2. Lep'ra ni'gricans seu me'las seu maculo'sa ni'gra, Vitili'go me'las seu ni'gra, Morphæ'a seu Al'baras ni'gra, Me'las, Lepido'sis lepri'asis ni'gricans, Black leprosy, in which the scales are livid; the size of half a dollar; and diffused over the body, but less widely than in the Al'phoi'des. The French pathologists usually admit three species of lepra, to which they give the epithets scaly (squameuse), crustaceous (crustacée), and tubercular (tuberculeuse), according as the skin may be covered with scales, crusts, or tubercles.

3. Lep'ra vulga'ris, Lepido'sis lepri'asis vulga'ris, Dartre furfuracée arrondie of Alibert, Boak, characterized as follows: scales glabrous, whitish, size of a crown piece; preceded by smaller reddish and glossy elevations of the skin, encircled by a dry, red, and slightly elevated border; often confluent; sometimes covering the whole of the body except the face.

When associated with syphilis, Lepra is called Syphilitic lepra, L. syphilitica.

Lepra appears to be endemic in Egypt, in Java, and certain parts of Norway and Sweden. Imperfect and faulty nutriment seems to contribute to its development. The means, best adapted for its removal, are:—a mild, unirritating diet, emollient fomentations—sulphureous baths, fumigations, &c.; but, often, all remedial agents will be found ineffectual. Other forms of lepra have been described, as L. Punctata, L. Gutta, L. Nummularis, L. Inveterata, L. Diffusa, &c.

Leptandra Virgin'ica, (lepto, and ανθη, 'an anther,') Veronica seu Pæderota Virgin'ica, Cul'ver's phys'ic. Ord. Scrophulariaceæ. An indigenous plant, which grows throughout the United States, and flowers in August. The flowers are white, and terminate the stem in a long spike. The root, Leptandra, is officinal. A variety with purple flowers has been described, as LEPTAN'DRA PURPU'REA, Phys'ic root, Black root, Whorl'wort, Cul'ver's root, Brin'ton root, Bow'man root. The root is bitter and nauseous, and when fresh is emetic and cathartic. In the dried state it is more uncertain. Dose of the powder, gr. xx. to ʒi.

Lep'to, (from λεπτος), in composition, thin, light.

Leptocephalia, (lepto, and κεφαλη, 'head,') Monstrosity, in which the head is abnormally small.

Leptocephal'ic. Having the head abnormally small.

Leptochro'a, Lep'tochros, (lepto, and χρῶς, χρῶμα, 'the color of the skin: the skin,') Fineness, thinness of skin.

Leptochym'ia, (lepto, and χυμος, 'a juice,') Morbid thinness of the juices.

Leptohyme'nia, (lepto, and εμην, 'a membrane,') Thinness, delicacy of membrane.

Leptomer'ia, (lepto, and μερος, 'a part,') Fineness, delicacy of bodily formation.

Leptomeningi'tis, (lepto, and μηνιγξ, 'membrane,') Inflammation of thin membranes. It includes arachnitis, meningitis, and encephalitis.

Leptontiques, (λεπτονειω, 'I make thin,') Attenuants.

Leptopho'nia, (lepto, and φωνη, 'voice,') Oxyphonia.

Leuc'in, Leuc'ine, (from λευκος, 'white,') A white crystalline substance, in composition and properties homologous with sugar of gelatin. It results from the disintegration of albuminous substances which are well supplied with nitrogen. It is found in the pancreas, spleen, thymus, &c., and is produced in gangrene of the liver, spleen, lungs, &c., in the urine in typhoid fever, and in acute yellow atrophy of the liver, to which last affection Dr. H. C. Wood has applied the term Leucino'sis, leucin being one of its chief products.

sis, Albu'go, Al'bula, Ceratoleuco'ma, Cor'nea opa'ca, Ephel'otes. Leucoma and Albugo are often used synonymously to denote a white opacity of the cornea. Both are essentially different from nebula of the cornea; nebula being usually the result of chronic ophthalmia and an effusion of a milky serum into the texture of the delicate continuation of the conjunctiva over the cornea:—the others are the result of violent, acute ophthalmia. In this state, a thick, coagulable lymph is extravasated from the arteries, sometimes superficially, at other times deeply into the substance of the cornea. On other occasions, the disease consists of a firm, callous cicatrix on this membrane,—the effect of a wound or ulcer with loss of substance. The affection is more difficult of cure in proportion to its duration and to the age of the individual; the activity of the absorbents being greater in youth. If inflammation still exist, antiphlogistics must be persevered in, and, afterwards, gentle stimulants be used to excite absorption; along with the internal use of mercury or iodine.

It is often attended with pain and a sense of heaviness in the loins, abdomen, and thighs; disordered digestive functions, &c., so that, at times, the health suffers largely, although there are few females who are not occasionally subject to moderate leucorrhœa. Attention to the general health, change of air, keeping up a perspirable state of the surface by flannel worn next the skin, the horizontal posture, &c., do more than pharmaceutical agents; which are almost entirely confined to astringent injections. These may be employed, when the discharge is so great as to require them. Vul'var leucorrhæ'a sometimes occurs, in childhood especially; and Cer'vical leucorrhœa, chiefly mucous, is met with at the child-bearing period.

Leuco'ses, (from λευκος, 'white,' and osis.) In the nosology of M. Alibert, all the diseases of the lymphatic apparatus. The 7th family in his Nosologie. In that of Fuchs it is a family of diseases, (G.) Leukosen, which includes the various forms of anæmia.

Leuco'sis, (λευκωσις.) Leucoma, Paleness. See Albino.

Leuco'sus, Leuco'sus. An epithet applied to people characterized by fair complexion and red or yellow hair.

Leuk or Locche or Louèche, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Saline chalybeate waters, about six leagues distant from Sion, in Switzerland. There are 23 thermal springs, varying from 95° to 124°. They contain chiefly the sulphate of lime, with sulphates of magnesia, soda, &c. The waters are used externally by a daily systematized bathing in cases of scrofula, enlargement of the liver and spleen, obstinate eczema and psoriasis, old ulcers, &c.

Levant' Worm'seed, Artemisia santonica.

Leva'tor, (levare, 'to raise.') Elevator.

LEVA'TOR AN'GULI O'RIS, Abdu'cens labio'rum, Eleva'tor labiorum commu'nis, Caninus, (F.) Sus-maxillo-labial, Petit sus-maxillo-labial, (Ch.) Muscle canin. A small, flat, long, quadrilateral muscle, which arises from the fossa canina, and is inserted at the commissure of the lips, where it is confounded with the triangularis. It raises the corner of the mouth, and draws it towards the ear.

LEVA'TOR A'NI, Levator may'nus seu inter'nus,

La'tus a'ni, Eleva'tor a'ni, Se'dem attol'lens, Diaphrag'ma pel'vis, (F.) Pubio-coccygien annulaire, Sous-pubio-coccygien, (Ch.) Releveur de l'anus. A muscle situate at the lower part of the pelvis. It is broad, flat, quadrilateral, and broader above than below. It represents a kind of membranous partition, which closes the outlet of the pelvis, and the upper concavity of which is opposed to that of the diaphragm. It is attached, above, to the posterior surface of the body of the pubis, to the upper part of the obturator foramen, and to the spine of the ischium, and is inserted into the coccyx, into an aponeurotic line common to it and its fellow, and into the lateral parts of the rectum. This muscle supports the rectum; raises it, and carries it upwards during the evacuation of the excrement. It can, also, compress the bladder and vesiculæ seminales, and thus favor the expulsion of the urine and sperm.

LEVA'TOR A'NI PAR'vus, Transversus perinaei—1. Auris, Attollens aurem—1. Coccygis, Coccygeus.

LEVA'TOR seu AZ'YGOS GLAN'DULÆ THYROI'DEÆ, Hyothyroidien of Duverney. A muscle occasionally found connected with the upper border or isthmus of the thyroid gland; and attached superiorly to the body of the os hyoides, or to the thyroid cartilage.

LEVA'TOR HU'MERI INTER'NUS, Coraco-brachialis.

LEVA'TOR LA'BII INFERIO'RIS, L. men'ti, Eleva'tor labii inferio'ris seu labii inferioris pro'prius, Incisi'vus infe'rior, Musculus penicilla'tus, (F.) Houppé du menton, Releveur de la lèvre inférieure ou du menton. A portion of the mento-labial of Chaussier. A small muscle situate before the symphysis menti. It is thick, conical, and attached by its apex to a fossette at the side of the symphysis in the inferior maxillary bone. Its fibres proceed, diverging and vanishing in the manner of a tuft, (F.) Houppé, on the skin of the chin. This muscle raises the chin, and pushes upwards the lower lip.

LEVA'TOR LA'BII SUPERIO'RIS A'LEQUE NA'SI, Incisi'vus latera'lis et pyramida'lis, (F.) Grand sus-maxillo-labial, (Ch.) Élévateur commun de l'aile du nez et de la lèvre supérieure. This muscle is a fleshy, thin, triangular bundle, situate at the sides of the nose. It arises from the ascending process of the superior maxillary bone; thence its fibres descend in a diverging manner, a part being inserted into the ala of the nose, and a part losing themselves in the upper lip. This muscle raises the upper lip and ala nasi, which it draws a little outwards.

LEVA'TOR LA'BII SUPERIO'RIS PRO'PRIUS, Musculus incisi'vus infe'rior, Menta'lis, Eleva'tor labii superio'ris pro'prius, (F.) Moyen sus-maxillo-labial, (Ch.) Orbito-maxillo-labial. This thin, flat, quadrilateral muscle is situate at the middle and inner part of the face. It arises from the os malæ and the os maxillare superius, and is inserted into the upper lip, which it raises, at the same time carrying it a little outwards.

LEVA'TOR MEN'TI, Levator labii inferioris.

LEVA'TOR OC'ULI, Rectus superior oculi.

LEVA'TOR PALA'TI, L. Pala'ti mol'lis, Petro-salpin'gostaphyli'nus, Salpin'gostaphyli'nus inter'nus, Salpin'gostaphyli'nus, Pter'ygostaphyli'nus exter'nus, Sphe'nostaphyli'nus, Sphe'nopalati'nus, Peristaphyli'nus inter'nus supe'rior, Péto-staphylin, (Ch.). This muscle is long, narrow, and almost round above; broader and flatter inferiorly. It arises from the lower surface of the pars petrosa; from the cartilage of the Eustachian tube; and is inserted into the substance of the velum palati. Its use is to raise the velum palati.

LEVA'TOR PAL'PEBRÆ SUPERIO'RIS, Pal'pebræ superio'ris pri'mus, Aper'tor oc'uli, Aperiens palpebra'rum rec'tus, Reclu'sor palpebra'rum, (F.) Orbitro-palpébral, (Ch.) Orbito-sus-palpébral, Élévateur de la paupière supérieure. A long, small, thin muscle, situate at the upper part of the orbital cavity. By its posterior extremity it is inserted into the little ala of the sphenoid bone, immediately in front of the foramen opticum, and by its anterior extremity, which is expanded, it terminates at the upper margin of the tarsal cartilage of the eyelid. This muscle raises the upper eyelid, draws it backwards, and sinks it into the orbit.

LEVA'TOR PERINÆI. A form of vaginal speculum intended to raise the perinæum, to facilitate uterine exploration.

LEVA'TOR PHARYNGIS, Stylopharyngeus.

LEVA'TOR PROSTATÆ, (F.) Releveur de la prostate. Santorini has given this name to the anterior fibres of the levatorani, which embrace the prostate.

LEVA'TOR SCAP'ULÆ seu AN'GULI SCAP'ULÆ, Elevator scap'ule, E. seu Musculus Patien'tiæ, Angula'ris, Leva'tor proprius scap'ule, (F.) Trachéoscapulaire, (Ch.) Angulaire de l'omoplate, Releveur de l'omoplate. This muscle is so called because it is attached to the upper and internal angle of the scapula. It is situate at the posterior and lateral part of the neck, and at the upper part of the back. It is long, flat, and broader above than below. In this latter direction, it is inserted into the superior internal angle of the scapula; and in the former, into the tops of the transverse processes of the first four cervical vertebrae. It depresses the prominence of the shoulder by raising the posterior angle of the scapula, on which it impresses a kind of rotary motion. It can, also, draw the head to one side.

LEVA'TOR PRO'PRIUS SCAP'ULÆ, Levator scap'ule.

LEVA'TOR URE'THRAE, (F.) Releveur de l'Urèthre. Santorini describes under this name a portion of the transversus perinæi muscle.

LEVA'TOR U'VULÆ, Azygos muscle.

Levato'res (pl. of Levator) Costa'rum, Supracostales.

Lev'en, (from levare, 'to raise,') Ferment.

Le'ver, (from levare, 'to lift up,') Vec'tis, Moch'lus, Porrec'tum. An inflexible rod, turning round a fixed point, and used for moving bodies, bearing burdens, or raising them. The point on which the lever moves is called the Ful'crum Hypomoch'lion. The force which moves the lever is called the power; and the weight to be moved the resistance. There are three kinds of levers. A lever of the first kind has the fulcrum between the power and resistance. A lever of the second kind has the resistance between the fulcrum and power; whilst a lever of the third kind has the power between the fulcrum and resistance. In the locomotive system of the human body, we have examples of all the three kinds. The bones represent levers; the muscles of locomotion are powers; the weight of parts to be moved constitutes the resistance. The fulcra are, at times, the joints; at others, the ground, &c. The head moves on the neck as a lever of the first kind; the first cervical vertebra forming the fulcrum. We rise on tiptoe by a lever of the second kind, the fulcrum being the ground under the toes; and we have examples of a lever of the third kind in the flexion of the forearm on the arm, in the elevation of the arm, &c.

LE'VER, Hysteromoch'lum, Mochlis'cus, Vec'tis obstetric'ius, Vec'tis, (F.) Levier, is an instrument curved at the extremity, and having a fenestra. It is used to assist the extraction of the child's head when instrumental aid is necessary, either as a lever proper or as a tractor. Levers are also used by the dentist for extracting stumps, &c. The Levier de l'Écluse, Langue de Carpe, Pied de biche, Punch, is employed for extracting the molar teeth.

Levi'athan Pe'nis, Pria'pus Ce'ti, Bale'nas.

The penis of the whale. This singular medicine was at one time given in powder in cases of dysentery and leucorrhœa.

Levier, Lever — l. de l'Écluse, see Lever.

Leviga'tion, Læviga'tio, (lævigare, lævigatum, — lævis, 'smooth, — 'to bruise small,') Porphy-riza'tion. An operation by which bodies are reduced to very fine powder. It is performed by putting substances already pulverized into water; the coarser parts are not long in being deposited, whilst the finer molecules remain suspended in the water. The liquor is decanted into another vessel, and suffered to remain at rest until the fine particles are collected at the bottom. The fluid part is then separated by decantation. See Elutriation.

Levis'ticum, Ligusticum levisticum.

Lèvre, (from labrum,) Lip.

Levûre, (from levare, 'to raise,') Yest — l. de la Bière, Yest.

Lexiphar'macus, (λεξις, 'cessation,' and φαρμακον, 'a poison,') Alexipharmic.

Lexipyret'icus, (λεξις, 'cessation,' and πυρ, 'fire, fever,') Febrifuge.

Ley, Lixivium, Lye — l. Soap, Liquor potassæ.

Leyse'ra Gnaphaloid'es, (after Fr. W. von Leyser, of Halle.) A South African plant, Nat. Ord. Compositæ, which is emollient, and highly recommended at the Cape in catarrh, cough, and even in phthisis.

Lézard, Lizard.

Liane à Réglisse, Abrus precatorius.

Lia'tris Spica'ta, Gayfeather, But'ton snake-root. Ord. Compositæ. An indigenous plant, growing in meadows and moist grounds in the Middle and Southern States. Its beautiful purple compound flowers are in a spike. They appear in August. The root has been considered diuretic.

LIA'TRIS SCARIO'SA and L. SQUARRO'SA, Throatwort, Sow'wort, Back'ache root, Devil'sbite, Bla'zing star, Prair'ie pines, Rough root, are called, from their reputed powers in bites from the rattlesnake, Rattlesnake's master. The roots, bruised, are applied to the wound, and the decoction, in milk, is given internally.

Libano'tis An'nua, (from λιβανος, 'the frankincense tree,') Athamanta cretensis — l. Coronaria, Rosmarinus — l. Cretensis, Athamanta cretensis — l. Hirsuta, Athamanta cretensis.

Libano'tus, see Juniperus lycia.

Lib'anus, (λιβανος,) Juniperus lycia.

Li'ber (gen. Li'bri) Pharmaceut'icus, ('pharmaceutical book,') Dispensatory.

Libid'inis (gen. of Libi'do) Se'des, ('seat of lust,') Clitoris.

Libidino'sus, (libido, gen. libid'inis, 'lust,') Libidinous.

Libid'inous, Libidino'sus, Lasci'vus, Veneriv'agus, Lech'erous, Lick'orous. Lewd; lustful.

Libi'do, gen. Libid'inus. Desire, necessity. Authors speak of Libi'do uri'næ, Libi'do intesti'ni. Some employ it synonymously with Pruri'go; others, with Salac'itas, Libi'do, Hi'meros.

Li'bos, (λιβος, from λιβω, 'I drop,') A defluxion from the eyes.

Li'bra, (λίτρα,) Pound.

Licen'tiate, (licet, 'it is permitted,') Permis'sus, (F.) Licencié. One licensed to practise his profession.

Li'chanos, (λιχανος,) Index, see Digitus.

Liche, Body.

Li'chen, gen. Liche'nis, (λιχην or λιχην, pronounced li'ken,) Exor'mia Li'chen, Lei'chen, Serpi'go, Volat'ica, Pop'ulæ, P. sic'cæ, Peti'go, Pus-tulæ sic'cæ, Sea'bies sic'cæ seu a'gria, Licheni'axis adulto'rum, Li'chenous rash, (F.) Gale sèche, Dartre furfuracée volante, Poussée. The cutaneous affection described under this name by the Greek writers is not clearly defined. Some have believed it to be Impetigo, but this is doubtful. The name is now generally applied to a diffuse eruption of red pimples, accompanied by a troublesome sense of tingling or pricking. Drs. Willan and Bateman define it—"an extensive eruption of papule affecting adults, connected with internal disorder, usually terminating in scurf; recurrent, not contagious." One of their varieties, however, the Lichen Tropicus, does not accord well with this definition, for it affects children as well as adults, and is unconnected with internal disorder.

LI'CHEN A'GRIUS, L. A'gria, Exor'mia Li'chen fe'rus, Li'chen fe'rus, Pap'ula a'gria, Wild Li'chen, is distinguished by pimples in clusters or patches, surrounded by a red halo; the cuticle growing gradually harsh, thickened, and chappy, often preceded by general irritation. In addition to antiphlogistics, a cooling ointment may be used, to allay itching.

LI'CHEN BARBA'TUS PLICA'TUS, L. plicatus.

LI'CHEN CIRCUMSCRIP'TUS is characterized by clusters or patches of papule, having a well defined margin, and an irregularly circular form, continuing for six or eight weeks. These varieties require but little medical treatment. The antiphlogistic plan is all that is necessary.

LI'CHEN FE'RU, Lichen agrius.

LI'CHEN GYRA'TUS. This is nothing more than the coalescence of several circles of lichen circumscriptus.

LI'CHEN LIV'IDUS. The papule have a dark red or livid hue, without any fever. They are more permanent in this variety. It requires the mineral acids and bark.

LI'CHEN, NET'TLE, Lichen urticatus.

LI'CHEN PILA'RI, Exor'mia Li'chen pila'ris, is merely a modification of the preceding, the papule appearing at the roots of the hair.

LI'CHEN PLA'NUS. A chronic eruption of crimson-red papules, flattened, smooth, described by Mr. E. Wilson as occurring on the front of the forearm above the wrist, the waist, place of attachment of the garter, etc.

LI'CHEN PRURIGINOSUS, see Strophulus.

LI'CHEN SIM'PLEX, Exor'mia Li'chen sim'plex, consists of an eruption of red papule, appearing first on the face or arms, and afterwards extending over the body, preceded for a few days by slight febrile irritation, which usually ceases when the eruption appears—with an unpleasant sense of tingling during the night. It generally dies away in ten days or a fortnight.

LI'CHEN TROP'ICUS, Exor'mia Li'chen trop'icus, Eczema, Es'sera [?], Sudam'ina [?], Prick'ly heat, Sum'mer rash. The pimples are bright red, and of the size of a small pin's head, with heat, itching, and pricking, as if by needles. It is local, produced by excessive heat, and disappears when the weather becomes cooler, or the individual is inured to the climate. An eczematous affection called chunu, produced by the same cause as Lichen tropicus, is described by Tschudi as prevalent in the elevated plains of Peru.

LI'CHEN URTICA'TUS, L. Urtico'sus, Exor'mia Li'chen urtico'sus, is another variety. The Net'tle Li'chen consists of papule accompanied by wheals, like those of nettle rash. A variety of this is said to be called, in America, blights.

LI'CHEN, VACC'INE, see Roseola.

LI'CHEN, WILD, Lichen agrius.

Li'chen Aphtho'sus, Pelti'dea aphtho'sa—Ord. Lichenaceæ—is said to be cathartic and anthelmintic.

sima seu spu'ria, Ash-colored ground liv'erwort, (F.) Lichen contre-rage, Lichen blanc de neige. This cryptogamous plant was for a long time considered capable of preventing and curing Rabies canina. It has also been used in mania and in spasmodic asthma.

LI'CHEN ISLAN'DICUS, L. eryngifolius, Lichenoides Islan'dicum, Loba'ria Islan'dica, Mus'cus Islan'dicus seu cathar'ticus, Clado'nia seu Phys'cia seu Cetra'ria seu Parmelia Islan'dica, Ice-land Li'chen or Liv'erwort or Moss, (F.) Lichen d'Islande, Mousse marine perlée, Mousse d'Islande. This plant is inodorous, with a bitter and mucilaginous taste. It is esteemed to be tonic, demulcent, and nutrient. Dose, \mathfrak{zj} . to $\mathfrak{z}iv$., being first steeped in water holding in solution some carbonate of potassa to extract the bitter, and then boiled in milk. A bitter principle has been extracted from it, termed Cetrarin, Cetrarinum, Cetra'rium, Li'chenin, which has been given in intermittents.

LI'CHEN PLICA'TUS, L. hirtus seu barba'tus plicatus seu Flor'idus hirtus, Parmelia plicata, Usne'a plicata, U. hirta seu Flor'ida hirta, Mus'cus arbo'reus seu al'bus seu quer'nus, Querc'ina Her'ba. This plant is applied by the Laplanders as an astringent to bleeding vessels; and to parts which are excoriated after long journeys.

LI'CHEN PULMONA'RIS, L. arborum seu reticula'tus, Parmelia pulmona'cea, Reticula'tus officinalis, Mus'cus pulmona'rius querc'inus, Pulmona'ria arbo'rea, Loba'ria pulmona'ria, Stict'ia pulmona'cea, Oak Lungs, Tree Lung'wort, Ha'zel Crot'tles, Ha'zelraw, (F.) Lichen pulmonaire, Pulmonaire en arbre ou de chêne. This plant is subastringent, and rather acid. It was once in high repute for curing diseases of the lungs.

LI'CHEN PYXIDA'TUS, Mus'cus Pyxida'tus, Scyphoph'orus pyxida'tus, Mus'cus pyxo'id des terres'tris, Li'chen pyxida'tus ma'ior seu cocciferus, Her'ba Ig'nis, Cup Moss, (F.) Lichen entonnoir, Lichen Boëtier, L. Pyxidé. This plant is subastringent, and has been used in decoction in whooping-cough.

Lichen contre Rage, L. caninus.

LI'CHEN RETICULA'TUS, L. pulmonarius.

LI'CHEN ROCCEL'LA, Parmelia roccel'la, Roc'cella, R. tinctoria, Seta'ria roccel'la, Lit'mus, Lac'mus, L. tinctorius, Or'chill, Canary Ar'chell, Chin'ny Weed, Herb Ar'chell, Turn'sole, (F.) Orseille, Tournesol. The chief use of this plant is as a blue dye. It has been employed to allay cough in phthisis, &c.

The blue pigment—Lit'mus—is much used as a delicate test for acid—in the urine for example. Blue Litmus paper is unsized paper steeped in tincture of litmus—which is made of Litmus powder, $\mathfrak{z}j$., Proof spirit, $\mathfrak{f}3x$., and dried. It is reddened by acids. Red litmus paper is unsized paper steeped in tincture of litmus, which has been previously reddened by the addition of a very small quantity of sulphuric acid, and dried. The blue color is restored by alkalies.

LI'CHEN, ROCK, Tripe de roche.

LI'CHEN SAXAT'ILIS, L. tinctorius seu lacinia'tus, Parmelia saxat'ilis, Imbrica'ria saxat'ilis, Loba'ria saxat'ilis, Mus'cus seu Usne'a Cra'nii huma'ni. This moss, when found growing on a human skull, was formerly in high estimation against head affections, &c.

Licheni'asis Adulto'rum, Lichen—1. Strophulus, Strophulus.

Li'chenin. See Lichen Islandicus.

Li'chenoid, Lichenoides, (lichen, and αἶδος, 'resemblance.') Resembling lichen.

Lichenoides, Lichenoid—1. Islandicum, Lichen islandicus.

Li'chenous, Licheno'sus. Relating or appertaining to lichen.

Licin'ium, (from linum, 'thread' [?], Tent.

Lick'orous, Libidinous.

Lic'orice, Glycyrrhiza.

Licul'men, gen. Licul'minis, Garum.

Lieb'enstein, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These waters, situated in the duchy of Saxe-Meiningen, are among the strongest acidulous chalybeates in Germany. They contain sulphate of soda, chloride of sodium, sulphate of lime, chloride of calcium, carbonate of lime, chloride of magnesium, and carbonate of iron.

Lieb'erkühn's Glands or Fol'licles or Crypts, Glandulæ seu Cryptæ Lieberkuhnia'næ, so called from their first describer, are fine, columnar, blind sacs, the openings of which are from 1-20th to 1-30th of a line in diameter, so closely placed over the whole of the small intestine as to give the mucous membrane a general sieve-like or perforated appearance. They secrete the succus entericus.

Liebw'er'da, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Liebw'er'da is a Bohemian village, near the Silesian frontier. The springs are much frequented. There are four, all of which are rich in carbonic acid, and contain but little saline matter.

Liège, (from leger, 'light,') Suber.

Lien, (F.) (from lier, [L.] ligare, 'to bind,') Vin'culum. A band, strap or garter, used in certain operations; as to tie patients during the operation of lithotomy; to fix the apparatus in fracture, &c.

Li'en, gen. Lienis, Spleen—1. Accessorius, Lienculus—1. Ingens, Splenoncus—1. Succenturiatus, Lienculus.

Lienculus, (dim. of lien, 'spleen,') Lien succenturiatus seu accessorius, Splen'culus. A small supernumerary, accessory, or supplementary spleen. Sometimes there are quite a number of nodules, similar in structure to the spleen, near its lower extremity.

Lienitis, gen. Lienitidis, (lien, and itis,) Splenitis.

Lieno'sus, Splenic.

Lienter'ic, Lienter'icus, (F.) Lientérique. Relating or appertaining to lientery.

Lientérie, Lientery.

Li'entery, Lienteria, (λαγος, laeis, 'smooth,' 'slippery,' and εντερον, 'intestine,') Læ'vitas seu Lax'itas intestino'rum, Diarrhœa lienteria seu lienter'ica, Flux'us lienter'icus, Chymorrhœa seu Lax'itas ingesto'rum, Bromatoëc'crisis, Diarrhœa Dyspep'tica seu cum Apep'sid seu Ingesto'rum, (F.) Lientérie, Slip'periness of the Guts. Frequent liquid evacuations, the food only half digested. This condition is always symptomatic of great irritation in the intestinal canal, the sensibility of which is so much augmented that it cannot bear the sojourn of the food in it.

Lierre, Hedera helix—1. Grimpant, Hedera helix—1. Terrestre, Glechoma hederacea.

Life, (Sax. ly, lý,) Vi'ta, Bi'os, Bi'otê, Bi'otos, Zo'ê, Pneum'a, Spir'itus, (F.) Vie. The state of organized beings, during which, owing to the union of an unknown force with matter, they are capable of performing functions different from those that regulate other natural bodies; all of which functions, however numerous and diversified, work to one end. Life has only a limited duration; beyond which—the organic functions ceasing to be executed—the body is given up to the agency of chemical affinity. Hence Bichat has defined life to be—the aggregate of the functions which resist death. It is the vital vortex of M. Quatrefages. On account of the difference that exists among the vital functions, he applied the term Organic Life to the functions inservient to composition and decomposition; as digestion, respiration, circulation, calorification, absorption, secretion, and nutrition; and Animal Life, to the functions which connect man and animals with external bodies; as the understanding, sensations, locomotion, and voice.

LIFE BLOOD. A term commonly used for a twitching or quivering of the eyelids—a kind of involuntary or muscular tic. See Cillo.

LIFE, DURA'TION OF, see Longevity—1. Everlasting, Gnaphalium margaritaceum—1. Everlasting, plaintain, Antennaria plantaginifolia—1. Everlasting, sweetscented, Gnaphalium polycephalum—1. Expectation of, see Longevity.

LIFE INSURANCE. A contract entered into, usually by an insurance company, to pay a certain sum of money on a person's death, on the condition of his paying an annual premium during his life. The medical practitioner may be applied to, to certify that the life of the insured is one that is insurable according to the rules of the company.

LIFE ROOT, Senecio aureus—1. Value of, see Longevity, and Mortality.

Life's Blood, Lifeblood, Cillo.

Ligament, Ligamen'tum, (ligare, ligatum, 'to bind,') Des'mus, Syndes'mus, Colliga'men, Cop'ula. A name given to fibrous structures, which serve to unite bones, and to form articulations; hence the division into interos'seous and artic'ular ligaments. They are of a white, close texture; are but little extensible, and difficult to break. The name ligament has, also, been given to any membranous fold, which retains an organ in its situation.

TABLE OF THE PRINCIPAL LIGAMENTS.

	Capsular ligament.
	Suspensory ligament of the stylo-glossus.
1. Of the Lower Jaw.	Lateral ligament.
	Two capsular ligaments between atlas and head.
	Circular ligament.
2. Connecting the Head with the first and second Vertebrae, and these with each other.	Two capsular between atlas and axis.
	Perpendicular ligament.
	Two lateral or moderator ligaments.
	Transverse ligament and its appendices.
	Anterior common.
	Crucial intervertebral.
	Ligaments running from the edge of the bony arch and spinous process of one vertebra to that of the next.
3. Of the other Vertebrae.	Interspinous ligament.
	Ligamentum nuchæ.
	Intertransverse.
	Capsular.
	Posterior or internal common.
	Capsular of the head of ribs.
	Capsular of the tubercles.
	Ligamenta transversaria interna.
	Ligamenta transversaria externa.
	Ligamenta cervicis costarum externa.
	Ligamentous fibres running from the margins of the extremities of the ribs to the corresponding cartilages.
4. Of the Ribs, Sternum, &c.	Radiated ligaments from cartilage of ribs to the sternum.
	Capsular ligaments of the cartilages of the ribs.
	Proper membrane of sternum.
	L. of cartilago ensiformis.
	Tendinous expansions over the intercostales, &c.

- Two transverse, — one superior, one inferior.
Iliosacral.
Capsular of the sacroiliac synchondrosis.
Two sacrospinous, — posterior and anterior, with the superior and inferior appendices.
Longitudinal of os coccygis.
Inguinal ligament.
Capsular of symphysis pubis.
Ligament of foramen thyroideum.
5. Of the Pelvis.....
- Radiated ligament.
Capsular.
Interclavicular.
Ligamentum rhomboideum.
Claviculohumeral.
Conoid.
Trapezoid.
6. Of the Clavicle.....
- Anterior triangular.
Proper posterior.
7. Of the Scapula.....
- Capsular.
8. Of the Shoulder-joint.
- Capsular.
Brachiohumeral.
Brachioradial.
Coronary of the radius.
Anterior and posterior accessory.
Intermuscular of the os humeri.
9. Of the Elbow-joint.
- Interosseous ligament.
Oblique or chorda transversalis cubiti.
Capsular.
10. Carpal Extremity of Radius and Ulna, and between those bones.
- Capsular.
Two lateral.
Mucous.
11. Between Forearm and Wrist.
- Annular.
Capsular.
Short ligaments, — oblique, transverse, capsular, and proper.
12. Of the Carpus.....
- Articular lateral.
Straight, perpendicular, &c.
13. Between Carpal and Metacarpal bones.
- Interosseous, at the bases and heads, — dorsal, lateral, palmar.
14. Between the extremities of the Metacarpal bones.
- Capsular.
Lateral.
15. At the base of the Metacarpal bone of the Thumb, and at the first joint of the Fingers.
- Capsular.
Lateral.
16. Of the first and second joints of the Thumb, and second and third joints of the Fingers.
- Annular.
Vaginal or flexor tendons.
Vaginal or crucial of the phalanges.
Accessory of the flexor tendons.
Posterior annular.
Vaginal of extensors.
Transverse of extensors.
17. Retaining the Tendons of the Muscles of the Hand and Fingers in situ.
- Capsular and accessory slips.
Round or teres ligament.
Cartilaginous ligament.
Double cartilaginous ligament.
Ligamenta mucosa.
18. Connecting the Os femoris with the Os innominatum.
- Lateral, — internal and external.
External short lateral ligament.
Posterior ligament.
Ligament of the patella.
Capsular.
Ligamentum alare, — majus et minus.
Ligamentum mucosum.
Two crucial, — anterior and posterior.
Transverse.
19. Of the Knee-joint.
- Capsular.
Interosseous.
Anterior superior.
Posterior superior.
20. Connecting Fibula and Tibia.
21. Connecting the Tarsal with the Leg Bones.
- Anterior ligament of the fibula.
Posterior of fibula.
Deltoides of tibia.
Capsular.
Short ligaments.
Capsular, broad superior, and lateral ligaments, connecting astragalus and navicular.
Superior, lateral and inferior, fixing os calcis to os cuboides.
Long, oblique, and rhomboid, forming the inferior ligaments.
Superior superficial, interosseous and inferior transverse ligaments, fixing the os navicular and os cuboides.
Superior lateral, and plantar, which fix the os navicular and cuneiform.
Superior-superficial and plantar, connecting the os cuboides and os cuneiforme externum.
Dorsal and plantar, uniting the ossa cuneiformia.
The proper capsular of each bone.
22. Of the Tarsus...
- Capsular.
Dorsal, plantar, lateral, straight, oblique, and transverse.
23. Between Tarsus and Metatarsus.
- Dorsal, plantar, and lateral, connecting the metatarsal bones.
Transverse ligaments.
24. Connecting the Metatarsal Bones.
- Capsular.
Lateral.
25. Of the Phalanges of the toes.
- Annular.
Vaginal of the tendons of the peronei.
Laciniated.
Vaginal of the tendon of the flexor longus pollicis.
Vaginal and crucial of the tendons of the flexors of the toes.
Accessory of the flexor tendons of the toes.
Transverse of the extensor tendons.
26. Retaining the Tendons of the Muscles of the Foot and Toes in situ.

LIG'AMENT, AC'CESSORY. A name sometimes given to the coraco-humeral ligament.

LIG'AMENT, ALAR, Odontoid ligaments—l. Annular, see Annular.

LIG'AMENT, ANTERIOR, OF THE BLAD'DER. A name given by the older anatomists to a portion of the superior pelvic aponeuroses, which becomes attached to the front of the neck of the bladder.

LIGAMENT, SUTURAL. A term applied to a thin layer of fibrous membrane, which is interposed between the adjacent margins of bones in immovable joints, as between the cranial and most of the facial bones.

LIGAMENT, TAR'SAL. A layer of fibrous membrane beneath the orbicularis muscle, which seems to support the eyelids and retain the tar-sal cartilages in their position.

LIGAMENT, TRAPEZOID, see Coraco-clavicular and Trapezoid—1. Triangular, see Perineal fascia

LIGAMENT OF WEITBRECHT, Ligamentous Cord of W. A bundle of fibres on the anterior aspect of the interosseous ligament of the middle radiocubital articulation.

LIGAMENT OF WINSLOW, see Genu.

LIGAMENT OF ZINN, Ten'don of Zinn, Ten'do oculi. A tendon from which the inferior rectus muscle of the eye arises, in common with the rectus internus and rectus externus.

(For other ligaments not here referred to, see Table of Ligaments.)

Ligamen'ta Ala'ria, Odontoid ligaments—1.
Annularia, Annular ligaments—1. Apicum, see Interspinal ligament—1. Coli, see Colon—1. In-terlobularia pulmonum, Interlobular tissue—1. In-tervertebralia, Intervertebral cartilages—1. Lata uteri, see Uterus—1. Maucharti, Odontoid ligaments—1. Rotunda uteri, Round ligaments of the uterus.

LIGAMEN'TA SUBFLA'VA, (sub and flavus, 'yellow.') Ligaments interposed between the laminae of the vertebrae from the axis to the sacrum.

LIGAMEN'TA SUSPENSO'RIA, see Suspensory—1.
Tarsae lata, see Tarsae lata (ligamenta)—1. Thyreoärytenoidea, Thyreoärytenoid ligaments—1.
Vaginalia, Annular ligaments—1. Vocalia, Thyreoärytenoid ligaments.

Ligamenta'ris, Ligamentous.

Ligamenteux, Ligamentous.

Ligamento'sus, Ligamentous.

Ligamen'tous, Ligamento'sus, Ligamenta'ris, Ligamenta'rius, Des'mous, Desmo'sus, (F.) Liga-menteux, Desmeux. Having the character of, or relating to, a ligament.

LIGAMEN'TOUS CORD OF WEITBRECHT, Ligament of Weitbrecht.

Ligaments, Broad, of the U'terus, see Uterus
—1. Cheek, Odontoid ligaments—1. Croisés, Crucial ligaments—1. Cruciformes, Crucial ligaments
—1. Jaunes, Yellow ligaments—1. Large de l'utérus, see Uterus—1. of the Larynx, inferior, Thyreo-ligaments of the uterus—1. Thyrohyoid, see Thyrohyoid membrane.

Ligamen'tum, Ligament.

LIGAMEN'TUM ARCUA'TUM EXTER'NUM. The thickened upper margin of the anterior lamella of the transversalis fascia. The tendinous arch thrown across the upper part of the psoas magnus muscle, on each side of the spine, is called the ligamen'tum arcua'tum inter'num.

LIGAMEN'TUM ARCUA'TUM INTER'NUM, see Ligamentum arcuatum externum.

LIGAMEN'TUM ARTERIO'SUM, see Arterial duct.

LIGAMEN'TUM BRE'VE. A short membranous structure behind each flexor tendon of the fingers near its insertion.

LIGAMEN'TUM CAPSULA'RE, Capsular ligament—1. Ciliare, Ciliary ligament—1. Co-noides, Conoid ligament—1. Coracoideum, see Coracoid—1. Cruciatum Cruris, see Ligamen-tum transversum cruris—1. Dentatum, Denti-culatum ligamentum—1. Fallopii, Crural arch
—1. Ilio-pubicum, Crural arch—1. Infundibulo-ovaricum, see Ovarium—1. Infundibulopelvicum, see Ovarium—1. Iridis, Ciliary ligament—1. Latum, Suspensory ligament of the liver—1. Latum pulmonis, see Pleura—1. Membranaceum, Glosso-epiglottic ligament.

LIGAMEN'TUM MUCO'SUM. A triangular prolongation containing a few ligamentous fibres, and extending from the anterior part of the knee-joint below the patella to the front of the intercondyloid notch.

LIGAMEN'TUM NU'CHÆ, Cervical ligament—1.
Palpebrale internum, see Orbicular muscles—1.
Patellæ, see Patella.

LIGAMEN'TUM PECTINA'TUM. Festooned processes of the fibres of the iris, lying in an elastic fibrous tissue continuous with the membrane of Demours. It is more developed in animals than man.

LIGAMEN'TUM POSTI'CUM WINSLOW'II, see Genu
—1. Pouperti, Crural arch.

LIGAMEN'TUM ROTUN'DUM OVA'RII, see Ovarium
—1. Spirale, Musculus cochlearis—1. Suspenso-rium dentis, see Odontoid ligaments—1. Suspenso-rium hepatis, Suspensory ligament of the liver—1.
Suspensorium lentis, Ciliary zone—1. Suspensorium testis, Gubernaculum testis—1. Suspensorium Vesicæ, see Urachus—1. Teres, Teres ligamentum.

LIGAMEN'TUM TRANSVER'SUM CRU'RI. The anterior annular ligament of the ankle includes an upper and lower band; the former, the ligamen-tum transversum cruris,—the latter, the ligamen-tum cruciatum cruris.

LIGAMEN'TUM TRAPEZOÏ'DES, Trapezoid ligament
—1. Triangulare, Triangular ligament—1. Urachi suspensorium, see Urachus—1. Vesalii, Crural arch.

Li'gate, see Ligature.

Ligateur. A surgical instrument devised for the tying of vessels deeply seated.

Liga'tio, Fascia, Ligature—1. Linguae, Aphonia.

Liga'tion, see Ligature.

Ligatu'ra, Ligature, Fascia—1. Glandis, Phimosis.

Lig'ature, Ligatu'ra Liga'tio, Alligatu'ra, De-liga'tio, Vincitu'ra, Fas'cia, Epid'esis. This word has various acceptations. It means, 1. The thread with which an artery or vein is tied, to prevent or arrest hemorrhage. 2. The cord, or thread, or wire, used for removing tumors, &c.
3. The bandage used for phlebotomy. Ligature is, also, sometimes applied to the act of tying an artery or considerable vessel—Liga'tion, Deliga-tion; and occasionally we meet with the terms
'to ligature' and 'to ligate,' used unnecessarily in this sense in place of to take up or tie a vessel.
When the artery alone is tied, the ligature is said to be immediate; when any of the surrounding parts are included, it is said to be mediate. The ligature occasions obliteration or adhesion of the arterial parietes, by cutting through the middle and internal coats; the adhesion being favored by the formation of a coagulum, which acts, in some degree, as a barrier against the impulse of the blood, and subsequently disappears by absorption.

LIGATURE, ANTISEPTIC, Antiseptic Suture, Catbolized or Catgut Ligature. Catgut soaked in an emulsion of olive oil and deliquescent carbolic acid has been suggested by Lister in the ligation of arteries. It does not act as a foreign body in the wound, the ends being absorbed.

Ligature Articulée, Eraseur.

LIGATURE, INTERMITTENT. A term applied to the application of a tourniquet above the seat of a poisoned wound, so as to interrupt the current of blood, except when relaxed by the surgeon, and thus allow as little as possible at a time of the poison to pass into the circulation.

LIGATURE OF THE IRIS, Irisesis.

Light, (Sax. leohz, lhz,) (G.) Licht, Luz, Lu'men, Phos. (F.) Lumière. An extremely rare fluid; diffused over the universe; emanating from the sun and fixed stars; traversing more than four millions of leagues in a minute; passing through transparent bodies, which refract it according to their density and combustibility; and arrested by opaque bodies, by which it is reflected at an angle equal to the angle of incidence. It is the cause of color in all bodies, being entirely reflected by white surfaces and absorbed by black. It is decomposed in passing through a transparent prism into seven rays—red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet.

Light acts upon the body as a gentle and salutary stimulus. It urges to exercise, whilst privation of it induces sleep and inactivity, and disposes to obesity. Hence it is that, in rural economy, animals which are undergoing the process of fattening are kept in obscurity. When vegetables are deprived of light, their nutrition is interfered with, and they become etiolated. To a certain extent this applies to animals, and there is every reason to believe, that want of light prevents the due development of organized bodies. It has been found that, when tadpoles were deprived of light, they did not undergo the perfect metamorphosis into the frog, but that monstrosities from arrest of development were induced.

Light'ning, (from light,) Astrape.

LIGHT'NING BLIND'NESS. Impairment of vision from momentary exposure to intense light, as of lightning.

Lights, (from lhz, 'light,' from their little specific gravity,) Pulmo—l. Rising of the, Cyranche trachealis.

Ligne, Line—l. Apre, Linea aspera—l. Blanche, Linea alba—l. Courbe, Curved line—l. Médiane de l'Abdomen, Linea alba—l. Semilunaire de Spiegel, Linea semilunaris Spigelii—l. Sous-trochanterienne, Linea aspera.

Ligneous, Ligno'sus, (lignum, 'wood,') (F.) Ligneux. Woody. Having the character or appearance of wood; as 'Ligneous Scir'rhous,' or S. of the mamma, which has for its principal characteristics, hardness, the inextensibility of wood, and no defined limits. (Velpeau.) A form of this, in plates, or diffused over the mammary integuments, is termed by him, Squirre en cuirasse.

Lignum Agal'lochi Ve'ri, Agallochum—l. Aloës, ('wood of aloes,') Agallochum—l. Aspalathi, Agallochum—l. Benedictum, Guaiacum—l. Brasilianum rubrum, Hæmatoxyton campechianum—l. Cæruleum, Hæmatoxyton campechianum—l. Campechense, Hæmatoxyton campechianum—l. Campechianum, Hæmatoxyton campechianum—l. Campecanum, Hæmatoxyton campechianum—l. Colubrinum, see Strychnos—l.

Lignyo'des, (λινυωδης, from lignys, and odes,) Fuliginous.

Lig'nys, (λινυς,) Fuligo.

Lig'ula, Lin'gula, 'a small tongue, a tongue of land; the tongue of a shoe.' The clavicle; also, the glottis and epiglottis. A measure containing 3 drachms and a scruple, or about half an ounce. Also, a species of bandage or ligature.

Ligus'ticum, (from λινυστικός, appertaining to Liguria,) L. levisticum.

LIGUS'TICUM ACTÆIFO'LIUM, Thap'sium actæifo'lum, Angel'ica lu'cida, Angel'ica Nen'do, White root, indigenous; Ord. Umbelliferae. The root is aromatic and carminative.

LIGUS'TICUM CAPILLA'CEUM, Æthusa meum—l. Carvi, Carum—l. Fœniculum, Anethum.

LIGUS'TICUM LEVIS'TICUM, Levis'ticum, Laserpit'tium German'icum, Ligusticum, Angel'ica levis'ticum seu paludapifo'lia, Lov'age, (F.) Livèche, Ache des montagnes. Ord. Umbelliferae. The properties of this plant are said to be stimulant, carminative, emmenagogue, &c.

LIGUS'TICUM ME'UM, Æthusa meum—l. Phellandrium, Phellandrium aquaticum.

LIGUS'TICUM PODAGRA'RIA, Podagra'ria egopo'dium, Egopo'dium seu Si'son podagra'ria, Pimpinella angelicafo'lia, Si'um vulga'rè, Tragoselinum angel'ica, Ses'eli egopo'dium, Angel'ica sylvest'ris, Gout'weed. A British plant, once considered useful in cases of gout.

LIGUS'TICUM SI'LAUS, Peucedanum silaus.

Ligus'trum Egypti'acum, (ligare, 'to bind,' because used for bands.) Lawsonia inermis.

LIGUS'TRUM VULGA'RÈ, Prie'et, Prie'y, Prim, (F.) Troëne. Ord. Oleaceae. A shrub, which grows wild both in Europe and in the United States, usually in hedges. The leaves are astringent and bitter; and the flowers, which are snow-white, and of an agreeable odor, have been employed in decoction, in sore throat, and ulcerous stomatitis. The berries are said to be cathartic.

Li'lac, Com'mon, Syringa vulgaris—l. Vulgaris, Syringa vulgaris.

Lili, Lillium Paracelsi.

Lilia'go, gen. Liliagi'nis, (dim. of lillium, 'the lily,') Spider'wort, Liliast'rum. This plant was formerly said to be alexipharmic and carminative.

Lilias'trum, Liliago.

Li'lum Can'didum, ('white lily,') L. album, Leir'ion, Cri'non. The white lily, (F.) Lis blanc. Ord. Liliaceae. The infusion of the flowers of the lily in olive oil is emollient, and often applied externally, under the name of Lily oil, (F.) Huile de lis. The scales of the bulb, roasted, are sometimes employed as maturatives.

LIL'IUM CONVAL'LIIUM, Convallaria maialis.

LIL'IUM PARACEL'SI, Tinctu'ra Metallo'rum, Lili. A medicine employed by Paracelsus, prepared by the action of alcohol on antimony, mixed with nitrate of potassa and salt of tartar. It was used as a cordial, entered into the composition of the theriacal elixir, &c.

Li'ma, Cli'mate of. The climate of Peru does not appear to be favorable to the generation of consumption: and Lima would seem to be a good residence for the phthisical valetudinarian. Many have been benefited by a residence there; but when they have gone farther south, as to Chili, the effect, according to Dr. M. Burrough, has generally been fatal.

Li'ma Denta'ria, ('dental file,') Scalprum dentarium.

Limaçien, (F.) (from limaçon, [limax, gen. limacis, 'the snail,'] 'the cochlea of the ear.'). A branch of the acoustic or labyrinthic nerve sent to the cochlea.

Limaçon, Cochlea, Helix pomatia, Limax—l. Rampes du, see Cochlea.

Lima'eum (gen. pl. of Limax) Cor'nua, ('snails' horns,') see Lachrymal puncta.

Limaille d'Étain, see Tin—l. de Fer, Ferri limatura.

Limanch'ia, (λινανχία, from limus, and αγχειν, 'to torture,') Abstinence.

Lima'tio, (limare, limatum, 'to file,') 'Filing.' An operation employed by the dentist more especially to prevent immediate contact of the teeth with each other.

Limatu'ra Fer'ri, Ferri limatura—l. Martis. Ferri limatura—l. Stanni, see Tin.

Li'max, gen. Lima'cis, (λινάξ, gen. λινάκος,) Helix, Slug or Snail, (F.) Limaçon, Colimaçon, Escargot. A syrup, (F.) Sirup de Limaçons, S. d'Helix, has been prepared from these animals, which has been given in phthisis, &c. The raw snails have also been taken in consumption. They have been used as food.

Lime, (from limon,) A fruit like a small lemon, the juice of which is strongly acid, and is much used for making punch. It is, also, used in long voyages as an antiscorbutic, &c. It is a species of lemon, the fruit of Citrus ac'ida, Citrus limetta.

Limellier, see Citrus mella rosa.

Li'micus, (from limus,) Hungry.

Li'mitrophes, (limes, 'a boundary,' and τροφή, 'nourishment,') see Trisplanchnic nerve.

Lim'ne, (λίμνη,) Marsh.

Limn'e'mic, Limnæ'mic, Limnhe'mic, Limnæ'micus, Limnæ'micus, (λίμνη, 'a marsh,' and αἷμα, 'blood,') An epithet given to affections induced by paludal emanations, (F.) Affectiones limnæmiquæ.

Limneme'phitis, (limnæ, and mephitis,) see Miasm.

Limoc-ton'ia, (λιμοκτονία, from limus, and κτονος,

'death,') Abstinence to death. Death from hunger. Suicide by hunger.

Lim'o'des, (λινωδής, limus, and odes,) Hungry.

Li'mon, see Citrus medica.

Limona'da, Lemonade.

Lim'o'nium, Statice limonium—l. Malum, see Citrus medica.

Lim'o'num (gen. pl. of Li'mon) Bac'ca, see Citrus medica.

Limophthi'sis, (from limus, and φθίσις, 'wasting,') Wasting from privation of food.

Limo'sis, (from limus,) Stomach disease, Morbid appetite. A genus in the class Cæliaca, order Enterica, of Good. Singular forms of depraved appetite are observed, especially in chlorosis, as well as during pregnancy, as chalk-eating, fondness for slate pencils. A case of a man has been related (1868), who took a pound a week, to relieve gastric irritation, which it removed immediately, and to satisfy a craving for it.

Limotherapei'a, Nestitherapei'a, Nestotherapei'a, Peinotherapei'a, Cura'tio mor'bi per in'e'diam, (limus, and θεραπεία, 'treatment,') Hunger-cure. Cure by fasting.

Li'mos, (λίμος,) Hunger.

Lim'pets, Eye. Artificial eyes have been vulgarly so called, probably from some fancied resemblance to the limpet, a univalve shell, found adhering to rocks.

Lin, Linum usitatissimum—l. Graines de, see Linum usitatissimum—l. Purgatif, Linum catharticum.

Linamen'tum, (from linum,) Linteum, Tint.

Lin'a'ria, (from linum, owing to the similarity of the leaves,) Antirrhinum linaria—l. Cymbalaria, Antirrhinum linaria—l. Elatine, Antirrhinum elatine—l. Vulgaris, Antirrhinum linaria.

Linctua'rium, (from lingere, linctum, 'to lick,') Electos.

Lind, (Sax. lind,) Tilia.

Lind'en Tree, Tilia, Tilia Americana.

Line, Lin'ea, Gram'mē, (F.) Ligne. Extent in length, considered without regard to breadth or thickness. As a measure, it means the 12th part—with some, the 10th part—of an inch.

The Me'dian Line of the Bod'y is an imaginary line supposed to set out from the top of the head and to fall between the feet, so as to divide the body vertically into two equal and symmetrical parts.

LINE, GING'IVAL, see Gingivæ—l. Iliopectineal, see Iliopectinea linea—l. Pectineal, see Linea iliopectinea.

Line, (from linum,) Linteum, Linum usitatissimum.

Lin'ea, Line.

LIN'EA AL'BA, Linea alba Abdom'inis, (F.) Ligne blanche ou médiane de l'abdomen, (Ch.) Candid'ula abdom'inis lin'ea, Lin'ea centralis. A tendinous, strong, and highly resisting cord; extending from the ensiform cartilage of the sternum to the symphysis pubis, with the umbilicus near its middle. The linea alba is formed by the decussation of the aponeurosis of the abdominal muscles; and its use is to limit the movement of the chest backwards; to prevent it from separating too far from the pelvis, and to furnish a fixed point for the muscles of the abdomen in their contraction.

LIN'EA AS'PERA, Rug'ged ridge, (F.) Ligne âpre, Ligne sous-trochantérienne, (Ch.) A rough projection at the posterior surface of the femur, which gives attachment to muscles.

LIN'EA CANDID'ULA ABDOM'INIS, L. alba—1. Centralis, L. alba.

LIN'EA FUS'CA, 'brown line.' A deposit of brown pigment, generally seen in the last months of pregnancy, and most plainly on the linea alba from the umbilicus down towards the symphysis pubis.

LIN'EA ILIOPECTINE'A, Iliopectinea linea—1. Innominata, Iliopectinea linea.

LIN'EA QUADRA'TI. A well-marked eminence on the back part of the shaft of the femur, which gives attachment to the quadratus femoris muscle.

LIN'EA SPLEN'DENS. A name given by Haller to a longitudinal fibrous band extending along the middle line of the pia mater of the cord on its anterior surface.

Lin'æ (pl. of linea, 'a line') Albican'tes, Vitilig'ines. The white lines left where the skin, as of the abdomen or mammae, has been greatly stretched.

LIN'ÆE ARCUA'TÆ, Curved lines—1. Semicirculares externæ, Curved lines.

LIN'ÆE SEMILUNA'RES seu Plu'æ semiluna'res Douglas'sii, are the lines which bound the outer margin of the recti muscles of the abdomen. They are formed by the union of the abdominal tendons. The lines which cross these muscles are called linæe transversæ.

LIN'ÆE SEMILUNA'RES SPIGE'LII, (F.) Lignæ semilunare de Spiegel. The semilunar notched inner edge of the fleshy portion of the transversalis abdominis, at the point where the muscular fibres are in connection with the tendinous or aponeurotic fibres, which serve for the insertion of the muscle.

LIN'ÆE TIBIÆ, An'guli tib'ie. Sharp lines on the tibia.

LIN'ÆE TRANSVER'SÆ, see L. semilunares, and Processus teretes.

Linéaire, Linear.

Lin'éament, Lineamen'tum, (linea, 'a line'; lineare, 'to mark by lines.') A delicate trait observed on the countenance, which constitutes its special character, enables us to preserve its image, and is the cause of resemblance to others. A feature.

Bonnet gave the name Lin'éament to the first traces of organization in the embryo of man and animals.

Lin'ear, Linea'ris, Linea'rius, (from linea, 'a line,') (F.) Linéaire. Pathologists apply the epithet linear to fractures which are very narrow, and in which the fragments are scarcely separated. See Atrophy, linear.

Line'ola, (dim. of linea.) A small line.

LINE'OLÆ MAMMA'RUM. The white lines on the breasts.

Ling'ism, (after Ling, of Sweden, the proposer.) Kinesipathy.

Ling'ua, (from lingere, 'to lick,') Tongue—1. Avis, see Fraxinus excelsior—1. Bovis, Anchusa officinalis—1. Canina, Cynoglossum—1. Cervina, Asplenium scolopendrium—1. Exigua, Epiglottis—1. Frænata, see Ankyloglossa—1. Prognosis ex, Glossomantia—1. Propendula, Paraglossa—1. Serpentaria, Ophioglossum vulgatum—1. Vituli, Paraglossa.

Linguaden'tal, Linguodental, Linguadenta'lis, Linguodenta'lis, (from lingua, 'the tongue,' and dens, gen. dentis, 'a tooth,') Relating or appertaining to the tongue and teeth.

LING'UÆ DETEN'TOR, Glossocatochus—1. Exoncosis, Glossoneus—1. Scalpium, Cure-langue.

Ling'ual, Lingua'lis, (from lingua.) Relating or belonging to the tongue.

LING'UAL AR'TERY, Arte'ria lingua'lis, arises from the external carotid; and, after several tortuosities, reaches the base of the tongue, becomes horizontal, and, under the name Ranine, advances to the tip, where it anastomoses with its fellow. In its course it gives off the Dorsalis lingue and Subling'ual.

LING'UAL GLANDS, Glan'dulæ lingua'les, Intra-ling'ual glands, Glan'dulæ intralingua'les. Conglomerate mucous glands, collected about the posterior part of the dorsum of the tongue, near the papillæ circumvallatæ and foramen cæcum, into which the ducts of many of them open; others are found at the borders of the tongue, and a small group is situated on the under surface of the organ, called Glands of Bauhin and of Nuhn, from which several ducts open separately on the mucous membrane.

LING'UAL MUS'CLE, Lingua'lis, Ba'sio-glos'sus (Cowper), Glossia'nus, is a small, long fasciculus of fibres, hidden beneath the sides of the tongue, between the hyoglossus and styloglossus muscles, which are on the outside, and the genioglossus within. This muscle passes from the base to the tip of the tongue, and at its sides is confounded with the muscles just referred to. It shortens the tongue, depresses its point, and can carry it to the right or left side.

LING'UAL NERVE is a name which has been given to the ninth pair or hypoglossus. It is generally applied to a branch given off from the inferior maxillary, or third branch of the fifth pair. Near its origin it runs close to, and anastomoses with, the chorda tympani. It afterwards gives off a considerable number of filaments, which are distributed to the tongue, and some of which are said to have been even traced as far as the papillæ—a distribution which has occasioned it to be regarded as the Gus'tatory nerve, (F.) Nerf gustatif. It is doubtless the nerve of general sensibility to the tongue.

LING'UAL VEIN follows nearly the same distribution as the artery. It opens into the internal jugular.

Lingua'lis, Lingual muscle.

Linguet'ta Lamino'sa, (dim. of lingua.) Lingula.

Ling'ula, (dim. of lingua.) A speculum of bone, so called by Henle, which projects backwards from the posterior extremity of the carotid groove on the outer side of the internal carotid artery. See Ligula.

LING'ULA, Linguet'ta lamino'sa. A thin, transversely grooved lobule of gray substance, derived from the anterior border of the cerebellum, which, for a short distance, lies over the velum medullare anterius. A depression in the cerebellum in front of the lingula is called Reces'sus, (F.) Niche.

LING'ULA FIS'TULÆ, Epiglottis.

Linguoden'tal, Linguadental.

Liniment d'eau de chaux, Savon calcaire, Liniment calcaire ou oléo-calcaire. (Olei lini, ℥vij., Liquor. calcis, ℥vij.) A cooling and emollient application to burns and scalds.

LINIMENTUM ARCÆI, Unguentum elemi compositum.

LINIMENTUM BELLADONNÆ, Liniment of Belladonna. (Belladonna root, in powder, ℥xx., Camphor, ℥j., Rectified spirit, ℥xxx., or a sufficiency. Prepared by maceration and percolation. Ph. B., 1867.)

LINIMENTUM DE BORA'CÆ, Mel boracis—l. Calcis, L. aquæ calcis.

LINIMENTUM CAMPHORÆ, O'leum Camphoratum, Solutio camphoræ oleosa, Camphor liniment, Liniment of Camphor, (F.) Liniment Camphré. (Camphoræ, ℥ij., Olei olivæ, ℥xij. Dissolve. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is used as a stimulant and discutient.

LINIMENTUM CAMPHORÆ COMPOSITUM, L. saponato-ammonia-to-camphoratum, Compound camphor liniment, Ward's essence for the head'ache. (Camphor., ℥ijss., Ol. lavand., ℥j., Sp. rectificat., ℥xv., Liquor. ammon. fortior., ℥v. Dissolve the camphor and oil in the spirit, add the ammonia, and shake till they are mixed. Ph. B., 1867.) It is stimulant and discutient.

LINIMENTUM CANTHARIDIS, Liniment of Spanish flies, L. of cantharides. (Cantharid. in pulv., ℥j., Ol. terebinth., Oss. Digest for three hours by means of a water-bath, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used as an excellent liniment in adynamic cases.

LINIMENTUM E CANTHARIDIBUS CAMPHORATUM, Camphorated liniment of cantharides, (F.) L. cantharide camphré. (Tinct. cantharid., ℥ss., Ol. amygd. dulc., ℥iv., Sapon. amygd., ℥j., Camphor., ℥ss. Dissolve the camphor in the oil, and add the mixture to the tincture and soap. Ph. P.) Rubefacient and discutient.

LINIMENTUM CHLOROPORMI, Liniment of chloroform. (Chloroform. purif., ℥ij., Ol. olivæ, ℥iv. M. Ph. U. S., 1873.) ℥ss. to ℥j. to be applied.

LINIMENTUM CROTONIS, Croton oil liniment. (Ol. croton., ℥j., Ol. cajuput., Spirit. rectificat., aa ℥ijss. Mix. Ph. B., 1867.) Rubefacient, causing an eruption when continued.

LINIMENTUM HYDRARGYRI, L. hydrargyri compositum, Mercurial liniment, Liniment of mer'cury, (F.) L. de mercure. (Unguent. hydrarg., ℥j., Aquæ ammoniæ, Liniment. camphor., aa ℥j.) Liquefy the ointment in the liniment with a gentle heat, add the solution of ammonia, and mix. Ph. B., 1867.) It is used as a stimulant and discutient to venereal swellings, &c.

LINIMENTUM HYPERICI, see Hypericum perforatum.

LINIMEN'TUM I'ODI, Liniment of iodine. (Iod. 314, Potass. iodid., 3ss., Camphor., 34, Sp. rectif., 13x. Dissolve. Ph. B., 1867.) To paint the part.

LINIMEN'TUM O'PII, Liniment of opium, Anodyne liniment. (Tinct. opii, Liniment. saponis, 3ij. Mix. Ph. B., 1867.) Anodyne, and slightly rubefacient. See Linimentum saponis et opii.

LINIMEN'TUM PLUMBA'TUM, Unguentum plumbi superacetatis.

LINIMEN'TUM PLUM'BI SUBACETA'TIS, Liniment of subacetate of lead. (Ol. olive, 3ij., Liqueur. plumbi subacetatis, 3ij. M. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

LINIMEN'TUM POTAS'SII IOD'IDI CUM SAPO'NE, Liniment of iodide of potassium and soap. (Saponis dur., Potass. iodid., 3ss., Glycerin., 3ij., Ol. limonis, 13j., Aq. destill., 13x. Ph. B., 1867.)

LINIMEN'TUM SAPONA'CEUM HYDROSULPHURA'TUM. (Common soap, 500 p. Liquefy in a water-bath in an earthen vessel, and add white poppy oil, 250 p. Mix intimately, and add dry sulphuret of potass., 100 p. Beat together, and add oil of poppy seed, 750 p. Ph. P.) In cutaneous affections, as psora, herpes, &c.

LINIMEN'TUM SAPONA'CEUM OPIA'TUM, L. saponis et opii.

LINIMEN'TUM SAPO'NIS CAMPHORA'TUM, L. S. compositum, L. Saponato-camphoratum, Balsamum opodel'doc, Tinctura saponis camphorata, Linimentum saponis (Ph. U. S., 1873), Opodel'doch, Steer's opodel'doch, Soap liniment, Com-pound soap liniment, (F.) L. de Savon. (Sapon. rasur., 3iv., Camphor., 3ij., Ol. rosmarini, 13ss., Aque, 13vj., Alcohol., Oij. Digest the soap in the water until it is dissolved; dissolve the camphor and oil in the alcohol. Mix and filter. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Stimulant and anodyne, in bruises, local pains, &c.

Free'man's Bathing Spirit's consist of Lin. sapon. camphoratum, colored with Daffy's elixir.

Jackson's Bathing Spirit's differ from Free-man's in the addition of some essential oils.

LINIMEN'TUM SAPO'NIS COMPOS'ITUM, L. saponis camphoratum.

LINIMEN'TUM SAPO'NIS ET O'PII, L. saponaceum opiatum, Soap and opium liniment, Bates's anodyne balsam, Balsamum anodynum, Tinctura saponis et opii, (F.) L. de Savon opiacé. (Saponis duri., 3iv., Opii, 3j., Camphoræ, 3ij., Olei rosmarini, 13ss., Alcohol., Oij. Ph. E.) Anodyne, in chronic rheumatism and local pains in general. See Linimentum opii.

LINIMEN'TUM SIM'PLEX, Simple liniment. (Ol. olive, 4 p., Cere albæ, 1 p. fiat linimentum. Ph. E.) Emollient; used in chaps, &c. See Unguentum cere.

LINIMEN'TUM SINAP'IS COMPOS'ITUM, Compound liniment of mustard. (Ol. sinapis, 13j., Extract. Mezer. Etherici., gr. xl., Camphor., gr. cxx., Ol. ricini, 13v., Spir. rectificat., 13iv. M. Ph. B., 1867.)

LINIMEN'TUM TEREBIN'THINÆ ACE'TICUM, Liniment of turpentine and acetic acid. (Ol. tereb., Acid. acet., Linim. camphor., 3ss. 13i. M. Ph. B., 1867.) Said to resemble St. John Long's liniment.

LINIMEN'TUM VOLAT'ILE, L. Ammoniac carbonatis.

Linite, Linitis — L. Plastique, see Linitis — L. Suppurée ou Suppurative, see Gastritis and Linitis — L. Suppurative, see Linitis and Gastritis.

Lini'tis, (λιν, 'rete ex lino factum,' 'linen,' and itis.) A term suggested by the late Dr. Brinton, of London, for inflammation of the filamentous network of areolar tissue ensheathing the vessels of the stomach. When characterized by purulent infiltration, or by interstitial abscess, it is called Suppurative Lini'tis, (F.) Linite suppurée ou suppurative, Gastrite phlegmoneuse. When linitis is attended with hyperplasia of the connective tissue, or hypertrophy of the muscular structure, it is called Plastic lini'tis, Linite plastique.

LINI'TIS, PLAS'TIC, see Linitis — L. Suppurative, see Gastritis and Linitis.

Linn, (Sax. linn,) Tilia Americana.

Linnæ'a, L. Borealis. Ord. Caprifoliaceæ (after Linnæus). This plant has a bitter, substringent taste, and is used in some places, in the form of fomentation, in rheumatic pains. An infusion in milk is used in Switzerland for the cure of sciatica.

Lino'leum. A name given to preparations of flaxseed oil, having certain physical properties which adapt it to some of the purposes for which caoutchouc is used.

Linosp'er'mum, (λιν, 'flax,' and σπέρμα, 'seed.') See Linum usitatissimum.

Lin'seed, see Linum usitatissimum.

Lint, Carbasus, Linteum — L. Patent, see Linteum.

Lin'tea'men, Linteum, Pledget.

Lin'teum, 'a linen cloth,' (from linum, 'flax, linen,') L. carp'tum seu ra'sum, Lin'tea'men, Oth'onē, Othon'ion, Car'basus, Car'basia, Car'pia, Mo'tos, Mo'tē, Mo'tum, Linamen'tum, Til'ma, Xys'tos, Xys'ma, Ach'nē, Lint, Line, (F.) Charpie. A soft, flocculent substance, made by scraping old linen cloth, (F.) Charpie râpée, or by unravelling old linen cut into small pieces — (F.) Charpie brute — and employed in surgery as a dressing to wounds, ulcers, &c., either simply or covered with ointment. Patent lint is generally prepared out of cloth manufactured for the purpose, and is therefore more uniform in shape and consistence. Picked oak'um has been recommended as a substitute for lint in dressings. See also Alèse.

LIN'TEUM CARP'TUM, see Linteum — L. Rasum, see Linteum — L. Scissum, Split-cloth (bandage).

Li'num, (λιν,) see Linteum, and Linum usitatissimum — L. Arvense, L. usitatissimum.

LI'NUM CATHAR'TICUM, L. minimum, Chamæ'linum, Purg'ing flax, Mill moun'tain, (F.) Lin purgatif. Ord. Linaceæ. This plant is possessed of cathartic properties, and has a bitterish, disagreeable taste. Dose, 3j., in substance.

LI'NUM CRU'DUM, see Apolinosis — L. Minimum, L. catharticum.

LI'NUM USITATIS'SIMUM, L. arven'sē, Common flax, Line, (F.) Lin. The seed, Linum (Ph. U. S.), Sem'ina li'ni usitatis'simi, Linosp'er'mum, Lin'seed, Flax'seed, (F.) Grains de lin, are inodorous, and almost tasteless, yielding mucilage to warm water, and oil by expression. They are demulcent and emollient. Linseed, when ground into powder, Li'ni fari'na (Ph. U. S.), Flax'seed meal, Farine de lin, Poudre de grain de lin, forms a good emollient poultice. It is only necessary to stir the powder into boiling water. The oil, O'leum li'ni, Flax'seed or Lin'seed oil, (F.) Huile de lin, is emollient and demulcent.

Liocome, (λεως, 'smooth,' and κομη, 'hairy-scalp,') (?) Dextrin.

Lion'dent, ('lion's tooth,') Leontodon taraxacum.

Lion's Foot, Nabalus albus, Prenanthes — L's Tail, Leonurus.

Liopod'ia, see Leiopus.

Liopus, Leiopus.

Lip, (Sax. and Germ. Lippe,) Che'ilos, La'bium, La'brum, (F.) Lèvre. [In Entomology, labium means the lower lip, — labrum, the upper.] The lips are composed of different muscular fasciculi, nerves, and vessels, covered by the skin and mucous membrane of the mouth. They circumscribe the anterior aperture of that cavity; and are inservient to mastication, pronunciation, &c. They are distinguished into upper and lower — Anoche'il'on; and Catoche'il'on, (Prov.) Fipple — and are placed in front of each jaw, forming between them the anterior aperture of the mouth. They unite at each side, and form what are called the angles or commissures of the mouth—Chal'ini. Their free edge is covered with a mucous membrane, of a more or less livid red, according to the individual. They receive their arteries from the external carotid. Their veins open into the two jugulars. Their lymphatic vessels descend into the ganglions situate beneath the chin. Their nerves are derived from the infraorbital, mental, and facial.

LIP, LE'OPOLD'S. A form of erectile labial angioma with which the Emperor Leopold of Germany was affected. It was pendulous, and whenever he was in a passion it would swell like the comb of a turkey cock, so as to hang down on his chin.

LIPS, La'bia, (F.) Lèvres de la vulve, are folds belonging to the genital organs of the female, and distinguished into—1. La'bia pudendi seu Cun'ni seu majo'ra seu exter'na, Episi'a, A'læ pudendi muli'ebris, Ru'pes, A'læ majores, Crem'noi, Pimiac'ula, (F.) Grandes Lèvres. These are two membranous folds, thicker above than below, which limit the vulva laterally, and extend from the inferior part of the mons veneris to the perinaeum. They unite anteriorly and posteriorly, forming commissures; the posterior of which is called Fourchette. Their outer surface is convex; formed of skin and covered with hair. The inner surface is white, and covered by a mucous membrane, continuous with that lining the other parts of the vulva. The space between the skin and mucous membrane is filled with a fatty tissue and fibrous bands, some fibres of the constrictor vaginae muscle, vessels, and nerves. 2. Labia pudendi mino'ra, see Nymphæ.

We speak, also, of the lips of a wound, ulcer, &c., when alluding to the edges of these solutions of continuity.

Lipæ'mia, Piarhæmia.

Li'para, (from liparus.) Plasters, containing much oil or fat.

Lipa'ria, (from liparus,) see Polysarcia.

Liparoce'lē, Lipoce'lē, Lip'arocelle, Li'pocelle, (liparus, and κηλη, 'tumor.') Fatty tumor. Lipo'ma, or fatty tumor of the scrotum, Her'nia pinguedino'sa scroti.

Liparo'des, (from liparus, and odes,) Fatty.

Liparoidē, Cerate.

Liparolē, Pomatum, Pommade.

Lipar'otes, (λιπαροτης,) see Polysarcia.

Liparotrich'ia, (liparus, and τριχς, gen. τριχος, 'hair.') Too great oiliness of the hair.

Lip'arus, (λιπαρος,) Fatty.

Lipas'ma, gen. Lipas'matis, (λιπασμα,) see Polysarcia.

Li'pē, (λιπη,) Fat.

Liphæ'mia, Leiphæmia.

Liphæ'mos, Leiphæmos.

Lipoce'lē, (lipe, and κηλη, 'tumor.') Liparocele.

Lipoder'mia, (leipo, and δερμα, 'skin.') Apos-thia.

Lipoder'mus, Leipodermus.

Lipog'enous, Lipogeno'sus, (lipe, and γεννω, 'I generate.') Relating or appertaining to fatty formation; developed in fat, as a lipog'enous angioma.

Lipo'ma, gen. Lipo'matis, Tumor adiposus, (F.) Lipōme, (from lipe, and oma.) A fatty tumor of an encysted or other character.

A fibrous lipoma, Steatoma Mulleri, is a lipomatous tumor whose lobules are separated from one another by bands of fibrous tissue.

LIPOMA ARBORES'CENS. A condition peculiar to serous and synovial membranes, the villous and polypoid appendages of which have undergone hyperplastic development.

Lipomato'des, (lipoma, and odes,) Lipomatous.

Lipomato'sis. A tendency or predisposition to the growth of lipomatous tumors.

Lipom'atous, Lipomato'sus, Lipomato'des, (F.) Lipomato'us. Having the nature of lipoma—as a 'lipomatous mass.'

Lipōme, Lipoma.

Lipome'ria, Leipome'ria, (leipo, and μερος, a 'part.') Monstrosity from arrest of development, or from defect. Deficiency of one or more of the parts of the body; for example, in one who has only four fingers.

Lipopsych'ia, (λειποψυχια, from leipo, and ψυχη, 'breath.') Syncope.

Lipo'sis, (from lipus, and osis,) see Polysarcia.

Liposphyx'ia, (leipo, and σφυξις, 'pulse.') Syncope.

Lipothym'ia, (λειποθυμια, from leipo, and θυμος, 'mind.') Syncope.

Lip'pa, Chassie.

Lip'per, Lepra, Leprous.

Lip'pia, Adali.

Lippitu'do, gen. Lippitu'dinis, Ophthalmia chronica and Chronic Conjunctivitis of some, Lippitude, Blear'eye, Blear-eyedness, Blear'edness, Lap'pa, Li'pa, Xerophthalmia, Le'ma, Le'mē, Lemos'itas, Glē'nē, Gla'ma, Gra'mia. A copious secretion of the sebaceous humor of the eyelids which renders them gummy. It is owing to a state of chronic inflammation of the tarsal margins; the eyelids being generally red, tumefied, and painful.

LIPPITU'DO NEONATO'RUM, see Ophthalmia.

Lip'pus. One affected with blear-eye; blear-eyed, (F.) Chassieux.

Lip'sis (λειψις) An'imi, ('a forsaking of mind.') Syncope.

Lipotrich'ia, (λιψις, 'a forsaking,' and σριξ, gen. τριχς, 'hair.') Alopecia, Calvities.

Li'pus, (λιπος,) Fat.

Liqua'men, gen. Liqua'minis, ('a liquid mixture,' from liquare, 'to dissolve.') Garum.

Liquamu'mia, Ad'eps huma'nus. Human fat.

Liqua'rium, (liquare, liquatum, 'to melt or dissolve.') Syrupus simplex.

Liqua'tio, Liquefaction.

Liquefa'cient, Liquefa'ciens, (liquere, 'to be liquid,' and facere, 'to make.') A medicinal agent, which seems to have the power of liquefying solid depositions. To this class mercury, iodine, &c., have been referred by some.

Liquefac'tion, Liqua'tio, Liquefac'tio. Transformation of a solid substance into a liquid. It is used particularly in speaking of metals and fatty bodies. See Fusion.

Liquefac'tive Degenera'tion. A form of degeneration seen in the simple softening of certain organs, as the brain, and the liquefaction of inflammatory products in the suppurative process.

Liquidambar Styraeiflua, Liquidambar, Sweet gum, White gum. Ord. Balsamineæ. The name of the tree which affords the Liquidambar, and Storax liquida, Styrax liquida or Liquid storax. Liquid amber is a resinous juice of a yellow color, inclining to red; at first of about the consistence of turpentine; by age, hardening into a solid, brittle mass. It is not used medicinally.

Styrax Liquida is obtained from this plant by boiling. There are two sorts—one more pure than the other. It is used occasionally, as a stoma- chic, in the form of plaster.

Liquide Amniotique, Liqueur amnii—l. Céphalo-rachidienne, Cephalo-spinal fluid.

Liquidum Nervæum, Nervous fluid.

Liquiritia, Glycyrrhiza.

Liquor, gen. Liquoris, (from liqueo, 'to be liquid,') Liquamen, Hygron, Hygrotes, (F.) Liqueur. A name given to many compound liquids, and especially to those the bases of which are water and alcohol.

Liquor Ac'idus Halleri, Elixir acidum Halleri—l. Æthereus, Æther—l. Æthereus sulphuricus, Spiritus ætheris sulphurici.

Liquor Alu'minis Compos'itus, Aqua alu'minis compos'ita seu aluminosa Batea'na, Bates's alum water, Compound solution of alum, (F.) Liqueur d'alumine composée. (Aluminis, Zinci sulphat. sing. $\frac{3}{4}$ ss., Aque fervent., Oj. Dissolve and filter through paper.) Detergent and stimulant. Used as a collyrium, when properly diluted, in ophthalmia; as an injection in gleet, leucorrhœa, &c.

Liquor ex Ammo'niâ et O'leo Succ'ini, Spiritus ammoniæ succinatus.

Liquor Ammo'niæ, L. ammo'niæ pu'ra, Al'cali ammoniacum flu'idum, Ammonia liquida seu caustica liquida seu pu'ra liquida, Lixivium ammoniacale, Spir'itus sal'is ammoniaci aquosus, Aqua ammo'niæ (Ph. U. S.), Aqua ammo'niæ causticæ, Liquid ammo'nia, Solution of ammo'nia, (F.) Ammoniaque liquide. Directed to be made in the Ph. U. S., 1873, from chloride of ammonium in fine powder, lime, and water. Heat is applied so as to drive off the ammonia, which is made to pass into the distilled water. Liqueur ammoniæ may also be made by mixing one part of liquor ammoniæ fortior with two parts of distilled water. Its sp. gr. is 0.960. Liquor Ammo'niæ Fortior, Stronger solution of ammonia, Aque ammoniæ fortior, Stronger water of ammonia (Ph. U. S., 1873), is an aqueous solution of ammonia of the s. g. 0.900; that of Ph. B., 1867, is 0.891. Liqueur ammoniæ is stimulant, antacid, and rubefacient. Dose, gtt. x. to xx. in water or milk.

Liquor Ammo'niæ Aceta'tis, L. Ammo'niæ acetatis (Ph. U. S., 1873), Al'cali ammoniacum acetatum, A. volat'ile acetatum, Aqua aceta'tis ammo'niæ seu ammo'niæ acetatæ, Solution of ac'etate of ammo'nia, Ammonia acetas, Sal ammo- niacum vegetabilē, Spir'itus ophthal'micus seu Spiritus seu Liqueur Mindere'ri, Sal aceto'sus ammoniacalis, Ammonium aceticum liqu'idum, Spirit of Mindere'rus, (F.) Acetate d'Ammoniaque liquide, Esprit de Mindere'rus. (Acid. acetic. dilut., Oij., Ammon. carbonat., q. s. Add the salt to the acid until it is saturated. Ph. U. S. 1851.) The last edition of the Ph. U. S., (1873) suggests another mode of preparation, by mixing together a solution of carbonate of ammonium in distilled water, and of acetic acid with distilled water. A sudorific; externally, cooling. Dose, fʒij. to fʒi.

Liquor Ammo'niæ Citra'tis, Solution of Citrate of Ammonia. This preparation is official in the British Pharmacopœia. It is made by dissolving fʒij. of citric acid in Oj. of distilled water, and adding fʒij. of strong solution of ammonia until the liquid is neutral to test-papers. It is given in cases of adynamic fever.

Liquor Ammo'niæ Sesquicarbona'tis, Liqueur ammoniæ subcarbonatis.

Liquor Ammo'niæ Subcarbona'tis, Liqueur ammoniæ sesquicarbona'tis, Solutio subcarbonatis ammoniæ, Aqua carbonatis ammoniæ, Solutio of subcarb'onate of ammo'nia, Wa'ter of carb'onate of ammo'nia. (Ammonia carbon., $\frac{3}{4}$ iv., Aque destillat., Oj. Dissolve and filter through paper.) Use:—the same as that of the carbonate of ammonia.

Liquor Am'ni, Aqua am'ni. The liquor of the amnios, (F.) Eau ou Liqueur de l'amnios, Liquide amniotique. The fluid exhaled by the amnios, and which envelops the fœtus during the whole period of uterogestation. It is often simply called the waters, (F.) Les Eaux. Its relative quantity diminishes as pregnancy advances, although its absolute quantity continues to increase till the period of delivery. In some women only five or six ounces are met with; in others, it amounts to pints. It is limpid, yellowish, or whitish; exhales a faint smell, and has a slightly saline taste. It contains water in considerable quantity; albumen; chloride of sodium; phosphate of lime; and alkaline substance; and a particular acid. It facilitates the dilatation of the uterus, and aids delivery by acting as a soft wedge inclosed in its membranes, Bag of waters, Poche des Eaux, &c. It is probably inservient to useful purposes in the nutrition of the fœtus.

Liquor Am'ni, FALSE. The fluid contained between the amnion and chorion in the early periods of fœtal existence.

Liquor, An'odyne, Hoffmann's, Spiritus ætheris sulphurici compositus—l. Anodynus martialis, Alcohol sulphurico-æthereus ferri.

Liquor Anod'ynus Terebinthina'tus. A formula prescribed by Rademacher in cases of gallstone, and of obstructions and indurations of the liver and spleen. It was composed of Hoffmann's anodyne liquor, $\frac{3}{4}$ j., Rectified oil of turpentine, $\frac{3}{4}$ j. Dose, 5 to 10 drops. It resembles the Remède de Durande, Mixture lithontriptique de Durande, M. de Whitt, Ethérolé d'essence de térébenthine, which is formed of Sulphuric ether, 30 parts, Essence of turpentine, 15 parts. It is used in the same cases.

Liquor Antimo'ni Tartariza'ti, L. Tar'tari emet'ici, Solution of Tar'tarized Anti'mony. (Antim. et potass. tartrat., gr. liv., Aq. destillat., Oj., Solve et adde Sp. vini rectific., fʒvj.) Emetic, like the Vinum antimonii; and in the same dose.

LIQUOR ANTIMONII TERCHLO'RIDI, see Antimonium muriatum.

LIQUOR ARSENICALIS (Ph. B., 1873), L. Potas'se arsenitis (Ph. U. S., 1863), L. Potas'sii arsenitis (Ph. U. S., 1873), Solutio arsenicalis seu arsenicata seu arsenitis kalice, Arsenical solutio, Mineral solvent, Arsenis potas'se liq'uidus seu potas'se aquosus, Solutio of arsenite of potas'sa, Solution of arsenite of potas'sium, Fowler's solution of arsenic, Solvens minera'le, Italian poison, Acqua seu Aqua Toffa'nia, Acqua della Toffani, A. di Napoli, Acquetta [?], Tasteless aque drops, (F.) Liqueur arsenicale, L. de Fowler, Solution d'Arse'nite de Potasse, (Acid. Arsenios, in frustulis, Potass. bicarbonatis, sing. gr. lxiv., Aque destillat., q. s. Boil together the arsenious acid and bicarbonate with f3ss. of distilled water, in a glass vessel, until the arsenic is dissolved. Add f3xij. of distilled water and Spirit. lavand. comp., f3iv., and as much distilled water as will make the whole one pint. Ph. U. S., 1873.) f3j. contains gr. ss. of the arsenious acid. Dose, gtt. x.

LIQUOR ARSENICALIS BIET'II, see Arseniate of ammonia—l. Arsenicalis Pearsonii, see Arseniate of soda.

LIQUOR ARSENICI CHLO'RIDI, Liquor arsenici hydrochloricus, Hydrochloric solution of arsenic, Solutio of chlo'ride of arsenic, which was introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia, (1873,) is made by boiling Arsenious acid, gr. lxiv., in Hydrochloric acid, f3ij., mixed with four fluidounces of distilled water, until it is dissolved, then adding distilled water to make a pint. Each fluidounce contains four grains of arsenious acid, or an equivalent quantity of terchloride. Properties the same as those of Liquor arsenicalis. It is a substitute for, and imitation of, De Valangin's arsenical solution, Solutio solven'tis minera'lis, much used by many British practitioners. Dose, gtt. v. to x.

LIQUOR ARSENICI ET HYDRARGYRI IO'DIDI, see Arsenic and Mercury, iodide of.

LIQUOR ATROPIÆ, Solutio of Atropia. (Atropia, gr. iv., Rectified spirit, f3j., Distilled water, f3vij. Dissolve the atropia in the mixed fluid. Ph. B., 1867.) Used by the oculist to dilate the pupil, a drop being placed on the eye.

LIQUOR ATROPIÆ SULPHA'TIS, Solutio of sulphate of atropia. (Atropiæ sulph., gr. iv., Aque destill., f3j. Dissolve. Ph. B., 1867.)

LIQUOR BARI CHLO'RIDI, Baryta, muriate of, solution of—l. Bellostii, L. Hydrargyri nitrici.

LIQUOR BISMUTHI ET AMMONIÆ CITRATIS, Solutio of citrate of bismuth and ammonia. (Bismuth. purif., gr. cccxxx., Acid. nitric., f3ij., Acid. citric., f3ij., Liquor. ammoniæ, Aque destillat., aa q. s. Ph. B., 1867.) Various other unofficial formulæ for this solution have appeared from time to time, under the incorrect name of Liquor bismuthi.

LIQUOR CAL'CH CHLO'RIDI, see Calcis murias.

LIQUOR CAL'CHS, Solutio cal'cis, Aqua cal'cis seu benedic'ta seu Calca'ria us'tæ, Calca'ria pu'ra liq'uida, Solutio of lime, Lime-water, (F.) Eau de chaux. (Calcis, f3iv., Aq. destill., Ovij. Pour the water on the lime, and stir. Let it stand in a covered vessel three hours, bottle the lime and water in stopped bottles, and use the clear solution. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is astringent, tonic, and antacid, and is used in diarrhœa, diabetes, heartburn, &c., and as a lotion to foul and cancerous ulcers, &c. Dose, f3ij. to Oss., in milk.

The British Pharmacopœia has a Liquor cal'cis saccharatus, Saccharated solution of lime, which is made by mixing slaked lime, f3j., with refined sugar, in powder, f3ij., putting them in a bottle containing a pint of distilled water, shaking occasionally for a few hours, and separating the clear solution. Dose, f3ss. to f3i.

LIQUOR CAL'CHS CHLORINATÆ, L. C. Chloratæ,

Solutio of chlo'rinated lime, is made by triturating a pound of chlorinated lime with a gallon of water, shaking the mixture, filtering, and keeping in a well-stopped bottle. Ph. B., 1867. Used in the same cases as chlorinated lime. Dose, f3ss. to f3j.

LIQUOR CAL'CHS COMPOS'ITUS, Aqua cal'cis compos'ita seu benedic'ta compos'ita, Compound lime-water, (F.) Eau de chaux composé. (Lign. guaiac., ras., lbss., Rad. glycyrrh., f3j., Cort. sassafras, f3ss., Semin. coriand., f3ij., Liquor. calcis, Ovj. Macerate for two days, and filter.) It is stimulant, diaphoretic, and astringent, and is used in cutaneous affections.

LIQUOR CAL'CHS MURIA'TIS, see Calcis murias—l. Calcis saccharatus, see Liquor calcis.

LIQUOR CARBO'NIS DETER'GENS. An alcoholic solution of coal-tar, containing, therefore, carbolic and other acids, tarry matter, &c. In emulsion with water, it is used as a mouth-wash, injection for ulcers, and for gonorrhœa, parasitic affections, &c.

LIQUOR CU'PRI AMMO'NIOSULPHA'TIS, Liquor cupri ammoniatæ.

LIQUOR CU'PRI SULPHA'TIS COMPOS'ITUS, Aqua cupri vitriolata' compos'ita. (Cupri sulphat., Alumin. sulphat., aa f3ij., Aque puræ, Oij., Acid. sulph., f3ij. Boil the salts in the water until they are dissolved, then filter the liquor, and add the acid.) Used as an astringent in epistaxis, &c. It was also called Aqua Styptica.

LIQUOR CYRENT'ACUS, Benjamin—l. Entericus, Succus entericus—l. Donovanii, see Arsenic and Mercury, iodide of.

LIQUOR EPISPAS'TICUS, Blistering liq'uid. (Cantharid., pulv., f3vij., Acid. acetic., f3iv., Ether, q. s. Made by percolation. Ph. B., 1867.)

LIQUOR EXCI'TANS, Spiritus ammoniæ succinatus.

LIQUOR FER'RI ALKALI'NI, Solutio of alkaline iron, (F.) Liqueur de fer alkaline. (Ferri, f3jss., Acid. nitric., f3ij., Aque destillat., f3vj., Liq. potass. subcarb., f3vj. To the acid and water mixed, add the iron, and, after the effervescence, add the clear solution gradually to the liq. potassæ subcarb., shaking it occasionally till it assumes a deep brown red color and the effervescence stops. After six hours' settling, pour off the clear solution. Ph. L.) It is tonic, like other preparations of iron. Dose, f3ss. to f3iss.

LIQUOR FER'RI CHLO'RIDI, Solutio of chlo'ride of iron. This preparation was introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873). It is prepared by the action of muriatic and nitric acids and distilled water on iron wire.

LIQUOR FER'RI CITRA'TIS, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Solutio of citrate of iron. Made by saturating with citric acid the hydrated oxide of iron formed by decomposing the solution of tersulphate of iron by water of ammonia, and reducing the liquid by evaporation to the proper measure.) Used to prepare the Ferri citras.

LIQUOR FER'RI IO'DIDI, Solution of iodide of iron, Syrupus fer'ri io'didi (Ph. U. S., 1873), Syrup of iodide of iron, (F.) Sirop d'iodure de fer. (Iodin., 3ij., Ferri fil., gr. ccc., Aquæ destill., f3ij., Syrup., q. s. Mix the iodine, iron, and water in a flask of thin glass, shake occasionally until reaction ceases, and the solution acquires a green color and loses the smell of iodine. Heat Oj. of syrup in a graduated bottle by means of a water-bath to 212°, and through a small funnel inserted into the mouth of the bottle filter into it the solution already prepared. When this has passed, close the bottle, shake it thoroughly, and when cool add syrup to make the whole measure f3xx. Shake the bottle, and transfer to well-stopped two ounce bottles.) Dose, 20 or 30 drops.

LIQUOR FER'RI MURIA'TIS, Tinctura ferri muriatis—1. Ferri muriatici oxydati, see Ferri chloridum.

LIQUOR FER'RI NITRA'TIS, L. Fer'ri pernitrat, (Ph. B., 1867.) seu Sesquinitrat seu Ternitrat, Solutio fer'ri nitra'tis, Solution of nitrate, or ternitrate of sesquioxide, or of sesquinitrate or pernitrate of iron, or of the ferri nitrate, has been recommended in chronic diarrhoea and dysentery. Its virtues exactly resemble those of chloride of iron. It is prepared, according to the Ph. U. S., by the action of nitric acid and distilled water on iron wire. Dose, 10 to 20 drops.

LIQUOR FER'RI PERACETA'TIS, Fer'rum Aceticum Solutum. Made by oxidizing the protosulphate of iron to the tetroxide, precipitating with ammonia, washing the hydrated peroxide thus formed, and expressing between linen, and mixing with dilute acetic acid. Dose, gtt. iij-x., largely diluted.

LIQUOR FER'RI TERSULPHA'TIS, L. F. Persulphatis, Solution of Tersulphate or Persulphate of iron. (Ferri sulph., in pulv. crass., 3xij., Acid. sulphuric., 3ij., gr. ix., Acid. nitric., 3j., gr. cccx., Aquæ, q. s. Mix the acids with half a pint of water, heat the mixture to the boiling point, and add the sulphate of iron gradually until effervescence ceases. Continue the heat until the solution has a reddish-brown color, and is free from nitrous odor. Add water, when nearly cold, to make a pint and a half. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used in the formation of different chalybeate preparations.

LIQUOR FOLLIC'ULI, see Folliculi Graafiani.

LIQUOR FU'MANS BOYL'II, Sulphure'tum ammo-niæ hydrogenat'um, Ammoniæ hydrosulphure'tum, Tinctura sulphuris volatilis, Aqua sulphure'ti ammoniæ, Boyle's fuming liquor, (F.) Liqueur fuyante de Boyle. It is possessed of nauseating and emetic properties, and has been given in diabetes and diseases of excitement as a deoxygenizer!

LIQUOR FU'MING BOYLE'S, Liquor fumans Boylei—1. Fuming, of Libavius, Tin, muriate of—1. Genital, Sperm.

LIQUOR GUTTA-PER'CHÆ, Solution of Gutta-percha (Ph. U. S., 1873), Traumaticine. (A solution of gutta-percha in purified chloroform in the proportion of 3iiss. of the former to 3xvij. of the latter, with the addition of carbonate of lead, 3ij., which by its weight subsides and carries down the coloring matter.) Applied by means of a camel's-hair pencil in cutaneous affections,—as erysipelas and eczema, and to indolent ulcers.

LIQUOR OF HARTS'HORN, Volatile, Liquor volatilis cornu cervi—1. Hydrargyri bichloridi, Liquor hydrargyri oxymuriatis—1. Hydrargyri chloridi corrosivi, L. hydrargyri oxymuriatis—1. Hydrargyri et Arsenici iodidi, see Arsenic and Mercury, iodide of.

LIQUOR HYDRAR'GYRI NITRA'TIS, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) L. Hydrar'gyri Nitrat (Ph. B., 1867,) Solution of Nitrate of Mercury, Ac'id Solutio of Nitrate of Mercury. Two methods for the preparation of this solution are given in the Ph. U. S., 1873. According to one of these, Mercury is dissolved in the Nitric Acid, previously mixed with distilled water, and when reddish vapors cease to arise, the liquid is evaporated. A second method is to mix nitric acid with distilled water, dissolve red oxide of mercury in the mixture, and evaporate.

LIQUOR PROPAGATORY, Sperm — 1. Prostaticus, Prostatic liquor, see Prostate — 1. Puris, see Pus.

LIQUOR SANG'VINIS, Blood liquor, (F.) Liqueur du Sang. A term given by Dr. B. Babington to one of the constituents of the blood, the other being the red particles. It is the Hæmatoplas'ma, the Plas'ma, of Schultz, Lymph, Coagulable or plastic Lymph, the Mucago or Mucilage of Harvey, and others, and the intercellular fluid of Lehmann, (F.) Lympe plastique ou coagulable, Suc nourricier, and is the effused material from which the cells obtain the constituents of the different tissues and secretions. See Blood.

LIQUOR OF SCAR'PA, Vitæne auditive.

LIQUOR SEMINIS, Spermatic liquor. The homogeneous transparent fluid, in which the spermatozooids and seminal granules are contained. See Sperm.

LIQUOR SO'DÆ, L. So'dæ Caust'icæ, Solution of So'da, Solution of Caustic So'da. (Prepared, like liquor potassæ, from carbonate of sodium.) It has the same properties as liquor potassæ.

LIQUOR SO'DÆ ARSENATIS, see Arseniate of soda.

LIQUOR SO'DÆ CARBONATIS, Solution of Carbonate of So'da. (Sodæ carbon., ℥iss. (avoirdupois), Aquæ destillat., Oj. (Imp. meas.) Ph. D.) Dose, as an antacid, one or two tablespoonfuls, diluted with water.

LIQUOR SO'DÆ CHLORATÆ, L. sodæ chlorinatæ — 1. Sodæ Chloridi, L. sodæ chlorinatæ.

LIQUOR SO'DÆ CHLORINATÆ (Ph. U. S., 1873), L. So'dæ chloratæ (Ph. B.) seu so'dæ chlo'ridi seu so'dæ oxymuriat'icæ seu chlo're'ti na'tri seu chlorure'ti na'tri seu chlo're'ti so'dæ seu chlorure'ti so'dæ seu na'tri oxymuriat'ici, Na'trum chlorat'um liq'u'idum, A'qua na'tri oxymuriat'ici, Labarraque's Disinfecting Liquid, Solution of Chlorinated Soda, (F.) Liqueur de Labarraque, Hypochlorite de Soude liquide. (Calcis chlorinat., ℥ij., Sodii carbonat., ℥ij., Aquæ, Oxiij. Dissolve the carbonate in three pints of the water, with the aid of heat. To the remainder of the water add, by small portions at a time, the chlorinated lime, previously well triturated, stirring the mixture after each addition. Set the mixture by for several hours; decant the clear liquid, and mix it with the solution of carbonate of sodium; drain through a muslin strainer, add water, and keep in bottles secluded from the light. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used in the same cases as the chloride of lime. Internally, 10 drops to a fluidrachm, for a dose. Diluted with water, it is an excitant and disinfectant in various morbi externi.

Lith'as, gen. Litha'tis, Urate.

Lith'ate, Urate—l. of Soda, Urate of soda.

Lithect'asy, Lithecta'sia, Lithagoga'sia, Lithodecta'sia, (lithos, and εκτασις, 'dilatation,') Cystect'asy. An operation which consists in extracting stone from the bladder by dilating the neck of the organ, after making an incision in the perinæum, and opening the membranous portion of the urethra.

Lith'ia, (from lithos,) Lithi'asis, Lithiogen'ia, Urolithi'asis, Cachex'ia calculosa, Cal'culi Mor'bus, Lapilla'tio, Genera'tio cal'culi. The formation of stone, gravel, or concretions in the human body.

Also, an affection in which the eyelids are edged with small, hard, and stone-like concretions.

LITH'IA, (F.) Lithine, is also the oxide of lith'ium, lith'ion or lithon. A reddish-white, soft metal, which is the lightest known solid, s. g., 0.594. Lithia has only been found in a few minerals, and by spectral analysis in the sea and many mineral waters, in those, for example, of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania.

LITH'IA, CARBONATE OF, C. of Lith'ium, Lithiæ Carbo'nas, Lith'i Carbo'nas (Ph. U. S., 1873), Lith'ium Carbo'nicum, (F.) Carbonate de Lithine. A salt found in certain mineral waters, which have been serviceable in lithuria by its power of dissolving uric acid and the urates. Hence, it has been suggested in that morbid condition. It may be obtained by decomposing chloride of lithium by means of carbonate of ammonia. Dose, gr. v. to x., three or four times a day. It has, also, been injected into the bladder, in cases of deposition of lithuria and oxaluria. A'erated lith'ia wa'ter is an artificial preparation, consisting of a solution of carbonate of lithia in water containing carbonic acid.

LITH'IA, CITRATE OF, Citrate of Lithium, Lithiæ citras, Lith'i Citras (Ph. U. S., 1873,) is made by the action of citric acid on carbonate of lithium. It has been given in gout. Dose, gr. x. to gr. xx.

LITH'IA RENALIS ARENO'SA, Gravel—l. Renalis, Nephrolithiasis—l. Vesicalis, Calculi, vesical—l. Water, aerated, see Lithia, carbonate of.

Lithi'asis, (λίθιασις,) Lithia—l. Cystica, Calculi, vesical—l. Nephritica, Gravel, Nephrolithiasis.

LITHIASIS PULMO'NUM, Pulmo'nes tartarizati. The formation of concretions in the lungs, occasioning at times Lithophthi'sis, Phthisis calculosa, Phthisis calculeuse, of Bayle.

LITHIASIS, RENAL OR RENALIS, see Calculus and Nephrolithiasis—l. Renalis arenosa, Gravel—l. Vesicalis, Calculi, vesical.

Lith'ic, Lith'icus. Belonging to lithic or uric acid, or to stone. Also, an antilithic.

Lith'i Bro'midum, Bro'mide of Lith'ium. This unofficial compound possesses the peculiar virtues of the bromides, being a valuable hypnotic, and exerting a special influence in cases of nervous irritability, such as the neuroses. Dose, gr. x., three times a day.

LITH'II CARBO'NAS, Lithia, Carbonate of—l. Citras, Lithia, citrate of.

Lithine, Carbonate de, Lithia, carbonate of. Lith'ion, see Lithia.

Lithodecta'sia, (lithos, ὁδός, 'a way,') and εκτάσις, 'dilatation,') Lithectasy.

Lithodial'ysis, Lithol'ysis, (lithos, and διαλύω, 'I dissolve,') The dissolving of a stone in the bladder.

Lithodras'sic, Lithodras'sicus, (F.) Lithodras-sique, (lithos, and δρασάω, 'to seize hold of,') An epithet given to a form of stone forceps—Pince lithodras-sique—used in the operation of lithotrity, by MM. Meirieu and Tanchou.

Lithogen'ia, (lithos, and γεννάω, 'I generate,') Lithia.

Lith'oid, Litho'des, Lithoï'des, (lithos, and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Of the nature of stone, or resembling stone: as Litho'des os, see Temporal bone.

Litholabe, (F.) Lithol'abum, (lithos, and λαβω, λαμβάνω, 'I seize hold of,') An instrument, employed for laying hold of a stone in the bladder, and keeping it fixed, so that lithotritic instruments can act upon it.

Lithol'abon, Forceps, (lithotomy.)

Lithol'abum. An instrument concerned in extracting stone from the bladder. It had various shapes.

Lithol'ysis, (lithos, and λυω, 'I dissolve,') Lithodialysis.

Lith'olyte. An instrument, of the catheter kind, for conveying solvents of calculi into the bladder.

Litholyt'ic, Lithontrip'tic.

Lithome'tra, (lithos, and μητρα, 'the uterus,') Osseous, or other concretions of the uterus.

Lithonephri'tis, see Nephritis.

Lithonlyt'ic, (lithos, and λυω, 'I dissolve,') Lithontrip'tic.

Lithonthryp'tic, (lithos, and θρυπτω, 'I break in pieces,') Lithontrip'tic.

Lithontrip'tic, Lithontrip'ticus, Lithonthryp'tic, Litholyt'ic, Lithonlyt'ic, Calculif'ragus, Saxif'ragus, (lithos, and τριβω, 'I rub,') A remedy believed to be capable of dissolving calculi in the urinary passages. There is not much reliance to be placed upon such remedies. By antilithics, exhibited according to the chemical character of the calculus, (see Calculi, urinary,) the disease may be prevented from increasing; but most of the vaunted lithontrip'tics for dissolving the calculus already formed have been found unworthy of the high encomiums which have accompanied their introduction.

Lithopæ'dion, In'fans Lapid'eus, Osteopæ'dion, (lithos, and παις, gen. παιός, 'a child,') A foetus, petrified in the body of the mother.

Lithoph'agus, (lithos, and φάγω, 'I eat,') A stone-eater. Cases are on record of persons who have swallowed stones for purposes of exhibition.

Lithophthi'sis, see Calculi, pulmonary, and Lithiasis pulmonum.

Lithoprinite, (lithos, and πριαν, 'to saw,') Lithotrity.

Lithoprione, (lithos, and πριων, 'a saw,') An instrument proposed by M. Leroy for preventing the fragments of a calculus, when subjected to lithotrity, from falling into the bladder. It is a variety of litholabe.

Lithoprisme, (lithos, and πριεν, 'to saw,') Lithotrity.

Lithorineur, (lithos, and ρίνω, 'to file,') An instrument, proposed by MM. Meirieu and Tanchou for filing down calculi in the bladder.

Li'thos, (λίθος,) Calculus.

Lithospermum Officina'lē, (λιθοσπερμον, from litho, and σπέρμα, 'seed,') Mil'ium So'lis, Ægon'-ychon, Grom'icell, Grom'ill, Grom'yl, Graymill, Gray millet, Bast'ard Al'kanet, Littlewale, (F.) Crémil officinal, Herbe aux Perles. Ord. Boraginæ. The seeds of this plant were formerly supposed, from their stony hardness, (lithos, and σπέρμα, 'seed,') to be efficacious in calculous affections. They have, also, been considered diuretic.

LITHOSPER'MUM VILLOS'UM, Anchusa tinctoria.

Lithotec'nion, (lithos, and τεκνιον, 'a child,') Lithopædion.

Lithotere'thrum, (lithos, and τερειν, 'to rub,') A lithotritor.

Lithothlibie, (F.), (lithos, and θλίβω, 'I crush,') The crushing of a friable calculus between a finger, passed by the rectum or vagina as far as the bas-fond of the bladder, and a catheter introduced into the bladder.

Lithothryp'sis, (lithos, and θρυπτω, 'I break in pieces,') Lithotrity.

Lithothryp'tors, see Lithotrity.

Lithotome, Lithot'omus, (lithos, and τομή, 'an incision,') This name has been given to a number of instruments of different shapes and sizes, which are used in the operation for the stone, to cut the neck or body of the bladder. They ought with more propriety to be called Cyst'o-tomes.

The Lithotome Caché of Frère Côme is the most known, and is still occasionally used. It is composed of a handle and a flattened sheath, slightly curved; in this there is a cutting blade, which can be forced out, by pressing upon a bas-cule or lever, to any extent that may be wished by the operator.

A Double Lithotome was used by Dupuytren in his bilateral operation. See Lithotomy.

Lithotom'ia, Lithotomy—1. Supra pubem, see Lithotomy.

Lithot'omist, Lithot'omus. One who devotes himself entirely to operating for the stone. One who practises lithotomy.

Lithot'omy, Lithotom'ia, Cystotom'ia, Urolithotom'ia, Sec'tio vesica'lis, Lithocystot'omy, (F.) Lithotomie, Taille. The operation by which a stone is extracted from the bladder. The methods according to which this operation may be practised are reducible to five principal, each of which has experienced numerous modifications.

1. The Meth'od of Cel'sus, Meth'odus Celsia'na, Cystotom'ia cum appa'ratu par'vo, Appa'ratu mi'nor, Cut'ting on the Gripe. This consisted in cutting upon the stone after having made it project at the perinæum by means of the fingers introduced into the rectum. The method was attended with several inconveniences; such as the difficulty of dividing the parts neatly, injury done to the bladder, as well as the impossibility of drawing down the stone in many persons. It is sometimes also called Meth'odus Guytonia'na; from Guy de Chauliac having endeavored to remove from it the discredit into which it had fallen in his time. It was termed Appa'ratu mi'nor, (F.) Le petit appareil, from the small number of instruments required in it.

2. Appa'ratu Ma'jor. This method was invented in 1520, by John de Romani, a surgeon of Cremona, and communicated by him to Mariano Santo di Barletta, whence it was long called Maria'no's Meth'od, Sec'tio Maria'na. It was called, also, Appa'ratu Ma'jor, and Cystotom'ia seu Meth'odus cum appa'ratu mag'no, (F.) Le grand appareil, from the number of instruments required in it. An incision was made on the median line; but the neck of the bladder was not comprehended in it. It was merely dilated. The greater apparatus was liable to many inconveniences: such as ecchymosis; contusion; inflammation of the neck of the bladder; abscesses; urinary fistulæ; incontinence of urine; impotence, &c.

A modification of this method, by Mr. George Allarton of England, has been called the Me'dian or Allarton's operation. It consists in dividing the perinæum and the membranous portion of the urethra, passing a probe down to the staff, and into the bladder, as a guide for the finger through the prostatic portion of the urethra into the bladder, thus dilating the passage so as to allow of the introduction of the forceps.

3. The High or Suprapubic operation, Apparatus al'tus, Cystotomia cum apparatu al'to, C. Hypogastrica, Lithotomia supra pubem, Epicystotomia, Laparocystotomia, Sec'tio seu Meth'odus Franconia'na, S. Hypogastrica seu al'ta, (F.) Haut appareil, Taille Hypogastrique, Taille sus-pubienne, was first practised by Peter Franco, about the middle of the 16th century. It consisted in pushing the stone above the pubis by the fingers introduced into the rectum. Rousset afterwards proposed to make the bladder rise above the pubis by injecting it. The method had fallen into discredit, when Frère Côme revived it. It is used when the calculus is very large. It was practised by opening first the membranous part of the urethra upon the catheter passed into the canal. Through this incision the Sonde à dard—a species of catheter, having a spear-pointed stilet—was introduced into the bladder. An incision was then made into the linea alba, above the symphysis pubis, of about four or five fingers' breadth, and the peritoneum detached to avoid wounding it. The stilet was pushed through the bladder, and used as a director for the knife, with which the bladder was divided anteriorly, as far as the neck; and the stone extracted. It was performed in England by Douglass in 1719, and since by others, with various modifications.

4. The Lat'eral Operation, Hypocysteotomia, Cystotomia lateralis, Cystauchenotomia, Cystotrachelotomia, Urethrocystauchenotomia, Urethrocystotrachelotomia, Sec'tio lateralis, Apparatus lateralis, (F.) Appareil lateralisé, so named from the prostate gland and neck of the bladder being cut laterally, was probably invented by Peter Franco. It was introduced into France by Frère Jacques de Beaulieu. He performed it with rude instruments invented by himself, and improved by the suggestions of some of the Parisian surgeons. In England, it received its earliest and most important improvements from the celebrated Cheselden. It is the method practised at the present day, according to different modes of procedure. In this method, the patient is placed upon a table; his legs and thighs are bent and separated; the hands being tied to the feet. The perinæum is then shaved, and a staff introduced into the bladder, the handle being turned towards the right groin of the patient. An oblique incision is now made from the raphe to the middle of a line drawn from the anus to the tuberosity of the ischium of the left side; and, taking the staff for a guide, the integuments, areolar tissue of the perinæum, membranous portion of the urethra, transversus perinæi muscle, bulbo-cavernosus, some fibres of the levator ani, the prostate and neck of the bladder, are successively divided. For this latter part of the operation, the knife, the beaked bistoury, Bistouri ou Lithotome Caché, cutting gorget, &c., is used, according to the particular preference. The forceps are now introduced into the bladder, and the stone extracted. In the operation care must be taken not to injure the rectum or the great arterial vessels distributed to the perinæum.

A variety of the Lat'eral Apparatus, called by the French Appareil latéral, consisted in cutting into the bas-fond of the bladder, without touching the neck of that organ; but it was soon abandoned, on account of its inconveniences.

The method of Le Cat and of Pajola—Urethrocystoëneurysmatotomy—consists in dividing the prostate in part only,—the enlargement of the wound being effected by a peculiar dilator.

The Bilat'eral Operation is founded on that of Celsus. It consists in making an incision posterior to the bulb of the urethra, and anterior to the anus, involving both sides of the perinæum by crossing the raphe at right angles: an incision is then made through the membranous part of the urethra, and the prostate may be cut bilaterally, either with the double lithotome of Dupuytren, or the prostatic bisector of Dr. Stevens, of New York.

Buchanan's Operation. Dr. Buchanan, of Glasgow, suggested the use of a rectangular staff, the angle being placed about three inches from the point, the portion beyond the angle being deeply grooved at the side. When introduced, the angle of the staff is made to correspond to the apex of the prostate. The surgeon, introducing his finger into the rectum, inserts a bistoury in front of the anus, with the blade horizontal and its edge turning to the left, pushing it straight into and along the groove to the stop at its extremity. While slowly withdrawing the bistoury, he makes a curved incision through the soft parts, about an inch and a half long, round the upper and left side of the rectum.

The Quadrilat'eral Operation, proposed by Vidal de Cassis, was a modification of the bilateral operation, to be employed when the calculus was unusually large, but it was quadrilateral only so far as the number of prostatic incisions was concerned, the external incision being bilateral.

5. Lithotomy by the Rectum, Rec'to-ves'ical Lithotomy, Proc'tocystotomia, Sec'tio rectovesicalis, (F.) Taille par la Rectum, Taille postérieure, T. Recto-vésicale. This was proposed by Vegetius in the 16th century; but it was never noticed until M. Sanson, in the year 1817, attracted attention to it; since which time it has been successfully performed in many instances. It consists in penetrating the bladder through the paries corresponding with the rectum by first cutting the sphincter ani and rectum about the root of the penis, and penetrating the bladder by the neck of that organ, dividing the prostate, or by its bas-fond.

Lithotomy in women, from the shortness of the urethra, is a comparatively insignificant operation. The majority of calculi can be readily removed by urethral dilatation and extension, or by lithotripsy. Ure'thral lithotomy is objectionable on account of the frequency of incontinence of urine as a result. Vag'inal or Ves'ico-vag'inal lithotomy is sometimes demanded, the stone being removed by an incision into the bladder through the vaginal septum, which is afterwards closed by stitches.

An operation, now abandoned, practised by Celsus and revived by Lisfranc, was called the Vestib'ular operation, because the incision was made across the centre of the vestibular space.

The operation of breaking, bruising, or sawing the stone in the bladder. It has been performed of late years with success by French, and after them by English and American, surgeons. The instruments employed for this purpose are called, in the abstract, Lithotrites, Lithotriteurs, Lithot'ritors, Lithotrip'tors, Lithothryp'tors, Lithotrype'tæ, and Lith'oclasts. The most celebrated are those of Civiale, Jacobson, Heurteloup, and Weiss. See Brise-pierre articulé, and Percuteur courbe à marteau.

Lithotrype'tæ, see Lithotripsy.

Lithoxidu'ria, (lithos, oxide, and ουρον, 'urine.') The discharge of urine containing lithic or xanthic oxide.

Lithu'ria, Lithiu'ria, Lithure'sis, Lithourorrhée of Piorry, (lithos, and ουρον, 'urine.') Lith'ic or Lith'ic Ac'id Diath'esis. The condition of the system and of the urine in which deposits of lithic acids and the lithates—lithic sediments or concretions—take place in the urine. Called by Bouchardat Polyurique, and Affection polyurique. See Urine.

Li'thus, (λίθος.) Calculus.

Liv'er, (Sax. liver.) He'par, Je'cur, Jec'inus, (F.) Foie. The liver is the largest gland in the body. It is an azgyous organ, unsymmetrical, very heavy, and of a brownish-red color, occupying the whole of the right hypochondrium and a part of the epigastrium. Above, it corresponds to the diaphragm; below, to the stomach, transverse colon, and right kidney; behind, to the vertebral column, aorta, and vena cava; and before, to the base of the chest. Its upper surface is convex; the lower, irregularly convex and concave, so that anatomists have divided the organ into three lobes—a large or right or colic lobe, a lesser lobe, lobule, or inferior lobe—the Lob'ulus Spige'lii—and a middle or left lobe. At its inferior surface are observed—1. A Sul'cus or fur'row or fi'ssure, called horizontal or longitudinal fissure, Fos'sa umbilica'lis, Sul'cus ante'roposte'rior jec'oris seu horizontal'is jec'oris seu longitudina'lis jec'oris seu sinis'ter jec'oris seu umbilica'lis, (F.) Sillon horizontal ou longitudinal ou de la veine ombilicale, which lodges, in the foetus, the umbilical vein, and ductus venosus. 2. The principal fissure, termed Sul'cus transver'sus, Fos'sa transver'sa, Trans'verse fos'sa, S'i'nus porta'rum, Por'ta, P. seu Ma'nus jec'oris seu He'patis, Fos'sa or fi'ssure of the ve'na por'ta, Por'tal fi'ssure or fos'sa, (F.) Grande scissure du foie, Sillon transversal ou de la veine porte, Hile du foie, which receives the sinus of the vena porta. 3. The Fissure of the ve'na ca'va infe'rior, (F.) Sillon ou gouttière de la veine cave inférieure, situate at the posterior margin of the organ, and lodging the vena cava inferior. 4. The Lob'ulus Spige'lii or poste'rior por'tal em'inen'ce. 5. The Ante'rior por'tal em'inen'ce, Anri'ga seu Lob'ulus anon'y'mus. 6. Depressions corresponding to the upper surface of the stomach, gall-bladder, arch of the colon, right kidney, &c. Continued from the fossa umbilicalis is a small fossa called Fos'sa duc'tûs veno'si, between the left lobe and lobulus Spigelii. The posterior margin of the liver is very thick, mar'go obtu'sus, much more so than the anterior, mar'go acu'tus. The liver is surrounded by a serous or peritoneal covering, which forms for it a suspensory or broad ligament and two lateral and triangular ligaments. See Falx. The bloodvessels of the liver are very numerous. The hepatic artery and vena porta furnish it with the blood necessary for its nutrition and the secretion of bile. The hepatic veins convey away the blood which has served those purposes. The lymphatic vessels are very numerous, some being superficial, others deep-seated. The nerves are also numerous, and proceed from the pneumogastric, diaphragmatic, and the hepatic plexuses.

The intimate structure of the parenchyma of the liver has been well studied. When cut, it presents a porous appearance, owing to the division of a multitude of small vessels. When torn, it seems formed of granulations, the intimate structure of which has given rise to many hypotheses. In these granulations are contained the radicles of the excretory ducts of the bile, the union of which constitutes the hepatic duct. The intimate structure of the liver consists of a number of lobules—hepatic lobules, hepatic islets, in'sulæ—(F.) Lobules hépatiques, Îlots du foie, Lobulins—composed of intra'lobular or hepatic veins—ve'næ intra'lobula'res seu centra'les lobulo'rum—which convey the blood back that has been inservient to the secretion of bile. The interlobular plexus of veins—ve'næ interlobula'res—is formed by branches of the vena porta, which contain both the blood of the vena porta and of the hepatic artery, both of which are considered to furnish the pabulum of the biliary secretion. The biliary ducts form likewise an interlobular plexus, having an arrangement similar to that of the interlobular veins.

The liver is perhaps the only organ which, independently of the red blood carried to it by the hepatic artery, receives black blood by the vena porta. The general opinion is, that the blood of the vena porta furnishes the bile, whilst the hepatic artery affords blood for the nutrition of the liver. It is probable, however, that bile is secreted from the blood of the latter vessel. Besides bile, the liver forms sugar, and is a great assimilating organ. The liver also produces glycogen or animal starch, which is readily converted into sugar.

The liver is liable to a number of diseases. The principal are—hepatitis or inflammation, cancer, atrophy, biliary calculi, encysted and other tumors or tubercles, hydatids, &c.; and it has at times been the fashion to regard it as the cause of symptoms with which it is no wise connected.

LIV'ER, He'par. Under this name the ancients designated several substances having a brownish color analogous to that of the liver, and composed of sulphur and some other body. See Potassæ sulphuretum, Liver of sulphur.

Liv'er of Antimony is the semivitreous sulphuret.

LIV'ER, ALBU'MINOUS, Amyloid, larda'ceous, scrofulous, or waxy liver, Degeneratio hepatis larda'cea. Altered nutrition of the liver, in which its substance is transformed so as to have those epithets applied to it.

LIV'ER, AM'YLOID, L. albuminous.

LIV'ER, AP'OPLEXY OF. An extravasation of blood in the hepatic tissue or beneath its capsule, as in scurvy, purpura, &c., probably due to some disease of the coats of the vessels.

LIV'ER, NUT'MEG, He'par variegatum, Tu'beriform liv'er. An appearance of the liver when cut across, resembling that of the section of a nutmeg, Myristica hepatis, supposed by some to be the result of intemperance in the use of alcoholic drinks; but occurring under other causes. The terms whisky liv'er, gin-drinkers' liv'er, and gin liv'er, occasionally applied to it, are, consequently, not distinctive. Under the name Pigment liv'er, Frerichs describes the liver as it sometimes appears in those who die from the effects of malarious fevers; when it is of a steel gray or blackish, or, not unfrequently, chocolate color; brown insulated figures on a dark ground—a condition which "is produced by an accumulation of pigment matter in the vascular apparatus of the gland."

Lo'bated, Loba'tus, (F.) Lobé, (from lobe.) Divided into lobes; as Lob'ulated, Lobula'tus, (F.) Lobulé, means divided into lobules.

Lobe, (lobos,) Lo'bus. A round, projecting part of an organ. The liver, lungs, and brain, for example, have lobes.

The under surface of the brain is divided into two anterior, two lateral, two posterior, and two intermediate lobes or processes. These Chaussier calls lobules of the brain: the cerebral hemispheres he terms lobes. Gratiolet has more recently distinguished five lobes on the external surface of the hemisphere, the frontal, parietal, temporo-sphenoidal, occipital, and island of Reil or central lobes, which are divisible into other lobes; on the internal surface, the fronto-parietal and occipito-temporal lobes.

LOBE, BIVEN'TRAL. A wedged-shaped lobe of the cerebellum, situate behind the amygdala.

Lobe Duodénal, Lobulus Spigelii.

LOBE OF THE EAR, Lob'ule of the Ear, is a soft, rounded prominence, which terminates the circumference of the pavilion inferiorly, and is pierced in those who wear rings.

Lobe Pancréatique, Lobulus Spigelii—1. Petit du foie, Lobulus Spigelii—1. de Spigel, Lobulus Spigelii.

Lobé, Lobated.

LOBE'lia CARDINA'LIS, Lobe'lia coccin'ea, Trache'lium America'num, Car'dinal Plant, Car'dinal Flow'er, Scar'let Lobe'lia. Ord. Lobeliaceæ. This species is indigenous in the United States. It blooms in autumn, having beautiful carmine flowers. The root is a reputed anthelmintic with the Indians.

LOBE'lia, COCCIN'EA, L. cardinalis.

LOBE'lia, INFLA'TA, In'dian or Wild Tobac'co, Puke Weed, Asthma Weed, Eye'bright, Emet'ic Weed, Lobe'lia, (Ph. U. S.,) (F.) Lobélie, L. enflée. The prominent virtues of this American plant are those of an emetic. In smaller doses it is sedative, and has been given as a pectoral in croup, asthma, &c. It is, also, sudorific and cathartic, and is an acro-narcotic poison. Twenty grains act as an emetic. An active principle has been derived from it, which has been called lobelin.

LOBE'lia PALE'SPIKED, L. spicata.

LOBE'lia PINIFO'lia. A South African plant, the root of which is excitant and diaphoretic. A decoction of it is sometimes used in the Cape Colony as a domestic remedy in cutaneous affections, chronic rheumatism, and gout.

LOBELIA, SCARLET, L. cardinalis.

LOBELIA SPICATA, Pale-spiked Lobelia; indigenous; is a diuretic.

LOBELIA SYPHILITICA, L. reflexa, Ranunculus Virginia'nis, Rapuntium Syphiliticum, Blue Lobelia, Blue Cardinal Flower. The root of this plant, which is indigenous in the United States, is an emetic and drastic cathartic. It has been used in syphilis; hence its name. The mode of preparing it is to boil $\frac{3}{4}$ ss. of the dried root in Ovilj. of water, until the fluid is reduced to Ovilj. Dose, Oss.

Loblol'ly, see Avena.

Loblol'ly Boy, ('water gruel boy.') An attendant and aid to the surgeon on board ship.

Lob'ular, Lobularis, (F.) Lobulaire. Relating to or belonging to a lobule: — as lobular pneumonia, (F.) Pneumonie lobulaire, P. mamelonée, P. disséminée. Pneumonia anatomically characterized by nuclei of red or gray hepatization disseminated in variable numbers in one or both lungs.

LOB'ULAR BIL'IARY PLEX'US. The plexus formed of lobular hepatic ducts, which are derived chiefly from the interlobular. This plexus forms the principal part of the substance of the lobule.

LOB'ULAR VE'NOUS PLEX'US. The plexus interposed between the interlobular portal veins, and the intralobular hepatic vein.

Lob'ulated, see Lobated.

Lob'ule, Lobulus, (dim. of lobus.) Mr. Kierman uses the term lobule, for the acinus of the liver of many anatomists.

Lob'ulus, Lobule — l. Accessorius anterior quadratus, L. anonymus.

LOB'ULUS seu LO'BUS ANON'YMS, L. accessorius anterior quadratus, L. quadratus, (F.) Lobule carré, L. antérieur du foie, Eminence porte antérieure. This is situate in the liver between the passage for the round ligament and the gall-bladder, and is less prominent, but broader, than the Lobulus caudatus. From the lobulus anonymus a bridge runs across the passage for the round ligament. It is called Pons seu Isth'mus he'patis.

LOB'ULUS seu LO'BUS CAUDA'TUS, Processus caudatus. This is merely the root or one of the angles of the lobulus Spigelii, advancing towards the middle of the lower side of the great lobe, and representing a kind of tail. Also, the termination of the helix and anthelix of the ear, which is separated from the concha by an extensive fissure.

LOB'ULUS CENTRA'LIS. A small lobule or prominence of the superior vermiform process of the cerebellum situate in the incisura anterior.

LOB'ULUS seu LO'BUS SPIGE'LII, L. postérieur seu posticus papillatus, (F.) Eminence porte postérieure, Lobule ou Petit lobe du foie, Lobe de Spigel ou duodénal ou pancréatique, is situate near the spine, upon the left side of the great lobe of the liver, and is of a pyramidal shape, projecting, like a nipple, between the cardia and vena cava, at the small curvature of the stomach.

Lo'cal, Localis, (from locus, 'a place,') Topicus, Mer'icus, Partia'lis, Topical, (F.) Locale, Topique. Affections are called local — Morbi locales — when confined to a part, without implicating the general system; or, at all events, only secondarily. Local is thus opposed to general. In the classification of Dr. Wm. Farr, Local diseases, Monorganici (Mor'bi), include sporadic diseases in which the functions of particular organs and systems are disturbed or obliterated, with or without inflammation; sometimes hereditary.

A local or topical application is one used externally. See Topic.

Locche, Min'eral Wa'ters of. See Leuk.

Loch, Looch.

Lochi'a or Lo'chia, (λοχία, λοχία,) Purgamen'ta Puerpe'rii seu U'teri, Purga'tio puerpe'rii, Ly'ma, (λοχός, 'a woman in childbed,' λοχία, 'parturition;') (F.) Lochies, Suites de couches, Vidanges. The cleansings. A serosanguineous discharge following delivery. During the first two or three days, it is bloody; but afterwards becomes green-colored — green waters — and exhales a disagreeable and peculiar odor. The lochia, in different stages, have received the names Lochia cruen'ta, L. sero'sa and L. al'ba seu muc'o'sa seu lac'tea. The duration, quantity, and character of the discharge vary according to numerous circumstances. It flows from the part of the uterus which formed a medium of communication between the mother and foetus, and continues, usually, from 14 to 21 days. See Parturition.

Lochiocæli'tis, gen. Lochiocæli'tidis, (λοχία, 'childbirth,' καίλια, 'abdomen,' and itis,) Puerperal fever.

Lochiodochi'um, Lochodochium.

Lochiop'ya, (λοχία, 'childbirth,' and πυρ, 'fever,') Puerperal fever.

Lochiorrhag'ia, (lochía, and ῥήγνυμι, 'I break forth,') An immoderate flow of the lochia. Hemorrhage from the uterus in the childbed state.

Lochiorrhœ'a, (lochía, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') (F.) Lochiorrhée. Discharge or immoderate discharge of the lochia.

Lochio'rum (gen. of Lochia) Reten'tio, Ischolo'chia.

Lochos'chesis, (lochía, and ἰσχεύω, 'to restrain,') Ischolo'chia.

Lock'ing, Coxofemoral articulation.

Locomoteur, Locomotive.

Locomotil'ity, see Locomotion.

Locomoti'on, Locomoti'o, (locus, 'a place,' and movere, motum, 'to move,') An action peculiar to animal bodies, by which they transport themselves from place to place. It, as well as musculati'on, has also been used for the function of animal movements. The faculty is sometimes called Locomotiv'ity and Locomotil'ity.

LOCOMOTI'ON OF AN AR'TERY is the movement produced in vessels having a curvature, by the impulse of the blood sent from the heart, which tends to straighten the artery, and causes the movement in question.

Locomoti'v, Locomoti'or, Locomoti'ory, Locomoti'orius, (F.) Locomoteur, (same etymon.) Relating or appertaining to locomotion — as 'the locomotive or locomotory apparatus,' (F.) Appareil locomoteur.

Loculeux, Locular.

Lo'cus Cere'leus. A small eminence of dark gray substance, opposite the crus cerebelli; which presents a bluish tint through the thin stratum covering it. A thin streak of the same color, continued up from this on either side of the fasciculi teretes, is called the te'nia viola'cea.

Lo'cus CINE'REUS, Substantia ferruginea.

Lo'cus LU'TEUS. The entire space covered by the mucous membrane connected with the sense of smell, of a yellow color in man. The term Re'gio olfacto'ria designates only that region of the nasal mucous membrane where the nerves of smell split up and terminate.

Lo'cus NI'GER, see Peduncles of the brain.

Lo'cus PERFORA'TUS ANTE'RIOR seu ANTE'RIOR. A triangular flat surface of the brain, which corresponds to the posterior extremity of each olfactory process in front of the optic tract, and near the entrance of the fissure of Sylvius, Substantia seu Lam'ina perfora'ta ante'rior.

Lo'cus PERFORA'TUS POSTI'CUS, see Tarini pons.

Longevity, Longævitæ, (F.) Longévité, (longus, 'long,' and ævum, 'age,') Macrobiosis, Macrobio'tes. The prolongation of existence to an advanced age. Haller collected examples of more than one thousand centenarians. He had knowledge of sixty-two persons aged from 110 to 120 years; of twenty-nine, from 120 to 130 years; and of fifteen, who had attained from 130 to 140 years. Beyond this advanced age, examples of longevity are much more rare and less sufficiently attested.

Longevity also means length or duration of life, (F.) Durée de la vie. The mean age at death, (F.) Vie moyenne, of different classes and professions enables an estimate to be formed of the expectation or value of life in each.

Long-headed, Macrocephalic.

Long'ing, Malacia.

Longis'simus, (superlative of longus.) A term applied to parts, which are very long in their relation to others.

LONGIS'SIMUS CAP'ITIS, Complexus minor—1. Cervicis, Transversalis colli.

LONGIS'SIMUS DOR'SI, Semispina'tus, (F.) Lombodorso-trachélien, Portion costo-trachélienne du sacro-spinal (Ch.), Long dorsal, Long du dos, is situated vertically at the posterior part of the trunk, and fills, in a great measure, the vertebral furrows. It is thick and almost square below; thin and pointed above. It is attached to the posterior surface of the sacrum, to the transverse processes of all the lumbar and dorsal vertebræ, and to the inferior margin of the last 7 or 8 ribs. It maintains the vertebral column in a straight position; straightens it when bent forwards, and can even carry it back. It also assists in the rotatory motion of the trunk.

LONGIS'SIMUS FEM'ORIS, Sartorius—1. Oculi, Obliquus superior oculi.

Longsight'edness, Presbytia.

Longus, Long—1. Atlantis, see Longus colli—1. Capitis, Rectus internus capitis major.

Lon'gus COL'LI, ('long [muscle] of the neck,') (F.) Pré-dorso-cervical, Pré-dorso-atloïdien, (Ch.) Long du cou. This muscle is situated at the anterior and superior part of the vertebral column. It is long, flat, and broader at its middle than at its extremities, which are pointed. It is attached to the anterior surface of the bodies of the first three dorsal and last six cervical vertebræ; to the intervertebral ligaments; to the anterior edge of the transverse processes of the last five cervical vertebræ; and to the tubercle on the anterior arch of the first. This muscle bends the cervical vertebræ upon each other and upon the dorsal vertebræ. If the upper portion acts on one side only, it occasions the rotation of the atlas on the vertebra dentata; and, consequently, of the head on the neck. The upper and outer portion is called by M. J. Weber, and the upper oblique portion by Quain & Sharpey, Lon'gusatlan'tis. It is the obli'quus col'li sup'e'rior of Luschka.

Lonice'ra Brachyp'oda, (called after Lonicer, a German botanist.) Ord. Caprifoliaceæ. A Japanese plant. An infusion or decoction of the leaves is possessed of diuretic properties.

Lonice'ra DIERVIL'LA, Diervilla trifida—1. Germanica, L. periclymenum—1. Marilandica, Spigelia Marilandica.

Lonice'ra PERICLY'MENUM, L. German'ica, Pericly'menum, P. vulga'rè, Caprifol'ium, C. Pericly'menum seu sylvat'icum seu distinct'um, Common Wood'bine, Hon'ey'suckle, (Prov.) Suck'ling. (F.) Chèvre-feuille. This common plant is slightly astringent and tonic, and was formerly much used in gargles.

Lonice'ra SEMPERVIRENS, Caprifol'ium sempervirens, Scar'let or Trum'pet Hon'ey'suckle.

Indigenous. A syrup of the leaves is said to have been given in asthma and in amygdalitis.[?]

Lonk, Coxofemoral articulation.

Lo'och, Lo'hoch, Loch, Look, Loch'och, (of Arabic extraction.) A linctus. See Elegma and Eclectos.

Lo'och ABS'QUÈ EMULSIONÈ PARA'TUM, Look préparé sans émulsion; Lo'och prepared without emulsion. (Pulv. g. trag., gr. xvi. to gr. xxx., Ol. amygd. dulc., 3ss., Sacchar., 3i., Aquæ, 3iij., Aquæ flor. aurant., 3ij. Mix by rubbing in a marble mortar. Ph. P.) Demulcent.

Lo'och AL'BUM, L. amygdali'num, Linctus albus seu amygdali'nus seu commu'nis, Ecleg'ma album seu gunno'soïleo'sum, (F.) Looch blanc, L. b. amygdalin, L. b. pectoral. Then take Pulv. tragacanth., gr. xvj., Ol. amygd. dulc. recent., 3ss., Sacch., 3ij. Add the almond milk gradually to this, and afterwards Aq. flor. aurant., 3ij. Ph. P.) It is demulcent and pectoral.

Lo'och AMYGDALI'NUM, L. album—1. Blanc, L. album—1. cum Croco et pistaciis, L. viride—1. of Egg, L. ex ovo.

Lo'och EX O'VO, L. pectoral'è le'niens, Po'tio seu emul'sio seu mistu'ra le'niens seu oleo'sa, Looch of Egg, (F.) Look d'œuf, Looch rouge, Émulsion huileuse, Mixture calmante, Potion pectorale, Lait adoucissant. (Vitell. ovi. recent., 3ss., Ol. amygd. dulc., 3iss., Syrup. althææ, 3j. Rub in a mortar, and add by degrees Aq. flor. aurant., 3j., Aq. papav. rhæad., 3ij. Ph. P.) Virtues the same as the preceding.

Looch Rouge, L. ex ovo—1. Vert, L. viride.

Lo'och VIR'IDÈ, L. cum cro'co et pista'ciis, (F.) Looch vert. (Syrup. violar., 3j., Tinct. croci, gtt. xx., Aquæ, 3iv. Mix, and add Pistacia semin. sicc., 3vj. Ph. P.) Virtues like the last.

Lo'ok, Looch—1. d'œuf, Looch ex ovo—1. Préparé sans émulsion, Looch absque emulsione paratum.

Loop, Anse.

LOOP, HENLE'S. A narrow loop formed in the kidney, at the contiguous borders of the medullary and cortical portions, by the peculiar turning or looping of a urinary tubule.

Loop STITCH, see Suture.

Loose'strife, Lythrum salicaria—1. Creeping, Lysimachia nummularia—1. Fourleaved, Lysimachia quadrifolia.

Loose'ness of the Bow'els, Diarrhœa—1. of the Teeth, Odontoseisis.

Lo'pez Ra'dix, (after Thomas Lopez, a Spaniard, who wrote on the natural history of the New World,) Ra'dix Lopezia'na seu In'dica Lopezia'na. The root of an unknown Indian tree, not possessed of any remarkable smell or taste, or of any appearance of resinous matter. It has been extolled, notwithstanding, in cases of colliquative diarrhœa. Gaubius compares its action to that of simarouba, but thinks it more efficacious.

Lopha'dia, Lophia.

Loph'ia, (λοφία), Lophadi'a, Loph'os. The upper part of the neck. The first vertebra of the back—Ver'tebra dor'si pri'ma.

Loph'os, (λοφος), Lophia.

Lo'pima, Fagus castanea.

Loquac'ity, Garru'litas, (from loqui, 'to speak,') (F.) Loquacité, Babillement. The act of speaking with volubility. It is sometimes a symptom of disease, and is observable in hysteria, &c.

Loque'la, (from loqui, 'to speak,') Voice, articulated—1. Abolita, Aphonia—1. Blasæ, Balbuties—1. Impedita, Baryphonia.

Lordo'sis, Lordo'ma, (from λорδός, 'curved,' 'bent,') Repanda'tio, Repan'ditas. A name given to curvatures of the bones in general; and particularly to that of the vertebral column forwards, Sp'i'na dor'si intror'eum flex'a, Emprostho-cyrto'ma. This gives rise to the projection of the sternum, called chickenbreasted or pigeon-breasted; the Pectus carinatum, Pig'con breast, Nar'row chest.

Lum'bar lordo'sis is a projection of the lumbar vertebrae forward, (F.) Ensellure.

Lorica'tio, (loricare, 'to plaster,' 'to incrust.') In Pharmacy, the application of a coating of clay or other substance to vessels which are to be exposed to fire.

Lo'rind Matri'cis, Epilep'sia uteri'na, Convulsivus uteri mor'bus. A barbarous name given to a pretended epilepsy of the womb.

Lo'ripes, gen. Lorip'edis, (lorum, 'a thong,' and pes, 'a foot,') see Kyllosis.

Lo'rus, Hydrargyrum.

Losange, Labella.

Lot, Urine.

Lo'ta, see Carate.

Lo'ta Mol'va, see Oleum jecoris aselli—l. Vulgaris, see Oleum jecoris aselli.

Lo'tio, (lavare, lotum, 'to wash,') Clyster, Lotion—l. Cupri sulphatis camphorata, Lotion, camphorated, of Bates—l. Hydrargyri flava, see Hydrargyri oxymurias—l. Hydrargyri nigra, see Hydrargyri submurias—l. Rubra, Lotion, camphorated, of Bates.

Lo'tio Ru'bra, Red wash. (Hydrarg. chlorid. corrosiv., gr. xviii., H. sulphureti rubr., gr. ix., Creasot., ℥vi., Aque, f℥viij.) May be used in the proportion of f℥j., to from f℥i. to f℥iij. of water, like the yellow wash.

Lo'tio SAPONA'CEA, see Sapo.

Lo'tion, Lo'tio, Lotu'ra, Collu'tion, (F.) Hydrolotif, Hydrolé. A fluid external application. Lotions are ordinarily applied by wetting linen in them, and keeping it on the part affected.

Lo'tion, BAR'LOW'S, Lotion of Sulph'uret of potassium. (Potassii sulphur., ℥ij., Sapon., ℥iss., Aq. calcis, f℥viiss., Alcohol. dilut., f℥ij. M.) Used in various chronic cutaneous diseases.

Lo'tion, CAM'PHORATED, OF BATES, Bates's camphorated water, Lo'tio cupri sulphatis camphorata, Lo'tio ru'bra, Red wash. (Cupri sulphat., ℥ij., Bol. rubr., ℥ij., Camphor., ℥ss., Aq. bullient., Oij. Strain through linen. f℥ij. of this, added to f℥iv. of water, is Bates's Collyrium, Collyrium Batesianum, which may also be made extemporaneously as follows: Cupri sulphat., gr. viij., Bol., gr. viij., Camphor., gr. ij., Aq. bullient., f℥viij. Mix and filter. See Lotio rubra.

Lo'tion, FEBURE'S. A cancer remedy, which consisted of Arsenic, gr. x., Water, Oj., Extract of hemlock, ℥j., Liquor plumbi subacetatis, f℥iij., Laudanum, f℥j.

Lo'tion, GOULARD'S, Liquor plumbi subacetatis dilutus.

Lo'tion, GOW'LAND'S. An empirical preparation. (Bitter almonds, ℥i., Sugar, ℥ij., Distilled water, lbij. Grind together, strain, and add Corrosive sublimate, ℥ij., previously ground with Sp. vini rect., ℥ij.) Used in obstinate eruptions.

Lo'tion, GRANVILLE'S COUNTERIRRITANT, Granville's Lotion, Granville's antid'ynous lotion. Of this lotion, Dr. Granville gives two forms—a milder, and a stronger. The milder is made as follows: Liq. ammon. fort., f℥j., Sp. Rosmarin., f℥vj., Tinct. camphor., f℥ij. M.

The stronger is made as follows: Liq. ammon. fort., f℥x., Spir. Rosmar., f℥ss., Tinct. camphor., f℥ij. M.

The stronger lotion vesicates rapidly. A piece of cotton or linen folded six or seven times, or a piece of thick flannel, may be imbued with it, and laid for a few minutes on the part to be irritated.

The Dublin Pharmacopœia had a Linimentum Ammoniac Compositum, Compound Liniment of Ammonia, which was a close imitation of Granville's Lotion.

Lo'tion, HAN'NAY'S Preventive wash. This famous nostrum for the prevention of venereal infection was nothing more than a solution of caustic potassa.

Lo'tion, HYDROCYAN'IC, Lo'tio Ac'idi Hydrocyan'ici. (Hydrocyanic acid., f℥iv., Rectified spirit of wine, f℥j., Distilled water, f℥vss.) Used with much success in impetigo, &c.

Lo'tion, MERCURIAL, BLACK, see Hydrargyri submurias—l. Mercurial, yellow, see Hydrargyri oxymurias.

Lo'tion, STRUVE'S, FOR HOOP'ING-COUGH. (Antim. et Potass. tart., ℥j., Aque, ℥ij. Add Tinct. cantharid., ℥j.) A counterirritant to the chest.

Lo'tium, Urine.

Lotu'ra, (lavare, lotum, 'to wash,') Lotion—l. Carnium. The washings of flesh.

Lubi'do, gen. Lubi'dinis, Libido—1. Intestinal, Voluntas desedendi.

Lubrican'tia, (lubricare, 'to make slippery,') Demulcents, Emollients.

Lubri'cum Ca'put, ('slippery or smooth head,') Penis.

Luc'ca, Min'eral Wa'ters and Cli'mate of. The baths and waters, near this ancient Italian city, have been long celebrated. They are thermal, and resemble, in properties, those of Plombières in France, and of Bath, England. They contain carbonic acid, sulphates of alumina, soda, magnesia, and iron. There are ten different sources, at temperatures from 94° to 130° Fah.

Lucca is much frequented in summer; partly on account of its mineral waters, but more on account of the coolness of the situation.

Luchon, Bagnères-de-Luchon.

Lu'cid, Lu'cidus, (luceo, 'I shine,') In medicine, the word lucid is particularly applied to the intervals, Interval'la lu'cida, of apparent reason, which occur in mental alienation.

Lu'cifermatch'makers' Disease, see Phosphorus.

Lu'cif'ugus, (lux, gen. lucis, 'light,' and fugere, 'to shun,') Photoph'obus, Photophob'icus. Dreading or avoiding the light.

Luci'na, (from lux, gen. lucis, 'light,' because she brought to light; a surname of Juno and Diana,) Ilithyia, Parturition.

LUC'NA SI'NE CO'ITU, ('parturition without copulation,') Parthenogenesis.

Luck'yhood, (because supposed to give luck,) Caul.

Lucoma'nia, (λυκος, 'a wolf,' and mania,) Lycanthropia.

Luctueux, (F.) Luctuosus, 'mournful,' Plaintive. An epithet applied to the respiration—(F.) Respiration luctueuse—when accompanied by moaning.

Lucuma, (S.) A fruit of the southern provinces of the coast of Peru, and the north of Chili. It is round; and the gray-brown husk incloses a fibrous, dry, yellow-colored fruit with its kernel.

LUCUMA MAMMO'SA, see Mamme apple.

Lucumoria'nus, (probably from lux, gen. lucis, 'light,' and morari, 'to tarry,') Continuing for several days; hence, Dormit'io leucomoria'na. A morbid sleep persisting for several days.

Lu'dus Helmon'tii, L. Paracel'si, Fel ter'ræ. A calcareous stone, precise nature not known, used by the ancients in calculous affections. The term was also applied to every species of calculous concretion occurring in the animal body.

LU'DUS PARACEL'SI, I. Helmontii.

Ludwig'ia Palus'tris, (after Ludwig, a botanist and physician of Leipzig,) L. nit'ida, Isnar'dia palus'tris, Wa'ter Pur'slane, Phthi'sis-weed. Order, Onagraceæ; indigenous. An infusion of the dried plant has been used as a pectoral in asthma and chronic cough.

Lug, Ear.

Lug'dus, Erysipelas.

Lu'gol's Caus'tic I'odine, Iodine Caustic. A solution of iodine and iodide of potassium, each 3i. in f3ij. of water. Used in lupus, &c.

Lu'gol's I'ODINE LO'tION, Iodine Lotion. A weak solution of iodine, gr. ij-iv., and iodide of potassium, gr. iv-viii., in water, Oj. Used in ozena, scrofulous ophthalmia, &c.

Lu'GOL'S SOLU'tION OF I'ODINE, Liquor iodini compositus.

Lujula, (corr. of Hallelujah,) Oxalis acetosella.

Lul'laby-speech, Lallation.

Lumba'go, gen. Lumbag'inis, (from lumbi,) Arthro'sia lumbo'rum, Lumba'go seu Nephral'gia rheumat'ica, Rachirrh'eum'a, Rachiorrh'eum'a, Rheumatis'mus dorsa'lis, Osphyr'rheum'a. Rheumatism affecting the lumbar muscles and lumbodorsal fascia.

Lumba'go psöä'd'ica, L. apostemato'sa, L. ab arthro'cacë. Pain in the loins from abscess. See Psöitis.

LUMBA'GO A NI'SU, (a nisu, 'from effort,') see Effort.

Lum'bar, Lumba'ris seu Lumba'lis, (F.) Lombaire, (from lumbi,) Belonging or having reference to the loins.

LUM'BAR AB'SCESS, Pso'as ab'scess, Apostema psöä'ticum, Abscess'us lumbo'rum, Mor'bus psöä'd'icus. This abscess is so called from the matter being found on the side of the psoas muscle, or betwixt that and the iliacus internus. Between these muscles is a quantity of loose, areolar substance; and when an abscess takes place there, it can find no outlet except by a distant course. Generally, it descends along the psoas muscle, forming a swelling immediately beneath Poupart's ligament; at times, however, it extends down the thigh under the fascia. Severe hectic follows the bursting of the abscess, and often death. Its causes are, —scrofula, injury to the loins, &c.

When, from the pain of the back continuing for some time, with other symptoms, the disease is suspected, caustics, or the moxa, applied opposite the transverse processes of the lumbar vertebrae, may be recommended; and, when the abscess is ready for opening, it may be emptied by repeated discharges of the matter, through a slight opening made with a lancet, or small, lance-pointed trocar. The system must be supported under the great reparative efforts required of it.

LUM'BAR AR'tERIES are four or five in number on each side. They arise from the sides of the abdominal aorta, and pass behind the muscles situate in front of the lumbar portion of the spine, to gain the broad muscles of the abdomen. They give off, 1. Spinal branches. 2. Anterior, posterior, and external muscular branches.

LUM'BAR NERVES are five in number, and issue from the vertebral column by the spinal foramina of the loins. The first lumbar nerve gives off three branches; —the external or ilioscrotal; the middle or inguinocutaneous, and the internal or infrapubian. Along with the three pairs below it, it forms the lumbar plexus.

LUM'BAR PLEX'US, Portion lombaire du plexus crural (Ch.), Plexus Lumbo-abdominal. This plexus is formed by the union of the ra'mi communican'tes of the anterior branches of the first four lumbar nerves. It is situate behind the psoas muscle, and before the transverse processes of the lumbar vertebrae. It furnishes, besides the branches which proceed from the first pair, several filaments, that are distributed to the psoas muscle, to the iliacus, the integuments, and glands of the groin; and three great branches, —the crural, obturator, and lumbosacral.

LUM'BAR RE'GION, Lumbi.

LUM'BAR VEINS have an arrangement analogous to that of the arteries of the same name. They communicate with the vertebral sinuses, azygous veins, &c., and pass into the vena cava inferior.

Lumba'ris Exter'nus, Quadratus lumborum—1. Internus, Psoas magnus.

Lum'bi, (pl. of lumbus,) The Loins or Loins, Lum'bar re'gion, (Old. Eng.) Lende, (Sc.) Lendie, Lunye; Re'gio lumba'lis, Lap'ara, Pso'a, plural Pso'e, Os'phys, Reins, (F.) Lombes. The posterior regions of the abdomen, comprised between the base of the chest and the pelvis. The parts which enter into the formation of the lumbar region are, — the skin; a considerable quantity of areolar texture; broad and strong aponeuroses: — the Latissimus Dorsi, Obliquus externus, and Obliquus internus abdominis, Transversalis abdominis, Quadratus lumborum, and the mass common to the Sacro-lumbalis, Longissimus dorsi, and Multifidus spinæ. These muscles surround the lumbar region of the vertebral column. The vessels, nerves, &c., of the loins, are called lumbar.

Lum'bo, in composition, relating or belonging to the loins or lumbar vertebrae.

Lumbocosta'lis, Sacrospinalis.

Lumbosa'ral, (F.) Lombo-sacré. Belonging to the lumbar and sacral regions. Bichat calls thus a very large nerve, given off from the anterior branch of the fifth lumbar pair, which descends into the pelvis before the sacrum to join the sciatic plexus.

Lumbrica'lis, Vermicula'ris. Resembling a lumbricus, or 'earthworm,' Lumbricoi'des. A name given to small muscles, (F.) Lombrieaux, met with in the palm of the hand and sole of the foot.

LUMBRICA'LES MA'NŪS, Fidicina'les, Flex'or pri'mi interno'dii digito'rum ma'nūs seu perforatus lumbrica'lis, (F.) Annuli-tendino-phalangiens, Palmi-phalangiens. Four small, fleshy, thin, round, long, fusiform fasciculi, situate in the palm of the hand, and distinguished into first, second, third, and fourth, counting from without to within. They arise from the tendons or the flexor communis digitorum, and are inserted at the outer and posterior side of the superior extremity of the first phalanges of the last four fingers. These muscles bend the fingers on the metacarpus, and fix the tendons of the flexor digitorum communis.

LUMBRICA'LES PE'DIS, (F.) Plantitendino-phalangiens, Plantisous-phalangiens (Ch.). They are analogous to those of the hand in form, number, and arrangement. They increase the flexion of the toes, and draw them inwards.

Lum'bricide, (lumbricus, and cædere, 'to kill.') An anthelmintic especially destructive to Ascarides lumbricoïdes.

Lumbri'cus, ('earthworm,') Ascaris lumbricoïdes — 1. Latus, Bothriocephalus latus, Tænia solium — 1. Teres hominis, Ascaris lumbricoïdes.

Lum'bus Ven'eri, 'loin of Venus,' Achillea millefolium.

Lu'men, gen. Lu'minis, Light, Pupil. Also employed in the same sense as foramen and spiramentum, 'air-hole,' and hence extended to denote the calibre of a tube or vessel.

LU'MEN CON'STANS, Phosphorus.

Lumière, (from lumen, 'a light,') Light.

Luminos'ity, Phosphorescence.

Lu'na, ('the moon,') Argentum, Moon — 1. Albini, Sciatic notch, lesser — 1. Imperfecta, Bismuth — 1. Potabilis, Argenti nitras.

Lu'nacy, see Lunatic.

Lu'nar, Luna'ris, (from luna, 'the moon, silver,') Relating or appertaining to the moon (see Lunatic); or to silver, as 'Lunar caustic.'

Luna're Os. Os seminula'ræ. The second bone in the upper row of the carpus.

Luna'ria, (luna, 'the moon,') Menses.

LUNA'RIA REDIVI'VA. Leucoïum, Bul'bonach, Moonwort, Sa'tin, Hon'esty. Ord. Cruciferae. Said, by Ray, to be a warm diuretic.

Luna'ris, Lunatic.

Lu'natic, Lunaticus, Luna'ris, Luna'rius, Lu'nar, (F.) Lunatique, (from luna,) Relating to the moon. An epithet given to diseases—as epilepsy and insanity—which were supposed to appear at certain phases of the moon; or to those who were affected by them, Lunaticus, Seleni'aci. The term lu'natic (Moon'ed, Moon'struck, Selenoble'tus) is now restricted to one laboring under lunacy or mental alienation, Demen'tia accidenta'lis seu adventit'ia, that is, under any form of unsoundness of mind, except idiocy. In law, a lunatic is one who has had an understanding, but by disease, grief, or other accident, has lost the use of his reason, and become non compos mentis or non compos.

Lunaticus, Epileptic, Lunatic, Somnambulist.

Lunatis'mus, Somnambulism.

Lune, (from luna, 'the moon,') A fit of lunacy or insanity; a mad freak.

Lune, Moon — 1. d'Eau, Nymphæa alba.

Lunel'la, (dim. of luna, 'the moon,') Hypopyon.

Lunes, (pl. of lune, 'a moon or month,') Menses.

Lunettes Ordinaires, (dim. of luna, 'moon,' from their shape,) Spectacles.

Lung, (Sax. lunge,) Pulmo — 1. Atelectasis of, Atelectasis pulmonum — 1. Atrophy of, Senile, Emphysema senile — 1. Black, of coal miners, Anthraxis — 1. Broad Ligament of, see Pleura — 1. Calculi, Calculi, pulmonary — 1. Cancer of the, Phthisis, cancerous — 1. Cirrhosis of, Cirrhosis of the lung — 1. Collapse of the, see Atelectasis pulmonum — 1. Consumption of, Phthisis pulmonalis — 1. Fever, Catarrh, Pneumonia — 1. Fibroid degeneration of, Cirrhosis of the lung — 1. Hemorrhage from, Hæmoptysis — 1. Hepaticization of, see Pneumonia and Hepaticization — 1. Inflammation of, Pneumonia.

LUNG, PER'FORATING AB'SCESS OF THE. A purulent collection, which forms exterior to the lung; and afterwards perforates its tissue, so that it is evacuated through the bronchial tubes.

LUNG PROOF, Docimasia pulmonum — 1. Root of, see Pulmo — 1. Splenization of, see Pneumonia and Splenization — 1. Stones, Calculi, pulmonary.

LUNG-TEST'ER. A cylindrical bag of India-rubber, so arranged as to measure the quantity of air expelled by the lungs. It is a form of Spirometer.

LUNG, TUBER'ULAR DISEASE OF, Phthisis pulmonalis — 1. Vesicles, see Pulmo — 1. Wort, Pulmonaria — 1. Wort, cow's, Verbascum nigrum — 1. Wort, tree, Lichen pulmonarius.

Lu'nula, (dim. of luna, 'the moon,') Onyx — 1. Unguium, see Nail — 1. Scapula, Notch, scapular.

Lu'nulæ (pl. of lunula,) Two thin semilunar surfaces on either side of the corpus Arantii of the semilunar valves of the heart.

Lu'nyie (Sc.), Lumbi.

Lu'nyiebane, Ischion.

Lu'pina, (from λυπω, 'I harass,') Encystis, Wen — 1. Punctura, Spina ventosa.

Lupi'nus. Under this term the White lupin, Lupi'nus al'bus seu sati'vus, (F.) Lupin blanc. Ord. Leguminosæ, is often meant. The seeds, which were much eaten in the days of Pliny and of Galen, are now neglected. The meal is, however, occasionally used as an anthelmintic, and as a cataplasm.

Lu'poid, Lupoï'des, (lupus, and αἶμα, 'resemblance,') Resembling, or having the character of, lupus.

LU'POID UL'CEr, see Ulcer, lupoid.

Lupuli'na, Lu'pulîn, Lupulin'ic glands. A substance which exists in Humulus lupulus or hop. It is in the form of small, shining, yellowish grains, which cover the base of the scales of the hop; is pulverulent, and of an aromatic odor. When analyzed, it is found to contain resin, volatile oil in small quantity, and a bitter principle—Lu'pulite. It is aromatic and tonic, and—according to some—narcotic.

Lupulin'ic Glands, Lupulina.

Lu'pulite, see Lupulina.

Lu'pulus, Humulus lupulus — 1. Communis, Humulus lupulus — 1. Salictarius, Humulus lupulus — 1. Scandens, Humulus lupulus.

Lu'pus, 'a wolf,' (so named from its rapacity.) Lu'pus ex'edens seu vo'rax seu dev'orans, Ja'cob's Ul'cer, Ero'sive Ul'cer of the Der'ma, Eat'ing tet'ter, Ul'cus Tuberculo'sum, Can'cer seu Phymato'sis lu'pus, Formi'ca Corrosi'va, No'li me tang'ere. (F.) Loup, Dartre rougeante. Tubercular excrescences, with ragged, spreading ulcerations, chiefly about the alae nasi, where they destroy the skin, &c., for some depth. Sometimes they appear in the cheek, circularly, or in the shape of a sort of ringworm, destroying the substance, and leaving a deep and deformed cicatrix. The knife or caustic should be used to separate the sound from the morbid parts. Arsenic has been given internally with advantage. When hypertrophy accompanies cicatrization, the affection is called lu'pus hypertroph'icus, lu'pus with hy'pertrophy. It almost always attacks the face. See, also, Herpes exedens, and Lycoides.

Lu'pus CANCRO'SUS, Cancer — 1. Devorans, see Lupus.

Lu'pus ERYTHEMATO'SUS seu ERYTHEMATO'DES, Seborrhoe'a congesti'va, Erythem'atous Lu'pus, (F.) Erythème centrifuge, Scrofulide érythémateuse, S. maligne érythémateuse, Herpes crétacé. A form of lupus characterized by small bright-red spots, elevated, and having in their centre the enlarged outlet of a sebaceous gland filled with yellow rows of dried up epithelial cells and thickened sebaceous secretion. It is not attended with ulceration, and generally attacks the nose and cheeks.

Lu'pus EX'EDENS, Lupus — 1. Hypertrophicus, see Lupus.

Lu'pus NON-EX'EDENS. In this form of the disease the tubercles spread, but do not become ulcerated. Here the deposit of a lower form of cell-tissue in place of the normal skin is greater than in the erythematous form.

Lu'pus VARICO'SUS, Nævus — 1. Vorax, Herpes exedens, see Lupus.

Lur'co, Glutton.

Lu'rid, Lu'ridus. Pale-yellow, sallow,—applied to the complexion.

Lur'keydish, Mentha pulegium.

Lu'ror, (λερος, 'pale,') Paleness.

Lusch'ka, Gland of, Coccyeal gland.

Luscio'sitas, Luscitas, Myopia.

Luscio'sus, Borgne, Myops.

Lus'citas, Luscio'sitas, Luscit'ies, Luscit'ion, (lusciosus, 'dim-sighted,') Strabismus. The term has also been given to any case of obliquity in which the eye is fixed in an unnatural position. The obliquity termed Cockeye is a form of Luscitas.

Luscit'ies, Luscitas.

Lus'cus, ('one-eyed,') Borgne.

Luss, (Sc.) Pityriasis.

Lustramen'tum, (lustrare, 'to purify,') Cathartic.

Lute, Lute.

Lute, Lu'tum, 'mud,' Cement'um, (F.) Lut. A composition employed either for closing apertures in a pharmaceutical instrument, or for covering the surface of retorts, tubes, &c., which have to support a great degree of heat. They are made of linseed meal and starch, or of clay and drying oil, or white of egg and lime, and that for covering vessels, intended to be strongly heated, is made of clay, sifted sand, and water.

Lute'ola, (dim. of luteus,) Reseda luteola.

Lu'teus, Yellow.

Lu'tron, (λουτρον, from λουειν, 'to wash,') A bath. Also, an ophthalmic medicine.

Lux, gen. Lu'cis, Light.

Luxa'tio, Luxation — 1. Imperfecta, Sprain.

Luxa'tion, Eluxa'tion, (luxare, luxatum, 'to put out of place,') Disloca'tion, Oliethe'ma, Luxa'tio, Disloca'tio, Ec'clisis, Strem'ma, Luxatu'ra, Ectop'ia, Ecto'sis, Elap'sus, Lygis'mus, Emo'tio, Ec'stasis, Exarthre'ma, Paracine'ma, E. luxa'tio, Exarthro'ma, Exarthro'sis, Ezo'sis, Ezo'the'is, Paratop'ia, Streblo'sis, Deloca'tio, Exarticula'tio, (F.) Luxation, Dislocation, Déboîtement. A displacement of a part from its proper situation. A putting out of joint. A displacement of two or more bones, whose articular surfaces have lost, wholly or in part, their natural connection; either owing to external violence, (accident'al luxation,) or to disease of some of the parts about the joint, (sponta'neous luxation,) Luxation is complete when the bones have entirely lost their natural connection; incomplete,—Luxatio imper'fecta, Subluxa'tion,—when they partly preserve it; and compound, when a wound communicates with the luxated joint. In the latter case a bone may be fractured, or an artery lacerated, so that amputation or excision may become necessary.

The general indications of treatment, are;—1. To reduce the protruded bone to its original place. 2. To retain it in situ. 3. To obviate any attendant or consequent symptoms. To reduce requires extension, counterextension, and coaptation. Anæsthetics frequently assist the efforts of the surgeon by inducing more complete relaxation of the muscles.

Luxeuil, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Saline waters, at the town of Luxeuil, at the foot of the Vosges, in the department of Haute Saône. Five springs are thermal, and two cold. They seem to contain carbonic acid, carbonates of iron and lime, and chloride of sodium; and are employed as aperient, tonic, and stimulant.

Lux'us (luxus, 'excess') Consump'tion. A consumption of an excess of albumen, which has not at any time been a constituent of the body, its combustion or oxygenation being then supposed to be effected in the blood.

Lycan'chè, Lycan'chia, (lyco, and αγχω, 'I strangle,') Wolf quin'sy, Wolf choak;—as Cynanche means Dog choak. Also, hydrophobia. See Lycoides.

Lycan'chis, Lycanehe.

Ly'canthrope, see Lycanthropia.

Lycanthro'pia, (lyco, and ανθρωπος, 'a man,') Lyc'a'um, Insa'nia lupi'na, Lycoma'nia. A variety of melancholy, in which the person believes himself to be changed into a wolf, and imitates the voice and habits of that animal. One so circumstanced is called a Ly'canthrope, Lycanthro'pus.

Lycanthro'pus, see Lycanthropia.

Lyca'um, Lycanthropia.

Lychnid'ium, (λυχνίδιον, dim. of λυχνος, 'a light,') Biolychnium.

Lychn'is (gen. Lychn'idis) Githa'go, (λυχνος,) Agrostem'ma githa'go, Corn cockle, Rose cam'pion. A naturalized European plant, Ord. Caryophyllaceæ. The seeds are somewhat acrid, but not poisonous. They were at one time employed in cutaneous diseases, and in hemorrhage, and as a topical application to ulcers and fistulae.

LYCH'NIS OFFICINA' LIS, Saponaria — 1. Sylvestris, Saponaria.

Lychn'ium, (from λυχνος, 'light,') Biolychnium.

Ly'cium, (Λυκιον,) A medicinal substance anciently obtained from the roots and branches of a thorny shrub growing in Lycia. It was astringent, and used in dysentery, ulcers of the gums, &c. By some, it has been considered to be the catechu.

Ly'co, (from λυκος, 'a wolf,') In composition, wolf.

Lycodon'tes, (lyco, and δους, 'a tooth,') Canine teeth.

Lycol'des, Lycol'des, (lyco, and εἶδος, 'form,') Lu'po sim'ilis. An epithet for a species of cynanche, called also Lu'pus and Stran'gulator, and absurdly attributed to excessive retention of sperm in its reservoirs, and its passage into the blood [?].

Lycomania, (lyco, and mania;) Lycanthropia.

Lycopo de Virginie, Lycopus Virginicus.

Lycoperdon, (lyco, and πεδω, 'I break wind,')

L. Bovis'ta seu Arrhi'zon seu Globo'sum, Bovis'ta, Crep'itus lupi, Fungus chirurgo'rum, Puffball, Bullfist, Moll'ipuffs, (Prov.) Puff, (Sc.) Deil's snuffbox, (F.) Vesseloup. Ord. Fungi. The puffball dries into a very fine, light-brownish dust, which is sometimes used as a mechanical styptic to arrest hemorrhage.

LYCOPER'DON ARRHI'ZON, Lycoperdon — 1. Cervinum, Elaphomyces granulatus — 1. Globo'sum, Lycoperdon — 1. Gulosorum, L. tuber.

LYCOPER'DON PROTEUS, Common puffball. The fumes of this substance have been found to produce anæsthetization in animals.

LYCOPER'DON TU'BER, L. Gulosorum, Tu'ber agriocastanum seu cibarium seu gulosorum seu ni'grum, Tu'bera ter'ræ, Trubs, Truff'le (pronounced troofle), (F.) Truffe. A fleshy, firm body, unknown in its mode of reproduction, which is found under ground, especially in different parts of France, Italy, &c., and is much esteemed as an aliment. It seems to belong to the champignons, and has a particular perfume. Aphrodisiac virtues have been ascribed to it.

A Virginia truffle is called Tuckahoe. It is the Sclerotium giganteum, and is sometimes named Indian bread and Indian loaf.

Lycopersicum Esculentum, Solanum lycopersicum — 1. Pomum amoris, Solanum lycopersicum — 1. Tuberosum, Solanum tuberosum.

Lycopode, Lycopodium.

Lycopodium, (lyco, and πους, gen. ποδος, 'a foot,') L. clava'tum seu officina'le, Lepido'tis clava'ta, Cingula'ria, Muscus clava'tus, Clubmoss, Wolf'sclaw, Witchmeal. Ord. Lycopodiaceæ. This is the largest of the European mosses. The dust, or sporules, Lycopodium, (Ph. U. S.), which fills the capsules of its spikes, is very inflammable, and hence has been called Veg'etable sulphur, and also Fari'na seu Pul'vis seu Se'men seu Sulphur lycopodii, (F.) Lycopode, Soufre végétal. It is used in France and in the United States to roll pills and boluses in, and in medicine is a desiccative in the excoriations to which infants are liable. It is collected chiefly in Switzerland and Germany for commerce.

LYCOP'DIUM CLAVA'TUM, Lycopodium.

LYCOP'DIUM COMPLANA'TUM, Common clubmoss, Ground pine. Indigenous. Has the same properties as Lycopodium selago.

LYCOP'DIUM OFFICINA'LE, L. clavatum — 1. Recurvum, L. selago.

LYCOP'DIUM SELA'GO, L. Recurvum, Plananthus fastigiat'us seu Sela'go, Muscus erect'us seu catharticus, Sela'go, Up'right clubmoss, Fir clubmoss, Up'right firmoss. A decoction of this plant acts violently as an emetic and purgative, and was formerly, on this account, used as an abortive. It is also employed to kill vermin.

Lycopus, L. Virginicus seu Uniflorus seu Pumila, Bu'gleweed, Wa'ter bu'gle, Wa'ter horehound, Gypsyweed, Paul's bet'ony, (F.) Lycopo de Virginie, (lyco, and πους, 'a foot,' from the likeness of the leaves.) This indigenous herb, Sex. Syst. Diandria Monogynia, Nat. Ord. Labiata, grows throughout the greater part of the United States. The whole herb is said to be slightly narcotic. It is given in infusion, (Lycop., 3i., Aq. fervent., Oi.) Dose, Oss. to Oi.

LYCOPUS PU'MILA, Lycopus.

LYCOPUS SINUA'TUS, Water horehound, Gypsyweed, Paul's bet'ony, indigenous, has similar properties.

LYCOPUS UNIFLO'RUS, L. pumila — 1. Virginicus, Lycopus.

Lycorex'is, (lyco, and αρεξίς, 'appetite,') Fames lupina.

Lycosa Taren'tula, see Tarantula.

Lycos'toma, gen. Lycostom'atis, (lyco, and στομα, 'mouth,') Hyperoëchasma.

Lye, (Sax. leah, læg,) Lixivium, Ley — 1. Dyspeptic, see Fuligokali — 1. Medical, see Fuligokali — 1. Tea, Physick's, see Fuligokali.

Lyenceph'ala, (λυω, 'I loose,' and κεφαλη, 'head,') A low type of cerebral development in which the hemispheres, which are without folds, are connected only by a round commissure and the hippocampal curvissure.

Lygis'mus, (λυγισμος, from λυγιζω, 'I bend,') Luxation.

Lygmo'des, (lygmus, and odes,) Singultus.

Lyg'mus, (λυγμος,) Singultus.

Lygodes, (λυγωδης,) Singultus.

Lying-down State, Parturient state.

Lying-in State, Parturient state.

Ly'ma, (gen. Ly'matis,) Lochia, (λυω, 'I wash,') also, filth, or sordes, (to be washed away,) Ly'mæ.

Ly'mæ, (λυμα,) Lyma.

Lymph, Lymph'a, (akin to νυμφη, 'water,' by changing ν into λ,) White blood, Lymph'a nutrit'ia, (F.) Lymphæ. A name given to the fluid contained in the lymphatic vessels and thoracic duct of animals which have been made to fast for 24 hours. According to Chevreul, the lymph of the dog contains water, fibrin, albumen, common salt, subcarbonate of soda, phosphates of lime and magnesia, and carbonate of lime. The properties and composition of lymph vary somewhat according to the part whence the lymphatic vessels obtain it. Generally, it is under the form of a transparent, slightly alkaline fluid, sometimes of a madder-red or yellowish color; of a spermiac odor, and saline taste; soluble in water, the solution becoming turbid when mixed with alcohol. When left to itself, it coagulates. The clot or solid portion becomes of a scarlet red if put in contact with oxygen, and of a purple red if placed in carbonic acid.

Like the blood, the lymph consists of a fluid — Liquor lymphæ — in which lymph corpuscles or globules are suspended.

The lymph is probably the product of internal absorption in different parts of the body; it then flows along the lymphatic vessels, uniting with the chyle, and is poured with it into the veins, thus becoming one of the materials of the blood. According to others, the blood, when it reaches the arterial radicles, is divided into two portions — the one red, which is carried to the heart, the other serous or white, which is absorbed by the lymphatic vessels, and constitutes the lymph. By others, again, the lymphatics are considered to be the vessels of return for the white blood sent to certain tissues. White blood, however, has probably no existence.

The word lymph is sometimes used unhappily by the surgeon to signify liquor sanguinis.

LYMPH CHAN'NEL, see Lymph sinus — 1. Coagulable, Fibrin, Liquor sanguinis — 1. Corpuscles, see Lymph — 1. Fistula, see Fistula, lymph — 1. Globules, see Lymph — 1. Glycerin, see Glycerin — 1. Hearts, Lymphatic hearts — 1. Plastic, Liquor sanguinis.

LYMPH SI'NUS, L. Chan'nel. A space all around the lymphatic gland pulp, which is a receptacle for the lymph and a channel for its passage.

Lymph'a, Lymph — 1. Arborum, see Sap — 1. Muculentarium, Nasal mucus — 1. Nutritia, Lymph — 1. Pancreatis, see Pancreas — 1. Pericardii, see Pericardium — 1. Plastica, Fibrin.

Lymphadeni'tis, gen. Lymphadeni'tidis, (lymph, and adenitis,) Inflamma'tio glandula'rum lymphatica'rum, Adeni'tis lymphatica, (F.) Adénite lymphatique. Inflammation of a lymphatic gland or ganglion.

Lymphadeno'ma, Hodgkin's disease.

Lymphæduc'tus, (lymphæ, and ductus, 'a duct,') Lymphatic vessels.

Lymphæ'mia, (lymph, and μαί, 'blood.') See Leucocythæmia.

Lymphang'e'tis, gen. Lymphang'e'tidis, (lymphangia, and itis.) Angioloecitis.

Lymphangi'a, pl. of Lymphangion, (lympa, and αγγειον, 'a vessel,') Lymphatic vessels.

Lymphangieo'tasis, Lymphœury's'ma, (lymphangia, and εκτασις, 'dilatation,') Dilatation of lymphatic vessels.

Lymphangiog'raphy, Lymphangiograph'ia, (lymphangia, and γραφη, 'a description,') A description of the lymphatic vessels.

Lymphangio'tis, gen. Lymphangio'tidis, (lymphangia, and itis.) Angioloecitis.

Lymphangiol'ogy, (lymphangia, and λογος, 'a description,') A treatise on the lymphatics.

Lymphangi'on, see Lymphangia.

Lymphangioto'my, Lymphangioto'mia, (from lymphangia, and τομή, 'incision,') The anatomy or dissection of the lymphatic vessels.

Lymphangi'tis, gen. Lymphangi'tidis, (lymphangia, and itis.) Angioloecitis.

Lymphangion'cus, Lymphon'cus, (lympa, αγγειον, 'a vessel,' and ογκος, 'a tumor,') Tumefaction of the lymphatics.

Lymphangol'tis, Angioloecitis.

Lymphatic, Lymphati'cus, (F.) Lymphatique. That which relates to lymph; also, abounding in lymph. See Phlegmatic.

LYMPHATIC DUCT, see Lymphatic vessels — 1. Fistula, Fistula, lymph — 1. Ganglions or Glands, see Conglobate.

LYMPHATIC HEARTS, Lymph-hearts. The frog and several other animals are provided with large receptacles for the lymph immediately underneath the skin, which exhibit distinct and regular pulsations, like the sanguiferous heart. Their use appears to be to propel the lymph.

LYMPHATIC SYSTEM is that particular system of organs which is inservient to the formation and circulation of lymph. These organs are:

1. LYMPHATIC GANGLIONS OR GLANDS, see Conglobate.

2. LYMPHATIC VESSELS, Lymphæductus, Lymphangi'a, Lymphang'e'a, Ve'næ lymphat'icæ, Ductus sero'si, Va'sa lymphat'ica seu resorbent'ia seu hydrangi'a, Hydrangi'a. These are very numerous. Arising at the surface of membranes and in the tissue of the organs, they carry into the veins the lymph from those parts. Lymphatic vessels are found in almost every part. Wherever they are met with, however, they form two orders — one superficial, the other deep-seated; — the two orders frequently communicating with each other. Lymphatic vessels are generally smaller than arteries and veins. They are very thin, diaphanous, and cylindrical; but present, here and there, more or less considerable dilatations, caused by valves in their interior. They are slightly tortuous in their course; their anastomoses are very numerous, and they often cross each other, forming successive plexuses. Of the arrangement of the extreme radicles we are ignorant. All the branches, before joining the principal trunks, pass through lymphatic ganglions, in which they are convoluted or subdivided almost ad infinitum. They are formed of an outer areolar membrane and an internal coat, similar to that of the veins: of the latter the valves are formed. All the lymphatics of the body ultimately discharge themselves at the junction of the subclavian and internal jugular veins. Two of these trunks are considerably larger than the others, — the thoracic duct, and the great trunk of the right side, the right lymphatic or lymph duct, (F.) La grande veine lymphatique droite. The former receives the lymphatics of the abdomen, of the lower extremities, the left side of the thorax, the left upper extremity, and the corresponding side of the head and neck; the latter receives those of the right upper extremity, and of the right side of the head, neck, and thorax.

Lymphati'tis, (lympa, and itis.) Angioloecitis.

Lympe, Lymph — 1. Coagulable, Liquor sanguinis — 1. de Cotugno, Cotunnus, liquor of — 1. Plastique, Liquor sanguinis.

Lymphœury's'ma, (lympa, and εκτασις, 'dilatation,') Lymphangiectasis.

Lymphi'tis, gen. Lymphi'tidis, (lympa, and itis.) Angioloecitis.

Lymphiza'tion. A term used by Professor Gross to signify effusion of coagulable lymph. It is not a happy word, inasmuch as lymph has another meaning, while the term 'coagulable lymph' is now almost abandoned.

Lymphochez'ia, (lympa, and χεῖω, 'I go to stool,') Serous diarrhœa.

Lymph'oid, Lymphoï'des, (lympa, and ειδός, 'resemblance,') Lymphlike — 1. Tissue, Adenoid tissue.

Lympho'ma, Lymph'oid Tu'mor, Leucæ'mic or Leucæ'mic Tu'mor. A tumor composed of corpuscles resembling the cell-elements of lymphatic glands, Adenoid tissue.

Lymphon'cus, (lympa, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') Lymphangioneus — 1. Iridis, Iridauesis.

Lymphop'yra, (lympa, and πῦρ, 'fire, fever,') Fever, adenomeningeal.

Lymphorrhag'ia, (lympa, and ῥήγνμι, 'I break forth,') Discharge of lymph from a lymphatic vessel, owing to a lesion of its coats.

Lymphorrhœ'a, (lympa, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') The escape of lymphatic fluid by spontaneous rupture or accidental wound, producing a fistulous opening of the lymphatic vessels.

Lymphosarco'ma. A sarcomatous tumor with small round cells, like the lymph or white blood-corpuscles, or pus or granulation cells. A form of glandular enlargement not attended with leucæmia.

Lympho'sis, (F.) Lymphose. The preparation or elaboration of lymph.

Lymphot'omy, (lympa, and τομή, 'incision,') Dissection of the lymphatics.

Lynch's Embrocation. An emollient nostrum, formed of olive oil, impregnated with bergamot and other essences, and colored with alka-net root.

Lyngo'des, (λυγγώδης.) Singultous — 1. Febris, Fever, singultous.

Lynn Wahoo', Ulmus alata.

Lynx, (λεγξ, gen. λυκος.) Singultus.

Ly'pé, (λύπη, 'sadness,') Athymia.

Lypema'nia, (lype, and μανία.) Melancholy.

Lyperia Cro'cea, (from λυπερος, 'sad,' from the dull color of the flowers.) A South African plant, Nat. Ord. Scrophulariaceæ, the flowers of which closely resemble saffron in smell and taste, and possess similar medical virtues.

Lyperophrénie, (λυπηρος, 'sad,' and φρεν, 'the mind,') Melancholy.

Lypothym'ia, (lype, and θυμος, 'the mind,') Very great sadness or despondency.

Ly'ra, (λύρα, 'the lyre,') Psal'ter, Psal'terium, Cor'pus Psalloï'des, Ly'ra Da'vidis, Lam'ina medulla'ris triangula'ris cer'ebr, Spat'ium trigo'nua. The under surface of the posterior part of the body of the fornix is impressed with numerous transverse and oblique lines, which have been so called from some resemblance they bear to the ancient lyre.

LY'RA, Palmae uteri plicatæ.

Ly'sia, Lysis.

Lysima'chia Nummula'ria, (λυσιμαχία, from λυσις, 'solution,' and μαχία, 'strife,') L. nemorosum; Nummula'ria, Hirundina'ria, Centimor'bia, Creep'ing Loosestrife, Moneywort, (F.) Lierre aux écus. Ord. Primulacæ. This plant was formerly accounted vulnerary. It has been considered to possess antiscorbutic and astringent qualities, and has been used in leucorrhœa.

LYSIMACHIA PURPUREA, Lythrum salicaria.

LYSIMACHIA QUADRIFO'LIA, Fourleaved Loosestrife, Crosswort, an indigenous plant, is astringent; and has been used as a stomachic and antiperiodic.

Ly'sis, (λυσις, from λυω, 'I dissolve,') Ly'sia. Solution. A common suffix; also, a name given to a solution or termination of disease, which is operated insensibly; that is, gradually and without critical symptoms.

Ly'ssa, (λυσσα,) Hydrophobia—1. Canina, Hydrophobia.

Ly'ssas, (λυσσας,) Maniodes.

Ly'sse'ter, (λυσητηρ,) Maniodes.

Ly'ssi, (from λυσσα, 'hydrophobia,') Pustules or vesicles near the frænum of the tongue, seen in the very early period of hydrophobia. It has been said that they are proportional in quantity to the amount of poison deposited in the wound, and, if cauterized early, to prevent the further progress of the disease.

Ly'ssine, (from λυσσα, 'hydrophobia,') A term proposed by Dr. Wm. Farr for the specific zymotic principle by which hydrophobia is propagated.

Lyssodec'tus, (λυσοδεκτος, from λυσσα, and δεκω, 'I bite,') Hydrophobus, Canine rabidus mor'sus. One who has been bitten by a mad dog, or is actually laboring under hydrophobia.

Lyssodeg'ma, gen. Lyssodeg'matis, Lyssodeg'mus, Lyssodeg'is. The bite of a mad dog.

Lyssodex'is, Lyssodegma.

Lyte'rios, (λυτηριος, — from λυω, 'I dissolve, — solving,') An epithet given to those signs which announce the solution of a very violent disease.

Ly'thrum Ala'tum, (from λυθρον, 'blood, and dust, on account of the color of the flowers of some species,) see Lythrum salicaria—1. Hyssopifolia, Lythrum salicaria.

LY'THRUM SALICA'RIA, Lysima'chia purpu'rea, Salica'ria vulga'ris seu spica'ta; — the Common or Purple Willow Herb, Loosestrife. Ord. Lythraceæ. The herb, root, and flowers possess a considerable degree of astringency, and are used, occasionally, in the cure of diarrhœa and dysentery, leucorrhœa, hæmoptysis, &c.

Lythrum Hyssopifo'lia, and L. Ala'tum, indigenous, have similar properties.

Lyt'ta Cæru'lea, (from λυτταω, 'I am mad, from its irritant properties [?],) see Cantharis—1. Gigas mas, see Cantharis—1. Ruficeps, see Cantharis.

LYT'TA RU'FIPES. Class, Insecta; Ord. Coleoptera. A variety of Lytta, peculiar to Chili, which is more active as a vesicant than the cantharis, or the Lytta vittata.

LYT'TA SEG'ETUM, see Cantharis—1. Vesicatoria, Cantharis.

LYT'TA VITTA'TA, Cantharis vitta'ta, Pota'to Fly, (F.) Cantharide tache'te. Four species of meloë that blister are found in the United States. The lytta vittata feeds principally upon the potato plant, and, at the proper season of the year, may be collected in immense numbers. The potato fly resembles the cantharides in every property, and is fully equal to them.

M.

M. This letter signifies, in prescriptions, manipulus, 'a handful.' Also, Misce, 'mix.' See Abbreviation.

Maagoni, Swietenia mahogani.

Macahalef, see Calaf.

Macapatli, Smilax sarsaparilla.

Macaro'ni. An alimentary paste, moulded of a cylindrical shape, and formed of rice or wheat-flour. It is eaten—when boiled—in soup; prepared with cheese, &c. See Turundæ Italica.

Also, a name formerly given to a pulverulent compound of sugar and glass of antimony, introduced into France by the Italian monks, and employed, at the hospital La Charité, in the treatment of painters' colic.

Macarons, Biscuits, medicinal.

Mace, see Myristica moschata—m. Reed, Typha latifolia.

Macedon'icum Emplas'trum, (μακεδονικον, from Macedonia, Macedonia.) An ancient plaster referred to by Aëtius.

Macedonis'ium, (from Macedonia,) Smyrnum olusatrum.

Ma'cer, ('lean,') Gracilis.

Macera'tion, Macera'tio, (macerare, macera'tum, 'to soften by water,') An operation which consists in infusing, usually without heat, a solid substance in a liquid, so as to extract its virtues.

Macera'tum, (F.) Macéré. The product of maceration.

Macero'na, Smyrnum olusatrum.

Maces'ceré, Emaciate.

Machæ'ra, (μαχα'ρα,) Culter, Knife, Penis.

Machærid'ion, Machæridion.

Machæ'rica, Machæ'rius, Machærid'ion, Glad-

i'olus, (μαχα'ρα, 'a sword; μαχη, 'a fight,') A knife. An amputating knife. Rufus of Ephesus asserts that the Aruspices gave this name to a part of the liver of animals.

Machæ'ris, (μαχα'ρις,) Knife, Novacula.

Machaō'nia seu Machaō'nica Ars, (called after Machaon,) Medicine. The Healing Art.

Mach'inal, Mechan'icus, (μεχα'νη, 'a contrivance,') This epithet is added especially by French writers to the word movement, to express that the will takes no part in it.

Machine', Mach'ina, Machinamen'tum, Mech'ané, Mechane'ma, (same etymon.) A more or less compound instrument or arrangement for putting a body in motion, or for producing any action whatever. Physiologists sometimes use it for the animal body;—as the machine or animal machine.

Machlos'yné, (μαχλοσυνη, from μαχλος, 'unchaste,') Nymphomania.

Machoire, (from [L.] masticare, 'to chew,') Maxillary bone—m. Diacranienne, Maxillary bone, lower—m. Syncranienne, Maxillary bone, superior.

Ma'cies, Atrophy, Emaciation—m. Infantum, Tabes mesenterica.

Macilen'tus, (macere, 'to be lean,') Gracilis.

Ma'cis, (μακ'ις,) see Myristica moschata.

Macrauch'en, gen. Macrauch'enis, (μακραυχην, from macro, and αυχην, 'neck,') Lon'go collo præ'ditus. One who has a long neck.

Macre Flottante, Trapa natans.

Macritu'do, (macere, 'to be lean,') Emaciation.

Ma'cro, (from μακρος, 'long,') in composition, long.

Macrobio'sis, (μακροβίωσις, from macro, and βίος, 'life,') Longevity.

Macrobi'otes, (μακροβίωτης,) Longevity.

Macrobiotic, Macrobiot'icus, Macrobi'otus, Macro'bius, Longē'vus, (F.) Macrobiotique. That which lives a long time. The macrobiotic art, Macrobiot'ics, (F.) Macrobiotique, is the art of living a long time.

Macrobi'otus, (μακροβίωτος,) Macrobiotic.

Macro'bius, (μακροβίος,) Macrobiotic.

Macroceph'alia, (macro, and κεφαλή, 'head,') see Capitones.

Macroceph'alic, Macroceph'al'icus, (macro, and κεφαλή, 'head,') Having a large head.

Macroceph'alus, (μακροκεφαλος,) Macroceph'alus, (F.) Macroceph'ale; Qui mag'num ca'put ha'bet, 'one who has a large head.' This epithet is given to children born with heads so large that they seem to be hydrocephalic; but in which the unusual development is owing to a large size of the brain. Such are supposed to be more than ordinarily liable to convulsions. [?] The term has also been applied by Hippocrates to certain Asiatics who had long heads. See Capitones.

Macrochi'ria, (macro, and χείρ, 'hand,') Monstrosity, characterized by excessive development of the hands.

Macroco'lia, (μακροκωλία, from macro, and κωλον, 'a limb,') Great length of limbs in general, and of the lower limbs in particular.

Mac'rocism, Macrocos'mus, (macro, and κόσμος, 'world,') The universe, in contradistinction to Microcosm, which means man.

Macrodoctylus, (μακροδάκτυλος, from macro, and δάκτυλος, 'a finger,') Having long fingers.

Macrogas'ter Plat'ypus, (macro, and γαστήρ, 'belly, and platypus, 'flat-footed,') Acarus folliculorum.

Macrogl'os'sa, Macrogl'os'sia, (macro, and γλῶσσα, 'tongue,') The condition of a Macrogl'ossus. See Paraglossa.

Macrogl'os'sia, Macrogl'os'sa.

Macrogl'os'sus. One who has a very large or prolapsed tongue. See Paraglossa.

Macromel'ia, (macro, and μέλος, 'limb,') Monstrosity, which consists in excessive size of a limb.

Macronos'ia, (μακρονοσία, from macro, and νόσος, 'disease,') Chronic diseases.

Macrothal'us, (macro, and φάλλος, 'the male organ,') A large size of the male organ.

Macropho'nus, (macro, and φωνή, 'voice,') One who has a strong voice.

Macroth'almus, (macro, and ὀφθαλμός, 'eye,') Having large eyes.

Macrophysioceph'alus, (macro, φυσά, 'air, and κεφαλή, 'head,') A word used by Ambrose Paré to designate an augmentation of the head of the foetus, produced by a sort of emphysema [?], which retards delivery.

Macrop'iper, gen. Macrop'i'peris, (macro, and πιπέρη, 'pepper,') Piper longum.

Macropnœ'a, (μακροπνοία, from macro, and πνέω, 'I breathe,') A long and deep respiration.

Macrop'nus, Macrop'noüs, (μακροπνους, and μακροπνοος,) Long-breathed; one who breathes slowly: — a word met with in some authors.

Macrop'odus, Mac'ropus, Megal'opus, (μακροπους, from macro, and πους, gen. πόος, 'foot,') One who has a large foot.

Macroproso'pia, (macro, and προσωπον, 'face,') Monstrosity, characterized by excessive size of face.

Mac'ropus, Macropodus.

Ma'rorer, Emaciation.

Macror'rhis, gen. Macrorrhi'nis, (μακρορρhis, from macro, and ρhis, or ρον, 'nose,') One who has a long nose.

Macros'celes, Cru'ra lon'ga ha'bena, (μακροσκελης, from macro, and σκελος, 'the leg,') One who has long legs.

Macros'ia, (μακρος, 'long,') Chronic diseases.

Macrosoma'tia, (macro, and σωμα, gen. σωματος, 'body,') see Giant.

Macrosomia, see Giant.

Macros'toma, (macro, and στομα, 'mouth,') Congenital fissure of the lip, at the angle of the mouth, thus increasing its external dimensions.

Macro'tes, (macro, and οὖς, ωτος, 'an ear,') One who has long ears.

Macro'tys Racemo'sa, (same etymon, from its capsules,) Actæa racemosa.

Mac'ula. A spot. Dyschro'a, Celis, La'bes, (F.) Tache. A permanent discoloration of some portion of the skin, often with a change of its texture. Ephelis, Nævus, Spilus, &c., belong to Maculæ. See, also, Molecule.

The term Macula is also applied by Trousseau to a modification in the vascularity of the skin, an important symptom in cerebral fever, cer'ebral or meninge'al mac'ula, the skin being suffused with a bright red tint, wherever it may be pressed upon.

MAC'ULA ACUS'TICA. A nearly circular spot on the wall of the utricle of the ear where the branch of the nervus acusticus reaches it.

MAC'ULA ARGENTE'A, see Argenti nitræ — m. Aurea, see Foramen centrale retinae — m. Cerebral, see Macula — m. Corneæ, Caligo — m. Corneæ arcuata, Gerotoxon — m. Corneæ margaritacea, Paralampsis — m. Emortualis, see Suggillation — m. Flava, see Foramen centrale retinae — m. Fusca, Ephelides — m. Germinativa, see Molecule — m. Hepatica, Chloasma Nævus — m. Lenticularis, Ephelides — m. Lutea retinae, see Foramen centrale — m. Matricialis, Nævus — m. Matricis, Nævus — m. Meningeal, see Macula — m. Nigra, see Optic nerve — m. Solaris, Ephelides.

MAC'ULA SYPHILIT'ICA. The peculiar stain which remains after syphilitic roseola.

Mac'ulæ Al'bæ, (pl. of macula,) M. Lac'tææ, In'sulæ, Milk'spots, Sold'ier's spots. White spots, seen on serous membranes, especially on that investing the heart, and which appear to be the result of previous inflammatory action.

MAC'ULÆ AN'TE OC'ULOS VOLITAN'TES, Metamorphopsia — m. Cribrosæ, see Auditory canal, internal — m. Lactææ, M. albæ.

Maculo'sus, Mac'ulose, Mac'ulous, Mac'ulated, (F.) Maculeux. Spotted. Containing maculæ or spots.

Mad, ([Sax.] gemæd,) Insane — m. Apple plant, Solanum melongena — m. Doctor, Psychiatrist.

Mad, Horn, see Mania — m. Raving, see Mania — m. Stark, see Mania.

Madar, Mudar.

Madaro'sis, (μαδαρωσις, from μαδᾶω, 'I am bald,') Madaro'ma, Made'sis, Madar'otes, Made'ma, Mad'isis, Depluma'tio, Mil'phæ, Milpho'sis, Ptil'os, Ptilo'sis, Calvit'ies, Deflux'io Cilio'rum. Loss of hair, particularly of the eyelashes.

Madar'otes, (μαδαροτης,) Madarosis.

Mad'der, Dy'ers', ([Sax.] maddepe,) Rubia.

Made'ira, Cli'mate of. This island is much frequented by pulmonary invalids, on account of the mildness and equability of its climate. Owing, indeed, to the mildness of the winter, and the coolness of the summer, together with the remarkable equality of the temperature during day and night, as well as throughout the year, it has been considered that the climate of Madeira is the finest in the northern hemisphere. Sir James Clark is of opinion that there is no place on the continent of Europe, with which he is acquainted, where the pulmonary invalid could reside with so much advantage, during the whole year, as in Madeira.

Madel'con, (μαδελων,) Bdellium.

Made'ma, gen. Made'matis, (μαδημα, from μαδᾶω, 'I am bald,') Madarosis.

Made'sis, (μαδῆσις, from μαδᾶω, 'I am bald,') Depilation, Madarosis.

Madi'sis ($\mu\alpha\delta\iota\sigma\iota\varsigma$), Depilation, Madarosis.

Madison Springs, see Georgia, Mineral waters of.

Madiste'rium, ($\mu\alpha\delta\iota\sigma\tau\epsilon\rho\iota\sigma\mu$, from $\mu\alpha\delta\iota\zeta\omega$, 'I make bald,') Trichola'bium, Trichol'abis, Vol'sell'a. Tweezers. An instrument for extracting hairs.

Madjound, Madjoun. A mixture of powdered hemp and honey, used as a narcotic agent, like tobacco, by the Algerines.

Mad'ness, Insanity—m. Canine, Hydrophobia—m. Raving or Furious, Mania.

Ma'dor, Moisture. A cold sweat.

Mado'rius, Mudar.

Madrep'ora Ocula'ta, see Coral.

Madu'ra Foot, Mycetoma.

Mad'weed, Scutellaria lateriflora.

Mæa, ($\mu\alpha\iota\alpha$), Midwife.

Mæi'a, ($\mu\alpha\iota\epsilon\iota\alpha$), Obstetrics.

Mæum'a, gen. Mæum'atis, ($\mu\alpha\iota\upsilon\mu\alpha$), see Parturition.

Mæut'ica Ars. Obstetrics.

Mæi'a, ($\mu\alpha\iota\epsilon\iota\alpha$), Obstetrics.

Maë'sa Pic'ta, Saoria.

Mæu'sis, ($\mu\alpha\iota\upsilon\sigma\iota\varsigma$), Parturition.

Mæu'tria, ($\mu\alpha\iota\upsilon\tau\rho\iota\alpha$), Midwife.

Magdal'ia, ($\mu\alpha\gamma\delta\alpha\lambda\iota\alpha$, from $\mu\alpha\sigma\sigma\iota\nu$, 'to knead,')

Magdal'con, Mag'dalis. 'Crumb of bread.' Any medicine, as a pill, formed of crumb of bread. A roll of plaster.

Magel'ricé, ($\mu\alpha\gamma\epsilon\lambda\rho\iota\kappa\eta$ [$\tau\epsilon\chi\eta$].) Culinary art.

Mag'got Pim'ple, see Acne.

Magis, ($\mu\alpha\gamma\iota\varsigma$, 'a cake,') A sort of cake, composed of cloves, garlic, and cheese, beaten together.

Magistère de Bismuth, Bismuthi subnitras.

Magiste'rium, Magistery—m. Bismuthi, Bismuth, subnitrate of—m. Jalapæ, Resin of jalap—m. Marcasitæ, Bismuth, subnitrate of—m. Plumbi, Plumbi subcarbonas—m. Sulphuris, Sulphur lotum—m. Tartari purgans, Potassæ acetat.

Mag'istry, Magiste'rium, (magister, 'a master,') Certain precipitates from saline solutions were formerly so called; as well as other medicines, the preparation of which was kept secret.

MAG'ISTRY OF BIS'MUTH, Bismuth, subnitrate of.

Mag'istral or Magis'tral, Magistra'lis, Extempora'neous. A prescription is so called—Form'ula magistra'lis seu extempora'nea—which is prepared extemporaneously; an offic'inal prescription—Form'ula officina'lis—being such as has been prepared for some time before it is prescribed.

Magistran'tia, (magistrare, 'to rule,') Imperatoria.

Mag'ma, gen. Mag'matis, ($\mu\alpha\gamma\mu\alpha$), (F.) Marc. The thick residuum, obtained after expressing certain substances to extract the fluid parts from them. The grounds which remain after treating a substance with water, alcohol, or any other menstruum. Also, a salve of a certain consistence.

MAG'MA or MARC OF OLIVES is the residuum after the greatest possible quantity of oil has been extracted from olives by making them ferment. It was formerly employed as a stimulant, under the form of a bath—to which the name Bain de Marc was given by the French.

MAG'MA OF MARC OF GRAPES, Bry'tia, was once employed for the same purposes.

Magma Reticulé, 'reticulated magma.' The gelatiniform substance found between the chorion and amnion in the early period of embryonic existence.

Mag'nes, gen. Magne'tis, ($\mu\alpha\gamma\mu\eta$), Magnet.

MAG'NES ARSENICA'LI. (Sulphur, White arsenic, and Common antimony, of each equal parts. Mix by fusion.) It is corrosive. See Magnetic plaster.

MAG'NES EPILEP'SIÆ, Hydrargyri sulphuretum rubrum.

Magne'sia, Abarnahas, Cham'bar, Ter'ra ama'ra, Magnesia ter'ra, Talc earth, (from magnes, or from Magnesia in Lydia.) An alkaline earth whose metallic base is magnesium. The term Magnesia was employed, of old, for any substance that seemed to have the power of attracting some principle from the air. At present it is restricted to, MAGNE'SIA, M. us'ta seu calcina'ta, Oxydum Magnesi'cum, Cal'cined Magnesia, Ox'ide of magne'sium, (F.) Magnésie brulée ou calcinée, Magnésie, M. caustique. (This is obtained by exposing carbonate of magnesia to a strong heat, to drive off the carbonic acid.) It is inodorous, taste very slightly bitter; in the form of a white, light, spongy, soft powder. S. g. 2.3; requiring 2000 times its weight of water for its solution. It is antacid, and laxative when it meets with acid in the stomach. Dose, gr. x. to $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{i}$. in water or milk. The French Codex (1866) has a formula for Hydrate de magnésie.

Hen'ry's, Hus'band's, and El'lis's preparations of Magnesia are dense forms of that substance.

A light Magnesia, Magne'sia le'vis, differing from the above only in its greater levity, is officinal in the British Pharmacopœia (1867).

MAGNE'SIA, AC'ETATE OF, Magnesia acetat—m. Aerata, Magnesia carbonas—m. Alba, M. carbonas—m. Calcinata, M. usta—m. Carbonate of, Magnesia carbonas.

MAGNE'SIA, CHLO'RINATED, SOLU'TION OF. Prepared by the action of sulphate of magnesia in solution on chlorinated lime, and proposed as a substitute for solution of chlorinated soda or lime. Chlorinated magnesia is not caustic, and is therefore, for internal use or as an application to delicate tissues, preferable to chlorinated lime or chlorinated soda.

MAGNE'SIA, CI'TRATE OF, Magnesia citras—m. Dinneford's, see Magnesia, fluid—m. Edinburgensis, M. carbonas.

MAGNE'SIA, EFFERVES'ING, MOX'ON'S. (Magnes. carb., M. sulphat., Sodæ bicarbon., Acid tartaric., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ partes æquales; to be pulverized, well dried, mixed, and inclosed in bottles hermetically sealed.) Dose, a teaspoonful in half a tumbler of water, drunk in a state of effervescence.

MAGNE'SIA, EL'LI'S, see Magnesia.

MAGNE'SIA, FLU'ID, Li'quor Magne'siæ Carbona'tis. Under this name a preparation is given in the Ph. B., 1867, which consists of a solution of carbonate of magnesia in carbonated water. It is also termed carbonated magne'sia water, aërated magne'sia water, solution of carbonate of magnesia, and condensed solu'tion of magne'sia, (F.) Eau magnésienne, Magnésie liquide. Dinneford's Magne'sia is a solution of this kind.

MAGNE'SIA, HEN'RY'S, Magnesia—m. Husband's, see Magnesia.

MAGNE'SIA LE'VIS, (Ph. B., 1867,) Light Magnesia. Made by calcining light carbonate of magnesia. Dose, gr. x. to lx. See Magnesia carbonas.

MAGNE'SIA, MI'TIS, Magnesia carbonas—m. Muriate of, Magnesi chloridum—m. Nigra, Manganese, black oxide of.

MAGNE'SIA OPALI'NA. A name given by Lémery to a mixture of equal parts of antimony, nitrate of potassa, and chloride of sodium, decrepitated. It has emetic properties, but is not used.

MAGNE'SIA SA'LIS AMA'RI, Magnesia carbonas—m. Salis Ebsdamsensis, Magnesia carbonas—m. Saturni, Antimonium—m. Solution of, condensed, M. fluid—m. Subcarbonate of, Magnesia carbonas—m. Subcarbonate of, hydrated, Magnesia carbonas—m. Sulphate of, Magnesia sulphas—m. Sulphocarbonate of, see Sulphocarbonate—m. Terra, Magnesia—m. Vitriolata, Magnesia sulphas—m. Usta, Magnesia—m. and Soda, sulphate of, see Soda, sulphate of.

Magne'siæ Ace'tas, Ac'etate of Magnesia. (This salt is prepared by saturating carbonate of magnesia with acetic acid.) It is of syrupy consistence, and about four ounces is a dose. It acts like citrate of magnesia.

MAGNE'SIÆ CARBO'NAS seu SUBCARBO'NAS, Magne'sii Carbonas, (Ph. U.S., 1873,) Magne'sia, (Dublin,) M. aëra'ta seu carbo'nica seu al'ba, M. Subcarbo'nica seu Mi'tis seu Edinburgen'sis seu Sa'llis Ebsdamen'sis seu Salis ama'ri, Carbo'nas magne'sicum, Lac ter'ræ, Hypocarbo'nas magne'siæ, Terra ama'ra aëra'ta seu absor'bens minera'lis seu talco'sa oxyanthrac'o'des, Carbonate of Magnesium, Carbonate or Subcar'bonate of Magnesia, Hydrated Subcar'bonate of Magnesia, (F.) Sous-carbonate ou Carbonate de Magnésie, Magnésie aërée ou blanche ou crayeuse ou douce ou effervescente ou moyenne ou Anglaise, Graie ou Terre magnésienne, Lait de Terre, Panacée Anglaise, Poudre de Sentinelli ou de Valentini ou du Comte de Palme ou de Zwinger. (Prepared from sulphate of magnesia by subcarbonate of potassa.) It is inodorous; insipid; light; white; spongy; opaque; effervescing with acids; insoluble in water. Properties the same as the last; but the carbonic acid, when set free, sometimes causes unpleasant gastric distension.

A heavier and a light carbonate of Magnesia—Magne'siæ Carbo'nas and Magne'siæ carbo'nas le'vis—are official in the British Pharmacopœia (1867).

MAGNE'SIÆ CI'TRAS, Cit'rate of Magnesia, (F.) Citrate de Magnésie. A saline preparation, formed by saturating a solution of citric acid with either magnesia or its carbonate. Dose, an ounce. It is devoid of the bitter taste of the magnesian salts.

A solution in water, or in mineral water, sweetened with syrup, and acidulated with citric acid, makes an agreeable purgative. A simple solution in water has been called magne'sian lemonade. In the effervescing state, it is the effervescing magnesian lemonade, (F.) Limonade purgative. The Pharmacopœia of the United States (1873) has a modified form for the LIQUOR MAGNE'SIÆ CITRA'TIS, L. Magne'sii Citratis, (Ph. U.S., 1873,) Solu'tion of Cit'rate of Magnesia, Solution of Citrate of Magnesium. (Carbonate of magnesium, gr. cc., Citric acid, gr. cccc., Syrup of citric acid, f̄ij., bicarbonate of potassium, gr. xl., Water, a sufficient quantity. Dissolve the citric acid in f̄iv. of water, add the carbonate of magnesium, stirring it until dissolved; filter into a strong f̄xij. glass bottle, containing the syrup of citric acid. Add the bicarbonate of potassium, and enough water to nearly fill the bottle, which must be well corked, and secured with twine; shake the mixture occasionally until the bicarbonate is dissolved.) As a cathartic the whole of this may be taken; as a simple laxative, half a bottle or less.

The French Codex (1866) has a somewhat different formula under the name Limonade Purgative ou Citrate de Magnésie.

MAGNE'SIÆ HYPOCARBO'NAS, M. carbonas—m. Subcarbonas, M. carbonas.

MAGNE'SIÆ SUL'PHAS, Magnesium Sulphas, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Sul'phas Magnesiæ purifica'ta, Magnesia vitriola'ta, Sal cathar'ticus ama'rus seu catharticum ama'rum seu ama'rum seu Anglica'num seu Anglicum seu Epsomen'sis seu catharticus Anglica'nus seu Sedlizen'sis seu Ebsdamen'sis seu Seydschützen'sis, Ter'ra ama'ra sulphu'rica, Vitriol'icum Magne'siæ, Sul'phate of Magnesia, Sulphate of Magnesium, Ep'som Salt, Bit'ter purg'ing Salt, (F.) Sulfate de magnésie, Sel admirable de Lémery, Sel d'Égra. (Generally obtained from seawater.) Its taste is bitter and disagreeable. It is soluble in an equal quantity of water at 60°. It is purgative and diuretic. Dose, as a cathartic, ʒss. to ʒij.

MAGNE'SIÆ VITRIOL'ICUM, Magnesiæ sulphas.

Magne'sii Carbo'nas, Magnesiæ carbonas.

MAGNE'SII CHLO'RIDUM, Chlo'ride of Magnesium, Mu'riate of Magnesia, (F.) Chlorure de Magnésium. This bitter deliquescent salt has been given as a mild and effective cholagogue cathartic, in the dose of half an ounce to the adult. Being deliquescent, it may be kept dissolved in its weight of water.

MAGNE'SII SUL'PHAS, Magnesiæ sulphas.

Mag'net, Mag'nes, Magne'tes, Magn'itis, Fer'rum Mag'nes attract'o'rium, Sider'ites, Sider'itis, La'pis heracle'us seu syder'itis seu nau'ticus, Ad'ament, (from Magnes, its discoverer, or from Magnesia, where it is said to have been first found,) (F.) Aimant, Pierre d'Aimant. The magnet or loadstone. An amorphous, oxydulated ore of iron, which exerts an attraction on unmagnetized iron, and has the property of exhibiting poles; that is, of pointing by one of its extremities to the north. This ore, by constant or long rubbing, communicates its properties to iron; and thus artificial magnets are formed. Magnetic ore is found in many countries, and particularly in the island of Elba. The magnet is sometimes used to extract spicula of iron from the eye or from wounds. It has been employed as an antispasmodic; but acts only through the imagination. The powder has been given as a tonic. In Pharmacy, it is used to purify iron filings. It attracts the iron, and the impurities remain behind. It formerly entered, as an ingredient, into several plasters, to draw bullets and heads of arrows from the body—as the Emplas'trum divi-num Nicola'i, the Emplas'trum nig'rum of Augsburg, the Opodel'doch, and Attractivum of Paracelsus, &c.

Magne'tes, (μαγνήτης,) Magnet.

Magnet'ic, Magnet'icus, (F.) Magnétique. That which belongs or relates to magnetism;—mineral or animal.

MAGNET'IC FLU'ID. A name given to the imponderable fluid to which the magnet owes its virtues. By analogy it is applied to a particular principle, supposed to be the source of organic actions, which affects, it is conceived, the nervous system principally, and is susceptible of being transmitted from one living body to another, by contact or simple approximation, and especially under the influence of fixed volition. See Magnetism, animal.

MAGNET'IC PLAS'TER. A plaster, at present, not used. It has for its base a mixture, called Mag'nes arsenica'lis; formed of equal parts of antimony, sulphur and arsenic melted together in a glass cucurbit. The name Magnetic plaster was, likewise, given to one that contained powdered magnet.

Magneti'nus, Potassæ supertartras impurus.

Magnétiseur, Magnetizer.

Mag'netism, An'imal, Mes'merism, Path'etism, Pey'cheism, Neuroga'mia, Binga'mia, Biomagnet'ismus, Zoömagnetis'mus, Exon'eurism (proposed by Mr. H. Mayo), Anthropomagnetis'mus, Gar' galē, Gargalis'mus, Gar'galus. Properties attributed to the influence of a particular principle, which has been compared to that which characterizes the magnet. It is supposed to be transmitted from one person to another, and to impress peculiar modifications on organic action, especially on that of the nerves. The discussions, to which this strange belief has given rise, are by no means terminated. There is no evidence whatever of the existence of such a fluid. Highly impressionable persons can be thrown into a kind of hysteric or 'magnetic' sleep and somnambulism, designated by Mr. Braid, hypnotism, neurohypnotism, and nervous sleep, and at times called, after him, Braid'ism; but farther than this, the efforts of the magnetizer cannot reach. It is a mode of action upon the nerves through the medium of the senses.

Magnetiza'tion, Mesmerization.

Magnetized, Mesmerized.

Magnetizer, Mesmerizer.

Magneticoelectric'ity, see Electromagnetism.

Magni'tis, (μαγνῆτις), Magnet.

Magnitu'do Cor'poris, ('size of the body,')

Stature — m. Gigantea, see Giant.

Magn'oc, Jatropha manihot.

Magno'lia Fra'grans, (after P. Magnol, a Professor of Botany at Montpellier,) Magnolia glauca.

MAGNO'LIA GLAUCA, Magnolia, M. fra'grans, Small Magnolia, Scamp Sas'safras, Elk Bark, Indian Bark, White Lau'rel, Sweet Bay, Beaver Wood, Beaver Tree, White Bay, Cincho'na of Virginia, Cas'tor Bay, Sweet or Lau'rel magnolia, (F.) Magnolier glauque. Ord. Magnoliaceae. The bark is possessed of tonic properties, resembling those of cascarilla, canella, &c. The same may be said of the Magno'lia tripet'ala seu Umbrell'a, Umbrell'a tree; the M. acumina'ta or Cucumber tree, the M. grandiflo'ra and M. macrophyll'a, Lau'rel, Elkwood, Silverleaf, Big leaf, White Bay, Beavertree, Elk Bark, Big bloom.

Magno'lia (Ph. U. S.) is the bark of Magno'lia glauca, M. acumina'ta, and M. tripet'ala.

Magnolier Glauque, Magnolia glauca.

Mag'num De'i Do'num, ('great gift of God,') Cinchona.

MAG'NUM OS, ('great bone,') The third bone of the lower row of the carpus, reckoning from the thumb. It is the largest bone of the carpus; and is also called Os capita'tum, (F.) Grand Os.

Mag'rums. A popular name in the State of New York for a singular convulsive affection, which resembles chorea. It rarely, however, occurs before the adult age; never ceases spontaneously, and when fully developed is devoid of any paroxysmal character.

