Cytoblaste'ma, gen. Cytoblaste'matis, (F.) Cytoblastème, (same etymon.) Interce'llular sub'stance, Hy'aline sub'stance, Substan'tia vit'rea seu hyal'ina, Ma'trix. The gum or mucus in the vegetable, and probably the liquor sanguinis after transudation from the vessels in the animal, in a state fully prepared for the formation of the tissues. (Schwann and Schleiden.) By many Blas'tema is preferred, inasmuch as it does not convey the idea of cell development. See Sarcode.

Cytogenet'ic, Cytogenet'icus, (F.) Cytogénétique. Relating or belonging to cytogeny.

Cytog'eny, Cytogen'esis, (κυτός, 'cell,' and γενεΐς, 'generation,') Cell formation, cell genesis. The continuous development of cells, in tissue formation, has been called by Virchow Prolifera'tion of cells.

Cy'toid, Cytoï'des, (κυτός, 'a cell,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Cell-like. A term applied by Henle to corpuscles—as those of lymph, chyle, pus, &c.—which seem to resemble each other essentially in their chemical and microscopical characters, and which have been termed, in the aggregate, by some, Leuc'ocytes.

Cytos'tasis, (κυτός, 'a cell,' and στασις, 'stagnation,') Arrest of red or white blood cells or corpuscles in the small vessels, owing to greater force of aggregation than in health. [?]

Cyt'taros, (κυτταρός,) Glans.

Cyzemer. A swelling of the wrists.

Cyzice'nus, (κυζικηνός,) An ancient plaster for chronic ulcers and wounds of tendons.

D.

~ The figure of the Greek Δ, according to Galen, was the sign for quartan fever.

Dabach, Viscum album.

Dacne'ron, (δακνηρον, from δακνεν, 'to bite,') An ancient name for a collyrium, composed of oxide of copper, pepper, cadmia, myrrh, saffron, gum Arabic, and opium.

Dac'ry, Dac'ryma, Dac'ryon, (δακρυ.) A tear.

Dacryadenal'gia, Dacryoādenal'gia, (dacry, δακρυ, 'a gland,' and αλγος, 'pain,') Disease or pain in the lachrymal gland.

Dacryadeni'tis, gen. Dacryadeni'tidis, Dacryoadeni'tis, (dacry, δακρυ, 'a gland,' and itis.) Inflammation of the lachrymal gland.

Dacryalloe'sis, (dacry, and αλλοιωσις, 'change,') A morbid condition of the tears.

Dacryd'ion, (from δακρυ, 'a tear,' from the gummy exudation,) Convolvulus scammonia.

Dacrygelo'sis, (dacry, and γελω, 'I laugh,') A kind of insanity, in which the patient weeps and laughs at the same time.

Dacryhæmor'rhis, Sanguin'eous Lachryma'tion, (dacry, and αιμορρhis, 'hemorrhage,') A flow of bloody tears.

Dac'ryma, (δακρυμα,) see Dacry.

Dacryoādenal'gia, Dacryadenal'gia.

Dacryoādeni'tis, Dacryadenitis.

Dacryoblennorrhœ'a, (dacryon, βλεννα, 'mucus,' and ρεω, 'I flow,') Discharge of tears mixed with mucus.

Dacryocystal'gia, (dacryon, κυστις, 'a sac,' and αλγος, 'pain,') Disease or pain in the lachrymal sac.

Dacrocyst'is, (dacryon, and κυστις, 'a sac,') Lachrymal sac.

Dacrocysti'tis, gen. Dacrocysti'tidis, (dacrocystis, and itis.) Inflammation of the lachrymal sac.

Dacryocystoblennorrhœ'a, (dacryon, cystis, βλεννα, 'mucus,' and ρεω, 'I flow,') A chronic inflammation of the lachrymal sac and its appendages, characterized by a circumscribed, painless tumor, with obstruction and accumulation of tears, mucus, and pus.

Dac'ryocys'tosyrin'gokatakleis'is, (dacryocystis, κυστις, 'a pipe, a fistula,' and κατακλεισις, 'a locking up,') A term proposed by Dieffenbach for the healing of lachrymal fistulæ by transplantation. The operation consists in paring the edges of the fistula, loosening the borders, and assisting the requisite tegumental displacement by lateral incisions.

Dacryo'des, (δακρυωδης, from dacryon, and odes,) Lacrymo'sus. Weeping; resembling tears; hence, Ul'cus dacryo'des. A sanious ulcer, a weeping sore.

Dac'ryolite, Dacryol'ithus, Dac'ryolith, (F.) Dacryolithe, (dacryon, and λιθος, 'a stone,') A concretion found in the lachrymal passages. When in the nasal duct, it is termed Rhi'nolite, Na'sal Cal'culus, Rhinol'ithus, Rhinodac'ryolite, Rhinodacryol'ithus.

Dacryolithi'asis, (dacryon, and λιθιασις, 'formation of calculi,') The formation of concretions in the tears.

Dacryol'ithus, Dacryolite.

Dacryo'ma, gen. Dacryo'matis. Epiphora, (from dacryon, and oma.) The effusion of tears, occasioned by an occlusion of the puncta lacrymalia.

Dac'ryon, (δακρυον) Tear.

Dacryopœ'us, (dacryon, and ποιω, 'I make.') A substance which excites the secretion of tears; as the onion, horseradish, garlic, &c.

Dac'ryops, gen. Dacry'opis, (from dacryon, and ωψ, 'the eye.') A weeping eye. A tumefaction of the lachrymal ducts, or lachrymal cyst. Fistula of the lachrymal gland has been called Dac'ryops fistulo'sa.

DAC'RYOPS FISTULO'SA, see Dacryops.

Dacryopyorrhœ'a, Pyorrhœ'a via'rum lacrymalium, (dacryon, πυον, 'pus,' and ῥέω, 'I flow.') A discharge of tears mixed with purulent matter.

Dacryorrhœ'a, Dacryrrhœ'a, Dacryor'rhyssis, Dacryr'rhyssis, (dacryon, and ῥέω, 'I flow.') A morbid flux of tears.

Dacryor'rhyssis, (dacryon, and ῥυσις, 'a flow,') Dacryorrhœa.

Dacryoso'len, gen. Dacryosole'nis, (dacryon, and σωλην, 'a canal,') Lachrymal canal.

Dacryosoleni'tis, gen. Dacryosoleni'tidis, (dacryosolen, and itis.) Inflammation of the lachrymal ducts.

Dacryosyr'inx, gen. Dacryosyrin'gis, (dacryon, and σπυγξ, 'a fistula,') Fistula lacrymalis.

Dacryrrhœ'a, Dacryorrhœa.

Dacryr'rhyssis, Dacryorrhœa.

Dactyle'thra, Dactyli'thra, (δακτυληθρα, 'a covering for a finger,') A name given by the ancients to different topical applications having the form of a finger, and proper for being introduced into the throat to excite vomiting.

Dactyle'tus, Hermodyctylus.

Dactyl'ion, Dactyl'ium, (F.) Doigts palmés, Web'bed fingers, (δακτυλος, 'a finger,') The union of the fingers with each other. This affection is generally congenital; but it may be owing to burns, ulcerations, inflammation of the fingers, &c.

Dactyli'tis, gen. Dactyli'tidis, (dactylo, and itis.) Paronychia—d. Syphilitica, see Paronychia.

Dactyl'ius, (δακτυλιος.) An'nulus. A ring. A troch or lozenge, when shaped like a finger. The anus.

Dactyl'ius ACULEA'TUS. A worm of a light color, annulated, cylindrical, but tapering slightly towards both extremities, from two-fifths to four-fifths of an inch long, which has been found in the urine. See Parasites.

Dac'tylo, (δακτυλος, 'a finger,') in composition, finger.

Dactylodoch'mê, (δακτυλοδωχη.) Dochme.

Dactylol'ogy, Dactylolog'ia, (dactylo, and λογος, 'a discourse,') Conversing with the fingers; as by the deaf and dumb.

Dactylosym'physis, (dactylo, and συνφυσις, 'union,') Adhesion of the fingers to each other.

Dactylothe'kê, (dactylo, and θηκη, 'a case or sheath,') An instrument for keeping the fingers extended when wounded.

Dac'tylus, (δακτυλος.) Dig'itus. A finger. The smallest measure of the Greeks, the sixth part of a foot. Also, the Date.

Dæda'lea Suave'olens, Bole'tus seu Fun'gus Sal'icis, Bole'tus discoideus seu suave'olens, Fun'gus al'bus salig'neus, (F.) Agaric odorant, Bolet odorant. Ord. Fungi. A champignon, which grows on the trunks of old willows. It has a smell of anise, which is penetrating and agreeable, and has been recommended in phthisis pulmonalis in the dose of a scruple four times a day.

Dæ'dalus, Hydrargyrum.

Dæ'dion, (dim. of δαίς, 'a torch,') Bougie.

Dæmo'nia, Demonomania.

Dæmoni'acus, (δαίμων, 'a demon,') Possessed.

Dæmonoma'nia, Demonomania.

Dæmonopathi'a, Demonomania.

Dæs, (δαις.) Tæda.

Daf'fing, Insanity.

Daf'fodil, Narcissus pseudonarcissus.

Daf'fy's Elix'ir, (after the proposer,) Tinctura sennæ composita.

Daft, (Sc. and Prov.,) Insane.

Dag, Stitch.

Dais'y, (Sax. dægerege.) Chrysanthemum leucanthemum, Erigeron Philadelphicum—d. Common, Bellis—d. Ox-eye, Chrysanthemum leucanthemum.

Dajasksch, see Arrowpoison.

Dal'by's Carmin'ative, (after the proposer.) A celebrated empirical remedy, much used as a carminative for children. The following is a form for its preparation: (Magnesie alb., \mathfrak{z} ij., Ol. menthæ piper., gtt. j., Ol. nuc. moschat., gtt. ij., Ol. anisi, gtt. iij., Tinct. castor., gtt. xxx., Tinct. asafœtid., gtt. xv., Tinct. opii, gtt. v., Sp. pulegii, gtt. xv., Tinct. cardam. c., gtt. xxx., Aquæ menthæ pip., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ ij. M.) A committee of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy recommended the following form: Aquæ Ox., Sacchar. alb., \mathfrak{z} xxxij., Carbon. Potass., \mathfrak{z} ss., Carb. Mag., \mathfrak{z} xij., Tinct. opii, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ vj., Ol. menth. pip., Ol. anethi fœnicul., \mathfrak{aa} \mathfrak{z} ij. M.

Dal'cop, Idiot.

Dal'tonian. An absurd name given to one who cannot distinguish colors; because the celebrated physicist Dalton had the defect. See Achromatopsia.

Dal'tonism, Achromatopsia.

Damarra or Dammara, (the Malay name of the 'tree,') Australis, see Pinus damarra—d. Resin or Turpentine, see Pinus damarra.

Damp, After, ([G.] Dampf, 'vapor,') see Hydrogen, carburetted—d. Black, see Hydrogen, carburetted—d. Choke, Carbonic acid, see Hydrogen, carburetted.

DAMP, COLD. A term, used in the mines of Cornwall, for air apparently loaded with carbonic acid, chilled, and very moist from passing through the workings.

DAMP, FIRE, Hydrogen, carburetted.

Dam'son, (from Damascus,) Prunum Damasacenum, see Prunum—d. Mountain, Quassia simarouba—d. Tree, Prunus domestica.

Dance, see Mania, dancing—d. St. John's, see Mania, dancing—d. St. Vitus's, Chorea, see Mania, dancing.

Danc'ing, Salta'tio, (F.) Danse, (G.) Tanz. A kind of exercise and amusement, composed of a succession of motions, gestures, and attitudes, executed by measured steps to the sound of the voice or musical instruments. It is a healthy exercise.

DANC'ING MA'NIA, see Mania, dancing—d. Plague, see Mania, dancing.

Dandeli'on, ([F.] dent de lion, 'lion's tooth,') Leontodon taraxacum—d. Juice of, see Succus conii.

Dan'der, (from dandriff.) Pityriasis.

Dan'driff, (Sax. tan, 'a spreading eruption,' and þpor, 'filthy,') Pityriasis.

Dan'druff, Pityriasis.

Dan'dy, Dengue.

Danevert, Min'eral Wa'ters of. A spring, a league and a half from Upsal, in Sweden. The waters contain carbonic acid, holding in solution carbonate of iron, sulphate of iron, sulphates of soda and lime, chloride of sodium, and silica. It is frequently employed in medicine.

Dane'wort, Sambucus ebulus.

Da'nich. An Arabic word, signifying the weight of 8 grains.

Daniel'lia Thurifera. The Frank'incense Tree of Western Africa, which furnishes the product termed African Frank'incense.

Danse, Dancing—d. de St. Guy, Chorea—d. de St. Witt, Chorea.

Daoun Setan, see Urtica.

Daph'nē, (δαφν, after the nymph Daphne), Laurus.

DAPH'NĒ ALPI'NA, Chamæle'a, Chamæle'a, Wid'owail. Ord. Thymelææ. Sex. Syst. Oc-tandria monogynia. A sort of dwarf-olive. An acrid, volatile, alkaline principle was separated from the bark of this plant by M. Vauquelin, to which he gave the name Daph'nine. The plants of the genus owe their vesicating property to this principle.

Daphné Boisgentil, Daphne mezereum—d. Flax-leaved, Daphne gnidium—d. Garou, Daphne gnidium.

DAPH'NĒ GNID'IUM, D. panicula'ta, Thymelæ'a, Th. Monspeli'aca, Thymelæ'a, Cneo'ron, Spurge Flax, Flax-leaved Daph'nē. The plant which furnishes the Garou Bark, (F.) Daphné Garou, Sain-bois. It is chiefly used, when used at all, for exciting irritation of the skin. The Gra'na Gnid'ia, (see Cnid'ia gra'na), are acrid poisons, like all the plants of this genus, when taken in quantity. According to others, the garou bark and grana gnidia are obtained from the daphne laureola.

DAPH'NĒ LAURE'OLA, D. ma'jor, Thymelæ'a laure'ola. The systematic name of the Spurge Laurel, Laure'ola. The bark of this plant has similar properties to the last.

DAPH'NĒ LIOTTAR'DI, D. mezereum—d. Major, D. laureola.

DAPH'NĒ MEZE'REUM or MEZERE'UM, D. Liottar'di, Thymelæ'a meze'reum. The systematic name of the Meze'reon, Meze'reum, Spurge olive, (F.) Daphné Boisgentil, Jolibois. The bark of the meze'reon, Meze'reum, possesses analogous properties to the other varieties of Daphne. In the Pharmacopœia of the United States, Meze'reum is the bark of Daphne mezereum and of Daphne gnidium. It is considered stimulant and diaphoretic; and, in large doses, is emetic. It has been employed in syphilitic cases, but its efficacy is doubtful. Soaked in vinegar,—meze'reum aceta'tum,—like the other varieties of daphne, it has been employed to irritate the skin, especially to keep issues open.

DAPH'NĒ PANICULA'TA, D. gnidium.

Daphnelæ'on, O'leum Lauri'num, (δαφνελαιον, from δαφν, 'the laurel or bay tree,' and λαιον, 'oil.') Oil of Bay.

Daph'nine, see Daphne Alpina.

Darby's Fluid, see Condy's disinfecting fluid.

Dark'nesses, see Epilepsy.

Dar'nel, Lolium temulentum.

Darse'ni, Laurus cinnamomum.

Darsi'ni, Laurus cinnamomum.

Dar'sis, (δαρσις, from δερω, 'I excoriate,' 'I skin.') The Greek physicians seem to have used this word to designate the anatomical preparation, which consists in removing the skin for exposing the organs covered by it.

Dar'ta, Impetigo—d. Excoriativa, Herpes exedens—d. Maligna, Herpes exedens.

Dar'tos, (δαρτος, 'skinned') Membra'na car'no'sa, Tu'nica muscula'ris seu rubicun'da scro'ti, T. dar'tos seu car'nea, Marsu'pium musculo'sum. A name given to the second covering of the testicle, which the ancient anatomists conceived to be muscular, but which is merely areolar. Its external surface is towards the scrotum; the internal towards the tunica vaginalis. Frederick Lobstein and Breschet consider that it proceeds from an expansion of the fibrous cord, known by the name Gubernaculum tes'tis.

Dartre, (Darta, [?]) Herpes Impetigo, Pityriasis—d. Croûteuse, Impetigo—d. Crustacée, Ecthyma impetigo—d. Crustacée flavescens, Porrigo lupinosa—d. Ecailleuse, Psoriasis—d. Fongueuse, Ecthyma—d. Furfuracée arrondie, Lepra, Lepra vulgaris—d. Furfuracée volante, Lichen, Pityriasis—d. Phlycténoïde, Herpes phlycténoides—d. Pustuleuse couperose, Gutta rosea—d. Pustuleuse disséminée, Acne—d. Pustuleuse mentagra, Sycosis—d. Rongeante, Herpes exedens; see Esthiomenus—d. Squammeuse humide, Eczema—d. Squammeuse lichénoïde, Psoriasis—d. Tonsurante, Por-rigo decalvans—d. Vive, Eczema.

Dartreux (F.), Dar'trous, Herpet'ic. Participating in the characters of Dartre or Herpes. Also, one affected with dartre. Dartre has been used, at one time or other, for almost every disease of the skin. The French have given the name Diathèse Dartreuse, Dar'trous Diath'esis, to a peculiar state of health, which renders its subject liable to general eruptions of different forms, which are always met with in the young, are symmetrical, and controlled by arsenic. See Herpes.

Dasy'ma, (δασυς, 'rough,' 'hairy.') A disease of the eye—the same as trachoma, but less in degree.

Dasy'tes, (δασυτης,) Roughness, particularly of the tongue and voice. Hairiness, Hirsu'ties.

Date, Pal'mula, Dac'tylus, Bal'anos, Phœ'nicos. The fruit of the Phœ'nix dactylif'era seu excel'sa, Pal'ma dactylif'era, (F.) Datte. The unripe date is astringent. When ripe, it resembles the fig. The juice of the tree is refrigerant.

Date'plum, In'dian, Diospyrus lotus.

Datte, Date.

Datu'ra, (Arab. tatorah.) D. stramonium.

DATU'RA SANGUIN'EA, Red Thorn'apple; called by the Indians of Peru Huacacachu, Yerba de Huaca (huaca, 'a grave,') or Grave-plant, and Bovachevo. Ord. Solanaceæ. A plant from which the Peruvian Indians prepare a narcotic drink, called Tonga.

DATU'RA STRAMO'NIUM, Stramo'nia, Barycoe'calon, Sola'num fœ'tidum, Stramo'num, S. ma'jus al'bum seu spino'sum seu vulga'tum seu fœ'tidum, Po'mum seu Ma'lum spino'sum, Nux methel, Datu'ra, Dutro'a, Daty'ra, Stram'ony, Thorn'apple, Ap'ple of Peru', James'town Weed, Jim'ston or Jim'pson Weed, Stink'weed, (F.) Stramonia, Pomme épineuse, Endormie, Herbe aux sorciers ou de diable. The leaves, Stramo'nii Fo'lia (Ph. U. S., 1873), S. Folium, and the seeds, Stramo'nii Se'men, and the root, Stramo'nii Ra'dix, are the parts used in medicine. They are narcotic and poisonous; are given internally as narcotics and antispasmodics; and applied externally as sedatives, in the form of fomentation. The seeds are smoked like tobacco, in asthma. The dose of the powder is, gr. j. to gr. viii.

DATU'RA TAT'ULA has similar properties to D. stramonium.

Dat'urine, Daturi'na, Datu'ria, Datu'rium. The active principle of Datura stramonium has been employed for obtaining the effects of stramonium.

Datu'rium, Daturine.

Daty'ra, Datura stramonium.

Dauc'i Ra'dix, see Daucus carota.

Dauc'ites Vi'num. Wine, of which the Dau'cus or Car'rot was an ingredient. The seeds were steeped in must. It was formerly used in coughs, convulsions, hypochondriasis, diseases of the uterus, &c.

Dauc'us Candia'nus, Athamanta cretensis.

DAUC'US CARO'TA, (δαυκος.) The systematic name of the Car'rot Plant; Dau'cus, D. sylves'tris seu vulga'ris seu sati'vus, Cauca'lis caro'ta, Pastina'ca sylves'tris tenuifo'lia officina'rum, Ado'rian, (Sc.) Meeran, Mirrot, (F.) Carotte. Order, Umbelliferae. The fruit, Car'rot seed, Caro'ta,—(Ph. U. S.)—and the root, Dau'ci ra'dix, have been used in medicine. The root is sweet and mucilaginous; and the seeds have an aromatic odor, and moderately warm, pungent taste. The root has been used, as an emollient, to fetid and ill-conditioned sores. The seeds have been regarded as stomachic, carminative, and diuretic; but they have little efficacy. The seeds of the wild plant are, by some, preferred to those of the garden.

DAUCUS CRE'TICUS, Athamanta cretensis—d. Cyanopus, Pimpinella magna—d. Sativus, D. carota—d. Seprinius, Scandix cerefolium—d. Sylvestris, D. carota—d. Vulgaris, D. carota.

Daud. A form of psoriasis, which prevails in Assam, especially during the rainy season.

Dauphinelle, Delphinium staphisagria.

Da'vidson's Rem'edy for Can'cer, see Conium maculatum.

Davies, (after the inventor [?],) Dentagra.

Davil'la Brasilia'na, D. rugosa—d. Elliptica, see D. rugosa.

DAVIL'LA RUGO'SA seu BRASILIA'NA, (after Don Pedro Franco Davila, a Peruvian and Spanish naturalist, who wrote a Natural History of Peru,) Sambaibinha, Cipo de Carijo, C. de Caboclo; Nat. Ord. Dilleniaceæ. The whole of this Brazilian plant, as well as Davil'la elliptica, also called, in Brazil, Sambaibinha, is astringent.

Daw'lish, Cli'mate of. A town in Devonshire, frequented by phthisical invalids during the winter. It is well protected from northerly winds, and also from the violence of the south-westerly gales. It offers, however, but a confined space.

Daw'pit (Sc.), see Fatuitas.

Dax, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Dax is a city two leagues from Bordeaux, where there are four springs, that are almost purely thermal; containing only a very small quantity of chloride of magnesium, and sulphate of soda and lime. Temperature, 70° to 133° Fahrenheit.

Day'blindness, Nyctalopia.

Day'mare, Incubus vigilantium.

Day'nettle, Lamium album.

Day's Eye, Daisy.

Day'sight, Hemeralopia—d. Vision, Hemeralopia.

Dazz'ling, (dim. of dazing,) Caliga'tio, (F.) Éblouissement. A momentary disturbance of sight, occasioned either by the sudden impression of too powerful a light, or by some internal cause—as plethora.

De, (F.) dés, 'from,' as a prefix, signifies, at times, a downward movement; and at others a privative power, while at others again, it has an intense signification.

De Ven'tre Inspicien'do, 'of inspecting the belly.' Where there is reason to suppose that a woman feigns herself pregnant, a writ de ventre inspiciendo may be issued to determine whether she is so or not. Until recently, in England, the decision was left to twelve matrons and twelve respectable men, according to the strict terms of the ancient writ.

Dead, ([Sax.] deaf,) Mor'tuus, (F.) Mort. Deprived of life; exanimate.

Dead'house, Morgue.

Dead'ly, Lethiferous, Mortal.

Dead'men's Bells, Digitalis.

Dead'nettle, Lamium album.

Dead'thraw, Agony.

Deaf, ([Sax.] deaf,) Sur'dus, (F.) Sourd, (Sc.)

Dull. Devoid of hearing. Hard of hearing.

Deaf'dumb'ness, Mutitas surdorum.

Deafmu'tism, Mutitas surdorum.

Deaf'ness, Sur'ditas, Cophosis, Dysecoia, Dyscoia organ'ica, Barycoia, Hard'ness of hear'ing, Hypocophosis, Subsur'ditas, Bradycoi'a, Bradycoi'a, (F.) Surdité, Durété de l'ouïe, Dysécéc. Considerable diminution or total loss of hearing. It may be the effect of acute or chronic inflammation of the internal ear, closure of the Eustachian tube—throat deafness; paralysis of the auditory nerve or its pulpy extremity, or of some mechanical obstruction to the sonorous rays. In most cases, however, the cause of the deafness is not appreciable, and the treatment has to be purely empirical. Syringing the ears, dropping in slightly stimulating oils, fumigations, &c., are the most likely means to afford relief.

DEAF'NESS, TAY'LOP'S REM'EDY FOR, see Allium—d. Throat, see Deafness.

Dealba'tio, (de, and albus, 'white,') Dealbation, Paleness.

Dealba'tion, Dealba'tio, Bleach'ing. Applied, particularly, to the whitening of bones for anatomical purposes.

Deambula'tio, (de, and ambulare, 'to walk,') Walking.

Dearch (Sc.), (Sax. ðreoph,) Nanus.

Dearticula'tio, (de, and articulus, 'a joint,') Diarthrosis.

Deascia'tio, (de, and ascia, 'an axe,') Aposceparnismus.

Death, (Sax. deað,) (Sc.) Dede, Deid; Apobiosis, Abiosis, Extinctio, Obitus, Psychorag'ia, Psychorrhag'ia, Le'thum, Le'tum, Mors, Inter'itus, Than'atus, Decease, (F.) Mort. Definitive cessation of all the functions, the aggregate of which constitute life. Real Death, Apothanasia, is distinguished from asphyxia or apparent death—the latter being merely a suspension of those same functions. But it is often difficult to judge of such suspension, and the only certain sign of real death is the commencement of putrefaction. At times, therefore, great caution is requisite to avoid mistakes. Death is commonly preceded by some distressing symptoms, which depend on lesion of respiration, circulation, or of the cerebral functions, and which constitute the ag'ony. That which occurs suddenly, and without any, or with few, precursory signs, is called sud'den death. It is ordinarily caused by disease of the heart, apoplexy, the rupture of an aneurism, or by some other organic affection. Death is natural, (Sc.) Strac-death, when it occurs as the result of disease; violent, when produced by some forcible agency. It may likewise affect the whole body, or a part only; hence the difference between soma'tic and molec'ular death.

The chief varieties of the modes of death usually admitted may be thus given:—

Death beginning at the heart, { sudden—Syncope: gradual—Asthenia.

" " in the lungs—Apnoea.

" " in the brain—Apoplexy.

" " { in the gray matter of the medulla, } Paralysis of pneumogastrics, &c.

" " in the blood [?]—Necraemia.

As it was at one time conceived, with Bichat, that death must commence in the heart, lungs, or brain, these organs were called a'tria mor'tis, 'the halls of death.'

DEATH, APPA'RENT, Asphyxia.

DEATH, BLACK, Melanothan'atus, Pes'tis seu Mors ni'gra, Black Plague, (F.) Peste noire. The plague of the 14th century was so called, which is supposed to have proved fatal in Europe to 25,000,000 of people. See Fever, purpuric, malignant.

DEATH OF MAN, Cicuta maculata—d. Rate, see Mortality—d. Stiffening, Rigor mortis—d. Trance, see Asphyxia.

Deauren'tur Pil'ulæ, 'let the pills be gilded.' Formerly it was the practice to coat pills with silver or gold leaf, and this is still done occasionally.

Débander (F.), (de and bande, 'a bandage,') To remove a bandage or dressing,—as débander une plaie.

Deb'ilis, ('weak,') Infirm, Abebæus.

Debil'itants, Debilitan'tia, Antidynam'ica, Phil-

adynam'ica, (debilitare, itself from debilis, quasi dehabilis, 'weak,' 'to weaken.') Remedies exhibited for the purpose of reducing excitement. Antiphlogistics are, hence, debilitants.

Debil'itas, gen. Debilita'tis, Debility—d. Erethisica, see Irritable—d. Memoriae, Amnesia—d. Nervosa, Neurasthenia, see Irritable—d. Visus, Asthenopia.

Debil'ity, Debilitas, Asthenia, Hyposthenia, Blaci'a, Anenerge'sia, Anenergi'a, Weak'ness, (F.) Faiblesse. A condition, which may be induced by a number of causes. It must not be confounded with fatigue, which is temporary, while debility is generally more permanent.

Debility may be real, or it may be apparent; and, in the management of disease, it is important to attend to this. At the commencement of fever, for example, there is often a degree of apparent debility, which prevents the use of appropriate means, and thus is the cause of much evil. Excitement is more dangerous than debility.

DEBIL'ITY, SPI'NAL, Spinal weakness.

Déboitement, (de, and boiter, 'to be lame,') Luxation.

Débordement (F.), Déborde, (déborder, — de, and border, — 'to overflow,') A popular term for one or more sudden and copious evacuations from the bowels. It is chiefly applied to bilious evacuations of this kind. — Débordement de Bile.

Debout's Pills, see Pill, Becquerel's.

Débridement (F.), Frano'rum solu'tio, (débrider, — de, and brider, — 'to unbridle,') The removal of filaments, &c., in a wound or abscess, which prevent the discharge of pus. In a more general acceptation, it means the cutting of a soft membranous, or aponeurotic part, which interferes with the exercise of any organ whatever; thus, in paraphimosis, débridement of the prepuce is practised to put an end to the inflammation of the glans; in strangulated hernia, débridement of the abdominal ring is had recourse to, to remove the stricture of the intestine, &c.

Dec'agramme, (deka, 'ten,' and γραμμα, 'a gramme,') The weight of ten grammes, 154.34 grains Troy.

Decam'yonon, (deka, 'ten,' and μυρον, 'ointment,') An ancient cataplasm, composed of mala-bathrum, mastich, euphorbium, spikenard, styrax calamita, carbonate of lime, common pepper, unguentum nardi, opobalsamum, and wax.

Decanta'tion, Decanta'tio, (from decantare, — de, and cantare, — 'to sing or repeat over and over,' or from de, and (D.) kant, 'a corner,' hence 'to cant,' 'to set on edge in order to decant or pour off,') [Defu'sio, Metungism'us, Catach'ysis. A pharmaceutical operation, which consists in pouring off, gently, by inclining the vessel, any fluid which has a deposit.

Decapita'tio, Decollation—d. Articulorum, see Resection.

Decapita'tion, (de, and caput, gen. capitis, 'head,') Decollation.

Decarboniza'tion, Hæmatosis.

Decease', (decedere, decessum, — de, and cedo, — 'to depart,') Death.

Deces'sio, Eopiesma.

Déchapellement, (de, and chapeau, from caput, 'head,') An old French term, employed by Paré and others for the operation of cutting and removing, with a strong forceps, the corona of a carious tooth, where it is desired to preserve the fang.

Décharné, (de, and chair, 'flesh,') Demusculatus.

Déchaussement (F.), (de, and chausser, 'to put on shoes and stockings,') The state in which the gums have fallen away from the teeth, as in those affected by mercury, in old persons, &c. Also, the operation of lancing the gums. See Gum lancet.

Déchaussoir, Gum lancet.

Déchiré, Lacerum.

Déchirement, (from dilacerare, — di, and lacerare, 'to tear,' — 'to tear to pieces,') Laceration.

Déchirure, Wound, lacerated — d. de l'Utérus, Uterus, rupture of the.

Deciden'tia, (decidere, 'to fall off,' de, and cadere, 'to fall,') Cataptosis, Epilepsy.

Decid'ua, Decidua membrana.

DECID'UA (MEMBRA'NA), Decid'ua, Decid'uons Membrane. So called on account of its being considered to fall off from the uterus at parturition. A membrane, formerly defined to be the outermost membrane of the foetus in utero; and still so defined by some — as by Dr. Lee. Chaussier calls it Epicho'rion; by others, it has been called Perio'na, Membra'na cadu'ca Hunteri, M. flocculen'ta seu cellulo'sa seu sinuo'sa seu commu'nis seu præexis'tens, Decid'ua exter'na seu vera seu spongio'sa, Tu'nica exte'rior o'vi seu cadu'ca seu cras'sa, Membra'na cribro'sa seu o'vi mater'na seu muc'o'sa seu u'teri intern'a evolu'ta, Epio'nê, Placen'ta u'teri succenturia'ta, Subplacen'ta, Nida-men'tum, Anhis'tous mem'brane, (F.) Caducue, C. vraie, Membrane caduque, Épione, Périone; — prior to the time of the Hunters, called Cho'rion spon-gio'sum seu tomento'sum seu fungo'sum seu reticu-la'tum, Tu'nica filamento'sa, Shag'gy Cho'rion, Spon'gy Cho'rion, &c. Great diversity has prevailed regarding this membrane and its reflected portion. It exists before the germ arrives in the uterus — and it has been met with in tubal and ovarian pregnancies; and is occasioned by a new action, assumed by the uterine vessels at the moment of conception. Chaussier, Lobstein, Gardien, Velpeau, and others, consider it to be a sac, without apertures, completely lining the uterus, and that when the ovum descends through the tube it pushes the decidua before it, and becomes enveloped in it, except at the part destined to form the placenta. That portion of the membrane which covers the ovum, forms the Membra'na decid'ua reflex'a, (F.) Caducue réfléchie, Membrane caduque réfléchie, according to them; the part lining the uterus being the Decid'ua u'teri, (F.) Caducue utérine. Towards the end of the fourth month, the decidua reflex disappears. The very existence of a Tu'nica decid'ua reflex'a has, however, been denied. This last membrane has received various names. Dr. Granville, regarding it as the external membrane of the ovum, has termed it Cor'tex o'vi. It has also been termed Involu'crum membrana'ceum, Membra'na retiform'is cho'rui seu filamento'sa seu adventit'ia seu cras'sa, O'vuline, and Decid'ua protru'sa. To the membrane which, according to Bojanus and others, is situate between the placenta and the uterus, and which he considers to be produced at a later period than the decidua vera, he gave the name membra'na decid'ua sero'tina, (F.) Membrane utéroëpichoriale, Caducue sérotine ou secondaire.

Histological researches seem to show that the decidua is an altered condition of the lining membrane of the uterus, with a whitish secretion filling the uterine tubular glands. The decidua reflexa is probably formed by the agency of nucleated cells from the plastic materials thrown out from the decidua uteri; in the same manner as the chorion is formed in the Fallopian tube from plastic materials thrown out from its lining membrane. That the decidua reflexa is not a mere inverted portion of the decidua uteri is shown by the fact that the texture of the two is by no means identical.

It is believed by many that a deciduous membrane, Decid'ua menstrua'lis, is formed and thrown off at each menstrual period. Others, however, contend that it is the result of impregnation, and that it is an abortion of some days or weeks, the mucous membrane of the uterus being first converted into decidua, and expelled after the perishing or escape of the ovum.

Deciduous Membrane, Decidua (membrana).

Decigramme, Decigramma, (decimus, 'the tenth part,' and gramma, 'gramme.') The tenth part of the gramme in weight: equal to a little less than two grains, French; 1.543 Troy.

Decima'na Fe'bris, (decem, 'ten.') An intermittent, whose paroxysms return every tenth day or every nine days. It is supposititious.

Declama'tion, Declama'tio, (de, and clamare, clamatum, 'to cry out.') The art of depicting the sentiments by inflections of the voice, accompanied by gestures, which render the meaning of the speaker more evident, and infuse into the minds of the auditors the emotions with which he is impressed. Declamation may become the cause of disease; the modification, produced in the pulmonary circulation, — accompanied by the great excitement sometimes experienced, — is the cause of many morbid affections; particularly of pneumonia, hæmoptysis, and apoplexy. In moderation, it gives a healthy excitement to the frame.

Déclîn, Decline.

Declina'tio, (de, and clinare, clinatum, 'to bend.') Decline.

Decline', Declina'tio, Inclina'tio, Decremen'tum, Remis'sio, Parac'mē, Parac'masis, (F.) Déclîn. That period of a disorder or paroxysm, at which the symptoms begin to abate in violence, (F.) Décours. We speak, also, of the decline of life, or of the powers, (F.) Déclîn de l'age, L'age de déclîn, when the physical and moral faculties lose a little of their activity and energy. See Phthisis, and Tabes.

Déclive (F.), Decli'vis, (de, and clivis, 'acclivity.') Inclining downwards. This epithet is applied to the most depending part of a tumor or abscess.

Décocté, Decoction.

Decoc'tion, Decoc'tio, (decoquere, — de, and coquere, coctum, — 'to boil,') Epsé'sis, Apoz'esis, Ze'sis, Hepse'sis, Aphep'sis, (F.) Décoction. The operation of boiling certain ingredients in a fluid, for the purpose of extracting the parts soluble at that temperature. Decoction, likewise, means the product of this operation, to which the terms Decoc'tum, Ze'ma, Aphepse'ma, Ap'ozem, Apoz'ema, Hepse'ma, Chyl'us, and Epsé'ma, (F.) Décocté, Apozème, Hydrolé, Hydrolite, have been applied according to ancient custom, in order to avoid any confusion between the operation and its product; — as præpara'tio is used for the act of preparing; præpara'tum, for the thing prepared. The French Codex (1866) has formulæ for a variety of Apozèmes.

DECOCTUM AL'OËS COMPOS'ITUM, Decoc'tum Al'oës, Bal'sam of Life, Compound Decoc'tion of Al'oës. (Ext. glyc., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{j}$, Potass. carb., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{j}$, Aloes, Myrrhæ, Croci, $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{ss}$, Aquæ dest. q. s. (Imp. meas.). Boil to Oj.: strain, and add Tinct. card. c., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{v}\mathfrak{i}\mathfrak{j}$, Ph. B., 1867). The gum and extractive are dissolved in this preparation. The alkali is added to take up a little of the resin. The tincture prevents it from spoiling. It is gently cathartic. Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{ss}$ to $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{j}$.

DECOCTUM ALTHÆ'Æ, Mistura Althæ'æ, D. althæ'æ officinalis, Decoc'tion or Mix'ture of Marshmallows, (F.) Décoction de Guimauve. (Rad. althææ sicc., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{i}\mathfrak{v}$, Uvar. passar., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{i}\mathfrak{j}$, Aquæ, Oviij. Boil to Ov. Pour off the clear liquor, Ph. E.) It is used as a demulcent.

DECOCTUM AMA'RUM, Bitter Decoc'tion. (Rad. gentian., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{j}$, Aquæ, Oijss. Boil for a quarter of an hour; add Species amaræ, $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{i}\mathfrak{j}$. Infuse for two hours and filter, without expressing. Ph. P.) It is tonic. Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{ss}$ to $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{j}$.

DECOCTUM AM'YLI, Mucilago amyli.

DECOCTUM ANTHEM'IDIS NOB'ILIS, D. Chamæmeli, Decoc'tion of Chamomile. (Flor. anthemid. nobil., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{j}$, Sem. carui, $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{i}\mathfrak{v}$, Aquæ, Ov. Boil for fifteen minutes, and strain. Ph. E.) It contains bitter extractive and essential oil, dissolved in water. It is used, occasionally, as a vehicle for tonic powders, pills, &c., and in fomentations and gylsters; but for the last purpose, warm water is equally efficacious. The Dublin College had a compound decoction.

DECOCTUM ARA'LIÆ NUDICAUL'IS, Decoc'tion of False Sarsaparilla. (Araliæ nudicaul., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{v}\mathfrak{j}$, Aquæ, Oviij. Digest for four hours, and then boil to four pints: press out and strain the decoction. Former Ph. U. S.) It is used as a stomachic, but it is an unnecessary and laborious preparation.

DECOCTUM CAS'SIÆ, Decoc'tion of Cassia. (Cassiæ pulp., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{i}\mathfrak{j}$, Aquæ, Oij. Boil for a few minutes, filter without expression, and add syrup. violar., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{j}$, or mannæ pur., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{i}\mathfrak{j}$. Ph. P.) It is laxative, in the dose of $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{v}\mathfrak{j}$.

DECOCTUM CETRA'RIÆ, Decoc'tum Liche'nis Island'ici, Decoc'tion of Ice'land Moss. (Cetrar., $\mathfrak{z}\mathfrak{ss}$, Aquæ, q. s. Boil in a pint of water for fifteen minutes, strain with compression, and add sufficient water to make a pint. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It consists of bitter extractive and fecula, dissolved in water, and its operation is tonic and demulcent. Dose, f℥j. to ℥iv. It is also nutrient, but hardly worthy of the rank of an official preparation.

DECOCTUM CHAMÆME'LI, Decoction of anemidid nobilis.

DECOCTUM CHIMAPH'ILÆ, Decoction of Pipsis-seica. (Chimaph. contus., ℥j., Aquæ, q. s. The process is similar to that of Decoction of Cetrariæ. Ph. U. S., 1873.) A pint may be given in the course of the twenty-four hours.

DECOCTUM CINCHO'NÆ, D. Corticis Cincho'næ seu Ki'næ Ki'næ, Decoction of Cincho'na or of Bark. (Cinchon. cort. contus., ℥j., Aquæ, Oj. Boil for ten minutes in a slightly-covered vessel, and strain while hot, adding water to make a pint.) It contains quinia and resinous extractive, dissolved in water. Long coction oxygenates and precipitates the extractive. It can be given where the powder does not sit easy, &c. Dose, f℥j. to ℥iv.

The Pharmacopœia of the United States has a Decoction of Cincho'næ flāvæ, Decoction of yellow bark or Cinchona, and a Decoction of Cincho'næ rubræ, Decoction of red bark or Cinchona, both of which are prepared as above. The London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Colleges had a Decoction of Cinchonæ pallidæ, Decoction of pale bark.

DECOCTUM COLOM'BÆ COMPOSITUM, Compound Decoction of Colombæ. (Colomb. contus., Quassia, āā ℥ij., Cort. aurant., ℥j., Rhei pulv., ℥j., Potassæ carbonat., ℥ss., Aquæ, f℥xx. Boil to a pint, and add tinct. lavand., f℥ss. Former Ph. U. S.) Given as a tonic, but not worthy an official station.

DECOCTUM COMMUN'E PRO CLYSTERE, D. Malvæ compositum—d. Cornu cervini, Mistura cornu uti.

DECOCTUM COR'NUS FLORIDÆ, Decoction of Dogwood. (Cornus Florid. cont., ℥j., Aquæ, Oj. Boil for fifteen minutes, strain and add water to make a pint. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, f℥iiss.

DECOCTUM CYDO'NLE, Mucilago Seminis Cydonii Ma'li seu Seminum Cydonio'rum, Decoction or Mucilage of Quince seeds. (Cydoniæ sem., ℥ij., Aquæ, Oj. Boil for ten minutes over a gentle fire, and strain. Ph. L.) It is merely a solution of mucilage in water, and is used as a demulcent.

DECOCTUM DAPH'NES MEZE'REI, Decoction of Meze'rei, Decoction of Meze'reon. (Meze'rei, ℥ij., Glycyrrh. cont., ℥j., Aquæ, Oij. Boil over a gentle fire to Oiss., and strain. Ph. E.) The acrimony of the mezereon and the saccharine mucilage of the liquorice root are imparted to the water. It is somewhat stimulant, and has been used in secondary syphilis; but is devoid of power. Dose, f℥ij. to ℥vj.

DECOCTUM DIAPHORET'ICUM, D. Guaiaci compositum.

DECOCTUM DIGITA'LIS, Decoction of Foxglove. (Fol. digit., sicc. ℥j., Aquæ, q. s. ut colentur f℥viij. Let the liquor begin to boil over a slow fire, and then remove it. Digest for fifteen minutes, and strain. Ph. D.) It possesses the properties of the plant. Dose, f℥ij. to ℥iij.

DECOCTUM DULCAMA'RÆ, Decoction of Wood'y Nightshade, D. of Bitter-sweet. (Dulcamara cont., ℥j., Aquæ, q. s. Boil in a pint of water, strain, and add water to make a pint. Ph. U. S., 1873.) This decoction has been considered diuretic and diaphoretic, and has been administered extensively in skin diseases. It is probably devoid of efficacy.

DECOCTUM PRO FOMEN'TO, D. papaveris.

DECOCTUM GEOFFRÆ'Æ INER'MIS, Decoction of Cab'bagetree Bark. (Cort. geoffr. inermis, in pulv., ℥j., Aquæ, Oij. Boil over a slow fire to a pint, and strain. Ph. E.) It is possessed of anthelmintic, purgative, and narcotic properties, and has been chiefly used for the first of these purposes. Dose, to children, f℥ij.—to adults, f℥ss. to ℥ij.

DECOCTUM GRANA'TI RADICIS, Decoction of Pomegranate Root. (Granat. rad., ℥ij., Aquæ destill., Oij. Boil to Oj. Ph. B., 1867.)

DECOCTUM GUAI'ACI COMPOSITUM, D. Guai'aci officinalis compositum seu Ligno'rum seu de Guy'aco compositum seu sudorificum seu diaphoreticum, Compound decoction of Guai'acum, Decoction of the Woods. (Lign. guaiac. rasur., ℥iij., fruct. sicc. vitis vinifer., ℥ij., rad. lauri sassafr. concis., rad. glycyrrh., āā ℥j., Aquæ, Oj. Boil the guaiacum and raisins over a slow fire to Oj.: adding the roots towards the end, then strain. Ph. E.) It is possessed of stimulant properties, and has been given in syphilitic, cutaneous, and rheumatic affections. The resin of the guaiacum is, however, insoluble in water, so that the guaiac wood in it cannot be supposed to possess much, if any, effect. The Parisian Codex has a DECOCTUM DE GUY'ACO COMPOSITUM ET PUR'GANS, (F.) Decoction of Gayac Composé et Purgative; Compound purgative Decoction of Guai'acum. (Lign. guaiac. rasp., rad. sassafr., āā ℥j., potass. carbonat., gr. xxv. Macerate for twelve hours, agitating occasionally in water, Oiv., until there remain Oij. Then infuse in it fol. sennæ, ℥ij., rhei, ℥j., lign. sassafr., glycyrrh. rad., āā ℥ij., sem. coriand., ℥j. Strain gently, suffer it to settle, and pour off the clear supernatant liquor. The title sufficiently indicates the properties of the composition.

DECOCTUM HÆMATOXYLI, Decoction of Log'wood. (Hæmatoxyl. rasur., ℥j., Aquæ, Oij. Boil to a pint, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

DECOCTUM HELLEBORI AL'BI, D. veratri.

DECOCTUM HOR'DEI, Decoction of Hordei Distichi, Ptis'ana Hippocrat'ica, Tipsa'ria, Tapsa'ria, Aqua Hordea'ta, Hydrocristhē, Bar'ley Water, Decoction of Bar'ley, (F.) Decoction of Orge, Tisane Commune. (Hord., ℥ij., Aquæ, q. s. Wash the barley well, boil for a few minutes in water, Oss.: strain this, and throw it away, add boiling water, Oiv. Boil to Oij., and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is nutritive and demulcent, and is chiefly used as a common drink, and in gylsters.

DECOCTUM HOR'DEI COMPOSITUM, Decoction of pectora'te, Mistura Hor'dei, Ptis'ana communis; Compound Decoction of Bar'ley, (F.) Decoction of Orge composée. (Decoct. hord., Oij., caricæ fruct. concis., ℥iiss., glycyrrh. rad. concis. et contus., ℥vj., ugarum pass. demptis acinis, ℥ijss., Aquæ, Oj. Boil to Oij., and strain. Ph. L.) It has similar properties to the last.

DECOCTUM KI'NÆ KI'NÆ, D. cinchonæ.

DECOCTUM KI'NÆ KI'NÆ COMPOSITUM ET LAX'ANS, Decoction of quinquina composée et laxative, Compound laxative decoction of Cincho'na. (Cort. cinchon., ℥j., Aquæ, Oij. Boil for a quarter of an hour, remove from the fire; then infuse in it, for half an hour, fol. sennæ, sodæ sulph., āā ℥j.: add syrup. de sennâ, f℥j.) Its title indicates its properties.

DECOCTUM LICHE'NIS ISLAN'DICI, Decoction of Cetrariæ—d. Lignorum, D. Guaiaci compositum.

DECOCTUM LI'NI COMPOSITUM, Compound Decoction of Flaxseed. (Lini, ℥j., Glycyrrhiz. contus., ℥ss., Aquæ, Oiss. Boil for ten minutes, and strain. Ph. D.)

DECOCTUM MAL'VÆ COMPOSITUM, Decoction of pro enem'atē seu commu'nē pro clyste'rē, Compound Decoction of Mal'low, (F.) Decoction of Mauve composée. (Malvæ exsicc., ℥j., anemid. flor. exsicc., ℥ss., Aquæ, Oj. Boil for fifteen minutes and strain.) It consists of bitter extractive, and mucilage in water, and is chiefly used for clysters and fomentations. It is unworthy a place in the pharmacopœias.

DECOCTUM MEZE'REI, D. daphnes mezerei.

DECOCTUM PAPAV'ERIS, Decoction of Fomen'to, Fo'tus communis, Decoction of Pop'py or Pop'pies. (Papav. somnif. capsul. cont., ℥ij., Aquæ dest., Oiss. Boil for ten minutes, and strain. Ph. B., 1867.) It contains the narcotic principle of the poppy, and mucilage in water: is anodyne and emollient, and employed as such in fomentation, in painful swellings, ulcers, &c.

DECOCTUM PAREIRÆ, Decoc'tion of Pareir'ra or Pareira Brav'a. (Pareir. brav., \mathfrak{z} iss., Aq. Destillat., Oj. Boil to a pint and strain. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ j. to \mathfrak{z} ij.

DECOCTUM PECTORALÆ, D. hordei compositum—d. Polygalæ Senegæ, D. senegæ.

DECOCTUM PRO ENEM'ATÆ, D. malvæ compositum.

DECOCTUM QUERCUS seu QUERCUS ALBÆ, D. Querc'us Ro'boris, Decoc'tion of White Oak, D. of White Oak Bark, D. of Oak Bark. (Querc'us cort., \mathfrak{z} j., Aquæ, Oj. Boil, strain, and add water to make a pint. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is astringent, and used as such, in injections, in leucorrhœa, uterine hemorrhage, &c., as well as in the form of fomentations to unhealthy ulcers.

DECOCTUM SARSÆ, Decoc'tum sarsaparillæ—d. Sarsæ compositum, Decoc'tum sarsaparillæ compositum.

DECOCTUM SARSAPARILLÆ, D. Smil'acis Sarsaparillæ, D. Sarsæ, D. Sarsæ, Decoc'tion of Sarsaparill'a. (Sarsaparill. rad. concis., \mathfrak{z} iss., Aq. destill. bullient., Oiss. Digest for an hour, boil for ten minutes, cool and strain. Ph. B., 1867.) It contains bitter extractive, and mucilage in water; is demulcent, and has been used, although it is doubtful with what efficacy, in the sequelæ of syphilis. Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ iv. to Oss.

DECOCTUM SARSAPARILLÆ COMPOSITUM, Com'pound Decoc'tion of Sarsaparill'a, (F.) Decoc'tion de Salsepareille Composée. (Sarsaparill. concis. et contus., \mathfrak{z} vj., Sassafr. Cort. concis., Lign. Guaiac. rasur., Rad. Glycyrriz. contus., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} j., Mezerei. concis., \mathfrak{z} ij., Aquæ, Oiv. Boil fifteen minutes, digest for two hours in a covered vessel at about 200°, strain, and add water to make the whole Oiv. Ph. U. S., 1873.) This is considered to be possessed of analogous properties to the celebrated Lis'bon Diet-Drink, Decoc'tum Lusitan'icum, which it resembles in composition.

DECOCTUM SARSÆ seu Sarsæ, Decoc'tum sarsaparillæ.

DECOCTUM SCILLÆ, Decoc'tion of Squill. (Scillæ, \mathfrak{z} ij., juniper., \mathfrak{z} iv., Senegæ, \mathfrak{z} ij., Aquæ, Oiv. Boil till one-half the liquor is consumed; strain, and add spirit of nitrous ether, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ iv. Former Ph. U. S.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ ss.

DECOCTUM SCOPARII, Decoc'tion of Broom. (Scopar. exsicc., \mathfrak{z} j., Aquæ destillat., Oj. Boil for ten minutes and strain. Ph. B., 1867.)

DECOCTUM SCOPARII COMPOSITUM, D. Scoparii (Ph. E.), Com'pound Decoc'tion of Broom (Scopar., Junip. cont., Taraxac. cont., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} ss., Aq. destillat., Oiss., [Imp. meas.] Boil to a pint, and strain. Ph. L.) Dose, half a pint to a pint, in the day; as a diuretic in dropsy.

DECOCTUM SENEGÆ, D. Polygalæ Senegæ; Decoc'tion of Sen'ega or Seneka. (Seneg. cont., \mathfrak{z} j., Aquæ, Oj. Boil, strain, and add water to make Oj. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is reputed to be diuretic, purgative, and stimulant, and has been given in dropsy, rheumatism, &c.

DECOCTUM SMILACIS SARSAPARILLÆ, D. sarsaparillæ—d. Sudorificum, D. Guaiaci compositum.

DECOCTUM TARAXACI, Decoc'tion of Dan'delon. (Taraxac. contus., \mathfrak{z} i., Aquæ destillat., Oj. Boil to a pint, and strain. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ iss.

DECOCTUM TORMENTILLÆ, Decoc'tion of Tormentil. (Tormentil. cont., \mathfrak{z} ij., Aquæ destillat., Oiss., [Imp. meas.] Boil to a pint, and strain.) Dose, as an astringent, one or two fluidounces.

DECOCTUM ULMI, D. Ulmi Campes'tris, Decoc'tion of Elm Bark. (Ulm. cort. in frustulis, \mathfrak{z} iss., Aquæ dest., Oj. Boil and strain, and add distilled water to make a pint. Ph. B., 1867.) It is a reputed diuretic, and has been used in lepra and herpes; but, probably, has no efficacy. Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ iv. to Oss.

DECOCTUM UVAE URSI, Decoc'tion of u'va ur'si. (Uvæ ursi, \mathfrak{z} j., Aquæ, Oj. Boil, strain, and add water to make Oj. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ iss.

DECOCTUM VERA'TRI, Decoc'tum Helleb'ori al'bi; Decoc'tion of White Hel'lebo're. (Veratri rad. cont., \mathfrak{z} j., Aquæ, Oij., Spir. rect., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ ij. Boil the watery decoction to Oj., and, when it is cold, add the spirit. Ph. L.) It is stimulant, acrid, and cathartic; but is used only externally. It is a useful wash in tinea capitis, psora, &c. Should it excite intense pain on being applied, it must be diluted.

DECOCTUM ZITTMANNI, Zitt'man's Decoc'tion. A combination of remedies, extolled by Theden in venereal diseases, and much employed in Germany in syphilis. It is composed of sarsaparilla, pulvis stypticus, calomel and cinnabar, boiled in water with aniseed, fennel seed, and liquorice root. A stronger and a weaker decoction were directed by Zittman. (Formulæ for its preparation are contained in Jourdan's Pharmacopœia Universalis; and in Lincke's Vollständiges Recept-Taschenbuch, Leipz., 1841, and in Aitken's "Science and Practice of Medicine," Vol. I., p. 834, Phila., 1872.)

DECOLLA'TION, Decolla'tio, Decapita'tion, Decapita'tio, Obtrunca'tio, (de, and collum, 'the neck.') The act of separating the head from the trunk, by the section of the neck, as in cases of dystocia.

DÉCOLLEMENT (F.), Deglutina'tio, (de, and coller, 'to glue.') The state of an organ that is separated from the surrounding parts, owing to destruction of the areolar membrane which united them. The skin is décollée, i. e. separated from the subjacent parts, by a burn, subcutaneous abscess, &c.

DÉCOLLEMENT DU PLACENTA is the separation or detachment of the whole or a part of the placenta from the inner surface of the uterus.—Décollement, from de, 'from,' and collum, 'the neck,' obtrunca'tio, also means the separation of the head of the foetus from the trunk, the latter remaining in the uterus.

DECOLORA'TION, Discolora'tion, Decolora'tio, Discolora'tio, (de, and colorare, coloratum, 'to color.') Loss of the natural color; Parachro'sis, Dyschroma'sia. Devoid of color,—Achroma'sia.

In Pharmacy, any process by which liquids, or solids in solution, are deprived wholly or in part of their color,—as by passing them through animal charcoal.

DÉCOMPOSÉE (F.), (de, and componere, compositum, 'to compose,') Decomposed, Dissolūtus. An epithet, applied to the face when extensively changed in its expression and color; as in the choleric or moribund.

DECORTICA'TION, Decortica'tio, (de, and cortex, gen. corticis, 'bark.') An operation, which consists in separating the bark from roots, stalks, &c. The detachment of portions of enamel from a tooth is sometimes termed the decor'ticating process, (F.) Carie écorchante.

DECOS'TIS, Apleu'ros, (de, and costa, 'a rib.') One who has no ribs.

DÉCOURS, Decline.

DECREMEN'TUM, (de, and crescere, 'to grow.') Decline.

DECREP'IT, (de, and crepere, crepitum, 'to creak.') See Decrepitude.

DECREP'ITUDE, Decrepitu'do, Ætas decrep'ita, Ultima senec'tus, Senec'ta decrep'ita seu extre'ma seu sum'ma seu ul'tima. The last period of old age, and of human life; which ordinarily occurs about the eightieth year. It may, however, be accelerated or protracted. Its character consists in the progressive series of phenomena which announce the approaching extinction of life. One in this stage of existence is said to be decrep'it, decrep'itus, (F.) décép'it.

Decreto'rii Di'es, (decretorius, 'decisive.') Critical days.

Decu'bitus, gen. Decubitūs, (decumbere, — de, and cubere, cubitum, — 'to lie,' 'to lie down,') Cubatio. Lying down. Assuming the horizontal posture, decubitū supinus, (F.) Coucher. Horā decubitūs, 'at bed time.' The French say — Decubitus horizontal, sur le dos, sur le côté, for lying in the horizontal posture, on the back or side.

Decurta'tus, Meiu'rus, (de, and curtus, 'short,' — 'shortened,' 'curtailed,' 'running to a point,') When applied to the pulse, it signifies a progressive diminution in the strength of the arterial pulsations, which, at last, cease. If the pulsations return and gradually acquire all their strength, it is called Pulsus decurta'tus recip'roculus.

Decussa'tio, Decussation — d. Pyramidum, see Corpora pyramidalia.

Decussa'tion, Decussa'tio, Chias'mus, Incrucia'tio, Intersec'tio, Intricatu'ra, (from decussis, that is, decem asses; also, the figure of the letter X.) Union in the shape of an X or cross. Anatomists use this term chiefly in the case of the nerves — as the decussation of the optic nerves, which cross each other within the cranium.

DECUSSA'TION OF THE PYR'AMIDS, see Corpora pyramidalia.

Decusso'rium, (decutio, decussum, — de, and quatio, — 'I shake down,') (F.) Décussoire. An instrument used by the ancients, for depressing the dura mater, and facilitating the exit of substances effused on or under that membrane. It is described by Scultetus, Paré, &c. See Meningophylax.

Dédaigneux, ('disdainful,' from de, and dignor, 'I esteem worthy,') Rectus superior oculi.

Dede (Sc.), (Sax. deað,) Death.

Dedenti'tion, see Dentition.

Dedola'tion, Dedola'tio, (dedolare, — de, and dolare, dolatum, — 'to cut and hew with an axe,') This word has been used by surgeons to express the action by which a cutting instrument divides obliquely any part of the body, and produces a wound with loss of substance. It is commonly on the head that wounds by dedolation are observed. When there was a complete separation of a portion of the bone of the cranium, the ancients called it Aposceparnis'mus.

Deer'balls, Elaphomyces granulatus.

Deer'berry, Gaultheria, Vaccinium stamineum.

Deer'food, Brasenia hydropeltis.

Deers' Tears, Bezoar of the deer.

Defæca'tio, (de, and fæx, gen. fæcis, 'excrement,') Defecation.

Défaillance, (from defaillir, — de, and faillir, — 'to fail,') Syncope.

Defeca'tion, Defæca'tio. The act by which the excrement is extruded from the body. Caca'tio, Exerc'tio al'vi seu alvi'na seu fæcum alvina'rum, Defec'tio al'vi, Seces'sio seu Expul'sio seu Ejec'tio fæcum, Apago'gè, Hypochore'sis, Ecchore'sis, Eccopro'sis, Eges'tio. The fæces generally accumulate in the colon, being prevented by the annulus at the top of the rectum from descending freely into that intestine. In producing evacuations, therefore, in obstinate constipation, it is well, by means of a long tube, to throw the injection into the colon.

In Pharmacy, defecation means the separation of any substance from a liquid in which it may be suspended. See Clarification.

Defec'tio An'imi, (deficere, defectum, — de, and facere, — 'to forsake,') Syncope.

Defec'tus Lac'tis, see Galaetia — d. Loquelæ, Aphonia — d. Mensium, Amenorrhœa — d. Veneris, Anaphrodisia.

Defensi'vum, (defendere, defensum, 'to defend,')

(F.) Défensif. A preservative or defence. The old surgeons gave this name to different local applications, made to diseased parts, for the purpose of guarding them from the impression of extraneous bodies, and particularly from the contact of air.

Defere'ns, (defero, — de, and fero, — 'I bear away,' 'I transport,') Carrying away.

DEFERENS VAS, Ductus seu Canalis deferens, Ductus spermaticus, Vibra'tor, Spermatic duct, Spermiduct, (F.) Canal ou Conduit spermatique, Canal ou Conduit déférent, is the excretory canal of the sperm, which arises from the epididymis, describes numerous convolutions, and with the vessels and nerves of the testicles concurs in the formation of the spermatic chord, enters the abdominal ring, and terminates in the ejaculatory duct.

Deferves'cence, Defervescen'tia, (de, and fervescere, 'to grow hot,') The period in which the morbidly elevated temperature of the body in fever is declining towards the natural standard.

Defib'rinated, (de, and fibrin,) Defibrinized.

Defibrina'tion, see Defibrinized.

Defib'rinized, (F.) Défibriné, Defib'rinated. Deprived of fibrin. A term applied to blood from which the fibrin has been removed, as by whipping. The act of removing fibrin from the blood has been termed defibrina'tion.

Defigura'tio, (de, and figurare, figuratum, 'to shape,') Deformation.

Deflagra'tion, Deflagra'tio, (deflagrare, — de, and flagrare, flagratum, 'to burn,' — 'to set on fire,') In pharmacy, the rapid combustion of a substance with flame; great elevation of temperature; violent motion, and more or less noise. Thus, we speak of the deflagration of the nitrate and the chlorate of potassa, of gunpowder, &c.

Deflec'tens, (de, and flecto, flexum, 'I bend,') Derivative.

Deflec'tio, Derivation.

Deflora'tion, (deflorescere, — de, and florescere, — 'to deflower,') Depucela'tion, Depudica'tion, Devirgina'tion, Deflora'tio, Devirgina'tio, Virginis vitia'tio, Virgin'itas deflora'ta, (F.) Défloration, Dépucellement. The act of depriving a female of her virginity. Inspection of the parts is the chief criterion of defloration having been forcibly accomplished; yet inquiry must be made, whether the injury may not have been caused by another body than the male organ. Recent defloration is infinitely more easy of detection than where some time has elapsed. See Stuprum.

Deflu'vium, (de, and fluere, fluxum, 'to flow,') Aporrhœa — d. Capillorum, Alopecia — d. Pilorum, Alopecia.

Deflux'io, Catarrh, Defluxion, Diarrhœa — d. Catarrhalis, Influenza — d. Ciliorum, Madarosis.

Deflux'ion, Deflux'io, Deflux'us, Catar'rhy'sis, Hypor'rhy'sis, Catar'rhus. A falling down of humors from a superior to an inferior part. It is sometimes used synonymously with inflammation.

Deflux'us Dysenter'icus, Dysentery.

Defæda'tio seu Degenera'tio Unguium, Defæda'tion or Degenera'tion of the Nails, (de, and fædus, 'dirty,') A morbid condition in which the nails are discolored.

Deforma'tion, Deforma'tio, (de, and forma, 'form,') Cacomor'phia, Cacomor'phos, Dysmor'phè, Dysmor'phia, Dysmor'phos, Deform'itas, Inform'itas, Defigura'tio, Disfigura'tion, Deform'ity, (F.) Difformité. Morbid alteration in the form of some part of the body, as of the head, pelvis, spine, &c. A deformity may be natural or accidental.

Deform'itas, Deformation.

Defru'tum, (for Defervitum [?], de, and ferveo, 'I boil,') (F.) Vin cuit. Grape must, boiled down to one half, and used as a sweetmeat. See Rob.

Defurfura'tio, (de, and furfur, 'bran.') See Desquamation.

Defu'sio, (de, and fundere, fusum, 'to pour.') Decantation.

Degenera'tio, Degeneration — d. Adiposa cordis, Steatosis cordis — d. Adiposa renis, Kidney, fatty degeneration of — d. Fibrosa renis, Kidney, fibroid degeneration of — d. Hepatis adiposa, Adiposis hepatica — d. Hepatis lardacea, Liver, albuminous — d. Lardacea, see Lardaceous — d. Unguim, Defœdatio unguim.

Degenera'tion, Degenera'tio, Nothen'sis, Nothi'a, (from degener, 'unlike one's ancestors,'—de, and genus, generis, 'family,') Degen'eracy, (F.) Dégénération, Abâtardissement. A change for the worse—degradation—in the intimate composition of the solids or fluids of the body. In pathological anatomy, degenera'tion or degeneres'cence means the change which occurs in the structure of an organ, when transformed into fat, for example, or into a matter essentially morbid; as a cancerous, or tubercular, degeneration. Virchow employs the term necrobio'sis in a similar signification; and for morbid metamorphosis in general. Dégénérescence is, by the French pathologists, employed synonymously with degeneration.

DEGENERATION, AMYLOID, see Lardaceous — d. Albuminous or Albuminoid, see Lardaceous — d. Black, Melanosis — d. Calcareous, Cretefaction — d. Cellulose, see Lardaceous — d. Colloid, see Colloid — d. Earthy, see Cretefaction.

DEGENERATION, FAT'TY, Fatty Metamor'phosis, Degenera'tio adipo'sa, (F.) Dégénération ou Dégénérescence graisseuse. The conversion of a substance, as muscle, into fat.

DEGENERATION, FAT'TY, OF THE HEART, Steatosis cordis — d. Fibroid, see Fibroid — d. Graisseuse du Cœur, Steatosis cordis — d. g. du Foie, Adiposis hepatica — d. Granular, of the kidney, Kidney, Bright's disease of the — d. Gray of spinal cord, Ataxy, locomotor — d. Lardaceous, see Lardaceous — d. Liquefactive, see Liquefactive — d. of the Liver, Adiposis hepatica — d. Mineral, see Cretefaction — d. Pigmentary, see Pigmentation — d. Quain's, see Quain — d. Waxy, see Lardaceous.

Dégénérescence, Degeneration — d. Graisseuse du Foie, Adiposis hepatica — d. Granulée du Rein, Kidney, Bright's disease of the — d. Noire, Melanosis.

Deglutina'tio, (de, and gluten, gen. glutinis, 'glue.') Décollement.

Deglutit'io, Deglutition — d. Difficilis, Dysphagia — d. Impedita, Dysphagia — d. Læsa, Dysphagia.

Deglutit'ion, Deglutit'io, Catap'osis, (de, and glutire, glutitum, 'to swallow.') The act by which substances are passed from the mouth into the stomach, through the pharynx and œsophagus. It is one of a complicated character, and requires the aid of a considerable number of muscles; the first step being voluntary, the remainder executed under spinal and involuntary nervous influence.

Deg'mus, (δηγμος, from δηκω or δακνω, 'I bite,') Dex'is, Mor'sus, (F.) Morsure,—a bite in general. A gnawing sensation about the upper orifice of the stomach, which was once attributed to acrimony of the liquids contained in that viscus.

Dégorgement, (de, and gorge, 'the throat.') Disgorgement.

Dégout, (de, and gout, (L.) gustus, 'taste.') Disgust.

Degrada'tion, (degradior,—de, and gradior, 'to step,'—'to descend.') Degeneration.

Degree, ([F.] degré, originally from gradus, 'a step.') A title conferred by a college,—as the 'degree of Doctor of Medicine.' Generally, the degree is conferred after a certain period of residence at the College, and attendance on lectures; at others, in absentiâ; and at others, causâ honoris.

Galen used this expression to indicate the qualities of certain drugs. Both he and his school admitted cold, warm, moist, and dry medicines, and four different 'degrees' of each of those qualities. Thus, Apium was warm in the first degree, Agrimony in the second, Roche Alum in the third, and Garlic in the fourth. Bedegar was cold in the first, the flower of the Pomegranate in the second, the Sempervivum in the third, Opium in the fourth, &c. The French use the term degré to indicate: 1. The intensity of an affection; as a burn of the first, second, third degree, &c. 2. The particular stage of an incurable disease, as the third degree of phthisis, cancer of the stomach, &c.

Degusta'tion, Degusta'tio, (de, and gustare, gustatum, 'to taste.') Gusta'tion. The appreciation of sapid qualities by the gustatory organs.

Dehis'cence, Dehiscent'ia, (dehiscere,—de, and hiscere, 'to gape,'—'to break open in chinks.') Separation of a shut organ along the line of union. A regular and determinate separation, which takes place in a shut organ.

Deic'ticus, (δεικτικός, from δεικνυμι, 'to point out.') Index.

Deid, (Sc.) (Sax. deað.) Death.

Deil's Snuffbox, Lycoperdon.

Deiron'cus, (δειρον, 'neck,' and ογκος, 'a swelling.') Bronchocele.

Dei'ters, Proc'esses of. Of the various processes proceeding from a nerve-cell, Deiters discovered that one, the nerve process, keeps on its course without division, while the others—protoplasma, protoplasmic, or ramified processes—undergo frequent subdivision.

Deject'edness, Depression.

Deject'tio, Dejection — d. Alvi, Defecation — d. Alvina, Excrement.

Dejec'tion, (dejacere, dejectum,—de, and jacere,—'to cast down,') Dejec'tio, Subduc'tio, Hypago'gē, Hypochore'sis, Hypechore'sis, Apop'atus, Hypop'atus, Hypoph'ora. The expulsion of the fæces:—Ejec'tio, Eges'tio. Also, a fæcal discharge or stool,—generally, however, with alvine prefixed,—as, an alvine Dejection, Al'vus vir'idis, Dejec'tio alvi'na, a passage; an evacuation; a movement. Also, depression of spirits.

Dejectio'nes Ni'græ, ('black dejections.') Melæna.

Dejecto'rium, Cathartic.

Delacryma'tio, (de, and lacryma, 'a tear.') Epiphora.

Delacrymati'vus, Apodaeryticus.

Delap'sio, (de, and labi, lapsus, 'to fall.') Prolapsus.

Delap'sus, gen. Delapsûs, Prolapsus — d. Palpebræ, Blepharoptosis.

Dela'tio, (deferre, delatum, 'to announce.') Indication.

Délayants, Diluentia.

Delayé, Diluted.

Delacroix's Dep'ilatory, (after the proposer,) see Depilatory, Colley's.

Delete'rious, Pernic'ious, Nox'ious, Delete'rius, Nox'ius, Pernicio'sus, Phthar'ticus, (F.) Délétère, Pernicienx, (δηλεω, 'I injure.') That which produces destructive disorder in the exercise and harmony of the functions.

Delete'rium, Poison.

Del'hi Boil, Furun'culus Delhi'nus. An inveterate cutaneous affection, prevalent at Delhi, in India, which assumes the form of a boil, and may, afterwards, ulcerate, forming the Delhi ulcer. It is called, there, Arungzebe', owing to the emperor of that name having died with it. The treatment is chiefly local, and consists of the ordinary eutrophic ointments. Eutrophics may, also, be given internally.

Del'hi Ul'cer, see Delhi boil.

Delier'et (Sc.), Delirious.

Deliga'tio, Deligation, Ligature, see Bandage.

Deliga'tio, Deliga'tio, Epid'esia, Deligatu'ra, Vul'nerum deliga'tio seu vinctu'ra, Fascia'rum Ap'plica'tio, Plaga'rum Vincitu'ra, Fascia'tio, (from deligare, deligatum,—de, and ligo,—'to bind.') The deligation of wounds formerly embraced the application of apparatus, dressings, &c.,—the denomination Deliga'tor Plaga'rum being synonymous with Med'icus Vulnera'rius, and in derivation, with the Wundarzt, 'wound physician' or surgeon, of the Germans. Deligation is hardly ever used now as an English word. In France, it is applied to the regular and methodical application of bandages, and to the ligature of arteries, and, occasionally, in the latter sense, with us.

Deligatu'ra, Deligation.

Deliques'cent, Deliques'cent, (deliquescente,—de, and liquesce,—'to melt,' 'to dissolve.') Any salt which becomes liquid by attracting moisture from the air. The deliquescent salts require to be kept in bottles, well stopped. Chloride of lime, acetate of potassa, and carbonate of potassa, are examples of such salts. The ancient chemists expressed the condition of a body, which had become liquid in this manner, by the word Deliquium.

Deliquium An'imi, (delinquere, delictum, 'to fail.') Syncope.

Deliramen'tum, Delirium.

Delir'ans, Delirious.

Delirant, Delirious.

Delira'tio, Delirium—d. Senum, see Dementia.

Délire, Delirium—d. Crapuleux, Delirium tremens—d. des Iroques, Delirium tremens—d. Nerveux, Delirium nervosum.

Délire des Persécutions. Mania, in which the morbid hallucination is, that the individual is persecuted.

Délire Traumatique, Delirium nervosum—d. Tremblant, Delirium tremens.

Delir'ia, Insanity.

Delirie (Sc.), Delirious.

Delir'ious, Delir'ans, Delir'us, Excerebra'tus, Ali'e'nus, Parale'rus, Ra'ving, (Sc.) Delie'ret, Delirie, (F.) Délirant. One who is in a state of delirium. That which is attended by delirium. The French use the term Fèvre pernicieuse délirante for a febrile intermittent, in which delirium is the predominant symptom.

Delir'ium, (perhaps, from de, and lira, 'a ridge between two furrows': more probably from de, and ληρηνα, 'a silly saying or action,') Parac'opē, Phreni'tis, Phledon'i'a, Desipien'tia, Aphros'ynē, Paralere'ma, Paralere'sis, Paralog'ia, Phanta'sia, Paraphros'ynē, Emo'tio, Le'ros, Parano'a, Alloph'asis, Delira'tio, Delirament'um, (Sc.) Ra'very, Ro'ving, (F.) Délire, Égarément d'esprit, Transport, Idéosynchysie, &c. Straying from the rules of reason; wandering of the mind. Hippocrates used the word μανία, mania, for delir'ium cum fe'bre, and the Greek words given above for delir'ium cum fe'bre. In different authors, also, we find the words, Paraph'ora, Paraphrene'sis, Paraphren'ia, Phrene'sis, Phreneti'asis, &c., for different kinds of delirium. Delirium is usually symptomatic.

DELIR'ium EBRIOSITA'TIS seu EBRIOSORUM, 'delirium of drunkenness,' also D. tremens—d. Epileptic, see Epilepsy—d. Furiosum, Mania—d. Maniacum, Mania.

DELIR'ium NERVO'SUM, (F.) Délire nerveux ou traumatique. A form of delirium which supervenes after surgical operations or severe injuries.

DELIR'ium POTATO'RUM, D. tremens—d. Senile, see Dementia.

DELIR'ium TRE'MENS, D. potato'rum seu ebriosita'tis seu ebriosorum seu tremifa'ciens seu vig'ilans, Ma'nia a potu seu e temulentia, Enoma'nia, Erethis'mus ebriosorum, Dipsoma'nia, Meningi'tis seu Phreni'tis potato'rum, Meningi'tis phantasmatoph'ora, Tromoma'nia, Tromoparano'a, Potoparano'a, Potoma'nia, Pototromoparano'a, (F.) Encéphalopathie crapuleuse, Délire tremblant ou crapuleux ou des Iroques, Folie des Iroques ou Alcoolique. A state of delirium and agitation—often termed the horrors, and horrors of drink—peculiar to those addicted to spirituous liquors, with great sleeplessness. It is preceded by indisposition, lassitude, watchfulness, headache, and anorexia; the delirium and tremors, Tremor potato'rum, most commonly recurring in paroxysms. It is caused by the habitual and intemperate use of ardent spirits or of opium or tobacco; or by abandoning them after prolonged use. The treatment is various. Many have regarded stimulants, with large doses of opium to induce rest, to be indispensable. It is certain, however, that the expectant system will often, if not generally, be successful; and, it is probable, a cure effected in this manner will be more permanent than when produced by excitants.

DELIR'ium TREMIFACIENS, D. tremens.

Delir'us, Delirious.

Delitescence, (delitescere, 'to abscond, to lie hid,' from de, and lateo.) See Repercussion.

Delitescen'tia, see Repercussion.

Deliv'er, (Prov.) Lay, (de, and liberare, (F.) livrer, 'to set free.') 'To put to bed.' To disburden of a child.

Deliv'ery, Parturition—d. False, False water.

Délivrance, (F.) An expression, which, in common language, signifies the action of delivering, libera'tio, but in the practice of obstetrics means the extrusion of the secundines, either spontaneously or by the efforts of art. This completion of delivery—par'tus secunda'rius, secundina'rum expul'sio seu extra'ctio—is produced by the same laws as the expulsion of the foetus. Sometimes, the after-birth follows the child immediately; at others, it is retained, and requires manual interference to remove it. The following are the chief cases in which it has been practised:—1. Intimate adhesion between the placenta and paries of the uterus. 2. Spasmodic contraction of the orifice of the uterus. 3. Hour-glass contraction. 4. Torpor or hemorrhage after the expulsion of the child; and, 5. Insertion of the placenta at the orifice of the uterus.

Déliere, Secundines.

Deloca'tio, (de, and locus, 'a place.') Luxatio.

Delphin'ia, see Delphinium staphisagria.

Delphinine, see Delphinium staphisagria.

Delphin'ium, (from δέλφιν or δέλφιν, 'a dolphin,' which the flowers resemble,) D. consol'ida seu Seg'etum seu Versic'olor, Calcitra'pa, Consol'ida Rega'lis, Branch'ing Lark'spur, Stag'gerweed. Ord. Ranunculaceæ. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Trigynia. (F.) Pied d'alouette des champs. It has been employed as a vermifuge. The flowers have been used in ophthalmia, and the seed, Delphinium (Ph. U. S.), have the same property as those of Stavesacre.

DELPHIN'ium CONSOL'IDA, Delphinium—d. Segetum, Delphinium.

DELPHIN'ium STAPHISA'GRIA. The systematic name of the Stavesacre, Staphisagria, Phtheiroctonum, Phthe'rium, Sta'phis, Pedicula'ria, (F.) Staphisaig're, Herbe aux Poux, Dauphinelle. The seeds, Staphisa'gria (Ph. L. and E.), have a disagreeable smell; a nauseous, bitterish, hot taste; and are cathartic, emetic, and vermifuge; owing, however, to the violence of their operation, they are seldom given internally, and are chiefly used in powder, mixed with hair powder, to destroy lice. An alkaloid of this plant has been separated, and received the name of Delphin'ia, Delphia, (F.) Delphine, Delphinine. It is extremely acrid, and has been recently used, like veratrina, in tic douloureux, paralysis, and rheumatism. It is used in the form of ointment, or in solution in alcohol, (gr. x. to xxx., or more, to ℥j.,) applied externally.

DELPHINIUM VERSICOLOR, Delphinium.

Delphi'us Glo'biceps, see Acidum valerianicum.

Del'phys, gen. Del'phus, (δέλφους,) Uterus, Vulva.

Del'ta, (like the Greek letter Δ,) Vulva.

Deltiform'is, (delta, Δ, and forma, 'shape,') Deltoid.

Del'toid, Deltoides, Delto'ides, Deltoideus, Deltiform'is, Attol'lens hu'merum, (F.) Deltoides, (delta, Δ, and eidōs, 'resemblance,') Sous-acromio-clavi-huméral of Dumas; Sous-acromio-huméral of Chaussier. A triangular muscle forming the fleshy part of the shoulder, and covering the shoulder-joint. It extends from the outer third of the clavicle, from the acromion and spine of the scapula to near the middle and outer part of the os humeri, where it is inserted by means of a strong tendon. This muscle raises the arm directly upwards, when the shoulder is fixed, and carries it anteriorly or posteriorly, according to the direction of the fibres, which are thrown into action. If the arm be rendered immovable, the deltoid acts inversely and depresses the shoulder.

DEL'TOID LIG'AMENT. The internal lateral ligament of the ankle joint is so called, from its shape.

Deltoides, Deltoid.

Del'uge, Dilu'vium, (from diluere, — di, and luere, 'to wash,' — 'to wash away,') (F.) Déluge. Bath, shower, Douche.

Delu'sion, (de, and ludere, lusum, 'to play,') Hallucination.

Dem el Mu'ca. A name given by Prosper Alpinus to a disease, which, he says, is proper to Egypt. He considers it to be inflammation of the brain; but others describe it as a pernicious intermittent.

Demagnetiza'tion, Demagnetisa'tio. The act of removing the condition of magnetization.

Démangeaison, Itching.

De'manus, (de, and manus, 'a hand,') Acheir.

Démence, Dementia — d. Im'fe, Idiostism.

Demen'ted, Insane, see Dementia.

Demen'tia, Amen'tia, Fatu'itas, Anæ'a, Anœ'sia, Asyne'sia, Deutera'næ'a, Ecnæ'a, Paranæ'a, Mo'ria de'mens, No'sthene'i'a, Incohe'rency, Imbecil'ity, Incohe'rent Insan'ity, (de, and mens, gen. mentis, 'mind,' or 'reason,') (F.) Démence, Bêtise. In common parlance, and even in legal language, this word is synonymous with insanity. Physicians, however, have applied it to those cases of unsound mind which are characterized by a total loss of the faculty of thought, or by such an imbecility of intellect that the ideas are extremely incoherent, there being at the same time a total loss of the power of reasoning. Mania and melancholy are apt to end in this, if possible, more deplorable state. Do'tage is the Dementia of the aged — Mo'ria de'mens lere'ma, Lere'ma, Lere'sis, Le'rus, Delira'tio Se'num, Amen'tia Sen'ilis, Pu'eril'itas, Delir'ium Sen'ilè, Anil'itas, Se'nile Insan'ity, Se'nile Demen'tia, Insan'ity of the aged, (Sc.) Doit'rie, — a form of insanity, in which there is a hopeless decadence or loss of the mental faculties.

DEMEN'TIA ACCIDENTA'LIS, see Lunatic — d. Adventitia, see Lunatic — d. Naturalis, Idiostism — d. Paralytica, Paralysis of the Insane.

Tendineux*, Semitendinosus — d. Tierce, Hemitritæa (febris.)

Demiot'ici, (from ἐμπος, 'an executioner,') Le-sions produced by the public executioner.

Demis'sio An'imi, (demittere, demissum, 'to lower,') Depression.

Demis'sor, Catheter.

De'modex (gen. Demode'cis) Folliculo'rum, (δημος, 'fat,' and ὄψις, 'a boring worm,') Acarus folliculorum.

Demonoma'nia, Demonomania, Demonop'athy, Demonopathi'a, Demo'nia, Theomo'nia, Enthemo'nia, (δαίμων, 'demon,' a spirit of good or evil, and μανία, 'madness,') A variety of madness, in which the person conceives himself possessed of devils, and is in continual dread of malignant spirits, the pains of hell, &c. Also, religious insanity, Sebastoma'nia.

Demonop'athy, (δαίμων, 'demon,' and πάθος, 'affection,') Demonomania.

Dem'onstrator, (demonstrare, demonstratum, — de, and monstrare, — 'to show,' 'exhibit,') One who exhibits. The index finger. See Digitus.

DEM'ONSTRATOR OF ANAT'OMY. One who exhibits the parts of the human body. A teacher of practical anatomy.

Demoti'vus Lap'sus, Repenti'na mors, (demittere, — de, and movere, — 'to move off,' 'remove,' and lapsus, 'a fall,') Sudden death.

Demours, Mem'brane of, see Aqueous humor.

Demul'cents, Demulcen'tia, Involven'tia, Obvolven'tia, Lubrican'tia, (demulcere, — de, and mulcere, — 'to soothe,' 'to assuage,') (F.) Adoucissants. Medicines supposed to be capable of correcting certain acrid conditions imagined to exist in the humors. Substances of a mucilaginous or saccharine nature belong to this class. Demulcents may act directly on the parts with which they come in contact; but in other cases, as in catarrh, their effect is produced by contiguous sympathy; the top of the larynx being soothed by them first, and indirectly the inflamed portion of the air-passages. In diseases of the urinary organs, they have no advantage over simple diluents. — See Diluents and Emollients. The following are demulcents; — Acacia Gummi; Althæa Folia et Radix; Amygdalæ; Amylum; Avenæ Farina; Cera; Cetaceum; Cydoniæ Semina; Fucus Crispus; Glycyrrhiza; Hordeum; Lichen; Linum; Olivæ Oleum; Sassafras Medulla; Sesamum; Sevum; Tragacantha, and Ulmus.

Demuscula'tus, (de, and musculus, 'a muscle,') (F.) Décharné. Emaciated, devoid of flesh.

Dena'rius, (deni, 'ten,') A Roman coin, equal in value to about 10 cents, or 8 pence English. It was marked with the letter X, to signify 10 asses. — Also, the 7th part of the Roman ounce.

Dendrit'ic Vegeta'tion, (from δένδρον, 'a tree,') See Cancer, villous.

Dendrolib'anus, (δένδρον, 'a tree,' and λίβανος, 'frankincense,') Rosmarinus.

Denerva'tio, (de, and nervus, 'a tendon,') Aponeurosis.

Den'gue, ([S.] 'an affected person,') (?) Din'gee, Dun'ga, Dan'dy, Bou'quet, Buck'et Fe'ver, Eruptive artic'ular fe'ver, E. rheumat'ic fe'ver, Break'bone, Neural'gic, Solar or Sun Fe'ver, Denguis, Rheumatism'us febrilis, Scarlati'na rheumat'ica, Exanthem'is arthro'sia, Planta'ria, Fe'bris exanthemat'ica articula'ria, (F.) Giraffe. A disease, which first appeared in the years 1827 and 1828, in the West Indies, and in the Southern States of North America. It was extremely violent in its symptoms, but not often fatal. It usually commenced with great languor, chilliness, and pain in the tendons about the smaller joints. To these symptoms succeeded burning heat and redness of the skin, pains in the muscles of the limbs or in the forehead, with vomiting or nausea. The fever continued for one, two, or three days, and usually terminated by copious perspiration. In different places, it put on different appearances; but seems in all to have been a singular variety of rheumatic fever. The usual antiphlo-gistic treatment was adopted, and successfully. See Aerodynia.

Den'guis, Dengue.

Den'iach, Mineral Wa'ters of. Deniach is a village in Swabia, at the entrance of the Black Forest. The waters contain carbonic acid, carbonate of iron, carbonate of lime, sulphate of magnesia, and carbonate of soda.

Denigra'tio, (denigrare, — de, and niger, 'black,' — 'to become black.') The act of becoming black, as in cases of sphacelus, sugillation, &c.

Dens, gen. Dentis, Tooth, see Axis — d. Epistrophei, see Odontoid — d. Leonis, Leontodon taraxacum.

DENS PRO'LIFER. A term used by Bartholin for a supernumerary tooth, which appears to grow upon a primitive or parent tooth.

Dent, Tooth — d. de Lion, Leontodon taraxacum — d. de Sagesse, see Dentition.

Dentago'gum, (dens, and αγω, 'I expel,') Dentagra.

Dent'agra, Dent'iceps, Dentar'paga, Dentidu'cum, Dentago'gum, Dentu'lis for'fex, For'fex dentaria, Odonthar'paga, Odont'agra, Odontago'gon, (dens, and αγω, 'a seizure,') (F.) Davies. A tooth-forceps.

Dentaire, Dental.

Den'tal, Denta'lis, Denta'rius, Denticula'tus, (F.) Dentaire. That which concerns the teeth. See Dentiformis.

DEN'TAL ARCH'ES, (F.) Arcades dentaires, are the arches formed by the range of alveoli in each jaw.

DEN'TAL AR'TERIES are those arteries which nourish the teeth. They proceed from several sources. The teeth of the upper jaw, e. g., receive their arteries from the infraorbital and superior alveolar — themselves branches of the internal maxillary. The teeth of the lower jaw receive their branches from the inferior dental or inferior maxillary, which is given off by the internal maxillary, and runs through the dental canal, issuing at the mental foramen, after having given numerous ramifications to the teeth and jaw.

DEN'TAL CANALS, (F.) Conduits dentaires, Maxillary canals. The bony canals, through which the vessels and nerves pass to the interior of the teeth.

DEN'TAL CAR'TILAGE, Cartila'go denta'lis. The cartilaginous elevation, divided by slight fissures, on the biting margins of the gums in infants, prior to dentition. It is a substitute for the teeth.

DEN'TAL CAV'ITY, (F.) Cavité dentaire. A cavity in the interior of the teeth in which is situate the dental pulp. See Tooth.

DEN'TAL EXCAVATOR. An instrument for the removal of the decayed part of a tooth, preparatory to the operation of filling.

DEN'TAL FOL'LICLE, Follic'ulus seu Cap'sula den'tis, Odontotheca, (F.) Follicule dentaire, Odontothèque. A membranous follicle, formed of a double lamina, in which the teeth are contained before they issue from the alveoli, and which, consequently, aids in the formation of the alveolodental periosteum, and of the membrane that envelops the pulp of the teeth. The dental follicles are lodged in the substance of the jaws.

DEN'TAL GANGRENE, Car'ies Den'tium, Odontalg'ia cario'sa, Odontonecro'sis, Odontosphacel'is, Odontosphacelis'mus, Necro'sis Den'tium, (F.) Carie des Dents. Gangrene or caries of the teeth. See Caries.

DEN'TAL GROOVE, see Groove, dental.

DEN'TAL NERVES, (F.) Nerfs dentaires. Nerves which pass to the teeth. Those of the upper incisors and canine are furnished by the infraorbital nerve, a branch of the superior maxillary, and those of the molars by the trunk of the same nerve. The teeth of the lower jaw receive the nerves from the inferior maxillary, which, as well as the superior maxillary, arises from the 5th pair.

DEN'TAL PULP, Pul'pa seu Nu'cleus seu Substan'tia pulpo'sa den'tis, Ger'men denta'lè, Pulp of the Tooth, (F.) Pulpe dentaire. A pulsatous substance, of a reddish-gray color, very soft and sensible, which fills the cavity of the teeth. It is well supplied with capillary vessels, and is described by M. Robin as a special tissue with the epithet phanerog'enous or phaneroph'orous. See Phanerogenous.

DEN'TAL SURG'EON, Dentist.

DEN'TAL SURG'ERY, see Surgery.

DEN'TAL TU'BULI. Minute wavy and branching tubes, seen microscopically, which make up the ivory or dentine.

DEN'TAL VEINS have a similar distribution with the arteries.

Denta'lis, Odontoid — d. Forfex, Dentagra.

Denta'lum. A genus of shells in the shape of a tooth. They formerly entered into several pharmaceutical preparations, but were useless ingredients; consisting — like shells in general — of carbonate of lime and gelatin.

Denta'ria, Anthemis Pyrethrum, Plumbago Europæa.

Denta'rius, Dentist.

Dentar'paga, (dens, and αγω, 'I force away,') Dentagra.

Denta'ta Ver'tebra, Axis.

Den'tate, Den'tated, Denta'tus, Denticula'tus, Denticulate, Ser'rated, Serra'tus, (F.) Dentelè. Cut in the shape of teeth.

Dentature, Digitation.

Denta'tus, Dentate.

Dentelaire, Plumbago Europæa.

Dentela'ria, Plumbago Europæa.

Dentelè, Dentate — d. Antérieur petit, Pectoralis minor — d. Grand, Serratus magnus — d. Postérieur et inférieur, petit, Serratus posticus inferior — d. Supérieur, petit, Serratus posticus superior.

Dentella'ria, Plumbago Europæa.

Den'ticeps, (dens, and capio, 'I seize,') Dentagra.

Dentic'ola Hom'inis, (dens, and colare, 'to inhabit,') see Odontolithus.

Denticula'tum, (Ligamentum,) Ligamen'tum denta'tum, Membra'na denta'ta, (F.) Ligament dentelè ou denticulé. A slender cord, situate between the anterior and posterior fasciculi of the spinal nerves, and between the tunica arachnoidea and pia mater. It is attached to the dura mater, where that membrane issues from the cranium, and accompanies the spinal marrow to its inferior extremity. It sends off, from its outer edge, about twenty slender processes, in the form of denticuli, each of which passes outwards and connects itself with the dura mater in the intervals between the anterior and posterior roots of the nerves.

Denticula'tus, Dentate.

Dentic'ulus, (dim. of dens, 'a tooth,') Crena.

Dentidu'cum, (dens, and ducere, ductum, 'to draw,') Dentagra.

Dentier (F.), (from dens,) Denture. A set or row of teeth, mounted on metal or ivory, to be adjusted to the alveolar margin. Dentiers are simple or double. To the latter, that is, to the full set, the name Râtelier is given.

Dent'iform, Dentiform'is, (dens, and forma, 'form,') Resembling a tooth in shape.

Dentiform'is, Odontoid, Dentiform.

Dentifrice, Dentifric'ium, Remed'ium dentifric'ium, Odontotrim'ma, Odontomeg'ma, Tooth powder, Tooth paste, (dens, and fricare, 'to rub,') A name given to different powders and pastes proper for cleansing the enamel of the teeth, and removing the tartar which covers them. Powdered bark and charcoal, united to any acidulous salt—as cream of tartar—form one of the most common dentifrices.

Electuaire ou Opiate Dentifrice, of the Parisian Codex, consists of coral, 3iv., cuttlefish bones and cinnamon, each 3ij., cochineal, 3ss., honey, 3x., alum, gr. iv. or v.

Poudre Dentifrice of the Codex is composed of Bole Armeniac, red coral [prepared], and cuttlefish bones, each 3vj., dragon's blood, 3ij., cochineal, 3i., cream of tartar, 3ix., cinnamon, 3ij., cloves, gr. xij., well mixed. The one used by the author is composed of charcoal and orris root, each one part, prepared chalk, two parts.

Charcoal, finely powdered and mixed with chalk, forms as good a dentifrice as any.

Dentig'erosus, Den'tiger, (dens, and gero, 'I carry,') Tooth carrying,—as dentigerous cysts, cysts containing teeth.

Dentili'oun, Leontodon taraxacum.

Den'tinal, Dentina'lis, (from dentine,) Relating to the dentine of the teeth, as dental fibres, dental cells, &c. See Tooth.

DEN'TINAL CELLS, &c., see Tooth.

Den'tine, see Tooth—d. Secondary, see Tooth.

Dentiscal'pium, (dens, and scalpere, 'to scrape,') Odontoglyphum. This word has been applied to the instrument used for scaling the teeth; to the toothpick, or toothrake, (F.) Cure-dent; and to the gum-lancet,—the déchaussoir of the French.

Den'tist, Dentis'ta, Odontia'ter, Odontia'trus, Dent'arius, Den'tal Sur'geon, Sur'geon den'tist, (F.) Dentiste. One who devotes himself to the study of the diseases of the teeth, and their treatment.

Den'tistry, Odontotech'ny, Odontiat'ria, Odontotherapi'a, Dental Surgery. The art of the dentist.

Dentit'io, Dentition—d. Difficilis, Dysodontiasis.

Dentit'ion, Teeth'ing, Dentit'io, Denti'tis, Odontophy'ia, Odonti'asis, Odonto'sis, (dentire, dentitum, 'to breed teeth,') The exit of the teeth from the alveoli and gums; or rather the phenomena which characterize the different periods of their existence. The germs of the first teeth, dentes lac'tei or milk teeth, (F.) dents de lait, are visible in the foetus about the end of the second month; and they begin to be ossified from the end of the third to that of the sixth month. At birth, the corona of the incisors is formed, but that of the canine is not completed; and the tubercles of the molares are not yet all united. Gradually, the fang becomes developed; and at about six or eight months begins what is commonly called the first dentit'ion, Odontia dentitio'nis lactan'tium. The two middle incisors of the lower jaw commonly appear first; and, some time afterwards, those of the upper jaw: afterwards, the two lateral incisors of the lower jaw; and then those of the upper, followed by the four anterior molares; the canine, or eye-teeth, at first, those of the lower, and, afterwards, those of the upper jaw, next appear; and, subsequently and successively, the first 4 molares—2 above and 2 below, 1 on each side. The whole number of the primary, temporary, deciduous, shedding or milk-teeth, (dentes tempora'rii,) (F.) Dents de lait, is now 20.

The eruption of the milk teeth takes place, approximately, in the following order:

Central incisors.....	6th to 8th month.
Lateral incisors.....	7th to 10th month.
First molar.....	12th to 14th month.
Canines	15th to 20th month.
Second molar.....	20th to 30th month.

The sec'ond dentit'ion or shed'ding of the teeth, Odontia dentitio'nis pueri'lis, Dedentit'ion, begins about the age of 6 or 7. The germs or membranous follicles of these second teeth—to the number of 32—as well as the rudiments of the teeth themselves, are visible, even in the foetus, with the exception of those of the small molares, which do not appear till after birth. They are contained in alveoli of the same shape as those of the first dentition. Their ossification commences at from 3 to 6 months after birth, in the incisors and first molares; at 8 or 9 months, in the canine; about 3 years, in the molares; 3½ in the second great molares, and about 10 years in the last. As the alveolus of a new tooth becomes gradually augmented, the septum between it and that of the corresponding milk tooth is absorbed, and disappears. The root of the milk tooth is likewise absorbed; its corona becomes loose and falls out, and all the first teeth are gradually replaced by the per'manent teeth, Den'tes serot'ini. This second dentition becomes necessary in consequence of the increased size of the jaws. The new teeth have neither the same direction nor the same shape as the old; and they are more numerous, amounting, until the age of 25 (sooner or later), to 28. About this period, a small molaris appears at the extremity of each jaw, which is called wis'dom tooth, wit tooth, Dens sapien'tiæ seu serot'ianus seu sophroret'icus seu sophronis'tus seu sophronis'ter seu opsi'gonus, Ops'iodous, (F.) Arrière dent, Dent de sagesse, making the whole number of permanent teeth 32.

The eruption of the permanent teeth is remarkable for its general regularity; so that it constitutes an important means for ascertaining the age of the individual during the early period of life.

First molars.....	7th year.
Central incisors.....	8th year.
Lateral incisors.....	9th year.
First bicuspid.....	10th year.
Second bicuspid.....	11th year.
Canines.....	12th year.
Second molars.....	13th year.

The teeth of the lower jaw generally precede by a few weeks those of the upper.

During the period of dentition, that is, of the first dentition, the infant is especially liable to disease;—the irritation, produced by the pressure of the tooth on the superincumbent gum, sometimes occasioning pyrexia, convulsions, diarrhoea, &c., which symptoms are often strikingly relieved by a free division of the distended gum. This disordered condition is called Teeth'ing, Odontia dentitio'nis, Odonti'asis, Odontal'gia dentitio'nis, Odaxis'mus.

Denti'tis, gen. Denti'tidis, (dens, and itis,) Dentition.

Den'tium Cor'tex, ('bark of the teeth,') Enamel of the teeth—d. Dolor, Odontalgia—d. Nitor, Enamel of the teeth—d. Scalptura, (Lancing the gums,) see Gum lancet—d. Vacillantia, Odontoseisis.

Den'to, (from dens.) One whose teeth are prominent.

Dento'deus, (dens, and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Odontoid.

Den'ture, Dentier.

Denuda'tion, Denuda'tio, Gymno'sis, (denudare, —de, and nudare, nudatum, —'to lay bare,') Condition of a part, deprived of its natural coverings, whether by wounds, gangrene, or abscess. It is particularly applied to the bones, when deprived of their periosteum, and to the teeth when they lose their enamel or dental substance, or when the gums recede from them, and their sockets are destroyed.

Denutrit'ion, Denutrit'io, (de, and nutrition.) The opposite to nutrition, as the 'denutrition or breaking down of tissue.'

Deob'struent, Deob'struens, (de, and obstruere, —ob, and struere, —'to obstruct,') Dephrac'ticum, Deoppi'lans, Deopilat'ivum, Ecphrac'tic, (F.) Désobstruant, Désobstructif, Désopilat'if, Déopilatant. A medicine given with the view of removing any obstruction. The word corresponds to aperient, in its general, not in its particular sense. It is now almost abandoned, and, when used, conveys by no means definite ideas.

Deo'dorant, (de, and odor, 'smell,') Antibromic.

Deo'dorizer, Antibromic.

Deontol'ogy, Deontolog'ia, (τα δεοντα, 'what are due,' and λογος, 'a description,') A word introduced by Bentham to signify morals, or the science of duties.

DEONTOL'OGY, MED'ICAL, Deontolog'ia med'ica, Medical eth'ics, Medical etiquette, (F.) Déontologie médicale. The duties and rights of medical practitioners.

Deoppi'lans, (de, and oppilo, 'I stop up,') Deobstruent.

Deoppi'lati'vum, Deobstruent.

Depas'cens, (de, and pascere, 'to feed,') Phagedenic.

Depaupera'tus, (de, and pauperare, pauperatum, 'to make poor,') Impoverished.

Deperdit'io, (de, and perdere, perditum, 'to lose,') Abortion.

Dépérissement, (de, and perire, 'to perish,') Emaciation.

Dephrac'ticum, (de, and φρασσα, 'I obstruct,') Deobstruent.

Dépilat'if, Depilatory.

Depila'tio, (de, and pilus, 'hair,') Alopecia, Depilation—d. Capitis, Calvities.

Depila'tion, Depila'tio, Epila'tion, Dropacis'mus, Mad'e'sis, Mad'isis, Psilo'sis. Loss of hair, either spontaneously or by art.

Dep'ilatory or Depil'atory, Depilato'rium, Psilo'thron, Ectillo'ticus, Epilato'rium, (F.) Dépilatoire, Dépilat'if, Épilatoire. Anything which causes the loss of the hair. Depilatories are usually caustic applications, in which quicklime or some other alkaline substance, sulphuret of iron, &c., enter.

DEP'ILATORY, COL'LEY'S, seems to consist of quicklime and a portion of sulphuret of potassium.

Delcroix's depilatory and Plenck's depilatory have a similar composition. They all probably contain arsenic, in the form of orpiment. The following formula has been given for that of Colley: quicklime, 30 parts, soap leas, 125 parts, sulphur, 4 parts, nitre, 4 parts, orpiment, 12 parts. Another depilatory by F. Boudet is formed of sulphuret of sodium, 3 parts, quicklime, in powder, 10, starch, 10; mix. Rub a little of this powder with water, apply it to the part, and remove the hair in a minute or two with a wooden knife. Dorvault recommends the Depilatory of Martine, which is a sulphuretted sulphuret of calcium; made by passing sulphohydric acid into quicklime to saturation. A little of this is applied to the part, and in eight or ten minutes it becomes solid. It must then be washed off with cold or hot water, when the skin will be found denuded. Another, given by Redwood, is a strong solution of the sulphuret of barium, made into a paste with starch powder. It is used like the one advised by Boudet. Those that do not contain arsenic are, of course, safer.

A pitch plaster, Pitch'cap, Dro'pax, is sometimes used as a depilatory. It of course pulls the hair out by the roots. Depilation by it has been termed Dropacism'us, Pisso'sis, Pitto'sis, Picacism'us, and Pica'tio.

De'pilis. Devoid of hair. Hairless.

Déplacement de la Cataracte, ('displacement of the cataract,') see Cataract.

Déplétif, Depletory.

Deple'tion, Deple'tio, (depleo, depletum, 'I unload,') The act of emptying or unloading—for example, the vessels, by bloodletting and the different evacuates. Also, inordinate evacuation.

Deple'tory, Deple'ting, (F.) Déplétif. Having relation to depletion; as 'a depletory or depleting agent.'

Depluma'tio, Pti'los, Ptilo'sis, (deplumis,—de, and pluma,—'without feathers,') A disease of the eyelids, in which they are swollen, and the eyelashes fall out. See Madarosis.

Depos'it, Depos'itum, (depono,—de, and pono, positum, 'I lay or put,')—'I lay or put down,') (F.) Dépôt. Anything laid or thrown down. In physiology and pathology a structureless substance, separated from the blood or other fluid, as the typhous, tuberculous, purulent, melanitic, diphtheritic, and urinary deposits.

DEPOS'IT, Feculence.

Depos'itive, Depositi'vus. An epithet used by Mr. Erasmus Wilson to express that condition of the membrane in which plastic lymph is exuded into the tissue of the derma, so as to give rise to the production of small, hard elevations of the skin, or pimples. Under "depositive inflammation of the derma," he comprises strophulus, lichen, and prurigo.

DEPOS'ITUM, Deposit.

Dépôt, Abscess, Deposit, Sediment—d. Lait-euse sur la Cuisse, Phlegmatia dolens—d. de l'Urine, Sediment of the urine.

Deprava'tion, Deprava'tio, (de, and pravus, 'bad,') Perversion, corruption; as depravation of the taste, &c.

Deprehen'sio, (deprehendere, deprehensum, 'to seize upon,') Diagnosis, Epilepsy.

Depres'sants, Sedatives.

Depres'sion, Depres'sio, Impres'sio, (deprimere, depressum,—de, and primere,—'to depress,') In Anatomy, it means an excavation, hollow, or fossa. In Surgery, it is applied to a fracture of the cranium, in which the portions of fractured bone are forced inwards, (F.) Subgrondation; called, also, Es'phlasis, En'thlasis, Catap'iesis, Camp'sis Depres'sio, Thla'sis Depres'sio.

Depression, (F.) Abaissement, means Coughing. See Cataract.

Depression also means defecation or deject'edness, Ademon'ia, Ademo'syné, Demis'sio an'ini.

DEPRES'SION, NER'VOUS, Shock, nervous—d. Vital, Shock, nervous.

Dépressoire, Meningophylax.

Depres'sor, (F.) Abaisseur. Several muscles have been so termed, because they depress the parts on which they act.

DEPRES'SOR ALÆ NA'SI, D. labii superioris alæque nasi seu Labii superioris proprius, Incisivus medius, Myrtiformis, Constrictorres alarum nasi ac depressores labii superioris, Maxillo-alveoli-nasal—part of the labialis (Ch.), (F.) Abaisseur de l'aile du nez. It arises from the superior maxillary bone immediately above the junction of the gums with the two incisor and canine teeth, and passes upwards to be inserted into the upper lip and root of the ala nasi, which it pulls downwards.

DEPRES'SOR AN'GULI O'RIS, Triangula'ris, Depressor labiorum communis, D. labiorum, (F.) Sousmaxillo-labial, Maxillo-labial (Ch.), Abaisseur de l'angle des lèvres ou Muscle triangulaire. A muscle situate at the lower part of the face. Its form is triangular. It arises from the outer oblique line on the lower jawbone, and terminates in a point at the commissure of the lips, which it pulls downwards.

DEPRES'SOR CLITOR'IDIS, see Ischiocavernosus.

DEPRES'SOR LA'BII INFERIO'RIS, Quadratus, Q. Men'ti, Depressor labii inferioris proprius, (F.) Mentonier-labial, Mento-labial (Ch.), Carré du Menton, Houpe du Menton, Abaisseur de la lèvre inférieure. A small, thin, and quadrilateral muscle, which arises from the external oblique line of the lower jaw, and ascends to the lower lip, where it becomes confounded with the orbicularis oris. It pulls the lip downwards and outwards.

DEPRES'SOR LA'BII SUPERIO'RIS ALÆ'QUE NA'SI, D. alæ nasi—d. Labii superioris proprius, D. alæ nasi—d. Labiorum communis, D. anguli oris—d. Nerve, see Inhibitory—d. Oculi, Rectus inferior oculi.

DEPRES'SOR PAL'PEBRÆ INFERIO'RIS. A fleshy bundle, which forms part of the palpebralis muscle. Heister describes it separately, but it is not admitted now.

Depresso'rium, Meningophylax.

Dep'rimens Auric'ulæ, (deprimere, 'to depress,') Retrahens auris—d. Maxillæ biventer, Digastrius—d. Oculi, Rectus inferior oculi.

Deprimen'tia, Sedatives.

Depucellement (F.), (de, and pucelle, 'a maid,') Defloration.

Depucela'tion, Defloration.

Depudica'tion, (depudicare,—de, and pudicus, 'chaste,'—'to dishonor,') Defloration.

Dep'urants, Depuran'tia, Dep'uratives, (depurare, depuratum,—de, and purus,—'to purify,') (F.) Depurans, Dépurgatifs. Medicines were formerly so called, which were supposed to possess the power of removing, from the mass of blood or humors, those principles which disturbed their purity; and of directing them towards some one of the natural emunctories. The juices of what are called antiscorbutic herbs, sulphur, and many other medicines, were ranked under this class.

Dépurgatifs, Depurantia, see Depuratory.

Depura'tion, Depura'tio, Catharis'mus, Mundat'io. In Pathology, depuration has been used for the process by which nature purifies the animal economy, either by the agency of some eruptive disease, or some spontaneous evacuation, or by the assistance of medicine. See Clarification, and Depuratory.

Dep'uratives, Depurantia.

Dep'uratory, Depurato'rius, (F.) Dépurgatoire, Dépurgatif. That which causes depuration, as by the urinary and cutaneous depositions. Applied, also, to diseases which have been considered capable of modifying the constitution advantageously, by acting on the composition of the fluids—such as certain eruptions, intermittents, &c. The word is also appropriated to medicines and diet, by which the same effect is sought to be induced.

Deradelph'us, (F.) Déradelphé, (dere, and ἀδελφός, 'a brother,') A double monocephalous monster, whose two trunks are united above the umbilicus, and separated below.

Der'aden, gen. Derad'enis, (dere, and ἀδην, 'a gland,') A gland in the neck.

Deradeni'tis, gen. Deradeni'tidis, (dere, ἀδην, 'a gland,' and itis,) Inflammation of the glands of the neck.

Deradenon'cus, (dere, ἀδην, 'a gland,' and οὖλος, 'a swelling,') Tumefaction of the glands of the neck.

Deranencepha'lia, Thlipsencepha'lia, (dere, and anencephalia, 'absence of brain,') A monstrosity in which only a small portion of the brain exists, resting on the cervical vertebræ—more properly derencepha'lia. According to Is. G. St. Hilaire, a monstrosity characterized by the total absence of encephalon, and of the medulla spinalis into the cervical region.

Derang'ed, (de, and ranger, 'to put in order,') Insane.

Derange'ment, Insanity.

Dératé (F.), Lic'ne priva'tus, (de, and rate, 'spleen,') Deprived of spleen; as by an operation.

Der'bia, Impetigo.

Der'byshire Neck, Bronchocele.

Derch, (Sc.) (Sax. ðreoph,) Nanus.

De'rê, (δερη,) Collum. In composition, Neck.

Derencepha'lia, Deranencephalia.

Derenceph'alus, (dere, and κεφαλή, 'head,') A monster whose brain is in the neck.

De'ris, (δερς,) Cutis.

Deri'vans, (derivare, derivatum,—de, and rivus, 'a river,'—'to turn water from its regular course,') Derivative.

Dérivatif, Derivative.

Deriva'tion, Deriva'tio, Deflec'tio, Parocheteu'sis, Antilep'sis, Antispas'tic, Revul'sion, Cu'ra derivati'va seu revulso'ria. When a 'centre of fluxion' is established in a part, for the purpose of abstracting the excited vital manifestations for some other, a derivation is operated. To such agency the term médication substitutive has been given.

The term DERIVA'TION has—like Aspiration—been applied to the suction power of the heart—a presumed agency in the circulation of the blood.

Deriv'ative, Revell'ent, Revul'sive, Deflec'tens, Deri'vans, Derivato'rius, Antispas'ticus, Apospas'tic, Revulsi'vus, Revulso'rius, (F.) Dérivatif, Révulsif. A remedy which, by producing a modified action in some organ or texture, derives from the morbid condition of some other organ or texture. Revellents are among the most important remedies: they include, indeed, every physical and moral agent which is capable of modifying the function of innervation, and therefore almost every article of the materia medica.

Derivato'rius, Derivative.

Der'ma, gen. Der'matis, (δέρμα, gen. δέρματος,) Cutis.

Der'mad, see Dermal Aspect.

Der'mal, Der'mic, Derma'lis, Der'micus, (from derma,) Relating or belonging to the skin.

DER'MAL AS'PECT. An aspect towards the skin or external surface.—Barclay. Der'mad is used adverbially by the same writer, to signify 'towards the dermal aspect.'

Dermal'gia, properly Dermatal'gia, Dermatodyn'ia, (derma, and ἀλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the skin. Neuralgia of the skin. Rheumatic Dermal'gia or Rhen'matism of the skin is a form of neuralgia, which is referred, at times, to the nervous trunks, muscles, &c., but appears to be seated in the cutaneous nerves.

Der'mata, see Epidermata.

Dermat'agra, (derma, and αγρα, 'a seizure,') Pel-lagra.

Dermatal'gia, (derma, and αλγος, 'pain,') Derm-algia.

Dermataneur'ia, Adermoner'via, (derma, a, priv., and νευρον, 'nerve,') Paralysis or loss of sensibility of the skin.

Dermataux'é, (derma, and αυξη, 'increase,') Dermatophyma.

Dermatiatri'a, (derma, and ιατρία, 'healing,') Healing of cutaneous diseases; treatment of diseases of the skin—Diadermiatri'a, Dermatocrati'a.

Dermati'tis, gen. Dermati'tidis, (derma, and itis,) Cytitis, Erysipelatous inflammation.

DERMATI'TIS AMBUSTIO'NIS, Burn—d. a. Bullosa, see Burn—d. a. Erythematosia, see Burn—d. a. Escharotica, see Burn.

DERMATI'TIS CALOR'ICA. Inflammation of the skin, produced by the action of heat or cold—as burns and frostbites—Dermati'tis congelatio'nis.

DERMATI'TIS CONGELATIO'NIS, see D. calorica—d. Contusiformis, Erythema nodosum.

DERMATI'TIS EXFOLIATI'VA. Inflammation of the skin accompanied with excessive desquamation.

DERMATI'TIS PHLEGMONO'SA, see Erysipelas—d. Symptomatica, Erysipelas.

DERMATI'TIS TRAUMAT'ICA. Inflammation of the skin produced by mechanical agencies.

DERMATI'TIS VENENA'TA. Inflammation of the skin produced by acrid or poisonous agents.

Dermatocelluli'tis, see Ethmyphitis.

Dermatocholo'sis, (derma, and χολη, 'bile,') Icterus.

Dermatoch'ysis, (derma, and χυσις, 'effusion,') Anasarca.

Dermatocrati'a, (derma, and κρατω, 'I have power over,') see Dermatiatria.

Dermato'des, (derma, and odes,) Dermatoid.

Dermatodyn'ia, (derma, and δυνη, 'pain,') Dermalgia.

Der'matoid, Dermatoï'des, Dermato'des, Dermoi'des, Dermo'des, Der'moid, (derma, and ειδος, 'form,') That which is similar to the skin. This name is given to different tissues, which resemble the skin, as dermoid tumors, &c. The dura mater has been so called by some.

Mor'bi dermatoides, chronic cutaneous diseases.

Dermatoleucas'mus, (derma, and λευκος, 'white,') Achroma.

Dermatol'ogy, Dermatolog'ia, Dermol'ogy, (derma, and λογος, 'a discourse,') A discourse or treatise of the skin.

Dermatol'ysis, (derma, and λυσις, 'loosing,') Cutis pendula. See Chalastodermia.

Dermato'ma. A form of perverted nutrition of the skin accompanied with hypertrophy; as Mole, Nævus, &c.

Dermatomelas'ma, see Melanopathia.

Dermatono'ses. A class of diseases of the skin, of the family Exzematosen of Fuchs. They are of different character, and are simple abnormalities of secretion.

Dermatopathi'a, (derma, and παθος, 'affection,') Cutaneous disease.

Dermatoperiscleris'mus, (derma, περι, 'around, and σκληρος, 'hard,') Induration of the cellular tissue.

Dermatoperisclero'sis, Induration of the cellular tissue.

Dermatoph'ilus, (derma, and φιλω, 'I love,') Chique.

Dermatophy'ma, gen. Dermatophy'matis, Dermataux'é, (derma, and φυμα, 'tumor,') A tumefaction of the skin.

Dermatophy'mata Vene'rea, Condylomata.

Dermatoph'yte, Phytoder'mata, properly Dermatoph'ytis (Mor'bi), (derma, and φυτον, 'a vegetable,') An order of cutaneous diseases, including those that depend on, or are characterized by, the presence of parasitic plants. It is made to include Porrigio and Sycosis.

Dermatophyt'ic, Dermatophyt'icus, (F.) Dermatophytique. Relating, or appertaining, to dermatophytes.

Dermatorrhag'ia, (derma, and ρηνη, 'rupture,') A discharge of blood from the skin.

Dermatorrhœ'a, (derma, and ρηνω, 'I flow,') A morbidly increased secretion from the skin.

Dermatosclero'sis, (derma, and σκληρος, 'hard,') Callosity.

Dermatoscrofula, Dermatostruma.

Dermato'ses, (derma, and osis,) Cutaneous diseases.

Dermatosies Véroleuses, Syphilides.

Dermatospas'mus, (derma, and σπασμος, 'spasm,') Horrida cutis.

Dermatostru'ma, Dermatoscrofula. The manifestation of scrofula in the skin by ulcers, &c.

Dermatosyph'ilis. Exanthematous affections connected with syphilis.

Dermatotylo'ma, gen. Dermatotylo'matis, (derma, τυλος, 'callosity, and ωμα,) Callosity.

Dermatotylo'sis, Callosity.

Dermatot'ylus, Callosity.

Dermatoxera'sia, Xeroderma.

Dermatozo'a, (derma, and ζων, 'animal,') see Ectozoa.

Dermatroph'ia, (derma, and atrophia,) An atrophic condition of the skin.

Derme, (derma,) Cutis.

Der'mic, Der'micus, Dermat'icus, Dermat'inus, Dermat'is, Dermat'ic, Der'mal, (F.) Dermien. Relating to the derma or skin.

Der'mis. Used erroneously at times for Derma.

Dermi'tis, gen. Dermi'tidis, (derma, and itis,) Cytitis.

Dermo'des, (derma, and odes,) Dermatoid.

Dermog'raphy, Dermograph'ia, (derma, and γραφω, 'I describe,') An anatomical description of the skin.

Dermodæ'mia, (derma, and αίμα, 'blood,') Hyperæmia or congestion of the skin.

Der'moid, Dermatoid.

DER'MOID CYSTS. Cysts containing skin, and analogous structures, as hair, nails, &c.

Dermol'ogy, Dermatology.

Der'mophyte, Der'matophyte, (derma, and φυτον, 'a vegetable,') A parasitic vegetable growth on the skin.

Dermophyt'ic, Dermophyt'icus, (F.) Dermophytique. Relating or appertaining to Dermophytes.

Dermoskel'eton, see Skeleton.

Dermosynovi'tis, Ulcera'ting, (derma, and synovitis,) Perforating Ulcer of the Foot, (F.) Mal Plantaire Perforant. Inflammation seated in the sole of the foot, between the derma and epidermis, which becomes enlarged and ulcerates, leaving a fistulous opening. This soon involves also the bursa mucosa lying below, and, if neglected, the periosteum and articular synovial membrane. It is said to be a form of lepra anæsthetica, a neuroparalytic inflammation of malignant character, and may, therefore, be termed ulcus lepræ.

Dermo-syphilides, Syphilides.

Dermot'omy, Dermotom'ia, (derma, and τομη, 'incision,') The part of anatomy which treats of the structure of the skin.

Derod'ymus, (dere, and διδυμος, 'a twin, or δευω, 'to mingle,') see Dicephalus.

Deron'cus, (dere, and ογκος, 'a swelling,') Bronchocele.

Der'tron, (δετρον,) This word, which is used by Hippocrates, signified, according to some, the omentum or peritoneum, but according to others, the small intestine. See Epiplon.

Dés (F.), as a prefix, De.

Désaltérants (F.), (dés, and altération, 'thirst,') Refrigerants.

Désarticulation (F.), (dés, and articulus, 'a joint,') Disjoint'ing. A word used to express the part of the operation, in amputation at an articulation, which consists in dividing the ligaments, and separating the articular surfaces. Also, an anatomical preparation, the object of which is to separate the different bones of the skeleton, and especially those of the head.

Désassimilation, see Assimilation.

Désalorinèses, (de, and calor, 'heat.') A name given by Baumes to diseases which are characterized by diminished heat.

Descemet', Mem'brane of, see Aqueous humor, and Cornea.

Descemeti'tis, (Descemet, and itis.) A term improperly formed, and really signifying 'inflammation of Descemet,' the anatomist. Inflammation of the membrane of Descemet, Aquomembrani'tis.

Descen'dens No'ni, see Hypoglossus.

Descen'sio, (descendere, descensum,—from de, and scandere, 'to climb,'—'to descend,') Cataplasia.

Descen'sus, gen. Descensus, Cataplasia—d. Testiculorum, Orchidocatabasis.

Descente, Hernia—d. de la Matrice, Procidencia uteri.

Desec'tus, (de, and secare, sectum, 'to cut,') Castratus.

Désenflure, (dés, and enfler, (L.) inflare, 'to swell,') Détéumescence.

Desh'ler's Salve, (after the proposer,) Ceratum resinae compositum.

Desiccan'tia, (de, and siccare, 'to dry,') Desiccativa.

Desicca'tio, Draining, Drying—d. Herbarum, Drying of plants.

Desicca'tion, Drying.

Desiccati'va, Desiccan'tia, Siccan'tia, Exsiccati'va, (F.) Dessicatifs. Remedies which, when applied externally, dry up the humors or moisture from a wound.

Désinfectant, Disinfectant.

Désinfection, Disinfection.

Desipien'tia, (de, and sapio, 'I am wise,') Delirium.

Desire', (desiderium, (F.) désir,) Libido—d. Venereal, Appetite, venereal, see Libido.

Des'ma, (δέσμα,) Des'mé, Des'mus. A bandage, a ligament.

Desmatur'gia, (desma, and εργον, 'work,') The doctrine of the application of bandages. Bandaging.

Des'mé, (δέσμα,) Desma.

Desme'dion, (dim. of Desme,) Fasciculus.

Desmeux, Ligamentous.

Desmiogna'thus, (F.) Desmiognathe, (from δέσμος, 'bound,' and γνάθος, 'jaw,') A double parasitic monster, Order, Polygnathien, characterized by a supernumerary imperfect head, united, under the neck, by muscular and cutaneous, but no bony attachments, to the principal subject.

Desmit'is, gen. Desmitidis, Desmophlogo'sis, Desmophlog'ia, (from desma, and itis.) Inflammation of ligaments.

Desmochauno'sis, (desma, and χαλνωσις, 'relaxation,') Relaxation of an articular ligament.

Desmodyn'ia, (desma, and ὀδυνή, 'pain,') Pain in the ligaments.

Desmog'raphy, Desmograph'ia, (desma, and γραφη, 'a description,') An anatomical description of the ligaments.

Des'moid, Desmoï'des, Desmo'des, (desma, and ειδός, 'resemblance,') Having the character of, or resembling, ligament. See Tumor, fibrous.

DES'MOID TIS'SUE, Ligamentous Tissue, Tex'tus desmo'us. This tissue is very generally diffused over the human body; has a very close connection with the areolar tissue, and is continuous with it in divers places. It constitutes the ligaments, aponeuroses, &c.

Desmol'ogy, Desmolog'ia, (desma, and λογος, 'a discourse, a treatise,') That part of anatomy which describes the ligaments. Also, a treatise on bandages.

Desmop'athy, Desmopathi'a, (desma, and παθος, 'disease,') Disease of the ligaments.

Desmophlog'ia, (desma, and φλογος, 'I inflame,') Desmitis.

Desmorrhex'is, (desma, and ρηξις, 'rupture,') Rupture of an articular ligament.

Desmo'sus, (from desmus,) Ligamentous.

Desmot'omy, Desmotomi'a, (desma, and τομή, 'incision,') The part of anatomy which teaches the mode of dissecting the ligaments.

Des'mus, (δέσμος,) Ligament.

Désobstruant, Deobstruent.

Désobstructif, Deobstruent.

Désopilat'if, (de, and oppilo, 'I stop up,') Deobstruent.

Désorganisation, Disorganization.

Désoxygénéses, (dés, and oxygen,) M. Baumes includes under this title an order of diseases, which he considers dependent upon a diminution in the quantity of the oxygen necessary for the animal economy.

Despotats (F.), (de, and portare, 'to carry away,') Infirm soldiers, formerly charged with the office of removing the wounded from the field of battle. The class of Despotats was introduced by Leo VI., at the commencement of the 9th century.

Despuma'tion, Despumatio, Apaphris'mus, Epaphris'mus, (despumare,—de, and spumare, spumatum,—'to skim, to remove the froth,') The separation of the froth and other impurities, which rise, by the action of the fire, to the surface of any fluid.

Desquama'tion, Desquama'tio Cu'tis, Eclep'isis, Aposyr'ma, Apolep'isis, Apolepis'mus, Moult'ing, (desquamare, desquamatum,—de, and equama, 'a scale,'—'to scale off,') Exfoliation, or separation of the epidermis, in the form of scales, of a greater or less size, Furfura'tio, Defurfura'tio. This affection is a common consequence of exanthematous diseases.

Desquamato'rius, Exfoliative.

Dessèchement, (de, and siccare, 'to dry,') Atrophy, Draining.

Dessert', Bella'ria, Trage'mata, (F.) Dessert, (from [F.] desservir,—de, and servir, 'to serve,'—'to clear the table,') In the United States, it means puddings, pies, &c., which, in England, precede the true dessert—fruits, &c.

Dessicatifs, Desiccativa.

Dessication, Desiccation.

Destilla'tio, (de, and stillare, stillatum, 'to drop,') Coryza, Distillation—d. Pectoris, Catarrh—d. Uteri, Leucorrhœa.

Destruc'tio, (de, and struere, structum, 'to build,') Diaphthora.

Desuda'tio, Ephidro'sis, Sudam'ina, Hidro'a, (desudare,—de, and sudare,—'to sweat,') Desudation means a profuse and inordinate sweating, 'a muck-sweat;' but, most commonly, the term is applied to an eruption of small pimples, similar to millet seed, which appears chiefly on children, and is owing to want of cleanliness.

Désymphyser, (dés, and symphysis,) see Symphyseotomy.

Deten'tio, (detineo, detentum, 'I hold down,') Catalepsy.

Deter'gens, (detergere, detersum,—de, and tergere, 'to clean,'—'to cleanse,') Abstergent.

Deter'gents, Detergen'tia, Deterso'ria, Extergen'tia, Abstergen'tia, Abstersi'va, Absterso'ria, Abluen'tia, Traumat'ica, Smec'tica, Emundan'tia, Mundificati'va, Mundifican'tia, Rhypp'tica, Abstersives, (F.) Détersifs, Mundificatifs, Abluents. Medicines which possess the power to deterge or cleanse parts, as wounds, ulcers, &c. They belong to the class of stimulants, or to that of emollients.

Determina'tion, Determina'tio, (de, and terminus, 'a boundary,') Strong direction to a given point;—as 'determination of blood to the head.'

Détersifs, Detergents.

Detersoria, Detergents.

Detersorium. The place, in ancient bathing establishments, where the bather was cleansed and dried.

Detestatio, (de, and testis, 'a testicle,') Castatio.

Détorse, (de, and torquere, torsum, 'to twist,') Sprain.

Detractio San'guinis, Bloodletting.

Detritus, (deterere, — de, and terere, tritum, 'to rub,' — 'to bruise or wear out,') The residuum, occupying the place of the organic texture of parts which have undergone disorganization.

Détroit Abdominal, (de, and strictus, 'narrow,') Pelvis (brim) — d. Inférieur, Pelvis (outlet) — d. Périnéal, Pelvis (outlet) — d. Supérieur, Pelvis (brim).

Détroncation, Detruncation.

Detrunca'tio, Detrunca'tio, (F.) Détroncation, (de, and truncus, 'a trunk,') Separation of the trunk from the head of the fœtus, the latter remaining in the uterus.

Detrusion, Detrusio, (detrudere, — de, and trudere, trusum, 'to thrust,' — 'to thrust down or from,') The act of thrusting or forcing down or away. Applied by Dr. Walshe to lateral displacement of the heart by extraneous pressure.

Detrusor Uri'næ, Protrusor. The muscular coat of the urinary bladder was formerly so called. It was, also, named Constrictor Vesicæ Uri'nariæ.

Détumescence (F.), Detumescen'tia, (detumere, — de, and tumere, 'to swell,' — 'to cease to swell,') A diminution of swelling. This word has nearly the same signification as the French word Désenflure. The latter is, however, more particularly applied to the diminution of oedema or anasæra; the former, to the resolution of a tumor properly so called.

De'unx. The ancient name of a weight of 11 ounces, supposing the pound to consist of 12.

Det'rens (Fe'bris), (deûro, 'I burn up,') Causus.

De'us Copulatio'nis, 'god of copulation,' Cupido.

Deuterance'a, (deuteros, 'the second,' and anæa, 'imbecility,') Dementia.

Deuteria, (deuteros, 'the second,') Vogel has used this term for the symptoms produced by retention of the secundines. The word was also applied, by the Greeks, to a second or inferior wine.

Deuterion, Secundines.

Deuteropathi'a, Hysteropathi'a, Mor'bus secundarius, (deuteros, 'the second,' and pathos, 'disease,') A secondary disease. One produced by another, and of which it is only, in some measure, symptomatic, or the sympathetic effect.

Deuteroscopy, Deuteroscop'ia, (deuteros, 'the second,' and σκοπω, 'I view,') Second sight. A fancied power of seeing future things or events. Also, a form of hallucination, in which the patient sees a spectral image of himself.

Deut'o, (deuteros, 'second,') A prefix denoting two, or double,—as deutoxide, having two degrees of oxidation.

Deutoizotate Acide Liquide de Mercure, see Hydrargyri nitras.

De'vehens, (de, and vehere, 'to carry,') Efferent.

Development, Evolu'tio, ([F.] développer, 'to unfold,') (F.) Développement. In Physiology, it means growth or increase; and in Pathology, its signification is similar. It—as well as Differentiation—is at times used, in Physiology, for the kind of increase which takes place by the formation of new tissues from those already existing, as in the embryo, whilst growth is restricted to the increase of the same tissues. By development of the pulse is understood an increase in its strength and fulness. Diseases of development, Morbi evolu'tio'nis, are such as are peculiar to the period of growth.

'TAK'ING DEVEL'OPMENTS. A term used by practical craniologists to signify the act of measuring prominences of the skull, which are regarded by them as indicating the size of corresponding cerebral organs.

DEVEL'OPMENT, VES'ICLE OF, see Vesicle of development.

Developmen'tal Diseases, Metamorphici.

Devertic'ulum, Diverticulum.

Devia'tion, Devia'tio, (de, and via, 'the way,') Out of the way. By this word is meant—a vicious curvature of the spine or other bones;—faulty direction of the teeth or other part;—the passage of blood, bile, urine, milk, &c., into vessels not natural to them.

Déviati'on des Règles, Menstruation (vicari-ous).

Dev'il Bit, Veratrum viride—d. in a Bush, Nigella.

Dev'il's Bit, Aletris farinosa, Scabiosa succisa, Chamælirium luteum—d. Bite, Liatris—d. Dung, Asafœtida—d. Shoestrings, Galega Virginiana.

Devirgina'tion, (de, and virgo, gen. virginis, 'a virgin,') Defloration, Stuprum.

Deviscera'tion, (de, and viscus, visceris, 'an entrail,') Exenterismus.

Dévoicement, (de, and voie, (L.) via, 'way,') Diarrhœa.

Dew'berry, Amer'ican, see Rubus cæsius—d. Plant, Rubus cæsius.

Dew'claws, Crusta genu equinæ.

Dexiocar'dia, (δεξις, 'right,' and καρδία, 'the heart,') A case in which the heart is found to beat on the right side. It is met with occasionally in pleurisy and pneumothorax. See Ectocardia.

Dex'is, (δεξις,) Degmus.

Dex'tans. A weight of 10 ounces, supposing the pound to consist of 12.

Dexteri'na, Dextrine.

Dex'trad, (dexter, 'right-handed,') A term used adverbially by Dr. Barclay to signify 'towards the dextral aspect.' See Mesial.

Dex'tral As'pect, see Mesial.

Dex'trin, Dex'trine, Dextri'num, Dexteri'na, Brit'ish gum, Artific'ial gum, (dexter, 'right-handed,') (F.) Dextrine, Leiocome, Liocome, Leiocomme, Leiogomme. (So called from its refracting the rays, in the polarization of light, more to the right hand than any substance known.) A substance obtained by the continued action of diluted sulphuric acid upon starch at the boiling point. It is used in the treatment of fractures, by the 'immovable apparatus.' The bandages are soaked in a solution, in water, of the dextrine—previously moistened thoroughly with tincture of camphor, to prevent it from leaking when the water is added. The solution should be of the consistence of molasses.

DEX'TRIN, AN'IMAL, Glycogenic matter—d. Hepatic, Glycogenic matter.

Dextri'num, Dextrin.

Dex'trose, Glucose.

Di, Dis, (di, dis,) in composition, bis, twice, double. Also, as well as Dif and Dis, separation or division, and, at times, negation and privation.

Dia, (dia,) in composition, 'through, asunder, out of, separated.' When prefixed to any therapeutical agent, it meant, in ancient pharmacy, a preparation into which that agent entered.

Diab'ebos, Astragalus, Malleolus.

Diabète, Diabetes—d. Chyleux, Chyluria—d. Faux, see Diabetes—d. Insipide, see Diabetes—d. Sucré, Diabetes (mellitus).

Diabe'tes, (διαβητης, from dia, and βαινω, 'I pass,') Uri'næ proflu'vium, Hyperdiure'sis, Si'pho uri'næ, Urorrhag'ia, Polyu'ria, Hy'drops ad Mat'ulam seu Matel'læ, Polyure'sis, Uroze'mia, Ureorrhæ'a, Dip'sacus, Diarrhæ'a in Uri'nâ seu urino'sa, (F.) Diabète, Flux d'Urine. A disease characterized by great augmentation, and often manifest alteration in the secretion of urine; with excessive thirst and progressive emaciation. Cullen has described two species:—Diabetes insip'idus and D. mellit'us; the former, (F.) Diabète faux ou insipide, Diabète, being, simply, a superabundant discharge of limpid urine, of its usual, urinary taste; the latter, D. Mellit'us, called, also, Paru'ria Mellit'a, Diabetes Anglicus seu ve'rus, Melitu'ria, Melithyperu'ria, Glucosu'ria, Glycyrrhæ'a urino'sa, Uroze'mia mellit'a, Saccharorrhæ'a urino'sa, Phthisu'ria, Urophthi'sis, Ta'bes diuret'ica seu diabétique, Dyspep'sia saccharig'ena, Apo-ceno'sis Diabète's Mellit'us, Sac'charine diabète's, (F.) Diabète sucré, Hyperurorrhée saccharine, Phthisurie sucrée,—falls under the definition given above. The quantity of urine, discharged in the 24 hours, is sometimes excessive, amounting to 30 pints and upwards; each pint containing sometimes 2½ oz. saccharine matter. This replaces the urea, which is not found in quantity in the urine of those laboring under diabetes. Where the disease is situate is not clear. The whole system of nutrition, however, seems to be morbidly implicated. A part of the urine must be formed at the expense of the system, as the egesta frequently far exceed the solid and liquid ingesta. On dissection, no morbid appearance is met with sufficient to enable us to fix on the seat of this distressing affection.

All the remedies that have been tried have usually been found insufficient in D. Mellitus. Skim milk has been prescribed under the idea that the patient would thus get both albuminous and saccharine proximate principles of food.

D. insip'idus, Hyperure'sis aquo'sa, Hydru'ria, Hydrure'sis, Paru'ria incont'inens aquo'sa, Diabète's spu'rius, Urorrhæ'a, U'real Diabète's, (F.) Polyurie, Hyperurorrhée, Diabète insipide, Faux diabète, which occurs in hysterical habits, and has, hence, been called D. hystericus, is of comparatively trifling moment. Exclusive diet, and attention to the state of the cutaneous transpiration, which have sometimes produced good effects in D. Mellitus, have most commonly failed.

DIABÈTES ANGLICUS, see Diabetes—d. Chylusus, Chyluria—d. Insidus, see Diabetes—d. Lacteus, Chyluria—d. Mellitus, see Diabetes—d. Spurius, see Diabetes—d. Ureal, see Diabetes—d. Verus, Diabetes (mellitus).

Diabet'ic, Diabétique, (F.) Diabétique. Relating to diabetes. One having diabetes.

DIABET'IC SU'GAR, see Glucose.

Diablotin (F.), (from diable, 'the devil' who tempts us.) A name given to a pastil reputed to be aphrodisiac. The principal ingredient of the Diablotins d'Italie was powdered cantharides.

Diabot'anum, (dia, and βοτάνη, 'an herb.') A medicine, prepared with herbs.

Diabro'sis, (διαβρωσις, from dia, and βρωσκω, 'to eat.') Erosion, Corrosion.

Diabro'ticus, (διαβρωτικός.) A substance capable of causing erosion of the part to which it is applied. It ordinarily means a medicine, whose activity places it between escharotics and caustics. See Corrosive.

Diacar'yon, (dia, and καρυον, 'a nut,') Rob nu'eum. The rob of nuts or of walnuts.

Diacas'sia cum Man'nâ, Confectio cassiæ.

Diacathol'icon, Diacathol'icum, (dia, and καθολικός, 'universal.') The name of a purge, so called from its general usefulness. It was an electuary, and composed of the pulp of cassia, tamarinds, leaves of senna, root of polypody, flowers of the violet, rhubarb root, aniseed, sugar, liquorice, and fennel.

Diacaust'is, (διακαυσίς, from dia, and καίω, 'I burn.') Excessive heat. Over-heating.

Diacaust'ic, Diacaust'icus. That which is caustic by refraction; as a double convex lens, which has been sometimes used for cauterizing an ulcer by directing the sun's rays upon it.

Diaceltates'son Paracel'si, Pulvis cornachini.

Diachala'sis, (διαχάλασις, from cha, and χαλαίνω, 'to be open or relaxed.') Hippocrates uses this word for fracture of the bones of the skull; or for relaxation and separation of the sutures, in consequence of a wound of the head.

Diachalcit'eos, (dia, and χάλκισ, 'chalcitis or colcothar.') A plaster, whose composition is the same as that of the diapalma, except that, in place of the sulphate of zinc, a mixture of oil and colcothar is substituted.

Diacheiris'mus, (διαχειρισμός.) Diacheir'isis, (διαχειρίσις.) Tracta'tio manua'ria, (dia, and χείρ, 'the hand.') The preparation, administration, and dispensing of medicines.

Diachore'ma, gen. Diachore'matis, Diachore'sis, (διαχωρημα, from διαχωρῶ,—cha, and χωρῶ, 'I retire,'—'I separate from.') Every kind of excreted matter and excretion; but more particularly the faeces and alvine excrement. See Excrement.

DIACHORE'MA XYSMATO'DES, see Ramenta intestinorum.

Diachore'sis, (διαχωρησις.) Excretion.

Diach'risis, (dia, and χρίω, 'I anoint.') Inunction.

Diachris'ma, gen. Diachris'matis, (διαχρίσμα.) Unguentum.

Diachrist'a. Medicines, applied as abstergents to the velum palati, the palate itself, the tongue, &c. Probably gargles.

Diach'ylon, Diach'yllum, Emplas'trum diach'yllum, (dia, and χυλος, 'juice;') i. e. composed of juices.) The plaster of this name was formerly made of certain juices. The term is now confined to the Emplastrum Plumbi or Lead Plaster.

DIACH'YLON GOMMÉ, Emplastrum gum gummi-resinis—d. Gum, Emplastrum gummosum—d. eum Gummi, Emplastrum gummosum—d. Magnum cum gummi, Emplastrum galbani comp.—d. Simplex, Emplastrum plumbi—d. White, Emplastrum plumbi—d. Yellow, Emplastrum gummosum.

Diachyt'ica, (διαχυτικός, from dia, and χυω, 'I pour out,' 'I melt.') Medicines which discuss tumors.

Diacine'ma, gen. Diacine'matis, (διακίνημα, from dia, and κινῶ, 'I move.') A slight dislocation. A subluxation.

Diac'lasis, (διακλασις, from dia, and κλαίω, 'to break.') Refraction.

Diac'lysis, (διακλύσις.) Diaclys'mus, (διακλυσμός, from dia, and κλύω, 'to wash out.') Rinsing or cleansing—especially of the mouth.

Diaclys'ma, gen. Diaclys'matis, (διακλυσμα.) Gargarism.

Diacoccyme'lon, (dia, and coccymelon.) Diaprunum.

Diac'o'dion, (dia, and κωδία, 'a poppyhead.') Syrupus papaveris.

Diac'o'dium, Confec'tio ex Capit'ibus Papav'eri's, (F.) Diacode. The ancients had various forms for preparing it. The Syrup of Poppies—Syrupus Papav'eri's seu Diac'o'dion—is now substituted for it.

Diac'opé, (διακοπή, from dia, and κοπτείν, 'to cut.') Abscession, Dissection, Intersection.

DIAC'OPÉ, En'copé. A cut, incision, fissure, or longitudinal fracture. When used, since Galen, it generally signifies an oblique incision, made in the cranium by a sharp instrument, without the piece being removed. It is not now employed.

DIACOPE CRA'NI, Præcisio seu Dissectio Cranii. Opening the head; and separation of the bones of the cranium.

Diacopræ'gia, (dia, κοπος, 'excrement,' and αἶς, gen. αἶος, 'a goat.') A name given, in Blacard's Lexicon, to a medicine, composed of goat's dung, which the ancients praised in diseases of the spleen, parotid, &c.

Diacrises, Nosocrin'ies, Crino'ses, (dia, and κρίνω, 'I separate.') A class of diseases characterized by alterations of secretion.

Diacrisiography, Diacrisiograph'ia, (διακρισις, 'separation,' and γραφη, 'a description.') A description of the organs of secretion.

Diacritica Signa. (Same etymon as Diacrises.) Signs by which one disease can be accurately discriminated from another:—differentia diagnō'sis.

Diacydoni'tes, Cydoniatum.

Diadema, gen. Diadematis, (διαδῆμα,) Fas'cia cap'itis, Redimic'ulum, (διαδῆμα,—δια, and δένω, 'to bind,'—'I bind round.') A sort of bandage, advised in headache, in which relaxation of the sutures was apprehended.

Diadermatr'ia, (δια, δερμα, 'skin,' and ιατρεία, 'medical treatment.') Endermic method.

Diadex'is, (διαδέξις,) Diad'ochē, Metapto'sis, (διαδέχομαι,—δια, and δέχομαι,—'to take or receive,' 'to transfer,' 'to succeed to.') A transformation of a disease into another, differing from the former both in its nature and seat.

Diad'ochē, (διαδόχη,) Diadexis.

Diad'osis, (διαδosis, from διαδίδωμι, 'to distribute.') In some authors, it means the distribution of nutritive matter over the whole body, — in other words, nutrition; while, in others, it is synonymous with the remission or cessation of a disease. See Anadosis.

Diadœ'us, (δι, and αἰδία, 'the parts of generation.') A monster whose organs of generation and urinary bladder are double. It has only been observed in animals.

Diaeresis, (διαίρεσις, from διαίρω,—δια, and αίρω, 'I take away,'—'I divide,' 'I separate.') A division or solution of continuity. A surgical operation, which consists in dividing any part of the body. Hæmorrhag'ia per diaeresin is hæmorrhage owing to separation or division of vessels.

DIAERESIS UN'GULE, Onychoptosis.

Diaereticus, Caustic.

Dia'eta, (διαίτα,) Diet—d. Juris, see Diet—d. Jusculi, see Diet—d. Lactea seu Lactis, Galactodiæta, see Diet—d. Sicca, Diet, dry.

Diete'ma, gen. Diete'matis, (διαίτημα,) has the same signification as diet, with most authors. Galen gives it a more extensive meaning, comprising under it what constitutes Hygiene.

Dietet'ica, (διαιτητικη—τεχνη,) Dietetics.

Diagnose', Diagnosticate.

Diagnō'sis, (διαγνωσις, from δια, and γινωσκω, 'I know,') Dignō'tio, Diagnos'ticē, Deprehen'sio, Discrimin'ation, (F.) Diagnose, Diagnostique. That part of medicine whose object is the discrimination of diseases, and the knowledge of the pathognomonic signs of each. It is one of the most important branches of general pathology. See Symptom.

DIAGNŌ'SIS, DIFFEREN'TIAL, see Diacritica signa.

DIAGNŌ'SIS, PHYS'ICAL. The discrimination of diseases by the physical signs afforded by auscultation, percussion, &c. See Symptom.

Diagnos'tic, (διαγνωστικός,) Diagnosti'cus, Discret'ivus, (F.) Diagnostique. A symptom which is characteristic of a disease.

Diagnos'ticate, sometimes Diagnose, (F.) Diagnostiquer. To discriminate one disease or phenomenon from another.

Diagryd'ium, (dacrydion,) Convolvulus scammonia.

DIAGRYD'ium CYDONIA'TUM. A pharmaceutical preparation, obtained by inspissating and drying, by means of heat, two parts of scammony, and one of quince juice. It was formerly used as an energetic purgative.

DIAGRYD'ium GLYCYRRHIZA'TUM. An analogous preparation, containing extract of liquorice in place of quince juice.

DIAGRYD'ium SULPHURA'TUM. Scammony, which has been exposed to the vapor of burning sulphur. These diagrydia are not now used.

Dialeip'sis, (διαλείψις, from διαλείπειν, 'to intermit,') Apyrexia, Intermission.

Dialeip'ya, (διαλείπειν, 'to intermit,' and πύρ, 'fever,') Intermittent fever.

Dialem'ma, gen. Dialem'matis, (διαλεμμα, 'an interval,') Apyrexia.

Dialep'sis, (διαλήψις, from διαλαμβάνω, 'I intercept,') Intercept'io. Hippocrates employs this word for the interstices, or intervals, left between the turns of a bandage.

Dialip'sis, (διαλείπειν, 'to intermit,') Apyrexia, Intermissio.

Dial'ysis, Dissolut'io, (διαλυσις, from δια, and λυσις, 'solution,') A dissolution or loss of strength; Resolut'io vir'ium. Weakness of the limbs. Also, a solution of continuity. Dialysis is the separation of liquids—crystalloids and colloids, for example, as by an intervening piece of bladder, or well soaked parchment paper.

Dialytiques, Dissolventia.

Diamant, Diamond.

Diamasse'ma, gen. Diamasse'matis, (διαμασημα, from δια, and μασσωμαι, 'to chew,') Masticatory.

Diamaste'ma, gen. Diamaste'matis, Masticatory.

Diam'bræ Spe'cies. A name given by the ancients to powders, one of which bore the name Spe'cies diam'bræ si'nē odora'tis,—the other, that of Spe'cies diam'bræ cum odora'tis. The former was composed of cinnamon, angelica root, cloves, mace, nutmeg, galanga, cardamom, and numerous other substances; the latter, besides, had amberggris and musk. These powders were used as tonics, in cases of debility of the stomach, and in certain nervous affections.

Diam'eter of Deven'ter, see Pelvis.

Diam'eters of the Fœ'tal Head, see Fœ'tal head—d. of the Pelvis, see Pelvis.

Diam'nes, Enuresis.

Di'amond, Ad'amas, Ad'amant, (ἀδάμας, ἀδαμαντος, from α, privative, and δαμνω, 'I conquer,' 'invincible,') So called from its hardness. (F.) Diamant. It is the most precious of all stones, and was formerly conceived to possess extraordinary cordial virtues.

Diamo'rum, Rob ex mo'ris, (δια, and μορον, 'a mulberry,') An ancient syrup prepared with honey and mulberry juice. It was employed as a gargle in sore throat.

Diamoto'sis, (δια, and μοτος, 'charpie,' 'lint,') The introduction of lint into an ulcer or wound.

Dia'na, (after the goddess Diana,) Argentum.

Dianancas'mus, (ἀναγκασμος,—δια, and αναγκάζω, 'I force,') Coaptation, reduction of a fractured or luxated limb.

Dianoë'ma, gen. Dianoë'matis, (διανοημα, from δια, and νοέω, 'I perceive,') Imagination.

Dianthus Caryophyl'lus, (Δις, Διος, 'Jove,' or from δωξ, 'divine,' αθος, 'flower,' and caryophyllum, 'the clove,') Clove Pink. Also called Caryophyll'ium ru'brum, Tu'nica, T. horten'sis seu ru'bra, Caryophyll'ius horten'sis, Clove July flower, Gill'iflower, Carna'tion, (Sc.) Jeroffleris, Gera'phuris. Order, Caryophyllæ. (F.) Æillet giroflée. The flowers were once much used; but are now only employed in syrup, as a useful and pleasant vehicle for other medicines.

Diapal'ma, Phœnic'ium Emplas'trum. A plaster composed of equal parts of litharge, olive oil, axunge, water, a certain quantity of sulphate of zinc dissolved in water, and white wax. It is classed among the topical, desiccative, emollient, resolvent, detersive, and cicatrizing medicines. Mixed with a quarter of its weight of olive oil, it acquires the consistence of an ointment, and forms the Cerate of Diapal'ma.

Diapas'ma, gen. Diapasm'atis, (διαπασμα, from dia, and πασσω, 'I sprinkle.') Catapasma.

Diapede'sis, Transuda'tio, Persuda'tio, Persul'ta'tio, (διαπρήσις, from διαπρήσω, — dia, and πρήσω, — 'I leap through.') Exhalation, as of blood, in the form of dew, at the surface of the skin, or of any membrane; Sweat'ing of blood, (F.) Sueur de Sang, Hæmorrhag'ia per diapede'sin, Hæmatopede'sis, Hæmidro'sis.

Diapen'sia Cortu'sa, Sanicula.

Diapen'tes or Diapen'tê, (dia, and πέντη, 'five.') A medicine composed of five ingredients. See Diatessaron.

Diaphemet'ric, Diaphemet'ricus, (from dia, ἀφῆ, 'touch,' and μετρον, 'measure.') Relating to the measurements of the tactile sensibility of parts; — as diaphemetric compasses.

Diaphœ'nicon, Diaphœ'nix, Medicamen'tum ex Pal'mulis, (dia, and φοινίξ, gen. φοινίκος, 'a date.') A drastic electuary, of which the date was the chief excipient.

Diaphore'sis, (διαφορησις, from διαφορέω, dia, and φορέω, 'I convey,' 'I dissipate,') (F.) Diaphorèse. A greater degree of perspiration than natural, but less than in sweating. Every kind of cutaneous evacuation.

Diaphoret'ic, (διαφορητικός,) Diapno'icus, Diaphoret'icus, (F.) Diaphorétique. A medicine which excites diaphoresis. Diaphoretics are very uncertain as a class. They are all indirect agents; some sedative, others excitant, and cannot, therefore, be used indiscriminately in disease.

The epithet Diaphoret'ic has also been given, by some, to continued fever, accompanied with constant perspiration.

DIAPHORET'IC, MIN'ERAL, Antimonium diaphoreticum.

Diaphoret'icum Jovia'lê, see Antihectic.

Diaphragm, gen. Diaphrag'matis, (διαφραγμα, from dia, and φρασσω, 'I close,') Diaphrag'ma, Diaphrag'is, Mus'culus phren'icus, Respirato'rium Ven'tris, Discreto'rium, Phren'es, Sep'tum trans-ver'sum, Discri'men Thora'o'is et Ven'tris, Cine'tus, Diazo'ma, Præcinct'us, Diazo's'ma, Diazo's'tra, Hypozo'cus, Hypo'zo'ma, Perizo'ma, Dissep'tum, Dissip'ium, Præcor'dia, Succin'gens membra'na seu mus'culus, Succinct'us, Succinctu'ra, the Mid'riff, (Prov.) Skirt, Heart-scirts. A large, azygous muscle; stretched transversely between the thoracic and abdominal cavities, which it separates from each other; tendinous in the centre; thin, almost circular, and unequally convex, upwards. It is fleshy at its circumference, which is attached to the cartilago ensiformis, to the last six ribs, to the aponeurosis stretched from the last rib to the transverse process of the first lumbar vertebra; and, lastly, to the bodies of the first three or four lumbar vertebrae. When it contracts, its fibres become straight, the chest is enlarged, and the abdomen diminished. It is then an inspiratory muscle. It may, also, diminish the capacity of the chest, and be an expiratory muscle. The muscle plays an important part in sighing, yawning, coughing, sneezing, laughing, sobbing, crying, hiccoughing, singing, vomiting, and in the excretion of the faeces and urine, the expulsion of the foetus, &c.

Diaphrag'ma, Diaphragm — d. Auris, see Tympanum — d. Cerebri, Tentorium — d. Narium, Septum narium — d. Oris, Mylohyoideus — d. Pelvis, Levator ani — d. Ventriculorum lateralium cerebri, Septum lucidum.

Diaphragmal'gia, Diaphragmat'gia, (from diaphragm, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the diaphragm.

Diaphragmat'al'gia, Diaphragmal'gia.

Diaphragmat'ic, Diaphragmat'icus, Phren'ic, Phren'icus, (F.) Diaphragmatique, Phrénique. Belonging to the diaphragm. A name given to several vessels and nerves.

DIAPHRAGMAT'IC or PHREN'IC AR'TERIES. These are distinguished into superior and inferior. The former, called, also, supradiaphragmatic, are two in number, one on each side. They arise from the internal mammary, and descend along the phrenic nerve, to be distributed on the upper surface of the diaphragm. The latter or infradiaphragmatic are also two in number. They arise from the upper part of the abdominal aorta, or from the coeliac artery, and divide into two principal branches, which are distributed on the lower surface of the diaphragm and in its substance.

The superior diaphragmatic veins follow the same course as the arteries, and empty themselves — the right, into the vena cava superior; the left, into the corresponding subclavian vein. The two inferior diaphragmatic veins open into the vena cava inferior.

DIAPHRAGMAT'IC HER'NIA, Phren'ic Hernia, Diaphragmatoce'lê. The abdominal viscera are occasionally protruded through the diaphragm, either through some of the natural apertures in the muscle, or through deficiencies, or wounds, or lacerations in it.

DIAPHRAGMAT'IC or PHREN'IC NERVES, Inter-nal res'piratory of Sir Charles Bell, are two in number; one on the left side, the other on the right. They arise from the second and third nerves of the cervical plexus, about the middle of the neck, and receive two or three filaments from the brachial plexus, after which they descend into the chest at the sides of the pericardium, and are distributed to the diaphragm.

DIAPHRAGMAT'IC PLEX'USES are two in number; one right, and the other left. They arise from the upper part of the solar plexus by a small number of branches, which are distributed to the diaphragm, following exactly the branches of the inferior diaphragmatic arteries.

DIAPHRAGMAT'IC RING, (F.) Anneau diaphragmatique of Chaussier, is a name given to the irregularly quadrilateral aperture by which the vena cava inferior passes through the diaphragm.

Diaphragmat'itis, Diaphragmitis.

Diaphragmatoce'lê, (diaphragm, and κλη, 'a rupture,') see Diaphragmatic Hernia.

Diaphragmit'is, gen. Diaphragmit'idis, (diaphragm, and itis,) Diaphragmat'itis, Inflam'ma'tio septi transver'si, Paraphreni'tis, Empres'ma Pleuri'tis, Diaphragmat'ica, Paraphrene'sis, Diaphragmat'ica, Inflammation of the Diaphragm. The terms, Paraphreni'tis and Paraphrene'sis, have been obtained from the Peripatetic philosophy, which supposed the seat of the φρον or soul to be the præcordia. The essential symptoms of diaphragmitis are: painful constriction around the præcordia, with small, quick, laborious breathing. It is a rare disease.

Diaphragmodyn'ia, (diaphragm, and δυνα, 'pain,') Muscular or other pain of the diaphragm.

Diaphrat'ton Hy'men, (διαφραττων ἕμην, 'separating membrane,') Mediastinum — d. Membrana Mediastinum.

Diaphrax'is, Diaphragm.

Diaph'thora, Destruc'tio, (διαφθορα, from dia, and φθείρειν, 'to corrupt,') Corruption in general; more especially corruption of the foetus in utero. Also, corruption of the blood in the stomach. See Abortion.

Diaphylac'tic, (διαφυλακτικός, from dia, and φυλάσσειν, 'to preserve,') Prophylactic.

Diaph'ysis, (διαφύσις, from διᾶνω, 'I rise between,') Interstit'ium, Discrimina'tio: 'an interstice, interval, division.' Anything that separates two bodies. — The middle part or body of a long bone, Cor'pus os'sis. — A ligament of the knee.

Dia'pia. Some lexicographers use this word synonymously with Diap'ysis or Suppuration; others have employed it in opposition to Myopia.

Diap'lasis, (διαπλάσις, from δια, and πλάσσειν, 'to form,') Conformation, Reduction.

Diaplas'mus, (διαπλάσμος,) Conformation, Reduction.

Diapneus'is, (διαπνευσις, from δια, and πνέω, 'I breathe, or exhale,') Perspiration.

Diap'noë, (διαπνοή,) Perspiration.

Diapnœ'a, (διαπνοία,) Perspiration.

Diapnog'eous Appara'tus, (diapnoe, and γεννάω, 'I generate,') see Perspiration.

Diapno'icus, Diaphoretic.

Diapoph'yses, Transverse processes of the vertebræ.

Diapore'ma, gen. Diapore'matis, (διαπορημα, from διαπορέω, 'I doubt,') Anxiety, Jactitation.

Diapru'num, Diacoecyme'lon. A purgative electuary, of which the pulps of prunes and rhubarb formed the basis. By adding to the diaprunum simplex a 24th part of powdered scammony, the Diapru'num resoluti'um seu compositum was formed. It was more active than the former.

Diapye'ma, gen. Diapye'matis, (διαπυημα, from δια, and πύω, 'pus,') Empyema, Suppuration.

Diapye'mata, pl. of Diapye'ma, Diapyetica.

Diapye'sis, (διαπυησις,) Suppuration — d. Oculi, Hypopyon.

Diapye'tica, pl. of Diapye'ticus, Dyapye'mata. Medicines which promote suppuration.

Diapye'ticus, (διαπυητικός,) Suppurative.

Diarræ'mia, (F.) Diarrémie, (διαρρμία, 'I flow, and αίμα, 'blood,') A pathological condition, said to be common in sheep, in which the globules of the blood are diminished in quantity; the blood itself thinner, and transuding through the coats of the vessels into the cavities.

Diarrémie, Diarræmia.

Dia'ria, (from dies, 'a day,') Ephemera.

Diar'rhagë, (διαρραγή, from δια, and ρήγνυμι, 'to break,') Fracture.

Diarrhe'a, Diarrhœa.

Diarrhe'al, Diarrhœal.

Diarrhée, Diarrhœa.

Diarrhêique, Diarrhœal.

Diarrhet'ic, Diarrhœal.

Diarrhodon, (διαρρόδον, from δια, and ρόδον, 'a rose,') A name given to different compound medicines into which the red rose entered.

The (F.) Poudre diarrhodon was formed of the red rose, red and white sanders, canella, terra sigillata, bole Armeniac, mastich, &c. It was prescribed as an astringent in metrorrhagia, vomiting, &c., and was formed into electuaries, troches, &c., bearing the same name.

Diarrhœ'a, (διαρροία, from δια, and ρρω, 'I flow,') Enterorrhœ'a, Incontinen'tia al'vi, Alvi proflu'vium seu flux'us aquo'sus seu laxitas, Ventris proflu'vium, Cœliorrhœ'a, Cœliol'ysis, Alvus ci'ta, Cacato'ria, Coprorrhœ'a, Catar'rhus intestinal'is, Alvi fluxus, Rhe'u'ma, Epiph'ora alvi, Fluxus alvi'nus, Lax'itas alvi, Deflux'io, Diarrhœ'a, Lax, Looseness, Purging, Scouring, (Old Eng.) Lask, (Sc.) Scour, (Prov.) Ray, Scutter, Skitter, (F.) Diarrhée, Dévolement, Catarrhe intestinal, Flux de Ventre, Cours de Ventre, Ventre relâché, Courante. A disease characterized by frequent liquid alvine evacuations, and generally owing to inflammation or irritation of the mucous membrane of the intestines. It is commonly caused by errors in regimen, the use of food noxious by its quality or quantity, &c., constituting the Diarrhœ'a stercora'ria, D. crapulo'sa of writers. It may be acute or chronic. Many varieties have been made by some nosologists, — e. g. mucous, — Diarrhœ'a muco'sa, Blennœhe'sia, Blennœhe'zia, Mycodiarrhœ'a; and by some authors Enter'ia, Enteri'tis, Diarrhœ'a catarrho'sa seu catarrha'lë, and Erythemo'idës, under the idea that it is associated with an erythematous congestion of the mucous surface; bilious, — Heo-cholo'sis, Cholodiarrhœ'a, Diarrhœ'a bilio'sa; serous, — Hydroche'zia, Hydrodiarrhœ'a, Orrhoche'zia; dependent upon the matters evacuated. Diarrhœ'a al'ba is a form of bowel disease sometimes epidemic in Barbadoes, the stools being white and milky. Diarrhœa requires different treatment, according to its nature. If caused, as it often is, by improper matters in the intestinal canal, these must be evacuated; and the astringent plan of treatment must not be adopted, unless the discharges seem kept up by irritability of the intestines, or unless they are colliquative. Indiscriminate use of astringents is to be deprecated.

A very fatal diarrhœa prevails among the native inhabitants of India, to which Mr. Tytler has given the name Diarrhœ'a hec'tica, because, like hectic fever, it seems to obtain habitual possession of the constitution, to operate upon it with scarcely any perceptible intermission, and in general to defy the most powerful remedies.

DIARRHŒ'A ABLACTATO'RUM, Brash, weaning — d. Adiposa, Gras-fondure — d. Alba, see Diarrhœa — d. cum Apepsiâ, Lientery — d. Arthritica, Cœliagra — d. Biliosa, see Diarrhœa — d. Carnosa, Dysentery — d. Catarrhosa seu Catarrhale, see Diarrhœa — d. Choleraic, Choleric — d. Chylosa, Cœliac flux — d. Chymosa, Cœliac flux — d. Colliquative, see Colliquative — d. Crapulosa, see Diarrhœa — d. Cruenta, Hæmatochezia — d. Dyspeptica, Lientery — d. Erythemoides, see Diarrhœa — d. Hepatica, Hepatirrhœa — d. Ingestorum, Lientery — d. Lienteria seu Lienteria, Lientery — d. Mucosa, see Diarrhœa — d. Purulenta, Pyochezia — d. Sanguinolenta, Hæmatochezia — d. Stercoraria, see Diarrhœa.

DIARRHŒ'A, SUDO'RAL. Diarrhœa associated with a disturbance of the functions of the skin, preventing the secretion of sweat; as in fevers accompanying suppuration, exanthematous fevers, &c.

DIARRHŒ'A IN URI'NÂ, Diabetes — d. Urinosa, Diabetes.

Diarrhœ'al, Diarrhœ'al, Diarrhœ'ic, Diarrhet'ic, Diarrhœ'tic, Diarrhœ'ticus, (F.) Diarrhêique. Relating to diarrhœa.

Diarrhœ'ic, Diarrhœal.

Diarrhœ'tic, Diarrhœal.

Diarrhœ'ticus. Relating to or causing diarrhœa.

Diarrhois'chesis, (diarrhœa, and σχέσις, 'arrest,') Arrest of a diarrhœa.

Diarthro'dial, Diarthrodia'lis. Relating to diarthrosis or movable articulations; as diarthro'dial articula'tion. Diarthro'dial cartilages or incrust'ing cartilages are the cartilages which invest the articular extremities of bones.

Diarthrose de Continuïté, see Amphiarthrosis.

Diarthro'sis, (διαρθρωσις, from διαρρρω, — δια, and ρθρω, — 'I articulate, and osis,) Dearticula'tio, Proarthro'sis, Aparthro'sis, Abarticula'tio, Coarticula'tio, Perarticula'tio, Rota'tio, (F.) Emboîture. A movable articulation. One which permits the bones to move freely on each other in every direction, as in the case of the shoulder joint.

DIARTHRO'SIS ROTATO'RUS, Lat'eral Gin'glymus. Where the movement is limited to rotation, the joint is formed by a pivotlike process turning within a ring, or the ring around a pivot, as in the alto-axoid articulation.

Diasatyr'ion, (δια, and σατυρον, 'the orchis mascula,') An electuary, of which this plant formed the basis. The ancients attributed to it the faculty of exciting the organs of generation.

Diascin'ci Antid'otus, (dia, and σκιγκος, 'a kind of lizard,') Mithridate.

Diascor'dium, (dia, and σχορδιον, 'the water germander,') An electuary, so called because this plant entered into its composition. The Parisian Codex had a formula for its preparation, under the title, Electuarium opiatum astrin'gens seu diascor'dium. (R. fol. scord., ʒiiss., rosar. rubr., bistort. rad., gentianæ, tormentillæ, sem. berber., ʒā ʒss., zingib., piper. long., ʒā ʒij., cassiæ lignæ, cinnamom., dictamn. Cretens., styrac. calamit., galban., gum. acaciæ, ʒā ʒss., bol. oriental. præpar., ʒij., extract. vinos. opii, ʒij., mel. rosat. præp., lbij., vin. Hispan., lbss.: fiat electuarium.) In place of the styrac. calamita, the balsam of tolu or benjamin may be used. The opium is, in this preparation, in the proportion of 1 to 184. The diascordium is employed in diarrhoea and dysentery, as a tonic, stomachic, and astringent. The common dose is from a scruple to a drachm and a half. See Pulvis cretæ compositus.

Diasos'tic, (διασωστικός, from dia, and σωζω, 'to preserve,') Prophylactic.

Dias'pasis, (διασπασίς, from dia, and σπασω, 'I draw,') Divulsio.

Diasper'maton, (dia, and σπέρμα, gen. σπερματος, 'seed,') The ancient name of two cataplasms, composed of seeds.

Diasphyx'is, (διασφυξίς, dia, and σφυζω, 'I strike, I beat,') Pulse. Also, a violent beat of the pulse.

Diastal'tic, Diastal'ticus, (dia, and στελλω, 'I send,') An epithet applied by Dr. Marshall Hall to the reflex or excitomotor system of nerves; because the actions they induce are performed 'through' the spinal marrow as their essential centre.

Diastal'ticus, Diastolic.

Diastase'mia, (F.) Diastasémie, (διαστασις, 'separation, and αἷμα, 'blood,') A pathological condition, characterized by a separation of the elements of the blood globules;—the fibrin and albumen separating also from the coloring matter, while the fibrin attaches itself to the valves of the heart.

Diastase. (Same etymon as Diastasis.) A vegetable principle, allied in its general properties to gluten, which appears in the germination of barley and other seeds, and, by its presence, converts the starch into sugar and gum. See Maltine.

Diastasémie, Diastasæmia.

Dias'tasis, (διαστασις, — dia, and ιστημι, 'to place, — 'separation, — 'division,') Diaste'ma, Dissiden'tia. A separation of bones, and particularly of the bones of the cranium, from each other; of the radius from the ulna, and the fibula from the tibia. The ancients used this word to designate the three dimensions of the body, — length, breadth, and thickness; for the interval separating the patient from the physician; the swelling of varicose veins; the time at which some change occurred in disease, &c.

Diaste'ma, gen. Diaste'matis, (διαστημα,) Dias'tasis, Interstice.

Diastematel'yt'ria, (diastema, and ελυτρον, 'vagina,') An organic deviation, characterized by a longitudinal division or fissure of the vagina.

Diastematencepha'lia, (diastema, and εγκεφαλος, 'the brain,') An organic deviation, consisting in a longitudinal division of the brain.

Diastema'tia, (from diastema.) A term employed by Breschet for an organic deviation, characterized by the presence of a fissure in the mesial line of the body.

Diastematocaul'ia, (diastema, and καυλος, 'trunk,') An organic deviation, characterized by a longitudinal division of the trunk.

Diastematochei'lia, (diastema, and χαλος, 'the lip,') An organic deviation, consisting in a longitudinal division or fissure of the lip.

Diastematocra'nia, (diastema, and κρανιον, 'the cranium,') An organic deviation, consisting in a longitudinal division of the cranium.

Diastematocys'tia, (diastema, and κυστις, 'bladder,') An organic deviation, characterized by a longitudinal division of the urinary bladder.

Diastematogas'tria, (diastema, and γαστηρ, 'the stomach,') An organic deviation, characterized by a longitudinal division of the stomach.

Diastematoglos'sia, (diastema, and γλωσσα, 'tongue,') An organic deviation, characterized by a longitudinal division or fissure of the tongue.

Diastematogna'thia, (diastema, and γναθος, 'jaw,') An organic deviation, characterized by a longitudinal division of the jaw.

Diastematome'tria, (diastema, and μητρα, 'womb,') An organic deviation, characterized by a longitudinal division or fissure of the womb.

Diastematopyel'ia, (diastema, and πυελος, 'pelvis,') An organic deviation, characterized by a longitudinal division or fissure of the pelvis.

Diastematorach'ia, (diastema, and ραχίς, 'spine,') An organic deviation, characterized by a longitudinal division or fissure of the spine.

Diastematorhi'nia, (diastema, and ῥιν, 'the nose,') An organic deviation, characterized by a longitudinal division of the nose.

Diastematostaphyl'ia, (diastema, and σταφυλη, 'uvula,') An organic deviation, characterized by a longitudinal division of the uvula.

Diastematostern'ia, (diastema, and στερνον, 'the sternum,') An organic deviation, characterized by a longitudinal division of the sternum.

Diastementer'ia, (diastema, and εντερον, 'intestine,') An organic deviation, characterized by a longitudinal division of the intestine.

Dias'tolē, (διαστολή, from διαστελλω, — dia, and στελλω, 'I send, — 'I dilate, — 'I open,') Relaxatio seu Remissio cor'dis et arteriarum. Dilatation of the heart and arteries, when the blood enters their cavities. It is the opposite movement to sys'tolē, in which the heart and arteries contract to send forth the blood. Dias'tolē and sys'tolē are, consequently, successive movements. Diastole, Motus cor'dis diastal'ticus, like systole, occurs simultaneously in the two ventricles. The almost inappreciable time, which elapses between the diastole and systole, has been called perisys'tolē, and that which succeeds to the diastole, peridiastolē. When we speak of the contraction or systole of the heart, as well as of its diastole or dilatation, we mean only that of the ventricles. This dilatation is active.

Diastol'eus, (διαστολεως,) Dilator.

Diastol'ic or Dias'tolic, Diastol'icus, Diastal'ticus. Belonging to the diastole of the heart — as 'diastolic impulse of the heart.'

DIASTOL'IC IM'PULSE OF THE HEART, see Impulse, diastolic.

Diastomo'tris, gen. Diastomo'tridis, (διαστομοτρος, from διαστομω, — dia, and στομα, 'mouth, — 'I dilate an aperture,') Dilating instruments, such as the different kinds of specula for the mouth, anus, vagina, &c.

Diastrem'ma, gen. Diastrem'matis, (διαστρεμμα, from δια, and στρεφω, 'I turn,') Distortion, Perversion, Sprain.

Dias'trophē, (διαστροφή,) Distortion, Perversion, Sprain.

Diat'asis, Disten'sio, (διατασις, from διατενω, — dia, and τενω, 'I stretch, — 'I distend,') Ten'sion. The reduction of a fracture by extension and counter-extension.

Diates'saron, (dia, and τεσσαρες, 'four,') An electuary, into the composition of which entered four medicines, viz., the roots of gentian, aristolochia rotunda, and bay-berries, each ʒij., honey, hij. The whole was incorporated with extract of juniper. The diapentes is nothing more than this electuary, mixed with two ounces of ivory shavings. The diatessaron is tonic, and it was formerly employed in cases of stings and bites of venomous animals. It was regarded as emmenagogue, alexiterial, and alexipharmic.

Diathèse, Diathesis—d. Herpétique, see Herpes.
Diathésique, Diathetical.

Diathesis, (διαθεσις, from διατίθημι,—dia, and τίθημι, 'to place,'—'I dispose,') (F.) Diathèse. Disposition, constitution, affection of the body: predisposition to certain diseases rather than to others;—(F.) Imminence morbide. The principal diatheses, mentioned by authors, are the can'cerous (can'cerism), scrof'ulous (scrof'ulism), scorbutic, rheumat'ic, gout'y (pod'agris), and cal'culous.

DIATHESIS, ANEURISM'AL, see Aneurism—d. Dartrous, see Dartre—d. Hæmorrhoidalis, see Hæmorrhoids—d. Hæmorrhagic, Hæmatophilia—d. Nervosa, Nervous diathesis—d. Purulenta, see Pyæmia—d. Rheumatic, see Rheumatic—d. Sthenica, Sthenia.

Diathet'ic, Diathet'ical, Diathet'icus, (F.) Diathétique, Diathésique. Relating or appertaining to a diathesis:—as "diathetical diseases," Diathet'ici mor'bi—gout and cancer, for example.

Diatragacan'thus. A powder, composed of gum tragacanth, $\frac{3}{4}$ ij., gum Arabic, $\frac{3}{4}$ j. and $\frac{3}{4}$ ij., starch, $\frac{3}{4}$ ss., liquorice, $\frac{3}{4}$ ij., as much of the seeds of the melon, and white poppy; seeds of the water-melon, cucumber, and gourd, and sugar candy, $\frac{3}{4}$ ij. It was used as a demulcent.

Diatre'sis, (διατρῆσις, from δια, and τρώω, 'I perforate,') Perforation.

Diatrim'ma, gen. Diatrim'matis, (διατριμμα, from δια, and τριβω, 'I rub,') Chafing.

Diatrinsan'talon, see Diatrion.

Diatrion, Diatrionum, (δια, and τρεις, 'three,') A medicine composed of three ingredients. There were formerly two kinds. The first was called Diatrionum Piper'con spe'cies, and was formed of black and long pepper, aniseed, thyme, and ginger. It was highly stimulating. The second species was known under the name, Diatrinsan'talon, Diatrionum Santalo'rum pul'vis, or Pow'der of the three San'ders. They were considered diaphoretic.

Diatrita'rii, (δια, and τρῆτος, 'third,') The Methodists were so called, who pretended to cure all diseases by subjecting the patient to treatment every third day.

Diat'ritos, (διατριτος,) Relating to every third day, and the means then used by the Methodists to cure diseases.

Diazo'ma, gen. Diazo'matis, (διαζωμα, from δια, and ζώννυμι, 'to girdle,') Diaphragm.

Diazos'ma, gen. Diazos'matis, (διαζωσμα,) Diaphragm.

Diazos'ter, gen. Diazo'steris, (διαζωστηρ,) The twelfth vertebra of the back, because it corresponds to the girdle, ζωστηρ.

Diazos'tra, (διαζωστρα,) Diaphragm.

Diboth'rium La'tum, (δι, and βοθριον, 'a small pit,') Bothriocephalus latus.

Dicen'tra Canaden'sis, Cory'dalis Canaden'sis, (δι, and κεντρον, 'a spur,') Squir'el corn, Col'ic weed. Family, Fumariaceæ. An indigenous plant, growing from Maine to Wisconsin, which flowers in May, the flowers having the odor of hyacinths. It has been given internally in syphilis, and applied externally in syphilis and gonorrhœa.

Diceph'alium, (δι, and κεφαλη, 'head,') Bicephalum.

Diceph'alus, Biceph'alus, Derod'ymus (where the duplication extends to the neck), Janus. A monster with two heads.

Di'ceras Ru'dis, (δι, and κερας, 'horn,') Ditrachyceras rudis, see Worms.

Dichal'con, (διχαλκον,) A weight, equal to a third part of the obolus.

Dichophy'ia, (διχα, 'double,' and φυω, 'I grow,') A disease of the hairs, in which they split and grow forked.

Dichot'omous, (διχα, 'double,' and τομη, 'division,') Dividing regularly into pairs, as the branching of arteries.

Dichro'mic Vis'ion, Dichromism and Achromatopsia.

Dichro'mism, (δι, and χρωμα, 'color,') Dichro'mic Vis'ion. A form of color-blindness, in which one of the primary colors, usually red, is not recognized. See Achromatopsia.

Dichro'mus, (διχρωμος, from δι, and χρωμα, 'color,') Verbena officinalis.

Diciatri'a, (δικη, 'justice,' and ιατρεια, 'medicine,') Medicine, legal.

Diclidosto'sis, (diclis, and οστωσις, 'ossification,') Ossification of the valves—as of the heart.

Di'clis, gen. Di'clidis, (δικλεις,) Valve.

Dicor'yphus, Dicra'nus, (δι, and κορυφη, 'the crown of the head,') A monster with a double vertex or cranium.

DICOR'YPHUS DIHYPOGAS'TRIUS, Hemipages.

Dicra'nus, (δι, and κρανον, 'skull,') Dicoryphus.

Dicro'tal, Dicrotus.

Dicro'tic, Dicrotus.

Di'cro'tous, Dicrotus.

Di'cro'tus, Bisfer'iens, Di'cro'tous, Dicro'tic, Dicro'tal, (δι, and κροτω, 'I strike,') An epithet given to the pulse when it seems to beat twice as fast as usual. It is, also, synonymous with the term rebounding, the artery rebounding after striking, so as to convey the sensation of a double pulsation. It has been considered, and with truth, to frequently foretell hemorrhage. In bad cases of typhus, it certainly announces such a tendency. See Pulse, dicrotic.

Dictamne, Dictamnus albus—d. de Crète, Origanum dictamnus.

Dictam'nus Al'bus, (δικταμνος, from Δικτη, a mountain of Crete,) D. Fraxinel'la, Fraxinel'la, F. Dictam'nus, White Fraxinel'la, Bas'tard Dit'tany, (F.) Dictamne, Fraxinelle. The fresh root has been considered nervine, anthelmintic, and emmenagogue. It is not used.

DICTAM'NUS CRE'TICUS, Origanum dictamnus—d. Fraxinella, Dictamnus albus.

Dicto'id'es, (δικτυον, 'a net,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Reticular.

Dicty'i'tis, gen. Dicty'i'tidis, (dictyon, and itis,) Retinitis.

Dic'tyon, (δικτυον,) Rete.

Didel'phys, gen. Didel'phys, (δι, and ελφς, 'uterus,') Dihysteria.

Diduc'tio Epiphys'ium, see Epiphysca.

Didymal'gia, (διδυμοι, 'the testicles,' and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the testicles.

Did'y'mis, (from didymus,) Epididymis.

Didymi'tis, gen. Didymi'tidis, (didymus, and itis,) Hernia humoralis.

Did'y'mus, (διδυμος,) Gemellus, Testicle—d. Symphyogastrius, Gastrodidymus—d. Symphyogastrius, Hypogastrodidymus—d. Symphyoperinæus, Pygodidymus—d. Symphyothoracogastrius, Thoracogastrodidymus.

Die, see Expiration.

Diebol'ion, (διεβολιον, from δι, and εκβαλλω,—εκ, and βαλλω,—'I cast out,') A name given, by the ancients, to a remedy which they believed capable of producing abortion.

Dienceph'alon, (δι, and encephalon,) One of the principal secondary divisions of the primordial medullary tube; Interbrain, corresponding to the German Zwischenhirn. It includes the thalami optici, pineal gland, pituitary body, third ventricle, and optic nerve.

Dierenbach, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Dierenbach is a city in Bavaria, two leagues from which is a sulphurous spring.

Diervil'la Trif'ida, D. Canaden'sis seu lu'tea

seu humilis seu Tourneforti, Lonicera Diervillia, (after Dierville, a French surgeon,) Bush honeysuckle. An indigenous plant of the Honeysuckle tribe—Lonicera, Ord. Caprifoliaceae—whose flowers appear from June to August. It has been used as a diuretic; and in gonorrhœa and syphilis.

Di'es, He'mera, 'A Day,' (F.) Jour. The day is, properly, the period during which the solar light illumines our horizon; but commonly, also, we designate by the word day the period of 24 hours, Nycthemeron, which is frequently divided into four parts—morning, midday, evening, and midnight. In antiquity, great importance was attached to the observation of days in disease. The medical day is usually reckoned at 24 hours,—universally, in estimating the duration of a disease. In parts of the United States, it comprises only the time when the sun is above the horizon, as regards the administration of medicine, so that if a medicine be ordered to be taken four times a day, it is understood to mean during the 12 hours of day.

Di'es CANICULARES, see Canicula—d. Contemplabiles, Critical days—d. Contemplantes, Indicating days—d. Critici, Critical days—d. Decretorii, Critical days—d. Indicantes, Indicating days—d. Indicatorii, Indicating days—d. Indices, Indicating days—d. Internuntii, Critical days—d. Judicatorii, Critical days—d. Radicales, Critical days.

Di'et, (diara,) Di'eta, Diète'ma, (F.) Diète. Originally, this word signified nearly the same thing as Hygiene and Regimen,—that is, Diet was the employment of everything necessary for the preservation of health and life. At the present day, it usually signifies a particular kind of food and drink. Also, abstinence:—to put any one upon diet, (F.) mettre quelqu'un à la diète, means to deprive him of his usual nourishment. The terms milk diet, Di'eta lac'tis; flesh or meat diet, Di'eta car'nis; soup or broth diet, Di'eta ju'ris vel jus'culi, &c., explain themselves. See Aliment, Hygiene, and Regimen.

Di'et, BROTH, see Diet.

Di'et DRINK. A decoction or potion, variously composed, and used in considerable quantity, for the purpose of purifying the blood. The Decoctum Lusitanicum or Lisbon Diet-drink is one of the most celebrated. See Decoctum sarsaparillæ compositum.

Di'et, DRY, Di'eta Sic'ca. A diet in which there is but a small or no allowance of fluid.

Di'et, FLESH, see Diet—d. Meat, see Diet.

Di'et SCALE, see Dietary.

Di'et, SLOP, Slops—d. Soup, see Diet.

Dietary, Victus Ra'tio. A regulated diet or allowance of food. Every large hospital, military or civil; every prison and eleemosynary institution of every kind, has certain dietetic regulations, and many of them have Tables of Dietary or Diet Scales, which are more or less implicitly followed. See Diet.

The Diet Scale of the British Navy allowed from 31 to 35½ ounces of dry nutritious matter daily; of which 26 ounces were vegetable, and the rest animal—9 ounces of salt meat, or 4½ ounces of fresh. That of the navy of the United States has been as follows:—Three days in the week—Pork, 16 oz.; beans or peas, 7 oz.; biscuit, 14 oz.; pickles or cranberries, 1 oz.; sugar, 2 oz.; tea, ½ oz.;—40½ oz. Two days in the week—Beef, 16 oz.; flour, 8 oz.; fruit, dried, 4 oz.; biscuit, 14 oz.; tea and sugar, 2½ oz.; pickles or cranberries, 1 oz.;—45½ oz. Two days in the week—Beef, 16 oz.; rice, 8 oz.; butter, 2 oz.; cheese, 2 oz.; biscuit, 14 oz.; tea and sugar, 2½ oz.; pickles or cranberries, 1 oz.;—45½ oz. The daily Diet allowance to the British soldier has been one pound of bread and three-quarters of a pound of meat. In the Army of the United States, the quantity of beef, salt or fresh, issued per day, is a pound and a quarter; of pork or of bacon, three-quarters of a pound. Ordinarily, the soldiers have fresh meat four days in the week, and salt meat the other three days; but every diet scale is subject to mutations in the individual articles. It must combine, however, a due admixture of nitrogenized, non-nitrogenized, and inorganic materials. See Aliment. (The work of Dr. Pereira on 'Food and Diet,' and the Treatise on Hygiene by Dr. W. A. Hammond, of the United States Army, 1863, contain numerous Dietaries, civil and military.) See, also, Ration.

Diète, Diet.

Di'eters, Cells of, see Corti—d. Processes of, see Processes of Dieters.

Dietet'ic, Dietet'icus, (F.) Diététique. Relating or appertaining to dietetics or to diet.

Dietet'ics, (διατητική τέχνη,) Diæteticæ, Diætet'ica, Medic'ina Diætetica, (F.) Diététique. A branch of medicine, comprising the rules to be followed for preventing, relieving, or curing diseases by diet. Dietetics is diet administered according to principle. It is an important part of Hygiene. A well-regulated system of diet has great power in checking disease, and likewise in preventing it. A proper knowledge of dietetics is, indeed, as important as that of the Materia Medica, strictly so called.

Dietetics has been used, also, synonymously with Hygiene.

Diététique, Dietetics.

Dietet'ists, Diætetistæ, (F.) Diététistes. Physicians who apply only the rules of dietetics to the treatment of disease.

Diet'ic or Di'etic, Diæt'icus, (from Diet.) Relating or appertaining to diet.

DIET'IC DISEASES, Diætici morbi, according to Dr. Wm. Farr, are such as are produced by diet in its enlarged science—as scurvy, rickets, alcoholism, &c.

Dieu-le-Filt, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The waters of Dieu-le-filt, in France, are chalybeate, and much sought after.

Dieurys'mus, (dia, and εὐρύω, 'I dilate,) Dilatation.

Diex'odus, (διεξόδος, from dia, and ἐξόδος, 'an exit or way out,') Di'odus. Any opening by which an excretion takes place.

Dif, as a prefix, see Di.

Differen'tial Diagno'sis, see Diaeritica.

Differen'tia'tion, (differo,—di, and fero,—'I am different,') Development.

Difficul'tas Intestino'rum, ('difficulty of the intestines,') Dysentery.

Diffu'sio, (dif, and flare, flatum, 'to blow away,') Perspiration.

Difformité, (dif, and forma, 'form,') Deformation.

Diffu'sible (stimulants), (diffundere,—dif, and fundere, fusum, 'to pour,')—'to pour apart or abroad.' Those stimulating medicines are so called which augment the action of the vascular and nervous systems in an acute but transitory manner.

Diffu'sion Liq'uid. The intermixing of fluids or solutions with each other directly. See Dialysis.

Digas'tricus, (di, and γαστήρ, 'a belly,') Biven'ter, B. Maxill'æ, Dep'rimeus Maxill'æ Biven'ter, Bigas'ter, (F.) Mastoïdohyogénien, Mastoïdohyogénien (Ch.), Digastrique, Abaisseur de la mâchoire inférieure. The name Digastrius was formerly given to several muscles. It is now restricted to one of the muscles of the superior hypoid region. The digastricus is thick and fleshy at its extremities, thin and tendinous at its middle. It is attached to the mastoid groove of the temporal bone, and to a fossa on the side of the symphysis menti. Its tendon passes through an aponeurotic ring, which is attached to the os hyoides.

The use of the digastricus is to depress the lower jaw, or to raise the os hyoides, and to carry it forward or backward, as in deglutition.

The strong double-bellied muscle, which forms the gizzard of birds, is also called Digastricus.

DIGASTRICUS CRA'NI, Occipitofrontalis.

Digastrique, Digastricus.

Dig'eny, (di, and γενος, 'generation,') see Generation.

Digeren'tia, (digere,—di, and gerere, 'to carry,'—'to digest,') Digestives.

Diges'tible, (digere, digestum, 'to digest,' and habilis, 'able,') Concoctus hab'ilis. Capable of being digested. All food is not equally digestible, and some of the most important is the least so:—the fat of meat, for example. Certain substances, again, are entirely rebellious. As a general rule, albuminous aliments—as tender mutton and beef—are the most easily appropriated.

Digestif, Digestive.

Diges'tio, Digestion—d. Depravata, Dyspepsia—d. Difficilis, Dyspepsia—d. Laesa, Dyspepsia.

Diges'tion, Diges'tio, (from digere, digestum, 'to digest,') Coc'tio, C. Cibo'rum, Pep'sis, Diges'tive Proc'ess. Digestion is a function, by means of which alimentary substances, when introduced into the digestive canal, undergo different alterations. The object of it is to convert them into two parts; the one, a reparatory juice, destined to renew the perpetual waste occurring in the economy; the other, deprived of its nutritious properties, to be rejected from the body. This function is composed of a series of organic actions, differing according to the particular organization of the animal. In man they are eight in number, viz.: 1. Prehension of food. 2. Mastication. 3. Insalivation. 4. Deglutition. 5. Action of the stomach. 6. Action of the small intestine. 7. Action of the large intestine. 8. Expulsion of the feces.

DIGES'TION, ARTIFIC'IAL. That which is effected outside the stomach by admixture of materials like those of the gastric juice; or by the gastric juice itself.

DIGES'TION is also a pharmaceutical operation, which consists in treating certain solid substances with water, alcohol, or other menstruum, at a slightly elevated temperature,—in a sand-bath, for example, or by leaving them exposed for some time to the sun.

Diges'tive, see Digestives.

DIGES'TIVE PRIN'CIPLE, Pepsin—d. Process, Digestion.

DIGES'TIVE TEX'TURE. The particular organic condition of substances which affects their digestibility.

DIGES'TIVE TUBE, Canal, alimentary.

DIGES'TIVES, Digestiva, Digeren'tia, (F.) Digestifs. A term given, by surgeons, to substances, which, when applied to a wound or ulcer, promote suppuration; as the ceratum resinae, warm cataplasms, fomentations, &c. Such substances are vulgarly termed draw'ing.

Digestivus, (F.) Digestif. Relating or appertaining to digestion; see, also, Digestives.

Dig'it, Digitus—d. Supernumerary, Digitus supernumerarius.

Dig'ital, Digitalis, (from digitus.) Having the shape of a finger; dig'itated. Belonging to or produced by the fingers, as 'digital compression,' 'digital examination.'

The Appendix vermiformis caeci is sometimes called DIGITAL APPEN'DIX.

DIG'ITAL ARTERIES, VEINS, and NERVES, are those distributed to the fingers.

Digital Blanc, Clavaria.

DIG'ITAL CAV'ITY, An'cyroid cav'ity, Cor'nu de-scen'dens ventriculi latera'lis. The occipital portion of the lateral ventricle of the brain.

DIG'ITAL COMPRES'SION, see Compression.

Digital Humain, Clavaria.

DIG'ITAL IMPRES'SIONS are the slight depressions observable on the inner surface of the bones of the cranium, which correspond to the cerebral convolutions. See Impressions, digital.

Digitale, (F.) Doigtier. A finger stall. The term Doigtier d'Asdrubali has been given to a small iron instrument used for measuring the dimensions of the pelvis. Placed at the end of the index finger, it adds to its length and enables it to reach the promontory of the sacrum.

Digitale Petite, Gratiola officinalis.

Digit'alia, see Digitalis.

Digit'alic, Digit'alicus, (F.) Digitalique. Appertaining, or relating, to digitalis,—as Digit'alic pois'oning, (F.) Intoxication digitalique.

Digitalique, Digitalic.

Dig'italine, see Digitalis.

Digitali'num, see Digitalis.

Dig'italire'tin, see Digitalis.

Digit'alis, (from digitale, because its flower resembles a finger stall,) Digit'alis purpu'rea, Bac'charis, Bac'char, Bac'car [?], Foreglove, (Sc.) Deadmen's bells, (Prov.) Flap'dock. Ord. Scrophularinæ. Sex. Syst. Didynamia Angiospermia. (F.) Digitale, Gants de notre dame, Doigtier. The leaves of this plant, Digitalis, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Digitalis fo'lia, (Ph. B., 1867,) which are indigenous in Great Britain, are powerfully sedative,—diminishing the velocity of the pulse,—diuretic, and sorbefacient. In over-doses, Digitalis causes vomiting, purging, dimness of sight, vertigo, delirium, hiccough, convulsions, and death:—all the symptoms, in short, which characterize the acro-narcotic class of poisons. Its active principle has been called Dig'italine or Dig'italin, Digit'alia, Digit'ali'um, Digitali'num, (Ph. B., 1867; Ph. U. S., 1873.) The latter contains a necessarily elaborate formula for its preparation, the ingredients of which are digitalis, stronger alcohol, acetic acid, purified animal charcoal, tannic acid, oxide of lead, stronger ether, water of ammonia, diluted alcohol, and distilled water. The dose, to commence with, is gr. 1-60 or gr. 1-50. Several other principles have also been obtained from digitalis, as digitalire'tin, dig'italose, &c.

Digitalis has been administered in inflammatory diseases, phthisis, active hemorrhage, dropsy, delirium tremens, &c. The average dose is one grain, in pill, repeated every six or eight hours. Its sedative action is not constant; it is even considered by some an excitant of the pulse.

DIGITA'LIS MIN'IMA, Gratiola officinalis.

Digit'ali'um, see Digitalis.

Dig'italose, see Digitalis.

Digit'aria Dac'tylon, Cynodon dactylon.

Digit'ation, Digit'atio, Productio denta'ta, Inser'tio denticula'ta, I. digita'ta, (F.) Dentature, Dentelure. A division into processes having the form of fingers. Several muscles, as the serra'ti, exhibit digitations, similar to those which the fingers form, when held separate.

Digitatio'nes Tuba'rum Fallo'pii, see Tube, Fallopiian.

Digit'ium. Desiccation or atrophy of the fingers. Sauvages calls the same affection Paronychia Digit'ium, see Paronychia.

Digit'o'rum Ten'sor, Extensor brevis digito'rum pedis.

Dig'itus, Dac'tylus, Fin'ger, Dig'it, Ho'llex, Al'lex, (F.) Doigt. A name given to the prolongations which form the extremity of the hand. There are five on each hand: the first, the thumb, An'ticheir, Pol'lex, Al'lus Pol'lex, Ma'nus par'va ma'jori adju'trix, Dig'itus pri'mus seu mag'nus, Pro'manus, (F.) Pouce; the second, the In'dex, Dig'itus in'dex seu secun'dus seu saluta'ris seu saluta'rius seu demonstrato'rius seu demonstrati'vus, Indica'tor, Demonstra'tor, Li'chanos; the third, D. medius seu tertius seu famo'us seu impud'cus seu obscu'us seu infamis seu ver'pus, mid'dle finger or long finger, (F.) Doigt du milieu; the fourth, the ring finger, Dig'itus annula'ris, Param'esos, D. quar'tus seu medicinal'is seu med'icus seu cor'dis, Iat'ricus, (F.) Annulaire; and the little finger, Oti'tes, Dig'itus auricula'ris seu min'imus seu par'vus seu quin'tus seu my'ops seu oti'tes, Ear finger, (F.) Auriculaire, Petit doigt. All of these have three phalanges, except the first, which has only two.

Dig'itus ANNULA'ris, Annular finger—d. Auricularis, see Digitus—d. Cordis, see Digitus and Annular finger—d. Demonstrativus, see Digitus—d. Demonstratorius, see Digitus—d. Famosus, see Digitus—d. Hippocraticus, Finger, Hippocratic—d. Impudicus, see Digitus—d. Index, Index, see Digitus—d. Indicatorius, Index, see Digitus—d. Infamis, see Digitus—d. Magnus, Pollex, see Digitus—d. Medicinalis, see Digitus—d. Medicus, see Digitus—d. Medius, see Digitus—d. Minimus, see Digitus—d. Myops, see Digitus—d. Obscenus, see Digitus—d. Otites, see Digitus—d. Parvus, see Digitus.

Dig'itus PR'edis, Orti'l'us, Toe, (Sc.) Tae, (F.) Orteil. The toes are five in number, and distinguished numerically, reckoning from within to without. The first is, also, called great toe, tom toe, (F.) gros orteil; the fifth, the little toe, petit orteil. They have nearly the same organization as the fingers.

Dig'itus PR'imus, Pollex, see Digitus—d. Quartus, see Digitus—d. Quintus, see Digitus—d. Salutaris, see Digitus—d. Salutaris, see Digitus—d. Salutaris, Index—d. Secundus, Index, see Digitus.

Dig'itus SEMIMOR'TUUS, 'half dead finger.' A torpid condition of the fingers, met with in connection with chlorosis, and cerebro-spinal affections.

Dig'itus SUPERNUMERA'Rius, Supernu'merary fin'ger, or Dig'it, (F.) Doigt surnuméraire. An occasional monstrosity occurs, in which there are supernumerary fingers; and at times owing to hereditary transmission.

Dig'itus TER'tius, see Digitus—d. Verpus, see Digitus.

Digna'thus, (di, and γνάθος, 'lower jaw.') A monster having two lower jaws.

Digno'tio, (dignoscere, dignotum, 'to discriminate,') Diagnosis.

Dihypogas'trius, (di, and ὑπογάστρον, 'the hypogastrium.') A monster whose pelvis, together with the lower portion of the abdomen, is double.

Dihyste'ria, Dime'tra, Didel'phys, U'terus du'plex, (di, and ὑστερη, 'uterus.') The state in which there is a double uterus.

Dijudica'tio, (di, and judicare, judicatum, 'to judge,') Crisis.

Dilacera'tio, (di, and lacerare, laceratum, 'to tear,') Laceration.

Dilatants, Dilating agents.

Dilatateur, Dilator—d. Antérieur du larynx, Crico-thyroid muscle—d. Postérieur du larynx, Crico-arytenoid, posterior.

Dilata'tio, Dilatation—d. Bronchiorum, Bronchia, dilatation of the—d. Intestinorum, Enterectasis—d. Ventriculi, Gastrectasis.

Dilata'tion, dilata'tio, (dilatare, dilatatum,—latum facere,—'to enlarge,') Eury's'mus, Aneurys'mus, Dieury's'mus. Augmentation of the bulk of a body, occasioned by a separation of some of its molecules. Caloric has the property of dilating all bodies. In Surgery, it means the accidental or preternatural augmentation of a canal or opening; as in aneurisms, varices, &c., or the process of enlarging any aperture or canal. When used so as to obtain a view of parts, as by the speculum, it is termed Dioptris'mus.

The termination ectasis signifies dilatation.

Bronchiectasis, cardiectasis, and splenectasis, for example, denote dilatation of the bronchial tubes, of the heart, and of the spleen.

DILATA'TION CYST, or TU'MOR, see Retention Tumor.

Dilatatoire, Dilator.

Dilata'tor Pharyn'gis, Stylopharyngeus.

Dilatato'rium, Dilator.

Dilatato'rius, Dilator.

Dila'ting A'gents, Dilatan'tia, (F.) Dilatants.

Certain substances used in surgery, either to keep parts separate which have a tendency to unite—as after opening an abscess, to prevent the edges of the incision from uniting; or to increase and dilate openings of canals, either when natural, or formed accidentally or artificially. These agents differ from each other: the chief are—prepared sponge tents, gentian root, bougies, sounds, dried peas for issues, &c.

Dila'tor, Dilatato'rius, Dias'toleus, (F.) Dilatateur ou Dilatatoire, (di, and ferre, latum, 'to carry,') A muscle, whose office it is to dilate certain parts; as the inspiratory muscles, which dilate the chest.

DILA'TOR, Dilatato'rium, (F.) Dilatateur. An instrument, used for dilating a wound, excretory canal, or other natural or artificial opening. When employed to obtain an inspection of internal parts, it is termed Spec'ulum, Diop'tra, or Diop'tron. There are several instruments of this kind, each taking its name from the part to which it is applied; as Spec'ulum Or'is, S. Nasi, S. Uteri, &c.

DILA'TOR, AR'NOTT'S. A modification of the old dilators for strictures of the urethra. It consists of a tube of oiled silk, lined with the thin gut of some small animal to make it air-tight, and fixed on the extremity of a small canula, by which it is distended with air or water, from a bag or syringe at the outer end, whilst a stop-cock or valve serves to keep the air or water in, when admitted. The instrument is not much used.

DILATO'RES ALA'RUM NA'is, Compressor naris.

Dila'tris Tincto'ria, Lachnanthes tinctoria.

Dill, (Sax. dile,) Anethum graveolens.

Dil'doo, Dil'doe, Phal'lus, Fas'cinum, Pe'nis succeda'neus, Men'tula factit'ia. An artificial penis.

Dil'ly, Anthemis cotula.

Dilu'en'tia, pl. of Diluens, (diluo,—di, and luo,—'I wash away,') Humectan'tia, (F.) Délayants.

Medicines which have been conceived proper for augmenting the fluidity of the blood and other animal liquids. All aqueous drinks are diluents. They are administered, with great advantage, in various diseases. In fever, water, which is the most familiar diluent, may be freely allowed; the only precaution being to give it hot in the cold stage, cold in the hot, and tepid in the sweating. In diseases where it is considered necessary to abstract blood largely, diluents should not be given too freely. The abstraction of blood occasions activity of absorption, and the mass is speedily restored. It is also obvious, that in cases of inflammation of the mammae, in nurses, diluents should not be freely allowed, as they increase the secretion of milk, and add to the irritation. When demulcents are exhibited in cases of urinary disease, they act simply as diluents; their mucilaginous portion is digested in the stomach and small intestine,—the watery portion alone being separated by the kidney.

Dilute, Dilu'ted, Dilu'tus, (F.) Délayé, Étendu. In Pharmacy, these terms are generally used synonymously. By some, however, a 'dilute acid,' for example, means a weak acid; while a 'diluted acid' is one that has been rendered weaker by the addition of water.

Dilu'tion, with the homœopathist, is the action by which the dose of a medicine is diminished, as, by dissolving a grain of any medicinal article in a certain quantity of a liquid; then taking a grain of the solution and adding it to a like quantity of the liquid: and this may be repeated until the 'thirtieth dilution.'

Dilu'tion, see Dilute.

Dilu'vium, Deluge.

Dil'weed, Anthemis cotula.

Dime'tra, (di, and μητρα, 'uterus,') Dihysteria.

Dinant, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Dinant is a small town, six leagues from St. Malo, in France, where are mineral waters, containing carbonate of iron, chloride of sodium, &c. They are much esteemed.

Din'gee, Dengue.

Din'ic, (from dinus,) Antidinic.

Dink'hold, Min'eral Wa'ters of. A rich carbonated water, situate near the junction of the Lahn with the Rhine, in the duchy of Nassau. It contains sulphate of soda, chloride of sodium, carbonate of soda, sulphate of lime, carbonate of lime, and sulphate of magnesia.

Dinoma'nia, (δινος, 'a whirl,' and μανια, 'mania,') Tarantismus.

Di'nus, (δινος,) Vertigo—d. Scotoma, Scotodynia—d. Vertigo, Vertigo.

Dio'bolon, (διωβολον, from di, and ωβολον,) Scruple.

Diodonceph'alus, (F.) Diodoncephale, (di, οδον, gen. οδοντος, 'a tooth,' and κεφαλη, 'head,') A monster with a double range of teeth, or a double jaw.

Di'odus, (διωδος, from dia, and οδος, 'a way,') Diexodus.

Dioce'sis, (διοικησις, from dia, and οικτω, 'I manage a house,') Dispensation.

Dio'cious, (di, and οικια, 'habitation,') Animals are so called, in which the reproductive elements are found in separate individuals, belonging to opposite sexes.

Dionco'sis, (διονκωσις, from dia, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') The Methodists applied this name to a sort of tumefaction or plethora, occurring either directly from too great a quantity of fluid circulating in the system, or owing to the retention of substances which ought to be excreted. It is the antithesis to symptosis. See Intumescence.

Dionysia'nus, (F.) Dionysien, (Διονυσος, 'Bacchus,' who is represented by the poets as wearing horns.) One who has long or hornlike excrescences.

Dionysis'cus, (same etymon.) One who has a long hornlike excrescence on the frontal region.

Diophthal'mus, (di, and οφθαλμος, 'an eye,') Binoculus.

Diop'tra, (διοπτρα, from dia, and οπτομαι, 'to see,') Speculum, see Dilator.

Dioptris'mus, (from dioptron,) see Dilatation.

Diop'tron, (διοπτρον,) Speculum, see Dilator.

Diortho'sis, (διορθωσις, from διορθωω, 'I make straight,') The reduction of a fractured or luxated limb.

Dioscore'a, (after Dioscorides,) see Yam.

Dioscore'a Villo'sa, Wild Yam'root, Col'ic Root; indigenous: Order, Dioscoriaceæ; flowering in July. A decoction of the root has been prescribed in bilious colic. It is said to be expectorant, diaphoretic, and, in large doses, emetic.

Dioscu'ri, (διοσκουροι, from Δις, gen. Διως, 'Jupiter,' and κουροι, 'boys,') Castor and Pollux,—so called from their twinlike resemblance. See Parotis.

Dios'ma, D. crenata.

Dios'ma CRENA'TA, (δως, 'divine,' and οσμη, 'odor,') Baros'ma crenata, Agathos'ma crenata. A South African plant, the powder of whose leaves—Buck'u Leaves, Dios'ma (Ph. U. S., 1842, Buck'u, 1851), Buck'u, Boc'choe, Boch'o, Boo'cho, Buck'ho, (F.) Diosmée crénelée, Ord. Rutaceæ— is used by the Hottentots to perfume their bodies. Buchu (Ph. U. S., 1873) is stated to be derived from Baros'ma crenata, and other species of Baros'ma. It has been employed in chronic affections of the bladder and urinary organs in general; and has also been given in cholera. It is often adulterated in commerce, by the substitution of less potent plants of the same family, as Dios'ma serratifolia, and Eupleurum serrulatum.

Buco, Buchu, is referred by the British Pharmacopœia (1867), to Baros'ma betulina, B. crenulata, and B. serratifolia.

Dios'ma SERRATIFOLIA, D. crenata.

Diosmée Crénelée, Dios'ma crenata.

Dios'pyros Lo'tus, (διωσπυρος, from δως, 'divine,' and πυρος, 'wheat,') Fa'ba Græ'ca, Indian Date Plum, (F.) Plaqueminier d'Europe. Ord. Ebenaceæ. This tree grows in some of the southern parts of Europe. Its fruit is very astringent, and has been recommended in dysentery and hemorrhage.

Dios'PYROS VIRGINIA'NA, Lo'tus Virginia'na, Persim'mon. A common tree in the middle parts of the United States. The fruit, Persim'mons, Yellow Plums, Win'ter Plums, Seed'ed Plums, which is only eatable after frost, (when it is tolerable,) is sometimes made into cakes with bran. These, being dried in an oven, are kept to make beer. When bruised in water, fermentation takes place. The unripe fruit, Dios'pyros (Ph. U. S.), is distressingly acerb and astringent. It has been used as an astringent. The bark of the tree is extremely bitter, and may be used where bitters are indicated.

Dio'ta, Dyo'ta, (διωτος, from di, and ωτος, gen. ωτος, 'ear,') Two-eared, two-handled. Applied to a wooden cup, lined with a composition of resin, cinnamon, cloves, and ginger, to give more flavor to beer. It was formerly much used in the north of Europe.

Di'phorus, Diphrus.

Di'phrus, Di'phorus, (διφρος, from di, and φρω, 'I carry,') Properly a seat for two. A close stool.

Di'PHRUS MAIEU'TICUS, (διφρος μαιευτικος,) Sel'la obstetric'ia. An obstetric chair.

Diph'ryges, (διφρυγες, from di, 'twice,' and φρυγω, 'I torrefy,') The oxide of copper, more or less pure. The ancients reckoned three kinds of diphryges, which they used as astringents.

Diphthe'ria, (διφθιρα, 'a skin or membrane,') Diphtheritis.

Diphthe'rial, Diphtheric.

Diphther'ic, Diphther'icus, Diphtherit'ic, Diphtherit'icus, Diphthe'rial, (F.) Diphthérique, Diphthéritique. Same etymon as Diphtheritis. Relating or appertaining to diphtheria.

Diphthérie, Diphtheria—d. Pharyngée, Pharyngitis, Diphtheritic.

Diphthérite, Diphtheritis—d. Buccale, Stomatitis pseudomembranous.

Diphtherit'ic, Diphtheric.

Diphtherit'is, gen. Diphtherit'idis, (from διφθιρα, 'a skin, or membrane,' and itis,) Diphthe'ria, Diphtherit'ic Inflammation or Phlegma'sia, Pellic'ular Inflammation, (F.) Diphthérite, Diphthéropathie, Diphthérie, Mal Egyptiaque. A name given by M. Bretonneau to a class of diseases, which are characterized by a tendency to the formation of false membranes; and which affect the dermoid tissue,—as the mucous membranes, and even the skin. Diphtheria has received the names pharyngeal, laryngeal, malignant, nasal, cutaneous, &c., according to the seat or nature of the affection. See Cynanche maligna, and Pharyngitis, diphtheritic.

DIPHThERIT'IS OF THE THROAT, Pharyngitis, diphtheritic—d. Trachealis, Cynanche trachealis.

Diphthéropathie, (διφθιρα, 'a skin or membrane,' and παθος, 'affection,') Diphtheritis.

Diplasias'mus, (διπλασιασμος, from διπλασιος, 'double,') Duplication.

Diplecoi'a, (diplo, and ακουη, 'hearing,') Double hearing.

Dip'lo, (διπλος, 'double,') in composition, double.

Diploceph'lia, (diplo, and κεφαλη, 'head,') A monstrosity characterized by the presence of two heads on the same body.

Dip'loë, (διπλοη, from διπλος, 'double,') Diplo'sis, Meditul'lum, Me'dium Calva'rie Discri'men. The areolar structure, which separates the two tables of the skull from each other. The ancients applied the term, also, to the proper coat of the uterus [?].

The Diploë has the same use as the cellular structure of the bones in general. See Cancelli.

Diploë'tic, Diploic.

Diplogen'esis, (diplo, and γενεσις, 'generation,') (F.) Diplogénese. An organic deviation, which consists in the duplication of parts,—monstrosity by duplication, Duplic'itas monstro'sa, constituting double monsters.

Diplo'ic, Diplo'icus, Diploë'tic, Diploë'ticus, (F.) Diploïque, Diploétique. Relating or appertaining to the diploë.

DIPLO'IC or DIPLOë'TIC VEINS, Venæ diplo'icæ seu diploë'ticæ. Veins in the flat cranial bones, the trunks and larger branches of which, veins of Breschet, run mostly separately in special arborescent larger canals—Breschet's bone canals, which terminate in the Emissoria Santorini.

Diplo'lepis Gal'læ Tincto'riæ, see Quercus infectoria.

Diplo'ma, gen. Diplo'matis, (διπλωμα, from διπλω, 'I fold double,') A letter or writing conferring some privilege: usually applied to the document, certifying that a person has obtained the title of Doctor. It was so called because formerly written on waxed tables, folded together. Diploma is also used in pharmacy for a vessel with double walls,—as a water-bath.

Diplo'pia, (diplo, and οπτομαι, 'I see,') Vi'sus Duplica'tus, Ditto'pia, Dittop'sia, Ambio'pia, Double Vis'ion, (F.) Bévue. An affection of the sight, in which two distinct sensations are produced by the same object, which consequently seems double. Sometimes more than two are seen; but still the disease is termed Diplo'pia and Suffu'sio Multiplicans. The affection arises from some derangement in the visual axes, in consequence of which the images are not impressed on corresponding parts of the retina of each eye. In homonymous or direct diplopia, the image to the right of the patient belongs to his right eye, the left image to his left eye. This occurs in convergent squint. Crossed double images, in which the image to the right belongs to the left eye, and vice versa, arise in divergent squint. At times, the diplopia affects one eye, or each eye when used alone, owing to some irregularity in the curvature, density, or position of the dioptric media. It is then called Unio'cular Diplopia, Monodiplo'pia.

The diplopia of both eyes has been termed Amphodiplo'pia, Amphoterodiplo'pia, and Amphamphoterodiplo'pia.

Diplo'sis, (διπλωσις,) Diploë, Duplication.

Diplosoma, gen. Diplosoma'tis, (diplo, and σωμα, 'body,') The Diplosoma crenatum is an imperfectly described entozoon, which has been passed from the urinary bladder. It varies in length from four to six or eight inches, and is thinnest in the middle, where it is bent at an acute angle upon itself, so that the two halves hang nearly parallel, and give to it an appearance as if two worms had been tied together by their heads. It has been confounded with the Spiro'p'tera hom'inia. See Parasites.

Diplosoma'tia, Diplosoma'ia. An organic deviation characterized by the presence of two complete bodies, united by one or more of their parts.

Dip'nous, (διπνος, from δι, and πνοη, 'breath,') Having two vent holes; Bispi'rus. An epithet applied to wounds which pass through a part, and admit the air at both ends.

Dippel's An'im'al Oil, Oleum animale Dippelii.

Dip'ping. A mode of using tobacco in the Southern States, which consists in applying snuff to the teeth and gums, by a kind of brush made of a stick or piece of hickory bark chewed at one end. This is moistened and 'dipped' into the snuff, which is thus conveyed into the mouth. The habit is said to lead to injurious consequences.

Diproso'pus, Iriod'ymus et Opod'ymus, Opod'id'ymus, (di, and προσωπον, 'countenance,') A monster having a double face.

DIPROSO'PUS DIÆDÆ'US, (di, and προσωπον, 'countenance;' and di, and αἰδεια, 'parts of generation,') A double monster, in which the duplication affects superiorly the face, and inferiorly the anterior pelvic region.

