. By this he will see quite through them; see what they really are at bottom; and how far a wise man ought to desire them. The reason why men value them so extravagantly is, because they take but a superficial view of them, and only look upon their outside, where they are most showy and inviting. Were they to look within them, consider their intrinsick worth, their ordinary effects, their tendency and their end, they would not be fo apt to over value them. And a man that has learned to fee through himfelf can eafily see through these. (p)

CHAP. VII.

Self Knowledge directs to the proper Exercise of Self Denial.

MAN that knows himself best, knows how, A and wherein, he ought to deny himself.

The great duty of felf denial, which our Saviour fo expressly requires of all his followers, plain and necessary as it is, has been much mistaken and abused; and that not only by the church of Rome, in their doctrines of penance, fasts and pilgrimages,

(p) Abstrahunt a rect divitize, honores, potentia, et cætera quæ opinione noftra chara funt, precio suo vilia. Nescimus æftibmare res : de quibus, non cum fama fed cum rerum natura, deliberandum eft. Nihil habent ifta magnificum, quo mentes in fe nestras trahant, præter hoc quod mirari illa consuevimus. Non enim, quia concupifcenda funt, laudantur, fed concupifcuntur quia laudata funt. Sen. Epift. 82 .- Riches, bonours, porver. and the like, which owe all their worth to our false opinion of them, are too apt to draw the heart from virtue. We know not bow to prize them; they are not to be judged of by the common voque, but by their own nature. They have nothing to attract our effeem, but that we are used to admire them; they are not cried up because they are things that ought to be defired, but they are defired because they are generally cried up.

but by some protestant christians in the instances of voluntary abstinence and unnecessary austerities. Whence they are sometimes apt to be too censorious against those who indulge themselves in the use of those indifferent things, which they make it a point of conscience to abstain from. Whereas, would they confine their exercise of self denial to the plain and important points of christian practice, devoutly performing the necessary duties they are most averse to, and resolutely avoiding the known fins they are most inclined to, under the direction of scripture, they would soon become more folid, judicious, and exemplary christians; and did they know themselves, they would easily fee that herein there is occasion and scope enough for self denial; and that to a degree of greater severity and difficulty than there is in those little corporal abstinences and mortifications they enjoin themselves.

1. Self knowledge will direct us to the necessary exercises of self denial, with regard to the duties our tempers are most averse to.

There is no one, but, at some times, find a great backwardness and indisposition to some duties which he knows to be feasonable and necessary. This then is a proper occasion for self discipline. For to indulge this indisposition is very dangerous, and leads to an habitual neglect of known duty; and to refift and oppose it, and to prepare for a diligent and faithful discharge of the duty, notwithstanding the many pleas and excuses that carnai disposition may urge for the neglest of it, this requires no small pains and self denial; and yet it is very necessary to the peace of conscience.

As for our encouragement to this piece of felf denial, we need only remember that the difficulty of the duty, and our unfitness for it, will, upon the trial, be found to be much less than we apprehended. And the pleasure of reflecting, that we have discharged our consciences, and given a fresh teftimony of our uprightness, will more than compenfate the pains and difficulty we found therein. And the oftener the criminal propensions to the wilful neglect of duty are opposed and conquered, the feldomer will they return, or the weaker will they grow. Till at last, by divine grace, they will be wholly overcome; and in the room of them will fucceed an habitual readiness to every good work,* and a very fensible delight therein: A much happier effect than can be expected from the feverelt exercises of self denial, in the instances before mentioned.

2. A man that knows himself will see an equal necessity for self denial, in order to check and control his inclinations to finful actions: To subdue the rebel within; to rest the solicitations of sense and appetite; to summon all his wisdom to avoid the occasions and temptations to sin, and all his strength to oppose it.

All this (especially if it be a favourite constitutional iniquity) will cost a man pains and mortification enough. For instance, the subduing a violent passion, or taming a sensual inclination, or forgiving an apparent injury and affront. It is evident, such a self conquest can never be attained without much felf knowledge and felf denial.

And that felf denial that is exercised this way, as it will be a better evidence of our fincerity, fo it will be more helpful and ornamental to the interests of religion, than the greatest zeal in those particular duties which are most suitable to our natural tempers, or than the greatest austerities in fome particular instances of mortification, which are not yet so necessary, and perhaps not so difficult or difagreeable to us as this.

To what amazing heights of piety may some be thought to mount, (raised on the wings of flaming zeal and distinguished by uncommon preciseness and severity about little things) who all the while, perhaps, cannot govern one paffion, and appear yet ignorant of, and flaves to, their darling iniquity: through an ignorance of themselves, they misapply their zeal, and misplace their self denial; and by that means blemish their characters with a visible inconfistency. (a) CHAP.

(9) A pious zeal may be active and yet not pernicious, and shine without burning. Intemperate zeal is like Sirius in Homer. Λαμπροίαλος μεν ογ εςι, κακον δε τε σημα τενίκων Και τε φερει πολλου πυρείου δειλοισι βροίοισι.

lile quidem clara, fed læva luce corufeat,

Et morbos ætuf que adfert mortalibus ægris. Il. x. 30. Pines zeal is like the gentle flame in Virgil.

Ecce levis subito de virtice visus luli Fundere lumen apex, tractuque innoxia mollis Lambere flamma comas, et circum tempora pafci.

Jortin's dife p. 31.

Ar. Ila

H A P. VIII.

Self Knowledge promotes our Usefulnefs in the World.

VIII. THE more we know of ourfelves, the more useful we are like to be, in those stations of life in which providence hath fixed us.

When we know our proper talents and capacities, we know in what manner we are capable of being useful; and the consideration of our characters and relations in life, will direct us to the proper application of those talents; show us to what ends they are given us, and to what purposes they ought to be improved.

"Many of those who set up for wits, and pretend to a more than ordinary fagacity and delicacy of fense, do notwithstanding spend their time unaccountably; and live away whole days, weeks, and sometimes months together, to as little purpose, though it may not be so innocently, as if they had been asleep all the while.—But if their parts be for good as they would have others believe, fure they are worth improving; if not, they have the more need of it. Greatness of parts is so far from being a discharge from industry, that I find men of the most exquisite sense in all ages were always. most curious of their time. And therefore I very much suspect the excellency of those mens' parts, who are dissolute and careless mispenders of it." (r)

It is a fad thing to observe, how miserably some men debase and prostitute their capacities. Those gifts and indulgences of nature, by which they outshine many others, and by which they are capable of doing real service to the cause of virtue and religion, and of being eminently useful to mankind, they either entirely neglect, or shamefully abuse, to the dishonour of GOD, and the prejudice of their fellow creatures, by encouraging and emboldening them in the ways of vice and vanity. For the false glare of a profane wit will sometimes make fuch strong impressions on a weak, unsettled mind, as to overbear the principles of reason and wisdom and give it too favourable sentiments of what it before abhorred. Whereas the same force and sprightliness of genius would have been very happily and usefully employed in putting fin out of countenance, and in rallying the follies and expofing the inconfistencies of a vicious and profligate character.

(ir) Nurris's Mife. p. 120.

The more talents and abilities men are bleffed with, the more pains they ought to take. This is Chrysostom's observation. And the reason is obvious; because they have more to answer for than other men, which I take to be a better reafon than what is affigned by this father, viz. because they have more more to lofe. (s) of life providence hath fixed him, and the duties of that station; he then knows what talents he ought to cultivate, in what manner and to what objects they are to be chiefly directed and applied, in order to shine in that station, and be useful in it. This will keep him even and steady in his purfuits and views; confistent with himself, uniform in his conduct, and useful to mankind; and will permit his shooting at a wrong mark, or missing the right one he aims at; as thousands do, for want of this necessary branch of self knowledge. See Part I. Chap. V.

When a man once knows where his strengthlies, wherein he excels, or is capable of excelling, how far his influence extends, and in what station.

(5) Ωςι τοις σοφωθεροις, μαλλον η τοις αμαθες εροις, μειζων ο πονος συθε γας υπες των αυλων η ζημια, ELERECT TElois RONEIVOIS. D. Sacerd. I. v. c. 5.

H A P. IX.

Self Knowledge leads to a Decorum and Confistency of Character.

MAN that knows himself, knows how to att with discretion and dignity in every station and character.

Almost all the ridicule we see in the world takes its rife from felf ignorance, and to this mankind by common affent ascribe it, when they say of a person that acts out of character, he does not know himfelf. Affectation is the spring of all ridicule, and self ignorance the true fource of affectation. A man that does not know his proper character, nor what becomes it, cannot act fuitably to it. He will often affect a character that does not belong to him; and will either act above or beneath himself, which will make him equally contemptible in the eyes of them that know him (t).

A man of fuperiour rank and character, that knows himself, knows that he is but a man; subject to the same sicknesses, frailties, disappointments, pains, passions and forrows, as other men; that true honour lies in those things, in which it is possible for the meanest peasant to excel him; and therefore he will not be vainly arrogant. He knows that they are only transitory and accidental things, that set him above the rest of mankind; that he will soon be upon a level with them; and therefore learns to condescend: And there is a dignity in this condescension; it does not sink, but exalts his reputation and character.

A man of inferiour rank, that knows himself, knows how to be content, quiet, and thankful, in his lower sphere. As he hath not an extravagant veneration and esteem for those external things which raife one man's circumstances so much above another's, so he does not look upon himself as the worse or less valuable man, purely because he has them not; much less does he envy them that have them. As he has not their advantages, so neither has he their temptations: He is in that state of life, which the great arbiter and disposer of all things hath allotted him; and he is fatisfied: But as a deference is owing to external superiority, he knows how to pay a proper respect to those that are above him, without that abject and servile cringing which difcovers discovers an inordinate esteem for their condition.