Maillet, (from malleus,) Mallet.

Maillet, Swathing clothes.

Maim'ing, Mayhem.

Main, Manus — m. Bot., see Kyllosis.

Mains. An instrument introduced by Palfin into the art of Obstetrics, and which is considered to have led to the invention of the forceps. It consisted of two spoons (cuillères) without fenestræ, mounted on wooden handles, and the branches of which were united by means of a steel bride.

Maira'nia U'va Ur'si, (μαῖρα, 'I shine, — the leaves,') Arbutus uva ursi.

Mais, Zea mays.

Maison Petite, ('small house,') (from [L.] manere, mansum, 'to remain,') Morotrophum.

Maison-de-Santé, ('health house,') A private establishment, usually founded by a physician, into which cases of disease are received for treatment.

Maize (Ind.), Zea mays.

Maizena, see Zea mays.

Ma'jor Hel'icis, ('larger muscle of the helix,')

A narrow band of muscular fibres situate upon the anterior border of the helix of the ear, just above the tragus.

Majora'na, Origanum majorana — m. Hortensis, Origanum majorana — m. Syriaca, Teucrium marum.

Makroceph'alus, Macrocephalus.

Mal (F.), Malum, ('an evil, injury,') Any pain or suffering, disease or infirmity, which interferes with the healthy play of the functions. See Maladie and Morbus.

Mal d'Amour, Odontalgia — m. Anglais, Mal de la Baie de Saint Paul.

Mal des Ardens, Mal d'Enfer, Feu sacré. A name given to a species of pestilential erysipelas or Saint Anthony's fire, which reigned epidemically in France in 1130.

Mal d'Aventure, Paronychia.

Mal de la Baie de Saint Paul, ('disease of the Bay of Saint Paul,') Mal Anglais, Mal de Chien, Mal de Chicot, Mal des Éboulements, Ottoway disease. A syphiloid affection, which prevailed in Canada from 1760 to 1780, and upwards.

Mal de Vers, ('disease of worms,') Mal de Bassine. A vesico-pustular eruption on the fingers, and on the back and palm of the hand, observed in women engaged in the filature of silk.

Ma'la, (malum, 'an apple,') Gena, Melum—m. Aurea, see Citrus aurantium.

Malabath'rinum, (μαλαβαθρινον,) Ancient name of an ointment and a wine, into which the malabathrum entered.

Malaba'thrum, (μαλαβαθρον,) Malabathrum, Cadeji-Indi. The leaves of a tree of the East Indies. These leaves entered into the theriac, mithridate, and other ancient electuaries. They are believed to be from a species of laurel—Laurus Cassia; but, according to others, from Laurus Malabathrum. The O'leum Malaba'thri is obtained from it.

Malac'æ Ra'dix, ('Malacca root,') Sagittaria alexipharmacum.

Mal'aché, (μαλαχ,) Malva rotundifolia.

Malac'ia, (from μαλακος, 'effeminate,') A depravation of taste, in which an almost universal loathing is combined with an exclusive longing for some particular article of food. If the patient desires substances that are noxious or not eatable, it constitutes Pi'ca, Heterorex'ia, Heterorrhex'ia, Pseudorex'ia, Cis'sa, Citto'sis, Cit'ta, Limo'sis, Pi'ca, Allotriophag'ia, Cupid'itas, Ci'bi pra'ca, Depraved ap'petite, (F.) Envie. These symptoms accompany several nervous affections—those of females in particular. In pregnancy it is common, and is termed Long'ing.

MALAC'IA AFRICANO'RUM, Chthonophagia—m. Cordis, Cardiomalacia.

Malacis'mus, (from μαλακος, 'soft,') Mollities.

Mal'aco, (from μαλακος, 'soft,') in composition, soft.

Malacogas'ter, (malaco, and γαστηρ, 'stomach,') Gastromalacia.

Malaco'ma, gen. Malaco'matis, (from μαλακος, 'soft,') and the suffix oma,) Mollities.

Malacoph'o'nus, (malaco, and φωνη, 'voice,') One who has a soft voice.

Malacopœ'a, (malaco, and ποιεν, 'to make,') Emollients.

Malacosarco'sis, (malaco, and σαρξ, σάρκος, 'flesh,') State of softness of the muscular system.

Malaco'sis, (μαλακος, 'soft,') Mollities—m. Cerebri, Mollities cerebri—m. Cordis, Cardiomalacia—m. Hepatis, Hepatomalacia—m. Uteri, Hysteromalacia.

Malacos'teon, (malaco, and οστέον, 'a bone,') Mollities ossium.

Malacosteo'sis, Mollities ossium.

Malac'tica, (μαλακτικα, from μαλακος, 'soft,') Emollients, Relaxants.

Malade, (from [L.] malum, [F.] mal,) Sick.

Maladrerie, (from mal, and ladrerie,) Ladrerie.

Mal'ady, Eng'lish, Hypochondriasis.

Mal'æ Os, (malum, 'an apple,') so called from its roundness, Zygo'ma, Os mala'ræ seu Juga'læ seu Jugamen'tum seu Ge'næ seu Zygomaticum seu Hypo'pium seu Subocula'ræ seu Pudi'cum, (F.) Os Malaire ou Zygomaticum ou de la Pommette. The cheek or malar bone. This bone is situate at the lateral and superior part of the face; and constitutes the zygomatic region of the cheek. It is irregularly quadrilateral. Its outer surface is convex, covered by muscles and skin, and pierced with canals, called malar, through which vessels and nerves pass. Its upper surface is concave, and forms part of the orbit. Its posterior surface is concave, and enters into the composition of the temporal fossa. This bone is thick and cellular. It is articulated with the frontal, temporal, sphenoid, and superior maxillary bones, and is developed by a single point of ossification.

The part of the face made prominent by it, the French call Pommette.

Malag'ma, gen. Malag'matis, (μαλαγμα, from μαλασσω, 'I soften,') An emollient cataplasm, and, in general, every local application which enjoys the property of softening organic tissues.

Malaire, Malar.

Malaise, (mal, 'ill,') and aise, 'ease,') Indisposition.

Malakien, (from μαλακ, 'soft,') Mollities.

Malam'bo Bark, Matias.

Mal'amide, Aspar'agin. A principle found in asparagus and the shoots of various plants.

Malan'ders, Malandria.

Malan'dria, (of old.) A species of lepra or elephantiasis. Mal'anders or Mal'lenders is a disease of the horse, which consists of a scurfy eruption on the inside of the hock, or a little below it, as well as at the bend of the knee. It is called Mallenders in the foreleg, and Sal'lenders in the hind leg.

Malandri'osus, Lep'rous. Affected with malandria.

Malap'rax'is, Malpraxis.

Ma'lar, Mala'ris, (F.) Malaire, (from mala.) Belonging to the cheek,—as the malar bone.

MA'LAR PROC'ESS, Zygomatic process.

Mala'rè Os, Malæ os.

Mala'ria, ([L.] 'bad air,') see Miasm.

Mala'rioid, Malario'des, (malaria, and idos, 'resemblance,') Resembling malaria or its effects.

Mala'rious, Mala'rial. Owing to, or connected with, malaria,—as a malarious soil, malarious diseases, &c.

Malassimila'tion, Malassimila'tio, (mala, 'bad,' and assimilatio.) Imperfect or morbid assimilation or nutrition.

Ma'late of Iron. A preparation made from the action of acidulous ripe apples on pure iron filings.

Malax'ate, Molli'rè, Subig'erè, Malacissa'rè, (F.) Malaxer, (μαλασσω, 'I soften,') To produce softening of drugs, by kneading them. The process is called Malaxa'tion, Malaxa'tio.

Malaxa'tion, see Malaxate.

Malax'ia Ventric'uli, (μαλασσειν, 'to soften,') Gastromalaxia.

Malax'is, (μαλαξίς.) Mollities—m. Cordis, Cardiomalacia—m. Hepatica, Adiposis hepatica.

Malay', see Homo.

Malazissa'tus, (μαλασσειν, 'to soften,') Malacissatus. One in whom the testicles have not descended. It has, also, been used synonymously with emascula'tus and muliera'tus.

Mal'cè, (μαλκή, 'torpor from cold,') Chilblain.

Male, Mas, Mas'culus. Of the sex that begets young. Not female. What belongs to the male sex; as the male organs of generation.

MAL'È, (μαλή.) Axilla.

MALE OR'GAN, Penis.

Male ([L.] disease,) Di Breno, see Scherlievo—m. di Fiume, Scherlievo—m. del Monte, Pellagra—m. Morto, Pemphigus—m. Scabioso venereo, Scherlievo—m. di Scarlievo, Scherlievo—m. di Scherlievo, Scherlievo—m. del Sole, Pellagra.

Malefic'ium, (malus, 'bad,' and facere, 'to make,') Poisoning.

Malforma'tion, Malforma'tio, Malconforma'tio, (malus, 'bad,' and forma, 'form,') A wrong formation; or irregularity in the structure of parts. See Monster.

Malherbe, Plumbago Europæa.

Ma'lia, (μαλία.) see Equinia.

Malias'mus, (μαλιασμός.) Malis, see Equinia.

Malico'rium, (malum, 'apple,' and corium, 'skin,') see Punica granatum.

Ma'lië, (μαλή.) Equinia.

Malig'nant, Malig'nus, (malus, 'bad,') (F.) Malin. A term applied to any disease whose symptoms are so aggravated as to threaten the destruction of the patient, as Malignant Scarlet Fever, Malignant Pustule, &c. A disease of a very serious character, although it may be mild in appearance;—Mor'bus malig'nus.

Malin, Malignant.

Maling'erer, ([F.] malingre, 'sickly,') A simulator ([F.] simulateur) of disease, so termed in the British military service. See Abraham man.

Ma'lis, (μαλίσ.) Malias'mus, Cuta'neous vermination, Helminthion'cus. The cuticle or skin infested with animalcules—Phtheiri'asis, Parasitis'mus superfic'iei. In Persia, this affection is produced by the Guinea worm; in South America, by the chigre, and in Europe, occasionally, by the louse. See Equinia, and Phtheiri'asis.

MA'LI'S DRACUN'ULUS, Dracunculus—m. Gordii, Dracunculus—m. Pediculi, Phtheiri'asis.

Mallea'tio, (from malleus, 'a hammer,') An affection described by Morgagni and others as a form of chorea, characterized by constantly hammering with one hand on the other, or on the knee of the same side.

Mal'lenders, Malandria.

Malle'olar, Malleola'ris, (from malleolus,) (F.) Malléolaire. Belonging or relating to the ankles.

MALLE'OLAR AR'TERIES are two branches furnished by the anterior tibial about the instep; the one—the internal—passes transversely behind the tendon of the tibialis anticus, to be distributed in the vicinity of the malleolus internus; the other—the external—glides behind the tendons of the extensor communis digitorum pedis and the peroneus brevis, and sends its branches to the parts which surround the outer ankle, as well as to the outer region of the tarsus.

Malle'olus, (dim. of malleus, 'a mallet,') Racet'a, Rast'e'ta, Ras'cha, Raset'ta, Ras'e'ta, Sphy'ra, Sphyron, Ta'lus, Diab'ebos, Tale'olus, Pe'za, An'kle, (Prov.) An'cler, An'cler, An'cliff, An'clow, An'kley, Rick, (Sc.) Cute, Coot, Hanceth, Heatherclu, (F.) Malléole, Cheville du pied. The two projections formed by the bones of the leg at their inferior part. The inner belongs to the tibia, the outer to the fibula. The ankles afford attachment to ligaments, and each has a sort of gutter in which certain tendons slide. See Malleus.

Mal'let, Malle'olus, (F.) Maillet. A kind of hammer, used with a gouge for removing or cutting bones, in surgical and anatomical operations.

Mal'leus, ('a mallet,') Malle'olus, Ossic'ulum malle'olo assimila'tum, (F.) Marteau. The longest and outermost of the four small bones of the ear. It is situate at the outer part of the tympanum, and is united to the membrana tympani. It has, 1. An ovoid head—Ca'put, Capit'ulum—which is articulated behind with the incus, and is supported by a narrow part called the neck—Cer'vix. This has, anteriorly, a long Apoph'ysis, which is engaged in the glenoid fissure, and is called the Apoph'ysis or Process, Processus grac'ilis of Rau—Processus anterior seu Folia'nus seu Ra'vii seu longis'simus seu gracill'imus seu spin'o'sus. It affords attachment to the anterior seu externus mallei muscle. 2. A handle—Man'ubrium, Processus pri'mus seu inf'erior—which forms an obtuse angle with the neck, and corresponds to the membrane of the tympanum, which it seems to draw inward. It is furnished at its upper extremity with a process—the processus bre'vis seu exter'nus seu obtu'sus—to which the inter'nus mallei is attached.

MAL'LEUS, Equinia—m. Farciminosus, see Equinia—m. Humidus, Equinia—m. Slender process of the, Grêle apophyse du marteau.

Mal'low, Com'mon, Malva—m. Compound decoction of, Decoctum malvæ compositum—m. Indian, Abutilon Avicennæ—m. Yellow, Abutilon Avicennæ.

Malls, Rubeola.

Mal'medy, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Malmedy is a town in Rhenish Prussia, between Spa and Coblenz. In its immediate vicinity are several acidulous chalybeate springs.

Maloba'thrum, (μαλοβαθρον.) Malabathrum.

Malograna'tum, (malum, 'an apple,' and granum, 'a grain,'—having grainlike seeds.) Punica granatum.

Malpig'hi, Ac'ini of, Corpora Malpighiana—M. Glomerule of, see Glomerule—M. Pyramids of, see Papillæ of the kidney.

Malpig'hia Mourel'la (after Malpighi), (F.) Mourellier, Simarouba faux. The bark of this shrub—a native of Cayenne—is reputed to be febrifuge, and useful in diarrhoea.

Malpig'hian Bod'ies, Corpora Malpighiana, see also Spleen—M. bodies, Inflammation of the Kidney, Bright's disease of the.

MALPIG'HIAN COR'PUSCLES, see Corpora Malpighiana and Spleen.

MALPIG'HIAN LAY'ER OF THE SKIN. The rete mucosum is sometimes so called.

MALPIG'IAN VESICLES, see Pulmo.

Malposit'ion. Faulty position of the fœtus in the pelvis. Malpresentation refers to the faulty presentation of the fœtus, as by the shoulder, &c.

Malprac'tice, Malpraxis.

Malprax'is, Malap Praxis, Ma'lum reg'imen, Malprac'tice. Bad management or treatment.

Malpresenta'tion, see Malposition.

Malt, (Sax. mealt; μαλαττω, 'I soften.' [?]) By'nē, Mal'tum, Hor'dei mal'tum, Bra'sium, (F.) Drèche. Barley made to germinate for the purpose of forming beer. It has been recommended in medicine as antiscorbutic, antiscrofulous, &c.

MALT EXTRACT. Made from an infusion with water at 165° Fah., draining and evaporating. The genuine extract contains the soluble ingredients of malt and the bitter of the hop. It is employed in irritable forms of indigestion.

MALT SPIR'IT. A spirit distilled from malt. It is the basis of most of the spirituous cordials.

Mal'ta, Cli'mate of. The climate of Malta is pretty equable, the range of temperature in the twenty-four hours being rarely more than 6°. The air is almost always dry and clear. The most disagreeable wind is the sirocco, which is a source of suffering to the pulmonary invalid. Dr. Liddell thinks that no place which he has seen in the south of Europe can compete with Malta for a mild, dry, bracing air in November, December, and part of January; and during the other winter and spring months he thinks it is equal to any of them.

Mal'tha, (μαλθα, Ma'lthē, (μαλαττω, 'I soften.') Wax, particularly soft wax.

Malthax'is, (μαλθαξις, Mollities.

Mal'thē, (μαλθη, Maltha.

Mal'tine, Di'astase. Made by macerating sprouting malt in double its weight of water for 24 hours at a temperature of 100° Fah., replacing the filtered portion with alcohol, filtering the deposit, and drying. Called also Veg'etabile pty-aline, from its similarity of action to the latter. Used in cases of inveterate dyspepsia, especially in the dyspepsie salivaire of French writers.

MA'LUS IN'DICA, Bilumbi biting-bing of Bon-tius. Ord. Rosaceæ. The juice of this East India tree is cooling, and is drunk as a cure for fevers. The leaves, boiled and made into a cataplasm with rice, are famed in all sorts of tumors. The juice, mixed with arrack, is drunk for the cure of diarrhoea. The ripe fruit is eaten as a delicacy, and the unripe as a pickle for the table.

Malvavis'cum, (malva, and viscum, 'birdlime,') Althæa.

Mal'vern, Wa'ters of. The village of Great Malvern (pronounced Maw'vern), in Worcestershire, England, has for many years been celebrated for a spring of remarkable purity, which has acquired the name of the Holy well. It is a carbonated water, containing carbonates of soda and iron, sulphate of soda, and chloride of sodium; used externally in cutaneous affections.

Mama Pian, Mo'ther yare, (F.) Maman pian. An ulcer of a bad aspect, which is the commencement of the pian, and which, after having destroyed the flesh, extends to the bones. It is also called the Mother of pians, (F.) La mère des pians.

Mam'ei, Mam'oe, Mom'in, or Tod'dytce. From incisions made in the branches of this West Indian tree, a copious discharge of pellucid liquor occurs, which is called Momin or Toddy wine. It is diuretic, and is esteemed to be a good antilithic and lithontriptic. See Mammea Americana.

Mamillaire, Mammillary.

Mamillary, Mammillary.

Mam'ma, (mamma, one of the earliest cries of the infant, ascribed to a desire for food,) Mas'thos, Mas'tos, Maz'os, The'te, Tit'thē, Tit'this, Tit'thos, Tit'ty, Ru'ma, Rumis, U'ber, Nu'trix, Gemi-po'ma. The female breast, Pap, Pappē, (Mam-mil'la, Mamil'la being the male breast,) (F.) Mamelle. A glandular organ proper to a class of animals—the mammalia—and intended for the secretion of milk. The mammae exist in both sexes, but they acquire a much greater size in the female, especially during pregnancy and lactation. In women, before the age of puberty, the breasts are but little developed. At this period, however, towards the central part of each breast, the skin suddenly changes color, and assumes a rosy tint. It is of a reddish-brown in women who have suckled several children. This circle has a rugous appearance, owing to the presence of sebaceous glands, and is called Are'ola or Aur'ola. These glands, Tuber'cula areolæ, Glandulæ aureolares seu lactiferæ aberrantes, (F.) Tubercles papillaires—Tubercles of the Are'ola— furnish an unctuous fluid for defending the nipple from the action of the mouth of the suckling infant, and, according to some, milk. In the midst of the aureola is the nipple, a conoidal eminence, of a rosy tint, susceptible of erection, and at the surface of which the galactophorous ducts open. Besides the skin covering them, the breasts are also composed of a layer of fatty areolar tissue, more or less thick; of a large gland; excretory ducts; vessels, nerves, &c. See Mammary Gland.

In the animal, the mamma is called the U'd'er, U'ber, the Bag, (Prov.) Yewer.

The breasts plus the space between are called the bosom, si'nus, col'pus, (F.) Sein. At times, these terms are restricted to the space between the breasts.—Mamma also means a nurse.

MAM'MA, SUSPEN'SORY LIG'AMENT OF, see Suspensory.

Mammaire, (from mamma.) Mammary.

Mam'mal, pl. Mamma'lia, Mam'mifer, Mam'miferous animal, (from mamma.) An animal that suckles its young.

Mammal'gia, (mamma, and algos, 'pain.') Neuralgia of the breast.

Mam'mary, Mamma'rius, (F.) Mammaire. Relating to the breasts.

MAM'MARY AB'SCESS, Mastodynia apostematosa.

MAM'MARY ARTERIES are three in number. They are distinguished into—1. The Inter'nal Mam'mary, Arte'ria sterna'lis, A. Sous-sternal (Ch.), Inter'nal thorac'ic. It arises from the subclavian, and descends obliquely inwards, from its origin to the cartilage of the third rib. Below the diaphragm it divides into two branches; the one external, the other internal. From its origin until its bifurcation, it gives branches to the muscles and glands of the neck, to the thymus, mediastinum, pericardium, and œsophagus. In each intercostal space it gives off internal and external musculo-cutaneous branches, and also on each side the superior diaphragmatic. Its two ultimate branches are distributed on the parietes of the abdomen, and anastomose with the external mammary, intercostal, lumbar, circumflexa illi, and epigastric arteries. 2. The Exter'nal Mam'mary Ar'teries are two in number, and are distinguished into superior and inferior. The superior exter'nal mammary, First of the thorac'ics (Ch.), Superior external thorac'ic, Superior thorac'ic, is furnished by the axillary artery. It descends obliquely forwards between the pectoralis major and pectoralis minor, to which it is distributed by a considerable number of branches. The inferior exter'nal mam'mary, the second of the thorac'ics (Ch.), Long or inferior thorac'ic, arises from the axillary artery, a little below the preceding. It descends vertically over the lateral part of the thorax; curves afterwards inwards; becomes subcutaneous and divides into a number of branches, which surround the breast. It gives branches to the pectoralis major, serratus major anticus, the intercostal muscles, the glands of the axilla, and the integuments of the breast.

MAM'MARY GLAND, Glan'dula lactifera, Mastaden, is the secretory organ of the milk. It is situate in the substance of the breast, to which it gives shape. The tissue of this gland results from the assemblage of lobes of different size, united intimately by a dense areolar tissue. Each of these is composed of several lobules, formed of round granulations, of a rosy white color, and of the size of a poppy seed. The glandular grains give rise to the radicles of the excretory canals of the mamma, which are called galactoph'orous or lactiferous. See Lactiferous vessels. These excretory vessels unite in ramusculi, rami, and in trunks of greater or less size; collect towards the centre of the gland; are tortuous, very extensible, and semi-transparent. All terminate in sinuses situate near the base of the nipple, which are commonly from 15 to 18 in number. These sinuses are very short, conical, and united by areolar tissue. From their summits a fasciculus of new ducts sets out, which occupy the centre of the nipple, and open separately at its surface. The arteries of the mammary gland come from the thoracic, axillary, intercostal, and internal mammary. The veins accompany the arteries; the nerves are furnished by the intercostals and brachial plexus; the lymphatic vessels are very numerous, and form two layers. They communicate with those of the thorax, and pass into the axillary ganglions.

MAM'MARY PHTHI'SIS. See Phthisis.

MAM'MARY SARCO'MA, Mas'toid sarco'ma of Abernethy, Emph'yma sarco'ma mamma'rum. A tumor, of the color and texture of the mammary gland; dense and whitish; sometimes softer and brownish; often producing, on extirpation, a malignant ulcer, with indurated edges. Found in various parts of the body and limbs.

MAM'MARY VEINS follow the same course as the arteries, and have received the same denominations. The inter'nal mam'mary vein of the right side opens into the superior cava; that of the left into the corresponding subclavian vein. The exter'nal mam'mary veins open into the axillary vein.

Mam'mea American'a, (F.) Abricot sauvage. Ord. Guttiferae. The systematic name of the tree on which the mamme or mamei fruit grows. This fruit has a delightful flavor when ripe, and is much cultivated in Jamaica, where it is generally sold in the markets as one of the best fruits of the island.

Mammea'ta, Mammo'sa, (from mamma.) One who has large breasts.

Mammel'la, (dim. of mamma.) Nipple.

Mam'mifer, (mamma, and fero, 'I bear.') Mammal.

Mammiferous An'imal, Mammal.

Mam'miform, (mamma, and forma, 'form.') Mastoid.

Mammil'la, (dim. of mamma.) Mamma (male), Nipple.

Mammil'læ, see Kidney—m. Medullares, see Mammillary.

Mammillaire, Mammillary.

Mammilla'ris, (from mammilla.) Mastoid.

Mam'millary, Mammilla'ris, (from Mammilla.) (F.) Mammillaire, Mamillaire. Having the shape of a nipple. See Mastoid.

MAM'MILLARY EM'INENCE is a name given, 1. To more or less marked prominences on the inner surface of the bones of the cranium, which correspond to the anfractuosités of the cranium. 2. To white, round, medullary tubercles of the size of a pea, situate at the base of the brain, behind the gray substance from which the Tige pituitaire of the French anatomists arises. These Mam'millary Tu'bercles, Cor'pora albican'tia seu candican'tia seu mammilla'ria seu risiform'ia, Bul'bi for'niciis, Mammil'læ seu Glob'uli medulla'res, Prominen'tiæ albican'tes, Proces'sus mamilla'res cer'e'ri, Protensio'nes glandula'res, Eminen'tiæ candican'tes seu mammilla'res, Prio'rum cru'rum for'niciis bul'bi, Willis's Glands, (F.) Bulbes de la voûte à trois piliers, Tubercles pisiformes (Ch.), are united to each other by a small grayish band, which corresponds with the third ventricle. They receive the anterior prolongations of the fornix.

Some ancient anatomists, taking the nervous trunks, to which Willis first gave the name of olfactory nerves, for simple appendages of the brain, called them, on account of their shape, Carun'culæ mammilla'res. Vesalius, Fallopius, Columbus, and several others, termed them Proces'sus mammilla'res cer'e'ri ad na'res. They have also been called Trigo'na olfacto'ria.

MAM'MILLARY PROC'ESSES. Tubercles which project backwards from each of the superior articular processes of the lumbar vertebra. See also Mammillary eminence and Mastoid process.

Mam'millated, (F.) Mamelonné. That which has mammiform projections on its surface. See État mamelonné.

Man'ganese, Mangane'sium, Manga'nium, Man'ganum, ([G.] Manganerz, 'Mangan earth,') (?). A metal, which is pretty abundant in nature in an oxidized state. It is of a grayish-white color, resembling some varieties of cast iron, is hard and brittle, and destitute of magnetic properties. Specific gravity about 8.

MAN'GANESE, BLACK OX'IDE OF, Diox'ide of Man'ganese, Mangane'sii ox'idum seu oxidum ni-grum seu binox'idum, Tetrox'ide of manganese, Magne'sia ni'gra, Mangane'sium vitrario'rum seu oxyda'tum nativum seu ni'grum seu ochra'ceum ni'grum seu oxyda'tum nativum, Man'ganum oxyda'tum nativum, Molybde'num magne'sii, Oxo'des man'gani nativ'ca, Peroxy'dum mangane'sii ni'grum nativum, Superoxy'dum mangan'icium, Pyrolusite, (F.) Oxyde noir de manganèse. This oxide is not much used in medicine. It has been advised to dust the affected parts, in tinea capitis, with the powder. It was officinal in the Edinburgh pharmacopœia, and is used in preparing chlorine, solution of chlorine, and solution of chlorinated soda.

MAN'GANESE, I'ODIDE OF. This salt, formed by the action of solutions of sulphate of manganese and iodide of potassium, is prescribed, in pill and syrup, in the anæmia attendant on scrofula, phthisis, cancer, &c.

MAN'GANESE, SUL'PHATE OF, Mangane'sii Sul'phas seu Protox'idi Sul'phas, Sul'phate of Protox'ide of Man'ganese, (F.) Sulfate de Manganèse, Sulfate Manganoux. A rose-colored and very soluble salt, isomorphous with sulphate of magnesia. It is prepared on a large scale for the use of the dyer, by heating, in a close vessel, peroxide of manganese and coal, and dissolving the impure protoxide, thus obtained, in sulphuric acid, with the addition of a little chlorohydric acid towards the end of the process. The solution is evaporated to dryness, and again exposed to a red heat, by which the persulphate of iron is decomposed. Water then dissolves the pure sulphate of manganese, leaving the oxide of iron behind. This salt has been recommended as a cholagogue, in doses of a drachm or two.

The salts of manganese have been prescribed in chlorosis and amenorrhœa, and as substitutes for chalybeates generally. The subcarbonate and the oxide have been chiefly employed. The chloride is the basis of Mr. James Young's disinfectant.

Mange, ([F.] démangeaison, 'itching,') Scabies ferina.

Mangifera In'dica, M. domes'tica, (mango, 'the fruit,' and fero, 'I bear,') The Man'go tree, (F.) Manguier. Ord. Terebinthaceæ. A tree cultivated over Asia, and in South America. Mangos, when ripe, are juicy, of a good flavor, and so fragrant as to perfume the air to a considerable distance. They are eaten, either raw or preserved with sugar. From the expressed juice a wine is prepared; and the remainder of the kernel can be reduced to an excellent flour for bread.

Ma'nia, (mania,) Fu'ror, Hemianthro'pia, Fu'ror seu Ecphro'nia seu Delir'ium ma'nia, Insania, Delir'ium mani'acum seu furio'sum, Ma'nia universa'lis, Vesa'nia ma'nia, (F.) Manie, Hyperphrénie, Ra'ving or fu'rious mad'ness, (Sc.) Wod'nes, (from μαίνωμαι, 'I am furious,') With some, it means insanity. Disorder of the intellect, in which there is erroneous judgment or hallucination, which impels to acts of fury, Acute ma'nia, mani'acal fu'ry or fren'zy. One so affected is said to be ra'ving mad, stark mad, and horn mad. If the raving be not directed to a single object, it is mania properly so called; if to one object, it constitutes monomania, which term is, however, usually given to melancholy. Mania attacks adults chiefly; and women more frequently than men. The prognosis is unfavorable. About one-third never recover; and they who do are apt to relapse. Separation is one of the most effective means of treatment, with attention to the corporeal condition and everything that can add to the mental comfort of the patient, and turn his thoughts away from the subjects of his delusion. In the violence of the paroxysms, recourse must be had to the strait-waistcoat, the shower bath, &c. Separation should be continued for some weeks during convalescence, with the view of preventing a relapse.

MA'NIA, ACUTE, see Mania.

MA'NIA, DANC'ING. Danc'ing plague. A form of convulsion, which has appeared, at various times, epidemically under the form of St. Vitus's dance, St. John's dance, Tarantism, Hysteria, Tigretier (in Abyssinia), and diseased sympathy; and which has been fully described by Hecker in his "Epidemics of the Middle Ages." See Convulsionnaire.

Manti'lê, ('a napkin,') Bandage (body).

Man'tle, (mantelium, 'a cloak,') Panniculus carnosus. Also, at an early period of foetal development, that portion of the cerebral hemisphere-vesicle which forms the expanded or covering portion of the hemisphere.

Man'ual Ex'ercise Bone, see Drill bone.

Manu'brium, (from manus,) The handle of anything:—as manu'brium mal'lei, peti'olus mal'lei, 'the handle of the malleus.'

MANU'BRIUM, Chasse—m. Manûs, Radius.

MANU'BRIUM STER'NI. The uppermost broad part of the sternum. See Sternum.

Manulu'vium, (manus, 'the hand,' and lavo, 'I wash,') Bath, hand; Maniluvium.

Ma'nus, gen. Manûs, Cheir, Chir, Instrumentum instrumentorum, Hand, Paw, (F.) Main. The part which terminates the upper extremity in man, and which is inservient to prehension and touch. It extends from the fold of the wrist to the extremity of the fingers. The hand is sustained by a bony skeleton, composed of a number of pieces, movable on each other; of muscles, tendons, cartilages, ligaments, vessels, nerves, &c. It is divided into three parts—the carpus or wrist, the metacarpus, and fingers. Its concave surface is called the palm; the convex surface the back of the hand. The facility of being able to oppose the thumb to the fingers in order to seize objects forms one of the distinctive characters of the human hand.

MA'NUS CHRIS'TI PERLA'TA. A name anciently given to troches, prepared of pearls and sugar of roses. They were called Ma'nus Chris'ti sim'plices, when pearls were not employed.

Ma'rienbad, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Celebrated springs in Bohemia. There are several cold saline chalybeate springs, the principal of which, the Kreuzbrunn, contains sulphate of soda, chlo-ride of sodium, carbonate of soda, and carbonate of magnesia, with carbonates of lime, lithia, iron, &c. As laxatives, alteratives, and tonics, these waters are particularly valuable in chronic disorders of the abdominal viscera. Season, from May to October.

Mar'igold, Di'amond Fig, Mesembryanthemum crystallinum—m. Garden, Calendula officinalis—m. Marsh, Caltha palustris—m. Single, Calendula officinalis—m. Wild, Calendula arvensis.

Mariotte', Experiment of, (F.) Expérience de Mariotte. A celebrated experiment of the Abbé Mariotte, which consists in placing two small round spots on a wall at some distance from each other, standing opposite the left-hand object, and looking at it with the right eye, the left being closed. By walking backwards, until the distance from the object is about five times as great as the distance between the two objects, the latter will be found to disappear. Mariotte, and, after him, many ophthalmologists, inferred that the optic nerve, on which the ray doubtless falls in this experiment, is insensible; and hence that the choroid may be the seat of vision,—not the retina. The inference is illogical; for it doubtless falls on the part of the optic nerve where the central artery enters, and the central vein leaves the eyeball, and where there is necessarily no neurine.

Ma'ris, (μαρίς) Ancient name of a measure, containing 83 pints and 4 ounces.

Maris'ca, ('a large fig,') Ficus, Hæmorrhoids.

Mars, gen. Mar'tis, ('the god of war,') Ferrum — m. Solubilis, Ferrum tartarizatum.

Marseilles, Cli'mate of. The remarks made upon the climate of Montpellier apply even in greater force to that of Marseilles. It possesses all the objectionable qualities of the climate of southeastern France.

Marsh, (Sax. meppꝛ,) Lim'nē, He'lus, Pa'lus, (F.) Marais. Marshy districts give off emanations, which are the fruitful source of disease and the cause of great insalubrity in many countries. The chief disease, occasioned by the malaria or miasm, is intermittent fever. Hence it becomes important to drain such regions, if practicable. Some marshy countries are not so liable to phthisis pulmonalis, and it has been found, that where intermittents have been got rid of by draining, consumption has, at times, become frequent. The most unhealthy periods for residence in a marshy district are during the existence of the summer and autumnal heats; at which timethewater becomes evaporated, and the marshy bottom is more or less exposed to the sun's rays. This postulatium seems necessary for the production of the miasmata; for whilst the marsh is well covered with water, no miasm is given off.

MARSH GAS, Hydrogen, carburetted, Methyl hydride — m. Mallow, Althæa — m. Poison, Miasm (marsh) — m. Root, Statice Caroliniana — m. Tea, Ledum palustre.

Mate'co, Matico.

Matel'la, (like Matula,) Urinal.

Ma'ter, gen. Ma'tris, (μήτηρ, 'mother,') Uterus — m. Dura, Dura mater — m. Herbarum, Artemisia vulgaris — m. Metallorum, Hydrargyrum — m. Mollis, Pia mater — m. Perlum, see Pearl — m. Pia, Pia mater — m. Secalis, Ergot — m. Tenuis, Pia mater.

Mate'ria, (from mater, 'mother,') (?) Matter — m. Alimentaria, see Aliment.

MATE'RIA CHIRURG'ICA. The aggregate of agents employed by the surgeon; with the means of administering them and the rationale of their employment.

MATE'RIA FIBRO'SA, Fibrin.

MATE'RIA MED'ICA, Pharmacolog'ia, Pharmacology, Acol'ogy or Akol'ogy or Aceolog'ia, Hylè lat'rice, Iamatolog'ia, Iamatol'ogy, (F.) Matière Médicale. The division of medical science which treats of the knowledge of medicines; their action on the animal economy, and mode of administration. The study of the Materia Medica is one of great importance; — it is a study of the tools with which the practitioner has to work in the cure of disease. Much labor has been spent in contriving classifications of the Materia Medica. Some have arranged the articles according to their natural resemblances: others according to their real or presumed virtues: others according to their active constituent principles. The Pharmacopœias place them alphabetically. Perhaps the best classification would be one founded on the agency exerted by the articles on the different tissues; but this arrangement, in the present state of science, is by no means easy; and, moreover, ideas in regard to the action of medicines are so associated with certain terms, — as narcotics, tonics, sedatives, &c., employed to denote certain operations, which they are esteemed capable of producing, that, to abandon them, would be to throw obstacles in the way of the student, without the ultimate advantage accruing to him of possessing a better knowledge of the modus operandi of medicines than when a classification, somewhat resembling those usually embraced, is adopted.

The following is the classification given by the Author, in his "General Therapeutics and Materia Medica," 6th edit., Philad., 1857: —

- | | |
|---|---|
| 1. Agents that affect prominently the alimentary canal or its contents, | { Emetics,
Cathartics,
Anthelmintics. |
| 2. Agents that affect prominently the respiratory organs, | { Expectorants. |
| 3. Agents that affect prominently the follicular or glandular organs, | { Errhines,
Sialogogues,
Diuretics,
Antilithics,
Diaphoretics. |
| 4. Agents that affect prominently the nervous system, | { Narcotics,
Tetanics,
Antispasmodics. |
| 5. Agents that affect prominently the organs of reproduction, | { Emmenagogues,
Parturifacients. |
| 6. Agents that affect various organs, | { Excitants,
Tonics,
Astringents,
Sedatives,
Refrigerants,
Revelents,
Eutrophics. |
| 7. Agents whose action is prominently chemical, | { Antacids,
Antalkalies,
Disinfectants. |
| 8. Agents whose action is prominently mechanical, | { Demulcents,
Diluents. |

Of old, the Materia Medica consisted of more articles than at present. The tendency, indeed, is, and must be, to diminish it still further; to get rid of those articles which possess no advantages over others equally common, or whose properties are doubtful. In a dictionary, it becomes essential to insert all that have been reputed to possess virtues; but the majority are unnecessary. The catalogue might be largely reduced with impunity.

MATE'RIA MED'ICA, DYNAM'ICAL, Pharmacodynamics.

MATE'RIA MORBO'SA, M. Pec'cans, Mate'ries Mor'bi, 'Morbid matter.' The matter or material which is the cause of disease.

MATE'RIA OS'SEA, Terra ossea—m. Peccans, M. morbosa—m. Perspiratoria, Sudor—m. Seytodephica, Tannin—m. Sialina, see Saliva—m. Testacea dentium, see Tooth—m. Urinosa, Urea.

Materialis'ta, (from materia.) Druggist.

Matériaux Immédiats, (from materia.) Principles, immediate.

Mate'ries, Matter—m. Morbi, Materia morbosa.

Maternité (F.), (maternus,—mater, 'mother,'—'maternal.') Formerly, in France, a house for the reception of foundlings; at the present day, an establishment for the reception of pregnant women—a lying-in establishment.

Math'ew's Pills, Pilulae ex helleboro et myrrhâ.

Math'ieu's Vermifuge, see Vermifuge.

Ma'tias. The bark of a South American tree not yet determined. It is used in its native country in intermittents, and as a tonic generally. Its principal characteristic constituent is a bitter resinous matter. It is probably the same as the Malambo bark. The latter has been referred to Croton Malambo.

Mati'cin, see Matico.

Mati'co, (pronounced matee'co.) Mate'co, Mat'ica, Yerba del Soldado, Sol'dier's weed or herb. A South American herb,—Piper angustifolium seu longatum, Stephens'ia elongata, Artan'the elongata, Ord. Piperaceæ—which is possessed of astringent virtues, and is used both internally and externally. It is given in infusion made of one ounce of the leaves—Matico, (Ph. U. S.) Mati'ce Folia, (Ph. B., 1867)—to a pint of boiling water, of which the dose is $\frac{f3jss}$, or in tincture, made of $\frac{3jss}$ of the leaves to a pint of dilute alcohol. An active principle, Maticin, has been derived from it.

Matière, Matter—m. Caséuse, Casein—m. Cé-rébriforme, Encephaloid—m. Extractive du bouillon, Osmazome—m. Fécale, Fæces—m. Fibreuse du sang, Fibrin—m. Médicale, Materia Medica—m. de la Mélanose, see Choroïdea tunica—m. Noire des poumons, Anthraxis—m. Perlée de Kerkring, Antimonium diaphoreticum—m. Pulmonaire noire, see Pulmo.

Matité, see Mat son.

Mat'lock, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Matlock is a village in Derbyshire, England, at which there is a mineral spring of the acidulous class. Temperature 66°. It differs but little, except in temperature, from good spring water. It is generally used as a tepid bath.

Mato'nia Cardamo'mum, (after Dr. Wm. Maton, of London,) Amomum cardamomum.

Mato'rium, Ammoniac, gum.

Matra'cium, Matrass, Urinal.

Mat'rass, Matra'cium. A glass vessel with a long neck, and a round, and sometimes oval, body. It may be furnished with tubulures, or not. It is used in Pharmacy for distillation, digestion, &c.

Ma'tres Cer'ebri, Meninges.

Matricaire, Matricaria.

Matrica'lia, see Matricalis.

Matrica'lis, Matrica'rius, from matrix. Related to the uterus.

Matrica'lia are remedies for diseases of the uterus.

Matrica'ria, (matrix, 'the womb;' so called from its reputed virtues in affections of that organ,) M. Parthenium, Parthenium febrifugum, Py'rethrum seu Chrysanthemum parthenium, Argyrochæ'ta, Feverfew, Feath'rfew, Motherwort, Cowth'wort, (Se.) Fever-fouillie, (F.) Matricaire. Nat. Ord. Compositæ. The flowers resemble, in their properties, chamomile and tansy; and, like them, have been esteemed tonic, stomachic, resolvent, emmenagogue, vermifuge, &c. They are not much used. See Matricaria chamomilla.

MATRICA'RIA CHAMOMIL'LA, M. Suave'olens, Anthemis vulga'ris, Chamæ'melum Vulga'rè, Chamomill'a nostras, Leucanthemum of Dioscorides, Wild Corn, Dog's Cham'omile, Ger'man Chamomile, (F.) Camomille vulgaire. The flowers, Matrica'ria (Ph. U. S.), resemble Matricaria in properties.

MATRICA'RIA GLABRA'TA. A South African plant, known at the Cape as Wild Cham'omile, has the same properties as the other species of matricaria.

MATRICA'RIA LEUCAN'THEMUM, Chrysanthemum Leucanthemum—m. Suaveolens, M. chamomilla.

Matrice, ([L.] matrix, gen. matri'cis.) Uterus—m. Col de la, Collum uteri.

Matrice de l'Ongle, see Nail.

Matric'ulate, (matricula, diminutive of matrix, gen. matri'cis, 'a roll,' originally 'an army roll or register.') One who is admitted into a university or college, by enrolling or having his name enrolled on the register of the institution. In France, prendre inscription means 'to matriculate;' and, in the university regulations of that country, it is required, that the inscription shall be made every three months, until the termination of the prescribed period of study; the student having to take his inscription within the first fortnight of each trimestre or of every three months, and to present himself within the last fortnight of the trimestre to establish the fact of his attendance.

In this country, it is only necessary to matriculate at the commencement of each session.

One who has thus enrolled himself in an institution is called a Matric'ulate.

Matrisyl'va, (mater, 'mother,' and sylva, 'wood.') Asperula odorata.

Ma'trix, gen. Matri'cis, (from μῆτρος, mater, 'mother,' 'uterus,') Blastema, Cytoblastema, Stomach, Uterus—m. Pili, Hair papilla—m. Unguis, see Nail.

Matro'na, (from mater, 'mother,') Midwife.

Matrona'lis, Viola.

Mat'tee, see Ilex Paraguensis.

Mat'ter, Mate'ria, Hy'te, Mate'ries, (F.) Matière. Any substance which enters into the composition of a body. In Medicine, it is sometimes applied to the substance of evacuations; and is also used synonymously with pus. 'To matter' is to suppurate or discharge pus or matter.

Mat'ting of Parts, Hapantismus.

Mat'ula, Urinal.

Maturatif, Maturative.

Matura'tion, Matura'tio, (maturare, matura'tum, 'to ripen.') Pepas'mus, Pepan'is. Progression of an abscess towards maturity. The state of maturity. Coction.

Mat'urative, Matu'rans, Pepan'ticos, (F.) Maturatif. A medicine which favors the maturation of an inflammatory tumor.

Matura'tus, Concocted.

Matu'rity, Matu'ritas, Horw'otes, (F.) Maturité. The state of fruits and seeds when comparatively developed. State of an abscess in which the pus is completely formed.

MATU'RITY, PRECO'CIOUS, Preco'city.

Maud'lin, Achillea ageratum—m. Tansey, Achillea ageratum—m. Wort, Chrysanthemum leucanthemum.

Maules, Rubeola.

Maure Sauvage, Malva.

Maux (pl. of mal) de Nerfs, Hysteria.

Maw, (Sax. magā), Stomach — m. Bound, Constipated — m. Worm, Ascaris.

Maxil'la, (from mala, 'the cheek.') [?] Maxillary bone.

Maxillary, Mazilla'ris, (F.) Mazillaire, (from maxilla, 'a jaw,' μασθαλ, 'I chew.') Relating or belonging to the jaws.

MAXILLARY ARTERIES are three in number. 1. External maxillary, Arteria maxilla'ris exter'na. See Facial. 2. Internal maxillary, Arteria maxillaris inter'na — A. Gutturo-maxillaire (Ch.). This arises from the external carotid with the temporal. It is remarkable for its complex course, and for the number of branches which it transmits to the deep-seated parts of the face. Immediately after its origin, it buries itself under the neck of the lower jaw, curving inwards and downwards. It then advances directly inwards, proceeding in the space between the two pterygoid muscles towards the maxillary tuberosity. It turns again, becomes vertical, and ascends into the bottom of the zygomatic fossa, until, having arrived at the floor of the orbit, it takes a horizontal and transverse direction, enters the sphenomaxillary fossa, and divides into several branches. See Artery, (table.)

MAXILLARY BONE, Maxil'la, Mandib'ula, Gam'phē, Gam'phelē, Gna'thus, Mo'la, Si'agon, Jaw-bone, Man'dible, (Prov.) Chaff'bone, Chall, Chaule, Chavel, Chaw'bone, Gill, (F.) Mâchoire. A name given to two bones which support the teeth, and by means of them are inservient to the cutting, bruising, and tearing of alimentary substances.

MAXILLARY BONE, INFERIOR, Lower jawbone, Os maxilla'rē infer'ius, Maxil'la infer'ior, Hypo-si'agon, (F.) Os maxillaire, (Ch.) Mâchoire di-cranienne, is a symmetrical, nearly parabolic bone, the middle portion of which is horizontal, and called the body, and the posterior is vertical, the angular portions being termed rami or branches. These have behind a parotidean edge, which forms, by uniting with the base, the angle of the jaw. The branches terminate above by two processes, separated by the sigmoid notch or fossa, the anterior of which is called the coronoid, the posterior the condyloid process, or maxillary condyle, supported by a cer'vix, collum, or neck. The chief parts observed in the lower jaw are — 1. Externally, the Sym'physis men'ti, Apoph'ysis men'ti, Men'tal for'a'men, and the External oblique line. 2. Internally, the Genian-apoph'ysis, the Internal or My'loid oblique lines, and the Entrance of the dental canal. The lower jaw has also an alveolar edge, which contains alveoli for the reception of the teeth. The lower jawbone is developed by two points of ossification, which unite at the symphysis of the chin. It is articulated with the temporal bone and with the teeth.

MAXILLARY BONE, SUPERIOR, Upper jawbone, Maxil'la super'ior seu synera'nia, Os maxilla'rē super'ius, (F.) Os sus-maxillaire, (Ch.) Mâchoire syneranienne. The upper jawbones are to the face what the sphenoid bone is to the cranium. They are articulated with all the portions composing it. They determine, almost alone, the shape of the face, and give it solidity. Their size is considerable, form unequal. They occupy the middle and anterior part of the face, and enter into the composition of the nasal fossæ, orbit, and mouth. The chief parts observable in the upper jaw are — 1. Externally, the Na'sal proc'ess, Processus nasa'lis seu fronta'lis seu ascen'dens, (F.) Apophyse montante; the superior or orbital surface, Superf'ic'ies orbita'lis, Pla'nium orbita'le, which forms almost the entire floor of the orbit; the For'a'men infraorbitarium, Zygomat'ic proc'ess, Canine or Myr'tiform fos'sa. 2. Internally, the Palatine proc'ess, Ante'rior palatine canal, and the An'trum of High'more. Its circumference is very unequal, and it has behind a round, unequal prominence, called the Maxillary tuberosity, which is pierced by the posterior dental canal. Anteriorly, there is a notch, which forms part of the anterior aperture of the nasal fossæ, and beneath, an eminence, called the anterior nasal spine. The lower part of this circumference forms the alveolar marg'in. Each superior maxillary bone is articulated with its fellow, with the ethmoid, frontal, nasal, lachrymal, palatine, inferior spongy, vomer, the teeth of the upper jaw, and sometimes the sphenoid bone. It is developed by four or five points of ossification.

MAXILLARY NERVES are two in number, and formed of the second and third branches of the fifth pair. The Superior maxillary nerve, Nerv sus-maxillaire (Ch.), arises from the middle of the gangliform enlargement of the fifth pair; passes forward, and issues from the cranium through the foramen rotundum of the sphenoid bone, enters the sphenomaxillary fossa, which it crosses horizontally, passes into the infraorbitar canal, which it traverses, and makes its exit to vanish on the cheek. It gives off the following branches: — the or'bitar, a branch which goes to the sphenopalatine ganglion, posterior dental branches, the anterior dental, and terminates in the infraorbitar nerves, which are divided into superior, inferior, and internal. The inferior maxillary nerve, Nerv max'illaire (Ch.), is the largest of the three branches furnished by the fifth pair. It issues from the cranium by the foramen ovale of the sphenoid. Having reached the zygomatic fossa, it divides into two trunks — the one superior and external, which gives off the temporales profundi, masseterine, buccal, and pterygoids; the other, inferior and internal, the larger of the two, which furnishes the inferior dental, lingual, and auricular.

MAXILLARY VEINS present the same arrangement as the arteries they accompany.

Maxillo-alveoli-nasal, Depressor alæ nasi — m. Labial, Depressor anguli oris — m. Narinal, Compressor naris — m. Palpébral, Orbicularis palpebrarum — m. Scléroticien, Obliquus inferior oculi.

Mayap'ple, Podophyllum peltatum — m. Mountain, Podophyllum montanum — m. Flower, Anthemis cotula — m. Weed, Anthemis cotula.

Mayel'la, Curcuma longa.

May'hem, Mai'hem, Maim'ing, (low Lat. mahe-mium, 'maim, or loss of a limb;') old French, mahem or maheme. The act of depriving a person of a limb necessary for his defence.

May'nard's Adhe'sive Liq'uid, Collodion.

Mays, Zea mays — m. Americana, Zea mays — m. Zea, Zea mays.

May'worm, True, Meloë maialis.

Mayz (Ind.), Zea mays.

Ma'za, (μαζα), Mass, Placenta.

Mazal'ysis, Mazolysis.

Ma'zicus, (from maza.) Relating to the placenta.

Mazisch'esis, (maza, and σχισις, 'holding, 'retention.') Retention of the placenta.

Mazodyn'ia, (μαζος, 'a breast,' and οδυνη, 'pain.') Mastodynia.

Mazoi'tis, gen. Mazoi'tidis, (μαζος, 'breast,' and itis.) Mastitis.

Mazol'ysis, Mazal'ysis, (maza, and λυσις, 'solution.') Separation of the placenta.

Mazopathi'a, (maza, and παθος, 'disease.') A disease of the placenta. One originating from the placenta.

Ma'zos, (μαζος), Mamma.

M'Boundou, Akasga.

McMunn's Elix'ir, see Elixir of opium.

McDou'gall, Disinfect'ing Pow'der of. This consists of carbonate of lime, sulphate of lime, and quicklime.

Mead, ([Sax.] mebo, mebu,) Hydromeli, Melizomum.

Meadowbloom, Ranunculus acris—m. Fern, Comptonia asplenifolia—m. Garlic, Allium Canadense—m. Pride, see Calumba—m. Rue, Thalictrum—m. Saffron, Colchicum autumnale—m. Sweet, Gillenia trifoliata, Spiraea ulmaria—m. Sweet, American, Spiraea lobata—m. Sweet, red, Spiraea tomentosa.

Meal's Starwort, Aletris farinosa—m. Tree, Viburnum dentatum.

Meas'les, ([G.] Mase, 'a spot,' masern, 'spotted.') Rubeola. Also, a diseased condition of pork—meas'ly pork—which has been ascribed to the presence of cysticercus cellulosæ; and may be owing to trichinæ. See Trichiniasis.

MEAS'LES, Bas'tard, Rubella—m. Black, see Rubeola—m. Camp, see Rubeola—m. False, Roscolæ—m. French, Roscolæ—m. German, see Rubeola.

Meas'lings, Rubeola.

Meas'ly, Morbillous—m. Pork, see Measles.

Meas'ure, Grad'uated. A glass measure, used in pharmacy, which is so divided as to indicate accurately the quantities of liquids in dispensing medicines.

Meas'urement, Mensuration.

Meas'ures, see Weights and measures.

Meas'uring, Med'ical, Mensuration.

Meat. Some of the preparations of meat, as beef-tea, extract of beef, &c., are elsewhere referred to.

MEAT BIS'CUIT, see Biscuit, meat—m. Condensed, see Extract of beef—m. Extractive of, Osmazome.

MEAT, FLU'ID. A solution of meat in pepsin and hydrochloric acid, by adding small pieces of pancreas to meat before solution. It contains the fibrinous and nutritious portions of the meat.

MEAT JUICE is obtained by a process described by Prof. Christison, at a temperature of about 220°, from fresh beef, and contains osmazome, with the salts, and sapid and odorous principles of meat. MEAT FLOUR, or Flour of Meat, is made of beef dried at a low temperature, and ground into very fine powder, one pound representing four pounds of flesh.

MEAT, RAW. This has been recommended in chronic diarrhoea when uncomplicated with organic lesion, the meat being minced with currant jelly or conserve of roses. Trousseau fancifully calls this the Conserve de Damas. It has also been extolled as an article of diet for consumptive and serofulous cases.

Méat, Meatus.

Mea'tus, gen. Mea'tūs, (meo, meatum, 'I go,') Ductus, Canalis, Po'rus, Po'rus, (F.) Méat. A passage or canal.

MEA'TUS AUDITO'RIOUS EXTER'NUS, Auditory canal, external—m. Auditorius internus, Auditory canal, internal—m. Cæcus, Eustachian tube—m. Cuticulares, Pori cutanei—m. Cysticus, Cystic duct—m. Narium, see Nasal fossæ—m. Rivini, Foramen of Rivini—m. Seminales uteri, Tubæ Fallopiæ—m. Seminarius, Corpus Highmori—m. Urinarius, Urethra.

Mech'ameck, Convolvulus panduratus—m. Bindweed, Convolvulus panduratus.

Mech'anē, (μηχανη,) Machine.

Mechane'ma, gen. Mechane'matis, (μηχανημα,) Machine.

Mechan'ical, Mechan'icus, (μηχανικος, from mechane.) An epithet given to irritating bodies, which do not act chemically—as a mechanical irritant.

MECHAN'ICAL or IATROMATHEMAT'ICAL PHYSICIANS, Iä'tromechan'ici seu Iä'tromathemat'ici, are such as refer every function, healthy or morbid, to mechanical or mathematical principles;—Medici'na mechan'ica.

Mechan'ics, An'imal. That part of physiology whose objects are to investigate the laws of equilibrium and motion of the animal body.

Mech'anism, Mechanism'us. The structure of a body; the collection or aggregate of the parts of a machine; the mode in which forces produce any effect, &c., as the mechanism of parturition.

Mechanol'ogy, Mechanolog'ia, (mechane, and λογος, 'a description.') A description of, or treatise on, machines or apparatus used in medicine or surgery.

Mèche, (from myxa, 'the wick of a lamp or candle,') Tent. This term is usually applied in French surgery to a collection of threads of charpie, cotton or raw silk, united together, which are used for detaching sinuous or fistulous ulcers; or to keep open or enlarge natural or artificial apertures. They are generally applied by means of an instrument called Porte-mèche.

Méchoacan du Canada, Phytolacca decandra. Mechoaca'na Ni'gra, (from Mechoacan, in Mexico,) Convolvulus jalapa—m. Nigricans, Convolvulus jalapa.

Mechoaca'næ Ra'dix, Convolvulus mechoacan.

Meckel's Car'tilage, C. of Meckel—M.'s Ganglion, Sphenopalatine ganglion.

Mecom'eter, (F.) Mécomètre, (μηκος, 'length,' and μετρον, 'measure.') A kind of graduated compass,—compas de proportion,—used at the Hospice de Maternité of Paris, to measure the length of newborn infants.

Me'con, (μηκων,) Meconium, Opium, Papaver. Meco'nicum, (μηκων, 'the poppy,') Opiate.

Meconid'ia, Mecon'idin or Mecon'idine. See Porphyroxin.

Mec'onin. A neutral substance obtained from opium, but not used medicinally.

Meconis'mus, Intoxica'tio opia'ca. Poisoning by opium.

Meco'nium, (μηκωνιον, from μηκων, 'the poppy,' the inspissated juice of the poppy,) Pop'py juice, Papaver'culum. Opium. Also, the excrement, Purgamen'ta Infan'tis, Me'con, passed by the infant a short time after birth, which had accumulated in the intestines during pregnancy. It is of a greenish or deep black color, and very viscid. It seems formed of the mucous secretions of the intestines mixed with bile.

Meconolog'ia, Opiolog'ia, (μηκων, 'opium,' and λογος, 'a description.') A treatise on opium.

Meconop'sis Diphyl'la, (μηκων, 'poppy,' and αψις, 'appearance.') Stylophorum diphyllum.

Med'cinare, Physician.

Me'dea, Genital organs.

Médecin, (from medeor, 'I heal,') Physician—m. Consultant, Consulting physician—m. de Fous, see Psychiatria—m. Piqueur, see Piqueur.

Médecine, Medicina—m. Agissante, see Active.

Médecine Blanche. A preparation of the French Codex (1866), containing calcined magnesias, white sugar, water, and distilled orange-flower water.

Médecine Expectante, Expectation—m. Lé-gale, Medicine, legal—m. Militaire, Military medicine.

Médecine Noire, Potion Purgative. A decoction of senna, sulphate of soda, rhubarb, and manna, official in the French Codex (1866).

Médecine Opératoire, Surgery, operative—m. Perturbatrice, Perturbatrix (medicina)—m. Pneumatique, Atmistris.

Mede'i'tis, (medea, and itis.) Inflammation of the genital organs, Ædæ'i'tis, Ædæoti'tis.

Mede'la, (medeor, 'I heal,') Curatio.

Mede'ni. A term used by Paracelsus for cutaneous ulcerations like those of boils.

Mede'ola Verticillifo'lia, (after Medea, the sorceress,) M. Virginica.

MEDEOLA VIRGINICA, M. verticillifolia, Gyro-mia Virginica, Indian cucumber. Order, Smilacaceae. An indigenous herb, growing in every part of the United States, the root of which resembles a small cucumber. It has been thought to be diuretic.

Median, Mediānus, (medius, 'the middle.') That which is situate in the middle.

MEDIAN LINE. A vertical line, supposed to divide a body longitudinally into two equal parts; the one right, the other left. Chaussier calls the linea alba the ligne médiane of the abdomen.

MEDIAN NERVE, Médian digital, (Ch.) This nerve arises chiefly from the anterior branches of the last two cervical nerves and first dorsal. The fifth and sixth cervical pairs also send it a branch, which separates from the musculo-cutaneous nerve. The median nerve descends the inner part of the arm along the biceps muscle. Opposite the elbow-joint it buries itself behind the aponeurosis of that muscle, and engages itself between the two fasciculi of the pronator teres. Lower down, it is situate between the flexors—sublimis and profundus—and passes, with their tendons, under the anterior annular ligament; it then divides into five branches, which are distributed to the muscles of the thenar eminence, to the lumbricales, the integuments of the thumb, the index, middle finger, and outer part of the ring finger. This nerve gives no branches to the arm. In the forearm, it furnishes filaments to all the pronator and flexor muscles; and one of them accompanies the anterior interosseous artery. It also gives off a filament to the integuments of the palm of the hand.

MEDIAN OPERATION OF LITHOTOMY, see Lithotomy.

MEDIAN VEINS. Three of the superficial veins of the forearm are so called. The median basilic,—the median cephalic and common median or funis brachii. See Basilic and Cephalic.

Medianum, Mediastinum, Mesentery.

Mediastinal, Mediastinalis, (F.) Médiastin. Relating to the mediastinum.

MEDIASTINAL ARTERIES are very delicate arterial branches, distributed in the areolar texture of the mediastinum. They are distinguished, according to their situation, into anterior and posterior.

Mediastinitis, gen. Mediastinitidis, Mesodermitis.

Mediastinum. Mediastinus, (quasi, in medio stans, as being in the middle,) Mesod'mē, Medianum, Mesothoracium, Mesothoracum, Sep'tum thoracis, Hymen Diaphragmaton, Membra'na Diaphragmaton seu thoracem intersep'ientis, Intersepimentum thoracis, Diribitorium, Dissipimentum thoracis, (F.) Médiastin. A membranous space formed by a double reflection of the pleura, extending from the spine to the posterior surface of the sternum. The anterior part, called Anterior mediastinum, Mediastinum anticum seu pectora'le, lodges, at its upper part, the thymus gland in the foetus, and is afterwards filled with fatty areolar tissue. The lower part, by some called mid'dle mediastinum, divided from the upper by a narrow portion, contains the pericardium, heart, and phrenic nerves. The posterior part, parallel to the spine, is occupied by the oesophagus, aorta, vena azygos, thoracic duct, the lower part of the windpipe, the origin of the bronchia and a number of lymphatic glands. This part is called the posterior mediastinum—Mediastinum posticum seu dorsale.

By Meckel, the part of the mediastinum, in front of the heart, is called the anterior mediastinum, and the part behind the heart, the posterior mediastinum. The term superior mediastinum has occasionally been given to the portion which is within the circuit of the first ribs.

By some anatomists, Mediastinum is defined to be the pleural walls of the membranous space, whilst the space itself is termed Cavum mediastini.

A medicine. Any substance exhibited with the view of curing or allaying morbid action. Medicines are obtained from the three kingdoms of nature, and are divided into internal and external, according as they are administered internally or applied externally.

In common language, medicine is often called Stuff, Doc'tors' Stuff, and, in the Southern States, Truck.

Medicamen'tal, Medicinal.

Medicamenter, see Physician.

Medicamenteux, Medicinal.

Medicamento'sus La'pis, Medic'inal stone, (F.) Pierre médicamenteuse. A name formerly given to a mixture of peroxide of iron, litharge, alum, nitre, sal ammoniac, and vinegar; evaporated and calcined at a red heat for an hour. The product was regarded as eminently astringent.

Medicamen'tum, Drug, Medicament—m. ex Palmulis, Diaphœnicon.

Medicas'ter, gen. Medicas'tri, Medicas'tra. An ignorant practitioner, male or female. A charlatan.

Medica'tion, Medica'tio. The change in the animal economy produced by the operation of remedies. Treatment by medicine. The act of impregnating with some medicine.

Medicinal, Medicina'lis, Medicamen'tal, Medicinable, Med'ical, Iate'rius, Remedial, Remediate, (F.) Médicinal, Médicamenteux. Having a remedial power; as medicinal plants, &c. Relating to medicine, as MEDICINAL DAYS, Medicina'les D'ies. Days on which the ancients considered that remedies might be administered; and especially evacuants. Such days were not esteemed critical.

MEDICINAL HOURS. Times at which—the stomach being freed from its digestive actions—medicine, it was thought, could be most advantageously administered, as in the morning fasting, an hour before dinner, some hours after it, and at bedtime.

MEDICINAL RASHES, see Rash, medicinal.

Medicine, Medicina.

MEDICINE is, also, used in the same sense as Medicament, and for a purging potion.

To Medicine was formerly used for "to restore or cure by medicine."

MEDICINE CHEST, Pharmacotheca.

MEDICINE, CLINICAL, see Clinical.

MEDICINE, CONSERVATIVE, Medici'na Conservativa. A term applied by Dr. Flint to that mode of treating disease which tends to the preservation, development, and support of the vital powers.

Meditul'ium, (medium, 'middle,') Diploë.

Me'dium, (pl. Media, [L.] 'the middle,') (F.)

Milieu, (pl. Milieux.) A term usually employed in medicine for the conditions which surround a living body, and are inservient to its continued existence. Thus, air, water, heat, light, &c., are so many media. M. Bernard divides the media into two orders—first, the cos'mic or external, (F.) Milieux cosmiques ou extérieurs, which surround the individual; and, secondly, the organ'ic or interior, (F.) Milieux organiques ou intérieurs, which are in immediate contact with the anatomical elements that compose the living being.

Medul'la, (from medius, 'in the middle,') Marrow—m. Cerebri, see Cerebrum—m. Dorsalis, M. spinalis—m. Dorsualis, M. spinalis—m. Nervorum, Neurine.

MEDUL'LA OBLONGA'TA, Ob'long medulla, Cerebral protuberance, Nervous system of the senses, (Gall), Cerebrum elongatum, Mesocephalon, (F.) Mésocéphale, Moëlle élongée, Mésencéphale (Ch.). The medullary substance that lies within the cranium upon the basilar process of the occipital bone. The anterior surface, which rests in the basilar groove, is impressed by the basilar artery. At the upper extremity of, and on its posterior surface are the Tubercula quadrigemina. At the same extremity, the medulla gives rise to two prolongations, the Peduncles of the brain, separated from each other by the mammillary eminences, and becoming lost in the optic thalami. The lower extremity is called the tail or rachidian bulb, Bulbus medullæ spinalis seu rachid'icus, (F.) Bulbe rachidien, and is continuous with the medulla spinalis. It is to this part only that some anatomists apply the name Medulla oblongata. From the posterior angles two other prolongations arise, called Peduncles of the cerebellum. The medulla oblongata has several eminences—the Pons varolii, Corpora pyramidalia, C. olivaria, &c.—and it has a longitudinal fissure before, and another behind, called the anterior and the posterior median fissure. The vesicular neurine in the centre of the medulla is the nervous centre of respiration and deglutition; hence it has been called centrum vitale.

MEDUL'LA OS'SIUM, Marrow—m. Renis, see Kidney—m. Spinae, M. spinalis.

MEDUL'LA SPINA'lis seu Spina seu dorsualis seu vertebra'lis seu dorsalis, Cor'da spina'lis, Fulgus argenteus, My'elus, M. rhachites seu notivus seu diauche'nus seu *psōites, My'elon, Notomy'elus, Rhachites, A'lon, Proces'sus rachidia'nus, Sa'cra fistula, Spinal prolongation, Vertebral marrow, Spinal cord or marrow, Nervous system of voluntary motion and tactile impression (Gall), (F.) Moëlle épinière, Moëlle vertébrale, called by Chaussier Prolongement rachidien of the encephalon, is the continuation of the medulla oblongata. It commences at the foramen magnum of the occipital bone, and descends in the verte-* bral canal as low as the second lumbar vertebra, without filling it; presenting, in its course, several evident enlargements. It is grooved on both its anterior and posterior surfaces by a furrow, which divides it, in its whole length, into two great nervous cords, intimately united with each other. The longitudinal fissure on its anterior surface is called the anterior median fissure; that on its posterior surface, the posterior median fissure. Between these, two lateral fissures have also been described on each side of the cord. The spinal marrow terminates by an oval tubercle, whence a number of nerves set out, called Cauda equina, (F.) Queue de cheval, from its resemblance to a horse's tail. The spinal marrow has no analogy, as regards its structure, with the marrow of long bones. It is formed of two substances; one white, the other gray, presenting an inverse arrangement to that which they have in the brain, the white being external, the gray in the centre, Substantia grisea centralis. It is enveloped by a yellowish, fibrous membrane, very resisting, which seems to be continued insensibly from the pia mater, and by two other membranes, which are merely prolongations of the arachnoid and dura mater. See Nerve.

MEDULLA VERTEBRALIS, M. spinalis.

MEDULLÆ, (pl. of medulla,) Sperm.

MEDULLARY, Medullaris, (F.) Médullaire, (from medulla.) Relating to, or analogous to marrow.

MEDULLARY ARTERIES. The arteries which enter bones and pass to the marrow.

MEDULLARY CANAL, see Canal, medullary—m. Cells, see Medullary membrane—m. Juice, Marrow—m. Matter, see Nerve-fibres—m. Matter of the brain, see Cerebrum.

MEDULLARY MEMBRANE, Periosteum Inter-nun, Endosteum, Perimylis. A vascular, areolar web of extreme tenuity, which envelops the marrow and lines the inner surface of the medullary canal of the long bones. This membrane has been considered as a species of internal periosteum of those bones. It has numerous vessels, which bury themselves in the thickness of the marrow; and others which nourish the innermost plates of the bone. The cells formed by it are termed Cellulæ seu Sacculi medullares.

MEDULLARY NEURINE, see Neurine—m. Sarcoma, Encephaloid, Hæmatodes fungus—m. Sheath, see Nerve-fibres.

MEDULLARY SUBSTANCE OF THE KIDNEY, see Kidney—m. Substance of Schwann, see Nerve-fibre.

MEDULLARY SYSTEM. Bichat gives this name to the marrow and its membranes. He distinguishes two species of medullary systems; the one occupies the cellular tissue at the extremities of the long bones and that of the flat and short bones; the other is found merely in the central canal of long bones.

MEDULLARY TUMOR OF THE LUNGS, Phthisis, cancerous.

Medullated Fibres, F. medullated.

Medullitis, gen. Medullitidis, (medulla, and itis.) Myelitis. M. Gerdy uses Médullite for inflammation of the marrow of bones, Osteomyelitis—Myelitis being usually appropriated to inflammation of the spinal marrow.

Medullization, (medulla, 'marrow.') Softening of the osseous tissue, from osteitis, the earthy constituents becoming absorbed and the Haversian canals, lacunæ, &c., enlarged.

Meeran, Daucus carota.

Megalanthropogenes, (megalo, and ανθρωπος, 'man,' and γενεσις, 'birth.') A term used by a French physician, named Robert, to designate the art of procreating great men; men of mind; men of genius. He considered that they may be perpetuated by always taking care to have talented men united to clever women!

Meg'alo, (from μεγας, gen. μεγαλος, 'great.') In composition, great.

Megalocar'dia, (megalo, and καρδια, 'heart.') The state of having a very large heart.

Megaloceph'alia, (megalo, and κεφαλη, 'head.') An unusually large size of the head.

Megaloceph'alic. Having an unusually large head.

Megalocœ'lia, (megalo, and κοιλια, 'abdomen,') Intestine, great; Megalosplanchnia.

Megalomel'ia, (megalo, and μελος, 'a limb,') A monstrosity characterized by very large limbs.

Megalopho'nia, (megalo, and φωνη, 'voice,') The condition of having a full, strong voice.

Megalophthal'mus, (megalo, and οφθαλμος, 'eye,') A congenital deformity, in which the eye is inordinately large.

Megal'opus, (megalo, and πους, 'a foot,') Macro-podus.

Megalosplanchn'us, (megalo, and σπλγχον, 'a viscus,') Megalocœ'lia. Hippocrates applies the epithet to those in whom the viscera, or a viscus, are tumid. Some have used the substantive Megalosplanchn'ia for the tumor itself.

Megalosple'nia, (megalo, and σπλην, 'the spleen,') Splenoneus.

Meg'asthenes, (μεγας, 'great' and σθεις, 'strength,') See Microsthenes.

Meg'ethos, (μεγας, from μεγας, 'great,') Stature.

Meg'rim, (from [F.] migraine, itself abridged from hemicrania,) Hemicrania. Megrims is used principally in England for lowness of spirits.

Meibomian Cyst, Chalaza.

Meibomius, Glands of, Follicles of Meibomius, Palpebral or Cil'ary Follicles, Glandulæ sebaceæ cilia'res seu Palpebræ sebaceæ seu Meibomia'ne, Folliculi cilia'res, Intestin'ula Meibomii, Lacunæ palpebra'rum, (F.) Follicules palpébraux ou cilia'aires, Glandes de Meibomius. Small sebaceous follicles, called after Meibomius, although known long before his description of them. They are situate in special grooves in the tarsal cartilages, and are ranged by the side of each other, in the form of yellowish, parallel, and vertical lines; sometimes straight, at others tortuous. They may be seen at the inner surface of the eyelids, through the conjunctiva, and secrete a sebaceous humor, called Humor of Meibomius, Lippitu'do, Gum, (F.) Chassie.

Mein'berg, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These waters at Meinberg, in Lippe Detmold, 38 miles south of Hanover, sulphureous and saline, have a reputation in the treatment of chronic rheumatism, paralysis, scrofula, &c.

Meio'sis, (μειωσις, from μειω, 'I lessen,') Meo'sis, Mio'sis, Imminutio, Minuthe'sis, Minitho'sis. The period of a disease, in which the symptoms begin to diminish—the decline. Remission. Also, idiotism.

Meiss'ner, Cor'puscles or Bod'ies of. Oblong bodies seen in some of the broad papillæ of the skin of the volar portion of the fingers and the palm, and into which a medullated nerve-fibre enters, either enveloping the corpuscle spirally, or becoming lost in its centre.

MEISS'NER, GAN'GLION OF, Plex'us of Meissner. A flat layer of nervous masses in the tunica submucosa of the intestines, a few ganglia projecting towards the mucous membrane, and penetrating between the adjoining follicles.

MEISS'NER, PLEX'US OF, Meissner, ganglion of.

Meiu'rus, (μειωρος, from μειω, 'I lessen,' and ουρα, 'a tail,') Decurtatus, Myurus.

Mek'ilwort, Atropa belladonna.

Mel, gen. Mel'lis, (μελι,) Meli, Nili'acum, Hon'ey, (F.) Miel. A liquid of a mucosaccharine nature, prepared by the A'pis mellif'ica, or common bee, which collects the materials from the nectaries of flowers. Honey is employed as aliment, condiment, and medicine. It is demulcent and aperient; and is prescribed as an adjunct to gargles in cynanche tonsillaris, &c. It is, at times, used as a detergent to foul ulcers. Virg'in

Honey, Mel virginum seu virginum, (F.) Miel vierge, is that which flows from the wax spontaneously. Syrups prepared with honey are called in the French Codex, Mellites. See Mellites.

Hill's Balsam of Honey is formed of Balsam of tolu, lbj., Honey, lbj., Rectified spirit, one gallon. It was long a celebrated empirical pectoral.

Honey Water is a mixture of essences colored with saffron. A little honey is added to communicate a clamminess; the effect of which is to make it retain the scent the longer. It is used as a scent.

(Boracis contrit., ʒj., Mellis despumati, ʒj.) Detergent. Applied to the mouth in aphthous affections.

MEL CAN'NÆ, Saccharum (non purificatum)—m. Coctum, Pellicide.

MEL DESPUMA'TUM, M. Depura'tum, Clar'ified Honey, Anaphrom'eli, (F.) Miel clarifié ou despumé ou dépuré, Mellite simple, Sirap de miel. (Melt the honey in a water-bath, and remove the scum.) Uses, the same as honey.

MEL RO'SÆ, M. rosa'tum, Mellitum de Ro'sis, Rhodom'eli, Rhodostac'ton, Honey of Ro'ses, (F.) Miel rosat, Mellite de Roses. (Rosæ gallicæ in pulv., ʒij., Mellis despum., fʒxxv., Alcohol. dilut., q. s. Moisten the powder with fʒss. of diluted alcohol; pack firmly in a percolator until fʒvj. have passed. Set this aside, and continue the percolation until half a pint more liquid is obtained. Evaporate to ten fluidrachms; add the reserved liquid, and mix the whole with the clarified honey. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Astringent and detergent. Used chiefly in gargles and washes in aphthæ, &c.

MEL SCIL'LE, Oxymel scillæ—m. Scillæ compositum, Syrupus scillæ compositus—m. Sodæ boratis, Mel boracis—m. Sodii boratis, Mel boracis—m. Vinosum, Enomel—m. Virginum, see Mel.

drum. Ord. Myrtaceæ. This plant affords the Cajuput Oil, (see Cajuput.) The leaves are esteemed diuretic, stomachic, and emmenagogue.

MELALEU'CA LEUCADEN'DRON, M. cajuputi—m. Minor, M. cajuputi.

Melampho'nus, (μελας, 'black,' and φωνη, 'voice,') Having a hoarse or indistinct voice.

Melamphyl'lum, (μελαμφυλλον, from μελας, 'black,' and φυλλον, 'leaf,') Acanthus mollis.

Mel'ampode, Helleborus niger.

Melampod'ium, (μελαμποδιον, after the shepherd Melampus, or from μελας, 'black,' and ποδος, gen. ποδος, 'foot,' in allusion to the seeds,) Helleborus niger.

Melanæ'ma, gen. Melanæ'matis, (melano, and αίμα, 'blood,') Suffocation.

Melanæ'mia, Venosity. A morbid condition in which the vessels contain an unusual quantity of pigment.

Mel'anagogue, Melanago'gus, (melano, and αγω, 'I expel,') A medicine which the ancients believed adapted for expelling black bile or melancholy.

Melanchlo'rus, (melano, and χλωρος, 'green,') The ancients gave this name to certain dark-colored topical remedies. See Melæna.

Mel'ancholê, Atrabilis.

Melanchol'ia, (μελαγχολία, from melano, and χολη, 'bile,') Melancholy.

MELANCHOL'IA ATTON'ITA. Melancholy attended with stupor.

Melanomy'ces, (melano, and μυκης, 'a fungus,') Melanospongus.

Melanopathi'a, Melanop'athy, (melano, and παθος, 'affection,') Nigritism, Nigrit'ies, Nigris'mus. A disease of the skin, which consists in augmentation of black pigment; generally in patches. The discoloration may vary from mere dusiness, Fusce'do cutis, to the deepest tint of blackness—Nigre'do seu Nigrit'ies seu Melas'ma cutis, Melanoder'ma, Dermatomelas'ma.

Melanop'athy, Melanopathia.

Melanophy'ma, gen. Melanophy'matis, (melano, and φύμα, 'a swelling,') Ergot.

Melanop'iper, (melano, and πιπερι, 'pepper,') Piper nigrum.

Melanopneu'mon, (melano, and πνευμων, 'lung,') see Melanosis.

Melanorrhag'ia, (melano, and ρᾱγη, 'a breaking forth,') Melæna.

Melanorrhiz'm, (melano, and ρίζα, 'a root,') Helleborus niger.

Melanosarco'ma, Sarcoma, melanotic.

Mélanose, Melanosis.

Melano'sis, Melan'sis, Melano'ma, Nigritu'do, (F.) Dégénérescence ou Dégénération noire, Mélanose, (μελας, gen. μελανος, 'black, and osis,) An organic affection, in which the tissue of the parts is converted, owing to a melan'ic depos'it, into a black, hard, homogeneous substance, near which ulcers or cavities may form; — owing to the softening, either of the substance itself, or of some other morbid tissue, — of tubercles especially. This morbid change affects the lungs particularly; when it is called Melano'sis seu Melano'ma seu Anthraco'sis Pulmo'nium, Melanopneu'mon, Nigritu'do melanot'ica, Melan'sis Pulmo'nium, Pneumonmelano'sis, Black degenera'tion, Melanot'ic or Black Can'cer, Black tu'bercle, (F.) Mélanose Pulmonaire. It is, also, met with in the liver and areolar texture. Its causes are very obscure. Melanosis of the lungs constitutes one of the species of phthisis of Bayle; but it is impossible to distinguish it from the other species during life. Spur'ious Melanosis arises from the introduction of carbonaceous matter, from the action of chemical agents on the blood, or from the stagnation of that fluid. Four varieties of true melanosis have been described: the punc'tiform, (F.) Mélanose infiltrée; tu'beriform, (F.) Mélanose en masse; strat'iform, (F.) Mélanose membraniforme; and the liq'uiform or fluid.

In the classification of Fuchs, Melanosen (G.) forms a family of diseases.

The deposition of melanic matter in the tissues is not necessarily connected with malignant disease. See Cancer, melanotic.

MELANO'SIS PULMO'NUM, see Melanosis — m. Spur'ious, Melanosis — m. Universalis, Venosity.

Melanosmeg'ma, gen. Melanosmegma'tis, (melano, and σμηγμα, 'the act of cleansing,') see Sapo.

Melanospon'gus, Melanomy'ces, (melano, and σπογγος, 'sponge,') The tuberiform variety of melanosis of the lungs.

Melano'sus, Melanous.

Melanothan'atus, (melano, and θανατος, 'death,') Death, black.

Mel'anothrix, gen. Melano'trichis, Atricapill'us, (F.) Mélanotrique, (melano, and τριξ, 'hair,') Having black hair.

Melanot'ic, Melanic — m. Cancer, Cancer, melanotic.

Mel'anous, Melano'sus. An epithet applied to people characterized by the hair and skin being very dark or blackish.

Melan'sis, Melanosis — m. Pulmonum, Melanosis pulmonum.

Melan'thium, (melano, and ανθος, 'flower,') Nigella, M. Virginicum — m. Muscætoxicum, Amianthium muscætoxicum.

MELAN'THIUM VIRGIN'ICUM, Melanthium, (melano, and ανθος, 'flower,') Leiman'thium Virgin'icum, Quaf'adil; indigenous; Order, Melanthaceæ, flowering in July, is said to be a sure but severe remedy for itch.

Melanu'ria, (μελας, 'black, and ουρον, 'urine,') Black urine, a condition usually dependent on blood coloring matter or the presence of indigo.

Me'las, gen. Me'lanos, (μελας, 'black,') Lepra nigricans — m. Icterus, Melæna — m. Zomos, Jusculum nigrum Lacedæmoniorum.

Melas'ma, gen. Melas'matis, (μελασμα,) Ecchymoma Melas'ma, Nig'ror. A black spot or ecchymosis, occurring on the lower extremities of old people especially. Also, a cutaneous affection, Melas'ma cutis, analogous to chloasma, differing from it only in the dark color of the morbid pigment. It is also called Pityri'asis nigra.

An affection of the kind is seen in Paris in old persons, females especially who sit over a charcoal fire, when it is termed, by Rayer, Ephélides igneales. It is common, also, in Ireland among the poor where turf fires are used, and is called by them the Trouts.

MELAS'MA ADDISO'NI, see Capsule, renal — m. Cutis, see Melasma — m. Suprarenale, see Capsule, renal — m. Tinctum, see Argyria.

Melas'ses, Molas'ses, Melus'tum, Theri'aca communis, Syrupus empyreumat'icus seu ni'ger seu fus'cus, Sac'chari Fæx, Tre'acle, (old Eng.) Triacle, (F.) Mélasse, (from mel ustum, 'burnt honey,') or from μελας, 'black,') The syrup which remains after the juice of the sugar-cane has been subjected to all the operations for extracting sugar from it. In the United States, the syrup, made in the process of forming common sugar, is called molasses; that remaining after the refinement of sugar being termed sugarhouse molasses or treacle.

MELAS'SES SPIR'IT, Rum.

Melotroph'ia, (μελος, 'a limb, and ατροφία, 'wasting,') Wasting of the limbs.

Mel'ca, (μελκα,) Food made of milk, coagulated by boiling vinegar.

Me'lë, (μηλη,) Specillum.

Me'lea, (μηλις, 'the apple-tree,') Pyrus malus.

Meleguet'ta, Amomum grana paradisi.

Mel'ios, (μηλιος,) Meli'nus, Meli'as. A species of alum found in the island of Melos.

Mélëna, Melæna.

Mélène, Melæna.

Mélèze, Pinus larix.

Me'li, (μελι,) Mel.

Me'lia, (μελια,) Fraxinus ornus.

ME'LIA AZED'ARACH, Azedari'cha amæ'na, Poi' southern Tree, Azedarach, Pride of India or of China, Bridetree, Hop'tree, Bead'tree. Nat. Ord. Meliaceæ; Sex. Syst. Decandria Monogynia. The bark of the root—Azedarach (Ph. U. S.)—is usually given in decoction, in the proportion of three or four ounces of the bark of the fresh root to a quart of water, boiled down to a pint. The dose is one or two tablespoonfuls, every two or three hours, till purging is induced. It is given in this manner as an anthelmintic, and also as a cathartic and emetic. It is sometimes formed into an ointment, and used in tinea capitis. The tree is a native of Syria, Persia, and the north of India, and is abundant in the Southern States.

The bark of Melia azadirach'ta, Azadirach'ta Indica, Neem Tree, Margo'sa Tree, is bitter and astringent, and is prescribed, in India, as a tonic and antiperiodic. The seeds, and oil obtained from the pericarp, have been regarded as anthelmintic; the bark of the root as an emmenagogue; the gum, which exudes from it, as an aphrodisiac; and the leaves have been applied in the form of poultice to ulcers, and cutaneous affections.

MELIA TER'RA, (from the island Melos,) Creta.

Melian'thus Ma'jor, (meli, and αἰθος, 'a flower,') Nat. Ord. Zygophyllæ. A South African plant, a decoction of whose leaves is a good external remedy in tinea capitis, crusta serpigiosa, necrosis, and foul ulcers. It is also useful as a gargle and lotion in sore throat and diseases of the gums. The bruised leaves applied to ulcers promote granulation.

Melice'ra, (meli, and κηρος, 'wax,') Porrigo favosa.

Melice'ria, Porrigo favosa.

Melice'ris, Melifa'vium, Emphy'ma encystis melice'ris. An encysted tumor filled with a substance resembling honey. Also, Porrigo favosa.

Melic'erous, Melicer'itous. Having the characters of meliceris, — as a melicerous tumor.

Melice'rum, Porrigo favosa.

Melichei'um, (meli, and χεω, 'I pour out,') A honeylike discharge from an ulcer.

Meliera'tum, (μελικρατον, from meli, and κραω, 'to mix,') Hydromeli.

Melifa'vium, (meli, and favus, 'a honeycomb,') Meliceris, Porrigo favosa.

Meligei'on, (μελι, 'honey,') A fetid humor of the consistence of honey, discharged from ulcers, accompanied with caries of a bone.

Melilot, Trifolium melilotus.

Melilo'tus, (μελιλωτον,) Trifolium melilotus.

Melime'lum, (meli, and μηλον, 'an apple,') A name given to two compounds:—one of honey and quince, the other of honey and apples.

Meline, Melæna.

Meli'ni Sul'phas, (from the island Melos,) Cadmii sulphas.

Meli'num, (μηλινον,) The ancient name of an ointment, and of several plasters, described by Dioscorides and Galen; so called from their resembling the μηλον or quince in color.

MELI'NUM SULPHU'RICUM, Cadmii sulphas.

Meli'nus Meleios.

Meliolê, Mellitum.

Meliphyl'lum, (meli, and φυλλον, 'a leaf,') Melissa.

Melis'sa, (μελισσα, 'a bee,' because bees gather honey from it,) M. officinalis seu Roma'na seu hirsu'ta seu citri'na seu citra'ta seu horten'sis, Citra'go, Citra'ria, Melitei'a, Melissob'otos, Melite'na, Melissobot'anum, Melissophyl'lum, Meliphyl'lum, Men'tha citra'ta, Melit'tis, Cedronel'la, Api-as'trum, Balm, (F.) Mélisse, La Citronelle, Céline. Nat. Ord. Labiatae. The leaves of balm, Melis'sa (Ph. U. S.), have a pleasant odor; and an austere and aromatic taste. Balm was formerly much used in nervous diseases, but is now only employed when made into tea, as a diluent, in febrile affections. It is the basis of a celebrated preparation,—the Eau des Carmes, A'qua Carmelita'na, Car'melite water.

MELIS'SA CALAMIN'THA, Calamin'tha, C. vulga'ris seu officina'rum seu grandiflo'ra, Thymus calamin'tha, Cal'amint, Nes'pite, (F.) Calament. This plant smells like wild mint, though more agreeably. It is used, popularly, as a tea in dyspepsia, flatulent colic, hysteria, uterine obstructions, &c.

MELIS'SA CANARIEN'SIS, Cracocephalum Canariense — m. Citrata, Melissa — m. Citrina, Melissa — m. Clinopodium, Clinopodium vulgare.

MELIS'SA GRANDIFLO'RA, Thymus grandiflorus, Calamin'tha mag'no flo're, C. monta'na, Moun'tain Cal'amint. This plant resembles the last in virtues.

MELIS'SA HIRSU'TA, Melissa — m. Hortensis, Melissa — m. Humilis, Melittis melissophyllum.

MELIS'SA NEP'ETA, Thymus nep'eta seu multiflo'rus, Calamin'tha An'glica seu Pule'gii odo're seu nep'eta seu parviflo'ra seu trichot'oma, Nep'eta agres'tis, Field Cal'amint, Spot'ted Cal'amint. Formerly used as an aromatic.

MELIS'SA OFFICINA'LIS, Melissa — m. Pulegioïdes, Hedeoma — m. Romana, Melissa — m. Tragi, Melittis melissophyllum — m. Turcica, Dracocephalum Canariense.

Mélisse des Bois, Melittis melissophyllum — m. de Moldavie, Dracocephalum Canariense.

Melissobot'anum, (melissa, and βοτανη, 'a plant,') Melissa.

Melissob'otos, (μελισσοβοτος, from μελισσα, 'a bee,' and βοσκω, 'I feed,') Melissa.

Melissophyl'lum, (melissa, and φυλλον, 'a leaf,') Melissa, Melittis melissophyllum.

Mélistot, Melittis melissophyllum.

Melitæ'mia, Melithæ'mia, Mélithémie, (meli, and αἷμα, 'blood,') A condition of the circulating fluid, in which it contains an unusual quantity of saccharine matter.

Melitæ'na, (μελιταινα,) Melissa.

Melit'agra, (meli, and αγρα, 'a seizure,') Impetigo.

Melita'gria, (meli, and αγριος, 'wild,') Impetigo.

Melitei'a, Melissa.

Melithæ'mia, Melitæmia.

Melithyperu'ria, (meli, υπερ, 'in excess,' and ουρον, 'urine,') Diabetes.

Meli'tis, gen. Meli'tidis, (μηλον, 'the cheek,' and itis,) Inflamma'tio ge'næ. Inflammation of the cheek.

Meliti'tes, (μελι, 'honey,') Hydromeli.

Melitopty'alism, Mel'itoptyalis'mus, Ptyalis'mus melli'tus, (from meli, and ptyalism,) A copious secretion of sweet-tasted saliva.

Melit'ta, (μελιττα,) Bee.

Melit'tis, Melissa.

MELIT'TIS MELISSOPHYLL'LUM, La'mium monta'num, Melis'sa hu'milis seu sylves'tris seu tra'gi, La'mium Plin'ii, Melissophyl'lum, Bas'tard Balm, (F.) Mélisse des Bois, Mélistot. Ord. Labiatae. This plant was formerly employed like the balm in uterine obstructions.

MELIT'TIS SYLVES'TRIS, M. melissophyllum.

Melitu'ria, (meli, and ουρον, 'urine,') Urine, diabetic. See, also, Diabetes.

Meli'tus, Melli'tus, (F.) Miellê, (from meli,) Appertaining to honey. Of the nature of, or sweetened with honey.

Melizo'mum, (meli, and ζωμος, 'broth,') Mead, Melli'na, Metheg'lin, (Prov.) Mullin. A drink prepared with honey.

Melksham, Springs of. These waters, about 10 miles from Bath, in England, contain salts of lime and magnesia, with smaller portions of soda and iron.

Mella'go, gen. Mellag'inis, (from meli,) Any medicine having the consistence of honey. A fluid extract.

Melléolé (F.), Mellitum.

Mellicra'tum, (meli, and κραιω, 'I mix,') Hydromeli.

Mellifa'vium, (meli, and favus, 'a honeycomb,') Porrigo favosa.

Melli'na, (from meli,) Melizomum.

Mellite, Mellitum—m. de Borax, Mel boracis—m. de Bulbes de colchicum, see M. de scille—m. de Mercuriale, see Mellitum de mercuriali compositum—m. de Roses, Mel rosæ.

Mellite de Scille, Miel Scillitique. A preparation of the French Codex (1866), made by macerating squills in boiling water, straining, adding honey, boiling and filtering. Mellite de bulbes de Colchicum is similarly prepared.

Mellite Simple, Mel despumatum.

Melli'tum, (from mel,) (F.) Miel médicinal, Mellite, Hydromellé, Saccharolé liquide, Méliolé, Melléolé. A prepared honey:—a medicated honey. Syrup prepared with honey.

MELLI'TUM DE ACETA'TE CU'PRI, Linimentum æruginis.

MELLI'TUM DE MERCURIA'LI COMPOS'ITUM, (F.) Miel de mercuriale composé, Syrop de longue vie. (Succ. purif. mercurialis, ℥ij., Boraginis, Anchusæ officinalis, āā lbss., Iris pseudacori radice recent., ℥ij., Rad. sic. gentianæ, ℥j., Mellis, ℔ij., Vini albi, ℥xij. Macerate the bruised roots in the wine for 24 hours; strain; mix the juices and honey; boil slightly, and filter; then add the two liquors, and boil to the consistence of syrup. Ph. P.) Cathartic, stomachic, &c. The French Codex (1866) has also a simple Mellite de Mercuriale, Miel de Mercuriale, of which the juice of mercurial and white honey are the only ingredients.

MELLI'TUM DE RO'SIS, Mel rosæ.

MELLI'TUM SIM'PLEX, Syrupus de Mel'le, Syrup of Honey. (Mellis, ℔vj., Aquæ, ℔jss., Carbonat. calcis præparat., ℥ij. Mix the honey, water, and carbonate of lime in a silver vessel: boil the mixture, stirring, at the same time, for two or three minutes; then add prepared animal charcoal, ℥vj., two whites of eggs, mixed in a pint of water. Mix all, and boil to the consistence of syrup: remove from the fire; let the syrup rest for fifteen minutes, and pass through a cloth. Ph. P.) Demulcent.

Melli'tus, Melitus.

Melœ'mia, (μελας, 'black,' and αἷμα, 'blood,') A state of blood, characterized by its incoagulability, black color, and septic properties.

Melochi'tis, Malachi'tes, La'pis Arme'nus, Armeni'tes, Armenian Stone. A variety of blue carbonate of copper. It is found in Germany, the Tyrol, and especially in Armenia. It was formerly employed as a cardiac, and as proper for purging away melancholy.

Melodid'yms, (μελος, 'a limb,' and δίδυμος, 'double,') A double member or limb.

Mel'œ Maia'lis, see Cantharis.

MEL'Œ NI'GER, M. Pennsylvanicus; Class, Insecta; Ord. Coleoptera. A blistering fly, native of the United States. It feeds upon Prunella vulgaris or Self-heal, and Ambrosia trifida or Stickweed. These flies resemble the Spanish flies in properties.

MEL'Œ PENNSYLVANICUS, M. niger.

MEL'Œ PROSCARABÆ'US, Cantarell'us, was anciently used as a diuretic and antihydrophobic. See Cantharis.

MEL'Œ VESICATO'RIS, Cantharis.

Melom'elos, (melos, and μελιος, 'unprofitable,') A monster with supernumerary limbs.

Me'lon, (μηλον, 'an apple,') Me'lum. A disorder of the eye, in which it protrudes out of the socket. See Exophthalmia.

MEL'ON, Cucumis melo—m. d'Eau, Cucurbita citrullus—m. Plant, Cucumis melo—m. Water, Cucurbita citrullus.

Melon'gena, (from μηλον, 'an apple,') Solanum melongena.

Meloplacun'tium, Meloplacus.

Melop'lacus, Meloplacun'tium, (μηλοπλακος, from μηλον, 'a quince,' and πλακος, 'a cake,') A compound obtained by boiling wine, honey, quince, pepper, &c., together.

Meloplas'tic, Meloplas'ticus, Genoplas'tic, (μηλον, 'the cheek,' and πλασσω, 'I form,') (F.) Méloplastie. An epithet for the operation for forming a new cheek when any part of it has been lost.

Me'los, (μελος,) Mem'brum. A member; a limb. An organized part, composed of other parts.

Melo'sis, (μηλη, 'a probe,') Catheteris'mus, Cemenbate'sis. The act of probing a wound, ulcer, &c. Catheterism.

Melo'thrum, (μηλωθρον,) Bryonia alba.

Melo'tis, gen. Melo'tidis, (μηλωτις, from μηλη, 'a probe,' and ως, gen. ωτος, 'the ear,') Melo'tris, Specil'lum mi'nus. A small probe; a probe for the ear. See Apyromele.

Melo'tris, gen. Melo'tridis, (μηλωτρις,) Melotis.

Melt, (Sax. milt.) Spleen. Also, the sperm of fish, — Milt.

Melt'ing, Fusion.

Me'lum, (μηλον,) Me'lon, Ma'lum. An apple. Fruit in general. Also, a round, firm female breast. The cheek, mala. The apple-eye or melon-eye is an apple-formed projection of the eye from the orbit. See Melon.

ME'LUM ARMENI'ACUM, Prunus armeniaca—m. Cydonium, see Pyrus cydonia.

Melus'tum, ('burnt honey,') Melasses.

Mem'ber, Membrum.

Mem'bra Pudenda, Genital organs—m. Vilia, Pudibilia.

Membra'na, (quia membra tegit, 'because it covers limbs,') Membrane—m. Abdominis, Peritonæum—m. Adiposa, Cellular membrane—m. Adventitia, Decidua reflexa—m. Agnina, Amnios—m. Albuginea profunda, see Albugineous—m. Albuginea Superficialis, see Albugineous—m. Amphiblestroides, Retina—m. Arachnoidea, Hyaloid membrane.

MEMBRA'NA BASILA'RIS, Lamina Spira'lis Membrana'cea. A delicate membrane in the cochlea, stretched across from the free margin of the osseous lamina to the outer part of the spiral canal. The two zones into which the basilar membrane is divisible are called haben'ula tecta seu arcua'ta, and the zo'na pectina'ta.

MEMBRA'NA BRUCH'I, Choroidea tunica—m. Capsularis testis, Albuginea—m. Capsulo-pupillaris, see Crystalline—m. Carnosa, Dartos—m. Cellulosa, Cellular membrane—m. Cellulosa, Decidua (membrana)—m. Cerebri mollis, Pia mater—m. Cerebri propria, Pia mater—m. Cerebri tenuis, Pia mater—m. Choriocapillaris, see Choroidea tunica—m. Circumossalis, Periosteum—m. Communis, Decidua—m. Cor circumplexa, Pericardium—m. Cordis, Pericardium—m. Coronæ ciliaris, Ciliary zone—m. Costalis, Pleura—m. Costas succingens, Pleura—m. Crassa, Decidua reflexa—m. Cribrosa, Decidua—m. Cuticularis, Dura mater—m. Decidua, Decidua—m. Decidua serotina, see Decidua—m. Demuriana, see Aqueous humor, and Cornea—m. Dentata, Denticulatum ligamentum—m. Dermatodes, Dura mater—m. Descemetii, see Aqueous humor, and Cornea—m. Diaphragm, Mediastinum—m. Duddeliana, see Aqueous humor—m. Dura cerebrum ambiens, Dura mater.

MEMBRA'NA E'BORIS, (ebur, 'ivory,') A membrane connected with the development of the teeth, which is made up of a number of cells, odon'toblasts, arranged perpendicularly on the surface, immediately over the plexus of vessels in the central portion of the dental papilla.

MEMBRA'NA ELAS'TICA, Membrane, elastic—m. Epierania, Galea aponeurotica capitis—m. Externa dentium, Tapetum alveoli—m. Farciminallis, Allantois.

MEMBRA'NA FENESTRA'TA. A delicate granular membrane perforated with holes, placed between the internal and external granule layers of the retina. See Retina and Artery.

MEMBRA'NA FENES'TRÆ ROTUN'DÆ, see Fenestra — m. Filamentosa, Decidua reflexa — m. Flocculenta, Decidua — m. Fœtum involvens, Amnion — m. Fusca, see Sclerotic.

MEMBRA'NA GRANULO'SA, Granular mem'brane or lay'er, (F.) Membrane granuleuse, Couche celluleuse (Coste). A layer of yellow, granular matter, which lines the inner layer of the Graafian follicle, and is regarded by Kölliker as epithelium.

MEMBRA'NA HUMO'RIS A'QUEI, see Aqueous humor — m. Hyaloidea, see Hyaloid — m. Interspinalis, Interspinal ligament — m. Intestinalis, Allantois — m. Jacobi, Tunica Jacobi — m. Jacobi Arnold, see Iris.

MEMBRA'NA LAMINO'SA, Lam'inar Mem'brane. The membrane investing the foetal surface of the placenta when the amnion is removed, considered to be the remains of the allantois, formed out of a thickened reticulated magma upon the foetal surface.

MEMBRA'NA LIM'ITANS, see Membrane, basement; Iris, Membrane, limitary or limiting — m. Linguae, see Tongue — m. Macilentior, Epiploon, gastrohepatic — m. Mucosa, see Membrane and Decidua.

MEMBRA'NA MUSCULA'RIS MUCO'SÆ. Smooth muscular fibres forming a proper layer in the mucous membrane of the intestines.

MEMBRA'NA NERVO'RUM, Neurilemma — m. Nictitans, Valvula semilunaris — m. Olfactoria, Pituitary membrane — m. Ossis, Periosteum — m. Ovi materna, Decidua — m. Ovuli corticalis, Oöcalymma — m. Pellucida, Amnion — m. Pigmenti, see Choroidea tunica, and Iris — m. Pinguetudina, see Cellular membrane — m. Pinguis intestinorum, Mesentery — m. Pituitaria, Pituitary membrane, see Membrane — m. Pituitosa, see Membrane — m. Pleuritica, Pleura — m. Præexistens, Decidua.

MEMBRA'NA PRÆFORMATI'VA, Preform'ative mem'brane. A structureless membrane situate between the enamel pulp and the enamel, believed by some to be the most external layer of the matrix, projecting beyond the odontoblasts. As the presence of such a membrane can only be demonstrated after the use of chemical reagents, it is considered by others to be only an artificial result from their employment.

MEMBRA'NA PRO'PRIA, Basement membrane, and Folliculi Graafiani, see Cortex ovi — m. Pupillaris, Pupillary membrane — m. Pupillaris perseverans, see Pupillary membrane.

MEMBRA'NA PUTAM'INIS, (putamen, 'a shell or husk,') Pellio'ula O'vi. The membrane adherent to the inner surface of the eggshell. — Putamen seu Testa O'vi.

MEMBRA'NA RETIFORM'IS CHO'RÆ, Decidua reflexa — m. Ruyschiana, Choroid (inner layer).

MEMBRA'NA SACCIFORM'IS. A separate synovial membrane for the inferior radio-cubital articulation, which covers the upper surface of the triangular ligament, and the sort of incomplete ring which circumscribes the head of the ulna.

MEMBRA'NA SEMIPELLUCIDA, Caligo — m. Serosa, Membrane (serous) — m. Sinuosa, Decidua — m. Subcostalis, Pleura — m. Succingens, Diaphragm, Pleura.

MEMBRA'NA SUPERCHORO'DEA seu SUPRACHORO'DEA. Numerous bands of connection exist between the sclerotic and choroid coats of the eye, which are sometimes developed into a network, to which this name is given.

MEMBRA'NA TECTO'RIA, (tectum, 'a roof,') Mem'brane of Cor'ti. An elastic membrane in the cochlea, attached at one edge to the membrane of Reissner, and on the other to the peripheral wall of the cochlea, a little above the basilar membrane. See Corti.

MEMBRA'NA TES'TÆ, Shell mem'brane. The membrane that lines the shell of the bird's egg: — a simple membrane.

MEMBRA'NA THORACEM INTERSEP'IENTES, Mediastinum — m. Tympani, see Tympanum — m. Tympani secundaria, see Fenestra — m. Urinaria, Allantois — m. Uteri interna evoluta, Decidua — m. Uvea, Uvea — m. Vasculosa cerebri, Pia mater — m. Vasorum communis, Endangium — m. Velamentosa, see Rods of Corti — m. Verricularis, Retina.

MEMBRA'NA VERSICOLOR. A peculiar membrane — according to Mr. Fielding, of Hull — situate immediately behind the retina, and in connection with it. It is separable into distinct layers from the choroid, and is supplied with bloodvessels.

MEMBRA'NA VESTIBULA'RIS, see Lamina denticulata — m. Vitrea, Hyaloid — m. Wachendorffiana, Pupillary membrane — m. Zinnii, see Iris.

Membrana'ceous, Membranous.

Mem'brane, Membrana, Hy'men, Me'ninx, Epen'dyma, Pannic'ulus, Pan'nicle. A name given to different thin organs, representing a species of supple, more or less elastic, webs; varying in their structure and vital properties, and intended, in general, to absorb or secrete certain fluids; and to separate, envelop, and form other organs. Bichat has divided the membranes into simple and compound.

Simple membranes comprise three orders. 1. Mucous mem'brane, Membrana mucosa seu pituitosa seu pituitaria, Phleg'mymen, Blen'nymen, Phlegmat'hymen, Mycoder'ma, (F.) Muqueuse, Membrane muqueuse, Membrane folliculeuse (Ch.), is so called, on account of the mucous fluid by which it is constantly lubricated. Mucous membranes line the canals, cavities, and hollow organs, which communicate externally by different apertures on the skin. Bichat refers them to two great divisions — the gastro-pulmonary, and the genito-urinary. The mucous membranes have a striking analogy with the cutaneous tissue, in organization, functions, and diseases. They are composed of corium, papillæ, and epidermis; and are furnished with a multitude of follicles, which secrete a viscid humor, — mucus. They receive a quantity of arterial vessels, veins, lymphatics, and nerves. 2. The Serous mem'branes, Membranae serosæ, Orrhohym'enes, Orrhym'enes, M. villosæ simplices (Ch.), are transparent, thin, and composed of one lamina. One surface adheres to other textures; the other is smooth, polished, and moistened by a serous fluid. They are arranged — in the form of sacs without apertures — as great, intermediate reservoirs for the exhalant and absorbent systems, in which the serous fluid, in passing from one system, tarries some time before it enters the other. The serous membranes resemble the areolar membrane in structure and diseases. They facilitate the motion on each other of the organs which they envelop. They may be divided into (a) Serous membranes, properly so called; as the arachnoid, pleura, peritoneum, and tunica vaginalis. (b) Synovial membranes or capsules; which belong to joints, tendons, aponeuroses, &c. These membranes — mucous and serous — are constituted of similar layers — epithelium, basement membrane, condensed areolar tissue; and a looser form of areolar tissue, termed submucous in one case, — subserous in the other. 3. Fibrous mem'branes, Membranes albugineusæ (Ch.). These are almost all continuous, and terminate at the periosteum — their common centre. They have been divided into two sections. 1. Envel'oping aponeuro'ses, Aponeuro'ses of inser'tion, Fibrous cap'sules of the joints, and Fibrous sheaths of ten'dons. 2. The Perios'teum, Du'ra ma'ter, Sclero'tica, Tu'nica albugi'nea tes'tis, Fi'brous mem'brane of the spleen, &c. The fibrous membranes are not free or moistened by any particular fluid. They adhere by both surfaces to the neighboring parts; are firm, resisting, but slightly elastic, and of a white color; sometimes pearly and glistening. Their vessels are numerous, in some, as in the dura mater and periosteum; in others, scarcely perceptible, as in the aponeuroses. The presence of nerves has never been proved, although several circumstances, regarding their sensibility, render their existence probable. The fibrous membranes serve, in general, to augment the solidity of the organs which they envelop; to retain the muscles in their respective positions; to favor the motion of the limbs, and that of the muscles and skin; to form canals and rings for the passage of different organs, &c.

Bichat admits three species of Com'pound Mem'branes. 1. The Sero'fibrous, formed of a serous and fibrous lamina, intimately adherent to each other;—as the pericardium, dura mater, and tunica albuginea. 2. The Seromu'cous, formed of a serous and mucous lamina;—as the gall-bladder at its lower part. 3. The Fibromu'cous, constituted of the union of a fibrous and mucous membrane;—as the mucous membrane of the nasal fossae, gums, &c. Chaussier admits six kinds of membranes. 1. The lam'inated. See Cellular tissue. 2. The se'rous or sim'ple vil'lous. 3. The follic'ular or com'plicated vil'lous. 4. The mus'cular or flesh'y. 5. The albugi'neous. 6. The albu'minous.

MEM'BRANE, ELAS'TIC, Membra'na elas'tica. Membrane formed of the elastic areolar tissue, and which occurs in the coats of vessels, especially of the arteries, in the trachea and bronchi, &c.

MEM'BRANE OF THE ENAM'EL, Cuticula.

MEM'BRANE, FALSE, Acciden'tal or Adventit'ious membrane, Pseudomembrane, Pseud'y-men, Pseudoméninx, (F.) Fausse membrane, M. accidentelle. Membranous productions which form on all the free natural surfaces, and on every free accidental surface, are so called. They are in general produced by the exudation of a fibrinous matter susceptible of organization, which takes place in consequence of inflammation of the various tissues. These accidental membranes occur on the skin after the application of a blister; on mucous surfaces, as in croup; on the parietes of inflamed veins and arteries, &c. The cicatrices of wounds are formed of them.

By some it has been proposed to give the name pseudomembrane to fibrinous exudations, as in diphtheritis, which are devoid of organization, whilst neomembrane may be applied to such fresh productions, as from serous membranes, as have become supplied with vessels and nerves.

MEMBRANES OF THE Fœ'TUS, Membra'næ fœ'tum involven'tes, Velamen'ta infan'tis, Integumen'ta fœ'tus, The membranes. The membranes which immediately envelop the fœtus in the cavity of the uterus, and the rupture of which gives rise to the discharge of the liquor amnii. These membranes are the decidua, chorion, and amnion.

MEMBRANES, THE, Membranes of the fœtus.

Membraneux, Membranous.

Membraniform or Membran'iform, Membran'iformis, (membrana and forma.) Resembling a membrane. A name given to thin and flat parts which resemble membranes.

MEMBRANIFORM MUS'LES. Very broad and thin muscles, as the platysma myoides, obliquus abdominis, &c.

Membrano'sus, (from membrana.) Fascia lata muscle, Membranous.

Membranous, Membrano'sus, Membrana'ceus, Hymeno'des, (F.) Membraneux. Having the nature of membrane. Formed of membrane.

Membran'ula, (dim. of membrana.) Hymenium, Membranule—m. Coronæ ciliaris, see Ciliary—m. Lunata vaginæ, Hymen—m. Nervorum, Neurilemma—m. Semilunaris conjunctivæ, Valvula semilunaris.

Membranule, Membran'ula. A small membrane.

Membre, Membrum—m. Viril, Penis.

Membro'sus, Membro'sior, Mentula'tus, Muto-nia'tus, Nasa'tus, Valdē mentula'tus, Fascino'sus, Pso'lon, (F.) Membru, (from membrum, 'the male organ.') One whose penis is very large.

Membru, Membrosus.

Mem'brum, Ar'tus, Me'los, Co'llon, a limb, a member, (F.) Membre. The limbs or extremities.

or members of animals are certain parts exterior to the body, which are more or less apparent, long, and movable. It is by means of their limbs that animals transport themselves from one place to another, and that they defend themselves or attack others. In man, they are four in number—two upper or thoracic, and two lower, pelvic or abdominal. Also, the male organ.

MEMBRUM GENITALI VIRORUM, Penis—m. Muliebre, Clitoris—m. Seminale, Penis—m. Virile, Penis.

Mémoire, Memory—m. Perte de, Amnesia.

Memo'ria, Mem'ory, Mne'mē, Recordatio, Recordatus, (F.) Mémoire. The cerebral faculty, by which past impressions are recalled to the mind.

Mem'ory, Loss of, Amnesia.

Memphi'tes La'pis. A sort of stone, found near ancient Memphis, esteemed narcotic.

Men'agogues, (menes, and αγω, 'I drive.') Emmenagogues.

Menda'cia Unguim, (mendax, 'false,' unguis, 'nail,') Flores unguim.

Mende'sion, Egyptiacum.

Me'nē, (μηνή,) Moon.

Menec'ratis Accip'iter, Accipiter.

Menelco'sis, Helcome'nia, (menes, and ἑλκωσις, 'ulcer.') Vicarious menstruation from an ulcer.

Me'nes, (μηνς,) Menses.

Ménespau'sie, (menes, and παύω, 'to cause to cease.') See Menses.

Men'frige, see Pistacia lentiscus.

Menidro'sis, (menes, and ἰδρωσις, 'sweating.') A sweating of menstrual blood.

Ménière's Disease. An affection described by Dr. Paul Ménière in 1861, in which the patient, after recovering consciousness from an apoplectic attack, or severe vertigo, finds himself totally deaf in one ear, with tinnitus aurium, rotatory movements towards the affected side, &c.

Meningarthroc'acé, Inflammati'o membrana'rum articulatio'nis, Arthromeningi'tis, (meningo, αρθρον, 'a joint,' and κακος, 'disease.') Inflammation of the membranes of a joint. When accompanied with fibrinous exudation from the synovial membrane, it is called Arthromeningi'tis croupo'sa; with suppuration, A. purulen'ta.

Méninge, (from meninx,) Dura mater.

Méningé, Meningeal.

Meninge'al or Menin'geal, Meninge'us, (F.)

Méningé. Relating to the meninges, or merely to the dura mater.

MENINGE'AL AP'OPLEXY, see Apoplexy.

MENINGE'AL AR'TERY, MID'DLE, Arte'ria meninge'a me'dia seu Sphænospi'no'sa seu Du'ræ ma'tris me'dia ma'xima seu Sphænospi'nal'is, Spi'nal ar'tery, (F.) Artère méningée moyenne ou Sphéno-épineuse, ou Épineuse, is the largest of the branches given off by the internal maxillary artery. It enters the cranium by the foramen spinale, and distributes its branches chiefly to the dura mater.

MENINGE'AL VES'SELS, Va'sa meninge'a. The vessels of the membranes of the brain.

Menin'ges, (μηνιγγες,) pl. of Me'ninx, Eilam'ides, Ma'tres seu Involu'cre cer'e'cri, Omen'ta seu Velamen'ta cerebra'lia. The membranes which envelop the brain and spinal cord—Du'ra ma'ter, Arach'noid, and Pi'a ma'ter.

Meningette, Pia mater.

Menin'gia Tuberculo'sa, see Hydrocephalus.

Meningi'tis, gen. Meningi'tidis. Meningitis, involving especially the arachnoid membrane.

Meningi'na, (F.) Méningine. A name given by Chaussier to the pia mater, united to the cerebral layer of the arachnoid.

MENINGI'NA, IN'NER LAM'INA OF THE, Pia mater.

Méningine, Meningina.

Meningin'itis, gen. Meningini'tidis, (meningina, and itis.) Inflammation of the meningina.

Menin'gion, (μηνιγγιον, dim. of μηνιγξ, 'a membrane.') Arachnoid membrane.

Menin'gis Cus'tos, Meningophylax.

Méningite, Meningitis—m. Cérébro-spinalé, Meningitis, cerebro-spinal—m. Granuleuse, Hydrocephalus internus—m. Foudroyante, see Meningitis—m. Rachidienne, Meningitis, spinal—m. Tuberculeuse, Hydrocephalus internus.

Meningi'tis, gen. Meningi'tidis, Meningi'tis, Encephali'tis peripher'ica seu membrano'sa, (F.) Inflammation de la membrane séreuse céphalo-rachidienne, Méningite, (meninges, and itis.) Inflammation of a membrane, and especially of the meninges or membranes of the brain. When excessively malignant and rapidly fatal, it is called Méningite foudroyante. See Phrenitis.

MENINGI'TIS ARTHRIT'ICA, Cephalagra.

MENINGI'TIS, CER'EBROSPI'NAL, Myeli'tis petechia'lis, Cer'e'bral or cer'e'brospinal or syn'copal ty'phus, Epidem'ic or ty'phoid or malign'ant meningitis, Pet'e'chial Fever, Cer'e'brospinal fever, Cer'e'brospinal arachni'tis, Sink'ing ty'phus, Malign'ant or ty'phoid meningi'tis, Fe'bris ni'gra seu purpu'rea pestifera, (F.) Méningite cérébro-spinale, Fièvre cérébro-spinale, Typhus cérébro-spinale, Fièvre purpurée maligne. An alarmingly fatal form of epidemic fever, which prevailed in different countries of Europe, and also in certain portions of the United States, during the middle of the 19th century more especially. It is attended with painful contraction of the muscles of the neck, and retraction of the head, headache, vertigo, delirium, coma, pain in the back and limbs, tetanoid phenomena, hyperæsthesia of the skin, and, in certain epidemics, by a purpuric eruption, Spotted Fever. It is considered by Boudin to constitute the cerebrospinal form of the nosological group of typhus. See Fever, purpuric, malignant, and Typhus.

MENINGI'TIS, EPIDEM'IC, Meningitis, cerebrospinal—m. Gouty, Gout, cerebral—m. Granular, Hydrocephalus internus.

MENINGI'TIS, HÆMORRHAG'IC. Meningitis accompanied with sanguineous effusion.

MENINGI'TIS HYDROCEPHAL'ICA, Hydrocephalus internus—m. Infantum, Hydrocephalus internus—m. Membranosa, M. spinal.

MENINGI'TIS MESENCEPHAL'ICA. Inflammation of the meninges of the medulla oblongata and pons Varolii more especially.

MENINGI'TIS PERIPHER'ICA, M. spinal—m. Phantasmataphora, Delirium tremens—m. Potatorum, Delirium tremens—m. Rachidian, M. spinal—m. Rheumatic, Rheumatism, meningitic—m. Serophulous, Hydrocephalus internus.

MENINGI'TIS, SPI'NAL, M. rachid'ian, M. spinal'is seu peripher'ica seu membrano'sa, Perimyeli'tis, Myelomeningi'tis, (F.) Méningite rachidienne. Inflammation of the meninges of the spinal marrow.

MENINGI'TIS, TUBER'CLULAR, see Hydrocephalus internus—m. Tuberculosa, H. internus.

Menin'gium, (μηνιγγιον, dim. of μηνιγξ, 'a membrane.') A fine, delicate membrane. The tunica arachnoidea of the brain.

Menin'go, (μηνιγξ, gen. μηνιγγος, 'membrane,') in composition, membrane.

Meningoce'lē, (meningo, and κλη, 'a rupture or tumor.') See Encephalocoele.

Meningocephali'tis, gen. Meningocephali'tidis, Meningoencephali'tis, Cephalomeningi'tis, Encephalomeningi'tis, (meningo, κεφαλή, 'head,' and itis.) Inflammation of the membranes and brain.

Meningocerebri'tis, Encephalitis.

Meningoencephali'tis, (F.) Méningo-encephalite. Encephalitis accompanied with meningitis.

Meningogas'tric Fev'er, Fever, gastric.

Meningogastri'tis, Fever, gastric.

Meningomala'cia, (meningo, and μαλακία, 'softening,') Softening of membranes in general.

Meningomyeli'tis, (F.) Méningomyélite. Inflammation of the spinal cord and its membranes.

Meningoph'ylax, gen. Meningophyla'cis, Cus'tos menin'gis, Depressorium, (F.) Dépressoire,

(from meningo, and φωλαξ, 'a preserver.') An instrument for depressing the dura mater, and guarding it from injury, while the bone is cut or rasped.

Meningorrhœa, (meningo, and ῥω, 'I flow.') Effusion of blood upon or between the membranes of the brain.

Meningo'sis. The union of bones by means of membrane; e. g., the articulation of the bones of the cranium in the fetus. Meningosis is a variety of Syndesmosis.

Meningosym'physis, Meningosyzygia, (meningo, and συνφύσις, 'growing together.') Adhesion of or by membrane. Adhesion of the membranes of the brain to each other, or to the brain.

Meningosyzygia, (meningo, and σύνυγια, 'a conjunction,') Meningosymphysis.

Meninguria, (meningo, and ουρον, 'urine.') The passage of urine containing membranous shreds.

Me'ninx, gen. Menin'gis, (μηνιγξ, gen. μηνιγγος.) Membrane (especially one that invests the brain) — m. Choroides, Pia mater — m. Crassa, Dura mater — m. Dura, Dura mater — m. Exterior, Dura mater — m. Interior, Pia mater — m. Media, Arachnoid membrane — m. Pacheia, Dura mater — m. Selera, Dura mater — m. Serosa, Arachnoid membrane — m. Vasculosa, Pia mater.

Menis'chesis, (menes, and ισχειν, 'to restrain,') see Amenorrhœa.

Menis'ci, (μηνισκος, dim. of μηνη, 'moon,') Cartilages, interarticular.

Menisperm'ia. An alkaloid found in the shell of Cocculus Indicus. Ord. Menispermaceæ.

Menisperm'um Angula'tum, (μηνη, 'the moon,' and σπερμα, 'seed,' in allusion to the crescentic shape of the seed,) M. Canadense.

MENISPERM'UM CANADENSE, M. angula'tum, Moon'seed, Yell'ow Parilla. Ord. Menispermaceæ. A climbing plant, growing in various parts of the United States. Said to be used in Virginia as a substitute for sarsaparilla in scrofula, and to be called, in the West, Sarsaparilla. It is an excitant tonic.

MENISPERM'UM COCCULUS, M. glaucum, Anamir'ta cocculus seu panicula'ta, Cocculus suberosus. The systematic name of the plant, the dried fruit of which are well known by the name of Cocculus Indicus seu suberosus, Indian berries, Bac'ca piscato'ria, Indian cock'les, Fish berries, Coc'cus Indicus, Coc'culi officina'rum, Coc'ci orientales, Gra'na orientis, (F.) Coque du Levant, C. Levant. These berries are remarkable for their inebriating and destructive quality to fish. The deleterious principle appears to reside in the kernel and in the active principle called Picrotox'in. Cocculus Indicus has been used in decoction to kill vermin. It has, at times, been added to beer, by fraudulent tradesmen, to render it more inebriating.

MENISPERM'UM FENESTRA'TUM, Pereira medica — m. Glaucum, M. cocculus — m. Palmatum, Calumba.

MENISPERM'UM TUBERCULA'TUM, M. Verrucosum, Cocculus crispus. A Chinese plant, an extract from the root of which is tonic to the stomach and bowels, and possesses some astringency. Dose, 5 to 10 grains.

The same may be said of Menisperm'um Cordifolium — the Goluncha, of Bengal.

MENISPERM'UM VERRUCOSUM, M. tuberculatum.

Menocryph'ia, (menes, and κρυπτος, 'concealed,') Amenorrhœa.

Menolip'sis, (menes, and λειψις, 'want,') see Menses.

Menomene, (an Indian name,) Zizania aquatica.

Men'opaus, (menes, and παύειν, 'to cause to cease,') see Menses.

Menopau'sis, (same etymon,) see Menses.

Menopha'nia, (menes, and φαίνω, 'I appear,') see Menses.

Menopla'nia, (menes, and πλανη, 'a wandering,') Menstruation, vicarious.

Menorrhag'ia, (menes, and ῥήγνυμι, 'I flow fiercely,') Flow of the menses. Frequently, the word is used synonymously with uterine hemorrhage or metrorrhagia, or for immoderate flow of the menses — profuse or excessive menstruation, Parame'nia superflua seu profusa, Menorrhag'ia rubra, Catamenio'rum fluxus immod'icus, Men'strua immod'ica seu superflua, Menorrhœa. Scanty Menstruation, Men'strua Exigua, is a condition opposite to that just described.

MENORRHAG'IA, Menstruation, Metrorrhagia — m. Alba, Leucorrhœa — m. Difficilis, Dysmenorrhœa — m. Erronea, Menstruation, erroneous — m. Stillititia, Dysmenorrhœa.

Menorrhag'ic Fe'ver, see Fever, menorrhagic.

Menorrhœa, (menes, and ῥω, 'I flow,') The ordinary flow of the menses. Also, too long continuing, or too often returning, menstruation. Menorrhagia.

Menos'chesis, (menes, and σχω, 'I hold,') see Amenorrhœa.

Menosta'sia, (menes, and στασις, 'standing,') Amenorrhœa.

Menos'tasis. This word, according to some, signifies the retention of the menses and their accumulation in the uterus. According to others, it means the acute pain which, in some females, precedes each appearance of the menses: a pain which has been presumed to proceed from the stasis of blood in the capillary vessels of the uterus.

Menoxen'ia, Menoxeno'sis, (menes, and ξενος, 'foreign,') Irregular menstruation.

Menoxeno'sis, Menoxenia.

Mens, Anima, Intellect.

Men'sa, Trap'eza, 'a table.' The upper superficial part or corona of the jaw teeth.

Men'ses, pl. of Mensis, (from μην, 'a month,')

M. Multi'ebres, Mulieb'ria, Me'nes, Fluxus men'struis seu luna'ris, Proflu'vium muli'eb're seu geni'tal'is muli'eb're, Consuetu'do men'strua, Catame'nia, Men'strua, Emme'nia, Tribu'tum luna'rè seu men'strum, Purgatio'nes, P. men'strua, Gynæcei'a Aphedri'a, Cur'sus men'struis, Horæ'a, Luna'ria, Courses, Men'strual flux, Month'ly courses or pe'riods, Flow'ers, Turns, Terms, the Reds, Troubles, (F.) Mois, Règles, Lunes, Flueurs, Affaires, Époques, Ordinaires, Purgations, Fleurs, Menstrues. The sanguineous evacuation from the uterus, San'guis men'struis, Men'strual blood, the monthly occurrence of which constitutes menstruation or monthly illness. The first appearance of the menses — menopha'nia — is usually preceded by the discharge of a fluid whitish mucous matter from the vagina: by nervous excitement, and by vague pains and heaviness in the loins and thighs; numbness of the limbs, tumefaction and hardness of the breasts, &c. More or less indisposition and irritability also precede each successive recurrence of the menstrual flux. In temperate climates, each period, men'strual pe'riod, pe'riodus luna'ris, ordinarily continues from three to six days; and the quantity lost varies from four to eight ounces. The menses continue to flow from the period of puberty till the age of 45 or 50. At the term of its natural cessation, Menolip'sis, Ménospausie (Gardanne), Menopausis, Men'opaus, the flux becomes irregular; and this irregularity is occasionally accompanied with symptoms of dropsy, glandular tumors, &c., constituting the Parame'nia cessatio'nis of Good, and what is called the critical time or turn or change of life, (F.) Temps critique, Age de Retour; yet it does not appear that the mortality is increased by it. With the immediate causes of menstruation we are unacquainted. We express only our ignorance, when we assert it to depend upon periodicity; the discharge comes from the vessels of the uterus and vagina, and differs from ordinary blood by its peculiar odor, and by its not coagulating. It is evidently connected with the condition of the ovaries, and—it is generally supposed—with the periodical discharge of ova from them. It is arrested, as a general rule, during pregnancy and lactation. In warm climates, women usually begin to menstruate early, and cease sooner than in the temperate regions. The quantity lost is also greater. In the colder regions, the reverse of this holds as a general rule.

Much dispute has existed as to whether the catamenial flow is a hemorrhage or a secretion. It is both. Prior to the escape of blood from the uterine vessels, the mucous discharge is evidently a secretion; and the same after the hemorrhage or admixture of blood has ceased. With Bernutz and Goupil the menstrual secretion is the separation of the catamenial discharge from the uterine glands and vessels; while they term its farther escape from the uterine and vaginal canals the menstrual excretion.

Dried menstrual blood, especially of a woman in her first menstruation—San'guinis vir'ginis pri'mum menstrua'tis—was formerly given internally as an antiepileptic.

MENSTRUATIO PRÆCOX, Premature menstruation. Menstruation occurring before the usual age or time.

MENSTRUATIO RECIDI'VA, Menstruation, when protracted beyond the usual age.

MENSTRUATIO RETEN'TA, Amenorrhœa, Paramenia.

MENSTRUATIO SERO'TINA, (serotinus, 'late in the day,') Retarded or tardy menstruation, from whatever cause arising.

MENSTRUATIO SUPPRES'SA, Amenorrhœa, Paramenia.

Menstruation, Menstrua'tio, Chronogyn'ea, Menorrhag'ia, Flux'us menstrua'lis. The flow of the menses.

Menstruation Difficile, Dysmenorrhœa—m. Difficult, Dysmenorrhœa—m. Ectopic, Menstruation, vicarious—m. Laborious, Dysmenorrhœa—m. Premature, Menstruatio præcox.

MENSTRUATION OCCULT', Concealed Men'struation. Retention of the catamenia in the uterus or the vagina, there being secretion of the menstrual fluid without any excretion.

MENSTRUATION PROFUSE', Menorrhagia—m. Scanty, see Menorrhagia—m. Supplementary, Menstruation, vicarious—m. Tardy, Menstruatio serotina.

MENSTRUATION VICA'RIOUS, Ectopic or Supplementary menstrua'tion, is that which occurs from other parts than the uterus. It is called Paramenia error'is, Menorrhag'ia error'nea, Men'sium per ali'ena lo'ca excre'tio, Men'strua vica'ria, Men'ses de'vii, Aberra'tio men'sium seu menstrua'rum, Menstrua'tio per insol'itas vi'as, Hæmatopla'nia seu Hæmopla'nia menstrua'lis, Menopla'nia, (F.) Déviatio des Règles, Règles déviées. At times, the discharged fluid has all the characters of the menstrual; at others, it appears to be mere blood.

Menstrua'tus, Menstruant.

Menstrue, Menstruum.

Menstruel, Catamenial.

Menstrues, Menses.

Men'struous, Catamenial. Also, one affected with the menses or catamenia.

MEN'STRUUM, (F.) Menstrue, (from mensis, 'a month,'—the menstruum being, of old, usually continued in action for a month.) The monthly discharge of the female. The plural, menstrua, is now, however, always used for the menses. The name was formerly given to every substance which possessed the property of dissolving others slowly and with the aid of heat. At present, it is used synonymously with solvent. Thus—water, alcohol, ether, acids, oils, &c., are menstrua.

MEN'STRUUM AUR'I, Nitromuriatic acid—m. Ventriculi, Gastric juice.

Mensu'ra Med'ica. A measure of 48 ounces.

Mensura'tion, Meta'tio, (from mensura, 'measure,') Meas'urement, Med'ical meas'uring. One of the means used for exploring the state of the thoracic and other cavities. It consists in a comparative measurement of each side of the chest, by means of a ribbon extended from the median line of the sternum to the spine. When effusion exists on one side, the measurement is usually greater than on the other. When, on the other hand, a portion of a lung has ceased, for some time, to exert its respiratory functions, the corresponding side of the chest becomes smaller, in consequence of the contraction of the pleura, retraction of the pulmonary tissue, and greater approximation of the ribs. Instruments have been devised for this purpose. See Stethometer.

Men'ta, Mentha, Penis.

Men'tagra, (mentum, 'the chin,' and αγρα, 'a seizure,') Sycoosis—m. Infantum, Porrigo lupinosa.

Men'tagraphyte, Men'tagrophyte, Micros'poron mentagroph'ytes, from mentagra, and φύω, 'a plant.' A name proposed by M. Gruby, of Vienna, for a cryptogamous plant, which he and others have considered to produce mentagra. Its presence, however, has been thought by eminent dermatologists to be accidental, and not an essential condition of the affection.

Men'tal, Menta'lis, (mens, gen. mentis.) Belonging or relating to the mind; as mental phenomena, mental diseases (Mor'bi mentales), &c.

In Anatomy, Mental, Menta'lis, (F.) Mentonnier, signifies that which relates to the chin, (from mentum.)

MEN'TAL AR'TERY, (F.) Artère mentonnière. This is given off by the inferior dental, and issues at the mental foramen to be distributed on the lower lip.

MEN'TAL FORA'MEN, Ante'rior max'illary fora'men, (F.) Trou mentonnier, is the outer orifice of the inferior dental canal. It is situated on the outer surface of the lower jaw-bone, opposite the second incisor, or the canine tooth, and gives passage to the vessels and nerves.

MEN'TAL FOS'SA, see Fossa, mental.

MEN'TAL NERVE, (F.) Nerf mentonnier, is furnished by the inferior dental nerve. It issues by the mental foramen, and is distributed, in numerous filaments, to the muscles of the lower lip.

MEN'TAL RE'GION, Re'gio menta'lis. The region of the chin.

Menta'lis, Levator labii superioris proprius.

Men'tha seu Men'ta Aquat'ica, (μνθη, μνθα, μνθος, 'mint,') M. palus'tris seu hirsu'ta seu rotundifo'lia palus'tris, Menthast'rum, Sisym'brium menthast'rum, Bal'samus palus'tris, Wa'terment, (F.) Menthe aquatique, M. rouge. Nat. Ord. Labiatæ. This is less agreeable than the Mentha viridis, and more bitter and pungent. It is used like spear-mint.

MENTHA BALSAMEA, M. piperita.

MENTHA CAPEN'SIS, which grows at the Cape of Good Hope, possesses the medical properties of the mints.

MENTHA CERVI'NA, Hart's pen'nyroyal, Hys-sopleaved mint, Pule'gium cervi'num, (F.) Menthe cervine. Possesses the properties of pennyroyal, but is very unpleasant.

MENTHA CITRA'TA, Melissa.

MENTHA CRIS'PA, M. hercynica, Colymbifera minor, Curled Mint, (F.) Menthe frissée ou crépue, Baume d'eau à feuilles ridées. Possesses the properties of peppermint.

MENTHA GENTI'LIS, M. viridis—m. Hercynica, M. crispa—m. Hirsuta, M. aquatica—m. Lævigata, M. viridis—m. Officinalis, M. piperita—m. Palustris, M. aquatica.

MENTHA PIPERITA, M. Piperitis seu officinalis seu balsamea, Pep'permint, (F.) Menthe poivrée. The odor of this variety is strong and agreeable. Taste, pungent, aromatic, and producing a sensation of coldness in the mouth. Virtues depend upon essential oil and camphor. It is stomachic and carminative. It is chiefly used in the form of essential oil—the Oleum menthæ piperitæ, (Ph. U. S., 1873.)

Essence of Pep'permint consists of ol. menthæ pip., 3ij., sp. vin. rectif., colored with spinach leaves, Oij. See Tinctura olei menthæ piperitæ.

MENTHA PULE'GIUM, Pule'gium, P. regu'lè seu latifolium, Gle'chon, Pen'nyroyal, Pud'dinggrass, (Prov.) Hil'wort, Lur'key-dish, Or'gan, (F.) Pouliot. The oil—Oleum pule'gii, Oil of pen'nyroyal—possesses the virtues of the plant. It resembles the mints in general. Amongst the vulgar it is esteemed an emmenagogue. A'qua Pule'gii, A'qua Menthæ pule'gii, Pen'nyroyal Wa'ter, was official in the Edinburgh and Dublin Pharmacopœias.

MENTHA ROMA'NA, Balsamita suaveolens, Tanacetum balsamita—m. Rotundifolia palustris, M. aquatica—m. Saracenica, Balsamita suaveolens, Tanacetum balsamita—m. Sativa, M. viridis—m. Spicata, M. viridis.

MENTHA VIRIDIS, M. Sati'va seu vulga'ris seu gentilis seu spica'ta seu lævigata, Spear'mint, (F.) Menthe sauvage ou verte ou des jardins, Baume des jardins. Odor strong, aromatic; taste warm, austere, bitterish. Virtues the same as those of the peppermint. The Oleum menthæ viridis (Ph. U. S., 1873) is obtained from it.

MENTHA VULGA'RI, M. viridis.

Menthas'trum, Mentha aquatica.

Menthe Aquatique, Mentha aquatica—m. Cervina, Mentha cervina—m. Coq., Tanacetum balsamita—m. Crépue, Mentha crispa—m. Frissée, Mentha crispa—m. des Jardins, Mentha viridis—m. Poivrée, Mentha piperita—m. Romaine, Balsamita suaveolens—m. Rouge, Mentha aquatica—m. Sauvage, Mentha viridis—m. Verte, Mentha viridis.

Menti'go, gen. Mentig'inis, (from mentum, 'chin,') Porrigo larvalis, Sycosis.

Mentisme, (from mens, gen. mentis, 'mind,') Any irregular movement of the mind, whether from emotion or a vivid imagination.

Mentobico'r'neus, (mentum, 'chin,' and bico'r'neus, 'two-horned,') Geniohyoides.

Mentola'bial, Mentolabia'lis, (from mentum, 'the chin,' and labium, 'the lip,') Under this name Chaussier has united the muscles Levator labii inferioris and Quadratus. See Depressor labii inferioris.

MENTOLA'BIAL FUR'ROW. A transverse depression situate between the lower lip and the chin, which is remarkable for the perpendicular direction of the hairs growing upon it.

Menton, Mentum.

Mentone (I.), (F.) Menton—now in France. A small village on the Mediterranean, in a sheltered bay bounded by Capes St. Martin and Murtola, much frequented by those laboring under pulmonary affections.

Mentonnier, Mental—m. Labial, Depressor labii inferioris.

Mentonnière, see Funda.

Men'tula, (like menta,) Penis—m. Factitia, Dildo—m. Muliebris, Cercosis, Clitoris—m. Parva, Pipinna.

Men'tulagra, (mentula, 'the penis,' and aypa, 'a seizure,') A convulsive erection of the mentula, such as is said to be sometimes observed in eunuchs.

Mentula'tus, Membrosus.

Men'tum, Geni'on, Geni'um, Anthe'reon, Chin, (F.) Menton. The inferior and middle part of the face, situate below the lower lip. The chin is formed of skin, areolar tissue, muscles, vessels, nerves, and the os maxillare inferius.

Menyan'thes Trifolia'ta, Menyan'thes, Minyan'thes, (men, and ανθος, 'a flower,' because it keeps in flower about a month [?],) Trifo'lium paludo'sum seu aquat'icum seu palus'trè seu fibri'num, Wa'ter tref'oil, Buck'bean, Bog'bean, (F.) Trèfle d'eau ou des Marais ou de Castor. Nat. Ord. Gentianacæ. The taste is intensely bitter, and is extracted by water. It is tonic, anthelmintic, diuretic, cathartic, and, in large doses, emetic. In some countries, it is used as a substitute for hops in making beer.

MENYAN'THES VER'NA, American buck'bean, Marsh tref'oil, Wa'ter sham'rock, Bit'ter root, has similar properties.

Meo'sis, Meiosis.

Mephit'ic, Mephit'icus, (F.) Méphitique, (from mephitis,) Anything possessed of an unwholesome property; chiefly applied to exhalations.

MEPHIT'IC AC'ID, Carbonic acid—m. Air, Carbonic acid—m. Gangrene, Necrosis, moist.

Mephi'tis, see Mephitism—m. Hepatica, Hydrogen, sulphuretted—m. Inflammabilis, Hydrogen—m. Urinosa, Ammonia.

Mephi'tism, Mephitism'us, (F.) Méphitisme. Any pernicious exhalation. Mephi'tis and Mophe'ta, (F.) Mofette ou Moufette, are old names for nitrogen; and, in general, for all exhalations and gases that are unfit for respiration.

Mera'cus, Merus.

Meramauro'sis, (mero, and amaurosis,) Hypamaurosis.

Meranæsthe'sis, Meranæsthe'sia, (mero, av, 'privative,' and αἴσθησις, 'sensation,') Insensibility of a part of the body.

Meratroph'ia, (mero, and τροφή, 'want of nourishment,') Atrophy of some part of the body.

Mercap'tan, Sul'phur Al'cohol, E'thyl Sulphy'drate. A substance which, even in minute doses, gives rise to marked mental depression.

Mercure, (after the god Mercury,) Hydrargyrum—m. Bichlorure de, Hydrargyri oxydum rubrum—m. Biiodure de, Hydrargyri iodidum rubrum—m. Bromures de, see Bromine—m. Corallin, Hydrargyri nitrico-oxydum—m. avec la Craie, Hydrargyrum cum cretâ—m. Cru, Hydrargyrum—m. Cyanure de, Hydrargyri cyanuretum—m. Deutochlorure de, Hydrargyri oxydum rubrum—m. Deutochlorure de, Hydrargyri oxydum rubrum—m. Doux, Hydrargyri submurias—m. Gommeux de Plenk, Syrupus de mercurio mediante gummi—m. Oxide nitrique de, Hydrargyri nitrico-oxydum—m. Oxide noir de, Hydrargyri oxydum cinereum—m. Oxide rouge de, Hydrargyri oxydum rubrum—m. Périodure de, Hydrargyri iodidum rubrum—m. Protiodure de, Hydrargyri iodidum—m. Protochlorure de, Hydrargyri submurias—m. Protoxide de, Hydrargyri oxydum cinereum—m. Sous-muriate de, précipité, Hydrargyrum præcipitatum—m. Sous-sulfate de, Hydrargyrum vitriolatus—m. Sulfure de, noir, Hydrargyri sulphuretum nigrum—m. Sulfure de, rouge, Hydrargyri sulphuretum rubrum.

Mercur'ial, Mercuria'lis, (F.) Mercuriel. That which contains or relates to mercury. A preparation of mercury—Hydrargyr'icum, Hydrargyr'ium.

MERCUR'IAL BELT, Cingulum mercuriale—m. Disease, Hydrargyriasis—m. Erethism, see Erethism—m. Rash, Eczema mercuriale—m. Trade disease, Palsy, mercurial.

Mercuriale Annuelle, Mercurialis—m. des Bois, Mercurialis perennis—m. de Chien, Mercurialis perennis—m. Vivace, Mercurialis perennis.

Mercuriali'na, Mercuria'lia, Mercurialin. A liquid alkaloid obtained from mercurialis annua, a herbaceous plant of Europe, which was formerly employed as a purgative and emmenagogue.

Mercuria'lis, (after Mercury,) Mercuria'lis annua, French Mer'cury, (F.) Mercuriale annuelle, Foirolle, Ramberge, Vignoble; Class, Dicæcia; Order, Enneandria. It has been esteemed cathartic, hypnotic, and cosmetic, and has been chiefly used by way of lavement. See Chenopodium bonus Henricus.

MERCURIA'NIS HU'MOR, Hu'mor melancholicus. A supposititious humor with the older physicians, out of which they presumed that morbi melancholici seu mercuriales arose.

MERCURIA'NIS PEREN'NIS, Cynocran'bæ, Canina bras'sica, M. montana, M. Sylvestris, Dog's mer'cury, (F.) Mercuriale vivace, M. de chien, M. des bois. This plant is possessed of acronarcotic properties.

Mercurialis'mus, Hydrargyriasis.

Mercur'ialist, Mercurialis'ta. One inordinately addicted to prescribing mercury.

Mercurializa'tion. The state of being affected by mercury. One under the influence of mercury is said to be mercurialized.

Mer'curic Chlo'ride, Hydrargyri oxymurias—m. Iodide, Hydrargyri iodidum rubrum.

MER'CURIC METH'IDE. Cases of fatal poisoning from the preparation of this substance have been recorded:—all the phenomena being those of mercurial poisoning.

MER'CURIC NI'TRATE, see Hydrargyri nitras—m. Oxide, Hydrargyri oxydum cinereum.

Mercur'rii Calx Vitriola'ta, Hydrargyrum vitriolatus—m. Deutoioduretum, Hydrargyri iodidum rubrum—m. Protoioduretum, Hydrargyri iodidum—m. Sperma, Hydrargyrum acetatus—m. Terra foliata, Hydrargyrum acetatus.

Mercur'rius, (after the god,) Hydrargyrum—m. Acetatus, Hydrargyrum acetatus—m. Alkalizatus, Hydrargyrum cum cretâ—m. Calcinatus, Hydrargyri oxydum rubrum—m. Causticus flavus, Hydrargyrum vitriolatus—m. Cinereus, Hydrargyri oxydum cinereum—m. Cinnabarinus, Hydrargyri sulphuretum rubrum—m. Corallinus, Hydrargyri nitrico-oxydum—m. Corrosivus, Hydrargyri oxymurias—m. Corrosivus ruber, Hydrargyri nitrico-oxydum—m. Corrosivus sublimatus, Hydrargyri oxymurias—m. Cosmeticus, Hydrargyrum præcipitatum—m. Dulcis, Hydrargyri submurias—m. Emeticus flavus, Hydrargyrum vitriolatus—m. Gummosus Plenckii, Syrupus de mercurio mediante gummi—m. Luteus, Hydrargyrum vitriolatus—m. Mortis, Algaroth—m. Niger moscati, Hydrargyri oxydum cinereum—m. Nitrosus calide paratus, see Hydrargyri nitras—m. Nitrosus frigore paratus, Hydrargyri nitras—m. Oxydulatus hydriodicus, Hydrargyri iodidum—m. Præcipitatus corrosivus, Hydrargyri nitrico-oxydum—m. Præcipitatus niger, Hydrargyri oxydum cinereum—m. Saccharatus, Hydrargyrum saccharatum—m. Solubilis of Hahnemann, see Hydrar-Mer'curous Chlo'ride, Hydrargyri submurias—m. Iodide, Hydrargyri iodidum viride—m. Nitrate, Hydrargyri nitras—m. Oxide, Hydrargyri oxydum nigrum.

Mer'cury, (after the god,) Hydrargyrum—m. Acetate of, Hydrargyrum acetatus—m. Acid nitrate of, see Hydrargyri nitras—m. Amidochloride of, Hydrargyrum præcipitatum—m. Ammoniated, Hydrargyrum præcipitatum—m. Ammoniochloride of, Hydrargyrum præcipitatum—m. Bichloride of, Hydrargyri oxymurias—m. Biniiodide of, Hydrargyri iodidum rubrum, see Iodine—m. Bisulphuret of, Hydrargyri sulphuretum rubrum—m. Borate of, see Borax—m. Bromide of, Hydrargyri bromidum—m. with Chalk, Hydrargyrum cum cretâ—m. Chloride of, corrosive, Hydrargyri oxymurias—m. Chloride of, mild, Hydrargyri submurias—m. Compound cerate of, Ceratum hydrargyri compositum—m. Cyanide of, Hydrargyri cyanuretum—m. Cyanuret of, Hydrargyri cyanuretum—m. Deutoiodide of, see Iodine—m. Dog's, Mercurialis perennis—m. English, Chenopodium bonus Henricus—m. French, Mercurial—m. Iodide of, Hydrargyri iodidum—m. Iodide of, green, Hydrargyri iodidum—m. Iodide of, red, Hydrargyri iodidum rubrum.

MER'CURY, IODIDE OF CHLO'RIDE or Iodo-chlor'ide of, Iodide of Cal'omet, Iodidum Hydrargyri chlo'ridi, Hydrargyrum ioda'tum cum chlo'rido mercur'rii, (F.) Iodhydrargyrite de chlorure mercureux, Sel de Boutigny. (Made by the reaction of iodine on mild chloride of mercury.) Two iodides may be prepared—the iodide and the biniiodide. Both are violent irritants; the biniiodide, especially, is a powerful caustic. Both have been given in scrofula. The biniiodide is only used externally like nitrate of silver in scrofulous and certain syphilitic ulcerations. An ointment of the iodide (gr. xv. ad adipis, ʒij.) is rubbed on scrofulous tumefactions.

MER'CURY, IODOAR'SENITE OF, Arsenic and Mercury, iodide of—m. Iodochloride of, m. Iodide of chloride of—m. Muriate of, corrosive, Hydrargyri oxymurias—m. Muriate of, mild, Hydrargyri submurias—m. Nitrate of, Hydrargyri nitras—m. Nitrate of, Acid, see Hydrargyri nitras—m. Nitrate of, solution of, see Hydrargyri nitras—m. Nitric oxide of, Hydrargyri nitrico-oxydum—m. Oleate of, see Oleate—m. Oxide of, black or gray, Hydrargyri oxydum cinereum—m. Oxide of, red, Hydrargyri oxydum rubrum—m. Oxide of, yellow, Hydrargyri oxydum flavum—m. Oxymuriate of, Hydrargyri oxymurias—m. Periodide of, Hydrargyri iodidum rubrum—m. Phosphuretted, Hydrargyrum phosphoratus—m. Precipitate of, white, Hydrargyrum præcipitatum—m. Protochloride of, Hydrargyri submurias—m. Protoiodide of, see Hydrargyri iodidum, and Iodine—m. Prussiate of, Hydrargyri cyanuretum—m. Soluble, Hydrargyri nitras—m. Subchloride of, Hydrargyri submurias—m. Submuriate of, Hydrargyri submurias—m. Sulphuret of, black, Hydrargyri sulphuretum nigrum—m. Sulphuret of, red, Hydrargyri sulphuretum rubrum, Realgar—m. Sulphuret of, with sulphur, Hydrargyri sulphuretum nigrum—m. Supernitrate of, solution of, see Hydrargyri nitras—m. Tartrate of, Hydrargyri tartras—m. Three-seeded, Acalypha Virginica—m. Vegetable, Mudar.

MER'CURY AND AR'SENIC, IODIDE OF, Arsenic and Mercury, iodide of—m. and Quinia, Protochloride of, Hydrargyri et Quiniæ protochloridum.

Mer'da, Excrement.

Merdiv'omus, (merda, and vomo,) 'I vomit,' Copremetus.

Mer'dus, Excrement.

Mère des Pians (F.), ('mother of the pians,' from [L.] mater, 'mother,') Pian—m. de Seigle, Ergot.

Meremphrax'is, (mero, and εμφραξις, 'obstruction,') Obstruction or infarction of an organ or part.

Mer'icus, (μερικος,) Local.

Meridrosis, Su'dor partia'lis seu loca'lis, (mero, and ιδρωσις, 'sweating,') A partial perspiration.

Merim'na, (μεριμνα,) Cura.

Merim'nè, (μεριμνη,) Cura.

Merisier, (from cerise, [?]) Prunus avium.

Merismat'ic, Merismat'icus, (F.) Mérismatique, (μερισμα, gen. μερισματος, 'division,') What takes place by division;—as 'merismatic multiplication or reproduction;' that which occurs by the splitting or division of cells or of whole beings.

Merismopœ'dia Ventric'uli, Sarcina ventriculi.

Mer'kel's Mus'cle, Cerato-cricoid.

Me'ro, (from μερος, 'a part,') in composition, a part.

Merobalane'um, (mero, and βαλανειον, 'a bath,') Bath, partial.

Merobal'neum, Bath, partial.

Meroblas'tic, (μερος, 'a part,' and βλαστος, 'a germ,') A term applied to the ova of oviparous animals, in which the yolk is chiefly nutritive, and in a small part only formative.

Meroce'lè, Me'rocele, Miroce'lè, Merorrhex'is, (meros, and κηλη, 'tumor,') Her'nia crura'lis seu femora'lis, Fem'oral or cru'ral her'nia, (F.) Hernie crurale ou fémorale. In this hernia, the viscera issue from the abdomen through the crural canal; or through an opening immediately on the outer side of Gimbernath's ligament, which gives passage to lymphatic vessels. This affection is more frequent in the female than in the male, and especially in those who have had children. The tumor, formed by merocele, is generally small, round, and more or less difficult of reduction. In other respects, it possesses all the characters of hernia. The neck of the sac has, close on the outside, the epigastric artery; above, the spermatic cord and spermatic artery in the male—the round ligament in the female; on the inside, Gimbernath's ligament; and, below, the pubes. When the obturator artery arises from the epigastric, it generally passes on the outside of and below the orifice of the sac; sometimes, however, takes a turn above, and then to the inside of the opening. J. Cloquet asserts that of 134 cases, in one only did he find the epigastric artery on the inside of the orifice of the sac. The operation, required in strangulation of this variety, may be practised on the aponeurotic opening, by cutting downwards and inwards on the side of Gimbernath's ligament.

Crural hernia admits of several rare varieties, as Hernia of Cloquet or Pectine'al cru'ral hernia, the hernia resting on the pectineus muscle, the aponeurosis of which may form an envelope to it; hernia of Laugier, or crural hernia through Gimbernath's ligament; hernia of Hes'selbach, or hernia with a diverticulum through the cribriform fascia; and Her'nia of Sir Astley Cooper, or crural hernia with a diverticulum through the superficial fascia.

Merocoxal'gia, (meros, coxa, 'the hip,' and αλγος, 'pain,') Coxalgia.

Merol'ogy, Merolog'ia, (F.) Mérologie, (from mero, and λογος, 'a discourse,') The branch of anatomy which treats of the elementary parts or constituents of the tissues and humors of the organism.

Mero'pia, (mero, and οψις, 'vision,') A partial obscurity of vision.

Merorrhœu'ma, gen. Merorrhœu'matis, Rheumatis'mus partia'lis seu loca'lis seu Membro'rum singulo'rum, (mero, and ρευμα, 'defluxion, rheumatism,') Rheumatism affecting a part. Topical or local rheumatism.

Merorrhex'is, (meros, and ρηξις, 'a rupture,') Merocele.

Me'ros, (μηρος,) Femur, Thigh.

Mer'ry Andrew. An itinerant quack, who exposes his nostrums for sale at fairs and markets. See Charlatan. So called from Dr. Andrew Boorde, who lived in the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Queen Mary, and who was in the habit of frequenting fairs and markets, at which he harangued the populace.

Merten'sia Virgin'ica, (after C. H. Mertens, botanist, of Bremen,) Pulmonaria Virgin'ica, Virgin'ian Cow'slip, Smooth Lung'wort; indigenous. Family, Boraginaceæ. The plant is mucilaginous, and may be used as a demulcent.

Meru'lius, Morehella esculenta—m. Auricula, Peziza auricula.

Me'rus, Mera'cus, A'ceratos, 'pure, genuine;' as Vinum merum, 'unmixed wine.'

Me'rus, (μηρος,) Femur, Thigh.

Mer'vine, Male, Cypripedium luteum.

Merycis'mus, (μηρυκισμος,) Rumination.

Merycote, see Rumination.

Merycolog'ia, (μηρυκαω, 'I ruminate,' and λογος, 'a description,') Any work on rumination may be so termed.

Merypertroph'ia, (mero, and hypertrophia, 'supernutrition,') Hypertrophy of a part.

Me'sa, (μεσος, 'middle,') Genital organs.

Mesara'um, (μεσαραιον, from meso, and αραια, 'small intestines,') Mesentery.

Mesara'icus, Mesenteric.

Mesara'ic, Mesenteric.

Mesarterii'tis, (meso, and arteriitis, 'inflammation of an artery,') Inflammation of the middle layer of an artery.

Mesemar, Mismar.

Mesembryan'themum Cop'ticum, see Soda—m. Acinaciforme, see M. edule.

MESEMBRYAN'THEMUM CRYSTAL'LINUM, M. ficoi'des, (μσημβρια, 'noon,' because its flowers expand at midday,) Di'amon'd fig-marygold, Ice'plant, (F.) Glaciale, Crystalline. Nat. Ord. Ficoideæ: a plant common in the neighborhood of Cape Town. It has been recommended in dysuria, ischuria, and some other affections of the urinary organs.

MESEMBRYAN'THEMUM EDU'LÈ, and M. ACINACIFORM'E, South African plants, are much used as domestic remedies at the Cape. The expressed juice of the leaves acts as an astringent in dysentery, and as a mild diuretic. It is also used as an antiseptic gargle in malignant sore throat, violent salivation and aphthæ, and as a lotion to burns and scalds.

MESEMBRYAN'THEMUM FICOI'DES, m. Crystallinum.

MESEMBRYAN'THEMUM TORTUO'SUM, also a South African plant, is said to possess narcotic properties.

Mésencéphale, (meso, and εγκεφαλος, 'encephalon,') Medulla oblongata, Pons Varolii.

Mesenceph'alón, (same etymon,) Mid'brain. In early foetal development, one of the three primary cerebral vesicles: from it are formed the crura cerebri below, the corpora quadragemina above, its cavity remaining as the aqueduct of Sylvius.

Mesen'na, Musen'na, Bisen'na. The bark of an Abyssinian tree, the Albizia Anthelmintica, belonging to the family of the Mimoseæ. The powdered bark is used by the natives, in doses of two ounces, as a powerful tæniacuge.

Mesenter'ic, Mesara'ic, Mesenter'icus, Mesara'- icus, Mesara'icus, (F.) Mésentérique, Mésaraïque. That which relates or belongs to the mesentery.

MESENTER'IC ARTERIES are two in number, and distinguished into—1. The Superior mesenter'ic, which arises from the anterior part of the abdominal aorta, below the celiac. It immediately descends to the left, forwards, behind the pancreas, and in front of the third portion of the duodenum, — to gain the superior extremity of the mesentery, where it makes a long curvature, the convexity of which is turned forwards and to the left. Towards the termination of the ileum, it ends by anastomosing with a branch of the A. colica dextra inferior. At its concavity, it gives off the three Arteriae colicae dextrae, which belong to the great intestine; and, at its convexity, it sends off fifteen or twenty branches, which are distributed to the small intestines, after having formed numerous arches by their anastomoses.

2. The Inferior Mesenter'ic Artery arises from the anterior part of the abdominal aorta, an inch and a half before its termination. It descends, on the left side, behind the peritoneum; engages itself in the substance of the iliac mesocolon, forming a considerable curvature, whose convexity faces the left side. When it reaches the brim of the pelvis, it passes along the posterior separation of the mesorectum, and attains the neighborhood of the anus, under the name Superior hemorrhoidal artery. It gives off no branch at its concave part; but, from the convex, the three Arteriae colicae sinistrae arise.

MESENTER'IC DISEASE, Tabes mesenterica.

MESENTER'IC GLANDS or GAN'GLIA are the lymphatic ganglia of the mesentery. Through them, the chyliferous vessels pass to the thoracic duct. Their uses are unknown. When diseased, nutrition is interfered with, and atrophy produced.

MESENTER'IC HERNIA. If one of the layers of the mesentery be torn by a blow, while the other remains in its natural state, the intestines may insinuate themselves into the aperture, and form a kind of hernia. It is not known during life.

MESENTER'IC PLEX'USES are furnished by the solar plexus, and have been distinguished into superior and inferior, like the mesenteric arteries which they accompany.

MESENTER'IC or MESARA'IC VEINS are two in number, and belong to the vena porta. They are distinguished into—1. The Superior mesenteric or mesaraic or great mesaraic. This trunk receives, from above to below and on the right side, the three venae colicae dextrae and the gastroepiploica dextra. Into its left side, the veins of the small intestine open. It passes in front of the transverse portion of the duodenum; and, behind the pancreas, unites with the splenic vein to concur in the formation of the vena porta.

The inferior or lesser mesenteric vein corresponds to the artery of the same name, and opens into the splenic, near the union of that vein with the superior mesenteric, and behind the pancreas.

Mesenterii'tis, gen. Mesenterii'tidis, Mesenteritis.

Mésentérique, Mesenteric.

Mesenteri'tis, gen. Mesenterii'tidis, Mesenterii'tis, Empres'ma peritonii'tis mesenterica, Enteri'tis mesenterica, Inflam'mation of the mes'entery, (F.) Mésentérite, (mesentery, and itis.) The pain is here deeper seated and more immediately in the mesenteric region. The external tenderness is less than in some of the other varieties of peritonitis.

Mesenter'ium, (μυεντεριον), Mesentery — m. Crassum, Mesocolon.

Mesenteron, Mesentery.

Mesenterophthi'sis, Tabes mesenterica.

Mes'entery, Mesenter'ium, Mesara'ion, Mesarae'um, Media'num, Membra'na pin'guis intestino'rum, Lac'tes, Mesenteron, Me'dium intesti'num, Epichor'dis, (μεινταρον, from meso, and εντερον, 'intestine,') (F.) Mésentère. A term in anatomy, applied to several duplicatures of the peritoneum, which maintain the different portions of the intestinal canal in their respective situations; allowing, however, more or less motion. They are formed of two laminae, between which are contained the corresponding portion of intestine and the vessels that pass to it. One only of these duplicatures has received the name mesentery, properly so called. This belongs to the small intestine, which it suspends and retains in situ. Its posterior margin, which is the smallest, is straight, and descends obliquely from the left side of the body of the second lumbar vertebra to the right iliac fossa. Its anterior margin is curved, undulating, plaited, and corresponds to the whole length of the small intestine. The mesentery contains, between the two laminae which form it, a number of lymphatic ganglions; the trunks and branches of the mesenteric vessels; the nervous plexuses accompanying them, and many lacteals and lymphatics.

Mesera, Tutia.

Me'sial, (μεσος, 'middle,') Relating or appertaining to the middle.

ME'SIAL PLANE, an imaginary plane, dividing the head, neck, and trunk into similar halves, towards right and left. Every aspect towards this plane is mesial; and every aspect towards right or left is lateral; every lateral aspect being dextral or sinistral.

ME'SIAL PLATE, see Plate.

Mesia'num, Aniceton.

Mesit'ylen, Bihy'drate of Acetone.

Mesmer'ic or Mes'meric, Mesmer'icus, (from Anthony Mesmer, the great promulgator of animal magnetism.) Relating to mesmerism or animal magnetism:—as the 'mesmeric state,' 'mesmeric sleep,' 'mesmeric clairvoyance,' &c., &c.

Mes'merism, Magnetism, animal.

Mes'merist. A practiser of, or believer in, mesmerism.

Mesmeriza'tion, Magnetiza'tion. The act of mesmerizing. The state of being mesmerized.

Mes'merized, Mesmeriza'tus, Magn'etized. Affected with mesmerism or animal magnetism. When the person is in a state of 'magnetic sleep,' he is said to be hypnotized.

Mes'merizer, Animal magneti'zer, Magneti'zer, (F.) Magnétiseur. One who practises mesmerism.

Mesmerophrenol'ogy, Phrenomagnetism.

Me'so, (from μεσος, 'middle,') in composition, middle.

Mesoa'rium, (meso, and ovarium), see Ovary.

Mes'oblast, (meso, and βλαστος, 'germ,') See Cytoblast, and Molecule.

Mesobreg'mate, (meso, and bregma, 'the top of the head,') See Cranium.

Mesocæ'cum, (meso, and cæcum.) A name given to a duplicature of the peritoneum, (in some persons only,) at the posterior part of the cæcum.

Mesocardi'a, (meso, and cardia, 'heart,') See Ectocardia.

Mesocéphale, Mesocephalon.

Mesoceph'alón, (μεσο, and κεφαλη, 'head,') Medulla oblongata, Pons Varolii.

Mesochon'driac, Mesochondri'acus, (meso, and χονδρος, 'cartilage,') A name given by Boerhaave to fleshy fibres situate between the cartilaginous rings of the trachea.

Mesocol'ic, Mesocol'icus, (meso, and κολων, 'the colon,') Belonging or relating to the mesocolon.

Mesocol'on, (μεσocolon), Mesocol'um, Mesenter'ium cras'sum. A name given to the duplicatures of the peritoneum, which fix the different parts of the colon to the abdominal parietes. It has received different names, according to its situation. The right lumbar mesocolon fixes the ascending colon to the corresponding lumbar region.

The transverse mesocolon arises from the concave arch of the colon, and forms a septum between the epigastric and umbilical regions. Its inferior portion is continuous with the mesentery. The left lumbar mesocolon, which contains the ascending colon, is continuous below with the iliac mesocolon. The last includes between its layers the sigmoid flexure of the colon, and ends in the mesorectum. The fold of peritoneum which retains the sigmoid flexure in connection with the left iliac fossa is called the sigmoid mesocolon. Under the right kidney, it is narrow and firm, and forms the right ligament of the colon; at the under end of the left kidney, it forms the left ligament of the colon.

Mesocranium, (meso, and κρανιον, 'skull.') Sinciput.

Mesocranium, (μεσοκρανον, from meso, and κρανον, 'skull.') Sinciput.

Mesoder'mum, (meso, and δερμα, 'skin.') Corpus mucosum.

Mesod'me, (μεσοδομη, 'a crossbeam,' from meso, and δομη, 'a house.') Mediastinum.

Mesod'mitis, gen. Mesod'mitidis, (mesod'me, and itis.) Mesotæchi'tis, Mediastini'tis, Inflamma'tio mediasti'ni. Inflammation of the mediastinum.

Mesoëpidid'y'mis, (meso, and ἐπιδιδυμις, 'epididymis.') A double serous fold, like the mesocolon, formed by the tunica vaginalis passing from the body of the epididymis, and uniting it to the testicle.

Mesogast'rium, (meso, and γαστηρ, 'belly.') Umbilical region. Also a median membranous fold, a rudimental mesentery, which, in early foetal development, connects the alimentary canal with the rest of the embryo.

MESOGASTRIUM MÜLLE'RI. A portion of mesentery, which passes from the vertebral column to the left curvature of the stomach.

Mesoglossus, (meso, and γλωσσα, 'tongue.') Genioglossus.

Mesoglot'tus, (meso, and γλωττα, 'tongue.') Genioglossus.

Mesogon'ium, (meso, and γονυ, 'the knee.') Internodium.

Mesolo'bar. Belonging or relating to the Mesolobe or Cor'pus callo'sum.

MESOLO'BAR ARTERIES, Arte'riæ mesolob'icæ, A. cor'poris callo'si cer'ebri, are the arteries of the corpus callosum.

Mesolobe, Corpus callosum.

Mesol'obus, (meso, and λοβος, 'a lobe.') Corpus callosum.

Mesomètre, Mesomé'trium, (meso, and μητρα, 'uterus.') The fold of the peritoneum, which unites the uterus to the abdominal parietes.

Mesomé'ria, (μησομηρια, from meso, and μηρος, 'the thigh.') The parts of the body situate between the thighs and hips.

Mesomé'ron, Perinæum.

Mesom'phalum, (meso, and ομφαλος, 'navel.') Umbilicus.

Mésophlébite, Mesophlebitis.

Mesophlebi'tis, gen. Mesophlebi'tidis, (meso, and phlebitis.) (F.) Mésophlébite, inflammation of a vein. Inflammation of the middle layer of a vein.

Mesophleb'ium, (meso, and φλεψ, gen. φλεβος, 'a vein.') Interve'nium. The space between two veins.

Mesoph'ryon, (μεσοφρυον), Glabell'la, Gabel'la, Intercil'ium, Meto'pium, Na'sal em'inence, (meso, and οφρυα, 'the eyebrows.') The part between the eyebrows.

Mesopleur'ium, (meso, and πλευρον, 'a rib.') Intercostal space.

Mesopleur'ius, Intercostal.

Mesor'chium, (meso, and ορχις, 'a testicle.') A duplicature of the peritoneum, which supports the testicle in its passage from the abdomen into the scrotum.

Mesorec'tum, (meso, and rectum, 'the intestine rectum.') A triangular reflection, formed by the peritoneum, between the posterior surface of the rectum and the anterior surface of the sacrum. Between the two layers of which the mesorectum is composed are found much areolar tissue, and the termination of the inferior mesenteric vessels.

Mesoscap'ular, (meso, and scapula.) A term applied in early life to the acromial extremity of the clavicle, the mesoscapular segment of that bone.

Mesos'celon, (meso, and σκελος, 'leg.') Perinæum.

Mesoscelocel'é, (mesoscelon, and κηλη, 'a rupture.') Hernia, perineal. See also Hernia.

Mesoscelophy'ma, gen. Mesoscelophy'matis, (mesoscelon, and φυμα, 'swelling.') A tumor of the perinæum.

Mesoth'enar, (meso, and θεναρ, 'the thenar,' 'the palm of the hand.') A muscle, which carries the thumb towards the palm. Winslow applied the term to the abductor pollicis, united to the deep-seated portion of the flexor brevis pollicis.

Mesot'ica, (from μεσος, 'middle.') Diseases affecting the parenchyma. Pravity in the quantity or quality of the intermediate or connecting substance of organs; without inflammation, fever, or other derangement of the general health. The first Order, class Ecritica of Good.

Mesotæchi'tis, gen. Mesotæchi'tidis, (mesotæchum, and itis.) Mesodmitis.

Mesotæ'chium, Mediastinum.

Mesotæ'chum, (μεσοτοιχον, 'a partition wall,' from meso, and τοιχος, 'a wall.') Mediastinum.

Mes'pilus, (μεσπιλη, from meso, and πιλος, 'a ball,' from the resemblance of the fruit to half a ball.) Mes'pilus German'ica seu domes'tica. Ord. Rosaceæ. The med'lar, (F.) Néffier. The fruit (F.) Nêfle, and seeds of the medlar, have both been used medicinally: — the immature fruit as an astringent, and the seeds in nephritic diseases. See Cratægus aria and Sorbus aucuparia.

MES'PILUS A'RIA, Cratægus aria — m. Domestica, Mespilus, Sorbus domestica — m. Germanica, Mespilus — m. Intermedia, Mespilus oxyacantha — m. Lævigata, Mespilus oxyacantha.

MES'PILUS OXYACANTH'ides, M. Oxyacantho'ides seu interme'dia seu lævigata, Oxyacantha, Spi'na al'ba, White Hawthorn, (F.) Aubépine. The flowers of this uncommon European plant are sometimes used in infusion as a pectoral.

MES'PILUS OXYACANTH'ides, Mespilus oxyacantha.

Mes'quite or Mez'quite Gum. A gum, obtained in New Mexico from a tree of the same family as the Acacia. It has the same virtues as gum Arabic.

Mestee, see Mestizo.

Mestino, see Mestizo.

Mestizo, Mestino, (from mixtus, 'mixed.') In Spanish America, the child of a Spaniard or Creole and a native Indian. See Halfcaste.

A Mastee or Mestee is the child of a white and mulatto or quadroon.

Me'ta, μετα, Meth', μεθ', 'with,' 'together with,' 'after,' 'change of form and place.' A common prefix to terms.

Metab'asis, Trans'itus, Metab'olê, Metabol'ia, Metall'agê, Metallax'is, (μεταβασις, from μεταβαινω, — meta, and βαινω, 'I go,' — 'I digress.') A change of remedy, practice, &c.

Metab'olê, (μεταβολη, from μεταβαλλειν, 'to transpose,') Metabasis, Transformation.

Metabolel'ogy, Metabolelog'ia, (μεταβολη, — meta, and βαλλω, — 'change,' and λογος, 'a description.') A description of the changes which supervene in the course of a disease.

Metabol'ia, (μεταβολια.) Metabasis.

Metabol'ic, (μεταβολικος.) Metabol'icus. Appertaining to change or transformation.

METABOL'IC FORCE, Vis metabol'ica. A term employed by Schwann for the power possessed by living cells of changing the character of the substances brought in contact with them.

Metacar'pal, Metacarpia'nus, (F.) Métacarpien, (from metacarpus.) Relating or belonging to the metacarpus.

METACAR'PAL AR'TERY, Arte'ria dorsalis metacar'pi, arises from the radial, at the moment it engages itself in the upper extremity of the abductor indicis. It descends obliquely upon the back of the hand. Its branches are distributed to the abductor indicis, and the integuments: some communicate with the dorsalis carpi.

METACAR'PAL ARTICULA'TIONS are those by which the last four metacarpal bones are united together at their upper extremity.

METACAR'PAL BONES, or bones which compose the metacarpus, are five in number, and distinguished into first, second, third, &c., beginning from the outer or radial side. They are articulated by their superior extremity with the bones of the second range of the carpus, and by the lower with the first phalanges.

METACAR'PAL LIG'AMENT, Infe'rior pal'mar lig'ament, is a fibrous band, stretched transversely before the inferior extremities of the last four metacarpal bones, which it keeps in their respective positions.

METACAR'PAL PHALAN'GES are the first phalanges of the fingers, so called because they are articulated with the bones of the metacarpus.

METACAR'PAL RANGE or ROW of the carpal bones, (F.) Rangée métacarpienne du carpe, is the lower row of carpal bones, so called because they are articulated with the bones of the metacarpus. It is composed of the trapezium, trapezoides, magnum, and unciniforme.

Metacar'peus, Abductor metacarpi minimi digiti.

Métacarpien, Metacarpal — m. du Petit doigt, Opponens minimi digiti — m. du Pouce, Opponens pollicis.

Metacar'pion, (μετακαριον,) Metacarpus.

Metacar'po-car'pal. Relating to the metacarpus and carpus, as the metacarpo-carpal articulation.

Metacarpophalange'us Pol'licis, Abductor pollicis manus.

Metacarpophalan'gian, Metacarpophalangia'nus, Métacarpophalangal, (F.) Métacarpophalangien. That which belongs to the metacarpus and phalanges.

METACARPOPHALAN'GIAN or METACARPOPHALANGAL ARTICULA'TIONS are formed by the bones of the metacarpus and the corresponding phalanges. In these articulations, the bony surfaces are incrustated with cartilage, covered by a synovial membrane, and kept in connection by means of an anterior and two lateral ligaments.

Métacarpophalangien Latéral Sus - palmaire, et Métacarpophalangien Latéral, Interosseus manus.

Metacar'pus, (meta, and καρπος, 'wrist,') Metacar'pion, Postbrachia'lē, Postcar'pium, Tor'sus ma'nūs, (F.) Métacarpe. The part of the hand comprised between the carpus and fingers. It is composed of five parallel bones, called metacarpal, forming the back of the hand, externally, and the palm internally.

Metaceras'ma, gen. Metacerasm'atis, (μετακέρασμα, from meta, and κεραννυμι, 'I mix,') Cerasma.

Metacheirix'is, (meta, and χεῖρ, 'the hand,') Surgery.

Metachi'risis, Surgery.

Metachiris'mus, Surgery.

Metachlo'ral. A white substance, insoluble in water, obtained by the action of sulphuric acid on anhydrous chloral. It is a narcotic like chloral hydrate, but less active.

Metachore'sis, (μεταχωρησις, from meta, and χωρῶ, 'I go,') Metastasis.

Metach'ysis, (meta, and χύω, 'I pour,') Transfusion.

Metacine'ma, gen. Metacine'matis, (μετακίνημα, from meta, and κινῶ, 'I move,') Metastasis.

Metacine'sis, (μετακίνησις,) Metastasis.

Metac'on'dyle, see Phalanx.

Metacye'sis, (meta, and κυῖσις, 'pregnancy,') Gravid'itas extrauteri'na secunda'ria. Extra-uterine pregnancy in which the foetus is at first in the uterus, but subsequently in some other place.

Metadermato'sis, (meta, and δερμα, gen. ἕρματος, 'skin,') A morbid development of the epidermis or epithelium.

Metagen'esis, (F.) Metagénèse, Alter'nate or change'able generation, (meta, and γενεσις, 'generation,') A term, proposed by Professor Owen, to express the changes of form which one animal species undergoes in a series of successively produced individuals, extending from the one developed from the ovum to that which becomes the image or last perfected individual. This term he employs in contradistinction to metamorphosis, which he restricts to the changes of form undergone by one and the same individual. See Generation, alternate, and Parthenogenesis.

Met'al, (μεταλλον,) Metal'lum. A class of simple bodies, in general distinguished from others by considerable specific gravity, a particular splendor, almost total opacity, insolubility in water, and the property they have of ringing when struck. Metals have no effect, except of a mechanical nature, when taken into the stomach, unless they have already undergone, or undergo in the stomach, oxidation or union with an acid, when at times deleterious compounds may be formed. Copper cents, half-pence, quicksilver, lead, have frequently been swallowed in the metallic state with impunity. Tin and mercury are the only metals prescribed for a mechanical effect, the former as an anthelmintic, the latter, idly enough, in cases of fancied intussusception.

Métal des Cloches, Bell-metal.

Metal'lagé, (μεταλλαγή, from meta, and αλασσω, 'I exchange,') Metabasis.

Metallax'is, (μεταλλαξις,) Metallage.

Metal'lic Voice, Tintement métallique.

Metallo'dyn'ia, (μεταλλον, 'a metal,' and εὖννη, 'pain,') Pain owing to the injurious influence of a metal — as lead, quicksilver, &c.

Metal'lum, (μεταλλον,) Metal — m. Hæmato-poeticum, Ferrum.

Metamor'phia. An alkaloid obtained by Wittstein from a substance separated from the dregs of laudanum, probably the result of chemical change in morphia.

Metamorph'ici (Mor'bi), (μεταμορφωσις, — meta, and μορφή, 'form, — 'I transform,') Developmental diseases. Special diseases, the incidental result of the formative, reproductive, and nutritive powers. (W. Farr.)

Metamorphop'sia, Phantasmascop'ia, Phantasmatoscop'ia, (μεταμορφωσις, — from meta, and μορφή, 'form, — 'I transform, and ὥψις, 'vision,') Suffu'sio, S. Oculo'rum seu metamorphop'sis seu myo'des, Imagination (Maitre-Jean), Cryp'sia, Marmar'ygē, Marmor'ygē, Mac'ulæ an'te oc'ulos volitan'tes, Marau'gia, Oculi marmar'ygodes, Vis'io phantas'matum, Vi'sus defiguratus, Metamorphop'sy, False sight, (F.) Berluc. Aberration of the sense of sight, which transmits the image of imaginary objects. This affection sometimes depends on a slight opacity in the transparent parts of the eye — the cornea, crystalline, or vitreous humor — when it is symptomatic, and of no consequence. At other times, it appears to be idiopathic, and occurs particularly in those who have been in the habit of constantly fixing their eyes on very brilliant or small bodies. The objects fancied to be seen are various. They are sometimes circular, perpetually moving; or shining, or black spots, cobwebs, insects, or pieces of wool — when they are often termed Mus'cæ seu Floc'ci volitan'tes, (F.) Monches volantes, and the condition Vi'sus musca'rum, Scotom'ata, Suffu'sio myo'des, Myiodesop'sia, Myiodop'sia, Myodesop'sia, Myodesop'pia, Vi'sus musca'rum. These appearances sometimes continue for a few days, being dependent on the state of the nerves of the individual at the time; or they may exist for life, and ultimately impair the sight. Certain of them change their position, and appear to be seated in the humors of the eye, and — it has been supposed — in the vitreous humor more especially: hence the term entohy'aloid muscæ applied to them.

If the affection be symptomatic, it is of but little moment. If idiopathic, and connected with excitement of the brain, which is not often the case, attention will have to be paid to that organ.

Metamorphop'sy, Metamorphopsia.

Metamorpho'ses, (meta, and μορφή, 'I shape.') In pathology, the conversion of the constituents of tissues, chiefly the albuminous, into other material. Included under this head are the fatty, mucoid, and colloid degenerations.

Metamorpho'sis, see Metagenesis and Transformation.

METAMORPHO'SIS VENTRIC'ULI GELATINIFOR'MIS, Gastromalacia.

Metangis'mus, (μεταγγισμος, from meta, and αγγειον, 'a vessel,') Decantation.

Metape'dium, (meta, and ποδιον, dim. of πους, gen. ποδος, 'a foot,') Metatarsus.

Metapep'tone, see Peptone.

Metaph'renon, (μεταφρενον, from meta, and φρενες, 'the diaphragm,') Dorsum.

Metaphytei'a, (μεταφυτειω, — from meta, and φωω, 'I produce, — I transplant,') Transplantation.

Metapod'ium, (meta, and ποδιον, dim. of πους, gen. ποδος, 'a foot,') Metatarsus.

Metapoph'yses, (meta, and apophysis.) The mammillary processes of the vertebræ are so called in the nomenclature of Owen.

Metaporopoe'a, Metaporopoe'isis, (meta, πορος, 'a pore,' and ποιειν, 'to make,') The change produced in the minute pores, in the capillary extremities of vessels, — when they pass from the morbid to the healthy condition (?).

Metapto'sis, (μεταπτωσις.) Metaschematis'mus, Metaschemat'isis, Diadex'is, (from μεταπτω, — meta, and πτωω, 'I fall, — I digress,') Mutation; change. Any change in the form or seat of a disease. Transformation.

Metarrhoe'a, (μεταρροια.) Metar'rhy'sis, (meta, and ρρρ, 'I flow,') Reflux. The transfer of a disease from without to within, or from one part to another.

Metar'rhy'sis, (μεταρρρσις.) Metarrhoea.

Metaschemat'isis, (μετασχηματισ, from meta, and σχημα, 'form,') Metaptosis.

Metaschematis'mus, (μετασχηματισμος.) Metaptosis.

Mefas'tasis, (μεταστασις.) Metachore'sis, Metacine'ma, Metacine'sis, (meta, and ιστημι, 'I place,') Displacement, Translat'ion. A change in the seat of a disease; attributed, by the Humorists, to the translation of the morbid matter to a part different from that which it had previously occupied; and by the Solidists, to the displacement of the irritation. It has also been used in the same extensive sense as Metaptosis. Disputes have often arisen whether metastasis ought not rather to be esteemed an extension of the disease. The phenomena of gout and acute rheumatism are in favor of metastasis occasionally supervening.

METAS'TASIS LAC'TIS, Galactoplasia, Phlegmatia dolens.

Metastatic, (μεταστατικός.) Metastat'icus, (F.) Métastatique. Belonging or relating to metastasis. A metastatic crisis is one produced by metastasis; — a metastatic affection, one caused by metastasis, &c. See Abscess, metastatic.

Metasyn'crisis, (μετασυνκρίσις, from meta, and συνκρνω, 'I join,') Recomposition. A word employed by some disciples of Asclepiades. This physician supposed that animals are formed by the union or assemblage of atoms. He designated all bodies by the word συνκρηματα, which signifies 'assemblage.' Συγκρίνισθαι, 'to be assembled,' was, with him, synonymous with 'to exist;' and διακρίνισθαι, 'to separate,' was, with him, synonymous with 'to dissolve,' 'to cease to exist.' The word Metasyn'crisis was invented to express the recombination of bodies after their momentary dissolution. Some have rendered the word by the Latin Re corpora'tio.

Metasyn'crit'ic, (μετασυνκριτικός.) Metasyn'crit'icus, Re corporati'eus. Belonging or relating to metasyn'crisis. A name formerly given to medicines to which was attributed the virtue of producing the metasyn'crisis or regeneration of the body, or of some of its parts.

METASYNCRIT'IC CY'CLE meant a determinate series of remedies employed for this purpose.

Metatar'sal, Metatar'seus, (F.) Métatarsien. Relating or belonging to the metatarsus.

METATAR'SAL AR'TERY, Artère sus-métatarsienne of Chaussier, arises from the Arteria dorsa'lis tar'si; passes transversely over the back of the foot; and furnishes at its convexity, which is anterior, three branches, called Arteriæ interos'seæ dorsa'les pe'dis. These branches are distributed in the interosseous spaces.

METATAR'SAL ARTICULA'TIONS are those resulting from the junction of the metatarsal bones with each other. They are strengthened, behind, by dorsal and plantar ligaments; and, before, by a transverse metatarsal ligament, which is plantar, and has the greatest analogy to the inferior transverse metacarpal ligament.

METATAR'SAL BONES, (F.) Os métatarsiens, are five in number, and distinguished by their number: first, second, third, &c., reckoning from the outer side.

METATAR'SAL PHALANG'ES are the first phalanges of the toes; so called because they are united to the metatarsus.

METATAR'SAL ROW — (F.) Rangée métatarsienne — of the bones of the tarsus, is the second row, or that contiguous to the metatarsus; comprehending the cuboides and three cuneiform bones; some add the scaphoides.

Metatar'seus, see Abductor minimi digiti pedis.

Métatarsien, Metatarsal.

Metatar'sium, Metatarsus.

Metatarsophalan'gian, Metatarsophalangia'nus, Metatar'so-pha'langal. Relating to the metatarsus and phalanges.

METATARSOPHALAN'GIAN or METATARSOPHALANGAL ARTICULA'TIONS are formed by the bones of the metatarsus and the corresponding phalanges. They bear the greatest analogy to the metacarpo-phalangan articulations.

Métatarso-phalangi'en-latéral, see Interossei pedis — m. Sous-phalangi'en transversal du premier orteil, Transversus pedis.

Metatarsosubphalange'us Pol'licis, Adductor pollicis pedis.

Metatar'sus, Metatar'sium, Metape'dium, Metapod'ium, Præcor'dium seu So'lum pe'dis, Vestig'ium pe'dis, (F.) Métatarse, (meta, 'after,' and ρρρ, 'the tarsus,') That part of the foot which is situate between the tarsus and toes, corresponding with the metacarpus. It is composed of five parallel bones — one to each toe. Like the metacarpal bones, they are developed from two points of ossification.

Metath'esis, (μεταθεσις, from μετατιθημι, — meta, and τιθημι, 'I place, — I change place,') Transposit'io, Transposit'ion. An operation by which a morbid agent is removed from one place to another, where it may produce less disturbance.

in the exercise of the functions:— as, for example, in the operation of depressing cataract, or when calculus in the urethra is pushed back into the bladder. Also, Derivation.

Meta'tio, (metor, metatus, 'I measure.') Mensuration.

Metatoc'ia, (meta, and tokos, 'birth.') Parturition in a preternatural manner. Preternatural labor.

Metenceph'alón, Afterbrain, (meta, and κεφαλον, 'brain.') One of the two fundamental parts—the encephalon and metencephalon—of which the posterior primary cerebral vesicle is the basis. The former includes the cerebellum, pons Varolii, and anterior part of the fourth ventricle; the latter, the medulla oblongata, fourth ventricle, and auditory nerve.

Metensomato'sis, (μετεσωματωσις, from meta, en, and σωμα, 'body.') Incorporation.

Me'teorism, Tympanites.

Meteorism'us, (μετεωρισμος, from μετεωριζω, 'I elevate,') Sublimation, Tympanites.

Meteorol'ogy, Meteorolog'ia (μετεωρολογία—μετεωρος,—meta, and αιωρω, 'I lift up,')—'a meteor,' and λογος, 'a discourse.') The science whose object is the knowledge of the origin, formation, appearance, &c., of meteors. The state of the atmosphere has a most important bearing upon the health of animals. Every epidemic affection has its causes seated there. Meteorological conditions have, hence, ever been attended to by the physician for the purpose of detecting the precise character of any particular epidemic influence. The barometer, thermometer, and hygrometer are the instruments used with this intent—to detect, as well the varying weight or pressure, and the temperature, as the moisture. Perhaps, of the three conditions, the last exerts more influence in the production of disease than either of the others. Our knowledge, however, of this part of physics is extremely limited and unsatisfactory.

Me'ter, (μετρον, 'a measure.') A suffix to words denoting 'a measure,' as in Barometer, Pleximeter, &c. Also, uterus, (from μητηρ.)

Meth. A prefix to terms. See Meta.

Methæmachym'ia, (meth, αιμα, 'blood,' and χυω, 'I pour,') Transfusion.

Methæmoglob'ulin, Methæmoglo'bin, (meth, αιμα, 'blood,' and globulin.) A result of change in hæmoglobin when left to itself, or carbonic acid gas is passed through it. It may be seen in old extravasations of blood, as thrombi, the brown fluid from the ovaries, sanguinolent transudation fluids, &c.

Methæ'mata, sing. Methæ'ma, (meth, and αιμα, 'blood.') The capillary or intermediate system of vessels in which the blood undergoes the change from venous to arterial, and conversely. See Capillary vessels.

Me'thê, (μεθη,) Temulentia.

Metheg'lin, ([W.] meddyglyn,) Melizomum.

Methemer'ius, (μεθημεριος, 'daily,' from meth, and ημερα, 'a day,') Quotidian.

Meth'ide, Mer'curic, see Mercuric.

Meth'od, (μεθοδος,) Meth'odus, (meth, and odos, 'way,') This word has different acceptations in the sciences. In Medicine, curative method, meth'odus meden'di, is the methodical treatment of disease.

METH'OD OF COUNT'ING, Method, numerical—m. Graphic, see Graphic—m. Mariano's, see Lithotomy.

METH'OD, NUMERICAL, Method of Observation or of Count'ing, of Louis, (F.) Méthode numérique, consists in observing every case and every symptom of a case numerically, so as to insure, as far as practicable, accuracy of observation; and to enable us, by the analysis and collation of such facts, to deduce general laws and conclusions.

Also, the application of numbers to the study of disease. See Statistics, medical.

METH'OD, READ'Y, of Dr. Marshall Hall, see Ready method—m. Sylvester's, see Sylvester's method.

Méthode Numérique, Method, numerical; Statistics, medical—m. Perturbatrice, Perturbatrix, (medicina)—m. Stibio-dermique, see Unguentum antimonii.

Method'ical Compres'sion, see Compression.

Method'ics, Methodists.

Methodiques, Methodists.

Meth'odists, Method'ical sect, Method'ics, (F.) Méthodistes, Méthodiques. A sect of physicians whose doctrine was in vogue, after that of the Empirics and Dogmatists, towards the end of the first century. According to the Methodists, of whom Themison was the chief, almost every disease is dependent on contraction or relaxation—strictum or laxum. To these two causes they added a third—mixed or compound—to include those affections which partook of the two characters. The doctrine, Medici'na method'ica, Methodism'us, Meth'odism, resembled, in some respects, that of Brown.

Methodol'ogy (Med'ical), Methodolog'ia Med'ica, (μεθοδος, 'method,' and λογος, 'a discourse,') A word used, by the French more especially, to signify method applied to the study of any science. Medical Methodology, consequently, means method applied to the study of medicine.

Meth'odus, (μεθοδος,) Method—m. Cataleptica, see Cataleptic—m. Celsiana, see Lithotomy—m. Curatoria, Therapeutics.

METH'ODUS DERIVATO'RIA. The derivative or revellent system of treatment.

METH'ODUS ENDERMAT'ICA seu ENDER'MICA, see Endermic—m. Franconiana, see Lithotomy—m. Guytoniana, see Lithotomy—m. Medendi, Method of cure, Therapeutics.

Methoma'nia, (μεθη, 'drunkenness,' and μανια, 'mania,') An irresistible desire for intoxicating substances. See Temulencia, Enomania, Dipsomania.

Meth'u, (μεθη,) Wine, see Temulentia.

Meth'yl, Chlo'ride of, see Methylene, bichloride of.

METH'YL, I'ODIDE OF, Methyl Iodide. A colorless liquid, obtained by distilling together phosphorus, 1 p., iodine, 8 p., and wood-spirit, 12 or 15 p. When added to other substances, as strychnia, brucia, morphia, thebaia, codeia, &c., it forms methyl iodides, as iodide of methyl strychnia, iodide of methyl brucia, &c. The poisonous properties of each is greatly diminished by such additions. Some of them possess the physiological action of curare.

Meth'yl, Hy'drated Ox'ide of, Spiritus pyroxylicus.

Meth'ylene, Bichlo'ride of, Chlor'methyl, Chlo'romethyl. A colorless liquid, with an odor like chloroform, of a sp. gr. 1.344, introduced to notice by Dr. B. W. Richardson, of London, made by exposing to sunshine, in a glass globe, chlorine and gaseous chloride of methyl, and condensing. Chlo'ride of Meth'yl is itself prepared by heating together wood-spirit, common salt, and sulphuric acid, and collecting the evolved gas over water. It is a less manageable anæsthetic than the bichloride, which produces insensibility without previous excitement, and continuing longer than other anæsthetics. The quantity used averaged, in the cases thus far cited, about a drachm every five minutes.

METH'YLENE, BIHY'DRATE OF, Spiritus pyroxylicus.

METH'YLENE ETHER. A mixture of methylene bichloride and ethylic ether has been so named by Dr. B. W. Richardson. It is said by him to be a very agreeable, unirritating, and safe anæsthetic.

Meth'ysis, (μεθύσις,) Temulentia.

Methys'mus, (μεθύς, 'intoxication,') Temulentia.

Methys'ticus, (μεθύστικός,) That which causes or pertains to drunkenness.

Methystophyl'lum Glauco'um, (μεθύστροφύλλον, 'intoxicating,' and φυτόν, 'a leaf,') A South African plant, Nat. Ord. Amyridaceæ, an infusion of whose leaves is pleasant to the taste, and is used in bronchitis, asthma, and other thoracic diseases. With the Bushmen and others it is a favorite beverage, and is called by them Boschjesmansstee, 'Bushman's tea.' It is also chewed.

Métis, (from mistus, 'mixed,') see Hybrid.

Métissage, Crossing.

Metodonti'asis, (meta, and οδοντίασις, 'dentition,') Faulty development of the teeth.

Metopa'ges, (μετώπον, 'front,' and πηγνυμι, 'I fix,') Symphycephalus.

Metopan'tra, (metopon, and αντρον, 'a cave,') Frontal sinuses.

Metopantal'gia, (metopantira, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the frontal sinuses.

Metopantri'tis, gen. Metopantri'tidis, Inflammat'io si'nuum fronta'lium, (metopantira, and itis,) Inflammation of the frontal sinuses.

Meto'pion, Bubon galbanum.

Meto'pium, (μετωπίος, 'pertaining to the forehead,') Mesophryon.

Metopodyn'ia, (metopon, and οδυνη, 'pain,') Neuralgia frontalis.

Meto'pon, (μετώπον, from meta, and ωψ, 'the eye,') Front, Frontal bone.

Met'oposcopy, Metoposcop'ia, (μετοποσκόπια, from metopon, and σκοπεῖν, 'to view,') The art of knowing the temperament and character of a person by inspecting the traits of his forehead or face. See Physiognomy.

Me'tra, Uterus.

Metra'cine'sis, (metra, a, privative, and κινω, 'I move,') Feebleness of labor pains.

Me'træ, (μητραί, pl. of μητρα, 'the womb,') Secundines.

Metraemorrha'gia, (metra, and hæmorrhagia,) Metrorrhagia.

Metraemorrhoi'des, (metra, and αἱμορροΐδες, 'hemorrhoids,') Hemorrhoids or varicose veins at the orifice of the uterus.

Metral'gia, Metrodyn'ia, Uteral'gia, (metra, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the uterus. See Hyster'algia.

Metranæ'mia, (metra, and anæmia,) An anæmic condition of the uterus.

Metranas'trophê, (metra, and αναστροφή, 'inversion,') Uterus, inversion of the.

Metraneurys'mus, (metra, and ανευρύσμος, 'dilatation,') Metreury'sma.

Metratre'sia, Imperforat'io u'teri, (metra, and απροία, 'imperforation,') An unnatural closure of the uterus.

Metratroph'ia, (metra, a, 'privative,' and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Atrophy or want of development of the uterus.

Metraux'é, Hypertroph'ia seu Sarco'sis u'teri, (metra, and αυξη, 'increase,') Hypertrophy of the uterus.

Metrecta'sia, (metra, and εκτασις, 'dilatation,') Dilatation of the womb.

Metrelco'sis, Metrelco'sis, (metra, and ελκος, 'an ulcer,') Ulceration of the uterus.

Metremphrax'is, (metra, and εμπράσσω, 'I obstruct,') Obstruction of the womb or of the vessels of the womb — Infarc'tus u'teri. A name under which some authors have confounded chronic inflammation of that viscus, and the different degenerations to which it is exposed.

Metremphyse'ma, gen. Metremphyse'matis, Physometra.

Metren'chyta, Metren'chytes, (metra, and εγχεω,

'I inject,') Injection of the uterus. Substances injected into the uterus are called Metren'chyta.

Metreury's'ma, gen. Metreury's'matis, Metranenry's'mus, (metra, and εννομα, 'dilatation,') A morbid dilatation of the womb.

Metrelco'sis, Metrelcosis.

Metrhymeni'tis, gen. Metrhymeni'tidis, (metra, ὑμην, 'membrane,' and itis,) see Metritis.

Me'tria, (from metra,) Puerperal fever.

Met'ric Weights, Weights, metric.

Me'trine, (from μητρα, 'uterus,') A term proposed by Dr. Wm. Farr for the specific zymotic principle by which puerperal fever — me'tria — is propagated.

Metriopathi'a, (μετριος, 'tempered,' and παθος, 'affection,') State of an individual whose passions are temperate.

Métrite, Metritis.

Metri'tis, gen. Metri'tidis, (metra, and itis,) Fe'bris uteri'na, Hysteri'tis, Empres'ma Hysteri'tis, Inflammat'io U'teri, Metrophlogo'sis, Inflammat'ion of the U'terus or Womb, (F.) Inflammation de la matrice, Hystérite, Métrite. The characteristic symptoms of this affection are:—pain, swelling, and tenderness in the hypogastric region, with heat, pain, and tenderness of the os uteri; vomiting, smallness, and frequency of pulse. It occurs most frequently after delivery, Lochometri'tis, when there is generally suppression of the lochial discharge. The treatment must be vigorous, — bleeding early, so as to make a decided impression; followed by a full dose of opium, fomentations, blisters, &c.

Acute inflammation of the womb, seated in its internal membrane, Endometri'tis, Metrhymeni'tis, Enmetri'tis, has been called Inflammat'io catarrhalis u'teri or Acute catarrh', (F.) Catarrhe aigu, of that viscus. It is known by the discharge of a clear, stringy fluid per vaginam; preceded by pains, which, from the hypogastric region, shoot to the thighs, groins, &c., with more or less fever. It requires the antiphlogistic treatment. Chronic metritis sometimes succeeds the acute. To it must be referred the indurations, observed in the uterus, and many of the leucorrhœal discharges to which females are subject. Chronic endometritis intensified at the menstrual period has received the name of Men'strual metritis. Inflammation of the substance or parenchyma of the uterus is called Parenchymatous metritis, Idiometri'tis.

METRI'TIS, MEN'STRUAL, see Metritis—m. Parenchymatous, see Metritis—m. Rheumatica, Metrorrhœma—m. Septica, Metrocace—m. Venosa, see Phlebitis.

Metroblennorrhœ'a, Leucorrhœa uteri.

Metroblennoze'mia, (metra, βλανα, 'mucus,' and ζημια, 'loss,') Leucorrhœa uteri.

Metrobotry'tes, (metra, and βοτρυς, 'a cluster of grapes,') Cauliflower excrescence of the uterus.

Metrocacê, Metri'tis sep'tica, Cacome'tra, Cacome'tria, (metra, and κακος, 'evil,') Putrescency or gangrene of the uterus.

Metrocamp'sis, (metra, and καμπη, 'a bending,') Hysteroloxia.

Metrocarcino'ma, gen. Metrocarcino'matis, Hystero'carcino'ma, U'teri carcino'ma, Cancer u'teri, (metra, and καρκινωμα, 'cancer,') Cancer of the uterus.

Metrocatarrhus, (metra, and καταρροὺς, 'catarrh,') Leucorrhœa uteri.

Metroce'lê, (metra, and κηλη, 'a rupture,') Hysterocele.

Metroce'lides, pl. of Metroce'lis, (μητηρ, 'mother,' and κηλεις, 'a mark,') Nævus.

Metrocholo'sis, (metra, and χολος, 'bile,') Fe'bris puerpera'lis bilio'sa.

Metrodyn'ia, (metra, and οδυνη, 'pain,') Metralgia.

Metrohæ'mia, (F.) Hypermétrôhémië, (metra, and áma, 'blood.') Hyperæmia or congestion of blood in the uterus.

Metrorhemorrhage, Metrorrhagia.

Metroleucorrhœa, Leucorrhœa uteri.

Metrolloxia, (metra, and loxos, 'oblique,') Hysteroloxia.

Metromalaco'ma, gen. Metromalaco'matis, (metra, and malakos, 'soft,') Hysteromalacia.

Metromalaco'sis, Hysteromalacia.

Metroma'nia, Nymphomania.

Metromy'zeus, (metra, and μυζω, 'I suck,') An exhausting syringe, to be applied to the os uteri for exhausting the womb in amenorrhœa.

Metron'eus, (metra, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') Hysteroneus.

Metroparal'ysis, (metro, and παλυσις, 'paralysis,') Paralysis of the uterus.

Metropathi'a, (metro, and παθος, 'affection,') An affection of the womb.

Méto-péritonite, Metropéritonitis — m. Puerpérale, see Peritonitis.

Metropéritoni'tis, gen. Metropéritoni'tidis, (metra, and peritonitis,) Inflammati'o uteri et peritonæi, (F.) Métropéritonite. Inflammation of the uterus and peritoneum. Puerperal Fever. See Peritonitis.

Metrophlebi'tis, gen. Metrophlebi'tidis, Phlebotomi'tis, (metra, φλεψ, gen. φλεβος, 'a vein, and itis,) Inflammation of the veins of the uterus. See Phlebitis.

METROPHLEBI'TIS PUERPERA'LIS, see Phlebitis and Puerperal fever.

Metrophlogo'sis, (metra, and φλογωσις, 'inflammation,') Metritis.

Metrophthi'sis, Phthi'sis uteri'na, (metra, and φθιω, 'I consume,') Consumption from ulceration of the uterus — Ul'cera seu Helco'sis uteri.

Metrophy'ma, gen. Metrophy'matis, (metra, and φωμα, 'a swelling,') Hysteroneus.

Metrophysete'ron, (metra, and φωσσω, 'I inflame,') An instrument for applying gasiform agents to the uterus.

Metropoletho'ra, Metryperæ'mia, (metra, and πληθωρα, 'fulness,') Congestion or hyperæmia of the uterus.

Metropol'ypus, Hys'teropol'ypus, Polypus U'teri, (metra, and polypus,) Polypus of the uterus.

Metroppto'sis, (metra, pro, and πτωσις, 'a falling,') Prolapsus uteri.

Metroppto'sis, Prolapsus uteri.

Metrorrhag'ia, Metæmorrhag'ia, Hæmorrhagia uteri'na seu uteri, Sanguiflux'us uteri'nis, San'guinis stillid'ium ab U'tero, Flu'or uteri'ni san'guinis, Proflu'vium San'guinis ex utero, Hys'terorrhag'ia sanguin'ea, Hys'terorrhœa, Hæmorrhœa uteri'na (of some), Menorrhag'ia (of some), Hæmatomæ'tra, Hæmatomæ'tra, U'terine Hem'orrhage, Hem'orrhage from the Womb, Flood'ing, Metrorhemorrhage, (F.) Hémorrhagie de la Matrice, Pertes, Pertes utérines rouges, P. de sang, (metra, and ῥήγνυμι, 'I break forth,') An effusion of blood from the inner surface of the uterus, either at the menstrual or other period; but in a greater quantity than proper. Uterine hemorrhage may be caused by those influences which produce hemorrhage in general. It happens, however, more frequently during pregnancy, and during or after delivery, when the vascular system of the uterus is so circumstanced as to favor its occurrence more than at other times. The termination of metrorrhagia is usually favorable. Should it, however, be very copious, or frequently recur, or should it happen to a great extent after delivery, death may take place very speedily; and, in some cases, without the discharge being perceptible; constituting internal hemorrhage.

Uterine hemorrhage may be active or passive; requiring obviously a different treatment. The main management is similar to that of hemorrhage in general; — the horizontal posture; acid drinks; free admission of cool air; cold applications to the loins, thighs, and abdomen; injection of cold water, even of iced water, into the vagina; plugging the vagina, so as to prevent the discharge per vaginam, and thus induce a coagulum in the mouths of the bleeding vessels. Such will be the special plan adopted where the hemorrhage has occurred in one not recently delivered. In uterine hemorrhage after delivery, the same cooling plan must be followed; but, as the flow of blood is owing to the uterus not contracting so as to constrict its vessels, pressure must be made on the abdomen to aid this; and, if necessary, the hand must be introduced into the uterus to stimulate it to contraction. Should the female be excessively reduced, excitants may be exhibited. The profuse exhibition of opium in such cases is, at least, a doubtful plan. Transfusion has, at times, been practised as a last resource.

Metrorrhœu'ma, gen. Metrorrhœu'matis, Rheumatism'us U'teri, Hys'teral'gia rheumat'ica seu catarrha'lis, Metri'tis rheumat'ica, (F.) Rhumatisme de l'utérus, (metra, and ῥευμα, 'defluxion,') 'rheumatism,') Rheumatism of the uterus.

Metrorrhex'is, (metra, and ῥηξις, 'rupture,') Uterus, rupture of the.

Metrorrhœ'a, (metra, and ῥω, 'I flow,') A protracted discharge of any fluid from the uterus.

Metrosalpingi'tis, gen. Metrosalpingi'tidis, (metrosalpinx, and itis, 'inflammation,') Inflammation of the Fallopian tube.

Metrosalpingorrhex'is, (metrosalpinx, and ῥηξις, 'rupture,') Rupture of a Fallopian tube.

Metrosal'pinx, gen. Metrosalpin'gis, (metra, and σαλπιγξ, 'a trumpet,') Tube, Fallopian.

Metrosclir'rhys, Hysterosclir'rhys, Scir'rhys seu Carcino'ma uteri, (metra, and σκιρῶς, 'scirrhus,') Scirrhus of the uterus.

Metrosclio'ma, gen. Metrosclio'matis, (metra, and σχιλιος, 'oblique,') Hysteroloxia.

Me'troscope, Metrosco'pium, (metra, and σκοπω, 'I view,') An instrument, invented by M. Nauche, for listening to the sounds of the heart of the fetus, in uterogestation, when they are imperceptible through the parietes of the abdomen. The extremity of the instrument — the first notion of which was given to M. Nauche by the stethoscope of Laënnec — is introduced into the vagina and applied against the neck of the uterus.

Metrostax'is, (metra, and σταξ, 'a drop,') U'terine Epistax'is. Hemorrhage occurring a few days after ovariectomy, before menstruation could possibly be re-established.

Metrostere'sis, (metra, and στερησις, 'privation,') Extirpation or absence of uterus.

Metrosynize'sis, Hysterosynize'sis, (metra, and συνιζις, 'running together,') Morbid union of the uterus to adjacent parts.

Métrotome, Hysterotomus.

Metrotom'ia, (metra, and τομή, 'section,') Cæsarean section.

Metryperæ'mia, (metra, and hyperæmia,) Metropolethora.

Metryperæsthe'sis, (metra, and hyperæsthesis,) See Uterus, irritable.

Metrypercine'sis, (metra, hyper, 'excess,') κίνησις, 'motion,') Excessive activity of labor pains.

Meu, Æthusa meum.

Meulière, (from mola, 'a mill,') Molar.

Me'um, (from μικρον, 'small,') in allusion to the leaves, Æthusa meum — m. Anethifolium, Æthusa meum — m. Athamanticum, Æthusa meum.

Meurtrissure, (from [L.] mors, gen. mortis, 'death,') Contusion.

Me'vium, Syphilis.

Mex'ico, Min'eral Springs of. At Guadalupe, near the city of Mexico, there is a chalybeate spring, to which miraculous power is said to be ascribed. At Peñon de los Baños, to the east of the city, there are thermal springs of repute.

Mez'ea, (μεζεία.) Genital organs.
Meze'reon, Daphne mezereum.
Meze'reum, Daphne mezereum—m. Acetatum, see Daphne mezereum.

Miam'ma, gen. Miam'matis, (μιαμμα,) Miasma.

Mian'sis, (μιανσις,) Miasma.

Mia'ria, (μιαρία,) Miasma.

Mi'asm, Miasma.

Mias'ma, pl. Mias'mata, Mi'asm, (μιασμα, 'a stain,' from μιανω, 'I contaminate,') Miam'ma, Mian'sis, Mia'ria, Mias'mus, Inquinamen'tum, Molyn'sis, Contagium. The word miasm has, by some, been employed synonymously with contagion. It is now used more definitely for any emanation, either from the bodies of the sick, or from animal and vegetable substances, or from the earth, especially in marshy districts, (Marsh poi'son, Efflu'vium palus'trē, Gas palus'trē, Limnoph'e'tis, [F.] Intoxication des Marais, Infection palud'e'enne), which may exert a morbid influence on those who are exposed to its action. To these terrestrial emanations—the Koinomias'mata of Dr. E. Miller, of New York—the Italians give the name aria cattiva and intemperie, but, more commonly, malaria ('bad air'). The effluvia, from decomposition of matter derived from the human body, were called Idiomias'mata (κοινος, 'common,' and ιδιος, 'personal').

Miasmatic, Miasmaticus. Belonging or relating to miasmata. Sauvages, in his classification of diseases according to their etiology, has a class under the name Mor'bi miasmatici, miasmatic diseases; and Miasmatici (morbi) is an order of the class Zymotici of Dr. Wm. Farr. A fever that arises from marshy miasms is styled mala'rious, palu'dal, Helop'yra, Helopyr'etus, &c.

Mias'mus, Miasma.

Miaulantes, (miauler, 'to mew,' formed by onomatopœia.) See Convulsionnaire.

Mi'cæ Pa'nis, ('crumbs of bread,') see Triticum.

Mica'tio Cor'dis, (micare, micatum, 'to move quickly,') Systole.

Miche'lia Cham'paca, (after P. A. Micheli, a Florentine botanist,) Champaca, Michelia Tejam-paca. Ord. Magnoliaceæ. An Oriental tree, much prized for the odor and beauty of its flowers. The oily infusion of the flowers is employed in the Moluccas in headache.

Michi'gan, Min'eral Wa'ters of. There are waters similar to Saratoga, but more purgative, at Lansing, Ingham Co.; purgative waters at Midland; saline springs at Spring Lake; alkaline chalybeates at St. Louis, Gratiot Co.; waters rich in sulphuretted hydrogen at Alpena; and calcic waters at Grand Rapids, Eaton Rapids, and Fruitport in Ottawa Co., the latter resembling those of Kreuznach.

Micle'ta. A medicine used by Mesue for arresting hemorrhage; perhaps, according to Siebenhaar, from the Arabic, michnata, 'proved by experience.'

Micranatom'ia, (micro, and anatomia,) see Anatomy.

Micrangi'a, (micro, and αγγειον, 'a vessel,') Capillary vessels.

Micrenceph'alium, (micro, and εγκεφαλος, 'en-cephalon,') Cerebellum.

Micrenceph'alon, Cretinism.

Micrenceph'alum, Cerebellum.

Mi'cro, (μικρος, 'small,') in composition, small.

Microceph'al'ia, (micro, and κεφαλη, 'head,') See Microcephalus.

Microceph'al'ic, Microceph'al'icus, (micro, and κεφαλη, 'head,') Having an unusually small head.

Microceph'alus, Microceph'alus, Microcra'nus. One who has a small head. A monster having a small imperfect head, or a small imperfect cranium. The condition is called Microceph'al'ia, Craniostenosis, (F.) Microcephalie. With some it means Idiotism.

Microchem'ical, Microchem'icus. Relating or appertaining to the character of a substance as viewed by the microscope.

Micrococ'ci, (micro, and κοκκος, 'a grain,') Micrococy'mæ, Mi'crozymes, (F.) Microzoaires. Microscopic living creatures found in the sediment of water, when examined for hygienic purposes. They are small points or jointed rods, appearing in that liquid only when, in addition to oxygen, there are present an organic carbonaceous substance, a nitrogenous substance, and a phosphate. Bacte'ria, Vibrio'nes, and Microzymes are by some considered synonymous.

Microcor'ia, (micro, and κορη, 'pupil,') Myosis.

Mi'crocosm, Microcos'mus, (μικροκοσμος,) (micro, and κοσμος, 'world,') A little world. Some philosophers have given this appellation to man, whom they consider as the epitome of all that is admirable in the world. The world they call Ma'crocosm, (from μακρος, 'great,')

Microcosme'tor, (micro, and κοσμητωρ,—from κοσμιω,—'a regulator,') Vital principle.

Microcos'mica Mach'ina. The organism of man—m. Scientia, Physiology.

MICROCOS'MICUM SAL, with the ancients meant the salts of the urine,—Sales uri'næ.

Microcosmograph'ia, (microcosmus, and γραφη, 'a description,') Physiology.

Microcos'mus, Microcosm.

Microcoust'ic, Microcous'ticus, (micro, and ακουω, 'I hear,') This word, as well as Microph'onous, (μικρος, 'small,' and φωνη, 'voice,') means anything that contributes to increase the intensity of sound—as the speaking-trumpet—by collecting the sonorous rays.

Microcra'nus, (micro, and κρανιον, 'cranium,') Microcephalus.

Microglos'sia, (micro, and γλωσσα, 'tongue,') Original smallness of tongue.

Microleuconympha'a, (from micro, λευκος, 'white,' and nymphæa,) Nymphæa alba.

Microl'ogy, (μικρολογία, from micro, and λογος, 'a description,') See Microscopy.

Microm'elus, Hemim'eles, (micro, and μελος, 'a limb,') A monster having imperfectly developed extremities.

Microm'matus, (μικρομματος, from micro, and ομμα, gen. ομματος, 'the eye,') Microphthalmus.

Microph'onous, (micro, and φωνη, 'voice,') See Microcoustic.