DIPROSO'PUS DIHYPOGAS'TRIUS, (di, and προσωπον, 'countenance;' and di, and ὑπογαστριον, 'the hypogastrium,') A double monster, in which the duplication affects superiorly the face and inferiorly the lower part of the body, four lower extremities being always present—Tetras'celus.

Dip'sa, (διψα,) Thirst.

Dip'sacus, (διψακος,) Diabetes.

DIP'SACUS FULLO'NUM, (from dipsa, said to be so called, owing to the leaves being so placed as to hold water,) Her'ba Car'dui Ven'eri's, Car'duus Ven'eri's, (F.) Cardère cultivé, Chardon à foulon, Chardon à bonnetier, has had similar properties with the next ascribed to it. Both have been also regarded as stomachic.

DIP'SACUS SYLVES'TRIS, Cult'ivated Tea'sel, (F.) Cardère. Ord. Dipsacæ. The roots of this European plant are diuretic and sudorific. The water, which collects at the base of the leaves, has been recommended as an eye-water.

Dipse'ticus, (διψητικός, from dipsa,) (F.) Dipse'tique. A remedy believed to be capable of exciting thirst. See Alternative.

Dipso'des, (διψωδης, dipsa, and odes,) Siti'ens, Siticulo'sus, (Old Eng.) Af'forst, (Prov.) Thrus'ty. Thirsty. Causing thirst.

Dipsoma'nia, (dipsa, and mania,) Really, 'thirst-mania.' Often, however, applied to habitual drunkenness and to delirium tremens. An insatiable desire for intoxicating liquors. Alcoholophil'ia.

Dipsop'athy, Dipsopathi'a, (dipsa, and παθος, 'affection,') A mode of treatment, which consists in abstaining from drinks.

Dipso'sis, (from dipsa,) Mor'bid thirst. The desire for drinking, excessive or impaired. A genus in the class Celiaca, order Enterica, of Good.

DIPSO'SIS A'VENS, Polydypsia—d. Expers, Adipsia.

Dip'terix (gen. Dipter'ygis) O'dora'ta, Coumaro'na odora'ta. The fruit of this large tree of Guiana is a pod, inclosing a single seed. The bean, Tonka bean, has a strong, agreeable, aromatic odor, and is used to flavor snuff.

Dipterocar'pus, (di, πτερον, 'wing,' and καρπος, 'fruit,') A genus of large trees, Nat. Ord. Dipteraceæ, natives of India, which yield a resinous oil, that has been employed, like copaiba, in gonorrhœa. The Gurjun or Gurgina or Garjina balsam or wood-oil is the product of Dipterocarpus turbinatus. The resinous secretion of D. triner'vis has been used as an excitant ingredient of salves to inveterate ulcers.

Dipy'gus, (di, and πυγη, 'nates,') A double monster, the duplication being confined to the posterior portion of the lower end of the trunk—the coccygeal region.

Dipyrenon, (διπύρνον, from di, and πύρνον, 'a kernel.') A specillum or probe with two buttons or kernels — one at each end.

Dipyrites, (διπύρις, 'twice baked,') Biscuit.

Dipyros, (διπύρος, from di, and πύρ, 'fire,') Biscuit.

Dir'ca Palus'tris, (after Διρκή, a fountain at Thebes, because it grows in moist places,) Leath'ericood, Swamp Leath'ericood, Moose'wood, Rope'bark, Bois de plomb, (Canada.) Ord. Thymeleaceae. An indigenous shrub, which grows in boggy woods and low wet places throughout the United States. It is analagous to mezereon in its action — six or eight grains of the fresh bark producing violent vomiting, preceded by a sense of heat in the stomach, often followed by purging. Applied to the skin, the bark vesicates.

Dir'ctor, Itinera'rium, (dirigere, directum, — di, and regere, 'to rule, — to direct,') A Conductor. A grooved sound for guiding a knife, in dividing any part, (F.) Sonde cannelée.

Dir'ctor Pe'nis, Ischiocavernosus.

Diribito'rium, (diribere, 'to separate,') Mediastinum.

Dir'ling, Tingling.

Dirt'eating, Chthonophagia, Geophagism.

Dirup'tio, (di, and rumpere, ruptum, 'to break,') Rhexis — d. Cordis, Cardiorrhexis.

Dis, as a prefix, see Di.

Disc, see Disk — d. Optic, see Optic nerve.

Discharge, (dis, and charge,) Ec'roë, Flux'us, Proflu'vium, (F.) Écoulement. In pathology, an increased discharge from any part, that naturally secretes a fluid.

Dischro'a, Dyschroëa.

Discolora'tion, see Decoloration.

Discret, Discrete.

Discrete, (discernere, discretum, — dis, and cernere, — 'to separate,') Discre'tus, Intertinc'tus, Sep'arated, (F.) Discret. This epithet is given to certain exanthemata, in which the spots or pustules are separated from each other. It is opposed to confluent.

Discre'ta Purga'tio. The purgation or expulsion of some particular matter.

Discreti'vus, Diagnostic.

Discreto'rium, Diaphragm.

Discri'men, 'separation, division.' A bandage, used in bleeding from the frontal vein; so called because, in passing along the sagittal suture, it divides the head into two equal parts.

DISCRI'MEN CALVA'RIÆ ME'DIUM, Diploë — d. Narium, Septum narium.

DISCRI'MEN NA'SI; a bandage, in the form of the letter X, intended to support the nose, in transverse wounds of the organ.

DISCRI'MEN THORA'CIS ET VEN'TRIS, Diaphragm.

Dis'cus, (δίσκος,) Disk, (F.) Disque. A quoit; a plate or platter, or anything resembling it in form.

DIS'CUS PROLIG'ERUS, Proligerous disc — d. Vitellinus, Proligerous disc.

Discuss'ifs, Discutients.

Discus'sio, (discutere, discussum, — dis, and quatere, 'to shake, — to shake apart,') Resolution.

Discussi'va, Discutients.

Discusso'ria, Discutients.

Discu'tients, Discutien'tia, Resolven'tia, Discussi'va, Discusso'ria, (F.) Discussifs, Résolutifs. Substances which possess the power of repelling or resolving tumors.

Disdi'aclasts, (dis, and diaclassis,) Sarcous elements.

Disease, old French désaise, (dis, and ease,) Mor'bus, No'sos, Nose'ma, Noseu'ma, Nu'sus, Path'os, Pathe'ma, Lu'es, Ma'lum, Pas'sio, Ægritu'do, Ægrotat'io, Vit'ium, Arrhos'tia, Arrhoste'ma, Val'etu'do adver'sa, Mal'ady, Complaint, Sick'ness, Distem'per, Distem'perature, Eg'ritude, Ail, Ail'ment, Ill'ness, (F.) Maladie. An opposite state to that of health, consisting in a change either in the position and structure of parts, or in the exercise of one or more of their functions, or in both.

By some, Disease is applied to structural change, while Disor'der is restricted to functional derangement.

The following table, essentially that of Dr. C. J. B. Williams, comprises, under the two heads, Diseased Nutrition and Altered Mechanism, the chief elements of structural disease, all of which are dependent on modified cell action:

DISEASED NUTRITION.	{	Increased — Hypertrophy, Diminished — Atrophy.
		{ Inflammation, Induration, Softening, Transformation and Degeneration.
		Perverted.....	{ Deposits
ALTERED MECHANISM.	{	Contraction, Dilatation, Obstruction, Compression, Displacement, Rupture, &c.	{ Cicatrices, False membranes, Cirrhosis, Fibrocarrilago, Gray tubercle, Atheroma.
		{ Growths	{ Nonmalignant..

DISEASE' OF AD'DISON, see Capsule, renal — d. Bad, Syphilis — d. Barking, Mal de Laira — d. of Blood, see Blood disease — d. Blue, Cyanopathy — d. of Bright, Kidney, Bright's disease of the — d. Cruveilhier's, Atrophy, progressive muscular — d. of Duchenne, Ataxie locomotrice progressive — d. English, Rachitis — d. Extrinsic, External disease — d. Family, see Hereditary — d. Feigned, Feigned disease — d. Foul, Syphilis — d. Fungoid, Encephaloid — d. Gastroenteric, Gastroenteritis — d. of Graves, see Exophthalmia — d. Grinders, 'Asthma, Diseas'ed, Sick.

Disfigura'tion, (dis, and figurare, figuratum, 'to form,') Deformation.

Disgorge'ment, (F.) Dégorgement, (dis, and gorge, 'the throat,') An opposite condition to that of Engorgement. The discharge or abstraction of a certain quantity of fluid, which had previously collected in a part; as Disorgement of bile. It also means vomiting.

Disgust', (dis, and gustare, 'to taste,') Cibi fastidium, Apositia, Asitia, Apocleisis, Abominatio, Siccha'sia, Horror Cibo'rum, Loathing. An aversion for food; (F.) Dégout. Disgust is not the same as Anorexia. The latter is only a want of appetite; the former consists in real repugnance for food.

Disinfectant, Disinfectans, (dis, and inficio, infectum,—in and facio,—'I infect,') (F.) Désinfectant. This term has been restricted by some to agents that are capable of neutralizing morbid effluvia; but the author includes under it, also, antiseptics or agents that are capable of removing any incipient or fully formed septic condition of the living body, or of any part of it.

DISINFECTANT OF EL'LERMAN, see Ferri chloridum—d. of James Young, see Manganese sulphate of—d. Ridgewood, see Powder, disinfecting, Ridgewood.

Disinfecting Liquid, Sir William Burnett's, see Burnett's disinfecting liquid—d. Liquid of Condy, see Condy's disinfecting fluid—d. Liquid of Darby, see Condy's disinfecting liquid—d. Liquid, Labarraque's, Liquor sodæ chlorinatæ—d. Liquid of Larnaudés, see Zinci sulphas—d. Liquid of Ledoyen, see Ledoyen's disinfecting liquid—d. Powder of Corné and Demeaux, see Corné and Demeaux, disinfecting powder of—d. Powder of McDougall, see McDougall, disinfecting powder of.

Disinfection, Disinfectio, (F.) Désinfection. The act of attempting to destroy miasmata, with which the air, the clothing, &c., may be infected. Various means have been proposed for this purpose. Those most commonly employed are: chlorine, sulphurous and chlorohydric acid gases, vapors of vinegar, nitrous acid, carbolic acid, and what is, perhaps, the most manageable of any, chlorinated lime, or any of the chlorides of the alkalies. It is more than questionable whether any chemical action occurs between these agents and the miasmata, whence results a compound which is harmless, or in other words, whether there is any agent that is capable of destroying morbid miasms. Disinfection also includes the action of antiseptics.

The following fumigations have been largely employed as disinfectants:

Chlorine or Oxymuriatic Fumigation, Solutio alexiteria Gaubiana, Fumigatio antiloinica Gaultii, Alexiterium chloricum, Fumigatio Guytonien'sis, is made by adding common salt, $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$, to black oxide of manganese, $\mathfrak{z}\text{j}$, sulphuric acid, $\mathfrak{z}\text{j}$, and water, $\mathfrak{f}\text{ij}$. This may be carried through an apartment, or be shut up in it.

Nitrous Fumigation, Alexiterium Nitricum, Fumigatio Smythiana, may be formed by placing nitrate of potassa, $\mathfrak{z}\text{iv}$, and sulphuric acid, $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$, in a saucer on hot sand.

Disjuncti Mor'bi, (dis, and ungere, junctum, 'to join,') Disjoined diseases. Fernelius has thus denominated diseases which occupy different organs, and are not produced by each other.

Disk, Disens—d. Blood, Globule of the blood—d. Bowman's, see Sarcous elements—d. Intervertebral, Intervertebral cartilage—d. Proliferous, see Proliferous disk.

Dislocatio, (dis, and locare, locatum, 'to place,') Dislocation, Luxation; see Ectopia—d. Lienis seu Splenis, Splenectopia.

Dislocatio, Luxation.

Dis'mal, Melancholy.

Disod'ious, (dis, and oëos, 'threshold,') Having a double opening.

Diso'matous, see Disomus.

Diso'mus, (F.) Disome, (di, and σωμα, 'body,')

A monster with two bodies. Such a monster is said to be diso'matous.

Disor'der, (from dis, and order,) see Disease.

Disor'dered, Sick.

Disorganiza'tion, Organo'rum destructio, (F.) Désorganisation. A complete morbid change in the structure of an organ, or even total destruction of its texture. In sphacelus and sloughy ulcers, we have examples of this change.

Dispensaire, Dispensary, Dispensatory.

Dispens'ary, Dispensa'rium, (dispendere,—dis, and pendere, pensum, 'to weigh, '—'to take from a weight or mass, 'to distribute,') The shop or place in which medicines are prepared. Also, an institution in which the poor are furnished with advice and necessary medicines, (F.) Dispensaire. This word is used by the French synonymously with Dispensatory.

Dispensa'tion, Dispensa'tio, Disce'sis, Epine'mesis. The composition and distribution of medicines according to prescription. In France, it is more commonly applied to the weighing, measuring, and arranging of the articles which have to enter into a formula, prior to combining them.

Dispensa'tor, Apothecary.

Dispens'atory, Dispensato'rium, Antidota'rium, Lib'rum Pharmaceut'icus, (F.) Dispensaire. A book which treats of the composition of medicines. A Dispensatory differs from a Pharmacopœia, in containing the physical and medical history of the various substances; while the Pharmacopœia is mainly restricted to the mode of preparing them. The Pharmacopœia too, is published under the authority of, and by the members of a college or association; while a Dispensatory contains the whole of the Pharmacopœia or Pharmacopœias, with additions by the author, under whose authority alone it usually appears. The Pharmacopœia, in other words, is officinal; the Dispensatory, generally, private. Formerly, the words were used indiscriminately. See Formulary, and Pharmacopœia.

Disper'sion, Er'ror of. Aberration of refrangibility.

Displa'ced, see Percolation.

Displace'ment, Percolation.

Disposit'ion, Disposit'io, (dis, and ponere, positum, 'to put or set,') A particular condition of the body, which renders it susceptible of altering, suddenly, to a state of health or disease;—of improving, or becoming changed for the worse. The disposition to phthisis pulmonalis is sometimes so strong, owing to original conformation, that the disease will make its appearance, notwithstanding every care. See Diathesis.

Disputa'tio, (dis, and putare, 'to reason,') Thesis.

Disque, Discus—d. Proligère, Proligerous Disk.

Disques Intervertebraux, Intervertebral cartilages—d. Sanguins, Globules of the blood.

Disrup'tio, (disrumpere,—dis, and rumpere,—'to break off,') A puncture, which interests deep-seated parts.

Dissect'ing An'eurism, see Aneurism.

Dissec'tio, Dissection—d. Tendinum, Tenotomy.

Dissec'tion, Dissec'tio, (dissecare,—dis, and secare, sectum, 'to cut, '—'to cut open,') Diac'opē, Sec'tio Anatom'ica, Prac'tical Anatomy, Necrot'omy. An operation, by which the different parts of the dead body are exposed, for the purpose of studying their arrangement and structure. Dissection has received various names, according to the organ concerned:—as Osteotomy, Syndesmotomy, Myotomy, Angiotomy, Neurotomy, Desmotomy, &c.

Dissec'tion or Dissect'ing Wound. A wound received in the dissection of dead bodies.

The term Autopsy wound has been applied to wounds received in the examination of bodies recently dead, and before putrefaction has set in, especially those who have died from pyæmia, malignant erysipelas, cancer, puerperal fever, &c.

Dissec'tor, Prosec'tor, Pro'tomus, (F.) Prosec'teur. A practical anatomist. One who prepares the parts for the anatomical lecture.

Dissepimen'tum Na'rium, (dissepio,—dis, and sepes, 'a fence,'—'I separate,') Septum narium—d. Thoracis, Mediastinum.

Dissep'tum, (dissepio, 'I separate,') Diaphragm.

Disserta'tio, (from dissertare, dissertatum,—dissere, dissertum,—'to discuss,' 'to treat of,') Thesis.

Disserta'tion, Inaug'ural, Thesis.

Dissiden'tia, (dis, and sedere, 'to sit,') Dias-tasis.

Dissip'ium, (dissepio, 'I separate,') Diaphragm.

Dissolu'tio, Dissolution, Solution—d. Sanguinis, Hæmateclisis—d. Ventriculi, Gastro-malacia.

Dissolu'tion, Dissolu'tio, Dial'ysis, (dissolvere,—dis, and solvere, solutum,—'to loosen,' 'to melt,') This word is in frequent use in the writings of the humorists. It is employed, particularly, in speaking of the blood,—to designate, not its entire decomposition or putrefaction, but a diminution in its consistence.

Dissolution, Solution.

Dissolvents, Dissolventia.

Dissolven'tia, Sol'vents, (F.) Dissolvents, Dialytiques. Medicines believed to be capable of dissolving swellings, concretions, &c. Discutients, Resolvents.

Dis'tad, (disto,—di, and sto,—'I stand apart,') Away from a centre. Towards the far extremity. In anatomy, used by Dr. Barclay, adverbially, to signify 'towards the distal aspect.'

Dis'tal As'pect. An aspect of a bone from the trunk, or towards the extremity.

Distan'tial Aberra'tion, see Aberration of sphericity.

Distem'per, (dis, and temperare, 'to proportion duly,') Disease.

DISTEM'PER LOUSE, Pediculus tabescentium.

Distemperan'tia, Dyscrasia.

Distem'perature, Disease.

Distem'pered, Sick.

Disten'sio, (distendere, distensum, 'to stretch,') Diatasis, Tension, Tetanus—d. Membrorum, Convulsion—d. Nervorum, Convulsion.

Distension de la Vésicule du Fiel, Turgescentia vesicæ felleæ.

Distichi'asis, Distich'ia, Districh'ia, Districhi'asis, Distæchia, Distæchi'asis, (διστρίασις, from dis, and στριχος, 'a row,') An increased number of eyelashes; some turned towards the eye, and irritating the organ; whilst others preserve their natural direction. See Entropion.

Distil'late, see Distillation.

Distilla'tion, Destilla'tio, Stalag'mus, (destillare,—de, and stillare,—'to drop, little by little,') Catastalag'mus. An operation, by which—by the aid of heat and in closed vessels—the volatile are separated from the fixed parts of bodies, with the view of collecting the former, when condensed in appropriate receivers. The product of distillation is the distill'ate, (G.) Destillat.

The ancients distinguished distillation per latum, per ascen'sum, and per descen'sum, according to the direction which the volatilized matters were made to take. In distillation per latum, the apparatus is so arranged that the vapor passes horizontally through a succession of spaces before reaching the receiver. Distillation per ascen'sum is the ordinary method by the still. In distillation per descensum, the fire is applied above and around the top of the apparatus; and it is so arranged that the vapor must pass downwards.

Fractional distilla'tion is when ingredients volatilized at different degrees of heat are separated from each other during the process. When dry organic matter is placed in an apparatus for distillation, and heat is applied until all volatile matter is driven out, the process is called dry or destructive distillation.

DISTILLA'TION, DESTRUC'TIVE, see Distillation—d. Dry, see Distillation—d. per Ascensum, see Distillation—d. per Descensum, see Distillation—d. per Latum, see Distillation.

Ditoc'ia, Ditoc'ia, (dis, and τοκος, 'birth,') Delivery of twins.

Distœ'chia, Distichiasis.

Distœchi'asis, (διστρίασις,) Distichiasis.

Dis'toma (gen. Distom'atis) Cras'sum, (di, and στρομα, 'mouth,') A small worm found in the small intestines. See Parasites, and Worms.

Dis'TOMA HÆMATOBI'UM, Distomum hæmatobium.

Dis'TOMA HEPAT'ICUM, Dis'tomum hepaticum, Fasciola hepatica seu humana seu lanceola'ta, Planaria latius'cula, Gourdworm, Fluke, Liver Fluke, (F.) Douve, D. du Foie. An obovate, flat worm, an inch in length, and nearly half an inch broad; sometimes found in the gall-bladder of man, whence it occasionally passes into the intestinal canal. It is one of the most common varieties of worms, infesting the livers of the sheep, goat, ox, stag, fallow-deer, horse, ass, hog, hare, &c., and is the cause of the Rot in sheep and cattle. The treatment is like that required for other worms.

Dis'TOMA seu Dis'TOMUM LANCEOLA'TUM, a different species, has been found in the biliary ducts of man, and of different phytivorous mammalia. See Parasites, and Worms.

Dis'TOMA HETEROPHY'ES. A small worm detected in the small intestines. See Parasites, and Worms.

Dis'TOMA OC'ULI HUMA'NI seu OPHTHALMO'BIUM, Dis'tomum oculi huma'ni. A parasite observed by Gescheidt in the eye of a child who had suffered from lenticular cataract.

Dis'tomum Hæmato'bium, Dis'toma hæmatobium, Bilhar'zia hæmato'bia, is common in Egypt; and, at the Cape of Good Hope, gives rise to an endemic disease, which consists in a disturbance of the uropoietic functions. Its favorite habitat is the portal veins and those of the bladder. The Bilhar'zia magna has also been described. See Parasites.

Dis'TOMUM HEPAT'ICUM, Distoma hepaticum—d. Lanceolatum, Distoma hepaticum—d. Ophthalmobium, Distoma oculi humani—d. Oculi humani, Distoma oculi humani.

Distor'tio, Distortion, Sprain, Strabismus—d. Oris, Canine laugh.

Distor'tion, Distor'sio, Intor'sio, (distorquere,—dis, and torquere, tortum,—'to wrest aside,') Diastr'em'ma, Dias'trophê, (F.) Distortion. Usually applied to the preternatural curvature of a bone; as distortion of the spine, limbs, &c. It signifies, also, a morbid state of the muscles of the eye, constituting squinting or strabismus. Distortions are said to be paralytic, spastic, or spasmodic, &c., according to their nature.

Distor'tor O'ris, Zygomaticus major.

Distributo'ria Lac'tea Thorac'ica, Thoracic duct.

Districh'ia, (dis, and στριξ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,') Distichiasis.

Districhi'asis, Distichiasis.

Dis'trix, gen. Dis'tricis, (dis, and στριξ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,') Trichio'sis dis'trix, Fissu'ra capillo'rum. Hairs of the scalp, weak, slender, and splitting at their extremities.

Ditoc'ia, Distocia.

Ditrachy'ceras, (di, τραχος, 'rough,' and κερας, 'horn,') A genus of intestinal worms. The Ditrachyo'eras ru'dis, Dic'eras ru'dis, (F.) Bicorne rude. This fancied entozoon was first observed in the evacuations of a female, by M. Sultzer, of Strasburg. It is of a fawn color, from 3 to 5 lines in length, with an oval head, flattened and terminating in a point posteriorly; contained in a membranous sac, and furnished, anteriorly, with a bifurcated, rugous horn. Laënnec considers it a vesicular worm or hydatid. According to Von Siebold, there is no such entozoon. The undigested seed of the mulberry, which had been eaten, was mistaken for it. See Parasites.

Dit'tander, Lepidium sativum.

Dit'tany, (see Dictamnus.) Cunila mariana—d. American, Cunila mariana—d. Bastard, Dictamnus albus—d. of Crete, Origanum dictamnus—d. Mountain, Cunila mariana.

Dittecoi'a, (ἄρρος, 'double,' and ἄκον, 'hearing.') Double hearing.

Ditto'pia, (ἄρρος, 'double,' and ὤψ, 'the eye.') Diplopia.

Dittop'sia, Diplopia.

Diuresiæsthe'sis, Diureticæsthe'sis, Uresisæsthe'sis, (διούρω, 'I pass the urine,' and αἰσθησις, 'feeling.') The desire or want to pass the urine.

Diure'sis, Di'uriam, (δια, and ούρω, 'I pass the urine,') (F.) Diurèse. An abundant excretion of urine.

Diure'tic, Diure'ticus, Ischuret'ic, Uret'icus, Urina'lis, (F.) Diurétique. A medicine which has the property of increasing the secretion of urine. Diuretics act by producing a discharge of the watery and other parts of the blood; and, by such discharge, indirectly promote absorption over the whole system. Hence, they are employed in dropsy. To this class belong squill, juniper, digitalis, &c. Some of them appear to affect the system of nutrition, by modifying the metamorphosis of tissue, and giving occasion to the separation of tissue materials from the blood by the kidneys. Hence they were called, by Dr. Golding Bird, re'nal al'teratives. To this class belong the alkalies, alkaline salts, &c.

DIURET'IC WINE, see Wine, diuretic.

Diure'tica, Arnica Montana.

Diure'ticoæsthe'sis, Diuresiæsthe'sis.

Di'urism, Diuresis.

Divarica'tio, (di, and varicare, 'to straddle.') Ectropion.

Diverso'rium Chy'li, Receptaculum chyli.

Divertic'ula (pl. of Diverticulum) Spirit'uum Anima'lium, see Ganglions.

Divertic'ulum, Devertic'ulum, (F.) Diverticule, (divertere, — di, and vertere, — 'to turn aside,') 'A turning.' A blind tube branching out of the course of a longer one. An organ which is capable of receiving an unusual quantity of blood, when the circulation is obstructed or modified elsewhere, is said to act as a diverticulum. Also, a malformation or diseased appearance of a part, in which it passes out of its regular course. It is sometimes applied to such a condition of the alimentary canal. Also, a hole to get out at. A by-passage. See Ectrope.

DIVERTIC'ULUM NUCK'II, Canal of Nuck—d. Pharyngis, Pharyngocele—d. Vateri, Plica longitudinalis Vateri.

Divi'ding, Div'idens, (dividere, divisum, — di or dis, and the Etruscan verb viduo, 'I part or portion,') (F.) Divisif. That which divides or separates.

DIVI'DING BAND'AGE, Fas'cia div'idens, (F.) Bandage divisif, is a bandage employed for the purpose of keeping parts separated from each other. It is used particularly to prevent improper union; as in cases of burns of the neck or other parts.

Divina'tio, (divino, divinatum, — from divus, 'divine,' — 'I foresee,' 'I divine,') Mantia.

Divisif, Dividing.

Divis'ion, Divis'io, Dis'resis. Same etymon as Dividing. The accidental separation of parts naturally united; in other words, a wound or solution of continuity. Most frequently, however, it means an operation, which consists in cutting certain parts, with the view of fulfilling some therapeutical indication.

Divul'sio, Dias'pasis, (divellere, — di, and vel-lere, vulsum, — 'to pull asunder,') A term used in Surgery to express the rupture or laceration of organs by external violence.

DIVUL'SIO URI'NÆ, Cloudiness of urine. See Enæorema.

Dix'on's Antibil'ious Pills, Pilulæ antibiliosæ.

Diy'lysis, (διωλυσις) Colatio.

Diy'lysmus, (διωλυσμος) Colatio.

Diz'ziness, Vertigo—d. Abdominal, Vertigo a stomacho læso.

Diz'zy, (Sax. ðiri, ðirig.) Vertiginous.

Djedam, (Arab.) See Lepra alphoides.

Doccione, Min'eral Wa'ters of. This spring is at Lucca, in Italy. It is a thermal saline.

Doch'mē, (δοχμή.) A measure of the Greeks, equal to about four fingers' breadth, Dactylo-doch'mē.

Docima'sia, (δοκιμασία.) Docimas'ticē, Docimasiolog'ia, (δοκιμαζω, 'I try or prove the quality of any thing,') The act of assaying.

DOCIMA'SIA MEDICAMENTO'RUM ET VENENO'RUM. The testing of medicines and poisons.

DOCIMA'SIA PULMO'NUM, D. Pulmonalis seu pulmonaris, Pneobiomanti'a, Pneobiomanti'a, Pneobiomanti'a, Lung proof, Respira'tion proof. Different proofs to which the organs of respiration of a new-born child are subjected, for the purpose of detecting whether it has or has not respired after birth; in other words, whether it was born alive or dead; — Pneusiobiogno'sis, Pneusiobios'copē. These consist, chiefly, 1. In testing the lungs with water, for the purpose of seeing whether they are specifically heavier or lighter than that fluid. This is called Docimasia Pulmo'num hydrostat'ica, or the Hydrostat'ic Test. If lighter, it would be some evidence that the foetus had respired: 2. In comparing the weight of the lungs with that of the whole body; the weight of lungs in which respiration has taken place being nearly twice as great. This is Docimasia Pulmo'num Stat'ica, or Plouquet's Stat'ic Test; but, according to Casper, is unworthy of attention; and, 3. By measuring the circumference of the thorax and lungs; and comparing their dimensions with those of an infant which has not respired. This is Daniel's Test. These tests, singly, afford only probable evidence: but when united, the deductions may be more conclusive.

Docimasiolog'ia, (docimasia, and λογος, 'a treatise,') Docimasia.

Dock, (Sax. doce.) Rumex — d. Bitter, Rumex obtusifolius — d. Bloody, Rumex sanguineus — d. Bloody-veined, Rumex sanguineus — d. Blunt-leaved, Rumex obtusifolius.

DOCK CRES'SES, Lapsana.

DOCK, CUR'LED, Rumex crispus — d. Sour, Rumex acetosus, R. crispus — d. Sour, boreal, Oxyria reniformis — d. Spatter, Nuphar advena — d. Water, Rumex hydrolapathum — d. Wild, sharp-pointed, Rumex acutus — d. Yellow, Rumex crispus.

Dock'en, (Sc. and Prov.) ('dock,') Rumex.

Dock'mackie, Viburnum acerifolium.

Doc'na Su'ra, Min'eral Wa'ters of. This spring is in the Krapach mountains. The water contains sulphate of soda, carbonate of soda, chloride of sodium, carbonate of lime, silica, and iron.

Docteur, Doctor, Physician.

Doc'tor, gen. Docto'ris, Med'icus, (doctus, 'learned;,' 'un homme qui devrait être docte,') (F.) Docteur. Frequently applied to any one who practises medicine; although properly confined to him who has received his degree of Doctor of Medicine. See Physician.

'To Doctor' is sometimes used, vulgarly, for 'to treat with drugs.'

Doc'tors' Stuff, see Medicament.

Doctri'na Gallia'na, ('doctrine of Gall,') Craniology—d. Soteria, Medicina.

Doctrine Homœo-organique, Homœopathy.

Doc'trine, Med'ical, Doctri'na Med'ica. The principles or positions of any medical sect or master. Medicine has been too full of doctrines. One of the first was that of Herodicus of Selivraea, who recommended gymnastic exercises in disease. The chief founders of doctrines have been Hippocrates, Serapion of Alexandria, Philinus of Cos, Herophilus, Asclepiades, Themison of Laodicea, Thessalus of Tralles, Soranus of Ephesus, Leonides of Alexandria, Athenæus of Attalia, Archigenes of Apamea, Agathinus of Sparta, Galenus, Paracelsus, John Baptist van Helmont, Sylvius de le Boe, Keill, Hamberger, Piteairne, H. Boerhaave, J. D. Stahl, Frederick Hoffmann, George Baglivi, Cullen, Darwin, John Brown, Beddoes, Girtanner, Reil, Rush, Rasori, and Broussais.

Doc'trine, Physiolog'ical, Broussaism.

Dod'der, Cuscuta glomerata—d. American, Cuscuta glomerata—d. of Thyme, Cuscuta epithymum.

Dodecadactyl'itis, gen. Dodecadactyl'itis, (dodecadactylon, and itis.) Duodenitis.

Dodecadac'tylon, (δωδεκα, 'twelve,' and δακτυλος, 'a finger,') Duodenum.

Dodecaphar'macum, (δωδεκα, 'twelve,' and φαρμακον, 'a medicine,') An ancient name given to all medicines which consisted of twelve ingredients. See Apostolorum unguentum.

Dodecath'eon, (δωδεκα, 'twelve,' and τεθνητες, 'I put;' or from θεος, a god, after the twelve Grecian gods.) An antidote, consisting of twelve simple substances.

DODECATH'EON, Sanícula—d. Plinii, Pinguicula vulgaris.

Dodonæ'a, (after R. Dodoens, of Leyden,) Myrica gale.

DODONÆ'A THUNBERGIA'NA. A shrub of the Nat. Ord. Sapindaceæ, which grows at the Cape of Good Hope. A decoction of the root is used as a gentle cathartic in fever.

Dod'rans, Spithama.

Dog'choak, Cynanche.

Dog'days, (F.) Jours Caniculaires. During these days, comprised between the 24th of July and the 23d of August, the temperature of the air in Europe is generally high and oppressive. They have received this name from the dogstar, —Canic'ula, Σικωρ, Sir'ius—a very brilliant star in the constellation of the great dog, which rises and sets, at this time, with the sun. It was formerly believed to be a period particularly unpropitious to health; that it was dangerous to purge during it; and other phantasies were indulged in regard to it.

Dog'grass, Triticum repens.

Dog'hip, see Rosa canina.

Dogmat'ic, (δογματικός, from δογμα, gen. dogma'tos, from δοκω, 'I think,') Dogmat'icus, (F.) Dogmatique. The name of an ancient medical sect; so called, because its members endeavored, by reasoning, to discover the essence of diseases and their occult causes; while the Empirics, their rivals, confined themselves strictly to experience; i. e., to the observation of facts. The union of the two modes of investigation makes the rational physician. These sectarians are likewise called Dogmatists, and their doctrine Dogmatism. The founders of the sect were Hippocrates, Thessalus, Draco, and Polybius; and the most celebrated of its supporters were Diocles of Carysta, Praxagoras of Cos, Chrysippus of Soli, Herophilus, and Erasistratus.

Dogs' Bane, Apocynum androsæmifolium—d.

Bane, bitter, Apocynum androsæmifolium—d.

Grass, Triticum repens—d. Stones, Orchis mascula.

Dog'star, Canicula.

Dog'tree, Cornus Florida.

Dog'wood, Cornus Florida—d. Blueberried, Cornus sericea—d. Female, Cornus sericea—d. Florida, Cornus Florida—d. Great flowered, Cornus Florida—d. Jamaica, Piscidia erythrina—d. Doigts Palmés, Dactylion.

Doit'tre (Sc.), see Dementia.

Doke, Contusion.

Dola'bra, (dolare, 'to hew,') Ascia, Doloire.

Dolic, Dolichos.

Dolichoceph'alæ (Gentes), (δολιχος, 'long,' and κεφαλη, 'head,') 'Longheads.' Nations of men whose cerebral lobes completely cover the cerebellum—as the Kelts, Germans, negroes, &c.—Retzius.

Dolichoceph'alia. Monstrosity, in which the head is abnormally long.

Dolicoceph'al'ic, Dolicoceph'al'icus. Having a long head.

Dol'ichos, (δολιχος, 'long,' as applied to the pods.) A genus of plants of the leguminous family, (F.) Dolic, Dolique. It includes a number of species, generally indigenous in India or America. The Dol'ichos Lablab, or Lablab, is found in Egypt. (Prospero Alpini.) Its fruit is eaten there, like the haricot with us. The Dolichos Sinen'sis is eaten in China, and is stored up as a provision for long voyages. The Dolichos Tuberosus, (F.) Pois Patate of Martinique, has tuberous roots of the size of both fists, and has the consistence and taste of the turnip. The Dolichos Bulbosus of the West Indies resembles the turnip;—and from the seeds of the Dolichos Soja, the Japanese prepare the well-known sauce Soy, which they term Sooja. The most important in medicine is the DOLICHOS PRURIENS, Dolichos, Stizolo'bium, Mucu'na pruriens, Negré'tia pruriens, Cow'hage, Cow'itch, Adsa'ria Pa'la, (F.) Pois à gratter. Order, Leguminosæ. The stiff hairs of the Dol'ichos Pods, called Dol'ichos Pu'bes, D. Prurientis pu'bes, Dol'ichi Se'tæ Legu'minum, Lam'go Sil'iquæ hirsu'tæ, Mucu'na (Ph. U. S.), are the parts used in medicine. They excite an intolerable, prurient sensation, when applied to the skin; but do not irritate the mucous membrane over which they pass, when administered internally. The Dolichos is a mechanical anthelmintic, and is useful in cases of ascarides lumbricoides, and oxyures vermiculares. Dose, gr. v. to x. of the pubes, in molasses.

Mucu'na pruri'ta, a distinct species, but possessing similar properties, grows in the East Indies.

Dolique, Dolichos.

Doloire (F.), As'cia, Dola'bra, 'a carpenter's axe,' (from dolare, 'to hew,') A Bandage en doloire is one in which the turns are so placed that each one covers two-thirds of that which is immediately beneath it. It has received the name Doloire from its representing the obliquity of the edge of the instrument whose name it bears. See Bandage.

Dol'or, gen. Dolo'ris, Pain—d. Ani, Proctalgia—d. Capitis, Cephalalgia—d. Cephalicus, Cephalalgia—d. Colicus, Colic—d. Crucians faciei, Neuralgia, facial—d. Dentium, Odontalgia—d. Dolo'res (pl. of Dolor) ad Par'tum, Pains, labor—d. Intestinorum, Colic—d. Parturientis, Pains, labor.

Dolo'res Osteoc'opi, (osteon, 'bone,' and κῶπω, 'I break.') A variety of syphilitic pains referred to the superficial bones, especially, and to the shoulders, elbows, &c.

Dolo'res Post Par'tum, Pains, after—d. Puerperarum, Pains, after—d. Rodentes, Pains, gnawing.

Dolorific, (dolor, 'pain,' and facere, 'to make.') Odynopoeitic.

Dolp (Sc.), (Icel. doef), Nates.

Dombey'a Excel'sa, (after Dombey, a French botanist,) Arauca'ria Dombey'i. A tree of Chili, which furnishes Dombeya turpentine; a glutinous, milky-looking fluid of a strong odor and taste.

Domes'tic, Domes'ticus, (domus, 'a house.') The term Domes'tic or Pop'ular Medicine has been given to treatises written for the purpose of enabling those who are not of the profession to treat diseases, which may occur in their families, without the necessity of calling in a physician. The term, likewise, signifies medicine, when thus practised. It is probable that such works have been attended with mischievous as well as advantageous results.

Domicil'ium. This term has been applied to the choroid coat of the eye.

Domina'rum Aqua, ('ladies' water.') A medicine described by Myrepsus, which he considered emmenagogue.

Dompte-venin, ('poison-tamer, alexipharmic.') Asclepias vincetoxicum.

Do'mus Leprosa'ria, ('a house for the leprous.') Ladrerie.

Don'do, Albino.

Done'sis, (δῶνσις), Agitation.

Door'weed, Polygonum.

Do'ra, (δῶρα), Cutis.

Doradil'la, Asplenium ceterach.

Dorcadizans, (δορκάδίζω, 'I leap like a roe'—δορκας.) Caprizans.

Do'rea, Hemeralops.

Dore'ma (gen. Dore'matis) Ammoni'acum, see Ammoniac, gum.

Dormita'tio, (dormitare, dormitatum, 'to be sleepy.') Somnolency.

Dormit'io, (dormire, 'to sleep,') Sleep—d. Lucumoriana, see Lucumorianus.

Doronic, Doronicum pardalianches—d. d'Allemagne, Arnica montana.

Doron'icum Ar'nica, Arnica montana—d. Cordatum, D. pardalianches—d. Germanicum, Arnica montana—d. Officinale, D. pardalianches—d. Oppositifolium, Arnica montana.

DORON'ICUM PARDALIAN'CHES, D. Roma'num seu Corda'tum seu Officina'lē, Ro'man Leop'ard's Bane, (F.) Doronic, Doronique, Mort aux Pan-thères. The root of this plant resembles Arnica montana in its properties.

DORON'ICUM PLANTAG'INIS FOLIO, Arnica montana—d. Romanum, D. pardalianches.

Dor'sad, see Dorsal aspect.

Dor'sal, Dorsa'lis, (from dorsum), Noti'e'sus, No'tal, Ter'gal. Relating or appertaining to the back of the body, or one of its parts, as the Dor- sal vertebrae, nerves, &c.; Dorsal artery of the tongue, penis, &c.; Dorsal region of the foot, hand, &c.; Dorsal Consumption, &c.

DOR'SAL AS'PECT. According to Dr. Barclay, an aspect towards the dorsum or backbone. Dor'sad is used by the same writer adverbially, to signify 'towards the dorsal aspect.'

Dorsal, Long, Longissimus dorsi.

Dorsa'lis, Dorsal.

DORSA' LIS HALLU' CIS (Arteria). The dorsal artery of the thumb; a branch of the dorsalis pedis.

DORSA' LIS LIN' GUÆ, see Lingual, and Artery.

DORSA' LIS PE' DIS (Arteria). The continuation of the anterior tibial artery, which passes forward from the bend of the ankle along the tibial side of the foot to the back part of the first interosseous space, where it divides into two branches.

DORSA' LIS PE' NIS (Nervus). The branch of the internal pudic nerve, which is distributed to the upper part of the male organ; and to the clitoris of the female.

Dorsch, see Oleum jecoris aselli.

Dorse, see Oleum jecoris aselli.

Dorso-costal, Serratus posticus superior—d. Lombo-costal, Serratus posticus inferior—d. Lombo-sacro-humeral, Latissimus dorsi—d. Susacromien, Trapezius—d. Trachelon-occipital, Complexus.

Order, Urticeæ, Sex. Syst. Tetandria Monogynia. A plant of South America, whose root, Contrayer'va, is aromatic, bitter, and astringent. It has been given as a tonic, stimulant, and sudorific. Dose, gr. xij. to ʒss.

DORSTE'NIA CORDIFO'LIA, D. Brasiliensis—d. Placentoides, D. Brasiliensis—d. Vitella, D. Brasiliensis.

Dor'sum, No'tus. The back. Metaph'renon, Ter'gum, (Prov.) Rig, (F.) Dos. The posterior part of the trunk, extending from the inferior and posterior region of the neck as far as the loins. The back of the foot, Dor'sum pe'dis, is the upper part of that organ, opposite the sole: the back of the hand, Dorsum man'us, the part opposed to the palm. In the same sense, we say Dorsum penis, Dorsum nasi, for the upper part of those organs.

DOR'SUM, Vertebral column—d. Ephippii, see Sella turcica—d. Man'us, Opisthenar.

Dos, Dorsum.

Dosage, (from dose), Posology.

Dose, Do'sis, (δosis, from δίδωμι, 'I give,') Præ'bium, (F.) Prise. The quantity of any substance, which ought to form part of a compound medicine, or ought to be exhibited singly, to produce a desired effect. Many circumstances influence the doses of medicine. Women require smaller doses, as a general principle, than men. Habit has a great effect, as well as climate, age, and idiosyncrasy: all these, and other circumstances, must be taken into account; and every general rule on the subject will be found to have numerous exceptions. Some of the mechanical physicians laid it down as a rule, that the doses of medicines must always be as the square of the constitution!—a matter not easy of calculation.

The following Tables will exhibit an approximation, but only an approximation, to the proper doses (according to age) of most substances.

TABLE OF DOSES ACCORDING TO AGE.

Age 24	Let the full dose be	1	1 drachm.
18	will require.....	2-3ds.	2 scruples.
14	half.	$\frac{1}{2}$ drachm.
7	1-3d.	1 scruple.
4	1-4th.	15 grains.
3	1-6th.	10 grains.
1	1-12th.	5 grains.

The table of doses, according to age, recommended by Dr. Thomas Young, differs in some respects from the above. It also, affords a general approximation. His rule is, that

For children, under twelve years of age, the doses of most medicines must be diminished in the proportion of the age to the age increased by twelve:

Thus, at two years, to 1-7th; i. e. $1-7\text{th} = \frac{2}{2+12}$

At twenty-one the full dose is given.

To dose, (F.) dóser, is to give medicine; and also to drug, or give to excess.

Do'ses, Bro'ken, (F.) Doses réfractées. When an agent is given in small portions it is said to be in broken doses, — refrac'tis do'sibus, (F.) à Doses réfractées.

Doser, see Dose.

Do'sia Pow'der, see Powder, dosia.

Dosiolog'ia, (dosis, and λογος, 'a discourse,') Posology.

Doub'ling Gap, Min'eral Wa'ters of. They are situated in Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, eight miles from Newville. They contain hydrosulphuric acid, carbonates of soda and magnesia, sulphates of soda and magnesia, and chloride of sodium. A chalybeate spring contains carbonate of iron, sulphate and carbonate of magnesia, and chloride of sodium.

Douce-amère, ('sweet bitter,') Solanum dulcamara.

Douche (F.), (modern Latin, ducia, (I.) dociare, 'to pour,') Cataclysmus, Douse. This term is applied to a column of fluid, of a determinate nature and temperature, let fall upon the body. The Del'uge. Pump'ing is a variety of the Douche.

In using this kind of bath, the fluid is directed upon the part on which we are desirous of acting. The douches descendantes are those in which the fluid falls from a height,—the douches ascendantes, those administered in diseases of the uterus,—the douches horizontales, where the fluid is impelled horizontally, &c. They may be cold or warm, according to circumstances. The apparatus consists of a reservoir of water having a pipe or plug, by means of which the water can be directed as the practitioner may desire. The Douche communicates a considerable and peculiar shock to the nervous system; and is one of the most successful means for taming the furious maniac. It is, also, useful in chronic rheumatism, stiff joints, &c. Nasal douches are applications of this form of treatment to the nasal passages.

Douches of air are occasionally used, as in cases of obstruction of the Eustachian tube by mucus. They are sent from an air-press—of which Deleau and Kramer have invented one each—through a catheter introduced through the nose into the tube.

Douche Écossaise, Douche, transition—d. Scotch, Douche, transition.

Douche, Transit'ion, Scotch douche, (F.) Douche Écossaise. A douche, which consists in the successive use of hot and cold water.

Drach'ion, Pugillus.

Drachm, Drach'ma, (δραχμη,) Dram, (F.) Gros. The ancient name of a piece of money, weighing the eighth part of an ounce. At the present day it is used for this weight.

Dra'co, (δρακων, gen. δρακοντος, 'a dragon,') in composition, a dragon or large serpent.

DRA'CO MITIGA'TUS, Hydrargyri submurias—d. Sylvestris, Achillea ptarmica.

Draconceph'alum Canarien'se, D. Moldav'icum, (draco, and κεφαλη, 'head,' from the shape of the corolla,) Melis'sa Tur'cica seu Canarien'sis, Cedronella triphy'lla, Alpi'ni Balsamum, Tur'key or Cana'ry Balsam, Balm of Gil'ead Tree, (F.) Mélisse de Moldavie. Ord. Labiatae. A Turkish and Siberian plant, which has an aromatic taste, joined with an agreeable flavor. It has been used as a tonic.

Draconthæ'ma, gen. Draconthæ'matis, (draco, and αἷμα, 'blood,') see Calamus rotang.

Dracontiasc, see Dracunculus.

Draconti'asis, see Dracunculus.

Dracont'ium, Dracunculus. See, also, Dracontium foetidum.

DRACONTIUM FÆTIDUM, (from draco,) Icto'des fætidus, Symplocar'pus fætidus, Po'thos fætida seu Puto'rii, A'rum America'num be'tæ fo'lio, Spa'thye'ma fætida, Skunk-cab'bage, Skunk'weed, Pole'catcollard, Cow'collard, Collard, Itch'weed, Stink'poke, Swampcab'bage, Pole'catweed, Hel'le-bore, El'le-bore, Irish cab'bage. Ord. Aroidæ or Aracæ. Sex. Syst., Tetrandria Monogynia. This indigenous plant, as some of its names import, is extremely fetid. The property on which its medical virtues are dependent, resides in a volatile principle, which is impaired by long keeping, especially in powder. Dose of the dried root, Dracontium (Ph. U. S.), ten to twenty grains. It resembles asafoetida and other fetid gums in its properties; in other words, belongs to the class of reputed antispasmodics.

Dracontium ANGUSTIPATHA, Symplocarpus, Angustipatha, Narrow-spath'ed Skunkcabbage, is possessed of similar properties.

Dracunculus, (dim. of draco), D. Gor'dius, Dracontium, Ve'na Medi'na Ar'abum, Ve'na seu Gor'dius Medinen'sis, Medinogor'dius, Vermiculus Capilla'ris, Fila'ria Medinen'sis seu Guineen'sis, Mal'is Dracon'culus seu Gor'dii, Helminthon'cus Medinen'sis, Mus'cular Hair'worm, Bi'chios, Bi'cho, Guin'ea Worm or Thread'worm, (F.) Dragon-neau, Ver de Guinée, Ver Filaire, V. de Médine, V. Outané, Veine ou Filaire de Médine, Fertit of the Ethiopians, Naru, Neeria, Neruah, and Narambu of the Hindoos, Rishte or Reshter in Bokhara. A genus of worms, frequently met with in Indian and African climes. They are characterized by a filiform body, and are smooth and nearly of equal thickness throughout. The Guinea worm, when small, insinuates itself through the cutaneous pores, and penetrates into the areolar membrane and between the muscles, especially between those of the lower limbs, where it occasions a tumor like a boil, — Guinea Worm Disease, — which subsequently suppurates, and the head of the worm appears and emerges gradually. The head must then be seized, and the worm be cautiously rolled round a small cylinder of linen or other substance. Care must be taken not to break it, as great pain and obstinate suppuration might be the consequence.

Considerable obscurity rests on this subject. Some even deny that the cases of Dracunculus, on record, are really those of worms.

The morbid phenomena induced by the dracunculus have been termed Dracontiasis, (F.) Dracontiasis. See Parasites.

DRACUNCULUS, Artemisia dracunculus — d. Polyphyllus, Arum dracunculus — d. Pratensis, Achillea ptarmica.

Dragées (F.), (corr. from τραγνυρα, 'sweetmeats,' [?].) Almonds or dried preserves, covered with white sugar; Su'garplums. Used in pharmacy for sugar-coated medicines.

Dragées de Keyser. A pharmaceutical preparation, formerly much celebrated in syphilis. It was composed of acetate of mercury, manna, starch, mucilage, and gum tragacanth.

Drag'ma, gen. Drag'matis, (drag'ma,) Pugillus.

Drag'mis, (drag'mis,) Pugillus.

Dragon (F.), Drag'on. Some authors have given this name to opaque spots on the cornea, and to cataract. Also, hypochondriasis (Mad. de Seigné).

DRAGON CLAW, SCA'LY, Pterospira andromeda — d. Green, Arum dracontium — d. Root, Arum triphyllum, Pterospira andromeda — d. Turnip, Arum triphyllum.

Dragon's Blood, see Calamus rotang.

Dragonneau, (dim. of dragon), Dracunculus.

Drain'age. The act of depriving parts gradually of their redundant humidity. In Surgery, it means the gradual drawing off of purulent fluids from deep-seated abscesses, by means of hollow sounds — drain'age tubes — tu'bing, the Drainage chirurgical of Chassaignac.

Drain'ing, (Sax. dræhnigean, or from (F.) trainer, 'to draw,') Dessica'tio, (F.) Dessèchement. The act of drawing off the water from marshes, for the purpose of destroying the unhealthy emanations which proceed from them. It is a well known fact, that from marshes arise certain emanations or miasmata, with the nature of which we are, however, totally unacquainted, but which are the fertile source of intermittents and other diseases. Draining the soil and converting it into arable land changes its character, and the malaria ceases to be given off. It has happened, however, that although in some such situations intermittents have been got rid of, consumptions have taken their place.

Draitsch Water, Godesberg, mineral waters of.

Drake'na, (after Sir Francis Drake,) Dorstenia contrayerva.

Dram, Drachm; also (Sc.) Melancholic.

Drap Fanon, see Fanon.

Drapeau (F.), (from drap, 'cloth,') Vezil'um. A bandage, used in wounds, &c., of the nose, to keep the dressings in situ. It is composed of a small triangular compress, having two openings at its inferior part, corresponding to those of the nostrils. It is fixed by means of a bandage, passing from its superior angle over the head, and another passing round the head, under the orbits, so as to join the first at the nape of the neck. Also, Pterygion.

Dras'tic, Dras'ticus, (δραστικός, from δραω, 'I am active,') Cenot'ic, (F.) Drastique. Active. An epithet given to purgatives, which operate powerfully; as elaterium, oil of croton, &c.

Draught, (past participle of Sax. dragan, 'to draw,') Haus'tus. A term also applied by nurses to the sudden rush of blood to the mammae, occasioned in the mother by the sight, or even thought, of her infant, and which occasions a greatly increased secretion of milk.

DRAUGHT, BLACK, see Infusum sennæ compositum.

Draw'ing, see Digestives.

Dregs, ([G.] Dreck, 'dirt,') Feculence, Sedimentæ.

Drench, (Sax. dræncean, 'to soak,') To give liquid physic by force. A liquid medicine, given by violence, is called 'a drench.'

Drepano'ides, (δρεπανοειδής, from δρεπανον, 'a falx or scythe,' and ειδής, 'resemblance,') Falciform.

Dress, Vestitus.

Dress'er, ([F.] dresser, 'to put right,') An hospital assistant, whose office it is to dress wounds, ulcers, &c. He corresponds in function to the Élève externe of the French hospitals.

Dress'ing, Cu'ra, Cura'tio, (F.) Pansement. The methodical application of any remedy or apparatus to a diseased part. Also, the remedy or apparatus itself. Simple dress'ing consists of the mildest applications, as simple cerate with exclusion of air from the affected part.

DRESS'ING, WA'TER, see Water dressing.

Driburg, Min'eral Wa'ters of. At the small town of Driburg, near Pyrmont, in Germany, there are nine springs, which are rich in saline ingredients, iron, and carbonic acid gas. Their action on the economy is like that of Pyrmont water. They contain chloride of sodium, sulphate of magnesia, sulphate of lime, carbonate of magnesia, carbonate of iron, chloride of calcium, and chloride of magnesium.

Drill Bone, Ex'ercise bone. A triangular piece of bone which arises in the left deltoid muscle from pressure of the musket. The Ri'ding bone, Ri'der's bone, in the adductor muscle of the thigh, is also produced from pressure in the saddle.

Drimypha'gia, (δριμυφαγία, from δριμύς, 'acid,' 'aromatic,' and φαγω, 'I eat,') An aromatic and exciting diet.

Drimys Winte'ri, (δριμύς, 'sharp, acid,') Wintera aromatica.

Drink, (Sax. dræncan), Po'ma, Po'tio, Po'tus,

Beerage, (F.) Boisson. Every liquid introduced into the alimentary canal for the purpose of repairing the loss of the fluid parts of the body. The necessity for its use is indicated by the sensation of thirst. Fluid, taken during a meal, aids in the digestion of the food. Some drinks are exciting and tonic, as the different varieties of beer, wine, and spirits which we use at table. In a therapeutical point of view, drinks are used to appease the thirst which prevails in febrile affections, or to act as diluents in those and other cases.

The ordinary drinks, according to their material composition, are:—1. Water, spring water, river water, well water, &c.—2. Juices and Infusions of Animal and Vegetable Substances, lemon juice, currant juice, whey, tea, coffee, mattee, &c.—3. Fermented Liquors, wines, ale, beer, cider, perry, &c.—4. Spirituuous Liquors, brandy, alcohol, ether, kirschwasser, rum, arack, gin, whiskey, ratafias, cordials, &c.

Dung, (Sax. ḍung.) Fimus — d. Cow's, Fimus vaccae — d. Goose, Fimus anseris — d. Stonehorse, Fimus equinus.

Dun'ga, Dengue.

Dunt (Sc.), (onomatopœia,) Palpitation.

Duode'nal, Duodena'lis, (F.) Duodēnal. Relating to or appertaining to the duodenum.

Duodeni'tis, gen. Duodeni'tidis, Dodecadactylit'is, (F.) Duodēnitis, (duodenum, and itis.) Inflammation of the duodenum, characterized by white tongue, bitter taste, anorexia, fulness and tenderness in the region of the duodenum, and often yellowness of skin, along with the ordinary signs of febrile irritation.

Duode'num, (duodeni, 'twelve,') Ventric'ulus Succenturia'tus, Ec'physis seu Appen'dix seu Process'us Ventr'uli, Portona'rrium, Dodecadactylon. The duodenum is the first part of the intestinal canal, commencing at the pyloric orifice of the stomach, and terminating in the jejunum. Its length was estimated, by the ancients, to be about twelve fingers' breadth. As it is only partially covered by the peritoneum, it is susceptible of considerable dilatation; hence its name Ventric'ulus succenturia'tus. In the duodenum, chy'li-fication takes place after the admixture of the biliary and pancreatic fluids with the chyme.

Duoster'nal. Bôclard thus names the second osseous portion of the sternum, which corresponds to the second intercostal space.

Duplica'tion, (duo, 'two,' and plicare, plicatum, 'to fold,') Duplica'tio, Duplic'itas, Diplasi'asmus, Diplo'sis, (F.) Duplicité. A species of malformation or monstrosity, characterized by the parts concerned being doubled. See Diplogenesis.

DUPLICATION OF THE Fœ'tus, Evolution, spontaneous.

Du'plicature, Duplicatu'ra, Reflec'tion. The folding or reflection of a membrane upon itself; as Duplicature or reflection of the pleura, peritoneum, &c.

Duplic'itas Monstro'sa, (duplex, gen. duplicis, 'double,') See Diplogenesis.

Duplicité, Duplication.

Dupon'dium. A weight of four drachms.

Dur, (from durus.) Hard.

Du'ra Ma'ter, ('hard mother,' called dura, because of its great resistance; and mater, because it was believed to give rise to every membrane of the body,) Cras'sa seu Du'ra me'ninx, Sclerome'ninx, Pachyme'ninx, Perime'ninx, Me'ninx exte'rior seu scler'a seu dermato'des seu pach'e'ia of Galen, Dura membra'na cer'ebrum am'biens, Cuticula'ris membra'na, (F.) Dure-mère, Dure-taye' (Paré), Méninge, Périméninge (Ch). It is a fibrous, semi-transparent membrane, of a pearly-white color, thick, and very resisting; lines the cavity of the cranium, and contains the spinal marrow; protects the brain and marrow; and, by its various expansions, — the falx cerebri, tentorium, &c., — supports the different parts of the cerebral mass. The largest artery of the dura mater is the A. meningea media.

Du'ra Ma'ter, LAT'ERAL PROC'ESSES OF THE, Tentorium — d. m. Testis, Albuginea.

Durande's Rem'edy for Gall Stones. This consisted of the two solvents, ether, \mathfrak{Zij} ., and oil of turpentine, \mathfrak{Zij} ., half a drachm of which mixture was to be given night and morning.

Dura'tion of Life, see Life — d. of Pregnancy, see Pregnancy.

Dure-mère, Dura mater.

Dure-taye, Dura mater.

Durée de la Vie, ('duration of life,') see Longevity.

Durété d'Oreille, ('hardness of ear,') Barye-coia — d. de l'Ouïe, Deafness.

Durillon, (from durus.) Callosity.

Dur'ra, Dur'ra, (in India,) Panicum Italicum.

Du'rus, Hard.

Dust'ing Bag. In pharmacy, a kind of sieve, which consists of a bag made of lawn or other like material, hung inside of a wide-mouthed bottle or tin canister, to the mouth of which it is secured. The powdered substance is put into the bag, and the mouth being closed with a cover, the apparatus is shaken, and the finer particles pass into the bottle or canister.

Dutch Liq'uid, see Olefant gas.

Dutch'man's Pipe, Aristolochia hirsuta.

Dutro'a, Datura stramonium.

Dwale, ([D.] dwalen, 'to wander,') was formerly used to express a lethargic condition. In Devonshire, England, 'to dwale,' means to mutter deliriously.

DWALE, COM'MON, Atropa belladonna.

Dwalm, (Sc.) see Sick, Syncope.

Dwarf, (Sax. ḍpeopg.) Nanus — d. Flag, Iris lacustris.

Dy'er's Broom, Genista tinctoria — d. Weed, Genista tinctoria, Reseda luteola.

Dynam'eter, Dynamometer.

Dynam'ic, Dynam'ical, Dynam'icus, (F.) Dynamique, (from dynamis.) In Mechanics, Dynam'ics investigates the powers whereby bodies are put in motion, and the laws connected therewith; in Biology, that which relates to the vital forces, to the organism in action, Vital Dynamics. The influences of agents on the organism, which are ascribable to neither mechanical nor chemical causes, are sometimes termed dynam'ic. In this sense, it is a favorite term with the homœopaths, who maintain that, by certain processes, called, in the aggregate, dynamiza'tion and potenti'zing, the dynamic powers of a medicine may be set free and developed — as by shaking the bottle in which the article is contained, or by mixing an unlimited number of unmedicated globules with one that is medicated, and shaking them together. In this way, the former become potentized.

DYNAM'IC DISEASES, see Organic.

Dynam'ics, Vi'tal, see Dynamic.

Dynam'icus, Dynamic.

Dynamiom'eter, Dynamometer.

Dy'namis, (ἰσχυρ'ος.) Faculty, Force, Power.

Dynamiza'tion, see Dynamic.

Dynam'ograph, (ἰσχυρ'ος and γραφ'ω, 'I write,')

An instrument devised to register, after the principle of the sphygmograph, the muscular power and tone of the individual.

Dynamom'eter, Dynamiom'eter, Myodynamiom'eter, Myodynamom'eter, (F.) Dynamomètre, (dynamis, and μετρον, 'measure,') An instrument, contrived by M. Regnier for measuring the comparative muscular strength of man and animals. It consists of a spring, which, when pressed upon, causes a needle to move upon a portion of a circle, furnished with a scale of kilogrammes and one of myriagrammes. To measure the strength of the hands, the two branches of the spring are firmly grasped, and brought as near together as the force can carry them. This effort makes the needle traverse, and indicates, on the scale of kilogrammes, the strength of the experimenter's hands. A man, 25 or 30 years of age, exerts a force commonly equal to 50 kilogrammes or 100 pounds.

The strength of the loins of a man, about 30 years of age, as indicated by this instrument, is usually about 30 myriagrammes, or 265 pounds, which shows the weight he is capable of raising.

From experiments made by Péron, in his voyage, on 12 individuals of Van Diemen's Land, 17 of New Holland, 56 of the Island of Timor, 17 Frenchmen belonging to the expedition, and 14 Englishmen in the colony of New South Wales, he found their comparative strength, indicated by the dynamometer, to be as follows:

NATIVES OF	STRENGTH.
	Of the arm.		Of the loins.
	Kilog.	lbs.	Myri.	lbs.
1. Van Diemen's Land.....	50.6	101.2
2. New Holland.....	50.8	101.6	10.2	208.08
3. Timor.....	58.7	117.4	11.6	238.64
4. France.....	69.2	138.4	15.2	310.08
5. England.....	71.4	142.4	15.2	332.52

DYNAMOMETER or DYNAMETER, MEDICINAL. An instrument devised by Dr. Paris for the purpose of showing the quantity of active matter contained in a given weight or measure of any official compound, with the dose of any preparation, which will be equivalent in strength to a given quantity of any other of the same class. The instrument is more ingenious than useful.

Dynamopathy, (dynamis, and πάθος, 'affection,') Homoeopathy.

Dyo'ta, Diota.

Dys, dys, as a prefix, 'difficult, faulty;' sometimes privative; mostly answering to the particles dis, in, mis, or un, in English.

Dysæmia, (dys, and αἷμα, 'blood,') A morbid condition of the blood.

Dysæsthesia, (δυσαισθησία,) Dysæsthesia, (dys, and αἰσθάνομαι, 'I feel,') Obscure, diminished, or even abolished sensation.

Dysæsthesia Auditória, Cophosis—d. Gustatoria, Ageusia—d. Interna, Amnesia—d. Olfactoria, Anosmia.

Dysæsthesia Visuālis, Paropsis. Sense of sight vitiated or lost.

Dysæsthesia, Dysæsthesia.

Dysanagogus, (δυσαναγωγός, from dys, and αγωγῶ, 'I bring up,') That which is expectorated with difficulty. An epithet given, by the Greek writers, to the sputa, when expectorated with difficulty on account of their viscosity.

Dysanarrhophæsis, Dysanarrhophæia, (dys, and ἀναρροήσις, 'absorption,') Diminished absorption from morbid causes.

Dys'aphé, Dysaph'ia, (dys, and ἄφη, 'feeling,') Morbid touch.

Dysapulotus, Dysapul'us, Dysapulotus, Dysapulotus, (dys, and ἀπολῶ, 'I heal,') Healing with difficulty.

Dysarthrit'is, gen. Dysarthrit'idis, (dys, and arthrit'is, 'gout,') Gout, irregular.

Dyscatrobro'sis, (dys, and καταβρωσις, 'the act of eating up,') Dysphagia.

Dyscatap'osis, (dys, and καταποσις, 'deglutition,') Dysphagia.

Dyscatapot'ia. This term is recommended by Dr. Mead as a substitute for hydrophobia, which means dread of liquids. The dread seems to be partly caused by the difficulty of deglutition.

Dysche'zia, (dys, and χεῖαν, 'to go to stool,') Difficult and painful defecation.

Dyschro'a, (δυσχρῶα, from dys, and χρῶα or χρῶα, 'color,') Dischro'a. Sickly and unhealthy color of the skin. Used, also, synonymously with the maculæ of Willan.

Dyschroma'sia, (dys, and χρῶμα, 'color,') see Decoloration.

Dyschromatop'sia, (dys, χρῶμα, 'color, and ὄψις, 'vision,') Achromatop'sia.

Dyschymosen, (dys, and χυμός, 'juice,') Chymoplasia.

Dyscine'sia, (F.) Dyscinésie, Dyskinésie, (δυσκίνησια, from dys, and κινῶ, 'I move,') Difficulty or utter incapability of moving. See Nevrose des Écrivains.

Dyscœ'lia, (dys, and καῖα, 'the abdomen,') Constipation.

Dyscœ'lius, (δυσκοιλίος,) Constipated.

Dyscopho'sis, (dys, and κοφῶ, 'I am deaf,') A defect in the sense of hearing.

Dysco'ria, Coremetamorpho'sis, (dys, and κορη, 'the pupil,') Irregularity of shape of the pupil.

Dyscra'sia, (δυσκρασία, from dys, and κράσις, 'temperament,') Intemperies, Distemperan'tia, Dys'crazy. A bad habit of body. See Dysthetica.

Dyscra'sia Potato'rum. 'Dyscrasia of drinkers.' The aggregate of cachectic phenomena exhibited by those who indulge in alcoholic liquors.

Dyscra'sia Saturni'na, Saturnismus—d. Serofulosa, Serofula—d. Tuberculosa, see Tubercle.

Dyscrasi'acum, Spanæmic.

Dys'crasy, Dyscrasia—d. Bilious, Cholosis, Icterus.

Dys'critos, (δυσκριτος, from dys, and κρισις, 'judgment,') That which it is difficult to judge of.

Dysda'ria, Dysdacryo'sis, (dys, and δακρυον, 'a tear,') A morbid condition of the tears.

Dysdacryo'sis, Dysdacria.

Dyseccris'ia, (dys, and εκκρίσις, 'excretion,') Difficult or defective excretion.

Dysecoi'a, (δυσήκοια, from dys, and ακοή, 'audition,') Baryecolia, Deafness.

Dysel'cia, (δυσέλκεια, and δυσέλκεια, from dys, and έλκος, 'an ulcer,') An ulcer difficult to heal.

Dysemes'ia, (dys, and εμεσις, 'vomiting,') Vomiturition.

Dysenter'ia, (δυσεντερία,) Dysentery—d. Biliosa, Colocholosis—d. Hæmatera, Dysentery—d. Hepatica, Hepaticorrhœa—d. Maligna, Enterocæce—d. Putrida, Enterocæce—d. Scorbutica, Enterocæce—d. Splenica, Melæna—d. Typhodes, Enterocæce.

Dysenter'io, (δυσεντερικός,) Dysenter'icus, Dysenter'us, (F.) Dysentérique, Dysentérique. Relating to dysentery.

Dysentérie, Dysentery.

Dysenter'ium, Dysentery.

Dysenteroner'via, (dys, εντερον, 'intestine, and νευρον, 'a nerve,') Colic—d. Saturnina, Colica mettallica.

Dys'entery, Dysenter'ia, D. hæmate'ra, Dysenter'ium, (dys, and εντερον, 'intestine,') Difficultas intestino'rum, Dissolutus mor'bus, Diarrhœa carno'sa, Colit'is, Colonit'is, Colorectit'is, Endocolit'is, Esocolit'is, Deflux'us dysenter'icus, Febris dysenter'ica, Flumen dysenter'icum, Fluxus dysenter'icus seu cruentus cum tenes'mo, Rheumatis'mus intestino'rum cum ul'cerē, Tor'mina, T. Cel'si, Blennenter'ia, Mor'bus dissolutus, Se'des cruentæ, Lu'es dysenter'ica, Blood'y Flux, Flux, (F.) Dysentérie, Dysentérie, Flux dysentérique, Flux de Sang. Inflammation of the mucous membrane of the large intestine; the chief symptoms of which are:—fever, more or less inflammatory, with frequent mucous or bloody evacuations; violent tormina and tenesmus. When the evacuations do not contain blood, it has been called Dysenter'ia al'ba or simple Dys'entery, Mycodysenter'ia. The seat of the disease is, generally, in the colon and rectum. It occurs, particularly, during the summer and autumnal months, and in hot climates more than in cold; frequently, also, in camps and prisons, in consequence of impure air and imperfect nourishment: and is often epidemic. Sporadic cases of dysentery are, generally, easily managed; but when the disease occurs epidemically, it often exhibits great malignancy.

Generally, it yields to mild laxatives, as castor oil, combined with diaphoretic narcotics, such as the puleis ipecacuanhæ compositus, and counter-irritants to the abdomen; but, at times, the inflammation runs on so speedily to ulceration, that, unless a new action be rapidly excited, death will be the consequence. In such cases, mercury must be rapidly introduced into the system, and narcotics may be combined with it.

The whole management in acute dysentery must, of course, be strictly antiphlogistic.

An epidemic dysentery prevailed in the 10th century, under the name Scitta.

Dys'entery, Bil'i'ous, Colocholosis.

Dysepulot'icus, (dys, επι, 'upon,' and ουλω, 'I heal,') Dysapulotus.

Dysepulo'tus, Dysapulotus.

Dysgalac'tia, Dysgalia.

Dysga'lia, Dysgalac'tia, (dys, and γαλα, gen. γαλακτος, 'milk,') An unhealthy condition or deprivation of the milk.

Dysgenne'sia, (dys, and γενεσις, 'generation,') Lesion of the generative organs or functions.

Dysgeus'ia, Disgeus'tia, (dys, and γευσις, 'taste,') A morbid condition of the sense of taste.

Dyshæ'mia, (dys, and αἷμα, 'blood,') A morbid condition of the blood.

Dyshæmorrhœ'a, (dys, αἷμα, 'blood,' and ῥέω, 'I flow,') Difficulty in the flow of blood,—according to some, of the hemorrhoidal flux. Also, symptoms occasioned by its diminution or suppression.

Dyshaph'ia, Dysaph'ia, (dys, and ἀφή, 'touch,') A morbid condition of the sense of touch.

Dyshi'dria, Dysi'dria, (dys, and ἰδρως, 'sweat,') A morbid state of the perspiration. See Dysidrosis.

Dysi'atos, (δυσιατος, dys, and ιαομαι, 'to heal,') Cura'tu diffic'ilis. Difficult to cure.

Dysid'ria, Dyshidria.

Dysidro'sis, (dys, and ἰδρως, 'sweat,') A disease characterized essentially by retention in the follicles of the skin of sweat rapidly and freely secreted, leading to distention and congestion of the follicles, dermatitis, &c. The condition is similar to that of the sebaceous follicles in acne.

Dyskinésie, Dyscinésie.

Dysla'lia, (dys, and λαλεῖν, 'to speak,') Balbuties, Bradylogia.

Dyslochi'a, Col'lica lochia'lis, Hyster'al'gia lochia'lis, (dys, and λοχος, 'relating to parturition,') Diminution or suppression of the lochial discharge.

Dysmase'sis, Dysmasse'sis, Bradymasse'sis, (dys, and μασσις, 'mastication,') Difficult or impeded mastication.

Dysme'nia, (dys, and μηνες, 'the menses,') Dysmenorrhœa.

Dysmenorrhœe, Dysmenorrhœa.

Dysmenorrhœ'a, (from dys, and menorrhœa,) Dysme'nia, Parame'nia diffic'ilis, Menorrhag'ia stillatit'ia, Men'strua diffic'ilia seu dolorosa, Amenorrhœa diffic'ilis seu partia'lis, Men'ses dolorifici, Menorrhœ'gia diffic'ilis, Menstrua'tio diffic'ilis seu dolorifica, Labo'rious, painful, or difficult Menstrua'tion, (F.) Dysménorrhée, Menstruation difficile, Règles difficiles, Strangurie menstruelle. Catamenia passed with great local pain, especially in the loins:—with sometimes a membranous discharge. Dysmenorrhœa is very difficult of removal, and prevents conception. In the married female, if she should be able to pass one period without pain, and subsequently become pregnant, the morbid action may be broken in upon by gestation, and a perfect cure be obtained. Change of air, soon after marriage, will sometimes give occasion to this desirable result. The affection generally depends upon erethism of the interior of the uterus, called into action at each catamenial period. It may also be of ovarian origin (see Dysootocia) or dependent upon obstruction of the Fallopian tube,—tubal dysmenorrhœa. The violence of the pain requires the liberal use of narcotics.

DYSMENORRHÆ'A, CONGES'TIVE, D. membranacea — d. Inflammatory, D. membranacea.

DYSMENORRHÆ'A, INTERMEN'STRUAL or INTERME'DIATE. A severe pain occurring between the menstrual periods, ceasing when the flow sets in, probably due to commencing ovulation-process in the ovaries affected by thickening of the indusium.

DYSMENORRHÆ'A MEMBRANA'CEA, Conges'tive or Inflam'matory Dysmenorrhœ'a. A disease whose pathognomic feature is the expulsion of a membrane resembling decidua, within a day or two of the advent of menstruation, or even during extra-menstrual periods.

DYSMENORRHÆ'A, NEURAL'GIC. A form of dysmenorrhœa chiefly met with in young, delicate women at puberty, or in those who have never borne children.

DYSMENORRHÆ'A, OVA'RIAN, Dysootocia — d. Tubal, see Dysmenorrhœa.

Dysmne'sia, (dys, and μνησις, 'memory,') Defective memory.

Dysmorphê, (dys, and μορφη, 'shape,') Deformation.

Dysmorph'ia, (δυσμορφη,) Deformation.

Dysmorpho'sis, Deformation.

Dysnêphronerie, (dys, νεφρος, 'kidney,' and νευρον, 'a nerve,') Nephralgia.

Dysod'es, (δυσωδης,) Fetid.

Dyso'dia, (δυσωδία, from dys, and οἶω, 'I smell,') Dysod'mia, Dysos'mia, Fæ'tor, (F.) Puanteur. Sauvages has given this generic name to all diseases, characterized by fetid emanations, from whatever part proceeding;—from the mouth, nasal fossæ, bronchia, stomach, axillæ, groins, &c. Also, a stench or stink, Pso'a.

Dysod'mia, (δυσωδμία,) Dysodia.

Dysodonti'asis, Dentit'io diffic'ilis, (dys, and οδοντιασις, 'dentition,') Difficult dentition.

Dysoneir'us, (dys, and ονειρος, 'a dream,') Insomnia, with restlessness.

Dysootoc'ia, Ova'rian Dysmenorrhœ'a, (dys, and ωοτοκτω, 'I lay eggs,') A term proposed by Dr. Barnes to designate difficult ovulation — Ovarian dysmenorrhœa—as distinct from difficulty in the secretion and excretion of the menstrual fluid, which is the duty of the uterus.

Dysop'ia, properly Dysop'sia, Dysora'sis, (dys, and οπτομαι, 'I see,') Difficulty of seeing; obscurity of vision.

DYSOPIA DISSITO'RUM, Myopia.

DYSOPIA LATERA'LIS, Parop'sis latera'lis, Skue-sight, Skewsight, Sight askew. Vision only accurate when the object is placed obliquely. This state is generally caused by some opacity of the cornea.

DYSOPIA LU'MINIS, Nyctalopia — d. Proximo-rum, Presbytia — d. Tenebrarum, Hemeralopia.

Dysop'sia, Dysopia.

Dysora'sis, (dys, and ορασις, 'vision,') Dysopia.

Dysorex'ia, Inappeten'tia, Appet'itus defic'iens, (dys, and ορεξις, 'appetite,') Diminution of appetite.

Dysos'mia, (δυσωσμία, from dys, and σμνη, 'smell,') Diminution of smell.

Dysosphre'sia, Dysosphre'sis, Dysosphra'sia, (dys, and σφρησις, 'the sense of smell,') A morbid state of the sense of smell.

Dysosto'sis, (dys, οστέον, 'a bone,' and οσις,) A faulty conformation or morbid condition of bone.

Dyspareu'nia, (δυσπαρευσις,—δυσ, and παρευσις, 'a bedfellow,') — 'unhappily bedded together.' A word suggested by Dr. Barnes to express the condition of difficult or painful performance of the sexual function, whether from congenital or acquired causes. See Dyssynodus.

Dyspathi'a, (δυσπαθία, from dys, and πάθος, 'an affection.') See Serious.

Dyspep'sia, (δυσπεψία, from dys, and πέπω, 'I concoct,') Lim'o'sis Dyspep'sia, Anorex'ia, Apep'sia, Brady'pep'sia, Gastroatax'ia, Diges'tio deprava'ta seu diffic'ilis seu le'sa, Gastro-ato'nia, Concoct'io tar'da, Stom'achi resolu'tio, Cru'ditas, Pas'sio stomach'ica, Dyspep'sy, Indiges'tion, Diff'iculty of Diges'tion, (F.) Dyspepsie. A state of the stomach, in which its functions are disturbed, without the presence of other diseases, or when, if other diseases be present, they are of but minor importance. The numerous forms of disorder of the digestive organs have occasionally been termed 'the indigestions.' The symptoms of dyspepsia are very various. Those affecting the stomach itself are—loss of appetite; nausea; pain in the epigastrium or hypochondrium; heartburn; sense of fulness, or weight in the stomach; acrid or fetid eructations; pyrosis, and sense of fluttering or sinking at the pit of the stomach. The sympathetic affections are of the most diversified character. Dyspepsia, being generally of a functional nature, is devoid of danger. When arising from disease of the stomach itself, it is, of course, more serious. Dyspepsia may be of duodenal origin, duode'nal or intes'tinal dyspepsia, and is generally accompanied with pain over that bowel some hours after food has been taken.

It is usually dependent on irregularity of living, either in the quantity or quality of the food taken; and the most successful treatment is, to put the patient on a diet easy of digestion; to combat the causes, where such are apparent; and, by proper remedies and regimen, to strengthen the system in every practicable manner. A great error exists in regarding it as always a disease of debility. It is often connected with an inflammatory or subinflammatory condition of the mucous lining of the stomach, and of course a very different plan of treatment is required in the two cases. Dyspepsia is often attended with too great a secretion of the gastric acids; but, on other occasions, they would appear to be too small in quantity, so as to constitute al'kaline or neu'tral indiges'tion.

DYSPEP'SIA CHLORO'SIS, Chlorosis—d. Hypochondriasis, Hypochondriasis—d. Pyrosis, Pyrosis.

DYSPEP'SIA, SALIVARY, (F.) Dyspepsie Salivaire. Dyspepsia connected with alterations in the quality or quantity of the salivary secretion.

Dyspepsiodyn'ia, (dyspepsia, and ὄδυνη, 'pain,') Cardialgia.

Dyspepsodyn'ia, Cardialgia.

Dyspep'sy, Dyspepsia.

Dyspep'tic, Dyspep'ticus, Dyspep'tus, Apep'tic, Apep'ticus. Having relation to dyspepsia, as 'dyspeptic bread.' One who suffers from dyspepsia.

Dyspep'ticus, Dyspeptic.

Dyspeptodyn'ia, (dys, πέπω, 'I concoct,' and ὄδυνη, 'pain,') Cardialgia.

Dyspep'tus, (δυσπεπτος,) Dyspeptic.

Dysperma'sia, Dyspermatis'mus, (dys, and σπέρμα, 'sperm,') Difficulty—sometimes incapacity—of voiding the sperm.

Dyspermatis'mus, (dys, and σπερματισμος, 'discharge of sperm,') Bradyspermatis'mus.

Dyspha'gia, Dyscatap'ro'sis, Dyscatap'osis, Degluti'tio diffic'ilis, D. le'sa, D. impedi'ta, (dys, and φαγω, 'I eat,') Difficulty of deglutition. Dysphagia is almost always symptomatic, either of inflammation or of other disease of the organs of deglutition, or of incomplete obstruction of the œsophagus, by some obstacle within it, or by a neighboring tumor. At times, it is produced by spasms or paralysis of the œsophagus. The prognosis and treatment vary according to the cause.

DYSPHA'GIA ATON'ICA, Pharyngoplegia—d. Callosa, D. constricta.

DYSPHA'GIA CONSTRICTA, D. Pharynge'a seu Œsophage'a seu Callo'sa, Strictu'ra Pharyng'is seu Œsoph'agi ve'ra seu Callo'sa, Stenochoria Œsoph'agi, Œsophagiare'tia, Œsophagostenoma, Œsophagostenosis, Læmostenosis. Stricture of the pharynx and œsophagus is an affection which may be the result of pharyngitis or œsophagitis; but more frequently of malignant disease in the parietes of the tube. The only remedy is the bougie.

DYSPHA'GIA GLOBO'SA, Angone—d. Hysterica, Angone—d. Inflammatoria, Cynanche tonsillaris—d. Linguosa, Paraglossa—d. Nervosa, Œsophagismus—d. Œsophagea, D. constricta—d. Paralytica, Œsophagoplegia, Pharyngoplegia—d. Pharyngea, D. constricta—d. Ranula, Ranula—d. Scirrhusa, Læmoscirrhus—d. Spasmodica, Œsophagismus—d. Spastica, Œsophagismus—d. Torpida, Pharyngoplegia—d. Uvulosa, Staphylœdema.

Dyspho'nia, Dys'phony, (δυσφωνία, from dys, and φωνη, 'the voice,') Difficulty of producing and articulating sounds; voice imperfect or depraved. Apho'nia (of some).

DYSPHO'NIA CLERICO'RUM, Clergymen's sore throat—d. Immodulata nasalis, Rhinophonia—d. Immodulata palatina, Asaphia.

Dysphor'ia, (δυσφορία, from dys, and φίρω, 'I bear,') Inquietu'do, Asta'sia. Dissatisfaction; restlessness; suffering; indisposition.

DYSPHOR'IA ANXI'ETAS, Anxiety—d. Nervosa, Fidgets—d. Simplex, Fidgets.

Dyspho'tia, (dys, and φως, gen. φωτος, 'light,') Myopia.

Dyspio'nia, (dys, and πικρον, 'fat,') A morbid condition of the adipous substance.

Ea'glestone, Ætites.

Ear, (Sax. eape,) Au'ris, Ous, Ac'oë, (Prov.)

Lug, (F.) Oreille. The organ of audition. It is composed of a series of more or less irregular cavities, in which the sonorous rays are successively received and reflected, until they agitate the nerves which are destined to convey the impression to the brain. The ear is contained partly in the substance of the temporal bone; and a part projects externally, behind the joint of the lower jaw. It may be divided into three portions;—the outer or exter'nal ear, formed by the auricle and meatus auditorius; the middle ear, comprising the cavity of the tympanum and its dependencies; and the inter'nal ear, comprehending the three semicircular canals, the cochlea and the vestibule; which, together, constitute the osseous labyrinth. Within the cavity of this labyrinth are contained membranes having nearly the shape of the vestibule and semicircular canals, but not extending into the cochlea. These membranes form the mem'branous lab'yrinth. Between the osseous and the membranous labyrinth is situated the liquor of Cotunnus, and within the membranous labyrinth is a fluid, termed, by De Blainville, vitrine auditive, from its supposed analogy to the vitreous humor of the eye. The form of the membranous vestibule is not an exact imitation of the osseous cavity, being composed of two distinct sacs, which open into each other,—the one termed the Sac'culus vestib'uli; the other, Sac'culus. Each sac contains in its interior a small mass of white calcareous matter resembling powdered chalk, which seems to be suspended in the fluid of the sacs by means of a number of nervous filaments proceeding from the auditory nerve. These are the otoconies and otolithes of Breschet.

The auditory nerve is distributed to the cavities of the internal ear.

EAR, ASY'LUM, Hæmatoma auris.

EAR COUGH. A cough excited by titillation of the external ear, by a reflected sensation from sympathy between the ear and the larynx, through a branch of the fifth pair of nerves.

Éclair, Astrape.

Éclair, Chelidonium majus — É. Petite, Ranunculus ficaria.

Eclamp'sia, (εκλαμψια, — ec, and λαμψω, 'I shine,' — 'brilliancy,') Flashes of light before the eyes. See Eclactisma. Convulsion, as the convulsions of children, Eclamp'sia infantum, Epilep'sia acuta infantum seu febrilis infantum seu puerilis, (F.) Convulsions des Enfans, Eclampsie, (probably from εκ, and λαμβάνω, λαμβάνω, 'I seize hold of,')

ECLAMP'SIA GRAVIDA'RUM ET PARTURIEN'TIUM, Puer'peral Convul'sions, (F.) Convulsions des femmes enceintes et en couche. Convulsions of pregnant and parturient women.

ECLAMP'SIA INFAN'TUM, see Eclampsia — e. Nutans, Convulsion, salaam — e. Typhodes, Raphania.

Eclampsie des Enfans, Eclampsia infantum.

Eclectic Physic'ians, Eclectic Med'ici, (εκλεκτικός, 'selecting,' from εκλεγω, — εκ, and λεγω, — 'I choose,') A sect of physicians, who professed to choose, from other sects, all the opinions which appeared to them best founded. Agathinus of Sparta, master of Archigenes of Apamæa, in Syria, was its reputed founder; and Archigenes and Aræteus were its greatest ornaments. The doctrine was called Eclectism, Eclectis'mus, Medici'na eclecticica, Eclectic medicine. Every judicious physician must be an eclectic.

The term Eclectic is, however, not unfrequently applied, in the United States, to one who 'chooses' to adopt exclusive views: — the so called Eclectic physicians generally belonging to the class of botanical physicians.

Eclect'ism, see Eclectic.

Eclect'us, (εκλεκτος,) Elig'ma, Elig'ma, Elig'is, Ecleg'ma, Lambiti'um, Linct'us, Linctua'rium, (εκλεχω, — ec, and λεχω, — 'I lick,') (F.) Looch. A medicine, of a thick, syrupy consistence, chiefly used to allay cough, and consisting of pectoral remedies. It was formerly sucked from the end of a liquorice stick, made into a kind of pencil; hence its name Linctus, from lingere, 'to lick.' Although the linctus is usually exhibited in thoracic affections, it may have tonic virtues combined with it.

Ecleg'ma, gen. Ecleg'matis, (εκλεγμα,) Eclectos — e. Album, Looch album — e. Gummoso-oleosum, Looch album.

Eclep'isis, (εκλεπισις, from ec, and λεπισ, 'a scale,') Desquamation, Exfoliation.

Eclepisitrep'anon, (eclepisis, and τρεπανον, 'a trepan,') Exfoliative trepan.

Elig'ma, gen. Elig'matis, Eclectos.

Eclim'ia, (εκλιμα, from ec, and λιμος, 'hunger,') Boulimia.

Eclip'sis, (εκλειψις, from ec, and λεπω, 'I leave,') Syncope.

Éclisse, Splint.

Éclotion, (ex, and claudere, to shut,) Hatch.

Ec'lyses, (pl. of Eclysis,) Adynamia.

Ec'lysis, Éxolu'tio, (εκλυσις, from εκλυω, 'I loosen,') Resolution, prostration of strength, faintness.

EC'LYSIS PNEUMOCARDI'ACA, Asphyxia.

Ecmyze'sis, (εκμυζησις, from ec, and μυζειν, 'to suck,') Exsuctio.

Ecno'a, (εκνοια, from ec, and νοος, 'mind,') Dementia.

École, (old [F.] Eschola, from Schola,) School — e. Organicenne, see Organicism.

Econ'omy, (οικονομια,) Econom'ia, (οικια, 'a house,' 'a family,' and νέμω, 'I rule,') By the term animal economy is understood, — the aggregate of the laws which govern the organism. The word economy is, also, used for the aggregate of parts which constitute man or animals.

Écorce, Cortex — É. Cariocostine, Canella alba — É. Eleuthérienne, see Croton cascarilla — É. de Saint Lucie, Cinchonæ Caribææ cortex — É. de Winter, see Wintera aromatica — É. Fausse de Winter, Canella alba.

Écorchure, (ex, and cortex,) Chafing, Excoriation.

Écoulement, (ex, and colare, 'to strain or flow,') Discharge, Gonorrhœa — É. Blanc, Leucorrhœa — É. de Sang par l'intestin, Hæmatœchezia.

Écouvillon, see Écouvillonnement.

Écouvillonnement (F.), (écouvillon, 'a kind of mop, the sponge of a gun.') A term used by the French therapeutists for the act of cleansing or applying remedies to a part by means of a mop or brush fixed to the end of a piece of whalebone. Such mop or brush is termed Écouvillon.

Ephlogosis, (εφλογωσις, from ec, and φλογω, 'I set on fire.') Inflammation.

Ecphlysis, (ec, and φλυω, 'I boil,') Vesicula — e. Eczema, Eczema — e. Herpes, Herpes — e. Herpes circinatus, Herpes circinatus — e. Herpes exedens, Herpes exedens — e. Herpes miliaris, Herpes phlyctenodes — e. Herpes zoster, Herpes zoster — e. Pompholyx, Pompholyx — e. Rhyphia, Rhyphia.

Ephractic, (εφρακτικός,) Deobstruent.

Ephrax'is, (εφραξω, 'I remove obstruction.') The action of ephractic or deobstruent remedies.

Ephron'ia, (ec, and φρην, 'the mind,') Insanity — e. Mania, Mania — e. Melancholia, Melancholia.

Ecphyas, gen. Ecphy'adis, (εφυας, from ec, and φω, 'I grow,') Appendix vermiformis cæci.

Ecphy'ma, gen. Ecphy'matis, (εφυμα, from ec, and φω, 'I grow,') Exerescence, Tumor — e. Callus, Callosity — e. Caruncula, Caruncle — e. Clavus, Corn — e. Œdematicum, Œdema, Phlegmatia dolens — e. Physconia, Physconia — e. Trichoma, Plica — e. Verruca, Verruca.

Ecphy'mata, pl. of Ecphy'ma, Rubeola.

Ecphyse'sis, Effla'tio, Effla'tus, (εφυσησις, from εφυσω, 'I breathe through,') Exsuffla'tio. A quick and forced expulsion of air from the lungs.

Ec'physis, (εφυσις, from ec, and φω, 'I grow,') Apophysis — e. Ventricle, Duodenum.

Ecpi'es'ma, gen. Ecpi'es'matis, (επιεσμα, from επιτιω, — ec, and πιω, — 'I compress,') Effrac'tu'ra, Impac'tion, Deces'sio. A fracture of the cranium, with depression of the fragments and compression of the brain.

Ecpi'es'mus, (επιεσμος,) Expres'sio. Celsus uses these words to signify the forcing of the eye from the orbital cavity, with apparent but not real augmentation of the organ. See Exophthalmia.

Eclipero'ma, gen. Eclipero'matis, (εκληρωμα, from ec, and πληρω, 'I fill,') A cushion, a pad. Hippocrates means, by this term, a small pad or ball of leather, or other substance intended to fill the hollow of the arm-pit; used probably in reducing luxations of the shoulder.

Ecplex'ia, (εκληξια, from εκλησσω, 'I stun,') Stupor.

Ecplex'is, (εκληξις,) Stupor.

Ecpneumato'sis, (ec, and πνευμα, 'air,') Expiration.

Ecpneus'is, (εκπνευσις,) Expiration.

Ecpnôê, (εκπνοη,) Expiration.

Ecpto'ma, gen. Ecpto'matis, Ecpto'sis, Exciden'tia, (εκπτωμα, from εκπιτω, — ec, and πιτω, — 'I fall out,') This word has been used in various senses:—1. Synonymously with luxation. 2. For the separation of gangrenous parts. 3. For the expulsion of the secundines. 4. For the prolapsus of the womb; and 5. For intestinal or omental hernia.

Ecpto'sis, (εκπτωσις,) Luxation.

Ecpye'tica, (ec, and πυκαζειν, 'to thicken,') Incrassantia.

Epye'ma, gen. Epye'matis, (επυμα, from ec, and πυον, 'pus,') Abscess, Suppuration, Empyema.

Epye'sis, (επυησις,) Abscess, Empyema, Pustule — e. Ecthyma, Ecthyma — e. Impetigo, Impetigo — e. Porrigo, Porrigo — e. Porrigo crustacea, Porrigo larvalis — e. Porrigo favosa, Porrigo favosa — e. Porrigo furfuracea, Porrigo furfurans — e. Porrigo galeata, Porrigo scutulata — e. Porrigo lupinosa, Porrigo lupinosa — e. Scabies, Psora.

Epyet'icus, (επυητικός,) Suppurative.

Écraseur (F.), ('a crusher, from écraser, 'to crush,') E. Linéaire, Histotriteur, Sarcotripteur, Ligature articulée, Sécateur par écrasement. A surgical instrument invented by M. Chassaignac, of Paris, which consists of a wire rope or steel chain, like that of a chain-saw devoid of teeth, attached at both ends to a steel mandril, which passes through a hollow steel cylinder. The tightening of the chain is made slowly and with great force, and in one modification of the instrument is effected by an endless screw with a lever handle, working on a nut clogged on its outer side, which plays on a thread cut on the mandril. The slow bruising it makes is rarely followed by hemorrhage, even in the case of hemorrhoids, and other vascular tumors. The operation with the Écraseur has been termed Écrasement ou Broiement linéaire, Sarcotripsie, Incision ou Amputation sèche, and Histotritie.

Écrevisse, ([G.] Krebs,) Crabs.

Ecrex'is, Ruptu'ra, (ερηξις, from ερηγνυμι, — ec, and ρηγνυμι, — 'to break,') Rupture, laceration.

Ecrhyth'mus, (ec, and ρυθμος, 'rhythm,') A term applied to the pulse, particularly when irregular.

Ecroë, (εκρη, from ec, and ρω, 'I flow,') Discharge.

Écrouelles, Scrofula — e. Mésentériques, Tabes mesenterica.

Ecr'ysis, (εκρυσις, from εκρω, 'I run from,') A discharge.

Ecsarco'ma, gen. Ecsarco'matis, (εσαρκωμα, from ec, and σαρξ, 'flesh,') A fleshy excrescence of various kinds. See Fungosity, and Sarcoma.

Ecses'ma, gen. Ecses'matis, Eczema.

Ec'stasis, (εξωστημι, — ec, and στημι, 'to place,') — 'I am beside myself,') An ec'stasy or trance, Ca'rus ec'stasis, Cat'ochus, Ec'stasis, Catalep'sia spir'ia, (F.) Hyperplexie, Extase. A state in which certain ideas so completely absorb the mind, that the external sensations are suspended, the voluntary movements arrested, and even the vital actions retarded. In catalepsy there is, in addition, complete suspension of the intellectual faculties. This last condition is in general described as trance. See, also, Luxation.

Ec'strophé, (εκστροφη,) Exstrophia.

Ecta'sia, Aneurism — e. Venarum, Varix.

Ectasie, Ectasis.

Ectasie Alvéolaire. Dilatation of the alveoli of the lung, the first stage of pulmonary emphysema.

Ectasie Ampullaire. A term proposed to express the condition implied in miliary aneurism. See Aneurism, miliary.

Ectasie Dissécante, see Aneurism.

Ec'tasis, Ec'tasy, (F.) Ectasie, (εκτασις, from ec, and τεινω, 'I stretch,') Extension, Expansion.

Ec'tasis I'ridis is the extension or expansion of the iris, which occasions diminution of the pupil.

Ec'tasy, Ectasis.

Ectex'is, (εκτηξις, from ec, and τηκειν, 'to melt,') Colliquation.

Ec'thetobrephotroph'eum, (εκθετος, 'placed out,') and brephotroph'eum,) Brephotroph'eum.

Ec'thetotroph'eum, (εκθετος, 'placed out,') and τροφειν, 'to nourish,') Brephotroph'eum.

Ecthl'm'ma, gen. Ecthl'm'matis, Exulcera'tio, (εκθλιμμα, from εκθλιβω, 'I express,') 'I bruise,') Attrition. Chafing, or excoriation, produced by external violence.

Ecthl'ip'sis, (εκθλιψις,) Expression.

Ec'thyma or Ecthy'ma, gen. Ecthy'matis, (εκθυμα, from εκθυω, 'I break out,') Ek'thyma, Ecp'ye'sis seu Phly'sis ecthyma, Phlyza'cia a'gria, Thyma, Scab'ies Ve'ra, Furun'culi aton'ici, Pap'ulous Scall, (F.) Dartre crustacée, D. fongueuse.

A cutaneous eruption, characterized by large, round pustules, always distinct and seated upon an indurated and highly inflamed base. In the course of a day or two the pustules generally break, and olive-brown incrustations are formed which adhere firmly to the skin. These separate in about a fortnight. The disease requires the antiphlogistic treatment. Under Ecthymata, Vogel has designated certain hard, unequal tumors which appear transitorily on the skin. See Efflorescence, Exanthem, and Pustule. Chronic ecthymata occur under several forms — E. infantile, E. lu'ridum, E. cachecticum.

ECTHYMA GANGRÆNOSUM, Rupia escharotica.

Ecthyserocye'sis, (ecto, ὑστῆρα, 'uterus,' and κύσις, 'pregnancy.') Pregnancy, extra-uterine.

Ectillot'icus, (ec, and τῆλειν, 'to pluck,') Depilatory.

Ectil'mus, Evulsion.

Ectme'sis, (εκμήσις, from ec, and τμήσις, from τεμνω, 'I cut,') Excision.

Ec'to, (εκτος, 'outside,') as a prefix, 'outside.'

Ec'toblast, (ecto, and βλαστος, 'a germ,') See Cytoblast, and Molecule.

Ectocar'dia, (εκτο, and καρδία, 'heart,') Dislocation or malposition of the heart. From the nature of the misplacement, it has been divided into E. cervicalis, E. pectoralis, and E. abdominalis. See Dextrocardia, Mesocardia, Cardiocele.

Ec'tomé, (εκτομή, from ec, and τομή, 'incision,') Castration, Ectope, Entaille, Excision.

Ectom'ia, Castration, Ectope.

Ectom'ias, (εκτομίας,) Castratus.

Ec'tomon, Helleborus niger.

Ec'tomos, (εκτομος,) Castratus.

Ectopa'gia, (Ec'topagie, (ecto, and πηνυμι, 'to put together,') A genus of double monsters, having a common umbilicus, comprising those which are united laterally throughout the whole extent of the thorax.

Ectopar'asites, (ecto, and parasite,) Epizoa.

Ec'tophyte, Ectophyton, (ecto, and φυτον, 'a vegetable,') A vegetable parasite, which grows on the surface of the body.

Ectop'ia, Ectop'isis, Ectopism'us, Entoce'lē, Sit'us alie'nus seu perver'sus seu muta'tus, Anomotopie of Piorry, (ec, and τοπος, 'out of place,') Morbid displacement of parts. See Luxation.

ECTOP'IA A'NI, Proctoceles — e. Cerebri, Encephalocoele.

ECTOP'IA COR'DIS, Cardianastrophē. Displacement, dislocation, or unnatural position of the heart. See Cardiocele.

ECTOP'IA HERNIO'SA, Hernia — e. Intestinorum, Enterocoele.

ECTOP'IA LEN'TIS. Dislocation of the crystalline lens, which may take place into the vitreous humor, the anterior chamber, or under the conjunctiva.

ECTOP'IA PULMO'NUM, Pneumocoele — e. Splenis, Splenectopia — e. Vesicæ, Exstrophia of the bladder.

Ectopocyst'icus, (εκτοπος, 'out of place,' and κύστις, 'bladder,') A disease dependent upon displacement of the bladder.

Ectoprot'ic, (improperly for) Eccoprotic.

Ectozo'a, (sing. Ectozo'on,) Extozo'a, Extozoa'ria, (Ec'tozoa'ries, (ecto, and ζωον, 'an animal,') Parasitic animals that infest the exterior of the body, Dermatozo'a, as lice — a term which, like Helmin'thia errat'ica, Pseudohelmin'thes, Pseudelmin'thes, and Pseudopar'asites, is applied, also, to worms or larvae of insects that have been introduced into the intestinal canal by accident. Animalcules, most frequently swallowed, are the hairworm, leech, grub of the fly, caddy insect — Phalæ'na pinguina'lis; the larve of the bee, the spider, the triton palus'tris, lacer'ta aquat'ica, &c. In animals, bots are produced by swallowing the ova of the æstrus, or gad-fly. See Helmin'thia erratica.

Ectrim'ma, gen. Ectrim'matis, (εκτρίμμα, from εκτρίβω, — ec, and τρίβω, — 'I rub off,') Ulceration of the skin; and particularly that which arises from the pressure of the bed on different parts of the body, after a protracted confinement.

Ectrodactyl'ia, (εκτροσῖς, 'abortion,' and ἑκ-τύλος, 'a finger,') A malformation, in which one or more fingers or toes are wanting.

Ectrog'eny, Ectrogen'ia, Ectrogen'esis, (εκτρο-σῖς, 'abortion,' and γενεῖς, 'generation,') Monstrosity by defect.

Ectro'ma, gen. Ectro'matis, (εκτρώμα,) Abortion.

Ectro'meles, (εκτροσῖς, 'abortion,' and μελος, 'a limb,') A genus of monsters, in which the limbs are nearly or altogether deficient, as in the ordinary cetacea.

Ec'tropé, Divertic'ulum, (εκτρέπω, — from ec, and τρέπω, — 'I turn off,') 'I divert,') Any duct by which peccant or morbid matter was supposed to be drawn off.

Ectrop'ion, Ectrop'ium, Ever'sio pal'pebræ, Blepharopto'sis Ectrop'ium, Blepharoto'sis, Pal'pebræ infe'rior extro'sum flex'a, Divarica'tio seu Reflex'io seu Reclina'tio palpebra'rum, (F.) Éraille-ment des Paupières, Renversement des Paupières. Eversion of the eyelids, so that they do not completely cover the globe of the eye. It happens more commonly to the lower than to the upper eyelid. It may be owing to the retraction of the skin, after the cure of an ulcer, wound, or burn of the eyelid, or it may depend on tumefaction or relaxation of the conjunctiva. In the majority of cases, removal of a portion of the conjunctiva will effect a cure; but there are many which defy the efforts of art. The ancients called Ectropion of the upper eyelid lagophthal'mia.

ECTROP'ION OF THE OS U'TERI. A condition characterized by a projection of the swollen and granulated mucous membrane from the gaping os uteri, particularly when a large speculum is introduced.

ECTROP'ION VESI'CÆ, Exstrophia of the bladder.

Ectro'sis, (εκτροσῖς,) Abortion.

Ectros'mus, (εκτροσμος,) Abortion.

Ectrot'ic, (from ectroma, — ec, and τετρωσκω, 'I wound,') 'abortion,') Ectrot'icus, Abort'ive. An epithet applied to methods for preventing the development or causing the abortion of any disease — as of chancre by the use of caustic; small-pox pustules by the use of mercurial ointment; fevers, &c.

Ectylot'icus, (ec, and τύλος, 'a protuberance,') Catheretic.

Ectympano'sis, (εκτυμpanωσις,) Tympanites.

Écumeux, (same root as scum,) Frothy.

Écussons, (from ecu, old (F.) escu, (L.) scutum, 'a shield,') 'Escutcheons or shields.' Plasters spread upon the skin; or small bags — sachets — of the shape of escutcheons, filled with odorous powders, which are applied on the skin. See Sachets.

Ec'zem Fluidum, see Eczema.

Ec'zema, gen. Eczem'atis, (αἰζίμα, from αἰζω, — ec, and ζω, — 'I boil out,') 'I effervesce,') Ec'zema Sim'plex seu Sola're, Ek'zema, Eczes'ma, Eczes'ma, Pus'tula ar'dens, Cytis'ma seu Ec'phlysis Ec'zema, Scab'ies hu'mida, Her'pes squamo'sus mad'idans, Hu'mid Scall or Tet'ter, Moist Tet'ter, Run'ning Scall, (F.) Dartre squammeuse humide, D. vive, Gale épidémique. Heat eruption. An eruption of small vesicles on various parts of the skin, usually set close or crowded together, with little or no inflammation around their bases, and unattended by fever. The fluid of Eczema, Hebra calls Ec'zem flui'dum. To Eczema of the legs the term Flux'us sali'nus has occasionally been given, on account of the copious secretion from it.

EC'ZEMA CAP'ITIS, E. of the hairy scalp.

EC'ZEMA OF THE FACE, at an advanced stage, and occurring in young children, has been described under the names Crusta lactea and Por-rigo larvalis.

Eczema Fendillé, E. fissum.

ECZEMA FIS'SUM, (F.) E. Fendillé. Chronic eczema, with a raw, red, exuding, and cracked surface.

ECZEMA OF THE HAIR'Y SCALP, Ec'zema cap'i-tis, Vesic'ular scalp, is often confounded with other affections, under the names Por-rigo and Tinea, which are pustular, not vesicular, in their form. It occurs during dentition, and even after-wards, and the discharge is so profuse, that the head appears as if dipped in some glutinous liquid. By and by the secretion dries into crusts, and mats the hair into little separate tufts. The scalp gives evidence of inflammatory excitement, and the lymphatic ganglions of the neck are apt to become inflamed and suppurate.

A variety of humid scalled head, in which the humor from the excoriated surface runs down upon the hairs, and encloses them in little silvery pellicles or sheaths, has received the name As-bes'tos Scall.

ECZEMA ICHORO'SUM. Chronic eczema at-tended with a free and irritating discharge.

ECZEMA IMPETIGINO'DES seu IMPETIGINOÏ'DES, Gall, Gro'cers' or Brick'layers' Itch. Produced by the irritation of sugar or lime.

ECZEMA INFANTI'LĒ, Por-rigo larvalis.

ECZEMA MARGINA'TUM. An eruption at the inner part of the thigh; but different diseases—as intertrigo, superficial ringworm, lepra vulgaris, &c.—are probably included under it.

ECZEMA MERCURIA'LĒ, E. ru'brum, Erythe'ma mercuria'lĒ seu ichoro'sum, Hydrargyr'ia, Hydrar-gyro'sis, Hydrargyri'asis, Lepra seu Mor'bus mer-curia'lis, Mercu'rial le'pra or rash. A variety of eczema, arising from the irritation of mercury. The treatment is chiefly palliative, consisting in ablu-tion with mucilaginous infusions or decoec-tions; mild dressings, where the cuticle has ex-foliated; avoiding all irritation; keeping the bowels open; with the use of sulphuric acid and cinchona. An inflammatory form of ec-zema not dependent on the administration of mercury, has also received the name Ec'zema ru'brum.

ECZEMA RU'BRUM, Eczema mercuriale—e. Simplex, Eczema—e. Solare, Eczema.

ECZEMA SQUAMO'SUM. Chronic eczema accom-panied with continuous scalliness or even crusti-ness.

Eczemato'ses, (G.) Eczematosen. A family of diseases, in the classification of Fuchs, including morbid conditions of the cutaneous se-cretions—as of the perspiration, sebaceous and coloring matters, &c., and hence many chronic cu-taneous affections. His subdivisions are, ephi-dro'ses, smegmorrhœ'a, acar'pæ, polycar'pæ, and monocar'pæ.

ECZEM'ATOUS, Eczemato'sus, (F.) Eczémateux. Relating or appertaining to eczema.

ECZESIS, (αἴσις,) Efferescence.

ECZES'MA, gen. Ec'zes'matis, (αἴσιμα,) Eczema, Lichen tropicus.

Ed'does, see Arum esculentum.

Edem'atous, Edematous.

Edenta'tus, Edentulus.

Eden'tuli, Nefrendes.

Eden'tulous, Eden'tated, Eden'tulus, Edenta'tus, (e, and dens, gen. dentis, 'a tooth,') An'o-dus, Ca'rens den'tibus, No'des, No'dus, (F.) Édenté. One without teeth. This defect can only be reme-died by artificial means. See Nefrendes.

Ed'era, Hedera helix.

Ed'ible, (from edere, 'to eat,' and habilis, 'able,') Esculent.

Edocéphale, (αἰδνα, 'the sexual organs,' and κεφαλή, 'head,') A monster, which has the two ears near each other, or united under the head, the jaws atrophied; no mouth; and above the eye a tube (trompe) resembling a penis.

Edrop'pit (Sc.), Hydropic.

Educa'tio Infan'tum, 'bringing up of chil-dren,') Pædia.

Edulecora'tion, Glycan'sis, Edulecora'tio, (e, and dulcis, 'sweet,') An operation, the object of which is to deprive a substance of its acrid and disagreeable taste, or at least to disguise it. Also, the addition of a saccharine substance to a medi-cine, whose taste it is desirable to modify agreeably.

Édule, (edere, 'to eat,') Comestible.

Edu'lis, Comestible.

Ee (Sc. and Prov.), Eye.

Eel'grass, Pila marina.

Ees'kin (Sc.), Singultus.

Ee'winker (Sc.), Palpebra.

Ef, as a prefix, like e, and ex.

Efferent, Ef'ferens, De'vehens, Centrifugal, Exod'ic, (effero,—e, and fero,—'I carry,' 'I transport,') Conveying outwards, as from the centre to the periphery.

Va'sa efferen'tia are those lymphatic or chyli-ferous vessels which issue from the glands to convey their lymph to the thoracic duct; so called to dis-tinguish them from those which pass to those glands, and which have been termed vasa afferen'tia seu infe'rentia. Also, nerves that convey the nervous influence from the nervous centres to the circumference. See Afferent.

At the upper extremity of the mediastinum testis, the ducts of the rete testis terminate in from 9 to 30 small ducts, called va'sa efferen'tia seu excreto'ria seu Graafia'na, (F.) Vaisseaux ef-férents, which form the Co'ni vasculo'si.

Efferves'cence, Effervescen'tia, Ze'sis, Ec'zesis, (efferescere,—ef, and fervescere,—'to grow hot,') That agitation which is produced by the escape of gas through a liquid, independently of the heat of the mixture; such, for instance, as re-sults from the mixture of acetic acid and carbon-ate of potassa.

In Pathology it has a similar signification. It expresses, in the language of the humorists, a sort of ebullition in the fluids of the living body, produced either by elevation of temperature or by the reaction on each other of the principles contained in the fluids in circulation.

Efferves'cing Ape'rient, Tarrant's, see Seltz.

Effe'tus, (ef, and fetus or fatus, 'producing,') Impoverished.

Effic'a'cious, Ef'ficax, (efficere,—ef, and facere,—'to accomplish,') That which produces a great effect,—as 'an efficacious remedy.'

Medici'na ef'ficax, La Médecine efficace, is a term sometimes applied to surgery.

Ef'fila, Ephelides.

Efla'tio, Ecphyse'sis.

Efla'tus, gen. Efla'tūs, (ef, and flare, flatum, 'to blow,') Ecphyse'sis.

Efflora'tio, (ef, and floreo, 'I bloom,') Exan-them.

Efflores'cence, Efflora'tio, Efflorescen'tia, (from efflorescere,—ef, and florescere,—'to blow as a flower,') Stribili'go, Ec'thyma.

In Pathology, efflorescence has the same mean-ing as exanthema, efflorescen'tia cuta'nea; and, in the nosology of Sauvages, the name is given to that order of diseases. Sometimes, it is confined to the cutaneous blush, the exanthe'sis of Good.

Efflorescence is, also, the conversion of a solid substance into a pulverulent state by exposure to the air. In salts this is generally owing to the loss of a part of their water of crystallization.

Efflorescence Érysipélateuse, Roseolæ.

Efflorescen'tia, Efflorescence, Exanthem.

Efflorescen'tiæ, Élevures.

Efflu'vium, (ef, and fluere, fluxum, 'to flow,') Emanation—e. Latrinarium, Mitte—e. Palustre, Miasm, marsh.

Effluxion, see Abortion.

Effort, (ef, and fortis, 'strong,') Ni'sus, Conatus, Pei'ra. A muscular contraction of greater or less strength, the object of which is, either to resist an external force, or to accomplish a function, which has become naturally laborious:—such are, the act of pushing away, or of drawing a body towards us, and the more or less painful efforts used by the mother to cause the expulsion of the foetus. In France, the word effort is often used synonymously with hernia, and signifies, likewise, the painful twitches of muscles, occasioned by over-exertion, or by the rupture of some of their fleshy fibres. Sauvages calls Efforts des reins, Lumba'go à ni'su, the pain in the loins occasioned by bearing too heavy a burden.

Effort, Hernia — e. des Reins, see Effort.

Effos'sio, (ef, and fodere, fossui, 'to dig,') Exhumation.

Effractura, (ef, and frangere, fractum, 'to break,') Ecpiesma.

EFFRACTURA CRANII, Enthlasis Cra'nii. Fracture of the cranium, with depression.

Effrenita'tio, (effrenis, 'unbridled,') Hypercatharsis.

Effu'sion, Effusion — e. Seminis, Ejaculation.

Effu'sio, Effu'sio, Ec'chysis, (effundere, — ef, and fundere, fusum, — 'to pour out,') (F.) Épanchement, (Infiltration is the term generally employed for effusion into the areolar membrane.) The pouring out of blood or of any other fluid into the areolar membrane, or into the cavities of the body. The effusion of serum, Profu'sio se'ri, Hy'drops fibrino'sus, or of coagulable lymph, for instance, is a common result of inflammation of serous membranes.

Egaré, Wild.

Egarément d'Esprit, Delirium, Insanity.

Eger, Min'eral Wa'ters of the. In the valley of the Eger, at the western extremity of Bohemia, there are several acidulous springs. One of the most frequented of these is Franzensbad, whose tonic solvent waters consist of sulphate of soda, chloride of sodium, and carbonate of soda, with carbonates of iron, lithia, magnesia, &c. They are said to strengthen the nervous system, improve digestion, relieve bronchial affections, &c.

Ege'ria. In ancient mythology, a nymph to whom pregnant females offered sacrifices ut conceptus alvus facilius egeretur. By some, supposed to have been identical with Lucina.

Eges'ta, (e, and gero, gestum, 'I carry,') see Excretion.

Eges'tas, Want.

Eges'tio, Defecation, Dejection, Excretion.

Egg, (Sax. æg,) Ovum — e. Bed, Ovarium — e. Brandy, see Ovum — e. Plant, Solanum melongena.

Egg, WHITE OF, Albumen ovi — e. Yolk of, see Ovum.

Eglantier de Chien, Rosa canina — e. Savage, Rosa canina.

Egobronchoph'ony, see Egophony.

Egophone, Egophony.

Egophon'ic, or Egoph'onic, Agopho'nicus, (F.) Égophonique. Having the character of, or relating to, egophony.

Égophonique, Egophonic.

Egoph'ony, Agopho'nia, (αἶξ, gen. αἰγός, 'a goat,' and φωνή, 'voice,') Caprilo'quium, Tragoph'onia, Goat's Voice, Bleating Voice, (F.) Égophonie, Voix chevrotante ou égophonique ou de Polichinelle ou sénile, Pectoriloquie chevrotante. Laënnec has designated by this name the kind of resonance of the voice heard through the stethoscope, when we examine the chest of one laboring under moderate effusion into one of the pleuræ. The voice, which strikes the ear through the cylinder, is more sharp and harsh than usual, and tremulous and broken, like that of the goat.

The patient himself is called Égophone. Bouillaud affirms that the 'bronchial and bleating voice' (égobronchophonie), is the principal symptom of pleuropneumonia. Egophony exists, however, in cases of hepatization where there is no pleural disease.

Egregor'sis, Vigil'ia, Vigil'ia, Vigilant'ia, Vigila'tio, Vigil'ium, (εγρηγορέω, from εγρηγορέω, 'I watch,') Watchfulness. A morbid want of sleep.

Egres'sus (gen. Egres'sus) Ventric'uli, Pylorus.

E'gritude, (αγρι'tudo, from αγέρ, 'sick,') Disease.

Ei'dos, (εἶδος, 'form, resemblance,') The ei is sometimes changed into o, at the termination of a word. Thus, Hæmato'des for Hæmato'i'des. See Odes.

Eilam'ides, (εἰλαμῖδες, from εἰλω, 'I involve,') Meninges.

Eile'ma, gen. Eile'matis, (εἰλημα, from εἰλω, 'I roll,') — 'a convulsion.' Vogel has given this name to a fixed pain, occupying some portion of the intestinal canal, which the patient compares to the sensation that would be produced by a nail driven into the part.

Eil'eon, (εἰλεων,) Ileon.

Eil'eus, Ileus.

Ei'lloid, (Tu'mor,) Eilo'i'des, (εἰλω, 'I roll,' and eidōs,) A morbid growth of the cutis, coiled or folded.

Eil'sen, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Eilsen is about six German miles from Hanover, at the foot of the Harrelberg. It has eleven springs, of which seven are sulphureous and four chalybeate.

Eisanthe'ma, gen. Eisanthe'matis, Exanthe'ma inter'nun, Entanthe'ma, (εις, 'within,' and αἶθμα, 'efflorescence,') An eruption on a mucous membrane; — aphthæ, for example.

Eis'bolé, (εἰσβολή, from εις, 'within,' and βαλλειν, 'to throw,') Attack, Injection.

Ei'sel, Acetum.

Eisp'noé, (εἰσπνοή, from εις, 'within,' and πνεω, 'I breathe,') Inspiration.

Ejacula'tio, Ejaculation — e. Seminis impedita, Bradyspermatus.

Ejacula'tion, Ejacula'tio, (e, and jaculo, — itself from jacere, — 'I throw out,') Gonobol'ia, Gonobolis'mus, Ejacula'tio seu Profu'sio seu Effu'sio Sem'inis, Expatra'tio, Patra'tio, Spermob'olē, vulg. Spend'ing, (F.) Éclaboussement. The emission of sperm. That which occurs during coition has been termed Insemina'tion. The act by which the fluid is projected out of the urethra.

Ejacula'tor. That which effects the emission of sperm. See Transversus perinæi.

EJACULA'TOR SEM'INIS, Accelerator urinæ.

Ejac'ulatory, Ejaculato'rius, Ejac'ulans, (F.) Ejaculateur, Ejaculatoire. Concerned in the ejaculation of sperm.

EJAC'ULATORY DUCTS OF CANALS, Ductus ejaculato'rii, (F.) Conduits ou Canaux ejaculateurs, are formed by the union of the vasa deferentia with the ducts of the vesiculæ seminales. They open at the lateral and anterior parts of the verumontanum, and convey into the urethra the sperm which is discharged from the vesiculæ, as well as that which comes directly from the testicle by the vas deferens. Between them there is often a depression, sometimes of a large size, which is termed Utric'ulus, U. prostat'icus, Vesi'ca seu Vesic'ula prostat'ica seu spermat'ica spu'ria, Sinus pocula'ris seu prostat'ice seu prostat'icus, Vagi'na masculi'na, Al'veus urogenita'lis, Corpusculum Weberia'num, Weberian organ or corp'uscle or vesicle, Vésicule Wébérienne, which has been regarded as the analogue to the uterus in the female, and thence called Ute'rus masculi'nus.

Ejec'tio, Ejection, Excretion — e. Fæcum, Defecation.

Ejec'tion, Ejec'tio, (ejicere, ejectum, — e, and jacere, — 'to throw out or eject,') The excretion of the fæces, urine, sputa, &c.

Ek'thyma, Ecthyma.

El Nispero, Sapota.

Elabora'tion, Elabora'tio, (e, and laborare, laboratum, 'to work.') This word is used, by physiologists, to signify the various changes which substances susceptible of assimilation undergo, through the action of living organs, before they are capable of serving for nutrition. The food is said to be elaborated in the stomach during the formation of chyme; the chyme is elaborated in the small intestine before it is chyle, &c.

Elæ'a, (ελαία,) Olea Europæa.

Elæag'nus, (ελαία, 'olive,' and αγνος, 'chaste,') Myrica gale—e. Cordo, Myrica gale.

Elæocar'pus Copallif'erus, (ελαία, 'olive,' and καρπος, 'fruit,') Copal.

Elæocérole, (ελæon, and κηρος, 'wax,')

Elæom'eli, (ελæon, and μελι, 'honey,') Dioscorides means, by this, an oil thicker than honey, and of a sweet taste, which flows from the trunk of a tree in Syria. It is acrid and purgative; and sometimes occasions serious symptoms, according to that author.

Elæom'eter, (ελæon, and μετρον, 'measure,') A very delicate glass hydrometer, for testing the purity of olive or almond oil by determining their densities. The 0 or zero of the scale is the point at which the instrument floats in the oil of poppy seeds. In pure olive oil, it floats at 50°, and the space between these points is divided into 50 equal parts, and numbered accordingly. It floats at 38° or 38½° in pure oil of almonds.

Elæ'on, (ελαιον,) Oil.

Elæoph'anes, (ελæon, and φανωμαι, 'I appear,') That which has the appearance of oil; as Uri'na elæoph'anes.

Elæosac'charum, (ελæon, and σακχαρ, 'sugar,') O'leosac'charum, Bal'samosac'charum, (F.) O'leosaccharolé, O'leosaccharure. A medicine, composed of essential oil and sugar. It was made by pouring upon an ounce of sugar, reduced to an impalpable powder, 3ss. or ʒi. of an essential oil; the mixture being triturated until the two substances were perfectly united.

Elæoth'es'ion, Unctua'rium, (ελæo, and θεις, 'the act of putting or placing,') The oil chamber in the ancient gymnasia, where the body was rubbed with oil before commencing the exercises.

Elæ'in, (from ελαιον, 'oil,') See Fat.

Elæ'is Guineen'sis, (from elæa,) see Cocos butyracea—e. Occidentalis, see Cocos butyracea.

Élan, ('a leap,') Cervus alces.

Élancement, (e, and lancer, 'to dart,') See Lancinating.

Elaphobos'cum, (ελαφος, 'a deer,' and βοσκειν, 'to eat,') Pastinaca sativa.

Elaphom'yces Granula'tus, E. Officina'lis, (ελαφος, 'a stag,' and μυκης, 'a fungus,') Lycoper'don cervi'num, Cervi Bole'tus, Bole'tus cervi'num, Tuber cervi'num, Hart's Truf'fles, Deer Balls, Lycoper'don nuts. Nat. Order, Fungi. Formerly used in the preparation of a Bal'samus apoplec'ticus, and to promote labor and the secretion of milk. Given, also, as an aphrodisiac. Dose, ʒiiss., in powder.

Elaph'rium Elemif'erum, (from ελαφος, 'light,') applied to the wood, see Amyris elemifera—e. Tomentosum, Fagara octandra.

Elap'sus, (e, and labi, lapsus, 'to fall,') Luxation.

Elas'ma, gen. Elas'matis, (ελανω, 'I impel,') A clyster pipe.

Elas'tes, (ελαστης, 'a driver,') Elasticity.

Elas'tic Mem'brane, see Membrane—e. Tissuc, see Membrane.

Elasticine, see Fibrous.

Elastic'ity, Elastic'itas, El'ater, Elas'tes, El'ates, Vis elas'tica, Tone, Tonic'ity, (F.) Contractilité de Tissu, Contractilité par défaut d'extension, (ελανω, 'I impel,' ελαστης, 'a driver,') The property by which certain bodies return to their proper size and shape, where these have been modified by pressure or otherwise. It is possessed by the dead as well as by the living solid.

Elas'tin. A peculiar substance derived from the continued action of boiling water on yellow elastic tissue.

El'atê, (ελατη,) Pinus picea—e. Theleia, Pinus rubra.

El'ater, gen. Elat'eris, (ελατηρ,) Elasticity.

El'aterin, see Momordica elaterium.

Elate'rium, (ελατηρ, 'a driver,') Extractum elaterii, Momordica elaterium—e. Cordifolium, Momordica elaterium.

El'ates, (ελατης,) Elasticity.

El'atin, see Momordica elaterium.

El'atine, Antirrhinum elatine—e. Cymbalaria, Antirrhinum linaria—e. Hastata, Antirrhinum elatine.

El'bock (Sc.), Elbow.

El'bow, (Sax. elboga,) the bend of the ulna. Cu'bitus, An'con, Pe'chys, Ulna, Um'bo, (Sc.) El'bock, El'bock, (F.) Coude. This word, abstractedly, means the angle formed by the union of two straight bodies. It is particularly applied to the articulation of the arm with the forearm, and especially to the projection formed by the olecranon process at the posterior part of the joints. The anterior part of the joint is called the bend of the elbow, (F.) Plu du coude.

El'bow, Min'ers', see Miners' elbow.

El'bock (Sc.), Elbow.

Elc'aja, Trichilia emetica.

Elco'ma, gen. Elco'matis, Ulcer.

El'coplasty, Helcoplasty.

Elco'sis, Helco'sis, Elco'ma, Helco'ma, (ελκος, 'an ulcer,' and osis,) Ulceration in general. An ulcer. A deep ulceration of the cornea, in consequence of a blow, or of violent inflammation.

Sauvages applies the term to a state of the body, in which there are numerous ulcerations of an obstinate character, complicated with caries, putrescency, low fever, &c.

Elcus'ter, gen. Elcus'teris, (ελκυστηρ, from ελκυω, 'I draw,') Embryuleus.

El'der, (Sax. ellapn, (G.) Holder,) Sambucus—e. Common, Sambucus Canadensis—e. Dwarf, Aralia hispida, Sambucus ebulus—e. Prickly, Aralia spinosa—e. Redberried, Sambucus pubens.

El'ecampane', (Enula campana,) Inula helenium.

Electa'rium, Electuarium.

Elec'tary, Electuarium.

Electric'itas, Electricity—e. Animalis, Galvanism—e. Galvanica, Galvanism—e. Metallica, Galvanism.

Electric'ity, Electric'itas, (from ηλεκτρον, 'amber,')—the substance in which it was first noticed. Electricity is used medicinally as an excitant. It has been occasionally employed with success in paralysis, rheumatism, accidental deafness, amaurosis, amenorrhœa, &c., but is not extensively used; and the cases are not always clear in which it could be of service. It may be communicated by means of the electric bath,—Bain électrique, as it has been called,—which consists in placing the patient upon an insulated stool, and connecting him with the prime conductor, of which he thus becomes a part. The fluid may be communicated by points, sparks, or by shocks, according to the required intensity. See Electrization.

ELECTRIC'ITY, CHEM'ICAL, Galvanism—e. Contact, Galvanism—e. Magnetic, Electromagnetism—e. Voltaic, Galvanism.

Elec'trify, Elec'trize, (electrical, and fio, 'I become,') (F.) Electriser. To produce the electrical condition in a body, or to render it susceptible of producing electrical phenomena. It is often used to signify the act of communicating the electric fluid to man.

Électriser, Electrify.

Electriza'tion, Electriza'tio, (F.) Électrisation. The medical application of electricity.

Localized electriza'tion, (F.) Électrisation localisée, of Duchenne, of Boulogne, consists in concentrating the electric action in particular parts without electro-puncture or any surgical operation.

It is founded on the greater or less resistance presented by a tissue to electric currents, according to its state of dryness or of moisture; and may be practised by using wet sponges or a metallic knob covered with a piece of wet kid for deep-seated structures, as muscles or any internal viscous; and dry metallic bodies of varying shape, or a metallic brush, for the purpose of cutaneous electrization. Electrization may also be employed for diagnostic purposes; for example, the atrophied muscle of rheumatism contracts well under the galvanic stimulus, while the opposite is the case in fatty transformation of the muscular tissue. See Galvanization, localized.

Elect'ro, as a prefix, Electricity.

Elect'rode, (electro, and ὅδος, 'way,') (F.) Rhéophore ou Réophore. The poles of a galvanic battery are called electrodes.

Electro'des, (ηλεκτρῶδες, from ηλεκτρον, 'amber,' and odes.) An epithet for evacuations, which shine like amber.

Electrolithot'riety. The disintegration of calculi in the bladder by the mechanical force of the electrical discharge, applied by an appropriate apparatus.

Electrolysis, see Electrolytic.

Electrolyt'ic, Electrolyt'icus, (F.) Electrolytique, (electro, and λυειν, 'to dissolve,' 'to decompose,') Relating or appertaining, according to M. Bernard, to electrolysis or chemical decomposition induced by electricity; as 'electrolytic treatment' of tumors or the modified nutrition induced in them by electricity, which may cause their absorption.

Electromag'netism. An electro-magnetic apparatus is occasionally used in cases of paralysis, or when a powerful excitant has to be applied to a part of the organism. A convenient form consists of a battery of six curved permanent magnets, and an intensity armature, around whose cylinders 1500 yards of fine insulated copper wire are coiled. The ends of the wire communicate respectively with a pair of directors, each of which holds a piece of sponge, dipped in vinegar or a solution of common salt. When the armature is rotated, and a portion of the body is interposed between the directors, a succession of shocks is received.

Electropunc'ture, Electropunctura'tion, Electropunctu'ra, Electrostix'is, and Galvanopunc'ture, Galvanopunctu'ra. The operation of inserting two or more wires, and then connecting them to the electrodes of the electric or galvanic apparatus. It has been employed therapeutically in cases in which electricity, galvanism, and acupuncture have been indicated.

Electrostix'is, (electro, and στιξίς, 'puncturation,') Electropuncture.

Electrother'apy, Electrotherapi'a, (electro, and therapeia.) Treatment of disease by electricity.

Electrot'onus, (electro, and tonus.) Electroton'ic state. The peculiar condition of a motor nerve, when a continuous galvanic current of equable strength is passed along it.

Elect'rum, (ηλεκτρον.) Succinum.

Electuaire, Electuary — e. Dentifrice, Dentifrice — e. Simple, Conserva.

Electua'rium, Electa'rium, Opiat'um, (Old Eng.) Allectuary, Elect'ary, Elect'uary, (F.) Electuaire, Saccharolé mou, (eligere, electum, 'to make choice,') A pharmaceutical composition of a soft consistence, somewhat thicker than honey, and formed of powders, pulps, extracts, syrup, honey, &c. In the London and American Pharmacopœias, electuaries are classed under Confections.

ELECTUA'RIMUM DE AL/OË, Opiatum mesentericum — e. Aperiens, Confectio sennæ — e. Aromaticum, Confectio aromatica — e. Cassiæ, Confectio cassiæ — e. Cassiæ fistulæ, Confectio cassiæ — e. Cassiæ sennæ, Confectio sennæ — e. Cassiæ tamarindatum seu lenitivum, Confectio cassiæ — e. Catechu, Confectio catechu compositum.

ELECTUA'RIMUM CATHO'LICUM, E. de Rhubarbe Composé. A preparation of the French Codex (1866), composed of senna, rhubarb, liquorice, succory, cassia pulp, tamarinds, and several other ingredients.

ELECTUA'RIMUM CATHO'LICUM COMMUNE, Confectio sennæ — e. Cinchonæ, Opiatum febrifugum — e. de Croco emendatum, Confectio hyacinthi — e. Diaprunum, Confectio sennæ — e. Opiatum, Confectio opii — e. Opiatum astringens, Diascordium — e. Piperis, Confectio piperis — e. Scammonii, Confectio scammonii — e. à Scammonio, Confectio scammonii — e. Sennæ, Confectio sennæ — e. Sennæ compositum, Confectio sennæ — e. Solidum, Tabella — e. Thebaicum, Confectio opii.

Elect'uary, Electuary — e. Lenitive, Confectio sennæ.

Eléencéphale, (ελαιον, 'oil,' and 'encephalon,') A fatty matter found by Couerbe in the encephalic neurine.

Elelis'phacus, (ελελισφακος.) Salvia.

El'ement, Elementum, (akin to ancient eleo, for oleo, 'I grow' [?],) Principium, P. Primitivum, Stoichei'on. A simple, ultimate constituent or principle in the human body, which forms the basis of a fibre or tissue. Also, a constituent of a compound organ. The inorganic elements are simple principles. An organic element, proximate principle or compound of organization, results from the union of certain inorganic elements. Oxygen, hydrogen, carbon, and nitrogen, are inorganic elements; fibrin, albumen, casein, &c., organic elements.

The elements of the human body are the following: Simple bodies, oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, carbon; sulphur, phosphorus, fluorine, chlorine, sodium, potassium, calcium, magnesium, silicium, iron. Inorganic combinations, water, carbonic acid (in combination with lime, potassa, and other bases); ammonia; cyanogen (in combination); sulphuric acid (in combination); sulphuretted hydrogen; phosphoric acid (in combination); different chlorides; combinations of oxygen with sodium, potassium, calcium, magnesium, silicium, and iron. Organic non-nitrogenized combinations, grape sugar, milk sugar, &c., glycogen; fats and fat acids; butyric, lactic, and formic acids. Organic nitrogenized combinations, albumen, fibrin, casein, gelatin, mucin urea, uric acid, glycocholic and taurocholic acids (acid of bile); hippuric acid, leucin, tyrosin, creatin and creatinin, inosic acid. — Different coloring matters or ferments, as diastase, &c.

EL'EMENTS, ORGAN'IC, Principles, immediate — e. Sarcous, see Sarcous.

Elemen'tary Cell, see Cell.

Elemen'tum, Element — e. Acidificum, Oxygen.

El'emi, see Amyris elemifera.

Elen'ium, Inula helenium.

Eleo'charis Palus'tris, (ἰλος, 'a marsh,' and χαρῶς, 'I delight in,') Scirpus palus'tris; indigo-nous. Ord. Cyperaceæ. The flowering tops, seeds, and roots are astringent, and have been used in diarrhoea and hemorrhage.

Éléolés, (ελαιον, 'oil,') Olea medicinalia.

Eleoselinum, (ἔλος, 'a marsh,' and σελίον, 'parsley.') Apium petroselinum.

Elephantiasis, (ἐλεφαντίασις,) Elephantia, Elephantiasmus, Elephas, Lazarus morbus seu malum, Pachydermia, Phœnicus morbus, Phymatosis, Elephantiasis, Elephant-skin disease, (ἐλεφας, gen. ἐλεφαντος, 'an elephant.') Various affections have been described under this name, by adding an epithet. It is ordinarily and generally applied to a condition, in which the skin is thick, livid, rugous, tuberculate, and insensible to feeling.

ELEPHANTIASIS ANÆSTHETICA, Lepra Anæsthetica, Anæsthetic Leprosy. A form of elephantiasis, which has insensibility and atrophy as its distinguishing features.

ELEPHANTIASIS OF THE ANTILLES, Barba'does Leg, Glandular disease of Barba'does, Crus Barba'dicum, (F.) Jambes de Barbade, is the Elephantiasis of many writers, Bucnemia, Boucne-mia. It is characterized by the leg being enormously tumid and misshapen; skin thickened, livid, and rugous, often scaly; scrotum, arms, or other parts sometimes participating in the affection. The Bucnemia or Boucne-mia Tropica, Spargosis, Cochin leg, is an affection of this kind.

ELEPHANTIASIS ARABICA, E. Arabum, Tyrtiasis, Elephas, Elephantiasis, E. Indica, Elephantia Arabum, Lepra Arabum (of some), Maladie glandulaire, Ladverie, Yava Skin of the Polynesians [?]. In this the tubercles are chiefly on the face and joints. There is loss of hair, except on the scalp; voice, hoarse and nasal; and the disease is said to be contagious and hereditary. It most frequently attacks the feet; and gives the lower extremity a fancied resemblance to the leg of an elephant, whence its name. The seat of the disease seems to be in the lymphatic vessels and glands, and in the subcutaneous areolar tissue: the inflammatory condition of which is accompanied with general morbid symptoms. Medicine has little or no effect on this loathsome complaint. See Lepra.

ELEPHANTIASIS OF CAYENNE, Mal rouge de Cayenne, seems to be a variety of Lepra, characterized by red and yellow spots, occupying the forehead, ears, hands, loins, &c., afterwards extending and becoming scaly, with deformity of the parts where they are seated, particularly of the face; and ultimately producing cracks, ulcers, caries, and sometimes death.

ELEPHANTIASIS OF THE GREEKS, E. Græcorum, Spedalskhed of Norway, True Leprosy, Lepra Vera, (F.) Lèpre Vraie, Éléphantiasis des Grecs, is probably the same disease as Lepra. See Lepra.

ELEPHANTIASIS OF INDIA is characterized by red, livid, or yellowish spots, slightly prominent, to which succeed indolent tumors, formed in the areolar texture. At a more advanced period, the phalanges swell, and become ulcerated; the bones of the nose carious, the lips thickened; and emaciation gradually carries off the patient. For this form [?] the term Spiloplasie was proposed by Duchassaing. It, likewise, belongs to lepra.

ELEPHANTIASIS ITALICA, Pellagra.

ELEPHANTIASIS OF JA'VA is likewise a variety of lepra, characterized by large white tumors on the toes and fingers, resembling scrofulous tumefactions. These tumors ulcerate, and the ulcerations spread from the extremities towards the trunk, destroying even the bones. Amputation can alone arrest its progress. The disease is often accompanied by alopecia, and by an eruption of red spots.

Elephantinum Emplas'trum, (Ελεφαντινον.) An ancient plaster, composed of 30 parts of ceruse, 45 of wax, oil, lbss., water, lbj. Oribasius and Celsus both mention a plaster of this name, but they are by no means similar in composition.

Elephan'toid, Elephan'toides, (ελεφας, gen. ἐλεφαντος, 'elephant,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance.') Elephantlike.

Elephantom'ma, gen. Elephantom'matis, (ελεφας, 'elephant,' and ὀμμα, 'eye.') Buphthalmia.

Elephan'topus, (F.) Éléphantope, (ελεφας, gen. ἐλεφαντος, 'elephant,' and πους, 'foot.') One affected with elephantiasis.

Elephant-skin Disease, Elephantiasis.

Elephantu'sia, (ελεφας, 'ivory.') Phytelephas macrocarpa.

Elephas, gen. Elephan'tis, (ελεφας,) Elephantiasis, Ivory.

Eletta'ria Cardamo'mum, Amomum cardamomum, and Cardamomum.

Eleuthe'ria, Croton cascarilla.

Élévateur, Elevator — é. Commun de l'aile du nez et de la lèvre supérieure, Levator labii superioris alæque nasi — é. de l'Œil, Rectus superior oculi — é. de la Paupière supérieure, Levator palpebræ superioris.

Eleva'tio U'teri. Ascent of the uterus. This displacement occasionally occurs, in the unimpregnated state, in connection with fibrous uterine, and enlarged ovarian tumors.

Élévatoire, Elevator.

El'elevator, Leva'tor, (elevare, — e, and levare, — 'to lift up,') (F.) Élévateur. A muscle, whose function it is to raise the part into which it is inserted. See Levator.

EL'ELEVATOR, Elevato'rium, Vec'tis elevato'rius, (F.) Élévatoire. A name given to different surgical instruments employed for raising portions of bone which have been depressed, for raising and detaching the portion of bone separated by the crown of the trepan, and for removing stumps of teeth. See Lever.

ELEVA'TOR A'NI, Levator ani.

EL'ELEVATOR, COM'MON. This is a mere lever, the end of which is somewhat bent and made rough, in order that it may less readily slip away from the portion of bone which is to be raised. The instrument is used, by forming a fulcrum for it, either on the hand which holds it, or upon the fingers of the other hand; or by making a fixed point for it on the edge of the opening made with the trephine.

ELEVA'TOR LA'BII INFERIO'RI, Levator labii inferioris — e. Labii superioris proprius, Levator labii superioris proprius — e. Laborum communis, Levator anguli oris.

EL'ELEVATOR OF LOUIS differed from the common elevator in the fact of the screw-peg being united to the bridge by a kind of pivot instead of hinge, so that greater extent of motion was permitted.

ELEVA'TOR OCULI, Rectus superior oculi — e. Patientia, Levator scapulæ.

EL'ELEVATOR OF PETIT consists of a lever mounted on a handle, and straight throughout its whole length, except at its very end, which is slightly curved, in order that it may be more conveniently put under the portion of bone intended to be elevated. The lever is pierced at various distances from its butt-end with several holes, intended for the reception of a movable screw-peg, fixed on the top of a kind of bridge. This part of the instrument consists of an arch, the ends of which are long, and covered with small pads, and on its centre is the screw-peg already mentioned. By means of these holes the arm of the lever can be lengthened at pleasure.

ELEVA'TOR SCAP'ULÆ, Levator scapulæ — e. Testiculi, Cremaster.

EL'ELEVATOR, TRIP'LOID, Vec'tis triploï'des. This was so called from its consisting of three branches, uniting above in one common trunk. The latter part was traversed by a long screw, having below a kind of hook, and above a handle for turning it. By turning the screw, the hook was drawn up, and the bone thus elevated.

The simple lever is the only one now used, owing to the want of facility and advantages in the use of the others.

ELEVA'TOR URE'THRAE, see Transversus perinæi — e. Uterine, see Pessary, intrauterine.

Èlève Externe, (e, and levare, 'to raise,') see House-surgeon — È. Interne, House-surgeon.

Èlevures (F.), Efflorescentiæ. A generic name, including all the exanthemata, in which there is tumefaction of the tissue of the skin. See Exanthem.

Elf'lock. A condition of the hair in which it is matted and twisted into locks, as in plica. Supposed, in olden times, to have been the work of elves or fairies.

Elias'ter, Ileoh.

Elich'rysum, (ἐλκρυς, from ἐλκ, 'light of the sun,' and χρυς, 'gold,') Solidago virgaurea — e. Montanum, Antennaria dioica.

Elloo'i'des, (ἐλκοῖδης, from ἐλκ, 'a tendril,' and αἶδω, 'resemblance,') Capreolaris.

Elig'ma, gen. Elig'matis, Electos.

Eliminan'tia, (eliminare, — from e, and limen, 'a threshold, — to turn out of doors,') Eecritica.

Elimina'tio, Elimina'tio. The act of separating and expelling; as the elimination of a morbid passion, or of a fancied materies morbi. See Eecritica.

Eliminatives, Eecritica.

Eligua'tio, (e, and liquare, liquatum, 'to melt,') Colliquation.

Elixa'tio, Elixa'tion, Epse'sis, (from elixus, — e, and lix, 'water, liquor, lye, — 'boiled,' 'sodden,') This word has been used synonymously with Decoction. The act of boiling.

Elix'ir, (Arab.) Psir, Ix'ir, Quel'les, Alex'ir. (The etymology of this word is not clear. Lemery derives it from ἐλκω, 'I extract;' and also from ἀλεξω, 'I aid.' Others believe it to be from Arabic, al-ecsir, or al-eksir, 'chymistry,') An elixir is a medicine composed of various substances held in solution in alcohol. None of these preparations are official. Many apothecaries have their own formulæ for them, the proportion of the ingredients, &c., varying, according to the taste of the compounder. The name has been used, however, for preparations which contain no spirit of wine.

ELIX'IR AC'IDUM HALLE'RI seu DIPPEL'II, E. Antipodag'ricum seu Antinephret'icum seu Sulphu'rico-ac'idum, Gut'tæ ac'idæ ton'icæ, A'qua Rab'e'lii, Liquor ac'idus Halle'ri, Mistu'ra sulphu'rico-ac'idæ, Æ'ther sulphu'ricus ac'idus, Ac'idum sulphu'ricum alcoolisa'tum, A. vitriol'icum vino'sum, Alcohol sulphurica'tum, A. sulphu'ricum, is a mixture of concentrated sulphuric acid and alcohol—in the Eau de Rabel, Acide Sulfurique Alcoolisé, of one part of the former to three of the latter. It is employed as an astringent in hemorrhages, &c.

ELIX'IR AL'OEÏS, Tinctura aloes composita — e. Amer de Peyrilhe, see Tinctura gentianæ composita — e. Anthelminticum succorum, Tinctura jalapii composita.

ELIX'IR ANTI-ASTHMAT'IC, OF BOER'HAAVE. This elixir is composed of alcohol, aniseed, camphor, orris, asarabacca root, calamus aromaticus, liquorice, and elecampane. It is given in asthma, in the dose of 20 or 30 drops.

ELIX'IR ANTIHYPOCHONDRI'ACUM, Tinctura cinchonæ amara — e. Antinephreticum, E. acidum Halleri.

ELIX'IR, ANTISCROFULOUS, OF PEYRILHE, is composed of weak alcohol, subcarbonate of potassa, and gentian root. It is administered in scrofula.

ELIX'IR APERITI'VUM, Tinctura aloes composita.

ELIX'IR, BOER'HAAVE'S, see Tinctura aloes composita.

ELIX'IR OF CALISA'YA, Elix'ir Cincho'næ Fla'væ. This may be made of Calisaya bark, 3j., fresh orange peel, 3ss., cinnamon, coriander, and angelica seeds, aa 3ij., caraway, aniseed, and cochineal, aa 3j., brandy and water, of each a sufficient quantity, syrup, f3x. Treat the Calisaya and aromatics with the brandy by percolation, until 3x. have been obtained; continue the percolation with equal parts of brandy and water until 3xxij. have been obtained; then add the syrup to make two pints. A tonic and cordial. (Other formulæ for its preparation, as well as for the Fer'rated Elix'ir of Calisa'ya, may be found in the U. S. Dispensatory, Parrish's Pharmacy, and other works).

ELIX'IR, CARMIN'ATIVE, OF SYL'VIUS, Tinctura carminativa Sylvi.

Èlixir de Chartreuse, (after the Chartreuse monks,) see Arquebusade, eat d'.

ELIX'IR CLAUDE'RI, CLAU'DER'S Elix'ir. Made by macerating for a few days carbonate of potassa, 3j., aloes, guaiacum, myrrh, saffron, rhubarb bruised, of each 3ij., water, f3xviiij., and decanting. Dose, a tablespoonful as a laxative and emmenagogue.

ELIX'IR, DAF'FY'S, Tinctura sennæ comp. — e. Danorum, E. pectorale regis Daniæ — e. Fœtidum, Tinctura castorei composita — e. of Garus, Tinctura de croco composita — e. Guaiaci volatilis, Tinctura Guaiaci ammoniata — e. Jalapæ compositum, Tinctura jalapii composita — e. of Long life, Tinctura aloes composita — e. de Longue vie, Tinctura aloes composita.

ELIX'IR OF OPIUM. Under this name have been included different liquid preparations of opium, consisting probably of an aqueous solution, with sufficient alcohol to preserve it. McMunn's elixir is a watery infusion prepared from opium, which has been exhausted by ether of narcotina, &c., and alcohol then added. The strength was intended to be the same as that of laudanum.

Elutria'tio, Decantation, Elutriation.

Elutria'tion, Elutria'tio, (originally eluo, — e, and luo, 'I wash,'—'I wash away, I rinse,') In pharmacy, a process by which the finer particles of a powder are separated from the coarser. It consists in diffusing the powder in water, allowing the larger and heavier particles to subside, and then decanting the liquor, that the finer particles may subside. See Levigation.

Elu'vies, ('a washing away,') An inordinate discharge of any fluid, and also the fluid itself. In the works of some authors it is particularly applied to the mucus which flows from the vagina in cases of leucorrhœa.

Eluxa'tion, Luxation.

El'ytra, (pl.) see Elytron.

Elytratre'sia, (elytro, and ατρησις, 'imperforate,') Colpatresia.

Elytreurn'ter, gen. Elytreurn'teris, (elytro, and εὐρυνω, 'I dilate,') Speculum vaginae.

Elytri'tis, gen. Elytri'tidis, (elytro, and itis.) Colpositis, Leucorrhœa.

El'ytro, (ελυτρον, 'a vagina or sheath,') In composition, the vagina.

Elytroblennorrhœ'a, (elytro, and blennorrhœa.) Leucorrhœa (vaginal).

Elytrocaus'tic, (elytro, and καωω, 'I burn,') A combination of mechanical compression and cauterization of the vagina by a forceps designed for the purpose.

Elytroce'lê, (elytro, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Vogel has given this name to vaginal hernia, Colpoce'lê. See Hernia.

Elytro'des, (tunica,) (elytro, and odes.) Vaginal coat of the testicle.

Elytrœde'ma, gen. Elytrœde'matis, Coleœde'ma, Colpœde'ma, (elytro, and οἰδημα, 'œdema,') Œdema of the vagina.

El'yteroid, Elytroï'des, (F.) Élytroïde, (elytro, and ειδος, 'resemblance,') A form of pessary, so called from its resembling, in shape, the vaginal canal.

Elytroi'tis, gen. Elytroi'tidis, (elytro, and itis.) Colpositis.

Elytromoch'lion, (elytro, and μοχλος, 'a lever,') A pessary, consisting of a steel spring terminating in wooden extremities, the object of which is to distend the vagina in a horizontal direction.

El'ytron, (ελυτρον, ελωω, 'I involve,') A sheath. The vagina. The membranes which envelope the spinal marrow are called elytra.

Elytron'cus, Elytroph'y'ma, (elytro, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') A swelling of the vagina.

Elytropap'pus Rhinocero'tis. A South African bush, Nat. Ord. Compositæ, the whole of which is bitter and resinous. The tops of the branches, infused in wine or brandy, make excellent bitters. The tops are also given in powder to children affected with diarrhœa.

Elytroph'y'ma, gen. Elytroph'y'matis, (elytro, and φύμα, 'a swelling,') Elytronecus.

El'ytroplas'ty, El'ytroplas'ticê, (elytro, and πλασσω, 'I form,') The operation for restoration of the vagina.

Elytropto'sis, (elytro, and πτωσις, 'a falling,') Prolapsus vaginae.

Elytrorrha'gia, (elytro, and ῥαγη, 'a breaking forth,') Colporrhagia.

Elytror'rhap'hy, Elytror'rhap'h'ia, Elytroraph'ia, Colpor'rhap'hy, Kolpor'rhap'hy, (elytro, and ῥαφη, 'a suture,') The operation of closing the vagina by suture in cases of procidentia uteri.

Em and En, εν, 'in, into, within; also, 'excess; frequently used in this last sense by Dr. Good. A common prefix, generally answering to the prefixes in and in in English. In composition, before β, π, φ, ψ, and μ, the ν is changed into μ; before γ, κ, ξ, and χ, into γ; before λ, into λ; and before ρ generally into ρ.

Emac'iate, Maces'cere, Tabes'cere, (F.) Amagrir, (emaciare, emaciatum, — e, and maceo, 'I am lean, — to grow lean,') To lose flesh, to become lean, to waste away.

That condition of the body, or of a part of the body, in which it grows lean. The state of one who is lean—Lean-ness, Ich'notes, Asar'cia, (F.) Maigreur.

Email des Dents, Enamel of the teeth.

Emailotage (F.), (maillot, 'swathing or swaddling clothes,') The 'wrapping up' or 'packing up' in dry or wet sheets, called, respectively, dry packing and wet packing, which is practised in hydropathic establishments to induce sweating.

Emana'tion, Emana'tio, Efflu'vium, (emanare, emanatum, — e, and manare, — 'to issue or flow from.') The term is applied to a body which proceeds or draws its origin from other bodies—such as the light which emanates from the sun; the miasm which arises from the putrid decomposition of animal or vegetable substances, &c. See Miasm.

Eman'sio Men'sium, (e, and manere, mansum, 'to stay.') This term has been applied to amenorrhœa or obstruction of the menses before they have been established. Some have used it for the retention which occurs even after they have been established. The former is the general acceptance. See Amenorrhœa.

Emargina'tio, (e, and margo, gen. marginis, 'a margin,') Échanerure, Notch.

Emarginatu'ra, Échanerure, Notch.

Emascula'tion, Emascula'tio, (emasculare, — e, and masculus, 'a male,' — 'to render impotent.') The act of removing or destroying the generative organs of a male animal.

Emascula'tus, Castratus, Eunuch.

Embalm'ing, (em, and balsamum, 'balsam,') Balsama'tio, Smyrnis'mus, Cedei'a, Pollinctu'ra, Neerocedi'a, Conditu'ra Cadaverum, (F.) Embaumement, Imbalsamation. An operation which consists in impregnating the dead body with substances capable of preventing it from becoming putrid, and thus putting it in a condition to be preserved.

Embam'ma, gen. Embam'matis, (εμβαμμα,) Apo-bam'ma, Bam'ma, (εμβαπτω, — em, and βαπτω, 'I dip,' — 'I immerse,') A medicated pickle or sauce.

Embarras (F.), (em, and barrer, 'to bar,') Emphraxis.

Embarras Gastrique (F.), Gas'tric disorder or impediment, Collu'vies gas'trica, Sor'des prima'rum via'rum, Sta'tus gas'tricus, Gasterataxi'a, (F.) Gastricité. Disorder of the stomach, in which there is loss of appetite, with bitterness and clamminess of mouth, white and yellow tongue, feeling of oppression in the epigastrium, and sometimes pain in that region, nausea, and bilious or bitter vomiting; this state being accompanied with headache, lassitude, and pain in the back and limbs.

Embarras Gastro-intestinal, Gas'tro-intestinal disorder. Slight gastroenteritis, according to the Broussaists, in which the symptoms of the Embarras gastrique and E. intestinal are united.

Embarras Intestinal, Intes'tinal disorder. The principal characters assigned to this are: tension of the abdomen, colic, borborygmi, discharge of flatus per anum, and constipation or diarrhœa.

Embarrure, (em, and barré, 'barred,') Engisoma.

Embaumement, (em, and baume, 'balsam,') Embalming.

Emboîtement (F.), 'Encasing,' (em, and boîte, 'a box,') Enadel'phia, Endadel'phia, Enteradel'phia. This term has been applied to the theory of generation which considers that the germs are encased in each other in the ovary of the female, in such sort that they are developed in succession after impregnation. It is the theory of enca'sing of germs. One who believes that all organized bodies are the result of the development of germs encased in each other ad infinitum, is said to be an Infin'itivist.

Monstros'ities by inclu'sion, (F.) Monstruosité par inclusion, Inclusion fatale, are supposed to arise from an accidental emboîtement of germs.

Emboîture, Diarthrosis.

Em'bolê, (εμβαλλω, — em, and βαλλω, — 'I put in place,') Reduction of a luxated bone. Reposit'io.

Also, a wedge or plug, (εμβολη,) Em'bolum, Em'bolus.

Embol'ia, (F.) Embolies. Diseases produced by plugging or obturation of the bloodvessels. See Em'bolism.

Embol'ic, Embol'icus, (from εμβολη, 'a wedge or plug,') Relating to plugging or obturation of the vessels, as 'embolic apoplexy.'

Embol'imos, (εμβολιμος, from em, and βαλλω, 'I cast,') Intercalary.

Em'bolism. The obstruction of a bloodvessel by any body — embolus or plug — detached from the interior of the heart or some vessel, and borne along in the current of the circulation to the point of obstruction. Two varieties have been described, according to the vessels implicated, — arterial and capillary. Arterial emboli directly impede the circulation, while capillary emboli are important from the secondary changes to which they give rise. The plug may be a bloodclot or a fibrinous concretion, or a fragment of endocardium, &c., washed away from the interior of the heart. These obstructions are most frequently met with in diseases accompanied with debility or exhaustion. They may cause sudden death, as in embolism of the pulmonary artery, or give rise to hemiplegia, as in embolism of an important cerebral artery. See Thrombosis, Polypus, and Infarction.

EM'BOLISM, APOPLECTIFORM CER'EBRAL, see Embolism, Cerebral, and Apoplexy — e. Arterial, see Embolism — e. Capillary, see Embolism.

EM'BOLISM, CER'EBRAL. A term applied to the obstruction of an artery or arteries of the brain, as described under Embolism. When accompanied by symptoms of apoplexy, the condition has been called embolic apoplexy, apoplectiform cerebral apoplexy. See Apoplexy.

Em'bolum, Embole — e. Cerebri, Infundibulum of the brain.

Em'bolus, (εμβολος,) see Embole and Embolia.

Embonpoint (F.). 'In good point or plight.' Bo'na corporis habitu'do. The state of the animal body when in full health. Excessive embonpoint constitutes corpulence and obesity, and may become a morbid condition.

Embonpoint Excessif, Polysarcia adiposa.

Embow'elling, Exenterismus.

Embreg'ma, gen. Embreg'matis, Embrocation.

Embroca'tio, Embrocation, Irrigation.

Embroca'tion, Embroca'tio, Embreg'ma, Em'brochê, Implu'vium, (εμβρεχω, — em, and βρεχω, 'I wet,' — 'I dip in,') A fluid application to be rubbed on any part of the body. It is often used synonymously with liniment. Originally it was employed in the sense of Fomentation.

EMBROCA'TION, GUESTO'NIAN, see Oleum terebinthinæ rectificatum.

Em'brochê, (εμβροχη,) Embrocation.

Em'bryo, gen. Embryo'nis, Em'bryon, (εμβρυον, from em, and βρωω, 'I grow,') Cye'ma. The fecundated germ, in the early stages of its development in utero. At a certain period of its increase, the name fœtus is given to it, but at what period is not determined. Generally, the embryo state is considered to extend to the period of quickening.

Embryoc'tony, Fœ'tus trucidat'io, (embryo, and κτονη, 'destruction,') The act of destroying a fœtus in utero, when insurmountable obstacles — as certain deformities of the pelvis — oppose delivery.

Embryogen'ic, Embryogen'icus, (F.) Embryogénique. Relating or appertaining to embryogeny.

Embryog'eny, Embryogen'ia, (F.) Embryogénie, (embryo, and γεννω, 'I generate,') The generation or formation of the embryo.

Embryog'raphy, Embryogra'phia, (embryo, and γραφη, 'a description,') The part of anatomy which describes the embryo.

Embryology, Embryolog'ia, (embryo, and λογος, 'a description.') The doctrine of, or a treatise on, embryonic development.

Embryon, (εμβρυον.) Embryo.

Embryonal, Embryonic.

Embryonic, Embryon'icus, (F.) Embryonique, Embryonnaire, Embryonal. Relating or appertaining to an embryo:—as 'embryonic life.'

Embryonique, Embryonic.

Embryonnaire, Embryonic.

Embryothlas'ta, Embryothlas'tes, Embryothlas'tum, (F.) Embryotome, (embryo, and ῥαω, 'I break.') An instrument for dividing the fœtus piecemeal, in order to effect delivery. A crotchet or other instrument, used, in certain cases of laborious parturition, to break the bones of the fœtus, for the purpose of extracting them with greater facility.

Embryotoc'ia, (embryo, and τοκος, 'delivery,') Abortion.

Embryotome, Embryothlasta.

Embryotomy, Embryotom'ia, (εμβρυοτομία, from embryo, and τομή, 'incision.') A division of the fœtus into fragments, to extract it by piecemeal, when the narrowness of the pelvis or other faulty conformation opposes delivery.

Embryotrophy, Embryotroph'ia, (embryo, and τροφή, 'nourishment.') Fœtal nutrition, Cyotrophy.

Embryul'cia, Embryusterul'cia, (embryo, and ἔλω, 'I extract,' 'I draw.') A surgical operation, by which the fœtus is extracted by means of appropriate instruments, when faulty conformation or other circumstances prevent delivery by the natural efforts.

Embryul'cus, (εμβρυουλκος.) Elcus'ter. An iron hook or crotchet, described by Fabricius ab Aquapendente, which was used to extract the fœtus in some cases of laborious labor.

Embryusterul'cia, (embryo, ὑστερα, 'uterus,' and ἔλω, 'I extract,') Embryulcia.

Emen'dans, (emendo,—e, and mendum, 'a fault,'—'I amend,') Corrigent.

Em'erald Green, Arsenite of copper.

Émeraude, Smaragdus.

Em'eraudes, Hæmorrhoids.

Em'erods, Hæmorrhoids.

Em'eroids, Hæmorrhoids.

Emes'ia, (εμεσία.) Vomiturition.

Em'esis, (εμεσις.) Vomiting.

Emetatroph'ia, (εμεω, 'I vomit,' and τροφία, 'want of nourishment,') Atrophy induced by vomiting.

Emet'ia, Emetine.

Emet'ic, Emet'icus, Vom'itive, Vom'itory, (F.) Émétique, Vomitif, Vomitoire. Producing emesis or vomiting.

EMET'IC, Emet'icum, Emetopæ'um, Vomito'rium, Vom'itory, Vom'it, Puke, (Prov.) Pick, (εμετικός, from εμεω, 'I vomit,') A substance capable of producing vomiting. (F.) Vomitif, Émétique. [This last term is also given by the French to tartarized antimony,—the emetic, as it were, par excellence.]

Tartarized antimony, ipecacuanha, and sulphate of zinc, are the chief emetics. They are valuable agents in disease, and may either act primarily on the stomach, or secondarily on other parts of the system,—the sympathy between the stomach and other parts of the body being very extensive, and an important object of study.

EMET'IC ROOT, Euphorbia corollata—e. Tartar, Antimonium tartarizatum—e. Weed, Lobelia inflata.

Emeticolog'ia, Emetology.

Em'etine, Emeti'na, Emet'ia, Vom'itive, Cephæli'num. A vegetable alkali, discovered by M. Pelletier in ipecacuanha, to which it owes its emetic power. It is obtained from different ipecacuanhas, but chiefly from psychot'ria emet'ica, callicoc'ca ipecacuan'ha, and vi'ola emet'ica. It is in transparent scales, of a reddish-brown color, almost inodorous, of a bitter, slightly acrid taste; is unchangeable in the air, soluble in water and alcohol, and insoluble in ether. Three grains of impure emetia or one grain of pure are equal to eighteen of ipecacuanha. See Ipecacuanha.

Émétique, Antimonium tartarizatum, Emetic.

Emétiser, (F.) To cause vomiting by emetics. In French pharmacy, it is, likewise, used to signify the addition of émétique—tartar of antimony and potassa—to a medicinal preparation.

Emetocathar'sis, see Emetocathartic.

Emetocathar'tic, Emetocathar'ticus, (emetus, and καθαρτικός, 'a purgative,') A remedy, which at the same time excites vomiting and purging—Emetocathar'sis.

Emetol'ogy, Emetolog'ia, Emeticolog'ia, (emetus, and λογος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on vomiting, and on emetics.

Emetopæ'um, (emetus, and ποιω, 'I make,') Emetic.

Em'etus, (εμετος.) Vomiting.

Em'inance, (e, and mineo, 'I project,') Emin'en'tia, Protuberan'tia, Ex'ochē. A projection at the surface of a healthy or diseased organ.

Éminence Porte Antérieure, Lobulus anonymus—é Porte postérieure, Lobulus Spigelii—é Sus-pubienne, Mons veneris.

Éminences Bigéminées, Quadrigenina corpora—e. Latérales, Corpora olivaria—é. Pyramidales, Corpora pyramidalia—é. Vermiformes du cercelet, Vermiformes processus.

Eminen'tia, Eminence, Protuberantia—e. Annularis, Pons Varolii—e. Collateralis, Pes accessorius—e. Pyramidalis, Crista vestibuli—e. Thyreoidea, Pomum Adami—e. Tympani, Pyramid.

Eminen'tiæ (pl. of Eminen'tia) Bigem'inæ, Quadrigenina tubercula—e. Candicantes, Mammillary tubercles—e. Lenticulares, Corpora striata—e. Magnæ cerebri, Thalami nervorum optico-rum—e. Mammillares, see Mammillary eminence—e. Medianæ internæ, Corpora pyramidalia—e. Olivares, Corpora olivaria—e. Ouales laterales, Corpora olivaria—e. Pyramidales, Corpora pyramidalia—e. Quadrigeninæ, Quadrigenina tubercula—e. Teretes, Processus teretes.

Émissaire, (same etymon as Emission.) Emunatory.

Émissa'ria (pl. of Émissa'rium, 'an outlet,') Santorini, (F.) Émissaires de Santorini. A name given to some small veins, which communicate with the sinuses of the dura mater, by apertures in the cranium. Such are the parietal, posterior condyloid, mastoid veins, &c.

Emis'sio, Emission—e. Seminis, Spermatismus.

Emis'sion, Emis'sio, (mittere,—e, and mittere, missum,—'to send out,' 'drive out,') The act by which any matter whatever is thrown from the body. Thus, we say Emission of urine, Emission of semen, &c.

Émission Sanguine, Bloodletting—e. of Sperm, Ejaculation.

Emman'uel. The name of an ointment, much used in the latter part of the 16th century, which was formed by boiling various herbs, as dittany, centaury, plantain, spurge, &c., in wine, and afterwards adding pitch, resin, olibanum, turpentine, suet, mastic, myrrh, &c., to form an ointment.

Emmen'agogues, Emmenago'ga, Emmeniago'ga, Amē'nia, (emmenia, and αγω, 'I drive,' or 'expel,') Men'agogues. A name given to medicines believed to have the power of favoring the discharge of the menses. There is probably no substance which possesses this power directly. According to different conditions of the system, the most opposite remedies may act as emmenagogues. Black hellebore, savin, madder, polygala senega, and ergot, are by some reputed to be specific emmenagogues.

Emmenagogog'ia, (emmenagogue, and λογος, 'discourse.') A treatise of emmenagogues.

Emme'nia, (εμμηνια, from em, and μην, 'a month,') Menses.

Emmeniagoga, Emmenagogues.

Emmeniopath'y, Emmeniopathi'a, (emmenia, and παθος, 'affection.') An affection or disorder of menstruation.

Emmenolog'ia, (emmenia, and λογος, 'a discourse.') A treatise on menstruation.

Emmenolog'ical, Emmenolog'icus. Relating or appertaining to menstruation.

Emmetrop'ia, (em, μετρον, 'measure,' and οπτομα, 'I see.') The condition of the healthy eye, in which the limits of clear vision lie between the near point of myopia and the far point of hyperopia. The term a'metropia expresses that an eye is not emmetropic.

Emmetrop'ic, Emmetrop'icus. Relating or appertaining to emmetropia.

Emmyx'ium Articula'rē, (em, and μυξα, 'mucus,') Hydrarthrus.

Emollien'tia, Emollients.

Emollients, Emollient'ia, Malthac'tica, Relaxant'ia, Epicerast'ica, Malac'tica, Lubricant'ia, Malacopœ'a, Mollien'tia, (from emollire, — e, and mollire, — 'to soften.') Substances which relax and soften parts that are inflamed, or too tense. They are used both internally and externally: as the former, however, consist of mucilaginous substances, they are generally reckoned as demulcents: the latter, or proper emollients, consist of oils, cataplasms, fomentations, &c. Oleaginous bodies, rubbed on a part, act by diminishing its cohesion. Fomentations, in cases of internal inflammation, act probably through contiguous sympathy. The following are the chief emollients: — Adeps; Amygdalæ Oleum; Avenæ Farina; Cera; Cetaceum; Linum; Olivæ Oleum; Sesamum; Triticæ Farina, and Ulmus.

Emolli'ties, Mollities — e. Morbosa, Mollities — e. Ossium, Mollities ossium — e. Uteri morbosa, Hysteromalacia.

Emolli'tio, Mollities — e. Ventriculi, Gastromalacia.

Émonctoire, Emunctory.

Emop'tôé, Hæmoptysis.

Emot'io, (e, and moceo, motum, 'to move,') Delirium, Luxation, Passion.

Emot'ional, Emotiona'lis. Relating to emotion or passion independently of the will: — hence an 'emotional or instinctive impulse.'

Empas'ma, gen. Empasm'atis, (em, and πασσιν, 'to sprinkle,') Cataplasma.

Empâtement, (empâter, — em, and pâte, 'paste,' — 'to render pasty or doughy,') A non-inflammatory engorgement, which retains, more or less, the impression of the finger.

Empathe'ma, gen. Empathe'matis, Ma'nia a pathē'matē, (F.) Manie sans délire, (em, and παθος, 'suffering,') Ungovernable passion, fixed delusion.

Empeir'ia, (εμπειρια, from em, and πειρα, 'a trial,') Experience.

Em'petrum, (εμπετρον, from em, and πετρα, 'a rock,') Herniaria glabra.

Em'phlysis, (em, and φλυσις, 'a vesicular tumor or eruption,') Ich'orous Exanthem. An eruption of vesicular pimples, filled progressively with an acrid and colorless, or nearly colorless, fluid, terminating in scurf or laminated scabs. A genus in the order Exanthematica, class Hæmatica of Good.

Em'phlysis Aph'tha, Aphthæ, Stomatitis, aphthous — e. Erysipelas, Erysipelas — e. Miliaria, Miliary fever — e. Pemphigus, Pemphigus — e. Vaccina inserta, Vaccina — e. Varicella, Varicella.

Emphrac'tic, Emphracticus.

Emphrac'tica, Physconia.

Emphrac'ticus, Emphrac'tic, (εμφρακτικός, from εμφραττω, — em, and φραττω, 'I shut up, — 'I close,

'I obstruct,') Emplas'ticus, Emplatton'enus. Any substance which, when applied to the skin, was presumed to close the pores.

Emphrag'ma, gen. Emphrag'matis, (εμφραγμα,) Obturamentum, Impedimentum. Anything that obstructs. Hippocrates uses this term to designate the obstacle to delivery on the part of the foetus, when the presentation is preternatural.

EMPHRAG'MA LACRYMA'LE, Fistula lacrymalis — e. Salivare, Ranula.

Emphrax'is, (εμφραξις,) Obstruc'tio, Obtura'tio, Oppila'tio, Infarc'tus, Infarc'tio, Farc'tus, Far'tus, Infarc'tion. 'Obstruction.' An embarras or detention in canals or cavities of any substance, which is either morbid from quantity or quality.

EMPHRAX'IS HE'PATIS, Hepatemphraxis, see Infarction.

Emphy'ma, gen. Emphy'matis, (em, and φυμα, 'a swelling,') Tumor — e. Encystis, Encystis — e. Encystis atheroma, Atheroma — e. Encystis ganglion, Ganglion, Testudo — e. Encystis meliceris, Meliceris — e. Encystis steatoma, Steatoma — e. Exostosis ossea, Exostosis — e. Exostosis periosteal, Node — e. Sarcoma, Sarcoma — e. Sarcoma adiposum, Adipose sarcoma — e. Sarcoma cellulosum, Cystic sarcoma — e. Sarcoma mammarum, Mammary sarcoma — e. Sarcoma pancreaticum, Pancreatic sarcoma — e. Sarcoma scirrhosum, Scirrhous sarcoma — e. Sarcoma tuberculosum, Tuberculate sarcoma — e. Sarcoma vasculosum, Sarcoma, vascular.

Emphyse'ma, gen. Emphyse'matis, (εμφυσημα, from εμφυσω, — em, and φυσω, 'I blow, — 'I inflate,') Infla'tio, Empneumato'sis, Sarci'tes flatuo'sus, Emphyse'ma cellula'rē seu pneumato'sis, Physson'cus, Tu'mor flatulen'tus, Pneumato'sis, Infla'tion, Winddropsy, (F.) Emphysème, Aërethmie of Piorry. This term is commonly applied to any white, crepitant, shining, elastic, indolent tumor of the integuments, caused by the introduction of air into the areolar texture, Aërodermectasia. Injuries of the larynx, trachea, or lungs; fractures of the ribs, or wounds penetrating the chest, are the most frequent causes of this affection, which is owing to the air escaping from the air-passages, and insinuating itself into the areolar texture surrounding the wound. There are some cases of emphysema, which are owing to internal causes; and hence a division has been made into the accidental and symptomatic, and the spontaneous and idiopathic.

EMPHYSE'MA ABDOM'INIS, Tympanites.

EMPHYSE'MA OF THE LUNGS, E. Pulmo'num, Asth'ma aë'reum ab Emphyse'matē Pulmo'num, Pneumato'sis Pulmo'num, Pneumonec'tasis, Pneumec'tasis, (F.) Pneumoëctasie, Emphysème du Poupon. A considerable pressure or contusion of the chest, or any violent concussion of the lung, may produce a laceration in that viscus, without injury being done to the parietes of the thorax, and may give occasion to the infiltration of air into the areolar texture, interlob'ular emphysema. Laënnec has described another species of emphysema of the lungs, Vesic'ular emphysema, Aëropneumonasie, Aëropneumonec'tasie of Piorry, consisting in excessive dilatation of the air-cells, some of which become as large as hemp-seed, ultimately break, and give rise to irregular vesicles at the surface of the lung, some of which are as large as a hazelnut. Physical signs. — The thorax externally, generally or locally, appears unnaturally convex and prominent. The intercostal spaces are widened, but depressed. The inspiratory efforts are increased. The sound on percussion is morbidly clear, but not tympanitic. On auscultation, the inspiratory murmur is feeble or suppressed. The expiration, which is more frequently audible, is prolonged, laborious, and wheezing. There are no certain physical signs which can distinguish interlobular emphysema from the vesicular.

Emphysema under the pleura pulmonalis is termed, by Piorry, Aérophthoropneumonic.

EMPHYSEMA, INTERLOBULAR, see Emphysema of the lungs—e. Pectoris, Pneumothorax—e. Pulmonum, Emphysema of the lungs—e. Scroti, Physocoele.

EMPHYSEMA SENILE, Senile Atrophy of the Lung. A condition met with in old persons especially, dependent on imperfect nutrition of the lung, being a thinning and gradual wasting of the vesicular walls.

EMPHYSEMA TYMPANITES, Tympanites—e. Uteri, Hysterophysis, Physometra—e. Vesicular, see Emphysema of the lungs.

Emphysematous, Emphysematous. Relating or appertaining to emphysema.

Emphysème. The terms Emphysème lobulaire, E. vésiculaire, E. interlobulaire ou sous pleural, and E. alvéolaire have been applied by the French to denote the various forms described under Emphysema.

Emphysème du Poumon ou Pulmonaire, Emphysema of the lungs.

Emphytum Ther'mum, (εμφυτον θερμον, — em, and φω, 'I have naturally,'—'innate heat.') Bielychnium.

Empimel'ium Polysar'cia, (em, and πιμελη, 'fat.') Polysarcia adiposa.

Empir'ic or Emp'iric, Empir'icus, (εμπιρικός, —from em, and πειρα, 'a trial,'—'experimental.') One who follows only experience. A sect of physicians, who rejected all theory, and took for their guide experience alone. It was opposed to the dogmatic sect. The Empiric sect prevailed till near the time of Galen. Among its most eminent members, after Philinus and Serapion, were Apollonius, Glaucias, Bacchius of Tanagra, and Zeuxis, both disciples of Herophilus, — Heraclides of Tarentum, Cleophantus (master of Aesclepiades), Menodotus of Nicomedia, and Theudas of Laodicea. They occupied themselves, chiefly, with discovering the properties of drugs, and did important service, in this manner, to medicine.

At the present day the word Empiric is only taken in a bad sense, being employed in nearly the same signification as charlatan or quack.

Empir'icé, (εμπιρική.) Empiricism.

Empir'icism, Empir'ica Ars, Empir'icé, (F.) Empirisme. Medicine founded on experience. It generally, at the present day, signifies quackery.

Empirisme, Empiricism.

Emplas'ticus, (εμπλαστικός, from επλάσσω, — em, and πλάσσω, 'I form,'—'I spread upon.') A remedy which adheres, as a plaster, to the surface, and in this manner may obstruct the pores (?): an emphractic.

Emplas'troënder'mic, Endermic.

Emplas'trum, (εμπλαστρον, same etymon as Emplasticus,) (F.) Emplâtre, Stéaraté. A solid and tenacious compound, adhesive at the ordinary heat of the human body. Some of the plasters owe their consistence to wax and resin; and others to the chemical union which takes place between the semivitreous oxide of lead and oil. Most of them become too consistent by age. When such is the case, they may be re-melted by a gentle heat, and oil be added to them.

EMPLAS'TRUM ACONITI, (Ph. U. S., 1873.) Aconite Plaster, (Aconiti Radicis, in pulv., \mathfrak{z} xvj., Alcohol, Emplast. Resinæ, $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ q. s. The aconite root is moistened with alcohol, sufficient to make two pints of tincture, a pint and a half of which are distilled, and melted resin plaster added, to make the mixture weigh sixteen ounces, and then thoroughly mixed.

EMPLAS'TRUM ADHESIVUM, Emplastrum resinæ—e. Adhæsivum Woodstockii, see Sparadrapum adhesivum—e. Alexandri, Alexandrine—e. de Althæa, Unguentum de Althæa.

EMPLAS'TRUM AMMONIACI, Ammoniæ Plaster, Plaster of Ammoniac, (F.) Emplâtre de Gomme

Ammoniaque, (Ammoniac, \mathfrak{z} v., Acidi aceticæ dil., Oss. Dissolve the ammoniac and strain: then evaporate the solution by means of a water-bath, stirring constantly until it acquires a proper consistence. Ph. U. S. 1873.) It is used as a discutient plaster.

EMPLAS'TRUM AMMONIACI CUM HYDRARGYRO, Plaster of Ammoniac with mercury, (Ammoniaci, $\mathfrak{b}\mathfrak{j}$., Hydrarg., \mathfrak{z} ij., Olei oliv., gr. lx., Sulphur. sublimat., gr. viij.) Rub the mercury with the oil, to which the sulphur has been added, until the globules disappear, then add the ammoniac, previously melted, and mix. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

EMPLAS'TRUM ANDRÆ DE CRUCÉ, E. de Pice et resinis glutinans—e. Anglicum, see Sparadrapum adhæsivum.

EMPLAS'TRUM ANTIMONII, Plaster of Antimony, Antimonial Plaster, (Antimon. et Potass. tart. in pulv. subtil., \mathfrak{z} j., Picis Burgundicæ, \mathfrak{z} iv. Melt the pitch by means of a water-bath, and strain: add the powder, and stir well until the mixture thickens on cooling. Ph. U. S., 1873.) An excitant or warm plaster.

EMPLAS'TRUM ARNICÆ, Plaster of Arnica, Arnica plaster, (Ext. Arnicæ alcoholicæ, \mathfrak{z} ss., Emp. Resinæ, \mathfrak{z} ij. Add the extract to the plaster, previously melted, and mix. Ph. U. S., 1873.) A warm strengthening plaster.

EMPLAS'TRUM AROMATICUM, Aromatic Plaster, (Thuris, \mathfrak{z} ij., Ceræ flavæ, \mathfrak{z} ss., Pulv. cort. cinnam., \mathfrak{z} vj., Ol. ess. Piment., \mathfrak{z} ss., Limon., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} ij. Melt the frankincense and wax together, and strain; then add, as it cools, the cinnamon, previously rubbed with the oils, and form a plaster. Ph. D.) Used as a stimulating plaster.

A spice plaster, made by incorporating powdered cinnamon and any other spices with melted suet, has been used in cholera infantum. It is spread on leather or linen, and is renewed twice in the twenty-four hours. Another, for extemporaneous use, is to mix powdered spices with meal or flour and spirits. One, advised by Dr. Parrish, senior, of Philadelphia, consisted of powdered capsicum, cinnamon, and cloves, each, \mathfrak{z} ij., rye meal, spirits, and honey, q. s. To be rubbed together on a plate, spread upon a close fabric, and applied as a cataplasm.

EMPLAS'TRUM ASSAFÆTIDÆ, E. antihyster'icum, Assafetida plaster, Plaster of Assafetida, (Emp. plumb., Assafet., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} xij., Galban., Ceræ flavæ, $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} vj., Alcohol. dilut., \mathfrak{O} ij. Dissolve the assafetida and galbanum in the alcohol, by means of a water-bath, strain while hot, and evaporate to the consistence of honey; add the lead plaster and wax previously melted together, stir the mixture well, and evaporate to the proper consistence. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used as an antispasmodic [?] and anodyne [?] plaster.

EMPLAS'TRUM ATTRAHENS, E. ceræ—e. Auriculare, Hypotium.

EMPLAS'TRUM BELLADONNÆ, Plaster of Belladonna, Belladonna Plaster, (Belladonnæ Radicis, in pulv. subtil., \mathfrak{z} xvj., Alcohol, Emplast. Resinæ, $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ q. s. Ph. U. S., 1873.) The process is very similar to that referred to for Emplastrum Aconiti. An anodyne application in neuralgia and rheumatism.

EMPLAS'TRUM CALEFACIENS, E. Picis cum canthar'idæ (Ph. U. S.), Plaster of Pitch with Cantharides, Calefacient Plaster, Warm Plaster, Warming plaster, (F.) Emplâtre échauffant. (Cerat. cantharid. (Ph. U. S.), \mathfrak{z} iv., Picis abiet., \mathfrak{z} xlviij. Melt together, and form into a plaster. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is rubefacient and stimulant.

EMPLAS'TRUM CANTHARIDIS, E. lyttæ—e. Cantharidis vesicatorii compositum, E. lyttæ comp.—e. Cephalicum, E. picis compositum.

EMPLAS'TRUM CERÆ, E. simplex, E. Attra'hens, Wax plaster, (F.) Emplâtre Simple, (Ceræ flavæ, Servi præp., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ $\mathfrak{b}\mathfrak{i}\mathfrak{j}$., Resinæ flavæ, $\mathfrak{b}\mathfrak{j}$. Melt them together and strain. Ph. L.) It has been considered drawing. It is stimulating.

EMPLASTRUM CERA'TI SAPO'NIS, Soap Ce'rate Plaster. A formula for this plaster may be found in the Ph. B., 1867. The ingredients are hard soap, yellow wax, olive oil, oxide of lead, and vinegar.

EMPLASTRUM CICU'TÆ, E. de Cicutâ seu con'i macula'ti, Unguentum sol'idum de cicuta, Hem-lock plaster, (F.) Emplâtre de Ciguë. (Resinæ abiet., 960 p., Cera flav., 640 p., Picis albæ, 448 p., Ol. cicutæ per decoct. præparat., 128 p., Fol. cicut. recent., 2000 p. Melt the resins, wax, and oil; add the cicuta leaves, and boil; strain and add, after having dissolved it in vinegar of squills and cicuta juice, gum ammoniac., 500 p. Ph. P.) It is used as a discutient, especially to scirrhus tumors.

EMPLASTRUM CINE'REUM, E. hydrargyri — e. Citrinum, Unguentum de althæâ — e. Commune, E. plumbi — e. Commune cum resinâ, E. resinæ — e. Conii, E. cicutæ.

EMPLASTRUM CUMI'NI, Cum'min plaster. (Cummin. semin., Carui sem., Lauri bacc., sing., 3ij., Picis aridæ, lbij., Cera flavæ, 3ij. Melt the pitch and wax together, then add the other ingredients. Ph. L.) It is used as a warm discutient plaster.

EMPLASTRUM CU'PRI ACETA'TIS, (F.) Emplâtre d'Acétate de Cuivre, Cire Verte. A preparation of the French Codex, containing yellow wax, subacetate of copper, Burgundy pitch, and Venice turpentine.

EMPLASTRUM DIACH'YLON, Diachylon, E. plumbi — e. Divinum Nicolai, see Magnet — e. Emolliens, Unguentum de althæâ — e. Epispasticum, E. lyttæ.

EMPLASTRUM FER'RI, E. ro'borans, Iron Plaster, Strengthening Plaster, Chalybeate Plaster, Plaster of Iron. (Ferri subcarb., 3ij., Emp. plumbi, 3xxiv., Picis Burgund., 3vj. Add the subcarbonate of iron to the lead plaster and Burgundy pitch previously melted together, and stir until they thicken. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

EMPLASTRUM FER'RI RU'BRI, E. oxidi ferri rubri — e. Flavum, Unguentum de althæâ — e. ad Fonticulos, Ceratum Galeni.

EMPLASTRUM GAL'BANI, Gal'banum plaster. (Galban., Ammoniac., Cera flavæ, 3ij., Emplast. plumbi, 3vij. Melt the galbanum and ammoniacum together, and strain. Add them to the lead plaster and wax, also previously melted together, and mix the whole thoroughly.)

EMPLASTRUM GAL'BANI COMPOS'ITUM, E. lithargyri compos'itum, Diach'ylon magnum cum gum'mi, Compound gal'banum plaster. (Galb., 3vij., Emp. plumbi, 3xxxvj., Tereb., 3j., Picis Burgund., 3ij. Melt the galbanum and turpentine together, and strain, add the pitch, and afterwards the plaster, previously melted. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is stimulant and discutient.

EMPLASTRUM GLUTINO'SUM, see Sparadrapum adhæsivum — e. cum Gummatibus, E. gummosum.

EMPLASTRUM E GUMMAT'IBUS RESINO'SIS, E. gummosum.

EMPLASTRUM CUM GUMMIRESI'NIS, (F.) Emplâtre de gomme résine, Diachylon gommé, Plaster of gum resins. (Emplast. simpl., p. 1600, Cera flavæ, p. 96, Picis albæ, p. 96, Terebinth., p. 96. Melt by a gentle heat, and add Gum ammoniac, p. 32, Bdellium, p. 32, Galban., p. 32, and Sagapenum, p. 32. Dissolve in a sufficient quantity of alcohol, evaporate to the consistence of honey, and mix carefully all together. Ph. P.) A discutient.

EMPLASTRUM GUMMO'SUM, Emplastrum lithargyri cum gum'mi seu cum gummat'ibus seu e gummat'ibus resinosis seu Ox'idi Plum'bi semivitræi gummo'sum, Gum plaster, Diach'ylon cum gum'mi, Yellow or Gum diach'ylon. (Emp. plumbi, p. viii., Ammoniac., Galbani, Cera flavæ, 3ij., p. i. Ph. E.) Properties and uses like the last.

EMPLASTRUM HYDRAR'GYRI, Emplast. lithargyri cum hydrar'gyro, E. cine'reum, Mercurial plaster, Plaster of Mercury, (F.) Emplâtre mercuriel. (Hydrarg., 3vj., Ol. oliv., Resin, 3ij., Emplast. plumbi, lbj. Melt the oil and resin together, and when cool rub the mercury with them till the globules cease to be visible; then gradually add the lead plaster, previously melted, and mix all. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is stimulant, resolvent, and discutient. Applied as a discutient to venereal and other tumors.

EMPLASTRUM HYDRAR'GYRI COMPOS'ITUM, E. de hydrar'gyro compos'itum seu de Vi'go cum mercurio emenda'tum, Compound plaster of mercury. (Empl. simpl., p. 1250, Cera flavæ, p. 64, Resinæ, p. 64. Melt, and before it congeals add Pulv. g. ammoniac., p. 20, Bdellium, p. 20, Oliban., p. 20, Myrrh., p. 20, Saffron, p. 12. Mix carefully. Take of Mercury, p. 380, Pure turpentine, p. 64, Liquid and Pure storax, p. 192. Triturate in an iron mortar till the globules disappear; melt all together, and before congealing add essential oil of Lavender, p. 8. Ph. P.) The same properties as the last.

An Emplastrum de Vigo sine mercurio seu Vi-go'nis sine mercurio, (F.) Emplâtre de Vigo, was, at one time, much celebrated as an adhesive plaster or sparadrap. In the Pharmacopœia of Wirtemberg, it was directed to be formed of living frogs and living earthworms boiled with various ordinary plaster ingredients, and other substances, and was termed Emplastrum rana'rum simplex seu de Ranis sine mercurio.

(Cantharides, in powder, lbj., Emp. cera, lbiss., Adipis præp., lbj. Melt the plaster and lard together, and as the mixture becomes thick, on cooling, sprinkle in the flies, and mix. Ph. L.) This is the common blistering plaster. Too much heat must not be used in its preparation. It requires to remain on six or eight hours before its full effect is induced, and it acts sufficiently well, provided even a piece of thin gauze or tissue paper be placed between it and the skin, whilst absorption of the flies is thus prevented. See Blister. The Blistering Cerate of the Ph. U. S., Cera'tum Canthar'idis, Canthar'idæ Ce'rate, is made as follows: Cantharid. in pulv. subtiliss., 3xij., Cera flavæ, Resinæ, 3ij., Adipis, 3x. To the wax, resin, and lard, previously melted, add the Spanish flies, and stir the mixture constantly until cool. The Emplâtre Vésicatoire of the French Codex (1866) has for its ingredients elemi, olive oil, basilicon ointment, yellow wax, and cantharides.

The Ph. U. S. (1873) also has a Cera'tum Extracti Canthar'idis, Cerate of extract of cantharides, formed by adding to an alcoholic extract of cantharides, resin, yellow wax, and lard.

EMPLASTRUM LYT'TÆ COMPOS'ITUM, E. canthar'idis vesicato'rii compos'itum seu mel'oës vesicato'rii compos'itum, Compound plaster of cantharides or Span'ish flies. Boil until the oxide is dissolved, and almost to dryness. Remove the vessel from the fire, and add yellow wax, p. 500. Put the vessel again on the fire, and after the wax is melted, add, before it congeals, camphor, p. 24; mix. Ph. P.) It is considered a desiccative, and has been employed in gangrene.

EMPLASTRUM NYGMAT'ICUM, E. resinæ.

EMPLASTRUM O'PII, O'pium Plaster, Plaster of Opium. (Ext. opii, 3i., Picis Burgund., 3ij., Emplast. plumbi, 1bj., Ag. bullent., q. s. Melt together the lead plaster and Burgundy pitch; then add the extract of opium, previously mixed with water, f3ij., and continue the heat until the moisture is evaporated. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is employed as an anodyne, and to give support.

EMPLASTRUM OX'IDI FER'RI RU'BRI, E. fer'ri rubri seu Ro'borans, Plaster of red oxide of iron, Strengthening Plaster. (Empl. oxid. plumb. semivit., p. xxiv., Resinæ pin., p. vi., Cereæ flavæ, Olei oleæ Europ., sing. p. iij., Oxidi ferri rubr., p. viij. Rub the red oxide of iron with the oil, and add the other ingredients melted. Ph. E.) It is employed as a strengthening plaster.

EMPLASTRUM PICIS COMPOS'ITUM, E. Picis (Ph. B.), E. picis cephal'icum, Cephal'ic plaster, Compound pitch plaster. (Picis Burgund., 3xxvj., Abietis resinæ, 3xij., Resinæ flavæ, Cereæ flavæ, 3iij., Ol. Myrist., 3j., Ol. oliv., Aquæ, 3iij. To the pitch, resin, and wax, melted together, add the other matters and mix. Ph. B., 1867.) It is stimulant and rubefacient. Sometimes used in headache, — applied to the temples. See Depilatory.

EMPLASTRUM DE PI'CË ET RESI'NIS GLU'TINANS, E. An'dræ de Cru'ce, Adhe'sive plaster of pitch and resins, (F.) Emplâtre d'André de la Croix ou Agglutinatif ou collant de poix et de résines. (Picis albæ, p. 128, Resin. elemi., p. 32, Terebinth. pur., p. 16; Ol. laur., p. 16. Melt with a gentle heat, and pass through linen. Ph. P.) Used in contusions and fractures as a support.

EMPLASTRUM PLUM'BI, E. lithar'gyri seu commu'nè seu diach'ylon seu ox'idi plum'bi semivit'rei seu ex ox'ido plum'bi semivit'reo, Diach'ylon sim'plex, White Diach'ylon, Plaster of Lead, O'leate of Lead, Lead or Diach'ylon plaster. (Plumbi oxid. in pulv., 3xxx., Olei oliv., 3lvi., Aquæ, q. s. Rub the oxide with half its weight of the oil; add the mixture to the remainder of the oil; add half a pint of boiling water, and boil until a plaster is formed; adding, from time to time, a little boiling water as that first added is consumed. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

A plaster of red lead, Emplast'rum e min'io, was formerly official. It was prepared much in the same way as Emplastrum Plumbi, but was kept on the fire and stirred until it became black, when it was called black plaster. See Emplast'rum oxidi ferri rubri.

An iodide of lead plaster is official in the Ph. B., 1867, made by mixing iodide of lead, soap plaster, and resin plaster.

EMPLASTRUM POLYCHRES'TUM, E. resinæ.

EMPLASTRUM POTASS'II IO'DIDI, Plaster of Iodide of Potass'ium, (Potass. iodid., 3j., Thuris. 3vj., Cereæ, 3vj., Ol. oliv., f3ij. Ph. L.) Spread on leather, it is applied to indolent tumors.

(Resin pulv., 3vj., Emp. plumb., 3xxxvj. Melt the plaster, with a gentle heat, add the resin, and mix. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Employed in wounds and ulcers.

Bayn'ton's adhe'sive plaster is made by melting one pound of lead plaster and six drachms of resin together.

EMPLASTRUM RESINO'SUM, E. resinæ.

EMPLASTRUM RESOL'VENS, (F.) Emplâtre Résolutif, E. des Quatre Fondants. A preparation of the French Codex (1866), so called because composed of soap plaster, conium plaster, plaster of gum resins, and mercurial plaster.

Emplattom'enus, (ἐμπλαττομενος, same etymon as Emplasticus.) Emphracticus.

Empneumato'sis, (ἐμπνευματώσις, from em, πνευμα, gen. πνευματος, 'air,' and osis.) Emphysema, Inspiration.

Empoisonnement, Poisoning.

Empo'rium, (ἐμποριον, from em, and πορεύω, 'I transport or send.') The brain was so called, of old, because there all the mental affairs are transacted.

EMPO'R'IUM SPIRIT'UUM, Sensorium.

Emp'osis, (em, and ποίσις, 'drink.') Imbibition.

Empreinte, (em, and premere, 'to press.') Impression.

Empre'sis, (ἐμπρησις, from em, and πρησις, 'burning.') Empresma.

Empres'ma, gen. Empres'matis, Empres'mus, Empre'sis. Inflammation. A genus in the class Hæmatica, order Phlogotica, of Good. Phlegmatistis membrano'se et parynchymato'se, Phlogis'tici, Fe'bres contin'ue inflammato'rie, Inflamma'tio inter'na, Cau'ma, Inter'nal inflamma'tion.

Empresmoma'nia, (ἐμπρησμος, 'burning,' and mania.) Pyromania.

Empres'mus, (ἐμπρησμος,) Empresma.

Em'prion, (ἐμπριων, from em, and πριων, 'a saw.') Serrated. Galen has given this name to the pulse, when the sensation produced by the artery under the fingers is analogous to that which would be caused by the unequal teeth of a saw.

Emprostocyrtoma, (ἐμπροσθεν, 'forwards,' κυρτος, 'bent,' and oma.) Lordosis.

Emprosthotonus, Emprosthoton'ia, Enta'sia tet'anus anti'cus, Tet'anus anti'cus, (ἐμπροσθο-tonos, from em, προσθεν, 'forwards,' and τενω, 'I stretch,' 'I extend.') A variety of tetanus, in which the body is drawn forwards by the permanent contraction of the muscles.

Empsycho'sis, (ἐμψυχω, — em, and ψυχή, 'life,'—'I animate,' 'I vivify.') A word formerly used for the act of animating. The union of the soul with the body.

Emp'toé, Hæmoptysis.

Emp'to'ica Pas'sio, Hæmoptysis.

Emp'tysis, Hæmoptysis.

Emptys'ma, gen. Emptys'matis, Sputum.

Em pyé, (ἐμπύη,) Empyema.

Empye'ma, gen. Empye'matis, Empye'sis, Em'pyé, (ἐμπύημα, from em, and πύον, 'pus,') Apost'e'ma empye'ma. A collection of blood or pus, and, conventionally, of other fluid, in some cavity of the body, and particularly in that of the pleura. Empyema is one of the terminations of inflammation of the pleura, and is called, also, Pyothorax ve'rus, Pleurorrhœ'a purulen'ta, Diapye'ma, Ecpye'ma, Ecpye'sis, Empye'sis seu Pyo'sis pec'toris, Hydrothorax purulen'tus, Dyspno'e'a pyothorac'ica, Pneumonia suppurato'ria, Absces'sus pec'toris seu thora'cis, Pleuraposte'ma, Pleuro-pye'sis, (F.) Empyème, Pyopleurite.

The Operation for empye'ma properly means the making of an opening into the thorax for the purpose of giving issue to the matter collected in the cavity of the pleura, although it has been used for the operation required for the evacuation of any fluid from the chest, or synonymously with Paracente'sis thora'cis.

Empye'sis, (ἐμπύησις,) Suppuration. An eruption of phlegmonous pimples, gradually filling with a purulent fluid, and terminating in thick scabs, frequently leaving pits or scabs;—Pustulosa Exan'them. A genus in the order Exanthematica, class Hæmatica of Good. See Empyema.

EMPYE'SIS OC'ULI, Hypopyon—e. Pectoris, Empyema—e. Variola, Variola.

Empyoce'lé, Em'pyocèle, (em, πύον, 'pus,' and κήλη, 'tumor,' 'hernia.') A tumor, formed by an accumulation of pus in the scrotum. Different diseases have been described under this name, such as suppuration of the testicle, empyema of the tunica vaginalis, accumulation of pus in the cavity of a hernial sac, abscesses of different kinds formed in the areolar texture of the scrotum, &c.

Empyom'phalus, (em, πύον, 'pus,' and ομφαλος, 'the navel.') This word has been used to designate a suppurating tumor at the umbilicus; or, at times, umbilical hernia, the sac of which is filled with blood.

Empyreum'a, gen. Empyreum'atis, (ἐμπύρευμα, from em, and πυρ, 'fire.') The burnt smell and acrid taste which volatile products—gaseous and liquid—contract, when animal or vegetable substances are decomposed by a strong heat. The cause of this smell is seated in an oil, called empyreumatic, which does not exist in the substance subjected to the operation, but is the result of its decomposition. If the empyreuma occurs when the organic substance is placed in a still with a liquid, it is owing to the solid matter touching the bottom of the vessel to which the fire is applied.

Empyreumatic, Empyreumaticus. Belonging to empyreuma,—as an empyreumatic odor.

Em'pyrus, (ἐμπυρος, from em, and πυρ, 'fire,') Febri'c'itans. One who has fever.

Em'pyus, (ἐμπύος, from em, and πύον, 'pus,') Purulent.

Ems, Min'eral Waters of, Bad Ems. Celebrated springs on the river Lahn, duchy of Nassau. They are thermal (from 83° to 115° Fahrenheit), and carbonated salines, containing carbonic acid, carbonates of soda and magnesia, chloride of sodium, &c.; and are much used in gastric and intestinal affections, chronic bronchial and pulmonary affections, &c. Season from the 1st of June to the 15th of September.

Emul'gent, Emul'gens, (emulgere, — e, and mulgere, mulsum, — 'to milk out,' 'to draw out.') A name given to the renal artery and vein, because the ancients imagined they milked, as it were, the urine from the kidneys. See Renal.

Emul'sify, (F.) Emulsionner, (emulsiō, and fio, 'I become.') To make or form an emulsion.

Emul'sin, see Amygdalin.

Emul'sio, Emul'sum, Emul'sion; same etymon as Emulgent. A pharmaceutical preparation, of a milky-white opaque appearance, which is composed of oil, divided and held in suspension in water by means of mucilage. Emulsions have been divided into the true and oily, and into the false or not oily; the latter being composed of resinous substances, balsams, or camphor, rubbed up with dilute alcohol, mucilage, or yolk of egg.

EMUL'SIO ACA'CIE, E. Arab'ica, Gum Ar'abice Emul'sion. (Nucleor. amygd. comm., ʒj., Aquæ. Iijss., Mucilag. acac., ʒij., Sacch., ʒiv. While beating the decorticated almonds with the sugar and water, add the mucilage. Ph. E.) Used in the same cases as the next. Under the name Mistura Aca'cie, Gum Ar'abice Mixture, the Edinburgh Pharmacopœia had the following: Mucilag

Acaciæ, f3ij., Amygdal. dulc., 3j. and 3ij., Sacchar., 3v.; Aquæ, Oij. (Imper. meas.) Blanch the almonds; peel them; beat to a smooth pulp first with the sugar, and then with the mucilage; add the water gradually, stirring constantly, and strain through linen or calico.

EMULSIO AMYGDALÆ, E. Sim'plex, Lac amygdalæ, Amygdala'tum, Mistu'ra amygdalæ, Emul'sio seu Lac Amygdala'rum, Al'mond emul'sion, mixture or milk, (F.) Lait d'amandes. (Amygdal. dulc., 3ss., Acaciæ, in pulv., 3ss., Sacchar., 3ij., Aquæ destillat., f3vij. Having blanched the almond, add the gum Arabic and sugar, in a mortar, till they are thoroughly mixed; then rub the mixture with the distilled water gradually added, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is used as a diluent and demulcent.

EMULSIO ANTHYSTERICA, Mistura assafoetidæ — e. Arabica, Emulsio acaciæ Arabiciæ.

EMULSIO CAMPHORÆ, E. Camphora'ta, Mistu'ra Camphoræ, Cam'phor Emul'sion, (Camphoræ, 3j., amygd. com. decortie., sacch. dur., aa 3iv., Aquæ, 3vj. Ph. E.) A convenient form for giving camphor.

EMULSIO GUAIACI'NA, Mistura guaiaci — e. Leniens, Looch ex ovo.

EMULSIO O'LEI AMYGDALA'RUM, Emul'sion of Oil of Almonds, (Ol. amygd., 3j., gum acac. pulv., 3ij., syrup, 3j., Aquæ destill., 3iv. Mix.) A good pectoral or cough mixture.

EMULSIO O'LEI RIC'INI, Castor Oil Emul'sion. (Ol. ricini, 3ss., vitelli ovi, q. s., Aquæ destillat., 3j.) An aperient draught.

EMULSIO O'LEI TEREBIN'THINÆ, Emul'sion of Oil of Turpentine, (Ol. tereb. rect., 3ij., sacch. alb., 3ss., vitell. ovi, j., emuls. amygd. vel aquæ destill., 3vj. Mix.) In rheumatic and nephritic affections. Dose, f3iss.

EMULSIO OLEO'SA, Looch ex ovo.

EMULSIO PUR'GANS CUM JALA'PÆ RESI'NA, Purg'ing Emul'sion with Res'in of Jal'ap. (Jalapæ resin., gr. xij., sacch. alb., 3ij. Triturate for some time, and add gradually half the yolk of an egg; continue to triturate, adding by degrees emuls. simpl., 3v., aq. flor. aurant., 3ij. — Ph. P.)

EMULSIO PUR'GANS CUM O'LEO RIC'INI, Purg'ing Emul'sion with Castor Oil. The French Codex (1866) has a formula for its preparation, an emulsion being made with castor oil, powdered gum arabic, distilled peppermint water, and syrup.

EMULSIO PUR'GANS CUM SCAMMO'NIO, Purg'ing Emul'sion with Scammony. The emulsion is made, according to the French Codex (1866), by rubbing up scammony with white sugar, and adding milk and cherry laurel water.

EMULSIO SIM'PLEX, E. amygdalæ.

Emul'sion, Emulsio — e. Almond, Emulsio amygdalæ — e. Camphor, Emulsio camphoræ — e. Castor oil, Emulsio olei ricini — e. Gum arabic, Emulsio acaciæ Arabiciæ — e. Huileuse, Looch ex ovo — e. Oil of almonds, Emulsio olei amygdalarum — e. Oil of turpentine, Emulsio olei terebinthinæ — e. Pancreatic, see Pancreatin — e. Purg'ing, with resin of jalap, Emulsio purgans cum jalapæ resinâ — e. Purg'ing, with scammony, Emulsio purgans cum scammonio.

Emul'sionner, Emulsify.

Emul'sive, Emulsivus. An epithet given to seeds whence oil may be extracted by expression; such as almonds, apricots, peaches, hemp, rape, melons, gourds; those of the nut kind, and cucurbitaceous and cruciferous plants in general.

Emul'sum, Emulsion.

Emuncto'rium, Emunctory — e. Cerebri, Nasus.

Emuncto'ry, Emuncto'rium, (emungere, — e, and mungere, munctum, — 'to drain off,' 'to cleanse,') Emissa'rium, (F.) Emonctoire, Emissaire. Any organ whose office it is to give issue to matters which ought to be excreted. The ancients thought that some organs were more particularly destined to serve as emunctories of others: the nasal fossæ, for example, they believed to be the emunctories of the brain.

Emundan'tia, (e, and mundare, 'to cleanse,') Detergents.

Emuscula'tus, Amyon.

Em'ys Palus'tris, (εμυς,) Salt Wa'ter Ter'rapin. This species of turtle is found exclusively in salt or brackish waters, near the seashore, along the whole Atlantic coast. It is much prized by the epicure, and is nutritious and sufficiently easy of digestion when dressed plain.

En, in composition, see Em.

Enadel'phia, (en, and ἀδελφός, 'a brother,') Emboitement.

Enæ'ma, (εναίμα, pl. of εναίμων, from en, and αίμα, 'blood,') Hæmatostatica.

Enæ'mon, (εναίμων,) Styptic.

Enæore'ma, gen. Enæore'matis, (εναίωρημα, — from en, and αιώρω, 'I lift up,' — 'that which hangs or floats in,') (F.) Enôrème. The Neph-elê, Nu'bes, Sublima'tio, Subli'mê, Suspen'sum, S. Uri'næ, Suspen'sa, Nubec'ula or cloud which is suspended in the urine as it cools.

Enam'el, E. of the Teeth, (en, and [F.] émail,) seu Ni'tor seu Cortex seu C. stria'ta seu Substan'tia filamento'sa (of Malpighi), S. Adaman'tina seu Vit'rea seu Crusta adaman'tina Den'tium, Encans'tum, Ad'amas, Odonthy'alus, Adaman'tine or vit'reous substance, (F.) Substance vitrée ou émaillée, Email des Dents. The substance which covers the coronæ of the teeth. The enamel is of a milky white color, and sufficiently hard to strike fire with steel. Its surface is very smooth and polished, and it forms a thicker layer towards the part where the teeth come in contact, and becomes thinner towards the cervix. The fibres of the enamel are perpendicular to the surface of the teeth, on the ivory of which they seem planted, as it were. This gives them a velvety appearance, when examined by the microscope. The enamel has no bloodvessels, and is not renewed when removed. It is formed of phosphate of lime, and a very small portion of animal matter. A delicate membrane covers the enamel — Cutic'ula, Cu'ticle of the enamel, Na'smyth's membrane, Persist'ent cap'sule of Nasmyth — but so closely united with it that it can be demonstrated only by the use of chlorohydric acid. See Cuticula.

ENAM'EL, Cu'ticle of the, see Enamel — e. Germ, see Groove, Dental — e. Organ, see Tooth.

Enanthe'ma, gen. Enanthe'matis, (en, and ανθεω, 'I bloom,') A name recently given to certain eruptions of the mucous membrane, as exanthema is to certain eruptions of the skin.

Enanthe'sis, Rash exan'them. Eruption of red, level, or nearly level, patches, variously figured, irregularly diffused, often confluent, and terminating in cuticular exfoliations. A genus in the order Exanthemat'ica, class Hæmat'ica, of Cullen, including scarlet fever, measles, &c.

ENANTHE'SIS ROSA'LIA, Scarlatina — e. Urticaria, Urticaria.

Enantiopath'ic, (εναντιος, 'opposite,' and παθος, 'affection,') Palliative.

Enarthro'sis, Inarticula'tio, Ball and Sock'et-joint, (en, and αρθρωσις, 'an articulation,') A kind of diarthrodial articulation, in which the head of a bone is received into the cavity of another, and can be moved in all directions. The joint of the os femoris with the os innominatum is one of this character.

Enar'thrum, (en, and αρθρον, 'a joint,') A foreign body in a joint.

Enaus'ma, gen. Enaus'matis, (εναυσμα, 'that which kindles,' from en, and αυω, 'I kindle,') Fomites.

Encan'this, (εγκανθις, from en, and κανθος, 'the angle of the eye.) A tumor, formed by an increase in size, or a degeneration, of the caruncula lacrymalis. Any morbid growth in the inner angle of the eye.

ENCANTHIS BENIGNA. Simple excrescence of the caruncula. It commonly yields to astringent collyria.

ENCANTHIS FUNGOSA. A condition of the semilunar fold and lacrymal caruncle in which they are the seat of morbid growths.

ENCANTHIS INFLAMMATOARIA. Inflammation with enlargement—swelling—of the semilunar fold and lacrymal caruncle.

ENCANTHIS MALIGNA has often a cancerous character, and requires extirpation before it has attained any considerable size.

Encardi'tis, gen. Encardi'tidis, Endocarditis.

Encar'pus, (εγκαρπος, from en, and καρπος, 'fruit,') Pregnant.

Enca'sing, Emboitement.

Encatalep'sis, Catalepsy.

Encathis'ma, gen. Encathis'matis, Semicupium. With the ancients, Encathis'ma (εγκαθισμα, from en, and καθίζω, 'I seat upon,') meant a vapor-bath taken sitting.

Encau'ma, gen. Encau'matis, (εκαυμα, from en, and καύω, 'I burn,') Epicau'mis, Epicau'sis, Encau'sis. A tumor produced by a burn. A burn. Also, an ulcer of the transparent cornea, occasioning loss of the humors.

Encau'sis, (εκαυσις,) Burn, Encauma, Moxibustion.

Encausse, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Encausse is a village in the department of the Haute-Garonne, which possesses several saline acidulous springs.

Encaus'tum, Enamel.

Encavure, (en, and caver, 'to hollow,') Argema.

Enceinte, (pron. angsant or ansant,) (sine cinctu, 'without a zone,') [Isidore,] or from en, and cingere, cinctum, 'to surround,') Pregnant.

Encens, (incendere, incensum, 'to burn,') Juniperus lycia.

Encensior, Rosmarinus.

Encephalal'gia, (encephalon, and αλγος, 'pain,') Cephalalgia—e. Hydropica, Hydrocephalus internus.

Encephal'ic, Encephal'icus, (from encephalon.) That which is situate in the head. A name given to several parts which relate to the encephalon, as the encephalic membrane, muscles, &c.

Encephali'tis, gen. Encephali'tidis, (encephalon, and itis.) This term has been used, by some nosologists, synonymously with Cephalitis and Phrenitis. By others, it has been appropriated to inflammation of the brain, in contradistinction to that of the membranes, Menin'gocerebri'tis.

ENCEPHALITIS EXSUDATORIA, Hydrocephalus internus—e. Infantum, Hydrocephalus internus—e. Insolationis, Coup-de-soleil—e. Membranosa, Meningitis—e. Peripherica, Meningitis—e. Potatorum, Delirium tremens.

Encephal'ium, (dim. of encephalon,) Cerebellum.

Encephalocel'e, Enceph'alocèle, (encephalon, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Her'nia seu Fun'gus seu Ecto'pia Cer'e'bri, H. Cerebra'lis, Craniocel'e, Her'nia of the Brain. This may be a congenital or accidental affection. In the former case, it is dependent upon tardy ossification of the fontanelles or some faulty conformation. In the latter, it is owing to some considerable loss of substance in the parietes of the cranium, produced by fractures, wounds with a cutting instrument, caries, the application of the trephine, &c. In slight congenital encephalocèle, gentle pressure may be exerted upon the protruded portion. When the disease is of considerable extent, it is fatal. In accidental encephalocèle, similar means must be used for confining the tumor, and preserving it from the action of external bodies.

Protrusion of the membranes of the brain, containing fluid, but no cerebral substance, is called menin'gocel'e, and hydromenin'gocel'e.

Encephaloch'ysis, (encephalon, and χυειν, 'to pour out,') Hydrocephalus internus—e. Senilis, Apoplexy, serous.

Encephalodyn'ia, (encephalon, and δωρν, 'pain,') Cephalalgia.

Encephalohæ'mia, (encephalon, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Cephalæmia.

Encephalohémie, Cephalæmia.

Enceph'aloid, Encephalo'idēs, Ceph'aloid, Cephalo'idēs, Cephalo'ma, (encephalon, and αἶος, 'resemblance,') Laënnec has given the term Enceph'aloid or Cer'ebriform matter to one of the morbid substances commonly formed by scirrhus or cancerous tumors. It is either encysted, in irregular masses without cysts, or infiltrated into the texture of the diseased organ. This name was given to it in consequence of its resemblance, when fully developed, to the medullary substance of the brain. It is also called Fun'gus medulla'ris seu cancro'sus medulla'ris seu cerebra'lis, Sarco'ma medulla'rē, Spon'goid inflammation, Cancer mol'lis seu medulla'ris, Carcino'ma medulla'rē seu medullo'sum seu encephalo'idēs seu mol'le seu spongio'sum, Carci'nus spongio'sus, Stru'ma fungo'sa, Myelo'ma, Myelom'yces, Myelo-spon'gus, Galactom'yces, Galactospon'gus, Tela accidenta'lis medulla'ris, (F.) Matière cérébriforme, Carcinome mou et spongieux, Tumeur encéphaloïde ou spongieuse ou ossivore ou pulpeuse ou fonguïde ou fongueuse ou spléniforme, Fongus médullaire, Carcinome sanglant, Cancer mou ou encéphaloïde ou médullaire ou cérébriforme, Milt'like tu'mor, Soft Can'cer, Med'ullary sarco'ma, Cell'ular can'cer, Fun'goid or Hamatocer'ebriform disease. See Cancer.

ENCEPHALOID TU'MOR OF THE LUNG, Phthisis, cancerous.

Encephalog'ia, (encephalon, and λογος, 'a description,') A description of the encephalon. Encephalomala'cia, (encephalon, and μαλακία, 'softness,') Mollities cerebri.

Encephalomalacie, Mollities cerebri.

Encephalomalaco'sis, Mollities cerebri.

Encephalomalax'is, Mollities cerebri.

Encephalomeningi'tis, Meningocephalitis.