(t) Omnique in re posse quod deceat acere, fartis et natu æ est; seire, quid, quandoque deceat, prudentiæ. Cic. de Orat. 1. 3. § 55.

As he does not over esteem them for those little accidental advantages in which they excel him, so neither does he overvalue himself for those things in which he excels others.

Were hearers to know themselves, they would not take upon them to distate to their preachers; or teach their ministers how to teach them; (which, as St. Austin observes (u), is the same thing as if a patient, when he sends for a physician, should prescribe to him what he would have him prescribe;) but, if they happen to hear something not quite agreeable to their former sentiments, would betake themselves more diligently to they study of their bibles, to know whether those things were so.*

And were ministers to know themselves, they would know the nature and duty of their office, and the wants and infirmities of their hearers better, than to domineer over their faith, or shoot over their heads, and seek their own popularity, rather than their benefit. They would be more solicitous for their edification, than their approbation; (the most palatable food is not always the most wholesome;) and like a faithful physician, would earnestly intend and endeavour their good, though it be in a way they may not like; and rather risk their own characters with weak and captious men, than withhold

for purchased trender this thought

⁽u) Norit medicus quid salutiserum, quidve contrarium petat ægrotos. Ægroti estis, nolete ergo dictari quæ vobis medicamina velit opponere.

[#] Acts xvii. II.

hold any thing that is needful for them, or be unfaithful to GOD and their own consciences. Patients must not expect to be always pleased, nor physicians to be always applauded.

CHAP. X.

Piety the Effect of Self Knowledge.

X. SELF knowledge tends greatly to cultivate a spirit of true piety.

Ignorance is so far from being the mother of devotion, that nothing is more destructive of it. And of all ignorance, none is a greater bane to it than felf ignorance. This indeed is very confishent with fuperstition, bigotry and enthusiasm, those common counterfeits of piety, which by weak and credulous minds are often mistaken for it. But true piety and real devotion can only spring from a just knowledge of GOD and ourselves; and the relation we stand in to him, and the dependence we have upon him. For when we confider ourselves as the creatures of GOD, whom he made for his honour, and as creatures incapable of any happiness, but what refults from his favour; and as entirely and continually dependent upon him for every thing we have and hope for; and whilst we bear this thought in our minds, what can induce or prompt us more to love and fear and trust Him, as our GOD, our father, and all sufficient friend and helper?

CHAP.

C H A P. XI.

Self Knowledge teaches us rightly to perform the Duties of Religion.

XI. SELF knowledge will be a good help and direction to us in many of our devout and christian exercises. Particularly, mode (w).———He that rightly knows himself, will be very sensible of his spiritual wants, and he that is well acquainted with his spiritual wants, will not be at a loss what to pray for. "Our hearts would be the best prayer books, if we were well skilled in reading them. Why do men pray, and call for prayers when they come to die, but that they begin a little better to know themselves? And were they now but to hear the voice of GOD and conscience, they would not remain speechless. But they that are born deaf are always dumb (x)."

Again, self knowledge will teach us to pray, not only with sluency, but servency; will help us to keep the heart, as well as order our speech before GOD; and so promote the grace as well as gift of prayer. Did we but seriously consider what we are, and what we are about; whom we pray to, and what we pray for, it is impossible we should be so dead, spiritless, and formal in this duty, as we too often are. The very thought would inspire us with life, and faith, and fervour.

2. Self

⁽w) Ille Ded veram orationem exhibet qui semetipsum cognoscit. Greg. (x) Baxter.

2. Self knowledge will be very helpful to us in the duty of thankfaining: As it shews us both how fuitable and how feafonable the mercies are which we receive. A christian that keeps up an intelligence with himfelf, confiders what he hath, as well as what he wants; and is no less sensible of the value of his mercies, than his unworthiness of them: And this is what makes him thankful. For this reason it is, that one christian's heart even melts with gratitude for those very mercies, which others disesteem and depreciate; and perhaps despise, because they have not what they think greater. But a man that knows himself, knows that he deserves nothing, and therefore is thankful for every thing. For thankfulness as necessarily flows from humility, as humility does from felf acquaintance.

3. In the duties of reading and hearing the word of GOD, felf knowledge is of excellent use to enable us to understand and apply that which we read, or hear. Did we understand our hearts better, we should understand the word of GOD better; for that speaks to the heart. A man that is acquainted with his own heart, presently sees how the divine word penetrates and explores, searches and lays open its most inward parts, seels what he reads; and finds that a quickening spirit, which to a self ignorant man is but a dead letter.

Moreover, this self acquaintance teaches a man to apply what he reads and hears of the word of GOD. He sees the pertinence, congruity, and suitableness of it to his own case; and lays it up faithfully Faithfully in the store room of his mind, to be digested and improved by his after thoughts. And it is by this art of applying scripture, and urging the most suitable instructions and admonitions of it home upon our consciences, that we receive the greatest benefit by it.

4. Nothing is of more eminent service in the great duty of meditation; especially in that part of it which confifts in heart converse. A man who is unacquainted with himself, is as unfit to converse with his heart, as he is with a stranger he never faw, and whose taste and temper he is altogether unacquainted with. He knows not how to get his thoughts about him. And when he has, he knows not how to range and fix them; and hath no more the command of them, than a general has of a wild. undisciplined army, that has never been exercised, or accustomed to obedience and order. But one, who hath made it the study of his life to be acquainted with himself, is soon disposed to enter into a free and familiar converse with his own heart; and in such a self conference improves more in true wisdom, and acquires more useful and substantial knowledge, than he could do from the most polite and refined conversation in the world .- Of fuch excellent use is self knowledge in all the duties of Sevotion and piety.

CHAP.

C H A P. XII.

Self Knowledge the best Preparation for Death.

tion for death, and a constant guard against the surprise of it. Because it fixes and settles our hopes of suture happiness. That which makes the thoughts of death so terrifying to the soul, is its utter uncertainty what will become of it after death. Were this uncertainty to be removed, a thousand things would reconcile us to the thoughts of dying (y). "Distrust and darkness of a suture state, Is that which makes mankind to dread their fate: Dying is nothing; but 'tis this we fear, To be we know not what, we know not where."

Now felf knowledge, in a good degree, dissipates this gloom, and removes this dreadful doubt. For as the word of GOD hath revealed the certainty of a future state of happiness which the good man shall enter upon after death, and plainly described the requisite qualifications for it; when by a long and laborious self acquaintance, he comes distinctly to discern those qualifications in himself, his hopes of heaven soon raise him above the fears of death. And though he may not be able to form any clear or distinct conception of the nature of that happiness, yet in general he is assured that it will be a most

(y) Illa quoque res morti nos alienat, quod hæcjam novimus illa ad quæ travlituri sumus, nescimus qualia sint. Et horremus ignota. Naturalis præterea tenebrarum metus est, in quas adductura mors creditur. Sen. Epist. 83. It is this makes us averse to death, that it translates us to objects we are unacquainted with, and we tremble at the thoughts of those things that are unknown to us. We are naturally official of being in the dark, and death is a leap in the dark. most extensive one, and will contain in it every thing necessary to make it complete; because it will come immediately from GOD himself (2). Whereas they who know not what they are, must necessarily be ignorant what they shall be. A man that is all darkness within, can have but a dark prospect forward (a).

Oh, what would we not give for folid hope in death! Reader, wouldst thou have it, know GOD, and know thyself.

A TREATISE

(z) "When we fay that the fizte of the other world is unknown, the only meaning of it is, that it is a state of such happiness, so far beyond any thing we ever yet experienced, that we cannot form any notion or idea of it. We know that there is such a happiness; we know in some measure wherein this happiness confifts; viz. in feeing GOD and the bleffed JESUS, who loved us, and gave himself for us; in praising our Creator and Redeemer; in converfing with Saints and Angels. But how great, how ravishing and transporting a pleasure this is, we cannot tell, because we never yet felt it .- Now methinks, this should not make the thoughts of death uneasy to us, should not make us unwilling to go to heaven; that the happiness of heaven is too great for us to know or conceive in this world. For men are naturally fond of unknown and untried pleafures, which is fo far from being a difparagement to them, that it raifes our expectations of them, that they are unknown. In the things of this world, enjoyment usually lesiens our esteem and value for them, and we always value that most which we have never tried; and methinks the happiness of the other world should not be the only thing we despife before we try it .- It is some encouragement to us that the happiness of heaven is too big to be known in this world; for did we perfectly. know it now, it could not be very great." Sherlock on death, p. 71, 72,

(a) Illi mors gravis incubac,

Qui, notus nimis omnibus,

Ignotus moritur fibi. Sen. Tra. Thyef,

Who, expos'd to others eyes,

Into his own heart never pries,

Death's to him a strange surprise.

A

TREATISE

OF

SELF KNOWLEDGE.

PART III.

Shewing how Self Knowledge is to be attained.

parts of the subject, felf knowledge appears to be in itself so excellent, and in its effects so extensively useful and conducive to the happiness of human kind, that nothing need further be added by way of motive or inducement to excite us to make it the great object of our study and pursuit. If we regard our present peace, satisfaction, and usefulness, or our future and everlasting interests, we shall certainly value and prosecute this knowledge above all others; as what will be most ornamental to our characters, and beneficial to our interest in every state of life, and abundantly recompense all our labour.

