Jahlely O. TO THE

PREFACE,

London, May 14, 1798.

Copies, were found on board a Danish ship* lately brought into one of our ports, by the Diamond frigate. The originals were enclosed in a cover directed to "Dr. Priestley, in America." They have been exhibited, with the usual attestations, in the High Court of Admiralty, as part of the evidence in the proceedings against the abovementioned ship and her cargo, and are now remaining on record in the public registry of that court. Their authenticity is, therefore, placed beyond a dispute, and may be personally ascertained by any man who chuses to take that trouble.

These letters relate almost exclusively to Public Matters; and their contents must be deemed interesting to every man who has a stake in the welfare of his country, or of any other civilized nation. Of the situation of the writers, and of the means of their information, little need be said; because the letters themselves speak sufficiently to those points. Mr. J. H. Stone is the brother of the person, acquitted quitted about two years ago, on a charge of carrying on a treasonable correspondence with France, in conjunction with one Jackson, who was convicted at Dublin, on a similar accusation. Mr. Stone bas been settled at Paris ever since the revolution; he is the friend of Priestley and Talleyrand, and is intimately connected with Citizen Gallois. ‡ Of the Lady nothing need be faid, beyond what is publicly known, or what these setters will supply. Nor do the character and principles of Dr. Priestley require any illustration, any more than the nature of his Prophecies, on the faith of which he is invited, by Mr. Stone, to return and fix his residence in England, "Such as England will then be." A recommendation with which the Doctor may possibly not yet think it prudent to comply.

The papers themselves abound with matter of the most serious reslection. Volumes of commentaries might be written on such a text. If the animosity of these apostate Englishmen against their own country, their conviction that no submissions will avert our danger, and their description of the engines employed by the Directory for our destruction, were impressed, as they ought to be, upon the minds of all our countrymen, we should certainly never again be told of the innocent designs of these traitors, or their associates;——We should hear no more declaimers, or pamphleteers, calling out for Peace, which even distonour cannot purchase;——We should no longer see men of any rank or description amongst us acting, in this hour of danger, as Mr. Stone describes the Directory to act, and flattering every passion and every prejudice, in order to disunite the people of England from their Government.

† This is the same Gallois who was lately sent over here by the Directory, on the pretence of negociating the exchange of prisoners. It was soon found that he had nothing to propose on this subject, and his conduct, intercourse, and connections, proving that his business was of a very different nature, he was ordered to reside at some distance from London; upon which he immediately quitted the country, although his pretended business did not require his residence in town, but might as easily have been carried on in any other place, as indeed the fact had proved in the instance of Mr. Swinburn, who for many months was not suffered to come to Paris.

Nor is it to us alone that these instructive lessons are addressed. The picture which these Letters exhibit of what has already past in Europe, and the prophetic statement of what is yet to come, are calculated (if any thing can yet do it) to rouse the apathy of thos surrounding Governments whose ruin is fast approaching. They will find here every feature and lineament of the true Jacobin character. They will see the philosophical indifference with which Mr. Stone views the misfortunes of others, provided they contribute to support his systems; --- bis tranquit and contented acquiescence in the punishment of his friends and accomplices, condemned to an exile much worse than death, for crimes, of which he says, no man of common sense (even among their judges or their accusers) thought them guilty; --- his infulting display of all the pillage, proscription, and massacre, which his principles have produced within so few years; --- a pretty decent progress, as he calls it, within so short a time!--- his exultation in the overthrow of peaceful and unoffending governments; --- his triumph over the devastation of free, and happy countries; --- the delight light with which he contemplates millions of his fellow creatures reduced to the most degrading slavery, and groaning under the yoke of the lowest and the worst of mankind;——and last, but most of all, the rapacious and sanguinary joy with which he enumerates the fresh kingdoms and empires devoted to the same destruction;—closing the brilliant prospect with the view of his own great, glorious, and flourishing country, torn by intestine discord, desolated by the ravages of a relentless and savage enemy, and sinking under the utmost extremities of human misery!