Microphthal'mus, Microm'matus, (micro, and οφθαλμος, 'eye,') One who has small eyes. A monster with two small, or imperfectly developed eyes. A small eye,—Ophthalmid'ium, Ophthal'mium.

Mi'crophytes, (micro, and φυτον, 'a vegetable,') Microscopic spores of plants—mi'crospores—sometimes detected in marshy atmospheres.

Micro'pia, (micro, and ωψ, 'the eye,') Microp'sia. A condition usually dependent on retinitis or choroido-retinitis, in which objects appear smaller to the patient than they really are.

Micropod'ia, Micropus.

Microproso'pus, Aproso'pus, (micro, and προσωπον, 'face,') A monster in which a part of the face is absent.

Microp'sia, Micropia.

Mi'cropus, (micro, and πους, gen. ποδος, 'foot,') One who has small feet. The condition is called Micropod'ia.

Mi'cropyle, Microp'yta, (micro, and πυλη, 'gate,') An opening in the episperm of seeds, through which the fecundating pollen enters the ovule to fecundate it. It has been supposed that such a micropyle exists in the human ovule.

Micror'chides, pl. of Micror'chis, (micro, and ορχις, gen. ορχιδος, 'a testicle,') They who have very small testicles.

Microscop'ic. Relating to microscopy. An eye capable of distinguishing very minute objects is sometimes called a microscopic eye.

Mi'croscopy or Micros'copy, Microscop'ia, (micro, and σκοπη, 'a view,') Observation by the microscope; an important agency in the examination of the healthy and morbid tissues. A description of the results of such observation is Micrography. Micrology is often used with the same signification, and for a treatise on the microscope and the results of microscopy.

Microsoma'tia, (micro, and σωμα, gen. σωματος, 'body.') Nanosomia.

Microsoma'tia, (micro, and σωμα, 'body.') Nanosomia.

Microspec'troscope. A spectrum arrangement applied to a microscope for spectroscopic examination.

Microsphy'ctus, (micro, and σφυγμος, 'pulse.') Smallness or weakness of pulse.

Microspores, see Microphytes.

Micros'poron Audou'i'ni, (micro, and σπορον, 'a seed, a spore,') see Fungus, Parasites, and Porrigo decalvans—m. Furfur, see Chloasma, Fungus, and Parasites—m. Mentagrophytes, Mentagrophyte; see Fungus, and Parasites.

Mic'rosthene's, (μικρος, 'small,' and σθινος, 'strength,') A group of the mammalia having a small size, in contradistinction to the Megasthenes, which are the largest and most powerful of the mammalia.

Micros'tomus, (micro, and στομα, 'mouth,') One who has a small mouth. The condition is called Microstom'ia or Microstoma; it is usually congenital, and due to some deficiency in the lower jaw.

Microte'sia, (μικροτης, 'smallness,') Par'tium organica'rum par'e'itas morbo'sa. Morbid smallness of organic parts.

Microtrape'zia, (micro, and τραπεζα, 'a table,') Leptotrophia.

Microtrich'ia, (micro, and τριχ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,') Fineness or shortness of hair.

Microtr'oph'ia, (micro, and τροφη, 'nourishment,') Leptotrophia.

Microzoaires, Micrococci.

Microzy'mæ, Micrococci.

Mic'rozymes, Micrococci.

Mic'tio, (mingere, mic'tum, 'to pass the urine,') Micturition—m. Cruenta, Hæmaturia—m. Inopportuna, Enuresis—m. Involuntaria, Enuresis—m. Sanguinea, Hæmaturia.

Miction, Micturition.

Micturit'ion, Mic'tio, Mic'tus, Ure'sis, Uri'asis, Omiche'sis, (F.) Miction, Action de pisser, Pissement, (micturio,—mingere, mictum,—'I make water,') The act of making water—Urination. Also, morbid frequency of passing the water.

Mic'tus, Micturition—m. Cruentus, Hæmaturia.

Mid'brain, Mesencephalon.

Mid'riff, (from Sax. mið, 'middle,' and hryr, 'the bowels,') Diaphragm.

Mid'wife, (mið, 'with,' and wif, 'wife,' or með, 'meed,' 'recompense,' and wif, 'wife,') Matro'na, Obstet'rix, Mu'llier obstetrix, Mæ'a, Mæ'as, Mæu'tria, Aces'toris, Aces'tris, Aces'tria, Sa'ga, (Sc.) How'dy, (Prov.) Grac'wife, Hand'woman, Head's-woman, How'dywife, (F.) Sage femme, Accouch'euse, Ventrière, Matrone, Levandièrre. A female who practises obstetrics.

Mid'wifery, Obstetrics.

Miel, Mel—m. d'Acétate de Cuivre, Linimentum æuginis—m. Boraté, Mel boracis—m. Dé-puré, Mel despumatum—m. Despumé, Mel despumatum—m. Médecinal, Mellitum—m. Mercuriale composé, Mellitum de mercuriali compositum—m. Rosat, Mel rosæ—m. Scillitique, Mellite de scille.

Migraine, (abridged from) Hemicrania.

Migra'na, Hemicrania.

Migration du Lambeau, ('migration of the flap,') See Flap.

Mika'nia, Gua'co, (after Prof. J. Mikan, botanist of Prague,) Guaco.

Mikroceph'alus, Microcephalus.

Mil, (from milium, 'millet,') Panicum miliaceum.

Mil'foil, (mille, 'a thousand,' and folium, 'a leaf,') Achillea millefolium.

Mil'ia, Miliaria.

Miliaire, Miliary, Miliary fever.

Milia'ria, (milium, 'millet,') Mil'ia. Miliary fever.

MILIA'RIA CRYSTAL'INA, Sudamina—m. Sudans, Miliary fever—m. Sudatoria, Miliary fever.

Mil'iarine, (from miliaria,) A term proposed by Dr. Wm. Farr for the specific principle by which miliary fever is propagated.

Milia'ris, Miliary—m. Sudatoria, Sudor Anglicus, S. Picardicus.

Mil'ary, Milia'ris, (F.) Miliaire. Resembling millet seed,—hence, miliary fever, miliary glands.

MIL'ARY FE'VER, Em'physis milia'ria, Milia'ris, Milia'ria, M. sudans seu sudato'ria, Su'dor, S. milia'ris, Pap'ula milia'ris, Eczanthe'ma milia'ria, Syn'ochus milia'ria, Aspre'do milia'cea, Fel'bris milia'ris seu essero'sa seu puncticula'ris seu culicula'ris seu vesicula'ris seu lenticula'ris seu purpura'te ru'bra et al'ba milia'ris, Pur'pura puerpera'rum, P. milia'ris, Pap'ula sudo'ris, Millet seed rash, (F.) Miliaire, Millet, Pourpre blanc, Millet. It is so called from the eruption resembling the seed of the milium or millet. Fever, accompanied by an eruption of small, red, isolated pimples, rarely confluent, but almost always very numerous, slightly raised above the skin, and presenting, at the end of 24 hours, a small vesicle filled with a white transparent fluid, which quickly dries up, and separates in the form of scales. Miliary fever is now rare, in consequence of the cooling practice in fevers and other states of the system. It is almost always brought on by external heat, and hence the prevention is obvious. The treatment is simple. It requires merely the antiphlogistic regimen, in ordinary cases.

MIL'ARY GLANDS, Sebaceous glands—m. Granulations or Tubercles, see Granulation.

Milieu (F.), (mi, 'middle,' and lieu, 'place,') me'dius lo'cus,) Medium.

Mil'ii Sem'ina, ('seeds of millet,') Panicum Italicum.

Mili'olum, (dim. of milium, 'millet,') Cenchr'id'ion. A small tumor on the eyelids, resembling, in size, a millet seed.

Milita'ris Her'ba, Achillea millefolium.

Mil'itary, Milita'ris, (miles, militis, 'a soldier,') (F.) Militaire. Pertaining to a soldier or an army—as Mil'itary med'icine, Medici'na milita'ris, (F.) Médecine militaire; and Military surgery, Chirur'gia milita'ris, (F.) Chirurgie militaire, medicine and surgery applicable to the soldier.

Milk, (Sax. melc,) Lac, Gal'a, Humor lac'teus, La'tex ni'veus, (F.) Lait. A fluid secreted by the mammary glands of the females of the mammalia. The skimmed milk of the cow, (F.) Lait de Vache, contains water, caseous matter, traces of butter, sugar of milk, chloride of sodium, phosphate, and acetate of potassa, lactic acid, lactate of iron, and earthy phosphates. The cream is formed of butter, casein, and whey, in which there is sugar of milk and salts. When examined by the microscope, milk is seen to contain a large number of particles, of irregular size and shape, varying from $\frac{1}{12500}$ th to $\frac{1}{3040}$ th of an inch in diameter, floating in a colorless fluid—li'quor lac'tis. They consist of oily matter, surrounded by a delicate pellicle, and are the milk globules.

Cow's milk is employed for the preparation of cream, butter, cheese, whey, sugar of milk, and frangipane. It is useful in a number of cases of poisoning; either by acting as a demulcent, or by decomposing certain poisons, or by combining with others so as to neutralize them. It is constantly employed as aliment, and may be regarded as an emulsion in which butter and casein are found in suspension. When taken into the stomach, it is coagulated by the gastric fluids, and the coagulum is digested like any other solid. The watery parts are absorbed.

Between milk, flour, and blood, there is great similarity of composition. The following table is given by Dr. Robert Dundas Thompson:

MILK.	FLOUR.	BLOOD.
Curd or Casein	Fibrin, Albumen, Casein, Gluten,	Fibrin, Albumen, Casein, Coloring matter.
Butter.....	Oil.	Fat.
Sugar.....	Sugar, Starch,	Sugar.
Chloride of potassium, sodium, Phosphate of soda, lime, magnesia, iron,	Do.	Do.

From a considerable number of experiments, Messrs. Deyeux and Parmentier class the six kinds of milk, which they examined, according to the following table, as regards the relative quantity of materials they contain:

CASEIN.	BUTTER.	SUGAR OF MILK.	SERUM.
Goat Sheep Cow	Sheep Cow Goat	Woman Ass Mare	Ass Woman Mare
Ass Woman Mare	Woman Ass Mare	Cow Goat Sheep	Cow Goat Sheep

MILK AB'SCESS, Mastodynia apostematosa.

MILK, AL'MOND, Emulsio amygdalæ.

MILK AND SO'DA WA'TER. An agreeable mode of taking milk in cases where it lies heavily on the stomach. Heat, nearly to boiling, a teacupful of milk; dissolve in it a teaspoonful of sugar, put it into a large tumbler, and pour over it two-thirds of a bottle of soda water.

MILK, ASS'S, (F.) Lait d'Anesse, considerably resembles human milk, of which it has the consistence, smell, and taste; but it contains a little less cream, and more soft, caseous matter. It is often used by those laboring under pulmonary affections.

Artific'ial Ass's Milk may be made by taking gelatin, 3ss., dissolving it, by the aid of heat, in barley water, Oij., adding refined sugar, 3j., pouring into the mixture new milk, Oj., and beating the whole with a whisk.

It may also be prepared by dissolving sugar of milk, 3ij. in tepid skimmed cow's milk, Oj.

MILK BLOTCH, Porrigo larvalis.

MILK, CON'CENTRATED, Preserved milk. Various processes have been employed to obtain milk in a form ready at any time for use. By one of these milk immediately from the cow is heated in a boiler, sugar being added, and the contents constantly stirred to favor evaporation. When the volume is reduced four-fifths, the concentrated liquid is poured into cans, which are hermetically closed, and then exposed to heat in a boiler.

MILK CRUST, Porrigo larvalis.

MILK CURE, (F.) Cure de lait. The treatment of disease by means of milk alone, or chiefly. See Milk, skim.

MILK, EWE'S, (F.) Lait de Brebis. It affords more cream than cow's milk; but the butter is softer. The caseum, on the contrary, is fatter, and more viscid. It contains less serum than cow's milk. The Roquefort cheeses are made from it.

MILK FE'VER, see Fever, milk—m. Fistula, Mastosyrinx—m. Glass, Breast glass—m. Globules, see Milk.

MILK, GOAT'S, (F.) Lait de Chèvre, resembles cow's milk: the butyaceous matter, however, which enters into its composition is more solid than that of the cow.

Artific'ial Goat's Milk may be made by taking fresh suet, 3j., cutting it into small pieces; tying it in a muslin bag, large enough to leave the morsels free from compression; and boiling in a quart of cow's milk, sweetened with a quarter of an ounce of white sugar candy.

Used as a diet in scrofulous cases, and also in phthisis.

MILK, GREEN, Colostrum—m. Hedge, Euphorbia tirucalli.

MILK, HU'MAN, (F.) Lait de femme,—contains more sugar of milk, and cream, and less caseum, than cow's milk. Its composition differs according to the distance of time from delivery.

MILK, I'ODATED. Iodine dissolved in alcohol and intimately mixed with milk until there is no taste, color, or smell of iodine.

MILK KNOT, Galactogan'glion, (F.) Ganglion laiteux. The knots often observed in the breast after inflammation of the organ, or for some time after the suppression of the secretion. They generally end by resolution.

MILK LEG, Phlegmatia dolens.

MILK, MALE'S, Sperm.

MILK, MARE'S, (F.) Lait de Jument,—contains only a small quantity of fluid butyaceous matter; a little caseum, softer than that of cow's milk, and more serum.

MILK, PRESERVED, Milk, concentrated.

MILK PUNCH, see Punch—m. Scall, Porrigo larvalis.

MILK SICK'NESS, Sick stom'ach, Swamp sick'ness, Tires, Slows, Stiff joints, Pa'king fe'ver, Riv'er sick'ness. A disease occasionally observed in the States of Alabama, Indiana, and Kentucky, which affects both man and cattle, but chiefly the latter. It is attributed in cattle to something eaten or drunk by them; and in man to the eating of the flesh of animals laboring under the disease. Owing to the tremors that characterize it in animals, it is called the Trem'bles. It is endemic.

The symptoms of the disease are such as are produced by the acronarcotic class of poisons—vomiting, purging, extreme nervous agitation, &c.; and the approved indications of treatment appear to be—gentle emetics and laxatives, with quiet, and mucilaginous drinks.

MILK, SKIM. A treatment proposed for various morbid conditions, as diabetes and the form of Bright's disease known as fatty degeneration of the kidney, causing the sugar in the former, and the albumen in the latter, to disappear from the urine. It contains not only casein, but also a saccharine assimilable principle—sugar of milk—the fatty matter having been separated by the cream. The diet of the patient is restricted to skim milk, the quantity being augmented until several pints are taken daily.

MILK, SNAKE'S, Euphorbia corollata.

MILK, SOLID'IFIED. Milk, to which little less than an equal weight of white sugar has been added, evaporated to dryness. When redissolved in water, it has all the qualities of fresh milk, with the additional quantity of sugar.

To milk, evaporated to dryness, MM. Grimaud and Galais have given the names Lactoline and Lacteine.

MILK SPOTS, Maculae albæ, Strophulus—m. Stone, Morochthus.

MILK, SU'GAR OF, Sugar of milk.

Milk'woman, Nurse, wet.

Milk'y, Lactic—m. Stains, Patches, white.

Mill Moun'tain, Linum catharticum.

Millefeuille, ([L.] mille, 'a thousand,' and folium, 'a leaf.') Achillea millefolium—m. Aquatique, Phellandrium aquaticum.

Millefeuille, Omasum.

Millefo'lium, Achillea millefolium.

Millemor'bia Scrophula'ria, (mille, 'a thousand,' and morbus, 'a disease,') Scrophularia nodosa.

Millep'edes, pl. of Millepes, (mille, 'a thousand,' and pedes, 'feet,') Onisci aselli.

Millepertuis Ordinaire, (from mille, 'a thousand,' and pertuis, 'a hole,' because the leaf, when held to the light, seems pierced with holes.) Hypericum perforatum.

Millet, (from milium, 'millet,') Aphthæ, Miliary fever—m. Barbadoes, Panicum Italicum—m. Common, Panicum miliaceum—m. Gray, Lithospermum officinale—m. Indian, Panicum Italicum—m. des Oiseaux, Panicum Italicum—m. Ordinaire, Panicum miliaceum.

Mil'letseed Rash, Miliary fever.

Mil'lie and Christi'na, see Carolina Twins.

Mil'ligramme, (mille, 'a thousand,' and γραμμα, 'a gramme,') The thousandth part of a gramme:—about 0.0154 Troy grain.

Milligra'na, Herniaria glabra.

Millimètre, Millim'eter, (mille, 'a thousand,' and μέτρον, 'measure,') The thousandth part of the metre:—equal to 0.03937 English inch, or about two-fifths of a line.

Millot, Miliary fever.

Mill'stone-ma'kers' Phthi'sis, Phthisis Fa-brum Molario'rum. A form of severe bronchitis dependent on the inhalation of the fine particles which separate in the manufacture of millstones.

Mil'phæ, (μλφαί,) Madarosis.

Milpho'sis, (μλφωσις,) Madarosis.

Milt (Sax.), Melt, Spleen.

Milt'like. An epithet for a form of cancer, characterized by a soft pale growth, containing scarcely any blood; so called from its resemblance to the milt of a fish. See Encephaloid.

Mil'tus, Plumbi oxydum rubrum.

Milt'waste, Asplenium.

Mil'za Ne'ra (L.). A name given by Tigri to melanæmia, from the blackness of the spleen in it.

Minera'lum, Antimonium.

Mi'ners' Asth'ma, Asthma Metallario'rum, Carbona'ceous or Black Phthi'sis, Mi'ners' Consumption.

A condition met with in miners, being a form of severe bronchitic disease, in consequence of the peculiar atmosphere breathed by them. It is often associated with mitral insufficiency, both conditions being apparently dependent on the great stress upon the circulatory and respiratory organs by the difficulties of egress from the mines.

Mi'ners' El'bow. An enlargement of a bursa over the olecranon, occurring in such as habitually lean upon it; often seen in those who work on the side in low-roofed mines.

Min'im, Min'imum, 'the least part or portion.' The 60th part of a fluidrachm. This measure was introduced by the London College of Physicians, in consequence of the uncertainty of the size of the drop, (see Gutta.) The subdivision of the wine pint has, accordingly, been extended to the 60th part of the fluidrachm; and glass measures, called "minim measures," have been adopted by the London College. The proportion between the minims and the drops of various fluid preparations is given under Gutta.

MIN'IM MEAS'URE. A measure for the divisions of a fluidrachm.

Minim'eter, (minimium, and μέτρον, 'measure,') An instrument for measuring minims, invented by Mr. Alsop. It consists of a glass tube, graduated from the conical point into minims; and having a piston, by the elevation of which, fluid may be drawn into the tube, and by its depression be forced from it.

Min'imum, Minim.

Min'ister Gymnas'tæ, Pædotribes.

Minitho'sis, (from μινθω, 'I diminish,') Meiosis.

Min'ium, Plumbi oxydum rubrum—m. Græcorum, Hydrargyri sulphuretum rubrum—m. Purum, Hydrargyri sulphuretum rubrum.

Min'nequa Springs. These chalybeate sulphur waters, in Bradford Co., Pennsylvania, contain carbonates of soda, magnesia, and lime, chlorides of sodium and potassium, sulphate of lime, oxide of iron, and alumina, sulphur, organic matter, carbonic acid, &c.

Mi'nor Hel'icis, ('smaller muscle of the helix,') A muscle situate on the posterior border of the helix of the ear, at its commencement in the fossa of the concha.

Minoratif, Laxative.

Minorati'vus, (from minor, 'less,') Laxative.

Mint, Mentha—m. Cat, Nepeta—m. Cock, Tanacetum balsamita—m. Curled, Mentha crispa—m. Horse, Monarda coccinea and M. punctata—m. Horse, hairy, Blephilia hirsuta—m. Horse, Ohio, Blephilia hirsuta—m. Horse, sweet, Cunila Mariana—m. Hyssop-leaved, Mentha cervina.

MINT JU'LEP. A drink, consisting of brandy, sugar, and pounded ice flavored by sprigs of mint. It is an agreeable alcoholic excitant.

MINT, MOUN'TAIN, Monarda coccinea—m. Mountain, common, Pyrenanthemum incanum—m. Pepper, Mentha piperita—m. Spear, Mentha viridis—m. Squaw, Hedeoma—m. Stone, Cunila Mariana—m. Tea, Infusum menthæ viridis—m. Water, mentha aquatica.

Min'tha, (μινθῆ,) Mint.

Minuthe'sis, (from μινθω, 'I diminish,') Meiosis.

Minu'tio Mon'achi, ('restriction of the monk,') A term used in the middle ages for any treatment adapted for 'lessening' the sexual energy.

Minyan'thes, Menyanthes.

Mio'sis, Meiosis.

Mi'rach, Abdomen.

Mire (old F.), A physician or surgeon.

Mirles, Rubeola.

Miroce'lé, Merocele.

Mir'rot, Daucus carota.

Misadir, Ammonia murias.

Misanthro'pia, (μισανθρωπία,) Misan'thropy, Ex-anthro'pia, Phyganthro'pia, (μισος, 'hatred,' and ανθρωπος, 'man.')

Aversion to man and society; — a symptom of melancholy, and hypochondriasis.

Miscar'riage, Abortion.

Miscegena'tion, (miscere, 'to mix,' and genus, 'a race.')

A mixture or amalgamation of races, as of the black with the white.

Mise-bas, [F.] ('laid down,')

Parturition.

Misere'rè Me'i, ('have pity on me,')

Ileus.

Mis'ery, (from miser, 'suffering,') see Pain.

Mishme Teeta, Coptis teeta.

Mis'mar, Mesemar. A name given by Avicenna to a kind of nodus, which forms on the toes as the sequel of contusion or inflammation of those parts.

Misog'yny, Misogyn'ia, (μισος, 'hatred,' and γυνή, 'a woman.')

Hatred of women. Repulsion for sexual intercourse.

Misopto'chus, (μισος, 'hatred,' and πτωχος, 'poor.')

That which has hatred for the poor. The gout has been so called by some, because it commonly affects the rich.

Missadan, Hydrargyrum.

Mis'sio San'guinis, Bloodletting.

Mississip'pi, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Cooper's Well, in Hinds county, four miles from Raymond and thirteen from Jackson, is a sulphureous saline, the chief constituents being the sulphates of soda and magnesia. These ingredients, with the peroxide of iron, render it a useful purgative and chalybeate. The waters are chiefly used in chronic gastroenteric affections. Ocean Springs, in Jackson county, is an acidulo-sulphureous chalybeate. The waters are considered efficacious in the treatment of scrofulous diseases of the skin.

Mis'tio, (from misceo, mistum, 'I mix,')

Mis-tura.

Mis'tletoe ([Sax.] mýrteltan,) Viscum album — m. Yellowish, Viscum flavesens.

Mistu'ra, Mix'is, Propolis'ma, Mig'ma, Mis'tio, Mis'tio, Mistu'ra, Mix'ture, (F.) Potion, Mélange. A mingled compound, in which different ingredients are contained in the fluid state, or suspended or not by means of mucilaginous or saccharine matter. In this sense, it is synonymous with the French Potion. In France, however, the word mixture is more frequently understood to mean a liquid medicine, which contains very active substances, and can only be administered by drops. A mixture, in other words, in the French sense, may be regarded as a potion deprived of watery vehicle. When it consists of materials that require to be shaken up when taken, it is sometimes termed Mistu'ra me'dia.

Mistura (S.). A fragrant yellow-colored water, used as a perfume by the ladies of Peru. It is prepared from gillyflower, jasmine, and flor de mistelu (Talinum umbellatum). See Campomanesia lineatifolia.

MISTU'RA ACA'CLÆ, Mucilago acaciæ.

MISTU'RA AC'IDI HYDROCYAN'ICI, Mix'ture of Prussic acid, Mélange pectoral (Magendie). (Medicinal Prussic acid, \mathfrak{z} j., Distilled water, \mathfrak{z} xiv., Pure sugar, \mathfrak{z} ss.) A dessertspoonful every morning and evening, as a pectoral, &c.

MISTU'RA AMMONI'ACI, Lac ammoniaci, Mix'ture of ammo'niac. (Ammoniac, \mathfrak{z} ij., Aquæ, Oss. Add the water gradually until they are perfectly mixed. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, \mathfrak{f} ss. to \mathfrak{f} ij.

MISTU'RA AMYGDALÆ, Emulsio amygdalæ.

MISTU'RA ASSAFCE'TIDÆ, Lac assafetida, Emulsio antihyster'ica, Mix'ture of assafet'ida, (F.) Lait d'assafetida. (Assafetida, \mathfrak{z} ij., Aquæ, Oss. Add the water gradually and rub together. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used where pills cannot be swallowed, and as a glyster in irritations during dentition, and in ascariides. Dose, \mathfrak{f} ss. to \mathfrak{f} ijss.

MISTU'RA ASSAFCE'TIDÆ PRO CLYS'MATÈ, Enema foetidum.

MISTU'RA CAM'PHORÆ, Aqua cam'phoræ, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Cam'phor mix'ture or ju'lep, Mistu'ra camphora'ta, Jula'pium e cam'phorâ seu camphora'tum, (F.) Julep camphré. (Camphor, \mathfrak{z} ij., Alcohol, \mathfrak{M} xl., Magnes. carb., \mathfrak{z} iv., Aquæ destillat., Oij. Rub the camphor with the alcohol, and afterwards with the magnesia; add the water, and filter. Ph. U. S.) Virtues like those of camphor. The French Codex (1866) has an Eau Camphrée, made by saturating distilled water with powdered camphor. See Emulsio camphoræ.

MISTU'RA CHLOROFOR'MI, Mix'ture of Chlo-ro-form. (Chloroform purif., \mathfrak{z} ss., Camphor, gr. lx., Vitell. ovi., j., Aquæ, \mathfrak{f} zvj.) Rub the yolk first by itself and then with the camphor previously dissolved in the chloroform, and gradually add the water. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, \mathfrak{f} zj. to \mathfrak{f} zss.

MISTU'RA CONTRAC'TA, ('a small mixture,') see Gutta.

MISTU'RA COR'NU US'TI, Decoc'tum cor'nu cervi-ni seu al'bum, Decoc'tion of burnt harts'horn, Mix'ture of burnt harts'horn, White Decoc'tion, (F.) Décoction blanche. (Cornuum ust., \mathfrak{z} ij., Acaciæ gum. cont., \mathfrak{z} j., Aquæ, Oij. Boil to Oij., constantly stirring, and strain. Ph. L.) The French Codex (1866) has a somewhat similar formula under the name of Decoc'tion Blanche de Sydenham.

MISTU'RA CREASO'TI, Cre'asote mix'ture. (Creasote, Acid. acetic. glacial., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{M} xvj., Sp. Junip., \mathfrak{f} ss., Syrup., \mathfrak{f} zj., Aquæ destill., \mathfrak{f} z xv.) Mix the creasote and the acid; add gradually the water, and then the syrup and spirit. Ph. B., 1867.) A fluidounce contains a minim of creasote.

MISTU'RA CRE'TÆ, Po'tio carbona'tis cal'cis, Mis-tu'ra creta'cea, Mucila'go cre'tica, Chalk or Creta'ceous mix'ture, Chalk ju'lep, (F.) Mixture de Craie. (Creta, \mathfrak{z} ss., Glycerin., \mathfrak{f} zss., Acaciæ prepar. in pulv., \mathfrak{z} ij., Aquæ cinnam., Aquæ, $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{f} ziv. Miscee. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Antacid and absorbent. Dose, \mathfrak{f} zj. to \mathfrak{f} ij.

MISTU'RA DIABOL'ICA. A mixture under this name is kept in many hospitals, for malingerers. It is made of sundry nauseous ingredients, as aloes, assafoetida, castor, &c., and is given so as to keep up a disagreeable impression on the gustatory nerves.

MISTU'RA EMETI'NÆ VOMITO'RIA, Emet'ic mix'ture of em'etine. (Emetine, gr. iv., Orange flower water, \mathfrak{z} ij., Syrup, \mathfrak{z} ss. M.) A dessertspoonful every half hour till it acts.

MISTU'RA FER'RI AROMAT'ICA, Aromatic mix'ture of i'ron. (Cinchon. Pallid. pulv., \mathfrak{z} j., Calumb. Rad. pulv., \mathfrak{z} ss., Caryophyll. cont., \mathfrak{z} ij., Ferri Fil., \mathfrak{z} ss., Tinct. Cardamom. Comp., \mathfrak{f} zij., Tinct. Aurant. Cort., \mathfrak{f} zss., Aquæ Menth. Piperit., q. s. Macerate the cinchona, calumba, cloves, and iron with \mathfrak{f} z xij. of the peppermint water, in a closed vessel for three days, agitating occasionally. Filter the liquid, and add as much peppermint water as will make it measure \mathfrak{f} z xijss. Add the tinctures, and preserve in a well-stopped bottle.)

MISTU'RA FER'RI COMPOS'ITA, Com'pound mix'ture of i'ron, (F.) Mixture de fer composée, Grif-fith's mixture. (Myrrhæ, Sacchar., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} j., Potass. bicarb., gr. xxv., Aquæ rosæ, \mathfrak{f} z vijss., Ferri sulph. in pulv., \mathfrak{z} j., Sp. lavand., \mathfrak{z} ss. Rub the myrrh, bicarbonate of potassium, and sugar with rose-water gradually added; then with spirit of lavender; and, lastly, the sulphate of iron. Pour the mixture directly into a glass bottle, and stop it close. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is tonic and emmenagogue, and is useful wherever iron is indicated.

MISTU'RA FERROSALI'NA, Mixture, ferrosaline.
MISTU'RA FUSCA, ('brown mixture,')

M. glycyrrhizæ composita — m. Gentianæ, see Infusum gentianæ compositum.

MISTU'RA GLYCYRRHI'ZÆ COMPOS'ITA, Mistu'ra

fus'ca, Com'pound mix'ture of Liq'urice, Brown Mix'ture. (Glycyrrhiz. in pulv. subtil., Acaciæ pulv., Sacchar., āā $\text{f}\text{ss.}$, Tinct. opii camphorat., $\text{f}\text{ij.}$, Vin. antimon., $\text{f}\text{ij.}$, Spirit. æther. nitros., $\text{f}\text{ss.}$, Aquæ, $\text{f}\text{xij.}$ Rub the liquorice, gum arabic, and sugar with the water, gradually added; add the other ingredients, and mix. Ph. U. S., 1873.) A popular cough medicine, but not deserving of being made official. Dose, a tablespoonful or $\text{f}\text{ss.}$.

MISTU'RA GUAI'ACI, Mix'ture of guai'ac, Lac guai'aci, Emul'sio guai'aci'na, Mistu'ra guai'aci gummo'sa seu gum'mi guai'aci Bergeri, Solu'tio guai'aci gummo'sa seu resi'næ guai'aci aquo'sa, (F.) Mix'ture de Gayac. (Guaiac. resin. pulv., Sacch. pur., āā $\text{f}\text{ss.}$, Acaciæ gum. pulv., $\text{f}\text{ij.}$, Aq. cinnam., Oj. Rub the guaiacum with the sugar and gum. Add, gradually, the cinnamon water. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, $\text{f}\text{ss.}$ to $\text{f}\text{ij.}$.

MISTU'RA GUM'MI GUAI'ACI BERGE'RI, Mistura guai'aci—m. Hordei, Decoctum hordei compositum—m. Leniens, Looch ex ovo—m. Media, see Mistura.

MISTU'RA MOS'CHI, M. moscha'ta, Musk mix'ture. (Moschi, Acaciæ gum. contus., Sacch. purif., sing $\text{f}\text{ij.}$, Aq. rosæ, $\text{f}\text{xij.}$ Rub the musk with the sugar; add the gum, and, by degrees, the rose-water. Ph. L.) Dose, $\text{f}\text{ss.}$ to $\text{f}\text{ij.}$.

MISTU'RA POTAS'SÆ CITRA'TIS, Liquor potassæ citratis—m. Potassii citratis, Liquor potassæ citratis.

MISTU'RA SCAMMO'NI, Scam'mony Mix'ture. (Scammon., gr. iv., Lactis, $\text{f}\text{ij.}$ Triturate to form an emulsion. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, $\text{f}\text{ss.}$ —ij.

MISTU'RA SEN'NÆ COMPOS'ITA, Com'pound Mix'ture of Sen'na. (Magnes. sulph., $\text{f}\text{iv.}$, Extract. glycyrrh., $\text{f}\text{ss.}$, Tinct. sennæ, $\text{f}\text{xijss.}$, Tinct. cardamom. comp., $\text{f}\text{x.}$, Infus. sennæ, q. s. Dissolve the sulphate and the liquorice in $\text{f}\text{xiv.}$ of the infusion, with the aid of heat, add the tinctures, and sufficient infusion to make a pint. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, $\text{f}\text{ij.}$ —jss.

MISTU'RA SPIR'ITUS VI'NI GALL'ICI, Bran'dy Mix'ture, Mix'ture of Spir'it of French Wine. (Sp. Vin. Gallic., Aq. cinnam., āā $\text{f}\text{iv.}$, Vitel. ovi., ij., Sacchar. pur., $\text{f}\text{ss.}$, Ol. cinnam., mij. M. Ph. B., 1867.) An excitant draught for the low stages of fever. Dose, $\text{f}\text{ij.}$ —ij.

MISTU'RA STRYCH'NIÆ, Mix'ture of Strychnia. (Distilled water, $\text{f}\text{ij.}$, very pure Strychnia, 1 gr., White sugar, $\text{f}\text{ij.}$ M.) Dose, a teaspoonful.

MISTU'RA SULPHU'RICO-AC'IDA, Elixir acidum Halleri—m. Vulneraria acida, Arquebusade, Eau d'.

Mitchel'la Re'pens, (after Dr. John Mitchell, of Virginia, a botanist,) Par'tridge berry, Checker berry, Win'ter clover. A pretty little indigenous trailing evergreen, of the Cinchona family—Cinchonacæ,—which flowers from June to July. It has been considered an expectorant, emmenagogue, and diuretic; and has been prescribed in dropsy and gout.

Mitel'la, (dim. of mitra, mitra, 'a bandage,') Sling.

Mithridate, Mithridat'ium, Mithridat'icum medicamen'tum, Antid'otum Mithridat'ium, Diascin'ci antid'otus, Confec'tio Damoc'ratis. A very compound electuary, into which entered—Myrrh of Arabia, Saffron, Agaric, Ginger, Cinnamon, Frankincense, Garlic, Mustard, Bithuort, Galbanum, Castor, Long pepper, Opoponax, Bdellium, Gum Arabic, Opium, Gentian, Orris, Sagapenum, Valerian, Acacia, Hypericum, Canary wine, Honey, &c. It was invented by Mithridates, king of Pontus and Bithynia, and was formerly regarded as alexipharmic. It is little used at the present day, and, from its heterogeneous nature, should be wholly abandoned.

Mithridat'icum Medicamen'tum, Mithridate. Mithridat'ium, Mithridate.

Mit'igans, (mitigare, 'to assuage,') Lenitive.

Mi'tra Hippocrat'ica, (mitra, 'a mitre,' 'a bandage,' 'a head dress,') Bonnet d'Hippocrate.

Mi'tral, Mitra'lis. Having the form of a mitre; resembling a bishop's mitre.

Mi'tral REGURGITA'tion, see Regurgitation.

Mi'tral VALVES, Val'vulæ mitra'les seu Cor'dis mitra'les seu episcopa'les seu bicuspidat'les seu bicuspidat'æ. Two triangular valves at the opening of communication between the left auricle of the heart and the corresponding ventricle. These valves are formed by the inner membrane of the left cavities of the heart; and are retained on the side of the ventricle by tendinous cords, proceeding from the columnæ carneæ. They form a species of valve, which permits the blood to pass from the auricle into the ventricle and opposes its return.

Mi'trium, (μῆτριον, dim. of mitra, 'a bandage,') Sling.

Mitte (F.), Efflu'vium latrina'rium. An emanation exhaled from privies, which strongly irritates the eyes. It consists of ammonia, united to the carbonic and hydrosulphuric acids.

Miuamaru, see Arrow poison.

Mi'va, Marmelade.

Mix'is, (μῆξις,) Coition, Mistura.

Mix'tio, (miscere, mixtum, 'to mix,') Mistura.

Mixtu'ra, Mistura.

Mix'ture, Mistura—m. Almond, Emulsio amygdalæ—m. of Ammoniac, Mistura ammoniaci—m. of Assafoetida, Mistura assafoetidæ—m. Brandy, Mistura spiritus vini Gallici—m. Brown, Mistura glycyrrhizæ composita—m. Calumante, Looch ex ovo—m. Camphor, Mistura camphoræ—m. Chalk, Mistura cretæ—m. of Citrate of Potassa, Liquor potassæ citratis—m. de Craie, Mistura cretæ—m. of Creasote, Mistura creasoti—m. Cretaceous, Mistura cretæ—m. Emetine, Emetic, Mistura emetinæ vomitoria—m. de Fer composée, Mistura ferri composita.

MIX'TURE, FERROSALINE', Mistu'ra ferrosali'na. Under this name, the author has long prescribed, in public and in private, the following combination in torpor of the colon. Magnes. sulphat., $\text{f}\text{ij.}$, Potassæ bitart., $\text{f}\text{ij.}$, Ferri sulph., gr. x.; for a quart of water. A wineglassful every morning, on rising, until the torpor is removed.

Mixture de Gayac, Mistura guai'aci—m. Gentian, see Infusum gentianæ compositum—m. Griffith's, Mistura ferri composita—m. of Guaiac, Mistura guai'aci—m. of Gum Arabic, see Emulsio acaciæ—m. of Hartshorn, burnt, Mistura cornu usti.

MIX'TURE, HOPE'S. A mixture recommended by a Mr. Hope in diarrhoea and dysentery. It is essentially a nitrate of morphia. Although the proposer employed the acidum nitrosum of the Edinburgh Pharmacopœia, nitric acid is generally used. (Acid. nitros., $\text{f}\text{ij.}$, Aquæ camphor., $\text{f}\text{xvij.}$, Tinct. opii, gtt. xl. M.) Dose, a fourth part every three or four hours.

MIX'TURE OF I'RON, AROMAT'IC, Mistura ferri aromatica—m. of Iron, compound, Mistura ferri composita—m. of Liquorice, compound, Mistura glycyrrhizæ composita—m. Lithonriptique de Durande, see Liquor anodynus terebinthinatus—m. of Marsh mallows, Decoctum althææ—m. Musk, Mistura moschi—m. Neutral, Liquor potassæ citratis—m. of Prussic acid, Mistura acidi hydrocyanici—m. of Scammony, Mistura scammonii.

MIX'TURE, SCUD'AMORE'S. A mixture recommended by Sir C. Scudamore in gouty and rheumatic affections, and once much prescribed in the United States. Magnes. sulph., $\text{f}\text{ij.}$ — $\text{f}\text{xij.}$, Aquæ menthae, $\text{f}\text{x.}$, Aceti colchic., $\text{f}\text{ij.}$ — $\text{f}\text{xijss.}$, Syrup. croci, $\text{f}\text{ij.}$, Magnes., $\text{f}\text{xij.}$ M. Dose, one, two, or three tablespoonfuls, repeated every two hours in a paroxysm of gout, until from four to six evacuations are produced in the twenty-four hours.

MIXTURE OF SEN'NA, COM'POUND, Mistura sennæ compositum—m. of Spirit of French wine, Mistura spiritus vini Gallici—m. of Strychnia, Mistura strychniæ—m. de Whitt, see Liquor anodynus terebinthinatus.

Mne'mé, (μνημη,) Memory.

Mnemecephalicum Balsamum. A very compound medicine, into which entered Balm, Lily, Rosemary, Lavender, Borage, Broom, Roses, Violet, Saffron, Thyme, Storax, Galbanum, &c. Supposed to have great mnemonic virtues.

Mnemoneu'ticé, Mnemonics.

Mnemoneu'ticé, Mnemoneu'ticé, Mnemotech'né, (μνημη, 'memory;' μνημονικος, 'appertaining to memory,' from μνησμαι, 'I recollect.') The art of aiding the memory; and of forming, in some sort, an artificial memory.

Mnemotech'né, (μνημη, 'memory,' and τεχνη, 'art,') Mnemonics.

Moan'ing, (Sax. mænan, 'to grieve,' by onomatopœia,) Respira'tio luctuosa, Mycthis'mos. A plaintive respiration, in which the patient utters audible groans,—moans, (F.) Gémissements.

Moap'eye, Myopia.

Mo'bile, see Saint Augustine.

Mobility, Mobil'itas, (mobilis, contraction of movibilis, 'that can be moved,' from movere, 'to move,' and habilis, 'capable,') The power of being moved. In physiology, great nervous susceptibility, often joined to a disposition to convulsion. Greatly developed excitability.

Moc'casin Flow'er, Cypripedium acaule, C. luteum—m. Plant, Cypripedium luteum.

Mochli'a, (μοχλεια, from μοχλεω, 'I move,') Reduction of a luxated bone; (from μοχλος, 'a lever,')

Moch'licus, (μοχλικος,) Relating or appertaining to mochia. Also, a purgative; (from μοχλεω, 'I set in motion,' as with a lever.)

Mochlis'cus, (dim of μοχλος, 'a lever,') Lever.

Moch'lus, (μοχλος,) Lever.

Moch'thus, (μοχθος,) Agony.

Mock'knees, Crusta genu equinae.

Mod'elling Proc'ess. A term proposed by Dr. Macartney, of Dublin, to signify the mode in which wounds are healed without inflammation or suppuration, by a deposit of plastic matter from the surface of the wound, by which the gap is more rapidly filled,—portion being laid upon portion, without waste, after the manner of clay in the hands of the sculptor;—hence the term.

Modi'olus, 'the nave of a wheel,' Pyr'amis seu Az'is seu Nu'cleus seu Columel'la coch'lex. A hollow cone in the cochlea of the ear, forming a nucleus, axis, or central pillar, round which the gyri of the cochlea pass. The modiolus forms the inner and larger portion of the central pillar, and is the cavity seen at the bottom of the meatus auditorius internus. It lodges a branch of the auditory nerve. The central portion of the modiolus contains a number of minute canals, and is called in consequence Trac'tus spiralis foraminulo'sus. Into these the nerves of the cochlea enter, and pass out at right angles between the bony plates forming the zona ossea of the lamina spiralis, to be expended on the membranous portion of the lamina.

Modi'olus, Mas, also means the crown of the trepan.

Modira Caniram, Strychnos colubrina.

Mo'dius. A dry measure, the third of an amphora, equal to the bushel.

Mo'dus Operan'di, ('mode of operating,') This term is applied to the general principles upon which remedies act in morbid states of the body,—a subject of much interest, although involved in considerable obscurity.

The following classification will convey some idea of the ways in which different organs may be excited into action.

1. By actual or immediate contact of the remedy, and by absorption or mediate contact.
2. By an impulse conveyed by the nerves, through an impression made on the stomach or elsewhere, or by remote sympathy.
3. By contiguous or continuous sympathy, or by mere proximity or continuity of parts.

Moëlle, (from medulla; according to some, from μελως, 'marrow,') Marrow—m. Allongée, Medulla oblongata—m. Épinière, Medulla spinalis—m. Vertébrale, Medulla spinalis.

Mœ'nia Den'tium, ('walls of the teeth,') see Alveolus.

Mœ'ror, ('sorrow,') Athymia.

Mofette, Azote, see Mephitism.

Moffat, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Moffat is a village situate about 56 miles S. W. of Edinburgh. The water is a cold sulphureous; containing, in a wine gallon, 36 grains of chloride of sodium, 5 cubic inches of carbonic acid, 4 of nitrogen, and 10 of sulphohydric acid. It resembles Harrowgate water in its properties.

A strong chalybeate spring was discovered there about the year 1828, which contains sesquisulphate of peroxide of iron, sulphate of alumina, and uncombined sulphuric acid.

Mogigraph'ia, (F.) Mogigraphie, (μογισ, 'with difficulty,' and γραω, 'I write,') Cramp, writers'.

Mogigraphie, Cramp, writers'.

Mogila'lia, Parala'lia, (μογισ, 'with difficulty,' and λαλει, 'to speak,') This word is inaccurately written by Paul Zacchias,—Mola'lia, and Molila'lia. Difficult or defective articulation. Impediment of speech. See Balbuties.

Mogostoc'ia, (μογος, 'difficulty,' and τοκος, 'parturition,') Dystocia, Laborious labor.

Mo'gus, (μογος,) Agony.

Mo'hawk Tas'sel, Eupatorium purpureum.

Mohr'ia Thurif'raga, (after Prof. D. M. H. Mohr, a botanist of Kiel.) A South African fern, Nat. Ord. Filices, the dry leaves of which, pulverized and made into an ointment with fat, are serviceable in burns and scalds.

Moignon, (from Celt. Moign, 'maimed,') Stump.

Mois, ('month,') Menses.

Mois'ture, Ma'dor, (F.) Moiteur, Simple humidity of the skin. The skin is said to be moist or in a state of moisture when there is slight perspiration.

Moiteur, (old F. moiteur,) Moisture.

Mo'la, ('a mill,') Maxillary bone, Molar tooth, Mole, Patella—m. Uterine, Mole.

Molagoco'di, Piper nigrum.

Molaire, Molar.

Mola'lia, Mogilalia.

Mo'lar, Mola'ris, My'licus, (F.) Molaire, Meulière. That which bruises or grinds; (from mola'ris, 'a grindstone,' or mola, 'a mill,')

MO'LAR GLANDS. Two small bodies formed by a collection of mucous crypts, seated in the substance of the cheeks, between the masseter and buccinator muscles, and whose excretory ducts open into the mouth opposite the last molar tooth.

MO'LAR TEETH, Grind'ers, Jaw Teeth, Mola'res permanentes den'tes, Den'tes mola'res seu maxilla'res seu gom'phii seu clava'les, Mo'lae, Gom'phioi, My'lacri, My'lodon'tes, My'lodi, Momis'ci, Lag'teeth, Wall teeth, (Prov.) Az'le teeth, Az'le teeth, Cheek teeth, Wang teeth, (F.) Dents molaires ou mâchelières, occupy the farther part of each alveolar arch. Their coronæ are broader than they are high; unequal; tuberculated; and the roots are more or less subdivided. They are 20 in number, 10 in each jaw. The first two pairs of molar teeth in each jaw have been called lesser molares, premo'lar or bicus'pid, Den'tes bicus'pidati seu bucca'les seu mola'res antio'res seu mo- lares minores. The coronæ have two tubercles; the outer being more prominent and larger than the inner. The root is commonly simple; sometimes bifurcated. The other three pairs have been termed Great molares—Dentes molares posteriores seu majo-res, Dents multicuspidées (Ch.). Their coronæ are cubical, rounded, and have, at the upper surface, four or five tubercles, separated by deep furrows. The root is divided into two, three, four, and five fangs, which are more or less curved. The third great molaris appears a long time after the others, and hence has been called Dens sapien'tie or Wis'dom tooth.

Molas'ses, Melasses.

Mole, Mo'la, (moles, 'mass,') Mo'la uteri'na, My'te, Zephyr'ius fœtus, Ger'men fal'sum, Pseudocye'sis mola'ris, Gravid'itas mola'ris, Vesic'ular mole, Moon'calf, old Fr. Fardeau. A fleshy, insensible, at times, soft—at others, hard—mass; of variable and determinate size, which forms in the uterus, and is slightly united by vessels to that organ; from which its feeble vitality is derived. It has been conceived by some to be always owing to imperfect conception; but moles may form in the undoubted virgin. They seem to be owing to a morbid process; and certainly are generally connected with conception. At times they contain parts of the fœtus; but commonly do not. At very different periods in different women, the diseased mass is expelled from the uterus, with ordinary symptoms of abortion; and the case requires similar management. See, also, Nævus, (Sax. mal.) and Conception, false.

MOLE, HYDAT'ID, see Hydatid—m. Plant, Euphorbia lathyris.

Molec'ular, Molecula'ris, (F.) Moléculaire. Of or belonging to molecules or minute portions of anything. Hence molecular death, in contradistinction to somatic death.

Mol'ecule, Molecula, Mas'sula, (F.) Molécule, (dim. of moles, 'a mass,') A minute portion of any body. Also, the cicatric'ula, mac'ula, gallat'ura, gelat'inous mol'ecule, tread of the cock, or embryo part of the impregnated ovum, observable by the microscope before the ovum has left the ovary of the hen. It lies under the epidermic coats of the yolk, and upon its proper coat. If the ovum, according to Valentin, be lacerated, and its contents minutely examined, the cicatric'ula is found like a grayish-white disk, which in its whole periphery is dense, granulous, and opaque; but in the centre presents a clear, non-granulous, and perfectly diaphanous point. Purkinje found, that when he removed the dark, granulous mass by suction with a small tube, there remained a perfectly transparent vesicle filled with a pellucid lymph, which had a decidedly spherical form, but, being extremely delicate, was easily lacerated, and then its fluid escaped. As he found this, which later naturalists have named—after its discoverer—the Purkin'jean ves'icle, in the ova of the ovary, but could not see it in ova which had already entered the oviduct, he gave it the name ger'minal vesicle, germ ves'icle, or germ cell, vesic'ula prolif'era seu germinati'va, Blastocystin'x, (F.) Vésicule germinative. Besides a perfectly colorless fluid, this contains one or more dark corpuscles, which appear as a nucleus through the including membrane in the shape of opaque spots—the ger'minal spot, germ spot, mac'ula germinati'va seu ger'minans, nucleus germinati'vus, Blastocar'dia, Cor'culum ger'minis, Blastoc'e'lis, Wagne'rian spot or vesicle, (F.) Tache germinative. The small dots, observed by Valentin in the Wagnerian vesicles, and arising in them, have been termed Valentinian vesicles. The granulous membrane—its thickened portion, the so-called 'cicatric'ula,'—and the germinal vesicle, constitute those parts of the ovum which pass immediately into the original foundation of the embryo, the blastoderma, blastoder'mic or germinal membrane, vesicula blastoder'matica seu blastoder'mica, blastoder'mic vesicle.

In the nomenclature of Professor Agassiz, the yolk membrane is an ectoblast; the 'Purkinjean Vesicle,' a mesoblast; the 'Wagnerian Vesicle,' an entoblast; and the 'Valentinian Vesicle,' an entosth'oblast. See Cytoblast.

MOL'ECULE, GELAT'INOUS, Molecule.

Molène, Verbascum nigrum.

Moles Ganglior'mis, ('gangliform mass,') Ganglion of Gasser.

Molib'dus, (μολιβδος), Plumbum.

Molila'lia, Mogilalia.

Moli'men, pl. Moli'mina, (molior, 'I strive,') An attempt, a struggle. Hence:

MOLI'MEN CRIT'ICUM. An impulsion towards a sudden solution or crisis of a disease.

MOLI'MEN HÆMORRHAG'ICUM. The hemorrhagic diathesis or impulsion.

MOLI'MEN HÆMORRHŌIDA'LE. The hemorrhoidal diathesis or impulsion. See Hæmorrhoids.

MOLI'MEN MENSTRU'ALE. The menstrual diathesis or impulsion.

MOLI'MEN NATU'RÆ SALUTA'RIVM, Instinct.

Molkenkur, Whey cure.

Molles'cence, (mollis, 'soft,') Mollities.

Mollet, (dim. of (F.) mon, mol, 'soft,') Sura.

Mol'lipuffs, Lycoperdon.

Mol'lis Ma'ter, 'tender mother,' Pia mater.

Mollit'ies, (from mollis, 'soft,') Molles'cence, Malacis'mus, Mollit'ia, Mollitu'do, Emollit'ies, E. morbo'sa, Mollit'io, Malax'is, Malaco'ma, Malaco'sis, Malthax'is, (F.) Ramollissement, (G.) Malakien of Fuchs. Preternatural softness of an organ or part of an organ.

MOLLIT'IES ATROPH'ICA, see Mollities cerebri.

MOLLIT'IES CER'EBRI, Malaco'sis Cer'e'brī, Encephalomala'cia, Encephalomalax'is, Encephalomalaco'sis, Necrenceph'alus (W. Farr), Cerebromalac'ia, Encephalosep'sis, (F.) Ramollissement du cerveau, Encephalomalacie. Molles'cence or softening or a kind of liquefaction of the cerebral substance; the remainder preserving its ordinary consistency. The neurine often contains small clots of blood, giving rise to what has been termed Apoplexie capillaire, (Cruevilhier.) Several varieties of softening are now described, as Red softening, (F.) Ramollissement rouge, a result of inflammation: Yellow softening, (F.) Ramollissement jaune, the result of the death of a portion of the cerebral tissue: White softening, Mollities atrophica, (F.) Ramollissement non-inflammatoire, the result of imperfect nutrition, due to deficient supply of blood.

MOLLIT'IES COR'DIS, Cardiomalacia.

MOLLIT'IES MEDUL'LE SPINA'LIS, Myelomala'cia, (F.) Ramollissement de la Moëlle Épinière. Softening of the spinal marrow.

MOLLIT'IES OS'SIUM, Malacoste'o'sis, Malacosteon, Emollit'ies os'sium, Paros'tia flex'ilis, Osteomalaco'sis, Osteomala'cia, Rachit'is seu Rachit'is adultor'um, Spi'na vento'sa (of some), Softening of the bones, (F.) Ostéo-malacie, Ostéo-malaxie, Ostéo-malacie, Ramollissement des os. A rare affection, in which the bones are deprived of their salts, particularly of the phosphate of lime, and consist only, or mainly, of gelatin; hence they acquire a degree of suppleness which renders them unfit for the performance of their functions. The disease generally affects all the bones; but it is especially remarkable during life in the long bones, which assume any curvature that may be wished. Very violent pain is often experienced in them; and the urine frequently contains an enormous proportion of calcareous phosphate. The patient is compelled to remain in the horizontal posture; the bones no longer being fixed points for the muscles to act upon. The disease has almost always terminated fatally, and dissection has exhibited the gelatinous nature of the bones; which, by desiccation, have become transparent, as if they had been macerated in acid.

Experience has afforded no means of relief in this dreadful affliction. The alkaline salts, earthy phosphates, &c., are of little or no use; the disease being in the cells of nutrition.

MOLLIT'IES UN'GUIUM. An unnaturally soft condition of the nails from faulty nutrition of those parts.

Mollit'io, Mollities.

Mollitu'do, Mollities.

Mollus'cum, M. simplex seu Are'olofibro'sum, Athero'ma, Ochthi'asis, ([L.] Molluscum, 'a knotty growth on the bark of the maple.') A cutaneous affection, which consists of numerous tumors, varying in size from that of a pea to that of a pigeon's egg, filled with an atheromatous matter, which are developed in the substance of the derma, and are of various shapes, some having a large base,—others adherent by means of a pedicle.

The disease is probably seated in the sebaceous follicles. If internal treatment be adopted at all, it must consist of eutrophics, as arsenic, iodine, &c. The external treatment consists in the employment of measures calculated to excite the tubercles to inflammation, as by touching them with potassa.

MOLLUS'CUM CONTAGIO'SUM, M. adeno'sum, Tuberculum adeno'sum, (F.) Acné molluscoïde, a singular variety, is characterized by the presence of hard, round tubercles, which are smooth and transparent, and, when pressed, pour out from an orifice in their summits a little opaque or milky fluid.

MOLLUS'CUM FIBRO'SUM, Fibro'ma Mollus'cum. A morbid condition consisting of quite small masses or tumors developed around a hair-follicle, each including an enlarged sebaceous gland belonging to the hair-follicle, and a peripheral mass of nucleated connective tissue, the hair occupying the centre of the tumor.

Mol'ochē, (μολοχη,) Malva rotundifolia.

Molo'pes, (μολοψ, 'a weal,') Vibices.

Molybdæ'num Magne'sii, (μολυβδός, 'lead,') Manganese, black oxide of.

Molybdocachex'ia, (μολυβδός, 'lead,' and cachexia,) Saturnismus.

Molybdocolica, (μολυβδός, 'lead,' and colica,) Colica metallica.

Molybdon'osus, (μολυβδός, 'lead,' and νόσος, 'disease,') Lead-poisoning.

Molybdopar'esis, (μολυβδός, 'lead,' and παρσις, 'paralysis,') Palsy, lead.

Molyb'dus, (μολυβδός,) Plumbum.

Molybdo'sis, (from molybdus, and osis,) Lead-poisoning.

Mol'ynē, (μολυνη,) Anus.

Molyn'iē, (μολυνση,) Anus.

Molyn'sis, (μολυνσις, from μολυνω, 'I taint,') Miasma.

Momic, Mummy.

Momin, Mamei.

Momis'ci, Molar teeth. Also the parts of the molar teeth connected with the gums.

Momor'dica, M. Balsam'ina, (mordeo, momordi, morsum, 'I bite,') Balsam'ina, Neurosper'ma cuspidata, Balmapple, Balsam apple, (F.) Balsamine, Pomme de merveille. Ord. Cucurbitaceæ. The fruit of this oriental tree, Pomum mirab'ilē seu hierosolymita'num, was formerly considered vulnerary.

MOMOR'DICA AS'PERA, M. elaterium.

MOMOR'DICA ELATE'RUM, M. as'pera, Elate'rimum, Ecba'lia Elate'rimum, Ecba'lium officina'rum seu agre'stē seu cordifo'lium, Cucumis agre'stis seu axini'nus seu sylves'tris, Charan'tia, Guarer'ba or'ba, Ecbo'lium elate'rimum, Wild, Squirt'ing, or Ass'es cu'cumber, (F.) Concombre Sauvage, Mo-mordique. Nat. Order, Cucurbitaceæ. The dried sediment from the juice is the elaterium of the shops. (See Extractum elaterii.) It is a most powerful cathartic, and, as such, has been used in dropsies. Its active principle is the El'atin, El'aterin or Ec'balin. Dose, gr. $\frac{1}{4}$ to gr. j. until it operates.

The Ph. B. (1867) has Ecba'lii Fructus, Squirt'ing Cu'cumber Fruit, the very nearly ripe fruit of Ecba'lium officinarum.

Momordique, Momordica elaterium.

Mo'nad, (μονας, gen. μοναδος, 'a unit.') A simple particle, or atom, or unit. The smallest of all visible animalcules. A primary cell or germ.

Mo'næ, Nates.

Monar'da, (after N. Monardes, a Spanish botanist,) M. did'yma seu coccin'ea seu purpu'rea seu Kalmia'na, Scar'let rose balm, Moun'tain mint, Oswego Tea, Moun'tain Balm, Horse'mint, Square stalk, Red balm; a beautiful indigenous plant, Sex. Syst. Diandria Monogynia, Nat. Ord. Labiatae, has the excitant properties of Monarda punctata.

MONAR'DA ALLOPHYL'LA, M. fistulosa — m. Clinopodia, M. fistulosa — m. Coccinea, Monarda — m. Didyma, Monarda.

MONAR'DA FISTULO'SA, M. rugo'sa et oblonga'ta, M. clinopod'ia seu allophyl'la, Wild bergamot', Horse'mint. The leaves have a fragrant smell; and an aromatic, somewhat bitter taste. They are reputed to be nervine, stomachic, and deobstruent [?].

MONAR'DA KALMIA'NA, Monarda — m. Oblongata, M. fistulosa.

MONAR'DA PUNCTA'TA, Horse'mint, Monarda, (Ph. U. S.) Indigenous in the United States. Stimulant and carminative. The Oil of Horse'mint, is officinal in the Ph. U. S., 1873.

MONAR'DA PURPU'REA, Monarda — m. Rugosa, M. fistulosa.

Monder (F.), (from [L.] mundare, 'to clean.') To render clean or pure. In Pharmacy, it means to separate any substance from its impure or useless portion. In surgery, monder ou mondifier une plaie, is to clean or debride a wound.

Mondificatifs, ([L.] mundus, 'clean,' and facere, 'to make,') Detergents.

Mondifier une Plaie, ('to cleanse a wound,') see Monder.

Mone'meron, Monoë'meron, Monohe'meron, (mono, and ήμερα, 'a day.') A name given to several collyria, which were supposed to be capable of curing diseases of the eyes in a day.

Monen'terum, (mono, and εντερων, 'intestine,') Colon.

Mone'sia. A vegetable extract imported into Europe from South America, in hard, thick cakes. It is prepared from the bark of a tree, whose botanical name is uncertain—probably Chrysophyl'ium glycyphlæum seu Buranhem, Buranhem, Guaranhem; Ord. Sapotaceæ. It is very friable, and its fracture very much resembles that of a well-torrefied cocoanut. It is wholly soluble in water; and its taste—which is at first sweet like liquorice—sometimes becomes astringent. It is on account of its astringent properties that it has been prescribed in chronic bronchitis, hæmoptysis, diarrhoea, leucorrhœa, uterine hemorrhage, &c. It has been applied locally, in the form of ointment, (Mones, p. 1, Adipis, p. vij.)

The dose of Monesia is from 12 to 40 grs. a day.

Mon'eywort, Lysimachia nummularia.

Mongo'lian. Anthropologists give the name Mongolian race to a variety of the human species, spread over a great part of the north of Asia, in China, India, Thibet, the Moluccas, &c. The individuals composing it have the skin of a brown red, forehead flat, nose broad, cheeks prominent, and lips large. See Homo.

Mon'grel, ([Sax.] mengan, or mængan, 'to mix,') Hybrid.

Monil'iform, (monile, 'a necklace,' and forma, 'shape,' 'necklace-like,') A term applied to a peculiar change in the form of the bloodvessels, caused by partial dilatations of their walls; often observed in cases of cerebral softening.

Mon'plies, (Sc.) ('many plies or folds,') Omasum.

Mo'nism, Monis'mus, (μονα, 'unity,') The doctrine that matter and mind are identical.

Monk Physic'ians and Sur'geons. A class of practitioners of whom Frère Côme and Jacques Beaulieu in France, and Pravetz in Germany, were the most distinguished.

Monks'hood, Aconitum — m. Common, Aconitum napellus — m. Salutory, Aconitum anthora — m. Wild, Aconitum uncinatum.

Monni'na Polysta'chia, (after Monnino, Count de Florida Blanca, a Spanish promoter of botany.) A beautiful South American plant. Nat. Ord. Polygalaceæ. Sex. Syst. Diadelphia Octandria. The bark of the root is a powerful astringent, much used in South America in bowel diseases.

Mon'nyplies, (Sc.) ('many plies or folds,') Omasum.

Mo'no, (from μονος, 'one alone,') in composition, one alone, only one.

Monoblep'sis, (monos, and βλεψις, 'sight,') An affection in which vision is confused, imperfect, and indistinct, when both eyes are employed; but perfect or nearly so, when either eye is used singly.

Monocar'pæ, (monos, and καρπος, 'fruit,') A division of cutaneous affections, of the family Eczema to sen of Fuchs, which includes strophulus, psudracia, and ecchyma.

Monoceph'alus, (μονοκεφαλος, from monos, and κεφαλη, 'head,') A compound monster having two bodies with a single head.

Monocle, Monoculus.

Monocol'on, Cæcum, Rectum.

Monocra'nus, (monos, and κρανον, κρανιον, 'cranium,') A monster with one cranium, but with the face in part double.

Monoc'rotous, (monos, and κροτω, 'I strike,') see Pulse, monocrotous.

Monoc'ular, (monos, and oculus, 'eye,') Belonging or relating to one eye; a hybrid term. A variety of figure of 8 bandage, to be applied to one eye only, is called a monocular bandage.

Monoc'ulum, Cæcum.

Monoc'ulus, Mon'ocle, Monophthal'mus, Unio'culus, Unoc'ulus, (F.) Monocle, (monos, and oculus, 'an eye,') A bandage employed to maintain topical applications over one of the eyes. This bandage, called by some surgeons Sim'plex oc'ulus, (F.) Œil simple, is made of a roller three or four ells long, rolled into a single ball. See Cyclops.

Mo'nocyst, (monos, and κυστις, 'a cyst,') see Oligocyst.

Monodiplo'pia, (monos, διπλος, 'double,' and ωψ, 'eye,') Double vision with one eye.

Monoc'ius, (monos, and οικος, 'a house,') Hermaphrodite.

Monoc'meron, Monemeron.

Monogast'ric, Monogast'ricus, (monos, and γαστρη, 'stomach,') That which has but one stomach. Man is monogastric; ruminating animals, on the contrary, are polygastric.

Monog'eny, (monos, and γενος, 'kind,') see Generation.

Mon'ograph, Med'ical, Monograph'ia medica, (monos, and γραφη, 'description,') An ex professo treatise on a single class of diseases, or on a single disease or medical subject.

Monoc'heron, Monemeron.

Monom'achon, Cæcum.

Monom'acum, Cæcum.

Monoma'nia, see Melancholy — m. Homicidal,

Homicidal insanity — m. Incendiary, Pyromania — m. Syphilitica, Syphiliphobia.

Monoma'niac, Monomani'acus, (F.) Monomane, Monomaniacque. One who labors under monomania or insanity, chiefly on one subject.

Monomanie, Melancholy — m. Homicide, Homicidal insanity.

Monom'matos, (μονοματος, from monos, and ομμα, 'eye,') Cyclops.

Monomo'ria, (monos, and μωρια, 'silliness,') see Melancholy.

Monom'phalus, (monos, and ομφαλος, 'a navel,') A monster produced by the union of two bodies having a common umbilicus. Such a double monster is called by I. G. St. Hilaire Monompha'lian, (F.) Monomphalien.

Mononœ'a, (monos, and νοος, 'thought,') Thought on one subject, as in monomania.

Monopa'gia, (monos, and παγος, 'fixed,') Clavus hystericus, Hemicrania.

Monopathophob'ia, (monos, παθος, 'disorder,' and φοβος, 'dread,') Pathophobia.

Monop'athy, Monopath'ia, (monos, and παθος, 'disorder,') A state in which one organ or function is disordered. Applied to melancholy or monomania, which is said to be a monopathic affection.

Monope'gia, (monos, and πηγνυμι, 'I fix,') Clavus hystericus, Hemicrania.

Monophthal'mia, Cyclopia.

Monophthal'mus, (monos, and οφθαλμος, 'eye,') Cyclops, Monoculus.

Monoplas'tic, Monoplas'ticus, (monos, and πλασσω, 'I form,') That which has one form. A monoplastic element, in histology, is one which retains its primary form.

Monopod'ia, (monos, and πους, gen. ποδος, 'a foot,') Sympodia.

Mo'nops, gen. Mono'pis, (μονωψ, from monos, and ωψ, 'eye,') Cyclops.

Monop'sia, (monos, and ωψις, 'vision,') Cyclopia.

Mon'opus, (monos, and πους, 'a foot,') Having one foot. See Symmeles.

Monor'chia, see Monorchis.

Monorchid'ia, see Monorchis.

Monor'chis, gen. Monor'chidis, (μονορχις, from monos, and ορχις, gen. ορχιδος, 'testicle,') (F.) Monorchide. One who has only one testicle. The condition is Monorchid'ia or Monor'chia, Monor'chism, Unilateral anor'chism.

Monor'chism, see Monorchis.

Monorgan'ici, (monos, and οργανον, 'an organ,') see Local.

Monos'celus, (μονοσκελης, — monos, and σκελος, 'a leg,') One-legged.

Monosi'tia, (μονοσιτια, from monos, and σιτος, 'food,' 'repast,') The habit of taking only one meal in the day.

Monoso'mian, (F.) Monosomien, (monos, and σωμα, 'a body,') An epithet applied to a double monster, which seems, in the first instance, to have had but one body.

Monos'toma Len'tis, see Parasites.

Monot'ropa Uniflo'ra, (monos, and τροπος, 'a turn, — the solitary flower turned to one side,') Indian pipe, Iceplant, Pipeplant, Nest root, Fit root. Ord. Ericaceæ. An indigenous plant, whose juice, mixed with water, has been extolled by the Indians in ophthalmia. The dried root in powder has been given in epilepsy and nervous diseases.

Monro', Fora'men of, Foramen of Monro.

Mons Ven'eris, 'mount of Venus,' Montic'ulus Ven'eris, Epheba'um, (F.) Mont de Vénus, Pénit, Motte, Éminence sus-pubienne. The more or less projecting eminence, situate at the base of the hypogastrium, above the vulva and in front of the os pubis. At the period of puberty it becomes covered with hair, formerly called Tresso'ria.

At times, mons veneris is applied to the corresponding part in the male.

Mon'sel's Salt, see Ferri sulphas—M. Solution, see Ferri sulphas.

Monso'nia Ova'ta, (after Lady Ann Monson, aid to Lee in his Introduction to Botany,) Keita, of the Hottentots. A plant of the Nat. Ord. Geraniaceæ, which grows at the Cape of Good Hope. The root and herb are very astringent, and are used successfully in dysentery.

Mon'ster, Mon'strum, ('anything strange,') Portentum, Te'ras, Pe'lor, Pelo'ria, Pelo'rium, Pelo'rum, (F.) Monstre. Any organized being, having an extraordinary vice of conformation, or a preternatural perversion of every part, or of certain parts only.

The following classification embraces the main varieties of malformations, Vit'ia pri'mæ conformatio'nis.—1. Those in which certain parts of the normal body are absent or defective—mon'stra deficient'ia, constituting Ectrog'eny of Serres,—Monstros'ity by defect, (F.) Anomalie ou Monstruosité par défaut, Agénésie. 2. Those produced by fusion or coalition of organs—coalit'io par'tium, sym'physis. 3. Those in which parts, united in the normal state, are separated from each other—clefts, fissures. 4. Those in which normal openings are occluded—atre'sia. 5. Those by excess, or in which certain parts have a disproportionate size—mon'stra abundan'tia, Monstros'ity by excess, (F.) Monstruosité par excès, Hypergénésie. 6. Those in which one or more parts have an abnormal position—si'tus muta'tus. 7. Those affecting the sexual organs—hermaph'roditism; and to these "true malformations" Vogel adds 8. Diseases of the fœtus, and abnormal states of its envelopes.

Among the numerous hypotheses entertained on the origin or causes of monsters, or of monstrosity—terato'sis, monstros'itas, (F.) monstruosité, as the state has been called—three only are worth mentioning. They have been attributed, 1. To the influence of the maternal imagination on the fœtus in utero. 2. To accidental changes, experienced by the fœtus at some period of its uterine existence: and 3. To a primitive defect in the germs. The second seems to be the only one that is philosophical.

Cases of supernumerary fingers and toes, which fall under the 5th division of the above classification, are probably owing to an excess of formative action in the part; and it may be a question, whether many of the cases of diplogeneses are not due to this rather than to a fusion of two germs.

As a medico-legal question, monsters, if capable of action as individuals, have the same rights as other persons.

Mont de Vénus, Mons Veneris.

Montbri'son, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Montbrison is a town in France, in the department of the Loire, fifteen leagues from Lyons. There are three cold springs which are highly acidulous, and used as refrigerants and aperients.

Mont-de-Mar'san, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Mont-de-Marsan is a small French town, ten leagues from Dax: where there is a chalybeate spring, somewhat frequented.

Mont-d'Or', Min'eral Wa'ters of. A village seven leagues from Clermont, (Puy-de-Dôme,) at which are several mineral springs, cold and thermal. Those of the Fountain La Madeleine and of the Great Bath are thermal, temp. 112° Fah., and contain carbonic acid, carbonates of soda and lime, sulphate of soda, chloride of sodium, alumina, oxide of iron, &c. Those of St. Margaret are cold, and contain much carbonic acid. Season, from the 15th of June to the 15th of September. Invalids with chronic pulmonary catarrh, asthma, rheumatism, and congestion of the liver will derive benefit from the use of these waters.

Montecat'ni, Min'eral Waters of. This town is situate near Borgo-Buggiano, in Tuscany. The springs are thermal, ranging from 78° to 118° Fahrenheit.

Montic'ulus Cerebel'li, (dim. of mons, gen. montis, 'a mountain,') see Vermiform processes of the cerebellum—m. Veneris, Mons Veneris.

Montpell'ier, Cli'mate of. This seat of a celebrated medical school in the S. E. of France was at one time renowned for its climate, and especially in regard to its adaptation to consumptive cases. This view is now exploded, and it is at present esteemed an unfit residence for them. The climate possesses the general characters of that of southeastern France, being dry, hot, and irritating, subject to frequent vicissitudes, and especially to blasts of keen, cold, northerly winds. It is, indeed, most injurious in pulmonary diseases.

Mooltan' Sore. A local disease of India, due to the presence of some animal parasite, as the ova of distomata, which are found in foul water. It is probably identical with the Del'hi boil.

Moon, Lu'na, Sele'nē, Me'nē, (Sax. Mona, [G.] Mond,) (F.) Lune. The moon has been supposed to exert considerable influence over the human body in health and disease. Such influence has been grossly exaggerated. Not many years ago, it would have been heretical to doubt the exacerbation of mania at the full of the moon, yet it is now satisfactorily shown, that if the light be excluded at this period, the lunatic is not excited more than ordinarily.

Morceau du Diable, ('devil's bit,' from [L.] mordere, morsum, 'to bite,') see Tube, Fallopian — m. Frangé, see Tube, Fallopian.

Morcellement (F.), (from [L.] mordere, morsum, 'to bite,') 'Dividing into pieces.' A mode adopted by M. Maisonneuve for removing successfully a large fibrous tumor of the neck.

Morchel'la Esculen'ta, (from Morchel, the German name,) Phallus esculen'tus, Helvell'a esculen'ta, Fungus fagino'sus, Meru'tius, Com'mon Morell', (F.) Morille. Nat. Order, Fungi. A fungus, which is esteemed a luxury, entering into ragouts and other dishes, or cooked itself between slices of bacon. It has been considered to be aphrodisiac.

Mor'dex, gen. Mor'dicis, (from mordere, 'to bite,') Tooth.

Mor'dicant, Mor'dicans, Ca'lor mor'dicans, (mordeo, 'I bite,') A morbid heat, causing a disagreeable pungent sensation in the fingers of the physician.

Mor'dices, pl. of Mor'dex, Teeth, see Tooth.

Mo'rea, (μωρεα,) Morus nigra.

Morell, Com'mon, Morchella esculenta.

The operations for this purpose have various names, according to the part concerned; as Cheiloplas'ticē, Ceratoplas'ticē, Rhinoplas'ticē, &c.

Morn'ing Glo'ry, Blue, Convolvulus nil.

Mo'ro, (morum, 'a mulberry,') Morus, (F.) Mûre. A small abscess resembling a mulberry. A small tumor, of a similar appearance, particularly on the genital organs after impure coition.

Morocho'tes, Morochothus.

Morocho'tus, Morocho'tus, Morocho'tes, Morocho'tes, Meroo'tes, Galax'ia, Leucograph'ia, (F.) Pierre au lait, Milkstone. An Egyptian stone, used by the ancients as an application to the intertrigo of children; probably a variety of fullers' earth, inasmuch as it appears to have been used by fullers.

Morocho'tus, Morochothus.

Morocomi'um, (μωρια, 'folly, idiocy,' and κομω, 'I care for,') Morotrophium.

Morodochi'um, (μωρια, 'folly, idiocy,' and δοχωμαι, 'I receive,') Morotrophium.

Moro'sis, (μωρωσις,) Fatuitas, Idiotism.

Morosita'tes, pl. of Moros'itas, (moro'sis, 'moro'se,' 'peevish,' 'fretful,' from μωρια, and μωρωσις, 'stupidity,') A generic name given by Linnaeus to an order of Vesaniae, in which he included pica, bulimia, polydipsia, antipathia, nostalgia, panophobia, satyriasis, nymphomania, tarentismus, and hydrophobia.

Morotroph'ium, Nosocomi'um psychiat'ricum, Morocomi'um, Morodochi'um, Manicocomi'um, (μωρος, 'fatuous,' and τροφή, 'support,') An insane establishment, lunatic asylum, madhouse, Bedlam, (F.) Hôpital des fous, Maison petite.

Morphæ'a, Morphew—m. Alba, Lepra alphas—m. Nigra, Lepra nigricans.

Morphée, Morphew.

Morphew, (low L.) Morphæ'a, Morphe'a, (F.) Morphée. A term vaguely applied to scurfy eruptions on the face. Morphæa was formerly applied to squamous diseases in general, and is now used by some dermatologists for white tubercle of the face.

Mor'phia, (Μορφῆς, Morpheus, 'the god of sleep,') Morphium, Morphi'nē, Mor'phine. A solid, colorless alkali; crystallizable in beautiful pyramids, truncated and transparent; soluble in alcohol, and slightly so in boiling water. It exists, combined with meconic acid, in opium. It may be obtained by decomposing, by means of ammonia or calcined magnesia, an aqueous solution of opium made in the cold. The following is the process of the Ph. U. S. 1873: Opium, sliced, lbj., Distilled water, Alcohol, Animal charcoal, each a sufficient quantity, Water of ammonia, f3vj. Macerate the opium with four pints of distilled water for 24 hours, and, having worked it with the hand, again macerate for 24 hours, and strain. Macerate the residue twice successively with distilled water, and strain. Mix the infusions; evaporate to six pints, and filter; then add first five pints of alcohol, and afterwards three fluidounces of the water of ammonia, previously mixed with half a pint of alcohol. After 24 hours, pour in the remainder of the water of ammonia, mixed as before with half a pint of alcohol, and set the liquid aside for 24 hours, that crystals may form. To purify these, boil them with two pints of alcohol till they are dissolved; filter the solution, while hot, through animal charcoal, and set it aside to crystallize.

Morphia dissolves perfectly in the acids, which it saturates; and with which it forms very crystallizable salts, with the exception of the acetate. All these salts have a bitter taste, and act upon the animal economy in the same manner as opium, but more powerfully. The acetate is the salt commonly employed in medicine. It was, at one time, supposed that morphia is the purely sedative part of opium, divested of its irritating properties; but experience has not confirmed this. On the contrary, it will generally disagree where opium does. One-sixth of a grain has been considered equal to a grain of opium.

MOR'PHIA or MOR'PHINE, Ac'ETATE of, Morphiæ acetas—m. Bromide of, Morphiæ bromidum—m. Citrate of, see Morphiæ sulphas—m. Hydrochlorate of, see Morphiæ sulphas—m. Lactate of, see Morphiæ sulphas—m. Muriate of, see Morphiæ sulphas—m. Sulphate of, Morphiæ sulphas—m. and Zinc, double iodide of, Zinc and morphia, double iodide of.

MOR'PHIÆ Ace'tas, Morphi'næ Acetas, Mor'phi-um aceticum, Ac'etate of Morphine, Acetate of Mor'phia. A salt formed by saturating morphia with acetic acid. (Morphia, in fine powder, 3j., Distilled water, Oss., Acetic acid, a sufficient quantity. Mix the morphia with the water; then carefully drop in the acid, constantly stirring until the morphia is neutralized and dissolved. Evaporate the solution in a water-bath to the consistence of syrup, and set aside to concrete. Lastly, dry the acetate with a gentle heat and rub it into powder. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, from ½th of a grain to half a grain.

MOR'PHIÆ Bro'midum, Bromide of Mor'phia or Mor'phine. A compound formed by the action of solution of bromide of potassium on a solution of morphia. It is given in syrup, each drachm representing one-eighth of a grain. It is given in such cases as require a combination of the sedative action of morphia with the peculiar effects of the bromides.

MORPHIÆ CITRAS, see Morphiæ sulphas—m. Hydrochloras, see Morphiæ sulphas—m. Murias, see Morphiæ sulphas.

MORPHIÆ SULPHAS, Morphiæ Sulphas, Sulphate of Morphia, S. of Morphine. A salt, formed like the acetate, by saturating morphia with sulphuric acid, evaporating and crystallizing. Dose, the same as of the acetate.

Lactate, Muriate, and Citrate of Morphia or Morphine, Morphia seu Morphinæ citras, have likewise been used; but they possess little or no advantages over the other salts. The sulphate and muriate are officinal in the Ph. U. S. The muriate or hydrochlorate—MORPHIÆ MURIAS (Ph. U. S., 1873), M. Hydrochloras (Ph. B., 1867), Morphinæ Murias, (F.) Chlorohydrate de Morphine—is directed, in the Ph. U. S., to be prepared as follows:—Morphinæ, in pulv., ʒi., Aquæ destillatæ, fʒiv., Acid. muriat., q. s. Mix the morphia with the water; carefully drop in the acid, stirring constantly until the morphia is neutralized and dissolved. Evaporate and crystallize; drain and dry on bibulous paper. Ph. U. S. The process of the Ph. B. is slightly different from this. It includes also the preparation of morphia. Dose, from ʒth of a grain to half a grain.

MORPHIATED, Morphiatus, Morphinated, Morphinat, (F.) Morphiné. Impregnated with morphia or with one of its salts. Affected with morphia.

MORPHIC, Morphicus, (F.) Morphique, (from μορφη, 'shape or form.') Relating to the anatomical shape or conformation of a part. Applied, also, in pharmacy, to any composition of morphia.

MORPHICA, (see morpho.) Monstrosities of birth. The 3d order, class Typhica of Good.

MORPHI'NA, Morphia.

MORPHI'NÆ ACETAS, Morphiæ acetas—m. Citras, Morphiæ citras—m. Sulphas, Morphiæ sulphas.

MORPHINATED, Morphiated.

MORPHINE, Morphia.

MORPHINÉ, Morphiated.

MORPHIQUE, Morphic.

MORPHIUM, Morphina—m. Aceticum, Morphinæ acetas.

MORPHO, (μορφη, 'shape or form,') in composition, shape or form.

MORPHO'EA, (μορφη, 'form.') A cutaneous affection caused by deposit of a lardaceous substance, which by its pressure obliterates the more highly organized tissues, such as the vessels, glands, and nerves. When very white, it is called Morphœa alba; when attended with pigmentary deposit, it is called m. nigra; with atrophy, m. atrophica; when in bands or lines, linear atrophica.

MORPHOLOG'ICAL, Morpholog'icus, (morpho, and λογος, 'a description.') That which has relation to the anatomical conformation of parts. Applied, at times, to the alterations in the form of the several parts of the embryo, in contradistinction to histological, which is applied to the transformation by which the tissues are gradually generated. In comparative anatomy, it is applied to the history of the modifications of forms, which the same organ undergoes in different animals, and more generally, to the doctrine of the forms of organized bodies.

MORPHOL'OGY, Anatomy, see Morphological.

MORPHOL'YSIS, (morpho, and λυσις, 'solution.') Destruction of organization. An agent that occasions such destruction is called a morpholyt'ic.

MORPHOLYT'IC, see Morpholysis.

MORPHON'OMY, Morphonom'ia, (morpho, and νομος, 'a law.') The laws of organic formation. The department of anatomical science which teaches the laws of organic configuration.

MORPHOT'IC, Morphot'icus, (μορφη, 'shape.') A term applied to organic or anatomical elements in contradistinction to the inorganic.

MORPHOT'OMY, (morpho, and τομή, 'incision,') see Anatomy.

MOR'PIO, see Pediculus.

MORPION, Crab-louse, see Pediculus.

MORRHUA AMERICA'NA, see Oleum jecoris aselli.

MORT, Adeps.

MORT, (from mors, gen. mortis, 'death,') Dead, Death—m. Apparente, Asphyxia—m. du Chien, Cholera—m. aux Chiens, Colchicum autumnale—m. du Diable, Scabiosa succisa—m. Né, Stillborn—m. aux Panthères, Doronicum pardalianches.

MORTA, Pemphigus.

MORTAL, Mortalis, (from mors,) Lethalis, Lethalis, Thanatodes, Thanasimus, Le'thal, (F.) Mortel. That which is subject to death:—that which causes death:—as, man is mortal; a disease is mortal. Of old, it was the custom to have a division of mortal or deadly wounds, which gave rise to many errors in medico-legal investigations, as the mortality, Lethalitas, Lethalitas, Lethality, (F.) Léthalité, of wounds depends upon various circumstances; and it is often a matter of extreme difficulty to pronounce whether or not a wound is necessarily mortal.

MORTAL'ITY, Mortal'itas, (F.) Mortalité. This word, taken in an extended sense, expresses the condition of all organized bodies,—of being subject to the cessation of life. In the sense in which it is most frequently employed, it signifies the death rate,—the proportional number of individuals who, in a certain population, die in a given time. If we assume the population of the earth to be one thousand millions, and a generation to last thirty-three years; in that space of time, the one thousand millions must all die, and, consequently, the number of deaths will be, by approximation,

Each year.....	30,000,000
Each day.....	82,191
Each hour.....	3,424
Each minute.....	57
Each second.....	1 nearly.

If, on the other hand, as has been supposed, the number of deaths is to that of the births as ten to twelve: there will be born,

Each year.....	36,000,000
Each day.....	98,657
Each hour.....	4,110
Each minute.....	68
Each second.....	1 & 1-7th.

It would not be proper to regard the value of life in different countries, or in different periods in the same country, to be indicated by the average mortality; inasmuch as in one case a greater mortality may occur amongst children, and in another amongst adults.

MORTALITY, Bills of, Bills of Necrol'ogy, Mortuary Reg'isters, (F.) Tables de Mortalité. Tables, instituted for the purpose of exhibiting the number of deaths, &c., in a given time. Well-kept bills of mortality are of great use to the physician and political economist. Those of London were proverbial for their inaccuracy and insufficiency; especially as regards the complaints of which the persons had died. They were formerly made out by the parish clerks, and the information was conveyed to them by two old women, who were appointed in each parish, and were called Searchers;—their duty being to see that the deceased had died a natural death. This defective system has, however, been abolished; and the Registrar-General's annual reports of births, deaths, and marriages exhibit how admirably vital statistics are now collected in Great Britain.

Mort'ar, Morta'rium, Moreta'rium, Morto'rium, Pi'so, Ac'onā, Pi'la, Hol'mus, Ig'dē, Ig'dus, (F.) Mortier. A vessel for reducing to powder different solid substances, and for making certain mixtures. Various substances are employed in the construction of mortars;—iron, marble, glass, Wedgwood-ware, &c.

Mortari'olum, (dim. of mortarium, 'a mortar,' or cavity resembling a mortar.) Alveolus.

Morta'rium, Mortar.

Mortel, Mortal.

Mortier, Mortar.

Mortifer, (mors, gen. mortis, 'death,' and fero, 'I carry,') Lethiferous.

Mortifica'tio, (mors, gen. mortis, 'death,' and fio, 'I become,') Mortification—m. Pulmonum, Necropneumonia.

Mortifica'tion, Mortifica'tio, Necro'sis, Sphacela'tion. The loss of vitality in a part of the body. The incipient stage of mortification, when the case is still recoverable, is called Gangrene; when totally dead, Sphacelus. Mortification of a bone is called Necrosis.

MORTIFICA'TION, Cold, Sphacelus—m. Ergot, Ergotism—m. Hot, Gangrene—m. Mildew, Ergotism.

Mort'tooth, Cupri sulphas.

Mortuary, (from mortuus, 'dead,') Relating to the dead. See Morgue.

MORTUARY REG'ISTERS, Mortality, bills of.

Mortuus, (from mors,) Dead.

Mor'ula, (from morum, 'a mulberry,') Button scurvy.

Mor'um, (μωρον,) see Morus nigra—m. Palpebrae internae, Trachoma carunculosa.

Morus Ni'gra, M. lacinia'ta, Mul'berry Tree, Mor'ea, Sycami'nus, Sycamin'ea, (F.) Mûrier Noir. Ord. Urticaceae. The fruit of the mulberry tree, Morus Sycami'num, (F.) Mûre, is pleasant, sweet, subacid, and abounds with a deep violet-colored juice, Mo'ri Suc'cus (Ph. B., 1867). A syrup was directed in the London Pharmacopœia. The bark of the root has been regarded as an anthelmintic.

MORUS RU'BRA, Red Mul'berry, Wild Mul'berry; indigenous. The root has been used to destroy tænia.

Morve, (from morbus, 'a disease,') Mucus, Nasal mucus; see Equinia—m. Farcineuse, see Equinia.

Mos, gen. Mo'ris, Habit.

Mos MOR'BI BENIG'NUS seu MALIG'NUS. The benign, or malignant character of a disease.

Moschardi'na, Muscer'da, (μωσχος, 'musk,') A lozenge for the mouth, composed of musk, ambergris, and other aromatics.

Moschelæ'on, (μωσχος, 'musk,' and ελαιον, 'oil,') Moscolæ'a. A compound aromatic oil, containing musk.

Mosch'us, (μωσχος,) Musk—m. Arabum, Hibiscus abelmoschus—m. Factitius, Musk, artificial.

Moscolæ'a, Moschelæ'on.

Mos'lich, Maslach.

Mosqui'ta, see Mosquito.

Mosqui'to (S.), (dim. of [S.] mosca, 'a fly,') Musquito, Cu'lex mosqui'to. A very troublesome insect in warm, moist situations. Curtains, called Mosquito curtains or bars, are used by way of protection. The entrance of mosquitoes into the bedchamber may also be prevented, to a certain extent, by keeping the doors and windows closed until the lights are extinguished. The pain and itching from the bites are alleviated by washing them with hartshorn.

MOSQUITA is a name given, by the Portuguese, to small, red pimples on the skin, resembling the bites of the mosquito.

Mossber'ry, Vaccinium oxycoccus—m. Ceylon, Fucus amylaceus—m. Club, Lycopodium—m. Cup, Lichen pyxidatus—m. Edible, Fucus amylaceus—m. Haircap, Polytrichum juniperinum—m. Iceland, Lichen Islandicus—m. Irish, Fucus crispus—m. Jaffna, Fucus amylaceus—m. Marine, Fucus amylaceus—m. Pearl, Chondrus crispus—m. Stone, Tripe de roche—m. Wall, common yellow, Parmelia parietina.

Mota'men, (movere, motum, 'to move,') Motion.

Mota'tio, Motion.

Mo'té, (μωτη,) Carbasus, Linteum.

Moteur, Motory.

Mo'tile, Motory.

Motil'ity, Motil'itas, (from movere, motum, 'to move,') (F.) Motilitéé, Motricité. Faculty of moving; moving power; contractility.

Motion, Mo'tus, Mo'tio, Mota'tio, Mota'men, Commo'tio, Permo'tio, Cine'sis, Movement, (F.) Mouvement. The act of changing place. The various motions may be divided into, — First, the voluntary, or those that are executed under the influence of the brain. Secondly, the involuntary, which may be subdivided into, 1. Those of the reflex kind, (F.) Mouvements reflexes, as the closure of the larynx on the contact of acrid vapors, of the pharynx on that of the food, — a function of the spinal marrow, reflex spinal act; and, 2. Those that are executed under the organic and other nerves of involuntary function. It is probable, too, that every living tissue is capable of moving responsive to its appropriate irritant. See Irritability.

The movements seen whenever very fine particles are disseminated in a liquid, and all dust sufficiently divided, and which have been considered phenomena of osmosis, have been called Brownian movements, (F.) Mouvements Browniens, after Dr. Robert Brown, the celebrated phytologist.

Mo'tor Oc'uli EXTER'NUS, Motor externus, Nervus timidus seu abdu'cens, (F.) Nerf oculomusculaire externe, (Ch.) Nerf moteur oculaire externe, Sixth pair of nerves, arises from the furrow which separates the pons Varolli from the medulla oblongata. It enters the cavernous sinus, anastomoses on the outside of the carotid artery with two filaments furnished by the superior cervical ganglion; enters the orbit by the sphen-noidal fissure; and is lost on the rectus externus oculi. This pair is also called Abducentes.

MOTO'RES OCULO'RUM, Moto'rii Oculo'rum, Oculo'la' res commu'nes, Ophthal'mici exte'ni, Motor Oculi, Motor Oculi commu'nis, Oculo-moto'rius, Common Oculo-mus'cular Nerves, (F.) Nerfs moteurs oculaires communs, (Ch.) The third pair of nerves, Par tert'ium. This nerve arises from a depression at the inner side of the peduncles of the brain, between the tuber annulare and corpora mammillaria. It enters the outer part of the cavernous sinus, and passes into the orbital cavity. Behind the sphenoidal fissure, it divides into two branches; the one superior and the other inferior. The former is lost on the rectus superior oculi and the levator palpebrae superioris; the latter—the larger of the two—divides into three branches, which pass to the rectus internus, rectus inferior, and lesser oblique. The last furnishes a filament, which passes to the ophthalmic ganglion.

Moto'rial, Motory.

Moto'rium Commu'nē, Mo'tor ner'vous cen'tres. The hemispherical and other ganglia whence the motor influence sets out.

Mouth, (Sax. muð,) Os, Sto'ma, Gab, (Sc.)

Mow, (Prov.) Gob, (F.) Bouche. This word sometimes signifies the cavity situate between the jaws, and containing the tongue, &c.;—at others, the outer orifice of that cavity, Peristom'ium, Vestibulum o'ris. The mouth, in the first acceptation, Cav'itas seu Ca'vum seu Spa'tium O'ris, is the cavity bounded, above, by the palatine arch; below, by the tongue; before, by the lips; and behind, by the velum palati and pharynx. The sides of the mouth and the organs it contains are lined by a mucous membrane. The anterior aperture of the mouth is, sometimes, called facial—the posterior, pharyngeal. In the mouth are the teeth, gums, alveolar margins, tongue; the excretory ducts of the salivary glands, and those of a number of mucous follicles, &c. It is in this cavity that the food is cut, torn, or bruised by the teeth; is impregnated with saliva, and formed into a mass or bolus, which is then subjected to the act of deglutition. The mouth contains the organs of taste; and it serves in respiration, articulation, expectoration, suction, &c.

The condition of the mouth requires to be attended to in Semeiology. The state of the mucous membrane, like that of the tongue, indicates the condition of the membrane of the alimentary canal generally.

MOUTH, Os, Apertu'ra, Orific'ium, Hia'tus, Peristom'ium, is, also, applied to the open extremities of vessels or other canals.

MOUTH ROOT, Coptis.

Mow, (from [F.] moue,) Mouth.

Mox'a, Moxibu'rium. A word by which the Chinese and Japanese designate a cottony substance, which they prepare by beating the dried leaves of the Artemisia moxa,—a kind of mugwort. With this down they form a cone, which is placed upon the part intended to be cauterized, and is set fire to at the top. The heat and pain gradually increase, in proportion as the combustion proceeds downwards, until ultimately an eschar may be formed. In Europe and this country, the same operation is usually practised with a cylinder of cottonwool, or with one formed from the pith of the greater sunflower. This mode of cauterization is employed as a powerful counter-irritant; which it assuredly is. Sloughing may be in some measure prevented, according to Baron Larrey, by the application of liquid ammonia to the burnt part.

The term moxa has been extended to any substance, which by gradual combustion on or near the skin is employed as a counterirritant,—as the elec'tric or galvan'ic mox'a or cant'ery, in which voltaic electricity is employed as the cauterizing agent.

Moxibu'rium, (moxa, and buro, for uro, ustum, 'I burn,') Moxa.

Moxibus'tion, Moxibus'tio, Moxocaus'is, Eucaus'is. Mode of cauterization by means of moxa.

Mucos'ity, Mucos'itas, (F.) Mucosité. A fluid, which resembles mucus, or contains a certain quantity of it.

Mu'cous, Muco'sus, Blennoi'des, Myxo'des, (from mucus,) (F.) Muqueux. An epithet for all bodies containing mucilage or mucus. It is also sometimes used synonymously with gummy. In pathology it is occasionally employed to express the seat of a disease, as mucous disease, mucous phlegmasia; that is, having its seat in a mucous membrane.

MU'COUS CAN'cer. Colloid cancer has been described under this name.

MU'COUS COR'PUSCLES, see Mucus.

MU'COUS CYSTS, Muc'inous Cysts. Cystic tumors formed by the closure of the orifice of a mucous gland and the retention of its contents.

MU'COUS DEGENERATION, Mucoid softening.

MU'COUS DISEASE. A morbid condition, characterized by the secretion of abnormal mucus on mucous surfaces, which then becomes aggregated into shreds, tubular casts, &c.

MU'COUS FE'Ver. A disease mentioned by the older writers, but which has since been regarded as abortive typhus.

A substance analogous to vegetable mucilage; from which, however, it differs by affording subcarbonate of ammonia on distillation. Mucus exudes through the skin, in a state of combination with a peculiar oily matter; and, drying, forms the epidermis. It constitutes, in part, the different epidermeous productions, as the hair, nails, wool, and horn of animals, feathers of birds, and scales of fish. It is found at the surface of the mucous membranes, and presents some difference in its composition and properties, according to the particular mucous membrane from which it is obtained. Its chief organic constituent is an albuminoid compound — mu'cin, mu'cosin, which, in inflammation of mucous membranes, gives to the discharge its tenacious character. Mucus preserves the membranes moist, and in a state best fitted for the performance of their functions. The French give the term glair to the thick, stringy mucus, secreted by the mucous membranes when in a state of disease.

When mucus is examined with the microscope, it is found to contain numerous epithelial scales or flattened cells; together with round, granular bodies, commonly termed mucous corpuscles or mucous globules, which are contained in a fluid portion — li'quor mu'ci.

MU'cus CARPHO'DES, see Carphodes — m. Ca-tharticus, Lichen Islandicus.

Mucus Infranchissable (F.). 'Impassable mucus.' A term given by Pouchet to the mucus, which, as he supposed, blocked up the entrance to the uterus after impregnation.

Mulâtre, Mulatto.

Mulat'to, (F.) Mulâtre, (S.) Mulata. An individual of the human species engendered of a white and black race, (from mulus, 'a mule.')

The following table, according to Mr. Lawrence, after Ulloa, exhibits the proportion of white blood in the various castes, — arising from the hybridous admixture of white and black, — according to the principles sanctioned by usage:

PARENTS.	OFFSPRING.	DEGREE OF MIXTURE.
Negro and White.....	Mulatto.....	1-2 White,	1-2 Black.
White and Mulatto.....	Terceron.....	3-4 —	1-4 —
Negro and Mulatto.....	{ Griffo, Griff, or Zambo, or }.....	1-4 —	3-4 —
	{ Black Terceron, }.....	7-8 —	1-8 —
White and Terceron.....	Quarteron or Quadroon.....	1-8 —	7-8 —
Negro and Terceron.....	Black Quarteron or Quadroon.....	15-16 —	1-16 —
White and Quarteron.....	Quinteron.....	1-16 —	15-16 —
Negro and Black Quarteron.....	Black Quinteron.....

The last two were considered to be respectively white and black, in the British West India Islands; and the former, prior to modern changes, were white by law, and consequently free.

Terceron is now scarcely used, and Quarteron or Quadroon takes its place. See Half-caste. The Octoroon is the old Quadroon. In other words, at the present day, a Quadroon is the offspring of a white and mulatto; an Octoroon, of the white and quadroon. See also Half-caste.

Mu'rias (gen. Muria'tis) Auriconat'ricum, see Gold.

Muriate d'Ammoniaque, Ammonia murias — m. d'Ammoniaque et de Fer, Ferrum ammoniatum — m. d'Or, Gold, muriate of, see Gold.

Muriat'ic Ac'id, (from muria,) Hydrochloric acid, Chlorohy'dric acid, Ac'idum salis seu mari-ni, Spir'itus salis mari'ni seu salis Glauberi seu salis ac'idus seu fu'mans, Ac'idum hydro-chloricum, A. muriaticum (Ph. U. S. 1873), A. muriaticum pu'rum, Spirit of salt, (F.) Acide hydrochlorique ou muriatique ou chlorhydrique. An aqueous solution of chlorohydric acid gas of s. g. 1.16. The odor of muriatic acid is suffocating, taste very acid and caustic. It is nearly colorless when pure, but commonly of a pale yellow; volatile; the fumes visible. Muriatic acid is possessed of tonic and antiseptic properties. It is used in typhus, cutaneous eruptions, in gargles for inflammatory and putrid sore throats, (gtt. xxx. to f3vj. of water,) &c. When added to a pediluvium, it renders it stimulating.

Ac'idum MURIAT'ICUM DILU'tum of the Ph. U. S., Dilute Hydrochloric or Chlorohydric Acid, contains four troyounces of muriatic acid to a pint of distilled water. Its s. g. is 1.038.

Mu'ride, (after muria,) Bromine.

Murier Noire, Morus nigra.

Mu'riform, Moriform'is, ([F.] mûre, 'a mulberry,' and [L.] forma, 'shape,') Mulberry-shaped, as muriform mass or body, (F.) Amas ou corps mûriforme; the collection of vitelline globes proceeding from the segmentation of the vitellus.

Mu'rigene, (muria, and γεννω, 'I generate,') Chlorine.

Mu'rina, (after muria,) Bromine.

Mur'mur, gen. Mur'muris, (F.) Murmure. (A word existing both in the Romanic and Teutonic languages, and probably a variety of onomatopœia — mur mur expressing the kind of sound which the word indicates.) A low continued or continuously repeated sound, as that of flame, or of a stream running over a stony bottom.

MUR'MUR, ARTE'RIAL, Hæmic mur'mur, Blood sound. The sound heard when the ear is applied over a bloodvessel. It varies in some conditions of disease, becoming, for instance, more musical in oligæmia.

MUR'MUR AUR'IUM, Tinnitus aurium — m. Hæmic, Murmur, arterial — m. Intestinale seu Intestinum seu Ventris, Borborygmus.

MUR'MUR, RES'PIRATORY, (F.) Bruit respiratoire ou vésiculaire, Murmure vésiculaire. The noise heard during inspiration and expiration, especially the former. It is produced by the passage of the air through the bronchial tubes and into the air-cells. It has been also called mur'mur of the expansion of the lungs, (F.) Bruit d'expansion pulmonaire; and, when distinctly vesicular, Respiration of the cells or vesicular respiration, (F.) Respiration ou murmure vésiculaire. Vesicular respiration is of course absent when the cells of the lungs have been obliterated from any cause. We may then have the Respiration nulle, Absence du bruit respiratoire, Silence, and Respiration silencieuse of the French writers.

At times, it is rude during inspiration or expiration, or both — the Respiration rude or R. râpeuse of the French. At others, there is a blowing sound, (F.) Souffle, Respiration soufflante, as if some one were blowing into the auscultator's ear through a tube. This is heard in the healthy state over the larynx, trachea, (F.) Souffle trachéal, and about the bifurcation of the bronchia, (F.) Souffle bronchique; but when it proceeds from the lungs it denotes disease. It may be tubular or diffused. In the former, the whistling murmurs appear to occur in a space limited to the immediate neighborhood of the part examined. In the latter, they are produced with but moderate intensity, and sometimes at a distance from the ear, over a tolerably extended space.

The respiration, perceived over the trachea and bronchia in health, is called tracheal or bronchial or tubal, (F.) Respiration bronchique, Souffle tubaire, according to the situation in which it is heard.

MUR'MUR, U'TERINE, Bruit placentaire—m. Utero-placental, Bruit placentaire—m. Venous, Venous murmur—m. Vesicular, Murmur, respiratory.

MUR'MUR, WHIF'FING, see Murmur, respiratory.

Murr, Murrain, (Sax. mýpphan, 'to destroy,' or from [L.] mori, 'to die,') O'vine vari'ola, Tag-sore, Rot, (F.) Claveau, Clavelée, Pestilential fe'ver. An epizootic, perhaps contagious, disease, having some resemblance to small-pox, which affects cattle, especially sheep, and is said to have been transferred to man. Modification of the disease by inoculation of animals with it has been called Clavelisation.

Mur'rain, Murr, Coryza.

Mur'ren, Murr, Coryza.

Mur'ton, (μύτρον,) Clitoris.

Mur'tum, Clitoris.

Mu'sa, (after Antonius Musa, physician to Augustus,) M. Paradisiaca—m. Cliffordiana, M. Paradisiaca—m. Mensaria, M. Paradisiaca.

MU'SA PARADISI'ACA, Mu'sa, M. mensa'ria seu Cliffordia'na, Amu'sa, Pal'ma hu'milis, Fi'cus Indica, Ba'ta, Plat'anus, Plan'tain tree, (F.) Plaintain-arbre, Platanier, Bananier commun. Family, Musaceæ. Sex. Syst. Hexandria Monogynia. It grows in many parts of India and South America. The fruit, which is largely eaten for bread, consists of a mealy substance, Plantain meal, Conquintay. It is clammy, has a sweetish taste, and will dissolve in the mouth without being chewed. The spike of the fruit often weighs forty or fifty pounds. The leaves of the tree serve the Indians for tablecloths and napkins. Being smooth and soft, they are also employed as dressings for blisters. The water from the soft trunk is astringent, and sometimes used in diarrhœa.

MU'SA SAPIEN'TUM. The Ban'na tree, Baco'ba, (F.) Figuier-bananier, Bananier, Baco'ba. This differs somewhat from the last. The fruit, Ban'na'na, (S.) Platano, is shorter, straighter, and rounder, the pulp softer and of a more luscious taste. When ripe, it is very agreeable. It is eaten like the plantain, and relished by all ranks of people in the West Indies. Both varieties are natives of Guinea.

Musc, (from μύσος,) Musk.

Mus'ca Hispan'ica, (Spanish fly,) Cantharis.

Mus'cæ, Entohy'loid, see Metamorphopsia—m. Volitantes, see Metamorphopsia.

Muscade, see Myristica moschata.

Muscadier, Myristica moschata.

Muscer'da, Moschardina. Also, the dung of mice, (mus, 'a mouse,' and merda, 'dung,') formerly given in epilepsy.

Mus'cle, (old Eng.) Brayon, Mus'culus, To'rns, Lacer'tus, Mys, My'on, (from μύς, 'a mouse or rat,' because, say some etymologists, the ancients compared the muscles to flayed mice or rats. According to Diemerbroeck, Douglass, Chaussier, &c., μύς comes rather from μύω, 'to close,' 'to move,' &c., a function proper to muscles. This etymon is the more probable.) Muscles have been divided into those of Animal life, or of the life of relation—Voluntary muscles—which execute movements under the influence of the will; as the muscles of the limbs, head, trunk, &c., and into those of organ'ic life—involuntary muscles—which contract under the influence of certain special stimuli; as the heart, fleshy fibres of the stomach, &c. Mixed muscles are those which belong partly to each of these divisions;—as the muscles of respiration and the sphincters. Muscles that act in opposition to each other are called antagonists; thus, every extensor has a flexor for an antagonist, and conversely. Muscles that concur in the same action are termed congen'rous. The muscles present numerous varieties in form, size, situation, use, &c., and have been divided, by some, into long, broad, and short. Each of these divisions comprises simple and compound muscles. Simple or rectilin'ear muscles have all their fibres in a similar direction, and only one body—as the Sartorius, Pronator quadratus, &c. Compound muscles are those which have only one belly and several tendons, as the flexors of the fingers and toes; or several bellies and several tendons—as the biceps flexor cubiti, sacrolumbalis, &c. To the compound muscles belong also the rad'iated muscles. Their fibres set out from a common centre, and are arranged like the radii of a circle;—such are the diaphragm, iliacus, temporal, &c. Pen'nated or Pen'niform Muscles: their fibres are arranged in two rows, which are united at a median line, at greater or less angles; nearly as the feathers are inserted into a quill. The palmaris longus is one of these. Sem'ipenniform muscles: their fibres are oblique, as in the last case; but they are inserted only on one side of the tendon. Hol'low muscles are—the heart, intestines, urinary bladder, &c.

Much difference has existed in the enumeration of muscles. Some authors reckon them at upwards of 400. Chaussier admits only 368. The greater part of them are in pairs. Very few are azygous.

Muscles have been variously named. 1. According to their uses, as diaphragm, buccinator, extensors, flexors, adductors, levators, depressors, &c. 2. According to their position, as interspinales, interossei, subclavius, popliteus, anconeus, cubitalis, iliacus, temporalis, &c. 3. According to their shape, as trapezius, splenius, lumbricalis, serratus, digastric, deltoid, scalenus, rhomboideus, &c. 4. According to their dimensions, as pectoralis major, rectus capitis anticus major, pectoralis minor, glutæus maximus, medius, and minimus. 5. According to their direction, as obliquus abdominis, transversalis abdominis, rectus femoris, rectus abdominis, &c. 6. According to their composition, as semimembranosus, semitendinosus, complexus, &c. 7. According to their attachments, or the different points of the skeleton with which they are connected by means of tendons or aponeuroses; as sternocleidomastoideus, sternohyoideus, &c. On this is grounded the nomenclature of M. Dumas, and that of Chaussier, which is full of meaning.

The end of the muscle, which adheres to the most fixed part, is usually called the origin or head, caput, (F.) Tête; and that which adheres to the more movable part, the insertion or tail, cauda, (F.) Queue; the intervening part or body of the muscle being called the ven'ter, gas'ter, or bel'ly, Ven'ter mus'culi, Me'dium mus'culi, (F.) Ventre: hence the names gastrocnemii, digastricus, biceps, and triceps; according as they have two bellies, two or three heads, &c. The following table, founded on the arrangement of Dr. Barclay, gives a comprehensive view of the actions of the various muscles of the human body.

TABLE OF THE MUSCLES, ARRANGED AFTER THE MANNER OF DR. BARCLAY, ACCORDING TO THEIR ACTIONS.

THE HEAD IS MOVED

Forwards by

Platysma myoides,
Sternomastoideus,
Rectus anticus major,
" " minor,

Assisted (when the lower jaw is fixed) by

Mylohyoideus,
Geniohyoideus,
Geniohyoglossus,
Digastrici.

Backwards by

Part of trapezius,
Splenius capitis,
Complexus,
Trachelomastoideus,
Rectus posticus major,
" " minor,
Obliquus capitis superior.

To either side by

Platysma myoides,
Sternomastoideus,
Part of trapezius,
Splenius capitis,
" colli,
Trachelomastoideus,
Complexus.

THE NECK IS MOVED

Forwards by

Platysma myoides,
Sternomastoideus,
Digastricus,
Mylohyoideus,
Geniohyoideus,
Geniohyoglossus,
Omohyoidei,
Sternohyoidei,
Thyrohyoidei,
Rectus anticus minor,
Longus colli.

Backwards by

Part of trapezius,
Rhomboides minor,
Serratus posticus superior,
Splenius capitis,
" colli,
Complexus,
Trachelomastoideus,
Transversalis colli,
Interspinales colli,
Semispinales colli,
Rectus posticus major,
" " minor,
Obliquus capitis superior,
" inferior,
Scaleni postici,
Levator scapulae.

Laterally by

Various combinations of those muscles which separately move it forwards and backwards, assisted by the scaleni, intertransversales, and recti laterales.

THE TRUNK IS MOVED

Forwards by

Rectus abdominis,
Pyramidalis,
Obliquus externus abdominis,
Obliquus internus,
Psoas magnus,
" parvus,

Assisted (when the arms are carried forwards) by

Pectoralis major,
" minor,
Serratus magnus.

Backwards by

Trapezius,
Rhomboides major,
Latissimus dorsi,
Serratus posticus superior,
" inferior,
Sacrolumbalis,
Longissimus dorsi,
Spinales dorsi,
Semispinales dorsi,
Multifidus spinæ,
Intertransversales dorsi et lumborum.

Laterally by

Obliquus externus,
" internus,
Quadratus lumborum,
Longissimus dorsi,
Sacrolumbalis,
Serratus postici,
Latissimus dorsi.

THE SCAPULA IS MOVED

Upwards by

Trapezius,
Levator scapulae,
Rhomboides.

Downwards by

Lower part of trapezius,
Latissimus dorsi,
Pectoralis minor.

Forwards by

Pectoralis minor,
Serratus magnus.

Backwards by

Part of trapezius,
Rhomboides,
Latissimus dorsi.

THE HUMERUS IS MOVED

Forwards by

Part of deltoid,
Part of pectoralis major,

Assisted in some circumstances by

Biceps,
Coracobrachialis.

Backwards by

Part of deltoid,
Teres major,
" minor,
Long head of triceps,
Latissimus dorsi.

Inwards by

Part of pectoralis major,
Latissimus dorsi.

Rotated inwards by

Subscapularis,

Assisted occasionally by
Pectoralis major,
Latissimus and teres major.

Outwards by Supraspinatus,
Infraspinatus,
Teres minor.

THE FOREARM IS MOVED

Forwards by

Biceps,
Brachialis anticus,
Pronator teres,

Assisted by

Flexor carpi radialis,
" sublimis,
" ulnaris,
Supinator longus.

Backwards by

Triceps,
Anconeus.

Rotated inwards by

Pronator teres,
Flexor carpi radialis,
Palmaris longus,
Flexor sublimis,
Pronator quadratus.

Outwards by

Biceps,
Supinator brevis,
Extensor secundi internodii.

THE CARPUS IS MOVED

Forwards by	Backwards by	Outwards by	Inwards by
Flexor carpi radialis, Palmaris longus, Flexor sublimis, " carpi ulnaris, " profundus, " longus pollicis.	Extensor carpi radialis longior, Extensor carpi radialis brevior, Extensor secundi inter- nodii, Indicator, Extensor communis digi- torum, Extensor proprius pollicis.	Flexor carpi radialis, Extensor carpi radialis longior, Extensor carpi radialis brevior, Extensor ossis metacarpi, Extensor primi internodii.	Flexor sublimis, " carpi ulnaris, " profundus, Extensor communis digito- rum, Extensor minimi digiti, Extensor carpi ulnaris.

THE THUMB IS MOVED

Inwards and forwards, across the palms, by	Outwards and backwards by	Upwards and forwards, away from the other fingers, by	Backwards and inwards to the other fingers by
Opponens pollicis, Flexor brevis, " longus.	Extensor ossis metacarpi pollicis, Extensor primi internodii, Extensor secundi inter- nodii.	Abductor, Assisted by part of the Flexor brevis.	Adductor, Extensor primi internodii, Extensor secundi internodii.

THE FINGERS ARE MOVED

Forwards or flexed by	Backwards or extended by	Outwards to radial border by	Inwards by
Flexor sublimis, " profundus, Lumbricales, Interossei, Flexor brevis digiti minimi, Abductor digiti minimi.	Extensor communis, " minimi digiti, Indicator.	Abductor indicis, " digiti minimi, Interossei.	Abductor digiti minimi, Interossei.

THE THIGH IS MOVED

Forwards by	Backwards by	Inwards by	Outwards by
Psoas magnus, Iliacus, Tensor vaginæ femoris, Pectineus, Adductor longus, " brevis.	Gluteus maximus, Part of gluteus medius, Pyriformis, Obturator internus, Part of adductor magnus, Long head of biceps, Semitendinosus, Semimembranosus. Semitendinosus, Biceps, Semimembranosus, Gracilis, Sartorius, Popliteus.	Rectus, Crureus, Vastus externus, " internus.

THE LEG IS MOVED

Forwards or flexed by	Backwards or extended by	Inclined inwards by	Outwards by
Tibialis anticus, Extensor proprius pollicis, Extensor longus digito- rum, Peroneus tertius.	Gastrocnemius, Plantaris, Soleus, Flexor longus digitorum, " longus pollicis, Tibialis posticus, Peroneus longus, " brevis.	Extensor proprius pollicis, Flexor longus digitorum, " longus pollicis, Tibialis posticus.	Peroneus longus, " brevis, Extensor longus digitorum, Peroneus tertius.

THE FOOT IS MOVED

Backwards or flexed by	Forwards or extended by	Inclined inwards by	Outwards by
Abductor pollicis, Flexor brevis digitorum, Abductor minimi digiti, Flexor longus pollicis, " digitorum, " accessorius, Lumbricales, Flexor brevis pollicis, Adductor pollicis, Flexor brevis minimi di- giti, Interossei.	Extensor longus digitorum, Extensor proprius pollicis, " brevis digitorum.	Abductor pollicis, Interossei.	Abductor pollicis, " digiti minimi, Interossei.

THE TOES ARE MOVED

Muscles are formed: 1. Essentially of the muscular or flesh'y fibre, (see Muscular fibre.) 2. Of Areolar tissue, which unites together the fibres. This areolar tissue is not very visible between the fine and loose fibres; but becomes more so when they unite in more considerable fasciculi. It forms, moreover, to each muscle, an external envelope, which unites it to the neighboring parts, and admits of its motion. This envelope was formerly called Tunica propria musculo'rum. 3. Of Arteries. These proceed from neighboring trunks, and are generally very large. Their size and number are always in proportion to the bulk of the muscle. With the exception of some viscera, as the lungs and the kidneys, there are few organs that receive as much blood as the muscles. 4. Of Veins. They follow the same course in the muscles as the arteries. Bichat asserts that they are generally devoid of valves. 5. Of Lymphatics. Of these we know little, and cannot easily follow them between the fleshy fibres. 6. Of Nerves. These are numerous, and of different sizes. They almost all proceed from the encephalon; some, however, issue from ganglions, and accompany the arteries. In general, they penetrate the fleshy tissue along with the vessels, with which they are closely united. After they have entered the muscles, they divide and subdivide until they are lost sight of.

When muscles are subjected to heavy pressure at about 32° Fah., a fluid, Muscle juice, is obtained, to which the name Muscle plasma has been given. It coagulates spontaneously, and separates into serum and clot; the latter, called Myosin, corresponding with the clot formed by coagulating blood.

In addition to albuminous substances and sarcoous elements, muscle contains various extractive matters, as creatin, creatinin, hypoxanthin or sarkin, xanthin, inosic acid, inosite or muscle-sugar, volatile fatty acids, &c.

Muscle Canin, Levator anguli oris — m. Caninellé, Ischiotrochanterianus.

MUSCLE CLOT, see Muscle.

MUSCLE OF GAVARD. The oblique muscular fibres of the stomach.

Muscle Grand Fessier, Gluteus major — m. of Guthrie, Compressor urethræ — m. of Horner, Tensor tarsi — m. of Houston, Compressor venæ dorsalis penis.

MUSCLE JUICE, Muscular juice, Sucus muscularis, (F.) Suc musculaire. A fluid surrounding the fibres of striated muscle and the fibre-cells of smooth muscles, which differs from the liquor sanguinis of the blood; containing a considerable amount of casein. It seems to be produced within the sarcolemma, through which it exudes. See Muscle.

Muscle très Large du Dos, Latissimus dorsi — m. Merkel's, ceratocricoid.

MUSCLE PLASMA, see Muscle — m. Serum, see Muscle — m. Sugar, Inosite — m. Tumor, Myoma — m. of Wilson, Compressor urethræ.

Muscular, Muscularis, Musculo'sus, Toro'sus, (F.) Musculaire, Musculeux. That which belongs or relates to the muscles. Well furnished with muscles, Lacerto'sus.

MUSCULAR ARTERIES. Arteries that are distributed to the muscles. The name Muscular Arteries of the eye has been especially given to two branches sent off by the ophthalmic artery; the one, inferior, which furnishes branches to the rectus inferior oculi, lachrymal sac, &c., and some of the anterior ciliary arteries: the other, the superior, which is sometimes wanting; but, when it exists, gives branches to the rectus superior oculi and levator palpebræ superioris.

MUSCULAR CONTRACTION. The exertion of the power, possessed by muscles, of shortening themselves, or of contracting to produce motion; — muscular motion being the change in the situation and relation of organs, induced by muscular contraction. When a muscle contracts, its fibres assume more the zigzag direction, and the extremities approximate; but the bulk of the whole muscle is not augmented. This contraction takes place, at times, with extreme velocity; a single thrill, in the letter r, can be pronounced in the 1-30,000th part of a minute. The force of contraction, Myodynami's, depends upon the healthy physical condition of the muscle, combined with due energy of the brain. The duration, in voluntary motion, is for a certain time dependent upon the will: — contractions, excited involuntarily, cannot be so long maintained.

MUSCULAR CURRENT. A current which, according to Matteucci, exists in every living muscle, whose tendinous extremities are not equally disposed — one, for example, forming a cord; the other broad and ribbonlike — and which circulates in the muscle from the tendinous extremity to the muscular surface.

MUSCULAR FIBRE, Flesh'y fibre, Filum muscula'rè, Fibrilla muscula'ris. A name given to the filaments, which, by their union, form the muscles. This fibre is flat, soft, downy, linear, but little elastic, and more or less red. It is firmer in adults than in the young or the aged; of the same size in the great and small muscles; and runs its course without bifurcation or ramification. It is but slightly resisting in the dead body, tearing readily; but during life it supports very great efforts without laceration. It is itself composed of a considerable number of fibrils, similar to each other, and subdividing almost ad infinitum, and inclosed in a delicate sheath, — the Sarcolemma. The ultimate filaments, into which the fibre can be decomposed by mechanical means, seem to be hollow or tubular. See Sarcoous elements. The fibre exists under two forms, the striated or striped, (F.) Fibre striée, and the non-striated, smooth, or unstriated, (F.) Fibre lisse; the muscles composed of the former ministering, as a general rule, to the animal functions, — the latter always, perhaps, to the organic. The color of the muscular fibres is red in man, and white in several animals. A greater or less number of fibres united in fasciculi, Fasciculi seu Lacer'ti musculo'rum, approximated to each other, and forming a distinct mass, of very variable size and shape, the extremities being attached to bones by means of tendons, constitutes a muscle. In this are included areolar membrane, vessels and nerves. See Muscle.

MUSCULAR JUICE, Muscle juice.

MUSCULAR NERVES. The nerves distributed to the muscles are so named. Winslow calls the 4th pair of nerves — Nerv musculaire oblique supérieur.

MUSCULAR SENSE, Sense of Muscular Activity. The consciousness of muscular exertion or activity, which accompanies and directs muscular movement. See Anæsthesia.

MUSCULAR SUBSTANCE, see Fibrin.

MUSCULAR SYSTEM. A term given to the aggregate of the muscles of the body.

MUSCULAR VEINS. These bring back the blood, which has been carried to the muscles by the muscular arteries.

Muscula'ris, 'stout,' 'strong,' Corroborant.

MUSCULARIS MUCO'SÆ. A layer of organic muscular fibres, which can be traced from one end of the intestinal canal to the other, and from which processes are given off in different directions. They are separated by the submucous tissue from the muscular coat proper.

Muscular'ity. Muscular contractility, as of the arteries, &c.

Muscula'tion, see Locomotion.

Musculature (F.). The condition of the muscular system; as une bonne musculature, 'a good condition of the muscular system.'

Musculeux, Muscular.

Mus'culi Accessorio'rii ad Sacrolumba'lem, see Sacrolumbalis—m. Papillares, Columnæ carneæ—m. Pectinati, Pectinated muscles.

Mus'culin, see Fibrin.

Musculocuta'neus, Musculocuta'neus, (from musculus, and cutis, 'skin.') That which appertains to muscles and skin.

MUSCULOCUTA'NEUS NERVE. This name is especially given to two nerves;—the one, the Exter'nal cutaneous nerve, furnished by the brachial plexus (see Cutaneous nerves); the other, given off from the popliteus externus, (F.) Nerv Sciaticus, Poplite' externe, Prætibio digital (Ch.). It descends on the anterior and outer part of the leg, — at first, hid among the muscles; becomes superficial about the middle of the leg; and divides into two branches, which pass superficially on the back of the foot. Two musculocutaneous nerves—superior and inferior—proceed from the first lumbar. The superior musculocuta'neus—ilioero'tal, iliohypogas'tricus, which divides into two branches,—abdominal and scrotal. The inferior musculocuta'neus is smaller than the superior, and is distributed as its name, ilioin'guinal, indicates.

Musculointes'tinal, see Myentericus.

Musculorachidæ'us. Belonging or relating to muscles and to the spine. A name given to branches, furnished behind by the intercostal, lumbar, and sacral arteries, which are distributed to the spine and to the muscles of the neighborhood.

Musculo'sa Expan'sio, ('muscular expansion,') Platysma myoides.

Musculospi'ral Nerve, Radial nerve.

Musculo'sus, Muscular.

Mus'culus, Muscle—m. Acclivis, Obliquus internus abdominis.

MUS'culus ANOM'ALUS. A muscular fasciculus, attached only to the superior maxillary bone, with which the Levator labii superioris alæque nasi muscle is related.

MUS'culus AUXILIA'RIS, Pyramidalis abdominis—m. Brueckianus, see Ciliary muscle—m. Ciliaris Riolani, Ciliary muscle—m. Cochlearis, see Ligamentum spirale—m. Constrictorius, Sphincter—m. Museau de Tanche, ('the tench's mouth or snout,') Os uteri.

Muse'na Bark, see Rottlera Schimper.

Musen'na, Mesenna.

Muse'um Anatom'icum, Supel'lex anatom'ica. An anatomical museum.

Mush'room, ([F.] Mousseron,) Fungus.

Mu'sic, Mu'sica, (F.) Musique, (μουσική, musa, 'a song,') The art of producing harmonious and cadenced sounds; an art which has, at times, been beneficially used in diseases, particularly in those of the mind; or on which the mind could act in a salutary manner.

Mu'sical Sound, Sifflement modulé.

Music'ians' Cramp, see Cramp, writers'.

Musicoma'nia, Musoma'nia, (music, and mania.)

A variety of monomania in which the passion for music is carried to such an extent as to derange the intellectual faculties.

Mu'sing, List'less, (from musa, 'study,') Aphelxia otiosa.

Musique, Music.

Musk, Mos'chus, Mosch (Arab.), (F.) Musc. A peculiar concrete animal substance, of a very diffusible odor, bitter taste, and a deep brown color; solid; and inclosed in the preputial follicles of Mos'chus moschiferus, Musk Deer, (F.) Chevreton porte-musc. It is possessed of stimulant and antispasmodic properties. Dose, gr. v. to ʒj. in bolus. The volatile oil of certain plants, having its characteristic odor, has sometimes been substituted for musk. The distilled oil of Malva moschata and Mimulus moschatus, for example, has been employed in hysterical disorders and certain forms of nervous diseases.

MUSK, ARTIFIC'IAL, Mos'chus factit'ius, Resi'na Suc'cini. (Ol. succini rectif., 1 part, Acid. nitric, 4 parts. Digest:—a black matter will be deposited, which must be well washed with water.)

Musk'grape Flow'er, Bulbus vomitorius.

Musk'mallow, Hibiscus abelmoschus.

Musk'root, Sumbul.

Musk'seed, see Hibiscus abelmoschus.

Musk'wood, Thymiana.

Mus'lin Gauze, Antisept'ic, see Gauze.

Musoma'nia, Musicomania.

Musqui'to, Mosquito.

Mussæn'da Frondo'sa, Belil'la, Bel'eson. A decoction of this Ceylonese plant has been esteemed refrigerant.

Mus'sel, Mytilus edulis.

Mus'selled, see Mytilus edulis.

Mussita'tio, Mussita'tion, (from mussitare, mussitatum, itself from mussare, 'to murmur,') A condition in which the tongue and lips move as in the act of speaking, but without sounds being produced. This sort of murmuring is an unfavorable sign in disease, as indicating great cerebral debility.

Musta'ceum, (from Mustum, 'must,' used in making it.) A kind of wedding-cake with the ancients, which consisted of meal, aniseed, cummin, and several other aromatics; its object, it has been conceived, being to prevent or remove the indigestion occasioned by too great indulgence at the marriage feast. Lauræolum in mustaceo querere, 'to seek for glory in pitiful performances' (Cicero).

Mustache, Mystax.

Mus'tard, Black, (F.) Moutarde, (from moût, 'must,' because the seeds were bruised with vinegar or must—hence, according to some, from mustum ardens [?]), Sinapis.

MUS'TARD, CLAM'MY, Polanisia graveolens—m. Essence of, Whitehead's, see Sinapis—m. False, Polanisia graveolens—m. Flour of, Sinapis—m. Green, Lepidium sativum—m. Hedge, Erysimum—m. Mithridate, Thlaspi campestre—m. Paper, Charta sinapis—m. Stinking hedge, Alliaria—m. Treacle, Thlaspi arvense—m. White, Sinapis alba—m. Wild, Sinapis arvensis.

Mustee. One born of parents one of whom is white, the other a mulatto. See Mestizo.

Mustela'neus, (from mustela, 'a weasel,') Galeancon.

Mus'tum, ('juice of the grape,') Wort.

Mutacis'mus, Mu'tacism, (μυτακισμός, 'I use the letter m, mu, too frequently,') A vicious pronunciation; consisting, according to Sauvages, in the frequent repetition of the letters m, n, and p, which are substituted for others.

Muta'tio Sex'us. 'A change or conversion of sex.' A notion prevailed in antiquity that such a conversion was possible.

Mute, Mu'tus, Dumb, (F.) Muet. Affected with mutitas.

Muteo'sis, (mutus, 'dumb,') (F.) Mutose. Under this name is comprehended every phenomenon of expression, voluntary and involuntary, which impresses the sight or touch.

Mutula'tion, Mutila'tio, Maim'ing, (mutilus, 'broken,') The removing or privation of a limb, or of some other external part of the body; in all countries, a crime punished with severity.

Muti'num, Penis.

Mutisme, Mutitas.

Mu'titas, (from mutus, 'dumb,') Ala'lia, Anaud'ia, Infan'tia Lin'gue, Dumb'ness, Speech'lessness, Mutism, (F.) Mutisme, Mutité. Impossibility of articulating sounds; although they can be elicited. Dumbness is often congenital, and united with deafness, of which it is an effect. In some cases it is accidental.

Mu'titas Surdo'rum, Surd'itas Muto'rum, Apho'nia Surdorum, Surdomu'titas, Deafdumb'ness, Deafmutism, (F.) Surdimutité. Speechlessness from deafness; congenital, or produced during infancy. The subjects of this affection are called deafdumb, (F.) Sourde-muets.

Mutité, Mutitas.

Mu'to, Penis.

Mutonia'tus, (from muto,) Membrosus.

Mutterkorn, Ergot.

Mut'ton Tea. Prepared from a pound of mutton, freed from the fat and cut into thin slices; and a pint and a half of boiling soft water poured over them, as in the case of beef tea; except that it requires to be boiled for half an hour after the maceration, before it is strained through a sieve. Mutton broth contains a somewhat larger proportion of mutton. Essence of mutton is made by a process similar to that for essence of beef.

Mutun'nus, (from muto,) Priapus.

Mu'tus, Mute.

Myacan'tha, Ruscus.

Myal'gia, (myon, and algos, 'pain,') Muscular pain, Cramp.

Myastheni'a, (myon, and αδυνα, 'debility,') Muscular debility.

Myce'lum, (μυκης, 'the mushroom,') Filaments or threads of minute fungi which find a soil on animal bodies. Their contents are cells or granules.

My'ces, (μυκης,) Fungus.

Myceto'ma, gen. Myceto'matis, (from myces, and oma,) Fungus disease, Podolco'ma, Madn'ra foot, Ul'cus gra'vè, Fungus foot, Fungous disease of In'dia. An affection of the hands and feet which prevails extensively in India, and is ascribed to the growth of a fungus, — Chionophæ Carte'ri (after Dr. H. V. Carter).

Mycetozo'a, (myces, and ζωον, 'an animal,') Myxomycetes.

Mych'mus, (μυχμος,) Suspirium.

Mychthis'mus, (μυχθισμος,) Moaning, Suspirium.

Mycoder'ma, gen. Mycoderm'atis, My'coderm, (myces, and δερμα, 'skin,') A cryptogamous growth, which constitutes the crusts of favus. See Porrigio favosa. Also, a mucous membrane, see Membrane.

MYCODER'MA CEREVIS'IE, Torula cerevisiæ.

MYCODER'MA PLI'CE, Tricomaphyton. A cryptogamous growth, said to be the essence of Plica.

Mycodermi'tis, gen. Mycodermi'tidis, (myco-derma, and itis,) Mucitis.

Myco'des, (from myces, and odes,) Fungoid.

Mycodiarrhœ'a, see Diarrhœa.

Mycodysenter'ia, see Dysentery.

Mycophthi'sis, see Bronchorrhœa.

Mycorthopnœ'a, (mycus, ορθος, 'erect, and πνέω, 'I breathe,') Orthopnœa from excessive secretion of mucus in the air-passages — Orthopnœ'a pituitosa.

Myco'sis, Frambœsia, (myces, and osis,) see Fungus.

MYCO'SIS INTESTINALIS. Diarrhœa attended with symptoms of collapse, supposed to be associated with the presence of a fungus in the alimentary canal.

MYCO'SIS, VAG'INAL. A term applied to pruritic irritation of the vagina, when an oïdial fungus is supposed to be present as the cause.

My'cothrix, (μυκος, and σπῆξ, 'hair,') Leptothrix.

Myc'ter, gen. Mycte'res, (μυκτηρ,) Nasus.

Mycte'res, (μυκτηρες,) Myxæ, Nares.

Mycteropho'nia, (mycter, and φωνη, 'voice,') Rhinophonia.

Mycteroxe'rites, Mycteroxero'sis, (mycter, and ξηρως, 'dryness,') Na'rrium sic'citas. Dryness of the interior of the nose.

My'cus, (μυκος,) Mucus.

Myde'sis, (μυδαω, 'I abound with moisture, I am putrid,') Moisture. In its most general sense it means corruption. By some it is used for a mucous discharge from inflamed eyelids.

My'don, (μυδων,) Fungous or putrid flesh in certain fistulous ulcers. Also, flesh putrid from mouldiness.

Mydri'asis, Platycor'ia, Platycori'asis, Amydri'asis. A name given by several writers to morbid dilatation of the pupil — Coromydri'asis — and by others to weakness of sight produced by hydrophthalmia, or superabundance of humors, (from μυδος, 'moisture,')

Mydriat'ic, Mydriat'icus, Coromydriat'ic, Coromydriat'icus. Relating to or causing dilatation of the pupil. Certain narcotics, as opium, contract the pupil in poisonous doses; while others, as belladonna, dilate it. Owing to this antagonism, the mydriatic belladonna has been given in poisoning from opium.

Myelal'gia, (myelo, and algos, 'pain,') Pain in the spinal marrow.

Myelanalo'sis, (myelo, and αναλωσις, 'wasting,') Tabes dorsalis.

Myelapoplex'ia, Apoplexia myelitica.

Myelateli'a, (myelo, and ατελεια, — a, 'privative, and τελος, 'end,') — 'want of end or finish,') Incompleteness of the spinal marrow.

Myelatroph'ia, (myelo, and ατροφια, 'atrophy,') Tabes dorsalis.

My'elin, (from myelo.) A mixture of lecithin with cerebrie acid and cholesterin, constituting the fatty substance in nerve-tissue, &c. See Nerve-fibres.

Myélite, Myelitis.

Myélite Chronique, Sclerose spinale.

Myeli'tis, gen. Myeli'tidis, M. parenchymato'sa seu spina'lis, Inflamma'tio medullæ spina'lis, Spini'tis, Spinodorsi'tis, Notomyeli'tis, Rachiomeli'tis, Rachialgi'tis (of some), (F.) Myélite, Inflammation de la moëlle épinière, I. rachidienne, (myelo, and itis.) Inflammation of the spinal marrow or its membranes; — indicated by deep-seated burning pain in the spine, with various nervous and vascular irregularities of function. It is not common. Dr. Marshall Hall proposed to call inflammation of the membranes of the brain Menin-gi'tis; that of the substance of the brain Myeli'tis.

MYELI'TIS CONVULSI'VA, Chorea, electric — m. Parenchymatosa, Myelitis — m. Petechialis, Meningitis, cerebrospinal — m. Spinalis, Myelitis — m. Exsudativa, Hydrorachis.

My'elo, (μυελος, 'marrow,') in composition, marrow.

Myeloch'ysis, (myelo, and χυω, 'I pour out,') Hydrorachis.

Myélocone (F.), (myelo, and κονα, 'dust,') A mixture of fatty matters found in the substance of the brain.

My'elocytes, (myelo, and κυτος, 'a mass, body, or cell.) Granules of the brain. Nuclei of the cells of the gray substance.

Myelodanglii'tis, (myelo, γαγγλιον, 'a ganglion,' and itis.) Cholera (sporadic).

Myelogen'ic, (myelo, and γενναω, 'I generate.') Myeloid tumors have been so called from their point of departure.

My'eloid, Myeloï'des, Myelo'des, (myelo, and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Marrowlike.

MY'ELOID TU'MOR, Fibroplast'ic Tumor, Myelogen'ic Tumor, T. Myelo'des, (F.) Tumeur Myéloplastique, T. à Myéloplaxes. A sarcomatous tumor, the more characteristic constituents of which are — peculiar many-nucleated corpuscles, which have been recognized as constituents of the marrow and diploë of bones, especially in the foetus and in early life. It is more nearly related, therefore, to cartilaginous than to fibrous tumors. It was so named by Mr. Paget.

Myelo'ma, gen. Myelo'matis, (myelo, and oma.) See Encephaloid.

Myelomala'cia, (myelo, and μαλακία, 'softness.') Mollities medullæ spinalis.

Myelomeningi'tis, (myelo, μηνιγξ, 'a membrane,' and itis.) Meningitis, spinal.

Myelom'yces, (myelo, and myces.) see Encephaloid.

My'elon, Medulla spinalis.

Myeloparal'ysis, (myelo, and paralysis.) Paraplegia.

Myelophthi'sis, Tabes dorsalis — m. Sicca, Tabes mesenterica.

Myelophy'mata, (pl. of Myelophy'ma.) Tubercula medullæ spinalis, (myelo, and φυμα, 'a tumor.') Tubercles of the spinal marrow.

Myéloplaxes, (myelo, and πλαξ, 'a plate or lamella,') Myéloplaques, Cellules à Noyaux Multiples, Osteopha'ges, Os'teoclasts, Giant or Colos'sal cells. Large many-nucleated masses of protoplasm, most abundant in the external layers of the medullary masses occupying the bone cavities.

Myelorrha'gia, (myelo, and ῥήγνμι, 'I break forth.') Apoplexia myelitica.

Myelospon'gus, (myelo, and σπογγος, 'a sponge, a fungus.') See Encephaloid.

My'elus, (μυελος,) Marrow, Medulla spinalis — m. Diauchenius, Medulla spinalis — m. Dorsites, Medulla spinalis — m. Notiaus, Medulla spinalis — m. Psoites, Medulla spinalis.

Myenergi'a, (myon, and energia.) Muscular strength.

Myenter'icus, Myenter'ic, (myon, and εντερων, 'intestine.') Relating to the muscular apparatus of the intestines, as Plex'us myenter'icus, Mus'culo-intestinal plex'us, a nervous plexus situate between the circular and longitudinal fibres.

Myg'mus, (μυγγος,) Suspirium.

Myioceph'alum, (μυια, 'a fly,' and κεφαλη, 'head,' from its resemblance.) Ptois iridis.

Myiodeop'sia, (μυιωδης, 'appertaining to flies,' and οψις, 'vision,') see Metamorphopsia.

Myiodop'sia, Metamorphopsia.

Myi'tis, (myo, and itis.) Myositis, Rheumatism, acute.

Myla'bris Cicho'rii, (μυλαβρις,) see Cantharis — m. Punctata, see Cantharis — m. Pustulata, see Cantharis.

Myceph'alus, (μυλη, 'a mole,' a, privative, and κεφαλη, 'head,') A monster with only traces of viscera, and without head or extremities.

My'lacri, (μυλακροι, from μυλη, 'a millstone,') Molar teeth.

My'lacris, Patella.

My'lê, (μυλη, 'a millstone,') Patella, Mole.

My'licus, Molar.

My'lo, (from μυλη, 'a mill,') In composition, the jaw, especially the lower jaw.

Mylodon'tes, Molar teeth.

My'lodus, (μυλη, 'a mill,' and οδους, 'a tooth,') Molar tooth.

Myloglos'sus. Winslow has given this name to muscular fibres which pass from the posterior part of the myloid line of the lower jaw, and from the sides of the base of the tongue to the parietes of the pharynx. These fibres belong to the constrictor superior pharyngis.

Mylohy'oid Fur'row or Groove. A furrow which passes from the superior orifice of the inferior dental canal of the lower jaw in the same direction as the canal, and lodges the mylohyoid nerve, a branch of the inferior dental.

MYLOHY'OID LINE, see Mylohyoideus — m. Nerve, see Mylohyoid furrow.

Mylohyoi'deus, Myloï'des, Diaphrag'ma o'ris, Transver'sus mandib'ulae, (F.) Mylo-hyoidien. The Mylopharyngeus of Morgagni and Santorini. This muscle is situate at the upper and anterior part of the neck, behind the lower jaw. It is broad, flat, and has the form of a truncated triangle. It arises from the internal oblique, internal maxillary, or mylohyoid line of the lower jaw-bone, and is inserted at the fore part of the body of the os hyoides. Its innermost fibres unite with those of the opposite side to form a raphe on the median line. The mylohyoideus raises the os hyoides and carries it forward, or it depresses the lower jaw.

Mylopharynge'us, Constrictor pharyngis, Mylohyoideus.

Mylo'y'des, Mylohyoideus.

Myo. In composition, muscle (μυων).

Myocardi'tis, (myo, and carditis.) Carditis.

Myocar'dium, (myo, and καρδια, 'heart,') The muscular structure of the heart. See Heart.

Myoce'lê, My'ocèle, (myo, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') A muscular tumor.

Myocephali'tis, gen. Myocephali'tidis, Myi'tis cephal'ica, (myo, κεφαλη, 'head,' and itis.) Inflammation of the muscles of the head.

Myoceph'alon, (μυια, 'a fly,' and κεφαλη, 'head,' from its resemblance.) Ptois iridis.

My'ochrome, (myo, and χρωμα, 'color,') A colored albuminous matter in the serum of red-colored muscles, which is identical with hæmato-crystallin.

Myocœli'gia, (myo, κοιλια, 'abdomen,' and αλγω, 'I suffer,') Pain in the muscles of the abdomen.

Myocœli'tis, gen. Myocœli'tidis, Myocœli'i'tis, Inflamma'tio musculo'rum abdomina'lium, (myo, κοιλια, 'lower belly,' and itis.) Inflammation of the muscles of the abdomen.

Myode'mia, (myo, and ὄσμος, 'fat,') Fatty degeneration of muscle.

Myodeop'sia, (μυιωδης, 'appertaining to flies,' and οψις, 'vision,') Metamorphopsia.

Myo'des, (myo, and odes.) Like unto muscle. Muscular.

Myodesop'ia, (μυιωδης, 'appertaining to flies,' and οψις, 'vision,') Metamorphopsia.

Myodesop'sia, Metamorphopsia.

Myodyna'mia, Vis muscula'ris, (myo, and δυναμις, 'power,') The force or power of a muscle.

Myodynam'ics, see Muscular contraction.

Myodynamiom'eter, (myodynamia, and μετρον, 'measure,') Dynamometer.

Myodynamome'ter, Dynamometer.

Myodyn'ia, (myo, and οδυνη, 'pain,') Pain in the muscles, — rheumatismal or other. Rheumatism.

MYODYN'IA INFLAMMATO'RIA, Myositis.

Myofibro'ma, Fibromyo'ma, (myo, and fibroma.) Fibrous degeneration of the muscular structure.

Myogen'ic, (myo, and γενναω, 'I produce,') See Paralysis, myogenic.

Myograph'ion, (myo, and γραφω, 'I write,') An instrument consisting essentially of three parts — one to hold the muscle having the nerve attached; clock-work to move a revolving cylinder with regular velocity, and an arrangement for stimulating the nerve at the proper moment; the object of the whole being to determine the rapidity of the nerve-current.

Myog'raphy, Myogra'phia, (myo, and γραφειν,

'to describe.') An anatomical description of the muscles.

My'oid, Myo'idēs, (myo, and ειδος, 'resemblance.') An epithet given to tumors composed of fibre cells or muscular fibres of organic life.

Myoide'ma, (myo, and ειδημα, 'elevation,' 'tumefaction.') A peculiar muscular irritability in phthisis, exhibited in the elevation of nodules at points pressed upon by the fingers while percussing.

Myokardi'tis, Carditis.

Myolem'ma, gen. Myolem'matis, Myole'ma, (myo, and λεμμα, 'a coat.') The membranous tube of each muscular fibre.

My'olin, (from myo.) A name given by Mr. Erasmus Wilson to a transparent substance that fills the cells, which, he conceives, by their juxtaposition form the ultimate muscular fibril.

Myol'ogy, Myolog'ia, Sarcolog'ia, Mysiolog'ia, (myo, and λογος, 'a discourse.') That part of anatomy which treats of the muscles.

Myo'ma, gen. Myo'matis, (myo, and oma.) Myo'matous Tu'mor. A muscular tumor. This name has also been used synonymously with Fibro-mus'cular tu'mor, Tu'mor fi'bro-musculo'sus, a fibrous tumor containing involuntary muscle. If the muscular fibres belong to the smooth variety, the tumors are called Leiomyo'mata; if the striped, Rhabdomyo'mata.

MYO'MA LÆVICELLULA'RĒ, (lævis, 'smooth,' 'cellula,' 'cellule.') A term applied by Virchow to fibroid tumor of the uterus, under the view that the spindle-shaped cells observed in it are muscle-cells.

Myomala'cia, (myo, and μαλακία, 'softness.') Softening of muscle.

My'on, (μυων.) Muscle.

Myonarco'sis, (myo, and ναρκη, 'stupor.') Numbness of the muscles.

Myoni'tis, gen. Myoni'tidis, (myo, and itis.) Myositis.

Myon'osus, Myoni'sus, Myopathi'a, (myo, and νοσος, 'disease.') A disease of the muscles.

Myopal'mus, (myo, and παλμος, 'agitation.') Subsultus tendinum.

Myoparal'ysis, see Paralysis.

Myopathi'a, (myo, and παθος, 'affection.') Myonosis.

My'ope, Myops.

Myopho'nia, (myo, and φωνη, 'voice.') The sound of muscular contraction,—as that of the ventricles of the heart during the systole of that organ.

Myo'pia, (μυω, 'I close,' and ωψ, 'the eye.') Myopi'asis, Luscios'itas, Myo'sis, Parop'sis propin'qua, Brachymetro'pia, Hypometro'pia, Amblyo'pia dissito'rum, Dyso'pia dissito'rum, Dyspho'tia, Vi'sus ju'venum seu bre'vior, (μυς, 'a mouse,' and ωψ, 'the eye,' or from μυων, 'to close,' and ωψ, 'the eye,' from the habit with the myopic of half shutting the eyes.) My'opy, Short-sightedness, Nearsightedness, Mousesight, Purblindness, (old E.) Mope-eye, Moap-eye, (F.) Vue courte, V. basse, Myopie. The state of those who can only see objects very near. The defect is owing to the too great convexity or depth of the eye, or to too great density of the humors, and is palliated by wearing concave glasses.

Myop'ic, Myop'icus, Mope-eyed, Mop'sical, Shortsighted, Pore'blind, Pur'blind, Spur'blind. Relating or appertaining to myopia.

Myopodiortho'ticon, (myopia, and διορθωτικον, 'having power to correct.') An apparatus for the cure of shortsightedness.

My'ops, Lucio'sus, Myo'pus, My'ope. One affected with myopia or shortsightedness.

My'opy, Myopia.

Myorrhex'is, (myo, and ρηξις, 'rupture.') Rupture of a muscle.

Myosarco'ma, gen. Myosarco'matis, (myo, and sarcoma.) A sarcomatous tumor in which muscular fibres are found.

Myosclero'sic (myo, and sclerosis) Palsy or Paralysis. See Paralysis, pseudohypertrophic.

My'osin, see Musclic.

Myo'sis, (μυω, 'I close the eyes,') Microcor'ia. Smallness of the pupil, Phthi'sis pupilla'ris. Permanent contraction of the pupil. It is usually caused by iritis, and is extremely difficult to cure. When it exists to such an extent as to obliterate the pupil, it is called Synize'sis. Also, Myopia.

Myosite, Myositis.

Myosit'ic, Myosit'icus, (from myosis.) Causing contraction of the pupil,—as opium.

Myosi'tis, gen. Myosi'tidis, Myi'tis, Mysi'tis, Myoni'tis, Sarci'tis, Rheumatis'mus phlegmono'des, Myodyn'ia inflammato'ria, Phlegma'sia myo'ica, Inflamma'tio seu Phleg'monē Musculo'rum, (F.) Myosite, Inflammation des muscles, (myon, and itis.) A name proposed by Sagar for inflammation of the muscles. Also, Rheumatism.

Os'sifying Myosi'tis, M. Ossif'icans, arises from traumatic congestion, such as is induced by continuous pressure, as in the cavalry and infantry drill. See Drill bone.

Myoso'tis, (μυσοωσις, from μυς, gen. μυος, 'a mouse,' and ωσις, gen. ωτος, 'ear.') Hieracium pilosella, Rheumatism, acute; (from myon.)

Myospas'mus, Cramp.

Myos'tici (Mor'bi), (myon, and οστειον, 'a bone.') Diseases of the bones and muscles, in the classification of Dr. Wm. Farr.

Myo'tics, (μυω, 'I close.') Agents which contract the pupil—the calibar bean, for instance.

Myotility, Myotil'itas, (F.) Myotilitéé, (from myon.) Muscular contractility.

Myotome, (myo, and τομη, 'section.') According to Goodsir, the muscular section of the skeleton.

Myotomy, Myotom'ia, (myon, and τομη, 'section.') The part of practical anatomy which treats of the dissection of the muscles. Also, the surgical operation of the division of muscles to remove deformity.

Myotyr'bē, (myon, and τυρβη, 'disorder.') Choreia.

Myrac'opum, (μυραν, 'an ointment,' a, privative, and κοπος, 'fatigue.') An ointment used by the ancients in cases of fatigue.

Myr'cia A'cris, see Spiritus myrciæ.

Myrep'sus, (μυρεψος, from μυρον, 'an ointment.') Unguentarius.

Myr'iagramme, (μυρια, '10,000,' and γραμμα, 'gramme.') A weight equal to 10,000 grammes, or to 26 pounds, 9 ounces, and 6 drachms Troy.

Myriamètre. A measure of 10,000 metres; equal to 16 miles, 1 furlong, 156 yards, 14 in.

Myri'ca Asplenifo'lia, (after μυρικη, 'the tamarisk,') Comptonia asplenifolia—m. Cerifera, see Cera flava et alba, and Wax, myrtle.

MYRI'CA GA'LĒ, M. palus'tris, Myrtus Brabantica seu Ang'lica, Myrtifo'lia Belg'ica, Ga'lē, Ga'gel, Rhus sylves'tris seu Belg'ica, Ac'aron, Elzag'nus, E. Cor'do, Chamælag'nus, Dodonæ'a, Dutch myr'tle, Sweet gale, Sweet willow, (Sc.) Scotch gale, (F.) Piment Royal, Thé de Simon Pauli, Ga'lé odorant. Ord. Myricaceæ. Sex. Syst. Diœcia Tetandria. The leaves, flowers, and seeds have a strong, fragrant smell, and a bitter taste. They are used for destroying moths and cutaneous insects. The infusion is given internally as a stomachic and vermifuge.

MYRI'CA PALUS'TRIS, M. gale.

Myrin'ga, see Tympanum.

Myringi'tis, gen. Myringi'tidis, Inflamma'tio tym'pani, (myringa, 'the membrana tympani,' and itis.) Inflammation of the membrana tympani; and, also, of the tympanum.

Myringodec'tomy, see Sphyrotomy.

Myringomyco'sis, (myringa, 'the membrana tympani,' and mycosis, 'fungous disease,') My- rin'gomyringi'tis, Oti'tis Parasit'ica. An inflammatory affection of the meatus of the ear caused by a parasitic vegetable growth, the Aspergillus nigrescens and A. flavescens.

Myrin'gomyringi'tis, (myringa, 'the membrana tympani,' and itis.) Myringomycosis.

My'rinx, gen. Myrin'gis, see Tympanum.

My'ris, (μυρίς.) Myrothe'cē, Narthe'cia, Narthe'cium, Nar'the, (μύρον, 'a perfumed oil or ointment.') A perfumed oil jar or ointment box.

Myris'tica, (μύρον, 'a liquid perfume,' from μύρω, 'to flow,') M. Moscha'ta seu aromat'ica seu officina'lis seu fra'grans, Comacon. Nat. Ord. Myristicē. The tree which produces the nutmeg and mace, (F.) Muscadier. The Nutmeg, Myristica (Ph. U. S.), Myris'ticē seu Myris'ticē moscha'ta nu'cleus, Nux moscha'ta seu unguenta'ria, Nucis'ta, Nux myris'tica seu aromat'ica, Chrysoba'l'anus Gale'ni, Unguenta'ria, As'sala, (F.) Muscade, is the kernel of the fruit. It has a fragrant, aromatic odor; an agreeable pungent taste, and is much used for culinary purposes. Alcohol extracts its active matter. It has the properties of aromatics in general; being stimulant and stomachic. The oil — O'leum myris'ticē seu nucis'ta æthe'reum, Vol'atile oil of nutmeg — possesses the virtues of the nutmeg. Dose of the nutmeg, gr. v. to ℥j., — of the oil, gtt. iij–vj.

Mace, Ma'cis, Flo'res macis seu ma'cidis, (F.) Fleurs de muscade, is the arillus of the fruit. It is membranous, with the odor and taste of the nutmeg, and is possessed of similar qualities. The O'leum macis seu ma'cidis is a fragrant, sebaceous substance, expressed in the East Indies. It is only used externally. It is the Adeps myris'ticē, O'leum myris'ticē express'um, O'leum seu Bal'samum nucis'ta, But'ter of nutmegs, Express'ed oil of mace or nutmegs, (F.) Beurre de Muscade.

Myrme'cizon, (μυρμηκίζων.) Formicant.

Myrmeco'sis, Convulsio cerealis, Formication.

Myr'mex, gen. Myrme'cis, (μυρμηξ.) Formica.

Myrobal'anus, (myron, and βαλανός, 'a nut;' so called, because formerly used in ointments,) Angeloc'acos, Myro'balan, Glans unguenta'ria, Pal'ma unguentario'rum. A dried Indian fruit, of the plum kind, of different species of Terminalia. Ord. Combretaceæ. Of this there are several varieties — the M. Bellir'ica or Bellir'ic myro'balan, Bellegu, Bellerigi, Belnileg; — the M. cheb'ula or Chebule myro'balan; the M. cit'rina or Yellow myrobalan, Ara'ra; the M. em'blica or Em'blic myrobalan, and the M. In'dica, As'uor, In'dian or Black myro'balan. All the myrobals have an unpleasant, bitterish, very austere taste; and strike an inky blackness with a solution of steel. They are said to possess laxative as well as astringent properties.

Myrolēs, (myron, and oleum.) see Olea volatilia.

My'ron, (μύρον.) Myrum, Unguentum.

Myropissoce'ron, (myron, πίσσα, 'pitch,' and κηρός, 'wax.') A topical application in alopecia, referred to by Galen.

Myropœ'us, (myron, and ποιω, 'I make,') Unguentarius.

Myropo'les, (μυροπωλης, from myron, and πωλω, 'I sell,') Unguentarius.

Myrosp'er'mum Frutes'cens, (myron, and σπέρμα, 'seed,') Myroxylon Peruiferum — m. Pe'reira, see Myroxylon Peruiferum — m. Peruiferum, see Myroxylon Peruiferum — m. of Sonsonate, see Myroxylon Peruiferum — m. Toluiferum, see Toluifera balsamum.

Myros'ynē, (μύρον, 'a sweet-scented juice,') A principle closely allied to emulsin, found in black mustard seeds; also in horseradish root.

Myroxocar'pin, (myroxylon, and καρπός, 'fruit or seed,') see Myroxylon Peruiferum.

Myrox'ylon, (myron, and ξύλον, 'wood,') see M. Peruiferum.

MYROX'YLON PERUIFERUM, Myrosp'er'mum frutes'cens seu Peruiferum, Quinquino, Caburei'ba. Nat. Ord. Leguminosæ. Supposed to be the tree which affords the Peruvian bal'sam, Bal'samum Peruvia'num (Ph. U.S., 1873) seu Peruvianum ni'grum seu Perua'num seu In'dicum, Putzochill, Myrox'ylī Peruiferi bal'samum, Myrox'ylon, Cabureiciba, In'dian, Mex'ican, or Amer'ican bal'sam, (F.) Baume de Péron ou des Indes. This balsam consists of benzoic acid, resin, and essential oil. Its odor is fragrant and aromatic; taste hot and bitter; it is soluble in alcohol, and miscible in water by the aid of mucilage. It is stimulant and tonic, and considered to be expectorant; as such, it has been employed in paralysis, chronic asthma, chronic bronchitis, rheumatism, gleet, leucorrhœa, &c., and externally, for cleansing and stimulating foul indolent ulcers. Dose, gtt. v. to gtt. xxx.

White Bal'sam of Peru', Natural bal'sam, Bal'samum al'bum, Styr'rax al'ba, Balsamel'on, is obtained by incision from Myrosp'er'mum Peruiferum.

The Myroxylon of Sonsonate in Central America — Myrosp'er'mum Perei'ræ of Dr. Royle, M. of Sonsonate, according to the Ph. B. (1864), furnishes balsam of Peru. From it is obtained a resinous principle called Myroxocar'pin.

MYROX'YLON OF SONSONATE, see M. Peruiferum — m. Toluiferum, Toluifera balsamum.

Myr'ra, (μύρρα.) Bo'ta, Stac'tē, Myrrh, Calo'nia, Smyr'na, Myr'ra ru'bra, (F.) Myrrhe. The exudation (μύρον, from μύρω, 'to flow') of a plant of Abyssinia or Arabia Felix, the Balsamaden'dron myr'ra. This gum-resin has a fragrant, peculiar odor, and bitter aromatic taste. It is in reddish-yellow, light, brittle, irregular tears; partially soluble in distilled water when aided by friction. S. g. 1.360. It is stimulant; and has been used in cachectic affections, humoral asthma, chronic bronchitis, &c., and, in the form of tincture, as a mouth-wash. Dose, gr. x. to ʒj.

MYR'RA IMPERFECTA, Bdellium.

Myr'rhinē, (μύρρινη.) Myrtus.

Myr'rhis (gen. Myr'rhidis) An'nua, (μυρρίς.) Athamanta cretensis — m. Major, Charophyllum odoratum — m. Odorata, Charophyllum odoratum.

Myrsi'na Africa'na, Tatzé.

Myrsi'nē, (μυρσίνη.) Myrtus.

Myrsinelæ'on, (μυρσίνη, 'myrtle,' and λαιον, 'oil,') Oil of myrtle.

Myrsini'tes, (μυρσινίτης.) Wine in which branches of myrtle have been macerated.

Myrtacan'tha, (myrtus, and ακανθα, 'a thorn,') Ruscus.

Myrte Commun, Myrtus.

Myrtid'anon, (μυρτιάδων, from myrtus, 'myrtle,') An excrescence growing on the trunk of the myrtle, and used as an astringent. With Hippocrates, either the myrtus caryophyllata or myrtus pimenta. [?] Also, a wine — Vinum Myrtid'anum — made from wild myrtle berries.

Myrtifo'lia Belg'ica, (myrtus, and folium, 'a leaf,') Myrica gale.

Myrtiform, Myrtifor'mis, Myrto'des, (myrtus, and forma, 'shape,') Having the shape of a leaf of myrtle. A name given to a muscle (depressor alæ nasi), to the fossa incisiva; to certain caruncles, &c.

Myrtifor'mis, Compressor naris, Depressor alae nasi.

Myrti'tes, (μυρτίνης, from μύρτον, 'the myrtle berry.') A name given to a medicine prepared with honey and myrtle berries.

Myrt'le, Myrtus—m. Berry, Vaccinium myrtillus—m. Candleberry, see Wax, myrtle—m. Dutch, Myrica gale—m. Wax, see Wax, myrtle—m. Wild, Ruscus.

Myrtocheil'ides, sing. Myrtocheil'is, (myrton, and χείλις, 'a small lip,') Nymphæ.

Myrtochi'la, (myrton, and χείλος, 'a lip,') Nymphæ.

Myrto'des, (myrtus, and odes,) Myrtiform.

Myr'ton, (μύρτον,) Clitoris.

Myr'tus, (μύρτος,) Myr'tus communis seu communis Italica, Myrsi'nè, Myrrhi'nè, The Myrtle, (F.) Myrte Commun. Ord. Myrtaceæ. The berries of this plant have been recommended in alvine and uterine fluxes and other disorders of relaxation and debility. They are moderately astringent and somewhat aromatic.

MYR'TUS A'CRIS, see Spiritus myrciæ—m. Anglica, Myrica gale—m. Brabantica, Myrica gale—m. Caryophyllata, see Spiritus myrciæ.

MYR'TUS CARYOPHYLLA'TA, Calyptran'thes caryophylla'ta, Cas'sia seu Canel'la caryophyllata, (F.) Capelet, Cannelle giroflée. The tree which is considered to afford the Clove bark, Cor'tex caryophylla'tus seu caryophylla'ta. This bark is a warm aromatic; resembling clove with an admixture of cinnamon. It may be used with the same views as cloves or cinnamon.

MYR'TUS CARYOPHYLL'US, Eugenia caryophyllata.

MYR'TUS CAULIFLO'RA, Euge'nia cauliflo'ra, Jaboticabeira. The decoction of the bark is aromatic and astringent, and is employed in sore throat.

MYR'TUS LEUCODEN'DRON, Melaleuca cajuputi.

MYR'TUS PIMEN'TA, Euge'nia Pimen'ta. The tree which bears the Jamaica pepper, Pimen'tæ bac'cæ, Pimen'to ber'ries, Pimen'to, Pi'per caryophylla'tum seu chia'pæ seu odora'tum Jamaicensè seu Jamaicensè seu tabas'cum, Coc'culi In'di aro-mat'ici, Amo'mum pimen'ta, Fructus pimen'ti, Carive, Caryophyll'us America'nus seu Pimen'ta, Allspice, (F.) Poivre de Jamaïque, Toute épice, Assourou. The unripe berries—Pimen'ta (Ph. U. S., 1873), Pimento—have an aromatic odor, resembling a mixture of cinnamon, nutmeg, and cloves; the taste is pungent, but mixed, like the odor. Like other peppers, this is stimulant and carminative. The oil—O'leum Pimen'tæ—possesses the virtues of the berries. The powdered fruit has been called Quatre épices or Four spices. Dose, gr. v. to ℥ij.

Aqua Pimen'tæ, Pimen'to wa'ter, was official in the London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Pharmacopœias. It is carminative. Dose, f℥j. or f℥ij.

My'rum, (μύρον,) My'ron. A perfumed oil or ointment. A liquid perfume. The spontaneously exuding juice of many plants, especially of that from which myrrh is obtained.

Mys, (μύς,) Muscæ.

Mysiolog'ia, (mys, and λόγος, 'a discourse,') Myology.

Mysi'tis, (mys, and itis, 'inflammation,') Myositis.

Mys'tax, gen. Mys'tacis, Mas'tax, (μυσταξ, gen.

μυσταχός.) The hair growing on each side of the upper lip in men. The mustache' or mustachio, (old Eng.) Munchat'oe, (F.) Moustache. Also, the upper lip.

Myste'ron, (μυστήριον, 'a mystery,') An arcana, nostrum, or secret preparation in general. Also, an antidote, referred to by Galen and others.

Mys'tron, (μυστρον,) A Greek measure, which held about three drachms.

Mytilus Edu'lis, (μυτίλος, from mys.) The common mussel, (F.) Moule. A bivalve, the flesh of which, when at all in a state of decomposition, is highly poisonous. When fresh, it is an agreeable, but not very digestible article of diet, producing, in some persons, all the symptoms of urticaria. One affected with such phenomena is said, occasionally, to be mus'selled.

Myu'rus, Meiu'rus. A pulse is so called when it sinks progressively and becomes smaller and smaller like a mouse's tail, (from μύς, 'a mouse,' and ουρα, 'tail,') Pul'sus myu'rus recip'rocus, a pulse, which, after having become gradually weaker, resumes, by degrees, its former character.

Myx'a, (μύξα,) Mucus, Sebestina.

Myx'æ, (μύξαι,) Nares.

Myxio'sis, (from μύξα, 'mucus,' and osis,) Gonorrhœa impura.

Myxoädeno'ma, (myxa, and adenoma,) A glandular tumor, in the cystic spaces of which gelatinous material has been generated.

Myxochondro'ma, (myxa, and χονδρός, 'cartilage,') Myxoma containing the honeycomb-like septa, such as are met with in chondroma.

Myxofibro'ma, Myxo'matous Fibro'ma, Fibro-myxo'ma. A fibrous growth containing mucus, the result of softening. It sometimes attains a very large size.

Myxoï'des, (from myxa, 'mucus,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Muciform, Mucous.

Myxo'ma, (pl. Myxo'mata,) Myxo'matous, Mucous or Mucoid Tu'mor, (myxa, and oma,) An elastic, soft tumor, resembling the embryonic connective tissue or the Whartonian jelly of the umbilical cord. It was originally described by J. Müller as Collone'ma. Types are to be found in gelatinoid polypus of the nose, ear, &c., cystic neuromata, &c.

Myxo'matous Sarco'ma, Myxosarcoma.

Myxomyce'les, (myxa, and μυκή, 'fungus,') Mycetozoa. A tribe of parasites usually reckoned among the fungi, but occupying an intermediate position between the animal and vegetable kingdoms.

Myxoneuro'ma, gen. Myxoneuro'matis. An interstitial tissue between the nerve filaments of neuroma, resembling mucous tissue.

Myxor'rhoos, (μυξορροός, from μύξα, 'mucus,' and ῥέω, 'I flow,') One who is subject to mucous discharge. Applied to an infant that discharges a considerable quantity of mucus and saliva.

Myxosarco'ma, gen. Myxosarco'matis, (μύξα, 'mucus,' and σαρξ, gen. σαρκός, 'flesh,') Myxo'matous or Mucocar'neous Sarco'ma. A mucous transformation of round-celled sarcoma, malignant, and of large volume, usually attacking the omentum, skin, &c.

Myxo'ter, gen. Myxote'ris, (μυξωτήρ, from μύξα, 'mucus,') Nasus.

Myze'sis, (μύζω, 'I suck,') Sucking.

N. This letter, in prescriptions, is an abridgment of numero, 'by number.'

Nab'alus Al'bus, (from ναβλα, 'a harp,' owing to the lyrate leaves,) Prenanthes al'ba seu serpenta'ria, White let'tuce, Lion's foot, Rattlesnake's master, Rattlesnake root, Gall of the earth. An indigenous plant, of the Order Compositæ, which, with several other species of the genus, is reputed to possess the power of curing the bites of serpents. The root has been used in dysentery.

NAB'ALUS FRASE'RI has similar properties.

Na'bot, Saccharum candidum.

Nabo'thi Glan'dulæ, O'vula seu O'va Nabo'thi seu Nabothia'na, Ova'rrium secunda'rrium seu Nabo'thi, Folliculi rotun'di et oblon'gi, Vesic'ulæ seu Bul'læ rotun'dæ cervi'cis u'teri, V. semina'les muli'erum, Cor'pora seu Corpus'cula globo'sa, Glan'dulæ seu Hydat'ides cervi'cis u'teri, Glands of Na'both, (F.) Oeufs ou Vésicules de Naboth. Small mucous crypts or follicles situate in the interstices of the duplicatures of the lining membrane of the cervix uteri. Naboth, from noticing them in a morbid condition, mistook them for ova, and hence they received the name Ovula Nabothi.

The term Nabo'thian Cyst has been applied to a form of mucous cyst involving the glands just referred to, and in their nature resemble the cystic degeneration of Cowper's gland in the male, Cowperian cyst.

Na'cra, Nakra, Nasa. A kind of influenza common in the East Indies.

Nacré, ([F.] nacre, 'mother of pearl.') Margaritaceus.

Na'creous, Margaritaceus.

Nae'gele's Pel'vis. An oblique distortion of the pelvis, described by Naegele, not suspected during life, and fatal to mother and child, which depends on arrest of development, fusion of the sacrum with the ilium, or anchylosis after inflammation of the sacro-iliac joint.

Spots of various kinds on the skin of children when born, which have been attributed to the influence of the maternal imagination on the fœtus in utero. They are of various appearances, some much better supplied with blood than others. Some are merely superficial or stain-like spots, Pig'mentary næ'vi; others are prominent, Næ'vi vasculo'si, Vas'cular tu'mors, and often have long, irregular hairs growing from them. Others are rounded, fatty growths covered with normal skin, Næ'vi lipoma'todes. These have usually been called Moles, Næ'vi pila'res, N. spili, Spili, Spilo'mata, Epichro'ses spili, &c. The red, rosy, violet, or bluish spots are called by I. G. St. Hilaire Taches sanguines; those of an intermediate hue, between the normal color and black, Taches melaniennes. See Telangiectasia.

When nævi are superficial, without any disposition to enlarge or spread, they need not be meddled with; but all those that partake of the character of aneurism by anastomosis had better be removed, where practicable.

Naf'da, Naphtha.

Naf'ta, Naphtha.

Nail, (Sax. nægl.) Un'guis, O'nyx, (F.) Ongle.

A whitish, transparent substance, similar to horn, which covers the dorsal extremity of the fingers. Three portions are distinguished in it—the extremity, which is free, at the end of the finger; the body or middle portion, adherent by its inner surface; and the root, Onychorrhiza, Rhizonych'ia, Ra'dix seu Ma'trix un'guis, In'timum un'guis, (F.) Matrice de l'ongle. The last presents two distinct parts: the one, terminated by a thin, serrated edge, is buried in a duplicature of the skin, Vallec'ula unguis, which acts the part of a nail-follicle; the other, called Lu'nula seu Semilu'nula seu Sel'e'nē seu Ar'cus seu Exor'tus seu Anat'olē seu Albe'do un'guium, is whitish, and of a semi-lunar shape, and is situate above the part where the epidermis terminates. The surface covered by the nail is called the nail-bed. The nails are composed of a horny tissue, of the same nature as that which forms the hoofs, horns, and scales of different animals. When the nail has been torn off, the papillæ of the skin become covered by a soft, whitish lamina, whose consistence gradually augments. New laminæ are then formed underneath, and give the nail the thickness it ought to possess. The corneous substance being thus constantly produced at the extremity of each of these laminæ, the whole of the nail is pushed forwards, and it would grow indefinitely, were it not cut or worn by friction.

The nails protect and support the extremities of the fingers against the impression of hard bodies. They are also useful in laying hold of small bodies, and dividing those that have but little consistence.

Nanoceph'alia, (nanus, and κεφαλή, 'head,') see Nanocephalus.

Nanoceph'alus. One of a monstrous state—Nanoceph'alia—in which the whole head or certain of its parts are too small, whilst the trunk and extremities are normal.

Nanocor'mia, see Nanocormus.

Nanocor'mus, (nanus, and κορμος, 'a trunk,') One of a monstrous condition—Nanocor'mia—in which the trunk is too small, whilst the head possesses its normal size.

Nanomel'ia, see Nanomelus.

Nanom'elus, (nannus, and μελος, 'a limb,') One of a monstrous condition—Nanomel'ia—in which some part of an extremity is too small, and the whole limb too short.

Nanoso'mia, (nannus, and σωμα, 'body,') Microsoma, Microsoma'tia, Dwarf'ishness, (F.) Nanisme. A state in which the entire body, with all its parts, is smaller than common.

Nanoso'mus, Nanus.

Na'nus, (ναός.) Pumil'io, Pa'milo, Pusil'lus, 'a dwarf,' Nanoso'mus, (Prov.) Crut, Rope, Spin'nick, (Sc.) Croil, Crok, Dearch, Derch, Droich, Wrat'ack, Pa'milus, Pumil'ius, 'dwarfish,' (F.) Nain. One who is much below the usual stature.

The term is applicable to all organized beings, from man to the vegetable. Trees have their dwarfs, as the human species have theirs. Some curious authenticated instances of human dwarfs are on record. Bebe, the dwarf of Stanislaus, king of Poland, was 33 inches (French) long, and well proportioned. The Polish nobleman, Borwlaski, who was well made, clever, and a good linguist, measured 28 Paris inches. He had a brother 34 inches high, and a sister 21. A Friesland peasant, at 26 years of age, had attained 29 Amsterdam inches. C. H. Stöberin, of Nürnberg, was under three feet high at 20, yet he was well proportioned and possessed of talents. General Tom Thumb, so called, was seen by the author in 1847. He was said to be 15 years old, measured 28 inches in height, and when weighed at the mint was found to weigh 20 pounds and 2 ounces. Two remarkable Indian dwarfs were exhibited in the United States and in Europe about the middle of the 19th century, under the name of 'Aztec children,'—the boy, from 7 to 8 years of age, was 33½ inches in height, and weighed 20½ pounds; the girl, from 4 to 6 years of age, was 29½ inches high, and weighed 17 pounds. They were very deficient in intellect. See Pigmy.

Nape of the Neck, Nucha.

Napelli'na, (from Aconitum napellus.) A white alkaloid, recently obtained from impure aconite.

Napel'us Ve'rus, (dim. of napus, 'a turnip,') Aconitum napellus.

Na'phæ Flo'res, see Citrus aurantium.

Naph'tha, Acetone.

NAPH'THA, (ναφθα.) Naf'da, Naf'ta, Nap'ta, Napta'lius, O'leum petre' album, (F.) Naphthe; from a Chaldaic and Syriac word signifying bitumen. A bituminous substance, found in Persia, Calabria, Sicily, &c. It is liquid, limpid, of a yellowish-white color, a smell slightly resembling that of oil of turpentine, and lighter than water. It resembles petroleum in its properties, and has been chiefly used as an external application; although, occasionally, as an anthelmintic, and in inhalation in phthisis pulmonalis. See Æther and Acetone.

Naph'thalin, Naphthali'na. When coal tar is subjected to distillation, naphthaline passes over after coal naphtha. It is a white, shining, concrete, crystalline substance, fusible at 176°, and boiling at 423°. It is soluble in alcohol, ether, naphtha, and the oils, but insoluble in water. It has been used as an excitant expectorant, in the dose of 8 to 30 grains, in emulsion or syrup, and repeated. It has also been used as an anthelmintic; and, when made into an ointment, in psoriasis, lepra vulgaris, &c.

Na'piform, A'pinoid, Napiform'is, Bu'nioid, Bunioid'es, (napus, 'a turnip,' and forma, 'shape,') An epithet for a form of scirrhus tumor, Carcinoma reticular'e, whose cut surface presents concentric lines resembling those seen in the interior of a turnip.

Napi'um, Lapsana, Sinapis.

Na'ples, Cli'mate of. The climate of Naples in its general characters resembles that of Nice, but it is more changeable; the sirocco, too, which is little known in Nice, is severely felt at Naples. It is not a good residence for the phthisical invalid; Sir James Clark, indeed, considers it altogether unsuitable.

NA'PLES, MIN'ERAL WA'TERS OF. In the Quarter Santa Lucia, near the coast, is a cold spring, rich in sulphuretted hydrogen and carbonic acid. It is much used as an aperient tonic, and in cutaneous affections.

NA'PLES WA'TER, FACTIT'IOUS, A'qua Neapolitana seu acid'ula hydrosulphurata, (F.) Eau de Naples. Na'ram, Dracunculus.

Nar'ca, (ναρκη, 'stupor,') Narcosis.

Narcaphthe, Narcaphthon.

Narcaph'thon, (ναρκαφθον,) Nascaph'thon. The bark of an aromatic tree formerly brought from India. By some supposed to be that of the tree which affords the olibanum. It was used in fumigation in diseases of the lungs. See Lacaphthon and Thymiana.

Nar'cê, (ναρκη, 'stupor,') Narcosis.

Nar'cein, Narcei'na, Narcei'a, (F.) Narceine. One of the alkaloids of opium, which is in colorless, silky needles, and of a bitterish metallic taste, slightly soluble in water; insoluble in ether, and very soluble in alcohol. It is said to exceed all the opium alkaloids in soporific power, without producing the disagreeable secondary effects.

Narce'ma, gen. Narce'matis, (ναρκημα,) Narcosis.

Narce'sis, (ναρκησις,) Narcosis.

Narce'se d'Automne, Colchicum autumnale—n. Faux, Narcissus pseudonarcissus—n. des Près, Narcissus pseudonarcissus—n. Sauvage, Narcissus pseudonarcissus.

Narce'sus Pseudonarcis'sus, (ναρκωσος, from ναρκη, 'stupor,') N. festalis seu glaucus seu grandiflorus seu hispanicus seu majus seu serratus seu sylvestris, Bulbocodium, Pseudonarcissus, Daffodil, (old Eng.) Aff'adil, Belle-Blome, (Prov.) Affrodile, Bell'flower, Butter and Eggs, Lent rose, (F.) Narce'se sauvage, Narce'se des près, Faux narcisse, Porillon, Aiault, Zouzinette, Jeannette. Ord. Amaryllidaceæ. The root is emetic and cathartic, in the dose of $\frac{3}{4}$ j. The flowers are antispasmodic. Dose, 24 grains.

Narco'des, (ναρκωδης,) Narcotized.

Narco'sis, (ναρκωσις,) Nar'cotism, Nar'cê, Nar'ca, Narce'ma, Narce'sis, Torpe'do, Tor'por, Stu'por, Stupefac'tio. The aggregate effects produced by narcotic substances. At times, narcotism is confined to a state of more or less profound stupor, and constitutes, in certain cases, a useful remedial condition; at others, it is a true poisoning, characterized by vertigo, nausea, a state of intoxication or apoplexy, constant delirium, convulsive motions, &c. Emetics in strong doses and not much diluted with water, purgatives and glysters, are the first means to be used in this condition. The stupor may afterwards be combated by the use of exciting and stimulating drinks.

The production of narcosis or the effect of narcotics has been called nar'cotization.

NARCO'SIS FOLLICULO'RUM. A state of the scalp, which Mr. Erasmus Wilson conceives to be dependent upon torpid action of the hair follicles, and in which the scalp and hair are found covered with a yellowish, dirty-looking powder, composed of an admixture of granular particles and furfuraceous scales.

Narcospas'mus, (narce, and σπασμος, 'spasm,') Stupor combined with spasm.

Narco'tia, Narcotin.

Narcot'ic Poi'son, see Poison.

Narcot'icoac'rid, see Poison.

Narcot'ics, Narco'tica, Caro'tica, Obstupefacient'ia, Stupefacient'ia, Stupefac'ients, (F.) Nar- cotiques, Stupéfactive, Stupéfiants. Substances which have the property of stupefying;—as opium, stramonium, and hyoseyamus, (from Narce.) They are used in medicine as soothing agents; exerting their special influence on the brain and tubular matter of the spinal marrow. In small doses, as a general rule, narcotics stimulate; in large, they act as sedatives. The following is a list of the chief narcotics:—Aconitum, Ætherea, Belladonna, Cannabis, Conium, Digitalis, Humulus, Hyoseyamus, Lactucarium, Opium and Morphia, Stramonii Folia, Stramonii Semina; Mental Narcotics (Appropriate Music, Monotonous sounds, or any succession of monotonous impressions).

Nar'cotin, Narcoti'na, Narco'tia, Anarcoti'na, Opia'num, (same etymon,) (F.) Sel de Déroïne ou d'opium, Opiane, Principe cristallizable de Déroïne. A solid, white, insipid substance, crystallizable; fusible like the fats; soluble in boiling alcohol and ether, and scarcely soluble in water; producing all the unpleasant effects of opium; but objectionable from its throwing the animal into a state of stupor. The salts, which are very bitter, have been used successfully in India in intermittents.

Nar'cotism, Narcosis.

Narcotiza'tion, see Narcosis.

Nar'cotized, Tor'pidus, Narco'des. Affected with stupor, as from the use of a narcotic.

Nard, Cel'tic, Valeriana Celtica—n. Indica, Nardus Indica—n. Indien, Nardus Indica—n. Indique, Nardus Indica—n. Petit, Aralia nudicaulis—n. Savage, Asarum.

Nardos'tachys Jatamansi, Nardus Indica—n. Patrinia, Nardus Indica.

Nar'dum Gal'licum, Valeriana Celtica.

Nar'dus America'nus, Aralia nudicaulis—n. Celtica, Valeriana Celtica—n. Celtica altera, Arnica montana.

NAR'DUS IN'DICA, (νάρδος), Spi'ca nar'di seu Indica, Andropogon nar'di seu citriodor'rus, Ord. Gramineæ [?]; or Nardos'tachys seu Valeria'na seu Patrin'ia Jataman'si, Valeria'na spi'ca; Order, Valerianaceæ; Indian nard, Spikenard. The root of this plant is one of the ingredients in the mithridate and theriaca. It is moderately warm and pungent, and has a flavor by no means disagreeable. It is used by the Orientals as a spice—(F.) Nard Indien ou Indique. An ointment was formerly used, called Unguentum nardi'num. It was prepared of Nard, Malaba'thrum leaves, Oil of worms, Costus, Amomum, Myrrh, &c., and was used as a detergent.

NAR'DUS MONTA'NA, Asarum—n. Rustica, Asarum.

Na'res, pl. of Na'ris, Rhi'nes, Cav'itas seu Cavum seu Ca'væa seu Caver'na na'rium, Na'sus inter'nus, Mycte'res, Myx'æ, Na'rium ad'itus, Ocheteum'ata, The no'strils, (Prov.) Suir'rels, Suurles, (F.) Narines. Two elliptical apertures, situate beneath the nose, and separated from each other by the cartilaginous sep'tum seu colum'na nasi. These apertures are continually open, and give passage to the air we breathe, and to the mucous fluids secreted in the nasal fossæ. The anterior portion of the canal surrounded by cartilage is the Vestibulum na'si.

NA'RES INTER'NÆ, Nasal fossæ.

NA'RES, POSTE'RIOR, Na'res postre'mæ, Extre'mæ na'res, Os'tia posterio'ra seu Cho'a'næ na'rium, Na'rium Ex'itus, (F.) Arrière-narines, Ouvertures postérieures des fosses nasales, are the posterior apertures of the nasal cavities, which establish a communication between those cavities and the pharynx. They are bounded, above, by the body of the sphenoid bone; below, by the palate bone and the base of the velum pendulum; and, on the outside, by the internal ala of the pterygoid process. They are separated from each other by a septum, of which the vomer is the bony part.

Narifuso'ria, (nares, 'the nostrils,' and fundere, fundum, 'to pour.') Medicines, which are dropped or put into the nostrils.

Narines, Nares.

Na'rium Ad'itus, ('entrance or passage of the nostrils,') Nares—n. Siccitas, Mycterorotes.

Nar'row Chest, see Lordosis.

Narthe'cia, Formulary, Myris.

Narthe'cium, (ναρθήκιον, dim. of ναρθήξ, 'a case of ointments,') Formulary, Myris.

Nar'thex, gen. Narthe'cis, (ναρθήξ), Formulary, Myris, Splint—n. Assafœtida, see Assafœtida.

Naru, Dracunculus.

Na'sa, Nacra, Nata.

Na'sal, Nasa'lis, (from nasus, 'the nose.') That which relates to the nose.

NA'SAL ARCH. A transverse venous trunk, which unites the frontal veins of opposite sides, at the root of the nose.

NA'SAL AR'TERY. This is the largest of the two branches in which the ophthalmic artery terminates. It issues from the orbit, above the tendon of the orbicularis palpebrarum, passes above the side of the root of the nose, and anastomoses with the last extremity of the facial. Haller gave the name nasal to the sphenopalatine. He also called the dorsales nasi, furnished by the external maxillary, Nasa'les laterales.

NA'SAL BONES, Os'sa na'si seu nasa'lia, Ossicula na'si, (F.) Os nasaux, Os propres du nez. These bones are situate beneath the nasal notch of the os frontis, and occupy the space between the nasal or angular processes of the superior maxillary bone. Their shape is nearly quadrilateral. They have an external or cutaneous surface, an internal or nasal, and four margins. Each is articulated with its fellow, with the os frontis, ethmoid, and superior maxillary bones. They ossify from a single point.

NA'SAL CAR'TILAGE, Cartila'go triangula'ris Na'si. A cartilage formed of three portions, which unite at the dorsum nasi, and are distinguished into the cartilage of the septum, Cartila'go septi seu quadrangula'ris, Sep'tum na'rium cartilagin'eum, Sep'tal car'tilage, and the lateral cartilages. The lateral cartilages are divided into the upper lateral, Cartilag'ines superio'res laterales seu triangula'res, which are situate immediately below the free margin of the nasal bones; and the lower lateral or alar, Cartilag'ines inferio'res seu alares seu pima'les seu minores inferio'res, which are chiefly characterized by the curve they form. Several loose nodules or plates exist in the posterior border of the ala, Cartilag'ines quadrate, C. alarum minores seu posterio'res seu minores posterio'res; and some small, flat, irregularly shaped bodies, from two to five in number, which are seen on the upper margin of the lateral cartilage in the neighborhood of the angle, are called Cartilag'ines epac'tiles, C. sesamoï'des seu accessoria, (F.) Tubercules cartilagineux. The nasal cartilage is continuous, above, with the ossa nasi, and, inferiorly, with membranous fibrocartilages, which form the supple and movable part of the nostrils.

NA'SAL DUCT, Lachrymal duct—n. Eminence, Mesophryon.

NA'SAL Fos'sæ, Ca'vi na'rium, Na'res internæ. Two large, anfractuous cavities, situate between the orbits below the cranium, and lined by the pituitary or Schneiderian membrane. These cavities have no communication with each other; but the various sinuses in the neighboring bones—the ethmoidal, sphenoidal, superior maxillary, &c.—all communicate with them. The general cavity of each nostril is divided by the ossa spongiosa into three meatuses or passages, which run from before backwards. 1. The Meatus na'rium superior, placed at the upper, inner, and back part of the superior spongy bone. 2. The Meatus medius, situate between the superior and inferior spongy bones; and 3. The Meatus inferior, situate between the inferior spongy bone and the bottom of the nose. The Schneiderian membrane receives the first pair of nerves, and various branches from the fifth pair. The arteries are furnished by the branches of the internal maxillary, known under the names of sphenopalatine, infraorbital, superior alveolar, palatine, pterygo-palatine; by the supraorbital and ethmoidal branches of the ophthalmic artery; by the internal carotid, superior labial, and dorsales nasi. Its veins are little known, and generally follow the course of the arteries. The lymphatics are almost unknown. The nasal fossæ are the seat of smell; they aid, also, in respiration and phonation.

NA'SAL MEA'TUS, see Nasal fossæ.

NA'SAL MU'CUS, Mucus na'rium, Phlegma na'rium cras'sum, Mucus seu Pituita seu Blenna seu Lympha muculen'ta na'rium, vulgarly called Snot, Snob, Snoth, (F.) Morce, is the mucus secreted by the Schneiderian membrane.

NA'SAL NERVE, Naso-palpébral (Ch.), Nasoculal'ris (Sömmering), Nasocilia'ris, Oculonasa'lis. One of the three branches of the ophthalmic nerve of Willis. It enters the orbit by the sphenoidal fissure, passes along the inner paries of that cavity, and divides, opposite the internal and anterior orbital foramen, into two branches. 1. The internal and posterior, which passes into the Foramen orbitarium internum anterius, enters the cranium beneath the dura mater, and passes into the nasal fossæ, through an aperture at the side of the Crista galli. It afterwards divides into several filaments: one of them—the Nasolobar of Chaussier—is very small, and descends on the posterior surface of the os nasi, and ramifies on the integuments of the ala nasi. A second terminates near the septum; others descend along the outer paries of the nasal fossæ. 2. The other is external and anterior, and is called the external nasal nerve. It is distributed to the outside of the orbit. Before dividing, the nasal nerve communicates with the ophthalmic ganglion, and gives off two or three ciliary nerves. Sömmering has given the name Posterior Nasal Nerve to the nerves which arise from the internal part of the sphenopalatine ganglion.

NA'SAL NOTCH, (F.) Échancrure nasale. A semicircular notch, situate between the nasal prominences of the frontal bone, and articulated with the nasal bones and the nasal processes of the superior maxillary bones.

NA'SAL PROC'ESS, Maxillary bone, superior.

NA'SAL PROM'INENCE, (F.) Bosse nasale. A prominence, situate on the median line, at the anterior surface of the os frontis, between the two superciliary arches.

NA'SAL RE'GION, Re'gio nasa'lis. The region of the nose.

NA'SAL SPINES. These are three in number. 1. The Superior nasal spine of the os frontis, occupying the middle of its nasal notch, and articulated before with the nasal bones, behind with the ethmoid. 2. The inferior and anterior nasal spine, situate at the inferior part of the anterior opening of the nasal fossæ. It is formed by the two superior maxillary bones; and 3. The inferior and posterior nasal spine, Épine gutturale (Ch.), a process, formed on the mesial line by the two palate bones at the posterior part of the palatine arch.

Nasa'lê, (from nasus.) Errhine.

Nasa'lis, Compressor naris.

NASA'LIS LA'BII SUPERIORIS. A small muscular slip, which runs up from the middle of the orbicularis and the lip to the tip of the nose. It lies exactly in the furrow, and is occasionally a levator of the upper lip, or a depressor of the tip of the nose.

Na'sas, Nata.

Nasa'tus, ('long nosed,' from nasus:—the size of the nose being supposed an index of that of the male organ.) Membrosus.

Nas'calé. A kind of pessary, made of wool or cotton, which was formerly introduced into the vagina, after being impregnated with oil, ointment, or some other proper medicament.

Nascaph'thon, Nascaphthon.

Nas'da, Nata.

Na'si, see Oryza.

Na'sitas, (from nasus.) Rhinophonia.

Nasi'tis, gen. Nasi'tidis, (nasus, and itis.) Rhinitis—n. Postica, Angina nasalis.

Na'smyth's Mem'brane, Cuticula dentis.

Na'so, Nasu'tus, (from nasus.) One who has a long nose. In composition, the nose.

Nasocilia'ris (Nervus), Nasal nerve.

Nasola'bial, Nasolabia'lis; (from naso, and labium, 'a lip.') Relating to the nose and lip.

NASOLA'BIAL LINE. A line or furrow, which separates the lip from the cheek, and commences at the ala nasi.

Nasolabia'lis. A muscular fasciculus described by Albinus, which arises from the anterior extremity of the septum nasi, and terminates in the orbicularis oris.

Nasopal'atine, Nasopalati'nus. That which belongs to the nose and velum palati.

NASOPAL'ATINE GAN'GLION is situate in the foramen palatinum anterius. Its greater extremity receives the two nasopalatine branches; while the smaller gives off two or three filaments, which reach the palatine vault, where they ramify on the membrane of the same name, anastomosing with filaments of the great palatine nerve.

NASOPAL'ATINE NERVE, Nerve of Cotunnus, is furnished by the sphenopalatine, which proceeds from the ganglion of Meckel. It traverses the vault of the nasal fossæ, and proceeds upon the septum between the two layers of the pituitary membrane. It enters the anterior palatine canal, and terminates at the superior angles of the nasopalatine ganglion, without attaining the mouth.

Nasopalpébral, Orbicularis palpebrarum.

Nasopharynge'al, Nasopharynge'us. Relating to the nose and pharynx, as nasopharynge'al pol'ypus.

Nas'ta, Nata.

Nastur'tium Amphib'ium, (nasus, and torquere, 'to twist,' owing to the effect of its pungency,) see Sisymbrium—n. Aquaticum, Cardamine pratensis, Sisymbrium nasturtium—n. Bursa pastoris, Thlaspi bursa—n. Hortense, Lepidium sativum—n. Indicum, Tropæolum majus—n. Officinale, Sisymbrium nasturtium—n. Palustre, see Sisymbrium—n. Peruvianum, Tropæolum majus—n. Pratense, Cardamine pratensis—n. Sativum, Lepidium sativum.

Na'sum Dila'tans, ('dilating the nose,') Pyramidalis nasi.

Na'sus, Na'sum, Nose, ([Sax.] nære, ner.) Rhin, Rhis, Organon olfac'tus seu odora'tus seu olfacto'rium, Promonto'rium fa'ciei, Myxo'ter, Emuncto'rium cer'ebri, Snout, (Sc.) Neis, Nes, (F.) Nez. The nose is a pyramidal eminence, situate above the anterior apertures of the nasal fossæ, which it covers; and, consequently, occupying the middle and upper part of the face, between the forehead and upper lip, the orbits and the cheeks. Its lateral surfaces form, by uniting angularly, a more or less prominent line, called Dorsum seu Rha'chis seu Spi'na Na'si, (F.) Dos du nez. This line terminates, anteriorly, by the lobe, — Lobulus. The sides are called Alæ Na'si, Pin'ne Na'rie, (F.) Ailes du nez. The column is the inferior part of the partition. Its apex or tip has been called Globulus nasi.

The portion of the nose formed of bone is the Na'sus os'seus; that of cartilage, the Na'sus cartilagin'eus.

The chief varieties of the nose are the aq'uiline, the flat nose, (F.) Nez camarot ou épaté, and the snub nose, (F.) Nez retroussé. The nose is formed, besides its bones, of fibrocartilage, cartilage, muscles, vessels, and nerves; and its use seems to be to direct odors to the upper part of the nasal fossæ.

NA'SUS CARTILAGIN'EUS, see Nasus — n. Internus, Nares — n. Osseus, see Nasus.

Nasu'tus, Naso.

Na'ta, Na'ta, Na'sa, Nas'da, Nas'ta, Na'sas, Nap'ta. A fleshy, indolent excrescence, having the shape of the nates.

Na'taron, Natron.

Nata'tion, Nata'tio, (natare, natatum, — itself from nare, — 'to swim,') Swim'ming. The action of swimming, or of supporting one's self, or moving upon the water. Swimming resembles the horizontal leap in its physiology — the medium being water instead of air. The difference between the specific gravity of the human body and that of water is not great: so that but little exertion is required to keep a part of the body above water. Swimming is a healthy gymnastic exercise, combining the advantages of bathing.

Na'tes, sing. Na'tis, 'a buttock,' Ephred'rana, Po'dex, Clu'nes, Glu'toi, Glu'ti, Glu'tia, Sedi'lia, P'y'gæ, Mo'næ, Bot'tom, Back'side, Poste'riors, Breech, But'tocks, (Prov.) Tout, (Sc.) Dowp, Dowp, Dolp, Drod'dum, Hur'dies, Len'dis, &c., (F.) Fesses. Two round projections, at the inferior and posterior part of the trunk, on which we sit, the seat, (F.) Siège. Among the mammalia, man alone has the nates prominent and round. They are formed chiefly by the skin, and a thick layer of areolar tissue, which covers the three glutæi muscles.

The cleft between the nates is the Ri'ma clu'nium.

NA'TES CER'EBRI, Quadrigemina corpora — n. et Testes, Quadrigemina corpora.

Na'tis, see Nates.

Na'trium, Sodium.

Na'trix, gen. Natri'cis, ('a water serpent,') Penis.

Natrocre'næ, (natron, and κρηνη, 'a well,') Natropegeæ.

Na'tron, (νιτρον,) Na'trum, Na'taron, Ni'trum, Ana'tron, Aphroni'trum, (from Natron, a lake in Judæa.) A saline compound, very abundant in Egypt, which is almost wholly formed of subcarbonate of soda.

Natro'nium, Sodium.

Natrope'gæ, Natrocre'næ, (natron, and κρηνη, 'a spring,') Soda springs.

Na'trum, Natron — n. Arsenicicum, Arseniate of soda — n. Biboracicum, Borax — n. Chloratum liquidum, Liqueur sodæ chlorinatæ — n. Muriaticum, Soda, muriate of — n. Muriatum, Soda, muriate of — n. Nat'ta, Nata.

Nat'ulæ, (dim. of nates,) Quadrigemina tubercula.

Natu'ra, (nasci, natus, 'to be born or arise,') Phy'sis. Nature. Also, the genital organs.

NATU'RA MOR'BI. The essence or condition of a disease.

Nat'ural Parts, Genital organs.

Natura'lia, Genital organs.

Na'turism, Nat'uralism. A view which attributes everything to nature, as a sage, prescient, and sanative entity. See Expectation, and Vis medicatrix nature.

Na'turist. A physician who scrupulously investigates, interprets, and follows the indications presented by nature in the treatment of disease.

Na'tus Mor'tuus, Stillborn.

Nau'clea Gam'bir, (navis, 'a ship,' and κλιω, 'I inclose,' — the half capsule being hull-shaped,) Unca'ria gam'bir. A plant of the Nat. Order, Rubiaceæ, native of the Malayan Peninsula and Indian Archipelago, which yields large quantities of the kind of catechu known by the names Terra Japon'ica and Square Catechu, and which, in Indian commerce, is called Gambier or Gambir. It is a powerful astringent, much used in tanning, and in medicine. See Catechu.

Nauheim, Min'eral Wa'ters of. In this village of Hesse Cassel, there are waters somewhat similar to those of Kreuznach, which are recommended in the various forms of scrofulous affection, while the baths, which sometimes produce the eruption called La Poussee, are employed for rheumatism.

Naupathi'a, (navis, 'a ship,' and παθος, 'affection,') Nausea marina.

Naus'ea, (ναυα,) Naus'ia, Nausi'asis, Nausio'sis, Naut'ia, Queas'iness, Squeas'iness, (F.) Nausee, Envie de vomir; (from navis, (L.) navis, 'a ship,' because those unaccustomed to sailing are so affected.) Sickness. Inclination to vomit.

NAUS'EA, KREAT'IC, (κρεας, gen. κρεας, 'flesh,') The sickness and vomiting, excited, in some nervous patients, by the smallest portion of animal food.

NAUS'EA MARI'NA, Mor'bus naut'icus, Vomitus navigan'tium seu mari'nus, Naupathi'a, Sea'sickness, (F.) Mal de mer. The sickness, vomiting, &c., experienced at sea by those unaccustomed to a seafaring life; and from which those who are accustomed are not always exempt. It generally ceases when the person becomes habituated to the motion of the vessel, and not till then.

Nauseabond, Nauseant.

Nauseabund'us, (from nausea,) Nauseant.

Naus'eant, Naus'eans, Nauseabund'us, (F.) Nauseabond, Nauseeux. An agent that excites nausea, which is a state of diminished action. Nauseants are, hence, valuable remedies in diseases of excitement.

Nausée, Nausea.

Naus'ia, (ναυα,) Nausea.

Nausi'asis, Nausea.

Nausio'sis, (nausia, and osis.) This word, besides being synonymous with nausea, has been used to express the state of venous hemorrhage, when blood is discharged by jets.

Naut'ia, (ναυα,) Nausea.

Naut'icus, (from ναυτης, 'a sailor,' navis, 'a ship,') see Tibialis anticus.

Navet, (from napus, 'the turnip,') Brassica rapa — n. du Diable, Bryonia alba — n. Galant, Bryonia alba.

Navette, Brassica rapa.

Navic'ula, (dim. of navis, 'a ship,') Fourchette. Navicula'ris, Naviform'is, (F.) Naviculaire, (from navicula, 'a little ship,') Boat-shaped.

NAVIC'ULAR FOS'SA, Fos'sa Navicula'ris seu Scaphoi'des, Navic'ula, Scaph'ula. See Scaphoid. This name has been given, 1. To a small depression between the entrance of the vagina and the posterior commissure of the labia major or fourchette. 2. To a perceptible dilatation, presented by the urethra in man, near the base of the glans. 3. To the superficial depression which separates the two roots of the helix. This is also called Sea'pha, Sul'cus interhel'icem et anthel'icem, Fos'sa anthel'icis seu tri'quetra seu triangula'ris seu ova'lis seu anon'yma seu innomina'ta, Cav'itas innomina'ta.

Navicula'rê Os, Scaphoïdes os.

Navic'ularthri'tis, gen. Navic'ularthri'tidis, (naviculare os, αρθρον, 'joint,' and itis.) Grog'gy lame'ness. An inflammatory disease of the navicular joint of domestic animals.

Navifor'mis, (navis, 'a ship,' and forma, 'form,') Navicular.

Na'vis, ('a ship,') Vulva.

Near'sightedness, Myopia.

Nearthro'sis, (neos, 'young or new,' and αρθρον, 'a joint,') A new joint.

Neb'le, Nipple.

Neb'ula, (from νεφέλη, 'a cloud,') Nu'bes, Nubec'ula, Ne'phos, Neph'elē, Nephe'liion, Vi'sus nebulo'sus, (F.) Nuage, Ombra'ge. A slight speck on the cornea. A mist or cloud suspended in the urine. See Caligo.

Nebuliza'tion, see Pulverization.

Neb'ulized, Nebulisa'tus, (from nebula, 'a cloud or mist,') Made nebulous or cloudy, — as a 'nebulated liquid.' See Pulverization.

Neb'ulizer, see Pulverization.

Neb'ulous, Nepheloid.

Nec'essary, Necessa'rius, (ne, and cessare, 'to cease,') The Necessaries of Life, Vi'tæ necessita'tes, (F.) Besoins de la vie, include everything requisite for the maintenance of life, and particularly food.

Neck, ([Sax.] hnecca, necca,) Collum — n. Derbyshire, Bronchocele — n. of the Foot, Instep — n. Stiff, Torticollis — n. Swelled, Bronchocele — n. Wry, Torticollis.

Neck'lace, An'odyne, (F.) Collier anodin. These are formed of the roots of hyoscyamus, Job's tears, allspice steeped in brandy, or the seeds of the wild liquorice vine, to suit the fancy of the prescriber. They are employed to facilitate dentition in children, and to procure sleep in fever!

Neck'weed, Veronica beccabunga, V. peregrina.

Necræ'mia, (necros, and μαίμα, 'blood,') Death of the blood. Death beginning with the blood.

Necrenceph'alus, (necros, and εγκεφαλος, 'encephalon,') Mollities cerebri.

Necrobio'sis, (necros, and βίος, 'life,') A name given by Virchow to degeneration occurring near the close of the life of any part of the organism; a spontaneous dying out of a living part, — a natural death, therefore not a violent one. See Degeneration.

Necrobiot'ic, Necrobiot'icus. Relating or appertaining to necrobiosis or morbid metamorphosis.

Necroce'dia, (necros, and κηδος, 'funereal attentions,') Embalming.

Necrocomi'um, (necros, and κομω, 'I care for,') Morgue.

Necro'des, (νεκρωδης, from necros, and odes,) Cadaverous.

Necrodochi'um, (νεκροδοχειον, from necros, and δεχομαι, 'I receive,') Morgue.

Necrol'ogy, Bills of, (necros, and λογος, 'a discourse,') Mortality, bills of.

Nec'romancy, Necromanti'a, Necyomanti'a, (νεκρομαντια, from necros, and μαντια, 'divination,') Divination by the dead. Conjuration; the black art, Nigromanti'a, Negromanti'a, (niger, 'black,' and μαντια, 'divination,')

Necromanti'a, Necromancy.

Necronarce'ma, (necros, and ναρκημα, 'stiffness,') Rigor mortis.

Necrophob'ia, (necros, and φοβος, 'fear,') Exaggerated fear of death. This symptom occurs in patients where the disease is not mortal; as in hypocondriasis. In fevers, it is not a good symptom.

Necropneumo'nia, (necros, and pneumonia,) Pneumo'nia gangræno'sa seu typho'sa, Gangræ'na seu Mortifica'tio seu An'thrax seu Carbun'culus Pulmo'num, Pneumosep'sis, Pneumoc'acē, (F.) Gangrène du Poumon, Pneumonécrosie of Piorry. Gangrenous inflammation of the lungs. This may be diffused or circumscribed. The only pathognomonic symptom is the extraordinary and repulsive odor of the breath and expectoration. The treatment consists in the use of the chlorides internally, or of chlorine by inhalation; allaying irritation by opium, and supporting the patient by wine whey and nourishing diet.

Necrop'sia, (necros, and οψις, 'seeing,') Autopsia cadaverica.

Necrop'sy, Autopsia cadaverica.

Nec'ros, (νεκρος,) Cadaver.

Necroscop'ia, (necros, and σκοπω, 'I examine,') Autopsia cadaverica.

Necroscop'ic, Necroscop'icus, (F.) Nécroscopique, (necros, and σκοπω, 'I view,') Relating to necroscopy or examination after death.

Necros'copy, Autopsia cadaverica.

Necro'sed, see Necrosis.

Necrosemeiot'icō, (necros, and σημειον, 'a sign,') The doctrine of the signs of death.

Necro'sial, Necrosia'lis, Necrot'ic, Necrot'icus. Relating or appertaining to death or mortification, or to necrosis, as 'necrosial fever,' the fever that accompanies necrosis.

Necro'sis, (F.) Nécrose, (νεκρωσις, from νεκρω, 'I kill,') Death, mortification. Especially, the state of a bone or of a portion of a bone deprived of life, Osteogangræ'na, Osteonecro'sis. The bone, in such case, is said to be necrosed. Necrosis may take place without the surrounding soft parts being struck with gangrene. It is to the bones what gangrene is to the soft parts. The part of the bone affected with necrosis becomes a foreign body, similar to the gangrenous eschar, and its separation must be accomplished by the efforts of nature or by art. When necrosis occurs in the centre of long bones, it never extends to their articular extremities. The exterior layers of bone form a canal round the dead portion or sequestrum; between these swollen layers and the sequestrum suppuration takes place; the matter presses against the bony canal, perforates it, and is discharged by apertures, which become fistulous.

In the treatment, the exit of the sequestrum must be facilitated by proper incisions, by the application of the trephine to the bone, &c.

Necro'sis CEREAL'IS, Ergotism — n. Dentium, Dental gangrene — n. Jaw, Exanthematous, see Jaw — n. Maxillæ ex Phosphoro, see Phosphorus.

Necro'sis, Moist, Mephit'ic Gan'grene. Necrosis of the cancellated structure of bone especially, which becomes moist and softened, with an offensive odor. It involves the whole thickness of the bone, and is met with in compound fractures, gunshot contusions, &c.

Necro'sis, Phos'phorus, see Phosphorus — n. Ustilaginea, Ergotism.

Necros'toa, (necros, and στοα, 'a gallery,') Morgue.

Necrot'ic, Necrosial.

Necrotoc'ion, (νεκροτοκιον, from necros, and τοκος, 'a child,') A dead or stillborn child.

Necrot'omy, (necros, and τομη, 'section,') Dissection.

Necroso'zoic, Nekroso'zoic, (necros, and ωζω, 'I preserve,') Fluids have been so called which are injected into dead bodies in order to preserve them, as in embalming.

Nectan'dra, see Bebeeru.

NECTAN'DRA CINNAMOMI'DES, Lau'rus Cinnamomi'des, Cinnamo'mum Sylves'trê America'num. Order, Lauraceæ. Native of New Grenada, where it is called Canela; has the odor and taste of cinnamon, and is used as such.

NECTAN'DRA CYMBA'RUM, Ocote'a cymba'rum seu ama'ra, grows in Oronoko, where it is called Sass'afra. The bark is aromatic, bitter, and stomachic, and Von Martius thinks it is an ingredient in the curare poison.

NECTAN'DRA PUCHURY, see Pichurim beans — n. Rodiei, see Bebeeru.

Nectan'dria, see Bebeeru.

Nec'tar, gen. Nec'taris, (νεκταρ, from νη, a particle of negation, and κταω, 'I kill.') A pleasant liquor, feigned by the poets to have been the drink of the gods, and to have rendered immortal those who partook of it. A name given by the ancients to many drinks, and particularly to one made with wine, evaporated and sweetened with honey.

Necta'rium, Inula helenium.

Necu'sia, (νεκος, 'I kill,') see Wound.

Nec'usine, (νεκος, 'I kill,') A term proposed by Dr. Wm. Farr for the specific zymotic principle by which infection of the system takes place from a dissecting wound.

Necyomanti'a, (νεκος, 'a dead body,' and μαντια, 'divination,') Neeromancy.

Nedy'ia, (νεδυια,) Intestines.

Ned'ys, (νεδυς,) The belly, abdomen, stomach, uterus.

Nee'dle, (Sax. nebl, nael, from Teut. neten, 'to sew,') A'cus, Bel'onē, Ra'phis, Ra'phion, Rha'phis, Rha'phion, Aces'tra, (F.) Aiguille. A steel instrument, used in many professions. In Surgery, a steel, gold, silver, or platinum instrument, that may be round, flat, or triangular, straight or curved, supported or not by a handle, but having almost always a point, by means of which it can penetrate the textures; and either near the point, or, more commonly, near the other extremity, an aperture or eye for the reception of a thread or tape, which it introduces into the parts. The Aiguille à appareil of the French is the ordinary sewing needle used in the making of bandages, &c.

NEE'DLE, A'CU'PUNCTURE, (F.) Aiguille à Acupuncture. An inflexible gold or silver needle, conical, very delicate, four inches long, furnished with a handle, and at times with a canula shorter than it by about half an inch. An ordinary needle, waxed at the head, will answer as a substitute for this. See Acupuncture.

NEE'DLE, AN'EURISM. A needle attached to a handle, of such a shape as will allow a ligature to be passed around a vessel, as in aneurism.

NEE'DLE, CAT'ARACT, A'cus ophthalmica, (F.) Aiguille à cataracte. Needles of gold, silver, and steel have been used, the latter alone at the present day. The cataract needle is employed to depress or tear the crystalline when opaque. This needle is usually made from 15 to 24 lines long, and is attached to a fine handle. The extremity may be, as in Scarpa's and Langenbeck's, pointed, prismatic, triangular, and curved; in Dupuytren's and Walther's, flat, curved, and sharp-edged; in Hey's, flat, with a semicircular and sharp end; or, as in Beer's, Siebold's, Schmidt's, Himly's, Von Gräfe's, &c., straight and spear-pointed. A mark is generally placed upon the handle to inform the operator, when the instrument is engaged in the eye, what side corresponds to the crystalline.

NEE'DLE FOR A COUNTEROPENING, A'cus incagnata, (F.) Aiguille à Contre-ouverture ou engainée ou à gaine. A long, narrow instrument of steel, the point of which is fine and sharp on both sides, the heel (talon) having an aperture to receive a thread, tape, &c., provided with a flat, silver sheath, shorter than the blade, the point of which it covers when passing through parts that have to be respected.

NEE'DLE, DESCHAMPS', Paupé's needle, (F.) Ai- guille de Deschamps, A. à manche, &c., is the last described needle fixed to a handle. The eye is placed near the point. It is employed in the ligature of deep-seated arteries.

NEE'DLE, EXPLOR'ING. A needle grooved at its extremity, which, when passed into a tumor, abscess, &c., brings away a few drops of the fluid contents, and thus facilitates the diagnosis.

NEE'DLE, FIS'TULA, (F.) Aiguille à Fistule. A long, flat, flexible, silver instrument, having an aperture near one extremity, blunt at the other. This was formerly used for passing a seton into fistulous ulcers. On one of its sides was a groove for guiding a bistoury in case of necessity.

Also, a long, steel instrument, terminated by a point like that of a trocar, which Desault employed for penetrating the rectum, when operating for fistula that had no internal aperture.

NEE'DLE, HARE'LIP, (F.) Aiguille à Bec de Lièvre. A small, silver canula, to which is attached a spear-point, that can be readily withdrawn. This needle, armed with the point, is introduced at one side of the fissure in the lip, and through the other. The twisted suture is then applied, and the pin withdrawn.

NEE'DLE, LIG'ATURE, (F.) Aiguille à ligature. A long, steel instrument, sharp towards one extremity, with an eye near the other, which was formerly used for suspending the circulation of blood prior to amputation, by being passed through the limb, so as to include the principal artery and a part of the muscles and integuments.

Also, a steel instrument of various dimensions, round towards one of its extremities, which was straight, and furnished with an aperture; curved and flat towards the opposite, which was pointed, and had a slight ridge on its concave side. At the commencement of the last century, this instrument was used to pass ligatures around vessels.

Also, a steel instrument of various dimensions, flat, regularly curved in the form of a semicircle, with a sharp or lance point, and a long eye, used with advantage in place of the last.

NEE'DLE, PAUPÉ'S, Needle, Deschamps'.

NEE'DLE, SE'TON, (F.) Aiguille à Séton. A long, narrow, steel blade; pointed and sharp at one extremity; pierced at the other by an aperture. The Aiguille à contre-ouverture may be used for the same purpose.