Were there need of any further motives to excite: us to this, I might lay open the many dreadful effects of felf ignorance, and shew how plainly it appears to be the original spring of all the follies and incongruities we see in the characters of men, and of most of the mortifications and miseries they meet with here. This would foon appear by only mentioning the reverse of those advantages before specified, which refult from felf knowledge. For what is it, but a want of felf knowledge that makes us fo unsettled and volatile in our dispositions? So subject to transport and excess of passions in the varying scenes of life? So rash and unguarded in our conduct ? So vain and felf sufficient ? So censorious and malignant? So eager and confident? So little useful in the world, in comparison of what we might be? So inconfistent with ourselves? So mistaken in our notions of true religion? So generally indisposed to, or unengaged in the holy duties of it? And finally, so unfit for death, and so affraid of dying ?- I fay, to what is all this owing, but felf ignorance? The first and fruitful source of all this long train of evils .--- And indeed, there is scarce any, but what may be traced up to it. In short, it brutifies man to be ignorant of himself. Man that is in honour, and understandeth not (himself especially) is as the beafts that perish.*

"Come home then, O my wandering, self-neglecting soul; lose not thyself in a wilderness, or tumult of impertinent, vain, distracting things. Thy work is nearer thee; the country thou shouldst first furvey and travel is within thee; from which thou must pass to that above thee; when by losing thyfelf in this without thee, thou wilt find thyfelf before thou art aware in that below thee .- Let the eyes of fools be in the corners of the earth; leave it to men befide themselves, to live as without themselves; do thou keep at home and mind thine own business. Survey thyself, thine own make and nature, and thou wilt find full employ for all thy most active thoughts. + But dost thou delight in the mysteries of nature? Consider well the mystery of thy own. The compendium of all thou studiest is near thee, even within thee; thyself being the epitome of the world (b). If neither necessity, [†] Mirantur aliqui altitudines montium, ingentes fluctus maris, altissimos lapsus fluminum, et oceani ambitum, et gyros syderum, et relinquunt seipsos, nec mirantur; faith St. Augustin. Some men admire the beights of mountains, the buge waves of the sea, the steep falls of rivers, the compass of the ocean, and the circuit of the flars, and pass by themselves without admiration.

0 2

WOIK

⁽b) Τις εν αξιως θαυμασειε την ευγενειαν τείε τε ζωε τε συνλδεονίος εν εαύίω τα θνήλα τοις αθαναίοις, και τα λογικα τοις αλογοις συναπθενδος, τε φερονδος εν τη καθ εαυθου φυσει της πασης κθισεως την εικονα, δι α και μικρος κοσμος ειρηλαι, τη τοσαυλης ηξιομένη σαρα τε Θεε προνοιας; δι ον πανία και τα νυν, και τα μελλονία' δι ον ο Θεος ανθρωπος γεγονε. Nem. de Nat Hom. cap. 1. pag. 34. Who can sufficiently admire the noble nature of that creature man, who hath in him the mortal and the immortal, the rational and irrational nature united, and so carries about with him the image of the whole creation; whence he is called microcofm, or the lit le world; for whose sake (so highly is or duty, nature or grace, reason or faith, internal inducements, external impulses, or eternal motives, might determine the subject of thy study and contemplation, thou wouldst call home thy distracted thoughts, and employ them more on thyself and thy GOD (c)."

Now then let us resolve that hencesorth the study of ourselves shall be the business of our lives. That by the blessing of GOD, we may arrive at such a degree of self knowledge as may secure to us the excellent benefits before mentioned. To which end, we should do well to attend diligently to the rules laid down in the following chapters.

he honoured by GOD) all things are made, both present and future; nay, for whose sake GOD himself became man?—So that it was not unjustly said by Gregory No siene, that man was the macrocosm, and the world without the microcosm.

(c) Baxter's Mischief of Self Ignorance.

The worthy And hor of this Book unhappily afterall his armained a layer bigoted to the Minudities of Frinitariism, that dreadful and deplorable Corruption of Christianity, underwhich the World is still labouring 1003

CHAP. I.

Self Examination necessary to Self Knowledge:

HE first thing necessary to self knowledge is self inspection.

We must often look into our hearts if we would know them. They are very deceitful; more so than we can imagine till we have searched and tried and watched them well. We may meet with frauds and faithless dealings from men; but after all, our own hearts are the greatest cheats; and there are none we are in greater danger from than ourselves. We must first suspect ourselves, then examine ourselves, then watch ourselves, if we expect ever to know ourselves. How is it possible there should be any self acquaintance without self-converse?

Were a man to accustom himself to such self employment, he need not live till thirty before he suspetts himself a fool, or till forty before he knows it. (d)

Men could never be so bad as they are, if they did but take a proper care and scope in this business of self examination (e). If they did but look backwards to what they were, inwards to what they are, and forwards to what they shall be.

And as this is the first and most necessary step to self acquaintance, it may not be amiss to be a little more particular in it. Therefore,

1. This

⁽d) See the Complaint, or Night Though s, Part i. page 28.

⁽e) Hoc nos pessimos facit, quod nemo vitam suam respicit. Quid facturi simus, cogitamus, et id raro; quid secerimus, non cogitamus. Sen. Epist. 84.

shall

ed with great care and diligence, otherwise our hearts will deceive us, even whilst we are examining of them. "When we set ourselves to think, some trisle or other, presently interrupts and draws us off from any prositable recollection. Nay, we ourselves sly out, and are glad to be diverted from a severe examination into our own state; which is sure, if diligently pursued, to present us with objects of shame and sorrow, which will wound our sight, and soon make us weary of this necessary work (f)."

Do not let us flatter ourselves then that this is a mighty easy business. Much pains and care are necessary sometimes to keep the mind intent; and more to keep it impartial. And the difficulty of it is the reason that so many are averse to it; and care not to descend into themselves (g).

Reader try the experiment; retire now into thyfelf; and fee if thou canst not strike out some light within, by closely urging such questions as these—"What am I? For what was I made? And to what ends have I been preserved so long, by the favour of my maker? Do I remember, or forget those ends? Have I answered or perverted them?
—What have I been doing since I came into the world? What is the world, or myself, the better for my living so many years in it?—What is my allowed course of actions? Am I sure it will bear the future test? Am I now in that state I shall wish to die in? And, O my soul, think, and think again what it is to die .- Do not put that most awful event far from thee; nor pass it by with a superficial thought. Canst thou be too well fortified against the terrours of that day! and art thou fure that the props which support thee now, will not fail thee then ?--- What hopes hast thou for eternity? Hast thou indeed that godly temper, which alone can fit thee for the enjoyment of GOD ?-Which world art thou most concerned for? What things do most deeply affect thee? -O my foul, remember thy dignity; think how foon the scene will shift. Why shouldst thou forget that thou art immortal?"

⁽f) Stanhope's Tho. a Kempes, page 166.

⁽g) Ut nemo in fese tentat descendere ! Perf. fat. 4.

2. This felf excitation and fcrutiny must be frequently made. They who have a great deal. of important business on their hands should often look over their accounts, and frequently adjust them; lest they should be going backwards, and not know it. And cuftom will foon take off the difficulty of this duty, and make it delightful.

In our morning retreat it will be proper to remember, that we cannot preserve throughout the day that calm and even temper we may then be in. That we shall very probably meet with some things to ruffle us; some attack on our weak fide. Place a guard there now, Or however, if no incidents happen to discompose us, our tempers will vary; our thoughts will flow pretty much with our blood; and the dispositions of the mind be a good deal governed by the motions of the animal spirit; our fouls will be ferene or cloudy, our tempers volatile or phlegmatick, and our inclinations fober or irregular, according to the brifkness or fluggishness of the circulation of the animal fluids, whatever may be the natural and immediate cause of that; and therefore we must resolve to avoid all occasions that may raise any dangerous ferments there; which, when once raifed, will excite in us very different thoughts and dispositions from those we now have; which, together with the force of a fair opportunity and urgent temptation, may overfet our reason and resolution, and betray us into those finful indulgencies which will wound the conscience, stain the soul, and create bitter remorfe in our cooler reflections. Pious thoughts and purposes in the morning will set a guard upon the soul and fortify it under all the temptations of the day.

But such self inspection, however, should not fail to make part of our evening devotions. When we should review and examine the several actions of the day, the various tempers and dispositions we have been in, and the occasions that excited them. It is an advice worthy of a christian, though it sirst dropped from a heathen pen; that before we betake ourselves to rest, we review and examine all the passages of the day, that we may have the comfort of what we have done aright, and may redress what we find to have been amiss; and make the shipwrecks of one day, be as marks to direct our course on another. A practice that hath been recommended by many of the heathen moralifts of the greatest name, as Plutarch, Epicletus, Marcus Antoninus; and particularly Pythagoras, in the verses that go under his name, and are called his golden verses: Wherein he advises his scholars every night to recollect the passages of the day, and ask themselves these questions; "Wherein have I transgressed this day? What have I done? What duty have I omitted, &c. (h)?" Seneca recommends the same practice. " Sectius (saith he) did this; at the close of the day, before he betook himself to rest, he addressed his soul in the following manner." " What evil of thine hast thou cured this day? What vice withflood? In what respect art thou better?" Passion will cease or become more cool, when it knows every day it is to be thus called to account. What can be more advantageous than

(h) Μηθυπνον μαλακοισιν επ' ομμασι προσδεξασθαι, Πριν των ημερινων εργων τρις εκας ον επελθειν
Πη παρεθην; τι δ' ερεξα; τι μοι δεον εκ εθελεσθη;
Αρξαμενος δ' απο πρωθε επεξιθι και μεθαπείθα,
Δειλα μεν εκπρηξας, επιπλησσεο χρης α δε, τερπε.
Ταυθα πονει, ταυθ' εκμελεθα τεθων χρη εραν σε Ταυθα σετης θειης αρεθης εις ιχνια θησει.

Vid. Pythag. Aur. Carm. apud Poet. Minor. page 420.

Let not your eyes the sweets of slumber taste

'Till you have thrice severe restections past,

On th'actions of the day from first to last.

Wherein have I transgres'd? What done have I?

What actions unperform'd have I past by?

And if your actions ill, on search you find,

Let grief; if good, let joy posses your mind.