Enceph'alon, (εγκεφαλον, from en, and κεφαλη, 'head,') Enceph'alum, Enceph'alus, Enkeph'alon. That which is situate in the head. This name has generally been given to the brain, cerebellum, and mesocephalon. At times, it includes likewise the medulla spinalis, when it is also called the Cer'ebro-spi'nal and Neur'al axis. Under the term Crani'o-spi'nal axis, or centre of automatic actions, Dr. Carpenter includes the sensory ganglia—the respiratory and stomato-gastric ganglia forming the centre of the medulla oblongata and the spinal ganglia or true spinal cord.

Encephalopathi'a, Encephalop'athy, (F.) Encephalopathie, (encephalon, and παθος, 'disease,') A disease of the encephalon.

ENCEPHALOPATHIA LITERATO'RUM. The condition of the brain, supposed to be produced by overtasking it.

ENCEPHALOPATHIA PUERPERA'lis, Mania, puerperal—e. Saturnina, see Encephalopathie saturnine.

Encephalopathie, Encephalopathia—e. Crapuleuse, Delirium tremens.

Encephalopathie Saturnine, Encephalopathi'a Saturnina. Encephalic disorder occasioned by the poison of lead.

Encephalop'athy, Encephalopathia.

Encephalophthi'sis, (encephalon, and φθι-sis,) see Encephalopyosis.

Encephalophy'mata, pl. of Encephalophy'ma, Phymato'ses seu Strumo'ses seu Tuber'cula cer'e-bri, (encephalon, and φύμα, gen. φυματος, 'a tumor.') Tubercles of the brain.

Encephalopyo'sis, (encephalon, and πύον, 'pus,') Apost'e'ma seu Absces'sus seu Helco'sis cer'e-bri. Suppuration of the brain. When accompanied with emaciation and hectic, it is called Enceph-alophthi'sis.

Encephalorachid'ian, Cephalospinal.

Encephalor'hagia, (encephalon, and ῥαγή, 'a breaking forth,') see Apoplexy.

Encephaloscop'ia, (encephalon, and σκοπεω, 'I examine,') Craniology.

Encephalosep'sis, (encephalon, and σηπιν, 'to corrupt,') Mollities cerebri.

Encephalo'sis of the Liv'er, (encephalon, and οσις,) Hepatoscirrhosis.

Encephalosis'mus, (encephalon, and σεισμός, 'a shaking,') Concussion of the brain.

Encephalostrumo'sis, (encephalon, and struma, 'scrofula,') see Hydrocephalus internus.

Enceph'alum, Encephalon.

Enceph'alus, (εγκεφαλος,) Encephalon.

Enceph'alus Opis'thius, (εγκεφαλος, and οπισθιος, 'behind,') Cerebellum.

Encero'sis, (en, and κηρος, 'wax,') Inceration.

Encharax'is, (εγχαρaxis, from en, and χαρασσειν, 'to scarify,') Scarification.

Enchatonnement, Chatonnement.

Encheire'sis, Enchire'sis, Enchei'ria, (εγχειρησις, from en, and χειρ, 'the hand,') Galen uses this term as a part of the title to one of his works, which treats of dissection. It means the manual treatment of any subject.

Encheir'ia, Encheiresis.

Enchifrenement, Coryza.

Enchire'sis, Encheiresis.

Enchondro'ma, gen. Enchondro'matis, (en, χονδρος, 'a cartilage, and oma,) Chondroma.

Enchondro'ses, (same etymon.) Local out-growths from pre-existing cartilage, differing in this respect from chondroma.

Enchorion'osus, (en, χωρος, 'a place, and οσος, 'a disease,') Endemic.

Encho'rius, (εγχωρος,) Endemic.

Enchris'ton, (εγχριστον, from en, and χρειν, 'to anoint,') Liniment.

Enchu'sa, Anchusa.

Enchylo'sis, (εγκυλωσις, from εγκυλιζω, 'I press out juice,') Extraction.

En'chyma, gen. Enchym'atis, (εγχυμα, from en, and χυειν, 'to pour,') Infusum, Plethora.

Enchymo'ma, gen. Enchymo'matis, Enchymo'sis, (εγχυμωμα, from en, χυω, 'I pour, and oma,) By the ancients this word was used to designate the sudden effusion of blood into the cutaneous vessels, which arises from joy, anger, or shame; in the last instance constituting blushing. It differs from ecchymosis in there being, in the latter, extravasation of blood into the areolar texture, and its being produced by an external cause: a contusion, for example.

En'chysis, (εγχυσις,) Infusion.

Enclavé, (en, and (L.) claudere, 'to shut,') Wedged.

Enclavement, see Wedged.

Enclit'ic, see Synclitic.

Enclume, Incus.

Encl'ydas'ticus, intus fluctuans, (εγκλυσταστικός, from εγκλυδαζομαι, — en, and κλυζω, 'I wash, — 'I float in,') Floating in or between; — applied to liquids, e. g., to serum, pus, &c., contained in any cavity.

Encl'y's'ma, gen. Encl'y's'matis, (εγκλυσμα, from en, and κλυζιν, 'to wash,') Clyster.

Encœ'lia, (εγκοιλια, from en, and κοιλια, 'the belly,') The abdominal viscera. The entrails.

Encœ'li'gia, (encœ'lia, and αλγος, 'pain,') Tor-mina — e. Inflammatoria, Encœlitis.

Encœli'tis, Encœlii'tis, Encœli'alg'ia inflam-mato'ria, Inflammat'io abdomina'lis, (encœlia, and itis,) Inflammation of any of the abdominal viscera.

Encoleo'sis, (en, κολωσις, 'a sheath, and osis,) Invagination.

Encolpis'mus, (en, and κολπος, 'the vagina,') Injection or introduction of any thing into the vagina.

Encolpi'tis, gen. Encolpi'tidis, Col'pophlegm-hymeni'tis, (en, κολπος, 'the vagina, and itis,) Inflammation of the lining membrane of the vagina.

En'copē, (εγκοπη, from en, and κοπτειν, 'to cut,') Diacope, Incision.

Encra'nion, (en, and κρανιον, 'the skull,') Cerebellum.

Encra'nis, Cerebellum.

Encre, Atramentum.

Encye'sis, (εγκυσις, from en, and κυσις, 'pregnancy,') Fecundation, Pregnancy.

En'cymon, (εγκυμον, from en, and κυειν, 'to be pregnant,') Pregnancy.

Encymo'sia, Fecundation, Pregnancy.

Encyc'sis, (εγκυσις,) Pregnancy.

Encyst'ed, Cyst'idē obduc'tus, Sacca'tus, Sac-cula'tus, Sac'cated, Sac'culated, Pouch'ed. Enclosed in a kyst or cyst, or pouch, (en, and κυστις, 'a bladder,') (F.) Enkysté. An epithet given to certain tumors, or solid or fluid collections enclosed in a particular envelope or cyst. They are movable and often elastic to the touch. Such enclosure by a cyst has been termed encyst'ment, (F.) Enkystement.

Encys'tis, gen. Encys'tidis, Encys'tes, Tu'mor tunica'tus seu cyst'icus, Emphy'ma encys'tis, Lu'pia, Glan'dula Avicen'ne, No'dus. An encysted tumor.

Encyst'ment, see Encysted.

End Bulbs. Terminal nerve-corpuscles, similar to the Pacinian and touch-corpuscles. They were first particularly described by Krause, and are seen in the lips, tongue, palate, genitals, &c.

End Plates, Moto'rial. Small bodies in which nerves terminate, varying from $\frac{1}{5000}$ to $\frac{1}{350}$ of an inch in diameter, formed of an expansion of the end of a nerve-fibre with a small quantity of connective tissue. They are fixed to the muscular fibres, one for each.

Endadelph'ia, (endo, and ἀδελφος, 'a brother,') see Emboitement.

Endan'gium, properly Endangi'on or Endan-gi'um, Membra'na vaso'rum commu'nis, (F.) Tu-nique commune de Bichat, (endo, and αγγειον, 'a vessel,') The serous or lining membrane of vessels.

Endarteri'itis, gen. Endarteri'itis, (endo, and arteri'itis, 'inflammation of an artery,') Inflammation of the inner coat of an artery.

Endeic'ticus, (ενδεικτικός,) Indicant.

Endeixiol'ogy, Endeixiolog'ia, (endeixis, and λογος, 'a discourse,') The doctrine of indications.

Endeix'is, (ενδειξις, from en, and δεικνυμι, 'to show,') Indication.

Ende'mia, Endemic.

Endem'ic, Endem'ical, Ende'mia, Regiona'lis mor'bus, Ende'micus, (en, and ἔθνος, 'the people,') Encho'rius, Enchorion'osus, Vernac'ulus seu Ende'mius Mor'bus, En'demy, (F.) Endémie, Maladie régionale. A disease is said to be endemic, (F.) endémique, or to arise from endemic'ity (F.) endémicité, when it is owing to some peculiarity in a situation or locality. Thus, ague is endemic in marshy countries; goitre at the base of lofty mountains, &c. Some authors use the term in the same sense as epidemic. We have no accurate knowledge of the emanations or other circumstances which give occasion to endemic affections. We seem to know that some emanation from marshy lands does produce intermittents: but we are ignorant of the nature of such emanation.

Endémicité, see Endemic.

Endemicity, see Endemic.

Endemiology, Endemiolog'ia, (endemic, and logos, 'a discourse.') The doctrine of endemic diseases.

Endémique, Endemic.

En'demy, Endemic.

Endepider'mis, Epithelium.

Ender'mic, Ender'matic, Ender'micus, Ender'maticus, Emplas'troënder'mic, (F.) Endermique, (en, and δέρμα, 'the skin.') An epithet given to the method of treating diseases by placing the therapeutical agent in contact with the skin, especially after the cuticle has been removed; Ender'mism, Endermis'mus, Endermo'sis, Meth'odus ender'mica seu endermat'ica, Diadermat'ia. Morphia, strychnia, &c., are often administered in this way.

Ender'mis, see Endermic.

Endermis'mus, see Endermic.

Endermo'sis, see Endermic.

En'desis, (en, and δέω, 'I bind.') A ligature, bandage, connection. Hippocrates has so termed the ankle-joint.

En'dive, Cichorium endivia—e. Wild, Cichorium intybus.

Endiv'ia, Cichorium endivia.

Endix'is, (en, and δεικνυμι, 'to show,') Indication.

En'do, (ενδον, 'within,') as a prefix, within.

Endoäortit'is, gen. Endoäortit'idis, (endo, and aortitis, 'inflammation of the aorta.') Inflammation of the lining membrane of the aorta.

Endoärteri'tis, gen. Endoärteri'tidis, (endo, and arteritis,) see Arteritis.

En'doblast, (endo, and βλαστος, 'a germ,') see Periblast.

Endocar'de, Endocardium.

Endocar'diac, Endocar'dial, Endocardi'acus. Relating to the endocardium, or to the interior of the heart; as 'endocardiac sound or murmur,'—a sound produced within the cavities of the heart, in contradistinction to exocardiac, exocardi'al, or extracardiac sounds or murmurs, which are induced by conditions of the external surface of the organ.

Endocardi'tis, gen. Endocardi'tidis, Endocardi'tis, Encardi'tis, Cardi'tis inter'na, Inflamma'tio superfic'iei inter'næ cor'dis, Inter'nal Cardi'tis, Inflamma'tion of the inter'nal mem'brane of the heart, Bouillaud's Disease, (F.) Endocardite, (endo, cardium, and itis,) In this disease, the heart's action is visibly increased, and very manifest to the touch; the hand is strongly repelled, and, at moments, is sensible of a trembling vibratory motion. Percussion gives a dull sound over a surface of several inches, owing, according to Bouillaud, to the inflammatory turgescence of the heart, and the engorged state of its cavities. On auscultation, a bruit de soufflet is generally heard, masking one or both sounds of the heart; and the ear is sensible of a metallic ringing with each systole of the ventricle. The pulsations are rapid as well as strong, and, with few exceptions, irregular, unequal, and intermittent. The pulse, by the way, does not always indicate the force or number of the heart's contractions.

Endocar'dium, (endo, and καρδία, 'the heart,') (F.) Endocar'de. The membrane that lines the interior of the heart.

Endocho'rion, see Chorion.

Endocoli'tis, gen. Endocoli'tidis, (endo, colon, and itis,) Dysentery.

Endocymien, (endo, and κύμα, 'the product of conception,') A double monster by inclusion. See Emboisement.

Endodonti'tis, gen. Endodonti'tidis, (F.) Inflamma'tion de la Pulpe dentaire, Inflamma'tion of the Den'tal mem'brane, (endo, odontos, gen. odontos, 'a tooth, and itis,) Inflammation of the lining membrane of a tooth.

Endoënteri'tis, gen. Endoënteri'tidis, see Enteritis.

Endogastri'tis, gen. Endogastri'tidis, Esogastri'tis, (endo, and gastritis, 'inflammation of the stomach,') Inflammation of the lining membrane of the stomach.

En'dogen, see Endogenous.

Endogenet'ic, (endo, and γενεσις,) Having an origin from internal causes, as endogenetic diseases.

Endog'enous, (endo, and γεννω, 'I engender,') A term first applied to plants—hence called End'ogens—in which the new woody matter is deposited within the old, and towards the centre. In the animal, cells are often formed endog'enously, or within the cells, as in the case of the sperm vesicles.

An endog'enous an'eurism is one that originates spontaneously from lesions of the inner coat of the arteries.

Endokardi'tis, Endocarditis.

En'dolymph, Vitrine auditive.

Endometri'tis, gen. Endometri'tidis, (endo, and metritis, 'inflammation of the uterus,') Inflammation of the lining membrane of the uterus. When accompanied with a diphtheritic exudation, it is sometimes called Endometri'tis croup'osa. When the fundus is alone involved, it is termed fun'dal endometritis,—when of a syphilitic character, E. syphilit'ica. The terms corporeal and cervical Endometritis have been employed to express inflammation of the neck and body of the organ.

Endonarteri'tis, see Arteritis.

Endonephri'tis, gen. Endonephri'tidis, (endo, and nephritis,) Inflammation of the lining membrane of the pelvis of the kidney.

Endopericardi'tis, gen. Endopericardi'tidis, (F.) Endopéricardite, (endo, and pericarditis,) Inflammation of the endocardium and pericardium.

Endophlebi'tis, gen. Endophlebi'tidis, (endo, and phlebitis,) Phlebitis. Inflammation of the inner coat of a vein.

En'doplast, (endo, and πλασσειν, 'to form,') see Periplast.

Endormie, (en, and dormir, 'to sleep,') Datura stramonium.

En'doscope, Endoscop'ium, (endo, and σκοπεω, 'I view,') An instrument for inspecting internal parts, as the speculum uteri, laryngoscope, &c. Restricted, often, to a specular arrangement for viewing the urethra.

En'dosis, (ενδοσις, from en, and δίδωμι, 'I give up,') Remission.

Endoskel'eton, see Skeleton.

Endos'copy, (endo, and σκοπεω, 'I view,') Examination of internal parts, especially of the urethra, with an endoscope.

Endos'mic, Endosmotic.

Endosmom'eter. A graduated tube closed by a membrane, intended to estimate the amount of osmosis.

Endosmose, Endosmo'sis, Antoth'esis, Antothism'us, Pertru'sio mu'tua, Double Imbibit'ion, (endo, and ωσμος, 'impulse,') A term first used by Dutrochet, to express the action by which fluids pass from without to within organic membranes. The action of two fluids on each other, when separated by a membrane. The general conditions of the phenomena are—first, that they should have an affinity for the interposed membrane; and secondly, that they should have an affinity for each other, and be miscible.

At times, endosmose is used to signify the passage of the more transmissible fluid, while exosmose signifies that of the least transmissible.

The rapidity with which endosmose is accomplished varies according to the nature of the septum or tissue and of the penetrating body, and to the penetrability of the tissue.

Endosmot'ic, Endosmot'icus, Endos'mic, Endos'micus; same etymon. Belonging to endosmose:—as an 'endosmotic current.'

Endosquelette, see Skeleton.

Endoste'i'tis, gen. Endoste'i'tidis, Endosti'tis, (from endosteum, and itis.) Inflammation of the internal periosteum.

Endos'teum, (endo, and οστέον, 'a bone,') Medullary membrane.

Endosti'tis, gen. Endosti'tidis, Endosteitis.

Endothe'ial. Relating to the endothelium, as endothelial membrane.

Endothe'lium, (endo, and θηλή, 'a nipple,') The essential constituent of the bloodvessel, is said by Eberth to be a tubular system formed of a single layer of flat cells—endothelium—or a delicate nucleated membrane, the endothelial or perithelial tube, cell membrane of Remak. See Perithelium.

Endoüteri'tis, gen. Endoüteri'tidis, (endo, and uteritis), see Metritis.

Enduit (F.), ([L.] induire, 'to put upon,' 'to put on,') A coat; a fur. This term is often applied to a layer of greater or less thickness which covers the surface of certain organs, and particularly of the tongue and the interior of the mouth. The enduit is designated variously, according to its appearance, — enduit bilieux, jaune, blanc, &c. — a bilious, yellow, white coat or fur, &c. It is at times owing to the evaporation of the watery portions of the secretions; at others, to a morbid condition of the secretions;—generally, to both causes combined. The tongue, in such a condition, is said to be coated or furred; sometimes, loaded.

Enduit Choroidien, see Choroid.

Endurcissement, (en, and durcir, —[L.] durus, 'hard,'—'to harden,') Induration—e. du Cerveau, Sclerencephalia—e. du Cœur, Cardio-sclérose—e. Rouge, see Hepatisation—e. du Tissu cellulaire, Induration of the cellular tissue.

En'dyma (gen. Endym'atis) Ventriculo'rum, (ένδυμα, 'a garment,' from en, and δύειν, 'to put on,') Ependyma ventriculorum.

Eneche'ma, gen. Eneche'matis, (εννεμα, from en, and ηχημα, 'a sound,') Tinnitus aurium.

En'ema, gen. Enem'atis, (ενεμα, from ενειμι,—εν, and ειμι,—'I send in,') Clyster.

EN'EMA AL'OE'S, Enema or Clyster of Al'oes. (Αλοΐς, Alj., Potass. carbon., gr. xv., Mucilag. amyli, f3x. Ph. B., 1867.) Used in cases of ascarides and amenorrhœa.

EN'EMA ANOD'YNUM, Enema O'pii, An'odyne or Starch and O'pium Clyster. (Decoct. amyli, f3ii., Tinct. opii, f3ss. M. Ph. B., 1867.) Exhibited in cases of severe diarrhœa or dysentery.

EN'EMA ASSAFŒTIDÆ, E. foetidum.

EN'EMA CATHARTICUM, Cathart'ic or Purg'ing Clyster. (Olei. oliv., f3j., Magnes. Sulph., 3j., Mucilag. amyli, f3xv. M. Ph. B., 1867.)

EN'EMA COLOCYNTHIDIS, Clyster of Col'ocynth. (Ext. Colocynth., 3ss., Sapon. mollis, 3j., Aquæ, Oj. (Imp. meas.) M. Ph. L.) An efficient cathartic clyster.

EN'EMA COMMUNĒ, Com'mon or Domes'tic Clyster. (Water gruel or mollasses and water, Oss. or Oj.; add a little oil or lard, and a spoonful of common salt.) Given as a cathartic enema; and, without the common salt, as an emollient.

EN'EMA FOETIDUM, E. assafœtidæ, Fœ'id Clyster, Clyster of assafœtida, Mistu'ra assafœtidæ pro clysmatē, Clysm'a ton'icum et antispasmod'icum seu in'citans et se'dans, (F.) Lavement antispasmodique. (Assafœt., gr. xxx., Aquæ destillat., f3iv. Ph. B., 1867.) Given as an antispasmodic and anodyne.

EN'EMA MAGNE'SIÆ SULPHATIS, E. catharticum.

EN'EMA NICOTI'NÆ, E. Tab'aci, Tobac'co

Clyster. (Tabac, gr. xx., Aquæ Bullient, f3viiij. Ph. B., 1867.) It is employed in cases of strangulated hernia; but occasionally acts as a fatal poison when given in this way. The smoke of tobacco is sometimes thrown up the rectum to produce the same medicinal effects as the infusion.

EN'EMA O'PII, E. anodynum.

EN'EMA TAB'ACI, E. nicotianæ.

EN'EMA TEREBIN'THINÆ, Enema of Turpentine, Tur'pentine Clyster. (Ol. Tereb., f3j., Mucilag. amyli, f3xv. M. Ph. B., 1867.) To be administered in cases of ascarides, (oxyures), especially.

EN'EMA OF TUR'PENTINE, E. terebinthinæ.

Enepiderm'ic, Enepiderm'icus, (en, and upon, and δέρμα, 'the skin,') An epithet given to the method of treating diseases, which consists in the application of medicines, as plasters, blisters, &c., to the skin.

Energi'a, Action, Energy, Force.

En'ergy, Energi'a, (ενεργεια, from en, and εργον, 'action,') Action. Acting power. Also, vigor; as the 'muscular energy;' the 'brain acts with energy.'

Enerva'tio, Aponeurosis, Enervation.

Enerva'tion, Enerva'tio, (e, and nervus, 'strength,') The act of weakening—the state of being weakened. See Debility.

Enervatio'nes Tendin'æ, Inscriptiones tendineæ musculorum.

Ener'vitas, Inertia.

Enfance, Infancy.

Enfant, Infans—e. Légitime, see Legitimate—e. à Terme, see Fœtus.

Enfantement, Parturition.

Enflure, (en, and flare, 'to blow,') Swelling, Edema—e. des Jambes et des cuisses de la femme accouchée, Phlegmatia dolens.

Enfoncement Scaphoïde, (en, and fonder, 'to find the bottom,' fond,) Scaphoides fossa.

Enfonceure, Arthrodia.

Enfoncure, Arthrodia.

Engastrimisme, see Engastrimyth.

Engastrimysme, see Engastrimyth.

Engas'trimyth, (εγγαστριμυθς,) Engastrimythus, Englottogas'tor, Gastriloqu'us, Ventriloqu'us, Gastril'oquist, Eu'rycles, Eurycli'tus, Enteroman'tis, Gastroman'tis, (en, γαστηρ, 'the belly,') and μίσκος, 'I discourse,') Ventril'oquist, (F.) Ventriloque, Gastriloque. One who possesses the art of modifying his natural voice, so that it seems to come from a greater or less distance, and from different directions. It was formerly believed that such persons spoke from the belly; hence their name. It is an imitative art, and is called Ventril'oquism, Ventril'oquy, Ventrilocu'tion, (F.) Engastrimisme, Engastrimysme.

Engaiso'ma, gen. Engaiso'matis, Engisbma.

Engelure, (en, and geler, 'to be frozen,') Chilblain.

Enghien Montmorency, Min'eral Wa'ters of, Enghien-les-Bains. A hydrosulphurous water, four leagues from Paris, near Montmorency, which is possessed of some celebrity. It contains chloride of sodium, chloride of magnesium, sulphate of magnesia, sulphate of lime, carbonate of magnesia, carbonate of lime, silica, sulphohydrate of lime and magnesia, sulphohydric acid, carbonic acid and nitrogen. Season, from the first of May to October.

Engiso'ma, gen. Engiso'matis, Engaiso'ma, Engizo'ma, (εγγιζω, 'I approximate,') (F.) Embar-rure. A species of fracture of the skull, in which a splinter passes beneath the sound portion of the bone, and compresses the brain. Also, a kind of instrument used in fractures of the clavicle.

Eng'lish Disease, Rachitis.

Englot'togas'tor, (εγλωττογαστωρ, from en, γλωττα, 'the tongue,' and γαστηρ, 'the stomach,') Engastrimyth.

Engompho'sis, (εγγομφωσις,) Gomphosis.

Engorge'ment, (en, and [F.] gorge, 'the throat.) An obstruction occurring in the vessels of a part, giving rise to augmentation of volume. Congestion.

Engorgement des Membres Abdominaux à la Suite des Couches, Phlegmatia dolens—e. Hepatic, Hepatohæmia—e. Laiteux des membres abdominaux, Phlegmatia dolens.

Engouement (F.), Obstruc'tio, Iner'tia, (from [L.] angere, 'to choke.') Accumulation in a hollow organ of the matters secreted by it or carried into it. There is said to be Engouement des bronches, when the mucus accumulates in the bronchia; and Engouement des intestins, when the matters which ought to pass through the intestines are detained,—as in a case of strangulated hernia.

Engouement des Poumons, E. of the lungs, in Pathological Anatomy, signifies that state of the lungs in which a mixture of air and thin fluid escapes from them when cut into.

Engourdissement, Torpor.

Engraft, Graft.

Engrenure, Suture.

Enhæmato'sis, Hæmatosis.

Enix'a, (enitor, enizus, 'I bring forth,') Puerpera.

Enix'io Fœ'tūs, Parturition.

Enix'us (gen. Enix'us) Fœ'tūs, Parturition.

Enkeph'alón, (εγκεφαλον,) Encephalon.

Enkysté, Encysted.

Enkystement, Châttonnement, see Encysted.

Enmetri'tis, see Metritis.

Enneaphar'macus, (εννεα, 'nine,' and φαρμακον, 'a medicine,') A medicine composed of nine simple ingredients. A pessary, so formed. The Antid'otus Heracl'idis, described by Galen, and some plasters by Aëtius and Celsus, are likewise termed enneapharmaca.

Enneuro'sis, (en, and νευρον, 'nerve,') Innervation.

Enor'mis, (e, and norma, 'rule,') Abnormal.

Enor'mitas Cor'dis, Heart, hypertrophy of the.

Enor'mon, (ενορμων,) Hor'mon, Impetum faciens, (en, and ορμω, 'I rouse,' 'excite,') A word used by Hippocrates in the same sense as vital principle is by modern physiologists.

Eno'sis, (ενωσις, from en, and εις, 'one,'—'union,') Insertion.

Enosto'sis, Entosto'sis, (en, οστον, 'a bone,' and osis,) A morbid growth of bone inwards—the opposite to exostosis.

Enragé, (en, and rage, 'rabies,') Rabid.

Enrhumér, (en, and rhume, 'rheuma,') See Cold.

Enrouement, (en, and [L.] raucus, 'hoarse,') Raucedo.

Enroulement, (from enrouler, 'to roll round,') A procedure devised by Vidal (de Cassis) for the treatment of varicocele, by silver threads passed in front of and behind the veins, and twisted at their extremities.

Euryth'mus, (ευρυθμος, from en, and ρυθμος, 'number,') Having rhythm. An epithet applied to the pulse when its pulsations occur with some degree of order. It is opposed to Aryth'mus, and differs from Euryth'mus, which signifies 'regular.'

Ens. A being. Paracelsus meant, by this term, the power exerted by certain beings on the body. He speaks of the Ens De'i, E. Astro'rum, E. natura'le, E. virtutis, E. morbo'rum, E. de potentibus, spiritibus, &c. These absurd denominations suggested to some of the ancient chemists a name for certain chemical preparations. The muriate of ammonia and iron was called Ens mar'tis; the muriate of ammonia and copper, Ens ven'eris; and Ens pri'mum was, with the alchemists, the name of a tincture which they considered possessed of the power of transmuting metals.

ENS MAR'TIS, Ferrum ammoniatum—e. Veneris Boylei, Ferrum ammoniatum.

Ensellure, (en, and sella, 'a saddle,') Lordosis, lumbar.

Ensiform, Ensiformis, (ensis, 'a sword,' and forma, 'form,') Swordlike.

ENSIFORM APOPH'YSES or PROC'ESSES are the lesser alæ of the sphenoid bone.

ENSIFORM APPEN'DIX or CAR'TILAGE is the xiphoid appendix of the sternum. See Xiphoid.

Ensiformis, Xiphoid.

Ensistern'al. Relating to the ensiform process of the sternum. Bécclard gave this name to the last osseous portion of the sternum. He also called it l'os ultimisternal. See Ultimosternal.

Ensomato'sis, (ενσωματος, from en, and σωμα, gen. σωματος, 'a body,') Incorporation.

Entalax'is, (en, and σταλαζειν, 'to drop,') Instillation.

Ent'strophé, (en, and στρεφω, 'I turn,') Inversion of a part; as of the eyelids.

Entacous'tic, Entacus'ticus, (ento, and acoustic,) Relating or appertaining to sonorous movements, originating in the ear or adjacent structures.

Entaille (F.), (en, and tailler, 'to cut,') Excis'io, Ec'copé, Ec'tomé. A deep wound made by a sharp instrument obliquely. Entailles and Taillades are, also, used to designate deep scarifications, made for the purpose of producing a speedy disgorgement of any tumefied part, such, for example, as are made in the tongue in certain cases of glossitis.

Entamure (F.), (en, and τεμνιν, 'to cut,') A slight incision or laceration.

Entanthe'ma, gen. Entanthe'matis, Eisanthema.

Enta'sia, (en, and τεννιν, 'to stretch,') Tonic spasm—e. Articularis, Contractura—e. Loxia, Torticollis—e. Priapismus, Priapismus—e. Systremma, Cramp—e. Tetanus, Tetanus—e. Tetanus anticus, Emprosthotonus—e. Trismus, Trismus.

Ent'tasis, (εντασις,) Tonic spasm.

Entat'icus, (εντατικός,) Intensi'vus. A medicine which invigorates the venereal appetite.

Entelmin'tha, (ento, and ελμιν, gen. ελμινος, 'a worm,') Worms.

Entendement, ([L.] in, and tendere, 'to stretch, direct,') as intendere animum, 'to direct the mind,') Intellect.

Enteradel'phia, (enteron, and αδελφος, 'a brother,') See Emboitement.

Enterad'enes, (enteron, and αδην, 'a gland,') The mucous glands of the intestines.

Enteradenog'raphy, Enteradenogra'phia, (enteron, αδην, 'gland,' and γραφω, 'a description,') A description of the intestinal glands.

Enteradenol'ogy, Enteradenolog'ia, (enteron, αδην, 'gland,' and λογος, 'a treatise,') That part of anatomy which treats of the intestinal glands.

Enteraërecta'sia, (enteron, αηρ, 'air,' and εκτασις, 'dilatation,') Tympanites.

Enteral'gia, Enterodyn'ia, (enteron, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the intestines. Colic.

ENTERAL'GIA ACU'TA, Enteritis—e. Inflammatory, Enteritis—e. Saturnina, Colica metallica.

Enterangemphrax'is, Enterangiemphraxis.

Enterangiemphrax'is, Enterangiemphrax'is, (enteron, αγγειον, 'a vessel,' and εμπρασσω, 'I obstruct,') Obstruction of the vessels of the intestines.

Enteratroph'ia, Atroph'ia Intestino'rum, (enteron, and atrophia, 'want of nutrition,') Atrophy of the coats of the intestines.

Enteraux'é, (εντερον, 'intestine,' and αυξη, 'increase,') Hypertrophy of the muscular coat of the intestines.

Entereche'ma, gen. Entereche'matis, (enteron, and ηχω, ηχω, ηχημα, 'sound,') Son'itus intestinalis.

lis. The sound of the movement of the intestines, heard by the stethoscope.

Enterectasis, Dilatatio Intestino'rum, (enteron, and ectasis, 'dilatation.') Dilatation of the intestines, as in tympanites.

Enterelco'sis, Enterhelco'sis, Enterohelco'sis, (enteron, and ἄλωσις, 'ulceration.') Ulceration of intestines — Ulcera'tio intestina'lis, Ulcera intestina'lia, Exulcera'tio intestino'rum. Ulceration of special portions of the bowels, as the rectum, anus, &c., receives distinct names, as Exulcera'tio recti, E. ani, &c.

Enterelco'sia, (enteron, and εἰλεῖν, 'to involve.') Pleur.

Enterelo'sis, Pleur.

Enteremphrax'is, Infarc'tus Intestino'rum, Incarcera'tio intestino'rum inter'na, (F.) Étranglement des Intestins, E. Intestinale, (enteron, and εμφραξίς, 'obstruction.') Obstruction of the intestines, from accumulation of feces or otherwise. Also, Enterangiemphraxis.

Enteren'chyta, Enteren'chytes, (enteron, εν, and χέω, 'I pour.') Any surgical instrument for administering injections.

Enteropiploce'lē, Enteropiplocele.

Enteropiplomphalocelē, Enteropiplomph'alocele, (enteron, επιπλοον, 'omentum,' ομφαλός, 'navel,' and κηλη, 'rupture.') Hernia of the umbilicus, with protrusion of the omentum and intestine.

Enterhelco'sis, Enterelco'sis — e. Nervosa, Typhus (abdominal).

Enterhypertroph'ia, Hypertroph'ia intestino'rum, (enteron, and hypertrophia, 'excessive nutrition.') Hypertrophy of the coats of the intestines.

Enter'ia, see Diarrhœa.

Enter'ic, (from enteron.) Intestinal, as Enteric fecer.

Enter'ica. Diseases affecting the alimentary canal. Order I., Class I. (Cœliaca), of Good. Also, medicines affecting the alimentary canal.

Enter'ici (Mor'bi), in the classification of Dr. William Farr, means bowel diseases.

Enter'icus, (εντερικός.) Intestinal.

Entérique, Intestinal.

Entérite, Enteritis — e. Folliculense, see Typhus — e. Typhohémique, Typhoid fever.

Enteri'tis, gen. Enteri'tidis, (enteron, and itis.) Inflammation of the intestines. Empres'ma Enteri'tis, Intestino'rum inflamma'tio, Ileocoli'tis, Chordap'sus, Caum'a Enteri'tis, Enterophlog'ia, Enterophlogo'sis, Col'lica acu'ta seu inflammato'ria, I'leus inflammato'rius, Enteral'gia acu'ta seu inflammato'ria, Fe'bris intestino'rum seu ili'aca inflammato'ria, Enterop'gra, (F.) Entérite, Inflam-mation des Intestins. The essential symptoms of this disease are—violent abdominal pain, increased on pressure, with vomiting and inflammatory fever. Enteritis may affect both the peritoneal and the mucous coat of the intestines; and, in violent cases, all the coats may be implicated. The structure of the mucous and peritoneal coats is different; so are their functions in health and in disease. The inflammation of the serous coat, Seroenteri'tis, Ecoenteri'tis, resembles that of the cellular membrane; the inflammation of the mucous coat, that of the skin. The former is usually, therefore, of a more active character. Inflammation of the mucous coat, Esoenteri'tis, Endoenteri'tis, Mucoenteri'tis, Mu'cous Enteri'tis, Phlegmymeni'tis enter'ica, is generally attended with diarrhœa, and its pathology is identical with that of dysentery. Inflammation of the peritoneal coat is, on the other hand, generally attended with constipation.

Enteritis of the peritoneal coat, for such usually is the meaning of the word in the abstract, requires the most active treatment. Copious bleeding, followed up by a large dose of opium—and, if the symptoms be not decidedly ameliorated, repeating the bleeding and opium—warm fomentations, and blisters, are the chief agents to be relied upon. Purgatives ought not to be exhibited until the inflammation and spasm are abated by the use of the bleeding and opium. When the physician is called early, this plan will usually succeed. Sometimes, Enteritis passes into a chronic state, requiring much careful management. Broussais considered inflammation of the mucous coat of the stomach and intestines as the proximate cause of the phenomena of fevers.

ENTERITIS ARTHRITICA, Cœliagra — e. Colica, Colitis — e. Epiploitis, Epiploitis — e. Follicular, Typhoid fever — e. Folliculosa, see Typhus — e. Mesenterica, Mesenteritis — e. Mucous, see Enteritis — e. Pastulosa, Dothinenteritis.

Enterobro'sis, Enterorrhœ'is, Perfora'tio Intestino'rum, Intesti'num perfora'tum, (F.) Perfora-tion des Intestins, (enteron, and βρωσις, 'the act of gnawing.') Perforation of the intestines.

Enterocacé, Dysente'ria pu'trida seu typho'des seu scorbutica seu maligna, (enteron, and κακός, 'evil.') Adynamic dysentery, accompanied by phenomena indicating a pseudomembranous and gangrenous state of the lining membrane of the large intestine.

Enterocelē, Enterocèle, Her'nia seu Ecto'pia intestina'lis seu intestino'rum, (εντεροκηλη, from enteron, and κηλη, 'a hernia,' 'tumor.') Abdominal hernia, which contains only a portion of intestine, is so called. When it encroaches upon the vaginal canal, it is called enterovag'inal her'nia, vag'inal enterocèle.

ENTEROCÉLĒ REC'TI, Rectocèle — e. Vaginal, see Enterocèle.

Enterocelē'tes, (εντεροκηλητής.) Enterocel'licus, (εντεροκηλικός.) Affected with intestinal hernia.

Enteroccephalop'gra Infan'tum, (enteron, κεφαλή, 'head,' and πυρ, 'fire or fever.') Hydrocephalus internus.

Enterocœ'licus, (enteron, and κοιλία, 'the abdomen.') Relating to the cavity of the abdomen.

Enterocoli'tis, gen. Enterocoli'tidis, (F.) Enté-ro-colite, (enteron, and colitis, 'inflammation of the colon.') Inflammation of the small intestine and colon.

Enterocystocelē, Enterocys'tocèle, (enteron, κύστις, 'a bladder,' and κηλη, 'a tumor.') Hernia formed by the bladder and a portion of intestine.

Enterodar'sis, (enteron, and δαρσις, 'skinning.') Excoriation of the mucous membrane of the intestines.

Enterodothiē'nia, (enteron, and δόθην, 'a pustule.') Dothinenteritis.

Enterodyn'ia, (enteron, and ὀδυνή, 'pain.') Enteralgia.

Enteropiploce'lē, Enteropip'locele, Enteropiploce'lē, Her'nia intestina'lis omenta'lis, (enteron, επιπλοον, 'the omentum,' and κηλη, 'tumor.') Hernia, formed by intestine and omentum.

Enteropiplom'phalus, (enteron, επιπλοον, 'the omentum,' and ομφαλός, 'the umbilicus.') Umbilical hernia, containing intestine and omentum. Almost all umbilical herniæ are of this kind.

Enterog'raphy, Enterogra'phia, (enteron, and γραφη, 'description.') The part of anatomy which describes the intestines.

Enterohæmorrhæ'gia, Hæmatochezia.

Enterohelco'sis, Enterelco'sis.

Enterohydrocelē, Enterohy'drocèle, (enteron, ὕδωρ, 'water,' and κηλη, 'tumor.') Intestinal hernia complicated with hydrocele.

Enterohydrom'phalus, (enteron, ὕδωρ, 'water,' and ομφαλός, 'the navel.') Umbilical hernia, in which the sac contains, along with a portion of intestine, a quantity of serum.

Enterōischioce'lē, Enterōisch'iocèle, (enteron, ἰσχίον, 'ischium,' and κηλη, 'tumor.') Ischiat'ic her'nia, formed of intestine.

Enterolithi'asis, (enteron, and λίθιασις, 'the formation of stone.') The formation of concretions in the intestines.

Enterol'ithus, see Calculi of the stomach and intestines — e. Bezoardus, Bezoar — e. Scybalum, Scybala.

Enterol'ogy, Enterolog'ia, (enteron, and λογος, 'a discourse.') The part of anatomy which treats of the intestines.

Enteromala'cia, Enteromalax'is, (F.) Ramolissement de l'Intestin, (enteron, and μαλασσω, 'I soften.') Softening of the mucous or other coats of the intestine.

Enteromalax'is, Enteromalacia.

Enteroman'tis, (enteron, and μαντις, 'a diviner.') Engastrimyth.

Enteromeroce'lē, Enterome'rocele, (enteron, μηρος, 'the thigh,' and κηλη, 'tumor.') Crural hernia, formed of intestine.

Enteromesenter'ic, Enteromesenter'icus, (F.) Entéro-mésentérique. Relating to the intestine and mesentery.

Enteromesenter'ica Fe'bris. MM. Petit and Serres have given this name to the typhoid form of adynamic fever, in which the intestines are ulcerated, with enlargement of the corresponding mesenteric glands. See Typhus.

Entéromésentérite, Tabes mesenterica — e. Mésentérite typhoïde, see Typhus.

Enteromor'pha Compres'sa, (enteron, and μορφή, 'shape.') One of the algæ, used by the Sandwich Islanders as an esculent.

Enteromphaloc'e'lē, Enterom'phaloccele, Enteromphalus.

Enterom'phalus, Enteromphaloc'e'lē, (enteron, and ομφαλος, 'umbilicus.') Umbilical hernia, formed of intestine.

Enteromycodori'tis, gen. Enteromycodori'tidis, (enteron, μυκος, 'slime,' δωρα, 'skin,' and itis.) Inflammation of the mucous membrane of the intestines.

En'teron, (εντερον, from εντος, 'within.') Intestine.

Enteroparal'ysis, Enterople'gia, Paral'ysis intestino'rum, (enteron, and παρωσις, 'paralysis.') Paralysis of the intestines.

Enteroparisago'ge, (enteron, para, τις, 'in,' and αγω, 'I lead.') Intussusceptio.

Enteropathi'a, Enterop'athy, (enteron, and παθος, 'disease.') Disease of the intestines in general.

ENTEROPATHI'A CANCERO'SA, Enteroscir'rhus, Enterosteno'sis scirrho'sa seu organ'ica, Enterosarco'mia, Indura'tio seu Scir'rhus seu Can'cer seu Carcino'ma Intestino'rum, (F.) Cancer des Intestins. Cancer of the intestines.

Enteroperis'tolē, Enterosphig'ma, Her'nia incarcerationis, Incarceratio intestina'rum, (enteron, and περιστελλω, 'I contract.') Constriction or obstruction of the intestines, from a cause which acts either within the abdomen, or without it, as in strangulated hernia.

Enterophlo'gia, (enteron, and φλογω, 'I inflame.') Enteritis.

Enterophlogo'sis, Enteritis.

Enterophthi'sis, (enteron, and φθισις, 'consumption.') Consumption of the bowels. Consumption owing to suppuration in the intestines.

Enterophy'mata, sing. Enterophy'ma, (enteron, and φυμα, 'a swelling.') Tuber'cula intestino'rum. Tubercles of the intestines.

En'teroplasty, Enteroplas'ticē, (enteron, and πλασσω, 'I form.') A plastic operation for the restoration of an intestine.

Enterople'gia, (enteron, and πληγη, 'a stroke.') Enteroparalysis.

Enterop'ya, (enteron, and πυρ, 'fire or fever.') Enteritis. Also, enteromesenteric fever, Entéropyr'ie of Alibert.

ENTEROP'YRA ASIAT'ICA, Cholera — e. Biliosa, Fever, bilious.

Entero'r'hagy, Enterorrhagia.

Enterorhaph'ia, Enterorrhaphia.

Enterorrhag'ia, Enteror'r'hagy, Entero'r'hagy, (enteron, and ρην, 'violent rupture.') Hemorrhage, or excessive discharge from the bowels.

ENTERORRHAG'IA SIM'PLEX, Hæmatochezia.

Entero'r'hagy, Enterorrhagia.

Enterorhaph'ia, Enteror'r'haphē, Enteroraph'ia, Enteror'r'haphy, (enteron, and ραφή, 'a suture.') Suture of the intestines, for the relief of injuries done to them.

Enterorrhheu'ma, gen. Enterorrhheu'matis, Rheumatis'mus Intestino'rum, (enteron, and ρευμα, 'defluction, rheumatism.') Rheumatism of the intestines.

Enterorrhex'is, (enteron, and ρησσω, 'I break.') Enterobrosis.

Enterorrhœ'a, (enteron, and ρεω, 'I flow.') Diarrhœa, Melena.

Enterosarco'cēlē, Enterosar'cocele, (enteron, σαρξ, 'flesh,' and κηλη, 'a tumor.') Intestinal hernia, complicated with fleshy excrescence, or rather sarcocele.

Enterosarco'mia, (enteron, and σαρξ, gen. σαρκος, 'flesh.') Enteropathia cancerosa.

Enteroscheoc'e'lē, Enteros'cheoccele, Enteroscho'cēlē, (enteron, σχιν, 'the scrotum,' and κηλη, 'tumor.') Scrotal hernia consisting of intestine.

Enteroscir'rhus, Enteropathia cancerosa.

Entero'ses, (εντερον, 'intestine.') A class of diseases, comprehending all those that are seated in the intestines.

Enterosphig'ma, gen. Enterosphig'matis, (enteron, and σφιγγω, 'I bind tightly.') Enteroperistole.

Enterosteno'sis, (enteron, and στενωσις, 'stricture.') Stricture or constriction of the intestines. See Ileus.

ENTEROSTENO'SIS ORGAN'ICA, Enteropathia cancerosa — e. Scirrhus, Enteropathia cancerosa — e. Volvulus, Ileus.

Entérotome, Enterot'omy, (enteron, and τομή, 'incision.') A name given by J. Cloquet to an instrument for promptly opening the intestinal canal through its whole extent. It consists of a pair of scissors, one blade of which is much longer than the other, and rounded at its extremity. This is passed into the intestine.

Enterotom'ia, Enterot'omy. In anatomy, it signifies dissection of the intestines. In surgery, it means an operation, little used, which consists in opening the intestines, in order to evacuate the fecal matters accumulated in it; for example, in certain cases of hernia, accompanied with contraction of the intestinal canal; in operations for an artificial anus, performed on the newborn, where the rectum is imperforate or not existing, &c.

Enterot'omy, Enterotomia.

Enteroty'phus, see Typhus.

Enterovag'inal. Relating to the intestine and vagina, as Enterovag'inal fistula.

Enterozo'a, (entero, and ζωον, 'an animal,') Worms.

Enterydroc'e'lē, Enterohydroc'e'lē, (enteron, εὐδωρ, 'water,' and κηλη, 'rupture.') Intestinal hernia, with hydrocele.

Enthelminth'es, (ento, and ελμινθ, gen. ελμινθος, 'a worm,') Worms.

Entheoma'nia, (ενθος, — en, and θεος, 'God,' — 'inspired,' and mania.) Demonomania.

Enthet'ic, Enthet'icus, (ενθετος, — en, and θετος, — 'placed, introduced.') Put in, introduced, — as Enthet'ic diseases, Enthet'ici (Mor'bi) of Dr. William Farr, those produced by inoculation or infection.

En'thlasis, Es'phlasis, Illis'io, (en, and θλαω, 'I break.') A fracture of the cranium, with comminution, in which the bone is depressed, or has lost its level.

ENTHLASIS CRA'NI, Effractura cranii.

Entité, Entity.

En'tity, En'titas, (F.) Entité, (en, gen. entis, 'a being.') The being or essence of anything. It has been used somewhat vaguely, in modern French medicine more especially, to signify apparently a general or essential disease, the nature and seat of which cannot be determined.

Ento, (εντος, 'within.') In composition, within.

En'toblast, (ento, and βλαστος, 'a germ.') See Cytoblast, and Molecule.

Entoce'lē, (ento, and κλη, 'rupture,') Ectopia.

ENTOC'E'LĒ LEN'TIS. Dislocation of the crystalline into the anterior chamber of the eye.

Entogonyan'con, (ento, γονυ, 'the knee,' and γκων, 'a bend,') Genou va'ra seu val'ga seu intror'sum flex'a, (F.) Genou Cagneux, Calfknee, X leg. Bending of the knees inwards. The state of being knockkneed or in-kneed, (Prov.) Knappkneed, (Sc.) Nulekneed.

Entohy'aloid Mus'cæ, see Metamorphopsia.

En'tomé, (en, and τομή, 'incision,') Sarcotome.

Enton'ia, (εντονια,) Tension, Tonic spasm.

Enton'ic, Enton'icus, En'tonus, (en, and τονος, 'tone,') Having great tension or exaggerated action.

Entonnoir, (en, and tonne, 'a tun,') Calix, Infundibulum — e. du Ventricule moyen du Cerveau, Infundibulum of the brain.

En'tonus, (εντονος,) Entonic.

Entopar'asites, Worms.

Entophthal'mia, (ento, and ophthalmia,) Ophthalmia affecting the interior of the eye.

En'tophyte, Entoph'yton, pl. Entoph'ytæ, (ento, and φυτόν, 'a vegetable,') A vegetable parasite, and especially one growing in the interior of the body. For the chief entophytes, see Fungus.

Entophyt'ic, Entophyt'icus. Of or belonging to an entophyte, — as 'an entophytic growth.'

Entopter'ygoïd, see Pterygoïd.

Entop'tic, Entop'ticus, (ento, and οψις, 'vision,') Relating or appertaining to the vision of objects within the organ of sight, — as of the bloodvessels of the retina.

Entorse, (en, and torquere, torsum, 'to twist,') Sprain.

Entostethid'ia, (εντοστηθίδια,) Entrails.

Entos'thia, (εντοσθια,) Entrails.

Entos'thoblast, (εντοσθε, 'within,' and βλαστος, 'a germ,') See Cytoblast, and Molecule.

Entosto'sis, (ento, and οστέων, 'a bone,') Enostosis.

Entotorrhœ'a, (ento, and otorrhœa,) See Otorrhœa.

Entozæ'na, (ento, and ozæna,) See Ozæna.

Entoxicis'mus, (en, and toxicum, 'a poison,') Poisoning.

Entox'ismus, Poisoning.

Entozo'a, (ento, and ζων, 'an animal,') pl. of Entozoon. Animals adapted to living in the interior of other animals. See Worms.

Entozoaires, Worms.

Entozo'al, Entozoa'lis. Relating or appertaining to entozoa.

Entozoa'ria, Worms.

Entozoogen'esis, (entozoa, and γενεσις, 'generation,') Helminthiasis.

Entozoology, (entozoa, and λογος, 'a description,') Helminthology.

Entozoo'ma, (ento, and ζων, 'an animal,') One of a class of tumors produced by collections of fluid, being made up of entozoa cysts, as the echinococcus.

Entozo'on, see Entozoa — e. Folliculorum, Acarus folliculorum.

Entrailles, Entrails.

En'trails, Splanchna, Encæ'lia, Vis'cera, Entosthid'ia, Entos'thia, Entostethid'ia, Intera'nea, (from enteralia, a word of low Latin, coming from εντερον, 'intestine,') It is used for the viscera enclosed in the splanchnic cavities, and especially for those in the abdomen; Bowels, Guts, (F.) Entrailles, Viscères. Ex'ta has had this latter signification, but it was most frequently used by the ancients, as by Pliny, for the thoracic viscera.

En'traînement, Training.

Entrecroissement, 'Intercrossing.' The reciprocal passage of fibres, and especially of nerve fibres, from one side of a median line to the other.

Entrefesson, (entre, 'between,' and fesses, 'the buttocks,') Chafing.

En'tricho'ma, gen. En'tricho'matis, (en, and τριχωμα, — τριχ, gen. τριχος, — 'hair,') The tarsal cartilage, and the edge of the eyelids, in which the cilia are implanted.

Entrop'ion, Entrop'ium, (en, and τρεπω, 'I turn,') Inver'sio palpebrarum, Capillit'ium, Trichi'asis, T. cilio'rum, Introsuscep'tio seu Blepharopto'sis entrop'ium, Blepharoclo'sis, Trichia, Tricho'sis. A name given to the inversion or turning inwards of the eyelids, so that the eyelashes are directed towards the globe of the eye, irritate and inflame it, and give rise to the affection called Trichi'asis.

The contact of the hair with the surface of the eye occasions considerable irritation of the conjunctiva, which is soon followed by chemosis, ulceration of the eye, and other symptoms, such as fever, watchfulness, &c.

If the disease be entropion, as above defined, that is, dependent upon the inversion of the eyelids, it must be remedied, — either by dispersing the oedema or swelling of the eyelids, or by cutting out a portion of the skin. When the disease is dependent on a vicious direction of the cilia, they must be plucked out, and the bulbs be cauterized.

Entrop'ium, Entropion.

Entypo'sis, (εντυπωσις,) see Glene.

Enuclea'tion, Enuclea'tio, (enucleare, enucleatum, — e, and nucleus, — 'to take out a kernel,') This term has been proposed for the operation of removing tumors, &c., without cutting into them.

The word is used in Pharmacy for the operation of shelling or removing the kernels of any nut.

En'ula Campa'na, Inula Helenium.

Enu'lon, (ενυλον, from en, and ουλον, 'the gum,') The inner part of the gums. The external part was called ουλον, and that between the teeth αγνος.

Enure'sis, (ενουρεσις, — en, and ουρεω, — 'I void the urine in bed,') Paru'ria incontinens, Incontin'en'tia uri'næ, Excre'tio uri'næ involunta'ria seu inopportu'na, Mic'tio involunta'ria, Uracra'tia, Urorrhœ'a, Perirrhœ'a, Anischu'ria, Hyperure'sis, Di-am'nes, Invol'untary discharge' of u'rine, Incontinence of u'rine. This affection is most common in advanced life. It may depend on too great irritability of the bladder, or on distension or injury of the fibres about its neck, paralysis of the organ, Cystoparal'ysis, Cystople'gia; the presence of an irregularly shaped calculus impacted in the urethra near its commencement; rupture of the bladder and urethra; renal disease; or on pressure exerted on the bladder by the distended womb or by a tumor. It often occurs after difficult labor, but generally yields in the course of a week or ten days; the catheter being introduced twice a day in the meantime.

The treatment must of course vary according to the cause; and when the affection on which it is dependent cannot be removed, the discharge of urine may be prevented by exerting a degree of compression on the urethra by means of appropriate instruments; or a urinal may be employed to receive the urine as it passes off.

Envelope Ovarique, ('coat of the ovary,') Zona pellucida.

Envie, (from (L.) invidia.) Hangnail, Malacia, Nævus — e. de Vomir, Nausea.

Enyp'nion, (ενυπνιον, from en, and ύπνος, 'sleep,') Somnium.

Enys'tron, (ἐνυστρον, from ἀναιεν, 'to complete.') Abomasus.

Enzoō'tia, Enzoōty.

Enzo'oty, Enzoō'tia, Enzoō'ticus (mor'bus), (F.) Enzoōtie, (en, and ζῶον, 'animal.') An endemic disease attacking animals.

Ep, Eph, Epi, (ἐπ, ἐφ, ἐπι, 'upon, above;') in composition, generally means 'augmentation, addition, increase, reciprocal action, repetition.' Hence:

Epacmas'ticus, (ἐπακμαστικός, from ep, and ακμαζω, 'I increase.') An epithet applied to fevers, Fe'bres epacmas'ticæ, whose symptoms go on augmenting in violence, from the commencement to the termination. Such fevers are, also, called Epanadidon'tes. See Acmasticus.

Epagogii'tis, gen. Epagogii'tidis, (ἐπαγωγίων, 'prepuce,' and itis, 'inflammation.') Posthitis.

Epago'gium, (ἐπαγωγίον, from ep, and αγω, 'to draw.') Phimosis, Prepuce.

Epanadiplo'sis, (ἐπαναδίπλωσις, from ep, and ἀναδίπλωσις.) Anadiplosis.

Epanalep'sis, (ἐπαναληψις, from ep, and ἀναληψις.) Anadiplosis, Analepsia.

Epanas'tasis, (ἐπαναστασις, from ἐπανιστημι, 'I cause to rise up.') The formation of a tumor. The breaking out of an eruption—Erup'tio exanthematis. A pustule.

Epanaste'ma, gen. Epanaste'matis, (ἐπαναστημα,) Exanthem, Swelling.

Epanchement, (e, and pandere, pansum, 'to spread.') Effusion.

Epan'esis, (ἐπανεσις, from ἐπανημι, 'I remit.') Remission.

Epan'etus, Remittent—e. Hecticus, Hectic fever—e. Malignus flavus, Fever, yellow—e. Mitis, Remittent fever.

Epanortho'sis, (ep, and ἀνορθω, 'I make straight.') Restauratio.

Epanthe'ma, gen. Epanthe'matis, (ep, and ἄνθος, 'a flower.') Exanthem.

Epanthis'ma, gen. Epanthis'matis, Exanthem.

Epaphæ'resis, (ἐπαφαίρω,—ep, apo, and αἶρω, 'I take,'—'I take away,') Repeti'ta subla'tio seu evacuatio. A repeated abstraction or evacuation. It was formerly used synonymously with repeated blood'letting, Phlebotomia iterata.

Epaphris'mus, (ep, and ἄφρος, 'froth.') Despumation.

Epar'ma, gen. Epar'matis, (ἐπαρμα, from ep, and ἀφαινω, 'to use up.') Tumor.

Epar'sis, (ἐπαρσις,) Tumor.

Épau'le, (old (F.) espaule, from σπάθη, spatha, 'the scapula.') Humerus.

Epencra'nis, (ep, en, and κρανιον, 'the skull.') Cerebellum.

Epen'dyma, gen. Ependym'atis, (ep, and ἐνδυνω, —en, and δυνω, 'I enter;') hence, πεπλυνμα, 'an upper garment or cloak.') Membrane.

EPENDYMA VENTRICULORUM, En'dyma seu Indumen'tum ventriculo'rum. The lining membrane of the ventricles of the brain, formed by a prolongation of the pia mater, and probably also of the arachnoid.

Épéron, (old (F.) esperon, 'spur,') Hippocampus minor—é. des Artères, Spur.

Epervier, Accipiter.

Eperrière des Murailles, Hieracium murorum.

Eph, in composition, see Ep.

Ephebæ'on, (ἐφηβαίων,) Ephebæ'um, (eph, and ἦβη, 'pubes,') The parts of generation; also, the region of the pubes, as well as the hair upon the pubes. It meant, likewise, a part of the ancient gymnasium in which the rhetoricians, philosophers, &c., disputed.

Ephebæ'um, Mons veneris.

Ephebi'a, or Ephe'bia, (ἐφηβεία,) Pu'bertas. The age of puberty.

Ephebos'yné, (ἐφηβοσύνη,) Puberty.

Ephe'botes, (ἐφηβοτης,) Puberty.

Ephe'bus, (ἐφηβος,) Pu'bens, Pu'ber, (F.) Pu- bère, Éphèbe. One who has attained the age of puberty.

Ephed'rana, (ἐφεδρανα, from eph, and ἰδρα, 'a seat,') Nates.

Ephel'ois, (eph, and ἔλκος, 'an ulcer,') The crust or scab of an ulcer.

Éphélide Ignéale, see Melasma—é. Scorbutique, Chloasma.

Ephe'lides, (ἐφηλίδες, from eph, and ἥλιος, 'the sun,') Epichro'sis, Mac'ula sola'ris, Mac'ulae fus'cae seu lenticula'res, Vitilig'ines, Pha'ci, Pan'us lenticula'ris, Lentic'ula, Lenti'go, Ephe'lis Lenti'go seu Lentic'ula seu à so'lè, Nigre'do à so'lè, Spilo'sis ephe'lis, Æsta'tes, Effi'la, Freck'les, Sun'spots, Sun'burn, (Prov.) Fernitickles, Fantickles, Farnitickles, Fernfreckles, Fanfreckles, Fornpeckles, Freckens, Murfles, (F.) Taches de rousseur. This term includes not only the yellow lentiginæ, which appear on persons of a fair skin, and the larger brown patches, which also arise from exposure to the direct rays of the sun, but also those large dusky patches which are very similar in appearance, but occur on other parts of the surface, that are constantly covered. See Chloasma. They do not extend further than the skin. Many cosmetics have been recommended for their removal. Simple spirituous lotions, or weak mineral acids, applied a few times in the day, are as effectual as any other means.

One affected with freckles is said to be freckled, (Sc.) Fairnitickled, Fernitickled, (Prov.) Farnitickled, Fantickled, Fernfreckled, Fornpeckled, Freckened, Murfled, (F.) Tacheté de Rousseurs.

Ephe'lis, (ἐφηλιδις,) see Ephelides—e. Alba, Achroma—e. Hepatica, Chloasma—e. Lentigo, Ephelides—e. à Sole, Ephelides.

Ephe'lotes, (ἐφηλοτης, from eph, and ἥλος, 'a nail,') Leucoma.

Ephe'mera, Dia'ria, (ἐφημερος, 'lasting a day,') from eph, and ἡμερα, 'a day,') That which continues a day. An epithet given to diseases, and particularly to fevers, which last only a day. Fe'bri's dia'ria seu sim'plex seu Ephe'mera, Ephem'erop'ya, Febric'ula, Ephem'eral, Di'ary or Sim'ple Fe'uer, (F.) Fèvre éphémère. The term prolonged ephe'mera is sometimes used for fevers, which cease after two or three days' duration.

EPHE'MERA AN'GLICA PES'TILENS, Sudor anglicus—e. Britannica, Sudor anglicus—e. Maligna, Sudor anglicus—e. Mortifera, Plague—e. Pestilentialis, Plague.

EPHE'MERA PUERPERA'LIS, E. puerperarum, (F.) Ephémère Puerpérale. A fever occurring a few days after delivery, generally accompanied by diminution of the milk and lochia. Also sometimes called Weed.

EPHE'MERA SUDATO'RIA, Sudor anglicus.

Éphémère, see Ephemera—e. Puerpérale, Ephemera puerperalis.

Ephem'erop'ya, (ephemera, and πυρ, 'fire,') 'fever,') Ephemera.

Ephe'merus, (ἐφημερος,) Quotidian.

Ephial'tes Hypochondri'aca, (ἐφιαλτης, from eph, and ἄλλομαι, 'I leap,') Incubus vigilantium—e. Nocturnus, Incubus—e. Vigilantium, Incubus vigilantium.

Ephidro'ses, (G.) Ephidrosen. A division of the family Ekzematosen, of Fuchs, comprising morbid varieties of sweating.

Ephidro'sis, (ἐφιδρώσις, from eph, and ἵδρω, 'I sweat,') Hidro'sis, Idro'sis, Suda'tio, Siccat'io. Of old, it meant, at times, a slight sweating, sudatiun'cula, of no value, and of bad augury; at others, a good and critical sweat. It has likewise been used for a copious sweat, which may be either universal or partial.

EPHIDRO'SIS, Desudatio—e. Cruenta, Sudor cruentus—e. Saccharata, Sudor dulcis.

EPHIDRO'SIS PROFU'SA, E. spontanea seu idiopath'ica, Hydropede'sis, Exsuda'tio, Exuda'tio,

Hyperphidrosis, Hyperhydro'sis, Hydrorrhœ'a, Hidropede'sis, (F.) Flux de Sueur. An excessive sweating. A colliquative sweat. Such copious perspirations are generally owing to debility, and require the use of tonics, especially of the mineral acids, opium, &c.

EPHIDROSIS SACCHARATA, Sudor dulcis.

Ephippium, (ἐφίπιον, from eph, and ἵππος, 'a horse.') Sella Turcica.

Eph'odos, (ἐφ'ὁδος, from eph, and ὁδός, 'a way,' 'a road or avenue to a place.') Hippocrates uses this word in three senses: 1. For the vessels or canals, which give passage to the excrements of the body. 2. For a periodical attack or accession of fever; and 3. For the approach of similar or dissimilar things which may be useful or hurtful to the body.

Eph'rata Springs. These are in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. The water is pure; and facilities are afforded for bathing—warm and cold.

Epi, in composition, see Ep.

Epi, (old (F.) espi.) Spica.

Epi'alos, (ἐπι'αλος,) Hepi'alos, Quer'cera, Quer'quera. A name given by the ancients to fever, when the hot stage was mingled with irregular chills. Also, the cold stage of fever.

Epial'tes, (ἐπι'αλτης, from epi, and ἄλλομαι, 'I leap.') Incubus.

Epian, Frambœsia.

Epible'ma, gen. Epible'matis, (ἐπιβλημα,) Catoblema.

Epib'olê, (ἐπιβολη,) Incubus.

Epican'this, Epican'thus, (from epi, and κανθός, 'the angle of the eye.') A defective formation, in which a fold of skin passes from the root of the nose over the inner canthus of the eye. In the plural epican'thides—the angles of the eye.

Epicar'dium, (ἐπι, and καρδιά, 'the heart.') See Pericardium.

Epicar'pium, Pericar'pium, (ἐπι, and καρπος, 'the wrist.') An application made to the wrists, or to the region of the pulse, was so called.

Epicaum'a, gen. Epicaum'atis, (ἐπικαυμα, from epi, and καίω, 'I burn.') Encauma.

Epicaus'is, (ἐπικαυσις,) Encauma.

Epicerast'ica, (ἐπικεραστικός, 'soothing,' from epi, and κεράννυμι, 'I temper.') Emollients.

Epich'olos, (ἐπιχολος, from epi, and χολή, 'bile.') Bilious.

Epichor'dis, gen. Epichor'didis, (ἐπιχορδής, from epi, and χορδή, 'a gut.') Mesentery.

Epichor'ion, (ἐπι, and χορίον, 'skin.') See Decidua, Epidermis.

Epichor'ium, Epidermis.

Epich'risis, (ἐπι, and χρίω, 'I anoint.') unction.

Epichro'sis, Spilo'sis, (ἐπι, and χρώμα, 'color.') Simple discoloration of the surface. Ephelides.

EPICHRYSIS ALPHO'SIS, see Albino—e. Pescilia, Achroma—e. Spili, see Nævus.

Epich'ysis, (ἐπι, and χύω, 'I pour.') Affusion.

Epico'elides, (ἐπι, and κωλεις, 'the eyelash' [?].) Cilia, see Palpebra (superior.)

Epico'masis, (ἐπικοιμασμαι, (ἐπι, and κοιμασμαι, 'I lie down to rest,' 'I sleep.') Decubitus ad dormien'dum, Dormit'io. The position of sleeping, as well as sleeping itself.

Epico'lic, (ἐπι, and κωλον, 'the colon.') The epicolic region, regio'nes epico'licæ, are those parts of the abdomen which correspond to the colon.

Epico'le'sis, (ἐπι, and κολλα, 'glue.') Agglutination.

Epicon'dyle, Epicon'dylus, (ἐπι, and κονδύλος, 'a condyle.') A name given by Chaussier to an eminence at the outer part of the inferior extremity of the os humeri; so called, because it is seated above the condyle. The epicondyle gives attachment to the outer lateral ligament of the elbow joint, and to a very strong tendon to which several of the muscles of the posterior part of the forearm are attached.

Epicon'dylocubita'lis, see Anconeus—e. Radial, Supinator radii brevis—e. Sus-métacarpien, see Radialis—e. Sus-phalangettien commun, Extensor digitorum communis—e. Sus-phalangettien du petit doigt, Extensor proprius minimi digiti.

Epicon'dylus, Epicondyle.

EPICON'DYLUS LATERA'LIS. The external tuberosity of the humerus. See Epicondyle.

EPICON'DYLUS MEDIA'LIS, Epitrochlea.

Epico'pho'sis, (ἐπι, and κωφωσις, 'deafness.') Deafness supervening on another disease.

Epicra'nium, (ἐπι, and κρανιον, 'the cranium.') A name given to different parts seated on the cranium. The skin, aponeurosis between the occipital and frontal muscles, and the whole of the scalp, have been so called. Portal includes under this name the occipito-frontalis muscle, pyramidalis nasi, and superior and anterior auricular muscles. The pericranium.

Epicra'nium, Occipitofrontalis.

Epico'rasis, Contempera'tio, (ἐπικρασις, from epi, and κραννυμι, 'I mix,' 'I temper.') A term used by the humorists for an amelioration of the humors. They called Cure by Epicrasis—per epicrasin—a mode of treatment by imagined alteratives which they supposed to be possessed of the power of gradually correcting the vitiated humors.

Epicro'us'is, (ἐπι, and κρουω, 'I strike.') Per-cussion.

Epicten'ium, (ἐπικτενιον, from epi, and κτενις, 'pubes.') Pubes.

Epict'e'ti Mor'bi, (ἐπικτητος, from epi, and κτασμαι, 'I acquire.') Acquired diseases.

Epicye'ma, gen. Epicye'matis, (ἐπικυημα, from epi, and κυειν, 'to conceive.') Superfoetation.

Epicye'sis, Superfoetation.

Epicystotom'ia, (ἐπι, and cystotomia.) See Lithotomy.

Epidem'ic, Epidem'ius, Epidem'icus, (F.) Epidémique, (ἐπι, and δῆμος, 'the people.') Appertaining to an epidemic. An epidemic.

EPIDEM'IC CONSTITU'TION, Epidemy—e. Disease, Epidemy—e. Influence, Epidemy.

Epidémicité, see Epidemy.

Epidem'icus, Epidemy.

Epidemiog'raphy, Epidemiograph'ia, (ἐπιδεμυ, and γραφή, 'a description.') A history or description of epidemics.

Epidemiol'ogy, Epidemiolog'ia, (epidemy, and λογος, 'a description.') The doctrine of epidemics.

Epidémique, Epidemy.

Epidem'ius, (ἐπιδήμιος,) Epidemy.

Ep'idemy, Epidem'ic, Epidem'ia, Mor'bus pub'licus seu popula'ris seu epidem'icus seu epidem'ius, Epidem'ic disease, (F.) Epidémie. A disease which attacks at the same time a number of individuals, and which is referred to some particular constitutio aeris, or condition of the atmosphere, E. influence, E. constitutio, with which we are utterly ignorant. It differs from endem'ic, the latter being owing to locality; but it is obvious, that should a particular epidemic constitution of the air—epidemic'ity, (F.) épidémicité—exist along with a favoring endemic condition, these combined influences may act in the causation of several of those serious and fatal complaints, which at times visit a district, and are never afterwards met with, or at least not until after the lapse of a considerable period.

Epidem'drum Vanil'la, (ἐπι, and δένδρον, 'a tree.') See Vanilla.

Epid'eris, (ἐπιδέρσις,) Epider'rhis, Epider'rhion, Hypod'eris, Hypoder'mis, Hypoder'rhis, (ἐπι, and δερσις, 'a skin.') This word, with some, means the nymphæ; with others, the clitoris; with others, again, the prepuce of the clitoris.

Epider'ma, gen. Epiderm'atis, Epidermis.

Epider'mata, (ἐπι, and δερμα, 'skin.') More correctly epidermo'mata. A class of outgrowths from the external integument, including warts, corns, corneous tumors, bunions, &c. See Epidermoma.

Epider'matis, Epidermis.

Epider'meous, Epidermic.

Epider'mic, Epider'micus, Epider'mal, Epider'malis, Epider'meous, Epider'midal, (F.) Epidermique. Belonging or relating to the epidermis, — as EPIDER'MIC CELLS, see Cell, epidermic.

Epider'midal, Epidermic.

Epidermidon'osi, Epidermidon'osi, (epidermis, and osis, 'disease.') Diseases of the epidermis.

Epidermino'sis, (epidermis, and osis.) According to Mr. E. Wilson, the morbid condition of the epidermis induced by epidermophyta.

Epider'mion, Epidermis.

Epider'mis, gen. Epider'midis, (ἐπίδερμις, gen. ἐπίδερμιδος.) Epider'mion, Epider'matis, Epider'ma, Epicho'rion, Epicho'rium, Sum'mitas cu'tis, Cu'tic'ula, C. ex'tima seu extre'ma, Cu'tis ex'tima seu sum'ma seu ul'tima, Pel'lis sum'ma, Pellic'ula sum'ma seu supe'rior, Lam'ina pri'ma cu'tis, Oper'culum cu'tis, (epi, and δέρμα, 'the skin.') Scarf'skin, Cu'ticle, (F.) Surpeau, Cuticle. A transparent, dry, thin membrane, devoid of nerves and vessels, which covers all the surface of the body, except the parts that correspond to the nails. It appears to consist of minute scales, placed one above the other. Chaussier considers it to be formed and reproduced by an excretory action of the true skin; to act like a dry varnish—Stra'tum Cor'neum—which prevents the immediate contact of bodies with the nervous papillæ, and consequently to deaden tactile impressions, which, without its intervention, might be painful. The Epider'mic, Epider'meous, or Epider'moid Sys'tem (as Bichat called it), in general anatomy, comprises three parts:—1. External Epidermis. 2. Epidermis spread over the mucous membranes. 3. The Nails and Hair.

EPIDER'MIS LIN'GUÆ, see Tongue.

Epider'moid, Epidermoï'des, (epidermis, and αἶδος, 'resemblance.') Resembling the epidermis.

Epidermo'ma, (επι, and derma, 'skin.') Epidermata.

Epidermoph'yton, pl. Epidermoph'ytæ, (epidermis, and φυτον, 'a vegetable.') See Chloasma.

Epider'rhion, (epi, and ῥέμα, 'skin.') Epideris.

Epider'rhis, (ἐπίδερρις.) Clitoris, Epideris.

Epider'rhitis, gen. Epider'rhitis, (epider'rhis, and itis.) Clitoritis, Nymphitis.

Epid'esis, (ἐπίδωσις, from epi, and δω, 'I bind,') Deligation, see Bandage—e. Hæmostasia, Ligature.

Epides'mis, Epidesmus.

Epides'mum, Epidesmus.

Epides'mus, (ἐπίδωμος.) Epides'mis, Epides'mum, Superliga'men. A fascia, bandage, or ligature, by which dressings are secured.

Epidid'yms, gen. Epididym'idis, (ἐπιδιδυμῖς, gen. ἐπιδιδυμῖδος, from epi, and διδυμος, 'a testicle,') Epidid'yms, Did'yms, Paras'tata, Testic'ulus accesso'rius, Ca'put tes'tis, Cor'pus varico'sum seu varicifo'r'me tes'tis, Supergemina'lis, (F.) Corps variqueux ou variciforme. That which is placed upon the testicle. A small, oblong, vermiform, grayish body, lying along the superior margin of the testicle. The Epididymis is a canal formed by the union of all the seminiferous vessels folded several times upon themselves, after having traversed the Cor'pus Highmoria'num. Its lower portion or tail, Ca'u'da seu glo'bus seu ca'put mi'nor, is curved upwards, and is continuous with the vas deferens; the opposite extremity is called the head, glo'bus seu caput ma'ior. The length of this canal, folded as it is upon itself and describing numerous curvatures, is, according to Munro, 32 feet.

Epididymi'tis, (epididymis, and itis.) Parastatitidis—e. Blennorrhagic, Hernia humoralis.

Epid'osis, (ἐπίδωσις, from epi, and δίδωμι, 'I give,') Augmentation, increase. A word applied to the natural increase of the body, or to the increase of a disease.

Epid'romé, (ἐπιδρομή.) Epidrom'ia, Epiph'ora, (epi, and δρομή, 'I run,') An afflux or congestion of humors.

Epidrom'ia, (ἐπιδρομία.) Epidrome.

Epifa'gus America'nus, (epi, and fagus, 'the beech,') Orobanche Virginiana—e. Virginianus, Orobanche Virginiana.

Epigæ'a, Epige'a or Epigi'a Re'pens, (ἐπιγῆα, from epi, and γη, 'the earth,') from its trailing growth, Trailing Arbutus, Ground Lau'rel, Mayflower, called, by the Shakers, Grav'elplant. A small, trailing plant, of the Family Ericaceæ, which grows in sandy woods, or in rocky soil, especially in the shade of pines. Its flowers appear in early spring, and exhale a rich, spicy fragrance. The leaves and stems are prepared and used like uva ursi.

Epigastral'gia, (epigastrium, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain at the epigastrium.

Epigas'tric, Epigas'tricus, Epigas'trius, (epi, and γαστήρ, 'the stomach,') This name has been given to several parts.

EPIGAS'TRIC AR'TERY, Arte'ria epigas'trica, Artère sus-pubienne, (Ch.) It arises from the external iliac, on a level with the crural arch; sometimes by a trunk proper to it, at others by one common to it and the obturator artery. It ascends upwards and inwards, behind the spermatic cord, follows the outer edge of the rectus abdominis muscle, and anastomoses, towards the umbilicus, with the internal mammary. The epigastric artery anastomoses, also, with the obturator, spermatic, lumbar, and intercostal vessels.

EPIGAS'TRIC RE'GION, Re'gio epigas'trica seu cardi'aca seu stomach'ica seu stomacha'lis, is the superior region of the abdomen, comprised between the false ribs on each side, and extending from the lower surface of the diaphragm to two fingers' breadth above the umbilicus. It is divided into three parts,—one middle region, the epigas'trium, and two lateral regions, the hypo-chon'dria.

EPIGAS'TRIC VEIN follows nearly the same course as the artery.

Epigas'tricus, Epigastric.

Epigas'trium, (ἐπιγαστρον, same etymon as Epigastric.) The belly; the epigastric region.

Epigas'trius, (ἐπιγαστριος.) Epigastric.

Epigastroc'e'le, Epigas'trocele, (epi, γαστήρ, 'the stomach,' and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Hernia, formed by the stomach, Gas'trocele. This name has been given more especially to hernia, which occurs towards the upper part of the linea alba or in the epigastric region, whether formed or not by the stomach.

Epige'a, Epigæa.

Epigene'ma, gen. Epigene'matis, (ἐπιγενημα.) Epigenesis.

Epigénèse, Epigenesis.

Epigen'esis, (epi, and γενεσις, 'generation,') (F.) Epigénèse. A theory of conception, according to which the new being is created entirely anew, and receives at once from each parent the materials necessary for its formation. Also, a new formation.

EPIGEN'ESIS, as well as Epigene'ma or Epigene'ma, is, also, applied to any symptom occurring during a disease, without changing its nature. An accessory symptom. Epiginom'enos, Superve'nient, has a similar acceptation.

Epiginom'enos, (ἐπιγινόμενος, from epi, and γίνομαι, 'I happen,') see Epigenesis.

Epiglot'tic, Epiglot'ticus, (epi, and γλωττις, 'the glottis,') Relating to the epiglottis.

EPIGLOT'TIC GLAND, Periglot'tis, Ca'ro glandu-lo'sa. A collection of small, glandular granula, situate in the adipose areolar texture at the base of the anterior surface of the epiglottis, in a triangular space, bounded anteriorly by the thyro-hyoid membrane and thyroid cartilage. It pours out an unctuous and mucous fluid, which lubricates the epiglottis, keeps it supple and movable, and prevents the larynx from being irritated by the constant passage of the air, in the act of respiration.

Epiglot'tis, gen. Epiglot'tidis, (ἐπιγλωττις, gen. ἐπιγλωττιδος,) Epiglot'tic car'tilage, Lig'ula, Operculum laryn'gis, Lin'gua Ex'igua, Lin'gua fis'tulae, Sublin'guum, Superlig'ula. A fibro-cartilage, situate at the upper part of the larynx, behind the base of the tongue. Its form is oval; texture elastic; thickness greater below than above, and greater in the middle than at the sides. By its smaller extremity, which is the lower, it is attached to the thyroid cartilage; its two surfaces are covered by the mucous membrane of the pharynx and larynx. The special use of the epiglottis would seem to be to cover the glottis accurately at the moment of deglutition, and, thus, to assist in opposing the passage of alimentary substances into the air tubes.

Epiglottit'is, (epiglottis, and itis,) Inflam'matio Epiglot'tidis, Angi'na epiglottide'a, (F.) Inflammation de l'Épiglotte. Inflammation of the epiglottis.

Epiglot'tum. An instrument, mentioned by Paracelsus, for raising the eyelids. It resembled the epiglottis in shape.

Epiglout'is, (epi, and γλουτος, 'the buttocks.') The superior region of the nates.

Epigna'thus, (epi, and γαθος, 'the jaw.') A double monster, in which an incomplete foetus is rooted, with its bloodvessels in the palate of one more complete.

Epigon'atis, (ἐπιγονατις, from epi, and γονη, 'the knee,') Patella.

Epig'onē, (ἐπιγονη,) Go'nē, Hypoph'ysis, Progen'ies, Pro'les, Sob'oles, Sub'oles, (epi, and γονη, 'seed,') Offspring. Progeny. Also, Superfoetation.

Epigon'ion, Foetus.

Epig'onis, (epi, and γονη, 'the knee,') Patella.

Epig'onon, (epi, and γονος, 'progeny,') Superfoetation.

Epigoun'is, (ἐπιγουνις, from epi, and γουνος, 'the knee,') Patella.

Epigu'nis, Patella.

Epila'tion, (e, and pilus, 'a hair,') Depilation.

Épilatoire, Depilatory.

Epilato'rium, Depilatory.

Epilemp'sis, Epilepsy.

Epilen'tia, Epilepsy.

in France, called Mal des Enfants. (The word is derived from ἐπιλαμβάνω, 'future,' ἐπιληψω, — ep, and λαμβανω, 'I seize,' — 'I seize upon.') It is a cerebrospinal disease, which may be idiopathic or symptomatic, spontaneous or accidental, and which occurs in paroxysms, with uncertain intervals between. These paroxysms are characterized by loss of consciousness and by convulsive motions of the muscles. Frequently, the fit attacks suddenly; at other times, it is preceded by indisposition, vertigo, and stupor. At times, before the loss of consciousness occurs, a sensation of a cold vapor is felt, hence called aur'a epilep'tica. This appears to rise in some part of the body, proceeds towards the head, and as soon as it has reached the brain the patient falls down. The ordinary duration of a fit is from 5 to 20 minutes. Sometimes it goes off in a few seconds; at others, it is protracted for hours. In all cases, there is a loss of sensation, sudden falling down, distortion of the eyes and face; countenance of a red, purple, or violet color; grinding of the teeth; foaming at the mouth; convulsions of the limbs; difficult respiration, at times stertorous; with, sometimes, involuntary discharge of feces and urine. After the fit, the patient retains not the least recollection of what has passed, but remains, for some time, affected with headache, stupor, and lassitude.

The disease is cerebrospinal, and is generally organic; but it may be functional and symptomatic of irritation in other parts, as in the stomach, bowels, &c. The prognosis, as to ultimate recovery, is unfavorable. It does not, however, frequently destroy life, but is apt to lead to mental imbecility. Dissection has not thrown light on its pathology.

To the attacks of epilepsy which are unaccompanied by convulsions, as is sometimes the case, the French give the name Petit-mal. The slight attacks are occasionally — often, indeed — preceded by vertigo, (F.) Vertige Épileptique, Épilepsie Vertige, Vertigo epilep'tica, Ma'lum mi'nus, Cer'ebral Épilepsy. The mind of the patient becomes, in the mildest cases, a blank, as it were; and hence the seizures are often described as blanks, faints, forgets, absences, darknesses, &c., consciousness being, as it were, lost for a few seconds. Fully formed epilepsy is the Grand-mal of the French, Sp'inal Epilepsy. When furious mania succeeds to a paroxysm, it is termed Ma'nia epilep'tica and Epilep'tic Delir'ium.

In the treatment, the cause must be sought after, and, if possible, removed. In the paroxysm but little can be done; but as the tongue is liable to be injured by the teeth, the jaws may be kept open by putting a cork or piece of wood between them. If the fit has been brought on by indigestible food, the stomach must be cleared. It is between the paroxysms that the great effort must be made. Generally, there is considerable irritability and debility of the nervous system, and hence tonics have been found the best remedies. Of these, perhaps the most powerful in epilepsy is nitrate of silver, given regularly and continued for months, if necessary. Preparations of iron, copper, and zinc, have also been used, and vegetable tonics and antispasmodics in general. Counter-irritants, as blisters, moxa, &c., may be employed, if necessary, along with this course.

Unfortunately, in many cases, these means are found insufficient, and all that can be done is to palliate, removing carefully the exciting causes; such as the use of spirituous liquors, strong emotions, violent exercise, &c.; and regulating the diet.

EP'ILEPSY, CER'EBRAL, see Epilepsy — e. Spinal, see Epilepsy.

Epilep'tic, (ἐπιληπτικός,) Epilep'ticus, Epilep't-

tus, Lunaticus, Caducans. One affected with epilepsy. Anything relating to epilepsy; as an epileptic individual, an epileptic symptom. Some authors also speak of epileptic remedies.

Epileptiform, Epileptoid.

Epileptoid, Epileptoides, Epileptiform, Epileptiformis, (epilepsy, and eidōs, 'resemblance.') Resembling epilepsy; as 'epileptoid symptoms.'

Épileur (F.). One employed in the French hospitals to practise epilation in affections involving the hair follicles.

Epilobium Angustifolium, (epi, and lobos, 'a pod,' the flowers seeming as if on a pod,) Great Willow herb. An indigenous plant, Order Onagraceae, which flowers in July. The root is emollient and slightly astringent.

EPILOBIUM COLORATUM, Purple-veined Willow herb, has similar properties.

EPILOBIUM VILLOSUM, a South African plant, is used at the Cape of Good Hope as a domestic remedy for cleansing foul ulcers.

Epimanes, (ἐπιμανής, from epi, and μαινομαι, 'I am in a rage at.') A name given to a maniac when in a paroxysm.

Epimeletai, (ἐπιμελητής, 'a care taker,' from epi, and μελω, 'I take care.') A name by which the ancient Persians called the curers of wounds, who followed their armies.

Epimorios, (ἐπιμοριος, 'unequal,' from epi, and μειρω, 'I divide.') An epithet applied to the pulse when unequal.

Épinard, ([Old F.] espinard, from épine, [L.] spina, 'a thorn or prickle,') Spinacia—é. Sauvage, Chenopodium bonus Henricus.

Épine, ([Old F.] espine,) Spine—é. de Cerf, Rhamnus—é. du Dos, Vertebral column—é. Gutturale, Nasal spine, inferior and posterior—é. Sphénoïdale, Sphenoidal spine—é. Vinette, Oxyacantha Galeni.

Epimeiosis, (ἐπιμεiosis, from epi, and μεω, 'I divide,') Dispensation.

Epinephelos, (ἐπινεφελος, from epi, and νεφελη, 'a cloud,') Nubilosus. Presenting a cloud. Applied to the urine.

Épineux, Spinous—é. du Dos, grand, Spinalis dorsi major, see Interspinales dorsi et lumborum—é. du Dos, petit, see Interspinales dorsi et lumborum.

Épingle, ([Old F.] espingle, from [L.] spinula, dim. of spina, 'a thorn,') Pin.

Épinière, ([Old F.] espinière,) Spinal.

Épino'tion, (ἐπινω'tion, from epi, and νω'tos, 'the back,') Scapula.

Epinyctides, pl. of Epinyctis, (ἐπινυκτις, gen. ἐπινυκτιδος, from epi, and νυξ, gen. νυκτος, 'the night,') Eruptions which appear on the skin in the night, and disappear in the day. Pustula livens et noctibus inquietans.

Epinyctis Pruriginosa, Urticaria.

Épione, (epi, and ων, 'ovum,') Decidua.

Épiparoxysmus. A paroxysm superadded to an ordinary paroxysm.

Épipas'tum, (ἐπιπασ'ton, from epi, and πασσω, 'I sprinkle,') Catapasma.

Épip'chu, (ἐπιπη'χυν, from epi, and πη'χυν, 'the elbow,') The upper part of the elbow. The part above the elbow.

Epiphenomenon, Post app'rens, Epiphenomenon, (same etymon as the next.) Any kind of adventitious symptom which occurs during the progress of an affection, and which is not as intimately connected with the existence of the disease as the symptoms properly so called.

Epiphania, (ἐπιφανεια, from epi, and φανω, 'I appear,') The external appearance of the body.

Épiphe'gus Virginia'na, (epi, and φηγος, 'the beech,') Orobanché Virginiana.

Epiphenomenon, Epiphenomenon.

Épip'lebus, (ἐπιφλεβος, from epi, and φλεψ, gen.

φλεβος, 'a vein,') An epithet given to those whose veins are very apparent.

Epiphleg'ia, (epi, and φλεγω, 'I inflame,') Inflammation.

Epiphlogis'ma, gen. Epiphlogis'matis, Erysipelatous inflammation.

Epiphlogo'sis, Hyperphlogosis.

Épip'ora, (ἐπιφορα, from epi, and φερω, 'I carry,') Dacryo'ma, Lacryma'tio, Delacryma'tio, Ilacryma'tio, Stillicid'ium lacryma'rum, Oculus lacrymans, Weeping, (F.) Larmolement. The watery eye; an involuntary and constant flow of tears upon the cheek. It is almost always symptomatic of some disease of the lachrymal passages, and occurs when the tears cannot pass into the ductus ad na'sum. Occasionally, it is owing to the tears being secreted in too great quantity; as in certain cases of ophthalmia. The treatment must of course be directed to the removal of the cause.

EPIPH'ORA, Epidrome, Ophthalmia—e. Alvi, Diarrhoea—e. Ptyalismus, Salivation.

Épip'hymata, pl. of Épip'hyma, (epi, and φνω, 'I grow,') Cutaneous diseases.

Épip'hysary, Epiphys'arius, Epiphys'ial, Epiphys'ialis, (F.) Epiphysaire. Relating or appertaining to an epiphysis.

Épip'hyses, (pl. of Épip'hysis,) Separation of, Diductio Epiphys'ium, Epiphysary Disjunctione. An uncommon lesion, being usually a traumatic separation of the epiphyses of bones before they are completely solidified.

Épip'hysis, (ἐπιφωσις, epi, and φνω, 'I grow,') Additamentum. Any portion of a bone, separated from the body of the bone by a cartilage, which becomes converted into bone by age. The epiphysis of the foetus becomes the apophysis of the adult. Full growth, according to M. Flourens, is attained when the epiphyses become apophyses, which he fixes at about 20 years of age in man.

EPIPH'YSIS CRU'RIS LONGIO'RIS IN'CU'DIS, Os orbiculare.

Epiphysitis, (epiphyses, and itis,) Inflammation of the epiphyses of bones.

Épip'hyte, Epiph'yton, pl. Epiph'ytta, (epi, and φω'ον, 'a plant,') Phytopar'asite. A parasite derived from the vegetable kingdom. Epiphytes are divided by Vogel into: 1. Vegetations in the human fluids, as the tor'ula cerevis'ie in vomited fluids, and faecal evacuations, and the sar'cina ventric'uli. 2. Vegetations on the external skin and its appendages, as in tinea favosa, mentagra, herpes tonsurans, and plica polonica; and, 3. Vegetations on the mucous membrane, as in the aphthae of children; in the cicatrices of the mucous membrane after typhus, &c. By some the term epiphytes is restricted to those vegetable parasites which grow on the surface of the body.

Épiphytic, Épiphyticus, (F.) Épiphytique. Relating or appertaining to epiphytes.

Epiplas'ma, gen. Epiplas'matis, (ἐπιπλάσμα, from ἐπιπλάσσω,—epi, and πλάσσω, 'I smear,') 'I plaster,') Cataplas'm. Galen uses it especially for an application of wheaten flour, boiled in hydrel'sum, and applied to wounds.

Épip'le'gia, (epi, and πληγη, 'a stroke,') Paralysis of the upper extremities.

Épip'lero'sis, (epi, and πληρωσις, 'repletion,') Excessive repletion; distension.

Épip'lo, from ἐπιπλοον, (epi, and πλω, 'I swim or float,') in composition, 'epiploon.'

Épip'locé, (ἐπιπλοκη, from epi, and πλεω, 'I twine,') Coition, Entanglement.

EPIP'LOCÉ INTESTINA'LIS, Conglomeratio intestino'rum. Conglomeration of the intestines.

Épip'loce'lé, Épip'locele, (epiplo, and κλη, 'tumor,') Épip'loic her'nia, Zirba'lis hernia, Hernia omenta'lis, Omenta'lis hernia, (F.) Hernie de l'épiploon. Omental hernia is recognized—but at times with difficulty—by a soft, unequal, pasty tumor, in which no gurgling sound is heard on pressing or reducing it. It is less dangerous than hernia of the intestines.

Epiploën'terocele'lê, Epiploën'terocele, (epiplo, εντερων, 'intestine,' and κηλη, 'a tumor.') Hernia, formed by the epiploon and a portion of the intestine. It is more commonly called Enteroëpiplocele.

Epiploën'teroscheoce'lê, Epip'loënteros'cheocele, Epiploenteroschoce'lê, (epiplo, εντερων, 'intestine,' σχιον, 'scrotum,' and κηλη, 'a tumor.') Hernia with omentum and intestine in the scrotum.

Epip'loic, Epiplo'icus. Relating to the epiploon.

Epip'LOIC APPEN'DAGES, Appendiculæ pinguedinosæ.

Epip'LOIC AR'TERIES, Arte'riæ Epiplo'icæ. The arterial branches, which are distributed to the epiploon, and which are given off by the gastrophilicæ.

Epiploischioce'lê, Epip'loisch'iocele, (epiplo, ισχιον, 'the ischium,' and κηλη, 'a tumor.') Hernia formed by the epiploon through the ischiatic notch.

Epiplo'i'tis, gen. Epiplo'i'tidis, (epiplo, and itis.) Inflammation of the omentum, Omenti'tis, Empres'ma periton'i'tis omentalis, Omen'ti inflam-ma'tio, Enteri'tis epiplo'i'tis, Omente'sis. A form of partial peritonitis.

Epiplo'me'roce'lê, Epip'lome'rocele, (epiplo, μηρος, 'the thigh,' and κηλη, 'a tumor.') Femoral hernia, formed by the epiploon.

Epiplo'm'phalocel'lê, (κηλη, 'a tumor,') Epiplo'mphalon.

Epiplo'm'phalon, Epiploë'm'phalon, Epiplo'mphalocel'lê, Hernia umbilical'is, (epiplo, and ομφαλος, 'the navel.') Umbilical hernia, formed by the epiploon.

Epip'loëcomis'tes, (epiplo, and κομιζω, 'I carry.') One who has the omentum morbidly enlarged. Also, one laboring under epiplocele.

Epip'loën, (επιπλοον,) (pl. Epiploa), Epip'loum, (epi, and πλω, 'I swim or float,') Omen'tum, Re'te, Retic'ulum, Der'tron, Zir'bus, Gan'gamê, Gan'gamum, Operimen'tum intestino'rum, Sac'cus epiplo'icus, Sag'e'na, The Caul, (Prov.) Flick, Web. A prolongation of the peritoneum, which floats above a portion of the intestines, and is formed of two membranous layers, with vessels and fatty bands distributed through it. Anatomists have described several epiploons. The chief use of the omentum seems to be to retain the viscera in situ, and to give passage to vessels.

Epip'LOON, COL'IC, Col'ic Omen'tum, Omen'tum co'licum, Third Epip'loon or Omen'tum, is a duplicature of the peritoneum, situate along the ascending portion of the colon, as far as its junction with the transverse colon. It is behind the great epiploon, and fills up the angle formed by the junction of the ascending with the transverse colon. Its two laminae are separated by colic arteries and veins.

Epip'LOON, GASTROCOL'IC, Great Omen'tum, Omen'tum gastrocol'icum seu ma'jus, Peritonæ'um duplica'tum, Re'te ma'jus, Zir'bus adipi'nus, consists of an extensive duplicature, which is free and floating on the folds of the intestines. It is quadrilateral, and longer on the left side than on the right:—its base being fixed, anteriorly, to the great curvature of the stomach; and, posteriorly, to the arch of the colon. It is formed of two laminae, each consisting of two others. In this epiploon a number of vessels is distributed, and there is much fat.

Epip'LOON, GASTROHEPAT'IC, Les'ser Omen'tum, Omen'tum hepatogas'tricum seu mi'nus, Membra'na macilen'tior, is a duplicature of the peritoneum which extends transversely from the right side of the cardia to the corresponding extremity of the fissure of the liver, and downwards from this fissure to the lesser curvature of the stomach, the pylorus and duodenum. Below it is the foramen or hiatus of WINSLOW; and between its laminae are lodged the biliary and hepatic vessels. It contains but little fat. If air be blown in at the foramen of Winslow, the cavity or sac of the omen'tum, Sac'cus Peritonæ'i retroventricular'is, Bur'sa omenta'lis will be rendered perceptible.

Epip'LOON, GASTROSPLE'NIC, Omen'tum Gastro-sple'nicum. A reflection of the peritoneum, which passes between the concave surface of the spleen and the stomach, from the cardiac orifice to near its great curvature, and which lodges the vasa brevia and splenic vessels between its laminae.

Epiplosarcom'phalus, (epiplo, σαρξ, gen. σαρκος, 'flesh,' and ομφαλος, 'navel.') Umbilical hernia, formed of indurated omentum.

Epiplosch'eoce'lê, Epiplosch'eocele, Epiploschoce'lê, (epiplo, σχιον, 'the scrotum,' and κηλη, 'tumor.') Scrotal hernia, formed by a displacement of the epiploon.

Epip'loum, Epiploon.

Epipnoi'a, (επιπνοια, from epi, and πνέω, 'I breathe.') Afflatus.

Epiporo'ma, gen. Epiporo'matis, (επιπύρωμα,—epi, and πύρωμα,—'I harden.') A tophaceous concretion which forms in the joints. The callus of fracture.

Epir'rhoë, (επιρροή,) Epirrhaë'a, (epi, and ῥέω, 'I flow.') Afflux or congestion of humors.

Epirrhaë'a, (επιρροια,) Epirrhaë.

Episarcid'ium, (epi, and σαρξ, 'flesh.') Ana-sarca.

Epis'chesis, (επισχισις, from επισχω, 'I restrain,') Retention. A suppression of excretions.

Epischet'icus, (επισχετικός,) Sis'tens, Re'primens, Co'hibens; 'restraining.' An agent that diminishes—secretion, for example.

Epis'chion, (epi, and ισχιον, 'ischium,') Abdomen, Pubes, Pubis os.

Episcleri'tis, (epi, sclerotica, and itis.) An affection characterized by the appearance of a small dusky-red elevation on the sclerotic, most frequently at the temporal portion near the insertion of the external rectus. It is accompanied with photophobia, redness, &c.

Episcopa'les (from episcopus, 'a bishop') Val'vulæ. Mitral valves.

Episei'on, (επισειον,) Pubis (os), Vulva, Labium pudendi, Tressoria.

Episema'sia, (επισημασια, from επισημαινω,—epi, and σημα, 'a sign,'—'I afford some sign,') Sema'sia. It has been used synonymously with signa, and also with the invasion of an attack of fever. See Annotatio.

Episi'o, (επισειον,) (modern) the labium pudendi,) in composition, labium pudendi.

Episioce'lê, (episio, and κηλη, 'rupture,') see Hernia, vulvar.

Episioëde'ma, gen. Episioëde'matis, (episio, and οίδημα, 'oedema,') Oedema of the labium pudendi.

Episioi'tis, gen. Episioi'tidis, (episio, and itis.) Inflammation of the labia pudendi.

Episi'on, (επισειον,) Episeion.

Epision'cus, Episiophy'ma, (episio, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') Tu'mor labio'rum. A swelling or tumor of the labia pudendi.

Episiophy'ma, gen. Episiophy'matis, (episio, and φύμα, 'a swelling,') Episioncus.

Episiorrhag'ia, (episio, and ῥαγη, 'rupture,') Hemorrhage from the labia pudendi.

Episiorrhaphy, Episiorrhaph'ia, (from episeion, and ῥαφη, 'suture,') An operation practised in cases of prolapsus uteri, which consists in paring the opposing surfaces of the labia pudendi, bringing them together and uniting them by suture, so as to diminish the outlet of the vulva.

Epispa'dia, (epi, and σπᾶω, 'I draw,') Hyper-spa'dia. The condition of an Epispadias.

Epispa'dias, Epispadi'us, Anaspa'dias, Anaspa'di'us, Hyperspa'dias, Hyperspa'di'us, Epi-spa'dian. The opposite to Hypospadias. One who has a preternatural opening of the urethra at the upper part of the penis.

Epispas'tics, (επισπαστικά,) Epispas'tica, Helc-tica, (F.) Épispastiques; (same etymon as Epispadia.) An epithet for every medicinal substance which, when applied to the skin, excites pain, heat, and more or less redness, followed by separation of the epidermis,—which is raised up by effused serum,—or by suppuration. Now usually restricted to blisters.

Epispas'ticum, (pl. Epispastica.) Blister.

Épispastiques, Epispastics.

Epispha'ria, (epi, and σφαῖρα, 'a sphere,') Some physiologists have applied this term to the different convolutions and sinuosities presented by the external surface of the brain.

Epispleni'tis, see Splenitis.

Epistactis'chesis, (epistaxis, and εχων, 'to restrain,') Arrest of bleeding from the nose.

Epistaphyli'ni, (epi, and σταφυλή, 'the uvula,') see Azygos Muscle.

Epis'tasis, Insident'ia, (επιστάσις, from epi, and σῴω, 'I rest,') A substance which swims at the surface of urine. It is opposed to the hypos'tasis or sediment. Epistasis has also been employed synonymously with suppression.

Epista'tion (F.), Epistatio, Pista'tion, Pista'tio, (e, and pistare, 'to pound,') consists in bruising in a mortar soft and parenchymatous substances.

Epistax'is, (epi, and σταῶ, 'I flow drop by drop,') Hæmorrhag'ia acti'va na'rrium, H. na-rin'ea seu na'rrium, Epistax'is junio'rum seu arte-rio'sa, Hæmorrhin'ia, Hæmorrhinorrhag'ia, Hæma-tis'mus, Rhinorrhag'ia, Stillicid'ium seu Stilla'tio Sang'uinis e na'rribus, Hæmorrhage from the pitu-itary men'brane, Bleed'ing at the nose, Nose'bleed, (F.) Hæmorrhagie nasale, Saignement du nez, Hæmorrhinie. This is one of the most common varieties of hæmorrhage; the organization of the Schneiderian membrane being favorable to it, as the bloodvessels are but slightly supported. It does not generally flow from both nostrils, and is very apt to recur. Puberty is the period at which it is most common. Its exciting causes are:—any thing that will induce local congestions, as running, coughing, blowing the nose, &c., provided there is a disposition to it. A common case of epistaxis requires but little treatment, especially if in a young person. Light diet and a dose or two of the sulphate of magnesia will be sufficient. In more severe attacks, cold and astringent washes of alum, sulphate of zinc, weak sulphuric acid, or creasote, may be used, and the nostrils be plugged anteriorly; but if the bleeding goes on posteriorly, —Choanorrhag'ia—the posterior nares must be plugged likewise,—the patient being kept with the head raised, and on dry diet. The flow of blood has been arrested by directing the patient to stand up with his head elevated, compressing the nostril whence the blood flows with the finger, raising the corresponding arm perpendicularly, and holding it in this position for about two minutes. A less vigorous circulation through the carotids appears to result from the increased force required to carry on the circulation through the upper extremity when raised. To prevent the recurrence, strict diet must be inculcated.

Epister'nal, Episterna'lis, (epi, and στερνον, 'the sternum,') An epithet applied to two bones which form part of the sternum, and are situate upon its superior and lateral part. In the young subject, they are attached to the sternum by a synovial membrane and a fibrous capsule. They have somewhat the appearance of the pisiform bones, but are of a greater size.

According to Professor Owen, the piece of a segment of an articulate animal, which is immediately above the middle inferior piece or sternum.

Episthot'onus, (επισθεν, 'forwards, and τενω, 'I extend,') A spasm of the muscles, drawing the body forwards. The word emprosthot'onus is more commonly employed.

Epis'trophê, (επιστροφή, from epi, and στρέφω, 'I turn,') Relapse.

Epistroph'eus, (επιστροφεις,) Axis.

Epis'trophus, (επιστροφος,) Axis.

Episynan'chè, (epi, and συνανچه or cynanche,) Episynangi'na. A Greek word, used by a modern writer for spasm of the pharynx, by which deglutition is prevented, and the solid and liquid food driven back towards the mouth or nasal fossæ.

Episynthet'ic, Episynthet'icus, (επισυντηρημι,—επι, συν, and τιθημι,—'I collect, accumulate,') The name of a medical sect, whose object it was to reconcile the principles of the Methodists with those of the Empirics and Dogmatics. Leonides of Alexandria seems to have been one of the first partisans of this sect; of which we know little.

Epit'asis, (επιτασις, from epi, and τενω, 'to extend,') The period of violence of a fever (Fe'bris inten'sio), attack, or paroxysm; sometimes it is used in the same sense as epistasis, for 'suppression.'

Epite'lium, Epithelium.

Epite'lium, Epithelia'lis, (epi, and θηλη, 'a nipple,') Appertaining or relating to the epithelium; as epithelial cells, and scales.

EPITHE'LIAL CAN'cer, Can'croid of the skin, Epithelio'ma, Carcino'ma epithelio'des seu epithe-lio'sum, Mor'bus Cancerifor'mis, is a morbid growth of epithelial cells; forming an epithe'lium tumor, which, by some, is regarded as carcinoma. See Canceroid.

Epithelio'ma, gen. Epithelio'matis, (epithelium, and oma,) Epithelial cancer.

Epite'lium, Epite'lium, Epite'lis, Epite'lia, Endepiderm'is. The thin layer of epidermis, which covers parts deprived of derma properly so called; as the nipple, mucous membranes, lips, &c. Modern histological researches have shown that it exists in different forms—pave'ment, cyl'inder, and vi'bratile or cil'iated epithelium. Tes'selated, pave'ment, scaly, lamel'lar, tubular, or flat'tened epithe'lium, Epithe'lium polyed'ricum, and E. lamello'sum, (F.) Épithélium pavimenteux, covers the serous and synovial membranes, the lining of bloodvessels, and the mucous membranes, except where cylinder epithelium exists. It is spread over the mouth, pharynx, and œsophagus, conjunctiva, vagina, and entrance of the female urethra. Cyl'inder, colum'nar, or prismat'ic epithe'lium, Epithelium cylin'dricum, (F.) Épithélium cylindrique, is found in the intestinal canal, beyond the cardiac orifice of the stomach; in the larger ducts of the salivary glands; in the ductus communis choledochus, prostate, Cowper's glands; vesiculæ seminales, vas deferens, tubuli uriniferi, and urethra of the male; and lines the urinary passages of the female, from the orifice of the urethra to the beginning of the tubuli uriniferi of the kidneys. In all these situations it is continuous with tessellated epithelium, which lines the more delicate ducts of the various glands. For the uses of the cil'iated epithe'lium, Epithe'lium vi'brans, see Cilia.

Mr. Bowman has applied the term spheroid'al to a variety of epithelium, the cells of which, for the most part, retain their primitive roundness; or, being flattened where they touch, acquire a polyhedral figure. At times, these show a disposition to pass into the columnar, or the tessellated variety; and, hence, this form has been called the transit'ional. The spheroidal epithelium is found in the urinary passages, where it succeeds the columnar epithelium of the urethra at the internal orifice of that canal, and lines the whole of the bladder, ureters and pelvis of the kidneys. It is found, also, in the excretory ducts of the mammary, perspiratory, and of many mucous glands; and a modification of it lines the inmost secreting cavities or commencing ducts of glands generally.

Epithelium, Ciliated, Columnar, Tesselated, &c., see Epithelium — e. Vascular, Perithelium, vascular.

Epithem, Epithema or Epithema, gen. Epithematis, (ἐπίθεμα or ἐπίθημα, from ἐπί, 'I place upon.') This term is applied to topical applications, which cannot be classed either under ointments or plasters. Three sorts of epithems have been usually distinguished, — the liquid, dry, and soft, which comprise fomentations, bags filled with dry substances, and cataplasms.

Epithesis, (ἐπίθεσις.) (Same etymon.) The rectification of crooked limbs by means of instruments.

Epithymia, (ἐπιθυμία, and θυμός, 'desire.') Morbid desires or longings.

Epithymia, gen. Epithymia, (ἐπιθυμία, from ἐπί, and θυμίαμα, 'fumigation,') Fumigation.

Epithymum, (ἐπί, and θυμός, 'thyme,') Cuscuta epithymum — e. Officinatum, Cuscuta Europaea.

Epitrochlea, Epitrochlea Media, (ἐπι, and τροχία, 'a pulley,') (F.) Epitrochlea. That which is situate above a pulley. Chaussier gives this name to the unequal, round protuberance situate on the inside of the inferior extremity of the humerus above its articular trochlea. It is the part usually called the inner or lesser condyle of the humerus. From it originate several muscles of the forearm, to which it has given part of their names, according to the system of Chaussier.

Epitrochlo-carpi-palmaire, Palmaris longus — e. Cubito-carpien, see Cubital muscles — e. Métacarpien, Palmaris magnus — e. Phalangien commun, Flexor sublimis perforatus — e. Radial, Pronator radii teres.

Epizo'a, pl. of Epizo'on, (F.) Epizoaires, Ectoparasites, (ἐπί, and ζῶον, 'an animal.') Parasitic animals, which infest the surface of the body, or the common integument.

Epizootia, Epizooty, Epizootic, (F.) Epizootie. (Same etymon.) A disease which reigns among animals. It corresponds, in the veterinary art, to epidemic in medicine.

Epizootic, Epizooticus. Relating or appertaining to an epizooty, — as an 'epizootic aphtha.' An Epizooty.

Epizoty, Epizotia.

Ep'oché, (ἐποχή, from ἐπί, and ἔχω, 'I have or I hold.') Doubt, suspension of judgment — Suspensa sententia. Sometimes employed in the same sense as epischesis or suppression.

Epocheteusis, (from ἐποχενω, 'I turn water from its course,') Derivation.

Epo'dé, (ἐποδή, from ἐπί, and ὠδή, 'a song,') Incantation.

Epo'mis, (ἐπ'omis, Superhumeralis, (ep, and ὤμος, 'the shoulder,') The acromion. The upper part of the shoulder.

Epomphalium, Epomphalum.

Epomphalion, (ἐπομφάλιον,) Uterus.

Epomphalum, Epomphalum, (ep, and ὀμφαλός, 'the navel,') A medicine which, when placed upon the umbilicus, moves the belly.

Eponge, old (F.) Eponge, Spongia — e. d'Eglantier, Bedegar — e. Préparée, see Spongia — e. Torrifiée, Spongia usta.

Epoques, ('periods,') Menses.

Epосто'ma, (ep, osteon, and oma,) Exostosis.

Epосто'sis, (ep, osteon, and osis,) Exostosis.

Epreintes, (e, and premere, 'to press,') Tenesmus.

Epse'ma, gen. Epse'matis, (ἐψημα, from ἐψω, 'I boil,') Decoction.

Epse'sis, Decoction, Elixatio.

Ep'som, Min'eral Waters of. Epsom is a town in Surrey, about 15 miles from London. The water is a simple saline — consisting chiefly of sulphate of magnesia, which has consequently received the name of Epsom salts, though no longer prepared from the Epsom water.

Epuisement, (e, and puiser, 'to draw,') Exhaustion.

Epu'lis, (ἐπουλῖς, from ep, and οὐλον, 'the gum,') Odon'tia excrescens, Sarco'ma epu'lis, Ulen'cus, Excrescentia gingivæ, (F.) Épulis, Épulis. An excrescence on the gum, sometimes ending in cancer.

Epu'lo'sis, (ἐπουλωσις, from ep, and οὐλω, 'I cicatrize,') Cicatrization.

Epu'lo'tica, (ἐπουλωτικά,) Cicatrisantia.

Épurgé, (e, and purgare, 'to purge,') Euphorbia lathyris.

Equal, Æqualis. An epithet applied particularly to the pulse and to respiration. The pulse and respiration are equal, when the pulsations and inspirations which succeed each other are alike in every respect.

Equilibrium, (æquus, 'equal, and librare, 'to weigh,') In medicine, this word is sometimes used to designate that state of organs, fluids and forces, which constitutes health.

Equi'na Caud'a, see Cauda equina.

Equi'nia, (equinus, 'belonging to a horse,') Gland'ers, (F.) Morve. A dangerous contagious disorder, accompanied by a pustular eruption, which arises from inoculation with certain diseased fluids generated in the horse, the ass, and the mule. Two forms are met with, — E. m'itis, contracted from horses affected with grease, and E. glandulo'sa, a dangerous and commonly fatal disease communicated to man, either in the acute or chronic form, from the glandered horse. The veterinary surgeons make two varieties of the disease in the horse — Gland'ers, Mal'lia, Mal'ias'mus, Mal'liè, Mal'lis, Mal'leus; and Far'cy, F. gland'ers, Far'cy poisoning, Farcino'ma, Farcin'men, Farcin'ium, Mal'leus farcimino'sus, Mor'bus farcimino'sus, Cochex'ia lymphat'ica farcimino'sa, (F.) Morve farcineuse, Farcin; — the former affecting the pituitary membrane and occasioning a profuse discharge from the nostrils, with pustular eruptions or small tumors, which soon suppurate and ulcerate, being attended by symptoms of malignant fever and by gangrene of various parts, — the latter being the same disease, but appearing in the shape of small tumors, Far'cy buds, about the legs, lips, face, neck, &c., of the horse; sometimes very painful, suppurating, and degenerating into foul ulcers. They are often seen together.

The mild cases require little treatment but rest; the more severe generally resist all remedies.

Equise'tum Arven'sé, (equus, 'a horse, and seta, 'a bristle,') see Hippuris vulgaris — e. Hyemale, see Hippuris vulgaris — e. Minus, Hippuris vulgaris.

Equita'tion, Equita'tio, Hippe'i'a, Hippa'sia, Hippeu'sis, (equitare, equitatum, 'to ride on horseback,') Horseback exercise. A kind of exercise, advisable in many diseases, although improper in others — in uterine affections, for instance. It has been much recommended in phthisis pulmonalis. It is less fatiguing than walking, and consequently more available in disease. But to prevent disease, where much exercise is required, the latter is preferable.

Equiv'ocal, Æquiv'ocus, Equiv'ocus, (æquus, 'equal, and vox, gen. vocis, 'voice,') Those symptoms are occasionally so denominated which belong to several diseases. Generation is said by some to be 'equivocal,' when it is, or seems to be, spontaneous. See Generation.

Equivorous, Equivorus, Hippophagous, (equus, 'a horse,' and voro, 'I devour.') Feeding or subsisting on horseflesh, as Hippophagy, Hippophagia, is the act of so feeding.

Equus, ('a horse,') Hippus.

Er, in composition, see Em.

Érable, Acer saccharinum.

Eradica'tion, Eradica'tio, (e, and radix, gen. radicis, 'a root,') The act of rooting out, or completely removing a disease.

Erad'icative, Eradic'ans. Anything possessed of the power of completely rooting out a disease.

Éraillement des Paupières, ([L.] e, and radius, 'a ray,') Ectropion.

Er'cle, Blistér.

Erebin'thus, Acer arietinum.

Erechthi'tes Hieracifo'lia, (after Erechtheus [?],) Senecio hieracifo'lius, Fireweed. An indigenous plant, Order Compositæ, which flowers from July to September. It is said to be an acrid tonic, and astringent, and in large doses emetic.

Erecteur du Pénis, Ischiocavernosus.

Erec'tile Tis'sue, Te'ta seu Tex'tus erec'tilis, (erigere, erectum,—e, and rigere, 'to be stiff,'—'to erect,' 'to become erect,') A tissue, whose principal character is, to be susceptible of dilatation, i. e. of turgescence and increase of size. It is formed of a collection of arteries and veins, intermixed with nervous filaments; the veins varicose, and contained in spaces formed by trabeculae of fibrous tissue, being prolongations from the fibrous envelope. Smooth muscular fibres have been detected in it. This tissue exists in the corpora cavernosa of the penis and clitoris, at the lower and inner surface of the vagina, in the spongy part of the urethra, the lips, nipples, iris, &c. Sometimes it is developed accidentally, and constitutes a kind of organic transformation.

Erec'tion, Erec'tio, Arrec'tio, Anortho'sis. The state of a part, in which, from having been soft, it becomes stiff, hard, and swollen by the accumulation of blood in the areolæ of its tissue, as in the case of the penis—Sty'ma, Sty'sis.

Erec'tor Clitor'idis, Ischiocavernosus—e. Penis, Ischiocavernosus.

Erec'tor Pi'li, (pilus, 'hair,') Cutaneous muscular fibres, arising in the outer part of the corium, and having their insertion in the inner sheath of the hair follicle.

Erec'tor Spi'næ, Sacrospinalis.

Eremacaus'is, (F.) Érémacausie, (ηρεμα, 'slowly,' and καυσις, 'combustion,') A term applied by Liebig to the slow combustion, oxidation, or decay of organic matters in the air.

Erem'ia, (ηρεμα, 'rest,') Acinesia.

Érésipèle, Erysipelas.

Erethilyt'icum, (ερεθισ, 'redness,' and λυσις, 'solution,') Spanæmic.

Er'ethism, Erethis'mus, Erethis'ia, Irritamentum, Irrita'tio, (F.) Éréthisme, Éréthisme, (ερεθίζω, 'I irritate,') Irritation. Augmentation of the vital phenomena in any organ or tissue. Orgasm. Under this name, has also been described a state of the constitution produced by mercury acting on it as a poison. It is called Mercurial Er'ethism or Erethis'mus, and is characterized by great depression of strength; anxiety about the præcordia; irregular action of the heart; frequent sighing; tremors; small, quick, sometimes intermitting pulse; occasional vomiting; pale, contracted countenance, and sense of coldness; but the tongue is seldom furred, nor are the vital and natural functions much disturbed. In this state any sudden exertion may prove fatal.

Erethis'ma, gen. Erethis'matis, (ερεθισμα,) Rubefacient.

Erethis'mus, (ερεθισμος,) Erethism, Irritation—e. Ebriosorum, Delirium tremens—e. Hydrophobia, Hydrophobia—e. Oneirodynia, Incubus, Paroniria—e. Simplex, Fidgets.

Erethis'ticus, (ερεθιστικός,) Erethiticus, Rubefacient.

Erethit'ic, Erethit'icus, Erethis'ticus. Belonging or relating to erethism—as 'erethitic phenomena,' or phenomena of irritation.

Éréthisme, Erethism.

Ereug'mos, (ερεγγισμος,) Eruetation.

Ereux'is, (ερεξις,) Eruetation, Flatulence.

Ergaste'rion, (εργαστήριον, from εργον, 'work,') Laboratory—e. Spiritus, Pulmo.

Er'got, ([F.] ergot, 'a spur,') Er'gota or Er-go'ta, Seca'lè cornu'tum seu mater'num seu tur'gidum seu temulent'um seu luxu'rians seu clava'tum, Clavus secalinus seu secalis seu silig'inis, Spermoë'dia clavus, Mater secalis, Cal'car, Secalis mater, Ustila'go, Frumen'tum cornu'tum seu cornicula'tum seu luxu'rians seu turg'idum seu temulent'um, Brizoc'eras [?], Melanophy'ma, Spur'ed or Horn'ed Rye, Spur, Horn'seed, Cock'spur rye, Cock'spur, (F.) Seigle ergoté ou cornu ou corrompu ou à Éperon ou Ergotisé, Blé cornu, Ergot ou Clou ou Mère de seigle, Bled avorté ou farouche, Faux seigle. Ergot is generally considered to be the result of a disease in rye—Seca'lè cereal'è—occurring most frequently when a hot summer succeeds a rainy spring. Decandolle, however, regards it as a parasitic fungus, and calls it Sclero'tium clavus; while Leveillé esteems it to be a fungus giving a coating to the diseased grain; the medical virtues residing in the coating. This parasitic fungus he calls Sphace'lia seg'etum. More recently, it has been maintained that it is a diseased state of the grain occasioned by the growth of a fungus not previously detected, to which the names Ergotæ'tia abortans seu abortifaciens, Od'dium abortifaciens, Er'gotmould, have been given. It is found projecting from among the leaves of the spike or ear, and is a long, crooked excrescence, resembling the spur of a cock, pointed at its extremities, of a dark brown color externally, and white within. To the whole fungus, giving rise to Ergota, M. Tulasne has given the name Claviceps purpurea, and the Pharmacopœia (1873) adopting this view, describes ergot as the sclerotium of Claviceps purpurea, replacing the grain of secale cereale.

Ergot has been long used in Germany to act on the uterus, as its names Mutterkorn and Gebärpulver ('womb-grain,' pulvis parturiens, pulvis ad par'tum) testify. About sixty years ago, it was recommended in this country for accelerating parturition; and since that period it has come into very general use as a parturifacient. Half a drachm of the powder is gently boiled in half a pint of water, and one-third part given every 20 minutes, until proper pains begin. Some recommend the clear watery infusion; others advise the powder or the oil, the wine or the fluid extract. It is obvious that, in many cases, the uterine efforts would return in the period which would necessarily elapse in the administration of ergot; so that several of the cases, at least, of reputed efficacy, may not have been dependent upon the assigned agent. Ergot also possesses, it is affirmed, narcotic virtues, which have rendered it useful in hemorrhagic and other affections of excitement.

Bread, made of spurred rye, has been attended with the effects described under Er'gotism.

Ergot, ('a spur,') Hippocampus minor—e. de Seigle, Ergot.

Er'gotmould, see Ergot.

Er'gota, Ergot.

Ergotæ'tia Abor'tans, (ergot, and aria, 'cause,') see Ergot — e. Abortifaciens, see Ergot.

Er'gotin, Er'gotine, Ergoti'num, Extrac'tum Er'gotæ, Ex'tract of Er'got, (F.) Ergotine, Ex'trait hémostatique de Bonjean. The extract of ergot has been found an excellent hemastatic in the dose of two grains several times a day. It has also been employed in mucilaginous emulsion in diarrhoea and dysentery. It has also been used externally.

Ergotine, Ergotin.

Er'gotism, Ergoti's'mus, (from ergota, 'ergot,') Mor'bus cerea'lis. Poisoning by ergot. An affection produced by the use of spurred rye. At times, the symptoms are limited to vertigo, spasms, and convulsions. (See Convulsio cerealis.) Most commonly there is torpor, with numbness of the hands and feet, which waste away, lose sensation and the power of motion, and separate from the body by dry gangrene. — Ergoti's'mus Sphacelo'sus, Sphac'elus cerea'lis, Necro'sis cerea'lis, Gangræ'na ustilagin'ea, Necro'sis ustilagin'ea, Er'got or Mil'deo mortifica'tion, (F.) Ergotisme gangréneux, Gangrène des Solonois, Mal de Sologne.

Eri'ca Vulga'ris, (ερικη,) Callu'na vulga'ris seu Eri'ca, Common Heath, (Sc.) Heath'er, (F.) Bruyère vulgaire. This has been regarded as diuretic and diaphoretic.

Erigen'tes Ner'vi, (erigere, — e, and rigere, — 'to be stiff,') see Nervi erigentes.

Erig'eron, (εριγερων, from ερ, 'spring,' and γερων, 'an old man;' owing to the hoary appearance of some of the vernal species,) E. Canadense — e. Ambiguum, see Erigeron Philadelphicum — e. Annuum, see E. Canadense.

ERIG'ERON BELLIDIFOLIUM, Robin's plan'tain, Ro'sy Bet'ty. An indigenous plant of the Family Compositæ; flowering in May. It is said to possess properties like those of E. Philadelphicum.

ERIG'ERON CANADENSE, Can'ada Flea'bane, Pride'weed, Horse'weed, But'terweed, is considered to be allied in properties to E. Philadelphicum; and the same may be said of Erig'eron Heterophyllum, E. annuum, Sweet Sca'bious or various-leaved Flea'bane. The leaves and tops of both of these are official (Ph. U. S., 1873).

ERIG'ERON HETEROPHYLLUM, see E. Canadense — e. Integrifolium, E. Philadelphicum.

ERIG'ERON PHILADELPHICUM, E. strigosum seu ambiguum seu integrifolium, Sca'bious, Ske'vish, Philadel'phia or Ske'vish or Nar'row-leav'ed Fleabane, Da'isy, Cocash', Frost'weed, Field'weed, Squaw'weed, (F.) Vergerette de Philadelphie. The plant has been used in decoction or infusion for gouty and gravelly complaints, and is said to operate powerfully as a diuretic and sudorific. The essential oil has been given in uterine hemorrhage, and that of Erigeron Canadense, — O'leum Erigeron'tis Canadensis, Oil of Can'ada flea'bane, — has been given, successfully, in gonorrhœa. Dose, ℥v. to x.

In the Ph. U. S., 1873, Erigeron means the leaves and tops of E. Heterophyllum and E. Philadelphicum.

ERIG'ERON STRIGOSUM, E. Philadelphicum.

Erig'erum, Senecio.

Erig'ne, (from αρω, 'I raise,') Hook.

E'rine, Hook.

Erioceph'alus Umbellula'tus, (εριον, 'wool,' and κεφαλη, 'head,' from the character of its flowers,) Wild Rose'mary. A South African shrub, Ord. Compositæ, which is diuretic, and used by the farmers and Hottentots in various forms of dropsy.

Eriosperm'um Latifo'lium, (εριον, 'wool,' and σπέρμα, 'seed,' from the woolly envelope of the seeds.) A South African plant, the tuber of which is muculent, and used externally in abrasions of the skin, and in superficial ulcers. It is also employed by the Mohammedans, in decoction, in amenorrhœa.

Ero'dens, (e, and rodere, 'to gnaw,') Caustic.

Ero'dium Cicuta'rium, (from ερωδιος, 'a heron,') A variety of Storks'bill of the Geranium family, has been prescribed in dropsy, in the form of decoction of the dried plant.

ERODIUM MOSCHATUM, Geranium moschatum.

Eroma'nia, (ερωμανια, from eros, and mania,) Erotomania.

Eron'osus, Eronu'sos, (ερ, 'spring,' and νοσος or νους, 'disease,') A disease which appears chiefly in spring.

Er'os, (ερος, gen. ερωτος,) Love.

Ero'sio, Corrosion, Erosion — e. et Perforatio spontanea ventriculi, Gastromalacia.

Ero'sion, Ero'sio, Diabro'sis, Anabro'sis, Corro'sion, (erodere, erosum, — e, and rodere, — 'to eat away,') The action of a corrosive substance, or the gradual destruction of a part by a substance of that kind. It is often employed in the same sense as ulceration, — spontaneous ero'sion.

EROSION, GANGRENOUS, OF THE CHEEK, Cancer aquaticus.

EROSION OF THE STOM'ACH, HEMORRHAG'IC. A form of chronic ulcerative gastritis, met with in habitual drinkers.

Erot'ic, Ero'ticus, (ερωτικός, from eros,) That which is produced by love — as Erot'ic melancholy, E. delirium, &c.

Eroticoma'nia, Erotomania.

Erotoma'nia, Eroma'nia, Ma'nia ero'tica, (from eros, and μανια, 'mania,') A species of mental alienation caused by love. Erotic melancholy is Love melancholy. Some authors write it Erot'ico-ma'nia. Also, Nymphomania.

Er'pes, (ερπης,) Herpes.

Errabund'us, (errare, 'to wander,') Planetes.

Errat'ic, Errat'icus, Atac'tos, A'typos, Wand'ering, Irregular. That which disappears and recurs at irregular intervals. This name is given to intermittents, Febres errat'icæ, which observe no type. Most commonly, it is applied to pains or to any diseased manifestations which are not fixed, but move from one part to another, as in gout, rheumatism, erysipelas, &c. Also applied to worms, which wander from one part — as of the intestinal canal — to other parts, as the urinary passages.

Erreur de Lieu, Error loci.

Er'rhine, (ερρην,) Errhi'num or Er'rhinum, Sternutato'rium, Ster'nutatory, Ptar'micum, Apophlegmat'isans per na'res, Nasa'lē, (ερ, and ρην, 'the nose,') A remedy whose action is exerted on the Schneiderian membrane, exciting sneezing and increased discharge. Errhines have been mainly used as local stimulants in head affections.

Errhi'num, Errhine, Sternutatory.

Er'rhy'sis, (ερ, and ρην, 'I flow,') With some, a draining of blood. A trifling hemorrhage.

Er'ror of Disper'sion, Aberration of refrangibility.

ER'RO'R LO'CI, ('error of place,') Apoplanc'sis, (F.) Erreur de Lieu. A term frequently used by Boerhaave to express deviation of fluids, when they enter vessels not destined for them. Boerhaave admitted several orders of capillary vessels, the diameters of which went on decreasing. The largest received red blood, those which came next received only white, others only lymph, while the last of all were destined for yet more subtile fluids — for a kind of vapor. When the red globules entered vessels destined for the white, or the white those intended for the thinner fluids, there was, according to the theory of Boerhaave, an error loci, the proximate cause of inflammation and other mischiefs. See Aberration.

Eru'ca, Brassica eruca, Sinapis — e. Barbarea,

Erysimum barbarea — e. Fœtida, Brassica cruca — e. Sativa, Brassica cruca.

Eructa'tion, (eructare, eructatum, — e, and ructare, — 'to belch,') Ructa'tio, Ereug'mus, Er'ygē, Eructa'tio, Ruc'tus, Ructa'men, Ructua'tio, Ereux'-is, Restagna'tio, (Old Eng.) Bolke, Bouffe, Belke, (Sc.) Bock'ing, Bok'king, Ruck'ing, Rift, (Prov.) Kelk'ing, Rasp'ing, Rosp'ing, Ri'ving, Ruft (N. of England), Belching, (F.) Rot, Rapport. A sonorous emission, by the mouth, of flatus proceeding from the stomach. When so frequent as to occasion a diseased condition, this is termed Ructuo'sitas, Mor'bus ructuo'sus.

Erugato'ria, (e, and ruga, 'a wrinkle,') Tetathra.

Eryugineux, Eryuginous.

Erup'tio, (erumpere, eruptum, — e, and rumpere, — 'to issue with violence,' 'to break out,') Eruption — e. Exanthematis, Epanastasis — e. Sanguinis, Hæmorrhagia.

Erup'tion, Erup'tio. This word has several meanings. 1. The sudden and copious evacuation of any fluid from a canal or cavity — of serum, blood, pus, &c., for example; 2. The breaking out of an exanthem; and, 3. The exanthem itself, whether simply in the form of a rash, or of pustules, vesicles, &c.

Éruption Anomale, Roseolæ — e. Rosace, Roseolæ — e. Violet, Ionthus.

Eruptive, Eruptivus. That which is accompanied by an eruption. Thus small-pox, measles, scarlet fever, miliaria, &c., are eruptive fevers. The term eruptive disease is nearly synonymous with cutaneous disease.

Er'va de Sanc'ta Mari'a, Arum dracunculoides — e. do Rato, Palicourea Marcgraavii.

Ervale'n'ta, see Ervum.

Er'vum, E. ervilia, E. plicatum, Vic'ia ervilia, Or'obus, (F.) Lentille Ers ou Orobe. In times of scarcity the seeds have been made into bread, but it is said not to be wholesome. The meal was once much used in poultices; it was formerly called Orob'ion. Under the name Ervale'n'ta, a secret dietetic preparation has been introduced. It is a vegetable powder, which, when mixed with milk and soup, and taken night and morning, is said to have succeeded in removing old and obstinate obstructions! Buchner thinks it is bean-meal; Ditterich, the meal of the seed of Ervum Ervilia.

A specimen of Warton's Ervale'n'ta, obtained at the dépôt, and analyzed by Dr. Hassall, was found to contain a mixture of the French and German lentil, reduced to powder, including portions of the shells or husks, and of a substance very closely resembling, in its microscopic characters, corn meal. A sample of Du Barry's Revalen'ta Arab'ica was found to consist of a mixture of the Egyptian or Ara'bian lentil and barley meal.

ER'VUM ERVIL'IA, Ervum.

ER'VUM LENS, Ci'cer Lens, Lens esculen'ta, Pha'cos, the Len'til, (F.) Lentille. The seed, Pha'cē, Pha'cea, Pha'cus, is eaten in many places like peas: it is flatulent and difficult of digestion.

ER'VUM PLICA'TUM, Ervum.

Er'ygē, (ερύγη) Eructation.

Eryn'gium Aquat'icum, (ερύγγιον) E. yuccæfolium, Water Eryn'go, But'ton Snake-root. Order, Umbelliferae. This root, Eryn'gium, is nearly allied to the contrayerva of the shops, and acts more especially as a sudorific. It was at one time a secondary article in the U. S. Pharmacopœia.

ERYNGIUM CAMPESTRĒ, E. vulgare, Cen'tum Cup'ita, As'ter inguin'al'is, Capit'ulum Mar'tis, A'cus Ven'eri's, (F.) Panicant, Chardon-Roland, is sometimes used for E. maritimum.

ERYNGIUM FŒTIDUM, indigenous, is said to possess properties like those of valerian and contrayerva.

ERYNGIUM MARIT'IMUM seu MARI'NUM, (ερύγγιον, ερύγγιον, from ερύγωμαι, 'I belch,') The Sea Holly or Eryn'go, Æthe'rea Her'ba, (F.) Panicant Maritime. Eryn'go root has a slightly aromatic odor, and sweetish and warm taste. It is considered to be diuretic and expectorant, but its powers are so weak that it is scarcely ever used.

ERYNGIUM VULGA'RĒ, E. campestre — e. Yuccæfolium, E. aquaticum.

Eryn'go, Sea, Eryngium maritimum — e. Water, Eryngium aquaticum.

Erys'imum, E. officina'lē, (ερύσω, 'I draw,' from its power of raising blisters,) Sisymbrium officina'lē, Chamæplion, Hedgemus'tard, (F.) Vellar, Tortelle, Herbe aux Chantres. This was formerly much used for its expectorant and diuretic qualities. The seeds greatly resemble mustard.

ERYSIMUM ALLIA'RIA, Alliaria.

ERYSIMUM BARBARE'A, E. lyratum, Ar'abis barbarea, Sisymbrium barbarea, Eru'ca barbarea, Barbare'a, B. stric'ta, (F.) Herbe de Sainte Barbe, has been ranked among the antiscorbutic plants. See Alliaria.

ERYSIMUM CORDIFO'LIUM, Alliaria — e. Lyratum, E. barbarea.

Erysipela'cea, (same etymon as the next.) A family of eruptive diseases, comprising erysipelas, variola, rubeola, and scarlatina.

Erysip'elas, gen. Erysip'el'atis, (ερύσιπelas, from ερύσω, 'I draw,' and πelas, 'near,' from its tendency to spread, or from ερυος, 'red,' and pella, 'skin,' [?]) Febris erysipelato'sa seu erysipela'cea, Erythropyra, Em'phlysis Erysip'elas, Dermat'itis symptomat'ica, St. Anthony's fire, Wild fire, Ignis Sanc'ti Auto'nii seu Columel'læ seu Sacer, Hieropyr, Icterit'ia rubra, Ru'bea icterit'ia, Vicinitt'raha, Vicinitt'rahus, Bru'nus, Lug'dus, Rose, (F.) Érysipèle, Érésipèle, Feu St. Antoine, Feu sacré, Mal Saint Antoine. A disease, so called because it generally extends gradually to the neighboring parts. Superficial inflammation of the skin, with general fever, tension, and swelling of the part; the surface smooth and shining as if oiled, Erysip'elas gla'brum; pain and heat more or less acrid; redness diffused, but more or less circumscribed, and disappearing when pressed upon by the finger, but returning as soon as the pressure is removed. Frequently, small vesicles appear upon the inflamed part, which dry up and fall off, under the form of branny scales. Erysipelas is, generally, an acute affection; its medium duration being from 10 to 14 days. When it reaches its acme, and ceases to spread, it has received the name Erysip'elas fix'um. It yields, commonly, to general refrigerant remedies. Topical applications are rarely serviceable. At times, when the disease approaches the phlegmonous character, copious bleeding and other evacuations may be required, as in many cases of erysipelas of the face; but this is not commonly necessary. In most cases, indeed, the general action seems deficient, and it becomes necessary to give tonics.

When erysipelas is of a highly inflammatory character, and invades the parts beneath, it is termed Erysip'elas phlegmono'des, Dermat'itis phlegmono'sa, (F.) Érysipèle phlegmoneux; when accompanied with phlyctenæ, and the inflammation terminates in gangrene, Erysip'elas gangreno'sum, (F.) Érysipèle gangréneux; and when associated with infiltration of serum, Erysip'elas œdemato'sum, (F.) Érysipèle œdémateux; when superficial and tending to spread indefinitely, it is called Erysip'elas errat'icum.

At times the surface in erysipelas has a bronzed rather than a red hue — bronzed erysipelas.

ERYSIP'ELAS, BRONZ'ED, see Erysipelas — e. Erraticum, see Erysipelas — e. Fixum, see Erysipelas — e. Gangrænosum, see Erysipelas — e. Gla-

Erysipelato'des, (ερυσιπελατωδης,) Erysipelatous. Erysipel'atoid, Erysipelatoï'des, (erysipelas, and αἶδος, 'resemblance.') Resembling erysipelas.

Erysipel'atous, Erysipelato'des, Erysipelato'sus. Belonging to erysipelas; as an erysipelatosus affection.

ERYSIPEL'ATOUS INFLAMMA'TION, Inflammatio erysipelato'sa, Epiphlogis'ma, Cuti'tis, Dermati'tis, is the character of inflammation which distinguishes erysipelas, Erythe'ma erysipelato'sum.

Erysos, (ερυσος, 'red,') Erythema.

Erythe'ma, gen. Erythe'matis, (ερυθραιος, ερυσος, 'red, rose-colored,') Inflam'matory blush, Erythe'ma, (F.) Erythème. This name is, sometimes, given to erysipelas, especially when of a local character. It is, also, applied to the morbid redness on the cheeks of the hectic and on the skin covering bubo, phlegmon, &c. It forms the 6th genus of the 3d order, Exanthe'mata, of Bateman's classification of cutaneous diseases; and is defined, "a nearly continuous redness of some portion of the skin, attended with disorder of the constitution, but not contagious." Many varieties are described by dermatologists, — for example, E. intertrigo, E. fugax, E. papulatum, E. tuberculatum, E. nodosum, E. lævè, E. centrifugum, E. marginatum, and E. acrodynamicum. Local erythema, which is merely hyperæmia, without much, if any, appreciable effusion into the cutis and cellular tissue, is sometimes called erythe'ma hyperæmicum. If there is more or less escape of serosity from the vessels, with prominence of the eruption, it is called erythe'ma exsudativum.

ERYTHE'MA AB A'CRIBUS, E. venenata. The hyperæmia produced by acrid or poisonous agents.

ERYTHE'MA ACRODYN'IA, Acrodynia — e. Ambustio, Burn — e. Anthrax, Anthrax.

ERYTHE'MA CALOR'ICUM, in the classification of Hebra, is the rash which results from the action of heat or cold on the skin.

ERYTHE'MA CENTRIF'UGUM. A variety of erythema attacking the face, commencing with a small red spot, and spreading around, so as, at times, to affect the whole face.

ERYTHE'MA CIRCINA'TUM, see E. marginatum.

ERYTHE'MA ENDEM'ICUM, Pellagra — e. Epidemic, Acrodynia — e. Exsudativum, see Erythema — e. à Frigore, Chilblain.

ERYTHE'MA FU'GAX, E. Volat'icum. Patches of erythema, that sometimes appear on the body in febrile diseases, teething children, &c., and which are of brief duration.

ERYTHE'MA GANGRENO'SUM, Anthrax — e. Hyperæmicum, see Erythema — e. Ichorosum, Eczema mercuriale — e. Intertrigo, Chafing.

ERYTHE'MA LÆVÈ, (F.) Erythème léger. Slight erythema affecting the skin, as in oedema.

ERYTHE'MA MARGINA'TUM, (F.) Erythème marginal. A form in which the prominent patches of erythema are distinctly separated from the skin at their margins. When they can be distinctly measured or composed, we have E. circina'tum.

ERYTHE'MA MERCURIA'LE, Eczema mercuriale. ERYTHE'MA MULTIFOR'ME. Hebra includes under this name all the various forms of symptomatic erythemata.

ERYTHE'MA NODO'SUM, Dermati'tis confusiformis, (F.) Erythème noueux. A more severe form of Erythema tuberculatum.

ERYTHE'MA PAPULA'TUM, (F.) Erythème papuleux. Patches of erythema, which are at first papulated, appearing on the face, neck, breast, &c., of females, and young persons more especially. Hebra considers the rash, which breaks out in epidemic cholera, and is generally described as a roseola, Rose'ola choler'ica, to be rather Erythema papulatum.

ERYTHE'MA PARATHIM'MA, Chafing — e. Pellagrum, Pellagra — e. Pernio, Chilblain.

ERYTHE'MA PURIF'LUENS. Erythema intertrigo producing by irritation a raw surface, giving out a puriform or muciform fluid.

ERYTHE'MA SCARLATINIFOR'MÈ, Rubella.

ERYTHE'MA SOLA'RÈ. A name given by the Italians to Pellagra, owing to its being attended with an eruption of small red spots or patches on the parts that are exposed to the sun.

ERYTHE'MA TUBERCU'LATUM, E. tuberculatum, (F.) Erythème tuberculeux. A form of erythema in which the patches are in small lumps.

ERYTHE'MA VARIOLO'SUM, see Roseolæ — e. Venenata, E. ab Acribus.

ERYTHE'MA VESICULO'SUM, (F.) Erythème Vesiculeux. Local erythema from the application of an irritant, characterized by vesicles on a red base.

ERYTHE'MA VOLAT'ICUM, E. fugax.

Erythem'atous, Erythem'atic, Erythemato'sus, Erythem'aticus, (F.) Erythémateux. Appertaining or relating to erythema.

Erythème, Erythema — é. Léger, Erythema læve — é. Marginal, Erythema marginatum — é. Noueux, Erythema nodosum — é. Papuleux, Erythema papulatum — é. Tuberculeux, Erythema tuberculatum — é. Vesiculeux, Erythema vesiculosum.

Erythræ'a Centauri'um, (from ερυθρος, 'red,' 'the flower,') Chironia centaurium — e. Chilen-sis, Canchalagua, Chironia Chilensis.

Erythræ'mia, (erythro, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Plethora.

Erythran'chè, Angi'na erysipelato'sa, (erythro, and αἴλω, 'I suffocate,') Erysipelatous or erythematous sore throat.

Erythre'ma, gen. Erythre'matis, Erythema.

Erythri'na Monosper'ma, (ερυθρος, 'red,' — the flowers.) Butea frondosa.

Erythro, (from ερυθρος, 'red,') in composition, red.

Erythrochæ'ras, (erythro, and χεῖρας.) Cyananche parotidæa.

Erythrod'anum, (ερυθρος, 'red,') Rubia.

Erythroid, Erythro'des, Erythroï'des, (erythro, and αἶδος, 'resemblance,') Reddish.

ERYTHROID COAT, Tu'nica erythro'des. Vaginal coat of the testes.

ERYTHROID VES'ICLE, Vesic'ula erythroï'dea. A vesicle of the foetus described by Pockels and others. It is pyriform, and much longer than, although of the same breadth as, the umbilical vesicle. Velpeau, Weber, and others, doubt its being a physiological condition.

Erythro'nium, (from ερυθρος, 'red,' which does not, however, apply to the American species,) E. Americanum.

ERYTHRO'NIUM AMERICA'NUM, E. fla'rum seu dens ca'nis seu lanceola'tum seu longifo'lium, Com'mon Erythro'nium, Yel'low Snake'leaf, Yel'low Ad'der's tongue, Ad'der'leaf, Dog vi'olet, Dog's tooth vi'olet, Rat'tlesnake vi'olet, Lamb's tongue, Scrofula root, Yel'low Snow'drop. Ord. Liliaceæ. This plant is possessed of emetic properties, but is rarely, if ever, used. The root and herb, Erythro'nium, were at one time in the secondary list of the Pharmacopœia of the United States.

ERYTHRO'NIUM DENS CA'NIS, E. Americanum — e. Flavum, E. Americanum — e. Lanceolatum, E. Americanum — e. Longifolium, E. Americanum.

Erythrophle'um Judicia'lē, (erythro, and φλεῖν, 'to flow,'—from the red juice.) Sassybark tree.

Erythrop'ya, (erythro, and πυρ, 'fire, fever.') Erysipelas.

Erythrorrhiza Rotundifolia, (erythro, and ρίζα, 'root.') Galax aphylla.

Erythro'sis, (erythro, and osis.) Plethora.

Erythroxylon Co'ca, Co'ca, (erythro, and ξύλον, 'wood.') A plant, Ord. Violaceæ, which grows on the eastern slopes of the Andes, is prized in Peru, Chili, and Bolivia, both as a medicine and an article of diet; and serves as a substitute for the tea, coffee, betel, tobacco, hashish, and opium of other peoples. An active alkaloid—Co'caïne, Cocaïne—has been separated from it.

Es'aphé, (εσαφω, from εἰς, and ἀφω, 'I feel,' 'I feel inside,') (F.) Le Toucher, Le Toucher vaginal. The introduction of a finger or fingers into the vagina, for the purpose of examining the condition of the uterus. It is employed to verify the existence or non-existence of pregnancy and its different stages; to detect certain affections or faults of conformation in the genital organs and pelvis; and, during the process of accouchement, to examine into the progress of labor, &c.

Es'ca, Aliment.

Escaldas, Min'eral Wa'ters of, in the department Pyrénées-Orientales, France, are thermal sulphureous, containing sulphuret of sodium. Temperature about 108° Fah. The season is from June to the 15th of September.

Es'cara, Eschar.

Escargot, Helix pomatia, Limax.

Es'chalot, Échalotte.

Es'char, Es'chara, (εσχαρά.) Es'cara, (Old Eng.) Asker; a slough, a crust, or scab. The crust or disorganized portion, arising from the mortification of a part, and which is distinguishable from the living parts by its color, consistence, and other physical properties. The inflammation which it excites in the contiguous parts gives occasion to a secretion of pus between the living and dead parts, which ultimately completely separates the latter. The process is called Slough'ing.

Es'chara, (εσχαρά.) Vulva.

Escharot'ic, Escharot'icum, (εσχαρωτικόν, from eschar.) Any substance which, when applied upon a living part, gives rise to an eschar, such as caustic potassa, the concentrated mineral acids, &c.

ESCHAROT'IC Poi'son, see Poison.

Eschellohe, Min'eral Wa'ters of. This water rises at the foot of a mountain near the convent of Etal in Bavaria. It is a sulphuro-saline.

Eschid'na Ocella'ta. A very poisonous viper, which inhabits the sugar-cane fields of Peru. Its bite is almost instantaneously fatal.

Escorzone'ra, Scorzonera.

Escrevisse, ([G.] Krebs.) Crab.

Escula'pian, (from Æsculapius.) Medical.

Es'culent, Esculen'tus, Ed'ible, Eat'able, Ciba'rius, (esca, 'food,') (F.) Comestible. Such plants, or such parts of plants, or animals as may be eaten for food.

Esère, Ordeal nut.

Es'ria, see Ordeal nut.

Esérine, see Ordeal nut.

Es'kin, (Sax. gipcian, 'to hiccup,') Singultus.

Es'o, (εσω, 'within,') in composition, 'within.'

Es'ochas, (εσχαράς, from εσω, and εχω, 'to have,') Esoche.

Es'oche, Es'ochas. A tumor—as a hemorrhoid—within the anus.

Esocoli'tis, gen. Esocoli'tidis, (eso, and colitis.) Dysentery.

Esod'ic, (εσω, and οδός, 'a way,') Afferent.

Esœnteri'tis, see Enteritis.

Esogastri'tis, gen. Esogastri'tidis, Endogastri'tis.

Esoter'ic, (εσωτερος, 'interior,' from εσω.) Private, interior; in contradistinction to Exoter'ic, public, exterior. Hence, we speak of 'esoter'ic and exoter'ic causes of disease.'

Es'oterism, Med'ical. A term used by M. Simon, in his Déontologie médicale, for that esoter'ic, or mystery and secrecy, with which the practitioner performs his daily duties, and which, he conceives, he is compelled to adopt by the prejudices and ignorance of his patients.

Espaces Intercostaux, (from spatium, 'a space,') See Costa.

Espèces, Species, see Pulvis—e. Pulvéruentes, see Pulvis—e. Purgatives, The de St. Germain—e. Vulnéraires, Falltrauck.

Es'phlasis, (εἰς, 'inwards,' and φλάω, 'I break, bruise,' &c.) A fracture of the skull by comminution, the fragments being depressed. See Depression, and Enthlasis.

Esprits Animaux, ('animal spirits,') Nervous fluid.

Esquille, (σχιών, [L.] squida, dim. squidilla, 'a splinter,') Splinter.

Esquinancie, Cynanche, Cynanche tonsillar.

Esquine, Smilax China.

Es'sence, Essen'tia, (corrupted from existentia, 'standing out' [?], or, from esse, 'to be,') By some, used synonymously with volatile oil; by others, with simple tincture. The oil of pepper-mint is the oil obtained by distillation; the essence, the oil diluted with spirit. See Tinctura olei menthæ.

Essen'tial, Essentia'lis. The word essential has been applied to the immediate or active principles of vegetables, which were believed to be endowed with the properties of the plants from which they were extracted. Essential oil was so called because it was regarded as the only immediate principle which was essential. This expression is retained. Essential salts are true salts or extracts, which exist, ready formed, in vegetables; and which are obtained by distillation, incineration, or some other process.

An essential disease is synonymous with a general disease; that is, one not depending on any local affection, — not symptomatic. See Entity.

Es'sera, Es'serè, So'ra, Sair'è, Sa'rè, Mor'bus porci'nus, Ro'sa sal'tans, Urtica'ria porcell'ana, (F.) Anpoules, Porcelaine. (Of Arabic derivation.) A species of cutaneous eruption, consisting of small, reddish tubercles over the whole body, accompanied by a troublesome itching. It seems to be a variety of lichen or urticaria. See Lichen tropicus.

Essieu, (from axiculus, dim.) Axis.

Essoufflement, (e, and souffle, 'breath.') Anhelatio.

Esthe'ma, gen. Esthe'matis, (ἔσθημα, 'a garment.') Vestitus.

Esthe'sis, (ἔσθησις, 'clothing.') Vestitus.

Esthiomène, Esthiomenus.

Esthiom'enus, Esthiom'enus, (ἐσθίω, 'I eat,') Ec'edens, (F.) Esthiomène. That which devours or eats away. Certain ulcers and eruptions — Dartres rongeantes — are so called. Under the name Esthiomène has been particularly described rodent ulcer of the vulvo-anal region, in its different stages and varieties.

Es'tival, Esti'vus, Æsti'vus, (ἔστας, gen. estatis, 'summer.') Happening in summer, belonging to summer. This epithet is given to summer diseases, so called because they reign at that season, and appear to depend on the influence exerted by it on the animal economy. In the United States, the term summer disease or complaint means disorder of the bowels; as diarrhæa, cholera morbus, &c.

Éther Camphré. An ethereal tincture of camphor, which has a place in the French Codex (1866).

Éther Chlorhydrique, see Æther sulphuricus — é. Chlorhydrique chloré, see Æther muriaticus.

E'ther Chlo'ric, Æther chloricus. See, also, Chloroform. — Under the names concentrated chloric ether and strong chloric ether — a compound of pure chloroform and nearly absolute alcohol, in the proportion of one-third of the former to two-thirds of the latter — has been used as an anæsthetic by inhalation, in the same cases as sulphuric ether and chloroform. It is properly an alcoholic solution or tincture of chloroform. See Spiritus chloroformi, and Chloroform.

E'ther, Chlorohy'dric, Æther muriaticus, see Æther sulphuricus — e. Chlorinated, see Æther muriaticus.

E'ther, Com'pound. A preparation consisting of a solution of chloroform in sulphuric ether, which has been used as an anæsthetic by inhalation, in the same cases as chloroform.

E'ther, Gel'atinized, see Æther sulphuricus.

E'ther, Hydrobro'mic, Æther Hydrobro'micus. A volatile liquid made by distilling four parts of powdered bromide of potassium with a mixture of two parts of strong sulphuric acid and one of alcohol. It is a rapid but costly anæsthetic, causing sometimes irritation of the throat.

E'ther METH'YL-ETHYL'IC. Methylic ether, made by adding one part of pure methylic alcohol and two parts of strong sulphuric acid, is an anæsthetic devoid of unpleasant symptoms. It is a gas soluble in water, ether, &c. Dissolved in ether, it is called by Dr. B. W. Richardson methyl-ethylic ether, and may be employed as a rapid anæsthetic in short operations.

E'ther, METHYL'IC, see Æther, Methyl-ethylic.

Éthéré, Æthereal.

Éthéreal, Æthereal.

Éthéreous, Æthereal.

ETHERINE, Hydrocyan'ate of, Æther hydrocyanicus — e. Muriate of, Æther muriaticus.

Éthérisé, Etherized.

ETHERISM. The aggregate of phenomena induced by the inhalation of ether — Ætherism'us.

ETHERIZA'tion, Ætherisa'tio. The administration of ether by inhalation, as an anæsthetic.

ETHERIZED, Ætherisa'tus, (F.) Éthérisé. Presenting the phenomena induced by the inhalation of ether.

ETHEROL, (ether, and oleum, 'oil,') Oleum Æthereum.

Éthérolat, Éthérat. The product of the distillation of ether on aromatic substances.

Éthérolature, see Tincture.

Éthérolé, Teinture Éthérée. A liquid medicine formed of ether and medicinal principles united with it by direct solution or simple mixture. See Æthereal.

Éthérolé d'Essence de Térébinthine. See Liquor anodynus terebinthinatus.

Éthérolique, Etherol'ic. A medicine which has ether for excipient.

Éthérolitif. An etherolic medicine which is exclusively employed externally.

ETH'ICS, Med'ical, (ἠθός, 'moral conduct,') Deontology, medical.

Et'hik, Hectic.

Ethio'pian, see Homo.

E'thiops, see Æthiops — e. Martial, Æthiops martialis.

E'thisis, (ἠθίσις, from ἠθω, 'I sift,') Filtration.

Ethis'mus, (from ἠθμός, 'a sieve,') Filtration.

Eth'mo, (ἠθμός, 'a sieve,') in composition, a sieve; also, the ethmoid bone.

Ethmoceph'ale, Ethmoceph'alus, (ethmo, 'the ethmoidal portion of the nose,' and κεφαλή, 'head,') A genus of monsters, with eyes close together, but distinct; the nasal apparatus atrophied and rudimental.

Eth'moid, Ethmo'des, Ethmoï'des, Ethmoï'deus, (ethmo, and εἶδος, 'form,') Shaped like a sieve.

ETHMOID BONE, Os Ethmoï'deum seu multiforme seu spongiosum seu spongioides seu cribrosum seu cribriforme seu cubicum seu cristatum seu foraminulatum seu coliforme seu colatorium, (F.) Os cribreux. One of the eight bones which compose the cranium; so called, because its upper plate is pierced by a considerable number of holes. The ethmoid bone is situated at the anterior, inferior, and middle part of the base of the cranium. It seems to be composed of a multitude of thin, fragile, semi-transparent laminae, which form more or less spacious cells, called the Ethmoid'al labyrinth or cells, distinguished into anterior and posterior. These communicate with the nose, and are lined by a prolongation of the pituitary membrane. The ethmoid bone is constituted of compact tissue, and is surrounded by the Ethmoid suture. It is articulated with the frontal and sphenoidal bones, the cornua sphenoidalia, the superior maxillary bones, the palate bones, the ossa turbinata inferiora, the vomer, the proper bones of the nose, and the lacrimal bones.

Ethmoid'al, Ethmoïda'lis. Belonging to the ethmoid bone; as Ethmoid'al cells, E. suture, &c. The Ethmoid'al apophysis or process is the advanced part of the sphenoid bone, which articulates with the ethmoid. The ethmoid'al arteries are two in number, the anterior of which arises from the ophthalmic artery. The origin of the other varies. The Échancrure ethmoïdale of the os frontis receives the ethmoid bones. The Ethmoid'al veins correspond to the arteries.

Ethmose, (ἠθμός, 'a sieve,') Cellular tissue.

Eth'myphé, (ἠθμός, 'a sieve,' and ἔφη, 'tissue,') Cellular tissue.

Ethmyphi'tis, gen. Ethmyphi'tidis, Inflammatio telæ cellulosa, Cellulit'is, (ethmyphe, and itis,') Inflammation of the cellular membrane. When this condition extends in depth through the whole thickness of the subcutaneous cellular tissue, it is called dermatocellulit'is.

Ethmyphotylo'sis, (ethmyphe, and τυλωσις, 'hardness,') Induration of the cellular tissue.

Ethnog'raphy, Ethnograph'ia, (εθνος, 'nation,' and γραφή, 'a description,') A history of the races and families of man.

Ethnolog'ical, Ethnolog'icus, (F.) Ethnologique. Relating, or appertaining, to ethnology.

Ethnol'ogy, Ethnolog'ia, (εθνος, 'nation,' and λόγος, 'a discourse,') The science of the races and families of man.

Eth'os, (εθός,') Habit.

Éthuse, Æthusa cynapium — e. Faux, Æthusa cynapium — e. Méum, Æthusa meum.

ETH'YL, Bichlo'ride of, Olefiant gas — e. Chloride of, Æther muriaticus — e. Cyanuret of, Æther hydrocyanicus — e. Iodide of, Æther hydriodicus.

ETH'YL HY'DRIDE, Hy'dride of Eth'yl. A gas prepared by exposing, at a temperature of 300°, the iodide of ethyl to zinc in the presence of water in a closed tube. It has narcotic properties, but its therapeutic value is undetermined.

ETH'YL, NI'TRATE OF. A liquid formed by distilling two parts of alcohol and one of pure nitric acid, with the addition of a small quantity of urea; it has not been much employed as an anæsthetic, on account of the severe headache following its administration.

ETH'YL, NI'TRITE OF, Ether, nitrous.

Et'ick, Hectic.

Étiola'tion, Blanch'ing, (F.) Étiollement. That state of plants which occurs in consequence of privation of light, when they become pale and watery. In pathology, it is sometimes used to denote the paleness produced in those persons who have been kept long without light; or a similar paleness, the result of chronic disease.

Étiollement, Etiolation.

Etiol'ogy, Ætiology.

Étique, Hectic.

Étiquette, Med'ical, Deontology, medical.

Étise, Hecticis — e. Méésentérique, Tabes mésentérique.

ETITA. A singular cutaneous affection described by Du Chaillu as existing among the Ashira, in Africa. It consists in the rapid appearance of blotches over the body, the parts being swollen, and as if they had been badly scalded. The skin is raised and a thin matter collects beneath it. It is attended with intolerable itching.

Et'nagberreries, see Juniperus communis.

Étoile, ([old F.] estoile.) Stella.

Étonnée, ([old F.] estonnée.) Stunned.

Étouffement, ([old F.] estouffement, from [G.] stopfen, 'to stop.') Suffocation.

Étoupe, ([old F.] estoupe.) Stupa.

Étourdissement, Vertigo.

Étrangle-loup, ('strangle wolf,') Paris.

Étranglement, ([old F.] estraglement, from [L.] strangulare, 'to strangle,') Strangulation, Hysteria — é des Intestins, Enteremphraxis.

Étranguillon, (from étrangler, 'to strangle,') An ancient French appellation for a violent angina accompanied by symptoms of imminent asphyxia.

Étrier, ([old F.] estrier, [L.] strepas.) Stapes. Also, a bandage, Huit du Cou-de-pied, applied, after bleeding from the foot, to compress the sapheua.

E'tron, (ητρου.) Abdomen, Hypogastrium.

E'tron'cus, (etron, and ovkos, 'a tumor,') A tumor of the lower belly.

Et'tick, Hectic fever.

Et'tle, Urtica.

Étui de V'Hippocampe. A name given by Vicq d'Azyr to the upper part of the sphenoidal portion of the lateral ventricle of the brain, which is bounded by the lateral cornu of the corpus callosum.

Éture, ([old F.] esture.) Stove — é. Humide, Bath, vapor.

Étuver, to Foment. See Stupa.

Eu, (eu), 'good, proper,' when prefixed to words.

Eue'mia, (eu, and δύμα, 'blood,') A good condition of the blood.

Euesthe'sia, (eu, and αισθησις, 'perception,') Vigorous perception. A good condition of the perceptive faculties.

Euesthe'tus, (ευαισθητος.) One whose senses are in full vigor.

Euanalep'sis, (eu, and αναληψις, 'recovery,') Rapid restoration to strength.

Euan'themon, Anthemis nobilis.

Eucalyp'tol, see Eucalyptus.

Eucalyp'tus Glob'ulus seu Globo'sus, (eu, and καλυπτος, 'covered,' the flower by the calyx.) An Australian tree, Order Myrtaceæ, an infusion of whose leaves has been given with success as an antiperiodic. It has also been prescribed in the form of powdered leaves, decoction, aqueous and alcoholic extracts, &c.; and in its essential oil, eucalyp'tol. Some of the preparations have been used for disinfecting surgical dressings.

EUCALYP'TUS MANNIF'ERA. From this Australian species, Order Myrtaceæ, a manna-like substance exudes, which has similar properties to manna.

EUCALYP'TUS RESINIF'ERA, see Kino.

Euchrœ'a, (ευχροια, from eu, and χρῶμα, 'color,') A good or healthy color of the skin. A good appearance of the surface.

Euchym'ia, (ευχυμία, from eu, and χυμος, 'juice,') A good state of the humors.

Eucra'sia, (ευκρασία, from eu, and κράσις, 'temperament,') A good temperament.

Eudiapneus'tia, (eu, and διαπνοη, — δια, and πνοη, 'breath,') — 'one who breathes well,') Easy transpiration.

Eue'tica, (medicina.) (ευεκτηκος, — eu, and εχω, 'I hold,') — 'conducive to health,') Gymnastics.

Euêl'ces, (ευελκος, from eu, and ελκος, 'an ulcer,') One in whom wounds and ulcers are readily healed.

Eu'emes, Euêm'etos, (ευεμης, from eu, and εμεω, 'I vomit,') That which readily excites vomiting. One who vomits with facility.

Eu'ethes, (eu, and εθος, 'habit,') Benign.

Euex'ia, (ευξια, from eu, and εξις, 'constitution,') A good constitution.

Eufraise, Euphrasia officinalis.

Euge'nia A'cris, see Spiritus myrciæ.

EUGE'NIA CARYOPHYLLA'TA, (after Prince Eugene of Savoy,) Garrophyll'us, Caryophyll'us aromat'icus, Myrt'us caryophyll'us. The Indian tree which affords the clove. Order, Myrtaceæ. The Clove, Caryophyll'us, C. aromat'icus, Caryophyll'um, is the unexpanded bud, (F.) Girofle, Gérofle, Gyrophle, Clou de Girofle. Its odor is strong, aromatic, and peculiar; taste, pungent and acrid. Like all substances whose virtue depends upon essential oil, it is stimulant and carminative. It is generally used as a corrigent to other remedies, and in cases where substances containing the essential oils are demanded. The oil — O'leum caryophyll'i, Oil of Cloves, (F.) Huile de Gérofle — is official. It has the properties of the cloves.

EUGE'NIA CAULIFLO'RA, Myrtus cauliflora — e. Pimenta, Myrtus pimenta.

Eugi'on, and Eugi'um, (eu, and γη, 'earth,') εργος, 'fertile,') Hymen, Uterus, Vulva.

Eu'lé, (ελη, 'a worm,') Eulæ, (ελατ.) with Hippocrates, meant especially worms bred in a wound or ulcer.

Euloph'ia, see Salep.

Eu'nuch, Eunu'chus, (ευνουχος, from ευνη, 'the bed,' and εχω, 'I keep,') Hemian'drus, Hemian'ner, Hemianthro'pus, Sem'imas, Seminasc'ulus, Seminascula'tus, Sem'ivir, Thla'dias, Thla'sias, Thlib'ias, Oastra'tus, Gal'lus, Excastra'tus, Evi-ra'tus, Emascula'tus, Exsec'tus, Extesticula'tus, Extom'ius, Delia'cus, (Old Eng.) Geld'ing, (F.) Eunuque. One whose organs of generation have been removed, or so altered that he is rendered incapable of reproducing his species, or of exercising the act of venery. Eunuchs were common with the ancient Romans. With them, Castra'tus meant one from whom the external organs had been removed; the Spa'do was deprived of the testicles only, while the thlib'ias and thla'sias preserved the organs, but the testicles were crushed so as to render them unfit for procreation.

In Italy, this horrible mutilation still takes place to improve the voice; and in the East, eunuchs have the surveillance of the seraglio.

Eunuchism'us, Castration.

Eunu'chium Meco'nis, Lactuca.

Eunu'chus, Castratus, Eunuch.

Eunuque, Eunuch.

Euo'des, (εωδης, from eu, and οζειν, 'to smell,') Beneolentia.

Euôn'ymus, (eu, and ονυμα, 'name,') Quassia simarouba.

EUON'YMUS AMERICA'NUS, (eu, and ονυμα, 'name,') Straw'berry bush, Straw'berry tree, Burn'ing bush, In'dian ar'row-wood. A shrub of the Ord. Celastraceæ, Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia, which, like the next, is found throughout the United States and Canada; flowering from May to June.

EUON'YMUS ATROPURPU'REUS, Burn'ing bush, Spin'dle tree, In'dian Ar'row-wood; flowers from June to July.

From these varieties of Euonymus the Wahoo' or Whahoo' bark is said to be obtained. In the Pharmacopœia of the United States it is referred to Euon'ymus atropurpu'reus. It is diuretic, antiperiodic, tonic, and a hydragogue cathartic, and has been used in dropsy in infusion, in the proportion of an ounce to a pint of water.

Eupathi'a, (ευπαθεια, from eu, and παθος, 'affection,') A disposition for being affected by pain easily. Also, a good state of health — Euphorbia.

Eupatoire d'Avicenne, Eupatorium cannabinum — e. Percefeuille, Eupatorium perfoliatum.

Eupatorium, (after Mithridates Eupator,) Eupatorium perfoliatum.

EUPATORIUM AGERATOIDES, E. Urticifolium, Ageratum altissimum, White Snake-root, Ord. Compositæ; indigenous; flowering in August and September; has the same properties as Eupatorium perfoliatum. It is considered by some to be the cause of milk sickness.

EUPATORIUM AROMATICUM, Aromatic Eupatorium or Hemp-weed, has similar properties.

EUPATORIUM CANNABINUM, Eupatorium, E. Arabicum seu Japonicum seu trifoliatum, E. of Avicenna, Cannabina aquatica, Trifolium cervinum, Origani aquaticum, Hemp agrimony, Herb of Saint Cuthbert, (F.) Eupatoire d'Avicenne. Ord. Compositæ. Sex. Syst. Syngenesia æqualis. The juice of this plant proves violently emetic and purgative, if taken in sufficient quantity. It has been considered diuretic, cathartic, and emetic.

EUPATORIUM CONNATUM, E. perfoliatum — e. Guaco, Guaco — e. Japonicum, E. cannabinum — e. Mesues, Achillea ageratum.

EUPATORIUM PERFOLIATUM, E. Connatum, Bone-set, Thor'oughwort, Thor'oughstem, Thor'oughwax, Veg'etable antimony, Cross-wort, A'gue-weed, Fel'wort, Indian sage, Joe-pye, Teazel, Sweat'ing plant, (F.) Eupatoire percefeuille, is a plant which grows in low, wet meadows throughout the United States. The tops and leaves, gathered after flowering has commenced — Eupatorium (Ph. U. S.) — are considered to be stimulating, tonic, emetic, purgative, diuretic, and sudorific. Dose, gr. xv. of the powder, as a gentle purgative.

EUPATORIUM, PURPLESTALKED, E. purpureum.

EUPATORIUM PURPUREUM, Mo'hawk tas'sel, Purple-stalked Eupatorium, Trump'etweed, Joe Pyeweed, Gravelroot, is used in similar cases, as well as

EUPATORIUM ROTUNDIFOLIUM, Round-leaved Hemp-weed, Wild horehound;

EUPATORIUM SESSILIFOLIUM, Upland Bone-set, and EUPATORIUM TEUCRIFOLIUM, Wild horehound, German'der-leaved horehound, Rough bone-set.

EUPATORIUM TRIPOLIATUM, E. cannabinum — e. Urticifolium, E. ageratoïdes.

Eupepsia, (εὐψία, from εὐ, and πσιω, 'I digest.') A good digestion. The antithesis to dyspepsia.

Eupeptic, Eupeptus, (εὐπεπτος,) Eupepticus. Relating to a good digestion. One endowed with a good digestion.

Euphlog'ia, (eu, and φλεγω, 'I burn.') Mild inflammation.

Euphony, Euphonia, (εὐφωνία, from eu, and φωνη, 'voice.') An agreeable or regular voice.

Euphorbe Cyprès, E. cyparissias — e. des Marais, E. palustris — e. Vomitive, E. ipecacuanha.

Euphorbia Antiquorum, of India, is said to possess the same properties as Euphorbia tirucalli.

EUPHORBIA CAPITA'TA, Caecica. Ord. Euphorbiaceæ, (after Euphorbus, physician to Juba.) A Brazilian plant, which is strongly astringent, and not poisonous. It is considered to be one of the best remedies for the bites of serpents. It is also called Colubrina Lusitanica.

EUPHORBIA CAPUT MEDUSÆ. A South African plant, with which, according to Bruce, the wild inhabitants poison their arrows. The Ethiopians use, for the same purpose, Euphorbia heptagona, E. virosa, and E. cereiformis; the savages, in the most southern part of America, the sap of E. cotinifolia.

EUPHORBIA CEREIFORMIS, see Euphorbia caput Medusæ.

EUPHORBIA CHILENSIS. The juice of this South American plant has been employed as a drastic purgative.

EUPHORBIA COROLLA'TA, Large flowering spurge, Milk-weed, Snakes' milk, Ipecacuan'ha, Hip'po, Picac', Ipecac, Milk pur'slain, Purge-root, Emetic root, Bow'man's root, Ap'ple root, Indian Physic; indigenous; has similar properties to the last. The dose of the root is the same.

EUPHORBIA COTINIFOLIA, see Euphorbia caput Medusæ.

EUPHORBIA CYPARIS'SIAS, E. Cypress'ina, Es'ula mi'nor seu Cyparissias, Tithym'alus Cyparissias, Cypress spurge, Wel'come to our house, (F.) Euphorbe cyprès. This, like most of the spurges, is very acrimonious. Among the rustics it was formerly called poor man's rhubarb, and was, consequently, a laxative. It is not used.

EUPHORBIA CYPRESS'INA, E. cyparissias.

EUPHORBIA HELIOSCOP'IA, E. obturata, Sun-spurge, Wart-wort spurge; indigenous. The juice has been given in syphilis. It is said to be cathartic.

EUPHORBIA HEPTAGONA, see Euphorbia caput Medusæ.

EUPHORBIA HYPERICIFOLIA, Large spotted spurge, Eye-bright. A native of the United States. It is astringent and tonic. Used in infusion — f3ss. to Oj. of boiling water. Dose, a tablespoonful. EUPHORBIA MACULA'TA, Milk Pur'slane, Spotted spurge, has similar properties.

EUPHORBIA IPECACUAN'HA, Anisophyllum Ipecacuan'ha, Ipecacuan'ha spurge, Wild ipecac., (F.) Euphorbe vomitive. This species of spurge is common in the southern and middle parts of the United States. The root is a powerful emetic, in the dose of from five to fifteen grains; twenty grains act as a cathartic likewise. In large doses, it acts as a narcotico-acrid.

EUPHORBIA LATH'YRIS. The systematic name of the plant which affords the Less'er Cataputia seeds, Cataputia mi'nor, Ca'per spurge, Lath'yrus, Gar'den spurge, Ca'per plant, Mole'plant, Tithym'alus latifolius seu lath'yrus, Galarrhæus Lath'yrus, (F.) Épurgé ou grande Énule. The seeds — (F.) Graines de Catapuce ou d'Épurgé ou Royales mineures — possess cathartic properties; and an expressed oil of the seeds — O'leum Euphor'biæ Lathyr'idis, Oil of Euphor'bia, (F.) Huile d'épurgé — has been given as a cathartic, in the dose of six to twelve drops.

EUPHORBIA OFFICINA'RUM. The systematic name of the plant which affords the Euphor'bium, Euphor'biæ gummi-resi'na, Gum'mi euphor'biæ, in greatest abundance. The euphorbium is an inodorous gum-resin, in yellow tears, which have the appearance of being worm-eaten. It enters into the composition of some plasters, and has been used as an errhine.

EUPHORBIA PALUS'TRIS, E. paniculata, Great'er spurge, Es'ula ma'jor, Tithym'alus palustris, Galarrhæus palustris, Marsh spurge, Wret'weed, (F.) Euphorbe des marais. The juice is given, in Russia, as a common purge. It is used, too, as an irritant in tinea, warts, &c.

EUPHORBIA PALUS'TRIS and E. villosa, or E. Pilosa, have been brought forward as preventives of hydrophobia — the bitten part being washed with a decoction, and, at the same time, the decoction being taken internally.

EUPHORBIA PANICULA'TA, E. palustris.

EUPHORBIA PARAL'IAS, Tithym'alus paral'ias, Sea spurge. This is violently cathartic and irritating, and is seldom used.

EUPHORBIA PEP'US, Petty spurge; indigenous. The powdered root is actively cathartic. It has been given in dropsy.

EUPHORBIA PILO'SA, see Euphorbia palustris.

EUPHORBIA PROSTRA'TA is called by the native Mexicans gollindrinera, and is used by them as an antidote to the poison of serpents. It possesses, in large doses, the emetic and cathartic properties of the Euphorbia in general.

EUPHORBIA TIRUCALLI, of India, Milk Hedge. The juice, applied locally, is said by the natives to induce powerful uterine contractions.

EUPHORBIA TITHYMALOIDES, Pedilanthus tithymaloides.

EUPHORBIA TORT'ILIS, of India, is said to possess the same properties as E. Tirucalli.

EUPHORBIA VILLO'SA, see Euphorbia palustris — e. Virosa, see Euphorbia caput Medusæ.

All the spurges are vesicant and rubefacient, when applied externally.

Euphor'bium, Euphorbia officinarum.

Euphor'ia, (εὐφορία, from eu, and φωρῶ, 'I carry.') Eupathia.

Euphrag'ia, Euphrasia officinalis.

Euphra'sia, (εὐφρασία, 'cheerfulness;') so called from its effects, E. officinalis seu min'ima seu imbricat'a, Ocula'ria, Euphrag'ia, Ophthalmica, Eyebright, (F.) Eufraise, Euphrase, Casse-Lunette. It has been recommended in diseases of the eye, but is unworthy of notice.

Eupla'sia, (eu, and πλασσω, 'I form.') Healthy healing, resulting in a living structure conforming to the nature and habits of the tissue of the part.

Euplas'tic, Euplasticus, (F.) Euplastique, (eu, and πλασσω, 'I form.') Having the capacity of becoming organizable in a high degree, — as in false membranes resulting from acute inflammation in a healthy person.

Eupleur'um Serrula'tum, Diosma crenata.

Eupno'a, (εὐπνοία, from eu, and πνέω, 'I respire.') Freedom or facility of respiration.

Eurhyth'mia, Eurhyth'mia, (εὐρυθμία, from eu, and ῥυθμός, 'rhythm.') Regularity of the pulse.

Euribali, Juribali.

Euro'des, (εὐρώδης, from eurus, and odes), Carious.

Eurodon'ticus, (εὐρώς, 'putrefaction,' and ὀδούς, gen. ὀδόντος, 'a tooth.') Suffering from carious teeth.

Eurhyth'mia, Eurhythmia.

Eur'us, (εὐρύς, 'mould, putrefaction,') Mu'cor, Ca'ries. Corruption of the humors.

Eurycho'ria, (εὐρύς, 'extensive,' and χωρὸς, 'space,') Sinus.

Eur'ycles, (Εὐρυκλής, a celebrated soothsayer and ventriloquist,) Engastrimyth.

Eurycli'tus, Engastrimyth.

Eurys'mus, (εὐρυς, 'to dilate,') Dilatation.

Eusar'cus, (εὐσαρκός, from eu, and σὰρξ, gen. σαρκός, 'flesh.') One who is fleshy, robust, muscular.

Eusemi'a, (F.) Eusémie, (εὐσημία, from eu, and σημειν, 'a sign.') A collection of good signs.

Eusomphalien, (eu, and ομφαλός, 'navel.') A double monster in which each being has a separate navel, and is able to execute, independently, almost all the vital functions.

Eusplanchn'ia, (eu, and σπλάγχνον, 'a viscous.') A healthy state of the viscera.

Eusta'chian Tube, Tu'ba Eustachia'na seu Eusta'chii seu Aristotel'ica seu Acus'tica, Sal'pynx Cana'tis guttura'tis seu palati'nus tym'pani, Syrin'ga, Syrinx, Meat'us cæ'cus, Duc'tus au'ris palati'nus, Pter'a Pala'to ad Aur'em, (F.) Trompe ou Conduit d'Eustache, Conduit guttural de l'oreille (Ch.), (called after Eustachius.) It is partly bony and partly cartilaginous: extending from the cavity of the tympanum to the upper part of the pharynx. Its length is about two inches; the bony portion, which belongs to the temporal bone, is about three-fourths of an inch long. It is lined, internally, by a prolongation of the lining membrane of the pharynx. Its nerves are furnished by the palatine branches of the ganglion of Meckel, and its vessels proceed from those of the pharynx and velum pendulum. The use of the tube seems to be to permit the renewal of air in the cavity of the tympanum.

EUSTA'CHIAN VALVE, Valve of Eusta'chius, (F.) Valvule d'Eustachi ou d'Eustache. A membranous, semilunar fold, which corresponds to the opening of the vena cava inferior into the right auricle of the heart.

Eustheni'a, Vi'gor, Exuberant'ia, (εὐσθενία, from eu, and σθένος, 'strength.') Flourishing, exuberant health.

Eustoch'ia, (εὐστοχία, from eu, and στοχος, 'a mark.') A happy guessing or conjecture in contradistinction to accurate inductive diagnosis.

Eustom'achus, (εὐστομαχος, from eu, and στομαχος, 'stomach.') Digesting rapidly. Having a good stomach.

Eustron'gylus Gi'gas, Strongylus gigas — e. Longevaginatus, see Parasites and Worms.

Eutax'ia, (ευταξία, from eu, and τασσω, 'I arrange,') Euthe'sia. A well-ordered constitution, in which every part has its proper relation. The ready return of a rupture, or of a luxated bone.

Euthana'sia, (ευθανασία, from eu, and θανάτος, 'death.') An easy death. The opposite to this is Cacothana'sia.

Euthe'sia, (ευθεία, from eu, and θεσις, 'position,') Eutaxia.

Euthyen'teron, (ευθύς, 'straight,' and εντέρον, 'intestine,') Rectum.

Euthyenterosteno'ma, (euthyenteron, and στενός, 'narrow.') Stricture of the rectum.

Euthym'ia, An'imi tran'quillitas, (ευθυμία, from eu, and θυμός, 'mind.') Tranquillity of mind. A good state of the mental faculties.

Euthyp'noë, (ευθύς, 'straight,' and πνοή, 'breath,') Orthopnoëa.

Euthypno'a, Orthopnoëa.

Eutoc'ia, (ευτοκία, from eu, and τοκος, 'delivery.') An easy labor. Fecundity.

Eutroph'ia, (ευτροφία, from eu, and τροφή, 'nourishment,') A good state of nutrition.

Eutroph'ic, Eutrophicus. A term introduced into medical terminology, by the author, for an agent whose action is exerted on the system of nutrition, without necessarily occasioning manifest increase of any of the secretions. The chief eutrophics are, — mercurials, the preparations of iodine, bromine, cod liver oil, the preparations of gold and silver, sulphur, sugar, and sarsaparilla.

Euzoodyna'mia, (eu, ζωον, 'animal,' and δυναμις, 'power,') Sanitas.

Evac'uants, Evacuan'tia, (e, and vacuare, 'to empty,') (F.) Évacuatifs. Medicines are so called which occasion a discharge by some emunctory; such as purgatives, emetics, &c.

Évacuatifs, Evacuants.

Evacua'tio, Evacuation, Excretion.

Evacua'tion, Evacua'tio, Lopax'is. The discharge of any matter whatever by the natural passages or by an artificial opening. See Dejection.

Évanouissement, (from evanescere, — e, and vanesce, — 'to fade away,') Syncope.

Ev'anroot, Geum Virginianum.

Evapora'tion, Evapora'tio, Vapora'tio, Exha'la'tio, (e, and vaporare, vaporatum, 'to emit a vapor,') Transformation of a liquid into vapor, in order to obtain the fixed matters contained in it dry and separate from the liquid. When the vapor is received into a proper vessel and condensed, the process is called distillation. Evaporation produces cold, and this is one of the processes by which the body is cooled, through the evaporation of the perspiratory fluid.

Évaux, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Évaux is situated in Auvergne, in France. The waters are hydrosulphurous and thermal. Season, from the 15th of May to the 1st of October.

Eventra'tion, Eventra'tio, Hypogastorrhæ'is, (e, and venter, 'the belly.') A tumor, formed by a general relaxation of the parietes of the abdomen, and containing a great part of the abdominal viscera. Also, ventral hernia, or that which occurs in any other way than through the natural openings of the abdominal parietes. Lastly, any very extensive wound of the abdominal parietes, with issue of the greater part of the intestines.

Even'tus, gen. Eventûs, (e, and venire, ventum, 'to come,') Termina'tio mor'bi. The event or issue of a disease, either favorable or unfavorable.

Everlast'ing, Diœ'cious, Antennaria dioica.

Everric'ulum, Specil'lum, (e, and verrere, 'to clean out,') A sort of sound or scoop, used for extracting sand or fragments of stone or clots of blood from the bladder, after or during the operation of lithotomy.

Ever'sio Pal'pebræ, (e, and vertere, versum, 'to turn,') Ectropion.

Évidement (F.), (e, and video, 'I empty,') Scooping or gouging or emptying out; as évidement des os, gouging of the bones.

Évigilation, ([L.] evigilare, evigilatum, 'to awake,') see Sleep.

E'vil, The, Scrofula — e. King's, Scrofula — e. Social, Prostitution.

Evira'tio, (e, and vir, 'a man,') Castration.

Evira'tus, Castratus, Eunuch.

Evisceration, (e, and viscus, gen. visceris,) Exenterismus.

Evolu'tio, (e, and volvere, volutum, 'to roll,') Development — e. Spontanea, Evolution, spontaneous.

Evolu'tion of Germs, see Generation.

EVOLU'TION, SPONTA'NEOUS, Ver'sio seu Evolu'tio spontanea, Spontaneous ver'sion, Spontaneous expul'sion, Duplication of the fœtus. A term, applied, by Dr. Denman, to what he considered to be a spontaneous turning of the fœtus in utero, in an arm presentation, in consequence of powerful uterine contractions forcing out the breech and feet, while the arm receded. It is now usually considered to be a doubling of the fœtus, so that the arm changes its position but little, while the breech is forcibly expelled before the upper extremity; — the case becoming similar to a breech presentation.

EVOLU'TION, VES'ICLE OF, Vesicle of development.

Evomit'io, (e, and vomitio,) Vomiting.

Evonymus, Euonymous.

Evol'sion, Avul'sion, Evul'sio, (evellere, evulsio, — e, and vellere, — 'to pluck out,') Apotil'mus, Ectil'mus, Til'mus. The action of plucking out; forcible extraction. (F.) Arrachement. This word is oftener used by the French than by the English surgeons, for the act of extracting certain parts, the presence of which is injurious, — as the teeth, polypi, &c.

Ew-Gowan, or Ewe-Gowan, ([Sc.] gowan, 'a daisy,') Bellis.

Ex, as a prefix, 'out of.' See Ec.

Ex Mar'ibus, (ex, and mas, gen. maris, 'a male,') Castratus.

Exacerba'tio, (ex, and acerbare, 'to embitter,') Exacerbation, Paroxysm.

Exacerba'tion, Exacerba'tio, Exaspera'tio, Ex-crescen'tia, (F.) Redoublement. An increase in the symptoms of a disorder. Often used synonymously with paroxysm.

Ex'acum Spica'tum, (ex, and ago, 'I drive,') from its supposed virtue as an expeller of poison, Coutoubea alba.

Exæmato'sis, (ex, âima, 'blood,' and the suffix osis,) Hæmatosis.

Exæ'mia, (ex, and âima, 'blood,') Anæmia.

Exæ'mus, Exanguious.

Exæ'resis, (ἐξαιρέω, from ex, and αἵρω, 'I take away,') (F.) Exérèse. A surgical operation, which consists in drawing, extracting, or removing, from the human body, anything that is useless, noxious, or extraneous. It is a generic term, which includes extraction, evulsion, evacuation, excision, ablation, amputation, &c.

EXÆ'RESIS, Extraction.

Exag'gerated, Exaggera'tus, (F.) Exagéré, (exaggero, — ex, and aggero, 'I heap up, — 'I magnify,') Heightened. Increased by expression. An epithet for sounds heard on auscultation and percussion when much increased — Hypereche'sis, Hypereche'ma.

Exa'gion, (ἐξαγιον,) Era'gium. The sixth part of an ounce: — four scruples.

Exal'ma, gen. Exal'matis, (ἐξάλμα, from ex, and ἀλλομαι, 'I leap,') Exal'sis. Hippocrates calls thus the displacement of the vertebræ.

Exal'sis, (ἐξάλσις,) Exalma, Leap.

Exalta'tion of the Vital Forces, Exalta'tio vi'trium, (exalto, — ex, and alto, — 'I raise,') This expression has been used, by modern pathologists, to designate a morbid increase in the action of organs, and partly that which occurs in an inflamed organ. Some use exaltation of the vital forces, and inflammation, synonymously.

Examblo'ma, gen. Examblo'matis, (ἐξαμβλωμα, from ex, and αμβλω, 'I abort,') Abortion.

Examblo'sis, (ἐξαμβλωσις,) Abortion.

Exa'men Rigoro'sum, ('a rigorous examination,') An examination of a candidate for the degree of Doctor of Medicine in the German Universities, which, like the Tenta'men med'icum, is conducted in Latin, and takes place before the medical faculty on all branches of medicine.

Exanastomo'sis, Anastomosis.

Exanas'trophê, (ex, ana, and στρέφω, 'I turn,') Convalescence.

Exangi'a, (ex, and αγγιον, 'a vessel,') Exange'i'a. An enlargement or rupture of a blood-vessel, without external opening. A genus in the order Dysthe'tica, class Hæmat'ica, of Good. It comprises aneurism and varix.

EXANGI'A ANEURIS'MA, Aneurism.

Exan'guious, Exsan'guine, Exsanguin'eus, Exæ'mus, Exsan'guis, (F.) Exsangue, (ex, and sanguis, 'blood,') Seeming to be bloodless; as a female, who has suffered largely from uterine hemorrhage. See Anæmic.

Exa'nia, (ex, and anus,) Proctocele.

Exanima'tion, Exanima'tio, (ex, and anima,) This word has two acceptations. Sometimes, it means real death, corresponding with the Greek σάρατος, mors. At others, it signifies apparent death, corresponding with the Greek ἀλεια, αἰψυχία, κλονίς, An'imi deli'quium.

Exan'them, Exanth'e'ma, Anth'e'ma erup'tio, Epanthe'ma, Efflorescen'tia, Exanthis'ma, Ec'thy-ma, Epanaste'ma, Epanthe'ma, Epanthis'ma, Ef-flora'tio, (ἐξανθήμα, from εἶ, and ανθίω, 'I bloom,') A rash. (F.) Exanthème, Élevure. Under this term is comprehended, by some, every kind of eruption of which the skin is the seat. Others understand by it those eruptions that are accompanied by fever, Fe'bres exanthemat'icæ; including, under the head of the major exanthemata, those which attack a person but once in his life, and which are communicated by specific contagion: and, under the minor exanthemata, those which are not marked by these characteristics. Small-pox, measles, cow-pox, &c., belong to the major: — chicken-pox, herpes, lichen, &c., to the minor. The general acceptation of Exanthem is, however, a more or less vivid, circumscribed, or diffuse redness of the skin, which diminishes, or disappears transiently, under the pressure of the finger.

Different stages have been admitted in the progress of the major exanthemata. Hebra recognizes four: — the stadium prodromorum, or that between the commencement of the disease and the appearance of the rash; the stadium eruptivum, during which the eruption develops itself; the stadium floritivum, the stage during which the eruption is at its height; and the stadium exsiccativum seu desquamativum seu desquatio, the stage which commences when the morbid phenomena begin to subside.

EXANTHEM, ANOMALOUS, Rubella—e. Carbuncular, Anthracia — e. Ichorous, Emphysis — e. Pustulous, Empyema — e. Rash, Enanthesis — e. Syphilitic, see Syphilis.

Exanthema, gen. Exanthematis, Eminence, Exanthem — e. Antivariolosum, Vaccina — e. Internum, Eisanthema.

EXANTHEMA HÆMORRHAGICUM. An affection similar to purpura, described by Dr. Graves, of Dublin, ushered in by febrile symptoms, with bleeding from the bowels and urinary organs and the mucous system generally, and a peculiar exanthematous eruption on the skin.

EXANTHEMA IODICUM. An eruption of dark red definite spots, of various sizes, spreading over the whole body, without the formation of scales, and disappearing only after a long time, and which seems to be produced occasionally by the use of iodine.

EXANTHEMA MILIARIA, Miliary fever—e. Pestis, Plague — e. Serosum, Pemphigus — e. Strophulus, Strophulus — e. Urticatum, Urticaria — e. Vaccina, Vaccina — e. Varicella, Varicella.

Exanthematica, Eruptive fevers. Cutaneous eruptions, essentially accompanied with fever; — the third order in the class Hæmatia of Good.

Exanthematischesis, Exanthematoschesis, (exanthema, and σχίζω, 'to withhold.') Suppression of a cutaneous eruption.

Exanthematology, Exanthematologia, (exanthema, and λογία, 'a discourse.') The doctrine of cutaneous eruptions.

Exanthematophthalmia, Ophthalmia exanthematica, (exanthema, and ὀφθαλμία, 'inflammation of the eye.') Ophthalmia in the course of, or succeeding to, a cutaneous eruption.

Exanthematous, Exanthematosis, Exanthematus, (F.) Exanthématique. Relating or appertaining to exanthema, as "an exanthematous eruption," (F.) Éruption exanthématique.

Exanthème Intestinale, see Typhus.

Exanthesis, (ἐκάνθησις), see Efflorescence — e. Arthrosia, Dengue — e. Roseola, Roseola — e. Rubella, Rubella.

Exanthisma, gen. Exanthismatis, (ἐκάνθησις), Exanthem.

Exanthropia, (ex, and άνθρωπος, 'man,') Misanthropia.

Exapsis, (ἐκψις, from ex, and πτείνω, 'to inflame,') Inflammation.

Exaragma, gen. Exaragmatis, (ἐκάρωμα, from ἐκείνω, 'I tear away,' 'I break,') Collision, violent fracture, a fragment.

Exarchia, gen. Exarchia, (ἐξάρχια, from ἐξέρχω, 'I lead out,') Chief of the archiatri, or chief of physicians, a title, like that of Comes Archiatrorum, given to the chief physician of an emperor or king. Archiatra appears to have meant, at times, the same thing.

Exarma, gen. Exarmatis, (ἐξάρμα, from ἐξέρχω, 'to raise up,') Swelling.

Exarsio, (ex, and ardeo, 'to burn,') A burning heat.

Exarte, gen. Exartematis, (ἐξάρτε, from ἐκείνω, 'I suspend,') Amuletum.

Exarteritis, gen. Exarteritidis, Exarteritis,

(ex, and arteria, 'an artery,' and itis.) Inflammation of the outer coat of an artery.

Exarthrema, gen. Exarthrematis, (ἐξάρθρωμα, from ex, and άρθρον, 'a joint,') Luxation.

Exarthroma, gen. Exarthromatis, (ἐξάρθρωμα), Luxation.

Exarthrosis, (ἐξάρθρωσις), Luxation — e. Parctica, see Pareticus.

Exarticulatio, (ex, and articulus, 'a joint,') Amputation, joint. Luxation.

ExarYSIS, (ἐκάρωσις), Exhaustion.

Exasperatio, (ex, and asperare, 'to sharpen,') Exacerbation.

Exhibitio, see Imbibition.

Excæcaria Agallocha, (excæcare, 'to make blind,' its acrid juice,) Agallochum.

Excalfactio, (ex, calidus, 'warm,' and facere, 'to make,') Échauffement.

Excarnatio, Excarnatio, (ex, and caro, gen. carnis, 'flesh,') A mode of making anatomical preparations, which consists in separating injected vessels from the parts in which they are situated. This is done by means of corrosion by an acid or by putrefaction.

Excastratio, Castration, Eunuch.

Excathisma, gen. Excathismatis, (ex, and καθισμα, 'a seat,') Bath, half. Semicupium.

Excavator, Dental, (ex, and cavare, 'to hollow,') see Dental.

Excerebratio, (ex, and cerebrum, 'brain,') Eccephalosis.

Excerebratus, Delirious.

Excernent, (ex, and cernere, 'to sift,') Secreting.

Excidencia, (ex, and cadere, 'to fall,') Ectopoma.

Excipient, Excipient, (excipere, — ex, and capere, — 'to receive,') (F.) Intermède. A substance, which, in a medicinal prescription, gives form and consistence to it, and serves as a vehicle or medium for the exhibition of the other ingredients.

Excipulum, Cup.

Excisio, Entaille, Excision — e. Ovarii, Ovariectomy.

Excision, Excisio, (excidere, excisum, — ex, and cadere, — 'to cut off,') Ectomis, Ectomie. A surgical operation, by which parts of a small size are removed with a cutting instrument. See Amputation.

Excitability, Excitabilitas. Irritability. (From excitare, — ex, and citare, 'to excite,') The faculty possessed by living beings, of being sensible to the action of excitants. The doctrine of excitability forms an important part of the Brunonian system: see Excitation.

Excitant, Stimulant.

Excitatio, Excitatio, Excitement. The act of exciting; the state of an organ or organs excited. Excitement is, sometimes, used synonymously with augmented arterial action. The effect of the exciting powers acting on the excitability, according to Brown, constitutes excitement. Cullen used the term to express the restoration of the energy and action of the brain, which had been interrupted by sleep or some debilitating cause, — a state opposite to that of collapse. Not unfrequently, it is employed in the sense of excessive action, — Superexcitatio, (F.) Surexcitation.

Excited Diseases, Feigned diseases.

Excito-motion, see Excito-motory.

Excito or Excito-motory, (F.) Excito-moteur. An epithet applied by Dr. Marshall Hall to a division of the nervous system — comprising the gray matter of the spinal marrow, with the afferent and efferent nerves connected with it; — all of which are concerned in reflex actions; or those by which impressions are transmitted to a centre, and reflected so as to produce muscular contraction without sensation or volition. They constitute the reflex system of nerves. See Nerves.

The term excito-motion has also been employed to signify motion, no matter how excited, by the reflex nerves or by volition.

Excitoun'trient and Excitosecretory are reflex actions in which nutrition and secretion are modified in parts by impressions made elsewhere and reflected to them, as where tumors disappear or secretions of tears, milk, saliva, for example, are increased, by impressions made on the cerebro-spinal nervous centres.

Exclu'sive, (ex, and cludere, clausum, 'to shut.') That which excludes or shuts out.

The Exclusive method of treating disease, in the language of Dr. Bigelow, applies one remedy to all, or to a majority, of diseases.

Excoria'tio, (ex, and corium, 'skin.') Ecdora, Excoriation.

Excoria'tion, Excoria'tio, Excoriatu'ra, Am'yche, (F.) Écorchure. A slight wound, which removes only the skin.

Excoriatu'ra, Excoriation.

Excrea'tion, Excrea'tio, Exscrea'tio, Screa'tus, Rasca'tio, (ex, and screare, 'to spit.') Act of spitting. (F.) Crachement. See Exspuitio.

Excrement, Excrementum, Retrimen'tum, Excre'tum, Excre'tio, Perit'oma, Diachore'ma, Aph'odos, Aphoden'ma, Apocho'reon, Apoc'risis, Ar'da, Ar'dalus, (excernere, excretum, — ex, and cernere, — 'to separate,' 'cleanse.') Everything which is evacuated from the body of an animal by the natural emunctories as superfluous; such as the faecal matters, the urine, perspiration, nasal mucus, &c. Generally, however, the term is restricted to the faecal evacuations; — Purgamen'ta, He'dra, Se'des, Fæ'ces, Ster'eus, Cac'cæ, Spat'ilè (especially when liquid), Dejec'tio alvi'na, O'nera al'vi seu ven'tris, Sor'des ven'tris, Hypochore'ma, Ca'lia, Hypochore'sis, Mer'da, Mer'dus, Catar-rhex'is, Co'prus, Cop'ranon, Scor.

The average amount of faeces discharged in the 24 hours, has been estimated at from four ounces to six, in cases where the solid food taken may have been forty-five ounces. They contain, with the remains of undigested food, fat and fatty acids, &c. Dr. W. Marcet found in them a peculiar non-nitrogenous, crystallizable matter, slightly alkaline, insoluble in water, but soluble in ether and hot alcohol — ex'cretine; and Dr. Austin Flint, Jr., a crystallizable substance — ster'corine, also soluble in ether and boiling alcohol, but fusing at a much lower temperature than ex'cretine. He considers it to be produced, by transformation, from the cholesterine of the bile.

EXCREMENT, HU'MAN, Stercus humanum.

Excrementit'ial, Excrementit'ious, Excrementit'ius, (F.) Excrémentieux, Excrémentitiel. That which is similar to excrement, and forms part of it. Excrementit'ial humors or parts are those destined to be evacuated as incapable of administering to the nutrition of the body.

Excremen'torecrementit'ial, Excremen'torecrementit'ious. Animal fluids intended to be partly absorbed and partly rejected.

Excre'scence, Excre'scentia, Ecphy'ma, Phymato'sis, Hypersarco'sis, Sarcophy'ia, Cu'ro ex-cres'cens, (excre'scere, — ex, and crescere, — 'to grow outwards,') (Sc.) Sca'lmè, (F.) Excrois-sance. A tumor which forms at the surface of organs, and especially on the skin, mucous membranes, or ulcerated surfaces. Excre'scences differ in size, shape, cause, &c., and each requires its own treatment. Warts, condylomata, polypi, hemorrhoids, belong to this head.

Excre'scentia, Exacerbation, Protuberance, Tumor — e. Carnosa, Sarcoma — e. Fungosa, Fungosity — e. Gingivæ, Epulis — e. Vesicæ urina'riæ carnosa, Cysthypersarcosis.

Excre'ta, see Excretion.

Excréteur, Excretory.

Ex'cretine, see Excrement.

Excre'tio, Excretion, Excrement — e. Alvina, Defecation — e. Fæcum alvinarum, Defecation — e. Urinæ involuntaria, Enuresis.

Excre'tion, Excre'tio, Ec'crisis, Evacua'tio, Ejec'tio, Expul'sio, Eges'tio, Diachore'sis, (excernere, excretum, — ex, and cernere, — 'to separate,') The separation or throwing off of those matters, Excre'ta, Eges'ta, Ion'ta, Apion'ta, from the body of an animal, which are supposed to be useless, as the urine, perspiration, and faeces.

Excrétoire, Excretory.

Ex'cretory or Excre'tory, Excreto'rius, (F.) Excréteur ou Excrétoire. An excretory vessel or duct, Duc'tus excreto'rius, is one which transmits the fluid secreted by a gland either externally or into the reservoirs into which it has to be deposited. The existence of an excretory duct was regarded as a distinctive character of the glands properly so called.

EX'CRETORY OR'GAN means any one charged with the office of excreting; thus, the skin is said to be an excretory organ, because through it the perspiration takes place.

Excre'tum, Excrement.

Excroissance, Excre'scence.

Excu'tia Ventr'iculi, (ex, and quatio, 'I shake,') Stom'ach Brush. An instrument, composed of iron or brass wire, at one of the extremities of which is a pencil of bristles. Some ancient authors proposed this to extract foreign bodies from the oesophagus, as well as to cleanse the stomach of viscid and tenacious matters adhering to it.

Exchebronch'us, (εχειν, 'to project,' and βρογχος, 'the throat,') Bronchocele.

Excheglu'ti, (εχειν, 'to project,' and γλουτοι, 'the nates,') Exischioid.

Ex'edens, (ex, and edere, 'to eat,') see Herpes exedens.

Exelco'sis, (ex, and ελκος, 'an ulcer,') see Ulceration.

Exelcoys'mus, (εξελευσμος, from ex, and ελκυω, 'I draw,') Extraction. Also, the act of breaking out into ulcers.

Excéphale, (ex, and κεφαλον, 'the encephalon,') A genus of monsters, in which the encephalon is situate in a great measure out of the cranium, the upper portion of which is almost wholly wanting.

Exentera'tion, Exenterismus.

Exenteris'mus, Exenter'isis, Exentera'tio, Exentera'tion, Eviscera'tion, Deviscera'tion, Unbow'elling, Embow'elling or Imbow'elling, Viscera'tion, (ex, and εντερον, 'an intestine,') The operation of taking out the bowels.

Exera'ma, gen. Exera'matis, (εξεραπα, from ex, and εραω, 'I pour out,') Any thing cast out. Vomiting; or the matter vomited.

Ex'ercise, Exercita'tio, Exercit'ium, Asce'sis, Gymna'sion, (exercere, exercitum, 'to work,') Every motion of the body arising from the contraction of muscles subjected to the will. Also, the action of any organ whatever. Exercises may be active or passive. The passive are referred to under the head of Gestation. The chief active exercises are:—walking, running, dancing, hunting, fencing, playing at ball, cricket, racket, quoits, swimming, declamation, and singing. Exercise is an important prophylactic, particularly for those disposed to be plethoric. It improves the digestion; augments the secretions; and, when used in moderation, gives strength to the body; but when carried to excess, produces debility and disease.

EX'ERCISE BONE, Drill bone.

Exérèse, Exaresis.

Exerrho'sis, (ex, and ρῶω, 'I flow,') The discharge which takes place by insensible perspiration.

Exfoeta'tion, see Pregnancy.

Exfoliatif, Exfoliative.

Exfolia'tion, Enfolia'tio, Desquama'tio, Eclep'isis, (ex, and folium, 'a leaf.') By this is meant the separation of the dead portions of a bone, tendon, aponeurosis, or cartilage, under the form of lamellæ or small scales. Exfoliation is accomplished by the instinctive action of the parts, and its object is to detach the dead portion from those subjacent, which are still alive. For this purpose the latter throw out fleshy granulations, and a more or less abundant suppuration occurs, which tends to separate the exfoliated part—now become an extraneous body. The ancients distinguished exfoliation into sensible and insensible, according as the dead portions of bone were detached in fragments of greater or less size, or in very thin pieces, and in an almost insensible manner. When the dead part embraces all or almost all the substance of a bone, it takes the name Sequestrum.

Exfoliative, Exfoliativus, Desquam'atory, Desquamato'rius, (F.) Exfoliatif. That which takes away by leaves or scales. The term has been applied to certain medicines, which were regarded as proper to hasten exfoliation, such as alcohol, oil of turpentine, tincture of myrrh, &c.

EXFOLIATIVE TREPAN', Eclepisitrep'anum. An ancient raspatory, or instrument for scraping exfoliating portions of bone.

Exhalaison, Exhalation.

Exha'lant, Exha'lent, Exha'lans, (exhalare, exhalatum, — ex, and halare, 'to breathe,'—'to exhale, throw out.') Having the quality of exhaling or evaporating.

EXHA'LANT VES'SELS, Va'sa exhalan'tia, are very minute, and rise from the arterial capillary system. They are situate in every tissue of the body, and on the surface of the mucous and serous membranes and skin; on which each pours its particular fluid. Bichat distinguished three sets:—1. The external, terminating on the mucous and external dermoid system, where they pour the matter of perspiration. 2. The internal, comprising those of the areolar and medullary tissues, and of synovial surfaces; and, 3. The nutritive exhalants, which vary in each organ where they are found, and preside over the phenomena of composition and increase of every part of the body. The exhalants are the antagonists of the absorbents. They are imaginary, as a distinct set from the capillary vessels.

Exhala'tio, Evaporation, Exhalation.

Exhala'tion, Exhala'tio, (same etymon as Exhalant.) Anathymi'asis, Apopen'sis, (F.) Exhalaison. A function, by virtue of which certain fluids, obtained from the blood, are spread, in the form of dew, in the areolæ of the different textures, or at the surface of membranes; either for the sake of being thrown out of the body, or to serve ulterior purposes. The sweat is a liquid excrementitious exhalation; the serous fluid of the pleura, a liquid recrementitious exhalation.

Exhalation is also applied to that which exhales from any body whatever, organic or inorganic, dead or living.

EXHALA'TION, PUL'MONARY, see Perspiration.

Exhaust'ion, Exar'ysis, Vires exhaust'æ, (exhaustire, exhaustum, — ex, and haurire,—'to draw out,') (F.) Épuisement. Loss of strength, occasioned by excessive evacuations, great fatigue or privation of food, or by disease.

EXHAUST'ION, SOLAR, see Coup-de-soliel.

Exhil'arant, Exhil'arans, (ex, and hilaro, 'I make merry.') An agent that exhilarates or enlivens.

Exhuma'tion, Exhuma'tio, Effos'sio, (ex, and humus, 'the ground.') The disinterment of a corpse. The circumstances which render this necessary are:—1. Judicial investigations relative to the body of the person inhumed. 2. The removal of a body from one cemetery to another; and, 3. The evacuation of cemeteries or sepulchral vaults. The operation is attended with much unpleasant smell and annoyance, and requires the use of disinfecting agents, of which one of the most available is chlorinated lime. See Disinfection. The putrid effluvia from animal substances are not, however, found to excite endemic disease.

Exid'ia Auric'ula Ju'dæ, Peziza auricula.

Exinanit'ion, Exinanit'io, (ex, and inanis, 'empty.') Extreme exhaustion; complete evacuation.

Exis'chium, (ex, and ischion, 'the ischium.') Prominence of the hips.

Exis'chius, (ἐξίσχιος.) Exis'chus. A luxation of the os femoris. Those with large nates, and prominent hips, were formerly called Exis'chioi and Execheglu'ti.

Exitu'ra, (exire, exitum, — ex, and eo,—'to go out.') According to some, any abscess which discharges. Paracelsus calls thus every kind of putrid excrement.

Ex'itus, gen. Ex'itūs. The outer termination or exit of a canal. The termination of a disease.

Ex'o, (ἐξω.) in composition, without, outwards.

Exoarteri'tis, gen. Exoarteri'tidis, see Arteritis.

Exocar'dia, (exo, and cardia, 'the heart.') Literally, the exterior of the heart. A term sometimes also used synonymously with ectop'ia cor'dis.

Exocar'diac, see Endocardiac.

Exocar'dial, see Endocardiac.

Exocardi'tis, gen. Exocardi'tidis, Pericarditis.

Ex'ochas, Ex'ochē, (from ἐξέχω, — ἐξ, and χω,—'I project.') A soft tumor—as a hemorrhoid—outside of the anus. An outward pile.

Ex'ochē, (ἐξοχή.) Eminence, Exochas.

Exochor'ion, see Chorion.

Exocoli'tis, see Colitis.

Exocula'tio, (ex, and oculus, 'an eye.') Want of eyes. Want of vision. Blindness.

Exocys'tē, Exocys'tis, (exo, and cystis, 'the bladder.') A prolapsus of the bladder into the urethra. Also called Protop'sus vesicæ, Ædop'to'sis vesicæ, (F.) Rénversement de la vessie.

EXOCYS'TE NOELIA'NA. Protrusion of the inner membrane of the bladder. So called from M. Noel, who first accurately described it.

EXOCYS'TE SOLINGENIA'NA. Protrusion of the neck of the bladder. Called after M. Solingen, who first accurately described it.

Exod'ic, Efferent.

Exodonto'sis, (ex, and ὄδους, gen. ὀδοντος, 'a tooth,') (F.) Exodontose. Exostosis on a tooth.

Exoede'sis, (ex, and οἰδω, 'I swell.') Swelling.

Exoenteri'tis, see Enteritis.

Exogene'tic, (exo, and γενεσις.) Having an origin from external causes, as exogenetic diseases.

Exog'enous, (exo, and γεννω, 'I engender.') A term first applied to plants—hence called Ex'-ogens—in which the wood increases by annual additions to the outside.

In animal anatomy, processes which shoot out from any part are termed exog'enous. An exogenous aneurism is one caused by division, from without, of the arterial walls.

Ex'ogens, see Exogenous.

Exogo'nium Pur'ga, Convolvulus jalapa.

Exogonyan'con, (exo, γων, 'knee,' and γων, 'an elbow.') Bowing of the knees outwards.

Exoine, Exoïne, (low [L.] exonium, 'an excuse,' from exonerare, 'to exonerate' [?].) In France, a certificate of excuse, exemption, or dispensation, given to those summoned to appear before a court of justice, and who are unable to do so; a physician's certificate, for example.

Exol'cé, (ἐξολκω, from ex, and ελκω, 'I draw.') Extraction.

Exolu'tion, Syncope.

Exome'tra, (exo, and μητρα, 'uterus.') Pro-lapsus uteri.

Exometri'tis, (exo, and μητρα, 'uterus.') Inflammation of the external surface of the uterus, or of the parts in immediate relation with it.

Exomoio'sis, (εξομοιωσις, from ex, and ὁμοιος, 'like.') Assimilation.

Exomphaloc'e'lē, (exomphalus, and κηλη, 'rupture.') Exomphalus.

Exom'phalus, Exom'phalum, (εξομφαλον) Exum-bilica'tio, Exomphaloc'e'lē, Omphaloc'e'lē, Her'nia umbilica'tis, Omphalex'ochē, Omphalopropto'sis, Prolap'sus umbili'ci, (F.) Hernie ombilicale, H. du nombril, Umbilical her'nia, (ex, and ομφαλος, 'the navel.') Hernia occurring at the navel. This affection happens more frequently in infants, and takes place by the umbilical ring. In adults, it occurs more commonly in females than in males; and, when it does so, the sac passes in the vicinity of the umbilicus. The organs found in this kind of hernia are particularly — the epiploon, the jejunum, the arch of the colon, and sometimes the stomach. The tumor is, in general, round, and presents all the characters of hernia. It is, commonly, readily reducible, and not subject to strangulation. It must be reduced, and retained by an elastic bandage, made in the form of a girdle, and furnished with a pad at its middle part. When strangulated, the stricture may be divided upwards and towards the left side.

Exonco'ma, gen. Exonco'matis, (εξογκωμα) Exonco'sis, (ex, ογκος, 'a tumor,' and oma.) A large, prominent tumor. Used, by Galen, for protuberance of the vertebrae after luxation.

Exonco'sis, (ex, ογκος, 'a tumor,' and osis.) Exoncoma — e. Linguae, Glossonecus.

Exoneirog'mus, (εξονειρωγμος, from ex, and ονειρωσσω, — ονειρος, 'a dream,' — 'I dream lasciviously.') Pollution, nocturnal.

Exoneiro'sis, Pollution, nocturnal.

Exon'eurism, (exo, and νευρον, 'a nerve.') Magnetism, animal.

Exophthal'mia, Exophthal'mos, Pto'sis seu Propto'sis seu Prolap'sus seu Prociden'tia Oc'uli seu Bul'bi Oc'uli, Exorbitis'mus, Ophthalmoc'e'lē, Ophthalmopropto'sis, Oc'uli toti'us prominen'tia, (ex, and ὀφθαλμος, 'eye,') (F.) Procidence de l'œil. A protrusion of the eye from its orbit, occasioned by an abscess or tumor in the areolar texture of the orbit; by exostosis of the parietes of the orbit, &c. In exophthalmia, the eye is pressed forwards; the eyelids are raised and separated, so that they can no longer cover the eye and defend it from the action of extraneous bodies; it becomes inflamed, and the sight is disturbed or destroyed. The treatment of course depends upon the cause. An anæmic condition, accompanied by protrusion of the eye-balls, palpitation of the heart and arteries, and tumefaction of the thyroid gland, has been described under the names Cachex'ia seu stru'ma exophthal'mica, Exophthal'mic goitre, Car'diothyroide'an exophthal'mia, Tachycar'dia strumo'sa, Bronchoc'e'lē exophthal'mica, Mor'bus Basedow'ii, Disease of Graves, Graves' Disease, Beg'bie's Disease, Stokes's Disease, Anæmic protrusion of the eye-balls, (F.) Maladie de Graves, Cachexie ou Goitre exophthalmique, Maladie de Basedow. This was well described by Dr. Graves of Dublin, and also by Basedow, but named by Prof. Trousseau of Paris after Dr. Graves, who first recognized it in 1835.

EXOPHTHAL'MIA FUNGO'SA, Sarcosis bulbi — e. Sarcomatosa, Sarcosis bulbi.

Exophthal'mic, Exophthal'micus, (F.) Exophthalmique. Appertaining or relating to exophthalmia, as "exophthal'mic goitre."

Exophthal'mus, (εξοφθαλμος) Goggle-eyed, (Prov.) Grozet-eyed. One whose eyes are very prominent. The opposite to Cælophthalmus. See Exophthalmia.

Exorbitism'us, (ex, and orbita, 'orbit,') Exophthalmia.

Exor'mia, (ex, and ορρω, 'I break forth,') Papula — e. Lichen, Lichen — e. Prurigo, Prurigo — e. Strophulus, Strophulus.

Exor'tus Un'guium, ('the rising of the nails,') See Nail.

Exo'sis, (εξωσις, from ex, and ωθew, 'I impel,') Luxation.

Exoskel'eton, see Skeleton.

Exos'mic, Exosmotic.

Exosmose', Exosmo'sis, Transuda'tion, (ex, and ωσμος, 'impulse,') The opposite to Endosmose. The act by which substances transude from within to without an animal or other membrane.

Exosmot'ic, Exosmot'icus, Exos'mic, Exos'micus. Belonging to Exosmose — as an exosmotic current.

Exossa'tio, (ex, and os, gen. ossis, 'a bone,') Exostosis.

Exostem'ma or Exoste'ma Caribæ'um, gen. Exostem'matis, (exo, 'without,' and στεμμα, 'a crown,') Cinchonæ caribææ cortex.

Exosto'ma, Exostosis.