We who are not yet enlightened by this Philosophy, which tolerates every thing except Christianity, and feels for every thing but human happiness, believe and trust, that there is yet a Providence who watches over the fate of empires--just and powerful to confound the devices of these Prosligate Traitors, and to turn to their own destruction, the blow which is aimed at our existence.

Paris, 12th Feb. 1798, (25 Pluviose, 6 Year.)

DEAR SIR,

LTHOUGH it is now a very confiderable time that we have not had the pleasure of hearing immediately from you yourself; yet, either by way of England, or by Citizens coming from America, we are feldom for a long time without tidings of a more or less particular nature concerning you. The last we received from a young Frenchman, who tells us, that he has been particularly acquainted with you, and rejoiced us with the agreeable information, that at the peace you would not fail to revisit Europe; and that he hoped you would fix yourfelf in this country. Whether you fix yourfelf here or in England, (as Eng-. land will then be) is probably a matter of little importance, except to your friends, who will naturally be anxious to have you each where themselves are fixed; but we all think, that you are misplaced where you are, though, no doubt, in the way of usefulness,* how-

Dr. Priestley is in the way of usefulness in America, because he is labouring there, as his associates are in Europe, to disunite the people from their government, and to introduce the blessings of French anarchy! But the sphere is too confined for his exertions. To produce the misery of four or five millions of men who have afforded him hospitality and protection, and to make the Western world the scene of desolation and confusion, is a result good as far as it goes, but hardly worth the labours of this great Prophet and Philosopher!—Æstuat infelix, augusto limite mundi.

ever the sphere may be diminished. As you have now a friend on the Continent who can discuss this point with you better than myself, I leave it to his and your meditation, and enter on other matters.

I presu ne you are not so far removed from the centre of the political world, in your retreat at Northumber-land, † as not to be duly informed of the principal events passing in Europe, although you may not know much of the detail. You will of course have heard that our old country is now the only one lest to struggle against the French Republic, and lest under every disadvantage that every friend to her real welfare would wish; namely, in a very fair way of accomplishing your prophetic discourses, delivered at various times, and divers manners, of which happily it took no account.

You will have heard of the vast armaments and preparations of every kind which have been making for some months past, and which are carrying forward with all that energy and activity which characterizes this nation, when they have a pu pose in hand which they must go through, cost what it will. Of it's cost they are well aware,* and I should make use of a term, very insignificant in the expression, if I said they were only enthusiastic to put their projects in execution, they are so earnest in it as if their existence here, and their Eternal welfare depended on the trial.—The invasion of England is a denrée, or merchandize of the first necessity

† In America, the place of Dr. Priestly's residence.

It may indeed be doubted, notwich tanding Mr. Stone's affertion, whether the Directory have yet learnt what the attempt will cost them, unless they have begun to calculate it on the feale of Marcou.

A famous Turkish general having after a siege of two months, and a loss of eight thousand men, taken the fort of St. Elmo, an inconside able fortress of Malta, exclaim d; "If this be the price of the daughter, what will the mo-

^{*} This passa e may serve to consute the soolish notion that France is unable to subdue us, is able to wear us out by a contempt of expense. The expenditure of France, little if at all inferior to ours, is drawn from the bowels of a totally exhausted country, without any means of external aid. Our navy by the protection of a continually increasing commerce, and by the consequent extension of a riculture and manusactures, tontains within itself the principle of its own supply. Nor is it probable that any member of the French government can even form an idea of the extent of our resources, when animated and called forth by the pirit which now prevails in England.

for them, and I should doubt whether any concession on the part of England could now avert the experiment; whether it will be a fatal one to it's government, time only can determine. In the mean time, the government here are putting in work every engine, attempting to engage every passion, to enlist every prejudice, nevertheless, always anxious to discriminate between the Government and the People, slattering the one, as much as they profess to execuate the other.*

While this last act of the French drama of this eventful struggle is taking place, the Republic has been playing a few interludes in various parts of Europe. You have heard of the destruction of the government of Venice, of the regeneration of that of Genoa, of the constitutional fermentation of the Cisalpine Republic;—the news of the present period is the fall of the Papal power, the possession of Rome by the French troops on account of the late massacre, + and the formation of this country into a new government under the name of the Roman Republic. In like manner as the French troops are now employed in pulling down the chief Spiritual Power in one part, another portion is occupied in overturning the genius of Aristocracy in the Swifs Cantons, each of which, under the influence of the French Republic, are busied in destroying their present tyrannic oligarchies, and melting the whole into an Helvetic Republic, founded on the basis of the Rights of Man, with a representative government. Of the nature of their past governments, and the abuses which