This do, this think, to this your heart incline;

This way will lead you to the life divine.

than this constant custom of searching through the day ? ___ And the same course (faith Seneca) I take myself; and every day fit in judgment on myself; and at even, when all is hush and still, I make a ferutiny into the day; look over my words and actions, and hide nothing from myfelf; conceal none of my mistakes through fear for why should I? When I have it in my power to fay thus: "This once I forgive thee; but see thou do so no more .-In such a dispute I was too keen; do not for the future contend with ignorant men; they will not be convinced, because they are unwilling to shew their ignorance. Such a one I reproved with too much freedom; whereby I have not reformed, but exasperated him; remember hereafter to be more mild in your censures; and consider not only whether what you fay be true, but whether the person you say it to, can bear to hear the truth (i)." -Thus far that excellent moralist,

Let us take a few other specimens of a more pious and christian turn, from a judicious and devout writer (k).

"This morning, when I arose, instead of applying myself to GOD in prayer, which I generally find it best to do, immediately after a few serious reslections, I gave way to idle musing, to the great disorder of my heart and frame. How often have I suffered for want of more watchfulness on this occasion? When shall I be wise?——I have

this

⁽i) Vid. Seneca de Ira, lib. 3. cap. 36.

⁽k) M. Bennet. See his Christ. Orator, page 534.

this day shamefully trifled, almost through the whole of it: Was in my bed when I should have been upon my knees; prayed but coolly in the morning; was strangely off my guard in the business and conversation I was concerned with in the day, particularly at-; I indulged to very foolish, sinful, vile thoughts, &c. I fell in with a strain of conversation too common amongst all forts. viz. Speaking evil of others; taking up a reproach against my neighbour. I have often resolved against this sin, and yet run into it again. How treacherous this wicked heart of mine! I have lost several hours this day in mere fauntering and idleness .- This day I had an instance of mine own infirmity, that I was a little furprised at, and I am sure I ought to be humbled for. The behaviour of -, from whom I can expect nothing but humour, indiferetion and folly, strangely ruffled me; and that after I have had warning over and over again. What a poor, impotent, contemptible creature am I!--This day I have been kept in a great measure from my too frequent failings .- I had this day very comfortable affistances from GOD, upon an occafion not a little trying-what shall I render ?"

3. See that the mind be in the most composed and disengaged frame it can, when we enter upon this business of felf judgment. Choose a time when it is most free from passion, and most at leisure from the cares and assairs of life. A judge is not like to bring a cause to a good issue, that is either intoxicated with liquor on the bench, or has his mind distracted with other cares when he should be intent on the trial. Remember you sit in judgment upon yourself, and have nothing to do at present but to sift the evidence which conscience may bring in either for or against you, in order to pronounce a just sentence; which is of much greater concernment to you at present than any thing else can be: And therefore it should be transacted with the utmost care, composure, and attention.

4. Beware of partiality, and the influence of self love in this weighty business; which if you do not guard against, it will soon lead you into self delusion; the consequences of which may be fatal to you. Labour to see yourself as you are; and view things in a just light, and not in that in which you would have them appear. Remember that the mind is always apt to believe those things which it would have to be true, and backward to credit what it wishes to be false; and this is an influence you will certainly lie under in this affair of self judgment.

You need not be much afraid of being too severe upon yourself. Your great danger will be of passing a too savourable judgment. A judge ought not indeed to be a party concerned; and should have no interest in the person he sits in judgment upon. But this cannot be the case here; as you yourself are both judge and criminal, which shews the danger of pronouncing a too savourable sentence. But remember, your business is only with the evidence and the rule of judgment; and that however you come off now, there will be a rehearing in another court, where judgment will be according to truth.

"However, look not unequally either at the good or evil that is in you; but view them as they are. If you observe only the good that is in you, and overlook the bad, or search only after your faults, and overlook your graces, neither of these will bring you to a true acquaintance with yourself (1)."

And to induce you to this impartiality, remember that this business (though it may be hid from the world) is not done in secret; GOD sees how you manage it, before whose tribunal you must expect a righteous judgment. "We should order our thoughts so (saith Seneca) as if we had a window in our breasts, through which any one might see what passes there. And indeed there is one that does; for what does it signify that our thoughts are hid from men? From God nothing is hid (m)."

Some judge of themselves by what they have been. But it does not follow, if men are not so bad as they have been, that therefore they are good as they should be. It is wrong to make our past conduct implicitly the measure of our present; or the present rule of our future; when our past, present, and suture conduct must be all brought to another rule. And they who thus measure themselves by themselves, felves, and compare themselves with themselves, are not wife. * ___ Again, others are apt to judge of themfelves by the opinions of men; which is the most uncertain rule that can be; for in that very opinion of theirs you may be deceived. How do you know they have really formed fo good an idea of you as they profess ? But if they have, may not others have formed as bad? And why should not the judgment of these be your rule, as well as the opinion of those? Appeal to felf flattery for an answer. However, neither one nor the other of them perhaps appear even to know themselves ; and how should they know you? How is it posfible they should have opportunities of knowing you better than you know yourself? A man can never gain a right knowledge of himself from the opinion of others, which is fo various, and generally fo ill founded. For men commonly judge by outward appearances, or inward prejudice, and therefore for the most part think and speak of us very much at random, --- Again, others are for judging of themselves by the conduct of their superiours, who have opportunities and advantages of knowing, acting and being better; "and yet without vanity be it spoken (say they) we are not behind hand with them." But what then? Neither they nor you perhaps are what the obligations of your character indispensably require you to be, and what you must be ere you can be happy. But consider how easily this argument may be retorted. You are better

(1) Banter's director, page 876.

⁽m) Sic cogitandum tanquam aliquis in pectus intimum inspicere possit; et potest. Quid enim prodest ab homine aliquid esse secretum? Nihil deo clausum est. S.n. Epist. 84.

better than some, you say, who have greater opportunities and advantages of being good than you have; and therefore your state is safe. But youyourfelf have greater opportunities and advantages of being good than some others have, who are nevertheless better than you; and the refore, by the same rule, your state cannot be safe. - Again, others. judge of themselves by the common maxims of the vulgar world concerning honour and honesty, virtue and interest; which maxims, though generally very corrupt and very contrary to those of reason, conscience, and scripture, men will follow as, a rule, for the fake of the latitude it allows them : And fondly think, that if they stand right in the opinion of the lowest kind of men, they have no. reason to be severe upon themselves. Others, whose fentiments are more delicate and refined, they imagine, may be mistaken, or may overstrain the matter. In which persuasion they are confirmed, by observing how seldom the consciences of the generality of men finite them for those things which these nice judges condemn as heinous crimes. I need not fay how falle and pernicious a rule this is. Again, others may judge of themselves and their state by fudden impressions they have had, or strong impulses upon their spirits, which they attribute to the fing. er of GOD; and by which they have been to exceed ingly affected as to make no doubt but that it was the instant of their conversion. But whether it was or no, can never be known but by the conduct of their after lives .-- In like manner, others judge of their good state by their good frames; though very rare, it may be, and very transient; foon passing off like a morning cloud, or as the early dew. "But we should not judge of ourselves by that which is unufual or extraordinary with us; but by the ordinary tenour and drift of our lives. A bad man may feem good in some good mood; and a good man may feem bad in some extraordinary falls; to judge of a bad man by his best hours, and a good man by his worst, is the way to be deceived in them both (n)." And the same way may you be deceived in yourself .---Pharaoh, Ahab, Herod and Felix, had all of them their loftenings, their transitory fits of goodness; but yet they remain upon record under the black. est characters.

15 6 5 10 7 2 NU 1

These then are all wrong rules of judgment; and to trust to them; or to try ourselves by them, leads to fatal self deception. Again,

6. In the business of self examination you must not only take care you do not judge by wrong rules, but that you do not judge wrong by right rules. You must endeavour then to be well acquainted with them. The office of a judge is not only to collect the evidence and the circumstances of facts, but to be well skilled in the laws by which those facts are to be examined.

Now the only right rules by which we are to examine, in order to know ourselves, are reason and scripture. Some are for setting aside these rules, as too severe for them; too stiff to bend to their perverseness;

PORL

verseness; too straight to measure their crooked ways; are against reason, when reason is against them; decrying it as carnal reason: And against scripture, when scripture is against them, despising it as a dead letter. And thus, rather than be convinced they are wrong, they reject the only means that can set them right.

And as some are for setting aside these rules, so others are for setting them one against the other. Reason against scripture, and scripture against reason. When they are both given us by the GOD of our natures, not only as perfectly consistent, but as proper to explain and illustrate each other, and prevent our mistaking either; and to be, when taken together, (as they always should) the most complete and only rule by which to judge both of ourselves, and every thing belonging to our salvation, as reasonable and fallen creatures.

1. Then one part of that rule which GOD hath given us, to judge of ourselves by, is right reason. By which I do not mean the reasoning of any particular man, which may be very different from the reasoning of another particular man; and both, it may be, very different from right reason; because both may be influenced not so much by the reason and nature of things, as by partial prepossessions and the power of passions. But by right reason I mean those common principles, which are readily allowed by all who are capable of understanding them, and not notoriously perverted by the sorce of prejudice; and which are confirmed by the common consent of all the sober and thinking part of mankind; and may be easily learned by the light of nature. Therefore if any dostrine or practice, though supposed to be founded in, or countenanced by revelation, be nevertheless apparently repugnant to these dostrines of right reason, or evidently contradict our natural notions of the divine attributes, or weaken our obligations to universal virtue, that we may be sure is no part of revelation; because then one part of our rule would clash with and be opposite to the other. And thus reason was designed to be our guard against a wild and extravagant construction of scripture.

2. The other part of our rule is the facred scriptures, which we are to use as our guard against the licentious excursions of fancy, which is often imposing itself upon us for right reason. Let any religious scheme or notion then appear ever so pleasing or plausible, if it be not established on the plain principles of scripture, it is forthwith to be discarded: And that sense of scripture that is violently forced to bend towards it, is very much to be sufpected.