Exostose, Exostosis — e. des Dents, Exostosis dentium — e. Sous-ungéale, see Subungual.

Exosto'sis, Hyperosto'sis, Tu'mor Os'seus Os'sis, Emphy'ma exostosis, Exosto'ma, Eposto'ma, Eposto'sis, Osteo'ma, Osto'ma, Osteoph'ya, Osteonco'sis, Exossa'tio, Os'sis Eminen'tia, Os'teophyte, (F.) Exostose, (ex, and οσσειον, 'a bone,') An osseous tumor, which forms at the surface of bones, or in their cavities. Various kinds have been enumerated. Ivory Exosto'sis, Exosto'sis Ebur'nea, (F.) Exostose eburnée; that which has the appearance and consistence of ivory. Laminar Exosto'sis, (F.) Exostose laminaire, is that which is formed of laminae in superposition, or of distinct filaments. The Spong'y Exosto'sis is that whose structure is analogous to the spongy tissue of bones. Exostoses are sometimes distinguished into the true, which seem to be a projection of the osseous substance, and have the same organization and hardness as that substance; and the false or osteosarcoma. Exostosis may depend on syphilis, scrofula, rickets, gout, &c. In such cases, it is important to get rid of the primary disease.

The so-called petrified brains of animals, formerly described, were cranial exostoses. Those exostoses which occur within the bones, have by some been called Enosto'ses.

Exosto'sis, Spina ventosa.

EXOSTO'SIS DEN'TIUM, (F.) Exostose des Dents. Exostosis of the teeth.

EXOSTO'SIS EBUR'NEA, see Exostosis — e. Stomatodes, Osteosteatomia — e. Subungual, see Subungual.

Exoter'ic, (εξωτερικος, 'outer,') See Esoteric.

Exothe'sis, (εξωθησις, from εξωθew, 'I put out,') Luxation.

Exot'ic, Exo'ticus, (εξωτικος, from εξω, 'with-out,') That which comes from abroad. Plants or drugs which are procured from abroad are so called. It is opposed to indigenous.

Exoticaden'ia, (exotic, and αδew, 'I dislike,') Aversion for exotic drugs.

Exotichæmato'sis, (exotic, and hæmatisis.) Transfusion.

Exoticoma'nia, (exotic, and mania.) The opposite to exoticadenia. Fondness for exotic remedies.

Exoticosym'physis, (exotic, and συμφysis, 'a growing together,') A union or growing together of foreign bodies, as of a foreign body with the human.

Expan'sio, (expandere, expansum, — ex, and pendere, 'to open,' — 'to spread out,') Expansion — e. Meatum, Anapetia — e. Musculosa, Platysma myoides.

Expan'sion, Expan'sio. A prolongation or spreading out presented by certain organs. Thus, we say an aponeurotic expansion, &c.

Expatria'tio, (ex, and patratio, 'copulation.') Ejaculation (of sperm).

Expectant, Expectans, (expectare, expectatum, — ex, and spectare, 'to look,' — 'to wait.') That which waits: — as Expectant Medicine, — La Médecine expectante. See Expectation.

Expecta'tion, Expecta'tio. The word expectation has been applied, in medicine, to that method which consists in observing the progress of diseases, and removing deranging influences, without prescribing active medicines, unless such shall be imperiously required. It consists, in fact, in leaving the disease almost wholly to the efforts of nature, and has been termed the Art of curing diseases by expectation or waiting, Ars sanandi cum expecta'tione, Nihilis'mus.

Expectorant, Expectorative, Expectorans, Anacathar'ticus, Sputato'rius, Antib'e'chicus, Pty's-magogue, (ex, and pectus, gen. pectoris, 'the breast.') A medicine capable of facilitating or provoking expectoration. There is probably no such thing as a direct expectorant. They all act through the system, or by impressions made on parts at a distance, which, through the medium of general, continuous, or contiguous sympathy, excite the secretory vessels of the air-passages into action. The following are the chief reputed expectorants: — Ammoniacum; Asafœtida; Galbanum; Ipecacuanha; Myroxylon; Myrrha; Inhalations of Iodine, Stramonium, Tar, Burning Wool, Tobacco, &c.; Scilla; Senega, and Tolutanum.

Expectora'tio, Expectoration — e. Sanguinis, Hæmoptysis — e. Solida, Cynanche trachealis.

Expectora'tion, Expectora'tio, Ecch'e'lysis, Bex hu'mida, Anap'tysis, Prop'tysis, Stethocathar'sis, Anacathar'sis, Anabex'is, Rais'ing. The act of expelling from the chest matters or secretions collected or existing there. It is, likewise, used for the expectorated matter.

EXPECTORA'TION, PRUNE'JUICE, see Prune-juice.

Expectoration de Sang, Hæmoptysis.

Expectorative, Expectorant.

Expel'lens, (expellere, — ex, and pellere, — 'to drive away.') Expulsive, Abortive.

Expe'rience, Experient'ia, Peir'a, Empeir'a, (ex, and peira, 'a trial.') A knowledge of things acquired by observation. In medicine, this knowledge can be obtained both by the practitioner's own experience, and by that obtained from tradition and from books. To profit by experience requires a mind capable of appreciating the proper relations between cause and effect; and hence it happens, that false experience, Experient'ia fall'ax, is extremely common; and that a man had better, in many instances, trust to what he has learned from others, than to his own fallacious observation. The union of accurate observation by the physician with that handed down by medical writers constitutes perfect experience, so far as it is attainable in any individual case.

Expérie'nce, Experiment — e. de Mariotte, Mariotte, experiment of.

Experient'ia, Experience.

Exper'iment, Experimen'tum, (F.) Expérie'nce. A trial, made on the bodies of men or animals, for the purpose of detecting the effect of a remedy, or of becoming better acquainted with their structure, functions, or peculiarities. In a more general sense, it means any trial instituted with the intent of becoming better acquainted with anything. By experiments on living animals, we have obtained much valuable information in the various departments of medicine; but particularly in physiology and toxicology.

EXPER'IMENT OF MARIOTTE', see Mariotte — e. Valsalvian, see Valsalvian.

EXPER'IMENT OF WEPFER, Experimen'tum Wepferianum. An experiment attributed to Wepfer, which consisted in injecting air into the blood-vessels of animals, with the view of observing its effects on the economy.

Ex'pers (expers, 'inexperienced,') Nuptia'rum, ('ignorant of marriage rites,') Virgin.

Expert (F.), Expertus, (ex, and peritus, 'skilled,') Expert. Skillful or of good experience. A physician, charged with the duty of making a report, (F.) Expertise, upon any case of legal medicine. The term as applied to witnesses — 'expert witnesses' — should be restricted to those only whose opinion in medico-legal cases is valuable, from their accurate knowledge of the subject under consideration.

Expertise, see Expert.

Expira'tion, Expira'tio, Exspira'tio, Ec'pnoë, Ecpneumato'sis, Ecpneu'sis, Apopneu'sis, Apop'noë, Apopnœ'a, (exspirare, — ex, and spirare, spiratum, — 'to breathe out,') The act of expelling from the chest the air received during inspiration. 'To expire' is, also, to emit the last breath, or 'to die.' See Vital capacity.

Ex'piratory, Expiratio'ni inser'viens. Relating or appertaining to expiration. The expiratory muscles are all those which contribute to diminish the cavity of the chest, for the purpose of expelling the air contained in the lungs or of producing expiration. These muscles are, chiefly, the intercostals, triangularis sterni, quadratus lumborum, serratus posticus inferior, oblique and recti muscles of the abdomen, and sacrolumbalis.

Expire, see Expiration.

Explorateur de Nélaton, Sound, porcelain.

Explora'tio, (explorare, exploratum, 'to search into,') Exploration — e. Abdominis, Abdominoscopia.

Explora'tion, Explora'tio, Recognit'io. The act of observing and attentively examining or investigating everything connected with a case of disease. The word is chiefly used in this sense by the French practitioners.

Explorator, see Specillum.

Explora'tor, Chest. An instrument, proposed by Dr. B. Babington, for exploring the chest in cases of empyema. It consists of a needle, contained in the smallest sized canula. This is passed between the ribs into the chest. The needle is then withdrawn, and the escape of fluid indicates the nature of the case.

Explorato'rium, Sound, Specillum.

Expres'sion, Expres'sio, Ecpies'mus, Ecchlip'sis, (ex, and premere, pressum, 'to press,') The act of compressing a substance, for the purpose of separating from it the fluids which it contains. Also, the manner in which impressions made upon us are depicted; especially in the traits of the countenance.

EXPRES'SION OF SWEAT, (F.) Sueur d'expression, is a term given to the passive perspiration observable in very debilitated individuals.

Expuit'ion, Exspuition.

Expulsif, Expulsive.

Expul'sio, (expellere, expulsum, — ex, and pellere, — 'to drive away,') Excretion — e. Fæcum, Defecation — e. Fœtus, Parturition.

Expul'sion, Sponta'neous, Evolution, sponta'neous.

Expul'sive, Expel'lens, Expulso'rius, (F.) Expulsif. Driving out.

An expul'sive band'age, (F.) Bandage expulsif, is one constructed with the view of compressing a part, from which we are desirous of expelling pus, serum, &c. Certain medicines were formerly called expul'sives, which were believed to have the power of driving the humors towards the skin; — as diaphoretics, and sudorifics.

Expul'trix, see Vis expultrix.

Exsangue, (ex, and sanguis, 'blood,') Exanguious.

Exsan'guine, Exanguious.

Exsanguin'ity, Anæmia.

Exsan'guis, Exanguious. Exsan'guis is used by Ausonius for one exhausted by venery; — as sanguis meant sperm as well as blood. See Sperm.

Exsarco'ma, gen. Exsarco'matis, Sarcoma.

Exscrea'tio, Excretion.

Exsec'tio, Exsection — e. Virilium, Castration.

Exsec'tion, Exsec'tio, (ex, and secare, sectum, 'to cut.') The act of cutting out, as a nerve.

Exsec'tus, Castratus, Eunuch.

Exsicc'a'tio, (ex, and siccare, siccatum, 'to dry.') Drying.

Exsiccati'va, Desiccativa.

Exsolu'tio, (ex, and solvere, solutum, 'to loosen.') Eclisis.

Exspira'tio, Expiration.

Exspuit'ion, Exspuit'io, Sput'io, Sputa'tio, Anachremp'sis, Apochremp'sis, Chremp'sis, Pty'sis, Anachremp'sis, Anachremp'sis, (F.) Exspuition, Sputation, (ex, and spuo, 'I spit.') Rejection of the matters accumulated in the pharynx and larynx; spitting.

Ex'stasis, Ecstasis.

Exstino'tio, see Extinctio.

Exstirpa'tio, Extirpation — e. Linguae, Glos-sosteresis — e. Testiculorum, Castratio.

Exstroph'ia, Ex'strophia, Ec'strophē, (ex, and στροφή, 'turning.') Extrover'sio, Extrover'sion. Eversion or turning out of a part — as of the eyelids. A term used by M. Chaussier for certain displacements of organs, and especially of the urinary bladder.

EXTROPH'IA or EX'STROPHY or EXTROVER'SION OF THE BLAD'DER, Extrover'sio Vesicæ, Ecto'pia seu Ectrop'ion vesicæ, Congen'ital Her'nia of the blad'der, Congen'ital hia'tus of the bladder, (F.) Renversement de la Vessie, is a faulty conformation, in which the organ opens above the pubes; so that in the hypogastric region there is a red, mucous surface, formed by the inner coat of the bladder; on which two prominences are distinguishable, corresponding to the openings of the ureters.

Ex'strophia, Exstrophia.

Exsuc'a'tio, (ex, and succus, 'juice.') Echy-moma.

Exsuc'tio, Suc'tio, Ecmuze'sis, (ex, and sugere, suctum, 'to suck.') The action of sucking.

Exsuda'tio, (ex, and sudare, sudatum, 'to sweat.') Ephidrosis, Exudation.

Exsuffla'tio, (ex, and sufflare, sufflatum, 'to blow.') Ephyphesis.

Ex'ta, see Entrails.

Extase, Ecstasis.

Extempora'neous, Extempora'neus, Extempo-ra'lis, (F.) Extemporané, (ex, and tempus, gen. temporis, 'time.') Those prescriptions are called 'extemporaneous,' or 'magistral,' which are made on the spot, and composed according to the prescription of the physician.

Extenseur Commun des Doigts, (extendere, — ex, and tendere, tensum, — 'to stretch out,') Extensor digitorum communis — e. Commun des or-teils, Extensor communis digitorum pedis — e. Court du ponce, Extensor pollicis brevis — e. Long du ponce, Extensor longus pollicis — e. Petit des or-teils, Extensor brevis digitorum pedis — e. Propre de l'Index, Extensor proprius indicis — e. Propre du petit doigt, E. proprius minimi digiti.

Extensibil'ity, Extensibil'itas, (extensio, and habilis, 'able.') A property, possessed by certain bodies, of being capable of extension or elongation.

Exten'sio, Extension, Tetanus.

Exten'sion, (ex, and tendere, tensum, 'to stretch,') Exten'sio, Ta'sis, Ec'tasis, Catat'asis, Anat'asis. An operation in surgery, in which either by the hands alone, or by straps, a fractured or luxated limb is pulled strongly, to restore it to its natural position. It is the opposite of Counterextension.

Extensor. (F.) Extenseur. A muscle, whose office is to extend certain parts.

EXTEN'SOR BRE'VIS DIGITO'RUM PE'DIS, Ped'i-cus, (F.) Calcaneo-phalangi'ien commun, of DUMAS; Muscle pédieux ou petit extenseur des or-teils, Calcaneo-sus-phalangien commun (Ch.), Carré du pied, Short Extensor of the Toes. A muscle, situate on the dorsal region of the foot. It arises from the external surface of the calcaneum, and at the anterior edge of a ligament, which unites that bone to the astragalus. Anteriorly, each of its divisions terminates by a small tendon, which is fixed successively, at the superior part of the posterior extremity of the first phalanx of the great toe, and to the second and last phalanges of the next three toes. It extends the first four toes, and directs them a little outwards.

EXTEN'SOR CAR'PI RADIA'LIS BRE'VIOR, see Radialis — e. Carpi radialis longior, see Radialis — e. Carpi ulnaris, see Cubital muscles.

EXTEN'SOR COMMU'NIS DIGITO'RUM PE'DIS, E. Longus Digitorum Pe'dis, E. Digitorum longus, Cnemodactylæ'us, (F.) Péronéo-tibi-sus-phalangien commun, Péronéo-sus-phalangien commun, Extenseur commun des Or-teils. This muscle is situate at the anterior part of the leg. It is long, thin, flattened, simple, and fleshy above, and divided into four tendons below. It arises from the outer tuberosity of the tibia and the anterior surface of the fibula, and is inserted into the superior part of the posterior extremity of the second and third phalanges of the last four toes. It extends the three phalanges of these toes.

EXTEN'SOR CRU'RIS ME'DIUS SUPERFICIA'LIS, Rectus femoris — e. Cruris vastus seu externus, see Triceps cruris — e. Cubiti, Triceps extensor cubiti.

EXTEN'SOR DIGITO'RUM COMMU'NIS, E. digito-rum communis ma'nus cum extenso'rē proprio au-ricula'ris, Ten'sor Digito'rum, (F.) Épicondyl'o-sus-phalangien commun (Ch.), Extenseur commun des Doigts, Common Extensor of the Fingers. A long, flattened muscle; simple above, and divided into four portions inferiorly. It is situate at the posterior part of the forearm, arises from the external tuberosity of the humerus, from the aponeurotic septa situate between it and the neighboring muscles, and is inserted at the posterior surface of the second and third phalanges of the last four fingers. This muscle extends the phalanges of the last four fingers upon each other, and upon the metacarpal bone. It can, also, extend the hand on the forearm.

EXTEN'SOR DIGITO'RUM LON'GUS, E. communis digitorum pedis — e. Dorsi communis, Sacro-spi-nalis — e. Indicis, E. proprius indicis — e. Inter-nodii ossis pollicis, E. longus pollicis — e. Longus digitorum pedis, E. communis digitorum pedis — e. Minimi digiti, see Extensor proprius minimi digiti — e. Minor pollicis ma'nus, E. pollicis brevis — e. Ossis metacarpi pollicis ma'nus, Abductor pollicis longus — e. Pedis, see Gastrocnemii.

EXTEN'SOR POL'LICIS BRE'VIS, E. mi'nor pol-lis ma'nus seu pri'mi interno'dii seu pol'licis pri'mus seu secun'di interno'dii (DOUGLAS,) seu secun'di interno'dii os'sis pol'licis; (F.) Cubito-sus-phalangien du ponce (Ch.), Court extenseur du ponce. Seated at the posterior and inferior part of the forearm. It is thin, long, and broader at its middle than at the extremities; arises from the posterior surface of the ulna and the interos-seous ligament, and is inserted behind the superior extremity of the first phalanx of the thumb. It extends the thumb, and aids in supination.

EXTEN'SOR POL'LICIS LON'GUS, E. ma'ior pol-lis ma'nus seu secun'di interno'dii seu pol'licis secun'dus seu ter'tii interno'dii (DOUGLAS,) seu interno'dii os'sis pol'licis, (F.) Cubito-sus-phalangien du ponce (Ch.), Muscle long extenseur du ponce. This muscle is long, flat, and fusiform; and is seated at the posterior part of the forearm. It arises from the posterior surface of the ulna and the interosseous ligament, and is inserted at the posterior part of the superior extremity of the first phalanx of the thumb. It extends the last phalanx of the thumb upon the first. See Extensor proprius pollicis pedis.

EXTENSOR POL'LICIS SECUN'DUS, E. pollicis longus—e. Primi internodii, Abductor pollicis longus, E. pollicis brevis—e. Primus pollicis, Abductor pollicis longus—e. Proprius hallucis, E. proprius pollicis pedis.

EXTENSOR PRO'PRIUS IN'DICIS, E. proprius primi dig'iti manus, E. Indicis, Indica'tor seu secund' di interno'dii indicis proprius, (F.) Cubito-sus-phalangettien de l'Index (Ch.), Extenseur propre de l'Index. This muscle is long and thin; broader in the middle than at the extremities; and is situate at the posterior part of the forearm. It arises from the posterior surface of the ulna, and is inserted at the posterior part of the upper extremity of the second and third phalanges of the index-finger. It extends the three phalanges of the index-finger; and has, besides, the same uses as the other extensors of the fingers.

EXTENSOR PRO'PRIUS MIN'IMI DIG'ITI, (F.) Epicondilo-sus-phalangettien du petit doigt (Ch.), Extenseur propre du petit doigt. Situate on the inside of the Extensor communis digitorum. It arises from the external condyle of the os humeri and the aponeurotic septa seated between it, the extensor communis digitorum, and the extensor carpi ulnaris; and is inserted into the last two phalanges of the little finger. It extends the little finger, and even the hand, on the forearm.

EXTENSOR PRO'PRIUS POL'LICIS PE'DIS, E. proprius hallucis seu longus (DOUGLAS), seu pollicis longus, Péronéo-sus-phalangien du pouce, Péronéo-sus-phalangettien du pouce, (Ch.) This muscle is situate at the anterior part of the leg. It is fleshy, broad, flat above; small and tendinous below. It arises from the anterior part of the middle third of the fibula, and is inserted into the posterior part of the superior extremity of the last phalanx of the great toe. It extends the last phalanx of the great toe upon the first, and the first upon the first metacarpal bone.

EXTENSOR SECUN'DI INTERNO'DII, E. pollicis brevis, Extensor pollicis longus—e. Secundi internodii indicis proprius, E. proprius indicis.

EXTENSOR TAR'SI MAG'NUS, E. Tar'si suralis. A name given, by some anatomists, to the gastrocnemius and soleus combined.

EXTENSOR TAR'SI MI'NOR, Plantar muscle—e. Tarsi suralis, E. tarsi magnus.

EXTENSOR TER'TII INTERNO'DII, E. pollicis longus—e. Tertii internodii indicis, Prior annularis—e. Tertii internodii minimi digiti, Abductor minimi digiti—e. Triceps, Triceps extensor cubiti.

Extenua'tio, (extenuare, extenuatum,—ex, and tenuis,—'to make thin,') Emaciation.

Extergen'tia, (extergere,—ex, and tergere, 'to clean, '—'to wipe clean,') Detergents.

External Diseases, (exter, 'without,') Extrin'sic Diseases, Mor'bi exter'ni seu extrin'seci, Surg'ical diseases, (F.) Maladies externes. Those diseases which occupy the surface of the body, and form the object of surgical pathology, requiring, generally, external means, or surgical operations.

Externat. The post or office of an externe.

Externe, see Housesurgeon.

Exter'nus Aur'is, Laxator tympani—e. Mal'ei, Laxator tympani.

Extesticula'tus, (ex, and testiculus, 'a testicle,') Castratus, Eunuch.

Extinc'tio, Death—e. Hydrargyri, Extinctio mercurii.

EXTINC'TIO MERCU'RII seu HYDRAR'GYRI, Extinc'tion of Mercury. Trituration of mercury with lard or other substance, until the metallic globules disappear. The mercury is then so divided that it forms a black powder, generally considered to be a protoxide of mercury, but perhaps erroneously.

EXTINC'TIO VO'cis, (F.) Extinction de voix. The French use this term for cases in which the voice is not wholly suppressed, but produces only feeble sounds—Incomplete aphonia.

Extinc'tion of Mercury, Extinctio mercurii—e. de Voix, Extinctio vocis.

Extirpa'tion, (extirpare,—ex, and stirps, 'a root, '—'to root out,') Extirpa'tio, Abla'tio, Apha'resis, Abla'tion. The complete removal or destruction of any part, either by cutting instruments or the action of caustics. Thus, we speak of the extirpation of cancer, polypus, tumors, &c.

Extom'ius, (ex, and tom, 'incision,') Eunuch.

Extozo'a, (pl. of Extozo'on,) Ectozoa.

Extozoaires, Ectozoa.

Ectozoa'ria, Ectozoa.

Ex'tra (L.), in composition, 'on the outside, without.'

EXTRACT OF BEEF, LIEBIG'S, Condensed beef, is prepared by removing the fat, sinews, and albumen from the fresh meat, and forming an extract, of the consistence of an extremely thick jelly, of the soluble matter of the remainder. This extract is said to represent, in nutritive properties, thirty-two times its weight of meat. It is much used for the instantaneous preparation of beef tea.

Extrac'ta, see Extractum — e. Fluida, see Extractum.

Extractif, Extractive — e. Oxygéné, Apothème.

Extrac'tio, Extraction, Extractum.

Extraction, Extrac'tio, Extr'esis, Excell'cē, Exelcys'mus, Enchylo'sis. The act of removing an extraneous substance from any part of the body. Thus, a splinter is said to be extracted. It is also applied to the removal of certain parts. The cataract is said to be extracted; a tooth is extracted, when carious, &c.

Extrac'tive, (F.) Extractif. A peculiar, presumed principle, which has been admitted in extracts. Thus, bitter extractive is the immediate principle of bitter vegetables, &c. The term is also applied to ill-defined animal matters met with on analysis.

EXTRACTIVE, Ox'idized, Apothème.

Ex'tracts, see Extractum — e. Fluid, see Extractum.

Extrac'tum, Ecchylo'ma, Extrac'tio, Ex'tract, (F.) Extrait, Apostolé. An extract is prepared by evaporating vegetable solutions till a tenacious mass is obtained. When prepared from an infusion or decoction, it is called a scatery; from ether, an ethereal; and from alcohol, an alcoholic or a spirituous extract. Both kinds contain all the principles of the vegetable that are soluble in the menstrua with which they are prepared; but the volatile parts are dissipated, and some of the fixed parts are decomposed; the proper extractive is oxygenized, and the virtues of the vegetable substance are altered or destroyed. Extracts are hard, soft, or fluid: the consistence of the soft being such as to retain the pilular form without the addition of a powder. A patent was taken out, many years ago, by a Mr. Barry, of London, for preparing them in vacuo; and as the temperature is much lower than in the ordinary method, the virtues of the plant are less altered, and the extracts are generally green. Extracts are also prepared by displacement or percolation. They have, likewise, received different names, according to their predominant principle. The gum'my or mu'cous, or mucilag'inous, are those which are mainly composed of gum or mucilage. Gum tragacanth may be considered a pure gummy extract. Gelat'inous extracts are those composed especially of gelatin; res'inous extracts, those of a resinous character; extrac'tores'inous, those composed of extractive or coloring matter and resin; gum-res'inous, those containing gum and resin; and sapona'ceous or sapona'ceous saline, those containing a notable quantity of saline substances and a resinous matter, so combined with mucus and other soluble substances, that they cannot be separated.

Under the name Flu'id Ex'tracts — Extracta Flu'id'a seu Liq'uida — a class of preparations has been introduced into the Pharmacopœias, the distinctive character of which is the concentration of the active ingredients of medicinal substances into a small bulk, in the liquid form. In the Ph. U. S., 1873, the quantity of powdered material to be used in all the official fluid extracts, except of spigelia and senna, is sixteen ounces. In all of them the extraction is effected by percolation, the percolator being covered to prevent evaporation, and the liquid set aside for four days, when percolation is again commenced, and continued until twenty-four fluid-ounces are obtained, of which the first fourteen are reserved, and the remainder evaporated to two fluidounces, and mixed with the reserved portion, and filtered.

EXTRACTUM ABSINTHII CACUMINUM, Extract of Wormwood. (A decoction defecated and evaporated.) The flavor is dissipated along with the essential oil. It is a bitter tonic. Dose, gr. x. to ℥j., in pill.

EXTRACTUM ACONITI, Extract of Aconite, Succus spissatus aconiti napelli, (from the inspissated juice without defecation.) It is esteemed to be narcotic and diuretic; and has been given in the cases referred to under Aconitum. Dose, gr. j., gradually increasing it. The official Extractum Aconiti is, in the Ph. U. S., 1873, the Extractum Aconiti Alcoholicum.

EXTRACTUM ACONITI ALCOHOLICUM, Alcoholic Extract of Aconite, Extractum Aconiti, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Extract of Aconite. (Aconite Leaves, recently dried and in fine powder, ℥xij., Alcohol, Oj., Diluted Alcohol, q. s. A pint of tincture is made by percolation, which is evaporated spontaneously to three ounces, and the process of percolation continued until two pints more of tincture are obtained, or the powder is exhausted. It is then evaporated by means of a water-bath, at a temperature not exceeding 160°, to the consistence of syrup, to which the three ounces of tincture are now added. The evaporation is continued, at a temperature not exceeding 120°, until the whole is reduced to a proper consistence.) Dose, half a grain or a grain.

EXTRACTUM AL'OE, Extract of Aloes, E. aloes aquosum seu purificatum, Purified extract of aloes. (The gummy part extracted by boiling water, defecated and inspissated.) Dose, gr. v. to gr. xv. The Ph. B., 1867, has an Extract of Barba'does Aloes and an Extract of Socotrine Aloes.

EXTRACTUM AL'OE AQUOSUM, E. aloes — e. Aloes purificatum, E. aloes.

EXTRACTUM ANTHEMIDIS, (Ph. B., 1867,) E. anthemidis nobilis seu chamæmeli seu florum chamæmeli, Extract of Chamomile. The volatile oil is dissipated in this preparation. It is a pure, grateful bitter, and is tonic and stomachic. Dose, gr. x. to gr. xx., in pill.

EXTRACTUM ARNICÆ ALCOHOLICUM, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Alcoholic Extract of Arnica, Extractum Arnicæ, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Extract of Arnica. Prepared by moistening Arnica in moderately coarse powder, in a mixture of alcohol and water, continuing the percolation with diluted alcohol, and evaporating the tincture thus formed, by means of a water-bath, to the proper consistence.

EXTRACTUM ASPARAGI, see Asparagus.

EXTRACTUM BELLADONNÆ LIQUIDUM, Liquid Extract of Belladonna. A preparation introduced into the British Pharmacopœia (1864). Astringent, in diarrhœa and dysentery. Dose, ℥j-ij.

EXTRACTUM BELLADONNÆ, Succus spissatus atropæ belladonnæ, Extract of Belladonna, (Belladonna Leaves, fresh, ℥xij. Bruise them, sprinkling with a little water, and express the juice; heat to the boiling point, strain, and evaporate to the proper consistence. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Properties same as those of the plant.

Dose, gr. j., gradually increased. It dilates the pupil when applied to the eye.

EXTRACTUM BELLADONNÆ ALCOHOLICUM, Alcoholic extract of Belladonna. The last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia, 1873, contains the following directions for its preparation: (Belladonna Leaves, in fine powder, ℥xxiv., alcohol, Oiv., water, Oij., diluted alcohol, q. s. Mix the alcohol and water, and moisten the powder with a pint of the mixture; pack firmly in a conical percolator, and gradually pour upon it the remainder of the mixture. Continue the percolation with diluted alcohol until six pints of tincture have passed. Evaporate, by means of a water-bath, to the proper consistence.) Dose, half a grain or a grain.

EXTRACTUM BELLADONNÆ RADICIS FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Belladonna Root. A formula for this preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia.

EXTRACTUM BUCHU FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Buchu. This is official in the U. S. Pharmacopœia. Dose, half a fluidrachm.

EXTRACTUM CALUMBÆ, Extract of Calumba, (Calumb. rad., ℥j., Aque destillat., Oiv. Prepared by maceration and evaporation: Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, gr. ij.-x.

EXTRACTUM CALUMBÆ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Calumba. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873).

EXTRACTUM CANNABIS, see Bangue — e. Cannabis Americana, see Cannabis Americana — e. Cannabis Indica, see Bangue.

EXTRACTUM CANNABIS PURIFICATUM, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Purified Extract of Hemp, is made by rubbing Extract of Hemp in Alcohol; adding alcohol and macerating; filtering and evaporating to dryness. Dose, half a grain. It is dismissed, however, in the last edition (1873).

EXTRACTUM CARNIS, Extract of Flesh. An extract formed by evaporating beef tea in a water-bath. It can be kept for sale. An ounce of it may represent thirty-two ounces of meat.

EXTRACTUM CASCARILLÆ RESINOSUM, Resinous extract of cascarrilla. (Cort. cascarrilla, in pulv. crass., ℥j., Sp. vini rect., ℥iv. Digest for four days; then decant and strain; boil the residuum in ten pints of water to two; filter and evaporate the decoction, and distil the tincture in a retort, till both are thickened; then mix and evaporate to a pilular consistence.) Dose, gr. x. to gr. xx., in pills.

EXTRACTUM CAT'ECU, Catechu — e. Catharticum, E. colocynthidis compositum.

EXTRACTUM CATHOLICUM, (F.) Extrait Catholique. This epithet is given to pills composed of aloes, black hellebore, and colocynth, resin of jalap, and scammony. See, also, Extractum colocynthidis compositum.

EXTRACTUM CHAMÆMELI, E. anthemidis.

EXTRACTUM CHIMAPHILÆ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Pipsiss'ewa. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873).

EXTRACTUM CICUTÆ, E. conii.

EXTRACTUM CIMICIFUGÆ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Cimicifuga, is official in the Ph. U. S. Dose, ℥xv. to xx.

EXTRACTUM CINCHONÆ, E. Corticis Peruviani seu Cinchonæ Molle, Extract of Cinchona or of Bark, (F.) Extrait de Quinquina. (A decoction evaporated.) The active principles are similar to those of the bark in substance; but it is not so effectual, owing to the chemical change induced in the drug during the boiling. When reduced, by drying, to a state fit for being powdered, it is called Hard Extract of Bark, Extractum Corticis Peruviani durum, E. Cinchonæ durum. Dose, gr. x. to ℥ss.

EXTRACTUM CINCHONÆ, (Ph. U. S., 1863.) E. Cinchonæ Flavæ, of the Pharmacopœia of the United States (1842), (F.) Extrait de Quinquina Calisaya. An alcoholic extract of yellow cinchona made by exhausting the bark by means of alcohol in a percolator, and evaporating to the proper consistence. Fluid Extract of Cinchona, Extractum Cinchonæ Fluidum, is official in the Pharmacopœia of the United States, and Extractum Cinchonæ Flavæ Liquidum in that of Great Britain (1867). Dose, f3ss.

EXTRACTUM CINCHONÆ PAL'LIDÆ may be prepared in the same manner.

EXTRACTUM CINCHONÆ RESINOSUM, E. Cinchonæ lancifoliæ seu Cinchonæ Rubræ resinosum, E. Cinchonæ Resinæ, Resinous Extract of Bark. The aqueo-spirituos extract contains both the extractive and resin of the bark. Dose, gr. x. to xxx.

EXTRACTUM CINCHONÆ RUBRÆ may be prepared like Extractum cinchonæ flavæ.

EXTRACTUM COL'CHICI, Extract of Col'chicum, is official in the Ph. B., 1867. Dose, half a grain to two grains.

EXTRACTUM COL'CHICI ACETICUM, Acetous or Acetic Extract of Col'chicum. (Colchic. rad. in pulv., ℥j., Acid. acet., f3iv., Aquæ, q. s. To the acid add a pint of water, and mix this with the root. Put the mixture in a percolator, and pour on water until the liquid that passes has little or no taste. Evaporate to a proper consistence. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, gr. j. to gr. iij.

EXTRACTUM COL'CHICI RAD'ICIS FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Colchicum Root; and EXTRACTUM COL'CHICI SEM'INIS FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Colchicum Seed, are official in the Ph. U. S. Dose, ℥x.

EXTRACTUM COLOCYN'THIDIS, Extract of Colocynth. (Ph. L. and E.) (A watery infusion or decoction of colocynth evaporated.) Cathartic in the dose of from gr. v. to 3ss. The official Extract of Colocynth in the Ph. U. S. is Extractum Colocynthidis alcoholicum.

EXTRACTUM COLOCYN'THIDIS ALCOHOL'ICUM, Alcoholic Extract of Colocynth, E. Colocynthidis (Ph. U. S., 1873), Extract of Colocynth. (Obtained by the action of diluted alcohol on colocynth, by maceration, percolation, and evaporation.)

EXTRACTUM COLOCYN'THIDIS COMPOSITUM, E. Catharticum seu Cathol'icum seu Quercetani, Compound Extract of Colocynth, is official in the Ph. B. and Ph. U. S. In the latter, it is directed to be made of the official Extract of Colocynth, in fine powder, 3iiss., Socotrine Aloes, in fine powder, 3xij., Resin of Scammony, in fine powder, 3iij., Cardamom, in fine powder, 3iiss., Soap, in fine powder, 3iii.; mixed well, and kept in a well-stopped bottle. It is an active cathartic, and is used in obstinate visceral obstructions, &c. Dose, gr. vj. to 3ss.

EXTRACTUM CONI'I, E. Cicutæ, Succus cicutæ spissatus, S. spissatus conii maculati, Extract of Hemlock, E. of Conium. (In the Ph. U. S. of 1873, fresh hemlock leaves, bruised, are sprinkled with water, and the juice expressed, filtered, and evaporated.) Employed in the same cases as the conium. Dose, gr. iij. to 3ss. See Succus conii.

EXTRACTUM CONI'I ALCOHOL'ICUM, Alcoholic Extract of Hemlock, A. E. of Conium. (Prepared like the Extractum aconiti of the Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, one or two grains.

A Fluid Extract of Hemlock, Extractum Conii Fluidum, is in the Ph. U. S., 1863, but is dismissed in the last edition, 1873.) Dose, ℥v.

A Fluid Extract of Conium Seed, Extractum Conii Fructus Fluidum, has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Ph. (1873).

EXTRACTUM CONVUL'VULI JALAP'Æ, E. jalapæ.

EXTRACTUM COR'NUS FLOR'IDÆ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Dogwood. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Ph. (1873).

EXTRACTUM COR'TICIS PERUVIA'NI, E. cinchonæ.

EXTRACTUM CUBE'Æ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Cubebs. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the Ph. U. S. (1873).

EXTRACTUM DIGITA'NIS, Extract of Digitalis, E. of Foxglove, (F.) Extrait de Digitale. (Prepared like Extractum conii.) Dose, gr. ss.-j.

EXTRACTUM DIGITA'NIS ALCOHOL'ICUM, Alcoholic Extract of Digitalis (Ph. U. S., 1863), E. digitalis (Ph. U. S., 1873), Extract of Digitalis, (F.) Extrait Alcoolique de Digitalis, is prepared like Extractum aconiti, Ph. U. S., 1873.

EXTRACTUM DIGITA'NIS FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Digitalis. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Ph. (1873).

EXTRACTUM DULCAMA'RÆ, Extract of Bittersweet, E. of Dulcamara. (Prepared by percolation, by means of diluted alcohol, from bittersweet in moderately fine powder. Ph. U. S.) Dose, f3j.

A Fluid Extract of Bittersweet, Extractum Dulcamaræ Fluidum, is in the Ph. U. S.

EXTRACTUM ELATE'RII, Elate'rium, Extract of Elate'rium. (The fecula of the expressed juice of the fruit of Momordica elaterium.) It is violently cathartic, hydragogue, and sometimes emetic. Dose, gr. ss. every hour till it operates.

EXTRACTUM ER'GOTÆ, Ergotin. A Fluid Extract of Ergot, Extractum Ergotæ Fluidum, is in the Ph. U. S., and a Liquid Extract, Extractum Ergotæ Liquidum, in that of Great Britain (1867). Dose, ℥xxx. to f3j.

EXTRACTUM ERIGERON'TIS CANADEN'SIS FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Canada Erigeron. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Ph. (1873).

EXTRACTUM FIL'ICIS ÆTHE'REUM, see Polypodium filix mas — e. Filicis liquidum, see Polypodium filix mas.

EXTRACTUM GELSE'NI FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Yellow Jasmine. This Preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Ph.

EXTRACTUM GENIS'TÆ CACU'MINUM, Extract of Broom Tops. Diuretic and stomachic. Dose, 3ss. to 3j.

EXTRACTUM GENTIA'NÆ, E. Gentianæ luteæ seu Radicis Gentianæ, Extract of Gentian, (F.) Extrait de Gentiane. (The evaporated decoction.) Prepared also by percolation. (Ph. U. S., 1873.) Properties like those of Gentian. Dose, gr. x-xxx.

A Fluid Extract of Gentian, Extractum Gentianæ Fluidum, is in the Ph. U. S. Dose, f3i.

EXTRACTUM GERA'NI FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Geranium, has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Ph. (1873).

EXTRACTUM GLYCYRRHIZÆ, Succus Glycyrrhizæ inspissatus seu Liquiritiæ, Span'ish Juice, Italian Juice, Black Sugar, Extract of Liquorice. (The evaporated decoction.) Extract of the root of Glycyrrhiza Gla'bra. It is demulcent, taken ad libitum.

Refined Liquorice, which is sold in the form of cylinders, is made by gently evaporating a solution of the pure extract of liquorice with half its weight of gum Arabic, rolling the mass and cutting it into lengths, and then polishing, by rolling them together in a box.

EXTRACTUM GLYCYRRHIZÆ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Liquorice. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Ph.

EXTRACTUM GOSSYP'II FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Cotton Root. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Ph.

EXTRACTUM GRAM'INIS, Extract of Grass. An extract prepared from Triticum repens. It is considered by the Germans to be a mild tonic; and is greatly used, especially in convalescence from fever. It is probably devoid of all injurious properties, and as, probably, totally inefficacious.

EXTRACTUM HÆMATOX'YLI, E. Hæmatoxyli Campechia'ni seu Sco'bis Hæmatoxyli, Extract of Log'wood. (The evaporated decoction.) It is astringent. Dose, gr. x. to 3ss.

EXTRACTUM HELLEB'ORI, E. Helleb'ori ni'gri, Extract of Black Hellebore. (The evaporated decoction.) In large doses, this is cathartic; in smaller, diuretic, resolvent [?], and emmenagogue [?]. Dose, as a cathartic, gr. x. to ʒj.; as an emmenagogue, gr. iij. to gr. x.

EXTRACTUM HELLEBORI ALCOHOL'ICUM (Ph. U. S. 1863), Alcoholic Extract of Black Hellebore, Extractum Hellebori, (Ph. U. S., 1851 and 1873,) Extract of Hellebore, is prepared from Black Hellebore, in coarse powder, like the Extractum acniti of the Ph. U. S., 1873. Dose, like the last.

EXTRACTUM HU'MULI (Ph. U. S., 1873), E. Lu'puli (Ph. B., 1867), Extract of hops. It is tonic, anodyne [?], diuretic [?]. Dose, gr. v. to ʒj.

EXTRACTUM HYDRAS'TIS FLU'IDUM, Fluid Extract of Hydrastis. A formula for its preparation by percolation, from hydrastis, glycerin, alcohol, and water, has been introduced into the last edition of the Ph. U. S. (1873.)

EXTRACTUM HYOSCY'AMI, Succus spissatus Hyoscy'ami, Extract of Hen'bane, Extract of Hyoscy'amus. The expressed juice of the bruised leaf sprinkled with water, heated to the boiling point; strained, and evaporated. (Ph. U. S., 1873.) Its virtues are narcotic. Dose, gr. iij. to ʒss.

EXTRACTUM HYOSCY'AMI ALCOHOL'ICUM, Alcoholic Extract of Hen'bane, A. E. of Hyoscy'amus. (Prepared from recently dried leaves of Hyoscy'amus, like the Extractum belladonnæ alcoholicum, Ph. U. S.) Dose, one or two grains.

EXTRACTUM HYOSCY'AMI FLU'IDUM, Fluid Extract of Hen'bane, Fluid Extract of Hyoscy'amus, is official in the Ph. U. S. Dose, ʒv.

EXTRACTUM IGNA'TIÆ ALCOHOL'ICUM (Ph. U. S., 1863), Alcoholic Extract of Ignat'ia, E. Ignat'ie (Ph. U. S., 1873), Extract of Ignatia, (Ignatia exhausted by alcohol in a percolator; and the solution evaporated to a proper consistence.) Dose, half a grain to a grain.

EXTRACTUM IPECACUAN'HÆ FLU'IDUM, Fluid Extract of Ipecacuanha, is in the Ph. U. S. Dose, ʒv. to xx.

EXTRACTUM JALA'PÆ (Ph. U. S.), E. Convolvuli Jala'pæ seu Jala'pii seu Jala'pi, Extract of Jal'ap. (A spirituous tincture distilled; and an aqueous decoction evaporated; the residua being mixed together: kept both soft and hard.) It is cathartic and hydragogue. Dose, gr. x. to ʒj.

EXTRACTUM JALA'PÆ RESINO'SUM, Resina Jala'pæ (Ph. U. S., 1873), Resinous Extract of Jal'ap, Resin of Jalap. (Made by exhausting Jalap powder by percolation by alcohol; throwing down the resin from the fluid by means of water, and drying the precipitate.) The last edition of the Ph. U. S. (1873) gives a modified formula for its preparation. Properties like the last.

EXTRACTUM JUGLAN'DIS, Extract of Butternut. (Prepared by percolation from butternut, in moderately coarse powder. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, gr. x. to xx.

EXTRACTUM JUNIP'ERI, Extract of Ju'niper, (F.) Extrait de Genièvre. A preparation of the French Codex (1866), made by bruising juniper berries, macerating, filtering, and evaporating.

EXTRACTUM KRAM'ERIÆ, Extract of Rhat'any. (Prepared by percolation from rhatany, in moderately fine powder. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, gr. x. to xx.

EXTRACTUM KRAM'ERIÆ FLU'IDUM, Fluid Extract of Rhat'any, has been introduced into the last edition of the Pharmacopœia of the U. S. (1873).

EXTRACTUM LACTU'CÆ, Succus spissatus Lactuce sativæ, Extract of Lettuce, (F.) Extrait de Laitue. (Leaves of fresh lettuce; beat them in a stone mortar, sprinkling them with water; then express the juice and evaporate, without allowing it to subside until it acquires a proper degree of consistence. Ph. B., 1867.) It is said to be narcotic and diaphoretic. Dose, gr. iij. to gr. x.

An extract is, sometimes, made from the juice of the wild lettuce, Lactuca viro'sa, which is regarded as diuretic.

EXTRACTUM LU'PULI, E. humuli.

EXTRACTUM LUPULI'NÆ FLU'IDUM, Fluid Extract of Lu'pulin, is in the Ph. U. S. Dose, ʒv. to x.

EXTRACTUM MAR'TIS ACET'ICUM, Ferri acetat.

EXTRACTUM MATI'CO FLU'IDUM, Fluid Extract of Mati'co. This preparation was introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Ph. (1873).

EXTRACTUM MEZE'REI FLU'IDUM, Fluid Extract of Meze'reon. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873). The Ph. B., 1867, has a formula for Extractum Meze'rei Æthe'reum.

EXTRACTUM NU'CIS VOM'ICÆ ALCOHOL'ICUM, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Alcoholic Extract of Nux Vomica, E. Nu'cis Vom'icæ (Ph. U. S., 1873), Extract of Nux Vomica, (F.) Extrait de Noix Vomique. See Strychnos nux vomica. Dose, gr. ss.-j.

EXTRACTUM O'PII, E. Opii aquosum seu Thebaicum seu Opii gummosum, Extract or Watery Extract of O'pium, Laudanum opiatum seu simplex, O'pium colatum seu depuratum, (F.) Extrait thébaïque. (A watery solution defecated and evaporated.) Dose, gr. ss. to gr. iss.

A Fluid Extract of Opium, Extractum opii liq'uidum, is official in the Ph. B., 1867.

EXTRACTUM PANCHYMA'GUM. A drastic medicine, composed of colocynth, bruised with its seeds; senna bruised; black hellebore root, agaric, scammony, in powder, extract of aloes, and powder of diarrhodon, into which roses entered.

EXTRACTUM PAPAV'ERIS, (Ph. B., 1867,) E. Papav'eri somniferi seu Papav'eri al'bi, Extract of white pop'py. It possesses nearly the same virtues as opium, but is much weaker. Dose, gr. ij. to ʒj.

EXTRACTUM PAREIR'Æ, (Ph. B., 1867,) Extract of Pareir'a Bra'va. Prepared like Extractum Hæmatoxyli. Dose, ten grains to half a drachm.

A Fluid Extract of Pareira Brava, Extractum Pareiræ fluidum has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873). The Ph. B., 1867, also contains an Extractum Pareir'æ Liq'uidum. Dose, ʒj.

EXTRACTUM PHYSOSTIG'MATIS, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Extract of Calabar Bean, (F.) Extrait de Fève de Calabar. Prepared by percolation, by means of alcohol, from calabar bean, in moderately fine powder. Dose, gr. ʒss-ʒj.

EXTRACTUM PI'PERIS FLU'IDUM, Oleoresina Piperis, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Fluid Extract of Black Pepper, Oleoresin of Black Pepper. (Black pepper exhausted by ether through percolation, the solution evaporated, and the piperin in crystals separated by expression.) Dose, ʒj.-v.

EXTRACTUM PODOPHYLLI, Extract of May'apple. (Prepared from podophyllum, in coarse powder, in the same manner as the Extract of Jalap. Ph. U. S.) Dose, gr. v. to gr. xv., as a cathartic.

EXTRACTUM PRU'NI VIRGINIAN'Æ FLU'IDUM, Fluid Extract of Wild Cherry Bark, is in the Ph. U. S. Dose, ʒj.

EXTRACTUM PUR'GANS, see Hedera helix.

EXTRACTUM QUAS'SIÆ, Extract of Quassia. (Prepared by percolation from Quassia in moderately fine powder. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, as a tonic, five grains and more.

EXTRACTUM QUERCETANI, E. colocynthidis compositum.

EXTRACTUM QUER'CUS COR'TICIS, Extract of oak bark. (The decoction evaporated.) It is astringent and tonic.

EXTRACTUM QUI'NIÆ, Extract of Quinia, Quinine sulphas impurus. (This is made by evaporating the liquor poured off the crystals of sulphate of quinia to the consistence of a pilular mass.) Twenty-four grains will generally arrest an intermittent.

EXTRACTUM RHEI, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Extract of Rhubarb, E. Rh. alcoholicum (Ph. U. S., 1863), Alcoholic Extract of Rhubarb. (A solution in diluted alcohol by percolation evaporated.) Uses like those of the powdered root. Dose, gr. x.—xxx.

EXTRACTUM RHEI FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Rhubarb, is in the Pharmacopœia of the United States. Dose, f3j.

EXTRACTUM RUBI FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Blackberry. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Ph. (1873).

EXTRACTUM RUDII, Extract of Rudius, (F.) Extrait de Rudius. (Pills made of colocynth, agaric, scammony, roots of black hellebore and jalap, socotrine aloes, cinnamon, mace, cloves, and alcohol.) See Pilulæ Aloes et Colocynthidis.

EXTRACTUM RUTÆ GRAVEOLENTIS, E. Rutæ seu foliorum Rutæ, Extract of Rue. (A decoction evaporated.) The volatile oil being dissipated in the boiling, this is not a good preparation. Tonic, stomachic. Dose, gr. x. to ʒj.

EXTRACTUM SABIINÆ FOLIORUM, Extract of Savine. (A decoction evaporated.) The same remarks may be made on this preparation as on the last. Tonic. Dose, gr. x. to ʒss.

EXTRACTUM SABIINÆ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Savine, has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873).

EXTRACTUM SANGUINIS BOVINI, see Blood.

EXTRACTUM SASSÆ LIQUIDUM, see E. Sarsaparillæ fluidum.

EXTRACTUM SASSAPARILLÆ, Extract of Sarsaparilla. (A strained decoction evaporated.) Virtues the same as those of the powdered root. Dose, gr. x. to ʒj.

EXTRACTUM SASSAPARILLÆ FLUIDUM, (Ph. U. S.,) Fluid Extract of Sarsaparilla, is a simple fluid extract. The Ph. B., 1867, has an Extractum Sarsæ Liquidum, Liquid Extract of Sarsaparilla.

EXTRACTUM SASSAPARILLÆ FLUIDUM COMPOSITUM, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Extractum Sarsaparillæ Compositum Fluidum, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) E. Sarsæ Liquidum, E. Sarsæ Fluidum, Compound Fluid Extract of Sarsaparilla, (Extractum Sarsaparillæ Fluidum, Fluid Extract of Sarsaparilla, Ph. U. S., 1851.) Dose, a fluidrachm. The U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873) has an improved formula for its preparation, the ingredients being sarsaparilla, liquoriceroot, sassafras, mezereon, glycerin, alcohol, and water, the extract being prepared by percolation according to the formula there given.

EXTRACTUM SATURNI, GOULARD'S, Liquor plumbi subacetatis—e. Scobis hæmatoxyli, E. hæmatoxyli.

EXTRACTUM SCAMMONII, Extract of Scammony, Resina Scammonii, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Scammonie Resina, (Ph. B., 1867.) The resinous cathartic principle of scammony obtained from scammony root by means of alcohol.

EXTRACTUM SCILLÆ, Extract of Squill, (F.) Extrait de Scille. An alcoholic extract of squills, of the French Codex (1866).

EXTRACTUM SCILLÆ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Squill. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Ph. (1873).

EXTRACTUM SENEGÆ ALCOHOLICUM, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Alcoholic Extract of Senega, E. Senegæ (Ph. U. S., 1873), Extract of Seneka. (Prepared by displacement from Senega and diluted alcohol:—the tincture being evaporated to the proper consistence. Ph. U. S., 1863.) Dose, gr. v. to x.

EXTRACTUM SENEGÆ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Seneka, has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873).

EXTRACTUM SENNÆ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Sen'na, is in the Ph. U. S. Dose, f3ss.

EXTRACTUM SERPENTARIÆ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Serpentina, is in the Ph. U. S. Dose, f3ss.

EXTRACTUM SPIGELIÆ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Spigelia. (Prepared from Spigelia by displacement by diluted alcohol, and evaporation. Ph. U. S., 1863.) Dose, f3j.

EXTRACTUM SPIGELIÆ ET SENNÆ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Spigelia and Sen'na. A mixture of the fluid extracts of spigelia and senna; carbonate of potassa and oils of anise and caraway. Ph. U. S. Dose, f3j.

EXTRACTUM STILLINGIÆ FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of Stillin'gia, has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Ph. (1873).

EXTRACTUM STRAMONII, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) E. Stramonii foliorum, Extract or Alcoholic Extract of Stramonium or of Stramonium leaves. (The expressed juice inspissated.) The Extractum Stramonii Seminis (Ph. U. S., 1873), Extract of Stramonium Seed, (F.) Extrait de Semences de Stramonium, is made from the powdered seed by means of diluted alcohol, with the aid of the percolator;—the solution being evaporated. The official Extractum Stramonii (Ph. U. S., 1873) is the E. Stramonii Alcoholicum.

EXTRACTUM STRAMONII ALCOHOLICUM, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) E. S. Foliorum (Ph. U. S., 1873), Alcoholic Extract of Stramonium (Ph. U. S., 1863), is made from the recently dried leaves by a process similar to that for making Extractum Aconiti (Ph. U. S., 1873).

These Extracts are used as narcotics in asthma and other spasmodic affections. Dose, of Extractum Stramonii, gr. ij. to gr. v.; of E. S. Alcoholicum, gr. ½ to gr. j.

EXTRACTUM STYRACIS, see Styrax.

EXTRACTUM TARAXACI, E. Herbæ et Radicis Taraxaci, Extract of Dandelion. (The strained juice evaporated.) It has been considered deobstruent, laxative, and diuretic. Dose, gr. x. to ʒj.

A fluid extract of Dandelion, Extractum Taraxaci fluidum, is official in Ph. U. S., 1873.

EXTRACTUM THEBÆICUM, E. opii.

EXTRACTUM UVÆ URSI, Extract of Uva Ursi. (The decoction evaporated.) Dose, gr. v. to gr. xxx.

A fluid Extract of Uva Ursi, Extractum Uvæ Ursi Fluidum, is official in the Ph. U. S. Dose, f3j.

EXTRACTUM VALERIANÆ, Extract of Valerian. (The expressed decoction evaporated.) The virtues of the valerian being dependent upon its essential oil, this is an objectionable preparation. Dose, gr. x. to ʒj. The official Extractum Valerianæ is, in the Ph. U. S., 1873, the E. Valerianæ Alcoholicum.

EXTRACTUM VALERIANÆ ALCOHOLICUM (Ph. U. S., 1863), Alcoholic Extract of Valerian. Extractum Valerianæ (Ph. U. S., 1873), Extract of Valerian. (Made from Valerian, in fine powder, by percolation with diluted alcohol, and evaporation. Ph. U. S., 1863.) Dose, gr. iij. to v.

A fluid extract of Valerian, Extractum Valerianæ fluidum, is in the Pharmacopœia U. S. Dose, f3j. to f3ij.

EXTRACTUM VERA'TRI VIRIDIS FLUIDUM, Fluid Extract of American Hel'lebores, is official in the Ph. U. S. for 1863. Dose, ʒv. to x.

Extra'neous Bod'y, For'eign bod'y, Cor'pus extra'neum seu exter'num seu alie'num seu adventit'ium, (F.) Corps étranger. Any solid, liquid, or gaseous substance, inanimate or animate, proceeding from without, or formed in the body; which constitutes no part of the body, but occupies, in the substance of the textures, or some of the cavities, a place foreign to it.

Extravasa'tion, Extravasa'tio, Extrava'sion, (extra, and vasa, 'vessels.') Escape of a fluid — extravasa'tum — from the vessel containing it, and infiltration or effusion of the fluid into the surrounding textures. Such fluid is said to be extravasated, (F.) Extravasé, — the urine, for example.

EXTRAVASA'TION CYSTS, Exudation cysts.

Extravasa'tum, see Extravasation.

Extravasé, see Extravasation.

Extrava'sion, Extravasation.

Extrem'ity, Extrem'itas, (F.) Extrémité, (extremus, 'the outermost.') The end or termination of a thing. The limbs, acrote'ria, have been so called, — as the upper and lower extremities. See Membrum. It has been, also, used to express the last moments of life; as when we say, a patient is in extremity, (F.) le malade est à l'extrémité, à toute extrémité.

Extrin'sic, Extrin'secus, ('from without.') That which comes from without. This term has been used for muscles, which surround certain organs and attach them to the neighboring parts; in order to distinguish them from other muscles, which enter into the intimate composition of those organs, and which have been named intrin'sic. Thus, there are extrinsic and intrinsic muscles of the tongue, ear, &c.

Extrover'sio, (extra, and vertere, versum, 'to turn.') Extrophia.

Extuberan'tia, (ex, and tuber, 'a prominence.') Protuberance.

Extubera'tio, Protuberance.

Extumefac'tio, (ex, tumere, 'to swell,' and facere, factum, 'to make.') Swelling.

Extus'sio, (ex, and tussis, 'a cough.') Cough with expectoration.

Exu'ber, gen. Exu'beris, (ex, and ubera, 'breasts,') Apogalac'tus. A child which has been weaned.

Exuda'tion, Exsuda'tion, Exsuda'tio, (ex, and sudare, sudatum, 'to sweat,') (F.) Suintement. The oozing of a material through the pores of a membrane. Also, the material which issues in this manner. See Diapedesis, Exhalation, and Endosmose. Exudations form a group in the classification of cutaneous diseases by Hebra. They are characterized either by the presence, beneath the epidermis, of a fluid, as in vesicles, pustules, &c.; or by swelling of the skin, as in tubercles, papules, wheals, &c.; or by pigment staining, or desquamation of the cuticle, — which are not the sequelæ of simple hyperæmia.

EXUDA'TION CELLS, see Corpuscles, exudation — e. Corpuscles, see Corpuscles, exudation.

EXUDA'TION CYSTS, Extravasa'tion Cysts. Cysts containing extravasated blood, or fluids which have exuded from the blood.

Exu'dative, Exudati'vus. Relating or appertaining to exudations.

Exulcera'tio, (ex, and ulcus, gen. ulceris, 'an ulcer,') Ecthlima, Ulceration — e. Ani, see Enterococcosis — e. Intestinorum, Enterococcosis — e. Reeti, see Enterococcosis — e. Uteri, Hystercoccosis — e. Ventriculi, Gastrecoccosis.

Exumbilica'tio, (ex, and umbilicus, 'the navel,') Exomphalus.

Exus'tio, (ex, and urere, ustum, 'to burn,') Cauterization.

Exutoire, Exutory, Fonticulus.

Exuto'rium, (exuere, exutum, 'to draw or put out,') Fonticulus.

Ex'utory, Fonticulus.

Exu'via, see Exuviation.

Exuvia'tion, Exuvia'tio, (exuere, 'to put off,') The shedding or casting off of parts, as the deciduous teeth, the skins of serpents, &c., which are hence called Exu'via.

Eye, (Sax. eag, Teuton. Auge,) Oculus, Ops, Om'ma, Ophthalmos, Il'los, Op'tilos (Doric.) Viso'rium Org'anum, (Sc.) Ee, plural Een, (F.) Œil. The eye is the immediate organ of vision. It is seated in the orbit, while its dependencies, called by Haller Tutam'ina Oculi, occupy the circumference of the cavity, and are composed of the eyebrows, the eyelids, cilia, glands of Meibomius, &c. The Ball, Globe, or Bulb of the Eye, Bul'bus Oculi, is covered anteriorly by the tunica conjunctiva; is moved by six muscles, four straight, two oblique; and is constituted of membranes, as the sclerotic, cornea, choroid, tunica Jacobi, retina, iris, hyaloid, and, in the fetus, the membrana pupillaris; and of fluids, called humors, or media, — the aqueous, crystalline, and vitreous. The eyeball is invested with a membranous tunic, which separates it from the other structures of the orbit, and forms a smooth, hollow surface, by which its motions are facilitated. This investment has been called cellular capsule of the eye, ocular capsule, tunica vaginalis oculi, vag'inal coat, and submus'cular fascia of the eye. The vessels of the eye proceed from the ophthalmic artery. The nerves, except the optic, are chiefly furnished from the ophthalmic ganglion. The fundus of the eye — fundus oculi — is the part of the organ lying behind the lens and vitreous humor, and embracing the entrance for the optic nerve, the retina, choroid, sclerotic, and blood-vessels. The following are the dimensions, &c., of the organ, on the authority of Petit, Young, Gordon, and Brewster:

	Inch.
Length of the antero-posterior diameter of the eye.....	0.91
Vertical chord of the cornea.....	0.45
Versed sine of the cornea.....	0.11
Horizontal chord of the cornea.....	0.47
Size of pupil seen through the cornea.....	0.27 to 0.13
Size of pupil diminished by magnifying power of cornea, from.....	0.25 to 0.12
Radius of anterior surface of crystalline...	0.30
Radius of posterior surface.....	0.22
Principal focal distance of lens.....	1.73
Distance of the centre of the optic nerve from the foramen centrale of Sömmerring..	0.11
Distance of the iris from the cornea.....	0.10
Distance of the iris from the anterior surface of the crystalline.....	0.02
Field of vision above a horizontal line, 50° }	120°
Field of vision below a horizontal line, 70° }
Field of vision in a horizontal plane.....	150°
Diameter of the crystalline in a woman above fifty years of age.....	0.378
Diameter of the cornea.....	0.400
Thickness of the crystalline.....	0.172
Thickness of the cornea.....	0.042

EYE, ACCOMMODA'TION OF. The power possessed by the eye of adjusting itself for different distances, according as the object is remote or near at hand. It is probably due to an alteration in the form of the crystalline lines from some action of the ciliary muscle.

Face, Facies, Vultus, Vol'tus, Proso'pon, Stoma, (F.) Face, (facere, 'to make or form,') The face is the anterior part of the head. It is formed of 13 bones,—the two superior maxillary, the two malar, the two ossa nasi, the two ossa unguis, the vomer, the two ossa spongiosa inferiora, the two palate bones, and the inferior maxillary, without including the frontal portion of the os frontis, and the 32 teeth, which may be considered to form part of it. Its numerous muscles are chiefly destined for the organs of sight, hearing, taste, and smell. Its arteries proceed from the external carotid: its veins end in the jugular; its nerves originate immediately from the brain.

The face experiences alterations in disease, which it is important to attend to. It is yellow in jaundice; pale and puffy in dropsy; and its expression is very different according to the seat of irritation, so that, in infants, by an attention to medical physiognomy, we can often detect the seat of disease. Hippocrates has well depicted the change which it experiences in one exhausted by long sickness, by great evacuations, excessive hunger, watchfulness, &c., threatening dissolution. Hence this state has been called Facies Hippocratica, Facies Cadaver'ica, Facies Tortua'lis. In this, the nose is pinched; the eyes are sunk; the temples hollow; the ears cold and retracted; the skin of the forehead tense, and dry; the complexion livid; the lips pendent, relaxed, and cold, &c. The face assumes also a peculiar characteristic appearance in cholera, facies choleric—in cancer, cancerous facies—in tuberculosis, tubercular facies.

The term Face (F.) is likewise given to one of the aspects of an organ; thus, we say, the superior face of the stomach.

FACE A'GUE, Neuralgia, facial.

Face Infectée, see Vultueux—f. Vultueuse, see Vultueux.

Face'ache, see Neuralgia.

Fao'et, (F.) Facette, (dim. of Face,) Facies'ula. A small face. A small, circumscribed portion of the surface of a bone, as the articular facette of a bone.

Fachingen, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These springs are at no great distance from those of Geilenau, and two miles north of Wisbaden. They contain free carbonic acid; carbonate, sulphate, and phosphate of soda; chloride of sodium; carbonates of lime, magnesia, and iron, and form an agreeable antacid drink in some forms of dyspepsia.

Fa'cial, Facia'lis, (from facies.) Belonging to, or connected with, the face.

FACIAL AN'GLE, see Angle, facial.

FACIAL AR'TERY, La'bial artery, Angular or external maxillary artery, A. palato-labial (Ch.), is a branch of the external carotid, which rises beneath the digastricus, and is distributed to almost every part of the face. It furnishes the inferior palatal, submental, superior labial, inferior labial, and dorsalis nasi. Chaussier calls the external carotid artery, Artère Faciale, Facial Artery.

FACIAL LINE, see Angle, facial.

FACIAL NERVE, Ramus du'rrior septimæ conjugatio'nis, Sympatheticus mi'nor, Par septimum seu facia'le, Communicans faciei ner'vus, Portio du'ra of the 7th pair, Respiratory nerve of the face. This nerve arises from the inferior and lateral part of the tuber annulare, in the groove which separates it from the medulla oblongata, external to the corpora olivaria, and by the side of the auditory nerve. It issues from the cranium by the meatus auditorius internus; enters the aqueduct of Fallopius; receives a branch of the Vidian nerve; forms a gangliform swelling—Intumescentia gangliformis;—sends off filaments to the internal muscles of the malleus and stapes; furnishes, according to many anatomists, that called chor'da tym'pani; makes its exit at the foramen stylo-mastoideum, and divides into two branches—the temporo-facial, and cervico-facial. On the face it is termed Pes anserinus, Plexus nervorum anserinus. See Portio Wrisbergii.

FACIAL VEIN, Pal'ato-labial (Ch.), arises between the skin and frontalis muscle, and bears the name Ve'na Fronta'lis, V. Prépara'ta, (F.) Veine frontale ou V. Préparate. It then descends, vertically, towards the greater angle of the eye, where it is called Angula'ris; and afterwards descends, obliquely, on the face, to open into the internal jugular, after having received branches, which correspond with those of the facial artery. It is only in the latter part of its course that it is called Facial Vein.

Faciecula, (dim. of Facies.) Facet.

Facient, (faciens, 'making,' facio, 'I make.') A suffix, as in Calefacient, Rubefacient, &c., 'making warm,' 'making red.'

Facies, Face — f. Cadaverica, see Face — f. of Cancer, see Face — f. Choleric, Choleric face — f. Concava pedis, Sole — f. Hippocratica, see Face and Agony.

FACIES HYSTERICA. A facial expression, marked by a remarkable depth and prominent fulness, with more or less thickness of the upper lip, and a peculiar drooping of the upper eyelids, which Dr. Todd thought characteristic of hysteria.

FACIES INFERIOR PEDIS, Sole — f. Tortuosa, see Face — f. Tubercular, see Face.

Factice, Factitious.

Factitious, Factitius, (F.) Factice, (facere, factum, 'to make.') Artificial. That which is made by art, in opposition to what is natural, or found already existing in nature. Thus, we say, factitious mineral waters, for artificial mineral waters.

Facultas, Faculty — f. Auctrix, Plastic force — f. Formatrix, Plastic force — f. Nutrix, Plastic force — f. Vegetativa, Plastic force — f. Zotica, Vis vitalis.

Facultates Naturales, ('natural faculties,') see Function.

Facultes Affectives, see Affective.

Faculties, Affectives, see Affective.

Faculties, Facultas, Dynamis, Vir'tus, Potency, Pow'er, Vir'tue, (F.) Faculté, (facilis, — itself from facere, 'to make,' — 'what can be made or done.') The power of executing any function or act. The collection of the intellectual faculties constitutes the understanding. We say, also, vital faculties, for vital properties, &c. Faculty likewise means the whole body of the medical profession; also, a body of medical or other professors.

Fæcal, (from fæces.) Stercoraceous — f. Retention, Constipation.

Fæces, (pl. of Fæx.) Fæces, Cher'se, ('the dregs of any thing,') Fæculence, (F.) Fèces. The alvine evacuations are so called, (F.) Garde-robres; the excrements, Impuritates alvinae, Fæcal matter, (F.) Matière fécale. See Excrement.

FÆCES INDURATÆ, ('indurated fæces,') Soy-bala.

Fæcositas, (fæx, gen. fæcis.) Feculence.

Fæcula, Fecula — f. Amylacea, Amylum — f. Marantæ, Arrow root — f. Tapioka, see Jatropha manihot.

Fæculentia, Feculence.

Fæx, gen. Fæcis, Feculence. See Fæces.

Faga'ra Octan'dra, (fagus, 'the beech,' which it resembles,) Xanthoxylum octan'dra, Elaph-rium tomento'sum, Am'yris tomento'sa. Ord. Rutaceæ. The systematic name of the plant, which affords Tacamahaca, a resinous substance, that exudes from the tree Tacamahaca, which has a fragrant, delightful smell, was formerly in high estimation, as an ingredient in warm, stimulating plasters, and was given internally, like the balsams generally. The East India Tacamahac, Balsamum Vir'idæ seu Cal'aba seu Ma'rie, O'leum Ma'rie, (F.) Baume de Calaba, Baume vert, B. Morie, is yielded by Calophyllum inophyllum, Balsamaria inophyllum.

The name Tacamahac is also given to a resin furnished by Populus balsamifera seu tacamahaca, (F.) Peuplier baumier ou de la Caroline, which grows in the northern parts of America and Siberia.

FAGA'RA PIPERITA, Xanthoxylum piperitum, Japanese pepper, (F.) Fagarier poivre, a native of Japan, possesses the qualities of pepper, and is used as such by the Japanese. It is also employed as a rubefacient cataplasm.

Fagaras'trum Capen'sé, (after Fagara.) Nat. Ord. Xanthoxyleæ. A South African plant, the fruit of which is known to the Colonists as Wild

Card'amom; and, on account of its aromatic qualities, is prescribed in flatulency and paralysis.

Fagarier Poivre, Fagara octandra.

Fagopyrum, (fagus, 'the beech,' and πυρος, 'wheat,') Polygonum fagopyrum.

Fagus, (φῶγος, from φαγειν, 'to eat,' [?]) F. sylvatica.

FAGUS CASTA'NEA. The systematic name of the Chestnut Tree, Castanea, C. vulga'ris seu ves'ca, Lo'pima, Glans Jo'vis Theophrasti, Ju'piter's or Sardin'ian A'corn, Com'mon Chestnut, (F.) Châtaignier commun, of the Oak Family. Ord. Cupuliferae. Sex. Syst. Monœcia Polyandria. The Chestnut, Castanea nux, (F.) Châtaigne, is farinaceous and nutritious, but not easy of digestion.

FAGUS CASTA'NEA PU'MILA. The Chin'capin or Chin'quapin, Castanea Pu'mila, (F.) Châtaignier nain. The nut of this American tree is eaten like the chestnut. The bark, Castanea (Ph. U. S.), has been used in intermittents. It is asserted that the leaves of our indigenous chestnut tree have been used with marked advantage in whooping-cough, in the form of infusion, sweetened.

FAGUS PURPU'REA, F. sylvatica.

FAGUS SYLVATICA. The systematic name of the Beech, Fagus, F. Sylvestris seu purpu'rea, Ox'ya, Balan'da, Valan'ida, the Beech Tree, (F.) Hêtre. The Beech-nut or Beech-mast, (F.) Faine, affords an oil, by expression, which is of a palatable character, and is eaten in some places instead of butter. It has been supposed to be a good vermifuge, but it is no better than any mild oil.

FAGUS SYLVES'TRIS, F. sylvatica.

Faham, see Angræcum fragrans.

Faible, Infirm.

Faiblesse, (from flebilis, 'deplorable,' or from debilis, 'weak,' [?]) Debility.

Faim, (from fames.) Hunger — f. Canine, Boulimia — f. de Loup, Fames lupina.

Faine, see Fagus sylvatica.

Faint, (from Sax. rynigean, 'to decay,') see Syncope.

Fainting, Syncope — f. Fit, Syncope.

Faintishness, see Syncope.

Faintness, Languor, Syncope.

Faints, see Epilepsy.

Fairburn, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The mineral waters at this place, in the county of Ross, in Scotland, are sulphureous, and frequented.

Fairn'tickled, see Ephelides.

Faisandées (Viandes), (from faisan, 'a pheasant,' hence, game in general kept until it is putrescent.) See Hyposaprus.

Faisceau, Fasciculus — f. Intermédiaire de Wrisberg, Portio Wrisbergii — f. Petit, Fasciculus.

Faix, ('a burthen,' from fascis, 'a bundle,') Fætus.

Falcadi'na, see Scherlievo.

Fal'ces (pl.), see Falx.

Fal'ciform, Falciformis, Drepanoï'des, (falx, gen. falcis, 'a scythe,' and forma, 'shape,') Having the shape of a scythe. This term has been applied to different parts. The broad or suspensory ligament of the liver is sometimes called the fal'ciform ligament. See Falx, and Sinus.

FAL'CIFORM EXPAN'SION OF THE FAS'CIA LA'TA is the scythe-shaped reflection of the fascia lata, which forms, outwards and upwards, the opening for the vena saphæna, and is attached to the crural arch by its superior extremity, forming the anterior paries of the canal of the same name.

Falla'cia, (fallax, 'deceitful,') Hallucination.

FALLA'CIA OPTICA, An optic illusion.

Fall'and-evyl, Epilepsy.

Falling Down, Epilepsy.

Falling Sick'ness, Epilepsy.

Fallo'pian Tube, see Tube, Fallopian.

Fall'poison, Amianthium muscætoxicum.

Fall'tranck, Faltranck (G.), literally, a drink against falls. A vulnerary. It is a mixture of several aromatic and slightly astringent plants, which grow chiefly in the Swiss Alps, and hence the name—Vulnéraire Suisse—given to such dried plants cut into fragments. They are called, also, Espèces Vulnéraires, and Thé Suisse. Within the present century, in England, a kind of vulnerary beer was often prescribed, in country practice, in all cases of inward bruises. It bore the name Cerevisia nigra or black beer, and was formed by infusing certain reputed vulnerary herbs in beer or ale.

The infusion of the Falltranck is aromatic and slightly agreeable, but of no use in the cases for which it has been particularly recommended.

Fal'mouth, Cli'mate of. The climate of Falmouth, in Cornwall, England, resembles that of Penzance; and, like it, is in many respects a favorable retreat for the phthisical during the winter months.

Fal'sa Vi'a, False passage.

False, Fal'sus, No'thus, Pseudo (in composition), Spu'rious, Bas'tard, (F.) Faux, Fausse, (from fallere, falsum, 'to deceive.') This epithet has been frequently added to peripneumony, pleurisy, &c., to designate a disease similar to these, but less severe. Most commonly, a severe catarrh or pleurodynia has received the name. See Peripneumonia notha.—We say, also, False Ribs, False Rhubarb, &c.

FALSE JOINT, Pseudarthrosis.

FALSE PAS'SAGE, Fal'sa Via, (F.) Fausse Route. An accidental passage, made in surgical operations, and particularly in introducing the catheter; the latter is sometimes passed through into the rectum.

FALSE WA'TERS, False Deliv'ery, (F.) Hydrallante. Water which sometimes collects between the amnion and chorion, and is commonly discharged before the birth of the child.

Falset'to Voice, ([L.] dim. of falso, 'false,') see Voice.

Falsifica'tion, Adultera'tio, (falsus, 'false,' and facere, 'to make,') A fraudulent imitation or alteration of an aliment or medicine by different admixtures. It is synonymous with adultera'tion and sophistica'tion. By Dr. Hassall, the practice of adulteration is defined as the intentional addition to an article, for purposes of gain or deception, of any substance or substances, the presence of which is not acknowledged in the name under which the article is sold.

The following table was prepared to indicate common falsifications practised with some of the most useful drugs. Of late years, increased attention has been drawn to the alarming extent to which the adulterations of both drugs and aliments have been carried. The object has been seriously examined and reported on by a committee of the British House of Commons, and two elaborate works have been published by Dr. Hassall—the one "On Food and its Adulterations," (1855); and the other entitled, "Adulterations Detected" (1857), both in food and medicines, comprising the Reports of the Analytical Sanitary Commission of "the Lancet," &c., &c., (1857.) The principal means for the detection of such adulterations are afforded by chemistry and the microscope. The former has always been employed for the purpose, but the latter only recently. It is especially adapted for the detection of animal and vegetable admixtures, on the presence of which chemistry can shed little or no light. The distinctive characters of many of the pure articles employed in medicine are given in the Pharmacopœias, as in that of the United States (1873).

MEDICINES.	ADULTERATIONS.	MODE OF DETECTION.
ACACLE GUMMI. Gum Arabic.	{ Gum Senegal	{ Gum Senegal is clammy and tenacious. Gum Arabic is perfectly soluble in water, and its solution limpid.
ACETUM DESTILLATUM. Distilled Vinegar.	{ Sulphuric Acid	{ Acetate of barytes causes a white precipitate.

ACIDUM MURIATICUM. Muriatic Acid.	{ Sulphuric Acid	{ Deposits by evaporation the salts it may contain: precipitates with solution of hydrochlorate of baryta if it contains sulphuric acid.
ACIDUM NITRICUM. Nitric Acid.	{ Muriatic and Sulphuric Acids	{ The presence of chlorine is indicated by a precipitate with nitrate of silver: that of sulphuric acid by the same result with hydrochlorate of baryta.
ACIDUM SULPHURICUM. Sulphuric Acid.	{ Muriatic and Nitric Acids	{ The presence of muriatic and nitric acid is indicated by the smell, when the acid tested is strongly heated.
ÆTHER RECTIFICATUS. Rectified Ether.	{ Too dilute.	{ The s. g. detects this.
	{ Sulphuric Acid	{ By acetate of baryta. Precipitate white.
	{ Alcohol	{ With phosphorus a milky instead of limpid solution is formed.
AMMONIÆ AQUA. Water of Ammonia.	{ Carbonic Acid	{ A precipitation occurs on adding a solution of muriate of lime.
AMMONIÆ CARBONAS. Carbonate of Ammonia.		{ It should be capable of complete volatilization by heat.
AMMONIACUM		{ The Gutta Ammoniaci are white, clear, and dry.
Ammoniac.		{ The lump Ammoniacum , lapis Ammoniaci , is often adulterated with common resin.
ANTIMONI SULPHURETUM. Sulphuret of Antimony.	{ Lead.	{ It ought to be entirely volatilized by a red heat.
	{ Arsenic	{ Imparts a foliated texture, and is not vaporizable.
	{ Manganese and Iron.	{ A smell of garlic is emitted when thrown on live coals.
		{ Are not vaporizable.

MEDICINES.	ADULTERATIONS.	MODE OF DETECTION.
ARGENTI NITRAS Nitrate of Silver.	Copper	The solution assumes a blue colour, when supersaturated with ammonia. It may be suspected when the salt deliquesces.
	Nitrate of Potassa	The adulteration with nitrate of potassa is easily recognized by the fracture of a stick of it, which is radiated when pure, and granular if adulterated: or by precipitating a solution of the salts with a sufficient quantity of muriatic acid, and evaporating the clear liquor: the nitrate of potassa or other salts will remain.
BALSAMUM PERUVIANUM. Balsam of Pera.	A mixture of Resin and some Volatile Oil, with Benzoin.	Not easily detected.
CALUMBA. Columbo.	A menisperm from Ceylon, tinged Bryony root, and the root of Fraseria Walteri .	The true is distinguishable from the false Columbo by adding to an infusion of the root, a few drops of solution of sulph. iron, which gives to the infusion of the false Columbo a greenish black colour; but produces no change in the other.
CAPSIUM. Cayenne Pepper.	Chloride of Sodium	This disposes it to deliquesce.
	Red Lead	Digest in acetic acid, and add a solution of sulphuret of ammonia—a dark-coloured precipitate will be produced.
CASTOREUM. Castor.	A mixture of dried blood, gum ammoniac and a little real castor, stuffed into the scrotum of a goat.	Smell and taste will generally detect the fraud.
CERA ALBA. White Wax.	White Lead	Melt the wax, the oxide will subside.
	Tallow	The cake has not its ordinary translucency.
	Earth or Peasmeal	May be suspected when the cake is brittle and colour grayish.
CERA FLAVA. Yellow Wax.	Resin	Put it in cold alcohol, which will dissolve the resin, without acting on the wax.
	Tallow	Is known by the greater softness and unctuousity, and its smell when melted. Turmeric is generally added in this case to obviate the paleness.
CINCHONA. Bark.	This is variously adulterated, but generally with the Cuthagena and other inferior barks.	Can only be detected by practice, and examining into the quantity of quinia, or cinchonia, or both, which it contains.
COCCUS. Cochineal.	Pieces of dough formed in moulds, and coloured with cochineal.	Throw it into water, the adulteration will appear.
COPAIBA. Balsam of Copaiba.	Fixed Oils	If it does not retain its spherical form when dropped into water, its adulteration may be inferred.
		Mix one part of strong liquid ammonia of 22°, with three parts of copaiba. If pure, the mixture will, in a few minutes, become transparent; if not, it will remain opaque.
CROCUS. Saffron.	Fibres of smoked Beef	Affords an unpleasant odour when thrown on live coals.
	Petals of Calendula officinalis , and Carthamus Tinctorius .	Infuse the specimen in hot water, and the difference will be perceptible.
CUBEBA. Cubebs.	Turkey Yellow Berries, or the dried fruit of Rhamnus Catharticus .	Detected by attentive examination.
CUSPARIA CORTEX. Angustura or Cusparia Bark.	False Angustura sometimes sold for it.	The epidermis of the true Cusparia is characterized by being covered with a matter resembling the rust of iron. False cusparia bark yields brucia and strychnia; the true yields neither.
GUAIACA RESINA. Resin of Guaiacum.	Common Resin	Detected by the turpentine smell emitted when thrown upon hot coals.
	Manchineel Gum	Add to the tincture a few drops of the spirit of nitre, and dilute with water; the guaiacum is precipitated—the adulteration floats in white striae.
HYDRARGYRI CHLORIDUM MITE. Calomel.	Corrosive Sublimate and Sub-nitrate of Bismuth.	A precipitation will be produced by the carbonate of potassa, from a solution made by boiling the suspected sample with a small portion of muriate of ammonia in distilled water; or, the presence of deutocliloride of mercury is indicated by warming gently a small quantity of calomel in alcohol, filtering and adding to the clear liquor some limewater, by which a reddish yellow precipitate is afforded. When calomel is rubbed with a fixed alkali, it ought to become intensely black, and not exhibit any orange hue.
	Carbonate of Lead, Sulphate of Baryta, and Carbonate of Baryta.	Not volatilized by heat,—the carbonates effervesce with acids.
HYDRARGYRI OXIDUM RUBRUM. Red Oxide of Mercury.	Red Lead, Red Oxide of Iron, Brick Dust.	Digest in acetic acid: add sulphuret of ammonia, which will produce a dark coloured precipitate. It should be totally volatilized by heat.
HYDRARGYRI SULPHURETUM NIGRUM.	Ivory Black	Throw a suspected portion on hot coals—the residuum will detect the fraud.
HYDRARGYRI SULPHURETUM RUBRUM. Red Sulphuret of Mercury.	Red Lead, Red Oxide of Iron, Brick Dust.	Digest in acetic acid, and add sulphuret of ammonia—a black precipitate will be produced. Does not wholly sublime like the genuine article.
IODINIUM. Iodine.	Plumbago, Charcoal, and Oxide of Manganese.	The tests of its purity are—that it is freely soluble in ether and alcohol. Heated on a piece of glass or porcelain, it sublimes without residuum, rising in purple vapour. With starch in cold solution it produces a blue colour.
JALAPÆ RADIX. Jalap Root.	Bryony Root, spurious or false Jalap Root, and Liquorice Root.	Bryony root is of a paler colour, and less compact texture, and does not easily burn at the flame of a candle. Liquorice is detected by the taste.

MEDICINES	ADULTERATIONS.	MODES OF DETECTION.
MAGNESIA.	Lime	Detected by the solution in dilute sulphuric acid affording a precipitate with oxalate of ammonia.
	Sulphuret of Lime	Gives off, when moistened, the smell of sulphuretted hydrogen.
MAGNESIÆ CARBONAS. Carbonate of Magnesia.	Chalk	Detected by adding dilute sulphuric acid to the suspected substance, when, if chalk be present, there will be a white insoluble precipitate.
	Gypsum	Boil in distilled water, and test the solution by a barytic and oxalic reagent.
MANNA.	A factitious article, consisting of honey or sugar, mixed with scammony, is said to be sometimes sold for it.	The colour, weight, transparency, and taste detect it.
MORPHIÆ ET EJUS SALES. Morphia, and its Salts.	Morphia and its salts, when placed in contact with nitric acid, are coloured red; with persalts of iron, blue. They are perfectly soluble in warm alcohol, and acidulated warm water. When morphia is mixed with narcotina, the adulteration is ascertained by mixing them with sulphuric ether, which dissolves the narcotina, without sensibly affecting the morphia. The bag must not appear to have been opened. This may be suspected, if it emits a fetid smoke when inflamed.
MOSCHUS. Musk.	Dried Blood	Discovered by its melting and running before it inflames. Rub with water. The metallic particles will subside.
	Asphaltum	Touch writing paper with it, and hold it before the fire: fixed oil leaves a stain of grease.
	Fine particles of Lead	Add water; a milkiness and increase of temperature occurs.
OLEA DE-TILLATA. Essential Oils.	Fixed Oils	Alcohol S. g. 820 will mix with any proportion of castor oil, whilst it dissolves very little of the others.
	Alcohol	The best opium is covered with leaves and the reddish capsules of a species of Rumex. The inferior kinds have capsules adherent. It is bad when soft and friable, when intensely black or mixed with many impurities, and when sweet. The quantity of morphia affords the best test.
OLEUM RICINI. Castor Oil.	Olive or Almond or Poppy Oil	The adulteration is ascertained by precipitating a solution of the salt with nitrate of silver, and treating the precipitate with ammonia, which dissolves the chloride of silver, without acting upon the iodide of this metal.
OPIUM.	Extract of Liquorice, Bullets and Stoves sometimes; Extract of Poppy, of Chelidonium majus, and other vegetables. Molasses, G Arabic. G. Tragacanth, Linseed Oil, Owl's Dung.	The genuine salt leaves no residue when submitted to calcination; is perfectly soluble in warm alcohol, and in water slightly acidulated with sulphuric acid.
POTASSII IODIDUM. Iodide of Potassium.	Chlorides of Potassium, and Sodium, Nitrate and Carbonate of Potassa.	By the red color produced by contact with nitric acid.
QUINIÆ SULPHAS. Sulphate of Quinia.	Mannite, Sugar of Milk, Starch, Chalk.	Sulphuric acid excites an effervescence.
STRYCHNINÆ ET EJUS SALES. Strychnia and its Salts.	Brucia	Sulphuric acid forms an insoluble sulphate of lead.
ZINCI OXYDUM. Oxide of Zinc.	Chalk and Carbonate of Magnesia.
	White Lead

The following table by Dr. Hassall is a classified list of various substances ascertained by him to be employed for the adulteration of different dietetic articles,—to imitate bulk and weight, and give colour, smell, or taste, or other properties. It sufficiently exhibits the considerable number of substances possessing qualities more or less injurious, which are employed in the adulteration of food.

	For Bulk and Weight.	For Colour.	For taste, Smell, and other Properties.
ARROW-ROOT.....	Sago, Potato, and Tapioca Starches, and various mixtures and combinations of these with the inferior arrow-roots.	Bole Armenian, Venetian Red.	Alum, Hards and Stuff.*
ANCHOVIES.....	Dutch, French and Sicilian Fish.
BREAD.....	Mashed Potatoes.....
BUTTER.....	Water.....	Certain Salts of Copper, usually the Acetate.	Salt.
BOTTLED FRUITS AND VEGETABLES.
CINNAMON.	Cassia, and most of the articles mentioned under Spices.
COLOURED CONFECTIONERY.	East India Arrow-root, Wheat and Potato Flour, Hydrated Sulphate of Lime.	Cochineal, Lake, Indigo, Prussian Blue, Antwerp Blue, Artificial Ultramarine, Carbonate of Copper or Verditer, Carbonate of Lead or White Lead, Red Lead, Vermilion; Chrome Yellow or Chromates of Lead; Lemon, Orange, and deep; Gamboge; the three Brunswick Greens, Emerald Green or Arsenite of Copper, Indian red; brown ferruginous earths, chiefly Umber, Sienna, and Vandyke Brown, and various combinations of the above pigments.

* 'Hards' and 'Stuff' are mixtures of alum and salt used by bakers to whiten bread.

	For Bulk and Weight.	For Colour.	For Taste, Smell, and other Properties.
OCYEE.....	Chicory, Roasted Wheat, Rye and Potato Flours, Roasted Beans, Mangel-wurzel, Acorns.	Burnt Sugar or Black Jack.
CHICORY.....	Roasted Wheat and Rye Flours, Burnt Beans and Acorns, Burnt Sugar, Sawdust, Mahogany Sawdust, Carrot, Mangel-wurzel.	Ferruginous earths, as Venetian Red and Umber, Burnt Sugar or Black Jack.
COCOA AND CHOCOLATE.....	Maranta, East India, and Tacca or Tahiti Arrow-roots; Tous les Mois; the Flours of Wheat, Indian Corn, Sago, Potato, and Tapioca, and various Mixtures of these; Sugar, Chicory.	Venetian Red, Red Ochre, and other ferruginous earths.
CAYENNE PEPPER.....	Ground Rice, Mustard Husk, Deal Sawdust, Salt.	Red Lead, Vermilion or Bisulphuret of Mercury, Venetian Red, Turmeric.
CUSTARD AND EGG POWDERS.....	Wheat, Potato, and Rice Flours....	Chrome Yellow, or Chromate of Lead, Turmeric.
CURRY POWDER.....	Ground Rice, Potato-farina, Salt...	Red Lead.....	Salt.
FLOUR.....			Alum.
GINGER.....	Wheat, Sago, and Potato Flours, Ground Rice, Mustard Husks.	Turmeric Powder.
GIN.....	Water, Sugar.		Cayenne, Cassia or Cinnamon. Sugar, and flavouring of different kinds. For fining, Alum, Salt of Tartar.
ISINGLASS.....	Gelatin.
LARD.....	Potato-flour, Water.....		Salt, Carbonate of Soda, Caustic Lime.
MUSTARD.....	Wheat-flour, Turmeric.....	Turmeric.
MILK.....	Water.....	Annatto.
MARMALADE.....	Pulp of Apple or Turnip.
OATMEAL.....	Barley-flour, and the integuments of Barley called Rubble.
PORTER AND STOUT.....	Water.....	Sugar, Treacle.....	Sugar, Treacle, Salt.
PICKLES.....		Salts of Copper, usually the Acetate of Copper.
POTTED MEATS AND FISH.....	Flour, probably Wheat-flour boiled.	Bole Armenian, and sometimes Venetian Red.
PRESERVES.....	Salts of Copper, including the Acetate.
PEPPER.....	Wheat and Pea Flour, Ground Rice, Ground Mustard Seeds, Linseed Meal, P. D. or Pepper Dust.
SNUFF.....		The Chromates of Potash, Chromate of Lead, Ferruginous earths, chiefly Umbers, Red and Yellow Ochre, Red Lead, or Oxide of Lead.	The Chromates of Potash, Carbonate of Ammonia, Lime, Powdered Glass or Silice, Powdered Orris-root.
SUGAR.....	Wheat-flour in two cases only, Potato-flour, and Tapioca-starch.
SPICES:
CLOVES.....	Powdered Clove-stalks in one case.
CINNAMON.....	Cassia, Wheat-flour, Sago-meal, and mixtures of these; East India Arrow-root, Potato-flour.
PIMENTO.....	Mustard Husk in one instance.
MIXED SPICE.....	Wheat, Sago, and Potato Flours, Ground Rice, Two Vegetable Substances, one of which resembled Linseed.
SAUCES, as the Essences of Anchovies, Lobsters, and Shrimps, and Tomato Sauce.		Red ferruginous earths, as Bole Armenian and Venetian Red.
TEA.....	Exhausted Tea Leaves; Leaves, other than those of Tea, British and Foreign—as, amongst the former, those of Sycamore, Horse-chestnut, and Plum; Lie Tea,* Paddy Husk, Sand, Starch.	Plumbago, or Black Lead, Gum, Indigo, Prussian Blue, Turmeric, Chinese Yellow, China Clay, Soapstone or French Chalk.	Sulphate of Iron, Catechu, Gum, La Veno Beno, Chinese, Botanical Powder.†
TOBACCO.....	Water, Sugar, Treacle, and Salts...	Sugar, Treacle.....	Oil.
VINEGAR.....	Water.....	Burnt Sugar.....	Sulphuric Acid.

* 'Lie Tea' is so termed from being spurious. It is formed of the dust of tea leaves, and at times of other leaves and sand made into small masses by means of starch or gum; which are painted and coloured so as to resemble either black or green gunpowder tea.

† Called, also, the 'Chinese Tea Improver,' is said to be a mixture of a very small portion of tea powder, with upwards of 90 per cent. of catechu. The 'Chinese Botanical Powder' is an imitation of this.

Fal'tranck, Falltranck.

Falx, gen. Fal'cis, ('a scythe.') Anatomists have given this name to several membranous reflections having the shape of a falx or scythe.

FALX CEREBEL'LI, Falx mi'nor, Sep'tum Cerebelli seu parvum occipita'le, Processus falciformis Cerebelli, (F.) Faux du cervelet, Septum medianum du cervelet (Ch.), is a triangular process of the dura mater opposite the internal occipital protuberance. Its base is attached to the middle of the tentorium, and its top or apex bifurcates, to proceed to the sides of the foramen magnum. Its convex surface is towards the cranium, and its concave in the fissure or groove, which separates the two lobes of the cerebellum.

FALX CEREBRI, F. ma'ior, Vertical superior longitudinal process, Mediastinum cerebri, Sep'tum cerebri, Processus falciformis duræ matris, (F.) Faux du cerveau, Repli longitudinal de la meninge, (Ch.) The greatest process of the dura mater. It extends from the fore to the hind part of the skull, on the median line; is broad behind and narrow before, and is lodged in the groove which separates the hemispheres from each other—the interlobular fissure. At its superior part is situated the longitudinal sinus (superior), and at its lower, corresponding to the edge of the scythe, the inferior longitudinal sinus. Its anterior extremity is attached to the crista galli; its posterior is continuous with the tentorium cerebelli, and contains the straight sinus.

FALX MA'JOR, Falx cerebri—f. Minor, Falx cerebelli.

FALX OF THE PERITONE'UM, Great, F. peritonei maxima, (F.) Grande faux du péritoine, Faux de la Veine Omphalique, Falx of the umbilical vein, is a reflection of the peritoneum, which ascends from the umbilicus to the anterior and inferior surface of the liver.

FALCES OF THE PERITONE'UM, Less'er, Fal'ces Peritonei min'imæ, (F.) Petites faux du péritoine, are the lateral ligaments of the liver, and the reflections which the peritoneum forms, raised up by the umbilical arteries.

FALX OF THE UMBILICAL VEIN, Falx, great, of the Peritoneum.

Fame, Lancet.

Famel'ica Fe'bris, Fever, accompanied with insatiable hunger.

Famel'icus, (from fames.) Hungry.

Fa'mes, Hunger—f. Bovina, Boulimia—f. Canina, Boulimia.

FA'MES LUPINA, ('wolf hunger,') Lycorex'is, (F.) Faim de Loup. Authors have described, under this name, a kind of boulimia, or depravation of the digestive functions, in which the patient eats voraciously, and passes his food, almost immediately afterwards, per anum.

Famigeratis'simum Emplas'trum, (fama, 'fame,' and gero, 'I wear.') A plaster extolled in ague, and made of aromatic, irritating substances. It was applied to the wrist.

Familiar'ica Sel'la, (familia, 'a household,' and sella, 'a seat or stool.') Close stool.

Fam'ily Diseases, see Hereditary.

Fam'ine Fe'ver or Ty'phus, Relapsing fever.

Fan'culum, Anethum.

Fan'cymark, Nævus.

Fan'feckles, Ephelides.

Fang of Tooth, (from Sax. rangen, 'to seize.') Radix.

Fanon (F.), ([G.] Fahne, 'a banner, ensign, standard,' (L.) pannus, 'a cloth,') Fer'ula, Lectulus stramin'eus, Thor'ulus stramin'eus. A splint of a particular shape, employed in fractures of the thigh and leg to keep the bones in contact.

The Fanons were divided into true and false. The true fanon consists of a cylinder of straw, strongly surrounded with a cord or riband, in the centre of which a stick is usually placed to insure its solidity. The false consists of a thick piece of linen, made flat like a compress, and folded at the extremities. It was placed between the fractured limb and the true fanon. The Drap-fanon is a large piece of common cloth placed between the fractured limb, in which the fanon or lateral splints are rolled.

Fan'tickles, Ephelides.

Fan'tom, Phan'tom, Phanto'ma, (φάντασμα, 'a spectre,') (F.) Phantôme, Fantôme. This word has two acceptations. It means the spectres and images which the imagination presents to the sick, when asleep or awake; and, also, the figure called Man'ikin, Man'ikin, and Man'akin, (F.) Mannequin, on which surgeons practice the application of bandages, or the accoucheur the manual part of midwifery—Phanto'ma obstetric'ium.

Fan'tom or Phan'tom Tu'mor is one that forms, in the abdomen for example, simulating organic disease, and occasionally exceedingly deceptive.

Far'adic, (F.) Faradique. Relating or appertaining to faradisation or electricity of induction.

Faradisa'tion, Far'adism, (after Faraday, the celebrated physicist.) A term proposed by Duchenne, of Boulogne, for electricity of induction, or the localized application, therapeutically, of induction currents:—the currents, in other words, which are instantaneously developed in metallic conductors under the influence of voltaic or magnetic currents, or even of the earth.

Farci'men, gen. Farci'minis, (farcire, 'to stuff,') See Equinia.

Farcimina'lis Membra'na seu Tunica, (farcimen, 'a sausage,') Allantois.

Farci'minum, see Equinia.

Farcin, ([Celt.] farcilh, from farc, 'a horse,') See Equinia.

Farci'no'ma, Equinia.

Farci'no'us Poi'soning, see Equinia.

Farctu'ra, Far'tura, (farcire, farcitum, or fartum, 'to stuff,') The operation of introducing medicinal substances into the cavities of animals or of fruits, which have been previously emptied.

Farctus, ('stuffed,') Emphraxis.

Far'cy, see Equinia—f. Buds, see Equinia—f. Glanders, see Equinia.

Fard, ([G.] farbe, 'color,') Paint.

Fardeau, ([Celt.] fardell, 'a burden,') Mole.

Far'fara, Tussilago—f. Bechium, Tussilago.

Farigoule, Thymus.

Fari'na, (far, 'corn,' or grain of any kind, of which it is made,) Al'phiton, Crim'non, Al'eton, Aleur'on, Ale'ma, (F.) Farine. Meal or Flour. The powder, obtained by grinding the seeds of the gramineous, leguminous, and cucurbitaceous plants in particular. It is highly nutritious and much used, dietetically as well as medicinally. In the Pharmacopœias of London, Edinburgh, and Dublin, Fari'na means wheat flour—Fari'na trit'ici.

Leath's Alimen'tary Fari'na or Homœopath'ic Farina'ceous Food, is said to consist principally of wheat flour, slightly baked, and sweetened with sugar, together with potato flour and a very small quantity of Indian corn meal and tapioca.

FARI'NA AMYGDALA'RUM, see Amygdala.

FARI'NA COMPOUND'ED, BAS'TER'S, is said to consist of wheat flour, sweetened with sugar.

FARI'NA NUTRIT'IOUS, MAID'MAN'S, is said to consist of potato flour, artificially colored of a pink or rosy hue, the coloring matter being probably rose pink.

FARI'NA TRIT'ICI, Wheaten flour; F. Seca'lis, Rye flour or meal; F. Hor'dei, Barley meal; F. Avena'cea, Oat meal, &c. See Amylum.

FARINÆ RESOLVENT'ES, (F.) Farines Résolutives. This name was formerly given to a mixture of the farina of four different plants; Lupine, Lupinus albus; Ervum Ervilia; Vicia faba, and Barley, Hordeum distichum. They were recommended to form cataplasms.

Farina'ceous, Farina'ceus, Farino'sus, Meal'y, (F.) Farinacé, Farineux. Having the appearance or nature of farina. A term given to all articles of food which contain farina. The term Farinacea includes all those substances called cerealia, legumina, &c., which contain farina, and are employed as nutriment.

Hard's farina'ceous food is fine wheat flour, which has been subjected to some heating process. Bra'den's farina'ceous food is said to be wheat flour, baked.

In Pathology, the epithet farina'ceous, (F.) farineux, is applied to certain eruptions, in which the epidermis exfoliates in small particles similar to farina.

FARINA'CEOUS FOOD, BRA'DEN'S, see Farina'ceous—f. Food, Hard's, see Farinaceous—f. Food, homœopathic, see Farina.

FARINA'CEOUS FOOD, PLUMBE'S, is said to consist principally of bean or pea flour, most probably the former, with a little Tacca arrowroot, some potato flour, and a very little Maranta arrowroot.

FARINA'CEOUS FOOD, PRINCE AR'THUR'S, for infants and invalids of all ages, is said to consist entirely of wheat flour, slightly baked.

Farina'rium, Alica.

Farine, Farina—f. de Lini, see Linum usitatissimum.

Farines Résolutives, Farinae resolyentes.

Farineux, Farinaceous.

Farino'sus, Farinaceous.

Farm, Baby, see Baby.

Farm'ery, Hospital.

Farn'tickles, Ephelides.

Far'rier, (from ferrarius, relating to ferrum, 'iron,' 'a blacksmith.') Hippiater.

Farsight'edness, Presbytia.

Fart, ([Sax.] faprt, [Teut.] fahren, 'to go;—fahrt, 'a voyage,' or by onomatopœia; [G.] Furz,) Bdellus, Bdellus, Bdelyg'mia, Bdelyg'mus, Bom'bus, Por'de, Phy'sa, Phy'sæ, Fla'tus, Crep'itus, C. ventris, (F.) Pet. A sonorous or other discharge of wind from behind. A low word, but of respectable parentage.

Fartu'ra, Fartura.

Far'tus, (farcire, fartum or fartum, 'to stuff.') Emphraxis.

Fas'cia, (a band, from fas, 'that which is binding,') Ligatio, Ligatu'ra, Alligatu'ra, Anades'mus, Vin'culum, Spar'ganon, Epides'mus, Vinctu'ra. A band'age, fil'let, roller, lig'ature. The aponeurotic expansions of muscles, which bind parts together, are likewise termed Fascia. See Tænia.

FAS'CIA, ANAL, F. Ischio-rectal.

FAS'CIA APONEUROTICA FEM'ORIS, Fascia lata aponeurosis—f. Capitalis, Bonnet d'Hippocrate, Capelina—f. Capitis, Diadema—f. of Colles, see Perineal fascia—f. Cooperi, F. transversalis.

FAS'CIA, CREMAS'TERIC, see Cremaster.

FAS'CIA, CRIBRIFORM, F. Cribriform'is. The sieve-like portion of the fascia lata; so called from its being pierced by numerous openings for the passage of lymphatic vessels.

FAS'CIA DENTA'TA, F. D. Tari'ni, Corps godronné, of Vicq d'Azyr. A band of gray matter seen beneath the tænia hippocampi on raising it up, which runs along the inner border of the cornu ammonis. It is, as it were, crenated by transverse furrows.

FAS'CIA DIGITA'LIS, Gantelet—f. Diopthalmica, Binoculus—f. Dividens, Dividing bandage—f. Fibro-areolar, Fascia, superficial—f. Heliodori, T bandage.

FAS'CIA ILI'ACA, Iliac aponeurosis. An aponeurosis which proceeds from the tendon of the psaos minor, or which arises from the anterior surface of the psaos magnus, when the former muscle does not exist. It is attached, externally, to the inner edge of the crest of the ilium, below and anteriorly,—on one side to the crural arch, sending an expansion to the fascia transversalis; and on the other, continuous with the deep-seated lamina of the fascia lata, which forms the posterior paries of the crural canal. Within and behind, the fascia iliaca is attached to the brim of the pelvis, and is continuous with the aponeurosis, which M. Jules Cloquet has called Pel'vian. The iliac aponeurosis covers the iliac and psaos muscles, which it separates from the peritoneum.

FAS'CIA INFUNDIB'ULIFORMIS, Inter'nal Spermat'ic Fas'cia, is a funnel-shaped offset from the fascia transversalis, which is prolonged as a sheath upon the vas deferens and spermatic vessels as they pass out of the abdomen.

FAS'CIA INGUINA'LIS, Spica.

FAS'CIA, INTERCOLUM'NAR, Exter'nal Spermat'ic Fascia. A thin membrane, derived from the margin of the pillars of the external abdominal ring, during the descent of the testis in the fœtus, being prolonged downward, around the surface of the cord and testis.

FAS'CIA IS'CHIO-REC'TAL, A'nal Fascia. A thin membrane covering the perineal aspect of the levator ani muscle, with which the obturator fascia is continuous.

FAS'CIA LA'TA. A name given by anatomists to an aponeurosis, and to a muscle:—

FAS'CIA LA'TA APONEUROSIS, F. aponeurotica fem'oris, Vagi'na fem'oris, Cru'ral or Fem'oral Aponeurosis, is the most extensive in the body, and envelopes all the muscles of the thigh. Above, it is attached to the outer edge of the ilia; before, it arises from the crural arch by two distinct laminae, separated by the femoral vessels, and becoming confounded a little below the part where the great vena saphæna opens into the crural vein. Of these two laminae, the one is more anterior and thicker than the other, and may be considered as a prolongation of the aponeurosis of the external oblique; it is intimately united to Poupart's ligament. The other, which is thinner, is behind, and deeper seated, and, after its union with the former, proceeds to be inserted into the pubis. In attaching itself to the pectineal line, under the name of Hey's ligament, or Hey's fem'oral ligament, it helps to form Gim'bernati's ligament. Inferiorly, the fascia lata becomes confounded with the tendon of the triceps, and is attached to the external tuberosity of the tibia. The use of the fascia lata, like that of other aponeuroses, is to strengthen the action of muscles, &c.

FAS'CIA LA'TA MUS'CLE, Ten'sor vagi'næ fem'oris, Fascia'lis, Membrano'sus, Mus'culus aponeurosis seu fas'ciae latæ seu fem'oris membrano'sus, (F.) Ilio-aponeurosi-fémoral, Ilio-aponeuroti-fémoral (Ch.), Tenseur de l'aponevrose fémorale. A muscle, situate at the upper and outer part of the thigh. It arises, above, from the outer part of the anterior and superior spine of the ilium; and is inserted, below, between the two laminae of the fascia lata, which it stretches and raises when it contracts.

FAS'CIA LUMBO'RUM, Lum'bar Fascia. A fascia formed by the blending of the posterior layer of the vertebral aponeurosis of the transversalis with the aponeurosis of the Serratus posticus inferior and Latissimus dorsi muscles.

FAS'CIA, OBURA'TOR, see Pelvic aponeurosis—f. Palmar, Palmar aponeurosis—f. Pelvic, Internal, see Pelvic aponeurosis—f. Pelvic, Lateral, see Pelvic aponeurosis—f. Pelvic, Superior, see Pelvic aponeurosis—f. Perineal, see Perineal fascia—f. Plantar, Plantar aponeurosis.

FAS'CIA PRO'PRIA. A layer of areolar tissue derived from the sheath of the femoral vessels—or, according to some, from the cribriform fascia. It is one of the coverings of femoral hernia, and is generally pretty dense about the neck of the hernia; but thin or even wanting on its fundus.

FAS'CIA REC'TO-VES'ICAL. The visceral layer of the pelvic fascia, investing the prostate, bladder, and rectum.

FAS'CIA, SUBPERITONE'AL, Subperitone'al aponeuro'sis. A thin tendinous layer on the outer surface of the peritoneum.

FAS'CIA, SUPERFIC'IAL, F'ibro-are'olar Fascia. A fascia immediately beneath the integument over almost the entire surface of the body, facilitating the movement of the skin, connecting with the parts beneath, &c.

FAS'CIA SUPERFIC'IALIS ABDOM'INIS, Superfic'ial aponeuro'sis of the abdo'men and thigh, (F.) Aponeurose superficielle de l'abdomen et de la cuisse. A very thin aponeurosis, which covers the muscles and aponeuroses of the abdomen; passes before the crural arch, to which it adheres with some degree of force; sends a membranous sheath, which surrounds the spermatic cord, and is continuous with the dartos, which it assists in forming. The fascia superficialis presents, beneath the crural arch, very distinct fibres, whose direction is parallel to the fold of the thigh. It is applied over the fascia lata aponeurosis, and is attached, internally, to the ascending ramus of the ischium, near the root of the corpus cavernosum. Before the descent of the testicle from the abdomen, the fascia superficialis is very manifestly continuous with the Gubernaculum testis.

FAS'CIA, TEM'PORAL, Temporal aponeurosis.

FAS'CIA OF TENON. The tunica vaginalis bulbi or capsule of Bonnet, is blended with the sheaths and expansion of the straight muscles of the eye, and closely adherent to the sclerotica as far forwards as the corneal edge. The latter portion of this membrane has been called the fascia or membrane of Tenon. Between this fascia and the sclerotica is the space of Tenon. See Capsule of Bonnet.

FAS'CIA TFORMIS, T bandage—f. Tortilis, Tourniquet.

FAS'CIA TRANSVERSA' LIS, F. Cooperi. An aponeurosis, which separates the transversalis muscle from the peritoneum in the inguinal region. It arises above the posterior edge of the crural arch, where it seems to be continuous with the aponeurosis of the greater oblique muscle. Above, it is lost in the areolar tissue at the internal surface of the transversalis abdominis. Within, it is continuous with the outer edge of the tendon of the rectus muscle and Gimbernat's ligament; below, it is continuous with the aponeurosis of the greater oblique, and receives an expansion from the Fascia Iliaca. Towards its middle and a little above the crural arch, the fascia transversalis has the wide orifice of a canal, which is occupied, in the female, by the round ligament of the uterus; and in man, furnishes an expansion, that serves as a sheath to the spermatic vessels.

FASCIC'ULI INNOMINA'TI. Two large bundles of fibres in the interior of the medulla oblongata, behind the corpora olivaria, and more or less apparent between those bodies and the corpora restiformia. They ascend, and become apparent in the fourth ventricle, under the name Fascic'uli seu Processus teretes.

Fascic'ulus, Phacell'us, Pha'celus, Fas'cicle, (dim. of fascia, 'a band,') 'a small bundle,' Desmedion. In Anatomy, it is employed in this sense, as 'a fasciculus of fibres,' (F.) Fascicule, Faisceau ou Petit Faisceau, Troussseau. In Pharmacy, it means Manip'ulus, Cheirop'les, 'a handful.' Musa Brassavolus says,—as much as can be held in two fingers.

FASCIC'ULUS CUNEA'TUS, Reinforcement, Fasciculus of—f. of Reinforcement, see Reinforcement.

FASCIC'ULUS UNCINA'TUS seu UNCIFOR'MIS. A white bundle, seen on the lateral aspect of the cerebral hemispheres, passing across the bottom of the fissure of Sylvius, and connecting the anterior with the middle and posterior lobes. The fibres of this fasciculus expand at each extremity, and the superficial portions of them curve or hook sharply between the contiguous parts of the anterior and middle lobes, whence the epithet 'uncinatus.'

Fast'ing, (from Sax. fæstan,) Limo'sis expers protracta, Ine'dia, Nesti'a, Jeju'nium, (F.) Jéûne. Loss or want of appetite without any other apparent affection of the stomach; so that the system can sustain almost total abstinence for a long time without faintness. Some wonderful cases of this kind, Anorex'ia mirab'ilis, are on record. See Abstinence.

Fat, ([G.] fett, [Sax.] fat,) Pingue'do, Pim'elê, Pi'ar, Li'pê, Li'pos, Ste'ar, A'deps, Se'um, Se'bum, Cor'pus adipo'sum, Axun'gia, (F.) Graisse. A soft, white, animal substance; inodorous; insipid; oily; inflammable; easy to melt; spoiling in the air, and becoming rancid by union with oxygen; almost insoluble in alcohol; insoluble in water; soluble in fixed oils. Fat is formed of the immediate principles, stearin, margarin, and olein or elain, all of which are regarded as salts composed of stearic, margarin, and oleic acids, and a common base, to which, from its sweetish taste, the name Glyc'er'in, Glyc'erine, Glyceri'na, Glyc'erinum, (F.) Glycérine has been given. To these are, almost always, joined an odorous and a coloring principle.

Fat is found in a number of animal tissues, and is very abundant in the neighborhood of the kidneys and in the epiploon. It is generally fluid in the cetacea; soft, and of a strong smell in the carnivora; solid, and inodorous in the ruminating animal; white, and abundant in young animals; and yellowish in old. It generally forms about a twentieth part of the weight of the human body. The fat, considered physiologically, has, for its function, to protect the organs, maintain their temperature, and to serve for nutrition in case of need; as is observed in torpid animals.

GLYCERIN, Glyceri'na, was introduced into the edition of the Pharmacopœia of the U. S. (1851), in which it was directed to be prepared as follows:—Lead plaster, recently prepared and yet fluid, and boiling water, of each a gallon; mix; stir briskly for 15 minutes; allow it to cool, and pour off the liquid. Evaporate until it has the s. g. 1.15, and pass slowly through it a current of sulphohydric acid until a black precipitate is no longer thrown down. Filter and boil until the sulphohydric acid is driven off, and evaporate the liquid until it ceases to lose weight.

Glycerin is a colorless or straw-colored syrupy fluid; s. g. 1.25. It has also received the names Glyc'eric Al'cohol, Hy'drate of Glyc'eryl, Glycyl or Pro'penyl. It is soluble in water and in alcohol, but not in ether. It is used in the form of lotion, composed of half an ounce to ten fluid-ounces of water, in cutaneous diseases, as psoriasis, pityriasis, lepra, and ichthyosis. It keeps the part moist, as it does not evaporate readily. A Glycerin ointment may be made of Spermaceti, 3 ss., White wax, 3i., Oil of almonds, f3ij., Glycerin, f3j. Melt the spermaceti and wax with the oil, and incorporate the glycerin in a mortar. It may be used wherever a mild ointment is demanded. Solutions of other substances in glycerin have been variously styled glyc'erolés, glyc'erines, glyc'erates, glyc'erites, glycera'ta, glyceri'na, (F.) glycerolés, glycerés. The last edition of the U. S. Ph. (1873) adopts the term glycerita, glycerites. Its solvent powers are remarkable, a very large number of dissimilar substances being soluble in it. It is thus a valuable excipient for medicines. With iodine, it forms iodized glycerin (see Iodine). Internally, glycerin is alterative and nutritive, and has sometimes been prescribed as a substitute for cod-liver oil.

FAT, Corpulent—f. Cells, Fatty vesicles.

FAT, MACKAW', see Cocos butyracea.

Fatiga'tio, (fatigare, fatigatum, 'to fatigue,') Copos.

Fatigue', Copos.

Fat'ty, (Sax. fæt; past participle of feban, 'to nourish,') Adipo'sus, Adipa'tus, Pimell'icus, Pimelo'des, Liparo'des, Lip'arus, Piel'ros, Ad'i-pose, Ad'ipous, Pin'guid, Pingued'inous. Relating to fat. Resembling or containing fat. The cellular membrane has been called fatty or ad'ipous; from an opinion that, in its areolæ, the fat is deposited. The areolar membrane, however, merely lodges, between its lamellæ and filaments, the vesicles in which the fat is contained.

FAT'TY DEGENERATION, see Degeneration and Lardaceous—f. d. of the Liver, Adiposis hepatica—f. Heart, Steatosis cordis.

FAT'TY INFILTRATION. An infiltration of the tissues with fat deposited in them from the blood. It is only a deposit, and is not therefore synonymous with fatty degeneration.

FAT'TY KID'NEY, Kidney, Bright's disease of.

FAT'TY LIG'AMENT, Ad'ipous lig'ament. This name has been given to a reflection of the synovial membrane of the knee joint, which passes from the ligamentum patellæ towards the cavity that separates the condyles of the femur.

FAT'TY LIV'ER, Adiposis hepatica.

FAT'TY MEMBRANE, Ad'ipous mem'brane, Adipous tis'sue. The subcutaneous areolar tissue, or that containing the fatty or adipose vesicles.

FAT'TY METAMORPHOSIS, see Degeneration.

FAT'TY VESICLES, Sac'culi adipo'si, Ad'ipous ves'icles, Fat cells. This name is given to small bursæ or membranous vesicles which enclose the fat, and are found situate in the areolæ of the areolar tissue. These vesicles vary much in size. Generally, they are round and globular; and, in certain subjects, receive vessels which are very apparent. They form so many small sacs without apertures, in the interior of which are filaments arranged like septa. In fatty subjects, the adipous vesicles are very perceptible, being attached to the areolar tissue and neighboring parts by a vascular pedicle. Raspail affirms that there is the most striking analogy between the nature of adipose granules and of amylaceous grains.

FAT'TY VES'ELS, Ad'ipous ves'sels. The vessels connected with the fat. Some anatomists have called Adipous canals, (F.) Conduits adipeux, the vessels to which they attribute the secretion of fat.

Fatuisme, Fatuitas.

Fatu'itas, Moro'sis, Stultit'ia, Stu'por men'tis, Ament'ia, (F.) Fatuisme, Fatuité, (from fatuus, 'foolish,') Mental imbecility. Idiotism. Dementia. One affected with fatuity is said to be fat'uous, (Sc.) Dawpit.

Feb'rua, (februus, 'I purge.') In ancient mythology, a goddess who presided over menstruation.

Febure's Rem'edy for Can'cer. This preparation, for external use, consisted of arsenious acid, gr. x., dissolved in distilled water, Oj., to which were added extract of conium, ℥j., solution of subacetate of lead, ℥ij., and tincture of opium, ℥j. Internally, he gave a tablespoonful night and morning, with ℥ss. of syrup of poppies, of a mixture containing arsenious acid, gr. ij., rhubarb, ℥ss., syrup of chicory, q. s., distilled water, Oj.

Fe'cal, Stercoraceous — f. Matter, see Fæces.

Fèces, Fæces.

Fécondation, Fecundation.

Fécondité, Fecundity.

Fec'ula, Fé'cula, (dim. of feces.) An immediate principle of vegetables, composed of hydrogen, oxygen, and carbon. It exists in several plants, and has different names, according to that which furnishes it. (F.) Fécule, Amygdol. When extracted from wheat or barley, it is called Starch, Am- ylum. When from Cycas circinalis, Sa'go;—from Orchis morio, Salep. We say, also, Fecula of the Potato, Bryony, Arum, Manioc, &c.

FEC'ULA GREEN. This name is given to a green, solid matter, of variable character, which is believed to be resinous, and which renders turbid several kinds of juices extracted from vegetables. It is also called Chlo'rophyll.

Fécule, Fecula.

Feculence, Fæculen'tia, Fæcos'itas, Fæx, (plural Fæces;) Len'ma, Lee, Depos'it, Dregs. In Pharmacy, feculent, albuminous, or other substances, which are deposited from turbid fluids.

Feculent, Fæculen'tus, Hypot'rygus, Trygo'des.
'Foul, dreggy, excrementitious;' as a feculent fluid, feculent evacuations, &c.

Fec'und, Fecun'dus, Fæcun'dus, (F.) Fécond.
Fruitful, prolific.

Fecunda'tion, Fæcunda'tio, Impregna'tion, Impregna'tio, Ingravida'tio, Præгна'tio, Gravida' tio, Præгна'tus, Fructifica'tio, Cye'sis, Encye'sis, Encymo'sia, Procrea'tion, (F.) Fœcondation. The act by which, in organized beings, the material furnished by the generative organs of the female unites with that prepared by those of the male, so that a new being results.

Fecun'dity, Eutoc'ia, Polygon'ia, Polytoc'ia, Fæcun'ditas, Productiv'itas, (F.) Fécondité. The faculty of reproduction, possessed by organized bodies.

It has been estimated that, throughout a country, taking one marriage with another, not more than 4 children are the result; and in towns only 35 children in 10 marriages. Fecundity has been used to signify the capability to bear children; fertility, the amount of births.

Fee, Pyschorages, Sostrum.

Feeble, ([F.] Faible, 'weak,') Infirm.

Feet, Burning of the. A singular cachectic disease, described by Mr. Malcolmson as occurring in India, the prominent symptom of which was a sense of burning in the feet.

Fégarite, Cancer aquaticus, Stomatitis, pseudo-membranous.

Feign'd Diseases, Mor'bi dissimula'ti seu simula'ti seu cela'ti seu infitia'ti seu pseudo'lei. Sim'ulated or Pretend'ed diseases, (F.) Maladies dissimulées ou simulées ou feintes ou supposées. The tricks employed by impostors to induce a belief that they are attacked with diseases when they are not. These are generally assumed by beggars to obtain alms; by criminals to escape punishment; and by soldiers to be exempt from duty, or to be discharged from the service.

The following table exhibits the chief feigned, pretended, simulated, or excited diseases, or disqualifications, with the means of detection :

DISEASES, &c.	HOW FEIGNED.	HOW DETECTED.
ABORTION.	{ By staining the clothes and body with } { borrowed blood. }
ABSTINENCE.	By constant and minute attention.
AMAUROTIC BLINDNESS.	{ By applying the extract of belladonna or } { datura stramonium to the eye. }	{ Amaurosis is characterized by dilated pupil. Where these substances have been applied, the effects will go off in ten days or a fortnight. }
APHONIA.	{ }	{ By anaesthetics, and, under their use, or otherwise, taking the person off his guard. }
APOPLEXY.	{ By falling down as if deprived of sensation } { and consciousness. }	{ By powerful stimulants; an electric shock; application of hot water, sternutatories, actual cautery, &c. }
CACHEXIA, ANÆMIA, AND DEBILITY.	{ Using substances to make the face appear } { pale and livid. Indulging freely in wine, and privation of sleep prior to examination. }	{ By examining if the pulse be strong, and the skin hot, and whether there be loss of appetite or of strength, or swelling of the limbs, or unmistakable feeble- ness of the vital actions. }

DISEASES, &c.	HOW FEIGNED.	HOW DETECTED.
CALCULI, EXCRETION OF.	Putting sand, pebbles, &c., into the urine.	By the aid of chemistry. We are acquainted with the chemical composition of urinary calculi.
CANCEROUS ULCER.	By gluing on a portion of a spleen with the smooth side to the skin, leaving on the outside the appearance of an ulcerated surface.	By noticing whether there be signs of cachexia, and by attentive examination of the part.
CATALEPSY.	By seeming to be suddenly motionless, the joints remaining flexible, and external objects making no impression.	By powerful stimulants, as recommended under apoplexy. Letting fall a drop of boiling water on the back. Proposing to use the actual cautery, and seeing whether the pulse rises.
CHOREA.	By assuming the convulsive motions of a part which characterize chorea.	By examining the patient while he may imagine himself unobserved, and seeing whether the convulsive motions go on. By anæsthetics, as under Aphonia.
CONTRACTION OF JOINTS IN GENERAL.	Mode of discrimination sometimes so obscure as to deceive the most practiced and attentive. By anæsthetics, as under Aphonia.
CONTRACTION OF THE FINGERS.	Introduce a cord between the fingers and the palm of the hand, and gradually apply weights so as to expand the fingers. Confine him so that he cannot obtain his food without using his clenched hand. By anæsthetics, as under Aphonia.
CONVULSIONS.	When feigned, they do not present the rigidity of muscles or the rapidity of action which characterize the real. The mode of detection must be the same as in epilepsy.
CORNEA, OPAQUE.	Produced by the application of a strong acid, by acrid powders, as quicklime, &c.	The existence of the opacity can be detected by attentive observation.
CUTANEOUS DISEASES.	Some articles of diet will bring on urticaria or nettlerash, in particular individuals, as shellfish, bitter almonds, &c. By acrids, acids, or any irritants applied to the surface. An ointment of tartarized antimony causes a painful pustular eruption. See Porri, in this list.	By careful watching and examination on the part of practitioner and nurse.
DEAFDUMBNESS.	The really deaf and dumb acquire an expression of countenance and gestures which it is difficult to assume. By anæsthetics, as under Aphonia.
DEAFNESS.	It may be assumed or excited by putting a pea in the ear, or by inserting irritants, so as to induce inflammation and temporary loss of function.	Make a noise when not expected, and see if the countenance varies or pulse rises. Put to sleep by opium, and then fire a pistol close to the ear, when he may be thrown off his guard. Examine the ear to see if any trick has been played there. By anæsthetics, as under Aphonia.
DEATH.	Some persons possess the power of suspending or moderating the action of the heart.	If suspected, the plan recommended under Apoplexy will be found most efficacious.
DEBILITY, see Cachexia.	Examine the part and its articulation naked, and compare it with the opposite.
DEFORMITY.	Real delirium is accompanied by bodily disease; with general wandering and incoherency. The feigned is more confined to special subjects.
DELIRIUM.	Can only be positively detected by examination per vaginam . Soon after delivery, the vagina will be relaxed and the lochial discharge be flowing in greater abundance, the shorter the time that may have elapsed since delivery.
DELIVERY.	After enlargement produced artificially, a subsidence of the tumefaction; the parts being moistened by borrowed blood, and the child of another substituted as the female's own.	When diarrhoea is feigned by the lower classes, inspect the linen; if clean, the bowels are probably not much out of order. Let every individual have a close stool of his own; and inspect the evacuations, taking care that one suffering under the disease does not lend his evacuations to another.
DIARRHOEA.	Said to have been caused by a mixture of vinegar and burnt cork. May be occasioned by the use of any of the purgative roots, &c.	Can be detected by attentive examination. There will be a want of that leucophlegmatic habit which accompanies and characterizes dropsy.
DROPSY.	May be feigned, like pregnancy, by wearing pads. The anasarcons condition of the lower limbs has been caused by applying a ligature round them. By inflating the cellular membrane of the abdomen.	Same rules as under Diarrhoea.
DYSENTERY.	May be feigned, like diarrhoea, by adding a little blood to the evacuations, or by introducing a soap, or some more irritating, suppository.

DISEASES, &c.	HOW FEIGNED.	HOW DETECTED.
EPILEPSY.	The foaming of the mouth has been produced by keeping a piece of soap in it.	Sensation in epilepsy is totally abolished. If any remain, disease probably feigned. Incontractility of pupil, which occurs in epilepsy, cannot be feigned. Same means to be used as in feigned apoplexy.
FEVER.	By various stimulants, as wine, brandy, pepper; swallowing a small quantity of tobacco, or introducing it into the anus. Flour or chalk used to whiten the tongue. Redness of skin, caused by friction with a hard brush.	This deceit is generally developed by an examination of a day or two. Where flour or chalk has been used to whiten the tongue, the line of demarcation between the whitened part and the clean, healthy margin of the tongue, is too well marked to escape observation.
FISTULA IN ANO.	By making an incision near the verge of the anus, and introducing into it an acrid tent, such as the root of white hel-lebore .	By careful examination.
FRACTURES.	There is generally nothing but the man's own testimony. He complains of pain in the part; if fracture of the skull be feigned, he states, perhaps, that he becomes deranged on tasting liquor.	By attentive examination.
HÆMATEMESIS.	By drinking the blood of some animal, or using some colored liquid, and then throwing it up.	By cutting off the supply of the fluid and careful examination.
HÆMOPTYSIS.	By secreting bullock's blood for the purpose of coloring the saliva; making small incisions in the mouth; using bole armeniac or paint of vermilion.	Blood from the lungs is frothy and light-colored. Mouth and fauces must be carefully inspected, and the individual be observed.
HÆMORRHOIDS.	By introducing bladders of rats or of small fish partly into the rectum. The linen has also been stained with borrowed blood.	The means are obvious.
HEART, DISEASES OF, see Palpitation.
HEPATITIS.		Unless the person be a well educated impostor, acute inflammation of the liver will be detected by the absence of marks of strong inflammatory action. Chronic liver disease is, frequently, not characterized by well-marked symptoms, and hence, when assumed, is difficult of detection.
HERNIA.	In the same manner as hydrocele;—by inflation.	The detection is easy.
HYDROCELE.	By puncturing the skin of the scrotum, and inflating the cellular membrane.	Do.
HYDROCEPHALUS.	By opening the integuments of the head near the vertex, e. g. and blowing in air.	Do.
HYSTERIA.		Does not easily resist the application of strong sternutatories to the nostrils. Attentive examination necessary.
INSANITY.		The expression of countenance cannot easily be feigned. Nor can the affection be kept up so long as in real mental alienation. The individual cannot do so long without food, sleep, &c.
JAUNDICE.	By coloring the skin with an infusion of turmeric or tincture of rhubarb. Clay-colored stools produced by taking daily a small quantity of muriatic acid. High-colored urine by rhubarb taken internally.	The eyes cannot be colored, although smoke has been used for this purpose. The skin must be washed to remove the coloring matter, if any exist, and the supply of acid and rhubarb be prevented.
LAMENESS.	By keeping the limb in a contracted state, and resisting any efforts to move it.	By two persons taking hold of the individual and moving rapidly along with him; and when they are tired having relays. The impostor will generally give in. By anæsthetics, as under Aphonia.
MENSTRUATION.	By staining the clothes and body with borrowed blood.	By cutting off the supply.
MYOPIA.		Present an open book, and apply the leaves close to the nose. If it cannot be read distinctly, when thus placed, or when glasses proper for short-sightedness are used, the disease is feigned.
OPHTHALMIA.	Excited by a variety of acrid and corrosive substances applied to the eye; as lime, &c. A portion of black muslin, spread over the cornea. The eyelashes are sometimes extracted, and caustic applied to excite disease in the palpebræ.	When ophthalmia is thus excited, its progress is ordinarily very rapid, arriving at its height within a few hours.
OZENA.	By impregnating a piece of sponge with some offensive juices or oils, mixed with decayed cheese, and putting the imbued sponge into the nostrils.

DISEASES, &c.	HOW FEIGNED.	HOW DETECTED.
PAINS.		The detection is here often difficult. The non-existence of pain cannot be proved, and great pain may be present without any appearance externally. The imposition is more frequently detected by inconsistencies and contradictions in the patient's history of the case, than in any other manner.
PALPITATION.	White hellebore, given in the dose of 10 or 12 grains, and repeated, will occasion general indisposition, and undue action of the heart.	Cut off the supply.
SHAKING PALSY.		May be suspected, if the person be in an ordinary state of vigor. Use violent remedies and means, recommended under Chorea.
PARALYSIS.		Violent remedies are here required. Cold affusion, actual cautery, electric shocks, &c. By anæsthetics, as under Aphonia.
PHTHISIS PULMONALIS.	Individuals with long necks and contracted shoulders have simulated phthisis, by covering the chest with blisters, cicatrices of issues, &c., and by taking drugs which cause paleness.	By attentive examination of the symptoms.
POLYPUS NASI.	By introducing the testicle of a young cock, or the kidney of a rabbit, into the nostril, and retaining it there by means of a sponge fastened to it.
PORRIGO OR SCALDED HEAD.	By applying nitric acid to the head, after protecting the face with fatty substances; but the chronic state is imitated by the use of depilatories of different kinds applied sometimes in patches, so as to resemble Porrigo decalvans .
PREGNANCY.	By wearing pads, and assuming the longing after particular articles of diet, &c.	By the absence of the areola; the presence of a pad; and, if necessary, by examination per vaginam .
PROLAPSUS ANI.	By a portion of the intestine of the ox, in which a sponge filled with a mixture of blood and milk is placed.
PROLAPSUS UTERI.	By a similar fraud.
PULSE, WEAKNESS OR DEFECT OF.	By ligatures applied to the corresponding arm. Slowness of pulse may be caused by the use of Veratrum viride .	By examining whether the arteries of the two arms beat alike; and if a ligature be placed on the arm.
RHEUMATISM, CHRONIC.	By complaining of great suffering on moving the limbs, and of pain and stiffness of the joints.	By careful observation, and the use of anæsthetics, as under Aphonia. It is frequently feigned, and not easy of detection. See Pains.
SCROFULA.	By exciting ulcers below the angles of the jaw.	By examining the general habit, and observing whether the ulcerations be glandular, and the discharge of a scrofulous character.
SCURVY.	By covering the teeth with wax, and then applying acid corrosive substances to the gums.	By examining the general habit; whether debilitated, cachectic, and possessing the usual general signs of scorbutus.
STAMMERING.		Simulators of this defect generally state that it is connate, or ascribe it to a fit of apoplexy or severe fever. Where the organs of speech were perfect, and the moral evidence of the previous existence of the infirmity was not satisfactory, the French authorities used to confine the soldiers, and not supply them with food until they called for it without stammering.
STRABISMUS.		If the person be roused suddenly from sleep, the eyes will be right, as they also are during sleep. Under anæsthetics they would be so likewise.
STRICTURE OF THE URETHRA.		By passing a bougie.
SWELLING OF THE LEGS.	By ligatures round the thighs.	Examine the limbs uncovered.
SYNCOPE.	Ligatures are sometimes used to prevent the pulse being felt. By applying lotions to the face to make it pale.	By using sternutatories. By the absence of some of the symptoms of syncope. Examine the naked arms. Wash the face.
TUBERCULOSIS, see Phthisis.
TYMPANY.	Persons have possessed the power of swallowing air, so as to distend the stomach, and simulate tympany.
ULCER OF THE EAR.	By introducing a tent, imbued with blistering plaster, into the ear, and repeating the application until the tube becomes ulcerated, and a discharge of puriform matter is established. The fetid smell is imitated by dropping into the ear a	By careful examination.

DISEASES, &c.	HOW FEIGNED.	HOW DETECTED.
ULCER OF THE EAR (continued).	{ mixture of empyreumatic oil, asafoetida, and old cheese. Also, by introducing a little honey into the meatus. }
ULCERS OF THE LEGS, &c.	{ By corrosives or irritants. Sometimes by abrasion, by rubbing sand on the shin- bone. At others they are pretended, by gluing on a piece of spleen or the skin of a frog. }	{ Artificial ulcers have, usually, a more dis- tinct margin, and are more readily healed than others; the latter being generally indicative of an impaired con- stitution. }
URINE, BLOODY.	{ The fruit of the Indian fig (Cactus opun- tia) colors the urine as red as blood. Cantharides will cause it. Blood may also be procured and mixed with the urine. }	{ By making the patient pass his urine in the presence of the physician, and ex- amining the vessel before and after. By cutting off the supply of any substance which could cause the appearance. }
URINE, INCONTINENCE OF.	{ }	{ Difficult, at times, of detection. Give the person a full dose of opium, and intro- duce the catheter when he is asleep. If there be urine, the incontinence is feigned. }
VARICOSE VEINS.	{ By a ligature placed tightly round the limb. They may be excited in this manner, or aggravated if already exist- ing. }	{ By examining the limb. }

Fel, gen. Fell'is, Bile—f. Anguillæ, see Bile—f. Bovinum, Bile of the ox—f. Bovinum purificatum, see Bile of the ox—f. Bovis, see Bile—f. Naturæ, Aloes—f. Tauri, see Bile—f. Terræ, Ludus Helmontii—f. Ursi, see Bile—f. Vitri, see Vitrum.

Feldscheeren, ('army barbers,') see Bathers.
Fell's Caus'tic Paste, see Pasta zinci chloridi.

Fell'eus, Biliary, Bilious.

Fellid'ucus, (fel, and ducere, 'to lead,') Cholagogue.

Fellin'eus, (from fel,) Bilious.

Fell'is Obstruc'tio, ('obstruction of bile,') Icterus—f. Suffusio, Icterus—f. Superfusio, Icterus.

Fel'on, 'a great criminal,' (from Sax. ællan, 'to offend,') Paronychia.

Felt'ing, (Sax. felt, 'cloth or stuff made without weaving,') Tangling. A term applied to the hair when inextricably interlaced, as occurs occasionally in women from inattention.

Fêlure de Glaser, 'fissure of Glaser,' (Old [F.] feslure; from [L.] findere, fissum, 'to split' [?]), Fissure, glenoid.

Fel'wort, Gentiana lutea.

Fem'ale, Fem'ina, Fem'ina, Femell'a, Gyn'æ, (F.) Femelle, (dim. of femme, 'woman,') In animals, the one that engenders and bears the young. It is also used adjectively; as, the Fem'ale Sex, &c.

Fem'ale Parts, Vulva.

Femell'a, Female.

Femelle, (from femme,) Female.

Fem'en, gen. Fem'inis, Thigh (inner part), Vulva.

Fem'ina, Female.

Fem'inal, Pubes.

Femines'cence, Fæminescen'tia, (fæmina, 'a female,') The possession or assumption of certain male characteristics by the female.

Femme, Woman—f. en Couche, Puerpera.

Fem'oral, Femora'lis, (femur, gen. femoris, 'the thigh,') Belonging or relating to the thigh; as Femoral artery, Femoral hernia, &c. See Crural.

Femora'lis, Femoral, Triceps cruris.

Femore'us, (from femur,) see Triceps cruris.

Femoro-Calcanien Petit, Plantar muscle—f. Popliteal, great, Sciatic nerve, great—f. Popliti-tibial, Popliteous muscle.

Femorotib'ial, Femorotibia'lis. Belonging to the femur and tibia. The Femorotibial articulation is the knee-joint.

Fem'ur, gen. Fem'oris, Me'rus, Me'rium. The thigh. Also, the thighbone, Os fem'oris, (F.) L'os de la Cuisse. The strongest and longest of all the bones of the body, extending from the pelvis to the tibia, and forming the solid part of the thigh. The femur is cylindrical, slightly curved anteriorly, unsymmetrical and oblique downward and inwards. The body of the bone is prismatic, and has, behind, a prominent ridge, the lin'ea as'pera.

PROCESSES.	Upper or Pelvic Extremity.	Head supported on a column or neck.
		Great trochanter.
		Lesser trochanter.
	Inferior or Tibial Extremity.	External condyle.
		Internal condyle.
		External tuberosity.
		Internal tuberosity.

The femur ossifies from five points:—one on each process of the pelvic extremity; one in the body of the bone; and two on the condyles. It is articulated with the pelvis, tibia, and patella. See Thigh.

Femur, Col du, Collum femoris—f. Movementum septimus, Iliacus internus—f. Movementum sextus, Psoas magnus—f. Summum, Vulva.

Fenes'tra, 'a window,' (akin to φανω, 'I show,') (F.) Fenêtré. Anatomists have given this name to two apertures, situate in the inner paries of the cavity of the tympanum. The one of these is the Fenes'tra ova'lis seu vestibula'ris, Fora'men ova'lè. It is oval-shaped; situate at the base of the stapes, and corresponds with the cavity of the vestibule. The other is the Fenes'tra rotun'da seu cochlea'ris seu triq'uetra, Fora'men rotun'dum. It is closed by a fine, transparent membrane, called Membra'na Tym'pani secunda'ria, Tym'panum mi'nus seu secunda'rium, Membra'na fenes'træ rotun'dæ, and corresponds to the inner scala of the cochlea. The term fenestra is also applied to the open space in the blades of a forceps.

FENES'TRA OC'ULI, Pupil—f. Ovalis, see Fenestra—f. Rotunda, see Fenestra.

Fenes'tral, Fen'estrated, Fenestra'tus, (from fenestra,) (F.) Fenêtré, Fenestré. Bandages, compresses, or plasters with small perforations or openings, are so called. The openings prevent the detention of the discharge.

Fen'estrated, Fenestral—f. Membrane, see Artery.

Fenestra'tus, Fenestral.

Fenestré, Fenestral.

Fenêtré, Fenestral.

Fen'nel, (Sax. fenol.) Anethum—f. Dogs', Anthemis cotula—f. Flower, Nigella—f. Hogs', Peucedanum—f. Sweet, Anethum—f. Water, Aqua foeniculi.

Fenouil, Anethum—f. d'Eau, Phellandrium aquaticum—f. Marin, Crithmum maritimum—f. de Porc, Peucedanum—f. Puant, Anethum graveolens.

Fente, (from fendre, [L.] findere, 'to split.') Fissure—f. Capillaire, see Pilatio—f. Glénoidale, Fissure, glenoid—f. Orbitaire, Orbital fissure—f. Orbitaire inférieure, Spheno-maxillary fissure—f. Sphénoidale, Sphenoidal fissure—f. Sphéno-maxillaire, Spheno-maxillary fissure.

Fénugrec, (fœnum Græcum, 'Greek hay,') Trigonella fœnum.

Fen'ugreek, Trigonella fœnum.

Fer, Ferrum—f. Acétate de, Ferri acetate—f. Bromure de, see Bromine—f. Carbonate de, Ferri protocarbonas—f. Carbure de, Graphites—f. Chaud, Pyrosis—f. Citrate de, Ammoniacal, Ferri ammoniocitras—f. Hydrate, peroxide de, Ferrum oxidum hydratum—f. Hydrate de, tritoxide de, Ætites—f. Hydriodate de, see Ferri iodidum—f. Iodure de, Ferri iodidum, see Iodine—f. Lactate de, Ferri lactas—f. Limaille de, Ferri limatura—f. Oxide hydrate de, Ferrum oxydatum hydratum—f. Oxide noir de, Æthiops martialis—f. Oxyde rouge de, Colcothar—f. Perchlorure de, Ferri chloridum—f. Peroxide de, Ferri subcarbonas—f. Persulfate de, see Ferri sulphas—f. Porphyrisée, Ferri pulvis—f. et de Potasse, tartrate de, Ferrum tartarizatum—f. et de Potassium, cyanure de, Potassii ferrocyanuretum—f. et de Potassium, protocyanure de, Potassii ferrocyanuretum—f. Réduit par l'hydrogène, Ferri pulvis—f. Rouge, Pyrosis—f. Sulfate de, Ferri sulphas—f. Sulfure de, Ferri sulphuretum—f. Tannate de, Ferri tannas—f. Trichlorure de, Ferri chloridum—f. Valérienate de, Ferri valerianas.

Fera'lis Pedic'ulus, see Pediculus.

Fer'rine, Fer'rus, ('savage, brutal,' from fera, 'a wild beast,') Therio'des. A term, applied to any malignant or noxious disease. In France it is used only when joined to Toux; Toux férine, a dry, obstinate, and painful cough.

Fer'ment, Fermen'tum, (quasi fervimentum, from ferveo, 'I boil, I am hot,') Zy'ma, Zymo'ma, Lev'en, (F.) Lévain. The Iatrochymists applied this name to imaginary substances, Fermen'ta mor'bi, to which they attributed the power of producing disease, by exciting a fermentation in the humors.

Fermenta'tion, Fermenta'tio, Zymo'sis, Æstua'tio, Caus'is, Bras'mos. An intestinal movement, occurring spontaneously in a liquid; whence result certain substances, that did not previously exist in it.

The chemical physicians attributed all diseases to an imaginary fermentation of the humors.

FERMENTA'TION, PUTREFAC'TIVE, Putrefaction.

FERMENTA'TION THE'ORY OF DISEASE, Zymotic The'ory. A theory of causation of zymotic diseases, which supposes that a particle of poison in the atmosphere, or derived from an affected person, acts as a ferment to textural waste products lingering in the body of a healthy but predisposed person.

Fermento'leum Sola'ni, Oil, fusel.

Fermen'tum, Yest—f. Cerevisiæ, Yest—f. Morbi, Ferment—f. Ventriculi, Gastric juice.

Fern Bush, (reapn.) Comptonia asplenifolia—f. Cinnamon, Osmunda cinnamomea—f. Eagle, Pteris aquilina—f. Female, Asplenium filix fœmina, Pteris aquilina—f. Flowering, Osmunda regalis—f. Gale, Comptonia asplenifolia—f. Male, Polypodium filix mas—f. Meadow, Comptonia asplenifolia—f. Rock, Adiantum pedatum

—f. Sweet, Adiantum pedatum, Comptonia asplenifolia—f. Sweet, shrubby, Comptonia asplenifolia.

Fernambu'co Wood, Cæsalpinia echinata.

Fern'freckled, Ephelides.

Fern'itickles, Ephelides.

Fern'root, Polypodium vulgare.

Fero'nia Elephan'tum, (from the goddess Feronia.) A tree of India, Order Aurantiaceæ, which yields a gum closely resembling Gum Arabic. Dr. Pereira thinks it not improbable, that a part of the East India gum taken to England may be the produce of this tree. The leaves are aromatic, of an odor resembling anise, and are used as a carminative.

FERO'NIA PELLU'CIDA, Covolam.

Ferramen'tum, Side'rion, Instrumen'tum fer'reum, (from ferrum.) Any surgical instrument made of iron. By the vulgar, in France, the word ferrements means the instruments used in difficult labors.

Ferra'ria, Scrophularia aquatica.

Ferra'ted, Chalybeate.

Ferra'tus, (from ferrum.) Chalybeate.

Ferrein', Canal' of, Ductus Ferrei'ni. A triangular channel, which Ferrein supposed to result from the approximation of the free edges of the eyelids applied to the globe of the eye; and which he considered adapted for directing the tears towards the puncta lacrymalia, during sleep. The canal is, probably, imaginary.

The same name is likewise given to the cortical canals,—the first portions of the uriniferous ducts, while still in the cortical substance of the kidney.

FERREIN', PYR'AMIDS OF, Pyram'ides Ferrei'ni. Each of the papillæ of the kidney, according to Ferrein, consists of at least 700 subordinate cones or pyramids. To these last the names Pyram'ides of Ferrein, Pyram'ides renales Ferrei'ni, Fasciculi pyramida'les, Fasciculi corticales, Lobuli renalis, have been given, in contradistinction to the Pyramids of Malpighi.

FERREIN', TUBES OF. See Uriniferous tubes.

Fer'ri Ace'tas, Extrac'tum martis aceticum, Aceticum martiale, Ac'etate of Iron, Fer'ric Ac'etate, Pron Liq'uor, (F.) Acétate de fer. A preparation of the Dublin Pharmacopœia, made by digesting 1 part of carbonate of iron in 6 parts of acetic acid for three days, and filtering. Dose, as a tonic and astringent, ℥v. to ℥xx., in water.

FER'RI ÆRU'GO, F. subcarbonas.

FER'RI ET ALU'MINÆ SUL'PHAS, Sul'phate of Pron and Alumina, is made by treating bicarbonated solution of soft iron and carbonated solution of pure washed alumina, with sulphuric acid. It has been recommended as a valuable astringent. Dose, from five to ten grains.

FER'RI ET AMMO'NII CI'TRAS, Ferri ammoniocitras.

FER'RI ET AMMO'NIE MU'RIAS, Ferrum ammoniatum.

FER'RI ET AMMO'NIE SUL'PHAS, Fer'ri et Ammonii Sul'phas (Ph. U. S., 1873), Sul'phate of Pron and Ammonia, Sul'phate of Iron and Ammonium, Ammonio-fer'ric alum. (Liq. ferri tersulphat., Oij.; Ammon. sulph., ℥ivss. Add the sulphate of ammonia to the solution boiling hot; stir until it is dissolved, and crystallize. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

FER'RI ET AMMO'NIE TAR'TRAS, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) F. et Ammonii Tartras, F. Ammonio-tartras, Tartrate of Ammonia and Pron, T. of Ammonium and Iron, is formed by dissolving hydrated oxide of iron in a solution of bitartrate of ammonium; evaporating, and drying to form scales. Dose, iv. to x. grains.

FER'RI AMMO'NIOCHLO'RIDUM, Ferrum ammoniatum.

FER'RI AMMO'NIOCI'TRAS, Fer'ri et Ammonii

Citras (Ph. U. S., 1873), Ammonie ferrocitras, Fer'rum ammoniacocitricum, Ammoniocitrate of iron, Citrate of ammonia and iron, Citrate of Iron and Ammonium, (F.) Citrate de Fer Ammoniacal. (Prepared by adding ammonia to citrate of iron, so as to neutralize the excess of acid.) In the Ph. U. S., 1873, Fer'ri et Ammonie Citras, Citrate of Iron and Ammonia, is prepared by evaporating to the consistence of syrup, and drying on plates of glass a mixture of the official Liquor Ferri Citratis, Oj., and Liquor Ammonie, ℥vj. Dose, gr. v. to gr. viij.

A POTASSIOCITRATE and a SODIUMCITRATE OF IRON have also been introduced; and a CITRATE OF THE MAGNETIC OXIDE OF IRON prepared by combining the magnetic oxide with citric acid.

FER'RI AMMONIOTARTRAS, Fer'ri et Ammonii Tart'ras (Ph. U. S., 1873), Ammoniotart'rate of Iron, Tart'rate of Iron and Ammonia, T. of I. and Ammonium. The Ph. U. S., 1873, directs that it shall be prepared by the action of tartaric acid, solution of tersulphate of iron, carbonate of ammonia, and distilled water, tartrate of ammonia being first prepared, which is converted into bitartrate by the addition of tartaric acid, the excess of acid being combined with hydrated sesquioxide of iron freshly prepared from the solution of the tersulphate. It is very soluble. The dose is five grains or more in pill or solution.

FER'RI ARSENIAS, Arseniate of iron—f. Borusias, Prussian blue.

FER'RI BROMIDUM, Fer'rum Bromatum, Bromide of Iron, Fer'rous Bromide, (F.) Bromure de Fer; in solution, Hydrobromate of Iron, Fer'ri Hydrobromas, Fer'rum Hydrobromicum Oxysat'um. A tonic and alterative, with the peculiar therapeutical qualities of the bromides. Dose, gr. i-ij.

FER'RI CARBO'NAS, F. subcarbonas.

FER'RI CARBO'NAS EFFERVES'CENTS, Efferves'cing Carbonate of Iron. The carbonate of iron prepared with tartaric acid, bicarbonate of soda, sulphate of iron, powdered sugar, and citric acid.

FER'RI CARBO'NAS SACCHARATUM, see F. protocarbonas—f. Carbonas cum saccharo, see Ferri protocarbonas—f. Carbonatum, Graphites—f. Carburetum, Graphites.

FER'RI CHLORIDUM, F. Sesquichloridum seu Perchloridum, Fer'ric Chloride, (F.) Trichlorureou Perchlorure de fer, Chloride, Sesquichloride, Perchloride or Muriate of Iron, is obtained by dissolving sesquichloride of iron in muriatic acid, or, according to the Ph. U. S., by the action of muriatic acid and nitric acid on iron. It is generally prescribed in the form of Tinctura Ferri Chloridi. A concentrated solution of the perchloride has been used as an injection for the radical cure of aneurism, and it has been employed wherever a powerful styptic has been needed. It forms the Liquor Ferri Perchloridi, (Ph. B., 1867,) Liquor Ferri sesquichlorati, Liquor Ferri muriat'ici oxydati, Oleum Martis, Liquor stypticus Looffii; also the Liquor Ferri Perchloridi fortior, Strong solution of Perchloride of Iron, (Ph. B., 1867,) and is the basis of Ellerman's Disinfectant.

FER'RI CITRAS, Fer'rum citricum, Citrate of Iron. Two citrates of iron are prepared—the Sesquicitrate or Citrate of the Sesquioxide; and the Citrate of the Protoxide. The former, Ferri citras, is official in the Ph. U. S., in which it is directed to be prepared from the official Liquor Ferri Citratis. The citrates resemble, in their medical properties, the tartrate and the lactate of the metal. Dose, five grains or more.

FER'RI CYANURUM, see Prussian blue—f. Deutocarbonas fuscus, F. subcarbonas—f. Deutoxidum nigrum, Æthiops martialis—f. Ferrocyanas, Prussian blue—f. Ferrocyanidum, Prussian blue—f. Ferrocyanuretum, Prussian blue.

FER'RI FILUM. The pharmacopœial name (Ph. U. S., 1851) of iron wire.

FER'RI HYDRIODAS, F. iodidum—f. Hydrocyanas, Prussian blue—f. Hypercarburetum, Graphites.

FER'RI HYPOPHOSPHIS, Hypophosphite of Iron. A preparation introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Ph. (1873). It is obtained by the action of solution of hypophosphite of soda or ammonia on solution of sulphate of sesquioxide of iron. It has the tonic properties of the iron, with the other therapeutic qualities of the hypophosphites. Dose gr. x-xxx., three times a day, in syrup. See Hypophosphites.

FER'RI IODIDUM, F. Ioduretum, Fer'rum iodatum, Iodide or Ioduret of Iron, Fer'rous Iodide, (F.) Iodure de fer, Iodure ferreux; in solution, Hydriodate of Iron, Fer'ri hydriodas, Fer'rum hydriodatum, (F.) Hydriodate de fer. (Iodin., ℥ij., Ferri rament., ℥j., Aq. destillat., Oiss. The Ph. U. S., 1851, had a formula for the preparation of iodide of iron from the ingredients just mentioned. It has been dismissed, however, and the iodide is now official only in the form of the pill and syrup. See Pilulæ Ferri Iodidi and Syrupus Ferri Iodidi.) Dose, gr. iij. to gr. x. or more. The solid iodide is official only in the Ph. B. (1867.)

FER'RI IODURETUM, F. iodidum.

FER'RI LACTAS, Fer'rum lacticum, Lactate of Iron, L. of Protoxide of Iron, (F.) Lactate de Fer ou Ferreux. (Prepared by digesting in a water-bath diluted lactic acid with iron filings, and crystallizing.) It is employed in the same cases as the precipitated subcarbonate of iron, and especially in chlorosis. Twelve grains of the lactate may be given in the 24 hours, in the form of lozenges.

FER'RI LIMATURA PURIFICATA, Purified Iron Filings:—purified by means of the magnet, for internal use. The filings are, also, called Fer'ri Scobs, F. Ramen'ta et Fil'a, Fer'ri seu Martis Limatura, Speculum Indicum, Fer'ri in pulverem resolutio, (F.) Limaille de Fer. They are considered to possess the general properties of iron;—the iron becoming oxidized.

FER'RI ET MAGNESIÆ CITRAS, Citrate of iron and magnesia, is prepared by dissolving hydrated oxide of iron in a solution of citric acid, saturated with carbonate of magnesia, and evaporating to dryness. It is soluble in water, and does not constipate. Dose, from four grains to fifteen, in solution.

FER'RI NITRAS, see Liquor ferri nitratis—f. Nitratis liquor, see Liquor ferri nitratis.

FER'RI OXALAS, Oxalate of Iron. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873). It is made by dissolving sulphate of iron and oxalic acid, separately, in distilled water, filtering, mixing the solutions, washing and drying the precipitate. It is tonic without being astringent. Dose, two or three grains, in pill.

FER'RI OXIDUM FUSCUM, F. subcarbonas—f. Oxidum hydratum, Ferrum oxydatum hydratum—f. Oxidum magneticum, Oxidum ferri nigrum—f. Oxidum nigrum, Oxidum ferri nigrum—f. Oxidum rubrum, Colcothar, Ferri subcarbonas.

FER'RI OXIDUM SACCHARATUM, Saccharated Oxide of Iron. A dark brown powder, made by dissolving iron in nitric acid, filtering, evaporating, adding sugar, and an excess of sugar in water of ammonia, and precipitating with alcohol.

FER'RI PERCHLORIDUM, see Ferri chloridum—f. Peroxyanidum, Prussian blue—f. Peroxydum humidum, Ferrum oxydum hydratum—f. Peroxydum hydratum, Ferrum oxydatum hydratum—f. Persesquinitras, see Liquor ferri nitratis—f. Persulphas, see Ferri sulphas.

FER'RI PHOSPHAS, Phosphate of Iron, Fer'rous Phosphate, (F.) Phosphate de Fer, P. Ferroso-ferrique. (Ferri Sulphat., ℥vj., Sodii Phos- phat., \mathfrak{Z} vi., Aque, Oviiij. Dissolve the sulphate of iron and phosphate of soda, severally, in four pints of the water; then mix the solutions, and set the mixture by, that the precipitate may subside: lastly, having poured off the supernatant liquid, wash the precipitate with water, and dry it with a gentle heat. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, 5 to 10 grains as a chalybeate.

The British Pharmacopœia (1867) has a Syrupus Ferri Phosphatis, Syrup of Phosphate of Iron—gr. j. of the phosphate to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ j. of syrup—the dose of which is a fluidrachm or more.

A compound syrup of phosphate of iron has been much used in routine practice, in the United States, under the absurd name of chemical food. It, probably, has no advantage over the last mentioned.

FERRI ET POTASSÆ TARTRAS, Ferrum tartarizatum—f. et Potassii tartras, Ferrum tartarizatum—f. Potassio-citras, see Ferri ammonio-citras—f. Potassio-tartras, Ferrum tartarizatum.

FERRI PROTOCARBO'NAS, Protocarbonate of Iron, Ferrous Carbonate, (F.) Carbonate de Fer. The protocarbonate of iron, thrown down from a solution of the sulphate of iron by the carbonate of soda, readily attracts oxygen and becomes converted into the sesquioxide. To prevent this, it may be associated with honey and sugar, and the mixture be reduced by evaporation to a pilular consistence. The mass constitutes the Ferrug'inous Pills, Pilules ferrugineuses, of Vallet, Vallet's Pills. See Pilulæ Ferri Carbonatis. The Edinburgh Pharmacopœia contained the Ferri Carbo'nas Saccharatum, Ferri Carbo'nas cum Sac'charo, Sac'charine Carbonate of Iron, prepared in this manner. It is the Ferrum Carbo'nicum Saccharatum of Klauer, the Ferri Carbo'nas Saccharata, Sac'charated Carbonate of Iron of the Ph. B. (1867). The protocarbonate is given in the same diseases as the lactate of iron; ten or fifteen grains in the course of the twenty-four hours.

FERRI PROTOSULPHAS VIRIDIS, F. sulphas—f. Prussias, Prussian blue.

FERRI PULVIS (Ph. U. S., 1851), Fer'rum pulveratum seu redactum seu redactum (Ph. U. S., 1873,) seu metallicum, Pow'der of Iron, Iron by Hydrogen, Reduced Iron, Quevenne's Iron, (F.) Fer réduit, Fer réduit par l'hydrogène, prepared by passing a stream of hydrogen gas, purified by bubbling through solution of subacetate of lead and milk of lime, over the subcarbonate of iron, contained in an iron or porcelain tube heated to low redness. It is very liable to become oxidated, and must be kept in a dry, well-stopped bottle. It has been prescribed in anæmic, and especially in chlorotic, cases. The ordinary dose is three to six grains, or more, three times a day, in pill made with sugar and gum.

Ferrum Redactum (Ph. B., 1867), which is metallic iron, with a variable amount of magnetic oxide, is prepared by the action of hydrated peroxide of iron, granulated zinc, sulphuric acid, and chloride of calcium.

FERRI PYROPHOSPHAS, Pyrophosphate of Iron, Fer'ric Pyrophosphate, (F.) Pyrophosphate de Fer. This preparation is officinal in the Ph. U. S., 1873. It is made by heating phosphate of sodium to watery fusion, drying, heating to incipient redness without fusion, dissolving this in water with the aid of heat, filtering and cooling, and adding solution of tersulphate of iron, until this ceases to produce a precipitate. Stir and strain, and then wash the precipitate, after draining it, until the washings pass nearly tasteless, and transfer to a weighed porcelain capsule, to which add a saturated solution of citric acid in water of ammonia, and evaporate, and obtain the salt, by drying, in scales. On account of its solubility, it is a favorite ingredient in the preparation of elixirs of iron, &c. Dose, two to five grains.

FERRI ET QUI'NIÆ CITRAS, Fer'rum et Chini-num citricum, Cit'rate of Iron and Qui'nia, formed by the union of four parts of citrate of iron and one part of citrate of quinia, has been prescribed in cases where a combination of these tonics was indicated. In the Ph. U. S., 1873, it is formed by decomposing an acid solution of sulphate of quinia by water of ammonia, and adding the precipitated quinia to a solution of citrate of iron until it is dissolved; evaporating to the consistence of syrup, and drying on plates of glass in scales.

FERRI RAMENTA, F. limatura—f. Rubigo, F. subcarbonas—f. Scobs, F. limatura—f. Sesquichloridum, Ferri chloridum—f. Sesquinitratis, Liquor ferri nitratis—f. Sesquioxidum, F. subcarbonas præcipitatus—f. Sodio-citras, see Ferri ammonio-citras.

FERRI ET STRYCH'NIÆ CITRAS, Cit'rate of Iron and Strychnia. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873). Separate solutions of citrate of iron and ammonium, and of strychnia with citric acid, are made in distilled water, which are mixed and evaporated, and dried in scales.

FERRI SUBCARBO'NAS, F. Carbo'nas, F. Rubi-go, Fer'rum præcipitatum, Chalybis Rubi-go præparata. (The last two terms, as well as Fer-rugo, are applied to the subcarbonate or rust, Reru'go Ferri, Cacafer'ri, formed by the action of moist air on metallic iron.) A protoxide of iron, oxidized by the decomposition of water; the carbonic acid being attracted from the air. Dose, gr. v. to \mathfrak{z} ss., and more.

Fer'ri subcarbo'nas, Subcar'bonate of Iron, Prepared carbonate of iron, may be precipitated from sulphate of iron by carbonate of soda. The following is the formula of the Pharmacopœia of the United States (1873)—Ferri sulph., \mathfrak{Z} viiij., Sodii carb., \mathfrak{Z} ix., Aque bullient., Oviiij. Dissolve the sulphate of iron and carbonate of soda severally in four pints of the water, then mix the solutions, and set it by, that the powder may subside; pour off the liquor, wash the subcarbonate with water until the washings pass nearly tasteless, and dry on bibulous paper without heat. It has, also, been called Ferri sesquioxidum, Oxidum ferri fuscum, O. ferri rubrum, Deutocarbo'nas ferri fuscus, Cro'cus martis ap'riens, Sesquioxide or peroxide of iron, (F.) Peroxide de fer, Safran de Mars apéritif.

FERRI SUCC'INAS. This salt has been recommended for its specific action on gall-stones, and for those who have a redundancy of fatty tissue.

FERRI SULPHAS, Sal Mar'tis, Vitriolum Mar'tis seu Fer'ri, Fer'rum Vitriolatum, Sulphas seu Protosulphas Fer'ri viridis, Calcad'inum, Cal'catar, Cal'cotar, Chalcant'hum, Calcite'a, Atramentum sutorum, Vitriol, Vitriolum viride, An'ima He'patis, Sulphate of Iron, Ferrous Sulphate, Green Vitriol, Cop'peras, (F.) Sulfate de fer, Sulfate Ferreux, Vitriol Vert, Conperose Verte. The Pharmacopœia of the U. S. (1873), directs it to be made by the action of sulphuric acid, \mathfrak{Z} xviiij., on iron wire, cut in pieces, \mathfrak{Z} xij., water, Oviiij.—evaporating, crystallizing, and drying the crystals on bibulous paper. This salt is inodorous, and of a strong styptic taste. The crystals are light green, transparent, rhomboidal, and soluble in two parts of water. It is tonic and anthelmintic. Dose, gr. j. to vj., and more.

Fer'ri Persulphas, Persulphate of Iron, Fer'ric Sulphate, Mon'sel's salt, (F.) Persulfate de fer, Sel de Monsel, is a powerful coagulant and styptic, introduced by M. Monsel. A formula for the Liquor Fer'ri Subsulphatis, Solution of Subsulphate of Iron, Solution of Persulphate of Iron, Monsel's Solution, is in the Ph. U. S., 1873, (Ferri sulphat. in pulv. crass., \mathfrak{Z} xij., Acid. sulphuric, \mathfrak{Z} j. and gr. xxx., Acid. nitric, \mathfrak{Z} j. and gr. ccc., Aq. destillat., q. s. To the acids, mixed with half a pint of the water, and heated to the boiling point, add the sulphate gradually, stirring until effervescence ceases. Boil briskly until nitrous vapors are no longer perceived, and the color is deep ruby red. When nearly cold, add enough water to make it measure f³xij.

FERRI SULPHAS CALCINATUS, Colcothar.

FERRI SULPHAS EXSICCATUS, Ferri Sulphas Exsiccatus (Ph. U. S., 1873), Ferri Sulphas siccatum, is sulphate of iron exposed to a moderate heat, until it is capable of being reduced to powder. In this form it can be made into pills. Three grains may be esteemed equivalent to five of the crystallized salt.

FERRI SULPHAS GRANULATA, Granulated Sulphate of Iron. The Ph. B., 1867, has a formula for the preparation of this salt, the ingredients being iron wire, sulphuric acid, distilled water, and rectified spirit. Dose, gr. i.-v.

FERRI SULPHURETUM, Sulphuret of Iron, Ferrous Sulphide, Iron Pyrites, (F.) Sulfure de fer, may be made by heating one part of sublimed sulphur over three parts of iron filings in a crucible until the mass begins to glow. It is employed as a ready means for obtaining hydrosulphuric acid gas by the addition of sulphuric or chlorohydric acid.

FERRI TANINUS, Ferri tannicum, Tannate of Iron, (F.) Tannate de fer. This salt is usually obtained by adding a solution of a salt of sesquioxide of iron, as the persulphate, to a decoction of nut-galls. It is possessed of tonic and astringent properties, and has been extolled, especially in chlorosis.

FERRI TARTRARUM, Ferrum tartarizatum—f. Tritoxidum, Colcothar.

FERRI VALERIANAS, Ferri Valerianicum, Valerianate of Iron, (F.) Valérianate de fer. (Formed by the action of valerianic acid on oxide of iron.) It is a dark brick-red powder, insoluble in water, and has been given in hysteria complicating chlorosis. Dose, from two to four grains. The Dublin Pharmacopœia of 1850 has a formula for this salt.

FERRUM (Ph. U. S., 1873), Mars, Sideros, Metalum hæmatopoëticum, Iron, (F.) Fer. A metal of a bluish-gray color; fibrous texture; brilliant and fine-grained fracture. Specific gravity, 7.8; hard, ductile, malleable, and magnetic. The medicinal virtues of iron are tonic; producing fetid eructations, when it takes effect, owing to its meeting with acid in the stomach, which oxidizes it, and causes the evolution of hydrogen gas. When given in the metallic state, the filings are chiefly used; but the oxides and salts are most commonly employed.

Ferrum (Ph. U. S., 1863) means Ferri filum, and F. ramen'ta, Limatu'ra mar'tis leviga'ta, (F.) Limaille de Fer porphyrisée, Fer Porphyrisée.

FERRUM AMMONIACALE, F. ammoniatum—f. Ammoniac-citricum, Ferri ammonio-citras.

A mixture of the hydro-chlorates of ammonia and iron. (?) (Ferri Subcarb., f³ij., Acid. muriat., f³x., Ammon. muriat., liiiss., Aq. destillat., Oij. Mix the subcarbonate with the acid in a glass vessel and digest for two hours; then add the muriate previously dissolved in distilled water, and having filtered the liquor, evaporate to dryness. Rub to powder. It is not now official. Dose, gr. iij.-xv.

FERRUM OXYDATUM HYDRATUM, Ferri Oxidum Hydratum (Ph. U. S.) seu Peroxidum Hydridum (Ph. B., 1867), seu Peroxidum Hydratum, Ferrigo, Hydras Ferricus, Ferri hydrate, Hydroxide of Iron, Hydrated oxide or peroxide of Iron, Hydrated Tritoxide of Iron, Moist Peroxide of Iron. It may be prepared by taking a solution of sulphate of iron, increasing its dose of oxygen by heating it with nitric acid, and precipitating the oxide by adding pure ammonia in excess, washing the precipitate, and keeping it moist.

In the Ph. U. S., 1873, it is directed to be prepared by adding water of ammonia to a solution of ter-sulphate of iron; washing the precipitate until the washings pass nearly tasteless. It is then mixed with water and transferred to a wide-mouthed bottle, which must be kept well-stopped.

The Ph. U. S. also directs that when the hydrated oxide of iron is to be made in haste for use as an antidote, the washing may be performed more quickly by forcibly pressing the strainer with the hands, and mixing the precipitate with sufficient water to measure Oiss. In the French Codex (1866), Peroxyde de Fer Hydraté is made by the action of ammonia on solution of perchloride of iron.

It has been recommended as an antidote to arsenic; and many cases of its efficacy have been published. From 10 to 20 parts of the hydrated oxide would seem to be more than sufficient to convert 1 part of arsenious acid into the basic salt of iron.

The Ph. B., 1867, has a Ferri Peroxidum Hydratum, prepared by drying the moist peroxide at a temperature not exceeding 212°.

seu martia'les solu'ti seu martia'ti seu tartra'tis fer'ri et lixiv'ie, Bo'li Mar'tis, and Py'ri mar'tia'les; Tartarized Iron, Tar'trate of Potas'sa and Iron, Tar'trate of Iron and Potass'ium, (F.) Tartrate de potasse et de fer; in balls or pellets, Boules de Mars ou de Nancy ou d'Acier, (formed from the union of hydrated oxide of iron, prepared from the solution of the tersulphate of iron, and bitartrate of potassa, Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is one of the mildest of the salts of iron, and not unpalatable. Dose, gr. x. to 3ss.

The Tinctu'ra Mar'tis Aperiti'ca, Tinc'ture of Ludwig, Al'cohol cum Sulpha'te Fer'ri tartari-sa'tus, Tinctu'ra Mar'tis Glaube'ri is, essentially, a solution of this salt. Eau de Boule, a solution of the salt in water, is used in contusions. The Tinctu'ra Mar'tis Tartariza'ta, (F.) Teinture de Mars Tartarisée of the French Codex (1866), is prepared by the action of alcohol and water on iron filings and cream of tartar.

The Boules de Molsheim are prepared by adding to five parts of the Boules de Mars one part of benzoin and as much turpentine.

Helve'tius's Styp'tic was composed of the filings of iron and tartar, mixed to a proper consistence with French brandy. It was called in England Eat'on's Styp'tic; but this is now formed of Sul-phate of Iron.

Fe'ver, Fe'bris, (feritas, 'wildness,' or from feror, 'heat,' or from februo, 'I purify,') Pyr, Py'etus, (F.) Fièvre. One of the most frequent and dangerous affections to which the body is liable. A person has an attack of fever, when he is affected with rigors, followed by increased heat of skin, quick pulse, languor, and lassitude.

Rigors, increased heat, and frequency of pulse have each been assumed as the essential character of fever. It is not characterized, however, by any one, but depends upon the coëxistence of many symptoms. Fevers have been usually divided into the idiopath'ic or essent'ial, and the symp-tomat'ic. The idiopathic arise without any obvious local cause. The symptomatic are dependent upon local irritation. Idiopathic fevers may be divided into three classes—1. Those attended with distinct paroxysms—intermittents. 2. Remittent and continued fevers: and, 3. Fevers complicated with eruptions—the exanthematous. These divisions admit of great variety, owing to climate, season, soil, age, &c. All ages and climates are liable to fever; and its exciting causes, are very numerous. These causes may be common, as irritations in the intestines, external injuries, stimulants, &c.; or they may be specific, as miasmata, contagion, &c. The greatest diversity has prevailed regarding the theory of fever. Its primary seat has been placed in the brain, mucous membrane of the stomach and intestines, skin, nerves, bloodvessels, liver, vena cava, pancreas, &c. It would seem, however, that although, in fever, the whole of the functions are morbidly impressed, the arguments in favor of the impression being first made on the nervous system and the system of nutrition are the strongest. The exciting cause of fever, whatever it may be, produces an irregular action in the system of nutrition, which is soon conveyed to the rest of the system, owing to the extensive sympathy which exists between every part of the body; and it is probable, that all those local inflammations and congestions are the consequence, rather than the cause, of this disordered condition of the system. The general character of fever is clearly shown by examination of the blood. When fever is devoid of inflammatory complication, the quantity of fibrin is in no case augmented. It frequently remains in the healthy proportion, and at times diminishes to an extent not met with in any other acute disease. The alteration of the blood in fevers, which consists generally in a diminution of the fibrinous element, is the reverse of what occurs in inflammation.

Many phenomena of fever are influenced by that periodic'ity, which we notice in the exercise of several of the functions of the body. The types of intermittents are strong evidences of such an influence.

In the treatment of fever, it is important to bear in mind—1. Its tendency, particularly in the case of the exanthemata, to run a definite course, and terminate in restoration to health. 2. The disposition to local determination or hyperæmia—the most frequent cause of the fatal termination of fever—a circumstance requiring the vigilant attention of the physician. 3. That the symptoms must be attentively studied, in order to deduce, as far as possible from them, the indications of cure. Lastly, attention must be paid to the prevalent epidemic. There are particular seasons in which fevers are very malignant; and others in which they are as mild; circumstances which necessarily have an effect upon the treatment.

FE'VER AND A'GUE, Intermittent fever—f. Ac-climating, F. strangers'.

FE'VER, ADENOMENINGE'AL, Fe'bris adeno-meninge'a seu mesenter'ica (BAGLIVI) seu muc'o'sa, Mor'bus muc'o'sus, Gas'troduodenop'gra, Mu'cous or Pitu'itous or Catar'rhal Fe'ver, Phlegmap'gra, Phlegmop'gra, Phlegmatop'gra, Gastrobronchi-tis. Fever, accompanied with considerable mu-cous secretion; especially from the digestive tube.

FE'VER, ADENONER'VOUS, Plague.

FE'VER, ADYNAM'IC, Fe'bris adynam'ica, As- thenicopyra, Asthenicopyretus, Asthenopyra, Asthenopyretus. Fever attended with great prostration of the vital powers; as typhoid and typhus fever.

FE'VER, AF'RICAN, Febris Africa'na. The malignant bilious remittent fever, which prevails on the western coast of Africa.

FE'VER, ALG'ID, see Algidus.

FE'VER, ANOM'ALOUS, Febris Anom'ala seu erratica seu irregularis seu va'ga. A fever, whose progress and type are irregular.

FE'VER, APHO'NIC, Febris apho'nica. A variety of intermittent, in which the voice is lost during the paroxysm.

FE'VER, APOPLECTIC, Febris apoplectica seu comato'sa seu lethargica seu soporo'sa, Com'atose Fe'ver. An intermittent or continued fever, attended with apoplectic symptoms.

FE'VER, AR'DENT. A form of continued fever occurring in tropical regions, chiefly among recruits newly arrived, and due to exposure to the sun.

FE'VER, ARTHRITIC. Fever, characterized by inflammation of the joints; as in gout and rheumatism.

FE'VER, ARTICULAR ERUP'TIVE, Dengue — f. Articular rheumatic, Dengue.

FE'VER, ARTIFICIAL, Febris artificialis seu ar'te promo'ta. Fever produced designedly by the internal or external use of stimulants.

FE'VER, ASTHENIC, Febris asthen'ica. Fever accompanied with debility. It may include every variety of fever under certain circumstances, but is generally appropriated to typhus.

FE'VER, ASTHMATIC, Febris asthmat'ica. A pernicious intermittent, accompanied with symptoms of asthma.

FE'VER, ATAXOÄDYNAMIC, Febris ataxoädyn'am'ica. Fever characterized by symptoms of ataxia and adynamia.

FE'VER, AUTUM'NAL, Fall Fever. A name sometimes given to typhoid fever, but probably more correctly belonging to some of the forms of remittent fever.

FE'VER, BAL'LAST. A disease caused on ship-board by ballast furnished from scraping and digging the banks of rivers, abounding with all kinds of animal and vegetable decay and filth.

FE'VER, BARCELO'NA, Fever, yellow — f. Bastard, Illegitimate fever.

FE'VER, BENGAL'. A form of remittent fever, prevalent in the region from which it derives its name.

FE'VER, BILIOUS, Febris bilio'sa seu polychol'ica seu aso'des seu choler'ica seu gastrica seu hepat'ica seu cholepyret'ica, Cholepy'ra, Cholepyretus, Hepatogastrocholo'sis, Enteropy'ra bilio'sa, Choloz'e'mia febrilis, Syn'ochus bilio'sa. The common remittent fever of summer and autumn; generally supposed to be owing to, or connected with, derangement of the biliary system.

FE'VER, BILIOUS REMITTING or REMITTENT, YEL'LOW, Fever, yellow — f. Black, Fever, purpuric, malignant — f. Bladdery, Pemphigus.

FE'VER, BLIS'TER. A term vaguely applied to vesicular or pustular eruptions, which appear particularly about the mouth, during or after febrile disturbance.

FE'VER, BOÄ VIS'TA. A malignant bilious remittent fever, greatly resembling yellow fever, which was very fatal at Fernando Po, and in ships in its waters, in the year 1845.

FE'VER, BO'NA. A malignant paludal fever, which prevailed among the troops of the garrison at Bona, in Algeria, from 1832 to 1835.

FE'VER, BONE, see Inflammation — f. Bouquet, Dengue — f. Brain, F. cerebral, Phrenitis — f. Brain, water, Hydrocephalus internus — f. Break-bone, Dengue — f. Bucket, Dengue — f. Bulam, Fever, yellow.

FE'VER, CAMP. Any continued fever occurring in camp or in the army. Formerly it meant the typhus of armies. See Typhus gravior.

FE'VER, CARDIAL'GIC, Febris Cardial'gica. A variety of pernicious intermittent, accompanied with violent cardialgia during the paroxysm.

FE'VER, CARDIT'IC. Intermittent fever, accompanied with pain at the heart.

FE'VER, CATAR'RHAL, F. adenomeningeal.

FE'VER, CEPHALAL'GIC, Febris cephalal'gica. A pernicious intermittent, accompanied with intense pain of the head. Also, intermittent cephalalgia.

FE'VER, CEPHAL'IC, Febris cephal'ica. A febrile affection of children—intermediate between the acute form of active cerebral congestion and the chronic form—which is attended by fever, pain in the head, disorder, or more generally constipation of the bowels, and a train of phenomena often supposed to be premonitory of an attack of hydrocephalus.

FE'VER, CER'EBRAL, Brain fe'ver. Fever, generally of an ataxic character, in which the brain is considerably affected.

FE'VER, CEREBROSPINAL, Meningitis, cerebrospinal.

FE'VER, CHA'GRES, Panama' Fe'ver. A severe form of endemic fever, common on the isthmus of Panama.

FE'VER, CHILD'BED, Fever, puerperal, Puerperal fever — f. Childbed, low, see Peritonitis.

FE'VER, CHOL'ERIC, Febris choler'ica. A variety of pernicious intermittent, accompanied with symptoms of cholera morbus.

FE'VER, CHOL'ERIC, OF IN'FANTS, Cholera infantum.

FE'VER, CHRON'IC, Febris Chron'ica. Some authors apply this name to protracted fevers; others to hectic fever.

FE'VER, COLLIQ'UATIVE, Febris tab'ida seu colliquati'va. Fever, characterized by rapid emaciation, copious evacuations, and rapid prostration of strength.

FE'VER, COM'ATOSE, F. apoplectic.

FE'VER, CONGES'TIVE, Febris congesti'va. Fever accompanied by obscure symptoms; or by great oppression and depression; in which it is difficult—and often impossible—to induce reaction. Congestive fevers occur in various parts of this country, especially in the fall; and they are very common in India. The term congestive fever is often used in some parts of the south of the United States very indefinitely,—to include winter typhus, and typhoid fevers, typhoid pneumonia, as well as intermittents and autumnal remittents.

FE'VER, CON'TINENT, see Continent and Continued fever — f. Continual, see Continued fever — f. Continued, common, Synochus.

FE'VER, CONVUL'SIVE, Febris convulsi'va. A pernicious intermittent or remittent, accompanied by convulsions.

FE'VER, COUN'TRY. Fever occasioned by exposure to the miasms of a highly malarious locality. A term much used in the Southern States.

FE'VER, DELIRIOUS, Febris cum delir'io, (F.) Fièvre délirante. A pernicious intermittent, characterized by delirium in the paroxysms.

FE'VER, DEP'URATORY, Febris depurato'ria. A fever, to which was attributed the property of purifying the blood; or which indicated, that such a supposed depuration had occurred.

FE'VER, DIAPHORETIC, Febris diaphoret'ica, Febris sudato'ria. A pernicious intermittent, with excessive sweating during the fit.

FE'VER, DI'ARY, Ephemera.

FE'VER, DIGES'TIVE. The chilliness, followed by increased heat and quickness of pulse, which frequently accompanies digestion.

FE'VER, DOUB'LE, (F.) Fièvre double ou doublée. An intermittent, which has two paroxysms in a given time, instead of one.

FE'VER, DOUB'LE QUART'AN. A fever, whose paroxysms occur two days in succession, and fail the third day; the first paroxysm resembling the 4th, and the second the 5th.

FE'VER, DOUB'LE QUOTID'IAN. An intermittent, whose paroxysms return twice every day at corresponding hours.

FE'VER, DOUB'LE TERT'IAN. An intermittent, whose paroxysms return every day; the first corresponding with the 3d, the second with the 4th, and so on.

FE'VER, DUODEC'IMANE, Fe'bris duodecima'na. A supposititious intermittent, whose paroxysms recur on the 12th day, or every 11 days.

FE'VER, DYNAM'IC, Synocha—f. Endemial, Remittent F.—f. Endemic, Remittent F.—f. Endemical, Remittent F.—f. Enteric, see Typhus—f. Ephemeral, Ephemera.

FE'VER, EPILEP'TIC, Fe'bris epilep'tica. A variety of pernicious intermittent, accompanied with attacks of epilepsy.

FE'VER, EROT'IC, Fe'bris erot'ica, (F.) Fièvre d'amour. A chronic fever, occasioned by unpropitious love.

FE'VER, ERRAT'IC, see Erratic—f. Eruptive, Exanthematica—f. Eruptive, articular, Dengue—f. Essential, see Idiopathic—f. Exacerbating, Remittent fever—f. Exanthematic, see Exanthem.

FE'VER, FAINT'ING, OF PER'SIA. A singular and fatal epidemic, presenting some points of analogy with cholera, which prevailed at Teheran in the autumn of 1842.

FE'VER, FALL, F. autumnal.

FE'VER, FAM'INE, Fe'bris à fa'mē. The adynamic febrile phenomena induced by want of sufficient food.

FE'VER, FIFTEENDAY, see Relapse—f. Five-day, see Relapse.

FE'VER, GANGRENOUS, Fe'bris gangren'o'des. Fever, accompanied by gangrene of various parts, and especially of the limbs and genitals. Sénac describes an intermittent of this kind.

FE'VER, GAR'RICK, see Fever, Siddons.

FE'VER, GASTRAL'GIC. An intermittent accompanied with acute burning lacerating pain at the stomach.

FE'VER, GAS'TRIC, Fe'bris gas'trica seu gas'trica bilio'sa, Gastrop'ya, Gastropyr'etus, Gastrocholo'sis, Hepatogastrocholo'sis, Stomach'ic fe'ver, Syn'ochus Bilio'sa. A name given by some to bilious fever, which has appeared to them to be dependent on an affection of the stomach. Also, called Meningogastric or Gastrobil'ious fe'ver, Fe'bris meningogast'rica, Meningogastri'tis, Gastromeningi'tis, Har'vest fe'ver, (F.) Fièvre de la Moisson, F. Meningo-gastrique.

FE'VER, GAS'TRODYNAM'IC, Fe'bris gastroädy-namica. A fever, in which the symptoms of bilious fever are joined with those of adynamic fever.

FE'VER, GAS'TROÄNGIOTEN'IC. A fever, in which the symptoms of bilious are united with those of inflammatory fever.

FE'VER, GAS'TROÄTAX'IC. A fever, in which the symptoms of bilious fever are united with those of ataxic fever.

FE'VER, GASTROBIL'IOUS, Fever, gastric.

FE'VER, GIBRAL'TAR, Fever, yellow—f. Hæmagastic, F. yellow.

FE'VER, HÆMOP'TIC, Fe'bris hæmopt'ica. A variety of masked intermittent, in which periodical hæmoptysis is the chief symptom.

FE'VER, HAR'VEST, F. gastric.

FE'VER, HAY, Catarr'hus æstivus, Chortasth'ma, Sum'mer Catarrh', Hay Asth'ma, Rose Catarrh', Sum'mer Fever, or Bronchi'tis. A catarrh to which certain persons are subject in summer, and which has been ascribed in England to the effluvia of hay, but this is not the probable cause. It is a catarrh with sneezing, headache, weeping, snuffing, and cough, with, at times, fever and general discomfort. It is not uncommon in this country. It disappears spontaneously,—to recur on subsequent years about the same period.

FE'VER, HEBDOM'ADAL. A supposititious fever, whose paroxysms return weekly, and on the same day.

FE'VER, HEC'TIC, see Consumption and Hectic Fever.

FE'VER, HEMORRHAG'IC. The stage of reaction or erethism following hemorrhage.

FE'VER, HEPAT'IC or HEPATAL'GIC. A pernicious intermittent, with violent pain in the right hypochondrium.

FE'VER, HILL. A modification of remittent, occurring in the hilly districts of India. Jungle fever.

FE'VER, HOS'PITAL, Typhus gravior.

FE'VER, HU'MORAL, Fe'bris humora'lis. Fever in which an alteration or deterioration of the humors is suspected.

FE'VER, HUN'GARY, Fe'bris Hungar'ica seu Pan-non'ica, Lu'es Panno'nia, Mor'bus Ungar'icus, Cephalon'osus, Ver'mis cer'e'br'i, (F.) Fièvre Hongroise ou de Hongrie. An epidemic typhus, common among the soldiers in barracks, in Hungary.

FE'VER, HYDROPHOB'IC, Fe'bris hydrophob'ica. Pernicious intermittent, with dread of liquids.

FE'VER, HYSTER'IC, Fe'bris hyster'ica. Hysteria, accompanied by fever. Hysteria, occurring with each paroxysm of an intermittent.

FE'VER, ICTER'IC, Fe'bris icter'ica. Fever, accompanied with jaundice. Some intermittents exhibit this complication at each paroxysm.

FE'VER, ICTER'IC, REMIT'TING, see Relapse.

FE'VER, IDIOPATH'IC. See Idiopathic.

FE'VER, INFANTILE REMIT'TENT, Fe'bris Infantum remittens, F. vermino'sa (of many), F. mucosa vermino'sa, F. len'ta, Spu'rious wormfever, Remitting fever of children, Hec'tica infant'ilis. A fever occurring in childhood, which often assumes many of the characters of hydrocephalus. It appears generally to be dependent upon a morbid condition of the stomach and bowels.

FE'VER, INFLAM'MATORY, Synocha.

FE'VER, INSID'IOUS. Fever, which, at first, seems devoid of danger, but may subsequently become of a more or less malignant character.

FE'VER, INTERMIT'TENT, see Intermittent fever—f. Intestinal, see Typhus—f. Irritative, Irritation, morbid—f. Jail, Typhus gravior—f. Jungle, see Jungle fever.

FE'VER, LAKE. Fever produced by exposure to the malaria in the neighborhood of the northern lakes of this country.

FE'VER, LAZARET', see Lazaret.

FE'VER, LENTIC'ULAR, Miliary fever.

FE'VER, LO'CHIAL, Fe'bris lochia'lis. That acceleration of the circulation which sometimes occurs during the discharge of the lochia.

FE'VER, LUNG, Catarrh, Pneumonia—f. Maculated, Typhus.

FE'VER, MALA'RIAL or MALA'RIOUS. Fever induced by malarious or miasmatic emanations; hence also called Miasmatic fever. Intermittent and remittent fever belong to this class.

FE'VER, MALIG'NANT, Fe'bris maligna. Fever which may make its approaches insidiously, and subsequently becomes formidable. Any fever which exhibits a very dangerous aspect. Typhus gravior.

FE'VER, MALIG'NANT PESTILEN'TIAL, Fever, yellow—f. Marsh, Elodes (febris).

FE'VER, MASK'ED, Fe'bris larva'ta, (F.) Fièvre larvée, Dead or Dumb Ague, Dumb Chill. An anomalous intermittent, the paroxysms of which have not the regular stages, or are masked.

FE'VER, MEDITERRA'NEAN. A form of remittent fever peculiar to the region from which it derives its name.

FE'VER, MENINGOGAS'TRIC, Fever gastric.

FE'VER, MENORRHAG'IC, (F.) Fièvre Ménorrhagique. The febrile and other constitutional symptoms attendant upon menstruation and menorrhagia have been so called by Trousseau.

FE'VER, MESENTER'IC, Fe'bris mesenter'ica. A name given, by Baglivi, to a species of fever which appears to have belonged either to the mucus or bilious. See Typhus.

FE'VER, MIASMAT'IC, F. malarial.

FE'VER, MILK, Fe'bris lac'tea seu lactan'tium, Galactop'gra, Galactopyr'etus, (F.) Fièvre de lait ou lactée. The fever which precedes or accompanies the secretion of milk in women recently delivered. It comes on generally about the third day after delivery, and is characterized by quick pulse, increased heat, redness of face, diminution or temporary suspension of the lochial discharge, tumefaction and tension of the breasts. It commonly terminates in twenty-four hours, and often with profuse perspiration. It requires the use of antiphlogistics, with dry diet.

FE'VER, MIXED, Synochus.

FE'VER, MOUN'TAIN. Fever belonging to mountainous regions. A form of fever, said to be peculiar to the elevated regions of the Rocky Mountains; and seen only at an altitude of 7000 feet and upwards.

FE'VER, MU'COUS, F. adenomeningeal.—Under mu'cous fe'vers, Dr. W. Aitken includes Influenza, Whooping-cough, Diphtheria, Croup, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, and Cholera.

FE'VER, NEPHRIT'IC, Fe'bris nephrit'ica. Intermittent fever, accompanied with nephritic pain during the paroxysm.

FE'VER, NER'VOUS, Fe'bris nervo'sa seu neuro'-des seu len'ta nervo'sa, Neurop'gra, Neuropyr'etus. A variety of Typhus; the Typhus mitior of Cullen; now, generally, however, it is esteemed a distinct disease. See Typhoid fever.

FE'VER, NER'VOUS, WITH EXANTHEM'ATOUS ERUP'TION, Typhus.

FE'VER NESTS. The conditions which propagate typhus maladies, in cities especially.

FE'VER, NEURAL'GIC, Dengue.

FE'VER, NEUROPURPU'RIC, Fever, purpuric malignant.

FE'VER, NI'GER. A malignant fever, of the bilious remittent kind, which proved fatal to many in the expeditions sent out by the British government to explore the Niger, in the years 1841-42, and previously.

FE'VER, NIGHT SOIL, see Typhus.

FE'VER, NON'ANE, Fe'bris nona'na. A supposititious fever, whose paroxysms recur every ninth day, or every eight days.

FE'VER, OCTANE, Fe'bris octa'na. An intermittent, whose paroxysms recur every eighth day.

FE'VER, PALU'DAL, Intermittent—f. Panama, Fever, Chagres—f. Paroxysmal, Remittent fever—f. Periodic, F. periodical, Intermittent.

FE'VER PERIOD'ICAL or PERIOD'IC, Fe'bris period'ica. An intermittent or remittent fever.

FE'VER, PERNIC'IOUS, Fe'bris pernicio'sa. Intermittent fever, when attended with great danger, and which destroys the majority of those affected by it in the first four or five paroxysms; sometimes in the very first.

FE'VER, PESTILEN'TIAL, Fe'bris pestilentia'lis. The Plague. Also a severe case of typhus. The yellow fever and sweating sickness have, likewise, been thus designated.

FE'VER, PESTILEN'TIAL, OF CAT'TLE, Murr—f. Petechial, Typhus, and Meningitis, cerebrospinal—f. Peyerian, see Typhus—f. Puitous, F. adenomeningeal.

FE'VER, PLEURIT'IC. An intermittent or remittent, accompanied with inflammation of the pleura.

FE'VER, PNEUMON'IC, Fe'bris pneumo'nica. An intermittent, accompanied with inflammation of the lungs. Also, pneumonia.

FE'VER Poi'son, see Poison.

FE'VER, PSEU'DO, Irritation, morbid.

FE'VER, PUER'PERAL, Fe'bris puerpera'lis seu puerpera'rum, Child'bed fe'ver, (F.) Fièvre puerpérale. This name has been given to several acute diseases, supervening on delivery. It means, generally, a malignant variety of peritonitis, which runs its course very rapidly, and passes into a typhoid condition, unless met, at the very onset, by the most active sedative measures. By the generality of practitioners, it is esteemed to be eminently contagious; some, however, deny that it is so. See Peritonitis and Puerperal fever.

FE'VER, PUER'PERAL, ADYNA'MIC or MALIG'NANT, see Peritonitis—f. Puking, Milk sickness.

FE'VER, PUR'PLE, Fever, purpuric malignant.

FE'VER, PURPU'RIC MALIG'NANT, Malignant pur'ple fe'ver. A name proposed by Dr. Stokes for a form of epidemic disease, which prevailed in Ireland in 1866-7. It was variously termed pur'ple fever, neuropurpu'ric fever, malignant pur'pura, cerebrospinal ty'phus, black fever, fe'bris ni'gra, cerebrospinal meningitis, and black death. See Meningitis, cerebrospinal.

FE'VER, PUR'ULENT, Fe'bris purulen'ta. Fever which accompanies suppuration.

FE'VER, PU'TRID, Typhus gravior—f. Pythogenic, Typhoid fever.

FE'VER, QUI'NIC, (F.) Fièvre quinquie, F. de Quinquina. A fever, accompanied by a cutaneous eruption, said to affect those who are engaged in the preparation of the sulphate of quinia. The French use the term Fièvres à quinquina for intermittents, which cinchona alone cures.

FE'VER, QUINT'AN, Fe'bris quinta'na. A fever, whose paroxysms return every fifth day. It is rarely or never seen.

FE'VER, QUOTID'IAN, see Quotidian.

FE'VER, RECUR'RENT, see Relapse—f. Red Tongue, see Typhus.

FE'VER, REG'ULAR, Fe'bris regula'ris seu exquisi'ta. An intermittent whose paroxysms follow a determinate type. It is opposed to atypic. Sometimes opposed to anomalous.

FE'VER, RELAP'SING, see Relapse.

FE'VER, REMIT'TENT, see Remittent fever—f. Remittent, Bilious, see Relapse—f. Remittent of children, F. infantile remittent—f. Remittent, infantile, see Fever, infantile remittent—f. Remitting icteric, see Relapse—f. Rheumatic, Rheumatism, acute.

FE'VER ROOT, Triosteum perfoliatum.

FE'VER, SCORBU'TIC, Fe'bris scorbu'tica. The febrile movement, which sometimes accompanies scorbutus or scurvy.

FE'VER, SEA'SONING, F. strangers'.

FE'VER, SEC'ONDARY. A febrile condition which recurs in certain affections after having ceased; such as the secondary fever, which comes on at the time of the maturation of the variolous pustules, or as the eruption of scarlatina, &c., disappears.

FE'VER, SEP'TAN, Fe'bris septa'na. An intermittent, whose paroxysms recur every six days, and consequently on the seventh.

FE'VER, SEV'ENDAY, see Relapse—f. Seventeen-day, see Relapse.

FE'VER, SEX'TAN, Fe'bris sexta'na. A fever, which recurs every five days, and consequently on the sixth.

FE'VER, SHIP, see Typhus.

FE'VER, SID'DONS. A low fever, which prevailed in Edinburgh, in the last century, and was supposed to have originated from the crowding together of persons to see the great actress Mrs. Siddons. A similar fever, occurring during the performances of Garrick, was called the Garrick fever.

FE'VER, SIER'RA LEONE. A form of remittent fever prevalent in the region from which it derives its name.

FE'VER, SIM'PLE, Fe'bris Sim'plex. Simple fever is that which has no predominant character—bilious, inflammatory, or nervous; and which is unaccompanied by any local determination, hyperæmia, or complication. It may be continued, remittent, or intermittent.

FE'VER, SIM'PLE CONTIN'UED. This is the most favorable form of continued fever, and has a tendency to wear itself out, provided only the lædientia be avoided. The prognosis is consequently favorable, and the treatment simple; consisting in perfect repose of body and mind, abstinence, and relieving the thirst by cold drinks.

FE'VER, SINGUL'TOUS, Fe'bris singulto'sa seu lygmo'des seu lyngo'des. Fever, accompanied with singultus or hiccough.

FE'VER, SO'LAR, Dengue—f. Spotted, Typhus gravior, Cerebrospinal meningitis.

FE'VER, STER'CORAL, Fe'bris stercora'lis. Fever, produced by an accumulation of feces in the intestines.

FE'VER, STOMACH'IC, Gastric fever.

FE'VER, STRAN'GERS', Accli'mating or Sea'son-ing fever. Yellow, or remittent fever, which is endemic in certain places, and to which strangers are especially liable.

FE'VER, SUBCONTIN'UAL, Remittent fever.

FE'VER, SUBIN'TRANT, Fe'bris subin'trans. An intermittent, in which one paroxysm is scarcely finished before the other begins.

FE'VER, SUM'MER, F. Hay—f. Sun, Dengue—f. Suppurative, Pyæmia.

FE'VER, SURG'ICAL. A febro-inflammatory affection after a surgical operation, inducing morbid changes in different and perhaps distant parts of the body.

FE'VER, SWEAT'ING, Sudor Anglicus.

FE'VER, SYMPTOMAT'IC. Constitutional disturbance, occurring as a phenomenon of many different diseases.

FE'VER, SYN'COPAL, Fe'bris synco'palis seu mi-nu'ta, (F.) Fidere synco'pale. A variety of pernicious intermittent, in which there is, in every paroxysm, one or more faintings.

FE'VER, SYN'CHOID, Synochus.

FE'VER, SYPHILIT'IC, Fe'bris syphilit'ica. Fever, accompanying syphilis, or supposed to be owing to a syphilitic taint.

FE'VER, TER'TIAN, Fe'bris tertia'na. A fever, whose paroxysm returns on the third day, and consequently every two days.

FE'VER, THER'MIC, see Coup-de-soleil.

FE'VER, THIRD DAY, Tertian.

FE'VER, TRAG'IC, Fe'bris Trag'ica. A low fever, in which the patient declaims like an actor during the delirium.

FE'VER, TRAUMAT'IC, Fe'bris traumat'ica. The fever, which supervenes on wounds or great surgical operations.

FE'VER, TREMB'LING, Intermittent fever.

FE'VER, TYPH, see Typhus—f. Typhoid, see Typhus—f. Typhoid, of India, Cholera.

FE'VER, TYPHOMALA'RIAL, Miasmat'ic typhoid fever. A fever in which there is a mixture of the phenomena of typhous and malarial fevers;—a combination not unfrequently seen in active military service.

FE'VER, TY'PHOUS, Typhus.

FE'VER, URE'THRAL, Fe'bris urethra'lis. The aggregate of febrile phenomena, resembling exactly those of ague, which are observed, at times, after the passage of a bougie for stricture of the urethra.

FE'VER, VACC'INAL, see Vaccina—f. Varicellar, see Varioloid—f. Varioloid, see Varioloid.

FE'VER, VER'MINOUS, Fe'bris vermino'sa, Hel-minthop'ya, Worm fever. Fever, produced by the presence of worms in the digestive tube, or accompanied by their expulsion.

FE'VER, VER'NAL, Fe'bris ver'nalis. An intermittent or other fever occurring in the spring. Vernal intermittents were formerly considered salubrious.

"An ague in the spring
Is physic for a king."

FE'VER, VESIC'ULAR, Pemphigus.

FE'VER, WAL'CHEREN, Gallsick'ness. The remittents and intermittents to which the British troops were exposed, who were attached to the expedition to Walcheren, in 1809.

FE'VER, WA'TER BRAIN, Hydrocephalus inter-nus—f. Winter, see Tongue, black—f. Worm, Verminous F.—f. Worm, spurious, Fever, infantile remittent.

FE'VER, YEL'LOW, *Fe'bris fla'va, F. seu Pes'tis America'na, F. fla'va Americano'rum, F. trop'ica, F. contin'ua pu'trida ictero'des Carolinien'sis, F. elo'des ictero'des, F. maligna bilio'sa America', F. maligna fla'va In'die Occidenta'lis, F. tox'ica, Cholo'sis America'na, Ochroty'phus, Loimocholo'sis, Pestilen'tia hæmagas'trica, Pes'tis occidenta'lis seu intertrop'ica, Vom'itus ni'ger, Epan'ctus malignus fla'vus, Remitt'ens ictero'des, Tritro'ph'ya America'na, Ty'phus ictero'des, Ochrop'ya, Syn'-ochus ictero'des, Ende'mial Cau'sus of the West In'dies, Cau'sus trop'icus endem'icus, Bil'ious re-mit'ting yel'low fe'ver, Malignant pestilential fe'ver, (F.) Fidere jaune d'Amérique, F. matelote, F. gastrodynamique, F. de la Barbade, F. de Siam, F. Ictérique, F. Gastro-hépatique, Typhus miasma-tique ataxique putride jaune, T. jaune, T. d'Amé-rique; Vomito prieto, Vomito negro, Mal de Siam, Hæmagas'tric Fe'ver or Pes'tilence, Black vom'it, Bulam', Gibralt'ar, and Barcelo'na Fe'ver,—vulg., in the West Indies, Mulat'to Jack and Yellow Jack. A very acute and dangerous febrile affection; so called, because complicated, in its second stage, with a jaundiced appearance, accompanied by vomiting of black matter. Sauvages, Cullen, and others regard it as a variety of typhus; and Pinel, as a species of gastrodynamism or bilious putrid fever. It occurs, endemically, annually within the tropics; but is met with epidemically in the temperate regions. Broussais regards the disease as gastroenteritis, exasperated by atmospheric heat; so that it runs through its stages with much greater rapidity than the gastroenteritis of our climates. The yellow color of the skin, according to him, is owing to the inflammation of the small intestine,—and especially of the duodenum,—augmenting the secretion of the liver, and at the same time preventing its discharge into the duodenum. The pathology of this affection, as well as its origin, is still unsettled. The treatment must generally be of the most active nature at the onset; consisting in bleeding largely, and exhibiting mercury, so as to excite a new action, if possible;—the other symptoms being combated according to general principles. It must vary, however, according to the epidemic.*

FE'VER, YELLOW, MILD, see Relapse.

FE'verbush, Laurus benzoin, Prinos.

FE'Ver Drops, War'burg's, see Bebeern.

FE'veret, Febricula.

FE'verfew, (febris, and fugare, 'to drive away,') Matricaria.

Feverfouillie, Matricaria.

FE'verish, Fe'verous, Fe'briens, Febrico'sus, (F.) Fidereux. That which causes fever, or is febrifacient or febrif'ic; as feverish food, feverish diathesis, &c. Also, the state of one laboring under fever, Feversick. If affected with intermittent fever, he is said, in Suffolk, England, to be a'garified.

FE'verishness, Febriculos'ity, Febricitatio.

The state of having fever. A slight febrile disorder.

Fe'verous, Feverish.

Fe'verroot, Pterospora andromedea.

Fe'versick, see Feverish.

Fe'vertree, Pinckneya pubens.

Fe'verwood, Laurus benzoin.

Fe'verwort, Eupatorium perfoliatum, Triosteum.

Fews, Sempervivum tectorum.

Fey, Psychorages.

Feyk, Fidgets.

Fi'ber, ([G.] Biber.) Castor fiber.

Fi'bra, Fibre—f. Aurea, Coptis—f. Nervea, Nerve-fibre—f. Sanguinis, Fibrin.

Fi'bræ (pl. of Fi'bra) Arcifor'mes, see Arciform.

Fi'bre, Fi'bra, Is, Cle'don, Fi'lum. An organic filament, of a solid consistence, and more or less extensible, which enters into the composition of every animal and vegetable texture. The simple or elementary fibre of the ancients, from a particular assemblage and arrangement of which every texture of the body was conceived to be constituted, is entirely ideal. The moderns usually admit, with Haller and Blumenbach, three elementary fibres or tissues. 1. The cellular or areolar, formed chiefly of thin plates, of a whitish color, and extensible, which seems to consist of concrete gelatin. 2. The nervous, pulpy, or medullary, formed of a soft substance, contained in a cellular sheath, and consisting of albumen united to a fatty matter. 3. The muscular, composed of round filaments, of a grayish or reddish color, and formed of fibrin. Chaussier has added to these the albuminous fibre, but it seems to differ from the cellular fibre only in greater condensation of the molecules. See Fibrous.

A very small or ultimate fibre is called a Fi'bril, Fibrilla.

Fi'bre, ALBUGIN'EUS, see Albuginea.

Fi'bre CELLS, Fi'bro-cells, Plas'tic cells, Fibroplastic cells. Cells or corpuscular elements of the lymph of plastic inflammation.

Fibre Lisse, see Muscular fibre—f. Striæ, see Muscular fibre.

Fi'bres, CONVERG'ing. Nervous fibres, whose office it is to associate different portions of the nervous centres with each other. They form the Commissures.

Fi'BRES OF COR'TI, see Corti.

Fi'BRES, DIVERG'ing. The fibres composing the columns of the medulla oblongata, which separate in their progress to the periphery of the cerebrum and cerebellum.

Fi'BRES, MED'ULLATED. A form of nerve-fibre consisting of two constituents, a sheath of medullary nerve substance and an axis cylinder. See Nerve fibre.

Fi'BRES OF MÜL'LER, see Tunica Jacobi.

Fi'BRES OF REMAK'. Fibres described by Remak as peculiar to the sympathetic nerve, and which Valentin considers to be neurilemma, and to consist of fibrocellular bundles.

Fibreux, Fibrous.

Fi'bril, see Fibre.

Fibrilla, (dim. of fibra.) Fibril—f. Muscularis, Muscular fibre.

Fi'brillar, or Fibril'lar, Fibrilla'ris. Relating or appertaining to fibrils.

Fi'brillated, Fibrilla'tus. Formed of fibrils.

Fibrilla'tion, Fibrilla'tio. The formation of fibrils.

Fi'brin, (from fibre.) Fi'brine, Fibri'na, Fi'brinē, Fi'bra san'guinis, Mat'ria fibro'sa, Lymph'a plas'tica, (F.) Mat'ière fibreuse du sang. An immediate animal principle—solid, white, and inodorous; insipid; heavier than water; without action on the vegetable blues; elastic when moist; hard and brittle when dry. It enters into the composition of the chyle and the blood; is the self-coagulable material in them, and is produced in the retrograde metamorphosis of the tissues. It is in small proportion in the blood; but its cipher increases in inflammation, while in continued fever it is diminished. Mus'cular fibrin, Syn'tonin, Mus'culin, has been shown to be different from that of the blood. It is, indeed, by its chemical character, a peculiar substance, and has also been called mus'cular sub'stance. In certain diseased actions, Fibrin or Coag'ulable lymph, Glu'ten, is separated from the blood, and is found in considerable quantity on the surfaces of membranes, and in the cavities of the body. See Liquor sanguinis, and Fibrinogen.

Fibrin is likewise a proximate principle of vegetables, and differs but little in chemical composition from animal fibrin; nor does it differ much from albumen and casein. It is very nutritious.

Fibrina'tion, Fibrina'tio. The act of adding fibrin to the blood. The opposite to defibrina'tion.

Fibrin'ogen. (A hybrid term, from fibrin, and γενω or γεννω, 'I engender,') Fibrinog'enous Sub'stance, (F.) Plasmin. According to the researches of Dr. Buchanan and Dr. A. Schmidt, fibrin has no existence in a liquid state, but is produced as a solid matter in a fluid by the union of two substances already present in solution, called fibrin'ogen or fibrinog'enous sub'stance, and fibrinoplas'tin or fibrinoplas'tic sub'stance.

Fibrinog'enous, (same etymon.) Producing fibrin. See Fibrinogen.

Fibrinoplas'tic Sub'stance, Fibrinoplastin.

Fibrinoplas'tin, (fibrin, and πλασσω, 'I form,') Fibrinoplas'tic sub'stance. See Fibrinogen, and Protagon.

Fi'bri'ous or Fi'brinous, Fibrino'eus, (F.) Fibrineux. That which is composed of fibrin, or has the appearance of fibrin.

Fi'bro, in composition, appertaining or relating to fibrous tissue.

Fibroare'olar, Fibrocellular.

Fibrobronchi'tis. Fibrous or rheumatic inflammation of the bronchial tubes.

Fibrocalca'reous. A term applied especially to fibrous tumors which are accompanied with a deposit or coating of calcareous matter.

Fibrocar'tilage, Fibrocartila'go. An organic tissue, partaking of the nature of the fibrous tissue and of that of cartilage. It is dense, resisting, elastic, firm, supple, and flexible. Fibrocartilages are distinguished into—1. Mem'brani-form, or those which serve as moulds to certain parts, as the alæ nasi and eyelids. 2. Vag'ini-form, or those which form sheaths for the sliding of tendons. 3. Interartic'ular, those which are met with in the movable articulations. 4. Uni'ting, (F.) Fibrocartilages d'union, which form a junction between two bones, as the symphysis pubis. Fibrocartilages are sometimes formed adventitiously, as the result of a morbid process in different organs. Circumferen'tial fibrocar'tilages consist of a rim of fibrocartilage surrounding the margin of some of the articular cavities, as the glenoid cavity of the shoulder. They serve to deepen the articular surface and to protect the bones.

FIBROCAR'TILAGES, TAR'SAL, see Tarsus.

Fibrocartilag'ines (pl. of Fibrocartila'go) Intervertebra'les, Intervertebral cartilages.

Fibrocell'ular, Fibrocellula'ris, Fibroare'olar, Fibroareola'ris. That which partakes of the fibrous and of the cellular or areolar tissue, as the fascia transversalis.

FIBROCELL'ULAR TU'MOR, Tumor, fibrocellular.

Fibrocy'stic. Possessing the nature of fibrous and cystic matter. Fibrocy'stic tumors are forms of cystic degeneration of fibrous tumors.

Fi'broid, (fibrous, and oid.) Fibrous; Tumor, fibrous.

Fi'broid DEGENERATION. A gradual transformation, occurring chiefly in membranous tissues, into a material having a fibre-like character. It may result from pressure or may follow upon chronic inflammation accompanied with exudation.

Fi'broid DEGENERATION OF THE LUNG. Cirrhosis of the lung—f. Phthisis, see Phthisis.

Fibro'ma, gen. Fibro'matis, (fibro, and oma.) Tumor, fibrous.

Fibromu'cus, Fibromuco'sus, (F.) Fibromu-queux. Possessing the nature of fibrous and of mucous membranes. A term applied to fibrous membranes which are intimately united with other membranes of a mucous nature, as the pituitary mem'brane, the mem'brane of the ure'thra, &c.

Fibromus'cular. A term applied to tumors, fibromuscular tumors, in which the fibrous tissue is largely intermingled with muscular fibres. See Myoma.

Fibroneuro'ma. A tumor consisting of connective tissue occurring upon a nerve or distributed among the nerve filaments.

Fibronu'cleated. A term applied to tumors whose texture consists of filaments infiltrated with oval nuclei.

Fibroplas'tic, Fibroplas'ticus, (F.) Fibroplastique, (from fibro, and πλάσσω, 'I form.') An epithet for a morbid formation, constituted of the elements of areolar tissue transformed, in part, into fibre.

FIBROPLAS'TIC CELLS, see Fibre cells—f. Tumor, Sarcoma.

Fibrose'rous, Fibrosero'sus, (F.) Fibroséreux. Possessing the nature of fibrous and serous membranes. Membranes composed of a fibrous and a serous sheet, intimately united:—as the Dura Mater, Pericardium, Tunica albuginea testis, &c.

Fibro'sis. Constitutional fibroid degeneration, attacking different structures.

Fi'brous, Fibro'sus, Fi'broid, (F.) Fibreux. Composed of fibres. Certain membranes, as the dura mater, periosteum, ligamentous capsules of the joints, &c., are fibrous. The fibrous system of Bichat includes the system of organs formed by the albugineous fibre of Chaussier. It comprises, particularly, the periosteum and perichondrium; the articular capsules and ligaments; the tendons; the dura mater, pericardium, tunica sclerotica, tunica albuginea testis, outer membrane of the spleen, &c. Under simple fibrous tissues, Tel'ae fibro'sæ, certain writers have classed the white and yellow fibrous tissues, and areolar tissue. Both the yellow and the white may be detected in the areolar tissue. The white is said to exist alone in ligaments, tendons, fibrous membranes, aponeuroses, &c. The yellow, (F.) Tissu jaune, exists separately in the middle coat of the arteries, the chordæ vocales, ligamentum nuchæ of quadrupeds, &c. It differs from the white in possessing a high degree of elasticity, owing to the presence of a distinct principle, called, by MM. Robin and Verdeil, Élasticine.

Fi'brous GROWTH, Tumor, fibrous—f. Matter of the brain, see Cerebrum—f. Membranes, see Membranes, fibrous—f. Tumor, Tumor, fibrous.

Fib'ula, (for Figibula [?], from figo, 'I fix,' 'a clasp, or brace,') Cru'ris ra'dius, Can'na mi'nor, Os per'onè, Per'onè, Perone'um, Foc'ilè mi'nus, Su'ra, Arun'do mi'nor, Fist'ula cru'ris, Tib'ia mi'nima, Os tib'ie mi'nus, Spellbone, Splint or splinter bone of the leg, (F.) Péroné. The long, small bone, situate at the outer part of the leg. The superior or tibial extremity of the fibula is rounded and forms the caput or head. It is articulated with the tibia. Its inferior or tarsal extremity is broader than the superior. It is articulated with the tibia and astragalus, and forms the malleolus externus or outer ankle by means of its coronoid process. The body of the bone has three faces, having more or less prominent edges. It is separated from the tibia by the interosseous space, and is developed by three points of ossification; one at the body, and one at each extremity. It prevents the foot from turning outwards.

Fib'ulad, see Fibular aspect.

Fib'ular, Peroneal.

FIB'ULAR AS'PECT. An aspect towards the side on which the fibula is situated. Fib'ulad is used by the same writer adverbially, to signify 'towards the fibular aspect.'

Fibula'tio, (fibula, 'a clasp,') Infibulatio.

Fic, Ficus.

Ficaire, Ranunculus ficaria.

Fica'ria, (from ficus, 'a fig,') Scrophularia aquatica—f. Communis, Ranunculus ficaria—f. Ranunculoides, Ranunculus ficaria—f. Verna, Ranunculus ficaria.