NEE'DLE, SU'TURE, (F.) Aiguille à Suture. For the twisted suture, the harelip needle is used; for the others, the straight or curved needle: the straight needle is preferable for stitching up the abdomen, &c., in dissection. In the suture of the tendons, a curved needle has been used; flat on both sides, and cutting only at the concave edge, in order that the instrument may pass between the tendinous fibres without dividing them.

Nee'dlebearer, Porte-aiguille.

Nee'dlecarrier, Porte-aiguille.

Nee'dles and Pins, see Pins.

Neem, see Melia azedarach.

Nee'ria, Dracunculus.

Nees'ing, Sneezing.

Nefte, Mespilus (the fruit).

Neflier, Mespilus.

Nefren'des, properly, 'sucking pigs,' No'doi, Eden'tuli. Persons devoid of teeth. Young children, for instance, who have not cut them; or aged persons, who have lost them. This state is called Nefren'dis, Odon'tia eden'tula.

Nego'tium Parturitio'nis, 'affair of parturition,' Parturition.

Nègre, Negro — n. Blanc, ('white negro,') Albino.

Negre'tia Pru'riens, Dolichos pruriens.

Negro, (S. and P. negro, from [L.] niger, 'black,') Ni'grita, (F.) Nègre. One of the Ethiopian race. See Homo and Mulatto.

Nelum'bium Lu'teum, Yel'low nelum'bo, Yel'low wa'ter lil'y, Pond lily, Water shield, Water nuts, Water chin'capin, Rat'tle nut, Sa'cred bean. A beautiful water plant, common in the United States, and belonging to Nat. Ord. Nymphaeaceæ; Sex. Syst. Polyandria Polygynia. The leaves are cooling and emollient when applied to the surface. The roots, leaves, and nuts are eaten. The last are called by the Indians and others water chin'capins.
Nelum'bo, Yel'low, Nelumbium luteum.
Nematelmin'tha, (νημα, gen. νηματος, 'a thread,' and ελμινς, gen. ελμινδος, 'a worm,') Nematel'mia. The class of Nematoid or round thread worms embraces numerous varieties, as the Ascaris lumbricoides, Trichina spiralis, Trichinocephalus dispar, &c. See Parasites.
Ne'matoid Worms, (νημα, 'a thread,' αιδως, 'resemblance,') Nematelmintha.
Nen'do, Angelica lucida.
Nenn'dorf, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Nenn'dorf is a village three and a half German miles from Hanover. Its cold sulphureous spring is much celebrated.

Neog'onus, (νεογονος,) Nouveau-né.
Neomem'brane, see Membrane, false.
Neona'tus, (neo, and natus, 'born,') Nouveau-né.
Neopla'sia, (neo, and πλασσω, 'I form,') (F.) Néoplasie. The formation of neoplasms or new growths.
Néoplasie Hétérotopique. Abnormal formation of a tissue foreign to the natural constitution of the organ.
Ne'oplasm, Neoplas'ma, gen. Neoplas'matis, (F.) Néoplasme, (neo, and πλασσω, πλαττω, 'I form,') A new formation or tissue, the product of morbid action. According to Virchow, the connective tissue and its equivalents are the general source of development of new growths, which arise either from simple division or from endogenous changes set up in the interior of pre-existing cells.
Neoplas'tic, (same etymon.) Belonging or relating to neoplasms or new growths.
Neoplas'ticé, Neoplasty.
Neoplas'ty, Neoplas'ticé. An operative process for the formation of new parts. It includes autoplasty, cicatrization of wounds, and the formation of adhesions.
Neoscyte'chus, (neo, σκυτος, 'leather,' and ηχος, 'a sound,') see Craquement de Cuir neuf.
Neotocio'terus, (neo, τοκος, 'one born,' and ιτερνς,) Icterus infantum.
Neot'tia, (νεοττια, 'a nest,')—from the arrangement of the roots, Goodyera pubescens.

Nep, Nepeta.

Nepen'tha Destillato'ria, Bandu'ra. A Ceylonese plant, the root of which is astringent.

Nepen'thes, (νεπενθης, from νη, 'neg,' and πενθος, 'grief,') A remedy much extolled by the ancients against sadness and melancholy.

The women of Thebes, according to Diodorus Siciliotes, alone possessed the secret of its composition; and, according to Homer, Helen introduced it from Egypt. Some suppose it to have been opium.

NEPEN'THES, Bangué—n. Opiatum, Pilulæ opiatæ.

Nep'eta, (from Nepete, a town in Italy [?]), N. Cata'ria seu vulga'ris, Cata'ria vulga'ris, Her'ba fel'is, Nep, Cat'nep, Cat'nip, Cat'mint (F.) Herbe aux Chats, Cataire. Ord. Labiatae. The leaves and tops are officinal. The leaves, Cata'ria (Ph. U. S.), have a smell and taste like those of an admixture of spearmint and pennyroyal. It has been recommended in uterine disorders, dyspepsia, flatulency, &c., like pennyroyal; and is much used on the American continent in domestic medicine, in flatulencies, &c., of children.

NEP'ETA AGRES'TIS, Melissa nepeta—n. Glechoma, Glechoma hederacea—n. Vulgaris, Nepeta.

Nephali'otes, (νηπαλιωτης, from νηψω, 'I abstain,') Temperance.

Neph'elê, (νεφελη, 'a cloud,') Enæorema, Nebula.

Nephel'ion, (νεφελιον, 'a little cloud,') Nebula.

Neph'eloid, Nepheloides, Nepheloides, Neb'ulous, Nubilo'sus, (νεφελωδης, from νεφελη, 'a cloud,' and αιδως, 'resemblance,') An epithet applied to urine when it is cloudy—Uri'na nepheloides.

Néphogène, (nephos, and γενω, 'I generate,') see Pulverization.

Ne'phos, (νεφος, 'a cloud,') Nebula.

Neph'ræmorrhag'ia, (nephrus, and hæmorrhagia,) see Hæmaturia.

Nephral'gia, Do'lor Nephret'icus, Neural'gia Re'num, (F.) Névralgie des Reins, Dysnéphroner'vie, (nephrus, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain and neuralgia in the kidney.

NEPHRAL'GIA ARENO'SA, see Gravel—n. Calculosa, see Gravel—n. Rheumatica, Lumbago.

Nephra'u'ria, (nephrus, a, priv., and ουρον, 'urine,') Ichuria renalis.

Nephrapos'tasis, Nephropy'o'sis, Absces'sus rena'tis, (nephrus, and αποστασις, 'abscess,') Renal abscess.

Nephra'ton'ia, (nephrus, and ατονια, 'want of tone,') Re'num aton'ia seu paral'y'sis. Atony of the kidney.

Nephraux'ê, (nephrus, and αυξω, 'I increase,') Enlargement of the kidney.

Nephrelco'sis, Nephropy'o'sis, Helco'sis rena'tis, (nephrus, and ελκωσις, 'ulceration,') Ulceration of the kidney.

Nephrelmin'tic, Nephrelmin'ticus, (nephrus, and ελμινς, gen. ελμινθος, 'a worm,') That which is owing to the presence of worms in the kidney.

Nephremphrax'is, (nephrus, and εμφρασσω, 'I obstruct,') A name given by Ploucquet to obstruction of the kidneys.

Nephret'ic, Nephrid'ius, Nephrit'ic, Nephrit'i-cus, (from nephrus,) That which relates to the kidney. Applied, especially, to pain, &c., seated in the kidney.

Nephret'icum, in Materia Medica, means a medicine employed for the cure of disease of the kidney.

NEPHRET'ICUM LIG'NUM, Guilandina moringa.
Nephret'icus La'pis, Tal'cum nephret'icum, (F.) Pierre néphrétique, Jade néphrite ou oriental. A green, fatty kind of stone,—once used as an amulet against calculus and epilepsy,—an absurd name, as there can be no such remedy.

Neph'ria, (νεφρος, 'kidney,') Kidney, Bright's disease of the.

Nephrid'ion, Pingue'do renalis, (νεφριδιος, 'pertaining to the kidney.') The fat which surrounds the kidney.

Nephrid'ium, Capsule, renal.

Nephrid'ius, (νεφριδιος,) Nephretic.

Neph'rine, (from nephrus,) Oxide, cystic; urea.

Nephrite, Nephritis — n. Albumineuse, Kidney, Bright's disease of the.

Nephri'tes, (from nephrus,) Asphaltites.

Nephrit'ic, Nephretic.

Nephrit'ici (Mor'bi). In the classification of Dr. Wm. Farr, renal diseases.

Nephrit'icium Lig'num, Guilandina moringa.

Nephri'tis, (gen. Nephrit'idis,) Empres'ma Nephrit'idis, (nephrus, and itis,) Re'nun inflammatio, Nephrophleg'monē, Inflammation of the Kidney, (F.) Nephrite, Inflammation des Reins. Several varieties have been described, according to the seat of the inflammation, its progress, &c., under the names Acute or Suppurative Nephrit'idis, Desquamative and Non-desquamative Nephrit'idis, Acute Tubal Nephrit'idis, Parenchymatous Nephrit'idis, Interstitial Nephrit'idis or Nephrit'idis Ve'ra, &c. Most of these varieties have been already referred to as different stages of acute and chronic Bright's disease. (See Kidney, Bright's disease of the.) When the mucous membrane of the pelvis of the kidney is inflamed, the affection is called pyelitis.

Acute Nephrit'idis, or, as it is sometimes called, from its tendency to suppuration, Suppurative Nephrit'idis, is characterized by acute pain; burning heat, and a sensation of weight in the region of one or both kidneys; suppression or diminution of urine; fever; dysuria; ischuria; constipation, more or less obstinate; retraction of the testicle, and numbness of the thigh of same side.

In Cal'culous nephritis — Lithonephrit'idis — the urine often contains small particles of uric acid or of urate of ammonia. The most common causes of nephritis are, — excess in irritating and alcoholic drinks; abuse of diuretics; blows or falls on the region of the kidneys: the presence of renal calculi, &c. It may be distinguished from lumbago by the pain which attends the latter on the slightest motion, &c. It usually terminates by resolution in from one week to two or three. It may, however, end in suppuration — pyonēphrite; or may become chronic — chrononēphrite. In the treatment, antiphlogistics, as bleeding, baths, &c., are required to the full extent; with the use of diluents, opiates, &c.

Nephritis occurring in the childbed state has been called Puer'peral nephritis.

NEPHRI'TIS, (from nephrus,) Asphaltites.

NEPHRI'TIS ALBUMINEN'SIS, Kidney, Bright's disease of the — n. Albuminosa, Kidney, Bright's disease of the — n. Associated, Kidney, Bright's disease of the — n. Cachectic, Kidney, Bright's disease of the — n. Calculous, see Nephritis — n. Croupous, Kidney, Bright's disease of the.

NEPHRI'TIS DES'QUAMATIVE, N. Desquamans. A condition of Bright's disease, in which epithelial cells are seen by the microscope in the urine. See Kidney, Bright's disease of the.

NEPHRI'TIS, METASTAT'IC, is associated with disease of other organs, as of the heart.

NEPHRI'TIS, NON-DES'QUAMATIVE, see Kidney, Bright's disease of the — n. Parenchymatous, see Kidney, Bright's disease of the — n. Sociata, Kidney, Bright's disease of the — n. Suppurative, see Nephritis.

NEPHRI'TIS, SURG'ICAL, Surgical Kid'ney. Chronic inflammation of the kidney, the result of local disease, as of calculus in the kidney or bladder, of stricture of the urethra, &c.

NEPHRI'TIS, TU'BAL, Kidney, Bright's disease of the.

Nephrochalazosis, (nephrus, and χαλαζα, 'hail,' 'granulation,') Kidney, Bright's disease of the.

Nephrococco'sis, (nephrus, and κοκκος, 'a grain or berry,') Kidney, Bright's disease of the.

Nephroco'lica, Colica nephretica.

Nephrocysti'tis, (nephrus, κυστις, 'the bladder,' and itis,) Inflammation of the kidney and bladder.

Nephrocysto'sis, (nephrus, κυστις, 'a cyst or bladder,' and osis,) A morbid condition, which consists in the formation of cysts in the bladder.

Nephro'des, (νεφρωδης,) Nephroid.

Nephro'dium Filix Mas, (from nephrus,) Polypodium filix mas.

Nephrog'raphy, (nephrus, and γραφη, 'a description,') An anatomical description of the kidney.

Nephrohæ'mia, (nephrus, and αίμα, 'blood,') Hyperæmia or congestion of the kidney.

Neph'roid, Nephroï'des, Nephro'des, Reniformis, (nephrus, and ειδος, 'form, resemblance,') Reniform. Having a resemblance to a kidney — as 'nephroid cancer,' so called because the morbid growth resembles the kidney in structure.

Nephrolithi'asis, (nephrus, and λίθος, 'a stone,') The disease of calculus in the kidney; Lith'ia renalis, Lithi'asis nephrit'ica, L. renalis. See Gravel.

Nephrolith'ic. Belonging to calculi in the kidneys. This epithet has been applied to ischuria, occasioned by calculi formed in the kidneys.

Nephrolithot'omy, Nephrotomy.

Nephrol'ogy, Nephrolog'ia, (nephrus, and λογος, 'a treatise,') A treatise on the kidneys. Dissertation on the kidneys and their functions.

Nephromala'cia, (nephrus, and μαλακία, 'softness,') Softening of the kidney.

Nephron'eus, Tumor renalis, (nephrus, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') A tumefaction of the kidney.

Nephropar'alysis, Nephropar'esis, Nephrople'gia, Paral'ysis re'nun seu renalis. Paralysis of the kidneys.

Nephropar'esis, (nephrus, and παρεσις, 'loss of tone,') Nephroparalysis.

Nephrophlegmat'ic, Nephrophlegmat'icus, (nephrus, and φλεγμα, gen. φλεγματος, 'phlegm,') A name given, by some authors, to ischuria produced by mucus contained in the urine.

Nephrophleg'monē, (nephrus, and φλεγμονη, 'inflammation,') Nephritis.

Nephrophthi'sis, (nephrus, and φθισις, 'consumption,') Phthisis from suppuration of the kidney.

Nephrople'gia, (nephrus, and πληγη, 'a stroke,') Nephroparalysis.

Nephroplethor'ic, Nephroplethor'icus, (nephrus, and πληθωρα, 'plethora,') Belonging to plethora of the kidneys. An epithet given to ischuria dependent upon this cause.

Nephropy'ic, Nephropy'icus, (nephrus, and πυον, 'pus,') Belonging to suppuration of the kidney.

Nephropyo'sis, (nephrus, πυον, 'pus,' and osis,) Nephrapostasis, Nephrelecosis.

Nephrorrhag'ia, Hæmatu'ria renalis, Hæmor'rhag'ia re'nun, (nephrus, and ρρηγη, 'rupture,') Proflu'vium sanguinis e re'nibus. Hemorrhage from the kidney.

Neph'ros, (νεφρος,) Kidney.

Nephroscl'eria, (nephrus, and σκληρία, 'hardness,') Indura'tio re'nun. Induration of the kidneys.

Nephrospas'tic, Nephrospas'ticus, (nephrus, and σπασμ, 'I draw,') That which depends upon spasm of the kidney. An epithet given to a variety of ischuria.

Nephrothrom'boid, Nephrothromboï'des, (nephrus, and θρομβος, 'a clot,') That which depends upon clots of blood contained in the kidneys or their ducts. An epithet for a species of ischuria.

Nephrotomy, Nephrolithotomy, Nephrotomia, Nephrolithotomia, Sec'tio rena'lis, S. re'nis, (nephros, and τομή, 'section.') Dissection of the kidney. Also, an operation proposed for extracting calculi formed in the kidney, by means of an incision into the tissue of that organ.

Neph'rus, (νεφρός,) Kidney.

Ne'pios, (νηπιος,) Infans.

Nepi'otes, (νηπιότης,) Infancy.

Nep'ta, Asphaltum.

Ne'ra, Toddy.

Nere (Sc.), ([G.] Niere,) Kidney.

Nérion, Nerium oleander.

Néris, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Néris is on the high-road from Moulins to Limoges, eighty leagues from Paris. The water contains carbonic acid gas, carbonate of soda, and sulphate of soda, chloride of sodium, silex, and an animal matter to which its 'oleaginous' property is probably owing. The waters are generally used in the form of thermal baths, in cases of nervous and hysterical excitement, in rheumatism and prurigo. Season, from May 20th to October 15th.

Ne'rium, (νηριος, 'humid,' because growing in moist places,) N. oleander.

NE'RIMUM ANTIDYSENTER'ICUM, Wrightia antidysenter'ica. The tree which affords the Codaga'pala Bark, Cones'si cor'tex, Tillicher'ry cor'tex, Cor'tex profusa'vii, (F.) Codagapala, Cropale. Family, Apocynæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. The bark, Koorchee, of this Malabar tree is of a black color, externally, and is generally covered with a white moss or scurf. It has an austere, bitter taste, and has been recommended as an astringent in diarrhoea, dysentery, &c. The seed, Sem'ina indageer' of Flu'ckinger, Indrojolare are used as a vermifuge by the natives.

NE'RIMUM ODO'RUM, Kumaree, of India, is a well-known poison, and extensively used as such.

NE'RIMUM OLEAN'DER, Ne'rium, Rhododaph'nis, Rosa'go, (F.) Laurier rose, Laurose, Nérion Rose, Rhododaphné. The leaves are reputed to be narcotic. The infusion is employed internally, in herpetic affections, and the powder, incorporated with lard, is used in the itch.

Nero'li, see Citrus aurantium.

Neronia'na or Nero'nica Phlebotom'ia. An epithet given, for some cause, to phlebotomy, when more than one vein was opened on the same day, or to bleeding coup sur coup. Termed Neroniana, because the philosopher Seneca was bled to death under Nero [?].

Nerprun Purgatif, (or Noirprun, 'prunus nigra,') Rhamnus.

Neruah, Dracunculus.

Nerve, (νεῦρον, 'a string,') Ner'vus, Neu'ron, (F.) Nerf. (Neuron and Nervus meant also, with the ancients, a tendon and a ligament, Par'tes nervosæ; and hence the different acceptations of 'nervous';—'a man of nerve—a strong, nervous man; and a weak, nervous woman.') The nerves are tubular cords of the same substance as that which composes the encephalon and spinal marrow. They extend from one or other of the nervous centres to every part of the body, communicating, frequently, with each other; forming plexuses, and, occasionally, ganglions; and being, at length, lost in the parenchyma of organs. There are 42 pairs, and, according to their origin, they are termed Cranial or Encephalic, and Spinal. Each nerve is composed of several filaments or cords placed alongside each other, and is surrounded by a neurilemma. The encephalic nerves, in general, have only one root in the brain, whilst the spinal arise from the marrow by two roots: the one from an anterior fasciculus of filaments, the other from a posterior, separated from each other by the ligamentum denticulatum; uniting outside this ligament, and presenting, near the intervertebral foramen, a ganglion formed only by the posterior root. The two roots make, afterwards, but one nerve; and, like the encephalic nerves, proceed to their destination, subdividing into rami and ramusculi, until they are finally lost in the texture of the organs. The trunks first formed are commonly round, and proceed alone, or accompany the great vessels, being placed in the areolar spaces which separate the organs, and are thus protected from injury. Their manner of termination has admitted of much discussion; whether the nervous pulp, for instance, is distributed or lost in a membrane, as seems to be the case with the nerves of sight, hearing, and smell, or terminates in a delicate network, or in a special terminal arrangement of touch corpuscles, end-bulbs, &c.; or in free ends, or, as in muscles, in motorial end-plates. See Corpuscles, Pacinian; Corpuscula tactus, &c. Some organs have numerous nerves; others seem to have none: a circumstance which influences considerably the sensibility of parts. Observation has shown that certain motor fibres cross the median line and affect muscles on the side opposite to that from which they originate; but the influence is very limited. See Entrecroissement.

The Encephalic nerves arise from the encephalon, or are inserted into it, (according as we consider the brain the origin or termination of the nerves;) and make their exit by foramina at the base of the skull. They are 12 in number. The spinal nerves are 31 in number, 8 cervical, 12 dorsal, 5 lumbar, and 6 sacral; the four inferior cervical being much larger than the superior, because they furnish the nerves of the upper extremities.

The following table gives a synoptical arrangement of the principal nerves and their distribution. Such as are not herein mentioned by name, as the Crunal, dental, nasopalpebral, &c., are referred to elsewhere; see Crunal, dental, nasopalpebral, &c.

SYNOPTICAL TABLE OF THE NERVES.

I. Cranial or Encephalic Nerves.

1. Olfactory (1st pair.)	Divided into internal, external, and middle branches, which are distributed on the Schneiderian membrane.	6. Abducentes (6th pair.)	To the rectus externus oculi.
2. Optic (2d pair.)	Terminate in the retina.
3. Motores oculorum ... (3d pair.)	Superior Branch. To the rectus superior oculi and levator palpebrae superioris. Inferior Branch. To the rectus internus, rectus inferior and lesser oblique muscles; a filament which goes to the ophthalmic ganglion.	7. Facial (Portio dura of the 7th pair.)	1. At its exit from the cranium, the posterior auricular , stylohyoid , and infra-mastoid , to the pavilion of the ear, the mastoid process, the digastricus, and the muscles attached to the styloid process. 2. Near the parotid gland, the temporal , malar , buccal , supramaxillary , and infra-maxillary to the whole superficies of the face
4. Pathetici (4th pair.)	To the greater oblique muscle of the eye. Ophthalmic Branch. Divided into three branches. 1. The lacrimal branch , to the lacrimal gland and upper eyelid. 2. Frontal branch , to the forehead and upper eyelid. 3. Nasal branch , to the eyelids, nasal fossae, and nose. Superior Maxillary Branch. 1. The orbital branch , to the orbit. 2. The posterior and superior dental , to the last three molar teeth and gums. 3. The anterior dental , to the incisor, canine, and two lesser molares. 4. Infraorbital , to the upper lip, cheek, and nose. Inferior Maxillary Branch. 1. Temporal profound branches , to the temporal muscle. 2. Masseterine branch , to the masseter muscle. 3. Buccal , to the inner surface of the cheek. 4. Pterygoid , to the internal pterygoid muscle. 5. Lingual , to the mucous membrane of the tongue. 6. Inferior dental , to the teeth of the lower jaw, and to the lower lip. 7. Auricular branch , to the pavilion of the ear and forehead.	8. Auditory (Portio mollis of the 7th pair.) 9. Glossopharyngeal ... (Portion of the 8th pair.)	To the vestibule, semicircular canals, and cochlea. To the base of the tongue and pharynx.
5. Par Trigeminum ... (5th pair.)		10. Par Vagus (8th pair.)	1. IN THE NECK , — a pharyngeal branch to the pharynx; superior laryngeal branch to the larynx, and to some muscles of the inferior hyoid region. Cardiac branches to the cardiac plexus. 2. IN THE CHEST , — the inferior laryngeal branch to the larynx pulmonary branches, which form the plexus of the same name: oesophageal branches to the oesophagus. 3. IN THE ABDOMEN , — gastric branches to the plexus of the stomach: filaments which go to the neighbouring plexuses. At its exit from the cranium — the accessory of the pneumogastric nerve anastomosing with this nerve. In the neck — filaments to the trapezius muscles. Cervicalis descendens , to the muscles of the inferior hyoid region and to the cervical nerves. Filaments to the muscles of the tongue.
		11. Spinal or Accessory of Willis
		12. Hypoglossal (9th pair.)

II. Spinal or Vertebral Nerves.

1. Cervical Nerves.
1st Cervical Pair.....	Anterior Branch. Anastomosing par arcade with the second pair.	Cervical Plexus.....	lar , to the parotid gland and pavilion of the ear. Superficial Cervical Branches. (2.) To the platysma myoides, digastricus, the integuments of the neck, &c.
2d Cervical Pair.....	Anterior Branch. A branch anastomosing with the first pair: a branch which goes to the cervical plexus.		Anterior Branches. Assisting in the formation of the brachial plexus.
3d and 4th Cervical Pairs.....	Anterior Branch. Concurring in the cervical plexus.	5th, 6th, and 7th Cervical Pairs.....	Posterior Branches. To the muscles and integuments of the posterior part of the neck and upper part of the back.
The Posterior Branch of these four pairs ramifies on the occiput and muscles of the superficial and deep-seated cervicooccipital regions.			1. Thoracic Branches. To the anterior and lateral parts of the chest. 2. Suprascapular branch to the muscles of the posterior scapular region. 3. Infrascapular branches (3.) to the subscapularis, teres major, teres minor, and latissimus dorsi. 4. The brachial internal cutaneous , to the integuments of the palmar and dorsal surfaces of the forearm, near the ulnar margin. 5. The brachial external cutaneous , principally to the integuments of the palmar and dorsal surfaces of the forearm, near the radial margin. 6. The median nerve , to the
Cervical Plexus.....	DESCENDING BRANCHES. — 1. Internal descending , anastomosing with a branch of the hypoglossus. 2. Phrenic branch , to the diaphragm. 3. External descending branches , dividing into supraclavicular, supraacromial, infraclavicular, and cervicales profundi, to the muscles and integuments of the upper part of the chest and shoulder, to the trapezius, levator scapulae, rhomboids, &c. ASCENDING BRANCHES. — 1. Mastoid , to the posterior and lateral part of the head and the inner surface of the pavilion of the ear. 2. Auricu-	Brachial Plexus.....

Brachial Plexus..... { forearm, hand, and palmar surface of all the fingers. 7. The cubital nerve, to the last two fingers. 8. The radial, to the first three. 9. The axillary, around the shoulderjoint, and to the neighbouring muscles.

2. Dorsal Nerves, (Nervi dorsales.)

1st Dorsal Pair..... { Anterior Branch. To the brachial plexus.

2d and 3d Dorsal Pairs..... { Anterior Branches. An intercostal and brachial branch.

4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th Dorsal Pairs..... { Anterior Branches. Internal branches, to the intercostals, triangularis sternal, pectoralis major, and to the skin. External branches to the integuments of the chest, the obliquus externus abdominis, and the skin of the abdomen.

8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th Dorsal Pairs... { Anterior Branches. Internal branches, to the transversalis, obliquus internus, and rectus muscles, and to the skin of the abdomen. External branches. to the integuments of the chest, and to the muscles and skin of the abdomen.

12th Dorsal Pair..... { Anterior Branch. To the first lumbar nerve, and to the muscles and skin of the abdomen as far as the iliac crest.

The Posterior Branches of the dorsal nerves are distributed to the muscles and integuments of the back and loins.

3. Lumbar Nerves.

1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th Lumbar Pairs..... { Anterior Branches. Concurring to form the lumbar plexus.

5th Pair..... { Anterior Branch. Aiding in forming the sciatic plexus.

The Posterior Branches of the lumbar nerves are distributed to the loins, sacrum, and nates.

Lumbar Plexus..... { 1. Musculocutaneous Branches, to the number of three. One superior, to the muscles of the abdomen, to the fold of the groin, and the scrotum; a middle, to the integuments and muscles of the abdomen; and an inferior, to the skin of the thigh. 2. A genitocrural branch to the integuments of the scrotum, the groin, and the thigh. 3. The crural nerve, to the integuments and muscles of the thigh, skin of the leg, and foot. 4. The obturator nerve, to the muscles at the inner part of the thigh. 5. The lumbosacral, to the sciatic plexus. It gives off the gluteal nerve to the gluteal muscles.

4. Sacral Nerves.

1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th Sacral Pairs..... { Anterior Branches. They form by their union the sciatic plexus.

5th and 6th Pairs..... { Anterior Branches. To the parts in the vicinity of the coccyx.

The Posterior Branches ramify on the muscles and integuments of the nates

Sciatic Plexus..... { 1. Hemorrhoidal nerves, to the rectum. 2. Vesical, to the bladder. 3. Uterine and vaginal, to the vagina and uterus. 4. Inferior gluteal, to the gluteal muscles, perineum, and integuments of the posterior part of the thigh. 5. Pudic, to the perineum, penis, or vulva. 6. Sciatic, divided into the external popliteal, which ramifies on the integuments and muscles of the external side of the leg, on the dorsum of the foot, and the dorsal surface of the toes; and into the internal popliteal, distributed on the dorsal surface of the two last toes, to the muscles of the foot, and on the plantar surface of all the toes.

Classifications of the nerves have been recommended according to their uses, in preference to the ordinary anatomical arrangement. It has been remarked that the encephalic nerves have generally one root; the spinal two. Experiments and pathological facts have proved that the anterior column of the marrow—funiculus anterior—and the anterior roots of the spinal nerves are inservient to volition or voluntary motion; and that the posterior column—funiculus posterior—and roots are destined for sensibility. Hence the spinal nerves, which have two roots, must be the conductors both of motion and feeling; while the encephalic, which, with but few exceptions, have but one, can possess but one of these properties:—they must be either sensitive or motor, according as they arise from the posterior or anterior column of the medulla; and, consequently, three classes of nerves may be distinguished.

1. Sensory..... { Arising, by a single root, from the posterior column of the medulla oblongata or spinal marrow.
2. Motor..... { Arising, by a single root, from the anterior column of the same parts.
3. Sensory and Motor..... { Which have two roots: one from the anterior, and one from the posterior column.

The tubules of all the afferent or sensory nerves cross to the opposite side of the spinal marrow, and an impression received by them is conveyed along the vesicular matter to the sensory ganglia of the encephalon; while the efferent or motor fibres cross only at the anterior pyramids of the medulla oblongata.

According to Sir Charles Bell, the medulla oblongata is composed of three columns on each side,—an anterior, a middle, and a posterior. While the anterior and posterior columns produce the nerves of motion and sensation respectively, the middle, according to Sir Charles, gives rise to a third set of nerves—the respiratory. To this order belong:—

1. The accessory nerve of Willis, or superior respiratory.
2. The par vagum.
3. The glossopharyngeal.
4. The facial or respiratory of the face.
5. The phrenic.
6. A nerve which has the same origin as the phrenic;—the external respiratory.

When a horse has been hard ridden, every one of these nerves is in action.

This division is now, however, generally abandoned, and there does not seem to be a third column, especially destined for the movements of respiration.

Sir C. Bell, again, reduced the system of nerves to two great classes. 1. Those that are regular, primitive, symmetrical, and common to all animals, from the worm to man, which have double roots, and preside over sensibility and motion: and, 2. The irregular or superadded, which are added to the preceding, in proportion as the organization of animals offers new or more complicated organs. To the first class belong all the spinal nerves and at least one encephalic—the 5th pair;—to the second, the rest of the nervous system.

Dr. Marshall Hall proposed a division of the nervous system, which is calculated to explain many of the anomalous circumstances so frequently witnessed. He proposed to divide all the nerves into, 1. The cerebral, or the sentient and voluntary. 2. The true spinal or excitomatory. 3. The ganglionic or cycloganglionic, the nutrient and secretory. If the sentient and voluntary functions be destroyed by a blow upon the head, the sphincter muscles will still contract when irritated, because the irritation is conveyed to the spine, and the reflex action takes place to the muscle so as to throw it into contraction. But if the spinal marrow be now destroyed, the sphincters remain entirely motionless, because the centre of the system is destroyed. Dr. Hall maintained that a peculiar set of nerves constitutes, with the vesicular centre of the marrow as their axis, the second subdivision of the nervous system; and as those of the first subdivision are distinguished into sentient and voluntary, these may be distinguished into the excitor and motor. The first, or the excitor nerves, pursue their course principally from internal surfaces, characterized by peculiar excitabilities, to the centre of the medulla oblongata and medulla spinalis; the second or the motor nerves pursue a reflex course from the medulla to the muscles, having peculiar actions concerned principally in ingestion and egestion. The motions connected with the first or cerebral subdivisions are sometimes, indeed frequently, spontaneous; those connected with the true spinal are, he believes, always excited. He thought, too, that there is good reason for viewing the fifth and posterior spinal nerves as constituting an external ganglionic system for the nutrition of the external organs; and he proposed to divide the ganglionic subdivision of the nervous system into, 1. The internal ganglionic, which includes that usually denominated the sympathetic, and probably filaments of the pneumogastric; and, 2. The external ganglionic, embracing the fifth and posterior spinal nerves. To the cerebral system he assigned all diseases of sensation, perception, judgment, and volition—therefore all painful, mental, and comatose, and some paralytic diseases. To the true spinal, excitomatory, reflex, or diastaltic nervous system, he referred all spasmodic and certain paralytic diseases. He properly added that these two parts of the nervous system influence each other both in health and disease, as they both influence the ganglionic system.

The main views of Dr. Hall on the excitomatory or reflex system have been generally embraced. Much, however, has still to be accomplished notwithstanding the activity of modern observers, before the precise functions of the different nervous centres can be regarded as definitely determined.

The nerves are sheathed and are united to the neighboring parts by an abundant layer of fatty areolar texture, which sends inwards prolongations that separate the nervous cords and filaments from each other. The arterial trunks distributed to them transmit branches into their interior. The veins follow the same course as the arteries. Absorbents are not easily traced even on the greatest trunks.

The term regeneration of nerves has been applied to the process of reproduction of nerves after severe lesions of the nerves, as in gunshot injuries, &c.

In the minute fibrils or tubules, Tubuli ner'vae, full of nervous matter, which constitute the former, there is a difference between the central and peripheral portion;—the former has been called the axis cylinder, (F.) Cylindre de l'axe, and primitive and flattened band, band of Remak; the latter, the medullary or white substance of Schwann—nerve medulla, Sheath of Schwann, medullary sheath or matter, myelin—being that to which the peculiarly white aspect of cerebro-spinal nerves is principally due. In the gelatinous fibre no tubular envelope can be distinguished, and the white substance of Schwann seems to be wanting. It contains numerous cell-nuclei. The white substance of Schwann and the tubular sheath generally disappear as the nerve approaches its terminal distribution, the axis-cylinder invested by its basement-membrane being left. Nervopath'ic, Neuropathic.

Ner'vosism. The doctrine which maintains that all morbid phenomena are owing to variations in the nerve force.

Ner'vous, Nervo'sus, Neuro'des, Ner'veus, Neur'icus, (F.) Nerveux. Relating or belonging to the nerves. Strong. Also, weak, irritable.

NER'VOUS ATTACK', (F.) Attaque des nerfs, is an affection accompanied with spasm, pain, and different nervous symptoms, to which impressible individuals are liable.

NER'VOUS CEN'TRES, see Centres, nervous.

NER'VOUS DIATH'ESIS, termed Atax'ia spir'ituum, Anoma'lia nervo'rum, Sta'tus nervo'sus seu erethit'icus, Diath'esis seu Constitu'tio nervo'sa, Ner'vousness, (F.) Névosisme. Medically, ner'vousness means unusual impressibility of the nervous system. Formerly, it signified strength, force, and vigor. Recently, it has been applied to a hypochondriacal condition verging upon insanity, occasionally occurring in those in whom the brain has been unduly tasked;—a condition termed by some cerebrop'athy; by others, brain fog.

NER'VOUS DISEASES, Mor'bi Nervo'si, (F.) Maladies nerveuses. Affections seated in the nervous system. To purely functional disease of the nerves Dr. Laycock has given the name neuræ'mia, and to the class of diseases he applies the epithet neuræ'mic.

NER'VOUS FLU'ID, Nervous prin'ciple, Flu'idum seu Liq'uidum ner'veum, Suc'cus ner'veus, Spir'itus vita'lis. The fluid which is supposed to circulate through the nerves, and which has been regarded as the agent of sensation and motion. Of this fluid we know nothing, except that it resembles, in many respects, the electric or galvanic. It was formerly called Animal spirits, Spir'itus anima'les, (F.) Esprits animaux.

NER'VOUS IN'FLUENCE, see Nervous power—n. Pain, Neuralgia.

NER'VOUS POW'ER, Nerve power, Ner'veus in'fluence, Vis nervo'sa seu nervo'rum, Neurodyna'mia, Neurodyna'mis. The power of the nerves as exhibited in the living organism.

NER'VOUS PRIN'CIPIE, Nervous fluid.

NER'VOUS SYS'TEM. The nerves and nervous centres considered collectively. See Nerves.

NER'VOUS SYS'TEM OF THE AUTOMAT'IC FUNC'TIONS, Trisplanchnic nerve—n. System, ganglionic, see Trisplanchnic nerve—n. System, organic, see Trisplanchnic nerve—n. System of the senses, Medulla oblongata—n. System, sympathetic, Trisplanchnic nerve—n. System of voluntary motion, &c., Medulla spinalis.

Nes, Nasus.

Nes'pita, Melissa calamintha.

Nesti'a, (νηστία,) Fasting.

Nestiatri'a, (from nestia, and tarpeia, 'medical treatment,') Limotherapeia.

Nes'tis, (νηστis, 'a faster,') Jejunum.

Nestitherapei'a, Limotherapeia.

Nestotherapei'a, Limotherapeia.

Neuenahr, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The waters of this town in Rhenish Prussia are tonic and antirheumatic, acting especially on the mucous membranes and the glandular system. The principal spring contains bicarbonates of soda, magnesia, and lime, sulphate of soda, chloride of sodium, protoxide of iron and alumina, silica and free carbonic acid.

Neuradyna'mia, (neuron, a, and dynamis, 'power,') Neurasthenia.

Neura'mia, (νεῦρον, 'a nerve,' and αἷμα, 'blood,') See Nervous diseases.

Neura'mic, see Nervous diseases.

Neur'al, (from neuron,) Relating to a nerve, or to the nervous system or centres.

NEUR'AL A'LE, see Neural arch.

NEUR'AL ARCH. The arch formed by the posterior projections connected with the body of the vertebra, which protect the medulla. Each arch, with the pedicle—neural pedicle—and body, forms a segment of the neural tube. The alæ of the arches are the neural alæ.

NEUR'AL AX'IS, see Encephalon.

NEUR'AL CAV'ITY. One of the two great cavities which may be said to be inclosed in the arrangement of the segments of the skeleton, including the cranium and the vertebral canal.

NEUR'AL PEDICLE, see Neural arch—n. Spines, Spinous processes—n. Tube, see Neural arch.

Neural'gia, (neuron, and αλγῆ, 'pain,') Rheumatis-mus spurius nervosus, Neurodyn'ia, Nervous pain or pang, Spasmodic tic, (F.) Néuralgie, Néurodyne. A generic name for a number of diseases, the chief symptom of which is a very acute pain, exacerbating or intermitting, which follows the course of a nervous branch, extends to its ramifications, and seems, therefore, to be seated in the nerve. The principal neuralgias have been distinguished by the names facial (of which the infraorbital, maxillary, and frontal are but divisions), the iliocrotal, intercostal, femoropopliteal, femoropretibial, plantar, and cutibitodigital. A division of anomalous neuralgia has likewise been admitted.

All varieties of neuralgia are obstinate, and the greatest diversity of means has been made use of:—bleeding, general and local, emetics, purgatives, tonics, such as quinine and iron, strychnia, alteratives, as arsenic, rubefacients, vesicants, actual cautery, narcotics, mercurial frictions, electricity, destruction of a portion of the nerve, &c. A successful remedy with many practitioners is the carbonate of iron, given in doses of some magnitude; as, for instance, ʒss. or ʒij. twice or thrice a day, in molasses; the plan of treatment being continued for a month or two. It seems to be almost as certain as any other remedy used in diseases in producing its salutary effects. The bowels must be kept free, and all inflammatory symptoms removed, whatever may be the agent prescribed.

NEURAL'GIA, ANOM'ALOUS. Under this name Chaussier has included different neuroses, some of which are characterized by acute pains circumscribed within a short compass, or extending by irradiations, but not having their seat in the course of a nerve; and others which are occasioned by tumors in the course of a nerve, or which succeed contusions or incomplete divisions of nerves.

NEURAL'GIA BRACHIA'LIS, Brachialgia—n. Brachiothoracica, Angina pectoris—n. Cardiac, Angina pectoris—n. Cerebralis, Hemisphæria—n. Cæliaca, Neuralgia of the solar plexus (Rombert)—n. Cruralis, N. femorotibialis.

NEURAL'GIA CU'BITODIGITA'LIS, Is'chias nervo'sa digita'lis. In this variety the pain extends from the part where the nerve passes under the inner condyle to the back of the hand and to its cubital edge.

NEURAL'GIA DENTA'LIS, Odontalgia nervosa.

NEURAL'GIA, FA'CIAL, Neuralgia fa'ciei, Tris-mus maxilla'ris seu dolorificus seu clon'icus, Opsial'gia, Do'lor cru'cians fa'ciei seu faciei pe'riod'icus, Hemicra'nia idiopath'ica, Autal'gia do'loro'sa, Tic douloureux, Do'lor fa'ciei seu faciei typ'ico caracte'rè seu faciei Fothergill'i, Rheumatis-mus cancro'sus, Rheumatis-mus larva'tus, Prosopal'gia, Prosopodyn'ia, Fe'bris top'ica, Ophthalmodyn'ia period'ica, Tortu'ra O'ris, Affectus spasmodico-convulsi'vus Labio'rum, Face'agne, Fothergill's Face'ache, is characterized by acute lancinating pains, returning at intervals; and by twinges in certain parts of the face, producing convulsive twitches in the corresponding muscles. It may be seated in the frontal nerve, in the infraorbital, or in the maxillary branch of the fifth pair.

Metopodyn'ia, Brow'ague, Brow'pang, Neural'gia fronta'lis, Ophthalmodyn'ia, Tic douloureux, Do'lor period'icus, (F.) Néuralgie susorbitaire intermittente, &c., commences at the superciliary foramen and extends along the ramifications of the frontal nerve that are distributed on the forehead, upper eyelid, caruncula lacrymalis, and nasal angle of the eyelids. Sometimes it is felt particularly in the orbit.

Neuralgia infraorbital'ria, Do'lor fa'ciei a'trox, Rheumatis-mus cancro'sus, Tris-mus clon'icus, Prosopal'gia, Fe'bris top'ica, Odontalgia remittens et intermit'tens, Hemicra'nia se'va, Infraorbital neuralgia, Tic douloureux, is chiefly felt in the infraorbital foramen, whence it passes to the cheeks, upper lip, ala nasi, lower eyelid, &c.

In Neuralgia maxilla'ris, Gnathal'gia, Gnathoneural'gia, Tic douloureux, Tris-mus catarrha'lis maxilla'ris, the pain usually sets out from the mental foramen and passes to the chin, lips, temple, teeth, and tongue.

NEURAL'GIA, FALSE. A term assigned to pains along a nerve or its ramifications, produced by some body compressing it,—those pains terminating with the removal of the compressing cause.

NEURAL'GIA FEM'ORO-POPLITE'A, N. Ischiad'ica, Sciati'ca, Schi'as, Malum ischiad'icum, Morbus ischiad'icus, Pas'sio ischiad'ica, Ischi'agra, Ischial'gia, Is'chias, Ischio'sis, Ischioneural'gia, Coxal'gia, Do'lor Ischiad'icus nervosus, Is'chias, I. nervo'sa Cotug'nii seu Cotun'nii, Malum Cotun'nii, I. nervo'sa post'ica seu rheumat'ica, Neurisch'ias, Cox'agra, Ischiati'ca, Hip-gout, (Prov. Devonshire) Bone-shave, (F.) Sciattique, Goutte sciaticque. This is characterized by pain following the great sciatic nerve from the ischiatic notch to the ham, and along the peroneal surface of the leg to the sole of the foot. It is often considered to be a form of rheumatism, Rheumatism of the hip.

NEURAL'GIA FEM'OROPRÆTIBIA'LIS, Cru'ral Neuralgia, Is'chias nervo'sa anti'ca, Scelal'gia anti'ca. In this the pain, setting out from the groin, spreads along the fore part of the thigh, and passes down, chiefly on the inner side of the leg, to the inner ankle and back of the foot.

NEURAL'GIA FRONTA'LIS, see N. facia—n. of the Heart, Angina pectoris—n. Hepatica, Hepatalgia.

NEURAL'GIA, ILIOSCRO'TAL, has been rarely observed. It is characterized by a very acute pain in the course of the branches of the first lumbar pair; this pain follows the crista ilii and accompanies the spermatic vessels to the testicle, which is often painfully retracted.

NEURAL'GIA, INFRAORBITAR, see N. facia—n. Ischiadica, N. femoropoplitea—n. Lead, see Lead rheumatism—n. Lienis, Splenalgia.

NEURAL'GIA MAMMÆ, Ir'ritable breast. An exceedingly painful affection of the female mamma, unaccompanied by inflammation.

NEURAL'GIA MAXILLA'RIS, see N. facia.

NEURAL'GIA PLANTA'RIS. This is rare, and the pain is confined to the course of the plantar nerves.

NEURAL'GIA RE'NUM, Nephralgia—n. Spinalis, Spinal irritation—n. Testis, Orchidalgia.

Neuranagennesis, Neuranaph'ysis, (neuron, and αναγενναω, 'I regenerate.') Regeneration or renewal of a nerve.

Neuranaph'ysis, (neuron, ανα, 'again,' and φω, 'I grow.') Neuranagennesis.

Neurapoph'ysis, see Vertebrae.

Neurasthenia, Neuradyna'mia, Debil'itas nervo'sa. Debility or impaired activity of the nerves, (neuron, and ασθενεια, 'debility.') See Irritable.

Neurectom'ia, (neuron, and εκτομη, 'excision.') Excision of a nerve.

Neur'icus, (from neuron,) Nervous.

Neurilem'ma, gen. Neurilem'matis; Neurile'ma, Neurily'ma, Neurymen, Perineur'ium, Perineur'ion, Fistula seu Tu'bulus seu Cap'sula seu Involu'crum nervo'rum, Membra'na seu Membran'ula seu Tu'nica seu Indumen'tum nervo'rum, Vagi'na nervo'rum, (F.) Névrilème, Périnèdre, (neuron, and λεπτα, 'a coat.') The fine transparent, and apparently fibrous membrane that surrounds the nerves, to every filament of which it forms a true canal.

Robin restricts the term périnèdre to the structure that invests the primitive bundles of nerves; and every nervous filament. It differs from the neurilemma in its ordinary acceptation, which forms a coat of some thickness in the larger nerves, and supports the nutrient vessels, while the périnèdre exhibits no capillaries.

Neurilemmat'itis, gen. Neurilemmat'itidis, Neurilemmitis.

Neurilemmi'tis, gen. Neurilemmi'tidis, Neurilemmat'itis, Neurolemmat'itis, Neuryaeni'tis, Neurilymi'tis, (F.) Névrilémite, (neurilemma, and itis.) Inflammation of the neurilemma.

Neuril'ity, Neuril'itas, (from neuron,) The property, possessed by nerve-fibre, of exciting contraction in a muscle, secretion in a gland, and sensation in a ganglionic centre.

Neurily'ma, gen. Neurily'matis, (neuron, and αλεμα, 'a covering,') Neurilemma.

Neur'ine, (from neuron,) Medul'la nervo'rum, (F.) Névrine, Albumine cérébrale ou du cerveau. The substance of which the nervous system is composed. It consists chiefly of albumen and a peculiar fatty matter, associated with phosphorus. There are two kinds of neurine—the one vesicular or consisting essentially of nerve vesicles or nerve cells or corpuscles, or, as they are sometimes called, from their prevailing in the ganglia—ganglion corpuscles and ganglion globules; the other, the tubular, formed—as the word imports—of tubules.

The former is the cineritious or cortical nervous matter of the older anatomists;—the latter, the white or medullary. The vesicular neurine has appeared to be restricted to the production and distribution of nerve power; the tubular, to its conduction; yet the experiments of Dr. Brown-Séquard show that the former conveys sensitive impressions from the posterior spinal roots to the brain. Most of the nerve cells are furnished with one process, hence termed unipolar; others have two processes—the bi'polar; and others, again, have several—the multipolar; while others are devoid of processes—the apolar.

Neuris'chias, Neuralgia femoropoplitea.

Neurit'ic, Nervine.

Neuri'tis, gen. Neuri'tidis, Inflamma'tio nervo'rum, Neurophlogo'sis, Neurophleg'monē, (F.) Inflammation des Nerf, Névrite, (neuron, and itis.) Inflammation of a nerve.

NEURI'TIS, OP'TIC, Neuroretinitis—n. Optic, ascending, see Neuroretinitis—n. Optic, descending, see Neuroretinitis—n. Retro-ocular, see Neuroretinitis.

Neuroblaci'a, (neuron, and βλακεια, 'stupor,') Insensibility of the nerves.

Neurochondro'des, (neuron, χονδρος, 'a cartilage,' and odes.) A hard substance between a sinew and a cartilage.

Neuro'des, (νευροδης, from neuron and odes,) Nervous.

Neurodyna'mia, (neuron, and δυναμις, 'power,') Nervous power.

Neurody'namis, Nervous power.

Neurodyn'ia, (neuron, and δυνη, 'pain,') Neuralgia.

Neuroga'mia, (neuron, and γαμος, 'marriage,') Magnetism, animal.

Neurog'lia, (neuron, and γλια, 'glue,') Perineur'ium of the Brain. A term proposed by Virchow for a delicate stroma of retiform tissue in the brain and spinal cord, constituting an investing and supporting framework. See Glioma.

Neurog'raphy, Neurograph'ia, (F.) Névrographie, (neuron, and γραφη, 'a description,') The part of anatomy which describes the nerves.

Neurohypnology, Neurohypnol'og'ia, (neuron, ύπνος, 'sleep,' and λογος, 'a treatise,') A name given by Mr. Braid to his theory of magnetio sleep. See Magnetism, animal.

Neurohyp'notism, see Magnetism, animal.

Neurolemmat'itis, Neurilemmitis.

Neurol'ogy, Neurolog'ia, (F.) Névrologie, (neuron, and λογος, 'a discourse,') The part of anatomy which treats of the nerves.

Neuro'ma, gen. Neuro'matis, (F.) Névrôme, (from neuron,) A nerve tumor. A morbid enlargement of a nerve. Applied to subcutaneous, circumscribed, and highly painful tumors formed on the tissue of the nerves; and likewise to a small, hard, grayish tumor, Neuroma'tion, Nervous ganglion, Pain'ful tubercle, Tuber'cula doloro'sa, of the size of a pea, which is observed in the course of nerves, and appears to be formed from the neurilemma. As a general rule, a neuroma is a small fibrous tumor imbedded in the nerve or enveloped in the neurilemma. When the end of a divided nerve becomes enlarged from fibrinous effusion, and consequently bulbous, a traumatic neuroma is formed. Such a neuroma—amputa'tion neuroma, as it is then called—may occur after amputation.

NEURO'MA, AMPUTA'TION, see Neuroma.

Neuromala'cia, (neuron, and μαλακεια, 'softening,') Softening of nerves.

Neuromanti'a, (neuron, and μαντια [?], 'proph-ecy,') Tubercle, subcutaneous.

Neuroma'tion, Neuroma.

Neur'omatoid, Neuromatoï'des, (neuroma, and αἶδος, 'resemblance,') Resembling neuroma; as a neuromatoid tumor.

Neurome'træ, (νευρομετρηα,) Psom.

Neuromyeli'tis, gen. Neuromyeli'tidis, (neuron, μυελος, 'marrow,' and itis.) Inflammation of the medullary matter of the nerves.

Neur'on, (νευρον,) see Nerve.

Neuron'osus, Neuronu'sos, (neuron, and νοσος, 'a disease.') A disease of the nerves.

Neuronyg'mé, Neuronyg'mus, Neuronyx'is, (neuron, and νυγη, 'puncture,') Punctio ner'vi. Puncture of a nerve.

Neuroparal'ysis, Shock, nervous.

Neur'opath, (neuron, and παθος, 'disease.') A physician who ascribes diseases, &c., to nervous influence, rather than to the blood, &c.

Neuropath'ic, Neuropath'icus, Nervopath'ic, (F.) Néropathique, (neuron, and παθος, 'affection.') Belonging to disease of the nerves, Neuropath'ia, Neuron'osus, Neurop'athy, (F.) Néropathie. See Neuroses.

Neuropatholog'ical, (neuron, παθος, 'disease,' and λογος, 'description.') That which belongs to or is related to neuropathology.

Neuropathol'ogy, (same etymon.) The doctrine of the influence of the nerves in causing diseased conditions, as inflammation, &c. It includes all the theories in regard to the effects of irritations of efferent nerves, of division of the sympathetic, of nerve influence on the heart's action, &c.

Neurophleg'moné, (neuron, and φλεγμονη, 'inflammation,') Neuritis.

Neurophlogo'sis, (neuron, and φλογωσις, 'inflammation,') Neuritis.

Neurophysiol'ogy, (neuron, and phhysiology.) The physiology of the nervous system.

Neuroplas'ty, Neuroplas'ticé, (F.) Névroplastie, (neuron, and πλαστικός, 'forming,') M. Serres applies this term to a ganglionic alteration of the peripheral nerves.

Neuropur'p'ic Fever, (neuron, and πορφυρα, 'purple,') Fever, purpuric, malignant.

Neurop'ya, (neuron, and πυρ, 'fire, fever,') Fever, nervous, Typhus mitior.

Neuropyr'etus, Fever, nervous, Typhus mitior.

Neuroretini'tis, (neuron, and retina.) Optic Neurit'is. Inflammation of the optic nerve, as seen in the eye. Two forms of optic neuritis are described: the ascend'ing form, sometimes called the engorged papilla, the inflammation commencing in the papilla or optic disk, and extending upwards along the trunk of the nerve; and descend'ing neuritis, in which the inflammation commences externally and travels downward to the optic disk. In retro-ocular neuritis, the structural changes do not extend to the papilla, and do not implicate the whole trunk of the optic nerve continuously.

Neuro'ses, (F.) Névroses, (neuron, and osis.) A generic name for diseases supposed to have their seat in the nervous system, and which are indicated by disordered sensation, volition, or mental manifestation; without any evident lesion in the structure of the parts, and without any material agent producing them. Such is the usual definition. Broussais attributes them to a state of irritation of the brain and spinal marrow.

NEURO'SES, RESTRAINT', see Inhibitory.

Neuroskel'eton, see Skeleton.

Neurospas'mi, see Spasm.

Neurostheni'a, (F.) Névrosthénie, (neuron, and σθενεια, 'strength,') Excess of nervous irritation. Nervous irritation.

Neurothel'e, (F.) Névrothèle, (neuron, and στήλη, 'a nipple,') A nervous papilla.

Neurothel'ic Appara'tus, Corpus papillare.

Neurot'ic, Nervine, see Neurotica.

Neurot'ica, Diseases of the nervous function.

The 4th class of Good's Nosology. Neurotics, in the classification of Dr. Taylor, are poisons, which belong to the narcotic and narcotico-acrid classes of Orfila. They are divided by him into the Cerebral neurotics, as morphia; the Spinal neurotics, as strychnia; and the Cerebrospinal neurotics, as conia and aconitia.

Neur'otome, Névrotome.

Neurot'omy, Neurotom'ia, (neuron, and τομη, 'incision,') (F.) Névrotomie. Dissection of nerves. Also, an incised wound and section of a nerve.

Neurotraumat'ic, (neuron, and τραυμα, 'a wound,') That which relates to or is connected with injuries to wounds, as neurotraumatic eruptions.

Neurotro'sis, Neurotros'mus, (neuron, and τροσις, 'wounding,') Ner'vi vulnera'tio. Wound or wounding of a nerve.

Neurotros'mus, Neurotro'sis.

Neur'y-men, gen. Neury'menis, (neuron, and μνη, 'a membrane,') Neurilemma.

Neurymeni'tis, gen. Neurymeni'tidis, Neurilemmitis.

Neuta, Neuth'a. A membrane, according to Paracelsus, which covers the eyes and ears of the foetus in utero.

Neu'tral, (neuter, 'neither,') Belonging to neither in particular.

NEU'TRAL MIX'TURE, Liquor potassæ citrat'is.

NEU'TRAL SALTS, Sec'ondary salts, (F.) Sels neutres. Salts, composed of two primitive saline substances, combined together, and not possessing the characters of acid or of base.

Névrognie (F.), (névro, and γνις, 'fracture,') The bruising or section of a nervous cord.

Névroalgie, Neuralgia—n. Faciale, Tic douloureux—n. du Foie, Hepatalgia—n. des Reins, Nephralgia—n. du Trijumeau, Tic douloureux—n. de l'Utérus, Hysteralgia.

Névrilème, Neurilemma.

Névrilémite, Neurilemmitis.

Névrine, Neurine.

Névrite, Neuritis.

Névritique, Nervine.

Névro (F.), (from neuron,) in composition, 'nerve.'

Névrodynie, Neuralgia.

Névrographie, Neurography.

Névrologie, Neurology.

Névrolysie, (neuron, and λυσις, 'solution,') Intertia of a nerve after long-continued over-excitement.

Névrôme, Neuroma.

Névropathie, Neuropathy.

Névropathique, Neuropathic.

Névroplastie, Neuroplasty.

Névrose Co-ordinatrice des Professions, see Névrose des Écrivains.

Névrose des Écrivains, N. Co-ordinatrice des Professions, Dyskinésie ou Dyscinésie des Écrivains, Dyskinésie Professionnelle. Terms recently proposed for a condition generally known as Writers' Cramp. See Cramp, writers'.

Névrose du Cœur, Angina pectoris—n. Thyro-exophtalmique, see Exophtalmia—n. Utérine, Hysteria.

Névroses, Neuroses—n. Spinobulbaires, see Spinobulbar.

Névrosisme, Nervousness.

Névrosthénie, Neurosthenia.

Névrothèle, Neurothèle. The Appareil Névrothèle is the papillary apparatus, or arrangement of the skin in the aggregate.

Névrotique, Nervine.

Névrotome, Neur'otome, Neurot'omus, (from névro, and τομη, 'dissection,') An instrument used by anatomists to dissect the nerves. It is a long and very narrow scalpel, having two edges. The term Neurotome is also applied by Goodsir to the section of the skeleton embraced in the nervous system.

Névrotonie, Neurotony.

Nevus, Nævus.

New Jersey, Mineral Waters of. In the upper part of Morris county, and in the county of Hunterdon, near the top of Musconetcong mountain, there are chalybeate springs, which are resorted to. See Schooley's Mountain.

New York, Mineral Waters of. The chief waters are those of Saratoga, Ballston, Sharon, and Avon. There is a thermal spring at Lebanon, Columbia county, 73° Fah., chiefly used for bathing purposes; saline sulphur waters at Massena, in St. Lawrence county, resembling those of Eilsen in Schaumburg Lippe, said to be beneficial in cases of scrofula, gravel, &c.; chalybeate acid springs at Oak Orchard, Genesee county, remarkable for the large quantity of free sulphuric acid in it, and therefore efficacious in diarrhoea, passive hemorrhages, &c.; sulphur springs at Richfield and Cherry Valley, in Otsego county; at Clifton, Ontario county; Chittenango, Madison county, &c. A spring at Catskill contains sulphates of magnesia, soda, and lime; carbonates of lime, magnesia, and iron; and chlorides of sodium, calcium, and magnesium. The Stockport and Columbia springs contain sulphates of magnesia, lime, and soda, chlorides of magnesium and calcium, carbonates of magnesia and lime, organic matter, and carbonic acid. See Saratoga, Ballston, Sharon, Avon, Oak Orchard, &c.

Nexus Stamineus Oculi, ('stamineous connection of the eye,') Ciliary body.

Nex, Nasus.

Ngerengere. A singular disease with the New Zealanders, which Dr. Arthur S. Thomson considers to be a variety of such diseases as the Elephantiasis Græcorum, Leprosy of the Cossacks, &c., and which he proposes to call Leprosy gan-græno'sa. A similar affection is said to exist in Jamaica, and is called there Cacubay.

Nican'dra Anom'ala, (after Nicander, a physician of Colophon,) Anisodus luridus.

Nicara'gua Wood, see Casalpinia.

Nic'coli Sa'les, Salts of Nick'el, (F.) Sels de Nickel. These salts are gentle tonics, and have been given with advantage in periodic headache and neuralgia, and in chlorosis and amenorrhœa. The dose of the sulphate, Nic'coli Sulphas, is gr. ss. or gr. j., three times a day.

Nic'coli Sul'phas, see Niccoli sales.

Nic'olum, Nickel.

Nice, Cli'mate of. The climate of Nice possesses some advantages over the neighboring climates of Provence and Italy, being free from the sirocco of the latter, and protected from the mistral of the former. Spring is the most unfavorable season. The climate is very dry. It has been a great winter retreat for the consumptive, but does not deserve the encomiums that have been passed upon it.

Niche, see Lingula.

Nick'ar Tree, Gymnocladus Canadensis.

Nick'el, Nic'olum, (from [G.] Nickel, 'a prostitute,') A term of detraction applied by the old German writers to what was regarded as a kind of false copper ore. A white malleable metal, s. g. 8.8; less oxidizable than iron. Several preparations of nickel have been employed medicinally. See Niccoli sales.

Nick'EL, Salts of, Niccoli sales.

Nicod'mi O'leum, Oil of Nicod'mus. An oil made by digesting for some time, in a mixture of white wine and olive oil, old turpentine, litharge, aloes, saffron, oxide of zinc, &c.

Nico'tia, see Nicotiana tabacum.

Nicotia'na, (after Jean Nicot, who first introduced it into Europe, about 1560), N. tabacum.

Nicotia'na A'qua. A preparation of tobacco made by adding alcohol and water to the cut fresh green leaves, and distilling. It is said to be sedative and diaphoretic, without possessing the dangerous qualities of other preparations of tobacco.

Nicotia'na Mi'nor, N. rustica.

Nicotia'na Rus'tica, N. mi'nor, Priapei'a, Hyoscy'amus lu'teus, Eng'lish or Wild tobacco. Ord. Solanaceæ. The leaves possess the properties of tobacco, but are milder.

Nicotia'na TABACUM or TABACUM, Tabaci folia (Ph. B., 1867), Nicotia'na, Her'ba tabaci, Tabacum, Pe'tum, Pæ'tum, Pe'tum, Hyoscy'amus Peruvia'nus, Tobac'co, Virgin'ia tobacco, Drunk'-wort, (F.) Tabac, Nicotiane. Tobacco is a violent acronarcotic, its properties seeming to depend upon a peculiar principle, Nicotin, Nico'tia, Nicoti'na, Nicotyl'ia, Nicotia'nia. It is narcotic, sedative, diuretic, emetic, cathartic, and errhine. In incarcerated hernia, it is injected, in the form of smoke or infusion, but requires great caution. It is extensively and habitually used as an errhine and sialogogue. The infusion is used to kill vermin, and in some cutaneous eruptions.

Two active principles have been found in tobacco—one an active, volatile, colorless liquid, which is possessed of alkaline properties. Another substance has been obtained by simply distilling water from tobacco, and allowing the liquid to stand for several days. A white crystalline matter rose to the surface which had the odor of tobacco, and resembled it in its effects. Its properties were neutral. It was called by Hermstadt Nicotianin, and seemed to partake of the nature of volatile oils.

The crude oil—Nicotia'nin—is supposed to be the juice of "the cursed hebenon" described by Shakspeare as "the leperous distilment" poured into the ear of Hamlet's father.

Nicotiane, Nicotiana tabacum.

Nicotia'nin, see Nicotiana tabacum.

Ni'cotin, see Nicotiana tabacum.

Nicotyl'ia, see Nicotiana tabacum.

Nicta'tio, Hippus, Nictation.

Nicta'tion, Nicta'tio, Nictita'tio, (nictare, nictation, 'to wink,' 'winking,') Clo'nus nictita'tio, Blepharis'mus, Palpebra'tio, Twink'ling of the eye, (F.) Clignotement, Cillement. A rapid and repeated movement of the eyelids, which open and shut alternately. As occasionally performed, it is physiological; if repeatedly, a disease. It seems to be executed chiefly by the motor 7th pair of nerves, but it is necessary that the excitator 5th pair should likewise be in a state of integrity.

Nidamen'tum, (nidus, 'a nest,') Decidua.

Nid'dick, Nucha.

Nidoreux, Nidorous.

Ni'dorous, Nidoro'sus, (F.) Nidoreux, from Ni'dor, Cuis'sa, 'the smell of anything burnt,' &c. Having the smell of burnt or corrupt animal matter.

Ni'dus, 'a nest,' Nidus hirundinis.

Ni'dus HIRUN'DINIS, Ni'dus, Swa'l'low's Nest. A deep fossa in the cerebellum—so called from its fancied resemblance—situate between the velum medullare posterius in front, and the nodulus and uvula behind.

Niederbronn or Niederbrunn, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Saline waters in the department of Bas-Rhin, France, which contain chloride of sodium, sulphate of magnesia, and carbonic acid.

Nielle, Nigella.

Niepa Bark, see Samadera Indica.

Nigel'la, Coptis.

NIGEL'LA, N. Sat'iva,—Ord. Ranunculaceæ,—Nigrel'la, (from niger, 'black,' in allusion to the seed,) Melan'thium, Cumi'num ni'gram, Fen'nel flower, Nutmeg flower, Devil in a bush, (F.) Nigelle, Nielle, Faux cumin, Fleur Sainte-Catherine. This small southern European and Syrian plant was formerly used medicinally as an expectorant and deobstruent, errhine, sialogogue, &c.

Nigelle, Nigella.

Nightblindness, Hemeralopia.

Night Eyes, Crusta genu equinæ—n. Mare, Incubus.

Nightshade, American, Phytolacca decandra—n. Bittersweet, Solanum dulcamara—n. Common, Solanum—n. Deadly, Atropa belladonna—n. Enchanter's, Circea Lutea—n. Garden, Solanum—n. Palestine, Solanum sanctum—n. Red, Phytolacca decandra—n. Stinking, Hyoscyamus niger—n. Vine, Solanum dulcamara—n. Woody, Solanum dulcamara.

Nightsoil Fe'ver, Typhoid fever.

Night terrors. An affection of childhood, in which the child awakes, screaming in a great fright, as if it had dreamt of some impending danger. It is a kind of nightmare.

Nigre'do à So'le, ('blackness from the sun,') Ephelides.

Ni'grism, Nigrismus, Melanopathia.

Nigris'mus, Ni'grism, Pigment accumulation, the reverse of Albinismus. See Melanopathy.

Ni'grita, Negro.

Nigrit'ies, ('blackness,') Melanopathy—n. Cutis, see Melanopathy—n. Ossium, Caries.

Ni'gritism, Melanopathia.

Nigritu'do, gen. Nigritu'dinis, 'blackness,' Melanosis—n. Pulmonum, Melanosis pulmonum.

Nigromanti'a, (niger, 'black,' and magia, 'divination,') Necromancy.

Ni'gror, ('blackness,') Melasma.

Ni'gram Oc'uli, ('black of the eye,') Pupil.

Nigua, Chique.

Nihil Al'bum, Zinci oxidum—n. Griseum, Zinci oxidum.

Nihilis'mus, (from nihil, 'nothing,') see Expectation.

Nili'acum, (from Nilus, 'the Nile,') Mel.

Ni'ma Quassioi'des, Sina'ba quassioïdes, a native of Nepal and the Himalaya mountains, is as bitter as quassia, and is used like it.

Nind'sin, Sium ninsi.

Nine'bark, Spiræa opulifolia.

Nine'day Fits, Trismus nascentium.

Nin'si, Sium ninsi.

Nin'sing, Panax quinquefolium.

Nin'zin, Sium ninsi.

Niphablep'sia, (νεφα, 'snow,' and ablepsia, 'blindness,') Snowblindness.

Nip'ple, (Sax. nýpele,) The Teat, Tit, Tete, Dug, Pap, (Old Eng.) Neble, Tit'ty; Acromas'tium, U'ber, Staph'yliis, Staphyl'ium, Bubo'na, Mammill'a, Mammell'a, Papill'a, P. mam'mæ, U'beris ap'ex, The'læ, Tit'thæ, Tit'thos, Tit'thion, Tit'this, (F.) Mamelon, Bout ou Bouton de sein. The conical tubercle, situate at the centre of the breast. Towards the central part of each breast the skin changes color, and assumes a rosy tint in young females, or a reddish-brown in those who have suckled several children. The circle is called the Are'ola or Aure'ola of the nipple. The nipple is capable of erection on being excited.

NIP'PLE, ARTIFIC'IAL, Bout de sein.

Nip'plewort, Lapsana.

Nirles, Herpes phlyctænodes.

Nirmallees, Strychnos potatorum.

Nirmillies, Strychnos potatorum.

Ni'sus, gen. Ni'sûs, Nix'us, Pei'ra, Strain'ing, (nitor, nisus, and nixus, 'I endeavor,') A voluntary retention of the breath, so as to force down the diaphragm; the abdominal muscles being at the same time contracted forcibly. In this manner the contents of the abdomen are compressed; and the evacuation of the feces, urine, &c., is effected.

Ni'sus, Effort—n. Formativus, Plastic force.

Ni'sus PARTURIEN'TIUM. The efforts or forcing during parturition.

Nit, see Nits.

Nited'ula, (niteo, 'I shine,') Cicindela.

Ni'ton, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These springs in the Isle of Wight contain iron, and sulphate of alumina and potassa.

Ni'tras, gen. Nitra'tis, (from nitre,) Nitrate—n. Hydrargyricus, see Hydrargyri nitras—n. Hydrargyrosus, Hydrargyri nitras—n. Kalicus, Potassæ nitras—n. Lixiviæ, Potassæ nitras—n. Natricum, Soda, nitrate of—n. Plumbicus, Plumbi nitras—n. Potassæ cum sulphure fusus, Potassæ nitras fusus sulphatis paucillo mixtus—n. Subbismuthicum, Bismuth, sub-nitrate of.

Ni'trate, Ni'tras, Azo'tas, A'zotate. A salt, formed of a base and nitric acid. Several nitrates are employed in medicine.

Nitrate Acide de Mercure, see Hydrargyri nitras—n. d'Ammoniaque, Ammoniac nitras—n. d'Argent, Argenti nitras—n. d'Argent fondu, Argenti nitras fusus—n. Mercureux ou de Mercure, Hydrargyri nitras.

Ni'tre, Potassæ nitras—n. Cubic, Soda, nitrate of—n. Sweet spirits of, Spiritus atheris nitric.

Nitré, Ni'tred. A term applied to any substance,—to paper for example, (F.) Papier nitré, impregnated with nitre for the purpose of fumigation, as in asthma.

Ni'tric, Ni'tricus, (F.) Nitrique, (from nitrum, 'nitre,') Appertaining or relating to nitre.

Ni'tric Ac'id, Ac'idum ni'tricum seu azo'ticum seu sept'icum seu ni'tri, Aqua for'tis, Ni'trous ac'id, Spir'itus ni'tri du'plex seu ni'tri fu'mans seu ni'tri Glauberi seu ni'tri ac'idus, Azo'tic acid, Dephlogis'ticated nitrous acid, Oxysepton'ic acid, (F.) Acide nitrique ou azotique. Nitric acid is obtained from nitre—Ni'trate of potas'sa. Its odor is suffocating; taste very acid and caustic. It is corrosive, liquid, colorless, and transparent. S. g. 1.42, Ph. U. S., 1873.

Strong nitric acid is rarely used except as an application to foul, indolent ulcers, or to warts. When given internally, it is in the form of the Ac'idum ni'tricum dilu'tum, Spir'itus ni'tri sim'plex seu ni'tri vulga'ris—Diluted nitric acid, which, in the Pharmacopœia of the United States (1873), consists of nitric acid, three Troy ounces, water, a pint. Its s. g. is 1.068. Diluted largely with water, it is used, as a drink, in fevers of the typhoid kind; in chronic affections of the liver, syphilis, &c.; but in the latter affections, it is not to be depended upon.

The French Codex (1866) has a formula for Acide nitrique alcoolisé, Espirit de Nitre dulcifié, made by the action of nitric acid on alcohol.

Nitroben'zole, see Oleum amygdalæ amaræ.

Ni'trogen, (nitre, and γεννω, 'I generate,') Azote.

Ni'trogen, GAS'Eous Ox'IDE of, Ni'trous ox'ide, Protox'ide of nitrogen or of azote, Par'adise, Intox'icating or Laugh'ing gas, Dephlogis'ticated nitrous gas, Gas azo'ticum oxygenatum. This gas, when respired, at first produces singular effects: great mental and corporeal excitement; and, generally, so much exhilaration as to render the appellation "laughing gas" by no means inappropriate. It is now very frequently resorted to as a safe and reliable anæsthetic in dental and surgical operations, but is inconvenient, and its action is brief and transient. It is not likely, therefore, to supersede the use of ether or chloroform in important or prolonged operations. Water impregnated with this gas—Ni'trous Ox'ide Wa'ter—has been given internally in cases of torpor, debility, &c., but its therapeutic value is not established.

Ni'trogen, PROTOX'IDE of, Nitrogen, gaseous oxide of.

Nitrogène, Azote.

Nitrogen'ium, Azote.

Ni'trogenized, A'zoted, A'zotized, (F.) Azoté. Containing nitrogen or azote;—as a nitrogenized, azoted, or azotized aliment, animal food, for example,—in contradistinction to the non-nitrogenized, non-azoted, or non-azotized, (F.) Nonazotés, Anazotiques, or those that do not contain nitrogen;—saccharine and oleaginous aliments for example.

Nitroglyo'erin, Glonoin.

Nitromuriat'ic Ac'id, Ac'idum nitromuriaticum seu muriaticum nitro'soëxygena'tum, seu nitrohydrochlor'icum, Mens'trium au'ri, Nitrohydrochlor'ic or Hydrochloroni'tric acid, Aqua re'gia seu styg'ia seu re'gis seu rega'lis, Chrysa'lea, (F.) Eau régale. A mixture of the nitric and muriatic acids has been used in diseases of the liver internally, and in the form of a bath for the feet and legs, made sharply acidulous. It has, also, been employed, and with more uniform results, in cutaneous affections. Whatever advantages it may possess in internal diseases—and these advantages are doubtful—they are probably dependent upon the chlorine formed by the mixture, or upon the properties possessed by the mineral acids in general. See Chlorine.—Acidum nitromuriaticum of the Pharmacopœia of the United States (1873) is formed by mixing three troy ounces of nitric acid with five of muriatic acid.

Ac'idum Nitromuriat'icum dilu'tum (Ph. U. S., 1873), A. Nitrohydrochlor'icum dilu'tum, Dilu'ted Nitromuriatic Acid, is made of nitric acid, 3jss., muriatic acid, 3ijss., distilled water, Oj.

Nitrophe'nol. Three of these substances have been obtained by the action of nitric acid on carbolic acid. Carbazotic acid—nitrophenis'ic ac'id—is the only one having any therapeutic value.

Nitropic'ric Ac'id, Carbazotic acid.

Nitroprus'sic Ac'id. This acid, the nitroprusside of hydrogen, is formed by the action of nitric acid on ferrocyanide of potassium. Its therapeutic value is undetermined.

Nitroprus'sides. A class of salts formed by the action of nitric acid upon ferrocyanides and ferriocyanides.

Ni'trous Ox'ide, Nitrogen, gaseous oxide of—n. Powder, see Potassæ nitras.

Ni'trum, (νίτρον), Natron, Potassæ nitras—n. Antiquorum, Soda—n. Cubicum, Soda, nitrate of—n. Faecitium, Borax—n. Flammans, Ammonia nitras—n. Lunare, Argenti nitras—n. Prismaticum, Potassæ nitras—n. Rhomboidale, Soda, nitrate of—n. Saturninum, Plumbi nitras—n. Tabulatum, Potassæ nitras fusus sulphatis paucillo mixtus—n. Vitriolatum, Potassæ sulphas—n. Vitriolatum Schroederi, Potassæ sulphas.

Nits, ([G.] Nisse, Nissen,) see Pediculus.

Nix, gen. Ni'vis, Snow—n. Fumans, Calx viva—n. Zinci, Zinci oxidum.

Nix'us, gen. Nix'us, Nisus—n. Parturientium, Nisus parturientium.

No'ah's Ark, Cypripedium luteum.

No'ble, No'bilis. Principal, Essential.

No'BLE PARTS, Par'tes no'biles seu essentia'les. Some anatomists have given this name to parts without which life cannot exist; such as the heart, liver, lungs, brain, &c. The organs of generation have, likewise, been so called.

No'car, (νύκας), Tor'por Soporif'icus. Lethargic torpor.

Noctambula'tio, (nox, noctis, 'night,' and ambulare, ambulatum, 'to walk,') Somnambulism.

Noctambulis'mus, Somnambulism.

Noctam'bulus, Somnambulist.

Noctisurg'ium, (nox, noctis, 'night,' and surgere, 'to arise,') Somnambulism.

Noctui'ni Oo'uli, 'owl's eyes,' (from noctua, 'an owl,') Gray or blue eyes.

Noctur'na Bella, 'nocturnal wars,' Coitus.

Noctur'nal, Noctur'nus, Nycter'inus, (from nox, gen. noctis, 'night,') Relating to night, as Feb'ris noctur'na seu nycter'ina. A fever occurring in the night.

Nod'ding, Annuities, Nutatio.

Nod'dlepo'x, Syphilomania.

Node, No'dus, Emphy'ma exosto'sis perios'tea, Gumma'ta, (F.) Nodosité, Nœud. A hard concretion or incrustation, which forms around joints attacked with rheumatism or gout. Some include, under this name, exostoses, articular calculi, ganglions, and even the chronic swellings of the joints known under the name of white swellings. The oblong swellings met with in the course of the bones in syphilis—syphilit'ic nodes—are due to periostitis, and are either hard and indolent, or fluctuating from the deposit of gummatous material.

No'des, (νόδους, from νη, priv., and οδους, 'a tooth,') Edentulus.

No'di Digito'rum Ma'nūs, Phalanges of the fingers—n. Hæmorrhoidales, see Hæmorrhoids—n. Lactea, Infarctus mammae lacteus—n. Nervorum, Ganglions, nervous.

No'doi, (νόδοι, sing. νόδος, from νη, priv., and οδους, 'a tooth,') Neffrendes.

Nodo'sis, (from nodus, and osis.) The formation or existence of nodes.

Nodosité, Node.

Nod'ule, Nodulus—n. Enamel, see Tooth.

Nod'uli Aran'tii, (pl. of nodulus), Noduli Morgagn'ii, Cor'pora Aran'tii. The small semilunar bodies situate on the periphery of the semilunar valves of the aorta and pulmonary artery for the better occlusion of the artery.

NOD'ULI MORGAGN'II, Noduli Aran'tii—n. Nervorum, Ganglions, nervous.

Nod'ulus, (dim. of nodus, 'a knot,') Nodule. A small knot. A small prominence or lobule in the portion of the cerebellum which forms the posterior boundary of the fourth ventricle. The nodulus is on the median line, and before the uvula. See Vermiform process, inferior.

NOD'ULUS UTERI'NUS, Pessary.

No'dum Religa'rè, ('to fasten a knot or tie,') (F.) Nouer l'Aiguillette. To prevent by enchantment the venereal act; or to render impotent!

No'dus, ('a knot or tie,') Articulation, Edentulus, Encystis, Hamma—n. Cerebri, Pons Varolii—n. Chirurgicus, Knot, surgeon's—n. Encephali seu Encephalicus, Nœud de l'Encéphale, Pons Varolii—n. Gutturis, Pomum Adami—n. Hystericus, Angone—n. Vitæ, Centrum vitale.

Noë'ma, (νοήμα, from νοέω, 'I think,') Thought.

Noë'sis, (νοήσις), see Intellect.

Noë'matach'ograph, (νόημα, ταχὺς, 'quick,' and γραφω, 'I write,') An instrument devised by Donders to determine the duration of more or less complex operations of the mind. It consists of a cylinder on which the time is registered by a vibrating tuning fork.

Noë'matachom'eter, Noematachom'etrum, (νόημα, ταχὺς, 'quick,' and μετρον, 'measure,') An instrument, devised by Donders to define the shortest possible time for a simple sensation or idea to be recorded.

Nœud, ('a knot,') Node—n. du Chirurgien, Knot, surgeon's—n. d'Emballeur, Knot, packer's. Nœud de l'Encéphale (F.), Nodus Encephali. M. Cruveilhier, under this name, includes the pons Varolii, peduncles of the cerebrum and cerebellum, and the tubercula quadrigemina.

Nœud Vital, ('vital knot,') Centrum vitale.

Nœuds, (pl. of nœud), Calculi, arthritic.

Noir ([L.] niger, 'black,') Animal, ('animal black,') Carbo animalis—n. d'Os, Carbo animalis.

Noisetier, Corylus avellana.

Noisette, (dim. of Noix), Corylus avellana (nut).

Noix, 'a walnut,' (from nux, gen. nucis, 'a nut,') Juglans regia (nux)—n. Américaine, Jatropha curcas—n. des Barbades, Jatropha curcas—n. Cathartique, Jatropha curcas—n. d'Eau, Trapa natans—n. de Galle, see Quercus infectoria—n. d'Igasur, Ignatia amara—n. de Serpent, see Thevetia Ahouai—n. Vomique, see Strychnos nux vomica.

No'li me Tan'gere, 'do not touch me,' Lupus; see Chancreux (Bouton).

No'ma, (νομή, from νέμω, 'I corrode,') Cancer aquaticus—n. Pudendorum, Colpocace infantilis.

No'mad, No'made, No'mas, (νομάς, gen. νομάδος, from νομή, 'pasturage,') An epithet given to people who have no fixed habitation, and who travel, with their flocks, from country to country, for pasturage. Such are the Tartars. By analogy, the word Nomad'ic has been applied to a spreading ulcer.

Nombril, Umbilicus—n. de Vénus, Cotyledon umbilicus.

No'mé, (νομή,) Cancer aquaticus, Phagedenic ulcer.

No'menclature, Nomenclat'io, Nomenclatu'ra, Onomatolog'ia, Onomatocle'sis, Termonol'ogy, Terminol'ogy, Glossol'ogy, Orismol'ogy, (νόμα, 'name,' and καλέω, 'I call,') A collection of terms or words peculiar to a science or art. In all sciences, nomenclature is an object of importance; and each term should convey to the student a definite meaning. The Lavoisierian nomenclature was a valuable gift to chemistry; and anatomy has derived advantage from the labors of Barclay, Dumas, and Chaussier, who have given names to parts indicative of their situation. See Musele. The nomenclature of pathology has required the greatest attention; and although repeated attempts have been made to improve it, the barbarous terms that disgrace it are still frequently adopted. It consists of Hebrew and Arabic terms; Greek and Latin, French, Italian, Spanish, German, English, and even Indian, African, and Mexican; often barbarously and illegitimately compounded. A want of principle in forming the technical terms of medicine is everywhere observable. They have been formed for example,—1. From color; as Melæna, Melas, Atrabilis, Leuce, Alphos, Chlorosis, Rubeola, Scarlatina, Purpura, &c. 2. From duration; as ephemeral, quotidian, tertian, and quartan, continued, and intermittent, &c. 3. From Birds, Beasts, Fishes, Insects, and Plants; as Rabies canina, Cynanche, Boulimia, Pica, Hippanthropia, Elephantiasis, Urticaria, Lichen, Ichthyosis, &c. 4. From Persons or Places; as Morbus Herculeus, Facies Hippocratica, Lepra Arabum, Plica Polonica, Sudor Anglicus, Morbus Gullicus, Ignis Sancti Antonii, Chorea Sancti Viti, &c. The Royal College of Physicians of England has recently recommended a system of nomenclature of diseases, which has awakened fresh interest in the subject. See Nosology.

No'mus, (νομός, from νέμω, 'I corrode,') Cancer aquaticus.

Nona'zoted, see Nitrogenized.

Non com'pos, Lunatic.

Non com'pos Men'tis, ('not possessing mind,') Lunatic.

Nonnat'urals, Nonnatura'lia. Under this term the ancient physicians comprehended air, meat, and drink, sleep and watching, motion and rest, the retentions and excretions, and the affections of the mind. They were so called, because they affect man without entering into his composition, or constituting his nature; but yet are so necessary that he cannot live without them.

Nonni'trogenized, see Nitrogenized.

Nonplacen'tal, see Placental.

Non'sane, Insane.

Nonstri'ated Mus'cular Fi'bre, see Muscular fibre.

Nonviable (F.), (from non, and viable,) Applied to a new-born child not capable of continued existence. See Viable.

No'nus Hu'meri Placenti'ni, (nomus, 'the ninth,') Teres minor—n. Linguae musculus, Genioglossus—n. Vesalii, Peronæus tertius.

Noo'dles, see Turundæ Italicæ.

Noos, (νοός,) Intellect.

Norice, (F.) Nourrice, Nurse.

Nor'ma Vertica'lis, ('vertical rule,') see Normal.

Nor'mal, Norma'lis, (norma, 'a perpendicular, 'a rule,') According to rule; perpendicular.

The normal line, norma vertica'lis, of Blumenbach, is a vertical line let fall from the prominence of the frontal bone and shaving the superior maxillary, so as to mark the projection of the latter bone beyond the arch of the forehead.

Nor'ris's Drops, see Antimonium tartarizatum.

North Caroli'na, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The chief springs are the Warm Springs of Madison co., which are similar to the springs of Leuk in Switzerland. Temperature varies from 100° to 102° Fahr. They have not much mineral impregnation. They have the properties of the thermal waters in general, and have been recommended in rheumatism, gout, paralysis, dysmenorrhœa, &c.

Nor'ton's Drops, Liquor hydrargyri oxymuriatis.

Norwe'gian Itch, see Radzyge.

Nor'yss, (F.) Nourrice, Nurse.

Nosac'erus, (νοσάκερος,) Sickly.

Nose, Nasus—n. Bleed, Epistaxis—n. Bridge of, Bridge of nose.

NOSE, RUN'NING AT THE, Coryza.

Noseli'a, (νοσηλία,) Nosocom'e'sis, Nosocomi'a. Care of the sick.

Nose'ma, gen. Nose'matis, (νοσημα,) Disease.

Nosenceph'alus, (F.) Nosencephale, (nosos, and εγκεφαλος, 'brain,') A monster whose skull is open only on the frontal and parietal regions, the posterior fontanelle being distinctly present.

Nose'rus, (νοσηρος,) Insalubrious, Sick.

Noseu'ma, gen. Noseu'matis, (νοσημα,) Disease.

Nosochthonogra'phia, (nosos, χθων, 'the earth,' and γραφω, 'I describe,') Geography, medical.

Nosochthonolog'ia, (nosos, χθων, 'the earth,' and λογος, 'a description,') Geography, medical.

Nosocom'e'sis, (νοσοκομ'σις, from nosos, and κομω, 'I care for,') Noselia.

Nosocomi'a, Noselia.

Nosoco'mial, Nosocomia'lis, (from nosocomium,) Relating to an hospital,—as, 'nosocomial or hospital fever.'

NOSOCO'MIAL AT'MOSPHERE, see Hospitalism.

Nosocomi'um, (νοσοκομ'ιον,) Hospital—n. Psychiatricum, Morotrophium.

Nosoc'omus, (νοσοκομος,) Infirmier.

Nosocrat'ic, (nosos, and κρατος, 'power,') Specific.

Nosocerin'ies, (nosos, and κρνω, 'I separate,') Diacrisis.

Noso'des, (νοσώδης, from nosos, and odes,) Insalubrious, Sick, Sickly.

Nosodochi'um, (νοσώδοχιον, from nosos, and δέχεμαι, 'I receive,') Hospital.

Nosogen'esis, (nosos, and γενε'σις, 'generation,') Pathogeny.

Nosogen'ia, (nosos, and γενν'ω, 'I engender,') Pathogeny.

Nosog'eny, Pathogeny.

Nosogeog'raphy, Geography, medical.

Nosog'raphy, Nosograph'ia, (F.) Nosographie, (nosos, and γραφω, 'I describe,') A description of diseases.

Nosohæ'mia, (nosos, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Hæmatonosis.

Nosohémie, Hæmatonosis.

Nosol'ogism, Nosologis'mus. The abuse of nosological arrangements in pathology.

Nosol'ogy, Nosolog'ia, (F.) Nosologie, (nosos, and λογος, 'a discourse,') A name given to that part of medicine whose object is the classification of diseases. The most celebrated nosological systems have been those of Sauvages (1763), Linnæus (1763), Vogel (1764), Sagar (1776), Macbride (1772), Cullen (1772), Darwin (1796), Selle, Crichton (1804), Parr (1809), Swediaur (1812), Pinel (1813), Young (1813), Good (1817), Hosack (1818), &c. Besides these general nosographies, others have been published on Surgery exclusively, none of which are particularly worthy of enumeration among nosological systems. Nosological arrangements have, also, been formed of single families or groups of diseases, and a more recent one, which has been much used, is that of Dr. William Farr. It is the one adopted in the reports of the Registrar General of England. See Nomenclature. Plenck, of Baden, is the author of two different treatises of this kind; the one, a methodical arrangement of the diseases of the eyes, and the other, of cutaneous diseases. Dr. Willan published an arrangement of cutaneous diseases, which was completed by Dr. Bateman, and adopted into the Nosology of Dr. Hosack. Mr. Abernethy, also, published a methodical classification of tumors, and many other partial nosological classifications might be enumerated. Also, Pathology.

Nosonomy, Nosonomia, (nosos, and νομία, 'name.') The nomenclature of diseases.

Nosophyta, (nosos, and φυτόν, 'a plant.') Diseases supposed to be produced by or to consist in the development of parasitic plants—as porrigio, mentagra, &c.

Nosophytodermata, (from nosophyta, and derma, 'skin.') Nosophyta affecting the skin. Mr. Erasmus Wilson reckons five of these—Favus, Trichosis, Mentagra, Alopecia areata, and Chloasma.

Nosopeus, Nosopoiēticus, (F.) Nosopoiétique, (nosos, and ποιέω, 'I make.') That which causes disease.

Nosorganies, (nosos, and ὄργανον, 'an organ,') Organic diseases.

No'sos, (νοσός,) Disease.

Nosotaxy, Nosotaxia, (nosos, and τάξις, 'arrangement.') The distribution and classification of diseases.

Nosothoria, (nosos, and θεωρία, 'doctrine.') The doctrine or theory of disease.

Nostal'gia, (νόστος, 'a journey home,' and αλγος, 'pain,') Nostoma'nia, Nostrassia, Apodemi'gia, Pathopatridal'gia, Pothopatridal'gia, Philopatridal'gia, Philopatridoma'nia, Ademon'ia, Ademosynē, Home'sickness, (F.) Nostalgie, Maladie du pays. An affection produced by the desire of returning to one's country. It is commonly attended by slow wasting, and sometimes by hectic, which may speedily induce death. M. Pinel properly regards it as a variety of melancholy.

Nostoma'nia, (νόστος, 'a journey home,' and μανία,) Nostalgia.

Nostrassia, (nostras, 'of our country,') Nostalgia.

Nos'trils, ([Sax.] næðýpl, 'nosehole,') Nares.

Nos'trum, (nostr, 'our own,') Arcanum.

Nos'trum, Chit'tick's. An empirical remedy for stone in the bladder, said to be a solution of alkali in veal-broth.

No'ta Mater'na, ('mother's mark,') Nævus—n. Primitiva, Groove, primitive.

No'tæ Infan'tum, ('infants' marks,') Nævi.

No'tal, (from notus,) Dorsal.

Notal'gia, Notial'gia, (Nostalgia, improperly, of Köchlin and others,) (νωτος, 'back,' and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the back. Spinal irritation.

Notanencephalia, (νωτος, and anencephalia, see Notencephalus.)

Notch, (Teut. Noche, Ital. Nocchia,) Emarginat'io, Emarginat'ra, (F.) Échancrure. A depression or indentation of different shape and size, observed on the circumference or edges of certain bones, as the sacro-sciatic, spheno-palatine, and pterygoid notches. The notches in soft parts are generally called Fissures.

Notch, Aor'tic. An undulation, as indicated by the sphygmograph, synchronous with the reflux of blood closing the aortic valves.

Notch of the Con'cha, Incisura tragica—n. Cotyloid, see Cotyloid cavity.

Notch, Ethmoid'al, (F.) Échancrure ethmoïdale, is situate on the frontal bone, and joins the ethmoid.

Notch, Parot'id, (F.) Échancrure parotidienne, is the triangular space comprised between the parotid edge of the inferior maxillary bone and the mastoid process; so called, because it lodges the parotid gland.

Notch, Scap'ular, Incisura scapularis, Lunula scap'ula, (F.) Échancrure scapulaire. The notch on the superior edge or costa of the scapula, which is converted into a foramen by means of a ligament, and gives passage to the suprascapular nerve.

Notch, Semilu'nar of the Ster'num, Fourchette—n. Supraorbital, Supraorbital foramen.

Notches, Ischiat'ic, (F.) Échancrures Ischiatiques, are two in number—the greater and the less. The former is large, situate at the inferior part of the pelvis, and formed by the sacrum and ilium. It gives passage to the sciatic nerve, pyramidalis muscle, and to the superior gluteal vessels and nerves. The latter is much smaller than the other, from which it is separated by the sciatic spine. It gives passage to the tendon of the obturator internus, and to the internal pudic vessels and nerves.

Notencepha'lia, see Notencephalus.

Notenceph'alus, (νωτος, 'the back,' and εγκεφαλος, 'the brain,') A monster whose head, with the brain, is on the back. The condition is termed Notencepha'lia and Notanencepha'lia.

Notheus'is, (νοθευσις,) Degeneration.

Nothi'a, (νοθεία,) Degeneration.

No'throtes, (νωθροτης,) Torpor.

No'thus, (νοθος,) False.

Notiæ'us, (νωτιαίος,) Dorsal—n. Myelus, Medulla spinalis.

Notial'gia, Notalgia.

No'tochord, (notus, and χορδή, 'a string,') Chorda dorsalis.

Notoglos'sus, (νωτος, 'a ridge,' and γλωσσα, 'the tongue,') Longitudinal muscular fibres on the upper surface of the tongue, immediately beneath the mucous membrane, which have been called by some writers the lingualis superficialis.

Notom'dle, (notus, and μελος, 'unprofitable,') A monster with superfluous flesh on the back.

Notomyeli'tis, gen. Notomyeli'tidis, (notos, and myelitis,) Myelitis.

Notomy'elus, (notos, and μυελος, 'marrow,') Medulla spinalis.

No'tus, (νωτος,) Dorsum, Vertebral column.

Nouë (Bandage) (F.), 'knotted,' (from nœud, [L.] nodus, 'a knot,') A bandage which has a considerable number of knots placed over each other. It is made with a roller, 6 or 7 ells long, rolled into two balls, and is used to compress the parotid region, after the extirpation of the parotid gland.

Also, an epithet applied to children in whom the disease of rickets has swollen the articulations.

It is, likewise, applied to the gout when it has caused nodes on the joints.

Nouer V'Aiguillette, ('to knot the aiguillette,') Nodum religare.

Nouet (F.), Nod'ulus. A bag filled with medicinal substances, infused in a liquid to communicate their properties to it.

Nouffer's, Mad'ame, Rem'edy, Polypodium filix mas.

Nourrice, Nurse.

Nourricier, Nutritious.

Nourrisson, Nursling.

Nourriture, Aliment.

Nous, (vous,) Intellect.

Nouure, (from nouer, 'to knot,') Rachitis.

Nouveau-né (F.), 'newborn,' Neonatus, Nuperimè natus, Neogenes, Neogiles, Neogilus, Neogionus, Neogonus, Infans recens natus. That which has been just born. A newborn infant.

Novacula, Razor.

Now ([Sc.], from [Sax.] cnolle, 'the top of a hill,') Vertex.

Nox'ious, (from nocere, 'to injure,') Deleterious.

Noyau, (from noix, 'a nut,') see Cytoblast — n. Cancéreux, see Cancer cell.

Noyau Central des Pédoncules du Cervelet, Corpus dentatum.

Noyer, (from noix, 'a nut, a walnut,') Juglans regia — n. de Ceylon, Adhatoda.

Noy'ris, Nurse.

Nuage, (from [L.] nubes, 'a cloud,') Nebula — n. de la Cornée, Caligo.

Nubec'ula, (dim. of nubes,) Enæorema, Nebula.

Nu'bes, ('a cloud,') Enæorema, Nebula.

Nu'bile, Nu'bilis, Mar'riageable, Mar'riable, 'fit to marry.' Generally, the period of puberty is considered to be the age at which both sexes are nubile. They are truly nubile, however, only when they are fitted to procreate healthy and vigorous children, and are competent to discharge their duties as parents. Menstruation alone does not indicate nubility, which is the complement of puberty. See Puberty.

Nubil'ity, Nubil'itas, (F.) Nubilité. The state of being nubile or marriageable.

Nubilo'sus, (nubes, 'a cloud,') Nepheloid.

Nu'ces (pl. of nux, 'a nut') Aquat'icæ, ('water nuts,') see Trapa natans — n. Quercus, see Quercus alba.

Nu'cha, In'ium, Nucha cap'itis, (F.) Nuque. The nuche, hinder part or nape of the neck, (Prov.) Scruff, Niddick. The part where the spinal marrow begins.

Ligamentum Nu'chæ. A strong ligament from the neck, proceeding from one spinous process to another, and inserted into the occipital bone. It is very strong in quadrupeds. It is called in them Parypeaxy, Pazwax, Packwax, formerly, Faxwax, and Taxwax.

Nu'chal, Nucha'lis, (from nucha,) Relating or appertaining to the nucha or nape of the neck.

Nu'chal Re'gion, Re'gio nu'chæ seu nucha'lis seu occipitalis infe'rior. The region of the nucha or nape of the neck.

Nucis'ta, (from nux, gen. nucis, 'a nut,') see Myristica moschata.

Nuck, Canal' of, Canal of Nuck.

Nu'clear Fis'sion. Increase of nuclei by fission or division of the original solitary nucleus.

Nu'cleated, Nuclea'tus, (F.) Nucléé, (nucleus, 'a kernel,') Having a nucleus or central particle. Applied to the elementary cells of organized tissues; the vital properties of which are seated in the nucleus. See Cytoblast.

Nu'cleated Cell, see Cytoblast.

Nu'clei (pl. of, Nu'cleus) Cem'bræ, see Pinus cembra.

Nu'clei Os'sei, Ossification, points of — n. Pinæ, see Pinus pinea.

Nu'clein, see Globules of the blood.

Nucléole, see Cytoblast.

Nucléolule, see Cytoblast.

Nucléolus, (dim. of nucleus,) see Cytoblast.

Nu'cleus, 'a kernel,' see Cytoblast — n. Blastodermatis. Tache embryonnaire — n. Caudatus, Corpus striatum — n. Centralis, Corpus dentatum — n. Cicatriculæ, Tache embryonnaire — n. Cochleæ, Modiolus — n. Dentatus, Corpus dentatum — n. Dentis, Dental pulp — n. Encased, Cytoblast — n. Fimbriatus, Corpus dentatum — n. Furunculi, see Furunculus — n. Germinal, see Molecule — n. Germinativus, see Molecule.

Nu'cleus Lenticula'ris. The gray centre of the extraventricular portion of the corpus striatum. The two inner divisions, which are rich in fibres, are called the glo'bus pal'lidus.

Nu'cleus Oli'væ, Corpus dentatum — n. Ossificationis, Ossification, point of — n. Rhomboidalis, see Corpus dentatum — n. Testiculi, see Corpus Highmori.

Nu'cleus TENIEFOR'mis, (tauia, 'a ribbon, and forma, 'shape,') 'ribbon-shaped,') Claus'trum. A thin lamelliform deposit of gray matter between the nucleus lenticularis and the island of Reil.

Nu'cula Terres'tris, (dim. of nux, gen. nucis, 'a nut,') Bunium bulbocastanum.

Nuhn, Glands of. Two glands at the apex of the tongue, beneath the mucous membrane and the longitudinal muscular fibres formed by the styloglossus and longitudinalis inferior muscles.

Nuke, Nucha.

Nulekneed, Entogonyancon.

Nullip'arous, Nullip'ara, (F.) Nullipare, (nulus, 'none, and parire, 'to bring forth,') One that has not brought forth any young.

Numer'ical Meth'od, see Method, numerical.

Num'mular, Nummula'ris, Num'mulated, (from nummus, 'money,') Relating to money. An epithet applied to the sputa in phthisis, when they flatten at the bottom of the vessel, like a piece of money; and to the mode of aggregation of the red corpuscles of the blood — 'nummular rolls.'

Nummula'ria, Lysimachia nummularia.

Num'post, Abscess.

Nu'phar Ad'vena (Arab.), Nymphæ'a ad'vena, Yellow Pondlily, Spatterdock. Order, Nymphaeaceæ; indigenous in Canada and the United States. The root is a popular tonic, and the fresh root bruised is applied as a cataplasm.

Nu'PHAR LU'TEUM, Nymphæa lutea.

Nuque, Nucha.

Nur'ice, Nurse.

Nurse, (Sax. nopice,) Nu'trix, (from nutrio,) Tithe'né, Lac'tans, Lac'ticans, Nu'triens, Thelast'ria, Mam'ma, (L.) Nutrice, (F.) Nourice, (Sc.) Noyris, Noryss, Nurice, Norice. One who suckles her own child or another's. One that has the care of a sick person, Care'taker, (F.) Garde-malade. — A dry nurse is one who gives every care to a child, but does not suckle it; a monthly nurse one who attends a woman during the month of her parturient state; a wet nurse, (Sc.) Milkwoman, a female who suckles the child of another. To 'nurse artificially' is to bring up a child by the hand.

Nurs'ling, (from nurse,) (F.) Nourisson. An infant nursed by its mother or by another.

Nus, (vous,) Intellect.

Nu'sus, (vous,) Disease.

NUT TREE, MAL'ABAR, Adhatoda.

NUT, Vom'ic, see Strychnos nux vomica — n. Zirbel, see Pinus picea.

Nuta'tion, Nuta'tio, (nutare, nutatum, 'to nod,') Nodding. Also, a constant oscillation of the head, by which it moves involuntarily in one or more directions.

Nuta'tor Cap'itis, ('nodder of the head,') Sternocleidomastoideus.

Nut'meg, (nux moschata,) see Myristica moschata — n. Butter, see Myristica — n. Flower, Nigella — n. Liver, Liver, nutmeg.

Nut'megs, Testes.

Nutrica'tio, (nutrio, 'I nourish,') Nutrition.

Nutrice (I.), Nurse.

Nutricier, Nutritious.

Nutric'ius, Nutritious.

Nu'triens, Aliment, Nurse.

Nutri'men, gen. Nutrimen'tis, Aliment.

Nu'triment, Aliment.

Nutrimen'tal, Nutrimen'talis, Alimen'tal, Alimen'tary, Alimenta'tis, (F.) Alimenteuz. Having the qualities of food or nutriment.

Nutrimen'tum, Aliment, Pabulum.

Nutritif, Nutritive.

Nutrit'ion, Nutrit'io, Nutrica'tio, Nutri'tus, Alitu'ra, Threp'sis, (nutrire, nutritum, 'to nourish,') Nutrition is that function by which the nutritive matter already elaborated by the various organic actions loses its own nature, and assumes that of the different living tissues—to repair their losses and maintain their strength. Sometimes the word is used in a more extended signification, to express the whole series of actions by which the two constant movements of composition and decomposition are accomplished, in organized bodies. Nutrition then would comprehend digestion, absorption, respiration, circulation, and assimilation; the latter being nutrit'ion, properly so called, and being effected in the intermediate system over the whole of the body,—the cells of the tissues attracting from the blood the elements necessary for their reparation.

NUTRIT'ION, ANOR'MAL. A term proposed as a substitute for inflammation.

NUTRIT'ION, FORCE OF, Plastic force.

NUTRIT'ION TREATMENT. A restorative treatment, adopted by Dr. J. Hughes Bennett, and others, in pneumonia, &c., consisting in judicious stimulation and nourishing diet.

Nutrit'ional, Nutrit'ionalis. Relating or appertaining to nutrition.

Nutrit'ious, Nutric'ius, Nu'tritive, Alib'ilis, Troph'imus, Tropho'des, (F.) Nourricier, Nutricier, Alibile. Having the quality of nourishing; as nutritious food, nutritious lymph, &c.

NUTRIT'IOUS OR NU'TRITIVE ARTERIES, (F.) Artères nutritives. Arterial branches which enter the foramina nutritia of long bones, and penetrate to the medullary membrane.

Nu'tritive, Nutritious, (F.) Nutritif. Also, relating to nutrition; hence the 'nutritive functions,' or those that are concerned in nutrition.

Nutri'tus, Aliment, Nutrition.

Nu'trix, gen. Nutri'cis, Mamma, Nurse.

Nuts, Wa'ter, Nelumbium luteum.

Nux (gen. Nucis, 'a nut') Aromat'ica, see Myristica moschata—n. Avellana, Corylus avellana (nut)—n. Barbadensis, Jatropha curcas—n. Becuiba, Ibicuiba—n. Cathartica Americana, Jatropha curcas—n. Gallæ, see Quercus cerris—n. Juglans, Juglans regia—n. Medica, Coco of the Maldives—n. Metella, Strychnos nux vomica—n. Methel, Datura stramonium—n. Moschata, see Myristica moschata—n. Myristica, see Myristica moschata—n. Pistacia, see Pistacia vera—n. Unguenteria, see Myristica moschata—n. Vomica, Strychnos nux vomica.

Nyc'talope, see Nyctalopia.

Nyctalo'pex, gen. Nyctalope'cis, (νυκταλωπης), see Nyctalopia.

Nyctalo'pia, (νυκταλωπια, from nycto, and οπτομαι, 'I see,') Parop'sis, Lucifuga, Nyctalopi'asis, Cecitas diurna, V'sus nocturnus, Oxyopia, Hemeralopia (moderns), Amblyopia meridiana, Hemeratophlo'is, Hemeratophlo'is, Photophob'ia, Dysopia lu'minis, V'sus a'crior, Nyc'talopy, Day-blindness, Diurnal amauro'sis, (F.) Vue nocturne, Aveuglement de Jour. The faculty of seeing during the night, with privation of the faculty during the day. It affects both eyes at once, when idiopathic. Its duration is uncertain, and treatment very obscure. It is, however, a disease of nervous irritability, and one of excitement of the visual nerve in particular. The indications of cure will consequently be—to allay direct irritation in every way; to excite counterirritation by blisters; and to gradually accustom the eye to the impression of light.

One laboring under this affection is called a Nyc'talope, Nyc'talops, Nyctalo'pex.

Nyctalopia has also been used for night blindness. See Hemeralopia.

Nyc'talops, gen. Nyctalo'pis, (νυκταλωψ), see Nyctalopia.

Nyc'talopy, Nyctalopia.

Nycteri'nus, (νυκτερινος), Nocturnal.

Nycthe'meron, see Dies.

Nycthe'merum, (nycto, and ημερα, 'day,') The space of 24 hours, or of a day and night. Certain complaints continue only so long.

Nyc'to, (from νυξ, gen. νυκτος, 'night,') in composition, night.

Nyctoba'dia, (nycto, and βαινω, 'I walk or mount,') Somnambulism.

Nyctob'asis, (nycto, and βασις, 'walking,') Somnambulism.

Nyctobate'sis, (nycto, and βαινω, 'I walk or mount,') Somnambulism.

Nyctoba'tia, Somnambulism.

Nyctotyphlo'sis, (nycto, and τυφλος, 'blind,') Hemeralopia.

Nyg'ma, gen. Nyg'matis, (νυγμα, 'a prick,' from νυσσιν, 'to pierce,') Wound, punctured.

Nygmaticum Emplas'trum, ('wound plaster,') Emplastrum resinae.

Nym'pha, (νυμφα), Clitoris, see Nymphæ.

Nym'phæ, (νυμφαι), Alæ minores seu inter'næ minores clitor'idis seu multi'ebres minores, Carunculae cuticula'res, Cristæ clitor'idis, Colliculi vaginal'is, Myrtolchi'la, Myrtolchei'lides, La'bia minora seu inter'na seu puden'di minora, (F.) Nymphes, Petites lèvres. Two membranous folds, which arise from the lateral parts of the prepuce of the clitoris, and descend on the inner surface of the labia majora; terminating, by becoming gradually thinner, about the middle of the circumference of the orifice of the vagina. They are formed each of two folds of the mucous membrane of the vulva; and contain, in their substance, a thin layer of spongy, erectile tissue. Their use seems to be,—not, as was once supposed, to direct the course of the urine, which notion gave rise to their name (after the fabulous Water nymphs), but to favor the elongation and dilatation of the vagina in pregnancy and labor.

The word νυμφη, Nym'phê, has also been used synonymously with clitoris by Oribasius, Aëtius, &c.

Nymphæ'a Ad'vena, (νυμφαια), Nuphar advena.

NYMPHÆ'A AL'BA, Leuconymphæ'a, Nen'uphar, Microleuconymphæ'a, Casta'lia speciosa, White Water lily, (Sc.) Cam'bieleaf, (F.) Nénuphar ou Nénufar blanc, Lis des étangs, Lune ou Volant d'Eau. Nat. Ord. Ranunculacææ. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Monogynia. Formerly employed as a demulcent, antaphrodisiac, emollient, and slightly anodyne remedy.

NYMPHÆ'A IN'DICA, N. nelumbo—n. Major lutea, N. lutea.

NYMPHÆ'A LU'TEA, N. major lu'tea seu umbilical'is, Nu'phar lu'teum, Nen'uphar lu'tea, Yellow Water lily, (Sc.) Cam'bieleaf, (F.) Nénuphar jaune. Used for the same purposes as Nymphæ'a alba. In Norfolk, England, the flowers are called Brandybottles.

NYMPHÆ'A NELUM'BO, N. In'dica, Fa'ba Ægypti'aca, Oy'anus Ægypti'acus, Pon'tic or Ægyptian Bean. The fruit of this is eaten raw in Egypt and some of the neighboring countries, and is considered to be tonic and astringent.

NYMPHÆ'A ODORA'TA, Sweet-scent'ed Wa'ter lily, Sweet water or White Pond or Toad Lily, Cow or Water Cab'bage, (F.) Nénuphar odorant. An indigenous plant, growing in most parts of the United States in fresh water ponds, and on the borders of streams, and having large white, beautiful, sweet-scented flowers. The root is very astringent and bitter. It is sometimes made into a poultice and used as a discutient.

NYMPHÆA UMBILICA'LIS, N. lutea.

Nym'phē, (νυμφη,) Clitoris, see Nymphæ.

Nymphes, Nymphæ.

Nymphi'tis, gen. Nymphi'tidis, (nympha, and itis.) Epiderm'itis, Inflammat'io Nym'phæ seu Clitor'idis. Inflammation of the nymphæ or clitoris.

Nymphoma'nia, (nympha, and mania, 'fury,') Fu'ror uteri'nus, Uteroma'nia, Lagne'sis fu'ror femini'nus, Metroma'nia, Ædæogarg'galus, Ædæogargaris'mus, Thelygon'ia, Erotoma'nia, Ædæoma'nia, Aidoioma'nia, Cytheroma'nia, Melancho'lia uteri'na, Sympto'ma turpitu'dinis, Androma'nia, Gynæcoma'nia, Machlos'ynē, Tenti'go vene'rea, Hysteroma'nia, Salac'itas vul'væ, Uteri pruri'tus, Brachu'na, Arsa'tum, Æstroma'nia, (F.) Nymphomanie, Fureur utérine. An irresistible and insatiable desire, in females, for the venereal act. It occurs in those particularly who possess a nervous temperament and vivid imagination, especially if excited by improper language, masturbation, &c. Its course, as described, is as follows: In the commencement, the sufferer is a prey to perpetual contests between feelings of modesty and impetuous desires. At an after period, she abandons herself to the latter, seeking no longer to restrain them. In the last stage the obscenity is disgusting; and the mental alienation, for such it is, becomes complete. The treatment consists in the use of the same means as are required in the satyriasis of man. When the mental alienation is complete, solitude is indispensable.

Nymphon'cus, (nympha, and ovkos, 'a tumor,') A morbid tumefaction of the nymphæ.

Nymphot'omy, Nymphotom'ia, Nympha'rum Sec'tio, (F.) Nymphotomie, (nympha, and τομή, 'section,') An operation, known and practised for a long time, which consists in the excision of the nymphæ. The operation is had recourse to, when they are attacked with scirrhus, cancer, fungus, or gangrene; or when they are so large as to interfere with walking or coition. Nymphotomy is the circumcision of the female. It is practised in some countries.

Some authors have used the term Nymphotomy for amputation of the clitoris.

Nystag'mus, (νυσταγμος, 'sleep,') A partial involuntary, rotatory, or oscillatory movement of the eyeball, (F.) Souris. Nystag'mus rotato'rius seu oscillato'rius is a spasmodic affection of the muscles of the eye, generally appearing in early infancy, sometimes in conjunction with congenital cataract. Also, Coma vigil.

Nyx'is, (νυκτείν, 'to pierce,') Puncture.

O.

Oak, Black, (Sax. ac, æc,) Quercus tinctoria—o. Common, Quercus robur—o. Jerusalem, Chenopodium botrys.

OAK'LUNGS, Lichen pulmonarius.

OAK OR'CHARD AC'ID SPRINGS. These springs—eight in number—are in Genesee county, New York, eight miles from Lockport. They are acid salines, consisting of free sulphuric acid, sulphate of protoxide of iron, and sulphates of alumina, magnesia, and lime. They are powerfully astringent and tonic.

OAK, Poi'son, Rhus toxicodendron—o. Red, Quercus rubra montana—o. Sea, Fucus vesiculosus—o. Spanish, Quercus rubra montana—o. White, Quercus alba.

Oak'um, see Linteum.

Oär'ic, Oär'icus, (F.) Oarique, (from oarion.) Relating or appertaining to the ovary.

Oäriocyte'sis, (oarion, and κύσις, 'pregnancy,') Pregnancy, ovarian.

Oä'rian, (ωαριον, from ωον, ovum, 'an egg,') Ovary.

Oäri'on'cus, Oäriophy'ma, Ova'rium tu'midum, Tu'mor Ova'rii, (oarion, and ovkos, 'swelling,') Ovarian tumor.

Oäriopareo'tama, gen. Oärioparecte'matis, Oöphorauz'e, (oarion, and παρεκτείν, 'to extend,') Enlargement of the ovary.

Oäriop'athy, Oäriopath'i'a, Oöphoropath'i'a, (oarion, and πάθος, 'affection,') Disease of the ovary.

Oäriophy'ma, gen. Oäriophy'matis, (oarion, and μα, 'a swelling,') Oarioncus.

Oäriorrh'ex'is, (oarion, and ρῆξις, 'rupture,') Ruptu'ra Ova'rii. Rupture of the ovary.

Oärioscir'rhus, (oarion, and scirrhus.) Scirrhus of the ovary.

Oäriostere'sis, (oarion, and στερησις, 'privation,') Oariotomy.

Oäriot'omy, (oarion, and τομή, 'incision,') Ovariectomy.

Oäri'tis, gen. Oäri'tidis, Oöphori'tis, Oöri'tis, Inflammat'io Ova'rii, Ovari'tis, (F.) Inflammation de l'Ovaire, (oarion, and itis.) Inflammation of the ovary. When occurring in childbed, it is the Lochoöphoritis of some.

Oäriu'lē, (oarion, and ἐλη, 'cicatrix,') Corpus luteum.

Oä'rium, (ωαριον.) Ovary.

Oäri'y'drops, gen. Oäriydro'pis, (oarion, and δρόσις, 'dropsy,') Hydroarion.

Oärthroc'acē, (formed by contraction from omoärthrocace.) Said to be used by Rust to designate inflammation of the scapulohumeral articulation surfaces.

Oat'meal, see Avena.

Oats, (Sax. aren.) Avena—o. Water, Zizania aquatica.

Ob (L.), in composition, 'on, before, over, against, towards.' At times, it is only intensive; and, at others, it means inversely. Before c and f, it is often changed into oc, of; and before p always into op.

Obaudit'io, (ob, and audire, auditum, 'to hear,') Baryecolia.

Obaudi'tus, Baryecolia.

Obæca'tio, (ob, and cæcare, cæcatum, 'to blind,') Cæcitas.

Obdormit'io, (ob, and dormio, dormitum, 'I sleep,') The state of being asleep; also, of the limbs being asleep:—Stu'por ar'tuum.

Obduc'tio Lega'lis, Autopsia cadaverica legalis.

Obelæ'a Raph'ē, (οβελος, 'a spit or arrow,') Sagittal suture.

Obes'itas, ('fatness,') Polysarcia—o. Colli, Struma adiposa—o. Cordis, Steatosis cordis—o.

Nimia, Pimelosis — o. Viscerum, Physconia adiposa.

Obésité, Polysarcia.

Obes'ity, Polysarcia.

Obe'sus, ('fat,') Corpulent.

Obfusca'tio, (ob, and fuscare, fuscatus, 'to make dark,') Amaurosis.

Obi'tus, gen. Obi'tus, (ob, and ire, 'to go,') Death.

Objec'tive Cone. The cone of light proceeding from an object, the apex of which is on the object, and the base on the cornea.

OBJEC'TIVE SENSATIONS, see Sensation.

Obli'it'io, (ob, and linere, 'to besmear,') Inunction.

Oblique', Obliquus. Anything inclined or which deviates from the vertical line. Anatomists have given this name to certain muscles, which have an oblique direction as regards the plane that divides the body into two equal and symmetrical halves. These are:

OBLIQUE' MUS'LES OF THE ABDOMEN. They are two in number, and distinguished into: 1. Obliquus Exter'nus Abdom'inis seu descen'dens exter'nus seu descendens seu ma'ior, Grand or external oblique, (F.) Ilio-pubo-costo-abdominal, Costo-abdominal (Ch.), Oblique externe. One of the broadest muscles of the body. It is situate at the lateral and anterior part of the abdomen; and is flat and quadrilateral. It is attached, above, to the outer surface and lower edge of the last 7 or 8 ribs; below, to the anterior third of the external lip of the crista illi: before, it terminates at the linea alba by means of a broad and strong aponeurosis, which covers the rectus, and presents towards its inferior part two very solid fibrous fasciculi, which are inserted, — the one at the symphysis, the other at the spine of the pubis, — under the name of Pillars of the Abdominal Ring. These pillars leave between them an opening, which forms the inferior orifice of the inguinal canal. The obliquus externus abdominis depresses the ribs, and carries them backwards during a strong expiration. It impresses on the chest a movement of rotation, and bends the thorax upon the pelvis, and conversely. It contracts, also, the abdominal cavity. 2. Obliquus Inter'nus Abdominis seu ascen'dens seu mi'nor seu inter'nus seu ascendens internus, Mus'culus accl'ivis, Internal oblique, (F.) Ilio-lombo-costo-abdominal, Ilio-abdominal (Ch.), Muscle petit oblique ou oblique interne, is broad, especially before; thin, and irregularly quadrilateral, like the preceding, beneath which it is situate. It is attached, above, to the inferior edge of the cartilages of the 5th, 4th, 3d, and 2d false ribs; below, to the anterior two-thirds of the interstice of the crista illi, to the posterior part of the crural arch, and to the pubis; behind, to the spinous processes of the last two lumbar vertebrae, and to those of the first two portions of the sacrum; before, to the linea alba. Its upper fibres run obliquely upwards and forwards; the middle are horizontal; and the lower pass obliquely downwards and forwards.

These last, in the male, are dragged down through the inguinal ring, when the testicle descends, and form the two fasciculi of the cremaster.

The obliquus internus resembles the O. externus in function.

OBLIQUE' MUS'LES OF THE EYE, Amato'rii Circumagen'tes, Rotato'res Oc'uli, are two in number. They are distinguished into: 1. Obliquus Super'ior Oc'uli, Amato'rius mus'culus, Trochlea'ria, Trochlea'tor, Obliquus ma'ior, Circumductio'nis op'ifex, Longis'simus oc'uli, (F.) Optico-trochleiscleroticien, Grand trochleateur (Ch.), Grand oblique de l'œil, Oblique supérieur de l'œil, Amoureux (Muscle), is situate at the inner and upper part of the orbit. It is small, round, fusiform, and reflected upon itself in the middle of its course. Behind, it is attached to the inside of the foramen opticum; and when it arrives opposite the internal orbital process, it becomes a small, round tendon, which slides in a cartilaginous pulley fixed to the os frontis, and is reflected, at an acute angle, to proceed downwards and outwards, and to attach itself to the outer and back part of the globe of the eye. This muscle carries the globe of the eye forwards and inwards, making it experience a movement of rotation, which directs the pupil downwards and inwards. This is conceived to be an involuntary muscle as well as the next. In sleep, according to Sir C. Bell, when the power over the straight or voluntary muscles of the organ is nearly lost, the eye is given up to the oblique muscles, which lodge the transparent cornea under the upper eyelid. At the approach of death, the same thing is observable; hence, the turning up of the eye, at such time, is not an evidence of agony or suffering, but of insensibility. 2. Obliquus Inf'erior seu mi'nor oc'uli, (F.) Maxillo-scleroticien, Petit Trochleateur (Ch.), Petit oblique ou oblique inférieur de l'œil, is situate at the anterior and inferior part of the orbit. It is flat and attached to the inner and anterior part of the orbital surface of the superior maxillary bone, on the outside of the lachrymal gutter; from thence it passes outwards and backwards, and terminates by an aponeurosis, at the posterior and inner part of the globe of the eye. It carries the globe of the eye inwards and forwards; and directs the pupil upwards and outwards.

OBLIQUE' MUS'LES OF THE HEAD. These are two in number. 1. Obliquus superior seu mi'nor cap'itis, (F.) Trachélo-atloïdo-occipital, Atloïdo-sous-mastoidien (Ch.), Muscle oblique supérieur ou petit oblique de la tête. This muscle is situate at the sides of, and behind, the articulation of the head; it is flat, and attached, on the one hand, to the top of the transverse process of the atlas, and on the other terminates at the occipital bone, beneath the inferior curved line, and sometimes, also, at the mastoid region of the temporal bone. It extends the head, inclining it to one side. 2. Obliquus inferior cap'itis, Obliquus ma'ior, (F.) Spini-axoïdo-trachéli-atloïdien, Axoïdo-atloïdien (Ch.), Oblique inférieur ou grand oblique de la tête, is situate at the posterior part of the neck and head. It is round, fusiform, attached to the spinous processes of the axis, and proceeds to terminate behind and below the summit of the transverse process of the atlas. It impresses, on the first vertebra and the head, a movement of rotation, which turns the face to one side.

OBLIQUE' PROC'ESSES, see Vertebrae.

Oblique Externe, Obliquus externus abdominis — o. Grand, Obliquus externus abdominis — o. Grand de l'œil, Obliquus superior oculi — o. Grand de la tête, Obliquus inferior capitis — o. Inférieur de l'œil, Obliquus inferior colli — o. Inférieur de la tête, Obliquus inferior capitis — o. Interne, Obliquus internus abdominis — o. Petit, Obliquus internus abdominis — o. Petit de l'œil, Obliquus inferior oculi — o. Petit de la tête, Obliquus superior oculi — o. Supérieur de l'œil, Obliquus superior oculi — o. Supérieur de la tête, Obliquus superior capitis.

Obliquité de la Matrice, Retroversio uteri.

Obli'quus, (ob, and liquis, 'slanting,') Oblique — o. Ascendens, O. internus abdominis — o. Auris, Laxator tympani — o. Colli superior, see Longus colli — o. Descendens externus, see Oblique muscles of the abdomen — o. Externus abdominis, see Oblique muscles of the abdomen — o. Internus abdominis, see Oblique muscles of the abdomen — o. Major, O. externus abdominis, O. inferior capitis, O. superior oculi — o. Minor, O. internus abdominis

—o. Minor capitis, O. superior capitis —o. Minor oculi, O. inferior oculi.

Obliterated, Obliteratus, (obliterare, —ob, and litera, 'a letter,' — 'to efface.') A vessel or duct is said to be obliterated, when its parietes have approximated and contracted such an adhesion to each other that the cavity has completely disappeared.

Obliteratio Completa, Hapantismus.

Oblivio, ('forgetfulness,') Amnesia —o. Iners, Lethargy.

Oblobium, (ob, and lobos, 'a lobe,') Antilobium.

Obnubilatio, Obnubilatio, (ob, and nubilare, nubilatum, 'to be cloudy,') Giddiness, dazzling.

Obolus, (Arab.) Onolosat. An ancient weight of 9 or 10 grains.

Obscœnæ Par'tes, 'obscene parts,' Genital organs.

Obscurissement de la Vue, (from obscurus, 'obscure,') Caligo.

Observation, Observatio, (ob, and servare, servatum, 'to keep,' e.g. in sight,) Tercis Symptarater'sis. Act of examining a thing by means of the external senses. This word is employed in several acceptations. It expresses — 1. The action of observing. 2. The aggregate of knowledge afforded by observation. In French — but not in English — it means the case or history of the phenomena presented by a patient in the course of a disease.

Observation, Case —o. Method of, Numerical method.

Obstetric, Obstetrica, Obstetricus, Maieutical, Maieuticus, (obstare, —ob, and stare, — 'to stand before,') Relating or appertaining to Obstetrics, as 'obstetric auscultation,' 'obstetric exploration,' &c.

Obstetric Chair, Labor chair.

Obstetricans, Accoucheur.

Obstetricie, Obstetrics.

Obstetric'ius, Accoucheur.

Obstetrics, Tokol'ogy, Tocol'ogy, Maiei'a, Maei'a, Maei'a, Maeu'tica ars, Ars obstetric'ia, Obstetricy, (F.) Obstétrique, Obstétricie. The art of midwifery. Midwifery in general.

Obstetricy, Obstetrics.

Obstétrique, Obstetrics.

Obstetrist, Accoucheur.

Obstetrix, gen. Obstetri'cis, Midwife.

Obstipatio, (ob, and stipare, stipatum, 'to cram close,') Constipation —o. Alvina, Constipation —o. Tenesmus, Tenesmus.

Obstipatio, see Hump.

Obstipation, Constipation.

Obstipitas Cap'itis seu Col'li, (obstipo, 'I lean to one side,') Torticollis.

Obstipité, Torticollis.

Obstruc'tio, (obstruo, —ob, and struere, structum, 'to build,' — 'I stop up by building against,') Emphraxis, Stegnosis —o. Alvi, Constipation —o. Ductûs alimentarii, Constipation —o. Ductûs Stenoniani, Stenostenosis —o. Intestinalis, Constipation —o. Pulmonum Pituitosa Febrilis, Peripneumonia notha —o. Recti Spastica, Stricture of the rectum, spasmodic.

Obstruc'tion, (same etymon.) This term, in pathology, is applied to various forms of obstruction, such as the valvular, mitral, and aortic, to obstruction of the bowels, pancreatic duct, &c. See Emphraxis.

Obstruc'tion of the Intes'tines, Enteremphraxis.

Ob'struens, Oppilati'vus. A medicine which closes the orifices of ducts or vessels.

Obstupefacien'tia, (ob, and stupefacere, 'to benumb,') Narcotics.

Obtundant, Obtundens.

Obtrunca'tio, (ob, and truncare, truncatum, 'to cut off,') Decollation.

Obtundens, (F.) Obtondant, (obtundere, —ob, and tundere, 'to beat,' — 'to beat against,' and therefore to blunt the edge.) An epithet applied to remedies that were supposed, according to an erroneous theory, to be possessed of the power of blunting the acrimony of the humors. A demulcent is one of these.

Obturamen'tum, (obturare, obturatum, 'to stop up,') Emphragma.

Obturator, Obturator —o. du Palais, Palate, artificial.

Obtura'tio, Emphraxis, Plugging.

Obturation des Dents, Plugging.

Obtura'tor, Obturato'rius, (F.) Obturator. An instrument adapted for closing an opening caused by a wound or disease, as 'obturator of the palate;' see Palate, artificial. Also a name given in anatomy to several parts connected with the Obturator foramen.

OBTURA'TOR AR'TERY, Arte'ria obturato'ria seu obturatorix, (F.) Sous-pubio-fémorale (Ch.), Artère obturatrice, arises, most commonly, from the hypogastric. It is, however, frequently given off from the epigastric; a matter of importance to be determined in cases of femoral hernia. Of 500 obturator arteries examined by M. J. Cloquet, 340 were furnished by the hypogastric, and 152 by the epigastric or crural. When it arises from the hypogastric, it passes forwards and outwards, and then turns horizontally into the cavity of the pelvis, to issue from this cavity by the opening left at the upper part of the obturator membrane. When, on the contrary, the obturator artery arises from the epigastric or the crural, it descends obliquely inwards, behind the os pubis, to the obturator foramen. At its exit from the pelvis, the artery divides into two branches, a posterior and an anterior, which are distributed to the muscles of the anterior and superior part of the thigh.

OBTURA'TOR FORA'MEN, Fora'men Obturato'rium seu obturatorium seu infrapubianum seu ova'le seu thyroï'deum seu thyroï'des seu amplum pelvis, (F.) Trou sous-pubien. A large opening, of an oval or triangular form, in the anterior part of the os innominatum, on the outside of the symphysis pubis and beneath the horizontal ramus of the os pubis. This foramen is closed by a membranous ligament.

OBTURA'TOR LIG'AMENT OR MEM'BRANE, Sub-pubic mem'brane, is a fibrous membrane, fixed to the whole circumference of the obturator foramen, except above, where an opening remains for the passage of the vessels and nerves of the same name.

OBTURA'TOR MUS'LES, Obturato'res, Rotato'res fem'oris. These are two in number. They are divided into

1. Obtura'tor Exter'nus, Extra-pelvio-pubi-trochan'térien, Sous-pubio-trochan'térien externe (Ch.). A muscle, situate at the anterior and inner part of the thigh. It is broad, flat, and triangular; and is attached, on the one hand, to the anterior surface of the os pubis, to that of the ischium, and to the anterior surface of the obturator ligament. Its fleshy fibres converge to the tendon, which proceeds to be inserted at the inferior part of the cavity of the great trochanter. This muscle rotates the thigh outwards.

2. Obtura'tor Inter'nus, Marsupia'lis, Bursa'lis, Intra-pelvio-trochan'térien, Sous-pubio-trochan'térien interne (Ch.). is seated, almost entirely, in the pelvis. It arises from the inner surface of the obturator ligament, and from the posterior part of the circumference of the obturator foramen, and is inserted, by means of a strong tendon, running between the two portions of the gemini, into the cavity at the root of the great trochanter, after having turned upon the ischium, which forms for it a kind of pulley. This muscle also rotates the thigh outwards.

OBTURA'TOR NERVE, Sous-pubio-fémoral (Ch.), proceeds principally from the 2d and 3d lumbar nerves. It descends into the pelvis; gains the obturator foramen; gives branches to the obturator muscles, and divides, behind the abductor primus and pectinalis, into two branches; one anterior, whose branches are distributed to the first two adductors, gracilis, and integuments; the other, posterior, distributing its ramifications to the obturator externus and third adductor.

OBTURATOR VEIN has, ordinarily, the same arrangement as the artery. It is common, however, to find it arising from the epigastric; while the corresponding artery proceeds from the hypogastric, and conversely.

Obturator, Obturator muscles.

Obvolv'en'tia, pl. of Obvolv'ens, (obvolv'ere, 'to cover over,') Demulcents.

Oc, as a prefix, see Ob.

O'ca, Oxalis tuberosa.

Oc'ca'cio, (oc, and cæcus, 'blind,') Cæcitas.

Oc'cip'ital, Oc'cipita'lis, (from Oc'ciput, gen. Oc'cip'itis.) That which belongs to the occiput.

OCCIP'ITAL AR'TERY. This arises from the posterior part of the external carotid, beneath the parotid. It proceeds backwards, passes between the mastoid process and the transverse process of the atlas: reaches the occipital bone and divides into two branches, which may be called ascending posterior and anterior, and are distributed to the neighboring muscles and ligaments.

OCCIP'ITAL BONE, Os occip'itis seu occipit'i seu occipita'le seu sph'e'nobasila'rè seu memo'ria seu nervo'sum seu basila'rè seu pro'ra seu pyx'idis seu sex'tum cra'nii seu lambd'oï'des seu lamb'dæ seu pup'pis seu nervo'sum seu fibro'sum seu pelvi-ceph'alicum, (F.) Os occipital, is situate at the posterior and inferior part of the cranium, which it assists in forming. It is flat, symmetrical, and curved upon itself. It presents, 1. An occip'ital or posterior surface, which is convex, and has, upon the median line, the bas'illary surface, the fora'men mag'nium, through which passes the spinal marrow with its membranes and vessels,—the external occipital crest, the external occipital protuberance; and, at the sides, the upper curved line, large rough arched ridge or transverse arch or lin'ea semicircula'ris, the lower curved line, the posterior con'dyloid fossæ, the condyles for the articulation of this bone with the atlas; and the anterior con'dyloid fossæ, pierced by a foramen for the passage of the ninth pair of nerves. 2. A cer'ebral or anterior surface. On the median line are: the bas'illary fossæ, the inner or'ifice of the foramen magnum, the internal occip'ital crest, the internal occip'ital protuberance, the cruciform spine; a channel, which lodges the termination of the straight sinus, and, on each side, the occip'ital fossæ, distinguished into superior or cer'ebral, and inferior or cerebel'lous, and separated by a groove which lodges the lateral sinus. 3. The surfaces of the occipital bone are separated by four ridges and four angles. The two superior edges are articulated with the parietal bones; the two lower join the temporal; and the anterior angle, under the name bas'illary process, is united to the sphenoid.

In extremely rare cases, Hyrtl found a flat eminence, about the size of a hazelnut, at the occipital insertion of the rectus capitis lateralis, containing cells which communicated with those of the mastoid process. These have been termed pneumatic occipital bones.

The occipital bone is developed from four points of ossification; and sometimes from a greater number.

OCCIP'ITAL MUS'CLE, Oc'cipita'lis. Many anatomists have given this name to the posterior fasciculus of the occipitofrontalis.

OCCIP'ITAL NERVE, Suboccip'ital nerve, (F.) Première paire trachélienne (Ch.), Nerf occipital ou sous-occipital. It arises from the upper part of the spinal marrow by eight or ten filaments, united into two fasciculi. Thus formed, it passes between the foramen magnum and the posterior arch of the atlas; and, at this place, forms a long ganglion, afterwards dividing into two branches. Of these, the anterior, which is long and small, makes a turn above the transverse process of the atlas and forms an anastomotic noose with a branch of the second cervical nerve. The posterior branch, larger and shorter, divides into seven or eight branches, which are distributed to the muscles of the upper and back part of the neck.

OCCIP'ITAL RE'GION, Occiput.

OCCIP'ITAL VEIN. Its roots follow exactly the course of the branches of the artery, and unite into a single trunk, which opens into the internal jugular vein, and sometimes into the external.

Oc'cipit'ium, Occiput.

OCCIP'ITOAT'LOID, Oc'cip'itoat'loï'deus, (F.) Oc'cip'itoat'loïdien. That which has reference to the occiput and atlas.

OCCIP'ITOAT'LOID OR OCCIP'ITOATLAN'TAL ARTICULA'TION is the articulation of the condyles of the occipital bone with the superior articular cavities of the atlas. It is strengthened by two ligaments—the one anterior, the other posterior, called occip'itoat'loid or occip'itoatlan'tal ligaments: the one extends from the anterior, the other from the posterior arch of the atlas to the corresponding portion of the circumference of the foramen magnum.

OCCIP'ITOAX'OID OR OCCIP'ITOAX'IAL, Oc'cip'itoax'oï'deus, (F.) Oc'cip'ito-axoïdien. That which relates to the occipital bone and the axis or second vertebra.

OCCIP'ITOAX'OID ARTICULA'TION is the connection of the occipital bone with the axis or second vertebra, although these bones are not really articulated, but are merely retained in apposition by three strong ligaments, the posterior of which is called occip'itoax'oid or occip'itoax'ial appa'rat'us ligamento'sus col'i, and the two others odontoid.

OCCIP'ITOFRON'TALIS, Diga'stricus cra'nii, Epi-cra'nii, Mus'culus cra'nii cuta'neus, Fronta'lis et occipita'lis, Oc'cip'ital mus'cle. The majority of anatomists call by this name the whole of the fleshy plane, with the epicranial or coronal aponeurosis (see Calotte), which covers the head from the occiput to the forehead. It is attached, by its posterior fasciculus, to the two outer thirds of the upper curved line of the occipital bone, and to the outer surface of the mastoid portion of the temporal; and, by its anterior fasciculus, it terminates at the eyebrow, where it becomes confounded with the superciliaris, pyramidalis nasi, and orbicularis palpebrarum.

The occipitofrontalis, by the contraction of its anterior fasciculus, draws forward a part of the integuments of the cranium. It wrinkles the skin of the forehead transversely, and may also contribute to open the eye by its decussation with the orbicularis palpebrarum. The posterior fasciculus of the muscle draws backwards a part of the skin of the cranium, and assists in stretching the common aponeurosis.

OCCIP'ITOMAS'TOID. That which relates to the occipital bone and the mastoid process. The Oc'cip'itomas'toid suture, Additamentum suturæ lambdoida'lis, is situate between the occipital bone and the mastoid process of the temporal bone.

OCCIP'ITOMENINGE'al. That which belongs to the occipital bone and to the meninge or dura mater.

OCCIP'ITOMENINGE'al AR'TERY, in Chaussier's nomenclature, is a branch of the vertebral, given off to the dura mater at its entrance into the cranium.

Oc'cipitopari'etal. That which relates to the occipital and parietal bones. See Lambdoid.

Oc'ciput, gen. Oc'cipitis, Oc'cipit'ium, (oc, and caput, 'the head,') Re'gio occipita'lis, In'ion, Opisthoce'ra'nium, Opisthoceph'alon, Hysteroce'ra'nium, Pro'ra. The back part of the head, formed by the occipital bone.

Oc'ciput, Soft, Craniotabes.

Occlu'sion, Occlu'sio, (occludere, occlusum, 'to shut up,') Sometimes this word signifies, simply, the transient approximation of the edges of a natural opening—the occlusion of the eyelids, for example; at others, it is synonymous with imperforation; as occlusion of the pupil, vagina, &c.

OCCLU'SION OF THE INTES'TINES, (F.) Occlusion Intestinale. Any modification in the calibre of the intestinal canal, which may be sufficient to arrest the progress of alimentary and fecal matters. See Ileus.

Oc'cult' Diseases, see Latent.

O'cean Springs, see Mississippi, mineral waters of.

Oche'ma, gen. Oche'matis, (οχημα,) Vehicle.

Ocheteu'mata, (pl. of οχητευμα, 'a canal,') Nares.

Och'etos, (οχητος,) Canal.

Ocheu'ma, Ocheum'atis, (οχηυμα,) Coition, Fecundation.

Och'eus, (οχευς, from εχω, 'I hold,') Scrotum.

Ochle'sis, (οχλος, 'a crowd,') Crowd poi'soning. A morbid condition induced by the crowding together of sick persons under one roof.

O'chrea (from ωχρος, 'pale,') Ru'bra, ('red ochre,') Hæmatites.

Ochri'asis, (ωχραισις,) Paleness.

Ochro'ma, Ochro'matis, (ωχρος, 'pale,') Paleness.

Ochrop'ya, (ωχρος, 'yellow, and πυρ, 'fever,') Fever, yellow.

O'chrotes, (ωχροτης,) Paleness.

Ochroty'phus, (ωχρος, 'yellow, and typhus,) Fever, yellow.

Ochthi'asis, (οχθος, 'a hill, a protuberance,') Molluscum.

Ochtho'des, (οχθος, 'the hard edge of an ulcer,') Callous.

O'cimum Adscen'dens, (ωκιμον, from ωκυσ, 'swift, owing to its swift growth,) O. basilicum.

Typhonis*, Scilla.

O'cy, (ωκυσ, 'quick,') In composition, quick.

O'cymum, see Ocimum — o. Sylvestre, Clinopodium vulgare.

Ocyodin'ic, (ocy, and ωδω, 'a labor pain,') Ocytoic.

Ocyph'onus, (ocy, and φονος, 'murder,') An agent that kills speedily.

Ocytoce'us, (ωκυτοκευς,) Ocytoic.

Ocytoc'ic, Oxytoc'ic, Ocytoce'us, Ocytoc'ius, Ocyodin'ic, Odinago'gus, (ocy, and τοκος, 'labor,') Anything that expedites parturition.

Ocytoc'ius, (ωκυτοκευς,) Ocytoic.

Ocyt'ocus, (ωκυτοκος,) A quick or easy labor.

Od. A term employed by Reichenbach to designate an "effective force," which, according to him, not only manifests itself in contact with man, as in the case of magnets, crystals, the hands, &c., but also at distances, as from the sun, moon, and stars; indeed, from all matter. Such a force is termed by him od'ic.

Odaxis'mus, Odaxes'mus, (οδαξήσμος, from οδαξω, 'I bite,') Odontocne'sis, Odontocne'smus. A sensation of biting or pricking, as that in the gums which precedes the appearance of the teeth.

O'des, (ωδης,) A suffix, at times having the signification of oid, but generally indicating, like osus in Latin terms, 'consisting of, or full of.'

Odeur, Odor.

Od'ic, see Od.

Od'in, (ωδιν,) Pain (labor).

Odinago'gus, (odin, and αγω, 'I lead,') See Ocytoic.

Odinol'ysis, (odin, and λυσις, 'solution,') Mitigation of labor pains.

Odinopoe'ia, (odin, and ποιω, 'I make,') Agents that excite or encourage labor pains.

Od'is, (ωδης,) Pain (labor).

Od'më, (ωδμη,) Odor.

Odontago'gon, (οδονταγωγον, odonto, and αγω, 'I draw,') Dentagra.

Od'on'tagra, (οδονταγρα, from odonto, and αγρα,

'a seizure.') A rheumatic or gouty pain in the teeth. Also, Dentagra.

Odontal'gia, (odontalgia, from odonto, and algos, 'pain,') Dentium dolor, Toothache, Odontia, O. dolorosa, Gomphi'asis, Gomphias'mus, Odontodyn'ia, (F.) Odontalgie, Douleur des dents, Fluxion sur les dents, Mal de dent ou d'amour ou de Saint Médard. A disease dependent upon a variety of causes affecting the cavity of the tooth, but generally owing to caries, which exposes the cavity to the action of the air, and to extraneous matters in general. Hence the treatment consists in plugging the tooth or destroying the sensibility of the nerve by powerful stimulants; and, if these means fail, in extracting the tooth.

ODONTAL'GIA CARIO'SA, Dental gangrene—o. Dentitionis, Dentition—o. Hæmodia, Hæmodia.

ODONTAL'GIA NERVO'SA, Neural'gia Denta'lis. Neuralgia of the teeth. Characterized by periodical pain, shooting with the utmost violence along the branches of the fifth pair distributed to the affected jaw.

ODONTAL'GIA REMIT'TENS ET INTERMIT'TENS, Neuralgia infraorbitalia.

Odontal'gic, Antiodontalgic.

Odontalgic, Odontalgia.

Odontalgique, Antiodontalgic.

Odontamblyog'mus, (odonto, and αμβλυσ, 'blunt,') Hæmodia.

Odontatroph'ia, Atroph'ia dentis, (F.) Atrophie des dents, (odonto, and atroph'ia, 'atrophy,') Atrophy of the teeth.

Odonthæmo'dia, Hæmodia.

Odonthar'paga, (odonto, and ἀπαζειν, 'to lay hold of,') Dentagra.

Odonthyaloph'thora, (odonthyalus, 'enamel,' and φθορα, 'corruption,') Destruction of the enamel of the teeth.

Odonthy'alus, (odonto, and ἑαλος, 'glass,') Enamel of the teeth.

Odonthyperæsthe'sis, Hæmodia.

Odont'ia, Odontalgia.

ODONT'IA DEFOR'MIS. Deformity of the teeth from error of shape, position, or number.

ODONT'IA DENTITIO'NIS LACTAN'TIUM, see Dentition (first)—o. Dentitionis puerilis, see Dentition (second)—o. Edentula, see Nefrendes—o. Exerescens, Epulis—o. Incrustans, Odontolithus—o. Stuporis, Hæmodia.

Odonti'asis, (odontiasis) Dentition.

Odontia'ter, gen. Odontia'tri, (odonto, and ιατρος, 'physician,') Dentist.

Odontiat'ria, Dentistry.

Odont'ic, Antiodontalgic.

Odonti'tis, Odontophleg'monē, (odonto, and itis,) Inflammation of the teeth.

ODONTI'TIS INFAN'TIUM. The inflammatory condition of the teeth and gums, which attends the first appearance of teeth in the young child.

Odont'o, (odontos, gen. odontos, 'tooth,') In composition, tooth.

Odont'oblasts, (odonto, and blastema,) A layer of large cells, of elongated form, constituting the external layer of the dental pulp, and forming a kind of columnar epithelium. See Membrana eboris and M. priæformativa.

Odontobothri'tis, gen. Odontobothri'tidis, Odontophatni'tis, Inflamma'tio alveolo'rum, (odontobothrium, and itis,) Inflammation of the alveoli.

Odontoboth'rium, (odonto, and βοθριον, 'a small pit,') Alveolus.

Odontoceram'ic, Odontoceram'icus, (odonto, and κεραμος, 'potters' earth,') Relating or appertaining to porcelain teeth;—as the 'odontoceram'ic art, 'Odontoceramotech'ny, the art of making porcelain teeth.

Odontoceramotech'ny, see Odontoceram'ic.

Odont'ochirur'gical, Odont'ochirurgica'lis. Relating or appertaining to the surgery of the teeth;—as the Odontochirurgical society.

Odontocla'sis, (odonto, and κλασις, 'fracture,') Fractu'ra den'tis. Fracture of a tooth.

Odontocne'sis, (odonto, and κνησις, 'itching,') Odaxismus.

Odontocnes'mus, Odaxismus.

Odonto'des, (odontoidēs,) Odontoid.

Odontodyn'ia, (odonto, and δύνη, 'pain,') Odontalgia.

Odontog'eny, Odontogen'ia, Odonto'sis, (odonto, and γενεσις, 'generation,') Generation or mode of development of the teeth.

Odonto'glyphon, (odontoglyphon, from odonto, and γλυφειν, 'to hollow,') Dentiscalpium, Gum lancet.

Odonto'glyphum, Dentiscalpium, Gum lancet.

Odontog'raphy, Odontogra'phia, (odonto, and γραφη, 'a description,') A description of the teeth.

Odont'oid, (odontoidēs,) Odontoï'des, Odonto'des, Dentiform'is, Denta'lis, Dentoïdeus, Pyrenoides, (odonto, and εἶδος, 'shape, resemblance,') An epithet given to the Processus dentatus of the second vertebra or axis.

ODONT'OID LIG'AMENTS, Check lig'aments, Ligament'a ala'ria seu Manchar'ti, (F.) Ligaments odontoidiens, are two strong and short conical fasciculi, whose truncated summits embrace the sides of the odontoid process, and whose bases are fixed in the fossæ at the inner side of the condyles of the occipital bone. Their direction is obliquely outwards and slightly upwards. They enter into the composition of the occipito-axis articulation, strengthen the junction of the head with the vertebral column, and limit the movement of rotation of the atlas on the axis.

Other ligamentous fibres pass from the highest portion of the processus dentatus to the anterior margin of the foramen magnum of the occipital bone, constituting the Ligamentum suspensorium den'tis.

ODONT'OID PROC'ESS, see Axis.

Odontol'ithus, (F.) Odontolithe, (odonto, and λίθος, 'a stone,') A sort of incrustation of a yellowish color, which forms at the coronæ of the teeth, and is called Tar'tar, Tar'tarus Den'tium, Odont'ia incrustans, Cal'culus denta'lis, (F.) Tartre des dents, T. dentaire. It consists of seventy-nine parts of phosphate of lime, twelve and a half of mucus, one of a particular salivary matter, and seven and a half of animal substance, soluble in chlorohydric acid. A species of infusoria, Dentic'ola hom'inis, has been found in it.

Odontol'ogy, Odontolog'ia, (odonto, and λογος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on the teeth.

Odontolox'ia, (odonto, and λοξος, 'oblique,') Odontoparallaxis.

Odonto'ma, Odontome, (odonto, and μα,) A term applied by Virchow to ivory exostoses of the teeth, the molars especially, composed of hypertrophied dentine, and resulting from morbid conditions of the pulp. Broca divides them into Odontomata embryoplas'tica, O. odontoplas'tica, O. corona'ria, and O. radica'ria.

Odontonecro'sis, Dental gangrene.

Odontoparallax'is, Odontolox'ia, (odonto, and παρλλαξις, 'deviation,') Irregularity and obliquity of the teeth, (Prov.) Snaggle teeth.

Odontophat'nē, (odonto, and φάρη, 'a crib, a stall,') Alveolus.

Odontophatni'tis, gen. Odontophatni'tidis, (odontophatne, and itis,) Odontobothritis.

Odontophy'ia, (odontoph'ia, from odonto, and φυω, 'I grow,') Dentition.

Odontoplero'sis, (odonto, and πληρωω, 'I fill,') See Filling.

Odontopri'sis, (odonto, and πρισις, 'gnashing of teeth,') Brygmus.

Odontorrh'iza, (odonto, and ρίζα, 'root,') See Tooth.

Odontosei'sis, Odontoseis'mus, Dent'ium vacil- lan'tia, (odonto, and αἰσῆς, 'shaking.') Looseness of the teeth.

Odontoseis'mus, Odontoseisis.

Odonto'sis, Dentition, Odontogeny.

Odontosmeg'ma, gen. Odontosmeg'matis, (ὀδοντοσμήγμα, from odonto, and σμῆγμα, 'a detergative substance,') Dentifrice.

Odontosphacel'isis, (odonto, and σφακελός, 'gangrene,') Dental gangrene.

Odontosphacelis'mus, Dental gangrene.

Odontostere'sis, (odonto, and στερεώσις, 'privation,') Loss of the teeth.

Odontosyerism'us, (odonto, and συριζάνω, 'to strike together,') (F.) Claquement. Chattering of the teeth.

Odontotech'ny, (odonto, and τέχνη, 'art,') Dentistry.

Odontothe'ca, (odonto, and θήκη, 'a sheath,') Dental follicle.

Odontothèque, Dental follicle.

Odontotherapi'a, (odonto, and θεραπεία, 'healing,') Dentistry.

Odontothryp'sis, Odontotripsis.

Odontotrim'matis, (odonto, and τριβω, 'I rub,') Dentifrice.

Odontotrip'sis, Odontothryp'sis, Abra'sio dentitum, (F.) Usure des Dents, (odonto, and τριψίς, 'friction,') Abrasion or wearing away of the teeth.

Odontotrypy, Odontotrypy.

Odont'rypy, Odontotrypy, Odontotryp'ia, (odonto, and ῥυπαίνω, 'I perforate,') The operation of perforating a tooth to evacuate purulent matter confined in the cavity of the pulp.

O'dor, gen. Odo'ris, O'dour, Od'mê, Os'mê, (F.) Odeur. A smell. Odors are subtle particles, constantly escaping from the surface of certain bodies, hence called o'dorous, (F.) Odorant. They act, in some manner, by actual contact with the nerves of the Schneiderian membrane, and give occasion to the sense of smell or olfaction.

Odoramen'tum, (from odor,) Odoriferum.

Odorant, see Odor.

Odorat, Olfaction.

Odora'tio, Olfaction.

Odora'tus, gen. Odoratûs, Olfaction — o. Deperditus, Anosmia — o. Pervertus, Anosmia.

Odoriferous Glands, see Sebaceous glands.

Odoriferum, (odor, and fero, 'I carry,') Odoramen'tum. A medicine that gives odor or flavor. A scent. A perfume.

Œdal'icus, (ὀιδῶ, 'I swell,') Œdematous.

Œdal'ius, (ὀιδῶν,) Œdematous.

Œde'ma, gen. Œde'matis, (οἰδήμα, 'a swelling,') Hydron'eus, Œdemat'ia, Hydron'eus, Hydaton'eus, Hydroœde'ma, Hydred'e'ma, Hy'drops cellulæris ar'tium, Phlegma'tia, Leucophlegma'tia, Eophy'ma œdemat'icum, (F.) Œdème, Œdématic, Enflure. Swelling produced by the accumulation of a serous fluid in the interstices of the areolar texture. This swelling is soft; yields under the finger; preserves the impression for some time, and is pale and without pain. It presents the same characters as anasarca, which is general œdema. Its etiology and treatment are also the same. See Anasarca.

ŒDE'MA ACU'TUM, see Anasarca.

ŒDE'MA ARSENICA'LIS. The swelling of the eyelids and face, induced by continued use of the preparations of arsenic.

ŒDE'MA CAL'IDUM, see Anasarca — œ. Capitis, Hydrocephalus externus.

ŒDE'MA CER'EBRI, (F.) Œdème du cerveau. Œdema of the brain. A condition of the cerebral pulp, in which there is an infiltration of serous fluid into it, so that it appears more moist or watery than common; and, when sliced or pressed, small drops of water are seen to ooze out.

ŒDE'MA COMPAC'TUM, Induration of the cellular tissue — œ. Cruentum, Suggillation — œ. Febrile, see Anasarca — œ. Fugax, Anathymiasis.

ŒDE'MA OF THE GLOTTIS, Œ. glottidis, Œdematous Laryngi'tis or angi'na, Laryngi'tis submucosa seu œdemato'sa seu seropurulen'ta, Hy'drops glottidis, Angi'na aquo'sa seu larynge'a œdemato'sa, Submucous Laryngi'tis, (F.) Laryngite œdémateuse, L. œdémateuse et séro-purulente ou sus-glottique ou sous-muqueuse, Angine laryngée œdémateuse, Œdème de la glotte. A disease consisting of serous or seropurulent infiltration into the submucous tissue of the glottis. The symptoms resemble those of croup; but the disease attacks the adult rather than the child. The age is, indeed, a principal means of diagnosis between the two affections.

The disease is almost always fatal. The treatment has to vary according to the accompanying general symptoms.

ŒDE'MA HYSTER'ICUM, Anathymiasis — œ. Lactum, Phlegmatia dolens.

ŒDE'MA OF THE LUNGS, Œ. pulmo'num, Pneumoch'ysis, Pneumonœde'ma, Hy'drops seu anasar'ca Pulmo'num, Hydropneumo'nia, (F.) Œdème du Poumon. Laënnec has so called the infiltration of serum into the tissue of the lung, carried to such an extent as to diminish its permeability to air. It is not an uncommon sequela of pneumonia, and the major exanthemata. The respiration is laborious; the respiratory murmur scarcely perceptible, although the thorax is largely expanded, and there is a slight râle crépitant, particularly at the base and inferior part of the lung. The sound on percussion is clear, and on both sides equally so. The cough is attended with aqueous expectoration. In some cases the respiration becomes puerile in a small portion of the summit of the lung.

ŒDE'MA NEONATO'RUM, Induration of the cellular tissue — œ. Palpebrarum, Hydroblepharon — œ. Puerperarum, Phlegmatia dolens — œ. Pulmonum, Œdema of the lungs — œ. Pulmonum chronicum, Hydropneumonia — œ. Scroti aquosum, Oschydroedema — œ. Scroti cruentum, Osche'matœdema — œ. Scroti purulentum, Oscheopyœdema — œ. Scroti urinosum, Urocele — œ. Spasticum, Anathymiasis — œ. Uvulae, Staphylœdema.

Œdemat'ia, Œdema.

Œdématic, Œdema.

Œdematosar'ca, Œdemosarca.

Œdematoscheoce'lê, Œdemoscheoce'lê, Oscheoce'lê œdemat'ica. Oscheocele with œdema of the scrotum.

Œdematous, Œdematous, Œdemat'icus, Œdemat'ides, Œdal'ius, Œdal'icus, Edem'atous, (F.) Œdémateux. Afflicted with œdema, (F.) Œdématic; of the nature of œdema.

Œdème, Œdema — œ. du Cerveau, Œdema cerebri — œ. Douloureux des femmes en couche, Phlegmatia dolens — œ. de la Glotte, Angina œdematosa, Œdema of the glottis — œ. des Nouvelles accouchées, Phlegmatia dolens — œ. actif des Nou- velles accouchées, Phlegmatia dolens — æ. du Tissue cellulaire des nouveau-nés, Induration of the cellular tissue.

Edemosar'ca, (œdema, and σαρκί, gen. σαρκος, 'flesh,') Edematosar'ca. A species of tumor mentioned by M. A. Severinus, which holds a middle place between œdema and sarcoma.

Edemoscheoce'lê, Edematoscheocele.

Œil, (oculus), Eye — æ. de Bœuf, Anthemistinctoria — æ. Double, Binoculus — æ. de Lièvre, Lagophthalmus — æ. Simple, see Monoculus.

Œillet Giroflée, Dianthus caryophyllus.

Œillière, (from œil,) Scaphium oculare.

Enan'thê, Æ. crocata seu charophylli fo'liis, Hem'lock drop'wort, Hem'lock water dropwort. Nat. Ord. Umbelliferae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia, (œnos, and ανδρ, 'a flower,' its flowers smelling like the vine.) A violent poison of the acro-narcotic class. Its juice has been recommended in certain cutaneous diseases, but it is scarcely ever used. It is employed in fomentations.

Enelæ'on, (œnos, and ελαιον, 'oil,') A mixture of oil and wine. Also, rectified spirit or alcohol.

Eno'des, (οινωδης, from œnos, and odes,) Vinous.

Enog'ala, gen. Enogalac'tis, (οινογαλα, — from œnos, and γαλα, 'milk,') — 'a mixture of wine and milk.' According to some, wine as warm as new milk.

Enog'aron, Ga'rum vi'no mis'tum. Wine mixed with garum.

Enoi'des, (οινοειδης, from œnos, and ειδος, 'resemblance,') Vinous, winelike.

Enolature, (from œnos,) see Vinum.

Enolê, see Vinum.

Enolotif (F.). A name given by M. Béral to a medicine intended for external use, whose excipient is wine.

Enoma'nia, Oinoma'nia (œnos, and mania,) Delirium tremens. Properly, wine-mania. An insatiable desire for intoxicating liquors, Dipsomania, Methomania.

Enomel, gen. Enomel'lis, Enom'eli, (œnos, and μελι, 'honey,') Mel vino'sum, Mel'sum vino'sum. Honey wine. Wine mead. See Hydromel.

Enophlyg'ia, (οινοφλυγία, from œnos, and φλυω, 'I overflow,') Temulence.

Enophlyx'is, (οινοφλυξις,) Temulence.

Enos, (οινος,) Wine.

Enostag'ma, gen. Enostag'matis, (œnos, and σταζω, 'I distil,') Spiritus vini rectificatus.

Enothe'ra Bien'nis, (œnos, and θηρ, 'wild,') [?] Æ. mollissima seu muricata seu gauroi'des, On'agra, Evening prim'rose, Tree primrose, Primrose tree, Cure'all, Sea'bish. An indigenous plant, common on the borders of fields and in natural hedges. Ord. Onograceæ. Sex. Syst. Octandria Monogynia. Its properties are mucilaginous and slightly acrid. A decoction has been used in cases of infantile and other eruptions.

ENO'THE'RA GAUROI'DES, Æ. biennis — æ. Muricata, Æ. biennis.

Œsophage, Œsophagus.

Œsophage'al or Œsophag'eal, Œsophag'eus, (from œsophagus,) (F.) Œsophagien. Relating or belonging to the œsophagus.

ŒSOPHAGE'AL AP'ERTURE OF THE DI'APHRAGM, Fora'men œsophage'um, (F.) Ouverture œsophagienne du diaphragme. An opening in the diaphragm for the passage of the œsophagus.

ŒSOPHAGE'AL AP'ERTURE OF THE STOM'ACH. A name given to the superior or cardiac orifice of the stomach, to distinguish it from the inferior or pyloric. See Cardia.

ŒSOPHAGE'AL MUS'CLE, Œsophag'eus. Some anatomists have given this name to the transverse muscular fibres which surround the œsophagus at its upper extremity.

ŒSOPHAGE'AL TUBE, see Tube, œsophageal.

Œsophageurys'ma, gen. Œsophageurys'matis, (Œsoph'agus succenturiatus, (œsophagus, and ευσσμία, 'dilatation,') Dilatation of the œsophagus.

Œsophagial'gia, (œsophagus, and αλγος, 'pain,') Œsophagismus.

Œsophagiarc'tia, (œsophagus, and αρctare, 'to make narrow,') Dysphagia constricta.

Œsophagien, Œsophageal — æ. Muscle, Constrictor œsophagi.

Œsoph'agism, Œsophagismus.

Œsophagis'mus, Œsophagis'mum, Dyspha'gia spasmod'ica seu spas'tica seu nervo'sa, Strictu'ra œsoph'agi spasmod'ica, Œsophagial'gia, Œsophagospas'mus, Œsoph'agism, Tenes'mus gu'læ, (F.) Ténisme de l'œsophage. Spasm of the œsophagus. By some used synonymously with œsophagitis, dysphagia, and contraction of the œsophagus.

Œsophagi'tis, gen. Œsophagi'tidis, Angi'na seu Cynan'chê œsophag'e'a, Dyspha'gia inflamma'toria, Inflamma'tio œsoph'agi seu gu'læ, (F.) Œsophagite, Angine œsophagienne, (œsophagus, and itis,) Inflammation of the œsophagus.

Œsophagodyn'ia, (œsophagus, and οδυνη, 'pain,') Pain in the œsophagus.

Œsophagopathi'a, Mor'bus œsoph'agi, (œsophagus, and παθος, 'affection,') A morbid condition of the œsophagus.

Œsophagople'gia, Dyspha'gia paralyt'ica, Læmoparal'ysis, (œsophagus, and πληγη, 'a stroke,') Paralysis of the œsophagus.

Œsophagorrhag'ia, (œsophagus, and ραγη, 'a rupture,') Hemorrhage from the œsophagus.

Œsophagorrhœ'a, (œsophagus, and ρω, 'I flow,') Discharge of blood or mucus from the œsophagus.

Œsoph'agoscope, Œsophagoscop'ium, (œsophagus, and σκοπω, 'I view,') An instrument of the endoscope kind for viewing the interior of the œsophagus throughout its whole extent.

Œsophagospas'mus, (œsophagus, and σπασμος, 'spasm,') Spasm of the œsophagus.

Œsophagostenoma, gen. Œsophagostenoma'tis, (œsophagus, στενος, 'narrow, and oma,) Dysphagia constricta.

Œsophagostenosis (œsophagus, στενος, 'narrow, and osis,) Dysphagia constricta.

Œsoph'agotome (œsophagus, and τομη, 'section,') An instrument devised for the performance of œsophagotomy.

Œsophagot'omy, Œsophagotom'ia, (F.) Œsophagotomie, (œsophagus, and τομη, 'incision,') An incision made into the œsophagus for the purpose of extracting foreign bodies from it.

Œsoph'agus, (οισοφάγος, from οιω, future οιω, 'I carry, and φαγω, 'I eat,') Gu'la, Fis'tula cibalis, Fis'tula seu Infundib'ulum Ventric'uli, V'a stom'achi et ven'tris, Glut'tus, (F.) Œsophage. The Gullet. A musculomembranous canal, cylindrical, and depressed from before to behind, which extends from the inferior extremity of the pharynx to the upper orifice of the stomach. At its origin, it is situate in the median line; but beneath the larynx, it deviates to the left, and in the chest experiences different reflections. In its cervical portion, it corresponds, behind, with the spine; before, with the larynx and trachea; and, at the sides, it is close to the primitive carotids, internal jugular veins, par vagum, recurrent nerves, &c. In its inferior or thoracic portion, the œsophagus is entirely contained in the posterior mediastinum; and enters the abdomen through the œsophageal aperture, Fora'men œsophage'um of the diaphragm. The œsophagus is composed of a very strong muscular layer, sometimes called Tunica vagina'lis gu'læ; formed, itself, of two sets of fibres, the external being generally longitudinal, the internal transverse or an-nular; and of a mucous membrane which is soft, fine, thin, and white, especially at its lower part. It is continuous, above, with the mucous membrane of the pharynx. The mucous follicles, found beneath it, are not numerous, and have been called Œsophageal glands. The arteries of the Œsophagus proceed, in the neck, from the thyroid; in the chest, from the bronchial arteries and directly from the aorta; in the abdomen, from the inferior phrenic, and coronaria ventriculi. Its veins empty themselves into the inferior thyroid, the vena cava superior, the internal mammary, azygos, bronchial, phrenic, and coronaria ventriculi. Its lymphatics pass into the ganglia surrounding it. Its nerves are afforded by the pharyngeal and pulmonary plexuses; by the cardiac nerves; the thoracic ganglia, and, especially, by the pneumogastrics and their recurrent branches.

ŒSOPHAGUS SUCCENTURIA'TUS, Pharyngocœle.

Œstroma'nia, (αἰστρος, 'imperious erotic impulse,' and mania), Nymphomania.

Œstrual, Œstrualis, (from æstrum.) Appertaining or relating to orgasm, especially venereal orgasm.

Œstrua'tion, see Heat.

Œstrum, Clitoris, Orgasm.

ŒSTRUM VEN'ERIS, Œ. venereum, Œstrus venereus, (αἰστρος, æstrus, 'imperious erotic impulse.') A vehement desire for sexual intercourse. Orgasm. With some, æstrum signifies Clitoris.

Œstrus, (αἰστρος), Clitoris, Orgasm, see Ectozoa—œ. Hominis, see Parasites—œ. Venereus, Œstrum venereum.

Œsypus, (αἰσυπος, from αἰς, 'a sheep.') The greasy matter of unwashed wool; formerly employed in friction in diseased joints.

Œuf, Ovum—œ. de De Graaf, Folliculi Graafiani—œ. de Naboth, Nabothi glandulæ.

Office, Physic'ian's or Sur'geon's, Iatrimon.

Offici'na, for Opifici'na, (from opifex,—opus, and facio,—'a workman,' 'a shop,') Pharmacopolium.

Offic'inal, Officina'lis. An epithet for medicines found in the shop of the apothecary, ready prepared—usua'lia; in opposition to magistral or extemporaneous,—those prepared after the prescription of the physician.

Offium, Affion, Opium.

Offspring, Epigone.

Offusca'tio, (of, for ob, and fuscare, 'to make dark,') Amaurosis.

Og'la, Oogala.

Oignon or Oignon, (from unio), Allium cepa, a Corn, Bunion—œ. Marin, Scilla.

Ohi'o, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Yellow Springs, in Greene county, are diuretic, laxative, and slightly chalybeate. There are also chalybeate waters at Mineral Springs, Adams county.

Oid, Oi'des, (οἰδής, from αἶδος, 'form, resemblance,') A suffix, denoting 'resemblance,' as in ethmoid, sphenoid, &c.

Oid'ium Abortifa'ciens, (οἰδ, 'an egg,' and αἶδος, 'resemblance,') see Ergot—œ. Albicans, Aphthaphyte and Parasites—œ. Schoenleini, see Porrigio favosa.

Oie, Sorbus domestica.

Oignon, Allium cepa.

Oikeioma'nia, Oeciomania.

Oikiomias'mata, Oikeiomias'mata, (from οἶκος, belonging to a household, and miasmata.) Morbific emanations from domestic sources.

Oil, ([Sax.] æl), O'leum, Elæ'on, (F.) Huile; (from ἐλαια, 'the olive.') A collective name, under which two classes of fluids are included, very different from each other: those belonging to the one class, are viscid, mawkish, or almost insipid; those of the other are nearly devoid of viscosity, and are caustic and very volatile. The former are called fat or fixed oils; the latter volatile or essential oils or essences.

OIL, FU'SEL, Al'cohol amylicum (Ph. U. S., 1873), Fermento'leum Sola'ni, Fou'sel oil, Pota'to oil, Grain oil, Corn'spirit oil, Pota'to spir'it oil, Oil of pota'toes, Amylic al'cohol, Hy'drated oxide of am'yl, ([G.] Fusel, an epithet for poor brandy.) An acrid volatile oil, formed in the manufacture of potato or grain brandy, which is not easily separable from it, and is obtained by continuing the process after the ordinary spirit has ceased to come over. Its chemical constitution is analogous to that of alcohol. It exhales a powerful and peculiarly suffocating odor. S. g. 818. In small doses it is highly stimulating, acting like narcotics in general. In large doses it destroys the mucous membrane of the stomach. It is used by the British Pharmacopœia in the preparation of Sodæ valerianæ.

Oiocalym'ma, gen. Oiocalym'matis, Oiocalyp'trum, (ωιον, ωον, 'egg,' and καλυπτειν, 'to cover;') Membrana O'culi cortica'lis. The membrane of the eggshell.

O'ken's Bod'y, Corpus Wolffianum.

Okra, Hibiscus esculentus.

Old Age, Senectus.

OLD MAN, Artemisia abrotanum.

OLD WIFE'S SHIRT, Liriodendron.

O'lea Anima'lia, An'imal oils, (F.) Huiles animales. A name given to fixed oils holding in solution the mucilaginous and gelatinous principles of certain animals, as the Oil of frogs, Oil of scorpions, Oil of spiders, &c. Sometimes, also, the term animal oils is given to empyreumatic oils, produced during the decomposition of animal substances by heat.

O'LEA DESTILLA'TA, O. volatilia.

O'LEA EMPYREUMAT'ICA, Empyreumatic oils, (F.) Huiles empyreumatiques ou pyrogénées, Pyr-élaines. Oils which have an empyreumatic or burnt smell. They are obtained by treating vegetable or animal matters by heat, in close vessels. They do not exist in organized bodies, but are formed during their decomposition by fire. The animal oil of Dippel is an empyreumatic oil.

O'LEA, O. Europa'a, O. sati'va seu lancifo'lia seu polymor'pha seu Gal'lica, Ol'iva, Ol'ive tree, Elm'a, (F.) Olivier; (Fruit) Olive. Nat. Ord. Jasminæ. Sex. Syst. Diandria Monogynia. The leaves of the olive are bitter, and an extract prepared from them, and a substance called olivi'na, the bitter principle of the leaves, have been given in Italy as antiperiodics. The fruit, when pickled, is extremely grateful to some stomachs. Olives, as met with in the shops, are prepared from the green, unripe fruit, repeatedly steeped in water. To this, some quicklime or alkaline salt is added, and, afterwards, they are washed and preserved in a pickle of common salt and water. From this fruit is prepared the Olive oil or Salad oil of the Pharmacopœias, which is obtained by grinding and pressing the olives, when thoroughly ripe. The finer and purer oil issues first by gentle pressure, and the inferior sort on heating what is left, and pressing it more strongly. See Oleum olivæ. In Calabria, an odorous resin exudes from its trunk which is employed as a perfume by the Neapolitans.

A gum flows from certain wild olives, in warm countries, which consists, according to Pelletier, of a resin, a little benzoic acid, and a peculiar substance, called Ol'ivile. It is in yellow masses, of a slightly acid taste, and of a vanilla smell. It is called O'leæ gum'mi, O. resi'na, and O. bal'sanum, (F.) Gomme olivier, and is esteemed astringent and detersive.

O'LEA FIX'A seu PIN'GUIA, Express'ed, Fix'ed, or Fat'ty oils, (F.) Huiles fixes ou grasses, Oléols. All the oils obtained from the seeds or pericarps of vegetables, without distillation, and which are viscid, but slightly odorous and sapid; lighter than water, and insoluble in alcohol. The rancidity of oils depends on the absorption of oxygen, and therefore they should be kept in bulk as much as possible, and in narrownecked bottles, so that a very small surface only can be exposed to the air. All the fixed oils are emollient, and, in a certain dose, they act as purgatives and emetics. They are prepared by expressing the fruit or seed containing them.

O'LEA FUGA'CIA, Fuga'cious oils, (F.) Huiles fugaces. A name given to oils which are so volatile that, in order to obtain them, recourse must be had to a different process from that employed for other essential oils. Such are the oils of jessamine, lily, violet, &c.

O'LEA GAL'LICA, O. Europa'a—o. Lancifolia, O. Europa'a.

O'LEA MEDICINA'LIA, Medic'inal oils, (F.) Huiles Médicinales, Éléols, Solutions par les huiles. A name given to oils prepared by macerating, infusing, or boiling medicinal substances in olive or any other fixed oil. These oils may then be regarded as oily solutions of certain medicinal substances; whence they can never be simple. They have, however, been divided into simple and compound medicinal oils. To the former belong the Oils of St. John's wort, of the Solanum nigrum, &c.; to the other—which have often been called Oily balsams, (F.) Baumes huileux—the Balsams of Fioraventi, Metz, &c. Medicinal oils are, almost always, employed externally.

O'LEA POLYMOR'PHA, O. Europa'a—o. Sativa, O. Europa'a.

O'LEA VOLATIL'IA, O. destilla'ta, Æthero'lea, Vol'atile, Eth'e'ral, Essen'tial, or Distill'ed Oils, Es'sences, (F.) Huiles volatiles ou essentielles ou distillées ou éthérées, Oléolats, Oléules. Oils found in aromatic vegetables, and in every part of them, except in the interior of the seeds. The majority are obtained by distillation; but some by expression. Most of them are prepared by putting the substance from which the oil is to be extracted into a retort, or other vessel suitable for distillation, and adding enough water to cover it; then distilling by a regulated heat into a large refrigerator and separating the distilled oil from the water which comes over with it. They possess unctuousity, inflammability, and viscosity, like the fixed oils; but they are generally odoriferous, pungent, and acrid. The greater part are lighter than water; but some are heavier, and congeal at a moderate temperature. They dissolve, in small quantity, in distilled water, by simple agitation. Almost all are soluble in alcohol. The odor and taste are the usual tests of their goodness. To preserve them, they should be kept in a cool place, in small bottles, quite full and well corked. Volatile oils are possessed of the aromatic properties of the plants whence they are obtained. They are all, when applied externally, stimulant and rubefacient. Pharmaceutical preparations, in which substances are dissolved in volatile oils, (F.) Solutions par les huiles volatiles, are termed by Béral Myrolés.

Oleag'inous, Oleag'inous, Oleo'nus, (F.) Oléagineux; (from oleum.) Oily; containing oil,—as 'an oleaginous or oily mixture.'

Olea'men, gen. Olea'minis, Oleamen'tum, (from oleum.) Any soft ointment prepared of oil.

Olean'der, (from olea, 'the olive,') Rhododendron chrysanthemum.

Oleates. Combinations of oleic acid with oxides of zinc, mercury, and lead, with atropia, morphia, &c., have been suggested for external application, and the oleate of morphia and mercury, made by dissolving oxide of mercury in excess of oleic acid, and adding morphia, has recently been proposed as an excellent local application in persistent or prolonged inflammation, whether acute, chronic, or subacute.

Olecranthri'tis, (olecranon, ἀρθρον, 'joint,' and itis.) Inflammation of the elbow joint.

Olecranthroc'acé, (olecranon, ἀρθρον, 'articulation,' and κακία, 'vice or disease,') Inflammation of the articular surfaces of the elbow.

Olecran'ial, (F.) Olecranien. Relating or belonging to the olecranon.

Oleo'ranoid Cav'ity, see Ulna.

Oleo'ranon, Olecranon, properly Olecranon, (ωλεκράνον.) Olecranon mobile, (F.) Olécrane, (ωλενη, 'the elbow,' and κρανον, 'the head.') Acrole'nion, Additamentum neca'tum, An'con, Proces'sus ancone'us seu uncina'tus, Glans seu Coro'na seu Coro'na post'e'rior seu Additamentum unca'tum Ulnæ, Ver'tex Cu'biti, Patel'la fix'a, Ros'trum exte'rnum seu post'e'rius, Top of the cubit. Head or protection of the elbow. A large process at the upper extremity of the ulna, on which we lean. When this process is fractured, it is apt to be drawn up by the triceps, and much care is required to keep the parts in apposition.

Ole'fant Gas, Chlo'ride of, Dutch Liquid, Bichlo'ride of Eth'yene. This liquid has been exhibited as an anæsthetic.

O'lein, (from oleum.) see Fat—o. Codliver, see Oleum morrhue.

Olenarthroc'acé, (ωλενη, 'ulna,' arthros, 'joints,' κακος, 'bad.') Inflammation, especially of a serofulous kind, of the elbow-joint.

Olené, (ωλενη.) Ulna.

Oleocera'tum, Cerate—o. Aqua subacetum, Ceratum Galeni.

Oleo-cérolé, Cerate.

Oleolats, Olea volatilia.

Oleolés, Olea volatilia.

Oleols, Olea fixa.

Oleores'in, Oleoresi'na. A resin dissolved in volatile oil. The oleoresins are made by passing ether through the powdered drug by displacement, and evaporating the ether until the liquid is of an oily consistence. They not only contain the resin but the essential oil of the drug.

OLEORES'IN OF BLACK PEPPER, Extractum piperis fluidum—o. of Capsicum, Oleoresina capsici—o. of Cubebæ, Oleoresina cubebæ—o. of Fern, Oleoresina filicis—o. of Ginger, Oleoresina zingiberis—o. of Lupulin, Oleoresina lupulinæ—o. of Pepper, Extractum piperis fluidum.

Oleoresi'na, Oleoresin.

OLEORES'INA CAP'SICI, Oleoresin of Cap'sicum. (Prepared by the action of ether on capsicum powder, by displacement, and evaporating the ether.) OLEORES'INA CUBE'Æ (Ph. U. S.), Oleoresin of Cubeb. Prepared like Oleoresina capsici.

OLEORES'INA FIL'ICIS, Oleoresin of Fern, (F.) Extrait Éthéré de Fougère male, E. Oléo-résineux de Fougère male. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the Ph. U. S. (1873). It is prepared like Oleoresina capsici.

OLEORES'INA LUPULI'NÆ (Ph. U. S.), Oleoresin of Lu'pulin. (Prepared like Oleoresina capsici.) OLEORES'INA PIP'ERIS, Extractum piperis fluidum.

OLEORES'INA ZINGIB'ERIS, Oleoresin or Pip'eroïd of Ginger. (Prepared by the action of ether and alcohol on ginger powder, by displacement, and evaporating the volatile part.) Used in the formation of ginger-drops chiefly.

Oléosaccharolé, Elæosaccharum.

Oléosac'charum, Elæosaccharum.

Oléosaccharure, see Elæosaccharum.

Oleo'sus, Oleaginous.

O'l'era, pl. of Olu, 'a potherb,' see Lachanon.

Olette, Min'eral Wa'ters of. At Olette, in the department Pyrénées Orientales, is a thermal spring, which raises the thermometer to 190° Fahr. It is the hottest in France.

Oléules, Olea volatilia.

O'leum, (from olea, 'the olive,') Oil—o. Abietis, see Pinus picea—o. Absinthii, Artemisia absinthium (oil of)—o. Acusticum, Huile acoustique.

O'LEUM ÆTHE'REUM, Spir'itus ætheris oleo'sus, Æthe'ral oil (formed in the distillation of ether), Ætherol, O'leum vi'ni, Oil of wine, Heavy oil of wine, Sweet oil of vit'riol, (F.) Huile douce de vin. A peculiar oleaginous matter, obtained by continuing the distillation, after the whole of the sulphuric ether has passed over in the process for the preparation of the latter. It is used only as an ingredient in the compound spirit of ether. It is official in the Ph. U. S., 1873. Its s. g. is 0.91.

O'LEUM AMMONIA'TUM, Linimentum ammoniæ fortius.

O'LEUM AMYG'DALÆ AMA'RÆ, Oil of Bit'ter Almonds. An oil, obtained by distilling with water the kernels or the fruit of Amygdalus communis, variety Amara. Its action is like that of hydrocyanic acid—four drops having destroyed a dog. Dose, a quarter of a drop to a drop. A drop to a fluidounce of water forms a wash, which has been used in prurigo senilis, and other forms of itching. A cheap and easy method has been found for manufacturing essence of bitter almonds—Nitroben'zole—for flavoring purposes. It is termed by the French Essence de Mirbane.

O'LEUM AMYG'DALÆ RUM, Oleum amygdalæ seu dul'cis (Ph. U. S., 1863) seu amygdalæ expres'sum (Ph. U. S., 1873), Oil of Sweet Almond, Expressed Oil of Almond, (F.) Huile d'amandes douces. (Expressed from sweet almonds, of Amygdalus communis. $\frac{3}{4}$ xvj. of almonds yield $\frac{3}{4}$ v. of oil.) It is inodorous, insipid, and of a pale straw color, and is employed as a demulcent and emollient.

O'LEUM AMYG'DALÆ DUL'CIS, Oleum amygdalarum.

O'LEUM AMYG'DALÆ EXPRES'SUM, Oleum amygdalarum.

O'LEUM ANACAR'DII, see Anacardium occidentale—o. Anethi, see Anethum graveolens.

O'LEUM ANIMA'LE, Animal oil, (F.) Huile animale. An oil obtained by the decomposition of the immediate principles of animals, subjected to the action of heat. It is fetid, and always contains a certain quantity of carbonate of ammonia. See Olea empyreumatica. The name animal oil is sometimes also given to the fat contained in the fatty vesicles. The composition of this fat does not, indeed, differ from that of the fixed oils.

O'LEUM ANIMA'LE DIPPE'LII, O. Cor'nu Cer'vi, O. C. C. rectifica'tum, O. pyroanimalè depura'tum seu anima'le æthe'reum, Pyro'leum os'sium rectifica'tum, Animal oil, Animal oil of Dippel, (F.) Huile animale de Dippel ou de corne de cerf, is obtained by distilling animal matters, especially hartshorn, on the naked fire. The carbonate of ammonia, which it contains, renders it partly soluble in water, and communicates to it the stimulant properties for which it is used in medicine. It is employed as an antispasmodic.

O'LEUM ANIMA'LE EMPYREUMAT'ICUM CHABERTI, O. Empyreumaticum seu anthelminticum seu contra tæ'niam Chabert'i, Empyreumatic oil of Chabert, Oil of Chabert, (F.) Huile anthelmintique de Chabert, is made by adding one part of animal oil to three parts of oil of turpentine, leaving them to combine for four days, and then distilling three parts. An effective anthelmintic. Dose, a teaspoonful three times a day.

O'LEUM ANIMALIZA'TUM PER INFUSIO'NEM, (F.) Huile animalisée par infusion, H. aromatique ou de petits chiens. A preparation formerly esteemed tonic and cephalic. It was obtained by boiling newborn puppies in oil, first depriving them of their blood, skin, and intestines. When the decoction was cold, origanum, thyme, pennyroyal, St. John's wort, and marjoram were added.

O'LEUM ANI'SI, see Pimpinella anisum—o. Anthelminticum Chaberti, Oleum animale empyreumaticum Chaberti—o. Anthemidis, see Anthemis nobilis—o. Aurantii, see Citrus aurantium—o. Balaninum, Guilandina moringa (oleum)—o. Balsami, see Amyris opobalsamum.

O'LEUM BENZO'INI, Oil of Ben'zoin or Ben'jamin. An oil obtained by heating, in a sandbath, the matter which remains after benzoic acid has been separated from benzoin by the aid of heat. It has been regarded as balsamic and sudorific.

O'LEUM BERGA'MII, see Bergamot — o. Betulae, see Betula alba.

O'LEUM BU'BULUM, Neat's-foot oil, (F.) Huile de pieds de bœuf. It is obtained by boiling in water for a long time the feet or bones of the beef — Bos domesticus — previously deprived of the hoof.

O'LEUM CA'CAO SPISSA'TUM, Butter of cacao — o. Cadinum, see Juniperus oxycedrus — o. Cajuputi, Caieput (oil) — o. Camphoræ, see Camphor — o. Camphoratum, Linimentum camphoræ — o. Carapæ, see Carapa Guianensis — o. Cari seu Carui, see Carum — o. Caryophylli, see Eugenia caryophyllata.

O'LEUM CED'RINUM, Essentia de cedra, (F.) Huile de cédrat. The oil of the peel of citrons, obtained in Italy in a particular manner, without distillation.

O'LEUM CHABER'TI, O. animale empyreumaticum Chaberti — o. Chenopodii, see Chenopodium anthelminticum — o. Cicinum, see Ricinus communis — o. Cinnamomi, see Laurus cinnamomum — o. Contra tæniæm Chaberti, Oleum animale empyreumaticum Chaberti.

O'LEUM COPAI'BÆ, Oil of Copai'ba. A formula for its preparation may be found in the Ph. U. S., 1873. Dose, gtt. x-xxx.

O'LEUM CORIAN'DRI, see Coriandrum sativum — o. Cornu cervi, O. animale Dippelii — o. Crotonis, see Croton tiglium — o. Cubebæ, see Piper cubeba.

O'LEUM ERIG'ERONTIS CANADEN'SIS, Oil of Canada Fleabane. (By distillation from the herb.) See Erigeron Philadelphicum.

O'LEUM EUPHOR'BIAE LATHYR'IDIS, see Euphorbia lathyris — o. Fixum nucum cocos butyraceæ, see Cocos butyraceæ — o. Fœniculi, see Anethum — o. Gabianum, Petroleum — o. Gallinæ, Alkalæ — o. Gaultheriæ, see Gaultheria.

O'LEUM GRAM'INIS IN'DICI, Grass oil of Nemaour, Gingergrass oil, Roosa oil; called, by the perfumers, oil of geranium, and oil of rose geranium, and occasionally sold as oil of spikenard, is obtained from Andropogon calamus aromaticus of India. It is used as a perfume, and like the essential oils in general.

O'LEUM HEDEO'MÆ, see Hedeoma pulegioides — o. Hyperici, see Hypericum perforatum — o. Infernale, Jatropha curcas (oil) — o. Jecinoris aselli, Oleum jecoris aselli — o. O'LEUM MOR'RHUÆ (Ph. U. S., 1873), O. Jec' oris Aselli, seu Jec'oris Mor'rhuæ seu Jec'in'oris Aselli seu Hep'atis mor'rhuæ, Azuni'gia Ga'di, A. Piscina marina, Cod'liver oil, Cod oil, (F.) Huile de morue ou de Foie de morue. The animal oil, which appears under this name in commerce, is obtained from several of the species belonging to the genus Gadus. The Cod, Ga'dus mor'rhuæ (Ph. B., 1864); the Dorse or Dorsch, Ga'dus Calla'rias, Mor'rhuæ America'na; the Coalfish, Ga'dus carbonarius; the Burbot, Ga'dus lo'ta, Lo'ta vulga'ris; the Pollock, Ga'dus pollo'chius; the Ling, Lo'ta mol'va; the Torsk, Bros'mius vulga'ris. There is reason, also, to believe that on the American coast it is obtained, too, from the Hake, Ga'dus merlu'cius, and the Haddock, Ga'dus æglio'nus. The clearest sorts are generally used. An excellent eutrophic in tuberculous and strumous affections, rheumatism, chronic cutaneous diseases, tumors of the mammae, &c. The dose for an adult is from fʒij. to fʒiiss. It is sometimes combined with lactophosphate of lime.

Cod'liver o'lein, prepared by subjecting codliver oil to a low temperature and separating the olein by pressure, has been used in the same cases as the oil.

Skatelliver oil, O'leum ra'ia, obtained from Ra'ia ba'tis, and R. clava'ta, is used in the same cases and doses.

O'LEUM E MUCILAGIN'IBUS, Oil of Mucilages, (Rad. althææ rec., lbs., Sem. lini, Sem. fœnugræci, aa ʒij., Aquæ, Oij. Boil for half an hour; add Ol. oliv., Oiv.; continue the boiling till the water is nearly consumed, and pour off the oil.) Emollient.

O'LEUM MYRIS'TICÆ, see Myristica moschata — o. Myristicæ expressum, see Myristica — o. Neroli, see Citrus aurantium — o. Nucistæ, see Myristica — o. Nucistæ æthereum, see Myristica.

O'LEUM OLIVÆ, O. Oliva'rum, Ol'ive, Sweet, or Sal'ad oil. An inodorous, insipid, and transparent oil; obtained by expression from the olive, when ripe. It is demulcent and emollient, — possessing the qualities of the fixed oils in general.

An inferior kind, obtained by boiling olives in water, and skimming the oil from the surface, is also used in Pharmacy. See Olea Europæa.

O'LEUM OMPHAC'INUM, Omotribes — o. Origani, see Origanum — o. Oxidi cupri viride, Balsam, green, of Metz — o. de Palmâ Christi, see Ricinus communis — o. Palmæ, see Cocos butyraceæ — o. Succini rectificatum, see Succinum.

O'LEUM SULPHURA'TUM, Bal'sanum sulphuris simplex, Sulph'uretted oil. (Sulphur, lot., ʒij., Ol. olivæ, lbj. Heat the oil in a large iron pot, and throw in the sulphur by degrees; stirring the mixture after each addition till they unite.) It is stimulating, and was formerly much used in coughs, asthma, &c., and, externally, to foul ulcers.

O'LEUM TABA'CI, Oil of Tobac'co. In the form of ointment (gtt. xx. to ʒj. of lard), applied to indolent tumors, ulcers, &c. (An empyreumatic oil, obtained from coarsely-powdered tobacco by heating the retort to dull redness. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

O'LEUM TAR'TARI PER DELIQUUM, Liquor potassæ subcarbonatis—o. Templinum, see Pinus mughos.

O'LEUM TEREBINTHINÆ, Oil of Turpentine. The volatile oil distilled from the turpentine of Pinus palustris and other species of Pinus.

O'LEUM TEREBINTHINÆ RECTIFICATUM, O. puri purissimum, O'leum Terebinthinæ purificatum seu terebinthinæ æthereum, Rectified oil of turpentine, Spirits of turpentine. Common oil of turpentine is also called Common oil of Spike, O'leum spicæ vulgaris. (Olei terebinth., Oj., Aquæ, Oiv. Distil over the oil.) It is stimulant, diuretic, anthelmintic, and rubefacient. Dose, grt. x. to f3j.

Guestonian Embrocation for rheumatism consists of Ol. terebinth., Ol. oliv., aa f3iss., Acid. sulph. dil., f3iij.

O'LEUM THEOBROMÆ, Butter of cacao—o. Theobromæ cacao expressum, Butter of cacao—o. Thymi, see Thymus—o. Tiglii, see Croton tiglium.

O'LEUM VALERIANÆ, Oil of Valerian. The distilled oil of the root of Valeriana officinalis. Ph. U. S., 1873. Dose, four or five drops.

O'LEUM VINI, O. æthereum—o. Vitrioli, Sulphuric acid—o. Vitrioli dulce, Æther sulphuricus.

Olfactif, Olfactory.

Olfaction, Olfactus, (olfacere, olfactum,—olere, 'to smell,' and facere, 'to make,'—'to smell,') Osphresia, Osphra'sia, Osphre'sia, Osmes'sia, Odo-ratio, Odoratus, Sensus osmometricus, Sense of smell, Smelling, (F.) Odorat. The sense by which we perceive the impressions made on the olfactory nerves by the odorous particles suspended in the atmosphere. The olfactory nerve or first pair has usually been considered the great nerve of smell; and it is probably the nerve of special sensibility, general sensibility being communicated by the branches of the fifth pair, distributed on the pituitary membrane of the nose and sinuses.

Olfactive, Olfactory.

Olfactory, Olfactive, Olfactivus, Olfactorius, Osphrancticus, Osphrantorius, Osphreticus, (F.) Olfactif. That which belongs or relates to the sense of smell, as olfactory cells, olfactory nerves, &c.

OLFATORY BULB, see Olfactory nerves—o. Cells, Cells, olfactory.

OLFATORY FORAMINA, (F.) Trous olfactifs, are the holes in the cribriform plate of the ethmoid bone, through which the olfactory nerve passes.

OLFATORY GANGLION, see Olfactory nerves—o. Hairs, see Cells, olfactory—o. Lobe, see Olfactory nerves—o. Membrane, see Olfactory nerves and Pituitary membrane.

OLFATORY NERVES, Ethmoidal nerves, Parvum Nervorum cerebri, Nervi odoratorii, Processus mamillares seu papillares seu mamillares cerebri ad nares seu papillares, Carunculae mamillares,—the first pair of encephalic nerves. This nerve, which probably arises from the medulla oblongata, is observed to leave the brain, opposite the inner part of the fissure of Sylvius, by three roots; which, by their union, form a triangular knot or expansion. When it reaches the ethmoid fossa it expands and forms a triangular ganglion, or grayish, soft bulb,—Bulbus olfactorius, Olfactory bulb, ganglion, tubercle, or lobe,—which furnishes, from its inferior surface, the branches that have to be distributed to the nasal fossæ. These filaments are numerous; they pass through the foramina in the cribriform plate and enter the nasal fossæ. They are distinguished into the internal, external, and middle. The former are distributed over the mucous membrane, covering the outer paries of the nasal fossæ; the second descend upon the septum, and the third are lost, almost immediately, on the portion of the pituitary membrane that lines the vault of the fossæ, hence sometimes called the olfactory membrane.

OLFATORY RODS, Rods, olfactory—o. Tubercle, see Olfactory nerves.

OLIGÆ'mia, (oligo, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Anæmia, Hæmaphoria, Hypæmia.

OLIGID'ria, (oligo, and ἵδρω, 'sweat,') Ischidrosis.

OLIGO, (from ολιγος, 'few, little,') in composition has these significations.

OLIGOBLEN'nia, (oligo, and βλεννα, 'mucus,') A deficiency of mucus.

OLIGOCHOL'ia, (oligo, and χολη, 'bile,') Paucity of bile.

OLIGOCH'ylus, (oligo, and χυλος, 'juice,' 'chyle,') An epithet for food which is but little nutritive; which furnishes little chyle.

OLIGOCOP'ria, (oligo, and κοπος, 'excrement,') Scantiness of alvine evacuations.

OLIGOcys'tic, (oligo, and cyst,) A term applied to cystic tumors which contain a few cysts, a monocystic tumor being included in one cyst.

OLIGOcythæ'mia, (oligo, κυτος, 'a cell,' and αἷμα, 'blood,') (F.) Oligocythémie. A condition of the blood in which there is paucity of red corpuscles.

OLIGODAC'rya, (oligo, and δακρυ, 'a tear,') Paucity of the lachrymal secretion.

OLIGOGALAC'tia, (oligo, and γαλαξ, gen. γαλακτος, 'milk,') Agalactia.

OLIGOGA'lia, Agalactia.

OLIGOHÆ'mia, (oligo, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Anæmia, Hæmaphoria, Hypæmia.

OLIGOMA'nia, (oligo, and mania,) see Melancholy.

OLIGOPo'sia, (oligo, and ποσις, 'drink,') Diminution in the quantity of drinks.

OLIGOPSYCH'ia, (oligo, and ψυχη, 'mind,') Imbecility.

OLIGOSIA'lia, (oligo, and σialον, 'saliva,') Paucity of saliva.

OLIGOSPER'mia, (oligo, and σπερμα, 'sperm,') Paucity of spermatid secretion.

OLIGOSPON'dylus, (oligo, and σπονδυλος, 'a vertebra,') A monster with defective vertebrae.

OLIGOTRICH'ia, (oligo, and τριξ, gen. τριξος, 'hair,') Want of hair. Paucity of hair. Poorly developed hair.

OLIGOTROPH'ia, (oligo, and τροφω, 'I nourish,') Deficient nourishment.

OLIGURE'sia, Oligure'sis, Oligoure'sis, Oligoure'sia, Oliguria, (oligo, and ουρω, 'I pass urine,') Morbidly diminished urinary secretion.

OLIGU'ria, Oliguresia.

OLISTHE'ma, gen. Olisthe'matis, (ολισθημα, from ολισσινω, 'I slip,') Luxation.

OLI'va, ('the olive,') see Olea.

OLI'væ, Corpora olivaria.

OLIVaire, Oliveshaped. Cautère Olivaire, of the French surgeons, is a cautery whose extremity is terminated by a button having the shape of an olive.

OLIVA'ris, Oliveshaped.

OLIVary, Oliveshaped—o. Bodies, Corpora olivaria.

OLIVARY FASCICULUS. A fasciculus of nervous matter formed by the union of one of the divisions of the anterior column of the medulla oblongata with fibres from the olivary nucleus.

OLIVARY NUCLEUS, see Corpus dentatum.

OLIVARY PROC'ESS, Processus Olivaris, is a small ridge, running transversely between, and a little behind, the roots of the anterior clinoid processes of the sphenoid bone, and by some considered as the fourth clinoid process.

O'mo, (from ωμος, 'shoulder,') in the composition of anatomical terms, means the scapula or shoulder-blade; in other cases, the shoulder.

Omoclavic'ular, see Coracoclavic'ular.

Omocot'ylé, see Glene.

Omodyn'ia, (omo, and δυνη, 'pain,') Pain in the shoulder.

OMODYN'IA RHEUMAT'ICA. Rheumatism of the back, particularly of the shoulders.

Omohyo'i'deus, Cor'acohyo'i'deus, Cos'tohyo'i'deus, Hyo'i'dis Quar'tus Mus'culus, (F.) Scapulo-hyo'idien, Omohyo'idien, Omoplat-hyo'idien. This muscle is situate obliquely at the sides and front of the neck. It is slender, long, and flat. It arises from the superior costa of the scapula, near the semilunar notch, and from the ligament that runs across it, and is inserted at the sides of the inferior margin of the body of the os hyoides. It consists of two fasciculi, united by a common tendon, and is a true digastric muscle. It depresses the os hyoides, carrying it a little backwards and to one side, except when it acts with its fellow, when the bone is depressed, and drawn obliquely backwards.

Omophag'ia, (ωμοφαγια,) Omosit'ia, (ωμος, 'raw,' and φαγω, 'I eat,') Fondness for raw food. Eating of raw food.

Omoph'agus, Homoph'agus (improperly). One who eats raw flesh.

Omoplat-hyo'idien, Omohyoideus.

Omoplate, (omo, and πλατυς, 'broad, flat,') Scapula — o. Col de l', Collum scapulæ.

O'mos, (ωμος,) Crude, Humerus.

Omosit'ia, (ωμοσιτια, from ωμος, 'raw,' and σιτια, 'food,') Omophagia.

Omoster'num. The interarticular fibro-cartilage interposed between the clavicle and sternum has been so called.

Omotar'ichos, (ωμοταριχος, from omo, and ταριχος, 'pickled,') Salsamen'tum crudum; Salt'ed Tun'ny Fish, in particular. Properly, the neck or shoulder-piece of a salted animal. Once much recommended against the bites of vipers, and in hydrophobia.

O'motes, (ωμοτης,) Crudity.

Omotoc'ia, (ωμοτοκια, from ωμος, 'unripe,' and τοκος, 'birth,') Abortion.

Omot'ribes, (ωμοτριβης, from ωμος, 'unripe,' and τριβω, 'I bruise,') Omphac'inum O'leum. Oil expressed from unripe olives.

Om'phacē, (ομφακη, from ομφαξ, 'an unripe grape,') Verjuice.

Omphac'inum O'leum, Omotribes.

Ompha'cion, (ομφακιον, from ομφαξ, 'an unripe grape,') Succus u'væ acer'bæ, Ompha'cium. The juice of unripe grapes. Also, Verjuice.

Om'phacis, (ομφακίς, from ομφαξ, 'unripe,') An unripe gallnut.

Omphac'ites (Vi'num), (ομφακίτης,) A name given to wine prepared from the unripe grape.

Ompha'cium, (ομφακιον,) Omphacion, Verjuice.

Omphacom'eli, gen. Omphacomél'itis, (ομφαξ, 'an unripe grape,' and μελι, 'honey,') A sort of oxymel, made of the juice of unripe grapes and honey.

Omphalelco'sis, (omphalos, and ελκος, 'an ulcer,') Ulceration of the navel.

Omphalex'ochē, (omphalos, and εξεχη, 'a standing out,') Exomphalus.

Omphali'tis, gen. Omphali'tidis, (omphalos, and itis,) Inflammation of the umbilicus.

Om'phalo, (ομφαλος, 'navel,') in composition, navel.

Omphalocar'pus, (omphalos, and καρπος, 'fruit,') Galium aparine.

Omphaloc'e'le, (omphalos, and κλη, 'rupture,') Exomphalos.

Om'phalocera'niodid'ymus, (from omphalos, κρανιον, 'the cranium,' and διδυμος, 'a twin,') A double monster, in which the umbilical cord or the rudiment of one foetus is rooted in the cranium of another.

Omphaloenter'ic. That which belongs to the umbilicus and intestine, as the omphaloenter'ic canal. See Vesicula umbilicalis.

Omphalomanti'a, Om'phalomancy, (omphalos, and μαντια, 'prophecy,') A species of divination, practised by credulous matrons, who pretend to be able to know the number of children a female will have, by the number of knots in the navel string of the child.

Omphalomesenter'ic, Omphalomesera'ic, Omphalomesenter'icus, Omphalomesara'icus, (omphalos, and mesenterium, 'the mesentery,') Appertaining or relating to the umbilicus and mesentery.

OMPHALOMESENTER'IC or OMPHALOMESERA'IC VES'SELS, Vitel'lomesenter'ic, Vit'elline ves'sels. Haller gave this name to two very fine vessels, which spread their ramifications on the parietes of the umbilical vesicle. There is an omphalomesenteric artery and vein. The omphalomesenteric artery is a branch of the superior mesenteric; — the vein empties itself into the trunk, or into one of the branches of the superior mesenteric. Vespau affirms that they inosculate with a branch of the second or third order of those great vessels, with those in particular that are distributed to the caecum, and he regards them to be the vessels of nutrition of the umbilical vesicle. They are occasionally met with in the foetus, at the full period, under the form of whitish filaments, which extend from the mesenteric vessels to the umbilicus.

Omphalomesera'ic, Omphalomesenteric — o. Vessels, Omphalomesenteric vessels.

Omphalon'cus, (omphalos, and ογκος, 'a swelling,') Omphalophyma.

Omphaloneur'on, (omphalos, and νευρον, 'a sinew, a ligament,') Funiculus umbilicalis.

Omphaloneurorrh'ex'is, (omphaloneuron, and ρηξις, 'rupture,') Omphalorrhexis.

Omphalophlebi'tis, gen. Omphalophlebi'tidis, (omphalos, and phlebitis, 'inflammation of a vein,') Inflammation of the umbilical vein.

Omphalophy'ma, gen. Omphalophy'matis, Omphalon'cus, (omphalos, and φυμα, 'tumor,') A tumefaction of the navel.

Omphalopropto'sis, (omphalos, and προπτωσις, 'a falling forwards,') Exomphalos.

Omphalorrhag'ia, Omphalor'rhagē, (omphalos, and ρηγνυμι, 'I break out,') Hemorrhage from the umbilicus, in the newborn in particular.

Omphalorrh'ex'is, (omphalos, and ρηξις, 'rupture,') Omphaloneurorrh'ex'is. Rupture of the navel string.

Om'phalos, (ομφαλος,) Umbilicus.

Om'phalosite, (omphalos, and σιτος, 'nourishment,') A monster that possesses an imperfect kind of life, which ceases when the umbilical cord is divided.

Omphaloso'ter, (omphalo, and σωτηρ, 'preserver,') An instrument devised for the reduction of a prolapsed umbilical cord, in cases in which it is impossible to accomplish this with the hand.

Omphalot'omy, (ομφαλοτομία,) Omphalatom'ia, (omphalos, and τομη, 'section,') The division of the navel string.

Om'phalus, (ομφαλος,) Umbilicus.

O'mus, (ωμος,) Crude, Humerus.

On'agra, Oenothera biennis.

Ona'nia, (after Onan, Gen. xxxviii. 9,) Masturbation.

O'nanism, Masturbation.

Onanist'ic, Onanist'icus. Relating or appertaining to onanism.

O'nar, (οναρ,) Somnium.

Oncol'ogy, Oncolog'ia, (F.) Oncologie, (oncos, and λογος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on tumors.

On'come. A Scotch term, according to Sir Walter Scott, for "mysterious diseases, which baffle the regular physician."

On'cos, (ογκος,) Tumor.

Onco'ses, (oncos, and osis,) Tumors, as diseases.

Onco'sis, (ογκωσις,) Intumescence.

Oncot'omy, Oncotomia, Onkot'omy, (oncos, and τομη, 'incision,') The opening of an abscess with a cutting instrument, or the excision of a tumor.

Onction, (from ungere, unctum, 'to anoint,') Inunction.

On'cus, (ογκος,) Swelling, Tumor.

Ondulation, (from unda, 'a wave,') Fluctuation.

One'berry, Paris.

Oneirocrit'icus, Oneiroc'rites, (oneiros, and κρισις, 'judgment,') One who judges according to dreams.

Oneirodyn'ia, (oneiros, and οδυνη, 'pain,') A painful dream. Incubus and Somnambulism are oneirodynia.

ONEIRODYN'IA ACTI'VA, Paroniria, Somnambulism — o. Gravans, Incubus.

Oneirodyn'ic Gravative, Incubus.

Oneirog'mus, (ονειρωγμος,) Oneirog'ynē. A lascivious dream; pollution; nocturnal pollution.

Oneirogonorrhœ'a, Pollution, nocturnal.

Oneirog'onos, (oneiros, and γονος, 'seed,') Pollution.

Oneirol'ogy, Oneirolog'ia, (oneiros, and λογος, 'a description,') The doctrine of dreams.

Oneiromanti'a, (oneiros, and μαντια, 'divination,') The art of divining by dreams; or of interpreting dreams.

Onei'ron, (ονειρον,) Somnium.

Oneiron'osus, (oneiros, and οσος, 'a disease,') Somnia'tio morbo'sa. Morbid, uneasy dreaming.

Oneiropole'sis, (ονειροπολησις,) Somnium.

Oneiropol'ia, (ονειροποληια,) Somnium.

Onei'ros, (ονειρος,) Somnium.

On'era Al'vi, 'load of the bowels,' Excrement — o. Ventris, 'load of the belly,' Excrement.

Onglade, (from ungula, dim. of unguis, 'a nail,') See Onychogryphosis.

Ongle, (from [L.] unguis,) Nail — o. Incarnē, Onychogryphosis.

Ongl'ee (F.), Digitorum stu'por à gelū. Painful numbness at the extremities of the fingers, caused by cold.

Onglet, (after Ongle,) Pterygion.

Onguent, Unguentum — o. Ægyptiacque, Unguentum Ægyptiacum — o. d'Althéa, Unguentum de Althæa — o. d'Arcana, Unguentum elemi compositum — o. Basilicum, Ceratum resinae — o. Blanc, Ceratum cetacei — o. de Blanc de baleine, Unguentum cetacei — o. Blanc de Rhazes, Unguentum plumbi subcarbonatis — o. de Céruse, Unguentum plumbi subcarbonatis — o. Citrin contre la gale, Unguentum hydrargyri nitratis — o. Digestif, see Unguentum digestivum simplex — o. Gris, Unguentum oxidi hydrargyri cinereum — o. de Guimaue, Unguentum de althæa — o. de Laurier, Unguentum laurinum — o. Mercuriel, Unguentum hydrargyri.

Onguent de la Mère. An ointment, used in France especially, prepared by mixing together olive oil, lard, butter, suet, yellow wax, litharge, and pitch.

Oöph'orum, (oon, and φερω, 'I bear,') Ovary.

Oöri'tis, Oaritis.

Oötoc'ia, (from ωοτοκεω, 'I lay eggs,') Ovulation.

Op, as a prefix, see Ob.

Opac'ity, Opac'itas, Opaque'ness, (opac'us, 'obscure,') Quality of that which is opaque. The property possessed by some bodies of not allowing the light to traverse them. It is opposed to transparency. Opacity of the cornea constitutes albugo or leucoma; — opacity of the crystalline causes cataract. See Ceratitis suppurans.

Opalescent, Opaline.

Op'aline, Opalescent. That which resembles the opal. A fluid is said to be opaline when milky, and when it presents an appearance more or less like that of the opal.

OP'ALINE PATCH, see Patch, opaline, and Condyloina.

Opaque, Opac'us, Opac'ous. An epithet given to bodies, which do not permit the passage of rays of light. The opaque cornea is the sclerotic, in contradistinction to the transparent cornea or true cornea.

Opaque'ness, Opacity.

O'pé, (οπη) Foramen.

O'pening, Orificium, Os, Ostium, Apertura.

Opeoce'le, (ope, and κηλη, 'rupture,') see Hernia.

Opera'tio, (opus, gen. operis, 'work,') Action.

Operation — o. Chemica seu Pharmaceutica, Operation, chemical, &c. — o. Chirurgica, see Operation.

OPERA'TIO MA'JOR. Ovariectomy performed with a long incision is so called, as the same operation with a short incision is called Opera'tio Mi'nor.

OPERA'TIO MI'NOR, see Operatio major — o. Simplex, Haplotomia.

Opera'tion, Opera'tio. The application of instruments to the human body with the view of removing diseases. The object of an operation, opera'tio chirurgica, is generally to divide or reunite parts, to extract extraneous or noxious bodies, and to replace organs that are wanting, by different instruments or artificial means. The principal operative methods have been called Syn'thesis, Dis'resis, Exc'resis, and Proth'sis. Frequently the most difficult subject connected with an operation is to decide when it is absolutely called for or advisable, and when improper.

OPERA'TION, BILAT'ERAL, see Lithotomy — o. Cæsarienne, Cæsarean section.

OPERA'TION, CHEM'ICAL OR PHARMACEU'TICAL, Opera'tio chem'ica seu pharmaceutica, is any process whose object is the preparation of medicines; their combinations with each other, analysis, and decomposition; — such are, solution, distillation, sublimation, evaporation, digestion, maceration, infusion, decoction, calcination, &c. Some of these operations are mechanical; others, really chemical.

OPERA'TION, HIGH, see Lithotomy — o. à Lambeau, see Flap — o. Lateral, see Lithotomy — o. Sigaultian, Symphiseotomy.

Oph'rys, (οφρυς) Supercilium.

Ophthal'magra, (ophthalmos, and αγρα, 'a seizure,') A sudden gouty or other pain of the eye.

Ophthalmal'gia, (ophthalmos, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the eye, Neuralgia of the eye.

Ophthalmempas'ma, gen. Ophthalmempas'matis, (ophthalmos, and εμπασσειν, 'to strew upon,') Collyrium siccum.

Ophthal'mia, (from ophthalmos,) Ophthalmi'tis, Oculo'rum inflamma'tio, Cau'ma ophthalmi'tis, Ophthalmopo'nia, Inflamma'tion of the eye, Ophthalm'ia, (F.) Ophthalmie, Ophthalmite, Inflam'mation de l'œil, Catarrhe oculaire. Three great varieties of ophthalmia, independently of the acute and chronic (which conditions occur in all inflammations), may be reckoned: — the Ophthal'mia membrana'rum, O. purulen'ta, and O. tar'si. The first is characterized by the general symptoms of ophthalmia — pain and redness of the eye or its appendages, with intolerance of light, and unusual flow of tears, the inflammation being seated chiefly in the coats of the eyeball. It is the Hymenophthal'mia, Ophthalmia tarax'is seu hu'mida seu ve'ra seu chemo'sis, Conjunctivi'tis, Inflamma'tio conjunctivæ, Symphymeni'tis, Syndes'mi'tis, Catarr'h'al ophthalmia, Ophthalmococonjunctivi'tis, Ophthalmodesmi'tis, Epiph'ora (Galen), Conjuncti'val or Lach'rymose ophthalm'ia, Taraxis (Paulus of Ægina), Chemo'sis (Aëtius), (F.) Conjunctivite, Inflammation de la conjonctive.

In Ophthal'mia purulen'ta seu purifor'mis, Blennophthal'mia, Bleph'aroblennorrhæ'a, Ophthalmoblennorrhæ'a, Blennorrhæ'a oc'uli, the internal surface of the palpebræ associates in the inflammation of the eyeball, and there is a copious secretion of a purulent fluid. An epidemic and contagious (?) variety of this is the Ægyptian ophthalmia, O. epidem'ica seu purulen'ta epidem'ica seu contagio'sa seu catarrha'lis bel'lica seu bel' lica seu Asiatica seu purulen'ta contagio'sa, Blennorrhœa oculi Egyptiaca, Læmophthal'mia, Conjunctivitis paromuco'sa contagio'sa seu Egyptiaca seu purulenta, Blepharot'is glandula'ris contagio'sa, Adenit'is palpebra'rum contagio'sa, Mil'itary ophthalmia, Sup'purative or granulous ophthalmia, Epidem'ic contagio'sa ophthalmia—called Egyptian, from its prevalence in Egypt during the British Expedition under Sir Ralph Abercrombie. The inflammation is rapid and destructive; granulations shoot from the tunica conjunctiva, and occasionally there is intolerable pain, often succeeded by delirium.