It must be very surprising to one who reads and studies the sacred scriptures with a free, unbiassed mind, to see what elaborate, fine spun, slimsy glosses men will invent to put upon some texts as the true and genuine sense of them; for no other reasson, but because it is most agreeable to the opinion of their party, from which, as the standard of their orthodoxy, they durst never depart; who, if they were to write a critique in the same manner on any Greek or Latin author, would make themselves extremely ridiculous in the eyes of the learned world. But if we would not pervert our rule, we must learn to think as scripture speaks, and not compel that to speak as we think.

Would we know ourselves then, we must often view ourselves in the glass of GOD's word. And when we have taken a full survey of ourselves from thence, let us not soon forget what manner of persons we are.* If our own image do not please us, let us not quarrel with our mirror, but set about mending ourselves.

The eye of the mind indeed, is not like that of the body, which can see every thing else but itself; for the eye of the mind can turn itself inward, and survey itself. However, it must be owned, it can see itself much better when its own image is reslected upon it from this mirror. And it is by this only that we can come at the bottom of our hearts, and discover those secret prejudices and carnal prepossessions, which self love would hide from us.

This then is the first thing we must do in order to self knowledge, we must examine, scrutinize, and judge ourselves, diligently, leisurely, frequently and impartially; and that not by the false maxims of the world, but by the rules which GOD hath given us, reason and scripture; and take care to understand those rules, and not set them at variance.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

Constant Watchfulness necessary to Self Knowledge.

II. WOULD we know ourfelves, we must be very watchful over our hearts and lives.

1. We must keep a vigilant eye upon our hearts. i. e. our tempers, inclinations and passions. A more necessary piece of advice, in order to self acquaintance, there cannot be than that which Solomon gives us,* Keep your heart with all diligence, or as it is in the original, above all keeping (o). q. d. Whatever you neglect or overlook, be fure you mind your heart (p). Narrowly observe all its inclinations and aversions, all its motions and affections, together with the several objects and occasions which excite them. And this precept we find in scripture enforced with two very urgent reasons. The first is because out of it are the issues of life. i. e. As our heart is, so will the tenour of our life and conduct be. As is the fountain, so are the streams; as is the root, so is the fruit.* And the other is, because it is deceitful above all things. + And therefore, without a constant guard upon it, we shall insensibly run into many hurtful felf deceptions. To which I may add, that without this careful keeping of the heart

we

^{*} Prov. iv. 23.

מכל- משמר (0)

⁽p) Parallel to this advice of the royal preacher, is that of the imperial philosopher, Ευδου βλεπε, ευδου γαρ η ωηγη τε αγαθε. Look within, for within is the fountain of good. M. Aurel. 11b. 7. § 59.

Matt. wii. 18.

⁺ Jer. xvii. g.

we shall never be able to acquire any considerable degree of self acquaintance or of self government.

2. To know ourselves, we must watch our life and conduct as well as our hearts. And by this the heart will be better known; as the root is best known by the fruit. We must attend to the nature and consequences of every action we are disposed or solicited to, before we comply; and consider how it will appear in a future review. We are apt enough to observe and watch the conduct of others: A wise man will be as critical and severe upon his own. For indeed we have a great deal more to do with our own conduct than that of other men; as we are to answer for our own, but not for theirs. By observing the conduct of other men we know them; by carefully observing our own we must know ourselves.

C. H. A. P. III.

We should have some Regard to the Opinions of Others concerning Us, particularly of our Enemies.

III. WOULD we know ourfelves, we should not altogether neglect the opinion which others may entertain concerning us.

Not that we need be very folicitous about the cenfure or applause of the world; which are generally very rash and wrong, and proceed from the particular humours and preposlessions of men; and he that knows himself, will soon know how to des-

fee

pife them both. "The judgment which the world makes of us is generally of no manner-of use to us; it adds nothing to our souls or bodies, nor lessens any of our miseries. Let us constantly follow reason, (says Montaigne) and let the publick approbation sollow us the same way, if it pleases."

But still, I say, a total indifference in this matter is unwise (q). We ought not to be entirely infensible of the reports of others; no, not to the railings of an enemy; for an enemy may fay fomething out of ill will to us, which it may concern us to think of coolly when we are by ourselves; to examine whether the accusation be just, and what there is in our conduct and temper which may make it appear fo. And by this means our enemy may do us more good than he intended; and discover to us fomething in our hearts which we did not before advert to. A man that hath no enemies ought to have very faithful friends; and one who hath no fuch friends, ought to think it no calamity that he hath enemies to be his effectual monitors. " Our friends (lays Mr. Addison) very often flatter us as much as our own hearts. They either do not

(q) Τας δε ακαιρους καθηγοριας— εδε αμέρως δεδοικεναι και τρεμειν, εδε απλως ωαροραν καλον. αλλα χρη, καν ψευδεις τυγχανωσιν εσαι καν ωαρα των τυχονων ημιν επαγωνίαι, ωειρασθαι σβεννυναι ταχεως αυίας. Chrysoft de Sacerd. 1.5 c. 4. As to the groundless reports that may be raised to our disadvantage, it is not good either too much to sear them, or entirely to despise them. We should endeavour to stiffe them, be they ever so false, or the authors of them ever so contemptible.

fee our faults, or conceal them from us; or foften them by their representations, after such a manner that we think them too trivial to be taken notice of. An adversary, on the contrary, makes a stricter fearch into us, discovers every flaw and imperfection in our tempers, and though his malice may fet them in too strong a light, it has generally some ground for what it advances. A friend exaggerates a man's virtues, an enemy inflames his crimes. A wife man should give a just attention to both of them fo far as it may tend to the improvement of the one, and the diminution of the other. Plutarch has written an essay on the benefits which a man may receive from his enemies; and among the good fruits of enmity mentions this in particular, that by the reproaches it casts upon us we see the worst side of ourselves, and open our eyes to several blemishes and defects in our lives and conversations, which we should not have observed without the help of fuch ill natured monitors.

"In order likewise to come at a true knowledge of ourselves, we should consider, on the other hand, how far we may deserve the praises and approbations which the world bestow upon us; whether the actions they celebrate proceed from laudable and worthy motives, and how far we are really possessied of the virtues which gain us applause amongst those with whom we converse. Such a reflection is absolutely necessary, if we consider how apt we are cither to value or condemn ourselves by the opinions of others, and facrifice the report of our ownhearts to the judgment of the world (r)."

In that treatise of Plutarch here referred to, there are a great many excellent things pertinent to this subject; and therefore I thought it not improper to throw a sew extracts out of it into the margin (s).

(r) Spectat. Vol. VI. No. 399.

(s) The foolish and inconsiderate spoil the very friendships they are engaged in; but the wise and prudent make good use of the hatred and enmity of men against them.

Why should we not take an enemy for our tutor, who will instruct us gratis in those things we knew not before? For an enemy sees and understands more in matters relating to us than our friends do. Because love is blind, but spite, malice, ill will, wrath, and contempt, talk much, are very inquisitive and quick sighted.

Our enemy, to gratify his ill will towards us, acquaints himself with the infirmities both of our bodies and minds; sticks to our faults, and makes his invidious remarks upon them, and spreads them abroad by his uncharitable and ill natured reports. Hence we are taught this useful lesson for the direction and management of our conversation in the world, viz. that we be circumspect and wary in every thing we speak or do, as if our enemy always stood at our elbow, and overlooked our actions.

Those persons whom that wisdom hath brought to live soberly, which the sear and awe of enemies hath insused, are by degrees drawn into a habit of living so, and are composed and fixed in their obedience to virtue by custom and use.

When one asked Diogenes how he might be avenged of his enemies, he replied, To be yourself a good and bonest man.

Antishenes spake incomparably well; "that if a man would live a safe and unblamable life, it was necessary that he should have very ingenuous and faithful friends, or very bad enemies; because the first, by their kind admonitions, would keep him from sinning, the latter by their invectives."

He that hath no friend to give him advice, or reprove him when he does amis, must hear patiently the rebukes of his enemies, and thereby

It is the character of a dissolute mind, to be entirely insensible to all that the world says of us; and shews such a considence of self knowledge as is usually a sure sign of self ignorance. The most knowing minds are ever least presumptuous. And true self knowledge is a science of so much depth and dissiculty, that a wise man would not choose to be overconsident that all his notions of himselfare right, in opposition

thereby learn to mend the errours of his ways; confidering feriously the object which these severe censures aim at, and not what he is who makes them. For he who defigned the death of Prometheus the Thessalian, instead of giving him a fatal blow, only opened a swelling which he had, which did really save his life. Just so may the harsh reprehensions of enemies cure some distempers of the mind, which were before either not known, or neglected; though their angry speeches do originally proceed from malice or ill will.

If any man with opprobrious language objects to you crimes you know nothing of, you ought to inquire into the causes or reasons of such false accusations; whereby you may learn to take heed for the suture, lest you should unwarily commit those offences which are unjustly imputed to you.

Whenever any thing is spoken against you that is not true, do not pass by, or despise it because it is false; but forthwith examine yourself, and consider what you have said or done that may administer a just occasion of reproof.

Nothing can be a greater instance of wisdom and humanity, than for a man to bear filently and quietly the follies and revilings of an enemy; taking as much care not to provoke him, as he would to sail safely by a dangerous rock.

It is an eminent piece of humanity, and a manifest token of a nature truly generous, to put up the affronts of an enemy, at a time when you have a fair opportunity to revenge them.

Let us carefully observe those good qualities wherein our enemies excel us, and endeavour to excel them, by avoiding what is faulty, and imitating what is excellent in them. Plut. Mor. Vol. I. page 265. et seq. opposition to the judgment of all mankind; some of whom perhaps have better opportunities and advantages of knowing him (at some seasons especially) than he has of knowing himself. Because herein they never look through the same salse medium of self slattery.