Fica'tio, Ficus.

Ficic'ion, Physician.

Fi'coid, Ficoï'des, Ficoï'deus, (ficus, 'a fig,') and u'dos, 'resemblance,') Resembling a fig in form or character.

Fico'sa Eminen'tia, Ficus.

Fico'sis, (ficus, and the suffix osis,) Ficus.

Fi'cus, Fico'sus. Relating or appertaining to ficus.

Fi'cus, Sy'cè, Sy'cea, Sy'cum, Syco'sis, Syco'ma, Fico'sis, Fica'tio, Fico'sus Tu'mor, Fico'sa eminen'tia, Maris'ca, Fig'cart, (F.) Fic. A fleshy excrescence, often soft and reddish, sometimes hard and scirrhus, hanging by a peduncle, or formed like a fig, occurring on the eyelids, chin, tongue, anus (Ischas), or organs of generation. The fici seated on the last-mentioned parts are generally of a syphilitic character.

Fi'cus, F. carica.

Fi'CUS CAR'ICA, F. vulga'ris seu commu'nis. The systematic name of the fig-tree, (F.) Figuier, Ord. Urticaceæ. Car'ica, Fi'cus, Sy'cè, (F.) Figue, the fig, is a pleasant fruit when ripe, as well as when dried in the state in which it is found in the shops—Ficus, (Ph. U. S.) It is used, at times, in place of a cataplasm; especially in gum-boils.

Fi'CUS COMMU'NIS, F. carica—f. Indiæ grana, Coccus cacti—f. Indica, Musa paradisiaca, see Caoutchouc, Carica papaya, and Lacca—f. Religiosa, see Lacca.

Fi'CUS UN'GUIUM. A condition of the nails in which the posterior wall is swollen, everted, and more or less inflamed.

Fideris, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These waters, in the canton of the Grisons, are strong, acidulous, and alkaline, and possess all the virtues of the class.

Fid'gets, (of doubtful etymology,) Dysphor'ia sim'plex, D. nervo'sa, Erethis'mus sim'plex, Tituba'tio, Crep'ers, (Sc.) Feyk, (F.) Frétillement. General restlessness and troublesome uneasiness of the nerves and muscles, with increased sensibility, and inability of fixing the attention, accompanied with a perpetual desire for changing the position. See Agacement des Nerfs.

Fidicina'les, (from fidicen, 'a harper,') Lumbricales manus.

Fie, Psychorages.

Fiel, ([L.] fel,) Bile—f. de Bœuf, Bile of the ox—f. de Terre, Fumaria.

Field'weed, Anthemis cotula, Erigeron Philadelphicum.

Figura Veno'sa, ('venous figure,') Circulus venosus.

Figura'tio, (figurare, figuratum, 'to fashion,') Imagination.

Figure, Countenance.

Figuré, (F.) An epithet for a compressive bandage, applied over the head after bleeding from the frontal vein. It has also been called bandage royal.—A "figured excrement" is one sufficiently solid to take the shape of the bowels when discharged.

Figure of 8. A variety of bandages are so called from their shape, the turns being arranged so as to resemble somewhat a figure of 8.—The twisted suture is also so called.

Fig'wart, (fig, and wart), Ficus.

Fig'wort, Scrophularia nodosa—f. Water, greater, Scrophularia aquatica.

Fi'la (pl. of Filum) Ner'vea, Nerve-fibres—f. Spermatia, Spermatozoa.

Fila'ceous, Filamentous.

Filaire de Médine (Filaria), Dracunculus.

Filament, Filum, Filamentum, (dim. of filum, 'a thread,') This word is used synonymously with fil'ril; thus, we say a ner'veous or cell'ular fil'ament or fil'ril. Also, the glairy, thread-like substance which forms in the urine in some diseases, and which depends on a particular secretion from the mucous membrane of the urinary passages.

Fil'ament of Mül'ler, see Tunica Jacobi.

Filamen'tous, Filamento'sus. Filaceous; thread-like; filiform. Containing thread-like substances, as the tunica filamentosa or decidua.—Filamentous urine; urine containing thread-like substances.

Filamen'tum, Filament, Frænum.

Fila'ria Bronchia'lis, (from filum, 'a thread,') see Parasites—f. Guineensis, Dracunculus—f. Lentis, see Parasites—f. Medinensis, Dracunculus—f. Oculi, see Parasites.

Fil'bert, Corylus avellana.

File Cut'ters' Disease. In making steel files they are laid on a lead bed, and the fine particles of lead are raised in a cloud whenever the file is struck by the chisel, thus giving rise to lead poisoning.

FILE, DEN'TAL, (Sax. peol), Lima dentaria.

Filellum, (dim. of filum, 'a thread,') Frænum.

Fil'e'tum, (from filum, 'a thread,') Frænum linguæ.

Filic'ula, (dim. of filix, 'fern,') Polypodium filix mas—f. Dulcis, Polypodium vulgare.

Fil'iform, Filiform'is, (filum, 'a thread,') and forma, 'form,') Having the shape of a thread; as the "filiform papillæ of the tongue;" a "filiform pulse." See Papillæ.

Fil'ing, Limatio.

Filipen'dula, (filum, 'a thread,') and pendere, 'to hang,') Spiræa filipendula.

Fil'ius Ante Pa'trem, 'the son before the father.' A plant whose flower appears before the leaf; as Tussilago.

Fil'ix (gen. Fil'icis) Fœmin'ea, Pteris aquilina—f. Florida, Osmunda regalis—f. Mas, Polypodium filix mas—f. Non ramosa dentata, Polypodium filix mas—f. Nymphaea, Pteris aquilina—f. Pinnata, Polypodium filix mas—f. Veneris, Adiantum pedatum.

Fille, (from filia, 'a daughter,') Girl—f. de Joie, see Prostitution—f. Publique, see Prostitution.

Fil'let, (from filum, 'a thread,') Fascia, Laqueus—f. of the Corpus callosum, Gyrus fornicatus.

Fill'ing, (from Sax. ryllan, 'to fill,') A term employed in dentistry for the operation of stuffing the cavity of a carious tooth with some indestructible substance, to prevent the access of extraneous matters. Also called stop'ping, stuff'ing—Odontoplero'sis. The materials employed for filling are gold foil, sponge or crystalline gold, tin foil, lead, mastic, gutta percha, &c. See Plugging.

Filtra'tion, Filtra'tio, Percola'tio, E'thisis, E'this'mus, (from filtrum.) A pharmaceutical operation, which consists in passing a fluid through a filter or strainer, for the purpose of clarifying it. In ancient physiology it meant the action by which different humors of the body are separated from the mass of the blood.

Fil'trum. A fil'ter, (F.) Filtre, (from low Latin feltrum, (F.) feutre, 'felt or felled cloth,' which was used to form it [?].) Any porous material; such as sand, some kinds of freestone, powdered charcoal, pounded glass, flannel, unsized paper, &c., through which a fluid is passed for the purpose of separating it from the matters suspended in it.

Filum, ('a thread,') akin to pilus, 'a hair,') Filament—f. Musculaire, Muscular fibre—f. Tæniaforme, Tæniola.

Fil'um TERMINA'LE. A slender ligament, prolonged from the nervous sheath, formed by the spinal pia mater, which descends through the centre of the cauda equina, and is attached to the dura mater, lining the canal of the coccyx. Its structure has been shown to be in every respect essentially the same as that of the spinal cord proper, except that no nerve roots are connected with it.

Fim'bria, Parar'ma. A band; a fringe; as the fimbria or fimbriated or fringed extremity of the Fallopian tube.

Fim'briæ (pl. of Fim'bria) Carno'sæ Co'li, Appendiculæ pinguedinosæ—f. Tubarum Fallopii, see Tube, Fallopian.

Fim'briated, see Fimbria.

Fi'mus, Bor'borus, On'thus, Stercus, (F.) Fiente. Dung, Excrement.

Fi'mus seu STER'CUS AN'SERIS, Goose'dung, was applied as a poultice to the feet in malignant fever. See Chenocopus.

Fi'mus EQUINUS, Ster'cus e'qui non castra'ti, Stonehorse dung, was once thought antipleuritic.

Fi'mus VAC'UÆ, Cowdung, was employed as a cataplasm, especially in gout.

Finck'le, (Fœniculum.) Anethum.

Fin'ger, (Sax. pingep, from peng, 'to take,') Digitus—f. Annular, see Digitus—f. Ear, see Digitus.

FIN'GER, HIPPOCRAT'IC, Dig'itus Hippocrat'icus, (F.) Doigt Hippocratique. A fusiform tumefaction of the last phalanx of the index finger especially, with curving of the nails, mentioned by Hippocrates as characteristic of phthisis; but present, perhaps, in all cases of profound and protracted disturbance of hæmatosis.

FIN'GER, IN'DEX, see Digitus—f. Little, see Digitus—f. Middle, Medius digitus—f. Ring, Annular finger.

FIN'GER STALL, Digitale.

FIN'GER, SUPERNUMERARY, see Monster.

Fi'nis As'peræ Arte'riæ, ('end of the trachea,') Larynx.

Fiote, Phiala.

Fip'ple, Lip, under.

Fir, Bal'sam, Pinus balsamea.

Fir, Moss, UPRIGHT, Lycopodium selago.

Fir, SCOTCH, Pinus sylvestris—f. Spruce, Norway, Pinus abies.

Fir TREE, SIL'VER, EUROPE'AN, Pinus picea.

Fir, YEW-LEAVED, Pinus abies.

Fire Damp, ([G.] Damp f, 'vapor,') Hydrogen, carburetted—f. Persian, see Anthrax—f. St. Anthony's, Erysipelas.

FIRE WEED, Erechtithites hieracifolia, Senecio.

Fi'ring, Cauterization.

First Inten'tion, see Intention.

Fish'berries, Menispermum cocculeus.

Fish'skin, Ichthyosis.

Fish'tongue, (F.) Langue de Carpe. An instrument—so called from its shape—used by some dentists for the removal of the dentes sapientie.

Fissicula'tio, (fissiculare, fissiculatum, 'to cut off, open, make incisions,') An old word for an opening made with a scalpel.

Fis'sion, see Generation.

Fissiparité, see Generation.

Fissip'arous, (findere, fissum, 'to split,' and parire, 'to bring forth,') See Generation.

Fissu'ra, Fissure.

FISSU'RA A'NI, Fis'sure of the anus. A painful superficial breach of surface in the region of the anus, frequently attended with anal spasm, and with an ulcer on the verge of, or within, the sphincter.

FISSU'RA CANA'LIS FALLO'PII, see Aquæductus Fallopii—f. Capillorum, Distrix—f. Cerebri longitudinalis, Fissure, longitudinal, of the brain—f. Contrajacens, Contrafissura—f. Interlobularis, Interlobular fissure—f. Iridis, Coloboma—f. Laryngea pharyngis, see Larynx.

FISSU'RA LONGITUDINA'LIS, ANTE'RIOR ET POSTE'RIOR. Two vertical fissures in the median line, in front of and behind the medulla oblongata, which divide it superficially into two symmetrical lateral columns.

FISSU'RA MAG'NA VUL'VÆ, see Rima—f. Palpebrarum, see Palpebra—f. Pilaris, Trichismus—f. Transversa magna cerebri, Fissure, transverse, of the brain—f. Pudendi, see Rima.

Fis'sure, Fissu'ra, Schis'ma, Scissu'ra, Rhe'gē, Rheg'ma, Rheg'mus, (findere, fissum, 'to cleave,') A long and narrow cleft or opening in a bone—Rha'gē, Ceas'ma, (F.) Fissure, Fente, Scissure.

Fis'sure has various acceptations. A fracture, Catag'ma fissu'ra, in which the bone is cracked, not separated, as in fracture. Congenital fissures not unfrequently exist in the cranial bones, and are the result of incomplete ossification.—A narrow, long, and superficial solution of continuity, around the external openings of the mucous membranes. A sort of chap—(F.) Gercure—observed on the hands, particularly on the callous hands of workmen in certain mechanical employments. Small chapped ulcerations, sometimes noticed in young children, owing to the contact of the feces and urine with the fine delicate skin of the thighs, nates, and genital organs. Clefts of a more or less deep nature, occurring on the genital organs in the vicinity of the anus, in those laboring under syphilis. These are usually called rhagades. A small cleft or chapped sore, especially on the lips or hands, is called provincially a kink. See Monster.

FIS'SURE OF THE ANUS, Fissura ani—f. of Bichat, Fissure, transverse, of the brain—f. Capillary, see Pilatio.

FIS'SURE CEN'TRAL. The aggregate of the cavities or ventricles of the brain. Meckel considers them but one cavity, in the form of a cross.

FIS'SURE FOR GALL'BLADDER, see Gallbladder.

FIS'SURE OF GLA'SER, Fissure, glenoid—f. of Glaserius, F. glenoid.

FIS'SURE, GLE'NOID, Fis'sure of Glaser or Glaserius, (F.) Fissure ou Scissure de Glaser, Fente glenoïdale ou Fêlure de Glaser, divides the glenoid cavity of the temporal bone into two parts, and gives passage to the chorda tympani, &c.

FIS'SURE OF THE HE'LI'X. A small vertical fissure of the helix of the ear, a little above the tubercle for the attachment of the attahens aurem muscle.

FIS'SURE, INFRAOR'BITAR, Suborbitar fissure—f. of the Iris, see Coloboma.

FIS'SURE, LONGITU'DINAL, OF THE BRAIN, Fissu'ra cerebri longitudinalis. The space which separates the two hemispheres of the brain.

FIS'SURE, OR'BITAR, see Orbitar fissure—f. Orbitar, inferior, Sphenomaxillary fissure—f. Orbitar, superior, Sphenoidal fissure—f. Portal, see Liver.

FIS'SURE OF ROLAN'DO, Fur'row of Rolan'do. A transverse fissure placed between two superior cerebral convolutions, which are met with above the fissure of Sylvius. It is slightly posterior to the coronal suture, and corresponds very nearly with the line of suture between the frontal and parietal bones.

FIS'SURE, SEMI'LUNAR. A notch at the anterior edge of the cerebellum, where it receives fibres which connect it to the cerebellum and mesocephalon.

FIS'SURE OF SYL'VIUS, Fissu'ra seu Fos'sa Mag'na Syl'vii. A deep, narrow sulcus, which ascends obliquely backwards from the temporal ala of the sphenoid bone, near to the middle of the parietal bone, and which parts the anterior and middle lobes of the cerebrum on each side.

FIS'SURE OF THE TRA'GUS. A fissure on the anterior surface of the tragus of the ear.

FIS'SURE, TRANS'VERSE, OF THE BRAIN, Great trans'verse fis'sure, Fis'sure of Bi'chat, Fissu'ra seu Ri'ma transver'sa mag'na cer'ebr'i. A fissure which passes beneath and behind the edge of the middle lobe of the brain, and extends beneath the hemisphere of one side to the same point of the opposite side.

Fis'sures of the Liv'er, see Liver.

FIS'SURES OF SPI'NAL CORD, see Medulla spinalis.

Fist, (Sax. fyrt,) Pyg'mē, Pug'nus, (F.) Poing. The clenched hand.

Fist'ula, ('a pipe or reed,') Syr'inx, Syrin'ga, Aul'us, Fis'tule: when of a small size, Aulis'cus. A solution of continuity, of greater or less depth and sinuosity; the opening of which is narrow, and the disease kept up by an altered texture of parts, so that it is not disposed to heal. A fistula may be cutaneous or deepseated. It is incomplete or blind, when it has but one opening; and complete when there are two, the one communicating with an internal cavity, the other externally. It is lined in its whole course by a membrane which seems analogous to mucous membranes. Incomplete fistulæ may be internal or external. The former are those which open internally; the latter those which open externally. External incomplete fistulæ are kept up by caries or necrosis of bones, by extraneous bodies in any of the living textures, or by purulent cavities, the walls of which have not become united. Internal incomplete fistulæ generally soon become complete, since the discharge that escapes from them into the cavities into which they open has a constant tendency to make its way outwardly, and soon occasions ulceration of the integuments. Fistulæ have received different names, according to the discharge which they afford, and the organs in which they are seated, — as lachrymal, biliary, salivary, synovial, and urinary — Fis'tula uri'næ seu urina'lis, U'rias. The great object of treatment in fistulous sores is to bring on an altered condition of the parietes of the canal, by astringent or stimulating injections, caustics, the knife, pressure, &c. Those which are dependent on diseased bone, cartilage, tendon, &c., do not heal until after the exfoliation of the morbid part. Fistulæ of excretory ducts are produced either by an injury of the duct itself or by the retention and accumulation of the fluids to which they have to give passage. Thus, Fis'tula lacryma'lis, Dacryosyr'inx, Emphrag'ma lacryma'lē, Hy'drops sac'ci lacryma'lis, Drop'sy of the lach'rymal sac, commonly proceeds from the obliteration of the nasal ducts, or from atony of the lachrymal sac; preventing the tears from passing into the nostrils.

FIS'TULA, AË'RIAL. An opening resulting from injury to the larynx and trachea, which allows the air of respiration to pass through.

FIS'TULA IN A'NO, A'nal fistula, Archosyr'inx, generally occurs from some mechanical pressure or impediment. The principal indication in the treatment of these fistulæ of the excretory canals being to put a stop to the constant discharge of the secretions, &c., through the preternatural channel, the fistulous passage is at times laid open, and a communication established with the natural excretory canal; at others, strong pressure is employed to procure its obliteration.

FIS'TULA BELLINIA'NA, Uriniferous tube.

FIS'TULA, BIL'IARY, F. Bilio'sa. A form of fistula usually met with in the right hypochondriac region, generally caused by ulceration of the gall-bladder.

FIS'TULA, BRON'CHIAL, see Fistula, parietal — f. Cibalis, Œsophagus.

FIS'TULA COR'NEÆ, Fis'tula of the Cor'nea. This results from a penetrating wound of the cornea, which continues unhealed, but has become closed over by the conjunctiva. The aqueous humor escapes from the anterior chamber and raises the conjunctiva in the form of a vesicle. This should be removed with scissors, and the opening in the cornea touched with nitrate of silver.

FIS'TULA CRU'RIS, Fibula — f. Duræ matris, Sinus of the dura matter.

FIS'TULA, FE'CAL. A fistula of the intestines may result from injury or gunshot wound. See Anus, artificial.

FIS'TULA, GAS'TRIC, F. of the Stom'ach, F. Ventriculi. A form of fistula in the epigastric region, from traumatic causes, as gunshot wounds of the stomach, discharging gastric juice, mucus, or the contents of that organ.

FIS'TULA, GASTROCOL'IC. A fistulous communication between the stomach and the colon, as gastroduodenal fistula is a similar condition between the stomach and the duodenum.

FIS'TULA, GAS'TROCU'TA'NEOUS. A fistulous communication between the stomach and the external surface of the body.

FIS'TULA, GASTRODUOENAL, see F. gastrocolic — f. Lacrymalis, see Fistula.

FIS'TULA LYMPHA'NIS, Lymphatic or Lymph Fis'tula. A form of fistula in the cervical region, usually congenital, discharging a thin fluid, and dependent on imperfect closure of one of the lymphatics of the neck.

FIS'TULA MAM'MÆ, Mastosyrinx — f. Nervorum, Neurilemma.

FIS'TULA, PARI'ETAL. A channel of communication formed by ulceration through the external walls, as of the chest or abdomen. If the pulmonary pleura be perforated, and an opening takes place into the bronchial tubes, a bronchial fistula is formed.

FIS'TULA, PERINE'O-VAG'INAL. A fistula resulting from partial closure of a ruptured perineum leaving a small orifice near the sphincter ani, or from penetration of the presenting part of the fœtus through the perineum during parturition.

FIS'TULA, REC'TO-LA'BIAL, REC'TO-URE'THRA, and REC'TO-VAG'INAL, see F. recto-vesical.

FIS'TULA, REC'TO-VES'ICAL. A term applied to fistulous communication between the rectum and bladder, as Recto-ure'thral fistula and Recto-vag'inal fistula are applied to similar communications between the rectum and the urethra or vagina, and vesico-uterine, recto-labial, vesico-vaginal, urethro-vaginal, vesico-utero-vaginal to a similar relation of the bladder and uterus; rectum and labia; bladder and vagina; urethra and vagina; bladder, uterus and vagina, respectively.

FIS'TULA SA'CRA, Medulla spinalis, Vertebral column — f. Salivosa, Salivary fistula, see Salivary — f. Spiritualis, Trachea — f. Stercorosa, Anus, artificial — f. Ureterum renum, see Calix — f. Urinæ, see Fistula — f. Urinalis, see Fistula — f. Urinaria, Urethra.

FIS'TULA URETHRO-VAG'INAL, see F. recto-vesical — f. Ventriculi, F. gastric — f. Ventriculi, Œsophagus, Fistula, gastric.

FIS'TULA, VES'ICO-INTES'TINAL, F. Ves'ico-intestina'lis. A fistulous communication between the bladder and the bowels.

FIS'TULA VES'ICO-UTE'RINE, F. VESICO-VAG'INAL, &c., see F. recto-vesical.

Fis'tule, Fistula.

Fistules Stercoraires, see Stercoraceous.

Fistulous, Fis'tulosus, Syring'icus, Syringodes, (F.) Fistuleux. Relating to, or resembling, a fistula; as 'a fistulous opening.'

Fit, Paroxysm, Pes.

Fit'root, Monotropa uniflora.

Fits, Nine Day, Trismus nascentium.

Fivefin'gers, Panax quinquefolium.

Fixa'tio Mononœ'a, Melancholy, see Mononœa.

Fix'ed, Fix'us, (figere, fixum, 'to fasten.') A body not capable of being volatilized by fire is said to be fixed. Thus, we say fixed oils, in contradistinction to volatile oils.

Fixen, Min'eral Wa'ters of. This spring is four leagues from Walldas-en, in Bavaria. It contains carbonic acid, holding in solution carbonates of lime and magnesia; chlorides of lime and magnesia, carbonate of soda and silica. In Bavaria, it replaces the Seltzer water.

Fix'i Den'tes. The teeth of the second dentition.

Flabella'tion, Flabella'tio, (flabellare, flabellatum, — from flabrum, 'a blast of wind,' — 'to agitate the air.') An operation recommended by Ambrose Paré, which consists in keeping fractured limbs cool, as well as the dressings surrounding them, by the renewal of the air around them, either by the use of a fan, or the repeated change of position of the parts affected.

Flabel'lum et Ventila'brum Cor'dis, ('the fan and winnowing machine of the heart,') Pulmo.

Flaccid'ity, Flaccid'itas, (flaccidus, 'flabby,' 'soft.') Softness of a part, so as to offer little resistance on pressure.

Flag, Blue, Iris versicolor — f. Blue, slender, Iris Virginica — f. Dwarf, Iris lacustris — f. Myrtle, Acorus calamus — f. Root, Acorus calamus.

Flagel'lants, (from flagellare, 'to scourge,') see Mastigosis.

Flagella'tio, (flagellum, dim. of flagrum, 'a scourge,') Mastigosis.

Flagella'tion Ma'nia, see Mastigosis.

Flambe, Iris Germanica — f. Bâtard, Iris pseudacorus.

Flamboise, (from flamma, 'a small flame' [?].) Ignis sylvaticus.

Flame, Vi'tal, Vital principle.

Flamed, Inflamed.

Flam'ma, ('a flame,' from its shape,) Fleam — f. Cordis, Biolychnium — f. Vitalis, Biolychnium.

Flamme, Fleam — f. Vitale, Vital principle.

Flammette, (dim. of flamme,) Fleam.

Flam'mon, Lachesis rhombeata.

Flam'mula, (dim. of flamma,) Fleam, Ranunculus ficaria — f. Cordis, Biolychnium — f. Jovis, Clematis recta — f. Vitalis, Animal heat, Biolychnium, Vital principle.

Flancs, Flanks.

Flanks, Il'ia, Il'ea, La'gones, Lap'ara, Ceneo'nes, (Prov.) Lists, (F.) Flancs, Les Îles. The regions of the body which extend, on the sides, from the inferior margin of the chest to the crista ilii.

Flap, (F.) Lambeau. A portion of the soft parts of the body separated from those beneath, but still attached by the base. Hence there may be 'flap wounds,' (F.) Plaies à lambeaux; and 'flap operations,' (F.) Opérations à lambeaux. When the flap is taken from one part, and applied to another, in plastic operations, the operation is said to be by migra'tion of the flap, (F.) Migration du lambeau. At times, the flap is made to slide over the part to which it has to adhere: — the operation is then said to be by the slid'ing of the flap, (F.) Glissement du lambeau. The flap is also, at times, rolled, inverted, &c., (F.) Roulement ou Inversion du lambeau.

FLAP DOCK, Digitalis.

FLAP OPERA'TION OF AMPUTA'TION, Amputa'tion à lambeaux.

Flare, Saliva — f. Pigs', Adeps suillus.

Flat Foot, see Kyllosis.

FLAT TOP, Vernonia noveboracensis.

Flatua'rius, (from flare, flatum, 'to blow,') Alchymist.

Flatuens, Windy.

Flatulence, Flatulen'tia, Fla'tus, Flatuos'itas,

Aëriflux'us, Pneumato'sis, Pneumato'sis ventriculi et enter'ica, Bdes'ma, Hyperpneus'tia, Cly'don, Phy'sa, Polyphy'sia, Limo'sis Fla'tus, Ereuz'is, Bom'bus, Flatuos'ity, Wind, Wind'iness, Ventos'ity, Va'por, (F.) Ventosité, Flatuosité, Vents. Wind emitted from, or accumulated in, the digestive tube especially.

Flatulent, Windy.

Flatulen'tia, Flatulence.

Flatuosité, Flatulence.

Flatuos'ity, Flatulence.

Fla'tus, (from flare, flatum, 'to blow,') Crepitation, Flatulence — f. Furiosus, Ambulo-flatulentus — f. Spinæ, Spina ventosa.

Flave'do (gen. Flave'dinis) Cor'ticum Ci'tri, (from flaveo, 'I am yellow,') see Citrus medica — f. Cutis, see Xanthopathia.

Fla'vor, ([F.] flairer, 'to smell,') The quality of a sapid body, which is appreciated by the taste and smell combined, and more especially by the latter. Some physiologists consider that flavor is effected through the smell alone.

Fla'vus, Yellow.

Flax, Com'mon, ([Sax.] pleax, plex, [G.] Flachs,) Linum usitatissimum — f. Purging, Linum catharticum — f. Toad, Antirrhinum linearia.

Flax'seed, see Linum usitatissimum — f. Meal, see Linum usitatissimum — f. Tea, Infusum lini compositum.

Flea, Com'mon, (Sax. plea,) Pulex irritans.

Flea'bane, Can'ada, Erigeron Canadense — f. Great, Conyza squarrosa — f. Narrow-leaved, Erigeron Philadelphicum — f. Philadelphia, Erigeron Philadelphicum — f. Skevisch, Erigeron Philadelphicum — f. Various-leaved, Erigeron heterophyllum.

Fleam, Flam'ma, Flam'mula, ('a flame,' from its shape [?],) Schaste'rion, Fossa'rrium, Phlebotomum, (F.) Flamme, Flammette. A surgical instrument used for the operation of phlebotomy. It consists of a small metallic box, containing a spear-pointed cutting instrument, which, by means of a spring, can be forced into the vein. It is much used in Germany and some other European countries, and is not unfrequently employed in America; but is scarcely ever seen in France or Great Britain. See Lancet.

Flea'wort, Plantago psyllium.

Flechisseur, (from flectere, 'to bind,') Flexor — f. Court commun des orteils, Flexor brevis digitorum pedis — f. Court du gros orteil, Flexor brevis pollicis pedis — f. Court du petit doigt, Flexor parvus minimi digiti — f. Court du petit orteil, Flexor brevis minimi digiti pedis — f. Court du ponce, Flexor brevis pollicis manus — f. Grand commun des orteils, Flexor longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans — f. Long commun des orteils, Flexor longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans — f. Long du gros orteil, Flexor longus pollicis pedis — f. Profond des doigts, Flexor profundus perforans — f. Sublime des doigts, Flexor sublimis perforatus — f. Superficiel des doigts, Flexor sublimis perforatus.

Fleck, ([G.] Fleck, 'a spot,') Abrasion.

Flec'tens Par Lumbo'rum, (flectere, 'to bend,') Quadratus lumborum.

Fleg'men, (from phlegmone [?],) Flemen.

Fle'men, gen. Flem'inis, Fleg'men. A tumor about the ankles. Also, a chap on the feet and hands.

Flerecin, Gout.

Flesh, (Flærc, plerc,) Cre'as, Ca'ro, Sarz, (F.) Chair. Every soft part of an animal is so named; but more particularly the muscles, which are called muscular flesh.

FLESH GERM, Sarcophyte.

FLESH, PROUD, Fungosity.

Flesh'formers, see Aliment.

Flesh'worm Dis'easo, Trichiniasis.

Flesh'y, Corpulent.

Fle'tus, gen. Fle'tūs, (flere, fletum, 'to weep,') Lacrymatio.

Fleur de Coucou, (from flos, gen. floris, 'a flower,') 'cuckoo flower,' Primula veris—f. Sainte Catherine, Nigella—f. de Saint Jacques, Thlaspi bursa—f. de Tous les mois, Calendula officinalis.

Fleurs, (pl. of fleur,) Flowers, Menses—f. de Benjoin, Benjamin—f. Blanches, Leucorrhœa—f. de Muscade, Mace—f. de Soufre, Sulphur sublimatum—f. de Zinc, Zinci oxidum.

Flexibil'ity, Flexibil'itas, (flectere, flexum, 'to bend,') Capability of being bent. A physical property of the tissues, which varies greatly according to the structure. The tendons exhibit this property in a marked manner.

Flex'io, Campsis, Flexion.

Flex'ion, Flex'io, Cam'pē. The state of being bent. The action of a flexor muscle.

Flex'or, 'a bender,' (F.) Fléchisseur. A muscle, whose office it is to bend certain parts.

FLEX'OR ACCESSORIUS, see Flexor longus digitorum pedis.

FLEX'OR BRE'VIS DIGITO'RUM PE'DIS PERFORATUS, F. Sublimis seu bre'vis seu digito'rum bre'vis seu perforatus pe'dis, Perforatus seu flex'or secun'di interno'dii digito'rum pe'dis, (F.) Calcanéo-sous-phalangien commun, Calcanéo-sous-phalangien commun (Ch.), Muscle court fléchisseur commun des orteils. A muscle, placed at the middle of the sole of the foot. It is narrower and thicker behind than before, where it is divided into four portions. It arises from the posterior part of the inferior surface of the os calcis, and is inserted at the inferior surface of the second phalanx of the last four toes. It bends the second phalanges of the toes on the first, and the first on the metatarsal bones; in this manner augmenting the concavity of the vault of the foot.

FLEX'OR BRE'VIS MIN'IMI DIG'ITI, E. parvus minimi digiti.

FLEX'OR BRE'VIS MIN'IMI DIG'ITI PE'DIS, Parathenar mi'nor, (F.) Court fléchisseur du petit orteil, Tarso-sous-phalangien du petit orteil (Ch.). A muscle, situate at the anterior and outer part of the sole of the foot. It arises from the posterior extremity of the fifth metatarsal bone, and is inserted into the posterior part of the first phalanx of the little toe, which it bends.

FLEX'OR BRE'VIS POL'LICIS MA'NUS, F. secun'di interno'dii, F. pri'mi et secun'di os'sis pol'licis, The'nar, (F.) Court fléchisseur du ponce, Carpophalangien du ponce (Ch.), Demi-interosseux du ponce. A muscle, situate at the outer part of the palm of the hand. It is divided into two portions by the tendon of the Flex'or longus pol'licis. It arises from the os magnum, the anterior annular ligament of the carpus and the third metacarpal bone, and is inserted into the superior part of the first phalanx of the thumb, and into the two ossa sesamoida at the articulation of the first phalanx with the first metacarpal bone. Its use is to bend the first phalanx of the thumb on the first metacarpal bone, and the latter upon the trapezium.

FLEX'OR BRE'VIS POL'LICIS PE'DIS, F. brevis seu hallucis seu bre'vis pol'licis, (F.) Tarso-phalangien du ponce, Court fléchisseur du gros orteil, Tarso-sous-phalangien du premier orteil (Ch.). It is situate at the anterior and inner part of the sole of the foot; is thin and narrow behind; thick and divided into two portions before. It arises from the inferior part of the os calcis and the last two cuneiform bones, and is inserted at the inferior part of the base of the first phalanx of the great toe, and into the two sesamoid bones of the corresponding metatarso-phalangian articulation. It bends the first phalanx of the great toe on the first metacarpal bone.

FLEX'OR CAR'PI RADIA'LIS, Palmaris magnus—f. Carpi ulnaris, see Cubital (muscles)—f. Crus externus seu fibularis, Biceps flexor cruris—f. Femoris, Iliopsoas—f. Hallucis, F. brevis pollicis pedis—f. Hallucis longus, F. longus pollicis pedis.

A muscle, situate at the posterior and deep-seated part of the leg. It is broader at its middle than at its extremities, the inferior of which is divided into four portions. It arises from the posterior surface of the tibia, and its tendons are attached to the posterior part of the lower surface of the three phalanges of the last four toes. It bends the three phalanges on each other, and the toes on the metatarsus, and extends the foot on the leg.

The Accessorius Flex'oris Longi Digito'rum Pe'dis, Flex'or accessorius, Ca'ro quadra'ta Syl'vii, O. accessorius, Ma'ssa car'nea Jaco'bi Syl'vii, Planta'ris ve'rus, (F.) Accessoire du long fléchisseur commun des orteils, Carré (Chair), is a small muscle of the sole of the foot, which passes obliquely from the os calcis to the outer edge of the flexor longus, whose force it augments, and obliquity it corrects.

FLEX'OR LONGUS POL'LICIS MANUS, F. longus pol'licis, F. ter'tii interno'dii seu longis'simus pol'licis, (F.) Radio-phalangien du ponce (Ch.). Situate at the anterior and profound part of the forearm. It arises from the upper three-quarters of the anterior surface of the radius and interosseous ligament, and is inserted, by a tendon, into the anterior surface of the last phalanx of the thumb. It bends the second phalanx of the thumb on the first; the first on the corresponding metacarpal bone, and this upon the radius. It can, also, bend the hand on the forearm.

FLEX'OR LONGUS POL'LICIS PE'DIS, F. Hallucis seu Pol'licis longus, (F.) Péronéo-phalangien du gros orteil, Long fléchisseur du gros orteil, Péronéo-sous-phalangien du ponce (Ch.). It is situate at the posterior and profound part of the leg. It arises from the posterior surface of the fibula and the interosseous ligament, and is inserted, by means of a long tendon, into the inferior part of the first phalanx of the great toe. It bends the third phalanx on the first, and this upon the corresponding metatarsal bone. It augments the concavity of the sole of the foot, and extends the foot on the leg.

FLEX'OR OS'SIS METACAR'PI POL'LICIS, Opponens pollicis.

FLEX'OR PAR'VUS MIN'IMI DIG'ITI, F. bre'vis minimi dig'iti ma'nus, Abduc'tor minimi dig'iti, Hypothenar Riola'ni seu min'imi dig'iti, (F.) Carpophalangien du petit doigt (Ch.), Court fléchisseur du petit doigt. It arises from the anterior annular ligament of the carpus and the process of the os unciforme, and is inserted at the inner side of the superior extremity of the first phalanx of the little finger. It bends the first phalanx of the little finger.

FLEX'OR PERFORANS, F. profundus perforans—f. Perforatus, F. sublimis perforatus—f. Perforatus pedis, F. brevis digitorum pedis—f. Primi internodii, Opponens pollicis—*f. langettien commun (Ch.), Fléchisseur profond des doigts. A thick, flat, long muscle, seated beneath the Flexor sublimis perforatus. Its upper extremity is simple, and arises from the anterior surface of the ulna and from the interosseous ligament. Its inferior extremity terminates by four tendons, which, after having passed through slits in the sublimis, are inserted into the anterior surface of the last phalanges of the four fingers. It bends the third phalanges on the second, and in other respects has the same use as the flexor sublimis perforatus.

FLEX'OR SECUN'DI INTERNO'DII DIGITO'RUM PE'DIS, F. brevis digitorum pedis—f. Tertii internodii digitorum manus—f. Tertii internodii digitorum manus, F. profundus perforans—*f. FLEX'OR SUBLI'MIS PERFORA'TUS, F. Perforatus, (F.) Fléchisseur sublime ou superficiel des doigts, Épitrokle-phalangien commun, (Ch.) It is a thick, flat muscle, seated at the anterior part of the forearm. Its upper extremity, which is simple, arises from the internal condyle of the os humeri;—from the coronoid process of the ulna, and from the anterior edge of the radius. Its lower extremity divides into four tendons, which slide under the anterior annular ligament of the carpus, and are inserted into the second phalanges of the last four fingers, after having been slit to allow the tendons of the flexor profundus to pass through them. This muscle bends the second phalanges on the first; these on the carpal bones, and the hand on the forearm.

Floc'culus, (dim. of floccus, 'a flock of wool,') Pneumogast'ric lob'ule, Lob'ulus pneumogast'ricus. A long and slender prominence, extending from the side of the vallecule around the corpus restiforme to the crus cerebelli, lying behind the filaments of the pneumogastric nerves.

Flood'ing, (from Sax. plob, from plopan, 'to flow,') Metrorrhagia.

Flor de Mistela, see Mistura.

Flor'ence, Cli'mate of. This agreeable Italian city is by no means a favorable residence for the phthisical invalid. Sir James Clark affirms, indeed, that he does not know any class of invalids for whom Florence offers a favorable residence. It is subject to sudden vicissitudes of temperature, and to cold, piercing winds during the winter and spring.

Flow, (Sax. plopan, 'to flow,') Flux.

Flow'er de Luce, Iris Germanica.

Flow'ers, Flo'res, (F.) Fleurs. The ancient chemists gave this name to different solid and volatile substances obtained by sublimation. The term is not yet entirely banished from chemical and medical language, as Flowers of Benjamin, Flowers of Sulphur, &c.

FLOW'ERS, Menses.

FLOW'ERS, FOUR CARMIN'ATIVE, Quat'uor flo'res carminati'vi, were chamomile, dill, feverfew, and melilot.

FLOW'ERS, FOUR COR'DIAL, Quat'uor flo'res cordia'les, were formerly, borage, bugloss, roses, and violets.

Fluctua'tio, (fluctuare, fluctuatum,—fluctus, 'a wave,'—'to undulate,') Fluctuation, Anapleusis—f. Aurium, Tinnitus aurium.

Fluctua'tion, Fluctua'tio, Undula'tio, (F.) Undulation. The undulation of a fluid collected in any natural or artificial cavity, which is felt by pressure or by percussion, properly practiced—periph'eric fluctua'tion. In ascites, the fluctuation is felt by one of the hands being applied to one side of the abdomen while the other side is struck with the other hand. In abscesses, fluctuation is perceived by pressing on the tumor, with one or two fingers alternately, on opposite points.

Flum'mery, (corrupted from frumenty [?],) (Scotch) Sow'ens. A preparation of oatmeal, which forms a light article of food during convalescence. It may be made as follows:—Take of oatmeal or groats, a quart. Rub with two quarts of hot water, and let the mixture stand until it becomes sour; then add another quart of hot water, and strain through a hair sieve. Let it stand until a white sediment is deposited: decant, and wash the sediment with cold water. Boil this with fresh water till it forms a mucilage, stirring the whole time.

Fluores'cence. A property observed by Prof. Stokes, by which some media exert a peculiar influence in dispersing light of certain color and refrangibility, both of which qualities become altered. Dilute solution of quinine, for example, changes dark blue and violet to sky blue. New bodies have thus been discovered in physiological chemistry.

Flush, Flush'ing, (F.) Rougeurs, Bouffée de Chaleur, ([G.] fliessen, 'to flow,') The temporary redness and heat produced by accumulation of blood in the capillaries of the face; as the sudden 'flush' or 'blush of emotion:' the 'flush of hectic.'

Flux, Flux'us, Proflu'vium, Flu'or, Flow, (fluere, fluxum, 'to flow,') A discharge, Rhy'sis. In nosology, it comprises a series of affections, the principal symptom of which is the discharge of fluid. Generally it is employed for dysentery.

Flux, Bil'ious, Flux'us bilio'sus. A discharge of bile, either by vomiting or by stool, or by both, as in cholera.

Fœ'num Camelo'rum, ('hay of camels,') Juncus odoratus—f. Græcum, Trigonella fœnum.

Fœtab'ulum, (fæteo, 'I smell badly,') An encysted abscess.

Fœ'tal, Fœta'lis. Relating to the fœtus. A name given to the parts connected with the fœtus. Thus we say—the fœtal surface of the placenta, in contradistinction to the uterine or maternal surface.

Fœ'TAL CIRCULA'TION differs from that of the adult in several respects. Commencing with the placenta, where it probably undergoes some change analogous to what occurs in the lungs in extra-uterine existence, the blood proceeds by the umbilical vein as far as the liver, where a part of it is poured into the vena porta; the other proceeds into the vena cava inferior; the latter, having received the suprahepatic veins, pours its blood into the right auricle. From the right auricle, a part of the blood is sent into the right ventricle; the rest passes directly through into the left auricle, by the foramen ovale. When the right ventricle contracts, the blood is sent into the pulmonary artery, but as the function of respiration is not going on, little blood passes to the lungs; the rest goes through the ductus arteriosus into the aorta. The blood, received by the left auricle from the lungs, as well as that which passed through the foramen ovale, is transmitted into the left ventricle, by the contraction of which it is sent into the aorta, and by means of the umbilical arteries, which arise from the hypogastric, it is returned to the placenta.

Fœ'TAL HEAD. The diameters of this at the full period are as follows:—1. The Biparietal or transverse, extending from one parietal protuberance to the other, and measuring $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches. 2. The Temporal, from one temple to another, 3 inches. 3. The Occipito-mental, from the occiput to the chin; the greatest of all, 5 inches. 4. The Occipito-frontal or antero-posterior, $4\frac{1}{2}$ or $4\frac{3}{4}$ inches. 5. The Cervico-bregmatic, from the nape of the neck to the centre of the anterior fontanelle. 6. The Fronto-mental, from the forehead to the chin, about $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches. 7. The Trachelo-bregmatic, from the front of the neck to the anterior fontanelle, $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches. 8. The Vertical diameter, from the vertex to the base of the cranium.

Fœ'TAL NUTRIT'ION, Cytotrophy.

Fœta'tion, Pregnancy.

Fœ'ticide, Fœtici'dium, (fœtus, and cœdere, 'to kill,') Aborticid'ium. Criminal abortion.

Fæ'tidus, Fetid.

Fæ'tor, ('a bad smell.') Dysodia.

Fæ'tor ALA'RUM. The disagreeable rank odor exhaled from the axillæ.

Fæ'tor O'RIS, Breath, offensive.

Fæ'tus, gen. Fæ'tūs, Fæ'tus, Cyē'ma, O'nus ven'tris, Sar'cina. The young of any creature. The unborn child. (F.) Fētus, Faix, Fruit. By κρυφα, Cyē'ma, Hippocrates meant the fecundated, but still imperfect germ. It corresponded with the term embryo, as now used; while εμβρυον, 'embryo,' signified the fœtus at a more advanced stage of uterogestation. The majority of anatomists apply to the germ the name embryo, which it retains until the third month of gestation, and with some until the period of quickening; while fœtus is applied to it in its latter stages. The terms are, however, often used indiscriminately. When the ovule has been fecundated in the ovary, it proceeds slowly towards, and enters the uterus, with which it becomes ultimately connected by means of the placenta. When first seen, the fœtus has the form of a gelatinous flake, which some have compared to an ant, a grain of barley, a worm curved upon itself, &c. The foetal increment is very rapid in the first, third, fourth, and sixth months of its formation, and at the end of nine months it has attained its full dimensions—Enfant à terme. Generally, there is but one fœtus in utero; sometimes, there are two; rarely three. The fœtus presents considerable difference in its shape, weight, length, situation in the womb, proportion of its various parts to each other, arrangement and texture of its organs, state of its functions at different periods of gestation, &c. All these differences are important in an obstetrical and medico-legal point of view.

Fæ'tus CIRCULAT'ION IN THE, Foetal circulation—f. in Fœtus, Cryptodidymus—f. Included, Cryptodidymus.

Fæ'tus SEPTIMES'TRIS. A seven months' fœtus.

Fæ'tus SYRENIFORMIS, (Syren, 'a mermaid,' and forma, 'shape.') A fœtus in which the lower extremities are conjoined.

Fæ'tus ZEPHYRIUS, Mole.

Foment', (Fove're, 'to keep warm,') (F.) Étuver, Bassiner. To apply a fomentation to a part.

Fomenta'tion, Fomenta'tio, Fo'tus, Py'ria, Thermas'ma, Chlias'ma, Æone'sis, Perfu'sio, Asper'sio, Fomen'tum (quasi fovementum), (F.) Hydrolé, Hydrolotif. A sort of partial bathing, by the application of cloths which have been previously dipped in hot water, or in some medicated decoction. They act, chiefly, by virtue of their warmth and moisture, except in the case of narcotic fomentations, where some additional effect is obtained. Several fomentations are official in the French Codex (1866).

A dry fomentation, Fomen'tum sic'cum, Lec'tulus medica'tus, is a warm, dry application to a part;—as a hot brick, wrapped in flannel; a bag, half filled with chamomile flowers made hot, &c.

FOMENTA'TION HERBS, Her'bæ pro fo'tu. The herbs, ordinarily sold under this title by the English apothecary, are—southernwood, tops of sea wormwood, chamomile flowers, each two parts; bay leaves, one part. ʒiijss. of these to Ovj. of water.

Fomen'tum, (quasi Fovimen'tum.) Fomentation—f. Siccum, see Fomentation.

Fo'mes (gen. Fo'mitis) Mor'bi, F. Ma'li, (fomes, 'fuel.') The focus or seat of any disease. (F.) Foyer.

FO'MES VENTRIC'ULI, Hypochondriasis, Spleen.

Fom'ites, (pl. of fo'mes, gen. fom'itis, 'tinder, fuel, any thing which retains heat,') Enaus'ma, Zopyron. A term applied to substances which are supposed to retain contagious effluvia; as woollen goods, feathers, cotton, &c.

Fonction, Function.

Fonctionnel, Functional.

Fond, Fundus.

Fondamental, Fundamental.

Fondant, (fundere, 'to fuse,') Solvent.

Fondement, (from fond,) Anus.

Fond'ling, Idiot.

Fongiforme, Fungoid.

Fongoide, Fungoid.

Fongosité, Fungosity.

Fongueux, Fungous.

Fongus, Fungus—f. Médullaire, Encephaloid.

Fonsange, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Fonsange is situated near Nismes in France. The water is sulphuretted.

Fontaine de la Tête, ('fountain of the head,') See Fontanella.

Fonta'na, Canal of, (after Dr. Felix Fontana, a celebrated physiologist.) A canal of a triangular shape, at the inner side of the ciliary circle; partly formed by the groove at the inner edges of the cornea and sclerótica.

Fonta'NA, SPACE OF, see Space.

Fontanel'la, Fontanel, (dim. of fons, gen. fontis, 'a fountain,') Fons, Fons pulsatilis seu pulsans, Ver'tex pal'pitans, Breg'ma, Fontic'ulus, Lacu'na, Mould, (F.) Fontanella. The opening of the head. A name given to a space occupied by a cartilaginous membrane, in the foetus and new-born child, and situate at the union of the angles of the bones of the cranium. There are six fontanels. 1. The great or sincipital or anterior, Fontic'ulus quadrangula'ris, Fontaine de la Tête, situate at the junction of the sagittal and coronal sutures. 2. The small or bregmatic or posterior, situate at the part where the posterior and superior angles of the parietal bones unite with the upper part of the os occipitis. 3. The two sphenoidal, in the temporal fossæ; and, 4. The two mastoid or of Casse'rius, Fontic'uli mastoïdes seu Casse'rii, at the union of the parietal, occipital, and temporal bones.

Fonte, (from (L.) fundere, 'to fuse,') Colliquation.

Fontes (pl. of Fons) Medicati Plumbarii, Plombières, mineral waters of—f. Sulphurei calidi, Waters, mineral, sulphureous.

Fonticule à Pois, see Fonticulus.

Fontic'ulus, Fontanel'la, (dim. of fons, gen. fontis, 'a fountain,') Exuto'rium, Ex'utory, Issue, (F.) Fonticule, Cautére, Exutoire. A small ulcer produced by art, either by the aid of caustics or of cutting instruments; the discharge from which is kept up with a view to fulfil certain therapeutic indications. The Pea issue, (F.) Fonticule à pois, is kept up by means of a pea placed in it. This pea, (F.) Pois à cautère, is sometimes formed of wax; at others, the young, blasted fruit of the orange is employed. The common dried garden pea answers the purpose. The seton is also an issue.

Fontic'ulus Casse'rii, see Fontanella—f. Mastoïdeus, see Fontanella—f. Quadrangularis, see Fontanella.

Food, (Sax. foðe,) Aliment—f. Chemical, see Ferri phosphas—f. Farinaceous, see Farinaceous—f. of the Gods, Asafoetida.

Food or Soup for Infants and Invalids, Lie'big's. This consists chiefly of fine wheaten flour and flour of malt, (barley grains made to germinate and baked,) to be made into a soup with cow's milk.

Food, Prince of Wales's, a farinaceous preparation, which is used in the same cases as arrow-root, is said to consist entirely of potato-flour.

Fool's Parsley, Æthusa cynapium—f. Stones, male, Orchis mascula.

Foot, (Sax. foð,) Pes—f. Flat, see Kylosis—f. Fungous, of India, Mycetoma—f. Griffon's, Gryphus pes.

Foot and Mouth Disease. A term generally applied to the murrain of cattle. See Murrain.

Foot'ling Case. A presentation of the foot or feet in parturition.

Fora'men, gen. Fora'minis, Tre'ma, Opē, (foro, 'I pierce,') Aulus, (F.) Trou. Any cavity, pierced through and through. Also, the orifice of a canal.

FORA'MEN CÆ'CUM OF FRON'TAL BONE, see Cæcum foramen.

FORA'MEN CÆ'CUM OF MEDUL'LA OBLONGA'TA or of Vicq d'Azyr, (F.) Trou borgne. A tolerably deep fossa at the point where the median furrow at the anterior surface of the medulla oblongata meets the pons.

FORA'MEN CÆ'CUM OS'ISIS MAXILLA'RIS SUPERIORIS, see Palatine canals—f. Cæcum of tongue, see Cæcum foramen, and Tongue—f. Carotid, see Carotica foramina.

FORA'MEN CENTRA'LE seu Fovea centra'lis. The central fora'men, surrounded by the Lim'bus lu'teus, and yel'low spot of the retina, discovered by Schmerring, Mac'ula lu'tea fla'va seu au'rea, Punctum au'reum, (F.) Tache jaune. It is situate about two lines to the outside of the optic nerve, and in the direction of the axis of the eye. A dark red spot in its centre is termed fove'ola.

FORA'MEN COMMUN'E ANTE'RIOUS, Vulva—f. Commune posterius, see Anus—f. Condylod, see Condylod—f. Conjugationis, see Conjugation.

FORA'MEN, DEN'TAL. A foramen on the internal surface of the ramus of the lower jaw for the passage of the inferior dental nerve and vessels.

FORA'MEN DEX'TRUM, F. venæ cavæ—f. Ethmoïdeum, Orbital foramen, internal—f. of Galen, Botal foramen—f. Incisivum, see Palatine canal—f. Infraorbitarium, see Suborbitar canal—*f. FORAMEN VENÆ CAVÆ, F. quadratum seu quadrilaterum seu dextrum. The foramen in the diaphragm, through which the vena cava passes.

FORAMEN VERTEBRÆ, see Vertebrae — f. Vesalii, Vesalius, foramen of — f. of Winslow, Hiatus of Winslow.

FORAMINA CUBROSA, see Cribratus — f. of Morgagni, see Euthra.

FORAMINA THEBESII. Openings resembling vascular orifices, found below the orifice of the vena cava superior in the right auricle, which are supposed to be the openings of veins, Venæ min'ima cordis.

FORATIO, (forare, foratum, 'to bore,') Trepanning.

FORCE, (fortis, 'strong,') Vis, Potentia, Energia, Dynamis, Cra'tus. Any power which produces an action. Those powers which are inherent in organization are called vital forces. We say, also, organic force, and muscular force, to designate that of the organs in general, or of the muscles in particular. To the latter the word Dynamis (δυναμις) corresponds; and the absence of this force is termed adynamia. The vital forces have to be carefully studied by the pathologist. The doctrine of diseases is greatly dependent on their augmentation or diminution; freedom or oppression, &c.

FORCE OF ASSIMILATION, Plastic force—f. Catalytic, see Catalysis — f. Cell, see Cell force—f. of Formation, Plastic force — f. Germ, Plastic force — f. Médecatrice, Vis medicatrix — f. Force-réal, Min'eral Waters of. The name of a mountain, situate four leagues from Perpignan, in France. The water is chalybeate.

For'ceps, gen. For'cipis, (quasi ferriceps, from ferrum, 'iron,' and capio, 'I take,') Pincers, La'bis, Vol'sel'læ. An instrument for removing bodies which it would be inconvenient or impracticable to seize with the fingers. (F.) Pince, Pincette. There are various kinds of forceps:—1. The ordinary kind, contained in every dressing-case, for removing lint, &c., from wounds or ulcers, (F.) Pince à pansement ou à anneaux. 2. Dissecting or Ligature or Arterial For'ceps, (F.) Pince à dissection, P. à ligature, to lay hold of delicate parts. When it presents on one of its branches a spring attaching it to the other branch, it is called a Spring Forceps, (F.) Pince à Ressort. When the branches are held together by a movable catch or clasp, it is called Pince à Verrou. 3. Different kinds of Vulsellum forceps, furnished or not with teeth, to seize hold of parts. Polypus For'ceps, Tooth For'ceps. The For'ceps of Museux, (F.) Pince de Museux, is for laying hold of the tonsils or other parts to be removed. 4. The Bullet For'ceps, (F.) Tireballe, Pince tire-balle. 5. The Lithotomy For'ceps, Lithol'abon, Lithago'gum, Tenac'ula, Vol'sel'læ, which resembles the Craniotomy Forceps, (F.) Tenette. 6. The Cataract For'ceps, (F.) Pince à Cataracte, resembling the dissecting forceps, but much finer. 7. The Pince à gaine, the branches of which can be brought together, and retained by a movable sheath.

Forceps is also an instrument used by obstetrical practitioners to embrace the head, and bring it through the pelvis. It consists of two branches, blades or levers; one of which, in the case of the short forceps, is passed over the ear of the child, and the other opposite the former, so that the blades may lock. When the head is securely included between the blades, the operation of extraction can be commenced. See Parturition.

For'ceps, see Corpus callosum — f. Anterior, see Corpus callosum — f. Arterial, see Forceps — f. Bullet, see Forceps — f. Craniotomy, see Forceps — f. Lithotomy, see Forceps — f. of Museux, see Forceps — f. Polypus, see Forceps — f. Tooth, see Forceps.

Ford's Bal'sam of Hore'hound, see Balsam of horehound.

Fore, Ante.

Fore'arm, Antibrah'chium, Pyg'më, Pars inferior bra'chii, Cubitus, (F.) Avant-bras. The part of the upper extremity comprised between the arm and the hand. It is composed of two bones — radius and ulna — and twenty muscles.

Fore'finger, Digitus (secundus).

Fore'front, Front.

Fore'head, Front.

For'eign Bod'y, Extraneous body.

Fore'milk, Colostrum.

Forensic Anat'omy, (forum, 'a court of justice,') see Anatomy — f. Medicine, Medicine, legal.

For'es, (pl. of foris, 'a gate,') Vulva.

Fore'skin, Prepuce.

Fore'top, Front.

For'fex, gen. For'ficis, Ciseau, Scissors — f. Dentaria, Dentagra.

Forfic'ula Auricula'ria, (dim. of forfex, 'scissors,') Ear'wig. An insect of the Order Orthoptera, which occasionally enters the meatus auditorius externus, and excites intense pain. It may be destroyed by tobacco-smoke, or by oil poured into the meatus.

Forges, Min'eral Waters of. Forges is situate four leagues from Gournay, in the department of Seine Inférieure, France. There are three springs, which are acidulous chalybeates. These are called Royal, Reinette, and Cardinal, in honor of Louis XIII., Queen Anne of Austria, and Cardinal Richelieu, who used them.

Forgets, see Epilepsy.

Form'ative, (formare, formatum, 'to form,') Plastic.

Formed Mate'rial. Every cell is, according to Beale, composed of matter in two conditions, one living and formative — germinal matter; the other lifeless — formed material. The former selects nutrient matter, which permeates the latter, in its passage towards the germinal matter.

Form'iate of Ammo'nia. A combination of formic acid and ammonia, which has been administered in chronic paralytic disease, in the dose of five grains. Formic acid, diluted with water, has been used externally on paralyzed limbs.

Form'ic Ac'id, see Formiate of ammonia.

Form'ica, Myrmex. 'The ant or pismire.' (F.) Fourmi. It contains an acid juice and gross oil, which were formerly extolled as aphrodisiacs. The chrysalides of the animal are said to be diuretic and carminative; and have been used in dropsy.—Also, the name of a black wart, verru'ca formica'ria, with a broad base and cleft surface; so called because the pain attending it resembles the biting of an ant, μυρμηκία, myrmecia. A varicose tumor on the anus and glans penis. Miliary herpes.

FORMICA AMBULATO'RIA, Herpes circinatus — f. Corrosive, Herpes exedens.

Form'icant, Formicant, Myrmecizon, (from formica,) (F.) Fourmillant. An epithet given to the pulse, Pulsus formicans, when extremely small, scarcely perceptible, unequal, and communicating a sensation like that of the motion of an ant felt through a thin texture.

Formica'tion, Formica'tio, Myrmecias'mus, Myrmeciasis, Myrmecis'mus, Myrmeco'sis, Stupor formicans, (F.) Fourmillement. A pain, compared with that which would be caused by a number of ants creeping on a part.

For'mix, gen. Formicis, (from formica, [?]) Herpes esthiomenus.

Form'ula, (dim. of forma, 'form or manner,') Prescription — f. Extemporanea, see Magistral — f. Magistralis, see Magistral — f. Medica, Prescription — f. Officialis, see Magistral.

Form'ulary, Formula'rium, Narthe'cia, Narthe'cium, Nar'ther. One skilled in preparing writs or forms of process. A collection of medical formulæ or receipts.

Formule, Prescription.

For'myl, Perchloride of, Chloroform — f. Iodide of, Iodoform.

Formyle, Iodure de, Iodoform.

For'mylum Chloratum, Chloroform.

For'nix, gen. For'nicis, 'an arch or vault,' F. cer'ebri seu trilat'erus seu tricuspidalis, Psa'lis, Psalid'ium, Cam'era, Testu'do cer'ebri, Ar'cus medulla'ris, (F.) Trigone cérébral (Ch.), Voûte à trois piliers, Triangle Médullaire. A medullary body in the brain, below the corpus callosum and above the middle ventricle, on the median line. This body, which is curved upon itself, terminates anteriorly by a prolongation, which constitutes its anterior pillar, Orus seu Colum'na for'nicis, (F.) Pilier antérieur; and posteriorly by two similar prolongations, called posterior pillars or crura. See Achicolum, and Vault.

FOR'NIX CER'EBRI, Fornix — f. Conjunctivæ, see Conjunctiva — f. Cranii, Calva — f. Vaginæ, see Laquear vaginæ, and Vagina.

Forn'peckles, Ephelides.

For'pex, gen. For'piciis, Scissors.

For'ret, ('forehead,') Front.

Forstera'nia Difform'is, Echites difform'is seu puber'ula; indigenous; Ord. Apocynaceæ; is said to be used as a wash with milk to remove freckles. The juice destroys warts.

Fortifiant, (fortis, 'strong,' and facere, 'to make,') Corroborant, Tonic.

Fortraiture, Hysteralgia.

For'tyknut, Achyranthes repens.

Fos'sa, Fosse, (fodio, fossam, 'I dig,') Scam'ma, (F.) Fosse. A cavity of greater or less depth, the entrance to which is always larger than the base. The fossæ of bones have been called simple, when they belong to one bone only, as the parietal fossæ; and compound, (F.) Fosses composées, when several concur in their formation, as the orbital fossæ, temporal fossæ, the fossæ of the skull, &c.

Fos'sa, AMYGDALOID, Amygdaloid excavation. The space between the anterior and posterior pillars of the fauces, which is occupied by the tonsils.

Fos'sa AMYN'TE. A kind of bandage, used in fractures of the nose; so called, by Galen, from Amyntas of Rhodes, its inventor. It consisted of a long band, applied round the head, the turns of which crossed at the root of the nose.

Fos'sa ANON'YMA, Navicular fossa — f. Antheleis, Navicular fossa — f. Canina, Canine fossa.

Fos'sa CEREBEL'LI, (F.) Fosse cérébelleuse. The inferior occipital fossa, which lodges the corresponding portion of the cerebellum.

Fos'sa CON'CHÆ, Conecha.

Fos'sa CORONA'LI, Coronal or frontal os'sa.

A depression on the orbital plate of the frontal or coronal bone, which supports the anterior lobe of the brain.

Fos'sa CORONOIDEA, Coronoid fos'sa. A cavity before the inferior extremity of the humerus, in which the coronoid process of the ulna is engaged during the flexion of the forearm.

Fos'sa COTYLOIDEA, see Cotyloid — f. Cystidis felleæ, see Gallbladder.

Fos'sa, DIGAS'TRIC, Fos'sa digas'trica. A deep groove on the mastoid portion of the temporal bone, which gives origin to the digastric muscle.

Fos'sa, DIG'ITAL, F. trochanteric.

Fos'sa ETHMOÏDA'LI, Ethmoid fos'sa. A shallow gutter on the upper surface of the cribriform plate of the ethmoid bone, in which is lodged the expanded portion of the olfactory nerves.

Fos'sa OF THE GALL'BLADDER, see Gallbladder — f. Genu, Poples — f. Glandis, see Glans — f. Glenoid, see Glenoid.

Fos'sa GUTTURA'LI, Guttural fos'sa. The depression which forms the guttural region of the base of the cranium, between the foramen magnum and posterior nares.

Fos'sa HEMISPHE'RI, see Crista vestibuli — f. Hyaloides, see Hyaloid — f. Iliac, see Iliac fossæ — f. Incisiva, F. myrtiformis — f. Infraclavicularis, see Infraclavicular — f. Infraorbital, Canine fossa — f. Infraspinous, see Infraspinata fossa.

Fos'sa INNOMINA'TA, Navicular fossa.

Fos'sa, ISCHIOREC'TAL, Perineal fossa — f. Jugularis, Jugular fossa, see Suprasternal — f. Lachrymalis, Lachrymal fossa — f. Lenticularis, see Hyaloid membrane — f. Magna Muliebris, Vulva — f. Magna Sylvii, Fissura Sylvii — f. Mandibularis, see Glenoid.

Fos'sa, MEN'TAL, Fos'sa mentalis. A small depression on each side of the symphysis on the anterior surface of the body of the maxilla inferior, for the attachment of muscles.

Fos'sa MYRTIFORM'IS, F. Incisiva. A depression in the superior maxillary bone just above the incisor teeth. See Myrtiform.

Fos'sa NAVICULA'RI, Navicular fossa — f. Orbicularis, see Crista vestibuli.

Fos'sa OCCIPITA'LI, Occipital fos'sa. The occipital fossæ are four in number: the superior or cerebral, and the inferior or cerebellous. They are separated by a groove, which lodges the lateral sinus.

Fos'sa OLECRA'NI, Olecranon — f. Orbicularis, see Crista vestibuli.

Fos'sa OVA'LI, Navicular fossa, see also Crista vestibuli and Oval fossa — f. Palatina, Palate — f. Patellaris, see Hyaloid membrane — f. Perinæi, Perineal fossa — f. Pituitaria, Sella Turcica.

Fos'sa POPLITEA, Popliteal fos'sa. The hollow of the ham: — the popliteal region.

Fos'sa, POR'TAL, see Liver — f. Pterygoidea, see Pterygoid — f. Rotunda, see Crista vestibuli — f. Scaphoides, Navicularis fossa — f. Semiovalis, see Crista vestibuli.

Fos'sa SIGMOÏDEA, Sulcus si'nus lateralis. A broad deep groove on the inner process of the mastoid portion of the temporal bone, which supports part of the lateral sinus.

Fos'sa, SPHE'NO-MAX'ILLARY, see Spheno-maxillary.

Fos'sa, SUB'LINGUAL. An oval depression in the inferior maxillary bone, for lodging the sublingual gland. The submaxillary gland is lodged in an oblong depression, called the submaxillary fos'sa.

Fos'sa, SUBMAX'ILLARY, see Fossa, sublingual — f. Suborbital, Canine fossa.

Fos'sa, SUBPYRAM'IDAL, F. subpyramidalis. A deep fossa under the pyramid, and behind the fenestra rotunda in the middle ear, remarkable for its constancy, and pierced by several foramina at the bottom.

Fos'sa SUBROTUN'DA, see Navicula, Crista vestibuli—f. Subscapularis, see Scapula.

Fossette (F.), (dim. of fosse), Scrobic'ulus, Both'rion. Several depressions are so called. A dimpled chin, Fossette du menton, consists in a slight depression which certain persons have on the chin. A dimple of the cheek, (F.) Fossette des joues, a depression which occurs on the cheeks of certain persons when they laugh.—Scrobic'ulus cordis, Anticar'dion, Præcor'dium, (F.) Fossette du cœur, is the depression observed on a level with the xiphoid cartilage at the anterior and inferior part of the chest. It is, also, called pit of the stomach, (F.) Creux de l'estomac.

Fossette, Fos'sula, A'nulus, Both'rion, is also a small ulcer of the transparent cornea, the centre of which is deep.

Fossette Angulaire du Quatrième Ventricule, Calamus scriptorius—f. du Cœur, Scrobic'ulus cordis.

Fosso'rium, (fossor, 'a digger,') Fleam.

Found'ling Hos'pital, Brephotropeum.

Fourche (F.), (fourché, 'cleft, from furca, 'a fork,') Apostéma Phalan'gum. A French provincial term for small abscesses which form on the fingers and hands of working people. Also, an instrument, invented by M. J. L. Petit, for compressing the ranine artery in cases of hemorrhage from that vessel.

Fourchette, (dim. of fourche, 'a fork,') Furcil'la, 'a little fork,') Fur'cula. A surgical instrument used for raising and supporting the tongue during the operation of dividing the frænum.

Fourchette, in anatomy, is the posterior commissure of the labia majora, called, also, Præ'nium, Fræ'nulum puden'di, Fur'cula Labio'rum.—The cartilago ensiformis; so called from its being sometimes cleft, like a fork.—Also, the semilunar notch at the superior or clavicular extremity of the sternum.

Fourmi, Formica.

Fourmillant, (from fourmi,) Formicant.

Fourmillement, Formication.

Fou'sel Oil, ([G.] Fusel, 'bad brandy,') see Oil, fusel.

Fo'vea, dim. Fove'ola, (fodio, 'I dig,') Bo'thrus, 'a slight depression,') Fos'sula.—The pudendum muliebre; see Vulva.—The fossa navicularis.—A vapor-bath for the lower extremities.

Fo'vea AXILLA'ris, Axilla—f. Centralis retinæ, Foramen centrale—f. Elliptica, see Crista vestibuli—f. Hemisphærica, see Crista vestibuli—f. Lacrymalis, Lachrymal fossa, see Fossa—f. Navicularis, see Urethra—f. Oculi, Orbit—f. Ovalis, Ovalis fossa—f. Semi-elliptica, see Crista vestibuli—f. Sulciformis, see Crista vestibuli.

Fo'veæ Glandula'res are depressions on the interior of the skull, corresponding to the glandulæ Pacchioni.

Fove'ola, see Fovea, and Foramen centrale retinæ.

Fow'er, Syncope.

Fox'berry, Arbutus uva ursi.

Fox'glove, Digitalis.

Foyer, ([L.] focus, 'a fireplace,') Fomes morbi.

Fractonnement, (frangere, fractum, 'to break,') 'to bruise,') Segmentation.

Fractu'ra, Fracture—f. Dentis, Odontoclasia—f. Surecularia, Fracture, greenstick.

Fracture, Fractu'ra, Catag'ma, C. Fractu'ra, Catax'is, Cla'sis, Clas'ma, Ag'mê, Ag'ma, Diar'rhagê. A solution of continuity in a bone, Osteoclasia. A simple fracture is when the bone only is divided. A compound fracture is a division of the bone with a wound of the integuments communicating with the bone—the bone, indeed, generally protruding. In a com'minuted fracture, Alphite'don (αλφειτών), Carye'don Catag'ma (καρυέδον καταγμα), the bone is broken into several pieces; and in a complicated fracture there is, in addition to the injury done to the bone, a lesion of some considerable vessel, nervous trunk, &c. Fractures are also termed transverse, oblique, &c., according to their direction. The treatment of fractures consists, in general, in reducing the fragments when displaced; maintaining them when reduced; preventing the symptoms which may be likely to arise; and combating them when they occur. The reduction of fractures must be effected by extension, counter-extension, and coaptation. The parts are kept in apposition by position, rest, and an appropriate apparatus. The position must vary according to the kind of fracture. Commonly, the fractured limb is placed on a horizontal or slightly inclined plane, in a state of extension; or rather in a middle state between extension and flexion, according to the case. (The various methods adapted to the treatment of special forms of fracture will be found described in systematic treatises on Surgery or Fractures.)

FRAC'TURE, BUT'TONHOLE, Per'forating Fracture, (F.) F. à Boutonnière. An incomplete fracture from a sabre blow or a gunshot wound, in which a piece is fairly punched out from a bone.

FRAC'TURE, CAM'ERATED, Camerosis.

FRAC'TURE, GREENSTICK, Fractu'ra Surecular'ria, Flexu'ra Os'sis, (F.) Fracture incomplète.

An incomplete fracture of a long bone in childhood, in which the central earthy part may be broken, while the surrounding membranous part retains its continuity. This is marked by the bone being only bent, not separated.

FRACTURE, PERFORATING, F. buttonhole.

FRACTURE, POTT'S. Fracture of the fibula, with displacement of the tibia.

FRACTURE OF THE RA'DIUS, BAR'TON'S, Bar'ton's fracture. A term applied to a fracture of the lower extremity of the radius, which commences at the articular surface, and extends upwards for an inch or more, to terminate on the dorsal aspect. Owing to the extensor muscles drawing up the separated portion of the bone, and with it the carpus, a deformity results, which has been confounded with simple dislocation. In consequence of the fracture having been well described by Dr. John Rhea Barton, of Philadelphia, it is often called after him.

FRACTURE OF THE RA'DIUS, COL'LES'S, Col'les's Fracture. A name given to a fracture of the radius at the distance of about an inch and a half above the radio-carpal articulation, well described by Professor Colles, of Dublin.

Fracture en Rave, Raphanodon.

FRACTURE, SAL'ISWICH. A longitudinal fracture or splitting of the bone of the arm.

Fractures par Résonnance, see Contrafractura.

Fræ'na Morgagn'ii, (pl. of Frænum.) F. of the valve of Bauhin.

FRÆ'NA OF THE VALVE OF BAU'HIN, (F.) Freins de la valvule de Bauhin. A name given by Morgagni to the projecting lines formed by the junction of the extremities of the two lips of the ileo-cæcal valve. They are also called Fræna and Retinacula Morgagn'ii.

Frænulum, (dim. of frænum.) see Frænum, Bride—f. Cerebri, F. veli medullaris anterioris—f. Clitoridis, Frænum clitoridis—f. Epiglottidis, Glossoepiglottic ligament—f. Labiorum, Fourchette—f. Novum, Tænia semicircularis—f. Pudendi, Fourchette.

FRÆ'NULUM VE'LI MEDULLA'RIS ANTERIO'RIS. A narrow slip, given off by the commissure of the encephalic testes, which strengthens the junction of the testes with the valve of Vieussens.

FRÆ'NUM, Fre'num, (F.) Frein, 'a bridle.'—Frænulum, Filet'um, Filament'um. 'A small bridle.'—A bridle. Names given to several membranous folds, which bridle and retain certain organs.

FRÆ'NUM CLITO'RIDIS, Frænulum Clito'ridis seu glan'dis clitor'idis, (F.) Frein du Clitoris. A slight duplicature formed by the union of the internal portions of the upper extremity of the nymphæ.

FRÆ'NUM EPIGLOT'TIDIS, Glossoepiglottic ligament—f. Glandis, F. penis.

FRÆ'NUM LABIO'RUM, (F.) Frein des lèvres. There are two of these; one for the upper, the other for the lower lip. They unite these parts to the maxillary bone, and are formed by the mucous membrane of the mouth. Also, the Fourchette.

FRÆ'NUM LIN'GUE, Frænulum seu Vin'culum Lin'gue, Glossodes'mus, Filet'um, (F.) Filet ou Frein de la langue, is a triangular reflection formed by the mucous membrane of the mouth, and situate between the inferior paries of that cavity and the inferior surface of the tongue. When the frænum extends as far as the extremity of the tongue, it cramps its movements, interferes with sucking, &c. This inconvenience is remedied by carefully snipping it with a pair of scissors. The French call this l'opération du filet.

FRÆ'NUM PE'NIS, F. seu Frænulum seu Vin'culum Præpu'tii, F. Glan'dis, Cynodes'mion, Cynodes'mus, Vin'culum Cani'num, (F.) Filet ou Frein de la verge, is a membranous reflection which fixes the prepuce to the lower part of the glans. When too short, it prevents the prepuce from sliding over the glans.

FRÆ'NUM PRÆPU'TII, F. penis.

Fragaria, (fragro, 'I smell sweetly.') The Strawberry, Fragaria vesca seu vulga'ris seu semperflo'rens, Chamæ'bates, (F.) Fraisier. Ord. Rosaceæ. The fruit is agreeable and wholesome, and the roots have been esteemed tonic and slightly diuretic. The fruit is the Fragrum, (κορυαν), of the ancients, (F.) Fraise.

FRAGA'RIA ANSERI'NA, Potentilla anserina—f. Pentaphyllum, Potentilla reptans—f. Tormentilla officinalis, Tormentilla.

FRAGA'RIA VIRGINIA'NA, Wild Strawberry. An indigenous plant, which has astringent leaves.

Frag'ilē Vit'reum, Fragilitas ossium.

Frag'ilitas, Ruptibil'itas, Ruptil'itas, (fragilis, 'brittle,' from frango, 'I break.') Fragility, Brittleness. The state of being easily broken or torn.

FRAGIL'ITAS OS'SIUM, Osteopsathyro'sis, Paros'tia frag'ilis, Brittleness of the bones, Friabil'ity of the bones, Frag'ilē vit'reum. Pathologists have given this name to the extreme facility with which bones break in certain diseases of the osseous texture. It is owing to a deficiency of the animal matter.

Frag'ment, Fragmen'tum, Frag'men, Ramen'tum, (frangere, fractum, 'to break.') Surgeons use this term for the two portions of a fractured bone; thus, they speak of the superior and the inferior fragment.

FRAG'MENTS, PREC'IOUS. A name formerly given, in Pharmacy, to the garnet, hyacinth, emerald, sapphire, and topaz. The Arabs falsely attributed to them cordial and alixiterial properties.

Fragon, Ruscus.

Fragum, see Fragaria.

Fraise, see Fragaria.

Fraisier, Fragaria.

Frambæ'sia, Frambe'sia, Le'pra fungifera, ([F.] framboise, 'a raspberry,') Syph'ilis In'dica, Anthra'cia ru'bula, Thymio'sis, T. seu Lu'es In'dica, Vari'ola Amboinen'sis, Le'pra fungifera, Scroph'ula Mollucca'na. The Yaws, Epian, Pi'an. A disease of the Antilles and of Africa, characterized by tumors, of a contagious character, which resemble strawberries, raspberries, or champignons; ulcerate, and are accompanied by emaciation. The Pian, for so the Indians call it, differs somewhat in America and Africa.

Pi'an of America, Frambæ'sia America'na, Anthra'cia Ru'bula Americana, occurs under similar circumstances with the next, and seems to be transmitted by copulation. The tumors have a similar form, and are greater in proportion to their paucity. In some cases they are mixed with ulcers.

Pi'an of Guin'ea, Frambæ'sia Guineen'sis, Anthra'cia Ru'bula Guineen'sis, is common among the negroes, especially in childhood and youth. It begins by small spots, which appear on different parts, and especially on the organs of generation and around the anus; these spots disappear, and are transformed into an eschar, to which an excrescence succeeds, that grows slowly, and has the shape above described.

The treatment is nearly the same in the two varieties. The tumors, when small, will yield to mercurial friction. When large, they must be destroyed by caustic. In both cases, mercury must be given to prevent a recurrence.

An endemic disease resembling yaws was observed in the Feejee Islands by the medical officers of the United States' Exploring Expedition. It is called by the natives Dthoke.

FRAMBÆ'SIA ILLYR'ICA, Scherlievo—f. Scotica, Sibbens.

Framboise, Rubus idæus.

Franc'olin, Attagen.

Franges Synoviales, ('synovial fringes,') Synovial glands.

Frangipane. An article of food, prepared by evaporating to dryness, in a water-bath, milk mixed with almonds and sugar.

Fran'gula Al'nus, (frangere, 'to break,' from its brittleness.) Rhamnus frangula.

Frank'fort Green, Arsenite of copper.

Frank'fort, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These springs are in Beaver county, Pennsylvania, near the village of Frankfort. Cane spring and Leiper spring contain carbonic acid, carbonates of iron and magnesia, hydrosulphuric acid, chloride of sodium, and a small portion of bitumen. They are recommended in dyspepsia, rheumatic and cutaneous affections, and in a variety of diseases.

Frank'incense, African, (frank, and incense,) Daniellia thurifera—f. Common, see Pinus abies—f. Tree, Daniellia thurifera—f. True, Juniperus lycia.

Franzensbad, Franzbad, or Franzensbrunn, Min'eral Wa'ters of. A celebrated water at Eger, in Bohemia, which contains sulphate of soda, carbonate of iron, and carbonic acid gas. The springs are called Franzensbrunnen.

Franzo, Spirocolon.

Frapper, ('to strike,') Percuss.

Frater'nitas, (frater, 'a brother,') Adelphixia.

Fratra'tio, Adelphixia.

Fraxinel'la Dictam'nus, (dim. of fraxinus,) Dictamnus albus—f. White, Dictamnus albus.

Frax'inus America'na, White Ash; and FRAX'INUS QUADRANGULA'TA, Blue Ash, indigenous; Ord. Oleaceæ; have bitter and astringent barks, and have been used as antiperiodics.

FRAX'INUS APET'ALA, F. excelsior—f. Aurea, F. excelsior—f. Crispa, F. excelsior—f. Excelsa, F. excelsior.

FRAX'INUS EXCEL'SIOR. The systematic name of the Ash tree, Frax'inus sylv'es'tris, F. ap'et'ala seu au'rea seu cris'pa seu excel'sa seu pen'dula seu verruco'sa, Bume'lia seu Macedon'ica Frax'inus, Bume'lia, (F.) Frêne. The fresh bark has a moderately strong, bitterish taste. It has been said to possess resolvent and diuretic qualities, and has been given in intermittents, and in gout and rheumatism, and as an antidote to serpent bites. The seeds, called Bird's tongue, Lin'gua a'vis, Ornithoglos'sa, have been exhibited as diuretics, in the dose of a drachm. Its sap has been extolled against deafness.

FRAX'INUS FLORIF'ERA, F. ornus—f. Macedonica, F. excelsior.

FRAX'INUS OR'NUS, F. me'lia seu panicula'ta seu florif'era, Ornus mannif'era seu rotundifo'lia. The systematic name of the trees whence manna flows. This substance is also called Man'na Calabri'na, Ros Calabri'nus seu Syri'acus, Aërom'eli, Drosom'eli, Drysom'eli, Mel aë'rium, Suc'cus or'ni concret'us. In Sicily, not only the Fraxinus Ornus, but also the F. rotundifolia and F. excelsior are regularly cultivated for the purpose of procuring manna, which is their condensed juice. Manna is inodorous, sweetish, with a very slight degree of bitterness; in friable flakes, of a whitish or pale yellow color; opaque, and soluble in water and alcohol. It is laxative, and is used as a purgative for children, who take it readily on account of its sweetness. More generally it is employed as an adjunct to other purgatives. Dose, ʒss. to ʒij. Its immediate principle is called Man'nite or Man'nin. This has been recommended by Magendie as a substitute for manna. Dose, ʒij., for children.

FRAX'INUS PANICULA'TA, F. ornus—f. Quadrangulata, see F. Americana—f. Rotundifolia, F. ornus.

Frayeur Nocturne, ('nocturnal fright,') Panophobia.

Freck'ens, ([G.] Fleck, 'a spot,') Ephelides.

Freck'le Moth, Chloasma.

Freck'led, see Ephelides.

Freck'les, Ephelides.

Frein, Frænum—f. du Clitoris, Frænum clitoridis—f. de la Langue, Frænum linguæ—f. des Lèvres, Frænum labiorum—f. de la Verge, Frænum penis.

Freins de la Valve de Bauhin, Fræna of the valve of Bauhin.

Freinwalde, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These springs are in Brandenburg, twelve leagues from Berlin. They contain chloride of sodium, sulphate of magnesia, chloride of magnesium, sulphate of lime, carbonates of lime and magnesia, iron, &c., and are used in asthenic diseases.

Frémissement, Fremitus, Shuddering.

Frémissement Cataire (F.), 'Cat's purr, or fremitus,' Pur'ring Tre'mor. Laënnec has given this name to the agitation which is sensible to the hand when applied on the præcordial region, and which he considers a sign of ossification or other contraction of the auriculo-ventricular openings. The name was chosen by him from the analogy of the sound to the purring of a cat.

Frem'itus, gen. Frem'itûs, (fremere, fremitum, 'to murmur,') Bruissement, Frémissement, Shuddering.

The PEC'TORAL or VO'CAL FREM'ITUS, Pec'toral Vibration, Tac'tile vibra'tion is an obscure diffused resonance of the voice which is felt when the hand is applied to the chest.

A FRIC'TION FREM'ITUS is perceptible to the hands in many cases of pleurisy, when the surfaces of the pleura have become roughened from deposition, as well as in rare cases of pericarditis. In the former cases, it is called the pleural; in the latter, the pericardial friction fremitus.

FREM'ITUS, HYDAT'ID, Son hydatique.

FREM'ITUS, RHON'CHIAL. A sound caused by the vibration of the bronchial tubes, appreciable on the surface of the chest, from sibilant sonorous and mucous rhonchi.

Fre'na, (pl. of frenum,) see Alveolus.

French Crust, Syphilis—f. Distemper, Syphilis—f. Letter, Condom—f. Nut, Juglans regia—f. Pox, Syphilis.

Fret, (Sax. ppæðan, 'to rub,' and ppetan, 'to eat or gnaw,') Chafing, Herpes.

Fréttillement, Fidgets.

Fret'ting, Tormina.

Frica'tio, (fricare, fricatum, 'to rub,') Fric-tion.

Fricato'res, (from fricare, 'to rub,') See Shampooing.

Fricato'rium, Liniment.

Frica'trix, gen. Fricatri'cis, Tribas.

Fri'cè, Fri'cum, Frico'nium. A medicine which the ancients employed under the form of friction. They distinguished the Fri'cè sic'cum and F. mol'le.

Frico'nium, Frice.

Fric'ta, Colophonia.

Fric'tio, Friction — f. Humida, see Friction — f. Sicca, see Friction.

Fric'tion, Fric'tio, Frica'tio, Anat'ribē, Ana'trip'sis, Tryp'sis, Chirap'sia. The action of rubbing — as of a part of the surface of the body — more or less forcibly, with the hands, a brush, flannel, &c., constituting Xerotrib'ia, Xerotrip'sis, Fric'tio sic'ca or dry friction or rubbing, or with ointments, liniments, tinctures, &c., constituting moist friction or rubbing, Fric'tio hu'mida. It is a useful means for exciting the action of the skin.

Fric'tion FREMITUS, see Fremitus — f. Sound, Bruit de frottement.

Fric'trix, (gen. Fric'tricis), Tribas.

Fric'tum, Liniment.

Fric'tum, Frice.

Friedrichshall, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The purgative waters of this place in Saxe-Meiningen have quite a reputation in cases where it is necessary to promote excretion from the liver, kidneys, and bowels. The chief ingredients are chloride of sodium, sulphates of soda and magnesia, chloride of magnesium, and sulphate of lime, with carbonate of magnesia, bromide of magnesium, &c.

Friend'back, Hangnail.

Frige'facient'ia, (frigus, 'cold,' and facere, 'to make,') Refrigerants.

Frig'id, Frig'idus, (F.) Froid, (frigeo, 'I am cold,') Cold. Not easily moved to sexual desire; Imbel'lis ad ven'eren. Impotent.

Frigida'rium, Bath, cold.

Frigid'ity, Frigid'itas. A sensation of cold. Also, impotence and sterility. Frigidity of the stomach is a state of debility of that organ, imputed to excessive venery, — the Anorexia exhausto'rum of Sauvages.

Frig'idus, Frigid.

Frigorific, (frigus, 'cold,' and facere, 'I become,') That which has the power of producing cold. The best FRIGORIFIC MIXTURES are the following. Their effects are owing to the rapid absorption of heat when solids pass into the liquid state.

FRIGORIFIC MIXTURES WITH SNOW.

Fri'gus, gen. Fri'goris, Cold — f. Tenue, see Rigor.

Fringe Tree, Chionanthus Virginica.

Fringed, ([F.] frange, 'a fringe,') Laciniated.

Frisson, (from frigere, 'to be cold,') Rigor.

Frissonnement, Horripilation.

Frog'leaf, Brasenia hydropeltis.

Frog Tongue, Ranula.

Frogs' Spawn, Sperma ranarum.

Froid, (from frigidus), Cold, Frigid — f. Glacial, Ice cold.

Froissement, [F.] (from low L. fressare, 'to bruise,') Rubbing, bruising.

Froissement Pulmonaire, Bruit de froissement pulmonaire, Pul'monary crump'ling sound. A name given by M. Fournet to a respiratory sound, which communicates to the ear the sensation of the rubbing (froissement) of a texture compressed against a hard body. It is by no means well defined.

Frôlement (F.), 'Grazing or touching lightly.'

Frôlement Péricardique, Bruit de frôlement péricardique. Rustling noise of the pericardium. A sound resembling that produced by the crumpling of a piece of parchment or of thick silken stuff, accompanying the systole and diastole of the heart. It indicates roughness of the pericardium induced by disease.

Fromage, Cheese.

Froment, (from [L.] frumentum,) Triticum.

Froncement, Corrugation.

Froncle, Furunculus.

Fronde, Funda.

Frons, gen. Frontis, Front.

Front, Frons, Meto'pon, Sto'ma, Fore'head, Fore'front, Fore'top, Brow, (Sc.) Forret. That part of the visage which extends from one temple to the other, and is comprised in a vertical direction, between the roots of the hair and the superciliary ridges.

Frontal, Fronta'lis. Relating or belonging to the front. This name has been given to several parts. Winslow, Sömmerring, and others, call the anterior part of the occipito-frontalis — the frontal muscle or fronta'lis, Musculo'sa Fron'tis Cu'tem mo'vens substan'tia Par of Vesalius.

FRONTAL ARTERY, Arte'ria supraorbitalis, is given off by the ophthalmic, which is itself a branch of the internal carotid. It makes its exit from the skull at the upper part of the base of the orbit, and ascends the forehead between the bone and the orbicularis palpebrarum; dividing into three or four branches, which are distributed to the neighboring muscles.

FRONTAL BONE, Os fron'tis seu corona'lē seu inverecun'dum seu pup'pis seu syncip'itis seu pro'ræ seu ratio'nis, Meto'pon. A double bone in the foetus, single in the adult, situate at the base of the cranium, and at the superior part of the face.

It forms the vault of the orbit; lodges the ethmoid bone in a notch at its middle part; and is articulated, besides, with the sphenoid, parietal, and nasal bones, the ossa unguis, superior maxillary, and malar bones.

FRONTAL FUR'ROW extends upwards from the frontal spine, and becomes gradually larger in its course, to lodge the upper part of the superior longitudinal sinus, and to give attachment to the falx cerebri.

FRONTAL NERVE, Palpébro-frontal (Ch.), is the greatest of the three branches of the ophthalmic nerve—the first division of the fifth pair. It proceeds along the superior paries of the orbit, and divides into two branches: the one internal, which makes its exit from the orbital fossa, passing beneath the pulley of the oblique muscle; the other, external, issuing from the same cavity by the foramen orbitarium superius.

FRONTAL PROTUBERANCE, F. tuberosity, Tub. fronta'le, Suggundium superciliorum. The protuberance of the frontal bone above the superciliary arch.

FRONTAL SI'NUSES, Si'nus Fronta'les, Metopantha, Prosopantha, Si'nus Supercilia'les seu pituaria'rii frontis, Cavernæ frontis, are two deep cavities in the substance of the frontal bone, separated from each other by a median septum, and opening, below, into the anterior cells of the ethmoid bone.

FRONTAL SPINE, Cris'ta inter'na, is situate in the middle of the under part of the bone, and is formed by the coalescence of the inner tables for the attachment of the falx cerebri.

Surgeons have given the name FRONTA'LIS to a bandage or topical application to the forehead. Such have, also, been called προμετωπίδια and αναστοληματα.

FRONTAL TUBEROS'ITY, Frontal protuberance.

Fronta'le, (from frons.) A medicine applied to the forehead.

Fronta'lis et Occipita'lis, Occipito-frontalis.

FRONTA'LIS VE'RUS, Corrugator supercilii.

Frontodym'ia, see Cephalodymia.

FRONTOETH'MOID FORA'men, Cæcum foramen—f. Nasal, Pyramidalis nasi—f. Sourcilier, Corrugator supercilii.

Frost bite, Congelation.

Frost plant, Helianthemum Canadense.

Frost weed, Erigeron Philadelphicum, Helianthemum Canadense.

Frost wort, Helianthemum Canadense.

Froth'y, (αῖρος, 'froth' [?],) Spumo'sus, (F.) Spumeux, Ecumeux, Mousseux. An epithet given to the feces or sputa when mixed with air.

Frottement, (from low L. fricare, itself from fricare, 'to rub'.) See Bruit de frottement.

Frottement Globulaire. A name given by M. Simonnet to the pulse in aortic regurgitation, when it is jerking; and, in well-marked cases, appears as if the blood consisted of several little masses, which passed in succession under the finger applied to the artery.

Fructifica'tio, (fructus, and facere, 'to make,') Fecundation.

Fructus, gen. Fructus, Fruit—f. Horæi, Fruit (summer)—f. Immaturus, Abortion.

Frugiv'orous, Frugiv'orus, (fruges, 'fruits,' and voro, 'I eat.')

One that eats fruits.

Fruit, Fructus, (fruo, fructus, 'I enjoy,') Car'pos. In botany, the seed with its enclosing pericarp. In the ordinary acceptance, it means exclusively seed cases which are eatable; and generally, such as require no preparation to render them fit for food. The effects of fruits on the body, in a medical as well as a dietetical point of view, are various. They may be distinguished into classes; for while the Cerealia, for example, afford fruits which are highly nutritious, the Summer Fruits (Fructus Horæi), which include strawberries, cherries, currants, mulberries, raspberries, figs, grapes, &c., are refrigerant and grateful, but afford little nourishment.

Fruit (F.), is the foetus, while contained in the womb of the mother.

Fruit'sugar, Glucose.

Fru'ment, Fru'menty, Fur'menty, (frumentum, 'wheat or grain,' quasi frugimentum, from fruges, 'fruits,') Pottage made of wheat. Food made of wheat boiled in milk.

Frumen'tum, Sitos. Any kind of grain from which bread was made; especially wheat.

FRUMEN'TUM, Triticum—f. Corniculatum, Ergot—f. Cornutum, Ergot—f. Luxurians, Ergot—f. Temulentum, Ergot—f. Turgidum, Ergot.

Frustratoire (F.). Any liquor, taken a short time after eating, for the purpose of assisting digestion when difficult. Sugared water, eau sucrée, or water with the addition of a little brandy, or some aromatic substance, is commonly used for this purpose.

Fru'tex (gen. Fru'ticus) Bac'oifer Brazilien'sis, Caaghivuyo—f. Indicus spinosus, Cara schulli.

Fu'cus, (φύκος, 'seaweed,') F. vesiculosus, Paint.

FUCUS AMYLACEUS, Jaff'na, Ed'ible or Ceylon Moss, Plocaria can'dida, Gracilaria seu Sphaerococcus seu Gigarti'na seu Fucus lichenoides, Marine' Moss. This moss belongs to the natural order Algæ. It was introduced some years ago into England from India. It is white, filiform, and fibrous, and has the usual odor of seaweeds. Its medical properties are similar to those of Irish moss.

FUCUS, BLAD'DER, F. vesiculosus.

FUCUS CRISP'US, F. Ir'landicus, Lic'hen Car'rageen, Chondrus (Ph. U. S.), C. crispus seu polymorphus, Sphaerococcus crispus, Ul'va crisp'a, Irish Pearl, Carrageen, Carrageen'or Corrigeen' moss, (F.) Mousse d'Irlande ou perlée. This Fucus (suborder Rhodospirææ; fam. Spongiocarpeæ) is found on the coasts of England, Ireland, western France, Spain, and Portugal, and as far as the tropics. It is also a native of the United States. In Ireland it is used by the poor as an article of diet. As met with in America, it is of light yellow color, and resembles plates of horn, crisped and translucent. An agreeable jelly is obtained from it by boiling it in water or milk, which forms a good article of diet in consumptive cases. Its properties are, indeed, exactly like those of the Iceland Moss.

FUCUS HELMINTHOCOR'TON, Corallina Corsicana—f. Inflatus, F. vesiculosus—f. Ir'landicus, Fucus crispus—f. Lichenoides, F. amyloaceus—f. Saccharine, Rhodomela palmata.

FUCUS VESICULO'SUS, Fucus, F. inflatus, Hal'idrys vesiculo'sa, Quer'cus seu Lactu'ca Mari'na, Blad'der Fucus, Sea Oak, Sea Wrack, Yell'low Blad'derwrack, (F.) Varca vesiculeux, Chêne marin. It has been said to be a useful assistant to sea-water in the cure of disorders of the glands. When the wrack, in fruit, is dried, cleaned, exposed to a red heat in a crucible with a perforated lid, and is reduced to powder, it forms the Æthiops vegetabilis—the Pul'vis Quer'cus Mari'næ of the Dublin Pharmacopœia—which is used, like the burnt sponge, in bronchocele and other scrofulous swellings. Its efficacy depends on the iodine it contains. Dose, gr. x. to ʒij., mixed in molasses or honey. See Soda.

Fuga Dæ'monum, ('aversion of the demons,') Hypericum perforatum.

Fuga'cious, Fugax, gen. Fuga'cis, (F.) Fugace, (fugere, 'to fly,') An epithet given to certain symptoms, which appear and disappear almost immediately afterwards; as a fugacious redness, a fugacious swelling, Tumor fugax, &c.

Fugax, gen. Fuga'cis, Fugacious.

Fuge, (fugo, 'I expel,') 'an expeller.' A common suffix. Hence, Febrifuge, Vermifuge, &c.

Fu'gilē, Fugil'la. This term has several acceptations. It means: 1. The cerumen of the ear. 2. The nebulous suspension in, or deposition from, the urine. 3. An abscess near the ear. 4. Abscess in general.

Fugil'la, Fugile.

Ful'gur, gen. Ful'guris, 'lightning,' (from fulgere, 'to flash,') Astrape.

Fulig'inous, Fuliginosus, Lignyo'des, (F.) Fuligineux, (fuligo, gen. fuliginis, 'soot,') Having the color of soot. An epithet given to certain parts, as the lips, teeth, or tongue, when they assume a brownish color, or rather are covered with a coat of that color, — Fuliginos'ity.

Fuli'go, gen. Fulig'inis, Lig'nys, Soot, (F.) Saie, &c., Wood'soot, Fuli'go Lig'ni, consists of volatile alkaline salt, empyreumatic oil, fixed alkali, &c. A tincture, Tinctu'ra Fulig'inis, prepared from it, has been recommended as a powerful antispasmodic in hysterical cases. (Fulig. lign., 3ij., Potass. subcarb., lbss., Ammon. muriat., 3j., Aque fluiat., Oijj. Digest for three days.) This tincture bears the name Soot drops and Fit drops. An ointment of soot has been used in various cutaneous diseases.

FULIGO AL'BA PHILOSOPHO'RUM, Ammonia murias.

Fuligo'kali, (fuligo, 'soot,' and kali, 'potassa,') This is an analogous preparation to anthrakali; soot being used in the place of coal. It is employed in the same diseases. What might be regarded as a weak solution of fuligokali has been used for many years in Philadelphia, under the names medical lye, soot tea, alkaline solution, dyspeptic lye, and Physick's lye tea. It is made by mixing a quart of hickory ashes, half a pint of soot, and a gallon of boiling water, allowing the mixture to stand for twenty-four hours, and decanting.

Full'ers' Earth, Cimolia purpurescens.

Ful'men, gen. Ful'minis, 'lightning,' from fulgere, 'to flash,') Astrape.

Fulmicoton, (fulmen and cotton,) see Colloidion.

Ful'ness, Reple'tio, Plen'itude, Pletho'ra, Reple'tion. The state of being filled. Also, a feeling of weight or distension in the stomach or other part of the system.

Fuma'ria, (from fumus, 'smoke,' from its smell,) Fuma'ria officina'lis seu me'dia, Fu'mus ter'ræ, Cap'nus, Her'ba melancholif'uga, Sola'men Scabioso'rum, Fu'mitory, Com'mon Fu'mitory, Fu'miter'ra, (F.) Fumeterre, Fiel de terre, Pisse-sang. Ord. Fumariaceæ. The leaves are extremely succulent, and have a bitter, somewhat saline, taste. The infusion of the dried leaves and the expressed juice of the fresh plant have been extolled for their property of clearing the skin of many disorders of the leprous kind.

FUMA'RIA BULBO'SA, F. ca'va seu ma'jor, Borckhausen'ia seu Capno'i'des ca'va, Aristolochi'a faba'cea seu ca'va seu vulga'ris rotun'da, Coryd'al'is bulbo'sa seu ca'va seu tubero'sa, Capnor'chis, (F.) Fumeterre bulbeuse. The root of this plant was formerly given as an emmenagogue and anthelmintic.

FUMA'RIA CA'VA, F. bulbosa—f. Major, F. bulbosa—f. Media, Fumaria—f. Officinalis, Fumaria. Fumeterre, Fumaria.

Fumiga'tio, (fumigare, fumigatum, 'to make smoke,'—fumus,) Fumigation—f. Antiloinica Gaubii, see Disinfection—f. Guytoniensis, see Disinfection—f. Smythiana, see Disinfection.

Fumiga'tion, Fumiga'tio, Suffi'tus, Suffi'tio, Suffumig'atio, Suffumig'ium, Suffimen'tum, Apo-capnis'mus, Thymia'ma, Epithymia'ma, Hypothymia'ma, Hypothymia'sis, Thymia'sis, Capnis'ma, Hypocapnis'mus, Hypocapnis'ma, Hypat'mus, Hy- patmis'mus, Anathymia'sis. An operation, the object of which is to fill a circumscribed space with gas or vapor, with the intention either of purifying the air, of perfuming it, or of charging it with a substance proper for acting upon a part of the surface of the human body. See Sulphurous acid. Hence, fumigations have been distinguished into aqueous, aromatic, sulphureous, mercurial, disinfecting, Guytonian, &c. Benzoin generally constitutes the chief ingredient in the Fumigating Pastilles, to which any variety of odoriferous substances may be added. The following are formulæ:

R. Benzoin, 3j., Cascarilla, 3ss., Myrrh., ʒj., Ol. myrist., Ol. caryoph., āā gtt. x., Potassæ nitrat., 3ss., Carbon. lign., 3vj., Mucil. trag., q. s.—or

R. Benzoin., p. xvj., Balsam. Tolut., p. iv., Santal. alb., p. iv., Labdan., p. j., Carbon. Lign., p. xlvij., Potass. nitrat., p. ij., Tragacanth., p. j., Acaciæ, p. ij., Aq. cinnam., p. xij. Reduce the solid ingredients to powder, and mix the whole into a plastic mass, which must be formed into cones, flattened at the base, and dried, first in the air, and afterwards in a stove.

Several of these are official in the French Codex (1866).

FUMIGA'TION, CHLO'RINE, see Disinfection—f. Nitrous, see Disinfection—f. Oxymuriatic, see Disinfection.

Fumiter'ra, Fumaria.

Fu'mitory, Fumaria.

Fu'mus AL'bus, Hydrargyrum—f. Citrinus, Sulphur—f. Terræ, Fumaria.

Funambula'tio, (funis, 'a cord,' and ambulare, 'to walk,') An exercise with the ancients, which consisted in scaling ropes.

Function, Func'tio, Ac'tio, (F.) Fonction; (fungor, functus, 'I act,' 'I perform,') The action of an organ or set of organs. Any act, necessary for accomplishing a vital phenomenon. A function is a special office in the animal economy, which has, as its instrument, an organ or apparatus of organs. Thus respiration is a function. Its object is the conversion of venous into arterial blood, and its instrument is the lungs. The ancient physiologists divided the functions into vital, animal, and natural. They called vital functions those which are essential to life, as innervation, circulation, respiration; animal functions, those which belong to the encephalon; viz., the functions of the intellect, the affections of the mind, and the voluntary motions; and natural functions, Faculta'tes seu Actio'nes natura'les, those relating to assimilation, such as the actions of the abdominal viscera, of the absorbent and exhalant vessels, &c. Bichat divided the functions into those which relate to the preservation of the individual, and those that relate to the preservation of the species. The former he subdivided into animal and organic. The animal functions or functions of relation are those of the intellect, sensation, locomotion, and voice. The organic functions include digestion, absorption, respiration, circulation, secretion, nutrition, and calorification. The functions, whose object is the preservation of the species—the organic, nutritive, or vegetative functions—are all those that relate to generation;—such as conception, gestation, accouchement, &c. Each of these admits of numerous subdivisions in a complete course of Physiology;—for so the doctrine of the functions is called.

Func'tional, Functiona'lis, (F.) Fonctionnel. Relating or belonging to the function of an organ, or to the functions in general.

FUNCTIONAL DISEA'SES, see Organic diseases.

FUNCTIONAL OR VITAL PHENOM'ENA are those produced by some modification in the action of an organ or organs, in contradistinction to those of a material or physical character;—thus we distinguish the functional phenomena of phthisis from those indicated by physical diagnosis—the physical phenomena.

Fun'da, 'a sling.' Sphen'donē, (F.) Fronde. A bandage, composed of a fillet or long compress, cleft at its extremities to within about two inches of its middle. It is used in diseases of the nose and chin, and especially in cases of fracture of the lower jaw. In such case it has, also, been called Mentonnière, because placed beneath the chin; from (F.) Menton, 'the chin.'

Fun'dament, (fundare, 'to found; to lay the fundus or bottom of anything,') Anus—f. Falling down of the, Proctocele.

Fundamen'tal, (F.) Fondamental. Some anatomists have called the sacrum Os Fundamentale, because it seems to serve as a base to the vertebral column. The sphenoid bone has likewise been so denominated, from its being situated at the base of the cranium.

Fun'dus, 'the bottom,' (F.) Fond. The base of any organ which ends in a neck, or has an external aperture, as the Fundus vesicæ, F. uteri, F. oculi (see Eye), &c. Also, the Vulva.

FUNDUS VAGINÆ, Laquear vaginæ, see Vagina.

Fu'nes (pl. of Fu'nis) Cor'dis, Columnæ car-næ—f. Semicirculares, Semicircular canals—f. Ventriculi, see Stomach.

Fun'gating Tu'mor. A tumor composed of exuberant granulations from a neglected sebaceous cyst, whose contents have been discharged by ulceration.

Fun'giform Papil'læ, (fungus, 'a mushroom,' and forma, 'shape,') see Papillæ of the Tongue.

Fun'goid, Fungoides, Mycodes, Fungiformis, Fun'giform, (F.) Fongoide, Fongiforme, (fungus, and eidōs, 'resemblance,') That which has the shape of, or grows in some measure like a mushroom, as the fungoid or fungiform papillæ of the tongue.

FUN'GOID DISEASE, Encephaloid.

Fungos'ity, Fungositas, Ca'ro luxurians seu fungosa, Escarco'ma, Hypersarco'ma, Hypersarco'sis, Proud Flesh, (F.) Fongosité. The quality of that which is fungous:—fungous excrescence, Excrescen'tia fungosa. The fungosities which arise in wounds or ulcers are easily repressed by gentle compression, dry lint, the sulphas cupri, or other gentle caustics. At times, the more powerful are necessary, and sometimes excision is required.

Fun'gous, Fungosus, (F.) Fongueux. Having the characters of fungosity or fungus—as a fun'gous wound.

FUN'GOUS FOOT OF IN'DIA, Mycetoma.

Fun'gus, (pl. Fungi,) My'ces, (F.) Fongus, Champignon. The mushroom order of plants; class Cryptogamia, in the Linnean system. The fungi or champignons, Ord. Mucoraceæ, (F.) Mucédinées ou Mucorinées, which are found as parasites in man and the mammalia, are the following, according to M. Robin:—Trichophyton tonsurans, on the hairy scalp; T. sporuloides, on ulcers; Microsporium Audouini, in the hair follicles; M. mentagrophytes, at the roots of the hair; M. furfur, in the skin; Mucor mucedo, in a cavity of gangrene of the lung; Acho'rium Schönleini, in the hairy scalp and hair follicles; Aspergilli species [?], in the meatus auditorius externus; Puccinia fa'vi, in favus; O'idium albicans, in aphthæ; and Champignon du poulmon, in the lung.

In Pathology, Fungus is commonly used synonymously with fungosity, myco'sis. M. Breschet has proposed to restrict the term fungos'ity to vegetations which arise on denuded surfaces, and to apply the term fungus to the tumors which form in the substance of the textures, without any external ulceration. Fici and warts, for example, would be fungi of the skin.

FUN'GUS AL'BUS SALIG'NEUS, Dædalea suaveolens—f. Articuli, Spina ventosa—f. Bleeding, Hæmatodes fungus—f. Cancerosus hæmatodes, Hæmatodes F.—f. Cancerosus medullaris, see Encephaloid—f. Cerebralis, see Encephaloid—f. Cerebri, Encephalocoele—f. Chirurgorum, Lycoperdon—f. Cynobati, Bedeguar—f. Disease of India, see Mycetoma—f. Faginosus, Morchella esculenta—f. Hæmatodes, Hæmatodes fungus—f. Ignarius, Boletus ignarius—f. Laricis, Boletus laricis—f. of Malta, Cynomorion coccineum—f. Medullaris, see Encephaloid—f. Melanodes, Cancer, melanotic—f. Melitensis, Cynomorion coccineum—f. Petræus marinus, Umbilicus marinus—f. Porriginis, see Porrigio favosa—f. Quercinus, Boletus ignarius—f. Rosarum, Bedeguar—f. Salicis, Dædalea suaveolens—f. Sambucinus, Peziza auricula—f. Test for sugar, see Sugar—f. Testis, Hernia testis.

Fu'nic, Funicular, Fu'nicus, (F.) Funique, (from funis, 'a cord,') Relating or appertaining to the Funis umbilicalis, as the funicular process of the peritoneum.

FU'NIC BEL'LOWS' SOUND or SOUF'FLE, see Bel-lows' sound, funic.

Funic'ular, Funic.

Funic'uli (pl. of Funic'ulus) Grac'iles, Poste'rior Me'dian Col'umns or Fascic'uli of the medu'la oblonga'ta. Along the posterior border of each corpus restiforme, and separated from it by a groove, is a narrow white cord, separated from its fellow by the fissura longitudinalis posterior. The pair of cords are the funiculi graciles. Each funiculus forms an enlargement—processus clavatus—at its upper end, and is then lost in the corpus restiforme.

FUNIC'ULI SIL'IQUÆ. Longitudinal fibres seen in the groove which separates the corpus olivare from the corpus pyramidale and corpus restiforme. They enclose the base of the corpus olivare,—those which lie on its inner side forming the funiculus inter'nus; and those on its outer side the funiculus exter'nus.

Funic'ulus, (dim. of funis,) Cord—f. Anterior (of the spinal marrow), see Nerve—f. Externus, see Funiculi siliquæ—f. Internus, see Funiculi siliquæ—f. Posterior (of the spinal marrow), see Nerve—f. Spermaticus, Spermatic cord—f. Tympani, Chorda tympani.

FUNIC'ULUS UMBILICA'LIS, Fu'nis umbilica'lis, (dim. of funis, 'a cord,') Intestin'ulum, Vin'culum umbilica'le, Omphaloneu'ron, Umbil'ical cord, Na'velstring, (F.) Cordon ombilicale. A cord-like substance, which extends from the placenta to the umbilicus of the foetus. It is composed of the amnion, an albuminous secretion called the Jelly of the Cord, cellular substance, an umbilical vein, and two umbilical arteries. The former conveys the blood from the placenta to the foetus—the latter return it. All these parts are surrounded by a sheath—Investitu'ra seu Vagi'na funic'uli umbilica'lis. Its usual length is from 16 to 22 inches.

FUNIC'ULUS VARICO'SUS, Cirsocoele.

Funique, Funic.

Fu'nis, Cord, Lacqueus—f. Argenteus, Medulla spinalis—f. Hippocratis, Achillis tendo—f. Umbilicalis, Funiculus umbilicalis.

Funk, (from fungus, [?]) Boletus ignarius.

Fun'nel, see Infundibulum.

Fun'nybone, Crazybone. When the ulnar nerve is suddenly and forcibly pressed upon above the elbow, it gives occasion to a tingling in the fingers to which it is distributed. In familiar language this is said to be produced by pressing on the "funnybone."

Fur, (low (L.) furra,) Enduit.

Furcel'la, Fur'cula, (dim. of furca, 'a fork,')

The upper part of the sternum; the clavicle. The Fourchette.

FURCEL'LA INFE'RIOR, Xiphoid cartilage.

Furchmühl, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These Bavarian springs contain carbonic acid, sulphuretted hydrogen, carbonates of lime and soda, chlorides of lime and magnesium, oxides of iron and magnesium, &c.

Fur'oifer, gen. Furcif'eri, (furca, 'a fork,' and ferre, 'to carry.') Penis.

Furcil'la, (dim. of furca, 'a fork.') Fourchette.

Fur'cula, (dim. of furca, 'a fork.') Furcella, Clavicle, Fourchette.

Furcur U'térine, ('uterine furor,') Nymphomania.

Fur'fur, gen. Fur'furis, (from far, 'grain,') Bran, Pit'yron, Ach'yron, Apobras'ma, Lem'ma, Canta'brum, (F.) Son. The decoction is sometimes employed as an emollient.

Fur'fura, Scarf.

Furfura'ceous, Scurfy, Canica'ceous, Acero'sus, Pityre'us, Pityroïdes, Pityro'des, (F.) Furfuracé. Resembling bran. A name given to eruptions, in which the epidermis is detached in small scales resembling bran. Also, a bran-like sediment observed at times in the urine;—Uri'na furfura'cea, Sedimen'tum Uri'næ pityroï'des.

Fur'furamide, see Furfurin.

Furfura'tio, Desquamation, Porrigo, Pityriasis.

Fur'furin, Furfuri'na. By the action of dilute sulphuric acid on corn meal or bran an oil is obtained—fur'furol or fur'furolé. By the action of ammonia on this, fur'furamide or furfurol'amide results; and by the action of dilute potassa on this the alkaloid furfurin is obtained. This was found by Professor Simpson, of Edinburgh, to possess tonic, if not antiperiodic, properties.

Furfuris'ca, Pityriasis.

Fur'furol, see Furfurin.

Furfurol'amide, see Furfurin.

Fu'ria Inferna'lis. A kind of vermiform insect, scarcely two lines long, common in Sweden, which flies about and stings both man and animals, exciting the most excruciating torture.

Furibun'dus, (furere, 'to be mad,') Maniodes.

Furio'sus, Maniodes.

Fu'rious, Maniodes.

Fur'mage, ([F.] fromage,) Cheese.

Fur'menty, Frument.

Furnas, Min'eral Wa'ters of. A thermal chalybeate water in St. Michael's, Azores, which contains carbonic acid, and carbonate of iron.

Furuncle, Furunculus.

Furuncle Guépier, Wasp's nest fur'uncle or boil. A malignant boil, which generally attacks the nape and region of the neck, and rarely others than old people. Hence it has been called Old People's boil.

Furunculeux, Furuncular.

Fu'ror, gen. Furo'ris, Mania—f. Brevis, Rage—f. Mania, Mania—f. Uterinus, Nymphomania.

Fur'rad, see Enduit.

Fur'row, Genital, see Genital—f. Mentolabial, see Mentolabial furrow—f. of Rolando, Fissure of Rolando.

Fur'rowed Band. An indented ridge of gray matter between the amygdalæ and uvulæ of the cerebellum.

Furun'cular, Furun'culous, Furunculo'sus, (F.) Furunculeux, (furere, 'to rage,' [?] or from fur, 'a thief'—see Felon.) Relating or appertaining to furunculus,—as 'a furuncular epidemic.'

Fur'uncle, Furunculus.

Furun'culi (pl. of Furun'culus) Aton'ici, Ecthyma—f. Ventriculus, see Furunculus.

Furun'culoid, Furunculoï'des, (furunculus, and aidos, 'resemblance,') Resembling furunculus—as 'a furunculoid epidemic.'

Furun'culus, Chi'adus, Chi'oli, Doth'ien, Doth'ion, Furun'culus suppurato'rius, F. Ve'rus, F. benignus, Phy'ma furun'culus, Absces'sus nucleat'us, Fur'uncle, Boil, Bile, (Sc.) Bruck, Bruck, (Prov.) Pinnacal, (F.) Furuncle, Furuncle, Clou. A small phlegmon, which appears under the form of a conical, hard, circumscribed tumor, having its seat in the dermal texture. At the end of an uncertain period, it becomes pointed, white or yellow, and gives exit to pus mixed with blood. When it breaks, a small, grayish, fibrous mass sometimes appears, which consists of dead areolar tissue. This is called the Core, Set'fast, Sit'fast, Ventriculus seu Nucleus Furun'culi, (F.) Bourbillon. The abscess does not heal until after its separation. The indications of treatment are,—to discuss by the application of leeches and warm fomentations; or, if this cannot be done, to encourage suppuration by warm, emollient cataplasms. When suppuration is entirely established, the part may be opened or suffered to break, according to circumstances.

The term blind boil is given to an indolent, imperfectly suppurating, phlegmonous tumor, of the kind described above, which is often seated in a sebaceous follicle, as in Acne indurata.

FURUN'CLUS DELHI'NUS, Delhi boil—f. Gangrenosus, Anthrax—f. Malignus, Anthrax.

Fusa'ria Vermicula'ris, (from fusus, 'a spindle,') Ascaris vermicularis—f. Visceralis et renalis, Strongylus gigas.

Fusce'do Cu'tis, (fuscus, 'dusky,') see Melanopathy.

Fusée Purulente (F.), (from fusus, 'a spindle,') The long and sinuous route which pus takes, in certain cases, in making its way to the surface. These Fusées almost always form beneath the skin between the muscles; or along aponeuroses, bones, tendons, &c.

Fu'sel Oil, ([G.] Fusel, 'bad brandy,') see Oil fusel.

Fusibil'ity, see Fusion.

Fu'sible, see Fusion—f. Calculi, see Calculi, urinary.

Fu'sion, Fu'sio, Melt'ing, Liquefac'tion, (fundere, fusum, 'to melt,') In chemistry, the transition of a solid body into a liquid by the aid of heat. Substances capable of such transition are said to be fu'sible; or to be possessed of fu'sibility.

Fus'tic Tree, (from (F.) fustet.) Cladrastris tinctoria.

Futu'tio, (futuere, 'to have sexual intercourse,') Coition.

Futu'trix, gen. Fututri'cis, Tribas.

THE Greek G, Γ, with the ancient Greek physicians, signified an ounce.

Gab, ([Da.] gab.) Mouth.

Gabal'ia, Cabal.

Gabir'ea, (γαβίρεα.) A fatty kind of myrrh, mentioned by Dioscorides.

Gæophag'ia, Geophagism.

Gæoph'agus, Geophagist.

Geophag'ia, (γῆα, 'earth,' and φαγεῖν, 'to eat.') Geophagism.

Geoph'agus, Geophagist.

Gaert'ner, Canal' of, see Gärtner.

Ga'gel, Myrica gale.

Gahet, Cagot.

Gai'ac, Guaiacum.

Guillet Acerochant, Galium aparine—g. Crochant, Galium aparine—g. Jaune, Galium verum—g. Vrai, Galium verum.

Gaine, Vagina or sheath—g. de l'Apophyse styloïde, Vaginal process of the temporal bone—g. de la Veine porte, Vagina or sheath of the vena porta.

Gait'ling, (dim. of (Sc.) gat, 'a child.') Infans.

Ga'la, (γάλα, gen. γαλακτός,) Milk.

Galactæra'sia, (galacto, a, and κρασις, 'mixture.') Morbid mixture or constitution of milk.

Galactæratia, (galacto, a, and κρατος, 'power,') see Galactia.

Galactæmia, (galacto, and αἷμα, 'blood.') A condition of the blood in which it contains milk.

Galactagent'ia, (galacto, and αγω, 'I drive,') Galactopoetica.

Galactago'ga, (same etymon,) Galactopoetica.

Galact'agogues, Galactopoetica.

Galactaposte'ma, gen. Galactaposte'matis, (galacto, and αποστήμα, 'abscess.') Mastodynia apostematosa.

Galac'tia, Galactirrhœa, Galactorrhœa, Lac'tis redundan'tia, Polygalac'tia, Galactozæ'mia. A redundant flow of milk, either in a female who is suckling, or in one who is not. It may occur without being provoked by suckling. When to a great extent, it sometimes causes wasting, Ta'bes lac'tea, T. nutri'tum. Dr. Good uses Galac'tia, in his Nosology, for 'morbid flow or deficiency of milk,' Galactæratia.—A condition the reverse of this is called Agalac'tia, Defec'tus lac'tis.

Galac'ticus, (γαλακτικός,) Lactic.

Galactidro'sis, (galacto, and ιδρώσις, 'sweating,') Su'dor lac'teus. Sweating of milk.

Galac'tifer, (galacto, and ferro, 'I carry,') Galactophorus.

Galactine, Casein.

Galacti'nus, Lactic.

Galactirrhœ'a, (galacto, and ρέω, 'I flow,') Galactia.

Galac'tis, gen. Galac'tidis, (γαλακτίς,) Galaxias.

Galactis'chesis, Galactos'chesis, Lac'tis reten'tio, (galacto, and ἵκην, 'to restrain,') Retention or suppression of milk.

Galacti'tes, (γαλακτίτης,) Galaxias.

Galac'to, (γάλα, gen. γαλακτός,) in composition, milk.

Galactocatarac'ta, Cataract, milky.

Galactocel'le, Galactocèle, Galacton'cus, Lactocel'le, Milk Tu'mor, (galacto, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Tumor lac'teus. Distension of one or more of the galactophorous sinuses by milk. Lactiferous engorgement. The French use the term Poïl for such engorgement; a relic of an idea, as old as Aristotle, that a hair swallowed may have obstructed one of the milk tubes, which must be got rid of by sucking. Galacto'ma is a tumor produced by the retention of milk.

Galactocèle has, also, been applied by Vidal de Cassis to a tumor produced by effusion of a white liquid into the tunica vaginalis, which he considered to be true milk.

Galactoden'dron U'tilè, (galacto, and ἰένδρον, 'a tree,') Palo de Vacca, Arbol de Leche, Coc tree of South America. Family, Urticaceæ. When an incision is made into the trunk, a milky fluid flows out, which is agreeable and nutritious.

Galacto'des, (γαλακτώδης, from galacto, and odes,) In Hippocrates, the term signifies milk-warm, and likewise a milky color, as of the urine—uri'na galacto'des.

Galactodiæ'ta, Diæ'ta lac'tea seu lac'tis, (galacto, and διαίτα, 'diet,') A milk diet.

Galactodiarrhœ'a, Coeliac flux.

Galactogan'gion, (galacto, and γαγγλίον, 'a knot,') Milk knot.

Galactohæ'mia, Galacthæ'mia, Galæ'mia, (galacto, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Lac'tis sanguinolenti Excre'tio. Secretion of bloody or bloodlike milk.

Galactoid, Galactoides, (γαλακτοειδής, from galacto, and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Resembling milk.

Galacto'ma, (galacto, and oma,) see Galactocèle.

Galac'tomastoparecto'ma, (galacto, μαστος, 'breast,' and παρεκτείναν, 'to extend,') Mastodynia apostematosa.

Galactom'eter, Lactom'eter, (galacto, and μετρον, 'measure,') An instrument for appreciating the quantity of cream in milk. It is a kind of graduated separatory or épreuve—the degrees on the scale indicating the thickness of the layer of cream that forms on the surface of the milk.

Galactom'yses, (galacto, and μυκησις, 'a fungus,') See Encephaloid.

Galacton'cus, (galacto, and ογκος, 'a swelling,') Galactocèle.

Galactoph'agous, (γαλακτοφάγος,) Galactoph'agus, Lactiv'orus, sometimes used substantively; (galacto, and φαγω, 'I eat,') That which feeds on milk. A name given to certain people, with whom milk appears to constitute the chief nourishment.

Galactoph'ora, (galacto, and φέρω, 'I bear,') Galactopoetica.

Galactophori'tis, (galactophorous [ducts], and itis,) Inflammation of the galactophorous ducts. It has been inaccurately used for ulceration of the top of the nipple towards their orifices.

Galactoph'orous, (galacto, and φέρω, 'I bear,') Lactiferous—g. Ducts, Lactiferous ducts—g. Receptacle, see Lactiferous vessels—g. Sac, see Lactiferous vessels—g. Sinuses, see Lactiferous vessels.

Galactoph'orus. Some accoucheurs have given this name to an instrument intended to facilitate sucking, when the faulty conformation of the nipple prevents the child from laying hold of it.

Galactoph'yga, see Galactophygus.

Galactoph'ygu, (galacto, and φεγγειν, 'to shun,') That which arrests or disperses the secretion of milk. Hence Galactoph'yga Medicamen'ta, such as belladonna, tobacco, iodide of potassium, &c.

Galactopla'nia, Metas'tasis seu Aberra'tio seu Vi'a extra'drina'rie lac'tis, Galactorrhœ'a erro'nea, (galacto, and πλανη, 'wandering,') Extravasation of milk into the areolar membrane. Secretion of milk elsewhere than from the breasts.

Galactoplero'sis, (galacto, and πληρωσις, 'repletion,') Redundance of milk.

Galactopoe'a, (galacto, and ποιέω, 'I make,') Galactopoetica.

Galactopoe'sis, Galactosis.

Galactopoe'tica, (γαλακτοποιητικά,) Galactoph'ora, Galactago'ga, Galactopoe'a, Galactogen'i'ia, Galac'togogues. Substances to which has been attributed the property of favoring the secretion of milk and augmenting its quantity.

Galactopoie'sis, Galactosis.

Galactopo'sia, (γαλακτοποσία, from galacto, and ποίσις, 'drink.') The drinking of milk. Treatment of a disease by means of milk.

Galactop'otes, (γαλακτοποτής,) Galactop'otus, Lactip'otor. A drinker of milk. One subjected to a milk diet.

Galactop'ya, (galacto, and πυρ, 'fire, fever.') Fever, milk.

Galactopyr'etus, (πυρετός, 'fever,') Fever, milk.

Galactor'rhœa, (galacto, and ρέω, 'I flow,')

Galactia—g. Erronea, Galactop'lania—g. Saccharata, Saccharorrhœa lactea.

Galactosac'charum, Saccharum lactis.

Galactos'chesis, Galactischesis.

Galacto'sis, Galactopoie'sis, Galactopoe'sis, Se-cer'tio lac'tis, (γαλακτώσις, from galacto, and osis.) The secretion or formation of milk.

Galactospon'gus, (galacto, and σπογγος, 'a sponge, a fungus,') See Encephaloid.

Galactot'rophê, Galactotroph'ia, (γαλακτοτροφία, from galacto, and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Nourishment by means of milk.

Galactoze'mia, (galacto, and ζημία, 'loss,') Loss of milk. Also, Galactia.

Galac'tozyme, Gal'azyme, (galacto, and ζυμη, 'ferment,') The result of the fermentation of milk by means of yeast; used in the steppes of Russia, as a remedy for phthisis. It has been prescribed in the quantity of half a tumblerful, night and morning.

Galactu'chos, (γαλακτουχος, from galactos, and εχειν, 'to have,') Suckling. Giving milk.

Galactu'ria, (galacto, and ουρον, 'urine,') Chyluria.

Galæ'mia, (gala, and αίμα, 'blood,') Galacto-hæmia.

Galan'ga, Maranta galanga.

Galan'gal, Maranta galanga.

Galangale, Cyperus longus.

Gal'arips, Allamanda.

Galarrhœ'us Lath'yris, (gala, and ρέω, 'I flow,') Euphorbia lathyris—g. Palustris, Euphorbia palustris.

Gal'ax Aphyl'ia, (from gala,) G. rotundifolia, Erythrorrhiza rotundifolia, Car'penter's leaf, Beetleweed; indigenous; Order, Ericaceæ. The root is astringent, and the leaves, in domestic practice, are applied to cuts and wounds.

Galax'ia, (from gala,) Thoracic duct.

Galax'ias, (γαλαξίας,) Galactites, Galac'tis. A milk stone. A stone supposed to be capable of promoting the secretion of milk.

Gal'azyme, (gala, and ζυμη, 'ferment,') Galac-tozime.

Gal'banum, (γαλβαν,) see Bubon galbanum—g. Long-leaved, Bubon galbanum.

Gal'bulus, (galbus, 'yellow,') A congenital jaundice, in which the yellow color continues through life;—rather a defect in color than a disease.

Gal'le, Myrica gale—g. Scotch, Myrica gale—g. Sweet, Myrica gale.

Gale, (from galla, 'a gallnut,') produced by the puncture of an insect, (?) Psora—g. des Boulangers, see Psoriasis—g. Canine, Psoriasis—g. Épidémique, Eczema—g. Miliaire, Psoriasis—g. Sèche, Lichen, Psoriasis.

Galé Odorant, Myrica gale.

Ga'lea. A helmet, (γαλεα, 'a cat,') of the skin of which it was formerly made.) A name given to the amion, and also to the bandage of Galen. In Pathology, it indicates a headache affecting the whole head. See, also, Caul.

GA'LEA APONEURO'TICA CAP'ITIS, Ga'lea tendin'ea seu Aponeurosis Santori'ni, Ga'lea cap'itis, Membra'na epiera'nia. The tendinous expansion which unites the frontal and occipital portions of the occipito-frontalis muscle.

Galeāmauro'sis, (γαλεα, 'a cat,') Amaurotic cat's eye.

Galean'con, Galian'con, (γαλεα, 'a cat,') 'a weasel,' and αγκων, 'an elbow,') Mustela'neus. One who has two short arms.

Galean'thropy, Galeanthro'pia, (γαλεα, 'a cat,' and ανθρωπος, 'a man,') A variety of melancholy in which the patient believes himself changed into a cat. An affection similar to lycanthropy and cynanthropy.

Gale'ga, (from gala, which it increases, (?) G. officina'lis seu vulga'ris seu Persica, Ru'ta copra'ria, Goat's Rue, (F.) Rue de chèvre, Faux Indigo. Ord. Leguminosæ. It is slightly aromatic, and was once used as a sudorific and alexiterial in malignant fevers, &c. It is also said to improve the secretion of milk.

GALE'GA APOLLINE'A, Tephrosia apollinea—g. Officinalis, Galega—g. Persica, Galega—g. Purpurea, Tephrosia apollinea—g. Toxicaria, Tephrosia toxicaria.

GALE'GA VIRGINIA'NA, Tephro'sia Virginia'na, Tur'key Pea, Hoar'y Pea, Devil's shoe'strings, Virgin'ia Goat's rue or Cat'gut, is used in some parts of the United States as an anthelmintic. The decoction of the root is given.

GALE'GA VULGA'RI, Galega.

Gale'nê, Graphites.

Galene'a, Graphites.

Galen'ic, Galen'ical, Gale'nicus, Gale'nius, (F.) Galénique, (after Galen.) That which relates to the doctrine of Galen or to Galenism. Used, substantively, for drugs that are not chemical.

GALEN'IC MED'ICINE, Galenism.

Ga'lenism, Galen'ic med'icine. The doctrine of Galen.

Ga'lenist, Galenis'ta, Galenis'tes. A follower of the doctrine of Galen.

Gale'nius, Galenic.

Galeob'dolon, (γαλεοβόλον, from γαλεα, 'a weasel,' and βέλλω, 'I emit a stench,') Galeopsis. Galeop'dolon, Galeopsis.

Galeopside, Galeopsis grandiflora.

Galeop'sis, Lamium album.

GALEOP'SIS, Galiop'sis, Galeob'dolon, Galeop'dolon, La'mium ru'brum, Urti'ca in'ers mag'na fetidis'sima, Sta'chys fœ'tida, Hedge-nettle, (F.) Ortie morte des bois, Ord. Labiatae, (γαλεα, 'a weasel,' and οψις, 'appearance,') the corolla having been supposed to resemble the head of the weasel.) This plant was formerly reckoned a vulnerary and anodyne.

GALEOP'SIS ANGUSTIFO'LIA, G. grandiflora—g. Dubia, G. grandiflora.

GALEOP'SIS GRANDIFLO'RA, G. Ochroleuca seu la'danum seu angustifo'lia seu du'bia seu prostra'ta seu villo'sa, Tetrahit longiflo'rum, G. Sey'-etum, Her'ba Sideri'tidis, (F.) Galeopside, Chanvre bêtard. This plant is regarded in Germany as a 'bitter resolvent.' It is the basis, also, of a celebrated nostrum, the Blankenheimer Tea, called, likewise, Lieber's pectoral and phthisical herbs, Liebersche Brust oder Auszehrungs-Kräuter, which has enjoyed great repute in pectoral complaints. The tops of the plant are given in decoction (℞j., boiled in a pint of water for a quarter of an hour.) This quantity to be taken in a day.

GALEOP'SIS LAD'ANUM, G. grandiflora—g. Ochroleuca, G. grandiflora—g. Prostrata, G. grandiflora—g. Segetum, G. grandiflora.

GALEOP'SIS VERSIC'OLOR, is possessed of the same virtues as G. grandiflora.

GALEOP'SIS VILLO'SA, G. grandiflora.

Galerop'ia, (γαλερος, 'bright,' and οψις, 'vision,') Oxyopia.

Galeux, (from gale, 'itch,') Psoric.

Ga'lia, (from gallæ, 'galls,') An ancient composition, in which galls were an ingredient,—the Ga'lia pu'ra. There was also a Ga'lia aromat'ica, moscha'ta seu musca'ta, which consisted of a mixture of several perfumes, such as musk.

Galian'con, (γαλιανκων,) Galeancon.

Galiop'sis, Galeopsis.

Galipe'a Febrif'uga, (G. is its name in Guiana,) Cusparia febrifuga—g. Officinalis, see Cusparia febrifuga.

Galipot, see Pinus sylvestris.

Gal'ium, Gal'lium, (γαλιον, from γαλα, 'milk,' because some species curdle milk,) G. verum—g. Album, G. mollugo.

GA'L'IUM APARANO'DES, G. aparine.

GA'L'IUM APARI'NE, G. infestum seu aparinoides seu brachycarpum seu scaber'rimum, Valan'tia aparine, Aparine, A. his'pida, Lap'pa, Philanthropus, Ampelocarpus, Omphalocarpus, Asphari'ne, Asper'ula, Goose'grass, Cleav'er's bees, Cleav'ers, Goose'share, Robin-run-the-hedge, Hoy'riff, (Old Eng.) Clith'eren, (Prov.) Clider, Cliver, (F.) Gaillet accrocant, G. crochant, Gratteron. Order, Rubiaceæ; Sex. Syst. Tetrandria Monogynia. The expressed juice has been given as an aperient diuretic in incipient dropsies; also in cancer; the decoction in lepra and psoriasis.

GA'L'IUM ASPRELL'UM, Rough bed'straw, Rough la'dies' bedstraw; indigenous; has the diuretic properties of most of its genus.

GA'L'IUM BRACHYCAR'PON, G. aparine—g. Caucasicum, G. verum.

GA'L'IUM CIRCE'ZANS, Wild Lig'uorice, Master of the Woods. An indigenous plant, which flowers from June to August. It is demulcent and diuretic, and is a popular domestic remedy.

GA'L'IUM INFEST'E, G. aparine—g. Luteum, G. verum.

GA'L'IUM MOLLU'GO, Gal'lium album seu Tyrolen'se, Alys'sum Plin'ii, Great'er la'dies' bedstraw, (F.) Cailletait blanc. The herb and flowers have been used medicinally in epilepsy.

GA'L'IUM ODORA'TUM, Asperula odorata—g. Scaberrimum, G. aparine.

GA'L'IUM TINCTO'RUM, an American species, closely allied in properties to G. verum.

GA'L'IUM TUBERCULA'TUM, G. verum—g. Tyrolense, G. mollugo.

GA'L'IUM VE'RUM, Gal'lium, G. luteum seu Caucasicum seu tubercula'tum, La'dies' or Yellow ladies' bedstraw, Cheese'rennet, Bed'straw, Cleav'wort, Goosegrass, Savoyan, Clabbergrass, Milk'sweet, Poor Rob'in, Grav'el-grass, (F.) Gaillet jaune ou vrai, Vrai Cailletait. The tops were used in the cure of epilepsy. The leaves and flowers possess the property of curdling milk.

Gall'bladder, Vesic'ula fel'lis, Chol'ecyst, Chol'ecyst'is, Follic'ulus fel'lis, Cyst'is fel'lea seu bi'llis seu choled'ochus, Vesic'ula fel'lea seu bilia'ria, Vesic'ula bi'llis, Follic'ulus fel'leus, (F.) Vésicule du fiel ou biliaire, Réservoir de la bile. A membranous, pyriform reservoir, lodged in a superficial depression at the inferior surface of the right lobe of the liver, Fos'sa of the Gall'bladder, Fist'ure for the Gall'bladder, Fos'sa Cyst'idis fel'leæ, (F.) Fosse de la Vésicule biliaire. It receives, by the hepatic and cystic ducts, a portion of the bile secreted by the liver, when the stomach is empty, which becomes in it more acrid, bitter, and thick. It receives an artery, called the cystic. Its veins empty into the vena porta. Its nerves come from the hepatic plexus, and its lymphatic vessels join those of the liver. Its duct, Ductus seu Cana'lis cyst'icus, (F.) Canal cystique, unites with the hepatic duct to form the com'mon chol'edoch or bile duct. In the interior of the cystic duct, the mucous membrane is arranged in a series of crescentic folds in a spiral manner, constituting the Valve of Am'ussat, Val'vula Heiste'ri.

Galvanisation, Galvanization.

Gal'vanism, Galvanis'mus, Electric'itas animalis seu Galvan'ica seu metal'lica, Irritamen'tum metallo'rum seu metal'licum, Vol'taism, Vol'ta'ic or Chem'ical or Con'tact Electric'ity. (After Galvani.) A series of phenomena, consisting in sensible movements, executed by animal parts, which are endowed with irritability, when placed in connection with two metallic plates of different nature, between which a communication is established by direct contact or by means of a metallic wire. Galvanism has been employed medicinally in the same cases as electricity, and especially in neuralgic affections. It has been applied in the form of plates—'Mans'ford's plates.' In asthma, for example, a small blister, the size of a dollar, may be placed on the neck over the course of the phrenic and pneumogastric nerves, and another on the side, in the region of the diaphragm. One metal is placed mediately or immediately over the vesicated surface on the neck, and another over that in the side. They are then connected by means of a wire. The new nervous impression, in this way induced, is often signally beneficial.

Galvan'ic chains have been devised for the same purpose. One of these, called, after its inventor, 'Pulvermacher's Hydroelec'tric Chain Bat'tery,' is a modification of the voltaic pile, capable of being employed topically.

Galvaniza'tion, Galvanisa'tio, (F.) Galvanisa'tion. The medical application of the current of galvanic electricity. The act of affecting with galvanism.

GALVANIZA'TION, Lo'calized, Lo'calized Gal'vanism, (F.) Galvanisation localisée. A mode of employing galvanism, proposed by Duchenne, of Boulogne, by which, he conceives, the electric influence may be arrested, at will, in the skin; or, without any incision or puncture, the skin may be traversed, and the electric influence be limited to the organs which it covers—to the nerves, muscles, and even the bones. See Electrization, localized.

Galvanocaustique, Galvanocauterization.
Galvanocausteriza'tion, (F.) Galvanocaustique.
 Cauterization by means of galvanic electricity.
Galvanopunc'ture, Electropuncture.

Gan'gliar, Ganglionic.
Gan'gliated, Ganglionic.
Gan'gliiform, (ganglion, and forma, 'form,')
Gan'gliiform, Gan'gliiformis. Having the shape of a ganglion.
Gan'gli'tis, gen. Gan'gliitidis, (ganglion, and itis,) Ganglionitis.
Gan'gliolum, (dim. of ganglion.) A small ganglion.
Gan'glion'ma, (ganglion, and oma.) A tumor of the glands or of the lymphatic ganglions, and especially epithelioma of them.
Gan'glion, (γαγγλιον, 'a knot,') Gan'glion. In anatomy, a name generally given to a knot-like enlargement in the course of a nerve. It is applied, however, to organs differing considerably from each other in size, color, texture, functions, &c. They are divided into gland'iform, lymphat'ic, and nervous. 1. Gland'iform gan'glions, called also ad'enoid, vas'cular, and sanguin'eous gan'glions; blind, apor'ic, duct'less, blood, and vas'cular glands,—gland'ule vasculo'se, gland'ule spu'rise, &c., are organs of whose functions we are, in general, ignorant; and which have the appearance of glands. They are formed of agglomerated globules, pervaded by bloodvessels surrounded by areolar membrane, and contain a milky or yellowish fluid. To this class belong the spleen, thymus, thyroid, and suprarenal glands. They are, doubtless, concerned in sanguification. 2. Lymphat'ic gan'glions. See Conglobate. 3. Nervous gan'glions, Gan'glia seu Gan'gliones seu Nodi seu Noduli Nervorum, Tumores seu Plexus gan'gliiform'es, Plexus glandifor'mes, Tubercula nodo'sa Nervorum, Divertic'ula spiri'tuum anima'lium, Gan'glia of in'crease, Form'ative gan'glia. Enlargements or knots in the course of a nerve. They belong, in general, to the system of the great sympathetic. One exists on the posterior root of every spinal nerve, and on one cerebral—the 5th. Bichat regarded them as so many small brains, or centres of nervous action, independent of the encephalon, and intended exclusively for organic life. Being formed by the union of the cerebral and spinal nerves, they may send out the influence of both these nervous centres to the parts to which the nerves proceeding from them are distributed. Ganglia are chiefly composed of vesicular neurine; and appear to be concerned in the formation and dispensation of nerve power.

GAN'GLION, Emphy'ma ency'stis gan'glion. A globular, hard, indolent tumor, without change in the color of the skin; of a size varying from that of a pea to that of an egg, and always situated in the course of a tendon. The tumor is formed of a viscid, albuminous fluid, contained in a cyst of greater or less thickness. The cyst is sometimes loose; but in the majority of cases it communicates, by a narrow footstalk, with the sheath of a tendon, or even with the synovial capsule of a neighboring articulation. The causes are generally unknown. The treatment consists in compression, percussion, the use of discutients, extirpation, or incision.

GAN'GLION ABDOMINA'LĒ, G. semilunar—g. Adenoid, G. glandiform—g. of Andersch, Petrous ganglion—g. Annular, see Ciliary ligament—g. of Arnold, Oticum ganglion.

GAN'GLION OF AUERBACH. A layer of nodular ganglionic nervous masses in the intestines between the circular and longitudinal muscular fibre layers.

GAN'GLION AURIC'ULAR, Oticum ganglion—g. Azygous, see Trisplanchnic nerve.

GAN'GLION OF BOCH'DOLEK. A small thickening formed by a branch of the anterior dental nerve uniting with a branch of the posterior nasal nerve from Meckel's ganglion.

GAN'GLION, CAR'DIAC, Cardiac ganglion—g. Carotic or Carotid, see Carotid or Carotic nerve—g. Cavernous, see Carotid or Carotic nerve—g. Cerebelli, Corpus dentatum—*g. GAN'GLION COR'TII, G. of Corti, G. Spira'lē, Haben'ula gangliona'ris, of Corti, (after Corti, a celebrated Italian anatomist.) A plexus of dark bordered nerve fibres, formed by the nerves of the cochlea, in the cavities of the osseous zone, which contains, at a definite spot, an aggregation of bipolar, oval, minute ganglionic cells, which probably, according to Kölliker, intercept all the fibres of the cochlear nerves in their course.

GAN'GLION DIAPHRAGMAT'ICUM. A small ganglion, connected with the phrenic plexus, at its point of junction with the phrenic nerve.

GAN'GLION OF EHRENRI'TTER, Gan'glion ner'vi glossopharynge'i superius, G. jugula'rē superius seu Ehrenritteri seu Mulleri. A reddish-gray mass on the glossopharyngeal nerve in the foramen lacerum, above the ganglion of Andersch.

GAN'GLION OF THE FIFTH NERVE, G. of Gasser.

GAN'GLION OF GAS'SER, Gan'glion seu Gan'glion Gasse'ri seu Gasseria'num seu semiluna'rē, Mo'les gangliiform'is, Intumescen'tia gangliiform'is seu semiluna'ris, Tæ'nian erro'sa Halle'ri, Gan'glion of the fifth nerve. A semicircular knot on the 5th pair, before its division into three branches.

GAN'GLION, GLAND'IFORM, see Ganglion—g. Globules, see Neurine—g. Impar, see Trisplanchnic nerve.

GAN'GLION, INTERCAROT'ID. G. Intercaro'ticum, Gland'ula Intercaro'tica. The anterior branches of the superior cervical ganglion ramify upon the external carotid artery and its branches, forming around each a delicate plexus, on the nerves composing which small ganglia are occasionally found, named, according to position, intercarot'id, lingual, tem'poral, and pharynge'al. The Intercarot'id Ganglion is made up of arterial glomeruli gathered into masses, and surrounded by dense plexuses of nerves.

Gan'glionary, Ganglionic.

Ganglio'nes (pl. of Gan'glion) Nervo'rum, Ganglions, nervous.

Ganglion'ic, Ganglion'icus, Gan'glionary, Gan'gliar, Gan'gliated, (from ganglion.) (F.) Ganglionnaire. Relating to ganglia. Nerves are so called in the course of which ganglions are met with; as the greater part of the branches of the great sympathetic or trisplanchnic, the posterior roots of the spinal nerves, &c. Ganglion'ics, according to Dr. Pereira, are agents which affect the ganglionic or great sympathetic system of nerves [?]—as stimulants and sedatives.

GANGLION'IC NERVE, Trisplanchnic nerve—g. Nervous system, see Trisplanchnic nerve.

Ganglion'i'tis, Gangli'i'tis, (ganglion, and itis.) Inflammation of a nervous ganglion. Sometimes used for inflammation of a lymphatic ganglion.

GANGLION'TIS, MESENTER'IC, Adenitis mesenterica—g. Peripherica et Medullaris, Cholera.

Ganglionnaire, Ganglionic.

Gangliop'athy, (ganglion, and πάθος, 'affection.') A condition in which debility is associated with paralysis, hyperæsthesia, or dysæsthesia of the solar plexus and the central ganglia of the sympathetic system.

Gan'glium, Ganglion—g. Gasseri, Ganglion of Gasser.

Gangræ'na, (γᾱγγραινα, from γρᾱω, γρᾱνω, 'I gnaw or eat.') Gangrene—g. Alopecia, Alopecia—g. Caries, Caries—g. Nosocomialis, Hospital gangrene—g. Nosocomiorum, Hospital gangrene—g. Gangrænescen'tia, Gangrænosis.

Gangræ'nicus, (γᾱγγραινικός.) Gangrenous.

Gangræno'des, (gangræna, and odes.) Gangrenous.

Gangrænop'sis, (gangræna, and osis, 'the countenance.') Cancer aquaticus; also, gangrenous inflammation of the eyelids, Blephari'tis gangræno'sa.

Gangræno'sis, (γᾱγγραινωσις, from gangræna, and osis.) Gangrænescen'tia. The state of being gangrenous or of becoming gangrenous.

Gangræno'sus, Gangrenous.

Gan'grene, Gangræ'na, Cancræ'na, Hot mortification, (F.) Gangrène, G. Chaude, Asphyxie des parties. Privation of life or partial death of an organ. Authors have generally distinguished mortification into two stages; naming the first incipient mortification or gan'grene. It is attended with a sudden diminution of feeling in the part affected; livid discoloration; detachment of the cuticle, under which a turbid fluid is effused; with crepitation, owing to the disengagement of air into the areolar texture. When the part has become quite black, and incapable of all feeling, circulation, and life, it constitutes the second stage, or mortification, and is called sphac'elus. Gangrene, however, is frequently used synonymously with mortification, lo'cal asphyx'ia being the term employed for that condition in which the parts are in a state of suspended animation, and, consequently, susceptible of resuscitation. When the part is filled with fluid entering into putrefaction, the affection is called humid gan'grene, (F.) Gangrène humide: on the other hand, when it is dry and shrivelled, it constitutes dry gan'grene, Mummification, (F.) Gangrène sèche. To this class belongs the gangræ'na senilis, G. Pot'tii, Presbyphac'elus, Senile gan'grene, or spontaneous gangrene of old people, which rarely admits of cure. Whatever may be the kind of gangrene, it may be caused by violent inflammation, external injury—Traumatic gangrene—contusion, a burn, congelation, the ligation of a large arterial trunk, mechanical obstruction to the return of blood—Static gangrene—or by some inappreciable internal cause.

The treatment, both of external and internal gangrene, varies according to the causes which produce it. Gangrene from excessive inflammation is obviated by antiphlogistics; and that from intense cold by cautiously restoring the circulation by cold frictions, &c. When the gangrene has become developed, the separation of the eschars must be encouraged by emollient applications, if there be considerable reaction; or by tonics and stimulants, if the reaction be insufficient.

Gangrèneux, Gangrenous.

Gan'grenous, Gangræ'nicus, Gangræno'sus, Gangræno'des, (F.) Gangrèneux. Affected with or relating to gangrene.

GAN'GRENOUS ERO'SION OF THE CHEEK, Cancer aquaticus.

Gan'jah, Gunjah.

Gan'al's Solution, see Aluminæ acetat.

Gantelet (F.), Chirothé'ca, Fas'cia digita'lis, Gaunt'let, (from [F.] gant, 'a glove.') A sort of bandage which envelops the hand and fingers like a glove. It is made with a long roller, about an inch broad; and is applied so that the fingers are covered to their tips, when it is called Gantelet entier ou complet. The Demigantelet includes only the hand and base of the fingers. Both bandages are used in fractures and luxations of the fingers, burns of the hand, &c. See Chirotheca.

Gants des Dames, ('gloves of the ladies,')

Condom—g. de Notre Dame, Digitalis.

Gaol Cachexia, see Cachexia, gaol.

Ga'ping, (Sax. geapan, 'to gape,') Yawning.

Garance, Rubia.

Garcin'ia Cambo'gia, G. seu Cambo'gia gut'ta, Mangosta'na Cambogia, (after Dr. L. Garcin, an English traveller, who accurately described it.) Ord. Guttiferae. A tree of Ceylon, Fam. Guttiferae, which affords a concrete juice similar to Gamboge.

GARCIN'IA GUT'TA, G. Cambogia.

GARCIN'IA MANGOSTA'NA, Mangosta'na Garcin'ia. The systematic name of the Mangostan', Mangoustan', Mangostine' or Mangosteen' tree, Mangosta'na. It grows in great abundance in Java and the Molucca islands. The fruit, which is about the size of an orange, is delicious, and is eaten in almost every disorder. The dried bark is used medicinally in dysentery and tenesmus; and a strong decoction has been much esteemed in ulcerated sore throat.

GARCIN'IA MOREL'LA. This tree of the East Indies is assigned in the Ph. U. S., 1873, as the source of Gambogia.

GARCIN'IA PURPU'REA. From this species a concrete oil of Mangosteen' is obtained, which is called, in India, Ko'kum but'ter, Kokum being the Indian name of Mangosteen. The oil is extracted from the fruit by boiling. It is used in India in cases of chaps.

Garçon, (old [F.] gars, 'a lad,') Boy.

Garde-malade, (garder, 'to take care of,') and malade, 'a sick person,') Nurse.

Garde'nia Dumeto'rum, (after Dr. Alex. Garden, of Carolina.) Randia dumetorum—g. Spinosa, Randia dumetorum.

Garderober, Artemisia abrotanum.

Garderober, Fæces.

Gar'diner's Alimen'tary Prepara'tion, see Oryza.

Gardouches, Vesiculæ seminales.

Gare'tum, (low [L.]) Poples.

Gargalis'mus, Gargalus.

Gar'galus, (γάργαιος, from γάργαιζω, 'I tickle,') Gar'galé, Gargalis'mus, Titilla'tio, Irrita'tio, Pruritus. Titillation, irritation, itching. Also, masturbation; and, rarely, animal magnetism.

Garga'reon, (γάργαραν,) Uvula.

Gargarisa'tio, Gargarism.

Gar'garism, Gargaris'mus, Gargaris'ma, Anagargalis'ton, Gargaris'mum, Colla'tio, Diachly'sma, Anagargaris'ton, Anagargaris'mus, Anaconchylis'mus, Anaconchylis'mus, Titillamen'tum, (F.) Gar'garisme, (from γάργαιζω, 'I wash the mouth,') 'I gargle,' formed by onomatopœia.) A gargle. Any liquid medicine intended to be retained in the mouth, for a certain time, and to be thrown in contact with the uvula, velum pendulum, tonsils, &c. For this purpose, the liquid is agitated by the air issuing from the larynx, the head being thrown back. Gargles are employed in cynanche tonsillaris and other diseases of the fauces, and are made of stimulants, sedatives, astringents, refrigerants, &c., according to circumstances. The process is termed gar'gling, gargaris'a'tio.—The term colluto'rium or colluto'rium o'ris is generally restricted to a wash for the mouth.

Gar'get, Phytolacca decandra.

Gargi'na Bal'sam, see Dipterocarpus.

Gar'gle, Gargarism.

Gar'gling, see Gargarism.

Gargouillement, (formed, like Gargarism, by onomatopœia.) Borborygmus, Gurgling. See Râle muqueux.

Gar'lic, (Sax. gæpleac,) Allium—g. Hedge, Alliaria—g. Meadow, Allium Canadense.

Gar'lock, Sinapis arvensis.

Garos'mum, Chenopodium vulvaria.

Garou Bark, Daphne gnidium.

Garre'tum, Poples.

Gar'rick Fe'ver, see Fever, Siddons.

Garrophyl'lus, Eugenia caryophyllata.

Garrot', (F.) Garrot, (garrotter, 'to tie fast,')

A compressing bandage, tightened by twisting a small cylinder of wood, by which the arteries of a limb are compressed, for the purpose of suspending the flow of blood in cases of hemorrhage, aneurism, amputation, &c.

Garrotil'lo, Cynanche maligna.

Garru'litas, (garrus, 'I chatter,') Loquacity.

Gärtner, Canals or Ducts of. The excretory ducts of the Wolffian bodies disappear in the human female, but in some of the lower animals, as the pig, they persist, and receive this name.

Garu'leum Bipinna'tum, (corr. from caruleum, 'blue'—the flowers.) A South African plant, Ord. Compositæ; known under the name Snake-root, from its reputed effects as an antidote to the bites of venomous serpents. The root is a great favorite with the Boers in chest diseases—as asthma—and in affections in which a free secretion from the mucous membrane of the bronchia is indicated. It has diaphoretic properties, and acts as a diuretic in gout and dropsy. It is given in decoction or tincture. Dr. Pappe thinks the root ought to have a place in the Materia Medica.

Ga'rum, (γάρων,) Licul'men, Liqua'men. The ancient Romans gave this name to a kind of pickle made by collecting the liquor which flowed from a salted and half-putrefied fish, (γαρός,) It was used as a condiment.

Garvance, Cicer arietinum.

Gas, Gaz, (Sax. gæst, (G.) Geist, 'spirit, [?])

Air. Van Helmont first designated by this name—the etymology of which is not certain—the carbonic acid developed in the vinous fermentation. Afterwards, the term was appropriated to every permanently elastic fluid; that is, which preserves its æriform state at all temperatures; and ultimately it was extended to all æriform bodies, which were divided into permanent and non-permanent gases. The latter are generally termed vapors; they return to the liquid state, when a portion of their caloric is abstracted. The permanent gases, or gazes properly so called, are numerous, and may be divided into three sections with regard to their effects on the animal economy.

- | | |
|----------------------------------|---|
| 1. Irrespirable gases. | { Ammoniacal gas, chlorohydric acid gas, deutoxide of nitrogen, nitrous acid gas, and chlorine. |
| 2. Negatively deleterious gases. | { Hydrogen, nitrogen, carbonic acid. |
| 3. Positively deleterious gases. | { Oxygen, protoxide of nitrogen, carburetted hydrogen, carbonic oxide, sulphuretted hydrogen, and arseniuretted hydrogen. |

It is proper to remark that the term respirable has been very differently employed by different writers. Sometimes it has meant the power of supporting life when applied to the blood in the lungs. At others, all gases have been deemed irrespirable which are incapable of being introduced into the lungs by voluntary efforts,—without any relation to their power of maintaining vitality; and this is perhaps the best sense. The gases were at one time employed in medicine under great expectations, especially by the enthusiastic Beddoes; but they are now scarcely ever had recourse to. They differ considerably in their effects on the animal economy. Some, as oxygen, are exciting; others, as azote, depressing; while others, again, as the Protoxide of nitrogen or laughing gas, produce the most singular effects.

GAS, PUL'MONARY, Gas of the lungs. A name given to the expired air, which contains, besides common air, an increase of carbonic acid, water, and some animal matter.

GAS SAN'GUINIS, ('gas of blood,') Gas anima'le sanguinis, Hal'itus seu Aur'a seu Va'por san'guinis, Spir'itus roriferus, Hæmat'mus. The halitus, or vapor, given off by freshly drawn blood.

GAS SUL'PHURIS, Sulphurous acid.

Gascari'lla, Croton cascarilla.

Gas'eous, Gaz'eous or Ga'zeous, Gazeo'eus, (F.) Gazeux. Relating or appertaining to, or having the form or character of, gas.

Gas'ping, (same etymon as gaping [?],) Anhelation.

Gastein, or Gastien, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Gastein or Gasteiner Wildbad is in the Noric Alps, Austria. The waters are thermal. Temp. 106° to 118° Fahr. They contain sulphate of soda, chloride of sodium, chloride of potassium, carbonate of soda, carbonate of lime, magnesia, manganese, iron, &c. The waters seem especially beneficial to the prematurely old, the hypochondriac, paralytic, and chronic rheumatic.

Gas'ter, gen. Gas'teris, and Gas'tri, (γαστήρ, 'belly,') The abdomen. At times, but rarely, the uterus. Also, the stomach, in particular.

GAS'TER MUS'CU'LI, see Muscle.

Gast'ral'gia, Gastralgia.

Gas'teranax, (gaster, and ἀναξ, 'a king,') A name given by Dolæus to a hypothetical vital principle, corresponding to the Archæus of Van Helmont, the seat of which he placed in the lower belly. See Bithnimalæa.

Gasterangemphrax'is, Gasterangiemphraxis.

Gasterangiemphrax'is, Gasterangemphrax'is, Gasteremphrax'is, (gaster, and ἀγχω, 'I strangle,') and ἀφρασσα, 'I obstruct,') Obstruction of the pylorus. Also, and properly, obstruction or congestion of the vessels of the stomach.

Gast'rase, (from gaster,) Pepsin.

Gasterastheni'a, Imbecill'itas seu Aton'ia seu Lax'itas ventriculi, (gaster, and ἀσθενία, 'debility,') Debility of the stomach.

Gasteratax'ia, (gaster, and ἀταξία, 'irregularity,') Embarras gastrique.

Gastereche'ma, gen. Gastereche'matis, Gastereche'ma, Son'itus stomach'icus, (gaster, and ἤχημα, 'sound,') Sound heard on percussing the region of the stomach, and referred to that organ.

Gasteremphrax'is, (gaster, and ἐμφραξις, 'obstruction,') Gasterangiemphraxis.

Gasterhysterot'omy, (gaster, ὕστερα, 'uterus,') and τομή, 'section,') Cæsarean section.

Gastræ'mia, (gastro, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Hyperæmia of the stomach.

Gastral'gia, (gastro, and ἄλγος, 'pain,') Cardialgia.

Gastraneurys'ma, gen. Gastraneurys'matis, (gastro, and ἀνωρύσμα, 'dilatation,') Gastræctasis.

Gastratroph'ia, (gastro, and ἀρροφία, 'wasting,') Atrophy of the stomach.

Gastereche'ma, Gasterechemia.

Gastræctasis, Gastræcta'sia, Gastraneurys'ma, Dilata'tio ventriculi, (gastro, and ἐκτασις, 'dilatation,') Dilatation of the stomach.

Gastrelcobre'sis, (gastro, ἕλκος, 'ulcer,') and βρωσις, 'eating,') Gastrobro'sis ulcero'sa.

Gastrel'cosis, Ulcera'tio seu Exulcera'tio seu Ul'cera ventriculi, (gastro, and ἕλκος, 'ulceration,') Ulceration of the stomach. When accompanied with hectic, it constitutes Gastrophthi'sis, Gastroph'thoë.—See Ulcus perforans.

Gastrelytrotom'ia, see Cæsarean section.

Gastrecephalo'ma, gen. Gastrencephalo'matis, Gastromyelo'ma, Gastromyelo'sis, Gastroën-cephalo'sis, (gastro, εγκέφαλος, 'the brain,') and oma,') Encephaloid of the stomach.

Gastren'chyta, (gastro, ἐν, and χέω, 'I pour,') Stomach pump.

Gastreuter'al'gia, (gastro, εντερον, 'intestine,') and ἄλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the stomach and bowels.

Gastreuter'ic, Gastroentericus.

Gastreuterit'ic, Gastroenteritic.

Gastreuteri'tis, Gastroenteritis.

Gastreuteromala'cia, Gastreuteromalax'is, (gastro, εντερον, 'intestine,') and μαλακία, 'softening,') Softening of the stomach and intestines.

Gastrepat'icus, Gastrohepatic.

Gastrepati'tis, gen. Gastrepati'tidis, Inflam-ma'tio ventriculi et hepatis; (gastro, and hepatis-) Inflammation of the stomach and liver.

Gastrepipto'icus, Gastroëpiptioic.

Gastrethis'ia, (gastro, and ἐρεθίζω, 'I irritate,') Irritation of the stomach.

Gas'tric, Gas'tricus, (from gaster,) Belonging or relating to the stomach.

GAS'TRIC AC'IDS, see Gastric juice.

GAS'TRIC AR'TERIES, are three in number, Ar-te'ria gas'tro-epiplo'ica dex'tra, A. gastro-epiplo'ica sinis'tra, and A. corona'ria ventriculi.

GAS'TRIC CATARRH', Gastritis—g. c. Chronic, Pyrosis—g. Flux, Gastrorrhœa.

GAS'TRIC JUICE, Suc'cus gas'tricus, Men'strum seu Fermentum ventriculi, (F.) Suc Gastrique, Gas'tric Acid. A fluid, secreted from the mucous membrane of the stomach. As met with, it is a mixture of the fluids secreted by that organ with those of the supradiaphragmatic portion of the alimentary canal. Owing to such admixture, the most contrary properties have been assigned to it. That such a fluid is secreted, which concurs powerfully in digestion, is evident from many considerations, and has been positively proved by the author and numerous others. It was found by him to contain, in man, chlorohydric and acetic acids, which are associated with a ferment, pep'sin. The gastric fluid in cases of sudden death sometimes corrodes and perforates the stomach; giving rise to interesting questions in medical jurisprudence.

GAS'TRIC JUICE, ARTIFIC'IAL, see Digestion, artificial.

GAS'TRIC NERVES. The two cords by which the pneumogastric nerves terminate, and which descend on the two surfaces of the stomach; as well as the filaments of the great sympathetic, which accompany the gastric vessels.

GAS'TRIC PLEX'US, Plex'us corona'rius ventriculi. A nervous network, formed by the solar plexus. It accompanies the Arte'ria corona'ria ventriculi, and passes along the lesser curvature of the stomach, to which it gives branches.

GAS'TRIC VEINS follow the same distribution as the arteries, and open into the Ve'na por'ta abdominis.

Gas'tricism, Gastricis'mus, (from gaster,) A name by which is designated the medical theory, that refers all, or almost all, diseases to an accumulation of saburra in the digestive passages.

Gastricité, Embarras gastrique.

Gastriloque, (gastro, and loquor, 'I speak,') Engastrimyth.

Gastril'oquist, Engastrimyth.

Gastril'oquus, Engastrimyth.

Gastrimar'gus, (γαστριμαργός, from gastro, and μαργω, 'I rage,') Glutton.

Gastrin'um, Potash.

Gastris'mus, (γαστρισμος,) Gluttony. See Saburra.

Gastrit'ic, Gastrit'icus, (gastro, and itis,) Relating to gastritis.

Gastrit'is, gen. Gastrit'idis, Ventriculi inflam-ma'tio, Caum'a seu Empres'ma seu Cardial'gia inflam-mato'ria, Fe'bris stomach'ica inflam-mato'ria, Inflamma'tio gastrit'is, I. ventriculi seu stom'achi, Phleg'monè ventriculi, Inflamma'tion of the stom-ach, Gas'tric Catarrh', (F.) Inflamma'tion de l'Esto-mac, Gastrite, Catarrhe gastrique. A disease, characterized by pyrexia; great anxiety; heat and pain in the epigastrium, increased by taking any thing into the stomach; vomiting and hiccough. Gastritis may either be seated in the peritoneal or mucous coat. It is most frequently in the latter—Esogastri'tis, Endogastri'tis, Gastromycoderi'tis, Gastri'tis mucosa—being excited directly by acrid ingesta. It requires the most active treatment;—bleeding, blistering, fomentations, diluents, &c. Some degree of inflammation of the mucous coat of the stomach was considered by the followers of Broussais to be present in almost all fevers; and the various forms of dyspepsia have been supposed by some to be nothing more than chronic endogastri'tis. Gastric Catarrh, a common form of gastritis, marked by active congestion of the organ, with excessive secretion of mucus, is usually produced by excess in eating or drinking. The French describe under Gastrite, Catarrhe gastrique ou Gastrite Catarrhale, G. Interstitielle, including Linite suppurative, Suppurative Lini'tis of Brinton, and a chronic form, Sclérose de l'Estomac, Oirrho'sis of the stom'ach.

GASTRI'TIS ARTHRITICA, Cœliagra—g. Glandularis, Gastroadenitis.

GASTRI'TIS PHLEGMONO'SA. Inflammation of the submucous connective tissue of the stomach, usually accompanied with abscess, and gradually invading the muscular and peritoneal coats.

Gastro, (from gaster), in composition, the stomach, or belly.

Gastroadeni'tis, Gastri'tis glandula'ris. A condition of the stomach, especially after acute poisoning by phosphorus or arsenic, in which the gastric glands are enlarged, and the epithelial cells filled with a finely granular mass, or at a later stage fatty granules.

Gastroarthri'tis, Gout—g. Ataxia, Dyspepsia—g. Atonia, Dyspepsia—g. Bronchitis, Fever, adenomeningeal—g. Entérite intense, Synocha—g. Entérite, with nervous affection of the brain, see Typhus—g. Enteritis, follicular, Dothinen-teritis; see Typhus.

Gastrobro'sis, Perforatio ventriculi, Ventriculus perforatus, Gastrorrhæxis, (F.) Perforation de l'Estomac, (gastro, and βρωσις, 'the act of gnawing.') Corrosion and perforation of the stomach.

GASTROBROSIS ULCERO'SA, Gastralcobrosis. Destruction and perforation of the coats of the stomach by ulceration.

Gastrocele, Gastrocele, (gastro, and κλη, 'a tumor,') Hernia of the stomach, Hernia ventriculi, (F.) Hernie de l'Estomac. Hernia formed by the stomach through the upper part of the linea alba. See Epigastrocele.

Gastrocephali'tis, (gastro, κεφαλη, 'head,' and itis.) Inflammation of the stomach and head,—a concomitant of certain malignant fevers.

Gastrocholo'sis, (gastro, χολη, 'bile,' and osis,) Fever, gastric.

Gastrocnemé, (gastro, and κνημη, 'leg,') Sura.

Gastrocnem'ia, (γαστροκνημία,) Sura.

Gastrocnem'ii. The name of the two fleshy masses which occupy the posterior and superficial part of the leg, Gemelli or Gem'ini, (F.) Gastrocnemiens, Jumeaux de la jambe, Bifémoro-calcaniens (Ch.); the two constituting the Gastrocnem'ius exter'ius, of English anatomists. These muscles are distinguished into internal and external, which are distinct above, but united at their inferior extremity. They are long, flat, and thick; and arise—the former from the posterior part of the outer condyle of the femur; the latter, from the posterior part of the inner condyle of the same bone. The aponeurosis, which unites these muscles below, joins with that of the Solaris, and forms with it a large tendon, which, under the name Ten'do Achil'lis, is inserted at the posterior part of the calcaneum. These muscles extend the foot on the leg, and the leg on the foot. They can, also, bend the leg and the thigh reciprocally on each other. The Gastrocnem'ius and Soleus constitute, together, the Tri'ceps suræ, Sura'lis or Exten'sor pe'dis. See Soleus.

Gastrocnem'ium, Sura.

Gastrocnem'ius, see Gastrocnemii.

Gastrocœliacus, Coeliac.

Gastrocœlicus, Coeliac.

Gastrocolic, see Epiploon, gastrocolic.

Gastrocolica, Cardialgia.

Gastrocoli'tis, (gastro, κωλον, 'colon,' and itis.)

Inflammation of the stomach and colon.

Gastrocolpotom'ia, (gastro, κόλπος, 'vagina,' and τομή, 'section,') see Cæsarean section.

Gastrodid'y'mus, Gastrod'y'mus, Did'y'mus Symphyogas'trius, Psod'y'mus, (gastro, and διδυμος, 'a twin,') A monstrosity in which twins are united by the abdomen.

Gastroduode'nal, Gastroduodena'lis. Relating to the stomach and duodenum.

Gastroduodeni'tis, (F.) Gastroduodénite. Inflammation of the stomach and duodenum, an affection, which figured largely in the system of Broussais. See Gastroenteritis.

Gastroduodenop'ya, (gastro, duodenum, and πυρ, 'fire or fever,') Fever, adenomeningeal.

Gastrod'yné, (gastro, and δόνη, 'pain,') Cardialgia.

Gastrodyn'ia, Cardialgia—g. Flatulenta, Colica flatulenta.

Gastroëlytrotom'ia, (gastro, ελκτρον, 'vagina,' and τομή, 'section,') see Cæsarean section.

Gastroënteral'gia, (gastro, εντέρον, 'intestine,' and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the stomach and intestine.

Gastroënter'ic, Gastroënter'icus, Gastrenter'ic, Gastrenter'icus, Gastrointes'tinal, (gastro, and εντέρον, 'intestine,') Relating to the stomach and intestine.

Gastroëntérite, Gastroenteritis.

Gastroënterit'ic, Gastroënterit'icus, Gastrenterit'ic, Gastrenterit'icus, (gastro, εντέρον, 'intestine,' and itis.) Relating to gastroenteritis.

Gastroënteri'tis, gen. Gastroënteri'tidis, Gastrenteri'tis, Inflammat'io ventriculi et Intestino-rum, Gastroenter'ic disease, (F.) Gastroëntérite. Inflammation of stomach and small intestine. According to Broussais, the essential fevers of authors are gastroenteritis, simple, or complicated.

Gastroëpip'loic, Gastroëpip'loicus, Gastrepip'loicus, (gastro, and επιπλουν, 'the epiploon,') That which relates to the stomach and epiploon.

GASTROËPIP'LOIC ARTERIES, Gas'trica inf'erior ar'teries, are two in number, and distinguished into right and left. The right, also called Gastrohepat'ic, Gas'trica inf'erior dex'tra, Gastroëpip'loica dex'tra, is furnished by the hepatic artery. It descends behind the pylorus, and passes from right to left, along the great curvature of the stomach. It gives branches to the pancreas, duodenum, stomach, omentum majus, and terminates by anastomosing with the Gastroëpip'loica sinis'tra, Gas'trica sinis'tra seu inf'erior sinis'tra. This—the left—arises from the splenic artery. It is of considerable magnitude, and passes from left to right, along the great curvature of the stomach, distributing its branches more particularly to the stomach and omentum majus. It terminates by joining the right gastroëpip'loic.

GASTROËPIP'LOIC GAN'GLIONS are the lymphatic ganglions or glands, situate towards the great curvature of the stomach, between the two anterior laminae of the omentum majus.

GASTROËPIP'LOIC VEINS are distinguished, like the arteries, into right and left. They empty themselves;—the former, into the superior mesenteric; the latter, into the splenic vein.

Gastrohæmorrh'gia, Hæmatemesis.

Gastrohepat'ic, Gastrohepat'icus, Hepatogas'tricus, Gastrep'at'icus, (gastro, and ήπαρ, gen. ήπατος, 'the liver,') Relating to the stomach and liver. This name has been given to several organs. See Epiploon, gastrohepatic, &c.

Gastrohepatitis, gen. Gastrohepatitidis, (gastro, ἥπαρ, ἥπατος, 'liver,' and itis.) Simultaneous inflammation of the stomach and liver.

Gastrohysterotomy, (gastro, ὕστερα, 'uterus,' and τομή, 'section,') Caesarean section.

Gastrointestinal, Gastroenteric.

Gastroliaenalis, (gastro, and lien, 'the spleen,') Gastrosplenicus.

Gastrolithiasis, (gastro, and lithiasis.) The formation of concretions, gastrolithi, in the stomach.

Gastromalacia, Gastromalaxia.

Gastromalaxia, Gastromalacia, Gastromalacosis, Malacogaster, Malaxis ventriculi, Dissolutio ventriculi, Emollitio ventriculi, Pseudophlogosis ventriculi resolutiva et colliquativa, Metamorphosis ventriculi gelatiniformis, Erosio et perforatio spontanea ventriculi, Resolutio et diabrosis ventriculi, (F.) Gastromalacie, Ramollissement de l'Estomac, R. muqueux et noir (of Rokitsansky), R. pultacé et gelatiniforme (of Cruveilhier), (gastro, and μαλαξίς, 'softening,') Softening of the stomach, induced at times by the gastric secretions after death—Resolutio ventriculi autopeptica.

Gastromanitis, (gastro, and μαντις, 'a diviner,') Engastrimyth.

Gastromeles, (gastro, and μέλος, 'a limb,') A monster with one or more supernumerary limbs on the abdomen.

Gastromenia, (gastro, and μην, 'a month,') Vicarious menstruation from the stomach.

Gastromeningitis, (gastro, and meningitis, 'inflammation of the membranes of the brain,') Fever, gastric.

Gastrometrotomy, (gastro, μήτρα, 'the uterus,' and τομή, 'section,') Caesarean section.

Gastromycoderis, (gastro, μυκός, 'mucus,' and δέρμα, 'skin,') See Stomach.

Gastromycoderitis, gen. Gastromycoderitidis, (same etymon.) See Gastritis.

Gastromyelo'ma, gen. Gastromyelo'matis, (gastro, μυελός, 'medulla, marrow,' and the suffix oma,) Gastroencephaloma.

Gastronosis, (gastro, and νόσος, 'a disease,') Gastropathy.

Gastroparalysis, Gastroplegia, Paralysis ventriculi, (gastro, and paralysis.) Paralysis of the stomach.

Gastropathy, Gastropathi'a, Gastronosis, Gastronosis, (gastro, and παθος, 'disease,') Disease of the stomach.

Gastroperiodynia, (gastro, περί, 'around,' and ὄδυνη, 'pain,') Sool (India). A violent periodical neuralgic pain at the pit of the stomach, not uncommon in Hindoostan.

Gastrophrenic, Gastrophrenicus, (gastro, and φρενίς, 'the diaphragm,') Belonging to the stomach and diaphragm.

GASTROPHRENIC LIG'AMENT is a reflection of the peritoneum, which descends from the inferior surface of the diaphragm to the cardia.

Gastrophthisis, (gastro, and φθίω, 'I waste away,') Gastrectosis.

Gastrophthoë, Gastrectosis.

Gastroplegia, (gastro, and πλῆγη, 'a stroke,') Gastroparalysis.

Gastrop'ya, (gastro, and πυρ, 'fire, fever,') Fever, gastric.

Gastropyr'etus, Fever, gastric.

Gastrorraphy, Gastror'aphy, Gastrorrha'phia, Gastror'rhaphe, Sutura abdominalis, (gastro, and ράβη, 'a suture,') The suture used for uniting wounds penetrating the abdomen, when they are too extensive or too unequal to be kept in contact by position, adhesive plaster, or appropriate bandages. The interrupted and quilled sutures are those chiefly employed.

Gastrorrha'gia, (gastro, and ῥήγνυμι, 'to break forth,') Hæmatemesis.

Gastrorrhex'is, (gastro, and ῥήξις, 'rupture,') Gastrobrosis.

Gastrorrhœ'a, (gastro, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') Blennorrhœ'a seu Fluxus ventriculi, Gastric catarrh' or flux, (F.) Flux muqueux de l'estomac, Catarrhe stomacal. A morbid condition of the stomach, which consists in the secretion of an excessive quantity of mucus from the lining membrane. Also, Cœliac flux.

Gastrosclir'rhous, Induratio ventriculi sclir'rho'sa, Sclir'rhous seu Carcino'ma ventriculi. Sclirrhous induration or cancer of the stomach.

Gastrosco'pia, (gastro, and σκοπεω, 'I examine,') Abdominoscopia.

Gastro'ses, (from gaster, and osis.) A generic name for diseases seated in the stomach.

Gastrosple'nic, Gastrosple'nicus, Gastroliaen'lis, (gastro, and σπλήν, 'the spleen,') Relating to stomach and spleen.

Gastrosteno'sis, (gastro, στενός, 'contracted, and osis.) Stricture of the stomach.

GASTROSTENOSIS CARDI'ACA et PYLOR'ICA, Stricture cardi'acæ, S. pylori. Narrowness of the orifices of the stomach, usually from cancer.

Gastros'tomy, see Sectio abdominalis.

Gastrot'omy, (gastro, and τομή, 'section,') Several different operations have been so called. 1. The Caesarean section. 2. An incision made into the abdomen for the purpose of removing some internal strangulation or volvulus, or to reduce hernia, Laparot'omy, Abdom'inal section; and, 3. The opening made in the stomach to remove a foreign body which has passed into it through the œsophagus.

Gastropyperneur'ia, (gastro, ὑπερ, 'in excess,' and νεύρον, 'a nerve,') Morbidly increased activity of the nerves of the stomach.

Gâteau Fébrile, ('fever cake,') Ague cake.

Gateur, ([F.] from gater, 'to spoil,') A name given in the insane hospitals, and in the hospitals for incurables and the aged in France, to persons who are incapable of attending to themselves, and have lost all sense of cleanliness.

Gath'ering, Abscess, Suppuration.

Gattilier, Vitex.

Gau'dia Fœ'da, ('foul enjoyments,') Masturbation.

Gaulthe'ria, Gaulthe'ria procumbens, Gautie'ra repens (?), Mountain Tea, Partridge berry, Berried Tea, Grouseberry, Deer'berry, Spiceberry, Tea'berry, Red'berry, Win'tergreen, Red'berry Tea, Ground'berry, Ground'ivy, Ground holly, Hill ber'ry, Box ber'ry, Chequer ber'ry, (F.) Gaulthérie, Palommier, Thé du Canada, (after Dr. Gaulthier, of Quebec.) Ord. Ericacæ. An American plant, the leaves of which—Gaulthe'ria (Ph. U. S.)—are one of the principal articles of the materia medica of some Indian tribes. The infusion of the leaves is stimulant and anodyne, and is said to have been used with advantage in asthma. The oil—O'leum Gaulthe'rie (Ph. U. S.)—is used, chiefly on account of its pleasant flavor, to cover the taste of other medicines.

Gaunt'let, (from gant, 'a glove,') Gantelet.

Gauquava, Smilax China.

Gautie'ra Re'pens (?), Gaultheria.

Gauze, Antiseptic. An unirritating antiseptic covering for wounds, made by dipping ordinary muslin gauze in a melted mixture of paraffin, p. 16, resin, p. 4, and crystallized carbolic acid, p. 1.

Gay Feath'er, Liatris spicata.

Gayac, Guaiaecum.

Gaylussac'ia Resino'sa, (after Gay-Lussac), Vaccinium resinosum, Black Huck'leberry. Order, Ericacæ. An indigenous plant, whose fruit is sweet and agreeable. The leaves and root, as well as those of GAYLUSSAC'IA DUMOSA, Dwarf huckleberry, and of G. FRONDO'SA, Blue tan'gle, indigenous, are used in decoction as astringents in diarrhœa, sore throat, &c.

Gaz, Gas—g. des Ballons, ('gas of the balloons,') Hydrogen—g. des Marais, Hydrogen, carburetted.

Gazel, Ribes nigrum.

Gazelle, Antilope.

Gaz'eol. A mixture of impure ammonia, 20°, acetone, benzol, impure naphthalin, and fresh tar, which, when evaporated in a hot water bath, has been recommended for inhalation in whooping-cough, and bronchial and pulmonary affections.

Gaz'eous or Ga'zeous, Gaseous.

Gaz'ogene, (gas, and γενω, 'I generate,') A name given to a portable apparatus for preparing aerated or carbonated water, — as the soda water of the shops.

Gazeux, Gaseous.

Géant, Giant.

Géantisme, see Giant.

Gébârpulver, ('labor-powder,') Ergot.

Gede'ola. The convex part of the liver, according to Du Cange.

Geil'nau, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Geilnau is a village in the grand-duchy of Nassau, at no great distance from Frankfurt. The waters contain carbonic acid, carbonate, sulphate, and phosphate of soda, chloride of sodium, and carbonates of lime, magnesia, and iron.

Geis'mar, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The mineral waters of Geismar, in Bavaria, are acidulous chalybeates.

Geiso'ma, (γειωμα, like γειων, 'the eaves of a house,') Geisum.

Gei'son, Geisum.

Geissosper'mum Vello'sii, (γεισων, or γεισων, 'a roof tile, the eaves of a house, and σπειρα, 'seed,') Pere'ira. A tree of Brazil, whose bark is used, in decoction, in intermittent fever. A substance has been extracted from it to which the name Pere'irine has been given.

Geis'um, (γεισων,) Geis'on. The part of the frontal bone over the eyes.

Gelap'pium, (from Jalapa or Xalapa, in Mexico,') Convolvulus jalapa.

Gelasi'ni Den'tes, (γελαστοι, from γελω, 'I laugh,') Incisive teeth.

Gelas'mus, (γελω, 'I laugh,') Canine laugh.

Gelatig'enous, (gelatin, and γενω or γεννω, 'I engender,') That which forms gelatinous structure. Dr. Carpenter restricts the term to substances yielding gelatin. The propriety of this may well be questioned.

Gel'atin, Gel'atine, Gelati'na, Gabre'da, (F.) Gélatine, Gellée, 'gelly or jelly, (from gelare, 'to freeze, congeal,') An immediate animal principle. It is semitransparent, insipid, inodorous, insoluble in cold water, very soluble in hot, which it thickens, and transforms into jelly on cooling. Pure fretted gelatin is white and without odor. It is obtained solely from fresh calves' feet, and is added to the diet of children, as well as to other aliments in disease. Gelatin is a nutritious substance, although by some denied to be so; and, when dissolved in a considerable quantity of water, forms an emollient fluid, much used in therapeutics, but not the most easy of digestion. Two forms of gelatin are admitted—the one glutin, or gelatin proper; the other chondrin.

GEL'ATIN, SU'GAR OF, Glycocin.

GEL'ATIN OF WHARTON, Gelati'na Whartoniana, Jelly of the Cord. A soft, dense, fluid, gelatinous substance, which envelops the umbilical cord, and is conceived by some to be inservient to the nutrition of the foetus.

Gelati'na Aquat'ica, ('aquatic gelatin,') Brasenia hydropeltis.

Gélatine des Cartilages, ('gelatin of cartilages,') Chondrin.

Gelat'iniform Mat'ter of the Intes'tine, Albuminose.

Gel'atinoid, Gelatinoï'des, (gelatin, and ειδος, 'resemblance,') Resembling gelatin.

Gelat'inous, Gelatino'sus, (F.) Gélatineux. Relating or appertaining to or having the character or appearance of gelatin or jelly. Viscid.

GELAT'INOUS CAP'SULES, see Capsules — g. Nervefibres, see Nervefibres.

Gela'tio, (gelare, gelatum, 'to freeze, congeal,') Congelation.

Gel'ding, ([G.] gelten, 'to castrate,') Castration, Eunuch.

Gelée, Gelly — g. contre le Goître, Balsam, ioduretted.

Gel'ly, Jel'ly, Jus gela'tum seu coagula'tum, Gell'u, (F.) Gelée, (from gelare, 'to congeal,') A substance of a soft consistence, tremulous, and transparent, which is obtained by an appropriate treatment from animal or vegetable matters; hence the distinction into animal and vegetable jelly. The former is merely a concentrated solution of gelatin, left to cool. Several gellées are official in the French Codex (1866).

Veg'etable Jel'ly is found in the juice of the currant, mulberry, and of almost all acid fruits, when ripe. It is of itself colorless, but almost always retains a little coloring matter of the fruit which has furnished it. It has an agreeable taste; is scarcely soluble in cold water, but boiling water dissolves it readily; the jelly is, however, almost all deposited on cooling. If this aqueous solution be boiled for a long time, it becomes analogous to mucilage, and loses the property of being jellied on cooling.

Gelsemin'ia, see Gelseminum.

Gelsem'inum or Gelse'mium Nit'idum, G. Sempervi'rens, Bigno'nia sempervi'rens, Yel'low Jes'samine. The flowers, root, &c., of this shrub of the Southern States, Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia, Nat. Ord. Apocynæ, are employed, and the effluvia from the former are said sometimes to induce stupor. The root is official. Gelseminum is a nervous and arterial sedative, and in overdoses a poison. It is usually prescribed in the form of tincture. An alkaloid, Gelsemin'ia, has been obtained from the bark of the root.

GELSEM'INUM SEMPERVI'RENS, G. nitidum.

Gel'u, Gelly.

Gel'us, (γελως,) Risus.

Gel'y's Su'ture, see Suture.

Gemel'li, ('twins,') Gastrocnemii, Ischiotrochanterianus, Testicles.

Gemel'lus, Gem'inus, Did'ymus, (F.) Jumeau, Jumelle, Besson, Bessonne. One of two children, twins, born at the same accouchement, or gestation.—Relating to twins, as a 'twin conception.'

GEMEL'LUS MUS'culus. Cowper applies this name to the long portion of the triceps brachialis united to the inner portion.

Gem'ini, ('twins,') Ischiotrochanterianus, Testicles.

Gem'inum Cen'trum Semicircula'rê, Tania semicircularis.

Gem'inus, Gemellus.

Gemipo'ma, Mamma.

Gémissement, (from gémir, 'to groan or moan,') See Moaning.

Gem'ma, ('a bud,') Granulation — g. Oculi, Crystalline.

Gemma'tion, see Generation — g. Generation by, see Generation.

Gemmiparité, (gemma, 'a bud, and pario, 'I bring forth,') See Generation.

Gemmip'arous, see Generation.

Gemur'sa, a corn; also, a name given by the ancients to a disease seated between the toes; — the nature of which is unknown to us.

Gen, (from γενω, 'I generate,') in composition, generating.

Ge'na, (γεννη,) The Cheek, Wang, Ge'nys, Pa-re'i'a, Gam'phē, Gamp'hē'lē, Gua'thos, Gna'thus, Ma'la, (Sc.) Wongé, (F.) Joue. The cheeks form the lateral parts of the mouth. Externally, they have no precise limits; they are continuous, above, with the lower eyelid; below, they descend as far as the base of the jaw; before, they terminate at the alae nasi, and at the commissures of the lips; and behind, at the ear. Their thickness varies according to the degree of fatness of the individual. They are formed of three layers;—one dermoid, another muscular, and the third mucous.

Gencives, Gingivæ.

Geneagenesis, (γεννα, 'a generation,' and genesis.) See Generation (alternate).

Geneanthropy, (gen, and ανθρωπος, 'man.') Anthropogenia.

Genei'as, gen. Genei'adis, Ion'thus, (γεντας, from γενν, 'the chin,') Lani'go pri'ma, Probar'bium. The first beard. The downy hairs which first cover the cheek.—Also, a bandage which passes under the chin.

Genei'on, (γενειον.) Beard, Mentum.

Gen'eral Anat'omy, see Anatomy—g. Practitioner, Surgeon-apothecary.

Générate, Influenza.

Genera'tio, gen. Generatio'nis, Generation—g. Æquivoca, see Generation—g. Calculi, Lithia—g. Homogenea, see Generation—g. Primigena, see Generation—g. Primitiva, see Generation—g. Originaria, see Generation—g. Spontanea, see Generation.

Genera'tion, Genera'tio, Gen'esis, Genne'sis, Go'nē, Go'nus, Procrea'tio, Procrea'tion, Breed'ing, ([L.] genere, genitum, γενν, or γενναι, 'I engender.') Under this name physiologists comprehend the aggregate of functions, which concur, in organized beings, towards the production of their kind. The act of generation means the union of the sexes. See Coition. The writers of antiquity believed, that all organized bodies are produced, either by what is termed univocal or regular generation, Homogen'esis, Genera'tio homogen'ea, Propaga'tio, which applies to the upper classes of animals and vegetables, or by spontaneous generation, Autogen'ia, Heterogen'esis, Heterogen'ia, Generatio heterogen'ea seu æquivoca seu primitiva seu primig'ena seu originaria seu spontanea, Spontéparité (Dugès), which they considered applicable to the very lowest classes only, as the mushroom, the worm, the frog, &c. There are still many distinguished naturalists who consider that beings, low in the scale of animality, are produced in the latter way. Spontaneous generation and equivocal generation have been regarded by many to be synonymous. Others, however, mean by spontaneous generation, the production of a new being from the mere combination of inorganic elements; while by equivocal generation they understand the evolution of a new being from organized beings dissimilar to themselves, through some irregularity in their functions, or through the incipient decay or degeneration of their tissues. As to the mode in which regular generation is accomplished, there have been many views. According to the doctrine of Hippocrates, and of the ancient philosophers, the ovaries of the female furnish a prolific fluid, similar to that of the male; and the foetus results from the mixture of the two seeds in copulation. Steno and others conceived, that the ovaries contain ova, which are not developed until vivified by the male sperm. Bonnet and Spallanzani believed in the pre-existence of germs, created since the origin of the world, but encased in each other, and becoming developed in succession; whence it would follow that the ovary of the first female must have contained the germs of all subsequent generations: and that the number of these germs must go on always diminishing, until ultimately extinct. This was the system of evolution of germs. According to Leeuwenhoek, the ovaries do not contain eggs, but vesicles destined to receive animalcules; which, in his view, live in the sperm. Thousands of these animalcules are thrown into the uterus during copulation, and the most expeditious and vigorous reaches the ovary, after having scattered and destroyed its competitors. Buffon—admitting the hypothesis of the two seeds—supposed that they were formed of molecules proceeding from every part of the body of each parent; and that, by a kind of elective affinity, those which were furnished by the head, the trunk, or the extremities of the male parent, could only unite with those proceeding from the same parts of the female. Before him, Maupertuis, admitting, with many of the ancient philosophers, the system of Epigenesis, and adopting, as regarded the composition of the sperm, a theory analogous to that of Buffon, had supposed that the molecules, capable of being organized, were attracted towards a centre; that the nose attracts the two eyes; the body, the arms; the arms, the hands, &c., nearly as the particles of a salt, dissolved in a liquid, arrange themselves in regular crystals around the same nucleus. These and various other systems have been successively proposed and abandoned, and the mystery of generation remains impenetrable.

The simplest kind of reproduction does not require sexual organs. The animal separates into several fragments, which form so many new individuals. This is Fissip'arous generation, Fissip'arism, G. from fis'sion, (F.) Fissiparité, Scissiparité, Scission, Cloisonnement, Reproduction ou Multiplication méristématique. Gemmip'arous generation, (F.) Gemmiparité, Génération par Gemmation, Surculation ou Bourgeoisement, consists in the formation of buds, sporules or germs on some part of the body, which at a particular period drop off and form as many new individuals. These kinds of reproduction require but one parent—Monog'eny. In Ovip'arous generation, (F.) Oviparité, the egg is hatched out of the body. In O'ovip'arous generation, the new being is hatched in the excretory passages. In vivip'arous generation, the new individual is born under its appropriate form; and in marsup'ial or marsup'iate generation, the young being, born at a very early stage of development, is received and nourished in a marsup'ium or pouch. In alter'nate generation, Geneagen'esis, (F.) Génération alternante, the young not only do not resemble the parent at birth, but remain dissimilar during their whole life, so that their relationship is not apparent until a succeeding generation. Thus, the cercaria undergoes a change into the distoma. See Metagenesis and Parthenogenesis. All these kinds of reproduction require the union of sexes, Dig'eny.

All the acts comprising the function of generation in man may be referred to five great heads: 1. Copulation. 2. Conception or Fecundation. 3. Gestation or Pregnancy. 4. Delivery or Accouchement; and, 5. Lactation.

Gen'erous, Genero'sus, (genus, gen. generis, 'a race;' generosus, 'of a noble race, noble.') A name given to wines which contain a great quantity of alcohol.

Génèse, Genesis—g. avec Erreur de Lieu, see Heterotopia—g. Hétérotopique, see Heterotopia.

Gene'sial, Genital.

Genesiology, Genesiolog'ia, (γενναι, 'generation,' and λογος, 'a discourse.') The doctrine of generation.

Génésique, Genital.

Génésique, Le, Appetite, venereal.

Gen'esis, (γενεσις,) Generation. Also, origin or first formation; as genesis, (F.) Génèse, of the teeth.

Genêt ([old F.] Genest: from genista.) Spartium scoparium—g. à Balai, Spartium scoparium—g. des Teinturiers, Genista tinctoria.

Genethli'acus, (γενεθλιος, 'natal,' 'pertaining to nativity.') A name given by the ancients to certain astrologers, who, from the state of the heavens at the time of the birth of an individual, predicted his future character and the events of his life.

Genet'ica, (γενεσις, 'generation.') Diseases of the sexual functions, the 5th class in Good's Nology. Agents that act on the sexual organs.

Genet'icus, (γεννητικός,) Genital.

Génétique, Genital.

Gené'va, (from genièvre, 'juniper, gin,') Gin, see Spirit.

Genévrier, Juniperus communis—g. Oxycèdre, Juniperus oxycedrus.

Gengivite, (gingivæ, 'the gums,' and itis.) Ulitis.

Géni, Genian.

Gen'ian, Genia'nus, Gen'ial, (γενίων, 'the chin.') The Genian apophysis or process, Spina menta'lis, (F.) Apophyse génienne ou géné, is situate at the posterior part of the symphysis menti, and is formed of four small tubercles.

Genicula'tum, (from geniculum, 'a small knee or joint,' from genu, 'the knee,') see Corpora geniculata.

Génie, Gen'ius. The French sometimes apply this term to diseases nearly synonymous with nature; as Génie inflammatoire, G. bilieux, G. adynamique. Some use it in the same sense as type; Génie intermittent. The unwonted predominance of any mental faculty is also so called.

Génien, Genian.

Genièvre, (from juniperus.) Gin, Juniperus communis (the berry).

Geni'o, (γενίον, 'chin,') in composition, chin.

Geni'oglossus, Gen'iohyoglos'sus, (genio, and γλωσσα, 'the tongue,') Mesoglos'sus, Mesoglot'tus, No'nus lin'gue mus'culus. The name of a flat triangular muscle, which extends from the genian apophysis to the inferior surface of the os hyoides and tongue, which last it carries forward.

Geni'ohyo'des, Geniohyoideus.

Geni'ohyoglos'sus, Genioglossus.

Geni'ohyo'des, Geniohyoideus.

Geni'ohyo'des, Geni'ohyo'des, Gen'iohyo'des, Mentobico'r'neus, (genio, and βουδης, 'the os hyoides,') A muscle which arises from the genian apophysis, and is inserted at the anterior part of the body of the os hyoides. Its use is to raise the os hyoides, and carry it forwards. It may, also, contribute to depress the lower jaw in contracting towards the os hyoides.

Geni'opharynge'us, (genio, and φαρυγξ, 'the pharynx,') A name given, by some anatomists, to a bundle of fibres which passes from the lower jaw to the sides of the pharynx, and forms part of the constrictor pharyngis superior.

Geni'oplasty, Geni'oplas'ticē, (genio, and πλάσσω, 'I form,') The operation for restoring the chin. At times used instead of Genyoplasty, for the operation for restoring the cheek.

Gen'ipa Oblongifolia, Huito. A plant of Peru, with the juice of which the Indians paint their legs, to protect them against insects' stings.

Gen'ipi and G. Al'bum, Achillea moschata, Artemisia rupestris—g. Blac, Artemisia rupestris—g. Verum, Achillea atrata.

Genis'ta, Spartium scoparium—g. Canariensis, see Rhodium lignum—g. Hirsuta, Spartium scoparium—g. Scoparia, Spartium scoparium.

GENIS'TA SPINOSA IN'DICA, Bahel Schulli. Ord. Leguminosæ. An oriental tree, a decoction of the roots of which is diuretic. The leaves boiled in vinegar have the same effect.

GENIS'TA TINCTO'RIA, Genisto'des tinctoria, Spartium tinctorium Dyers' broom or weed, Green weed, Wood waxen, Woodwex, (F.) Genêt des Teinturiers. A shrub cultivated in this country and in Europe. The flowering tops and seed have been used in medicine. It has the same properties as Spartium scoparium.

Genisto'des Tinctoria, (genista, and ειδος, 'resemblance,') Genista tinctoria.

Gen'ital, (from geno, for gigno, 'I generate,') Genita'lis, Genet'icus, Generatio'ni inser'viens, Genes'ial, Gennet'icus, (F.) Génital, Génétique, Géné-sique. That which belongs or relates to generation.

GEN'ITAL CORD. A cord formed, in the foetal development of the generative organs, by the union of the two ducts of Müller with the lower parts of the Wolffian ducts.

GEN'ITAL DUCT, see Genital organs—g. Fold, see Genital organs—g. Furrow, see Genital organs—g. Glands, see Genital organs.

GEN'ITAL OR'GANS, Sex'ual Or'gans, Puden'da, Natura'lia, Natu'ra, Ædæ'a, Me'zea, Me'sa, Mo'ri'on; Gen'ital, No'ble, Natu'ral or Pri'vate parts; Pri'vities, Priv'y parts, Priv'y Mem'bers, the Parts, Pars, Pars cor'poris seu obscæ'na, Par'tes, Par'tes genita'les seu generatio'ni inser'vientes seu obscæ'næ, Me'dea, Veren'da, In'guen, Genita'lia, Gennet'ica, Gym'na, Mem'bra puden'da, Or'gana generatio'ni inser'vientia, O. sexua'lia seu genita'lia, (F.) Organes génitiaux, Parties génitales ou honteuses ou génitoires ou nobles ou sexuelles ou naturelles, Les Parties, Génitoires. The parts that are inservient to the reproduction of the species. These are very different in the male and female. In man, they are numerous; some secreting the sperm, as the testicles and their appendages; others retaining it, as the vesiculæ seminales; and another for carrying it into the organs of the female—the penis. In the female, the parts of generation form an apparatus, perhaps more complicated than that of the male. Some are inservient to copulation, as the vulva, vagina, &c., others to conception and the preservation of the product for a determinate time—as the uterus and its appendages; while others concur in the alimentation of the infant after birth, as the mammae. About the sixth week of foetal development, when there is no distinction of sex, a genital tubercle appears, which is soon surrounded by two folds of skin, the genital folds, and on the lower aspect a groove, genital furrow, soon after appears. The external distinction of the sexes is made by transitions from these primitive forms. The internal generative organs are developed from the Wolffian body, the genital glands—masses of cells lying on the inside of that body—and the genital duct, which is internal and anterior to the duct of the Wolffian body.

GEN'ITAL TU'BERCLE, see Genital organs.

Genita'lé, Sperm—g. Caput, Glans.

Genita'lia, Genital organs—g. Viri, Pudibilia.

Genitocru'ral Nerve, Ner'vus genitocru'ralis, Subpu'bial or Inter'nal in'guinal nerve. A branch of the second lumbar nerve, which passes through the psoas muscle, and approaching the femoral arch divides into two branches—an internal, scro'tal, or gen'ital, ner'vus spermaticus seu puden'dus exter'nus, and an external or fem'oral cutaneous branch, lum'bo-ingui'nal.

Genitospi'nal Cen'tre. A space of a few lines in the spinal cord of some animals, corresponding with the fourth lumbar vertebræ; which, when excited, produces contraction of the bowels; affecting also the bladder, uterus, &c. The a'no-spi'nal cen'tre is a corresponding point in the lower part of the lumbar region, presiding over the reflex contraction of the sphincter ani. The cil'io-spi'nal cen'tre, in the cervico-dorsal portion of the cord, presides over the contraction of the radiated fibres of the iris.

Genitou'rinary, see Urogenital.

Génitoires, Genital organs.

Genitu'ra. That which is fecundated or engendered in the maternal womb. This word has been used synonymously with embryo, fetus, and infant. The sperm. The penis. See Gone.

Gen'um, (γενιον,) Mentum.

Genne'sis, (γεννησις,) Generation.

Genne'tica, (γεννητικα,) Genital organs.

Genne'tici (Mor'bi), Aido'ici, Edo'ei. Genetic diseases, in the classification of Dr. Wm. Farr, are genital diseases.

Genneticones'mus, (gennetica, and κνησμος, 'itching,') Itching of the genital organs.

Genneticon'osi, Genneticonu'si, (gennetica, and νοσος, 'disease,') Disease of the genitals.

Genne'ticus, (γεννητικός,) Genital.

Gen'oā, Climate of. The climate of this Italian city and its vicinity has been often selected as favorable for the phthisical valetudinarian during the winter; but it is now admitted to be decidedly improper for pulmonary affections, being subject to frequent and rapid changes of temperature, and to dry cold winds from the north, alternating with warm moist winds from the southeast.

Genonu'si, Mor'bi sexūs, (γενος, 'sex,' and νοσος, 'disease,') Sexual diseases.

Genoplas'tic, (γενν, 'the jaw,' and πλασσω, 'I form,') Meloplastic.

Genou, Genu—g. Cagneux, Entogonyancon.

Génouillés (Corps), (from geniculum, 'a small knee or joint,') Corpora geniculata.

Genouillet, Convallaria polygonatum.

Genre, Genus.

Gen'sang, Panax quinquefolium.

Gen'tia, Gentiana.

Gen'tian, (after Gentius, King of Illyria, who used some species medicinally,) Gentiana lutea, Triosteum—g. Blue, Gentiana catesbæi—g. Catesbian, Gentiana catesbæi—g. Horse, Triosteum—g. Southern, Gentiana catesbæi—g. White, Laserpitium latifolium, Triosteum—g. Yellow, Gentiana lutea, see Calumba.

Gentia'na, G. lutea—g. Alba, Laserpitium latifolium—g. Amarylloides, G. quinqueflora—g. Cachenlague, Chironia Chilensis—g. Centaurium, Chironia centaurium.

GENTIA'NA CATESBÆ'I, G. Catesbian, Blue Gentian, Catesbian or Southern Gentian, Blue-bells, Bitterroot. Ord. Gentianaceæ. It is a pure and simple bitter, and the root may be used wherever that of the Gentiana lutea is proper.

GENTIA'NA CHIRAY'TA, G. Chiray'ta, Henrice'sa Pharmacear'cha, Swer'tia, Agathotes chiray'ta seu chiray'ta, Ophelia chiray'ta, Chire'ta (Ph. U. S.), Chiray'ta (Ph. B., 1867), Chiray'ta, Chirae'ta. A native of India, the herb and root of which has been much employed in that country, in dyspepsia, and as an antiperiodic in intermittents. It is preferred by some to sarsaparilla, where the latter is considered to be indicated,—as after large quantities of mercury have been taken, or where profuse salivation has been induced. It has also been advised in atonic leucorrhœa. It yields its virtues to alcohol and water.

GENTIA'NA CRINI'TA, see G. quinqueflora—g. Gerardi, Chironia centaurium.

GENTIA'NA LU'TEA. The systematic name of the officinal gentian, Gentia'na, G. major seu vet'erum seu ru'bra, Swer'tia lu'tea, Aste'rias lu'tea, Yellow Gentian, Gentian, Fel'reort. Ord. Gentianaceæ. (F.) Gentiane jaune. This is a plant common in the mountains of Europe. The root is almost inodorous, extremely bitter, and yields its virtues to ether, alcohol, and water. It is tonic and stomachic; and in large doses, aperient. Dose, gr. x. to ℥ij. It is most frequently, however, used in infusion or tincture.

GENTIA'NA MA'JOR, G. lutea—g. Ochroleuca, see G. saponaria—g. Peruviana, Chironia Chilensis.

GENTIA'NA QUINQUEFLO'RA, G. Amarylloïdes, Five-flowered Gentian; and GENTIA'NA CRINI'TA, Fring'ed Gentian, indigenous, are possessed of virtues similar to Gentiana lutea.

GENTIA'NA RU'BRA, G. lutea.

GENTIA'NA SAPONA'RIA, Soapwort Gentian, and G. OCHROLEUC'A, Samp'son's Snake'root, indigenous, have the properties of Gentiana lutea; and are said also to be diaphoretic.

GENTIA'NA VET'ERUM, G. lutea.

Gentiane Jaune, Gentiana lutea.

Gentiani'na, Gentianine, Gentianin, Gentia'nia, Gent'ia. A supposed neutral substance, obtained from gentian, and, by some, presumed to be its active principle. It is not so.

Gentilit'ius, Hereditary.

Ge'nu, Go'ny, (γενν,) (F.) Genou. The articulation of the leg with the thigh;—the Fem'oro-tib'ial or knee-joint, articula'tio ge'nu, the knee. It is the most complicated in the body, and is formed by the inferior extremity of the femur, the superior extremity of the tibia, and the patella. The articular surfaces of the bones are covered by layers of cartilage—more or less thick—and by the synovial membrane of the articulation. The soft parts of this joint are,—the ligamen'tum patellæ; two lateral ligaments, distinguished by the names internal and external; a posterior ligament, ligamen'tum post'icum Winslow'ii; two crucial ligaments,—the one anterior, and the other posterior; two interarticular fibrocartilages; some albuginous fibres, which form an imperfect capsule, &c. The knee receives its arteries from the femoral and popliteal. They bear the name articular. Its veins have the same distribution as the arteries, and discharge their blood into the saphena and crural. Its nerves are furnished by the sciatic, popliteal, and crural. The joint is protected by the tendons and muscles which surround it.

The French use the term Articulation en genou for a joint, in which the head of a bone is received into a bony cavity of another, where it rolls and moves in all directions.

GE'NU COR'PORIS CALLO'SI, see Corpus callosum.

Ge'nua Arcua'ta, Cnemosciosis—g. Introrsum flexa, Entogonyancon—g. Vara, Entogonyancon.

Gen'ugra, (genu, and αγχα, 'seizure,') Gonagra.

Genui'nus, (from genus,) Legitimate.

Ge'nus, gen. Gen'eris, (F.) Genre, (γενος, 'race,')

A collection or group of species, analogous to each other, and which can be united by common characters. When a species cannot be referred to a known genus, it constitutes a distinct one.

GENUS CURATIO'NIS, Ratio medendi.

Gen'y, (γενν,) Genys.

Genyantral'gia, (geny, αντρον, 'the antrum,' and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the antrum of Highmore.

Genyantri'tis, gen. Genyantri'tidis, (geny, αντρον, 'the antrum,' and itis,) Inflammation of the antrum of Highmore.

Genyan'trum, (geny, and αντρον, 'a cave,') Antrum of Highmore.

Genyocynan'ché, (geny, and cynanche,) Cynanche parotidæa.

Genyoplas'ty, (geny, and πλασσω, 'I form,') see Genioplasty.

Gen'ys, (γενν,) Genu, 'the jaw,' also the chin and the beard. See Gena.

Geoffræ'a Iner'mis, Geoffræ'a, G. racemo'sa seu Piso'nis seu Jamaic'en'sis, Vouacap'oua Ameri-ca'na, Geoffroy'a, Cabbag'ium, And'ra iner'mis seu racemo'sa, Cab'bage Tree, Cab'bage Bark Tree, Worm'bark Tree. Ord. Leguminosæ, Sex. Syst. Diadelphia Decandria, (after Dr. E. F. Geoffroy, a French naturalist.) The odor of the bark is very unpleasant. It is anthelmintic and cathartic. Dose of the powder, ℞j. to ℞ij.

GEOFFRÆ'A JAMAICEN'SIS, G. iner'mis—g. Pisonis, G. iner'mis—g. Racemosa, G. iner'mis.

GEOFFRÆA SURINAMENSIS, Andi'ra Surinamensis, has similar properties.

Hutteneschmidt has separated the active principles of G. Jamaicensis and G. Surinamensis, to which he has given the names Jamaicine and Surinamine. They are alkaline.

GEOFFRÆA VERMIFUGA, Andi'ra ibai, Arriba, Skolemo'ra Fernambucensis, a S. American plant, has a fruit, the almond of which, called Angeline, has a reputation at Rio Janeiro as a vermifuge. Dose, gr. i-xv.; or it may be given in infusion.

Geoffroy'a, Geoffræa inermis—G. Jamaicensis, G. inermis.

Geography, Med'ical, Geographia Med'ica, (γη, 'the earth,' and γραφω, 'I describe,') Nosogeography, Nosogeographia, Nosochthonographia, Nosochthonologia. The description of the surface of the globe as regards the influence of situation on the health, vital functions, and diseases of its inhabitants, vegetable and animal; but principally on those of man.

Geophagism, Geophagia, Gæophagia, Gæophagia, Gephagia, Earth-eating, Clay-eating, Dirt-eating, (γη, 'earth,' and φαγω, 'I eat,') The act or practice of eating earth. See Chthonophagia.

Geophagist, Geophagus, Gæophagus, Gæophagus, Ge'phagus, Earth-eater, Clay-eater. One who eats earth.

Georgia, Min'eral Waters of. The water of Indian Springs, in Butts county, is sulphureous. The Warm Springs, in Meriwether county, have a temperature of 90° Fahr. Madison's Springs, in Madison county, are chalybeate; and so are Rowland's Springs, in Cass county. All these are frequented by invalids.

Geræolog'ia, properly Geratolog'ia, (γερας, γρηρος, 'old age,' and λογος, 'a discourse,') The doctrine, or a description, of old age.

Geræouris, Dianthus caryophyllus.

Geranis, (γερανος, 'a crane,' which it resembled.) A bandage, used by the ancients in cases of fractured clavicle. Some authors attribute it to Hippocrates; others, to Perigenes.

Geranium, (from γερανος, 'a crane,' because its pistil is long, like the bill of the crane.) Ord. Geraniaceæ. The Crane's Bill.

GERANIUM CAROLINIANUM, see G. Robertianum—G. Fœtidum, G. Robertianum—G. Maculatum, see Geranium Robertianum.

GERANIUM MOSCHATUM, Erodium Moschatum, (F.) Bec de grue musqué. A European plant, esteemed to be excitant and diaphoretic.

GERANIUM NOVEBORACENSE, G. maculatum—G. Purpureum, G. Robertianum.

GERANIUM ROBERTIANUM, G. fœtidum seu purpureum, Stink'ing Crane's Bill, Herb Rob'ert, (F.) Herbe à Robert, Bec de grue Robertin. This plant was, at one time, used as an antispasmodic and slight stimulant, as well as for an external application in various painful sores and inflammations. Geranium Carolinianum has similar properties.

Most of the species of geranium have been used as astringents. In some of the northwestern parts of the United States, the rhizoma of Geranium maculatum—Geranium (Ph. U. S.), G. Noveboracense, Spot'ted Crane's Bill, Crow-foot, Alum root, Tormen'til, Stork' bill—is called Racine à Becquet, after a person of that name. It is highly extolled by the Western Indians as an antisyphilitic.

Ger'as, (γερας,) Senectus.

Geratici (Mor'bi), (γερας, gen. γρηρος, 'old age,') Developmental diseases of old people, in the classification of Dr. W. Farr.

Geratolog'ia, Geræologia.

Gerçure, Fissure.

Germ, Ger'men, Blas'te, Blaste'ma, (F.) Germe. The rudiment of a new being, not yet developed, or which is still adherent to the mother. According to Dr. L. S. Beale, a germ is a living particle which has been detached from already existing living matter. The study of the mode in which diseases arise from the influence of germs is called the germ theory of disease. The germs are supposed, under favoring circumstances, to be capable of development into new forms, and to excite changes in the body of a fermentative or putrefactive nature; the germs being the poisons, diseases are the results of the changes induced by such poisons.

GERM DISK, Proligerous disk, Tache embryonnaire—G. Enamel, see Groove, dental—G. Flesh, Sarcophyte—G. Force, Plastic force—G. Hill, Proligerous disk—G. Spot, see Molecule—G. Theory, see Molecule—G. Vesicle, see Molecule.

German'der, Com'mon, Teucrium chamædrys—G. Creeping, Teucrium chamædrys—G. Marum, Teucrium marum—G. Small, Teucrium chamædrys—G. Water, Teucrium scordium.

Germandrée Aquatique, Teucrium scordium—G. Maritime, Teucrium marum—G. Officinale, Teucrium chamædrys—G. Scorodone, Teucrium scordium.

Germe, Germ—G. Fauz, Conception, false.

Ger'men, gen. Ger'minis, (from gerere, 'to produce,') Germ, Sperm—G. Dentale, Dental pulp—G. Falsum, Mole—G. Spurious, Conception, false.

Ger'minal, Ger'minative, Germina'lis, Germinati'vus, (F.) Germinatif, (from germen,) Relating or belonging to a germ; as "germinal cell."

GERMINAL CELL, see Cytoblast—G. Matter, see Cytoblast, Bioplasm—G. Membrane and Vesicle, see Molecule—G. Nucleus, see Molecule—G. Spot, see Molecule—G. Vesicle, see Molecule.

Germina'tion. The beginning of vegetation in a seed or plant; applied also to the first development of germs. See Germ.

Germs, Dissemina'tion of, Panspermia—G. Preexistence of, see Preformation.

Germ'ule. A diminutive germ.

Ge'ro, Geron'to, (γερων, gen. γρηροντος, 'an aged person,') in composition the same.

Gerobos'cia, Gerontobos'cia, (gero, and βοσκη, 'food,') Nourishment or maintenance proper for the aged.

Gerocome'um, Gerocomium.

Geroco'mia, Gerocom'icæ, Gerontocom'icæ, (gero, 'an aged person,' and κομω, 'I take care of,') The part of medicine whose object is the preservation of the health of the aged—the hygiene of old people.

Gerocom'icæ, Gerocomia.

Gerocomi'um, Gerocome'um, Presbydochi'um, Gerontocomi'um, Gerotrophe'um. A hospital for the aged.

Gérophle, see Eugenia caryophyllata.

Gérophée Jaune, Cheiranthus cheiri.

Gerontatroph'ia, (geronto, and atroph'ia,) Marasmus senilis.

Geron'to, in composition, see Gero.

Gerontobos'cia, Geroboscia.

Gerontocom'icæ, Gerocomia.

Gerontocomi'um, Gerocomium.

Geronto'pia, (geronto, and ωψ, 'the eye,') Weakness of sight of the aged.

Gerontotox'on, Gerotoxon.

Gerontox'on, Gerotoxon.