In newborn children, a species of purulent ophthalmia, O. purulen'ta infan'tum seu neonato'rum, Blepharophthalmia seu Lippitu'doseu Blennorrhœa oculi seu Ophthalm' moblenorrhœa seu Blepharoblennorrhœa seu Blepharopyorrhœa seu Pyophthal'mia, Conjunctivitis infan'tum purulen'ta, Psorophthal'mia neonato'rum, Adenosynchitonit'is, Adenologadit'is, (F.) Ophthalmie puriforme des nouveau-nés, in which the palpebræ are florid and peculiarly tumid, is by no means uncommon. It seems to be caused by acrid discharges from the mother, applied to the eye of the infant during its exit, or to the stimulus of the light when the child first opens its eyes. A severe form of puru-lent ophthalmia—Hyperconjunctivite (Piorry)—is produced by the application of gonorrhœal matter to the eye. It is the Ophthalmia gonorrhœica, Blennorrhœa oculi gonorrhœica, Gonorrhœolepharrhœa, Conjunctivitis blennorrhag'ica seu gonorrhœica, Gonorrhœal ophthalmia, Gonorrhœal conjunctivitis, (F.) Ophthalmie blennorrhagique, Conjunctivite blennorrhagique.

Ophthalmia is likewise modified by the condition of the constitution, and hence we have strumous, variolous, exanthematous, and other inflammations of the conjunctiva.

The third variety, Tarsal ophthalmia, O. tar'si seu glutino'sa, Blepharophthal'mia, Blepharot'is, Blepharotit'is, Blepharitis, B. marginalis seu ciliaris, Blepharadenit'is, Adenophthalmia, is seated chiefly in the tarsus; the sebaceous crypts secreting a viscid and acrid fluid that glues and ulcerates its edges, and irritates the eye.

When accompanied with ulceration and much itching, it constitutes Psorophthal'mia, Oculi palpebra'rum sca'bies pruriginosa, Blepharophthal'mia ulcero'sa, Ophthalmia psorica, Tinea tarsi seu ciliaris, Tinea of the eyelids.

The different forms of inflammation of the conjunctiva are thus classed by M. Desmarres:

Conjunctivitis....	{	1. Pure or phlegmonous.	{	Contagious.	{	Erysipelatous.
		2. Pustular.		Nonecontagious.		Variolous.
		3. Granular or catarrhal.		Miasmatic.		Morbillous.
		Exanthematic.....		Scarlatinous.
		4. Purulent.....		Of new-born infants.
				Gonorrhœal.
				Egyptian.

Another rare form of ophthalmia is met with, Diphtherit'ic Conjunctivitis, in which the discharge often assumes the form of thin, yellowish patches, sometimes of thick opaque membranes. It is complicated with corneal affections, and the prognosis is unfavorable. In Phlyctenular Ophthalmia, Conjunctivitis phlyctenulo'sa seu pustulo'sa, Scrofulous corneit'is, Herpes of the conjunctiva and cor'nea, there is generally seen a triangular bundle of conjunctival vessels, at the apex of which one or more small herpetic vesicles or pustules appear, especially at the outer side of the cornea. When the pustules are very numerous, it has been termed Pannus herpeticus.

Exanthematous or Exanthemat'ic ophthalmia is called O. morbillo'sa, O. scarlatino'sa, O. variolo'sa, O. erysipelato'sa, according to the disease with which it is associated, whether measles, scarlatina, smallpox, or erysipelas.

Conjunctivitis, when slight, requires little treatment; the antiphlogistic regimen—and particularly avoiding exposure to light—being all that is necessary. When more severe, along with this, general and local bloodletting, especially by leeches to the side of the septum narium, must be employed, so as to make a decided impression on the system; with nauseating doses of antimony, purgatives, blisters (at some distance from the organ), refrigerants, and astringents, cold or warm, according to circumstances, to the eye. In Purulent Ophthalmia these measures must be still more actively employed, otherwise disorganization will speedily follow; the granulations which form on the adnata of the eyelids may be removed with the scissors, and the sore be touched with a solution of alum. Ophthalmia Tar'si must be treated on general principles, when severe. It usually, however, requires merely the antiphlogistic regimen, with the occasional use, especially at night, of a slightly stimulating ointment, such as the unguentum hydrargyri nitricoöxydi, considerably reduced with lard. The ointment prevents the eyelids from being glued together during the night, and thus obviates the irritation caused by attempts at separating them in the morning.

Ophthalmia'ter, gen. Ophthalmia'tri, (ophthalmos, and iateros, 'a physician.') Oculist.

Ophthalmiat'ria, Ophthalmiatrotech'nia, Ophthalmotherapi'a, (F.) Oculistique. The art of the oculist. Treatment of diseases of the eye.

Ophthalmiatric, Ophthalmiatricus, (F.) Ophthalmiatrice. Relating or appertaining to the treatment of diseases of the eye.

Ophthalmiatrotechnica, (ophthalmiater, and τεχνη, 'art.') Ophthalmiatry.

Ophthalmic, Ophthalmicus, (F.) Ophthalmique, (from ophthalmos.) That which relates or belongs to the eye.

OPHTHALMIC ARTERY, Arteria ophthalmica, A. orbitale (Ch.), arises from the internal carotid, and issues from the cranium by the foramen opticum. At first it is situated at the outer and lower side of the optic nerve, but ascends above this nerve and passes towards the inner angle of the orbit. It furnishes in its course the lacrimal, centralis retinæ, infraorbitalis, ciliaries, anterior ciliaries, inferior and superior musculars, anterior and posterior ethmoidals, and superior and inferior palpebrals. After having given off these, it divides into two branches—the frontal and nasal, which furnish a number of ramifications—some superficial, others deep-seated.

OPHTHALMIC GLAND, Lenticular or Ciliary ganglion, Ganglion ophthalmicum seu semilunare seu ciliare, G. orbitale (Ch.), is one of the smallest ganglions of the body, and formed by the 5th and 3d pairs of encephalic nerves. It is situated at the outer side of the optic nerve near the bottom of the orbit; is irregularly quadrilateral and flat; its color of a reddish-gray. Behind, it communicates by its posterior angles—by means of nervous filaments—with the nasal nerve of the ophthalmic, the motor oculi, and offsets from the sympathetic. Each of its anterior angles furnishes a fasciculus of small nerves. These are the ciliary nerves.

OPHTHALMIC NERVE, Ophthalmic Nerve of Willis, Orbito-frontal (Ch.), is the smallest and first of the three branches given off by the 5th pair. It proceeds along the external paries of the cavernous sinus, and enters the orbit by the sphenoidal fissure. It divides into three branches, one, external,—the lacrimal nerve; another, superior—frontal nerve; and the last, internal—the nasal nerve. See Lacrimal, Frontal, and Nasal.

OPHTHALMIC OR OPTIC REMEDY, Ophthalmicum seu Opticum, (F.) Topique ophthalmique, is a medicine employed locally in ophthalmia.

OPHTHALMIC SINUS, see Cavernous sinus.

OPHTHALMIC VEIN has the same arrangement as the artery, which it accompanies in all its divisions. It issues from the orbit at the inner part of the sphenoidal fissure, and discharges its blood into the cavernous sinus.

The name Facial Ophthalmic has been given to the branch by which the facial vein communicates with the ophthalmic.

Ophthalmica, Euphrasia officinalis.

Ophthalmici Externi, Motores oculorum.

Ophthalmicum, Ophthalmic remedy.

Ophthalmidium, (dim. of ophthalmos.) Microphthalmus.

Ophthalmic Blennorrhagique, see Ophthalmia—o. Pariforme des Nouveau-nés, see Ophthalmia.

Ophthalmine, (from ophthalmia.) A term proposed by Dr. Wm. Farr for the specific principle by which ophthalmia is propagated.

Ophthalmite, Ophthalmia.

Ophthalmitis, gen. Ophthalmitis, (ophthalmos, and itis.) Ophthalmia. Occasionally restricted to inflammation of the globe of the eye, in which both the external and internal structures are involved.

Ophthalmium, (dim. of ophthalmos.) Microphthalmus.

Ophthalmos, (from ὀφθαλμος, 'eye.') In composition, eye.

Ophthalmoblennorrhœa, Ophthalmia (puru-lent)—o. Neonatorum, see Ophthalmia (purulenta infantum).

Ophthalmocarcinoma, gen. Ophthalmocarcinoma. Cancer of the eye.

Ophthalmocèle, (ophthalmos, and κηλη, 'tumor.') Exophthalmia.

Ophthalmocholosis, (ophthalmos, and χολη, 'bile.') Ophthalmia biliosa. Ophthalmia from biliary derangement [?].

Ophthalmochroites, (ophthalmos, and χρoιζειν, 'to color.') See Choroidea tunica.

Ophthalmocconjunctivitis, gen. Ophthalmocconjunctivitis, see Ophthalmia.

Ophthalmocopia, (ophthalmos, and κοπος, 'fatigue.') Copyopia.

Ophthalmodesmitis, gen. Ophthalmodesmitis, (ophthalmodesmus, and itis.) See Ophthalmia.

Ophthalmodesmum, (ophthalmos, and δεσμος, 'a band.') Conjunctiva tunica.

Ophthalmodulia, (ophthalmos, and δουλεια, 'servitude.') Eyeservice. The title of a book by Bartisch on diseases of the eye.

Ophthalmodynïa, (ophthalmos, and δύνη, 'pain.') Pain, and especially rheumatic pain of the eye. Plenck has given this name to neuralgia of the frontal nerve, in which the pain radiates particularly towards the bottom of the orbit. See Neuralgia, frontal.

OPHTHALMODYNIA PERIODICA, Neuralgia, facial.

Ophthalmœdema, gen. Ophthalmœdema, (ophthalmos, and οἰδημα, 'œdema.') Œdema of the conjunctiva.

Ophthalmography, (ophthalmos, and γραφη, 'a description.') The part of anatomy which gives a description of the eye. An anatomical description of the eye.

Ophthalmology, Ophthalmologïa, (ophthalmos, and λογος, 'a discourse.') The part of anatomy which treats of the eye. An anatomical treatise on the eye. A description of the eye in health and disease.

Ophthalmomelanoïma, gen. Ophthalmomelanoïma, (ophthalmos, and μελανομα, 'melanoma.') Melanoma of the eyeball.

Ophthalmometer, (ophthalmos, and μετρον, 'measure.') An instrument of the nature of compasses, invented by F. Petit, for measuring the capacity of the anterior and posterior chambers of the eye in anatomical experiments.

Ophthalmomicroscope. A microscope devised for the purpose of appreciating exactly the condition of the cornea, crystalline lens, &c.

Ophthalmomyïtis, gen. Ophthalmomyïtis, (ophthalmos, and μυς, 'a muscle,' and itis.) Inflammation of the muscles of the eye.

Ophthalmoparalysis, Ophthalmoplegia.

Ophthalmophlebotomy, (ophthalmos, φλεβ, gen. φλεβος, 'a vein,' and τομη, 'incision.') Bleeding from the vessels of the conjunctiva.

Ophthalmophtharsis, Ophthalmophtharsis, (ophthalmos, and φθορα, 'corruption.') Destruction of the eyeball.

Ophthalmophthisis, Ophthalmophtharsis.

Ophthalmoplegia, Ophthalmoparalysis, (ophthalmos, and πλησσω, 'I strike.') Paralysis of one or more of the muscles of the eye.

Ophthalmoponia, (ophthalmos, and πονος, 'suffering.') Ophthalmia.

Ophthalmoptoma, gen. Ophthalmoptoma, Ophthalmoptosis.

Ophthalmoptosis, Ophthalmoptoma, (ophthalmos, and πτωσις, 'a prolapse.') A word employed by some authors in the sense of exophthalmia, by others in that of hydrophthalmia.

Ophthalmorrhagia, (ophthalmos, and ῥαγη, 'I break forth.') Hemorrhage from the tunica conjunctiva. It is rare.

Ophthal'mos, (ὀφθαλμός,) Eye.

Ophthal'moscope, see Ophthalmoscopy.

Ophthal'moscope, Ophthalmoscopium, Ophthalmoscopium, Speculum oculi. An instrument which, by reflecting the light on the retina, enables the condition of the interior of the eye to be appreciated. Various forms have been devised, as the portable or hand ophthalmoscope, the fixed or stand ophthalmoscope, the binocular form, and the auto-ophthalmoscope for self-examination. (The appearance revealed by this valuable means of diagnosis in various affections of the eye will be found fully detailed in special treatises on the Eye and its diseases, or in the standard works on Surgery.) To a form of the ophthalmoscope the name Anagnost'akis has been given, after a young Greek physician, who, it was thought, invented it. He says he suggested it to Professor Von Graefe, of Berlin, but the latter affirms that he gave the idea to the young Greek.

Ophthalmoscop'ia, Ophthalmoscopy, (ophthalmo, and σκοπεω, 'I regard attentively.') The art of judging of the temper, &c., of a person by examining his eyes. The art of judging of health or disease by inspection of the eyes. Exploration of the eyes in order to a diagnosis.

Ophthalmosta'tum, Ophthalmostat, (ophthalmo, and στασις, 'station,') Speculum oculi. An instrument for fixing the eye, thus rendering the eyeball immovable. The action of fixing the eye is termed Ophthalmos'tasis.

Ophthalmotherapi'a, (ophthalmo, and θεραπεια, 'treatment,') Ophthalmiatria.

Ophthalmot'omy, Ophthalmotomy, (ophthalmo, and τομή, 'section,') The part of anatomy which treats of the dissection of the eye. It has also been applied to extirpation of the eye.

Ophthal'motrope, (ophthalmo, and τροπή, 'I turn,') A movable ball, attached to which are elastic cords representing the various muscles of the eyeball.

Ophthalmoxero'sis, (ophthalmo, and ξηρωσις, 'dryness,') Xerophthalmia.

Ophthalmox'ysis, (ophthalmo, and ἔχω, 'I scrape,') A name given to the scarification sometimes practised on the conjunctiva in cases of ophthalmia.

Ophthalmoxys'trum, Ophthalmoxys'ter, Ophthalmoxys'terium, Xys'trum ophthalmicum. An instrument for scraping the eye. Name given to a small brush, with barbs like an ear of barley or rye, intended to scarify the eyelids in certain cases of ophthalmia.

Ophthalmozo'a, pl. of Ophthalmozoon, (F.) Ophthalmozaires, (ophthalmo, and ζωον, 'an animal,') Entozoa or parasites in the globe of the eye and its appendages.

Ophthal'mus, (ὀφθαλμός,) Eye.

Ophthalmymeni'tis, Ophthalmohymeni'tis, (ophthalmo, ὑμην, 'membrane,' and itis,) Inflammation of one or more of the membranes of the eye.

Opiacé, Opiate.

Opiacum, Opiatum.

Opiacé, Narcotine.

O'pianine, Opiani'na, Opi'nia, (from opium.) An alkaloid discovered in opium, which resembles morphia in its properties and doses.

Opi'num, Narcotine.

Opiat, Opiate — o. Dentifrice, Dentifrice.

Opiat de Copahu Composé, the only opiat official in the French Codex (1866), is composed of copaiba, cubebæ, and catechu.

O'piate, Opiatum, Opiacum, Papavera'ceum, Meco'nicum, (F.) Opiat, Opiacé, (from opion, — opos, 'juice,' — 'opium,') A medicine containing opium. A medicine that procures sleep. An electuary. Formerly, Opiat was an electuary which contained opium.

O'piated, Opiatus, (F.) Opiaté, Laudanisé. Impregnated with opium or laudanum. Affected by opium or laudanum.

Opiat'um, Opiate.

OPIATUM FEBRIFUGUM, Electuarium de Ki'ná Ki'ná, Electuary of Cincho'na. (Pulv. cinch., 3xviij., Ammon. muriat., 3j., Mellis, Syrup. ab-sinth., aa 3ij. Make into an electuary. Ph. P.) Given when cinchona is indicated.

OPIATUM MESENTERICUM, Electuarium de Aloë, Muriatē Hydrargyri et Fer'ro. (Gum. Ammon., 3ss., Sennæ, 3vj., Hydrargyri sub-muriat., Rad. Ari., Aloës socotrin., aa 3ij., Pulv. scammon. comp. (vulg. de tribus), Rhei rad., aa 3ij., Ferri limatur. porphyrisat., 3ss. Bruise and mix together, add of Compound syrup of apples double the weight of the other matters, and make into an electuary. Ph. P.) Dose, 3ss. to 3ij., in obstructions of the liver, mesentery, &c.

Opiatus, Opiated.

O'pion, (opion, dim. of opos, 'juice,') Opium.

O'piophil, Opiophil'iler, Opiophil'ilus; (opion, opium, and φιλω, 'I love,') A lover of opium. There was in Paris, in 1853, a club of opium smokers, who called themselves O'piophils.

Opi's'ma, gen. Opi's'matis, (opisma,) Succus.

Opi's'thenar, (opio'stenar,) Dor'sum ma'nūs, (opis-tho, and θεναρ, 'the flat of the hand,') The back of the hand.

Opi's'tho, (opio'ste, 'behind, backwards,') in composition, the same.

Opisthoceph'alón, (opistho, and κεφαλή, 'the head,') Occiput.

Opisthocra'nium, (opistho, and κρανιον, 'the skull,') Occiput.

Opisthocypho'sis, (opio'styphosis, from opistho, and cyphosis,) Cyphoma.

Opistholob'ium, Opistho'tium, (opistho, and λοβιον, 'the lobe of the ear,') Any agent applied behind the ear.

Opisthophalacro'sis, (opistho, and φαλαχρος, 'bald,') Baldness of the occipital region.

Opistho'tium, (opistho, and oes, gen. ωος, 'the ear,') Opistholobium.

Opisthot'onus, (opio'stonos,) Rap'tus posterga-neus, Tet'anus dorsa'lis seu posti'cus seu posterga-neus, (opistho, and τενω, 'I stretch,') A species of tetanus, in which the body is bent backwards.

O'pium, (opion, dim. of opos, 'juice,') see Papaver — o. Battley's solution of, Liquor morphie sedativus — o. Colatum, Extractum opii — o. Depuratum, Extractum opii.

O'PIUM EAT'ERS, Theriaki — o. Lettuce, see Lactuca — o. Plaster, Emplastrum opii.

Opobal'samum, (opos, 'juice,' and βάλσαμον, 'a balsam,') see Amyris opobalsamum.

Opocar'pason, Carpasium (juice).

Opoceph'alus, (ωψ, 'the face,' and κεφαλή, 'head,') (F.) Opocéphale. A genus of monsters having the two ears approximated or united under the head; the jaws atrophied; and no mouth or nose.

Opodel'doc, Opodeldoch.

Opodel'doch, Opodel'toch, Opodel'doc. An unmeaning term, frequently used by Paracelsus. Formerly, it signified a plaster for all external injuries, and was occasionally used, generically, like Saponula, for the union of soap with one or more volatile oils; now, it is applied to the Linimentum saponis compositum.

OPODEL'DOCH, STEER'S. A liniment called after the inventor. There are many formulæ for its preparation. The following is one: Sap. alb., lbj., Camphor., 3ij., Ol. rorismarini, 3iv., Spiritus vini rectificati, Oij. See Linimentum saponis compositum.

Opo-deoce'lè, (οπη, 'a foramen,' ειδος, 'resemblance,' and κηλη, 'a rupture,') see Hernia.

Opodid'ymus or Opod'ymus, (ωψ, 'the face,' and διδύμος, 'double,') Diprosopus.

Opol'dia Galbanifera, (from οπος, 'juice,' and οπόδης, 'juicy,') see Bubon galbanum.

Opolē, (οπος, 'juice,') Succus.

Opolide, Succus.

Opopana'eum, Pastinaca opopanax.

Opop'anax, gen. Opopana'cis, (οποπαναξ; from οπος, 'juice,' and παναξ,) see Pastinaca opopanax — o. Chironium, Pastinaca opopanax.

Opop'anaxwort, Pastinaca opopanax.

Opop'pios, (οπωπιος,) Optic.

Opop'onax, gen. Opopona'cis, Pastinaca opopanax.

Op'o'ra, (οπωρα,) see Autumn.

Op'o'ricē, (οπωρα, 'autumn,') A medicine, composed of several autumnal fruits, particularly quinces, pomegranates, &c., and wine. It was formerly administered in dysentery, diseases of the stomach, &c.

O'pos, (οπος,) Succus expressus — o. Silphion, Laserpitium.

Oppid'ulum, ('a little town,') Vulva.

Oppila'tio, (oppilare, oppilatum, 'to shut up,') Emphraxia — o. Tela cellulosa, Induration of the cellular tissue.

Oppilati'vus, Obstruens.

Oppo'nens, (F.) Opposant, (op, and ponere, 'to place,') That which faces or is put in opposition to something. The name has been given to two muscles of the hand.

OPPO'NENS MIN'IMI DIG'ITI, (F.) Opposant du petit doigt, Carpo-metacarpien du petit doigt (Ch.), Metacarpien du petit doigt. This muscle has the same shape and arrangement as the preceding, but is of less size. It is situate in the hypothenar eminence. Its fibres are inserted into the anterior annular ligament of the carpus, and terminate on the whole length of the inner edge of the 5th metacarpal bone. This muscle carries the 5th metacarpal bone forwards and outwards, and thus augments the concavity of the palm of the hand.

OPPO'NENS POL'LICIS, Flex'or os'sis metacar'pi pollicis, F. primi internodii (Douglas), Opponens pollicis manus, Antithenar seu semi-interosseus pollicis, (F.) Carpo-metacarpien du pouce (Ch.), Metacarpien du pouce, Opposant du Pouce. A small, flat, triangular muscle, situate in the substance of the thenar eminence. It is attached, on the one hand, to the anterior annular ligament of the carpus and to the trapezium; and on the other, to the whole of the outer margin of the first metacarpal bone. This muscle impresses on the first bone of the metacarpus a movement of rotation, which opposes the thumb to the other fingers.

Opposant, Opponens — o. du Petit doigt, Opponens minimi digiti — o. du Pouce, Opponens pollicis.

Oppres'sio, (from opprimere, — op, and premere, pressum, — 'to press against,') Catalepsy, Oppression — o. Nocturna, Incubus.

Oppres'sion, Oppres'sio, Thlip'sis, Catathlip'sis. A state, in which the patient experiences a sensation of weight in the part affected. When employed abstractly, it means, particularly, Oppression of the chest, Oppres'sio Pec'toris, (F.) Oppression de Poitrine.

OPPRES'SION, Oppres'sio vi'rium, (F.) Oppression des forces, is, also, used for that condition, at the commencement of fevers, &c., in which the system is oppressed rather than debilitated, and where the vascular action arises, as the obstruction to free circulation is relieved by bleeding, purging, &c.

Ops, (ωψ,) Eye.

Opseonu'si, Opseonusi.

Opsial'gia, (οψια, 'the countenance,' and αλγος, 'pain,') Neuralgia, facial.

Opsig'onus (Dens), (οψιγονος, from οψι, 'late,' and γεω, 'I am born,') see Dentition.

Op'siodous, gen. Op'siodon'tis, (οψι, 'late,' and οδους, 'a tooth,') see Dentition.

Opseonu'si, Opseonusi, (οψις, 'vision,' and νοσος, 'a disease,') Mor'bi vi'sus. Diseases of vision.

Op'siotoc'ia, (οψι, 'late,' and τοκος, 'birth,') Partus sero'tinus. Parturition after the usual period. See Pregnancy.

Op'sis, (οψις, 'countenance,') Pupil, Vision.

Opsoma'niac, Opsom'anes, (F.) Opsomane, (οψον, 'aliment,' and μανια,) One who loves some particular aliment to madness.

Opte'sis, (οπησις, 'roasting or broiling,') Assatio.

Op'tic, (οπτικός,) Op'ticus, Opo'pios, (F.) Optique, (from οπτομαι, 'I see,') That which relates to vision. The eye.

OP'TIC CENTRE, Centrum op'ticum. The optic centre of the crystalline is the point at which the various rays proceeding from an object cross in their way to the retina.

OP'TIC COM'MISSURE, see Chiasm — o. Disk, see Optic nerve and Optic papilla.

OP'TIC FORA'MEN, Fora'men op'ticum, (F.) Trou optique. A round opening in the sphenoid bone, near the base of its lesser ala, through which the optic nerve passes.

OP'TIC GAN'GLIA, Quadrigenina tubercula.

OP'TIC GROOVE. A transverse groove on the superior surface of the sphenoid bone, on which the commissure of the optic nerve rests, and which is continuous on each side with the optic foramen.

OP'TIC LOBES, Quadrigenina tubercula.

OP'TIC NERVE, Nervus op'ticus seu vis'ivus seu vis'o'rius, Par secun'dum seu op'ticum seu vis'o'rium, Nerve of the 2d pair, Ocular nerve of Chausier. The optic nerves are remarkable for their size; for their running a longer course within than without the cranium; and for their furnishing no branch from their origin to their termination. They do not seem to arise, as was long supposed, from the optic thalami, but from the tubercula quadrigenina. Immediately after their origin, the optic tracts, Tractus op'tici, proceed forwards; are, at first, broad and flat; but afterwards become narrower and round. In front of the fossa pituitaria, they unite and decussate, each nerve proceeding through the optic foramen of the sphenoid bone with the ophthalmic artery, and through the Fora'men op'ticum choro'id'æ, to form the retina. The nerve passes to the back part of the globe of the eye, becomes narrower, and enters that organ at a flattened circular papilla — the Op'tic papilla, — to give rise to the nervous expansion called the retina. The circle, which surrounds the place where the optic nerve enters, and which, seen by the ophthalmoscope, is of a lighter hue than the rest of the retina, is called the op'tic disk, but the term is usually employed synonymously with optic papilla. See Optic papilla. Between the colliculus and the yellow spot of Sömmering, a small projection or fold of the retina passes — pli'ca centra'lis ret'inæ. Besides its neurilemma, the optic nerve is surrounded by a sheath, furnished by the dura mater. This accompanies it as far as the eye.

The optic nerve is the nerve of special sensibility of the eye. In the centre of the nerve, there is a punc'tum ca'cum, mac'ula ni'gra, (F.) Tache aveugle, where the central artery enters the eye, and the corresponding vein passes out. If a ray of light falls on this spot it is not appreciated.

OP'TIC PAPIL'LA, Optic disk, Papil'la of the optic nerve, Collic'ulus seu Papil'la nervi op'tici. A yellowish-white spot situate about one-tenth of an inch internal to the antero-posterior axis of the eye, through which the optic nerve enters that organ, the central artery and vein of the retina being either at or near the middle of this spot. Its color, which varies in different individuals, is due to the reflected light from the vessels, nervous tubules, &c., which compose the papilla. The optic disk may become excavated, as in glaucoma—the glaucomatous cup—or as a result of congenital malformation, or from atrophy and retraction of the optic nerve. The papilla is also liable to venous congestion, ischaemia, hyperaemia of its capillaries, apoplexy, inflammation, atrophy, anaemia, &c. (The pathological changes in the optic papilla, as revealed by the ophthalmoscope, as well as the relations thus shown to exist between the cerebral and intra-ocular circulation, will be found fully detailed in works relating to this subject.)

Or'bes Cartilagino'si Trache'æ, (orbis, 'circle,') see Trachea.

Orbulaire des Lèvres, Orbicularis oris—o. des Paupières, Orbicularis palpebrarum.

Orbic'ular, Orbicula'ris, (F.) Orbiculaire, (from orbis, 'a circle,') Spherical, Circular.

ORBICULAR BONE, Os orbicula'rè seu lenticula'rè seu Syl'vii seu orbicula'rè Syl'vii, Glob'ulus stap'edis os'sis, Epiph'ysis cru'ris longio'ris incu'dis, Ossic'ulum orbicula'rè seu squamo'sum seu cochlea'rè seu quar'tum seu Syl'vii seu Subrotu'dum, Lentic'ulus, Proces'sus lenticula'ris incu'dis, is the smallest of the four bones of the ear. It is scarcely perceptible, round, convex on two surfaces, and situate between the long ramus of the incus and the head of the stapes.

ORBICULAR MUS'LES are muscles with circular fibres surrounding a natural opening of the body. 1. Orbicula'ris seu Constrictor O'ris, Sphincter O'ris seu Labio'rum, Semiorbicula'ris, Demi-orbicula'ris, Supra-semiorbicula'ris, Labia'lis, Osculato'rius, Basia'tor, (F.) Labial, Orbiculaire ou Sphincter des lèvres. A muscle situate in the substance of the lips, and extending from one com-missure to the other. It is formed of two very distinct portions, of a semi-oval shape; one belonging to the upper lip, the other to the lower. Their extremities cross at the commissures, and are confounded with the other muscles of the parts. The use of this fleshy muscle is to bring the lips together, and to close the aperture of the mouth, by making it represent a sort of bourrelet with radiated wrinkles. It is an antagonist to every other muscle of the lips. 2. Orbicularis Palpebra'rum seu oc'uli seu palpebra'rum cilia'ris, Palpebra'rum du'o mus'culi, Palpebra'lis, Constrictor seu Sphincter Palpebra'rum seu Oc'uli, (F.) Naso-palpébral, (Ch.) Maxillolapalébral, Palpébral, Orbiculaire des paupières. A muscle common to both the eyelids, and seated in their substance. It is broad, thin, transversely oval, and cleft in its great diameter. It is attached to the nasal process of the superior maxillary bone; to the internal angular process of the frontal bone, and to the orbital process of the superior maxillary bone, and to a semilunar tendinous arch, at the inner commissure of the eyelids—the ten'do palpebra'rum, ligamentum palpebrae inferius. From these origins the muscle passes outwards, under the skin of the eyelids, surrounding the orbit in a circular manner, extending somewhat beyond it, and covering the upper part of the cheek. It is inserted into the skin of the eyelids, its upper and inner edge being intimately connected with the frontal and corrugator muscles. Its use is to close the eye, by bringing the eyelids together. The part of the orbicularis which covers the cartilages of the eyelids, and which is remarkably thin, is the Musculus Cilia'ris of some authors.

Orbicula'ris Oc'uli, Orbicularis palpebrarum; see Orbicular muscles—o. Oris, see Orbicular muscles—o. Palpebrarum, see Orbicular muscles—o. Palpebrarum ciliaris, see Orbicular muscles—o. Recti, Sphincter ani externus.

Orbic'ulus Cilia'ris, (dim. of orbis, 'a circle,') Ciliary ligament, Ciliary zone.

Or'bis Ge'nu, Patella.

Or'bit, Or'bita, O. oc'uli, Troch'ia, Con'chus seu Cav'itas seu Fo'vea seu Pelvic'ula oc'uli, Eye-sock'et, (F.) Orbita, (from orbis, 'a circle,') The circular cavities are so called which lodge the organs of sight. The orbits or orbital fossæ or cavities, conchi, κογχι, are situate at the upper part of the face, and are composed of seven bones, viz.,—the frontal, above; the palate and superior maxillary, below; the sphenoid and malar, externally; and the ethmoid and lachrymal, internally. The orbit is filled by the globe of the eye, with its different accessory parts—muscles, nerves, vessels, the lachrymal gland, &c. Its margin is termed mar'go orbita'lis.

Or'bita, Orbit—o. Oculi, Orbit.

Or'bita, Orbitar—o. Fissure, inferior, Sphenoidal fissure—o. Fissure, superior, Maxillary fissure.

Or'bitar, Orbita'rius, Orbita'lis, Or'bita, (F.) Orbitaire. Relating or belonging to the orbit.

ORBITAR APOPH'YES or PROC'ESSES terminate the two extremities of the orbital arch. The external is much more prominent, and is articulated with the cheekbone; the internal is thinner, and joins the os unguis.

ORBITAR ARCH, (F.) Arcade orbitaire, is the projecting, round margin, which separates the frontal and orbital surfaces of the os frontis, and forms a part of the circumference of the orbit.

ORBITAR FIS'SURES, (F.) Fentes orbitaires. These are situate in the orbit. They are two in number: one superior, the Sphenoidal; the other inferior, the Sphenomaxillary.

ORBITAR FORAM'INA. Of these there are several:—1. The Foramen orbitarium superius, (F.) Trou orbitaire supérieur, which is situate at the junction of the inner third of the orbital arch with its two outer thirds, and gives passage to the frontal nerve. 2. The Foram'ina orbitaria interiora seu inter'na, Foram'ina ethmoid'ea. These are situate at the upper part of the internal paries of the orbit, are formed by the union of two notches of the os frontis with two similar ones of the ethmoid; and are distinguished into anterior and posterior. The former gives passage to the ethmoidal filament of the nasal nerve and to a small artery.

ORBITAR NERVE, Ner'vus orbita'lis seu orbita'rius seu subcuta'neus ma'lar, is a branch given off from the superior maxillary. It enters the orbit by the sphenomaxillary fissure, and divides into two filaments; the one — ma'lar — which passes over the cheekbone, is distributed to the orbicularis palpebrarum, and anastomoses with the facial nerve; the other — tem'poral — which passes to the temporal fossæ, and anastomoses with the inferior maxillary and facial, to become afterwards subcutaneous.

ORBITAR SURFACE, see Maxillary bone (superior).

Orbito-ectus-Scleroticien, Rectus externus oculi — o. Intus-Scleroticien, Rectus internus oculi — o. Maxillo-labial, Levator labii superioris proprius — o. Palpebral, Levator palpebræ superioris — o. Sus-palpebral, Levator palpebræ superioris.

Orbitosphe'noid. A term applied in zootomy to each lesser wing of the sphenoid.

Orcheoce'lē, Orchiocele.

Orcheot'omy, (orchis, and τομή, 'incision,') Castration.

Orchestroma'nia, (ορχηστρη, 'a dancer,' and mania,) Chorea.

Orchichore'a, (orchis and chorea.) An alternate rising and sinking of one or both of the testes, produced by onanism.

Or'chida, (from orchis,) Spirocolon.

Orchidal'gia, Orchial'gia, Orchidodyn'ia, Orchiodyn'ia, (orchis, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain of the testicle. Neuralgia of the testicle. Irritable testicle; a form of neuralgia.

Orchidatroph'ia, Atroph'ia testiculi, (orchis, and atrophia, 'atrophy,') Atrophy or wasting of the testicle.

Orchidi'tis, gen. Orchidi'tidis, (orchis, and itis,) Hernia humoralis.

Orchidocar'pum Arieti'num, (orchis, and καρπος, 'fruit,') see Carica papaya.

Orchidocatab'asis, Orcheocatab'asis, Descen'sus testiculo'rum, (orchis, and καταβασις, 'descent,') The descent of the testes into the scrotum.

Orchidoce'lē, (orchis, and κηλη, 'tumor,') Hernia humoralis.

Orchidodyn'ia, (orchis, and δύνη, 'pain,') Orchidalgia.

Orchidomyelo'ma, gen. Orchidomyelo'matis, (orchis, μυελος, 'marrow,' and ωμα,) Medullary fungus of the testicle.

Orchidon'cus, (orchis, and ογκος, 'a swelling,') Hernia humoralis.

Orchidoscir'rhus, see Orchiocele.

Orchidot'omy, (orchis, and τομή, 'incision,') Castration.

Or'chill, Lichen roccella.

Orchioce'lē, Orcheoce'lē, (orchis, or orchea, and κηλη, 'a rupture,') A tumor of the testicle. Scrotal hernia. Hernia humoralis. A name given to several diseases of the testicle and its envelopes, essentially differing from each other.

ORCHIOCE'LE SCIRRHO'SA, Scirrhole'lē, Orchi- doscir'rhus, Orchioscir'rhus. A scirrhus tumor of the testis.

Orchiodyn'ia, (orchis, and δύνη, 'pain,') Orchidalgia.

Orchioscir'rhus, see Orchiocele.

Orchiotom'ia, (orchis, and τομή, 'section,') Castration.

Or'chis, gen. Or'chidis or Orchis, (ορχις, gen. ορχιδος or ορχεως,) Testicle — o. Bifolia, see Salep — o. Butterfly, Orchis bifolia — o. Latifolia, see Salep — o. Maculata, see Salep.

OR'CHIS MAS'CULA, Satyr'ion, Testiculus caninus, Cynosor'chis, Dogs' stones, Male or'chis, Ballockgrass, Male Fools' stones, Twinroot. Ord. Orchidaceæ. This root had a place in some pharmacopœias, on account of the glutinous, slimy juice it contains. The root of the Orchis bifo'lia or Butterfly orchis has likewise been collected. It has been used as a demulcent. Its fancied aphrodisiac virtues seem to be owing to its resemblance to ορχις, 'a testicle,' whence its name.

Salep is obtained from this variety of the orchis, and from the Orchis morio, &c. See Salep.

OR'CHIS MILITA'RIS, see Salep — o. Roundleaved, large, Platanthera orbiculata.

Orchite, Hernia humoralis.

Orchi'tis, gen. Orchi'tidis, (orchis, and itis,) Hernia humoralis — o. Gonorrhœal, see Hernia humoralis.

Orchitom'ia, (orchis, and τομή, 'incision,') Castration.

Or'choi, (ορχος, 'a row,') see Tarsus.

Orchotom'ia, (orchis, and τομή, 'section,') Castration. Also, removal of the tarsi.

Or'chus, (ορχος, 'a row,') see Tarsus.

Orde'al Nut, Calabar Bean, Physostig'matis Fa'ba, (F.) Fève du Calabar, Fève épreuve du Calabar; called Esere by the natives of Calabar, is from a plant of the natural family, Leguminosæ — the Physostig'ma venenosum — closely resembling a Dolichos. It is possessed of virulent acronarcotic properties. The bean is official (Ph. U. S., 1873) under the name Physostig'ma. It appears to be a direct sedative to the spinal marrow. One or two drops of a solution of an extract of the bean, introduced under the eyelids, rapidly contracts the pupil, and may be used where myosities are indicated. It also contracts the ciliary muscle, which regulates the accommodating power of the system. Internally it is given in the form of tincture and alcoholic extract, in epilepsy, &c. Its active alkaloid is termed Physostig'mine, Es'etine, and Es'e'ria.

ORDE'AL POI'SON, Bundu, Akasga.

Orde'olum, Hordeolum.

Or'deum, Hordeum.

Ordinaires, (from [L.] ordo, gen. ordinis, 'an established process,') Menses.

Or'do Medicina'lis, Police, medical.

Ordonnance, (from ordonner, 'to order,') Formula, Prescription.

Or'egon, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The principal waters are the hot springs at Des Chutes, in Wasco county, and Wilhoit's Soda Springs, in Clackamas county. The latter is a pleasant alkaline saline, resembling Seltzer water.

Oreille, (from [L.] auris,) Ear — o. d'Âne, Symphytum — o. d'Homme, Asarum — o. d'Ours, Primula veris — o. de Souris, Hieracium pilosella.

Oreillette, (dim. of oreille, [L.] auricula, 'a small ear,') Asarum, Auricle of the heart.

Oreillons, (from oreille,) Parotis, Cynanche parotidæa.

Orel'ha de Gato, Hypericum connatum.

Ore'lia Grandiflo'ra, Allamanda.

Orella'na, see Terra Orleana.

Oreoseli'num, (ορος, 'a mountain,' and σελιον, 'parsley,') Athamanta aureoselinum — o. Africanum, Bubon galbanum — o. Legitimum, Athamanta aureoselinum — o. Nigrum, Athamanta aureoselinum.

Orex'is, (ορεξις), Appetite, Pyrosis—o. Cynodes, Brouillina.

Or'gan, Or'ganum, Or'ganon, (οργανον, from εργον, 'work,' 'an instrument.') Part of an organized being, destined to exercise some particular function. Thus, the eyes are organs of sight; the muscles are organs of motion, &c. The collection of organs, which concur in any function, is called an apparat'us.

Or'gan, Mentha pulegium—o. of Corti, see Corti—o. Enamel, see Tooth.

Or'gan of Giral'dès, Parepidid'ymis, Paradid'ymis, Corps innomine de Giral'dès. A small linear body at the upper end of the testicle in the spermatheca, regarded by Giral'dès as the remains of the Wolffian body, and analogous to the 'appendage to the ovary' of the female.

Or'gan of Ro'senmüller, Parovarium.

Or'gana (pl. of Or'ganum) Generatio'ni In-servien'tia, Genital organs—o. Genitalia, Genital organs—o. Sexualia, Genital organs—o. Sudoripara, see Perspiration—o. Urogenitalia, Urogenital organs—o. Uropoetica, Urinary organs.

Organes Génitiaux, Genital organs.

Organ'ic, (οργανικός) Organ'icus, (F.) Organ'ique. Relating to an organ or organs, and to beings possessed of organs. Hence, ORGANIC FUNCTIONS are those possessed by both animals and vegetables. It, as well as teleorgan'ic, is also used synonymously with vital, in contradistinction to physical.

ORGAN'IC CHEM'ISTRY, see Chymistry.

ORGAN'IC DISEASES OF LE'SIONS—Nosorganies of Bouchut—are such as concern the organ itself, in contradistinction to functional, rat'ional, or dynam'ic, which merely concern the function. Of course, organic diseases of a part are always more serious than functional.

ORGAN'IC NER'VOUS SYS'TEM, see Trisplanchnic nerve.

Or'ganicism or Organ'icism, Organicis'mus, (from organ.) The doctrine of the localization of disease, or which refers it always to a material lesion of an organ. Organicism is the antithesis to vitalism. The great principle of the supporters of the former doctrine, (F.) École organicienne, is, that life is the result of organization.

Organisa'tio, Organization.

Organisa'tus, Organized.

Organisé, Organized.

Or'ganism. The living economy. Many physiologists have used this word synonymously with organization; but it more especially designates the aggregate of vital actions in organized beings, animal as well as vegetable. The collection of parts composing an organized body, and the laws which govern it.

Or'ganite, (from organ.) According to Dr. Milne Edwards, an elementary organ,—a blood-corpuscle, for example.

Organizabil'ity, (organisa'tio, and habilis, 'suitable.') Capability of organization, or of being formed into living tissue. Substances possessed of such capability—as fibrin—are said to be organizable.

Organiz'able, see Organizability.

Organiza'tion, Organiza'tio. The manner of structure proper to different beings. It is also employed in the sense of the structure of a part; as the organization of the heart, &c.

ORGANIZA'TION, COM'POUNDS OF, Principles, immediate.

Or'ganized, Or'ganis instruc'tus, Organisa'tus, (F.) Organisé. That which is composed of organs.

ORGANIZED BO'DIES, (F.) Corps organisés, are those endowed with life; i. e. animals and vegetables: in contradistinction to inorganic bodies, which comprise the mineral kingdom. See Corpus.

Organogen'esis, (organ, and γενεσις, 'generation,') Organogeny.

Organochemi'a, Chemistry, organic.

Organogen'ic, Organogen'icus, (F.) Organogénique. Relating or appertaining to organogeny.

Organog'eny, Organogen'ia, Organogen'esis, (organ, and γενεσις, 'generation,') The doctrine of the formation of different organs.

Organogno'sia, (organ, and γνωσις, 'knowledge,') The knowledge and discrimination of organized bodies.

Organog'raphy, Organograph'ia, (organ, and γραφη, 'a description,') A description of the organs of a living body.

Organolep'tic, (organ, and ληψις, 'action of receiving,') Plastic.

Organol'ogy, (organ, and λογος, 'a description,') Anatomy, Craniology.

Or'ganon, (οργανον) Organ—o. Adamantinae, see Tooth—o. Olfactûs, Nasus.

Organonom'ia, (organ, and νομος, 'a law,') The doctrine of the laws of organic life.

Organop'athism, Organopathol'ogy, (organ, and παθος, 'an affection,') The doctrine of organop'athies, or of 'organopath'ic states,' of Piorry, which consists, essentially, in studying the pathological condition of the organs in each individual case.

Organoplasties, (organ, and πλασσειν, 'to form,') see Training.

Organos'copy, (organ, and σκοπεω, 'I examine,') see Craniology.

Organotroph'ic, Organotroph'icus, (F.) Organotrophique. Relating or appertaining to the organization, nutrition, or creation of living parts.

Organozoönom'ia, (organ, ζωον, 'an animal,' and νομος, 'a law,') Zoonomia.

Or'ganum, (οργανον) Instrument, Organ.

Or'gasm, (οργασμος) Orgas'mus, Orgo'sis, Æst'rus, Æst'rum, (οργαω, 'I desire ardently,' 'I am excited,') A strong impulse or desire for something. State of excitement and turgescence of any organ whatever. Erethism. Applied particularly to the height of venereal excitement in sexual intercourse.

Orgas'mus, Orgasm, Turgescence.

Orgas'tica. The second order of the class Genetica of Good. Defined to be diseases affecting the orgasm; organic or constitutional infirmity disordering the power or the desire of procreating.

Or'gê, (οργη) Rage.

Orge, Hordeum—o. Perlê, see Hordeum.

Orgeat, (from orge, because formerly made with barley water,) Syrupus amygdalæ.

Orgelet, (dim. of orge), Hordeolum.

Orgeolet, (dim. of orge), Hordeolum.

Orgo'sis, Orgasm.

Orichal'cum, (aurichalcum, or from ορος, 'a mountain,' and χαλκος, 'brass,') Brass.

Oric'ular, Auricular.

Oricule, Auricle, Pavilion of the ear.

Orifice, Orificium.

Orific'ium (os, gen. oris, 'a mouth,' and facere, 'to make,') Ostium, Opening, Mouth—o. Dextrum ventriculi, Pylorus—o. Hymenis, see Vagina—o. Superius laryngis, see Larynx—o. Uteri, Os uteri—o. Uterinum, see Uterus—o. Vaginae, see Vagina—o. Vaginale, see Uterus—o. Vaginale canalis cervicis, Os uteri—o. Ventriculi sinistrum, Cardia.

Orig'anum, O. vulgare seu heracleot'icum, (οργανον, from ορος, 'a mountain,' and γενεσις, 'de-light,') Cuni'la bu'bula, Majora'na mancura'na, Zazarhen'di her'ba, Wild or Common mar'joram, Mancura'na, (F.) Pied de lit. Ord. Labiatae. Sex. Syst. Didynamia Gymnospermia. This plant resembles marjoram in smell; and has a pungent taste, much like thyme. It is aromatic and stimulant; and its oil possesses the properties of the essential oils in general. The oil, Oleum origani, is very pungent, and is rarely given internally. It is used in toothache.

ORIG'ANUM AQUAT'ICUM, Eupatorium cannabinum — o. Creticum, O. dictamnus.

ORIG'ANUM DICTAM'NUS, O. Creticum, Dictamnus Creticus, Amar'acus tomento'sus, Oni'tis, Ditt'any of Crete, (F.) Dictamne de Crète. The leaves of this plant were once recommended as emmenagogue and alexipharmic.

ORIG'ANUM HERACLEOT'ICUM, Origanum.

ORIG'ANUM MAJORA'NA, O. majoranoides, Majora'na, M. hortens'is, Sweet mar'joram, Samp'suchum, Samp'syehum, Agriorig'anum, Amar'acus, (F.) Marjolaine. Its odor is strong and fragrant; taste aromatic and bitterish. Its properties are those of a stomachic and errhine. It is chiefly used, however, for culinary purposes, and as a snuff in headache.

ORIG'ANUM SYRI'ACUM, Teucrium marum — o. Vulgare, Origanum.

Originaire (F.), (origo, gen. originis, 'origin.') This term has been used, by French writers, in the same sense as congenital. It is particularly applied to affections depending upon faulty conformation, or to faulty conformation itself.

Or'igo, (orior, 'I arise,') Arche.

Orismology, (ορισμος, 'a definition,' and λογος, 'a discourse,') Terminology.

Orlea'na, see Terra Orleana.

Or'mé, (ορμη,) Appetite.

Orme, Ulmus — o. Champêtre, Ulmus — o. Pyramidale, Ulmus.

Ormeau, Ulmus.

Orms'kirk Medicine. A celebrated antilyssic remedy, supposed to consist of Pulv. Cretæ, 3ss., Bol. Armen., 3ij., Alumin., gr. x., Pulv. Iulæ, 3j., Ol. Anisi, gtt. vj.

This is taken for a dose every morning for six times, in a glass of water, with a small proportion of fresh milk.

Ornamen'tum Folia'ceum, see Tube, Fallopian.

Ornithog'alum Altis'simum, (ορνιθογαλον, a fanciful name, from ορνις, gen. ορνιθος, 'a bird,' and γαλα, 'milk,') A South African plant, Nat. Ord. Asphodeleæ, the fleshy bulb of which is diuretic. An oxymel is prepared of it, which is given in catarrh, asthma, phthisis, and hydrothorax. It resembles squill in its medical properties.

ORNITHOG'ALUM MARIT'IMUM, Scilla — o. Squilla, Scilla.

Ornithoglos'sa, (ορνις, gen. ορνιθος, 'a bird,' and γλωσσα, 'a tongue,') see Fraxinus excelsior.

Or'nus Europæ'a, see Fraxinus ornus — o. Mannifera, Fraxinus ornus — o. Rotundifolia, Fraxinus ornus — o. Sylvestris, Fraxinus excelsior.

Oroban'ché Virginia'na, (orobus, and αγκω, 'I strangle,') Epiphe'gus seu Epifa'gus America'nus seu Virginia'nus, Virgin'ia broomrape, Beechdrops, Cancerroot. Family, Orobanchoidæ. This parasitic plant is astringent, and a peculiar and extremely nauseous bitter. It is most powerful when fresh. It has been used in dysentery; and, externally, to obstinate ulcers.

OROBAN'CHÉ AMERICA'NA, and O. UNIFLO'RA, have the same properties, and are likewise called Cancerroot, Earthclub, and Clapicort.

Orobe, (οροβος,) Ervum ervilia.

Orob'ion, see Ervum ervilia.

Oroboi'des, (orobus, and ιδος, 'form,') Oroboi'des. Having the shape of the orobus. A name given to urine, Uri'na orobo'i'des seu orobo'i'des, when depositing a substance of a fawn color, like the meal of the orobus.

Or'obus, (οροβος,) Ervum ervilia — o. Faba, Vicia faba.

Orange, (from orange, its color,) see Agaric.

Orseille, Lichen roccella.

Orteil, (from articulus, 'a joint,') Digitus pedis.

Or'tho, (from ορθος,) straight, right, upright, in composition.

Orthoco'lum, (ortho, and κωλον, 'limb,') Stiffness of the limb so that it is kept quite straight.

Orthodon'tia, Orthodon'ticæ, Orthodontosie, (ortho, and οδους, gen. οδοντος, 'a tooth,') The part of dentistry which is concerned in the treatment of irregularity of the teeth.

Orthodo'ron, (ορθοδωρον, from ortho, and δωρον, 'a palm,') A measure with the Greeks, equal to eleven finger-breadths.

Orthog'nathous, (ortho, and γναθος, 'jaw,') Having a vertical jaw. A term applied to the form of head in which the facial angle approaches the right angle, Orthog'nathus.

Orthomor'phia, (ortho, and μορφη, 'shape,') Orthopædia.

Orthomorpho'sis, Orthopædia.

Orthontrop'ia, (ortho, and εντροπειν, 'to convert,') Orthopædia.

Orthopædi'a, Orthopæ'dicæ, Orthomor'phia, Orthomorpho'sis, Orthontrop'ia, Orthope'dics, (ortho, and παις, gen. παιδος, 'a child,') The part of medicine whose object is to prevent and correct deformity in the bodies of children. Often used, however, with a more extensive signification, to embrace the correction or prevention of deformities at all ages. Orthosomat'ics, Orthosomat'icæ, (from ορθος, 'right,' and σωμα, 'body,') has been proposed as a preferable term.

Orthopæ'dic, Orthope'dic, Orthopæ'dicus. Relating to orthopædia, — as Orthope'dic institution, Institutum orthopæ'dicum seu orthopæ'dium, — an institution for the correction or prevention of deformities in children.

Orthope'dics, Orthopædia.

Orthope'dist, Ortho'ter, Orthopæ'dicus. One who practises orthopædia.

Orthopho'nia, (ortho, and φωνη, 'voice.') A good pronunciation.

Orthophren'ic, Orthophren'icus, (ortho, and φρεν, 'mind.') Relating to sound mind, and to the cure of insanity.

Orthophthal'mic, Orthophthal'micus, (ortho, and οφθαλμος, 'eye.') Relating or belonging to the correction of deviations of the eyeball—as of strabismus.

Orthopnoë'a, Suffoca'tio, Strangula'tio, Præfo-ca'tio, Pnix, Pnix'is, Pnix'is, Pnix'is, Euthyp'noë, Euthypnoë'a, An'gor, Apnoë'a, (ortho, and πνω, 'I respire.') Impracticability of breathing in the horizontal posture. Necessity of being in the erect posture in order to respire.

ORTHOPNOË'A CARDI'ACA, Angina pectoris—o. Convulsiva, Asthma—o. Cynanchica, Cynanche trachealis—o. Hydrothoracica, Hydrothorax—o. Hysterica, Angone—o. Pituitosa, Mycorthopnoëa—o. Tussiculosa, Pertussis.

Orthoprax'is, (ortho, and πραξις, 'action,') Orthoprax'y. The mechanical treatment of deformities.

Orthopraxy, Orthopraxis.

Orthoscope, (ortho, and σκοπεω, 'I see.') An instrument devised by Czermak to exhibit, on application to the eye, the condition of the superficial portions of that organ.

Orthosomat'icé, (ortho, and σωμα, 'body,') Orthopædia.

Orthosomatique, Orthopædia.

Ortho'ter, (ορθωτηρ,) Orthopedist.

Orthysteropto'ma, gen. Orthysteropto'matis, (ortho, ὄστροπα, 'uterus,' and πτωπα, 'a fall,') Pro-lapsus uteri.

Orthysteropto'sis, Prolapsus uteri.

Ortie, Urtica—o. Blanche, Lamium album—o. Brûlante, Urtica urens—o. Morte, Lamium album—o. Morte des Bois, Galeopsis—o. Romaine, Urtica pilulifera.

Ortil'lus, (from articulus, 'a joint,') Digitus pedis.

Or'tyx, gen. Or'tygis, (ορνις,) Tetrao coturnix.

O'rus, (ορος,) Croupion, Serum.

Oreale, Salvia sclarea.

Orvieta'num, (from the Italian quack, Hieronymus Ferrantes, of Orvieto.) An electuary regarded as an invaluable antidote, and composed of Old theriac, Dried vipers, Scorzonera, Carlina, Imperatorium, Angelica, Bistort, Rosemary, Juni-per, Cinnamon, Cloves, Mace, Honey, and a crowd of other substances. Its medical properties resembled, in some respects, those of the theriac. It was called, according to some, because invented by Orvietano, a celebrated charlatan; or, according to others, from Orvieto, a town in Italy.

Ory'za, (ορυζα,) Ory'za sativa, Ory'zum, Rice, (F.) Riz. Family, Gramineæ. Sex. Syst. Hex-andria Monogynia. A plant, almost aquatic, indigenous in China, one of the richest productions of Egypt, and which prospers in the warmer regions of the four quarters of the globe. The grain inclosed in the husk is called by the Malays Paddy, Padi, or Paddie; when deprived of the husk, Bras, and when boiled, Nasi. Its amylaceous seeds, Ory'za, Ory'zum, Hor'deum galac'ticum, nourish more men than those of wheat and rye together. Besides being alimentary, they are demulcent and emollient. Gardiner's alimentary preparation is very finely ground ricemeal.

Mu'cilage of rice, Rice water, may be formed by taking one ounce of rice, and, having washed it, macerating it for three hours in a quart of tepid soft water, in a pan placed upon a stove, then boiling the whole slowly for another hour, and straining through a sieve.

It may be sweetened and acidulated, or be prepared with milk, like arrowroot, and be used as a demulcent.

Rice Jel'ly is made by macerating a sufficient quantity of clean rice in as much water as will cover it; boiling slowly, adding water as it evaporates, until the rice is reduced to a pap, sweetening and flavoring with lemonjuice or vanilla, and passing through a fine sieve into a form or mould. It may be eaten alone or with milk; and is a good dietetic preparation for those of weak digestive powers.

Ground rice. Take a tablespoonful of ground rice, a pint and a half of milk, and half an ounce of candied lemonpeel. Rub the rice smooth with the milk; then add the lemonpeel cut into small pieces; boil for half an hour, and strain while the milk is hot. It is used in the same cases as rice jelly.

Ory'zum, (ορυζον,) Oryza.

Os, gen. Os'sis, Bone, dim. Ossiculum; Os, gen. O'ris, Mouth—o. Acromii, Acromion—o. Adjutorium, Humeri os.

Os ÆTHI'OPUM, Ne'gro Mouth. A peculiar appearance of the mouth, dependent on projection of the canine and incisor teeth.

Os AL'EFORME, Sphenoid—o. Alagas, Coccyx, Sacrum—o. Alatum, Sphenoid bone—o. Amphideon, Os uteri—o. Anonyma, Innominate os—o. Anonymum, Innominate os—o. Anticum, Avant bouche—o. Arcuale, Temporal bone—o. Armale, Temporal bone—o. Asser, Sternum—o. de l'Assiette, Ischion—o. Azygos, Sphenoid—o. Ballistæ, Astragalus—o. Basilaris, Occipital bone, Palate bone, Sacrum, Sphenoid—o. Baxillare, Sphenoid—o. Bicorne, Hyoides os—o. Brachiale, Humeri os—o. Brachii, Humeri os—o. du Bras, Humerus—o. Calcis, Calcaneum—o. Capitatum, Magnum os—o. Caudæ, Occipital bone—o. Clunium, Sacrum—o. Coccygis, Coccyx—o. Colatorii, Sphenoid bone—o. Colatorium, Ethmoid bone—o. Coliforme, Ethmoid bone—o. Complementaires, Wormiana ossa—o. Convolutum superius, Turbinated bone, middle—o. Coronale, Frontal bone—o. Coxæ, Innominate os—o. Coxal, Innominate os, Ischion—o. Cribleux, Ethmoid—o. Cribiforme, Ethmoid—o. Cribrosum, Ethmoid—o. Cristatum, Ethmoid—o. Croche, Os unciforme.

Os Crotaphale. A name given by M. Bécclard to a bone sometimes met with at the anterior and inferior angle of the parietal bone; from κροταφός, 'the temple.'

Os CROTAPHIT'ICUM, Temporal bone—o. Cubicum, Ethmoid bone—o. ad Cubitale, Radius—o. Cubiti inferius, Ulna—o. de la Cuisse, Femur—o. Cuneiforme, Sphenoid—o. Cuneo comparatum, Sphenoid—o. Cymbiforme, Scaphoid bone—o. Disciforme, Patella—o. Durum, Temporal bone—o. Ensiforme, Sternum.

Os Épactale, (from επακτος, 'superadded,') A name given to one of the ossa Wormiana; particularly to one met with in the posterior fontanelle, and which has been described by G. Fischer, under the name Os Epactalē seu Gœthia'num.

Os Épactaux, Wormiana ossa.

Os EXTER'NUM. The entrance into the vagina, in contradistinction to the Os inter'num or Os u'teri.

Os EX'TRA OR'DINEM CAR'PI, Os pisiforme—o. Femoris, Femur—o. Fibrosus, Occipital bone—o. Foraminulentum, Ethmoid—o. Frontis, Frontal bone—o. Genæ, Malæ os—o. Gladioli, Sternum—o. Grand, Magnum os—o. Grand, col du, Collum ossis magni—o. Grandinosus, Cuboid—o. Gutturis, Hyoides os—o. Hamatum, Os unciforme—o. Hors du rang, Os pisiforme—o. Humeri, Humerus—o. Hyoides, Hyoides os—o. Hypopium, Malæ os—o. Hypseloides, Hyoides os—o. Inconjugatum, Sphenoid—o. Incudi similis, Incus—o. Inferius ventriculi, Pylorus—o. Innominé, Innominate os—o. Intercalés, Wormiana ossa—o. Internum, see Uterus—o. Interparietale, Interparietal bone—o. Inverecundum, Frontal bone—o. Ischii, Ischion—o. Jugale, Malæ os—o. Jugamentum, Malæ os—o. Juguli, Clavicle—o. Lacry-

Os'cus, (οσχος,) Scrotum.

Oscille, (from oxalis,) Rumex acetosus — o. Boucher, Rumex scutatus — o. Petite, Rumex scutatus — o. Ronde, Rumex scutatus — o. Rouge, Rumex sanguineus.

O'sier, (from οισος,) Salix alba — o. Red, Cornus sericea.

O'sis, (ωσις,) A suffix in many terms, which signifies the condition in general, and, in pathological terms, the morbid condition.

Os'mazome, Os'mozome, Osmazo'ma, Osmozo'ma, Os'mazone, Zomod'mum, (F.) Matière extractive du bouillon, Extrait de viande; Extractive or Saponaceous extract of meat, (osme, and ζωμος, 'soup,') M. Thénard gave this name to an extractive matter contained in muscular flesh, and in the blood of animals, which he considers of a peculiar nature. It has an agreeable smell and taste, and is found in bouillons of meat, in the proportion of one part to seven of gelatin. Vauquelin discovered it in some fungi. It is the substance which gives the flavor of meat to soups. It is a mixture of different crystallizable and uncrystallizable principles with empyreumatic products.

Osmazome has been prescribed in the dose of 3ss. to ʒj., in broth or in powder, with aromatics, as a stimulant to the digestive actions and a restorer of appetite in convalescence. An Osmazome chocolate, Chocolata cum osmazo'ma, has been introduced as an analeptic article of diet. It consists of chocolate, ʒj., to osmazome, ʒj.

Os'mê, (οσμη,) Odor.

Osme'sis, (οσμησις,) Olfaction.

Osmidro'sis, (osme, and ιδρωσις, 'sweat,') Perspiration of an unusual odor.

Osmitop'sis Asteriscoi'des, (from οσμη, 'an agreeable odor,') Bel'lis. A plant of the Cape of Good Hope, which, from its smell and taste, seems to contain camphor, hence its antispasmodic virtues. In infusion, it is said to be beneficially employed in cough, hoarseness, and diseases of the chest generally, and is said to be serviceable in flatulent colic. Infused in spirit, spir'itus bell'idis, it has been used successfully as an external remedy in paralysis.

Osmom'eter, (osmose, and μετρον, 'measure,') An instrument, consisting of a long glass tube, over which a membrane is firmly tied, to measure the extent of osmose in different fluids.

Osmomet'ricus Sen'sus, (osme, and μετρον, 'measure,') Olfaction.

Osmon'osi, Osmonu'si, Mor'bi olfac'tus, (osme, and νοσος, 'a disease,') Diseases of olfaction.

Osmonosolog'ia, (osme, νοσος, 'disease,') and λογος, 'description,') The doctrine of, or a treatise on, the diseases of the sense of smell.

Osmorri'za Longis'tylis, (osme, and ρίζα, 'a root,') Sweet Cic'ely. An indigenous plant, Order Umbelliferae, which flowers in May and June. It is an agreeable aromatic, having much of the flavor of anise.

Os'mose, Osmo'sis, (ωσμος, 'impulse,') The force by which fluids are impelled through moist membrane and other porous septa, in endosmotic and exosmotic actions.

Osmotic, Osmot'icus. Relating or belonging to osmose — as 'osmotic force,' the force which induces osmose.

Os'mozome, Osmazome.

Os'mund Roy'al, Osmunda regalis.

Osmun'da Cinnamo'mea, (from Osmunder, one of the names of Thor, a Scandinavian deity,) Cinnamon Fern. Indigenous. Order Filices. Is regarded to be demulcent, subastringent, and tonic. Boiled in milk, it yields a fine mucilage, which is useful in diarrhoea.

OSMUN'DA LUNA'RIA, Ophioglossum lunaria.

OSMUN'DA REGA'lis, O. spectabilis, F'lix Flor'ida, Flow'ring fern, Os'mund roy'al. This plant was once thought to possess astringent and emmenagogue virtues.

OSMUN'DA SPECTAB'ILIS, O. regalis.

Osoror, Opium.

Osphrante'rius, (οσφραντηριος,) Olfactory.

Osphran'ticos, (οσφραντικος,) Olfactory.

Osphra'sia, (οσφρασια,) Olfaction.

Osphresiol'ogy, Osphresiol'gia, (osphresis, and λογος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on olfaction and odors, Osmol'ogy, Osmolog'ia.

Osphre'sis, (οσφρησις,) Olfaction.

Osphre'ticus, (οσφρητικος,) Olfactory.

Osphris'ticê, (from osphresis,) The doctrine of the phenomena of odors.

Osphyalge'ma, gen. Osphyalge'matis, (osphys, and αλγημα, 'pain,') Coxalgia.

Osphyal'gia, (οσφυαλγια, from osphys, and αλγος, 'pain,') Coxalgia.

Osphyarthri'tis, gen. Osphyarthri'tidis, (osphys, and arthritidis,) Osphyitis.

Osphyarthroc'acê, (osphys, and arthrocace,) Coxarum morbus.

Osphyi'tis, gen. Osphyi'tidis, Osphy'tis, Osphyarthri'tis, Inflamma'tio cox'æ, (osphys, and itis,) Inflammation of the parts about the hip.

Osphyrrheu'ma, gen. Osphyrrheu'matis, (osphys, and ῥευμα, 'rheumatism,') Lumbago.

Os'phys, (οσφυς,) Haunch, Lumbi.

Osphy'tis, gen. Osphy'tidis, Osphyitis.

Os'sa (pl. of os, 'a bone,') Breg'matis, Parietal bones — o. Convoluta inferiora, Turbinate bones, inferior — o. Digitorum manus, Phalanges of the fingers — o. Digitorum pedis, Phalanges of the toes — o. Epactalia, Wormiana ossa — o. Nasalia, Nasal bones — o. Nasi, Nasal bones — o. Nervalia, Parietal bones — o. Pisiformia lingualia, see Hyoides os — o. Raphogeminantia, Wormiana ossa — o. Sesamoidea, Sesamoid bones — o. Sin'cipitis, Parietal bones — o. Spongiosa, Turbinate bones — o. Triquetra, Wormiana ossa — o. Triticea, see Hyoides os — o. Turbinata, Turbinate bones — o. Verticalia, Parietal bones.

Os'seine, (from os, 'a bone,') Ostein.

Osselet, dim. of os, 'a bone,') Ossiculum.

Osscle's de Bertin, Sphenoidal cornua — o. de l'Oreille, Ossicula auditus — o. de l'Onic, Ossicula auditus — o. du Tympan, Ossicula auditus.

Os'seous, Os'seus, Osteo'des, Osto'des, Osto'des, Os'toid, (F.) Osseux, (os, 'a bone,') Bony. Resembling bone.

OS'SEUS TU'MORS, see Osteoma.

Osseux, Osseous.

Os'sicles, Ossicula, see Ossiculum — o. of the Ear, Ossicula auditus — o. of the Tympanum, Ossicula auditus.

Ossic'ula, pl. of Ossiculum.

OSSIC'ULA AUDI'TUS, O. Aur'is, (F.) Osscle's de l'oreille ou de l'onic ou du tympan. The small bones or ossicles situate in the cavity of the tympanum, and forming an uninterrupted chain from the membrane of the tympanum to that of the fenestra ovalis. They are four in number; and their series, from without to within, is as follows: Malleus, Incus, Os orbiculare, Stapes.

OSSIC'ULA BERTI'NI, Sphenoidal cornua — o. Innominata, Innominata minora ossa — o. Nasi, Nasal bones — o. Sesamoidea, Sesamoid bones — o. Triticea, see Hyoides os.

Ossic'ulum, (pl. Ossic'ula,) Osta'rion, (F.) Ossicle, Osscle't, (dim. of os,) A small bone.

OSSIC'ULUM COCHLEA'RE, Orbicular bone — o. Incudi comparatum, Incus — o. Malleolo assim- ilatum, Malleus—o. Molari denti comparatum, Incus—o. Orbiculare, Orbicular bone—o. Quartum, Orbicular bone—o. Squamosum, Orbicular bone—o. Subrotundum, Orbicular bone—o. Sylvi, Orbicular bone.

Ossifica'tion, Ossifica'tio, Ossifica'tio, (os, 'a bone,' and facere, 'to make,') Osteogen'ia, Osteogen'esis, Osteo'sis, Osto'sis. Formation of bone. Development or increase of the osseous system. Ossification takes place in the same manner as the nutrition of other parts. The bones are, at first, mucous, and afterwards cartilaginous; the cartilage at length receives the phosphate of lime, and is, at the same time, replaced by a gelatinous parenchyma, when the bone has acquired the whole of its development.

OSSIFICA'TION, POINTS OF, Puncta seu Nuclei ossificatio'nis, Nuclei os'sei, are the points where the ossification of a bone commences, whence it extends to other parts. Almost all the bones present a greater or less number of points of ossification. Besides the natural ossification, which we observe in the foetus and in the first periods of life, there are also acciden'tal ossifications, such as those frequently remarked, after the inflammation of serous membranes, in the parietes of arteries, and to which the terms Ostheo'ia, Incrustation, and Petrifica'tion have sometimes been applied.

Ossif'raga, (os, 'a bone,' and frangere, 'to break,') Osteocolla.

Os'sis Sa'cri Acu'men, 'point of the sacrum bone,' Coccyx.

Ossisa'na, (os, 'a bone,' and sanare, 'to heal,') Osteocolla.

Ossiv'orous, (os, 'a bone,' and voro, 'I devour,') A species of tumor, mentioned by Ruysch, which destroys a bone.

Os'tagra, Os'teagra, (osteon, and αγρα, 'seizure,') A forceps to cut or remove portions of bone.

Ostal'gia, (osteon, and αλγος, 'pain,') Osteocopus.

Osta'rium, (οσταριον, dim. of οστειον, 'a bone,') Ossiculum.

Ostarthri'tis, gen. Ostarthri'tidis, Arthrophlogosis.

Ostarthroc'acé, Spina ventosa.

Os'teagra, Ostagra.

Osteal'gia, Osteocopus.

Ostéide, Osteoid.

Os'tein, Os'teine, Os'seine, (from osteon.) The animal matter of bone.

Ostei'tes, (from osteon,) Osteocolla.

Ostei'tis, gen. Ostei'tidis, Osti'tis, (osteon, and itis,) Inflamma'tio Os'sis. Inflammation of bone; characterized by violent shooting and lancinating pains in a bone. Ostei'tis interna or car'ies centra'lis is a form of the disease occurring deep in the bone. When accompanied with deposit of bony matter in the medullary cavity, it is called Osteitis interna osteoplas'tica, O. ossificans, or, as generally described, Sclero'sis os'sium, Condensing or Os'sifying osteitis, or Diffuse hy'pertrophy of bone. In osteitis fungo'sa, interstitial granulations cause the bone to be entirely absorbed. Those forms of osteitis which are attended with softening of the bone substance, have been called rarefying osteitis.

Ostei'tis, ARTIC'ULAR, see Rheumatism—o. Fungosa, see Osteitis—o. Interne, see Osteitis—o. Interna osteoplastica, see Osteitis—o. Ossificans, see Osteitis—o. Rarefying, see Osteitis.

Ostem'bryon, (osteon, and εμβρυον, 'embryo,') Lithopædion.

Ostempye'sis, Osteömpye'sis, Ostempyo'sis, (osteon, and εμπυση,—εν, and πυον,—'effusion of pus,') An abscess in the interior of a bone.

Ostempyo'sis, Ostempyesis.

Osteoanabro'sis, Osteonabrosis.

Osteoan'eurism, Aneurys'ma osteoï'des. Expansion of a bone from aneurismal dilatation of its vessels.

Osteoarthri'tis, Chronic, see Rheumatism—o. Longa, see Rheumatism.

Os'teoblast, (osteon, and βλαστανω, 'I bud,') A term applied to the young cells, Os'teal cells, in the development of bone, which aid in the formation of the osseous tissue, whether in cartilage, membrane, or periosteum.

Osteocan'cer, Osteocephaloma.

Osteocarcino'ma. Carcinoma which has undergone ossification.

Osteocartilag'inous Tu'mor, Osteochondroma.

Osteoce'lê, (osteon, and κηλη, 'a rupture,') A hernia in which the sac is cartilaginous and bony:—a rare case. Also, osseous induration of one or both testicles.

Osteocephalo'ma, (osteon, and cephaloma, 'encephaloid,') Osteocan'cer, Malignant Os'toid. A malignant disease of bone, including two varieties, one arising from the medullary canal, the other attached to the compact substance. It is chiefly encephaloid, and usually attacks the head of the tibia and the lower extremity of the thigh-bone.

Osteochondro'ma, (osteon, χονδρος, 'cartilage,' and ωμα,) Osteocartilag'inous Tu'mor. A variety of enchondroma resembling bone rather than cartilage, being made up of an osteoid tissue, composed of trabeculae and medullary spaces, with a small proportion of cartilage. It commonly attacks the ends of the long bones.

Osteochon'drophyte, (osteo, χονδρος, 'a cartilage,' and φύω, 'I grow,') Chondroma.

Osteocla'sis, (osteo, and κλασις, 'a fracture,') Fracture.

Os'teoclast, Myéloplaxes.

Osteocol'la, (osteon, and κελλα, 'glue,') Glue-bone, Stone or Bone binder; Ossif'raga, Holos'teus, Osissa'na, Ostei'tes, Amos'teus, Osteol'ithos, Stelochi'tes. A name given to petrified carbonate of lime, found in some parts of Germany and other portions of the globe; so called, because it has been supposed to possess the power of favoring the formation of callus in fractures. It is the Chaux carbonatée concrétionnée incrustante of Haüy.

Osteoc'opus, (οστικοπος,) Osteal'gia, Ostal'gia, Osteodyn'ia, Os'teocope, (osteon, and κοπος, 'fatigue,') Bone ache, Bone-ague. Pain in the bones,—as in syphilis. Such pains are said to be osteocopic ('bone-tiring').

Osteocys'toid, Osteocystoï'des, (osteon, κυστις, 'a sack or cyst,' and ειδος, 'appearance,') A morbid growth in bone, consisting of the formation of cysts filled with puriform or other fluid.

Osteoden'tine, see Tooth.

Osteo'des, (from osteon,) Osseous.

Osteodyn'ia, Osteocopus.

Osteogangræ'na, Necrosis.

Os'teogen, (osteon, and γεννω, 'I beget,') The soft transparent substance in the formation of bone, which afterwards becomes ossified, Osteogenic substance or tissue. See Ossification.

Osteogen'esis, (osteon, and γενναις, 'formation,') The original formation of bone.

Osteogen'ic Sub'stance or Tis'sue, Osteogen.

Osteogen'ia, (same etymon,) Ossification.

Osteog'raphy, Osteogra'phia, (osteon, and γραφειν, 'to describe,') Description of the bones. The part of anatomy which describes the bones.

Osteohelco'sis, (osteon, and ελκος, 'an ulcer,') Caries.

Os'teoid, Osteoï'des, (F.) Ostéide, (osteon, and ειδος, 'appearance,') Resembling bone, as the osteoid cartilage, as callus has been called. An accidental bony production, or more frequently a morbid production, which is a calcareous incrustation—(F.) Concrétion ossiforme—of the normal tissue, or of fibrous tumors.

OSTEOID CAN'cer. Ossified fibrous or medullary cancer.

Osteol'ithos, (osteon, and λίθος, 'a stone,') Osteocolla.

Osteol'ogy, Osteolog'ia, (οστεολογία, from osteon, and λογος, 'a discourse,') The part of anatomy which treats of bones.

Osteol'ysis, (osteon, and λυω, 'I dissolve,') Necrosis or death of the bone, as in hospital gangrene, in which the dead parts are of soft consistence.

Osteo'ma, gen. Osteo'matis, (from osteon.) A tumor consisting of osseous tissue, Os'seous tu-mors. Several forms have been described, the eburnated, compact, and cancellous, according to the nature of the structure composing them. Osteomata include exostoses and osteophytes, the former being outgrowths from pre-existing bone, the latter growing from the cartilage or the connective tissue. See Exostoses and Osteophyton.

Osteomalacia, (osteon, and μαλακία, 'softness,') Mollities ossium—o. Infantum, Rachitis.

Osteomalaco'sis, Mollities ossium.

Osteomyeli'tis, gen. Osteomyeli'tidis, (osteomyelon, and itis,) Medullitis.

Osteomy'elon, (osteon, and μυελος, 'marrow,') Marrow.

Os'teon, (οστέον,) Bone—o. Hieron, Sacrum.

Osteonabro'sis, Osteonabro'sis, (osteon, a, priv., and βρωσις, 'nutriment,') Atrophy of the osseous texture marked by diminution of volume.

Osteonco'sis, (osteon, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') see Exostosis.

Osteon'cus, (osteon, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') A bony tumor.

Osteonecro'sis, Necrosis.

Osteon'osi, Osteonu'si, (osteon, and νοσις, 'a disease,') Mor'bi os'sium. Diseases of the bones.

Osteopa'dion, (osteon, and παιδιον, 'a small child,') Lithopædion.

Osteopalincla'sis, (osteon, παλιν, 'again,') and κλασις, 'fracture,') The breaking again of a bone which has united unfavorably, Refractu'ra.

Osteopha'ges, Myélophaxes.

Osteophlebi'tis, (osteon, φλεβς, 'a vein,') and itis,) Inflammation of the veins of bone.

Osteophy'ma, gen. Osteophy'matis, (osteon, and φύμα, 'a swelling,') Osteoneus. Sometimes used in the sense of Exostosis. By Lobstein applied to a bony production originating in the deep-seated layers of the periosteum, in the vicinity of a carious bone, and which seems to be intended to obviate the weakness resulting from the destruction of the bone.

Os'teophyte, (osteon, and φυω, 'I grow,') Exostosis, Osteophyton.

Osteoph'yton, Os'teophyte. Under this name, Rokitsky describes a deposition of bony matter, found by him on the inner surface of the parietes of the skull of pregnant women. See Osteoma.

Os'teoplasts, (osteon, and πλασσω, 'I form,') Cells concerned in the formation and growth of bone. Those which form cartilaginous structures are called Chondroplasts.

Osteoplas'tic, see Osteoplasty.

Os'teoplasty, (F.) Osteoplastie, (osteon, and πλασσω, 'to form,') An operation by which the total or partial loss of a bone is remedied. The filling of a cavity of a tooth with some appropriate substance; hence termed Osteoplas'tic.

Osteopleu'ra, Pleurosto'sis, (osteon, and πλευρον, 'a rib,') Ossification of the cartilages of the ribs.

Osteoporo'sis, (osteon, and πωρωσις, 'induration,') Induration of a bone, from the deposition of too much bony matter, Osteosclero'sis. Also, a bony degeneration, which consists in too great porosity with hardening, Rarefaction of bone.

Osteopsathyro'sis, (osteon, and ψαθυρος, 'friable,') Fragilitas ossium.

Osteosarco'ma, gen. Osteosarco'matis, Osteosarco'sis, Sarcosto'sis, Hæmatexosto'sis, (osteon, σαρξ, gen. σαρκος, 'flesh,') and ομα,) Disease of the bony tissue, which consists in softening of its laminae, and their transformation into a fleshy substance, analogous to that of cancer; accompanied with general symptoms of cancerous affection. The word has often, also, been used synonymously with spina ventosa.

Osteosarco'ma, BENIGN, Chondroma.

Osteosarco'sis, (osteon, σαρξ, gen. σαρκος, 'flesh,') and οσις,) Osteosarcoma.

Osteosclero'sis, (osteon, and σκληρος, 'hard,') Osteoporosis.

Osteo'sis, (from osteon,) Ossification.

Osteospongio'ma, gen. Osteospongio'matis, Osteospongio'sis, (osteon, and σπογγος, 'a sponge or fungus,') and ομα,) A fungous condition of bone, Spina ventosa.

Osteosteato'ma, gen. Osteosteato'matis, Exosto'sis steatomato'des, (osteon, and στέαρ, gen. στίαιος, 'suet or fat,') A name given to bony tumors or degenerations, which sometimes belong to osteosarcoma; at others, to spina ventosa, exostosis, &c.

Os'teotome, (same etymon as Osteotomy,) A bone saw, which has the form of a chain. Also any bone saw, Osteot'omus, Osteotom'ium, Osteotom'icum.

Osteotom'icum, Osteotome.

Osteot'omist, Osteotomis'ta. An instrument, invented by Dr. D. Davis, for cutting the bones of the foetal cranium, where it becomes necessary to greatly reduce the size of the head in parturition.

Osteotom'ium, Osteotome.

Osteot'omus, Osteotome.

Osteot'omy, Osteotom'ia, (osteon, and τεμνω, 'to cut,')—τομή, 'an incision,') The part of practical anatomy whose object is the dissection of bones.

Osteot'ophus, Tophus.

Os'teotrite, (osteon, and τριβω, 'I rub,') or [L.] terere, tritum, 'to rub,') An instrument employed by the surgeon for scraping bones.

Osteot'yus, (osteon, and τελος, 'callus,') Callus.

Osteul'cum, (οστευλος, from osteon, and ελκω, 'to draw,') Bone-nippers.

Os'teum, (οστέον,) Bone.

Osthel'cus, (osteon, and ελκος, 'an ulcer,') Caries.

Osthex'ia, (osteon, and ἔξις, 'habit,') see Ossification.

Ostia'rius, ('a doorkeeper,') from ostium, 'a door,') Pylorus.

Osti'ola (pl. of ostiolum) Cor'dis, Val'vula cordis, Pellic'ula cordis. The valves of the heart.

Osti'olum, (dim. of ostium,) A small door or gate. See Ostiola.

Osti'tis, gen. Osti'tidis, Osteitis.

Ostium, (from os, 'a mouth,') Orific'ium, a door or gate,—of the heart, for example. The opening—Os'tium a'triocentricula'rē seu ventric'uli veno'sum—between the auricle and ventricle of each side. Os'tium ventric'uli arterio'sum is the opening at the origin of the pulmonary artery and aorta.

OSTIUM ABDOMINA'LE, see Tube, Fallopian—o. Arteriosum, see Ostium—o. Atrioventriculare, see Ostium—o. Cutaneum, see Urethra—o. Duodenale ventriculi, Pylorus—o. Internum, see Ostium uteri—o. Oaricum, see Tube, Fallopian—o. Esophageum, Cardia—o. Pharyngeum laryngis, see Larynx.

OSTIUM U'TERI. The vulva; the vagina. The term Os'tium inter'num has been applied to the inferior opening of the uterus, which establishes a free communication between the cavities of the body and neck, and which is often obliterated in old women. The neck of the uterus; the mouth of the uterus. See Uterus.

OSTIUM UTERI'NUM, see Tube, Fallopian—o. Vagina, see Vagina—o. Vaginale urethræ, see Urethra—o. Vesicale, see Urethra—o. Venosum, see Ostium — o. Ventriculi duodenale seu Pyloricum seu Dextrum seu Inferius, Pylorus.

Osto'des, (ὀστώδης, from osteon, and odes,) Osteous.

Os'toid, (osteon, and eidōs, 'resemblance,') Osteous — o. Malignant, Osteocephaloma.

Ostol'dea Substan'tia, see Tooth.

Osto'ma, (osteon, and oma,) Exostosis.

Osto'sis, (from osteon, and osis,) Ossification.

Os'trea, Os'treum, Os'trea edulis, (F.) Huître. Glass, Acéphala. The oyster. The oyster is a wholesome article of diet, often advised as an analeptic, and easy of digestion.

The shells, Tes'te Ostreae, Tes'ta (Ph. U. S.), Conchæ, (F.) Écailles d'huîtres, have been received into the Pharmacopœias, and used medicinally. Their virtues are similar to those of the carbonate of lime. See Creta.

Ostre'i'on, (ὀστρεῖον,) Ostrea.

Os'treum, (ὀστρεῖον,) Ostrea.

Ostru'thium, Imperatoria.

Oswe'go Tea, Monarda coccinea.

Osy'ris, (ὀσυρίς,) Antirrhinum linaria.

Ota'cous'tic, Ota'cous'ticus, (F.) Ota'coustique, (oto, and akouō, 'I listen,') Any instrument is so called which improves the sense of hearing, — as the different species of ear-trumpets.

O'tagra, (ὠτάγρα, from oto, and αγρα, 'a seizure,') Otalgia.

Otal'gia, (ὠταλγία,) O'tagra, Otod'ynē, Otal'gy, (F.) Otalgie, (oto, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the ear, Do'lor aurium, Spas'mus aurium, Ear'ache. See Otitis.

Otal'gic, Otal'gicus, (F.) Otal'gique. An epithet for remedies used in otalgia.

Ote'chus, (oto, and ηχος, 'sound,') Tinnitus aurium.

Otemplas'trum, Otoplas'ta, Otoplas'trum, (oto, and ἐμπλάστρον, 'a plaster,') A plaster put behind the ears.

Oten'chytes, (ὠτεγκυτης,) Oten'chyta, (oto, en, 'into,' and χω, 'I pour,') Si'pho auricula'ris. A species of syringe, used for injecting the ear.

Othæmato'ma, gen. Othæmato'matis, (oto, and hæmatoma,) Hæmatoma auris.

Othelco'sis, (oto, and ἔλκος, 'ulceration,') Ulceration or suppuration of the ear.

Oth'onē, (ὀθονή,) Linteum.

Othon'ion, (ὀθονιον,) Linteum.

Othyg'rites, (oto, and ὕγρως, 'moisture,') Oti'rhœa.

Otia'ter, gen. Otia'tri, (oto, and ιατρος, 'physician,') Aurist.

Otiatri'a, Otiatri'cē, Otiatri'a, Oti'atry, (oto, and ιατρία, 'medicine,') The business of the aurist. The management of diseases of the ear; Aural Medicine and Surgery, Ear Surgery.

Otiatri'cē, Otiatri'a.

Otiat'rus, Aurist.

Oti'atry, Otiatri'a.

O'tic, O'ticus, (F.) Otique, (from ous, gen. ωτος, 'ear,') Belonging or relating to the ear. A medicine employed in diseases of the ear.

O'tic Gan'glion, Otogan'glium, Gan'glion auricula'rē seu oticum, Auric'ular gan'glion, Gan'glion of Ar'nold, (F.) Ganglion maxillo-tympanique. This is a small ganglion, although more than double the size of the ophthalmic; ash-colored and pulpy like the ganglions of the sympathetic. It is situate in advance of the ganglion of Gasser, on the lower surface of the inferior maxillary nerve, at the inner margin of the foramen ovale of the sphenoid bone. See Petrous ganglion.

Oti'rhœa, Otorrhœa, Othyg'rites, Blennotorrhœa, (F.) Catarrhe de l'Oreille, (oto, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') Discharge of a purulent or puriform liquid from the meatus auditorius externus, Pyyorrhœa aurium, Otopyorrhœa, Pgyorrhœa, Otorrhœa purulen'ta. It is a symptom of chronic otitis. Some authors have, indeed, used the term synonymously with chronic otitis. When it extends to the brain, it is termed cer'ebral otorrhœa; and when from the middle or internal ear, it is termed Internal otorrhœa, Otorrhœa inter'na, and Entotorrhœa.

Oti'rhœa, Cer'ebral, see Oti'rhœa.

Oti'tes, (ωτιτης, 'appertaining or relating to the ear,') see Digitus.

Oti'tis, gen. Oti'tidis, Otophleg'monē, Empres'ma oti'tis, Inflamma'tio au'ris, Inflamma'tion of the ear, (F.) Otite, Inflammation de l'oreille, (oto, and itis,) Inflammation of the mucous membrane of the ear, characterized by excruciating pain, intolerable humming in the ear, with a discharge of mucus generally from the meatus externus or from the Eustachian tube. When the inflammation is restricted to the lining membrane of the meatus, it is termed otitis catarrha'lis. Otitis is divided into external and internal, according as it affects the meatus auditorius, or the cavity of the tympanum or internal ear. It may be acute or chronic. Acute otitis commonly terminates in a few days in a favorable manner, with the aid of antiphlogistics. Chronic otitis, otirrhœa, is almost always accompanied by a purulent discharge from the meatus auditorius. It is often incurable, and may ultimately give occasion to disease of the internal ear, and even of the brain.

Oti'tis Catarrha'lis, see Otitis—o. Parasitica, Myringomycosis.

O'tium, (ωτιον, dim. of ous, gen. ωτος, 'ear,') Oti'rium. A small ear. The auricle or pavilion of the ear.

O'to, (from ous, gen. ωτος, 'the ear,') in composition, ear.

Otoceph'alus, Mono'tia, (oto, and κεφαλη, 'head,') A monster, whose ears are in contact, or united into one.

Oto'cleis'is, (oto, and κλειω, 'I close,') Closure or obstruction of the ear.

Otocon'ia, (oto, and κονια, 'dust,') see Otoliths.

Otod'ynē, (oto, and δύνη, 'pain,') Otalgia.

Otogan'glium, Otic ganglion.

Otog'lyphis, (ωτογλυφίς, from oto, and γλυφειν, 'to hollow,') Earpick.

Otog'lyphum, (ωτογλυφον,) Earpick.

Otog'raphy, Otograph'ia, (oto, and γραφη, 'a description,') The part of anatomy which describes the ear.

Otoiatri'a, Otiatri'a.

O'toliths, Otol'ithi, O'tolites, Ear Stones, (F.) Otolithes, (from oto, and λίθος, 'a stone,') White calcareous substances contained in the membranous vestibule, and seeming to be suspended in the fluid of the vestibule by means of a number of nervous filaments proceeding from the auditory nerve. Their universal presence in the ear of the mammalia would seem to show that they are inservient to audition. When the substance is of a looser consistence, it is called Otocon'ia, Otoc'onite, Ear powder, Ear sand, (F.) Otoconie, (from oto, and conia,) Otol'ogy, Otolog'ia, (oto, and λογος, 'a discourse,') The part of anatomy which treats of the ear. An anatomical treatise on the ear.

Otopathe'ma, Otopathy.

Otop'athy, Otopathi'a, Otopathe'ma, (oto, and παθος, 'affection,') A diseased condition of the ear.

Otophleg'monē, Otitis.

O'tophone, (oto, and φωνη, 'sound,') Ear-trumpet.

Otoplas'ta, (oto, and πλασσειν, 'to cover over,') Otemplastrum.

Otoplas'ticē, O'toplasty, (oto, and πλαστικός, 'forming,') The operation for restoring a lost ear.

Otoplas'trum, Otemplastrum.

Otopyorrhœa, (oto, πυον, 'pus,' and ῥέω, 'I flow,') Oti'rhœa.

Otorrha'gia, (oto, and ῥαγή, 'rupture.') Bleeding from the ear or ears.

Otorrheumatis'mus, (oto, and ῥευματισμός, 'rheumatism,') Otal'gia rheumat'ica. Rheumatic earache.

Otorrhœ'a, Otorrhœa—o. Cerebral, see Otorrhœa—o. Interna, see Otorrhœa—o. Purulenta, Otorrhœa.

O'toscope, Otoscop'ium, (oto, and σκοπή, 'examination,') Any instrument for examining the condition of the ear. An elastic stethoscope, the ends of which are tipped with ivory—one to be inserted into the meatus of the patient, and the other applied to the ear of the examiner has been so called; as well as one formed on the principle of the ophthalmoscope, laryngoscope, &c.

Otot'omy, Ototom'ia, (oto, and τομή, 'incision,') The part of practical anatomy which teaches the mode of dissecting and preparing the ear.

Ot'to of Ro'ses, see Rosa centifolia.

Ot'toway Disease, Mal de la Baie de Saint Paul.

Ouach'ita Springs, see Arkansas, mineral waters of.

Ou'ë, (from audire, 'to hear,') Audition.

Ou'la, (ουλα,) Gingivæ.

Oulachan Oil. An amber-colored oil obtained from the oulachan, a small fish of British Columbia, proposed as a substitute for cod-liver oil; said to have the properties of the latter without its nauseous taste.

Ou'lê, (ουλη,) Cicatrix.

Ouli'tis, (ουλα, and itis,) Ullitis.

Ou'loid Cica'trix. A cicatrix, described by Mr. Erasmus Wilson, without any open sore or ulcer or lesion of continuity, met with in lupus, syphilis, elephantiasis, &c., and dependent on disorganization and destruction of the skin beneath the epidermis.

Oulorrhag'ia, (oula, and ῥαγή, 'a breaking forth,') Ulorrhagia.

Ounce, Un'cia. A weight equal to the 16th part of a pound avoirdupois, the 12th of a pound troy. It is composed of 8 drachms. See Weights and Measures.

Ouraque, Urachus.

Oura'ri, Curare.

Oure'ma, gen. Oure'matis, (ουρημα,) Urine.

Ourles, (from oreille,) Palotitis, Cynanche parotidæa.

Ourol'ogy, (oureon, and λογος, 'a discourse,') Uronology.

Our'on, (ουρον,) Urine.

Ouros'copy, (oureon, and σκοπεω, 'I examine,') see Uromantia.

Ous, gen. O'tos, (ους, gen. ωρος,) Ear.

Outh'ar, (ουθαρ,) see Mamma.

Out-kneed, Cnemosecoliosis.

Out'let of Pel'vis, see Pelvis.

Ouvre-bouche, (ouvrir, 'to open, and bouche, 'mouth,') An instrument devised for the purpose of keeping the mouth open, while the surgeon explores that cavity or performs operations upon it.

Overture Cadavérique, Autopsia cadaverica.

O'va Graaf'ia'na, Folliculi Graafiani—o. Nabothi, Nabothi glandulæ.

Ovaire, Ovarium.

O'val, Ova'lis, Oë'des, Oë'i'des, Ova'tus, (F.) Ovale, Ové, (from ovum,) Egg-shaped; elliptic. That which is round and oblong like an egg.

O'VAL FORA'MEN, Fora'men ova'lê, Fora'men oë'des, (F.) Trou ovale. The foramen obturatorium; also, the foramen in the inner paries of the middle ear, which opens into the vestibule; the foramen in the sphenoid bone, through which the third branch of the fifth pair issues from the cranium; and the aperture, in the foetus, between the auricles of the heart. See Botal foramen.

O'VAL FOS'SA, Fos'sa ova'lis, Fo'vea ova'lis,

Val'cula seu Vestig'ium Foram'inis ova'lis, is a depression observed in the right auricle of the heart, in the septum which separates it from the left auricle. It has thick and strong edges, at its upper and fore part, called Colum'næ foram'inis ova'lis, Isth'mus seu An'nulus Vieussè'nii, An'nulus seu Lim'bus fos'sæ ova'lis: in the foetus called An'nulus foram'inis seu fossæ ova'lis. The fossa ovalis, in the adult, replaces the interauricular aperture in the septum auricularum of the foetus.

Oval'bumen, Albumen ovi.

Ova'rian, Ova'rial, Ovaria'nus, (F.) Ovarien, Ovarique; (from ovarium,) Relating or belonging to the ovary—as Ovarian pregnancy, Ovarian tumors, &c.

OVA'RIAN AR'TERY, Spermatic artery—o. Dropsy, Hydroârian—o. Nerves, Spermatic plexus of nerves—o. Pregnancy, see Pregnancy, ovarian—o. Tumors, Ovary, tumors of—o. Veins, Spermatic veins—o. Vesicles, Folliculi Graafiani.

Ovariocente'sis, (ovarium, and κέντω, 'I pierce,') Puncture of the ovary.

Ovari'otomy, (ovarium, and τομή, 'section,') Oöphorectomy, Oüriot'omy, Oüriotom'ia, Ovari'otomy, Excis'io Ova'rii, Oüriostere'sis. The operation for removing the ovary was first performed in 1809 by Dr. Ephraim McDowell, of Kentucky. As now practised, it includes incision into the peritoneal cavity, exploration for adhesions, evacuation of the cyst, detachment of the adhesions, extraction of the cyst, and the treatment of the pedicle, the latter including the employment of the ligature, torsion, acupressure, éraseur, clamp, &c. (Full details of the operation are given in works upon the subject.)

Ovarique, Ovarian.

O'varism, see Ovarists.

O'varists, O'vists. Those physiologists who think that the phenomena of generation, in the human species and in every species of animal, result from the development of the ova or ovula of the female, merely incited by the male. Not many of the physiologists of the present day can be classed among the ovarists. The doctrine is called O'varism and O'vism.

Ovari'tis, (ovarium, and itis,) Oaritis.

Ovari'ule, (ovarium, and ὄλη, 'cicatrix,') Corpus luteum.

Ova'rium, (ωοριον, dim. of ωον, ovum,) The Ovary, Eggbed; Tes'tis mul'iebris seu femine'us, Oa'rian, Ooph'orum, Gynoa'rium, Vesica'rium, (F.) Ovaire. The ovaries are the organs in which the ova are formed in oviparous animals. By analogy, the name has been given to the organs which the ancients called the testicles of the female. They are two ovoid bodies, almost as large as the testicles in man, placed on each side of the uterus, between the Fallopian tube and round ligament, and in the substance of the broad ligament. Their outer extremity gives attachment to one of the projections of the fimbriated extremity of the Fallopian tube; and the internal is fixed to the uterus by a small ligamentous cord, called Ligamen'tum rotun'dum ova'rii, Ligament of the Ovary, Mesoa'rium. Henle calls a ligament, passing between the lateral top of the ovary and the ostium abdominale of the Fallopian tube, Ligamen'tum infundibulo-ovar'icum, Ligament tubo-ovarien. The Ligamen'tum infundibulo-pel'vicum passes between the infundibulum of the tube and the pelvis. The ovaries are composed of a very close, spongy texture—stroma,—and of small vesicles—Folliculi Graaf'iani,—filled with a clear fluid; these vesicles contain ovules, which detach themselves from the ovarium before and after fecundation, and are carried into the cavity of the uterus by the Fallopian tube.

The ovary may be affected with apoplexy or sanguineous pelvic effusion, atrophy, dropsy, tumors, inflammation (ovari'tis, oüri'tis, or oöphori'tis).

tis), neuralgia (oöphoral'gia), cancer, cystic tumors of various kinds, as the multiple, proliferous, cysto-sarcomatous, dermoid, tubo-ovarian, &c.

OVARIUM LUXA'TUM. Dislocation of the ovary.

OVARIUM NABO'THI, Nabothi glandulæ—o. Secundarium, Nabothi glandulæ—o. Tumidum, Ovarious.

Ovary, Ovarium—o. Hernia of, Hernia ovarii.

Ovary, PROLAP'SUS OF. A painful displacement of the organ between the rectum and uterus, from increase of bulk and weight due to inflammation or other disease.

Ovary, TU'MORS OF THE. These are either solid or cystic; the former including fibroma, carcinoma, enchondroma, &c.; the latter—ovarian cysts—the simple cysts, or hydrops vesicularum, cystoma ovarii, and stroma ovarii. These cysts vary in their color, size, and contents, the solid ingredients including fat granules, epithelial cells, blood, pus, and, in dermoid cysts, hair, bones, sebaceous matter, &c. The treatment includes tapping, injection of iodine, ovariectomy, &c.

Ova'tion, see Parturition.

Ova'tus, (from ovum,) Oval.

Ové, Oval.

Overo Butua, Pareira brava.

O'verreach, Tread. A disease of the feet and ankles of horses and cattle, produced by the animal pressing one foot over the other.

O'vi Vitellus, see Ovum.

Ovicap'sule, (ovum, and capsule,) see Folliculi Graafiani.

O'viduct, (ovum, and ductus, 'duct,') Tube, Fallopian.

Oviduc'tus Muli'ebris, Tuba Fallopiana.

Ovig'rous, O'viger, Ovig'erus, (ovum, and gero, 'I bear,') Containing or producing ova or eggs.

Oviparité, see Oviparous.

Ovip'arous, Ovip'arus, (F.) Ovipare, (ovum, and pario, 'I bring forth,') An epithet applied to animals which are hatched from eggs outside of the body. The condition may be termed Ovip'arousness, (F.) Oviparité. See Generation.

Ovip'arousness, see Oviparous.

Ovipont, (F.) Oviponte, ([L.] ovum, [F.] œuf, and ponte,) 'the laying of an egg.' The escape of the ovum from the ovary; while ovulation includes, also, the process of its maturation.

O'visac, (ovum, and sac,) see Folliculi Graafiani—o. Tunic of the, see Folliculi Graafiani.

O'vism, see Ovarists.

O'vists, Ovarists.

Ovol'ogy, (ovum, and λογος, 'a discourse,') Oologia.

Ovovip'arous, (F.) Ovo-vivipare, (ovum, vivus, 'living,' and pario, 'I bring forth,') Oviparous animals, whose ova are hatched within the mother,—vipers, for example. See Generation.

O'vula (pl. of Ovulum) Graafiana, 'ovules of De Graaf,' Folliculi Graafiani—o. Nabothi, Nabothi glandulæ.

O'vular, Ovula'ris, (from ovulum.) Relating or belonging to the ovule.

Ovula'tion, Ootoc'ia. The formation of ova in the ovary, and the discharge of the same. Also, the development of the embryo from the egg. See Ovipont.

OVULA'TION, SPONTA'NEOUS, (F.) Ovulation spontané, is the spontaneous formation and discharge of ova which takes place in the female of the mammalia. See Heat, and Menses.

O'vule, Ovulum—o. of Nabothi, Nabothi glandulæ.

Ovules Mâles, see Sperm.

O'vuline, (from ovulum.) Decidua reflexa.

O'vulum, O'vule. A small egg. That which has the appearance of a small egg. See Ovum.

O'vum, O'vum, Egg, (F.) Œuf. The egg of Phasianus Gallus, the common hen, is chiefly used as food. The different parts are likewise employed in medicine. The shell, Auran'cum, Auran'tum, Tes'ta Ovi, Putamen Ovi, (F.) Coque ou Coquille d'œuf, calcined, is esteemed an absorbent. The Oil of the Egg, (F.) Huile d'œufs, is emollient, and is used, externally, to burns and chaps. The Yolk or Yolk of the egg—Vitel'lum seu Vitel'lus o'vi, Lec'ithos—renders oils, &c. miscible with water. Eggs, when lightboiled, are easy of digestion; but, when very hardboiled or fried, they are more rebellious.

Egg Brandy is made by taking of Brandy, f3iv., Cinnamon water, f3iv., the yolks of two eggs, Sugar, 3ss., and Oil of cinnamon, gtt. ij. Mix the yolks of the eggs first with the water, the oil and the sugar, stirring constantly. Then add the brandy little and little, until a smooth fluid is formed. It is an agreeable mode of giving brandy in adynamic states.

Egg Broth is made by beating the yolk of one egg with a spoonful of white sugar to a cream, and pouring on it, in a bowl, stirring it, half a pint of boiling new milk or water, adding a spoonful of good brandy and grated nutmeg.

Egg'nog is a drink made of eggs, rum or brandy, milk and sugar beaten up together.

In Pharmacy, white of egg, which consists chiefly of albumen, is used for clarifying syrups, &c. See Albumen ovi. Yolk of egg, (F.) Jaune d'œuf, beaten up with warm water and sugar, and aromatized with orange-flower water, forms an emulsion, which is emollient, and known under the name Lait de poule, or chicken's milk.

Anatomists give the name O'va, O'vula, O'vules, (F.) Œufs, to round vesicles, containing a humor similar to the yolk of egg, which are situate in the ovaries of the female, and, when fecundated, constitute the rudiments of the fetus. During gestation the embryo and its enveloping membranes retain the name Ovum, (F.) Œuf. The changes induced in the mammalia after impregnation greatly resemble those in the bird.

O'vum, Testicle—o. Hystericum, see Clavus hystericus.

Ox, in composition, see Oxy.

Oxalæ'mia, (oxalic acid, and αἷμα, 'blood,') An excess of oxalic acid in the system.

Ox'alas (gen. Oxalatis) Subpotas'sicus, Potassa, oxalate of.

Ox'alate of Cal'cium. This salt is frequently found in the urine, in urinary deposits, &c.

Oxalat'ic, Oxalat'icus. Relating to oxalates: hence Oxolat'ic or Oxal'ic acid Diath'esis; the habit of body which favors the formation and deposition of oxalates from the urine, Oxalu'ria.

Oxal'ic Ac'id, (αξάλις, 'sorrel,') Ac'idum oxal'icum seu sacchari'num seu hydrocarbo'nicum seu acetosel'læ seu oxal'icum seu sac'chari, Ac'id of sugar or of sor'el, Car'bonous acid, (F.) Acide Oxalique ou de Sucre. An acid found in sorrel—Oxalis—and several other vegetable substances. It is usually obtained by decomposing sugar with nitric acid; but it may also be obtained from molasses, rice, gum, &c. It crystallizes in long, colorless, quadrangular prisms, and is generally found, in nature, united with lime or potassa. It has been proposed, in a diluted state, as a refrigerant, but it is unnecessary; and, besides, in quantity, it is a virulently acrid poison. It was once largely employed for cleaning boot-tops; and, as it strongly resembles the sulphate of magnesia, has often been mistaken for it. See Poisons (table).

Oxal'ic Ac'id Diath'esis, see Oxalatic.

Oxalide, Oxalis acetosella.

Ox'alis (gen. Oxal'idis) Aceto'sa, (from αξός, 'acid,' owing to the sharpness of its juice,) Rumex acetosus.

OXALIS ACETOSEL'LA, O. America'na, Ox'ys al'ba. The systematic name of the Woodsorrel, Cuckowbread, Sour Trefoil, White sor'el, Mountain Sor'el, Trifo'lum aceto'sum, Oxitriphyl'lum, Lu'jula, Allelu'ja, Acetosel'la, Oxyphyl'lon, Oxytriphyl'lon, Pa'nis cu'culi, (F.) Surelle, Oxalide, Pain à Coucou, Alleluia. Ord. Oxalidaceæ. Sex. Syst. Decandria Decagynia. This plant has a gratefully acid taste, and is used in salads. It has been esteemed refrigerant, antiscorbutic, and diuretic.

OX'ALIS AMERICA'NA, O. acetosella.

OX'ALIS STRIC'TA, Yel'low woodsorrel; indigenous, has similar virtues to O. acetosella.

OX'ALIS TUBERO'SA, O'ca. A tuberous plant, whose ovalshaped root is used as food by the Peruvians. It is watery, has a sweetish taste, and is much liked.

Oxa'lium, Potassa, oxalate of.

Oxal'mê, (οξάλη, from oxus, and ἄλς, 'salt.')

A mixture of vinegar and salt.

Oxalu'ria, see Oxalatic, and Urine, oxalic.

Oxelæ'on, (οξέλαιον, from oxy, and ελαιον, 'oil.')

A mixture of vinegar and oil, used as a condiment.

Oxéolê, (from oxus,) Acétolê.

Ox'eye, Helenium autumnale.

Ox'gall, Bile of the ox.

Oxycèdre, (οξύκεδρος,) Juniperus oxycedrus.

Ox'id, Oxide.

Oxida'tion, Oxyda'tio, Oxyda'tion, Oxygena'tion. The action of oxidizing a body; that is, of combining it with oxygen, a combination from which results an oxide.

Ox'ide, Ox'yd, Ox'id, Ox'yde, Ox'ydim, Ox'idum, (F.) Oxyde, Oxode, Oxure. A combination, not acid, of a simple body with oxygen.

Ox'IDE, CAL'CU'LOUS, Oxide, cystic.

Ox'IDE, CYS'TIC, Cal'culous or Ves'ical ox'ide, Cys'tine, Neph'rine, Scorodos'mine. A species of urinary calculus, having the shape of confused, yellowish, semitransparent, insipid, very hard crystals. When distilled, it furnishes subcarbonate of ammonia, like all nitrogenized matters. It dissolves in nitric, sulphuric, phosphoric, and oxalic acids.

Ox'IDE, VES'ICAL, Oxide, cystic.

Ox'idum, Oxide—o. Antimonii cum phosphate calcis, Antimonial powder.

Ox'IDUM FER'RI NI'GRUM, Fer'ri ox'idum ni'grum, Black ox'ide of i'ron, Fer'ro-fer'ric hy'drate. The scales, which fall from iron when heated, consist of iron combined with oxygen. They have been used like the chalybeates in general. The Edinburgh Pharmacopœia has a Fer'ri ox'idum ni'grum, made by precipitating, by ammonia, a solution of the mixed sulphate of protoxide and sesquioxide of iron. An analogous preparation was in the Dublin Pharmacopœia, under the name Fer'ri ox'idum magnet'icum, Magnet'ic ox'ide of i'ron, Mar'tial E'thiops.

Ox'IDUM FER'RICUM CRYSTALLIZA'TUM NATI'VUM, Hæmatites—o. Ferroso-ferricum, Æthiops martialis—o. Hydrargyri completum, Hydrargyri nitrico-oxidum—o. Hydrargyricum, Hydrargyri nitrico-oxidum—o. Hydrargyricum præparatum, Hydrargyri oxidum cinereum—o. Hydrargyrosium, Hydrargyri oxidum cinereum—o. Magnesium, Magnesia.

Ox'IDUM STIB'II SULPHURA'TUM, He'par anti-mo'ni, Cro'cus metallo'rum seu anti-mo'ni, (F.) Oxyde d'Antimoine sulfuré, Foie d'Antimoine. This was formerly exhibited in the cure of fevers, but it is now rarely employed.

Ox'IDUM URICUM, Uric oxide.

Oxi'nes, (οξίνες, — οίνος, — from οξύς, 'sharp.')

Wine already sour, but not yet vinegar.

Oxitriphyl'lum, (oxy, and τριφυλλιον, 'trefoil,')

Oxalis acetosella.

Oxode, Oxide.

Oxo'des, (οξύδες,) Acidulous.

Oxo'idés, (from oxy, and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Acidulous.

Ox'ter, (Sax. oxtræn,) Axilla.

Ozure, Oxide.

Ox'us, (οξύς,) Aceticum acidum, Acetum.

Ox'y, (from οξύς, 'acute,') in composition, acute, quick, pointed, sharp, acid. In the composition of chemical terms, oxy and ox mean oxygen.

Ox'ya, (οξύς,) Fagus sylvatica.

Oxyacan'tha, (οξύκανθα, from oxy, and ακανθα, 'a thorn,') Mespilus oxyacantha.

OXYACAN'THA GALE'NI, Ber'beris, B. vulgaris, Spi'na ac'ida, Crespi'nus, (F.) Épine vinette, Vinettier. Family, Berberidæ. Sex. Syst. Hexandria Monogynia. The Bar'berry. The fruit of the berries, Bar'berries, is gratefully acid, and moderately astringent. By preparing an alcoholic extract of the root, Berberis (Ph. U. S.), and adding water to it, a pulverulent brown substance is thrown down, which, when dissolved in alcohol and evaporated, yields the bitter principle, Berberin, Berberina, which is an excellent stomachic in the dose of 2 to 10 grains. Oxyacanthin, Berbi'na, and Vineti'na have also been extracted from it. The hydrochlorate of berberin has been employed in splenic enlargement from malaria. An extract from the woods or roots of various species of berberis is used in India in affections of the eye, under the name of Rusot or Ruscut.

The American Barberry, Berberis Canadensis, Pip'peridge Bush, Sow'berry, differs slightly from the European. It flourishes on mountains and hilly districts from Canada to Virginia.

Oxyacan'thin, see Oxyacantha Galeni.

Oxyæsthe'sia, (oxy, and æsthesia,) Hyperæsthesis.

Oxyaph'ê, (oxy, and ἀφή, 'touch,') Hyperaphia.

Oxyaph'ia, Hyperaphia.

Oxybaph'ion, (οξύβαφιον, from οξύς, 'acid,' or οξος, vinegar, and βαπτειν, 'to dip,') see Acetabulum.

Oxyblep'sia, (οξύβλεψια, from oxy, and βλέπω, 'I see,') Acuteness of sight.

Oxybol'ia, (oxy, and βολή, 'ejection,') Too rapid emission of sperm.

Oxycèdre, (οξύκεδρος,) Juniperus oxycedrus.

Oxycephal'ia, 'sugar-loaf head,' (oxy, and κεφαλή, 'head,') Monstrosity in which the head is peaked like a sugar-loaf.

Oxycoc'cos, (oxy, and κοκκος, 'berry,') Vaccinium oxycoccos — o. Macrocarpus, see Vaccinium oxycoccos — o. Palustris, Vaccinium oxycoccos.

Ox'ycrate, Oxycra'tum, (οξύκρατον, from oxy, and κρᾶω, 'I mix,') Pos'ca, Phus'ca. A mixture of vinegar and water; frequently used in medicine as a refrigerant and antiseptic.

Oxycro'ceum Emplas'trum, (oxy, and κροκος, 'saffron,') A plaster, composed of saffron, pitch, colophony, yellow wax, turpentine, galbanum, gum ammoniac, myrrh, olibanum, and mastic. It was employed as a strengthening plaster.

Ox'yeum, Oxygen.

Ox'yd, Oxide.

Oxyda'tion, Oxidation.

Oxyde, Oxide—o. Gris ou noir de Mercure, see Hydrargyri oxidum cinereum—o. Noir de Fer, Æthiops martialis.

Oxyder'cia, (οξύτερεια,) Oxydor'cia, Vi'sûs a'cies, (oxy, and ἔκρω, 'I see,') Sharpness of vision.

Oxyder'cius, Oxyder'ces. A medicine which sharpens the sight.

Oxydor'cia, (οξύτερεια,) Oxydercia.

Ox'ydim, Oxide.

Oxyecoi'a, (οξύεκοια, from oxy, and ακοή, 'hearing,') Hyperacusis.

Oxyg'ala, gen. Oxygalac'tis, (οξυγάλα, from oxy, and γάλα, 'milk,') Sour milk. The Oxygala equinum, Caracos'mos, is reckoned among the delicacies of the Tartars.

Oxyg'aron, (οξύγαρον, from oxy, and γαρν, 'garum,') A composition of garum and vinegar.

Ox'ygen, Oxygen'ium, Empyr'eol, pure, vital, or dephlogisticated Air, Oxyg'enes, Ox'ycum, Princip'ium oxyg'enans seu oxygenet'icum seu acidificans seu ac'idum, Elemen'tum acidif'icum, (F.) Oxygène, Air du feu, (αξύς, 'acid,' and γεννω, 'I engender,' that is, generator of acids; and such it was believed to be exclusively, at the period when the name was given to it. This is now known not to be the case.) Oxygen is an elementary principle, largely distributed in nature. It exists in the air, in water, in several acids, in all the oxides, and in vegetable and animal substances. It is obtained by decomposing the peroxide of manganese or the chlorate of potassa by heat in close vessels. Although oxygen, in the state of admixture in which it is found in the atmosphere, is of vital importance, it cannot be respired in a pure state with impunity. Animals die in it long before the whole of the oxygen is consumed. The properties of oxygen seem to be stimulant. It increases the force and velocity of the pulse, and has, accordingly, been used in cases of chronic debility, chlorosis, asthma, scrofula, dropsy, paralysis, &c. It requires to be diluted with from 10 to 20 parts of atmospheric air; one to two quarts being used during the day.

Ox'YGEN, NEU'TRAL, see Ozone.

Ox'ygenated Wa'ter, Hydrogen, peroxide of. Oxygenation, Oxidation.

Oxygène, Oxygen.

Oxygénèses. A name given by Baumes to diseases which he attributed to disordered oxygenation.

Oxygeus'ia, (oxy, and γεύσις, 'taste,') Hypergeusia.

Oxyg'lucus, Oxyg'lyces, (οξύγλυκος, from oxy, and γλυκος, 'sweet,') Mul'sa ac'ida, Acetum mulsum dul'ce. Prepared by macerating and boiling honeycomb (from which the greater part of the honey has been taken) in water, and adding vinegar. An Oxymel.

Oxyhydrocarbure'tum ex O'leo Pyroxyl'ico Para'tum, Creasote.

Oxylap'athum, (oxy, and λαπαθον, 'dock,') Rumex acutus.

Ox'ymel, gen. Oxymel'lis, Apom'eli, Mel aceta'tum, (F.) Acetomel, Oxymel Sim'ple, (οξύμελι, from oxy, and μέλι, 'honey,') Honey and vinegar boiled to a syrupy consistence. (Mel. despumat., 3xl., Acid. acetic., 3v., Aq. destillat., f3v. Add the acid to the water, and mix them with the honey previously liquefied by heat. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, f3j-ij. It is cooling; externally detergent.

Ox'YMEI ÆRU'GINIS, Linimentum æruginis.

Ox'YMEI COL'CHICI, O. of mead'ow saffron, (F.) Oxymel colchique. (Rad. Colch. recent. in laminas tenues sectæ, 3j., Aceti destillati, lbj., Mellis despumat., pond., lbj. Macerate in a gentle heat for forty-eight hours. Press and boil the liquor with the honey to the thickness of a syrup; stirring with a wooden spoon. Ph. D.) It is expectorant and diuretic. Dose, f3j. in gruel.

Oxymel Colchique, O. colchici—o. of Meadow saffron, O. colchici.

Ox'YMEI SCIL'LÆ, O. of Squills, O. Scillicit'icum, Mel Scill'æ, (F.) O. Scillitique. (Acet. scillæ, Oj., Mel. despumat., lbj. Mix and evaporate by a water-bath until the product, when cold, has the s. g. 1.32. Ph. B., 1867.) Expecto- rant and diuretic. Dose, f3j. to f3ij.

Oxymel Scillitique, Oxymel scillæ—o. Sim- ple, see Oxymel—o. of Squill, O. scillæ.

Oxymor'phine or Oxymor'phia, Pseudo- morphia.

Oxymyr'rhone, (oxy, and μυρρηνή, 'myrtle,') Ruscus.

Oxymyr'sinë, (οξύμυρσίνη.) Ruscus.

Oxyn'gium, Adeps suillus.

Oxyni'tron, (oxy, and νιτρον, 'nitre,') Name of a plaster, composed chiefly of vinegar and nitre, and recommended by Aëtius.

Oxynose'ma, gen. Oxynose'matis, (oxy, and νοσσημα, 'disease,') Acute disease.

Oxyn'osios, (oxy, and νοσος, 'disease,') Acute disease.

Oxynu'sos, (oxy, and νοσος, 'disease,') Acute disease.

Oxyo'pia, Galero'pia, Hyperop'sia, Suffu'sio exela'rans, A'cies vi'sus, (oxy, and ωψ, 'sight,') Excessive acuteness of the sense of sight. Instances have occurred where persons could see the stars in the daytime. The cause is seated in great sensibility of the retina. The term has been used synonymously with nyctalopia.

Oxyosphre'sia, Oxyosphra'sia, (oxy, and σφρησις, 'smell,') Excessive acuteness of the sense of smell.

Oxyphlegma'sia, οξυφλεγμασία, (from oxy, and φλεγμασία, Acu'ta et ve'hemens inflamma'tio. A violent inflammation.

Oxyphæn'icon, (oxy, 'acid,' and φοινικισ, 'deep red,') [?] Tamarindus.

Oxypho'nia, Vox acu'ta, (οξύφωνια, from oxy, and φωνη, 'voice,') Parapho'nia clau'gens seu ulcero'sa, Olan'gor, Vox clango'sa, Leptopho'nia. A shrill and squalling voice,—frequently a symp- tom of morbid affection of the larynx.

Oxyphyl'lon, (oxy, and φυλλον, 'a leaf,') Oxalis acetosella.

Oxypod'ia, (oxy, and ποδς, gen. ποδος, 'foot,') see Kyllosis.

Oxyqui'nia, (oxy for oxygen, and quinia,.) A substance obtained from boiling sulphate of qui- nia and solution of nitrate of potassa together, differing from quinia in containing two addi- tional equivalents of oxygen.

Oxyreg'mia, (οξύρεγμα, from oxy, and ερεγγω, 'I belch,') Ruc'tus ac'idus. Acid eructation.

Oxyl'ia Renifor'mis, (αξύς, 'sharp, acid,') Ru- mex dig'ynus, Bo'real sour'dock, Moun'tain sor- rel, Welsh sor'el. A plant, Ord. Polygonaceæ, Sex. Syst. Diandria Digynia, which grows in the northern parts of America and Europe; blossom- ing in the spring. It possesses the same prop- erties as Oxalis acetosella.

Oxyrrhod'inon, Acetum rosa'tum, (oxy, and ρόδον, 'a rose,') A composition of vinegar and roses. (Ol. Rosat., 3ij., acet. rosat., 3j.) Used as a liniment in herpes and erysipelas.

Ox'ys, (αξύς,) Acid, Acute—o. Alba, Oxalis ace- tosella.

Oxysac'charum, (oxy, and σακχαρον, 'sugar,') A mixture of sugar and vinegar; termed Oxysac- charum vomiti'um, when it held in solution the glass of antimony; and Oxysac'charum scillit'i- cum, when it contained squills.

Ox'ysal Diaphoret'icum Angeli Sa'læ. A preparation of Angelo Sala. Acetate of potassa exposed to the atmosphere; and consequently fallen into a state of deliquium.

Oxytar'tarus, Potassæ acetat.

Ox'ytes, (οξύτης,) Acidity.

Oxytoc'ia, (oxy, and τοκος, 'bringing forth,') Rapidity of parturition.

Oxytoc'ic, Oxytoc'us. A medicine which pro- motes delivery.

Oxytriphyl'lon, (oxy, and τριφυλλον, 'trefoil,') Oxalis acetosella.

Oxyure Vermiculatæ, see Ascaris and Para- sites.

Oxyu'ricide, (oxyuris, and cedere, 'to kill,') An anthelmintic which is fatal to Oxyuris vermi- cularis more especially.

Oxyu'ris Vermicula'ris, (oxy, and ουρα, 'a tail,') see Ascaris and Parasites.

Oys'ter Green, Ulva latissima—o. Plant, Tragopogon—o. Root, Tragopogon—o. Vegetable, Tragopogon.

Oys'ter Shells, Ostreæ testæ — Oyster Shell, Prepared, Testa præparata.

Ozæ'na, (ὄζα, Coryza enton'ica seu purulen'ta seu ozæno'sa seu ulcero'sa seu virulen'ta seu maligna, Pyorrhœ'a nasa'lis, Entozæ'na, Rhini'tis ulcero'sa, U'lcus na'rrium fo'tens, (ὄζη, 'a fetid smell,') (F.) Ozène, Punaisie. An affection of the pituitary membrane, which gives occasion to a disagreeable odor similar to that of a crushed bedbug; hence the name Punais, by which the French designate one laboring under ozæna. It is, sometimes, owing to caries of the bones; but is, perhaps, most frequently dependent upon syphilitic ulceration of the pituitary membrane, with or without caries of the bones of the nose.

OZÆ'NA BENIG'NA, see Coryza.

O'zê, (ὄζη,) Breath, offensive.

Ozemun, Albumen.

Oze'na, Ozæna.

Ozène, Ozæna.

Ozocerite, Ozokerit.

Ozokerit, Ozocerite, Veg'etable Wax, Fos'sil Wax. A hydrocarbon found in a layer of bituminous slate in Moldavia, Wallachia, &c.; snowy white; when refined, acting like tar; when mixed with linseed oil, it stimulates the diseased skin, as in chronic eczema.

O'zon, Ozone', (ὄζω, 'I smell of something,') The powerfully odorous matter produced when a current of ordinary electricity passes from pointed bodies into the air, or by placing phosphorus in a flask filled with atmospheric air, and partly covered with water, occasionally agitating the flask. It is generally presumed to be a peculiar modification of oxygen; and in varying quantity in the atmosphere is supposed to affect the health of man; but knowledge of this matter is exceedingly vague.

Schönbein considers that oxygen exists in three different allotropic conditions, two of which are active and in opposition to each other. These are ozone and antiozone, equal quantities of which neutralize each other and form inactive or neutral oxygen. Ozone is considered by some to be oxygen condensed to two-thirds its bulk, when it possesses remarkable oxidizing properties. Ozone ether, Ozon'ic ether, proposed as a disinfectant, is probably only the ethereal solution of peroxide of nitrogen.

Air containing ozone is said to be o'zonized, (F.) Ozonisé, Ozoné.

Ozostomia, (ὄζη, 'a stench,' and στομα, 'mouth,') Breath, offensive.

Pab'ulum, Tro'phê, Phor'bê, Alimen'tum, Nutrimen'tum. Food, aliment. The animal heat and animal spirits—unmeaning terms—were formerly considered the Pabulum vitæ, as oxygen is eminently so by many.

Pacay, Prosopis dulcis.

Pacchio'ni, Glands or Cor'puscles of, Pacchio'nian Bod'ies or Granula'tions, Glan'dule du'ræ ma'tris seu du'ræ menin'gis, Tuber'cula par'va seu Cor'pora glandifor'mia du'ræ ma'tris, (F.) Glandes de Pacchioni, Granulations cérébrales, (after Pacchioni, an Italian anatomist.) Small, whitish, or yellowish bodies, sometimes separate, at others united like a bunch of grapes, which are observed in several parts of the dura and pia mater. They receive vessels, but apparently no nerves. Their texture and uses are unknown. A considerable number is observed in the longitudinal sinus, covered by the internal membrane.

Pachæ'mia, Pachyæ'mia, Pachæ'ma, Pachyæ'ma, (pachy, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Too great thickness of the blood.

Pacheablepharo'sis, Pacheableph'ara, Pachybleph'aron, Pachyblepharo'sis, Pach'ytes, (pachy, and βλεφάρων, 'an eyelid,') A name given, by some authors, to a thickening of the eyelids, produced by tubercles or excrescences formed on their margins. It is the same affection as that which Sauvages designates Cal'igo à Pacheablepharo'si.

Pach'etos, (παχέτος,) see Laqueus.

Pachulo'sis, (παχυλος, 'thick,') Pachylosis.

Pach'y, (παχὺς, 'thick,') in composition, thick.

Pachyæ'mia, Pachæ'mia.

Pachybleph'aron, Pacheablepharosis.

Pachycephalia, (pachy, and κεφαλή, 'head,') A condition of skull, in which the walls are unusually thickened.

Pachycephalic. Having an unusually thickened skull.

Pachychol'ia, (pachy, and χολη, 'bile,') Morbid thickness of the bile.

Pachydermatoce'lê, (pachy, δερμα, gen. δερματος, 'skin,' and κηλη, 'a tumor,') A disease of the dermoid tissue, apparently congenital, which increases at times from a small mole or spot to the size and appearance of a relaxed and very emaciated mamma.

Pachyder'mia, Elephantiasis.

Pachylo'sis, Pachulo'sis, Paculo'sis, (παχυλος, 'thick,') An inordinate production of the epidermis dependent upon hypertrophy of the papillæ of the skin. Pachylo'sis Epider'mica, Paculo'sis Epider'mica, is a form of the disease attacking the palms and soles of the feet.

Pachymeningite, Pachymeningitis.

Pachymeningi'tis, gen. Pachymeningi'tidis, (F.) Pachymeningite, Per'imeningi'tis (pachymeninx, 'dura mater,' and itis, 'inflammation,') Inflammation of the dura mater. Hæmato'ma of the du'ra ma'ter, (F.) Hématome de la dure mère, is a blood-sac, resulting from chronic pachymeningitis, with hemorrhagic exudation.

Pachyme'ninx, gen. Pachymenin'gis, (pachy, and μνιγξ, gen. μνιγγος, 'a membrane,') Dura mater.

Pachyn'sis, (παχυνσις, from παχυνω, 'I make thick,') Polysarcia adiposa.

Pachyn'tica, (παχυντικά,) Incrassantia.

Pachys'mus, (παχυσμος, from παχὺς, 'thick,') Polysarcia adiposa.

Pach'ytes, (παχυτης, 'thickness,') Pacheablepharosis.

Pædobaromacrom'eter, (pædo, βαρος, 'weight,' μέτρος, 'large,' and μέτρον, 'measure,') Baromacrometer.

Pædom'eter, (pædo, and μέτρον, 'measure,') Baromacrometer.

Pædon'osus, (pædo, and νόσος, 'disease,') A disease of childhood.

Pædop'athy, Pædiop'athy, (pædo, and παθος, 'disease,') The pathology of children.

Pædophlebotom'ia, (from pædo, φλέψ, 'a vein,' and τομή, 'incision,') Venæsec'tio puero'rum. Bleeding performed on children.

Pædot'ribes, Min'ister Gymnas'tæ, (pædo, and τριβω, 'I train,') In ancient gymnastics, the officer acquainted with all the prescribed exercises, and who carried them into effect, according to the direction of the superior.

Pædot'rophy, Pædiotrophy, Pædotroph'ia, (F.) Pédotrophie, (pædo, and τροφή, 'nourishment,') The part of hygiene which concerns the nourishment of children.

Pæeos'ynê, (παῖοσυνη,) Medicine.

Pæon, (Παιων, 'the god of physic,') Physician.

Pæo'nia, P. officina'lis seu mas'cula seu ne-mora'lis seu fem'ina seu loba'ta, Hæmago'gum, Pe'ony, or Pi'ony, male and female, (F.) Pivoine, Pione, Herbe Sainte-Rose, (from Παιων, 'the god of physic,') The root, flowers, and seeds were long esteemed powerful medicines. They are feebly astringent, and have been considered to be narcotic and antispasmodic. They have been given, particularly, in intermittents and epilepsy, but are not now used. The flowers are called Rosa benedictæ, R. re'gia.

PAIN'FUL POINT, see Point, painful.

Pains, La'bor pains, Throes, Throes, Parturien'tis dolo'res, O'din, O'dis, Dolo'res ad par'tum, Tor'mina parturien'tium, (F.) Mal d'Enfant, Dou-leurs. The uneasy sensations that accompany labor, and are owing to uterine contraction. The pains that precede actual delivery, and are simply employed in dilating the os uteri, are called grinding: those which extrude the child, forcing. Those which take place in the first days after delivery, and are employed in forcing away coagula, &c., are termed Afterpains, Dolo'res seu Tor'mina post par'tum, D. puerpera'rum, (F.) Tranchées utérines.

"To take a pain," — "To try a pain," — is to make an examination per vaginam, during labor, to discover its progress, character, &c.

The French term the pains which precede and announce labor, mouches; those which accompany it, douleurs; and those which occur immediately afterwards, douleurs tranchées ou coliques.

PAINS, AF'TER, see Pains, labor.

PAINS, GNAW'ING, Dolo'res rodentes. Pains resembling what might be produced by the gnawing of an animal.

Paint, (pingere, pinctum, 'to paint,' [L.] pinto, [F.] peint,) Pigmentum, Fucus, (F.) Fard. A name given to different substances, employed for embellishing the complexion or rendering the skin softer. The substances most commonly used for this purpose are:—Subn'trate of Bis'muth, (F.) Blanc de fard; a spirituous solution of benzoïn, precipitated by water, and forming Vir'gin's milk, (F.) Lait virginal; the red or rouge of the carthamus; Spanish white; the oxides of lead, tin, and mercury, vermilion, red saunders, &c. All paints may be said to be noxious. They injure the skin; obstruct perspiration; and, thus, frequently lay the foundation for cutaneous affections. See Cosmetic.

'To paint' a surface is to cover it with some topical application, as with iodine to an inflamed part, (F.) Badigeonner.

Pais, (παῖς, gen. παῖδος,) Boy.

Pal'ad, Vertex.

Palæ's'tra, (παλαιστρά, 'a place for wrestling,' from παλῆ, 'wrestling,') Gymnasium.

Palais, Palate.

Pal'amé, (παλαμή,) Palm.

Pal'atal, Palatine.

Pal'ate, Palatum, Hypero'a, Hypero'um, Uranis'cus, U'ranus, Roof of the mouth, Fos'sa Palati'na, Palatum stabile seu du'rum seu os'seum, Hard Pal'ate, (F.) Palais. The upper part of the cavity of the mouth; a kind of parabolic vault formed by the two superior maxillary bones and the two palate bones, covered with a thick and dense mucous membrane; bounded, before and at the sides, by the superior dental arch; and behind by the velum palati. A whitish line runs along the middle, from before to behind, at the anterior extremity of which is a tubercle corresponding to the inferior orifice of the anterior palatine canal. The arteries of the palate and corresponding gums proceed from the palatine, alveolar, infraorbital, labial, and buccal branches. The veins follow a similar course. The nerves are given off from the palatine, facial, infraorbital, superior dental, and from the naso-palatine ganglion.

PAL'ATE, ARTIFIC'IAL, Obtura'tor for the pal'ate, (F.) Obturator du Palais. A plate of tortoise-shell, silver, vulcanite, &c., used to close a deficiency of the palate.

PAL'ATE BONE, Os Pala'ti seu basila'rē, (F.) Os Palatin ou du Palais, is a small bone of an irregular shape, situate at the posterior part of the nasal fossæ and palate. It seems formed by the union of two bony plates joined at right angles to each other; so that one is inferior and horizontal;—the other, superior and vertical. The horizontal or palatine portion or plate, Arch of the palate, Os Quadratum of the ancients, is quadrilateral. Its upper surface forms part of the nasal fossæ; the lower forms part of the palatine arch, and contains the inferior orifice of the posterior palatine canal. Its anterior edge is articulated with the palatine process of the superior maxillary bone; the posterior is free and sharp. It gives attachment to the velum palati, and presents an eminence, which, when joined with one on the opposite side, forms the posterior nasal spine. Its inner edge is articulated with the corresponding bone; its outer is confounded with the vertical portion. The vertical or ascending portion has the form of a long square. The inner surface forms part of the outer paries of the nasal fossæ. Its outer surface is unequal, and is articulated with the superior maxillary bone; behind, it presents a vertical groove, which forms part of the posterior palatine canal; and, above, a small free surface, which looks into the zygomatic fossa. Its anterior edge is united with the superior maxillary bone; the posterior is unequal, and rests on the internal ala of the pterygoid process. The angle which it forms by uniting with the posterior edge of the horizontal portion presents a very prominent pyramidal eminence, called the tuberosity of the palate bone. Its upper margin is surmounted by two eminences;—the one, anterior, called the orbital process;—the other, posterior, the sphenoid process. These two processes are separated by an almost circular notch, which the sphenoid bone forms into a foramen, called the sphenopalatine.

This bone appears to be developed from a single point of ossification. It is articulated with the sphenoid, ethmoid, the cornua sphenoidalia, superior maxillary bone, the inferior spongy bone, the vomer, and its fellow.

PAL'ATE, CLEFT, see Harelip—p. Falling down of the, Uvulitis—p. Fissured, see Harelip—p. Hard, Palate—p. Soft, Velum pendulum palati—p. Split, see Harelip.

PAL'atine, Pal'atal, Palati'nus, Pal'atic, (from palatum,) Relating or belonging to the palate.

PAL'ATINE ARCHES, see Arches of the palate.

PAL'ATINE or PAL'ATAL ARTERIES are two in number. They are distinguished into, 1. The superior palatal or palatine arteries, Palati'na superior seu descen'dens or Pal'atomax'illary, which leaves the internal maxillary behind the top of the orbit; descends into the pterygomaxillary fissure, and enters the posterior maxillary canal. Its branches are distributed to the velum palati and the nasal fossæ. 2. The inferior or ascending palatine or palatal, Arteria palatina inferior seu ascen'dens, which is very small, and separates from the facial near its origin. It passes along the lateral and superior part of the pharynx, between the pillars of the velum palati, and divides into a number of ramusculi, which are distributed to the pharynx, the corresponding tonsil, the Eustachian tube, and the velum palati.

PAL'ATINE BUT'TONHOLE. An opening made in the soft palate for the removal of nasopharyngeal polypus.

PAL'ATINE CANALS or DUCTS. These are two in number. The anterior, Ductus vel cana'lis incis'i'vus seu Nasa'lo-palati'nus seu Na'sopalati'nus, Incis'sive canal, is situate at the anterior part of the palatine arch, and is formed by the two superior maxillary bones. It is single beneath, but opens above by two apertures, one into each nasal fossa. The foramen is called Fora'men incis'i'cum seu Palati'num ante'rius seu Alveola'rē ante'rius seu cæ'cum os'sis maxilla'ris superio'ris. The posterior palatine canal is situate at the posterior part of the palate. It is formed by the palate and superior maxillary bones, ascends between these two bones, and in its course gives rise to two or three small accessory palatine canals, which open above the tuberosity of the palate bone. It transmits the nerves and vessels which bear its name. The foramen is called F. Palati'num poste'rius seu palatomaxilla'rē seu alveola'rē poste'rius.

PAL'ATINE GLANDS, Glan'dule palati'næ. Numerous small mucous glands, which abound especially on the upper surface of the palate; and, also, in the uvula.

PAL'ATINE MEM'BRANE is the fibro-mucous membrane that lines the palate or roof of the mouth.

PAL'ATINE or PAL'ATAL NERVES, Gutture-palati'næ (Ch.), are three in number, and arise from the inferior part of the sphenopalatine ganglion. 1. The great Palatine, Palatin inférieur (Ch.), is situate anteriorly to the two others, and descends into the posterior palatine canal; gives a nasal filament and a staphyline filament, and is distributed on the palate. 2. The middle palatine, Guttural (Ch.), which arises behind the preceding, enters one of the accessory palatine canals, and is distributed to the tonsils and velum palati. 3. The little palatine nerve, situate still more backward than the last, which loses itself by several filaments in the uvula, tonsils, and follicles of the palatine membrane.

PALATINE STER'TOR, see Stertor.

Palatite, (palatum, and itis.) Uranisconitis.

Palati'tis, gen. Palati'tidis, Uranisconitis.

Palatoglossus, Glossostaphylinus.

Palatopharyngeus, Pharyngostaphylinus, Staphylinopharyngeus, Thyropharyngostaphylinus, part of the Hyperopharyngeus, (F.) Palatopharyngien, Stylo-pharyngien (Ch.). A membranous muscle broader at its middle than at its extremities, and situate vertically in the lateral paries of the pharynx and velum palati. It includes the peristaphylopharyngeus, pharyngostaphylinus, and thyrostaphylinus of Winslow. When the palatopharyngei contract together, they depress the velum. They elevate and shorten the pharynx, and act principally in deglutition.

Palé, (παλιν, 'dust,') Pollen.

Paléa Cabotii. A fern of Java, the delicate filaments of which, derived from the stipes, act as mechanical styptics.

Pale'ness, Pal'lor, Och'rotes, Ochro'ma, Ochri'asis, Leuco'sis, Dealba'tio, Lu'ror, (F.) Pâleur. Whiteness of complexion. It appears to be owing to a diminution or alteration of the blood circulating in the capillary vessels, and is often a sign of disease.

Pâles Couleurs, ('pale colors.') Chlorosis.

Pal'et, (from [F.] pelote, — itself from pila, 'a ball.') Head.

Palette (F.), 'a battledore,' Pal'mula, Fer'ula. An instrument of percussion. It has the shape of a spatula with a long handle; is made of very light, white wood, and has been proposed by M. Percy for what is called the Massage, a kind of pressure or kneading, exerted by the hand on the body and limbs, to excite the tone of the skin and subjacent tissues.

Palette (from patella) also means a cup for bleeding; and the xiphoid cartilage [?].

Palette de Cabanis. An instrument invented by Cabanis, of Geneva, to draw out the extremity of the stylet when passed into the nose, in the operation for fistula lacrymalis. It is composed of two plates of silver, pierced with several holes, and movable on each other. To use it, the instrument must be carried into the nose, so that the holes of the two plates correspond. When the end of the stylet is received into one of these holes, it is pinched, by sliding one of the plates on the other, and is easily withdrawn.

Palette à Pansement. A small splint of thin, scooped wood, having the shape of the hand, and used to support the hand in certain cases, — when burnt, for example, — in order to prevent the fingers from being deformed by the cicatrices.

Pâleur, ([L.] pallor.) Paleness.

Pal'i Plague, see Plague.

Palicour'ea Cro'cea, Psychotria crocea, Order, Cinchonaceae, a native of the West Indies, is possessed, according to Von Martius, of emetic properties.

PALICOUR'EA MARCGRAAV'II, Erva do rato, Galva'nia Vellozii, a native of Brazil, is poisonous, and employed there to kill rats and mice.

PALICOUR'EA OFFICINA' LIS, a native of Brazil, is reputed to be a powerful diuretic in small doses.

PALICOUR'EA SPECIO'SA, Gold'shrub, a native of New Granada and Brazil. The leaves are considered to be antisyphilitic. The decoction in large doses is poisonous.

Palil'lo, Campomanesia lineatifolia.

Palimpis'sa, (παλιμπισσα, 'pitch reboiled,' from παλιν, 'again,' and πισσα, 'pitch.') Pinus sylvestris.

Palincote'sis, (παλινκοτησις, from παλιν, 'again,' and κοτος, 'animosity,') Recurdescencia.

Palin'dromê, Palindromia.

Palindrom'ia, Palin'dromê, (παλιν, 'again,' and δρομος, 'a course,') This word signifies with some a reflux of fluids from the exterior towards the interior; and, according to others, the relapse of an affection — the recurrence — Recur'sio, Repetit'io, — of a paroxysm or disease, — Morbus recidivus, Mor'bi recur'sus.

Palingene'sia, (παλιγγενεσία, from παλιν, 'again,' and γενεσις, 'generation,') Regeneration.

Pal'la, (πᾶλλα.) Pila.

Palla'dium. A rare metal, the chloride of which, when given internally for a long time, is said to produce albuminuria and renal disease.

Pal'lat, Vertex.

Pallia'tion, Pallia'tio, (palliare, palliatum, 'to cover, mask,' from pallium, 'a mantle,') The act of palliating; that is, of causing the symptoms of a disease to mitigate, without curing it. The medical art can frequently only moderate the symptoms of a disease, prevent it from making progress, prolong the days of the patient, and diminish his sufferings. This is palliative treatment, (F.) Traitement palliatif.

Palliative, Palliativus, Antipath'ic, Enantiopath'ic, (F.) Palliatif. A remedy or mode of treatment which only relieves a disease, without curing it. The palliative treatment, — Cu'ra palliativa, is placed in antithesis to the radical, — Cu'ra radica'lis; see Radical.

Pallid'ulus, (dim. of pallidus, 'pale,') Blafard.

Pallidus Mor'bus, Chlorosis.

Pal'lor, Paleness — p. Luteus, Chlorosis — p. Virginum, Chlorosis.

Palm, Pal'ma, Pal'amê, Vo'la, V. ma'nûs, Plate'a, The'nar, A'ges, Agos'tus, Poc'ulum, Pal'era, Supel'lex seu Supellec'tile Diog'enis, (F.) Paume ou Creux de la main. The hollow or inside of the hand. It is limited without by the thenar eminence, which answers to the thumb; within, by the hypothenar eminence, which answers to the little finger; above, by the wrist-joint; and below, by the four fingers.

PALM, GOMUTTO, see Toddy — p. Oil, see Cocos butyracea.

Pal'mæ U'teri Plica'tæ, (pl. of palma, 'the branch of a tree,') Plicæ palma'tæ, Ru'gæ pennifor'mes, Ly'ra, Ar'bor vi'tæ uteri'nis, A. u'teri viv'ificans. The arborescent striæ in the interior of the cervix uteri.

Palmaire, Palmar — p. Cutane, Palmaris brevis — p. Grand, Palmaris magnus — p. Grêle, Palmaris longus — p. Long, Palmaris longus.

Pal'mar, Palma'ris, (F.) Palmaire, (from palma.) That which concerns the palm of the hand. The palm has sometimes been divided into three regions, called palmar. 1. The external palmar region corresponds to the thenar eminence. 2. The internal palmar region is formed by the hypothenar eminence; and, 3. The middle palmar region is the hollow of the hand, (F.) Creux de la main.

PALMAR APONEUROSIS, Palmar fascia. A strong triangular aponeurosis, which arises from the inferior tendon of the palmaris brevis and the anterior annular ligament of the carpus. It covers the whole palm of the hand, and adheres, somewhat strongly, to the skin of the part. The palmar ligaments are small, very numerous, fibrous fasciæ which unite the different bones of the carpus and metacarpus.

PALMAR ARCHES, (F.) Arcades ou Crosses palmaires. The curved extremities of the radial and cubital arteries in the palm of the hand. There are two palmar arches:—the one, cubital or superficial,—grande Arcade palmaire of Chaussier, furnishes at its convexity towards the fingers the collateral arteries of the fingers, and the internal collateral of the thumb; the other, the radial, profund, or deep-seated,—petite Arcade palmaire of Chaussier, is deep in the palm of the hand beneath the tendons of the flexor muscles of the fingers. It gives some small branches only to the surrounding parts. The palmar veins accompany the corresponding arteries.

PALMAR ARTERIES, see Palmar arches—p. Fascia, Palmar aponeurosis—p. Ligaments, see Palmar aponeurosis.

PALMAR MUSCLES. These are three in number. 1. Palmaris Magnus, Flexor carpi radialis, Radialis anticus seu inter-nus, (F.) Épitrochlo-métacarpien, (Ch.) Palmaire grand, Radial antérieur. A long fusiform muscle, which passes obliquely from the inner tuberosity of the humerus to the upper extremity of the second metacarpal bone. It bends the hand. 2. Palmaris Longus, Latescentis choræ musculus, Ulnaris gracilis, (F.) Épitrochlo-carpi-palmaire, (Ch.) Palmaire long, P. grêle. This muscle is situate on the inner side of the last. It is very slender, and passes from the inner tuberosity of the humerus to the anterior annular ligament of the carpus, and to the palmar aponeurosis, which it seems to form by the vanishing of its fibres. It stretches the palmar aponeurosis, and bends the hand. 3. Palmaris Brevis, Carpo quadrata, Carpius, (F.) Palmaire cutané. A small, thin, quadrilateral muscle, situate before the thenar eminence. It passes from the annular ligament of the carpus to the integuments of the palm of the hand, which it wrinkles by its contraction.

Palmetto, Saw, Chamaerops serrata.

Palmi-phalangiens, Lumbricales manûs.

Pal'mistry, (from palma, 'the palm of the hand,') Chiromancy.

Pal'mitin. A solid crystallizable fat found in the nervous structures, chiefly in the medullary sheath, combined with stearin. Margarin is very largely composed of palmitin.

Pal'moscopy or Palmoscopy, Palmoscopyia, (παλμος, 'palpitation,' and σκοπεω, 'I view,') Investigation of the beating of the heart and pulse. Prognosis from the beating of the heart and pulse.

Pal'mula, dim. of palma, Date, Palette.

Palo Armagoza, Bitter Tree of Texas. The roots and stems of this plant have been employed in diarrhoea and dysentery.

PA'LO DE CALENTU'RAS, (S.) 'fever wood,' Ca- lenturas, Cinchona—p. de Vacca, Galactodendron utile—p. de Velas, Parmentiera cerifera.

Palommier, Gaultheria.

Palpa'tion, (palpare, palpatum, 'to feel,') The sense of touch. It is also used for the mode of exploring diseases by feeling or pressing upon the diseased organ with the fingers of one hand or of both hands. A delicate and discriminating touch—tactus eruditus—is important in the diagnosis of many morbid conditions.

Pal'pebra, Palpebrum, (supposed to be from palpitare, 'to palpitate,' owing to its frequent motion [?],) Blepharon, Operculum seu Coperculum oculi, Eye'lid, (Prov.) Eye'breck, (Sc.) Eewinker, (F.) Paupière. The eyelids are two movable vela, situate in front of the eye; which, by their separation, permit the organ to receive the impression of light, or by their greater or less occlusion protect it from the influence of too great light, or from the action of extraneous bodies. They are separated, above, from the forehead, by the eyebrows; and, below, are confounded with the cheeks. They are distinguished into upper, Palpebra major seu superior, Epica'lis; and lower, Palpebra minor seu inferior, Hypoca'lis, Hypoca'lum. The former is much broader and more movable than the latter. They are separated by a transverse cleft—Fissura seu rima palpebrarum—and their edges are thick, and furnished with the cilia or eyelashes. Supported by the tarsal cartilages, they unite at the extremities of the transverse diameter of the orbit, forming two angles, the innermost being called the greater angle of the eye, or inner or greater canthus; the other, the lesser, or external angle or canthus. When brought together, a triangular space is left between their posterior surfaces and the conjunctiva, which has been called Rivus lacrymalis. They are formed, 1. Of a thin dermoid texture: 2. Of a muscular membrane,—a portion of the orbicularis: 3. Of a particular fibrous membrane: 4. Of the tarsi: 5. Of a mucous membrane,—a part of the tunica conjunctiva.

Their vessels and nerves are called Palpebral.

PALPEBRA INFERIOR EXTERIOR FLEXA, Ectropion—p. Tertia, Valvula semilunaris.

Pal'pebræ Superioris Pri'mus, ('first muscle of the upper eyelid,') Levator palpebræ superioris.

Pal'pebral, Palpebralis, (F.) Palpebral, Blépharique, (from palpebra.) That which belongs or relates to the eyelid.

PALPEBRAL ARTERIES are those distributed to the eyelids. They are two in number; an upper and a lower. The former arises from the ophthalmic, a little beyond the cartilaginous pulley of the greater oblique muscle, and descends towards the upper eyelid, over which it is distributed. The latter arises at the side of, and a little behind, the preceding, and sends its ramifications to the lower eyelid and the neighboring parts. The palpebral veins have a similar arrangement; except that some of them open into the temporal and labial veins.

PALPEBRAL FLUX, Puriform. A puriform discharge, furnished by the glands of Meibomius, when inflamed; and to which Scarpa attributes fistula lacrymalis in many cases.

PALPEBRAL LIG'AMENTS are distinguished into superior and inferior. Some anatomists, with Winslow, have described, under this name, the fibrous layer which is attached,—on the one hand, to the outer part of the circumference of the orbit; on the other, to the tarsal cartilages. See Orbicular muscles.

PALPEBRAL NERVES, Nerves of the eye'lids, arise, particularly, from the frontal and lacrymal branches; from the ophthalmic nerve of Willis; and from the facial, nasal, and infraorbital branches of the superior maxillary nerve.

PALPITA'TIO MEMBRO'RUM. A term used by Gaubius for involuntary shaking of the legs.

Palpita'tion, Palpita'tio, Pal'mus, P. seu Tre'mor Cor'dis, Palpita'tio seu Pulsa'tio Cor'dis, Vibra'tio Cardi'aca seu Cor'dis, Carding'mus, Cardiopalmus, Subsul'tio, Clo'nus Palpita'tio, (Sc.) Dunt, Dount, (F.) Palpitation, P. du Cœur, Hyperkinésie du Cœur, (palpiter, palpitatum, 'to throb,') A name given to the pulsations of the heart, when they become stronger, more extensive, or more sensible to the individual than ordinarily. Palpitations occur in a number of affections. They are, sometimes, owing to organic diseases of the heart—hypertrophy, inflammation, &c.; at others, to a disease in some other viscus; while, frequently, they are merely nervous.

Palpitation is sometimes felt in the arteries, constituting Palpita'tio Arterio'sa.

(Same etymon as Panacea.) Family, Araliaceæ. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Monœcia. This plant grows in North America. The root—Pa'nax (Ph. U. S.), Ra'dix gin'seng—is about the thickness of the little finger; an inch or two in length, often dividing into two branches; of a whitish-yellow color; wrinkled on the surface, and of a compact, almost horny, texture. It has no smell, but a very sweet taste, combined with a slight degree of aromatic bitterness. It is much esteemed by the Chinese, who pay a high price for it. It is a gentle and agreeable stimulant.

PA'NAX SCHIN'SENG, Asiat'ic Ginseng, a native of Asia, has been usually confounded with the last. The root, ra'dix nin'si, has like virtues.

Panbio'ma, Panbio'ma, gen. Panbio'matis, (pan, and βίος, 'life,') The original animating principle. The general principle of life.

Panchres'ton, Panchrestum, (πανχρηστος, from pan, and χρηστος, 'useful,') Panacea.

Panora'tium, (πανκρατιον, from pan, and κρατος, 'strength,') An athletic exercise with the Greeks. Applied also to a plant, which was considered all-powerful.

Pan'creas, gen. Pancre'atis, (παγκρεας, gen. παγκρεατος, from pan, and κρεας, 'flesh; i. e. quite fleshy,') Calli'creas, Pan'creum, Lac'tes, Pulvi'nar ventriculi, Totum carnosum, Glan'dula saliv'alis abdominis, Pancre'nē, Sweet'bread. A gland, deeply seated in the abdomen, and lying transversely on the vertebral column, between the three curvatures of the duodenum, behind the stomach, and to the right of the spleen. Its left extremity is called the tail of the pancreas, Can'da pancre'atis seu extrem'itas sinis'tra seu acu'ta seu lien'alis; it is smaller than the right, which is called the head, Ca'put pancre'atis seu extrem'itas dex'tra seu obtu'sa seu duodena'lis, Portio vertic'al'is seu duodena'lis. Verneuil unites the body and tail under the name Portio gas'trica seu lien'alis. At its right portion, it has, almost always, a greater or less prolongation; called by Winslow, and some others, the les'ser pan'creas, (F.) Petit pancre'as, Pancr'as of Aselli, Pancr'as mi'nus seu par'vum seu Winslow'ii. The pancreas resembles the salivary glands in structure, and has been called the Abdom'inal Salivary Gland. It is composed of lobes and granulated lobules, distinct, and united by areolar tissue. From each of the granulations of these lobes arise the radicles of its excretory duct, which are very delicate, and united like veins. The duct itself, Ductus Pancreat'icus seu Wirungia'nus seu direc'tus, Pancreat'ic duct, Canal or Duct of Wir'sun or Wir'sungs, (F.) Canal ou Conduit pancréatique, proceeds in a serpentine course through the substance of the organ; and when it has reached behind the second portion of the duodenum, it becomes free, and is of the size of a crow's quill. It opens at an acute angle into the choledoch duct, or proceeds close to it, opening separately into the duodenum. At times, there is another pancreatic duct, smaller, proceeding from the summit of the head of the gland; and opening separately into the duodenum, above the choledoch duct in man. This has been named Ductus pancreat'icus super'ior seu mi'nor, Ductus Santori'ni, Canal'is pancreat'icus az'ygus, Ductus pancreat'icus recur'rens, (F.) Conduit accessoire ou supplémentaire of Sappey.

The Pancreatic arteries are very numerous and small. They proceed from the coeliac, splenic, superior mesenteric, right gastroepiploic, coronaria ventriculi, and left capsular. Its veins open into the radicles of the vena porta; and, particularly, into the splenic and lesser mesenteric. Its nerves emanate from the solar plexus, and its lymphatics pass into ganglions, to which it gives its name. The pancreas secretes the Pancreat'ic juice, Suc'cus seu Li'quor Pancreat'icus, Lym'pha Pancre'atis, (F.) Pancre'at'ic, which resembles the saliva. When this juice is mixed with amylaceous matters, it converts them into dextrin and glucose. Its great use appears, however, to be, to emulsify fatty matters by virtue of a peculiar albuminoid principle—pan'creatin, coagulable by heat or alcohol—which it contains. It also dissolves albuminous substances. The pancreatic juice of the pig has been given in the form of emulsion—Pancreatic Emulsion, with the fat of beef, stirred in milk, to consumptive patients. An emulsion with cod-liver oil is similarly prescribed.

Pandémic, Pandemic.

Pan'demy, Pandemic.

Pandicula'tion, Pandicula'tio, Scordine'ma, Scordinis'mus, Clo'nus Pandicula'tio, (pandiculari,—pandere, 'to stretch out,'—'to stretch, as one awakening from sleep,') Stretch'ing, Hal'ices, (pl.) An action, which consists in elevating the upper limbs, and throwing the head and trunk backwards, at the same time that the lower limbs are extended. This series of motions of the extensor muscles is in some measure independent of the will, and is accompanied by yawning, which is equally involuntary. In the state of health, stretching occurs before and after sleep; especially when we are fatigued. It is also observed at the onset of certain paroxysms of fever, hysteria, &c.

Pandoc'eum, Pandochi'um, Pandoci'um, (pan, and ἔχωμαι, 'I receive,') A house or hotel that receives all classes. A general hospital, or one that admits all cases.

Pannicule, Panniculus—p. Charnue, Panniculus carnosus.

Pannic'ulus, dim. of pannus, 'a web,' (F.) Pannicule. A membrane. Pterygion.

PANNIC'ULUS ADIPO'SUS, Cellular membrane.

PANNIC'ULUS CARNO'SUS, Tu'nica carno'sa, Mus'cular Web, Man'tle, (F.) Pannicule charnue, is a general covering found in the quadruped, and formed by a thin, subcutaneous muscle, which serves to move the skin. It exists only in certain parts of the human body,—as in the forehead, where it is formed by the occipito-frontalis; in the neck, by the platysma myoides; and, in the scrotum, by the cremaster muscle.

PANNIC'ULUS COR'DIS, Pericardium—p. Hymenæus, Hymen—p. Virginalis, Hymen.

Pan'nikell, Cranium.

Pan'nus. A piece of cloth. A web. This word has several other meanings, many of which are equivocal. It means a tent for a wound, and also an irregular nævus or mark on the skin. Modern ophthalmologists apply it to an opaque and vascular condition of the anterior membrane of the cornea, almost invariably produced by the continuance of purulent or strumous ophthalmia, or by chronic inflammation of the cornea. This part becomes nebulous, covered with red vessels, and opaque. At times, the sclerotic conjunctiva undergoes a similar change to that which occurs in the corneal portion. When the cornea is extremely vascular and opaque, it is called Pannus cras'sus; if the bloodvessels are few and scattered, and the cloudiness inconsiderable, it is called Pannus ten'uis. When the disease is produced by external irritants, as by friction and irritation of the cornea, &c., the term Traumat'ic pannus is applied to it. When pannus is attended with an extremely bloodshot condition of the eye, it is called Pannus trachomato'sus.

Pano'chia, Bubo.

Panopho'bia, Pantopho'bia, Paupho'bia, Athym'ia, Pa'vor, (F.) Frayeur nocturne, Souci, (from Παν, 'the god Pan,' and φοβος, 'fear.') A panic or fear inspired by the god Pan, according to the opinion of the ancients. Others derive it, and with more probability, from παν, 'all,' and φοβος, 'fear.' This universal and groundless fear is morbid, and is a symptom of melancholy.

Panophthalmi'tis, (pan, and ophthalmitis.) Inflammation of the whole eye. So many structures of the eye are involved in the suppurative form of choroiditis, that by some the latter is considered synonymous with panophthalmitis.

Panpho'bia, Panophobia.

Panple'gia, Pamphlegia.

Pansclero'sis, (pan, and σκληρωσις, 'hardness.') Complete induration of a part.

Panse, (from panter, pl. pantrices.) Ingluvies.

Pansement, Dressing.

Pan'sies, Viola tricolor.

Pansper'mia, (pan, and σπέρμα, 'sperm,') Pansperm'y. The theory of Dissemination of Germs, according to which, ova or germs are disseminated over all space, undergoing development under favorable circumstances.

Pansperm'y, Panspermia.

Pan'sy, Viola tricolor.

Pantago'gon, (panto, and αγω, 'I drive out,') Panchymagogum.

Pantanencepha'lia, (panto, and anencephalia.) Entire absence of brain—the same as anencephalia with I. G. St. Hilaire.

Pantatroph'ia, (panto, and ατροφία, 'atrophy.') Universal atrophy.

Panthod'ic, Panthod'icus, (panto, and ὅδω, 'a way.') An epithet applied by Dr. Marshall Hall to a course of nervous action proceeding from one point in all directions to every other.

Pan'tices, pl. of Pan'tex, Ingluvies, Intestines.

Pantico'sa, Min'eral Springs of. There are four springs at this place in Arragon, Spain, which is 5800 feet above the level of the sea, two of them saline, one sulphurous, and one ferruginous. These waters are recommended in laryngeal phthisis, hemorrhage from the lungs, or stomach, or uterus, &c.

Pan'ting, ([F.] panteler, 'to pant,') Anhelatio.

Pan'to, in composition, see Pan.

Pantoganglii'tis, (panto, ganglion, and itis.) Cholera.

Pantoph'agists, (panto, and φαγω, 'I eat,') see Omnivorous.

Pantoph'agus, Omnivorous.

Pantopho'bia, (panto, and φοβος, 'fear,') Hydrophobia, Panophobia.

Pantozoö'tia, Panzootia.

Pa'nus, Phygethlon—p. Fancium, Stomatopanus—p. Inguinalis, Bubo.

Pantozoö'tia, Pantozoö'tia, (pan, and ζωον, 'animal.') An endemic or epidemic disease affecting animals generally.

Pap, (from papilla.) Mamma, Nipple. Also, a soft food made of bread boiled or softened with water, (Sc.) Breadberry.

PAP OF THE HASS, Uvula—p. of the Throat, Uvula.

Pa'pas America'nus, Solanum tuberosum.

Papa'ver, gen. Papav'eri, P. somniferum, Me'con, Lethe'a. The White Pop'py, Papav'eri sativum, (F.) Pavot des Jardins. Ord. Papaveraceæ. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Monogynia. The nearly ripe CAPSULE OF THE WHITE POPPY, Codi'a, Sca'phion, Papav'eri Cap'ut seu Cap'sula, Papa'ver, (Ph. U. S.) Me'con, Pop'pyhead, is used in fomentation as an anodyne and relaxant to inflamed or ulcerated parts. The expressed oil of the seeds—Poppy oil—is called by the French Huile d'Æillette.

It is from the poppy that O'pium—called, also, O'pium Theba'icum, Succus Theba'icus, Meco'nium, O'pion, Ma'nus De'i, Aff'ion, Aff'ium, Am'phiam, A'ium, Osoror, Lau'danum, Me'con, So'pio, (Prov.) Pop'py pill, (F.) Opium brut ou cru—is procured. It is the concrete juice obtained after the flowering of the plant, by making longitudinal incisions in the unripe capsules; and is commonly obtained from the Levant or India, where the poppy grows abundantly. Opium is a compound of numerous substances, to be presently mentioned. Turkey Opium is of a heavy and slightly fetid odor. Its taste is nauseous, bitter, acrid, and warm: it is in flat pieces; solid and tenacious; of a dark brown color, and yellowish when powdered; making a light brown, interrupted streak on paper. In East India Opium the odor is the same, and empyreumatic; the taste is less bitter, but more nauseous, and the color darker. The varieties of opium known in commerce are the Smyrna, the Constantinople, the Egyptian, the Persian, and the Indian. Opium is stimulant in small doses; sedative in large; narcotic and anodyne; operating through the nervous system. It is a most valuable remedy in all painful affections and inflammations, when given so as to produce its full, sedative effects, especially in peritonitis. In diarrhoea and dysentery it acts as an astringent; and in intermittents it will often prevent the paroxysm. In typhus, in small doses, it acts as a cordial; in larger it allays irritation and produces sleep. When applied externally, its narcotic effects are developed; and, hence, it is a useful application to irritable sores, painful tumors, &c. Dose, gr. $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ as a stimulant; gr. j. to iij. as a sedative.

The substances derived from opium are now very numerous. Some of these have been only recently discovered, and their therapeutical value is, therefore, undetermined. A few of them are derivatives, not from opium itself, but from some of the other articles, as morphia, already obtained from opium,—apomorphia, for instance. The alkaloids and other substances thus far obtained, in addition to water, resin, fatty matter, gum, mucilage, extractive matter, &c., are morphia, codeia, narceina, pseudomorphia, laudanosa, thebaia, cryptopia, protopia, papaverina, lanthopia, meconidia, codamia, laudania (the four last named forming, collectively, porphyroxin), narcotina, hydrocartina, opiania, meconin, apomorphia, rheadinia, rheagonia, and thebolactic acid.

PAPA'VER NI'GRUM. This is merely a variety of the white poppy, producing black seeds.

PAPA'VER RHŒAS, Rhœados Petala, (Ph. B., 1867.) The systematic and pharmacopœial name of the Red corn'poppy, Corn'rose, Papa'ver erraticum seu cerealē seu ru'brum, Cop'per rose, Red-milk, (F.) Coquelicot. The heads of this species contain a milky juice of a narcotic quality. A syrup, Syrupus Rhœados, of its flowers—Rhœas—has been directed, which has been esteemed diaphoretic and slightly soothing; but it is more admired for its color than for any other property.

Papavera'ceum, (from papaver.) Opiate.

Papaver'culum, (from papaver, the inspissated juice of which it resembles,) Meconium.

Papav'erine, Papaveri'na, Papaveri'num; (from papaver.) An alkaloid contained in opium; Codeine.

Papaw' Tree, Carica papaya.

Papayer, Carica papaya.

Pa'per, Blis'tering, see Sparadrapum vesicatorium — p. Mustard, Charta sinapis — p. Sinapised, see Sinapism, and Charta sinapis.

Papier Albespeyres. A compound ointment of white wax, olive oil, oil of chocolate, spermaceti, turpentine, cantharides, and water, melted and spread on paper, for keeping up the discharge from blistered surfaces.

Papier Épispastique, ('blistering paper,') see Sparadrapum vesicatorium — p. Goudronné, Poor man's plaster — p. Médicamenté, see Sparadrapum — p. Nitré, see Nitré, and Potassæ nitræ — p. Sinapisé, see Sinapism, and Charta sinapis — p. Vésicant, see Sparadrapum vesicatorium, and Charta cantharidis.

Papil'la, pl. Papillæ, (F.) Papille. The end of the breast, the nipple. See Nipple. An eminence similar to a nipple. A name given to small eminences, more or less prominent, at the surface of several parts, particularly of the skin and mucous membranes, in which latter situation they are also called villi. See Villous. They contain the ultimate expansions of the vessels and nerves, and are susceptible, in some cases, of a kind of erection. They are also called Papillæ nervosæ seu ner'væ, P. Pyramida'les, Ner'vous papil'læ, (F.) Papilles ou Papilles nerveuses, Houppes nerveuses.

PAPIL'LA, CONGES'TION, Papilla, engorged — p. Dental, see Tooth.

PAPIL'LA, ENGORGED, Conges'tion Papil'la. A swollen, prominent, and even bulging condition of the papilla of the optic nerve, seen in optic neuritis. See Neuroretinitis.

PAPIL'LA, HAIR, Matrix pili — p. Lacrymalis, see Lachrymal puncta — p. Mammæ, Nipple — p. Nervi optici, see Optic nerve — p. Optic, see Optic papilla — p. Pili, see Hair.

PAPIL'LA OF THE KID'NEY, (F.) Mamelons du rein, are the projections into the pelvis of the kidney of the apices of the cones — Pyramids of Malpighi, Pyramides Malpighianæ seu Re'nun, Fasciculi pyramida'les, Co'ni tubulo'si, Lo'bi medulla'res — of the tubular substance of the organ. They are also called Processus mamilla'res, Carunculae papilla'res, and Papillæ renun.

PAPIL'LA, LENTIC'ULAR, see Papillæ of the tongue — p. Maximæ, see Papillæ of the tongue — p. Mediae, see Papillæ of the tongue — p. Minimæ, see Papillæ of the tongue — p. Minores, see Papillæ of the tongue — p. Mucosæ, see Papillæ of the tongue — p. Nervæ, Corpuscles, Pacinian — p. Nervous, see Papilla — p. Obtusæ, see Papillæ of the tongue — p. Petiolatæ, see Papillæ of the tongue — p. Pyramidal, see Papillæ of the tongue — p. Pyramidales, see Papilla — p. Renun, see Papillæ of the kidney — p. Semilenticulares, see Papillæ of the tongue — p. of the Skin, see Cutis — p. Tactûs, see Cutis.

PAPIL'LA OF THE TONGUE are very numerous and marked. They are observed particularly at the upper surface of the organ, and are distinguished into—1. The Lentic'ular papil'læ, Papillæ mucosæ seu max'imæ seu capitatae seu vallatæ seu petiola'tæ seu co'nicæ seu circumvallatæ seu trunca'tæ seu calyciformes. They are arranged at the base of the tongue in two oblique lines, having the shape of the letter V, and united angularly at the foramen cœcum. They have, in general, an ovoid or spherical shape, and have seemed to be mucous follicles similar to those of the palate, lips, &c. 2. The Fungiform or Fungoid Papil'læ, Papillæ med'ix seu fungiformes seu obtusæ seu clavatæ seu semilenticula'res, are of indeterminate number, but always more numerous than the preceding. They are irregularly disseminated near the edges and the point of the tongue; have a rounded and flattened head, supported by a short and narrow footstalk. Their tint is whitish. 3. The Conical, Conoid'al or Pyramidal papil'læ, P. min'imæ seu villo'sæ seu minores seu arcuatæ seu co'nicæ seu conoidæ, are the most numerous of all. Their arrangement is more regular in the forepart of the tongue than behind. They resemble small cones; the base being towards the tongue, and the apex free. The anterior are very small, and have been called Filiform papil'læ. They appear to be produced by the terminations of the filaments of the lingual nerve, and are surrounded by an evident vascular network.

PAPIL'LA TRUNCA'TÆ, see Papillæ of the tongue

—p. Vallatæ, see Papillæ of the tongue—p. Villousæ, see Papillæ of the tongue.

Papillary, Papilla'ris, Papill'ous, (F.) Papillaire, (from papilla.) Of or belonging to the nipple or to the papillæ.

PAPILLARY BODY, Corpus papillare—p. Tumour, Papilloma.

Papillated, Papilla'tus. Consisting of papillæ; as the outer surface of the tongue.

Papilliformis, Mastoid, Papilliform.

Papilliform, Papilliform'is, (papilla, and forma, 'form.') Having the shape or appearance of a papilla.

Papillo'ma, gen. Papillo'matis, (papilla, and oma.) Papillary or Villous Tumour, Tu'mor Villousus. A tumor, whose specific elements are those of the papillæ of the normal skin; and which, consequently, is composed of a stem of fibrous or homogeneous connective tissue; is club-shaped, cylindrical or acuminated, and covered with a layer of epithelial cells, similar to those of the normal papillæ.

Papillous, Papillary.

Papoose' Root, Caulophyllum thalictroides.

Pappe, Mamma.

Pap'pea Capen'sis, (after Dr. Karl W. L. Pappé, a botanist of Leipzig.) A small tree of the Nat. Ord. Sapindaceæ, common in Cafferland, the fruit of which is called Wild Plum. It furnishes a vinous beverage and excellent vinegar. Its kernel contains an oil, which, although eatable, is somewhat cathartic, and is recommended as an external application in tinea capitis, alopecia, &c.

Pap'pus, (παππος.) The down on the chin and cheeks.

PAP'PUS AMERICA'NUS, Solanum tuberosum.

Pap'ula, pl. Papulæ. Akin to papilla. A pimple, Ezor'mia, (Prov.) Pouke, Puckle, (Se.) Pluke, Plouk, (F.) Papule, Bouton, Bourgeon. A small acuminated elevation of the cuticle, with an inflamed base; very seldom containing a fluid, or suppurating, and commonly terminating in scurf or desquamation. An eruption of pimples is called in Devonshire Murfles.

Papulæ is the first order of Willan and Bateman's arrangement of cutaneous diseases.

PAP'ULA A'GRIA, Lichen agrius—p. Fera, Hepes exedens—p. Lenticularis, Lenticula—p. Miliaris seu Miliiformis, Miliary fever—p. Typhosa, Spots, red.

Pap'ular, Papulose.

Papule, Papula—p. Moist, Plaques muqueuses, and Condyloma—p. Mucous, Plaques muqueuses, and Condyloma.

Papuleux, Papulose.

Pap'ulose, Papulo'sus, Pap'ulous, Papula'tus, Papula'ris, Pim'pled, Pap'ular, (F.) Papuleux. Of or belonging to, resembling, or covered with papulæ or pimples.

Paquerette Vivace, Bellis.

Par (gen. Pa'ris) Nervo'rum, Syz'gyi nervo'rum. A pair of nerves.

PAR NO'NUM, Hypoglossus—p. Opticum nervo'rum, Optic nerve—p. Primum nervorum cerebri, Olfactory nerves—p. Quartum, Pathetic nerve—p. Quintum nervorum cerebri, Trigemini—p. Secundum nervorum, Optic nerve—p. Septimum sive faciale, Facial nerve—p. Tertium, Motore oculorum—p. Trigeminum, Trigemini—p. Trium funiculorum, Trigemini—p. Vagum, Pneumogastric—p. Visorium, Optic nerve.

Pa'ra, (παρά.) A common prefix, 'by, near, contrary to, through,' (per;) 'above and beyond,' (ultra;) 'besides,' (preter.) In certain terms, as in Paraculis, Parapsis, Parabysma, &c., used by Dr. Good, para means a defective or morbid condition.

PA'RA NUT, see Pichurim beans.

Parabala'nus, (παπαβαλλειν,—from para, and βαλλειν, 'to cast,'—'to expose one's self.') A name given by the ancients to a person who devoted himself to the service of the sick in hospitals; and particularly during epidemics and the plague.

Parabys'ma, gen. Parabys'matis, (παπαβυσμα, from para, and βυσιν, 'to stuff.') Infarction or engorgement of an organ—as Parabysma Lie'nis. Engorgement of the spleen.

PARABYS'MA MESENTER'ICUM, Tabes mesenterica.

Parabys'tia, Engorgement or infarction of an organ with blood.

Paracelsis'ta, Paracel'sist, Paracel'sian, (after Paracelsus.) A follower of Paracelsus.

Paracelsis'tica Medici'na, see Spagyrist.

Paracente'sis, (παρακέντησις, from παρακέντω,—para, and κέντω, 'I pierce,'—'I pierce through,') Perforatio, Punctio, Punctu'ra, Cenembate'sis, Cente'sis, Compunctio, (F.) Paracentèse. Puncturing. The operation of tapping to evacuate the collected fluid in ascites, ovarian dropsy, &c., receiving the names, Paracentesis capitis, P. abdominis, P. cornæ, P. vesicæ, &c., according to the part selected for the operation.

PARACENTE'SIS THORA'CIS, Thoracocentesis—p. Vesicæ, see Cystotomy.

Paracentete'rium, (παρακέντητήριον.) Trocar.

Paracentete'rium, (παρακέντητήριον.) Woolhouse has given this appellation to a small trocar employed by Nuck for puncturing the eye in cases of dropsy of that organ.

Paracenti'cion, Trocar.

Paraceph'alus, (F.) Paracéphale, (from para, and κεφαλή, 'head.') A genus of monsters, with the head badly formed but voluminous, the face distinct, with a mouth, rudimental sensorial organs, and thoracic members.

Parachro'a, (para, and χρῶς, 'color.') Morbid change of color of the surface, especially of the face.

Parachro'ma, gen. Parachro'matis, (παρά, and χρῶμα, 'color,') Achromatopsia.

Parachro'sis, Decoloration.

Paracine'ma, gen. Paracine'matis, Luxation.

Paracine'ses, (para, and κίνησις, 'motion.') Diseases of the motor nerves; morbid movements of voluntary muscles.

Parac'masis, (παράκμασις.) Decline.

Paracmas'tic, Paracmas'ticus, (παράκμαζω,—para, and ακμή, 'the highest point,'—'I decrease.') Decreasing. An epithet for a distemper which gradually decreases. Also, according to Galen, the period of life when a person is said to grow old, which he places at from 35 to 49, after which he is said to be old—a definition that would not suit us at the present day.

Paracmas'ticus, (παράκμαστικός.) see Acmasticus.

Parac'mê, (παράκμη.) Decline.

Parac'oë, (παράκοη.) from para, and ακοή, 'hearing.' See Cophosis, Paraculis.

Parac'opé, (παράκοπη.) Paraph'ora, Paracru'sis, (παράκοπτω,—para, and κοπτω, 'I strike,'—'I strike falsely.') Delirium. In Hippocrates, it means the slight delirium which sometimes occurs in febrile diseases.

Paracou'sia, (para and ακουω, 'I hear.') See Cophosis.

Parac'risés, (para, and κρίσις, 'secretion.') Diseases of the secretory function.

Paracru'sis, (παράκρουσις, from para, and κρουω, 'I strike.') Paracope.

Paracu'sis, (παράκουσις, from para, and ακουσις, 'the act of hearing.') Cophosis. Also, perverted audition.

PARACU'SIS A'CRIS, Audi'tus a'crior, Paracu'sis oxyco'i'a. The hearing painfully acute, and intolerant of the lowest sounds; a symptom in otalgia, epilepsy, cephalitis, and febrile affections.

PARACU'SIS DUPLICA'TA, Double hearing—p. Imaginaria, Tiunitus aurium—p. Imperfecta, Double hearing, P. perversa — p. Obtusa, Barycoia — p. Oxycoia, P. acris.

PARACUSIS PERVERSA, P. Willisiana seu imperfecta, Perverse hearing. The ear only sensible to articulate sounds when excited by other and louder sounds intermixed with them.

PARACUSIS SURDITAS, see Cophosis — p. Willisiana, Paracusis perversa.

Paracycle'ses, (para, and κυκλῆσις, — κύκλος, 'a circle,' — 'circulation.') Diseases of the blood as regards its distribution and motion.

Paracye'sis, (para, and κύησις, 'pregnancy.') Pregnancy, morbid, Pregnancy, preternatural — p. Abortus, Abortion — p. Tubaria, Salpingoeyesis.

Paracynan'che, (para and cynanche.) Inflammation of the external muscles of the larynx. According to others, a slight cynanche.

Paradid'ymsis, Organ of Giralddes.

Paræsthesia, Paresthesia — p. Olfactoria, Parosmia.

Paræsthesia, Paresthesia — p. Auditûs flacca, Proptoma auricularum.

Paræthenar, Parathenar.

Par'affin, Paraffine, (parum affinis, 'having but little affinity.') A carbohydrogen obtained in a crude state from candle coal and other sources. When purified, it is a white waxy solid, and it has been suggested as a substitute for wax in the preparation of cerates. A paraffin bandage is employed by the surgeon, that material being used in fractures attended with discharging wounds, where plaster of Paris or dextrine would soon become offensive.

Paraffoste'arine, see Splint.

Paragen'sis, (para, and γενῆσις, 'taste.') Ageusia. Also, perversion of taste, Paragen'sia, Paragen'stia, Allotriogen'stia, Gus'tus depravatus.

Parageus'tia, Parageusis.

Parag'lin, Smilacin.

Paraglob'in, Paraglob'ulin. One of the two albuminous substances by whose contact, according to Dr. A. Schmidt, fibrin is formed. See Fibrinogen.

Paraglob'ulin, Paraglobin.

Paraglos'sa, Paraglos'se, (para, and γλῶσσα, 'the tongue.') Swelling of the tongue; Dysphagia linguo'sa, Glossomegis'tus, Macroglos'sa, Macroglos'sia, Prolap'sus lin'guæ, Lin'gua propen'dula, L. Vit'uli, Prolap'sus lin'guæ. These terms also refer to a condition of hypertrophy of the tongue which is usually congenital. Sauvages, under the term Paraglossa deglutito'ria, means a pretended doubling of the tongue into the pharynx, (F.) Renversement de la langue. See Glossocoele.

Parago'gè, (παράγωγη, from para, and αγω, 'I lead.') Adduction, Coaptation.

Paragomph'sis, Paragomphosis cap'itis, (para, and γῶμψις, 'a nailing.') Incomplete wedging of the head of the child in the pelvis during labor.

Paraguay Roux, see Spilanthus oleracea — p. Tea, Ilex Paraguensis.

Parala'lia, (para, and λαλία, 'speech,') Mogilalia — p. Nasalis, Rhinophonia.

Paralamp'sis, (παράλαμψις, from παράλαμψω, — para, and λαμψω, 'I shine,' — 'I shine at the side of,') Mac'ula Cornæ Margarita'cea, Per'la. A cicatrix on the transparent part of the eye.

Paralbu'min, (para, and albumen.) An albuminous substance found only in ovarian cysts, and rarely alone.

Paralere'ma, gen. Paralere'matis, (παράληρημα, from para, and ληρος, 'foolish talk.') Delirium.

Paralge'sia, (para, and αλγος, 'pain.') Complete abolition of pain; anæsthesia.

Paral'lagè, (παράλλαγη.) Insanity.

Parallag'ma, gen. Parallag'matis, (παράλλαγμα.) Chevauchement.

Parallax'is, (παράλλαξις, 'aberration.') Chevauchement, Insanity.

Paralle'la. A kind of scurfy, cutaneous eruption, affecting the palms of the hands in parallel lines, and symptomatic of the venereal disease, according to Forestus.

Par'allelism of Diseases, Isopathia.

Paralog'ia, (παράλογια, from para, and λογος, 'a discourse,') Delirium.

Paraloph'ia, (para, and λοφία, 'the first vertebra of the back.') The lower and lateral part of the neck, near the vertebrae.

Paralysè, Paralytic.

Paralysis, Paralysis — p. Ambitieuse, Paralysis of the insane — p. des Aliénés, Paralysis of the insane — p. Diphthérique, Paralysis, diphtheritic — p. Générale, Paralysis of the insane — p. Générale Incomplète, Paralysis of the insane.

Paralysis Ischémique. Paralysis from obstruction of the passage of blood through the vessels.

Paralysis Musculaire Atrophique, Atrophy, progressive muscular — p. Myosclérosique, Paralysis, pseudohypertrophic — p. Pseudohypertrophique, Paralysis, pseudohypertrophic — p. Saturnine, Palsy, lead — p. Tremblante, Paralysis agitans.

Paral'ysis, (παράλυσις.) Par'esis, Resolutio membro'rum seu nervo'rum, Ca'rus paral'ysis, Catal'ysis, (F.) Paralysie, Résolution des membres; Aneur'ia, Anev'ria, Anervismie of Piorry; Palsy, (παράλυω, — para, and λυω, 'I loosen,' — 'I relax.') Abolition or great diminution of the voluntary motions, Myoparal'ysis, and sometimes of sensation in one or more parts of the body.

Palsy is said to be local when it affects only a few muscles. When it extends to half the body, vertically or horizontally, it is called Hemiple'gia or Paraple'gia. It is commonly symptomatic of disease of the brain or of the nerves themselves, and is a frequent accompaniment, precursor, or successor of apoplexy — Phrenoparal'ysis. The immediate cause is generally pressure, either by blood effused, or by serum, or by vascular turgescence. At its onset, therefore, bloodletting may be advisable, but afterwards the disease becomes one of nervous debility, and requires stimulants to the paralyzed parts, or to the mucous membranes — frictions, sinapisms, blisters, the moxa, baths, electricity, galvanism, purgatives, and the nux vomica, which last has the property of exciting movements where the will has no longer power. The disease generally admits only of palliation, and is extremely apt to recur.

PARAL'YSIS, Primula veris.

PARAL'YSIS AG'ITANS, P. trem'ula seu tre'mens seu jac'itans seu pal'pitans, Syn'clonus ballis'mus seu tre'mor, Chore'a seni'lis seu festi'nans, Dys'tax'ia agitans, Sclerotyr'bè festinans, Tre'mor Artuum seu coac'tus, Tro'mos, Shaking palsy, Trembling palsy, (F.) Paralysie tremblante. A variety of tremor, in which the muscles are in a perpetual alternation of contraction and relaxation.

PARAL'YSIS AG'ITANS MERCURIA'LI, Palsy, mercurial — p. Agitans metallica, see Tremor — p. Agitans saturnina, Palsy, lead — p. Atrophica, Atrophy, progressive muscular.

PARAL'YSIS, BELL'S, Bell's palsy, P. of the portio dura, Histrion'ic paralysis or palsy, Paralysia facia'lis seu fa'ciei, Prosopoparal'ysis, Tris'mus dias'trophè Sauvage'sii, Dias'trophè Gale'ni, Hemiple'gia facia'lis, O'ris tortu'ra paralyt'ica Lin'nei, Hemiprosople'gia, Facial or mimic facial paralysis or palsy. The paralysis of the face induced by a lesion of the portio dura has been called Bell's Palsy, owing to Sir Charles Bell having been one of the first to investigate it minutely.

PARAL'YSIS BERIBER'IA, Beriberi — p. Cross, Hemiplegia, alternate.

PARAL'YSIS, DIPHTHERIT'IC, P. diphther'ica seu diphtherit'ica, (F.) Paralysie diphthérique. A singular consequence, at times, of diphtheria, supervening when the patient is convalescing or apparently well. It may affect only the palate or pharynx, or be more general.

PARALYSIS, DUCHENNE'S, P. pseudohypertrophic—p. Extremities, Acroparalysis—p. Facialis, Paralysis, Bell's—p. Faciei, Paralysis, Bell's—p. General, of the insane, Paralysis of the insane.

PARALYSIS, GLOSSOPHARYNGEAL, Paralysis affecting the muscles of speech and deglutition.

PARALYSIS, HEMIPLEGIC, Hemiplegia—p. Histrionic, Paralysis, Bell's—p. Hysterical, P. psychical—p. Infantile, P. myogenic—p. of Infants, Essential, Paralysis, myogenic.

PARALYSIS OF THE INSANE, P. Insano'rum, P. ex toto, Dementia Paralytica, P. General of the Insane, General Par'esis, Progressive Paralysis of the Insane, Par'ifying Mental Disease, (F.) Paralysie générale incomplète, P. des Aliénés, P. générale, P. ambitieuse, Folie ambitieuse. Insanity combined with progressive paralysis of the muscular system; an incurable affection, which seems to increase as the powers of the mind diminish. It is said by Wedl to depend on hypertrophy of the connective tissue of the minute vessels of the pia mater and cortical substance of the brain.

PARALYSIS INSANO'RUM, P. of the insane.

PARALYSIS INTESTINI RECTI, Proctoparalysis—p. Intestinorum, Enteroparalysis—p. Linguae, Glossolysis—p. Medullaris, Paraplegia—p. Metallica, Palsy, lead—p. Muscular, progressive, Atrophy, progressive muscular.

PARALYSIS, MYOGENIC, Infantile Paralysis, Essential Paralysis of Infants. Partial muscular paralysis dating from very early life; probably due to some defect of conformation, and arising independently of any appreciable lesion of the nervous system.

PARALYSIS, MYOCLEROTIC, P. pseudohypertrophic—p. Myosclerotic, P. pseudohypertrophic—p. Nervi Hypoglossi, Glossoplegia—p. Nervi vagi in parte thoracica, Asthma—p. Nervorum thoracis, Stethoparalysis—p. Notariorum, Cramp, writers'—p. Peripheric, Atrophy, progressive muscular—p. Phonetic, Paralytic aphonia or dysphonia.

PARALYSIS EX PLUMBO, Palsy, lead—p. from Poisons, Paralysis venenata—p. of the Portio dura, P. Bell's—p. Progressive, of the Insane, P. of the insane.

PARALYSIS, PSEUDOHYPERTROPHIC, Myosclerotic or Myosclerot'ic Paralysis or Pal'sy, (F.) Paralysie Pseudohypertrophique, P. Myosclérotique, Sclérose musculaire progressive, Duchenne's Paralysis. A condition characterized by diminution of the powers of motion, with augmentation of the volume of the paralyzed muscles.

PARALYSIS, PSYCHICAL, Hysterical Paralysis or Pal'sy, Psychical Pal'sy. Paralysis associated with or dependent on hysteria; probably unconnected with organic disease of the nervous centres or the motor nerves.

PARALYSIS RACHIALGICA, Colica metallica.

PARALYSIS, REFLEX, Palsy occasioned by irritation reflected through the excitatory nervous system to parts in themselves healthy; as in the case of palsy from dentition, &c. Reflex paralysis would seem, at times, to assume the paralytic form—reflex paraplegia.

PARALYSIS RE'NUM, Nephroparalysis—p. Saturnine, Palsy, lead—p. Scorbutica, Pellagra—p. Scriveners', Cramp, writers'—p. Spinalis, Paraplegia—p. ex Toto, Paralysis of the insane—p. Transverse, Hemiplegia, alternate—p. Tremula, Paralysis agitata—p. Vacillans, Chorea.

PARALYSIS VENENATA, Paralysis e venenis, Paralysis from poisons. Paralysis, the result of poisonous substances; as of lead, mercury, &c.

PARALYSIS E VENE'NIS, P. venenata—p. Ventrliculi, Gastroparalysis.

Paralyt'ic, (παρλυτικός,) Paralyt'icus, Par'alyzed, Pal'sied, (F.) Paralysé, Paralytique. Affected with or causing paralysis.

PARALYTIC STROKE, see Stroke, paralytic.

Paralyt'icus, (παρλυτικός,) Paralytic.

Par'alyzed, Paralytic.

Parame'nia, (para, and μήν, 'a month,') Menstrua'tio anom'ala, Men'ses anom'ali, Mis-menstrua'tion. Difficult menstruation. Disordered menstruation.

PARAME'NIA DIFFIC'ILIS, Dysmenorrhœa—p. Erroris, Menstruation, vicarious—p. Obstructionis, Amenorrhœa—p. Profusa, Menorrhagia—p. Superflua, Menorrhagia.

Paramenisper'min. A neutral principle, having the same composition as menispermin, derived from coccus indicus.

Parame'ria, (παράμυρρα, para, and μυρρα, 'the thigh,') The internal parts of the thigh.

Param'esos, (παράμεσος, from para, and μέσος, 'the middle,') Annular finger, see Digitus.

Parametri'tis, (para, and μήτρα, 'uterus,') Literally, inflammation of tissues in the immediate vicinity of the uterus. It is generally considered to denote an inflammation of the cellular tissue between the uterus and the peritoneum, although extended to include inflammation of any other portion of that tissue within the pelvis,—as Parametritis and Paroöphoritis,—inflammation of the cellular tissue surrounding the Fallopian tube and ovary respectively. Periuterine phlegmon, Pelvic cellulitis, Subperitoneal inflammation, and Inflammation of the uterine appendages, may be regarded as synonymous with Parametritis. When the disease terminates in suppuration, it is called Pelvic abscess. Perimetritis, sometimes described as Pelvipеритонitis and Metropéritonitis, though not strictly synonymous with them, implies an inflammation of the uterine peritoneum, including also Perisalpingitis and Perioöphoritis,—inflammation of the peritoneum in relation with the Fallopian tube and ovary respectively.

Paramo de Ruiz, Mineral Waters of. A remarkable acid spring in New Granada. It contains free sulphuric and chlorohydric acids.

Paramœcium, (para, and μοῦσος, 'an adulterer' [?].) A form of parasitic infusoria sometimes met with in the cæcum and colon.

Paramor'phia, Paramor'phine, Theba'ina, Theba'ine. A principle discovered in the precipitate thrown down from infusion of opium, treated with milk of lime. It resembles narcotine.

Paranephri'tis, gen. Paranephritidis, (para, and nephritis,) Inflammation of the renal capsules, Inflamma'tio re'num succenturiato'rum.

Paraneph'rus, (para, and νεφρος, 'kidney,') Capsule, renal.

Paranc'a, (παράνοια, from para, and νοῦς, 'understanding,') Delirium, Dementia.

Paranym'phus, (παρυνμφος, para, and νυμφή, 'a young spouse, a bride,') A name given by the ancients to him who led the bride to the house of her husband. In ancient schools of medicine the discourse pronounced at the end of the prescribed period of study for licentiate, in which the qualifications, &c. of the candidate were described.

Parapathi'a, (para, and πάθος, 'affection,') Pathomania.

Parape'chyon, (παπαπχιον, from para, and πῆχυς, 'the elbow,') Radius.

Parapep'tone, Syn'tonin. A substance precipitated, in the form of flocculi, from the peptones, when their mixed acid solution is neutralized by an alkali.

Paraph'ia, (para, and αφή, 'touch,') Parapsis.

Paraphimo'sis, (παράφωσις,) Periphimo'sis, Circumligatu'ra, Phimo'sis circumliga'ta, Pe'nis lipoder'mus, (para, and φίμωσις, 'I bridle,') Strangulation of the glans penis, owing to the opening of the prepuce being too narrow. It frequently happens in persons affected with phimosis, when the prepuce has been pushed violently behind the base of the glans, during copulation, &c. In paraphimosis the narrow and resisting aperture of the prepuce forms, behind the corona glandis, a kind of ligature, which strangulates the part, causes it to swell and inflame, and even to become gangrenous. Attempts must be made to bring back the prepuce. These excite considerable pain, yet they must be persevered in for some time, and should they not succeed, the ring formed by the tumefied prepuce must be cut transversely, and the antiphlogistic treatment be adopted.

Paraphobia, (para, and φοβος, 'dread,') Hydrophobia.

Paraphonia, (παράφωνια, from para, and φωνη, 'voice,') Affection of the voice, when its character or timbre is less agreeable.

PARAPHONIA CLAN'GENS, Oxyphonia — p. Gutturalis, Asaphia — p. Nasalis, Rhinophonia — p. Puberum, Hirquitalitas — p. Rauca, Raucedo — p. Ulcerosa, Oxyphonia.

Paraphora, (παράφορα, from para, and φέρω, 'I carry,') Delirium, Paracope.

Paraphrenésie, Paraphrenitis.

Paraphrenésis, (para, and φρον, 'the mind,') Paraphrenitis — p. Diaphragmatica, Diaphragmitis.

Paraphrénie, Insanity.

Paraphrenitis, gen. Paraphrenitidis, (from para, φρον, 'the mind,' or φρεν, 'the diaphragm,' and itis,) Paraphrenésis, (F.) Paraphrénésie. A name given to inflammation of the diaphragm, which was supposed always to produce delirium — as well as to the delirium itself accompanying that affection. See Phrenitis.

Paraphrosyné, (παράφροσυνή,) Delirium.

Paraplastic, Paraplasticus, (para, and πλαστικός, 'formative,') Possessed of depraved formative powers; as carcinoma, encephaloma, melanosis, &c.

Paraplegia, (παράπληγια,) Paraplexia, Rachio-paraplexis, Rhachio-paraplexis, Rhachio-plegia, Myeloparaplexis, Paraplexis spina'lis seu medulla'ris, Cervicis paraplexis paraplegia, (F.) Paraplégie, (para, and πλησσω, 'I strike,') Palsy of the lower half of the body, including the bladder and rectum. It is generally owing to disease of some part of the cerebrospinal axis; especially of the spinal portion. The ancients sometimes used the term for incomplete apoplexy. Some authors have also made a distinction between paraplegia and paraplexia — using the former for partial apoplexy; the latter for general or complete apoplexy.

PARAPLEGIA DOLOROSA. Paraplegia attended with hyperæsthesia.

PARAPLEGIA, RE'FLEX, see Paralysis, reflex.

Parapleuritis, Pleurodynia.

Paraplexia, (παράπληξια,) Paraplegia.

Parapophyses, see Vertebra.

Parapoplexy, Parapoplexia, (para, and ἀποπληξια, 'apoplexy,') False apoplexy; a soporous state, resembling apoplexy; and especially that which occurs in the paroxysms of pernicious intermittents.

Parapsis, Paraphia, (para, and απτομαι, 'I touch,') Sense of touch or general feeling vitiated or lost.

PARAP'SIS A'CRIS TENERITU'DO, Soreness — p. Experts, Torpor, Anæsthesia — p. Illusoria, Pseudæsthesia — p. Pruritus, Itching.

Parar'ma, (παράρμα,) Fimbria.

Pararrhythmicus, Pararrhythmus.

Pararrhythmus, (παράρρυθμος,) Pararrhythmicus, (para, and ῥυθμος, 'rhythm,') An epithet for the pulse when it has not the rhythm proper to the age and constitution of the individual.

Pararthre'ma, gen. Pararthre'matis, (παράρθρημα,) Pararthro'ma, Pararthre'sis, Pararthro'sis, Parac'tasis, Parastrepsis, (para, and ἀρθρον, 'a joint,') Incomplete luxation; subluxation.

Paracepas'tra, (para, and σκεπίζω, 'I cover,') A cap or bandage which covers the whole head.

Parasalpingi'tis, (para, and σαλπιγξ, 'a tube,') Inflammation of the cellular tissue in immediate relation with the Fallopian tube. See Parametritis.

Parasceu'e, (παρασκευη, from para, and σκευη, 'equipment,') Apparatus.

Paras'chides, (παρασχίδης, from para, and σκιζω, 'I cleave,') Fragments or splinters of a broken bone.

Parasi'tæ. Diseases of the skin, in which parasites are invariably present, as tinea tonsurans.

Parasitaire, Parasitic.

Parasite, (παράσιτος,) Parasitus, (παράσιτω, — para, and σιτος, 'corn, food, — 'I eat by the side of,') Parasites are plants which attach themselves to other plants; and animals which live in or on the bodies of other animals — so as to subsist at their expense. The mistletoe is a parasitic plant; — the louse and the intestinal worm parasitic animals. According to Virchow, every new formation which contributes to the body no serviceable structures, must be regarded as a parasitical element in the body.

HUMAN PARASITES are both animal and vegetable. The former include Entozoa (animals living in the interior of the human body), and Ectozoa (those which infest the exterior). The vegetable parasites are the Entophyta and Epiphyta, the former existing in the interior of the body, the latter on the exterior. The simplest arrangement of entozoa includes Cœlmin'tha (κοιλός, 'hollow, and ἔλμινς, gen. ἔλμινθος, 'a worm,') 'hollow worms; Sterelmin'tha, (στερεός, 'solid,') 'solid worms, and Accidental parasites.

The following table, made up from various sources, probably includes almost all the human parasites worthy of mention, as well as the locality usually inhabited by them. It is modified from a table of parasites given in Aitken's "Science and Practice of Medicine," vol. i., Phila., 1872. A few additional forms of fungous and other parasitic vegetations might be added. See Fungus.

TABLE OF HUMAN PARASITES.

I. ENTOMIA.
Acephalocystis endogena	Liver.
" multifida	Brain.
Anchyclostoma seu Sclerostoma
duodenale	Intestines.
Anthomyia canicularis	"
Ascaris alata	"
" lumbricoides	"
" mystax	"
Bilharzia seu distoma hæmatobia ..	Portal and venous system.

I. ENTOMIA—(continued).

Spiroptera hominis.....	Urinary bladder.
Strongylus seu Eustrongylus bronchialis.....	Bronchial tubes.
Strongylus seu Eustrongylus gigas, (ascaris renalis).....	Kidney, intestines.
Tenia acanthothrias.....	Intestines.
" elliptica.....	"
" flavipuncta.....	"
" lophosoma.....	"
" medio-canellata.....	"
" nana.....	" and liver.
" solium.....	"
Tetrastoma renale.....	Kidney.
Trichina spiralis.....	Muscles.
Tricocephalus dispar.....	Intestines.

II. ECTOZOA.

Demodex seu Acarus folliculorum	Sebaceous substance of cutaneous folli- cles.
Pediculus capitis (head-louse).....
" corporis seu vestimenti (body-louse).....
" palpebrarum (brow- louse).....
" pubis, Phthirus ingui- nalis (crab-louse).....
" tabescentium.....	Phtheiriasis (lousy disease.)
Pulex penetrans (chigoë).....	Skin, cellular tissue.
Sarcoptes seu acarus scabiei (itch insect).....	Scabies.

III. ENTOPHYTA AND EPIPHYTA.

Achorion Lebertii (trichophyton tonsurans).....	Tinea tonsurans.
" Schönlleinii.....	" favosa.
Chionophye Carteri (fungus of my- cetoma).....	Deep tissues, bones of hand and feet.
Leptothrix buccalis (algæ of the mouth).....
Microsporon Audouinii.....	Tinea decalvans.
" furfur.....	" versicolor.
" mentagrophytes.....	Follicles of hair in sycosis or menta- gra.
Oidium albicans (thrush fungus) ...	Mouth, mucous and cutaneous surfaces.
Puccinia favi.....	Tinea favosa.
Sarcina ventriculi.....	Stomach.
Torula cerevisiæ (cryptococcus cer- visiæ, yeast-plant).....	Stomach, bladder, &c.
Trichophyton sporuloides.....	Tinea polonica.

Parasit'ia, (παράσιτια,) Parasitism.

Parasit'ic, (παράσιτικός,) Parasit'icus, Par'asi- toid, Parasitoï'des. Having the nature of, or resembling a parasite,—as parasitic growths, tubercles, cancer, monster, (F.) Parasitaire, &c.

PARASIT'IC DISEASES, Parasit'ici (morbi), are such as are induced by or connected with animal or vegetable parasites. See Porrigio favosa, Psora, &c.

Parasit'icide, (parasite, and cædere, 'to kill,') Antiparasitic.

Par'asitism, Parasitis'mus, Parasit'ia. The condition of a parasite, or of an organized structure or body which lives on another organized body.

Parasitis'mus Intestina'lis, Helminthiasis—
p. Superficiæ, Malis.

Parasitog'eny, Parasitogen'ia, Parasitogen'e- sis, (parasite, and γενω, 'I beget,') The corporeal condition which favors the development of parasites.

Par'asitoid, (parasite, and ειδος, 'resemblance,') Parasitic.

Parasi'tus, (παράσιτος,) Parasite.

Paraspa'dia, (para, and σπασω, 'I draw,') A preternatural opening of the urethra at the side of the penis. One whose urethra opens in this manner is called Paraspadie'us and Paraspa'dias.

Paraspadie'us, see Paraspadia.

Paras'phagis, (παράσφαγισ, from para, and σφαγην, 'the throat,') The part of the neck contiguous to the clavicles.

Paras'tata, Paras'tates, (παρίστημι, — para, and ιστημι, 'I stand near,') The prostate. In Hippocrates, it means the epididymis. The epididymes were called by Herophilus and Galen Varico- sa parastata, to distinguish them from glandu- lo'sæ parastatæ or prostate. Rufus of Ephesus called the Tubæ Fallopianæ Parastatæ varico'sæ.

PARAS'TATA ADENOÏ'DES, Prostate—p. Glan- dula, Prostate—p. Glandulosa, Prostate.

Paras'tates, Parastata.

Parastati'tis, gen. Parastati'tidis, Epididymi- tis, (parastata, 'epididymis,' and itis,) Inflammation of the epididymis.

Parastrem'ma, gen. Parastrem'matis, Paras- trophê, (παράστρεμμα, from παράστρεφω, — para, and στρεφω, 'I turn, '— 'I distort or pervert,') Distortion. Convulsive distortion, especially of the face, the soft parts being drawn laterally.

Parastrep'sis, Pararthrema.

Paras'trophê, Parastrema.

Parasynan'chê, (παραινναγχη,) Cynanche paro- tidæa.

Parasys'tolê, (para, and συστολη, 'contraction,')
Acinesia.

Para'thenar, gen. Parathen'aris, Paræ'thenar, (para, and θῆναρ, 'the sole of the foot,') Winslow called grand parathénar, parathénar major, a portion of the abductor of the little toe, musculus scandula'rius; and petit parathénar, parathénar minor, the short flexor of that toe.

PARA'THENAR MA'JOR, Abductor minimi digiti pedis—p. Minor, Flexor brevis minimi digiti pedis.

Paraton'ia, (para, and τονος, 'tension,') see Spasm.

Paratop'ia, (para, and τοπος, 'place,') Luxation.

Paratop'iæ. Diseases in which organs are removed from their proper position. See Ectopia.

Paratrim'ma, gen. Paratrim'matis, (παράτριμμα, from para, and τριβω, 'I rub,') Chafing.

Parat'ropê, (παράτροπη, from para, and τροπω,
'I turn,') Apotrope.

Paratrophê, Paratrophie.

Parat'rophy, Parat'rophê, Paratroph'ia, (para, and τροφη, 'nourishment,') Misnutrition.

Par'breaking, ([G.] brechen, 'to vomit,') Vomiting.

Pardalian'ches, (παρδαλιαγχις, from παρδαλις, 'a panther,' and αγχειν, 'to strangle,') Aconitum.

Pardalian'chum, Aconitum.

Parec'tama, gen. Parectam'atis, (παρηκταμα,
Parec'tasis, (para, εκ, 'out,' and τείνω, 'I stretch,')
Immoderate extension, distension, or dilatation of a part—as of the heart.

Parecta'sis, (παρεκτασις,) Pararthrema, Parec- tama.

Paregor'ic, (παρηγορικός,) Paregor'icus, So'piens,
(F.) Parégorique, (παρηγορώ, — 'I soothe, I calm,')
That which soothes or assuages—as paregoric elixir. An anodyne.

PARREGOR'IC ELIX'IR, Tinctura camphoræ com- posita.

Parei'a, (παρεία,) Gena.

Parei'ra, see Pareira brava.

PAREI'RA BRA'VA, Cissam'pelos Pareira, Pa-
rey'ra, Bu'tua, Abu'ta, Ambu'tua, Botou, Caapeba, Overo butua, Wild Vine, Velvet leaf. Family,
Menispermæ. Sex. Syst. Diœcia Monadelphia.
The root of this plant—Parei'ra (Ph. U. S.)—a native of South America and the West Indies, has a sweet taste, with considerable bitterness and slight roughness. It has been recommended in nephritic and calculous affections; but it is not much used. By A. de Saint Hilaire, Pareira is assigned to Cissampelos glaber'rima. The active principle has been variously called Cissam- pe'lia, Cissam'peline, Pelo'sia, and Pelo'sine.

Parelle, Rumex hydrolapathum, R. patientia.

Parempto'sis, (παρεμπτωσις, 'intrusion,') see Coincidentia.

Parenceph'alis, (παρεγκεφαλις, from para, and εγκεφαλος, 'the brain,') Cerebellum.

Parencephali'tis, (parencephalis, and itis), Cerebellitis.

Parencephaloc'e'lé, (parencephalis, and κλη, 'a rupture,') Her'nia of the cerebel'lum; a very rare disease. It occurs under the form of a soft, indolent, or slightly painful tumor, without change in the color of the skin, and is situate in the occipital region. It is constituted of the cerebellum, which escapes through an aperture in the occipital bone. Great attention must be paid not to mistake it for an ordinary tumor, as its extirpation would be attended with fatal consequences.

Parenceph'alus, Cerebellum.

Paren'chyma, gen. Parenchym'atis, (παρυχυμα), Ca'ro parenchym'ica seu vis'cerum seu viscera'lis seu viscero'sa, Substan'tia parenchymato'sa, Procheu'ma, (F.) Parenchyme. The texture of glandular and other organs, composed of agglomerated globules united by areolar tissue, and tearing with more or less facility. Such is the texture of the liver, kidneys, &c. According to Virchow, it includes the peculiar constituents of an organ, which give it its specific character; its proper parenchyma, in contradistinction to its merely interstitial tissue. Παρυχυμα signifies, in Greek, effusion, (para, ε, and χωω, 'I pour,') and it was believed that this tissue consisted of effused blood or other fluid.

PAREN'CHYMA TES'TIS, Pulpa testis.

Paren'chymal, Parenchym'atous, Paren'chymous, Parenchyma'lis, Parenchymat'icus, (F.) Parenchymateux. Belonging or relating to the parenchyma of an organ.

Parenchymati'tis, gen. Parenchymat'itidis, (parenchyma, and itis), Inflamma'tio parenchymat'ica. Inflammation of the substance of an organ.

Parenchym'atous, Parenchymal.

Pa'rent Cell, see Cell.

Parepidid'y'mis, (para, and epididymis), Organ of Giraldès.

Parésie, Paresis.

Par'esifying, (paresis, and facio, 'I make,') Producing paralysis, as 'paresifying mental disease,' the paralysis of the insane.

Par'esis, (παρεσις, from παρημι, 'I relax,') (F.) Parésie. Paralysis. According to some, a slight, incomplete paralysis, affecting motion but not sensation.

Paresthe'sis, Paræsthe'sis, Paresthe'sia, Sen'sus imperfec'tus, (para, and αἰσθησις, 'sensation,') Congenital misconstruction of the external organs of sense. A genus in the nosology of Good. Also, perversion of sensibility.

Paret'ica Exarthro'sis, Luxation from relaxation of the ligaments of a joint.

Paret'icus, (παρετος, 'relaxed,') Relaxant.

Parey'ra, Pareira brava.

Parfum, (per, and fumus, 'smoke,') Suffimentum.

Pari'era, Pareira brava.

Pa'ries, gen Pari'etis, 'a wall,' Table. See Parietes.

Pari'etal, Parieta'lis, Pariet'inus, (from paries), (F.) Parietal. Appertaining to the parietes or walls of an organ or to the parietal bones.

PARI'ETAL AR'TERY, see P. bones.

PARI'ETAL BONES, Os'sa parietalia seu verticilla seu verticilis seu sincip'itis seu bregmatis seu bregmatica seu nerva'lia seu tetrago'na, are two fellow-bones, occupying the lateral and upper parts of the cranium, in the formation of which they assist. They have a quadrilateral shape; their external surface is convex, and presents, at its middle part, an eminence called the Pari'etal protuberance, Tu'ber parietal'e, (F.) Bosse parietale. Their inner or cerebral surface, which is concave, has a depression that corresponds with the preceding eminence, and which is called the Pari'etal fos'sa, Fos'sa parietalis. Above and behind, near the superior edge of these bones, is a foramen, which does not always exist, called the Pari'etal fora'men, Fora'men parietal'e, through which passes a vein — pari'etal vein — that opens into the superior longitudinal sinus of the dura mater; and an artery — pari'etal ar'tery — a branch of the occipital, which ramifies on the same sinus. Each parietal bone is articulated above, with its fellow; below, with the temporal bone; before, with the frontal; behind, with the occipital, and by the anterior and inferior angle with the great ala of the sphenoid; and is developed from a single point of ossification.

PARI'ETAL FORA'MEN, see Parietal bones — p. Fossa, see Parietal bones — p. Protuberance, see Parietal bones — p. Veins, see Parietal bones.

Parieta'ria, (from paries, 'a wall,' because found on old walls,) P. officinalis, Helæ'inë, Vit'ra'ria, Wall pell'itory, (F.) Pariétaire commune, Perce-muraille, Aumure, Herbe aux murailles ou des Nones. Family, Urticæ. Sex. Syst. Polygamia Monœcia. This plant contains much nitrate of potassa, and was formerly largely employed as a diuretic, and, also, as an emollient; but it is not much used at the present day.

PARIETA'RIA PENNSYLVANIA'ICA, American Pel'itory, a small weed, flowering from June to August, has been used, in juice or decoction, as a diuretic, 'deobstruent,' and emmenagogue.

Pari'etes, pl. of paries, 'a wall,' (F.) Pariois. A name given to parts which form the inclosures or limits of different cavities of the body, as the Parietes of the cranium, chest, &c.

Pariet'inus, Parietal.

Pari'eto-mas'toid. Belonging to the parietal bone and the mastoid process of the temporal bone, as the parieto-mastoid suture, sometimes called the Additamentum suture squamosæ.

Paril'la, Yel'low, Menispermum Canadense.

Par'is, gen. Par'idis, P. quadrifolia, Sola'mum quadrifolium, U'va inver'sa seu lupi'na seu vulp'ina, One'berry, True'love, (F.) Parisette, Raisin de Renard, Herbe à Paris, Étrangle-loup. It possesses narcotic properties, and was formerly considered a powerful philter. It is emetic, and is sometimes used externally as a resolvent and anodyne.

PAR'IS GREEN, Arseniate of copper.

Parisago'gê Intestino'rum, (from παρισάγωω, 'I introduce improperly,') Intussusceptio.

Parisette, Paris.

Parieth'mia, (παριεθμία, from para, and εθος, 'the throat,') A word employed to designate the tonsils, and, likewise, inflammation of the tonsils, Cynanche tonsillar'is, and Cynanche in general.

Pariethmiot'omus, (pariethmia, and τομή, 'incision,') An instrument with which the tonsils were formerly scarified.

Pariethmi'tis, gen. Pariethmi'tidis, (pariethmia, and itis), Cynanche, C. tonsillar'is.

Parieth'mium, (παριεθμιον), Tonsil.

Par'iswort, Trillium latifolium.