C H A P. IV.

Frequent Converse with Superiours a Help to Self Knowl-edge.

IV. A NOTHER proper means of felf knowledge, is to converse as much as you can with those who are your superiours in real excellence.

He that walketh with wife men shall be wife.* Their example will not only be your motive to laudable pursuits, but a mirror to your mind; by which you may possibly discern some failings or desiciencies or neglects in yourself, which before escaped you. You will see the unreasonableness of your vanity and self sufficiency, when you observe how much you are surpassed by others in knowledge and goodness. Their proficiency will make your desects the more obvious to yourself. And by the lustre of their virtues you will better see the desormity of your vices; your negligence by their diligence; your pride by their humility; your passon by their meckness; and your folly by their wisdom.

Examples not only move, but teach and direct, much more effectually than precepts; and shews

Prov. xiii. 20.

us not only that such virtues may be practised, but how; and how lovely they appear when they are. And therefore if we cannot have them always before our eyes, we should endeavour to have them always in our mind; and especially that of our great head and pattern, who hath set us a perfect example of the most innocent conduct under the worst and most disadvantageous circumstances of human life (t).

CHAP. V.

Of cultivating such a Temper as will be the best Disposition to Self Knowledge.

V. IF man would know himself, he must with great care cultivate that temper which will best dispose him to receive this knowledge.

Now as there are no greater hindrances to felf knowledge than pride and obstinacy; so there is nothing more helpful to it than humility and an openness to conviction.

above all things seek humility. And how near an affinity there is between these two, appears from hence, that they are both acquired the same way. The very means of attaining humility are the properest means for attaining self acquaintance. By keeping an eye every day upon our faults and wants we become more humble; and by the same means

⁽t) Qui plenissime intelligere appetit qualis sit, tales debet afpicere qualis non est; ut in bonorum forma, metiatur quantum deformis est. Greg.

means we become more seif intelligent. By considering how far we fall short of our rule and our duty, and how vastly others exceed us, and especially by a daily and diligent study of the word of GOD, we come to have meaner thoughts of ourselves; and by the very same means we come to have a better acquaintance with ourselves.

A proud man cannot know himself. Pride is that beam in the eye of his mind, which renders him quite blind to any blemishes there. Hence nothing is a surer sign of self ignorance than vanity and ostentation.

Indeed true self knowledge and humility are so necessarily connected, that they depend upon, and mutually beget each other. A man that knows himself, knows the worst of himself, and therefore cannot but be humble; and a humble mind is frequently contemplating its own faults and weaknesses, which greatly improves it in self knowledge: So that self acquaintance makes a man humble, and humility gives him still a better acquaintance with himself,

2. An openness to conviction is no less necessary to self knowledge than humility.

As nothing is a greater bar to true knowledge than an obstinate stiffness in opinion, and a fear to depart from old notions, which (before we were capable of judging perhaps) we had long taken up for the truth; so nothing is a greater bar to self knowledge, than a strong aversion to part with those sentiments of ourselves which we have been blindly accustomed to, and to think worse of ourselves than we are wont to do.

And such an unwillingness to retrast our sentiments in both cases proceeds from the same cause, viz. a reluctance to self condemnation. For he that takes up a new way of thinking, contrary to that which he hath long received, therein condemns himself of having lived in an error; and he that begins to see faults in himself he never saw before, condemns himself of having lived in ignorance and sin. Now this is a most ungrateful business, and what self slattery can by no means endure.

But fuch an inflexibility of judgment, and hatred of conviction, is a very unhappy and hurtful turn of mind. And a man that is resolved never to be in the wrong, is in a fair way never to be in the right.

As infallibility is no privilege of the human nature, it is no diminution to a man's good sense or judgment to be found in an errour, provided he is willing to retract it. He acts with the same freedom and liberty as before, whoever be his monitor; and it is his own good sense and judgment that still guides him; which shines to great advantage in thus directing him against the bias of vanity and self opinion. And in thus changing his sentiments, he only acknowledges that he is not (what no man ever was) incapable of being mistaken. In short, it is more merit, and an argument of a more excellent mind, for a man freely to retract when he is in the wrong, than to be overbearing and positive when he is in the right (u).

A man then must be willing to know himself, before he can know himself. He must open his eyes, if he desires to see; yield to evidence and conviction, though it be at the expense of his judgment, and to the mortification of his vanity.

CHAP. VI.

To be sensible of our false Knowledge, a good Step to Self.

Knowledge.

VI. WOULD you know yourfelf, take heed and guard against false knowledge.

See that the light that is within you be not darkness; that your favourite and leading principles be right. Search your furniture, and consider what you have to unlearn. For oftentimes there is as much wisdom in casting off some knowledge which we have, as in acquiring that which we have not. Which perhaps was what made Themistocles reply, when one offered to teach him the art of memory, that he had much rather he would teach him the art of forget-fulnefs.

(u) Ει τις με ελεγιξαι, και παρας ησαι μοι, οι εκ ορθως υπολαμβανω η πρασσω, δυκαίαι, χαιρων μείαθησομαι ζηθω γαρ την αληθειαν νφ' ης εδεις πωποίε εβλαβη βλαπίειαι δε ο επιμενων επι της εαυίε απαίης και αγνοιας. Μ. Aur. lib. 6. § 21. If any one can convince me that I am wrong in any point of fentiment or prestice, I will alter it with all my heart. For it is truth I feek, and that can hurt nobody. It is only perfifting in errour, or ignorance that can hurt us.

A scholar that hath been all his life collecting books, will find in his library at last a great deal of rubbish. And as his taste alters, and his judgment improves, he will throw out a great many as trash and lumber, which it may be, he once valued and paid dear for; and replace them with fuch as are more folid and useful. Just so should we deal with our understandings; look over the furniture of the mind; separate the chaff from the wheat, which are generally received into it together; and take as much pains to forget what we ought not to have learned, as to retain what we ought not to forget. To read froth and trifles all our life, is the way always to retain a flashy and juvenile turn; and only to contemplate our first (which is generally our worst) knowledge, cramps the progress of the understanding, and makes ourself survey extremely deficient. In short, would we improve the understanding to the valuable purposes of self knowledge, we must take as much care what books we read, as what company we keep.

of things remote from the use of life, is a busy idleness. If I study (says Montaigne) it is for no other science than what treats of the knowledge of myself and instructs me how to live and die well (x)." It is a comfortless speculation, and a plain proof of the impersection of the human understanding, that upon a narrow scrutiny into our furniture, we observe a great many things which we think we know, but do not; and many which we do know, but ought not; that a good deal of the knowledge we have been all our lives collecting, is no better than mere ignorance, and some of it worse; to be sensible of which is a very necessary step to self-acquaintance (y).

CHAP. VII.

Self Inspection peculiarly necessary upon some particular Occasions.

VII. WOULD you know yourfelf, you must very carefully attend to the frame and emotions of your mind under some extraordinary incidents.

Some sudden accidents which befal you when the mind is most off its guard, will better discover its secret turn and prevailing disposition than much greater events you are prepared to meet, e.g.

affronts or provocations from men. A fool's wrath is presently known,* i. e. a fool is presently known by his wrath.

If your anger be foon kindled, it is a fign that fecret pride lies lurking in the heart; which, like gun

⁽y) See Part i. Chap. Kili. an. * Prov. xir. 16.

gun powder, takes fire at every spark of provocation that lights upon it. For whatever may be owing to a natural temper, it is certain that pride is the chief cause of frequent and wrathful resentments. For pride and anger are as nearly allied as humility and meekness. Only by pride cometh contrntion.† And a man would not know what mud lay at the bottom of his heart, if provocation did not stir it up.

Athenodorus the philosopher, by reason of his old age, begged leave to retire from the court of Augustus, which the emperour granted him; and in his compliments of leave, " remember (faid he) Cafar, whenever you are angry, you fay or do nothing, before you have distinctly repeated to yourself the four and twenty letters of the alphabet." Whereupon Cafar catching him by the hand, I have need (fays he) of your prefence still; and kept him a year longer (z). This is celebrated by the antients as a rule of excellent wildom, but a christian may prefcribe to himself a much wifer, viz. "When you are angry, answer not till you have repeated the fifth petition of the Lord's Prayer-Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us. And our Saviour's comment upon it-For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly father will also forgive you: But if ye forgive not men their trespasses neither will your father forgive your trefpaffes."*

It.

[†] Prov. xiii. 10. (z) See Plut. Mor. Vol. I. page 238 * Matt. vi. 14, 15.

It is a just and seasonable thought, that of Marcus Antoninus upon such occasions; "A man misbehaves himself towards me-what is that to me? The action is his; and the will that fets him upon it is his; and therefore let him look to it. The fault and injury belong to him, not to me. As for me, I am in the condition providence would have me, and am doing what becomes me (a)."

But after all, this amounts only to a philosoph. ical contempt of injuries; and falls much beneath the dignity of a christian forgiveness, to which felf knowledge will happily dispose us. And therefore, in order to judge of our improvements therein, we must always take care to examine and observe, in what manner we are affected in fuch circum-Hances.

2. How do you behave under a severe and unexpected affliction from the hand of providence? Which is another circumstance, wherein we have a fair opportunity of coming to a right knowledge of ourselves.

If there be an habitual discontent or impatience lurking within us, this will draw it forth, especially if the affliction be attended with any of those aggravating circumstances which accumulated that of Job.

Afflictions are often fent with this intent, to teach us to know ourselves; and therefore ought to be carefully improved to this purpose.