The preface has already pointed out this passage to the attention of all Englishmen. It contains the summary of all that we ever could have to fear in this country. But the game is no longer concealed—the disguise is gross and manifest. Venice, Genoa, and Swifferland, have taught us all to estimate the value of French fraternity. No artifices employed by France, no language used in this country, from whatever quarter it may come, will now divide the people from their government.

Are prisoners, women, priests, and children, butchered by thousands at a time, in cold blood, and with every aggravated circumstances of crueity?—These are talled Revolutionary incidents, ebullitions of popular zeal. But if, by the just resentment of a people whose religion he is insulting, and whose government he is labouring to overthrow, a Jacobin should perish in a riot of his own exciting, this becomes a massacre, for which no satisfaction will suffice, short of delivering over a whole nation to pillage and proscription, to anarchy and atheism.

they contain, you will have a pretty just idea, if two volumes in Octavo, of a View of Switzerland, written by Miss H. M. Williams, and now publishing in London, shall happen to fall into your hands.* The spirit of Equality, which has traversed the Alps, has also entered the Rhine. The province of Suabia, is in infurrection in divers places, and though troops are marching to endeavour to suppress it, we expect to hear that the contagion spreads more rapidly. The state of the empire is such, especially among the little provinces, as to encourage this spirit of revolt. France at present treats the whole so much de haut en bas, that the people can expect but sew sentiments of respect when they see their governors treated with so much contempt.†

The Congress assembled at Radstadt continue to object to the limits of the Rhine as the boundary of the French Republic; but as there is so much force on the one side, and so little reason on the other, it is easy to decide how the matter will be arranged. At present the Rhine is the boundary; the Court of Vienna has consented to the cession, having no personal interest to the contrary; and the King of Prussia has actually given up the provinces of Cleves and Guelders, and whatever other territory he held on this side the river. If, therefore, the Princes do not yield with a good grace to the present secularization, they will be compelled to a still greater; and probably at this moment it is finally and irrevocably, determined that the whole

Ecclesiastical part of Germany shall be securalized.

What

† No fentiment can be more just. It would be well if every government in Europe were impressed with this opinion. The late display of the Tricolor slag at Vienna, proves, among a thousand other instances, how attentive the Directory is to the principle on which the remark is grounded.

This passage affords a curious commentary on the work here mentioned, which in principle and sentiment can only be illustrated by the conduct of the semale Patriots, who, after the massacre of the 10th of August, stripped and mutilated the carcasses of the Swiss troops, who had then (as their brethren have since) fallen, in the discharge of their duty, and in the desence of a just cause. It must here be observed, that the unceasing industry with which the English press is loaded with libels on every established government, and on the whole state of society in Europe, under the form of novels, voyages, letters, and anecdotes, is one of those signs of the times (as Mr. Stone calls them) which most deserve the attention of those who wish well to morality and public order.

What compensation the King of Prussia receives is not yet decided on—it is probable he will have Hanover, if arrangements can be taken without hurting the interests of the neighbouring friendly powers, but nothing is yet finally fettled in that quarter.

Whatever can tend to humble the English government is most anxiously sought after, in whatever shape the mode of opposition presents itself. The only, or almost the only, outlet for English merchandize, is the port of Hamburgh. The French, who have at prefent long arms, have stretched out one of their fingers towards that town, and have, as we understand, even laid it on. We expect to hear every post that the port is shut against the English, and that the English merchandize which is emmagazined there, to the amount of three or four millions, is confiscated.* What the fate of these petty oligarchies in the North will be, is yet uncertain; whether these towns, such as Hamburgh, Embden, Franckfort, will remain as they are, under the great changes operating in the Empire; or whether they will be amalgamated with fome other territory,† and till the general day of deliverance arrives, which, according to the figns, does not appear to be at a very great distance.