Gerotox'on, Gerontox'on, Gerontotox'on, Leuco'ma Gerontotox'on, Mac'ula cor'næ arcuata, Ar'cus senilis, (gero, and τοξον, 'a bow,') A bow-shaped obscuration at the under margin of the cornea, common to old people, and supposed by some to be an indication of the existence of fatty degeneration of the heart. It is due to fatty degeneration of the corneal tissue.

Gerotrophe'um, (gero, and τροφη, 'nourishment,') Gerocomium.

Gerotroph'ia, (gero, and τροφη, 'nourishment,') Geroboscia.

Ger'sa, Plumbi subcarbonas — g. Serpentariae, see Arum maculatum.

Gésier, ('gizzard,') Ventriculus callosus.

Ges'ta, 'things done,' (gerere, gestum, 'to do,') Ac'ta. A Latin term, introduced by Hallé into medical language, to designate, among the objects which belong to hygiene, the functions which consist in the voluntary movements of muscles and organs. In the class Gesta are found sleep, the waking state, movements or locomotion, and rest.

Gesta'tion, Gesta'tio, Pho'ra, (gestare, gestum, 'to carry,') The time during which a female who has conceived carries the embryo in her uterus. See Pregnancy. — Gestation, likewise, signifies the bearing or carrying of an individual; a kind of exercise easier than that in which he moves by virtue of his own powers. Thus we speak of gestation on horseback, in a carriage, &c.

GESTA'TION, INTERSTIT'IAL, see Pregnancy — g. Intramural, see Pregnancy — g. One-horned, see Pregnancy — g. Parietal, see Pregnancy.

GESTA'TION, PROTRACT'ED. Pregnancy protracted beyond the usual period. See Pregnancy.

Gesticula'tion, Gesticula'tio, (gestus, from gerere, gestum, 'to carry,' 'the carriage of the body,') The act of making many gestures; a symptom in disease, which indicates great encephalic erethism. It is met with in numerous affections.

Gethyl'lis Spira'lis. A South African plant, Nat. Ord. Amaryllidaceae, the orange-colored fruit of which has a peculiar fragrance. An infusion in spirit or tincture is used in flatulence and colic.

Get'tysburg Min'eral Spring, Catal'ysin or Katal'ysin Waters. This spring, situate near Gettysburg, Penna., is distinguished by containing lithia among its constituents. It contains the bicarbonates of soda, lithia, potassa, magnesia, lime, and iron, sulphate of lime, silica, and traces of chlorides and phosphates.

Ge'um, G. rivale — g. Caryophyllatum, G. urbanum — g. Nutans, G. rivale — g. Palustre, G. rivale.

GE'UM RIVA'LĒ, G. palus'trē seu nu'tans, Caryophylla'ta aquat'ica seu nu'tans, Benedic'ta sylves'tris, Wa'ter or Pur'ple a'vens, Choc'olate root, (F.) Benoîte aquatique ou des Ruisseaux. Ord. Rosaceae. Sex. Syst. Icosandria Polygynia. The root — Ge'um (Ph. U. S.) — is astringent. It has been much extolled in the cure of intermittents, diarrhoea, hemorrhage, &c.

GE'UM URBA'NUM, G. caryophylla'tum, Caryophylla'ta, C. vulga'ris seu urba'na, Caryophyllus vulga'ris, Sanamun'da, Lagophthal'mus, Caryophylla, Janamun'da, Her'ba benedic'ta, Com'mon a'vens, Herb Ben'net, Yel'low avens, Star of the North, Bless'ed herb, (F.) Benoîte. The root of this plant has a smell not unlike that of cloves. Taste bitterish, austere; virtues yielded to water and alcohol. It has been used in intermittents, dysentery, chronic diarrhoea, debility, &c. Dose, ʒss. to ʒj. of the powder.

GE'UM VER'NUM, West'ern ear'ly a'vens, has the same properties as GE'UM VIRGINIA'NUM, White a'vens, A'vens, Ev'an root, Choc'olate root, Ben'net, Throat'root, Cure'all, (F.) Benoîte de Virginie, common from Maine to Carolina and Kentucky, flowering in June and July. It has the same medical properties as Geum rivale.

Geum'a, gen. Geum'atis, (γευμα,) Taste.

Geusion'osi, (geusis, and οσος, 'disease,') Geusionu'si. Diseases of the organ or sense of taste.

Geu'sis, (γευσis,) Taste. Rarely, the root of the tongue — Ra'dix lin'guæ.

Gauth'mos, (γευδμος,) Taste.

Gezib, see Pastinaca opoponax.

Gézit, Cagot.

Gézitain, Cagot.

Gher'kin, ([G.] Gurke, 'a cucumber,') see Cucumis sativus.

Ghitta Jecomo, Cambogia.

Gialap'pa, (from Jalapa or Xalapa, in Mexico,) Convolvulus Jalapa.

Gi'ant, Gi'gas, (F.) Géant, (from γίγας, gen. γίγαντος,) One much above the ordinary stature or of excessive growth — Macroso'mia, Macroso-mat'ia, Magnitu'do gigante'a, (F.) Géantisme.

GI'ANT CELLS, Myeloplaxes.

Gib'ba, Hump.

Gib'ber, Hump.

Gibberos'itas, Gibbositas.

Gibbos'itas, Gibberos'itas, Cypho'sis, Rha'chio-cypho'sis, (gibbus, gibbous, 'something arched or vaulted; prominent,') Gibbos'ity, Gib'bousness, An'gular deform'ity or Cur'vature of the spine, Hypo'ma. A phenomenon which occurs in different diseases, particularly in rickets and caries of the vertebrae. See Hump.

GIBBOS'ITAS CARIO'SA, Vertebral disease.

Gib'bousness, Gibbositas.

Gib'bus, Hump — g. Pottii, Vertebral disease.

Gib'lets, (according to Minshew, from gobbet, 'a mouthful' [?]; but, according to Junius, from (F.) gibier, 'game,') The word seems to be the old (F.) Gibelez, Gibélet, &c., i. e. Gibier, (L.) Cibarium, 'food, (F.) Abatis. It means, generally, the parts which are cut off from a goose before it is roasted. Also, the extremities of fowls, such as the head, wings, feet; to which are sometimes added the liver, gizzard, &c. Soup, made from these, is moderately nutritious.

Gid, (same etymon as giddy,) see Cœnurus.

Gid'diness, Vertigo.

Gid'dy, (Sax. gibig,) Vertiginous.

Gifts. A name given to white specks on the finger-nails, which have been superstitiously supposed to portend gifts.

Gigantesque, Gigantic.

Gigante'us, (γίγαντας, and γίγαντος, from gigas,) Gigantic.

Gigan'tic, Gigante'us, Giganto'des, (F.) Gigantesque. Relating to one much above the ordinary stature.

Giganto'des, (γίγαντων, from gigas, and odes,) Gigantic.

Gigarti'na Helminthocor'ton, Corallina Corsicana — g. Lichenoides, Fucus amylaceus.

Gig'arum Serpenta'ria, (gigas, and arum,) Arum dracunculoides.

Gi'gas, gen. Gigan'tis, (γίγας, gen. γίγαντος,) Giant.

Gilet de Force, Waistcoat, strait.

Gill, Glechoma hederacea.

GILL-GO-BY-GROUND, Glechoma hederacea.

Gil'la Theophras'ti, Zinci sulphas — g. Vitrioli, Zinci sulphas.

Gille'nia Stipula'cea, (after Arnoldus Gilenius, a German physician [?],) Small flowered Indian Phys'ic, has the same properties as

GILLE'NIA TRIFOLIA'TA, Spiræ'a trifolia'ta, Com'mon Gille'nia, In'dian Phys'ic, West'ern Drop'wort, In'dian Hip'po, Ip'ecac, Boo'man's root, Mead'ow sweet, Beau'mont root, (F.) Gillénie. Ord. Rosaceae. Sex. Syst. Icosandria Pentagynia. The root of this shrub, and of G. stipulacea —

Gille'nia, (Ph. U. S.) — which grows plentifully in the United States, is a safe and efficacious emetic, in the dose of about 30 grains. It resembles ipeacacuanha in its properties.

Gillénie, Gillenia trifoliata.

Gil'liflower, (July flower, or from Caryophyllum [?],) Dianthus caryophyllus.

Gillon, Viscum album.

Gim'bernat's Lig'ament, (after Gimbernat, a Spanish surgical writer.) A fibrous, triangular expansion, which is detached from the posterior and inner part of the crural arch, and is inserted into the crest of the pubis. This ligament forms the inner part of the superior aperture of the crural canal. It is one of the most frequent causes of strangulation in crural hernia. See Fascia lata.

Gin, Hol'lands, Gene'va, (F.) Genièvre. This spirit, which is distilled from corn and juniper berries, or from some substitute for them, is largely used in Great Britain, by the lower classes particularly, and is extremely detrimental to them. It possesses the properties of other spirituous liquors, but is diuretic, and, in popular medicine, is more used than other varieties, in cases of colic or intestinal pain of any kind. Schiedam Schnapps is understood to be Hollands of good quality. See Spirit.

GIN DRINK'ER'S LIV'ER, Liver, nutmeg — g. Liver, Liver, nutmeg.

Gingembre, Amomum zingiber.

Gin'ger, (from ζινγίβρις, zingiber.) Amomum zingiber — g. Black, Amomum zingiber.

Gingibra'chium, (gingivæ, 'the gums,' and brachium.) A name given to the scurvy, because the gums and arms are chiefly affected by it. It has also been called Gingipe'dium, because the lower limbs are in many cases the seat of scorbutic spots. See Porphyræ nautica.

Gingipe'dium, (gingivæ, 'the gums,' and pes, gen. pedis, 'the foot,') see Gingibrachium, Porphyræ nautica.

Gingi'væ, pl. of Gingi'va, (gignere, 'to beget,' because the teeth are, as it were, begotten in them.?) The gums, U'la, sing. U'lon; U'lum, Carnic'ula, (F.) Gencives. The portion of the mucous membrane of the mouth which covers the maxillary bones to the level of the alveolar arches. The gums are formed of a red tissue, more or less solid, and of a fibro-mucous nature, which adheres strongly to the necks of the teeth, and transmits, between the roots and their alveoli, a very thin expansion, — the alve'olodent'at perios'teum. The gums fix the teeth and contribute greatly to their stability. In the aged, after the loss of the teeth, they become fibrous and very solid, and are inservient to mastication.

Gingiva'lis, Gin'gival, Ulet'icus, U'licus. Relating to the gums. The gin'gival line is a reddish streak or margin at the reflected edge of the gums, seen in phthisis and chronic blood diseases, and also in pregnant and puerperal women.

Gingivi'tis, gen. Gingivi'tidis, (from gingivæ, and itis.) Ulitis.

Ging'lymoid, Ginglymo'ideus, Ginglymo'des, (γινγλυμοειδής, 'a ginglymus or hinge,' and αἶδος, 'resemblance,') Resembling a ginglymus or hinge. An epithet applied to joints which resemble a hinge, as a ginglymoid joint.

Gin'glymus, (γινγλυμος.) Cardinamen'tum, Car'do, 'a hinge,' (F.) Charnière, Articulation en charnière. A species of diarthrodial articulation, which only admits of motion in two directions, like a hinge, — as the knee-joint or elbow-joint.

GIN'GLYMUS, LAT'ERAL, Diarthrosis rotatorius.

Gin'seng, Panax quinquefolium — g. Asiatic, Panax Schinseng — g. Blue, Caulophyllum thalictroides — g. Yellow, Caulophyllum thalictroides — g. Horse, Triosteum — g. White, Triosteum.

Girard-Roussin, Asarum.

Gir'dle, ([Sax.] gýrðel.) Cingulum — g. Mercurial, Cingulum mercuriale.

Girl. This seems, formerly, to have been an appellation common to both sexes. Many etymologists deduce the word from the Su. G., Karl, 'a man.' (?) It means a young female, (L.) Fil'ia, from φίλω, 'to love;' Pu'era, Pucl'la, Pu'sa, Pu-sill'a, Pucl'la, (F.) Fille.

Girofle, (from caryophyllum, [?]) see Eugenia caryophyllata.

Giroflée Jaune, Cheiranthus cheiri.

Giz'zen, see Parturition.

Glabel'la, (glaber, 'smooth,') Mesophryon.

Glabel'lad, see Glabellar.

Glabel'lar. An epithet by Dr. Barclay for an aspect towards the glabella. Glabel'lad is used adverbially to signify 'towards the glabellar aspect.'

Glabrit'ies, (glaber, 'smooth,') Calvities.

Glacé, (from glacies.) Ice.

Gla'cial, Glacia'lis, (from glacies.) Icy; having the appearance of ice; as 'glacial phosphoric acid.'

Glaciale, Mesembryanthemum crystallinum.

Glacia'lis, Glacial — g. Humor, Crystalline.

Gla'cies, (from gelu, [?]) Ice.

Gladi'olus, (dim. of gladius, 'a sword,' from the sword-like shape of its leaf,) Gladiolus communis, see Sternum — g. Cæruleus, Iris Germanica.

GLADI'OLUS COMMUNIS, G. vulga'ris, Victoria'lis rotun'da seu femine'a, Corn'flag, (F.) Glazeul. Ord. Iridiæ. The root of this plant has been considered aphrodisiac. Applied in cataplasms, it has been extolled against scrofulous tumors.

GLADI'OLUS LU'TEUS, Iris pseudacorus — g. Sterni, see Sternum — g. Vulgaris, G. communis.

Gla'dius, ('a sword,') Penis.

Glair, Albumen ovi.

Glaïres, see Parturition.

Gla'ma, (γλαμη.) Lippitudo, Chassie.

Gland, Glands, dim. Glan'dula, 'an acorn, a kernel,' A'den. The ancient anatomists gave this name to a number of organs of a texture generally soft, and a shape more or less globular, but differing greatly in their nature and functions. They applied it, for instance, 1. To those organs which separate from the blood any fluid whatever. When such organs were composed of several lobules, united by common vessels, they received the name conglom'erate glands, as the parotid, pancreas, &c. 2. To the reddish and spongy, knot-like bodies, which are met with in the course of the lymphatics. These they called con'globate glands; — see Ganglion (lymphatic). 3. To various other organs, whose intimate texture and functions are still unknown, as the Pineal gland, Pituitary gland, Glands of Pacchioni, Thyroid gland, Thymus gland, Suprarenal glands, &c. Chaussier restricts the word gland to those softish, granular, lobated organs, composed of vessels, and a particular texture, of which there are in the human body, the lacrimal, salivary, and mammary, the testicles, the liver, pancreas, and kidneys. These permanent glands, or glands with permanent ducts, are all destined to draw from the blood the molecules necessary for the formation of new fluids, and to convey these fluids externally, by means of one or more excretory ducts. Several glands, besides their excretory ducts, have special reservoirs, in which the fluids, secreted by them, collect, remain for a greater or less space of time, and undergo slight modifications before being evacuated; — such are, the gallbladder for the liver, the urinary bladder for the kidneys, &c. Each gland has an organization peculiar to it, but we know not the intimate nature of the glandular texture. Malpighi believed that the vessels terminate in small, solid masses, to which he gave the name—glandular grains or ac'ini. In these, he considered, the excretory ducts originate. Ruysch thought that the glands are entirely vascular, and that the excretory ducts are immediately continuous with the vasa afferentia, &c. The most accepted view, perhaps, is, that the secreting vessel is distributed on the animal membrane, which lines the minute excretory ducts, and that the secretion is effected from the liquor sanguinis by means of cells.

The term Glande (F.) is sometimes appropriated to the tumor formed by inflammation or engorgement of a lymphatic ganglion.

Glandulaire, Glandular.

Glan'dular, Glandula'ris, Glandulo'sus, (F.) Glandulaire, Glanduleux. Having the appearance, form, or texture of Glands; as a glandular body, a glandular texture, &c.

GLAN'DULAR SUBSTANCE OF THE KID'NEY, see Kidney.

Glan'dule of Malpig'hi, see Corpora Malpighiana.

Glanduleux, Glandular.

Glandulo'socar'neus. Ruysch gives this epithet to fleshy excrescences which he found in the bladder.

Glandulo'sus, Glandular.

Glans, gen. Glan'dis, ('an acorn,') Bal'anus, Cyt'taros, Cus'pis, Ca'put, C. Pe'nis, Genita'lē ca'put, Nut, (F.) Gland. The extremity of the penis and of the clitoris. The glans penis is of a conical, slightly flattened shape. It is continuous with the urethra, which opens at its apex; and is circumscribed by a projecting edge, called the Coro'na glan'dis, behind which is a depression, Col'lum seu Sul'cus retroglandula'ris, Fos'sa glan'dis. It is covered by a thin mucous membrane; is furnished, at its base, with sebaceous follicles, called glan'dule odorif'ere Tyso'ni, the secretion from which is termed Smeg'ma præpu'tii; and can, almost always, be covered by the reflection of the skin, called the prepuce. Lastly, it is formed of a spongy texture, susceptible of being thrown into erection.—The Glans Clitoridis, is smaller, imperforate, and covered with a sort of prepuce formed by the mucous membrane of the vulva.

Among the older pathologists, this word was used synonymously with cataract. It is now ordinarily applied to opacity of the vitreous humor or of the tunica hyaloidea, which manifests itself by a grayish or greenish spot, apparent through the pupil, characterized by rapidly increasing presbyopia, periodical dimness of vision, diminution of the field of vision, increased tension of the globe, &c. Several forms are met with, acute and chronic, secondary, traumatic, &c. In Glauc'o'ma ful'minans, the impairment of vision occurs very rapidly, perhaps in a few hours. The ophthalmoscopic appearances will be found described in treatises on the eye. The disease was almost incurable, until Von Graefe employed iridectomy. See Optic papilla.

Any shallow, articular cavity, γληνη, glé'nê, which receives the head of a bone; such as, 1. The gle'noid cavity or fos'sa of the scapula, Fos'sa glénoï'dea seu mandibula'ris, Omocol'ylê, Acetab'ulum hu'meri, Cav'itas hu'meri glénoïdes, Entypo'sis, situate at the anterior angle of the scapula; and articulated with the head of the humerus. 2. The glenoid cavity or fossa of the temporal bone. It is seated between the two roots of the zygomatic process, and receives the condyle of the lower jaw.

GLE'NOID LIG'AMENT, (F.) Ligament Glénoïdien, is a fibro-cartilaginous ring or bourette, which seems formed by the expansion of the tendon of the long head of the biceps brachialis, and surrounds the glenoid cavity of the scapula, the depth of which it increases.

Glénoïdale, Glenoid.

Globulaire Purgative, Globularia alypum.

Globula'ria Al'ypum, Globula'ria, Wild Sen'-na of Europe, Montpel'lier Tur'bith, (F.) Glob- ulaire purgative, Turbith blanc. Ord. Globulariæ. The leaves of this plant are bitter, and have been used in intermittents and in constipation. The resin obtained from the root, (F.) Résine de Turbith, has been prescribed, like the resin of jalap, as a cathartic. See Alypon and Calcifraga.

Glob'ule, Glob'ulus, Sphæ'rion, Sphærid'ion, Sphæ'rula, (dim. of globus, 'a ball.') A small globe.

Globule d'Arantius, see Sigmoid valves—g. du Sang, Globule of the blood.

GLOB'ULES, RED, OF THE BLOOD, Blood glob'ules, Blood cor'puscles, cells or disks, Blood ves'icles, Glob'uli seu Vesic'ulæ seu Sphæ'rulæ seu Follic'uli seu Corpus'cula seu Cell'ulæ seu Partic'ulæ seu Gran'ula san'guinis, (F.) Globules ou Cellules rouges du sang, G. hématiques, Disques sanguins, Hématies of Robin, are small bodies, which are particularly observable when the transparent parts of cold-blooded animals are examined by the aid of the microscope; and are met with in the blood of all animals. They are circular in the mammalia, excepting the camel and the llama, and elliptical in birds and cold-blooded animals; are flat in all animals, and generally composed of a central nucleus enclosed in a membranous sac. Chemically, they consist of hæmatin and globulin—hæmato-glob'ulin, Cru'orin. By some, however, they, as well as Glob'ulin, Hæmatocrys'tallin, and Hæmoglob'ulin or Hæmoglo'bin, have been considered to be formed of one chemical substance, which is readily decomposed, and is the crystallizable material hæmato'idin. According to Hoppe-Seyler, they consist of hæmoglobin, with traces of albumen, cholesterin, protagon, and phosphate of potash. The chemical composition of the nucleus, where it exists, — it does not in man, — has been by some regarded as fibrin; by others, as fat; and by others, again, as a species of horn, to which the name nu'clein has been given. See Globulin. They vary in size in different animals. Their average long diameter in man is about $\frac{1}{3000}$ th part of an inch.

Besides these, the blood contains white or pale globules, Leuc'ocytes, Leuc'ocythæ, Blood bi'oplasts, (F.) Globules blancs ou plasmiques, which are probably lymph and chyle corpuscles in process of development into red corpuscles. M. Bernard is of opinion that, while the red globule is the respiratory element of the blood, the white globule is its plastic element. The proportion of white to red corpuscles, is about 2 or 3 to 1000. See Blood.

Dried blood globules of the ox have been given internally in cases of anæmia.

The minute pellets of the homœopathist are called globules.

GLOB'ULES, WHITE, see Globules of the blood.

Glob'uli Arteria'rum Ter'mini, see Acinus—g. Mammillares, see Mammillary eminence—g. Martiales, Ferrum tartarizatum—g. Sanguinis, Globules of the blood—g. Tartari martiales, Ferrum tartarizatum—g. Tartratis ferri et lixivisæ, Ferrum tartarizatum.

Glob'ulin, Crys'tallin, Glob'uline, Blood ca'sein. The colorless substance that remains after the abstraction of the coloring matter of the blood-globule. It is a peculiar albuminous principle. The globulin of Berzelius consists of the envelopes of the blood globules, and of the part of their contents that remains after the extraction of the hæmatin. Lecanu regards it as identical with albumen; and, according to Mulder, it belongs to the combinations of protein. Robin and Verdeil consider it to be albuminose. See Globules, red.

The term globulin is likewise given by M. Donné to small granulations appertaining to the chyle, which are observable in the blood with the microscope. They are small, white, roundish, isolated or irregularly agglomerated grains; of about the $\frac{1}{300}$ of a millimètre in diameter, and are regarded by M. Donné as the first elements of the blood-globules. They are the white granulated corpuscles of Mandl.

Glob'ulism, (from globule,) Homœopathy.

GLO'BUS UTERI'NUS. A term applied by accoucheurs to the round tumor, formed by the uterus in the lower part of the abdomen immediately after delivery.

Glom'erate, (from glomus, gen. glomeris, 'a ball,') Conglomerate.

Glom'erule, Glomer'ulus, (dim. of glomus, 'a ball,') A small ball or clew, formed by an agglomeration of vessels; as Glomerule of Malpighi. See Corpora Malpighiana.

GLOMERULES OF RUYSCH, see Ruysch.

Glomer'uli (pl. of Glomer'ulus) Malpighii, Corpora Malpighiana—g. Renales, Corpora Malpighiana.

Glomer'ulus Arterio-Coccygeus, Coccygeal gland.

Glo'noïn, Glo'noïne, Glonoi'num, Nitroglyc'er'in. A liquid substance prepared by adding glycerin to a mixture of sulphuric acid and fuming nitric acid; pouring it into water, and washing upon a filter. It is an oleaginous substance, of a sweet taste, little soluble in water, but readily in alcohol and ether. A drop, brought in contact with the lips, or even the vapor, is said to have caused the most distressing headache; hence it has been used in headache by the homœopathists. Symptoms of poisoning are said to have followed the administration of one-fortieth of a drop. Little is yet known of its therapeutic effects. It is violently explosive.

Glos'sa, (γλωσσα,) Glot'ta, 'the tongue.' The power of speech. Speech.

Gloss'agra, (glossa, and αγρα, 'a seizure,') Glossalgia.

Glos'sal, Glossa'lis, (from glossa,) Relating or appertaining to the tongue.

Glossal'gia, Gloss'agra, Glottal'gia, Glott'agra, (glossa, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the tongue.

Glossanis'chum, Glossanoch'eus, Glossan'o-chum, (glossa, and αρχαν, 'to hold up,') An instrument for holding up the tongue.

Glossanoch'eus, Glossanischum.

Glossan'ochum, Glossanischum.

Glossanthrax, gen. Glossanthracis, Pestis glossanthracis, (F.) Boussole, (glossa, and α-σπαζ, 'a carbuncle,') Carbuncle of the Tongue. A disease more common in cattle than in man.

Glossepiglot'tic, Glossepiglot'ticus. Relating to the tongue and epiglottis; as Ligamentum glossepiglot'ticum.

Glossia'nus, Lingual muscle.

Glossi'na Mor'sitans, Tsetse. An insect of South Africa, not much larger than the common housefly, the bite of which, according to Dr. Livingstone, is death to the ox, horse, and dog; while it is harmless to man and wild animals, and even to calves so long as they suck.

Glossi'tis, gen. Glossi'tidis, (glosso, and itis,) Glosson'cus inflammato'rius, Angi'na lingua'ria seu lingua'lis, Inflamma'tio Lin'gue, (F.) Inflammation de la Langue. Inflammation of the tongue. When confined to the mucous membrane, it is of slight importance. That which affects the whole of the tongue is a serious disease, and requires the vigorous use of antiphlogistics. It is rare. Sometimes deep furrows and cracks are made in the tongue, Dissect'ing Glossi'tis, giving rise to increased pain by the action of the secretions of the mouth and of alimentary matters.

Glossi'tis, Dissect'ing, see Glossitis.

Glos'so, (γλωσσα, 'the tongue,') In composition, relating or appertaining to the tongue.

Glossoc'acé, (glosso, and κακος, 'evil,') Ulceration of the tongue, with symptoms of adynamic fever.

Glossocarcino'ma, gen. Glossocarcino'matis, Glossoscir'rhus, Carcino'ma Lin'gue, (glosso, and καρκινωμα, 'cancer,') Cancer of the tongue.

Glossocat'ochus, Glossocat'ochē, (γλωσσοκατοχων,) Cataglos'sum, Catagoglos'sum, (glosso, and κατεχω, 'I arrest,') Lin'gue Deten'tor, Tongue-holder, (F.) Abaissur de la langue. An instrument, the invention of which is attributed to Paulus of Aegina, and which was employed to depress the tongue, in order to examine diseases of the fauces. It was composed of two branches; one of which had at its extremity a plate for depressing the tongue; whilst the other, shaped like a horseshoe, was applied under the chin. The finger, or the handle of a spoon, or a spatula, is generally used in similar cases.

Glossocel'e, (glosso, and κηλη, 'hernia,') 'tumor,') Glos'socèle, Her'nia of the Tongue, Paraglos'sē, Prolap'sus lin'gue, Glossomegi'stus, Glossopto'sis. Projections of the tongue from the mouth. It depends generally on an inflammatory swelling of the organ. At times, however, a chronic glossocèle, or sort of oedematous engorgement, is met with, which proceeds to a great length, and deforms the dental arches, the lips, &c. Inflammatory glossocèle must be combated by antiphlogistics. In the oedematous kind, such as is sometimes caused by excessive salivation, the infiltrated fluid may be pressed back by the hand of the practitioner, to get the tongue behind the teeth; and it may be kept there by a piece of gauze tied over the mouth. The chronic, elongated kind sometimes requires amputation of a portion of the organ.

Glossoco'ma, (glosso, and coma,) Glossospas-mus.

Glossoc'omon, Glossoc'omum, Glossocomi'on, (γλωσσοκομειον, from glosso, and κομειω, 'I guard,') The ancients gave this name to a small case for holding the tongues of their wind instruments. By extension it was applied to the box or cradle in which fractured limbs were kept. We find, in the old writers, a Glossocomon of Hippocrates, of Nymphodorus, Galen, &c.

Glossodes'mus, (glosso, and δεσμος, 'a bandage,') Frænum lingue.

Glossoëpiglot'tic, Glossoëpiglot'ticus. That which belongs to the tongue and epiglottis. Some anatomists have so denominated certain fleshy fibres, which pass from the base of the tongue towards the epiglottis. These muscles are more evident in some of the mammalia than in man; and their use seems to be to raise the epiglottis, and to remove it farther from the glottis. Santorini, who described them after Eustachius, calls them Retracto'res epiglot'tidis.

Glossoëpiglot'tic Lig'ament, Frænum seu Frænulum epiglot'tidis, Ligamentum membrana'ceum, Velamentum lin'gue. Three folds of mucous membrane, which connect the anterior surface of the epiglottis with the root of the tongue.

Glossog'raphy, Glossogra'phia, (glosso, and γραφη, 'a description,') An anatomical description of the tongue.

Glossohy'al. A name given, by Geoffroy Saint-Hilaire, to the posterior cornua of the os hyoides.

Glossol'ogy, Glossolog'ia, (glosso, and λογος, 'a treatise,') 'a discourse,') A treatise on the tongue. Nomenclature.

Glossol'ysis, Glossople'gia, Lalople'gia, Paral'ysis lin'gue, P. ner'vi hypoglos'si, (glosso, and λυσις, 'solution,') Paralysis of the tongue or of articulation.

Glossomanti'a, Prognosis ex lin'guâ, (glosso, and μαντεια, 'divination,') Prognosis from the state of the tongue.

Glossomegi'stus, (glosso, and μεγιστος, 'the greatest,') Glossocèle, Paraglossa.

Glosson'cus, (glosso, and ογκος, 'tumor,') Ex-onco'sis lin'gue. Swelling of the tongue.

Glosson'cus INFLAMMATO'RIUS, Glossitis.

Glossopalati'nus, Glossostaphylinus.

Glossopharynge'al, Glossopharyngeus, Pharyngoglossal—g. Nerve, Pharyngoglossal nerve—g. Paralysis, see Paralysis.

Glossopharynge'us, Glossopharynge'al. Belonging to the tongue and pharynx. Some anatomists thus designate certain fleshy bundles, which arise from the lateral parts of the base of the tongue, and are inserted into the parietes of the pharynx. They form part of the constrictor pharyngis superior.

Glossople'gia, (glosso, and πληγη, 'a stroke,') Glossolysis.

Glossopto'sis, (glosso, and πτωσις, 'a falling,') Glossocèle.

Glossoscir'rhus, Glossocarcinoma.

Glossoscop'ia, (glosso, and σκοπω, 'I view,') Inspection of the tongue as an index of disease.

Glossosemeiot'icē, (glosso, and semeiotice, 'semeiology,') The signs of disease taken from the tongue.

Glossospas'mus, Glossoco'ma, Spas'mus lin'gue, (glosso, and σπασμος, 'spasm,') Cramp or spasm of the tongue.

Glossospa'tha, Spat'ula pro o'rē, (glosso, and σπαθη, 'spatula,') A spatula for pressing down the tongue to enable the fauces to be examined.

Glossostaphyli'nus, (glosso, and σταφυλη, 'the uvula,') Glossopalati'nus, Pala'toglossus, Constrictor Isth'mi Fau'cium. A small, thin, narrow, and long muscle, which arises from the base of the tongue, and is inserted at the inferior and lateral part of the velum palati, in the anterior pillar of which it is situate. Its use is to contract the isthmus faucium, by depressing the velum palati, and raising the base of the tongue.

Glossostere'sis, Lin'gue Extirpa'tio, (glosso, and στερησις, 'privation,') Extirpation of the tongue.

Glossostroph'ia, (glosso, and στρεφω, 'I turn,') Doubling of the point of the tongue upwards and backwards,—said to have been a mode of suicide [?].

Glossot'omy, Glossotom'ia, (glosso, and τομη, 'section,') Dissection of the tongue. Amputation of the tongue.

Glossypertroph'ia, (glosso, ὑπέρ, 'over,' and τρέφειν, 'to nourish,') Hypertrophy or supernutrition of the tongue.

Glot'ta, (γλωττα), Glossa, Tongue.

Glot'tagra, (glotta, and ἄγρᾱ, 'a seizure,') Glos-salgia.

Glot'talgia, (glotta, and ἄλγος, 'pain,') Glos-salgia.

Glot'ticus, (γλωττικός), Pertaining to the tongue.

Glot'tis, gen. Glot'tidis, (γλωττις, 'the mouth-piece of a flute,') G. ve'ra, Lig'ula, Lin'gula. A small oblong aperture in the larynx, comprised between the chordæ vocales. It is narrow, anteriorly; wider, posteriorly; and is capable of being modified by muscular contraction, as may be required by the voice. It is by the chordæ vocales that voice is produced. The glottis is nearly an inch long in the adult male; less in the female and child. Rima Glot'tidis seu Voca'lis is the aperture in which the voice is produced, and therefore synonymous with Glottis, as given above.

Glottis is, by some, used synonymously with ventricle of the larynx: with others, it includes the whole of the larynx.

GLOT'TIS, LIPS OF THE, Thyreoarytenoid ligaments—g. Spasm of the, Asthma thymicum—g. Vera, Glottis.

Glottiscope, (glottis, and σκοπεῖν, 'I view,') see Laryngoscopy.

Gloutlou d'Une Bouteille, (formed by onomatopœia,) Gurgling.

Glouteron, Arctium lappa—g. Petit, Xanthium.

Glout'ius, (from γλουρός, 'the breech,') Gluteal—g. Maximus et extimus, Glutæus maximus—g. Secundus et medius, Glutæus medius—g. Tertius et intimus, Glutæus minimus.

Glouton, Glutton.

Glow'worm, Cicindela.

Gluant, Glutinous.

Glucæ'mia, (γλυκὺς, 'sweet,' and αἷμα, 'blood,') Glycœmia.

Glucogen'esis, Glycogeny.

Glucogen'ia, Glycogeny.

Glucœ'hæ'mia, Glycœhæmia.

Glu'cose, better Gly'cose, Dex'trose, (γλυκὺς, 'sweet,') Grape, Fruit, Starch, and Honey sugar. A variety of sugar, that occurs naturally in many vegetable juices, and in honey. Compared with cane sugar, it is much less soluble in water, and less disposed to crystallize; and, when injected into the bloodvessels, does not pass off to the like extent by the kidneys. Diabetic, Urinary, and Hepatic sugar appear to have the same chemical composition as Glucose.

Glu'cosides. These are certain proximate vegetable principles, which, by ebullition with dilute acid, or other method of decomposition, take up the elements of water and yield glucose, accompanied by a second substance, which differs in each case according to the body operated on. Aloin, Amygdalin, Digitalin, Elaterin, Jalapin, Cathartic acid, Convulvulin, Tannin, Salicin, Santonin, Scammonin, and Guaiacin are of pharmaceutical interest.

Glucosique, Saccharine.

Glucosu'ria, (γλυκὺς, 'sweet,' and οὐρὸν, 'urine,') Diabetes mellitus.

Glue Band'age. A bandage used in the treatment of fractures, glue, diluted with alcohol, being applied over an ordinary roller.

Glue'bone, Osteocolla.

Glue'fish, Ichthyocolla.

Glum'pot, Gallipot.

Glutæ'us Mag'nus, (γλουρός, 'the buttock,' 'the breech,') G. maximus—g. Major, G. maximus.

GLUTÆ'US MAX'IMUS, G. ma'jor seu mag'nus,

Max'imus et ex'timus Glout'ius, (F.) Muscle grand fessier, Ilio-sacro-fémoral, Sacro-fémoral, (Ch.) This muscle is situated at the posterior part of the pelvis, and at the upper and posterior part of the thigh. It is large, thick, and quadrilateral; and is attached, above, to the posterior part of the crista ilii, to the part of the ilium comprised between the crista and the upper curved line, to the posterior surface of the sacrum, coccyx, and great sacro-sciatic ligament; and below, it terminates by a broad aponeurosis, which is inserted into the rugged surface that descends from the trochanter major to the linea aspera of the femur. This muscle extends the thigh on the pelvis, and rotates the thigh outwards. It is greatly concerned in station and progression.

GLUTÆ'US ME'DIUS, Glout'ius secundus et medius, Il'iacus exter'nus of M. J. Weber, (F.) Ilio-trochantérien, Grand Ilio-trochantérien (Ch.), Moyen Fessier. This muscle is situated in part beneath the preceding; it is broad, very thick, radiated, and triangular; attached, above, to the crista ilii, and to the part of the outer surface of that bone comprised between the three anterior fourths of its crista, its upper curved line and its lower; and below, it ends by a tendon, inserted at the upper edge of the great trochanter. It is an abductor of the thigh; but can turn the thigh outward or inward, according as its posterior or inferior fibres are thrown separately into contraction.

GLUTÆ'US MIN'IMUS, G. mi'nor seu ter'tius, Ter'tius et in'timus Glout'ius, (F.) Petit Fessier,—Ilio-ischii-trochantérien, Petit Ilio-trochantérien, (Ch.) This muscle, which is situated beneath the preceding, is flat, triangular, and with radiated fibres. It is attached, above, to the external surface of the os ilii, from the inferior curved line to the acetabulum; and, below, is inserted into the anterior part of the great trochanter. It has the same uses as the preceding.

GLUTÆ'US MI'NOR, G. minimus.

Glute'al or Glu'teal, Glout'ius, Glutæ'us, (F.) Fessier. That which belongs or relates to the nates. This name has been given to many parts which compose the nates.

GLU'TEAL APONEURO'SIS. The upper and back part of the femoral fascia. In it is a remarkable opening, called the gluteal arch, for the passage of the gluteal vessels and nerves.

GLU'TEAL ARCH, see Gluteal aponeurosis.

GLU'TEAL AR'TERY, Poste'rior Il'iac Artery, (F.) Artère fessière, is one of the largest branches of the hypogastric. It makes its exit from the pelvis at the upper part of the superior sciatic foramen; gains the posterior part of the pelvis, and divides into two branches;—the one superficial, the other deep-seated. The last subdivides into three secondary branches, whose ramifications are distributed particularly to the Glutæi, Longissimus dorsi, Sacro-lumbalis, &c., and anastomose with the sciatic and internal circumflex arteries.

GLU'TEAL NERVE, (F.) Nerf fessière, is a large branch, furnished by the 5th pair of lumbar nerves. It is chiefly distributed to the glutæi muscles.

GLU'TEAL VEIN, (F.) Veine fessière, follows the same march as the artery of the same name.

Glu'ten, gen. Glu'tinis, ('glue, paste,') Glu'tinum, Len'tor, Veg'etable Gluten, Veg'etable Ca'sein. An immediate principle of vegetables. It is soft, of a grayish white, viscid consistence, and very elastic. Exposed to the air, it becomes hard, brown, and fragile; and, in moist air, putrefies. Water and alcohol do not dissolve it. It is soluble in vegetable, and in weak mineral, acids, at a high temperature. The farinæ, in which it is found, are those preferred for the preparation of bread, on account of the property it has of making the paste rise. It is a compound of protein, and hence has been ranged among the "proteinaceous alimentary principles" by Dr. Pereira. By washing wheaten dough with a stream of water, the gum, sugar, starch, and vegetable albumen are removed: the ductile, tenacious, elastic, gray mass left is the gluten, common gluten, Beccari's gluten. Pure gluten is the soluble portion on boiling common gluten in alcohol. Granulated gluten, Gluten granule, is a paste made by adding wheat gluten to ordinary wheat. It is said to form an agreeable and nutritious aliment.

Glu'ti, (γλουτοι,) Nates.

Glu'tia, (γλουτια,) Nates, Quadrigemina corpora.

Glu'tin, see Gelatin.

Glu'tinans, (glutinare, glutinatum, 'to glue,') Agglutinant.

Glutinatif, Agglutinant.

Glutina'tio, Agglutination.

Glutineux, Glutinous.

Glu'tinous, Glutinosus, Colloides, (gluten, 'paste, glue,') (F.) Glutineux, Gluant. An epithet given to substances taken from the animal or vegetable kingdom, and endowed with unusual viscosity. The decoctions of marsh-mallows, and figs, and the jelly of hartshorn, are said to be glutinous.

Glu'tinum, Gluten.

Glu'titis, gen. Glu'titidis, (γλουτοι, 'the nates,' and itis.) Inflammation of the nates.

Glu'toi, (γλουτοι,) Nates.

Glutoppy'sis, (γλουτοι, 'the nates,' and πυωσις, 'suppuration,') Suppuration of the nates.

Glut'ton, Glu'to, Glu'tto, (glutire, 'to gulp down,') Gastrimar'gus, Gna'thon, Hel'luo, Man'do, Gulo'sus, Lur'co, Bel'lygod, (F.) Glouton, Gourmand, Goulou. An excessive eater.

Glu'tony, Limo'sis, Helluo'num, Gastris'mus, (F.) Gourmandise. Excessive appetite, owing often to habitual indulgence.

Gluttu'patens, (gluttus, and patere, 'to extend,') Stomach.

Glu'tus, Oesophagus.

Glu'tus, (sing. of gluti, 'the nates,') Trochanter major.

Glycæ'mia, Glycœhæmia.

Gly'camil, (from glycerin, and amyllum,) Plasma.

Glycan'sis, (γλυκανσις, from γλυκος, 'sweet,') Edulcoration.

Glycas'ma, gen. Glycasm'atis, (γλυκος, 'sweet,') A sweet wine, prepared from must.

Glycémie, Glycœhæmia.

Glyc'erate, Glycerole.

Glycera'ton, (γλυκερος, 'sweet,') Glycyrrhiza.

Glycéré. The French Codex gives this name to solutions similar to the glycerita and glycerina of the U. S. and B. Pharmacopœias.

Glyc'erin or Glyc'erine, (γλυκος, 'sweet,') see Fat—g. Butyrate of, see Butter—g. Iodized, see Fat.

Glyc'erine, see Glycerita.

GLYC'ERINE LYMPH. A solution of vaccine lymph in glycerine.

Glyceri'num, see Glycerita—g. Acidi carbolici, see Glycerita—g. Acidi gallici, see Glycerita—g. Acidi tannici, see Glycerita—g. Amyli, see Glycerita—g. Boracis, see Glycerita.

Glyceri'ta, (from glycerin.) A class of preparations introduced into the last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873), containing glycerin as the solvent. Glyceritum acidi carbolici (glycerite of carboic acid), glyceritum acidi gallici (glycerite of gallic acid), glyceritum acidi tannici (glycerite of tannic acid), glyceritum picis liquidæ (glycerite of tar), and glyceritum sodii boratis (glycerite of borate of sodium), are official. All of these, except glycerite of tar, are official in the Ph. B., 1867, under the head of Glycerinum, Glycerine, and it also contains a Glycerinum amyli.

Glycerite, see Glycerita—g. of Borate of sodium, see Glycerita—g. of Carboic acid, see Glycerita—g. of Gallic acid, see Glycerita—g. of Tannic acid, see Glycerita—g. of Tar, see Glycerita.

Glyceri'tum, see Glycerita.

Glyc'erole, Glyc'erine, Glyc'erate, (F.) Glycérolé. A combination of glycerin with some other remedial agent. See Plasma and Glycerite.

Glyc'eryl, Hy'drate of, Glycerine. See Fat.

Glyci'né A'pios, (from glyco,) Apios tuberosa. Glycipi'cros, (glyco, and πικρος, 'bitter,') Solanum dulcamara.

Gly'co, Gly'cy, (from γλυκος, 'sweet,') in composition, sweet.

Gly'cyl, Hy'drate of, Glycerine. See Fat.

Gly'cocene, Glycogenic matter.

Gly'cocin or Gly'cocol, Su'gar of Gel'atin. An albuminous principle produced by the action of caustic alkalies on gelatin or meat.

Gly'cogen, Glycogenic matter.

Glycogen'es'is, Glycogeny.

Glycogen'ic, Glycogen'icus. Relating or appertaining to the formation of sugar.

GLYCOGEN'IC MAT'TER, Gly'cogen, Gly'cocene, Hep'atin, Am'yton, Am'yloid, Am'ylin, Zoëam'ylin, An'im'at starch, An'im'at dex'trin, Hep'at'ic dex'trin, Liv'er starch. The peculiar substance in the liver, or elsewhere, which is converted into sugar. It is isomeric with starch, and present in the placenta and liver, and in the tissues of the embryo. Sugar produced by its transformation is identical with grape sugar.

Glycog'eny, Glycogen'ia, Glycogen'es'is, Glucogen'ia, Glucogen'es'is, (F.) Glycogénie, (glyco, and γενεσις, 'generation,') Generation or formation of sugar,—as in the liver.

Glycœhæ'mia, Glycœhæ'mia, Glycæ'mia, Glucæ'mia, (F.) Glycémie, (glyco, and αἷμα, 'blood,') A saccharine condition of the blood.

Gly'conin, Gol'coin. An emulsion, made of glycerin, five parts, and the yolk of eggs, four parts, under this name, is used in the French hospitals in burns, erysipelas, and as a dietary article, &c.

Gly'cose, Glucose.

Glycosique, (from glyco,) Saccharine.

Glycosu'ria, (glyco, and ουρον, 'urine,') Diabetes mellitus.

Gly'cy, in composition, see Glyco.

Glycyph'yton, (glycy, and φυτον, 'a plant,') Glycyrrhiza.

Glycyrrhi'za, (glycy, and ρίζα, 'a root,') G. Gla'bra seu Læ'vis, Liquoriti'ia Scyth'ica, Glycera'ton, Glycyph'yton, Adip'sos, Al'imos, Liq'uorice, Lic'orice, (F.) Réglisse, Bois doux. Ord. Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Diadelphica Decandria. The root of this southern European plant is inodorous; has a sweet taste; is mucilaginous; and leaves, when unpeeled, a degree of bitterness in the mouth. It is used as a demulcent, and chiefly in catarrh. The extract, made from it and sold in the shops, is known under the name Spanish Liquorice or Liquorice Juice, (F.) Jus de Réglisse. The sweet principle has been called Sac'charo-gum'mita.

Pec'toral Bal'sam of Liq'uorice—a quack preparation—is said by Dr. Paris to consist chiefly of Paregoric Elixir, strongly impregnated with Oil of Aniseed.

Glycyrrhœ'a, (glycy, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') A discharge of saccharine fluid from the system.

GLYCYRRHŒ'A URINO'SA, Diabetes mellitus.

Glys'ter, Clyster.

GLYS'TER HERBS, Her'bæ pro Enem'atē. The herbs ordinarily sold by the English apothecary under this title, are:—mallow leaves, one part; chamomile flowers, one part. (3iiss. of these to Oj. of water.

Gnamp'sis, Curvature.

Gnaphalium Dioicum, (γναφαλον, 'a lock of wool,' owing to the floccose down of the leaves.) Antennaria dioica.

GNAPHALIMUM MARGARITACEUM, Antennaria Margaritacea, Cudweed, Pearly Life everlasting. An indigenous plant, growing in woods and fields, and flowering in August. Its virtues are not defined, and the same may be said of

GNAPHALIMUM PLANTAGINIFOLIUM seu PLANTAGIN'EUM, Antennaria plantaginifolia; and GNAPHALIMUM POLYCEPHALUM, Sweet-scented Life everlasting, Catfoot. They appear to be mild astringents.

Gnathalgia, (gnatho, and αλγος, 'pain,') Neuralgia maxillaris.

Gnathancylolysis, (gnatho, and αγκυλωσις, 'stiffness of joint,') Ancylolysis of the lower jaw.

Gnathantropolypus, (gnathantrum, 'the antrum of Highmore,' and polypus.) Polypus of the antrum of Highmore.

Gnathanttrum, (gnatho, and αντρον, 'antrum,') Antrum of Highmore.

Gnathitis, gen. Gnathitidis, Inflammatio genæ, (gnatho, and itis.) Inflammation of the cheek or upper jaw.

Gnathmus, (γναθμος.) Gnathus.

Gnatho, (γναθος.) in composition, the jaw or cheek.

Gnathocephalus, (gnatho, and κεφαλη, 'head,') A monster which has no head visible externally, but exhibits voluminous jaws.

Gnathocynanchè, Cynanche parotidæa.

Gnathon, (γναθων.) Glutton.

Gnathoneuralgia, Neuralgia maxillaris.

Gnathopharyngeus, see Constrictores pharyngis.

Gnathoplas'ty, Gnathoplas'ticè, (gnatho, and πλαστικός, 'formative,') The formation of an artificial cheek.

Gnathoplegia, Gnathoparalysis, (gnatho, and πληγη, 'a stroke,') Paralysis of the cheek. Gnathoparalysis is employed by Fuchs to signify paralysis of the lesser portion of the trifacial nerve, which supplies the muscles of mastication.

Gnathorrhag'ia, (gnatho, and ρηγνυμι, 'to burst forth,') Hemorrhage from the internal surface of the cheeks.

Gnathospas'mus, Trismus.

Gnathus, (γναθος.) Gnathmus, (κναω, 'I scrape, rub,') The cheek, the jaw. Also, the part of the jaws in which the teeth are fixed. See Bucca, Gena, and Maxillary Bone.

Gne'sius, (γνησιος.) Legitimate.

Gno'mè, (γνωμη.) Intellect.

Gno'sis, (γνωσις, 'knowledge,') A common suffix, as in Diagnosis, Prognosis, &c.

Goaconax, see Toluifera balsamum.

Goadby's Solu'tion, see Solution, Goadby's.

Goats' Beard, Common, Tragopogon.

GOATS' MILK, see Milk, goats'—g. Milk, artificial, see Milk, goats'—g. Thorn, Astragalus verus.

Gob, Mouth.

Gobelet Emétique, Goblet, emetic.

Gob'let, Emet'ic, Poculum emet'icum seu vomitorium, Ca'lix vomitori'us, (F.) Gobelet émétique. A vessel, made by pouring melted antimony into a mould. By putting wine into this and allowing it to stand some time, it acquires the property of producing vomiting. This kind of emetic has been long rejected, as the practitioner could never be certain of the dose he exhibited.

God's Mark. A mark, formerly placed on houses, in England, as a sign that the plague was there.

God'bold's Veg'etable Bal'sam. A quack medicine, said to consist chiefly of simple oxymel.

Godesberg, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These waters, at Godesberg, a German mile from Bonn, are an efficacious, acidulous chalybeate, formerly known by the name, Draitsch Water. They contain chloride of sodium, carbonate of soda, carbonate of lime, carbonate of magnesia, and carbonate of iron.

Godfrey's Cor'dial. A celebrated nostrum, for which Dr. Paris has given the following formula: Infuse \mathfrak{z} ix. of sassafras, and of the seeds of caraway, coriander, and anise, each \mathfrak{z} ij., in six pints of water. Simmer the mixture until reduced to \mathfrak{h} iv., then add \mathfrak{h} vj. of treacle, and boil the whole for a few minutes. When cold, add \mathfrak{z} ij. of tincture of opium. The following form is recommended by a committee of the Philadelphia college of Pharmacy: Tinct. Opii, Oiss., Syrupi Nigri, Oxxvj., Alcoholis, Oij., Aque, Oxxvj., Potassæ Carbonatis, \mathfrak{z} ijss., Olei Sassafras, \mathfrak{z} iv. M. It is anodyne.

Godronné (Canal), Canalis Petiti'anus seu Peti'ti, Cam'era oculi ter'tia, Couronne ciliaire, Canal de PETIT ou Godronné, Canal or Bul'lular Canal of Petit. Petit gave this name (from [F.] godron, 'a plait or fold,') to the semicircular canal, formed by the tunica hyaloidea around the edge of the crystalline; because it appears plaited or festooned, as it were.

Goëtre, (from guttur, 'throat,') [?] Bronchocele.

Gog'gle-Eyed, Exophthalmus.

Goit're, (from guttur, 'throat,') [?] Bronchocele—g. Exophthalmic, see Exophthalmia—g. Leaf, see Laminaria.

GOIT'RE STICKS. In South America the stems of a seaweed are so called, because, according to Dr. Royle, they are chewed by the inhabitants where goitre prevails.

Goit'rous, (F.) Goitreux. Relating or appertaining to goitre. One affected by goitre or bronchocele, Goitred.

Gol'coin, Glyconin.

Gold, (Sax. goltz.) Aurum, Chry'sos, Sol, Rex metallo'rum, (F.) Or. A solid, yellow, very brilliant, hard, very ductile, malleable, tenacious, and heavy metal; found in nature either in its native state or combined with a little silver, copper, or iron; s. g. 19.25.

Muriate or Chlo'ride of Gold, Aur'i Chlo'ridum seu Terchlo'ridum seu Mu'rias seu Chlorure'tum, Aurum muriat'icum seu Chlora'tum seu Oxydula'tum muriat'icum seu Sali'tum, (F.) Chlorure ou Muriate ou Hydrochlorate d'or was at one time in the Pharmacopœia of the United States, and in that of Paris, &c. The formulæ, however, differ. That of the United States was a muriate with two bases; and was prepared, according to the form of Dr. Chrestien, by dissolving the gold in a mixture of nitric and muriatic acids, and adding chloride of sodium to the residuum after evaporation; then redissolving and evaporating slowly to dryness. The Parisian formula for the Muriate d'or, Mu'rias seu Chlorure'tum Auri, consisted in simply dissolving the gold in the acids, and evaporating to dryness. It has been recommended as an antisyphilitic in old, rebellious, venereal affections, exostoses, and in venereal, scrofulous, or cancerous glandular enlargements. Dose, gr. 1-8th to gr. ss., rubbed on the tongue or gums. Internally, one-sixteenth of a grain, in pills.

Various other preparations, as the Cy'anide or Tercy'anide, Aur'i Cyan'idum seu Cyanure'tum seu Tercyan'idum, [F.] Cyanure d'or; the metallic gold in a state of division, Aurum metal'licum, Pul'vis Aur'i, [F.] Or divisé ou métallique, obtained by amalgamating gold with mercury, and driving the latter off by heat, and in the form of flings, Aurum lima'tum; the Chloride of Gold and Sodium, Aurum muriat'icum natrona'tum seu muriat'icum seu chlora'tum natrona'tum, Chlore'tum Aur'icum Chlore'to na'trii, Mu'rias

Aur'ico-na'tricum, Chlorure'tum auri et natrii, So'dii auro-terchlo'ridum, Hydrochlo'rate or mu'riate of Gold and So'da, [F.] Chlorure d'or et de Sodium, Hydrochlorate ou muriate d'or et de Soude; the Nitromuriate of Gold, Aurum Nitrico-muriat'icum, Auri nitromurias, [F.] Nitromuriate d'or; the Oxide of Gold, Aur'i Ox'idum, Aurum Oxida'tum, Auri terox'idum, Perox'ide of gold, Aur'ic acid, [F.] Oxide d'or; and the Iodide of Gold, Auri Io'didum seu Iodure'tum, [F.] Iodure d'or, have been employed in the like affections, and with similar results.

Gomphi'asis, (γομφιασις,) Gomphias'mus, (γομφος, 'a nail,') A disease of the teeth, and particularly of the molars; looseness of the teeth in their sockets; Agomphi'asis. Pain in the teeth, Odontalgia.

Gomphias'mus, (γομφιασμος,) Gomphiasis.

Gom'phioi, (γομφιοι, pl. of γομφιος,) Molar teeth.

Gomphocar'pus Cris'pus, (γομφος, 'a nail,' and καρπος, 'fruit,') A South African plant, the root of which, formerly known to the Dutch apothecaries as Ra'dix Asclepi'adis cris'pæ, is extremely bitter and acrid; and, on account of its diuretic virtues, a decoction or infusion of it has been advised in various kinds of dropsy. A tincture of it is said to be valuable in colic.

Gompho'ma, gen. Gompho'matis, (γομφωμα,) Gomphosis.

Gompho'sis, (γομφωσις,) Cardiamen'tum, Clavatio, Gompho'ma, Coagmenta'tio, Inclava'tio, Incuneat'io, Engompho'sis. An immovable articulation, in which one bone is received into another, like a nail or peg into its hole. Gomphosis is only met with in the articulations of the teeth with the alveoli. It is also called Articulation par implantation.

Gom'phus, (γομφος,) Clavus.

Go'né, (γωνη,) Go'nos, Genitu'ra. The semen (hence gonorrhœa), the uterus, offspring. See Epigone, and Generation.

Gonecyst'ides, pl. of Gonecyst'is, gen. Gonecyst'idis, (gono, and κυστις, 'a bladder,') Vesiculæ seminales.

Gonecysti'tis, gen. Gonecysti'tidis, Inflammat'io vesicula'rum semina'lium, (gono, κυστις, 'bladder,' and ιτις,) Inflammation of the vesiculæ seminales.

Gonepoet'icus, Spermatopœus.

Gonepœ'us, (gono, and ποιω, 'I make,') Spermatopœus.

Gonflement, (from conflare, 'to blow up,') Swelling.

Gongro'na, (γογγρωνη,) Bronchocele.

Gongrophthi'sis, (γογγρος, 'an excrescence on a tree,' and φθισις,) Phthisis pulmonalis.

Gongylid'ium, (γογγυλιδιον, from γογγυλος, 'round,') Pilula.

Gongyl'ion, (γογγυλιον,) Pilula.

Gon'gylis, (γογγυλις,) Pilula.

Goniocath'eter, (γωνια, 'an angle,' and καθετηρ, 'a catheter,') An angular or crooked catheter.

Goniome'lé, (γωνια, 'an angle,' and μελη, 'a probe,') An angular or crooked probe or sound.

Gonion'eter, Gonion'etrum, (γωνια, 'an angle,' and μετρον, 'a measure,') An instrument for measuring angles. A facial gonionometer was invented by Mr. Turnpenny, of Philadelphia, which is well adapted for measuring the facial angle.

Gono, (from γονος, 'sperm,') in composition, Sperm.

Gonobol'ia, (gono, and βολη, from βαλλειν, 'I throw,') Ejaculation, spermatic.

Gonoc'acé, Gonarthroc'acé, (gony, and κακος, 'evil,') Tu'mor ge'nu al'bus. White swelling of the knee. Hydrarthrus.

Gonoce'lé, (gono, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Spermatocèle.

Gonoï'des, (gono, and ειδος, 'appearance,') Genitu'rae sim'ilis. Similar to sperm. Sperm'atoid, Spermatoï'des, Spermato'des. A term appropriated to any substance which resembles sperm.

Gonol'obus Macrophyll'us, (γωνια, 'an angle,' and λοβος, 'a pod,') Indigenous, Nat. Ord. Asclepiadaceæ. The root is cathartic. It is said to furnish a juice with which the Indians poison their arrows [?].

Gonopoet'icus, (gono, and ποιω, 'I make,') Spermatopœus.

Gonorrhœe Bâtarde, Gonorrhœa spuria.

Gon'orrhoblepharrhœ'a, Ophthalmia, gonorrhœal.

Gonorrhœ'a, (erroneously called from gono, and ρεω, 'I flow,' because the older writers believed it to be a flux of semen,) Blennorrhag'ia, Blennorrhœ'a, B. urethra'lis, Blennure'thria, Phal'lorrhœ'a, Medorrhœ'a, M. viri'lis, Catar'rhœ'us gonorrhœ'a seu ure'thræ, Urethri'tis, Inflamma'tio ure'thræ, Urethral'gia, Proflu'vium muco'sum ure'thræ, Catar'rhœ'us urethra'lis, (F.) Écoulement, Urétrite, Urétrite. An inflammatory discharge of mucus from the membrane of the urethra in both sexes; and from that of the prepuce in man, and the vagina in woman. It may be excited spontaneously, or by irritants applied directly to the membrane, Pseudogonorrhœ'a; but is usually produced by impure connection. Two great varieties have been generally reckoned:—1. GONORRHœ'A PU'RA SEU BENIG'NA, that which does not follow an impure connection; (F.) Échauffement, Blennorrhag'ia benig'na, Caulorrhœ'a benig'na, Catar'rhœ'us Ure'thræ, Gonorrhœ'a catarrha'lis seu non-contagio'sa: and, 2. GONORRHœ'A IMPU'RA, malig'na, contagio'sa, syphilit'ica, et virulen'ta; Flu'or al'bus malig'nus, Fluxus vene'reus, Blennorrhœ'a luo'des, Baptorrhœ'a, Myxio'sis, Lues gonorrhœ'ica, Scroph'ule gonorrhœ'icæ, Tuber'cula gonorrhœ'ica, Clap, (Old E.) Chaudpys, (F.) Chaudépisse; that which is the result of impure commerce. The French also distinguish the Chaudépisse sèche, or that unaccompanied with discharge, and the Chaudépisse cordée, Gonorrhœ'a corda'ta, Chordurethri'tis, or that accompanied with chordee, and which, of course, occurs only in the male. See Chordee. It is the kind that most frequently engages the attention of the practitioner, and is characterized by mucous discharge from the urethra or vagina, intermixed with specific matter, and accompanied with burning pain on micturition. It is decidedly infectious. It is, however, a distinct disease from syphilis, and never produces it. Its duration is various, but the inflammatory symptoms usually subside in four or five weeks, generally leaving behind more or less of the gonorrhœa mucosa or gleet. Gonorrhœa of every kind, attended with any inflammatory symptoms, is best treated by the antiphlogistic regimen, avoiding every kind of irritation, and keeping the body cool by small doses of salts, and the urine diluted by the mildest fluids. After the inflammatory symptoms have subsided, cubebs, or the balsam of copaiba, exhibited in the dose of ʒss. to ʒj., three times a day, will be found effectual: indeed, during the existence of the inflammatory symptoms, it often affords decided relief. Injections are rarely required.

Sometimes, gonorrhœa affects the glans; when it is called Gonorrhœ'a Spu'ria seu Bal'ani seu Præputia'lis, Balanoblennorrhœ'a, Balanorrhœ'a, Balanit'is, Blennorrhag'ia spu'ria seu no'tha, Extern'al Clap, (F.) Blennorrhagie du gland, Gonorrhœe bâtarde, Fausse Blennorrhagie. It requires only cleanliness and cooling lotions. This is the simple form of balanitis. It may, however, be of the impure kind—Balanorrhag'ia, (F.) Balanite contagieuse. When implicating both glans and prepuce, it is Bal'ano-posth'i'tis.

Some other varieties of gonorrhœa have been enumerated, but they are of little moment.

In consequence of repeated attacks of gonorrhœa, or of the debility induced by a single attack, it not unfrequently happens, as already remarked, that a constant, small discharge occurs, or remains behind, after all danger of infection is removed. The great difference between it and gonorrhœa is, that it is uninfected. The discharge consists of globular particles, contained in a slimy mucus, and is generally devoid of that yellow color which characterizes the discharge of gonorrhœa virulenta. It is unattended with pain, scalding, &c. To this state the names Gleet, Gonorrhœ'a lon'ga seu chron'ica, Gonorrhœ'a muco'sa, Blennorrhœ'a lon'ga seu chron'ica, Blennorrhœ'a, &c., have been given. It is commonly a disease of some duration, and demands the use of the copaiba, astringent injections, and, if obstinate, the introduction of the bougie.

Gorg'et, ([F.] gorge, 'the throat,') Canalis canicula'tus, Ductor Canicula'tus, (F.) Gorgeret. An instrument representing a long gutter, in the shape of a throat, which is especially employed in the operations of lithotomy and fistula in ano.

GORG'ET, CUTTING, see Gorget, and Lithotomy.

GORG'ET FOR FISTULA IN ANO consists of a semi-cylindrical wooden staff, four inches long, without including the handle, and furnished with a wide groove. This is introduced into the rectum, to prevent the point of the bistoury from injuring the intestine, when the internal orifice of the fistula is deeply situate, and it is desirable to perform the operation by incision. This instrument, invented by Marchettis, has been modified by Percy, Runge, &c.

Desault invented an instrument for conducting the wire by the anus, in the operation for fistula by ligature. He called it Gorgeret à repoussoir.

GORG'ET, LITHOTOMY, (F.) Gorgeret Lithotome, Cutting Gorg'et, is the one used in the operation for the stone, for the purpose of dividing the prostate and the neck of the bladder, so as to enable the surgeon to introduce the forceps and extract the stone. At the end of this gorget is a crest or beak, which fits the groove of the staff, and admits of the gorget being passed along it into the bladder. Besides cutting, there are also blunt gorgets, intended to be introduced into the wound—their concavity serving as a guide for the forceps into the bladder.

The chief modifications in the gorget have been made by Andouillet, Bell, Blicke, Bromfield, Cline, Desault, Foubert, Hawkins, Larrey, Lefèvre, Michaelis, Thomas, Physick, Gibson, and others.

Gorgo'nei Fontes, (from the fabulous Gorgons, who had the power of turning all who beheld them to stone.) Fountains described by Libavius as containing water which possessed a petrifying property; probably, water holding in solution supercarbonate of lime.

Gorgosset, (from gorge, 'throat,') (?) Pyrosis.

Gosier, Pharynx, Throat.

Gossum, Bronchocele.

Gossyp'ii Radix, see Gossypium.

Gossyp'ium, Gossyp'ium Herba'ceum, Gossyp'ion, Bombax, Cotton, (F.) Coton. Family, Malvaceae. Sex. Syst. Monadelphia Polyandria. The seeds of the Cotton Tree, Gossyp'ium arbo'reum, have been administered in coughs, on account of the mucilage they contain, and a decoction of a pint of the seeds to a quart of water, has been given, in the Southern States, in intermittents. The bark of the root, Gossyp'ii Radicis Cor'tex, is official (Ph. U. S., 1873). A decoction of the root, Gossyp'ii radix, has been prescribed as an emmenagogue and parturifacient. The fluid extract of the root is official in the last edition of the Ph. U. S. (1873). The Cotton wool, Cotton, Raw cotton, Gossyp'ium (Ph. U. S.), is used in medicine for making moxas, &c., and is applied in the treatment of recent burns and scalds, as a surgical dressing in abscesses and suppurating surfaces, &c., French wadding made from the purest cotton being preferred. Saturated with glycerine—glyc'erized cotton—it has been employed as a dressing for wounds, ulceration of the os uteri, &c.; mixed with iodine—iodized cotton—it has been applied, bound with a bandage, over glandular enlargements, especially scrofulous swellings of children. The oil from the seed has been suggested as a substitute for olive oil in liniments, ointments, lead plaster, &c.

Gout, Arthrit'is, Arth'ragra, Arthral'gia, Morbus domino'rum seu articula'ris, Ma'lum articulo'rum, Gut'ta, Arthro'sia Pod'agra, Podal'gia, Pod'agra, Arthrit'icus ve'rus, Arthrit'is Podagra, Pod'agra Arthrit'is, Flux'io arthrit'ica, Febris arthrit'ica seu Podag'rica, Arthrodyn'ia podag'rica, Caum'a podag'ricum, Fierecin, Gastroarthrit'is, Misopto'chos, (Sc.) Gut, (F.) Goutte, Agrie of Piorry. The gout was formerly regarded as a catarrh, and received its name from (F.) goutte, (L.) gut'ta, 'a drop;' because it was believed to be produced by a liquid, which distilled, goutte à goutte, 'drop by drop,' on the diseased part. This name, which seems to have been first used about the year 1270, has been admitted into the different languages of Europe. Gout is an inflammation of the fibrous and ligamentous parts of the joints. It almost always attacks, first, the great toe; whence it passes to the other smaller joints, after having produced, or been attended with, various sympathetic phenomena, particularly in the digestive organs: after this, it may attack the greater articulations. It is an affection which is extremely fugitive, and variable in its recurrence. It may be acquired, or hereditary. In the former case, it rarely appears before the age of thirty-five; in the latter, it is frequently observed earlier. It is often difficult to distinguish it from rheumatism. A combination is, indeed, supposed to exist sometimes; hence called Rheumatic gout, rheumatoid arthrit'is, chronic rheumatic arthritis, or chronic os'teo-arthrit'is. See Rheumatism. During the paroxysm or fit, a burning, lancinating pain is experienced in the affected joint, attended with tumefaction, tension, and redness. One or more joints may be attacked, either at the same time or in succession; and, in either case, the attack terminates by resolution in a few days. This is the Arthrit'is acuta seu inflammato'ria seu regula'ris, Regular gout, Arthro'sia pod'agra regula'ris, Arth'ragra legit'ima seu ve'ra seu genui'na seu norma'lis, (F.) Goutte régulière chaude. At other times, pains in the joints exist, of more or less acute character; the swelling being without redness. These pains persist, augment, and diminish irregularly, without exhibiting intermission, and, consequently, without having distinct paroxysms. The disease is then called aton'ic, asthen'ic, imperfect or irregular gout, Chronic gout, Arthrit'is atonica seu asthen'ica, Arthro'sia Pod'agra larva'ta, Dysarthrit'is, Arth'ragra. It is commonly called in France Goutte froide, Goutte blanche. It may appear primarily, or succeed attacks of regular gout.

Gout does not always confine itself to the joints. It may attack the internal organs: when it is called Arthrit'is aber'rans seu errat'ica seu pla- net'ica seu vaga, Planar'thagra, Arth'ragra anom'ala, Pod'agra aber'rans, Vare'ni, Wan'dering, mis-pla'ced, or anom'alous gout, (F.) Goutte vague.

Ret'rograde or Retroce'dent, Rece'dent or mis-pla'ced gout, Arthritis retrog'rada, Pod'agra retrog'rada, Arthro'sia Podagra complic'ata seu retroce'dens, (F.) Goutte remontée, G. malplacée, G. rentrée, is when it leaves the joints suddenly and attacks some internal organ, as the stomach, intestines, lungs, brain, &c.—The term Arthritis urat'ica has been applied also to gout on account of the abnormal exudations of urates into the articular cavities, and the parenchyma of the cartilage, bones, &c., bounding the joints.

Gout is also called, according to the part it may affect, Pod'agra, Gon'agra, Chi'ragra, &c. It may be acute or chronic, and may give rise to concretions, Arthritic cal'culi, which are chiefly composed of urate of soda. It may, also, give occasion to nodosities, when it is called Arthritis nodosa, (F.) Goutte nouée. See Arthritis deformans.

The treatment of active gout is antiphlogistic, and the local disorder should be but little interfered with. Colchicum seems to have great power over the disease. It forms the basis of the Eau médicinale d'Husson, a celebrated French gout-remedy. The author—a long sufferer—relied wholly on the Vinum colchici radieis. The bowels must be kept regular by rhubarb and magnesia; and a recurrence of the disease be prevented by abstemious habits.

Gout, (from gustus.) Taste.

GOUT, CAR'DIAC. Gout affecting the heart, and inducing irregularity of its action, disturbing the circulation, producing dyspnoea, &c.

GOUT, CER'EBRAL, Gout'y Ap'oplexy, Apoplectiform Cer'ebreal Gout, Gout'y meningitis. These terms have been applied to the various cerebral symptoms connected with or dependent upon the gouty diathesis. They are mainly those of cerebral disease due to other causes.

Gouttière (F.), Collic'ia, (from gutta, 'a drop,' or from Sax. geotan, 'to pour.') A gutter in a bone, like that used for carrying off rain. Some of these cavities are intended to facilitate the sliding of tendons, such as the Gouttière Bic'ipitale or Bic'ipital groove. Others, as the Gouttière sagittale or Sag'ital groove, lodge bloodvessels and especially veins. Others, again, are merely intended for the support of certain organs; as the Gouttière basilaire or Bas'illary fos'sa, which supports the medulla oblongata.—The term is also applied by the French to designate a grooved splint for fractures.

Grace'wife (Prov.), Midwife.

Gracila'ria Lichenoi'des, (from gracilis, slender,) Fucus amylaceus.

Grac'ilis, Ma'cer, Macilent'us, 'slender, lean.' Also, the slender Rec'tus inte'rior seu inte'rus fem'oris, Grac'ilis interior, (F.) Sous-pubio-crétibial, Sous-pubio-prétibial (Ch.), Droit ou grêle interne le la cuisse. This muscle is situate at the inside of the thigh. It is thin and very long; and arises from the descending ramus of the pubis, to be inserted at the inner and inferior part of the tuberosity of the tibia. It bends the leg and causes adduction of the thigh.

GRAC'ILIS ANTE'RIOR, Rectus femoris.

Grad'uate, Gradua'tus, (gradus, 'a step,' 'a degree.') In medicine, one who has attained a degree—usually, the degree of doctor.

Græ'a, (γραι.) The pellicle which forms on milk. The folds of skin round the umbilicus. An old woman.

Graft, Graff, Inser'erē, (F.) Greffer, (from Sax. gspan, 'to engrave.') To unite a part to another, so that it may receive support from it; to engraft. The operation is called graft'ing or engraft'ing, Insit'io.

GRAFT THE'ORY. A theory of the causation of diseases which supposes that contagium particles are portions detached from a living being, modified by a diseased process, and capable of impressing on the healthy organism with which they come in contact changes similar to those which preceded their own modification in the body from which they were detached.

Graft'ing, Skin, Skin grafting.

Grand Dorsal, Latissimus dorsi.

Grande'bale. The hair in the arm-pits.

Grandgore (Sc.), Syphilis.

Grandino'sum Os, (grando, 'hail,') Cuboid.

Gran'do, 'hail,' Chalaza.

Graniv'orous, Graniv'orus, (granum, 'a grain,' and voro, 'I eat.') Feeding on grain or seeds.

Grantris'tum, Anthrax.

Gran'ula (pl. of Granulum) San'guinis, Globules of the blood — g. Seminis, see Sperm.

Gran'ular, Gran'ulous, Granulo'sus, (F.) Granulé, Granuleux, (from granule.) Composed of or containing granules or small particles, — as 'granular eyelid,' 'membrana granulosa,' &c., &c.

GRAN'ULAR CONJUNCT'IVA, Trachoma — g. Degeneration or Disorganization of the kidney, Kidney, Bright's disease of the — g. Eyelid, Trachoma — g. Layer, Membrana granulosa — g. Lid, see Trachoma — g. Liver, Cirrhosis — g. Tin, see Tin.

Gran'ulated Liv'er, Cirrhosis.

Granula'tion, Granula'tio, (from granule), Gem'ma, (F.) Bourgeon, B. charnu. Granulations are the reddish, conical, flesh-like shoots, which form at the surface of suppurating wounds and ulcers. They are the product of inflammatory excitement, and may be produced in indolent ulcers, by exciting the parts by proper stimulants. They form the basis of the cicatrix.

GRANULA'TION is, likewise, a name given by the modern French physicians to an organic lesion, consisting in the formation of small, round, firm, shining, semi-transparent tumors, of the size and shape of millet-seed, or of a pea, which are met with in the lungs particularly, and in considerable quantity; often without materially interfering with their functions. See Trachoma.

In pharmacy, granulation is a process by which a metal is reduced to fine grains, by melting it, and causing it, while liquid, to pass through a kind of sieve into a vessel of water — as in the making of shot, or by shaking or rubbing the melted metal in an appropriate box or vessel — as in the formation of granular tin or zinc.

GRANULA'TION TIS'SUE. The most elementary form of embryonic tissue; met with also in ordinary granulations, and in the earliest stage of all rapidly developed new formations having their origin from connective tissue.

GRANULA'TION TU'MOR, Granulo'ma. A morbid product formed by partition and multiplication of the connective tissue cells into groups of others resembling lymph-cells, lying in an intercellular substance, with a tendency to fatty degeneration; as elephantiasis, lupus, &c.

Granulations Cérébrales, Pacchioni, glands of — g. Pacchionian, Pacchioni, glands of.

GRANULA'TIONS, MIL'IARY, Mil'iary tubercles, are the small, transparent grains, of variable size, — from a millet-seed to a grain of hemp, — which are presumed to be the primitive state of tubercles.

Gran'ule, Gran'ulum, (dim. of granum, 'a grain,') A small grain; a small compact particle; a cytoblast. Used, in French pharmacy, for a sugar-coated pill, or any small dragée, as granules de digitaline.

GRAN'ULE CELLS. Cells resulting from fatty degeneration of various cell-formations, their wall usually giving way, and the granule cells being more or less collapsed after the oil granules have passed or burst through.

Gran'ules, Sem'inal, Gran'ulæ sem'inis. Minute, rounded, granulated bodies, observable in the semen, which are, in all cases, much less numerous than the spermatozooids. See Sperm.

Granuleux, Granular.

Granulo'ma, Granulation tumor.

Gran'ulum, (dim. of Grana), Granule.

Gran'ulous, Granular.

Gra'num, Grain.

Grape, ([F.] grappe, 'a cluster, a bunch,') see Vitis vinifera — g. Seaside, see Kino.

GRAPE SUGAR, Glucose.

GRAPEs, DRIED, Uvæ passæ.

Grape'cure, (F.) Cure de raisin, (G.) Traubenkur, Weintraubenkur. A medication in Germany, which consists in the use of the grape for both meat and drink; nothing more at the farthest being allowed than a piece of dry bread. This diet is continued for weeks. Its effects are altogether revellent, and resemble in many respects those of hydropathy.

Graph'ic, Graph'ical, Graph'icus, (from γραφειν, 'to write,') Pertaining to the act of delineating; written.

GRAPH'IC METH'OD. The mode of studying diseases of the heart and great vessels, by tracings of an instrument — the sphygmograph, for example.

Graphido'ides, (γραφεις, gen. γραφικός, 'a style,' and ειδος, 'resemblance,') Styloid.

Graphio'des, Styloid.

Graphioi'des, Styloid.

Graphis'cus, (γραφισκος), Graphis'cus Di'oclis. An instrument invented by Diocles for extracting darts [?]. Said, in many of the Dictionaries, but erroneously, to be described by Celsus. He speaks only of the Cyathis'cus Di'oclis, κυαθισκος. See Cyathiscus.

Graphi'tes, (from γραφειν, 'I write,') Plumba'go, Supercarbure'tum seu Carbure'tum Fer'ri, Ferri Carbona'tum seu Supercarbure'tum, Car'bo minera'lis, Galene'a, Gale'næ, Plumb'um ni'grum, Ceruss'a nigra, Gra'phite, Car'buret of Iron, Black lead, Wad, (F.) Crayon noir, Plombagine, Charbon minéral, Carbure de fer. It has been esteemed slightly astringent and desiccative; and has been advised by Weinhold in the cure of herpes.

Graphoi'des, (γραφεις, 'a style,' and ειδος, 'resemblance,') Styloid.

Graphospas'mus, (γραφω, 'I write,' and σπασμος, 'spasm,') Cramp, writers'.

Grass, Vi'pers' Scorzonera—g. Yellow-eyed, Xyris bulbosa.

Grasset (F.), (from crassus, 'thick' [?].) The anterior region of the thigh, bounded below by the patella.

Grassement (F.), 'speaking thick,' (from gras, 'thick,') So'nus blæ'sus, Rotacismus. According to Sauvages, a vicious pronunciation of the letter r. They who speak thick, like the inhabitants of Newcastle, in England, or of Havre, in France, have difficulty in pronouncing the r, and they frequently substitute for it the letter l; but this does not properly constitute Grassement. It consists in this: that, in words in which the letter r is joined to another consonant, a sort of burring or guttural rolling is heard, nearly like that produced by gargling. See Rotacism.

Gras'sus, (γρασος.) Cinabra, Hircismus.

Grat'ia De'i, 'grace of God,' Gratiola officinalis.

Grati'ola Centaurioi'des, G. officinalis.

Grati'ola Officina'lis, Digit'alis minima, Grat'ia De'i, Gratiola Centaurioi'des, Hedge hys'sop, Herb of Grace, (gratia, 'grace or favor,' owing to its presumed excellent medical virtues.) It is a native of the south of Europe. (F.) Grati'ole, Séné des prés, Petite digitale, Herbe au pauvre homme. The plant is inodorous; taste strong, bitter, nauseous. It is possessed of anthelmintic, purgative, emetic, and diuretic properties. Dose, ten grains.

Grati'ole, Gratiola officinalis.

Gratelle, (from gratter, 'to scratch,') Psoriasis.

Gratteron, Galium aparine.

Grav'el, (dim. of [old F.] grave, 'a pebble,' itself, perhaps, from [Teut.] graben, 'to dig out,') Lith'ia rena'lis areno'sa, Lith'iasis nephrit'ica seu rena'lis, (F.) Gravelle. A disease occasioned by small concretions, similar to sand or gravel, Gla'rea, (F.) Gravier, which forms in the kidneys, passes along the ureters to the bladder, and is expelled with the urine. These concretions, which are commonly composed of urates and an animal matter, are deposited at the bottom of the vessel, immediately after the excretion of the urine; and, by their hardness and resistance under the finger, differ considerably from the ordinary sediment of that liquid. A vegetable diet and alkaline drinks are the best prophylactics. See Calculi, urinary. A fit of the Gravel, Nephral'gia calculo'sa seu areno'sa, Col'ica nephrit'ica, is the excruciating suffering induced by the passage of gravel from the kidney to the bladder. It can only be relieved by anæsthetics, opiates, the warm bath, &c.

When the deposit is in fine particles, it is termed Sand, Are'na, Are'nula, Psam'ma, Psam'mus.

Grav'EL, Pi'LEOUS or HAIR'Y, (F.) Gravelle pileuse. A species of gravel containing hairs, phosphate of lime, ammoniaco-magnesian phosphate, and a little uric acid.

Grav'EL ROOT, Eupatorium purpureum.

Graveleux, Calculous.

Grav'elgrass, Galium verum.

Gravelle, (see Gravel.) Chalaza, Gravel—g. Pileuse, Gravel, pileous.

Gravier, Gravel.

Gravim'eter, (gravis, and μετρον, 'a measure,') Areometer.

Gra'vis, Heavy.

Grav'ity, Specific, Grav'itas specifica, (F.) Pesanteur spécifique. The relation between the weight of a body and its bulk: thus, supposing four bodies to be of the same size, but to weigh, one four, another three, another two, and the fourth one; the specific gravity of the first will be four times greater than that of the last. The specific gravities of different bodies are, therefore, as the weights, bulk for bulk. For solids, and liquids, water is taken as the unit; atmospheric air for the gases. Thus, water is 1.000; mercury, at the common temperature, 13.58; whence, we conclude mercury is between thirteen and fourteen times heavier than water.

When the specific gravity of a substance is given, its temperature is assumed to be at 60° Fahr.

Grease, ([F.] Graisse, 'fat,') (F.) Eaux aux Jambes. A specific inflammation, affecting the skin of the heels of the horse, which is especially interesting from the circumstance that the matter, if inserted under the cuticle of an unprotected individual, may give rise to an affection—grease'-pox, vari'ole equinæ—which preserves the person from smallpox [?].

GREASE, BAR'ROW'S, Adeps suillus—g. Goose, Adeps anserinus—g. Molten, Gras-fondure.

GREASE POX, see Grease.

Green, Em'erald, Arsenite of copper—g. French, Arsenite of copper—g. Paris, Arsenite of copper—g. Scheele's, Arsenite of copper—g. Schweinfurth's, Arsenite of copper.

Green'heart, see Bebeeru.

Green'how's Tincture for the Teeth, Spiritus armoracæ compositus.

Greensick'ness, Chlorosis.

Green'stick Frac'ture, see Fracture, greenstick.

Green'weed, Genista tinctoria.

Greffer, Graft.

Grégarine (F.), (from grex, gen. gregis, 'a flock,') see Pleurococcus.

Grêle, (old F.) Gresle, Grac'illis, 'long and thin.' This epithet is given by the French to various parts, as the Apophyse Grêle du Marteau, the slender apophysis or process of the malleus. A long process situate at the anterior part of the neck of the malleus, which passes out by the fissure of Glaserius. It is also called the Apophysis of Rau, although it was already known to Fabricius ab Aquapendente and to Cæcilius Follius.

Grêle, (from gres, 'a stone' [?],) Chalaza—g. Interne de la cuisse, Gracilis.

Grémil Officinal, Lithospermum officinale.

Grémium, Vulva.

Grenade, Influenza.

Grenadier, (from granatum,) Punica granatum.

Gren'adin, see Punica granatum.

Greniers, (from granarium, 'a granary,') Vesiculæ seminales.

Grenouille, ('a frog,') Rana esculenta.

Grenouillette, (dim. of grenouille, 'a frog,') Ranula.

Gréoulx, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Sulphuretted springs in the department of Basses-Alpes, France. Temperature, about 100° Fahr. The season is from the first of May to the first of October.

Gressu'ra, Perineum.

Gres'sus, gen. Gressus, (gradior, gressus, 'I step,') Walking.

Greveure, (from grever, 'to aggrieve, to burden' [?],) Hernia.

Gri'as Cauliflo'ra, (from φαειν, 'to eat,') Anchoy Pear. The fruit of a tree of the Nat. Ord. Onagraceæ, which grows in the West Indies. It is large, has a stone, and is eaten.

Gri'elum, Apium petroselinum, Smyrnum olusatrum.

Griff, see Mulatto.

Griffo, see Mulatto.

Grincement des Dents, 'grinding the teeth,' (by onomatopœia [?],) Brygmus.

Grin'comes (old E.), Syphilis.

Grinde'lia Hirsu'tula, (after D. H. von Grindel, of Dorpat.) Ord. Compositæ. This California plant has been recommended as an antidote to the poisonous effects of Rhus obtusifolia, the juice or a decoction being rubbed on the parts affected. Grinde'lia robusta has been recommended in asthma.

GRINDE'LLA ROBUSTA, see Grindelia hirsutula.

Grind'er. One who grinds or polishes. See Quizzer.

Grind'ers, Molar teeth—g. Asthma, see Asthma, grinders—g. Disease, see Asthma, grinders—g. Rot, see Asthma, grinders'.

Grind'ing Mill, see Pulverization.

Gripe, Cut'ing on the, (from [F.] gripper Sax. gripan, 'to clutch,' 'to seize,') See Lithotomy.

Gripes, (same etymon,) Tormina, Colic.

GRIPES, WA'TERY. A popular name for a dangerous disease of infancy, common in England, which does not differ essentially from the cholera infantum of this country.

Griphe'sis, (γρῦσις, 'bent,') Onychogryphosis.

Grippe (F.), (gripper, 'to seize,') A vulgar name for several catarrhal diseases, which have reigned epidemically; as the influenza.

Grippe, Pinched.

Grisou, see Hydrogen, carburetted.

Gris'tle, (Sax. gripte,) Cartilage.

Grits, Groats.

GRIT GRU'EL, Wa'ter gruel. This is made as follows:—Take three ounces of grits; wash them well in cold water, and, having poured off the fluid, put them into four pints of fresh water, and boil slowly until the water is reduced one-half; then strain through a sieve. It is a good demulcent, and is employed also as a vehicle for clysters.

Cornmeal Gruel may be made in like manner—two large spoonfuls to a pint of water.

Milk may be added to both of these.

Groan, (from Sax. gripan, 'to groan,') by onomatopœia.) See Suspirium.

Groats, (from Sax. gryt,) Gru'tum, Avena excorticata, (F.) Gruau, Oatmeal, (Yorkshire.) Oats, hulled, but unground, (Lancashire.) Hulled oats, half ground. Oats that have the hulls taken off; Grits, (Prov.) Outlins. When crushed, they are termed Emb'den groats. In America, fine hominy is called Grits, and wheat prepared in the same way is likewise so designated. It is also called wheat'en hom'iny. See Avena.

GROATS, CRAC'OW, Semolina.

Gro'cers' Itch, see Eczema impetiginodes, Psoriasis.

Grog'blossoms, Gutta rosea.

Grog'roses, Gutta rosea.

Groin, Inguen.

Grom'well, Lithospermum officinale.

Gro'myl, Lithospermum officinale.

Groove, Fur'row, Sul'cus, (F.) Rainure, (Ice-landic, grafa, Sax. grapan, 'to dig,') A channel or gutter in a bone or surgical instrument. See Coulisse.

GROOVE, COR'NEAL, see Cornea.

GROOVE, DEN'TAL. A slight longitudinal furrow seen on the margin of the jaw, about the end of the second month of foetal life. From the bottom of this a process of oral epithelium dips into the subjacent mucous tissue, the enam'el germ of Kölliker.

GROOVE, PRIM'ITIVE, Primitive streak or trace, No'ta primit'iva. A bright streak in the long axis of the pellucid part of the area germinativa after it presents a central pellucid and a peripheral opaque part, and passes from the round to the pear shape.

Groov'ed, Sulca'tus, Stria'tus, Canalicula'tus, (F.) Cannelé ou Canelé ou Canaliculé. Canaliculated. Having a small channel or gutter, as a grooved probe—Aulacome'lé, Cænome'lé, Specill'um Sulca'tum.

Gros, Drachm.

Gros Cou, 'large neck,' (from crassus, 'thick,') Bronchocele—g. Retombet, Passerina tartonraira.

Groseller Noir, Ribes nigrum—g. Rouge, Ribes rubrum.

Groselles, (from grossulus, dim. of grossus, 'a small fig,') Ribes nigrum—g. Rouge, Ribes rubrum.

Grosse Gorge, ('large throat,') Bronchocele.

Groupe Orbitaire, see Lachrymal gland — g. Palpebral, see Lachrymal gland.

Grouse'berry, Gaultheria.

Growth, (Sax. gropen, 'to grow,') Incrementum, Crescentia, Anaplo'sis, Anaptyx'is, (F.) Croissance, Crue. The development of the body, particularly in the direction of its height. Also, any adventitious tissue; thus, we speak of a morbid growth or formation. See Development.

Gro'zeteyed (Prov.), Exophthalmus.

Gruau, see Groats.

Grub, Larve, see Ectozoa.

Grubs, Aene punctata.

Gru'el, Grit, see Grits — g. Water, see Avena, and Grits.

Gruff, (Teutonic ge, and ruh, 'rough,') In pharmacy the coarse residue, which will not pass through the sieve in pulverization.

Grumeau, (from grumus,) Coagulum.

Gru'mous, Grumo'sus, (F.) Grumelé, Grumeleux, (grumus, 'a clot,') Clotted.

Gru'mus, Coagulum.

Gru'tum, ('Groats,') Gru'tum Mil'ium, Mil'ium. A hard white tubercle of the skin, resembling, in size and appearance, a millet-seed, found on the eyelids, the root of the nose, the scrotum and ear. See, also, Groats.

Gryph'ius Pes. The Griffon's foot, (F.) Pied de Griffon. An instrument of which Ambrose Paré speaks, which was used for extracting moles from the uterus.

Grypho'sis, (γρυπσις, 'bent,' and osis,) Incurvatio. Curvature or crookedness in general. Crookedness or incurvation of the nails. See Onychogrypho'sis.

Grypotes, (γρυπότης,) see Grypus.

Gry'pus, (from γρυπσις, 'bent,') One who has a crooked or aquiline nose. The condition is termed Grypotes.

Gua'co, Hua'co. The name of a plant, Eupatorium Guaco, described by Humboldt and Bonpland under the name Mika'nia Guaco, Ord. Compositae, which grows in the valleys of Madalena, Rio Cauca, &c., in South America. The negroes use the juice against the bites of poisonous reptiles — both in the way of prevention and cure. It has been of late brought forward as a remedy in cholera.

Guadalupe, see Mexico, mineral springs of.

Guai'ac, see Guaiacum.

Guai'aci Lig'num, see Guaiacum — g. Resina, see Guaiacum.

Guai'acine, see Guaiacum.

Guai'acum, G. Officinale seu America'num, Lignum vitæ seu sanc'tum seu benedic'tum seu Ind'icum, Palus sanc'tus, Hagioxy'lym, (F.) Gayac, Gu'ac. Ord. Zygophyllæ. The resin — Guai'aci Resi'na, Guai'ac, (F.) Résine ou Gomme de Gu'ac — and the wood — Guai'aci lignum — are both officinal. Their odor is slightly fragrant; taste warm and bitter, of the resin more so than of the wood. The resin is concrete, brittle; color, externally, greenish, internally grayish. Water dissolves about one-tenth; alcohol, 95 parts. It is soluble, also, in liquor potassæ, 15 parts, liquor ammoniæ, 38 parts. The powder is whitish, but changes to green in the air. The base of the guaiacum is a peculiar resin, called Guai'acine.

Guaiacum is stimulant and diaphoretic; and in large doses, purgative. It is administered in chronic rheumatism, gout, cutaneous diseases, and the sequelæ of syphilis. Dose of resin, gr. v. to xx.; to purge, gr. xx. to xl. — Guaiacum is also a test for the detection of blood-stains.

Guai'acum sanc'tum and G. angustifo'lium have the same virtues as G. officinale.

Gualthe'ria, Gaultheria.

Gua'no, Bird Manure, — according to Tschudi, properly Huanu, 'dung,' — is formed of the excrements of different kinds of marine birds — mews, divers, sheerbreaks, &c., but especially of the Su'la variega'ta. It is found in enormous layers in the South American islands of the Pacific, and is used as manure.

Guara'na, Paullinia.

Guaran'hem, Monesia.

Guar'anin, see Coffea Arabica.

Guar'apo. A fermented liquor made, in Peru, of sugarcane pulp and water. It is a very favorite beverage of the negroes.

Guard (for a bed), Alèse.

Guarer'ba Or'ba, Momordica elaterium.

Guav'a Ap'ple, Psidium pomiferum.

Guaya'va, Psidium pomiferum.

Gua'za, see Bangue.

Gubernac'ular, Gubernacula'ris, (from gubernare, 'to govern,') Relating or appertaining to a gubernaculum.

GUBERNAC'ULAR CORD, see Gubernaculum testis.

Gubernac'ulum Den'tis, ('rudder of the tooth,' from gubernare, 'to govern,') A cord which passes from the follicle of the permanent tooth along a small long canal behind the alveolus of the milk tooth, and becomes continuous with the gum. The gubernaculum has been supposed to direct the permanent tooth outwards. The canal has been termed Pter den'tis.

GUBERNAC'ULUM TES'TIS, Gubernaculum testis Hunte'ri, G. Hunteri, Hunteri Ligamentum suspensorium Testis, (F.) Gouvernail du testicule. A triangular, fibro-cellular cord; which, in the foetus, arises from the ramus of the ischium and the skin of the scrotum, and proceeds to the posterior part of the testicle, before this organ issues from the abdomen. It has been supposed to be a continuation of the fascia superficialis with muscular fibres from the internal oblique muscle, which pass upwards to the testis when in the abdomen; and by their contraction draw the testis down, and ultimately form the cremaster muscle. The peritoneal pouch, processus vagina'lis, which passes down into the scrotum, considerably precedes the testis in its descent, and into its posterior part a columnar elevation projects, filled with soft tissue, which is called pli'ca gubernatrix. There is, also, a fibrous structure attached, below, to the lower part of the scrotum, and surrounding the peritoneal pouch above, which has been termed the gubernac'ular cord. The gubernaculum testis includes both of these.

Guérila, see Anthemis pyrethrum.

Guérissable, Curable.

Gui, Viscum album — g. de Chêne, Viscum album.

Gui'acol. An oily liquid, a product of the distillation of gum guaiacum, resembling creasote. It has as yet no therapeutic value.

Gui'der, ('leader,') Tendon.

Guilandi'na Morin'ga, (after Melchior Guilandinus (Wieland), a professor at Padua,) Hy- peranthe'ra moringa. A plant, Ord. Leguminosæ, which affords the Ben nut, and the lig'num nephrit'icum. It is also called Morin'ga Oleif'era seu Zeylan'ica seu Nux ben. Under the name Guilandina moringa, Linnæus is said to have confounded Moringa pterygosperm'a and M. ap'tera. Hyperanthe'ra moringa is a synonyme of the former species. The nut Ben, Ben nux, Glans unguenta'ria, Balanus Myrep'sica, San'dalum ceru'leum, Oily A'corn or Ben nut, is a West India nut which furnishes an oil, O'leum Balani'num, Oil of Ben, that does not become rancid by age, and is hence used by perfumers. It is purgative.

The wood of the Guilandina is called Lignum Nephrit'icum, and has been used in decoction, in affections of the urinary organs.

Guil'lotine, Ton'sil, (after Guillotin, the reviver of the maiden, a Scotch instrument of decapitation,) Amygdalatome.

Guilt'y Cups (Prov.), Ranunculus acris.

Gum'boil, Parulis.

Gum'ma, gen. Gum'matis, (F.) Gomme. An elastic tumor formed in the periosteum occupying particularly the cranium and sternum, and produced by the syphilitic virus, when it has been long in the constitution. It is so called, because, when opened, it contains a matter like gum. These gum'my tu'mors, gum'mata, are likewise termed Tuber'cula gum'mata and Tumo'res gum'mati, (F.) Tumours gommeuses. They have been recognized and described in all the important viscera, in the skin, cellular tissue, bones, &c. Consisting at first of granulation tissue, they are at last, by changes in their growth, made up of atrophied, disintegrated, and degenerated products, imbedded in an imperfect fibrillated tissue.

Gum'mata, see Gumma.

Gum'mi, (κομμι,) Commī, (F.) Gomme. An immediate principle of vegetables. It is a solid, uncrystallizable, inodorous substance, of a mawkish taste, unchangeable in the air, insoluble in alcohol, but soluble in water, with which it forms a mucilage. It is obtained from various species of mimosa and pinus; and consequently there are many varieties of gum. They are used in medicine as demulcents, emollients, and relaxants, particularly in catarrh, intestinal irritations, &c.; and in Pharmacy, are employed in the formation of emulsions, pills, &c.

GUM'MI NOS'TRAS, (F.) Gomme du Pays, Indig'enous Gum. These generic names are given to several species of gum, which flow spontaneously from certain indigenous fruit trees, — such as the almond, cherry, peach, apricot, &c. The indigenous gums have nearly the same properties as gum Arabic; but they are inferior to it.

Gummido'des, (from gummi,) Mucilaginous.

Gummio'des, Mucilaginous.

Gummiresi'na, Gumres'in. A milky juice, obtained by making incisions into the branches, stalks and roots of certain vegetables. Gum-resins are compounds of resin, gum, often with essential oil, and different other vegetable matters. They are solid, opaque, brittle, of a strong odor, acrid taste, variable color, and are heavier than water. Water dissolves a part of them, and alcohol another; hence proof spirit is the proper menstruum. The generality of the gumresins are powerful stimulants to the whole or to parts of the economy. The chief are asafetida, gum-ammoniac, euphorbium, galbanum, camboge, myrrh, olibanum, opoponax, scammony, aloes, &c.

Gummo'sus, Mucilaginous.

Gune. A cutaneous affection, belonging, apparently, to psoriasis, which affects the people of the Kingsmill Islands (Polynesia).

Gun'jah, see Bangue.

Gunne'ra Perpen'sa, (after J. Ernst Gunner, a botanist and bishop of Drontheim.) A South African plant, Nat. Ord. Urticacæ; the decoction of which is taken as a domestic remedy by the farmers, as a tonic in dyspepsia. A tincture has been used in gravel. An infusion of the leaves is demulcent, and is employed in pulmonary affections. The leaves are applied, fresh, to wounds and ulcers.

Gun'shot Wound, see Wound.

Gur'ges, gen. Gur'gitis, Pharynx.

Gurgi'na Bal'sam, see Dipterocarpus.

Gurgitello, Min'eral Wa'ters of. A thermal spring in the isle of Ischia. Temp. at its source, 176° Fahr. It contains carbonic acid, carbonates of lime, magnesia, iron and soda, sulphates of lime and soda, chloride of sodium and silica.

Gurg'ling. 'Gushing with noise,' as water from a bottle. (Same etymon as gurgling.) (F.) Gargouillement. The rhonchus or râle heard on auscultation when there is a cavity in the lungs containing pus. It is the 'cavernous rattle or rhonchus,' Râle caverneux. The size of the bubbles heard varies, and hence the rhonchus has been called cavernous and cavern'ulous, (F.) Râle cavernuleux. If the cavern be large, this râle will nearly resemble the gurgling of a bottle (glouglou d'une bouteille); if, on the contrary, the cavern be small, it will not differ from the râle muqueux.

Gur'jun Bal'sam, see Dipterocarpus.

Gurgu'lio, (like curculio.) Penis, Uvula.

Guru Nut, Kola acuminata.

Gustus, gen. Gustûs, Taste—g. Depravatus, Paragustia.

Gut, Gout, Intestine—g. Blind, Cæcum.

Guts, Slip'periness of the, Lientery.

Gutta, ('a drop,') Apoplexy, Cambogia, Gout.

GUT'TA. A Drop, Stalag'ma, Stranz, Alun'sel, Stilla, (F.) Goutte. A quantity of liquid, generally valued, in pharmacy, at the weight of a grain. The weight, however, varies, according to different circumstances, as the degree of tenacity of the fluid, and the extent of moist surface to which the suspended drop is attached before it falls; and it was found by Mr. Alsop to be influenced by the size of the bottle, and the angle of inclination at which it was held during the operation of dropping. The following are some of his results as to the number of drops required to measure a fluidrachm, when dropped from a large and small bottle:

One fluidrachm of	From a large bottle. Drops.	From a small bottle. Drops.
Diluted sulphuric acid.....	24	84
Scheele's hydrocyanic acid.....	35	70
Distilled water.....	31	54
Solution of ammonia.....	40	48
Tincture of opium.....	84	135
Rectified spirit.....	100	130
Tincture of chloride of iron.....	100	150

Prof. Wm. Procter, of Philadelphia, has given a table of the number of drops to a fluidrachm of essential oils, when dropped from the bottles from which they are commonly dispensed, and from a minim measure; and Mr. Edward Parrish one of different liquids dropped, under like circumstances, from pint and half pint tincture bottles, and from a minim measure. The following is the number of drops of different liquids equivalent to a fluidrachm—the result of the observations of Mr. Durand, of Philadelphia:

One fluidrachm of	Drops.

By the plural—guttæ—is meant a pharmaceutical mixture—Mistu'ra contrac'ta—to be given in drops. Gutta and Guttæ, also, signify certain cutaneous spots or eruptions.

GUT'TA GAMAN'DRÆ, Cambogia—g. Gamba, Cambogia—g. Opaca, Cataract.

GUT'TA PER'CHA, Gutta tu'ban, Gomme getta'nia. The concrete juice of a tree—Isonan'dra gutta—which is indigenous in Singapore and its vicinity, and belongs to the Natural Order Sapotaceæ. Plunged into boiling water it softens, when it may be moulded like caoutchouc to any form, which it retains on cooling. Splints and other instruments have been made of it.

A solution of gutta percha in chloroform—Trau'maticine—has been used with advantage, topically, in various cutaneous affections, serofulous and indolent ulcers, and as an ectrotic in smallpox.

GUT'TA ROSA'CEA, Gutta rosea—g. r. Syphilitica, Crown of Venus.

GUT'TA RO'SEA, G. Rosa'cea, Ion'thus corymb'ifer, Crus'ta serpigino'sa seu pruriginosa, Ac'nè rosa'cea, Rose'ola acno'sa, Thylacii'tis, Bac'chia, Butiga, Car'buncled Face, Ro'sy Drop or Wheel, Cop'ernose, Bot'tlenose, Grog'blossoms, Grog'roses, Bran'dyface, Rum'bud, (F.) Couperose, Goutte Rose, Bourgeons, Darte pustuleuse couperose. An eruption of small, suppurating tubercles, with shining redness, and an irregular granular appearance of the skin of the part of the face which is affected. The redness commonly appears first at the end of the nose, and then spreads on both sides. It is often produced by hard drinking. Its cure must be attempted by regular regimen, and cooling means internally; weak spirituous or saturnine lotions externally. The affection is usually very obstinate.

GUT'TA SERE'NA, Amaurosis—g. Tuban, Gutta percha.

Gut'tæ, pl. of Gutta—g. Abbatis Rousseau, Laudanum abbatis Rousseau—g. Acidæ tonicæ, Elixir acidum Halleri—g. Ammoniaci, see Ammoniac gum—g. Nervinæ, Alcohol sulphurico-æthereus ferri.

GUT'TÆ NI'GRÆ, 'black drops,' Acetum o'pii, Common Black Drop, (F.) Gouttes noires. (Opii, 3viij., Aceti destillat., lbij. Infuse.)

The celebrated Black Drop, Lan'caster or Quaker's Black Drop, may be made as follows: Take half a pound of opium, sliced; three pints of good verjuice (juice of the wild crab), one and a half ounce of nutmegs, and half an ounce of saffron. Boil to a proper thickness, and add a quarter of a pound of sugar, and two spoonfuls of yeast. Set the whole in a warm place, near the fire, for six or eight weeks; then place it in the open air until it becomes a syrup.

Lastly, decant, filter, and bottle it up, adding a little sugar to each bottle. One drop is equal to three of laudanum; and it is nearly devoid of all the unpleasant exciting effects of the latter. An analogous formula is contained in the Pharmacopœia of the United States (1873) under the name Acetum opii, Vinegar of Opium. (Opium, dried, in moderately coarse powder, $\frac{3}{4}$ v., nutmeg, in powder, $\frac{3}{4}$ j., sugar, $\frac{3}{4}$ viij., and diluted acetic acid, q. s. Macerate the opium and nutmeg in a pint of the acid for 24 hours; put the mixture in a conical glass percolator, and return the liquid which passes until the filtrate becomes clear. Gradually pour on diluted acetic acid until the filtered liquid measures $\frac{3}{4}$ xxvj. In this dissolve the sugar, strain the solution, and add sufficient acid to make the whole measure two pints.) A fluidounce contains 75 grains of opium. A grain of opium is represented by about $6\frac{1}{2}$ minims.

Gut'teria, (from guttur.) Bronchocele.

Gut'tur, gen. Gut'turis. The throat; the larynx; the trachea.

Gut'tur GLOBOSUM, ('globous throat,') Bronchocele — g. Tumidum, Bronchocele.

Gut'tural, Gut'turalis, (from guttur.) Relating or belonging to the throat.

The Superior Thyroidal Artery is sometimes called Gut'tural Ar'tery.

A Guttural Cough is one occasioned by irritation of the larynx or trachea.

A Guttural Sound is one produced, as it were, in the throat.

Guttura'lis Cartila'go, Arytenoid cartilage.

Gut'turis Os, ('bone of the throat,') Hyoides os.

Guttur'nia, Arytenoid cartilages.

Gym'na, (from γυμνος, 'naked,') Genital organs.

Gymna'sion, (γυμνασιον.) Exercise.

Gymna'sium, (from γυμνασιον.) Palæstra. An establishment among the ancients, intended for bodily exercises, as wrestling, running, &c.; a term now used, in Germany more especially, for an academy or higher school.

Gym'nast, Gymnas'tes, (γυμναστης.) Gymnas'ta. The manager of a gymnasium. One whose profession it is to prevent or cure diseases by gymnastics.

Gymnas'tics, Gymnas'tica, (γυμναστική, — τεχνη.) Medici'na gymnas'tica seu euec'tica, Somascet'ics, (F.) Gymnastique, Somascétique. That part of hygienic medicine which treats of bodily exercises. It is called Med'ical Gymnastics. The ancients had also Athlet'ic Gymnastics, and Mil'itary Gymnastics. Herodotus, of Selivraea, first proposed gymnastics for the cure of disease.

Gymnastique, Gymnastics.

Gymneur'a Lactiferum, Ceylon' cow tree, Kiriaghuma. A tree, of the Family Apocynaceæ, the juice of which is used by the Cingalese as milk.

Gymnoc'ladus Canaden'sis, Coff'ee Tree, Kentuck'y Coff'ee-bean Tree, Mahog'any, Nick'ar Tree, Bon'due, (γυμνος, 'naked,' and κλαδος, 'a branch,') Order, Leguminosæ. An indigenous tree, which grows from Ohio to Louisiana. The leaves are cathartic, and said to contain cytisin. The seeds are a good substitute for coffee.

Gymnogram'mê Cet'erach, Asplenium ceterach.

Gym'noplast, (γυμνος, 'naked,' and πλασσω, 'I form,') A name recently proposed for naked cells, without envelopes, such as the white blood-corpuscles.

Gymnop'teris Cet'erach, (γυμνος, 'naked,' and πτερις, pteris, 'fern,') Asplenium ceterach.

Gymno'sis, (γυμνωσις, from γυμνος, 'naked,') Denudation.

Gynæ'caner, (gynæco, and ανηρ, 'a man,') Vir effæmina'tus. An effeminate man.

Gynæcan'thê, (gynæco, and ανθος, 'a flower,') Taurus communis.

Gynæcatop'tron, (gynæco, and κατοπτρον, 'a speculum,') A speculum for investigating the female organs of generation.

Gynæce'a, Gynæceia.

Gynæcei'a, (γυναικεια.) Gynæci'a, Gynæce'a. The catamenia; — the lochia. The diseases of women in general.

Gynæce'um, Antimonium, Vulva.

Gynæce'us, (γυναικειος.) Belonging to women. Female. Feminine.

Gynæci'a, (γυναικεια.) Gynæceia, Menses.

Gynæ'co, (from γυνη, gen. γυναικος, 'a woman,') In composition, woman.

Gynæcolog'ia, Gynæcol'ogy, Gynecol'ogy, (gynæco, and λογος, 'a description,') The doctrine of the nature, diseases, &c., of women.

Gynæcol'ogist, (gynæco, and λογος, 'description,') One who devotes himself specially to, or is well acquainted with the nature, diseases, &c., of women.

Gynæcoma'nia, (gynæco, and μανια, 'mania,' 'rage,') That species of insanity which arises from love for women. Some have used the word synonymously with nymphomania.

Gynæcomas'tus, Gynæcomas'thus, (gynæco, and μαστος, 'a breast,') A man whose breasts are as large as those of a woman. The condition is called Gynæcoma'zia.

A considerable enlargement of the breasts of a female was formerly called Gynæcomas'ton.

Gynæcoma'zia, see Gynæcomastus.

Gynæcomys'tax, gen. Gynæcomys'taxis, (gynæco, and μυσταξ, 'the beard,') The hair on the pubes of women.

Gynæcopathi'a, (gynæco, and παθος, 'affection,') Gynæcop'athy, Gynep'athy. A disease of woman.

Gynæcoph'o'nus, (gynæco, and φωνη, 'voice,') A man who has an effeminate voice.

Gynan'dria, (gyne, and ανηρ, gen. ανδρες, 'a man,') Hermaphroditey.

Gynandrisme, Hermaphroditey.

Gynandrop'sis Pentaphyl'la, Oleo'nê pentaphyl'la; Ord. Capparidaceæ; an indigenous plant, is possessed of diaphoretic properties. The juice alone, or mixed with oil, has been used in earache.

Gynan'drus, (gyne, and ανηρ, gen. ανδρος, 'a man,') Gynanthropus.

Gynanthro'pus, Gynan'drus, (gyne, and ανθρωπος, 'a man,') An hermaphrodite who belongs more to the male than to the female sex.

Gynatre'sia, (gyne, and απρητος, 'imperforate,') Closure or imperforation of the external parts of generation of the female.

Gy'nê, (γυνη.) Female, Woman.

Gynecol'ogy, Gynæcologia.

Gynæcopath'ic or Gynæpath'ic, Gynæcopath'icus, Gynæpath'icus. Relating or appertaining to the diseases of women.

Gynæcop'athy, Gynæcopathia.

Gynep'athy, Gynæcopathia.

Gyni'aci (Mor'bi), (from gyne.) Developmental diseases of women, as chlorosis; those attending the parturient state and amenorrhœa, according to the classification of Dr. W. Farr.

Gy'nida, Hermaphrodite.

Gynoa'rium, (gyne, and ωαριον, 'ovarium,') Ovarium.

Gynocar'dia Odora'ta, (gyne, and καρδια, 'a heart,') Chaumoogra.

Gynoplas'tic, Gynoplas'ticus, (gyne, and πλασσω, 'I form,') The gynoplastic operation is employed for opening or dilating the closed or contracted genital openings of the female.

Gyp'syweed, Lycopus sinuatus, and L. Virginicus.

Gy'ri (pl. of Gyrus) Cer'ebri, Convolutions (cerebral) — g. Cochleæ, Scalae of the cochlea — g. Intestinales, see Anse — g. Operti, see Insula cerebri.

Gyro'mia Virgin'ica, Medeola Virginica.

Gyrophle, (from caryophyllum;) see Eugenia caryophyllata.

Gyrus, (γυρος, 'a circle,') Convolution.

Gyrus Fornicatus, 'arched circle or convolution,' Fillet of the corpus callosum. A large convolution of the brain, which lies horizontally on the corpus callosum, and may be traced forwards and backwards to the base of the brain, terminating by each extremity at the fissure of Sylvius. The surface of the hemisphere, where it comes in contact with the corpus callosum, is bounded by it.

Gyrus Intestinalis, Anse intestinale.

Gytling, (dim. of [Sc.] get, 'a child,') Infans.

H.

Hab'bering (Sc.), (from Belg. haperen, 'to stutter,') Balbuties.

Hab'bi, Hagenia Abyssinica.

Hab'bling (Sc.), (from Su. G. happla, 'to stutter,') Balbuties.

Hab-el-Kalimbat, Pistacia terebinthus.

Habe'na, ('a bridle,' from habeo, 'I have or hold,') Tel'amon. A bandage for uniting the lips of wounds; which, of old, in many instances, replaced the suture.

Habe'næ of the Pin'eal Gland, see Pineal gland.

Haben'ula Ganglionaris, (dim. of Habena;) Ganglion Cortii — h. Arcuata, see Membrana basilaris — h. Interna, Lamina denticulata — h. Pectinata, see Lamina spiralis — h. Perforata, see Locus perforatus — h. Sulcata, Lamina denticulata — h. Tecta, see Membrana basilaris.

Haben'ulæ of the Pin'eal Gland, see Pineal gland.

Habil'la de Carthage'na, (dim. of haba, (L.) faba, 'a bean,') Bejuco, Carthage'na bean, (F.) Fève de Carthagène. A kind of bean of South America, famed as an effectual antidote for the poison of all serpents, if a small quantity be eaten immediately.

Hab'it, Habitu'do, (habere, habitu, 'to have or to hold,') Assuetu'do, Mos, U'sus, Consuetu'do, E'thos, Hex'is, Ethemos'ynê, (F.) Habitude, Accoutumance. Habit is the aptitude for repeating certain acts, or a facility which results from the frequent repetition of the same act. It is, according to vulgar expression, 'a second nature.' Habit may predispose to certain diseases, or it may protect against them. It ought not to be lost sight of, in attending to the progress of disease or its treatment.

HAB'IT OF BODY, Constitu'tio, Hab'itus, H. corporis, Catas'tasis, Hex'is, Epiphani'a, (F.) Habitude extérieure, Habitude du Corps. The aggregate of the physical qualities of the human body.

Habitude, Habit — h. du Corps, Habit of body — h. Extérieure, Habit of body.

Habitu'do, gen. Habitu'dinis, (habere, 'to have or to hold,') Habit.

Hab'itus, gen. Habitu's, Habit of body — h. Apoplectic, Apoplectic habit — h. Corporis, Habit of body — h. Quadratus, see Apoplectic — h. Torosus, see Apoplectic.

Habroma'nia, (ἄβρος, 'gay,' and μανία, 'mania,') Insanity in which the delusions are of a gay character.

Hach'ich, see Bangue.

Hach'isch, Bangue.

Hachse (Sc.), Pain.

Hack'berry, Celtis occidentalis, Prunus padus.

Had'dock, see Oleum jecoris aselli.

Hæ'ma, gen. Hæ'matis, (ἷμα, gen. ἱμαρος,) 'blood.'

Hæmach'roin, (hæma, and χρῶς, 'I color,') Hæmatin.

Hæmachro'ses, [G.] Hæmachrosen, (from hæma, and χρῶσις, 'coloration,') A family of diseases in which the blood has its color different from usual, as in purpura and cyanosis.

Hæmac'tus, (ἱμακτος,) Bloody.

Hæmacy'anin, (hæma, and κυανός, 'blue,') A blue coloring matter, detected by Sanson in healthy blood, and in bile by some chemists, but not by others.

Hæmadon'osus, (hæma, and νόσος, 'a disease,') Hæmatangion'osus, Hæmatangionu'sus, Hæmatangio'sis. Disease of the bloodvessels.

Hæmadosto'sis, (hæma, and ὀστωσις, 'a bony tumor,') Ossification of the bloodvessels.

Hæmadromom'eter, Hæmodromometer.

Hæmadynam'eter, Hæmadynamometer.

Hæmadynam'ics, (F.) Hémadynamique, (hæma, and δύναμις, 'power,') The mechanism of the circulation of the blood.

Hæmadynamom'eter, Hæmodynamom'eter, Hæmatodynamom'eter, Hæmadynam'eter, Hæmom'eter, Hæmatom'eter, (F.) Hémodynamomètre, Hémadynamètre, Hémomètre, (hæma, δύναμις, 'power,' and μετρον, 'a measure,') An instrument for measuring the force of the blood in the vessels. It consists of a bent glass tube, the lower bent part of which is filled with mercury. A brass head is fitted into the artery, and a solution of carbonate of soda is interposed between the mercury and the blood, which is allowed to enter the tube for the purpose of preventing its coagulation. The pressure of the blood on the mercury in the descending portion of the bent tube causes the metal to rise in the ascending portion; and the degree to which it rises indicates the pressure under which the blood moves. A modification of this instrument has been called Cardiom'eter, (F.) Cardiomètre. See Manometer.

Hæmagas'ter, Hæmatogaster.

Hæmagas'tric or Hæmogas'tric Pes'tilence, Fever, yellow.

Hæmago'gum, Pæonia.

Hæmago'gus, (hæma, and αγω, 'I drive off,') A medicine which promotes the menstrual and hemorrhoidal discharges.

Hæ'mal, (from hæma,) Relating to the blood or bloodvessels.

HÆ'MAL ARCH. The arch formed by the projections anteriorly of the ribs and sternum from the bodies of the vertebræ. It encloses the great bloodvessels.

HÆ'MAL AX'IS, Aorta — h. Spine, Sternum.

Hæmalo'pia, (hæma, and ὥψ, 'the eye,') Hæmophthalmia.

Hæmalo'pis, Hæmophthalmia.

Hæ'malops, (ἡμαλωψ,) Hæmophthalmia.

Hæman'thus Coccin'eus, (hæma, and κόκκος, 'a flower,') A beautiful South African plant, Nat. Ord. Amoryllidæ, the bulb of which is employed as a diuretic. It is given as an oxymel in asthma and dropsy. The fresh leaves are antiseptic, and applied to foul, flabby ulcers, and in anthrax.

Hæmantli'a, (hæma, and αντλειω, 'I pump out.') An exhausting syringe, to which a reservoir is attached, containing a needle. It is used for obtaining blood for hæmatological investigations.

Hæmaperitonirrhag'ia, (F.) Hémépéritonirrhagie, (hæma, περιτοναϊον, 'peritoneum,' and ῥαγη, 'a rupture.') An exhalation of blood into the peritoneum.

Hæmaphæ'in, Hæmatophæ'um, Hæmophæ'um, (hæma, and φαιος, 'of a dusky color.') A term applied by Simon to the brown coloring matter of the blood, supposed by some to be nothing more than hæmatin modified by an alkali. In the urine it is called Urohæ'matin.

Hæmaph'obus, Hæmoph'obus, (hæma, and φοβος, 'dread.') One who has a dread of blood — who cannot look at it without fainting.

Hæmapoiet'ic, (ἡμα, 'blood,' and ποιω, 'I make.') Blood-forming, as the hæmapoietic function of the liver, the spleen, &c.

Hæmapoph'yses, (hæma, and αποφω, 'I shoot forth.') Costal cartilages, see Costa.

Hæmapor'ia, Hæmatapor'ia, Hæmatopor'ia, Oligohæ'mia, Oligæ'mia, (hæma, and απορος, 'poor.') Paucity of blood. See Anæmia.

Hæmap'tysis, (ἡμαπτυνσις.) Hæmoptysis.
Hæ'mas, gen. Hæ'madis, (ἡμας, gen. ἡμαδός.) A bloodvessel.

Hæmastat'ica, Hæmatostatica.
Hæmastat'ics, Hæmastat'icæ, (hæma, and στατικη, 'statics.') The statics of the blood and bloodvessels, Hæmostat'ics.

Hæmatillos'copy, Hæmatilloscop'ia, (hæmato, αλλοιος, 'different,' and σκοπειν, 'to view.') The mode of distinguishing different kinds of blood from each other.

Hæmatanago'gê, (hæmato, ανα, and αγω, 'I drive off,') Hæmatemesis.

Hæmatangion'osus, (hæmato, αγγιον, 'a vessel,' and ωσος, 'a disease,') Hæmadonosus.

Hæmatangio'sis, Hæmadonosus.

Hæmatapor'ia, Hæmaporia.

Hæmataporrho'sis, (hæmato, apo, ορρος, 'se- rum,' and osis.) Cholera.

Hæmataposte'ma, gen. Hæmataposte'matis, (hæmato, and αποστημα, 'an abscess.') An abscess which contains blood.

Hæmataul'ica, (hæmato, and αυλος, 'a tube,') Vascular system.

Hæmatec'lysis, Hæmotex'ia, Hæmotex'is, Hæmatol'ysis, Hæmatosep'sis, San'guinis dissolu'tio, (hæmato, and εκλυσις, 'loosening.') Dissolution of the blood.

Hæmatelæ'um, (hæmato, and ελαιον, 'oil,') see Blood.

Hæmatem'esis, (hæmato, and εμω, 'I vomit,') Hæmorrha'gia, Hæmatem'esis, Vom'itus cruen'tus, Vom'itus seu Vomit'io San'guinis, Gastrorrhag'ia, Gastrohæmorrhag'ia, Hæmorrhag'ia ventric'uli seu gas'trica, Hæmorrhæ'a ventric'uli, Hæmatanago'gê, Vom'iting of Blood, (F.) Hématémèse, Vomissement de sang. Hæmatemesis is generally preceded by a feeling of oppression, weight, and full or pungent pain in the epigastric and in the hypochondriac regions; by anxiety, and, occasionally, by syncope. Blood is then passed by vomiting, and sometimes, also, by stool, — the blood being generally of a grumous aspect. Hæmatemesis may be active or passive, acute or chronic. The blood effused proceeds from rupture of vessel, or from a sanguineous exhalation at the surface of the mucous membrane of the stomach. It is often observed in females whose menstrual secretion is irregularly performed. It is not of much danger, except when connected with disease of some of the solid viscera of the abdomen. On dissection of those who have died from protracted hæmatemesis, — for the acute kind is comparatively devoid of danger, — the mucous membrane of the stomach is found red and inflamed, or black, and the vessels considerably dilated. Complete abstinence from food; rest; the horizontal posture; bleeding, if the hemorrhage be active; cold, acidulous drinks, &c., constitute the usual treatment.

Hæmatenceph'alum, (hæmato, and encephalon.) Apoplexy.

Hæmatepago'gê, (hæmato, epi, and αγω, 'I drive,') Congestion.

Hæmate'rus, (ἡματηρος; from ἡμα, 'blood,') Sanguine.

Hæmater'ythrum, (hæmato, and ερυθρος, 'red,') Hæmatin.

Hæmatexosto'sis, (hæmato, and exostosis.) Osteosarcoma.

Hæmathidro'sis, (hæmato, and ἰδρωσις, 'sweating,') Sudor cruentus.

Hæmatho'rax, gen. Hæmathora'cis, Hæmatothorax.

Hæma'tia, (from hæma.) Jusculum nigrum Lacedæmoniorum.

Hæmati'asis, (from hæma.) Hæmatonosis.

Hæmat'ic, (from hæma.) Sanguine — b. Crystals, Hæmatoidin.

Hæmat'ica, (from hæma.) Diseases of the sanguineous function: — the third class in the nosology of Good. Also, medicines that act on the blood (Pereira).

HÆMAT'ICA DOCTR'INA, Hæmatology.

Hæmat'icus, (ἡματικος; from hæma.) Bloody, Sanguine.

Hæmatidro'sis, (hæmato, and ἰδρωσις, 'sweating,') Sudor cruentus.

Hæ'matin, Hæmatin'a, Hem'atine, Hem'atin, Hæ'matosin, Hem'atosine, Hæmater'ythrum, Hæmer'ythrum, Zöohem'atin, Hemach'roin, Hematoch'roine, Phæ'nodine, Phæ'nicine, Hæmatoch'roite, Cru'orin, Ru'brin, Glob'ulin of some, Rouge du Sang; (from hæma.) The red coloring matter of the blood. It resides in distinct particles or globules, and, in the opinion of some observers, in the envelope of the globules. That the color of the blood is not owing to the peroxide of iron which it contains is shown by the fact mentioned by Scherer, that he removed the iron by acids, and yet a deep red tincture was formed when alcohol was added to the residuum. Three kinds of microscopic crystals can be obtained from hæmatin, — hæmato'idin, hæ'min, and hæmatocrys'tallin. See Hæmatoidin, &c.

Hæmatin'ic, Hæmatin'ic, Hæmatin'icus, (from hæmatin.) An agent that augments the number of red corpuscles or the hæmatin of the blood.

HÆMATIN'IC CRYSTALS, Hæmatoidin.

Hæmatinop'tysis, (hæmatin, and πτω, 'I spit,') see Hæmatoidin.

Hæmatinu'ria, (hæmatin, and ουρον, 'urine,') Urine containing the coloring matter of the blood without the red corpuscles.

Hæmati'nus, (from hæma.) Sanguine.

Hæmatis'chesis, Hæmis'chesis, Hæmocryp'h'ia, (hæma, and ισχαιν, 'to suppress.') The retention or suppression of a natural or artificial flow of blood.

Hæmatis'mus, (from hæma.) Epistaxis, Hæmorrhagia.

Hæmatisth'mus, (hæmato, and ισθμος, 'pharynx,') Hæmorrhage into the pharynx.

Hæmati'tes, Hæmati'tis, (ἡματιτης.) Resembling blood. Lapis Hæmati'tes. A beautiful ore of iron, called also, Blood'stone, O'chrea ru'bra, Ox'ydim fer'ricum crystalliza'tum nat'ivum, Fer'rum Hæmatites. When finely levigated, and freed from the grosser parts, by frequent washings with water, it has been long recommended in hæmorrhages, fluxes, uterine obstructions, &c., in doses of from one scruple to three or four. Also, a vessel that contains blood, ἀμαρῖτις φλεψ.

Hæmatitis, gen. Hæmatitidis, Hæmitis.

Hæmatismus, (hæma, and αἶμα, 'vapor,') Gas sanguinis.

Hæmato, (from αἷμα, gen. αἵματος, 'blood,') in composition, blood.

Hæmatocathartica, (hæmato, and καθαρῖτις, 'purification or purgation,') Remedies for purifying the blood.

Hæmatocele, Hæmatocele, (hæmato, and κῆλη, 'tumor,') A tumor formed by blood. By some, this term has been applied to a tumor formed by blood, effused into the areolar texture of the serotum. Others have used it for tumors arising from effusion of blood into the tunica vaginalis:—hæmatocele, according to them, differing from hydrocele, only in the character of the effusion (Heister). Others, again, have applied it to effusions of blood into the interior of the tunica albuginea itself (Richter). The first is the usual acceptation. It is most commonly caused by wounds or contusions: and requires the use of antiphlogistics, discutients, &c. Sometimes it is necessary to evacuate the effused blood.

HÆMATOCELE ARTERIO'SA, Aneurism—h. Circumuterina, Hæmatocele, pelvic.

HÆMATOCELE, PELVIC, H. Perivulvarine, H. Circumuterina seu Pelvica, Retrouverine Hæmatocele, Pelvic Hæmato'ma, Pelvic Thrombus. An extravasation of blood into the pouch or peritoneum between the rectum and uterus (retrouterine), or into the subperitoneal tissue behind and around (circumuterine) the latter organ. It has received the various names, ovarian, catamenial or tubal, intraperitoneal, extraperitoneal, &c. Hemorrhage and peritonitis are to be combated. The tumor thus formed is also known as a Sanguineous pelvic tumor, or ovarian apoplexy.

HÆMATOCELE, PERIVULVARINE, H. pelvic.

HÆMATOCELE, PUDENDAL, Blood Tu'mor or Thrombus of the Vulva. A tumor formed by a mass of clotted blood effused into the tissue of one labium, or the areolar tissue immediately surrounding the wall of the vagina, doubtless derived from the vessels of the bulb of the vestibule.

HÆMATOCELE, RETROVULVARINE, H. pelvic.

Hæmatocephalus, (hæmato, and κεφαλή, 'head,') (F.) Hématocéphale. A monster in which an effusion of blood in the head has given occasion to more or less singular deformities.

Hæmatocerebriform Disease, (hæmato, cerebrum, 'brain,' and forma, 'form,') Encephaloid.

Hæmatocchezia, (hæmato, and χεῖω, 'I go to stool,') Se des cruen'tæ, Catarrhex'is ve'ra, Enterorrhag'ia simplex, Diarrhœ'a cruen'ta seu sanguinolenta, Hæmatodiarrhœ'a, Hæmorrhag'ia intestino'rum, Enterohæmorrhag'ia, (F.) Hémorrhagie des intestins, Écoulement de sang par l'Intestin. Discharge of blood by stool. See Melæna.

Hæmatachometer, Hæmatachometer.

Hæmatochroite, (hæmato, and χρῶς, 'color,') Hæmatin.

Hæmatochysis, (hæmato, and χυω, 'I pour out,') Hæmorrhagia.

Hæmatocœlia, (hæmato, and κοιλία, 'the cavity of the abdomen,') Effusion of blood into the abdomen.

Hæmatocolpus, (hæmato, and κολπος, 'vagina,') Effusion of blood into the vagina. Accumulation of blood owing to occlusion of the vagina.

Hæmatocry'stallin, (hæmato, and κρυστάλλος, 'a crystal,') see Hæmatoidin, and Globules, red, of the blood.

Hæmatocyanopathia, (hæmato, κυανός, 'blue,') παθος, 'affection,') Cyanopathy.

Hæmatocyanosis, (hæmato, and cyanosis,) Cyanopathy.

Hæmatocyst'stē, (hæmato, and κύστη, 'a bladder,') Hæmatoma saccatum.

Hæmatocyst'is, gen. Hæmatocyst'idis, (hæmato, and κύστης, 'bladder,') Hemorrhage into the bladder.

Hæmato'des, Hæmato'idēs, Sanguineus, Hæmatoid, Hem'atoid, (ἀμαρῶδης, from hæmato, and odes,) That which contains blood, or has the character of blood.

HÆMATO'DES FUN'GUS, Hæmatom'yces, Fungus cancro'sus hæmato'des, Melæ'na fungo'sa carcino'des, Angidiospon'gus, Angiom'yces, Hæmatospon'gus, Tu'mor fungo'sus sanguineus seu anom'alus, Carcino'ma hæmato'des, Carcino'ma spongio'sum, Spon'goid inflamma'tion, Pulp'y or Med'ullary Sarco'ma, Bleed'ing Fungus, Soft or Hæmatoid Can'cer, (F.) Carcinôme sanglant, Hématoncie fungoïde. An extremely alarming carcinomatous affection, which was first described, with accuracy, by Mr. John Burns, of Glasgow. It consists in the development of cancerous tumors, with violent heat and pain, and with fungus and bleeding excrescences. Even when the diseased part is extirpated at a very early period, recovery rarely follows; other organs being generally implicated at the same time. Fungus hæmatodes was the term first applied to the disease by Mr. Hey of Leeds. Mr. J. Burns called it Spon'goid inflamma'tion, from the spongy, elastic feel, which peculiarly characterizes it, and continues even after ulceration has taken place. The disease has, most frequently, been met with in the eyeball, the upper and lower extremities, testicle, and mamma; but it occurs in the uterus, ovary, liver, spleen, brain, lungs, thyroid gland, and in the hip and shoulder joints.

Some French surgeons designate, by this name, those tumors which were formerly termed anormales, caverneuses, variqueuses, called Erectiles by Dupuytren, Hématoncies by Alibert, and Telangiectasie by Gräfe.

Hæmatodiarrhœ'a, Hæmatochezia.

Hæmatodynam'ics, Hæmadynamics.

Hæmatodynamom'eter, Hæmadynamometer.

Hæmatodyscrasia, (hæmato, and dyscrasia,) Hæmatonosis.

Hæmatogas'ter, (hæmato, and γαστρῆς, 'stomach,') Effusion of blood into the stomach.

Hæmatogen'esis, Hæmatosis.

Hæmatogenet'ica, Hæmatog'enous, (hæmato, and γενεῖς, 'generation,') Hæmatopoetica.

Hæmatoglob'ulin, see Globules of the blood.

Hæmatogra'phia, Hæmatog'raphy, (hæmato, and γραφῆς, 'a description,') A description of the blood.

Hæmatoid, (hæmato, and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Resembling blood. Hæmatodes.

HÆMATOID CAN' CER, Hæmatodes fungus.

Hæmato'idin, Hæmatocry'stallin, Hæmatin'ic, hæ'min or blood crystals, (F.) Hématodine, Crystaux d'Hématine. A substance found in the midst, or in the vicinity, of effusions of blood, which is either in amorphous masses, or, more frequently, in minute rhomboidal crystals, or in fine needles. It is considered to be hæmatin separated from the globules of the blood, and passed from the state of a non-crystallizable organic substance to one of a crystalline chemical compound. When an effusion of blood, as in apoplexy, is taken up again, this form of crystallization takes place in a large portion of it. The term hæmatinop'tysis has been applied to expectoration containing hæmatinic crystals without red corpuscles.

Hæmatol'ogy, Hæmatol'ogy, Hæmatolog'ia, Hæmat'ica doctri'na, (F.) Hématologie, (hæmato, and λογος, 'a discourse,') That part of medicine which treats of the blood.

HÆMATOL'OGY, PATHOLOG'ICAL, (F.) Hématologie pathologique. Observation of the blood to detect its varying characters in disease.

Hæmatolyses, (G.) Hæmatolysen, (hæmato, and λυσις, 'solution.') An order of diseases in which there is diminished coagulability of the blood.

Hæmatolysis, Hæmateclysis.

Hæmatolyticum, Spanæmic.

Hæmato'ma, gen. Hæmato'matis, (from hæmato, and μα, Thrombus, Tumor sanguineus. A bloody tumor. It is especially met with in the scalp of the newborn.

Hæmato'ma Aur'is, Othæmato'ma, Insa'ne ear, Ary'lum ear. An effusion of blood under the perichondrium of the ear, which is stripped from the cartilage, or, according to some, the effusion is within the cartilage. It is considered to be an unfavorable sign in insanity.

Hæmato'ma Sacc'a'tum. An encysted tumor containing blood—Hæmatocyst'itē.

Hæmato'ma, PEL'vic, Hæmatocele, pelvic.

Hæmatomanti'a, (hæmato, and μαντια, 'divination.') Judgment of disease from the appearance of the blood.

Hæmatoma'tra, gen. Hæmatoma'tris, (hæmato, and μητρα, 'uterus,') Metrorrhagia. Also, retention of blood in the uterus.

Hæmatometach'ysis, (hæmato, meta, and χω, 'I pour,') Transfusio sanguinis.

Hæmatome'tra, (hæmato, and μητρα, 'the uterus,') Metrorrhagia.

Hæmatom'ma, gen. Hæmatom'matis, (hæmato, and ομα, 'the eye,') Hæmophthalmia.

Hæmatomphaloc'e'lē, Hæmatom'phalum, Hæmatom'phalus, (hæmato, ομφαλος, 'the navel,') and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Umbilical hernia, the sac of which encloses a bloody serum, or which has, at its surface, a number of varicose veins; constituting Varicom'phalus.

Hæmatom'phalum, (hæmato, and ομφαλος, 'the navel,') Hæmatomphaloc'ele.

Hæmatom'yces, gen. Hæmatomyce'tis, (hæmato, and μυκης, 'a fungus,') Hæmatodes fungus.

Hæmaton'cus, (F.) Hématoncie, (hæmato, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') Alibert has given this name to Nœvi mater'ni, Var'icose tumors. He admits three varieties:—the H. fongoide, H. framboisée, and H. tubéreuse.

Hæmaton'osus, Hæmat'asis, Hæmatopathi'a, Hæmatopathi'a, Nosohæ'mia, (hæmato, and νοσος, 'disease,') A disease of the blood. A hæ'mic or blood disease, (F.) Nosohémie. See Blood disease.

Hæmatopathi'a, (hæmato, and παθος, 'an affection,') Hæmatonosis.

Hæmatopede'sis, (hæmato, and πηδω, 'I spring,') see Diapedesis.

Hæmatopericard'ium, (hæmato, and pericard'ium,) Effusion of blood into the pericardium.

Hæmatophæ'um, Hæmaphæin.

Hæmatophil'ia, Hæmophil'ia, Hæmorrhophil'ia, Hæmorrhophil'ia, Idiosyncrasi'a hæmorrhag'ica, (F.) Hæmophilie, (hæmato, and φιλω, 'I love,') A disease, hereditary and attended by a hæmorrhagic diathesis, with unusual obstinacy of traumatic hæmorrhage, or a tendency to spontaneous bleedings and to swelling of the joints.

Hæmatophlebos'tasis. Sudden suppression of a hæmorrhage;—from στασις αίματος φλεβων, 'suppression of the blood of the veins.'

Hæmatophob'ia, Hæmophob'ia, (F.) Hémophilie, (hæmato, and φοβος, 'dread,') Dread or horror at the sight of blood, producing syncope, &c. Of old, they who were afraid of, or opposed to, bloodletting, were called hæmoph'oboi, blood-funkers.

Hæmatophthal'mia, Hæmophthalmia.

Hæmatoph'thores, (G.) Hæmatoph'thoren; (hæmato, and φθορα, 'corruption,') An order of diseases in the classification of Fuchs, in which the blood is materially altered in composition, as in typhus.

Hæmatop'ysis, (F.) Hématopisie. M. Capuron, of Paris, has applied the term Hématopisie uté- rine, from analogy with Hydropisie utérine, to a collection of blood which sometimes takes place in the uterus, when, owing to faulty conformation, the exit of the menstrual flux is prevented.

Hæmatopla'nia, Hæmatoplane'sis, Hæmopla'nia, (hæmato, and πλανη, 'wandering,') (F.) Hæmoplanie. A vicarious hæmorrhage.

HÆMATOPLA'NIA MENSTRUALIS, Menstruation, vicarious.

Hæmatoplas'ma, gen. Hæmatoplas'matis, Liquor sanguinis.

Hæmatoplas'tic, (hæmato, and πλασσω, 'I form,') Blood-formative. Applied to a substance in early foetal life, hæmatoplas'tic substance, which breaks up gradually into blood-corpuscles, before the formation of bloodvessels.

Hæmatopletho'ra, Plethora.

Hæmatopœ'a, (hæmato, and ποιεω, 'I make,') Hæmatopœtica.

Hæmatopœ'sis, Hæmatosis.

Hæmatopoët'ica, (ἀμαρτοποιητικά,) Hæmatopœ'a, Hæmatogenet'ica, 'bloodmakers.' Agents that favor hæmatosis. Iron was called by the ancients metal'lum hæmatopoet'icum.

Hæmatopœie'sis, Hæmatosis.

Hæmatopor'ia, Hæmaporia.

Hæ'matops, gen. Hæmato'pis, (hæmato, and ωψ, 'the eye,') Hæmophthalmia.

Hæmatop'sia, Hæmophthalmia.

Hæmatoptys'ia, Hæmoptysis.

Hæmatop'tysis, Hæmoptysis.

Hæmatorrhachis, gen. Hæmatorrhach'idis, (hæmato, and ράχis, 'the spine,') Apoplexia myel'itica.

Hæmatorrha'gia, Hæmorrhagia.

Hæmatorrhœ'a, (hæmato, and ῥεω, 'I flow,') Hæmorrhagia.

Hæmatorrho'sis, (hæmato, and ορός, 'serum,') Cholera.

Hæmator'rhyis, (hæmato, and ῥεω, 'I flow,') Hæmorrhagia.

Hæmatoscheoc'e'lē, Hæmoscheoc'e'lē, Hæmatu's-cheum, (hæmato, σχέον, 'scrotum,') and κηλη, 'tumor,') Effusion of blood into the scrotum.

Hæmatos'cheum, (hæmato, and σχέον, 'scrotum,') Hæmatoscheoc'ele.

Hæmatoscop'ia, Hæmoscop'ia, (F.) Hémorrhoscopie, (hæmato, and σκοπω, 'I view,') An examination of blood drawn.

Hæmatosep'sis, (hæmato, and σηψis, 'putrefaction,') Hæmateclysis.

Hæ'matosin, (from hæma,) Hæmatin.

Hæmato'sis, (ἀμαρωσις, from hæmato, and osis,) Exæmato'sis, Enhæmato'sis, Hæmatopœie'sis, Hæmatopœie'sis, Hæmatogen'esis, Procreatio san'guinis, Decarboniza'tion or Atmospheriza'tion of the blood, Sanguifica'tion. The transformation of the venous blood and chyle into arterial blood by respiration. Called, also, Aëra'tion, and Arterializa'tion of the blood. Formation of blood in general.

Hæmatospil'ia, (hæmato, and σπιλος, 'a spot,') Purpura hæmorrhagica.

Hæmatospon'gus, (hæmato, and σπογγος, 'a sponge, a fungus,') Hæmatodes fungus.

Hæmatostat'ica, (hæmato, and στατικη, 'static,') Ischæ'mia, Hæmastat'ica, Hæmatostat'ics, Hæmostat'ics, Hæmatostat'ics, Hæmostat'ics, Enæ'ma, (F.) Hématostatiques, Hémostatiques, Hémostatiques. The doctrine of the motion of the blood in living bodies. Also, remedies for stopping blood. Styptics; (from hæmato, and στατικός, 'restraining,') Hæmatos'teon, (hæmato, and οστέον, 'a bone,') Effusion of blood into the bones or joints.

Hæmatosymphore'sis, (hæmato, and συμφορησις, 'an accumulation,') Congestion.

Hæmatosynago'gē, (hæmato, and συναγωγή, 'a collection,') Congestion.

Hæmatotelangio'sis, (hæmato, τελος, 'end,') αγγειων, 'a vessel, and osis,) Telangiectasia.

Hæmatotho'rax, gen. Hæmatothora'cis, Hæmatotho'rax, Hæmotho'rax, Hæmop'tysis inter'na, Pleurorrhag'a sanguin'ea, Pleurorrhag'ia, Pneumorrhag'ia inter'na, Hæmorrhag'ic Pleu'risy, Pleural hæmorrhage, (from hæmato, and θώραξ, 'the chest.') Extravasation of blood into the chest.

Hæmatotox'ic, Toxæmic.

Hæmatox'ic, Toxæmic.

Hæmatox'ylon, H. Campechianum.

HÆMATOXYLON CAMPECHIANUM, (hæmato, and ξύλον, 'wood,') Aca'cia Zeylon'ica, Log'wood. The part of the tree used in medicine is the wood, Hæmatox'yl'ig'num, Lignum Campechen'se seu Campechia'num seu Campeca'num seu Indicum seu Sappan seu Brasilia'num ru'brum seu cæru'leum, Hæmatox'ylum, Hæmatox'ylon (Ph. U. S.), (F.) Bois de Campêche. Family, Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Decandria Monogynia. Logwood is almost inodorous; of a sweetish, subastringent taste, and deep red color. Its virtues are extracted both by water and alcohol. It is astringent and tonic, and is used in the protracted stages of diarrhoea and dysentery.

Hæmatozo'a, pl. of Hæmatozo'on, (F.) Hématozoaires, (hæmato, and ζῶον, 'animal,') (F.) Vers sanguins. Entozoa in the blood.

Hæmatur'e'sis, Hæmaturia.

Hæmatur'ia, Hæmatur'e'sis, (hæmato, and ουρῶν, 'I make urine,') Voiding of blood by urine. Hæmorrhag'ia hæmatu'ria, H. ex vi'is urinariis, Hæmure'sis, Hæmu'ria, Mictio Cruen'ta seu Sanguin'ea, Mictus Cruen'tus seu Sanguin'eus, Hæmorrhæ'a via'rum urinaria'rum, San'guis in Uri'na, Blood'y u'rine, (F.) Pissement de Sang, Hæmaturie, Hémurésie. Hemorrhage from the mucous membrane of the urinary passages. Like other hemorrhages, it may be active or passive. It may proceed from the kidneys, Nephæmorrhag'ia, Hæmatu'ria ren'al'is; bladder, Hæmatu'ria vesica'lis; or urethra. The essential symptoms are:—blood, evacuated by the urethra; preceded by pain in the region of the bladder or kidneys, and accompanied by faintness. Whencesoever it proceeds, hæmaturia is usually ascribed to exhalation; rupture of vessels not being thought common in the mucous membranes. Active hæmaturia requires general or local blood-letting; diluent and cooling drinks; absolute rest; and the horizontal posture. The chronic kind is more troublesome. It requires acidulated or aluminous drinks; chalybeates and tonics in general. When hæmaturia is excessive, cold injections may be thrown into the rectum or into the vagina of women, and topical applications be made to the perinæum.

HÆMATURIA CYS'TICA, Cystorrhagia—h. Ejaculatoria, Spermatozystidorrhagia—h. Renalis, see Hæmaturia—h. Seminalis, Spermatozystidorrhagia—h. Stillatitia, Urethorrhagia—h. Vesicalis, Cystorrhagia.

Hæmax'is, (ἀμάσσω, 'I let blood,') Blood-letting.

Hæmenceph'alus, (hæma, and ἐνκεφαλος, 'enkephalon,') Apoplexy.

Hæmendocar'dium, (F.) Hémendocarde, (hæma, and endocardium.) Inflammation of the lining membrane of the heart.

Hæmer'ythrum, (hæma, and ερυθρος, 'red,') Hæmatin.

Hæ'mic, He'mic, Hæ'micus, (from hæma.) Relating or appertaining to blood; as a hæmic disease, hæmic murmur, &c.

Hæmidro'sis, (hæma, and ἰδρώς, 'sweating,') see Diapedesis.

Hæ'min. Crystals produced artificially from hæmatin; important only as a test for blood-stains. See Hæmatoïdin.

Hæmis'chesis, Hæmatischesis.

Hæmi'tis, gen. Hæmi'tidis, Hæmi'tis, (hæma, and itis.) Inflammation of the blood, (F.) Hémile. The alteration of the blood that occurs in inflammatory diseases (Piorry). Inflammatory blood, Phlogæ'mia.

Hæmoārthri'tis, Rheumatism (acute).

Hæmocardiorrhag'ia, Hæmocar'dium, Apoplex'ia cor'dis, Ap'oplexy of the heart, (F.) Hémorrhagie ou Apoplexie du Cœur, Hémocarde, (hæma, καρδία, 'the heart,' and ῥήγνυμι, 'I break forth,') Effusion of blood into the substance of the heart.

Hæmocar'dium, (hæma, and καρδία, 'heart,') Hæmocardiorrhagia.

Hæmocerch'nos. This term has received two acceptations, owing to the different senses in which κέρχης is employed; signifying, sometimes, hissing; at others, dry. Consequently, the Hellenists have translated the compound word, at times, by spitting of blood, with hissing in the throat; at others, by evacuation of dry matters.

Hæmocryph'ia, (hæma, and κρυπτεν, 'to conceal,') Hæmatischesis.

Hæmo'des, (ἄμωδης, from hæma, and odes.) Sanguine.

Hæmo'dia, Hæmodias'mus, Hemo'dia, Hebetudo seu Stu'por Den'tium, (ἄμωδω,—from hæma, 'blood,' and ὀδὸς, 'tooth,'—'I have pain in the teeth,') Great sensibility of the teeth, and especially Agacement or the setting on edge of those bodies by acid or acerb substances. It is also called Odon'tia Stupo'ris, Odontalg'ia hæmo'dia, Do'lor den'tium à strido'rē, Cataplex'is, Odontamblyog'mus, Odonthyperæsthe'sis, Tooth'edge.

Hæmodias'mus, Hæmodia.

Hæmodromom'eter, Hæmadromom'eter, (hæma, δρομος, 'course,' and μετρον, 'a measure,') An instrument for measuring the rate of the blood's movement. It consists of a glass tube 52 inches long, containing water, bent into the form of a hairpin, which is substituted for a segment of the bloodvessel, the velocity of the blood in which it is required to measure. The column of blood, which comes from the heart, pushes the column of water before it, and thus enables the velocity of the blood to be estimated.

Hæmodynam'ics, Hæmatodynam'ics, (hæma, and dynamics.) That part of science which treats of the motion of the blood.

Hæmodynamom'eter, Hæmadynamometer.

Hæmodyscra'sia, Hæmatonosus.

Hæmogas'tric, Hæmagastrie.

Hæmoglo'bin, (hæma, and globus,) see Globules, red, of the blood.

Hæmoglob'ulin, see Globules, red, of the blood.

Hæmoï'des, (hæma, and αἶς, 'resemblance,') Sanguine.

Hæmom'eter, Hæmadynamometer.

Hæmome'tra, (hæma, and μήτρα, 'uterus,') A collection of menstrual blood behind an abnormally contracted os uteri, which impedes its discharge.

Hæmometrecta'sia, (hæma, μήτρα, 'uterus,' and εκτασις, 'dilatation,') Dilatation of the womb from blood.

Hæmopathi'a, (hæma, and πάθος, 'affection,') Hæmatonosus.

Hæmopericar'dium, Pericardi'tis exsudato'ria, (F.) Hémopéricarde, (hæmo, and pericardium.) Effusion of blood into the pericardium.

Hæmoperitonæ'um, (hæmo, and περιτοναϊον, 'peritoneum,') Effusion of blood into the peritoneum.

Hæmopex'ia, (G.) Hæmopexien, (hæmo, and πηξις, 'coagulation,') An order of diseases in which there is increased coagulability of the blood.—Hyperino'sis san'guinis, of Fuchs.

Hæmophe'um, Hæmaphein.

Hæmophil'ia, Hæmatophilia.

Hæmophob'ia, Hæmatophobia.

Hæmoph'oboi, see Hæmatophobia.

Hæmophthal'mia, Hæmatophthal'mia, Hæmatop'sia, (hæma, and ὀφθαλμος, 'eye,') Hæmalop'ia, Hæmalop'is, Hæmalops, Hyper'mia seu Apoplex'ia oc'uli, (F.) Hémophthalmie. Effusion of blood into the eye. When the extravasation is external, it is called Hæmophthal'mia exter'na, Hypophag'ma and Hæmalops externus; when internal, Hæmophthal'mia inter'na, Hydrophthal'mus cruentus, Hypoch'ysis hæmato'des, Hæmatom'ma, and Hæmalops inter'nus. A bloodshot eye.

Hæmopla'nia, Hæmatopla'nia — h. Menstrualis, Menstruation, vicarious.

Hæmopletho'ra, Plethora.

Hæmoproc'tia, (hæma, and πρωκτος, 'anus,') Hæmorrhoids.

Hæmop'toë, Hæmoptysis — h. Laryngea et trachealis, Tracheorrhagia.

Hæmop'toio, Hæmopto'icus, (F.) Hæmoptoïque, Hæmoptique, Hæmoptysique. Relating or appertaining to hæmoptysis. One affected with hæmoptysis.

Hæmopto'sis, Hæmoptysis.

Hæmop'tysis, (hæmo, and πρω, 'I spit,') Hæmorrhag'ia, Hæmop'tysis, Hæmap'tysis, Hæmatop'tysis, Hæmop'toë, Emp'toë, Emp'to'ica pas'sio, Hæmoptys'mus, Hæmopto'sis, Sputum san'guinis seu cruentum, San'guinis flu'or pulmo'num, Emopto'ica pas'sio, Hæmorrhag'ia pulmonalis, Cruent'ia expu'tio, Hæmorrhag'ia pulmo'nis seu bron'chica, Pas'sio hæmopto'ica seu emopto'ica, Rejec'tio san'guinis è pulmo'nibus, Expectoratio san'guinis, Pneumorrhag'ia, Pneumorrhag'ia, Pneumonorrhag'ia, Bronchorrhag'ia, Emp'tysis, Hæmop'toë, Spit'ting of blood, (F.) Hæmoptysie, Crachement de sang, Expectoration de sang, Angiair'hémie, Angiairrhagie, Hæmoangiairrhagie, of Piorry. Hemorrhage from the mucous membrane of the lungs; characterized by the expectoration of more or less florid and frothy blood. It is generally preceded by cough, dyspnoea, sense of heat in the chest, &c. It is important to discriminate between hæmoptysis produced by some accidental cause acting irregularly or periodically on the lungs; and that which is, as it were, constitutional, and dependent on organic affection of the lungs or heart, or some faulty conformation of the chest. These two varieties differ as much in their prognosis and method of treatment as in their causes. Constitutional hæmoptysis is a serious disease, almost always announcing phthisis pulmonalis. The accidental variety is chiefly dangerous by frequent recurrence, and consequent great loss of blood.

The general causes of hæmoptysis are the same as those of other kinds of hemorrhage. It has, besides, particular causes; such as too great exercise of the lungs, loud speaking, playing on wind instruments, breathing acrid vapors, &c. It usually occurs between puberty and the age of 35. A sudden and terrific kind of hæmoptysis is sometimes met with; consisting in a great afflux of blood to the lungs. This has been called Pul'monary Apoplexy or Extravasa'tion, Apoplex'ia pulmo'alis seu pulmo'num, Hæmorrhag'ia pulmo'alis, Pneumorrhag'ia, Infarc'tus hæmorrhag'icus pulmo'num, I. hæmopto'icus Laënnec'ii, (F.) Apoplexie pulmonaire, Hæmoptysie foudroyante, Hæmorrhagie interstitielle du Poumon. Infiltration of blood into the air-cells may occur without any spitting of blood. Any extravasation of blood into the tissue of the lungs has been termed by M. Hendrin pneumohæmorrhagie.

Physical signs. Percussion may not always aid us in hæmoptysis, but generally a circumscribed dulness will be perceived. The inspiratory murmur, on auscultation, is feeble or absent, locally; and is replaced by bronchial respiration and bronchoph'ony. A fine liquid crepitus is detected around the affected part; and in the larger tubes, near the spine, a liquid bubbling rhonchus is usually heard. The value of these signs is determined by the nature of the expectoration. The treatment of hæmoptysis must be like that of internal hemorrhage in general.

Hæmop'tysis Inter'na, Hæmatothorax — h. Laryngea et trachealis, Tracheorrhagia — h. Phthisis, Phthisis pulmonalis.

Hæmoptys'mus, Hæmoptysis.

Hæmorme'sis, (hæma, and ορμαω, 'I drive on,') Congestion, Hyperæmia.

Hæmor'rachis, gen. Hæmorrhach'idis, (hæma, and ραχis, 'the spine,') Apoplexia myelitica.

Hæmor'rha'ge, Hæmorrhagia.

Hæmorrhag'ia, (hæma, and ρηννυμι, 'I break forth,') San'guinis proflu'vium copio'sum, San'guiflux'us, Hæmatoch'ysis, Aimorrhæ'a, Hæmorrhæ'a, Hæmatorrhag'ia, Hæmatis'mus, Hæmatorrhæ'a, Hæmatorrhysis, Hæmor'rhy'sis, Proflu'vium seu Prorup'tio seu Erup'tio seu Profu'sio san'guinis, Hæmor'rha'ge, Hæmorrhage, Bleeding, Loss of blood, Rup'turing, bursting, or breaking of a bloodvessel, (Prov.) Floating, (F.) Hæmorrhagie ou Hémorrhagie, Perte de sang, Flux de sang. Any discharge of blood from vessels destined to contain it; with or without rupture of their coats. Hemorrhages may be spontaneous or traumatic: the first belong to the domain of medicine, the latter to that of surgery. They may, also, be internal or external; general — as in scurvy — or local. The hemorrhages by exhalation — those which chiefly interest the physician — have been classed, by Pinel, as follows: — 1. Hæmorrhage of the Mucous Membranes; Epistaxis, Hæmoptysis, Hæmatemesis, Hæmorrhoids, Hæmaturia, Uterine Hemorrhage. 2. Hæmorrhage of the Tissues; Cutaneous, Cellular, Serous, Synovial.

Hæmorrhages have generally been distinguished into active and passive: in other words, into those dependent upon augmentation of the organic actions, and those dependent upon debility. According to Broussais, no spontaneous hemorrhage is passive; all are active — that is, produced by increased action and excess of irritation of the bloodvessels: they may occur with debility, but not from debility. He calls those only passive hemorrhages, which are owing to an external lesion of the vessels. Hemorrhages have been, by some, divided into constitutional, or those depending on original conformation; accidental, or those produced by some adventitious cause; supplementary, or those which succeed others; symptomatic, critical, &c. A secondary hemorrhage is one that occurs some time after wounds or operations.

When hemorrhage takes place into any tissue, or is interstitial, it receives the name, with many, of apoplexy.

Active Hemorrhage, Hæmorrhag'ia act'iva seu arterio'sa, Caum'a hæmorrhag'icum, Angiorrhag'ia, occurs chiefly in the young and plethoric. Good living; the use of fermented liquor, excessive exercise, or too sedentary a life, may, perhaps, be ranked as predisponent causes. It is commonly preceded by heaviness and pulsation in the part, — owing to the afflux of blood and consequent hyperæmia, — and by coldness of the extremities. The blood, evacuated, is generally of a florid red. In such active hemorrhages, the great indications of treatment will be, to diminish plethora where it exists, and to lessen the heart's action. Bleeding, purgatives, and cold, with dry diet, will be the chief agents.

Passive Hemorrhage, Hæmorrhag'ia pass'iva seu veno'sa, Profu'sio, P. hæmorrhag'ica, occurs in those of weak constitution; or who have been debilitated by protracted disease, poor diet, long watching, excessive evacuations, &c.

The direct causes may be: previous active hemorrhage; scorbutus, or anything capable of inducing atony or asthenic hyperæmia of the small vessels. These hemorrhages are not preceded by excitement or by any signs of local determination. They are usually accompanied by paleness of the countenance, feeble pulse, fainting, &c. The indications of treatment will be:—to restore the action of the small vessels and the general tone of the system; hence the utility of styptics and cold externally; and of tonics and astringents, creasote, mineral acids, &c., internally. Hemorrhage also occurs from mechanical hyperæmia, as when hæmoptysis is produced by tubercles in the lungs; apoplexy by softening of the encephalic neurine; hæmatemesis by disease of some of the solid viscera of the abdomen, &c.

In Traumatic Hemorrhages, or those which are the consequences of wounds of arterial or venous trunks, the blood is of a florid red color, and issues by jets and pulses, if it proceed from an artery: while it is of a deeper red, issues slowly and by a continuous flow, if from a vein. If the capillary vessels be alone divided, the blood is merely effused at the surface of the wound. Of the means used for arresting these traumatic hemorrhages, some act mechanically, as absorbents, ligature, and compression; others chemically, as fire, caustic, creasote, astringents, &c.

Hæmorrhoid'al, Hæmorrhoid'al, Hæmorrhoid'al'is, Hæmorrhoid'us. Relating to hemorrhoids; as hæmorrhoidal flux, hæmorrhoidal tumors, &c.

HÆMORRHOID'AL ARTERIES have been distinguished into superior, middle, and inferior. The first is the termination of the inferior mesenteric artery, which assumes the name superior hæmorrhoid'al, when it reaches the upper and posterior part of the rectum. The middle hæmorrhoid'al is furnished by the hypogastric or internal pudic. It ramifies on the inferior and anterior part of the rectum. The inferior hæmorrhoid'al arteries are branches of the internal pudic, furnished to the inferior part of the rectum and the anal muscles.

HÆMORRHOID'AL NERVES. These emanate from the sciatic and hypogastric plexuses; and cover the rectum with their numerous filaments.

HÆMORRHOID'AL TUMORS. See Hemorrhoids.

HÆMORRHOID'AL VEINS follow the same distribution as the arteries, and generally empty themselves into the lesser mesenteric. Some of them assist in the formation of the hypogastric vein.

HÆMORRHOID'AL VESSELS, Va'sa sœdalia, are those vessels which are distributed to the rectum—the seat of hemorrhoids.

Hæmor'rhois, gen. Hæmorrhoidis, Aimor'rhois, Asclepias'mus, (hæmo, and ρω, 'I flow,') Aimor'rhois, Proct'ica Maris'ca, Maris'ca, Proct'al'gia Hæmorrhoida'lis, Mor'bus Hæmorrhoida'lis, Hemorrhoids, Hæmorrhoids, Piles, Em'erois, Em'erois, Em'eraudes, (F.) Hémorrhôides. The essential symptoms of this affection are:—Livid and painful tubercles or excrescences (Hæmorrhoid'al tu'mors), usually attended with a discharge of mucus or blood, Hæmorrhoidal flux, Hæmorrhag'ia proct'ica, Proctor'rhois, Hæmoproct'ia, Hæmor'rho'a vasorum hæmorrhoida'lium, (F.) Hémoproctie, Hémoproctie. The most common causes of piles are a sedentary life; accumulation of feces in the rectum; violent efforts at stool; pregnancy, &c. The precursory symptoms are: pains in the loins; stupor of the lower limbs; and uneasiness in the abdomen and rectum, with more or less gastric, cerebral, and indeed general disorder;—constituting the Diathesis Hæmorrhoida'lis, Mo'tus seu Tur'ba Hæmorrhoida'lis, and Mol'imen Hæmorrhoida'le, of most of the writers of Continental Europe. To these symptoms follow one or more round, smooth, renitent, painful, pulsating, and erectile tumors, around the margin of the anus, or within the anus; some pouring out blood occasionally. After having remained, for a time, tense and painful, they gradually shrink and disappear. The chief symptoms, occasioned by hæmorrhoidal tumors, when much inflamed, are:—constant pain, liable, however, to exacerbations, and to become augmented by the least pressure, or by the passage of the feces, and obliging the patient to preserve the horizontal posture.

Hæmorrhoids have generally been distinguished into—Hæmorrhoides Fluentes seu Mariscae, Proct'ica Maris'ca cruen'ta, Bleeding or Open Piles; and into H. non fluentes, Proct'ica Maris'ca cæ'ca, Hæmorrhoides cæ'cæ seu furentes, Hæmorrhoida'les no'di, Shut or blind piles. They have, also, been divided into internal or occult, and external, according to their situation; and into accidental or constitutional.

Hæmorrhoidal Tumors are extremely troublesome, by their disposition to frequent recurrence; and they are apt to induce fistula; otherwise, they are devoid of danger. When anatomically examined, they are found not to consist in a varicose dilatation of the veins of the rectum, but to be formed of a very close, spongy texture, similar to that which surrounds the orifice of the vagina, and to be erectile, like it. They are surrounded by a delicate membrane, and have no internal cavity. The treatment, in mild cases of hæmorrhoidal tumors, is simple. Rest; the horizontal posture; the use of mild laxatives, as sulphur, castor oil, and emollient glysters, will be sufficient. If they be much inflamed, leeches may be applied; and warm cataplasms or cold lotions, according to circumstances, be prescribed, with abstinence, and cooling drinks. Afterwards, an ointment, composed of powdered galls and opium, may afford relief. It is in the relaxed kind, that such ointment, with proper attention to diet, &c., can alone be expected to afford much benefit. If, after repeated attacks, the tumors remain hard and painful, and threaten fistula, they may be removed.

By Hæmorrhoid'al Flux, Flux'us hæmorrhoid'al'is, Proctorrhag'ia, is meant the hæmorrhage which takes place from the rectum, owing to hæmorrhoids. It is a common affection. The quantity of blood discharged is various; at times, it is very trifling; at others, sufficient to induce great debility, and even death. It is announced and accompanied by the same symptoms as precede and attend hæmorrhoidal tumors. Like other hæmorrhages, it may be active or passive, accidental or constitutional. The prognosis is rarely unfavorable. The affection may, almost always, be relieved by properly adapted means. These resemble such as are necessary in hæmorrhages in general. Perfect quietude, mental and corporeal; light diet; cooling drinks; bleeding, if the symptoms indicate it; astringents, if the disease be protracted and passive, such as the Tinctura Ferri Chloridi; aspersions of cold water on the anus; astringent injections; plugging, and compression. Such will be the principal remedial agents. When the hæmorrhage has become habitual, or is vicarious, some caution may be required in checking it; and, if inconvenience arise from a sudden suppression, its return may be solicited by the semicupium, sitting over warm water, aloetic purgatives, glysters, irritating suppositories, &c.; or leeches may be applied to the anus.

To the internal bleeding pile, a soft, red, strawberry-like elevation of the mucous membrane, Dr. Houston, of Dublin, gave the name vascular tumor. For its removal he recommends the application of nitric acid, so as to produce sloughing of its surface.

Some authors have described a species of Leucorrhœa Anal'is, or whitish discharge from the anus, which often attends ordinary hæmorrhoids. This they have called Proctica maris'ca mucosa, Hæmorrhœis alb'a, Hæmorrhag'ia mucosa, Leucorrhœis. It requires no special mention.

The term Hæmorrhoid is applied at times to varicose veins developed elsewhere, as at the orifice of the uterus, Uterine Hæmorrhoid, or to Vascular Tumor of the Ure'thra. See Metæmorrhœides and Urethra.

HÆMORRHOIS CRUEN'TA, see Hæmorrhœis—h. ab Exaniâ, Proctocœle—h. Procedens, Proctocœle.

Hæmorrhœis'chæsis, (hæmorrhœis, ῥέω, 'I flow,' and ἔχω, 'I restrain,') Reten'tio fluxus hæmorrhœid'al'is. Suppression or retention of the hæmorrhoidal flux.

Hæmorrhophe'sis, Absorp'tiosan'guinis, (hæma, and ῥέω, 'I sip up,') Absorption of blood.

Hæmorrhophil'ia, (hæma, ῥέω, 'I flow,' and φίλω, 'I love,') Hæmatophilia.

Hæmorrhoscop'ia, (hæma, ῥέω, 'I flow,' and σκοπέω, 'I examine,') Hæmatoscopy.

Hæmor'rhis, Hæmorrhagia.

Hæmoscheocel'e, Hæmatoscheocœle.

Hæmoscop'ia, Hæmatoscopy.

Hæmospa'sia, see Hæmospastic.

Hæmospas'tic, (F.) Hæmospastique, (hæma, and σπᾶω, 'I draw,') An agent which draws or attracts blood to a part; as a cupping-glass. The operation is termed Hæmospa'sia, (F.) Hæmospasie. It is generally applied to a process by which the air is exhausted over a considerable surface, as over one or more of the extremities, by an appropriate pneumatic apparatus.

Hæmosta'sia, Hæmostasis, Epid'esis, San'guinis stagna'tio, (F.) Hæmostasie, (hæma, and στασις, 'stagnation,') Stagnation of blood. This name has also been given to any operation, the object of which is to arrest the flow of blood, as by compression or ligation of the great vessels, (F.) Peristric'tion.

Hæmostat'ic, Paglia'ri's, Pagliari's Styp'tic, A'qua Paglia'rii, (F.) Eau de Pagliari. A styptic liquor, said to be of great power, discovered by M. Pagliari, a pharmacien at Rome. It is composed as follows:—Eight ounces of tincture of benzoin, one pound of alum, and ten pounds of water, are boiled together for six hours in a glazed earthen vessel, the vaporized water being constantly replaced by hot water, so as not to interrupt the ebullition, and the resinous mass being kept stirred round. The fluid is then filtered, and kept in stoppered bottles. A drop of the fluid, poured into a glass containing human blood, produces an instantaneous magma.

Hæmostat'ics, Hæmatostatica.

Hæmotachom'etry, Hæmotachomet'ria, (hæma, ταχος, 'swiftness,' and μετροω, 'I measure,') The measurement of the velocity of the blood. An instrument, devised for this purpose by Vierordt, is called by him Hæmotachom'eter, Hæmatachom'eter. It was modified by Chauveau under the name Tachom'eter.

Hæmotelangio'sis, Telangiectasia.

Hæmotex'ia, Hæmateclysis.

Hæmotex'is, (hæmo, and της, 'solution,') Hæmateclysis.

Hæmotho'rax, gen. Hæmothora'cis, Hæmothorax.

Hæmotox'ic, Toxæmic.

Hæmotrophy or Hæmot'rophy, Hæmotroph'ia, (hæma, and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Excess of sanguineous nourishment.

Hæmo'tus, (hæma, and οὖς, gen. ωτος, 'the ear,') Effusion of blood into the ear.

Hæmure'sis, Hæmaturia.

Hæmu'ria, Hæmaturia.

Hæmydor, (hæma, and ὕδωρ, 'water,') Serum of the blood.

Hæmyd'ria, Hydroæmia.

Hæredita'rius, (hæres, gen. hære'dis, 'an heir,') Hereditary.

Hæsita'tio, (hæsitare, hæsitatum, 'to stick fast,') Balbuties.

Hæ'vea Guianen'sis, see Caoutchouc.

Hag (Prov.), Abdomen.

Hagard, Haggard.

Hag'berry, Prunus padus.

Hage'nia (after Prof. K. G. Hagen, of Königsberg) Abyssin'ica, Braye'ra anthelmin'tica, Bank'sia seu Banck'sia Abyssin'ica. An Abyssinian tree; Ord. Rosaceæ; Sex. Syst. Icosandria Digynia, which the natives plant round their habitations as an ornament. The infusion or decoction of its flowers, Flores cosso, is employed by them as an anthelmintic, especially in cases of tapeworm. It is called there Cus'so or Cous'so, Kos'so, Kous'so, Koo'so, Kus'so, Koo'so, Cotz, Cabotz, and Habbi.

The flowers and unripe fruit—Brayera, Koosso—are officinal in the Pharmacopœia of the United States. An active resinous principle has been obtained from the flowers, to which the names Tenine or Tenine and Koussin or Koussine have been given. The dose of this, as an anthelmintic, is from gr. xx. to xl.

Hag'gard, ([G.] hagard, 'lean,') (F.) Hagard. The French use the term Air hagard, Œil hagard, 'Haggard air,' 'Haggard eye,' for a physiognomy in which there is at once an expression of madness and terror.

Hagiosper'mum, (ἅγιος, 'holy,' and σπέρμα, 'seed,') Artemisia santonica.

Hagioxy'ylum, (ἅγιος, 'holy,' and ξύλον, 'wood,') Guaiacum.

Hahn'emannism, (after Dr. S. C. F. Hahnemann, the founder,) Homœopathy.

Hail, (Sax. hægel,) Chalaza.

Hair, (Sax. hæp,) Cri'nis, Pi'lus, Thrix, Pile, (F.) Poil. A conical, corneous substance, the free portion or shaft, scapus, of which issues to a greater or less distance from the skin, to the tissue of which it adheres by a bulb or button, bulbus pi'li, seated in a hair follicle—folliculus pili — made by an inversion of the integument, the epidermis of which forms a 'root-sheath,' vagi'na pili. At the base of the hair follicle there is a small papilla, well supplied with bloodvessels and nerves, Papil'la pili; at times called, but improperly, Pul'pa seu Blaste'ma pili. The hair receives various names in different parts; as Beard, Cilia, Eye'brows, Hair of the head (Capilli), &c. See Capillus.

HAIR, FAL'LING OFF OF THE, Alopecia.

HAIR LI'CHEN, Lichen pilaris.

HAIR, MAT'TED, Plica — h. Papilla, Matrix pili — h. Plaited, Plica — h. Trichomatose, Plica.

Hair'dye, Twiggs's. A preparation much used to give color to the hair. It may be formed of precipitated sulphur and acetate of lead, each 3j., rose water, f3iv., triturated together in a mortar. It should be applied twice a day until the desired effect is produced.

Hairfol'licle, see Hair.

Hair'worm, Seta equina, see Ectozoa — h. Worm, muscular, Dracunculus.

Hair'y, Pileous. Also, covered with hair.

Hake, see Oleum jecoris aselli.

Hal, (ἅλς, ἅλος;) Salt.

Hala'tion, Halat'ium, (dim. of Hal.) A pungent remedy with the ancients, which contained salts.

Halchemi'a. The alchemists so called the art of fusing salts, (hal, and χέω, 'I pour out.')

Hal'cyon, gen. Halcyon'is, (ἁλκυων;) Alcyon.

Halcyo'nium Rotun'dum, (ἁλκυονειον;) Pila marina.

Haleine, (from halare, 'to emit a vapor,') Breath — h. Courte, Dyspnoea.

Halelae'on, Halelae'um, (hal, and λαιον, 'oil,') Oleum Sale mixtum. A mixture of oil and salt, for removing swellings of the joints.

Hal'eteration, see Alteration.

Halfbreed, see Halfcaste.

Half'caste, Halfcast, see Caste. A term applied in India to the offspring of a Hindoo and a European; since extended to the offspring of mixed races. The subjoined list from Tschudi shows the parentage of the different varieties of halfcastes, and also the proper designations of the latter, as observed in South America:

PARENTS.	CHILDREN.
White Father and Negro Mother...	Mulatto.
White Father and Indian Mother...	Meztizo.
Indian Father and Negro Mother...	Chino.
White Father and Mulatta Mother...	Quartern.
	Creole, (only distinguished from the white by a pale brownish complexion.)
White Father and Meztiza Mother...	Chino-blanco.
White Father and China Mother....	Quintero.
White Father and Quartern Mother...	White.
Negro Father and Mulatta Mother...	Zambo-negro.
Negro Father and Meztiza Mother...	Mulatto-oscuro.
Negro Father and China Mother....	Zambo-chino.
Negro Father and Zamba Mother...	Zambo-negro, (perfectly black.)
Negro Father and Quartern Mother...	Mulatto, (rather dark.)
Negro Father and Quinter Mother...	Chino-oscuro.
Indian Father and Mulatta Mother...	Meztizo-claro, (frequently very beautiful.)
Indian Father and Meztiza Mother...	Chino-cholo.
Indian Father and China Mother...	Zambo-claro.
Indian Father and Zamba Mother...	Indian, (with rather short frizzy hair.)
Indian Father with China-chola Mother...	Meztizo, (rather brown.)
Indian Father and Quartern Mother...	Zambo, (a miserable race.)
Mulatto Father and Zamba Mother...	Chino, (of rather clear complexion.)
Mulatto Father and Meztiza Mother...	Chino, (rather dark.)
Mulatto Father and China Mother...

For the designation of different admixtures in the United States, see Mulatto.

The term halfbreed is applied to the offspring of different races of men when crossing. See Hybrid, and Mulatto.

Hal'ica, Alica.

Halicac'abum, (ἅλς, 'the sea,' and κακαβος, 'nightshade,') Physalis.

Hal'ices, Penticulation.

Hal'idrys Vesiculo'sa, (ἅλς, 'the sea,' and δρυς, 'the oak,') Fucus vesiculosus.

Halina'trum, Halini'trum, Haloni'trum, (ἅλς, 'salt,' and natrum or natron.) A name given by the ancients to subcarbonate of soda containing a little subcarbonate of ammonia, which is found, ready-formed, on the plaster of damp walls, in places inhabited by man or animals. Also, Potassæ nitras.

Halini'trum, see Halinatrum.

Hali'nus, (ἅλιος, from ἅλς, 'salt,') Saline.

Hal'ituosus or Halit'uosus, Halituo'sus, (halitus, 'vapor,') (F.) Halitueux. The skin is said to be halitueuse (F.), when covered with a gentle moisture. The vapor, exhaled in all the cavities of the body, so long as the blood is warm, is called Hal'itus. The odorous vapor, exhaled by the blood itself while warm, is called Hal'itus Sanguinis.

Hal'itus, gen. Hal'itus, ('vapor,') Breath, see Halituous — h. Oris foetidus, Breath, offensive — h. Sanguinis, Gas sanguinis. See Halituous.

Hall, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The springs of Hall, in Upper Austria, contain iodine.

Hal'lex, gen. Hal'lexis, (from ἅλλομαι, 'to leap,') Pollex. See Digitus.

Hall's (Dr. Marshall) Ready Method, see Ready method.

Hallucina'tio, (hallucinari, — or hallucinari, — hallucinatus, 'to be deceived,') Hallucination — h. Hypochondriasis, Hypochondriasis — h. Vertigo, Vertigo.

Hallucina'tion, Hallucina'tio, Halucina'tio, Falla'cia, Illu'sio, I. sen'sus, Socor'dia, Alu'sia, Allucina'tio, Parora'sis, Somnia'tio in statu vig'ili, Ido'lum, Wa'king dream, Phan'tasm. A morbid error, in one or more of the senses. Perception of objects which do not in fact exert any impression on the external senses. Hallucination or delusion almost always, if not always, depends on disorder of the brain, but is not an index of insanity, unless the patient believes in the existence of the subject of the hallucination.

Hal'us, gen. Halli, (from ἅλλομαι, 'to leap,') Pollex or Pollex pedis.

Hal'lux, gen. Hallu'cis, (from ἅλλομαι, 'to leap,') Pollex or Pollex pedis.

Hal'mê, (ἅλμη, 'saltwater,') Muria.

Halmy'rodes, Salsugino'sus, Salsu'ginous, (ἅλμυρος, — ἅλμη, 'seawater,' ἅλς, 'salt,' — 'saltish,' and odes.) An epithet given to an affection in which the heat feels pungent under the finger of the physician.

Hal'myrus, (ἅλμυρος;) Saline.

Ha'lo, gen. Halo'nis, (ἅλως, 'a circle,') Areola.

HA'LO SIGNA'TUS. The impression made by the ciliary processes on the anterior surface of the vitreous humor. So called from its consisting of a circle of indentations. Called by Haller, Striæ ret'inæ subjectæ ligamen'to cilia'ri; by Winslow, Sul'ci cilia'res.

Haloderæ'um, (hal, and δεραιον, 'a collar,' from δέρω, 'neck,') Colla'rium sali'num. A collar of salt applied to the neck, as in cases of croup.

Hal'ogen, (hal, and γενναω, 'I generate,') Chlorine.

Halo'i'dum Oxygena'tum, (hal, and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Potassæ murias hyperoxygenatus.

Haloni'trum, Halinatrum.

Halope'gae, (hal, and πηγη, 'a spring,') Mineral waters whose chief ingredient is common salt — chloride of sodium.

Ha'los, (ἅλως;) Areola.

Halot'yê, Culcita salina, (hal, and τελη, 'a bolster.') A bolster or pillar of salt, recommended in croup.

Hals'bane [Sc.], (Sax. halr, 'the neck,' and ban, 'bone.') Clavicle.

Halse, (Sax. halr), Collum, Throat.

Halte'res, (ἀλτηρες, from ἀλλομαι, 'to leap.') Pieces of lead held in the hands by the ancients, to assist them in leaping.

Halucina'tio, Hallucination.

Halyco'des, (ἀλυκωδης), Saline.

Hal'ysis La'ta, (ἀλυσις, 'a chain,') Bothriocephalus latus — h. Membranacea, Bothriocephalus latus — h. Solium, Tænia solium.

Ham, (Sax. ham), Poples.

Hama'melis Virginia'na, (ἀμα, 'like to,' and μηλις, 'an apple-tree,') H. Virginica seu macrophylla, Witch hazel, Winter witch hazel, Snap-ping ha'zelnut, Winter bloom, Ord. Hamamelaceæ.

The bark of this tree, which is a native of the United States, is somewhat bitter and sensibly astringent; but it has not been much used. A cataplasm of the inner rind of the bark is said to have been found efficacious in painful inflammation of the eyes. It is reputed to possess the same medical action as viburnum prunifolium [!].

Hamarthri'tis, gen. Hamarthritidis, Holarthritidis, Catholarthritidis, Arthritidis universalis, (ἀμα, 'at once,' and arthritidis.) Gout in all the joints. Universal gout.

Hamch (Prov.), Coxofemoral articulation.

Ham'ma, gen. Hamm'atis, (ἀμμα), No'dus, 'a tie.' A knot, used for retaining bandages on any part. A truss.

Ham'mer Pal'sy, Hephæstic Hemiple'gia. A form of paralysis observed in those who wield a single-handed hammer, as file-forgers, hammer-smiths, &c.

HAM'MER, THER'MAL. Corrigan's button cautery has been so called.

Ham'mering (Prov.), Balbuties.

Ham'mertoe. A permanent flexion of the second toe, which forms an angle upwards; so called from its shape.

Hamp'stead, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These waters, situate in the neighborhood of London, are a good chalybeate.

Ham'string, see Hamstrings.

Ham'strings, (F.) Jarretiers. The strings or tendons of the ham.

The HAM'STRING MUS'LES are the biceps femoris, whose tendon forms the outer hamstring; and the semimembranosus, semitendinosus, gracilis and sartorius, whose tendons form the inner hamstring. 'To hamstring' means to cut the strings or tendons of the ham.

Ham'ular Proc'ess, see Hamulus.

Ham'ulus, (dim. of hamus, 'a hook.') A hook or crook; Ancis'tron. Also, any hook-like process; as the hamulus or hamular process of the pterygoid process of the sphenoid bone, which projects from the termination of the internal pterygoid plate.

HAM'ULUS LAM'INÆ SPIRA'LIS, see Lamina spiralis.

Ha'mus, 'a hook,' see Hamulus.

Hanche, Haunch.

Han'cleth (Sc.), Malleolus.

Hand, (Sax. hand, hond), Manus — h. Cholera, see Cholera hand — h. Club, see Kylosis.

HANDS, DROPPED, Hand-drop, Wrist-drop. A popular term for the paralysis of the hand induced by the action of lead.

Hand'woman, Midwife.

Hand'wrist (Prov.), Carpus.

Hang'ers, Crusta genu equinæ.

Hang'nail, ([old Eng.] Ag'nail, [Prov.] Ang'nail, [Sax.] angnægl; from ange, 'troublesome,' and nægl, 'a nail,') Step'mother's bless'ing, Wirt-springs, Nail-spring, Nang-nail, Friend-back, Back-friend, (F.) Envie. A portion of epidermis, detached so as to tear the integument in the vicinity of the finger nails.

Hannebane, ('henbane,') Hyoscyamus.

Hapantis'mus, (from πας, gen. παντος, or άπας, gen. άπαντος, 'all,') Oblitera'tio comple'ta. The matting or growing together of organic parts.

Haph'ê, (ἀφή, 'feeling, touch,') Hence:

Haphon'osi, Haphon'u'si, (haphê, and νοσος, 'disease,') Mor'bi tact'ūs. Diseases of the sense of touch.

Haploac'nê, (άπλος, 'simple,' and acne.) Acne simplex.

Haplopathi'a, (άπλος, 'simple,' and παθος, 'disease,') Mor'bus sim'plex. A simple or uncomplicated affection.

Haplotom'ia, Sim'plex sec'tio, Incis'io simplex, Opera'tio simplex, (άπλος, 'simple,' and τομή, 'incision,') A simple incision.

Hap'sis, (ἀψις), Touch.

Haptody'sphor'ia, Tact'us dolorif'icus; (άπτος, 'touched,' and δυσφορος, 'difficult to be borne,') Painful to the touch.

Hap'togen, Haptogenous.

Haptogène, Haptogenous.

Haptog'enous, Haptog'enus, Hap'togen, (F.) Haptogène, (άπτω, 'I attach,' and γεννᾶω, 'I engender,') Ascherson calls the pellicle, which forms around fatty matter when albumen is brought in contact with it, Haptogen membrane, (F.) Membrane haptogène.

Haptot'ica, Haptot'icê, (άπτω, 'I touch,') The doctrine of the phenomena of touch.

Hard, (Sax. hearpð), Scler'ous, Dur'us, Scler'os, Scler'ousus, (F.) Dur. That which offers much resistance. In anatomy, the hard parts are those which compose the osseous basis of the body; in other words, the skeleton. See Pulse, hard.

Hard's Farina'ceous Food, see Farinaceous.

Hard'ening, Induration.

Harde'sia, Hibernicus lapis.

Hard'hack, Spiræa tomentosa.

Hards, see Falsifications, table of.

Hard'tack. Army and navy bread, baked without salt and kiln-dried.

Hare'lip, Lagochi'lus, Lagos'toma, Lagen'tomum, La'bium Lepori'num, Olopho'nia, La'bia Loba'ta, Lepori'num ros'trum, (Sc.) Hare'shaw, (Prov.) Hay'scale, (F.) Bec de Lièvre. A fissure or perpendicular division of one or both lips. It has been so called, in consequence of the upper lip of the hare being thus divided. Harelip is generally congenital; at other times it is accidental, or produced by a wound, the edges of which have not been brought into contact, and have healed separately. It is simple, when there is but one division; double, when there are two; and complicated, when there is, at the same time, a division or cleft of the superior maxillary bone and of the palate — Cleft, split, or fissured pal'ate, Wolf's jaw, Palat'um fis'sum, Rict'us lupinus; or a projection of the teeth into the separation of the lip.

In the Harelip operation, there are two indications to be fulfilled. First, to pare, with the knife or scissors, the edges of the cleft, and, afterwards, to preserve them in contact, in order to cause adhesion. This last object is accomplished by means of pins, passed through the edges of the division; in other words, by the twisted suture. The projecting teeth must, of course, be previously removed. If there be separation of the palate, it will become less and less after the union of the lip, or the operation of staphylorrhaphy may be performed upon it.

Hare's Ear, Bupleurum rotundifolium — h. Eye, Lagophthalmia.

Hare'shaw (Sc.), Harelip.

Hargne, Hernia — h. Anévrysmale, Cirsomphalus.

Hargneux, see Hernial.

Haricot, Phaseolus vulgaris — h. Grand de Péron, Jatropha curcas.

Harma'lia, (ἀρμαλία,) Aliment.

Harmo'nia, Harmony.

Har'mony, Harmo'nia, Har'mus, (primarily from ἀρμω, 'I adjust.') Anatomists have called Suture by Har'mony, or simply Har'mony, False, or superficial suture, Sutu'ra os'sium spu'ria, Compa'ges os'sium per lin'eam sim'plicem, an immovable articulation, in which the depressions and eminences, presented by the bony surfaces, are but slightly marked; so that it might be presumed that the junction of the bones took place by simple apposition of their surfaces. An instance of harmony occurs in the union of the superior maxillary bones with each other.

Har'mus, (ἀρμος, from ἀρμω, 'I adjust.') Articulation, Harmony.

Harn'pan, ([G.] Hir'n, 'the brain.') Cranium.

Har'rodsburg Springs, see Kentucky, Mineral waters of.

Har'rowgate or Har'rogate, Min'er'al Wa'ters of. The villages of High and Low Harrowgate are situate in the centre of the county of York, near Knaresborough, twenty miles from York, and fifteen from Leeds. Here are several valuable sulphureous and chalybeate springs. The sulphureous springs contain chloride of sodium, chloride of calcium, chloride of magnesium, bicarbonate of soda, sulphohydric acid, carbonic acid, carburetted hydrogen, and azote. The chalybeate springs contain protoxide of iron, chloride of sodium, sulphate of soda, chloride of calcium, chloride of magnesium, carbonic acid, azote, and oxygen. For the former, Harrowgate is celebrated and frequented. The waters seem to be adapted to a great variety of chronic affections.

HAR'ROWGATE SALTS, ARTIFIC'IAL, are much employed, and not unfrequently by those who drink the genuine water, for the purpose of increasing its aperient power. They may be made as follows:—Potass. Sulph. cum Sulph., ℥vj., Potass. bitart., ℥j., Magnes. Sulph. in pulv., ℥vj. M. The usual dose is a teaspoonful, in a small tumblerful of tepid water, early in the morning.

HAR'ROWGATE WA'TER, ARTIFIC'IAL, may be formed of common salt, ℥v., water, Oij., impregnated with the gas from sulphuret of potassa and sulphuric acid, aa ℥iv. The following form has also been recommended. R. Potass. Sulphat. cum sulph. (Ph. Ed.), ℥j., Potass. bitart., ℥ss., Magnes. sulphat., ℥vj., Aque destillat., Oij. One-half to be taken for a dose.

Hart'fell, Min'er'al Wa'ters of. Hartfell Spa is about five miles from Moffat, in Scotland. The water is a chalybeate, and is much used.

Harts'horn, Cervus, Cornu cervi, Liquor cornu cervi — h. and Oil, Linimentum ammoniæ carbonatis — h. Red, Spiritus lavandulæ compositus.

Harts' Tongue, Asplenium scolopendrium.

HARTS' TRUF'LES, Elaphomyces granulatus.

Hart'wort of Marseilles, Seseli tortuosum.

Hasch'isch, see Bangue.

Hasch'ischin, see Bangue.

Has'ta, 'a spear,' Penis — h. Nuptialis, Penis — h. Virilis, Penis.

Hastel'la, (dim. of hasta.) Splint.

Hastings, Cli'mate of. This place has the reputation of being one of the mildest and most sheltered winter residences on the south coast of England. Owing to its low situation, and the height of the neighboring cliffs, it is protected in a great degree from all northerly winds; and hence is found a favorable residence generally for invalids laboring under diseases of the chest.

Has'tula Re'gis, (dim. of hasta.) Asphodelus ramosus.

Hatch, (from [G.] hecken.) Hatch'ing, (F.)

Eclosion (action d'éclore.) Issuing from the egg, as with the oviparous animal after incubation.

Hat'field's Tinc'ture, see Tinctura guaiaci ammoniata.

Hat'trel (Sc.), ([G.] Eiter, 'pus.') Abscess.

Haunch, Cox'a, Cozen'dix of the Latins; ὀσχρῶν, of the Greeks; An'cha, Is'chion, Os'phys, Hip, Huck'le, Cos'sa, (Prov.) Hubbon, Shoup, (F.) Hanche. The region of the trunk which is formed by the lateral parts of the pelvis and the hip-joint, including the soft parts. In women, on account of the greater width of the pelvis, the haunches are more marked and prominent than in men.

Haunch'bone, Ilium.

Hause, (Sax. half,) Collum, Throat.

Haust, (Sax. hportā, [G.] Husten,) Tussis.

Haustel'late, Haustella'tus, (haurio, haustum, 'I drink up.') An epithet for the structure of mouth which is adapted for drinking or pumping up liquids. Insects, which possess that kind of mouth, are so named. Ehrenberg refers the fancied spermatozoa to the haustellate entozoa.

Haus'tra Co'li, (haustum, 'a bucket.') See Colon.

Haust'us, gen. Haustus, (haurire, haustum, 'to drink,') Pot'io, dim. Potium'cula. A Draught. A liquid medicine, which can be taken at a draught.

HAUST'US NI'GER, ('black draught,') see Infusum sennæ.

Haut Mal, 'great disease;' (from [L.] altus, 'high, great,' and malum, 'disease,') Epilepsy.

Hautlé, Animal bread of the Mexicans. A bread made of three species of hemipterous insects belonging to the group of water bugs.

Havan'a or Havan'nah, Cli'mate of. The climate of Cuba is often selected for the phthisical invalid during the winter months, and so far as regards elevation and comparative equability of temperature, it is more favorable for those of weak lungs than parts of the United States. The mean annual temperature is high (78°), but the difference between the mean temperature of the warmest and coldest months is twice as great as at Madeira.

Hav'er, ([G.] Hafer,) Avena.

Hav'ers, Glands of, Synovial glands.

Haver'sian Canals, (after Dr. Clopton Havers,) Canals, nutritive, of bones.

Haw (Prov.), Hungry.

HAW, BLACK, (Sax. hæx,) Virburnum prunifolium.

Hawk'nut, Bunium bulbocastanum.

Hawk'weed, Vein'y, Hieracium venosum.

Hawse, (Sax. half,) Throat.

Haw'thorn, White, Mespilus oxyacantha.

Hay Asth'ma, Fever, hay.

HAY, CAM'EL's, Juncus odoratus — h. Fever, Fever, hay.

Hay'riff, Galium aparine.

Hay'scale (Prov.), Harelip.

Ha'zel, Beak'ed, (Sax. hærl,) Corylus rostrata.

HA'ZEL, CROT'LES, Lichen pulmonarius — h. Nut, snapping, Hamamelis Virginiana — h. Nut tree, Corylus avellana.

HA'ZEL, WITCH, Hamamelis Virginiana, Sorbus aucuparia.

Ha'zelraw, Lichen pulmonarius.

Head, (Sax. heapod, heapod, heaved; the past participle of heapan, 'to heave up,') Ca'put, Ca'ra, Ca'rē, Ceph'alē, Cy'bē, Poll, Palet, (Prov.) Hede, Pow, Scop, (F.) Tête. The head forms the upper extremity of the body, and tops the skeleton. It consists of the cranium and face. The first, which comprises all the superior and posterior part, has the encephalon in its cavity: the latter forms only the anterior part, and serves as the receptacle for the greater part of the organs of the senses.

HEAD, WA'TER IN THE, Hydrocephalus.

Head'ache, Cephalæa, Cephalalgia—h. Intermittent, Cephalalgia periodica—h. Sick, Cephalæa spasmodica.

Head'mould-shot. An old name for the condition of the skull, in which the bones ride, or are shot, over each other at the sutures.

Heads'woman (Prov.), Midwife.

Head'y. Affecting the head. (F.) Capiteux. That which inebriates readily. An epithet, applied to wines which possess this quality.

Heal, (Sax. hæl,) Sanitas.

Heal'all, Collinsonia Canadensis, Prunella vulgaris, Scrophularia nodosa.

Heal'ing, Curative—h. Art, Medicine—h. Piece, see Touch, royal.

Health, (Sax. hæl,) Sanitas.

Health'y, Salutory. Also, whole; not diseased.

Hear'ing, Hard'ness of, (Sax. hepan, 'to hear,') Deafness—h. Perverse, Paracusis per-versa.

Heart, (Sax. heopt, [G.] Herz,) Cor, Cear, Cer, Car'dia, (F.) Cœur. An azygous muscle, of an irregularly pyramidal shape; situate obliquely and a little to the left side, in the chest;—resting on the diaphragm by one of its surfaces;—suspended by its base from the great vessels; free and movable in the rest of its extent, and surrounded by the pericardium. The right side of the body of the heart is thin and sharp, and is called Mar'go acutus: the left is thick and round, and termed Margo obtusus. It is hollow within, and contains four cavities; two of which, with thinner and less fleshy walls, receive the blood from the lungs and the rest of the body; and pour it into two others, with thick and very fleshy parietes, which send it to the lungs and to every part of the body. Of these cavities, the former are called auricles, the latter ventricles. The right auricle and right ventricle form the Pulmon'ic or right or anterior heart, Cor venosum seu pulmonale, (F.) Cœur du poulmon, C. du sang noir, C. droit, C. antérieur: and the left auricle and ventricle, the systen'ic, corpo'real, left, or aortic heart, Cor arteriosum seu aorticum, (F.) Cœur du corps, C. gauche, C. cortique ou C. rouge. In the adult, these are totally distinct from each other, being separated by a partition;—the sep'tum cor'dis. Into the right auricle, the venæ cavæ—superior and inferior—and the coronary vein open. The pulmonary artery arises from the right ventricle (see Conus arteriosus); the four pulmonary veins open into the left auricle, and the aorta arises from the left ventricle.

The mean weight of the heart, in the adult, from the twenty-fifth to the sixtieth year, is, according to Bouillaud, from eight to nine ounces. The dimensions, according to Lobstein and Bouillaud, are as follows:—Length, from base to apex, five inches, six lines; breadth, at the base, three inches; thickness of the walls of the left ventricle, seven lines; at a finger's breadth above the apex, four lines; thickness of the walls of the right ventricle, two and a quarter lines; at the apex, half a line; thickness of right auricle, one line; of the left auricle, half a line. The heart is covered, externally, by a very thin, membranous reflection from the pericardium. The muscular structure of which it is constituted is much thicker in the parietes of the ventricle than in those of the auricles. Its cavities are lined by a very delicate membrane, the endocar'dium, which is continuous with the inner membrane of the arteries, as regards the left cavities, and with that of the veins, as regards the right. Its arteries—the coronary—arise from the commencement of the aorta. Its nerves proceed, chiefly, from the pneumogastric and the cervical ganglions of the great sympathetic. The heart is the great agent in the circulation. By its contraction, the blood is sent over every part of the body. Its action does not seem to be directly owing to nervous influence received from the brain or spinal marrow, or from both. The circulation may, indeed, be kept up for some time, if both brain and spinal marrow be destroyed.

When the ear is applied to the chest, a dull, lengthened sound is heard, which is synchronous with the arterial pulse. This is instantly succeeded by a sharp, quick sound, like that of the valve of a bellows or the lapping of a dog, and this is followed by a period of repose. The first sound—infer'ior or systol'ic sound—appears to be mainly produced by the contraction of the ventricles, and the consequent tension of the auriculo-ventricular valves; the second, or superior sound, by the reflux of the blood against the semilunar valves. These are what are called the Sounds of the Heart, Cardieche'mata, Son'itus cor'dis seu cardi'aci, (F.) Bruits du Cœur. Dr. C. J. B. Williams suggests the word lubb-dup as conveying a notion of the two sounds. The Beat'ing or Impulse of the heart, Heart-stroke, Apex beat, Pul'sus seu Ic'tus cor'dis, (F.) Impulsion ou choc du Cœur, against the parietes of the chest, is mainly caused by the systole of the heart, which tends to project it forwards. It is doubted, however, by some, whether the impulsion is produced by the dilatation or the contraction of the ventricles.

The following table exhibits the different actions of the heart, and their coincidence with its sounds and impulse. It presumes that the period from the commencement of one pulsation to that of another is divided into eight parts; and if the case of a person, whose pulse beats sixty times in a minute, be taken, each of these parts will represent the eighth of a second:

EIGHTHS OF A SECOND.

Last part of the pause...	1...	Auricles contracting; ventricles distended.
First sound and impulse...	4...	Ventricles contracting; auricles dilating.
Second sound.....	2...	Ventricles dilating; auricles dilating.
Pause.....	1...	Ventricles dilating; auricles distended.

The heart is subject to different organic diseases; the chief of which are aneurism, contraction of the apertures, and hypertrophy.

HEART, AT'ROPHY OF THE, Atroph'ia seu Arid'ra seu Phthi'sis Cor'dis, Cardiatroph'ia, Acardiotroph'ia. A condition of the organ in which there is diminution in the thickness of the parietes of the whole organ.

HEART, BEAT'ING OF THE, see Heart.

HEART, BONE OF. A piece of fibro-cartilage behind the aortic orifice, and between the two auriculo-ventricular openings, is thus called, when ossified.

HEART CLOT, see Polypus.

HEART, DILATA'TION OF THE, see Aneurism—h. Displacement of the, Ectopia cordis and Cardiocele—h. Fatty, Steatosis cordis—h. Fatty degeneration of, Steatosis cordis, see Degeneration—h. Fibroid degeneration of, see Degeneration.

HEART, HY'PERTROPHY OF THE, Hypertroph'ia Cor'dis, Hypercor'dia, Hypersarco'sis Cordis, Hypercardiotroph'ia, Cardiaux'z, Anewys'ma cordis act'ivum (Corvisart), Cor bovi'num seu tauri'num, Enor'mitas cordis, (F.) Hypertrophie du Cœur. Supernutrition of the muscular parietes of the heart, which are thicker than usual; the cavities being generally diminished. The physical signs which indicate it are the following: In cases of long standing, the præcordial region is generally prominent; the pulsations of the heart are visible over a greater extent than natural; and a marked vibration is communicated to the hand when placed on the cardiac region. The dull sound on percussion is more extensive than natural; and on auscultation there is a permanent increase of the force and extent of the heart's action; there is no increase, however, of frequency, and the rhythm is regular. The pulse is generally strong, full, and hard.

Concen'tric Hy'pertrophy of the Heart, (F.) Hypertrophie concentrique, Hypertrophie centripète du Cœur, Retrait ventriculaire, Cardiacrctie, is when the parietes augment at the expense of the cavities.

HEART, HY'PERTROPHY WITH DILATA'TION OF THE, Ac'tive an'eurism, Eccen'tric hy'pertrophy. In this affection, the pulsations can be seen and felt over a larger space, and the apex is more to the left and lower down than natural. The impulse is less steady, but at times more violent than that which accompanies simple hypertrophy. Percussion gives more distinct evidence of the enlargement, the sound being more extensively dull. On auscultation, the impulse is often violent, but irregular; in extreme cases, it produces the sensation of a large mass of flesh rolling or revolving beneath the ear. The pulse is strong, full, and vibratory. The shock of the heart's action is often transmitted to the whole person, and to the bed on which the patient is lying.

HEART, IM'PULSE OF THE, see Heart.

HEART, IR'RITABLE. A condition of the heart, noticed especially in the army in actual service, and characterized by palpitation, cardiac pain, rapid pulse, shortness of breath, sometimes headache, dizziness, &c.

Heat, (past participle of Sax. hætan, 'to make warm,') Ca'lor, Ther'ma, (F.) Chaleur. The material cause, which produces the sensation—or the particular sensation itself—produced by a body of an elevated temperature, on our organs, especially on the organs of touch. Modern chemists have given the name Caloric to the principle, whatever may be its nature, which is the cause of heat. When we touch a body of a temperature superior to our own, a portion of caloric passes from the body to the hand, and produces the sensation of heat. If, on the contrary, we touch a body of a temperature inferior to our own, we communicate a portion of our caloric to it, and experience the sensation of cold. Our own sensations are but imperfect indexes of temperature. Two men meeting at the middle of a mountain,—the one ascending, the other descending,—will experience different sensations. The one ascending, passes from a warmer to a colder atmosphere;—the one descending, from a colder to a warmer.

The terms Cal'ory and U'nit of heat, (F.) Calorie, Unité de chaleur and Therme, have been given to the quantity of heat required to raise a kilogramme of water one degree centigrade.

The chief instrument for measuring heat, used in medicine, is the Thermometer. Of this there are three kinds:—that of Fahrenheit, that of Réaumur, and that of Celsius or the Centigrade.

To reduce Centigrade degrees to those of Fahrenheit, multiply by 9, divide by 5, and add 32: thus, 40° Cent. $\times 9 \div 5 + 32 = 104^{\circ}$ Fah. To reduce Fahrenheit's degrees to those of Centigrade, subtract 32, multiply by 5, and divide by 9: thus, 104° Fah. $- 32 \times 5 \div 9 = 40^{\circ}$ Cent. To reduce Réaumur's degrees to those of Fahrenheit, multiply by 9, divide by 4, and add 32: thus, 32° Réaum. $\times 9 \div 4 + 32 = 104^{\circ}$ Fah. To reduce Fahrenheit's degrees to those of Réaumur, subtract 32, multiply by 4, and divide by 9: thus, 104° Fah. $- 32 \times 4 \div 9 = 32^{\circ}$ Réaum. To reduce Réaumur's degrees to those of Centigrade, multiply by 5, and divide by 4: thus, 32° Réaum. $\times 5 \div 4 = 40^{\circ}$ Cent.; and, lastly, to reduce Centigrade degrees to those of Réaumur, multiply by 4, and divide by 5: thus, 40° Cent. $\times 4 \div 5 = 32^{\circ}$ Réaum.

By the term gentle heat, Ph. U. S., 1873, is meant any temperature between 90° and 100° .

The normal temperature of the body may be regarded as on the average, from 98° to 100° or upwards. The blood of the right side of the heart is slightly hotter than that of the left; and the highest temperature observed is where the suprahepatic veins empty their blood into the vena cava ascendens. See Animal heat.

The varying temperature, as indicated by the thermometer, is a valuable element of diagnosis in morbid conditions, and Thermom'etry receives great attention.

The human body can bear a high degree of heat diffused in the atmosphere. There are cases on record, where air of 400° and upwards, of Fahrenheit's scale, has been breathed with impunity for a short time. It can likewise withstand very severe cold. In the expedition of Capt. Back to the Arctic regions, the thermometer was as low as -70° of Fah., and Sir George Simpson affirms that it has fallen in Siberia to -83° , or 115° below the freezing-point. Dr. Kane, in the Arctic regions, in 1853-54, observed the range of eleven spirit thermometers, selected as standards, to vary from -60° to -75° . The mean annual temperature was 5.2° , the lowest ever registered.

Excessive heat disposes the body to gastric and intestinal diseases, and particularly to inflammation and enlargement of the liver; hence, the frequency of such affections within the torrid zone. Heat is often used therapeutically; the actual cautery, at a white heat, disorganizes the parts to which it is applied: a lesser degree occasions violent inflammation. Heat higher than that of the human body is excitant: of a lower degree, sedative. Excessive cold acts as a powerful sedative—inducing sleep, the tendency to which, after long exposure, becomes irresistible. Many of the topical applications—as cataplasms—act wholly by virtue of their warmth and moisture.

HEAT, Ar'dor vene'reus, Pruri'tus, (F.) Chaleurs, Chaleurs des Animaux, Folie, Rut, is the periodical sexual desire experienced by animals,—Æstrua'tion. It is supposed by some to be owing to the periodical maturation and discharge of ova,—Ovula'tion.

HEAT, AC'RID, see Acrid—h. Animal, see Animal heat—h. Apoplexy, see Coup-de-soleil—h. Asphyxia, see Coup-de-soleil.

HEAT, INTER'NAL, (F.) Chaleur interne, is a sensation of heat felt by the patient, but not sensible to the touch; Exter'nal heat, (F.) Chaleur extérieure, that which can be felt by others. Heat, Ar'dor, is called moist, (F.) haliteuse, when accompanied with moisture, like that felt after bathing; dry, (F.) sèche, when the skin has not its ordinary softness. It is called acrid and pungent, Ca'lor mor'dax, (F.) âcre et mordicante, when it conveys a disagreeable tingling to the fingers. The French employ the terms ner'veous heat and errat'ic heat, Chaleur nerveuse and Chaleur erratique, for that which comes by flushes, alternating with chills, and which moves rapidly from one part to another. M. Double has used the term septic heat, (F.) Chaleur septique, for that which produces a pungent sensation on the hand, similar to that of acrid heat, but milder and more uniform, and which is accompanied with feebleness and frequency of pulse, &c.

Hebraden'dron Cambogiō'des, see Cambogia.

He'brews, Med'icine of the. Medicine seems to have been at a very low ebb with the ancient Hebrews. Of anatomy they knew nothing. Their physiology was imperfect and filled with superstitions; and their therapeutics unsatisfactory. Hygiene appears to have been most attended to. Of the other departments of medicine we cannot judge of their knowledge.

Hecato'nia Palus'tris, (from ἑκατον, 'a hundred,' from its numerous flowers,) Ranunculus sceleratus.

Hecatophyl'la, (ἑκατον, 'a hundred,' and φυλλον,) Rosa centifolia.

Hech, (by onomatopœia,) Anhelatio.

Heck'berry (Prov.), Prunus padus.

Hec'teus, (ἑκτευσ,) A Greek measure, containing about 72 chopines or pints.

Hec'tic, Hec'ticus, (from ἔξis, 'habit,') (F.) Hectique, Étique. Relating or appertaining to the constitution or habit.

HEC'TIC FE'VER, Fébris hec'tica seu phthis'ica seu marasmo'des seu tab'ida seu len'ta seu amphimeri'na hec'tica seu amato'ria, Hecticop'gra, Hecticopyr'etos, Hec'tica, Amphimeri'na hec'tica, Syntecop'gra, Syntecticop'gra, Marasmo'p'gra, Leucopy'ria, Epan'etus hec'ticus, Chloro'sis amato'ria, Et'tick, (Sc.) Ethik, Etick, (F.) Fidere Hectique ou Étique, (ἔξis, 'habit of body;' because in this disease every part of the body is emaciated; or, perhaps, from ἐττηκω, 'I consume,' 'I am exhausted,') The name of a slow, continued, or remittent fever, which generally accompanies the end of organic affections, and has been esteemed idiopathic, although it is probably always symptomatic. It is the fever of irritation and debility, and is characterized by progressive emaciation, frequent pulse, hot skin—especially of the palms of the hands and soles of the feet—and, towards the end, colliquative sweats and diarrhœa. Being symptomatic, it can only be removed by getting rid of the original affection. This is generally difficult, and almost hopeless in the disease which it most commonly accompanies—consumption.

Hec'tica, Hectic fever—h. Infantilis, Fever, infantile remittent.

Hecticop'gra, (ἑκτικός, 'hectic,' and πυρ, 'fire or fever,') Hectic fever.

Hecticopyr'etos, (ἑκτικός, 'hectic,' and πυρετός, 'fever,') Hectic fever.

Hec'ticus, (ἑκτικός,) Hectic.

Hectique, Hectic.

Hec'tisis, (F.) Étisie. The state of those who have hectic fever.

Hec'togramme, Hectogram'ma, (ἑκατον, 'a hundred,' and γράμμα,) A measure of 100 grammes, i. e., 3 ounces, 1 drachm, and 44 grains, Troy.

Hec'tolitre. A measure containing 100 litres or 26.42 wine pints.

Hecu'sius, (ἑκουσιος, and ἑκων,) Voluntary.

Hede (Sc.), Head.

Hedeo'ma, Hedeo'ma pulegiō'des, (ἡδύς, 'agreeable,') Cuni'la pulegiō'des, Melis'sa pulegiō'des, Pen'nyroyal, Tick'weed, Stink'ing Balm, Squaw'-mint. Sex. Syst. Diandria Monogynia; Nat. Ord. Labiatae. An indigenous plant, common in all parts of the United States, and which, where it is abundant, perfumes the air for a considerable distance. It is employed in the same cases as the mints and the English pennyroyal. In popular practice it is used as an emmenagogue.

The O'leum Hedeo'mæ (Ph. U. S.), or Oil of Hedeoma, is used as a stimulating carminative, dropped on sugar. Dose, 2 to 6 drops.

Hed'era Arbo'rea, H. helix.

HED'ERA HE'LIX, Hed'era arbo'rea, Bac'chica, Cis'sus, Cit'tos, Ed'era, Corymbe'thra, Corym'bos, Pey, (Sc.) Bind'wood, (F.) Lierre, L. commun ou grim'pant. Ord. Araliaceæ. The taste of ivy leaves is bitter, styptic, and nauseous. They are not used in medicine. According to Haller, they were recommended in Germany against atrophy of children; and the common people of England sometimes apply them to running sores, and to keep issues open. The berries were supposed, by the ancients, to have an emetic and purgative quality; and a watery extract was made from them, called by Quercetanus Extrac'tum pur'gans. From the stalk of the tree a resinous juice exudes, in warm climates, called Gum'mi Hed'erae, Ivy Gum, (F.) Gomme de lierre, Résine de lierre. It is possessed of tonic and astringent properties, but is not used.

HED'ERA TERRES'TRIS, Glechoma hederacea.

Heder'ula, (dim. of hedera,) Glechoma hederacea.

Hede'verk, ([Sax.] heapod-pærc,) Cephalalgia.

Hede'wark, Cephalalgia.

Hedge Gar'lic, Alliaria,—h. Mustard, stinking, Alliaria.

Hed'ra, (ἑδρα, ἑδρη, 'a vestige,' 'a seat,') A seat. A fracture of the bones of the cranium, in which the trace of the fracturing instrument is still perceptible. It was also used by the ancients for the anus, the breech, excrement, a privy, a night-chair, and for the bottom of an abscess.

Hedroce'lē, Hed'rocele, (hedra, and κλη, 'a tumor,') Proctocele.

He'dy, in composition (from ἡδύς), sweet, agreeable.

Hedych'roum, (hedy, and χροα, 'color,') A remedy of a pleasant color. Applied to certain troches, the chief constituent of which was the-riac.

Hedypo'hnia, (hedy, and φωνη, 'voice,') Sweetness of voice.

Hedypneus'tus, Hedyp'nous, (hedy, and πνεω,

'I breathe.') Breathing sweetly or softly. Smelling sweetly.

Hedyp'nois Tarax'acum, (hedy, and πρω, 'I breathe,' from its scenting the breath.) Leontodon taraxacum.

Hedysa'rum Alha'gi, (ἡδύσαρον, from hedy, and αἶμα,) Agul.

Hedys'ma, gen. Hedysm'atis, (ἡδύσμα,) Condi-ment.

Height, see Stature.

Heil, (Sax. hel,) Sanitas.

Heil'brunn, Min'eral Springs of. This water, mainly a salt-water spring, on account of the quantity of chloride of sodium contained in it, is also alterative in scrofulous affections, on account of its iodide and bromide of sodium.

Helcenteri'tis, (helco, and enteritis,) Dothinen-teritis.

Hel'co, in composition, from ἕλκος, 'an ulcer.'

Helcoc'acê, Cachelco'ma, (helco, and κακη, 'badness,') A malignant ulcer.

Helco'des, (ἑλκώδης, from helco, and odes,) Ulcerated, Ulcerous.

Helcol'ogy, Helcolog'ia, (helco, and λογος, 'a discourse,') The doctrine of, or a treatise on, ulcers.

Helco'ma, gen. Helco'matis, (ἑλκωμα,) Ulcer.

Helcome'nia, (helco, and μηνες, 'menses,') Menelcosis.

Helcophthal'mia, Ophthalmia ulcero'sa. Ophthalmia with ulceration.

Hel'coplasty, Hel'koplasty, El'koplasty, Elc'o-plasty, (helco, and πλασσω, 'I form,') An operation which consists in grafting on an ulcer a piece of skin from the opposite limb, or from the limb of another person, when the destruction of skin is too great to permit the healing process.

Hel'cos, (ἕλκος,) Ulcer.

Helco'sis, (ἑλκωσις, from helco, and osis,) Elco-sis, Ulceration — h. Cerebri, Encephalopyosis — h. Laryngis, Phthisis laryngea — h. Pulmonalis, Phthisis pulmonalis — h. Renalis, Nephreleosis — h. Uteri, see Metrophthisis — h. Vesicæ, Cystophthisis.

Helcostaphylo'ma, gen. Helcostaphylo'matis, (helco, and σταφυλωμα, 'staphyloma,') Staphyloma ending in ulceration.

Helcoxero'sis, (helco, and ξηρωσις, 'dryness,') The drying of an ulcer.

Helc'tica, (from ἔλκω, 'I draw,') Epispastics.

Hel'cus, (ἕλκος,) Ulcer.