Parmacit'y, (corr. from spermaceti), Cetaceum — p. Poor man's, Thlaspi bursa.

Parme'lia Island'ica, (from παρμή, 'a light shield' — the shape of the receptacle,) Lichen Islandicus.

PARME'LIA PARIET'INA, Lichen pariet'inus, Yellow wall Li'chen, Com'mon Yel'low Wall Moss, which grows abundantly on trees and walls; Order, Lichenaceæ; is used in intermittent fever on account of its bitterness.

PARME'LIA PLICA'TA, Lichen plicatus — p. Pulmonacea, Lichen pulmonarius — p. Roccella, Lichen roccella — p. Saxatilis, Lichen saxatilis.

Parmentie'ra Cerifera, (after Parmentier,) Palo de velas, Can'dle Tree. A forest tree in the valley of the Chagres, — Nat. Ord. Crescentiaceæ, —the long cylindrical fruit of which, resembling candles, serves for food for cattle.

Parmentière, Solanum tuberosum.

Paroë'rion, (para, and οἰον, 'ovarium,') Parovarium.

Parocheteu'sis, (παροχετεύω, from para, and αἵματι, 'I divert water from,') Derivation.

Parodin'ia, (para, and ωδιν, 'labor pains,') Dystocia — p. Perversa, Presentation, preternatural.

Parodon'tides, (para, and ὀδὸν, gen. ὀδόντος, 'a tooth,') Tumors on the gums; parulis, &c.

Parois, Parietes.

Parole, (from low L. parabolare, [F.] parler, 'I speak, to parley,') Voice, articulated.

Paromphaloe'lē, (para, ομφαλός, 'the navel, and κλήη, 'rupture,') Hernia near the navel.

Paroni'ria, (para, and ονειρον, 'a dream,') Depraved, disturbed, or morbid dreaming; Oneirodyn'ia act'iva, Erethis'mus oneirodyn'ia. The voluntary organs connected with the passing train of ideas, overpowered by the force of the imagination during dreaming, and involuntarily excited to their natural or accustomed actions, while the other organs remain asleep.

PARONI'RIA AM'BULANS, Somnambulism — p. Salax, Pollution.

Paronych'ia, Paron'ychis, Paronych'i'tis, Par'avis, Redu'via, Rediv'ia, Ver'mis seu Pteryg'i'um dig'iti, Panarit'i'um, Digit'i'um, Pandalit'i'um, Pas'sa, Dactylit'is, Pana'r'ium, Onych'ia, (F.) Onglade, (para, and ονγξ, gen. ονυχος, 'the nail,') The ancients gave this name to an inflammatory tumor, — Onych'i'tis, Onyxi'tis (Gross), — seated near the nail, and involving the pulp or matrix. Some of the moderns have extended it to inflammation of the hand, and even of the forearm. It usually means every phlegmonous tumor of the fingers or toes, and especially of the first phalanx. Four kinds of paronychia are commonly pointed out: 1. That seated between the epidermis and skin, called, vulgarly, in this country, Run'round — in France, Tourniole, Vire. 2. That seated in the subcutaneous areolar tissue. 3. That occupying the sheath of a tendon; and 4. That considered to be seated between the periosteum and bone. The last three are only different degrees of the same disease, constituting Whit'low, (Prov.) Whickflaw, Teak, (F.) Mal d'aventure: — the worst kinds, in English, are called Fel'on, Cacoparonych'ia. The inflammation generally commences in the subcutaneous areolar tissue, and spreads to other parts, occasioning excessive lancinating pain, owing to the parts being put upon the stretch; hence the necessity of dividing them freely, — even down to the bone, when there is reason to believe that the affection belongs to the fourth division, — making use of emollient applications, the antiphlogistic treatment, and opiates to relieve pain.

Paropte'sis, (παροπτήσις, from para, and οπταω, 'I roast,') Forcing a sweat by placing a patient before the fire or putting him in a dry bath.

Parora'sis, (para, and οραω, 'I see,') Perversion of sight, which prevents the person from judging accurately of the color of objects. Achromatopsia. Hallucination.

Parorchid'ium, (para, and ορχις, gen. ορχιδος, 'testicle,') Any position of one or both testicles different from that which they ought to occupy in the scrotum — whether they may not have descended through the abdominal ring, or are drawn up to the groins by the cremaster muscle.

Paror'chido-Enteroc'e'lē, Her'nia paror'chido-enter'ica. Internal hernia complicated with displacement of the testicle.

Paros'mia, Anosmia. Also, perversion of smell. Paræsthesia olfacto'ria, Olfac'tus depravatus, Idiosyncrasia olfacto'ria, (from para, and οσμη, 'odor,')

Paros'tia, (para, and οσσειν, 'a bone,') Bones untempered in their substance, and incapable of affording proper support.

PAROS'TIA FLEX'ILIS, Mollities ossium — p. Fragilis, Fragilitas ossium.

Parosto'sis, (para, and οσσειν, 'bone,') The formation of bone outside the periosteum, as in the connective tissue, sheaths of the vessels, &c.

Paro'tia, (παρωτις, from para, and οτις, gen. ωτις, 'the ear,') Cynanche parotidæa.

Parot'id, Glan'dula parotidæ'a seu ad Aur'es seu saliv'al'is exter'na, Paro'tis, Animel'læ, Alimel'læ. The largest of the salivary glands, seated under the ear, and near the angle of the lower jaw. It is composed of many separate lobes, giving rise to excretory ducts, which unite to form one canal, called the Parot'id duct, Ste'no's or Ste'non's canal or duct — the Ductus supe'rior or Supe'rior saliv'ary canal of some; see Ductus saliv'alis superior. This duct, after having advanced horizontally into the substance of the cheek, proceeds through an opening in the buccinator muscle, and terminates in the mouth opposite the second upper molaris. About the middle of its course, it sometimes receives the excretory duct of a glandular body, situate in its vicinity, and called the Ac'cessory gland of the parot'id, So'cia parot'idis, Glan'dula so'cia parot'idis. In the substance of the parotid are found — a number of branches of the facial nerve, of the transverse arteries of the face, and the posterior auricular. It receives also some filaments from the inferior maxillary nerve, and from the ascending branches of the superficial cervical plexus. Its lymphatic vessels are somewhat numerous, and pass into ganglions situate at its surface or behind the angle of the jaw. The parotid secretes saliva, and pours it copiously into the mouth.

PAROT'ID, AC'CESSORY GLAND OF THE, see Parotid.

PAROT'ID APONEURO'SIS. A sheath of great thickness, continuous, below, with the cervical fascia. It forms a framework to the parotid by means of fibrous prolongations from its deep surface. Its density accounts for the pain of parotitis, and for the difficulty with which pus makes its way to the surface.

PAROT'ID AR'TERIES, see Parotid — p. Bubo, Cynanche parotidæa — p. Duct, see Parotid — p. Veins, see Parotid.

Parotide, Parotis.

Parotid'ean or Parotide'an, Parotidæ'us, (F.) Parotidien. Belonging or relating to the parotid.

Parotides, Cynanche parotidæa.

Parotidi'tis, gen. Parotidi'tidis, (parotid, and itis,) Cynanche parotidæa, Parotis.

Parotidon'cus, Tu'mor paro'tidis, T. Glan'dulæ parotidæ'æ, (parotid, and ογκος, 'a tumor.') Swelling of the parotid.

Paro'tine, (from parotis, 'parotid.') A term applied by Dr. Wm. Farr to the specific principle by which mumps is propagated.

Paro'tis, gen. Paro'tidis, (παρωτις, from para, and οτις, gen. ωτις, 'ear,') Phleg'monē parotidæ'a, Inflamma'tio paro'tidum, Cynan'che parotidæ'a, Paroti'tis, Parotidi'tis, Dioscu'ri, (F.) Parotide, is the name of a tumor seated under the ear, which is reddish, hard, and attended with obtuse pain, the progress to suppuration being slow and difficult. Sometimes it is of a malignant character, sloughing, and long protracted. Some French pathologists restrict the term Parotide to symptomatic parotitis, — as to that which occurs in plague, — whilst they apply the terms Oreillons or Ourles, Parotonicies, to Cynanche parotidæa or Mumps. Also, the Parotid.

Parotonicies, (parotid, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') see Parotis.

Parova'rium, properly Paroū'rion, Paroūph'ron, Cor'pus seu Corpus'culum co'nicum Rosenmülleri, Organ or Body of Rosenmüller, Appen'dage to the Ovary, (para, and ωαριον, 'the ovary,') A body closely analogous in structure to the epididymis, which is seated between the Fallopian tube and the ovary in the broad ligament. The Corpus Wolffianum concurs in its formation. Kobelt believes that the Parovarium exists also in the adult female, and he then calls it Proöva'rium.

Paroxyn'tic, (παροξυντικός,) Paroxyn'ticus, (F.) Paroxyn'tique, (παροξυνω, 'I excite,') Relating to a paroxysm.

Jours paroxyn'tiques are days on which paroxysms take place.

Par'oxysm, (παροξυσμός,) Paroxys'mus, (παροξυνω, from para, and οξυνω, 'to render sharp,') 'I irritate,') Im'petus, Insul'tus, Inva'sio, Exacerba'tio, Acces'sio, Acces'sus, (old Eng.) Az'es, Access, (F.) Exacerbation, Redoublement, Accès. The augmentation which supervenes at equal or unequal intervals in the symptoms of acute diseases. Also, a periodical exacerbation or fit of a disease.

Paroxys'mal, Paroxysma'lis, (F.) Paroxys'tique. Of or belonging to a paroxysm; as a paroxysmal day, (F.) Jour paroxys'tique; a day on which a paroxysm of disease occurs.

Paroxys'mus Febri'lis, Pyrexia.

Paroxys'tique, Paroxysmal.

Parthenei'a, (παρθενία,) Virginity.

Partheni'um Febrifugum, (from παρθενος, 'a virgin,' used in diseases of virgins,) Matricaria.

PARTHENI'UM INTEGRIFOLIUM, Prai'rie Dock. An herbaceous perennial of the southwestern portions of the United States; an infusion of the flowering tops of which is used as an antiperiodic.

PARTHENI'UM MAS, Tanacetum.

Partheni'us (Mor'bus), (παρθενος, 'relating or appertaining to a virgin,') A disease in a young female. Also, chlorosis.

Parthenogen'esis, 'virgin birth,' (παρθενος, 'a virgin,' and γενεσις, 'generation,') Luci'na sine co'itu, Vir'ginal genera'tion, Parthenogenet'ic re-production. The successive production of procreating individuals from a single ovum, without any renewal of fertilization.

Parthenogenet'ic, Parthenogenet'icus. Relating or appertaining to parthenogenesis.

Parthenology, Parthenolog'ia, (παρθενία, 'virginity,' and λογος, 'a description,') A description or consideration of the state of virginity in health or disease.

Parthenon'osus, (parthenus, and οσος, 'disease,') Chlorosis.

Par'thenus, (παρθενος,) Virgin.

Partia'lis, (pars, gen. partis, 'a part,') Local.

Par'ticles, Prim'itive, of Mus'cles, Sarcous elements.

Parts, The, Genital organs.

Partu'ra, (parturire, parturitus, itself from parere, 'to bring forth,') Parturition.

Partu'rient, Partu'riens. Bringing forth, or about to bring forth, or having recently brought forth young.

The Partu'rient, Puer'perous, Child'ing, Child-bed or Lying-in or Lying-down state, Confinement, Puerpe'rium, generally comprises the period from parturition to perfect recovery, which is usually a month. In the north of England this is called the steg month, requires careful management, and is subject to various diseases.

A Partu'rient or Parturifa'cient is a medicine which induces or promotes labor; as ergot, and perhaps borate of soda. See Abortive.

Parturifa'cient, (parturio, 'I bring forth,' and facere, 'to make,') Parturient, Abortive.

Parturit'ion, Puerpe'rium, Par'tus, Par'tio, Parturit'io, Partu'ra, To'cus, To'cetis, Tex'is,

The act of delivery of the fœtus and its appendages; also, the state during and immediately after delivery — Childbed, (Se.) Gizzenbed, Gizzen; see Parturient. Labor is the necessary consequence of conception, pregnancy, and the completion of gestation. It does not take place, at the full time, until after nine months of uterogestation—the causes producing it being the contraction of the uterus and abdominal muscles. By different authors the stages of labor have been variously divided. We may, perhaps, admit of four. The first stage comprises the precursory signs. One, two, or three days before labor, a mucous discharge, streaked with blood, takes place from the vagina, which is called the Sig'num, Leucorrhœ'a Nabo'thi, Hemorrhag'ia Nabo'thi, La'borshow or Show, (F.) Glaire, and along with this, trifling grinding pains, called by the French Mouches, are felt in the loins and abdomen. Second stage—Peculiar pains, which extend from the lumbar region towards the uterus; tension and dilatation of the neck and orifice of that organ; protrusion into the vagina of the envelopes of the fœtus, forming the bag of waters, (F.) Poche des eaux; and rupture or breaking of the waters. Third stage—Contractions of the uterus and abdominal muscles; forcing pains; the head of the fœtus becomes engaged in the pelvis; the occiput being commonly situate above the left acetabulum, passes beneath the arch of the pubis. Fourth stage—The head now presents at the vulva, the perinæum being considerably distended; at length it clears the external parts, and the rest of the body is easily disengaged. The child still continues attached to the mother by the umbilical cord, which has to be divided. In the course of fifteen or twenty minutes trifling pains occur, and the secundines are expelled. This completes delivery—the birth, (F.) naissance, of the child. In by far the majority of cases the head is the presenting part, the occiput directed anteriorly, and the face posteriorly. Of 12,633 children, born at the Hospital La Maternité, in Paris, from the 10th of December, 1797, to the 31st of July, 1806, the following were the presentations:

The head, with the face posteriorly...	12,120
The head, anteriorly.....	63

Labor has received different names, according to the period of pregnancy at which it occurs, and the mode in which it takes place. It is called miscar'riage or abortion, prior to the seventh month; prem'ature la'bor or parturition, Omotoc'ia, Par'tus præ'cox seu præmatu'rus seu intempestiv'us, between this and eight months and a half; and labor at the full period, (F.) Accouchement à terme, when it happens at the end of nine months. Labors have likewise been variously divided by different authors. Perhaps the one into natural and preternatural is as good as any;—natural labor meaning that which would occur without manual assistance; and preternatural, requiring the assistance of art, either by the hand solely, or with the aid of instruments—instrumental labor, which M. Capuron calls Accouchement Mécanique. Professor Hodge admits the following classification.

EUTOCIA.	{ Vertex presentations. Pelvic presentations.
DYSTOCIA.	{ Various states of the fœtus. { Large heads. Malpresentations. Plurality of children. Deformities. Conditions of the pelvis or uterus. { Deformed pelvis. Displacements of the uterus.

DYSTOCIA. { Physiological states { Inordinate excitement.
Deficient excitement.
Pathological states { Local.
General.

Powerless labor, the Inertie par épuisement of Madame Lachapelle, is that in which the muscular powers from exhaustion are unable to accomplish delivery.

A precipitate labor is one hastened by circumstances usually beyond the control of the accoucheur.

Forced labor or parturition, (F.) Accouchement ou Avortement provoqué, is labor or abortion induced by art. When accompanied with other phenomena of a deranging character, it is said to be complicated. When the child, even when reduced in size, cannot pass, it is termed impracticable, &c. See Dystocia.

The French use the term Part, (L.) Par'tus, at times, synonymously with delivery; at others, with the child, Maieu'ma, Mæu'ma. Suppression de part means concealment of delivery; Part légitime, a fœtus which comes into the world with the conditions necessary for its enjoying advantages granted by law; and Part illégitime, one that does not fall under those conditions.

TABLE OF THE COURSE AND MANAGEMENT OF DIFFERENT KINDS OF LABORS.

I. NATURAL LABORS;

Or those in which Delivery can be effected without Assistance.

HEAD PRESENTING. (Four Positions.)	1. Occiput towards the Left Acetabulum.	The head with the chin bent upon the breast clears the brim of the pelvis. Movement of rotation produced by the inclined planes of the pelvis; the occipital protuberance is carried behind the symphysis pubis, and the face towards the hollow of the sacrum.
	2. Occiput towards the Right Acetabulum.	The head attains the outlet; clears it; the occiput being first disengaged, and the face afterwards, which passes successively along the whole of the hollow of the sacrum. The shoulders enter the brim diagonally; and execute the movement of rotation. The one behind first clears the outlet. The same thing occurs with the nates.
	3. Occiput towards the Right Sacroiliac Symphysis.	The same course is here followed; except that after the rotary movement, the face passes behind the symphysis pubis, and the occiput into the hollow of the sacrum. The occiput is first extruded,—the face next.
	4. Occiput towards the Left Sacroiliac Symphysis.	When the chin presents and is turned forwards, the face is first expelled; the head is thrown backwards. This presentation is uncommon. If the chin present and be thrown backwards, natural delivery cannot be effected.
LOWER EXTREMITY PRESENTING. (Four Positions of the Feet, Knees, and Breech.)	1. Heel, Tibia, or Sacrum towards the Left Acetabulum.	The nates enter the brim diagonally; movement of rotation; the one passes behind the symphysis pubis; the other towards the hollow of the sacrum. The one behind is first extruded.
	2. Heel, Tibia, or Sacrum towards the Right Acetabulum.	The same thing happens to the shoulders. The chin is bent upon the chest to clear the brim; movement of rotation; the occiput passes behind the symphysis pubis, and the face towards the hollow of the sacrum. The face clears the outlet first; the occiput last.
	3. Heel, Tibia, or Sacrum towards the Right Sacroiliac Symphysis.	The same progress, except that after the movement of rotation, the face is towards the pubis, and the occiput towards the sacrum. The face is here again delivered first.
	4. Heel, Tibia, or Sacrum towards the Left Sacroiliac Symphysis.

II. PRETERNATURAL LABORS.

1. Those which require Manual Assistance only.

PRESENTATION OF THE HEAD, UPPER EXTREMITIES, BACK, ABDOMEN, &c.	1. When the labor is without any serious complication, and the head is not in a good position at the brim of the pelvis, endeavors are to be made to place it in its natural position: the hand to be introduced with the fingers united, and the long diameter of the head to be placed diagonally in the brim, if possible. Or the lever may be fixed over the occiput, and, by drawing it down, a closer approximation of the chin and chest may be effected; the position of the head to the pelvis being at the same time attended to.
	2. If complicated with syncope, convulsions, hemorrhage, want of uterine action, &c., the feet must be laid hold of, and the child turned. For this purpose, empty the rectum and bladder; and turn, if possible, prior to the escape of the liquor amnii. The female may be placed on her back or left side, with the breech over the edge of the bed. Use the right or left hand, according as the feet of the child are to the right or left side of the pelvis; always so introducing the hand, that the child shall be in its palm, and the back of the hand opposed to the inner surface of the uterus. The hand and arm to be introduced during an interval of pain; and they must be flattened and tranquil while the uterus is contracting forcibly. If both feet cannot be readily brought down, seize one, and tie a fillet around it.
	3. If the toes point to the vertebral column, or to the abdomen of the mother, the head, in its descent, will not enter the pelvis: the chin and occiput will be hitched on the pubis and promontory of the sacrum. In such case, grasp the nates as soon as they have passed the os externum; and, during a pain, endeavor to direct the toes towards either sacroiliac synchondrosis. When the fingers can be passed along the body of the child, and over the shoulders to the bend of the elbows, draw down the arms successively. When the body is expelled, and the head filling up the brim, the termination of labor must be accelerated by passing two fingers over the shoulder of the child; using moderate and steady extracting power, while one finger of the other hand, passed into the mouth, depresses the chin on the sternum. In this way, the head may be extracted.

2. Those requiring the Assistance of appropriate Instruments.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS.	If the pains become feeble, or inadequate from any cause;—or if the presenting part be firmly wedged in the pelvis; or the woman be becoming exhausted, instrumental assistance may be required. In all such cases, place the female on the back or left side, empty the bladder and rectum; wait till the os uteri is in a fit state; afford assistance during the pains; introduce the instrument during the intervals between the pains: have the patient on her left side (generally); and extract according to the axes of brim and outlet, as the case may be.
	Apply these to the sides of the head of the child, so that the ears and parietal protuberances may be within the fenestræ. Introduce the left-hand blade first; the index and middle fingers of the right hand guiding it to the ear. With the right hand pass the other in an opposite line, corresponding with the course of the first blade, guided by the fore and middle fingers of the left hand; the third and little fingers being employed to retain the left-hand blade in place; humor the instrument so as to allow the blades to lock. The handles may now be tied gently together. The force used must be from blade to blade, with a gentle, tractile effort.

1. Short Forceps.....

II. PRETERNATURAL LABORS — (continued).

2. Long Forceps..... } Applicable where the head has not entered the brim. The long forceps must be applied, in most cases, over the occiput and face of the child, so that the convex edges of the blades may be towards the hollow of the sacrum. When used, the power may be exerted from side to side, with moderate traction.
3. Lever or Vectis..... } The lever is applicable to the same cases as the forceps. It must not be used strictly as a lever, but as a hook with which to draw downwards. It may be applied to any part of the head, but is generally hitched on the occiput.
4. Fillet and Blunt Hook.... } In certain cases of breech and knee presentation, where the hand is sufficient, it may be necessary to pass over the joint a fillet, or the blunt hook, with which to exert some force of traction. The operation is very simple.
- EMBRYULCIA..... } Disproportionate size of head, or distorted or deformed pelvis, may require the child to be destroyed, and its bulk lessened; or the Cæsarean section or symphysiotomy, or the induction of premature labor may be called for.
- SYMPHYSOTOMY AND CÆSAREAN SECTION. } The instruments required here are the Perforator, Crochet, and Craniotomy Forceps. Make a steady pressure on the abdomen; pass two fingers of the left hand up to the head; feel for a suture or fontanel; introduce the perforator and bore through, until the progress of the instrument is arrested by its shoulders. Open the handles, and turn the instrument in different directions, so that the opening may be large enough to admit the perforator, with which the brain must be broken down.
- SEPARATION OF THE HEAD OF THE FŒTUS FROM THE BODY. } If, after this, delivery cannot be accomplished without further aid, pass up the craniotomy forceps; open the handles slightly, and introduce the blade without teeth within the cranium. On closing the forceps, a hold is obtained; and a tractile force can now be exerted during the pains, and the extrusion of the child be effected.
- INDUCTION OF PREMATURE LABOR. } Should great difficulty exist at the brim, the bones at the top of the head may have to be removed, until the base alone remains. The chin must then be brought through first.
- } The crochet is often used instead of the craniotomy forceps, being passed into the opening made by the perforator, and hooked upon some bony projection in the interior of the skull; but it is not a good instrument. In presentations of the face demanding perforation of the cranium, the perforator should be introduced just above the nose, in the sagittal suture.
- } When it is necessary to open the head after the lower extremities have been expelled, the perforation must be made behind the ear.
- } In cases of great narrowness of the pelvis, the operation of Symphysiotomy has been adopted by French practitioners — rarely by British or American; and, in extreme cases, recourse has been had to the Cæsarean Section.
- } If the body of the fœtus has been forcibly separated, and the head left in the uterus, it must be laid hold of with one hand, and the forceps be applied; or the head be opened and delivered, as under embryulcia. Should the head have been brought away, and the body left behind, the feet must be brought down.
- } In cases of narrowness of the pelvis, where the fœtus, at the full term, cannot be born alive, delivery may be brought about at an earlier period, or as soon as the child is capable of carrying on its functions independently of the mother.
- } The most advisable plan for accomplishing this object is merely to pass the finger round and round within the os and cervix uteri, so as to detach the decidua: — the membranes being thus left entire, and the life of the child not so much endangered, as where the membranes are punctured, and the waters evacuated. Parturition usually follows within forty-eight hours.

The laying of eggs by animals — Ova'tion — is called, in French, Ponte. The term has been applied to the periodical discharge — Ponte périodique — of ova, (F.) Chute des Œufs, which is supposed to take place from the ovaries at each menstrual period.

Parturit'ion, Dry, Partus siccus.

Partu'rium Va'num, Fausse couche.

Par'tus, gen. Partûs, (parere, partum, 'to bring forth,') Parturition — p. Abactio, Abortion — p. Abactus, Abortion — p. Cæsareus, Cæsarean section — p. Difficilis, Dystocia — p. Serotinus, Opsitocia.

PAR'TUS SIC'CUS, Dry la'bor or parturit'ion. Labor which is neither preceded nor attended by a discharge of the liquor amnii.

Paru'lis, (παρουλis, from para, and ουλον, 'the gum,') Abscessus gingiva'rum, Apostema paru'lis seu paron'lis, Phlegmonë paru'lis, Gumboil, Alveolar ab'scess, (F.) Parulic. Small abscesses are so called which generally form in the alveoli and involve the gums, sometimes without any known cause, but which often depend upon carious teeth.

Paru'ria, (para, and ουρω, 'I pass urine,') Morbid secretion or discharge of urine.

PARU'RIA INCON'TINENS, Enuresis — p. Incontinens aquosa, see Diabetes — p. Inops, Ischuria, false — p. Mellita, Diabetes — p. Retentionis, Ischuria — p. Retentionis renalis, Ischuria — p. Re-

Par'vitas Morbo'sa Par'tium Organica'rum, 'morbid smallness of organic parts,' Microtesia.

Par'ygron, (παρυγρον, from phara, and εγρος, 'humid,') A liquid or moist preparation for allaying topical inflammation.

Pas, (from [L.] passus,) Step — p. d'Anæ, Tus-silago, Speculum oris — p. de Lion, Helleborus fœtidus.

Pas'ma, gen. Pas'matis, (πασσεν, 'to sprinkle,') Cataplasma.

Pasque'flower, (from flowering about Easter,) Anemone pulsatilla.

Pas'sa, (patior, passus, 'I suffer,') Paronychia.

Pas'sæ (passus, 'dried') Corinthi'acæ, see Vitis Corinthiaca.

Pas'sage, Dejection.

Pas'sages, Diges'tive, Ways, digestive — p. Second, Ways, second.

Passambio, Rio vinaigro.

Passe-fleur, Anemone pulsatilla.

Passe-pierre, ('pass stone,') Crithmum maritimum.

Passerage, Iberis amara — p. Sauvage, Cardamine pratensis.

Passeri'na Tartonraira, (from passer, 'a sparrow,' alluding to the beaked seed,) (F.) Passerine de Tarton-raire, Tarton-raire, Gros Retombet, Trintanelle Malherbe. Family, Daphnoideæ. A plant, whose bark is possessed of epispastic properties. An ointment, prepared like that of Mezereon, is said to possess more activity than the latter.

Passerine de Tarton-raire, Passerina tarton-raire.

Passibil'ity, Great, (patior, passus, 'I suffer,' and habilis, 'able,') Hyperæsthesia.

Passif, Passive.

Passiflora Laurifo'lia, (passio, 'passion,' and flos, gen. floris, 'a flower,') Bay-leaved Pas'sion flow'er. Ord. Passifloræ. A native of Surinam. The fruit has a delicious smell and flavor, and quenches thirst, abates heat of the stomach, increases the appetite, &c.

PASSIFLO'RA MALIFOR'MIS, Appleshaped Grand-dill'la. The fruit of this species is esteemed a delicacy in the West Indies, where it is served up at table in desserts.

Some of the genus are said to possess narcotic and emetic properties.

Pas'sio, (patior, passus, 'I suffer,') Disease, Passion—p. Æmoptoica, Hæmoptysis—p. Cadiva, Epilepsy—p. Cardiaca, Cardialgia—p. Cholerica, Cholera—p. Coeliaca, Coeliac flux—p. Felliflua, Cholera—p. Hæmoptoica, Hæmoptysis—p. Hypochondriaca, Hypochondriasis—p. Hysterica, Hysteria—p. Iliaca, Ileus—p. Ischiadica, Neuralgia femoropoplitea—p. Pleuritica, Pleuritis—p. Stomachica, Dyspepsia—p. Ventriculosa, Coeliac flux—p. Vomicoflua, Phthisis pulmonalis.

Pas'sion, Pas'sio, An'imi Pathe'ma, Affectus, Emotio. An active affection or emotion of the mind; as rage, terror, love, hatred, &c.

PAS'SION FLOW'ER, BAY-LEAVED, Passiflora laurifolia—p. Hystérique, Hysteria—p. Iliac, Ileus.

Passio'nes (pl. of passio) An'imi, Affections of the mind.

Pas'sive, Passivus, (F.) Passif. An epithet for diseases which seem owing to a greater or less diminution of the strength, or which are without apparent reaction. Thus, passivè hemorrhages are such as supervene in debilitated individuals, or under conditions in which increased action of the arteries can scarcely be presumed. The term passive has, also, been given to aneurisms of the heart with extenuation of the parietes; in opposition to active aneurisms, with thickness of the parietes—hypertrophy.

Passive processes are those which exhibit little cellular activity, with tendency to degeneration.

Pas'sulæ Majo'res, (dim. of passus, [uvæ],) see Vitis vinifera—p. Minores, see Vitis Corinthiaca.

Passula'tum. A medicine in which the pulp of raisins or currants is a chief ingredient.

Pas'sus, (pandere, passum, 'to extend,') Step.

Pas'sy, Min'eral Waters of. This village is in the vicinity of Paris. There are several springs, containing sulphates of lime, iron, and magnesia, alum, common salt, carbonate of iron, carbonic acid, &c. They are employed as a tonic and astringent.

Pas'ta, (πάσθη,) Paste—p. de Althæâ, Paste, marshmallow—p. Amygdalina, Confection (almond)—p. Caustica Viennensis, see Powder, Vienna—p. de Dactylis, Paste, date—p. Emulsiva, Confection (almond).

PAS'TA GLYCYRRHIZÆ GUMMA'TA ET ANISA'TA, Pasta Mas'sa de extrac'to glycyrrhi'zæ. A compound of Extract of liquorice, Gum Senegal, Sugar, Florence orris-root, and Volatile oil of aniseed. Demulcent.

PAS'TA DE JUJUBIS, Paste of Jujubes—p. Regia, Confection (almond).

PAS'TA ZIN'CI CHLO'RIDI, (F.) Pâte de Canquoin, Paste of Chloride of Zinc, Canquoin's Caustic Paste, Canquoin's Paste. This paste is made of three strengths, consisting, respectively, of Chloride of zinc, 1 part; Wheaten flour, parts 4, 3, and 2; Water, sufficient to make a paste. This caustic destroys the part in a direct ratio with the thickness of the layer applied. A cancer composition of which the effective ingredient is chloride of zinc, was introduced into England by an American of the name of Fell. The external application or paste was composed of Decoction of Sanguinaria, and Chloride of zinc, of each two ounces: flour a sufficient quantity to form a glutinous paste. The decoction of sanguinaria was also given internally, but was probably of no effect.

Paste, Pas'ta, (F.) Pâte. A viscid, tenacious mixture. Also, a compound medicine, like the pastil, but less consistent, flexible, less saccharine, and more mucilaginous. Pastes of opium, &c., are used by the dentist in dental caries to relieve pain; and similar preparations of astringents and aromatics are applied to the gums, to give tone to them, and improve the breath. See Dentifrice. Several Pâtes, as of jujube, gum Arabic, and liquorice, are officinal in the French Codex (1866).

A convenient paste for attaching labels to glass, or for other services, is made of gum tragacanth and water, to which alum is added. Another form is to make a solution of Gum Arabic, 3j., Boiling water, f3ij., and Glycerin, f3ij.; and another is made by mixing powdered Gum Arabic, and powdered Tragacanth, of each 3ss., Water, f3jss., Acetic acid, ℥xx.

PASTE, CAGLIA'RI, see Turundæ Italicæ—p. Canquoin's, Pasta zinci chloridi—p. of Chloride of zinc, Pasta zinci chloridi—p. of Coster's, Coster's paste.

PASTE, DATE, Mas'sa seu Pas'ta de dactylis. Composed of dates, sugar, gum Arabic, water, and orange-flower water. Ph. P. Demulcent.

PASTE OF ICE'LAND MOSS, Pas'ta Liche'nis, (F.) Pâte de lichen. A paste made by boiling lichen Islandicus to a proper consistence, and adding gum Arabic and sugar.

The Pâte de Lichen opiacé contains opium in addition; about one-third of a grain to an ounce.

PASTE, ITAL'IAN, see Turundæ Italicæ.

PASTE OF JU'JUBES, Pas'ta de jujubis, Mas'sa de zizypho'rum fruc'tu, (F.) Pâte de Jujube. Composed of jujubes, gum Senegal, sugar, water, and tincture of lemon-peel. Demulcent.

PASTE, LLANDOLFI'S, see Bromine.

PASTE, LON'DON. A paste made of equal parts of caustic soda and unslaked lime in powder, prepared as a paste with water, when required for use. It is applied to growths in the larynx, enlarged tonsils, &c.

PASTE, MANEC'S. A powerful paste employed for the removal of epithelial growths, composed of white arsenic, gr. xv., cinnabar, gr. lxxv., burnt sponge, gr. xxxv., made into a thick paste with a few drops of water.

PASTE, MARSHMAL'LOW, Mas'sa de gum'mi Arabico, Pas'ta de althæâ, (F.) Pâte de Guimance. A compound of Gum Arabic, Sugar, White of egg, and Orange-flower water. Ph. P. It is demulcent.

PASTE, SEN'NA. A paste prepared by beating figs and powdered senna thoroughly together to the consistence of a confection, and covering with sugar.

PASTE, TOOTH, see Dentifricium—p. Vienna, see Powder, Vienna—p. Ward's, Confectio piperis nigra.

Pastel', (dim. of pasta,) Isatis tinctoria.

Pastèque, Cucurbita citrullus.

Pasteur's Flu'id. A fluid employed to detect microzymes or fungi in water or other fluids. It is composed of crystallized sugar, tartrate of ammonia, well-burnt yeast ash, and distilled water.

Pastil', Pastillus, Avic'ula Cyp'ria, Candela fuma'lis, Phtho'is, Phthois'eus, (dim. of pasta,) A compound of aromatic substances in various shapes; used as a fumigating material when set fire to. See Fumigation.

The French use the term Pastille, (L.) Pastillus, for a solid, dry, round, oblong, square, or triangular compound, whose base is essential oil, and sugar the excipient. These pastilles are in fact small lozenges, and only differ from the tablette in their lesser size. They are termed, also, Saccharolés solides.

Pastille, see Pastil.

Pastilles Digestives d'Hauterive-Vichy, see Trochisci sodæ bicarbonatis—p. Fumigating, see Fumigation—p. de Renandot, see Pilulæ de hydrargyro, scammonio et aloë—p. de Vichy, see Trochisci sodæ bicarbonatis.

Pastil'li Digesti'vi Darcet'ii, see Trochisci sodæ bicarbonatis—p. Emetinæ pectorales, Trochisci emetinæ pectorales.

PASTIL'LI DE MEN'THA PIPERITA, Pep'permint drops. (Sacch. alb., Aquæ menthæ pip., Aq. destillat., aa ʒij. Boil to the consistence of an electuary. Take of fine White sugar in powder, ʒiv., Volatile oil of peppermint, ʒss. Mix, and add the electuary while warm. Drop it then on marble, and dry the drops. Ph. P.)

Pastil'lus, Pastil.

Pastina'ca Altiss'ima, (dim. of pasta, from pastus, 'food,') P. opoponax—p. Anethum, Anethum graveolens—p. Graveolens, Anethum graveolens—p. Opaca, P. Sativa.

PASTINA'CA OPOP'ANAX. Ord. Umbelliferae. The name of the plant which furnishes the Opoponax. The plant, whence the gumresin is obtained, has, also, been called Fer'ula opop'onax seu opop'anax, Pastina'ca altiss'ima, Laserpit'ium seu Seli'num chiro'nium, Opopana'cum, Pa'nax heracle'um seu cost'num, Pastina'cea, Ky'na, Hercules allheal, Opop'anaxwort.

Opop'anax, Opopona'cis gummires'ina, Opop'onax, Ge'zir, Pop'anax, Gum'mi Pan'acis, exudes from the roots when wounded. Its odor is strong and peculiar; taste, bitter and acrid. It is met with in the shops, in lumps of a reddish-yellow color without; white within. It has been recommended as an antispasmodic and emmenagogue; but is seldom used. Dose, gr. x. to ʒj., in powder.

PASTINA'CA PRATEN'SIS, P. sativa.

PASTINA'CA SATI'VA, Elaphobos'cum, Pastina'ca sylves'tris seu opa'ca seu praten'sis, Anethum seu Seli'num pastina'ca, Ban'ica, Gar'den par'snep, (F.) Pana'is. The root is sweet and nutritious, and is in esteem as an article of food. It has been used as a diuretic and demulcent in calculous affections, &c.

PASTINA'CA SYLVES'TRIS, P. sativa—p. Sylvestris tenuifolia officinarum, Daucus carota.

Patate, ([S.] batata,) Convolvulus batatas.

Patch, Mu'cous, see Condyloma.

PATCH, O'PALINE. An appearance seen in the second stage of syphilis on mucous surfaces. If the patch be detached, a red, raw bleeding surface results.

Patch'es, White, Milk'y Stains. Smooth patches, seen in the third stage of syphilis, resulting from the peeling off of opaque epithelium over a deposit of syphilitic lymph.

Patchou'li, Pogostemon patchouli.

Patel'la, Rot'ula, R. ge'nu, Epigon'atis, Epigon'tis, Acromy'lè, Epigon'nis seu Epigu'nis seu Epig'onis, Mo'la seu Con'cha seu Oculus seu Or'bis seu Scu'tum ge'nu, Os scutifor'mè seu discifor'mè seu thyreo'id'es, Supergenua'lis, Cancalo'id'es, My'lacris, My'lè, Gam'ba, Olec'ranon mob'ilè, (Prov.) Copbone, Kneepan, (F.) Rotule. (Diminutive of patera, 'a bowl,' so called from its shape.) A sort of sesamoid, flat, short, thick, rounded bone, situate in front of the knee, and enveloped in the substance of the tendon common to the extensor muscles of the leg. The posterior surface of the patella is divided into two facettes, united angularly, which are incrustated with cartilages, and each of which is articulated with one of the condyles of the femur. The patella is developed by a single point of ossification. When the patella is fractured, it is difficult to produce bony union. This can only be accomplished by keeping the fractured extremities closely in apposition.

The ligamentum patellæ is a strong flat tendon attached to the lower extremity of the patella and the anterior tubercle of the tibia. It may be considered a part of the tendon of the rectus femoris, the patella being regarded as a sesamoid bone.

PATEL'LA, Cup—p. Fixa, Olecranon.

Pa'tency of the Fora'men Ova'lè, (from pateo, 'I am open,') see Cyanopathy.

Pat'ent Medicine, (F.) Médecine brevetée ou patente, Remède breveté ou patenté. A medicinal compound, for the sale of which the proposer obtains from government an exclusive privilege. A specification of his invention must be registered in the Patent Office, and, hence, it differs from a secret medicine.

Pa'ter Om'nium Viven'tium, ('father of all living,') Penis.

Pathe'ma, gen. Pathe'matis, (παθημα,) Affection, Disease.

Pathematol'ogy, (pathema, gen. pathe'matis, and logos, 'a discourse,') Pathology.

Pathet'ic, Pathet'icus, (F.) Pathétique, (παθητικός, from pathos,) That which moves the passions. A name given to the superior oblique muscle of the eye, and, also, to the 4th pair of nerves.

PATHET'IC MUS'CLE, Oblique, superior, of the eye.

PATHET'IC NERVE, Ner'vus Pathet'icus seu trochlea'ris seu trochleato'rius seu trochlea'tor, the Fourth pair of nerves, Par'quar'tum, (F.) Oculo-muscula'ris interne, (Ch.) Nerf pathétique, is the smallest cephalic nerve. It arises behind the inferior part of the tubercula quadrigemina (testes) at the lateral parts of the valvula Vieussensii. Its roots unite into one thin round cord, which makes a turn upon the peduncles of the brain, and passes into a canal of the dura mater, near the posterior clinoid process. It enters the orbit by the broadest part of the sphenoidal fissure, and terminates in the superior oblique muscle of the eye, by dividing into several filaments.

Pathétique, Pathetic.

Path'etism, Magnetism, animál.

Path'ic, (from pathos,) Morbid, see Buggery.

Path'ical, Morbid.

Path'icus, Morbid, see Buggery.

Path'nè, (παθη,) Alveolus.

Pathogen'esis, (pathos, and γενεσις, 'generation,') Pathogeny.

Pathogenet'ic, Pathogenet'icus, Pathogen'icus, (same etymon,) Relating to pathogeny.

PATHOGENET'IC PHYSIOL'OGY, Physiolog'ia pathogenet'ica. That part of physiology which relates to the origin of disease.

Pathogen'icus, Pathogenetic.

Pathog'eny, Pathogen'ia, Pathogen'esis, Nosogen'esis, Nosogen'ia. The branch of pathology which relates to the generation, production, and development of disease.

Pathognomon'ic, Pathognomon'icus, Sig'num conjunc'tum seu characteris'ticum seu mor'bi essen'tia'lè, (pathos, and γινωσκω, 'I know,') A characteristic symptom of a disease.

Pathog'raphy, Pathograph'ia, (pathos, and γραφω, 'I describe,') A description of disease.

Patholog'ia, Pathology—p. Humoralis, Humorism—p. Solidaris, Solidism.

Patholog'ical, Patholog'icus, Patholog'ogus, (F.) Pathologique. Relating to Pathology. Often used in the sense of pathic.

PATHOLOG'ICAL ANAT'OMY, see Anatomy.

Pathol'ogist, Pathol'ogus, (from pathos, and logos, 'a discourse.') One versed in pathology.

Pathol'ogy, Pathematol'ogy, Patholog'ia, Pathematolog'ia, Patholog'ice, (παθολογική, — τεχνη.) The branch of medicine whose object is the knowledge of disease. It has been defined diseased physiology, and physiology of disease. It is divided into general and special. The first considers diseases in common;—the second, the particular history of each. It is subdivided into internal and external, or medical and surgical.

PATHOL'OGY, HU'MORAL, Humorism.

Pathoma'nia, Parapathi'a, Mor'al insan'ity, (pathos, and mania.) Ma'nia sine delir'io. A morbid perversion of the natural feelings, affections, inclinations, temper, habits, moral disposition, and natural impulses, without any remarkable disorder or defect of the intellect or knowing and reasoning faculties, and particularly without any insane hallucination.

Pathomyotom'ia, (pathos, mys or μύς, 'muscle,' and τομή, 'incision.') The title of a work by Dr. John Bulwer (1649), being "a dissection of the significative muscles of the affections of the mind."

Pathopatridal'gia, (pathos, πατρίς, 'one's fatherland,' and αλγος, 'pain,') Nostalgia.

Pathopho'bia, Monopathopho'bia, (pathos, and φοβος, 'dread.') A term proposed as a substitute for hypochondriasis, on account of the individual's impression that he is sick or going to be sick.

Pathopoët'ic, Pathopoët'icus, (F.) Pathopoët'ique, (from pathos, and ποιέω, 'to make,') Producing disease.

Pa'thos, (παθος, 'suffering,') Affection, Disease.

Patience, Rumex patientia—p. d'Eau, Rumex hydrolopathum—p. Garden, Rumex patientia—p. Rouge, Rumex sanguineus—p. Sauvage, Rumex acutus.

Pa'tient, (patior, 'I suffer,') see Sick.

PA'TIENT OF DEATH, Agony.

Patien'tia, Rumex patientia.

Patien'tiæ Mus'culus, Levator scapulæ.

Pat'nē, (παρρη.) Alveolus.

Pa'tor Na'r'ium, 'opening of the nostrils,' (pateo, 'I am open,') The cavity or the opening of the nostrils.

Patra'tio, (from patrare, patratum, 'to accomplish,') Coition, Ejaculation (of sperm).

Patrin'ia Jataman'si, (after E. L. M. Patrin, a naturalist and traveller of Lyons,) Nardus Indica.

Pattē d'Oie (F.), 'Goose's foot.' An aponeurotic expansion, which covers the internal surface of the tibia at its upper part, and consists of the expansion formed by the tendons of the sartorius, gracilis, and semitendinosus muscles.

Patur'sa, Syphilis.

Pau, Cl'imate of. Pau is the capital of the department of the Lower Pyrenees, and is about 150 miles from Bordeaux, and 50 from Bayonne. The climate corresponds with that of the southwest of France generally; its great quality is the comparative mildness of its spring, and exemption from cold winds. It is regarded as a favorable winter residence for invalids laboring under chronic affections of the mucous membranes. It is too changeable for the consumptive; and to be avoided by the rheumatic.

Paullin'ia, (after S. Pauli, Professor of Botany at Copenhagen.) This is an extract from a plant of the same name in Brazil. It is prepared by the Indians, and appears to possess excitant powers. In Brazil and the neighboring countries it is given in the form of tisane—the powder being mixed with cocoa—in diarrhoea and dysentery. This drink is said, however, frequently to produce urticaria. It has been employed also as a tonic. An extract is prepared in Brazil from Paullinia sor'bilis, Ord. Sapindaceæ, known there under the name of Guarana, which is administered in similar pathological cases.

Paume de la Main, Palm.

Paunch, (from pantex, pl. pan'tices.) Inguivies.

Pauon'ta, (παύειν, 'to allay,') Sedatives.

Paupière, Palpebra.

Pausime'nia, (παύσις, 'cessation,' and μηνες, 'menses,') Cessation of the menses.

Pau'sis, (παύσις.) Sedation.

Pava'na Wood, Croton tiglium.

Pavanne, Laurus sassafras.

Pavil'ion. The French gave the name pavillon, (L.) Papilio, 'a canopy,' to the expanded extremity of a canal or cavity,—for example, of a catheter, sound, &c.

PAVIL'ION OF THE EAR, Auric'ula, Pin'na, O'tium, A'ta, (F.) Auricule ou Oricule, Pavillon de l'oreille, is seated behind the cheeks, beneath the temple, and anterior to the mastoid process. Its size varies in individuals. It is free above, behind, and below. Anteriorly, and within, it is continuous with the neighboring parts. Its outer surface has several prominences—the He'lix, Ant'helix, Tra'agus, Antitragus, and Lobe,—and several cavities—the Groove of the He'lix, the Fos'sa navicula'ris seu scaphoi'des, and the Con'cha. The skin which covers the pavilion is very fine, and studded with a number of sebaceous follicles. The auricle is fixed to the head by three fibro-areolar ligaments—a superior, anterior, and posterior.

Pavillon de l'Oreille, Pavillion of the ear—p. de la Trompe, see Tuba Fallopiana.

Pavimen'tum Cer'e'bri, ('pavement of the brain,') Base of the brain.

Pavi'na, Æsculus hippocastanum.

Pavita'tio, Tre'mor, (pavitare, pavitatum, 'to tremble from fear,') Trembling from fright.

Pa'vor (L.), Dread. Great fright. Panophobia.

PAVO'RES (pl. of Pa'vor) NOCTUR'NI seu DORMIEN'TIUM. Fear during sleep.

Pavot, Papaver.

Paw, ([F.] patte, [W.] pawen, 'a foot,') Manus.

Paw'paw, see Carica papaya.

Paxcarete (S.). A place in Spain which gives its name to a form of Sherry. See Wine.

Pax'wax, see Nucha.

Paxywax'y, see Nucha.

Paz'ahar, Bezoar.

Pea, ([F.] pois.) Pisum—p. Garden, Pisum—p. Ground Squirrel, Jeffersoniana Bartoni—p. Hoary, Galega Virginiana—p. Love, Abrus precatorius—p. Nut, Arachis hypogea—p. Partridge, Cassia chamaecrista—p. Turkey, Galega Virginiana.

Peach, (from Pessicum, corr. from Persicum, 'Persian,') see Amygdalus Persica—p. Brandy, see Amygdalus Persica—p. Tree, Amygdalus Persica—p. Wood, see Cæsalpinia.

Pea'gle, Primula veris.

Pear, ([Sax.] pepa, [L.] pirum.) see Pyrus malus—p. Alligator, Persea gratissima—p. Anchovy, Grias cauliflora—p. Avocado, Persea gratissima.

Pearl, ([Sax.] pæpl.) Per'la, Mar'garon, Margari'ta, Margell'ium, Marge'tis, Unio, (F.) Perle. A roundish concretion of a silvery white color, and brilliant polish, found in several shells, and especially in the Avic'ula Margaritifera, which has hence been called Mother perla'rum, Margari'ta, and Mother of pearl, and is much used in the fabrication of handles for surgical instruments, &c. Pearls were formerly given in powder as astringents and antacids. They consist of lime and an animal matter.

PEARL, MOTH'ER OF, see Pearl—p. Tumor, Cholesteatoma—p. White, Bismuth, subnitrate of.

Pearl'ash, Potash of commerce.

Pearl'y or Pearl-like Tu'mor, Cholesteatoma.

Peau, (from pellis.) Cutis — p. Divine, Condom.

Peaucier, (from pellis.) Platysma myoides.

Pecan' or Pec'can Nut, see Hickory.

Pec'cant, Pec'cans, (peccare, 'to sin.') Morbid. Not healthy. An epithet given by the humorists to the humors when erring in quality or quantity. See Materia morbosa.

Pechan, Stomach.

Pêche. Peach, see Amygdalus Persica.

Pecheguera. A pulmonary disease affecting children three or four months old in South America, which is promptly fatal.

Pêcher, Amygdalus Persica.

Pechi'agra, Pechyagra.

Pech'ing, Anhelatio.

Pechu'rim seu Pichu'rim Cor'tex. A highly aromatic bark, the produce of a species of laurus. It is extremely fragrant, like cinnamon, which it greatly resembles in its properties. In Portugal it is used in the cure of dysentery, &c. See Pichurim beans.

Pechy'agra, Pechi'agra, Ancon'agra, (πηχυν, 'the elbow,' and αγρ, 'a seizure.') Gout affecting the elbow.

Pe'chys, (πηχυν.) Elbow.

Pechytr'bé, Porphyra nautica.

Peck'ish, ('disposed to peck,') (Prov.) Hungry.

Pec'quet, Cis'tern or Res'ervoir of, Receptaculum chyl.

Pec'té, (πηκτεν.) Cheese.

Pec'ten, gen. Pectinis, ('a border, row,') Pubes. Also, a comb.

PEC'TEN DEN'TIUM, see Sepes — p. Veneris, Scandix cerefolium.

Pec'tin, (πηκτος, 'coagulated, curdled.') A name given by Braconnot to a principle which forms the basis of vegetable jelly. It is extensively diffused in the juices of pulpy fruits and roots, especially when they are mature, and occasions these juices to coagulate when they are mixed with alcohol or boiled with sugar.

It is the basis of one of the classes of elementary principles of Dr. Pereira — the pectinaceous.

Pectina'ceous, Pectinous.

Pectina'lis, (pecten, gen. pectinis, 'the pubes,') Pectine'us, Mus'culus li'idus, Pectina'tus, (F.) Pubio-fémoral, Susp'ubio-fémoral, (Ch.) Pectiné. This muscle is situate at the inner and upper part of the thigh. It is long, flat, and triangular; is attached, above, to the space which separates the ileopectineal eminence from the spine of the os pubis, and below, by a flat tendon, to the oblique line which descends from the lesser trochanter to the linea aspera. The pectinalis bends the thigh on the pelvis, and carries it outward in adduction and rotation. It may also bend the pelvis on the thigh.

Pec'tinated, Pectina'tus, Pec'tiniform, Pec'tinate, (F.) Pectiné, (from pecten, gen. pectinis, 'a comb.') Having the shape of the teeth of a comb.

PEC'TINATED MUS'LES, Pectina'ti mus'culi. The fascicular texture observed in the right auricle of the heart — Mus'culi Auric'ulae Pectina'ti. Their main use probably is to prevent the over-dilatation of the auricles.

Pectina'tus, Pectinalis.

Pectiné, Pectinalis, Pectinated.

Pectine'us, Pectinalis.

Pec'tiniform, (pecten, 'a comb,' and forma, 'shape,') Pectinated.

Pec'tinous, Pectina'ceus, Pectino'sus, Pectina'-ceus, (from pectin.) Of or belonging to pectin or vegetable jelly; as a pectinous or pectinaceous vegetable principle.

Pec'toral, (pectus, 'the breast,') Relating to the breast. See Pectorals.

PEC'TORAL DROPS, BATE'MAN'S, consist chiefly of tincture of castor, with some camphor and opium, flavored by aniseed. Gray gives the following formula: Castor, $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$, Ol. anisi, $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$, Camph., $\mathfrak{z}\text{v}$, Cocci, $\mathfrak{z}\text{ss}$, Opii, $\mathfrak{z}\text{vj}$, Proof spirit, a gallon.

A form, advised by a committee of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, is the following: Alcohol. dil., cong. iv , Santal. rubr. ras., $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$, digere per horas xxiv., cola et adde Pulv. opii, Pulv. catechu., Camphoræ, aa $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$, Ol. anisi, $\mathfrak{z}\text{iv}$. Digest for ten days.

Pectoral, Grand, Pectoralis major — p. Petit, Pectoralis minor.

PEC'TORAL SYR'UP, JACK'SON'S, see Jackson.

Pectora'lé, Corset.

Pectora'lis Inter'nus, Triangularis sterni.

PECTORA'LIS MA'JOR, Pectora'lis, Sternocleidobrachia'lis, (F.) Sterno-costo-clavio-huméral, Sterno-huméral, (Ch.) Grand Pectoral. A large, flat, triangular muscle, situate at the anterior part of the chest, before the axilla. It is attached, on the one hand, by means of aponeurotic fibres, to the inner half of the anterior edge of the clavicle; to the anterior surface of the sternum, and to the cartilages of the first six true ribs; on the other, by a strong tendon, which is inserted at the anterior edge of the bicipital groove of the humerus. The use of this muscle is to move the arm in various directions. If it be hanging by the side of the body, it carries it inwards and a little forwards. When the arm is raised, it depresses it and carries it inwards. It can also move it in rotation inwards. If the humerus be raised and fixed, the pectoralis major draws the trunk towards the upper extremity.

PECTORA'LIS MI'NOR, Serra'tus anti'cus mi'nor, (F.) Costo-coracoïdien, (Ch.) Petit Pectoral, Petit dentelé antérieur. This muscle is situate beneath the preceding, at the anterior and upper part of the chest. It is flat and triangular; is attached by its base, which appears digitated, to the upper edge and outer surface of the 3d, 4th, and 5th true ribs, and is inserted at the anterior part of the coracoid process. The pectoralis minor draws the scapula forwards and downwards, and makes it execute a rotatory motion, by virtue of which its inferior angle is carried backwards, and the anterior depressed. When the shoulder is fixed, it elevates the ribs to which it is attached, and aids in the dilatation of the chest.

Connected with the upper edge of the pectoralis minor and inserted into the first rib, and the coracoid process, and the clavicle between these points, is a thick fascia called the costocor'acoid membrane.

Pec'torals, Pectora'lia, Thorac'ica. Medicines considered proper for relieving or removing affections of the chest.

Pectoriloque, (pectus, 'the breast,' and loqui, 'to speak,') One, according to Laënnec, who presents the phenomenon of Pectoriloquism. Also, a stethoscope.

Pectoriloquie, Pectoriloquy — p. Chévrotante, Egophony.

Pectoril'oquous Bronchoph'ony, see Pectoril'oquy.

Pectoril'oquy, Pectoril'oquism, Cav'ernous voice, Pectoril'oquia, (F.) Pectoriloquie, Voix caverneuse, V. articulée. Speech or voice coming from the chest. Laënnec has designated by this name the phenomenon often presented by consumptive individuals, when their chests are examined with the stethoscope. The voice seems to issue directly from the chest, and to pass through the central canal of the cylinder, — a phenomenon owing to the voice resounding in the anfractuous cavities produced in the lungs by the suppuration or breaking down of tubercles, which constitute abscesses or ulcers of the lungs. By some it is not separated from bronchophony, having been termed, at times, strong bronchophony and pectoril'quous bronchophony. See Laryngophony. Whispering pectoriloquy is that produced by the whispering of the patient.

Pectorosus, (from pectus.) One who has a broad chest.

Pec'tus, gen. Pec'toris, Sternum, Thorax — p. Carinatum, see Carina and Lordosis.

Pecu'lium, ('private property,') Penis.

Ped'agra, Potassæ supertartras impurus.

Ped'al, Peda'lis, Podal'ic, Podal'icus, (pes, gen. pedis, 'the foot,') Relating to the foot; as PE'DAL APONEURO'SIS, (F.) Aponérose pédi-euse. A thin, aponeurotic layer, which invests the extensor brevis digitorum pedis, and separates the tendons of the foot from each other.

Ped'belly (Prov.), Physconia.

Pédérastie, Pæderastia.

Ped'es'sis, (πρόησις, from πηδᾶω, 'I leap,') Pulsation.

Pedeth'mos, (πρόηθμος,) Pulsation.

Pedial'gia, Pedional'gia, Pedioneural'gia, (pedion, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the side of the foot. Neuralgia of the foot in general. An affection of this kind, under the name Pédionalgie, prevailed in 1762 at Savigliano in Piedmont, and in 1806 among the military at Padua.

Ped'icel, Pedicle.

Ped'icellated, Pediculated.

Pédicellé, Pediculated.

Ped'icle, Ped'icel, Ped'iculus, (F.) Pédicule, (dim. of pes, gen. pedis, 'a foot,') A slender stalk; also, the narrow portion of a part of a tumor, for example, from which it was developed and is supported. See Ovariectomy.

PE'DICLE, NEUR'AL, see Neural arch — p. Vittel'line, see Vesicula umbilicalis.

Pedicula'ria, (from pediculus.) Delphinium staphisagria.

Ped'iculated, Ped'icellated, Pedicula'tus, Ped'icella'tus, (F.) Pédiculé, Pédicellé. Supported by a pedicle.

Pedicula'tio, (from pediculus.) Phtheiriasis.

Pédicule, Pedicle.

Pédiculé, Pediculated.

Ped'iculus, Pedun'culus, Phtheir, Louse, (Prov.) Bid'dy, (F.) Pou, (dim. of pes, gen. pedis, 'a foot,') from its having many feet.) A genus of parasitic insects. The human body is infested by several kinds: the Bod'y-louse or Clothes-louse, Ped'iculus vestimen'ti seu vestimento'rum seu corp'oris, (F.) Pou de corps; the Head-louse, Ped'iculus cap'itis, (F.) Pou de la tête, which lives in the hair; the Brow-louse, Pediculus palpebra'rum; the Crab-louse, Mor'pio, Fera'lis ped'iculus, Plat'ula, Phthi'rius inguina'lis, Ped'iculus Pu'bis, (F.) Morpion, which infests the hair of the pubes. Infusion of tobacco or mercurial ointment, or ointment of white precipitate, or of red precipitate of mercury, readily destroys them. The louse occurring in phtheiriasis, Pediculus tabescen'tium, Distem'per louse, is said to differ from the common louse. The eggs of the louse are called nits, (F.) Lentes. Also, a pedicle. See Parasites.

PE'DICULUS CAP'ITIS, see Pediculus — p. Cor'poris, see Pediculus — p. Palpebrarum, see Pediculus — p. Pubis, Crab-louse — p. Tabescen'tium, see Pediculus — p. Vestimenti, see Pediculus.

Pédicure, (pes, gen. pedis, 'foot,' and curare, 'to care for,') Chiropodist.

Ped'icus, (from pes, gen. pedis.) Extensor brevis digitorum pedis.

Pédieux (Muscle), Extensor brevis digitorum pedis.

Pedigam'bra, Ysambra.

Pedilan'thus Tithymalo'i'des, (πείδιον, 'a shoe,' and άνθος, 'a flower,') Euphor'bia tithymalo'i'des seu myrtifo'lia, Jeicbush, Order, Euphorbiaceæ, grows in various parts of the West Indies. The practitioners of Curaçoa give a decoction in venereal cases. It is also used in domestic practice, in amenorrhœa. It is, moreover, known and used as Ipecacuanha.

Pedilu'vium, (pedes, 'the feet,' and lavo, 'I wash,') Lavipe'dium, (F.) Pédiluve, Bain de pied. A bath for the feet. See Bath.

Pedi'olus, (dim. of pes, gen. pedis, 'a foot,') Petiolus.

Ped'ion, (πείδιον,) Sole.

Pedional'gia, Pedialgia.

Pedioneural'gia, Pedialgia.

Ped'ium, (πείδιον,) Tarsus.

Pédoncule, Peduncle.

Pédoncules du Cerveau, Peduncles of the brain — p. du Cervelet, Corpora restiformia — p. du Conarium, Peduncles of the pineal gland — p. de la Glande pinéale, Peduncles of the pineal gland.

Pedora. The sordes of the eyes, ears, and feet.

Pédotrophie, Pædotrophy.

Ped'uncle, Pedun'culus, (F.) Pédoncule, (dim. of pes, gen. pedis, 'a foot,') A flowerstalk. This term has been applied to different prolongations or appendices of the encephalon.

PED'UNCLES OF THE BRAIN, Pedun'culi seu Cru'ra seu Cau'dex cer'ebri, called also Cru'ra anterio'ra medullæ oblongatæ, (F.) Pédoncules du Cerveau. Two white cords, about three-fourths of an inch in diameter, on the outside of the corpora albicantia. They arise from the medullary substance of the brain, and gradually approach, till they join the tuber annulare. They are formed, internally, of a mixture of cineritious and medullary matter, the former of which, being of a darker color at one part than in any other part of the brain, has been called Lo'cus ni'ger cru'rum cer'ebri, Substantia nigra pedun'culi, Gray substance of Soem'mering. It separates the main body of peduncular fibres into two parts. The lower or superficial consists almost wholly of white fibres, collected into coarse fasciculi, and is called the crust or basis or fascic'ulated portion of the peduncle. The upper part is named tegmen'tum.

PED'UNCLES OF THE CEREBEL'UM, Pedun'culi seu Cru'ra cerebel'li, called also Cru'ra posterio'ra, are six in number, three on each side — a superior, a middle, and an inferior. The superior peduncles are generally known as the Proces'sus cerebel'li ad tes'tes, Cru'ra cerebel'li ad cor'pora quadrigem'ina, Bra'chia copulati'va; the inferior are the Proces'sus cerebel'li ad medullam oblongatam; and the middle are called also Cerebel'lar ped'uncles — Proces'sus seu Cru'ra cerebel'li ad pontem, Proces'sus ad pon'tem, Bra'chia pon'tis.

PED'UNCLES, INFERIOR, OF THE CEREBEL'UM, Corpora restiformia — p. of the Medulla oblongata, Corpora restiformia.

PED'UNCLES OF THE PIN'EAL GLAND, Pedun'culi cona'rui, (F.) Pédoncules de la glande pinéale, P. du Conarium, are two medullary bands or strips, which seem to issue from the pineal gland, and proceed on each side upon the upper and inner region of the optic thalami. See Pineal gland.

PEDUN'GULI CEREBEL'LI, Peduncles of the cerebellum — p. Cerebri, Peduncles of the brain — p. Conarii, Peduncles of the pineal gland, see Pineal gland — p. Medullæ oblongatæ, Corpora restiformia.

Pedun'culus, Peduncle.

Pe'ga, (πηγή,) Canthus, lesser.

Peganelæ'on, O'leum ruta'ceum, O'leum ru'tæ, (παραγον, 'rue,' and ελαιον, 'oil,') Oil of Rue.

Peg'anum, (παραγον,) Ruta.

Peg'min, (from πηγνυω, 'I coagulate,') Coirum phlogisticum.

Pei'né, (πεινα,) Hunger.

Peinothrapei'a, (peine, and θεραπεία, 'treatment,') Limothrapeia.

Pei'ra, (πειρα,) Effort, Experience, Nisus.

Pela'da, (F.) Pelade. A word of uncertain origin, applied to Alopecia, especially to that resulting from syphilis. See Alopecia and Porrigio decalvans.

Pelade, Pelada, Alopecia—p. Achromateuse, Porrigio decalvans—p. Décalvante, Porrigio decalvans.

Pelag'ia. A kind of scaly erysipelas of the hands—sometimes of the legs; at others, of the face. Pellagra [?].

Pel'agra, Pellagra.

Pelargo'nium An'ceps, (πελαργος, 'a crane,' from the shape of the capsules,) Peris'tera an'ceps. A South African plant, Nat. Ord. Geraniaceae, the decoction of which is used by the Malays in amenorrhoea, and to promote parturition and abortion.

PELARGONIUM ANTIDYSENTER'ICUM, Jenkinso'nia antidyse'nter'ica. This South African plant is used by the natives in dysentery. It is boiled in milk.

PELARGONIUM CUCULLA'TUM. Common on the Table Mountain, Africa. It has been recommended in decoction as an enema in colic, nephritis, and suppression of urine. It is an excellent emollient, and was formerly exported to Holland under the name Herba Althææ.

PELARGONIUM TRIS'TE, Polyac'tium tris'te. The root of this plant, which grows at the Cape of Good Hope, is somewhat astringent, and is used there in diarrhoea and dysentery, and as an anthelmintic.

Pel'ican, Pelica'nus, Peleca'nus, Pel'ecan, Pel'icæa, (πελίκαν, from πελίκω, 'I cleave.') An instrument curved at the end like the beak of a pelican. Its use is to extract teeth.

Pel'icidē, Pelu'dē, Mel coc'tum. Boiled honey. Pellicom'eter, (πελίζ, gen. πελικός, 'a basin,' 'the pelvis,' and μέτρον, 'a measure,') Pelvimeter.

Pelidno'ma, gen. Pelidno'matis, (πελιδνώμα, from πελιδνός, 'livid,' and oma,) Ecchymoma, Pelioma.

Pelio'ma, gen. Pelio'matis, Pelidno'ma, (πελιωμα, from πελός, 'livid,' and oma.) A livid ecchymosis. See Ecchymoma.

Peliose, Purpura.

Pelio'sis, (πελιωσις, from πελός, 'livid,' and ωσις,) Purpura hæmorrhagica—p. Rheumatica, see Purpura.

Pel'la, (πελλα, 'skin,') Cutis, Prepuce.

Pel'lagra, Pel'agra, Ichthy'o'sis seu Tu'ber seu Impeti'go Pel'lagra, Elephant'i'asis Ital'ica, Lep'ra Mediolanen'sis seu Lombard'ica, Scorbu'tus alpi'nus, Ma'nia pella'gria, Erythe'ma endem'icum seu pell'agrum, Derm'atagra, Erysip'elas period'ica nervo'sa chron'ica, Paral'ysis scorbu'tica, Insola'zione de Primavera, Mal del Higado, M. del Monte, Male del Sole, Italian Lep'rosy, Scur'vy of the Alps, (F.) Mal de misère, Scorbut des Alpes, (from πελλα, [?] 'skin,' and ἀγχα, 'seizure,') A disease, particularly noticed among the Milanese, which consists in the skin becoming covered with wrinkles, and assuming a scaly appearance, especially in the parts exposed to the air. The strength diminishes, the intellectual faculties and sensations become obscure, and cramps, convulsions, and other lesions of muscular contractility supervene. It is a singular endemic affection, and has been supposed to follow everywhere the introduction of Indian corn! Hence the name Rapha'nia maiz'tica, given to it by some of the Italian physicians. It has been ascribed to a diseased condition of the Indian corn, in which it is affected by a parasitic fungus, Sporis'o'rium ma'idis.

An affection endemic in the Asturias is said to be a variety of pellagra. It is the Ro'sa seu Lepra Astu'rica, Mal de la Rosa.

Pel'lens, (pellere, 'to drive,') Driving, Impelling.

Pellen'tia, (pl. of Pellens) MEDICAMEN'TA are medicines that promote the occurrence of the menstrual or hæmorrhoidal flux.

Pel'let, (from pila, 'a ball,') see Globule.

Pel'licle, Pellicula.

Pellic'ula, Pel'licle, (dim. of pellis, 'a skin,') A thin skin or membrane; a film.

PELLIC'ULA O'vi, Membrana putaminis—p. Summa, Epidermis—p. Superior, Epidermis.

Pellic'ulæ Cor'dis, Ostiola cordis.

Pel'lis, Cutis—p. Summa, Epidermis.

Pel'litory, Xanthoxylum fraxineum—p. American, Parietaria Pennsylvanica—p. Bastard, Achillea ptarmica—p. of Spain, Anthemis pyrethrum—p. Wall, Parietaria.

Pel'ma, (πελμα,) Sole.

Pelohæ'mia, (F.) Pélohémie, (πελος, 'dark,' and αίμα, 'blood,') A condition of the blood in which it is thick, syrupy, and of a very dark color—as in gangrene, &c.

Pel'or, (πελωρ,) Monster.

Pelo'ria, (from πελωρ,) Monster.

Pelo'rium, (from πελωρ,) Monster.

Pelo'rum, (from πελωρ,) Monster.

Pelo'sia or Pel'osine, see Parcira brava.

Pelote, Pad, see Truss.

Pelote de Mer, (from pila, 'a round mass,') Pila marina.

Pelta'lis seu Pelta'tus Cartila'go, (πελτη, 'a small shield,') Thyroid cartilage, Xiphoid cartilage.

Peltan'dra Virgin'ica, (πελτη, 'a small shield,' and ανθη, gen. ανθος, 'anther,' from the shield-shaped stamens,) Ar'um Virgin'icum, Cal'la seu Lecon'tia seu Rensselaë'ria Virgin'ica, Ar'row Ar'um, Taraho', Wam'pee; indigenous; of the Order Araceæ. The fresh roots and seeds are acrid stimulants, like Arum.

Pelti'dea Amplis'sima, (πελτη, 'a small shield,') Lichen caninus—p. Aphthosa, Lichen aphthosus—p. Canina, Lichen caninus—p. Leucorrhiza, Lichen caninus—p. Malacea, Lichen caninus—p. Spuria, Lichen caninus.

Peltig'era Cani'na, Lichen caninus.

Pelu'dē, Pelicide.

Pel'vic, Pel'vicus, Pelvi'nus, (F.) Pelvien, (from pelvis.) Belonging or relating to the pelvis.

PELVIC APONEURO'SIS, (F.) Aponévrose pelvienne. A tendinous lamina, given off from the sides of the pelvis, and from the entire circumference of the brim, which passes into and lines the pelvis, and is soon divided into two distinct layers;—one external, the lateral pelvic or obturator fascia, which is continued to line the sides of the pelvis, and covers the obturator internus muscle; the other, internal or superior, which passes inwards upon the side of the prostate, bladder, and rectum in the male, and of the bladder, vagina, and rectum in the female, in order to form the floor of the pelvis.

PELVIC CAV'ITY, (F.) Cavité pelvienne. The cavity of the pelvis.

PELVIC CELLULITIS, see Parametritis—p. Fascia, see Pelvic aponeurosis—p. Hæmatocele, see Hæmatocele, pelvic—p. Hæmatoma, see Hæmatocele, pelvic.

PELVIC MEM'BERS. The lower extremities.

PELVIC PERITONITIS, Pelvipéritonitis.

PELVIC SUR'FACE OF THE IL'IUM. That which faces the pelvic cavity.

PELVIC THROM'BUS, see Hæmatocele, pelvic—p. Tumor, sanguineous, see Hæmatocele, pelvic.

Pelvic'ula (dim. of pelvis, 'a basin,') Oc'uli, Orbit.

Pelvid'ymus, (F.) Pelvidyme, (pelvis, and δυνν, 'to mingle,') A monster united at the pelvis, and double above.

Pelvien, Pelvic.

Pelvimeter, Pelycom'eter, Pelicom'eter, Pelyom'eter, Pyelom'eter, (F.) Pelvimètre, (pelvis, and μέτρον, 'a measure,') A barbarous hybrid. This name has been given to different instruments, invented for measuring the diameters of the pelvis, and particularly the antero-posterior or fore-and-aft diameter of the brim:—Pelvimeter.

etry, (F.) Pelvimétrie. Two have been chiefly employed, especially by French practitioners:—the Compas d'épaisseur, and the Pelvimeter of Coutouly. 1. The Compas d'épaisseur or Calipers of Baudelocque, is formed like a pair of compasses—with blunt extremities—the branches of which can be moved at will. One of these is applied on the symphysis pubis, and the other on the sacrum. About three inches must be deducted from this measurement for the thickness of the mons veneris, pubis, and the base of the sacrum. 2. The Pelvimeter of Coutouly resembles the instruments used by shoemakers for measuring the length of the foot. The two branches are introduced, in a state of approximation, into the vagina, and then separated, so that one touches the promontory of the sacrum, the other comes behind the os pubis. It is a barbarous contrivance, and its introduction ought never to be attempted on the living subject. It does not, indeed, seem possible to introduce it without mischief.

The finger is, decidedly, the best pelvimeter, and by it we can judge whether the base of the sacrum be unusually prominent. Measurement of the pelvis by the hand has been called Pelycochirometre'sis, (from πελυξ, 'the pelvis,' χειρ, 'the hand,' and μετρον, 'a measure.')

Pelvimetry, see Pelvimeter.

Pelvipéritonitis, Peritonitis Pelvica, Pelvic peritonitis. Inflammation of the pelvic peritoneum. See Parametritis.

Pel'vis, gen. Pelvis, 'a basin,' Cho'ana, Py'clius, Lee'anē, (F.) Bassin, (from πελὺς, πελὺξ, or πελὺς, 'a basin,' because fancied to be shaped like an ancient basin.) The part of the trunk which bounds the abdomen below. It is a large, bony, irregular, conoidal cavity,—opens above and below,—which supports and contains a part of the intestines, and the urinary and genital organs; and serves, at the same time, as a fixed point for the articulation of the lower limbs, the attachment of their muscles, and the execution of their movements. The pelvis supports, behind, the vertebral column, and is sustained, before, by the ossa femorum. It is situate, in the adult, near the middle part of the body, and is composed of four broad, flat, unequally thick bones, differing much in their shape, size, and arrangement, which touch, are articulated at some part of their surface, and intimately united by means of a number of ligamentous fasciæ. Of these bones, two are behind, on the median line,—the sacrum and the coccyx; the two others are before and at the sides,—the ilia. They are fellows, and unite, before, with each other. The most important parts of the pelvis, in an obstetrical point of view, are the brim and the outlet. The Brim, Angus'tia abdominalis, Intro'itus, Apertu'ra pel'vis super'ior, Up'per O'pening or Strait of the Cav'ity of the Pel'vis, (F.) Détroit supérieur, D. abdominal, is the narrow part which separates the greater pelvis from the less—the false from the true, Pel'vis vera seu mi'nor. In the well-formed woman it is elliptical, and slightly inclined forwards. Its antero-posterior, sacro-pubic or conjugate diameter, in a standard pelvis, measures $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches, but with the soft parts, $3\frac{3}{4}$ inches; its transverse or iliac or lateral, $5\frac{1}{4}$ inches, but with the soft parts 4 inches; and its oblique, Diam'eter of Deventer, with the soft parts, $4\frac{3}{4}$ inches. The OUT'LET, Ex'itus, Infe'rior opening or strait, Angus'tia perinealis, (F.) Détroit inférieur, D. périnéal, forms the lower aperture of the pelvis. The antero-posterior diameter is here, on account of the mobility of the coccyx, 5 inches; the lateral, 4 inches. The AXIS OF THE PEL'VIS is important to be known in obstetrics. The Axis of the Brim is indicated by a straight line drawn from the umbilicus to the apex of the coccyx;—the Axis of the Out'let by a line drawn from the first bone of the sacrum to the entrance of the vagina. An imaginary curved line which indicates the direction of the canal of the pelvis, has occasionally been termed the curve of Os'rus, in consequence of its having been pointedly described by that German obstetrician.

PELVIS AUR'IUM, Cochlea—p. Cerebri, Infundibulum of the brain.

PELVIS OF THE KID'NEY, Pelvis renalis seu re'nium, Si'nus seu Ven'ter seu Al'veus Re'nium, (F.) Bassinet. This is a small, membranous pouch, occupying the posterior part of the fissure of the kidney. It is placed behind the renal artery and vein; is elongated from above to below; flattened from before to behind; irregularly oval in figure; and, below, contracts considerably, to be continuous with the ureter. It receives the orifices of the infundibula, which pour the urine secreted in the kidney into its cavity.

PELVIS MI'NOR, Pelvis—p. Naegele's, see Naegele—p. Ocularis, Scaphium oculare—p. Renalis, Pelvis of the kidney—p. Renum, Pelvis of the kidney—p. Vera, Pelvis.

Pelvitrochanterian, Pelvitrochanteria'nus. That which relates to the pelvis and great trochanter. The Pelvitrochanterian re'gion is formed by the muscles—pyramidalis, two obturators, geminii, and quadratus femoris—which pass from the pelvis to the digital cavity of the great trochanter.

Pelycochirometre'sis, (πελὺξ, gen. πελὺκος, 'pelvis,' χειρ, 'hand,' and μετρον, 'measure,') see Pelvimeter.

Pelycom'eter, (πελὺξ, gen. πελὺκος, 'pelvis,' and μετρον, 'a measure,') Pelvimeter.

Pelyom'eter, Pelvimeter.

Pem'mican or Pem'ican. Meat cured, pounded, and mixed with fat. It has been much used as nutriment on long overland journeys.

Pemphigo'des, (πεμφιγώδης), Pem'phigoid, (F.) Pemphigode. An epithet given by the ancients to the fever that accompanies pemphigus.

Pem'phigus or Pemphi'gus, Emphly'sis Pem'phigus, Pom'pholyx, (from πемφίξ, gen. πемφίγος, 'a blister,') Fe'bris bullo'sa seu vesicula'ris seu ampullo'sa seu pemphigo'des seu pemphingo'des, Ex-anthe'ma sero'sum, Mor'ta, Pem'phigus mor'ta seu Helvet'icus seu ma'jor seu mi'nor, Mor'bus bullo'sus seu vesicula'ris seu ampulla'ceus, Mal'morto (L.) Malum mortuum, Pem'phix, Pem'phix, Ty'phus vesicula'ris, Vesic'ular Fe'ver, Blad'dery Fe'ver, Wa'terblebs, (F.) Fievere bulleuse ou vésiculaire, Maladie bulleuse. A disease defined to consist of vesicles, scattered over the body; transparent, filbert-sized, with a red, inflamed edge, but without surrounding blush or tumefaction; on breaking, disposed to ulcerate; fluid, pellucid or slightly colored; fever, adynamic. It is doubtful whether any such idiopathic fever has ever existed; the probability is, that the fever and vesications have been an accidental complication. Cullen thinks the Pemphigus Helveticus must have been malignant sore throat. If, however, such a distinct disease did exist, it was probably only as an endemic-epidemic.

Pem'phix, (πемφίξ), Pemphigus.

Pem'tæ'a Fe'bris, (πемпτος, 'five,') Quintan.

Pen Pal'sy, see Cramp, writers'.

Penæ'a Mucrona'ta, (after P. Pena, a French botanist,) see Sarcocolla—p. Sarcocolla, Sarco-colla.

Penche, Abdomen.

Pen'cil-like Proc'esses, Styloid processes.

Pen'dulous Abdo'men, Physconia.

Pen'dulum Pala'ti, (from pendere, 'to hang,') Velum pendulum palati.

Pénétrant, Penetrating.

Pen'etrating, Pen'etrans, (F.) Pénétrant, (penetrare, penetratum,—penitus intrare,—'to go into,')
A wound is so called which penetrates one of the great splanchnic cavities—Vul'nus penetrans.

A medicine is also so called which is supposed to pass through the pores, and stimulate.

Penghawar. A drug derived from certain tree ferns in Java, which has had a reputation in Holland, especially as a styptic.

Penicil'ium Glau'cum. A common fungus, which gives to decaying organic matter its mildewed appearance. It is generated also in urine after standing a few days, or in acid urine containing mucus, albumen, &c.

Penicil'lum, Compress, Penicillus.

Penicil'lus, Penicil'lum, Penic'ulus, ('a painter's brush;' dim. of penis, 'a tail,') A tent or plectet. A pessary. The secreting glandiform extremities of the venæ portæ (Ac'ini bilio'si) have been so termed, as well as the villous textures.

PENICIL'LUS, Tent.

Penic'ulum, Compress.

Penic'ulus, Penicillus, Tent.

Pénide, Penidium.

Pen'ides, Saccharum hordeatum.

Penid'ium, Penidium sacchara'tum, (penis, 'a tail,' from the shape [?],) (F.) Pénide, Sucre tors. A clarified sugar made up into rolls. Barley sugar. It is demulcent; see Saccharum hordeatum.

Pénit, Mons veneris.

Pe'nile. Relating to the penis; as Penile fistula. See Urethral fistula.

Pe'nis, gen. Pe'nis, 'a tail,' (probably from pendere, 'to hang down,') Cau'lis, Co'les, Colis, Cau'les, Cau'los, Men'tula, Men'ta, Phal'lus, Pe'os, Ste'ma, Na'trix, Cap'ulus, Rhop'alum, Pos'thē, Pos'thium, Prost'hium, Crithē, Cor'ynē, Vo'mer, Pa'ter om'nium vivent'ium, Pria'pus, Vir'ga, V. vir'ilis, V. genita'lis, Ver'etrum, Sa'thē, Mem'brum vir'ilē seu semina'lē seu genita'lē viro'rum, Mo'rion, Cy'on, Sic'ula, Ten'tum, Has'ta, H. nuptia'lis, H. vir'ilis, Vas, Vas'culum, Pecu'lium, Vir'gula, Vir, Thyr'sus, Ten'sus, Ola'vus, Cau'da sa'lax, Cau'da, Fas'cinum, F. vir'ilē, Mu'to, Ner'vus, N. fistulo'sus seu fistula'ris seu juven'ilis, Per'tica per se, Sea'pus, Le'co, Curcu'lio, Ve'na, Con'tus, Te'lum, Gurgu'lio, Scep'trum, Ar'ma, Gla'dius, Lu'bricum, Ca'put, Muti'num, Pa'lus, Pes'sulus, Ra'dix, Ra'mus, Rutab'ulum, Ar'ma Ven'tris, Colum'na ad'stans inguin'ibus, Colum'na, Pyr'amis, Trabs, Sp'i'na, Catapul'ta vir'ilis, Ver'pa, Machæ'ra, Tau'rus, Pso'lē, Tur'tur; the Yard, Male organ, &c., (F.) Verge, Membre viril. This organ, the main use of which is to carry the seminal fluid into the female organs of generation, is cylindroid, long, and erectile, and situate before and beneath the symphysis pubis. In the ordinary state it is soft and pendent in front of the scrotum. During erection it becomes elongated, upright, and assumes a triangular shape. Its upper surface is called the Dorsum pe'nis, (F.) Dos de la verge; and at its anterior surface there is a longitudinal projection formed by the canal of the urethra. The two sides of the penis are round, and its posterior extremity or root is attached to the pelvis. Its anterior extremity is free, and presents the glans, prepuce, and orifice of the urethra. The penis is formed of the corpora cavernosa, the principal seat of erection; the corpus spongiosum of the urethra for the conveyance of the urine and sperm; and the glans, which terminates the canal. The Arteries of the penis are branches of the internal pudic. The Veins correspond with the arteries. The Nerves are from the internal pudic.

Pe'NIS CER'EBRI, Pineal gland.

Pe'NIS, CLUB, or CLUBBED. A permanent incurvation or bending of the penis backwards towards the scrotum, which is remedied by the removal of a V-shaped piece from the corpora cavernosa. See Kyllosis.

PE'NIS, FACTIT'IOUS, Dildo—p. Femineus, Clitoris—p. Lipodermus, Paraphimosis—p. Muliebris, Clitoris—p. Succedaneus, Dildo—p. Suspensory ligament of, see Suspensory.

Peni'tis, (penis, and itis,) A hybrid word, denoting inflammation of the penis.

Penna'tus, Penniform.

Pen'niform, Penniformis, Penna'tus, (penna, 'a pen,' and forma, 'form,') An epithet for muscles whose fleshy fibres are inserted at the side of a middle tendon, like the feathers of a pen on their common stalk. When on one side of the tendon they are called simple or single penniform; when on both sides, double penniform.

Pennsylva'nia, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The most valuable springs of this State are those of Bedford, Gettysburg, and Minnequa. There are sulphur springs at York, in Adams Co., at Carlisle, Cumberland Co., and a chalybeate spring at Cresson, in Cambria Co. See Gettysburg, Bedford, and Minnequa. Springs at Ephrata, Yellow Springs, &c., have also been frequented.

Pen'nycross, Thlaspi.

Pensaco'la, see Saint Augustine.

Pensée, Viola tricolor—p. Sauvage, Viola tricolor.

Pen'sile, Pen'silis, (from pendere, 'to hang,') Applied to tumors which hang by small roots.

Pensil'ia, (pendere, 'to hang down,') Pudibilia.

Pen'sy, Viola tricolor.

Pen'ta, (πεντε, 'five,') in composition, five.

Pentam'ylon, (penta, and μυρον, 'ointment,') An ancient ointment, consisting of five ingredients, storax, mastich, wax, opobalsamum, and unguentum nardinum.

Pentaphar'macon, (penta, and φάρμακον, 'remedy,') Any medicine consisting of five ingredients.

Pentaphyl'lum, (πενταφυλλον, from penta, and φυλλον, 'a leaf,') Potentilla reptans.

Pentas'toma Constrictum, see Parasites—p. Denticulatum, see Parasites.

Pen'tateuch, (Surg'ical,) Pentateuchus, (πεντατευχος, from penta, and τευχος, 'a book,') which signifies the five books of Moses—Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy. By analogy, some surgeons have given the name Surgical Pentateuch to the division of external diseases into five classes:—wounds, ulcers, tumors, luxations, and fractures.

Pentath'etum, (penta, and τιθημι, 'I place,') An ancient plaster consisting of five ingredients.

Pen'ula, ('a cover,') Ingluvies.

Penzance', Cli'mate of. This is the chief residence of invalids in Cornwall, England, during the winter. It is situate on Mount's Bay, about ten miles from the Land's End. It is 54° warmer in winter than in London, 2° colder in summer; scarcely 1° warmer in the spring, and only about 2½° warmer in the autumn. It is a very favorable winter residence for the phthisical invalid.

Pe'ony, Pæonia.

Pe'os, (πῶς,) Penis.

Peot'omy, Peotom'ia, (from peos, and τομή, 'incision,') Amputation of the penis.

Pepan'sis, (πῆπαισις, from πῆπαινω, 'I mature,') Coction, Maturation.

Pepan'ticus, (πῆπαντικός,) Maturative.

Pepas'mus, (πῆπασμος,) Coction, Maturation.

Pepas'tic, Pepas'ticus, Pep'tic, Pep'ticus, (F.) Pépastique, Peptique. A medicine supposed to have the power of favoring the concoction of diseases. Maturative.

Pepi'rus, (πεπίρος,) Concocted.

Pep'eri, (πεπίρι,) Piper.

Pepino (S.). A cucurbitacea, which is cultivated in great abundance in the fields of Peru. The pulp or edible part is solid, juicy, and well flavored; but is apt to disagree with the stomach.

Pe'po, (πεπων,) Cucurbita pepo—p. Lagenarius, Cucurbita lagenaria—p. Vulgaris, Cucurbita pepo.

Pep'per, (πεπρι,) Piper — p. African, Capsicum annuum — p. Black, Piper nigrum — p. Bush, sweet, Clethra alnifolia — p. Cayenne, Capsicum annuum — p. Chilly, Capsicum annuum — p. Cubed, Piper cubeba — p. Decorticated, Fulton's, see Piper nigrum — p. Guinea, Capsicum annuum — p. Jamaica, Myrtus pimento — p. Japanese, Fagara piperita — p. Long, Piper longum.

PEP'PER, MALAGUET'TA. This term has been applied to the fruit or seeds of several zingiberaceous plants, as well as to the pimento. It is usually considered to be synonymous with Grana Paradisi, Grains of Paradise, and Grana Guineensis, Guinea Grains.

Pep'permint, Mentha piperita—p. Water, Aqua menthae piperitæ.

Pep'perwort, Lepidium.

Pep'sin, Pepsin, Pepsin, Chymosin, Digestive Principle, (F.) Gastrase, (from πepsis, 'coction,' 'digestion,') A peculiar organic matter, which, in combination with the gastric acids, is considered to form the proper digestive solvent. Its chemical constitution is unknown. It would appear that its presence is necessary to induce changes in the elements of the food, which may enable the gastric acids to exert their proper action on them. One mode of obtaining it is by opening and reversing rennet bags—the fourth stomachs of ruminant animals—and washing them under a thin stream of cold water; scraping off the mucous membrane; reducing it to a pulp, and macerating it in distilled water for twelve hours; filtering, and adding to the liquor a sufficient quantity of acetate of lead; collecting the precipitate, and passing through it a current of sulphuretted hydrogen; filtering again; evaporating at a low temperature, and powdering the dry residue. Pepsin has been given in dyspepsia. A form of it, under the name Poudre nutritive ou nutritive, has been much used. A wine of pepsin has been made of calves' rennets, 3, sherry, Oij., alcohol, Oss. The rennets are washed clean, cut up, and macerated for fourteen days in the wine, shaking often. The alcohol is then added. Dose, a teaspoonful immediately after eating. Solution of pepsin has frequently been called artificial gastric juice. The digestive power of the natural gastric juice demands the presence of both pepsin and acid, and a temperature of 100°; neither can digest alone.

Bondault's pep'sin is a popular French preparation, which has also been extensively employed in this country.

Saccharated pep'sin is damp pepsin triturated with sugar of milk to a fine powder.

Liquid pep'sin is made by adding saccharated pepsin to water, muriatic acid, and glycerin; also, by macerating the mucous membrane of a hog's stomach, in glycerin, water, and muriatic acid.

Pep'sinum, Pepsin.

Pep'sis, (πepsis,) Coction, Digestion.

Pep'tic, Pep'ticus, (πεπτικός, 'I digest,') Pepas'tic. An agent that promotes digestion, or is digestive. Also, applied adjectively to an article of food that is easy of digestion. Certain articles, or condiments, are sometimes called 'peptic persuaders.'

PEP'TIC GLANDS, see Stomach.

PEP'TIC PERSUADER, see Pilulae aloës et kinæ kinæ.

Pep'tone, Pep'tonum, (from πεπτω, 'I digest,') A presumed definite combination between the solvent fluid in the stomach and albuminous matters received into the organ as aliments. The same as Albuminose. Metapep'tone is an intermediate stage between syntonin or parapeptone and peptone.

Per, 'by or through,' in composition. It often, also, gives intensity to the signification.

Peraceph'alus, (per, and ἀκεφαλος, 'acephalous,') (F.) Péracéphale. A genus of monsters, comprising one of the most extensive groups of the teratological series, characterized by a sufficiently regular form of the body, by the absence of upper extremities, and by the thorax being more imperfect than in acephali, or even completely null. The essential conditions, consequently, in their degree of anomaly pass 'beyond' the true type of the acephalous monster.

Peracu'tus, Catoxys.

Perarticula'tio, Diarthrosis.

Peratodyn'ia, (πνρα, 'a pouch for provisions, a stomach,' and ὀδυνή, 'pain,') Cardialgia.

Perce-crane, (percer, 'to pierce,' and crane, 'cranium,') Perforator.

Perce-feuille, (percer, 'to pierce,' and feuille, 'a leaf,') Bupleurum rotundifolium.

Perce-mousse, (percer, 'to pierce,' and mousse, 'moss,') Polytrichum.

Perce-muraille, (percer, 'to pierce,' and muraille, 'a wall,') Parietaria.

Perce-pierre, (percer, 'to pierce,' and pierre, 'a stone,') Crithmum maritimum.

Percep'ta, (percipere, perceptum, — per, and capio, — 'to perceive,' 'receive,') A word used by some writers on hygiene to indicate, in a general manner, the effects of the nervous action on the animal economy: in other words, the sensations, the functions of the mind, and their deterioration or privation.

Perceptibil'ity, see Sensibility.

Percep'tion, Percep'tio. The appreciation which the brain has of an impression made upon an organ of sense.

Perceptiv'ity. The power of perception.

Per'colate, see Percolation.

Percola'tio, (percolare, percolatum, — per, and colare, — 'to strain through,') Filtration, Percolation.

Percola'tion, Percola'tio. The terms percolation and displacement are applied, in Pharmacy, to an operation of filtration, which consists in placing any substance, the virtues of which have to be extracted by a menstruum, in a funnel-shaped instrument, having a septum perforated with holes, or its tube stuffed with cotton or tow, and pouring fresh portions of the menstruum upon it until all its virtues have been extracted. The first portion of the filtered liquor is called the per'colate. The operation is used in the formation of certain infusions, extracts, tinctures, &c. See Ph. U. S., 1873.

An instrument used for this purpose is called a displacer or percolator.

Per'colator, see Percolation.

Percuss', Percu'terē, — (per, and quaterē, 'to strike,') (F.) Percuter, Frapper. To strike upon, with the view of appreciating the resulting sound. To practise percussion.

Percus'sion, Epicron'sis, Percus'sio. When immediate or direct percussion is made on the chest or abdomen, the more or less perfect resonance is an index of the state of the contained organs; and the physician is thus aided in his diagnosis. For this purpose the part may be struck with the fingers, gathered into a bundle, and their tips placed upon a level. Frequently, however, resort is had to mediate percussion, which consists in interposing, between the point of the fingers and the part, the finger of the other hand, or a pleximeter, and striking this instead of the naked chest.

PERCUS'SION, AUSCULT'ATORY, see Acouphonia.

Percuter, Percuss.

Percuteur Courbe à Marteau (F.), ('curved hammer percussor.') An instrument used by Baron Heurteloup in the operation of lithotripsy, in which a hammer is employed instead of a screw, to force together the blades of the instrument on the foreign body.

Perdo'nium. A medicated wine of herbs.

Perei'ra, Geissospermum Vellozii, Pereira.

Perei'ria or Perei'ra Med'ica, (after Dr. Jonathan Pereira, an eminent English pharmacologist,) Menispermum fenestratum, (Ceyl.) Womival, Venivel, Bangucellgetta. Nat. Ord. Menispermaceae. A Ceylonese plant. An infusion of the root is considered by the Cingalese to be an excellent stomachic.

Perei'rine, see Geissospermum Vellozii.

Perete'rium, (περητηριον, from περαιω, 'I bore,') Trepan.

Pereto'rium, Trepan.

Per'forans, (perforare,—per, and forare,—'to bore through,') A name given to different muscles, whose tendons pass through intervals between the fibres or tendons of other muscles; thence called perforated. See Flexor longus digitorum, &c. Under the name Perforating arteries, are included, 1. In the hand—arterial branches, given off by the profound palmar arch, which traverse the muscles and interosseous spaces. 2. In the thigh—three or four arteries, furnished by the profunda, which pass through the openings of the abductor magnus. 3. In the foot—the anterior and superior branches of the plantar arch.

PER'FORANS CASSE'RII, see Cutaneous—p. Manûs, Flexor profundus perforans—p. Profundus, Flexor longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans.

Per'forated Mem'brane, see Artery—p. Space or Spot, Locus perforatus.

Per'forating Ar'teries, see Perforans—p. Ulcer of the foot, Dermosynovitis, ulcerating.

Perfora'tio, Perforation—p. Cranii, see Perforator—p. Intestinorum, Enterobrosis—p. Ventriculi, Gastrobrosis.

Perfora'tion, Perfora'tio, (perforare, perforatum, 'to bore through,') Anatre'sis, Diatre'sis. An accidental opening in the continuity of organs, either from an external or internal cause.

PERFORA'TION, Paracentesis—p. de l'Estomac, Gastrobrosis—p. des Intestins, Enterobrosis—p. Uterus, Uterus, rupture of the.

Per'forator, Perforato'rium, (F.) Percecrâne. An instrument for perforating osseous structures or for opening the head of the foetus in utero, when it is necessary to diminish its size. The operation is called Cephalotomia, Perfora'tio cranii. The perforator most commonly used is Smellie's Scis'sors, which present a spear point when the handles are closed; with cutting edges at the sides and exterior, which act when the handles are separated.

Perforato'rium, Perforator.

Perfora'tus, (F.) Perforé. That which is pierced. Anatomists have given this name to muscles whose fibres or tendons separate to suffer other parts to pass through them. Such are the Flexor brevis digitorum pedis, F. sublimis perforatus, and Coracobrachialis. Also, to parts that are perforated for any purpose—as the substantia perforata of the brain.

PERFORA'TUS CASSE'RII, Coracobrachialis.

Perfrica'tio, (per, and fricare, fricatum, 'to rub,') see Iatralaptee.

Perfric'tio, Perfrige'rium, Catapysx'is, Peripsyx'is, (perfrigere, perfric'tum,—per, and frigere, —'to shiver with cold,') Considerable refrigeration. Great sense of cold:—shivering.

Perfrigera'tio, see Rigor.

Perfrige'rium, Perfrictio.

Perfu'sio, (perfundere, perfusum,—from per, and fundere,—'to pour over,') Fomentation—p. Frigida, see Affusion.

Per'i, περι, 'about, on all sides, round about; also, an augmentative prefix.

Periadeni'tis, (peri, and αδην, 'a gland,') Inflammation of the surroundings of a gland, as the cellular tissue, &c.

Periære'sis, (peri, and αιρω, 'I take away,') A sort of circular incision, which the ancients made in the neighborhood of large abscesses. The periære'sis is now only practised in some cases of tumors.

Perial'gia, (peri, and αλγος, 'pain,') A very violent pain.

Periam'ma, gen. Periam'matis, (περιαμμα, from περι, and απτεω, 'to hang,') Amuletum.

Peria'nal, (peri, and anus,) Periproctie.

Periangeio'ma, (peri, and αγγειον, 'a vessel,') A new growth around a vessel, occupying its outermost structures.

Periap'ton, (περιαπτος, 'hung around,') Amuletum.

Periarteri'tis, (from peri, and arteritis, 'inflammation of an artery,') Inflammation of the sheath of an artery.

Periarthri'tis, (peri, αρθρον, 'joint, and itis,) Inflammation of the tissues,—cellular and adipose tissues, &c.,—surrounding a joint.

Per'iblast, Per'iplast, (F.) Périblaste, (peri, and βλαστος, 'a germ,') The amorphous matter which surrounds the endoblast, endoplast, (F.) Endoblaste, or cell nucleus, and undergoes segmentation.

Perible'ma, gen. Perible'matis, (περιβλημα, from peri, and βαλλω, 'I throw,') Catablema.

Periblep'sis, (περιβλεψις, from peri, and βλεπω, 'I look,') The wild look that accompanies delirium.

Perib'olē, (περιβολη, from peri, and βαλλω, 'I throw,') The dress of a person. The pericardium. Also, the translation of morbid matter towards the surface of the body.

Peribro'sis, (περιβρωσις,—περι, and βρωσκω, 'I eat,')—'I eat around,') Ulceration or erosion at the corners of the eyelids.

Pericæ'cal, Pericæca'tis, (peri, and cæcum,) That which surrounds the cæcum; hence, 'pericæcal abscess.'

Pericar'diac, Pericar'dic, Pericar'dial, Pericar'diacus, Pericar'dicus, (F.) Péricardique. Relating to the pericardium,—as 'pericardial murmur,' 'pericardial effusion,' 'pericardial arteries, veins,' &c.

Pericar'dial, Pericardiac.

Pericardique, Pericardiac.

Pericardi'tis, gen. Pericardi'tidis, Perikardi'tis, (pericardium, and itis,) Inflammat'io seu Pleuri'tis pericar'dii, Cardi'tis exter'na seu sero'sa seu membrano'sa, Exocardi'tis, Inflammat'io of the pericardium, (F.) Péricardite, Inflammat'ion du Péricarde. This is probably the proper appellation for most of those cases which have received the names Cardi'tis, Cardiopericardi'tis, Cardopericardi'tis, and Cardipericardi'tis. Along with signs of pyrexia, the local symptoms resemble those of pneumonia. Those which point out that the pericardium is the seat of disease are the following:—pain, referred to the region of the heart, or the scrobiculus cordis,—sometimes pungent, at others, dull and heavy; palpitation, accompanied with spasmodic twitchings in the neighborhood of the heart, shooting up to the left shoulder; pulsation, and sometimes soreness of the carotids, with tinnitus aurium and vertigo; the breathing is by catches; dyspnœa considerable; pulse jarring, jerking, peculiar; the tongue white, covered with a mucous coat, and the skin often bathed in sweat, as in acute rheumatism. The physical signs during the first period are as follows. The action of the heart is generally evident to the eye, and may be felt by the hand. There is soreness to the touch over the intercostal spaces, and over a small surface in the epigastric region, when the pressure is directed upwards towards the pericardium. Percussion is usually natural, but at times there is dulness. On auscultation, the cardiac movements are found to be frequent, abrupt, jerking, and tumultuous; often irregular and intermittent. The pulse presents corresponding characters. When effusion of lymph has occurred, percussion may be negative, or be but slightly affected. On auscultation, in addition to the preceding signs, there may be one or more of the rubbing or friction sounds resembling the rustling of parchment, or of a sawing or rasping character. In some cases, the sound is like the creaking of new leather. This has been supposed to be pathognomonic of effused lymph. The most important point in the pathology of pericarditis is its connection with acute rheumatism; and it forms one of the most dangerous occurrences in the latter disease. It may be acute or chronic; in either case, it is, of course, formidable. The most active depletion must be used; with large doses of opium, counterirritants, and all the means required in the most violent internal inflammations.

PERICARDI'TIS EXSUDATO'RIA SANGUINOLEN'TA, Hæmopericardium.

Pericard'ium, Pericar'dion, (peri, and καρδία 'heart,') Perib'olē, Membra'na Cor circumplex'a, Involu'crum seu Ar'cula seu Cap'sa seu Cap'sula seu Cam'era seu Indumen'tum seu Pannic'ulus seu Membra'na seu The'ca seu Sac'cus seu Sac'culus seu Sero'tum seu Vagi'na seu Vesi'ca seu Ar'ca seu Thal'amus rega'lis seu Amphic'e'na seu Bur'sa Cor'dis, Sac or Cap'sule of the Heart, (F.) Périorde. The pericardium is a membranous sac, which envelops the heart, and the arterial and venous trunks that pass from or into it. It is seated in the separation of the mediastinum, above the central aponeurosis of the diaphragm, to which it strongly adheres. Its shape is triangular, like that of the heart, to which it is fitted. The pericardium is composed of two membranes:—the one—external—fibrous; the other—internal—serous. The latter, having lined the inner surface of the external layer, is reflected over the heart, and covers it entirely,—Epicar'dium, (F.) Épicarde,—without, however, having the heart within it; in which arrangement it resembles other serous membranes. The pericardium retains the heart in position, and facilitates its movement by means of the serous fluid contained in its cavity—Ca'vum pericar'dii—and secreted by the membrane—Li'quor seu A'qua seu Hu'mor seu Lym'pha seu Uri'na Pericar'dii, Hydrocar'dia.

The arteries of the pericardium are small, and derived from the superior phrenic, anterior mediastinal and bronchial. The veins accompany them, and open into the brachiocephalic. No nerves have been traced to it. The lymphatics enter the lymphatic glands that surround the vena cava superior.

Pericar'pium, (περικαρπιον, from peri, and καρπος, 'fruit,') Epicar'pium.

Perichol'ia, (peri, and χολη, 'bile,') Polycholia.

Perichondri'tis, gen. Perichondri'tidis, (Inflam'matio perichon'drii, (perichondrium, and itis.) Inflammation of the perichondrium: hence Perichondri'tis larynge'a, inflammation of the perichondrium covering the larynx.

Perichon'drium, (F.) Périchondre, (peri, and χονδρος, 'a cartilage,') A membrane of a fibrous nature, which covers cartilages that are non-articular, and bears considerable analogy to the periosteum in organization and uses.

Perichoroi'dal, Perichoroi'deal. Surrounding the choroid, as perichoroidal space.

Perich'risis, (περιχρσις, from peri, and χρσις, 'I anoint,') Circumlitio, Liniment.

Perichris'ton, Circumlitio, Liniment.

Perio'lasis, (περικλασις, (peri, and κλαω, 'I break,') A comminuted fracture, with denudation of the bone.

Pericly'menum, (περικλυμενον,) Lonicera periclymenum—p. Vulgare, Lonicera periclymenum.

Perione'mia, (peri, and κημη, 'the leg,') The parts surrounding the tibia;—the tibia itself.

Pericoloni'tis, gen. Pericoloni'tidis, (Pericoli'tis, (peri, and colonitis.) Inflammation of the areolar tissue surrounding the colon.

Pericolpi'tis, gen. Pericolpi'tidis, (peri, κολπος, 'vagina,' and itis.) Inflammation of the areolar tissue surrounding the vagina.

Pericranio'ede'ma, gen. Pericranio'ede'matis, (pericranium, and οιδημα, 'a swelling,') Œdema of the head, owing to fluid effused under the pericranium.

Pericra'nium, Pericra'nion, Periera'nia, (F.) Péricrane, (peri, and κρανον, 'the cranium,') The periosteum, which covers the cranium externally.

Pericyst'itis, gen. Pericysti'tidis, (peri, and cystitis.) Inflammation of the areolar tissue separating the bladder from the neighboring parts.

Perider'ia, (peri, and δερη, the neck.) Twisting of the cord round the neck of the child.

Perides'mic, Perides'micus, (F.) Peridesmique, (peri, and δεσμος, 'a ligament,') Some nosologists have given this name to ischuria caused by a ligature round the penis or by stricture of the urethra.

Perides'mium. The delicate areolar tissue covering a ligament.

Peridias'tolē, see Diastole.

Pérididyme, (peri, and διδυμος, 'testicle,') See Testicle.

Perididymi'tis, (F.) Pérididymite, (peri, διδυμος, 'testicle,' and itis.) Inflammation of the tunica albuginea testis.

Perid'romus, (περιδρομος, from peri, and δρομος, 'a course,') The extreme circumference of the hairs of the head.

Periencephalite, Periencephalitis.

Periencephali'tis, (peri, and εγκεφαλος,) (F.) Periencephalite. Inflammation of the structures immediately surrounding the encephalon.

Periglot'tis, (peri, and γλωττα, 'tongue,') Epiglottic gland. See Tongue.

Perig'raphē, (περιγραφη,—περι, and γραφω,—'I write,' 'circumscription,') The aponeurotic intersections of the rectus abdominis are so called.

Perihepati'tis, gen. Perihepati'tidis, (peri, and hepatitis.) See Hepatitis.

Perihyster'ic, (peri, and υστερα, 'the uterus,') Periuterine.

Perikardi'tis, Pericarditis.

Perilaryngi'tis, gen. Perilaryngi'tidis, (peri, and laryngitis.) Inflammation of the areolar tissue surrounding the larynx, which not unfrequently ends in perilaryngeal abscess.

Per'ilymph, Cotunnus, liquor of.

Perilymphangei'tis, (peri, lymphangia, 'a lymphatic vessel,' and itis.) Inflammation of the connective tissue around a lymphatic vessel.

Perimeningi'tis, gen. Perimeningi'tidis, (peri, and meningitis.) Pachymeningitis.

Perime'ninx, gen. Perimenin'gis, (peri, and μηνιξ, 'a membrane,') Dura mater.

Perimetrit'ic, Perimetrit'icus. Relating or appertaining to perimetritis.

Perimetri'tis, (peri, and metritis.) Inflammation of the peritoneum connected with the uterus. See Parametritis.

Perimy'elis, (peri, and μυελος, 'marrow,') Medullary membrane.

Perimyeli'tis, gen. Perimyeli'tidis, (peri, and myelitis.) Meningitis, spinal.

Perimys'ium, Fas'cia, (peri, and μυς, 'a muscle,') The areolar membrane or sheath—epi'na muscula'ris—that surrounds a muscle, or its fasciculi. The sheath of the whole muscle is termed Perimysium exter'num; of the fasciculi, Perimysium inter'num.

Pe'rin, Pe'ris, (περιν, περα, 'a sac or pouch.') With some this means the scrotum; with others, the testicle; with others, the vagina; with others, the peritoneum; and with others, the anus.

Perinæocœ'lē, (perinæum, and κηλη, 'rupture.') Hernia, perineal.

Perinæorrhaph'ia, Perinæor'rhap'hy, (perinæum, and ραφή, 'suture.') Suture of the perinæum, (F.) Suture du Périnée, in cases of laceration of the same.

Perinæ'um, (περιν, gen. περινος, 'the scrotum' [?],) Interfemin'eum, Interfæmin'eum, Interfæmin'ium, Interfæmina, I'ter femin'eum, Pe'ris, Pe'rin, Perine'um, Gressu'ra, Plé'chas, Am'phiplex, Mesos'celon, Mesos'celus, Perine'on, Perinæ'os, Perine'os, Tra'mē, Tra'mis, Tau'rus, Interforamine'um, Co'cho'nē, Plé'chos, Mesom'e'ron, Fæ'men, Re'gio Perinæ'i, (F.) Périnée. The space at the inferior region of the trunk, between the ischiatic tuberosities, anus, and genital organs. It is smaller in the female than in the male; has a triangular shape, and is divided into two equal parts by a median line called Ra'phē. It is occasionally ruptured in labor. At times it has been made to extend posteriorly as far as the os coccygis. The part between the pudendum and anus is sometimes called ante'rior perinæ'um, to distinguish it from that which extends from the anus to the coccyx, called poste'rior perinæ'um.

Perinæ'us, Perineal.

Perine'al, Perinæ'us, Perinæ'al'is, Perine'al'is. That which relates or belongs to the perinæum, as Perineal artery, P. hernia, &c.

PERINE'AL APONEURO'SIS, P. Fascia.

PERINE'AL AR'TERY, Ar'teria perinæ'al'is, Superficio'ial ar'tery of the Perinæ'um. A branch of the internal pudic distributed to the perinæum.

PERINE'AL BODY. A term applied to designate a sort of fusing together of perineal structures by a great accession of elastic tissue, at a point midway between the posterior vulvar commissure and the anus, thus forming a highly elastic and resistant structure or body.

PERINE'AL CUTA'NEOUS NERVE, see Sciatic nerve, lesser.

PERINE'AL FAS'CIA, Fas'cia perinæ'i, Perine'al aponeuro'sis. The fascia,—superficial and deep-seated,—Perine'al lig'ament—Cam'per's lig'ament, Triangular lig'ament,—which belong to the perinæum.

In the anterior half of the perinæum, beneath the subcutaneous fat, is a special layer of fascia continuous with the dartos. It is the proper superficial perineal fascia, sometimes called Fas'cia of Colles.

PERINE'AL FOS'SA, Fos'sa perinæ'i, Ischiorec'tal fossa. A conical fossa, the base of which corresponds with the skin; is formed anteriorly by the transversus perinæi muscle; behind, by the inferior border of the glutæus maximus; internally, by the levator ani; and externally, by the tuber ischii. It is filled up with fat and fibrous stræ.

PERINE'AL ISCHU'RIA, Ischu'ria Perine'al'is. A name given by Sauvages to retention of urine, caused by a tumor seated in the perinæum.

PERINE'AL LIG'AMENT, see P. fascia.

PERINE'AL NERVE. A branch of the internal pudic, which is mainly distributed to the perinæum and scrotum of the male, and to the vulva and perinæum of the female.

PERINE'AL RE'GION, Perinæum.

PERINE'AL SEC'TION, Sec'tio perine'al'is. An incision into the perinæum for the cure of stricture of the urethra.

Périnée, Perinæum.

Perineocœ'lē, see Hernia.

Perineor'rhap'hy, Perinæorrhaphia.

Perine'osyn'thesis, (perinæum, and συνθεσις, 'placing together.') An operation devised by Langenbeck for relief of ruptured perinæum.

Perineovag'inal. Relating to the perinæum and vagina, as Perineovaginal fistula.

Perineph'ric, (peri, and νεφρος, 'kidney,') Relating to the surroundings of the kidney, as perinephric abscess, which is not necessarily dependent on perinephritis.

Perinephrit'ic, (peri, νεφρος, 'kidney,' and ιτις, 'Relating or appertaining to perinephritis, as perinephritic abscess, an abscess dependent especially on inflammation of the tissues surrounding the kidney.

Perinephrit'is, gen. Perinephrit'idis, (F.) Phlegmon perinéphrétique, (peri, and nephritis.) Inflammation of the external areolar and fibrous membranes of the kidney, or of their investing adipose areolar tissue.

Perineph'rus, (peri, and νεφρος, 'kidney,') See Kidney.

Perine'um, Perinæum.

Perineur'ion, (peri, and νευρον, 'a nerve,') Neurilemma.

Perineur'ium, Neurilemma—p. of the Brain, Neuroglia.

Périnée, Neurilemma.

Perinyc'tides, pl. of Perinyc'tis, (peri, and νύξ, gen. νυκτος, 'night,') An eruption appearing at night and disappearing by day.

Pe'riod, (περιόδος,) Peri'odus, Periodei'a, Perioden'sis, Stad'ium, Circu'itus, (F.) Période, (peri, and ὁδός, 'way,') Cir'cuit. Periods are the different phases or revolutions of a disease; or the epochs which are distinguishable in the course of it. Three periods are commonly enumerated. 1. The augmentation, increase, or progress, (Incrementum;) 2. The ac'mē or height (Stad'us), (F.) État; and 3. The decline (Decrementum). Some authors reckon only the invasion and termination.

Period is sometimes used in describing an intermittent, for the time between the commencement of a paroxysm and that of the next, including the fit as well as the interval.

PERIODS, MONTH'LY, Menses.

Periodei'a, (περιόδεα,) Periód.

Perioden'sis, Period.

Perioden'tes, (περιόδευτες, from peri, and ὅδεω, 'I travel,') Charlatan.

Period'ical, see Periodicity.

Periodic'ity, Periodic'itas, Rhythm, (F.) Périodicité. The aptitude of certain physiological or pathological phenomena, in health or disease, to recur at particular periods, after longer or shorter intervals, during which they cease completely. Diseases thus recurring are called period'ical or rhythm'ical,—Pypo'ses.

Periodol'ogy, Periodolog'ia, (περιόδος, 'period,' and λόγος, 'a discourse,') The doctrine of periodicity in health and disease.

Periodon'tal, (peri, and ὀδός, ὀδοντος, 'a tooth,') Surrounding a tooth; as periodontal membrane, dent'al perios'teum, a fibro-vascular membrane, analogous to a periosteum, and itself united to the periosteal membrane lining the sockets.

Periodonti'tis, gen. Periodonti'ditis, (F.) Périodontite, Inflammation de la Membrane alvéolo-dentaire, (peri, ὀδός, gen. ὀδοντος, 'a tooth,' and ιτις, 'Inflammation of the membrane that lines the socket of a tooth.

PERIODONTI'TIS GINGIVA'RUM, Ullitis.

Period'oscope, (περιόδος, 'period,' and σκοπεω, 'I view,') An instrument, proposed by Dr. Tyler Smith, for the ready calculation of the periodical functions of the sex. It consists of a movable circular dial, upon which the months and days are engraved, fixed on a pivot in the centre of a large plate on which are numbered the different conditions of the reproductive system, as conception, abortion, premature labor, hemorrhage, labor, &c. By a knowledge of the date of conception, say November 14th, and fixing the movable plate opposite the point on the fixed plate which indicates conception, the observer is enabled at once to see that, allowing 280 days for gestation, labor may be expected about the 20th of August. The dial is made of cardboard, and is affixed to a small volume, in which its uses and applications are explained.

Peri'odus Luna'ris, 'a lunar period,' see Menses—p. Morbi, Type—p. Sanguinis, Circulation.

Periodyn'ia, (peri, and odyn, 'pain.') A violent and extensive pain.

Per'ion, (peri, and ovon, 'ovum.') Decidua.

Perio'phori'tis, see Parametritis.

Perior'bita, Perios'teum or'bite, (F.) Périorbite, (peri, and orbita, 'the orbit.') An appellation used by some for the periosteum lining the orbit, which is a continuation of the dura mater. The inflammation of this periosteum is termed Periorbitis or Periorbititis, and Inflamma'tio perios'tei or'bite.

Periorbi'tis, gen. Periorbitidis, (periorbita, and itis.) See Periorbita.

Periorbiti'tis, gen. Periorbititis, see Periorbita.

Perioste'i'tis, gen. Periosteitis, Periostitis.

Perioste'o'ma, (peri, and osteon, 'bone,') Os'teoid Chondro'ma, Perioste'osis, (F.) Périostose. A tumor formed by periosteum, or a tissue resembling its deeper layer, which becomes transformed into bone by the cells taking the shape of bone-cells and the matrix calcifying. These tumors are more rapidly developed, have a less degree of consistence, and sooner disperse than exostoses, which they resemble greatly.

Perios'teophyte, (periosteum, and φυω, 'I grow.') An osseous formation commencing in the periosteum.

Periosteot'omy, Periosteotomy, (periosteum, and τομή, 'incision.') The operation of dividing the periosteum.

Perios'teum, (περιοστεον.) Perios'teon, Perios'teos, Perios'tium, Circumossa'lē, Membra'na os'sis, Omen'tum os'sium, Circumossa'lis Membra'na, (F.) Périoste, (peri, and osteon, 'a bone.') The periosteum is a fibrous, white, resisting medium, which surrounds the bones everywhere, except the teeth at their coronæ, and the parts of bones that are covered with cartilage. The external surface is united in a more or less intimate manner to the neighboring parts by areolar tissue. Its inner surface covers the bone, whose depressions it accurately follows. It is united to the bone by small, fibrous prolongations, and especially by a prodigious quantity of vessels which penetrate their substance. The periosteum unites the bones to the neighboring parts. It assists in their growth, either by furnishing at its inner surface, as M. Béclard demonstrated, an albuminous exudation, which becomes cartilaginous, and at length ossifies, or by supporting the vessels which penetrate them to carry the materials of their nutrition. See Medullary membrane.

PERIOS'TEUM, ALVE'OLO-DEN'TAL, see Alveolar.

PERIOS'TEUM, DEN'TAL, see Alveolar membrane, and Periodontal.

PERIOS'TEUM INTER'NUM, Medullary membrane—p. Orbita, Periorbita.

Perios'tic, Perios'ticus, (F.) Périostique. Relating or appertaining to the periosteum, or to parts surrounding a bone.

Periosti'tis, gen. Periostitis, Perioste'i'tis, Inflamma'tio perios'tei, (periosteum, and itis.) Inflammation of the periosteum. When of a diffuse nature, accompanied by suppuration, it is called periosti'tis diffu'sa, acute subperios'teal abscess.

Perios'tomedulli'tis, gen. Perios'tomedulli'tidis, (F.) Périostomédullite, (periosteum, medulla, 'marrow,' and itis.) Simultaneous inflammation of the periosteum and medulla.

Periosto'sis, (peri, osteon, and osis.) Tumor of the periosteum. See Periosteoma.

Periostoste'i'tis, gen. Periostosteitis, (F.) Périostostéite, (periosteum, στέον, 'a bone,' and itis.) Simultaneous inflammation of the periosteum and bone.

Periph'acus, (peri, and φακος, 'lens.') See Crystalline.

Periph'erad, see Peripheral aspect.

Periph'er'al, Periph'er'ic or Periph'er'ic, Periph'er'ical, (peri, and φέρω, 'I bear.') Relating or appertaining to the periphery or circumference.

PERIPH'ERAL ANÆSTHES'IA. Anæsthesia of the cutaneous nerves.

PERIPH'ERAL AS'PECT. An aspect towards the circumference of an organ. Periph'erad is used adverbially to signify 'towards the peripheral aspect.'

PERIPH'ERAL VAS'CLAR SYS'TEM, Capillary system.

Periphimo'sis, Paraphimosis.

Periphlebi'tis, gen. Periphlebitis, (peri, and phlebitis, 'inflammation of a vein.') Inflammation of the sheath of a vein.

Per'iplast, (peri, and πλασσω, 'I form,') Peri-blast.

Peripleumo'nia, (περιπνευμονία.) Peripneumonia.

Peripleuri'tis, gen. Peripleuritis, (peri, and pleuritis.) Inflammation of the subserous areolar tissue of the costal pleura.

Perip'loca In'dica, (peri, and πλεκω, 'I twine,') Hemidesmus Indicus—p. Mauritiana, Scaumony, Bourbon.

Perip'lysis, (περιλυσίς, from peri, and λυσις, 'the act of washing,') Proflu'vium. A copious discharge from any part, especially from the bowels.

Peripneumo'nia, Peripleumo'nia, Peripneumoni'tis, True peripneumony, (περιπνευμονία, from peri, and πνευμων, 'the lung.') Inflammation of the substance of the lungs. See Pneumonia.

PERIPNEUMO'NIA BIL'IOSA. Inflammation of the lungs, accompanied with bilious fever.

PERIPNEUMO'NIA CATARRH'ALIS. Bronchitis or pulmonary catarrh, with pain in some part of the chest. Peripneumonia notha.

PERIPNEUMO'NIA NO'THA, P. spu'ria seu pituitosa seu catarrh'alis, Pneumo'nia no'tha, Pseu'doperipneumo'nia, Pseu'dopneumo'nia, Pseu'dopneumoni'tis, Bronchoc'act, Blennotho'rax, Obstruc'tio pulmo'num pituitosa febril'is, Bronchitis asthen'ica, False or Bastard Peripneumony, (F.) Péri-pneumonie bâtarde ou fausse, Fausse pneumonie. An inexact name, under which some affections are comprised that resemble pneumonia, and especially chronic bronchitis with pleurodynia. See Bronchitis, chronic.

PERIPNEUMO'NIA PITUITO'SA, P. notha.

Peripneumoni'tis, gen. Peripneumonitis, Peripneumonia.

Peripneu'mony, Pneumonia—p. Bastard, Peripneumonia notha.

PERIPNEU'MONY, LA'TENT. Peripneumony whose symptoms are so obscure as to be recognized with difficulty.

Periproct'ic, Periproct'icus, (F.) Périprouctique, (peri, and πρωκτος, 'anus.') Applied to organs or lesions around the anus.

Periprocti'tis, gen. Periproctitis, (peri, and πρωκτος, 'the anus,' and itis.) Inflammation of the areolar tissue surrounding the rectum.

Periprokti'tis, Periproctitis.

Periprostati'c, (peri, and prostate.) A term especially applied to abscesses situate around the prostate gland, periprostatic abscesses.

Peripsyx'is, (περιψυξις, from peri, and ψυξω, 'I become cold,') Catapsyxis, Perfrictio.

Peripye'ma, gen. Peripye'matis, (περιπυημα, from peri, and πυον, 'pus,') Suppuration around an organ—a tooth, for example.

Peripylephlebitis, gen. Peripylephlebitidis, (peri, and pylephlebitis, 'inflammation of the vena porta,') Inflammation of the connective tissue in immediate relation with the portal vein.

Perirrhœ'a, Perir'rhoë, (περιρροια, from peri, and ρρω, 'I flow,') Afflux of fluids from every point of the body towards an organ which has to remove them from the economy. Also, enuresis.

Pe'ris, (περις,) Perin.

Perisalpingi'tis, (peri, and σαλπιγξ, 'a trumpet,') See Parametritis.

Peris'celis, (peri, and σκελος, 'leg,') Jarretière.

Periscyphis'mus, Periscythismus.

Periscythis'mus, (περισκυθισμος,) Periscy'thisis, Periscy'tis'mus, Periscy'tisis, Periscy'phisis, Periscy'phismus, Scalp'ing, (περισκυθισμος, from peri, and Σκυθης, 'a Scythian,') that is, 'scalping after the manner of the Scythians,') An operation described by Paulus of Ægina. It consisted of an incision made around the cranium, and was employed in habitual weakness of the eyes, pains of the head, &c.

Perisphal'sis, Circumduc'tio, (from peri, and σφαλλω, 'I move,') A circular motion impressed on a luxated bone for the purpose of reducing it.

Perispleni'tis, gen. Perispleni'tidis, (peri, and splenis,) see Splenitis.

Perissodac'tylus, (περισσος, 'superabundant,') and δακτυλος, 'finger,') Polydactylus.

Peristal'tic, Peristalticus, (περισταλτικός, from peri, and στέλλω, 'I contract,') (F.) Péristaltique. Relating or appertaining to peristole—as 'peristaltic action,') See Systaltic.

Peristaphyli'nus Exter'nus, (peri, and σταφυλη, 'uvula,') Circumflexus musculus—p. Inferior, Circumflexus musculus—p. Internus, Levator palati.

Peris'tera An'ceps, (περιστέρα, 'a pigeon,') Pelargonium anceps.

Perister'ium, (περιστερειον,) Verbena officinalis.

Perister'na, (peri, and στεριον, 'the sternum,') The lateral parts of the chest.

Peris'tolē, (περιστολη,) Mo'tus Peristalticus seu compressorius seu vermicularis seu testudin'eus, (from peri, and στέλλω, 'I contract,') The peristaltic action of the intestines, Mo'tus peristalticus, (F.) Mouvement ou Action péristaltique. It consists of a kind of undulation or vermicular movement, in appearance irregular, but in which the circular fibres of the muscular membrane of the intestine contract successively, from above downwards, in proportion as the chyme advances in the alimentary canal; so that, being compressed above, it is pushed into the next portion of the intestine, whose fibres are in a state of relaxation. When the fibres contract inversely, they occasion an antiperistaltic action. The peristaltic action is involuntary, and is not under the immediate influence of either brain or spinal marrow. It continues for some time after death.

Peristom'ium, (περιστομιον, from peri, and στομα, 'mouth,') see Mouth.

Peristro'ma, gen. Peristro'matis, Mus'cus vill'osus, Crus'ta membrana'cea seu vermicularis, (περιστρομα, 'a coverlet,') from peri, and σπρυννμι, 'I spread,') The villous or mucous coat of the intestines.

Perisys'tolē, (peri, and συστολη, 'contraction,') The interval that exists between the systole and diastole of the heart, which is only perceptible in the dying.

Perite'ri'on, (peri, and τερειν, terere, 'to rub, to drill,') Trépan perforatif.

Perites'tis, (peri, and testis,) Albuginea.

Perithe'lium, Vas'cular, Exter'nal Vas'cular Epithe'lium. A nucleated membrane forming the outer covering of the larger-sized capillaries.

Péritoine, Peritonæum.

Perit'omé, (περιτομη, from peri, and τομη, 'incision,') Circumcision.

Perit'omy. See Syndectomy.

Peritonærex'is, Peritonæorex'is, (peritonæum, and ρηγνυμι, 'I break out,') Hernia formed by the rupture of the peritonæum.

Peritonæ'um, (περιτοναειον, περιτοναειον, περιτοναειον,) Peritonæ'um, Peritonæ'on, Peritonæi'on, Peritonæ'os, Peritonæ'on, Peritonæ'os, Velamen'tum abdomina'lē, Tu'nica præten'sa seu Operimen'tum præten'sum seu Membra'na abdom'inis, Pa'gos, Si'phac, Sy'phac, Ze'pach, Zi'phac, (F.) Péritoine, (peri, and τεινω, 'I stretch,') A serous membrane, which lines the abdominal cavity, Peritonæ'um parietal'ē, extends over the greater part of the organs contained there, Peritonæ'um intestinal'ē seu viscera'lē, envelops them wholly or in part, and maintains their respective relations by means of different prolongations and ligamentous folds:—the mesentery, epiploon, mesocolon, &c. Like all the serous membranes, the peritonæum, except in the female, is a sort of sac without aperture, which covers the abdominal organs, without containing them within it, and the internal surface of which is smooth, and lubricated by a serous fluid. In the male fœtus, the peritonæum furnishes a prolongation, which accompanies the testicle at the time of its descent, and, in the female fœtus, forms the Canal' of Nuck. Below the neck of the gall-bladder, the peritonæum has a triangular opening, called the Fora'men or Hia'tus of Win'low, through which it proceeds behind the stomach, to form a sort of secondary cavity, called the posterior cavity of the peritonæum, (F.) Arrière cavité péritonéale ou Cavité des Épiploons.

PERITONÆ'UM DUPLICA'TUM, Epiploon, gastrocolic.

Peritone'al, Peritonæ'us, (F.) Péritonéal. That which appertains or relates to the peritonæum.

Peritone'ovag'inal. Relating to the peritonæum and vagina, as Peritone'ovag'inal fistula.

Péritonite, Peritonitis—p. Puerpérale, see Peritonitis.

Periton'i'tis, gen. Periton'i'tidis, Empres'ma seu Caum'a Periton'i'tis, Peritonæi'tis, Inflamma'tio seu Phleg'monē Peritonæ'i, Phlegma'sia or Inflammation of the Peritonæ'um, (peritonæum, and itis,) (F.) Péritonite, Inflammation du Péritoine. The characteristic signs of acute inflammation of the peritonæum are,—violent pain in the abdomen, increased by the slightest pressure, often by simple weight of the bedclothes. It frequently occurs in the parturient state, Lochoperiton'i'tis, and begins on the second or third day after delivery. At times, a malignant epidemic, and perhaps contagious, variety has made its appearance, and destroyed numbers of females. This has been described under the name Puer'peral Fever, Metropériton'i'tis, En'e'cia Syn'ochus Puer'peral'um, Erythemat'ic or Non-plas'tic Puer'peral Periton'i'tis, Typhohæ'mic Periton'i'tis, (F.) Péritonite puerpérale, Métropéritonite puerpérale, Fèvre puerpérale, Typhus puerpéral, Adynam'ic or Malignant Puer'peral Fe'ver, Low Fe'ver of Child-bed. It is, according to some, a malignant inflammation of the peritonæum and uterus; according to others, a U'terine Phlebitis. In any form it requires active treatment, early employed. The appearances on dissection are such as occur whenever a serous membrane has been inflamed, and such inflammation has produced death:—effusion of fluid with flakes of coagulable lymph in it; appearances of vascularity, &c. in the membrane. The treatment—in acute peritonitis—must consist of the same course as recommended under Enteritis. In the chronic kind, symptoms must be combated as they arise, and it may be advisable to excite a new action in the system by means of mercury. In the epidemic and malignant variety, unless bleeding be freely employed at the very outset, it does harm. If used early, it may be of decided advantage. Everything depends upon arresting the morbid process at the outset.

Other subdivisions of the subject have been made, as general or partial peritonitis, hypochondriac, epiploic, iliac, intrapelvic, &c., according to the nature of the region involved.

PERITONITIS, ERYTHEMAT'IC, see Peritonitis—p. Hepatica, see Hepatitis—p. Nonplastic, see Peritonitis—p. Pelvic, Pelvipertonitis—p. Puerperal, see Peritonitis.

PERITONITIS, TUBERCULAR, P. Tuberculo'sa. A form of peritonitis often met with in children or in early adult life, associated with tubercular deposit or the symptoms of tuberculosis.

PERITONITIS, TYPHONÆMIC, see Peritonitis.

Peritto'ma, gen. Peritto'matis, (περιττωμα, from περισσος, 'over and above,') Excrement.

Perityphlit'ic, (peri, and τυφλος, cæcus, 'blind,') Relating to inflammation around the cæcum, as perityphlitic abscess.

Perityphlit'is, gen. Perityphlit'idis, (F.) Pérityphlite, (peri, and typhlitis, 'inflammation of the cæcum,') Inflammation of the areolar substance surrounding the cæcum. See Typhloenteritis.

Periü'terine, Perihyster'ic, Circumü'terine, Periü'terinus, (F.) Periü'térin, (peri, and uterus.) That which is situated around the uterus; hence periü'terine inflammation or periü'terine phlegmon, —inflammation of the areolar tissue around the uterus.

Perivas'cular, Perivascula'ris, (peri, and vasculum.) That which is situated around a vessel, as the perivascular canals or grooves or spaces, which have been said to surround the minute cerebral vessels, having an epithelial lining, and communicating with the lymphatic system. They are considered, however, only to exist abnormally.

Per'iwinkle, Les'ser, ([L.] pervinca, [Sax.] pepuince,) Vinea minor.

Perizo'ma, gen. Perizo'matis, (περιζωμα, from peri, and ζωννμι, 'I gird,') A bandage; a girdle. In Fabricius Hildanus, a truss. Herpes zoster. The diaphragm.

Per'kinism. A therapeutical means, first employed by Dr. Elisha Perkins, of Norwich, Connecticut, towards the termination of the last century, and named after him. It consisted in drawing over affected or other parts the pointed extremities of two metallic rods, called Metallic Tractors, each made of a different metal. The success obtained was through the influence of the imagination; and, consequently, as a remedial agent, it ranks as high as animal magnetism, but no higher. The operation was, also, called Tractoration.

Per'kinist. A believer in, and practiser of, Perkinism.

Perkinis'tic. Relating or belonging to Perkinism.

Per'la, Pearl, Paralampsis.

Perle, Pearl.

Permanganate de Potasse, Potassæ perman-ganatis.

Permis'sus, (permittere, permissum, from per, and mittere, 'to suffer to pass through,') Licentiate.

Permis'tio, (per, and miscere, mistum or mixtum, 'to mix,') Coition.

Permix'tio, Coition.

Permo'tio, (per, and movere, motum, 'to move,') Motion.

Pernicieux, Deleterious.

Pernic'ious, (per, and neco, 'I destroy,') Deleterious.

Per'nio, Chilblain.

Pernocta'tio, (per, and nox, gen. noctis, 'night,') Insomnia.

Pe'ro, (προς, 'deficient,') in composition, deficient.

Peroceph'alus, (pero, and κεφαλη, 'head,') A monster with a defective head.

Perocor'mus, (pero, and κορμος, 'trunk,') A malformation in which the trunk is defective, and too short, from the absence of one or more vertebrae,—the head and limbs being normal.

Perodactyl'eus, (perone, and δακτυλος, 'a finger or toe,') Flexor longus digitorum pedis profundus perons.

Perodyn'ia, (πηρα, 'a sac, stomach, and οδυνη, 'pain,') see Cardialgia.

Peromel'ia, (pero, and μελος, 'a limb,') Congenital misconstruction, or mutilation of the limbs. A genus in the nosology of Good.

Perom'elus. A monster possessed of the deformity mentioned above.

Peronæ'us, (perone, 'fibula,') Peronæ'us. Relating to the fibula, as the Peronæi muscles, &c.

PERONÆ'US ANTI'CUS, P. BRE'VIS, &c. See Peroneal muscles.

Per'one, (περοννη, from παρω, 'I transfix,') Fibula.

Péroné, Fibula — p. Col du, Collum fibulae.

Perone'al, Peronæ'us, Fibula'ris, Fib'ular, (F.) Péronier, (from perone.) Belonging or relating to the fibula.

PERONE'AL ARTERY, Fib'ular Ar'tery, arises from the popliteal, and is situate deeply in the posterior and outer part of the leg. It gives off branches of little importance. Near the outer ankle, it divides into two branches. 1. The posterior peroneal, which descends behind the lower joint of the fibula, on the outer surface of the calcaneum. 2. The anterior peroneal, which crosses the inferior extremity of the interosseous ligament, to be distributed on the dorsal surface of the foot.

PERONE'AL MUS'LES are three in number. 1. Peronæ'us Bre'vis seu secundus seu anti'cus seu me'dius, Semifibularis, (F.) Grand-péronéo-sus-métatarsien, Court péronéo-latéral, Moyen Péronier. A muscle, situate beneath the peronæus longus. It is attached, above, to the outer surface of the fibula, and terminates, below, at the posterior extremity of the 5th metatarsal bone, after having been reflected beneath the malleolus externus. It extends the foot upon the leg, at the same time raising a little the outer edge. It may, also, act upon the leg, and extend it upon the foot. 2. Peronæ'us Lon'gus seu primus seu post'cus seu max'imus seu posterior, (F.) Tibi-péronéo-tarsien, Long péronier latéral, Péronéo-sous-tarsien, (Ch.) Muscle grand péronier. This muscle is situate at the outer part of the leg. It is long, thick, and triangular above; thin, narrow, and flat below. It is attached above to the outer edge of the upper extremity of the fibula, and to the upper third of the outer surface of that bone. Below, it terminates at the outer part of the posterior extremity of the first metatarsal bone. This muscle extends the foot on the leg, turning its point outward, and raising its outer edge. It acts, also, upon the leg, which it extends on the foot. 3. Peronæ'us Ter'tius, No'vus Vesalii, (F.) Péronier antérieur, Petit péronéo-sus-métatarsien, (Ch.) Petit Péronier. A muscle, situate at the anterior, outer, and inferior part of the leg. It is long and flat, and is attached, above, to the inferior third of the anterior margin and inner surface of the fibula; terminating, below, at the posterior extremity of the 5th metatarsal bone. This muscle bends the foot on the leg. by raising its outer edge. It can, also, bend the leg on the foot.

PERONEAL NERVE, see Popliteal nerves.

PERONEAL VEIN follows the same course as the artery.

Peronedactyl'ius, (perone, and δακτυλος, 'a finger or toe,') Flexor longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans.

Péronéo-latéral Court, Peronæus brevis — p. Phalangien du gros orteil, Flexor longus pollicis pedis — p. Sous-phalangien du pouce, Flexor longus pollicis pedis — p. Sous-tarsien, Peronæus longus — p. Sus-métatarsien, Peronæus tertius — p. Sus-métatarsien, grand, Peronæus brevis — p. Sus-phalangien du pouce, Extensor proprius pollicis pedis — p. Sus-phalangien du pouce, Extensor proprius pollicis pedis — p. Tibi-susphalangien commun, Extensor communis digitorum pedis.

Perone'um, (from perone,) Fibula.

Perone'us, Peronæus.

Péronier, Peroneal — p. Grand, Peronæus longus — p. Latéral, long, Peronæus longus — p. Moyen, Peronæus brevis — p. Petit, Peronæus tertius.

Peronodactyl'ius, (perone, and δακτυλος, 'a finger or toe,') Flexor longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans.

Peronodactyl'ius, Flexor longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans.

Peroso'mus, (pero, and σῶμα, 'body,') A monster whose whole body is imperfectly developed.

Perosplanch'nica, (pero, and σπλῆγρον, 'a viscus,') Congenital misconstruction of the viscera. A genus in the nosology of Good.

Perpendic'ulum He'patis, (perpendicularum, 'a plumb line,' from per, and pendere, 'to hang,' and hepar, gen. hepatis, 'liver,') Suspensory ligament of the liver.

Perperacu'tus, 'Extremely acute.' An epithet applied to very violent and rapid diseases.

Perplex'i Mor'bi, (per, and plexere, plexum, 'to interweave,') see Complication.

Perplication, Perplicatio, (per, and plico, plicatum, 'I fold,') A method of tying arteries, which consists in making a small incision in the side of the artery, near its bleeding orifice, introducing a small pair of forceps, seizing the open extremity, and drawing it backward, through the aperture made in the side of the vessel, so as to form a kind of knot.

Perrosin, see Pinus abies.

Per'ry, see Cider.

Per'ry Count'y Warm Springs. These are in Pennsylvania, eleven miles from Carlisle, and fourteen from Harrisburg. Temperature 67°; impregnation not much. They are used for bathing.

Per'sea Cam'fora, (περσεα,) see Camphor — p. Cassia, Laurus cassia — p. Cinnamomum, Laurus cinnamomum — p. Cubeba, Piper cubeba.

PER'SEA GRATIS'SIMA, Lau'rus Persea, Palta tree, Avoca'do or Alligator Pear. A slender, very high tree of Peru, with a small domelike top, which grows on the eastern declivity of the Andes, and rises, at times, to the height of more than 60 feet. Its fruit — (S.) Palta — which is pear-shaped, is generally much liked. It dissolves, like butter, on the tongue, and hence is called, in some of the French colonies, beurre végétale. The leaves are reckoned balsamic, pectoral, and vulnerary. The seeds are very astringent.

PER'SEA PICHU'RIM, see Pichurim beans — p. Sassafras, Laurus sassafras.

Per'sian Fire, see Anthrax.

Per'sica Vulga'ris, (Περσικός, 'Persian,') Amygdalus Persica.

Persicatre Acre, Polygonum hydropiper — p. Brulante, Polygonum hydropiper — p. Douce, Persicaria — p. Poterée, Polygonum hydropiper.

Persola'ta, Arctium lappa.

Persolla'ta, Arctium lappa.

Persolu'ta, Arctium lappa.

Perspecil'lum, (per, and specio, 'I behold,') see Spectacles.

Perspira'bilē Sanctoria'num, (after Sanctorius,) Perspiration.

Perspira'tion, Perspira'tio, Transpira'tio, Diffla'tio, Diap'noë, Diapnæ'a, Diapneu'sis, Perspirab'ilē Sanctoria'num, (per, and spirare, spiratum, 'to breathe, exhale,') The insensible transpiration or exhalation continually going on at the surface of the skin and membranes. Sensible perspiration is called sweat. The perspiratory fluid is secreted by an appropriate glandular apparatus, termed by Breschet diapnog'enous, (F.) Appareil diapnogène, the Sudorip'arous glands, Glan'dulæ sudorip'aræ seu sudoriferæ, Organa sudorip'ara, Sweat glands, consisting of a convoluted tube, situate beneath the true skin, and of spiral ducts, which open obliquely under the scales of the epidermis. A certain portion of the perspired fluid is thrown off by ordinary physical evaporation.

The Pulmonary exhalation or transpiration is that which takes place into the bronchia, and is sent out with the expired air.

Perspiratory, Perspirato'rius, Trans'piratory, Transpirato'rius, (F.) Perspiratoire, Transpiratoire. Relating or belonging to, or the product of, perspiration.

Perstric'tion, (from perstringere, — per, and stringere, strictum, 'to bind,') see Hæmostasia.

Persuda'tio, (per, and sudare, sudatum, 'to sweat,') Diapedesis.

Persulta'tio, (persultare, persultatum, 'to leap through,' from per, and salutare, 'to leap,') Diapedesis.

Perte, (from perdere, perditum, 'to lose,') Metrorrhagia — p. d'Appetit, Anorexia — p. de la Mémoire, Amnesia — p. de l'Odorat, Anosmia — p. de Sang, Hæmorrhagia — p. de la Voix, Aphonia — p. de la Vue, Cæcitas.

Pertérébrant, Pertérébrans, (per, and terebrare, 'to bore,') The French give this epithet to an acute pain — Douleur pertérébrante — which occasions a sensation like that which would be produced by an instrument penetrating and lacerating a part — the pain from whitlow, for example.

Pertes Blanchés, (pl. of perte,) Leucorrhœa — p. de Sang, Metrorrhagia — p. Séminales, Spermatorrhœa — p. Uérines, Metrorrhagia — p. Uérines blanches, Leucorrhœa — p. Uérines rouges, Metrorrhagia.

Per'tica, ('a pole,') per se, Penis.

Pertroph'ic, Pertroph'icus, (per and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Relating or appertaining to excess of nourishment or nutrition.

Pertru'sio Mu'tua, (per, and trudere, trusum, 'to thrust,') Endosmose.

Perturbatio'nes An'imi, (perturbare, perturbatum, — per, and turbare, — 'to disturb greatly,') Affections of the mind.

Perturba'trix (gen. Perturbat'ricis) Medici'na, Perturbating treat'ment (F.) Méthode ou Médecine perturbatrice. A mode of treatment in which very active means are employed, and such as impress upon diseases a different course from that natural to them. It is the antithesis of Medicina expectans. Much evil has resulted from such treatment, especially in febrile diseases.

Pertus'sal, Pertussa'lis, Relating or appertaining to pertussis.

Pertus'sine, (from pertussis.) A term proposed by Dr. Wm. Farr for the specific zymotic principle by which whoopingcough is propagated.

Pertus'sis, (per, and tussis, 'a cough,') 'a violent cough,') Tus'sis feri'na seu convulsi'va seu pu'eros stran'gulans seu quin'ta seu stomacha'lis seu an'hela clamo'sa seu stran'gulans seu delas'sans seu suffocans seu amphemer'i'na seu tussiculo'sa seu spasmod'ica seu asini'na seu cani'na, Bronchi'tis convulsi'va, Bronchocephali'tis, Pneum'sis pertus'sis, Amphemer'i'na, Orthopne'a tussiculo'sa seu clango'sa seu suffocati'va seu clamo'sa seu spasmod'ica, Mor'bus cucul'lus seu cuculla'ris, Cucul'lus, Bechorthopne'a, Bex convulsi'va seu therio'des, Whoopingcough, Whoopingcough, Chin'cough, Kin'cough, Kind'cough, (Germ. Kind, 'a child,') (Sc.) Kink-host, (Prov.) Kinkhaust, (F.) Copeluche, Catarrhe ou Bronchite convulsive, Toux convulsive ou quintese ou bleue, Maladie cuculaire. A violent convulsive cough, returning by fits, (F.) Quintes, at longer or shorter intervals, and consisting of several expirations, followed by a sonorous inspiration or whoop. The fits of coughing generally recur more frequently during the night, morning, and evening, than in the day. It is esteemed to be contagious, and attacks the young more particularly. It is rare for it to affect an individual for the second time. The duration is various—six or eight weeks or more. Although the paroxysms are very violent, it is not a dangerous disease. It may, however, give rise to other affections, as convulsions, pneumonia, &c., when the complication is very dangerous, as the cause cannot be removed. Those children suffer the least who evacuate the contents of the stomach during the fit. In the treatment, all that can be done is to palliate. It must be borne in mind, that the disease will in time wear itself out. If there be much tensive pain of the head, or fever, bleeding may be required, but it is seldom necessary. Narcotics occasionally afford relief, but it is temporary. Gentle emetics, given occasionally, when the paroxysms are long and dry, give decided relief, and aid in the expectoration of the morbid secretions. After the disease has continued for some weeks, and persists in part from habit, change of air is essential, and this even should the change be to an atmosphere that is less pure.

Peru, see Lima.

Perunc'tio, (per, and ungere, unctum, 'to anoint,') Inunction.

Pervenche, ([L.] pervinca.) Vinca minor.

Perver'sion, Perver'sio, (per, and vertere, versum, 'to turn,') Dias'trophè, Diastrem'ma. One of the four modifications of function in disease, the three others being augmentation, diminution, and abolition. The humorists used this term also to designate disorder or morbid change in the fluids.

Perversion de la Tête des Os et des Muscles, Loxarthus.

Pervigil'ium, (per, and vigilare, 'to watch,') Insomnia, Coma vigil.

Pes, gen. Pe'dis, (πῶς, gen. ποδός.) Ich'nus, (Sc.) Fit, (F.) Pied. The foot. The inferior extremity of the abdominal member, representing a bony arch, an elastic vault, which transmits the weight of the body to the ground. It is divided into three parts—the tarsus, metatarsus, and toes.

PES ACCESSO'RIOUS, Eminen'tia Collatera'lis. An eminence, formed of white matter, situated between the hippocampus major and minor, at the junction of the posterior with the descending cornu Ammonis.

Pessaire, Pessary—p. Intraütérin, Pessary, intrauterine.

Pes'sary, Pessa'rium, (from πέσος, 'a small stone or other substance for playing at draughts; a pessary,') Pes'sus, Pes'sum, Pes'sulus, Penicil'lus, Ta'lus, Nod'ulus uteri'nus, Supposito'rium uteri'nus, Glans, Lemnis'cus, (F.) Pessaire. A solid instrument, made of cork, ivory, or elastic gum, which is introduced into the vagina to support the uterus, in cases of prolapsus of the uterus or relaxation of the vagina; to keep vaginal hernia reduced, &c. The ancients made use of medicated pes'saries, which they distinguished into emollient, astringent, aperient, &c., and they are still used, although generally called vag'inal supposito'ries. An anal pessary is sometimes employed for the compression of hemorrhoids. The form of pessaries is very variable;—round, oval, &c., according to fancy and circumstances. Some of them have an external support from a stem, the intrauterine pessary, for example. Some forms of pessary are referred to, according to their shape, as the ring pessary, the horseshoe pessary, &c., and the various modifications of shape are also named after their proposers, as Hodge's pessary, &c.

PES'SARY, A'NAL, see Pessary—p. Egyptian, Ægyptius pessus.

PES'SARY, INTRAÜ'TERINE, Stem pes'sary, (F.) Pessaire intra-utérin, Redresseur utérin. An instrument for rectifying uterine displacements—as anteversion and retroversion, consisting of a stem which is introduced into the uterus; this stem is attached to a flattened ovoid bulb or ball, on which the cervix uteri rests. Connected with this is sometimes an external part or wire frame, which is attached, at one extremity, to a flat tubular portion, passing into the vagina, to be fixed to the intrauterine portion. The wire frame is made to press upon the pubis, so that the pessary can be kept in position in utero. This is essentially the intrauterine pessary of Professor Simpson of Edinburgh. See Uterine elevator.

PES'SARY, MED'ICATED, see Pessary—p. Stem, Pessary, intrauterine.

Pesse'ma, (πέσος, 'a game at draughts,') An eruption recently described, presenting the appearance of a checkerboard, consisting of hard, round, elevated spongy pustules, attacking any portion of the body.

Pes'sulus, (dim. of pessus.) Pessary, Penis.

Pes'sum, Pessary.

Petræ'leum, (petro, and ελαιον, 'oil,') Petroleum.

Petræ'um, (πετραος, 'living among rocks,') Solidago virgaurea.

Petra'pium, (petro, and apium, 'parsley,') Bubon Macedonicum.

Pétré, Petrous.

Pétréole, Petroleum.

Pétréux, Petrous — p. Os, see Temporal bone.

Pe'tro, (πετρα, and πετρος, 'rock,') in composition, rock; and the petrous or rocky portion of the temporal bone.

Pe'tro del Por'co, ('stone of the hog,') Bezoar of the Indian porcupine.

Pétréole, Petroleum.

Petro'leum, Petrolæ'um, Petræ'leum, Pétræ'leum, Bitu'men Petroleum, Pissellæ'um Indicum, Rock Oil, Earth Oil, Petroleum Barbade'nsē, Barbadoes Tar, (F.) Pétréole ou Pétréole, (petro, and ελαιον, 'oil,') A bituminous substance flowing spontaneously from the earth, in various parts of the world, and abounding on this continent over a large area, embracing especially a part of Canada West from Lake Ontario to Lake Huron, and portions of Western New York and Western Pennsylvania, the southeastern half of Ohio, all Northwestern Virginia, and the eastern district of Kentucky. It has a fetid odor; bitter, acrid taste; is semi-liquid, tenacious, semi-transparent; of a reddish-brown color; insoluble in water and alcohol; combines with fixed and essential oils and sulphur; and is partially soluble in ether. The petroleum found at Gabian, near Béziers, in France, has been called Oleum Gabia'num, (F.) Huile de Gabian, Petroleum ru'brum. It has been given as an excitant expectorant; and, mixed with tincture of assafœtida, in tapeworm. It is, also, used externally in chilblains, chronic rheumatism, affections of the joints and skin, and paralysis, and is a disinfectant and parasiticide.

New York Petroleum, called Sen'eca Oil, is used externally in similar cases.

PETRO'LEUM BARBADEN'SE, Petroleum.

PETRO'LEUM SULPHURATUM, Balsamum Sulphuris Barbade'nsē,—(composed of Petrol. Barbade'nsē, 3xvj., Flor. Sulph., 3iv.) has been used as a pectoral; and as a detergent to ulcers. It has been accounted antispasmodic and sudorific. Dose, gtt. x. to xxx. Externally, it is used as a stimulant and discutient.

Petro'ccip'ital, Petro'ccipita'lis. Belonging to the petrous portion of the temporal bone and to the occipital bone.

PETRO'CCIP'ITAL SU'TURE is formed by the junction of the petrous portion of the temporal with the occipital bone. It is a deep groove separating the bones, which have between them a thin layer of cartilage.

Petro'sal, Petrous—p. Ganglion, Petrous ganglion.

Petrosalpin'gopharynge'us. A fleshy fasciculus, which extends from the sphenoid bone, from the petrous portion of the temporal bone, and from the Eustachian tube to the upper part of the pharynx. See Constrictor.

Petrosalpin'gostaphyli'nus, Circumflexus—p. Salpingostaphylinus, Levator palati.

Petroseli'num, (πετροσελιον, from petro, and σελινον, 'parsley,') Apium petroselinum—p. Macedonicum, Bubon Macedonicum.

Petrosphenoi'dal, Petrosphenoida'lis. Belonging to the petrous portion of the temporal bone and to the sphenoid bone.

PETROSPHENOI'DAL SU'TURE. A name given to the small suture which is formed by the anterior edge of the petrous portion of the temporal bone and the posterior edge of the sphenoid.

Petrostaphylin, Levator palati.

Petro'sum, Os, see Temporal.

Pe'trous, Petro'sus, Petro'sal, (F.) Pétréux, Pétré, Pierreux, (πετρος, 'a rock,') Resembling stone; having the hardness of stone. Relating or belonging to the petrous portion of the temporal bone.

PETROUS GAN'GLION, Petro'sal Gan'glion, Gan'glion of An'dersch, is formed by the glossopha-ryngeal nerve, shortly after it emerges from the jugular fossa. From this ganglion, M. Jacobson, of Copenhagen, traced an anastomosing loop through the cavity of the tympanum, which left branches there, and was thence reflected downwards to join the Vidian nerve. See Otic ganglion. This has been called the Nerve of Jacobson, Tympanic branch of the glossopharyngeal; and the inosculation, Jacobson's Anastomosis.

PETROUS PORTION OF TEMPORAL BONE, see Temporal bone—p. Process, see Temporal bone.

PETROUS SINUSES, Petro'sal Si'nuses, are two venous sinuses of the dura mater, connected with the petrous portion of the temporal bone, and distinguished on each side into—1. The superior petro'sal si'nus. It arises from the cavernous sinus; follows the upper edge of the petrous portion, which affords it a gutter; passes into the great circumference of the tentorium cerebelli, and opens into the lateral sinus where the latter experiences a bend near the base of the pars petrosa. Its form is triangular. 2. The inferior petro'sal si'nus arises from the cavernous sinus at the same point as the last, with which it communicates at the moment of its origin. It descends between the inferior edge of the pars petrosa and the basilar process, and terminates in the lateral sinus, at the sinus or gulf of the internal jugular vein. It is triangular, and broader at its extremities than at the middle.

Pet'enkoff's Test. A test for the presence of bile acids, as in the urine, by dropping any solution containing bile into a mixture of sulphuric acid and sugar; a purplish-crimson color being produced.

Pe'tum (Brazil), Nicotiana tabacum.

Pe'tun (Brazil), Nicotiana tabacum.

Peuc'é, (πευκη,) Pinus sylvestris.

Peuc'ea Balsame'a, see Pinus abies.

Peuced'anum, (πευκη, 'the pine tree,' its leaves resembling those of the pine;) P. officinale seu alsuticum seu altissimum seu paniculatum seu ternatum, Seli'num peuced'anum, Mar'athrum sylvestre, Marathrophyllum, Pinastellum, Fœniculum porcinum, Bo'nus Ge'nus, Hog's Fen'nel, Sulphurwort, (F.) Peucedane, Queue de Pourceau, Fenouil de Porc. Ord. Umbelliferae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. The root has a strong, fetid smell—somewhat resembling that of sulphureous solutions—and an acrid, unctuous bitterish taste. It has been recommended as antihysteria and nervine.

PEUCED'ANUM ALSA'TICUM, Peucedanum—p. Altissimum, Peucedanum—p. Austriacum, see P. palustre—p. Officinale, Peucedanum—p. Oreoselinum, Athamanta aureoselinum.

The roots, leaves, and seeds were once recommended as aperients, diuretics, and carminatives.

PEUCED'ANUM TERRA'TUM, Peucedanum.

Peuplier, Populus—p. Baumier, Fagara octandra—p. de la Caroline, Fagara octandra—p. Frauc, Populus—p. Noir, Peucedanum.

Pex'is, (πηξις,) Concretion.

Peyeri Glan'dulæ, Peyeri Plex'us glandulosi, Glan'dulæ Peyeria'næ seu mucosæ coagminatæ seu agminatæ seu so'ciæ seu mucip'aræ racematim conges'tæ intestino'rum seu intestinal'es plexifor'mes seu spuriæ, Corpus'cula glandula'rum simil'ia, Glan'dulæ in ag'men congregatæ intestino'rum, Enterad'enes, Pey'er's Glands or Patches, Ag'minated or ag'gregate glands. Small glands situated beneath the villous coat of the intestines, (called after Peyer, who well described them.) They are clustered together, Insulæ Peyeri, Plex'us intestinal'es, (F.) Plaques de Peyer, having a honeycomb appearance—Plaques gaufrées—and are extremely numerous. They occur most in the lower portion of the ileum, and resemble, in their morphology and functions, the lymphatic ganglions. When scattered singly, they are called glan'dulæ solita'riæ. They are, evidently, concerned in the great functions of lymphosis.

Pe'za, (πεζα,) The foot: according to some, the sole of the foot; and to others, the astragalus, the ankle.

Pezi'za or Peze'za Auric'ula, Tremella auric'ula Ju'dæ, Auric'ula Ju'dæ, Auricula'ria sambu'ci seu sambu'cina, Exid'ia auric'ula Ju'dæ, Meru'lius auric'ula, Fungus sambu'cinus, Agar'icus auric'ulæ formâ, Jew's Ear. Ord. Fungi. This fungus is said to be astringent; but has chiefly been used in decoction or infusion as a gargle in relaxed sorethroat.

Pfegers or Pfaffers, Min'eral Wa'ters of, Thermæ Piperinæ, T. fabaria. These springs, which are in the Swiss Alps, are simply thermal; temperature, 100° Fah. They are usually employed for bathing purposes, in neuralgia, hysteria, &c.

Pflager's Sacs. Tubular passages observed in the ovary in very early foetal development.

Pha'cé, (φακη, 'a grain of the lentil; a lens,') Er'vum lens. Also, chloasma; lens; the crystalline lens; and a flask for the application of heat, so called owing to its flattened lenslike shape.

Phacel'us, (φακελλος,) Fasciculus.

Phace'us, (φακελος,) Fasciculus.

Phachymeni'tis, Phacohymenitis.

Pha'ci, pl. of Phacus, Ephelides.

Pha'cia, Ephelides.

Pha'cius, Phaco'tus, Phaco'des, (from phace.) Lens-shaped, lenticular.

Phaci'tis, gen. Phaci'tidis, Phacoid'eitis, Lenti'tis, Crystallit'is, Cristalloidit'is, Glenit'is, (phace, and itis.) Inflammation of the crystalline lens. Inflammation of the capsule of the lens is termed Capsit'is, Capsulit'is, Crystal'linocapsulit'is, and Phacocystit'is.

Phaco'copis, (phace, and κοπις, 'a knife,') Phacopis.

Phacocys'tē, (phace, and κυστις, 'a cyst or bladder,') see Crystalline.

Phacocystectom'ia, (phacocyste, and εκτομια, 'cutting out,') An operation for cataract, which consists in cutting out a part of the capsule of the lens.

Phacocysti'tis, gen. Phacocysti'ditis, (phacocyste, and itis.) see Phacitis.

Phaco'des, (φακωδης, phace, and odes.) Phacicus.

Phacohymeni'tis, gen. Phacohymeni'tidis, Phacohymeni'tis, Phachymeni'tis, Phacymeni'tis, Inflamma'tio cap'sulæ len'tis, (phace, ὄψω, 'a membrane,' and itis.) Inflammation of the capsule of the crystalline.

Pha'coid, Phacoï'des, (from phace, and αἶδος, 'resemblance,') Resembling a lens. See Crystalline.

Phacoid'eit'is, gen. Phacoid'eit'idis, (phacoid, and itis.) Phacitis.

Phacoid'oscope, (phace, and σκοπεω, 'I view,') A modification of what was formerly called the ophthalmoscope, for the observation and measurement of reflected images.

Phacomalac'ia, (phace, and μαλακος, 'soft,') Cataract, soft.

Phacometachore'sis, (phace, and μεταχωρωω, 'I change place,') Dislocation of the crystalline.

Phaco'opis, Phacoc'opis, Phaco'tus, (phace, and κοπίς, 'a knife,') Scalpellum lenticula'rē. A lenticular-shaped knife.

Phacopalingen'esis, (phace, παλιν, 'again,' and γενεσις, 'generation,') Regeneration of the crystalline.

Phacops'is, (phace, and οψις, 'vision,') The state of one who has chloasma or freckles on the face.

Phacoptis'ana, Phacium, (phace, and πικραν, 'drink,') A drink of lentils. A poultice of lentils.

Pha'cos, (φακος,) Ervum lens.

Phacoscolo'ma, gen. Phacoscolo'matis, (phace, and σκολωμα, 'darkness,') Cataract.

Phacosclero'ma, gen. Phacosclero'matis, (phace, σκληρος, 'hard,' and oma,) Induration of the crystalline.

Phaco'tus, (φακωτος, 'lens-shaped,') Phacicus, Phacopis.

Pha'cus, (φακος,) Ervum lens.

Phacymeni'tis, gen. Phacymeni'tidis, Phacohymenitis.

Phenicis'mus, Rubeola.

Phænomenolog'ia, (phænomenon, and λογος, 'a description,') Semeiology.

Phænomen'on, (φαίνω, 'I manifest,') Phenomenon.

Phænomenoscop'ia, (phænomenon, and σκοπεω, 'I examine,') see Symptomatology.

Phænophthalmotrop'ia, (phaino, 'I manifest,' ophthalmos, and τρεπω, 'I turn,') An apparatus designed by Donders to illustrate the movements of the eye by a movable globe, rings, and axes.

Phagæ'na, (φαγαινα, from φαγω, 'I eat,') Boulimia.

Phagedæ'na, (φαγέδαινα, 'a ravenous hunger,' from φαγω, 'I eat,') Boulimia, Phagedenic ulcer — p. Gangrenosa, Hospital gangrene — p. Putris, see Phagedenic ulcer, and Hospital gangrene — p. Sloughing of the mouth, Cancer aquaticus.

Phageden'ic, Phageden'ous, Phageden'icus, Depas'cens, Ro'dent, (F.) Phagédénique, Rongeant. That which rapidly eats away.

PHAGEDEN'IC CHAN'CRE, Ulcus Phageden'icum Col'is. A destructive form of primary syphilitic sore. A virulent variety has been long known in the London hospitals under the name "Swan alley sore," from the miserable locality inhabited by prostitutes, in which it formerly prevailed.

PHAGEDEN'IC UL'GER, Phagedenic Sore, No'mē, Phagedæ'na, Ulcus depas'cens seu obambu'lans seu fer'i'num seu phagedenicum (F.) Ulcère phagédénique ou rongeante, is one which rapidly eats and corrodes the neighboring parts. Where the slough extends deeper than the surface, the term Sloughing phagedæna, P. putris, is applied to it. The morbid condition, which gives occasion to this destruction of parts is called Phag'edenism, Phagedenis'mus, (F.) Phagédénisme.

Phageden'ic, in Materia Medica, is a substance used for destroying fungous granulations in ulcers, &c.

Phag'edenism, see Phagedenic ulcer.

Phageden'ous, Phagedenic.

Phakohymenit'is, Phacohymenitis.

Phal'acra, (φαλακρα,) Calvities.

Phalacro'ma, gen. Phalacro'matis, (φαλακρωμα,) Calvities.

Phalacro'sis, (φαλακρωσις,) Calvities.

Phalac'rotes, (φαλακροτης,) Alopecia.

Phalæ'na Pinguinal'is, (φαλαινα, 'a moth,') see Ectozaa.

Phalai'a. A barbarous term, employed by Basil Valentine to designate a universal medicine or panacea.

Phalan'gagra, (phalanx, and αγρα, 'a seizure,') Phalangarthrititis.

Phal'angal or Phalan'gal, Phalan'gial, Phalan'gian, Phalangia'nus, (from phalanx.) Having relation to a phalanx.

Phalangarthrit'is, gen. Phalangarthrit'idis, (phalanx, αρθρον, 'a joint,' and itis.) Phalan'gagra. Gout in the fingers. Inflammation of the joints of the fingers.

Phalan'gē, (φαλαγγη,) Phalanx.

Phalanges des Doigts, see Phalanx — p. of the Fingers, see Phalanx — p. des Orteils, see Phalanx — p. of the Toes, see Phalanx.

Phalangettes, see Phalanx.

Phalangettien. Professor Chaussier uses this term for anything relating to the third phalanx of the fingers or toes, — Phalangien, for what relates to the first, — and Phalanginien, to the second.

Phalan'gial, Phalangal.

Phalan'gian, Phalangal.

Phalangia'nus, Phalangal.

Phalangien, see Phalangettien.

Phalanges, see Phalanx.

Phalanginien, see Phalangettien.

Phalan'gium Esculen'tum, (from φαλαγγιον, 'a venomous spider,' whose poison it was supposed to neutralize,) Scilla esculenta.

Phalango'sis, Hispid'itas, (from φαλαγξ, 'a row of soldiers,' and osis.) An affection of the eyelids, in which the lashes are arranged in two or three rows. See Trichiasis. Also, dropping of the upper eyelid, from paralysis of the levator palpebræ superioris muscle.

Phal'anx, gen. Phalan'gis, (φαλαγξ, gen. φαλαγγος, 'a row of soldiers,') Phalan'gē, Phalango'ma. A name given to the small bones which form the fingers and toes, because placed alongside each other like a phalanx. They are distinguished into the Phalanges of the fingers, Os'sa seu Ag'mina seu A'cies seu Artic'uli seu Scutic'ula seu Scu'tulæ seu No'di seu Interno'dia seu Scy'tal'ides seu Con'dyli Digito'rum Ma'nūs; and the Phalanges of the Toes, Os'sa seu Artic'uli seu Interno'dia Digito'rum Pe'dis. I. Phalanges of the fingers, (F.) Phalanges des doigts. They are, in each hand, fourteen, — three to each finger, and two to the thumb; and are situate one above the other. They are distinguished numerically, reckoning from the base towards the tip of the finger. 1. The first or metacarpal, Procon'dyli, (F.) Premières phalanges ou Phalanges métacarpiennes. 2. The second or middle phalanges, (F.) Secondes phalanges ou Phalanges moyennes, Phalangines (Ch.). 3. The third phalanges, Metacon'dyli, Phalan'ges un'guim, (F.) Troisièmes phalanges ou Phalanges unguéales ou unguifères ou unguinales, Phalangettes (Ch.), which terminate each finger, and support the nail. II. Phalan'ges of the toes, (F.) Phalanges des Orteils. They are the same in number as those of the fingers, but much smaller, and of a very different shape.

The phalanges of a finger or toe are united with each other, and the first with the metacarpal or metatarsal bone. They are developed from two points of ossification, one for the superior extremity and the other for the body and inferior extremity.

Phal'aris (gen. Phala'ridis) Canarien'sis, P. ova'ta, (φαλαρος, — from φαω, 'I shine,') — 'bright, shining,' in application to the seed,) Cultivated Canary Grass, (F.) Alpiste. Ord. Gramineæ. Sex. Syst. Triandria Digynia. The seed of this grass, Canary seed, (F.) Graines d'aspic, afford a nourishing meal. The ancients recommended them for allaying pains in the kidney and bladder.

PHAL'ARIS ZIZANO'DES, Andropogon muricatus.

Phallal'gia, Phallodyn'ia, (phallo, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the male organ.

Phallanas'trophē, (phallo, and ανατροφή, 'a turning back,') Distortion of the male organ backwards.

Phallancylo'sis, (phallo, and αγκλωσις, 'a bending,') Chordee.

Phalli'tis, gen. Phalli'tidis, Priapi'tis, (phallo, and itis.) Inflammation of the male organ.

Phal'lo, (from φαλλος, 'the male organ.') In composition, the male organ.

Phallocamp'sis, (phallo, and καμψις, 'bending,') Chordee.

Phallocarcino'ma, gen. Phallocarcino'matis, (phallo, and καρκινωμα, 'cancer.') Carcinoma or cancer of the penis.

Phalldyn'ia, (phallo, and δύνη, 'pain,') Phal-lalgia.

Phallon'cus, (phallo, and ογκος, 'swelling,') Tumefaction of the male organ.

Phallosoph'ia, (phallo, and ψοφος, 'a noise,') Discharge of wind from the male urethra.

Phallorrhag'ia, (phallo, and ῥαγνμι, 'I break forth,') Hemorrhage from the male urethra. Stimatosis.

Phallorrhœ'a, (phallo, and ῥεω, 'I flow,') Gonorrhœa.

Phallorrhôis'chesis, (phallo, ῥον, 'discharge,' and εχωω, 'to withhold,') Sudden arrest of a gonorrhœal discharge.

Phal'lus, (φαλλος,) Dildo, Penis—p. Esculentus, Morchella esculenta.

PHAL'LUS IMPUDI'CUS. The thick, glutinous liquid in the sporules of this fungus, which grows largely in the Ukraine, is applied popularly to painful limbs. The infusion of the powdered plant is given in arthritic affections.

Phanerog'amous, Phanerogam'ie, Phanero-gam'icus, (F.) Phanérogame, (φανερως,—φαω, 'I shine,'—'evident,' and γαμος, 'marriage,') An epithet used by botanists for plants whose sexual organs are apparent. It is, consequently, the opposite to cryptogamous.

Phanerog'enous Tis'sue, (φανης, [?] 'the first principle,' and γεγωω, 'I beget,' Phaneroph'orous tissue, (F.) Tissue phanérogène ou phanérophore. The special substance that forms the pulp of the tooth, so called by M. Robin.

Phaneroph'orous Tis'sue, (φανης, [?] 'the first principle,' and φορεω, 'I bear,') Phanerogenous tissue.

Phanta'sia, (φαντασια, from φανταζω,—φαινω, 'I bring to light,'—'I make appear,') Delirium, Imagination.

Phan'tasm, Phantas'ma, Phanto'ma, Phas'ma. A phantom, false appearance, apparition. Hallucination. Derangement of the sense of sight or of the intellectual faculties, causing objects to be perceived which are not before the eyes.

Phantas'ma, gen. Phantas'matis, (φαντασμα, gen. φαντασματος,) Phantasm, Pseudoblepsia.

Phantasmat'ious, (from phantasma,) Phantasticus.

Phantasmatoscop'ia, (phantasma, and σκοπεω, 'I view,') Metamorphopsia.

Phantasmoscop'ia, Metamorphopsia.

Phantas'ticus, (φανταστικός,) Inebriant. Creating phantoms—phantasmat'icus.

Phantom, (φαινω, 'I cause to appear,') Fantom—p. Tumor, see Fantom.

Phanto'ma, gen. Phanto'matis, Phantasm—p. Obstetricium, Fantom.

Pharmacei'a, (φαρμακεια,) Pharmacy, Poisoning.

Pharmaceu'm, (φαρμακειον,) Apotheca.

Pharmaceu'ma, gen. Pharmaceu'matis, (φαρμακεισμα,) Medicament.

Pharmac'eus, (φαρμακευς,) Apothecary.

Pharmaceu'ta, (φαρμακευτης,) Apothecary.

Pharmaceu'tic, Pharmaceu'ticus, Pharmaceu'tical, Pharmaceutica'lis, (F.) Pharmaceutique, (from pharmakon,) An epithet for everything belonging to pharmacy. Thus, we say, Pharmaceutical preparations, &c.

Pharmaceu'ticé, (φαρμακευτική, [τεχνη,]) Pharmacy.

Pharmaceu'tist, (φαρμακευτης,) Apothecary.

Pharmaceu'tria, (φαρμακυντρια,) A woman who prepares or deals in drugs or poisons.

Pharma'cia, (φαρμακία,) Pharmacy, Poisoning.

Pharmacien, Apothecary.

Phar'maco, (from φαρμακον, 'a medicine,' 'poison,') in composition, generally medicine; at times, poison.

Pharmacocatagrapholog'ia, Catagrapholog'ia, Ars formulæ concinnan'di, (pharmaco, κατα, 'beneath,' γραφη, 'a writing,' and λογος, 'a description,') The art of writing prescriptions.

Pharmacochym'ia, (pharmaco, and chymia,) Chymistry, pharmaceutical.

Pharmacodynam'ics, (pharmaco, and δυναμις, 'power,') Pharmacodynam'icé, Dynam'ical Mate'ria Med'ica, Pharmacodynam'ica doctri'na, Pharmacodynam'icolog'ia. A division of pharmacology which considers the effects and uses of medicines.

Pharmacodynamolog'ia, (same etymon, and λογος, 'a discourse,') Pharmacodynamics.

Pharmacogno'sia, Aceogno'sia, Acogno'sia, (pharmaco, and γνωσις, 'knowledge,') A division of pharmacology which treats of simples, or unprepared medicines.

Pharmacolog'ia, (pharmaco, and λογος, 'a discourse,') Materia medica.

Pharmacoma'nia, (pharmaco, and μανια, 'mania,') A mania for prescribing or for taking or giving medicine, or for drugging.

Phar'macon, (φαρμακον,) Medicament, Poison.

Pharmacopœ'ia, Pharmacopœ'a, Co'dex medicamentarius, (F.) Pharmacopœe, (pharmaco, and ποιωω, 'I make,') A work containing a collection of formulæ for the preparation, &c. of medicines, generally published by authority. Formerly, a chemical laboratory, Laboratorium chymicum seu pharmaceuticum.

Pharmacopœse. The preparation of medicines.

Pharmacopœ'us, Apothecary, Druggist.

Pharmacop'ia, (φαρμακοπωλη, from pharmaco, and πωλεω, 'I sell,') Apothecary, Druggist.

Pharmacopole, Apothecary, Druggist.

Pharmacop'ium, Apotheca, Offici'na, Taberna Med'ica. The shop of the druggist or apothecary, (F.) Apothicairerie.

Pharmacopos'ia, (pharmaco, and ποισις, 'a potion,') A liquid medicine, especially one that is cathartic.

Pharmaco'sa Medicamen'ta, (from pharmakon,) Medicines that contain poisonous substances.

Pharmacothē'ca, (φαρμακοθηκη,—pharmaco, and θηκη, 'a sheath,') A case for medicines. A medicine chest.

Pharmacotherapi'a, Pharmax'is, (pharmaco, and θεραπεια, 'treatment,') Cure of diseases by medicine.

Pharmac'ter, gen. Pharmacte'ris, (φαρμακτηρ,) Apothecary.

Phar'macum, (φαρμακον,) Medicament, Poison—p. Ægyptiacum, Ægyptiacum—p. Amatorium, Philter.

PHAR'MACUM AD AUR'ES, Ægyptium Medicamen'tum ad Au'res. A name given to a medicine composed of bitter almonds, white pepper, saffron, myrrh, opium, frankincense, castor, verjuice, sulphate of iron, vinegar, pomegranate bark, unguentum nardinum, &c. It was believed to be useful for cleansing fetid ulcers in the ears.

Pharmacur'gicus, (pharmaco, and εργεν, 'to work,') Apothecary.

Pharmacur'gus, Apothecary.

Phar'macy, Pharmaci'a, Pharmaceu'ticé, Pharmax'is, (from pharmakon,) The art which teaches the knowledge, choice, preservation, preparation, and combination of medicines. It was formerly divided into Galen'ical and Chym'ical. The former, called after Galen, embraced the operations to which medicines were subjected without chemistry;—the latter, Chymical Pharmacy or Pharmaceu'tic Chymistry, Pharmacochym'ia, comprised the preparation of medicines founded on chemical action of their principles. Pharmacy is also used in the same sense as Pharmacopolium.

Pharmaxis, (φάρμαξις,) Pharmacotherapia, Pharmacy.

Pharna'ceum Linea'rè, (called after Phar-naces, King of Pontus.) A South African plant, Nat. Ord. Paronychiaceae, employed at the Cape in pulmonary affections; generally in infusion.

Pha'rus, (φάρω,) Pharynx.

Pharyg'athron, (φάρυγαθρον,) Pharynx.

Pharyg'ethrum, (φάρυγεθρον,) Pharynx.

Pharyngæ'um (Sal), (from pharynx.) A compound of cream of tartar, nitrate of potassa, burnt alum, and distilled vinegar. It was formerly employed, united with honey and plantain-water, to make gargles, which were advised in quinsy.

Pharyngal'gia, (pharyngo, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pharyngodynia.

Pharyngé, Pharyngeal.

Pharyng'e'al or Pharyn'geal, Pharyngæ'us, Fan'cial, (F.) Pharyngé, Pharyngien, (from pharynx.) That which relates to the pharynx or fauces. A name given to the muscles, vessels, and nerves of the pharynx.

PHARYNGE'AL ARTERIES. These are two in number. The one—superior or pterygo-palatine, Arteria pharyngæ'a superior seu pterygopalati-na, Ramus pharyngæ'us superior of Haller—arises from the internal maxillary at the base of the zygomatic fossa, passes through the pterygo-palatine canal, and proceeds to be distributed to the pharynx and the corresponding part of the Eustachian tube. The other—the inferior pharyngeal artery—Pharyngæ'a ascendens of Haller—arises from the external carotid, on a level with the facial. It ascends along the lateral and posterior part of the pharynx, and divides into two branches; the one—the pharyngeal, properly so called—is distributed to the pharynx; the other—the meningeal—gives its branches particularly to the dura mater.

PHARYNGE'AL GLANDS, Glandulæ pharyngæ'æ. Numerous mucous glands, which are found especially in the posterior wall of the pharynx.

PHARYNGE'AL NERVE. A branch sent by the pneumogastric to the pharynx. It descends behind the internal carotid; communicates with the glossopharyngeal; and divides, opposite the middle constrictor of the pharynx, into a great number of filaments, which anastomose, in a multitude of different directions, with filaments of the glossopharyngeal nerve, of the superior laryngeal branch, and of the first cervical ganglion. These different nervous filaments united constitute the pharyngeal plexus, the irregular meshes of which send numerous ramifications to the pharynx.

PHARYNGE'AL VOICE, see Voice.

Pharyngemphrax'is, (pharyngo, and ἐμφραξις, 'obstruction,') Obstruction of the pharynx.

Pharyn'gethron, (φάρυγεθρον,) Pharynx.

Pharyngeurys'ma, gen. Pharyngeurys'matis, (pharyngo, and τρυσμα, 'dilatation,') Pharyngo-cele.

Pharyn'gicus, (from pharynx,) Pharyngeal.

Pharyngien, Pharyngeal.

Pharyngis'mus, Pharyngospasmus.

Pharyngite, Cynanche pharyngea—p. Tonsillaire, Cynanche tonsillaris.

Pharyngi'tis, gen. Pharyngi'tidis, (pharyngo, and itis,) Cynanche pharyngea.

PHARYNGI'TIS APOSTEMATO'SA. Abscess of the pharynx.

PHARYNGI'TIS, DIPHTHERIT'IC, Angi'na pseudo-membranacea seu membrana'cea seu pellicularis seu plastica seu diphtherit'ica seu diphther'ica seu maligna seu pseudomembranosa seu pestilentialis seu fau'cium exulati'va, Pseudomembranous Inflammation or Diphtheri'tis or Diphthe'ria of the Throat, Hogskin angi'na, (F.) Angine couenneuse ou fibrineuse ou gutturale couenneuse ou pseudo-membraneuse ou plastique ou maligne ou diphthé-ritique, Herpes guttural, Diphthérie pharyngée. Diphtheritic inflammation of the pharynx. See Diphtheritis.

When diphtheria is spoken of, it is usually this affection that is meant; although the local phenomena are rather expressions of the peculiar adynamic condition, termed diphtheritic; which may destroy without much or any evidence of the pharyngeal affection. It is this adynamic condition which demands the main attention;—the pharyngeal exudation requiring but little. During convalescence, peculiar paralytic phenomena supervene at times. See Paralysis, diphtheritic. Diphtheritic pharyngitis is not new. It is manifestly the malignant sorethroat, which is described as having been so fatal—in the time of Horace Walpole, for example. See Cynanche maligna.

PHARYNGI'TIS, FOLLIC'ULAR, Follicular Inflammation of the Pharynx, Angi'na folliculo'sa and A. glandulo'sa of the Pharynx, Ac'né of the Throat. Inflammation and enlargement of the follicles of the pharynx, occasionally extending to the larynx. Sometimes termed Clergyman's Sorethroat, Rhe-soratan'che, Tu'bercles of the Larynx and Fauces, and Tuber'cular Sorethroat. See Clergymen's sorethroat.

PHARYNGI'TIS GANGRENO'SA, Cynanche maligna.

PHARYNGI'TIS LEUCÆ'MICA. Inflammation of the pharynx, involving also the lymphatic glands, and attended with an increase of the white corpuscles of the blood.

PHARYNGI'TIS MALIG'NA, Cynanche maligna.

PHARYNGI'TIS ULCERO'SA, Ul'cerative Pharyngi'tis. Inflammation of the pharynx attended with ulceration. See also Cynanche maligna.

Pharyn'go, (φάρυξ, gen. φάρυγος,) in composition, the pharynx.

Pharyngoc'ace, (pharyngo, and κακος, 'evil,') Cynanche maligna.

Pharyngoce'lè, Pharyngocèle, Pharyngeurys'ma, Divertic'ulum seu Her'nia seu Prolap'sus Œsoph'agi seu pharyng'is, Œsoph'agus succenturiatus, (from pharyngo, and κλη, 'a tumor,') An enlargement at the upper part of the gullet, in which the food sometimes rests in considerable quantity.

Pharyngodyn'ia, Pharyngal'gia, (pharyngo, and ὀδυνη, 'pain,') Pain in the pharynx.

Pharyngoglos'sal, Glossopharyng'e'al, Pharyngoglossia'nus. That which belongs to the pharynx and tongue.

PHARYNGOGLOS'SAL NERVE, Glossopharyng'e'al Nerve, Lingua'tis latera'lis, (F.) Nerv. Glossopharyngien, Pharyngoglossien—a portion of the eighth pair—arises from the superior and lateral parts of the spinal marrow, between the facial and pneumogastric nerves, by several filaments, which soon unite into a single cord, that passes out of the cranium by the foramen lacerum posterius; goes downwards and forwards, and gains the posterior and inferior part of the tongue. Immediately after its exit from the cranium, it gives a branch to the meatus auditorius externus, and receives a filament from the facial, and another from the pneumogastric nerve. It then furnishes two other filaments, which descend upon the carotid artery, and unite at the bottom of the neck with branches from the cervical ganglions and cardiac nerves, and give two filaments to the stylopharyngeus muscle. The glossopharyngeus, after sending a twig or two to the tonsil, to the upper part of the pharynx and membrane of the epiglottis, divides into many branches, which run partly to the margin, and partly to the middle of the root of the tongue; supplying, especially, the papillæ majores, and the parts in their neighborhood.

By some, this nerve is regarded as the controller of the associated motions of the tongue and pharynx. By others, it is esteemed to be the special nerve of gustation.

Pharyngog'raphy, Pharyngograph'ia, (pharyngo, and γραφη, 'a description.') An anatomical description of the pharynx.

Pharyngolaryngi'tis. Inflammation of the pharynx and larynx.

Pharyngol'ogy, Pharyngolog'ia, (pharyngo, and λογος, 'a discourse.') The part of anatomy which treats of the pharynx.

Pharyngol'ysis, (pharyngo, and λυσις, 'solution.') Pharyngoplegia.

Pharyngoparal'ysis, Pharyngoplegia.

Pharyngoperis'tolē, (pharyngo, and περιστέλλω, 'I contract.') Pharyngostenia.

Pharyngople'gia, (pharyngo, and πλησσω, 'I strike.') Dyspha'gia paralyt'ica seu tor'pida seu aton'ica, Angi'na paralyt'ica, Astheni'a Deglutitio'nis, Pharyngol'ysis, Pharyngoparal'ysis, Paral'ysis Œsoph'agi, Gul'æ Imbecil'itas. Paralysis of the pharynx or œsophagus: commonly a symptom of general paralysis, or of approaching dissolution.

Pharyngorrhag'ia, (pharyngo, and ῥαγή, 'rupture.') Hemorrhage from the vessels of the pharynx.

Pharyngos'copy, Pharyngoscop'ia, (pharyngo, and σκοπεω, 'I view.') Inspection of the pharynx.

Pharyngospas'mus, Pharyngis'mus, (pharyngo, and σπασμος, 'spasm.') Spasm or cramp of the pharynx.

Pharyngostaphyli'nus, (pharyngo, and σταφυλη, 'uvula.') Palatopharyngeus.

Pharyngosten'ia, Pharyngoperis'tolē, (pharyngo, and στενός, 'a narrowness.') Stricture or contraction of the pharynx.

Pharyngotome, Pharyngot'omus, (pharyngo, and τομή, 'incision.') An instrument, invented by J. L. Petit, used to scarify inflamed tonsils, and to open abscesses, which form in the parietes of the pharynx. It is composed of a long, narrow blade with a lancet point, inclosed in a sheath or canula of silver slightly curved. This instrument is carried to the part to be cut, and the point of the blade is made to pass out of the sheath, by pressing on a button at the end of the pharyngotome. A spring causes the blade to re-enter as soon as the pressure is removed.

Pharyngot'omy, Pharyngotom'ia. Some authors have used this word synonymously with œsophagotomy. It means, also, scarification of the tonsils, or an incision made for opening abscesses there, &c.

Phar'ynx, gen. Pharyng'is, (φαρυγξ, gen. φαρυγγος;) Phar'yx, Phar'us, Gul'æ, Læ'mus, Fau'ces, Pharyg'ethrum, Pharyng'ethron, Inglu'vies, Princip'ium gul'æ, Os pos'terum, Gur'ges, Bron'chus, (from φαρ, 'I cut or divide,') (F.) Arrière-bouche, Gosier, Gorge. A species of musculomembranous, symmetrical canal, on the median line, irregularly funnelshaped, and situate between the base of the cranium and the œsophagus, in front of the vertebral column. It is very narrow above; but dilates in the middle, and again contracts below, at its junction with the œsophagus. Into the anterior paries of the pharynx open, successively, from above to below,—the posterior orifices of the nasal fossæ; the Eustachian tubes; the posterior aperture of the mouth, and the top of the larynx. The pharynx is formed, externally, of a muscular coat, and, internally, of a mucous membrane, which is continuous, above, with the Schneiderian membrane; and in the middle, with that of the mouth; below, with that of the œsophagus; and, at the sides, with that of the Eustachian tubes. This membrane has no villi, and presents only a few inequalities, which are owing to the presence of muciparous follicles. The muscular coat of the pharynx is composed of the constrictor muscles, stylopharyngei, and pharyngostaphyliini. The vessels and nerves are called pharyngeal. The pharynx serves as a common origin for the digestive and respiratory passages. It gives passage to the air during respiration, and to the food at the time of deglutition.

PHAR'YNX, FOLLIC'ULAR INFLAMMA'TION OF THE, Pharyngitis, follicular.

Phar'yx, gen. Phar'ygis, (φαρυξ, gen. φαρυγος;) Pharynx.

Phase'lus, (φασηλος;) Phaseolus.

Phase'olus, (φασηλος, 'a small boat,') P. Vulga'ris, Phasi'olus, Phase'lus, Fase'lus, Fase'olus, Bo'na, Boo'na, Fa'ba; Kid'ney Bean; French Bean; Bush-bean, String-bean, Snap-bean, Snaps, (F.) Fuséole, Haricot. Ord. Leguminosæ. Ser. Syst. Diadelphia Decandria. When young and well boiled, the unripe pods are used as a legume. They are easy of digestion, and delicately flavored. The sweet taste of the juice is owing to the presence of mannite—phaseoman'nite. The ripe beans—haricot beans—dried, are used in soups, &c.

PHASE'OLUS CRE'TICUS, Cajan, Cayan. A decoction of the leaves, according to Ray, restrains the hemorrhoidal flux when excessive.

PHASE'OLUS VULGA'RIS, Phaseolus.

Phaseoman'nite, see Phaseolus.

Phasia'nus Gal'lus, (from the river, φασίς, in Colchis, near the Black Sea,) Cock, (F.) Coq. The parts of generation of the cock, dried and pulverized, were formerly regarded as proper for increasing the quantity of semen. The fat was used as emollient and resolvent; the brain, in diarrhœa; the gall, in freckles and diseases of the eyes. These phantasies are now abandoned.

Phasi'olus, (φασιδολος;) Phaseolus.

Phas'ma, gen. Phas'matis, (φασμα, from φαω, 'I cause to appear,') Phantasm.

Phat'nē, (φάρνη, 'a crib with divisions,') Alveolus.

Phat'nion, (dim. of phatne;) Alveolus.

Phatnorrag'h'ia, Stomatorrag'h'ia alveolo'rum, (phatne, and ῥαγνναι, 'I break forth,') Hemorrhage from the alveoli.

Phausin'ges, (φαισινγες, plural of φαισινγξ, from φαισσω, 'I roast,') Spots or blisters on the legs, produced by heat; and, in a more extensive signification, by any other cause. Also, a pustule.

Phellandre, Phellandrium aquaticum.

Phelland'rium Aquaticum, Phellandrium, (Ἐνανθέ φηλλανδρίον seu aquat'ica, Lignu'ticum phelland'rium, Fœnic'ulum aquaticum, Cicuta'ria aquatica, Wa'ter Fen'nel, Finleaved Wa'ter Hem'lock, (F.) Phellandre, Fenonil d'eau, Cigné d'eau, Millefeuille aquatique. Ord. Umbelliferae. Ser. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. This plant is stimulant and narcotic. It has been used in intermittents and dyspepsia. It has, also, been given in phthisis pulmonalis, and in cases of scrofulous atonic ulcers.

Phē'nē, Benzole.

Phengopho'bia, (φενγος, 'light,' and φοβος, 'dread,') Photophobia.

Phē'nic Ac'id, Carbolic acid.

Phen'icated, Phenica'tus, (F.) Phéniqué. Containing phenic acid.

Phéniqué, Phenicated.

Phenig'mus, (φαινιγμος;) Phœnig'mus, (from φαινει, 'purple or red,') Red Jaun'dice. A cutaneous affection, consisting of redness diffused over the skin, without fever. Sauvages makes it a genus of his order Ictericæ. Also, the act of irritating a part by a stimulating application.

Phē'nol, Carbolic acid.

Phénomène, Phenomenon.

Phenom'enon, (φαινόμενον;) Phœnom'enon, (F.)

Phénomène, (φαινόμεναι, 'I appear.') An extraordinary and unexpected event. In Medicine, it means any change, appreciable by our senses, which supervenes in an organ or function:—as the phenomena of the circulation, respiration, &c. It is used in pathology, synonymously with symptom.

Phenyl, Hydrated Oxide of, Carbolic acid—p. Hydruret of, Benzole.

Phenyl'ic Ac'id, Carbolic acid—p. Alcohol, Carbolic acid.

Phenylsulphu'ric Ac'id, Sulphocarbolic acid. Pheng'ydron, (φένγω, 'I flee,' and ὕδωρ, 'water,') Hydrophobia.

Phi'ala, Phi'al or Vi'al, (F.) Fiole, (φιάλη, φελη, 'a broad drinking cup, a saucer.') A small bottle, in which apothecaries are in the habit of sending out their mixtures, draughts, &c.: hence called Medicine Vials, (F.) Fioles à Médecine. They are usually sold in grosses, and assorted into vials of oz. 8; oz. 4; oz. 3; oz. 2; oz. 1½; oz. 1; and oz. ½.

Philadynam'ica, (philo, a, and δύναμις, 'power,') Debilitants.

Philanthro'pus, (philo, and ἀνθρωπος, 'man,') Galium aparine.

Philia'ter, gen. Philia'tri, Philia'tros, (φιλιατρος, philo, and ιατρικη, 'medicine,') An amateur of medicine. One who studies medicine, Studio'sus medic'inæ.

Phi'lo, (φίλω, 'I love,') in composition, love. Philobio'sis, (F.) Philobiosie, (philo, and βίος, 'life,') The love of life.

Philœ'nia, (φιλωνία, from philo, and οἶνος, 'wine,') Love of wine. Addiction to wine.

Philogyn'ia, (φιλогυνία, from philo, and γυνή, 'a woman,') Muliebrositas.

Philo'nium Londinen'sē, (after its proposer, Philo,) Confectio opii.

Philopatridal'gia, (philo, πατρις, 'one's country,' and αλγος, 'pain,') Nostalgia.

Philopatridoma'nia, (philo, πατρις, 'one's country,' and mania,) Nostalgia.

Philos'opher's Stone, see Alchemy.

Philosoph'ia Cor'poris Vi'vi, Physiology—p. Hermetica, Alchemy—p. per Ignem, Chemistry.

Phil'ter, (φίλτρον, from φίλω, 'I love,') Phil'trum, Phar'macum seu Poc'ulum amato'rium, Amato'rium venefic'ium, (F.) Philtre. A medicine or drink considered capable of causing love.

Phil'trum, Lacuna labii superioris.

Phily'ra, Tilia.

Phily'rea Latifo'lia, (after Phily'ra, 'mother of Chiron,') A shrub of the south of France and Spain, Ord. Oleaceæ, whose leaves have been used as an astringent in ulcers of the mouth and throat. The flowers, steeped in vinegar, have been applied to the head in headache. The decoction of the leaves is said to be diuretic.

Phi'mos, (φίμος,) Capistrum.

Phimo'sicus. Relating to Phimos. Sauvages calls Ischu'ria phimo'sica seu urethra'lis à phimo'si, the retention of urine which depends upon phimos.

Phimo'sis, improperly Phymo'sis, Capistra'tio, Epago'gium, Ligatu'ra glan'dis, Strictu'ra præput'ii, Reductio præput'ii impedi'ta, (φίμω, 'I bind tight,') A disease which consists in a preternatural narrowness of the opening of the prepuce, so that it cannot be carried behind the corona glandis. This affection is most commonly congenital. Sometimes it is accidental, and dependent upon tumefaction of the glans, or of the prepuce, as occurs in syphilis. To remedy this state, the prepuce may be divided by means of a bistoury and director; or circumcision may be practised.

PHIMO'SIS ADNA'TA seu CONGEN'ITA seu PUERI'LIS. Congenital phimos.

PHIMO'SIS CIRCUMLIGA'TA, Paraphimosis—p. Congenita, P. adnata.

PHIMO'SIS ŒDEMATO'DES, Hydrophimo'sis. Phimos with oedematous swelling of the prepuce.

PHIMO'SIS PUERI'LIS, P. adnata.

Phlas'ma, gen. Phlasm'atis, (φλάσμα, from φλάω, 'I bruise,') Contusion.

Phlebarteriodial'ysis, (phlebo, αρτηρία, 'artery,' and διαλύσις, 'a losing or separating,') see Aneurism.

Phlebec'tasia, Phlebec'tasis, Phlebec'tasy, (phlebo, and εκτασις, 'dilatation,') Dilatation of a vein, or of a portion of a vein.

Phlebec'tasis, Phlebectasia—p. Hæmorrhoidalis, Hæmorrhoids.

Phlebec'tasy, Phlebectasia.

Phlébectiaretic, (phlebo, and αρετο, 'I contract,') Contraction of a vein.

Phlebemphrax'is, (phlebo, and εμφραξις, 'obstruction,') Obstruction of a vein.

Phleb'es, pl. of Phlebs, (φλεβες,) see Artery.

Phlebeurys'ma, gen. Phlebeurysm'atis, (phlebo, and ευρύσμα, 'dilatation,') Varix.

Phleb'icus, (φλεβικός,) Relating or appertaining to a vein.

Phleb'ion, (φλεβιον, —dim. of phlebs.) A vein. A small vein, — Ve'nula.

Phlebis'mus, (from phlebs.) A term employed by Dr. Marshall Hall for the turgescence of veins, produced by impeded return of the blood. See Trachelismus.

Phlebi'tis, gen. Phlebi'tidis, Inflammat'io vena'rum, (F.) Phlébite, Inflammation des veines, (phlebo, and itis.) Inflammation of the inner membrane of a vein, Endophlebi'tis, which sometimes follows bloodletting, and extends from the small wound made in that operation to the neighboring parts of the venous system. The symptoms are, first, inflammation in the punctured part; and afterwards, a knotty, tense, painful cord, following the direction of the vessel, and accompanied with more or less fever, according to the extent of the inflammation, the nervous symptoms, &c. Phlebitis, also, sometimes supervenes on the ligature or excision of the varices; after amputation, gunshot wounds, delivery (U'terine Phlebitis, Po'chometrophlebi'tis, Metrophlebi'tis puerpera'lis, Phlebi'tis uteri'na, Metri'tis veno'sa), the ligature of the umbilical cord, &c. It may terminate by resolution, suppuration, ulceration, or gangrene. Sometimes when a clot forms in a vein, and the vessel becomes permanently obliterated, the clot and vein ultimately contracting, so as to form a firm cord, it constitutes adhesive phlebitis.

PHLEBI'TIS, ADHESIVE, see Phlebitis—p. Cru'al, Phlegmatia dolens—p. Uterina, see Peritonitis, and Phlebitis.

Phleb'o, (φλεβ, gen. φλεβος, 'a vein,') In composition, a vein.

Phlebog'enous, (φλεψ, gen. φλεβος, 'a vein,' and γένωω, 'I generate,') A term applied to angiomatous tumors—phlebog'enous angio'mata—which are in communication with large venous trunks.

Phlebog'raphy, Phlebograph'ia, (phlebo, and γραφή, 'a description,') A description of the veins.

Phleb'olite, Phlebolithus, Vein stone, (F.) Phlébolithe, (phlebo, and λίθος, 'a stone,') A loose concretion, varying in size from that of a currant to that of a pea, occasionally found in the veins. It would seem to be formed in the blood.

Phlebolithus, Phlebolite.

Phlebol'ogy, Phlebolog'ia, (phlebo, and λογος, 'a discourse,') The part of anatomy which treats of the veins.

Phlebometri'tis, (phlebo, and metritis,) Metrophlebitis.

Phlebopa'lia, (phlebo, and παλλω, 'I palpitate,') With the ancients, pulsation, which they conceived to be produced by the veins. See Pulsus venarum.

Phlebophthalmotom'ia, Ophthalmophlebotom'ia, (phlebo, οφθαλμος, 'the eye,' and τομή, 'incision.') Bloodletting in the eye.

Phleboplerosis, Eophrac'tica, (phlebo, and πληρωσις, 'fulness,') Inflammation.

Phleborrhag'ia, (φλεβορραγία, from phlebo, and ῥήγνυμι, 'I break out.') Rupture of the veins; and, in a more extensive sense, venous hemorrhage.

Phleborrhex'is, (phlebo, and ῥήξις, 'rupture.') Rupture of a vein. Also, hemorrhage from a vein, Phleborrhag'ia.

Phlebostenosis, (phlebo, and στενωσις, 'contraction.') Constriction or contraction of a vein.

Phlebothrombosis, (phlebo, and thrombosis.) Coagulation of blood in a vein.

PHLEBOTHROMBOSIS PUERPERA'LIS, Phlegmatia dolens.

Phlebotomom'ania, Phlebotomania, (phlebotomy, and mania.) An extravagant estimate of the value of bloodletting as a curative agent.

Phlebotomist, (phlebo, and τομή, 'incision.') A bleeder. One who practises particularly the art of phlebotomy. See Bloodletting.

Phlebotomum, (φλεβοτομον.) Fleam.

Phlebotomy, (φλεβοτομία.) see Bloodletting.

Phlebs, gen. Phlé'bis, (φλεψ, gen. φλεβος.) Vein.

Phledo'nia, (φλεδονία, from φλεω, 'I talk idly,') Delirium.

Phlegm, (φlegma.) Phleg'ma, Pituita, Pit'uite, Mucus, Moth'er, (F.) Phlegme, Pituite. One of the four natural humors of the ancients, which, according to them, was cold and moist, as atrabilis was cold and dry. It predominated especially in winter.

Pituita was afterwards applied to every aqueous or excrementitious humor, such as the saliva, nasal and intestinal mucus, serum, &c. The terms phlegm and pituita are no longer used in physiology,—the different humors having received particular names; but the vulgar still use phlegm to designate a stringy mucus, expectorated or rejected by vomiting. The ancient chemists gave the name 'phlegm' to aqueous, insipid, and inodorous products obtained by subjecting moist vegetable matters to the action of heat.

Phleg'ma, gen. Phleg'matis, (φlegma, gen. φλεγματος.) Phlegm—p. Narium crassum, Nasal mucus—p. Vitriol, Sulphuric acid (very dilute).

Phleg'magogue, Phlegmago'gus, (phlegma, and αγω, 'I expel.') A medicine formerly believed capable of 'cutting' or removing phlegm.

Phlegmap'ya, (phlegma, and πυρ, 'fire, fever,') Fever, adenomeningeal.

Phlegmasia, (φλεγμασία, from φλεω, 'I inflame,') Inflammation. Phlegmon—p. Adenosa, Adenitis, Phlegmasia alba—p. Alba dolens puerperarum, P. dolens—p. Cellularis, Induration of the cellular tissue—p. Glandulosa, Adenitis—p. Myoica, Myositis—p. of the Peritoneum, Peritonitis.

Phlegmasique, Inflammatory.

Phlegma'tia, (from phlegma.) (F.) Phlegmatie. Edema, Anasarca, Hydrops.

PHLEGMA'TIA DO'LENS, P. lac'tea seu al'ba dolens seu Leucophlegma'sia dolens seu Spargano'sis seu Scelal'gia seu Ede'ma puerpera'rum, Phlebothrombosis puerperalis, Scelon'cus anasar'ca sero'sa, Eophy'na ademat'icum, Eechymo'ma lymphat'icum, Is'chias à spargano'si, Ede'ma lac'teum, Galactode'ma, Infarc'tus lac'tei extremitat'um, Metas'tasis lactis, Hyster'al'gia galact'ica, Hydrophlegma'sia text'us cellulo'si, Oru'ral phlebitis, White leg, Swelled leg, Milk leg, White swelling of lying-in women, (F.) Phlegmatie puerpérale, Eedème des nouvelles accouchées, Eedème douloureux des femmes en couche, Dépôt laiteux sur la cuisse, Eedème actif des nouvelles accouchées, Enflure ou Engorgement des jambes et des cuisses de la femme accouchée, E. laiteuse des membres ab- dominaux. It occurs, for the most part, in the second or third week after delivery:—is limited to the lower extremity, and chiefly to one side; exhibiting to the touch a feeling of numerous irregular prominences under the skin. It is hot, white, and unyielding; and is accompanied, sooner or later, with febrile excitement. After a few days, the heat, hardness, and sensibility diminish, and the limb remains oedematous for a longer or shorter period. The disease frequently, if not generally, consists in the obstruction of the iliac or other veins. Owing to the pressure of the gravid uterus—the flow of blood being obstructed—the liquid part of it is thrown out into the cellular membrane of the limb. Sometimes the vein is found completely obliterated.

The treatment consists in the use of antiphlogistics:—the application of leeches or cupping-glasses near the groin, fomentations to the limb, &c.; and, when the active state has subsided, the use of a roller, applied gently at first, but, afterwards, gradually tightened.

PHLEGMA'TIA LAC'TEA, P. dolens.

Phlegma'tiæ, see Empresma—p. Membranosæ et parenchymatosæ, Empresma.

Phlegmat'ic, (φλεγματικός.) Phlegmat'icus, Phlegmato'des, (F.) Phlegmatique. Abounding in phlegm,—as the phlegmatic or lymphatic temperament.

Phlegmatic, Phlegmatia—p. Puerpérale, Phlegmatia dolens.

Phlegmato'des, (φλεγματοδής, from phlegma, and odes.) Full of inflammation or phlegm.

Phlegmatoch'emy, (phlegma, and χημεία, 'chemistry,') see Chymistry.

Phlegmatop'ya, (phlegma, and πυρ, 'fire, fever,') Fever, adenomeningeal.

Phlegmatorrhag'ia, Phlegmatorrhœ'a, Catarrh', (phlegma, and ῥαγή, 'a breaking forth,') Stahl and his partisans gave this name to a copious secretion, by the nostrils, of a limpid and thin mucus, without inflammation. It is the Coryza phlegmatorrhag'ia of Sauvages. See Coryza.

Phlegmatorrhœ'a, (phlegma, and ῥεω, 'I flow,') Catarrh.

Phlegmhymenitis, Phlegmymenitis.

Phleg'mon, (φlegw, 'I burn,') Phlego'sis, phlegmonē, Phleg'monē, Phlegma'sia, Incen'dium, Inflammat'io, (Prov.) Beal. Inflammation of the areolar texture accompanied with redness, circumscribed swelling, increased heat and pain; which is, at first, tensive and lancinating; afterwards pulsatory and heavy. It is apt to terminate in suppuration. It requires the antiphlogistic treatment, until suppuration seems inevitable, when the suppuration must be encouraged as the next favorable termination to resolution.

Phlegmon Périnéphrétique, Perinephritis—p. Periuterine, see Periuterine, and Parametritis.

Phleg'moné, (φλεγμονή.) Inflammation, Phlegmon—p. Mammæ, Mastodynia apostematosa—p. Mastodynia, Mastodynia apostematosa—p. Musculorum, Myositis—p. Parotidæa, Parotis—p. Parulis, Parulis—p. Pelvicæ, see Parametritis—p. Peritonæi, Peritonitis—p. Ventriculi, Gastritis.

Phlegmonœux, Phlegmonous.

Phlegmono'des, (φλεγμονωδής.) Phlegmonous.

Phlegmonoid, (phlegmon, and ειδός, 'resemblance,') Resembling phlegmon.

Phleg'monous, Phlegmono'des, Phleg'monoid, (F.) Phlegmonœux, (from phlegmon.) That which relates or belongs to phlegmon.

PHLEG'MONOUS INFLAMMA'TION is the active inflammation of the areolar membrane; in contradistinction to erysipelatous inflammation, or that of the skin.

Phlegmop'ya, (phlegma, and πυρ, 'fire, fever,') Fever, adenomeningeal.

Phlegmorrhag'ia, (phlegma, and ῥαγή, 'a breaking forth,') Blennorrhœa.

Phlegmorrhagic Pulmonaire, Bronchorrhœa. Phlegmorrhœa, (phlegma, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') Blennorrhœa.

Phlegmymenitis, gen. Phlegmymenitidis, Phlegmymenitis, (phlegma, ὑμνη, 'a membrane,' and itis.) Inflammation of a mucous membrane.

PHLEGMYMENTIS ENTERICA, see Enteritis.

Phleme, Lancet.

Phleps, (φλεψ, gen. φλεβος.) Vein.

Phlogœmia, (phlogia, and αἷμα, 'blood,') see Hæmitis.

Phlogia, (φλογια.) Inflammation.

Phlogicus, (from phlogia.) Inflammatory.

Phlogistic, (from phlogia.) Inflammatory.

Phlogistici, Empresma.

Phlogiston, (φλογισμ, 'I burn,') Hydrogen.

Phlogmus, Verbascum thapsus.

Phlogodes, (from phlogia, and odes.) Inflamed, Inflammatus, Inflammatorius. Inflammatory. An epithet employed particularly to express the red color of the face.

Phlogogene, (φλογ, gen. φλογος, 'flame,' and γενω, 'I beget,') Hydrogen.

Phlogogenous, (φλογια, 'inflammation,' and γεννω, 'I produce,') Exciting inflammation, as the action of pus after wounds.

Phlogopyra, (φλογ, gen. φλογος, 'flame,' and πυρ, 'fever,') Synocha.

Phlogosé, Inflamed.

Phlogosed, Inflamed.

Phlogosis, (φλογωσις.) Incedidum, Inflammation, (from phlogia.) Some writers use this word exclusively for external inflammation — phlegmon; others, for that which is superficial or erysipelatous.

Phlogotica, Inflammationes. The second order in the class Hæmatica of Good.

Phloi'os, (φλοιος.) Cortex.

Phlo'mus, Verbascum thapsus.

Phlo'os, (φλοος.) Cortex.

Phloridzine, Phloridzin, Phloridzin, (from phloos, and ρίζα, 'root,') The bitter or active principle of the root and trunk of the apple, pear, cherry, and plum tree. It is deposited from the decoction on cooling; crystallizes in silky spicula of a dead white color when in masses; or in long slender prisms or tables, when crystallized with care. It is very soluble in pure alcohol, but only slightly so in ether; s. g. 1.429. It has been administered successfully in intermittents, — 10 to 20 grains being generally required to arrest the paroxysm. It may be given either in the form of pill or powder.

Phloos, (φλοος.) Cortex.

Phlox, Verbascum thapsus.

Phlyctæna, (φλυκταῖνα, from φλυω, 'I bubble up,') Phlyctænis, Phlyctis, Phlyza'cion, Ampull'a, Holophlyctis, Phly'sis, (F.) Phlyctène. A tumor formed by the accumulation of a serous fluid under the epidermis.

Phlyctænoïdes, (φλυκταῖνοειδής.) Phlyctenoid.

Phlyctænoophthal'mia, see Phlyctenular.

Phlyctæno'sis, (φλυκταῖνωσις.) The formation of phlyctenæ. Under Phlyctæno'ses, Hebra includes herpes, miliaria, and pemphigus acutus.

Phlyctæ'nula, (dim. of phlyctæna.) see Hydatid and Phlyctenular.

Phlyctène, Phlyctæna.

Phlyctenoid, Phlyctænoïdes, (phlyctæna, and αἶδος, 'resemblance,') Resembling phlyctæna. An epithet for a variety of herpes.

Phlycten'ular, (from phlyctenula.) Of or belonging to phlyctenula, — as phlyctenular ophthalmia; inflammation of the eye, accompanied with phlyctenulæ on the cornea, phlyctenophthalmia, Phlycten'ular cornœitis, Scrofulous ophthalmia of writers.

Phlyctides, (pl. of phlyctis.) Phlyctenæ.

Phlyctid'ium, (dim. of phlyctis.) A circular or annular spot of inflammation of the corium, encircled by a red ring or zone, within which supuration takes place. The genuine small-pox pustule, and that produced by the application of tartar emetic ointment, are examples of it.

Phlyc'tis, gen. Phlyc'tidis, (φλυκτις.) Phlyctæna.

Phly'sis, (φλυσις, from φλυω, 'I bubble up,') A cutaneous eruption. An ulcerative, subcutaneous tumor: flat, tensile, glabrous: diffused, hot, throbbing; at length fluctuating, with an acrid ichor.

PHLY'SIS, Phlyctæna — p. Ecthyma, Ecthyma — p. Impetigo, Impetigo — p. Porrigo, Porrigo — p. Scabies, Psora.

Phlyza'cia, Ecthyma.

Phlyza'cion, (φλυζακίον, from φλυζω, 'I bubble up,') Phlyctæna.

Phobodip'son, (φοβοδιψον, from φοβος, 'dread,' and διψα, 'thirst,') Hydrophobia.

Phocom'elus, (φωκη, 'a seal,' and μελος, 'a limb,') A monster, in which the limbs are shortened; the hands and feet appearing to exist alone, and to be inserted immediately on the trunk, as in the seal and the herbivorous cetacea.

Phœ'nicine, (φοινίξ, gen. φοινικος, 'red,') Hæmatin.

Phœnicis'mus, (φοινίξ, gen. φοινικος, 'red,') Rubeola.

Phœnig'mus, (φοινιγμος.) Phenigmus — p. Petechialis, Purpura simplex.

Phœ'nix (gen. Phœni'cis) Dactylifera, (φοινίξ.) Date tree — p. Excelsa, Date tree.

Phœ'nodine, (from φοινωδής, 'blood red,') Hæmatin.

Phonas'cia, (φωνη, 'voice,' and ασκειν, 'to exercise,') The art of exercising the voice.

Phona'tion, Phona'tio, Phone'sis, Phono'sis, (from phone.) The physiology of the voice.

Pho'nē, (φωνη.) Voice.

Phone'sis, Phonation.

Phonet'ic, Phonet'icus, Pho'nic, Pho'nicus, (F.) Phonétique, Phonique, (φωνητικός, from φωνη, 'sound,' 'voice,') Relating or appertaining to sound or to the voice. See Paralysis, phonetic.