Of those ancient and regular governments that will soon fall, Spain seems determined to take the lead. Every thing internal is big with revolution, according to all the accounts which travellers of observation and veracity bring us from thence. In addition to this, the French government are on the point of demanding a very serious explanation, why, during a year and a half of hostility with England, Spain has been more fedulous to help the common enemy, than aid the interests of her ally the French Republic. It is not very doubtful that one of the interludes before alluded to, will be the march of an army across the Pyrenees, through Madrid to Lifbon, unless the demands made by the French government be inflantly complied with, which are faid to be the delivery of the Spanish Fleet into the Hands of the French, to be put under the direction of French officers, and the invalion of the kingdom of Portugal by the Spanish Troops. In this alternative, it feems that Spain is placed, trembling on every fide for her present political existence, and with good reason to tremble. If these two governments, which will then form one, be also revolutionized, a confiderable portion of longitude and lattitude in Europe will take the Republican fystem, and we shall have made pretty decent progress, considering the little space of time we have had to operate in, and the obstacles we have hitherto met with, which are at present confiderably removed.

* The reader must not imagine that because this prediction has not yet been verified, it is therefore a proof of ignorance in the writer. It is known to many persons, that this project was actually decided upon by France, and that its execution was prevented only by the sear of opposition from those continental powers, the ruin of whose commerce was involved in the consequences of such a measure.

[†] Such is the nature of the acquisitions which the Directory encourages the Princes of Germany to make at the expence of their neighbours. They are to be annexed to their territories only for the present, and till the general deliverance arrives. A spirit of justice or wisdom is said to have influenced the two great powers of the Empire to reject these poisoned gifts, and to resuse to lend themselves to the accomplishment of such iniquitous and dangerous projects. May this be the symptom of returning reason on other points not less important!

Amidst these changes without, you will no doubt be furprized to hear of an unexpected change, that takes place from time to time, within. You will have trembled for our Constitution, and probably felt some alarm for liberty on the events of the 18 Fructidor; you will have felt similar disagreeable sensations, in hearing of the late arrests of the Deputies in Holland. These are events, no doubt very distressing; but unfortunately we are fo placed as to be obliged to commit one evil to avoid an accumulation;* no one pretends that either those men, at least the immense majority of them, who have been fent from time to time to Cayenne, or the Dutch Deputies now under arrest, are enemies either to Liberty or their respective Republics; no one of common sense entertains this opinion: Knowing many of this conquered Democrat feels remorfe and horror. Facilis descensus averni, Sed revocare gradum!

The invariable progress of guilt! The consequences of one crime produce the necessity of another, till at length a situation arises, from which there is no receding; but where the callous conscience, even of the most sanguinary conquered party intimately, I can aver, that they have left none behind more pure in manners, or more decided in favour of republican liberty. But, unfortunately, those of France suffered their personal passions to interfere with their political duties, and they lent unwittingly their aid to those who wished to crush the Republic, while their only aim was to crush the men in power, whom they confidered as usurpers, and whom they hated. The men in power were too well versed in Revolutions not to amalgamate their own personal enemies with those of the State; and hence arises the expedition to Cayenne. Take the inverse; suppose the conquered party had triumphed, we should have either an interminable civil war, or Royalty if it were possible for this exploded fystem to return, would have been restored. These exiles would themselves have been the first victims of their own operations. In Holland these deputies confirmed the government; in France the government overthrew the opposition, then the opposition overthrew the government. The government of Holland, though indebted for its political existence to France, has all along shewn a most misplaced spirit of independence; and although the restitution of its colonies feemed the only barrier to a peace with England, has manifested a considerable degree of tardiness to join in the operations against that power. The imprudent and ever suspected conduct of the government, in fending out the fleet to be taken by the English, and the reluctance they have shewn to come to any constitutional fettlement, on the basis of equality, such as it is now generally understood, has led the French government to lend its hand to the party of the opposition, who were more complying, and the government has changed its hands. It was not difficult to forefee that this event or a fimilar would take place. I had occasion to notice, during a short visit I made this last summer at the Hague, that cordiality between the two governments would not be of very long duration; and oftentimes they were told by M. Noel, the French ambaffador, as he himfelf informed me, that unless they would defer their extreme love of independence to a more convenient

French government in its great plan, they would rue the consequence,* which the event has justified. It is happy, however, that these evils are not out of the reach of repair—the peace will, no doubt, restore every ry thing to its original polition.