Helcyd'rion, Helcyd'rion, (ἑλκυδριον,) (dim. of Helcus,) Ulcus'culum. A small ulcer. A superficial ulceration of the cornea.

Helcys'ter, gen. Helcyste'ris, (ἑλκυστηρ, from ἔλκω, 'I draw,') An iron hook or crotchet for extracting the foetus. See Crotchet.

Hel'en and Ju'dith, Hunga'rian Sisters. A remarkable double monster — female — born in Hungary in 1701. It was exhibited over Europe for about seven years, and lived to the age of 22. It was a case of Pygodidymus or Pygopages — united by the nates and part of the loins.

Helen'ium, (after Helena [?],) Inula helenium.

HELEN'IUM AUTUMNA'LE, False Sun'flower, Sneeze'wort, Sneeze'weed, Swamp Sun'flower, Yellow Star, Ox'eye. Ord. Compositæ. An indigenous herb, with large golden-yellow compound flowers, which appear in August. All its parts are bitter and somewhat acrid, and when snuffed up the nostrils in powder are powerful sternutatories.

Nine different varieties of Helenium have been described, but H. autumnale, H. parviflorum, and H. tenuifolium are best known; the last two for their peculiar deleterious effects on the nervous system of the lower animals especially.

Helian'themum Canaden'se, (ἥλιος, 'sun,' and ανθερον, 'flower,') Helianthemum (Ph. U. S.), Cistus Canaden'sis, Frost'wort, Frost'weed, Frost-plant, Rock'rose. Ord. Cistaceæ. An herbaceous plant, having large yellow flowers, which grows in all parts of the United States, and flowers in the Middle States, in June. It has an astringent, slightly aromatic, and bitterish taste. It has been prescribed in scrofula, but probably is nothing more than an aromatic tonic.

HELIAN'THEMUM CORYMBO'SUM, Rock'rose, an indigenous plant, is used in the same cases.

Heli'asis, (ἡλιασις, from ἥλιος, 'the sun,') Astrabolismus, Insolation.

Helich'rysum Nudifo'lium, (ἥλιος, 'sun,' and χρυσός, 'gold,') Caffer tea. A South African plant, Nat. Ord. Compositæ, which is demulcent, and, in the form of infusion, is recommended in catarrh, phthisis, and other pulmonary affections.

HELICH'RYSUM SERPYLLIFO'LIIUM, Hot'tentots' tea, and HELICH'RYSUM AURICULA'TUM have similar virtues.

Helic'ia, (ἡλικία,) Age.

Helicine, Helic'ina, Helicoi'des, Helico'des, (from ἑλίζ, gen. ἑλκος, 'the tendril of the vine,') Resembling in form the tendril of the vine.

HELICINE AR'TERIES, Arte'rie Helici'næ, of the penis, as described by J. Müller, are short vessels given off from the larger branches, as well as from the finest twigs of the artery of the organ: most of them come off at a right angle, and project into the cavity of the spongy substance, either terminating abruptly or swelling out into a club-like process without again subdividing. Almost all these vessels are bent like a horn, so that the end describes half a circle or somewhat more. They have a great resemblance to the tendrils of the vine, whence their name. A minute examination of them, either with the lens or the microscope, shows that, although they at all times project into the venous cavities of the corpora cavernosa, they are not entirely naked, but are covered with a delicate membrane, which, under the microscope, appears granular.

Hel'icis Ma'jor, (gen. of Helix,) A muscle of the ear, which originates from the anterior acute part of the helix, upon which it ascends and is inserted into the helix. It pulls the part into which it is inserted a little downwards and forwards.

HELICIS MI'NOR. This muscle originates from the under and fore part of the helix, and is inserted into the helix near the fissure in the cartilage, opposite the concha. Its use is to contract the fissure.

Helicoi'des, (ἑλίζ, and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Helicine.

Helicotre'ma, gen. Helicotre'matis, (ἑλίζ, 'helix,' and τρομα, 'a foramen,') Fora'men superius et ma'jus, Hia'tus of Scar'pa. The hole by which the two scalæ of the cochlea communicate at the apex.

Heliencephali'tis, (ἥλιος, 'the sun,' and encephalitis,) see Coup-de-soleil.

Helig'mus, (ἡλιγμος, from ἑλίσσω, 'I turn round,') Convolution.

Helik'ia, (ἡλικία,) Age.

Heliomyeli'tis, (ἥλιος, 'the sun,' μυελος, 'the marrow,' and itis,) Myelitis from exposure to the sun.

Heliono'sis, (ἥλιος, 'the sun,') Insolation.

Heliopsydra'cium, (ἥλιος, 'the sun,' and ψυδρακιον,) A psudracium or pustule from exposure to the sun.

Helioscia'dium Nodiflo'rum, (ἥλιος, 'the sun,' and σκιάδιον, 'a parasol,') Sium.

Helio'sis, (ἡλιωσις,) Astrabolismus, Insolation.

He'liotrope, (ἥλιος, 'the sun,' and τροπω, 'I turn,') Heliotropium Europæum.

Heliotrop'ion, Cichorium intybus.

Heliotropium Europæum, H. erectum seu caucasicum seu supinum, Verruca'ria. The Heliotrope, (F.) Tournesol, Herbe aux verrues. Ord. Boraginaceæ. This plant is considered to possess aperient properties, and to be capable of destroying cutaneous excrescences; hence one of its names.

HELIOTROP' IUM INDICUM, an East India plant, naturalized in some of the Western and Southern States, probably has similar virtues.

He'lix, gen. Hel'icis, (ἐλῖξ, gen. ἐλῖκος, 'the tendrill of the vine,' from ἐλῖν, 'to envelop,' 'to roll,') Capre'olus. The fold is thus called which forms the outer circumference or ring of the external ear.

HE'LIX, Limax.

HE'LIX POMA'TIA, (F.) Limaçon, Colimaçon, Escargot. A large kind of snail, transported from the south of Europe to England by Sir Kenelm Digby, for his lady when in a decline. It was considered highly restorative.

Hel'la, Incubus.

Helleboras'ter, (from ἑλλεβορός,) Helleborus foetidus — h. Foetidus, Helleborus foetidus.

Hel'lebo're, Dracontium foetidum — h. American, Veratrum viride — h. Black, Helleborus niger — h. Blanc, Veratrum album — h. Green, Helleborus viridis — h. Noir, Helleborus niger — h. Stinking, Helleborus foetidus — h. Swamp, Veratrum viride — h. White, Veratrum album.

Helleboris'mus, (from ἑλλεβορός,) Elleboris'mus. The method of treating disease, among the ancients, by hellebore. This comprised not only the choice, preparation, and administration of the medicine, but, likewise, the knowledge and employment of preliminary precautions and remedies proper for aiding its action, and preventing the pernicious effects which it might occasion.

Helleb'orus, (ἐλλεβορός,) H. niger — h. Albus, Veratrum album.

HELLEB'ORUS FÆ'TIDUS, Helleboras'ter, Elleboras'ter, Stink'ing Hel'lebo're or Bear's foot, Set'terwort, (F.) Hellébore ou Ellébore fétide, Pied de Griffon, Pas de lion. Ord. Ranunculaceæ. The leaves of this plant are said to be anthelmintic. The smell of the fresh plant is extremely fetid, and the taste bitter and acrid. It usually acts as a cathartic.

HELLEB'ORUS GRANDIFLO'RUS, H. niger.

HELLEB'ORUS NI'GER, H. grandiflorus, Elleb'orus ni'ger, Melampo'dium, Melanorrh'izum, Ec'tomon, Black Hel'lebo're, Mel'ampode, Christ'mas Rose, Clovetongue, (F.) Hellébore noir. The root of this European plant — Helleb'orus, (Ph. U. S.) — has a disagreeable odor, and bitter, acrid taste. It is possessed of cathartic properties, and has been recommended as an emmenagogue. It has been given in mania, melancholia, dropsy, suppressed menses, &c. Dose, gr. x. to ℥j., as a cathartic.

HELLEB'ORUS TRIFO'LIOUS, Coptis.

HELLEB'ORUS VIR'IDIS, Green Hel'lebo're. A European plant, naturalized on Long Island, has similar properties to the last.

Hellec'e'bra, Sedum.

Helle'nia Grandiflo'ra, (after C. N. Hellenius, professor at Abo,) Costus.

Hel'metflower, Yel'low, Aconitum anthora.

Hel'met Pod, Jeffersonia Bartoni.

Hel'mins, gen. Helmin'this, Hel'minth, plur. Helmin'thes seu Elmin'thes, (from ἑλμινς, gen. ἑλμιντος, 'a worm,') A worm; an entozoon.

Helmin'thagogue, (helmintho, and αἶμα, 'I drive,') Anthelmintic.

Helmin'thi, Worms.

Helmin'thia, Helminthiasis — h. Alvi, Worms.

HELMIN'THIA ERRAT'ICA. Worms, introduced by accident and without finding a proper habitation in the stomach or intestines; producing spasmodic colic, with severe tormina, and occasionally vomiting or dejections of blood; 12th genus of the order Enterica, class Cœliaca, of Good.

HELMIN'THIA POD'ICIS, Worms.

Helminthia'sis, Helminthogen'esis. A generic name for the condition which gives occasion to the presence of intestinal worms. It is, also, called Helmin'thia, Verminal'tio, Mor'bus vermino'sus, Stat'us vermino'sus, Sabur'ra vermino'sa, Scolec'usis, Scolec'esis, Entozoogen'esis, Parasit'ismus intestinalis, Worm disease, Invermin'ation, Verminal'tion. See Worms.

Helmin'thic, Anthelmintic.

Helmin'tho, (ἑλμινς, gen. ἑλμιντος, 'a worm,') in composition, worm.

Helminthochor'tum, (helmintho, and χορτος, 'grass,') Corallina Corsicana.

Helminthocol'ica, (helmintho, and colica,) Colica verminosa.

Helminthocor'ton, (helmintho, and χορτος, 'grass,') Corallina Corsicana.

Helminthogen'esis, (helmintho, and γενεσις, 'generation,') Helminthiasis.

Helminthol'ogy, Entozool'ogy, Helmintholog'ia, Scolecolog'ia, (helmintho, and λογος, 'a description,') A treatise on worms.

Helminthon'cus, (helmintho, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') Malis — h. Medinensis, Dracunculus.

Helminthop'ya, Helminthopyr'etus, Fe'bris vermino'sa, (helmintho, and πυρ, 'a fever,') Fever occasioned by worms. See Fever, verminous.

Helminthopyr'etus, (helmintho, and πυρετος, 'fever,') Helminthopyra.

Helmin'thus Gor'dii, Seta equina.

Helo'des, (ἑλος, 'a marsh,' and οδες,) Elodes.

Helo'nias Dioi'ca, (from ἑλος, 'a swamp,') Chamælerium luteum — h. Erythrosperma, Ami-anthium muscætoxicum — h. Lutea, Chamælerium luteum — h. Officinalis, see Veratrina.

Helop'ya, (ἑλος, 'a marsh,' and πυρ, 'fever,') Elodes (febris).

Helopyr'etus, (ἑλος, 'a marsh,' and πυρετος, 'fever,') Elodes (febris).

Helo'sis, Helo'tis, (ἑλω, 'I turn,') Eversion of the eyelids, and convulsions of the muscles of the eyes. Plica Polonica. Strabismus.

Helo'tis, Helosis, Plica.

Hel'us, Marsh, (ἑλος,) Clavus, (ῥλος.)

Helvel'la Esculen'ta, Morchella esculenta.

Helx'iné, (from ἑλκω, 'I draw,' from its adherent properties,) Parietaria.

He'ma, (F.) Héma, (αἷμα, gen. αἵματος, 'blood,') in composition, 'blood.'

Hématostatiques, Hæmatostatica.

Hématozoaires, Hæmatozoa.

Hæmaturie, Hæmaturia.

Hémendocarde, Hæmendocardium.

Hé'mera, (ἡμέρα, 'a day.') Dies. Hence

Hemeralo'pia, see Nyctalopia.

HEMERALO'PIA, (hemera, and ὀπτομαι, 'I see,')

Hemeralops, Dyso'pia seu Caligo tenebra'rum, Parop'sis Noctifuga, Vi'sus diurnus, Nyctalo'pia (of some), Nyctotyphlo'sis, Amblyo'pia crepuscula'ris, Cæcitas crepuscula'ris seu noctur'na, A'cies diurn'a, Daysight, Dayvis'ion, Henblind'ness, Nightblind'ness, Moonblind'ness [?], Noctur'nal Amauro'sis, (F.) Héméralopie, Vue diurne, Aveuglement de Nuit, Cécité nocturne. A disease, in which the eyes enjoy the faculty of seeing while the sun is above the horizon, but are incapable of seeing by the aid of artificial light. Its causes are not evident. The eye, when carefully examined, presents no alteration, either in its membranes or humors.

Hem'eralops, gen. Hemeralo'pis, Do'rea. One laboring under hemeralopia. Also, Hemeralopia.

Hemeratyphlo'sis, (hemera, τυφλος, 'blind,' and osis.) Nyctalopia.

Hemerodro'ma, gen. Hemerodro'matis, (hemera, and δρομος, 'a course,') Ephemera.

Hemeropathi'a, (hemera, and παθος, 'an affection,') A disease, which continues only a day; or which is only observed during the day.

Hemerotyphlo'sis, (hemera, τυφλος, 'blind,' and osis.) Nyctalopia.

Hem'i, (ἡμι, ἡμισυς,) 'half,' 'semi.' Hence:

Hemiaceph'alus, (F.) Hémiacéphale, (hemi, α, and κεφαλή, 'head,') A monster whose head is represented by a shapeless tumor, with some appendages or cutaneous folds anteriorly, the thoracic extremities existing.

Hemiamauro'sis, Hemio'pia.

Hemian'drus, (ἡμιάνδρος, from hemi, and ἀνδρ, gen. ἀνδρος, 'a man,') Eunuch.

Hemiā'ner, gen. Hemian'dris, (hemi, and ἀνδρ, 'a man,') Eunuch.

Hemiānthro'pia, (ἡμιανθρωπία, from hemi, and ανθρωπος, 'a man,') Mania.

Hemiānthro'pus, Eunuch, Maniac.

Hemiaz'yga (Vena), see Azygos vein.

He'mic, Hæmic.

Hemiccephalæ'a, (hemi, and κεφαλή, 'head,') Hemierania.

Hemiccephalæ'um, Sinciput.

Hemicceph'alium, Sinciput.

Hemicceph'alum, Sinciput.

Hemicceph'alus, Hemicceph'alus, Semicceph'alus. One who has half a head.

Hemichore'a, Unilateral Chore'a, (F.) Hemichorée. Chorea affecting only one side of the body.

Hemicra'nia, (ἡμικράνια,) Hemiccephalæ'a, Migra'na, Gra'na, Hemipa'gia, Hemipe'gia, Heterocra'nia, Monopa'gia, Menope'gia, Ceph'alæ'a, Hemicra'nia, Hemipathi'a, Neural'gia cerebra'lis, Hem'icrany, Me'grim, (hemi, and κρανιον, 'cranium,') (F.) Migraine. Pain, confined to one-half the head. It is almost always of an intermittent character;—at times, continuing only as long as the sun is above the horizon; and hence sometimes called Sun pain,—and is cured by cinchona, arsenic, and the remedies adapted for intermittents.

HEMICRA'NIA IDIOPATH'ICA, Neuralgia, facial.

Hem'icrany, Hemierania.

Hemides'mus In'dicus, (hemi, and δερμος, 'a tie,' in allusion to the filaments,) Perip'loca In'dica, Ascle'pias Pseudosar'sa, Sarsaparil'la In'dica, Nannari, In'dian Sarsaparil'la. Ord. Asclepiadaceæ. A Hindoostanee plant, the root of which, Hemides'mi Radix (Ph. B., 1867), has a peculiar aromatic odor, and a bitterish taste. It is used in India as a substitute for sarsaparilla.

Hemidial'ysis, (hemi, and διαλυσις, 'dissolution,') Hemiplegia.

Hemidiaphore'sis, Transpira'tio Unilat'era, (hemi, and διαφωρησις, 'perspiration,') Perspiration of one-half the body.

Hemiec'ton, (ἡμικτον,) Hemiec'teon, Semisex'tum. A vessel capable of containing 36 chopines or pints, and in which fumigations were formerly made in diseases of the uterus and vagina.

Hemienceph'alus, (F.) Hémiencéphale, (hemi, and εγκεφαλος, 'the encephalon,') A monster, which has no trace of the organs of the senses, and yet has a brain nearly natural. See Hemicephalus.

Hemig'ynus, (ἡμιγυνος, from hemi, and γυνή, 'a woman,') One who is effeminate, or half a woman.

Hemim'eles, (F.) Hémimèle, (hemi, and μελος, 'a limb,') A genus of monsters, in which the upper or lower extremities are very defective—mere stumps,—and the fingers and toes are entirely wanting or very imperfect. The condition is called Hemime'lia.

Hemime'lia, see Hemimeles.

Hemimæ'rion, (hemi, and μαιρα, 'a part,') 'One-half part.' Also, half a drachm.

Hem'ina, (ἡμνα.) A Greek measure answering to the Cotyle, (κοτύλη,) i. e. one-half the sextarius, or about half a pint, English.

Hemiobol'ion, (ἡμιόβολιον,) Hemiob'olon. Half the obolus. A weight of about five grains.

Hemiol'ios, (ἡμιωλιος,) A weight of 12 drachms, or oz. 1½. See Sescuncia.

Hemio'pia, Hemiop'sis, Hemiopi'asis, Suffu'sio dimidia'ns, Vi'sus dimidia'tus, Marmor'ygē Hip-poc'ratis, Hemiamau'ro'sis, Amauro'sis dimidia'ta, (F.) Hémiopie, Hémiopsie, (hemi, and ὀπτομαι, 'I see,') Depraved vision, in which the person sees only one-half of an object.

Hemiopi'asis, Hemio'pia.

Hémiopsie, Hemio'pia.

Hemiop'sis, Hemio'pia.

Hemipa'ges, Dicor'yphus dihypogas'trius, Oc'topus synapheoceph'alus, (hemi, and πηγνυμι, 'I fasten,') A monstrosity, in which twins are united from the navel to the vertex.

Hemipa'gia, Hemierania.

Hemipathi'a, (hemi, and παθος, 'affection,') Hemierania.

Hemipe'gia, Hemierania.

Hemipho'nia, (hemi, and φωνή, 'voice,') Great weakness of voice. The husky voice of those affected with cholera.

Hemiple'gia, Hemiplex'ia, Hemidial'ysis, Paral'ysis, Hemiple'gia, Semiple'gia, Semisidera'tio, (hemi, and πλησσω, or πληττω, 'I strike,') Paralysis of one side of the body. See Paralysis. One so palsied is said to be hemipleg'ic, semisidera'tus.

HEMIPLE'GIA, ALTER'NATE, Cross hemiplegia or paral'ysis, Trans'verse paral'ysis. Paralysis in which the loss of power affects the face of one side and the limbs of the other, or the upper limb of one side and the lower of the opposite side. It is rare.

HEMIPLE'GIA, CROSS, H. alternate—h. Facialis, Paralysis, Bell's—h. Hephæstic, Hammer palsy.

Hemiplex'ia, (ἡμιπληξία,) Hemiplegia.

Hemiprosople'gia, (hemi, προσωπον, 'face,' and πληγη, 'a stroke,') Paralysis, Bell's.

Hemisphæ'ræ Cer'ebri, Hemispheres of the brain.

Hem'isphere, Hemisphæ'ra, Hemisphæ'rism, (hemi, and σφαῖρα, 'a sphere,') One-half of a sphere or of a body having a spheroidal shape.

HEM'ISPHERES OF THE BRAIN, Hemisphæ'ræ cer'ebri, Hemispher'ical gan'glia, are the upper spheroidal portions of the brain, separated from each other by the falx cerebri.

Hemispher'ical Gan'glia, Hemispheres of the brain.

Hémite, Hæmitis.

Hemitritæ'a (Fe'bris), (ἡμιτρίαιος—πυρετός), Fe'bris semitertia'na seu sesquial'tera, (F.) Hémitritée, Demitierre, Fèvre demitierre, (hemi, and τρίαιος, 'tertian.') A semitertian fever, so called because it seems to possess both the characters of the tertian and quotidian intermittent.

Hemiun'cia, (hemi, and οὐγκία, 'an ounce,') Hemiuncion.

Hemiun'cion, Hemiun'cia, Semun'cia, Semiun'cia. Half an ounce.

Hem'lock, Pinus Canadensis, Conium maculatum—h. American, Cicuta maculata—h. Bastard, Charophyllum sylvestre—h. Common, Conium maculatum—h. Dropwort, Oenanthe—h. Ground, Taxus Canadensis—h. Gum, see Pinus Canadensis—h. Pitch, see Pinus Canadensis—h. Poison, Conium—h. Spruce, Pinus Canadensis—h. Water, American, Cicuta maculata, Cicuta aquatica—h. Water, fine-leaved, Phellandrium aquaticum—h. Wild, Cicuta maculata.

He'mo, in composition, see Hema.

Hémoangiairrhagie, (hemo, αγγειον, 'a vessel,' ανρ, 'air,' and ῥήγνυμι, 'I break forth,') Hæmoptysis.

Hémocarde, (hemo, and καρδία, 'heart,') Hæmocardiorrhagia.

Hémocardioplastics, (hemo, καρδία, 'heart,' and πλασσω, 'I form,') see Polypus.

Hemo'dia, Hæmodia.

Hémodynamètre, Hæmadynamometer.

Hémodynamomètre, Hæmadynamometer.

Hémoencéphalorrhagie, (hemo, encephalon, and ῥήγνυμι, 'I break forth,') Apoplexy.

Hémohépatorrhagie, Hepatorrhagia.

Hémomètre, Hæmadynamometer.

Hémomyélorrhagie, (hemo, μυελος, 'marrow,' and ῥήγνυμι, 'I break forth,') Apoplexy, spinal.

Hémopéricarde, Hæmopericardium.

Hémophilie, Hæmatophilia.

Hémophobia, Hæmatophobia.

Hémophthalmie, Hæmophthalmia.

Hémoplasie, Hæmatoplasia.

Hémoproctie, see Hæmorrhoids.

Hémoptoïque, Hæmoptoic.

Hémoptique, Hæmoptoic.

Hémoptysie, Hæmoptysis—h. Foudroyante, see Hæmoptysis.

Hémoptysique, Hæmoptoic.

Hemorrhag'ic, Hæmorrhag'icus, (F.) Hémorrhagique. Relating or appertaining to hemorrhage.

HEMORRHAG'IC PLEU'RISY, Hæmatothorax.

Hémorrhagie Buccale, Stomatorrhagia—h. Cérébrale, Apoplexy—h. du Cœur, Hæmocardiorrhagia—h. du Foie, Hepatorrhagia—h. Intersti- tielle, Apoplexy—h. Interstitielle du Poupon, Hæmoptysis—h. des Intestins, Hæmatochezia—h. de la Matrice, Metrorrhagia—h. Méningée, Apoplexy, meningeal—h. de la Moëlle épinière, Apoplexia myelitica—h. Nasale, Epistaxis—h. de la Vessie, Cystirrhagia.

Hemorrhagip'arous, (F.) Hémorrhagipare, (hæmorrhagia, and parire, 'to bring forth,') That which gives occasion to hemorrhage; thus, softening of the neurine may be hæmorrhagiparous.

Hémorrhée, Hæmorrhœa.

Hémorrhinie, (hemo, and ῥιν, 'the nose,') Epistaxis.

Hémorrhôidare (F.). One who is subject to hemorrhoids.

Hemorrhoid'al, Hæmorrhoidal.

Hémorrhôides, Hæmorrhoids—h. Aveugles, Cæcæ hæmorrhôides, see Hæmorrhoids.

Hem'orrhoids, see Hæmorrhoids.

Hémorrhoscopie, (hemo, ῥω, 'I flow,' and σκοπω, 'I examine,') Hæmatoscopy.

Hémospasie, Hæmospasia.

Hémospastique, Hæmospastic.

Hémostasie, Hæmostasia.

Hemostat'ics, Hæmatostatica.

Hémostatiques, Hæmatostatica.

Hemp, Amer'ican, (Sax. hænep,) Cannabis Americana—h. Indian, Apocynum cannabinum, Bangue—h. Seed, see Cannabis sativa.

HEMP SEED CAL'culus. A small mulberry—like urinary calculus, usually multiple.

HEMP, WILD, Ambrosia trifida.

Hemp'weed, Aromat'ic, Eupatorium aromaticum—h. Roundleaved, Eupatorium rotundifolium.

Hémurésie, Hæmaturia.

Hen'bane, Hyoscyamus.

Hen'blindness, Hemeralopia.

Hen'le, Sheath of, see Huxley's sheath.

Hen'na, Lawsonia inermis.

Henrice'a Pharmacear'cha, (after R. S. Henrici, of Copenhagen,) Gentiana chirayita.

Henri'cus Ru'bens, Coleothar.

Hen'sen's Prop'cells, see Prop-cells.

Hep, (Sax. heap,) see Rosa canina.

He'par, gen. He'patis, (ἥπαρ, gen. ἥπατος, 'liver,') The liver. A name for substances resembling liver in appearance. The ancient name for the liver of sulphur, Hepar sulphuris; which is sometimes a compound of sulphur and potassium; at others, of sulphur and potassa. See Potassæ sulphuretum.

HE'PAR ADIPO'SUM, Adiposis hepatica—h. Adulterinum, Spleen.

HE'PAR ANTIMONIA'TUM is a compound of a sulphuret of antimony and an alkali. See Oxydum stibii sulphuratum.

HE'PAR KALI'NUM, Potassii sulphuretum.

HE'PAR MARTIA'LE. A compound of sulphuret of potassa and an oxide of iron.

HE'PAR SAN'GUINIS, see Blood—h. Sinistrum, Spleen.

HE'PAR SUCCENTURIA'TUM. An additional liver or liver lobe; a case of malformation.

HE'PAR SUL'PHURIS, Potassii sulphuretum—h. Sulphuris calcareum, Calcis sulphuretum—h. Sulphuris volatile, Ammoniae sulphuretum—h. Uterinum, Placenta—h. Variegatum, Liver nutmeg.

Hepatal'gia, Hepatodyn'ia, Neural'gia he'patis, Col'ica hepatic'a, (hepato, and αλγος, 'pain,') (F.) Hépatalgie. Pain in the liver. Neuralgia of the liver, (F.) Néuralgie du Foie.

HEPATAL'GIA CALCULO'SA, Colica hepatica—h. Petitiana, Turgescencia vesiculæ fellæ—h. Phlegmonoides, Hepatitis.

Hepataposte'ma, gen. Hepataposte'matis, (hepato, and αποστημα, 'an abscess,') Abscess of the liver.

Hepatatroph'ia, Atroph'ia seu Aridu'ra he' patis, (hepato, and atrophia, 'atrophy.') Atrophy of the liver—a general concomitant of Cirrho'sis hepatis.

Hepataux'ë, Hypertroph'ia hepatis, (hepato, and αὐξη, 'increase,') (F.) Hyperhépatotrophie, Hypertrophie du foie. Hypertrophy of the liver.

Hepateche'ma, gen. Hepateche'matis, Son'itus hepaticus, (hepato, and ἡχημα, 'sound,') Sound rendered by the liver on percussion.

Hepatemphrax'is, (hepato, and εμφρασσω, 'I obstruct,') Emphrax'is hepatis. Hepatic obstruction.

Hepatencephalo'ma, gen. Hepatencephalo'matis, Hepatomyelo'ma, Fun'gus hepatis medullaris, (hepato, and εγκεφαλος, 'encephalon,') Encephaloid of the liver.

Hepate'rus, (ἥπαρ,) Hepaticus, Jecora'rius. A variety of diarrhoea, Fluxus hepaticus.

Hepathæmorrhag'ia, Hæmorrhag'ia hepatica seu hepatis, Hepatorrhag'ia, Apoplex'ia hepatica, (F.) Hémorrhagie du foie, Hémohépatorrhagie, (hepato, and ἡμorrhagia, 'hemorrhage,') Hemorrhage from the liver.

Hepat'io, Hepaticus, Hepate'rus, Hepato'ides, Hepato'des, Jecora'rius, Jec'oral, (F.) Hépatique, Jécoraire, (from ἥπαρ, gen. ἥπαρος, 'liver,') Belonging or relating to or resembling liver.

HEPAT'IC AR'TERY, Arte'ria hepatica. One of the three branches given off by the cœliac. It passes towards the inferior surface of the liver; where it divides into two branches, a right and a left, which proceed towards the corresponding parts of that organ. The right branch gives off the cystic artery. Before dividing, the hepatic artery sends off two considerable branches, the A. pylorica and A. gastroepiploica dextra.

HEPAT'IC DUCT, Duc'tus hepaticus, (F.) Canal hépatique, is about three fingers' breadth in length, and of the size of a quill. It is formed by the union of the biliary ducts, and joins the cystic duct at a very acute angle, to form the ductus choledochus. Its function is to convey the bile from the liver towards the duodenum.

HEPAT'IC ISLETS, see Liver—h. Lobules, see Liver.

HEPAT'IC PLEX'US, Plex'us hepaticus, consists of nervous filaments, sent by the cœliac plexus to the liver, which accompany the hepatic artery.

HEPAT'IC VEINS, Suprahepat'ic Veins, Ve'næ ca'væ hepaticæ, (F.) Veines sus-hépatiques, Intra-lob'ular veins, do not follow the course of the arteries of the same name. They arise in the substance of the liver; converge towards the posterior margin of that viscus, and open into the vena cava inferior. They convey away the blood carried to the liver by the hepatic artery and vena porta.

Hepat'ica. Medicines believed to be capable of affecting the liver.

HEPAT'ICA, (lobed like the liver,) H. triloba—h. Americana, H. triloba—h. Fontana, Marchantia polymorpha—h. Nobilis, H. triloba—h. Stellata, Asperula odorata.

HEPAT'ICA TRI'LOBA, H. America'na, Anemo'në hepatica seu no'bilis, Her'ba trinitatis, Hepatica, Hepaticus flos, Trifo'lium hepaticum seu au'reum, Liv'erwort, Liv'erweed, Tref'oil, No'ble Liv'erwort, Herb Trin'ity, (F.) Hépatique des jardins. The leaves—Hepatica (Ph. U. S.)—are a gentle astringent, but not possessed of much virtue.

Hepatic'ula, (dim. of ἥπαρ, gen. ἥπαρος, 'liver,') Hepatitis, chronic.

Hepaticus, (ἥπατικός,) Hepatic, Hepaterus—h. Flos, Hepatica triloba.

Hepatific'io, (hepato, and facere, factum, 'to make,') Hepatization.

Hep'atine, Glycogenic matter.

Hépatique, Hepatic—h. Étoilée, Asperula odorata—h. des Fontaines, Marchantia polymorpha—h. des Jardins, Hepatica triloba.

Hepatirrhœ'a, Flux'us hepaticus, Dysenter'ia

hepat'ica, Diarrhœ'a hepatica, Hepatorrhœ'a, Hepatoholorrhœ'a, Hepatody'senter'ia, Hepatorrhag'ia, (F.) Hepatirrhée, Flux hépatique, (hepato, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') A species of diarrhoea in which the excreted matters seem to come from the liver, or are much mixed with bile.

He'patis Suspenso'rium, Ligament, suspensory, of the liver.

Hepatisa'tio, Hepatization—h. Pulmonum, Hepatization of the lungs.

Hépatisation, Hepatization—h. Grise, see Hepatization—h. Rouge, see Hepatization.

Hépatite, Hepatitis—h. Interstitielle, see Hepatitis, chronic—h. Suppurée, see Hepatitis.

Hepati'tis, gen. Hepati'tidis, Empres'ma hepati'tis, Can'ima seu Inflamma'tio hepatis, I. Jecin'oris, Fe'bris hepatica inflammato'ria, Hepatal'gia phlegmono'ides, Mor'bus jecin'oris, Hepatophlegmonë, Inflamma'tion of the liver, (F.) Hépatite, Inflammation du foie, Pièce (Provincial); (hepato, and itis,) It may be seated either in the peritoneal covering, Serohepati'tis, Hepati'tis velamento'sa seu extern'a, Peritonit'is hepatica, Perihepati'tis; or in the substance of the liver, Hepati'tis parenchymato'sa; or in both, Purohepati'tis, and may be acute or chronic. The peculiar symptoms are:—pain in the right hypochondrium, shooting to the back and right shoulder, and increased on pressure; difficulty of lying on the left side; sometimes jaundice with cough, and synocha. Its termination is generally by resolution:—in tropical climates it often runs on to suppuration, Jec'oris vom'ica, Hepati'tis apostemato'sa, Sup'purative hepati'tis, (F.) Hépatite Suppurée, the abscess breaking either externally, or forming a communication with the intestines or chest, or breaking into the cavity of the abdomen. The causes are those of inflammation in general. Heat predisposes to it; hence its greater frequency in hot climates. On dissection of those who have died of it, the liver has been found hard and enlarged; color of a deep purple; or the membranes have been more or less vascular; or adhesions, or tubercles, or hydatids, or abscesses, or biliary calculi, may be met with. The treatment must be bold. Bleeding, general and local, fomentations, blisters, purgatives, and the antiphlogistic regimen. In hot climates especially, a new action must be excited by mercury as early as possible.

HEPATI'TIS APOSTEMATO'SA, see Hepatitis.

HEPATI'TIS, CHRON'IC, Hepati'tis longa seu chron'ica, Inflamma'tio hepatis len'ta, Hepatitis occult'a, Hepatic'ula, Subinflamma'tio hepatis, Chron'ic liv'er disease, (F.) Chronohépatite, is not as common as is believed. It may be suspected from the existence of the symptoms above mentioned, when in a minor degree; enlargement, constant dull pain in the region of the liver; sallow countenance; high-colored urine; clay-colored feces, &c. The great object of treatment is to excite a new action by mercury and counter-irritants, and to keep the liver free by cathartics.

A chronic form of Interstit'ial Hepatitis, (F.) Hépatite Interstitielle, Sclérose du Foie, is generally described under the name of Cirrho'sis of the Liver. See Cirrhosis hepatis.

HEPATI'TIS CYS'TICA, Cholecystitis.

HEPATI'TIS, DIFFU'SED, Acu'te or Yel'low Atrophy of the Liver, Acu'te Wast'ing or Soft'ening of the Liv'er, Fa'tal Jaun'dice, (F.) Atrophie Jaune Aiguë, Ictère Grave, I. Malin, I. Typhoïde, I. Hémorrhagique. A form of parenchymatous inflammation of the liver, characterized by a rapid and complete destruction of the hepatic cells throughout every part of the organ, occurring in early adult life, and indicated by jaundice, sometimes with petechiæ and extensive ecchymosis, vomiting of ingesta and mucus, and afterwards of altered blood resembling coffee-grounds; delirium, convulsions, and coma, usually ending fatally in about a week. The liver is found, on post-mortem examination, to be extensively atrophied, sometimes as much as two-thirds of its normal volume having disappeared.

HEPATITIS EXTERNA, see Hepatitis — h. Occulta, H. chronic — h. Parenchymatosa, see Hepatitis — h. Suppurative, see Hepatitis — h. Vellamentosa, see Hepatitis.

Hepatitis, Hepatitis, Hepatitis, (ἥπαρ, ἥπαρος, 'liver.') Conversion into a liver-like substance. Applied to the lungs when gorged with effused matters, so that they are no longer pervious to the air — Hepatitis pulmo-num, Carnificatio pulmo-num. In such state, they are said to be hepatized.

HEPATIZA'TION, GRAY, (F.) Hépatisation grise, Induration grise, Ramollissement gris, Infiltration purulente, characterizes the third stage of pneumonia, or stage of purulent infiltration.

HEPATIZA'TION, RED, (F.) Hépatisation rouge, Edurcissement rouge, Ramollissement rouge, characterizes the first stage of consolidation of the lungs in pneumonia.

Hepat'izon, (ἥπαριζειν, 'to resemble the liver,') Chloasma.

Hep'ato, (from ἥπαρ, gen. ἥπατος, 'liver,') in composition, liver.

Hepatoc'acé, (hepato, and κακος, 'evil,') Gangrene of the liver.

Hepatoc'e'lē, (hepato, and κῆλη, 'a tumor,') Her'nia hepatic, Her'nia of the liv'er, (F.) Hernie du foie. The liver has never been found entirely out of the abdominal cavity. Increase of its bulk, or injuries of the parietes of the abdomen, have been the sole cause of the protrusions which have been occasionally met with, especially in infants, in whom the upper part of the linea alba is very weak, and indeed scarcely seems to exist. Sauvages has distinguished two species of hepatocoele: — the ven'tral (in the linea alba), and the umbil'ical or hepatomph'alum.

Hepatochlorrhœ'a, (hepato, χολη, 'bile,' and ῥέω, 'I flow,') Hepatirrhœa.

Hepatocol'icum. A ligament of the liver, described by Haller as passing from the gall-bladder and contiguous sinus portarum across the duodenum to the colon. Another, termed Hepatoren'al, descends from the root of the liver to the kidney. They are both peritoneal.

Hepatocys'tic, Hepatocysticus, Cystidepaticus, (F.) Hépatocystique, (hepato, and κύστις, 'bladder,') Relating to the liver and gall-bladder.

HEPATOCYS'TIC DUCT, Ductus Hepatocysticus. The choledoch duct.

Hepato'des, Hepatic.

Hep'atodyme, Hepatodymus, (hepato, and ἰδυμος, 'a twin,') A monster united at the liver, and double above.

Hepatodyn'ia, (hepato, and ὀδυνη, 'pain,') Hepatalgia.

Hepatodysenter'ia, Hepatirrhœa.

Hepatogas'tric, Gastrohepatic.

Hepatogastrocholo'sis, (hepato, γαστήρ, 'the stomach,' and χολη, 'bile,') Fever, bilious; Fever, gastric.

Hepatog'raphy, Hepatographia, (hepato, and γραφη, 'a description,') The part of anatomy which describes the liver.

Hepatohæ'mia, Hyperæmia hepatis, Hepatic Engorge'ment, (F.) Hypérémie du Foie, (hepato, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Sanguineous congestion of the liver.

Hepato'ides, (ἥπαριδης, from hepato, and εἶδος, 'form,') Hepatic.

Hepatolithi'asis, (hepato, and λίθιασις, 'formation of stone,') The formation of concretions, Hepatolithi, in the liver.

Hepatol'ogy, Hepatologia, (hepato, and λογία, 'a discourse, 'treatise,') A treatise on the liver.

Hepatoma'lacia, (hepato, and μαλακία, 'softness,') Malaco'sis hepatis, (F.) Ramollissement du Foie. Softening of the liver.

Hepatom'phalus, (hepato, and ομφαλος, 'navel,') Hernia of the liver at the umbilicus.

Hepatomyelo'ma, gen. Hepatomyelo'matis, (hepato, and μυελος, 'marrow,') Hepatencephaloma.

Hepaton'cus, (hepato, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') Tumefaction of the liver.

Hepatoparec'tama, gen. Hepatoparectam'atis, (hepato, and παρεκταμα, 'considerable extension,') Excessive enlargement of the liver.

Hepatopathi'a, (hepato, and πάθος, 'affection,') Liv'er dise'ase. Disease of the liver.

Hépatopathie Cancéreuse, Hepatoscirrhus — h. Tuberculeuse, Hépatostromosie.

Hepatophleg'moné, (hepato, and φλεγμονη, 'inflammation,') Hepatitis.

Hepatophthi'sis, Phthisis hepatica, (hepato, and φθίω, 'I consume,') Consumption from sup-puration of the liver.

Hepatorrhag'ia, (hepato, and ῥήγνυμι, 'I break forth,') Hepatirrhœa, Hepathæmorrhagia.

Hepatorrhex'is, (hepato, and ῥήξις, 'rupture,') Rupture of the liver.

Hepatorrhœ'a, Hepatirrhœa.

Hépatosarcomie, (hepato, and sarcoma,) Hepatoscirrhus.

Hepatoscir'rhus, (hepato, and σκίρρως, 'cancerous induration,') Scir'rhus seu Carcino'ma hepatis, Encephalo'sis or Carcino'ma or Cancer of the liver, (F.) Hépatosarcomie, Hépatopathie cancéreuse, Cancer du Foie. Scirrhus or Cancer of the liver.

Hépatostromosie, Tubercula hepatis, (F.) Tubercules du Foie, Hépatopathie tuberculeuse; (hepato, and stroma, 'a tumor, 'a scrofulous tumor,') Tubercle of the liver.

Hepatot'omy, (hepato, and τομή, 'incision,') Dissection of the liver.

Hephæst'ic, (ἥφαιστος, 'Vulcan,') Relating to the forge or hammer, as Hephæstic hemiple'gia. See Hammer palsy.

Hepi'alos, (ἥπιλος,) Epialos.

Heps, (pl. of hep,) see Rosa canina.

Hepse'ma, gen. Hepse'matis, (ἑψημα,) Decoc-tion.

Hepse'sis, (ἑψησις,) Decoction.

Hep'tal Cy'cle, see Cycle.

Heptal'on Grave'olens, Hog'wort, Bear's fright. An indigenous plant, which has a fetid porcine smell, and is said to be used by the Indians as a diaphoretic, cathartic, &c.

Heptaphar'macum, (ἑπτα, 'seven,' and φάρμακον, 'a remedy,') A medicine composed of seven substances: cerusse, litharge, pitch, wax, colophony, frankincense, and bullock's fat. It was regarded as laxative, suppurating, and healing.

Heptaphyl'lum, (ἑπτα, 'seven,' and φύλλον, 'a leaf,') Tormentilla.

Heptapleur'on, (ἑπτα, 'seven,' and πλευρον, 'a rib,') Plantago major.

Heracle'um, (dedicated to Ἡρακλῆς, 'Her-cules,') see H. lanatum — h. Branca, H. spondy-lium.

HERACLE'UM SPONDYL'IUM, H. Bran'ca, Bran'ca ursi'na seu German'ica, Spondyl'ium, Sphondyl'ium, Cow Par'snep, All'heal, Cow'mumble, (Sc.) Binewand, (Prov.) Cushia, (F.) Berce, Bran-cur-sine bâtarde, Fausse Acanthe. Order, Umbel-lifera. Sec. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. The root of this plant has a strong, rank smell, and a pungent, almost caustic, taste. It has been given as a tonic, stomachic, and carminative; both in powder and in decoction. The Russians, Lithu-anians, and Poles obtain from its seeds and leaves, by fermentation, a very intoxicating spirituous liquor, which they call Paret.

The root of Heracle'um Lana'tum, Mas'terwort,

Cow par'neep, was formerly in the secondary list of the Pharmacopœia of the United States.

Heracle'us Mor'bus, (ἡρακλειος, 'herculean,') Epilepsy.

Herb, Her'ba, Bot'anē. A non-ligneous plant, which dies down to the ground at least, in winter.

HERB, BLES'ED, Geum urbanum — h. Christoph, Actea spicata.

Herbier, Herbarium, Ingluvies.

Herbiv'orous, Herbiv'orus, (F.) Hérbivore, (herba, and voro, 'I eat.') An epithet applied to animals which feed on herbs.

Her'borist, Herba'rius, (from herba,) One who deals in useful plants. An Herb'alist or Herb'-arist.

Herb'orization, Herba'rum inquisit'io. An excursion, made with the view of collecting plants. Such excursions are directed by the Apothecaries' Company of London, for the use of their apprentices, &c.

Herbs, Five Cap'illary, Quin'que her'bæ capilla'res, were, anciently, hart's tongue, black, white, and golden maidenhair, and spleenwort.

HERBS, FIVE EMOL'LIENT, Quin'que her'bæ emollien'tes, were, anciently, beet, mallow, marshmallow, French mercury, and violet.

Her'cules All'heal, Pastinaca opoponax.

Hercule'us Mor'bus, (ἡρακλειος νοσος,) Epilepsy.

Héréditaire, Hereditary.

Hered'itary, Hæredita'rius, Heredita'rius, Genitil'ius, Sym'phytos, Syn'genes, (F.) Héréditaire, (heres, gen. hære'dis, 'an heir.') An epithet given to diseases, or to predispositions to diseases, communicated from progenitors. This communication is termed, by the French, Hérédité, Heredic'ity, and such diseases are said to be inherited. They may exist at birth; or may supervene at a more or less advanced period of existence. Hereditary diseases, Mor'bi heredita'rii, (F.) Maladies héréditaires, often prevail among several members of a family, or are family diseases or complaints.

Hérédité, see Hereditary.

Hermaphrode'ity, (from Ἑρμης, 'Mercury,' and Ἀφροδιτη, 'Venus,') Hermaphrodis'ia, Hermaphroditis'mus, Hermaphrodis'mus, Fab'rica androg'yna, Androgyn'ia, Gynan'dria, Hermaph'rodism, Hermaph'roditism, (F.) Androgynisme, Gynandrisme, Hermaphroditisme. Appertaining to Mercury and Venus. Union of the two sexes in the same individual.

Hermaphrodis'ia, Hermaphrodeity.

Hermaph'rodism, Hermaphrodeity.

Hermaph'rodite, Hermaphroditus, Gyn'ida, Androg'ynus, Monæ'cious, (Sc.) Searcht, (Prov.) Scrat. One who possesses the attributes of male and female: who unites in himself the two sexes. A term, applied to an animal or plant which is, at the same time, both male and female. True hermaphrodites are only met with in the lower degrees of the animal scale, among the zoophytes, mollusca, or gasteropoda. The individuals of the human species, regarded as hermaphrodites, owe this appearance to a vicious conformation of the genital organs; a kind of monstrosity, which renders them unfit for generation, although an attentive examination may exhibit the true sex. Hermaphrodites have, likewise, been described, which, instead of uniting the attributes of both sexes, cannot be considered male or female. These have been called neu'tral hermaph'rodites.

Hermaphrodit'io, Hermaphrodit'icus, Androg'ynous, (F.) Hermaphroditique. Relating or appertaining to an hermaphrodite.

Hermaphroditis'mus, Hermaphrodeity.

Hermaphrodi'tus, Hermaphrodite.

Hermetica Doctrina, Hermetica ars, (F.) Hermétique. The doctrine of Hermes, a celebrated Egyptian philosopher, who is considered the father of alchemy. That part of chemistry whose object was the pretended transmutation of the metals.

Hermetical Sealing. The treatment of gunshot wounds, as of the chest, by completely closing the edges with sutures and collodion.

Hermodactylus, Dactyletus, An'ima articulo-rum, ('Ερμης, 'Mercury,' and δακτύλος, 'a finger;') or rather from Hermus, a river in Asia, upon whose banks it grows, and δακτύλος, 'a date;') or from 'Ερμης, 'Mercury,' and δακτύλος, 'a date;') (F.) Hermodactyle, Hermodacte ou Hermodate. The root of the Hermodactyl was formerly used as a cathartic. By some, it is supposed to be identical with the Pris tuberosa. The best testimony seems to be in favor of its being a variety of the colchicum, — Colchicum Illyricum. Under the name Hermodactyls, roots or bulbs of an unknown plant, growing in the countries about the eastern extremity of the Mediterranean, are sold in the shops of Europe.

Hermodate, Hermodactylus.

Hermophilus, (Ερμης, 'Mercury,' and φίλος, 'a lover.') Fond of mercury as a medicine.

Hernia, (from ἑρνος, 'a sprout,' 'a shoot' [?]) Ra'mex, Ruptu'ra, R. hernio'sa, Crepatu'ra, Ectop'ia hernio'sa, Ce'lē, Rup'ture, Burst, (F.) Hernie, Hargne, Descente, Effort, Greveure, Rompeure. Any tumor, formed by the displacement of a viscus or a portion of a viscus, which has escaped from its natural cavity by some aperture, and projects externally. Herniæ have been divided into,—1. Hernia of the Brain, or Encephalocele; 2. Hernia of the Thorax, or Pneumocele; 3. Hernia of the Abdomen.

Abdominal Herniæ are remarkable for their frequency, variety, and the danger attending them. They are produced by the protrusion of the viscera, contained in the abdomen, through the natural or accidental apertures in the parietes of that cavity. The organs, which form them most frequently, are the intestines and the epiploon. These herniæ have been divided, according to the apertures by which they escape, into:

1. Inguinal or Suprapubic Herniæ. These issue by the inguinal canal: they are called Bubonocelē, when small; and Serot' al Hernia or Oscheocelē, in man, when they descend into the scrotum: — Vul'var Hernia or Puden'dal or Lab'ial Hernia, Episiocele, in women, when they extend to the Labia majora. See Bubonocelē. Direct' inguinal hernia, Ventro' inguinal hernia, is where the protruding parts, in place of entering the internal ring, and descending along the inguinal canal, make a direct passage through the parietes of the abdomen opposite the external ring. 2. Crural or Femoral Hernia, Merocelē, when they issue by the crural canal. 3. Infra-pubic or Subpubic Hernia, (F.) Hernie sous-pubienne, Oödocele, Opeocelē, Opodeocelē, Her'nia foraminis ova'lis seu obturato'ria, when the viscera escape through the opening, which gives passage to the infrapubic vessels. 4. Ischiatic or Sciatic Hernia; when it takes place through the sacrosacral notch. 5. Umbilical Hernia, Hernia Umbilical'is, Exom'phalos, Omphalocelē; when it occurs at the umbilicus or near it. 6. Epigastric Hernia;—occurring through the linea alba, above the umbilicus. 7. Hypogastric or Infraumbilical Hernia, Caliocele, Hypogastrocele,—when it occurs through the linea alba below the umbilicus. 8. Perineal Hernia, Mesoscelocelē, Hernia perine'i seu perineal'is, — Perinocelē, Perineocelē, when it takes place through the levator ani, and appears at the perineum. 9. Vag'inal Hernia, Colpocele, Colocele seu Elythrocele—through the parietes of the vagina. 10. Diaphragmatic Hernia, Diaphragmatocele; when it passes through the diaphragm. The prolongation of the hernial sac in various directions within the abdominal walls is called Intraparietal or Intermuscular hernia, (F.) Hernie en bissac.

Herniæ are likewise distinguished—according to the viscera forming them—into Enterocelē, Epiplocele, Enteroepiplocele, Gastrocele, Cystocelē, Hepatocele, Splenocelē, &c.

When a hernia can be restored to its natural cavity, by the aid of pressure, &c., properly applied, it is said to be reducible. It is, on the contrary, irreducible, when adhesion, bulk, &c., oppose its return. When the aperture, which has given passage to the hernia, occasions more or less constriction of the protruded portion, the hernia is said to be incarcerated, H. obstruc'ta, or strangulated, H. strangula'ta; and, if the constriction be not removed, constipation, hiccup, vomiting, and all the signs of violent inflammation, followed by gangrene, supervene, with alteration of the features, small pulse, cold extremities, and death. See Incarceration.

The therapeutical indications are—1. As regards reducible hernia:—to replace the viscera in the abdomen by the taxis; and to retain them there by the use of a truss, which, if properly adapted, may effect a radical cure. 2. As regards irreducible hernia:—to support the tumor by an appropriate suspensory bandage. 3. As regards strangulated hernia:—to have recourse to the taxis; bloodletting; warm bath; tobacco glysters; ice to the tumor; and, if these should not succeed, to perform an operation, which consists in dividing the covering of the hernia, and cutting the aponeurotic ring, which causes the strangulation; reducing the displaced viscera, unless their diseased condition should require them to be retained without; dressing the wound appropriately; restoring the course of the fæces by means of gentle glysters—preventing or combating inflammation of the abdominal viscera; conducting the wound to cicatrization, by appropriate means; and afterwards supporting the cicatrix by a bandage.

The word hernia was also used, of old, for the scrotum, and, not unfrequently, for the testicle.

HER'NIA HUMORALIS, Empres'ma Orchit'is, Didym'itis, Orchit'is, Orchidit'is, Testit'is, Inflammatio testium, Inflammation of the Testicle, Swelled Testicle, Her'nia Ven'eri, Orchiocele, Orchidocelē, Orchidon'eus, (F.) Inflammation du testicule, Orchite. Swelling and inflammation of the testicle is a common symptom of gonorrhœa, (F.) Chaudepisse tombée dans les Bourses; but it may arise from external injuries, or from other causes. It is a disease which cannot be mistaken, and the treatment must obviously be strongly antiphlogistic, supporting the testicle during the treatment, and for some time afterwards; methodical compression has also been found useful. The disease is not generally of a serious character, going off as suddenly as it comes on. As it affects the epididymis more especially, when supervening on gonorrhoea or blennorrhoea, it is sometimes termed blennorrhag'ic epididymitis or gonorrhoeal orchitis.

HER'NIA TEST'IS, Benign' Fun'gus of the Testis, Granular Swelling of the Testis, Procidencia Testiculi Tubulorum. Protrusion of the tubuli of the testicle through a rupture or ulceration of its fibrous envelope, the tunica albuginea.

HER'NIA OF THE TONGUE, Glossocœle—h. Umbilicalis, Epiplocephalon, Exomphalos—h. Umbilici aquosa, Hydromphalum—h. Urachi, Uromphalus—h. Uteri, Hysterocele—h. of the Vagina, Elythrocele, see Hernia—h. Varicosa, Varicocœle—h. Varicose, Cirsocele—h. Venarum, Varix—h. Veneris, Hernia humoralis—h. Ventosa, Physocœle—h. Ventralis, see Ventral—h. Ventriculi, Gastrocœle—h. Ventroinguinal, see Hernia—h. Vesicæ urinariæ, Cystocœle—h. Vesicovaginalis, see Cystocœle—h. Vulvar, Pudendal hernia—h. Zirbalis, Epiplocele.

Herniaire, Hernial, Herniaria glabra.

Her'nial, Herniarius, Her'nious, (F.) Herniaire. Belonging to or concerning hernia:—as Hernial Bandage, Hernial Sac, &c.

(F.) Hernié, Her'niated, is applied to a part enveloped in a hernial sac.

(F.) Hernieux, Hargneux, Cele'tes, Rup'tured,

Burst, Bursten, means one affected with hernia; and Chirurgien herniaire, one who devotes himself to the treatment of hernia.

Hernié, Hernial.

Herniemp'rag'mus, Herniemp'raz'is, (hernia, and εμπαγμος, 'obstruction.') Mechanical obstruction of hernial canal for radical cure of hernia.

Hernieux, see Hernial.

Herniole, Herniaria glabra.

Her'niotome, (hernia, and τομή, 'incision.') A knife especially adapted to operations for hernia.

Herniot'omy, (hernia, and τομή, 'incision.') Celotomy.

Her'nious, Hernial.

Hero'ic, Hero'icus, Hero'ius, Hero'us, (ήρωας, 'a hero.') An epithet applied to remedies or practice of a violent character.

Herpe'don, (ερπηδων) Herpes.

Her'pen, (ερπην) Herpes.

Her'pes, gen. Herpe'tis, (ερπης, genitive, ερπητος.) Er'pes, Herpe'don, Her'pen, Ser'pens, (ερπας, 'I creep;' because it creeps and spreads about the skin,) Ec'phlysis Her'pes, Cytis'ma Her'pes, Olophlyc'tis, Tet'ter, Fret, (F.) Herpès, Dartre. A vesicular disease, which, in most of its forms, passes through a regular course of increase, maturation, decline, and termination, in from 10 to 14 days. The vesicles arise in distinct, but irregular, clusters, which commonly appear in quick succession, and near together, on an inflamed base; generally attended with heat, pain, and considerable constitutional disorder. The term, like most others which refer to cutaneous diseases, has not been accurately defined. The ancients had three varieties: the mil'iary, κεχρηστος; vesic'ular, φλυκταινωδης, and ero'ding, εσθρομενος. Bateman has the following varieties:—1. HERPES PHLYCTENO'DES, Her'pes milia'ris, Ec'phlysis Her'pes milia'ris, Nirles, (F.) Dartre phlyctenoides, in which the vesicles are millet-sized; pellucid; clusters commencing on an uncertain part of the body, and being progressively strewed over the rest of the surface; succeeded by fresh crops. 2. HERPES ZOS'TER, Zos'ter, Zo'na ig'nea seu serp'igino'sa, Ig'nis Per'sicus, Cinzill'a, Cin'gulum, Sa'cer ig'nis, Ec'phlysis Her'pes zos'ter, Her'pes peris'celis, Erysip'elas zos'ter seu phlyctenoi'des seu pustulo'sa, Zo'na, Cir'cinus, Perizo'ma, (F.) Ceinture, C. dartreuse, Feu Persique, Erysipèle pustuleux, Shingles, (Prov.) Cruels, in which the vesicles are pearl-sized; the clusters spreading round the body like a girdle; at times confluent, and occasionally preceded by constitutional irritation. A form of this affection seen on the side of the nose, the upper eyelid and the forehead, is called Her'pes zos'ter fronta'lis, H. opthal'micus, browshin'gles. 3. HERPES CIRCINA'TUS, Formi'ca ambulato'ria, An'nulus re'pens, Her'pes serpi'go, Tin'ea circina'ta, Serpi'go, Ec'phlysis Her'pes Circina'tus, Ring'worm, Vesic'ular Ring'worm, (F.) Herpès circiné, Anneau Herpétique, consisting of vesicles with a reddish base, uniting in rings; the area of the rings slightly discolored, often followed by fresh crops. 4. HERPES LABIA' LIS, and 5. HERPES PRÆPUTIA' LIS, Aph' the præpu'tii, Ulcus'cula præpu'tii, appearing, respectively, on the lips and prepuce. 6. HERPES I' RIS, I'ris, Rain'bow worm, occurring in small circular patches, each of which is composed of concentric rings of different colors. To these may be added, HERPES EX'EDENS, H. esthiom'enus seu depas'cens seu fe'rus seu estiom'enus seu fe'rox, Ec'phlysis Her'pes ex'edens, Dar'ta excoriati'va seu maligna, Lupus non ex'edens, Vitili'go(?), Leu'cè(?), Formi'ca corrosi'va, For'mix, Pap'ula fe'ra, Ul'cerative Ring'worm, A'gria, (F.) Dartre rongeante, in which the vesicles are hard; clusters thronged; fluid dense, yellow or reddish, hot, acrid, corroding the subjacent skin, and spreading in serpentine trails.

All the varieties demand simply an antiphlogistic treatment, when attended with febrile irritation. The herpes circinatus, alone, requires the use of astringent applications which have the power of repressing the eruption.

HERPES CIRCINA'TUS, see Herpes.

HERPES COR'NEÆ, Phlycten'ular Corne'itis. Inflammation of the cornea, accompanied with the appearance of vesicles. When the latter are numerous, and occupy a considerable expanse of the cornea, the affection is known as pan'nus scrofulo'sus. See Ophthalmia and Corneitis.

Hir'quus, ('a goat,') Hircus, Canthus (greater), Hircismus, Tragus.

Hirsu'ties, (hirtus, 'hairy,') Das'yma, Das'ygtes, Tricho'sis hirsu'ties, Hair'iness. Growth of hairs on extraneous parts, or superfluous growth on parts; as in cases of bearded women. When congenital, it is termed Hirsu'ties adnata.

Hiru'do, gen. Hiru'dinis. The Leech or Leach, Sanguisuga, Bdel'la, (F.) Sanguis, (haurio, 'I draw out,' or from hæreo, 'I stick' [?].) In medicine, Hiru'do seu Sanguisuga Medicina'lis, Bdel'la Medicina'lis or Medic'inal Leech, and Hirudo Sanguisuga officina'lis are generally employed. In the United States, H. dec'ora is used. The leech lives in fresh water, and feeds on the blood of animals, which it sucks, after having pierced the skin with its three sharp teeth. This habit has been taken advantage of to produce local bloodletting. In applying the leech, the part must be wiped dry; and if there be difficulty in making it suck, a little milk or cream may be applied. When satiated, it will drop off, and by applying a little salt or vinegar to its head it will disgorge the blood. A good English leech will take about half an ounce of blood, including that which flows by fomenting the part subsequently. The American takes less.

HIRU'DO ARTIFICIA'LIS, Antlia sanguisuga — h. Decora, see Hirudo — h. Medicinalis, Hirudo.

Hirundina'ria, (from hirundo.) Asclepias vinetoxicum, Lysimachia nummularia.

Hirun'do, gen. Hirun'dinis, Chel'idon, (from hærendo, 'by sticking;' because it sticks its nests against walls [?].) The Swallow. The nests of the swallow were once employed as rubefacients, boiled in vinegar. The edible birds' nests of the Hirundo esculenta of the Indian Archipelago are highly prized, especially by the Chinese, as an article of diet. They have not been accurately analyzed, but seem to be of a mucilaginous character. They are formed by the bird vomiting the food which it has taken. See Aleyon.

Hispan'icum Vir'idé, ('Spanish green,') Cupri subacetas.

Hispid'itas, (hispidus, 'hairy,') Dystoëchiasis, Phalangosis.

Hispid'ula, Antennaria dioicum.

Hiss'ing Respira'tion, see Râle sibilant.

His'tioid, Histoid.

Histiolog'ical, Histological.

Histiol'ogy, (histion, dim. of istos, 'a tissue,') and λογος, 'a description,') Histology.

Histochemi'a, see Chemistry.

Histochem'istry, see Chemistry.

Histoch'ymy, see Chemistry.

Histodial'ysis, (histos, and διαλυσις, 'dissolution,') A morbid dissolution of the tissues.

Histogen'esis, Histogeny.

Histogenet'ic, Histogenet'icus, (F.) Histogénétique. Tissue-making. (Same etymon as the next.) Relating or appertaining to histogeny or the formation and development of the organic textures.

HISTOGENET'IC ELEMENTS OF NUTRIT'ION, see Plastic element — h. Molecules, see Plastic element.

Histog'eny, Histogen'ia, Histogen'esis, (F.) Histogénie, Histogénèse, Tissue formation, (histos, and γένεσις, 'generation,') The formation and development of the organic textures.

His'toid, His'tioid, (histos, and αἶδος, 'resemblance,') A term applied to tumors whose contents closely resemble the normal texture of the body; as fat, hair, teeth, skin, &c.

Histolog'ia, (histos, and λογος, 'a description,') Histology.

Histolog'ical, Histolog'icus, Histiolog'ical, Histiolog'icus, (F.) Histologique. Relating to histology. Applied, also, at times, to the natural transformations that occur in the tissues in the embryo, in contradistinction to morphological, which applies to the alterations in the form of the several parts of the embryo.

Histology, Histolog'ia, Histiology, Histolog'ia, Anat'omy of the Tissues, (F.) Histologie, Anatomie de Texture, (histos, and logos, 'a description.') Anatomy (general). The term is also more particularly appropriated to the minute anatomy of the tissues. See Anatomy.

Patholog'ical Histology, Microscopic patholog'ical Anat'omy, is the morbid anatomy of the tissues.

Histolysis, (histos, and lysis, 'solution.') The decay and dissolution of the organic tissues and of the blood. It includes the various forms of retrograde metamorphosis and degeneration.

Histolytic, (histos, and lysis, 'solution.') Relating or appertaining to histolysis or the transformation and disintegration of tissues.

HISTOLYTIC MOLECULES, see Plastic elements.

Histon'omy, Histon'omy, (histos, and nomos, 'law.') The aggregate of laws which preside over the formation and arrangement of the organic tissues.

History, Medical, Histo'ria Medici'næ. A narration of the chief circumstances, and the persons connected with them, in the progress of medicine.

Histos, (istos, 'a web or tissue.') The organic texture, Textu'ra seu Te'la organ'ica.

Histotomy, Histotom'ia, (histos, and tomē, 'incision.') Dissection of the tissues.

Histotriteur, (histo, and terere, 'to rub.') Écraseur.

Histotritie, see Écraseur.

Histotrophic, Histotroph'icus, (histos, and τροφή, 'nourishment.') See Plastic element.

Hives, Cynanche trachealis, Urticaria vari-cella, (from Sax. hearan, 'to raise' [?].) In Scotland, according to Dr. Jameson, Hives or Hyees means any eruption of the skin, proceeding from an internal cause; and, in Lothian, it is used to denote both the red and the yellow gum. In the United States it is vaguely employed; most frequently, perhaps, for Urticaria.

HIVES, BOLD, Cynanche trachealis, Urticaria—h. Eating, Rupia escharotica.

Hive'syrup, Syrupus scillæ compositus.

Hoar'hound, Marrubium.

Hoarse'ness, (from Sax. har, by onomatopœia,) Raucedo.

Hoast, (Sax. hþorða, [G.] Husten.) Tussis.

Hob'bil, Idiot.

Hob'nail Liv'er, Cirrhosis of the liver. Liver, nutmeg.

Hoc, Alcea rosea.

Hock, (Sax. hoh.) Poples.

Hocks, Alcea rosea.

Hod (Prov.), Crick in the neck.

Hodg'kin's Dise'ase, (after Dr. Hodgkin, a distinguished London pathologist,) Gland'ular Sarco'ma, Lymphaden'oma, Adén'ia. A chronic morbid affection—a form of scrofulous cachexia—mainly characterized by an enormous enlargement of the lymphatic glands of the body, along with a peculiar deposit in the spleen. Iron and codliver oil seem to be the best remedies.

Hoff, Poples.

Hog Gum, Doc'tor Gum. A glutinous substance said to be derived from the Rhus Metopium, a small tree growing in Jamaica, flowing from incisions in the bark, and to have emetic properties. By others it is ascribed to the Moronebea Coccinea. It is used in Jamaica as an ointment with lard, wax, and rosin for the same purposes as Burgundy pitch.

Hog'lice, Onisci aselli.

Hog's Lard, Adeps præparatus.

Hog'wort, Heptallon graveolens.

Hoist (Sc.), (Sax. hþorða, [G.] Husten.) Tussis.

Holanencepha'lia, (δολος, 'the whole,' and anencephalia.) Entire absence of brain,—the same as Anencephalia.

Holarthri'tis, (δολος, 'the whole,' and arthritis.) Hamarthrites.

Hol'cē, (δληκη.) A drachm.

Hol'cimus, (δληκμος, from δληκη, 'a weight.') A tumor of the liver.

Hol'cus Sorg'hum, Panicum Italicum.

Holene (Sc.), (Sax. holen.) Ilex aquifolium.

Hol'era, Cholera.

Holes, Burnt, Rupia escharotica.

Hol'lands, Gin.

Hol'len (Prov.), (Sax. holen.) Ilex aquifolium.

Hol'lyhock, Com'mon, Alcea rosea.

Holmes Weed, Scrophularia nodosa.

Holmis'cus, (δλησκος.) Alveolus.

Hol'mus, (δλημος.) Mortar.

Ho'lo, (from δολος, 'whole,') in composition, the whole.

Holoblas'tic, (holo, and βλαστος, 'a germ.') A term applied to the ova of viviparous animals, in which the whole, or almost all, of the yolk is directly formative, and only a slight part, or no portion, nutritive.

Holo'cyron, Teucrium chamæpitys.

Hologanglii'tis, (holo, ganglion, and itis.) Cholera.

Holonarco'sis, (holo, and ναρκωσις, 'stupor.') Narcosis of the whole body, Torpefac'tio univer-sa'tis.

Holop'athy, Holopathi'a, (F.) Holopathie, (δολος, 'whole,' and πάθος, 'affection.') A doctrine which teaches that diseases, as they present themselves, are but phases or 'episodes' of a general affection of the organism—such affection or diathesis producing the phases, when circumstances favor their manifestation.

Holophyl'ctides, Phlyctæna.

Holos'teum Alsi'nē, Alsine media.

Holos'teus, (holo, and οστέον, 'a bone.') Osteo-colla.

Holotte'anus, (holo, and tetanus.) See Tetanus.

Holoton'ia, (holo, and τενω, 'I stretch.') Holotonicus, Tetanus.

Holoton'icus, Holoton'ia. A spasm of the whole body—a variety of tetanus.

Hol'yn (Sc.), (Sax. holeyn.) Ilex aquifolium.

Hol'ywell, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Holywell is a town in Wales, and takes its name from the famous well of St. Winifred. It is a simple cold water, remarkable for its purity.

Hom'agra, Omagra.

Hom'burg, Min'eral Wa'ters of. This town in Nassau, nine miles from Frankfort, has several springs, which contain the chlorides of sodium, magnesium, and calcium, carbonates of lime, magnesia, iron, sulphate of soda, &c. They are recommended in gouty, dyspeptic, and other derangements of the abdominal viscera, strumous enlargements, debility of the reproductive organs, &c.

Homeop'athy, Homœopathy.

Homer'da, (homo, 'man,' and merda, 'excrement.') Stercus humanum.

Home'ria Colli'na, (after Homer,) Cape Tul'ip. A poisonous South African plant, Nat. Ord. Iridææ, the bulb of which acts as a violent acro-narcotic, producing fatal results very speedily.

Home'sickness, Nostalgia.

Homici'dal, Traculen'tus, Fe'rus, (homo, 'man,') and cædo, 'I kill.') Pertaining or relating to homicide or the killing of man.

HOMICIDAL INSANITY, Homici'dal Monomani'a, Androphonoma'nia, (F.) Monomanie homicide. Insanity, with an irresistible impulse to destroy life.

Homil'ia, (ὁμιλία,) Coition.

Hom'iny, (of Indian derivation.) Maize or Indian corn hulled and coarsely broken. It is prepared for food by being mixed with water and boiled.

HOM'INY, WHEAT'EN, see Groats.

Homio'sis, Homoiosis.

Homme, Homo.

Ho'mo, gen. Hom'inis, (F.) Homme, Man,—the chief and most perfect of the mammalia; in Greek, ἀνθρώπος, Anthro'pos, from ana, 'upwards,' and trepo, 'I turn;' because man, alone, of all animals, possesses the natural power of standing erect. He is also the only animal whose incisor teeth, wedged in a projecting jaw, are absolutely vertical. Man is especially distinguished from other mammalia by the faculty which he possesses of classing his ideas; comparing them with each other; and connecting, representing, and transmitting them by signs and articulate sounds. He possesses in the highest degree all the attributes of intelligence—memory, judgment, and imagination. He inhabits all countries—the burning regions of the torrid zone, and the chilling atmosphere of the polar climes. In different situations he presents in his figure, color, and stature, differences which have caused mankind to be divided by naturalists into races or varieties. The number of such races can only be approximated. Blumenbach admits five—the Caucasian, Ethiopian, Mongolian, Malay, and American. Every division must necessarily be arbitrary, and the individuals composing each variety are far from being alike.

Ho'mo ALA'TUS, ('winged man,') see Alatus.

Ho'mo CAUDA'TUS, ('tailed man,') A fabulous, tailed variety of the human species, 'incola orbis antaretici,' admitted by Linnaeus, although he is uncertain whether to rank them with men or apes!

Ho'mo FAT'UUS, Idiot.

Homoëd'rus, (ὅμοιον, 'together,' and ἰδρα, 'seat,') Having the same seat. Mor'bi homoëd'ri: diseases that have the same seat.

Homæ'o, (from ὅμοιος, 'like,') in composition, like.

Homœomorph'ous, (homæo, and μορφή, 'shape,') See Homology.

Ho'mœopath, Homœopathist.

Homœopath'ic, Homœopath'icus, Homœop'athes, (F.) Homœopathique. Relating to homœopathy.

Homœopathic, Homœopathy.

Homœopathique, Homœopathie.

Homœopathist, Ho'mœopath, Homœopath'icus, Homœopathis'ta, Homœopathis'tes. One who believes in homœopathy.

Homœop'athy, Homœopathi'a, Homœopath'icē, Ars homœopath'ica, Homœop'athy, Hahn'emannism, Dynamop'athy, (F.) Homœopathie, Homœothérapeutique, Homœosympathie, Doctrine homœo-organique, (homæo, and παθος, 'affection,') A fanciful doctrine, which maintains that disordered actions in the human body are to be cured by inducing other disordered actions of a like kind (simil'ia simil'ibus), and this to be accomplished by infinitesimally small doses, often of apparently inert agents; the decillionth part of a grain of charcoal, for example, is an authorized dose. It has also been called Glob'ulism.

According to Dr. Bigelow, homœopathy consists in leaving the case to nature, while the patient is amused with nominal and nugatory remedies.

So long ago as in the writings of Gregory the Great, there is the following remark: "Mos medicinæ est ut aliquando similia similibus, aliquando contraria contrariis curet. Nam sæpe calida calidis, frigida frigidis, sæpe autem frigida calidis, calida frigidis sanare consuevit."

Homœopla'sia, (from homæo, and πλάσσω, 'I form,') The formation of accidental tissues similar to the normal; the opposite to heteroplasia.

Homæo'sis, Homoiosis.

Homœosympathie, Homœopathy.

Homœothérapeutique, Homœopathy.

Homœoz'ygy, (homæo, and ζυγω, 'I join together,') (F.) Soi-pour-soi. The law of association of organs, by which like parts adhere to like parts.

Homoeth'nia, (ὁμοεθνία,) Sympathy.

Homogen'esis, (ὁμος, 'equal,' and γενεσις, 'generation,') See Generation.

Homoio'pathi'a, (ὁμοιοπαθεια, from homæo, and παθος, 'affection,') Sympathy.

Homoio'sis, Homæo'sis, Homio'sis, (ὁμοιωσις, from ὁμοῖω, 'I assimilate,') An elaboration of the nutritious juice, by which it becomes proper for assimilation.

Homoli'non, (ωρος, 'raw,' and λαον, 'flax,') See Apolinosis.

Homolog'ical, Homolog'icus; same etymon as Homology.) Relating or appertaining to homology, as homological anatomy.

Homol'ogous, (ὁμος, 'like,' and λογος, 'condition,') See Homology, and Homotype.

Hom'ologue, Homol'ogus. A term applied to the same organ in different animals under every variety of form and function. (Owen.)

Homol'ogy. The doctrine of similarity of structure. Thus, the two sides of the body are said to be 'homologous.'

Homol'ogous, homomorph'ous, or homœomorph'ous tissues are those that resemble others; in opposition to heterol'ogous, het'eroclitic, or heteromorph'ous, which are new formations. Homology seems now to be accepted as the designation of the doctrine or study, the subject of which is the relations of the parts of animal bodies.

HOMOL'OGY, SE'RIAL, see Homotype.

Homomorph'ous, (ὁμος, 'like,' and μορφή, 'shape,') See Homology.

Homonopa'gia, Cephalalgia.

Homoph'agus, Omophagus.

Homoplas'ty, (ὁμος, 'like,' and πλάσσω, 'I form,') The formation of homologous tissues.

Homopla'ta, (ὤμος, 'shoulder,' and πλατυς, 'broad,') Scapula.

Homot'onus, (ὁμοτονος, from ὁμος, 'like,' and τόνος, 'tone,') Æqua'lis. That which has the same tone. A continued fever, whose symptoms have an equal intensity during the whole course of the disease, has been so called. See Acmaesticos and Synocha.

Ho'motype, (from ὁμος, 'like,' and τυπος, 'type,') A repetition of the same essential part,—in the series of vertebral segments, for example. (Owen.) The parts thus similarly related are said to be homotyp'ic or se'rially homol'ogous.

Hone, (Prov. hone, 'to swell,') A kind of swelling in the cheek.

Hon'esty, Lunaria rediviva.

Hone'wort, Field, (used in the treatment of hone [?].) Sison amomum.

Honey'sugar, Glucose.

Hong'lane (Chinese), Coptis teeta.

Hon'or Cap'itis, 'honor of the head,' see Capillus.

Honoraire, Sostrum.

Honora'rium, (honor, gen. hono'ris, 'honor,') Sostrum.

Honteux, 'ashamed,' Pudic.

Hood'wort, Scutellaria lateriflora.

Hook, (Sax. hoce, hooc,) Un'cus, Un'cinus, Anc'yra. (F.) Érigne, Airigne ou Érine. An instrument, consisting of a steel wire, flattened at the middle, and having the extremities crooked and pointed. Some hooks are furnished with a handle at one extremity—the other having one or two hooks;—constituting the single or double hook. The hook is used by anatomists and surgeons to lay hold of, and raise up, certain parts, the dissection of which is delicate, or which would slip from the fingers.

The Tenaculum is a variety of the hook.

Hook, BLUNT, Ich'thya, Ich'thyē, O'nyx, Un'guis ferr'eus. An instrument which is passed over the flexures of the joints to assist in bringing down the fetus in parturition.

Hoop'tree, Melia azedarach.

Hoop'er's Pills, Pilule aloes et myrrhæ.

Hoop'ingcough, (from the attendant hoop,) Per-tussis—h. Roche's embrocation for, see Roche.

Hop, ([D.] hop,) Humulus lupulus—h. Pillow, see Humulus lupulus—h. Plant, Humulus lupulus—h. Tree, Ptelea trifoliata.

Hope's Cam'phor Mix'ture. A mixture of nitrous acid, camphor water, and laudanum, employed in diarrhoea, dysentery, &c.

Hôpital, Hospital—h. Ambulant, Ambulance—h. des Fous, Morotrophium.

Hoplochris'ma, gen. Hoplochris'matis, (ὅπλον, 'a weapon,' and χρῆμα, 'salve,') Unguentum arma'rium, Arm'atory or Sympathet'ic Unguent. A salve which was supposed to cure wounds by sympathy,—the instrument with which the wound was inflicted being anointed with it.

Hoplomoch'lion, (ὀπλομοχλίων, from ὅπλον, 'a weapon,' and μοχλός, 'a lever,') The name of an iron machine or apparatus, which embraced the whole body like armor. A figure of it is given by Fabricius ab Aquapendente.

Hoquet, (by onomatopœia, like Hiccup,) Singultus.

Ho'ra, (ώρα,) Hebe.

Horæ'a, (ώραία,) Menses.

Horæ'otes, (ώραιοτης,) Maturity.

Hor'dei Malt'um, 'malt of barley,' Malt.

Horde'olum, (dim. of hordeum,) Orde'olum, Phy'ma horde'olum, Pos'thia, Sclerophthal'mia, Crithē, Crithid'ion, Sty, Stye, Sty'an, Stine, (F.) Orgelet, Orgéolet. A small, inflammatory tumor, of the nature of a boil, which exhibits itself near the free edge of the eyelids, particularly near the inner angle of the eye.

Hor'deum, Or'deum, Crithē. The seeds of Hor'deum vulga'rē or Scotch Bar'ley, Ord. Gramineæ, are ranked among the Cereal'ia. (F.) Orge. They afford a mucilaginous decoction, which is employed as a diluent and antiphlogistic. The seeds of the Hor'deum dist'ichon seu astivum, Zoe'riton dist'ichum, and H. hexast'ichon possess similar properties. Barley is freed from its shells in mills, forming the Hor'deum munda'tum seu decortica'tum (Ph. B., 1867) seu excortica'tum, Hor'deum (Ph. U. S., 1873); and, at times, is rubbed into small, round grains, somewhat like pearls, when it is called Hor'deum perla'tum, Pearl Bar'ley, (F.) Orge perlé, and forms the Hor'deum denuda'tum seu perla'tum, the Hor'dei sem'ina tu'nica nuda'ta of some Pharmacopœias.

HOR'DEUM CAUS'TICUM, Veratrum sabadilla—

Hormi'num, (from ὁρμαω, 'I incite,' as to venery,) Salvia horminum—h. Coloratum, Salvia horminum—h. Sativum, Salvia horminum.

Hor'mon, (ὁρμων,) Enormon.

Horn, (Sax. hopn,) Cornu.

Horn'bean, Carpinus betulus—h. Mad, see Mania.

Horn'pox, see Varicella.

Horn'seed, Ergot.

Horn'y, Corneous.

HORN'Y EXCRESCENCES, Lepido'sis, Ichthy'i'asis cornig'era, Cor'nua cuta'nea, (F.) Cornes de la Peau. Certain excrescences, which occasionally form on some part of the skin, and resemble, in shape, the horns of an animal.

HORN'Y SUBSTANCE, see Tooth.

Horren'tia, (horrere, 'to shudder,') Horripilation.

Hor'rida Cu'tis, ('rough skin,') Cu'tis seu Ca'ro anseri'na seu gallina'cea, Dermatospas'mus, Spas'mus peripher'icus, Goose'flesh, Goose'skin, (F.) Chair de poule. A state of the skin produced by cold or fear, and accompanying the rigor of an intermittent. It is produced, essentially, by the action of microscopic muscular fibres—the arrecto'res pilo'rum. The projections are sometimes called Goose'pimples.

Horripila'tion, Horripila'tio, Hor'ror, Horren'tia, Phri'cē, Phricas'mus, Phrici'asis, Phri'cia, (horrere, 'to bristle,' and pilus, 'hair,') (F.) Horripilation, Frissonnement. General chilliness, preceding fever, and accompanied with bristling of the hairs over the body.

Hor'ror, (horrere, 'to shudder,') Horripilation—h. Ciborum, Disgust for food.

Hor'rors, The, see Delirium tremens—h. of Drink, see Delirium tremens.

Horse, in composition, often means great—h. Balm, Collinsonia Canadensis—h. Cane, Ambrosia trifida—h. Chestnut, Æsculus hippocastanum—h. Crust, Crusta genu equinæ.

Horse'fly Weed, Sophora tinctoria.

Horse'mint, Ambrosia trifida, Monarda coccinea, M. fistulosa, and M. punctata—h. Sweet, Cunila mariana.

Horse'nettle, Solanum Carolinense.

Horse'pox. A pustular disease of horses, which, when communicated to cows, produced cowpox.

Horse'radish, Cochlearia armoracia.

Horse'shoe Head. An old name for the condition of the skull in children, in which the sutures are too open,—the coronal suture presenting the form of a horseshoe.

HORSE'SHOE KID'NEY, see Kidney, horseshoe.

Horse's Tail, Hippuris vulgaris.

Horse'weed, Ambrosia trifida, Collinsonia Canadensis, Erigeron Canadense.

Hor'tulus Cupid'inis, (dim. of hortus,) Vulva.

Hor'tus, ('a garden,') Vulva—h. Siccus, Herbarium.

Hose (Prov.), (from [Sax.] halp,) Collum, Throat.

Hose'fish, Sepia.

Hos'pital, (primarily from hospes, gen. hos-pitis, 'a guest,') Nosocomi'um, Adynatocomi'um, Adynatodochi'um, Xenodoc'eum, Xenodoch'eum, Infirm'arium, Infirmato'rium, Nosodochi'um, Vale-tudina'rium, Infirm'ary, (Old. Eng.) Farm'ery, Spit'al, (F.) Hôpital, Infirmierie, contracted [in old F.] to hostel, and hôtel. An establishment for the reception of the sick, in which they are maintained and treated medically. Hospitals were first instituted about the end of the 4th century, a period at which the word νοσοκομειον was employed, for the first time, by St. Jerome. They may be general, receiving all cases; or special, admitting only certain diseases. See Nosocomial.

Hos'PITAL AT'MOSPHERE, see Hospitalism.

Hos'PITAL, Cot'tage. A small hospital, with perhaps half a dozen beds, which can be managed at a small expense, and be sufficient for the wants of the locality.

Hos'PITAL GAN'GRENE, Phagedæ'na gangræno'sa seu pu'tris, Pu'trid or Malignant Ul'cer, Gangræ'na Nosocomio'rum seu Nosocomia'lis seu Contagio'sa, Sphac'elus nosocomia'lis, Hos'pital Sore, Putre'do, (F.) Pourriture ou Gangrène d'hôpital. Gangrene, occurring in wounds or ulcers, in hospitals, the air of which has been vitiated by the accumulation of patients, or some other circumstance. Hospital gangrene—many different varieties of which are met with, and always accompanied or preceded by fever—commonly commences with suppression of the suppuration of the wound, which becomes covered with a grayish and tenacious sanies. The gangrene then manifests itself. It extends from the centre of the ulcerated surface towards the edges; these become swollen, painful, and everted; and the patient dies with all the signs of typhus. The treatment must be varied according to circumstances. Sometimes it requires the use of stimulating, acid, caustic, and antiseptic applications, with occasionally the actual cautery, aided by the exhibition of tonics internally; at others, the antiphlogistic regimen and emollient applications may be necessary.

Hos'PITAL, INSA'NE, Morotrophium—h. Leper, Ladrière.

Hos'pitalism. A term suggested by Sir J. Y. Simpson, to designate the influence exerted by the air of a hospital, Nosoco'mial at'mosphere, on the progress of operations, diseases, &c.

Host (Sc.), (Sax. hþortā), Tussis.

Houpe du Menton, Depressor labii inferioris, Levator labii inferioris—h. Nerveuse, see Papilla.

Hourglass Contract'ion of the U'terus, see Chaton.

Hour'glass HER'nia. A variety of oblique inguinal hernia, having a constriction of the hernial sac at some point between the position of the testis and that of the external abdominal ring.

House'leek, Sempervivum tectorum—h. Small, Sedum.

House'maid's Knee, see Knee, housemaid's.

House'pupil, see Housesurgeon.

House'surgeon, Res'ident Surg'con. Usually a senior housepupil or graduate, who resides in an hospital, and attends to every accident and disease in the absence of the attending physician or surgeon. It answers, in the British hospitals, to the Élève interne or Interne of the French. The Élève externe or Externe is a less advanced pupil; from whom Internes are chosen. In ordinary schools, Élève externe means a day scholar; while Élève interne means a boarder.

Hu'mor, gen. Humo'ris, (from humeo, 'I am moist,') Hygra'sia, Hygre'don, Hy'grum, (F.) Humeur. Every fluid substance of an organized body—as the blood, chyle, lymph, &c. The Hu'mors, Chy'mi, Humo'res, differ considerably as to number and quality in the different species of organized beings; and even in the same species, according to the state of health or disease. The ancients reduced them to four; which they called cardinal humors:—the blood, phlegm, yellow bile, and atrabillis or black bile. It is not easy to give a satisfactory classification of the humors.

Hu'moral, Humora'lis. Proceeding from, or connected with, the humors.

Hu'moralists, Humorists.

Humo'res (pl. of Humor) Inquili'ni, 'alien humors,' Recrementitial secretions.

Humorique, see Bruit humorique.

Hu'morism, Hu'moral Pathol'ogy, Patholog'ia humera'lis. A medical theory, founded exclusively on the parts which the humors were considered to play in the production of disease. Although traces of this system may be found in the most remote antiquity, the creation, or, at all events, the arrangement of it may be attributed to Galen, who enveloped it in metaphysical subtleties relating to the union between the elements and the four cardinal humors.

Hu'morists, Hu'moralists. The Galenical and other physicians, who attributed all diseases to the depraved state of the humors, or to vicious juices collected in the body.

Hump, (perhaps from umbo, 'the boss of a buckler,') Hunch, Bunch, Boss, Gib'ber, Gib'bus, Gib'ba, Tu'ber, (F.) Bosse. A prominence, formed by a deviation of the bones of the trunk. Commonly, it is formed by the spine or sternum, and is seated at the posterior or anterior part of the trunk. It may, also, be produced by deviation of the ribs or pelvis. The spine may be curved in three principal directions. 1. Backwards, the most common case; this the ancients called κνίφωσις, Cypho'sis, Gibbos'itas, Rachio-cypho'sis. 2. Forwards—Lordo'sis, Recurva'tio; and 3. Laterally—Scolio'sis, Obstipa'tio. Most curvatures occur at a very early age, and are caused by scrofula, rickets, &c.; and, not unfrequently, they are accompanied by caries of the vertebrae. See Vertebral disease. One who is affected with a hump, or is Hump'backed, Hunch'backed, Bunch'backed, Hump'ty, Huckshould'ered, Shrumptshould'ered, (Sc.) Hul'giebacked, Trudge'backed, (Prov.) Croop'backed, is called, by the French, Bossu.

Hump'backed, see Hump.

Hump'ty, see Hump.

Hu'mulin, seu Humulus lupulus.

Hu'mulus, (from humus, 'the ground,' on which it creeps,) Humulus lupulus.

HU'MULUS LU'PULUS, Lu'pulus, L. scan'dens seu commu'nis seu salicta'rius, Hu'mulus, Hu'milus, Convol'vulus peren'nis, the Hop'plant, (F.) Houblon, Vigne du nord. Nat. Ord. Urticaceae. Its cones or strobiles, Hu'muli strob'ili, Hu'mulus (Ph. U. S.), have a fragrant odor; and a bitter, aromatic taste, depending on a peculiar principle, named Lu'pulin, (although hu'mulin would be a more correct term,) extractive and essential oil, which may be extracted, equally, by water and spirit, from the dried strobiles. The hop is employed as a tonic and hypnotic, and enters into the composition of ale and beer.

The Hop pil'low, Pulvi'nar Hu'muli, has long been used for producing sleep.

Hunga'rian Sis'ters, Helen and Judith.

Hunga'rica Fe'bris, Fever, Hungary.

Hung'er, (Sax. hunep,) Fa'mes, Li'mus, Pei'nē, Pei'na, Esu'ries, Jeju'nium, Jeju'nitas, Esuri'tio, Esuri'go, (F.) Faim. The necessity for taking food. Hunger is an internal sensation, which some authors have attributed to the friction between the sides of the stomach in its empty state; others, to the compression of the nerves, when the organ is contracted; others, to the action of the gastric juice, &c. It is dictated by the wants of the system:—farther we know not. See Appetite.

Hung'ercure, Limotherapeia.

Hung'ry, Famel'icus, Li'micus, Limo'des; (Prov.) Haw, (vulg.) Peck'ish. Affected with hunger.

Hun'ter's Canal, Canal, Hunter's.

Hun'tingdon, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Huntingdon Springs, called "Warm Springs," are seated five miles north of the town of Huntingdon, in Pennsylvania. They are resorted to, but have not been well examined.

Hunts'man's Cup, Sarracenia purpurea.

Hu'ra Brasilien'sis, Assacu, Assacu, Ussacu. A Brazilian tree, of the Nat. Ord. Euphorbiaceæ, which, in form of the extract of the bark, is esteemed a specific in leprosy. It is, also, given in elephantiasis, and as an anthelmintic.

Hur'dies (Sc.), Nates.

Hy'acinth, Wild. (βακινθος.) Scilla esculenta.

Hyacin'thus Musca'ri, Bulbus vomitorius.

Hyænan'chê Globo'sa, (βαίνα, hyæna, and αγχων, 'to strangle.') An arborescent shrub of South Africa, Nat. Ord. Euphorbiaceæ, the fruit of which, pounded, is used to destroy hyænas and other beasts of prey, and seems to contain strychnia.

Hya'le'us, (from βαλος, 'glass,') Hyaline.

Hy'aline, Hyal'ine, Hyal'ine, Hyal'ine, Vit'reous, (F.) Vitreux, Vitré. Glassy. Resembling glass.

HY'ALINE SUB'STANCE, Cytoblastema.

Hyali'tis, gen. Hyaliti'dis, Inflammat'io tu'nicae hyaloï'des, Hyaloidi'tis, Vitreocapsuli'tis, (F.) Hyalite, (hyalo, and itis.) Inflammation of the hyaloid membrane of the eye.

Hy'alo, (from βαλος, 'glass,') in composition, vitreous.

Hy'aloid, Hyaloides, Hyaloides, (F.) Hyaloides, (hyalo, and oides, 'resemblance,') Vitri-form; resembling glass. Also relating or appertaining to the hyaloid body, membrane, &c. (F.) Hyaloidien.

HY'ALOID CANAL, see Hyaloid membrane — h. Cartilage, see Cartilage — h. Fossa, see Hyaloid membrane.

HY'ALOID MEM'BRANE, Hyalomem'bra, Tu'nica Hyaloï'des seu Vit'rea, Mem'bra'na Arachnoï'des, is the extremely delicate membrane which forms the exterior covering of the vitreous humor, and transmits within it prolongations, which divide it into cells. Fallopius discovered this membrane, and gave it the name Hy'aloid. On a level with the entrance of the optic nerve into the eye, the hyaloid membrane has been described as forming, by reflection, a cylindrical canal, which pierces the vitreous humor from behind to before, as far as the posterior part of the crystalline. See Canal, hyaloid. At its anterior part is a depression — Fos'sa patella'ris seu lenticula'ris, hyaloidea seu vitrea — for the reception of the crystalline lens.

Hyaloï'dien, see Hyaloid.

Hyaloidi'tis, Hyalitis.

Hyalomem'bra, gen. Hyalomenin'gis, (hyalo, and μνηνξ, 'a membrane,') Hyaloid membrane.

Hyalonix'is, see Cataract.

Hy'alos, (βαλος.) Vitrum.

Hyan'chê, (βαγχη, from ές, 'a swine,' and αγχω, 'I choke,') Cynanche tonsillaris.

Hybo'ma, gen. Hybo'matis, (έβωμα, from έβωω, 'I make convex,') Gibbositas.

Hy'brid, Hi'brida, Hy'brida, (έβρις, gen. έβριδος, 'mongrel or mungrel,') (F.) Hybride, Métis, Mulet. A being born of two different species, — as the mule. The term is applied to plants as well as to animals. The result is termed Hybrid'ity or Hy'bridism. Hybrid is often, also, used to designate words which are formed from two different languages — as uteritis, for inflammation of the uterus, in place of metritis.

Hy'bridism, see Hybrid.

Hybrid'ity, see Hybrid.

Hydal'eus, (έδαλος.) Hydropic.

Hydarthro'sis, Hydrarthrus.

Hydar'thrus, Hydrarthrus.

Hy'das, gen. Hy'datis, (έδας.) Hydor.

Hydat'id, Hydat'ic Cyst, Hy'datis, Bulla, Aqu'ula, Hydro'a, Hydrocyst'is, Hygrocyst'is, Tæ'nia hydatig'ena, Echinococ'cus hom'inis seu huma'nus, (έδωρ, gen. έδαρος, 'water,') This name was long given to every encysted tumor which contained an aqueous and transparent fluid. Many pathologists subsequently applied it to vesicles, softer than the tissue of membranes, more or less transparent, which are developed within organs, but without adhering to their tissues. It is by no means clear that these formations are really entozoa. They have been found in various parts of the human body; sometimes in the uterus, occasioning signs nearly similar to those of pregnancy, but being sooner or later expelled. The expulsion is generally attended with more or less hemorrhage. See Acephalocyst.

Hy'datis, Aqu'ula, Phlyctæ'nula, Verru'ca palpebra'rum, Mil'ium, also meant a small, transparent tumor of the eyelids.

HYDAT'ID FREN'ITUS, Son hydatique.

HYDAT'ID MOLE. A formation of a cyst-like character, included by Virchow in the class of mucous tumors, forming in the hypertrophied villi of the chorion.

Hydat'idiform, Hydatiform.

Hydatidoce'lê, Hydatoc'e'lê, (hydatid, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Oscheocele containing hydatids; the Oscheoce'lê hydatido'sa, Hydatidoscheoce'lê of Sauvages.

Hydatidoi'des, Hydatoid.

Hydatido'ma, gen. Hydatido'matis, (hydatid, and oma.) A tumor caused by hydatids.

Hydatidoscheoce'lê, (hydatid, σχιον, 'serotum,' and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Hydatidocele.

Hydat'iform, Hydatin'iform, Hydatiniform'is, Hydatiform'is, Hydatid'iform, Hydatidiform'is, (hydatid, and forma, 'form,') Resembling a hydatid.

Hydat'inus, (έδωρ, gen. έδαρος, 'water,') Hydatoid.

Hy'datis, gen. Hydat'idis, Hydatid — h. Finna, Cysticercus cellulose.

Hydatis'mus. The noise caused by the fluctuation of pus contained in an abscess.

Hy'dato, (έδας, gen. έδαρος, or έδωρ, gen. έδαρος, 'water,') in composition, water.

Hydatoc'e'lê, Hydatidocele, Hydrocele.

Hydatoch'olos, (hydato, and χολη, 'bile,') Aquo'so-bil'ious. An epithet given to evacuated matters when mixed with water and bile.

Hydato'des, (έδαρωδης, from hydato, and odes.) Aqueous.

Hy'datoid, Hydatoi'des, A'queous, Aquo'sus, Hydato'des, Hydat'inus, Hydatido'des, Hydatidoï'des, (hydato, and oides, 'resemblance,') Watery. Resembling water. This name has been given to the membrane of the aqueous humor; and, also, to the aqueous humor itself. Vi'num hydato'des; wine and water.

Hydaton'cus, (hydato, and ογκος, 'a tumor.') Anasarca, Oedema.

Hydatopo'sia, (ὑδατοποσία, from hydato, and ποσις, 'drinking.') Water-drinking:—hence

Hydatop'otes, (ὑδατοποτης.) A water-drinker.

Hydatotherapeia, (hydato, and therapeia.) Hydrosudotherapy.

Hyderi'asis, (ὑδεριασις.) Dropsy.

Hyder'icus, (from hyderus.) Hydropic.

Hydero'des, (ὑδερωδης, from hyderus, and odes.) Hydropic.

Hyderon'cus, Anasarca, Oedema.

Hy'derus, (ὑδερως.) Anasarca, Hydrops.

Hydrach'nis, gen. Hydrach'nidis, (hydro, and αχνη, 'down,' or sordes.) see Varicella.

Hy'draden, gen. Hydra'denis, (hydro, and αδην, 'a gland,') Conglobate gland.

Hydradeni'tis, gen. Hydradeni'tidis, Inflam-ma'tio glandula'rum lymphatica'rum, (hydraden, and itis.) Inflammation of a lymphatic gland.

Hydræ'dus, (hydro, and αδωια, 'genital organs,') Oedema of the female organs.

Hydræ'mia, (hydro, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Hy-droemia, Anæmia.

Hydrago'ga, Hydragogues.

Hydrago'gia, Hydragogues.

Hydragog'ica, Hydragogues.

Hy'dragogues, Hydrago'ga, Hydrago'gia, Hydrago'gica, Hydrop'ica, Hydro'tica, Aquidu'ca, (hydro, and αγω, 'I expel,') Medicines which, by causing watery evacuations, are believed to be capable of expelling serum effused into any part of the body. These are generally cathartics or diuretics.

Hydrago'gum Boyl'ei, Argenti nitras.

Hydrallante, False waters.

Hydral'las, gen. Hydrallan'tis, (hydro, and αλλας, 'a sausage,') see Allantois. A morbid increase in the quantity of the fluid of the allantois.

Hydral'mæ, (hydro, and αλμη, 'saltiness,') Waters, mineral (saline).

Hydran'nios, (hydro, and amnios.) An excessive quantity of the liquor amnii.

Hy'dramyl, Amyl, hydride of.

Hydrange'a or Hydran'gea Arbores'cens, (hydro, and αγγων, 'a vessel,') H. vulga'ris, Sevenbark, Wild Hydran'gea, Bis'sum. Ord. Hydrangeæ. An indigenous plant, which flowers in July. The leaves are said to be tonic, sialagogogue, cathartic, diuretic, and antilithic.

Hydrangei'tis, gen. Hydrangei'tidis, (hydran-gia, and itis.) Angioloecitis.

Hydrangi'a, (hydro, and αγγων, 'a vessel,') Lymphatic vessels.

Hydrangiograph'ia, (hydrangia, and γραφη, 'a description,') Angiography.

Hydrangiotom'ia, (hydrangia, and τομη, 'in-cision,') Angiohydrotomy.

Hydrargyranatrip'sis, Hydrargyrentrip'sis, (hydrargyrum, and ανατριψις, 'rubbing in,') The rubbing in of a preparation of quicksilver, — Hydrargyrotrip'sis.

Hydrargyrentrip'sis, Hydrargyranatripsis.

HYDRAR'GYRI BRO'MIDUM, Bro'mide of Mer'cury, (F.) Bromure de Mercure. The protobromide and the bibromide are analogous in composition and medicinal properties to the corresponding iodides of mercury. They have also the peculiar prop-erties of the class of bromides. The dose of the former is gr. j.; of the latter gr. $\frac{1}{2}$. Neither is official in the Ph. U. S.

The Ph. U. S., 1873, has the following formula for its preparation: Potassii Ferrocyanid., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Acid. Sulphuric., \mathfrak{Z} iv., \mathfrak{Z} ij., Hydrargyri Oxidi Rubr. in pulv., Aqua, aa q. s. The process depends on the generation of hydrocyanic acid by the action of sulphuric acid on the ferrocyanide of potassium, the acid being received in a vessel containing water and a por-tion of red oxide of mercury, and reacting with the oxide, generating, by double decomposition, water and bicianide of mercury in solution. This preparation has been strongly recommended as a powerful antisyphilitic, and was admitted into the Parisian Codex. Twelve to twenty-four grains may be dissolved in a quart of distilled water, and three or four spoonfuls of the solution be taken daily in a glass of any appropriate liquid.

(Hydrarg. corros. chlorid., \mathfrak{Z} j., Potassii iodid., \mathfrak{Z} x., Aquæ destillat., Oij. Dissolve the chloride in a pint and a half, and the iodide of potassium in half a pint of distilled water, and mix the solutions. Collect the precipitate on a filter, and having washed it with distilled water, dry it with a moderate heat, and keep it in a well-stopped bottle. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, one-sixteenth to one-fourth of a grain.

HYDRAR'GYRI IOD'IDUM VI'RIDE, H. iodidum—h. Murias basi oxidi imperfecti, H. oxymurias—h. Murias corrosivus, H. oxymurias—h. Murias dulcis sublimatus, H. submurias—h. HYDRAR'GYRI NI'TRAS, Ni'tras Hydrar'gyri in crystall'os concre'tus, Hydrar'gyrum ni'tricum, Mercurius nitro'sus fri'gore para'tus, Ni'tras hy- drar'gyro'sus, Azo'tas hydrargyro'sus, Ni'trate of Mer'cury, Mer'curous ni'trate, (F.) Azotate de mercure, Protoazotate de mercure, Nitrate mercurieux ou de Mercure. It is employed in syphilis; and, externally, in fungous, obstinate ulcers.

It is used in the formation of the Soluble Mercury of Hahnemann.

An ac'id ni'trate of mer'cury, Mer'curic Ni'trate, Hydrar'gyri deutonitras seu dipernitras seu supernitras, Mercu'rius nitro'sus cal'idē para'tus, Ni'tras hydrargyr'icus, Azo'tas hydrargyr'icus liq'uidus, Li'quor Hydrar'gyri supernitrat'is, Li'quor Hydrargyri nitrat'is acidus (Ph. B., 1867), Solution of superni'trate of mer'cury, Solution of supernitrate of deutox'ide of mer'cury, (F.) Deutoazotate acide liquide de mercure, Nitrate acide de mercure, made by dissolving four ounces of mercury in five of nitric acid, and distilled water, an ounce and a half. It has been used as a caustic in malignant ulcerations and cancerous affections. See Liquor hydrargyri nitrici.

Ward's White Drops,—a once celebrated antiscorbutic nostrum,—were prepared by dissolving mercury in nitric acid, and adding a solution of carbonate of ammonia; or, frequently, they consisted of a solution of corrosive sublimate with carbonate of ammonia.

HYDRAR'GYRI NIT'RICOOXY'DUM, Hydrar'gyri oxidum rubrum (Ph. U. S.), Hydrar'gyrus nitrat'us ruber, Mercu'rius corrosivus ruber seu precipitatus corrosivus seu precipitatus ruber seu corallinus, Arca'num corallinum, Pul'vis principis, Precipitatus ruber, Ox'ydatum hydrar'gyri completum seu hydrargyr'icum, Panacea mercurii rubra, Pul'vis Joā'n'nis de Vigo, Oxo'des hydrargyri rubrum, Hyeroxo'des hydrargyri, Ox'ydatum hydrar'gyri nitricum seu hydrargyri rubrum per ac'idum nitricum, Nit'ric ox'ide of mer'cury, Red precipitate, (F.) Oxide nitrique de mercure, Précipité rouge ou per se, Mercure corallin, Nitrate de mercure rouge. (Hydrarg., \mathfrak{Z} xxxvj., Acid. nitric., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ xxiv., Aquæ, Oij. Dissolve the mercury with a gentle heat, in the acid and water previously mixed, and evaporate to dryness. Rub into powder, and heat in a very shallow vessel until red vapors cease to rise. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is a stimulant and escharotic, and used as such in foul ulcers, being sprinkled on the part in fine powder, or united with lard into an ointment.

HYDRAR'GYRI OXO'DES RU'BRUM, Hydrargyri nitrooxydum—h. Oxydi murias ammoniacalis, Hydrargyrum precipitatum—h. Oxydulum nigrum, H. oxydum cinereum.

HYDRAR'GYRI OX'YDUM CINE'REUM, Æ'thiops per se, Mercu'rius niger Mosca'ti seu precipitatus niger, Ox'ydatum hydrar'gyri nigrum seu hydrargyro'sum seu hydrargyr'icum precipitatum, Ox'ydulum hydrar'gyri nigrum, Pul'vis mercurialis cinereus, Mercu'rius cinereus, Turpe'thum nigrum, Gray or Black ox'ide of Mer'cury, Mer'curous ox'ide, (F.) Oxide de mercure cendré, Oxide gris ou noir de mercure, Protoxide de mercure. This oxide is made in various ways. It may be formed by boiling submuriate of mercury in lime water. The dose of this Pul'vis Hydrar'gyri cinereus is from two to ten grains. There are four other preparations of it in estimation, viz.:—Plenk's solution, made by rubbing mercury with mucilage. 2. By rubbing equal parts of sugar and mercury together. 3. A compound of honey or liquorice and purified mercury. 4. The blue pill, and blue ointment. All these possess the usual properties of mercury.

HYDRAR'GYRI OX'YDUM FLA'VUM, Yel'low Ox'ide of Mer'cury. This preparation has been introduced into the last edition of the Ph. U. S. (1873). It is prepared as follows: (Hydrarg. chlorid. corrosiv., \mathfrak{Z} iv., Liquor potassæ, \mathfrak{Z} xvij., Aquæ destillat., q. s. Dissolve the chloride in five pints of distilled water, and mix with the solution of potassa. After the precipitate has subsided, pour off the supernatant liquid, and wash with distilled water until the washings cease to be affected by a solution of nitrate of silver. Dry the precipitate on bibulous paper, in a dark place, and preserve in bottles, protected from the light.)

The Hydrar'gyri Ox'idum Ni'grum of the Ph. U. S., 1863, was made as follows: Hydrarg. chlorid. nit., Potassæ, $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{Z} iv., Aquæ, Oj. Dissolve the potassa in the water, allow the dregs to subside, and pour off the clear solution. To this add the chloride, and stir constantly till the black oxide is formed. Pour off the supernatant liquor, wash the black oxide with distilled water, and dry with a gentle heat. Dose, one or two grains.

The Mercu'rius solubilis of Hahnemann is formed from a black oxide of mercury. It is the Mercu'rius solubilis Hahneman'ni, Ox'ydatum hydrargyri ni'gri median'te ammo'niâ ex protonitrat'ê hydrar'gyri precipitatum, Azo'tas hydrargyro'so-ammo'nicus, (F.) Azotate de mercure et d'ammoniaque, Oxyde gris ou noir de Mercure, Précipité noir, Turbith noir, which has been esteemed, in Germany and France, as an antisyphilitic. Dose, gr. 1-5th to gr. j. It is used in the same cases as the Hydrargyri oxydum cinereum.

HYDRAR'GYRI OX'YDUM NI'GRUM, H. oxydum cinereum—h. Oxydum nigrum mediantè ammo'niâ et protonitrate hydrargyri precipitatum, see H. oxydum cinereum—h. Oxydum nitricum, Hydrargyri nitrico-oxydum.

HYDRAR'GYRI OX'YDUM RU'BRUM, H. Binox'ydatum, Mercu'rius calcinat'us, Hydrar'gyrus calcinat'us, Red ox'ide of mer'cury, Mer'curic Ox'ide, (F.) Oxide de Mercure rouge. (Made by precipitation from a solution of bichloride of mercury by solution of potassa.) See Hydrargyri nitrico-oxydum.

It is stimulant and escharotic; and in large doses, emetic. Owing to the violence of its operation, it is seldom given internally.

HYDRAR'GYRI OX'YDUM RU'BRUM PER AC'IDUM NI'TRICUM, Hydrargyri nitrico-oxydum—h. Oxydum saccharatum, Hydrargyrum saccharatum—h. Oxydum sulphuricum, Hydrargyrum vitriolatus.

HYDRAR'GYRI OXYMU'RIAS, H. Chlo'ridum Corrosivum (Ph. U. S.) seu Perchlo'ridum (Ph. B., 1867) seu Bichlo'ridum seu Permu'rias, Hydrar'gyrus muriat'us, Mu'rias hydrar'gyri corrosivus seu oxygenat'us seu hydrar'gyri ba'si ox'idi imperfecti seu hydrar'gyri corrosivum, Sublimat'us corrosivus, Sublimatum corrosivum, Hydrar'gyrum corrosivum sublimatum, Mercu'rius corrosivus seu corrosivus sublimat'us, Supermu'rias hydrar'gyri, (F.) Deutochlorure ou Bichlorure de mercure, Muriate oxygéné de mercure, Sublimé corrosif; Bichlo'ride or Oxymu'riate or Corrosive chloride or Mu'riate of mer'cury, Corrosive sublimate, Mer'curic chlo'ride. (Hydrarg., \mathfrak{li} ij., Acid sulphuric., \mathfrak{li} ij., Sodii chlorid., \mathfrak{li} ss. Boil the mercury with the sulphuric acid until a dry white mass is left. Rub this, when cold, with the chloride of sodium, in an earthenware mortar; then sublime with a gradually increasing heat. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is used as an antisyphilitic eutrophic in venereal complaints, old cutaneous affections, &c. Gr. iij. to Oj. of water is a good gargle in venereal sore-throat, or as an injection in gonorrhœa. Externally it is applied in cases of tetter, and to destroy fungus, or stimulate old ulcers. Dose, gr. 1-16 to gr. 1-8, in pill, once in twenty-four hours. White of egg is the best antidote to it, when taken in an overdose.

The YEL'LOW WASH, A'qua phagedæ'nica, Lo'tio Hydrar'gyri fla'va (Ph. B., 1867), Phagedæ'nic Wash, (F.) Eau Phagédénique, is made by adding corrosive sublimate to limewater, usually in the proportion of fifteen grains to half a pint. It is a common application to syphilitic sores.

Zo'ticus Hartman'ni*, — Panacea Mercurialis (when nine times sublimed), Mu'rias hydrargyri dul'cis sublima'tus, Aq'uila, Man'na Metallo'rum, Panchymago'gum minera'lē, P. Querceta'nus, Mild chlo'ride, protochlo'ride, submu'riate, subchlo'ride, or mild mu'riate of Mercury, Cal'omel, Mer'curous chlo'ride, (F.) Mercurē doux, Protochlorure de mercure. Mild chloride of mercury is thus directed to be prepared in the Pharmacopœia of the United States: (Mercury, lbiv., Sulphuric acid, lbij., Chloride of sodium, lbss., Distilled water, a sufficient quantity. Boil two pounds of the mercury with the sulphuric acid, until a dry white mass is left. Rub this, when cold, with the remainder of the mercury, in an earthenware mortar, until they are thoroughly mixed. Then add the chloride of sodium, and rub it with the other ingredients till the globules cease to be visible; sublime into a large chamber, that the sublimate may fall in powder; wash it with boiling distilled water, till the washings afford no precipitate upon the addition of water of ammonia; then dry it.) Properties, antisyphilitic and sialagogue; in large doses, purgative. Dose, one or two grains given at night gradually excite ptyalism. Gr. v. to xx., purge. Children bear larger doses than adults. The French Codex (1866) has a formula for Calomel à la Vapeur, Cal'omel va'por baths.

The BLACK WASH, Lo'tio Hydrar'gyri ni'gra (Ph. B., 1867), is formed of calomel, ℥ij., Lime-water, Oj. Used for syphilitic sores.

Mix the mercury with the sulphur melted over the fire, and as soon as the mass begins to swell remove the vessel from the fire, and cover it closely to prevent combustion. Rub the mass, when cold, into powder and sublimate. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

It is an antisyphilitic, but chiefly used in fumigation against venereal ulcers of the nose, mouth, and throat—℥ss. being thrown on a red-hot iron. This preparation is the basis of a nostrum, called Boerhaave's Red Pill.

HYDRAR'GYRI SUPERMU'RIAS, H. oxymurias — h. Supernitras, see Hydrargyri nitras.

HYDRAR'GYRI TAR'TRAS, H. Prototar'tras, Tartrate of Mercury. Antisyphilitic. Dose, one or two grains twice a day.

A fluid, brilliant metal; of a slightly bluish white color; fluid above—39° of Fahr. and under 656°. S. g., when liquid, 13.568 (Cavendish); easily oxydized. Metallic quicksilver does not act on the body, when taken into the stomach; but if oxydized, and combined with acids, it acts powerfully. It has been exhibited in cases of constriction of the bowels and in intussusception, from a notion that it must certainly pass through the bowels by its gravity. The water, in which mercury has been boiled, has been recommended as a vermifuge; but probably enjoys no such property, as chemical tests do not exhibit the presence of the metal. When the crude metal is distilled in an iron retort, it forms the Hydrar'gyrum purifica'tum.

(Hydrarg., ℥ij., Cretæ præparat., ℥v. Rub them together till the globules cease to be visible, and the mixture acquires a uniform gray color. Ph. U. S., 1873.) A protoxide of mercury, formed by trituration with carbonate of lime. It is somewhat uncertain; and consequently not much employed as a mercurial. It possesses the properties of the black oxide of mercury, and may be advantageously exhibited in cases of diarrhoea in children, dependent upon acidity and vitiated secretions. Dose, gr. v. to 3ss., twice a day, in any viscid substance.

HYDRARGYRUM CUM MAGNE'SIÂ, of the Dublin Pharmacopœia, resembles it in properties.

Dissolve the chloride in the water, with the aid of heat, and to the solution, when cold, add the water of ammonia, frequently stirring. Wash the precipitate till it is tasteless, and dry it. Ph. U. S., 1873.) The French Codex (1866) prepares Précipité blanc by the action of nitric acid on mercury. A peroxide, combined with muriatic acid and ammonia, forming a triple salt. It is used in powder, to destroy vermin; and, united with lard, for the same purpose, as well as in scabies and some other cutaneous affections.

HYDRARGYRUM SACCHARATUM, Æthiops saccharatus, Mercurius saccharatus, Oxidum hydrargyri saccharatum, Saccharum hydrargyri vermifugum. A mild mercurial formula in several of the Pharmacopœias of continental Europe; formed by triturating one part of mercury with two of white sugar. It is used in the venereal affections of children.

HYDRARGYRUM ZOÖR'ICUM, Hydrargyri cyanuretum.

This was the basis of Keyser's pills, and was once much celebrated in the cure of the venereal disease. The dose is from three to five grains, but it is not much used.

The formula for Keyser's antivenereal pills was as follows:—Hydrarg. Acet., 3iv., Mannæ, 3xxx., Amyli, 3ij., Muc. G. Trag., q. s. To be made into pills of gr. vj. each. Dose, two pills.

(Hydrarg., 3iv., Acid. Sulph., 3vj. Mix in a glass vessel, and boil in a sand-bath till a dry, white mass remains. Rub this into powder, and throw it into boiling water. Pour off the liquor, and wash the yellow precipitate repeatedly with hot water; then dry it. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Two grains of this mercurial act on the stomach violently. It is sometimes recommended as an emetic in amaurosis.

Hydrarthrus is now generally restricted to dropsy of the articulations, Hy'drops articulo'rum.

White swelling is a formidable strumous disease. It may attack any one of the joints; but is most commonly met with in the knee, the haunch, the foot, the elbow, and generally occurs in scrofulous children. It consists, at times, in tumefaction, and softening of the soft parts and ligaments, which surround the joints; at others, in swelling and caries of the articular extremities of bones; or both these states may exist at the same time. The treatment consists in the employment of counterirritants, the use of iodine internally and externally, &c. Also, Synovia.

Hydras'pis (gen. Hydras'pidis) Expan'sa, (hydro, and απ, 'a round shield,') Great fresh-water Tortoise. On the sandy banks of rivers in Peru this animal buries its eggs, from which the Indians extract oil. Its flesh supplies well-flavored food.

Hydrepiploc'e'lē, (hydro, επιπλουν, 'omentum,' and κηλη, 'rupture,') Omental hernia, with water in the sac.

Hydrepiplom'phalus, Hydrepiplomphaloc'e'lē, (hydro, επιπλουν, 'omentum,' and ομφαλος, 'umbilicus,') Umbilical hernia, with omentum and water in the sac.

Hydr'trum, (hydro, and ητρον, 'the lower belly,') Ascites.

Hydri'asis, (ὕδωρ, 'water,') Hydrosudotherapeia.

Hydri'ater, gen. Hydria'tri, (hydro, and ιατρος, 'a physician,') see Hydropathic.

Hydriatri'a, Hydrosudotherapeia.

Hydriat'rica Ars, Hydrosudotherapeia.

Hydriat'ricus, see Hydropathic.

Hydria'trus, see Hydropathic.

Hydri'odas (gen. Hydrioda'tis) Ka'licus, see Potassæ hydriodas.

Hydriod'ic Ac'id, see Acid, hydriodic — h. Ether, Æther hydriodicus.

Hydro, (from ὕδωρ, gen. ὕδατος, 'water,') in composition, water.

Hydro'a, gen. Hydro'ata, Hidro'a, Aqu'ula, Bo'a, Plan'ta noct'is, (ὕδωρ, 'water,') An affection which consists in an accumulation of water or serous fluid under the epidermis. Some have used hydroa synonymously with sudamina, others with pemphigus. In the first case, it has generally, however, been written hidro'a, from ἰδρος, 'sweat,' and in the latter hydro'a. See Hydatid.

Hydroadeni'tis. An inflammatory state of the perspiratory follicles, ending in suppuration, occurring in every region where there are glands, except the sole of the foot.

Hydroæ'mia, Hydræ'mia, Hæmyd'ria, (F.) Hydrémie, (hydro, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Anæmia. The state of the blood in which the watery constituents are in excess.

Hydroa'ëric, Hydroaë'ricus, (F.) Hydroaëtrique, (hydro, and αἶρ, 'air,') An epithet for the sound rendered on percussing or ausculting cavities in which there are water and air.

Hydroaëropteurie, (hydro, αἶρ, 'air,' and πλευρα, 'side,') Hydropneumothorax.

Hydroä'rion, Hydroöph'oron, Hydroöphor'ia, Hydroöä'rion, Hydroöva'rium, Oariy'drops, Hy'drops ova'rii, Ascites ova'rii, A. sacca'tus, (F.) Hydropisie de l'ovaire, (hydro, and ωαριον, 'ovarium,') Dropsy of the ovary.

Hydro'ata, pl. of Hydroa. Sudamina.

Hydrobleph'aron, Hy'drops Pal'pebræ, Blepharædéma aquo'sum, Edéma palpebra'rum. An oedema or watery swelling of the eyelids; from hydro, and βλεφαρον, 'eyelid.'

Hydrocachex'ia, Leucophlegmatia.

Hydrocar'dia, (hydro, and καρδια, 'the heart,') Hydropericardium, see Pericardium.

Hydrocatarrhophe'sis, Hydrocatarrhoph'ia, (ὕδωρ, 'water,' and καταρροφειν, 'to sip up,') Absorption of water from without.

Hydroce'lē, Hy'drops scro'ti seu testiculo'rum, Hydroscœoc'e'lē, Hydatoc'e'lē, Hydroscœum, Hydrosc'his, Hydrosc'honie (Alibert), Hy'drocele, (ὕδωρ and κηλη, from hydro, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') A term generally applied to a collection of serous fluid in the areolar texture of the scrotum or in some of the coverings, either of the testicle or spermatic cord. To the first of these varieties the names — Exter'nal Hy'drocele, H. œdemato'des, (F.) H. par infiltration have been given; and to the second, those of Hydroce'lē inter'na, H. tu'nica vaginal'is test'is, Hydrel'ytron, (F.) H. par épanchement. When the collection occurs in the envelope of the testicle, it is called H. of the tu'nica vaginal'is; and the epithet congen'ita is added, Hydroce'lē congen'ita, when the interior of the membrane in which it is situate still communicates freely with the cavity of the abdomen. When it exists in the spermatic cord, it is called encyst'ed or diffus'ed Hy'drocele of the spermatic cord, Hydroce'lē cyst'ica, Hydroce'lē funic'uli sem'inal'is, as the case may be. The tumor of the distended scrotum is oblong; greater below than above; indolent and semi-transparent. When it becomes inconveniently large, the fluid may be evacuated by puncturing with a trocar, but, as it collects again, this operation can only be considered palliative. The radical cure consists, usually, in injecting some irritating liquid through the canula of the trocar, which has been left in after puncturing. This is kept in the tunica vaginalis for a few minutes, and then withdrawn. The coat inflames, adhesion takes place, and the cavity is obliterated.

HY'DROCELE OF THE CANAL OF NUCK, Hydrocele of the round ligament — h. Congenita, see Hydrocele — h. Cystica, see Hydrocele — h. Funiculi sem'inalis, see Hydrocele.

HY'DROCELE, HER'NIAL. A dropsical condition of the sac of an old scrotal hernia, after obliteration of the neck. See Oscheohydrocele.

HY'DROCELE OF THE NECK. A tumor, filled with a watery fluid, occupying some portion of the neck.

HYDROCE'LÉ PERITONÆ'I, Ascites.

HY'DROCELE OF THE ROUND LIGAMENT, Hydroce'lē Ligamen'ti tere'tis, Hy'drocele of the Canal of Nuck. An uncommon affection, being a cystic growth of those parts. It may be treated by the seton or the injection of iodine.

HYDROCE'LÉ SPINA'LIS, Hydro'rachis.

Hydroce'lic, Hydroce'licus, (ὕδροκεληκος,) Relating or appertaining to hydrocele.

Hydroceno'sis, (hydro, and κενωσις, 'evacuation,') The evacuation of water morbidly accumulated in the body.

Hydroceph'alē, Hydrocephalus.

Hydrocéphale Aiguë, Hydrocephalus internus.

Hydrocéphalie, Hydrocephalus — h. Externe, Hydrocephalus externus — h. Interne, Hydrocephalus internus — h. Ventriculaire, Hydrocephalus internus.

Hydrocephali'tis, (hydrocephalus, and itis,) Hydrocephalus internus.

Hydroceph'alium, Hydrocephalus.

Hydrocephaloc'e'lē, (hydrocephalus, and κηλη, 'a rupture or protrusion,') Hydrencephaloc'e.

Hydrocéphaloëctasie, (hydrocephalus, and εκτασις, 'extension,') Hydrocephalus chronicus.

Hydroceph'aloid, (hydrocephalus, and ειδος, 'resemblance,') Resembling hydrocephalus, as hydrocephaloid disease. See Hydrencephaloid.

Hydroceph'alus, (ὕδροκεφαλος,) Hydroceph'alum, Hydrocra'nia, Hydrocra'nium, Hydroceph'al- ium, Hydroceph'alz, Hy'drops Cap'itis seu Cer'e-bri, (F.) Hydrocéphalie, (hydro, and κεφαλή, 'the head,') Water of the head, Drop'sy of the head, Drop'sy of the brain. A collection of water within the head. It may be internal or external.

HYDROCEPH'ALUS ACUTUS, H. internus — h. Acutus senum, Apoplexy, serous — h. Adnatus, see H. chronicus.

HYDROCEPH'ALUS CHRON'ICUS, Hydrencephaloc'e'lē, Hy'drops Cap'itis seu Arachno'idew, Hydrocephalus exter'nus, (F.) Hydrocéphale, Hydrocéphaloëctasie of some, may exist at birth. Hydrenceph'alon, Hydroceph'alus congen'itus seu adn'atus commonly commences at an early period of existence, and the accumulation of fluid gradually produces distension of the brain, and of the skull, with separation of the sutures. It commonly proves fatal before puberty.

HYDROCEPH'ALUS CONGEN'ITUS, see H. chronicus.

HYDROCEPH'ALUS EXTER'NUS, Oedema cap'itis, Cephaloedema of some, (F.) Hydrocéphalie externe, is a mere infiltration into the subcutaneous cellular tissue of the cranium. See Hydrocephalus chronicus.

HYDROCEPH'ALUS INTER'NUS, Hydroceph'alus acutus seu meninge'us, Hy'drops cer'e-bri, Enceph'alalgia hydro'pica, Encephali'tis exsudato'ria, Encephali'tis seu Meningi'tis Infan'tum seu hydroceph'alica, Mor'bus cerebra'lis Whyt'tii, En'terocephalop'yr'a Infan'tum, Hydrophlogo'sis Ventriculo'rum cer'e-bri, Encephaloch'ysis, Phrenic'ula hydroceph'alica, Hydrenceph'alus, Hydrencephali'tis, Hydrenceph'alium, Hydrocephali'tis, Hydromeningi'tis, Fe'bris seu Apoplex'ia hydroceph'alica, Ca'rus hydroceph'alus, Water Brain Fe'ver, Whyt's Disease, (F.) Hydrocéphalie aiguë ou interne ou ventriculaire, Fèvre cérébrale des Enfants, is generally seated, according to modern observers, in the meninges and surface of the encephalon, and is a tuber'cular meningi'tis, Meningi'tis seu Menin'gia tuberculo'sa, Encephalostrom'o'sis, Gran'ular or Seroph'ulous meningi'tis, (F.) Méningite tuberculeuse ou granuleuse, Pédencéphalie of Piorry. It is observed particularly in childhood. Its march is extremely acute and often very rapid; admitting, generally, however, of division into three stages. The symptoms of the first stage are those of general febrile irritation, with headache, intolerance of light and sound, delirium, &c. Those of the second, which generally denote that the inflammation has ended in effusion, are, great slowness of pulse, crying out as if in distress, moaning, dilated pupil, squinting, &c.; and lastly, in the third stage — profound stupor, paralysis, convulsions, involuntary evacuations, quick pulse, and frequently death. The disease is of uncertain duration — sometimes destroying in two or three days, at others extending to two or three weeks. The prognosis is unfavorable. The treatment must be active during the stage of excitement, — precisely that which is necessary in phrenitis. In the second stage, the indication is — to promote the absorption of the effused fluid. This must be done by counterirritants, and mercury, chiefly. On dissection, water is generally found in the ventricles, or at the base of the brain; or there are evidences of previous vascular excitement, as effusions of coagulable lymph, &c.

When the effusion occurs suddenly, either primarily or secondarily in the course of some other disease, it has been termed, by the Germans, Wasserschlag, Water Stroke.

HYDROCEPH'ALUS MENINGE'US, H. internus — h. Spurious, Hydrencephaloid (disease).

Hydrochamame'lum, (hydro, and chamæmelum, 'chamomile,') Infusum anthemidis.

Hydroche'zia, (hydro, and χίζαν, 'to go to stool,') Diarrhoea serosa.

Hydrochlorate d'Or, see Gold.

Hydrochlorinas Na'tricus, Soda, muriate of Hydrochoclecy'stis, gen. Hydrochoclecy'stidis, (hydro, χολή, 'bile,' and κυστις, 'bladder,') Turgescentia vesiculæ fellæ.

Hydroch'yases, (G.) Hydrochysen, (hydro, and χυσίς, 'effusion,') A family of diseases, according to the classification of Fuchs, in which there is a sudden effusion of serous fluid, as in serous apoplexy, hydrocephalus, &c.

Hydrocirsoc'e'lē, Hydrocirsoc'e'lē, Hygroce'lē, (hydro, κίρσις, 'varix,' and κλήνη, 'tumor,') A tumor, formed by the varicose distension of the veins of the spermatic cord, and by the accumulation of serous fluid in the areolar texture of the scrotum.

Hydrocœ'lia, (hydro, and κοιλία, 'the abdomen,') Ascites.

Hydroco'nium, (hydro, and κονίος, 'dusty,') Bath, shower.

Hydrocotar'nia. An alkaloid recently obtained from the mother-liquor of opium, after morphia and codeia had been separated. Its therapeutic value is unknown.

Hydrocot'ylē Asiat'ica, (hydro, and κοτυλή, 'a cup,' from growing in moist places, and the leaves being like cups,) Bevilacqua, Codagam, Pes equ'inus, Asiat'ic Pen'nyncort. Order, Umbelliferae. A plant of India, Cape of Good Hope, and Jamaica, where it is supposed to be possessed of astringent and diuretic properties. The leaves are applied to bruised parts to prevent inflammation. The hydrocotyle has been extolled, in India, as a remedy for lepra.

HYDROCOT'YLē CENTEL'LA. A South African plant, the roots and stalks of which are astringent; and used in diarrhoea and dysentery.

HYDROCOT'YLē UMBELLATUM, Acaricoba.

Hydrocra'nia, (hydro, and κρανιον, 'skull,') Hydrocephalus.

Hydrocra'nium, Hydrocephalus.

Hydrocri'thē, (hydro, and κριθην, 'barley,') Decoctum hordei.

Hydrocyan'ic Ac'id, Ac'idum Hydrocyan'icum, (hydro, and καυος, 'blue,') Pruss'ic Ac'id, Ac'idum Pruss'icum seu Borus'sicum seu Zoöti'icum seu Zoötin'icum, Cyanohy'dric or Cyanhy'dric Ac'id, (F.) Acide Hydrocyanique ou Prussique. This acid exists in a great variety of native combinations in the vegetable kingdom, and imparts to them certain properties, which have been long known and esteemed; as in the bitter almond, cherry laurel, leaves of the peach tree, kernels of fruit, pips of apples, &c. When concentrated, it is liquid, colorless, of a strong smell and taste, at first cool, afterwards burning. Its s. g. at 7° Centigrade, is 0.7058. It is very volatile, and enters into ebullition at 80° Fabr. It speedily undergoes decomposition, sometimes in less than an hour, and consists of a peculiar gaseous and highly inflammable compound of carbon and nitrogen, to which the name Cyan'ogen has been assigned; and of hydrogen, which acts as the acidifying principle: hence its name Hydrocyanic acid. In the Pharmacopœia of the United States (1873), two formulæ for the preparation of the Ac'idum hydrocyan'icum dilu'tum — Ac'idum hydrocyan'icum, Ph. U. S. of 1842 — are given; the one from the Ferrocyanide of Potassium; the other from the Cyanide of Silver. Both of these, as well as the Ac'idum hydrocyan'icum dilu'tum of the British Pharmacopœia (1867), contain two per cent. of the anhydrous acid. According to Magendie, the acid, prepared after Scheele's method — the one in common use — is of irregular medicinal power; he, therefore, recommends Gay Lussac's acid, diluted with six times its volume, or 8.5 times its weight of distilled water, for medicinal purposes, and this he calls Medic'inal Prussic Acid. Dr. Ure has proposed that the specific gravity should indicate that which is proper for medicinal exhibition; and, after experiments of the specific gravity of the acids obtained by different processes, he states that the acid, usually prescribed, is of s. g. 0.996 or 0.997. Great caution is, however, necessary. One drop of pure prussic acid may instantly destroy, and the animal show hardly any traces of irritability, a few moments after death. It has been advised in laryngeal phthisis, in pulmonary phthisis, pulmonary inflammation and irritation, dyspepsia, uterine affections, hectic cough, cancer, chronic rheumatism, and mania, and as a local remedy in impetiginous affections; but, although possessed of powerful sedative properties, it is so unmanageable and the preparation so uncertain, that it is not much used. The dose of Scheele's Acid, or of the Medicinal Prussic Acid, is from a quarter of a drop to two drops.

Hydrocystis, gen. Hydrocystidis, (hydro, and κυστις, 'a bladder.') A cyst containing a watery or serous fluid. A hydatid. Also, saccated ascites.

Hydroderma, gen. Hydrodermatitis, (hydro, and δέρμα, 'skin,') Anasarca.

Hydrodes, (ὕδρωδης,) Aqueous.

Hydrodiarrhœa, Diarrhœa, serous.

Hydrœdema, gen. Hydrœdematis, Edema.

Hydroëncéphalorrhœe, (hydro, 'encephalon,' and ῥω, 'I flow,') Apoplexy, serous.

Hydroënteroëpiploce'lê, Hydro'epiploënteroce'lê, (hydro, έντερον, 'intestine,' and επιπλουν, 'omentum,') Enteroëpiplocele, the sac of which contains a serous fluid.

Hydroënteroëpiplocephalum, (hydro, έντερον, 'an intestine,' επιπλουν, 'the caul,' and ομφαλος, 'the navel,') Umbilical hernia, the sac of which contains intestine, epiploon, and serum.

Hydroënteromphalum, Hydrenteromphalum, (hydro, έντερον, 'an intestine,' and ομφαλος, 'the umbilicus,') Hernia umbilicalis, the sac of which contains intestine and serum.

Hydroëpiploce'lê, (hydro, επιπλουν, 'omentum,' and κλήη, 'a tumor,') Hernia, formed by omentum, the sac of which contains serum.

Hydroëpiploënteroce'lê, Hydroëntero-epiplocele.

Hydroëpiplocephalum, (hydro, επιπλουν, 'omentum,' and ομφαλος, 'the umbilicus,') Umbilical hernia, the sac of which contains epiploon and serum.

Hydrog'ala, gen. Hydrogalactis, (hydro, and γάλα, 'milk,') A mixture of water and milk.

Hydrogas'ter, (ὕδρογαστήρ, from hydro, and γαστήρ, 'the stomach, the belly,') Ascites.

Hy'drogen, Hydrogen'ium, Inflam'mable air, Phlogis'ton, Princip'ium hydrogenet'icum seu hydro'ticum, Mephi'tis inflammabilis, (F.) Hydrogène, Phlogogène, Air inflammable, Gaz des ballons, (hydro, and γεννω, 'I produce,') This gas, when breathed, proves fatal from containing no oxygen. When diluted with two-thirds of atmospheric air, it occasions some diminution of muscular power and sensibility, and a reduction of the force of the circulation. It has been respired in catarrh, hæmoptysis, and phthisis.

Hy'DROGEN, ANTIMO'NIATED. A gaseous substance prepared at the moment of administration, by adding muriatic acid to a mixture of antimony and zinc, with tartar emetic or chloride of antimony, and inhaled in cases of pneumonia and capillary bronchitis.

Hy'DROGEN, BINOX'IDE or PEROX'IDE OF, Oxy-genated water, is a combination of water with a mixing weight of oxygen. It is liquid, and very prone to decomposition. It is a powerful oxidizing agent, and has been given as an excitant in asphyxia, cholera, and narcotic poisoning; and in cachectic affections—cancer, diabetes, &c.; and externally in ulcers, chancre, diphtheritic sores, &c., probably by its oxidizing powers. A solution of the peroxide in ether, called Ozon'ic or O'zonized E'ther, was employed by Dr. B. W. Richardson, of London, with the view of oxidizing the sugar in the circulation, and causing its elimination through the lungs; but its efficacy is doubtful.

Hy'DROGEN, CARBURET'TED, Inflam'mable air, Fire-damp, of miners, Marsh gas, (F.) Hydrogène carboné ou proto-carboné, Grisou, Gaz des marais, — obtained by passing the vapor of water over charcoal, at the temperature of ignition, in an iron tube — has been found possessed of properties like hydrogen, and has been used, diluted, in like cases. After an explosion of fire-damp in mines, there remains the after damp, choke damp, or black damp, consisting of carbonic acid and nitrogen, which occasions a greater loss of life, perhaps, than the explosion.

Hy'DROGEN, PEROX'IDE OF, Hydrogen, binoxide of.

Hy'DROGEN, PROTOX'IDE OF, Water.

Hy'DROGEN, SULPH'URETTED, Hydrosulph'uric, Sulphy'dric, Sulphhy'dric, Sulphohy'dric or Hydrothion'ic ac'id, Hydrothi'on, Gas hepaticum seu hydrogen'ium sulphuratum, Mephi'tis hepatica, (F.) Hydrogène sulfuré, Acide hydrosulfurique ou sulphydrique, Air puant ou hépatique, may be disengaged from any of the sulphurets by the addition of a strong acid. It is a violent poison, but has been recommended to be inhaled, diluted, to allay the increased irritability which occasionally exists after diseases of the lungs. See Hydrosulphuretted water.

Hydrogena'tion, see Hydrogénèses.

Hydrogène, Hydrogen — h. Carboné ou proto-carboné, Hydrogen, carburetted — h. Sulfuré, Hydrogen, sulphuretted.

Hydrogénèses. Baumes gives this name to diseases which he fancifully considers to depend upon disturbed hydrogenation. In it he includes intermittent and remittent fevers.

Hydrogenosulphure'tum Ammoni'acæ Liq'idum, Ammonia sulphuretum.

Hydroglos'sa, (hydro, and γλωσσα, 'tongue,') Ranula.

Hydrog'raphy, (hydro, and γραφω, 'I describe,') see Hydrology.

Hydrohémie, (hydro, and αίμα, 'blood,') Anæmia, Hydroæmia.

Hydrohymen'itis, gen. Hydrohymen'itidis, Or-rhohymen'itis, Orrhymen'itis, (hydro, ύμνη, 'a membrane,' and itis,) Inflammation of a serous membrane.

Hydrohys'tera, (hydro, and ύτερα, 'uterus,') Hydrometra.

Hydrolæ'um, Hydrelæon.

Hydrolap'athum, (hydro, and λαπαθον, 'the dock,') Rumex hydrolapathum.

Hydro'lata, (ύδωρ, 'water,') Aquæ destillatæ.

Hydrolats, Aquæ destillatæ, Water, distilled.

Hydrolé, Decoction, Fomentation, Lotion, Mucilage, Potion, Tisane. See Hydrolica.

Hydro'lica, (F.) Hydroliques, (ύδωρ, 'water,') Watery solutions of the active principles of medicinal agents. Those prepared by solution or admixture are termed, by some of the modern French pharmaciens, Hydrolés; those by distillation, Hydrolats.

Hydroliques, Hydrolica.

Hydrolite, Decoction, Mucilage, Potion.

Hydrol'ogy, Hydrolog'ia, (hydro, and λογος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on water. By the term Medical Hydrol'ogy is meant that part of physics, whose object is the study of water, considered as it respects medicine; and, consequently, embracing that of mineral waters. Medical Hydrol'ography comprises the study of the influence exerted by the sea or by navigation on the health of man.

Hydrolotif, (hydro, and lavare, lotum, 'to wash.') Fomentation, Lotion.

Hydroma'nia, (hydro, and μανια, 'mania.') A name given by Strambi to pellagra, in which the patient has a strong propensity to drown himself.

Hydromediasti'num, Hy'drops mediasti'ni. Effusion of serous fluid into the mediastinum.

Hy'dromel, Hydrom'eli, (ὕδρωμι, from hydro, and μελι, 'honey,') A'qua mul'sa, Meliti'tis, Mul'sum, Melic'ratum, Mellic'ratum, Brag'gart, Me'do. A liquid medicine, prepared with an ounce and a half of honey and a pint of tepid water. It is used as a demulcent and laxative, and is generally known under the names Sim'ple hy'dromel, Vi'nous hy'dromel, Mead, Hydrom'eli vino'sum, C'enomel, is a drink made by fermenting honey and water, and is much used in some countries. As a common drink, mead is often made of honey and some alcoholic liquor well beaten together. See Mahogany.

Hydromellé. A preparation formed like the syrups, using hydromel in place of sugar.

Hydromeningi'tis, Aquomembranitis, Hydrocephalus internus.

Hydromenin'gocelè, (hydro, and meningocèle,) see Encephalocèle.

Hydrom'eter, (hydro, and μετρον, 'a measure.') Areometer, Acidometer.

Hydrom'etra, Hydrom'etria, Hydrohys'tera, Hydrometrecta'sia, Hysteri'tes, Hystero'dema, Hy'drops u'teri, (hydro, and μητρα, 'the womb,') Drop'sy of the womb. A disease characterized by circumscribed protuberance in the hypogastrium, — with obscure fluctuation, progressively enlarging, without ischury or pregnancy. If it ever occur, it must be a rare disease.—The term has also been applied to a collection of the catarrhal secretion of the mucous membrane behind an abnormally contracted os uteri, which impedes its discharge.

Hydrometrecta'sia, (hydro, μητρα, 'uterus,' and εκτασις, 'extension,') Hydrometra.

Hydrom'phalum, Hy'drops umbilica'lis, Exom'phalus aquo'sus, Her'nia umbili'ci aquo'sa, (hydro, and ομφαλος, 'the navel,') A tumor, formed by the accumulation of serum in the sac of umbilical hernia; or simply by distension of the navel in cases of ascites.

Hydromyri'nga, Hydromy'rinx, Hy'drops tym'pani, (hydro, and myringa or myrinx, 'the membrana tympani,') Dropsy of the drum of the ear; giving rise to difficulty of hearing. — Dysece'a hydrop'ica.

Hydromy'rinx, gen. Hydromyri'ngis, Hydromy'ringa.

Hydron'cus, (hydro, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') Anasarca, Edema.

Hydronephro'sis, Hydrore'nal disten'sion, Drop'sy of the Kid'ney, (F.) Hydronephrose, Hydronephrale distension, (hydro, νεφρος, 'kidney,' and osis,) An accumulation of its secretion in the kidney, owing to the obstruction of the tubes of the papillæ.

Hydron'osus, (hydro, and νοσος, 'a disease,') Hydrops.

Hydronu'sus, Hydrops.

Hydroc'a'ron, Hydroarion.

Hydroc'ph'oron, (hydro, ωφορος, 'egg bearing,') Hydroarion.

Hydroc'va'rium, Hydroarion.

Hydropath'ic, Hydropath'icus, Hydriat'ricus, (hydro, and παθος, 'affection,') Relating to hydropathy or the water-cure, — as a hydropathic physician, Hydriat'ric, Hydriat'ricus, Hydrop'athist.

Hydrop'athist, see Hydropathic.

Hydrop'athy, Hydrosudotherapeia.

Hydropede'sis, (F.) Hydropédèse, (from hydro, and πηδω, 'I spring out,') Ephidro'sis. Excessive sweating.

Hydrope'gè, (hydro, and πηγη, 'a spring,') Water, spring.

Hydropel'tis Purpu'rea, (hydro, and πελτη, 'a buckler,') a waterplant with leaves like buckler, Brasenia hypopeltis.

Hydropéricarde, Hydropericardium.

Hydropericar'dia, Hydropericardium.

Hydropericardi'tis, gen. Hydropericardi'tidis, Hydropericardium.

Hydropericar'dium, Hydroperikar'dium, Hydropericar'dia, Hydropericardi'tis, (hydro, and pericardium,) Hy'drops Pericar'dii, Hydrocar'dia, Drop'sy of the pericar'dium, (F.) Hydropéricarde, Hydropisie du Péricarde. This is not a common disease. Palpitations; irregular or intermitting pulse; excessive dyspnoea, amounting often to orthopnoea, and dulness over a large space on percussion, will cause the pericardium to be suspected. The treatment is that of dropsies in general. It is, usually, however, of the active kind.

Hydroperikar'dium, Hydropericardium.

Hydropérione, (hydro, περι, 'around,' and ων, 'an egg, or ovum,') The sero-albuminous substance, secreted by the lining of the uterus prior to the arrival of the impregnated ovum in that cavity.

Hydroperitone'um, Ascites.

Hydropéritione, Ascites.

Hydrophal'lus, (hydro, and φαλλος, 'the male organ,') Edema of the male organ.

Hydrophen'yl, Benzole.

Hydrophimo'sis, Phimosi œdematodes.

Hydrophlegma'sia Tex'tus Cellula'ris, Phlegmasia alba.

Hydrophlogo'sis Ventriculo'rum Cer'ebri, (hydro, and φλογωσις, 'inflammation,') Hydrocephalus internus.

Hydrophob'ia, popularly Hydropho'bia, (from hydro, and φοβος, 'dread,') Paraphob'ia, Parophob'ia, Phobodip'son, Phen'gydron, Phen'gophob'ia, Cynolys'sa, Cynolys'sum, Mor'bus hydrophob'icus seu hydrophob'obus, Lycan'chê, Lycan'chis, Aërophob'ia, Phreni'tis la'trans, Lyt'ta, Lys'sa, L. cani'na, Pantophob'ia, Ra'bies cani'na, Erethis'mus hydrophobia, Clo'nos hydrophobia, Hydrophobia, A'quæ mētus, Canine' mad'ness, Wa'terfright, (F.) Rage, Mal de Saint Hubert.

The term Ra'bies is more appropriate for the aggregate of symptoms resulting from the bite of rabid animals. Hydrophobia literally signifies a 'dread of water;' and consequently, ought to be applied to one of the symptoms of rabies, rather than to the disease itself. It is a symptom which appears occasionally in other nervous affections. Rabies is susceptible of spontaneous development in the dog, wolf, cat, and fox, which can thence transmit it to other quadrupeds or to man; but it has not been proved that it can supervene — without their having been previously bitten — in animals of other species; or that the latter can, when bitten, communicate it to others. Many facts induce the belief that the saliva and bronchial mucus are the sole vehicles of the rabid virus; the effects of which upon the economy sometimes appear almost immediately after the bite, and are at others apparently dormant for a considerable period. The chief symptoms are — a sense of dryness and constriction of the throat; excessive thirst; difficult deglutition; aversion for, and horror at, the sight of liquids as well as of brilliant objects; red, animated countenance; great nervous irritability; frothy saliva; grinding of the teeth, &c. Death most commonly happens before the fifth day. Hydrophobia has hitherto resisted all therapeutical means. Those which allay irritation are obviously most called for. In the way of prevention, the bitten part should always be excised, where practicable, and cauterized.

In some cases, symptoms like those which follow the bite of a rabid animal are said to have come on spontaneously. This affection has been termed nervous, hysterical, or spontaneous hydrophobia.

Hydrophthal'mia, (hydro, and ὀφθαλμος, 'the eye,') Hydrophthal'mus, Drop'sy of the eye, Hy'drops Oculi, Buphthal'mus, Zoöphthal'mus, Oculus Bovinus seu Bubulus seu Elephan'tinus, Ceratoglo'bus, Keratoglo'bus, Ophthalmopto'sis, Parop'sis staphylo'ma simplex, (F.) Hydrophthal'mie, Hydropisie de l'œil. This affection is caused, at times, by an increase in the quantity of the aqueous, at others, of the vitreous, humor. In the former case, the iris is concave anteriorly, and pushed backwards:—in the latter, it is convex, and pushed forwards. Most commonly, the disease seems to depend on both humors at the same time. Hydrophthal'mia sometimes affects both eyes; at others, only one. Children are more exposed to it than adults or old persons. The treatment must vary according to the cause; its longer or shorter duration; greater or less extent, &c. Hence, according to circumstances, hydragogue medicines, purgatives, general and local bloodletting, blisters, setons, moxa, cupping-glasses, fomentations, collyria, and fumigations of different kinds, have been employed. When all means fail, and the disease continues to make progress, the fluid may be evacuated by a puncture made with a cataract needle at the lower part of the transparent cornea.

HYDROPHTHAL'MIA, CON'ICAL, Staphyloma of the cornea.

Hydrophthal'mion. An oedematous swelling of the conjunctiva in hydroptic persons.

Hydropneumop'ericardie, (hydro, πνευμα, 'air,' and pericardium.) An effusion of fluid,—as of blood, pus, or fibrinous exudation,—and air in the cavity of the pericardium.

Hydropneumosar'ca, (hydro, πνευμα, 'wind, air,' and σαρξ, 'flesh,') An abscess containing water, air, and matters similar to flesh.

Hydropneumotho'rax, gen. Hydropneumotho'ra'cis, Hydroaëropleurie, (hydro, πνευμων, 'the lung,' and θώραξ, 'the chest,') Pneumothorax with effusion of blood into the chest. See Pneumothorax.

Hydropoi'des, (ὕδρωποιδης, from hydrops, and εἶδος, 'likeness,') An epithet for watery excretions, such as sometimes take place in hydroptics.

Hydrop'ota, Hydrop'otes, (ὕδρωποτης, from hydro, and ποτης, 'a drinker,') Pota'tor Aquæ. A water drinker. One who drinks only water, or drinks it in an extraordinary quantity.

Hy'drops, gen. Hydro'pis, (ὕδρωψ, from ὕδωρ, 'water,') Phlegma'tia, Hy'deros, Hyder'iasis, Affectus hydero'des, Hydrop'isis, Hydropis'ia, Hydropis'mus, Hydrop'sia, Hydro'rrho'a, Hydro'rrhoë, Hydro'rrhoïs, Polyhy'dria, Hydron'osus, Hydron'us, Drop'sy, Hy'dropsy, (Old Eng.) Drop'yk, (F.) Hydropisie. A preternatural collection of a serous fluid in any cavity of the body or in the areolar texture. When the areolar texture of the whole body is more or less filled with fluid, the disease is called Anasar'ca or Leucophlegma'tia;—and when this variety is local or partial, it is called Œde'ma. The chief dropsies, designated from their seat, are:—Anasarca, Hydrocephalus, Hydro'rachitis, Hydrothorax, Hydropericardium, Ascites, Hydrometra, Hydrocele, &c.

Encyst'ed Drop'sy, Hy'drops sacca'tus, incaeratus seu cyst'icus, is that variety in which the fluid is enclosed in a sac or cyst; so that it has no communication with the surrounding parts. Dropsy of the Ovarium, Hy'drops seu Ascites Ova'rii, Ascites sacca'tus, is an instance of this variety.

Dropsy may be active or passive. The former consists in an increased action of the exhalants, so that those vessels pour out much more fluid than is absorbed; the latter arises from a state of atony of the absorbent vessels, which allows of an accumulation of fluid. It may also be mechanical, or produced by obstructions to the circulation, as in cases of diseased liver. Active dropsy, occurring accidentally in a sound individual, generally ends favorably. That which supervenes on other diseases, or is symptomatic of some internal affection, is rarely curable.

The treatment consists in the use of all those remedies which act on the various secretions; so that, the demand being increased, the supply will have to be increased accordingly; and in this manner some of the collected fluid may be taken up by the absorbents. To this end, bleeding if the dropsy be very active; purgatives, diuretics, sudorifics, sialagogues, &c., are the remedies chiefly depended upon.

In hydrothorax, the course of treatment proper in dropsies in general must be adopted. Diuretics seem here to be especially useful; probably on account of the great activity of pulmonary absorption. Paracentesis can rarely be serviceable.

HYDROTHORAX CHYLOSUS, Chylothorax — h. Purulentus, Empyema.

Hydrot'ica (ὕδωρ, 'water,') Hydragogues.

Hydro'tis, gen. Hydro'tidis, (hydro, and οὖς, gen. ὠτός, 'the ear,') Dropsy of the ear. Properly, an accumulation of mucous or muco-purulent matter in the middle ear.

Hydrure'sis, (hydro, and οὐρον, 'urine,') Diabetes.

Hydru'ria, Diabetes, see Urine.

Hyères. This small town, agreeably situated on the declivity of a hill, about two miles from the Mediterranean, and twelve from Toulon, is the least exceptionable residence in Provence for the pulmonary invalid. It is in some measure protected from the northerly winds, but, according to Sir James Clark, not sufficiently so from the mistral to render it a very desirable residence for the phthisical.

Hyge'a, Hygiene, Sanitas.

Hygei'a, (ὕγια, 'health,') Sanitas.

Hygrocollyr'ia, see Collyrium.

Hygrocy'stis, gen. Hygrocy'stidis, (hygro, and κύστις, 'a bladder,') Hydatid.

Hygrol'ogy, Hygrolog'ia, (hygro, and λόγος, 'a discourse,') The anatomy of the fluids of the body.

Hygro'ma, gen. Hygro'matis, (ὕγρος, 'moist,') Tu'mor cyst'icus sero'sus, Cys'tis sero'sa, Sé'rous Cyst, (F.) Hygrome. A simple or barren cyst, containing a fluid like that of serous membranes.

Hygrome du Genou, Knee, housemaid's.

Hygromet'ric, Hygromet'ricus, (F.) Hygrométrique. Relating or appertaining to hygrometry.

HYGROMET'RIC PROP'ERTY of an organized tissue, (F.) Hygrométrie, Hygroscopticité, is that by which it gives off to the air and receives from it moisture under varying conditions of that medium.

Hygrométrie, Hygrometric property.

Hygrom'etry, Hygromet'ria, Hygrosco'pia, (hygro, and μέτρον, 'measure,') The part of physics which concerns the measurement of the dryness or humidity of the atmosphere. It is probable that diseases are frequently caused by the varying moisture of the atmosphere or by changes in its weight or temperature. The hygrometer ought, consequently, to form part of every apparatus for medical meteorological observations.

Hy'gron, (ὕγρος, 'liquid,') Liquor.

Hygrophob'ia, (hygro, and φόβος, 'dread,') Hydrophobia.

Hygrophthal'mia, (hygro, and οphthalmia,) Ophthalmia with much lachrymation.

Hyliste'rion, (ὕλισθηριον, 'colatorium,') Colatorium.

Hyloph'agous, (hyle, 'wood, and φάγω, 'I eat,') One that feeds upon the young shoots of trees, roots, &c. Hylophagous tribes yet exist in some parts of Africa.

Hylot'richi, (ὕλη, 'a wood, and τριχί, gen. τριχες, 'a hair,') Ulotrichi.

Hylozo'ism, gen. Hylozoism'us, (hyle, and ζωη, 'life,') Materialism. A doctrine that life is the result of matter or organization.

Hy'men, gen. Hy'menis, (ὑμην, 'marriage, nuptial song, membrane or pellicle,') Claus'trum seu Flos seu Sigil'lum seu Custo'dia seu Colum'na seu Zo'na virginita'tis, Claus'trum virginal'e, Flos virginal'is, Cir'culus membrano'sus, Buc'ton, Interseptum virginal'e, Cen'to virginal'is, Argumen'tum Integrita'tis, Munimen'tum seu Zo'na Castita'tis, Pannic'ulus hymenæ'us seu virginal'is, Eugi'on, Eugi'um, Val'vula vagi'næ, Val'vula seu Membran'ula luna'ta vagi'næ, Vir'ginal membrane. The semilunar, parabolic, or circular fold, situate at the outer orifice of the vagina in virgins, especially during youth and prior to menstruation. This membrane is ordinarily ruptured by the first venereal act, and is effaced by accouchement; some irregular flaps remaining, to which the name Carun'culæ Myrtifor'mes has been given by reason of their resemblance to the leaves of the myrtle. Many circumstances of an innocent character may occasion a rupture or destruction of this membrane. It is often, indeed, found absent in children soon after birth; while it may remain entire after copulation. Hence the presence of the hymen does not absolutely prove virginity; nor does its absence prove incontinence, although its presence would be primâ facie evidence of continence.

HY'MEN, (ὑμην,) Membrane—h. Diaphragm, Mediastinum.

Hymenæ'a, (after the god Hymen,) see Copal—h. Courbaril, see Anime.

Hymen'ica Amenorrhœ'a. Amenorrhœa occasioned by closure of the hymen.

Hymen'icus, Hymeno'des. Relating to the hymen. Also, membranous.

Hymeni'tis, gen. Hymeni'tidis, (hymen, and itis.) Membranous inflammation. Inflammation of an internal membrane.

Hymen'ium, (ὑμενιον, dim. of hymen.) Membran'ula. A fine, delicate membrane.

Hymeno'des, (ὑμενοδης,) Hymenicus.

Hymenodic'tyon Excel'sum, (hymen, and ἔκτυον, 'a net,') see Cinchona excelsa.

Hymenoganglii'tis, Cholera.

Hymenog'ony, Hymenogen'ia, (F.) Hyménogénie, (hymen, and γεννω, 'I engender.') The production of membranes by the effect of simple contact of two liquids, as albumen and fat, when the former gives a coating to the globules of the latter. (Ascherson.) See Haptogen.

Hymenog'raphy, Hymenogra'phia, (hymen, and γραφω, 'I describe.') That part of anatomy whose object is the description of the different membranes.

Hymenol'ogy, Hymenolog'ia, (hymen, and λογος, 'a description.') A treatise on the membranes.

Hymenophthal'mia, Ophthalmia membranarum.

Hymenor'rhap'hy, Hymenorrha'phia, (hymen, and ραφη, 'a suture.') A form of elytrorrhaphy, in which the operation is performed in the natural situation of the hymen.

Hymenot'omy, Hymenotomi'ia, (hymen, and τομη, 'incision.') The part of anatomy which treats of the dissection of the membranes. The term has also been applied to the incision of the hymen, practised in certain cases of imperforation of the vagina, in order to give exit to the blood retained and accumulated in the cavity of the uterus.

Hym'nium, (contracted from hymenium.) Amnion.

Hy'o, in composition, an abridgment of Hyoides os.

Hyobasioglos'sus, Basioglossus.

Hyochondroglos'sus, Hyoglossus.

Hyodeoglos'sus, Hyoglossus.

Hyodeothyreo'des, Thyreohyoides.

Hyodepiglot'ticus, Hyoepiglotticus.

Hyoides, Hyoides.

Hyoepiglot'ticus, Hyodepiglot'ticus. Belonging to the os hyoides and epiglottis. Some anatomists have given the name Hyoepiglottic ligament to a bundle of condensed areolar tissue, which passes from the posterior part of the body of the hyoid bone to the base of the epiglottic fibro-cartilage.

Hyoglos'sal Mem'brane. A fibrous lamina, connecting the under surface of the base of the tongue with the body of the hyoid bone.

Hyoglosso-basi-pharyngien, Constrictor pharyngis.

Hyoglos'sus, Hyodeoglos'sus, Hyochon'droglos'sus, Hyp'siloglossus, Cer'atoglossus of Douglass and Cowper: Bas'io-ceratochon'droglossus. A large, thin, quadrilateral muscle, situate at the anterior and superior part of the neck. Its insertions at three different points of the os hyoides permit it to be divided into three portions:—the first (Cer'atoglossus of Albinus), is attached to the great cornu of the os hyoides; the second (Basioglossus of Albinus), arises from the superior part of the body of the same bone; and the third (Chondroglossus of Albinus), arises from the lesser cornu and the cartilage situate between the body and the greater cornu. The fibres of these three bundles are inserted into the lateral and inferior parts of the tongue. This muscle depresses the base of the tongue, or raises the os hyoides, when the tongue is fixed.

Hy'oid bone, Hyoides os.

Hyoides Os, (ὑοιδης, the Greek ὑ and οιδης, 'shape,') Os Bico'r'nè seu Hypselo'id'es seu Lambdo'id'es seu Gut'turis seu Guttura'lè seu Lin'gue seu Lingua'lè, Upsilo'id'es, Ypsilo'id'es. The Hy'oid Bone, Hyoid'es, Hyo'des. The hyoid bone is a very movable osseous arch, of a parabolic shape, convex before, and suspended horizontally in the substance of the soft parts of the neck, between the base of the tongue and the larynx. This bone, separated entirely from the rest of the skeleton, is composed of five distinct portions, susceptible of motion on each other. The first and most central is the body of the hyoid, Ossic'ulum me'dium Hyoid'es, which affords attachment to several muscles; the two others are lateral, and bear the name of branches or greater cornua. The last two are smaller, situate above the other, and are known under the name lesser cornua and styloid cornua, the Os'sa pisi'for'mia lingua'l'ia of Sömmerring, Os'sa seu Gra'na seu Ossic'ula seu Cor'pora seu Corpus'cula tritic'ea. The os hyoides is ossified from five points.

Hyoid'es, Hyoides.

Hyoid'es Quar'tus Mus'culus, Omo'hyoides.

Hyoscy'amia or Hyoscy'amin, see Hyoscyamus.

Hyoscy'amus, (ὑς, 'a swine,' and κυας, 'a bean,' eaten by swine,) Fa'ba suil'la, Ben'gi, Jusqui'amus, Hyoscyamus ni'ger seu agres'tis, Apollina'ris, Alter'cum, Ag'onè, Altercan'genon, Hen'banc, Poi'son tobac'co, Stink'ing night'shade, (F.) Jusquiame, Fève à Cochon, Hannebanes, Pote-lée, Porcelet. Ord. Solanaceæ. The leaves, Hyoscy'ami fo'lia (Ph. U. S., 1873), Hyoscy'ami fo'lium (Ph. U. S., 1863), and seed, Hyoscy'ami se'men (Ph. U. S., 1873), are the parts used in medicine. Their odor is narcotic and peculiar, taste insipid and mucilaginous. The virtues are yielded to proof spirit. Hyoscyamus is narcotic, anodyne, antispasmodic, and slightly stimulant. It is used as a substitute for opium, where the latter disagrees; and is applied externally as a cataplasm in cancer and glandular swellings. Dose, gr. iij. to x. of the powder. An alkaloid has been obtained from it, Hyoscy'amin, Hyoscy'a'mia, Jus'qui'amine, which, in minute fractional doses, seems to exercise a favorable action in the spasmodic and convulsive neuroses.

HYOSCY'AMUS AGRES'TIS, Hyoscyamus.

HYOSCY'AMUS AL'BUS, White Hen'bone, possesses similar virtues to H. niger.

HYOSCY'AMUS LU'TEUS, Nicotiana rustica—h. Niger, Hyoscyamus—h. Peruvianus, Nicotiana tabacum.

HYOSCY'AMUS SCOPO'LIA, Scopoli'na atropoi'des. The herb and root of this plant, which grows in Illyria, Hungary, Croatia, Gallizia, and Bavaria, are used in the same cases as belladonna. Dose of the powder, half a grain.

Hyothyreo'id'es, Thyreohyoides.

Hyothy'roid, Thyreohyoid.

Hyothyroid'en, Levator glandulæ thyreoidæ.

Hypac'ticus, (ὑπακτικός, from hypo, and αγω, 'I drive,') Cathartic.

Hypæ'mia, (hypo, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Hypæ'- mia, Hypohæmia, Hyphæmia, Oligæmia, Oligohæmia, Anæmia, (F.) Hyphémie. Deficiency of blood. Also, extravasation of blood.

HYPÆMIA OC'ULI, Hæmophthalmia.

Hypago'gê, (ὑπαγωγή, from hypo, and αγω, 'I drive,') Dejection.

Hypago'gus, (ὑπαγωγός,) Laxative.

Hypaleim'ma, gen. Hypaleim'matis, (hypo, and αλειψω, 'I anoint,') Hypalim'ma, Hypaleip'tum, Hypalip'tum. An ointment or liniment to be rubbed or spread on a part.

Hypaleip'tris, gen. Hypaleip'tridis, (ὑπαλειπτρίς,) Hypaleiptron.

Hypaleip'tron, (ὑπαλειπτρον,) Hypaleip'trum, Hypaleip'tris, Hypalip'trum, Specil'tum, Spa'tha. A sort of spatula for spreading ointments.

Hypaleip'tum, Hypaleimma.

Hypalim'ma, gen. Hypalim'matis, Hypaleimma.

Hypalip'trum, Hypaleiptron.

Hypamauro'sis, (hypo, and amaurosis,) Amauro'sis imperfecta. Imperfect amaurosis, Meramauro'sis.

Hypanco'nium, (hypo, and αγκων, 'the elbow,') A pillow for supporting the elbow in surgical cases.

Hypapoplex'ia, (hypo, and apoplexia,) An incomplete attack of apoplexy.

Hypatmis'mus, Fumigation.

Hypat'mus, (ὑπατμός, from hypo, and ατμός, 'vapor,') Fumigation.

Hypauche'nium, (hypo, and αυχην, 'the neck,') A pillow or cushion for the neck.

Hypechore'sis, (ὑπεχώρησις, from hypo, ec, and χωρεω, 'I make vacant,') Dejection.

Hypechoret'icus, Laxative.

Hypela'tus, (hypo, and ελαυνω, 'I drive,') Cathartic, Laxative.

Hypenantio'ma, (hypo, and εναντιος, 'opposite,') Allopathy.

Hypenantio'sis, Allopathy.

Hype'nê, (ὑπηνη,) The beard which grows under the chin, according to some. Also, the upper lip. See Mystax.

Hypene'tes, (ὑπηνητης,) Adolescence.

Hyper, ὑπερ, 'above,' 'in excess.'

Hyperacu'sis, Oxyeco'i'a, Hyperac'oë, Phthongodysp'horia, (F.) Hyperacousie, (hyper, and ακουη, 'audition,') Excessive sensibility of the organ of hearing.

Hyperadeno'sis, Hyperadeno'ma, Hyper-troph'ia glandula'rum, (hyper, αδην, 'a gland,' and osis,) Hypertrophy of a gland.

Hyperæ'mia, Hyperhæ'mia, Hyperæmo'sis, Hæmorrhæ'mia, (F.) Hyperémie, Hyperhémie, Angiohémie, (hyper, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Preternatural accumulation of blood in the capillary vessels, more especially local plethora—pletho'ra partialis; congestion. Various forms of hyperæmia are admitted by pathologists,—for example, the active or sthenic; the asthenic or passive; the cadaveric, or that which forms immediately before or after death; the hypostatic, which occurs in depending parts, and the mechanical, which is produced by some mechanical impediment.

HYPÆMIA ABDOM'INIS, Cœliæmia—h. Activa, Inflammation—h. of the Brain, Cephalæmia—h. Capiti's, Cephalæmia—h. Cerebri, Cephalæmia—h. Hepatica, Hepatohæmia—h. of the Lungs, Stethæmia—h. Pectoris, Stethæmia—h. Pulmonum, Stethæmia.

Hyperæ'mic, Hyperæ'micus, Hyperæ'mial, Congest'ed, Blood'shot, (F.) Hyperémié. Affected with hyperæmia.

Hyperæmo'sis, Hyperæmia.

Hyperæ'ria, (hyper, and αἷρ,) A condition of lung in which many of the pulmonary cells are torn across, and large cavities formed in the parenchyma, which are filled with air. See Emphysema.

Hyperæsthe'sia, (hyper, and αἰσθησις, 'the faculty of feeling,') Hyperæsthesia—h. Linguae, Hyperguestia—h. Olfactoria, Hyperosphresia—h. Plexus cardiaci, Angina pectoris—h. Psychica, Hypochondriasis.

Hyperæsthe'sis, Hyperæsthe'sia, Oxyæsthe'sia, (F.) Hyperesthésie. Excessive sensibility, impressibility, or passibility.

Hyperæsthet'ica. Agents that are conceived to augment general sensibility—as strychnia, brucia, &c.

Hyperanarrhophe'sis, (hyper, and αναρόφησις, 'absorption,') Excessive absorption.

Hyperanthe'ra Morin'ga, (hyper, 'in excess,' and anthera, 'anther,') Guilandina moringa.

Hyperanthrax'is, (hyper, and ανθραξ, 'a coal,') see Cholera.

Hyperaph'ia, Oxyaph'hē, Oxyaph'hia, (hyper, and ἅψη, 'touch,') Excessive acuteness of touch.

Hyperaphrodis'ia, (hyper, and Αφροδιτη, 'Venus,') Excessive venereal desire.

Hyperastheni'a, (hyper, and ασθενεια, 'weakness,') Excessive debility.

Hyperauxe'sis, (hyper, and αυξησις, 'augmentation,') Hyperepid'osis. Excessive increase or enlargement of a part, as Hyperauxe'sis I'ridis, an excessive enlargement of the iris, so as to stop up the pupil.

Hyperbol'ic (Attitude), (ὑπερβολικος, from hyper, and βαλλω, 'I throw,') 'excessive.' Galen, by this term, designates certain extraordinary attitudes, in which the limbs and vertebral column are in a state of complete extension or flexion.

Hyperbo'rean, Hyperbo'reus, (ὑπερβορειος, from hyper, and βορæας, 'the north wind,') A race of men found at the extreme north of the two continents, in the vicinity of the polar circle. It includes the Thibetans, Ostiaks, Kamtschadales, Laplanders, Samoiedes, Esquimaux, &c.

Hyperbu'lia, (hyper, and βουλη, 'will,') Ungovernable will or volition.

Hypercar'dia, (hyper, and καρδια, 'heart,') Heart, hypertrophy of the.

Hypercardiotroph'ia, (hyper, καρδια, 'heart,' and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Heart, hypertrophy of the.

Hypercatapino'sis, (hyper, καταπινειν, 'to sip up,' and osis,) Excessive activity of absorption.

Hypercathar'sis, Hyperine'sis, Hyper'inos, Superpurga'tio, Effrenita'tio, (hyper, and καθαρισις, 'purgation,') Superpurgation.

Hyperceno'sis, (hyper, and κινωσις, 'evacuation,') Excessive evacuation, as of blood, bile, &c.

Hypercer'asis, (hyper, and κερας, 'the cornea,') Staphyloma of the cornea.

Hypercerato'sis, Staphyloma of the cornea.

Hyperchol'ia, (hyper, and χολη, 'bile,') Polycholia.

Hyperchro'ma, gen. Hyperchro'matis, (hyper, and χρωμα, 'color,') A red fleshy excrescence at the inner angle of the eye, near the caruncula lacrymalis, which sometimes grows very large, so as to separate the eyelids and interfere with their movements.

Hyperchromatops'ia, Hyperchromatop'sy, (hyper, and χρωμα, gen. χρωματος, 'color,' and οψις, 'vision,') A defect of vision, owing to which ideas of color are attached to objects, which convey no such colored impressions to a healthy eye. It is the antithesis to achromatopsia.

Hypercine'sia, Hypercine'sis, (hyper, and κινωσις,—κινω, 'I move,'—'motion,') Excessive motion. Under the term Hypercinesis, (F.) Hyperkinesie, Romberg includes the spasmodic neu-roses.

HYPERCINE'SIA OF THE FA'CIAL NERVE, Tic

convulsif — h. Hysterica, Hysteria — h. Nervosa, see Irritable — h. Uterina, Hysteria.

Hypercinésie, Hypercinesia.

Hypercoine'sis Gas'trica, Hypochondriasis.

Hyperconjunctivite, see Ophthalmia.

Hypercorypho'sis, (hyper, and κορυφή, 'the vertex'; 'the extreme point of anything.') The lobes of the liver and lungs.

Hypercrin'ia, Hyperdiac'risis, Chymozer'mia, (hyper, and κρίνω, 'I separate.') A morbid increase in the quantity of the secretions.

Hypercrisis, Superevcre'tio, Superevacua'tio, Superevacua'tio. An excessive crisis, or evacuation; a flux. — A very violent, critical effort, or too copious critical evacuations.

Hypercyema, gen. Hypercy'e'matis, (hyper, and κύειν, 'to conceive.') Superfoetation.

Hypercy'e'sis, Superfoetation.

Hyperdermato'sis, Hyperdermato'ma, Hyperdermo'sis, Hyperdermo'ma, (hyper, δέρμα, 'skin,' and osis.) Hypertrophy of the skin.

Hyperdiac'risis, (hyper, διά, and κρίνω, 'I separate,') Hypercrinia.

Hyperdic'rotous, (hyper, δι, 'double,' and κρίνω, 'I strike,') see Hypodicrotous.

Hyperdiure'sis, Diabetes.

Hyperdyna'mia, (hyper, and δύναμις, 'strength,') Hypersthenia.

Hyperdyna'mic, Hyperdyna'micus. Appertaining to or having the characters of hyperdynamia, or excessive strength — of the vital powers more especially.

Hypereche'ma, gen. Hypereche'matis, (hyper, and ἤχω, 'I sound,') see Exaggerated.

Hypereche'sis, see Exaggerated.

Hyperem'esis, Hyperemes'ia, Vom'itus profu'sus, (hyper, and εἶπω, 'I vomit,') Excessive vomiting.

Hyperémie, Hyperæmia — h. Cérébrale, Cephalæmia — h. du Cerveau, Cephalæmia — h. du Foie, Hepato hæmia — h. Hypostatique, see Hypostatic — h. de la Moëlle Épinère, Hypermyelohæmia — h. des Poumons, Stethæmia.

Hyperémié, Hyperæmic.

Hyperencephalotrophie, (hyper, εγκεφαλον, 'the encephalon,' and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Hypertrophy of the encephalon of Piorry.

Hyperenceph'alus, (F.) Hyperencephale, (hyper, and encephalon.) A monster whose excessive brain is situate in the skull.

Hyperendosmose, Inflammation.

Hyperenergi'a, (hyper, and ενέργεια, 'activity,') Excessive activity, as of the nervous system.

Hyperephidro'sis, Ephidrosis.

Hyperepid'osis, (hyper, and επιόσις, 'increase,') Hyperauxesis.

Hypererethis'ia, (hyper, and ερεθίζω, 'I excite,') Excessive irritability.

Hyperesthésie, Hyperæsthesia.

Hyperfibrina'tion, Hyperinosis.

Hypergen'esis, (hyper, and γενεσις, 'generation,') (F.) Hypergénésie, Hyperplastie. Excess of formative power, which may give occasion to monstrosities by excess of parts. See Monster.

Hypergeus'tia, Hypergeus'is, Hyperæsthe'sia lin'gue, Oxygeus'ia, (hyper, and γεύσις, 'taste,') Excessive sensibility of the organ of taste.

Hyperglot'tis, see Larynx.

Hyperhæmato'sis, Inflammation.

Hyperhæ'mia, Hyperæmia.

Hyperhémie, Hyperæmia.

Hyperhépatotrophie, (hyper, ἥπαρ, gen. ἥπαρος, 'liver,' and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Hepatauxe.

Hyperhidro'sis, (hyper, and ἰδρωσις, 'sweating,') Epidrosis.

Hyperho'ra, (hyper, and ῥα, 'manhood,') Premature development of the body, or of some part.

Hypericum or Hypericum Bacciferum, (ὑπερικόν.) Arbus'cula gummif'era Brazilien'sis,

Caa-opia. Ord. Hypericaceæ. A Brazilian tree, whose bark, like that of H. Guianen'sē, Vis'mia Guianen'sis, emits a juice, when wounded, which resembles gamboge. Hypericum is considered by Linnæus to be derived from ὑπερ, 'over,' and αἶκων, 'an image or spectre;' from its having been fancied to possess the power of driving away evil spirits.

HYPERICUM ANDROSÆMUM, Androsæmum.

HYPERICUM CONNATUM, Orelha de Gato. The leaves of this Brazilian plant are astringent, and used, in decoction, as a gargle, in inflammation of the throat.

HYPERICUM GUIANEN'SE, see Hypericum bacciferum.

HYPERICUM LAXIUS' CULUM, Allerim bravo of the natives, has been long used in Brazil against the bites of serpents.

HYPERICUM OFFICINA'LE, H. perforatum — h. Officinatum, H. perforatum.

HYPERICUM PERFORATUM, Hypericum, H. officina'le seu officina'rum seu vulga'rē seu Virgin'icum, Fu'ga Dæ'monum, Co'rion, Perforated or Common St. John's Wort, (F.) Millepertuis ordinaire. It is aromatic and astringent, and enters into a number of aromatic preparations; and, among others, into the Falltranks. It was, at one time, much used in dysentery, hemorrhages, &c. The juice is acrid. The Oil of St. John's Wort, Red oil, Linimen'tum seu O'leum hyperici, Bal'samum hyperici sim'plex, is made by infusing 3iv. of the flowers in a quart of olive oil. It is applied to recent bruises.

HYPERICUM SARO'THRA, Or'angegrass, Pine-wood, indigenous, is applied in domestic practice, boiled, to contusions and sprains.

HYPERICUM VIRGIN'ICUM, H. perforatum — h. Vulgare, H. perforatum.

Hyperidro'sis, Ephidrosis.

Hyperine'sis, (ὑπερινόσις, from hyper, and ινω, 'I purge,') Hypercatharsis.

Hyper'inos, (ὑπερινός.) Hypercatharsis.

Hyperino'sis, Ino'sis, Hyperplas'ma, (hyper, ιν, gen. ινος, 'fibre,' and osis.) The condition of the blood in which it contains an increase in the proportion of fibrin, Hyperfibrina'tion, Superfibrina'tion, a decrease of the ratio of red corpuscles, with excess of fibrin and an increase of the fat, — as in inflammation. In proportion to the increase of the fibrin and fat, and the decrease of the corpuscles, the whole solid residue will be diminished. Also, morbidly increased muscular activity.

Hyperinot'ic, Hyperino'ticus. Appertaining or relating to hyperinosis.

Hyperkinésie, Hypercinesia — h. du Cœur, Palpitation — h. du Facial, Tic convulsif.

Hyperkinésie Spinale. Exaggeration of spinal or automatic action, as in hysteria.

Hyperlymph'ia, (F.) Hyperlymphie, (hyper, and lymph'a.) Excessive formation or accumulation of lymph.

Hypermégalie, (hyper, and μεγας, 'great,') Exaggerated development, as of the heart from fatty or amyloid degeneration of its structure.

Hypermétrohémie, Metro hæmia.

Hypermetrop'ia, (hyper, μετρον, 'a measure,' and οψις, 'vision,') Hyperopia.

Hypermetrop'ic, Hypermetrop'icus. Relating or appertaining to hypermetropia. Also, one affected with this condition of vision.

Hypermnésie, (from hyper, and μνησθαι, 'I recollect,') Excessive memory.

Hypermyelohæ'mia, (F.) Hyperémie de la Moëlle Épinère, Congestion sanguine rachidienne, (hyper, μυελος, 'marrow,' and αἷμα, 'blood,') Hyperæmia of the spinal marrow.

Hypernéphrotrophie, (hyper, νεφρος, 'kidney,' and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Hypertrophy of the kidney.

Hyperneur'ia, (hyper, and νευρον, 'a nerve.') Excessive nervous activity.

Hyperneuro'ma, gen. Hyperneuro'matis. Morbid development of the neurine or nervous masses.

Hypero'a, (ὑπερωα, from hyper, and ων, 'a high place.') The palatine arch—the base of the cranium; the palate.

Hyperoi'tis, Inflamma'tio pala'ti, Angi'na palati'na, (F.) Inflammation du Palais, (hyperoa, and itis.) Inflammation of the velum palati.

Hypero'chas'ma, gen. Hypero'chas'matis, (hyperoa, and χασμα, 'an opening.') Lycost'oma, Pala'tum fissum. Fissure of the palate.

Hyperopharynge'us, Palatopharyngeus.

Hypero'pia, Hypermetrop'ia, Hyperpresby'opia, (hyper, and ωψ, the 'eye.') The opposite condition of vision to myopia, in which the principal focus falls behind the retina, as, in myopia, it falls in front of it. See Presbyopia.

Hyperopsia, (hyper, and οψις, 'vision,') Oxyopia.

Hype'ros, (ὑπερος.) Pilum.

Hyperos'mia, (hyper, and οσμη, 'smell,') Hyperosphresia.

Hyperosphre'sia, Hyperos'mia, Hyperæsthe'sia olfacto'ria, Olfac'tus acu'tus, (hyper, and οσφρησις, 'smell,') Excessive acuteness of the smell.

Hyperosto'sis, (hyper, οστεον, 'a bone,' and osis.) Exostosis.

Hyperpathi'a, (hyper, and παθος, 'affection.') Excessive sensibility in disease.

Hyperphlebo'sis, (hyper, φλεψ, gen. φλεβος, 'a vein,' and osis.) Too great development of the venous system; predominant venosity.

Hyperphlegma'sia, Hyperphlogosis.

Hyperphlogo'sis, Epiphlogo'sis, Hyperphlegma'sia, Inflamma'tio peracu'ta, (hyper, and φλογωσις, 'inflammation,') A high degree of inflammation.

Hyperphrénie, (hyper, and φρεν, 'the mind,') Mania.

Hyperpim'elē, (hyper, and πυμελη, 'fat,') see Polysarcia.

Hyperpla'sia, (F.) Hyperplasia, (hyper, and πλασσω, 'I form,') Excess of formative action.—Hyperplasia relates to the formation of new elements, Hypertrophy being an increase in bulk of pre-existing normal elements.

Hyperplas'ma, gen. Hyperplasm'atis, (hyper, and πλασσω, 'I form,') Hyperinosis.

Hyperplas'tic, (same etymon.) Having a tendency to excess of formative action.

Hyperplastie, Hypergenesis.

Hyperplexie, (hyper, and πλησσω, 'I strike,') Ecstasis.

Hyperpneus'tia, (hyper, and πνέω, 'I blow,') Flatulence.

Hyperpresbyo'pia, (hyper, and presbyopia.) Hyperopia.

Hyperpresbyt'ia, Presbytia.

Hypersarco'ma, gen. Hypersarco'matis, Hypersarco'sis, Hypersarx'is, (hyper, and sarcoma.) A soft fungous excrecence, especially such as appears upon ulcerated parts;—a fungosity.

Hypersarco'sis, (hyper, and sarcosis.) Excrecence, Fungosity—h. Cordis, Heart, hypertrophy of the.

Hypersarx'is, (hyper, and σαρξ, 'flesh,') Hypersarcoma.

Hypersom'nia, (hyper, and somnus, 'sleep,') (A hybrid word.) See Sleep.

Hyperspa'dias, (hyper, and σπᾶω, 'I draw,') Epispadias.

Hyperspasm'ia, (hyper, and σπασμος, 'spasm,') Convulsion.

Hypersplénotrophie, (hyper, splen, and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Splenoncus.

Hyperspon'gia, (hyper, and σπογγος, 'a sponge, a fungus,') Spina ventosa.

Hyperstheni'a, Hyperdyna'mia, Hyperzodyna'mia, Stas'tus inflammato'rius ve'rus, (hyper, and σθενος, 'strength,') Super-excitement. A morbid condition, characterized by over-excitement of all the vital phenomena.

Hypersthen'ic, Stimulant.

Hypersthen'icus, see Active, Stimulant.

Hyperton'ia, (hyper, and τονος, 'tone,') Excess of tone in parts. It is opposed to atony.

Hypertricho'sis, (hyper, and τριξ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,') Excessive production of hair.

Hypertrophæ'mia, (hyper, τροφή, 'nourishment,' and αἷμα, 'blood,') A state in which the plastic powers of the blood are increased.

Hypertroph'ia, (hyper, and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Hypertrophy—h. Cerebri, Phrenauxe—h. Cordis, Heart, hypertrophy of the—h. Glandularum, Hyperadenosis—h. Hepatis, Hepatauxe—h. Intestinorum, Enterhypertrophia—h. Lienis, Splenoncus—h. Miasmatica lienis, Ague cake—h. Splenis, Splenoncus—h. Unguium, Onychauxe—h. Uteri, Metrauxe—h. Vesicæ urinariæ, Cystauxe.

Hypertroph'ia, see Hypertrophy.

Hypertrophie, Hypertrophy—h. du Cœur, Heart, hypertrophy of the—h. Centripète du Cœur, Heart, hypertrophy of the—h. Concentrique du Cœur, Heart, hypertrophy of the—h. du Foie, Hepatauxe—h. de la Rate, Splenoncus—h. du Corps Thyroïde, Bronchocele.

Hyper'trophied, see Hypertrophy.

Hypertrophien, see Hypertrophy.

Hyper'trophous, see Hypertrophy.

Hypertrophy, or Hyper'trophy, Hypertroph'ia, Supernutrit'io, (F.) Hypertrophie, Supernutrition. The state of a part in which the nutrition is performed with greater activity; and which, on that account, at length acquires unusual bulk. The part thus affected is said to be hyper'trophied or hyper'trophous. Hypertroph'ia is used by Neligan, as Hypertrophien is by Simon, for an order of cutaneous diseases, characterized by hypertrophy of the derma, or epidermis, or both, or of the hair follicles. See Hyperplasia.

HYPERTROPHY OF THE BLAD'DER, Cystauxe—h. of the Brain, Phrenauxe—h. of the Glands, Hyperadenosis, Hodgkin's disease—h. of the Heart, Heart, hypertrophy of the—h. of the Intestines, Interhypertrophia—h. of the Liver, Hepatauxe—h. of the Nails, Onychauxe—h. of the Spleen, Splenoncus, Ague cake—h. of the Thyroid, Bronchocele—h. of the Uterus, Metrauxe.

Hyperure'sis, (hyper, and ουρον, 'urine,') Enuresis—h. Aquosa, Diabetes.

Hyperurorrhée, (hyper, ουρον, 'urine,' and ῥέω, 'I flow,') Diabetes—h. Saccharine, Diabetes (mellitus).

Hyperzodyna'mia, (hyper, ζωον, 'animal,' and δυναμις, 'power,') Hypersthenia.

Hypex'odus, (ὑπεξόδος, from hypo, and εξόδος, 'an exit,') An alvine discharge or flux.

Hypezo'cus, (hypo, and ζώννυμι, 'I gird,') part. εζωκως, Diaphragm, Pleura. See Hypozoma.

Hy'pha, (ὑφή.) Texture.

Hyphæ'ma, gen. Hyphæ'matis, (hypo, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Echymoma.

Hyphæ'mia, Hypæmia.

Hyphæmato'sis, Hypohæmato'sis, (hypo, and αἱματώσις, 'sanguification,') Morbidly diminished hæmatosis—Sanguifica'tio debil'ior.

Hyphæ'mos, (hypo, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Suberentus.

Hy'phē, (ὑφή.) Texture.

Hyphémie, Hypæmia.

Hyphhydrémie, Hyphydrose du Sang. Anæmia resulting from anhydrazation of the blood, a condition consequent on experiments on the lower animals, with the view of studying the effect of concentration of the liquor sanguinis and globules.

Hyp'hydros, (hypo, and ὑδωρ, 'water,') Hydropic.

Hyphydrosé du Sang, Hyphydrémie.

Hypino'sis, Hypoplas'ma, (hypo, and ἰς, 'is, 'fibre,') The condition of the blood in which the quantity of fibrin is frequently less than in health, or if it amounts to the usual quantity, its proportion to the blood corpuscles is less than in health; the quantity of corpuscles is either absolutely increased or their proportion to the fibrin is larger than in healthy blood; the quantity of solid constituents is also frequently larger than in health. Such is the condition of the blood in fevers, hemorrhages, and polyæmia.

Hypinot'ical, Hypinot'icus. Relating or appertaining to hypnosis.

Hypnæsthe'sis, (hypnos, and αἰσθησις, 'feeling,') Somnolency.

Hypnago'gic, Hypnago'gicus, (hypnos, and αγωγός, 'a leader,') Leading to sleep.

Hypnago'gic hallucinations are those visions which occur when we are half asleep.

Hypnia'ter, gen. Hypniatri, (F.) Hypniatre, (hypnos, and ἰατρος, 'a physician,') A name given to deluded or designing persons who have affirmed that they were able, during their 'magnetic sleep,' to diagnose disease and its appropriate treatment.

Hyp'nic, Hyp'nicus, (ὑπνικός, from hypnos.) An agent that affects sleep.

Hypnob'ades, (hypnos, and βαίω, 'I move,') Somnambulist.

Hypnobad'isis, Somnambulism.

Hypnob'asis, Somnambulism.

Hypnobata'sis, Somnambulism.

Hypnob'ates, Somnambulist.

Hypnobate'sis, Somnambulism.

Hypnoba'tia, Somnambulism.

Hypno'des, (ὑπνώδης, from ὑπνος, 'sleep,' and οdes.) One in a state of slumber or somnolency.

Hypno'dia, (ὑπνωδία,) Somnolency.

Hypnolog'ica, Hypnolog'icæ, (hypnos, and λόγος, 'a discourse,') The part of hygiene which treats of sleep.

Hypnol'ogy, Hypnol'og'ia, (F.) Hypnologie, (hypnos, and λόγος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on sleep. The doctrine of sleep.

Hypnonergi'a, (hypnos, and ενεργία, 'action,') Somnambulism.

Hypnophob'ia, (hypnos, and φόβος, 'dread,') Dread of sleep. Incubus.

Hypnopæ'us, (ὑπνοποιός, from hypnos, and ποίω, 'I make,') Somniferous.

Hyp'nos, (ὑπνος,) Sleep.

Hypno'sis, (hypnos, and ὅσις,) The supervention or production of sleep.

HYPNOSIS BIOMAGNET'ICA, Sleep, magnetic.

Hypnot'ic, Somniferous.

Hypnotique, Somniferous.

Hypnotism, (from hypnos.) The production of sleep. See Magnetism, animal.

Hyp'notized, see Mesmerized.

Hyp'o, (ὑπο,) 'sub,' 'under,' in composition.

Hy'ro, Hypochondriasis.

Hypoæ'ma, gen. Hypoæ'matis, (hypo, and ἅμα, 'blood,') Ecchymoma.

Hypoæ'mia, Ecchymoma, Hypæmia.

Hypoalbuminose, (hypo, and albumen.) Diminution in the quantity of albumen in the blood.

Hypobleph'aros, (same etymon as next,) Hypoblepharum.

Hypobleph'arum, Hypobleph'aros, (hypo, and βλέφαρον, 'eyelid,') Tumefaction under one or both eyelids. Also, an artificial eye, placed under the eyelids.

Hypocapnis'ma, gen. Hypocapnis'matis, (ὑποκαπνισμα, from hypo, and καπνός, 'smoke,') Fumigation, Suffimentum.

Hypocapnis'mus, (ὑποκαπνισμός,) Fumigation.

Hypocaro'des, Subsopora'tus, (ὑποκαρώδης, from hypo, καρός, 'a heavy sleep,' and odes.) One who is in a state approaching carus.

Hypocathar'sis, (ὑποκαθαρσις, from hypo, and καθαρσις, 'purgation,') Feeble purgation. Opposed to hypercatharsis.

Hypocathar'ticus, Laxative.

Hypocaus'tum, (ὑποκαυστον, from hypo, and καίω, 'I burn,') A name given to a stove, or any such contrivance, to sweat in. Also, a furnace in any subterranean place, used for heating baths: — ὑποκαυστον, Balnea'rrium, Vapora'rrium.

Hypocephalæ'um, (ὑποκεφαλῶν, from hypo, and κεφαλή, 'head,') A pillow for the head.

Hypocerca'leon, (ὑποκερχαλιον, from hypo, and κερχαλιός, 'hoarse,') Roughness of the fauces affecting the voice.

Hypochoil'ion, (hypo, and κοιλία, 'the belly,') — from κοίλος, 'hollow,') The abdomen.

Hypochlore'tum Sulphuro'sum, Sulphur, chloride of.

Hypochlorom'elas, sub pal'lidè ni'gricans, (hypo, χλωρός, 'green,' and μέλας, 'black,') A term applied to one whose skin is pale, with a blackish hue.

Hyp'ochondre, Hypochondri'um, Subcartilagin'eum, Re'gio Hypochondri'aca, Hypochondriac'Re'gion, (ὑποχονδρίων, from hypo, and χονδρός, 'a cartilage,') Each lateral and superior region of the abdomen is so called, because it is bounded by the cartilaginous margin of the false ribs, which forms the base of the chest. There is a right and a left hypochondrium.

Hypochon'driac, (ὑποχονδριακός,) Hypochondri'acus, Hypochondri'acal, Va'pory, Va'porish, (F.) Hypochondriaque. Belonging to hypochondriasis. One laboring under hypochondriasis; hipped.

Hypochondriacis'mus, Hypochondriasis.

Hypochondrial'gia, (hypochondre, and αλγος, 'pain,') Hypochondriasis.

Hypochondriaque, Hypochondriac.

Hypochondri'asis, Alu'sia seu Hallucina'tio hypochondriasis, Mor'bus hypochondri'acus seu resiccato'rius seu ructuo'sus, Ma'lum hypochondri'acum, Hypochondriacis'mus, Hypochondriacis'mus, Dyspep'sia hypochondriasis, Pas'sio seu Affec'tio hypochondri'aca, Hallucina'tio hypochondri'aca, Anathymi'asis, Hypercine'sis gastrica, Hyperæsthe'sia psy'chica, Sple'nes, Melanchol'ia ner'vea seu flatuo'sa seu hypochondri'aca, Suffoca'tio hypochondri'aca, Mor'bus flatuo'sus seu flatulent'us seu erudito'rum, For'mes ventriculi, Mirach'ia, (from Arab. mirach, 'the belly,') Mor'bus mirach'al'is, Hypochon'drism, Hyp'o, Hip, Spleen, Va'pors, Eng'lish Mal'ady, Low Spir'its, (vulg.) The Blues, Black dog (S. Johnson), Dragons (Mad. de Seigné), (F.) Hypochondrie, Maladie imaginaire ou Anglaise, Affection Vaporeuse, Vapeurs, V. de Rate. This disease is probably so called, from the circumstance of some hypochondriacs having felt an uneasy sensation in the hypochondriac regions. The disease seems really to be, as Pinel has classed it, a species of neurosis, and of mental alienation, which is observed in persons who in other respects are of sound judgment, but who reason erroneously on whatever concerns their own health. Hypochondriasis is characterized by disordered digestion, without fever or local lesion; flatulence; borborygmi; extreme increase of sensibility; palpitations; illusions of the senses; a succession of morbid feelings, which appear to simulate the greater part of diseases; panics, exaggerated uneasiness of various kinds, chiefly in what regards the health, &c. Indigestion has usually been considered the cause of hypochondriasis. They are, unquestionably, much connected with each other; but there is every reason to believe that the seat of the affection is really, though functionally, in the brain. The disease almost always appears at the adult age, most commonly in irritable individuals; and in those exhausted, or rather in the habit of being exhausted, by mental labor, overwhelmed with domestic or public affairs, &c.

The treatment is almost entirely moral. The condition of the digestive functions must, however, be accurately attended to.

Hypochondricism'us, Hypochondriasis.

Hypochon'drism, Hypochondriasis.

Hypochon'drium, Hypochondre.

Hypochore'ma, gen. Hypochore'matis, (ὑποχωρημα, from hypo, and χωρεω, 'I make vacant,') Excrement.

Hypochore'sis, (ὑποχωρησις,) Dejection, Defecation, Excrement.

Hypochoret'icus, Cathartic.

Hypoch'yma, gen. Hypochym'atis, (ὑποχυμα, from hypo, and χυω, 'I pour,') Cataract.

Hypoch'ysis Hæmato'des, (ὑποχυσις, from hypo, and χυω, 'I pour,') Hemophthalmia.

Hypocis'tis, (ὑποκυστις,) Cytinus.

Hypoclept'icum, (hypo, and κλεπτω, 'I steal,') A chemical vessel, formerly used for separating oil from water.

Hypoc'lysis, Hypoclysmus, (ὑποκλυσις, and ὑποκλυσμος, from hypo, and κλυω, 'I wash out,') as by a clyster.) Cleansing by a clyster.

Hypocœ'lis, (ὑποκοιλίς,) Palpebra inferior.

Hypocœ'lium, (ὑποκοιλίον, from hypo, and κοιλία, 'abdomen,') Abdomen.

Hypocœ'lum, Hypocoilon, Palpebra inferior.

Hypocoil'on, Hypocœ'lon, Hypocœ'lum, Hypocy'lum, (hypo, and κοιλον, 'a cavity,') A cavity situate under the lower eyelid. The lower eyelid itself.

Hypocoph'o'sis, (hypo, and κωφος, 'deaf,') Barycoia, Deafness.

Hypocra'nium (Aposte'ma), (hypo, and κρανιον, 'the cranium,') A collection of pus between the cranium and dura mater.

Hypoc'ratos, (hypo, and κρατος, 'strength,') Infirm.

Hypocy'lum, Hypocoilon, Palpebra inferior.

Hypocy'phus, (ὑποκυφος, from hypo, and κυφος, 'gibbous,') Slightly humpbacked.

Hypocystectom'ia, (hypo, κυστις, 'bladder,') and τομή, 'section,') see Lithotomy.

Hypod'eris, (ὑποδέρις, from hypo, and δερς, 'skin,') Epideris.

Hypodermat'omy, Hypodermatom'ia, (hypo, δερμα, 'the skin,') and τομή, 'incision,') The section of subcutaneous parts, as of tendons and muscles.

Hypoder'mic, Hypoder'micus, (hypo, and δερμα, 'skin,') (F.) Hypodermique, Souscutané. That which is under the skin,—as 'hypodermic medication,') (F.) Médication hypodermique; that which consists in the application of remedies—as morphia—under the skin.

Hypoder'mis, Clitoris, Epideris.

Hypoder'mis, (see Hypoderis,) Epideris. Also, the lower and fore part of the neck, (from hypo, and δερη, 'neck,')

Hypod'esis or Hypode'sis, (ὑποδεσις, or ὑποδησις, from hypo, and δεω, 'I bind,') see Bandage.

Hypodes'ma, gen. Hypodesm'atis, (ὑποδεσμα, from hypo, and δεσμα, 'a bandage,') see Bandage.

Hypodic'rotous, (hypo, δι, 'double,') and κροττω, 'I strike,') A term applied to the pulse-trace of the sphygmograph, when indicating that diastole is retarded. When the latter is blended with the line of ascent of the next pulsation, it is said to be hyperdic'rotous.

Hypodynam'ic, Hypodynam'icus, (hypo, and δυναμις, 'power,') Adynamic.

Hypodyn'ia, (hypo, and δύνη, 'pain,') Dol'or mi'tis seu le'nis. A slight pain.

Hypog'ala, gen. Hypogalac'tis, (hypo, and γαλα, 'milk,') Hypopyon.

Hypogastral'gia, (hypogastrium, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the hypogastrium.

Hypogas'tric, Hypogas'tricus, Hypogas'trius,

(ὑπογαστρικός,) (F.) Hypogastrique. Relating or belonging to the hypogastrium.

HYPOGAS'TRIC AR'TERY, A. Ili'aca inter'na, A. Ili'aca post'erior, (F.) Artère hypogastrique, A. pelvienne (Ch.), is the more internal of the two branches into which the primary iliac divides. It descends into the cavity of the pelvis, and gives off a considerable number of branches, which arise, at times, separately; at others, by common trunks. These branches are, 1. The posterior, i. e. the ilio-lumbar arteries, lateral, sacral, and gluteal. 2. The anterior, i. e. the umbilical, vesical, and obturator. 3. The internal,—the middle hemorrhoidal arteries, uterine, and vaginal in women. 4. The inferior, i. e. the ischiatic arteries, and internal pudic. See Umbilical arteries.

HYPOGAS'TRIC GAN'GLION. A large nervous ganglion, described by Dr. Robert Lee as seated on each side of the cervix uteri, immediately behind the ureter, which receives the greater number of the nerves of the hypogastric and sacral plexuses, and distributes branches to the uterus, vagina, bladder, and rectum.

HYPOGAS'TRIC OPERA'TION OF LITHOT'OMY, (F.) Taille hypogastrique. The high operation, or that practised above the pubes.

HYPOGAS'TRIC PLEX'US, Plexus hypogastricus ou sous-mésentérique of Winslow, is situate at the lateral and posterior parts of the rectum and the bas fond of the bladder. It is formed by the sacral nerves and the inferior mesenteric plexus, and gives off numerous filaments, which accompany the arteries that pass to the rectum and genital organs.

HYPOGAS'TRIC VEIN, (F.) Veine hypogastrique, furnishes nearly the same branches.

Hypogas'trion, (ὑπογαστρειον,) Abdomen, Hypogastrium.

Hypogas'trium, Hypogas'trion, (hypo, and γαστηρ, 'the stomach or belly,') E'tron, Ar'e'a, Stachys [?], Ven'ter i'mus, V. par'vus, Aqualic'ulus, Su'men, Ru'men; the lower part of the abdomen. The Hypogas'tric re'gion, Re'gio hypogas'trica seu hypogas'tria, which extends as high as three fingers' breadth beneath the umbilicus, is divided into three secondary regions—one middle or pubic, and two lateral or inguinal.

Hypogas'trius, Hypogastric.

Hypogastroce'lé, (hypogastrium, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Hernia in the hypogastric region, occurring through the separated fibres of the lower part of the linea alba. See Hernia, hypogastric.

Hypogastrodid'y'mus, Did'y'mus Symphyohypogas'trius, Ischiopa'ges, (hypogastrium, and διδυμος, 'a twin,') A monstrosity in which twins are united by the hypogastrium.

Hypogastrorrhex'is, (hypogastrium, and ρηξις, 'rupture,') Eventration.

Hypoglobulie, (hypo, and globule,) A diminution in the quantity of globules in the blood.

Hypoglos'sa, Hypoglottides.

Hypoglos'sal Nerve, Hypoglossus.

Hypoglos'sia, Hypoglottides.

Hypoglossiadeni'tis, (hypo, γλωσσα, 'tongue,') αδην, 'a gland,') and itis,) Inflamma'tio glandula'rum sublingua'lium. Inflammation of the sublingual gland.

Hypoglossid'ia, Hypoglottides.

Hypoglos'sis, (ὑπογλωσσις,) Hypoglos'sium, Hypoglot'tis, Hypoglot'tia, (hypo, and γλωσσα, 'tongue,') The under surface of the tongue; anything under the tongue; and, hence, Ranula.

Hypoglos'sium, Hypoglossis, Ranula.

Hypoglos'sum, (ὑπογλωσσον,) Ruscus hypoglossus, Ranula.

Hypoglos'sus, (ὑπογλωσσος,) That which is under the tongue.

HYPOGLOS'SUS, Lingua'lis Me'dius, Hypoglos'sal or Lin'gual or Gus'tatory Nerve, (F.) Nerf Hypoglosse ou Grand Hypoglosse, Hypoglossien (Ch.), is the ninth pair of nerves, Par no'num, Ner'vus hypoglos'sus seu lo'quens, of many anatomists. It arises by ten or twelve very fine filaments from the grooves which separate the corpora pyramidalia from the corpora olivaria, issues from the cranium by the foramen condyloideum anterius, and divides, near the angle of the jaw, into two branches; the one, the cervica'lis descendens or descen'dens no'ni, which forms, with the cervical plexus, a large anastomotic arch, and furnishes branches to several of the muscles of the neck. The other, the lingual branch, is the continuation of the principal trunk, and gives its numerous filaments to the muscles of the tongue and pharynx. The ninth pair communicates motion to the muscles to which it is distributed.

Hypoglot'tia, Hypoglossis, Hypoglot'tides.

Hypoglot'tides (Pil'ulæ), Hypoglos'sia, Hypoglot'tia, Hypoglos'sa, Hypoglot'ta, Hypoglossid'ia, Pil'ulæ sublingua'les. Pills placed under the tongue to dissolve there.

Hypoglot'tis, gen. Hypoglot'tidis, (ὑπογλωττις), Hypoglossis, Ranula.

Hypoglu'tis, gen. Hypoglu'tidis, (ὑπογλουτις, hypo, and γλουτις, 'the breech.') The lower and projecting part of the nates.

Hypognath'aden, gen. Hypognatha'denis, (hypo, γναθος, 'the jaw,' and αδην, 'a gland,') Submaxillary gland.

Hypognathadeni'tis, gen. Hypognathadeni'tidis, Hypognathadeni'tis, (hypognathaden, and itis.) Inflammation of the submaxillary gland.

Hypohæ'ma, gen. Hypohæ'matis, (hypo, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Effusion of blood into the chambers of the eye. It is generally absorbed in time.

Hypohæmato'sis, Hypohæmatosis.

Hypohæ'mia, Hypæmia.

Hypolepsioma'nia, (hypo, ληψις, 'a seizure,' and mania,) Melancholy.

Hypometrop'ia, (hypo, μετρον, 'measure,' and ωψ, 'the eye,') Myopia.

Hypo'mia, (hypo, and ωμος, 'the shoulder,') That which lies under the shoulder, as the axilla.

Hypomo'ria, (hypo, and μωρα, 'folly,') Slight imbecility of mind, or slight delirium.

Hyponarthécie, Hyponarthécia, (hypo, and ναρθήξ, 'a splint,') A term used by M. Mayor for his mode of treating fractures by position only,—the limb resting upon a properly cushioned board or splint.

Hyponeu'ria, (hypo, and νευρον, 'a nerve,') Morbidly diminished nervous energy.

Hypen'omus, (ὑπονομος, from hypo, and νέμω, 'I feed,') Ul'cus sub'tus depas'cens. A deep fistula or ulcer.

Hyponych'ial, Hyponichia'lis, (same etymon as the next.) That which is seated under the nail.

Hypon'ychon, (hypo, and ονυξ, gen. ονυχος, 'a nail,') Eechymo'ma hyponychon. Effusion of blood under a nail.

Hypopathi'a, Subaffec'tio, (hypo, and παθος, 'affection,') A disease of a slight character.

Hypop'atus, (hypo, and πατω, 'I go,') Dejection.

Hypope'dium, (hypo, and πες, 'the foot,') A cataplasm for the sole of the foot.

Hypoph'asis, (hypo, and φαίνω, 'I appear,') The state of the eyes in which the white only is seen through the opening of the eyelids.

Hypophlegma'sia, Subinflammatio.

Hypoph'ora, (hypo, and φέρω, 'I carry,') Ul'cus sinuo'sum seu fistulo'sum. A fistulous ulcer; also, a dejection.

Hypophos'phites. A class of compounds, formed by the union of hypophosphorous acid with oxides of iron, sodium, calcium, &c., and with quinia and strychnia, prescribed in the form of syrup, to obviate their oxidation into phosphates, if given in solution. They have been prescribed in debility, anæmia accompanied with nervous derangement, muscular weakness, nervous exhaustion, hysteria, insomnia, gastralgia, &c. The hypophosphites of soda, iron, potash, lime, ammonia, quinia, and strychnia are employed medicinally, but only the three first named are officinal. See Ferri hypophosphis, Calcis hypophosphis, &c.

Hypophthal'mia, Hypopyon.

Hypophthal'mion, (hypo, and οφθαλμος, 'the eye,') That part under the eye where œdema generally commences in chronic diseases and in cachexia.

Hypoph'ysis, (hypo, and φωω, 'I bring forth,') Cataract, Epigone — h. Cerebri, Pituitary gland.

Hypop'ion, see Hypopyon.

Hypop'itys Lanugino'sa, (hypo, and πικύς, 'a pine tree,') American Pine-sap, False Beech-drops, Birds' Nest. Indigenous; flowering from June to August. Order, Ericaceæ. Used as a nerving in the form of the powdered root.

Hypo'pium, (ὑπωπιον, — hypo, and ωψ, 'eye,') The part of the face under the eye:—a black eye.

HYPO'PIUM Os, Mala os.

Hypoplas'ma, gen. Hypoplasm'atis, (hypo, and πλασσω, 'I form,') Hypinosis.

Hypoplastæ'ma, (F.) Hypoplastic, (hypo, πλαστικός, 'formative,' and αἷμα, 'blood,') Diminished plasticity of the blood.

Hypoplastic, Hypoplastæma.

Hypopleur'ius, (hypo, and πλευρα, 'a rib,') Pleura.

Hypopo'dia, Supplanta'lia, Suppeda'nea, (hypo, and πους, ποῖος, 'the foot,') Remedies, as sinapians, which are applied under the foot.

Hypop'yon, Hypop'yum, Hypophthal'mia, Pyophthal'mia, Empyre'sis seu Diapye'sis seu Absces'sus Oculi, Oculus purulen'tus, Lunell'a, Hypog'ala, Hypop'yum lac'teum, Pyo'sis, Parop'sis, Staphylo'ma purulen'tum, (hypo, and πυον, 'pus,') because the pus is under the cornea. This name has been given to small abscesses between the laminae of the cornea, as well as to different purulent collections in the chambers of the eye; hence, some pathologists have distinguished Hypop'yon of the chambers from Hypop'yon of the cor'nea. In abscesses of the chambers, the purulent matter is mixed with the aqueous humor, which it renders turbid; and is deposited particularly at the lower part of the eye; forming behind the cornea a kind of whitish crescent, that rises more or less before the pupil, and closes it entirely or in part. It requires the use of local and general antiphlogistics, and sorbefacients. At times, it is necessary to puncture the cornea and evacuate the pus.

Hypopion was used by Galen to signify "an effusion of blood under the eyelids and tunica conjunctiva, or under the lower eyelid." (Blancard.)

Hypop'yum, Hypopyon—h. Lacteum, Hypopyon.

Hyporin'ion, Hyporrhin'ium, (ὑπορίμιον, from hypo, and ρίν, 'the nose,') That part of the beard which grows beneath the nose. The mustaches. Also, the upper lip.

Hypor'hachis, gen. Hyporrhach'idis, (ὑπορῆχis, from hypo, and ῆχis, 'the spine, the back,') The hollow in the small of the back.

Hypor'rhysis, (hypo, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') De-fluxion, Prolapsus.

Hyposa'prus, Subpu'tris, (hypo, and σαπρος, 'putrid,') Putres'cens. Growing putrid; slightly putrid. Game, of various kinds, (F.) Viandes faisandées, is, at times, preferred in an incipient state of decomposition, which certainly renders it more digestible.

Hyposar'ca, (hypo, and σαρξ, 'flesh,') Hyposarcid'ius. Anasarca. In the Nosologies of Linnaeus and Cullen, it is synonymous with Physeo'nia.

Hyposarcoid'ius, Anasarca, Hyposarca.

Hyposarcosis, (hypo, and σάρκωσις, 'a fleshy growth.') A small, fleshy growth:—a wart.

Hyposi'agon, (hypo, and σιαγων, 'the jawbone,' 'lower jawbone,') Maxillary bone, inferior.

Hyposiagonarthri'tis, gen. Hyposiagonarthritidis, (hyposiagon, αρθρον, 'a joint,' and itis,) Inflammatio articuli maxillae inferioris. Inflammation of the joint of the lower jaw.

Hyposial'aden, gen. Hyposiala'denis, (hypo, σιαλον, 'saliva,' and αδην, 'a gland,') Submaxillary gland.

Hyposialadeni'tis, gen. Hyposialadenitidis, (hyposialaden, and itis,) Hypognathadenitis.

Hypospa'dia, Hypospadi'asis, Hypospadi'asis, (hypo, and σπασω, 'I draw,') A malformation, in which the canal of the urethra, instead of opening at the apex of the glans, terminates at its base, or beneath the penis, at a greater or less distance from the symphysis pubis. When the orifice of the urethra is very near the root of the penis, the scrotum is divided, as it were, into two great labia; and this malformation has often been taken for a case of hermaphroditism. Hypospadia is ordinarily incurable; and an idea has been entertained that it is the cause of impotence. It is not exactly so; but it renders impregnation less probable.

Hypospa'dias, Hypospadi'us, Hypospad'icus, Hypospa'dian, (F.) Hypospade. One affected with hypospadia.

Hypospadi'asis, Hypospadia.

Hypospathis'mus, (υποσπαθισμος, from hypo, and σπαθιον, 'a ladle or spatula,') A surgical operation, with the ancients, in cases of severe 'defluxion to the eyes,' which consisted in incisions made in the scalp down to the bone, and the insertion of an instrument called a spath'ion or hypospathis'ter, to enable the intermediate parts to be divided. The precise character of the operation is not well described, and it is no longer known.

Hypospathis'ter, see Hypospathismus.

Hyposphag'ma, gen. Hyposphag'matis, (hypo, and σφαζω, 'I kill,') The coagulated blood, which is collected when an animal is killed and used for food. Also, an effusion of blood, especially under the conjunctiva.

HYPOSPHAG'MA, Haemophthalmia.

Hypostaph'ylo, (hypo, and σταφυλη, 'uvula,') Staphylodema.

Hypostaphyli'tis, gen. Hypostaphylitidis, (hypostaphyle, and itis,) see Staphylitis.

Hypos'tasis, (υποστασις, from hypo, and στασις, 'the act of placing,') A morbid deposition in the body. Sediment.

Hypostat'ic, Hypostat'icus, (F.) Hypostatique, (hypo, and στασις, 'stagnation,') Relating to hypostases, sediments, or depositions.

HYPOSTATIC HYPEREMIA, (F.) Hyperémie ou Congestion hypostatique. A congestion of blood in the vessels of a part, caused by its depending position.

Hyposte'ma, gen. Hyposte'matis, (υποστημα,) Sediment.

Hypostheni'a, (hypo, and σθενος, 'strength,') Debility.

Hyposthen'ic, Controstimulant.

Hyposthen'ique, Controstimulant.

Hypos'trophé, (υποστροφη, from hypo, and στροφω, 'I turn,') Act of a patient in turning himself. Also, a relapse or return of a disease.

Hypostyp'tic, Hypostyp'ticus, (hypo, and στυψις, 'constriction,') A feeble astringent.

Hyposulfite, Hyposulphite.

Hyposulphite, (F.) Hyposulfite, see Sulphurous acid.

Hyposyph'ilis, (hypo, and syphilis,) A mild form of syphilis.

Hypoth'ema, gen. Hypothem'atis, (υποθεμα, from hypo, and τιθημι, 'I place,') Suppository.

Hypoth'enar, gen. Hypothen'atis, Sub'vola, (υποθεναρ, from hypo, and θεναρ, 'the palm of the hand or sole of the foot,') Hypothenar Em'inentia.

The fleshy projection of the palmar surface of the hand, which corresponds with the little finger, and is supported by the fifth metacarpal bone. This eminence is formed of four muscles: the Palmaris brevis, Adductor seu Flexor brevis minimi digiti, and Opponens minimi digiti. The name Hypothenar has also been given to different muscles of the hand. The Hypothenar minimi digiti of Riolan comprehended the Abductor, Flexor brevis and Opponens minimi digiti; and his muscle, Hypoth'enar pol'licis, corresponded to the Abductor and a portion of the Flexor brevis pollicis. Winslow called the Adductor minimi digiti, Muscle petit hypothénar ou hypothénar du petit doigt.

HYPOTH'ENAR MIN'IMI DIG'ITI, Flexor parvus minimi digiti—h. Minor metacarpeus, Abductor minimi digiti—h. Rioli, Flexor parvus minimi digiti.

Hypoth'eton, (hypo, and τιθημι, 'I place,') Suppository.

Hypothymia'ma, gen. Hypothymia'matis, Fumigation.