Pho'nica, (φωνικά, from phone.) The first order of the class Pneumatica, in Good's nosology. Defined: diseases affecting the vocal avenues: — the passage of the voice impeded, or its power suppressed or depraved.

Pho'nics, see Acoustics.

Phonique, Phonetic.

Phonon'osi, Phononu'si, (phone, and νοσος, 'a disease,') Phonopathi'æ, Mor'bi vo'cis. Diseases of the voice.

Phononu'si, (phone, and νοσος, 'disease,') Phononosi.

Phono'sis, Phonation.

Phonopathi'æ, (phone, and παθος, 'affection,') Phononosi.

Pho'ra, (φορά.) Gestation.

Phor'bē, (φορβη.) Pabulum.

Phor'mia, Pseudomorphia.

Phoronom'ia, (φέρω, 'I move,' and νομος, 'law,') The doctrine of muscular motion.

Phor'ous, (φορος, from φέρω, 'I move or carry,') A suffix denoting conveyance. Hence, Galactophorous, &c.

Phos, (φως, gen. φωτος.) Light.

Phos'phas, gen. Phospha'tis, Phos'phate. A salt formed by the union of phosphoric acid with a salifiable base.

PHOS'PHAS CAL'CICUM STIBIA'TUM, Antimonial powder — p. Calcis stibiatum, Antimonial powder — p. Natricum, Soda, phosphate of.

Phos'phate, Phosphas — p. de Chaux, Calcis phosphas — p. de Fer, Ferri phosphas — p. Ferroso-ferrique, Ferri phosphas — p. de Soude, Sodæ phosphas — p. Triple, see Calculi, urinary.

Phos'phates, Wheat, see Wheat.

Phosphat'ic, Phosphat'icus, (F.) Phosphatique,

(from Phosphorus.) Relating to the phosphates; hence the Phosphatic Diathesis is the habit of body which favors or occasions the deposition of the phosphates from the urine.

Phosphène, (phos, and φαίνω, 'I become manifest,') Photopsia.

Phosphorated, Phosphoratus, Phosphureted, (F.) Phosphoré. Combined or impregnated with phosphorus.

Phosphore, Phosphorus.

Phosphoré, Phosphorated.

Phosphorénèses. M. Baumes unites, under this generic name, diseases which he attributes to disordered phosphorization; i. e. to excess or deficiency of calcareous phosphates or their decomposition. Among these affections he ranks rachitis, osteomalacia, and gout.

Phosphorescence, Phosphorescentia, Luminosity, (from phosphorus.) The properties possessed by certain bodies of being luminous in obscurity, or under particular circumstances. This phosphorescence has been occasionally witnessed in man, when suffering from some wasting disease, and near death.

Phosphoric Acid, Ac'idum phosphoricum, (F.) Acide phosphorique. A solid, colorless compound; highly sapid; very soluble in water, and vitrifiable by fire. It exists in bones combined with lime. It has been employed in medicine in the form of lemonade, in passive hemorrhage, typhus, phthisis, marasmus, &c., and in injection in cases of cancer of the uterus. It does not seem preferable to other acids. Acidum phosphoricum glaciale and Acidum phosphoricum dilutum are official in the Pharmacopœia of the United States of 1873. See Pyrophosphoric acid.

Phosphoris'mus, see Phosphorus.

Phosphoronecrosis, (phosphorus, and necrosis.) see Phosphorus.

Phosphoruria, (phosphorus, and ουρον, 'urine,') Urine, phosphorescent. Also, urine containing an excess of phosphates. See Urine.

Phosphorus, (φωσφορος, 'a lightbearer,' from phos, and φέρω, 'I carry,') Phosphorum, Autophosphorus, Ignis philosophicus, Lumen constantis, (φως, 'light,' and φέρω, 'I carry,') (F.) Phosphore. An elementary, simple, or undecomposed substance; not metallic; solid; transparent or semitransparent; colorless; brilliant; flexible; of a sensible garlic odor; very inflammable, and susceptible of combining with the oxygen of the atmosphere, at even the ordinary temperature. S. g. 1.77. It does not exist pure in nature, but is found frequently united to other bodies. Its fumes in the manufacture of lucifer and Congreve matches cause, it is said, a form of necrosis of the lower jaw — Phosphoronecrosis, Necrosis maxillæ ex Phosphoro, Phosphorus jaw disease, Phosphorus necrosis, Lucifermatch-makers' Disease, Matches' Disease. The term Phosphorismus has been applied to the toxic effects of phosphorus on the general system.

Phosphorus has been used in medicine, dissolved in ether or suspended in the yolk of egg, as a stimulant; but the greatest precautions are necessary in its administration: hence it is rarely employed. It is usually given in oily solution, as in almond oil, Oleum Phosphoratum, (F.) Huile Phosphorée.

PHOSPHORUS JAW DISEASE, see Phosphorus — p. Necrosis, see Phosphorus.

Phosphureted, Phosphorated.

Phosphuria, (phosphorus, and ουρον, 'urine,') Urine, phosphorescent. Also, urine containing an excess of phosphates. See Urine.

Phosphypostasis, (phosphas, and πρωσις, 'a sediment,') (F.) Phosphypostase. A deposition of phosphates in the organism.

Photic, Photicus, (from phos.) Relating or appertaining to light, and to the acts concerned in its production in the lower animals.

Photocamp'sis, (phos, and καμψις, 'bending,') Refraction.

Photomania, (phos, and mania.) Insane delirium induced by light.

Photophobia, Phenophobia, (phos, and φοβος, 'fear,') Aversion to light; intolerance of light. Nyctalopia.

Photophobia, Lucifugus.

Photophobophtalmia, (from phos, φοβος, 'dread,' and ophthalmia.) Ophthalmia with great intolerance of light.

Photophobus, Lucifugus.

Photopsia, Vision lucidus, Spintherismus, (phos, and ωψ, 'the eye,') A false perception of light, as of sparks, flashes of fire, &c., occasioned by certain conditions of the retina and brain, and by pressure on the eyeball. When pressure does not induce the luminous appearance, (F.) Phosphène, the existence of amaurosis may be inferred. See Metamorphopsia.

Photuria, (phos, and ουρον, 'urine,') A luminous condition of the urine.

Phragmus, (φραγμος, 'a fence,' from φρασσω, 'I inclose,') A row of teeth.

Phra'sis, (φρασις.) Voice, articulated.

Phra'sum, Marrubium.

Phren, gen. Phren'is, (φρεν, 'the mind,' and the organ of the mind.) Also, the diaphragm and serobiculus cordis.

Phrenatrophia, Atrophia cerebri, (phren, a priv., and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Wasting or atrophy of the brain.

Phrenaux'e, Hypertrophia cerebri, (phren, and αύξη, 'increase,') Hypertrophy of the brain.

Phren'es, (φρενες.) Diaphragm.

Phrene'sia, (from phren.) Phrenitis.

Phrénésie, Phrenitis.

Phrene'sis, (φρενησις.) Delirium, Phrenitis.

Phrenet'asis, Delirium, Phrenitis.

Phrenetic, (φρενητικός.) Phreneticus, Phreneticus, Phrenetic, (F.) Phrénétique. Relating or appertaining to phrenitis; frantic; mad.

Phrenetis'mus, Phrenitis.

Phren'ic, (from phren.) Diaphragmatic — p. Centre, Centre, phrenic.

Phren'ica, (from phren.) Diseases affecting the intellect; characterized by error, perversion, or debility of one or more of the mental faculties, (Phrenopathia.) The first order of the class Neurotica of Good. Also, remedies that affect the mental faculties — Phren'ics.

Phren'ics, see Phrenica.

Phrenic'ula or Phrenetic'ula Hydrocephal'ica, Hydrocephalus internus.

Phrénique, Diaphragmatic.

Phrenis'mus, Phrenitis.

Phrenit'icus, (φρενητικός.) Phrenetic.

Phrenitis, gen. Phrenitidis, (φρενιτις, gen. φρενιτιδος.) Phrene'sis, Phrene'sia, Phrenet'asis, Phrenis'mus, Phrenetis'mus, Cephalitis, Encephalitis, Cerebritis, Cephalalgia inflammato'ria, Karabitus (Arab.), Sibare, Sphacelis'mus cerebri, Empres'ma cephalitis, Siri'asis, Seiri'asis, Sideratio, Inflammatio seu Caum'a phrenitis, Phren'sy, Frenzy, Delirium, Brain Fever, (F.) Phrénésie, Cérébrite, Inflammation du cerveau et du cervelet, (from phren, and itis.) A disease characterized by violent pyrexia, pain in the head, redness of the face and eyes, intolerance of light and sound, watchfulness, and delirium, either furious or muttering. Its causes are the same as those of other inflammations: sometimes, however, it is induced by a coup-de-soleil; by inebriation; violent mental emotions, &c. Some authors have given the name Phrenitis and Meningitis to inflammation of the membranes of the brain; and that of Cephalitis, Encephalitis, or Cerebritis to inflammation of the substance of the brain; but there are no pathognomonic symptoms, which can lead us to refer the seat of the disease to either of those parts exclusively. The most active treatment must be pursued; repeated bleeding; purging; the application of ice to the shaved head; the head raised; avoidance of irritation of every kind. Afterwards, counterirritants to the nape of the neck or to other parts of the body will be useful adjuvants. When the brain and meninges were affected only, symptomatically, as in inflammation of the diaphragm, the disease was formerly called Paraphrenitis.—Hydrocephalus acutus is a variety of phrenitis.

PHRENI'TIS CALENTU'RA, Coup-de-soleil — p. Latrans, Hydrophobia — p. Potatorum, Delirium tremens — p. Verminosa, Vercoquin.

Phrenoglot'tism, Asthma thymicum.

Phrenograph, (φρη, 'the diaphragm,' and γραφω, 'I write.') An apparatus devised by Rosenthal for noting the arrest of respiration in galvanization of the pneumogastric nerve after section.

Phrenolog'ical, Phrenolog'icus, (F.) Phréno-logique, (phren, and λογος, 'a discourse.') Relating or appertaining to phrenology.

Phrenol'ogy, (phren, and λογος, 'a discourse,') Craniology.

Phrenomag'netism, Phrenomes'merism, Mes'merophrenol'ogy. The condition of a mesmerized person, in which, when any phrenological organ — so called — is touched, its functions are manifested. It has been established that no such phenomena can be elicited in children, or in those who have never seen a phrenological cast or picture.

Phrenoparal'ysis, (phren, 'the mind,' and παρ'αλ'υσις, 'see Paralysis.

Phrenopathi'a, (phren, 'the mind,' and παθος, 'affection,') see Phrenica.

PHRENOPATHI'A ÆTHE'REA. The encephalic phenomena induced by inhalation of ether.

Phren'sy, (from phrenesis,) Insanity, Phrenitis. See Mania.

Phricas'mus, (φρικασμος,) Horripilation.

Phri'cē, (φρικη,) Horripilation.

Phri'cia, Horripilation.

Phrici'asis, (φρικασις,) Horripilation.

Phrico'des (Fe'bris), (φρικωδης, from φρικη, 'a shivering,' and οδης,) Febris Horrifica. A fever in which the chill is very intense and prolonged.

Phryg'ius (La'pis). An earthy matter found in Phrygia and Cappadocia, and formerly employed as an astringent.

Phthar'ma (gen. Phthar'matis) Caligo, (φθαρμα, 'anything spoiled,') Caligo — p. Cataracta, Cataract — p. Glaucoma, Glaucoma.

Phthar'tious, (φθαρτικός, from φθειρω, 'I destroy,') Deleterious.

Phtheir, gen. Phtheir'is, (φθειρ,) Pediculus.

Phtheiræ'mia, (φθειραια, 'I corrupt,' and αίμα, 'blood,') A state in which the plastic powers of the blood are deteriorated.

Phtheiri'asis, Phthiri'asis, (φθειριασις, from φθειρ,) Morbus pediculus seu pedicula'ris, Pruri'go pedicula'ris, Pedicula'tio, Mal'is pediculi, Peta'lē, Lou'siness, Lou'sy disease, (F.) Maladie pédiculaire, Phthiriasis. A disease which consists in the excessive multiplication of lice, Pediculi tabescen'tium, on the human body, under conditions in which it does not ordinarily take place, and in spite of cleanliness. Simple and medicated baths have been recommended for its removal; lotions of decoction or infusion of tobacco and stavesacre, mercurial frictions, &c.

Phtheir'ium, (from phtheir,) Delphinium staphisagria.

Phtheirot'onum, (phtheir, and κτανω, 'I kill,') Delphinium staphisagria.

Phthi'nas, (φθινας,) Phthisis.

Phthino'des, (φθινωδης,) Phthisicus.

Phthin'oplasm, (φθινω, 'I waste,' and πλασσω, 'I form,') A degradation of the natural bioplasm or germinal matter, chiefly in the lungs and lymphatic system, with a low-lived but proliferating matter, which clogs and irritates the tissues, and involves them in its disintegration and destruction. (Dr. C. J. B. Williams.) It is thus a substitute for the word tubercle, which is inapplicable to all the forms of degeneration causing phthisis.

Phthinopo'ron, (φθινοπωρον, from φθινω, 'I decay,' and οπωρα, 'the beginning of autumn,') see Autumn.

Phthino'sis, (φθινω, 'I waste,') Decay or waste, as the phthinosi's of plasms in phthisis pulmonalis.

Phthiriase, (from φθειρ,) Phtheiri'asis.

Phthiri'asis, Malis, Phtheiri'asis.

Phthi'rium Sca'biei, see Psora.

Phthi'rius, Antiparasitic — p. Inguinalis, see Pediculus.

Phthirot'onus, (φθειρω, 'I destroy,' and τεκνον, 'a child,') Abortive.

Phthi'ses, (φθινω, 'I waste away,') In the classification of Fuchs, diseases attended with ulceration, hectic fever, and emaciation.

Phthi'sic, Phthisis. Also, a slight tickling cough, (Prov.) Tissick.

Phthi'sical, Phthisicus.

Phthi'sici (Mor'bi), in the classification of Dr. Wm. Farr, tubercular diseases.

Phthi'sicus, (φθινωσις,) Phthino'des, Phthi'sical, Tis'ical, (F.) Phthisique, Poitrinaire. Belonging to phthisis. Also, one laboring under phthisis, or who is consumptive.

Phthisiol'ogy, Phthisiolog'ia, (phthisis, and λογος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on phthisis.

Phthisio'sus, Affected with phthisis.

Phthisipneumo'nia, Phthisis pulmonalis.

Phthisique, Phthisicus.

Phthi'sis, (φθισις, from φθινω, 'I waste away,') Phtho'ē, Phthi'nas, Ta'bes, Te'cedon, Consumption, Decline, Phthi'sic, Tis'ic. In a general sense, progressive emaciation. It is usually, however, restricted to phthisis pulmonalis.

PHTHI'SIS ACU'TA, Consumption, galloping, see Phthisis pulmonalis — p. Albuminous, see Phthisis pulmonalis — p. Black, see Anthracosis, Miners' Asthma.

PHTHI'SIS BRON'CHIAL, Bronchial Consumption, Phthisis bronchia'lis. Phthisis occasioned by the pressure of enlarged tuberculous bronchial glands, which, not unfrequently, communicate with caverns in the lungs, or with the bronchia.

PHTHI'SIS BUL'BI. A wasting of the eyeball, the result of inflammation of the internal membranes of the eye, usually a purulent irido-choroiditis. Von Graefe has described a form of essential wasting of the ball, under the name Essential Phthi'sis bulbi, (F.) Phthisie essentielle, in which there is sudden and marked reduction in tension, without any pathological change in the interior of the eye, the ball gradually returning to the normal pressure.

PHTHI'SIS CALCULO'SA, Lithiasis pulmonum.

PHTHI'SIS CAN'CE'ROUS, Scirrhus, Carcino'ma et Fungus Pulmo'num, Medullary or Encephaloid Tu'mor of the Lung, (F.) Cancer du Pommom. Cancer of the Lung, which gives rise to carcinomatous phthisis, (F.) Phthisie carcinomatense.

Tuberculo'sis Pulmo'num, Gongrophthisis, Mor'bus Ang'licus, Tuber'culous or Tuber'cular disease of the lungs, Pul'monary consump'tion, Consump'tion, C. of the lungs, Decline', Phthisic, Tis'ic, (Sc.) Tea'sick, (F.) Phthisie, P. pulmonaire ou tuberculeuse, Crachement de pus*. Until recently the view has been universal, that pulmonary phthisis consists in the formation of tubercles in the lungs, which sooner or later soften and break down. According to the Nomenclature of the Royal College of Physicians of London, Phthisis now includes two general varieties. 1. As allied to scrophula: general constitutional disease with or without scrophula, Tuber'culo-pneumonic and tuber'cular phthisis. 2. Destructive disintegration of pulmonary tissue, having its source in chronic or acute pneumonia, Acute and chronic pneumonic phthisis. According to the most recent theories of the nature of phthisis pulmonalis, the affection may occur in non-tuberculous persons, who may never become tuberculous; it may be caused by chronic inflammatory processes in the lungs, such as bronchial catarrh, and especially chronic catarrhal pneumonia, &c., which is preceded by bronchitis, the air-cells and smaller air-cells being next involved and filled with the products of the inflammatory processes. The solid structures may gradually undergo a cheesy or caseous degeneration, (F.) Phthisie caséuse, (see Tyrosis,) and become softened. Phthisis may be also excited by hæmoptysis, Phthisis ab hæmop'toe, inducing lobular pneumonia. The yellow cheesy tuberculous matter is frequently nontubercle, but merely a product of disintegration.

The following table, recently prepared by Dr. Andrew Clark, of London, (Aitken's Science and Practice of Medicine, vol. ii. p. 544, Philad., 1872,) affords a clear exposition of the latest views on this subject, and of the variety of diverse affections productive of ulceration and destruction of the tissue of the lungs included under the generic name of Phthisis Pulmonalis:—

1. Tubercular, specific or granular phthisis.	The true gray granulation. Pigmentary tubercle. Fibrous tubercle. Cellular tubercle.
2. Scrofulous or epithelial phthisis.	Primitive yellow tubercle; accumulation, cheesy degeneration and disintegration of epitheliolum-like cells.
3. Catarrhal or bronchial phthisis.	Ulceration of bronchi, with adjacent fibroid and cellular deposits and cheesy degeneration of the same. Disintegration of recent or old deposits, occurring in vesicular, lobular or lobar pneumonia, primary or secondary, common or scrofulous.
4. Pneumonic phthisis.	Fibroid deposits, with cheesy degeneration of imprisoned portion of lung, due to, 1. Mechanical irritation (as in grinders, miners, masons, &c.); 2. Rheumatic inflammation of interlobular tissue; 3. Chronic pleurisy; 4. Constitutional states, as in granular kidney and liver.
5. Fibrous phthisis (cirrhosis, chronic, or interstitial pneumonia).	Circumscribed or diffuse cellular formations composed of lardaceous material.
6. Lardaceous phthisis.	Cheesy disintegration of nodules of nucleo-fibrous tissue, and diffuse infiltration of the same.
7. Syphilitic phthisis.	Cheesy degeneration and disintegration of nodules of extravasated blood.
8. Hæmorrhagic phthisis.	Cheesy degeneration and disintegration of gray or yellow deposits, arising directly or indirectly from pulmonary emboli coming from the liver, lymphatics, or veins.
9. Embolic phthisis (including pyæmic deposits and suppurations).

The chief symptoms of Tubercular phthisis, hitherto called Phthisis pulmonalis, are the following: a sense of uneasiness in the chest, severe fits of coughing, or short and dry cough with dyspnoea, becoming troublesome, especially in the morning, and dyspnoea increased on exertion. The expectoration is evidently purulent, with fever in the evening, circumscribed redness of the cheeks, wasting and colliquative sweats early in the morning — Phthisis consumma'ta, Pneumophthisis. In the third stage, the hectic is constant, with small pulse, pungent heat, colliquative sweats, diarrhoea, and exhaustion. In some cases the symptoms run their course so rapidly as to constitute what is popularly known as galloping consumption, Phthisis florida. Physical Signs.

—1. In the first stage, whilst there are yet scattered miliary tubercles, there is sometimes a want of freedom in the movements under one or both clavicles. Percussion will generally discover a slight diminution of sound corresponding to the summit of one lung; auscultation shows that the inspiratory murmur is weaker, rougher, or confused. The sound of expiration is more distinct. The voice and cough are rather more resonant, and wheezing or mucous râles are occasionally heard in the same region. 2. When the tubercular deposition has become more abundant, the motion of the chest is more markedly diminished. Loss of sound on percussion is more distinct, inspiration on auscultation is bronchial, expiration louder and more superficial, and the resonance of the voice and cough is increased. The rest of the lung is perhaps healthy, or the respiration may be puerile. 3. When the tubercles are undergoing softening, in addition to the preceding signs, auscultation exhibits a suberepitan râle around the apex of the lung, decreasing from above downwards. It is most distinct during or after the cough, and at the close of a deep inspiration. Soon the bubbling becomes successively larger, and ultimately gurgling is heard. The inspiration and expiration are cavernous or tracheal. The voice and cough indicate unusual resonance and pectoriloquy. The intercostal spaces are often depressed locally, and percussion may become gradually clearer and even tympanitic as the cavern increases. Usually tubercular phthisis is inherited. It is more a disease of the temperate regions, where its pathology is often intimately allied with that of scrofula; ulcerations of the lungs do not then readily heal; and hectic fever is established, ending in death.

If removal to a climate in which air and exercise can be daily enjoyed during the autumnal, winter, and spring months (see Climate), be impracticable, the patient must be kept in a regulated temperature, the chamber being duly ventilated, and gestation in the open air used, whenever the atmosphere, although cold, is dry. The other palliative indications will be—1. To moderate inflammatory action; support the strength; and palliate urgent symptoms. Counterirritants relieve pain, demulcents and mild opiates alleviate the cough, mineral acids, united with opium, relieve the colliquative sweats, and chalk and opium the diarrhoea.

Phthisis, which is characterized in the early stage by various deranged states of the digestive organs, the epigastric region more or less full and tender on pressure, &c., is called Dyspeptic phthisis or consumption, Gastric phthisis. Writers have also described albuminous, catarrhal, and hemorrhagic phthisis, febrile phthisis, senile phthisis or consumption, &c.

Phthois'ous, (φθῆσος,) Pastil, Trochiscus.

Phthongodysphor'ia, (φθγγος, 'a cry,' and δυσφορία, 'impatience,') Hyperacusis.

Phtho'ra, (φθορά, 'destruction,') Abortion, Corruption, Plague.

Phthor'ius, (φθοριος,) Abortive.

Phthoroc'tonus, (φθορα, 'destruction,' and τεκνον, 'a child,') Abortive.

Phucagros'tis Mi'nor, Pila marina.

Phus'ca, (φουσκα,) Oxyerate.

Phyganthrop'ia, (φυγω, 'I flee,' and ανθρωπος, 'man,') Misanthropia.

Phygeth'lon, (φυγεθλον,) Pa'nus, Phypel'la, (from φυω, 'I grow,' [?].) Inflammation of the superficial lymphatic glands, not ending in supuration.

Phygode'ma, gen. Phygode'matis, (φυγη, 'flight,' and οedema,) Anathymiasis.

Phygogalac'tics, (φυγη, 'flight,' and γαλα, 'milk,') Dispersers of milk.

Phylacte'ron, Amuletum.

Phylacte'rium, (φυλακτηριον, from φυλασσω, 'I preserve,') A Phylac'tery, (F.) Phylactère. An amulet—a prophylactic.

Phylax'is, (φυλαξις,) Conservation.

Phyllan'thus Urina'ria, (φυλλον, 'a leaf,' and ανθος, 'a flower,') Binkohumba. Ord. Euphorbiaceae. A plant employed in Ceylon, as a diuretic.

Phylli'tis, gen. Phylli'tidis, (φυλλον, 'a leaf,') Asplenium scolopendrium—p. Muraria, Asplenium ruta muraria—p. Rotundifolia, Asplenium trichomanoides.

Phy'ma, gen. Phymatis, (φυμα, gen. φυματος, from φυω, 'I grow,') By the ancients this word was used with great latitude; sometimes, in the sense of phlegmon, for tumors larger than a boil, and perfectly suppurative. In the nosology of Sauvages, Phy'mata is an order of diseases, to which he refers erysipelas, oedema, phlegmon, emphysema, scirrhus, &c. In that of Dr. Good it is a genus, including hordeolum, furunculus, sycosis, and anthrax. The term has also been proposed as a substitute for the word 'tubercle.'

Physago'ga, (φύσα, 'wind,' and αγω, 'I carry off,') Carminatives.

Physal'idēs, (pl. of φυσαλις, 'a bladder,') see Physaliphores.

Physal'iphores, (φυσαλις, 'a bladder,' and φερω, 'I carry,') In endogenous new formations, there are cells containing vesicles, the vesicular cavities being called physalides, and in the interior of the cellular elements which they contain, elements of a similar kind are developed. Virchow calls these vesicular cavities brood-cavities.

Phy'salis, (φυσαλις, 'a bladder,' referring to the inflated calyx,) P. Alkeken'gi seu halicac'abum, Solanum vesica'rium, Alchachen'ge, Alkeken'gi, Halicac'abum, Win'ter Cher'ry, (F.) Alkekenge, Coqueret. Ord. Solanaceae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. The berries are recommended as a diuretic, from 6 to 12 for a dose, in dropsical and calculous cases. It has been affirmed that the whole plant possesses the antiperiodic virtues of Cinchona. An active principle has been obtained from it, called phy'salin.

PHY'SALIS VISCO'SA, P. obscu'ra seu Pennsylvanica seu pubes'cens, Ground cherry; indigenous. The berries are said to be diuretic and sedative.

Phys'cē, (φυσκη,) Abdomen, Colon.

Phys'con Islan'dica, Lichen Islandicus—p. Nivalis, Lichen caninus.

Physco'nia, (φυσκων, 'the paunch,') Ventros'itas, Eophy'ma physco'nia, Emphrac'tica, Visco'nia, Potbelly, Tunbelly, Pen'dulous abdo'men, Swagbelly, Gorbelly, (Prov.) Gotchbelly, Pedbelly. Physconia is a generic term, under which Sauvages has comprised every large tumor developed in the abdomen, that is neither fluctuating nor sonorous. Linnæus calls it Hyposarca. Also excessive corpulency.

PHYSCO'NIA ADIPO'SA, Obe'sitas seu Polysar'cia vis'cerum. Accumulation of fat in the intestines.

PHYSCO'NIA BILIO'SA, Turgescencia vesiculæ fel-leae.

PHYSCO'NIA EMPHYSEMAT'ICA. Accumulation of air in the areolar tissue, or between the coats of particular viscera.

PHYSCO'NIA LIE'NIS, Splenoncus—p. Mesenterica, Tabes mesenterica—p. Splenica, Ague cake.

PHYSCO'NIA STRUMO'SA, Scrofula abdomina'lis inter'na. Tumid abdomen from scrofulous enlargement of the glands.

Phytiv'orous, (phyton, and voro, 'I devour,') Phytophagous.

Phytoalope'cia, (phyton, and alopecia,) Porrigo decalvans.

Phytobiolog'ia, (phyto, βίος, 'life,' and λόγος, 'a discourse,') see Physiology.

Phytocol'la, (phyton, and κολλη, 'glue,') Extractive matter obtained from belladonna.

Phytoder'mata, (phyton, and derma, 'skin,') Dermatophyta.

Phytoder'mic Affec'tions, Dermatophyta.

Phy'toid, Phytoï'des, Phy'tiform, Phytifor'mis, (phyton, and εἶδος, 'appearance,') Having the form or appearance of a vegetable growth.

Phytolac'ca Decan'dra, P. vulga'ris, Poke-weed, American nightshade, Cancerroot, Poke, Skoke, Jucato Calleloe (?), Jal'ap, Pig'con berry, Jal'ap cancerroot, Red weed, Red nightshade, Coakum, Solanum racemosum America'num seu magnum Virginia'num rubrum, Blitum America'num, Gar'get, (F.) Raisin d'Amérique, Phytolaque à dix étamines, Morelle en grappes, Méchoacan du Canada, (phyton, and lacca, because the color of the juice of the berries resembles that of lacca.) Ord. Chenopodiaceæ; Sex. Syst. Decandria Decagynia. The berries—Phytolac'cæ bac'ca (Ph. U. S., 1873)—and roots—Phytolac'cæ ra'dix (Ph. U. S., 1873)—are employed. The young stems, when boiled, are sometimes eaten at table; but, when old, they must be cautiously used, as the plant is emetic and cathartic. It is most celebrated as a remedy in chronic rheumatism; and is given in the form of tincture of the ripe berries. It is also used in cutaneous eruptions, tinea capitis, itch, cancerous ulcers, &c.

The root is gathered and dried in the fall.

Phytolaque à Dix Étamines, Phytolacca decandra.

Phytolog'ia, (phyton, and λόγος, 'a discourse,') see Vegetable—p. Medical, Botany, medical.

Phytomen'tagra, (phyton, and mentagra,) Sy-cosis.

Phy'ton, (φυτον,) Vegetable.

Phytopar'asite, Epiphyte.

Phytopathol'ogy, Phytopatholog'ia, (phyton, and pathology,) Properly, the pathology of vegetables; but occasionally applied to the knowledge of morbid states induced by vegetable growths.

Phytoph'agous, Phytoph'agus, Phytiv'orous, Phytiv'orus, (phyton, and φάγω, 'I eat,') Feeding or subsisting upon vegetables.

Phytophysiol'og'ia, (phyton, and physiologia,) see Physiology.

Phytorg'anies, (phyton, and ὄργανον, 'an organ,') A name given by Bouchut to vegetable growths on the living body.

Phyto'sis, (phyton, and osis,) Porrigo.

PHYTO'SIS CIRCINA'TA. A term employed by Mr. E. Wilson, for ringworm of the hairless skin.

PHYTO'SIS FAVO'SA, Porrigo favosa—p. Tonsu-rans, Porrigo decalvans.

Phytosperm'ata, (F.) Phytospermes, (phyton, and σπέρμα, 'sperm,') Particles similar to the spermatozooids of animals, observed in vegetables, and presumed to possess a similar agency in reproduction.

Phytot'omy, (phyton, and τομή, 'section,') see Anatomy (vegetable).

Phytozoaire, (phyton, and ζῶον, 'animal,') Zoophyte.

Phytozo'on, (phyton, and ζῶον, 'animal,') Zoo-phyte.

Cer'ebri ten'uis* seu mol'lis seu pro'pria, (F.) Pie mère, Méningette. The pia mater is a very delicate membrane, which covers the brain immediately, penetrates into its anfractuosités, and envelops, also, the cerebellum and the spinal prolongation, &c. Bichat does not regard it as a membrane, properly so called, but as a network of bloodvessels, united by a lax areolar tissue. The Pia Mater exterior is the portion of membrane which covers the exterior of the encephalon, and faces the arachnoid externally. The Pia Mater interior is that which lines the cerebral fossa, into which it penetrates by a cleft situate between the posterior part of the corpus callosum and the fornix; and by two other fissures, situate between the corpora fimbriata and the thalami nervorum opticorum. The pia mater contains a number of granulations similar to the Glandulæ Pacchioni.

Pice'ron, (πικερων,) Butter.

Pichu'rim Beans. The seed,—Fa'ba Pichu-rim, F. Pechu'rei, Pa'ra nut, Sas'safras nut, Pux-iri, Brazil'ian nutmeg,—of a tree, supposed to be Per'sea pichurim, Ocote'a pichu'rim seu Puchu'ry, Tetranthe'ra pichurim, Nectan'dra puchu'ry, Puchu'ry or Puchy'ry of the Brazilians, Ord. Lauraceæ, which grows in Brazil, Guiana, Venezuela, and other parts of South America. They are of an elliptical shape; flat on one side, convex on the other; of an aromatic odor between that of nutmeg and of sassafras, and of a spicy, pungent taste. The medical properties are the same as those of other aromatics. For the bark, see Pechurim cortex.

Pick, (from puke,) Emetic.

Pick'ereelweed, Shov'el, Unisema deltifolia.

Picote, Variola.

Picroch'olos, (πικροχολος, from picros, and χολη, 'bile,') Bilious.

Pi'romel, gen. Piromell'lis, Bi'lin, (picros, and μελι, 'honey,') A name given by Thénard to a colorless, soft substance, of an acrid, bitter, saccharine taste, nauseous smell, and very soluble in water, which is considered to be a bi'late of so'da. It is not an immediate principle, but a mixture of different substances. It forms part of the bile, and is generally classed among the animal immediate principles.

Picrope'gae, Pikrope'gae, (picros, and πηγη, 'a spring,') Mineral waters bitter from the presence of chloride of magnesium.

Pi'eros, (πικρος, 'bitter,') Amarus.

Picrotox'in, Picrotox'ina, Picrotox'ine, (picros, and toxicum, 'poison,') A vegetable alkali, discovered by M. Boullay in the Menispermum Cocculus. It crystallizes in quadrangular, white, brilliant, semitransparent prisms; which are excessively bitter, soluble in three parts of alcohol, and in fifteen of boiling water.

The Cocculus Indicus owes its poisonous properties to this principle.

PILL, BECQUEREL'S, Gout pills of Becquerel, (F.) Pilules de Becquerel, are formed of Quinia sulph., ʒij., Ext. digit., gr. xv., Semin. colchic. pulv., ʒij.; made into 50 pills. Dose, one to three pills. Debout's pills, (F.) Pilules de Debout, are said to have a like composition.

PILL, BELLOSTE'S, (F.) Pilules mercurielles purgatives, P. de Belloste. In the French Codex (1866) these are made of pure mercury, white honey, Cape aloes, black pepper, rhubarb, and scammony.

PILL, BLAIR'S. An empirical preparation of colchicum, much used in England in cases of gout.

PILL, BLAUD'S, (F.) Pilules ferrugineuses de Blaud. These pills, proposed by M. Blaud as antichlorotic, are formed as follows: Take of gum tragacanth, in powder, six grains, water, one drachm. Macerate in a glass or porcelain mortar, until a thick mucilage is formed, and if it be desired to prevent the formation of peroxide of iron, and to make the pill similar to that of Vallet, substitute a drachm of powdered sugar for the mucilage. Add afterwards of sulphate of iron, in powder, half an ounce. Beat well until the mixture is homogeneous, and add subcarbonate of potassa, half an ounce. Beat until the mass becomes of a deep green color, and of a soft consistence. Divide into 48 pills or boluses. Dose, one a day; gradually increasing to two, and afterwards to three.

PILL, BLUE, Pilulæ hydrargyri.

PILL OF BONTIUS, (F.) Pilules de Bontius. In the French Codex (1866) these are made of Barbadoes aloes, gamboge, gum ammoniac, and white vinegar.

PILL, DIN'NER, see Pilulæ aloes et kinæ kinæ, and Pilulæ aloes et mastiches.

PILL, DIN'NER, OF MAY'O, is composed of Pulv. rhei, gr. iv., Sodæ carb., gr. j.

PILL, DUPUYTREN'S, (F.) Pilules de Dupuytren. In the French Codex (1866) these are made of bichloride of mercury, extract of opium, and extract of quiac.

PILL, EVERLAST'ING, Pilula æterna, (F.) Pilule perpetuelle. A pill once in vogue, and said to be composed of metallic antimony. It was believed to have the property of purging as often as it was swallowed. A lady having swallowed one of these pills, became seriously alarmed at its not passing. "Madam," said her physician, "fear not; it has already passed through a hundred patients without any difficulty." — (Paris.)

PILL, LARTIGUE'S, Pilulæ Colchici et Digitalis, (F.) Pilules de Lartigue. (Ext. Coloc. comp., ʒss., Ext. Sem. Colchic. alcoholic., Extract. Digital. alcoholic., ʒss. gr. jss.; fiat massa in pilul. x. dividend.) Dose, two, three, or more, in the 24 hours, in gout, until purging is induced.

This is a form that has been employed as a substitute for the Pilules de Lartigue, the composition of which is not known. M. Bouchardat recommends for the same purpose a combination of Extractum colocynthidis compositum, Extractum colchici, and Extractum opii, which is almost identical with pills prescribed by Sir Henry Holford for the gout; the only difference being that the latter substitutes Dover's powder for the Extractum opii. Prof. Wittstein affirms that their composition is powdered colchicum, two grains; sugar and mucilage, each half a grain.

PILL, LAVILLE'S, (F.) Pilules de Laville, P. preventives de la Goutte et des Rhumatismes, Alkekengine silicée. They are said to consist of physalin, silicate of soda, and powdered chamædrys. One is taken before a meal, for several weeks, in gout, in which they have been greatly and inordinately extolled.

PILL OF LEAD, O'PIATE, Pilulæ plumbi opiatæ.

PILL, LEE'S NEW LON'DON, is composed of scammony, gamboge, calomel, jalap, aloes, soap, and syrup of buckthorn.

PILL, LEE'S WIND'HAM, consists of gamboge, aloes, soap, and nitrate of potassa.

ium, Sphæ'rula Gale'ni. A pill. (F.) Pilule. A simple or compound medicine, weighing from one to five grains, of a firm consistence and spherical form; intended to be swallowed at once, without chewing. The Pill differs from the Bolus, the latter being softer and larger.

Medicines are often given in the form of pill, on account of their disagreeable taste and odor, and for the like reason pills are now sugar-coated. Pilula also means a Pilular mass, or the mass formed by the amalgamation of the different articles that enter into the composition of the pill. To form the mass into pills, it is rolled out and divided by the spatula on a pill tile or by a pill machine. The British Pharmacopœia has directions for various forms of Pilula, or pill in mass, but, unlike the Ph. U. S., has no Pilulæ or separate pills. See the various Pilulæ.

S., 1873.) Dose, gr. x. to xx., in habitual costiveness. The Ph. B. (1867) has a formula for Pilula aloës Socotrinæ, Pill of Socotrine aloës.

PIL'ULÆ AL'OËS BARBADENSIS, Pilula Aloës Barbadosensis, (Ph. B., 1867.) Pill of Barba'does Aloës, is made of Aloës Barbados. pulv., ʒij., Sapo. dur. pulv., ʒj., Ol. carui, fʒj., Confect. Ros., ʒj. Dose, gr. v. to x.

PIL'ULÆ AL'OËS COMPOSITÆ, P. ex Aloë, Compound Aloëtic Pills. (Aloës spic. extract. cont., ʒj., Ext. gentianæ, ʒss., Olei carui, gtt. xl., Syrup., q. s. Ph. L.) These are sometimes, also, called Family pills, Antibilious pills, &c.

PIL'ULÆ AL'OËS SOCOTRINÆ, Pill of Socotrine Aloës, of the same Pharmacopœia, is made of Aloës Socotrin. in powder, ʒj., Sapo. dur. in powder, ʒj., Ol. myrist., fʒj., Confect. Ros., ʒj.

PIL'ULÆ AL'OËS ET ASSAFŒTIDÆ, Aloëtic and Assafœtida Pills. (Aloës, Assafœtidæ, Saponis, āā gr. xxxij., Aquæ, q. s. to form 24 pills. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Purgative and stomachic. Dose, gr. x. The Ph. B. (1867) has a formula for Pilula aloës et assafœtidæ, Pill of aloës and assafœtida.

PIL'ULÆ AL'OËS ET CAMBOGIÆ, P. de Aloë et Cambo'giâ seu Hydrago'gæ Bon'tii, Pill of Aloës and Camboge. (Aloës, Cambog., Gum ammoniac., āā p. æ. Make into a powder. Dissolve in vinegar; pass through a cloth; express the residuum strongly; and afterwards evaporate, in a water-bath, to a pilular consistence. Ph. P.) Purgative; used in dropsy. Dose, gr. xij. to xxx.

Peter's Pills—a nostrum—are formed of Aloës, Jalap, Scammony, and Camboge, of each equal parts.

The basis of Morrison's Pills, often called Hygiene Pills, of Brand'reth's Pills, and Moffat's Pills, is said to be Aloës, with Camboge, Scammony, &c.

Rush's Pills were formed of Calomel, Aloës, and Camboge, with Oil of mint.

PIL'ULÆ AL'OËS ET COLOCYN'THIDIS, P. ex Colocyn'thidē cum aloë seu aloës cum colocyn'thidē seu coc'cinæ seu coc'hii seu colocyn'thidis compositæ seu coc'cinæ mino'res, Pill of Aloës and Colocynth, vulg. Pill coh'y, and Pill a coh'y, (F.) Pilules panchymagogues ou universelles, Pilules cohées, Pilules de Coloquinte composées. B., 1867.) Cathartic. Dose, gr. v. to x. or more.

Fothergill's Pills consist of aloës, scammony, colocynth, and oxide of antimony; and Har'vey's

Antibillious Pills, and Ru'dius's Pills, (see Extractum Rudii), do not differ much from them.

PIL'ULÆ AL'OEË ET FER'RI, Pilula Aloës et Ferri, Pill of Aloës and Iron. (Ferri Sulph., 3jss., Aloës Barb. pulv., 3ij., Pulv. Cinnamon. Comp., 3ij., Confect. Rosar., 3iv. Reduce the sulphate to powder, rub with the aloës and cinnamon powder, and add the confection. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, gr. v.-x. In atonic constipation.

PIL'ULÆ DE AL'OE ET FÆTIDIS, P. Benedictæ Fulleri seu Ephemericæ seu Aloës martiales, Pills of aloës and fet'id gums, Female pills, (F.) Pilules bënites de Fuller. (Aloës Socotr., Sennæ, Assafetidæ, Galbani, aa 3ij., Myrrh., 3iv., Croci, Macis, aa 3j., Ferri sulphat., 3jss. Reduce to powder separately, and add Ol. succin., gtt. viij., Syr. Artemisiæ, q. s. Ph. P.) Purgative, and given in hysteria. Dose, gr. xv. to xx.

Whytt's Pills, given in similar cases, consisted of Chloride of iron, Aloës, Extract of horehound, and Assafetida.

Stahl's Pills, much used as a tonic aperient in Germany, are made as follows:—Ferri pulv., 3ss., Aloës pulv., 3ij., Ext. colocynth., 3j., Mucilag. acaciæ, q. s. ut fiant pil xl.

PIL'ULÆ AL'OEË ET JALAP'Æ, commonly called Anderson's pills, Anderson's Scots' pills, Scotch pills, (F.) Pilules Écossaises. (Aloës Barb., 3ij., Rad. helleb. nigr., Rad. jalapæ, Potassæ subcarb., aa 3j., Ol. anisi, 3iv., Syrup. simpl., q. s. M.) Dose, gr. x. to xxx.

A committee of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy recommended the following: Aloës Barb., 3xxiv., Saponis., 3iv., Colocynthid., 3j., Cambogiæ, 3j., Ol. anis., 3ss.

Holloway's Pills are said to be composed as follows: Aloës, gr. lxij., Rhei pulv., gr. xxvj., Piperis, gr. viij., Croci, Sodæ sulphat., aa gr. iij. M. et f. pil. cxliv.

PIL'ULÆ AL'OEË ET KI'NÆ KI'NÆ, P. stomachicæ seu ante cibum, Pill of aloës and cincho'na, (F.) Pilules gourmandes. (Aloës Socotr., 3vj., Ext. cinchon., 3ij., Cinnam., 3j., Syrup. absinth., q. s. Ph. P.) Stomachic and laxative. Dose, gr. x. to xx.

L., 1835,) resemble these. See Pilulæ aloës et masticæ.

Frank's Pills, once much employed, also, as 'dinner pills,' or,—to use the language of the eccentric Kitchener,—as 'peptic persuaders,' are said to be much used, under the name Graines de santé; in various parts of Europe. They consist of Aloës, Jalap, and Rhubarb, with Syrup of wormwood as an excipient.

PIL'ULÆ AL'OEË MARTIA'LES, P. de aloë et fœtidis.

PIL'ULÆ AL'OEË ET MAS'TICHES, Pills of Aloës and Mastich. (Aloës Socotrin. pulv., gr. xlviij., Mastich. pulv., Ros. Gallic., aa gr. xij., Aquæ, q. s. to form 24 pills. Ph. U. S., 1873.) The mastic is added to the aloës to prevent the too ready solution of the latter in the gastric and intestinal fluids; so that it is long in operating as a laxative. One is usually taken before dinner as a 'dinner pill.' It was introduced into the Ph. U. S., 1864, as a form for Lady Webster's pills.

PIL'ULÆ AL'OEË ET MYR'RHÆ, P. aloës cum myr'rhæ seu de aloë et myr'rhæ, P. Ru'fi seu Rufi seu communes, Rufus's or Rufus's pills, Common pills, Pills of aloës and myrrh. (Aloës pulv., gr. xlviij., Pulv. aromat., gr. xij., Myrrh., gr. xxiv., Syrup. q. s. to form 24 pills. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Cathartic and emmenagogue. Dose, gr. x. to xx.

The Ph. B. (1867) has a formula for Pilula aloës et myrrhæ, Pill of aloës and myrrh.

Hoop'er's Pills—possessed of similar properties—according to one of Gray's formulæ, are made as follows: Ferri sulph., Aquæ, aa 3viij. Dissolve. Add Aloës Barb., 3ij., and 3viij., Canelle albæ, 3vj., Gum. myrrh., 3ij., Opopanacis, 3iv.

The committee of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy recommended the following form: Aloës Barb., 3viij., Ferri sulphatis exsicc., 3ij., and 3jss., vel Ferri sulph. crystall., 3iv., Ext. helleb. nigr., 3ij., Myrrh., 3ij., Saponis, 3ij., Canelle in pulv. tritæ, 3j., Zingib. in pulv. trit., 3j.

Speedman's Pills consist of aloës, myrrh, rhubarb, extract of chamomile, and essential oil of chamomile; and the Pills of Barthez, of aloës, myrrh, musk, camphor, and balsam of Peru.

PIL'ULÆ DE AL'OE ET SAPO'NE, P. aloeticæ.

PIL'ULÆ AL'OEË CUM ZINGIB'ERÆ, Pills of aloës and gin'ger. (Aloës hepat., 3j., Rad. zingib. in pulv., 3j., Sapon. Hispan., 3ss., Ol. ess. menthæ pip., 3ss. Ph. D.) In habitual costiveness. Dose, gr. x. to xx.

PIL'ULÆ AMMONIURE'TI CU'PRI, P. Cu'pri, Pills of Ammonuret of copper, (F.) Pilules d'ammonure de cuivre. (Ammonur. cupri in pulv. ten. trit., gr. xvj., Mice panis, 3iv., Aquæ carbonatis ammoniæ, q. s. Beat into a mass, and divide into xxxij. pills. Ph. E.) Tonic and antispasmodic, in epilepsy, &c. Dose, one pill twice daily; gradually increasing the dose.

PIL'ULÆ AN'TE CI'BUM, 'pills before food,' P. aloës et kinæ kinæ.

PIL'ULÆ ANTIBILIO'SÆ, Bar'clay's Antibilious pills. (Extract of colocynth, 3ij., Resin of jalap, 3j., Almond soap, 3jss., Guaiac, 3ij., Emetic tart., gr. viij., Oils of juniper, caraway, and rosemary, aa iv. drops, Syrup of buckthorn, q. s. to form 64 pills.) Dose, two or three.

Dix'on's Antibilious pills are formed of Aloës, Scammony, Rhubarb, and Tartarized antimony.

PIL'ULÆ ANTIHERPET'ICÆ, Pilulæ hydrargyri submuriatis comp.—p. Antihystericæ, P. galbani compositæ—p. Antimonii compositæ, P. hydrargyri submuriatis compositæ.

PIL'ULÆ ANTISCROPHULO'SÆ, P. ex ox'ido stib'ii et hydrargyri sulphure'to nigro compositæ. (Scammon. pulv., Hydrarg. sulphur. nigr., aa 3ij., Antimonii oxidi albi, Milleped., Sapon. amygdalin., aa 3ij., Extract. glycyrrh., 3v. Make into a mass. Ph. P.) Dose, gr. iv. to xx.

PIL'ULÆ ANTISPAS'TICÆ, P. galbani compositæ. PIL'ULÆ ASIAT'ICÆ, Asiat'ic or Tanjore' pills, (F.) Pilules Arsénicales ou Asiatiques. (Acid. arsenios., gr. lv., Piper. nigr. pulv., 3ix., Acaciæ, q. s. ut fiant pil. 800.) Each pill contains about one-fifteenth of a grain of arsenious acid. These pills are employed in India for the cure of syphilis and elephantiasis.

PIL'ULÆ ASSAFÆ'TIDÆ, Assafetida pills. (Assafetid., gr. lxxij., Saponis. pulv., gr. xxiv. Beat with water so as to form a mass to be divided into 24 pills. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

PIL'ULÆ ASSAFÆ'TIDÆ COMPOS'ITÆ, P. galbani compositæ.

PIL'ULÆ BALSAM'ICÆ, P. Docto'ris Mor'ton. (Milleped. pulverisat., 3xviij., Gum. ammon., 3xj., Acid. benzoic., 3vj., Croci, Balsami Peruv., aa 3j., Balsam. sulph. anisat., 3vj. Mix. Ph. P.) Tonic, expectorant, and balsamic.

PIL'ULÆ BARBAROS'Æ, see Barbarosæ pilulæ—p. Benedictæ Fulleri, P. de aloë et fœtidis—p. Calomelanos compositæ, P. hydrargyri submuriatis compositæ.

PIL'ULÆ CALOMEL'ANOS ET O'PII, P. hydrargyri chloridi et o'pii, Pills of Calomel and O'pium. (Hydrarg. chlorid. mit., p. iij., Opi, p. j., Confect. Ros., q. s. To be divided into pills each containing two grains of calomel. Ph. E.)

Es'sence of Spruce, Es'sent'ia Abi'etis, is a fluid extract, prepared by decoction from the twigs of this species of fir. From this is made Spruce Beer.

This fir affords the Burgundy pitch and common frankincense. 1. Bur'gundy or White pitch, Piz Burgun'dica (Ph. U. S. 1873) seu al'ba seu ar'ida seu abiet'ina seu abi'etis, Resi'na abi'etis hu'mida, R. al'ba hu'mida, Pi'ni abi'etis resi'na spon'tè concre'ta, (F.) Poiz blanche ou grasse ou jaune ou de Bourgogne. This prepared concrete juice is of a close consistence, rather soft, of a reddish-brown color, and not unpleasant smell. It is very adhesive to the skin, and consequently forms excellent plasters for remaining upon the part for some time, as in cases of affections of the chest. 2. Abi'etis Resi'na (Ph. L. since 1809), Com'mon Frank'incense, Perrosin, Tus, Thus, T. fæmini'num seu vulga'rè, Olib'anum vulga're seu sylves'trè, Resi'na abi'etis sic'ca, Resin of the Spruce Fir. It is solid, dry, brittle; externally, brownish-yellow; internally, whitish. Used in plasters like the last.

Com'peper, Com'peba, Cubal siní, Pi'per cauda-tum, Bac'æ Pi'peris gla'bri, Cu'beb or Tailed Pepper, Cama'mus, (F.) Poivre-à-queue, Qua-bebe—is aromatic; taste at first cooling, afterwards pungent. The active principle is an essential oil—O'leum Cubebe, oil of cubebs—which is officinal in the Pharm. U. S. The properties of the cubeb are stimulant and purgative. It is used chiefly in gonorrhœa. Dose, from \mathfrak{zj} . to \mathfrak{zj} ., in powder, three or four times a day; of the volatile oil, 10 or 12 drops.

Tur'key yel'low ber'ries,—the dried fruit of the Rhamnus Catharticus—are often substituted for cubebs.

PI'PER LONGUM, Macrop'iper, Acat'li, Catu-trip'ali, Pin'pilim, Chav'ica Roxburg'hii, Long Pep'per, (F.) Poivre long. As we receive the berries, they consist of the unripe fruit dried in the sun; and are small, round grains, disposed spirally on a cylindrical receptacle. They are stimulant, carminative, and tonic, like the other peppers. Dose, gr. v. to \mathfrak{zj} .

PI'PER LUSITANICUM, Capsicum annuum—p. Methysticum, see Ava—p. Murale, Sedum.

PI'PER NIGRUM, Melanop'iper, Molagoco'di, La'da, Pi'per aromaticum, Black Pep'per, (F.) Poivre noir. Black Pepper, Piper (Ph. U. S.), is the unripe fruit dried in the sun. Virtues, same as those of the other peppers. When freed from its husk by mechanical trituration it constitutes Ful'ton's decor'ticated pepper. The active principle is Piper'ia or Piperi'na, Pi'perine. See Piperina.

PI'PER ODORA'TUM JAMAICEN'SE, see Myrtus pimenta—p. Tabasum, see Myrtus pimenta—p. Turcicum, Capsicum annuum.

PI'PERCOORN. A form of epidemic typhus fever was so called which prevailed in Holland during a portion of the sixteenth century.

Pipe'ria, Piperina.

Piperi'na, Pipe'ria, Piperi'num, Pi'perine, Pi-perin, (from piper.) A resinoid substance, obtained from the piper nigrum, in which a part of the virtues of the pepper reside. It has been employed, like quinia, in intermittents, and successfully. Dose, gr. v.-x.

Pip'eroid, Piperoi'dum, Zingib'erin, (piper, and εἶδος, 'resemblance.') A yellow syrupy mass obtained by exhausting ginger root by ether. It is soluble in ether, alcohol, and oils, and may be given in tincture, sugar, lozenge, or syrup, in cases where ginger is indicated.

PI'PEROID OF GIN'GER, Oleoresina zingiberis.

Piperopas'tus, (piper, and πασσαι, 'to strew.') Strewed with pepper,—socks, for example, where it is desirable to excite the surface of the feet.

Pipette. 'A small pipe.' In Pharmacy, a small tube terminating in a perforated point, which is passed into a liquid to be removed—from the surface of a precipitate, for example. The liquid is drawn into the tube by applying the mouth to the free extremity.

Pipin'na, Men'tula par'va. A small penis.

Pique, (same etymon as the next,) Chique.

Piqueté, (from piquer, 'to prick, to lard,') see Sablé.

Piqûre, Puncture, Wound, punctured.

Piqueurs Médecins, 'Puncture doctors.' A name at one time given in derision, in the Parisian hospitals, to those physicians who employed acupuncture in almost all diseases.

Pi'riformis, Pyramidalis.

Pir'ogoff's Opera'tion. A mode of amputating at the ankle, proposed by Pirogoff, of Russia, which consists in retaining a portion of the calcaneum to impart greater length and rotundity to the stump.

Pirt'ling, (old E.) Slaving.

Pi'rus, see Pyrus malus.

Pi'sa, Cli'mate of. Pisa has long been celebrated as one of the most favorable climates in Italy, for the consumptive. It is genial, but somewhat oppressive and damp. It is softer than that of Nice, but not so warm; less soft, but less oppressive than that of Rome.

Pisciarel'li, Min'eral Wa'ters of. A spring at Monte Secco, in Italy, between Lake Agnano and Solfatara. It is thermal (100° Fah.), sulphureous, and carbonated; and is chiefly used in old ulcers, leucorrhœa, chronic diarrhœa, and in cutaneous affections.

Piscid'ia Erythri'na, (piscis, 'a fish,' and cedere, 'to kill,') Jama'ica Dog'wood. Ord. Leguminosæ. A small branching tree, common in most of the West India Islands; Diadelphia Decandria of Linnæus. It is used in the West Indies to poison fish. It appears to be an acro-narcotic, and has been used in the form of a tincture of the bark of the root in toothache.

Pisci'na, 'a fish pond,' Baignoire.

Pisciv'orous, Pisciv'orus, Ichthyoph'agous, Ichthyoph'agus, (piscis, 'a fish,' and voro, 'I eat.') Feeding or subsisting on fish.

Pisiform, Pisifor'mis, (pisum, 'a pea,' and forma, 'shape.') Pealike, pea-shaped.

PISIFORME, Os, Os lenticula'rē seu orbicula'rē seu rotun'dum seu ex'tra or'dinem car'pi, (F.) Os hors du rang, is the fourth bone of the first row of the carpus. It is round, and gives attachment to the tendon of the cubitalis anterior, and to the anterior transverse ligament of the carpus. It is articulated, behind, with the os cuneiforme.

Pi'so, Mortar.

Pis'sa, (πίσσα,) Pitch, see Pinus sylvestris.

Pissasphal'tus, Pissasphal'tum, Min'eral Pitch, (pissa, and ασφαλτος, 'bitumen,') (F.) Poix min'érale. A thicker kind of Petro'leum or Rock oil; formerly employed as a vulnerary. It is synonymous with Glu'tinous bitu'men, Mal'ta bitu'men, and Min'eral tar.

Pisselæ'um, O'leum Pic'inum, (pissa, and ελαιον, 'oil,') An oily matter obtained from boiling pitch, and used for the same purposes as tar.

PISSELÆ'UM IN'DICUM, Petroleum.

Pissement, Micturition—p. de Pus, Pyuria—p. de Sang, Hæmaturia.

Pissenlit, 'pissabed,' Leontodon taraxacum.

Pisse-sang, 'piss blood,' Fumaria.

Pisse'ros, (πισσῆρος, 'made of pitch,') Ancient name of a cerate, prepared of olive oil, oil of roses, and dried pitch. It was, also, called Cera'tum pica'tum, and C. tetraphar'macum.

Pissi'tes, (πισιτης,) Vi'num pica'tum. A wine prepared from tar and the must of the grape. It was regarded to be stomachic.

Pisso'sis, (from πissa, 'pitch,') see Depilatory.

Piss'weed, Anthemis cotula.

Pista'chio Nuts, (πιστακία,) see Arachis hypo-gæa, Pistacia vera.

Pista'cia Chi'a, P. lentiscus.

PISTA'CIA LENTIS'CUS, P. Chi'a, Terebin'thus lentis'cus, Lentis'cus vulga'ris, Schi'nos; the Mas'tich Tree. Ord. Terebinthaceæ. The wood of this tree abounds with the resinous principles of mastich; and a tincture made from it has been used in the cure of dyspeptic affections, gout, and dysentery. It yields, by incision, the resin Mas'tich, Resi'na Lentis'cina, Men'frigè, Mas'tichè (Ph. U. S.), Mas'tix, Pista'ciæ Lentis'ci Resi'

na. This resin has an agreeable smell when heated: is almost insipid; in globular, irregular, yellowish, semitransparent masses; soluble in ether; partially so in alcohol. It is stimulant, and has been used in old coughs, and gleet, and is chewed to sweeten the breath. It is sometimes, also, employed to stop holes in carious teeth.

Oil of Mastich, Mastichelæon, O'leum Mastichinum, is mentioned by Dioscorides.

PISTA'CIA NARBONEN'SIS, P. lentiscus—p. Reticulata, P. lentiscus.

PISTA'CIA TEREBIN'THUS, P. Narbonensis seu reticulata seu verra, Turpentine Tree, Hab-el-Kalimbat, Terebinthus vulgaris, Terminthus. The tree which affords the Cyprus Turpentine, Resina Terebinthi, Terebinthina verra seu Chi'a seu Cyprina, (F.) Térébinthine de Chio. This substance is classed among the resins. It is procured by wounding the bark of the trunk. The best Chio turpentine is of about the consistence of honey; very tenacious, clear, and almost transparent; of a white color inclining to yellow, and of a fragrant smell; moderately warm to the taste, but free from acrimony and bitterness. It resembles in virtues the other turpentine.

PISTA'CIA VERRA, (πιστακη.) Name of the tree which affords the Nux Pista'cia. Pista'chio nuts have a sweetish, unctuous taste, resembling that of sweet almonds. Like these, they afford an oil, and may be formed into an emulsion.

Pista'tion, Epistation.

Pistil'lum, (pistare, 'to pound,') Pilum.

Pistolochi'a, (πιστος, 'faithful,' and λοχεια, 'parturition,') Aristolochia pistolochia.

Pistorien'sis Gla'dius, (from Pistorium, now Pistoia, in Tuscany.) Bistouri.

Pi'sum, (πιον,) P. sativum, Pea, Gar'den pea, (F.) Pois, P. cultivé. The seeds of the pea, Ord. Leguminosæ, Sex. Syst. Diadelphia Decandria, are much employed as an aliment, both in the fresh and dried state. They are farinaceous, and, when dried, not easy of digestion.

Pit, ([Sax.] pȳt, or pȳt,) Pock mark—p. of the Stomach, Fossette du cœur.

Pita'ya Bark, of South America. The bark of Cinchona pita'ya, Ord. Cinchonaceæ, is preferred in Colombia to any other. It contains a new vegetable alkali, to which the name Pitayine has been given.

Pitay'ine, see Pitaya bark.

Pitcaithley, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These saline springs, at Pitcaithley, about four miles from Perth, Scotland, contain chlorides of sodium and calcium.

Pitch, (from [L.] pix,) Colophonia, Pissa—p. Black, see Pinus sylvestris—p. Birch, see Betula alba—p. Burgundy, see Pinus abies—p. Canada, see Pinus Canadensis—p. Cap, see Depilatory—p. Common, see Pinus sylvestris—p. Hemlock, see Pinus Canadensis—p. Jews', Asphaltum—p. Mineral, Pissasphaltum—p. Plaster, see Depilatory, Emplastrum picis—p. Stone, see Pinus sylvestris—p. White, see Pinus abies.

Pitch'er Plant, Sarracenia purpurea.

Pithyri'nus, (from pityron, 'bran,') Acerosus, Furfuraceus.

Pitta'cium. A pitch plaster, (from πιττα, 'pitch,')

Pit'ting, Pock mark.

Pitto'sis, (from πιττα, 'pitch,') see Depilatory.

Pitto'ta. Medicines in which pitch is the chief ingredient.

Pitts'burg, Min'eral Wa'ters of. A chalybeate mineral spring, situate about four miles southwest of Pittsburg, in Pennsylvania. It contains chloride of sodium, chloride of magnesium, oxide of iron, sulphate of lime, and carbonic acid.

Pitui'ta, Mucus, Phlegm—p. Narium, Nasal mucus.

Pituitaire, Pituitary, Pituitary membrane.

Pitu'itary, Pituita'rius, (F.) Pituitaire, (from pituita.) Concerned in the secretion of mucus or phlegm. A name given to several parts.

PITU'ITARY BOD'Y, P. gland—p. Fossa, Sella Turcica.

PITU'ITARY GLAND, Glandula Pituitosa seu pituitaria seu basilaris, Lacuna seu Appendicula cerebri, Senti'na, Hypophysis seu Appen'diz cerebri, Glans pituitam excipiens, Corpus pituitarè, Pitu'itary body, (F.) Glande ou Corps pituitaire, Appendice sus-sphénoïdale du cerveau, (Ch.) A small, round body; the anterior portion of which is of a cineritious yellow hue, and the posterior, which is smaller, is whitish and pulpy. It occupies the sella Turcica of the sphenoid bone. Its functions are unknown.

PITU'ITARY MEMBRANE, Schneiderian Membrane, Membra'na pituitaria seu olfactoria, (F.) Membrane nasale ou olfactive ou pituitaire ou de Schneider, Pituitaire. The mucous membrane which lines the nasal fossæ, and extends to the different cavities communicating with the nose. In the nasal fossæ, the membrane appears formed of two layers, intimately united; the one in contact with the bone is fibrous, the other is free at one surface. The latter is a mucous membrane, in which papillæ are not easily distinguishable, but which contains them, as well as a number of very small mucous follicles, that open into the cavity of the nares. On penetrating the maxillary, frontal, sphenoidal, and ethmoidal sinuses, the membrane becomes very thin, transparent, less vascular, and seems reduced to its mucous layer. The pituitary membrane receives the impression of odors by means of the expansion of the olfactory nerves upon it. This portion of it is, at times, alone called the olfactory membrane. It is the seat of smell.

Pit'uite, Mucus.

Pitu'itous, Pituito'us, (F.) Pituiteux, (from pituita.) Consisting of, or resembling, or full of mucus or phlegm.

PITU'ITOUS FE'VER, Enteric fever.

Pityre'nus, (πιτυριος,) Acerosus, Furfuraceus.

Pityri'asis, (πιτυριον, 'bran,') Lepido'sis Pityri'asis, Pityris'ma, Her'pes furfuraceus seu farinoseus, Porri'go (of some), Tin'ea furfuracea seu porrigo'sa, Furfura'tio, Furfuris'ca, Bran'ny Tel'ter, Dan'driff, Dan'druff, Dander, (Sc.) Luss, (Prov.) Room, Ram'met, (F.) Teigne, Dartre, D. furfuracée volante;—a very superficial affection; characterized by irregular patches of thin scales, which repeatedly exfoliate and recur; but which never form crusts, or are accompanied with exco-riations. It is not contagious. It occurs under three or four varieties of form. See Porrigo.

PITYRI'ASIS CAP'ITIS. An erythematous desquamation of the head in infants and old persons. When accompanied with clots of sebaceous matter, as in infants, it is called Seborrhœa furfuracea.

PITYRI'ASIS LIN'GUÆ. A partial coating of the tongue with white circular or semicircular spots, due to accumulation of epithelial cells.

PITYRI'ASIS NI'GRA, Melasma—p. Versicolor, Chloasma.

Pityris'ma, gen. Pityrism'atis, (πιτυρισμα,) Pityriasis.

Pityro'i'des, (πιτυροειδής, from πιτυριον, 'bran,' and αἶδος, 'resemblance,') Furfuraceus.

Pit'yron, (πιτυριον, 'bran,') Furfur.

Pivoine, Pæonia.

Piv'oting. In dentistry, an operation which consists in fastening a new crown upon the root of a tooth by means of a piece of gold wire, called 'a pivot.'

Pix, gen. Pi'cis, (πισσα, 'pitch,') see Pinus sylvestris, Sperm—p. Abietina, see Pinus abies—p. Abietis, see Pinus abies—p. Alba, see Pinus abies—p. Arida, see Pinus abies, and Pinus sylvestris.

Place'bo, 'I will please,' (from placeo.) A medicine, prescribed rather to satisfy the patient than with any expectation of its effecting a cure.

Placen'ta, (πλακούς, gen. πλακουντος, 'a cake,') P.
uteri seu uteri'na seu uteri car'nea, He'par seu
Je'cur uteri'num, Ca'ro seu Affu'sio orbicula'ris, Ma'za. A soft, spongy, vascular body, adherent to the uterus, and connected with the fœtus by the umbilical cord. It is not in existence during the first period of the embryo state, but its formation commences perhaps with the arrival of the embryo in the uterus. It is generally considered to have two portions, one fœtal, and the other maternal. The fœtal portion consists of highly vascular villi and tufts, which contain the inoscu-lating loops of the umbilical arteries and umbilical vein of the fœtus. The maternal portion is considered by Dr. Reid to consist, essentially, of a large sac formed by the inner coat of the vascular system of the mother, into which the maternal blood is poured by the curling arteries of the uterus, and from which it is returned by the uteroplacental veins. The tufts and villi of the fœtal placenta are ensheathed by this inner coat of the maternal vascular system; and, according to Prof. Goodsir, two distinct sets of nucleated cells—one maternal and the other fœtal—separate the maternal and fœtal portions where they come in contact, one set of which are probably, he thinks, concerned in the separation of nutritive matter from the maternal blood, and the other destined to convey it into the vessels of the fœtus.
The placenta is formed of several lobes or coty- ledons, which can be readily distinguished from each other on the uterine surface; but towards the fœtal surface are confounded into one mass.
When a lobe is so distinct from the rest as to form, as it were, a supplementary placenta, it is termed placen'ta succenturi'ata. The placenta is composed of the umbilical vessels, areolar tissue, and whitish, resisting filaments, which are vascular ramifications obliterated. Lymphatic vessels have also been presumed to exist in it; and nerves have been traced, proceeding from the great sympathetic of the fœtus. The veins of the placenta anastomose freely with one another, and give rise at its edge to a venous channel which runs around the whole circumference—the placental sinus.

The umbilical cord usually arises from the centre of the placenta; but occasionally from its edge, when it is called bat'tledore placenta.

The main function of the placenta appears to be like that of the lungs in the adult. It admits of the blood of the fœtus being shown to that of the mother, and undergoing requisite changes.
It may, also, be an organ for nutritive absorption, as observed above. The placenta is liable to inflammation and also to fatty and calcareous degeneration.

Animals, which have no placenta—as the Marsupialia—are called implacental and non-placental.

PLACEN'TA PRÆ'VIA, (præ, 'before,' and via, 'way,') P. ob'via seu obla'ta. Presentation of the placenta; a condition which gives rise to unavoidable hemorrhage from the uterus. The safety of the female depends upon speedy delivery.

PLACEN'TA SAN'GUINIS, see Blood—p. Uteri suc- centuriata, Decidua.

Placen'tal, Placenta'lis, (F.) Placentaire. Relating or appertaining to the placenta. Possessed of a placenta,—as 'a placental mammal.'

PLACEN'TAL PHTHI'SIS. Wasting of the placenta from inflammation, gangrene, degeneration, &c.

PLACEN'TAL SI'NUS, see Placenta.

Placenti'tis, gen. Placenti'tidis, Placounti'tis, Placoi'tis, Inflamma'tio placen'tæ, (placenta, and itis.) Inflammation of the placenta.

Placen'tula, 'a little cake,' (dim. of placenta,
'a cake,') A rudimental placenta. The placenta of an abortion.

Placoi'tis, (πλακούς, 'placenta,' and itis.) Pla- centitis.

Placounti'tis, gen. Placounti'tidis, (πλακούς, gen. πλακουντος, 'placenta,' and itis.) Placentitis.

Pladaro'ma, gen. Pladaro'matis, (πλαδαρωμα,) Pla- darosis.

Pladaro'sis, Pladaro'ma, Plador'otes, (from πλαδαρος, 'soft,' and osis.) A soft tumor on the eyelid, unaccompanied with redness or pain. Trachoma.

Pladar'otes, (πλαδαρωνος,) Pladarosis.

Plafond des Ventricules du Cerveau, ([F.]
plafond, 'a ceiling,' from plat, 'flat,' and fond,
'ground,') Corpus callosum.

Pla'ga, (πληγη,) Ictus, Wound. Formerly, any kind of wound or disease from violence.

Plagiobol'ia, Planobol'ia, (πλαγιος, 'to one side,' and βαλλειν, 'to throw,') Imperfect emission of sperm into the vagina. Emission to one side; sometimes practised to render impregnation less probable.

Plagiocephal'ia, see Plagiocephalic.

Plagiocephal'ic, (πλαγιος, 'to one side,' and κε- φαλη, 'head,') Having the skull twisted to one side, this oblique asymmetrical condition being called plagiocephal'ia.

Plague, (from πληγη, plaga, 'a stroke,') Pes- vous Fe'ver, Sep'tic or glan'dular pes'tilence, The sick'ness, (F.) Peste, Typhus d'Orient, Fièvre du Lévant, F. ad'eno-nerveuse. An eminently malignant disease; endemic in the Levant; frequently epidemic, and destroying at least two-thirds of those it attacks. It is a fever of the most aggravated kind, with affection of the lymphatic glands of the groins or axillæ, and carbuncles. Its mi-asmata—it has been conceived—adhere to different organic textures, to woollen goods, clothing, and furniture; and may thus be transported to a considerable distance; but this is disputed. The mean duration of the disease is six or seven days; some die in twenty-four hours, others not till ten or twelve days. Pathological anatomy has afforded little light with respect to it. Various means have been used for arresting it, but none have seemed to be pre-eminently distinguished. The great point is, to watch the indications as they develop themselves; and to treat the case, in general, like one of typhus gravior. It is universally agreed that the suppuration of the buboes should be aided as far as practicable. For preventing the importation and spread of the plague, the Quar- antine Laws were instituted; and when the disease has actually appeared, a cordon sanitaire has been drawn round the infected district, so as to prevent all communication.

PLAGUE OF ANTONI'NUS, Pes'tis Antoninia'na,
(F.) Peste Antonine. A severe febrile disease, which prevailed in the Roman empire during the reign of Antoninus. It began in Asia, and passed westward. It resembled the Plague of Athens.

PLAGUE OF ATHENS, (F.) Peste d'Athènes. A febrile disease, which raged at Athens during the Peloponnesian war, in the fifth century before the Christian era; and a description of which is given in Thucydides. It was characterized by a cutaneous eruption, accompanied by small ulcerations, vomiting, affection of the respiratory organs, and diarrhoea. It began in the far East, and, before reaching Athens, ravaged Egypt, and the greater part of the Persian empire.

PLAGUE, BLACK, Death, black.

PLAGUE, COLD. A severe form of congestive fever, seen in the Southern States. Bilious pneumonia, in which there is no reaction, has been also so called.

PLAGUE CROSS. A cross formerly affixed by the authorities to the door of a house in which there was plague.

PLAGUE, GREAT, OF LONDON. The last visitation, in London, of the Plague, in 1665—the year before the great fire, which gave occasion to the rebuilding of a large portion of the city, and to improved sanitary arrangements. It was exceedingly fatal. On the 15th of September, Evelyn records the deaths of the preceding week at 5000; and in another week of September they reached nearly 10,000.

PLAGUE, PA'LL. A malignant fever, greatly resembling plague, which prevailed in Rajpootana after July, 1836.

PLAGUE SPOT, Plague token.

PLAGUE TO'KEN, Plague mark, Plague spot. A mark by which one struck with the plague was known. Perhaps the early stage of carbuncle in unfavorable cases. It is described as a small tubercle—Bos'sa—somewhat resembling a wart, callous, and more or less deficient in sensibility, varying in size from that of a millet-seed to that of a bean.

Pla'gula, (dim. of plaga.) Compress, Pledget, Splint.

Plaie, (from plaga.) Wound—p. d'Arme à feu, Wound, gunshot—p. d'Arquebuse, Wound, gunshot—p. par Arrachement, Wound, lacerated—p. Contuse, Wound, contused—p. Envenimée, Wound, poisoned—p. à Lambeaux, see Flap.

Plain'tive, (from [F.] plaindre, 'to complain,') Luctueux.

Planan'thus Fastiga'tus, Lycopodium selago—p. Selago, Lycopodium selago.

Plana'ria Latius'cula, (from planus, 'flat,') Distoma hepaticum.

Planarth'ragra, (πλανη, 'a wandering,' ἀρθρον, 'a joint,' and ἄγρᾱ, 'a seizure,') Gout (wandering).

Plancher (F.), 'floor.' In Anatomy, the inferior wall or boundary of a cavity.

Plancher du Cerveau, Tentorium.

Plan'cus, (planca, 'a plane, a table,') Leiopus.

Pla'nē, (πλανη, 'a wandering,') Plexus.

Plane, Me'sial, see Mesial.

Plan'etstruck, see Sideratio.

Plane'tes, (πλανητης,) Plane'ticus, Pla'nicus, Errabun'dus, Errat'ic, (from πλανη, 'a wandering,') An epithet given to diseases whose returns are irregular; especially to intermittent fever—Plane'tes Fe'bris, F. Errat'ica, F. Erro'nea, F. Va'ga.

Plane'tica Arthri'tis, Gout, wandering.

Pla'nicus, Planetes.

Planip'edes, (planus, 'flat,' and pes, gen. pedis, 'foot,') Steganopodes.

Planit'ies Pe'dis, (from planus, 'flat,') Sole.

Planobol'ia, (πλανη, 'a wandering,' and βαλλειν, 'to throw,') Plagiobolia.

Planod'ia, (πλανη, 'a wandering,' and ὁδος, 'a way,') A false passage; as occasionally results from introducing the catheter.

Plan'ta, Sole—p. Noctis, Hydroa, Sudamina—p. Pedis, Sole—p. Prima pedis, Tarsus.

Planta'go, gen. Plantag'inis, (planta, 'sole,'—from resemblance of the leaves,) P. Major, Centiner'via, Arnoglos'sum, Septiner'via, Polyneu'ron, Heptapleu'ron, Planta'go latifo'lia seu ma'ior seu vulga'ris, Great plan'tain, Way'bread, (Sc.) Wa'bran leaves, (F.) Plantain commun. Ord. Plantaginaceæ. Ser. Syst. Tetrandria Mono-gynia. The leaves have been said to be refrigerant, attenuant, substyptic, and diuretic.

PLANTA'GO AQUAT'ICA, Alisma plantago.

PLANTA'GO CORDA'TA, Heartleaved plantain; P. LANCEOLA'TA, Ribgrass; and P. VIRGIN'ICA, White plan'tain, or Rib'wort, indigenous, have properties like plantago major.

PLANTA'GO CORON'OPUS, Coronopod'ium, Cor'nu cervi'num, Stel'la ter'ra, Planta'go, Buckshorn Plan'tain. Properties like the last.

PLANTA'GO NIT'IDA, P. psyllium.

PLANTA'GO PSYL'LIIUM, P. nit'ida, Psyll'ium, P. erec'tum, Pulica'ris her'ba, Crystal'lin, Cyno-moi'a, Branch'ing Plan'tain, Flea'wort, (F.) Herbe aux puces commune. The seeds have a nauseous, mucilaginous taste, and no remarkable smell. The decoction of the seeds is recommended in hoarseness and roughness of the fauces.

PLANTA'GO VULGA'RI, Plantago.

Plantain des Alpes, Arnica montana—p. Arbre, Musa paradisiaca—p. Branching, Plan-tago psyllium—p. Buckshorn, Plantago coronopus—p. Commun, Plantago—p. d'Eau, Alisma plantago—p. Great, Plantago major—p. Heart-leaved, Plantago cordata.

Plan'tain Meal, see Musa paradisiaca.

PLAN'TAIN, RAT'TLESNAKE, Goodyera pubescens—p. Robin's, Erigeron bellidifolium.

PLAN'TAIN TREE, Musa paradisiaca.

PLAN'TAIN, WA'TER, Alisma plantago, Unisema deltifolia—p. White, Plantago Virginica.

Plantaire, Plantar muscle—p. Grêle, Plantar muscle.

Plan'tar, (from planta,) Planta'ris, (F.) Plan-taire. That which relates or belongs to the sole of the foot. This epithet has been given to several parts.

PLAN'TAR APONEURO'SIS, P. Fas'cia. A thick, dense, resisting aponeurosis, of a triangular shape, and superficially situate, which occupies the middle and sides of the sole of the foot, and furnishes insertions to several of the muscles of the region, either directly or through the medium of septa which it sends between them.

PLAN'TAR ARCH, see Plantar arteries.

PLAN'TAR ARTERIES. These are two in number, and arise from the extremity of the posterior tibial artery. They are distinguished into: The inter'nal plan'tar ar'tery, situate above the abductor pollicis pedis. It extends from the termination of the posterior tibial to the trunk of one of the collaterals of that toe. The exter'nal plan'tar ar'tery is larger than the preceding, and ought to be considered as the termination of the posterior tibial. Situate above the flexor communis digitorum pedis, it extends from beneath the calcaneum to the posterior extremity of the last metatarsal space. When it has reached this part, it turns from without inwards; advances towards the posterior extremity of the first metatarsal bone, and anastomoses with the perforating branch of the dorsalis tarsi. In the first part of its course it furnishes calcaneal, articular, muscular, and adipous branches. The second portion of the artery is called the Plan'tar Arch or Cross. It gives branches in all directions. The inferior and posterior have received no name. The superior—three in number—are the poste'rior per'forating ar'teries. The anterior branches are larger, and there are commonly four. They furnish the anterior perforating, and the collaterals of the last four toes.

PLAN'TAR CROSS, see Plantar arteries—p. Fascia, P. aponeurosis.

PLAN'TAR LIG'AMENTS. A name given to the inferior ligaments, which unite the bones of the tarsus and metatarsus, to distinguish them from the superior, called dorsal.

PLAN'TAR MUS'CLE, Plantaris, P. grac'ilis, Tibialis grac'ilis, Extensor tar'si mi'nor, (F.) Plantaire, P. grêle, Jambier grêle, Petit femorocalcanien (Ch.). A muscle, situate at the posterior part of the leg. It is long, thin, and narrow. Above, it is attached to the posterior part of the external condyle of the os femoris; below, it terminates by a long tendon, which is attached to the posterior and inner part of the calcaneum. This muscle extends the leg on the foot, and conversely. It can, also, assist in the flexion of the leg on the thigh.

PLAN'TAR NERVES. These are two in number, and are furnished by the termination of the posterior tibial nerve. They are distinguished into—1. The internal plantar nerve, which extends from the inferior part of the tibial nerve to both sides of the first three toes, and the inner side of the fourth. It furnishes, also, branches to the abductor of the great toe; to the short flexor of the toes; to the accessory; to the short flexor of the great toe, the lumbricales, &c. 2. The external plantar nerve proceeds from the termination of the posterior tibial to the posterior extremity of the fifth metatarsal bone, and gives branches to the flexor brevis digitorum pedis, the accessory and the abductor of the little toe. This trunk subsequently divides into two branches;—the one—profunda—is distributed to the short flexor of the great toe, the interosseous and abductor pollicis pedis; the other—superficialis—sends filaments to the short flexor of the little toe, the two sides of that toe, the outer side of the fourth, and the last lumbricalis.

PLAN'TAR RE'GIONS or SUR'FACES are different regions or surfaces of the sole of the foot. Three are generally reckoned,—the internal, middle, and external.

PLAN'TAR VEINS follow an arrangement similar to that of the arteries.

Planta'ria, Dengue.

Planta'ris, Plantar, *P. musc*le — p. Superficies pedis, Sole — p. Verus, see Flexor longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans (accessorius).

Planta'rium, ('a nursery ground,' from planta, 'a plant,') Pubes.

Plante du Pied, Sole.

Plantis-sous-phalangiens, Lumbricales pedis — p. Tendino-phalangiens, Lumbricales pedis.

Plat'num Aponeuroticum Diaphragmatis, (planus, 'flat, level, smooth.') The tendinous expansion of the diaphragm.

PLA'NUM ORBITA'LE, see Maxillary bone (superior).

PLA'NUM OS. The papyraceous or orbital plate of the ethmoid bone—Lamina papyracea, Lamella plana — was formerly so called.

PLA'NUM PE'DIS, Sole.

PLA'NUM SUPER'US LIN'GUÆ. The upper surface of the tongue.

PLA'NUM TEMPOR'ALE. A somewhat flattened portion of the temporal fossa.

Planu'ria, (πλανη, 'a wandering,' and ουρον, 'urine,') Discharge of urine through unwounded ways.

Plaqueminier d'Europe, Diospyros lotus.

Plaques Dures, 'hard patches.' A variety of patches met with in enteric fever. These and the Plaques molles, 'soft patches,' are slightly enlarged, and the mucous membrane is red and rugous. Plaques reticululées, ('reticulated,') and P. gauffrées, ('honeycombed,') are also met with, and are thicker and harder, and more elevated, while the mucous membrane is paler and smoother.

Plaques Gauffrées, 'honeycomb patches,' see Peyeri glandulæ and Plaques dures—p. Laiteuses, see Taches laiteuses—p. Molles, see Plaques dures.

Plaques Muqueuses (F.), Mucous Patch'es. Cutaneous syphilitic vegetations, usually described as condylomata.

Plaques de Peyer, see Peyeri glandulæ—p. Reticulées, see Plaques dures.

Plas'ma, gen. Plasmat'is, (πλάσμα, 'a thing formed,' from πλασσειν, 'to form,') Liquor sanguinis. In antiquity, a gargle or mouthwash to clear the voice. Also, a pharmaceutical preparation from glycerin and starch heated together in the proportion of a fluidounce of the former and seventy grains of the latter in powder, gradually raised to the temperature of about 240°, constantly stirring. It constitutes the basis of different ointments, and keeps better than they do as usually made. Called also Glyc'amil.

PLAS'MA, MUS'CLE, see Muscle.

Plasmat'ic, Plasmat'icus, (πλασσειν, 'to form,') Having the power to give form, plastic.

Plasmexhidrosis, (plasma, εξ, 'out of,' and ιδρωσις, 'perspiration,') Exudation of the plasma of the blood from the vessels.

Plas'mic, Plas'micus, (F.) Plasmique. Relating or appertaining to the plasma of the blood.

Plasmo'ma, (plasma, and oma.) A fibroplastic growth.

Plas'ter, (εμπλαστρον, from πλασσειν, 'to smear, to cover over,') Emplastrum — p. Aconite, Emplastrum aconiti — p. Adhesive, Emplastrum resinæ, Sparadrapum adhesivum — p. Adhesive, Baynton's, see Emplastrum resinæ — p. Adhesive, of pitch and resins, Emplastrum de pice et resinis glutinans — p. Ammoniac, Emplastrum ammoniaci — p. Ammoniac with mercury, Emplastrum ammoniaci cum hydrargyro — p. of Antimony, Emplastrum antimonii.

PLAS'TER, ANTISEP'TIC. A plaster made by dipping ordinary adhesive plaster in a hot solution of carbolic acid (1 to 60).

PLAS'TER, ANTISEP'TIC LAC. A plaster made, according to Prof. Lister, by heating Shell-lac, 3 parts, with crystallized Carbolic acid, 1 part, first mixing the lac with one-third of the acid, over a slow fire, until the former is completely melted; removing it from the fire, adding the rest of the acid, stirring, straining, and thickening by cooling, and then spreading thinly, the surface being brushed with a solution of gutta-percha in bisulphide of carbon.

Plas'tic, Plas'ticus, Formativus, Formative, (F.) Plastique, (πλαστικός, from πλασσειν, 'to form.') That which forms or serves to form.

PLAS'TIC ELEMENT. One which bears within it the germs of a higher form.—(Gerber.) Plas'tic or histogenetic or organoleptic elements of nutrit'ion, are those elements of food which go to the formation of organized tissue. Agents—hygienical or curative—which take part in such formations, may be termed histotroph'ic or constructive. See Aliment.

PLAS'TIC FORCE. The generative or formative power in organized bodies. It is also called Nit'us formativus, Vis seu Virtus plastica seu formativa seu essentialis seu reproductiva, Facultas formatrix seu nutritrix seu auctrix seu vegetativa, Blas alterativum, Motus assimilatio'nis, An'ima vegetativa, Plasticism'us, Virtus formatrix, Plastic'itas, Plastic'ity, Force of nutrit'ion, F. of assimila'tion, F. of forma'tion, F. of vegeta'tion, Paissance du moule intérieur, (Buffon,) Bildungstrieb, Germ force, of the Germans.

PLAS'TIC LYMPH, Liquor sanguinis—p. Surgery, Morioplastice.

Plastic'us, (πλασσειν, 'to form,') Plastic force.

Plastic'itas, Plastic force.

Plastic'ity, Plastic force.

Plastily'tic, (πλασσειν, 'to form,' and λυω, 'I loose,') Antiplastic.

Plastily'ticum (Hæmatoly'ticum), Spanæmic.

Plastique, Plastic.

Plastodyna'mia, (πλασσειν, 'to form,' and δυναμις, 'force,') The manifestation of nutritive activity or power.

Pla'ta, (πλατῆ, from πλατὺς, 'broad,') Scapula.

Platano, (platanus,) Musa sapientum.

Platanier, (platanus,) Musa paradisiaca.

Platanthe'ra Orbicula'ta, (πλατὺς, 'wide,' and ἀνθός, for 'anther,') Large roundleaved Or'chis; indigenous. Order, Orchidaceæ; flowering in July. The leaves are large, soft, and fleshy, and are used, in certain places, for dressing blisters.

Plat'anus, (πλατάνος, from πλατὺς, 'broad,') Musa paradisiaca.

Plate, Me'sial, see Visceral—p. Visceral, see Visceral.

PLATE, SPI'RAL, Lamina spiralis.

Pla'tea, (πλατὺς, 'broad,') Bothriocephalus latus.

Plate'bone, Scapula.

Plateias'ma, gen. Plateias'matis, Platiasmus.

Plates, Mans'ford's, see Galvanism.

Platias'mus, Plateias'ma, (from πλατὺς, 'broad,') Excessive development of the lips, causing the articulation to be imperfect.

Plat'ina, Platinum.

Plat'inum, Plat'ina, (from [S.] plata, 'silver,') (F.) Platine, Or blanc, Petit argent. The preparations of platinum resemble in their therapeutical properties those of gold. The Bichlo'ride, Plat'ini Bichlo'ridum, made by dissolving platinum in aqua regia, and the Double Chlo'ride of Plat'inum and So'dium, So'dii chloroplat'inas, Chloroplat'inate of So'dium, prepared by dissolving bichlo'ride of platinum and pure chloride of sodium, in proper proportions, in water, evaporating and crystallizing,—are the preparations used. They are not much prescribed.

Plat'ula, (πλατὺς, 'broad,') see Pediculus.

Pla'ty, (πλατὺς, 'broad,') in composition, broad.

Platybreg'mate, (platy, and bregma,) see Cranium.

Platycephal'ic, Platycephal'icus, (from platy, and κεφαλή, 'head,') Having a broad skull.

Platycor'ia, (πλατυκόρια, from platy, and κόρη, 'pupil,') Mydriasis.

Platycori'asis, Mydriasis.

Platyel'mia, (platy, and ἔλμης, 'a worm,') A variety of worms, long and flat, including among others tapeworms, tæniadæ, &c.

Platiel'mins, gen. Platyelmin'this, (platy, and ἔλμης, 'worm,') Bothriocephalus.

Platyno'sis, (from πλατὺς, 'broad,' and osis,) Amplifica'tio. Morbid extension of parts.

Platyophthal'mus, (πλατυοφθαλμος, from platy, and οφθαλμος, 'eye,') One who has broad eyes. Antimony was of old called Platyophthalmion, under the idea that it improved the appearance of the eyes.

Platypod'ia, (platy, and πους, gen. ποδος, 'a foot,') see Kyllosis.

Plat'ypus, (πλατυπους,) see Kyllosis.

Platys'ma, gen. Platys'matis, (πλατυσμα, from πλατὺς, 'broad,') Anything broadly extended. A spread plaster.

PLATYS'MA MYOÏDES, P. Myo'des, Mus'culus cutaneus seu subcutaneus col'li (Winslow), Quadratus gen'æ seu latis'simus col'li, Expan'sio musculosa, Tetrago'nus, Stomoman'icon, (F.) Thoracoxillo-facial, Thoraco-facial, (Ch.) Peaucier. A muscle situate superficially on the lateral parts of the neck. It is flat, broad, and quadrilateral. Its fibres, which are all parallel to each other, pass obliquely upwards, and from without inwards. They arise from the areolar tissue, which covers the anterior and superior part of the chest; pass before the clavicle, and proceed to attach themselves at the interior part of the symphysis menti, at the external oblique line of the jaw, and at the commissure of the lips. The fibres of this last insertion form a distinct fasciculus, called by some anatomists Mus'culus Risorius Santorini. The platysma myoides depresses the commissure of the lips, and carries it outwards. It contributes, also, to the depression of the lower jaw. When it contracts, it wrinkles the skin of the neck transversely.

Platyster'nus, (platy, and στέριον, 'the sternum,') One who has a broad, well-developed chest.

Platys'tomus, (platy, and στομα, 'mouth,') One who has a broad mouth.

Plau'tus, Leiopus.

Ple'chas, (πληχας,) Perinaeum.

Plec'tanæ, Cornua uteri.

Plec'tanê, Pl'ica, Pleg'ma, Plex'us, (πλεκτανή, from πλέκω, 'I twine,') A fold; a plexus. Also, a cornu of the uterus.

Plec'trum, (πλεκτρον,) The styloid process of the temporal bone. Also, the uvula, and the tongue.

Pled'get, ([D.] Plagghe), Plumace'olus, Lin-tea'men, Play'ula, (F.) Plumaceau, Plumasseau. A small compress or gâteau of lint—the filaments arranged parallel to each other—flattened between the hands after the extremities have been cut off or folded down. It is applied over wounds, ulcers, &c., to preserve them from the contact of the air, to retain dressings in situ, and to absorb the discharges.

Ple'gê, (πληγή,) Blow, Ictus.

Pleg'ma, gen. Pleg'matis, (πληγμα,) Plectane, Plege, Plexus.

Plegom'eter, (πληγή, 'a stroke,' and μετρον, 'measure,') Pleximeter.

Pleide Ganglionnaire. The chain of glands involved in a syphilitic bubo.

Plein (F.), (from plenus, 'full,') The middle part of a roller. See Bandage or Roller.

Pleiomasthus, (πλειων, 'more,' and μασθος, 'a breast,') Polymasthus.

Pleiomaz'ia, (πλειων, 'more,' and μαζος, 'a breast,') see Polymasthus.

Ple'na Mu'lier, 'a full woman,' Pregnant.

Plenal'via, (plenus, 'full,' and alvus, 'abdomen,') Grain'sick, Maw'bound. Impaction of the paunch or rumen of cattle.

Plenck's Dep'ilatory, see Depilatory, Colley's.

PLENCK'S LO'TION. A caustic application consisting of two parts of corrosive sublimate, one part of camphor, and sixteen parts of alcohol, employed in ulceration of the neck of the uterus.

Plen'itude, (plenus, 'full,') Fulness.

Plenitu'do, gen. Plenitu'dinis, Plethora.

Ple'no Ri'vo, ('in a full stream,') A term applied to the blood when it flows freely from the vein, in venesection.

Pleomas'tia, (πλειων, 'more,' and μαστος, 'nipple,') The condition of having several nipples developed on one breast.

Pleoma'zia, (πλειων, 'more,' and μαζος, 'a breast,') see Polymasthus.

Pleonec'tica Athym'ia seu Melanchol'ia, Pleonex'ia. A form of insanity characterized by a desire for gain or by covetousness.

Pleonec'ticus, (πλεονεκτικός, from πλειων, 'more,' and έχω, 'to have,') Covetous. Desirous to acquire: hence, ma'nia pleonectica.

Plero'sis, (πληρωσις, from πληρης, 'full,' and οσις,) Reple'tio, Reflec'tio, Reple'tion, (F.) Plé-rose. Restoration of flesh after sickness. Plethora.

Plero'ticus, (πλερωτικός, from πληρω, 'I fill up,') Incarnans.

Plérotique, Incarnans.

Ples'moné, (πλησμονή,) Plenitu'do, Sati'etas, Sati'ety. Intemperance. A condition the opposite to that of hunger.

Ples'ser, (πλεσσω, 'I strike,') Plexor.

Ples'sigraph, (πλεσσω, 'I strike,' and γραφω, 'I write,') An instrument which is not only intended for the purposes of percussion, but also indicates a change in the nature of the sound elicited.

Plessim'eter, Pleximeter.

Plessimètre, Pleximeter.

Plethomer'ia, (πληθος, 'a great number,' and μέρος, 'a part,') Superabundance of parts, as in the case of six fingers to one hand.

Pletho'ra, (πληθωρα,) Poly'm'ia, Polyhyperhæ'mia, Panhyperhæ'mia, Polychym'ia sanguinea, Angioplero'sis, Angioplero'sis, Erythræ'mia, Erythro'sis, Hæmatopletho'ra, Hæmopletho'ra, Plenitu'do, Multitu'do, Redundan'tia, Reple'tio, En'chyma, Comple'tio, Pleth'ory, Reple'tion, (old Eng.) Plur'isy, San'guineness, Ful'ness, (F.) Abon-dance, Rédondance. The word plethora, which means repletion, Plero'sis, expresses a supra-bundance of blood in the system, or in some part of it:—hence the division of plethora into general and local; the latter being called, according to its seat, cerebral, pulmonary, uterine, &c. The principal symptoms of plethora exist in the circulatory system; such as redness of the surface, swelling of the veins, increase in the fulness of the pulse, in the strength of the heart's pulsations, &c., with spontaneous hemorrhages occasionally. With these are usually united general heaviness, torpor, lassitude, vertigo, tinnitus aurium, flushes of heat, &c. The blood of plethoric persons differs from healthy blood in the smaller ratio of water which it contains, and especially in the augmentation of the red corpuscles.

The tendency to plethora, or its actual existence, must be obviated by purgatives, proper diet, exercise, &c.: and, if the danger from it be pressing, by bloodletting. This is, however, a doubtful remedy for general plethora, as it increases hæmaturia.

PLETHO'RA ARTERIO'SA is the form in which the blood is rich in fibrin and red corpuscles—the arterial constitution.

PLETHO'RA, LO'CAL, Hyperæmia—p. Partialis, Hyperæmia.

Pletho'ric, (πληθωρικός,) Pletho'ricus, Polyæ'mic, Polyæ'micus, Polyæ'matus, San'guine, Sanguin'eus, (F.) Pléthorique. Full of blood. Relating to or affected with plethora.

Pletho'ricus, Plethoric.

Pleth'ory, Plethora.

Ple'thos, (πληθος,) Satiety.

Pleum'on, (πλευμων,) Pulmo.

Pleumo'nia, Pneumonia.

Pleur'a, (πλευρα,) Pleu'rum, Pleuro'ma, Membra'na pleurit'ica succin'gens seu costas succin'gens, Membrana seu Tu'nica costa'lis seu subcosta'lis, Hypopleu'rios, Hypozo'cus, (F.) Plèvre ou Pleure. The pleuræ are two thin, diaphanous, perspirable membranes, which line each side of the chest, and are reflected thence upon each lung. Like other serous membranes—to which class they belong—each represents a sac without aperture. From the junction of the pleura of each side the mediastina are formed. That portion of the pleura which lines the parietes of the chest is called Pleura costa'lis seu parieta'lis; the portion that covers the lungs, Pleura pulmona'lis. The arteries of the pleuræ are from the intercostals, internal mammaries, phrenic, inferior thyroid, &c. The veins correspond with the arteries. They are, also, supplied with lymphatics, but nerves are not traceable in them. A fold of the pleura, reaching from the lower edge of the root of the lung to the diaphragm, is called Ligamen'tum la'tum pulmo'nis, Broad lig'ament of the lung.

Pleura is also used for Cavity of the Pleura, Sac'cus Pleu'ræ.

Pleur'æ, (pl. of pleura.) The sides of the chest.

Pleur'al, Pleura'lis, Plen'ricus, Pleuri'tes. That which concerns the pleura;—as a pleural fistula, pleural cavity, pleural friction, pleural hemorrhage, &c.

Pleural'gia, (πλευρα, 'side,' and αλγος, 'pain,') Pleurodyne.

Pleurapoph'yses, (πλευρα, 'side,' and αποφυ-sea, 'processes,') Costæ veræ, see Costa.

Pleuraposte'ma, gen. Pleuraposte'matis, (pleura, and apostema, 'abscess,') Empyema.

Pleurarthroc'acé, (πλευρα, 'a rib,' αρθρον, 'a joint,' and κακος, 'bad,') Caries of the ribs.

Pleure, Pleura.

Pleure'sia, (from pleura, Pleuritis).

Pleurè'sie, Pleurisy—p. Fausse, Pleurodynia—p. Sèche, see Pleuritis.

Pleure'sis, (from pleura,) Pleuritis.

Pleurétique, Pleuritic.

Pleur'icus, Pleural.

Pleur'isy, Pleuritis.

PLEUR'ISY, BIL'IOUS, Pleuritis bilio'sa. Pleurisy accompanied with bilious symptoms; the effect of duodenitis or duodenohepatitis.

PLEUR'ISY, DRY, see Pleuritis—p. False, Pleurodynia.

PLEUR'ISY, HEAD. A ridiculous term, occasionally used by the vulgar, in the Southern States especially, for bilious pneumonia before the pneumonitic phenomena are developed, and while the head is prominently affected.

PLEUR'ISY, HEMORRHAG'IC, Hæmatothorax—p. Rheumatic, Pleurodynia—p. Latent, see Pleuritis—p. Root, Aselepias tuberosa.

PLEUR'ISY, TY'PHOID, Pleuritis typhoï'des seu typho'des seu typho'sa. Pleurisy accompanied by adynamic symptoms.

Pleurit'es, (πλευριτης,) Pleural.

Pleurit'ic, (πλευριτικός,) Pleuriticus, Pleurit'ical, (F.) Pleuritique; (same etymon as pleuritis.) Relating or appertaining to pleuritis, — as pleuritic pain.

Pleurit'is, gen. Pleurit'idis, (πλευριτις, from pleura, and itis, or from πλευριτης, — ισος, 'a disease,' understood,) Morbus lateralis seu lateris seu pleurit'icus seu costalis, Empres'ma seu Cau'ma Pleuritidis, Pleure'sis, Pleure'sia, Pleuritis costalis seu ve'ra, Pleurit'ica Fe'bris, Pas'sio pleurit'ica, Inflamma'tio Pleuræ, Pleur'isy, Inflamma'tion of the Pleu'ra, (F.) Pleurésie, Fèvre pleurétique, Inflammation de la Plèvre, may be acute or chronic. Perhaps the most violent of all internal inflammations is the active form; known by acute, lancinating pain in one side of the chest, increased by inspiration, by coughing, and often by pressure; dyspnoea, the inspirations short and frequent; cough dry, or with little expectoration; and difficulty of lying on the affected side; symptoms, attending the phlegmasiæ in general, strongly marked.

Physical Signs. There is seldom any perceptible alteration in the exterior of the chest. When effusion has taken place to a great extent, the signs will be similar to those of chronic pleurisy. The motion of the affected side is diminished, and the vibrations of the voice cannot be detected by the hand. There is more or less dulness of sound on percussion, the dulness diminishing or disappearing by change of position. On auscultation, the inspiration is feeble, distant, or inaudible; but change of position modifies it. Egophony is usually present, when the effusion is in moderate quantity, and is best heard over a portion of the thoracic parietes, represented by a band of three inches, running from below the inferior margins of the scapula in the direction of the ribs to the sternum. Simple pleurisy rarely attacks both sides at once: when such is the case, the presence of tubercles may be suspected.

Formerly, a true pleurisy meant one seated in the pleura; a mediastinal pleurisy, one situated in the anterior mediastinum; and false pleurisy or rheumatism'al pleurisy, that which occupied the intercostal muscles. The last has received the name Pleurodyn'ia; that of pleurisy being exclusively appropriated to inflammation of the pleura. Pleurisy has also been distinguished into dry and humid, according as it is or is not accompanied by expectoration. Humid or moist pleurisy is now properly regarded as a complication of pleurisy with pulmonary catarrh. It is the catarrhal pleurisy of some. The majority of the species of pleurisy, admitted by Sauvages, consists of complications. In Latent pleurisy, pain, cough, and dyspnoea may all be absent, and yet a serious amount of effusion occur. The term Dry Pleurisy, Pleuritis Sic'ca, (F.) Pleurésie Sèche, has been given by Niemeyer to a form of the disease without any effusion except a merely nutritive exudation.

The causes of pleurisy are like those of other internal inflammations. It may terminate by resolution, effusion, or suppuration.

CHRON'IC PLEUR'ISY, which has been particularly described by recent pathologists, most commonly terminates by a serous or purulent effusion, which sometimes simulates hydrothorax; at others, phthisis pulmonalis. It may form slowly, without evident symptoms; or it may succeed acute pleurisy. In the former case, vague pains are felt in the chest, with small, dry cough, oppression at intervals, shivering, irregular febrile symptoms, and hardness of pulse.

Physical Signs. The affected side is smoother, more rounded and motionless; the intercostal spaces are dilated and filled up, or may even protrude slightly. In very chronic cases, however, the affected side may be smaller. The triangular space above the clavicle and the depression immediately above the sternum are often drawn downwards on the diseased side. No vibration is experienced by the hand when the patient speaks. The parietes of the thorax are sometimes cedematous, and fluctuation may be occasionally felt between the ribs. On percussion the sound is dull, or if clear, only so in the upper portions of the chest. On auscultation, there is an absence of the usual sounds over the affected parts, excepting occasionally transmitted sounds. There are no physical signs that can enable us to know whether pus or serum is effused into the chest. The introduction of a grooved needle through the intercostal space, as recommended by Dr. Thomas Davies, would of course settle the question.

On dissection of those who have died of pleurisy, the pleura is found thickened, red, inflamed, and covered with membranous exudations or false membranes. Sometimes it seems cartilaginous and ossified. Its cavity frequently contains serous or seropurulent effusions.

The acute form of the disease requires most active treatment. General bloodletting, to such an extent as to make a very decided impression on the system, and repeated if necessary, is the most important agent. After the violence of the disease has been got over, counterirritants will be found highly beneficial; as well as when it has passed into the chronic state. The cough may be relieved by demulcents.

Sauvages has given the name PLEURITIS VENTOSA, and Pringle that of PLEUROYDYN'IA VENTOSA, to a pain behind the false ribs, attributed to the presence of air in the intestines.

Pleuroce'lé, (pleura, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Hernia of the pleu'ra, Hernia pleur'ica et pulmonalis. This name, employed by Sagar, is inaccurate, as the pleura never protrudes alone. It only forms a hernia, when it serves as an envelope to the lung, to tumors, or to purulent collections, which have protruded from the thoracic parietes.

Pleurococ'cus Beigelii, Chignon Fun'gus. A vegetable fungus developed in human hair, improperly named Greg'arine, under the belief that it was an animalcule.

Pleurocolle'sis, (pleura, and κολλω, 'I glue,') An adhesion between the pleura costalis and pleura pulmonalis.

A spasmodic or rheumatic affection, generally seated in the muscles of the chest, and, ordinarily, in the intercostals. It is usually augmented by outward pressure, inspiration, coughing, exertion, moving the thorax, and sometimes even the corresponding arm. It is unaccompanied by fever, cough, or dyspnoea, excepting under the form of a stitch, when dyspnoea exists. It is, generally, by no means obstinate, and yields promptly to warm applications and to cupping or leeches. If it still resists, a blister will, almost always, remove it.

PLEURODYN'IA VENTO'SA, Pleuritis ventosa.

Pleurodyn'ic, Pleurodyn'ical, Pleurodyn'icus, (F.) Pleurodynique. Relating or belonging to pleurodynia.

Pleurog'enous, better Pleuritog'enous. Producing pleuritis, as Pleurog'enous pneumonia.

Pleuro'ma, gen. Pleuro'matis, (πλευρωμα, from pleura, and oma.) Costa, Pleura.

Pleuropathi'a, (pleura, and παθος, 'a disease.') A disease of the pleura.

Pleuropericard'itis. Inflammation of the pleura and the pericardium.

Pleuroperipneum'ony, Pleuroperipneumo'nia, Pleuropneumo'nia, Pneumonopleur'esis, Pneumonopleur'itis, Pleuritis pulmo'nis, Pneumo'nia pleur'itis, (pleura, and peripneumonia.) Inflammation occupying the pleura and the lung at the same time. Pleurisy and peripneumony existing simultaneously. Physical signs. A dull sound is yielded by percussion for a variable extent over the more dependent portions of the affected side. The loss of sound is partially modified by change of position. The respiratory murmur on auscultation is very feeble or absent inferiorly; higher up, the crepitation or bronchial respiration of pneumonia may be detected; round the root of the lung, and near the inferior angle of the scapula, egophony is generally present. There is seldom much enlargement of the affected side, or displacement of the adjacent organs, as in the case of simple chronic pleurisy.

Pleuroperitone'al. Belonging to the pleura and peritoneum, as the pleuroperitoneal cavity, a space in the early development of the embryo, which afterwards becomes separated into the pleural and peritoneal cavities.

Pleuropneu'ma, gen. Pleuropneum'atis, (pleura, and πνευμα, 'wind,') Pneumothorax.

Pleurorhophnœ'a, (pleura, ὀρθος, 'erect,' and πνέω, 'I respire,') Pain of the side, which does not permit the patient to breathe, except when in the vertical position.

Pleuroso'mus, (pleura, and σῶμα, 'body,') A malformation in which the fissure is somewhat lateral, with eventration extending chiefly upon the upper part of the abdomen and upon the chest; the upper extremity of the fissured side being more or less atrophied.

Pleurosto'sis, (pleura, ὄσσειν, 'a bone,' and osis.) Ossification of the pleura, or in the cavity of the pleura, Osteopleur'ia.

Pleurotet'anus, (πλευρα, 'a side,' and tetanus.) Pleurothotonus.

Pleurothot'onus, Pleurot'onus, Pleurotet'anus, Tet'anus latera'lis, (from πλευροθῆναι, 'laterally,' and τονος, 'tension,') A variety of tetanus, in which the body is curved laterally by the stronger contraction of the muscles of one side of the body.

Pleurot'onus, (πλευρα, 'a side,' and τείνειν, 'to stretch,') Pleurothotonus.

Pleu'rum, (πλευρον.) Costa, Pleura.

Ple'vere, Pleura.

Plexim'eter, Plexom'eter, Plegom'eter, Plesim'eter, Anticoposcop'ium, Anticop'oscope, (F.) Plessimètre, (πλησσω, 'I strike,' and μετρον, 'measure,' 'a measure of percussion,') An ivory plate of a circular or ovoid shape, from an inch and a half to two inches in diameter, and about one-sixth of an inch in thickness. It has either a raised rim or edge, or projecting handles on its upper side, to permit its being held between the finger and thumb of the left hand, whilst it is struck with the right. It is used in percussion of the chest. A piece of metal, a coin, or the finger of the left hand may be used with equal advantage. See Percussion, mediate.

Plexom'eter, Pleximeter.

Plex'or, (πλησσω, 'I strike,') Ples'ser. Any instrument employed in percussion. The ends of the fingers of the right hand brought together are the best plexor; as the finger of the left is, perhaps, the best pleximeter.

Plex'us, gen. Plexūs, Pleg'ma, Plec'tanē, Pla'nē, Re'tē, (πλεκω, plecto, plexum, 'I interlace,' 'I entwine,') (F.) Lacis. A network of blood-vessels or of nerves. The nervous plexuses, Implicatio'nes reticula'res seu Tex'tus nervo'rum belong—some to the system of encephalic nerves—others to that of the great sympathetic; whilst some, as the pharyngeal, seem to be formed of the two sets. The plexuses represent complex networks, with more or less loose meshes, formed by the numerous and diversified anastomoses of the nervous filament; from which proceed other branches, that are distributed to organs or to other plexuses.

PLEX'US, AOR'TIC, Intermesenter'ic Plex'us. A plexus of the sympathetic placed along the abdominal aorta, and occupying the interval between the origin of the superior and inferior mesenteric arteries.

PLEX'US BRACHIA'LIS, Brachial plexus—p. Cardiac, Cardiac plexus—p. Carotid, see Carotid nerve—p. Cavernosus, Bulbus vestibuli—p. Cervical, Cervical plexus—p. Choroïdes, see Choroid—p. Choroïdeus medius, Choroïdea tela—p. Ciliaris, Ciliary ligament—p. Cœliac, Cœliac plexus—p. Cœliaque, Cœliac plexus—p. Coronarius ventriculi, Gastric plexus—p. Coronary, see Cardiac plexus, and Coronary plexus.

PLEX'US CYS'TICUS. A plexus to the gall-bladder, formed by filaments from the hepatic plexus of the sympathetic.

PLEX'US, DIAPHRAGMAT'IC, Diaphragmatic plexus.

PLEX'US GANGLIFOR'MIS SEMILUNA'RI, Cœliac plexus—p. Ganglioformes, Ganglions, nervous.

PLEX'US GANGLIO'SUS. A plexus formed at the places of union of the spinal branches of the pelvic plexus and elsewhere in the plexus.

PLEX'US, GASTRODUODE'NAL. A secondary plexus, derived from the hepatic plexus.

PLEX'US, GASTROËPILOIC. A secondary plexus, derived from the hepatic plexus.

Polonaise*. A disease endemic in Poland, Lithuania, and other parts of Northern Europe; so called on account of its being characterized by interlacing, twisting, and agglutination or matting of the hair. By some it has been regarded as a real disease; by others, as the want of attention to cleanliness. However this may be, it generally appears upon the hair of the head, but sometimes on that of other parts, as the beard, the hair on the axilla, pubes, &c. Alibert admits three species of plica. 1. Plica multifor'mis, or Plica caput Medusæ, in which the hairs are mixed and agglutinated in greater or less masses; and this has been again subdivided into two varieties, according as the meshes are almost straight, Plica Caput Medusæ lacinia'ta, (F.) Plique en lanières, or much twisted, (F.) P. en vrilles. 2. Plica longicauda, (F.) Plique solitaire ou à queue; when the hair is united into a single long mass; and 3. Plica cespitosa, (F.) Plique en masse, in which the hairs are matted into one large, shapeless mass. Pinel places this disease among the Cutaneous phlegmasiæ; but it is far from demonstrated that it is the result of inflammation of the skin. Certain it is, however, that the tangling of the hair is symptomatic of an affection — sui generis — of the dermoid system. The idea that it is entirely owing to want of cleanliness, as has been conceived by some, is not tenable. It has been supposed to be produced by a fungous growth — a mycoderma, trichomaphyte or trichophyte, trichophyton sporuloides of Günsburg.

Plombières, Min'eral Waters of, Fon'tes medica'ti Plumba'rii, Ther'ma Plumba'ria. Plombières is a town in the department of the Vosges, 17 leagues from Nancy, and 2 from Remiremont. Here are several sources of thermal water. That which is called Saponaceus, (F.) Savonneuse, is formed of the subcarbonate and sulphate of soda, chloride of sodium, silica, carbonate of lime, and much vegeto-animal matter. This last component, (F.) Plombière, when held in solution by means of the subcarbonate of soda, gives to the water an unctuous character. This is the origin of its name. The waters of Plombières are employed as solvents in engorgements of the abdominal viscera, and as alteratives in chronic diseases of the skin. Season, from the 15th of May to the 15th of October.

Plombière, see Plombières.

Plora'tio, (plorare, ploratum, 'to weep,') Lacrymatio.

Plum'bi Chlo'ridum, Chlo'ride of Lead, (F.) Chlorure de Plomb. This salt of lead has been used in the form of lotion and ointment in cancerous ulcerations.

PLUM'BI DEUTOX'IDUM RU'BRUM, P. Oxidum rubrum—p. Hydriodas, P. iodidum—p. Iodhydras, P. iodidum.

PLUM'BI IO'DIDUM, P. Iodure'tum seu Hydriodas seu Hydroi'odas seu Iodhydras, Plum'bum ioda'tum seu hydroi'odum, Iodide or Ioduret of Lead, (F.) Iodure de Plomb, I. plumbique. This salt is formed by the double decomposition of iodide of potassium and nitrate of lead. It is used in scrofulous affections internally and externally, and is official in the Pharmacopœia U. S. Dose, gr. ss. to gr. iij. or iv.

PLUM'BI IO'DURE'TUM, P. iodidum.

PLUM'BI NI'TRAS, P. Azo'tas, Plumbum ni'tricum, Ni'tras plum'bicus, Ni'trum saturninum, Ni'trate of lead, (F.) Nitrate ou Azotate de Plomb. (A salt formed by the action of diluted nitric acid on litharge.) Nitrate of lead has the same medical action as the other soluble salts of lead, and is a valuable antiseptic. It has been used also as an excitant antiseptic to wounds, ulcers, &c., and is the basis of Ledoyen's disinfecting liquid.

PLUM'BI NITROSAC'CHARAS, Nitrosac'charate of lead. (Sacchar., p. j., Acid. nitric., p. ij., Aqua, p. x. Beat together in a porcelain dish as long as chemical action continues, dilute the liquor with water, neutralize with chalk, and to the filtered solution add acetate of lead so long as a precipitate is formed. Collect, wash, and dry the precipitate, which is saccharate of lead. Dissolve in dilute nitric acid, [one part acid to nineteen of water,] filter, and evaporate to form crystals, which are transparent, of an amber color, and in regular hexagonal plates or prisms.)

Advised as a solvent of phosphatic calculi.

PLUM'BI OX'IDUM SEMIVIT'REUM, P. Oxidum, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Plum'bum oxyda'tum, Lithar'gyrus, Lithar'gyrum, Lithargyr'ium, Oxydum plum'bi fu'sum, Spu'ma argenti, Semivitrified oxide of lead or lith'arge, Calciteo'sa, Coth'mia, (F.) Oxide de plomb fondu, Oxide de plomb semivitreux, (a yellow protoxide of lead, prepared by heat, combined with carbonic acid.) It occurs in scales of a whitish-red color, and semivitrified. It is employed for pharmaceutical purposes, as in the Liquor plumbi acetatis, Emplastrum plumbi, &c. Formerly, the Litharge of gold, Chrysitis, Mas'sicot, and Litharge of silver, Almariab, were distinguished in commerce. These were merely ordinary litharge, resembling gold or silver in color.

PLUM'BI SAC'CHARAS, Sac'charate of Lead, Oxalhy'drate of Lead. A salt of saccharic acid and protoxide of lead, employed as a solvent of urinary calculi.

PLUM'BI SUBCARBO'NAS, Carbo'nas plum'bi seu plum'bicus, Plumbi Carbo'nas, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Plumbum carbo'nicum, P. oxyda'tum carbo'nicum, Magiste'rium plumbi, Oxydum plumbi al'bum, Cerus'sa, Æru'go plumbi, Simmit'ium, Psimy'thion, Psimy'thus, Blan'ca, Ger'sa, If'ides, Subcarbonate of lead, Cerussa, White lead, Flake white, (F.) Carbonate de plomb, Blanc de plomb, Plomb blanc, Céruse, Blanc d'Argent, Blanc de Céruse, Blanc de Krems, B. de Krems, B. de Kremnitz, Craie de plomb, (prepared by exposing spiral rolls of lead to the fumes of vinegar, in vessels placed in manure.) It is inodorous, has a sweet taste, is brittle, friable, snow white, and of a minute scaly texture. It is astringent and sedative, and is sprinkled on parts affected with local inflammation, or to prevent chafing in children. It is also used in the formation of ointments and plasters.

PLUM'BI SUPERACE'TAS, Cerus'sa aceta'ta, Plumbi acid'ulus sic'cus, P. aceta'tas, (Ph. U. S.,) Sal seu Sac'charum Satur'ni, Plum'bum aceticum, Dulce'do Satur'ni, Aceta'tas plum'bicum crystallisa'tum, Sal plumbi, Sugar of lead, Ac'etate or Supera'etate of lead, Protoac'etate of lead, (F.) Acétate acide de plomb, Sel ou Sucre de Saturne. (Plumb. carb., lbj., Acid. acetic., cong. jss. Boil the lead with the acid till it is saturated, then strain through paper, and evaporate to a pellicle that crystals may be formed. Wash the crystals, and dry on blotting-paper. Ph. L.) In the Ph. B. (1867), it is directed to be prepared by the action of dilute acetic acid on litharge, filtering, evaporating, and crystallizing. Acetate of lead has a sweet, styptic taste, a very white color, and silky lustre. It is astringent, and in weak solution cooling and sedative; in strong, stimulant. It is given internally in visceral and other hemorrhages, combined with opium, and is used externally, in solution, in inflammation, burns, bruises, gonorrhœa, &c. Dose, gr. ss. to jss.

PLUM'BI TAN'NAS, see Tannin.

Plum'bicum Ace'tas Crystallisa'tum, Plumbi superacetat.

Plumbo'sum Superox'ydim, Plumbi oxidum rubrum.

Plum'bum, Molyb'dos, Molib'dus, Saturn'us, Capricor'nus, (F.) Plomb. Lead. A solid metal of a bluish white color; more malleable than ductile; soft enough to be scratched by the nail; very fusible and oxidizable, when heated in the air, and existing, in nature, under a number of different shapes; the principal of which are those of sulphuret and oxide. S. g. 11.352.

It is used to form oxides and salts. In its metallic state, it has no action upon the body; but when oxidized or united with an acid, it acts, in large doses, as a powerfully astringent poison.

PNEUMAT'IC PHYSIC'IANS, Pneumat'ici, Pneu'matists. Name given to a sect of physicians, at the head of whom was Athenæus, who made health and disease to consist in the different proportions of an element — which they called Pneu'ma, (πνευμα) — to those of the other elementary principles. This πνευμα was a fancied spiritual principle, which the Stoics regarded as an element, different from water, air, earth, and fire; — the sole elementary principles previously admitted. The doctrine was called Pneu'matism. At the present day, the epithet pneumatic is sometimes applied to those who treat diseases chiefly by the inhalation of gases.

Pneumat'ica, (from pneuma,) Appertaining to the breathing. Diseases of the respiratory function; — the second class in Good's system of nosology. Agents that act on the respiratory organs.

Pneumat'ical, Pneumatic.

Pneumatoce'lē, (πνευματοκήλη, from pneuma, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Physocèle. See also Pneumocele.

Pneumato'des, (πνευματώδης, from pneuma, and odes,) One distended with air, or who breathes with difficulty, owing to an accumulation of flatus in the digestive tube; or, according to others, owing to emphysema.

Pneumatom'eter, (pneuma, and μετρον, 'measure,') Spirometer.

Pneumatomphaloc'e'lē, Pneumatomphalus.

Pneumatom'phalus, Pneumatomphaloc'e'lē, (pneuma, and ομφαλος, 'umbilicus,') Umbilical intestinal hernia, containing a considerable quantity of flatus.

Pneumator'hachis, gen. Pneumatorrha'chidis, (pneuma, and ραχis, 'spine,') Accumulation of air in the vertebral canal.

Pneumatose, Pneumatosis — p. Péritonéale, Tympanites.

Pneumato'sis, Aëro'sis, (from pneuma, and osis,) Fla'tus, (F.) Maladie ventreuse, Pneumatose. Flatulence. Flatulent distension of the stomach or bowels, or both. Sauvages uses the word synonymously with emphysema. It is now generally employed for every abnormal collection of gaseous matters in any part of the body.

Pneumogas'tric, Pneumogas'tricus, (F.) Pneumogastrique, (pneumon, and γαστρικ, 'the stomach,') Belonging to the lungs and stomach.

PNEUMOGAS'TRIC NERVES, Eighth pair of nerves (Tenth pair, of some), Par va'gum, Pars va'ga, Va'gus, Nervus vagus seu ambulatorius seu pneumogas'tricus seu dec'imus seu sympath'icus me'dius, Mid'dle sympath'ic, (F.) Nerfs pneumogastriques ou vagues; so called because distributed especially to the organs contained in the chest and abdomen. This nerve arises from behind the eminentia olivaria and near the corpora restiformia by one or two rows of filaments, regularly arranged. These filaments unite to form a flat cord, which issues from the cranium by the foramen lacerum posterius, behind the glossopharyngeal nerve. At its exit from the cranium, the pneumogastric nerve has the appearance of a very compact plexus—Plex'us ganglior'um, Gan'glion of the superior laryngeal branch of Sir Astley Cooper. It then descends along the neck, deeply seated on the outside of the carotid artery and the internal jugular vein. When it has attained the lower part of the neck, it enters the chest, gliding behind the subclavian vein, and passing on the right side, in front of the subclavian artery, and, on the left, before the arch of the aorta. It proceeds, at first, backwards, increasing in size. Afterwards, it passes from behind the bronchia to the oesophagus, which it accompanies through the diaphragm, and terminates on the stomach. In the neck, the pneumogastric nerve anastomoses with the spinal, glossopharyngeal, great hypoglossal, and great sympathetic nerves; and furnishes, 1, a pharyngeal branch; 2, a superior laryngeal; and 3, cardiac branches. In the chest, it gives off, 1, the inferior laryngeal or recur'rent; 2, the pulmonary plex'us; and 3, the oesophageal branches. On entering the abdomen, the oesophageal branches, which terminate the pneumogastric, are distributed upon the stomach, and give numerous filaments to that viscus, to the hepatic, coeliac, gastroepiploic, and solar plexuses. Some go, also, to the pancreas, liver, gall-bladder, duodenum, &c.

The pneumogastric nerve is interested in most important functions, being excito-motory, excito-secretory, and excito-nutrient. Some of its branches are wholly motor, others sensory-motor, while one of its branches—the superior laryngeal—is the sensitive nerve of the larynx.

Pneumo'nia, (πνευμονια, of old, meant a disease of the lungs,) Peripneumo'nia, Empres'ma pneumon'itis, Pleumo'nia, Peripneumo'nia, Pneumon'itis, Pulmoni'tis, Pulmo'nia, Pulmona'ria, Inflamma'tio pneumon'ica, I. pectoris acuta seu pulmo'num, Pneumos'tasis, Fe'bris pneumon'ica, Pneumony, Peripneumony, Inflamma'tion of the Lungs, Lung-fever (vulgarly), (F.) Inflammation des poudrons, Fièvre pneumonique ou péripleuromonique, Fluxion de poitrine, Inflammation du parenchyme pulmonaire. (From pneumon.) The chief symptoms of pneumonia are:—pyrexia, accompanied by pain, sometimes obtuse, at others pungent,—in some part of the thorax; pulse more or less quick and hard, according to the violence and extent of the local disorder; pain, aggravated by the cough, which, with dyspnoea, exists throughout the disease. At first, the expectoration is difficult and painful; but, in the course of a few days, it becomes free, and the oppression of breathing is mitigated. The sputa are generally viscid, adhering to the bottom of the vessel, transparent, mixed with small bubbles of air, and having a red or rusty color. When the inflammation, instead of going off by resolution, passes on to suppuration, rigors are experienced; the respiration becomes more oppressed, but less painful, and a sense of weight is felt in one of the pleuræ. Pneumonia may, also, terminate by gangrene,—but this rarely happens,—by induration and by hepatization.

Physical Signs. FIRST STAGE, (F.) Engouement; Splenization. Diminution of the sound is generally observed over the affected part on percussion: auscultation exhibits an equal, dry, crepitating râle, which is best heard at the close of a deep inspiration, and on coughing. The respiratory murmur is intermingled with the crepitant râle, or it may be absent. In the neighborhood of the affected parts it is natural or puerile. The voice and cough are rather more resonant than usual. SECOND STAGE, (F.) Hépatisation rouge. When hepatization has occurred, the motion of the affected side is impeded, and immediately above the sternum and in the corresponding triangular space on either side, there is often an evident depression. Percussion is dull over the affected part in every position of the patient. On auscultation, the crepitation is found to be replaced by bronchial respiration. The respiratory murmur is louder in the other portions of the lung, the voice and cough are more resonant, and the heart's action is more distinct. THIRD STAGE, (F.) Hépatisation grise. When suppuration supervenes, the same signs persist; but usually the voice and cough are less resonant, and a coarse, mucous râle is heard. When gangrenous or suppurative cavities are formed, they present the ordinary signs.

The prognosis must be guarded. It is not a disease which we can always subdue. Great extent of inflammation; very considerable oppression; orthopnoea, and difficult expectoration are unfavorable symptoms. The most active treatment is of course necessary. General bleeding forms the sheet-anchor,—employed so as to make a decided impression on the system, and repeated, if necessary; local bloodletting; nauseating doses of antimonials; purgatives; and, when the violence of the inflammation has been got under, — counterirritants, &c. Chronic pneumonia sometimes succeeds the acute form, or it may occur accidentally. It must be managed on general principles. Small bleedings, especially locally; and counterirritants of all kinds are indicated.

PNEUMONIA BILIO'SA, P. bilious.

PNEUMONIA, BILIOUS, P. bilio'sa, Pneumocholosis. Inflammation of the lungs, accompanied by gastric fever, and not uncommonly by typhoid symptoms; — Pneumotyphus, Pneumonia typhoides seu typhoides seu typho'sa, Putrid, typhoid, adynam'ic, or erysipell'atous pneumonia.

An accumulation of air in the cavity of the pleura. A complaint generally sudden in its invasion and fatal in its character. In many instances, along with the air, a liquid is effused, consisting of a serous fluid, Hydropneumotho'rax, or of one that is purulent — Pneumopy'otho'rax. The disease may be spontaneous and simple, but in a large proportion of cases it is complicated with pleurisy and pulmonary tubercles. The signs vary, according as there is or is not a communication between the pleura and the bronchia. The affected side gives a hollow, tympanitic sound, even where the thickness of the parietes of the thorax is great. When the effusion is considerable, the affected side is dilated, but there is no râle of any kind. When a gaseous and a liquid effusion are present at the same time, the sound on percussion is found to be clear at the superior part of the thorax, but dull inferiorly; hence, by changing the position of the patient, and by consequence that of the contained fluids, the seats of the clear and the dull sound will be varied. When the gaseous effusion is owing to a fistulous communication between the pleura and bronchia, the metallic respiration and resonance are heard; and if there be both gaseous and liquid effusion, with a fistulous communication, in addition to these signs there is the tintement métallique. The presence of liquid may be ascertained by succussion. See Emphysema.

Poi'son, Phar'macon, Phar'macum, Tox'icum, Vene'num, Virus, Deleté'rium, Venena'tion, (F.)

Poison. A generic name for all substances which, when introduced into the animal economy, either by cutaneous absorption, respiration, or the digestive canal, act in a noxious manner on the vital properties or the texture of organs. Hence we speak of fever poison, cholera poison, &c. Poisons exist in the three kingdoms of nature; but those which proceed from animals are often called venoms, as the venom of the viper, scorpion, tarantula, &c.; whilst those that are the products of disease have the name virus. In common parlance, therefore, poison is restricted to deleterious articles furnished by the mineral and vegetable kingdoms. Orfila has divided poisons into four classes. 1. ACRID, IR'RITATING, CORRO'SIVE, or ESCHAROT'IC, as the concentrated acids and alkalis—mercurial, arsenical, cupreous, and antimonial compounds, cantharides, &c. 2. NARCOT'IC, those that act particularly upon the brain,—as hyoscyamus, opium, &c.,—but without inflaming the organ with which they come in contact. 3. NARCOT'ICO-AC'RID or ACRO-NARCOT'IC, those that act on the brain or spinal marrow, or both, but at the same time irritate the parts to which they are applied—as aconite, belladonna, &c. 4. SEP'TIC or PUTRES'CENT, those furnished by the animal kingdom. See Venom, and Virus. Various classifications, of a similar character, have been recommended by different toxicologists, but they are liable to the objection, that they throw substances together whose physiological action on the system is very different. It is, indeed, difficult to avoid unnatural compression of matters into places not properly belonging to them in all such arrangements.

The classification of Dr. A. S. Taylor is as follows:

IRRITANTS.....	MINERAL.....	{ Non-metallic..... Metallic.	{ Acids, Alkalies, and their Salts. Metalloids.
	VEGETABLE. ANIMAL.
NEUROTICS.....	{ CEREBRAL. SPINAL. CEREBROSPINAL.

Arsenic may be cited as an example of the metallic irritants, savin of the vegetable, and cantharides of the animal irritants. Of the neurotics, morphia is a cerebral and strychnia a spinal neurotic, and conia and aconitia are cerebrospinal neurotics. Irritants produce speedy vomiting and purging, with pain in the stomach and bowels, which organs are irritated and inflamed. Some of this class are also corrosive, as the strong mineral acids, corrosive sublimate, &c. Others, as arsenic and carbonate of lead, are not chemically destructive, being pure irritants only. Neurotics act upon the nervous system, producing headache, giddiness, numbness, &c. They include narcotics, or cerebral poisons, which do not irritate or inflame the abdominal organs, and narcotico-irritants, as nux vomica and aconite, which do exert such an action in addition to their narcotic effects.

The accurate investigations of modern chemistry, by separating the active alkaloids of different vegetables, have furnished numerous agents for poisoning, and hence deaths from morphia and strychnia have repeatedly become subjects of medico-legal inquiry in courts of justice. Like investigations have facilitated the discovery of many toxic substances after death in the contents of the alimentary canal and elsewhere, although the failure of such discovery may not be a positive evidence that no such poison was administered, as it may have been rejected by vomiting, or, if sufficient time has elapsed, may have been eliminated in some other manner.

One of the most astonishing of tests is that by spectrum analysis, which, in certain cases, is capable of detecting the most inconceivably minute portions of a metal—in one instance the 195,000,000 part of a grain. See Spectrum analysis.

The following table, which exhibits a coup d'œil of the chief poisons, with many of the circumstances of importance connected with them, is not free from the objections above stated.

TABLE OF THE CHIEF POISONS.

N. B. In all cases, the Stomach-pump should be used as soon as possible.

I. INORGANIC POISONS.

POISONS.	SYMPTOMS.	TREATMENT.	TESTS.
ACIDS.	The acids, generally, are strong corrosive poisons. Sour, acrid taste; burning in the throat, which is increased by pressure, swallowing, or coughing; eructation, and excruciating pain in the stomach; more or less corrugation of the lining membranes of the mouth and primæ viæ; excoriation about the mouth or such other parts of the skin as the acid may have touched. The matter vomited effervesces with carbonate of lime. The countenance becomes glazed, extremities cold and clammy; convulsions and death. Nitric acid occasions yellow stains, and sulphuric acid, black.	The carbonates of soda, potassa, lime, and magnesia are all antidotes to the acids; calcined magnesia also. They are to be used with the following restrictions: for the acetic, citric, muriatic, sulphuric, and tartaric acids, they may be used indiscriminately. For the nitric and oxalic, carbonates of magnesia and lime can alone be employed with safety. In the case of sulphuric acid, water should not be drunk, on account of the great heat which is produced by their mixture. Subsequent inflammation to be treated by ordinary means. The carbonates of the alkalis and of magnesia and lime have the inconvenience that a large quantity of gas is extricated in the stomach.	Sulphuric acid is known by a white precipitate with any salt of baryta, insoluble in nitric acid. Muriatic acid is known by a white precipitate with nitrate of silver, insoluble in nitric acid, which turns black by the action of light. Nitric acid gives rise to orange-colored fumes, when copper is placed in it, and an ability to dissolve gold when mixed with muriatic acid. Acetic acid exhales the odor of vinegar. Citric acid blackens when heated. Tartaric acid precipitates crystals, with a solution of potassa; and a white precipitate is thrown down by lime-water. Oxalic acid gives a white precipitate with lime-water, which, when heated, is converted into carbonate of lime. Prussic acid exhales the odor of peach kernels; forms a white precipitate with nitrate of silver; neutralized with an alkali, gives a blue precipitate with the persalts of iron.
Prussic or Hydrocyanic Acid.	Is a sedative poison; nausea, giddiness, debility, hurried pulse, weight and pain in the head; eructations having the flavor of the acid; spasms, tetanus, contractile pupil; convulsions, death.	Ammonia is an antidote; but it should not be employed in a very concentrated form. Liquid chlorine has also been found efficacious. The cold douche to the head has been recommended.
Oil of Bitter Almonds.
Laurel Water.
Nitrobenzole (Essence of Mirbane).	Nitrobenzole is a narcotic irritant both in liquid and vapor, but differs from ordinary narcotics in its persistent odor, and in the rapidity of its fatal effects; coma following stupor at uncertain intervals.	The treatment for nitrobenzole poisoning must be conducted on the same general principles as for poisoning by prussic acid.	It is distinguished from oil of bitter almonds by the action of sulphuric acid, which gives to the latter a rich crimson color with a yellow border, while it produces no color with nitrobenzole.
Carbolic Acid.	An irritant poison; vomiting of frothy mucus; lining membrane of the mouth white and hardened; severe abdominal pain; cold, clammy skin; insensibility, coma, stertorous breathing; pupils contracted; odor of carbolic acid.	No special antidote. The treatment must be based on the general treatment indicated for the other irritant acids.	No reliable test, except the odor.
ALKALIES AND THEIR SALTS.	Violent, caustic, acrid taste; great heat in the throat, with destruction of its lining membrane; difficult and painful deglutition; vomiting of bloody matter, which turns the yellow of turmeric brown; acute pain in the stomach; cold sweats, weakness, hicough; violent colic pains, with purging of bloody stools and membranous flakes; death.	The vegetable acids, such as vinegar, lemon juice, citric and tartaric acid in solution, are antidotes to the alkalies and their carbonates. The fixed oils, such as castor, linseed, almond, and olive, form soaps with the free alkalies, and therefore destroy their caustic effects.	The alkalies are known by their action on turmeric paper; restoring the color of litmus, which has been reddened by an acid. Carbonates are known by their effervescence with an acid; some of them affect the turmeric paper. Sal ammoniac gives out the pungent odor of ammonia, when mixed with quicklime.
AMMONIA, Strong Liquor or Water of.
Muriate of Ammonia or Sal Ammoniac.
Carbonate of Ammonia.
POTASSA.
Caustic Potassa and Liquor Potassæ.
Sulphate of Potassa.
Carbonate of Potassa, or Pearl-ash, and Salt of Tartar.
Bitartrate of Potassa (Cream of Tartar.)	Irritant poison, sometimes with paralysis of the lower extremities.

POISONS.	SYMPTOMS.	TREATMENT.	TESTS.
Nitrate of Potassa or Saltpetre. —	The nitrate of potassa will not manifest the effect with turmeric paper. The carbonates, when vomited, will effervesce with acids; and the liver of sulphur will give rise to eruptions of sulphuretted hydrogen.	Poisoning by nitrate of potassa to be treated on general antiphlogistic principles; mucilaginous drinks.	Nitrate of potassa decrepitates and deflagrates when thrown on hot coals.
Binoxalate of Potassa. —	The symptoms of poisoning by the binoxalate correspond to those of oxalic acid.	Liver of sulphur is said to be decomposed and neutralized by common salt. The liquid chloride of soda will also decompose it.	Liver of sulphur emits the odor of sulphuretted hydrogen when dissolved, or when treated with an acid.
Sulphuret of Potassium or Liver of Sulphur. — SODA.
EARTHS AND COMPOUNDS. — BARYTA.	Analogous to those of the corrosive metals. Violent burning in the stomach, vomiting, gripes, diarrhoea; excessive muscular debility, headache, convulsions, death. Lime differs from baryta in being a pure irritant.	The sulphates of soda and magnesia are prompt and effective antidotes to all the poisonous salts of baryta. Phosphate of soda will also counteract their effects. Lime may be neutralized by dilute acids. Carbonic acid, in soda-water, effervescing draught or yeast, it is supposed, would answer a good purpose. The fixed oils may be employed either for baryta or lime, when not in a compound state.	Baryta and its salts invariably give a white precipitate, insoluble in acid, with a soluble sulphate.
Carbonate of Baryta. —
Chloride of Barium. —
Nitrate of Baryta. — LIME.			Lime, when dissolved, gives a white precipitate with oxalic acid. Also, with carbonic acid or a soluble carbonate. The same of baryta.
ALCOHOL. —
Brandy, Wines, and all Spirituous Liquors.	Intoxication, and, when taken very freely, complete insensibility, with apoplexy or paralysis of one side; the countenance swollen and of a dark-red color; the breathing difficult, and often stertorous, with a peculiar puffing out of the lips; the breath smells of liquor, which will distinguish the symptoms from those of spontaneous apoplexy.	A powerful emetic of white vitriol or tartar emetic should be got into the stomach as soon as possible; and if the person has lost the power of swallowing, a flexible catheter or tube should be the means of conveying it thither. The vomiting should be encouraged as much as possible with warm water; and large and active glysters of salt and water should be thrown up. The patient should be placed erect, and if the countenance and other appearances be not improved after these means have been used, the jugular vein may be opened, and cold wet cloths applied to the head, particularly if the body be hotter than natural. If the extremities become cold, warmth and friction should be perseveringly used.
VOLATILE OILS. —
Creosote. —
Dippel's Animal Oil. —
Oil of Tar. —
Oil of Tobacco. —
Oil of Turpentine. —
Amylic Alcohol (Fusel Oil).	General action, that of irritant poisons. Burning pain, vomiting, pungent taste, purging, &c. The oils of turpentine and tobacco affect the nervous system; the peculiar odor of each oil will be manifested in the matter vomited. The vapor of fusel oil, when inhaled in a diluted state, irritates the respiratory organs, produces headache, nausea, and giddiness. It is more potent in its effects in vapor than when swallowed as a liquid.	Creosote is immediately coagulated by albumen. Dippel's animal oil may be counteracted with dilute acids and the fixed oils. The other oils have no particular antidotes, and their effects must, therefore, be counteracted upon general principles.	No better mode of recognizing these substances exists, than that derived from their peculiar odor. Dippel's oil has the pungent odor of ammonia; creosote and oil of tar, a peculiar smell of smoke; the odor of tobacco and turpentine is well known; and fusel oil has a peculiar, offensive, suffocating odor.
GASES. —
Carbonic Acid, or Fixed Air. —
Carbonic Oxide. —
Fumes of Burning Charcoal. —
Chlorine. —
Sulphuretted Hydrogen. —	Chlorine, sulphurous, nitrous, and hydrochloric acid gases produce, when inhaled, violent irritation of the organs of respiration; cough, bloody expectoration, inflammation of the lungs, and permanent pulmonary disease. Ammonia vapor is poisonous, exciting inflammation of the larynx, bronchial tubes, and lungs. The other gases, although producing some effect on the respiratory organs, act as poisons, in consequence of	The antidotes to chlorine are the cautious inhalation of ammonia, or sulphuretted hydrogen. The inflammatory symptoms from chlorine to be treated on general principles. For the other gases, cold affusions to the head, bloodletting, artificial respiration. In poisoning by chlorine, ether may be cautiously inhaled.	Chlorine is recognized by its peculiar odor and bleaching properties. Sulphuretted hydrogen, by its fetid smell, and the rapid blackening of lead. Carbonic acid, by its occasioning turbidness in lime-water placed in its atmosphere. Carbonic oxide, by the blue color of its flame.

Sulphurous Acid. Nitrous Acid. Hydrochloric Acid. Ammonia. Carburetted Hydrogen (Coal Gas).	their sedative agency. The symptoms, therefore, are those of apoplexy, or narcotic poisoning.
CHLOROFORM, ETHER, CHLORAL, &c. Chloroform. Bichloride of Methylene. Ether. Amylene. Nitrous Oxide. Hydrate of Chloral.	These substances, as therapeutic agents, belong to the class of anæsthetics or neurotic poisons, which act on the brain and produce insensibility. Chloroform vapor, inhaled in a concentrated form, produces speedily fatal effects. Diluted with atmospheric air, it causes insensibility and total loss of muscular power, death sometimes resulting from shock, syncope, or convulsions. When swallowed as a liquid, it is a much less active poison. Ether in its effects, when swallowed, resembles alcohol; the vapor, when inhaled, has, however, been fatal in several instances. Amylene, now seldom employed as an anæsthetic, may induce narcotism and paralysis of the heart. Nitrous oxide, in addition to its exhilarating effects, produces loss of consciousness, and insensibility to pain, which may be pushed so far as to produce death. Hydrate of chloral is a sedative and narcotic, without producing a stage of excitement; and sudden death has resulted after profound sleep from excessive doses. The fatal effects have been ascribed by some to the conversion of chloral in the system into chloroform and formic acid, through the instrumentality of the alkalies of the blood.	The treatment must be conducted on general principles, and according to the symptoms.
IODINE. Iodide of Potassium.	Analogous to those of irritant poisons; burning pain in the throat, lacerating pain in the stomach, and fruitless efforts to vomit; suffusion of the eyes; excessive pain and tenderness of the epigastrium.	Iodine combines with starch, and forms an insoluble compound. The prompt administration of starch, wheat flour, or other vegetable matter containing fecula, beat up in water, is recommended. Iodide of potassium has no antidote. Vomiting should be promoted by draughts of warm water, and inflammation be subdued by general treatment.	Iodine is known by its odor, and the formation of a blue precipitate, when brought in contact with a cold solution of starch. Iodide of potassium gives a crystalline precipitate with tartaric acid in excess. The supernatant fluid will give the blue color to starch.
ANTIMONY. Tartar Emetic. Chloride or Butyrate of Antimony. Oxide of Antimony.	Vomiting. If vomiting do not occur promptly, violent irritant effects are produced. Burning pain in the pit of the stomach; purging; colicky pains, sense of tightness in the throat, violent cramps; repeated recurrence of vomiting.	If vomiting have not been produced, it should be brought about by tickling the fauces, and administering copious draughts of warm water. Astringent infusions, such as of galls, oak bark, Peruvian bark, act as antidotes, and should be given promptly; powdered yellow bark may be used, until the infusion is prepared.	Antimony in solution is best distinguished by the peculiar orange-red precipitate which it forms with sulphuretted hydrogen or solutions of the hydrosulphates. Free alkalies produce white precipitates. The chloride is known by a white precipitate, when it is poured into water. In its solid forms, antimony may be known by the formation of white fumes, when heated, which redden litmus. It may also be converted into chloride, and detected as above.
ARSENIC. Arsenious Acid, or White Arsenic. Arsenic Acid.	Violent burning pain in the region of the stomach and bowels; tenderness on pressure; retching; vomiting; sense of dryness and tightness in the throat; thirst; hoarseness and difficulty of speech,	The hydrated peroxide of iron diffused through water; or the precipitated carbonate; or the rubigo ferri, in very fine powder, to be administered every five or ten minutes, until relief is obtained.	If the suspected substance can be obtained free from organic matter, the presence of arsenic may readily be shown by boiling it in distilled water, filtering, and testing with 1st. Ammonio-sulphate of cop-

Orpiment, or Yellow Sulphuret of Arsenic. King's Yellow. Realgar, or Red Sulphuret of Arsenic. Fly Powder. Solution of Arsenite of Potash (Fowler's Solution). Arsenical Paste. Arsenical Soap. Arsenite of Copper, (Scheele's Green, Emerald Green.) Arseniuretted Hydrogen. Paris Green.	the matter vomited, greenish or yellowish, sometimes streaked with blood; diarrhoea; tenesmus; sometimes excoriation of the anus; urinary organs occasionally affected with violent burning pains and suppression; convulsions and cramps; clammy sweats; lividity of the extremities; countenance collapsed; eyes red and sparkling; delirium; death. Some of these symptoms may be absent where the poisoning results from inhalation, as of arseniuretted hydrogen.	This is particularly efficacious when the white arsenic has been swallowed. If the arsenic have been taken in the form of Fowler's solution, lime-water, in copious draughts, may be given. For either of the other forms, emetics of sulphate of zinc; diluents; demulcents, such as flaxseed tea, infusion of slippery elm, &c. Counterirritants may be used to relieve the spasm and violent pain in the stomach. Bleeding, as promoting absorption, should not be employed until the stomach is completely evacuated. Magnesia, freshly precipitated or not too highly calcined, has been used with advantage in arsenious acid poisoning.	per. 2d. Ammonio-nitrate of silver, (Hume's Test.) 3d. Sulphuretted hydrogen gas. The first will produce a green precipitate; second, a pale yellow precipitate; third, a bright yellow precipitate,—if arsenic be present. A portion of the powder, or one of these precipitates, carefully and thoroughly dried, is then to be mixed with charcoal and exsiccated carbonate of soda, to be placed in a small glass tube, closed at one end, and then to be heated to a red heat in the flame of a lamp. The arsenic will be reduced, and sublime in the upper part of the tube, forming a dark crust, having considerable lustre on its exterior surface, resembling polished steel. By gently heating this crust in a very small flame, crystals of white arsenic will be formed, having a high adamantine lustre. If organic matter be present, it must be entirely destroyed, by heating the substance with nitromuriatic acid. After this has been done, and a clear, transparent solution in distilled water has been obtained, the subsequent process is as above indicated. If arsenious acid be submitted to the action of nascent hydrogen, it is deoxidized, and the metallic arsenic, thereby obtained, combining with hydrogen, forms arseniuretted hydrogen gas. (Marsh's Test.) Add to a suspected solution a few drops of pure chlorohydric acid, and place in it a slip of bright copper; no change occurs until the liquid is brought to the boiling point, when, if arsenic be present, even in small quantity, the copper acquires an iron-gray coating, from the deposit of that metal. Remove the slip of copper; wash it in water, dry it, and gradually heat it in a reduction tube, when arsenious acid will be sublimed in minute octohedral crystals. The test succeeds with powdered arsenic, the arsenites, arsenic acid, the arseniates, and orpiment. It will even separate the arsenic from arsenite of copper, and from common lead shot. (Reinsch's Test.)
BISMUTH. Nitrate of Bismuth. Subnitrate of Bismuth, (Pearl Powder.) Oxide of Bismuth.	Similar to those produced by other irritant poisons. General inflammation of the whole alimentary canal; suppression of urine; hiccough; disagreeable metallic taste; vomiting; cramps; delirium; death.	Milk and sweet mucilaginous drinks are recommended. Leeches, general bleeding; glysters; fomentations to be employed on the general principles of treatment for inflammatory symptoms.	Bismuth is known by the formation of a white precipitate, when its solution in nitric acid is poured into water; and by the formation of a black precipitate with sulphuretted hydrogen gas, and hydrosulphates in solution.
COPPER. Sulphate of Copper (Blue Vitriol). Acetate of Copper. Subacetate of Copper, (Verdigris.) Carbonate of Copper, (Blue Verditer.)	Very similar to those produced by arsenic. Coppery eructations and taste. Fatal cases are generally terminated by convulsions, palsy, insensibility.	Albumen to be administered in either of its forms which can be most readily obtained, as milk or whites of eggs. Vinegar should not be given. The inflammatory symptoms are to be treated on general principles, and so of the nervous.	The presence of copper is readily shown in solutions. By ammonia a beautiful bluish precipitate is thrown down, which dissolves in an excess of the precipitant, and the solution has a rich blue color. A bright iron bar, introduced into solutions of copper, occasions the separation of the copper, in a metallic form, which deposits itself upon the iron. A more delicate test than the ammonia is the ferro-

Arsenite of Copper (Scheele's Green). Food Cooked in dirty copper vessels, or pickles made green by copper.			cyanide of potassium, which gives a brown precipitate with copper salts.
GOLD. Chloride of Gold. Fulminating Gold.	Very analogous to those of other irritant poisons. This substance communicates a pink stain to the flesh, and patches of that color may be found about the lips, and inside the mouth.	The salts of gold are decomposed by sulphate of iron; and this has, therefore, been recommended as an antidote. Inflammatory symptoms to be treated on general principles.	Chloride of gold is very readily decomposed, and the gold separated in a metallic state. Protosulphate of iron, nitrate of silver and protochloride of tin, all answer this purpose. The precipitated powder will be found insoluble, except in nitromuriatic acid.
IRON. Sulphate of Iron, Copperas, Green Vitriol. Chloride of Iron, and Tincture.	Analogous to those of other irritant poisons; colicky pains, constant vomiting and purging. Violent pain in the throat, tension of the epigastrium, coldness of the skin, and feebleness of the pulse.	Carbonate of soda would be a most excellent antidote to either of these substances. Mucilaginous drinks might also be employed; and particular symptoms relieved by general treatment.	Iron is recognized by a bluish-black precipitate, with tincture of galls; rich blue, with ferrocyanide of potassium; and a greenish or reddish precipitate, with the free alkalies or their carbonates.
LEAD. Acetate of Lead, (Sugar of Lead.) Subacetate of Lead, (Goulard's Extract.) Carbonate of Lead, (White Lead, &c.) Red Oxide, or Red Lead. Litharge. Wines sweetened by Lead. Water which has been kept in Lead vessels. Acid food, cooked, or left standing in vessels glazed with Lead.	Irritation of the alimentary canal; spasm; nervous symptoms; paralysis, either partial or complete. When taken for some time, in small quantity, violent and obstinate colic; rigidity of abdominal muscles, cramps; remission of pain; obstinate constipation, urine diminished, saliva increased; countenance anxious and gloomy. If relief be not promptly obtained, giddiness, debility, torpor, coma, convulsions and death. The paralysis affects generally the upper extremities.	Sulphate of magnesia and phosphate of soda are both good antidotes for the soluble salts of lead. For the solid forms, dilute sulphuric acid may be drunk. These are applicable to the irritant forms of poisoning by lead. In the chronic form, or colica pictorum, purgatives and anodynes are resorted to; venesection; and external applications to relieve the cramps. The use of strychnia is recommended for the paralysis, and iodide of potassium for the chronic form generally.	Soluble salts of lead yield a white precipitate with sulphates and carbonates in solution. Salts of chromic acid and iodide of potassium occasion a yellow precipitate; sulphuretted hydrogen, a black precipitate. If solid, the lead may be converted into a state of solution by nitric acid, and the dilute solution be tested as above.
MERCURY. Corrosive Sublimate. Cyanide of Mercury. Nitrate of Mercury. Ammonio-chloride of Mercury, (White Precipitate.) Red Oxide, or Red Precipitate. Sulphate, or Turbith Mineral. Vermilion, or Red Sulphuret. Mercuric Methide, or Methyl. Mild Chloride of Mercury, (Calomel.)	Similar to those of irritant poisons; harsh metallic astringent taste; burning pain in the stomach; vomiting and purging, frequently of bloody matter; often irritation of the urinary organs, and sometimes suppression; tightness and burning in the throat, occasionally so great as to prevent speech; countenance not always pale, but sometimes flushed; tendency to doze; stupor, convulsions and death. As a result of exposure to the vapors of mercuric methide (which is a heavy colorless liquid, containing 87 per cent. of mercury), dimness of vision, numbness of the hands, deafness, debility, swelling and tenderness of the gums, general impairment of the senses. Calomel is an irritant poison, when administered in large doses, producing excessive salivation, and, at times, death.	Albumen, in some form, must be promptly administered; either white of eggs beaten up with water, milk, or wheat flour beaten up. The inflammatory symptoms to be counteracted by the usual means. Gold, finely mixed in dust, with fine iron filings. The iron in filings or in powder — ferri pulvis — has been given inclosed in gold leaf. In the chronic form iodide of potassium has been given. Same as for other mercurials, and treatment of symptoms on general principles.	The free alkalies differ in their precipitates from solutions of mercury. With calomel potassa gives a black precipitate; lime-water also produces the same color. Potassa gives, with corrosive sublimate, a yellowish precipitate; ammonia, a white; lime-water, an orange; and sulphuretted hydrogen, a black. If a drop of the solution be placed on a piece of gold, and touched with a knife or key, the mercury will be reduced, which amalgamates with the gold, producing a white spot. Protochloride of tin is the best liquid test. It gives a grayish precipitate. All the solid forms of mercury are volatile, and may be reduced by heating them in a glass tube with charcoal and carbonate of soda, when the metallic mercury will sublime, and may be collected in a globule.

POISONS.	SYMPTOMS.	TREATMENT.	TESTS.
SILVER. — Nitrate of Silver, (Lunar Caustic.)	Those of other irritant poisons.	Chloride of sodium, or common salt, immediately decomposes this substance, and destroys its activity. Antiphlogistic treatment is to be employed for the inflammatory symptoms.	Nitrate of silver is distinguished by the formation of a white precipitate, insoluble in nitric acid, with chloride of sodium; a gray precipitate with ammonia, which is redissolved in an excess of ammonia; yellow precipitate with phosphate of soda. The precipitate of chloride of silver, obtained by adding chloride of sodium to the nitrate of silver, is readily reduced, and the metallic silver obtained, by mixing it with dilute sulphuric acid and granulated zinc.
TIN. — Chloride of Tin. Solution of Tin, used by Dyers. Oxide of Tin, or Patty Powder.	The same as those from other irritant poisons, and a peculiar tanned appearance of the villous coat of the stomach.	Milk to be given copiously, and the subsequent treatment to be regulated by the symptoms.	The chloride precipitates vegetable coloring matter; also albumen and gelatin. The white oxide is precipitated from its solution by free alkalis; with sulphuretted hydrogen gas, a brown precipitate.
ZINC. — Sulphate of Zinc, (White Vitriol.) — Acetate of Zinc.	Violent vomiting; astringent taste, burning pain in the stomach; pale countenance; cold extremities; dull eyes; fluttering pulse. Death seldom ensues in consequence of the emetic effects.	The vomiting may be relieved by copious draughts of warm water. Carbonate of soda, administered in solution, will decompose the sulphate of zinc. Milk and albumen also act as antidotes. General principles to be observed in the subsequent treatment.	A white precipitate is thrown down by the free alkalis from the soluble salts of zinc, which becomes yellow when strongly heated—recovering its white color on cooling. Sulphuretted hydrogen occasions a white precipitate, but only in neutral or alkaline solutions. Sulphohydrate of ammonia is better.
CHROMIUM.	The preparations of chromium belong to the class of irritants. The bichromate of potassium, used as a dye, has caused death. It produces also sloughing sores and foul intractable ulcers on the hands of those employed in its manufacture.	Emetics and magnesia or chalk.
PHOSPHORUS.	Those of other irritant poisons; pain in the stomach and bowels; vomiting, diarrhoea, tenderness and tension of the abdomen.	An emetic to be promptly administered; copious draughts containing magnesia in suspension; mucilaginous drinks; general treatment for inflammatory symptoms.	Phosphorus is known by its ready inflammability, luminousness at ordinary temperatures, and alliaceous odor.
GLASS or ENAMEL.	If taken in very coarse powder, it produces irritation and inflammation of the bowels.	Large quantities of crumbs of bread should be eaten, to envelop the particles. (?) An emetic of sulphate of zinc should then be given, and vomiting be promoted by demulcent drinks.

After as much as possible of the poison is got rid of, a very strong infusion of coffee, or vinegar diluted with water, may be given with advantage. Camphor mixture with ether may be taken frequently, and if insensibility be considerable, warmth, frictions, and blisters, may be employed. If inflammation or other dangerous

The pulse is variable, but at first generally strong and full; the breathing is quick, and there is great anxiety and dejection, which, if not speedily relieved, soon ends in death.	The stomach to be effectually evacuated by giving four or five grains of tartar emetic, or from ten to twenty of the sulphate of zinc, repeated every quarter of an hour, till the full effect is produced. These means may be assisted by tickling the throat with a feather or the finger. Large and strong glysters of soap dissolved in water, or of salt and gruel, should be speedily administered, to clear the bowels, and assist in getting rid of the poison; and active purgatives may be given after the vomiting has ceased. When as much as possible of the poison has been expelled, the patient may drink, alternately, a teacupful of strong hot infusion of coffee, and vinegar diluted with water. If the drowsiness, which is sometimes extreme, and the insensibility bordering on apoplexy, be not remedied by these means, blood may be taken from the jugular vein, blisters may be applied to the neck and legs, and the attention be roused by every means possible. If the heat declines, warmth and frictions must be perseveringly used. Vegetable acids are on no account to be given before the poison is expelled, and it is desirable that but little fluid of any kind should be administered. N. B. Bromine, chlorine, and iodine are said to be antidotes to the alkaloids generally. Electromagnetism has been found efficacious in the drowsiness and sleep of narcotic poisoning. Where myositic narcotic poisons, as opium, have been taken, mydriatics, as belladonna and stramonium, have been recommended; and conversely.

The former grow in wet, shady places, have a nauseous odor; are softer, more open, and porous; have a dirty-looking surface, sometimes a gaudy color, or many very distinct hues, particularly if they have been covered with an envelope; they have soft, bulbous stalks, grow rapidly, and corrupt very quickly.	The stomach and bowels to be cleared by an emetic of tartarized antimony, followed by frequent doses of Glauber's or Epsom salt, and large, stimulating glysters. After full vomiting, an active purgative should be given, to remove any of the noxious matter that may have found its way into the intestines. Vinegar and water may be drunk after the above remedies have operated, and the body may be sponged with the same. Water, made very sweet with sugar, to which ether may be added, may be drunk freely as a corrective, and a very weak solution of alkali has been recommended to obviate the effects of the poison. If spasm ensue after evacuations laudanum, in considerable doses, is necessary. If inflammation should occur, the usual means of removing it must be employed.

* In addition to the animal poisons here enumerated, may be mentioned narcotico-irritant poisoning from sausage-meat, poisoning from diseased pork, from trichinae, (see Trichiniasis,) from putrescent food, poisoned game, &c.

Inflammation, and often extensive suppuration and gangrene, followed by death.	A cupping-glass to be applied over the wound, or a moderately tight ligature above the bites, and the wound left to bleed after being well washed with warm water; the actual cautery, lunar caustic, or butter of antimony, to be then applied freely to it, and afterwards covered with lint, dipped in equal parts of olive oil and spirit of hartshorn. The ligature to be removed if the inflammation be considerable. Warm, diluting drinks, and small doses of ammonia or hartshorn, to cause perspiration; the patient to be well covered in bed, and a little warm wine given occasionally. In some cases, alcoholic drinks, as whisky, must be very liberally administered. Arsenic, the principal ingredient in the Tanjore Pill, has been strongly recommended, and, also, Bibron's antidote, but neither is reliable.
CANTHARIS VESICATORIA. Spanish, or Blistering Fly. Lytta vittata. Potato Fly.	Nauseous odor of the breath; acrid taste; burning heat in the throat, stomach, and abdomen; frequent vomitings, often bloody, with copious bloody stools; excruciating pain in the stomach; painful and obstinate priapism, with heat in the bladder, and strangury or retention of urine; frightful convulsions, delirium, and death.	Vomiting to be excited by drinking sweet oil, sugar and water, milk, or linseed tea, very freely. Emollient glysters should be administered, and if symptoms of inflammation of the stomach, kidney, or bladder supervene, they must be subdued by appropriate treatment. Camphor dissolved in oil may be rubbed over the belly and the thighs.
VENOMOUS INSECTS. Tarantula. Scorpio. Scorpion. Vespa crabro. Hornet. Vespa vulgaris. Wasp. Apis mellifica. Bee. Culex pipiens. Gnat. Estrus bovis. Gad-fly.	In general, the sting of these insects produces only a slight degree of pain and swelling; but occasionally the symptoms are more violent, and sickness and fever are produced by the intensity of the pain.	Hartshorn and oil may be rubbed on the affected part, and a piece of rag, moistened in the same, or in salt and water, may be kept upon it till the pain is removed. A few drops of hartshorn may be given frequently in a little water, and a glass or two of wine may be taken. The sting may, in general, be removed by making strong pressure around it with the barrel of a small watch-key.
SALIVA OF THE RABID DOG.	At an uncertain interval after the bite, generally, however, between the twentieth day and three or four months, pain or uneasiness occurs in the bitten part, though the wound may have been long healed. Anxiety, uneasiness, languor, spasms, horror, disturbed sleep, difficult respiration succeed, and are soon very much increased; violent convulsions affect the whole body, hideously distorting the muscles of the face; the eyes are red and protruded, the tongue swells and often hangs out, and viscid saliva flows from the mouth; there is pain in the stomach, with bilious vomitings, a horror of fluids, and impossibility of drinking them. All these symptoms are aggravated till the sufferer is relieved by death.	Hydrophobia is more easily prevented than cured; indeed, it is doubted whether it ever has been cured. Mercury, arsenic, opium, musk, camphor, acids, wine, vegetable and mineral alkali, oil, various herbs, and many other remedies whose effects are quite opposite, have been employed, but none can be relied on. Large bloodlettings, the warm and cold bath, and almost every other remedial agent, have been tried without success. The bitten part should be completely cut out, even after it has healed, if the symptoms have not yet come on; the part should then be immersed in warm water, or be washed with it as long as it will bleed, and, after the most persevering ablution, caustic should be applied to every part of the surface, and then the wound covered with a poultice, and suffered to heal by granulation. No milder discipline can insure safety.

The most energetic poisons are used therapeutically, and often with considerable advantage. They have, of course, to be administered in extremely small doses, to avoid producing true poisoning.

Poi'soning, Venefic'ium, Toxicatio, Intoxicatio, Entozis'mus, Entozicis'mus, Pharmacei'a, Malefic'ium, Venenation, (F.) Empoisonnement, Intoxication. The art of applying a poisonous substance to any of the textures in a dose capable of occasioning more or less serious symptoms. Rigorously speaking, therefore, if a physician, in treating any case, employs a deleterious medicine in a small dose, which, owing to particular circumstances, produces unpleasant symptoms, he may be said to have poisoned the patient. The term is, however, generally restricted to poisoning by design.

Poisoning has also been used, by a few, to denote the series of symptoms resembling those produced by certain poisons, which occasionally follow the use of substances that are generally innocuous. Overloading the stomach with indigestible food has, for example, given occasion to symptoms resembling those produced by a narcotic poison, and the effect has been termed poisoning.

Secret poisoning was at one time practised as an art. It consisted in administering medicines, which should act as slow poisons, and gradually undermine the strength and life. Its agency was far from being so extensive as was imagined.

Polydac'tylus, Perissodac'tylus, (πολυδακτυλος, from poly, and δακτυλος, 'a finger,') One who has a supernumerary finger or fingers, or toes.

Polydip'sia, (poly, and διψη, 'thirst,') Si'tis morbo'sa seu inten'sa, Polypo'sia, Dipso'sis a'tens, Excessive thirst, (F.) Soif excessive. A constant desire for drinking, with a sense of dryness in the mouth and throat. It is mostly symptomatic of fever, inflammation, dropsy, excessive discharges, &c., and is so much a part of diabetes, that it has been called Polydipsia.

Polyg'ala, (πολυγαλον, from poly, and γαλα, 'milk,') P. vulga'ris, Com'mon Milk'wort. Ord. Polygalaceæ. Sex. Syst. Diadelphia Octandria. The leaves are bitter, and are used in the same cases as the Polygala amara.

POLYG'ALA AMA'RA, P. amarel'la seu vulga'ris, Bit'ter Milk'wort. A powerful bitter; and, consequently, tonic. Its reputed virtues are balsamic, demulcent, and corroborant. The Polygala rubel'la, or Bit'ter Polyg'ala of the United States, has the same virtues.

POLYG'ALA PAUCIFO'LIA, Triclisper'ma gran-diflo'ra, Dwarf Milk'wort, Little Pol'lom, Ev'er-green Snake'root, (F.) Polygale naine, possesses the same properties as P. senega.

POLYG'ALA RUBEL'LA, see Polygala amara.

POLYG'ALA SEN'EGA, P. Virginia'na seu gran-diflo'ra, Sen'eka, Rat'tlesnake Milk'wort, Sen'ega or Rattlesnake root, (F.) Polygale de Virginie ou de Seneka. The bark is the active part of the root, Senega, (Ph. U. S.,) Senegæ Radix, (Ph. B., 1867.) Its taste is at first acrid, and afterwards very hot and pungent. It was once esteemed to be specific against the poison of the rattlesnake, and in pleurisy, pneumonia, &c., after the inflam-matory action had been got under. It has been given also in humoral asthma, chronic rheuma-tism, dropsy, croup, amenorrhœa, &c. According to Peschier, it contains three principles, Polyg'a-lin or Sen'egin, Isol'usin, and Polyg'alic Acid. Dose, gr. xxx.-xl. of the powder.

POLYG'ALA SERPENTA'RIA. A shrub of Caffra-ria, the root of which is considered by the natives as a sure antidote against the bites of ven-omous serpents.

POLYG'ALA VIRGINIA'NA, P. senega — p. Vulga-ris, P. amara.

Polygalactia, Polygalia, (poly, and γαλα, gen. γαλακτος, 'milk.') Superabundant secretion of milk; galactia; galactorrhœa.

Polygale Naine, Polygala paucifolia — p. de Virginie, Polygala Virginiana.

Polygalia, Polygalactia.

Polygalic Acid, see Polygala senega.

Polygalin, see Polygala senega.

Polygonatum, (πολυγονατον, from poly, and γωνν, 'a knee or joint,') Convallaria polygonatum — p. Anceps, Convallaria polygonatum — p. Canaliculatum, Convallaria canaliculata — p. Latifolium, Convallaria canaliculata — p. Multiflorum, Convallaria multiflora — p. Pubescens, Convallaria pubescens — p. Uniflorum, Convallaria polygonatum — p. Vulgare, Convallaria polygonatum.

Polygonia, (πολυγωνια, from poly, and γενναω, 'I produce,') Fecundity.

Polygonus, (πολυγωνος,) Polygonus.

Polygonum, (πολυγονον,) P. avicularē, (from poly, and γωνν, 'a knee or joint,') P. centinodium seu erectum, Centinodia, Centumnodia, Sanguinalis Corrigiola, Sanguinaria, Knotgrass, Knotweed, Bindweed, Doorweed, (F.) Renouée, Trainasse, Centinode. Ord. Polygonaceæ. Sex. Syst. Octandria Trigynia. This grass is said to be a feeble astringent.

POLY'ONUM ACRE, P. hydropiper.

POLY'ONUM AMPHIBIUM, P. coccineum, Water Persicaria of Europe and this country. The roots have been used like sarsaparilla, especially in diseases of the skin.

POLY'ONUM AVICULARĒ, Polygonum.

POLY'ONUM BISTORTA, P. bistortodes, Bistorta, Colubrina, Officinal Bistort, Great Bistort or Snakeweed, (F.) Bistorte, Coulevrine, Serpentaire rouge. The root is a powerful astringent and tonic; and, as such, has been used in internal hemorrhage, atonic diarrhœa, ague, &c. Dose, gr. xv. to 3j.

POLY'ONUM BISTORTIDES, P. bistorta — p. Centinodium, P. aviculare.

POLY'ONUM COCCINEUM, P. amphibium.

POLY'ONUM DIVARICATUM, Eastern Buckwheat plant. The roots, reduced to a coarse meal, are said to be much used as an article of diet by the Siberians.

POLY'ONUM ERECTUM, P. aviculare.

POLY'ONUM FAGOPYRUM, Fagopyrum, F. esculentum, Triticum Faginum, Buckwheat, (F.) Sar'rasin, Blé noir. The grain of this plant constitutes a principal article of food with the inhabitants of Russia, Germany, and Switzerland. It is much used in the United States.

POLY'ONUM HYDROPIPER, P. acre seu hydropiperoides (Pursh) seu punctatum, Hydropiper, Persicaria urens, Mercurius terres'tris, Poor Man's Pepper, Bitting Arse'smart, Smartweed, Lakeweed, Water pepper, (F.) Piment d'eau, Cu-rage, Renouée âcre. The leaves of this plant have an acrid, burning taste, and resemble those of the arum. They have been recommended as possessing antiseptic, aperient, and diuretic virtues. The fresh leaves have been applied externally as a stimulating cataplasm.

POLY'ONUM HYDROPIPERIDES, P. hydropiper, P. punctatum. Polygonum hydropiperoides of Michaux, Mild water pepper; indigenous; has no acrid properties.

POLY'ONUM PERSICARIA, Persicaria, P. minor seu mitis, Plumbago, La'dy's Thumb, Heart's ease, (Prov.) Redshanks, (F.) Persicaria douce. This plant is said to possess vulnerary and antiseptic qualities. It has been given in wine to arrest gangrene.

POLY'ONUM PUNCTATUM, P. hydropiperoides, Water pepper of America, Smartweed, possesses similar properties to Polygonum hydropiper, and is occasionally used internally in gravel, and externally in chronic ulcers. A fluidrachm of the saturated tincture has been extolled in amenorrhœa. See Polygonum hydropiper.

POLY'ONUM VIRGINIANUM, Wand-spiked Persicaria, Virginian Bistort; indigenous; is astringent, diuretic, and tonic.

Polygonus, Polygonus, (poly, and γωνια, 'an angle,') Polygonal; multangular, — hence Os polygonum.

Polygro'ma, gen. Polygro'matis, (poly, and hy-groma,) Staphyloma.

Polyhi'dria, Polyi'dria, Polyidros'is, (poly, and ιδρως, 'sweat,') Excessive sweating.

Polyhy'dria, (πολυιδρια, from poly, and ιδωρ, 'water,') Hydrops.

Polyhyperhæ'mia, Plethora.

Polyi'dria, Polyhidria.

Polyidro'sis, Polyhidria.

Polyleucocythæ'mia, Leucocythæ'mia.

Polylymph'ia, Anasarca.

Polymas'thus, Pleiomasthus, (poly, and μασ-σος, 'breast,') (F.) Plurimamme. A monster having several breasts. The condition has been called Polymasthia, Pleiomasthia, and Pleomasthia.

Polyma'zia, (poly, and μαζος, 'a breast,') see Polymasthus.

Polymel'ian, (F.) Polymélien, (poly, and μελος, 'a limb,') An epithet given to monsters characterized by the insertion, in a well-formed subject, of one or more accessory limbs, accompanied, at times, by the rudiments of certain other parts.

Polymer'ia, Polymerismus — p. Promiscua translative, Transposition of the viscera.

Polymeris'mus, Polymeria, (poly, and μερος, 'a part,') A monstrosity, which consists in the existence of supernumerary organs; as a sixth finger of the hand.

Polyneu'ron, Plantago.

Polyonych'ia, Polonychia.

Polyop'ia, Polyopsia.

Polyop'sia, Polyop'sy, Polyop'ia, Pol'yopy, (poly, and οψις, 'sight,') Vision is so called, when multiple or manifold.

Pol'yopy, Polyopsia.

Polyor'chis, gen. Polyor'chidis, Multites'tis, (poly, and ορχις, 'a testicle,') One who has more than two testicles.

Polyorex'ia, (poly, and ορεξις, 'appetite,') Excessive appetite or hunger. A genus in the Gastrotes of M. Alibert.

Polype'ria, (poly, and πηρος, 'mutilated,') Congenital misconstruction of various parts of organs.

Polypha'gia, Multivorantia, (πολυφαγια, from poly, and φαγω, 'I eat,') Voracity. Faculty of eating or subsisting on many kinds of food. See Boulimia.

Polyph'agous, (πολυφαγος,) Polyph'agus, Multivorous, (F.) Polyphage. Relating or appertaining to polyphagia.

Polypharmaci'a, Polypharm'acy, (poly, and φαρμακον, 'a medicine,') The prescribing of too many medicines. A prescription, consisting of a number of medicines; hence the name Polypharmacus, (F.) Polypharmaque, given to one who is in the habit of prescribing a number of medicines, and whose prescriptions are loaded with ingredients. The term is taken in bad part.

Polypharmaque, see Polypharmacia.

Polyphy'sia, (poly, and φύσα, 'wind,') Flatulence.

Pol'ypiform Concre'tions, (polypus, and forma, 'form,') see Polypus.

Polypion'ia, (poly, and πιον, 'fat,') see Poly-sarcia — p. Infantum, see Polysarcia.

Polypio'sis, (poly, πιον, 'fat, and οσις,) see Polysarcia.

Polyplas'tic, Polyplas'ticus, (poly, and πλασσω, 'I form,') That which has many shapes.

POLYPLAS'TIC EL'EMENT, in histology, is one which does not retain its primary shape, but undergoes transformation into others.

Polypod'ia, (poly, and πους, gen. ποδος, 'a foot.') A monstrosity having more than two feet.

Polypodi'tes, (πολυποδίου.) Wine impregnated with polypody.

Polypodium, (πολυποδίου.) P. Vulgarē seu Virginianum seu pinnatifidum, Filic'ula dulcis, Com'mon Polypody, Fern root, Rock Brake or Brack'en, Brake or Bracken root, (F.) Fougère douce. Ord. Filices. (From poly, and πους, gen. ποδος, 'a foot,' owing to its many roots.) This fern grows in the clefts of rocks, walls, &c., in both hemispheres. It was formerly regarded as cholagogue, and was given in head diseases. It is not used now.

POLYPO'DIUM ADIANTIFOR'ME, see Calagualæ radix—p. Ammifolium, see Calagualæ radix—p. Argentineum, see Calagualæ radix—p. Calaguala, Calagualæ radix—p. Cetræcinum, P. incanum—p. Coriaceum, see Calagualæ radix—p. Dentatum, Asplenium filix fœmina—p. Filix fœmina, Asplenium filix fœmina.

POLYPO'DIUM FI'LIX MAS, Aspid'ium seu Athyrium seu Nephrod'ium seu Polys'ticum Filix Mas, A. depas'tum seu erosum, Filix pinna'ta, Pter'is, Blechnon, Polyp'rhizon, Blanc'non Oribas'ii, Lonchi'tis, Filic'ula, Filix Mas, F. non ramo'sa dentata, Nephrod'ium crenatum, Polys'ticum callip'teris, Male Polypody or Fern, (F.) Fougère mâle. The rhizoma of this plant, Filix Mas, Ph. U. S., Filix, Ph. B., 1867, has been much extolled as an anthelmintic, and in cases of tænia, and has, by many, been placed above all tæniafuges. It was the basis of a once celebrated remedy—Madame Nouffer's. Dose, ʒij. to ʒiij. of the powdered solid part of the root; followed in the morning by a strong cathartic of camboe or jalap. An ethereal extract has been proposed by Dr. Peschier, of Geneva,—Extractum filicis æthereum, or O'leum filicis, the dose of which is from 12 to 24 grains. Extractum filicis liq'uidum is official in the Ph. B. (1867). Dose, ℥xxx. to fʒj.

POLYPO'DIUM INCA'NUM, P. cetræcinum, Acrostichum polypodioides, Polypody, Rock Brake or Bracken; indigenous; has been considered demulcent, cathartic, and anthelmintic.

Polypody, Polypodium, P. incanum—p. Common, Polypodium—p. Male, Polypodium filix mas.

Polypoid, Polypoides, (polypus, and ειδος, 'resemblance.') Having the shape of, or resembling, a polypus.

Polypore du Mèdse, Boletus laricis.

Polyp'orus Ignia'rius, (poly, and πορος, 'a pore,') Boletus ignarius—p. Officinalis, Boletus laricis.

Polypo'sia, (πολυποσια, from poly, and ποσις, 'drink,') Great thirst; desire for drink. Polydipsia.

Polypo'sis Ventric'uli. A condition of the stomach characterized by polypous projections of the mucous membrane.

Polypotome, Polypot'omus, Pol'yptome, Polyp'tomus, Pol'yptus knife, (polypus, and τομή, 'incision,') An instrument for the removal of polypus by excision.

Polypous, Polypo'sus. Relating, or belonging to, or resembling polypus.

Pol'yptome, Polypotome.

Polypus, (πολυπους.) Pseudometamorpho'sis polypo'sa, (from poly, and πους, gen. ποδος, 'a foot,') A name given to tumors, which occur in mucous membranes especially; and which have been compared to certain zoophytes. Polypi may form on every mucous membrane. They are most commonly observed in the nasal fossæ, Rhinopol'ypi, pharynx, and uterus; more rarely in the stomach, intestines, bronchial tubes, bladder, vagina, and meatus auditorius externus. They vary much in size, number, mode of adhesion, and intimate nature. Accordingly, they have received various appellations; mu'cous, soft, vesic'ular, when their substance has been soft, spongy, vesicular, and, as it were, gorged with fluid. Others have been called hard; and these have been distinguished into fi'brous or flesh'y, and into scir'rhous or cancerous. Fi'brous polypi, Pol'ypi fibro'si, Inopol'ypi, are of a dense, compact texture, and whitish color. They contain few vessels, and do not degenerate into cancer. The scir'rhous or carcinom'atous are true cancerous tumors, painful and bleeding. They present all the pathological changes which belong to cancerous affections, and the prognosis is of course unfavorable.

The mode of treating polypi must differ according to their character. The means used to destroy them have been, 1. To subject them to the action of certain astringent powders or solutions, to obtain their resolution. 2. Cauterization, or the application of the actual cautery or caustics. 3. Excision, or ablation with a cutting instrument. 4. Extirpation with the fingers or with the polypus forceps. 5. A ligature, put around them so as to prevent their nutrition. A seton has, also, been sometimes used to gradually destroy the pedicle.

The term POL'YPI,—Pseudopol'ypi, Cardi'tis polypo'sa, Pol'ypiform Concre'tions, (F.) Concre'tions polypeuses ou polypiformes ou sanguines du Cœur, Hémocardioplasties, (Piorry,)—has likewise been applied to collections of blood—fibrinous concretions—found in the heart—Heart clots, Coag'ula cor'dis fibrino'sa—or great vessels after dissolution. The presence of these concretions during life may be suspected, when in the course of an acute or chronic affection of the heart, or at the close of chronic diseases in general—especially those of the lungs—the heart's action becomes suddenly tumultuous, obscure, and accompanied with a soft bellows murmur, while the general symptoms indicate the effects of obstructed circulation. The right cavities are most frequently affected. See Thrombus, and Embolia.

POL'YBUS BRONCHIA' LIS, Bronchlemmitis, Bronchi'tis membrana'cea seu exsudati'va seu croupo'sa, Plastic Bronchitis, Bronchial Croup, Chronic Croup [?], Pseudomem'branous Bronchitis, (F.) Bronchite pseudo-membraneuse. A membraniform secretion in the bronchial tubes of a diphtheritic character, having the shape, when expectorated, of the bronchia. It is the result of inflammation of the lining membrane of those tubes.

POL'YBUS CARNO'SUS, Sarcoma—p. Fibrosus, see Polypus—p. Uteri, Metropolypus.

Polyp'rhizon, (πολυρρίζον, from poly and ρίζα, 'a root,') Polypodium filix mas.

Polyp'rhœa, (poly, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') Proflu-vium.

Polysar'cia, Polysarco'sis, (πολυσαρκία, from poly, and σαρξ, gen. σαρκος, 'flesh,') Carnos'itas, Polysoma'tia, Adelipa'ria, Corpulen'tia, Steati'tes. Excessive corpulency. Authors have distinguished two varieties of this:—POLYSAR'CIA CARNO'SA, Corpulency, and P. ADIPO'SA, Polypio'nia, Polypio'sis, Pimelo'sis nim'ia, Pachys'mus, Pachyn'sis, Obes'itas, Hyperpim'elē, Lipa'ria, Adipo'sis, Polysar'cia fagino'sa, Empyme'lium polysar'cia, Baryso'mia, Barysoma'tica, Lipo'sis, Lipar'otes, Lipas'ma, Pinguin'do, Pin'gitude, Obes'ity, (F.) Obésité, Embonpoint excessif. A severe regimen and exercise are the best preventives. Children are occasionally met with of unusual fatness, in spite of every care. This morbid disposition has been termed Polypion'ia infantum and Chloro'sis gigante'a. See Bantingism.

POLYSAR'CIA VIS' CERUM, Physeonia adiposa.

Polysarco'sis, Polysarcia.

Polyscel'ia, (poly, and σκελος, 'a leg,') A monstrosity, characterized by the presence of one or more supernumerary legs.

Polyscope, (poly, and σκοπεω, 'I see.') An apparatus devised by Trouvé, combining all the instruments necessary for exploration, by light, of the larynx, the ear, eye, urethra, &c.

Polysialia, (poly, and σιαλον, 'saliva.') Excessive discharge of saliva.

Polysoma'tia, (poly, and σωμα, 'body,') Polysarcia.

Polysom'ia, (poly, and σωμα, 'body,') A monstrosity characterized by the existence of more bodies than one.

Polyspas'ton, (poly, and σπασω, 'I draw.') A powerful instrument for reducing luxations.

Polysper'mia, (πολυσπέρμια, from poly, and σπέρμα, 'sperm,') Richness or fulness of sperm or seed.

Polysthen'ic, Polysthen'icus, (πολυσθενής, from poly, and σθενος, 'strength,') Having much strength.

Polysticum Callip'teris, Polypodium filix mas — p. Filix mas, Polypodium filix mas.

Polys'toma Pinguic'ola, (poly, and στομα, 'a mouth,') see Parasites — p. Sanguicola, see Parasites — p. Venarum, see Parasites.

Polytoc'ia, (πολυτοκία, from poly, and τοκος, 'a child,') Fecundity.

Polytric, Asplenium trichomanoides.

Polytrich'ia, see Polytrichus.

Polyt'richum, (πολυτρίχον, from poly, and τριξ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,') P. vulgare, Polyt'richon, Adiantum aureum, Gold'en Maid'enhair, (F.) Perce-mousse. Ord. Musci. It is possessed of astringent properties, and was formerly given in diseases of the lungs and in calculus affections.

POLYT'RICHUM COMMUN'E, Asplenium trichomanoides.

POLYT'RICHUM JUNIPER'NUM, Hair'cap Moss, Robbin's Rye, common in New England, is said to possess powerful diuretic properties.

Polyt'richus, (πολυτρίχος.) Very hairy. One that has much hair. The condition is termed Polytrich'ia, although this term is at times employed for the growth of hair on parts not usually having it.

Polytroph'ia, (poly, and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Abundant or excessive nutrition.

Polyure'sis, (poly, and ουρησις, 'urination,') Diabetes.

Polyu'ria, (poly, and ουρον, 'urine,') Diabetes.

Polyu'ricus. Relating to excess of urinary secretion. Sauvages calls Ischu'ria polyu'rica a kind of ischuria caused by accumulation of urine in the bladder.

Polyurique, (poly, and ουρον, 'urine,') Lithuria.

Po'ma, gen. Po'matis, (πομα,) Drink — p. Chinesis, (pl. of pomum, 'an apple,') see Citrus aurantium.

Poma'ceum, (pomum, 'an apple,') Cider.

Poma'tum, Pomma'tum, (from poma, 'apples,') which formerly entered into its composition, (F.) Pommade, Liparolé, Stéarolé. A pharmaceutical preparation, employed only externally, which differs but little from an ointment, except in having generally less consistence. It is usually scented and colored to render it more agreeable. Pommade is often used synonymously with ointment.

Common Pomatium is made of lard, 12lbs., suet, 4lbs., essence of lemon, $\frac{3}{4}$ viij.

Citrine*, Unguentum hydrargyri nitratis — p. de Cyrillo, Unguentum muriatis hydrargyri oxygenato medicatum.

Pommade de Desault. A preparation of the French Codex (1866), containing red oxide of mercury, oxide of zinc, acetate of lead, burnt alum, corrosive sublimate, and rose pommade.

Pommade Épispastique Jaune, Unguentum lyttæ medicatum aliud — p. Épispastique verte, Unguentum lyttæ medicatum — p. de Garou, Unguentum epispasticum de daphne gnidio.

Pommade de Gondret, P. ammoniacale de Gondret, Caustique ammoniacale, Poma'tum seu Unguentum ammoniacale Gondreti, Gondret's Counterir'itant, Gondret's ammoniacal caustic. (Liq. ammon., p. ij., Sevi, p. j., Ol. amygdal., p. j. M.) Used to excite a speedy revulsion in cases of chronic affections of the brain, incipient cataract, amaurosis, &c., as well as to cauterize the integuments deeply.

The above formula is that of the French Codex, but, according to M. Trousseau, it is much too hard for use, unless the weather is warm. He proposes two formulæ, one for summer, the other for winter. In the former, he directs three parts of lard, one of suet, and four of liquor ammonia; in the latter, equal parts of lard and liquor ammonia.

Pop'les, gen. Pop'litis, Gare'tum, Garre'tum, Ig'ny's, Ig'nyë, Suffra'go, For'sa ge'nu, Fos'sa poplitæ'a, the Ham, Hough, Hoff, Hock, (F.) Jarret, (from [L.] post, 'behind,' and plico, 'I fold,') The posterior part of the knee-joint. The ham forms what is called the popliteal region or space.

Pop'lesy, Apoplexy.

Poplitæ'us, (from poples,) Popliteal muscle.

Poplitæ, Popliteus muscle.

Poplitæ'ad, see Popliteal aspect.

Poplitæ'al, Poplitæ'us, Poplit'ic, (F.) Poplitæ (from poples.) That which relates to the ham. A name given to various parts.

POPLITE'AL ARTERY, Popliteal port'ion of the cru'al (Ch.), is really a continuation of the femoral, which changes its name on passing through the abductor magnus muscle. It descends a little obliquely outwards into the hollow of the ham, and extends from the commencement of the lower third of the thigh to the end of the upper quarter of the leg, where it terminates by dividing into the posterior tibial and peroneal arteries. In the ham it gives off the three superior articular arteries; and at the top of the leg, the arteries of the gemelli or gemini muscles, gemini branches, (F.) branches jumelles, the two inferior articular arteries, and the tibialis antica.

POPLITE'AL AS'PECT. An aspect towards the side on which the poples or ham is situated. (Barelay.) Poplitæ'ad is used by the same writer adverbially, and signifies 'towards the popliteal aspect.'

POPLITE'AL FOS'SA, Poples.

POPLITE'AL GLANDS, Glan'dulæ poplitæ'æ. Lymphatic glands, four in number, seated in the popliteal region or space.

POPLITE'AL MUS'CLE, Poplitæ'us Mus'cle, Subpoplitæ'us, (F.) Muscle poplitæ, Muscle Jarretier, Fémoro-popliti-tibial (Ch.), is seated in the popliteal region. It is triangular, long, flat, and is inserted, on the one hand, by means of a strong tendon, into the tuberosity at the outer condyle of the femur, terminating below at the upper part of the posterior surface of the tibia. This muscle bends the leg on the thigh, and, reciprocally, the thigh on the leg. When the leg is bent, it causes it to turn, in rotation, inwards.

POPLITE'AL NERVES. They result from the bifurcation of the sciatic, and are two in number, viz.: 1. The exter'nal poplitæ'al, Perone'al nerve, Branche péronière (Ch.). It is smaller than the internal; turns to the outside of the fibula at the upper part of the leg, and divides into the musculocutaneous branch, nerf pré-tibio-digital (Ch.), and the ante'rior tib'ial, nerf pré-tibio-susphalangé-taire (Ch.). 2. The inter'nal poplitæ'al nerve, Branche tibiale (Ch.), which is larger than the other, and seems to be the real continuation of the sciatic nerve. It descends vertically into the hollow of the ham, and passes beneath the aponeurotic arch of the solaris muscle, beyond which it takes the name tib'ial nerve. It furnishes the exter'nal saphe'na nerve, and a number of branches, that are distributed to the posterior muscles of the leg. It then passes to the sole of the foot to be divided into two branches, called Plan'tar nerves.

POPULUS, P. n'gra, Ægei'ros, Achero'is, Black pop'lar, (F.) Peuplier, P. noir ou franc. The young buds, oculi or rudiments of the leaves, which appear in the beginning of spring, were formerly used in an official ointment — the unguentum populeum. It was also recommended in chronic affections of the lungs.

The bark of POPULUS TREMULOIDES, Amer'ican aspen; of P. TREM'ULA seu pen'dula, Europe'an aspen; and of POPULUS CAN'DICANS, Balm of Gilead Pop'lar, is antiperiodic, and furnishes sal'icin and pop'ulin, in which the properties probably reside.

POR'CUPIE MEN, Echinoder'mi. Persons have been so called in whom the cuticle is produced in the form of pointed prolongations, as if it had been moulded on the papillæ, like the shorter and blunter quills of the porcupine.

Por'cus, (πορκος,) Vulva.

Por'dë, (πορόη,) Crepitation, Fart.

Pore, Po'rus, (πορος, 'a passage,') In'terstice.

Pores are the excessively minute spaces or interstices which separate the integrant molecules of bodies, and render these bodies permeable. Anatomists formerly gave this name to supposititious openings at the extremities of vessels at the surface of different membranes. Thus Exhalant Pores have been supposed to exist in the exhalants, to transmit the fluids exhaled; Absorbent Pores to be employed in taking up parts that have to enter the circulation. Pores exist in the cuticle; yet Humboldt, with a powerful magnifying glass, was unable to observe them. These pores have also been called spiracula. Sweat Pores are conically dilated orifices of the ducts of the sweat-glands, visible to the naked eye in some portions of the body.

A body that is possessed of pores is said to be po'rous, poro'sus, (F.) Poreux.

Pore'blind, (peerblind [?],) Myopic.

Porphyris'mus, Scarlatina.

Porphyri'za'tion, Levigation.

Porphyroty'phus, see Typhus.

Porphyrox'in. A neutral crystallizable substance obtained from aqueous solution of opium by precipitation, and the action of ether and dilute sulphuric acid. By some it is considered a combination of several substances, as lanthopine, meconidine or meconid'ia, codamine, and laudamine, none of which have assumed any therapeutic importance.

Porphyru'ria, Porphyru'ria, (πορφύρα, 'purple,' and ούρον, 'urine,') A state of the urine—pur'puric urine—in which it deposits the remarkable coloring matter—Por'purin, Urro'sacin or Uro'sacin, Rosac'ic acid, Uroër'ythrin, Uro'rhodin, U'rrhodin—in association with urate of ammonia. It is considered to be a modification of urohæmatin, Hæmaphæin.

Por'phry, Porphyri'tes, (from πορφυρα, 'purple,') A species of very hard, compound rock, susceptible of considerable polish, and used in the fabrication of mortars and slabs for the apothecary.

POR'PHYRY, BLACK, Ophites.

Porphyu'ria, Porphyria.

Porrac'e, Porraceous.

Porra'ceous, Porra'ceus, Pra'sinus, (from porrum, 'a leek,') (F.) Porrac'e. Having the green color of the leek. An epithet given to certain excreted matters,—the sputa, bile, and fæces particularly.

Porreau, Allium porrum.

Porrec'tum, (porrigo, porrectum, 'I stretch,') Lever.

Por'ret, Allium porrum.

Por'ridge, Ath'ol, see Mahogany.

Porrigine, Porrigio favosa.

Porrigineux, Porriginous.

Porrigino'sus, Porriginous.

Porrig'inous, Porrigino'sus, (F.) Porrigineux. Appertaining to porrigo.

Porri'go, gen. Porrig'inis, 'scurf or scall in the head,' Tin'ea, T. Cap'itis, Fa'veus, Furfura'tio, Furfures, Ecpye'sis seu Phly'sis porrigo, Trichono'sis, Scal'led head in general, Scal'lard; (from porrigere, 'to spread,' or from porrum, 'a leek,' from the odor of the discharge [?],) (F.) Teigne, Rache. Some of the varieties are communicable. With the ancients a scurf affection of the head; dandriff; since often used like tinea for scalled head in general, and by Willan and Bateman for a class of diseases of the hairy scalp, principally characterized by an eruption of the pustules, called favi and achores, unaccompanied by fever. Mr. Erasmus Wilson, who, with others, considers Tinea to be owing to a vegetable parasite, suggests the name Phyto'sis for it. See Phytosis.

PORRI'GO CONFER'TA, P. scutulata.

PORRI'GO DECAL'VANS, Tricho'sis a'rea, A'rea, A. Cel'si, Alope'cia areata seu partia'lis seu circumscrip'ta, Phytoalope'cia, Trichono'sis furfura'cea, Tyr'ia, Tyro'ma, Ophi'asis, Tin'ea tonsu'dens seu decalvans, Her'pes seu Tin'ea tonsu'rans, Viti'li'go, Squar'ra tonsu'dens, Lim'ited or par'tial Bald'ness, (F.) Teigne tondante ou pelade, Pelade achromateuse, P. decalvante, Dartre tonsurante, consists of patches of baldness without decay or change of color in the surrounding hair, the exposed parts of the scalp being glabrous, white, and shining. The morbid condition sometimes spreads, so that the patches coalesce, rendering the baldness extensive. To a vegetable growth, forming a tube around the roots of the hair in Tinea tonsdens, Gruby gave the name Micro'sporon seu Micro'sporum Audouini. It is, also, called Trichoph'yton seu Trichom'yces decalvans. Another vegetable parasite, called Trichoph'yton seu Trichom'yces tonsu'rans, (F.) Teigne tonsurante, is developed in the root of the hair. The treatment consists in keeping the scalp cleared by constant shaving, and in the steady application of some stimulating liniment or ointment.

PORRI'GO FAVO'SA, Ce'rion, Fa'veus, Ecpye'sis porri'go favo'sa, Tin'ea favo'sa seu ve'ra, Scal'bies

cap'itis favo'sa, Melice'ra, Melice'rum, Melice'ria, Mellifa'vium, Porrigoph'ya, Honeycomb Scall or Tet'ter, (F.) Teigne favo'se, Porrigine. This consists in an eruption of pustules common to the head, trunk, and extremities, peaseized, flattened at the top, in clusters, often uniting; discharge, fetid; scabs, honeycombed; the cells filled with fluid. It occurs both in early and adult life. Modern researches have satisfied most observers that the crusts of favus are of vegetable nature, and formed of a parasitic plant, Fungus porrig'inis, belonging, according to Gruby, to the obsolete genus mycoder'ma. MM. J. Müller and Lebert refer it to the genus Oidium, and call it Oidium Schönlein'i, while Remak assigns it to a new genus under the name Acho'rion Schönlein'ii. The name Puccin'ia Fa'vi has also been given to it. The point is not, however, settled. The treatment of this variety must consist in the exhibition of laxatives and the mildest stimulating ointments, such as the Ung. zinci, Ung. hydrargyri præcipitat. alb., &c. Eczema of the hairy scalp is often confounded with Porrigo.

PORRIGO FURFURANS, Ecpye'sis porrigo furfura'cea, Tin'ea seu Tricho'sis furfuracea seu porrigino'sa, Pityri'asis, Teigne furfuracée of Alibert, commences with an eruption of small aches, the fluid of which soon concretes and separates in innumerable thin, laminated scabs, or scalelike exfoliations. It is attended with a good deal of itching and some soreness of the scalp, to which the disease is confined. It occurs chiefly in adults. In the treatment, the scalp must be kept shaved. The part must be washed repeatedly with soap and water, and an oiled silk cap worn. The nature of the ointments used must vary according to the period of disease and the irritability of the part affected. Zinc ointment; one made with the Cocculus indicus; the Sulphur ointment; Citrine ointment; Ung. hydrargyri nitrico-oxid.; Tar ointment, and Nitric acid ointment have all been found useful. Should inflammation or discharge arise, these applications must of course be intermitted.

PORRIGO LARVA' LIS, Crus'ta lac'tea, Ecpye'sis Porri'go crus'ta'cea, Menti'go, A'chor, Tin'ea lac'tea seu Fa'ciei, Eczema infan'tile, Lactu'men, Lacti'go, Milky scall or Tet'ter, Milkblotch, (F.) Croûte de lait ou laiteuse, Feux volages. This is, almost exclusively, a disease of infancy. It commonly appears first on the forehead and cheeks, in an eruption of numerous, minute, whitish aches on a red surface. These break and discharge a viscid fluid, which becomes incrustated in thin, yellowish, or greenish scabs. The patches spread, until the whole face becomes, as it were, enveloped in a mask; hence the epithet larvalis. The disease is rather a variety of Eczema. Sometimes the eruption appears on the neck and breast; and, occasionally, on the extremities. In general, the health of the child does not suffer, but the eruption is always attended with much itching and irritation. The treatment consists in mild, tepid ablution, and the application of gently stimulating ointments, as the unguentum zinci. The bowels must be kept in a soluble state by small doses of calomel, or by rhubarb and magnesia. See, also, Porrigo lupinosa.

PORRIGO LUPINO'SA, Tin'ea lupi'na, Favus disper'sus, Scab'ies cap'itis, Ecpye'sis porrigo lupino'sa, Porri'go larva'lis, Impeti'go figura'ta, Tin'ea granula'ta seu muc'o'sa, Crus'ta lac'tea (of some), Ment'agra infan'tum, (F.) Teigne, Dartre crustacée flavescence, Favus disséminé, consists of minute pustules in small patches, mostly commencing on the scalp; the patches terminate in dry, delving scabs, resembling lupine seeds; the interstices often covered with a thin, whitish and exfoliating incrustation. It occurs chiefly in early life, and requires the same treatment as the last.

PORRIGO SCUTULA'TA, P. confer'ta, Tin'ea granula'ta seu fico'sa, Ecpye'sis porri'go galea'ta, Acho'res seu Scab'ies cap'itis, Favus confer'tus, Ring'worm of the Scalp, Scalled head, (F.) Teigne annulaire, T. en anneau, T. nummulaire, Favus en groupes. It commences with clusters of small, light, yellow pustules, which soon scab off; and, if neglected, become hard by accumulation. If the scabs be removed, the surface is left red and shining, but studded with slightly elevated points. If not attended to, it involves the whole head. It occurs in children three or four years of age, and is very unmanageable. The rules laid down under Porrigo furfurans must be here still more perseveringly enforced. The whole tribe of stimulating ointments may be used in succession. No one will always succeed, and hence the necessity of change, provided advantage should not seem to follow any particular application. The Unguentum ad Scabiem of Banyer sometimes cures, when others fail.

PORRIGOPHYTA, (porrigo, and φυτον, 'a vegetable,') Porri'go favo'sa. Por'rigophyte means the plant of favus or of porrigo favosa.

The Sys'tem of the ve'na por'ta or the Abdom'inal ve'nous sys'tem or Por'tal sys'tem, (F.) Veine porte, Porte veine, is a vascular apparatus of black blood, situate in the abdomen, and resulting from two distinct orders of vessels, united into one common trunk. 1. One of these trunks, much more extensive than the other, has received the name Vena porta abdomina'lis, because it arises from all the organs inclosed in the cavity of the abdomen, except the kidneys and bladder; and, in the female, the uterus. The Abdom'inal ve'na por'ta has two principal roots, the splenic vein and the superior mesenteric, which have their ramifications in all the digestive organs. 2. The other trunk, distributed solely to the liver, has been called the Hepat'ic ve'na por'ta. It appears to be a continuation of the abdominal vena porta, and proceeds towards the inferior surface of the liver. Opposite the transverse fissure of that organ, it divides, like an artery, into two branches, which, at their union, seem to form a canal or duct, called by some the Sinus of the ve'na por'ta or of the portal vein. These branches are distributed in the substance of the liver, whither they are accompanied by a prolongation of the fibrous capsule of that organ, — the capsule of Glisson. The different branches of the vena porta are devoid of valves. See Liver.

POR'tal, (from porta.) Relating to the porta of the liver, — as the portal system, or system of the vena porta. By extension, the term has been applied to an analogous system of vessels in the kidney. See Kidney.

PORTE-AIGUILLE, Acutenac'ulum, Acuduc'tor, Rhaphidago'gus, Needlecarrier, Needlebearer, ([F.]

porter, 'to carry,' and aiguille, 'a needle.') An instrument, of steel or silver, for accurately laying hold of a needle, and giving it greater length, when it is so fine and small that it cannot be held by the fingers. A modification of this instrument was devised by Dr. Physick for taking up deep-seated arteries beyond the reach of a tenaculum or common needle; consisting of a forceps so constructed as to hold in its extremity a needle armed with a ligature.

Porte-bougie (F.). A silver canula similar to that of a trocar, except that it is longer. It is used for conducting bougies into the urethra.

Porte-caustique, Porte-pierre — p. Feuille, Subscapularis.

Porte-fil. A modification of the Porte-aiguille, by which the thread may be passed into a cavity.

Porte-laq. An instrument for carrying the laq or fillet over the limb of the fœtus, while in utero, when turning is necessary.

Porte-ligature, (porter, 'to carry,' and ligature.) An instrument for conveying a ligature to deep-seated parts.

Porte-mèche (F.), (from porter, 'to carry,' and mèche, 'a tent.') An instrument for carrying tents or mèches deeply into fistulous openings, or sinuses, to the bottom of ulcers, &c. It is a wire of silver or steel, four or five inches long, having a notch at one extremity and a button at the other.

Porte-moxa (F.). A small instrument for keeping the moxa applied to a part to be cauterized. It consists of a metallic ring — separated from the skin by three supports of ebony — to which a handle is adapted.

Porte-nitrate, Porte-pierre.

Porte-nœud (F.), (from porter, 'to carry,' and nœud, 'a knot.') An instrument for carrying a ligature round the base or pedicle of a tumor.

Porte-pierre (F.), (porter, 'to carry,' and pierre, 'a stone,') Porte-caustique, Porte-nitrate, Causticoph'orum, Caustic bearer. An instrument similar to a porte-crayon for carrying lunar caustic.

Porte-sonde (F.). An instrument resembling a porte-crayon, employed for holding the style or sonde, and inserting it more readily into the nasal duct, during the operation for fistula lacrymalis.

Porte-veine, Porta vena.

Porten'tum, Monster.

Por'ter, (from being drunk by porters.) Cerevisia.

Possédé, Possessed.

Possess'ed, Dæmoni'acus, (F.) Possédé. One affected with epilepsy, or other strange neurotic affection, was formerly supposed to be 'possessed' by a demon. Hence, exorcism and various religious ceremonies were at one time employed to drive off the intruder.

Pos'set, Posse'tum, (from posca, 'sour wine and water' [?].) Milk curdled with wine, or any acid, or treacle. A preparation of beer and milk; Zythog'ala.

Pos'set, Sack, see Sack — p. Sago, see Sago.

Poss'etting, Regurgitation (of infants).

Postax'ial, (post, and axis.) see Preaxial.

Postbrachia'lé, (post, 'after,' and brachium, 'arm,') Metacarpus.

Postcar'pium, (post, 'after,' and carpus, 'wrist,') Metacarpus.

Poste'rior Annula'ris. An external, interosseous muscle, which arises from the corresponding sides of the metacarpal bones of the ring-finger and little finger, and is inserted into the inside of the tendon on the back of the ring-finger. Its use is to draw the ring-finger inwards.

POSTERIOR AUR'IS, Retrahens auris.

POSTERIOR IN'DICIS MA'NŪS. An internal, interosseous muscle, which arises from the inner or ulnar side of the metacarpal bone of the fore-finger, and is inserted into the inside of the tendon on the back of the forefinger. Its use is to draw the forefinger inwards.

POSTERIOR IN'DICIS PE'DIS, Abduc'tor In'dicis Pe'dis. An external, interosseous muscle, which arises from the contiguous sides of the metatarsal bones of the foretoe, and second of the small toes, and is inserted into the outside of the root of the first bone of the foretoe. Its use is to pull the foretoe outwards.

POSTERIOR ME'DII DIG'ITI MA'NŪS. An external, interosseous muscle, which arises from the corresponding sides of the metacarpal bones of the middle and ring-fingers; and is inserted into the inside of the tendon on the back of the middle finger. Its use is to draw the middle finger inwards.

POSTERIOR ME'DII DIG'ITI PE'DIS, Abduc'tor

me'dii dig'iti pe'dis. An external, interosseous muscle, which originates from the contiguous sides of the metatarsal bones of the second and third of the small toes, and is inserted into the outside of the root of the first bone of the second of the small toes. Its use is to pull the toe outwards.

POSTERIOR TER'TII DIG'ITI, Adduc'tor ter'tii dig'iti. An external, interosseous muscle, which arises from the contiguous sides of the metatarsal bones of the third and fourth of the small toes, and is inserted into the outside of the root of the first bone of the third of the small toes. Its use is to pull the toe outwards.

Postfron'tal, (post, and frons, gen. frontis, 'frontal bone.') A distinct bone, temporary in birds, permanent in reptiles, extending downwards from the postero-external part of the frontal bone.

Postgle'noid (post, and glenoid) Proc'ess. The tubercle in front of the outer part of the fissura Glaseri. It is much more largely developed in some of the other mammals.

Post'hē, (ποσθη,) Penis, Prepuce.

Posthet'omist, Posthet'omus, (ποσθη, 'prepuce,' and τομη, 'incision.') One who performs the operation of circumcision.

Posthet'omy, Circumcision.

Pos'thia, (ποσθια,) Hordeolum.

Posthioplas'tic, Posthioplas'ticus, Posthoplas'tic, Posthoplas'ticus, (posthium, and πλασσω, 'I form.') An epithet applied to the operation for restoring the prepuce.

Posthi'tis, Acrobysti'tis, Acroposthi'tis, Epagogi'tis, (from ποσθη, 'prepuce,' and itis.) Inflammation of the prepuce.

Pos'thium, (ποσθιον,) Penis, Prepuce.

Posthocalyp'tron, (ποσθη, 'penis,' and καλυπτρα, 'a covering,') Condom.

Posthon'cus, (posthe, and ογκος, 'a tumor.') Swelling of the prepuce or penis.

Posthoplas'tic, Posthioplastic.

Post'humous, (post, 'after,' and humus, 'the ground.') Occurring after death.

POST'HEMOUS CHILD. One born after the death of its father, or taken from the dead body of its mother, as by the Cæsarean section.

Pos'time, (imposthume,) Abscess.

Postmor'tem, 'after death,'—as 'a postmortem or necroscopic examination.'

Postna'tus, 'born after.' In the old law writers, the second son.

Postpar'tum, 'after delivery,'—as 'postpartum hemorrhage.'

Postpharynge'al. Behind the pharynx, as Postpharyngeal ab'scess, an abscess seated in the areolar tissue behind the pharynx.

Postposit'io, (post, 'after,' and ponere, positum, 'to place,' 'a postponement.') Delay in the return of a paroxysm. It is opposed to anticipatio, which means the return of a paroxysm earlier than its accustomed hour.

In this sense, we speak of an anticipating, and a postponing, intermittent (Febris hysteret'ica).

Postsphe'noid Bone. The posterior portion of the sphenoid bone in infancy has received this distinctive name. It includes the sella Turcica and great wings. In animals, this division of the sphenoid sometimes persists through life.

Pos'tural, Postura'lis, (from ponere, positum, 'to place,') Relating or appertaining to posture or position,—as 'postural treatment,' the treatment by position—of a fractured limb, for example.

Pos'tural Respira'tion, see Ready method.

Postzygapoph'ysis, (post, ζυγος, 'a yoke,' and αποφύσις, 'a process,') The inferior articular processes of the vertebrae, two to each dorsal vertebra. The superior articular processes, also two in number, are called the prezygapoph'yses.

Po'table, Potab'ilis, (potare, 'to drink,' and habilis, 'able,') Pot'inos, Po'tos, Pos'inos, 'drinkable.' Water is said to be potable when it contains atmospheric air, is not brackish, and has no mineral impregnation of consequence.

Potage, (from [L.] potus, 'drink,') see Broth.

Potager, Lachanon.

Potamop'ya, (ποταμος, 'a river,' and πυρ, 'fever,') Elodes (febris).

Pot'ash. So called from the pots or vessels in which it was made—Veg'etable al'kali, Gastri-num. Also, Potass, (F.) Potasse.

POT'ASH OF COM'MERCE, Potas'sa impu'ra, Impure potas'sa, Al'umen cati'um, Cin'eres Rus'sici, Subcarbo'nas potas'sæ impu'rus, Potas'sæ carbo'nas impu'rus seu impu'ra, Lixi'vus ci'nis, the Pearlash of commerce, is prepared from the ashes of land-plants by calcination, solution in water, filtration, and evaporation. It usually consists of subcarbonate of potassa, sulphate of potassa, chloride of potassium, silex, oxide of iron, &c.

From the ashes of lees of wine, and from vine-twigs, a much purer alkali is obtained. It is called Ci'nis infecto'rius seu fæcum, Cin'eres clavella'ti seu gravella'ti, Alu'men fæcum, (F.) Cendres gravelées ou de sarment.

Another variety of the alkali is afforded by burning argol in a crucible, afterwards powdering and calcining it till it is nearly white, then dissolving in water, filtering, and evaporating. It is called Salt of Tar'tar, Sal tar'tari, Ka'li præparatum e tar'taro, K. e tar'taro, Subcarbo'nas potas'sæ puris'simus, Potas'sæ subcarbo'nas e tar'taro. Lastly, when wormwood is burnt to ashes, dissolved in water, filtered, and evaporated to dryness, it affords another variety of vegetable alkali, the Sal absinthii or Salt of wormwood.

Impure potash is used for preparing the subcarbonate for medical use.

POT'ASH WATER, Liquor potassæ effervescens.

Pot'ass, Potassa, Potassa fusa, Potash. The protoxide of potassium.

Potas'sa, Potassa fusa—p. Acetate of, Potas'sæ acetas—p. Azotate of, Potas'sæ nitras—p. Bichromate of, Potas'sæ bichromas—p. Bisulphate of, Potas'sæ supersulphas—p. POTAS'SA CUM CAL'CE, P. o'pō cal'cis para'ta et ignē fu'sa, Potas'sa caustica cum cal'cē, Potas'sa with lime, Calx cum ka'li pu'ro, Caus'ticum commu'nē fortius, La'pis inferna'lis sive sep'ticus, Ka'li caus'ticum cum cal'cē, La'pis causticus, (F.) Potasse préparée avec la chaux, Potasse Caustique à la chaux, Pierre caustique. (Potas'sæ, Calcis, ũā 3j. Rub together, and keep in a well-stopped bottle. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used for the same purposes as the next, but more manageable, being less deliquescent.

POTAS'SA, EUCHLO'RATE OF, Potas'sæ murias hyperoxygenatus—p. Ferrocyanate of, Potassii ferro-cyanuretum—p. Ferroprussiate of, Potas'sæ cyanuretum.