In the mean while every thing within is in a state of the most perfect tranquility. The public force has compressed the attempts both of Jacobins and Royalists, and there appears no kind of reason for supposing that we shall have any more of these civil movements at prefent. The country, fo far as respects its domicile state is more advantageously situated than any other in Europe. Agriculture was never fo much the rage, and manufactures, but for the great encouragement given to English produce, would have been equally thriving. Every thing in this country is as cheap again as in England; bread is from a half-penny to three farthings a pound; meat from threepence to fourpence, and other articles in proportion. † The difference of expence will no doubt make France the refidence of vaft numbers at the peace, independent of its other attractions, fuch as its being the centre of every thing that is fublime and elegant in the arts. The spoils of Italy are on their way to Paris. There will be collected in one point of view, especially since the late events at Rome, all that formerly attracted the vifits of travellers to various parts of Italy. The government is alfo folicitous to make the best use of the treasure which it possesses, by constructing museums, academies, walks; and by renovating the public promenades and gardens; recal, as far as possible, the brilliant, scientific, and literary æras of the Grecian republics.

If there is any thing that meets with discouragement from government in this country, that refers to public instruction, it is the remains of the Roman Catholic Religion, which, with all the letters and laws of tolerance which have been paffed, has not been able to raise itself up from under the crush of the interdict which the combined powers of philosophy and terror have laid on it. You have heard, no doubt, of the new fect which now has usurped every church in Paris, under the name of Theophilanthrophism. This fect is prohibited by the government; but it is in the hands of ignorant men, who do not know how to use the weapons that are put into their hands. They are, however, for the most part well intentioned; and were they the means of information, would probably make good Christians. Nothing is read here on these subjects; because nothing is wrote. We have feen nothing but Mr. Paine's Age of Reason; of which an immense edition in French was published, and not twenty copies were fold. I am told he has alfo been rejected from the fociety of the Theophilanthropes, on the charge of intolerance. They have, at least, refused his offers of public instruction. atheistical tracts have been published, which have been little attended to, and the mind is floating at prefent, not knowing on what ground to repose, unwilling to reject the Christian religion, and yet ignorant how to diffinguish the wheat from the chaff.

Our national institute goes on, reading and publishing, and has just appearance of activity, though nothing of very considerable importance has been done since its formation. I believe I mentioned to you in my last letter, that Favery is about to publish a History of Chemistry, or at least, is busily employed in writing, in the mode, as I understand from himself, of your History of Optics and Electricity. I have a packet of books done up for you, at a bookseller's; but the hopes of seeing you in France hindered me from sending them at the period I might have sent them, and now it would be extremely hazardous, since all American vessels are made prizes, and there is no security of conveyance; nevertheless, if I find a fortunate opportunity I shall fend them, for I fear that we shall yet delay to fee you here.

Whether we shall continue or increase our hostilities towards the United States, is as yet uncertain; all depends on the great operation directing against England.* If that succeeds, English influence will probably not predominate amongst you. In the mean time, it is most likely that the French will go on as at present, treating with as little ceremony as usual every thing that relates to America. John Adams's speech on the opening of congress caused a few similes; the more so, as it was understood to be a speech full of thunder and menace against France. Nothing is wanting but the interposition of some upright and patriotic citizen, to settle † the misunderstanding; but I fear it will not be done in John Adams's time.

I inclose a note for our friend M. B. P.; but as ignorant of the name he bears at present among you, I must beg you to seal and address it. We have heard nothing of him since his departure, and know but vaguely that he is secreted at present at Kennebeck. Mr. Skipwith has promised that a letter shall be conveyed safely to you: I have therefore taken the opportunity of writing you a triple letter; and but for sear of wearying your patience, so much multiplied are events, I could fill half a dozen more. The History of the events in France of the last year you will find pretty largely detailed in the New Annual Register, to which my present is a kind of supplement; but we hope that you will not long delay to be a fellow-wit-

This reference is very characteristic of the principles and views which have uniformly directed the publication here mentioned.