And much of the wisdom and goodness of our heavenly father is seen by a ferious and attentive mind,

mind, not only in proportioning the degrees of his corrections to his children's strength, but in adapting the kinds of them to their tempers; afflicting one in one way, another in another, according as he knows they are most easily wrought upon, and as will be most for their advantage. By which means a small affliction of one kind may as deeply affect us, and be of more advantage to us, than a much greater of another.

It is a trite but true observation, that a wise man receives more benefit from his enemies, than from his friends; from his afflictions than from his mercies; by which means his enemies become in effect his best friends, and his afflictions his greatest mercies. Certain it is, that a man never has an opportunity of taking a more fair and undifguifed view of himself, than in these circumstances. And therefore by diligently observing in what manner he is affected at fuch times, he may make an improvement in the true knowledge of himself, very much to his future advantage, though perhaps not a little to his present mortification. For a sudden provocation from man, or a severe affliction from GOD, may detect something which lay latent and undiscovered fo long at the bottom of his heart, that he never once suspected it to have had any place there. Thus the one excited wrath in the meekest man, * and the other passion in the most paincarorni vilutora tient.+

By confidering then in what manner we bear the particular afflictions GOD is pleased to allot us, and

and what benefit we receive from them, we may come to a very confiderable acquaintance with ourselves.

3. What is our usual temper and disposition in a time of peace, prosperity and pleasure, when the soul is generally most unguarded?

This is the warm season that nourishes and impregnates the seeds of vanity, self confidence, and a supercilious contempt of others. If there be such a root of bitterness in the heart, it will be very apt to shoot forth in the sunshine of uninterrupted prosperity; even after the frost of adversity had nipped it, and, as we thought, killed it.

Prosperity is a trial as well as adversity; and is commonly attended with more dangerous temptations. And were the mind but as seriously disposed to self reslection, it would have a greater advantage of attaining a true knowledge of itself under the former than under the latter. But the unhappiness of it is, the mind is seldom rightly turned for such an employment under those circumstances. It has something else to do, has the concerns of the world to mind; and is too much engaged by the things without it, to advert to those within; and is more disposed to enjoy than examine itself. However, it is a very necessary season for self examination, and a very proper time to acquire a good degree of self acquaintance, if rightly improved.

Lafly. How do we behave in bad company?

And that is to be reckoned bad company in which there is no probability of our doing or getting any good but apparent danger of our doing or getting much harm; I mean, our giving offence: to others, by an indifcreet zeal, or incurring guilt to ourselves by a criminal compliance.

Are we carried down by the torrent of vanity and vice? Will a flash of wit or a brilliant fancy make us excuse a profane expression? If so, we shall soon come to relish it, when thus seasoned, and use it ourselves.

This is a time when our zeal and wisdom, our fortitude and firmness are generally put to the most delicate proof; and when we may too often take notice of the unfuspected escapes of folly, fickleness, and indifcretion.

At fuch feafons as thefe then, we may often difcern what lies at the bottom of our hearts, better than we can in the more even and customary scenes. of life, when the passions are all calm and stills. And therefore would we know ourselves, we should be very attentive to our frame, temper, disposition and conduct upon fuch occasions.

CHAP. VIII.

To know ourselves we must wholly abstract from external. Appearances.

VIII. TYTOULD you know yourfelf, you must, as far as possible, get above the influence of exteriors, or a mere outward shows. A man

A man is, what his heart is. The knowledge of himself is the knowledge of his heart, which is entirely an inward thing; to the knowledge of which then, outward things (such as a man's condition and state in the world) can contribute nothing: But, on the other hand, is too often a great bar and hindrance to him in his pursuit of self knowledge.

1. Are your circumstances in the world easy and prosperous, take care you do not judge of yourself too favourably on that account.

These things are without you, and therefore can never be the measure of what is within; and however the world may respect you for them, they do not in the least make you either a wifer or more valuable man.

In forming a true judgment of yourself then, you must entirely set aside the consideration of your estate, and family; your wit, beauty, genius, health, &c. which are all but the appendages or trappings of a man; a smooth and shining varnish, which may lacker over the basest metal (b).

A man may be a good and happy man without these things, and a bad and wretched one with them. Nay he may have all these, and be the worse for them. They are so far from being good and excellent in themselves, that we often see providence

Nan genus, et proavos, et quæ non fecimus ipfi,

Vix ea noffra voco. Ovid. Met. lib, xiii, v. 1405.

⁽b) Si perpendere te voles, sepone pecuniam, domum, dignitatem, intus te ip se consule. Sen.

providence bestows them upon the vilest of men, and in kindness denies them to some of the best. They are oftentimes the greatest temptations, and put a man's faith and wisdom to the most dangerous trial.

2. Is your condition in life mean and afflicted? Do not judge the worse of yourself for not having: those external advantages which others have.

None will think the worse of you for the want of them, but those who think the better of themfelves for having them: In both which they shew a very depraved and perverted judgment. These are (Ta ux so new) things entirely without us and out of our power; for which a man is neither the better nor the worfe, but according as he uses them: And therefore you ought to be as indifferent to them as they are to you. A good man shines amiably through all the obscurity of his low fortune; and a wicked man is a poor little wretch in the midst of all his grandour (c).

Were we to follow the judgment of the world, we should indeed think otherwise of these things ; and by that mistake be led into a wrong notion of: ourselves. But we have a better rule to follow, to which if we adhere, the confideration of our external condition in life, whatever it be, will have no undue influence on the mind in its fearch after felf knowledge. CHAP.

⁽c) Parvus pumilio, licet in monte confliterit; coloffus magnitudinem fuam fervabit, etiamfi fteterit in puteo. Sen. Epift. 77.

[&]quot; Pygmies are Pygmies fill, though plac'd on Alps;

[&]quot; And Pyramids are Pyramids in vales."

C H A P. IX.

The Practice of Self Knowledge, a great Means to promote it.

IX. I ET all your felf knowledge be reduced into prac-

The right improvement of that knowledge we have, is the best way to attain more.

The great end of self knowledge is self government; without which (like all other) it is but a useless speculation. And as all knowledge is valuable in proportion to its end, so this is the most excellent, only because the practice of it is of the most extensive use.

" Above all other fubjects (fays an ancient pious writer) study thine own self .- For no knowledge that terminates in curiofity or speculation is comparable to that which is of use; and of all useful knowledge, that is most so which consists in the due care and just notions of ourselves. This study is a debt which every one owes himself. Let us not then be so lavish, so unjust as not to pay this debt ; by spending some part, at least, if we cannot all or most of our time and care upon that which has the most indefeasible claim to it. Govern your pasfions; manage your actions with prudence; and where falle steps have been made, correct them for the future. Let nothing be allowed to grow headstrong and disorderly; but bring all under discipline. Set all your faults before your eyes; and pals fentence upon yourfelf with the same severity as you would do upon another, for whom no partiality hath biassed your judgment (d).

What will our most exact and diligent self researches avail us, if after all, we sink into indolence and sloth? Or what will it signify to be convinced that there is a great deal amiss in our deportments and dispositions, if we sit still contentedly under that conviction, without taking one step towards a reformation? It will indeed render us but the more guilty in the sight of GOD. And how sad a thing will it be to have our felf knowledge hereaster rise up in judgment against us?

" Examination is in order to correction and amendment. We abuse it and ourselves, if we rest in the duty without looking farther. We are to review our daily walk, that we may reform it; and consequently a daily review will point out to us the Subject and matter of our future daily care."-"This day" (faith the christian upon his review of things at night) " I lost so much time; particularly at - I took too great a liberty; particularly in ___ I omitted fuch an opportunity that might have been improved to better purpose. I mismanaged fuch a duty-I find such a corruption often working; my old infirmity ---- ftill cleaves to me: How easily doth this fin beset me !- Oh! may I be more attentive for the time to come, more watchful over my heart! take more heed to my ways! May I do fo the next day !"___ " The knowledge of a diffemper is a good step to a cure; at least it directs to proper methods and applications in order to it. Self acquaintance leads to self reformation. He that at the close of each day calls over what is past, inspects himself, his behaviour and manners, will not fall into that security, and those uncensured follies that are so common and so dangerous (e)."

And it may not be improper, in order to make us sensible of and attentive to some of the more secret faults and soibles of our tempers, to pen them down at night, according as they appeared during the transactions of the day. By which means, we shall not only have a more distinct view of that part of our character to which we are generally most blind; but shall be able to discover some defects and blemishes in it, which perhaps we never apprehended before. For the wiles and doublings of the heart are sometimes so hidden and intricate, that it requires the nicest care and most steady attention to detect and unfold them.

For instance: "This day I read an author, whose sentiments were very different from mine, and who expressed himself with much warmth and considence. It excited my spleen, I own, and I immediately passed a severe censure upon him. So that had he been present, and talked in the same strain, my russed temper would have prompted me to use harsh and ungrateful language, which might have occasioned a very unchristian contention. But I now recollect, that though the author might be mistaken in those sentiments, (as I still believe he was) yet by his particular circumstances in life, and the method of his education, he has been strongly led into that way of thinking. So that his prejudice is pardonable; but my uncharitableness is not; especially considering that in many respects he has the ascendant of me.—This proceeded then from uncharitableness, which is one fault of my temper I have to watch against; and which I never was before so sensible of, as I am now upon this recollection. Learn more moderation, and make more allowances for the mistaken opinions of others for the future. Be as charitable to others who differ from you, as you desire they should be to you who differ as much from them. For it may be you cannot be more assured of being in the right than they are.