POTAS'SA FU'SA, Potas'sa, (Ph. U. S.,) P. Caus'tica, (Ph. POTASSÆ ACETAS, Potassii Acetas, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Oxytar'tarus, Acetas ka'li seu lixivie seu ka'licum, Al'kali tar'tari aceto saturatum, A. vegetabilē cum aceto, Magiste'rium tar'tari pur'gans, Ter'ra folia'ta tar'tari, Ka'li aceta'tum, Sal diure'ticus seu Sennier'ti, Arca'num tar'tari, Ac'etate of potassa, Acetate of potassium, (F.) Acétate de potasse, Terre foliée de tartre. (Acid. acetic, Oj., Potassæ bicarbon., q. s. Add, by degrees, enough acetic acid to neutralize the alkali, then filter and evaporate cautiously, by means of a sand-bath, until a dry salt remains. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is cathartic and diuretic. Dose, $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{i}$. to $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{ij}$, or more.

POTASSÆ ET ALU'MINÆ SUL'PHAS, Alumen — p. Azotas, Potassæ nitras — p. Biantimonias, Antimonium diaphoreticum — p. Bicarbons, Potassæ carbonas.

POTASSÆ BICHO'MAS, Potassii Bichro'mas, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Ka'li chro'micum ru'brum seu ac'idum seu bichro'micum, Bichro'mate of potassa, Bichro'mate of potassium. (Procured by adding sulphuric, nitric, or acetic acid to a solution of the neutral chromate, and setting it aside to crystallize.) It is a violent irritant poison; and has been used as a caustic in cases of morbid growths, in the proportion of from half a drachm to a drachm of the salt to from an ounce to an ounce and a half of water.

POTASSÆ BISUL'PHAS, P. supersulphas — p. Bitartar, P. supertartar.

POTASSÆ CARBO'NAS, Ka'li aëra'tum, Bicarbo'nas potassæ, Potassæ bicarbo'nas, (Ph. U. S., 1863, Ph. B., 1867,) Potassii bicarbo'nas, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Deutocarbo'nas potassii, Car'bonate, bicar'bonate, or supercar'bonate of potassa, Bicar'bonate of potassium, (F.) Carbonate de potasse saturé.

This is not caustic, like the subcarbonate of potassa, and hence has been preferred to relieve acidity. (Potass. carbon., Ibid., Aque destillat., Ox. Dissolve and pass carbonic acid through the solution until it is saturated, and filter. Evaporate at a heat not exceeding 160°, pour off the liquid, and dry the crystals on bibulous paper. Carbonic acid is obtained from marble by the addition of dilute sulphuric acid. Ph. U. S.) Dose, gr. x. to $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{ss}$. It is used in forming the soda powders, as well as for its antacid properties.

Distillers and brewers prepare this salt with great facility by suspending a solution of the purified carbonate of potassa in the fermenting tun. The alkaline salt is thus surrounded by an atmosphere of carbonic acid; and by absorbing it, it crystallizes into bicarbonate. The salt in powder is called sal aëra'tus. Its composition is between that of a carbonate and of a bicarbonate.

POTASSÆ CHRO'MAS, Ka'li chro'micum fla'rum seu neutra'le, Neu'tral yel'low chro'mate or mono-chro'mate of potassa. (Prepared by igniting a mixture of four parts of native chromite of iron—chrome iron ore—and one part of nitre; dissolving out the chromate of potassa by water, and crystallizing.) It has been used as an emetic, expectorant, and diaphoretic. Dose, as an emetic, from two to four grains; as an expectorant, from $\frac{1}{4}$ th to $\frac{1}{2}$ grain. In the proportion of one drachm to 32 ounces of water, it has been used as an antiseptic wash—called by Jacobson Liquor conservatrix.

POTASSÆ CI'TRAS, Potassii Ci'tras, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Cit'rate of potassa, Cit'rate of potassium. (Acid. citric., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{x}$, Potass. bicarb., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{xiv}$, Aque, q. s. Dissolve the acid in Oj. water, with the aid of a gentle heat, add the bicarbonate of potassium gradually, and, after effervescence has ceased, filter and evaporate to dryness. The salt is deliquescent, and must be kept in well-stopped bottles. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It possesses the refrigerant properties of the neutral salts, and may be given in fever when to do little or nothing is the most advisable course. Dose, gr. x. to $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{ss}$.

POTASSÆ ET FER'RI TAR'TRAS, Ferri tartarizatum — p. Hydras, Potassa fusa.

POTASSÆ HYDRIODAS, Potassii protohy'driodas, Potassii protox'idi hydriodas, Ka'li hydriodin'icum seu hydriod'icum, Hydriodas ka'licus, Hydriodate of potassa, (F.) Hydriodate de potasse. If a solution of potassa be poured on iodine, an iodate and hydriodate are formed. These may be separated by means of alcohol, which only dissolves the latter of these salts. The hydriodate, or rather the Iodide of potassium, Ka'lium ioda'tum, Potassii iodure'tum seu io'didum, (F.) Iodure de potassium, may be obtained by evaporation. When the Iodide of potassium is dissolved in water, it becomes the Hydriodate of potassa. The following is the formula in the Ph. U. S.: Potass., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{xv}$, Iodin. in pulv., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{xvj}$, vel q. s., Carbon. ligni in pulv. subtil., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{ij}$, Aque destillat., q. s. Dissolve the potassa in the water; add the iodine gradually, stirring until the solution becomes colorless; and continue the additions until the liquid remains slightly colored from excess of iodine. Evaporate to dryness, stirring in the charcoal towards the close. Rub to powder, and heat to dull redness in an iron crucible, keeping up the temperature for fifteen minutes. When cool, dissolve out the saline matter with distilled water, filter the solution, evaporate and set aside to crystallize. By evaporating and crystallizing as before, an additional quantity of crystals may be obtained.) Virtues,—those of iodine. Dose, gr. ij.—x.

POTASSÆ IODAS, Iodate of Potassa. This salt, prepared by the action of iodine on chlorate of potassa, has been proposed as a substitute for the latter in affections of the mucous membrane of the mouth and fauces.

POTASSÆ MURIAS, Potassii chloridum, Sal digestivus seu febrifugus Syl'vii, Spiritus salis mari'ni coagulatus, Muriate of Potassa, Chloride of potassium, (F.) Chlorure de Potassium. Bitter and refrigerant.

POTASSÆ MURIAS HYPEROXYGENATUS, Potassæ chloras, (Ph. B., 1867,) P. oxymurias, Potassii chloras, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Oxymuriate, Hyperoxyguriate, Chlorate or Euchlorate of potassa, Chlorate of potassium, Protochlorate of potassium, Al'cali vegetabilē salitō-dephlogistica'tum, Chlorure'tum potassæ oxyda'tum, Halo'dum oxygena'tum, Oxyg'enchlorure'tum potassii, Ka'li chloricū, Chloras ka'licus depura'tus, (F.) Chlorate de potasse. (It may be prepared by passing chlorine gas into a solution of potassa or carbonate of potassa, evaporating and crystallizing. Chloride of potassium is less soluble, and remains in the mother-water. A more complex form for its preparation is given in Ph. B., 1867.) It has been regarded as antineuropathic, and as an alterative purifier of the blood and humors. It is of doubtful efficacy. Dose, 3 to 6 grains or more.

POTASSÆ NITRAS, Potassii nitras, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) P. azotas, Nitrate or Azotate of Potassa, Nitrum, N. prismat'icum, Sal nitrum, Nitre, Salpêtre, Sal petra, Salse'do mu'crum, Sanguin'ea, Berenic'ium, Halini'trum, Protonitrate of potassium, Nitrate of protoxide of potassium, Nitrate of potassium, Ka'li nitricum, Nitras ka'licus seu lixiv'ie, Azotas potassicus, (F.) Nitrate ou Azotate de potasse. (Obtained from the putrefaction of animal matters, in contact with calcareous or alkaline earths, by elixivation; adding, if necessary, woodashes to supply the alkaline basis. It is formed, in an impure state, by nature, in warm climates.)

It is diuretic and refrigerant, and, in large doses, purgative; externally, cooling and detergent. Dose, gr. x. to ʒj. In large doses it is an acrid poison. Paper impregnated with nitre,—(F.) Papier nitré,—and burnt in the chamber, has occasionally afforded relief in asthma. Nitrous powder is a combination of nitre with calomel and tartar emetic.

POTASSÆ NITRAS FU'SUS SULPHA'TIS PAUCILO MIXTUS, Sal prunellæ, Crystal'lus minera'lis, Nitras potassæ cum sulphurē fu'sus, Nitrum tabula'tum, La'pis prunellæ, Anodynū minera'te, Sorethroat salt, Mineral crys'tal, (F.) Sel de Prunelle. Nitrate of potassa, mixed with a little sulphate of potassa, and run into moulds. Its properties are those of nitre.

POTASSÆ OXALAS, Ox'alas acid'ulum potassæ seu Potassæ acid'ulus seu ba'sicus, Superox'alas ka'licum seu potassæ, Hyperox'alas potassæ, Sal acetocell'æ, Oxal'ium, Ka'li oxal'icum acid'ulum, Ox'alas subpotassicus, Superox'alate of protoxide of potassium, Ox'alate of potassa, Salt of Sorrel, (F.) Sel d'oseille, Sel à détacher. Prepared from the juice of wood sorrel. It is refrigerant, and is used to make lemonade, &c. A mixture of two parts of salt of sorrel with one part of cream of tartar bears the name of Salt of lemons.

POTASSÆ OXALAS ACID'ULUM, Potassa, oxalate of—p. Oxymurias, P. murias hyperoxygenatus.

POTASSÆ PERCHLO'RAS, Perchlorate of potassa. This salt has been employed in intermittents, &c., as an antiperiodic, sedative, and diuretic, but it is little known.

POTASSÆ PERMAN'GANAS, Potassii perman'ganas, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Kali hypermangan'icum, Permangan'etum potassæ, Perman'ganate of potassa, Hyperman'ganate of potassa, Perman'ganate of potassium, (F.) Permanganate de potasse. (May be made by mixing equal parts of deutoxide of manganese and chlorate of potassa with rather more than an equal part of caustic potassa, dissolving in a little water, evaporating to dryness and exposing to a temperature just short of redness. By hot water a solution is obtained, which on evaporation crystallizes. A form for its preparation is contained in Ph. B., 1867.) This salt has been given in cases of diabetes. Dose, from gr. ij. to gr. v., three times a day. It has been prescribed, also, in obstinate dyspepsia. Its external applications are, however, far more important. It has been highly recommended as a caustic, less painful and of more intense action than others; for this purpose the powder is made into a paste with water. As an antiseptic and escharotic combined, in the quantity of 20 grains to the pint of water, it, as well as manganic acid, has been used as a wash to cancerous, gangrenous, diphtheritic, and other ulcers. It has been extensively employed in hospital gangrene, and in various strengths, from one grain to ten grains to the fluidounce, as a disinfectant.

Liquor Potassæ Permangan'atis, Li'quor Potassii Permangan'atis, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Solution of Perman'ganate of Potash, Solution of Perman'ganate of Potassium, (64 grains of the perman'ganate to Oj. of distilled water,) is officinal. See Condy's disinfecting fluid, which is double the strength of this.

POTASSÆ PHOS'PHAS, Phosphate of Potassa. A white amorphous salt, which has been given as an alterative in scrofula and phthisis.

POTASSÆ PICRAS, P. Carbazotas, Picrate or Carbazotate of Potassa: (obtained by neutralizing picric acid with potassa.) It has been used as an antiperiodic. Dose, two to five grains.

POTASSÆ PROTOHYDRIODAS, P. hydriodas—p. prussias flava, Potassii ferrocyanure'tum—p. Puræ fusæ hydras, Potassa fusa—p. et Sodæ tartras, Soda, tartrate of.

POTASSÆ SUBCARBO'NAS, P. Carbo'nas, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Potassii Carbo'nas, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) P. carbo'nas e Lixiv'o Cin'erē, Subcarbo'nas Ka'li, Carbo'nas Potassæ, Ka'li præpara'tum, Sal Herbarum seu Planta'rum seu Tar'tari seu Absin'thii, Calcareous Tar'tar, Carbonate of Potassium, Carbonate, Subcarbonate or Meph'ite of Potassa, &c. (See Potash.) A filtered solution of the impure subcarbonate, Potassæ Carbo'nas Impu'ra, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Potassii Carbo'nas Impu'ra, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Pearlash (see Potash), evaporated to dryness. This deliquescent salt is given in the same cases as the potassæ carbonas, than which it is more caustic and disagreeable.

The Parisian Codex had a Subcarbo'nas Potassæ ex tar'taro combus'to, vulgo Sal Tar'tari or Salt of Tar'tar;—it is the Potassæ Carbo'nas purus seu pu'ra, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Potassii Carbo'nas pu'ra, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Pure Carbonate of Potassium, a Subcarbo'nas Potassæ ex deflagran'tibus si'mul tartra'te acid'ulo et Nitra'te Potassæ para'tus, vulgo Nitrum ex tar'taro fix'um; and a Subcarbo'nas potassæ ex deflagran'te cum Carbo'nibus Nitra'te Potassæ paratus, vulgo Nitrum fix'um. They are all used like the preceding.

POTASSÆ SUBCARBO'NAS IMPU'RUS, Potash of commerce.

POTASSÆ SUL'PHAS, Potassii Sul'phas, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Ka'li vitriola'tum seu sulphu'ricum, Sul'phas Ka'li, Lixiv'ia vitriola'ta, Nitrum vitriola'tum Schroederi, Sal Sapien'tiæ seu Tar'tari sulphura'tum seu Polychres'tus, Specificum Paracelsi, Spi'ritus vitrioli coagula'tus Mynsich'ti, Al'cali vegetabilē vitriola'tum, Sal de duo'bus, Arca'num duplica'tum, Tar'tarum vitriolatum, Panacea Du'cis Holsa'tiæ seu duplica'ta, Sul- phate of Potassa, Sulphate of Potassium, (F.) Sulfate de potasse. (The salt that remains after the distillation of nitric acid, dissolved; the excess of acid saturated with subcarbonate of potassa and crystallized.) Purgative and diuretic. Dose, \mathfrak{zss} . to \mathfrak{zj} . as a laxative. In a large dose it has proved an irritant poison.

POTASSÆ SULPHAS CUM SULPHURE, Sal Poly-chrestus Glaseri, Lixivia Vitriolata Sulphurea. (Formed by deflagrating nitrate of potassa with sublimed sulphur.) Same virtues as the last. Dose, gr. xv. to xxx.

POTASSÆ SULPHIS, Potassii sulphis—p. Sulphuretum, Potassii sulphuretum—p. Superoxalas, Potassæ oxalas.

POTASSÆ SUPERSULPHAS, P. Bisulphas, Sal enixum seu febrifugus of Lemery, Supersulphate of Potassa, Acid Sulphate or Bisulphate of Potassa, Superprotosulphate of Potassium, (F.) Bisulfate de Potasse. (The salt remaining after the distillation of nitric acid, dissolved, strained, and crystallized.) It is refrigerant and purgative. Dose, \mathfrak{zss} . to \mathfrak{zj} .

POTASSÆ SUPERTARTRAS, P. hypertartaras, P. Bitartaras, Potassii Bitartaras (Ph. U. S., 1873) seu Tartaras acida, Bitartate of Potassium, Crystalli Tartari, Tartaras Acidulus Potassæ purus, T. superpotassicus, T. subpotassicus, Supertartate of Protoxide of Potassium, Bitartate or Supertartate of Potassa, Crystals of Tartar, Cremor Tartari, Cream of Tartar (when in powder), Supertartate of Potassa, (F.) Tartrate acide de potasse, Crème de Tartre. (The tartar of wine, purified.) It requires 60 parts of water at 60° to dissolve it. It is mildly purgative, refrigerant and diuretic. Dissolved in water, with a small quantity of white wine, some sugar and lemonpeel, it forms an agreeable beverage in febrile diseases, under the name of Imperial. When two drachms of cream of tartar are added to a pint of milk, it constitutes cream of tartar whey. Dose, as a diuretic, \mathfrak{zj} . to \mathfrak{zij} .; as a purgative, \mathfrak{zss} . to \mathfrak{zj} . The French Codex (1866) has also a Crème de Tartre soluble, Tartrate Borico-potassique.

POTASSÆ SUPERTARTRAS IMPURUS, Tartarus crudus, Tartarum, La'pis vi'ni, Magneti'nus, Pedagra, Tartar, (F.) Tartre cru ou brut. It is called, also, Tartarum rubrum and Red Ar'gol, when obtained from red wines; Tartarum album or White Ar'gol, when from white wines. Tartar is the saline deposit from wines as they become aged; which attaches itself to the sides of the casks and bottles in which they are kept. It consists of a considerable quantity of acidulous tartrate of potassa, tartrate of lime, silica, alumen, oxide of iron, manganese, and a red coloring matter, if the wine be red. It is chiefly used for the preparation of cream of tartar.

POTASSÆ TARTRAS, (Ph. B., 1867,) Potassii Tartras, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Ka'li tartarizatum, Al'cali fixum tartarizatum, Tartarum solubile, Tartarus tartarizatus, Lixivia Tartarizata, Sal Panchrestum, Tartaras Kalinus seu lixivie, Sal vegetabilis, Al'cali vegetabilis tartarizatum, Tartrate of Potassa, Soluble Tartar, (F.) Tartrate de Potasse. (Potassæ carbon. pur., \mathfrak{zxxj} ., Potassæ Bitartarat. in pulv. subtil., \mathfrak{zxxxvj} ., vel. q. s., Aque bullientis, Oviij. Dissolve the carbonate in the water, gradually add the bitartrate until neutralized, and boil; filter, evaporate till a pellicle forms, and set aside to crystallize. Pour off the mother-water; dry the crystals on bibulous paper, and keep in well-stopped bottles. Ph. U. S., 1873.) A saline cathartic in the dose of \mathfrak{zj} . to \mathfrak{zij} .

POTASSÆ TARTRAS ACIDI, P. supertartaras—p. Tartaras acidulus purus, P. supertartaras—p. Tartaras stibialis seu stibiosus, Antimonium tartarizatum.

POTASSII BROMIDUM, Potassæ hydrobromas, Bromide of potassium, (F.) Bromure de Potassium. (Bromin., \mathfrak{zij} ., Ferri filii, \mathfrak{zj} ., Potass. carbon. pur., \mathfrak{zij} . and \mathfrak{zj} ., Aq. destillat., Oiv. Add the iron and bromine to a pint and a half of the water; stirring frequently for half an hour. Apply a gentle heat, and when the liquid assumes a greenish color, add gradually the carbonate of potassium, dissolved in Ojss. of the water, until it ceases to produce a precipitate. Continue the heat for half an hour, and filter. Wash the precipitate with the remaining water boiling hot, and filter. Mix the liquid and crystallize by evaporation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) A colorless crystalline salt, soluble in water. It has the virtues of the iodide, with the characteristic action of the bromides, and is therefore employed in the treatment of epilepsy, hysteria, mania, venereal excitement, chordee, insomnia and restlessness, accompanied by, and dependent upon, nervous excitement. Large doses are said to occasion drowsiness, and to be antaphrodisiac. Dose, gr. v.—x., three times daily. See Bromine.

POTASSII CYANURETUM, P. Cyanidum, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Cyanuret of Potassium, Hydrocyanate of Potassa, (F.) Cyanure de Potassium, (Potassii ferrocyanid. exsiccant., \mathfrak{zviij} ., Potass. carbonat. exsiccant., \mathfrak{zij} .) Mix intimately, and throw into a deep iron crucible, heated to redness; keep up the heat till effervescence ceases, and a portion of the fused mass concretes, of a pure white color, upon a warm glass rod dipped into it; then pour the liquid carefully into a shallow dish to solidify, ceasing to pour before the salt becomes contaminated with the precipitated iron. Break up the mass while warm, and preserve in well-stopped bottles. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used in the same cases as the hydrocyanic acid. Dose, a quarter of a grain.

POTASSII DEUTOCARBO'NAS, Potassæ carbonas.

POTASSII FERROCYANURETUM, P. Ferrocyanidum, Potassæ Prussias Fla'va, Ferrocyanide or Ferrocyanuret of Potassium, Ferrocyanate or Ferroprussiate or Prussiate of Potassa, (F.) Protocyanure jaune de fer et de potassium, Cyanure de fer et de potassium. The yellow double cyanuret of potassium and iron, the salt from which the cyanuret of potassium is obtained by calcination. It is not much used in medicine. It has been advised as an astringent in the colliquative sweats of phthisis, in leucorrhœa, &c.; but it does not seem to be possessed of much activity. Dose, 10 or 15 grains every four or five hours.

POTASSII HYDRARGYROIDIDUM, Potassæ seu Potassii Podohydrargyras, Hydrargyrum bito-da'tum cum ka'lio ioda'to, Ka'lium ioda'tum hydrargyratum, Iodhydrargyrate or Hydrargyroidide of Potassium. (This salt is made by the combination of iodide of potassium with red iodide of mercury.) In fractional doses, its properties are similar to those of the iodides of mercury, but in a less degree.

POTASSII HYPOPHOSPHIS, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Potassæ Hypophosphis, Hypophosphite of Potassium, H. of Potassium. This salt is prepared by a method similar to that for hypophosphite of sodium and is similarly employed.

POTASSII IODIDUM, Potassæ hydriodas—p. Ioduretum, Potassæ hydriodas—p. Nitras, Potassæ nitras—p. Oxygenochloruretum, Potassæ murias hyperoxygenatus—p. Permanganas, Potassæ permanganas—p. POTASSII SULPHIS, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Potassæ Sulphis, Sulphite of Potassium, S. of Potash. A white soluble substance, whose dose and uses are the same as those of sulphite of sodium. See Sodii sulphis.

POTASSII SULPHOCYANURETUM seu SULPHOCYANIDUM, Sulphocyanuret of Potassium. This salt has been prepared as a substitute for hydrocyanic acid, and cyanuret of potassium, on the ground of its possessing their advantages without their inconveniences.

POTASSII SULPHURETUM, Potassæ Sulphuretum seu tersulphuretum, Potassæ sulphura'ta, Kali sulphuretum, He'par Sulphuris seu Kali'num, H. sulphuris salinum seu sulphuris vulgare, Sulphuretum lixivie seu kalicum, Lixiv' of Sulphur, Sulphuretof Potassa, Sulphurated potassa or potash, (F.) Sulfure de potasse, Sulfure de potassium sulfaté, Foie de Soufre. (Sulphur, 3j., Potassæ carb., 3ij. Rub them together, and place the mixture in a covered crucible upon the fire until completely melted.) It has been employed in affections of the chest, as an expectorant, in the dose of from ʒss. to ʒj., largely diluted; but is chiefly used as a bath or wash in cases of itch, tinea capitis, and other cutaneous affections.

POW'DER, VIEN'NA, Pulvis causticus cum cal'ce seu Vindobonen'sis; (composed of equal parts of Quicklime and Potassa.) In using it, it is made into a paste — Vien'na paste, Pasta caustica Viennensis, (F.) Caustique de Vienne, Pâte caustique de Vienne, Poudre de Vienne — with spirits of wine, and is applied on the diseased part, previously circumscribed by a hole cut in sticking plaster.

To be left on from 10 to 20 minutes, according to the depth of the eschar required. Used in cases of lupous ulceration.

By fusing the potassa and lime, and raising the heat so as to cause ebullition, the caustic may be run into cylinders: — when it is called Caustique-Filhos, Caus'ticum Viennens'se fu'sum Fil'hos, from the name of the author of the process.

POW'DERS, CASTIL'LOX or CASTIL'HON, so called from the name of the physician who first proposed them. They are formed of Sago, in powder, Salep, in powder, Tragacanth, in powder, each four parts, Prepared oystershells, one part, Cochineal, half a part, divided into powders of one drachm each; one of which is boiled in a pint of milk, and the decoction used ad libitum, as a demulcent in diarrhoea and dysentery. Dor-vault makes poudre de Castillon synonymous with arrowroot.

Præcur'sory, Præcurso'rius, Præmon'itory, Præmonito'rius, (F.) Prémonitoire, Præcurseur, (præ, and curro, cursum, 'I run,') That which precedes or foretells.

PRÆCUR'SORY or PRÆMON'ITORY SIGNS or SYMPTOMS, (F.) Signes précurseurs ou prémonitoires, S. avant-coureurs, are those which indicate an approaching disease.

Predialstolic or Predias'tolic, Prædiastol'icus, (præ, and diastole.) That which precedes the diastole of the heart,—as 'predialstolic friction sound.'

Predispo'nent or Predispo'sing Causes, see Causes, predisponent.

Predisposit'ion, Prædisposit'io, Semin'ia morbo'rum (Gaubius), (præ, and disponere, dispositum, 'to dispose,') (F.) Prédisposition, Imminence morbide. That constitution or condition of the body which disposes it to the action of disease under the application of an exciting cause. Thus, in hereditary diseases, the conformation is such that but a slight exciting cause may be required to produce them. When the disease arises solely from the predisposition, or under the additional influence of an extremely slight exciting cause, it is, by some, termed a disposition.

Predor'sal, Prædorsa'lis, (præ, and dorsum, 'the back,') That which is in front of the back.

PREDOR'SAL RE'GION of the vertebral column is the anterior surface of the dorsal region.

Pré-dorso-atloïdien, Longus colli.

Pré-dorso-cervical, Longus colli.

Præexist'ence of Germs, see Preformation.

Preforma'tion, Præforma'tio, (præ, 'before,' and formatio, 'the act of forming,') An ancient theory of generation, which maintained that the germs of every part exist, but not visibly, before fecundation, and that fecundation occasions their development. It was the doctrine of præexistence of germs.

Præfor'mative Mem'brane, Membrana præfor-mativa.

Preg'nancy, Pregna'tio, Pregna'tus, Impregna'tio, (from prægena'tio, præ, and genere, 'to beget,') Ingravida'tio, Hysterocye'sis, Gravid'itas, G. uteri'na, En'cymon, Cye'sis, Encye'sis, En'cysis, Encymo'sia, Cyophor'ia, Gesta'tion, Fæta'tion, Ingravida'tion, Gravid'ity, Utero-gesta'tion, (F.) Grossesse. The state of a female who has within her a fecundated germ, which gradually becomes developed in or out of the uterus. When placed in the cavity of the uterus, by virtue of the vital force by which it is animated, it becomes attached to the inner surface of that viscus, and obtains from it indirectly the nutriment necessary for its gradual development, during the space of ten lunar months or two hundred and eighty days—the ordinary term or duration of gestation, although the period may be protracted to three hundred days or upwards,—at the expiration of which parturition occurs. Pregnancy is commonly limited to a single foetus: at times, the uterus contains two or three. See Reproduction. Occasionally, one or two moles—the degenerated products of conception—alone occupy the uterus; at other times, a foetus likewise exists. In certain cases, and owing to accidental circumstances, the fecundated ovum remains in the ovarium, or is arrested in the Fallopian tube. Pregnancy has, accordingly, been distinguished into—1. Nat'ural or u'terine, when the foetus is carried in the cavity of the womb. 2. Preter-nat'ural or extrau'terine, Exfæta'tion, Concep'tio vitio'sa, Paracye'sis seu Écye'sis, Echthystero-cye'sis, Echthystero-cye'sis, Dysto'cia seu Dyscye'sis seu Gravid'itas extrau'terina, (F.) Grossesse contre nature,—when it occurs in the ovarium, tube, or cavity of the abdomen.

During pregnancy, the female experiences remarkable changes in the condition of her organs and functions. The genital apparatus is, of course, most affected. The uterus changes its shape, situation, size, and texture. The usual signs of pregnancy are,—suppression of the catamenia; the abdomen gradually enlarging, and forming a hard tumor; the umbilicus prominent in the latter months; the breasts increasing in size; the areola round the nipple becoming darker, and the follicles more developed; kyestein in the urine from an early period; a bluish tint of the vagina after the fourth week; about the fifth month, the evidence by ballotement, the placental souffle, and by the sound of the foetal heart heard on auscultation; the motion of the foetus perceptible, and the neck of the uterus diminishing in length at the advanced periods.

PREG'NANCY, ABDOM'INAL, Eccye'sis abdominalis, Cæliocye'sis, Gravid'itas abdominalis, (F.) Grossesse abdominale. That in which the ovum has escaped into the cavity of the abdomen.

PREG'NANCY, AFÆ'TAL, Preg'nancy without a foetus, (F.) Grossesse afatale ou sans foetus. Pregnancy produced by a false or degenerate conception, or any other affection, which has given place to unusual development of the uterus. Madame Boivin includes in this class, sarcophysteria, hydrohysteria, gazohysteria, and hematohysteria pregnancies.

PREG'NANCY, BIGEM'INAL, (F.) Grossesse bigéminal ou gémellaire, Double pregnancy. Pregnancy in which there are twins in utero. (Madame Boivin.)

PREG'NANCY, COM'PLEX, (F.) Grossesse complexe, G. inter-extra-utérine, is when the womb, besides a foetus, contains much water, hydatids, a mole, &c.

PREG'NANCY, COM'POUND, Polybreph'ia, Polycye'sia, Polycye'sis, (F.) Grossesse composée, is when there are two or three foetuses in the cavity of the uterus.

PREG'NANCY, DOUB'LE, Pregnancy, bigeminal—p. Duration of, see Pregnancy—p. Extrauterine, see Pregnancy.

PREG'NANCY, FALSE, Gravid'itas spu'ria, (F.) Grossesse fausse ou apparente, Pseudocye'sis. Authors have thus called different affections of a more or less serious character which resemble pregnancy; so as, at times, to impose upon the best informed practitioners. These diseases may be seated in the uterus or its dependencies, in the intestines or some other part of the abdomen. They may be;—a mole, hydatids, water, blood, or polypus distending the parietes of the uterus;—chronic enlargement of the uterus;—development of tumors, &c., in its substance;—scirrhus; dropsy of the ovary; ascites; tympanites, &c.

PREG'NANCY, FÆ'TAL, (F.) Grossesse fœtale. Pregnancy in which there is a foetus, or more than one, in the uterus or out of it. Madame Boivin puts in this class—the solitary, bigeminal, trigeminal, and sarcophatal pregnancies, which form the first order; and the tubal, ovarian, and abdominal, which constitute the second.

PREG'NANCY, GAZOHYSTER'IC, (F.) Grossesse Gazo-hystérique. A foetal pregnancy, caused by development of air or gas in the cavity of the womb. (Madame Boivin.)

PREG'NANCY, HÆ'MATOHYSTER'IC, (F.) Grossesse hémato-hystérique. A foetal pregnancy, caused by accumulation of blood in the uterus. (Madame Boivin.)

PREG'NANCY, HYDROHYSTER'IC, (F.) Grossesse hydro-hystérique. A foetal pregnancy, occasioned by the secretion and accumulation of serous fluid in the uterus.

PREG'NANCY, INTERMU'RAL, p. interstitial.

PREG'NANCY, INTERSTIT'IAL, Gravid'itas in uteri substan'tiâ seu interstitia'lis seu intermura'lis, Intermu'ral pregnancy or fœta'tion. The development of the embryo in the proper substance of the uterus. The case generally terminates fatally at an early period of gestation; the thin external paries of the uterus being ruptured, and the ovum passing into the abdominal cavity.

PREG'NANCY, MOLE, see Mole.

PREG'NANCY, MOR'RID, Paracye'sis, Dysto'cia, Dyscye'sis. The progress of pregnancy disturbed or endangered by the supervention of general or local disorder.

PREG'NANCY, OVA'RIAN, Eccye'sis ova'ria, Oöriocye'sis, Oöcye'sis, Gravid'itas uteri seu extra- uteri'na in ova'rio, (F.) Grossesse ovarienne ou de l'ovaire. Pregnancy in which the foetus is developed in the interior of the ovary.

PREG'NANCY, PLEA OF. A plea which a woman, capitally convicted, may set up in arrest of execution until she is delivered. See Jury of matrons, and De ventre inspiciedo.

PREG'NANCY, PRETEND'ED. The criminal act of a female, who, not having been delivered, presents an infant as having been born of her, (F.) Supposition de part. This term, in French, likewise includes the case of a female, who, having been delivered of a dead child, substitutes for it a living child which is not hers.

PREG'NANCY, SARCOFÆ'TAL, (F.) Grossesse sarco-fœtale. Pregnancy in which there are one or more foetuses, and one or more moles. (Madame Boivin.)

PREG'NANCY, SARCOHYSTER'IC, (F.) Grossesse sarco-hystérique. A foetal pregnancy formed by moles, hydatids, or a false conception. (Madame Boivin.)

PREG'NANCY, SOL'ITARY, (F.) Grossesse solitaire ou simple. Pregnancy in which there is a single foetus. (Madame Boivin.)

PREG'NANCY, TRIGEM'INAL, (F.) Grossesse trigéminal ou triple. Pregnancy in which there are three foetuses in the cavity of the uterus. (Madame Boivin.)

PREG'NANCY, TU'BAL, Eccye'sis tuba'lis, Gravid'itas tuba'ria, (F.) Grossesse tubaire. Pregnancy where the foetus remains and is developed in the Fallopian tube.

PREG'NANCY, U'TERINE, see Pregnancy.

PREG'NANCY, UTEROABDOM'INAL, (F.) Grossesse utéro-abdominale. Pregnancy consisting of two foetuses; one in the uterus, the other in the abdominal cavity. (Madame Boivin.)

PREG'NANCY, UTEROÖVA'RIAL, (F.) Grossesse utéro-ovarienne. Pregnancy with two foetuses; one in the womb, the other in the ovary.

PREG'NANCY, UTEROTU'BAL, (F.) Grossesse utéro-tubaire. Pregnancy in which there is at the same time a foetus in the womb and another in the Fallopian tube.

Preg'nant, Preg'nans, Preg'nas, Preg'nax, Fœ'tus, Fœ'tus, Encar'pus, Grav'ida, Ple'na mul'lier, Incinc'ta, Grav'id, Breed'ing, (old Eng.) Beal'ing, (F.) Enceinte. One in a state of pregnancy;—one with child.

Prehen'sio, (prehendere, prehensum, 'to lay hold of,') Prehension, Catalepsy, Epilepsy.

Prehen'sion, Prehen'sio. The act of laying hold of.

PREHEN'SION OF FOOD is the act of seizing and carrying it to the mouth, and introducing it into that cavity. It is, also, called Assump'tio, Proslep'sis, Pros'phora.

Prêle, ([L.] asparello, 'rough,'—the stalk,) Hippuris vulgaris.

Prelum'bar, Prelumba'ris, (F.) Prélombaire, (præ, and lumbi, 'the loins,') That which is placed before the loins. The prelumbar surface of the spinal column is the anterior surface of the lumbar portion.

Premaxill'la, Premaxillary bone.

Premax'illary Bone, Premaxill'la. The intermaxillary bone of the mammalia (except man) has sometimes received this name. See Intermaxillary.

Premières Voies, 'first passages,' Primæ viæ.

Premo'lar, (præ, and molares,) see Molar teeth.

Premon'itory, (præ, and moneo, 'I admon-ish,') see Precursory.

Premorph'ism, Premorphis'mus, (præ, and poppos, 'I shape.') The aggregate of laws by which a new formation is developed from the primordial cell.

Prenan'thes, (πρηνανθης, 'bending downward,' and ανθος, 'a flower,') Gall of the Earth, Dewitt Snake-root, Lion's Foot. There are many species of this indigenous plant, whose root and milky juice are very bitter. They are used in popular practice in dysentery; and in the form of cataplasm to bites of serpents.

PRENANTHES AL'BA, Nabalus albus—p. Serpentaria, Nabalus albus.

Prendre Inscription, 'to take inscription,' see Matriculate.

Preöpercu'lum, (pre, and operculum.) A part of the squamous portion of the temporal bone which, as it descends from the cranium, in bony fishes, becomes merely a part of the gill-cover flap.

Préparate (Veine), see Facial vein.

Prepara'tion, Præparatio, (præ, and parare, paratum, 'to get ready,') The act of making ready any substance whatever that has to be employed for any purpose.

Also, the product of any pharmaceutical operation;—Præparatum.

Any part of a body, preserved for the use of the anatomist, or others, is so called.

Prepu'ce, Præputium, Epago'gium, Pos'thë, Pel'la, Pos'thium, Pu'tium, Acropos'thia, Acrobys'tia, Fore'skin, (said to be from præ, and puto, 'I cut off,' or from puteo, 'I smell,' or from præ, and putendum; but, most probably, from πρῶ, or præ, and κοδῖον, 'penis,') The prolongation of the integuments of the penis, which covers the glans. The prepuce is composed of two membranous layers: one external or cutaneous; the other internal or mucous, separated by areolar membrane. The mucous membrane lines the inner surface of the cutaneous layer till beyond the glans, when it is reflected over the latter; forming, behind the corona, a small cul-de-sac, above the corpora cavernosa, which is interrupted by a triangular duplication of the mucous membrane, called the frænum, fixed in the furrow at the inferior part of the glans, and terminating at a little distance from the orifice of the urethra. The clitoris is covered by a semilunar fold formed by a continuation of the skin of the labia. It is called Præputium clitoris.

PREPU'CE OF CLIT'ORIS, see Prepuce and Clitoris.

Prepu'tial, Præputia'lis. Belonging or relating to the prepuce;—as the 'preputial secretion,'—or that which takes place from the lining of the prepuce covering the glans.

Prærectal, Prærecta'lis, (præ, and rectum.) A term applied to that which is in front of the rectum; as prærectal lithotomy, Nélaton's modification of the bilateral operation, a careful dissection being made in front of the rectum, so as to open the urethra at the apex of the prostate, without coming in contact with the bulb.

Prérotulien, see Bourse.

Presbyodochi'um, (πρεσβυς, 'old,' and δεχομαι, 'I receive,') Gerocomium.

Presbyon'osi, (πρεσβυς, 'old,' and νοσος, 'disease,') Disease of old age.

Pres'byope, Presby'tes, (F.) Presbyte, (πρεσβυς, 'old,' and ὤψ, 'the eye,') One who is longsighted or affected with presbyopia.

Presbyo'pia, Presby'tia.

Presbyop'ic, Presbyo'picus, Presbyt'ic, Presby'ticus, (F.) Presbytique. Relating or belonging to presbyopia or longsightedness.

Presbysphac'elus, (πρεσβυς, 'old,' and σφάκελος,) Gangrene of old people.

Presby'tia, Presbyo'pia, Telora'sis, Amblyo'pia proximo'rum, Vi'sus sen'ilis seu longior, Pres'byopy, (F.) Vue longue, Presby'tie, (from πρεσβυτης,

'an old person,') A very high degree is termed Hyperpresby'tia. A condition of vision, common in old persons, which consists in the circumstance of near objects being confusedly seen, while those at a greater distance are clearly distinguished. It is supposed to depend generally on diminution of the convexity of the cornea; whence results an alteration in the convergency of the rays, so that they form a focus behind the retina. This defect is remedied by the use of convex glasses, which augment the convergence of the luminous rays. It is, also, called Long'sightedness, Far'sightedness, Parop'sis longin'qua, Dys'o'pia proximo'rum.

The term Presbyopia is limited by Donders to the condition in which—as the result of increase of years—the range of accommodation is diminished, and the vision of near objects interfered with. See Hypermetropia.

Presbyt'ic, Presbyopic.

Prescrip'tion, Præscriptio, (præ, and scribere, scriptum, 'to write,') Anag'raphë, For'mula, F. med'ica, Sched'ula, Impe'rium, Præscriptum, Præscriptio med'ica, Receptum, Recep'ta, Rec'ipe, Receipt, (F.) Formule, Ordonnance, Recette. The formula which the physician writes for the composition of medicines adapted to any case of disease. A prescription should be as simple as possible, and should bear upon its face the evidence of the objects to be fulfilled by it. No article should form part of it, unless adapted for serving some useful purpose. A compound prescription has been divided into four parts:—the basis, or principal ingredient of the prescription; the adjuvans, or that which is designed to promote the action of the former; the corrigens, or that intended to correct its operation, or obviate any unpleasant symptom which it may be apt to produce; and the constit'uens, excip'iens or vehic'u-lum, constit'uent, excip'ient or ve'hicle, the substance which gives to the other ingredients consistence or form. All these are seen in the following formula for cathartic pills:

R—Aloës.....ʒj.....Basis.
Hydrarg. Chlorid. Mit....gr. x.....Adjuvans.
Olei Carui.....gtt. v.....Corrigens.
Syrupi.....q. s.....Constituens.
M. et fiant pilulæ xx.

It is obvious, however, that most prescriptions are more simple than this. The basis, for example, may require neither adjuvant, corrigent, nor constituent. See Symbol.

The doctrine of medicinal combination is termed Iamatotaxiolog'ia, Iamatosyntaxiolog'ia, Ar's form'ulas med'icas concinnan'di.

The vocabulary in the author's "Medical Student," second edition, Philadelphia, 1844, will aid not only in translating, but in writing, prescriptions more solito. See, also, Pereira, Selecta è Præscriptis, 15th edition, Philadelphia, 1871.

Presenta'tion, from (Lat.) præsens, (præ, 'before,' and ens, entis, 'being,') The part of a foetus which is felt presenting, on examination per vaginam. When the head presents, and especially the vertex, or the feet, knees, or breech, the presentation is said to be natural; when any other part, preternatural; and the labor is styled perverse or preternatural, Parodyn'ia seu Dysto'cia perver'sa, Cross-birth, (F.) Accouchement contre nature. When any part besides the head, feet, knees, or breech presents, the operation of turning becomes necessary.

When a portion of the presenting mass of the foetus becomes changed for another, in complicated presentations, the case has been termed one of substituted presentation.

Preser'vative, (præ, and servare, 'to save,') Prophylactic.

Pre'sis, (πρῆσις.) Swelling.

Prête, (πρέτε.) Hippuris vulgaris.

Pres'ma, gen. Pres'matis, (πρῆσμα.) Swelling.

Presphe'noid Bone. The anterior portion of the sphenoid bone in infancy, including the body in front of the olivary processes and the small wings, has received this distinctive name. In animals this division of the sphenoid sometimes persists through life.

Prespi'nal, Prespina'lis, (præ, and spina, 'the spine.') That which is situate before the spine. The prespinal surface of the vertebral column is the anterior surface.

Press, Præ'lum, Præ'lum, Presso'rium, Piës'ter, Piës'terion, (F.) Pressoir, Presse, (premere, pressum, 'to squeeze.') An instrument for subjecting matters to considerable pressure, for the purpose of separating the liquid from the solid portion.

PRESS OF HEROPH'ILUS, Torcular Herophili.

Presse-artère, Serre-nœud de Deschamps, Serre-artère. An instrument invented by Deschamps for the immediate compression of arteries. It is composed of a plate six or seven lines long, and three broad, and of a rod or stem two inches long, placed perpendicularly above the plate, and riveted. At each extremity of the plate is a hole, through which each of the ends of the ligature, to be placed upon the artery, is passed. The ligature is then to be tightened by drawing the ends, and fixing them to the perpendicular rod. This presse-artère or serre-artère, surrounded with charpie, remains in the wound, until there is no longer danger of hemorrhage. The ligature is then cut, and the instrument withdrawn. It is an unnecessary instrument.

Presse-urèthre, Ju'gum pe'nis. A kind of forceps, of elastic iron, the branches of which, padded, may be approximated or separated by means of a screw. The penis is introduced between the branches, one of them being applied to the urethra, and the screw is tightened so as to exercise a degree of pressure sufficient to bring the parietes of the canal in contact. This instrument is sometimes used in incontinence of urine, to prevent the constant discharge of that fluid.

Pres'sio, (premere, pressum, 'to press,') Pressure.

Pressio Abdominale, Pressure, abdominal.

Pressoir, Press — p. d'Hérophile, Torcular Herophili.

Presso'rium, Press.

Press'ure, Pres'sio. The action of pressing. The evidences of the effects produced on the walls of the thorax or its contents by pressure from within the chest, such as bulging, protrusion of the intercostal spaces, or pressure of fluid, on the heart, lungs, &c., are called pressure signs.

PRESS'URE, ABDOM'INAL, (F.) Pressio abdominalis. A mode of examination by means of which the sensibility, size, suppleness, or hardness of any morbid abdominal viscous may be compared, in these respects, with its healthy condition. Bichat proposed, with the view of exploring the state of the thoracic organs, to exert a pressure from below upwards on the abdominal organs, so as to crowd them upon the diaphragm, and thus to diminish the dimensions of the cavity of the chest, noticing to what extent respiration was affected by this action. No great information can of course be derived from it.

PRESS'URE SIGNS, see Pressure.

Prester'num, (pre, and sternum.) The broad upper part of the sternum, usually called the manubrium. See Sternum.

Pres'ton Salts, see Ammonie carbonas.

Présure, Rennet.

Presystol'ic or Presys'tolic, Præsyto'l'icus, (præ, and systole.) That which precedes the contraction of the heart, — as presystolic friction sound.

Pretend'ed Diseases, Feigned diseases.

Pretib'ial, Pratibia'lis, (præ, and tibia, 'the tibia.') That which is situate before the tibia; as the iliopretibial and ischiopretibial muscles.

Preven'tive, (prævenire, præventum, — præ, and venire, — 'to come before,') Prophylactic.

PREVEN'TIVE, ROY'AL. An empirical preparation, used as a prophylactic against the venereal virus. It is a solution of acetate of lead, — the Liquor plumbi subacetatis dilutus.

Prever'tebral, (pre, and vertebra.) Situate in front of the vertebræ, — as prevertebral fascia, prevertebral plexuses, &c.

PREVER'TEBRAL APONEUROSIS. The aponeurosis which covers the muscles of the prevertebral region.

PREVER'TEBRAL ARTERY, (F.) Artère prévertébrale ou méningienne postérieure. A ramus of the meningeal branch, and sometimes even of the trunk, of the pharyngeal artery, which is distributed to the prevertebral region.

PREVER'TEBRAL FAS'CIA. The layer of fascia descending on the prevertebral muscles and lying between the pharynx and œsophagus.

PREVER'TEBRAL MUS'LES, see Cervical region, anterior.

PREVER'TEBRAL PLEX'USES. The cardiac, solar, and hypogastric plexuses, lying in front of the spine, in the thorax, abdomen, and pelvis.

PREVER'TEBRAL REGION, Cervical region, anterior.

Prezygapoph'ysis, see Postzygapophysis.

Priapei'a, (after Priapus,) Nicotiana rustica.

Priapis'cus, (πριαπισκος.) Name of a piece of wood which forms part of the scamnum Hippocraticum, and is like the male organ of generation. Paulus of Ægina calls thus a tent of linen shaped like a penis.

Priapis'mus, (πριαπισμος.) Tenti'go, T. Pe'nis, Pri'apism, Horncolic (vulg.), Enta'sia Priapis'mus, Rhopalis'mus, Sty'ma, Sty'sis, (after Priapus.) Constant and distressing erection, with or without any voluptuous idea or desire for venery. It is often symptomatic; and sometimes the immediate result of morbid causes, — of the action of cantharides, for example. The application of cold liquids to the penis, and the internal use of opium and camphor, are the means usually had recourse to for its removal.

Priap'itis, gen. Priapi'tidis, (priapus, 'penis,' and itis.) Phallitis.

Pria'pus, (Πριαπος.) Mutun'nus. In ancient mythology the deity who presided over gardens and the parts of generation, so called propter deformitatem et membri virilis magnitudinem. See Penis.

PRIA'PUS CER'VI, see Cervus — p. Ceti, Leviathan penis.

Prick'et, Sedum acre.

Prick'ing, (from [Sax.] ppuccian, 'to prick,') (F.) Picotement. A variety of pain, compared to that which pointed bodies would occasion.

Prick'ly Heat, Lichen tropicus.

Pride of Chi'na, Melia azedarach — p. of India, Melia azedarach — p. Tree, Melia azedarach.

Pride'weed, Erigeron Canadense.

Priest Physic'ians, see Asclepiadæ.

Priest's Pin'tle, Arum maculatum.

Prim, Ligustrum vulgare.

Prí'ma Cel'la Co'li, 'first cell of the colon,' Cæcum.

Prí'mæ Vi'æ, (F.) Premières voies, 'the first passages.' The stomach and intestinal canal: — the lacteals being the secun'dæ vi'æ or 'second passages.' See Ways, digestive.

Primaire, Primary.

Pri'mary, Prima'rius, Primiti'vus, (F.) Primitif, Primaire, (from primus, 'first.') First in place, time, or character; as primary symptoms, in contradistinction to secondary.

PRÍ'MARY CELL, see Cell.

Primevère, (from primum ver, 'first spring,') Primula veris.

Primip'ara, Primipartu'riens, (F.) Primipare, (primus, 'first,' and parere, 'to bring forth,') A female who brings forth for the first time.

Primipartu'riens, (primus, 'first,' and parturio, 'I bring forth,') Primipara.

Primister'nal, Primisterna'lis, (primus, 'the first,' and sternum, 'the sternum,') M. Béclard has called os primisternal ou clavisternal, the bony portion of the sternum.

Primit'iae, (from primus, 'first,') The first waters or the waters discharged before the extrusion of the foetus.

Prim'itive, Primary—p. Axis, see Nerve fibres—p. Band, see Nerve fibres—p. Groove, Groove, primitive—p. Streak, Groove, primitive—p. Trace, Groove, primitive.

Primor'dial Cell, see Cell—p. Kidney, Corpus Wolffianum—p. Utricle, see Utricle.

Primor'dium, (primus, and ordior, orsus, 'I begin,') Arche.

Prim'rose, Evening, Oenothera biennis—p. Tree, Oenothera biennis.

Prim'ula Officina'lis, (primulus, 'first,' so called, because it flowers in the beginning of the spring,) P. veris—p. Variabilis, P. veris.

Prim'ula Ve'ris, P. officina'lis seu variabilis, Verbas'culum, Paralysis, Her'ba paraly'seos seu paralytica, the Cow'slip, Pai'gil or Pea'gle, Herb Pe'ter, Pal'sycort, (Prov.) Cow'striplings, Cow'strophe, Crow'el, (F.) Primevère, Herbe à la paralysie, Fleur de coucou, Oreille d'ours, Brairète; Ord. Primulaceae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. The flowers have been considered to be mildly tonic, antispasmodic, and anodyne.

Prim'ula Vulga'ris. The leaves and roots of this plant have been used as sternutatories.

Prim'm Vi'vens, 'the first living,' see Punctum saliens.

Prince Ar'thur's Farina'ceous Food, see Farinaceus.

Prin'ceps, gen. Prin'cipis, Rectum.

Prin'CEPS CERVI'cis (ARTE'RIA), Cer'vical Ar'tery. A branch of the occipital artery, which descends between the splenius and complexus muscles, and may be followed down to the lower part of the neck.

Prin'CEPS POL'licis (ARTE'RIA), Arteria mag'na pol'licis. When the two collateral arteries of the thumb take origin from a common trunk—the trunk is the Princeps pollicis.

Prince's Feath'er, Amaranthus hypochondriacus.

Principe Crystallizable de Dérosne, (from principium,) Narcotine—p. de la Mélanose, see Chorofidea tunica.

Prin'ciple, (princeps, 'the first,') Element, Principium.

Prin'ciple, Col'oring, OF THE BLOOD, see Hæmaphæin, and Hæmatin—p. Digestive, Pepsin—p. Vital, see Vital principle.

Prin'ciples, Imme'diate, (F.) Principes immé-diats, Matériaux immé-diats. A name given to a considerable number of substances, composed of at least three elements, and which are obtained from animals and vegetables without alteration, by simple processes, and, in some measure, imme'diately.

Prin'ciples, Imme'diate, OF AN'IMALS, Prox'i-mate principles, Organ'ic Elements, Com'pounds of Organiza'tion. These are divided into acid principles, fatty principles, and principles which are neither fat nor acid. The first include the uric, rosacic, purpuric, allantoic, caseic, butyric, &c. The fatty principles are:—stearin, elain, cholesterin, &c. The third division includes the most important compounds of organization:—fibrin, gelatin, albumen, casein, osmazome, &c.

Syst.* Hexandria Monogynia. The bark of this common shrub of the United States—Prinos, (Ph. U. S.)—is astringent, bitter, and pungent. The berries are, likewise, bitter. The bark has been used as a substitute for the cin-chona in intermittents, and as a tonic.

Pri'nos GLA'BER, see P. lævigatus—p. Gronovii, Prinos.

Pri'nos LEVIGA'TUS, Smooth Win'terberry, and PRINOS GLA'BER, Ink'berry, indigenous, have the same properties as prinos.

Pri'nos PADIFO'LIUS, Prinos.

Pri'on, (πριων,) Saw.

Priono'des, (prion, and odes,) Ser'rated. Ap-plied to the sutures of the head.

Pri'or, 'first, foremost,' as Pri'OR ANNULA'ris, Interos'seus quar'tus of Winslow. An internal, interosseous muscle which arises from the outside of the metacarpal bone of the ringfinger, and is inserted into the outside of the tendon on the back of the ringfinger. Its use is to draw the ringfinger outwards.

Pri'OR IN'DICIS, Exten'sor ter'tii interno'dii in'dicis, (F.) Sous-métacarpal-latéri-phalangien. It arises from the outer or radial side of the metacarpal bone of the forefinger, and is inserted into the outside of the tendon on the back of the forefinger. Action:—to draw the finger outwards, towards the thumb.

Pri'OR IN'DICIS PE'dis, Abduc'tor in'dicis pe'dis. An external, interosseous muscle of the foot, which arises from the contiguous sides of the metatarsal bones of the great and fore toes, and is inserted into the inside of the root of the first bone of the foretoe. Action:—to pull the fore-toe inwards.

Pri'OR ME'dii, Prior medii digiti.

Pri'OR ME'dii DIG'iti, Prior me'dii, Interos'seus secun'dus, Sec'ond interos'seous of Douglas. An external, interosseous muscle of the hand, which arises from the corresponding sides of the metacarpal bones of the fore and middle fingers, and is inserted into the outside of the tendon on the back of the middle finger. Action:—to draw the middle finger outwards.

Pri'OR ME'dii DIG'iti PE'dis, Adduc'tor me'dii dig'iti pe'dis. An internal, interosseous muscle of the foot, which arises from the inside of the metatarsal bone of the middle toe, and is inserted into the inside of the root of the first bone of the middle toe. Use:—to pull the middle toe inwards or towards the inner side of the foot.

Pri'OR MIN'imi DIG'iti, Adduc'tor min'imi dig'iti. An internal, interosseous muscle of the foot, which originates from the inside of the metatarsal bone of the little toe, and is inserted into the inside of the root of the first bone of the little toe. Action:—to pull the little toe inwards.

Pri'OR TER'tii DIG'iti PE'dis, Adduc'tor ter'tii dig'iti pe'dis. An internal, interosseous muscle of the foot, which arises from the inner and under part of the metatarsal bone of the third of the small toes, and is inserted into the side of the root of the first bone of the third of the small toes.

Action, to pull the third of the small toes inwards.

Prise, Dose.

Pri'sis, (πρισις,) Brygmus, Trepanning.

Pris'ma, gen. Pris'matis, (πρισμα,) Scobs.

Prismat'ic, Prismat'icus, (F.) Prismatique, (from prisma,—itself from πριζειν, πριεν, 'to saw.') Decomposed or separated by a prism; as Prismatic analysis.

PRISMAT'IC ANALYSIS, Spectrum analysis.

Pris'mus, (πριω, 'I saw, I grind,') Brygmus, Trepanning.

Proct'i'tis, gen. Proct'i'tidis, Proct'itis, Arch'i'tis, Clun'e'sia, Cyso'tis, (proctus, and itis,) Inflammation of the anus and rectum. Rectitis.

Proct'i'tis GANGRÆNO'sa, Proctocœce.

Proctoc'acœ, Proct'i'tis gangræno'sa, (proctus, and κακος, 'evil,') A disease of the rectum, so called by Fuchs, which, according to him, is common in Peru, in the neighborhood of Quito and Lima, on the Honduras and Mosquito coasts, in Brazil, and on the Gold coast, &c. It is called by the Portuguese, Bicho, and Bicho di Culo; by the people of Quito, Mal del Valle, from its prevalence in the valleys; and in Africa, Bitios de Kis. It is an adynamic, inflammatory condition, frequently ending in gangrene. It has been attributed to bad food, and the use of spices.

Proctocœ'lē, (proctus, and κηλη, 'hernia,') Pro-lap'sus A'ni seu Intesti'ni rec'ti, Proctopto'ma, Proctopto'sis, Hedrocœ'lē, Archeopto'ma, Archeopto'ma, Archopt'o'ma, Archeocœ'lē, Archopt'o'sis, Eza'nia, Hæmor'rhois proce'dens seu ab exa'niā, Proci'den'tia a'ni seu intesti'ni rec'ti seu se'dis, Ecto'pia a'ni, Se'des proci'd'ua, Falling down of the Fun'dament, Coming down of the Body, (F.) Chute du rectum, C. du fondement, Renversement du rectum. Inversion and prolapse of the mucous coat of the rectum, from relaxation of the sphincter, with more or less swelling. In the treatment the application of cold water and astringent lotions must be recommended; and if other means fail, one of the radii of skin, which converge at the anus, may be snipped off. On cicatrizing, the verge of the anus will be contracted, and the cure probably complete. In the way of palliation, the parts may be retained by an appropriate bandage.

Proctocystotom'ia, (proctus, κυστη, 'bladder,' and τομη, 'section,') see Lithotomy.

Proctodyn'ia, (proctus, and αδυνη, 'pain,') Proctalgia.

Procton'eus, (proctus, and ογκος, 'swelling,') Swelling of the anus.

Proctoparal'ysis, Proctople'gia, Paral'ysis Intesti'ni Rec'ti, (proctus, and paral'ysis,) Paralysis of the muscles of the rectum.

Proctople'gia, (proctus, and πληγη, 'a stroke,') Proctoparalysis.

Proctopto'ma, gen. Proctopto'matis, (proctus, and πτωμα, 'a fall,') Proctocœle.

Proctopto'sis, (proctus, and πτωσις, 'a falling,') Proctocœle.

Proctorrhag'ia, (proctus, and ῥαγη, 'a breaking forth,') Hemorrhoidal flux.

Proctorrhœu'ma, gen. Proctorrhœu'matis, (proctus, and ῥευμα, 'defluxion,') Rheumatism of the anus.

Proctorrhœ'a, (F.) Proctorrhœe, (proctus, and ῥεω, 'I flow,') A discharge of mucus from the anus.

Proctor'rhois, (proctus, and ῥεω, 'I flow,') see Hæmorrhoids.

Proct'os, (πρωκτος,) Anus.

Proctoscirr'hous, (proctus, and σκιρρὸς, 'hard,') Scirrhus of the anus.

Proctospas'mus, Tenesmus.

Proctostenosis Organ'ica, (proctus, and στενός, 'narrow,') Stricture of the rectum.

Proctotoreu'sis, (proctus, and τορνευσις, 'to perforate,') Perforation of a closed anus.

Proct'us, (πρωκτος,) Anus.

Procura'tio Abor'tus. The promotion of abortion.

Prodiagno'sis, (pro, and diagnosis,) Prognostication of a disease to come,—a diagnosis by anticipation.

Prodrom'ic or Prod'romic, Prodrom'icus, (F.) Prodromique. Relating or belonging to the prodromus of a disease.

Prod'romus, (προδρομος, pro, and δρομος, 'course,') Propathi'a, (F.) Prodrome. Stadium opportunitatis seu prodromo'rum; in contagious diseases, Stadium latens seu contagii. The period immediately preceding an attack of disease; in which the precur'sory signs occur.

Prod'uct, (producere, productum,—pro, and ducere, 'to lead,'—'to bring forth,') Productum, (F.) Prodit. The result sought to be attained by any pharmaceutical or other operation.

Produc'tio, Prolapsus—p. Uvulæ à pituitâ, Staphylœdema.

Produc'tion, Produc'tio. The act of producing; the thing produced. Also used, especially by the French, synonymously with prolongation. The mesentery is, in this sense, a production of the peritoneum.

Production Accidentelle. An accidental or adventitious structure.

Productiv'itas, Fecundity.

Prodit, Product.

Produc'tum, Product.

Proëgu'menæ Caus'æ, (προηγουμενος, from pro, and ηγισμαι, 'I lead,') Causes, predisponent.

Prœ'lum, Press, Tourniquet.

Prœm'inent, Prœm'inens, (pro, and eminere, 'to project,') Some anatomists call the 7th cervical vertebra the prœminent ver'tebra, on account of the length of its spinous process, which passes the level of that of the neighboring vertebrae.

Proenceph'alus, (F.) Proencephale, (pro, and εγκεφαλος, 'encephalon,') A monster whose encephalon is situate, in a great measure, out of, and in advance of, the cranium, which is open in the frontal region.

Præot'ia, Præ'otes, (πρωιότης or προωιότης, from πρωι, 'early,') Precocity, Præcox maturitas, Præcox matura'ty. Premature development of sexual organization or power.

Proflu'vii Cor'tex, Nerium antidysentericum.

Proflu'vium, Discharge, Flux'us, Polyrrhœ'a, Flux, (profluo,—pro, and fluo,—'I flow forth,') A term under which—in the plural, Proflu'via, Polyrrhœ'es—some nosologists have comprised all morbid discharges or fluxes:—others, increased excretions attended by fever.

PROFLUVIUM AL'vi, Diarrhœa—p. Genitale mu- liebre, Menses—p. Mucosum urethrae, Gonorrhœa—p. Muliebre, Leucorrhœa, Menses—p. Sanguinis, Hæmorrhagia—p. Sanguinis à renibus, Nephorrhagia—p. Sanguinis ex ore, Stomatorrhagia—p. Sanguinis ex utero, Metrorrhagia—p. Seminis, Pollution—p. Ventris, Diarrhœa.

Profond, Profundus.

Profun'da, fem. of Profundus:—

PROFUN'DA ARTE'RIA FEM'ORIS, A. vas'ta poste'rior seu muscula'ris fem'oris, (F.) Artère grande musculaire de la cuisse. (Ch.) This large branch arises commonly from the posterior part of the crural, between the pubis and lesser trochanter. It descends deeply, situate before the adductors; passes through the third adductor above the opening in it for the trunk of the femoral; and terminates in the short portion of the biceps. The muscularis profunda gives off, 1, The external circumflex; 2, the internal circumflex; and 3, the three perforantes.

PROFUN'DA ARTE'RIA HU'MERI, P. supe'rior, Arte'ria spira'lis, (F.) Artère humérale profonde, A. collatérale externe, Grand musculaire du bras. (Ch.) Its origin is variable. When it arises from the brachial artery, it is given off opposite the groove of the humerus destined for the radial nerve, and descends backwards between the three portions of the triceps, accompanied by the nerve; giving branches to that muscle and to the humerus. When it reaches the posterior part of the bone, it divides into two branches, which are distributed to the triceps, supinator longus, &c.

PROFUN'DA ARTE'RIA INFE'RIOR seu MI'NOR is often a branch of the last; but, commonly, is given off from the brachial, near the middle of the arm. It gives off branches to the muscles, &c., about the inner side of the os humeri. It is, also, called large communicating ulnar or profundo-ulnar.

PROFUN'DA ARTERIA PE'NIS. Chaussier has given this name to the cavernous artery, which arises from the artery of the penis, furnished by the internal pudic.

PROFUN'DA ARTE'RIA SUPE'RIOR, Profunda humeri.

Profun'dus, (pro, and fundus, 'bottom,' 'having a deep base,') Al'tus, (F.) Profond. A name given to different parts, which are seated profoundly as regards others.

Certain muscles are distinguished by the names profund or deep-seated, and superficial. Thus, we speak of the superficial and deep-seated muscles of the neck, &c.; the Flexor profundus perforans, &c.

Profu'sio, (pro, and fundere, fundere, 'to pour,') A pouring out, a shedding; see Hæmorrhagia.

PROFU'SIO A'QUÆ. The discharge or breaking of the waters at birth.

PROFU'SIO SAN'GUINIS, Hæmorrhagia—p. Seminis, Ejaculation—p. Seri, see Effusion—p. Seri in cerebro, see Apoplexy—p. Subcutanea, Purpura simplex.

Progas'tor, (pro, and γαστήρ, 'belly,') One who has a pendulous belly.

Progen'ies, (pro, and gigno, 'I bring forth,') Epigone.

Prog'eny, Epigone.

Progl'os'sis, (προγλωσσις, from pro, and γλωσσα, 'the tongue,') A'pex lin'guæ. The extremity or tip of the tongue.

Proglot'tis, (pro, and glottis, 'Each separate joint or sexual zooid of a tapeworm has been so called.

Prog'nathous, Prognathus, (pro, and γνάθος, 'the jaw,') Having a projecting jaw. A term applied to the form of the head in which there is a prolongation or forward extension of the jaws, as in the negro.

Progn'o'sis, (προγνωσις, Proïgoreu'sis, Prorrhe'sis, Præcognit'io, Prognos'ticē, Præn'o'tio, Prænu'tia'tio, Præscien'tia, Præcî't'io, Pronæ'a, Proph' asis, Prædic'tio, (F.) Prognostic, Pronostic, (pro, and γνῶσις, 'knowledge,') A judgment formed by the physician regarding the future progress and termination of any disease.

PROGNO'SIS, GEN'ERAL. The opinion formed of a disease in the abstract. Thus, the General prognosis of Cynanche tonsillaris is favorable;—of Phthisis pulmonalis, unfavorable.

PROGNO'SIS, PARTIC'ULAR. The opinion formed of any particular case of disease. The particular or special prognosis of one case of typhus may be favorable, while that of another may be unfavorable.

PROGNO'SIS EX LIN'GUÂ, Glossomantia.

Prognos'tic, Prognos'ticus, (F.) Prognostique, Pronostique. Relating or appertaining to prognosis,—as 'prognostic signs.'

Prognostic, Prognosis.

Prognos'ticē, (προγνωστική—τέχνη,) Prognosis.

Prognostique, Prognostic.

Progres'sio, (pro, and gradior, gressus, 'I step,') Augmentation.

Progression, Walking.

Progres'sus, gen. Progressus, Augmentation.

Pro'l'otes, (προϊότης, or προϊότης,) Præotia.

Projectu'ra, (pro, and jacio, jactum, 'to throw,') Process.

Prola'bium, (pro, and labium, 'lip,') Procheilon.

Prolap'sus, gen. Prolapsus, (prolabor, prolapsus,—pro, and labor, lapsus, 'I slide,'—'I slip down,') Procident'ia, Delap'sio, Delap'sus, Hypor'rhyxis, Propto'ma, Propto'sis, Produc'tio, Pro-penden'tia, Prominen'tia, Pto'sis, Ca'sus, Pro-trusion; a falling down; (F.) Chute. A genus of diseases in the class Locales and order Ectopie of Cullen, distinguished by the falling down of a part through the orifice with which it is naturally connected.

PROLAP'SUS A'NI, Proctocœle—p. Bulbi oculi, Exophthalmia—p. Corneæ, Staphyloma of the cornea—p. Iridis, Iridauxesis, Staphyloma iridis, and Pto'sis iridis—p. Linguae, Glossocœle, Paraglossa—p. Oesophagi, Pharyngocœle—p. of the Ovary, Ovary, prolapse of—p. Palpebræ, Blepharoptosis—p. Pharyngis, Pharyngocœle—p. Umbilici, Exomphalus.

PROLAP'SUS U'TERI, Exome'tra, Metropto'sis, Metropropto'sis, Ædopto'sis seu Procident'ia uteri, Hysteropto'sis, Hysteroce'lē nu'da, Falling down of the womb, (F.) Abaissement ou Chute ou Descente ou Précipitation de la matrice. Some use the term Procidentia Uteri for a less degree of the affection than prolapsus—Relaxatio uteri expressing the slightest state of all. A falling down of the uterus, owing to relaxation of the parts about the uterovaginal region. In the treatment, the horizontal posture must be insisted upon, the injection of astringent substances per vaginam be advised; and if the affection be not remedied by these means, a pessary may be employed as a palliative, or the operation of Episiorrhaphy be performed.

Prolapsus uteri without inversion has been termed Orthysteropto'ma, and Orthysteropto'sis.

PROLAP'SUS U'VULÆ, Staphylœdema.

PROLAP'SUS VAGI'NÆ, Hysteropto'sis seu Ædopto'sis Vagi'næ, Coleopto'sis, Colpopto'sis, Elytrop'to'sis. Protrusion of the upper part of the vagina into the lower. This, like the descent of the uterus, may be relaxation, procidentia, prolapsus, or complete inversion.

PROLAP'SUS VESI'CÆ, Exocyste.

Prolecta'tio, (prolectare, prolectatum, 'to entice,') Action of separating the finer parts of a body from the grosser.

Prolep'tics, Prolep'ticē, (προληψις, 'anticipation,' from pro, and λαμβάνω, 'I seize hold of,') A term proposed by Dr. Laycock to signify the art and science of predicting in medicine.

Prolep'ticus, (προληπτικός,) Anticipating.

Pro'les, (pro, and olescere, 'to grow,') Epigone.
Prol'icide, Prolucidum, (proles, 'offspring,' and cedere, 'to kill,') Destruction of offspring. A term which includes foeticide as well as infanticide.

Prolifera'tion, Prolifera'tio, (proles, 'offspring,' and fero, 'I carry,') see Cytogeny.

Proliferous, (proles, 'offspring,' and fero, 'I carry,') A term especially applied to cysts, proliferous cysts, which appear to have the power of producing more highly organized, and even vascular structures, as complex ovarian cysts, mammary cysts, &c.

Prolific, Prolif'icus, (F.) Prolifique, (proles, 'offspring,' and facere, 'to make,') That which has the faculty of engendering. Applied to man and animals, and to their sperm or seed, as well as to remedies which, by strengthening the genital organs, increase the secretion of sperm.

Prolig'erosus, Proliger, Prolig'erus, (F.) Proligère, (proles, 'offspring,' and gero, 'I carry,') That which is connected with carrying the offspring.

PROLIG'ERUS DISK OR LAYER, Germ Disk or Hill, Dis'cus prolig'erus seu vitell'inus, Stra'tum prolig'erum, Gonostro'ma, (F.) Disque ou Couche proligère. A granular layer, situate generally towards the most prominent part of the ovarian vesicle, in the centre of which the true ovum or ovule exists.

Prolongement Rachidien, (pro, and longus, 'long,') Medulla spinalis — p. Sous-occipital, Basilar process.

Promalacte'rium, (pro, and μαλασσω, 'I soften,') The room in the ancient gymnasium in which the body was softened and anointed. One of the operations in bathing.

Pro'manus, gen. Pro'manūs, (pro, and manus, 'hand,') see Digitus, Pollex.

Prometopid'ia, (προμετωπίδια,) Frontal bandages.

Prometo'pis, gen. Prometop'idia, Prometopid'ion, (pro, and μετωπον, 'the forehead,') The skin of the forehead in which wrinkles are.

Prominen'tia, (promineo, 'I jut out,') Pro-lapsus, Protuberance — p. Annularis Cerebri, Pons Varolii — p. Corneæ, Ceratocoele — p. Laryngis, Pomum Adami — p. Ossis continua, Apophysis.

Prominen'tiæ Albican'tes, Mammillary tubercles — p. Semiōvales medullæ oblongatæ, Corpora olivaria.

Promontoire, Promontorium.

Promonto'rium, Promontory — p. Faciei, Nasus — p. Ossis Sacri, see Sacrum.

Prom'ontory, Promonto'rium, (F.) Promontoire, (pro, and mons, gen. montis, 'a mountain,') Tu'ber seu Tuberos'itas tym'pani. A small projection at the inner paries of the cavity of the tympanum, which corresponds to the external scala of the cochlea, and especially to the outer side of the vestibule.

PROM'ONTORY OF THE SA'CRUM, see Sacrum.

Pronateur, Pronator — p. Carré, Pronator radii quadratus — p. Grand ou rond, Pronator radii teres — p. Petit, Pronator radii quadratus.

Prona'tion, Prona'tio, (pronus, 'inclined forwards,') Anatomists understand, by pronation, the motion by which the inferior extremity of the radius passes before the ulna, and thus causes the hand to execute a kind of rotation from without inwards.

Prona'tor. That which produces the motion of pronation, (F.) Pronateur. This name has been given to two of the muscles of the forearm.

PRONA'TOR OBLI'QUUS, P. radii teres — p. Quadratus, P. radii quadratus.

PRONA'TOR RA'DII QUADRA'TUS, P. quadra'tus seu transver'sus (Winslow) seu ra'dii bre'vis seu ra'dii quadra'tus (Cowper), Quadra'tus ra'dii, (F.) Cubito-radial, (Ch.) Petit ou carré pronateur.

This muscle is situate at the anterior, inferior, and profound part of the forearm. It is flat and square, and is attached, within, to the inferior quarter of the anterior surface of the ulna; and without, to the inferior quarter of the anterior surface of the radius. It produces the motion of pronation.

PRONA'TOR RA'DII TE'RES, P. te'res sive obli'quus (Winslow), P. rotun'dus, (F.) Épitrochlo-radial (Ch.), Grand ou rond pronateur. A muscle seated at the upper and anterior part of the forearm. It is long, flat, and larger above than below. It is attached, above, to the inner tuberosity of the humerus and to the coronoid process of the ulna. Thence it passes obliquely downward and outward, and terminates at the middle of the outer surface of the radius. It causes the radius to turn on the ulna, to produce the motion of pronation. It can also bend the forearm on the arm, and conversely.

PRONA'TOR ROTUN'DUS, P. radii teres — p. Teres, P. radii teres.

Prona'us, (pro, and ναος, 'a temple,') Vestibulum.

Pronerva'tio, (pro, and nervus, 'a tendon,') Aponeurosis, Tendon.

Prono'a, (προνοια, from pro, and νοω, 'I know,') Prognosis.

Prononciation, Pronunciation.

Pronostic, Prognosis.

Pronostique, Prognostic.

Pronuncia'tion, Pronuncia'tio, (F.) Prononcia-tion, (pro, and nunciare, 'to tell,') The mode of articulating or giving accent or utterance to words.

Proo'tic, (pro, and οὐς, gen. ωτος, 'ear,') A term applied to that form of ossification which gives rise to the upper part of the petrous bone and to part of the mastoid.

Proo'varium, see Parovarium.

Prop Cells, Hensen's. The outer layer of the organ of Corti consists of outer hair cells and cylindrical epithelial cells, which last have received this name.

Propathi'a, (προπαθεια, from pro, and παθος, 'affection,') Prodromus.

Propenden'tia, (pro, and pendere, 'to hang,') Prolapsus.

Prop'eryl, Hy'drate of, Glycerin.

Prop'erties, Phys'ical, of the Tis'sues. These are flexibility, extensibility, elasticity, racornissement, imbibition, and osmose.

PROP'ERTIES, VI'TAL. Those which depend upon the vital force, as contractility.

Prop'erty, Propri'etas, Vir'tus, (F.) Propriété, (proprius, 'proper,') That which belongs distinctively to a thing. See Properties.

Proph'asis, (προφασις, from προφαινω, 'I announce,') A cause, especially a remote cause. Also, Prognosis.

Prophylac'tic, Prophylac'ticus, Diaphylac'tic, Diasos'tic, Synteret'icus, Præservato'rius, (F.) Prophylactique, Præservatif, (pro, and φύλασσω, 'I defend,') A preservative or preventive.

Prophylac'tic Med'icine, Hygiene.

Prophylax'is, Prophyl'acē, Prophylac'ticē, Syntere'sis, Præserva'tio, Præcav'tio, Præcusto'dia. Preservative or preventive treatment.

Prop'olis, (προπολις, from pro, and πολις, 'city,') literally, 'that which is before the city,') Ceran'themus, Commo'sis, Bee'bread. A red, resinous matter, with which the bees cover the bottom of the hive. It has been employed in simple mucous diarrhoea and dysentery. Its fume has been esteemed antiasthmatic.

Prop'oma, gen. Propom'atis, (προπομα, from pro, and πομα, 'a drink,') Ancient name of a medicine composed of seven parts of honey and four of wine. It was taken before a meal.

Propor'tio, (pro, and portio,) Symmetry.

Propos'itum, (pro, and ponere, positum, 'to place,') Intention.

Propotis'ma, gen. Propotism'atis, (προποτισμα,) Mistura.

Propotis'mus, (προποτισμος, from pro, and ποτιζω, 'I give to drink,') Præpo'tio. An ancient name for medicines which were given to the patients before purging them, and, in some sort, to prepare them.

Propri'etas, Property.

Propriété, Property.

Pro'prius Aur'is Exter'næ, Retrahens auris.

Propto'ma, gen. Propto'matis, (pro, and πιπτω, 'I fall,') Prolapsus.

PROPTO'MA AURICULA'RUM, Paræsthe'sis audi'tûs flac'ca, Flap Ear. Lobe of the ear broad, loose, and pendent from birth.

PROPTO'MA SCRO'TI, Rachosis.

Propto'sis, (προπτωση, pro, and πτωσις, 'a falling down,') Prolapsus — p. Oculi, Exophthalmia — p. Palpebræ, Blepharoptosis — p. Uvulæ, Staphylodema.

Propt'y'sis, (pro, and πτωω, 'I spit,') Expectoration.

Prop'ylamin, Propylami'num, Propyla'mia, occurs in Ghenopodium vulca'ria, in the flowers of Cratægus oxyacan'tha; the fruit of Sorbus aucuparia; in Seca'le cornu'tum, herring pickle, cod-liver oil, urine, &c. (It may be prepared from herring pickle, by distillation with caustic potassa, neutralizing the distillate with muratic acid; purifying the salt by dissolving it in strong alcohol or alcoholic ether, and again distilling with potassa.) It has been used in acute and chronic rheumatism, 25 drops being added to six ounces of mint-water sweetened; and a tablespoonful given every two hours. Its virtues have been greatly exaggerated. The chloride and iodide have been given in like cases. Propylamia and secalia have been found to be identical.

Pro'ra, Occiput.

Prorrhe'sis, (προρρησις,) Prognosis.

Prorup'tio San'guinis, (pro, and rumpere, ruptum, 'to break,') Hæmorrhagia.

Pros, (προς,) in composition, generally signifies 'in addition to,' 'over and above,' 'besides.'

Prosarthro'sis, (pros, and arthron, 'I attach by joints,' and osis,) Diarthrosis.

Pros'bolê, (pros, and βαλλω, 'I strike,') Impression.

Pros'chysis, (pros, and χυω, 'I pour,') Affusion.

Proscolle'sis, (προσκόλλησις, from pros, and κολλα, 'glue,') Adherence, Agglutination.

Prosecteur, Dissector.

Prosec'tio, (pros, and secare, sectum, 'to cut,') Anatomy.

Prosec'tor, Dissector.

Prosenceph'alon, (pros, and κεφαλος,) Fore-brain. One of the principal secondary divisions of the primordial medullary tube. From it are developed the cerebral hemispheres, corpus callosum, corpora striata, fornix, lateral ventricles, and olfactory nerve.

Proslep'sis, (προσληψις, from pros, and λαμβάνω, 'I seize hold of,') Prehension.

Pros'odos, (προσόδος, from pros, and ὁδός, 'a way,') Aditus.

Prosopal'gia, (prosopon, and αλγος, 'pain,') Neuralgia, facial.

Prosopalgie, Neuralgia, facial.

Prosopan'tra, (prosopon, and αντρον, 'a cavity,') Frontal sinuses.

Prosopantri'tis, (prosopantra, and itis,) Inflammation of the frontal sinuses.

Proso'pis Dul'cis, Ord. Leguminosæ. A tree of rather large size, native of Peru. The fruit—Pacay—is a pod, from 20 to 24 inches long, containing black seeds imbedded in a white, soft, flaky substance; which last is eaten by the Limes with pleasure.

Prosopodyn'ia, (prosopon, and ὁδυνή, 'pain,') Neuralgia, facial.

Prosopodysmor'phia, (prosopon, δυσ, 'with difficulty,' and μορφή, 'shape,') Malformation or atrophy of the face,—as where the process of nutrition suffers from diminished nervous influence.

Prosopolog'ia, (prosopon, and λογος, 'a discourse,') Physiognomy.

Prosopomanti'a, (prosopon, and μαντεια, 'divination,') Physiognomy.

Proso'pon, (προσωπον,) Face.

Prosopoparal'ysis, (prosopon, and paralysis,) Palsy, Bell's.

Prosoporrheum'a, gen. Prosoporrheum'atis, Rheumatis'mus fa'ciei, (prosopon, and ῥευμα, 'de-fluxion,' 'rheumatism,') Rheumatism affecting the face.

Prosopo'sis, (from prosopon,) Physiognomy.

Prosospas'mus, (prosopon, and spasmus,) Canine laugh.

Prosoposternodym'ia, (prosopon, στερνον, 'the sternum,' and δυειν, 'to mingle,') see Cephalosomatodymia.

Prosper'itas Valetu'dinis, (prosper, 'favorable,') Sanitas.

Pros'phora, (προσφορά, from pros, and φέρω, 'I bring,') Prehension.

Pros'physis, (προσφύσις,) Adnascen'tia, Coalit'io, 'adhesion, adherence, connection,' (from pros, and φύω, 'I grow,') In a more limited sense, this word means morbid adhesion of the eyelids, either between themselves, or with the globe of the eye, Ankylobleph'aron.

Pros'tasis, πρόστασις, from pro, and στασις, 'station,' 'superiority,' 'preponderance,') A predominance or abundance—as of excrementitious humors.

Pros'tata, Prostate — p. Adenoides, Prostate — p. Bartholini, Cowper's glands in the female — p. Glandula, Prostate — p. Muliebris, Cowper's glands in the female.

Pros'tatæ, Prostate — p. Adenoides, Prostate — p. Glandulosæ, Prostate.

Pros'tatal, Prostatic.

Prostat'al'gia, (prostate, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the prostate.

Prostataux'e, (prostate, and αυξη, 'increase,') Prostatoparectasis.

Pros'tate, (pro, and ιστημι, 'I stand,') Pros'tata, P. glan'dula, Pros'tatæ, P. glandulo'sæ seu adenoi'des, Paras'tata adenoi'des seu glandulo'sa, Ad'stans, Paras'tatæ, P. glan'dulæ, Tes'tis mi'nor, Cor'pus glandulo'sum seu glando'sum seu adeni-form'e seu glandiform'e seu glandulo'sum seu adenoi'des, Assisten'tes glandulæ, Ad'stites glandulo'si; the Pros'tate gland. A glandular, cordiform body, of the size of a chestnut, situate before the neck of the bladder, behind the symphysis pubis, and surrounding the first portion of the urethra. Its excretory outlets, to the number of 10 or 12, open into the part of the urethra that traverses it, and pour into it a whitish viscid humor — Li'quor prostat'icus—intended to lubricate the interior of the urethra, and to serve as a vehicle for the sperm in its ejaculation. It is usually described as consisting of three lobes—two lateral, and one mid-dle, fitted in between them on the under side, and lying beneath the neck of the bladder and the immediately adjacent part of the urethra. This is the Lo'bus me'dius, Carun'cula seu Tuber-culum Morgagn'i, Isth'mus pros'tatæ, Lo'bus patholog'icus seu inf'rior, (F.) Portion trans-versale seu transversaire seu médiane seu sus-montale.

PROS'TATE, ANTE'RIOR, see Cowper's glands.

Prostatelco'sis, Prostatelco'sis, (prostate, and ἔλκος, 'an ulcer,') Ulceration of the prostate.

Prostates Inf'erieures, Cowper's glands — p. Petites, Cowper's glands.

Prostatheleco'sis, (prostate, and ελκος, 'an ulcer,') Prostatelcosis.

Prostat'ic, Prostat'icus, Pros'tatal, (F.) Prostatique. That which belongs or relates to the prostate. Winslow has named—Superior Prostatic Muscles—ligaments which pass from the pubis to the lateral parts of the prostate. He also calls—Inferior prostatic muscles—the fleshy fibres, which, from the lateral parts of the urethra, near its membranous portion, pass to be inserted into the pubis.

PROSTAT'IC BISECTOR. An instrument at one time used by Dr. Stevens, of New York, in the bilateral operation of lithotomy. In form it resembles a large olive, with a beak at the extremity, cutting edges at the sides parallel to its longest axis, and with a straight handle.

PROSTAT'IC LIQ'UOR, Liquor prostat'icus. The fluid secreted by the prostate, which mixes with sperm during emission.

PROSTAT'IC PORTION OF THE URE'THRA, Pars prostat'ica ure'thræ. The part of the canal of the urethra included by the prostate: it is about 15 lines long.

PROSTAT'IC SI'NUS, see Sinus, prostatic.

Prostat'icus Supe'rior, Compressor prostatæ.

Prostatique, Prostatic.

Prostatitis, Inflammat'io Pros'tatæ, (prostate, and itis.) Inflammation of the prostate; when accompanying gonorrhœa, it is the gonorrhœo-prostatitis.

Prostatocel'le, (prostate, and κηλη, 'tumor,') Prostatoncus.

Prostatolithi, pl. of Prostatolithus, (prostate, and λιθος, 'a stone,') see Calculi, urethral.

Prostaton'cus, Prostatocel'le, Tu'mor pros'tatæ, (prostate, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') Swelling of the prostate.

Prostatoparec'tasis, (prostate, and παρεκτείνω, 'to extend,') Enlargement of the prostate, Prostatoparec'tis; also, induration of the same, Prostatoscir'rhus.

Prostatorrhœ'a, (F.) Prostatorrhœe, (prostate, and ῥεω, 'I flow,') A morbidly increased discharge from the prostate.

Prostatoscir'rhus, see Prostatoparectasis.

Prosternid'ium, (προσπτεριδιον, from pro, and σπτερον, 'the sternum,') Any agent applied to the anterior part of the chest; a plaster to the breast.

Pros'thesis, (προσθεσις), Adjunc'tio, Adjec'tio, Apposit'io, 'addition, application;' (from pros, and τιθημι, 'I put,') That part of surgery, whose object is to add to the human body some artificial part, in place of one that may be wanting, as a wooden leg, an artificial eye, artificial teeth, &c., Prothet'ic appara'tus. Sometimes written Prothesis, (F.) Prothèse. See Anaplerosis.

Pros'theta, (προσθετα), Subdita.

Prosthium, (προσθιον), Penis.

Prostitution, Prostitu'tio, Porni'a, So'cial e'vil, (from prosto,—pro, 'before,' and sto, 'I stand,'—'I stand to be hired,') The condition and practice of a prostitute, (F.) Fille publique, F. de Joie. In many countries of Europe, prostitution is a matter of public hygiene—the prostitutes being regularly examined medically and licensed. In Great Britain, and in this country, as a general rule, it is not subjected to any regulation.

Prostom'ia, Commissu'ra labio'rum, (pro, and στομα, 'mouth,') The commissure of the lips.

Prostra'tion, Prostra'tio vi'rium, (pro, and sternere, stratum, 'to throw down,') (F.) Prostration des forces, Abattement. Great depression of strength. Almost total loss of power over the muscles of locomotion.

Pro'tagon, (πρωτος, 'first,' and αγω, 'I lead,') A nitrogenous proximate principle, which, when combined with albuminous matter, (paraglobulin or fibrinoplastin,) fatty matters and salts, makes up the stroma of the red blood-corpuscles. See Fibrinoplastin. The name is also given to a mixture of lecithin and cerebrin, my'elin, which is considered by Liebreich the chief constituent of nervous tissue. When broken down with water, glycerin, &c., it assumes the shape of nerve-tubes, granules, nucleated cells, &c.

Pro'tea Mellif'era, (after Proteus.) A South African plant, Nat. Ord. Proteaceæ, whose involucre and flowers, at the time of inflorescence, are filled with a sweet watery liquid, which contains a great deal of honey. By inspissation it forms a delicious syrup, Syrupus Pro'teæ, which is much used in pulmonary affections.

PRO'TEA LEPIDOCAR'PON, and some other Proteæ, supply the same kind of juice.

Pro'tean or Prote'an, Pro'teiform, Pro'teiformis, (from Proteus, who could assume various shapes.) Assuming different shapes.

Pro'teic, Proteinous—p. Substances, Proteids.

Proteids, Pro'teic Sub'stances. In the classification of aliments, such as are made up of albumen, casein, gluten and their allies, and gelatin, and which contain carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, and nitrogen, and some of them sulphur and phosphorus, have been called by Kirkes Proteids.

Proteifor'mis, Protean.

PROTEIFOR'MIS MOR'BUS. A disease which assumes various characters.

Pro'tein, Pro'teine, Pro'teina, (from πρωτεινω, 'I take first rank,') A product of the decomposition of albumen, &c., by potassa. When, according to Mulder, animal albumen, fibrin or casein is dissolved in a moderately strong solution of caustic potassa, and the solution is exposed for some time to a high temperature, these substances are decomposed. The addition of acetic acid causes, in all three, the separation of a gelatinous translucent precipitate which has exactly the same characters and composition. This is protein. The existence of any such radical free from sulphur is denied.

Protein having been regarded as the basis of animal and vegetable fibrin, albumen, casein, and gluten, they have been classed under the "proteinaceous alimentary principle," by Dr. Pereira.

Proteina'ceous, Proteinous.

Pro'teinous, Proteina'ceous, Proteino'sus, Pro'teic, (F.) Protéineux, Protéique. Of or belonging to protein,—as a proteinous alimentary principle. For proteinous, albuminous is now generally substituted.

Protéineux, Proteinous.

Protéique, Proteinous.

Protensio'nes Glandula'res, (pro, and tendere, tensum, 'to stretch,') Mammillary eminences.

Prothèse, Prosthesis.

Proth'esis, Prosthesis.

Protme'sis, (προτμησις, from pro, and τεμνω, 'I cut,') Umbilicus.

Pro'to, (πρωτος, 'first,') in composition, first.

Protoazotate de Mercure, Hydrargyri nitras.

Protococ'cus Denta'lis. A fungus occurring in connection with vegetative decay or caries of the teeth.

Protog'ala, gen. Protogalac'tis, (proto, and γαλα, 'milk,') Colostrum.

Proto'la'tros, (proto, and ιατρος, 'physician,') Archiater.

Protomed'icus, Archiater.

Pro'tomus, (pro, and τομή, 'section,') Dissector.

Protoneph'rium, (proto, and νεφρος, 'a kidney,') Corpus Wolffianum.

Protoörganism, Protoörganis'mus. A being whose animal or vegetable nature is so difficult of determination, that it might be referred to either one or the other division of organized bodies. See Zoophyte.

Protopathi'a, (proto, and παθος, 'affection,') Idiopathia.

Pro'tophyte, Protophy'ton, (proto, and φυτον,

'a plant.') A vegetable production at the foot of the scale; as a cryptogamous plant, — a fungus. Various diseases have been ascribed to the reception of protophytes into the blood.

Proto'pia. A derivative from opium, similar to Cryptopia.

Pro'toplasm, Protoplas'ma, (proto, and πλασσω, 'I form.') The blastema in the sense of cyto-blastema; the cell-sap or cell-contents. Also, according to Robin, the liquid contained in the cavities of vegetable cells, or in the embryonic cells, when the embryo has as yet no blood; which liquid is capable, like the liquor sanguinis, of furnishing materials for the origin of other anatomical elements.

Protoplas'mic. Relating to protoplasm.

PROTOPLAS'MIC PROC'ESSES of Die'ters, Ram-ifying Processes. The thick-branched processes of the large centric ganglion cells.

Pro'toplast, (proto, and πλασσω, 'I form.') A primary formation. A first-formed organized body — the parent of all others.

Protos'poros, (proto, and σπειρω, 'I sow,') Os uteri.

Protozo'ids, (proto, ζωον, 'an animal,' and ειδος, 'resemblance,') Spermatozoa.

Protozo'on, (F.) Protozoaire, (proto, and ζωον, 'an animal,') An animal lowest in the scale, — as infusoria, sponges, &c.

Pro'trahens Len'tis, (pro, and trahere, 'to draw,') Ciliary muscle.

Protru'sion, (pro, and trudere, trusum, 'to thrust,') Prolapsus.

Protru'sor, Detrusor urinæ.

Protu'berance, Protuberan'tia, Extuberan'tio, Prominen'tia, Exerescen'tia, Extuberan'tia, (pro, 'before,' and tuber, 'a projection,') Bosse, (F.) Bosse. A name given to rough, unequal protuberances, seen at the surface of certain organs; the parietal protuberances, for example.

PROTU'BERANCE, AN'NULAR, Pons Varolii — p. Cerebral, Medulla oblongata, Pons Varolii — p. Cylindroide, Cornu Ammonis.

Protuberan'tia, Eminence, Protuberance — p. Annularis Willisii, Pons Varolii — p. Basilaris, Pons Varolii — p. Cylindrica, Cornu Ammonis.

Proud Flesh, Fungosity.

Proune, Prunus domestica.

Proventric'ulus, Bul'bus glandulo'sus, Infundib'ulum, Sec'ond stom'ach, (pro, and ventriculus, 'the stomach,') A bulbous expansion at the termination of the œsophagus, immediately above the gizzard of birds, the walls of which are thickly studded with a layer of glands or follicles which secrete a digestive fluid.

Prov'erb, Med'ical, Prover'bium med'icum. A proverbial expression frequently contains sound sense in its directions. In medicine, the greatest collection is in the Regimen of Health of the School of Salernum, composed, in the 11th century, by John of Milan. Yet, although good sense is often inculcated, we frequently meet with the reverse.

Most of the proverbs are hygienic. The following are a few:

1. Qu' après la soupe un coupe d'excellent vin
Tire un écu de la poche du médecin.
2. Surge quintâ, prande nonâ, cœna quintâ, dormi nonâ, nec est mortî vita prona.
3. Nunquam recte corpus exerceri sine animo, neque animum sine corpore posse.
4. Viande bien machée est à demi digérée.
5. Optimum condimentum fames.
Appetite is the best sauce.
6. Plures occidit gula quam gladius.
7. Early to bed and early to rise,
Makes a man healthy, wealthy, and wise.
8. One man's meat's another man's poison.
9. An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure.

Prover'sio, (pro, and vertere, versum, 'to turn,') Anteversion.

Provins, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Chalybeate springs in the department of Seine-et-Marne, France, which contain carbonic acid and iron.

Provocato'rius, (pro, and vocare, vocatum, 'to call,') Intercalary.

Prox'imad, see Proximal aspect.

Prox'imal, (proximus, 'next,') Proximate; nearest; next.

PROX'IMAL AS'PECT. An aspect towards the trunk, in the course of an extremity. (Barclay.) Prox'imad is used by the same writer adverbially to signify 'towards the trunk.'

Prox'imate Prin'ciples, see Principles.

Pru'na, Anthrax.

Prune, Prunum.

PRUNE JUICE EXPECTORA'TION or SPU'TA. The sputa resembling prune juice, which occur in the third or purulent stage of pneumonia.

Pruneau, Prunum.

Prunel'la, (dim. of prunum,) Angina pectoris, Aphthæ, Cynanche, (all from [G.] Braune, 'sore-throat,') Pupil.

PRUNEL'LA, P. vulga'ris seu officina'lis, Brunel'la, Consol'ida mi'nor, Sym'phytum mi'nus, Self-heal, Healall, Bu'gle, (F.) Prunelle, Brunelle. Ord. Labiatae. Ser. Syst. Didynamia Gymnospermia. This plant has been recommended as an astringent in hemorrhages and fluxes; and, also, in gargles against aphthæ, and in inflammation of the fauces; hence its name, from (G.) Braune, 'sorethroat.'

Prunel'læ Sal, Potassæ nitras fusus sulphatis paucillo mixtus.

Prunelle, Prunella, Pupil.

Prunellier, (dim. of prunus,) Prunus spinosa.

Prunelloe, Prunum Brignolense.

Prune'ola Sylves'tris, Prunus spinosa.

Prunes, see Prunum — p. Medicated, see Prunum — p. Pulp of, Pruni pulpa.

Pru'ni Pul'pa, Pulp of prunes. (Take of prunes a sufficient quantity, soften them in the vapor of boiling water, and, having separated the stones, beat the remainder in a marble mortar and press through a hair sieve.)

Prunier, Prunus domestica — p. Sauvage, Prunus spinosa.

Pru'num, Coccyme'lon. A dried Plum, a Prune, (F.) Pruneau. Three sorts of prunes have been usually ranked among the articles of the materia medica. 1. The Prunum Brignolense, Brignole plum or Prunelloe, from Brignole in Provence. It is of a reddish-yellow color; and has a very grateful, sweet, subacid taste. 2. The Prunum Gallicum, the French Prune. 3. The Prunum Damascenum, Dam'son, formerly Dam'ascene, Brab'ylon. All these possess the same general properties as the other summer fruits. They are emollient and laxative. Pru'num (Ph. U. S., 1873) is the fruit of Prunus domestica. Under the name of Medicated Prunes, a confection is made by adding prunes to concentrated infusion of senna, and evaporating with a gentle heat, adding sugar.

Pru'num STELLA'TUM, Averrhoa carambola.

Pru'nus Aca'cia, (κρυων,) Prunus padus.

Pru'nus ARMENI'ACA, Armeni'aca vulga'ris seu epiro'tica. The A'pricot, A'pricock, Bericoc'cæ, Præcoc'ia, (F.) Abricotier. Ord. Rosaceæ. Ser. Syst. Icosandria Monogynia. The apricot, Me'lum Armeni'acum, (F.) Abricot, when ripe, is easily digested, and considered as a great delicacy.

Pru'nus A'vium, P. cer'asus seu sylves'tris seu macrophyl'la, Cer'asus a'vium seu ni'gra seu dul'cis, Black Cher'ry Tree, (F.) Merisier. The fruit is eaten; and a gum exudes from the tree, the properties of which are like those of gum Arabic.

Pru'nus CAP'ULIN, Capuli, grows in the open fields of Peru; and is cultivated in gardens in the towns. The fruit is acid, and not often eaten; but on account of its agreeable odor it is used in making Pucheros de flores; or with odoriferous flowers to perfume linen.

PRUNUS CER'ASUS, Cer'asus ac'ida seu horten'sis seu vulgaris seu rubra. The Red Cherry Tree, (F.) Cerisier. The fruit, Cer'asum, Cera'sion, has a pleasant, acidulous, sweet flavor. It is wholesome. See Prunus avium.

PRUNUS DOMES'TICA. The Plum or Dam'son tree, Coccyne'lea, Proune, (F.) Prunier ordinaire. The damson, when perfectly ripe, affords a wholesome fruit for pies, tarts, &c. It is gently laxative. See Prunum.

PRUNUS HORTEN'SIS, P. cerasus.

PRUNUS INSIT'IA. The Bullace Plum Tree. The fruit of this tree is used like the damson.

PRUNUS LAUROCER'ASUS, Cer'asus laurocerasus, Pa'dus laurocerasus, Poi'son Lau'rel, Cher'ry Laurel, Common Laurel, Laurocerasus, (F.) Laurier-cerise, L. amandier, L. de Trébisonde. The leaves, Laurocer'asus, (Ph. B., 1867,) have a bitter, styptic taste, with the flavor of bitter almonds. The flowers have a similar flavor. The powdered leaves, applied to the nostrils, excite sneezing. The flavor of the leaves has given occasion to their being employed in tarts, custards, &c.; but in large quantities they are poisonous. The poisonous principle is the prussic acid. The distilled water, called Laurel-water, Eau Distillée de Laurier-cerise, is poisonous. (See Poisons, Table of.) An AQUA LAUROCER'ASI, Cherry-laurel-water, was official in the Edinburgh, Dublin, and British (1867) Pharmacopœias. Dose, ℥xxx. to f3j.

PRUNUS MACROPHYL'LA, P. avium.

PRUNUS PA'DUS, Pa'dus, P. avium, Cer'asus Pa'dus seu racemo'sa sylves'tris, Wild cluster or Bird Cher'ry Tree, (Sc.) Hag'berry, Hack'berry, (Prov.) Heck'berry, (F.) Cerisier à grappes, Bois puant. The bark of the tree has a fragrant smell and a bitter, subastringent taste, somewhat similar to that of bitter almonds. It has been recommended in intermittents, &c., in the form of decoction. The berries have been used in dysentery.

PRUNUS SEBESTE'NA, Sebestena.

PRUNUS SPINO'SA. The Sloe Tree, P. Sylves'tris seu Aca'cia, Agriococcime'lea, Agru'na, Agru'ne'la, (F.) Prunellier, Prunier sauvage. The fruit—the sloe—is sometimes employed in gargles, and was formerly much used in hemorrhage, owing to its astringent properties. The Aca'cia nostras seu German'ica seu vulgaris, Prune'ola sylves'tris, Suc'cus acaciz nostrat'is, S. acaciz Germanicæ inspissat'us, is obtained from this.

PRUNUS SYLVES'TRIS, P. avium, P. spinosa.

PRUNUS VIRGINIA'NA, Cer'asus sero'tina seu Virginia'na, Choke Cher'ry, Wild Cher'ry Tree, (F.) Cerisier de Virginie. The bark of this tree has been found useful in intermittents. The leaves are poisonous to certain animals, and the berries intoxicate different kinds of birds. The Indians use the bark in the cure of syphilis. It is bitter and astringent, and possesses some aromatic warmth, and likewise a sedative quality. It is stimulant and tonic. The leaves and bark yield prussic acid. The distilled oil of the bark is very nearly identical with that of the bitter almond. A strong decoction of the bark is antelmintic.

PRUNUS VULGA'RIS, P. padus.

Prurig'inous, Pruriginosus, (F.) Pruriginæus, (from prurigé.) Relating, or belonging to, or resembling prurigo.

Pruri'go, gen. Prurig'inis, Pruri'tus, Chris'ma, (prurio, pruritus, 'I itch.') The word is often used synonymously with itching. Willan and Bateman use the term for a genus of cutaneous diseases, the characteristic symptoms of which are a severe itching, accompanied by an eruption of papule of nearly the same color as the adjoining cuticle; Cnes'mos, Sca'bies papuli-formis, Exor'mia pruri'go, (F.) Psore papuleuse. It affects the whole surface of the skin, under three varieties of form—the P. mi'tis, P. formi'cans, P. sen'ilis, &c., as well as some parts of the body, as the P. pod'icis, and P. puden'di mul'i-ebris, Puden'dagra pruri'ens, Pruri'tus vul'væ, (F.) Prurit de la vulve, P. vulvaire.

PRURI'GO, Heat—p. Pedicularis, Phtheiri'asis.

Prurit, Itching—p. de la Vulve, see Prurigo—p. Vulvaire, see Prurigo.

Pruri'tus, (prurio, 'I itch,') Gargalus, Heat, Itching, Prurigo.

PRURI'TUS A'NI, 'itching of the anus.' Usually a symptom of rectal or intestinal irritation, disease of the rectum, constipation, &c. The symptoms may be relieved by external applications, but the cause must also be sought for and treated.

PRURI'TUS VUL'VÆ, see Prurigo.

Prus'sian Blue, Fer'rum Zöb'ticum seu Borus'sicum seu Cyanogena'tum seu oxydula'tum hydrocyan'icum, Fer'ri Ferrocy'anas seu Ferrocy'anure'tum seu Ferrocy'an'idum (Ph. U. S., 1873) seu Cyanure'tum seu Percyan'idum, Borus'sias seu Prus'sias seu Hydrocy'anas Fer'ri, Ceru'leum Borus'sicum seu Berolinen'se, Tritohydroferrocy'ana'te, Ferrocy'anide, Ferrocy'anuret or Ferroprus'siate of iron, (F.) Bleu de Prusse, B. de Berlin, Cyanure Ferroso-ferrique, Ferri Ferrocy'an'idum, F. Ferrocy'anure'tum, Pure Prussian Blue, is directed, in the Ph. U. S., to be made by adding a solution of ferrocyanide of potassium to a solution of tersulphate of iron, filtering the liquid, and washing the precipitate until the washings pass nearly tasteless, and drying it. This salt is chiefly used in the preparation of the hydrocyanic acid and the cyanide of mercury. It has been advised in the treatment of intermittents, and in epilepsy and scrofulosis. Externally, it has been applied to ill-conditioned ulcers, (3j. to 3j. of cerate.) Dose, four to six grains.

Prus'sic Acid, Hydrocyanic acid.

Psalid'ium, (ψαλίδιον, dim. of psalis.) Fornix.

Psa'lis, (ψαλς.) Fornix, Scissors.

Psalter'ium, (ψαλτηριον, dim. of ψαλτηρ, 'a psalter,') Lyra, Omasum.

Psam'ma, (ψαμμη.) see Gravel.

Psammis'mus, (ψαμμις.) Amnis'mus, Gammis'mus, (from ψαμμος, 'sand,') Arena'tio. The application of sand to any part of the body for the cure of disease, as by means of a hot sand-bath.

Psammo'des, (ψαμμοδης, from ψαμμος, and odes.) Sabulous.

Psammo'ma, (ψαμμος, 'sand,' and oma, (F.) Tumor arénacæ.) A tumor whose contents consist of globular lime-concretions, or sand-bodies, Corpora chalcædonica, limited to the choroid plexuses and dura mater.

Psam'mus, (ψαμμος.) see Gravel.

Psautier, (from [L.] psalterium.) Omasum.

Psellis'mus, (ψελλισμος.) Psel'lotes, (from ψελλίζω, 'I stutter.') Imperfect or depraved state of the articulation. A genus in the class Pneumatica, order Phonica, of Good.

PSELLIS'MUS NA'SITAS, Rhinophonia—p. Rhotacismus, Rotacism.

Psel'lotes, (ψελλοτης.) Balbuties, Psellismus.

Pseudac'ia Odora'ta, (pseudo, and acacia.) Robinia pseudacacia.

Pseudac'oë, Pseudaco'ia, Pseudeco'ia, (pseudo, and akou, 'audition;') Pseudacu'sis. False hearing.

Pseudac'orus, (pseudo, and acorus.) Iris pseudacorus.

Pseudasthæ'sia, Sen'sus perversus, (pseudo, and αισθανομαι, 'I feel,' αισθησις, 'feeling,') Parap'sis illusoria, Pseud'aphê, Pseudaph'ia, (F.) Pseudesthæ'sie. Depraved feeling. Imaginary sense of touch or general feeling in organs that have no existence. Common to those who have suffered amputation, and to hypochondriacs and the insane.

Pseuda'lei Mor'bi, (ψευδαλμοι, 'counterfeit,' from ψευδής, 'false,') Feigned diseases.

Pseuda'leus Trich'ina, Trichina spiralis.

Pseudangusturi'num, (pseudo, and angustura, 'false angustura,') Brucine.

Pseud'aphē, (pseudo, and ἀφή, 'touch, feeling,') Pseudæsthesia.

Pseudarthro'sis, Pseudarticula'tio, Pseudarticulus, Articulus No'thus, Articula'tio notha seu artificia'lis, (pseudo, and ἀρθρον, 'a joint,') A false joint or articulation, Articulus no'thus seu spurius seu præternatura'lis, (F.) Articulation surnuméraire.

Pseudarticula'tio, Pseudarthrosis.

Pseudeco'ia, Pseudæcoe.

Pseudelmin'thes, (pseudo, and ελμινς, gen. ελμινθος, 'a worm,') Ectozoa.

Pseudenceph'alus, Paraceph'alus, (pseudo, and εγκεφαλος, 'the encephalon,') A monster whose cranium is open in its whole extent, from before to behind, its base supporting a vascular tumor.

Pseudesthêsie, Pseudæsthesia.

Pseudino'ma, gen. Pseudino'matis, (pseudo, and ινος, 'fibre,' and oma,) Scirrhus.

Pseu'do, (ψευδής,) False—p. Asthma, Dyspnœa.

Pseudoblep'sia, Pseudoblep'sis, Pseudora'sis, Suffusio oculi, (pseudo, and βλέψας, 'sight,') Pseudop'sia, Parop'sis illusoria, Suffusio, Phantasia, False sight. A generic name, used by Cullen for perversion of vision. See Metamorphopsia.

Pseudoblep'sis, Paropsis.

Pseudocal'culi, 'false calculi.' Coagulated blood, fibrin, urostolith, &c., may assume such a shape as to resemble calculi, and be mistaken for them.

Pseudocarcino'ma (gen. Pseudocarcino'matis) La'bii, Cancer aquaticus.

Pseudocatarac'ta, see Cataract.

Pseudochro'mia, (pseudo, and χρωμα, 'color,') Achromatopsia.

Pseu'docroup, Asthma thymicum.

Pseudocye'sis, (pseudo, and κυσις, 'pregnancy,') Pregnancy, false—p. Molaris, Mole.

Pseudoencephali'tis, (pseudoencephalus, and itis,) Hydrancephaloid disease.

Pseudoerysip'elas, (pseudo, and erysipelas,) Diffuse phlegmonous inflammation of the skin, red and painful, with fever, and generally ending in suppuration.

Pseudofe'ver, Irritation, morbid.

Pseudogeus'ia, Pseudogen'sis, Pseudogeus'tia, (pseudo, and γευσις, 'taste,') Hallucina'tio gustûs. False taste.

Pseudogeus'tia, Pseudogeusia.

Pseudogonorrhœ'a, (pseudo, and gonorrhœa,) See Gonorrhœa.

Pseudohelmin'thes, (pseudo, and ελμινς, gen. ελμινθος, 'a worm,') Ectozoa.

Pseudohæmorrhagic, (pseudo, and hæmorrhagia,) A sanguineous transudation—a false hemorrhage, without rupture of a vessel.

Pseudohypertroph'ic Mus'cular Paral'ysis or Pal'sy, see Paralysis, pseudohypertrophic.

Pseudoleukæ'mia, (pseudo, λευκæ, 'white,' and αἷμα, 'blood,') The affection usually described as Hodgkin's disease. See Hodgkin.

Pseudoli'en, gen. Pseudolie'nis, Pseudosplen, (pseudo, and lien, 'spleen,') Glands situate in the neighborhood of the spleen; probably lymphatic glands.

Pseudomechoaca'na, Convolvulus panduratus.

Pseudomed'icus, (pseudo, and medicus, 'a physician,') Charlatan.

Pseudomelanot'ic Forma'tion, (pseudo, and melanosis,) see Anthracosis—p. Meninx, Membrane, false—p. Metamorphosis polyposa, Polyposus.

Pseudomembra'na, (pseudo, and membrana,) Membrane, false.

Pseudomembrane, Membrane, false.

Pseudomem'branous, Pseudomembrano'sus, (F.) Pseudomembraneux. Relating or appertaining to false membranes.

Pseudomeningi'tis, (pseudo, and meningitis,) A morbid state of functional disturbance of the brain and meninges.

Pseudomor'phia, Oxymor'phia, Phor'mia. An alkaloid discovered by Pelletier more than thirty years ago, but seldom used medicinally.

Pseudonarcis'sus, Narcissus pseudonarcissus.

Pseudonar'cotism. A nervous condition, having the appearance of narcosis, sometimes met with at the menstrual periods or at the change of life.

Pseudonoma'nia, (pseudo, and mania,) A form of insanity, which is characterized by a morbid propensity for lying.

Pseudoparal'ysis, 'false paralysis,' see Dystaxia.

PSEUDOPARAL'YSIS AG'ITANS, Dystaxia.

Pseudopar'asites, Ectozoa.

Pseudoperipneumo'nia, Peripneumonia notha.

Pseudophlogo'sis Ventric'uli Resoluti'va et Colliquati'va, (pseudo, and φλογωσις, 'inflammation,') Gastromalacia.

Pseudophthi'sis, 'false phthisis.' Emaciation occasioned by other causes than organic lesion of the lungs.

Pseu'doplasm, see Pseudoplasmata.

Pseudoplas'mata, pl. of Pseudoplas'ma, (pseudo, and πλασσω, 'I form,') A term applied to malignant heterologous tumors, pseudoplasms.

Pseudopleuri'tis, gen. Pseudopleuritidis, Pleurodynia—p. Polypi, see Polypi—p. Pyrethrum, Achillea ptarmica—p. Spleen, Pseudolien.

Pseudopneumo'nia, Peripneumonia notha.

Pseudopneumoni'tis, gen. Pseudopneumonitidis, Peripneumonia notha.

Pseudop'sia, (pseudo, and ὄψις, 'vision,') Pseudoblepsia.

Pseudor'aphæ, (pseudo, and ραφή, 'a suture,') False sutures, as the transverse fissures running into the lambdoidal suture on each side.

Pseudora'sis, (pseudo, and ὀραω, 'I see,') Pseudoblepsia.

Pseudorex'ia, Pseudorex'is, (pseudo, and ὀρεξις, 'appetite,') False appetite. See Malaxia.

Pseudorhon'chus, (pseudo, and ρογχος, 'rattle,') A sound heard during respiration, which appears to be produced, like the ordinary rhonchi, in the air-tubes, but is exterior to them—as in the case of pleural pseudorhonchi. See Rattle and Râle.

Pseudoscop'ic, Pseudoscop'icus, (pseudo, and σκοπια, 'I view,') Conveying false impressions to the eye; as where projecting surfaces are seen depressed, and conversely.

Pseudos'mia, Pseudosphre'sia, Pseudosphre'sis, (pseudo, and σμη, 'smell,') False sense of smell.

Pseudosphre'sia, (pseudo, and σφρησις, 'smell,') Pseudosmia.

Pseudosyph'ilis, Syphilis pseudosyphilis.

Pseudothan'atus, (pseudo, and θάνατος, 'death,') Asphyxia.

Pseudotox'in, (pseudo, and τοξικον, 'poison,') Extractive matter obtained from belladonna.

Pseudovari'olæ, Varicella.

Pseud'y-men, gen. Pseud'y-menis, (pseudo, and ὑμην, 'a membrane,') Membrane, false.

Psidium Pomiferum. The Ap'ple Gua'va, Gua'va, Guayava. Ord. Myrtaceæ. This plant and P. Pyriferum bear fruits; those of the former like apples—of the latter like pears. The apple kind has an acid flavor; the other is sweet. Of the inner pulp of either, the natives of the Indies make jellies, and, of the outer rind, tarts, marmalade.

lades, &c. They are somewhat astringent: this quality, indeed, exists in every part of the tree, and abundantly in the leafbuds, which are occasionally boiled with barley and liquorice as an excellent drink in diarrhoea. A simple decoction of the leaves is said to be useful in the itch and most cutaneous eruptions.

Psilo'sis, (ψιλωσις, from ψιλω, 'I remove the hair,') Depilation.

Psilo'thrum, (ψιλωθρον, from ψιλω, 'I remove the hair,') Bryonia alba, Depilatory.

Psimy'thon, (ψιμυθιον,) Plumbi subcarbonas.

Psimy'thus, (ψιμυθος,) Plumbi subcarbonas.

Pso'a, (ψωα,) Dysodia.

Pso'æ, (ψωαι,) Psoi'æ, Psy'æ, see Lumbi, 'the loins.' The psoæ muscles; Alo'peces, Neurom'e'træ.

Pso'as Ab'scess, Lumbar abscess.

Pso'as MAG'NUS, (ψωαι, 'the loins,') Pso'as seu lumb'a'ris inter'nus, P. major, Femur novem'tium sex'tus, (F.) Pré-lombo-trochantin, Pré-lombo-trochantinien (Ch.). A muscle, seated on the lateral parts of the lumbar portion of the vertebral column; and passing down to the superior and anterior part of the thigh. It is long, fusiform, and attached, above, to the body and transverse processes of the first four lumbar vertebrae and last dorsal. Below, it terminates by a very thick tendon, common to it and the iliacus muscle, — which is inserted into the top of the lesser trochanter. This muscle bends the thigh upon the pelvis, and carries it in rotation outwards. It may, also, bend the pelvis on the thigh, and the loins on the pelvis. It acts considerably in station and progression.

Pso'as PAR'VUS, P. mi'nor, (F.) Pré-lombo-pu'bien (Ch.). A muscle situate anteriorly to the last. It is long, thin, flat, and narrow, and is attached, above, to the body of the last dorsal vertebrae, and, below, to the linea ileopectinea, by means of a slender tendon, which furnishes two expansions — one to the iliac aponeurosis, and the other to the pelvis. This muscle bends the vertebral column on the pelvis, and, reciprocally, the pelvis on the vertebral column.

Pso'dymus, (ψωαι, 'the loins,' and δνω, 'I mingle,') Gastrodidymus.

Psoi'æ, Psoæ.

Psoite, Psoitis.

Psoi'tis, gen. Psoi'tidis, Inflammat'io mus'culi Pso'as, Lumba'go inflammat'oria spasmod'ica, (F.) Psoite, Inflammation du muscle Psoas, (ψωαι, 'the loins,' 'the psoæ muscles,' and itis.) Inflammation of the psoas muscles and of the parts situate before the lumbar vertebrae; accompanied, from its commencement, by considerable fever, violent pains in the part affected, and in the thigh of the same side, which remains commonly half bent. Psoitis may terminate by suppuration, and form a lumbar abscess.

Pso'lè, (ψωλη,) Penis. Also, the glans when uncovered.

Pso'lon, (ψωλων,) Membrosus.

Psolon'cus, (psole, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') Swelling of the glans, or of the penis generally.

Pso'lus, (ψωλος, from psole.) One who has the glans uncovered. One who has been circumcised.

Psophom'eter, (psophus, and μετρον, 'a measure,') Stethoscope.

Pso'phus, (ψωφος,) a noise; a sound.

Pso'ra, (ψωρα, from ψωω, 'I scratch,') Sca'bies, Phly'sis seu Ecpye'sis Sca'bies, Scabi'ola, Itch, Scratch, Scotch fiddle, (Prov.) Ichet, Scrat, Yeeke, (Sc.) Reif, Youk, Yuke, Yeeke, (F.) Gale, Mal Saint-Main, Rogue, Psore. A contagious eruption of very minute pimples — pustular, vesicular, papular, intermixed, and alternating, itching intolerably and terminating in scabs. It is found to be connected with an insect of the genus Acarus; — the Ac'arus seu Sarcop'tes seu Sarcop'tus seu Sar- cocop'tes seu Phthi'rium seu Cheyle'tes Sca'biei, Ac'arus Ci'ro, Itch insect, Itch animal'cule, Itch mite, (F.) Ciron. The itch occupies, particularly, the spaces between the fingers, the back of the hands, wrists, elbows, axillae, groins, hams, &c., and rarely affects the face. The best applications, for its cure, are, — the Unguentum Sulphuris or Ung. Sulph. comp. night and morning; but the unpleasant smell of the sulphur has given occasion to the use of other means; — as the White Hellebore, Potassa in deliquescence, Muriate of Ammonia, Sulphuric Acid, &c. The repugnance to the smell of sulphur ought not, however, to be regarded; especially as, in the course of four or five days, it will, in almost all cases, produce a perfect cure.

The modern Parisian treatment, which consists in the free application of the ointment of Helmerich, removes the complaint in a day or two. See Parasites.

Pso'ra A'GRIA, Psoriasis inveterata.

Pso'ra EBRIORUM, Drunk'ard's Itch. An eruption, attended by afflicting itching, to which elderly people, who have been much addicted to drinking alcoholic liquors, are liable.

Pso'ra LEPRO'SA, Psoriasis — p. Squamosa, Psoriasis.

Pso'ra'lea, Psoralea pentaphylla — p. Eglandulosa, see Psoralea glandulosa.

PSORA'LEA ESCULEN'TA, Breadroot, Indian turnip, Pomme blanche ou de Prairie, (ψωραλιος, 'scurfy or scaly,' in reference to its scurfy glands or dots.) Ord. Leguminosae. A plant, resembling the beet in shape, which is found near the Rocky Mountains. It contains a white pulpy substance, which is sweet and palatable.

PSORA'LEA GLANDULO'SA, Alvaquil'la. A shrub, used in Chili as a vulnerary. The Paraguay tea is referred to it by M. Lenoble, of Montevideo. See Ilex Paraguensis. A leguminous plant called the Psora'lea Eglandulo'sa, P. mellitotoïdes, growing in Ohio, Illinois, and Southern Virginia, is a gently stimulant tonic.

PSORA'LEA MELLITOTOÏ'DES, see Psoralea glandulosa.

PSORA'LEA PENTAPHYL'LA, Psora'lea, Contrayer'va no'va, Mex'ican Contrayer'va. The root is little, if at all, inferior to the contrayerva in its medical properties; which, by the by, are unimportant.

Psore, Psora — p. Papuleuse, see Prurigo.

Psoréthyrie, (psora and ελθρον, 'vagina,') Vaginitis, granular.

Psorenter'ia, (psora, and εντερων, 'intestine,') Cholera, Psorentery.

Pso'rentery, Psorenter'ia. A peculiar condition of the solitary glands, in which they become smaller, yellowish, and prominent, the ileum appearing as if speckled with grains of sago. See Cholera.

Psori'asis or Psoria'sis, (ψωραισις,) formerly, the state of ψωρα, Lep'ra Willa'ni, Lepidoso'si psori'asis, Serpe'do, Serpi'go, Impeti'go (of some), Sca'bies sic'ca seu fer'i'na, Pso'ra lepro'sa seu squamo'sa, Sca'ly Tet'ter, Dry Scall, Dry Scall, (F.) Dartre squameuse lichenoïde, D. écailleuse, Grattelle, Gale miliaire, G. canine ou sèche. A cutaneous affection, consisting of patches of rough, amorphous scales; continuous, or of indeterminate outline; skin often chappy. Psoriasis occurs under a considerable variety of forms. The surface, under the scales, is more tender and irritable than in lepra, which psoriasis, in some respects, resembles. Dr. Willan has given names to eleven varieties of psoriasis: the chief of which are the Psori'asis gutta'ta, P. diffu'sa, one form of which is the Ba'ker's Itch, Psori'asis pisto'rum seu pisto'ris, (F.) Gale des Boulangers, the Grocer's Itch; and another, the Wash'erwoman's Scall or Itch, P. Lotri'cum, the P. gyra'ta, and

P. inveterata seu Pso'ra a'gria. The treatment of irritable psoriasis must be antiphlogistic, with the internal use of the fixed alkalies, sulphur, &c. They do better without any local application. The more local and less inflammatory forms are ameliorated by emollient and soothing applications; or by slightly stimulating means, sea-bathing, the Ung. hydrarg. nitrico-oxyd., Ung. zinci oxydi, &c.

Psoriasis rupioides is nothing more than Lepra albidoides, with the scales heaped up to form crusts.

Pso'ric, (ψωρικος), Pso'ricus, (F.) Psorique, Galleux, (from psora.) That which has the nature of itch. A medicine for curing the itch.

Psorocomi'um, (psora, and κομω, 'I take care of.') An hospital for those affected with itch.

Psoro'des, (Ψωρώδης) Psorous.

Pso'roid, Psoroï'des, (from psora, and ειδος, 'resemblance.') Resembling psora.

Psorophthal'mia, (ψωροφθαλμία), see Ophthalmia tarsi—p. Neonatorum, see Ophthalmia (purulent infantum).

Psorosperm'ia, (psora, and σπέρμα, from σπείρω, 'I sow,') Rai'ney's Cap'sules, Rai'ney's Cor'puscles or Bod'ies. Small oval transparent bodies found in the flesh of oxen, sheep, pigs, &c. They consist of granular matter, and lie within the sarcolemma. They lead to paralysis of the hind legs and nodular eruption. Somewhat similar bodies—psorosperms—have been detected in the liver of rabbits, and even in that of man.

Pso'rous, Psoro'sus, Psoro'des, (from psora.) Appertaining or relating to itch.

Psy'æ, (Ψυαι), Psœ.

Psychago'ga, Psychagogica.

Psychago'gica, (ψυχαγωγικά), Psychago'ga, (psycho, and αγω, 'I lead.') Medicines which resuscitate, when life seems extinct; as in syncope and apoplexy.

Psy'chal, Psychical.

Psy'chê, (ψυχή), Anima, Thymus.

Psy'cheism, (from psyche), Magnetism, animal.

Psychia'ter, gen. Psychia'tri, A'lienist. One who treats diseases of the mind—a Mad-doctor, A'lienist physic'ian, (F.) Médecin de fous, Aliéniste.

Psychiatri'a, (psycho, and ιατρεία, 'healing.') Treatment of diseases of the mind.

Psychiat'ric, Psychiatri'cus, (F.) Psychiat'rique. Relating to the treatment of diseases of the mind.

Psy'chical, Psy'chicus, (ψυχικός, from psyche), Psy'chal. That which relates to the mind or mental endowments. Psycholog'ical is not unfrequently used with the like signification.

Psy'chical or Psycholog'ical Medicine, Medici'na psy'chica seu psycholog'ica, includes the history, pathology, treatment, &c. of mental affections.

PSY'CHICAL PAL'SY, Palsy, hysterical.

Psy'cho, (from ψυχή, anima, 'the mind, the soul,') in composition, the mind, the soul.

Psycholog'ical, see Psychical.

Psychol'ogy, Psycholog'ia, (psycho, and λογος, 'discourse.') A treatise on the intellectual and moral faculties. Also the intellectual and moral faculties or sphere.

Psychonose'ma, (psycho, and νοσημα, 'disease,') see Psychoses.

Psychonosol'ogy, Psychonosolog'ia, (psycho, νοσος, 'disease,' and λογος, 'a description.') The doctrine of, or a treatise on, or a classification of, diseases of the mind.

Psychopathi'a, (psycho, and παθος, 'affection,') see Psychoses.

Psychop'athies, Psychoses.

Psychop'athist, Psychopathis'ta. One versed in diseases or affections of the mind.

Psychor'ages, (ψυχοραγής) Agoni'zans, Moribundus, Moribund, Fey, Fec, Fie, (psycho, and ραγή, 'rupture,') Dying; in Articulo Mortis, "in the article of death;" in extre'mis. Moribund means, also, one who is dying.

Psychorag'ia, (ψυχοραγία), Agony, Death.

Psychorrhag'ia, (ψυχορραγία), Agony, Death.

Psycho'sis, (psyche, and osis), Neurosis of the intellect. Disease of the mind; Psychop'athy, Psychonose'ma, Psychopathi'a.

Psychotherapei'a, Psychotherapeu'tics, (psyche, and θεραπεύω, 'I attend upon the sick,') Protracted application of the influence of the mind on the body to the treatment of disease.

Psychotherapeu'tics, (same etymon,) Psychotherapeia.

Psychot'ica, (from ψυχω, 'I animate,') Analeptica.

Psycho'tria Cro'cea, Palicourea crocea—p. Emetica, Ipecacuanha.

Psychot'rophum, (psycho, and τρέφειν, 'to nourish,') Betonica officinalis.

Psychrolu'sia, Psychrolu'tron, (ψυχρολουσία, from ψυχρος, 'cold,' and λουω, 'I wash,') A cold bath.

Psychropho'bia, (ψυχρος, 'cold,' and φοβος, 'fear,') Dread of cold, especially of cold water. Impressibility to cold.

Psych'tica, (ψυκτικός, 'cooling,') Refrigerants.

Psy'chus, (ψυχος), Cold.

Psydra'cia, quasi Ψυδρα, Ψυδρακία, 'cold drops,' (ψυδρακία, from ψυδραξ, gen. ψυδρακος, 'a small blister or pimple,') The ancients sometimes used this term for pimples; at other times, for vesicles. Willan and Bateman define Psydra'cium to be a small pustule, often irregularly circumscribed, producing but a slight elevation of the cuticle, and terminating in a laminated scab. Many of the psydria usually appear together, and become confluent; and, after the discharge of pus, they pour out a thin, watery humor, which frequently forms an irregular incrustation. Frank limits the term to a psoriform eruption, which differs from itch in not originating from an insect, and is not contagious;—perhaps the lichen. Authors have differed regarding its acceptance.

PSYDRA'CIA AC'NE, Acne.

PSYDRA'CIA THERMA'LIS, Poussée. An eruption on the surface of the skin, following profuse warm and hot bathing. See Poussée.

Psydra'cium, (sing. of Psydracia.) See Psydracia.

Psyl'lum, (from Ψυλλον, Ψυλλα, or Ψυλλος, 'a flea,' from the likeness of the seeds,) Plantago psyllum—p. Erectum, Plantago psyllum.

Ptar'mica, (πταρμική, from πταρειν, 'to sneeze,') Achillea ptarmica—p. Montana, Arnica montana—p. Vulgaris, Achillea ptarmica.

Ptar'micum, (πταρμικόν), Errhine, Sternutatory.

Ptar'mus, (πταρμος), Sneezing.

Pte'lea, (πτελεια), Ulmus.

PTÉ'LEA TRIFOLIA'TA, Shrubby trefoil, Sicamp dogwood, Stink'ing ash, Stink'ing prairie bush, Wingseed, Wafer ash, Hop tree; indigenous. Order, Xanthoxylaceæ. Flowering in June. Is said to be possessed of antiperiodic virtues, and to be anthelmintic.

Pte'ris, gen. Pter'idis, (πτερίς, 'a wing,' from the shape of the leaves.) Polypodium filix mas.

PTÉ'RIIS AQUILI'NA, Pter'ia, Thelyp'teris, Filix nymphæa seu fœmin'ea, Asplenium aquili'num, Common Brake or Bracken, Fœmale Fern, Eagle Fern, Brack'en, (F.) Fougère femelle, La grande Fougère. Nat. Ord. Filices. The root is considered to be anthelmintic; and as efficacious as that of the male fern in cases of tapeworm.

PTÉ'RIIS PALUS'TRIS, Asplenium filix fœmina.

Pter'na, (πτερινα and πτερινη), Calcaneum.

Pter'nium, (πτερινιον, dim. of pterna), Calcaneum.

Pternob'ates, (πτεροβατης, from pterna, and βαινω, 'I walk,') Calcigradus.

Pterocar'pus Erina'cea, see Kino—p. Marsupium, see Kino—p. Sandalinus, P. Santalinus.

PTEROCARPUS SANTALI'NUS, P. Santali'nus, (πτερον, 'a wing,' and καρπος, 'fruit,') Santalus seu Santalum rubrum, Red Sanders or Saunders tree, (F.) Santal rouge. Ord. Leguminosae. Sex. Syst. Diadelphia Decandria. Red Saunders wood. Santalum, (Ph. U. S.), Pterocarpus lignum, (Ph. B., 1867,) Lignum sandali'num, is used only as a coloring matter: it gives to rectified spirit a fine deep red. The juice of this tree, like that of P. Draco, affords a species of Dragon's blood.

Pterocaul'on Pycnostach'yum, (πτερον, 'a wing,' and καυλος, 'a stalk,' and πυκνος, 'thick,' and σπινος, 'an ear or spike,') Conyza pycnostach'ya, Blackroot; indigenous. Order, Compositae. The root is used as an alterative in the form of decoction. It is said to be possessed of cathartic properties.

Pteros'pora Andromede'a, (πτερον, 'a wing,' and σπορα, 'seed,' in allusion to the singular wing borne by the seeds,) Sca'tly Drag'onclaw, Drag'onroot, Fe'verroot, Al'bany beech'drop. An indigenous plant, Nat. Ord. Monotropae; Sex. Syst. Decandria Monogynia:—found in the State of New York, which blossoms in July. The root has been regarded as an anthelmintic, diuretic, emmenagogue, &c.; but is not used.

Pteryg'ion, Pteryg'ium, (πτερυγιον, dim. of pteryx, 'a wing,') A'la, Web [?], Web eye [?], Pin and Web [?], O'nyx, Pyo'sis, Un'guis, (F.) Drapeau, Onglet. A varicose excrescence of the conjunctiva, of a triangular shape, and commonly occurring at the inner angle of the eye; whence it extends over the cornea. Sometimes two or three pterygia occur on the same eye, and cover the whole cornea with a thick veil, which totally prevents vision. According to Scarpa, the ancients gave the name Pannic'ulus to this last complication. If the pterygion cannot be dispelled by means of discutient collyria, it must be removed by the surgeon.

Pteryg'ium, Pterygion, Scapula—p. Digiti, Paronychia—p. Lardaceum, Pinguecula—p. Pingue, Pinguecula.

PTERYGIUM UN'GUIS. A condition in which the epidermis coats, as it were, the nail with a thin transparent layer, that might be compared to the wing of a bat.

Pter'yo, in the composition of anatomical terms, means relating or appertaining to the pterygoid processes.

Pterygopal'atine, Pterygopalatinus. That which belongs to the pterygoid process and palate.

PTERYGOPAL'ATINE ARTERY, Arte'ria Pterygopalati'na seu Pharyngea superior. See Pharyngeal artery.

PTERYGOPAL'ATINE CANAL. A small canal, formed by the internal ala of the pterygoid process and the palate bone. It gives passage to the vessels of the same name.

Pterygopharynge'us, Constrictor pharyngis—p. Staphylinus, Circumflexus.

Pterygostaphyli'nus Inter'nus, Levator palati—p. Syndesmo-staphyli-pharyngien, Constrictor pharyngis.

Pterygo'des, (πτερυγος, from pteryx, and odes.) Alatus.

Pter'ygoid, Pterygoi'des, Pterygoide'us, Alifor'mis, (pteryx, and αἶος, 'form,') A name given to two processes at the inferior surface of the sphenoid bone; the two laminae which form them having been compared to wings. These alae or wings or processes,—Processus aliformes,—have been distinguished, according to their position, into internal (entopterygoid) and external.

PTER'YGOID AR'TERY, Vid'ian artery, Ram'ulus ductus pterygoide'i, Arte'ria pterygoide'a seu pharynge'a sup're'ma, arises from the internal maxillary artery, at the bottom of the zygomatic fossa, and enters the pterygoid canal with the nerve of the same name, to proceed to be distributed on the Eustachian tube and velum palati. The name pterygoid arteries is likewise given to the branches which the internal maxillary and some of its divisions, as the meningeal media and posterior temporalis profunda, furnish to the pterygoid muscles, behind the neck of the lower jaw.

PTER'YGOID BONE, Sphenoid.

PTER'YGOID CANAL, Vid'ian canal, Ductus pterygoideus, Canalis Vidianus, Pterygopalatine canal, (F.) Conduit pterygoïdien ou Vidien, is a narrow channel which traverses, in a direction from before to behind, the base of the pterygoid process, and gives passage to the pterygoid nerve. The foramina of the sphenoid, which terminate the canals, have the same epithets applied to them.

PTER'YGOID Fos'sa, Fos'sa Pterygoide'a, (F.) Fosse pterygoïdienne ou pterygoïde, is the depression which separates the two laminae or alae of the pterygoid process.

PTER'YGOID MUS'cles, Ala' res mus'culi, Alifor'mes mus'culi, are two in number. 1. The Pterygoide'us exte'rius seu mi'nor, (F.) Pterygo-colli-maxillaire, Petit pterygo-maxillaire, (Ch.) Petit pterygoïdien, Pterygoïdien externe, is a thick, short muscle, which arises, by short aponeuroses, from the outer surface of the external ala of the pterygoid process, and from the outer surface of the great ala of the sphenoid bone; and is inserted at the anterior part of the neck of the lower jawbone, and the corresponding part of the interarticular fibrocartilage. This muscle draws the condyle of the lower jaw and the interarticular ligament forwards. It carries the chin forwards, and to the opposite side. If the two external pterygoids act together, the jaw is carried directly forwards. 2. The Pterygoide'us internus seu ma'ior, Masse'ter inter'nus, La'tens in O'r'e, (F.) Grand Pterygo-maxillaire, Pterygo-anguli-maxillaire, Grand Pterygoïdien ou Pterygoïdien interne. A thick quadrilateral muscle, which is attached by short and very strong aponeuroses; above, to the pterygoid fossa, whence it proceeds downwards, backwards, and outwards, to be inserted into the inner surface of the ramus of the lower jaw, near its angle. This muscle raises the lower jaw, and carries it a little forwards. It also performs the grinding motion.

PTER'YGOID NERVES. These are two in number. I. The Pter'ygoid or Vid'ian Nerve. It arises from the posterior part of the sphenopalatine ganglion; traverses the Vidian canal of the sphenoid; and, beyond, divides into two filaments. 1. A superior cran'ial, Nervus superficialis sive petro'sus, which ascends into the cranium, and enters the hiatus of Fallopius to unite with the facial nerve. 2. An inferior or carot'id, Nervus profundus seu ma'ior, which traverses the carotid canal, and unites with the ascending branches of the superior cervical ganglion of the trisplanchnic. II. The Pterygoid Nerve, properly so called, Nervus musculi pterygoidei, is given off by the inferior maxillary branch of the 5th pair.

PTER'YGOID PROC'esses, see Pterygoid.

Pterygoide'us, Pterygoid.

Pterygoïdien Externe, Pterygoideus externus—p. Grand ou interne, Pterygoideus internus—p. Petit, Pterygoideus externus.

Pterygo'ma, gen. Pterygomatis, (πτερυγμα, from pteryx, and oma, 'a projecting or pendulous body,') A swelling of the vulva, which prevents coition.

Pterystaphylinus Exter'nus, Circumflex muscles of the palate.

Pter'yx, gen. Pter'ygis, (πτερυξ, gen. πτερυγος,) Ala.

Pti'los, (πτελος,) Deplumatio, Madarosis.

Ptilo'sis, (πτελωσις,) Deplumatio, Madarosis.

Ptis'ana, (πτισανη, 'peeled barley, and a decoction of the same,') Tisane—p. Communis, Decoctum hordei compositum—p. Hippocratica, Decoctum hordei.

Ptis'sana, (πτισανη,) Tisane.

Ptochia'ter, gen. Ptochia'tri, Ptochia'trus, (πτωχος, 'poor,' and ιατρος, 'a physician,') A physician to the poor, or to an establishment for the poor.

Ptochiatri'a. Practice among the poor. Also, an institution for the treatment of the diseases of the poor.

Ptochocomi'um, (πτωχος, 'poor,' and κομω, 'I take care of,') Ptochodochi'um, Ptochei'um, Ptochotrophe'um. An almshouse. An hospital for the poor.

Ptochodochi'um, (πτωχος, 'poor,' and δεχομαι, 'I receive,') Ptochocomium.

Ptochotrophe'um, (πτοχотροφειον, from πτωχος, 'poor,' and τρεφειν, 'to nourish,') Ptochocomium.

Pto'ma, gen. Pto'matis, (πτωμα,) Cadaver.

Pto'sis, (πτωσις,) Prolapsus—p. Bulbi oculi, Exophthalmia.

Pro'sis DIPLO'PIA, Synechia posterior.

Pro'sis IRIDIS, Iridocel'e, Her'nia seu Proci-den'tia seu Prolap'sus seu Staphylo'ma Iridis, Iridopty'sis. A prolapsus of the iris through a wound of the cornea. It is known by a blackish tubercle, which projects a little from the cornea in various forms, and which, owing to its supposed resemblance to the head of a fly, has been called Myioceph'alon and Myoceph'alon, (μυια, 'a fly,' and κεφαλη, 'head,')

Pro'sis PAL'PEBRÆ, Blepharoptosis.

Ptyal'agogue, (ptyalum, and αγω, 'I lead,') Sialogogue.

Pty'alín, (from ptyalum,) see Saliva.

Pty'alised, Salivated.

Pty'alism, Salivation.

Ptyalisme, (πτυαλισμος,) Salivation—p. Mercuriel, Salivation, mercurial.

Ptyalis'mus, Salivation—p. Acutus mellitus, see Salivation—p. Acutus sympatheticus, see Salivation—p. Hydrargyratus, Salivation, mercurial—p. Iners, Slaving—p. Mellitus, Melitoptyalismus—p. Mercurialis, Salivation, mercurial—p. Pyrosicus, Pyrosis.

Ptyal'ogogue, (ptyalum, and αγω, 'I drive,') Sialogogue.

Pty'alum, (πτυαλον,) Saliva.

Pty'elum, (πτυελον,) Saliva, Sputum.

Pty'sis, (πτυσις,) Exspuition.

Pty'sma, gen. Pty'sm'atis, (πτυσμα,) Saliva, Sputum.

Pty'smagogue, (pty'sma, and αγω, 'I drive,') Sialogogue.

Ptysmatis'chesis, Ptysmatos'chesis, (pty'sma, and ιχαν, 'to retain,') Suppression of pulmonary expectoration.

Ptysmatos'chesis, Ptysmatichesis.

Puanteur, (from putere, 'to smell badly,') Dysodia.

Pu'bens, 'at the age of puberty,' Ephebus.

Pu'ber, gen. Pu'beris, Ephebus.

Pu'beral, Pu'bera'lis, Pu'ber'ic or Pu'beric, Pu'ber'icus. Relating or appertaining to the age of puberty; as 'a puberal disease.'

Pu'bère, Ephebus.

Pu'ber'ic, Puberal.

Pu'bertas, Ephebia, Puberty.

Pu'ber'ty, Pu'bertas, He'bè, Pu'bes, Aphrodisia, Ephebi'a, Ephe'bia, Ephe'botes, Ephebo'synè, Pubes'cence, (F.) Puberté, (from pubescere, 'to begin to have hair on the chin and sexual organs,') The period of life at which young people of both sexes are pubes'cent or nubile. According to the civil law, puberty occurs at twelve years in females, and fourteen in males. The period varies somewhat in different climates, and in different individuals of the same climate. See Nubile.

Pu'bes, Pu'bis, Epis'chion, Cteis, Pec'ten; the Pu'bic re'gion. The middle part of the hypogastric region; so called, because it is covered with hair, in both sexes, at the period of puberty. The hair is also called Pu'bes, Lann'go seu Pi'li Pudendo'rum, Planta'rium, Fem'inal; and, of old, Epicten'ion and pubertas signified the same. See Tressoria and Pubic bone.

Pu'BES, Puberty.

Pubes'cence, Puberty.

Pubes'cent, see Puberty.

Pubiæ'us, Pubic.

Pu'bic, Pu'bian, Pu'bicus, Pubiæ'us, (F.) Pubien. That which belongs to or concerns the pubis.

Pu'bic ARCH, Arch of the Pu'bis, (F.) Arcade pubienne. The arch at the anterior part of the inferior circumference of the pelvis. It is more expanded in the female than in the male, to correspond with the additional functions which she has to execute.

Pu'bic ARTICULA'TION, Sym'physis Pu'bis, results from the junction of the ossa pubis. The medium of union is cartilage.

Pu'bic BONE, Pubis os.

Pu'bic LIG'AMENTS are two very solid, fibrous fasciæ, situate before and beneath the symphysis pubis, which they strengthen. The one is called the anterior pubic ligament, the other the inferior or subpubic.

Pu'bic RE'GION, Re'gio Pu'bis. The region of the pubes.

Pubien, Pubic.

Pubio-coccygien-annulaire, Pubio-coccyge'us annula'ris. Dumas gave this name to the levator ani and ischio-coccygeus, which he considers a single muscle. See Levator ani.

Pubio-femoral, Pectinalis—p. Femoralis, Adductor longus femoris—p. Ombilical, Pyramidalis abdominis—p. Prostaticus, Compressor prostatae—p. Sous-ombilical, Pyramidalis abdominis—p. Sternal, Rectus abdominis—p. Urethral, see Compressor urethrae.

Pubiot'omy, (pubes, and τομή, 'incision,') A modification of the operation of symphyseotomy, the section being made by a chain saw.

Pu'bis, Pubes, Pubis os.

Pu'BIS Os, Os Pect'inis, Episei'on, Episi'on, Epis'chion, Pu'bic bone, Sharebone, Barbone, (Sc.) Arkbein. The anterior part of the os innominatum; so called because it corresponds to the genital organs and pubic region. The angle of the pubis is formed by the union of the body and rami of each side.

Publicæ Par'tes, 'public parts.' Those organs are so called the object of whose functions is the nutrition of all the others. Such are the digestive and respiratory organs.

Pucelle, Virgin.

Pucha-pat, Pogostemon patchouli.

Puchu'ry, see Pichurim beans.

Puchy'ry, see Pichurim beans.

Puck'le, Papula.

Pud'dinggrass, Mentha pulegium.

Pud'dingpipe Tree, Cassia fistula.

Puden'da, pl. of pudendum, (from pudere, 'to be ashamed,') Genital organs — p. Muliebria, Vulva — p. Virorum, Pudibilia.

Pudend'agra, (pudenda, and agra, 'a seizure,') According to some, this term means pain in the genital parts, Dolor pudendo'rum, Ædæodyn'ia; according to others, it is synonymous with syphilis.

PUDEND'AGRA PRU'RIENS, Prurigo pudendi muliebris.

Puden'dal, Pudenda'lis. Relating or appertaining to the pudenda.

PUDEN'DAL HER'NIA, Vulvar or La'bial Her'nia, H. Pudenda'lis. Hernia which descends between the vagina and ramus ischii, and forms an oblong tumor in the labium; traceable in the pelvis as far as the os uteri.

Pudenda'lis, Pudendal.

PUDENDA'NIS LONGUS INFERIOR, see Sciatic nerve, lesser.

Puden'dum, Fe'male, Vulva — p. Muliebre, Vulva.

Puden'dus, Pudic.

Pudibil'ia. The male genital organs, Genitalia Viri, Viril'ia, Pensil'ia, Instrumenta, Puden'da viro'rum, Virilia membra, Andræda'ia.

Pu'dic, Pudicus, Puden'da, (F.) Honteux, (from pudere, 'to be ashamed,') That which causes shame. A name given to the genital organs, as well as to different other parts.

PU'DIC ARTERIES are distributed to the organs of generation. They are — 1. The inter'nal Pu'dic, Arteria Pudica, A. puden'da communis, (F.) Artère honteuse interne, A. Sous-pubienne (Ch.), Genital Artery. It is furnished by the hypogastric, and divides into two branches: the one — the inferior or perineal — which gives off the inferior hemorrhoidal and the artery of the septum; the other — the superior, (F.) Ischio-pénienne — which furnishes the transverse perineal artery, and divides into two branches — the artery of the corpus cavernosum, and the dorsalis penis. This latter, in the female, has the name Dorsal'is clitoridis. 2. The external Pu'dic Arteries, (F.) Artères scrotales ou vulvaires, (Ch.) A. honteuses externes, which are two in number. The one is superficial or subcutaneous, and the other deep-seated or subaponeurotic. They are given off from the femoral artery, or some one of its branches, and are distributed to the external parts of generation.

PU'DIC NERVE, (F.) Nerf honteux ou ischio-pénien or ischio-clitorien, is a branch furnished by the sacral plexus, which is distributed to the genital organs, and especially to the penis in man and the clitoris in woman.

Puel'la, Girl.

Puel'lus, (modified from puerulus,) A little boy.

Pu'er, Boy, Child, Infans.

Pu'era, Girl.

Pu'erile, Puerilis, (from puer, 'a child,') (F.) Puéril. Appertaining or relating to childhood.

Respiration puérile ou exagérée ou supplémentaire ou hypercésiculaire — a term applied to the respiration when it is heard loud through the stethoscope, as in healthy children.

Pueril'itas, Dementia of the aged.

Puerit'ia, see Age.

Puer'pera, (puer, and parere, 'to bring forth,') To'kos, Lo'chos, Enix'a, Le'cho, a Lying-in woman, (F.) Femme en Couche, Accouchée. A female in childbed. One recently delivered. The condition of a woman, recently delivered, is termed in France Puerpéralité — the puerperal state.

Puer'peral, Puerpera'lis. Relating to parturition and its consequences.

PUER'PERAL CONVULSIONS, Eclampsia gravidarum et parturientium.

PUER'PERAL FE'VER. Any fever occurring during the puerperal state — Febris puerpera'rum, Lechop'gra, Lochiocæli'tis, Metrophlebitis Puerpera'lis, Lochiop'gra, Lochop'gra, Me'tria, Childbed Fever. Most commonly restricted to a malignant variety of peritonitis.

Puerpéralité, see Puerpera.

Puerpe'rium, Childbed state.

Puer'perous, Parturient.

Puff, ([D.] poffen, 'to blow,') Lycoperdon.

Puffball, Lycoperdon, Leontodon taraxacum.

Puff, Veiled, see Cavernous respiration.

Puffiness, Inflatio, Sufflatio, Tumefactio mol'lis, (F.) Bouffissure, Boursouffure. A soft intumescence, without redness, which may be partial or general, and be produced by accumulation of serous fluid, extravasation of blood, effusion of air into the subcutaneous areolar tissue, &c. Puffiness is most frequently seen in the face and legs, and sometimes appears around a wound.

Pugil'us, (dim. of pugnis, 'the fist,') Drax, Dra'chion, Drag'ma, Drag'mis, (F.) Pincée. The quantity of any substance which may be taken with the ends of two or three fingers. The eighth part of a handful.

Pug'nus, Manipulus.

Pug'teeth, Canine teeth.

Puissance du Moule Intérieur, 'power of the internal mould,' Plastic force.

Puke, Emetic.

Puke weed, Lobelia inflata.

Pu'king, Vomiting, Regurgitation.

Pule'gium, (from pulex, 'a flea,' to which the odor is disagreeable,) Mentha pulegium — p. Cervinum, Mentha cervina.

Pu'lex, gen. Pu'licis, P. Ir'ritans, P. Vulga'ris. The common flea, (F.) Puce. A parasitic insect found on the bodies of man and animals. See Parasites.

PU'LEX PEN'ETRANS, Chique — p. Vulgaris, Pulex.

Pulica'ria Dysenter'ica, (from pulex, 'a flea,' to which the odor is disagreeable,) Inula dysenterica.

Pulica'ris, Pulicula'ris, (F.) Pulicaire. An epithet given to cutaneous eruptions resembling fleabites; and, also, to diseases in which such eruptions occur.

PULICA'NIS HER'NIA, Plantago psyllium.

Pul'ley, Trochlea.

Pull'na, Pil'na or Bil'na, Min'eral Waters of. These well-known Bohemian bitter springs contain sulphates of soda, magnesia, and potash, and chloride of magnesium, carbonate of magnesia, &c., but they are too nauseous to become popular.

Pullula'tion, Pullula'tio, (from pullulare, pullulatum, 'to bud,' 'budding,') A morbid production, which buds, as it were, — condyloma, for example.

Pul'mo, gen. Pulmo'nis, (by transposition of the letter l from pleumon,) Pneumon, Pleu'mon, Spiramen'tum an'ime, Ergaste'riou spir'itis, Flabellum et ventila'brum cor'dis, Lights. The essential organ of respiration, which is double, and occupies the two sides of the chest. The lungs, which are of a spongy, soft, flexible, compressible, and dilatable structure, fill exactly the two cavities of the thorax, and are separated from each other by the mediastinum and the heart. The right lung, which is shorter and broader than the left, is divided, by two oblique fissures, into three unequal lobes, Lobi seu Alæ pulmo'num. The left has only two lobes, and consequently only one fissure. At the internal surface of these organs, which is slightly concave, there is, about the middle, a pedicle, formed by the bronchia and pulmonary vessels, and called, by anatomists, the root of the lungs, (F.) Racine des Poumons. Essentially, the lungs are composed of prolongations and ramifications of the bronchia, and of the pulmonary arteries and veins,—the divisions of which are supported by a fine areolar tissue.

When the surface of the lungs is examined in a clear light, we may see, even through the pleura, that their parenchyma is formed by the aggregation of a multitude of small vesicles, of an irregularly spheroid or ovoid shape, full of air, and separated by white and opaque septa, constituting lozenge-shaped spaces, which are called lobules—lobuli seu insule pulmonales—and which are separated by interlobular areolar tissue. These lobules do not communicate with each other. By Dr. A. T. H. Waters, the series of air-sacs, connected with the extremity of each bronchial twig, has been called a lobulette. The vesicles are called Air-cells, Air or Lung Vesicles, Spiramenta seu Spiramina seu Cellulæ Pulmonum. See Cellules, bronchie. They who regard the bronchial tubes as terminating in elongated cavities have termed those cavities Air-sacs, Infundibula, Malpighian vesicles, Terminal cavities, &c., and the cuplike cavities observed in these have been called alveoli. They are the air-cells.

Along the partitions or septa is deposited, in greater or less quantity, black pulmonary matter, (F.) Matière pulmonaire noire, as it has been called, which seems to be normal. Sometimes, it is seen in points; at others, in spots. The color of the lungs varies according to age and other circumstances. In youth, it is more red; and afterwards, grayish or bluish; often, as if marbled. The pleura pulmonalis is their investing membrane. The air is carried to the lungs by means of the trachea and bronchia. The black venous blood, which requires oxygenation, is conveyed to them from the heart by the pulmonary artery; and when it has undergone this change, it is returned to the heart by the pulmonary veins. The bloodvessels inservient to the nutrition of the lungs are the bronchial arteries. The pulmonary lymphatics are very numerous. Some are superficial; others, deep-seated. They pass, for the most part, into the bronchial ganglions or glands. The nerves are furnished by the pulmonary plexus.

Pulmometer, (pulmo, and μετρον, 'a measure,') Spirometer.

Pulmometry, see Spirometer.

Ord. Boraginaceæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. The leaves of this plant have been used as demulcents and pectorals; partly from their resemblance to lungs—hence the name, from pulmo, gen. pulmonis, 'the lung'—and partly because they have a slightly mucilaginous taste. The plant is not worthy of notice.

PULMONARIA, Pneumonia—p. Arborea, Lichen pulmonaris—p. Gallica, Hieracium murorum—p. Officinalis, Pulmonaria—p. Virginica, Merterisia Virginica.

Pulmonary, Pulmonaria, Pulmonalis, (F.) Pulmonaire, (from pulmo.) That which relates or belongs to the lungs.

Son pulmonal (F.), 'pulmonal or pulmonary sound,' is the sound rendered by the lung on percussion. It means, also, a similar sound rendered on percussing other parts.

PULMONARY ARTERY, Arteria pulmonaris seu Pulmonalis, Ve'na arterio'sa, arises from the upper and left part of the right ventricle of the heart; whence it passes obliquely upwards and to the left side; dividing into two trunks, opposite the second dorsal vertebra—one passing to each lung. At its origin, it is furnished with three sigmoid or semilunar valves. It carries the blood to the lungs for aëration.

PULMONARY MATTER, BLACK, see Pulmo.

PULMONARY PLEXUS, Plexus pulmonaris. A considerable nervous network, situate behind the bronchia, which is formed by the filaments of the pneumogastric nerve or par vagum, and by other filaments from the inferior cervical ganglion and the first thoracic ganglia. This plexus forms a kind of areolar web, with numerous meshes of different sizes, in which vessels are lodged, surrounded by much areolar tissue. The plexus sends filaments to the bronchia, which they accompany to their extremities.

PULMONARY VEINS, Ve'næ pulmonares, Arteriae venosæ. These arise in the lungs from the final terminations of the arteries of the same name; collect in ramusculi and rami of greater and greater size, and ultimately unite in four trunks, two of which issue from each lung to open into the left auricle of the heart. The pulmonary veins have the same structure as the other veins of the body; from which they differ, in conveying arterial blood, as the pulmonary artery differs from the others in conveying venous blood. They carry the blood back to the heart after aëration.

Pulmones Tartariza'ti, Lithiasis pulmonum.

Pulmonia, (from pulmo,) Phthisis pulmonalis, Pneumonia.

Pulmon'ic, Pulmon'icus, Pneumon'icus, Pulmonaria'rius, Pneumon'ic, (F.) Pulmonique, Pneumonique. One affected with phthisis—one laboring under disease of the lungs. Anything relating to or belonging to the lungs. A medicine for the lungs.

Pulmoni'tis, (pulmo, and itis,) Pneumonia.

Pulp, Pul'pa, Pulpa'men, Sarx, (F.) Pulpe, Pulpolite. The soft and parenchymatous parts of vegetables reduced to a paste by the operation of pulping. The French Codex (1866) contains formulæ for the preparation of several pulpes. Applied, also, to parts of the human body, which have the characters of, or resemble, a pulp.

PULP, ATHEROM'ATOUS, see Atheroma—p. Branlike, see Atheroma.

PULP OF THE FIN'GERS, (F.) Pulpe des doigts. The fleshy extremity of the fingers.

Pulpeux, Pulpy.

Pulpe'zia, Apoplexy.

Pulp'ing, Pulpa'tion, Pulpa'tio, (from pulp.) An operation, the object of which is to reduce certain vegetable substances to a pulp. For this purpose they are bruised in a mortar, and then passed through a hair sieve by the aid of a wooden spatula, called a Pulper, (F.) Pulpoire.

Pulpoire, see Pulping.

Pulpolite, Pulp.

Pulp'y, Pulpo'sus, (from pulpa), (F.) Pulpeux. Full of pulp.

PULPY DEGENERATION OF DISEASE, Pulpefac'tion. An affection of the synovial membrane, in which the different points of bone, usually distinguishable, are obscured, and a doughy or pulpy sensation is detected by palpation over the articular ends of the bones, of the patella especially. When connected with syphilis—syphilitic joint of Colles—it is often complicated with periosteal thickening. Such pulpy or gelatinous degeneration was formerly described as white swelling.

Pulque, see Agave Americana.

Pulsa'tion, Pulsa'tio, Sphyg'mus, Sphyx'is, Pede'sis, Pedeth'mus, (from pulsare, pulsatum, 'to beat,') (F.) Battement. The beating of the heart and arteries. Also, the beating felt in an inflamed part.

PULSA'TION, AOR'TIC. A peculiar functional affection, characterized by violent throbbing, in the abdominal portion of the aorta especially, which may be confounded with aneurism; occurring in uterine disease, structural gastroduodenal affections, &c.

PULSA'TION, VE'NOUS, Pulsus venarum.

Pulsati'vus, Throbbing.

Pul'satory, Throbbing.

Pulse, Pul'sus, Pulsa'tio, Pul'sus seu Ic'tus cor'dis et arteria'rum, Incur'sus arteria'rum, Sphyg'mus, Sphyg'ma, Diasphyx'is, (F.) Pouls, (from pellere, pulsum, 'to beat,') Beating of the arteries, produced by the afflux of the blood propelled by the heart in its contractions. For the sake of convenience we choose the radial artery at the wrist to detect the precise character of the pulse. These characters relate to the number of pulsations in a given time; to their degrees of quickness; hardness and strength; to the equality or inequality either of the pulsations themselves or of their intervals; to the development or fullness of the artery, and to the different impressions it may produce on the finger.

The following estimates have been made of the pulse at various ages:

AGES.	NUMBER OF PULSATIONS PER MINUTE.
	HEBERDEN.	SÖMMERING.	MÜLLER.
In the embryo.....			150
At birth.....	130 to 140		150
One month.....	120
One year.....	120 to 108	120	115 to 130
Two years.....	108 to 90	110	100 to 115
Three years.....	90 to 80	90	90 to 100
Seven years.....	72		85 to 90
Twelve years.....	70
Puberty.....		80	80 to 85
Adult age.....		70	70 to 75
Old age.....		60	50 to 65

It does not appear that the pulse of the aged is less frequent, but the contrary. In general it is more frequent in females and in irritable persons than in males and those of an opposite temperament. In the healthy state the pulse, besides having the proper number of pulsations, is neither hard nor unusually soft; it is moderately developed, of a medium strength, and perfectly equal, both as regards the pulsations and their intervals. In disease it wanders, more or less, from these physiological conditions. The different characters of the pulse that have been recorded are remarkably numerous. In a dictionary it is necessary to detail them, although many of them are not now regarded, and some are ridiculous.

PULSE, AR'DENT, Pul'sus ar'dens, (F.) Pouls ardent, Pouls élevé. One which seems to raise itself to a point in order to strike the finger.

PULSE, BREATH, see Breath, pulse.

PULSE, CAP'RIZANT, Pul'sus Capri'zans seu dorcadi'zans seu gazell'ans seu fusa'lis, Goatleap pulse, (F.) Pouls caprisant. One which seems to leap like a goat, as it were; an imperfect dilatation of the artery being succeeded by a fuller and a stronger one.

PULSE, COM'PLEX, (F.) Pouls combiné ou composé ou compliqué. A pulse which has the character of several critical pulses united.

PULSE, CONTRACT'ED, (F.) Pouls serré ou concentré. One whose pulsations are narrow, deep, and slightly hard. See Concentration.

PULSE, CONVULSIVE, Pul'sus convulsivus, (F.) Pouls convulsif. That which is unequally frequent or unequally hard; in short, which resembles the irregular pulsations of a muscular fibre in a state of convulsion.

PULSE, CRIT'ICAL, Pulsus criticus. A pulse which, after having possessed the characters of irritation, becomes free, open, soft, &c.

PULSE, CURVE, see Sphygmograph.

PULSE, DE'CURTATE, Pulsus myurus. See, also, Myurus.

PULSE, DEEP, Pulsus profundus, (F.) Pouls profond. One which cannot be felt without difficulty, and without strong pressure by the finger.

PULSE, DEFIC'IENT, Pulsus defic'iens seu annuens et circumnu'ens, Flick'ering pulse, (F.) Pouls défaillant, P. insensible. One which seems, every instant, about to cease.

PULSE, DEPRESS'ED, Pul'sus depressus, (F.) Pouls déprimé. That which is deep and weak.

PULSE, DEVEL'OPED, (F.) Pouls développé. That which is broad, full, strong, and frequent.

PULSE, DICROT'IC or DICROT'AL, Pul'sus di'crotus seu bi'crotus seu intestina'lis seu bife'riens seu mallea'ris seu interci'sus seu du'plex, (F.) Pouls dicrote ou rebondissant ou redoublé. That in which the finger is struck twice at each pulsation—once lightly, the other time more strongly.

PULSE, E'QUAL, Pul'sus equalis. That in which the pulsations resemble each other, and return at equal intervals.

PULSE, FE'BRILE, Pul'sus febrilis. One very frequent.

PULSE, FEE'BLE, Weak pulse, Pul'sus deb'ilis, (F.) Pouls faible. One which strikes the finger feebly.

PULSE, FIL'IFORM, Thread'y pulse. One which resembles a thread slightly vibrating.

PULSE, FLICK'ERING, Pulse, deficient.

PULSE, FORM'ICANT, Pul'sus formi'cans, (F.) Pouls formicant. One which resembles, by being small and scarcely perceptible, the motion of an ant. It is met with especially in fatty degeneration of the heart.

PULSE, FRE'QUENT, (F.) Pouls agité ou précipité. One which strikes more frequently than usual in a given time.

PULSE, FULL, Pul'sus ple'nus, (F.) Pouls plein. One which gives the notion of vascular repletion.

PULSE, GOAT'LEAP, P. caprizant.

PULSE, GUT'TURAL, Pul'sus guttura'lis, (F.) Pouls guttural. A pulse which has been supposed to indicate the termination of affections of the throat.

PULSE, HARD, Pul'sus du'rus, (F.) Pouls dur. That in which the pulp of the finger seems to yield to the pulsation.

PULSE, HEC'TIC, Pul'sus hec'ticus. The weak, frequent pulse observed in hectic fever.

PULSE, HEMORRHOID'AL, (F.) Pouls des Hémorrhoides. A critical pulse, announcing the appearance of the hemorrhoidal flux. It is described as unequal, the pulsations not being alike in force, and still less the intervals.

PULSE, HEPAT'IC, (F.) Pouls du Foie. A pulse imagined to indicate affections of the liver.

PULSE, HYPERDIC'ROTOUS, see Hyperdicrotous — p. Hypodicrotous, see Hyperdicrotous.

PULSE, INF'E'RIOR, (F.) Pouls inf'érieur ou abdominal ou ventral. One supposed to announce evacuations below the diaphragm.

PULSE, INTERCUR'RENT, Pul'sus intercur'rens seu inter'cicens. One in which a superfluous pulsation seems to occur from time to time.

PULSE, INTERMIT'TENT, (F.) Pouls intercadent. One in which the pulsations fail from time to time.

PULSE, INTES'TINAL, (F.) Pouls des intestins, P. de la diarrhée. A critical pulse, presumed to announce an evacuation by the intestines.

PULSE, IN'TRICATE, Pul'sus intricat'us, (F.) Pouls embarrassé. That which is but little developed and unequally slow.

PULSE, IRREG'ULAR, Pul'sus anorma'lis. One whose pulsations are unequal, and return at unequal intervals.

PULSE OF IRRITA'TION, Pul'sus ab irritatio'nē seu nervi'nus seu acrit'icus. One which is frequent, hard, and contracted.

PULSE, JAR'RING, P. vibrating — p. Jerking, Pulse, sharp.

PULSE, LAN'GUID, (F.) Pouls languissant. A slow and feeble pulse.

PULSE, LARGE, Pul'sus cras'sus seu mag'nus, (F.) Pouls grand, P. large. That which is large and full.

PULSE, LONG. One which strikes the finger to a great extent in length.

PULSE, LOW, Pul'sus hu'milis, (F.) Pouls bas. One in which pulsations are scarcely perceptible.

PULSE, NA'SAL, (F.) Pouls nasal ou capital ou du Nez. One supposed to announce the end of an irritation in the nasal fossæ.

PULSE, NAT'URAL, (F.) Pouls naturel des adultes ou parfait ou des adultes ou modéré. One that is equal and regular in strength and frequency, compressible, and devoid of hardness.

PULSE, ORGAN'IC, (F.) Pouls organique. One which indicates the affected organ, or the organ by which an evacuation will take place.

PULSE, PEC'TORAL, (F.) Pouls de l'expectoration. A critical pulse, announcing the termination of some pulmonary irritation.

PULSE, QUICK. One which strikes sharply, but not forcibly, against the finger.

PULSE, REG'ULAR, Pul'sus norma'lis seu regula'ris. One whose pulsations are equal, and succeed each other at equal intervals.

PULSE, RESIST'ING, (F.) Pouls résistant. One a little tense, a little hard.

PULSE, RES'PIRATORY. The alternate condition of fulness and emptiness of the great vessels of the neck, synchronous with expiration and inspiration.

PULSE, SHARP, (F.) Pouls prompt ou vite ou vif. One which strikes the finger sharply, rapidly. When to a greater extent, it is called a jerking pulse.

PULSE, SHARP'TAILED, see Myurus.

PULSE, SIM'PLE, Pul'sus sim'plex. A critical pulse, indicating evacuation by one organ only.

PULSE, SLOW, Pul'sus tar'dus seu ra'rus, (F.) Pouls lent ou tardif ou rare. One which strikes the finger slowly.

PULSE, SMALL, Pul'sus par'vus, (F.) Pouls petit. One whose pulsations are slender and weak.

PULSE, SOFT, Pul'sus mol'lis, (F.) Pouls mou. One which yields under the finger.

PULSE, STOM'ACHAL, (F.) Pouls stomacal ou de l'estomac. One supposed to announce an evacuation by the stomach.

PULSE, STRONG, Pul'sus for'tis, (F.) Pouls fort, P. véhément. One which strikes the finger strongly.

PULSE, SUPE'RIOR, Pul'sus supe'rior, (F.) Pouls supérieur. A critical pulse, supervening on irritation of organs situate above the diaphragm.

PULSE, SUP'PLE, Pul'sus elas'ticus, (F.) Pouls souple. One in which the pulsations have strength without hardness.

PULSE OF SWEAT, Pul'sus sudora'lis, (F.) Pouls sudoral ou de la sueur. A critical pulse, indicating an approaching perspiration.

PULSE, TENSE, Cord'y pulse, Pul'sus ten'sus, (F.) Pouls tendu, P. roide. One in which the artery resembles a cord fixed at its two extremities. When resembling a wire, it is called wiry.

PULSE, THREAD'Y, P. filiform.

PULSE TRACE. In the registration of the pulse by the sphygmograph, a trace consists of a series of curves, each of which corresponds to a complete cardiac revolution.

PULSE, TREM'ULOUS, Pul'sus trem'ulus, (F.) Pouls tremblant ou palpitant. One in which each pulsation oscillates.

PULSE, TRICROT'IC or TRIC'ROTOUS, (tri, 'three,' and κροτάω, 'I strike.') The normal pulse trace is so called, from possessing three principal waves.

PULSE, UN'DULATING, Pul'sus fluctuo'sus seu flu'ens seu in'cicens Sola'ni, (F.) Pouls ondulant ou ondoyant. One which resembles in its movements those of the waves.

PULSE, UNE'QUAL, Pul'sus inæqua'lis, (F.) Pouls inégal. One whose pulsations are not alike, or return at unequal intervals.

PULSE, U'RI'NAL, Pul'sus urina'lis, (F.) Pouls de l'Urine. A critical pulse, fancied to denote an approaching evacuation of urine.

PULSE, U'TERINE, Pul'sus uteri'nus, (F.) Pouls Utérine ou de la Matrice ou des Règles. One which indicates the flow of the menses, or the occurrence of metrorrhagia.

PULSE, VAG'INAL, Pul'sus vagina'lis. The pulsation of the arteria vaginalis, which is increased in pregnancy, during abortion, labor, &c.

PULSE, VE'NOUS, Pulsus venarum.

PULSE, VERMIC'ULAR. That which imitates the movement of a worm.

PULSE, VI'BRATING, Jar'ring pulse. One in which the artery seems to vibrate like a musical string.

PULSE, WI'RY, see Pulse, tense.

Pulse'less, Asphyct'us. Devoid of pulsation.

Pulse'lessness, Asphyxia.

Pul'sey, Cataplasm.

Pulsif'ic, Pulsif'icus, (pulsus, 'pulse,' and facere, 'to make.') That which causes or excites pulsation.

Pulsilegium, Pulsilo'gium, Pulsim'eter, (pul- sus, and lego, 'I read,') Sphygmolegium, Sphygmometer, Sphygmoscopia, Sphygmoscope. Any instrument for measuring the quickness or force of the pulse.

Pulsimantia, (pulsus, and μαντια, 'divination.') The art of predicting or prognosticating by the pulse.

Pulsimeter, (pulsus, and μετρον, 'measure,') Pulsilegium.

Pulsus, gen. Pulsus, Pulse — p. Aeriticus, Pulse of irritation — p. Æqualis, Pulse, equal — p. Annuens et circumnuens, Pulse, deficient — p. Anormalis, Pulse, irregular — p. Bierotus, Pulse, dicrotic — p. Biferiens, P. dicrotic — p. Caprizans, Pulse, caprizant — p. Cordis, see Heart — p. Crassus, Pulse, large — p. Debilis, Pulse, feeble — p. Deficiens, Pulse, deficient — p. Dicrotus, Pulse, dicrotic — p. Dorcadisans, Pulse, caprizant — p. Duplex, Pulse, dicrotic — p. Durus, Pulse, hard — p. Elasticus, Pulse, supple — p. Fluctuosus, Pulse, undulating — p. Fluens, Pulse, undulating — p. Formicans, Formicant, and Pulse, formicant — p. Fortis, Pulse, strong — p. Fusalis, Pulse, caprizant — p. Gazellans, Pulse, caprizant — p. Heterochronicus, see Heterochronicus — p. Humilis, Pulse, low — p. Incidens Solani, Pulse, undulating — p. Interdens, Pulse, intercurrent — p. Intereisus, Pulse, dicrotic — p. Intercurrens, Pulse, intercurrent — p. Intestinalis, Pulse, dicrotic — p. Intricatus, Pulse, intricate — p. Magnus, Pulse, large — p. Mallearis, Pulse, dicrotic — p. Mollis, Pulse, soft.

PULSUS MYURUS, Decurtate or sharp-tailed Pulse, (F.) Pouls myure. One which goes on diminishing. See Myurus.

PULSUS NERVINUS, Pulse of irritation — p. Normalis, Pulse, regular — p. Parvus, Pulse, small — p. Plenus, Pulse, full — p. Rarus, Pulse, slow.

PULSUS SERRINUS, (F.) Pouls serrin ou serratile. One which strikes, sometimes strongly, at others feebly, and recalls the idea of a saw.

PULSUS STRIATUS, (F.) Pouls étroit. One that strikes the finger to a small extent in breadth.

PULSUS SUDORALIS, Pulse of sweat — p. Tardus, Pulse, slow — p. Urinalis, Pulse, urinal — p. Uterinus, Pulse, uterine.

PULSUS VACUUS, (F.) Pouls vide. One which gives the idea of emptiness of the artery.

PULSUS VAGINALIS, Pulse, vaginal.

PULSUS VENA'RUM, Ve'nous pulse or pulsa'tion, Phlebopatia. A pulsation occasionally noticed in the jugular veins. It is owing to some of the blood of the right ventricle reflowing into the right auricle, and communicating an impulse to the venous blood arriving in the auricle through the descending cava. It is often a sign of impediment to the flow of blood along the pulmonary artery.

Pulta'ceous, Pulta'ceus, (F.) Pultacé, (puls, gen. pultis, 'pap.') Resembling pap. Having a softened, semifluid appearance.

Pulta'tio, (puls, gen. pultis, 'pap.') Atheroma.

Pultic'ula, (dim. of puls, gen. pultis, 'pap.') Bouillie.

Pul'tise, Cataplasm.

Pulvera'tio, Pulverization.

Pul'veres Aëroph'ori, Powders, soda — p. Effervescentes, Powders, soda — p. Effervescentes apertientes, see Sedlitz.

Pulvérisateurs, see Pulverization.

Pulverizable, Pulverable, (from pulvis, gen. pulveris, 'powder,' and habilis, 'able.') Capable of being reduced to powder.

Pulveriza'tion, Pulveriza'tio, Pulvera'tio, Coniosto'sis, (F.) Pulvérisation. The operation of dividing substances so as to reduce them to powder. Most drugs are reduced to powder by persons who make it a special business, and who are called drug grinders. This is done on a large scale in drug mills; and the implements used are the grinding mill and the stamping mill. In the shop of the apothecary, pulverization is effected by the pestle and mortar, and the sieve. Where substances require the addition of other bodies to facilitate their reduction to powder, — as where camphor needs a few drops of alcohol, — the process is called pulverization by mediation.

The term Pul'verization, as well as Atomization and Nebulization, has been applied to the dispersing of liquids into fine spray, to be projected on wounds or on morbid surfaces. The liquids, in the form of spray, are said to be pulverized, nebulized, or atomized, and the instruments contrived to so disperse and project them are called Pul'verizers, Atomizers, Nebulizers, Spray-produ'cers, (F.) Pulvérisateurs, Néphogènes.

Atomized medicated fluids have been employed in affections of the mucous membrane of the nose and fauces, in croup and diphtheria, asthma, laryngitis, &c. Under the name Inhalato'ria, apartments have also been constructed for the introduction into them of mineral waters in the form of spray, for the purposes of inhalation, at some of the European springs, especially.

Water alone may be employed, either hot or cold, for purposes of atomization. The following substances are those chiefly employed, the dose mentioned being an approximative guide as to the quantity to be added to an ounce of water:

Pul'verizers, see Pulverization.

Pulvermacher's Chain Bat'tery, see Galvanism.

Pulvérolés, see Pulvis.

Pulverulent, Pulverulentus, (from pulvis.) Reduced to the state of a fine powder. Covered, as it were, with dust. An epithet applied to the eyes when they appear dirty, and, as it were, sprinkled with dust, by reason of granulations or grayish striæ, resulting from thickening of the mucous fluid of the conjunctiva.

Pulvil'us, Pad, Bourdonnet — p. e Linamentis confectus, Bourdonnet — p. Rotundus, Bourdonnet.

Pulvi'nar gen. Pulvina'ris, Pulvina'rium. A pillow.

PULVINAR HU'MULI, see Humulus lupulus.

PULVINAR MEDICATUM seu MEDICINALIS, Sacculus medicinalis. A medicated pillow; as of hops.

PULVINAR PARVUM, Pad—p. Ventriculi, Pancreas.

Pulvis, gen. Pulveris, Co'nis, Pow'der, (F.) Poudre. A substance reduced into small particles by pulverization. Simple pow'ders are those of a single substance; compound, those which result from a mixture of several different powders. An impalpable powder is one which is so fine that it can scarcely be felt under the finger. Compound powders have been called Species, (F.) Espèces, E. pulverulentes, Pulvérolés. The French Codex (1866) contains a variety of Espèces.

PULVIS ABSORBENS, P. de magnesiâ compositus—p. Adpersorius, Catapasma—p. Aerophorus, Powders, soda—p. Alexiterius, P. contrayervæ compositus, P. ipecacuanhæ compositus—p. Algarothi, Algaroth.

PULVIS AL'OE'S COMPOSITUS, P. Aloës cum Guai'aco, P. Aloët'icus cum Guai'aco, Compound powder of Aloës. (Aloës, 3jss., Guaiac. res., 3j., Pulv. cinnam. comp., 3ss. Rub the aloes and guaiacum separately, then mix the whole. Ph. L.) Cathartic, stomachic, and sudorific. Dose, gr. x. to ʒj.

PULVIS AL'OE'S CUM CANEL'LA, P. Aloës et canellæ, (Ph. U. S.) P. Aloët'icus, Pow'der of Aloës with Canel'la, Species Hi'eræ pi'cræ, Hi'era pi'cræ, vulg. Hi'kry pi'kry, Hik'ry pik'ry, Pi'cræ and Pi'kry. (Aloës, ʒj., Canell., 3ij. Rub together until thoroughly mixed. Ph. U. S., 1873.) A warm cathartic. Dose, gr. x. to ʒj.

PULVIS CAT'ECU COMPOSITUS, Compound Powder of Catechu. (Catechu pulv., 3iv., Kino pulv., 3ij., Kramer. rad., 3ij., Cinnam., Myrist., ʒā 3j.) Dose, as an astringent, gr. xx. to xl.

PULVIS CATHART'ICUS, P. scammonæ compositus—p. Causticus Vindobonensis, Powder, Vienna—p. Cephalicus, P. asari compositus.

PULVIS CINNAMO'MI COMPOSITUS, Compound Powder of Cin'namon, Pulvis seu Species Imperato'ris, Pulvis aromaticus, (Ph. U. S.) P. vi'tæ Imperato'ris seu Diaro'maton, Species diacinnamo'mi seu lactificantes Rha'zis seu Diam'bræ si'nē odora'tis seu aromat'icæ, Tra'gea aromati'ca, Aromati'c pow'der, (F.) Poudre de canelle composée ou aromatique. (Cinnam., Zingib., ʒā 3ij., Cardam., Myrist., ʒā 3j. Rub these together until thoroughly mixed. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Stimulant and carminative. Dose, gr. x. to ʒj.

PULVIS COB'BI seu TUNQUINEN'SIS. The famous Ton'quin pow'der, introduced into England by a Mr. Cobb. It was composed of 16 grains of musk, and 48 grains of cinna'bar; and was mixed in a gill of arrack. It was formerly regarded as a specific in hydrophobia.

PULVIS COM'ITIS WARWICEN'SIS, P. cornachini—p. Comitissæ, Cinchona.

PULVIS CONTRAYER'VÆ COMPOSITUS, P. cardi'acus seu alexite'rius seu Mantua'nus, La'pis contrayervæ, Contrayerva balls, Compound Powder of Contrayervæ. (Contrayervæ contrit., 3v., Test. præp., ʒjss. Mix. Ph. L.) Stimulant and sudorific. Dose, gr. xv. to 3ss.

PULVIS CORNACHI'NI, P. Ox'ydi Stib'i'i compositus seu Com'itis Warwicen'sis seu de Tri'bus seu Scammo'nii antimonial'is, Diacellates son Paracel'si, Earl of Warwick's Pow'der, Cerberus Tri'ceps, (F.) Poudre Cornachine. (Scammon., Potass. supertart., Antim. diaph., ʒā p. æ.; f. pulvis. Ph. P.) Cathartic. Used chiefly in cutaneous diseases. Dose, 3ss. to 3j.

PULVIS COS'MI, Powder, arsenical, of Côme—p. Cretaceus, P. cretæ compositus.

PULVIS CRE'TÆ AROMAT'ICUS, see Confectio aromatica.

PULVIS CRE'TÆ COMPOSITUS, P. Carbonat'is Cal'cis compositus seu cretaceus seu antac'idus seu terres'tris, Species e Scor'dio si'nē o'pio, S. Diacretæ, Compound Powder of Chalk, Dioscord'ium; (with Bole Armeniæ in place of chalk—the Pulvis e Bolo compositus sine opio;) (F.) Poudre de craie composée. (Cretæ ppt., ʒss., Cinnam., 3iv., Tormentill., Acaciæ, sing., 3ij., Pip. long., 3iv. Reduce separately to a fine powder, and mix. Ph. L.) Antacid, stomachic, absorbent. Dose, gr. xx. to ʒj.

PULVIS CRE'TÆ COMPOSITUS CUM O'PIO, Compound Powder of Chalk with o'pium, P. e Cre'tâ compositus cum o'pio; (with Bole Armeniæ instead of Chalk—P. e Bolo compositus cum o'pio;) Species e Scor'dio cum o'pio, (F.) Poudre de craie composée avec l'opium. (Pulv. cret comp., 3vjss., Op'ii duri cont., 3iv. Mix. Ph. L.) Contains one grain of opium in 40. Anodyne and absorbent. Dose, ʒj. to ʒij.

The British Pharmacopœia (1867) has a Pulvis Cre'tæ aromati'cus cum o'pio, Aromati'c powder of chalk and opium, which is composed of aromatic powder of chalk, $\mathfrak{z}\text{ix}\frac{1}{2}$, opium, in powder, $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$. Mix and pass through a fine sieve. Dose, gr. x.-xl.

PULVIS DIAPHORETICUS, P. ipecacuanhæ comp.—p. Diapnoicus, P. ipecacuanhæ comp.—p. Diaromaton, P. cinnamomi compositus—p. Diasenæ, P. sennæ compos.—p. Diaturpethi compositus, P. jalapæ compositus.

PULVIS DIURETICUS, (F.) Poudre Diurétique. The French Codex (1866) prepares this by mixing powdered nitrate of potassa, gum Arabic, althea, liquorice, and sugar of milk.

PULVIS DU'GIS PORTLAND'Æ, Duke of Portland's Gout Pow'der, (F.) Poudre de Duc de Portland ou de la Mirandole. (Rad. aristoloch., Gentianæ, Summit. chamædr., Centaur. min., aa p. æ.) Dose, $\mathfrak{z}\text{ss}$. to $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$.

Pu'mex, gen. Pu'micis, La'pis pu'micis, Pum'ice, (F.) Pierre Ponce. This was formerly employed as a desiccative and as a dentifrice.

Pum'ice, Pumex.

Pumil'io, Nanus.

Pu'milus, see Nanus.

Pum'melfoot, (Knobfoot), Kyllosis.

Pump, Breast, Antlia lactea — p. Stomach, Stomach-pump.

Pump'kin, (pompion), Cucurbita pepo.

Puna, (S.) Veta, Sorocco, Soroche, Sorroche, Marco, Hypson'osus, Oron'osus, Dyspnæ'a monta'na, Mountain sick'ness, (F.) Mal de Montagne. A sickness common in the elevated districts of South America and elsewhere, which attacks those unaccustomed to breathe the rarefied atmosphere. It strongly resembles sea-sickness, with a most acute and depressing throbbing in the head. It does not often affect the respiration greatly.

Punais, (perhaps from puer, 'to stink,' and nez, 'the nose,') see Ozæna.

Punaise, Cimex.

Punaisie, Ozæna.

Punch, Rhi'zagra, (pungere, punctum, 'to prick,') Repulso'rium, (F.) Repoussoir. A surgical instrument used for extracting the stumps of teeth. See Lever.

Also, an agreeable alcoholic drink, made of spirit, wine, sugar, lemon juice, and water. Milk is sometimes substituted wholly or in part for the water; the lemon juice being left out and nutmeg added: it then forms Milk Punch. Punch, as a drink, is said to be of oriental origin, and to be derived from Persian punji or Sanscrit pancha, 'five,' from the number of ingredients that entered into its composition [?].

Punc'ta, Punctum, Punctus, (pungere, punctum, 'to prick, to dot,') a point, a prick, a puncture.

Punc'ta (pl. of Punc'tum) Ossificatio'nis, Ossification, points of.

PUNC'TA VASCULO'SA. Numerous minute red spots, studding the surface of the centrum ovale majus, produced by the escape of blood from divided bloodvessels.

Punc'tæ (pl. of Punc'ta) Muco'sæ, see Acne.

Punc'tum, ('a point,') Puncta, Puncture, see Stitch.

PUNC'TUM AUR'EUM, Punctu'ra aur'ea. Formerly, when an intestinal hernia was reduced by an incision made through the integuments down to the upper part of the spermatic vessels, a golden wire was fixed and twisted, so as to prevent the descent of anything down the tunica vaginalis. Hence the term. See, also, Foramen centrale retinæ.

PUNC'TUM CÆ'CUM, 'blind spot,' see Optic nerve — p. Lacrymale, Lacrymal punctum.

PUNC'TUM SA'LIENTS, 'leaping point,' P. sanguineum sa'liens, Glob'ulus sanguineus, Punctus ruber sa'liens. The first moving point which makes its appearance after the fecundation of the germ. It has been generally, but erroneously, applied to the heart of the embryo, which has been described as the first to live — pri'mum vivens, — the last to die — ultimum moriens.

Punctu'ra, Paracentesis, Puncture — p. Aurea, Punctum aureum.

Punc'ture, Punctu'ra, Punctio, Cente'sis, Paracente'sis, Nyx'is, Tre'sis Punctu'ra, (F.) Piqure. A wound made by a pointed instrument, as a sword, bayonet, needle, thorn, &c. A puncture is, generally, of trifling consequence; but, sometimes, it becomes important from the parts implicated, and the after-consequences.

Punc'ture Doc'tors, Piqueurs médecins.

Punc'turing, Compunc'tio, Paracente'sis, (F.) Ponction. The operation of opening, by means of a trocar, lancet, &c., any natural or accidental cavity, with the view of evacuating any fluid effused or accumulated therein. Paracentesis is a sort of puncturing.

Punc'tus, gen. Punc'tus, 'a point,' Puncta — p. Ruber saliens, Punctum saliens.

Pun'gent, (F.) Pongitif. Pain is said to be pungent, when it seems as if a pointed instrument was forced into the suffering part.

Pu'nica Grana'tum, (Punica, 'Punie, Carthaginian,' whose colors were a deep red, pour'f.) The Pomegran'ate, Rho'a, Rha'a, Grana'tum, (F.) Grenadier; Ord. Myrtacæ. Sex. Syst. Icosandria Monogynia. The rind of the fruit, called Malicho'rium, Malico'rium, Grana'ti Fructus Cor'tex, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) and the flowers — called Balaustine flowers — are used in medicine. They have been employed both internally and externally as astringents. The seeds are called Cocco-nos. The portion, however, of the plant that has attained most celebrity, is the bark of the root, Grana'ti Radi'cis Cor'tex, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) which appears to be very efficacious in tænia. It is given in decoction. (Granat. rad. cort., 3ij., Aque, Oij., boiled to Ojss.) Dose, f3ij., every half hour. Three or four doses are usually sufficient to expel the worm.

The bark contains a peculiar matter called Grenadin. An oleoresinous principle has been obtained from the bark, called pu'nicine.

Punk, Boletus igniarius.

Puntos. An epidemic contagious spotted fever, which prevailed in Spain in the 16th century.

Puogen'ia, Pyogenia.

Pu'pil, Pupill'a, Pu'pula, Pupill'io, Vis'io, Op'sis, Co're, Co'ra, Rhox, Fenes'tra seu Ni'grum seu Fora'men Oculi, Prunell'io, Lu'men, Gle'nē, Sight or Ap'ple or Ball of the eye, (Sc.) Blak of the Eie, (Prov.) Candle, (F.) Pupille, Prunelle, (from pupa, 'a babe,' pupilla, 'a little babe'; so called from the image seen in the eye.) The aperture of the iris, through which the rays of light pass that have to impress the image of an object on the retina. This aperture can be dilated or contracted so as to allow a greater or smaller quantity of luminous rays to penetrate. The pupil, in man, is round, and by it the anterior and posterior chambers of the eye communicate with each other. In the fœtus, during the first six months of gestation, it is closed by the pupillary membrane.

Pu'PIL, ARTIFIC'IAL, Pupill'a factit'ia, (F.) Pupille artificielle. An operation is sometimes necessary to form a new pupil in lieu of the natural one, which has become obliterated by disease. See Corectomia, Iridodesis, Corelysis, Iridodialysis.

Pu'PIL, PIN'HOLE. A condition of the pupil in typhus, in which it is so contracted as to resemble a pinhole. It indicates a dangerous form of brain affection.

Pupill'a, Pupil — p. Factitia, Pupil, artificial.

Pupill'æ Ve'lum, 'curtain of the pupil,' Pupillary membrane.

Pupilla'ris Her'ba, Lapsana.

Pu'pillary, Pupilla'ris, (F.) Pupillaire. That which belongs to the pupil.

Pu'PILLARY MEM'BRANE, Membrana Pupilla'ris, Pupill'æ Ve'lum, Membrana Wachendorfia'na. The central aperture of the iris is closed, in the fœtus, during a certain period of gestation, by a very thin membrane. It disappears in the seventh month.

The term Membrana Pupillaris perseverans has been applied by Graefe to an adventitious membrane with holes or fissures in front of the iris, which he considers to be the remains of the anterior part of the vascular capsule of the lens.

Pupillom'eter. A hybrid word, from pupilla, and μετρον, 'measure,' for an instrument which indicates, by measurement, the size of the pupil.

Pup'pet Root, Veratrum viride.

Pup'pis Os, 'stern bone,' Frontal bone.

Pu'pula, Pupil.

Pu'pulæ, A'pices digito'rum. The pulps or extremities of the fingers.

Pur'blind, (peerblind [?]) Myopic.

Purgations, Menses.

Pur'gative, Purgati'vus, Pur'gans, Moch'licus, Catoret'icus, Catoter'icus, Cathar'tic, Pur'gament, Purge, (F.) Purgatif. A medicine which operates more powerfully on the bowels than a laxative, stimulating the muscular, and exciting increased secretion from the mucous coat.

Purge, Purgative — p. Root, Euphorbia corollata.

Purg'ing, Diarrhœa — p. Nut, Jatropha curcas.

Purificans, Purif'icus, (purus, 'pure,' and facere, 'to make,') Purifying; hence, Purifican'tia. Medicines that cleanse or purify the blood.

Purif'icus, Purificans.

Pu'riform, Purifor'mis, (pus, gen. puris, and forma, 'form,') Having the appearance of pus.

Pu'riloid, (pus, gen. puris, and oides, 'resemblance,') Pyoid.

Purkin'je, Im'age of, see Image.

Purl. A medicated malt liquor, in which wormwood and aromatics are infused. Also, boiled beer having gin, sugar, and spice mixed with it.

Purohepati'tis, (pus, gen. puris, and hepatitis,) see Hepatitis.

Puromu'cus, Puromuco'sus, (pus, gen. puris, and mucus,) Having the character or appearance of pus and mucus.

Pur'ple of Cas'sius, Pur'pura Mineralis Cas'sii, (F.) Pourpre de Cassius. A precipitate, obtained by adding the protochloride of tin to a dilute solution of gold; or by dipping rods of tin in a solution of gold in diluted chlorohydric acid. Used in syphilis.

Pur'ples, Purpura hæmorrhagica.

Pur'pura, Por'phyra, 'a purple color.' This word has been employed in many senses. It generally means livid spots on the skin from extravasated blood, with languor and loss of muscular strength, and pains in the limbs. (F.) Pourpre.

In PUR'PURA SIM'PLEX, Por'phyra simplex, Petechie si'nē fe'brē, Pelio'sis, Phænig'mus Petechia'lis, Profusio subcutanea, Pete'chial Scur'vy, the spots are numerous, small, and fleabite-shaped; chiefly on the breast, arms, and legs; with paleness of countenance. At times the affection is accompanied by severe pains in the extremities, constituting Pelio'sis rheumat'ica.

In PUR'PURA HÆMORRHAG'ICA, Por'phyra hæmorrhag'ica, Stomac'ace universa'lis, Hæmorrhagia universa'lis, Pete'chiano'sis, Mor'bus maculo'sus hæmorrhag'icus Werthof'ii, Pelio'sis hæmorrhag'ica, Scorbutus, Hæmorrhœa petechia'lis, Hæmotospi'lia, Land Scur'vy, Pur'ples, (F.) Scorbut, S. de Terre, Maladie de Werthof, Hémacélinose, Pélio'se hémorrhagique, the spots are circular, and of different sizes; often in stripes or patches, irregularly scattered over the thighs, arms, and trunk; with occasional hæmorrhage from the mouth, nostrils, or viscera, and great debility and depression of spirits. Black leg is one form of this disease. It occurs particularly among the lumbermen of Canada, and seems to be dependent on the coarse diet used by them.

In PUR'PURA NAU'TICA, Por'phyra nautica, Scorbutus, Pechytr'bē, Gingibra'chium, Gingipe'dium, Scelotyr'bē, Stomac'acē, Scorbutus nau'ticus, Sea scur'vy, (Sc.) Scrubie, (F.) Scorbut, there are spots of different hues, intermixed with the livid, principally at the roots of the hair; the teeth are loose; the gums are spongy and bleeding; the breath is fetid, and the debility universal and extreme. This occurs chiefly at sea, after exposure to a moist, cold, foul atmosphere; with long use of one kind of food and of stagnant water.

All these varieties of purpura considerably resemble each other. In the first two, however, there seems, at times, to be some excitement, which has led to the employment of purgatives, and even of bleeding, with advantage. They are dependent upon a peculiar diathesis, which has been termed Scorbutic Cachexia, Lu'es Scorbutica, and Cacoehymia Scorbutica. Generally speaking, the use of the mineral acids will be indicated; and, in sea scurvy, vegetable acids must be regarded as the best antiscorbutics. Nitre is, also, a good antiscorbutic, and in cases of great prostration it may be united with cinchona or turpentine. Tamarinds and cream of tartar, made into drink, are also serviceable. But the great remedy is change from low to cheerful spirits; from filth to cleanliness; and from a cold and damp to a temperate and dry climate, with sufficiency and change of food, and especially the use of green vegetables.

The general principles of management are the same in sea as in land scurvy.

A secretion from inflamed textures, and especially from the areolar membrane. It is almost always of the same nature, whatever may be the part it proceeds from. Pus of a good quality—laud'able pus, Pus bo'num seu laudab'ilis seu nutritivum seu ve'rum, (F.) Pus louable—is of a yellowish-white color, opaque, inodorous, and of a creamy appearance. Heat, acids, and alcohol coagulate it. When analyzed by Schwilgué, it afforded albumen and water, a particular extractive substance, and a small quantity of soda, phosphate of lime, and other salts. Normal pus consists essentially of two distinct parts, pus corpuscles or pus glob'ules, cy'toid corpuscles of Henle—and a colorless, aqueous fluid, li'quor pu'ris, in which the corpuscles are suspended. A variety of the pus corpuscles is described by M. Lebert under the name Py'oid. Fully formed pus is aplastic. See Suppuration and Pyogia.

PUS'TULÆ SIC'Æ, 'dry pustules,' Lichen.

PUS'TULAR, Pus'tulous, Pustula'ris, Pustulo'sus, (F.) Pustuleux. Of or belonging to pustules. Affected with pustules.

PUS'TULA'TION, Pustula'tio, (pustulare, pustulatum, 'to cause pustules,') The formation of pustules.

PUS'TULE, Pus'kile, Push, Pus'tula, Ecpye'sis, Ec'thyma, Benath, Bu'bè, Epanas'tasis. An elevation of the cuticle, with an inflamed base. Willan and Bateman reckon four varieties of pustules, Phlyza'cium, Psydra'cium, Achor, and Favus. The variolous pustule is often called by the French, Grain; English, Pock.

PUSUS, Boy.

PUT TO BED, Deliver.

PUTA'MEN O'VI, ('shell of an egg,' from putare, 'to cast off,') see Ovum, Membrana putaminis.

PUT'TIUM, (πῶδιον,) Prepuce.

PUTRE'DO, gen. Putred'inis, 'rotteness,' Hospital Gangrene, Putrefaction.

PUTREFACTION, Putrefac'tio, Putrescentia, Sep'is, Sap'rotes, Se'pedon, Putrid or Putrefac'tive fermenta'tion, Put'ror, (putris, 'rotten,' and facerè, 'to make,') A decomposition, experienced by animal substances, when deprived of life, and placed under special circumstances. The presence of water is indispensable; the temperature most favorable to it is from 60° to 90° of Fahrenheit. The most common products of putrefaction are water, carbonic acid, acetic acid, ammonia, carburetted hydrogen, and a semi-putrid substance, which is volatilized, and has an infected odor. It has been supposed that something like putrefaction may occur in the living body, as in cases of putrid fever. To this condition, Piorry has given the name Typhoe'mia, conceiving it to be owing to alteration of the blood by putrid animal matters. Putrefaction or Putrescence properly signifies the state of becoming putrid: Putrid'ity, Putre'do, Putrid'itas, Putridness, (F.) Putridité, Pourriture, the state of rottenness.

Putres'cent, (from putrescere, 'to grow rotten,') Hyposaprus—p. Poison, see Poison.

Putrescen'tia, Putrefaction—p. Uteri gravidi, Hysteromalacia.

Put'rid, Putridus, Sap'ros, Sepedono'des, (F.) Putride, (putreo, 'I rot,') An epithet for affections, in which the matters excreted and the transpiration itself exhale a smell of putridity. It is particularly applied to typhus.

Put'RID INFECTION, Septæmia.

Putrid'itas, see Putrefaction.

Putrid'ity, see Putrefaction.

Putrila'go, gen. Putrilag'inis, (puter, 'rotten,') (F.) Putrilage. The pultaceous matter or slough, which forms in certain gangrenous and other ulcers, and is thrown off.

Put'ror, Putrefaction.

Putzochill, see Myroxylon Peruiferum.

Puxiri, see Pichurim beans.

Puysegu'rian Clair'voyance, (after the Marquis Puysegur,) see Clairvoyance.

Pyæ'mia, Pyohæmia, Sup'purative Fever, (F.) Pyohémie, Pyhémie, Pyoémie, (pyo, and âima, 'blood,') Purulent contamination of the blood, producing marked depression of the vital powers, the formation of abscesses in various regions of the body, &c., constituting the Diath'esis seu Infectio purulen'ta, Put'ulent diath'esis, Put'ulent infection. It is supposed by some to be due to suppurative capillary phlebitis; by others, to coagulation of the vitiated blood in the vessels—the veins especially—or the heart, and to the inflammation and suppuration developed by the clots when detached and carried into the capillaries of other parts. See Septæmia, and Ichorhæmia.

Chron'ic or relap'sing pyæ'mia resembles the acute form, but is slower and attended with relapses.

Py'ar, (πυαρ,) Colostrum.

Pyarthro'sis, Absces'sus Artic'uli, (pyo, αρθρον, 'a joint,' and osis,) Suppuration of a joint.

Pyarthrum, (pyo, and αρθρον, 'a joint,') A suppurated joint.

Pyonan'themum Inca'num, (πυκνος, 'dense,' and ανθεμον, 'a blossom,') Olinopod'ium inca'num, Common Mountain Mint, Wild Basil. An indigenous plant of the mint family—Ord. Labiata—having the aromatic properties of the mints.

PYONAN'THEMUM LINIFO'LIUM, Virginia Thyme, has like virtues.

Pyonicma'sia, Pycnic'masis, (πυκνος, 'thick,' and ικμας, and ικμασια, 'moisture,') A thickening of the juices.

Pycnicmas'tica, Incrassantia.

Pyonom'eter, (πυκνος, 'thick,' and μετρον, 'measure,') Areometer.

Pycno'sis, (πυκνωσις, from πυκνος, 'thick,' and osis,) Inspissatio.

Pycno'tica, (πυκνωτικα,) Incrassantia.

Pyc'chysis, (πυσ, 'pus,' and εκχυσις, 'effusion,') An effusion of pus.

Pyélite, Pyelitis.

Pyeli'tis, gen. Pyeli'tidis, (F.) Pyélite, (pyelus, and itis,) Inflammation of the pelvis and calices of the kidney.

Pyelom'eter, (pyelus, and μετρον, 'measure,') Pelvimeter.

Pyelonéphrite, Pyelonephritis.

Pyelonephri'tis, gen. Pyelonephri'tidis, (F.) Pyelonéphrite, (pyelus, νεφρος, 'kidney,' and itis,) Inflammation of the kidney, and of its pelvis and calices.

Py'elus, (πυελος,) Pelvis.

Pyem'esis, Pyoemesis.

Pye'sis, (πυησις,) Suppuration.

Pyet'ia, (πυητια,) Colostrum, Rennet.

Py'ge, (πυγη,) Nates.

Pygmæ'us, (πυγμαίος, from πυγμα, 'pygme,') Pygmy.

Pyg'me, (πυγμα,) Fist, Forearm.

Pygmée, Pygmy.

Pyg'my, Pig'my, Pygmæ'us, (F.) Pygmée, (from pygme, as big as the fist or forearm,) A dwarf. The Pygmæi were a fabulous nation of dwarfs in India; or, according to others, in Ethiopia.

Pygodid'y'mus, Did'y'mus symphyoperioste'us, Pygopa'ges, (pyge, and διδωμος, 'a twin,') Twins united by the sacrum and coccyx.

Pygom'eles, (F.) Pygomèle, (pyge, and μελος, 'unprofitable,') A monster with excessive growth on the nates or rump.

Pygopa'ges, (pyge, and παγω, 'I fix,') Pygodidymus.

Py'icus, (from πυον, 'pus,') Purulent.

Py'in. A constituent of pus, in general characters resembling mucin.

Py'le, (πυλη, 'a gate,') Porta.

Pylemphrax'is, (pyle, 'a gate,' and εμφραξις, 'obstruction,') Obstruction of the vena porta.

Pylephlebi'tis, gen. Pylephlebi'tidis, (pyle, φλεψ, gen. φλεβος, 'a vein,' and itis,) Inflammation of the vena porta.

Pylor'ic, Pylor'icus, (F.) Pylorique, (from pylorus,) That which relates to the pylorus. An epithet given to different parts.

PYLOR'IC ARTERY, Artéria Corona'ria dex'tra, (F.) Petite artère gastrique droite, arises from the hepatic, and is distributed to the pylorus and to the lesser curvature of the stomach, anastomosing, particularly, with the A. coronaria ventriculi and A. gastroëpiploica dextra.

PYLOR'IC VEIN is distributed like the artery.

Pylorique, Pyloric.

Pylo'rus, (πυλωρος,) Jan'itor, Portona'rium, (πυλη, 'a gate,' and ουρος, 'a guardian,') Ostium ventric'uli duodena'lē seu pylo'ricum seu dex'trum seu infe'rius, Orific'ium dex'trum seu infe'rius ventriculi, Egres'sus seu Os infe'rius seu An'nulus seu Sphinc'ter ventric'uli, Ostia'rius, (F.) Pylorē. The lower or right orifice of the stomach—Orifice intestinal (Ch.)—is called Pylorus, because it closes the entrance into the intestinal canal, and is furnished with a circular, flattened, fibro-mucous ring, which occasions the total closure of the stomach during digestion in that organ. This ring has been called the Valve of the Pylo'rus, Pylor'ic Valve, Sphinc'ter Pylo'ri, Pylo'rus propriū sic dictus, (F.) Valvule du pylorē. It is a fold of the mucous and muscular membranes of the stomach; and is the Pyloric muscle of some authors.

Pylor'ic Valve, Pylorus.

Py'o, (πυον, 'pus,') in composition, pus.

Pyoblen'icus, (pyo, and βλεννα, 'mucus,') Mucopurulent.

Pyoblennorrhœ'a, (pyo, βλεννα, 'mucus,' and ρῶω, 'I flow,') A discharge of puriform mucus.

Pyoceno'sis, (pyo, and κνωσις, 'evacuation,') Evacuation of pus.

Pyochez'ia, Diarrhœ'a purulen'ta, (pyo, and χεζω, 'I go to stool,') Discharge of pus by stool. Purulent diarrhœa.

Pyocœ'lia, Ascit'es purulen'tus, (pyo, and κοιλια, 'the belly,') Pus in the abdominal cavity.

Pyocol'pos, Pyokol'pos, (pyo, and κολπος, 'vagina,') A purulent collection in the walls of the vagina.

Pyocy'anine, (pyo, and κυανος, 'blue,') A bluish coloring matter isolated from pus in a crystalline form, believed by some to be of vegetable origin.

Pyocys'tis, gen. Pyocys'tidis, (pyo, and κυστις, 'a sac,') Vomica.

Pyo'des, (πυωδης,) Purulent.

Pyœde'ma, gen. Pyœde'matis, (pyo, and οιδημα, 'swelling,') Tumefaction of the surface owing to effusion of pus.

Pyœm'esis, Pyem'esis, Vom'itus purulen'tus,

(pyo, and emesis, 'the act of vomiting.') Vomiting of pus.

Pyoëmie, (pyo and αἷμα, 'blood,') Pyohæmia.

Pyogen'esis, Pyogenia.

Pyogenet'ic, Pyogenic.

Pyogen'ia, Pyogen'ia, Pyogen'esis, Pyopoë'sis, (pyo, and γεννώ, 'I generate.') Generation of pus. The theory or mechanism of the formation of pus. Some have believed that pus is formed by the arterial system, and is deposited, by way of excretion, in the inflamed parts; others, that it is formed by the destruction of solid parts. It seems to be owing to a degeneration of the liquor sanguinis and exudation corpuscles. See Pus.

Pyogen'ia Corrosi'va, Ulceration — p. Simplex, Suppuration.

Pyogen'ic, Pyogen'icus, Pyogenet'ic, Pyogenet'icus, (F.) Pyogénique, Pyogénétique. Having relation to the formation of pus.

Pyogen'ic MEMBRANE. A term applied to a thin yellowish flaky layer on the interior of the wall of an abscess, under the idea that the pus is secreted by it.

Pyohæ'mia, Pyæmia.

Py'oid, (πυοειδής, from pyo, and αἶος, 'resemblance,') Py'oid, Py'oides, Py'uloid, Py'uloides. Resembling pus. See Pus.

Py'oid CORPUSCLES or GLOBULES, see Pus.

Pyo'ma, gen. Pyo'matis, Pyonoma.

Pyome'tra, P. purulen'ta, (pyo, and metra.) A collection of pus in the uterus.

Pyome'tra PURULEN'TA, Pyometra.

Py'on, (πύον.) Pus.

Pyonéphrite, (pyo, and nephritis.) see Nephritis.

Pyonephro'sis, (pyo, νεφρός, 'kidney,' and osis.) Nephropoysis.

Pyono'ma, gen. Pyono'matis, Pyo'ma, (from pyon, and oma.) A suppurating sore.

Pyootorrhœ'a, (pyo, and otorrhœa.) Otorrhœa.

Pyopericard'ia, (pyo, and pericardium.) Pyopericard'ium. A collection of pus in the pericardium.

Pyoperitoni'tis, (pyo, and peritonitis.) Suppurative inflammation of the peritoneum.

Pyophthal'mia, (pyo, and ophthalmia.) Hypopyon — p. Neonatorum, see Ophthalmia (purulenta infantum).

Pyopla'nia, (pyo, and πλάνος, 'wandering.') An extension of pus to other parts. Purulent infiltration.

Pyopleurite, (pyo, and pleuritis.) Empyema.

Pyopneumotho'rax, (pyo, and pneumothorax.) Pneumothorax complicated with suppuration.

Pyopoë'sis, (pyo, and ποιω, 'I make,') Pyogenia.

Pyopoë'tic, Suppurative.

Pyop'tysis, (pyo, and πτύω, 'I spit.') Spitting of pus.

Pyorrhag'ia, (pyo, and ῥάγη, 'violent rupture.') Sudden discharge of a collection of matter.

Pyorrhœ'a, (πυορροία, from pyo, and ῥέω, 'I flow.') A discharge of pus.

Pyorrhœ'a ALVEOLA'RIS. Suppurative inflammation of the root-membrane of the tooth in relation with the connective tissue of the gums beneath the mucous membrane.

Pyorrhœ'a ALVI'NA, Pyochezia — p. Aurium, Otorrhœa — p. Nasalis, Ozæna — p. Palpebræ, Blepharopyorrhœa — p. Urinalis, Pyuria — p. Viarum lacrymalium, Daeryopyorrhœa.

Py'os, (πύος.) Pus. Also, first milk, colostrum.

Pyo'sis, (πύωσις.) Hypopyon, Pterygion, Suppuration — p. Pectoris, Empyema.

Pyotho'rax (gen. Pyothora'cis) Ve'rus, (pyo, and thorax.) Empyema.

Pyotorrhœe, (pyo, and otorrhœa.) Otorrhœa.

Pyotu'ria, (pyo, and ουρῶν, 'urine,') Pyuria.

Pyr, (πῦρ.) Fever.

Py'ra, (πύρα, from πῦρ, 'fire,') Anthrax — p.

Crustumerina, Crustuminatum — p. Crustumina, Crustuminatum.

Pyr'amid, Pyr'amis, (πυραμῖς, gen. πυραμίδος, from πῦρ, 'flame,' which has a conical shape.) A small bony projection in the cavity of the tympanum, which is excavated, to lodge the muscles of the stapes, Eminentia papillaris seu pyramidalis tym'pani. The centre-pin of the trephine. A small, obtusely pointed eminence of the inferior vermiform process of the cerebellum.

A flat, triangular muscle, situate at the posterior part of the pelvis. By its base, it is attached to the anterior surface of the sacrum, to the corresponding surface of the great sacrosciatic ligament, and to the posterior part of the ilium. It terminates by a tendon, which is attached to the inner surface of the great trochanter. This muscle is a rotator of the thigh outwards, or of the pelvis inwards.

PYRAMIDA'LIS ABDOM'INIS, Mus'culus Fallo'pii seu succenturiatus seu auxiliar'ius, (F.) Pubio-ombilical, Tubio-sous-ombilical (Ch.), Pyramidal de l'abdomen. A small, fleshy, pyramidal fasciculus, whose existence is not constant, and which is inserted by its base into the upper part of the pubis, and terminates by its summit at the inferior part of the linea alba. When it contracts, it stretches the linea alba.

PYRAMIDA'LIS FEM'ORIS, Pyramidalis.

PYRAMIDA'LIS NA'SI, Proc'erus na'si, Na'sum dila'tans, (F.) Fronto-nasal (Ch.), Pyramidal du nez. A thin, triangular muscle, which has its summit upwards. Above, it is continuous with the occipitofrontalis. It descends vertically before the root of the nose, on which it terminates, becoming confounded with the transversalis. It wrinkles the skin of the root of the nose transversely, and stretches that which covers the tip.

Pyroc'a, (πυρκαϊα, 'a conflagration,' from πῦρ, 'fire,' and καίω, 'I kindle,') Incendium.

Pyrec'tic, Febrile.

Pyrec'tica, 'febrile,' (pyretus, and εχω, 'I have,') Fevers; first order, class Hæmatica, (Good.)

Pyrelaines, (πῦρ, 'fire,' and ελαίων, 'oil,') Olea empyreumatica.

Pyrenæ'mata, (πυρην, 'a nucleus,' and αἷμα, 'blood,') According to Mr. Gulliver, vertebrata with nucleated colored corpuscles — as the oviparous.

Pyrenæ'mia, (same etymon.) A condition of the blood characterized by the presence in it of nucleated colored corpuscles.

Pyrenol'des, (πυρηνολίδος, from πυρην, 'the kernel, the stone of a fruit,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Odontoid.

Pyrifor'mis, (pyrus, 'a pear,' and forma, 'shape,') Pyramidalis.

Pyriph'leges, (πυριφλεγης,) Pyriphlec'tus, (πυριφλεκτος, from πυρ, and φlegω, 'I burn,') One who has a burning fever.

Pyri'tes, Iron, (from πυρ, 'fire,') Ferri sulphuretum.

Pyr'mont, Min'eral Wa'ters of. A celebrated mineral spring on the Weser, in Westphalia, four leagues from Hamlet. The waters are tonic, and contain chlorides of sodium and magnesium, sulphates of soda and magnesium, and carbonates of iron, lime, and magnesia dissolved in carbonic acid, with some resinous (?) principle. It is a highly carbonated chalybeate. Season, from the 10th of June to the 1st of September.

ARTIFIC'IAL PYR'MONT WA'TER may be formed of Epsom salt, gr. xv., Common salt, gr. v., Magnesia, gr. x., Iron filings, gr. v., Water, Oij., impregnated with the gas from Marble-powder and Sulphuric acid, aa ʒvij.