[&]quot;Mr. Stone's opinion on this point is not fingular. There are few persone in Europe or America who do not now seel that their existence depends on our safety. If more anxiety is not expressed on the subject by foreigners, it proceeds from the considence which our fleets inspire, and to which they are well entitled. We, for our part, have a stronger ground of considence—a considence IN OURSELVES.

[†] If report is to be credited, the Directory were by no means averse to settle the misunderstanding in the usual mode, of the particulars of which M. D'Aranjo, and other negociators, who have treated personally with them, can give a very accurate account, provided they are out the reach of a mandat d'arret. What pity that no upright and patriotic citizen could be found to comply with this upright and patriotic demand!

ments of them with ourselves. I remain, with sentiments of the highest respect, Your very faithful

And fincere friend,

J. H. STONE.

MY DEAR SIR,

VERY safe conveyance, by a friend of Mr. Skipwith, having prefented itself, I have taken occasion to address something like a packet to Dr. Priestley, and shall also take the same opportunity of fending a few lines to yourfelf. We rest in faith, that you are fafe and found on some portion of the great Continent; but in what fign of the zodiack, we are as ignorant as if you were in the moon. We have heard nothing of you, or from you, directly or indirectly, fince your departure; and, according to all appearance, shall have nothing from you till your return. I suppose, at least, you are within the knowledge of human events, which are paffing fo rapidly around us, as to furnish you with fufficient food for meditation even in your retreat. You will, no doubt, be a little furprifed, and not a little pleased, to know that there exifts two fuch powers in the world as the Roman Republic and the Helvetian Republic, one and indivisible. These operations are now taking place with great celerity; and, I suppose, it will not be long before you will hear of an Iberian Republic, of Lustianian Republic, &c. &c. &c. In short, the political world rolls fo rapidly, that we scarce have time to look around us, and admire the revolution of one fpot, before we are called off to look after another. Turkey is not exempt from the contagion. The Grecian States have felt the influence of the general infurrection, and both the northern and fouthern states in Europe, of this this empire, are in a state of rebellious combustion. You will also have been much surprised to have seen the history of our internal rebellions, fince your departure-the promotion and exile of Barthelemy-the promotion of Talleyrand, and his remaining in place*--the mission of our friend Gallois, &c. With respect to the events of the 18th Fructidor, you have, no doubt, from your very intimate knowledge of the politics of this country, drawn the just conclusions. It has been a happy event for the country, and attended with the happiest consequences. Regret no doubt that these individual evils take place, but incalculable evils have thereby been avoided; for though the conquered party HAD NO VIEW AGAINST THE REPU LIC, yet the hofts of emigrants and royalifts, armed and prepared for action, which at that time filled Paris, relied on this party for their support.

The government fince has conducted itself with great prudence and moderation, considering the circumstances in which it was placed. It has, however, taken a firm † and is likely to meet with no more disturbances. The minister who has the greatest influence, and who throws a lustre over the rest, is the Citizen Talleyrand. He so conducts himself, as not only to make his place respectable, but so as to insure his continuance in it. We are also good friends --I see him now and then at his hotel, and once or twice he has done me the honour of a visit. On occasions, which some day in the history of events I may tell you, he continually enquires for you, and begs his best remembrances. The great actor is the Director Merlin -- he was at our house the day before yesterday, and we renewed our acquaintance.

The

^{*} This is juftly stated. The promotion (as it is called) of a noble, a priest, a bishop, and an emigre, to be one of the ministers of the Directory, might well surprize a person who had probably seen and conversed with Talleyrand in America. To be promoted and then exiled, is not indeed matter of much surprize, but to be promoted and to remain for any considerable time in place has not happened to any revolutionist yet, and we believe it never will; though Mr. Stone tells us, that Talleyrand so conducts himself as to make his place respectable, and to insure his continuance in it.—Two things which do not seem very consistent, when applied to the situation of a Minister of the French Directory.