Again; this day I found myself strongly inclined to put in fomething by way of abatement to an excellent character given of an absent person, by one of his great admirers. It is true I had the command of myself to hold my tongue, and it is well I had, for the ardour of his zeal would not have admitted the exception, (though I still think that in some degree it was just) which might have raised a wrangling debate about his character, perhaps at the expenfe of my own; or however occasioned much animofity and contention .- But I have fince examined the fecret spring of that impulse, and find it to be envy; which I was not then sensible of; but my antagonist had certainly imputed it to this: And had he taken the liberty to have told me fo, I much question whether I should have had the temper of the philosopher; who, when he was really injured, injured, being asked whether he was angry or no, replied, No; but I am considering with myself whether I ought not to be so. I doubt I should not have had so much composure, but should have immediately resented it as a salse and malicious aspersion; but it was certainly envy, and nothing else; for the person who was the object of the encomium was much my superiour in many respects. And the exception that arose to my mind was the only slaw in his character; which nothing but a quick sighted envy could descry. Take heed then of that vice for the future.

Again; this day I was much furprifed to observe in myself the symptoms of a vice, which of all others, I ever thought myself most clear of; and have always expressed the greatest detestation of in others, and that is covetoufness. For what else could it be that prompted me to withhold my charity from my fellow creature in diffress, on pretence that he was not in every respect a proper object; or to dispense it so sparingly to another, who. I knew was fo, on pretence of having lately been at a confiderable expense upon another occasion? This could proceed from nothing else but a latent principle of covetoulnels; which, though I never before observed in myself, yet it is likely others have. O how inscrutable are the depths and deceits of the human heart !- Had my enemy brought against me a charge of indolence, self indulgence, or pride and impatience, or a too quick refentment of affronts and injuries, my own heart must have confirmed the accusation, and forced me to plead guilty. Had he charged me with bigotry, self opinion, and cenforiousness, I should have thought it proceeded from the same temper in himself, having rarely observed any thing like it in my own. But had he charged me with covetousness, I should have taken it for downright calumny, and despised the censure with indignation and triumph. And yet after all, I find it had been but too true a charge.—Oh! how hard a thing is it to know myself!—This, like all other knowledge, the more I have of it, the more sensible I am of my want of it."*

The difficulty of felf government and felf possession arises from the difficulty of a thorough felf acquaintance, which is necessary to it. I say a thorough felf acquaintance, such as has been already set forth in its several branches, (Part I.) For as self government is simply impossible (I mean considered as a virtue) where self ignorance prevails, so the difficulty

* Cicero was without doubt the vainest man in life; or he never could have the face to beseech Lucceius, in writing the Roman history, to set the administrations of his consulship in the most distinguished point of glory, even at the expense of historical truth; and yet when he is begging a favour of the like kind even of Cato himself, he has these astonishing words:——Si quisquam suit unquam remotus et natura et magis etiam (ut mihi quidem sentire videor) ratione atque doctrina ab INANI LAUDE ET SERMONIBUS VULGI, ego profecto is sum, lib. 15. Ep. 4. If ever any man was a STRANGER TO VAIN GLORY, and the desire of popular applause it is myself; and this disposition which I have by nature, is (methinks) grown yet stronger by reason and philosophy.——Ah! how secretly doth self ignorance (not only insinuate into, but) conceal itself within the most improved and best cultivated minds.——Reader, beware.

difficulty of it will decrease in proportion to the degree in which self acquaintance improves.

Many, perhaps may be ready to think this a paradox; and imagine that they know their predominant passions and foibles very well, but still find it extremely difficult to correct them. But let them examine this point again, and perhaps they may find, that that difficulty arises either from their defest of self knowledge (for it is in this as in other kinds of knowledge, wherein some are very ready to think themselves much greater proficients than they are) or else from their neglect to put in practice that degree of felf knowledge they have. They know their particular failings, yet will not guard against the immediate temptations to them. And they are often betrayed into the immediate temptations which overcome them, because they are ignorant of, or do not guard against, the more remote temptations, which lead them into those which are more immediate and dangerous, which may not improperly be called the temptations to temptations; in observing and guarding against which, consists a very necessary part of self-knowledge, and the great art of keeping clear of danger, which, in our prefent state of frailty, is the best means of keeping glear of fin.

To correct what is amis, and to improve what is good in us, is supposed to be our hearty desire, and the great end of all our self research. But if we do not endeavour after this, all our labour after self knowledge will be in vain. Nay, if we do not endeavour it, we cannot be said heartily to defire it. "For there is most of the heart where there is most of the will; and there is most of the will, where there is most endeavour; and where there is most endeavour, there is generally most success:

S

So that endeavour must prove the truth of our defire, and success will generally prove the fincerity of our endeavour (f)." This, I think, we may safely say, without attributing too much to the power of the human will, considering that we are rational and free agents, and considering what effectual assistance is offered to them, who seek it, to render their endeavours successful, if they are sincere; which introduces the subject of the following chapter.

CHAP. X.

Fervent and frequent Prayer the most effectual Means for attaining true Self Knowledge.

ASTLY, the last means to self knowledge which I shall mention is frequent and devout applications to the Fountain of Light, and the Father of our spirits, to affift us in this important study, and give us the true knowledge of ourselves.

This I mention last, not as the least, but, on the contrary, as the greatest and best means of all, to attain a right and thorough knowledge of ourselves, and the way to render all the rest effectual, and therefore, though it be the last means mentioned, it is the first that should be used.

Would we know ourselves, we must often converse not only with ourselves in meditation, but with GOD in prayer; in the lowest prostration of soul, beseeching the father of our spirits to discover them to us; in whose light we may see light, where before there was nothing but darkness; to make known to us the depth and devices of our heart. For without the grace and influence of his divine illuminations and instructions, our hearts will, after all our care and pains to know them, most certainly deceive us. And self love will so prejudice the understanding, as to keep us still in self ignorance.

The first thing we are to do in order to self knowledge is, to assure ourselves that our hearts are deceitful above all things. And the next is, to remember that the Lord fearcheth the hearts, and trieth the reins,* i. e. that He, the (Kapdioyvwsns) Searcher of all hearts, + hath a perfect knowledge of them, decentful as they are; which confideration, as it fuggesteth to us the strongest motive to induce us to labour after a true knowledge of them ourselves; so it directs us at the same time how we may attain this knowledge; viz. by an humble and importunate application to lim, to whom alone they are known, to make them known to us. And this, by the free and near access which his holy spirit hath to our spirits, he can effectually do various ways; viz. by fixing our attentions; by quickening our apprehenfions; removing our prejudices, (which, like a false medium before the eye of the mind, prevents its seeing things in a just and proper light;) by mortifying our pride; strengthening the intellective and reslecting faculties; and enforcing upon the mind, a lively sense and knowledge of its greatest happiness and duty; and so awakening the soul from that carnal security and indifference about its best interests, into which a too serious attention to the world is apt to betray it.

falle

Besides, prayer is a very proper expedient for attaining self knowledge, as the actual engagement of the mind in this devotional exercise is in itself a great help to it. For the mind is never in a better frame, than when it is intently and devoutly engaged in this duty; it has then the best apprehensions of GOD, the truest notions of itself, and the just-est sentiments of earthly things; the clearest conceptions of its own weakness, and the deepest sense of its own vileness; and consequently is in the best disposition that can be, to receive a true and right knowledge of itself.

And Oh! could we but always think of ourselves in such a manner, or could we but always be in a disposition to think of ourselves in such a manner, as we sometimes do in the servour of our humiliations before the throne of grace, he we great a progress should we soon make in this important science? Which evidently shews the necessity of such devout and humble engagements of the soul, and how happy a means they are to attain a just self-acquaintances.

AND

AND NOW, reader, whoever thou art that hafe: taken the pains to peruse these sheets, whatever be thy circumstances or condition in the world, whatever thy capacity or understanding, whatever thy occupations and engagements, whatever thy favourite sentiments and principles, or whatever religious fect or party thou espoulest, know for certain, that thou hast been deeply interested in what thou hast been reading; whether thou hast attended to it or no. For it is of no less concern to thee than the fecurity of thy peace, and usefulness in this world. and thy happiness in another; and relates to all thy interests, both as a man and a christian .--- Perhaps thou hast seen something of thine own image in the glass that has now been held up to thee. And wilt thou go away, and foon forget what manner of person thou art? -- Perhaps thou hast met with some things thou dost not well understand or approve. But shall that take off thine attention from those things thou dost understand or approve, . and art convinced of the necessity of ?-- If thou hast received no improvement, no benefit from this plain practical treatife thou hast now perused; read it over again. The same thought, you know, often impresses one more at one time than another. And we fometimes receive more knowledge and profit. by the second perusal of a book than by the first. And I would fain hope that thou wilt find fomething in this that may fet thy thoughts on work, and which by the bleffing of GOD, may make thee more observant of thy heart and conduct; and in consequence of that a more solid, serious, wife, effablished christian,

But will you, after all, deal by this book you have now read, as you have dealt by many fermons' you have heard? Pass your judgment upon it according to your received and established set of notions; and condemn or applaud it, only as it is agreeable or disagreeable to them; and commend or censure it, only as it suits or does not fuit your particular tafte; without attending to the real weight, importance, and necessity of the subject abstracted from those views; or will you be barely content with the entertainment and fatisfaction, which some parts of it may possibly have given you; to affent to the importance of the subject, the justness of the sentiment, or the propriety of fome of the observations you have been reading; and so dismiss all without any further concern about the matter?-Believe it, O christian reader, if this be all the advantage you gain by it, it were scarce worth while to have confined yourself so long to the perusal of it. It has aimed, it has fincerely aimed, to do you a much greater benefit; to bring you to a better acquaintance with one you express a particular regard for, and who is capable of being the best friend, or the worst enemy, you have in the world; and that is yourfelf. It was defigned to convince you, that would you live and act confistently, either as a man, or a christian, you must know yourfelf; and to perfuade you under the influence of the foregoing motives, and by the help of the forementioned directions, to make felf knowledge the great Rudy, and felf government the great bufiness.

GOD confirm you; and in which great business may his grace assist you, against all future discouragements and distractions. With him I leave the success of the whole; to whom be glory and praise for ever.