Neufchateau,* and his fuccessor will be named in consequence of a new regulation by the present legislature; so that the same spirit will continue to direct operations as before; The police is very strong and active; many towns in the South Army (among which Lyons) are put en etat de siege,† and every measure has been taken to repress the spirit of fanaticism and royalty, which, without the 18th Fructidor, would have overturned the Republic, or plunged it into the horrors of civil war and consustion.

Your convert is very bufy in collecting over the remains of his tottering faith; the good man has just written a letter to the Grand Inquisition of Spain, which translated into Spanish, is to be distributed in that country: Spain is not very far from a revolution, and it is likely that these latter events will take place before the English expedition, for which immense preparations are making. Of the revolution of Switzerland you will fee the accounts in the public papers. Our friend Le Grand is preparing a constitution for the new republic. Ochs has been very officious in this business, and has been here shewing himself off as the fole and great regenerator of his country. However, the thing is done; and the three coloured flag, with William Tell's hat, has displaced the I the Council House of Berne. You will probably see Miss W's two volumes of Travels by the time this reaches you.

And now a few words on Domestic affairs. The manufactory of which you laid the corner stone is now finished, and forms one of the finest establishments in France.

I Not legible,

^{*} This is the true system of a constitutional rotation of office by lot, when the person on whom the lot is to fall is known and declared, three months before the dice are cast. Since this was written, it is reported that these great men have quarrelled about the price of this political swindling, and that they are all to stand their lot except Merlin.

[†] Observe the picture drawn by these conspirators of the country in which they live, and which they say is in its domestic state more advantageously situated than the rest of Europe.—Its manusactures are annihilated, its religion is interdicted, the public mind is floating between athess and drivellers.—Is legislators and governors are seized and transported without the pretence of guilt—Its principal cities are in a state of siege—And all this is done to avoid an accumulation of worse evils!

France .-- But it has been subject to many mutations fince you left us :--- Mr. Parker, for instance, has met with fuch a reverse of fortune, that he has not been able to pay more than one-third of one action; --- neither De Wit nor Van Stephent, or any of their original properties, are any thing in it. But we have among our friends got a very respectable company, who have paid in their shares, and the establishment is new entirely. I have paid in two shares, and am allowed till Prairial to make up the third, by the pot or pearl ash we expect from America. If they do not arrive, I forfeit the pledge I have put in. Whether that is to come, if you would give us a fingle line to inform us, you would much oblige us. You will not be displeased at this work of your hands, when you come to fee what a fuperb place, as well as convenient one,

PRAY are you continuing your speculations on the great events? are you in the press?---Dr. G---- has written us that he has sent to your order the books you wrote.---Is there any thing here that we can send you?

P.S. If pot or pearl ash could be sent, and a credit of nine or twelve months given, it would answer the same purpose as if it was sent from the works. I shall then be in full cash to answer it.

The first opportunity, the French translation of my Swiss Travels---for I have no English copy in my posses since I is translated with great elegance by M. Say, Redacteur of the Decade Philosophique.---I flatter myfelf you will approve the spirit in which it is written.

The following new, very celebrated, and interesting Work, viz.

Dr. Robertson's History of British America:

Containing, The History of VIRGINIA to the year 1688, and the History o NEW-ENGLAND to the year 1652, being all the Doctor had completed previous to his death. It has lately been given to the Public with a Preface by his Son at Edinburgh, has already passed through three or four editions, and has been translated and published in French at Paris.

Mr. Robertson in bis Preface observes,

During the course of a tedious illness, which he early foresaw would have a fat il termination, Dr. Robertson at different times destroyed many of his papers: But after his death, I found that part of the History of British America which he had wrote many years before, and which is now offered to the Public. It is written with his own hand, as all his works were; it is as carefully corrected as any part of his Ma-nuferipts which I have ever feen; and he had thought it worthy of being preserved, as it escaped the slames to which so many other papers had been committed. I read it with the utmost attention; but, before I came to any resolution about the publication, I put the MSS. into the hands of some of those friends whom my father used to consult on such occasions, as it would have been rashness and presumption in me, to have trusted to my own partial decision. It was peruled by some other persons also, in whose taste and judgement I have the greatest confidence: By all of them I was encouraged to offer it to the Public, as a fra ment curious and interesting in itself, and not inferior to any of my father's other works."

The Editor of the Paris Edition of the foregoing Work in his advertisement of its Publication apostrophizes it in the following manner.

"Every thing ensures success to this Volume; the talents and reputation of the Author, and the impression still recent in the minds of all who have read the excellent work, of which this is the completion—all conspire to give it an extensive spread. The History of America was the master-piece of one of the two ablest, or rather one of the two only modern historians. He has created this part of history, distinguished this chaos of the New World, distinguished with the hand of a master the part of genius, fortune, courage and crime, and conquered as it were, America, for literary, commercial, and political Europe,

"To ensure this last volume circulation, it is necessary only to name its author, and to remark, it possesses all that acuteness of observation, that perspicuity of exposition, the art of referring effects to causes, and of mingling with the account of events, the wholesomest and most approved principles of morals and politics, for which this writer was so eminently conspicuous---In short, that it exhibits the talents of Robertson."

JAMES HUMPHREYS,

Being encouraged by a number of Gentlemen in the mercantile line to undertake the publishing a PRICE-CURRENT in this city, and they having engaged to give him every affiftance in their power to render it accurate and useful,

Proposes to print by Subscription,

The Philadelphia Price-Current, And Market-day Advertiser:

To be published every Wednesday and Saturday Morning,

On the following Conditions.

IT will be printed on four pages quarto; will contain the prices current (wholefale) at Philadelphia, with the duties on each article; the prices current at Boston, New-York, Charlestown, with those at London, the West-Indies, and elsewhere, as often as they can be procured accurate and to be relied on; the rates of insurance; the price of stocks; course of exchange, &c. &c. Likewise, a regular account of entries inward and outward; with such marine and other intelligence as shall be thought useful and important: And the remainder of the paper will be appropriated to advertisements.

The price to subscribers within the city and liberties, to whom it will be delivered at their houses, will be Four Dollars per annum; two dollars to be paid at the expiration of a month from its publication, and the remainder at the end of the year. Subscribers at a greater distance will have it sent to them agreeable to their directions, on paying two dollars at the time of subscribing; three more to be paid at the expiration of the year.

It is from the advice and to gratify the wish of a number of mercantile gentlemen, that the printer purposes publishing this Price-current in a quarto size in preserence to any other; and it is proposed to embrace the prices current, with such other matter as may be most material to send abroad, in the first two pages; appropriating the other two pages to such matter as may be more immediately domestic; and to advertisements.

From the Patronage now given to the above Price-Current the Printer flatters himself with the hopes of giving it to the Public in a little while; in the mean time he respectfully solicits the encouragement of the Public to his Subscription List.

An ENQUIRY into the DUTIES of the Female Sex.

BY THUMAS GISBORNE, M. A.

The following among others are the principal Subjects of this useful Work. Female Education. Of the mode of introducing Young Women into general Society. Female conversation and Epistolary Correspondence. Dress. Amusements. Excess in the Pursuits of Amusements. Employment of Time. Considerations antecedent to Marriage. Duties of Matrimonial Life, with a view to different Situations and Circumstances. Parental Duties. Duties of the middle Period of Life. Duties of the Decline of Life.

From the Title of the foregoing Work it may perhaps be imagined, that the Enquiry is altogether and exclusively directed to the Duties of the Female Sex: It therefore, may not be unnecessary, or unuseful, to remark, that many of the Chapters contain Matter relative to the Conduct of both Sexes, and particularly those which relate to the—Duties of matrimonial Life—Parental Duties—Duties of the Middle Period—and of the Decline of Life. And the Reader of either Sex, that peruses this Work with a View of gaining Information leading to substantial Pleasure, will assuredly not be disappointed. In Fact, it is a Work interesting to the Happiness of Society, and must be useful wherever read; tending not only to point out in easy and engaging Language, the Paths that lead the youthful Mind to Happiness and Comfort, but those also, in the Walk of which, the Parent and she Middle Period of Life shall find sincere Delight, and declining Years render themselves comfortable and happy with all around them. all around them.