Hypothymia'sis, (υποθυμιασις, from hypo, and θυμιασω, 'I fumigate,') Fumigation.

Hypo'tium (Emplastrum), (hypo, and ους, gen. ωτος, 'the ear,') Emplas'trum auricula're. A plaster applied behind or under the ear.

Hypot'ropé, (υποτροπη, from hypo, and τροπω, 'I turn,') Relapse.

Hypotroph'ia, Hy'potrophy, (hypo, and τροφη, 'nourishment,') Scanty nourishment or nutrition. Atrophy.

Hypotropiasmus, (υποτροπιασμος, from hypo, and τροπω, 'I turn,') Relapse.

Hypot'rygus, (υποτρυγος, from hypo, and τρυξ, gen. τρυγος, 'lees,') Feculent.

Hypocan'na, Ipecacuanha.

Hypoxan'thin, Sarcosin.

Hypoxémie, (hypo, oxygen, and αιμα, 'blood,') Asphyxia.

Hypox'ys Erec'ta, Star'grass, (hypo, and οξυς, 'sharp,' because the pod is acute at the base [?];) indigenous; Order, Amoryllidaceae. The root is eaten, and has been used as a vulnerary, and in chronic ulcers; and in ague.

Hypo'zo'ma, gen. Hypo'zo'matis, (υποζωμα, from hypo, and ζωννυμι, 'I bind round,') Membrana succin'gens. A membrane or septum, as the mediastinum, diaphragm, &c.

Hyp'pocras, (see Hippocras,) Claret.

Hypseloglos'sus, Basioglossus.

Hypsilo'des, Os, (υ, the Greek letter upsilon,) Hyoïdes os.

Hypsiloglos'sus, Hyoglossus.

Hypson'osus, (υψος, 'height,' and νοσος, 'disease,') Puna.

Hypsopho'nus, (υψος, 'height,' and φωνη, 'voice,') One who has a clear high voice.

Hypo'sis, (υψωσις, 'lifting on high,') Sublimation.

Hyptias'ma, gen. Hyptias'matis, (υπτιαζω, 'I lie with the face upwards,') Supination.

Hyptias'mus, (υπτιασμος,) Lying in a supine posture. Also, inversion of the stomach, as in nausea, regurgitation, or vomiting.

Hypu'lus, (υπουλος, from hypo, and ουλη, 'cicatrix,') Imperfectly cicatrized.

Ulcera hypu'la. Ulcers healed at the top, but not at the bottom.

Hyra'ceum. A substance found in the Cape Colony, which Thunberg and other travellers mistook for a kind of bitumen, Stone sweat; but, according to Dr. Pappe, it is obtained from the urine of the Klipdas or Hy'rax Capen'sis, which, when passed, is thick and of a glutinous nature. The animal is in the habit of evacuating the urine at one spot, where its aqueous parts evaporate in the sun—the more tenacious adhering to the rock and hardening.

In smell, and medical properties, it most resembles castor, which, according to Dr. Pappe, it may replace. It is used by the Cape farmers in nervous and spasmodic affections.

Hy'rax Capen'sis, gen. Hy'racis, see Hyraecum.

Hyssope, Hyssopus.

Hys'sop, Hyssopus—h. Hedge, Gratiola officinalis.

Hyssopi'tes, (ὑσσωπίτης.) Ancient name of a wine, of which hyssop was the chief ingredient, and which Dioscorides extolled in chronic inflammation of the chest. It was regarded as diuretic and emmenagogue.

Hyssopus, (ὑσσωπος,) from the Hebr. Azob, Cassia, Hyssopus officinalis, Common hyssop, Ysop, (F.) Hyssope. It has been chiefly used as an aromatic, stimulant, and pectoral, in the form of infusion.

Hys'tera, (ὑστέρα,) Secundines, Uterus.

Hyster'al'gia, Hysterodyn'ia, (F.) Fortraiture, (hystero, and algos, 'pain.') Pain in the uterus. See Metralgia. Ir'ritable u'terus, (F.) Névrâlgie de l'utérus. Hippocrates uses the epithet Hyster'al'ges, ὑστεράλγης, for anything that excites uterine pain; and, especially, [?] for vinegar.

HYSTERAL'GIA CATARRH'ALIS, Metrorrhœma—h. Galactica, Phlegmatica alba dolens—h. Lochialis, Dyslochia—h. Rheumatica, Metrorrhœma.

Hysterapopn'ix'is, (hystero, apo, and πνιγω, 'I strangle.') Angone.

Hysteratre'sia, Atréto'mé'tria, (hystero, and ατρητος, 'imperforate.') Imperforation of the os uteri.

Hysterelco'sis, (hystero, ελκος, 'an ulcer,' and osis.) U'teri exulcera'tio, U'teri ul'cus. Ulceration of the uterus.

Hysterelo'sis, (hystero, and ελευν, 'to turn.') Hysteroloxia.

Hysteremphyse'ma, gen. Hysteremphyse'matis, Physometra.

Hyste'ria, (ὑστέρα, 'the uterus,') H. va'ga, Hysterici'smus, Hysterism'us, Hyste'rias, Hysteri'asis, Hysteropathi'a, Hypercin'e'sia uteri'na seu hyste'ria, U'teri adscen'sus, Suffoca'tio hyster'ica seu uteri'na seu muli'eri, Asth'ma u'teri, Præfo'cat'io mat'ri'cis seu uteri'na, Sypsa'sia hyste'ria, Mal'um hyster'icum seu hyster'ico'hypochondri'acum, Vapo'res uteri'ni, Affect'io seu Pas'sio hyster'ica, Mor'bus hyster'icus, Oophor'ia, Strangula'tio uteri'na seu Vul'væ, Va'pors, Hyster'ics, Hyster'ic fit, Mo'ther, (F.) Hystérie, Mal de Mère, Maladie imaginaire, Passion hystérique, Suffoca'tion utérine ou de matrice, Ascension de la matrice, Névrose utérine, Ovarie, Etranglement, Épilepsie utérine, Vapeurs, Maux ou Attaques de Nerfs. A species of neurosis, classed among the spasmi by Sauvages and Cullen, and in the Névroses de la génération, by Pinel. It received the name hysteria, because it was reputed to have its seat in the uterus, although Dr. Barnes has recently applied the name oophoria to it, under the belief that it is due to ovarian influences. It generally occurs in paroxysms; the principal characters of which consist in alternate fits of laughing and crying, with a sensation as if a ball—Bo'lus hyster'icus—ascends from the hypogastrium towards the stomach, chest, and neck, producing a sense of strangulation. If the attack be violent, there is, sometimes, loss of consciousness (although the presence of consciousness generally distinguishes hysteria from epilepsy), and convulsions. The duration of the attacks is very variable. It appears to be dependent upon irregularity of nervous distribution in very impressible persons, and is not confined to the female; for well-marked cases of hysteria are occasionally met with in men. During the fit,—dashing cold water on the face, stimulants applied to the nose, or exhibited internally, and antispasmodics, form the therapeutical agents. Exercise, tranquillity of mind, amusing and agreeable occupations, constitute the prophylactics. Trousseau has referred also to a chronic paroxysmal cough—hysterical cough—as of frequent occurrence in hysteria, which seems to be a convulsion of the muscles of the larynx and diaphragm, resembling the cough excited by inhalation of chlorine and other gases. See Mania, dancing.

HYSTE'RIA CATALEP'TICA, Catalepsy—h. Vaga, Hysteria.

Hyste'rias, Hysteria.

Hysteri'asis, Hysteria.

Hyster'ica, see Hysterical.

Hyster'ical, Hyster'icus, Va'porish, Va'poring, (F.) Hystérique. Relating to or affected with hysteria.

The word hysterica was used by Martial for a female affected with nymphomania or with strong sexual desires.

Hys'tericism. The group of special physical and mental phenomena characteristic of hysteria, said by Trousseau to be 'nervous changeability carried to the highest point.'

Hysterici'smus, Hysteria.

Hyster'ics, Hysteria.

Hyster'icus, (ὑστερικός, from ὑστέρα, 'uterus,') Hysterical.

Hysteri'tes, Hydrometra.

Hysteri'tis, (hystero, and itis.) Metritis.

Hys'tero, (from ὑστέρα, ὑστέρα, 'the uterus,') in composition, uterus.

Hystero'carcino'ma, gen. Hystero'carcino'matis, Metrocarcinoma.

Hysteroce'lê, (hystero, and κηλη, 'hernia,') Metroce'lê, Her'nia u'teri, Hernia of the womb, (F.) Hernie de l'Utérus. This is a rare disease. The womb may protrude through the inguinal or the crural canal, or through the lower part of the linea alba.

HYSTEROCE'LE NU'DA, Prolapsus uteri.

Hystero'cnes'mus, (hystero, and κνησμος, 'itching,') Pruritus of the uterus or genitals.

Hystero'col'ica, Colica uterina.

Hystero'cran'ium, (ὑστερος, 'behind,' and κρανιον, 'cranium,') Occiput.

Hystero'cye'sis, (hystero, and κυειν, 'to be pregnant,') Pregnancy.

Hystero'cys'tic, Hystero'cys'ticus, (F.) Hystérocystique, (hystero, and κυστις, 'the bladder,') Relating to the uterus and bladder. Some authors have called Hystero'cystic retention of urine, that which is caused by the compression of the bladder by the uterus during pregnancy.

Hystero'cystoce'lê, (hystero, κυστις, 'the bladder,' and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Hernia of the uterus, complicated with displacement of the bladder.

Hysterodyn'ia, (hystero, and οδυνη, 'pain,') Hystericalgia.

Hystero'de'ma, gen. Hystero'de'matis, (hystero, and οδημα, 'a swelling,') Hydrometra.

Hys'teroid, Hystero'des, Hysteroï'des, Hysteroï'dal, Hysteroï'dalis, (hysteria, and ειδος, 'resemblance,') Resembling hysteria; as a hysteroïd disease, symptom, &c.

Hysterol'ogy, Hysterolog'ia, (hystero, and λογος, 'a description,') A treatise on the sound and morbid uterus.

Hysterolox'ia, Hysterelo'sis, Obliq'uitas seu Si'tus obli'quus u'teri, Flex'io seu Ver'sio incomple'ta seu Inclina'tio uteri, Metrolox'ia, Metrocamp'sis, Metroscolio'ma, Uterus obli'quus seu inclina'tus, (hystero, and λοφος, 'oblique,') An oblique position of the uterus, occurring during pregnancy. Antever'sion of the uterus, Hystero'lox'ia ante'rior, Antever'sio seu Prona'tio uteri, Ven'ter propen'dens; and Retover'sion of the uterus, Hystero'lox'ia poste'rior, Retover'sio uteri, Reflex'io uteri comple'ta are varieties.

Hystero'ma. A benign form of fibrous tumor of the uterus, identical in structure with that of the uterine tissue.

Hysteromala'cia, Hysteromalaco'sis, Hysteromalaco'ma, Metromalaco'sis, Metromalaco'ma, Malaco'sis uteri, Emolli'ties u'teri morbo'sa, Putrescentia u'teri grav'idi, (hystero, and μαλακία, 'softness.') Softness of the uterus during pregnancy, which renders it liable to rupture in labor.

Hysteromalaco'ma, Hysteromalacia.

Hysteroma'nia, Nymphomania.

Hysterom'eter, (hystero, and μετρον, 'measure,') see Sound, uterine.

Hystéromètre, Sound, uterine.

Hysteromoch'lium, (hystero, and μοχλίων, 'a lever,') Lever.

Hysteron'cus, (hystero, and ογκος, 'tumor,') Metron'cus, Hysterophy'ma, Metrophy'ma, Tu'mor u'teri. A tumor of the uterus.

Hysteroparal'ysis, Hysterople'gia, (hystero, and παραλυσίς, 'paralysis,') Paralysis of the uterus.

Hysteropathi'a, (hystero, and παθος, 'affection,') Disease or suffering in the uterus. Also, hysteria, and deuteropathia.

Hysterophore, (hystero, and φερω, 'I bear,') A form of pessary, originally consisting of two oval plates of tin, united by a hinge, and closely approximated by metallic rods.

Hysterophy'ma, gen. Hysterophy'matis, (hystero, and φυμα, 'a swelling,') Hysteroncus.

Hysteroph'ysē, Hysterophysis, Physometra.

Hysteroph'ysis, Hysteroph'ysē, (hystero, and φυσή, 'wind,') Distension of the uterus with air; Emphyse'ma u'teri.

Hysterople'gia, (hystero, and πληγή, 'a stroke,') Hysteroparalysis.

Hysterop'nix, gen. Hysteropni'gis, (hystero, and πνίξις, 'suffocation,') Angone.

Hysteropol'ypus, Metropolypus.

Hysteropsoph'ia, (hystero, and ψοφος, 'a sound,') Physometra.

Hysteropto'sis, (hystero, and πτωσις, 'fall,') Prolap'sus u'teri. Also, Inver'sio uteri, Anas'trophē uteri. In a general sense, a protrusion of any part of the genital organs or of excrescences from them into the genital passages; A'dopto'sis.

HYSTEROPTO'SIS, Prolapsus uteri — h. Vaginæ, Prolapsus vaginæ.

Hysterorrhag'ia San'guinea, (hystero, and ῥήγνυμι, 'I break forth,') Metrorrhagia.

Hysterorrh'ex'is, (hystero, and ῥήξις, 'rupture,') Uterus, rupture of the.

Hysterorrhœ'a, (hystero, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') Metrorrhagia — h. Mucosa, Leucorrhœa.

Hysterosal'pinx, gen. Hysterosalpin'gis, (hystero, and σαλπίγξ, 'a trumpet,') Tube, Fallopian.

Hysterosc'ir'rus, Metroscirrus.

Hys'teroscope, (hystero, and σκοπεω, 'I view,') A metallic mirror, used by Colombat de l'Isère, in inspecting the state of the os uteri, to throw the rays of a taper to the bottom of the speculum uteri.

Hysterospasm'us, (hystero, and σπασμος, 'spasm,') Spasm of the uterus. Also, hysterical spasm.

Hysteros'toma, gen. Hysterosom'atis, (hystero, and στομα, 'mouth,') Os uteri.

Hysterosomat'omus, (F.) Hystérostomatome, (hysterotoma, and τμνεν, 'to cut,') An instrument invented by Coutouly for dividing the os uteri, when it is important to deliver immediately, as in cases of convulsions.

Hysterosom'ium, (hystero, and στομα, 'mouth,') Os uteri.

Hysterosynize'sis, (hystero, and συνιζης, 'sitting together,') Metrosynizesis.

Hysterotokotom'ia, (hystero, τοκος, 'parturition, and τομή, 'section,') Cæsarean section.

Hys'terotome, (hystero, and τομή, 'section,') Hysterotomus.

Hysterotom'ia, Hysterot'omy, (F.) Hystérotomie. Cæsarean section. Also, dissection of the uterus. Uterot'omy, Uterotom'ia, is sometimes used for the division of the cervix uteri.

Hysterotomotoc'ia, (hystero, τομή, 'section, and τοκος, 'parturition,') Cæsarean section.

Hysterot'omus, Hys'terotome, Metrot'omus, Me'trotome, Uterot'omus, U'terotome, (hystero, and τομή, 'section,') An instrument for dividing the womb through the vagina. It is a kind of Bistouri caché, and is intended to divide the cervix and os uteri. — Hysterosomat'omus.

Hysterot'ism'us, (hystero, and τριζω, 'I gnash,') Spasmodic contraction of the uterus, especially of its mouth.

Hystri'asis, Hystriciasis.

Hystrici'asis, Hystri'asis, Hys'trix, Hystricis'mus, Cero'stro'sis, Tricho'sis seto'sa, Por'cupine disease of the skin, (βορπιξ, gen. βορπιος, 'a hedgehog or porcupine,') A disease of the hairs, in which they stand erect like the quills of the porcupine.

Hystricis'mus, Hystriciasis.

Hys'trix, gen. Hys'tricis, (βορπιξ,) Hystrici'asis.

Hyves, Hives.

I.

Iate'rius, (ιατηριος,) Medicinal.

Iatralaip'ticē, (ιατραλειπτική—τεχνη,) Iatralip'ticē

(Ars), Iatralaip'tic or Iatralip'tic meth'od, (iatro, and αλειφω, 'I anoint,') The method of treating diseases adopted by the Iatraliptes,—that is, by friction chiefly, Perfrica'tio.

Iatralaip'tes, (ιατραλειπτης,) Iatralaip'tes, Iatralip'ta, Iatroleip'tes, Med'icus Unguenta'rius. One who treats diseases by unguents, frictions, and by external means generally. Prodicus, a disciple of Æsculapius, was the chief of the Iatraliptes.

Iatralip'tes, Iatraliptes.

Iatralip'ticē, Iatraliptice.

Iatreusiolog'ia, (ιατρειολογία, 'the exercise of the art of healing, and λογος, 'a description,') The doctrine of the exercise of the healing art.

Iatreus'is, (ιατρευσις.) The exercise of the healing art.

Iatri'a, (ιατρία.) Medicina.

Iatri'cō, (ιατρικόν.) Medicina.

Iatri'cus, (ιατρικός.) Medical, see Digitus.

Iatri'nē, (ιατρίνη.) Medicina. Also, a female practitioner of medicine, Med'ica, Mu'lier med'ica. A doctress. A midwife.

Iatri'on, (ιατρίον.) Iä'tron, Ietri'on, Medicatri'na. The house or office of a physician or surgeon. Also, the physician's fee or honora'rium.

Iatrique, Medical.

Iatrochemi'a, (iatro, and chemia.) Chymiatra.

Iatrochymi'a, Chymiatra.

Iatrognom'ica, Iatrognom'icē, (iatro, and γινωσκω, 'I know.') A knowledge of medical objects.

Iatroleip'tes, Iatroleptes.

Iatrolog'ia, Iatrol'ogy, (iatro, and λογος, 'a description.') A treatise on physic and physicians.

Iatroman'tis, (iatro, and μαντεια, 'divination.') A physician who is a soothsayer.

Iatromathematical Physic'ians, Iatromathemat'ici, Iatromechan'ici. Mechanical physicians; a sect which flourished about the middle of the seventeenth century, and of which Borelli was the founder.

Ia'tron, (ιατρον.) Iatron.

Iatrophys'ics, Physics, medical.

Ia'tros, (ιατρος.) Iatrus.

Iatrosophis'ta, (iatros, and σοφιστης, 'one skilled in an art or science.') A learned, or thoroughly educated, physician.

Iatrotech'na, Iatrotech'nes, (ιατροτεχνης, from iatro, and τεχνη, 'art.') A practical physician or surgeon.

Iatrotech'nicē, Medicina, Therapeutics.

Ia'trus, (ιατρος.) Physician; also, a surgeon.

Ibe'ris, (ιβηρίς.) Lepidium iberis.

IBE'RI'S AMA'RA, Bit'ter can'dyduft, (F.) Passerage, from Iberia, where it is indigenous. A small herbaceous plant, Ord. Cruciferae, indigenous in Europe, which was employed, of old, in gout, rheumatism, &c. The seeds have been used, in the dose of one to three grains, in asthma, bronchitis, dropsy, and hypertrophy of the heart. It is said to possess acro-narcotic properties, but it is not much used.

IBE'RI'S BUR'SA PASTO'RIS, Thlaspi bursa — i. Campestris, Thlaspi campestre — i. Sophia, Cardamine pratensis.

Ibicuiba, Becuiba, Becuiba nux. A species of nut from Brazil, the emulsive kernel of which is ranked among balsamic remedies.

I'bis, gen. I'bis and I'bidis, (ιβις.) A bird held sacred by the Egyptians. When sick, it is asserted that it was wont to inject the water of the Nile into its fundament; whence, according to Langius, was learned the use of glysters.

Ibis'cha Mismal'va, Althæa.

Ibis'cus, (ιβισκος.) Althæa.

Ibixuma, Saponaria.

Icaja, Akasja.

Ice, (Sax. ij.) Gla'cies, Fro'zen wa'ter, (F.) Glacc. Iced water is much used internally, as the best refrigerant in fever. It is also applied externally, in cases of external inflammation, as well as in phrenitic and hernial affections, &c., in the form of the ice cap and ice cataplasm or ice poultice, formed by half filling a bladder with pounded ice.

ICE COLD, Icy cold, (F.) Froid glacial. A very strong morbid sensation of cold, compared by the patient to that which would be produced by the application of pieces of ice, (F.) Glacc.

ICE POUL'TICE, see Ice.

Ice'cap, see Ice.

Ice'land, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Hot springs are found in every part of Iceland. The most noted of these is one called Geyser, two days' journey from Hecla, and near Skalholt. The diameter of the basin is 59 feet, and the height to which the water is thrown is often more than 100. The heat of the water is 212°.

Ice'plant, Mesembryanthemum crystallinum, Monotropa uniflora.

Ich'nos, (αἶψα.) The foot. The sole of the foot. The heel.

I'chor, gen. Ich'oris, (αἷμα.) I'chos, Sa'nies, Sor'des, Vi'rus, Pus malignum, Ta'bum. The serum of the blood. A thin, aqueous, and acrid discharge. A corrupted humor.

Ichorhæ'mia, Ichorrhæmia.

Ichoroï'des, (αἷμα, and αἶος, 'resemblance.') Ichorous.

Ich'orous, Ichoro'sus, Ichoroï'des, Savio'sus, Sa'nious, (F.) Ichoreux, Sanieux. Belonging to or resembling ichor.

Ichorrhæ'mia, (ichor, and αἷμα, 'blood.') A diseased condition induced, according to Virchow, by the presence of corrupted or vitiated humors in the blood. See Pyæmia and Septæmia.

I'chos, (αἷμα.) Ichor.

Ich'thya, (αἰσθα.) 'A fishhook.' Hook, blunt.

Ich'thyo, (αἰσθς, gen. αἰσθς, 'a fish.') In composition, fish.

Ichthyocol'la, (ichthyo, and κόλλα, 'glue,') Col'la Pis'cium, I'singlass, Fish'glue, (F.) Ichthyocolle, Colle de Poisson. A name given to the dried swimming bladder or sound of Acipenser hu'so, and other species of fish, which is almost wholly composed of gelatin, and is employed in medicine in the formation of nutritive jellies. It is also occasionally used in anatomical injections. The English Court Plaster is made with it. In Russia, the Acipenser is not the only genus from which isinglass is procured; it is also obtained from Siluris Gla'nis, which Dr. Royle suggests to be the source of the Samovy or Somovy Isinglass of commerce. The sounds of the cod, ling, hake, &c., yield it. From these it is made in New England, and in England is termed New York Isinglass.

Ichthyoi'des, Ichthyosis.

Ichthyoph'agists, Ichthyoph'agi, (αἰσθοφαγοι, from ichthyo, and φαγω, 'I eat,') (F.) Ichthyophages. People who feed habitually on fish; — generally the most uncivilized of mankind.

Ichthyoph'agous, (αἰσθοφαγος.) Piscivorous.

Ichthyose, Ichthyosis.

Ichthyo'sis, (αἰσθς, 'a fish,') from the resemblance of the scales to those of a fish.) Lepido'sis Ichthyi'asis, L. Ichthyo'sis, Le'pra Ichthyo'sis, Xeroder'ma ichthyoi'des, Alvearas ni'gra (Arab.), Impeti'go excorticati'va, (F.) Ichthyose; Fish'skin, Porc'upine Disease. A permanently harsh, dry, scaly, and, in some cases, almost horny texture of the integuments of the body, unconnected with internal disorder. Willan and Bateman have two varieties, I. simplex and I. cornea. Alibert has three, the I. nacrée or pearly, the I. cornée, and the I. pellagre or Pellagra.

ICHTHYO'SIS PEL'LAGRA, Pellagra.

ICHTHYO'SIS SEBA'CEA, Seba'ceous Ichthyo'sis. A morbid incrustation of a concrete sebaceous substance upon the surface of the epidermis, con-founded, according to Mr. E. Wilson, with ichthyosis, to which it bears a close resemblance. In many cases there is neither redness nor heat, nor is the affection often accompanied by constitutional symptoms.

Ichthyotox'icum, (ichthyo, and τοξικον, 'a poison,') Ich'thyius, fish poison.

Ich'thyius, Ichthyotoxium.

Ici'ca Aracouchi'ni, (name in Guyana.) Aracouchini is a balsam, extracted by incision from this tree in Guyana. The Galibis use it for healing wounds.

ICI'CA ICICARIBA, see Amyris elemifera.

Ic'tar, gen. Icta'ris, (ικταρ.) Vulva.

Icter'ic, Ictericus.

Ictéricie, Icterus.

Icter'icus, (ικτερίκος,) Antiicteric. Also, relating to, or resembling Icterus; Icter'ic, Icteroï'des, Ictero'des, (F.) Ictérique.

Icterit'ia Al'ba, Chlorosis—i. Flava, Icterus—i. Rubea, Erysipelas—i. Rubra, Erysipelas.

Ictero'des, (ικτερός, from icterus, and odes,) Ictericus.

Ic'terus, I. fl'avus seu ve'rus, Ik'terus, (ικτερος, from ικτις, a species of weasel, whose eyes are yellow [?]. Ικτερος meant, with the ancients, a yellow bird, perhaps the Oriole,) Morbus arcuatus seu arguatus, Lese'oli mor'bus (Paracelsus), Auri'go, Auri'go, Mor'bus re'gius seu lute'olus, Cholelith'ia ic'terus, Cholihæ'mia, Cholæ'mia, Cholopla'nia, Cholo'sis, Dermatocho'lo'sis, Suffu'sio aurigino'sa seu fel'lis seu bi'lis, Icterit'ia seu icteric'ia flava, Il'eus fl'avus seu icteroï'des, Cachex'ia icter'ica, Fel'lis suffu'sio seu obstruc'tio seu superfu'sio, Bi'lious Dys'crasy, Jaun'dice, Yell'loos, Jaun'ders, Jaun'ders, (Sc.) Gul'schoch, (Prov.) Jo'nas, Yell'lot, (F.) Ictère, Ictéricie, Jaun'isse, Bile répandue. A disease, the principal symptom of which is yellowness of the skin and eyes, with white fæces and high-colored urine. It admits of various causes: in fact, anything which can directly or indirectly obstruct the course of the bile, so that it is taken into the mass of blood, produces the yellowness of surface; the bile being separated by the kidneys, causes yellowness of urine, and its being prevented from reaching the intestine occasions the pale-colored fæces. The prognosis, in ordinary cases, is favorable;—when complicated with hepatic disease, unfavorable. The treatment is simple:—an emetic or purgative, given occasionally so as to solicit the return of the bile to its ordinary channels; light tonics; unirritating diet; cheerful company, &c. Cases of jaundice with retention or re-absorption of bile have received the name of hepatog'enous ic'terus; the reverse condition, hematog'enous ic'terus.

IC'TERUS AL'BUS, Chlorosis—i. Cæruleus, Cyanopathy.

IC'TERUS CATARRHA'LIS, Cholecystitis, (F.) Ictère Catarrhal. Jaundice consequent on catarrh of the gall ducts from hyperæmia, irritation from abnormal bile, &c.

IC'TERUS, HEMATOG'ENOUS, see Icterus—i. Hepatogenous, see Icterus.

IC'TERUS INFAN'TUM, I. Neonato'rum, Neotoc'ic'us, Pædi'c'us, Auri'go neophyto'rum, Yell'low gum, Yellow goven, (F.) Ictère des nouveaux-nés, is a common affection, and frequently dependent upon obstruction of the choledoch duct by the meconium. It requires time; and castor oil, occasionally.

IC'TERUS ME'LAS, Melæna—i. Neonatorum, I. infantum—i. Niger, Melæna.

IC'TERUS SATURNI'NUS, Lead jaun'dice. The earthy-yellow hue in saturnine cachexy.

IC'TERUS VIR'IDIS, Green jaundice. Icterus when the skin is of a green or olive hue.

Icto'des Fœ'tidus, (from ικτις, 'a weasel,') Dracontium fœtidum.

IC'tus, gen. Ictûs, 'a stroke or blow,' (from ico, ictum, 'I strike,') Ple'gê, Pla'ga. Ictus so'lis, a stroke of the sun.—See Coup-de-soleil. Ictus, also, means the pulsation of an artery, and the sting of a bee or other insect.

IC'tus, Blow—i. Cordis, see Heart—i. Cordis et arteriarum, Pulse—i. Sanguinis, Apoplexy—i. Solis, Coup-de-soleil.

Ide'a, Pdea, (idea), Ido'lum, Ideach [? Paracelsus]. (F.) Idée, (from εἶδω, 'I see,') The image or representation of an object in the mind.

IDE'A, FIX'ED or PREDOM'INANT, I'dea fix'a, Ideopeg'ma. Tension of the mind on one notion; often observed in insanity.

IDE'A MOR'BI. Knowledge or idea of a disease. I'deach, Idea.

Ideag'enous, (idea, and γεννω, 'I generate,') Sentient.

Ide'al, Idea'lis. Mental, notional, fancied.

MOR'BI IDEA'LES. Ideal diseases. Diseases of the imagination.

IDEA'tion, Idea'tio. The establishment of a distinct mental representation or idea of an object. Under Idea'tional Insan'ity, Dr. Maudsley includes mania and melancholia—the unsoundness affecting ideation, as exhibited in delusions and mental alienation.

Idée, Idea.

IDEN'tity (Per'sonal), Iden'titas, (F.) Identité, (idem, 'the same,') Same'ness. It is sometimes a question in legal medicine to decide upon personal identity: that is, whether an individual be the same he represents himself to be. Physical marks form the great criteria.

IDEOL'ogy, Ideolog'ia, (idea, and λογος, 'a discourse,') The science of ideas. Intellectual philosophy.

IDEOMO'tor. A name given by Dr. Carpenter to muscular movements, the result of complete engrossment by an idea, which he regards as automatic, although originating in the cerebrum.

IDEOPEG'ma, gen. Ideopeg'matis, (idea, and πηγνυμι, 'I fasten,') Idea, fixed.

IDEOSYNCHYSIE, (idea, and συγχυσις, 'confusion,') Delirium.

IDIAPOCAUS'is, (idio, apo, and καω, 'I burn,') Combustion, human.

IDIEMPRE'sis, (idio, and εμπρησις, 'burning,') Combustion, human.

ID'io, (idios), in composition, proper, peculiar.

IDIOC'ra'sis, (idio, and κρασις, 'mixture,') Idiosyncrasy.

IDIOCTON'ia, (idio, and κτονος, 'murder,') Suicide.

ID'io'cy, Idiotism.

IDIOMETRI'tis, (idio, μητρα, 'uterus,') and itis,) Metritis, parenchymatous.

IDIOMIAS'mata, see Miasm.

IDIOPATH'ia, Idiopath'e'ia, Protopath'ia, Pro'prius affec'tus, Mor'bus idiopath'icus seu pro'prius seu prima'rius seu protopath'icus seu origina'lis, Ma'lum prima'rium, (idio, and παθος, 'affection,') A primary disease; one not depending on any other.

IDIOPATH'ic, Pro'prio hab'itu seu constitutio'nē pro'pria pen'dens, Idiopath'icus, Idiopath'es, (F.) Idiopathique. Primary affections and their symptoms are so denominated, as Idiopath'ic fe'ver.

IDIOPT'cy, (idio, and οψις, 'vision,') Achromatopsia.

ID'iopts, see Achromatopsia.

IDIOSYNCRAS'ia, Idiosyncrasy—i. Hæmorrhagica, Hæmatophilia—i. Olfactoria, Parosmia.

IDIOSYN'crasy, Idioc'rasy, Idiosyn'crasis, Idiosyncra'sia, Idiotrop'ia, Idioc'rasis, Idiosyncris'ia, (F.) Idiosyncrasic, (idio, συν, 'with,') and κρασις, 'mixture,') A peculiarity of constitution, in which one person is affected by an agent, which, in numerous others, would produce no effect. Thus, shell-fish, bitter almonds, produce urticaria in some, by virtue of their idiosyncrasies. Others faint at the sight of blood, &c.

ID'iot, Idio'ta, (ιδιωτης, 'an ignorant person,') Now used for one who is fatuous, or who does not possess sufficient intellectual faculties for the social condition, and for preserving himself from danger,—Ho'mo fat'uus, (Prov.) Dal'cop, Fond'ling, Hob'bil. In law, one who has been without understanding from his birth, and whom the law presumes to be never likely to attain any.

Id'iotcy, Idiocy.

Idioti'a, Idiocy — i. Endermica, Cretinism.

Idiotie, Idiocy.

Id'iotism, Idiotismus, Idioti'a, Imbecillitas mentis, Mo'ria de'mens, Auco'a, Mo'ria, Moro'sis, Meio'sis, Fatu'itas, Amen'tia, A. Ingen'ita, Demen'tia natura'lis, Stupid'itas, Vecor'dia, Imbecillitas Ingen'ii, Id'ioey, Id'iotcy, Fatu'ity, (F.) Démence innée, Idiotisme, Idiotie, Apsychisme of Piorry. A species of unsound mind, characterized by more or less complete obliteration of the intellectual and moral faculties. It may supervene on mania and melancholia, when it is termed Demen'tia, but more commonly it depends upon original conformation. It may also be symptomatic of organic disease of the brain, which has come on after birth. Idiocy exists in various degrees. Some idiots are mere automata, exhibiting scarcely any sensibility to external impressions; others are capable of articulating a few words, and possess certain mental emotions to a limited extent. The physiognomy is usually vacant, step unsteady, and articulation imperfect or broken. The affection is almost always incurable; but it may often be palliated.

Idiotisme, Idiocy.

Idiotis'mus, Idiocy — i. Endemicus, Cretinism.

Idiotrop'ia, (idio, and τροπω, 'I turn,') Idiosyncrasy.

Ido'lum, (εἰδωλον,) Hallucination, Idea.

Idro'sis, (ἰδρωσις, 'sweat,') Ephidrosis.

Ietri'on, (ἱετρίον, ἱετρεῖον,) Iatrimon.

If, Taxus baccata.

If fides, Plumbi subcarbonas.

Igasu'ria. An alkaloid obtained from nuxvomica, found in the mother-waters from which strychnia and brucia have been precipitated by lime. It is less powerful than strychnia, but more so than brucia.

Ig'dē, (γῆ,) Mortar.

Ig'dis, (γῆ,) Mortar.

Ignat'ia Ama'ra, ('bitter ignatia,') Strych'nos Ignat'ii, Ignatia'na Philippin'ica. Ord. Apocynaceæ, (called after St. Ignatius, — the Jesuits having first carried it from the East to Europe.) The systematic name of the plant which affords St. Ignatius's Bean, Fa'ba In'dica seu Sanc'ti Ignat'ii seu febrif'uga, (F.) Ignatie, Fève de Saint Ignace, Noix d'Igasur. The seeds, Ignat'ia (Ph. U. S.), are bitter and poisonous, containing strychnia, and only appear to differ from nuxvomica in containing a larger proportion of that alkaloid.

Ignatie, Ignatia amara.

Ignat'ia, ('laxiness,') from in, priv. and gravis, 'industrious,') Inertia — i. seu Ignavitas partium genitalium, Impotence.

Ig'nis, 'fire,') Hence:

IG'NIS ACTUA'LIS, Cauterium — i. Animalis, Animal heat.

IG'NIS CAL'IDUS. 'A hot fire.' A violent inflammation, about to degenerate into gangrene.

IG'NIS COLUMEL'LE, Erysipelas.

IG'NIS FRIG'IDUS, 'A cold fire,') Sphacelus.

IG'NIS NATURA'LIS, Animal heat — i. Persicus, Anthrax, see Herpes zoster — i. Philosophicus, Phosphorus — i. Potentialis, see Cauterium — i. Sacer, Erysipelas, Herpes zoster — i. Sancti Antonii, Erysipelas.

IG'NIS SAPIEN'TUM. The ancient name for the heat of horses' dung.

IG'NIS SYLVAT'ICUS, I. sylvestris seu volat'icus seu volag'rius, Stroph'ulus sylvestris seu volat'icus, Wild fire rash, (F.) Feu sauvage ou volage, Flamboise. Probably, the Porri'go larva'lis or Crus'ta lac'tea of infants. Also, a transient redness of the face and neck, sometimes observed in hysterical and chlorotic females.

IG'NIS SYLVES'TRIS, I. sylvestris — i. Vitalis, Animal heat — i. Volag'rius, I. sylvestris — i. Volat'icus, I. sylvestris.

Igniv'orous, (ignis, and voros, 'I devour,') Pyrophagus.

Ig'nyē, (γῆ,) Poples.

Ig'nys, (γῆ,) Poples.

Ikaja, Akasga.

Ik'terus, Icterus.

Il, as a prefix, see Im.

I'laphis, Aretium lappa.

Il'ea, Flanks.

Il'eac Pas'sien, Ileus.

Ileadelph'us, (ileum, and ἀδελφός, 'brother,') A double monster, united at the pelvis, and below.

I'lech, Y'lech, Ilei'as, Ilias'ter, Ylia'ter, Elias'ter, Ilias'trum, Ilei'ados, Ilei'dos, Ilei'adum, Ili'adus. Terms used by Paracelsus to designate the first matter: — the beginning of everything.

Ilei'ados, Ilech.

Ilei'adum, Ilech.

Ilei'as, Ilech.

Ilei'dos, Ilech.

Ilei'tis, gen. Ilei'tidis, (F.) Pléite, (ileo, and itis,) Inflammation of the ileum.

Ile'o, in composition, ileum or ilium.

Ileocœ'cal, Ileocœca'lis. Relating to the ileum and cœcum, — as the ileocœcal valve.

Ileocholo'sis, (ileo, and χολή, 'bile,') Diarrhœa, bilious.

Ileocol'ic, Ileocol'icus, (F.) Ileo-colique. Relating to the ileum and colon: — as the ileo-colic valve or valve of Bauhin.

Ileocoli'tis, see Enteritis.

Ileodichidite, (ileo, δίκλις, gen. δίκλιος, 'a valve, and itis,) see Typhus.

Ileolombaire, Ileolumbar.

Ileolum'bar, Ileolumba'lis, Iliolumba'ris, (F.) Ileolombaire. Belonging to the ileum and lumbar region.

ILEOLUM'BAR AR'TERY, Iliolum'bar artery, Ili'aco-muscular (Ch.), is given off by the hypogastric, opposite the base of the sacrum. It ascends behind the psoas muscle, and divides into two branches: — an ascending and a transverse, which give off numerous ramifications to the neighboring parts.

ILEOLUM'BAR LIG'AMENT, Iliolum'bar or Iliolumbover'tebral ligament, Ver'tebro-il'iac lig'ament, is a broad, membraniform, triangular ligament, extending horizontally from the transverse process of the 5th lumbar vertebra to the upper and posterior part of the iliac crest. It unites the vertebral column with the pelvis.

Il'eon, Ileum, Ei'leon, Ilium, Intesti'num circumvolu'tum, (εἰλεω, 'to turn, 'to twist,') Anatomists have given this name to the longest portion of the small intestine, which extends from the jejunum to the cœcum. It was so called from its forming a considerable number of convolutions.

Ileop'ya, (ileo, and πῦρ, 'fire, fever,') see Typhus.

Ileo'sis, Ileus.

Ileoty'phus, see Typhus.

Iles, Flanks.

Il'eum, Ileum.

Il'eus, Ei'leos, (εἰλεω, from εἰλεω, 'I twist,')

Col'ica Ileus seu spasmod'ica, Enterel'e'sia, Enterel'o'sis, Ileus spasmod'icus, Chordap'sus, Pas'sio Ili'aca, Ili'ac or Ile'ac passion, Vol'vulus, Ileo'sis, Misere'rē me'i, Convul'sulus, Tormen'tum, Intercept'io Intestino'rum, Enterosten'o'sis volvulus, (F.) Colique de miséricorde, C. de misérérē, Passion iliaque. A disease characterized by deep-seated pain in the abdomen, stercoraceous vomiting, and obstinate constipation. It is occasioned by hernia, or other obstruction to the passage of the feces through a part of the intestinal canal, Enterostenosis. The term Ileus has been applied to various affections—to simple nervous colic, intussusception, and to strangulation of the small intestine, &c. Various remedies have been employed—the majority for the purpose of forcing alvine evacuations—as purgatives, in draught, pill, or glyster; suppositories, tobacco glysters; pure mercury; leaden bullets; antispasmodics and narcotics; blisters to the epigastrium; ice by the mouth, or injected into the rectum. Some of these have occasionally succeeded, especially the tobacco glyster, and ice to the tumor, where the disease has been occasioned by strangulated hernia. It is very dangerous.

IL'BUS FLA'VUS, Icterus—i. Icteroïdes, Icterus—i. Inflammatorius, Enteritis.

I'lex (gen. Plicis) Aquifo'lium. The systematic name of the Common Holly, Aquifo'lium, Agrifo'lium, μαύρος of the ancients [?], (Prov.) Hol'len, (Sc.) Hol'yn, Hol'ene, (F.) Houx, H. commun ou Chêne vert. Ord. Aquifoliaceæ. The leaves of this plant have been recommended as tonic, astringent, and antiseptic, and have been prescribed in atonic gout, intermittents, dyspepsia, &c. I'licine, the active principle, has also been advised. It is obtained by dissolving the alcoholic extract of the leaves of the holly in water, and successively treating it with the subacetate of lead, sulphuric acid, and carbonate of lime. The filtered and evaporated product is then dissolved in alcohol, and the mixture filtered and evaporated in shallow vessels.

I'LEX CASSI'NĒ, Ilex vomitoria.

I'LEX MA'JOR. From the berries of this tree, called by the Spaniards Bellotas, a juice may be expressed which forms a slightly astringent emulsion with water, and has been recommended by some Spanish physicians in humid cough, hæmoptysis, &c.

I'LEX MA'TĒ, Ilex paraguensis.

I'LEX OPA'CA, American Holly, grows throughout the Atlantic portion of the United States. It is said to possess the same properties as the European variety.

I'LEX PARAGUEN'SIS, Viburnum laevigatum seu Cassinoïdes, Cassi'nē Pera'gua seu Carolinia'na, I. Ma'tē, a native of Paraguay. It affords the celebrated Matte or Matē, Fo'lia Apalach'ines seu Pera'guæ, which is drunk in place of the Chinese tea by the people of Paraguay, Paraguay tea, (F.) Thé du Paraguay. By M. Lenoble, of Montevideo, the matē is referred to Psora'lea glandulosa.

I'LEX VOMITO'RIA, I. Cassi'nē, Cassi'na, Dahoon' hol'ly, Apalach'inē Gal'lis, Southsea Tea, Ever-green Cassi'nē, Cassé'na, Yaupon, Yopon, (F.) Thé des Apalaches, Houx Apalachine, Apalachine, Thé de la Mer du Sud. A tree, indigenous in the southern parts of the United States. The leaves, when dried, are aromatic, stimulant, stomachic, and expectorant, and are used as a tea. When fresh, they are emetic and cathartic.

Il'ia, Flanks.

Il'iac, Il'acus, Il'ial, (F.) Iliacque, (from ilia.) Relating to, or connected with, the flanks.

IL'IAE AR'TERIES, Art'riæ Il'iacæ. This term has been given to several arteries. The Pri'mary Iliacs, (F.) A. Iliacæ primitivæ—A. Pelviculares (Ch.), arise from the bifurcation of the aorta, opposite the body of the fourth lumbar vertebra, and descend, in a divergent manner, until, opposite the sacro-iliac symphysis, they divide into two considerable trunks—the inter'nal Iliac or hypogastric (which see), and the exter'nal Iliac—Portion Iliacque de la crurale (Ch.). This proceeds from the sacro-iliac juncture as far as the crural arch, when it assumes the name Fem'oral Artery. Before passing under the arch it gives off two pretty considerable branches—the Epigas'tric, and the Circumflex'a Il'i. This last, which is called also anterior Iliac by some anatomists—Circumflexe de l'Ilium (Ch.)—leaves the external iliac at the crural arch. It ascends along the outer edge of the iliacus muscle, and divides into two branches—an internal and an external.

The Il'aca Inter'na Mi'nor seu Iliolumba'tis is a small artery, which sometimes arises from the hypogastric; at others, from the beginning of the gluteal. It is sent chiefly to the psaos and iliacus internus muscles.

IL'IAE CREST, Cris'ta Il'i, is the upper margin of the ilium, (F.) Crête Iliacque. It is very thick, and curved like the italic S. It affords attachment to the broad muscles of the abdomen.

IL'IAE Fos'sæ are two in number—the internal, the depression presented by the ilium on its interior, and at the upper part in which the Iliacus internus is lodged; and the external, an excavation on the outer surface of the same bone, occupied by the Glutei muscles.

IL'IAE MUS'CLE, INTER'NAL, Il'acus Inter'nus Mus'cle, Il'acus, Iliaco-trochantérien (Ch.), Femur moven'tium sep'timus, Iliac muscle, is situated in the fossa iliaca, and at the anterior and superior part of the thigh. It is broad, radiated, triangular, and is attached, above, to the two upper thirds of the fossa iliaca, and to the internal part of the iliac crest; below, it terminates by a tendon, which is common to it and the psaos magnus, and is fixed into the lesser trochanter. When this muscle contracts, it bends the pelvis on the thigh, and conversely. It is also a rotator of the thigh outward, and prevents the trunk from falling backward. See Iliopsoas.

IL'IAE PAS'sION, Ileus.

IL'IAE RE'GIONS, Regio'nes il'iacæ, Inan'ia, are the sides of the abdomen between the ribs and the hips.

IL'IAE SPINES, Sp'i'nous Proc'esses of the Il'ium, are four in number. They are distinguished into anterior and posterior. Of the anterior, one is superior. It bounds the crista ilii anteriorly, and affords origin to the sartorius muscle. The other is inferior, and receives the tendinous origin of the rectus femoris.

The two Posterior Iliac Spines are divided, like the anterior, into superior and inferior. They afford insertion to strong ligaments, which unite the ilium with the sacrum.

Il'i'acopso'as, Iliopsoas.

Iliaco-trochantérien, Iliacus internus.

Il'acus, Iliac muscle, internal—i. Externus, Gluteus medius.

Il'i'adus, Ilech.

Il'ial, Iliac.

Ilias'ter, Ilech.

Ilias'trum, Ilech.

Il'in'gos, (ἰλιγγος) Vertigo.

Il'io. In composition, relating or appertaining to the ilion or ileon.

Iliöäbdominal, Obliquus internus abdominis.

ILIOAPONEUROT'IC MUS'CLE, Fascia lata muscle.

Ilioapont'vrosi-femoral, Fascia lata muscle

—i. Costal, Quadratus lumborum sacrolumbalis—i. Cresti-tibial, Sartorius—i. Femoral, Coxo-femoral.

ILIOFEM'ORAL LIG'AMENTS, see Coxofemoral articulation.

ILIOHYPOGAS'TRICUS (NERVUS), Musculocutaneous nerve, superior—i. Inguinal, Musculocutaneous nerve, inferior—i. Ischii-trochantérien, Gluteus minimus—i. Lombi-costal, Quadratus lumborum—i. Lombo-costo-abdominal, Obliquus internus abdominis—i. Lumbalis, Ileolumbar, see Iliac arteries—i. Lumbar, Ileolumbar—i. Lumbovertebral ligament, Ileolumbar ligament.

ILIOPECTINE'A, Ileopectine'a, (F.) Ilio-pectiné,

Ilio-pectineal. Belonging to the ilium and to the pecten or pubis.

ILIOPECTINEA LIN'EA, Iliopectine'al line, Linea innomina'ta, is the projecting line or ridge of the ilium and pubis, pectineal line, which forms part of the brim of the pelvis.

ILIOPECTINE'AL EM'INENCE is so called from being formed by the junction of the ramus of the ilium with that of the pubis. It affords attachment to the psoas minor.

Ilioprétibial, Sartorius.

ILIOPSO'AS. With some anatomists the psoas and iliacus muscles. It is the Iliacopsoas and Flexor femoris of others.

ILIOPSO'TIS, (ilio, ψοα, 'the loins,' and itis.) Inflammation of the iliopsoas muscle.

Ilio-pubo-costo-Abdominal, Obliquus externus abdominis—i. Rotulien, Rectus femoris—i. Sacral, Sacro-iliac—i. Sacral articulation, Sacro-iliac articulation—i. Sacro-fémoral, Glutæus major—i. Scrotal nerve, Musculo-cutaneous, superior—i. Trochantérien, Glutæus medius—i. Trochantérien petit, Glutæus minimus.

Il'ion, Il'ium, Il'eum, Haunch or Hip bone. The largest of the three bones which constitute the os innominatum in the foetus and child. (It was probably so called from its seeming to support the intestine ilion; or, perhaps, because its crest is curved upon itself, from ἰλέω, 'I twist,' 'I roll.') This portion of the os innominatum is usually so called in the adult. The posterior surface is called Dorsum, the internal Venter. The upper semicircular edge is the Crista or Spine, at the anterior part of which is the anterior and superior spinous process; and, below, the anterior and inferior spinous process. At the back part of the spine are two spinous processes, the posterior and superior, and posterior and inferior. See Iliac spines.

Ilithy'ia, (Ἐλθεῖα), Luci'na, Ju'no Lucina. The goddess who presided over parturient females, with the Greeks and Romans.

Il'ium, Ileum, Ilium.

Il'keston, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Ilkeston is in Derbyshire, England, about eight miles from Nottingham. The water contains carbonate of lime and soda, chloride of calcium, sulphate of magnesia, sulphate of soda, carbonic acid, sulphohydric acid, and a little iron.

Ill, Sick.

Illacryma'tio, (il, and lacryma, 'a tear,') Epiphora.

Illece'bra, (from illicere, 'to allure,') Sedum—i. Major, Sedum telephium.

Illece'brum Polygonol'des, Achyranthes repens—i. Vermiculare, Sedum.

Illegit'imate, Illegit'imus, (F.) Illegitime, (il, and legitimus,—lex, legis, 'law,'—'legitimate,') Bas'tard. That which is contrary to law; which has not the conditions required by law, as an illegitimate birth—one out of wedlock; base-born, love-begot, love-child.

ILLEGIT'IMATE OF BAS'TARD is also applied to diseases—as to fevers, whose progress is anomalous. See False.

Il'li, (ἄλλοι), see Strabismus.

Illic'ium Anisa'tum, (illicere, 'to allure,') Yel'lowflowered An'ise, An'iseed Tree, Star Anise, An'isum stella'tum seu Sinen'se, Se'men Ba'dian, (F.) Anis de la Chine, A. étoilé, Ba'diane. Ord. Magnoliaceæ. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Polygynia. The seeds are used like the aniseed. The same tree is supposed to furnish the aromatic bark called Cor'tex Ani'si Stella'ti, Cortex La'vola.

Illicium Anisatum is said to furnish much of the so-called Oil of An'ise, used in the United States.

ILLIC'IUM FLORIDA'NUM, Flor'ida An'ise Tree, Star Anise, Sweet Lau'rel. An evergreen shrub, the bark, leaves, &c., of which have a spicy odor like anise, and might be used for it.

ILLIC'IUM PARVIFLO'RUM, a shrub of the hilly regions of Georgia and Carolina, has a flavor closely resembling that of sassafras root.

Il'lides, (ἄλλας, gen. ἄλλιδας, 'one who squints,') See Strabismus.

Illinit'io, (il, and lino, litum, 'I anoint,') Inunction.

Illis'io, (il, and ludere, 'to strike violently,') Enthlasis.

Illit'io, (il, and lino, litum, 'I anoint,') Inunction.

Illit'us, gen. Illit'us, Inunction.

Ill'ness, Disease—i. Monthly, see Menses.

Il'los, (ἄλλος), Eye, Strabismus.

Illo'sis, Illo'sis, (from illos, and osis.) Distortion of the eyes. Strabismus.

Illu'sio, (il, and ludere, lusum, 'to play,') Illusion—i. Sensûs, Hallucination.

Illu'sion, Hallucination.

Illutamen'tum, see Illutatio.

Illuta'tio, (il, and lutum, 'mud,') A word used by the ancients for the act of covering any part of the body with mud—illutamen'tum—with therapeutical views.

Illo'sis, Illosis.

Ilots du Foie, ('Islets of the Liver,') see Liver.

Im, Il, In, Ir. In composition, generally mean in; occasionally, however, they have the privative sense of un.

Im'age of Purkin'je. An intraretinal image, as described by Purkinje, of the bloodvessels of the retina, seen in one's own eye by moving a lighted candle in front of the organ, so that the light may enter it obliquely.

Imagina'tion, Imagina'tio, Figura'tio, Phantasia, Diagno'sma, (imago, gen. imag'inis, 'image,') The faculty of forming in the mind an assemblage of images and combinations of ideas which are not always in direct connection with external objects.

Imbalsamation, Embalming.

Imbecil'ity, Imbecil'itas, Stupid'itas, Hebentudo an'imi, Oligopsych'ia, Inspicientia ingen'ita, (F.) Imbecillité. Weakness, especially of the intellect; incoherency; Imbecil'itas men'tis.

Imbec'illis, Infirm.

Imbecil'itas, Imbecility—i. Ingenii, Idiotism, Imbecility—i. Mentis, Idiotism, Imbecility—i. Vetriculi, Gasterasthenia.

Imbel'lis ad Ven'erem, ('powerless for venery,') Frigid.

Imber'bis, Imber'bus, Agenci'os, Apo'gon, (im, and barba, 'beard,') Devoid of beard, beardless.

Imbibit'io, (imbibere,—in, and bibere,—'to drink, to imbibe,') Absorption, Imbibition.

Imbibit'ion, Imbibit'io, Emp'osis, Aspira'tion. The action by which a body becomes penetrated by a liquid. See Endosmose. The reverse action has been called Exhibition. Many of the phenomena of absorption are owing to imbibition.

IMBIBIT'ION, DOUB'LE, Endosmose.

Imbow'elling, Exenterismus.

Im'brex ('a tile,') Na'rrium, Septum narium.

Imbrica'ria Saxatilis, Lichen saxatilis.

Imbricated, Imbrica'tus, (F.) Imbriqué (imbrex, 'a tile,') Placed over each other like the tiles of a roof.

Immer'sus, (im, and mergere, mersum, 'to dip, because hidden, as it were, [?]) Subscapularis muscle.

Im'minence, Imminen'tia, (immineo,—im, and mineo,—'I hang over,') Staying over or upon; impending. Some authors have designated by this term the period which precedes the invasion of a disease, when certain indications foretell its approach.

Imminence Morbide, Diathesis, Predisposition.

Immis'sio Cathete'ris, (im, and mittere, missum, 'to send.') Catheterismus.

Immis'sor, Catheter.

Immobilitas, (im, move, 'to move,' and habilis, 'able,') Acinesia—i. Pupillæ, Amaurosis.

Immoderan'tia, (im, and moderari, 'to be moderate,') Intemperance.

Immodera'tio, Intemperance.

Immovable Appara'tus, see Apparatus, immovable.

Immu'tans, (im, and mutare, 'to change,') Alterative.

Impac'ted, (impingere,—in, and pangere, pac-tum,—'to drive in,' 'to strike against,') Wedged.

Impac'tion, Impac'tio. A collision. A fracture of the cranium, ribs, or sternum, or other bone, with depression of some of the fragments and projection of others externally. See Epiesma.

Impa'tiens Balsami'na, Bal'sam weed, Touch me not, (called from the sudden bursting of the pods when touched.) Ord. Balsaminaceæ. This probably resembles the other species in its properties.

IMPA'TIENS FUL'VA and I. PAL'LIDA, Touch me not, Jew'el weed, Bal'sam weed, Slip'pers, Celandine, Quick in the hand, Weath'ercocks, Snap-weed. Indigenous plants, having tender, juicy, almost transparent stems, and yellow flowers, which appear in July and August. They are found in low, moist ground, in every part of the Union. The properties are probably the same as those of IMPA'TIENS NO'LI ME TAN'GERE of Europe, which has an acrid taste, and acts as an emetic, cathartic, and diuretic.

Impatien'tia Vesi'cæ, (im, and patior, passus, 'I suffer,') Cysterethismus.

Impedimen'tum, ('obstruction,') Emphragma.

Impêroire, Imperatoria.

Imperato'ria, (from imperare, imperatum, 'to command,' from its commanding virtues,) I. Ostru'thium, Seli'num ostru'thium seu Imperato'ria, Angel'ica officina'lis, Astruthium, Ostruthium, Astran'tia, Magistran'tia, Ma'sterwort; (old F.) Austruche, Impêroire. Ord. Umbelliferae. The roots of this plant were formerly considered divi-num reme'dium. They are merely aromatic and bitter, and are not used.

IMPERATO'RIA SYLVES'TRIS, Angelica sylvestris.

Imper'forate, (im, per, 'through,' and forare, 'to bore,') Atritus.

Imperfora'tio, Imperforation—i. Ani, Atresia ani adnata, Proctatresia—i. Pupillæ, Synezisis—i. Uteri, Metratresia.

Imperfora'tio, Imperfora'tio, Atre'sia, Atre'tismus. Absence of a natural aperture; as of the mouth, anus, vulva, nostrils, &c. It is congenital, being dependent upon faulty conformation.

Imperforation de l'Anus, Atresia ani adnata.

Impe'rial, Po'tus Imperia'lis. A pleasant, cooling drink, formed of bitartrate of potassa, 3ss., one lemon, cut into slices, white sugar, lbss., and water, Oij. Let the mixture stand for half an hour, and strain.

Impetig'inous, Impetiginos'us, (F.) Impétigineux. Having the nature of, or relating to, impetigo.

Impeti'go, gen. Impetig'inis, (impeto, 'I invade,') Impetiginos'itas, Dar'ta, Der'bia, Im'petus, Peti'go, Epye'sis seu Phly'sis impeti'go, Le'pra Squamo'sa, Melita'gria, Mel'itagra, Ru'ning Scall or Tet'ter, Crust'ed, Pus'tular or Hu'mid Tet'ter or Scall, Cow'rap, (F.) Dartre, D.

crustacée ou croûteuse, Lèpre humide. A word used in various acceptations. With some writers it is synonymous with itch. In others, it means a variety of herpes. Sauvages employs it as a generic term, under which he comprises syphilis, scorbutus, rachitis, elephantiasis, the itch, tinea, scrofula, &c. It forms, also, a genus in the class Cachexiæ of Cullen. In Bateman, it is the first genus of the 5th order, Pustulæ, and is defined—the humid or running tetter; consisting of small pustules denominated Pydra'cia. It is unaccompanied by fever; not contagious, or communicable by inoculation. He has five species:—the I. figura'ta, I. spar'sa, I. erysipelato'des, I. scab'ida, and I. ro'dens.—I. contagio'sa, I. sycosiform'is, I. acui'form'is, I. con'fluens, and I. larva'lis, are also described by some authors. See Psoriasis.

IMPETI'GO CONTAGIO'SA. A vesico-pustular eruption, in many cases apparently epidemic among children, generally appearing first on the face or top of the head in isolated vesicles, followed in a few days by characteristic scabs.

Commonly, it means want of sexual vigor; incapacity for copulation, and chiefly on the part of the male. As-tys'ia, Astyph'ia, Asyno'dia, Adyna'mia viri'lis, Ino'pia Virilita'tis. It has also been used synonymously with sterility. Impotence may be absolute or relative, constitutional or local, direct or indirect, permanent or temporary.

Impoten'tia, Adynamia, Impotence—i. Coëundi, Impotence—i. Generandi, Impotence.

Impover'ished, Effe'tus, Depauper'atus, (F.) Appav'ri. ('Having become poor;') originally from (L.) pauper, (F.) pauvre, 'poor,') The Humorists applied this epithet to a humor deprived of a part of its constituents, and particularly to the blood. This fluid was considered to be impoverished when it was pale, without the proper consistence, and abounding in serum. It was, on the contrary, rich, in their opinion, when of a scarlet color; possessing due consistence; when it coagulated promptly, and the quantity of serum, compared with that of the clot, was by no means considerable.

Imprægna'tio, Fecundation, Pregnancy.

Impregna'tion, Fecundation, Pregnancy.

Impressibil'ity, (impressio, and habilis, 'able,') see Sensibility—i. Great, Hyperæsthesia.

Impres'sio Co'lica seu Co'li. A shallow impression on the under surface of the right lobe of the liver, in front, for the hepatic flexure of the colon. A similar impression behind, impres'sio rena'lis, is for the right kidney and suprarenal capsule.

Ine'dia, (in, and edere, 'to eat,') Fasting.

Iner'tia, (in, and ars, gen. artis, 'art,') Igna'via, Ener'vitas. Sluggishness, inactivity.

INER'TIA OF THE WOMB, (F.) Inertie de la matrice. The diminution and even total cessation of the contractions of the uterus during labor; as well as the species of languor into which it sometimes falls after the expulsion of the fetus.

Inertia par Épuisement, ('inertia by exhaustion,') see Parturition — i. de la Matrice, Inertia of the womb.

Ine'sis, (ἰνέσις), Cenosis.

Ineth'mus, (ἰνέθμος), Cenosis.

In Extre'mis, ('at the extremity or point of death,') Psychorages.

In'fancy, Infant'ia, (in, and fans, from fari, 'to speak,') Early childhood. Childhood; Ne'p'iotēs, Paidi'a, (F.) Enfance. It generally includes the age from birth till the seventh year. See Age.

In'fans, gen. Infant'is, Pa'dion, Pa'dion, Ne'pios, Pa'er, (Sc.) Gait'ling, Gyt'ling, (Old Eng. and Prov.) Barn; (Sc.) Bairn, (F.) Enfant. An infant, a baby, a child, one in infancy. In law, one who has not attained the age of legal capacity; which is, in general, fixed at twenty-one years.

IN'FANS RE'CENS NA'TUS, Nouveau-né.

Infan'tia, Infancy.

Infan'ticide, Infantici'dium, Tecnocton'ia, Child'murder, (infans, infantis, 'a child,' and cedere, 'to kill,') The murder of a child newly born, or on the point of being born. It may be perpetrated by the mother, or by some other person, either by commission, that is, in consequence of a direct voluntary act; or by omission of those cares which are necessary for the preservation of the new-born.

Infarc'tion, (from in, and farcire, farcitum, 'to stuff,') Emphraxis.

Infarc'tus, gen. Infarc'tūs, Emphraxis — i. Hæmoptoicus Laennecii, see Hæmoptysis.

INFARC'TUS, HEMORRHAG'IC, (F.) I. Hémorrhagique. A condition dependent on hyperæmia or congestion, from capillary embolism, within circumscribed spaces corresponding to the distribution of the vessels; rupture and extravasation resulting from pressure of the blood within these spots.

INFARC'TUS INTESTINO'RUM, Enteremphraxis — i. Lactei extrematatum, Phlegmatia dolens — i. Lienis, Splenoneus.

INFARC'TUS MAM'MÆ LAC'TEUS, Lac'tis concre'tiones, No'di seu Throm'bi lac'tei, Trichi'asis lac'tea. Knotty tumors of the female mammae, owing to the accumulation and arrest of milk in the galactophorous ducts.

INFARC'TUS U'TERI, Metremphraxis.

Infec'tant, Infec'tans, (inficere, infectum, — in, and facere, 'to make,' — 'to taint,') That which can taint or infect.

Infectieux, see Contagious

Infec'tio Purulen'ta, see Pyohæmia.

Infec'tion, see Contagion — i. Paludæenne, see Miasm — i. Putrid, Septæmia.

Infec'tious, see Contagious.

Infecun'dity, (in, and fecundus, 'fruitful,') Unfruitful. See Fecundity.

Infecun'dus, Sterile.

In'ferent, see Afferent.

Infer'nal, Infer'nus; ('relating to hell,') A name applied to caustic — La'pis Inferna'lis — on account of its strong burning properties.

Infibula'tio, Fibula'tio, Infibulation, Anteri-as'mus, (in, and fibula, 'a clasp,') (F.) Bouclement. An operation, formerly practised, which consisted in passing a ring through the prepuce, after having drawn it over the glans; — in order to prevent coition. The ancients employed infibulation with their gladiators to preserve all their strength by depriving them of venery. In the women, to preserve their chastity, the ring was passed through the labia majora.

In'filtrated, Infiltra'tus, (F.) Infiltré. Affected with infiltration.

Infiltra'tion, Infiltra'tio, (in, and filtrare, filtratum, 'to filter,') Effusion. The passage or effusion of a fluid into the areolæ of any texture, and particularly of the areolar membrane. The fluid effused is ordinarily the Liquor sanguinis, sound or altered — sometimes blood or pus, faeces, or urine. When infiltration of a serous fluid is general, it constitutes anasarca; when local, œdema.

INFILTRA'TION, ALBU'MINOUS, see Lardaceous — i. Amyloid, see Lardaceous — i. Calcareous, see Cro-tification — i. Cholesterine, see Lardaceous — i. Fatty, see Fatty — i. Pigmentary, see Pigmenta-tion — i. Purulent, see Purulent — i. Purulente, see Purulent, and Hepatization — i. Waxy, see Lardaceous.

Infin'itesimal, Infin'itesimus, (in, and finitus, 'limited,') Unlimited. An epithet employed by the homœopaths for their endless subdivisions of drugs: — the decillionth of a grain, for exam-ple, is "an infinitesimal dose."

Infin'itivist, see Emboitement.

Infirm', Infirm'us, Imbe'cillus, Deb'ilis, As'thenes, Hypoc'rates, (in, and firmus, 'firm,') Not firm or sound; weak; feeble.

Infirm'a'rium, Hospital.

Infir'mary, Hospital.

Infirmato'rium, Hospital.

Infirm'erie, Hospital.

Infirm'ier, (F.) Infirm'a'rius, Nosoc'omus, Cu-ra'tor infirmo'rum. One employed in an hospital or infirmary to take care of the sick.

Infirm'ity, Infirm'itas, Asthen'ia, Arrhos'tia, Invaletu'do. Any disease which has become habit-ual, either owing to its chronic character, or its numerous relapses.

Infir'mus, Abebæos, Infirm.

Infla'med, (Old Eng.) Flamea, Inflamma'tus, (F.) Enflammé, Phlogosé, — Phlogo'sed, according to some, — (in, and flamma, 'flame, fire,') Affected with inflammation. A sore, when inflamed, is said to look irritated, angry.

Inflammable Air, Hydrogen, carburetted.

Inflam'mation, Inflam'matio, so called in consequence of the acute or burning pain felt in a part affected with it. Phleg'monë, Phlogo'sis, Ecephlogo'sis, Epiphleg'ia, Exap'sis, Phlegma'sia, Causo'ma, Empres'ma, Phlo'gia, Hyperendosmose (Dutrochet), Ineen'dium, Hyperhæmato'sis, Hyperæ'mia acti'va, Phleboplero'sis cephractica; (F.) Inflammation, improperly Angite. Altered nutrition in a part is occasioned by some agency;—owing to which the blood flows into the capillary vessels in greater abundance than natural, and those vessels become over-dilated and enfeebled; whence result pain, redness, heat, tension, and swelling; symptoms which appear in greater or less severity, according to the structure, vital properties, and functions of the part affected, and its connection with other parts, as well as according to the individual constitution.

Simple accumulation of blood in the capillaries of the part is hyperæmia, not inflammation. The latter requires, in addition, altered nutrition of the vessels themselves, and the surrounding tissues.

The inflammations of the areolar and serous membranes greatly agree;—and those of the mucous and skin; the former being more active, and constituting the phlegmonous variety;—the latter, the erythematic or erysipelatos. Of this variety is the diffusive inflammation produced by morbid poisons,—as during dissection, where solutions of continuity exist in the fingers of the operator. It is seen, too, in workers in bone, and hence has been called bone fever. Inflammation may end by resolution, suppuration, gangrene, adhesion, effusion, or induration.

Besides the above inflammations, it has been considered, that there is an instinctive kind established for the union of parts which have been divided, whether the union takes place immediately, or by the aid of an intermediate body. This is the adhesive inflammation of some; but it may well be questioned whether inflammation is ever desirable in such cases. See Adhesion, Callus, Cicatrix. Broussais considered that the term inflammation should include every local exaltation of the organic movements which is sufficiently great to disturb the harmony of the functions, and disorganize the texture in which it is situate. He also extended the name to irritations which do not induce disorganization of textures, and which were previously, and are still, called fevers.

Inflammations have been variously named, according to their duration, intensity, local effects, &c., into acute, passive, chronic, asthenic, sthenic, ulcerative, gangrenous, diffuse, &c. Embo'lic inflammation is caused by the plugging of an artery by a detached portion of fibrin, or other substance driven into it by the action of the heart.

Examination of the blood drawn always exhibits an increase of the fibrinous element—the average proportion of which, in healthy blood, is about three in the thousand. In inflammation, it at times rises as high as ten. In fevers unaccompanied with inflammation, the proportion is natural, or below the average; but whenever inflammation supervenes, it immediately rises.

External inflammation is easily detected by the characters already mentioned:—internal, by disturbance of function and pain upon pressure; but the last sign is often not available. Both forms require the removal of all irritation, and the reduction of vascular excitement and nervous irritability by bloodletting—local and general—sedatives, refrigerants, counterirritants, &c.

Inflammation is not always of the active kind. There is a form, Inflam'matio deb'ilis, which occurs in low conditions of the system, and in broken-down constitutions, which, like many forms of chronic inflammation, requires a stimulant, rather than a sedative, mode of treatment.

(For the numerous theories of inflammation, — such as the influence of the nervous system, the action of vessels, of cells, of embolism, of leucocytes, &c.,—treatment, &c., see the various recent standard works on the subject.)

INFLAMMATIONS, RESOLV'ING, see Resolution.

Inflammati'cula, (dim. of inflammatio),

Subinflam'matio. A superficial and often insignificant inflammation of the skin, as in many cutaneous affections.

Inflam'matoire, Inflammatory.

Inflam'matory, Inflam'matorius, Phlog'icus, Causo'des, Phlogo'des, Phlogis'ticus, Phlogis'tic, (F.) Inflam'matoire, Phlegmasique. Belonging to inflammation;—as, inflammatory tumor, inflammatory fever, &c. The blood is said to be inflammatory when cupped or buffed. See Corium phlogisticum.

INFLAMMATORY BLUSH, Erythema.

Inflam'matus, Inflamed.

Emphysema, Puffiness, Colica flatulenta—i. Parotidum, Cynanche parotidæa—i. Uteri, Physometra.

Inflex'io, (in, and flectere, flexum, 'to bend.') Campsis.

Influence, Influenza—i. Nervous, Nervous power.

Influen'tia, Influenza.

Influen'za, (the Italian for 'Influence,') Influenza Europæa, Influen'tia, Catar'rhus epidem'icus, C. a conta'gio, Fe'bris catarrha'lis epidem'ica, Rheu'ma epidem'icum, Mor'bus Verveci'nus seu Catarrha'lis seu Ari'etis, Syn'ochus seu De'flux'io catarrha'lis, Cephalal'gia contagio'sa (epidemics of the 16th and 17th centuries); (F.) Tac, Quinte, Florion, Coqueluche, Baraquette, Générale, Grippe, Follette, Grenade, Coquette, Cocote, Petite Poste, Petit Courier, Allure, Ladendo, Fidvre catarrhale épidémique; Influence, Epidemic catarrh. A severe form of catarrh occurring epidemically, and generally affecting a number of persons in a community. See Catarrh, epidemic. Gluge, from his investigations, considers that the following is the chronological order of the return of the influenza:—14th century, 1323, 1326—15th century, 1410, 1411, 1414—16th century, 1510, 1557, 1562, 1574, 1580, and 1593—17th century, 1658, 1669, 1675, 1693—18th century, 1708, 1712, 1729, 1732, 1733, 1742, 1743, 1761, 1762, and 1775—19th century, 1800, 1803, 1831, and 1833. To these may be added 1837, and 1843.

INFLUEN'ZA EUROPE'Æ, Influenza.

Influen'zoid, Influenzoides, (influenza, and zōs, 'resemblance,') Resembling influenza.

Inform'itas, (in, and forma, 'form,') Deformation.

Infortu'nium, 'misfortune,' (in, and fortuna, 'fortune,') Contra'fessura.

In'fra, as a prefix, beneath.

Infra'atloïdæ'us, Sub-atloïdæus.

Infra'axoïdæ'us, Sub-axoïdæus.

Infraclavicular, Infraclavicular'is, (infra, and clavicula.) That which is situate beneath the clavicle, as the Fos'sa infraclavicular'is.

Infracosta'les, see Intercostal muscles.

Infradiaphragmat'ic, Infradiaphragmat'icus, (F.) Sousdiaphragmatique. Situate under the diaphragm.

Inframaxilla'ris, Submaxillary.

In'framaxill'o'sternodum'ia, Cephalosomatodymia.

Infraorb'itar, Suborbital.

Infrapu'bian, Infrapubianus, (F.) Souspubien. That which is situate beneath the pubis. See Subpubic.

INFRAPU'BIAN LIG'AMENT, Triangular ligament.

Infrascapula'ris, Subscapularis.

Infraspina'lis, Infraspinalis.

Infraspina'tus, Infraspinal'is, (infra, and spina, 'spine,') Situate beneath the spine of the scapula.

INFRASPINA'TA FOS'SA, (F.) Fosse sous-épineuse. A large excavation on the posterior surface of the scapula, beneath its spine. It is filled by the INFRASPINA'TUS (MUS'CLE), Grand Scapulo-trochitérien, Suprascapular'is inf'erior (Ch.), (F.) Sous-épineux, which is broad, flat, and triangular. It is attached by its base to the three inner quarters of the fossa, and is inserted, by a long tendon, into the middle part of the great tuberosity of the os humeri (Troch'iter). It turns the arm outward, and, when the arm is elevated, carries it backward.

Infric'tion, (in, and fricare, frictum, 'to rub,') Inunction.

Infrin'gens, (in, and frangere, fractum, 'to break,') Corrigent.

Infundib'ula (pl. of Infundibulum) of the Lung. Terminal branches and lateral twigs given off from the respiratory cavities in which the smaller bronchial tubes terminate.

Infundib'ulum, (in, and fundere, fundum, 'to pour,') A Fun'nel, Trito'rium, Choa'næ, Cho'nus, (F.) Entonnoir, of which various kinds are employed in pharmaceutical operations. A name given to many parts which, more or less, resemble a funnel. See Proventriculus, and Pulmo. It is particularly appropriated to the following organs:

INFUNDIB'ULUM OF THE BRAIN, Infundib'ulum seu Pel'vis seu Choa'na seu Cy'athus seu Scy'phus seu Con'cha seu Lacu'na seu Em'bolium seu Aque'duc'tus seu La'brum seu Concav'itas conchula'ris seu Proces'sus orbicula'ris Cer'ebri, (F.) Entonnoir du ventricule moyen du cerveau, Tige pituitaire, Tige sus-sphénoïdale. A depression in the inferior paries of the middle ventricle, above the pituitary gland. It was anciently regarded as a canal, by which the fluid collected in the ventricles of the brain was evacuated and poured into the nasal fossæ.

INFUNDIB'ULUM CER'EBRI, I. of the brain.

INFUNDIB'ULUM OF THE COCH'LEA, I. Coch'leæ, Scy'phus Vieussen'ii seu audito'rius, Cucul'lus, Canalis scala'rum commu'nis. This, with the modiolus, forms the nucleus around which the gyri of the cochlea pass. It is an imperfect funnel, the apex of which is common with that of the modiolus, and the base is covered with the apex of the cochlea, termed Cu'pola.

In Surgery, infundibula or funnels are used to direct steam or vapors, to conduct the actual cautery to certain morbid parts, &c.

INFUNDIB'ULUM OF THE HEART, Conus arteriosus—i. of the Kidney, see Calix—i. Lacrymale, Lachrymal sac.

INFUNDIB'ULUM TUDA'RUM FALLO'PII, see Tube, Fallopian—i. Ventriculi, Œsophagus.

Infusé, Infusion.

Infu'sion, Infu'sio, En'chysis, (infundere,—in, and fundere, fundum,—'to pour in,' 'to introduce,') A pharmaceutical operation, which consists in pouring a hot or cold fluid upon a substance whose medical virtues it is desired to extract. Infusion is, also, used for the product of this operation, Infu'sum, En'chyma, (F.) Infusion, Infusé. In Surgery, Infusion—Chirur'gia infusoria, Ars clysmatica no'va—is the act of introducing into the veins medicinal substances, by aid of an instrument called Infu'sor. See Infusoir. This mode of introducing medicines was called Ars infusoria.

Macerate for fifteen minutes in a covered vessel, and strain. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss.

INFUSUM ARMORACIÆ COMPOSITUM, I. Armoraciæ, Compound Infusion of Horseradish. (Armorac. concis., Sinapis cont., sing., \mathfrak{Z} j., Aquæ bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM AURANTII, Infusion of Orange-peel. (Aurant. cort. amar. incis., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aq. destill. bullient., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ x. Infuse in a covered vessel for fifteen minutes, and strain. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM AURANTII COMPOSITUM, Compound Infusion of Orange-peel. (Aurant. cort., \mathfrak{Z} j., Limon. cort. recent., \mathfrak{Z} j., Caryoph., cont., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aq. destill. bullient., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ x. Macerate for fifteen minutes, and strain. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ i.-ij.

INFUSUM BRASII, Wort—i. Buchu, Infusum diosmæ—i. Bynes, Wort.

INFUSUM CALUMBÆ, I. Calom'bæ seu Colom'bæ, Infusion of Calumbæ or Colum'bæ. (Calumb. in pulv., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aq. fervent., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Made also by percolation.—Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM CAPSICI, Infusion of Capsicum or Cayenne Pepper. (Capsic. in pulv. crass., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss.

INFUSUM CARYOPHYLLI, Infusion of Cloves. (Caryoph., contus., \mathfrak{Z} ij., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM CASCARILLÆ, Infusion of Cascarrilla. (Cascarill., contus., \mathfrak{Z} j., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Made also by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss.-ij.

INFUSUM CASIÆ SENÆ, I. sennæ compositum.

INFUSUM CAT'ECU COMPOSITUM, I. Catechu seu Aca'ciæ Catechu, Compound Infusion of Cat'echu. (Catechu, in pulv., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Cinnam., in pulv., \mathfrak{Z} j., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for an hour, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM CHIRETÆ, I. Chiretæ (Ph. B., 1864), Infusion of Chiretæ. (Chiretæ, \mathfrak{Z} ij., Aq. destill. at 120°, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ x. Infuse for half an hour, and strain. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, as a tonic, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ii.

INFUSUM CINCHO'NÆ, I. Cinchonæ lancifoliz, Infusion of Cincho'na, Infusion of Bark. (Cinch. contus., \mathfrak{Z} j., Aq. fervent., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain.) This infusion may also be made from the same quantity of bark in coarse powder by the process of displacement with hot or cold water. Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij. The Pharmacopœia of the United States, 1873, has Infusum Cincho'næ flavæ, Infusion of yellow cinchona, and an Infusum Cinchonæ rubræ, Infusion of red cinchona—Infusum Cincho'næ Compositum (Ph. U. S., 1851)—which are made as follows: (Cinchon. flav. vel. rubr. in pulv., \mathfrak{Z} j., Acid. sulph. aromat., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j., Aquæ, Oj. Made by displacement.) Dose, same as the last.

INFUSUM CUSPARIÆ, I. Angusturæ (Ph. U. S., 1873), Infusion of Cusparia or Angustura, (Cuspar. cort. contus., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Made also by percolation.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM CUSO, Infusion of Kousso, (Kousso, in coarse powder, \mathfrak{Z} ss., boiling Distilled water, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ vij. Infuse in a covered vessel for fifteen minutes, without straining. Ph. B., 1867.)

INFUSUM DIGITALIS, I. Digitalis purpurea, Infusion of Foxglove, Infusion of Digitalis. (Digital., \mathfrak{Z} j., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and add Tinct. cinnamomi, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j.

INFUSUM DIOSMÆ (Ph. U. S., 1842), I. Buchu (Ph. U. S., 1873), I. Buc'co (Ph. B., 1864), Infusion of Buchu. (Diosm., \mathfrak{Z} i., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours in a covered vessel, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss.

INFUSUM DULCAMARÆ, Infusion of Dulcamara. (Dulcamar. cont., \mathfrak{Z} j., Aq. destill. bullient., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ x. Infuse in a covered vessel for one hour, and strain. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j.-ij.

INFUSUM ER'GOTÆ, Infusion of Ergot. (Ergot. in pulv. crass., \mathfrak{Z} ij., Aq. destillat. bullient., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ x. Infuse for half an hour in a covered vessel, and strain. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, as a parturifacient, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM EUPATORII, Infusion of Thoroughwort. (Eupator., \mathfrak{Z} j., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM GENTIANÆ COMPOSITUM, Compound Infusion of Gentian. (Gentian. pulv., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aurant. amar. cort., Coriandr. contus., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Alcohol., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij., Aquæ, q. s. Mix the alcohol with $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ xiv. of water, and having moistened the mixed powders with $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij. of the menstruum, pack firmly in a percolator, and gradually pour upon them, first the remainder of the menstruum, and then water, until the filtered liquid measures a pint. Ph. U. S., 1873.) The Ph. B., 1867, has a somewhat similar formula under the name Mistura Gentianæ, Gentian mixture. Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

Marsden's Antiscorbutic Drops, an empirical preparation, consist of a solution of corrosive sublimate in an infusion of gentian.

INFUSUM HUMULI (Ph. U. S., 1873), I. Lu'puli (Ph. B., 1867), Infusion of Hops. (Humul., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Ph. U. S.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM JUNIP'ERI, Infusion of Juniper. The common mode of making this infusion is by macerating an ounce of Juniper Berries in a pint of boiling water. The whole may be taken in the twenty-four hours.

INFUSUM KRAMER'IE, Infusion of Rhatany. (Kramer. contus., \mathfrak{Z} j., Aq. bullient., Oj. Prepared by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss.

INFUSUM LI'NI, I. lini compositum.

INFUSUM LI'NI COMPOSITUM (Ph. U. S., 1873), I. Lini (Ph. U. S., 1842), I. Lini usitatis simi, Compound Infusion of Linseed, Flaxseed Tea. (Lini sem., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Glycyrrh. rad. cont., \mathfrak{Z} ij., Aque bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, a teacupful, ad libitum.

INFUSUM LU'PULI, Infusum humuli—i. Malti, Wort.

INFUSUM MATI'CO, I. Mati'ce, Infusion of Matico. (Matico, \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aq. destillat. bullient., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ x. Infuse for half an hour, and strain. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM MENTH'IRIDIS, Infusion of Spearmint, Mint Tea. (Menthæ virid., \mathfrak{Z} ij., Aque bullient., Oss. Infuse for an hour, and strain. Ph. D.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM PAREIR'IE, Infusion of Pareira Bra'va. (Pareir., \mathfrak{Z} j., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. or $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM PICIS EMPYREUMAT'ICÆ LIQ'UIDÆ, see Pinus sylvestris—i. Picis liquidæ, see Pinus sylvestris—i. Polygalæ, Infusum senegæ.

INFUSUM PRU'NI VIRGINIA'NÆ, Infusion of Wild Cherry or Wild Cherry Bark. (Prun. Virginian., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aque, Oj. Prepared by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM QUASSIÆ, I. Quassie excel'sæ, Infusion of Quassia. (Quassie lign., \mathfrak{Z} ij., Aq., Oj. Macerate for twelve hours, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iv.

INFUSUM RHEI, An'ima Rhei, Infusion of Rhubarb. (Rhei, cont., \mathfrak{Z} ij., Aq. ferv., Oss. Digest for an hour, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iv.

INFUSUM ROSÆ AC'IDUM, Ac'id Infusion of Ros'es. (Ros. Gallic., \mathfrak{Z} ij., Acid. Sulph. dil., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j., Aq. destillat. bullient., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ x. Add the acid to the water; infuse the petals in the mixture for half an hour, and strain. Ph. B., 1867.)

INFUSUM ROSÆ COMPOSITUM, I. Rosæ Gallicæ, Infusion of the Rose, Compound Infusion of Rose. (Ros. Gallic., \mathfrak{Z} iv., Aq. bullient., Ojiss., Acid. sulph. dil., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij., Sacch. pulv., \mathfrak{Z} iss. Add the water, and afterwards the acid;—macerate for half an hour; dissolve the sugar, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss. to Oss.

INFUSUM SAL'VIE, Infusion of Sage, Sage Tea. (Salv., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aq. bullient., Oj.; macerate for half an hour, and strain.)

INFUSUM SASSAPARILL'IE, Infusion of Sarsaparilla. (Sarsaparill. contus., \mathfrak{Z} j., Aque bullient., Oj. Digest for two hours in a covered vessel, and strain. Formerly in the Ph. U. S.) It may also be prepared by displacement. Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iv.

INFUSUM SASSAFRAS, I. Sassafras medull'æ, Mucila'go Sassafras, Infusion of Sassafras Pith, Mucilage of Sassafras Pith. (Sassafras medull., \mathfrak{Z} ij., Aque (frigid.), Oj. Macerate for three hours, and strain. Formerly in the Ph. U. S.) An emollient collyrium, and a demulcent drink.

INFUSUM SENEGÆ, Infusum Polygalæ, Infusion of Sen'eka or Senega. (Seneg. cont., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aq. destill. bullient., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ x. Infuse for an hour, and strain. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM SEN'NÆ, I. S. Compositum, I. Cas'

sis Sennæ seu Sennæ simplex, Aqua laxati'va Viennensis, Infusion of Senna. (Sennæ, \mathfrak{Z} j., Coriandr. cont., \mathfrak{Z} j., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for an hour, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iv., as a cathartic.

The Black draught, Black dose, Black bottle, Haustus niger, is usually formed of this infusion. It may be made of Infus. sennæ, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ v., Aq. cinnam., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j., Mannæ, \mathfrak{Z} iv., Magnes. sulph., \mathfrak{Z} vj. Dose, a wineglassful.

Sel'way's Prepared Essence of Senna is a concentrated infusion of the leaves in combination with an alkali.

INFUSUM SEN'NÆ COMPOSITUM, I. sennæ.

INFUSUM SERPENTA'RIÆ, Infusion of Virgin'ia Snake'root, Infusion of Serpenta'ria, I. of Serp'entary. (Serpentar., in pulv., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Prepared, also, by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss.

INFUSUM SIMARU'BÆ, Infusion of Simaruba. (Simarub. cort., cont., \mathfrak{Z} ij., Aq. fervent., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Ph. E.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM SPIGELL'IE, Infusion of Pink'root, Infusion of Spigelia. (Spigel., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iv. to Oss.

INFUSUM TABAC'CI, Infusion of Tobac'co. (Tobac. fol., \mathfrak{Z} j., Aq. ferv., Oj. Macerate for an hour, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Half of this per anum in strangulated hernia.

INFUSUM TARAX'ACI, Infusion of Dan'delion. (Taraxac., contus., \mathfrak{Z} ij., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss., as a diuretic, &c.

INFUSUM ULMI, Mucila'go Ulmi, Infusion of Slip'pery Elm, Slippery Elm Tea, Mucilage of Slippery Elm bark. This preparation, formerly in the Pharmacopœia of the United States, was made by macerating one ounce of slippery elm bark in a pint of boiling water, and straining.

INFUSUM U'VÆ UR'SI, Infusion of Bear'berry. (Uvæ ursi, cont., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aque destill. bullient., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ x. Infuse in a covered vessel for two hours, and strain. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM VALERIAN'NÆ, Infusion of Vale'rian. (Valerian. in pulv., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Prepared, also, by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij.

INFUSUM ZINGIB'ERIS, Infusion of Gin'ger, Ginger Tea. (Zingib., contus., \mathfrak{Z} ss., Aq. bullient., Oj. Macerate for two hours, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ iss. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}$ ij., as a carminative.

In'ga. A genus of plants, Ord. Leguminosæ, belonging to South America, many of the species of which are possessed of astringent properties. Inga bark is used in South America as a tonic astringent in diarrhœa, gonorrhœa, &c. An extract, prepared from it, possesses all the properties of rhatany.

Ingen'ium (Mor'bi), (in, and geno, for gigno, 'I generate.') The nature or genius of a disease. This word is employed, especially by the French, synonymously with nature. They speak, for instance, of Génie inflammatoire, biliens, &c. Some also use génie in the place of type of an intermittent.

Inges'ta, (in, and gerere, gestum, 'to bear or carry.') Substances introduced into the body by the digestive passages; as food, condiments, drinks, &c.

Inglu'vies, Aples'tia, Vic'tûs intemperan'tia. Gluttony, Insatiableness; also, the Crop or Crav or Gorge of birds, (F.) Jabot; and the first stomach or paunch of ruminant animals—Pen'ta, Ru'men, Pan'tices, Ven'ter magnus, (F.) Paunce, Herbier, Double. Also, the Pharynx.

Ingras'sias, Apophyses or Proc'esses of. The lesser ala of the sphenoid bone.

Ingraves'cent, Ingraves'cent, (in, and graves-cere, 'to grow heavy, to increase.') That which increases; as ingravescent apoplexy.

Ingravidat'ion, (in, and gravidus, 'pregnant,') Fecundation, Pregnancy.

Ingres'sus (gen. Ingressus) Superior, ('superior entrance,') Cardia.

In'grown Nail, see Nail.

In'guen, gen. Inguinis, Æda'on, Bu'bon, Bu'bo, Groin, (Prov.) Lank, Last, Lisk, Lesk, (F.) Aine. The oblique fold or depression which separates the abdomen from the thigh. It is only, properly speaking, a line that extends from the anterior and superior spinous process of the ilium to the middle part of the horizontal ramus of the pubis. Also, the genital organs.

IN'GUEN GONORRHŒ'UM, see Bubo — i. Induratum, Bubo, indurated — i. Suppurans, Bubo, suppurating — i. Syphiliticum, see Bubo — i. Virulentum, see Bubo.

Inguérissable (F.), (in, and guérir, 'to cure,') Incurable.

In'guinal, Inguinalis, (from inguen.) Belonging or relating to the groin. This epithet has been given to various parts met with in the region of the groin or inguinal region.

IN'GUINAL AR'TERY is that portion of the femoral artery situate immediately beneath the crural arch in the inguinal region.

IN'GUINAL CANAL is a canal, about two inches in length, proceeding obliquely downwards, inwards and forwards at the lower part of the abdomen; through which passes the spermatic cord in men, and the round ligament of the uterus in women. This canal is formed, inferiorly and anteriorly, by the aponeurosis of the greater oblique muscle; posteriorly by the fascia transversalis, which is joined to the preceding aponeurosis, and forms with it a deep channel, into which are received the lesser oblique and transversalis muscles. The inguinal canal has two apertures; the one, the lower and inner, is called the inguinal or abdominal ring. It is bounded by two strong tendinous pillars which fix it — the innermost to the symphysis, the outermost to the spine of the pubis. The upper and outer aperture, An'nulus abdominalis int'erior, Apertu'ra int'erior canalis inguinalis, is formed by the fascia transversalis. From the edge of this aperture arises a membranous funnel, — a prolongation of the fascia transversalis, — which receives the spermatic vessels, forms their proper sheath, and accompanies them as far as the testicle. On its inside lies the epigastric artery. Above it is the lower edge of the transversalis muscle; and below, it is bounded by the channel of the greater oblique. By following the oblique direction of this canal, and passing, consequently, on the outside of the epigastric artery, the viscera are displaced, so as to constitute internal inguinal hernia.

IN'GUINAL GLANDS, Gland'ule inguinales, (F.) Glandes inguinales, are the lymphatic glands or ganglions of the groin. There are two sets, one superficial; the other deep-seated; the former are larger, and their number varies, but on the average there are eight or ten which are placed irregularly about Poupart's ligament. The latter, or deep-seated, are situate behind the others around the femoral artery and vein.

IN'GUINAL HER'NIA, see Bubonocoele, and Hernia.

IN'GUINAL RE'GION, Re'gio inguinalis, Bu'bo, In'guen. The region of the groin.

IN'GUINAL RING, Abdominal Ring, An'nulus abdominis seu abdominalis ext'erior, Apertu'ra ext'erior canalis inguinalis, (F.) Anneau Inguinal, is the inferior aperture of the inguinal canal.

In'guinocuta'neus. A name given by Chaussier to the middle ramus of the anterior branch of the first lumbar nerve, because it sends its numerous filaments to the groin, scrotum, and to the skin of the superior part of the thigh.

Inhæ'rens, Inherent.

Inhala'tio, (in, and halare, 'to breathe,') Absorption, Inhalation — i. Cutis, see Absorption.

Inhala'tion, Inhala'tio. The act of drawing air or vapor into the lungs — Inhala'tio pulmonalis. Also, absorption.

INHALA'TION OF CHLO'RINE, Vapor chlori — i. of Conia, V. conia — i. of Creasote, V. creasoti — i. of Hydrocyanic acid, V. acidi hydrocyanici — i. of Iodine, Vapor iodi.

Inhalato'rium, see Pulverization.

Inha'ler. An apparatus for inhalation of the steam of hot water, ether, chloroform, vapor of iodine, &c., in affections of the air-passages.

Inhe'rent, Inhæ'rens, (in, and hæ'rere, 'to stick,') That which adheres, or which is joined or united to anything.

INHE'RENT CAUT'ERY, (F.) Cautère inhérent, is the actual cautery, left in contact with a part until it is reduced to the state of a deep eschar.

Inher'ited, (in, and hæ'rere, 'an heir,') see Hereditary.

Inhib'itory, Inhibito'rius, (inhibeo, — in, and habeo, — 'I hold in, 'I restrain,') A term which has been applied to nerves, (F.) Nerfs d'Arrêt, which, when methodically excited, seem to repress the action of muscles to which they are distributed. Disorders of the inhibitory nerves — cardiac, respiratory, intestinal, and reflex — have been termed inhibitory or restraint' neuro'ses. A nervous twig, separating from the vagus at the level of the thyroid cartilage, in the rabbit and cat, and terminating in the inferior cervical ganglion, is a depressor nerve of the heart. When cut, and the central end irritated, the effect is a diminution of the power and frequency of the action of the heart, and dilatation of the vessels.

Inhuma'tion, Inhumatio, (inhumare, inhumatum, — in, and humus, — 'I put in the ground,') The sepulture of the dead. This belongs to the subject of medical police. Also, digestion of substances in earth or dung. See Arenatio.

In'iad, see Inial.

In'ial, (from inion.) An epithet, proposed by Dr. Barclay for an aspect towards the plane of the ridge of the occiput. Iniad is employed by him adverbially to signify 'towards the inial aspect.'

Inienceph'alus, (F.) Iniencephale, (inion, and εγκεφαλος, 'encephalon,') A monster whose encephalon is in great part in the cranium, and in part out of it, behind, and a little beneath the cranium, which is open in its occipital portion. (I. G. St. Hilaire.)

Iniod'ymus, (ινον, and δευν, 'to mingle,') Diprosopus.

In'ion, (ινον.) Some of the Greek physicians give this name to the occiput, or the ridge of the occiput; others to the back part of the neck, and the muscles of the occiput. Blancard says it is the commencement of the spinal marrow.

In'iops, gen. Inio'pis, In'iope, (inion, and ωψ, 'the eye, face,') A monster, double above the umbilicus, which has two ears very near each other, or only one median ear, and above it, at a greater or less distance, a median orbit and eye, more or less imperfect. The rudimental face appearing to be directly opposite the principal face suggested the name to I. G. St. Hilaire.

In'i'tis, gen. In'i'tidis, Inohymen'i'tis, (is, gen. uōs, 'a fibre, and itis.) Fibrous inflammation.

Init'ium, (in, and ire, 'to go,') 'a beginning,' Arche — i. Asperæ arteriæ, Larynx — i. Extuberans coli, Cæcum.

In'ium, (ινον.) The nucha. Also, the muscles at the back of the neck. See Inion.

Injacula'tio, (in, and jaculo, jaculatus, 'I shoot,') A term employed by Van Helmont to designate an acute pain of the stomach, with rigidity and immobility of the body.

Injec'ted, Injec'tus, (injicere, injectum, — in, and jacere, — 'to throw into.') The face and other parts are said to be injected, when the accumulation of blood in the capillary vessels gives them an evident red color. A subject or part of a subject is also said to be injected, when its vessels have been filled, by the anatomist, with an appropriate composition.

Injec'tion, Injec'tio, Eis'bolē. The act of introducing, by means of a syringe or other instrument, a liquid into a cavity of the body or beneath the external integument, hypoderm'ic or subcutaneous injection. The liquid injected is also called an injection, injec'tum. Anatomists use injections—Injec'tiones anatom'icæ—for filling the cavities of vessels, in order that they may be rendered more apparent, and their dissection be facilitated. The most common injections are made of soot, wax, and turpentine, colored with lampblack, vermilion, &c. There are three kinds chiefly used by anatomists,—the coarse, the fine, and the minute. The finest injections for histological researches are made with ether as a menstruum.

INJEC'tION, Clyster—i. Matthews's, see Tinctura cantharidis.

Injec'tio'nes Anatom'icæ, see Injection.

Injec'tum, Injection.

Ink, ([D.] inkt.) Atramentum.

Ink'berry, Prinos glaber.

In'kneed, Entogonyancon.

Innata'tio, Anapleusis.

In'ate, (in, and nascor, natus, 'I am born,') (F.) Inné. Inborn.

IN'ATE DIS'e'ASES, Mor'bi conna'ti seu congen'iti, (F.) Maladies innées. Diseases with which the infant is born. They are not always hereditary, as hereditary diseases are not always innate.

Innerleith'en, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These springs, situate near the Tweed, and supposed to be the scene of "St. Ronan's Well," contain chlorides of sodium and calcium, and carbonate of magnesia.

Innerva'tion, Innerva'tio, Enneuro'sis, (in, and nervus, 'a nerve,') By this term is meant the nervous influence necessary for the maintenance of life and the functions of the various organs. It seems to resemble the galvanic or electric agencies. See Nerves.

Innomina'ta Arte'ria, Innom'inate artery, Brachiocephal'ic artery, Arte'ria anon'yma seu Brach'iocephal'ica, Right Subela'vian, (F.) Artère innominée, Artère brachio-céphalique (Ch.), is the trunk common to the right primitive carotid and to the subelavian. It arises from the anterior part of the arch of the aorta, ascends obliquely to the right, along the trachea; and, after a course of about an inch in length, divides into two trunks, which go off at right angles. The one is external—the right subelavian proper; the other superior—the primitive carotid of the same side.

INNO'MINA'TA CARTILA'GO, Cricoid.

INNO'MINA'TA CAV'ITAS. A cavity of the outer ear, between the helix and anthelix.

INNO'MINA'TA FOS'SA, see Fossa—i. Linea, see Iliopectinea linea.

INNO'MINA'TA MINO'RA OS'SA, Lesser Ossa innominata, Ossic'ula innominata. Some anatomists have given this name to the three cuneiform bones of the tarsus.

INNO'MINA'TA OSSIC'ULA, Innominata minora ossa—i. Tunica oculi, Sclerotic.

Innomina'tæ Ve'næ of Vieus'sens. Vieussens has given this name to two or three veins, which arise on the anterior surface and right margin of the heart, and open into the auricle towards its right margin. The term Venæ Innominate of Meckel is given to the brachiocephalic veins, which are generally included in the description of the subelavian vein, and correspond to the arteria innominata, being formed by the union of the internal jugular vein and the subelavian properly so called, which correspond to the common carotid and subelavian arteries.

Innom'inate Ar'tery. Innominata arteria.

Innomina'tisue Anon'ymi Ner'vi. Some anatomists have thus called the nerves of the fifth pair.

Innomina'tum Fora'men. A foramen, near the middle of the anterior surface of the pars petrosa of the temporal bone, leading backwards for the passage of the Vidian nerve, reflected from the 2d branch of the 5th to the portio dura of the 7th pair.

INNO'MINA'TUM OS, Os Coxen'dicis seu Cox'æ seu anon'ymum seu pel'vis latera'le, Ache-bone, Aitch-bone, (F.) Os innominé, Os Coxal, Os anonyme. A very large, flat bone, which forms the anterior and lateral paries of the pelvis. It is curved upon itself in two opposite directions. In the first periods of life, it is composed of three portions;—the ilium, ischium, and pubis, which join each other in the acetabulum. It is articulated before with its fellow, behind with the sacrum, and laterally with the femur.

Innomina'tus, Anon'ymus, (in, and nomen, 'a name,') (F.) Innominé, Anonyme. Having no name. See Anonymous.

Innominé, Innominatus.

Innutrit'io Os'sium, Rachitis.

I'no, (is, inos, 'a fibre,') in composition, fibre.

Inoc'ulable, (inoculare, — in, and oc'ulus, 'an eye, — 'to ingraft,') Capable of inoculation, or of being communicated by inoculation.

Inocula'tion, Inocula'tio, Insit'io, Insit'io variola'rum. Any operation by which small-pox, for example, may be artificially communicated, by introducing the virus of the particular disease into the economy, by means of a puncture or scratch made in the skin. When the word inoculation is used alone, it usually means that for the small-pox, — Variola'tion. See Syphilization.

INOCULA'TION, COW'POX, Vaccination—i. Jenne'rian, Vaccination.

Inocula'tor, In'sitor. One who practises inoculation.

Inodulaire, (from αωδης, 'fibrous,') see Tissue, inodular.

Inod'ular Tis'sue, see Tissue, inodular.

Inodule, Tissue, inodular.

Inœ'a. A substance obtained by pressure from the seeds of Strophantus hispidus, order Apocynaceæ, of Gaboon, which is said to be more powerful than digitaline in its action on the heart.

Inogen'es'is, (ino, and γενεσις, 'generation,') Inosis.

Inohylo'ma, gen. Inohylo'matis, (ino, έλη, 'matter, and oma,) Tumor, fibrous.

Inohymeni'tis, (ino, έμην, 'a membrane, and itis,) Inflamma'tio te'læ fibro'sæ. Inflammation of the fibrous tissue.

Ino'ma, gen. Ino'matis, (from is, gen. inos, 'a fibre,') Scirrhus, Tumor, fibrous.

Inonction, Inunction.

Inopex'ia, (ino, and πηξις, 'coagulation,') (F.) Inopexie. Increased coagulability of the fibrinogenous substance.

Inopexie, Inopexia.

Inopol'ypus, (ino, and polypus,) see Polypus.

Inorgan'ic, Inorgan'icus, Unor'ganized, (F.) Inorganique, (in, and οργανον, 'an organ,') A term applied to bodies which have no organs;—such as minerals. At the present day, naturalists admit but two classes of bodies, the organized and inorganic. Parts of the body which, like the epidermis, are devoid of bloodvessels and nerves, have been called anorgan'ic.

Inosclero'ma, gen. Inosclero'matis, (ino, and σκληρωμα, 'induration,') Induration of the fibrous tissue.

Inoscula'tio, (in, and osculum, dim. of os, 'a mouth,') Anastomosis.

Ino'sic or Inosin'ic Ac'id, (is, uos, 'a fibre,') An organic acid, a syrupy non-crystallizable liquid, existing in muscular substance.

Ino'sis, (is, gen. uos, 'a fibre,') Hyperinosis. Also, fibre formation, Inogen'esis.

In'osite, In'osit, Mus'cle su'gar, (from is, gen. uos, 'a fibre,') An unfermentable sugar, found only in muscle.

Inosteato'ma, gen. Inosteato'matis, (ino, and steatoma,) A tumor of a mixed fibrous and steatomatous character.

Inosu'ria, (inosite, and ουρον, 'urine,') (F.) Inosuria. The condition of the urinary secretion when it contains inosite.

In'quies, gen. Inquie'tis, Agitation, Inquietude.

Inquie'tude, Inquie'tudo, In'quies, Inquie'ta'tio, Jactita'tio, (in, and quies, quie'tis, 'rest,') Agitation or trouble, caused by indisposition. Restlessness.

Inquinamen'tum, (inquinare, 'to pollute,') Miasm.

Inquisit'io Med'ico-lega'lis, (in, and querere, quæsitum, 'to search,') see Medico-legal.

Insaliva'tion, Insaliva'tio, (in, and saliva,) The mixture of the food with the saliva, and other secretions of the mouth.

Insalu'brious, Insalu'bris, (in, and salubris, 'healthy,') That which is unhealthy,—which injures the health.

Insanab'ilis, (in, sanare, 'to cure, and habilis, 'able,') Incurable.

Insa'ne, Insa'nus (in, and sanus, 'sound,') Aliena'tus, Cra'zy, Mad, Nonsane, Dement'ed, Derang'ed, Bed'lamite, (Sc.) Daft, Wod, (F.) Aliéné, Fou, Insensé. One affected with mental aberration, or of unsound mind.

INSA'NE, PARAL'YSIS OF, Dementia paralytica.

Insa'nia, Mania—i. Cadiva, Epilepsy—i. Lupina, Lycanthropia—i. Puerperarum, Mania, puerperal.

Insanie, Insanity.

Insan'itas, Insanity.

Insan'ity, Insa'nia, Insa'nitas, Insa'nie, Men'tal aliena'tion, Abaliena'tio seu Aliena'tio Men'tis, Arrep'tio, Unsound Mind, Derang'ement, Deranged in'tellect, Cra'ziness, Mad'ness, Phren'zy, Fren'zy, (Sc.) Daff'in, Daff'ing, Wod'nes; Aphros'yné, Ephro'nia, Ephros'yné, Paral'lagé, Parallac'is, Delir'ia, Vesau'nie, Delir'ium (Crichton), Insipien'tia, (F.) Folie, Égarement d'Esprit, Paraphrénie, Cérébrie. This term includes all the varieties of unsound mind,—Mania, Melancholia, Moral Insanity, Dementia, and Idiocy. A slight degree of insanity is sometimes popularly called "a kink in the head;" in Scotland, "a bee in the bonnet."

INSAN'ITY, HOMICIDAL, see Homicidal—i. Ideational, see Ideation—i. Incoherent, Dementia—i. Moral, Pathomania—i. Puerperal, Mania, puerperal—i. Religious, Sebastomania—i. Senile, Delirium senile—i. Suicidal, see Suicide.

Insa'nus, Insane.

Inscrip'tion, (in, and scribere, scriptum, 'to write,') see Matriculate.

Inscriptio'nes Tendin'æ Musculo'rum, Intersectio'nes seu Enervatio'nes tendin'æ musculo'rum, Interme'dia ligamenta'lia seu ner'væ. The tendinous portions which cross several muscles, and especially the straight muscles of the abdomen.

Insect'icide, (insectum, 'an insect, and cædere, 'to kill,') A substance that destroys insects.

In'sect Pow'der, Per'sian or Cauca'sian, see Anthemis pyrethrum.

IN'SECT WOUND. A wound made by an insect, usually a punctured, frequently a poisoned wound, as of the bee, mosquito, &c.

Insemina'tion, (in, and semen, gen. seminis, 'seed,') see Ejaculation.

Insensescen'tia, (in, and senescere, 'to grow old,') Agerasia.

Insensé, Insane.

Insensibil'itas, Insensibility.

Insensibil'ity, Anæsthe'sia, Insensibil'itas, (in, sensus, 'feeling, and habilis, 'able,') Loss or absence of sensibility. It is very common in cerebral affections, and may extend to every part, or be limited to one or more. Some organs are much more sensible than others. The bones, cartilages, ligaments, &c., are insensible in health, but acutely sensible in disease.

Insen'sible, Sensibilita'te ca'rens. That which is devoid of sensibility. This word is applied, also, to phenomena which cease to be appreciable to the senses. Thus, we say, the pulse becomes insensible.

Inser'tion, Inser'tio, Symph'ysis, Eno'sis, (inserere, insertum,—in, and serere, 'to join or knit, '—'to ingraft,') (F.) Attache. The attachment of one part to another. Insertions occur chiefly in bones, cartilages, and fibrous organs; thus, we speak of the insertion of muscular fibres into a tendon or aponeurosis; the insertion of a tendon, aponeurosis, or ligament, into a cartilage or bone. The word insertion has likewise been used by pathologists for the act of inoculating or introducing a virus into the body.

Insess'io, (insidere, insessum,—in, and sedere,—'to sit in,') This term is, sometimes, applied to a vapor bath, the person being seated in a perforated chair, beneath which a vessel, filled with hot water, or the hot decoction of some plant, is placed. See Bath, half, and Semicupium.

Insess'us, Bath, half.

Insic'ium, (inseco, 'I cut up,') Isicium.

Insiden'tia, (insideo,—in, and sedere,—'to sit in or upon,') Epis'tasis. Anything which swims on or in—the urine, for example. It is opposed to the Hypostases or subsidentia.

Insipien'tia, (in, and sapiens, 'wise,') Insanity—i. Ingenita, Imbecility.

Insit'io, (inserere, insitum, 'to ingraft,') Grafting, Inoculation—i. Ciliorum, Blepharoplastice—i. Dentis, Transplantatio dentis—i. Variolarum, Inoculation.

Insola'tion, Insola'tio, (in, and sol, 'the sun,') Solica'tio, Aprica'tio, Helio'sis, Hel'i'asis, Helio-no'sis, Siri'asis. Exposure to the sun. Exposure of a patient to the rays of the sun is, sometimes, had recourse to, with the view of rousing the vital forces when languishing, or of producing irritation of the skin. Insolation is occasionally used in the same sense as coup de soleil.

In Pharmacy, insolation means the drying of chemical and pharmaceutical substances.

Insolatione de Primivera, ('spring insolation,') Pellagra.

Insom'nia, Insom'nitas, Sahara, Zaara, Per-vigil'ium, Pernocta'tio, Aÿp'nia, Aÿp'nia, Aÿp'nia, Anyp'nia, Typhoma'nia, Sleep'lessness, Vig'ilance, (in, negative, and somnus, 'sleep, '—'absence of sleep,') This may exist alone, and constitute a true disease; or it may be connected with another affection. It is an unequivocal sign of suffering in some organ; even when the patient experiences no pain.

Insom'nium, (in, and somnus, 'sleep,') Somnium.

Inspec'tio Med'ico-lega'lis, (inspicere, inspec-tum, 'to look into,') see Medico-legal.

Inspirateur, Inspiratory.

Inspira'tion, Inspira'tio, Empneumato'sis, Eisp'noë, Adspira'tio, Aspira'tio, (in, and spirare, spiratum, 'to breathe,') The action by which the air penetrates into the interior of the lungs. A movement opposed to that of expiration. As regards the average quantity of air received into the lungs at each inspiration, there is much discrepancy among observers. The following table sufficiently exhibits this:

	Cubic inches at each inspiration.
Reil.....	42 to 100
Menzies,
Sauvages,
Hales,
Haller,
Ellis,	40
Sprengel,
Sommering,
Thomson,
Bostock,
Jurin.....	35 to 38
Fontana.....	35
Richerand.....	30 to 40

J. Borelli.....	15 to 40
Goodwyn.....	14
Sir H. Davy.....	13 to 17
Abernethy and Mojon.....	12
Keutsch.....	6 to 12

From 20 to 25 cubic inches may be regarded as a fair average.

INSPIRA'TION, Crow'ing, see Asthma thymicum — i. Muscles of, see Inspiratory.

INSPIRA'TION OF VE'NOUS BLOOD. By this is meant the aspiration of blood towards the heart, occasioned by the approach to a vacuum produced by the dilatation of the thorax during inspiration.

In'spiratory, Inspiratio'ni inser'viens, (F.) Inspirateur. A name given to muscles, which, by their contraction, augment the size of the chest, and thus produce inspiration. The diaphragm and intercostal muscles are the chief agents of inspiration. In cases where deep inspirations are necessary, the action of these muscles is aided by the contraction of the pectoralis major and pectoralis minor, subclavius, serratus major anticus, scaleni, serratus posticus superior, &c. Most of these muscles become inspiratory, by taking their fixed point at the part which they ordinarily move, acting inversely and elevating the ribs.

Inspis'sant, Inspis'sans, (in, and spissare, spissatum, 'to thicken.') Any remedial agent that renders the blood thicker, directly, or indirectly. The opposite of diluent.

Inspissa'tio, Pycno'sis. The act of rendering thick; as in the formation of an extract—Succus Inspissatus.

In'step, Col'lum pe'dis, Neck of the foot, (F.) Cou-de-pied, Cou-de-Pied. The projection at the upper part of the foot, near its articulation with the leg—the tarsus.

Instilla'tion, Enstalar'is, Instilla'tio, (in, 'in,' and stilla, 'a drop.') The act of pouring a liquid drop by drop.

In'stinct, (L.) Instinctus, (instinguere, instinctum, 'to impel,' 'inwardly moved.') Bru'tia, Hor'mē. The action of the living principle, whenever manifestly directing its operations to the health, preservation, or reproduction of a living frame or any part of such frame—Mol'i'men natu'ræ salu'tarium. The law of instinct is, consequently, the law of the living principle, and instinctive actions are the actions of the living principle. Instinct is natural. Reason is acquired.

Instinc'tive, Instinctus, (F.) Instinctif. Relating to or caused by instinct; as instinctive actions. See Emotional, and Instinct. Those instinctive actions of animals which are owing to impressions made on the sensory ganglia, exciting respondent motor influences that are propagated to the various muscles of the body, are termed consensual. Consensual movements which accompany voluntary efforts without our consciousness are termed associated, (F.) Associés.

In'stitutes of Med'icine, (insti'tutum, 'a principle,' from instituere,—in, and statuere,—'to establish,') see Theory of medicine.

Institu'tum Orthopæ'dicum, Orthopedic institution.

In'strument, Instrumen'tum, (from instruere,—in, and struere,—'to put together,') Or'ganum. A tool, an agent.

Instrumen'ta, Pudibilia.

Instrumen'tum, Instrument.

INSTRUMEN'TUM CHIRUR'GICUM. A surgical tool or instrument.

INSTRUMEN'TUM DIGESTIO'NIS. The digestive apparatus.

INSTRUMEN'TUM INSTRUMENTO'RUM, Manus.

Insuffic'ien'cy, (F.) Insuffisance, (in, and sufficere, 'to suffice.') Inadequateness to any end or purpose,—as Insufficiency or Incompetency of the valves of the heart, (F.) Insuffisance des valvules du Cœur;—a condition in which they are not adapted, as in health, to properly close the apertures.

Insuffisance, Insufficiency—i. des Valvules du Cœur, Insufficiency of the valves of the heart.

Insuffla'tion, Insuffla'tio, (in, suf, and flare, 'to blow.') The act of blowing a gas or vapor or powder into some cavity of the body; as when tobacco smoke is injected into the rectum; or when air is blown into the mouths of newborn children to excite the respiratory function. An instrument devised for this purpose is called an Insufflator.

Insuffla'tor, see Insufflation.

In'sula, ('an island,') Insula cerebri.

IN'SULA CER'EBRI, Is'land or In'sula of Reil. The intermediate lobe of the brain, Lo'bus inter-medius cer'ebri. A remarkable group of convolutions—Gy'ri oper'ti—within the fissure of Sylvius. It is called, by Cruveilhier, Lob'ule of the fissure of Syl'vius, Lobule of the corpus striatum. The 'island' of Reil, with the substantia perforata, forms the base of the corpus striatum.

IN'SULA OF REIL, Insula cerebri—i. Sanguinis, see Blood.

In'sulæ, pl. of Insula, see Liver, Maculæ albæ—i. Peyeri, Peyeri glandulæ—i. Pulmonales, see Pulmo.

Insul'tus, gen. Insul'tus, (insilio, insultum, 'I attack,') Attack, Paroxysm.

Insu'rance of Life, see Life insurance.

Integ'ritas, (integer, 'whole,') Sanitas, Virginity.

Integ'ument, Integumen'tum, Tegumen'tum, Tegumen, Teg'imen, Teg'men, Involu'crum seu Velamen'tum corp'oris commu'nē, Vela'men seu Velamentum nativum, (in, and tegere, tectum, 'to cover,') (F.) Tégument. Anything which serves to cover, to envelop. The skin, including the cuticle, rete mucosum, and cutis vera, is the common integument or tegument of the body.

Integumen'ta Fœ'tūs. Membranes of the foetus.

Integumen'tum, Integument—i. Commune, Integument.

In'tellect, Intellectus, Nous, Mens, Gno'mē, Noos, Nūs, (intelligere, intellectum,—inter, and legere, 'to choose;—'to understand,' 'conceive,' 'know,') (F.) Entendement, Intelligence. The aggregate of the intellectual faculties—perception, formation of ideas, memory, and judgment. Their exercise constitutes Intellection, Noe'sis, Syn'esis.

INTELLECT, DERANG'ED, Insanity.

Intellec'tion, see Intellect.

Intellecto'rium Commu'nē. The common centres of intelligence were so termed by Dr. Darwin in his "Zoonomia." It is mainly, in man at least, in the great hemispherical ganglia or cerebral hemispheres.

Intelligence, Intellect.

Intem'perance, Intemperan'tia, Immoderan'tia, Immodera'tio, Acra'sia, Acola'sia, Ples'monē, Amet'ria, Aples'tia, (in, and temperare, 'to temper.') Immoderate use of food and drink, especially the latter;—a fruitful source of disease.

Intemperie (I.), see Miasm.

Intemperies, Dyscrasia. Derangement in the constitution of the atmosphere and of the seasons; bad constitution; derangement or disorder in the humors of the body.

Intensivus, (in, and tendere, tensum, 'to stretch,') Entaticus.

Intention, Intentio, (in, and tendere, tensum or tentum, 'to stretch,') Propositum. The object which one proposes. In surgery, a wound is said to heal by the first intention, Reunio per primam intentio'nem, when cicatrization occurs without suppuration; union by the second intention, Reunio per secundam intentio'nem, being that which does not occur until the surfaces have suppured. To obtain union by the first intention, the edges of a recent wound must be brought in apposition, and kept together by means of adhesive plasters and a proper bandage. Delpech has substituted for those expressions, Réunion primitive, and Réunion secondaire.

In'ter, in composition, between.

Interaccessorii. See Intertransversales lumborum.

Intera'nea, (intra, 'within,') Entrails.

Interartic'ular, Interarticula'ris, (F.) Inter-articulaire, (inter, and articulus, 'a joint,') Parts situate between the articulations are so called; as interarticular cartilages, interarticular ligaments, &c.

Interca'dence, Intercaden'tia, Interciden'tia, (in, and cadere, 'to fall,') Disorder of the arterial pulsations, so that, every now and then, a supernumerary pulsation occurs. The pulse, in such case, is said to be intercur'rent.

Intercal'ary, Intercala'ris, Inter'cidens, Embol'imus, Interpolatus, Provocato'rius, (F.) Intercalaire, (intercalare, 'to insert,') The days which occur between those that are critical. The term has, also, been applied to the days of apyrexia in intermittent fevers, (F.) Jours intercalaires.

Intercel'lular, Intercellula'ris, (F.) Intercellulaire, (inter, and cellula, 'a small cell, a cellule,') That which is between cells or cellulæ.

INTERCEL'LULAR FLUID, Liquor sanguinis.

INTERCEL'LULAR PASS'AGES. A term given by Mr. Rainey to irregular passages through the substance of the lung, which form the terminations of the bronchial tubes, are clustered with aircells, and not lined by mucous membrane [?].

INTERCEL'LULAR SUB'STANCE, see Cytoplastema.

Intercep'tio, (from intercipere, interceptum,—inter, and capere,—'to intercept,') A bandage by the aid of which the ancients proposed to arrest the progress of the material cause of gout and rheumatism; and which consisted in covering the affected limbs with carded wool, surrounding them, afterwards, with broad bandages, applied from the fingers to the axilla, or from the toes to the groin.

INTERCEP'TIO INTESTINO'RUM, Ilcus.

Intercervic'aux, (inter, and cervix, gen. cervicis, 'neck,') Interspinales colli.

Inter'cidens, (inter, and cadere, 'to fall,') Intercalary.

Interciden'tia, Intercadence.

Intercil'ium, (inter, and cilium, 'eyelid,') Mesophryon.

Interclavic'ular, Interclavicula'ris, (F.) Interclaviculaire, (inter, and clavicula, 'a clavicle,') That which is placed between the clavicles.

INTERCLAVIC'ULAR LIG'AMENT is a fibrous bundle, placed transversely above the extremity of the sternum, between the heads of the two clavicles. This ligament is flat. Its fibres, which are always longer above than below, are separated by small apertures, which are traversed by vessels. It prevents the separation of the two clavicles in the forced depression of the shoulder.

Intercolum'nar Fas'cia, F. intercolumnar.

Intercos'tal, Intercosta'lis, (inter, and costa, 'a rib,') Mesopleu'rus, Mesopleu'rius. That which is situate between the ribs.

INTERCOS'TAL AR'TERIES vary in number. There is constantly, however, a superior, Arteria intercosta'lis superior seu Intercosta'lis subclavia, which is given off from the posterior part of the subclavian, and which sends branches into the first two or three intercostal spaces; and, generally, eight or nine inferior or aortic intercostals. These arise from the lateral and posterior parts of the pectoral aorta, and ascend obliquely in front of the vertebral column, to gain the intercostal spaces, where they divide into a dorsal branch and an intercostal, properly so called.

INTERCOS'TAL MUS'LES are distinguished into internal,—inter-plévrocostaux of Dumas,—and external. The former are inserted into the inner lip, the latter into the outer lip of the edge of the ribs. The fibres of the external intercostals are directed obliquely downwards and forwards; and those of the internal downwards and backwards. Both are inspiratory and expiratory muscles, according as they take their origin on the upper or lower rib. Some small, fleshy fibres, seen occasionally at the inner surface of the thorax, descending obliquely from one rib to another, have been called Infracostales, (F.) Souscostaux.

INTERCOS'TAL NERVE, Trisplanchnic nerve.

INTERCOS'TAL NERVES, Branches souscostales (Ch.), Costal or Dorsal nerves, proceed from the anterior branches of the dorsal nerves. They are twelve in number, and are distributed especially to the muscles of the parietes of the chest and abdomen.

INTERCOS'TAL SPACE, Interval'lum seu Interstit'ium intercosta'le, Mesopleu'rum, Mesopleu'rium, is the interval which separates one rib from that immediately above or below it.

INTERCOS'TAL VEINS are distinguished like the arteries. The right superior intercostal vein is often wanting. When it exists, it opens into the back part of the subclavian. The same vein of the left side is very large. It communicates with the demi-azygos, receives the left bronchial vein, and opens into the corresponding subclavian. The right inferior intercostal veins open into the vena azygos; and those of the left into the demi-azygos.

Intercostohu'meral Nerves. So called from their origin and distribution. They are the cutaneous branches of the second and third intercostal nerves.

Intercur'rent, Intercur'rens, (inter, and currere, 'to run,') Diseases are so called which supervene at different seasons of the year, or which cannot be considered as belonging to any particular season. A disease is likewise so termed which occurs in the course of another disease, as Intercurrent Pneumonia.

Intercuta'neous, Subcutaneous.

Interden'tal, Interdenta'lis, (same etymon as the next.) That which is between the teeth.

Interden'tium, (inter, and dens, gen. dentis, 'a tooth,') The interval between teeth of the same order.

Interdigitaire, Interdigital.

Interdig'ital, Interdigita'lis, (F.) Interdigitaire, (inter, and digitus, 'a finger,') That which relates to the spaces between the fingers. Interdigital space, (F.) Espace Interdigitaire, is used, also, for the commissure between the fingers.

Interdigit'ium. A corn or wart, which grows between the fingers and toes, especially between the latter.

Interépineux, Interspinal—i. Cervic'aux, Interspinalis colli.

Interfemin'eum, (inter, 'between,' and femen, gen. feminis, the inner part of the thigh,) Perinæum, Vulva.

Interfin'ium Na'rium, (inter, and finis, 'a boundary,') Septum narium.

Interfœmin'eum, Perinæum, Vulva.

Interforamin'eum, Perinæum.

Interganglion'ic, Interganglion'icus, (inter, and ganglion, 'a knot,') An epithet for nervous cords, placed between ganglia, which they connect together.

Inter'itus, gen. Interitûs, (interico, interitum, 'I perish,') Death.

Interlamel'lar, Interlam'inar, (inter, and lamella,) That which is between the lamellæ of a part—as the 'interlamel'lar spaces' of the cornea.

Interlam'inar, (inter, and lamina, 'a plate,') Interlamellar.

INTERLAM'INAR PLEX'US. The whole series of absorbents between the layers of muscular fibres of the intestines has been so called by Auerbach.

Interlo'bar, Interloba'ris, (F.) Interlobaire, (inter, and lobus, 'a lobe,') That which is between the lobes,—as of the lungs.

Interlob'ular, Interlobula'ris, (F.) Interlobulaire, Interlobulinaire, (inter, and lobulus, 'a small lobe,') That which is between lobules,—as of the lungs.

INTERLOB'ULAR FIS'SURES. The intervals between the lobules of the liver. The narrower spaces are called Fissuræ interlobula'res, the wider Spacia interlobula'ria. See Liver.

INTERLOB'ULAR PLEX'US OF THE BIL'IARY DUCTS. See Liver.

INTERLOB'ULAR SPA'CES. The angular interstices formed in the liver by the apposition of several lobules.

INTERLOB'ULAR TIS'SUE, Tex'tum interlobula'rè, Ligamen'ta interlobula'ria pulmo'num. The cellular tissue between the pulmonary lobules.

INTERLOB'ULAR VEINS, see Liver.

Interlobulinaire, Interlobular.

Intermax'illary, Intermaxilla'ris, (F.) Intermaxillaire, (inter, and maxilla, 'a jaw,') That which is situate between the maxillary bones.

INTERMAX'ILLARY BONE, Incis'sive, Pal'atine, or La'bial bone, is a bony portion, wedged in between the two superior maxillary bones, which supports the upper incisors. This bone is found in the mammalia; and, also, in the human fœtus.

Intermède, (inter, and medius, 'middle,') Exipient.

Interme'dia Ligamenta'lia seu Ner'vea, Inscriptiones tendinæ musculorum.

Intermédiaire de Wrisberg, Portio Wrisbergii.

Interme'diate Vas'cular Sys'tem, Capillary system.

Inter'ment, Prem'ature, (in, and terra, 'earth,') Zoothapsis.

Intermetatar'sal Lig'aments. Ligaments concerned in the articulation of the metatarsal bones with one another.

Intermis'sion, Intermis'sio, Dialeip'sis, Dialeip'sis, Tem'pus intercala'rè, Interval'lum, Inter'val, (inter, and mittere, missum, 'to put or send,') (F.) Intermittence. The interval which occurs between two paroxysms of an intermittent or other disease—during which the patient is almost in his natural state. There is said to be intermission of the pulse, when, in a given number of pulsations, one or more may be wanting.

Intermittence, Intermission.

Intermit'tent, Intermit'tens. That which has intermissions.

INTERMIT'TENT FE'VER, Fe'bris intermit'tens, Dialeip'ysa, Intermittens, An'etus, Pyretotypo'sis, Ague, Ague and Fe'ver, Fever and Ague, Palu'dal or Period'ic Fever, (Prov.) Agah, Cold chill,

Sha'king, Shakes, (Old Eng.) Ak'sis, Auggere, Axes, (F.) Fièvre intermittente, F. d'accès, F. des marais, F. périodique, is a fever consisting of paroxysms, with a complete state of apyrexia in the intervals. The chief types are Quotidian, Tertian, and Quart'an. The symptoms of intermittents are those of a decided and completely marked cold stage, or Stage of Concentration, (F.) Stade de froid, attended with paleness; collapse; impaired sensibility; and coldness, more or less diffused, followed by general rigors. After this occurs the hot stage, or stage of expansion, (F.) Stade de la chaleur, the heat returning partially and irregularly, and at length becoming universal, and much above the standard of health. The pulse is now hard and strong; tongue white; urine, high-colored; thirst, considerable. At length, the sweat'ing stage, or stage of termination, (F.) Stade de sueur, makes its appearance; the moisture usually beginning on the forehead, face, and neck, and soon extending universally; the heat abating; thirst ceasing; the urine throwing down a sediment, and the functions being gradually restored to their wonted state. The tertian type is the most common, and the quartan the most severe. The quotidian more readily changes into a remittent and continued fever. The quartan has, generally, the longest cold stage, the tertian the longest hot. The chief exciting cause is marsh miasmata, the malaria of the Italians, sometimes called Ague poi'son. Ague, also, occurs in districts where there are no marshy emanations. Such districts are, generally, of a volcanic nature:—further we know not. When the disease has once attacked an individual, it is apt to recur. The prognosis is, in general, favorable, as far as regards life; but long protracted intermittents are apt to induce visceral obstructions and engorgements, which may end in dropsy. In some countries, the disease is of a very pernicious character. The indications of treatment are, 1. To abate the violence of the paroxysm; and, 2. To prevent its return. The first indication demands the adoption of the general principles and remedies required in ordinary fever. The second is the most important. The period of apyrexia is that for action. The means for fulfilling this indication are:—the use of emetics, purgatives, antiperiodics, as cinchona, quinia, &c., arsenic, and forcible impressions made on the mind of the patient.

INTERMIT'TENT LIG'ATURE, see Ligature.

Intermus'cular, Intermuscula'ris, (F.) Intermusculaire, (inter, and musculus, 'a muscle,') That which is placed between muscles.

INTERMUS'ULAR APONEURO'SES are aponeurotic laminæ or septa, situate between muscles, to which they often give attachment.

Inter'nal, In'ner, Inter'nus. That which is placed on the inside. This epithet is given to parts that look towards an imaginary central plane, which divides the body into two equal and symmetrical portions, as well as to those which correspond with a cavity. Thus, we say—the internal or inner surface of the arm or thigh, skull, &c.

INTER'NAL DISE'ASES, Morbi inter'ni, are those which occupy the inner parts of the body. Their investigation belongs to the physician; external diseases falling under the management of the surgeon.

Internat, (F.) The post or office of an interne.

Interne, see House-surgeon.

Interno'dia Digito'rum Ma'nus, (inter, and nodus, 'a knot,') Phalanges of the fingers—i. Digitorum pedis, Phalanges of the toes.

Interno'dium. The part of the fingers between the joints. A phalanx.

Internun'cial, Internuncia'lis, (inter, and nun- cus, 'a messenger.') Relating or belonging to a messenger between parties. A term applied by Mr. Hunter to the functions of the nervous system, the nerves being called by him chordæ internuntiae.

Internuntii Di'es, Critical days.

Inter'nus Aur'is, (internal of the ear,) Tensor tympani — i. Mallei, Tensor tympani.

Interor'bital, Interor'biter, Interorbitalis, Interorbitalis. That which is situate between the orbits.

Interos'seous, Interos'seus, Interos'seal, (F.) Interosseux, (inter, and os, 'a bone.') That which is situate between the bones.

INTEROS'SEUS ARTERIES OF THE FOREARM AND HAND. Of these there are several. The common interosseous artery arises from the posterior part of the ulnar, a little below the bicipital tuberosity of the radius; passes backward, and divides into two branches; the one called anterior interosseous descends vertically, anterior to the interosseous ligament; the other, called posterior interosseous, passes above the ligament, appears at its posterior part, and divides into two great branches — the posterior recurrent radial and the posterior interosseous, properly so called. In the hand — 1. The dorsal metacarpal interosseous arteries are given off by the dorsalis carpi, a division of the radial artery. 2. The palmar interosseous arteries, which arise from the convexity of the deep palmar arch, and give off the middle interosseous arteries. 3. The dorsal interosseous of the index, proceeding directly from the radial artery. In the foot, are distinguished — 1. The dorsal interosseous arteries, three in number, which arise from the artery of the metatarsus, a branch of the dorsalis tarsi. 2. The plantar interosseous arteries, which are also three in number, and arise from the plantar arch.

INTEROS'SEUS LIG'AMENTS. Ligaments seated between certain bones, which they unite; such are the ligaments between the radius and ulna, and between the tibia and fibula.

INTEROS'SEUS MUS'LES. These occupy the spaces between the bones of the metacarpus and metatarsus, and consequently belong, some to the hand, others to the foot.

INTEROS'SEUS NERVE is a branch given off by the median nerve, which descends before the interosseous ligament, accompanying the artery of the same name.

INTEROS'SEUS VEINS have the same arrangement as the arteries.

Interos'seus Ma'nūs, (F.) Muscle interosseux de la main — Métacarpo-phalangien-latéral suspalmaire et métacarpo-phalangien-latéral (Ch.). These muscles are seven in number — two for each of the three middle fingers, and one for the little finger. Four are situate on the back of the hand, and three only in the palm. They are inserted into the metacarpal bones, and send a tendon to the tendon of the extensor communis. According to their office, they are, to each finger, an adductor and an abductor. The index has a dorsal abductor and a palmar one. The middle finger has two dorsal muscles for adductor and abductor, the ring finger has a dorsal adductor and a palmar abductor, and the little finger has only one interosseous abductor, which is palmar. These muscles produce abduction and adduction of the fingers, which they can also extend, owing to their connection with the extensor tendons.

INTEROS'SEUS PE'DIS, Métatarso-phalangien-latéral (Ch.). The number, arrangement, shape, and uses of these are the same as in the case of the preceding muscles. Four are dorsal, and three plantar; six belong to the three middle toes, and one to the little toe. The great toe is devoid of them. As in the hand, they are distinguished, in each toe, into abductor and adductor.

INTEROS'SEUS QUAR'TUS, Prior annularis — i. Secundus, Prior medii digiti.

Interosseux de la Main, Interosseous manus.

Interparietal Bone, Os Interparietale. A bone found in the skulls of the children of the Peruvian races. It lies in the situation of the upper angle of the occipital bone, where the parietal bones separate from each other, and is the analogue of the interparietal bone of ruminants and carnivora.

Interpeduncular, Interpeduncularis, (inter, and pedunculi, 'peduncles.') A term applied to that which is placed between the peduncles of the encephalon — as Interpeduncular space; a lozenge-shaped interval behind the diverging peduncles or crura of the cerebrum, in which are found the posterior perforated space, corpora albicantia, tuber cinereum, infundibulum, and pituitary body.

Interpella'tus (Mor'bus), (interpello, — inter, and pello, — 'I interrupt.') A term by which Paracelsus designated those diseases whose progress is unequal, and paroxysms irregular.

Interplèvre - costaux, ('interpleuro-costals,') Intercostal muscles.

Interpola'tus, (interpolare, interpolatum, 'to give a new form to.') Intercalary.

Interrup'tio Menstruatio'nis, Amenorrhœa.

Interscapular, Interscapularis, (F.) Interscapulaire, (inter, and scapula.) That which is between the shoulders, as the interscapular region. The Interscapular cavities, Cavitates scapula'ares, are the depressions between the scapulae and the spinous processes of the vertebrae.

Interscapu'lium. The spine of the scapula.

Intersec'tio, (inter, and seco, sectum, 'I cut.') Decussation, Intersection.

Intersec'tion, Intersec'tio, Diac'opë. The point where two lines meet and cut each other. The name aponeurotic intersection is given to fibrous bands which certain muscles present in their length, and by which they seem interrupted. Aponeurotic intersections are found in the recti muscles of the abdomen, in the semimembranosus, complexus, sterno-thyroideus, &c.

Intersectio'nes Tendin'æ Mus'culorum, Inscriptiones tendinæ musculorum.

Intersepimen'tum Thora'cis, (intersepio, 'I fence about.') Mediastinum.

Intersep'ta Horizonta'lia Pacchio'ni, Tentorium.

Intersep'tum, (inter, and septum, 'a partition.') The uvula. The septum narium. The diaphragm.

INTERSEP'TUM NA'RUM, Septum narium — i. Virginal, Hymen.

Interspin'al, Interspinalis, (inter, and spina, 'the spine,') (F.) Interspinaux. That which is seated between the spinous processes.

INTERSPIN'AL LIG'AMENT, Membrana interspinalis, (F.) Ligament interépineux. These occupy the intervals between the spinous processes in the back and loins. In the neck, they are replaced by the muscles of the same name. They prevent the too great flexion of the spine, and keep the spinous processes in situ. The outermost thickened portions of these are sometimes termed Ligamenta apicum.

Interspina'les Col'li, Spina'les Colli minores, Spina'ti, (F.) Interspinaux-cervicaux, Intercervicaux (Ch.). These are twelve in number, and occupy, in two parallel rows, the intervals between the spinous processes of the cervical vertebrae, from that of the atlas and vertebra dentata, to that between the last cervical and first dorsal vertebra. They are flat, thin, and quadrilateral. These muscles contribute to the extension of the neck and to throwing the head backwards.

INTERSPINA'LES DOR'SI ET LUMBO'RUM. Portions of the Transversaire-épineux of Boyer, and the sacro-spinal of Chaussier. These muscles are of two kinds. The one (Muscle grand épineux du dos of Winslow) representing fleshy bundles of different lengths, applied upon the lateral surfaces of the spinous processes, from the third dorsal vertebra to the second lumbar. The other (Muscle petit épineux du dos, Winslow), covered by the preceding. They are situate on each side of the interspinal ligament, in the form of small, short, flat bundles, which pass from one spinous process to the second, third, or fourth above it. These muscles aid in extending the vertebral column, and incline it a little to one side when they act on one side only.

In'terstice, Interstitium, Aræoma, (inter, and sistere, 'to place,') Diastema, Intervalum. Anatomists have given this name to the intervals between organs. The iliac crest, crista ilii, for example, has two lips and an interstice between them, which affords attachment to the lesser oblique muscle of the abdomen.

In'terstice, Pore.

Interstit'ial, Interstitia'lis, (F.) Interstitiel. Applied to that which occurs in the interstices of an organ,—as 'interstitial absorption,' 'interstitial pregnancy,' &c.

Interstit'ium, Interstice—i. Ciliare, Ciliary ligament—i. Intercoale, Intercostal space—i. Jugulare, Throat.

Intertine'tus, (inter, and tingere, tinctum, 'to dye,') Discrete.

Intertrachéliens, (inter, and τραχηλος, 'the neck,') Intertransversales colli.

Intertransversaire, Intertransversalis—i. des Lombes, Intertransversales lumborum.

Intertransversales Col'li, (F.) Intertransversaires cervicaux, Intertrachéliens, (Ch.) These are small, muscular bundles; quadrilateral; thin and flat; situate, in pairs, in the intervals between the transverse processes of the neck, except between the first and second, where there is only one. They are distinguished into anterior and posterior. The former are six in number; the latter five. These muscles bring the transverse processes of the neck nearer each other, and contribute to the lateral flexion of the neck.

INTERTRANSVERSALIS LUMBORUM, Musculi intertransversarii lumborum, (F.) Intertransversaires des lombes. These are almost entirely fleshy, and ten in number; five on each side. They are similar to the preceding in general arrangement; except that they are more marked, and not placed in two rows. Each intertransverse space contains only one. They are quadrilateral and flat. The first occupies the space between the transverse processes of the first lumbar and the last dorsal vertebra; and the last is between that of the fourth and fifth lumbar vertebrae. These muscles incline the lumbar region laterally; and straighten it when inclined to one side. One set of these muscles, intertransversales mediales seu interaccessorii, passes from the accessory process of one vertebra to the mammillary process of the next.

Intertransversalis, Intertransversarius, (F.) Intertransversaire. That which is placed between the transverse processes of the vertebrae.

Intertri'go, gen. Intertrig'inis, (inter, and terere, 'to rub,') Chafing—i. Podicis, Chafing.

Intertubular Stro'ma, see Kidney—i. Substance, see Tubule, dental.

In'terval, (inter, and vallum, 'a rampart,') Intermision—i. Lucid, see Lucid.

Interval'um, (same etymon.) Intermision, Interstice—i. Intercoale, Intercostal space.

Interven'ium, (inter, and vena, 'a vein,') Mesophlebium.

Intervertebral, Intervertebra'lis, (inter, and vertebra,) That which is situate between the vertebrae.

INTERVERTEBRAL CARTILAGES, Fibrocartilages or discs, Ligamenta intervertebra'lia, Fibro- cartilag'ines intervertebra'les. These organs are of a fibrocartilaginous nature; sections of a cylinder; flexible; whitish; resisting; and situate between the bodies of the vertebrae,—from the space between the second and third as far as that between the last vertebra and sacrum. Their form is accommodated to that of the vertebra with which they are in connection; so that, in the neck and loins, they are oval, while in the dorsal region they are nearly circular.

INTERVERTEBRAL DISCS, Intervertebral cartilages—i. Fibrocartilages, Intervertebral cartilages—i. Ganglion, see Vertebral nerves.

Intesta'bilis, (in, and testis, 'a testicle,') Castatus.

Intestatus, Castratus.

Intestin, Intestine.

Intes'tinal, Intestina'lis, Enter'icus, Enter'ic, (F.) Entérique, (intus, 'within,') That which belongs to the intestines,—as intestinal canal, &c. Borden uses the term Pouls intestinal for a pulse, which he conceived to announce an approaching crisis by the intestines.

INTES'TINAL JUICE, Succus entericus.

INTES'TINAL TUBE OF TRACT, Canalis seu Tractus intestino'rum. The canal formed by the intestines from the pyloric orifice of the stomach to the anus.

Intes'tine, Intesti'num, En'teron, Chor'da, Gut, Nedyi'a (pl.), Pan'tices (pl.), Boel'li (pl.), Bow'el, (F.) Intestin, Boyaux. A musculo-membranous canal, variously convoluted, which extends from the stomach to the anus, and is situate in the abdominal cavity; the greater part of which it fills. In man, its length is six or eight times that of the body. It is divided into two principal portions, called small intestine and large intestine. The former, Intesti'num tenuis, I. gracile seu angustum, Aræ'a, (F.) Intestin grêle, constituting nearly four-fifths of the whole length, begins at the stomach and terminates in the right iliac region. It is divided into duodenum, jejunum, and ileum. Some anatomists give the name small intestine to the last two only; Jejunum seu Intesti'num mesenteriale, which are kept in place by the mesentery, and form a large paquet, occupying the umbilical and hypogastric regions, a part of the flanks, of the iliac regions, and of the cavity of the pelvis. It is composed of, 1. A serous membrane, which is peritoneal. 2. Of a muscular coat, whose fibres are very pale, and are placed, in part, longitudinally; but the greater part transversely. 3. Of a whitish, mucous membrane; villous, and forming folds or valves—valvulae conniventes—at its inner surface, and furnished with a number of mucous follicles, called glands of Lieberkühn, crypts or follicles of Lieberkühn, and in the duodenum with the glands of Brunner. 4. An areolar or submucous coat, of loose texture, supporting the mucous membrane. The arteries of the small intestine proceed from the superior mesenteric; its veins open into the vena porta. Its nerves proceed from the superior mesenteric plexus. The large intestine, Intesti'num crassum seu amplum, Megaloca'lia, (F.) Gros intestin, forms a sequence to the small. It is much shorter, and is solidly attached in the regions of the abdomen which it occupies. It begins in the right iliac region; ascends along the right flank, till beneath the liver, when it crosses the upper part of the abdomen, descends into the left iliac fossa, and plunges into the pelvic cavity, to gain the anus. The great intestine is usually divided into three portions,—the cæcum, colon, and rectum. It receives its arteries from the superior and inferior mesenterics. Its veins open into the vena porta. Its nerves are furnished by the mesenteric plexuses. Its lymphatic vessels, which are much less numerous than those of the small intestine, pass into the ganglions or glands seated between the different reflections of the peritoneum, which fix it to the abdominal parietes. The use of the intestines is,—in the upper part, to effect the chylification of the food and the absorption of the chyle;—in the lower, to serve as a reservoir, where the excrementitious portion of the food collects; and, also, as an excretory duct, which effects its expulsion.

Intestino'rum Læv'itas, Lientery.

Intestin'ula Cer'e'bra, Convolutions (cerebral)—i. Meibomii, Meibomius, glands of.

Intestin'ulum, (dim. of intestinum.) Funiculus umbilicalis.

Intesti'num, Intestine—i. Angustum, see Intestine—i. Cellulatum, Colon—i. Circumvolutum, Ileum—i. Crassum, Colon, see Intestine—i. Gracile, see Intestine—i. Grande, Colon—i. Laxum, Colon—i. Majus, Colon—i. Medium, Mesentery—i. Mesenteriale, see Intestine—i. Perforatum, Enterobrosis—i. Plenum, Colon—i. Rectum, Rectum—i. Tenue, see Intestine.

In'tima (Tu'nica) Vaso'rum. The innermost coat of the bloodvessels, developed on the inner surface of the membrane—capillary membrane—forming the wall of the capillaries.

In'timum Un'guis, (intimus, 'inmost,') Nail, root of the.

Intona'tio Intestina'lis, (intonare, intonatum, 'to make a noise,') Borborygmus.

Intor'sio, (in, and torquere, torsum, 'to wrench,') Distortion.

Intoxica'tio, (in, and τοξικον, 'a poison,') Poisoning—i. Arsenicalis, Arsenicismus—i. Opiaca, Meconismus—i. Saturnina, Saturnismus.

Intoxication, Poisoning, Temulence—i. Alcoholic, chronic, see Temulence—i. Antimonialis, Stibialism—i. Digitalique, see Digitalis—i. des Marais, see Miasm.

Intoxication Saturnine. Lead poisoning; saturnine cachexy. The aggregate of symptoms which present themselves prior to an attack of lead colic.

In'tra (L.), Intro, in composition, within.

Intra-artic'ular, Intra-articula'ris, (intra, 'within,' and articulus, 'a joint,') Relating or appertaining to the interior of a joint; as intra-articular suppuration.

Intra-cystic, (intra, and cyst.) Growths are so called, which take their origin from the interior of cysts; as in serocystic sarcoma.

Intralin'gual Sal'ivary Glands, see Lingual glands, and Salivary glands.

Intralob'ular, Intralobula'ris, (F.) Intralobulaire, Intralobulinaire, (intra, and lobulus, 'a lobule,') Relating to the space within a lobule; as the 'interlobular veins,' venæ seu venulæ intralobula'res seu centra'les of the liver—veins which communicate with the intralobular veins, and are the radicles of the hepatic veins.

Intrameninge'al, Intrameninge'alis, (intra, and meninges.) Relating or appertaining to that which is within the meninges—of the brain, for example—as intrameningeal apoplexy.

Intramur'al, Intramura'lis, (intra, 'within,' and murus, 'a wall,') Situated between the walls of an organ. See Pregnancy, interstitial.

Intraoc'ular, Intraocula'ris, (from intra, and oculus, 'the eye,') Relating or appertaining to that which is within the eye.

Intrapari'etal, Intraparieta'lis, (intra, and paries, gen. parietis.) Relating or appertaining to that which is in the walls of any organ or growth.

Intra-pelvis-trochantérien, (intra, pelvis, and trochanter.) Obturator internus.

Intrau'terine, Intrauteri'nus, (intra, and uterus.) That which takes place within the womb—as intrauterine life.

Intravag'inal, Intravagina'lis, (intra, and vagina.) Relating or appertaining to the interior of the vagina.

Intravasa'tion, Intravasa'tio, (intra, and vas, 'a vessel,') The entrance into vessels of matters formed outside of them or in their parietes.

Intricatu'ra, (in, and tricolor, tricus, 'to make difficulties,') Decussation.

Intrin'sic, Intrin'secus, (F.) Intrin'sèque, (intra, and secus, 'towards,') Applied to the internal muscles of certain organs; as to those of the ear, tongue, and larynx. Linnæus gave the name Intrin'seci to internal diseases.

In'tro (L.), in composition, see Intra.

Intro'itus (gen. Introitus) Pel'vis, (intro, and ire, itum, 'to go,') see Pelvis—i. Vaginæ, Rima vulvæ, see Vagina.

Intromis'sion, Intromis'sio, (intro, and mittere, missum, 'to send,') The act of introducing one body into another; as Intromis'sio Pe'n'is, (F.) Intromission de la Vergé.

Intropelvim'eter, (F.) Intropelvimètre. An instrument, proposed by Madame Boivin, to measure the diameters of the pelvis. It differs from the pelvimeter of Contouly, in one of its branches being intended to be introduced into the rectum.

Introsuscep'tio, (intro, and suscipio, susceptum, 'I receive,') Intussusceptio—i. Entropium, Entropion.

In'tubum, (εντυβον.) Cichorium endivia—i. Eraticum, Cichorium intybus.

Intumes'cence, Intumescen'tia, Onco'sis, Dionco'sis, (intumescere,—in, and tumescere,—'to swell,') Augmentation of size in a part or in the whole of the body. Sauvages uses the word Intumescen'tiæ for an order of diseases, in which he comprehends polysarcia, pneumatosis, anasarca, oedema, physconia, and pregnancy.

Intumescen'tia, Intumescence—i. Gangliformis, Ganglion of Gasser, see Facial nerve—i. Lactea mammarum, Sparganosis—i. Lienis, Splenoncus—i. Semilunaris, Ganglion of Gasser.

In'tus Inver'sus, (intus, 'within,' and inver'sus, 'inverted,') Transposition of the viscera.

Intussuscep'tio, (intus, 'within,' and suscipio, susceptum, 'I receive,') Intussusceptio. In physiology—the mode of increase peculiar to organized bodies. In pathology, like Convolutus, Volvulus seu Suscep'tio seu Parisago'gê intestino'rum, Chordap'sus, Enteroparisago'gê, Indigita'tio, Tormentum, and Invagina'tio, it means the introduction of one part of the intestinal canal—intussusceptum—into another, which serves it as a sort of vagina or sheath. Generally, it is the upper part of the small intestine which is received into the lower—intussuscip'iens—when the intussusception is said to be progre'ssive. At times, however, it is retrograde. As the disease cannot be positively detected by the symptoms, it must be treated upon general principles. At times the invaginated portion has separated and been voided per anum,—the patient recovering. The disease is, however, of a very dangerous character.

Intussusceptum, see Intussusceptio.

Intussuscip'iens, see Intussusceptio.

In'tybum, Cichorium endivia.

In'tybus Horten'sis, Cichorium endivia.

IN'ULA DYSENTERICA. The systematic name of the Les'ser Inula, I. Britan'nica seu Conyzæa, As'ter dysenter'icus seu undula'tus, Publica'ria dysenter'ica, Conyzæa, C. media, Ar'nica Sueden'sis seu spu'ria, Cuni'la mas'cula seu me'dia, Cuni'la'go, (Prov.) Marc's fat, (F.) Aunée ou Aunée antidysentérique, Herbe de Saint Roch. Nat. Ord. Compositæ. This plant was once considered to possess great antidysenteric virtues. The whole plant is acrid and somewhat aromatic.

IN'ULA HELEN'IUM. The systematic name of the El'ecampane, En'ula, E. camp'na, Elen'ium, Necta'rium, Helen'ium, As'ter helen'ium seu offici-nalis, Corvisar'tia helen'ium, Common In'ula, (F.) Aunée ou Aulnée, Aunée ou Aulnée officinale. The root In'ula (Ph. U. S.) was formerly in high esteem in dyspepsia, cachexia, pulmonary affections, &c. It is now scarcely used.

IN'ULA, LES'SER, Inula dysenterica—i. Squarrosa, Conyza squarrosa.

Inunc'tio, (inungere, inunctum,—in, and ungere, unctum, 'to anoint,') Inunction, Liniment.

Inunc'tion, Inunc'tio, Perunc'tio, Illit'io, Il-litus, Illinit'io, Oblinit'io, Chri'sis, Catach'risis, Diach'risis, Epich'risis, Unc'tio. The act of rubbing in an ointment or a liniment, Unc'tion, Infric'tion, (F.) Oncion, Inunction. Inunction of the whole body with a piece of bacon, lard, or with oil, has been recommended in scarlatina, measles, and in serofulous or tuberculous cachexia.

Inunda'tio, (inundare, inundatum,—in, and undare,—'to flow over,') Depuration.

Inus'tio, (in, and urere, ustum, 'to burn,') Cauterization, Cauterium.

Inusto'rium, Cauterium.

Invag'inated, Invagina'tus, (in, and vagina, 'a sheath,') Applied to a part which is received into another, as into a sheath.

The invaginated or slit and tail bandage is one in which strips or tails pass through appropriate slits or button-holes.

Invaginateur. An instrument devised for the radical cure of hernia by invagination. See Invagination.

Invagina'tio, Invagination, Intussusceptio.

Invagina'tion, Invagina'tio, Encoleo'sis. Intussusceptio. Also, an operation which consists in introducing one end of a divided intestine into the other, with the view of restoring the continuity of the intestinal canal.

The name Invagination is likewise given to an operation for the radical cure of crural hernia, which consists in introducing into the crural canal a thick tent of charpie, the effect of which is, by compression and adhesive inflammation, to obliterate the neck of the hernial sac.

Invalidu'do, (in, and valetudo, 'health,') Infirmary.

Invalid', (in, and validus, 'strong,') Valetudinary.

Invalid'ing, (F.) Réforme. The removal from the army of a soldier who has become, from infirmity, unfit for service. Such was the meaning of the term in the service generally; but an Invalid Corps was established in the United States, to which lighter and special duties were assigned, in hospitals and elsewhere.

Invalidus, Valetudinary.

Inva'sio, (in, and vadere, vasum, 'to go,') Arche, Attack, Paroxysm.

Invermina'tion, (in, and verminare, verminatum, 'to have worms,') vermes,) Helminthiasis.

Inver'sio Palpebra'rum, (in, and vertere, versum, 'to turn,') Entropion—i. Uteri, Hysterop-tosis, Uterus, inversion of the.

Inver'sion du Lambeau, see Flap—i. de la Matrice, Uterus, inversion of the.

Inverten'tia, Absorbents, Antacids.

Investitu'ra Funic'uli Umbilica'lis, (in, and vestis, 'a garment,') see Funiculus umbilicalis.

Invetera'tus, (in, and vetus, gen. veteris, 'old,') Chronic.

Inviscan'tia, (in, and viscum, 'bird lime,') In-crassantia.

Invisca'tio Oc'uli. A morbid adhesion of the eyelids to each other, or to the globe of the eye. Also, gluing together of the eyelids by a viscid secretion.

Involontaire, Involuntary.

Involu'crum, Involumentum, (involvere,—in, and volvere, volutum,—'to fold in,') A covering:

hence Involu'cra cer'ebri, the membranes of the brain; Involu'cra nervo'rum, the sheaths of the nerves.

INVOLU'CRUM COR'DIS, Pericardium—i. Corporis commune, Integument—i. Linguae, see Tongue—i. Membranaceum, Decidua reflexa—i. Nervo-rum, Neurilemma—i. Reti comparatum, Retina.

Involumen'tum, Involucrum.

Invol'untary, Involuntarius, (F.) Involontaire, (in, and voluntas, 'will,') Not under the influence of the will, as unconscious or involuntary move-ments, (F.) Mouvements inconscients ou involon-taires.

Involven'tia, Demulcents.

I'odal. A substance prepared by treating iodi-ne with a mixture of alcohol and nitric acid. It has been used as an anæsthetic.

I'odated, Iodized—i. Milk, see Milk.

Iode, (iōds, 'violet colored,') Iodine.

Iodé, Iodized.

Io'des, (ios, 'verdigris,') Æruginous.

Iode'tum Hydrargyr'icum, Hydrargyri iodi-dum rubrum.

Iodhydrargyrite de Chlorure Mercureux, Mercury, iodide of chloride of.

Iod'ic or I'odic, Iod'icus, (F.) Iodique. Con-taining iodine.

I'odide, Iō'didum, Iōdure'tum, I'odure, (F.) Iodure. A saline combination of iodine with a simple body other than oxygen.

Io'didum, Iodide—i. Hydrargyri chloridi, Mer-cury, iodide of chloride of—i. Hydrargyricum, Hydrargyri iodidum rubrum—i. Hydrargyrosus, Hydrargyri iodidum.

I'odine, Io'dina, Io'dinum (Ph. U. S., 1842), Iodin'ium (Ph. U. S., 1873), Iodin'eum, Io'dum (Ph. B., 1867), Io'dium, Io'nium, Io'num, (F.) Iode, (iōds, viola'ceus, 'of a violet color,') so called from the violet vapor it exhales when volatilized.) It is contained in the mother waters of certain fuci, and is obtained by pouring an excess of concentrated sulphuric acid on the water obtained by burning different fuci, lixiv-iating the ashes and concentrating the liquor. The mixture is placed in a retort to which a re-ceiver is attached, and is boiled. The iodine passes over and is condensed. It is solid, in the form of plates; of a bluish gray color, of a me-tallic brightness, and smell similar to that of the chloride of sulphur. Its s. g. is 4.946. When heated, it becomes volatilized, and affords the va-por which characterizes it. With oxygen it forms Iod'ic acid, and with hydrogen Hydriod'ic acid. The tincture of iodine and the iodides have been employed with great success in the treatment of goitre and of some serofulous affec-tions. It must be administered in a very small dose and for a long period. It is said to be apt, however, to induce cholera morbus, signs of great nervous irritability, Iodom'ethē, (F.) Iversee io-dique, and emaciation of the mammae. When these symptoms, collectively termed Iodism, Io-do'sis, and Iodin'ia, (F.) Cachexie iodée, are urgent, the dose may be diminished, or it may be wholly discontinued, and afterwards resumed. When exposed to the air in a room, it has been found an effective antiseptic.

Various preparations of iodine are employed in medicine. (See Lugol.)

Iodine paint is a tincture twice as strong as the official tincture, which is applied in cases where a more active counter-irritation is needed. The British Pharmacopœia contains an iodine lini-ment.

The solution of iodine and iodide of potassium in glycerine forms iodized glycerine, a caustic application in lupus, ulcers, &c. See Bath, iodine, and Alimentation, iodic.

Iodique, Iodic.

I'odism, see Iodine.

Io'dium, Iodine.

I'odized, I'odined, I'odated, Ioda'tus, Iodisa'tus, (F.) Iodé. Impregnated or affected with iodine or its preparations, as iodized oil, i. camphor, &c.

I'ODIZED GLYC'ERINE, see Iodine.

I'ODIZED HY'DRIDE. A solution of iodine in amyl hydride, gr. xx. to (3). When applied to the skin, the latter vaporizes, leaving the iodine equally distributed on the surface. It is employed in open scrofulous sores, chronic indolent bubo, fetid ulcerations, &c. It is also a deodorizer, and a convenient method of administering iodine by inhalation.

I'odoform, Iodoformum (Ph. U. S., 1873), Teri'odide of For'myl, formerly called Sesquiodide of Car'bon, (F.) Iodure de formyle, Iodoforme, (so called from its analogy to chloroform). Obtained by adding to an alcoholic solution of iodide of potassium, chlorinated lime, the resulting iodate of lime being separated from the iodoform by the addition of boiling alcohol. Besides the medical properties of iodine, which render it useful in scrofula, syphilis, &c., anodyne and anæsthetic effects have been ascribed to it. It is also used externally in the form of ointment. It is in crystalline plates, of a beautiful citrine color; and may be given in the same cases as iodine and the iodides. Dose, one grain, three times a day. See Carbonis sesquiodidum.

I'odognosie, Iodognosis.

I'odogno'sis, (F.) Iodognosie, (iodum, and γνῶσις, 'knowledge.') A knowledge of iodine in its various relations.

I'odohydrar'gyrate of Potas'sium, see Iodine.

Iodom'ethê, (iodine, and μεθῆ, 'drunkenness.') See Iodine.

Iodope'gæ, (iodum, and πηγή, 'a spring.') Mineral waters containing iodine.

I'odophthisie, (iodum, and φθίσις, 'phthisis.') Loss of flesh and strength produced by iodine.

Iodo'sis, see Iodine.

I'odoquinia, Sul'phate of, Quinia, iodide of Sulphate of.

I'odotan'nin. A solution of iodine in water, with the assistance of tannic acid, has been used internally and externally.

Ip'ecac, Apocynum androsæmifolium, Euphorbia corollata, Gillenia trifoliata, Ipecacuanha, Triosteum — i. American, Apocynum androsæmifolium — i. Wild, Euphorbia ipecacuanha.

Ipecacuan'ha. In common parlance, often abridged to Ipecac, and in Ireland to Hip'po. The pharmacopœial name of the root of Cephaël's seu Callicoc'ca ipecacuan'ha, Ipecacuan'ha, Ipecac'uan, Cagosanga, Hypoucan'na, Hippoucan'na, (F.) Ipecacuanha annelée, Nat. Ord. Cinchonaceæ. It is also obtained from the Psychotria emet'ica of Peru. The odor of the root, Ipecacuan'ha root, Ipecacuan'hae radix, Radix Brazilien'sis, Ipecacuanha (Ph. U. S.), (F.) Racine Brésilienne ou de Brésil ou antidysentérique, is faint and peculiar; taste bitter, subacid, and mucilaginous: both water and alcohol extract its virtues, which depend on a peculiar principle, called Emet'ia. It is emetic in large doses; sudorific in smaller. Dose, as an emetic, gr. xx. to xxx., — alone, or united with gr. i. to ij. of tartarized antimony.

IPECACUAN'HA, Euphorbia corollata, Pedilanthus tithymaloides — i. Annelée, Ipecacuanha — i. Bastard, Asclepias curassavica, Triosteum perfoliatum — i. Blanc de l'Île de France, Tylophora asthmatica — i. Blanc de St. Domingue, Asclepias curassavica — i. of the Isle of France, Tylophora asthmatica.

IPECACUAN'HA, WHITE, is obtained from different species of Richardsonia and Ionid'ium. Viola ipecacuan'ha seu Sol'lea ipecacuan'ha seu Pomba'lea ipecacuan'ha also affords it. It is weaker than the gray.

IPOMœ'A TURPE'THUM, Convolvulus turpethum.

Ir, as a prefix, has the signification of Im.

I'ra, Rage.

Iracun'dus, (from ira,) Rectus externus oculi.

Iral'gia, Ireal'gia, Iridal'gia, (iris, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the iris.

I'rascible, (ira, 'anger,') Rectus externus oculi.

Ireal'gia, Iralgia.

Ireon'cion, (iris, and ογκος, 'a hook,') Iriancistron.

I'rian, Iria'nus, (F.) Irien. Belonging or relating to the iris.

Iriancis'tron, Iridancis'tron, Ireon'cion, (iris, and αγκιστρον, 'a hook,') A hooked instrument, used by Schlagintweit in the formation of an artificial pupil.

Iridæ'a Edu'lis. One of the Algæ, eaten in Scotland and the southwest of England.

Iridal'gia, (irido, and αλγος, 'pain,') Iralgia.

Iridancis'tron, Iriancistron.

Iridareo'sis, (irido, and απαυσις, 'diminution,') Atrophy of the iris.

Iridauxe'sis, (irido, and αυξησις, 'augmentation,') Staphylo'ma Pridis, S. U'cæ, Prolapse' of the P'ris, Iridonco'sis, Lymphon'cus P'ridis. Exudation of fibrin into the tissue of the iris.

Iridectomedial'ysis, (irido, εκτομή, 'excision,' and διάλυσις, 'separation,') see Coretomia.

Iridectom'ia, (irido, and εκτομη, 'excision,') see Coretomy.

Iridec'tomy, (iris, and εκτομη, 'cutting out,') Coretomy.

Iridenklei'sis. Same etymon as Iridencleisis. See Coretomy.

Iridere'mia, (irido, and ερημος, 'deprived of,') Iridostere'sis. Absence of iris, either apparent or real.

Irid'esis, Iridode'sis, Ligature of the Iris, (iris, and δεω, 'I bind,') An operation for artificial pupil, which consists in opening the cornea so as to admit the canula forceps, and, by it, drawing out a portion of the iris near its ciliary attachment, and strangulating a piece of it by means of a thread of moistened silk.

Iridi'tis, gen. Iridi'tidis, (irido, and itis,) Iritis.

I'rido, (from ιρις, gen. ιριδος,) in composition, iris. Iridoce'lē, (irido, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Ptoxis iridis.

Iridochoro'idit'is (F.) Iridochoro'idite, (irido, and choro'iditis,) Inflammation of the iris and choroid, commencing with the iris, and secondarily affecting the choroid. When the primary disease is in the choroid, it is termed choro'id-iritis.

Iridocolobo'ma, gen. Iridocolobo'matis, Coloboma iridis.

Iridocycli'tis, (irido, and cyclitis,) Inflammation of the iris and ciliary circle.

Iridode'sis, Iridesis.

Iridodial'ysis, (irido, and διαλυσις, 'separation,') Coretomy.

Iridodone'sis, (irido, and δονω, 'I shake,') Tremulousness of the iris. See Hippus.

Iridomala'cia, (irido, and μαλακία, 'softness,') Mollescence or softening of the iris.

Iridomelano'ma, gen. Iridomelano'matis, Iridomelano'sis, (irido, and μελανειν, 'to color black,') The deposition of black matter on the tissue of the iris.

Iridonco'sis, Iridon'cus, Ironco'sis, Hyperonco'sis I'ridis, (irido, and ογκος, 'a swelling,') Tumefaction or thickening of the iris. Also Iridauxesis.

Iridon'cus, Iridoncosis.

Iridoperiphaci'tis, gen. Iridoperiphaci'tidis, Iridoperiphaki'tis, (irido, περι, 'around, and φαιτις, inflammation of the lens,') Inflammation of the anterior hemisphere of the capsule of the lens.

Iridopla'nia, (irido, and πλανη, 'wandering,') Hippus.

Iridopto'sis, Ptoxis iridis.

Iridor'rhagas, gen. Iridor'rhagadis, Iridor'rhogē, Iridor'rhox, Iridoschis'ma, Fissu'ra i'ridis, (irido, and ρῥαγας, 'a fissure,') Fissure of the iris. See Coloboma.

Iridor'rhogē, (irido, and ρῥαγῆ, 'a fissure,') Iridor'rhagas.

Iridor'rhox, gen. Iridor'rhogis, (irido, and ρῥωξ, 'a fissure,') Iridor'rhagas.

Iridoschis'ma, gen. Iridoschism'atis, (irido, and σχισμα, 'a fissure,') Coloboma iridis, Iridor'rhagas.

Iridostere'sis, (irido, and στερησις, 'privation,') Irideremia.

Iridotomencleis'is, (irido, τομη, 'section, and εγκλειω, 'I include,') Coretomy.

Iridotomedial'ysis, (irido, τομη, 'section, and διαλυσις, 'separation,') see Coretomy.

Iridotom'ia, (irido, and τομη, 'section,') see Coretomy.

Iridot'romus, (irido, and τρομος, 'trembling,') Hippus.

Irien, Irian.

I'ris, gen. I'ridis, (ιρις, gen. ιριδος,) Gram'mē.

So called from its resembling the rainbow in a variety of colors. A membrane stretched vertically at the anterior part of the eye, in the midst of the aqueous humor, in which it forms a kind of circular, flat partition, separating the anterior from the posterior chamber. It is perforated by a circular opening called the pupil, which is constantly varying its dimensions, owing to the varying contractions of the fibres of the iris. Its posterior surface has been called urea, from the thick black varnish which covers it. The pigmentary stratum, on its free surface, appears to be bounded by a delicate, but sharply defined, line, which has been described as a special membrane—Membrana pigmenti seu lim'itans seu lim'itans Paci'ni seu Jaco'bi Arnold seu Zin'ni. The greater circumference of the iris is adherent to the ciliary processes and circle. It has an external plane of radiated fibres, Dilata'tor i'ridis, and an internal one of circular fibres, Sphinc'ter pupil'læ seu i'ridis, which serve—the one to dilate, the other to contract the aperture of the pupil. The iris receives the ciliary nerves. Its arteries are furnished by the long ciliary arteries, which form two circles by their anastomoses—the one very broad, near the great circumference; the other, smaller, and seated around the circumference of the pupil. The veins of the iris empty themselves into the Vasa vorticosa, and into the long ciliary veins. The use of the iris seems to be,—to regulate by its dilatation or contraction, the quantity of luminous rays necessary for distinct vision. The different colors of the iris occasion the variety in the colors of the human eye. See Membrana pupillaris.

IRIS FLORENTI'NA, Flor'entine i'ris or or'ris, (F.) I'ris de Florence. Order, Iridacea. The rhizoma of this plant is extremely acrid in its recent state; and, when chewed, excites a pungent heat in the mouth, that continues for several hours. When dried, the acrimony is lost, or nearly so, and the smell is very agreeable. It is indebted to its agreeable flavor for its retention in the pharmacopœias, although it is ranked as an expectorant. The orris root of the shops is said to consist of the rhizomes of three species—I. Florenti'na, I. pallida, and I. Germanica.

IRIS FETIDIS'SIMA, I. fœ'tida, Spath'ulæ fœ'tida, Xy'ris, Stink'ing i'ris, (F.) Iris puau, Glazeul puant. The root has been esteemed antispasmodic and narcotic.

IRIS GERMANICA. The systematic name of the Flower-de-Luce, I'ris nos'tras seu vulga'ris, Aier'ra, Com'mon i'ris or or'ris, Gladi'olus cornu'leus, (F.) Iris commun, Flambe. The fresh roots have a disagreeable smell, and an acrid, nauseous taste. They are powerfully cathartic, and are given in dropsies where such remedies are indicated.

IRIS HEXAGONA, I. versicolor—i. Inflammation of, Iritis.

IRIS LACUS'TRIS, Dwarf flag, Dwarf lake iris; has the properties of I. versicolor.

The root has an acrid, styptic taste. It is an errhine, sialagogue, and acrid astringent.

The expressed juice is diuretic, and said to be a useful application to seriginous and other cutaneous affections. Rubbed on the gums or chewed, it is said to cure toothache.

Iris Puant, I. foetidissima—i. Staphyloma of, Iridaurexis—i. Stinking, I. foetidissima—i. Tremulous, see Hippus.

IRIS VERSICOLOR, I. hexagona, Blue Flag. The rhizoma of this is an active cathartic, and has been much used, as such, by the American Indians. It is reputed to be diuretic.

IRIS VIRGINICA, Slender Blue Flag; and Iris Versina, are said to have virtues like those of I. versicolor.

IRIS VULGARIS, I. Germanica.

Iris'itis, Iritis.

Iris'itis, Inflammation of the iris, Inflammation of the iris, Iris'itis, Iriditis, (iris, and itis.) Uveitis of some. The chief symptoms are:—change in the color of the iris; fibres less movable; tooth-like processes shooting into the pupil; pupil irregularly contracted, with the ordinary signs of inflammation of the eye. If the inflammation does not yield, suppuration takes place; and although the matter may be absorbed, the iris remains immovable. When the iritis results from syphilis, gonorrhoea, rheumatism, gout, or scrofula, it requires specific treatment, according to its cause. The general principles of treatment are, to deplete largely and exhibit mercury freely; along with attention to other means advisable in ophthalmia. The free use of quinia is sometimes serviceable. When the inflammation is seated in the serous covering of the iris, it is termed Iritis serosa. When the iritis is marked by a tendency to new formation, which may become developed into a pseudo-membrane, it is called plastic iritis.

IRON WEED, Vernonia noveboracensis—i. Wire, Ferri filum—i. Wood, Carpinus betulus.

Ironco'sis, Iridonecrosis.

Irradia'tion, Irradia'tio, (ir, and radius, 'a ray.') Shooting or proceeding from a centre—as an 'irradiating pain.'

Irredu'cible, (F.) Irreductible. An epithet given to fractures, luxations, herniæ, &c., when they cannot be reduced.

Irreductible, Irreducible.

Irreg'ular, Irregula'ris, Anom'alous, (ir, and regula, 'a rule.') A term chiefly applied to the types of a disease; and, also, to the pulse when its beats are separated by unequal intervals.

IRREG'ULAR PRACTIT'IONER. One who does not practise his profession according to rules sanctioned by law or custom. An empiric or quack. Of irregular practitioners there are numerous varieties. A Canadian medical journal enumerates as existing there in 1867, "Thomsonians, Steamdoctors, Bonesetters, Eclectics, Homœopaths, Tumbleties, Electricians, Vacuo Vacuas (a novel genus), Phrenological itinerant lecturers, and every shade and degree of wonder-monger, all clamoring for public favor and public support."

Irreme'diable, Incurable.

Irrep'tio, (ir, and repo, reptum, 'I creep,') Attack.

Irriga'tion, Irriga'tio, Embroca'tio, Irroratio: 'the act of watering or moistening,' (ir, and rigare, rigatum, 'to water.') The methodical application of water to an affected part, to keep it constantly wet.

Irritabil'itas, (irritare, 'to excite,') Irritability—i. Halleriana, Irritability—i. Morbosa, see Sub-sultus tendinum—i. Vesicæ, Cysterethismus.

Irritabil'ity, Irritabil'itas, Vis irritabil'itatis, V. Vitæ, V. insita of Haller, V. vitæ of Gorter, Oscilla'tio of Boerhaave, Ton'ic pow'er of Stahl, Vita pro'pria, Irritabilitas Halleriana, Inhe'rent pow'er, Contractil'ity, Excitabil'ity, &c., (F.) Irritabilité, I. Hallérienne. A power, possessed by all living, organized bodies of being acted upon by certain stimuli, and of moving responsive to such stimuli. It is the ultimate vital property. See Contractility.

Ir'ritable, Irritabil'is, (irritare, 'to excite,' and habilis, 'capable.') That which is endowed with irritability. Every living organized tissue is irritable; that is, capable of feeling an appropriate stimulus, and of moving responsive to such stimulus. Irritable is often used in the same sense as impressible, as when we speak of an irritable person, or habit, or temper. This last condition has been variously termed—Debil'itas nervo'sa, D. erethis'ica, Hypercine'sia nervo'sa, Neurastheni'a, Neurostheni'a, Sensibil'itas anom'ala, S. morbo'sa, S. anc'ta.

Irrita'men, gen. Irritam'inis, Irritant, Stimulus.

Irritamen'tum, Erethism, Irritant, Stimulus—i. Metallicum, Galvanism.

Irritant, Irritans, Irrita'men, Irritamen'tum. That which causes irritation or pain, heat and tension; either mechanically, as puncture, acupuncture, or scarification; chemically, as the alkalies and acids; or in a specific manner, as cantharides.

Irritants—Irritan'tia, Excitan'tia—are of great use in the treatment of disease.

Irritated, see Inflamed.

Irritating Poison, see Poison.

Irrita'tio, Erethism, Gargale, Irritation.

Irrita'tion, Irrita'tio, Erethis'mus. The state of a tissue or organ, in which there is excess of vital movement; commonly manifested by increase of the circulation and sensibility. Broussais defines irritation to be:—the condition of an organ, the excitation of which is carried to so high a degree, that the equilibrium resulting from the balance of all the functions is broken. In this signification, he also uses the word surirritation, which he considers as a higher degree, and as the essential cause of fever. Irritation is the common precursor of inflammation.

IRRITA'TION, MOR'BID, Constitutional irritation, Irritative fever, Pseudofever, is that excitement which occurs after injuries done to the body, or to any part thereof;—constituting cases of diseased sympathy.

Irritative Fe'ver, Irritation, morbid.

Irrora'tio, (ir, and ros, gen. roris, 'dew,') Irrigation.

Is, (is, gen. is,) Fibre.

Isadelphi'a, (isos, 'equal,' and adelphos, 'brother,') A double monstrosity, in which both bodies are equally and perfectly developed, and possessed of independent vital organs; and which are united by parts of little significance.

Isatis Tincto'ria, (isatis,) Woad, Pas'tel. Ord. Capparidaceæ. A European plant, whose leaves have a fugitive pungent smell, and an acrid durable taste. They are not used, however, in medicine at the present day, but are the source of the dye-stuff, woad.

Is'ca, (ischa,) Boletus igniarius.

Ischæ'mia, (ischo, and haima, 'blood,') Morbid retention or suppression of an habitual flux of blood, as of the hemorrhoidal or menstrual flux or of epistaxis. See Hæmatostatica. Also local arterial anæmia, in which the blood is prevented from flowing into the parts for which it is destined. (Virchow.) Cerebral Ischæ'mia, (F.) Ischémie Cérébrale, for example, is produced in the nervous tissue of the brain by obliteration or obstruction of the arteries of the encephalon.

ISCHÆ'MIA, CEREBRAL, see Ischæmia.

ISCHÆ'MIA OF THE OP'TIC DISCS, I. retinae.

ISCHÆ'MIA RET'INÆ. A rare affection in which the retina is extremely anæmic, with sudden and complete blindness of both eyes. Ischæ'mia of the Op'tic Discs.

Ischæ'mon, Ischæ'mum. A medicine which restrains or stops bleeding.

Is'chas, gen. Isch'adis, (ischas, gen. ischaōs, 'a dried fig,') see Ficus.

Ischémie, Ischæmia—i. Cérébrale, see Ischæmia.

Is'chesis, (from ισχω, 'I restrain,') Suppression or retention of a discharge or secretion.

Is'chia, Min'eral Wa'ters of. In this volcanic isle, five miles from Naples, there are several thermal waters, one of which, that of Gurgitello—raises the thermometer of Fahr. to 167°.

Ischi'acus, (ισχιακος,) Ischiatic.

Ischiadel'phus, (ischion, and adelphos, 'a brother,') Ischiopages.

Ischiad'icus Mor'bus, (from ischias,) Neuralgia femoro-poplitea—i. Nervus Sciatic nerve.

Ischiadoce'lè, Ischiocele.

Ischi'agra or Ischia'gra, Is'chias, Ischal'gia, (ischion, and αγρα, 'a seizure,') A name given to ischiatic gout. Fem'oro-poplite'al neural'gia has, also, been so called.

Is'chial, Ischia'lis. Relating or belonging to the ischion.

Ischial'gia, (ischion, and αλγος, 'pain,') Ischi-agra, Neuralgia femoro-poplitea.

Is'chias, gen. Ischi'adis, (ισχιας, gen. ισχιαōs,) Ischiagra—i. Nervosa antica, Neuralgia femoro-prætibialis—i. Nervosa Cotunnii, Neuralgia femoro-poplitea—i. Nervosa digitalis, Neuralgia cubito-digitalis—i. Nervosa postica, Neuralgia femoro-poplitea—i. Rheumatica, Neuralgia femoro-poplitea—i. à Sparganosi, Phlegmatia dolens.

Ischiat'ic, Ischiad'ic, Ischiat'icus, Ischiad'icus, Ischi'acus, Sciat'ic, (F.) Ischiatique, (from ischion,) whence the word Sciat'ic. An epithet given to parts connected with the ischium. The Sciat'ic Notch'es, (F.) Échancrures ischiatiques, are formed by this bone; the Ischiat'ic Spine belongs to it, and gives attachment to the small sacro-sciatic ligament. The Tuberosity of the Is'chium, Os sedenta'rium, Tu'ber Is'chii, (F.) Tubérosité sciaticque, is formed by it. It receives the insertions of different muscles of the thigh, and forms the projection on which the body rests when seated.

ISCHIAT'IC AR'TERY, Sciat'ic Ar'tery, (F.) Ar'tère Femoro-poplitée (Ch.), arises singly from the hypogastric or with the gluteal, and seems to be really a continuation of the trunk of the hypogastric. It issues from the pelvis at the lower part of the great sciatic notch, and afterwards divides into a considerable number of branches, which are distributed particularly to the posterior and superior region of the thigh.

ISCHIAT'IC RE'GION, Sciat'ic region, Re'gio ischiad'ica. The region of the hip.

ISCHIAT'IC VEIN presents the same arrangement as the artery.

Ischiat'icus, (ισχιαϊκος, from ischias,) Sciatic.

Ischiatoce'lè, Ischiocele.

Ischidro'sis, Sudo'ris suppressio, Oligid'ria, (ischio, and ιδρωσ, 'sweat,') Suppression of perspiration.

Ischiocaverno'sus. Belonging to the ischium and corpus cavernosum.

ISCHIOCAVERNO'SUS (MUS'CLE), Collatera'lis, Director seu Erector seu Sustenta'tor Pe'nis, (F.) Erecteur du Pénis, Ischio-uréthral (Ch.), is a small, long, flat muscle which surrounds the origin of the corpus cavernosum. It is fixed below to the inner side of the tuberosity of the ischium, and above to the root of the penis, where it is confounded with the fibrous membrane of the corpus cavernosum. It draws the root of the penis downward and backward.

ISCHIOCAVERNO'SUS of the female, Erector seu Sustenta'tor seu Superior rotundus clitor'idis, (F.) Ischio-clitoridien, Ischio-sous-clitorien (Ch.), is arranged nearly as in the male, but is less bulky. It arises, by aponeurosis, from the tuberosity of the ischium, and terminates by embracing the corpus cavernosum of the clitoris, to the erection of which it appears to contribute. It is the Depres'sor clitor'idis of Meckel.

Ischiocele, Ischiatocele, Ischiadocele, Her'nia ischia'tica seu Ischiad'ica seu Ischyad'ica, (ischion, and κηλη, 'tumor,') Ischiat'ic or Sciatic hernia, Ischiocele. One in which the viscera issue by the great sciatic notch. It is a rare disease. The protruded parts must be reduced—the patient being placed in a favorable position—and then must be retained by a bandage.

Ischioclit'orian Ar'tery of Chaussier is a division of the internal pudic which furnishes the two arteries of the clitoris—the superficial and deep-seated.

ISCHIOCLITO'RIAN NERVE, of the same professor, is the superior branch of the pudic nerve, which is distributed to the clitoris.

Ischioclit'orianus. That which is connected with the ischium and clitoris.

Ischio-clit'oriden, Ischiocavernosus—i. Coccygeus, Coccygeus—i. Créti-tibial, Semitendinosus—i. Femoralis, Adductor magnus—i. Fémoropéronier, Biceps flexor cruris.

Ischiodymia, (ischion, and δυειν, 'to mingle,' or δίδυμος, 'a twin,') See Somatodymia.

Is'chion, (ισχιον,) Is'chium, Os is'chii, Os coxendicis, Huck'lebone, Seat'bone, (Sc.) Heuckbane, Hukebane, Lunyebane, (Prov.) Chancebone, Pinbone, (F.) Os de l'assiette, (from ισχυω, 'I support,' or from ισχω, 'I arrest,' 'I retain,' because that bone serves as a base or support for the trunk when we are seated; see Ischiatic.) The lowermost of the three portions which compose the os innominatum in the foetus and young individual. The inferior region of the same bone has also been called is'chium in the adult. According to Hesychius, the ancients designated by the word ischion the capsular ligament of the coxofemoral articulation, as well as the articulation itself.

IS'CHION, Haunch.

Ischioneural'gia, Neuralgia femoro-poplitea.

Ischiopa'ges, Ischiadelph'us, (ischion, and παγω, 'I fasten,') A monstrous union of two foetuses, in which they are attached to each other by the ischia. See Hypogastrodidymus.

Ischio-pénien, see Pudic nerve.

Ischio-périnéal, Transversus perinæi.

Ischiophthi'sis, Ta'bes cox'aria seu ischiad'ica, Phthi'sis ischiad'ica, (ischion, and phthisis.) Phthisis in consequence of suppuration of the hip-joint. See Coxarum morbus.

Ischio-popliti-fémoral, Semi-membranosus—i. Popliti-tibial, Semi-membranosus—i. Pré-tibial, Semi-tendinosus.

Ischioprostat'icus. Winslow, Sanctorini, Albinus, and Sömmering have given this name to the fibres of the transversus perinæi muscle which go toward the prostate.

Ischioec'tal Fos'sa, Perineal fossa.

Ischio'sis, (from ischion,) Neuralgia femoro-poplitea.

Ischio-sous-clit'orien, Ischio-cavernosus—i. Sous-trochantérien, Quadratus femoris—i. Spinii-trochantérien, Ischiotrochanterianus—i. Uréthral, Ischiocavernosus.

Ischiotrochanteria'nus, Gem'ini, Gemel'li. Part of the Marsupia'lis of Cowper; Car'neum Marsup'ium, Ischio-spini-trochantérien, Secun'dus et tertius quadrigem'inus, (F.) Muscle cannelé, Accessoire de l'obturateur interne. Two small, fleshy bundles, long and flat, which arise—the superior on the outside of the sciatic spine, the inferior behind the tuberosity of the ischium. Both pass horizontally outward, and are attached to the tendon of the obturator internus, which they accompany into the fossa of the trochanter. These muscles are rotators of the lower limb outward. They can also turn the pelvis on the femur in standing on one foot.

Is'chium, Ischion.

Ischl, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These springs, which are in Upper Austria, contain iodine and bromine.

Ischnopho'nia, (ισχος, 'slender,' and φωνη, 'voice,') Ischnoph'ony. Slenderness of voice.

Isch'notes, (ισχνος,) Emaciation.

Is'cho, (ισχω, 'I restrain,') In composition, arrest, retention.

Ischoblen'nia, (ischo, and βλεννα, 'mucus,') The suppression of a mucous discharge.

Ischoceno'sis, (ischo, and κενωσις, 'evacuation,') Retention or suppression of a natural evacuation—as of the menses.

Ischocol'ia, (ischo, and χολη, 'bile,') Reten'tio bilis. Retention or suppression of the biliary secretion.

Ischocoil'ia, (ischo, and κοιλια, 'the bowels,') Constipation.

Ischocop'ria, (ischo, and κοπρος, 'excrement,') Constipation.

Ischogalac'tia, Reten'tio lac'tis, (ischo, and γαλα, gen. γαλακτος, 'milk,') Want of milk in the mamme.

Ischolochi'a or Ischolocho'ia, Lochios'chesis, Suppres'sio lochio'rum, (ischo, and λοχεια, 'the lochial discharge,') Reten'tio lochio'rum. Suppression of the lochial discharge.

Ischome'nia, (ischo, and μηνες, 'the menses,') Amenorrhœa.

Ischopho'nia, (ισχωφονια, from ischo, and φωνη, 'voice,') Balbuties.

Ischosper'mia, (ischo, and σπερμα, 'sperm,') Sem'inis reten'tio. Retention or suppression of the spermatic secretion.

Ischuret'ic, Ischuret'icum, (F.) Ischurétique, (ischo, and ουρον, 'urine,') A medicine for relieving suppression of urine. A diuretic.

Ischu'ria, (ισχυρια,) Uri'næ suppres'sio, Stoppage of urine, Suppres'sio lo'tii, Paru'ria retentio'nis. Retention of, or impossibility of discharging, the urine, Anurorrhée of Piorry. Often restricted to suppression of the secretion, Ren'al Ischu'ria, Ischu'ria Ren'al'is, Am'ria, Anuro'sis, Nephrauu'ria, Anurocrinie of Piorry, Isch'ury.

Ischu'ria Ve'ra is that in which the urine, having accumulated in the bladder, the patient is unable to pass it, notwithstanding the inclination which constantly distresses him. In false ischu'ria, Paru'ria in'ops, P. retentio'nis ren'al'is, Ischu'ria no'tha seu spu'ria, of some, (F.) Suppression d'Urine, owing to some disease of the kidney or ureters, the urine cannot reach the bladder.

Ischuria has likewise received various other names, according to the seat and character of the obstacle which opposes the exit of the urine: hence the expressions—Ren'al, Ureter'ic, Ves'ical, Ure'thral, and Cal'culous Ischuria. Vesical Ischuria is generally used synonymously with Retention of Urine, which see.

ISCHURIA CYSTOPHLEGMAT'ICA, Cystirrhœa—i. Phimosica, see Phimosicus—i. Spasmodica, Cystospasmus—i. Spuria, see Ischuria—i. Urethralis à phimosi, see Phimosicus—i. Vera, see Ischuria—i. Vesicalis, Retention of urine.

Isch'ury, Ischuria.

Isic'ium, (ισικιον,) Isicos, Insic'ium, Tomac'ulum, Tomaculum, Tomac'inum. A kind of sausage, formed of mixed meat and spices.

I'singlass, ([G.] Hausen, 'a sturgeon,' and Blase, 'a bladder,') Ichthyocolla.

I'SINGLASS, JAP'ANESE. A substance, obtained from seaweed, in China, which is used as a substitute in the formation of jellies, under the name sea-weed jelly. It is sent from Singapore, sweetened, flavored, and ready for use. In this state it may be kept for several years.

I'SINGLASS PLAS'TER, see Sparadrapum adhaesivum.

I'sir, Elixir.

I'sis Nob'ilis, see Coral.

I'sland of Reil, Insula cerebri.

Isle of Wight, Cli'mate of. This beautiful island is a favorable summer retreat for invalids.

Undercliff is the situation chosen as a winter residence for phthisical valetudinarians. Cowes, Niton, Sandown, Shanklin, and Ryde, are delightful summer residences.

Isnar'dia Palus'tris, (after D'Isnard, a French botanist,) Ludwigia palustris.

I'so, (ἴσος, 'equal,') in composition, equal.

Isoch'ronous, Isoch'ronus, Isochron'ius, Isoch'ronus, (F.) Isochrone, (iso, and χρόνος, 'time,') That which takes place in the same time, or in equal times. The pulsations of the arteries, in various parts of the body, are nearly isochronous.

Isoch'ryson, Auro com'par, (iso, and χρυσός, 'gold,') A collyrium, described by Galen as worth its weight in gold. Libavius has also given this name to an amalgam, made with equal parts of antimony and mercury.

Isoch'rates, (iso, and κρατος, 'strength,') or κεραρυμι, 'I mix,') A mixture of equal parts of wine and water.

Isoch'romus, (iso, and ὁρμος, 'a course,') Isochronous.

Isol'usin, (iso, and λυω, 'I wash,') because washed in water and rectified spirit, see Polygala senega.

Isomer'ic or Isomer'ic, Isomer'icus, Isomer'erus, Isomer'us, Isomer'us, (iso, and μέρος, 'part,') An epithet applied to different bodies which agree in composition, but differ in properties. The condition is termed Isomer'ism.

Isomer'ism, see Isomer'ic.

Isomorph'ism, (iso, and μορφη, 'form,') see Isomorphous.

Isomor'phous, Isomor'phus, Isomor'phicus. An epithet applied to different bodies which have the same crystalline form. The condition is called Isomor'phism.

Isonan'dra Gut'ta, see Gutta percha.

Isopathi'a, Isopath'ia, (iso, and παθος, 'disease,') This term has been used by some of the German writers to signify the cure of diseases by the disease itself, or its products;—under the hypothesis, that every contagious disease contains in its contagious matter the means for its cure;—thus, that variola may be cured by homœopathic doses of variolous matter; syphilis, by venereal matter, &c., &c. Others have given to isopathy another form;—maintaining that every diseased organ has its remedy in the same organ,—that eating liver, for example, will remove disease of the liver!

Dr. J. M. B. Harden, of Georgia, has used the term "Par'allelism of Diseases;" for "the disposition of diseases to 'anastomose with each other,' or to wear each other's livery."

Is'sue, (from exeo,—ex, and eo,—'I go out,') Fonticulus—i. Peas, Aurantia curassaventia, see Fonticulus.

Isthme du Gosier, Isthmus of the fauces.

Isth'mion, (ἰσθμιον,) Isthmus, Pharynx.

Isthmi'tis, gen. Isthmi'tidis, Inflamma'tio Fau'cium seu Pala'ti, Angi'na sim'plex seu mi'tis seu fan'cium, An'gor fan'cium, Cynan'chê sim'plex, Fau'cis, (F.) Angine simple, (isthmus, and itis.) Inflammation of the isthmus faucium, and of the fauces. See Cynanche pharyngea, and Angina.

Isth'mium, (ἰσθμιον,) Isthmus.

Isthmocatar'rhus, (isthmus, and καταρρος, 'catarrh,') Catarrh of the fauces.

Isthmodyn'ia, (isthmus, and οδυνη, 'pain,') Pain in the fauces.

Isthmople'gia, (isthmus, and πληγη, 'a stroke,') Paralysis of the fauces.

Isth'mos, (ἰσθμος,) Isthmus, Pharynx.

Isthmoty'phus, Cynanche maligna.

Isth'mus, (ἰσθμος,) Isth'mion, Isth'mium, (F.) Isthme. A tongue of land joining a peninsula to a continent, or which separates two seas; a narrow pass. Anatomists have given the name Isthmus of the Fau'ces, I. Fau'cium, Claus'trum Gut'turis, (F.) Isthme du gosier, to the strait which separates the mouth from the pharynx. It is formed above by the velum palati and uvula; at the sides, by the pillars of the fauces and the tonsils; and below, by the base of the tongue. Also, the Fauces.

ISTH'MUS OF THE ENCEPH'ALON. The narrowed and constricted portion of the encephalic mass, situate between the cerebrum, the cerebellum and the medulla oblongata, which corresponds to the free margin of the tentorium cerebelli, and comprises the pons varolii, and middle peduncles of the cerebellum, the peduncles of the cerebrum, the tubercula quadrigemina, the superior peduncles of the cerebellum, and the valve of Vieussens.

ISTH'MUS FAUC'IUM, see Isthmus.

ISTH'MUS OF THE FOS'SA OVA'LIS, Isthmus Vieussen'ii, Stri'ga cartilagine'sa cor'dis, is the prominent arch formed above the fossa ovalis by the union of the two pillars which bound the cavity.

ISTH'MUS HE'PATIS, see Lobulus anonymus—i. Prostatæ, see Prostate.

ISTH'MUS OF THE THY'ROID GLAND is a narrow band that unites the two chief lobules composing the thyroid gland.

ISTH'MUS URE'THÆ, see Urethra—i. Uteri, see Uterus—i. Vieussen'ii, Isthmus of the fossa ovalis, see Ovalis fossa.

Ital'ian Juice, Extractum glycyrrhizæ.

Ital'icus Mor'bus, ('Italian disease,') Syphilis.

Itch, (γίχα,) Psora—i. Animalcule, see Psora—i. of Animals, Scabies ferina.

ITCH, AR'MY. A disease described by some as distinct from ordinary scabies, which seems to be engendered by the filth of camp-life, but supposed by others to be prurigo, mixed with eczema and lichen.

ITCH, BA'KERS', see Psoriasis—i. Barbers', Sycosis—i. Bricklayers', Eczema impetiginodes.

ITCH, COW'POX. A cutaneous eruption, observed and described by Göllis, which appeared after the fourteenth day from vaccination, and consisted of isolated vesicles, often filled with a puriform fluid.

ITCH, DRUNK'ARDS', Psora ebriorum—i. Grocers', see Psoriasis—i. Insect, see Psora—i. Mite, see Psora—i. Norwegian, see Radzyge—i. Venereal, Scherlievo—i. Washerwoman's, see Psoriasis—i. Weed, Veratrum viride.

ITCH'ing, Parop'sis pruritus, Autal'gia pruriginosa, Pruri'tus, Pruri'go, Cnes'mos, Cnes'ma, (Sc.) Youk, Yuke, (F.) Prurit, Démangeaison. A sensation, more inconvenient than painful, seated especially at the surface of the body, which provokes the patient to scratch the part. It may be either an external or an internal sensation; that is, produced by an external body, or by some modification in the organic actions of the part to which it is referred.

I'tea, (ἰtea,) Salix.

They contain a peculiar acid, the Jatroph'ic or Igasu'ric.

The seeds of JAT'ROPHA MULTIFIDA, Cur'cas Multifidus, are called Purg'ing Nuts, and give out a similar oil.

JAT'ROPHA ELAS'TICA, see Caoutchouc.

JAT'ROPHA MAN'IHOT, Jan'ipha Man'ihot, Man'ihot utilis'sima, Bitter Cassa'va; the plant affording the Cassa'da or Cassa'va Root, Caca'vi, Cassa'vê, Caza'bi, Pain de Madagascar, Ric'inus Mi'nor, Man'ioc, Man'dioc, Mandio'ca, Magnoc, Man'iot, Yuc'ca, Maniibar, Aipi, Aipima coxera, Aipipoca, Janipha. The juice of the root is extremely acrid and poisonous; but, after being fermented, it becomes harmless, and is then used for the intoxicating liquor, tucupi'. What remains, after expressing it, is made into cakes or meal, Farinha; of which the cassada or cassava bread is formed. This bread constitutes a principal food of the inhabitants of those parts where it grows.

The fecula of the root forms Tapio'ca, Cipipa, Fec'ula Tapio'ca, Am'ylum manihot'icum, which is very nutritious. It may be prepared in the same manner as sago.

A factitious Tapioca is met with in the shops, which is in very small, smooth, spherical grains, and is supposed to be prepared from potato starch. It is sold under the name pearl tapioca.

JUG'LANS CINE'REA, But'ter or Oil Nut, White Wal'nut. Ord. Juglandaceæ. The inner bark of the root of this tree, Jug'lans (Ph. U. S.), which is abundant in the United States, is used in medicine, in the form of extract, as an efficacious and mild laxative, in doses of from 10 to 20 grains. It is in the secondary list of the Pharmacopœia of the United States.

JUG'LANS NI'GRA, Black Juglans, Black Wal'nut; indigenous. The rind of the unripe fruit is said to remove ringworm and tetter. A decoction has been given as an anthelmintic.

JUG'LANS RE'GIA, Juglans, Nux Juglans, Ca'rya basil'ica, Ca'rya. The Wal'nut, French nut, (F.) Noyer, the tree; Noix, the nut, Car'yon. The unripe fruit, in the state in which it is pickled, was formerly esteemed to be anthelmintic. The putamen or green rind of the walnut, (F.) Brou de Noix, has been celebrated as a powerful anti-syphilitic, and used as a sort of diet drink. The kernel is an agreeable article of dessert; but, like all nuts, is difficult of digestion. The expressed oil, Huile de Noix, is used in France as an aliment, and, like other fixed oils, is laxative.

Various preparations of the leaves have been recommended in scrofulous affections.

Jug'ular, Jugula'ris, (F.) Jugulaire, (jugulum, —dim. of jugum, because the 'yoke' was attached there,—'the throat,') Relating to the throat.

JUG'ULAR Fos'sa, Fos'sa jugula'ris, is a cavity in the petro'occipital suture. It is formed by the petrous portion of the temporal bone, and by the occipital bone, and lodges the origin of the internal jugular vein. It is, sometimes, called thimble-like cavity.

JUG'ULAR VEINS, Ve'næ Jugula'res seu sphagit'ides seu apoplec'ticæ seu sopora'les. These are situate at the lateral and anterior parts of the neck. There are two on each side; one external, the other internal. 1. The Extern'al Jugular Vein, Trachélo-sous-cutané (Ch.), is of less size than the internal. It descends, almost vertically, along the anterior and lateral part of the neck, from the cervix of the lower jaw to the subclavian vein, into which it opens, a little above the internal jugular. It is formed by the internal maxillary, superficial temporal, and posterior auricular veins. It is this vein which is commonly opened in bleeding in the neck. 2. The Intern'al Jugular Vein, V. Céphalique (Ch.), Ve'na apoplec'tica, is much larger and more deeply seated than the preceding. It descends, vertically along the anterior and lateral part of the neck, from the posterior part of the foramen lacerum posterius as far as the subclavian vein. It commences at the sinus of the jugular vein, (F.) Golfe de la veine jugulaire, and receives the blood, which returns by the sinus of the dura mater, and that of the facial, lingual, pharyngeal, superior thyroid, occipital, and diploic veins.

S.*), Akat'alis, Acutalis, Akate'ra, Acatera, (Sc.) Eat'in ber'ries, Et'nagh ber'ries, are ordered in the pharmacopœias. Their odor is strong, but not unpleasant. Taste warm, pungent. Properties dependent upon essential oil, which they yield to both water and alcohol. Dose, \mathfrak{ss} . to \mathfrak{ss} ss., rubbed with sugar. In Holland, juniper berries are used for flavoring gin. The O'leum junip'eri (Ph. U. S.) possesses the virtues of the plant. It is called by Ruland, Targar, (F.) Genévrier, (the plant,) Genèvre (the berry).

JUNIP'ERUS LY'CIA. This plant—Thu'rea, T. vir'ga, Ar'bor thurif'era—has been supposed to afford the true Frank'incense, Cedrus Olib'anum, O. Arab'icum, Thus Libano'tos, Libano'tum, Lib'anos, Thus mas'culum, Thus ve'rum, (F.) Encens. By some, however, it is supposed to be the produce of an Am'yris, and by others of Boncel'lia floribun'da, B. papyrif'era, Ploes'slea floribun'da. Olib'anum has a peculiar and aromatic odor, taste bitterish and slightly pungent, partly soluble in alcohol, and forming a milky emulsion when triturated with water. It was formerly used in dysentery and hæmoptysis, but is now never employed except as a perfume in a sick room.

Boncel'lia surra'ta, B. thurif'era of India, Persia, and Arabia, is said to yield East India Olib'anum, O. Ind'icum.

JUNIP'ERUS OXYCE'DRUS, (F.) Genévrier Oxycedre, Cade, Oxycedre, Oxycedre, grows in the south of Europe, Siberia, &c. By combustion of the wood, a liquid tar, O'leum ca'dinum, Junip'eri o'leum empyreumat'icum, O'leum junip'eri pyrolign'ici, Oil of Cade, (F.) Huile de Cade ou de Genévrier, is obtained, which is employed externally in various chronic cutaneous and other diseases.

JUNIP'ERUS SABI'NA, Sabi'na, S. ster'ilis, Savi'na, Bru'ta, Ce'drus baccif'era, Com'mon or bar'ren savin; Bra'thu, Ba'rathron, Bo'rathron, (F.) Sabine, Savinier. The odor of savin tops, Sabi'na (Ph. U. S.), Sabinæ cacumina (Ph. B., 1867), is strong and disagreeable. Taste hot, acrid, and bitter, depending on an essential oil. Their operation is stimulant, emmenagogue, anthelmintic, and abortive; externally irritant. Dose, internally, gr. v. to x. of the powder. As a local irritant, they are applied in powder or formed into a cerate. The essential oil, O'leum sabi'næ (Ph. U. S.), Oil of savin, has the virtues of the savine. Dose, two to five drops.

JUNIP'ERUS SUEC'ICA, J. communis.

JUNIP'ERUS VIRGINIA'NA, Red ce'dar. This tree is known throughout the United States by the name of sav'ine, and is often used for the same purposes.

Junk, (from juncus, 'a bulrush,') Pad.

Ju'piter's Beard, Sempervivum tectorum.

Juribali, Euribali. A tree in the forests of Pomeronia. Fam. Meliaceæ. Class. Octandria. Nat. Ord. Monogynia. The bark is febrifuge, and may be given in powder or infusion (\mathfrak{ss} . ad aq. bullient. Oij.).

Juripeb'a, (a Brazilian name,) Solanum paniculatum.

Jurispru'dence, Med'ical, (jus, gen. juris, 'law,' and prudentia, 'knowledge,') Jurisprudentia Med'ica, (F.) Jurisprudence Médicale. This word is often used synonymously with Legal Medicine. It is at times employed for the embodied laws and regulations that relate to the teaching and practice of medicine.

Jurubeb'a, (a Brazilian name,) Solanum paniculatum.

Ju'ry of Ma'trons. A jury formed of women empanelled under a writ de ventre inspiciendo, to try the question, whether a woman is with child or not.

Jus, gen. Juris, Zo'mos, Zomid'ium, Sorbit'io, Sorbit'ium. Soup, broth, Jus'culum or Bouillon. See Broth.

Jus, Succus.

Jus BOVI'NUM, Beef tea—j. Coagulum, Jelly.

Jus d'Herbes, (F.) The juice of certain vegetables administered as depuratives, as that of fumitory, burdock, water trefoil, &c.

Jus JELA'TUM, Jelly—j. de Réglisse, see Glycyrrhiza—j. de Viande, see Bouillon—j. de Viande Crue, Juice of raw meat.

JUS'CULUM NI'GRUM LACEDÆMONIO'RUM, Me'lās Zo'mos, (μελās, ζωμός) Hæma'tia, Black broth of the Lacedæmonians. A celebrated mess in antiquity, the ingredients of which are not known. It was supposed to be made of blood—hog's blood—treated in some way, and therefore resembling, perhaps, as suggested by Warner, the modern black pudding.

Jusée, (F.) An aqueous maceratum of tan, coarsely powdered, in which the skins of animals have been steeped for a time, in the preparation of leather. An extract has been prepared from this, which has been prescribed in syrup and in pill; each pill containing about a grain and a half of the extract; and two being taken daily in phthisis, and in general debility connected with scrofula and rickets.

Kidingo Pepo, (literally a crampy pain caused by evil spirits.) An exanthematous affection, similar to dengue, described as occurring in Zanzibar; a scarlatinoid rash associated with rheumatic pains and fever, swelling of glands, &c.

Kid'ney, (etymology uncertain; Serenius derives it fancifully from Su. Goth. qued, the belly; and nigh, [quasi, quidney],) Ren, Neph'ros, (Sc.) Neir, Nere, (F.) Rein. The kidneys or reins are the secretory organs of the urine. They are two glands, situate deeply—the one on the right, and the other on the left side—in the hypochondres; at the sides of the lumbar vertebræ; behind the peritoneum; and in the midst of an abundant, fatty areolar tissue, Tu'nica seu Cap'sula adipo'sa. The kidney is of a reddish-brown color; oval form; and flattened on two surfaces. It has, at its internal margin, a deep fissure, by which the renal vessels and nerves enter or quit the organ, and the ureter issues. It resembles, pretty accurately, the haricot or kidney bean. Two substances are readily distinguishable in it;—the outer, secern'ing, cortical, glandular or vas'cular, Substan'tia corticalis seu glandulo'sa seu vasculo'sa seu glomerulo'sa seu rubicun'da, Cor'tex re'nis, which secretes the urine; and the inner, tubular, med'ullary, uriniferous, conoid'al or rad'iated, Substan'tia medulla'ris seu tubulo'sa seu fibro'sa seu inter'na seu cinerit'ia, Medul'la re'nis, which appears under the form of small cones or unequal papil'læ or mammil'læ, each resulting from the union of small capillary tubes, adherent by one of their extremities to the cortical substance; and opening, by the other, at the summit of the cone, into ca'lices, a species of membranous tubes, more or less numerous, which transmit the urine of the papillæ to the pelvis. Between the tubules and vessels of the kidney is the interlobular stroma, especially in the cortical substance and towards the apices of the papillæ, in very young human beings or in other animals. By the pelvis is meant a small, membranous sac, of an irregularly oval shape, at the base of which are the orifices of the calices, and the other extremity of which is continuous with the ureter. The kidney is surrounded by a fibrous membrane proper to it, Perinephrus, Tunica propria seu albuginea. It has been shown by Mr. Bowman and others that the renal artery is distributed to the corpora Malpighiana, forming a pellet of convolutions, which is received into a flask-like dilatation of the ureter — Bowman's Capsule, and through which — it is conceived — the watery portion of the urine is separated. The blood then becomes venous, and is distributed by different veins — portal veins of the kidney — to the convoluted tubes through which the proper urine is secreted. Hence the blood passes into the renal vein. The intermediate vessels between the Malpighian bodies and the convoluted tubes have been termed the Portal System of the Kidney. See Ferrein, pyramids of, Corpora Malpighiana, &c.

KIDNEY, BRIGHT'S DISEASE OF THE, Morbus Brightii seu albuminosis seu granulosis Renum, Nephritis albuminosa seu sociata, Nephrosia, Albuminuria, Nephrocalcosis, Nephrococcosis, Uroemia albuminosa, Cachectica or Associated nephritis, Cachexia Renalis, Inflammation of the Malpighian corpuscles, Disease of Bright, Granular Degeneration or Disorganization of the Kidney, Granular Kidney of Bright, Cachectica nephritis, Chalazonephritis, (F.) Maladie ou mal de Bright, Néphrite albumineuse, État Granuleux ou Dégénérescence granuleuse du Rein, Albuminorrhée. Bright's disease was formerly defined as a granular disease of the cortical part of the kidney, characterized by the secretion of urine that contains albumen and is of less specific gravity than natural, and which destroys by inducing other diseases. It was first described by Dr. Richard Bright, of London. By some it is made to include only one particular form of renal disease, in which the tubules are inflamed, tubal nephritis. By others, it includes parenchymatous nephritis, interstitial nephritis and amyloid or lardaceous degeneration. Under this head are now included, according to the nomenclature adopted by the Royal College of Physicians of London, all diseases of the kidney productive of albuminuria. Two forms have been described, the acute and chronic, different varieties of which have been referred to by writers on the subject.

Acute Bright's disease, variously called Acute tubal or desquamative nephritis, Acute albuminuria, Acute renal drop'sy, is an affection of the epithelial or gland cells lining the urinary tubuli, the cells becoming atrophied and disintegrated, and by their desquamation blocking up the tubes; the renal circulation becomes obstructed, the kidneys are congested, serum and fibrin are effused, the former causing an albuminous condition of the urine, while the fibrin, having the broken-down cells entangled with it, passes off in the urine in epithelial tube-casts. When there is no such desquamative process, it is called non-desquamative disease of the kidney.

Under Chronic Bright's disease, Chronic albuminuria, Morbus Brightii longus, Albuminuria longa, authors describe: 1. Granular Kidney, also called contracted granular, gouty or cirrhotic kidney, chronic desquamative nephritis, a disease characterized by albuminous urine, persistent desquamation of epithelium, atrophy of the kidney, granular epithelial casts, seen in the urine on microscopic examination, &c. 2. Fatty Kidney, or Fatty Degeneration of the Kidney, seen either in its enlarged form as the mottled kidney, or with contraction of the organ. It may occur as the result of acute desquamative nephritis. 3. Lardaceous, Amyloid or Waxy Kidney, which usually occurs in connection with constitutional affections, such as phthisis, scrofulous abscess, constitutional syphilis, &c., and is characterized by the form of infiltration known as the lardaceous or waxy. See Lardaceous. (For tests for Albumen in the Urine, see Urine, examination of.)

Kiesteine, properly Ky'esteine, Ki'estein, Ky'estin or Ky'estein, Ky'stein, Ki'estin, Ki'estine, Cy'esteine or Cy'estein, Ki'esthein, (F.) Kyestéine, (εωω, 'to be pregnant,' and εως, 'a garment or pellicle.') A peculiar albuminoid pellicle, which forms on the urine of a pregnant female when it is allowed to stand for a few days. It is whitish, opalescent, slightly granular, and may be compared to the fatty substance that swims on the surface of soups, after they have been allowed to cool. When taken in conjunction with other phenomena, it is a valuable aid in the diagnosis of early pregnancy.

Kiestin'ic, Kiestin'icus. Relating or appertaining to kiesteine; as 'kiestinic urine.'

Kil'burn, Min'eral Waters of. These springs contain carbonic acid, sulphohydric acid; carbonates of lime, magnesia, and iron; sulphates of soda, lime, and magnesia, and chloride of sodium.

Kile, Ulcer.

Kill Lamb, Andromeda mariana.

Kil'ogramme, Chiliogram'ma, (χιλω, 'a thousand,' and γραμμα, 'a gramme.') The weight of a thousand grammes; — two pounds, eight ounces, one drachm, and twenty-four grains, Troy.

Kil'olitre, (χλω, 'a thousand,' and λιτρα, 'a litre.') A measure containing a thousand litres.

Ki'mis, Kumyss.

Ki'na Ki'na, (Peruvian) Cinchona.

Kinancie, Cynancho.

Kin'cough, (by onomatopœia, from kin, Teut. kink.) Pertussis.

Kind'cough, Pertussis.

Kinesip'athy, Kinesitherapi'a, Cinesip'athy, Movement cure, Mo'torpathy, Medici'na mecha'nica, (κίνησις, 'motion,' and πάθος, 'disease.') A mode of treating diseases by gymnastics or appropriate movements, proposed by Ling, a Swede, and hence called Ling'ism.

Kinesod'ic, (κίνησις, 'motion,' and odos, 'a way.') A term employed to designate the nervous substance concerned in the conduction of motorial impulses.

Kinet'ic, (κίνησις, 'I move,') Motory.

Kink in the Head, (Teut. Kink, 'a twist in a rope,') see Insanity.

Kink'haust, ([G.] Kink and Husten, 'a cough,') Pertussis.

Kink'host, Pertussis.

Kinki'na, (Peruv. Kina.) Cinchona.

Kin'nikinnick. An Indian term for a mixture of tobacco, leaves of the sumach, and twigs of the willow, which is used as tobacco.

Ki'no, (Ind.) Gum'mi Gambien'sè seu ru'brum adstringens Gambien'sè seu adstringens Fothergill'i, African, East India or Amboy'na kino, (F.) Gomme suc on extrait de kino. The trees, whence one variety of this resin is obtained, are not botanically ascertained. The London college ascribed it to Pterocarpus erina'cea; the Edinburgh to Eucalyptus resinifera seu gummifera, Iron bark; and the Dublin to Butea frondosa. The Pharmacopœia of the United States (1842) defined it to be "an extract obtained from an uncertain plant." The later editions, and the British Pharmacopœia, (1867,) state it to be the inspissated juice of Pterocarpus marsupium (De Candolle) and of other plants. On wounding the bark, the kino flows drop by drop. A West India variety, Jamaica Kino, is said to be derived from Coccoloba uvifera or Sea-side Grape; and a Bo'any Bay kino is said to be the concrete juice of Eucalyptus resinifera or brown gumtree of New Holland. Sex. Syst. Icosandria Monogynia. Nat. Ord. Myrtaceæ. Kino consists chiefly of tannic and gallic acids, oxide of iron, and coloring matter. It is inodorous; the taste a sweetish bitter; and it is sometimes gritty between the teeth. It comes to us in fragments of a dark ruby red color, and is easily pulverized. Its properties are powerfully astringent. Dose, gr. x. to gr. xx. in powder.

Ki'otome, Ki'otomus, (κίων, 'a pillar,' 'a support,' and τομή, 'incision,') (F.) Coupebride. An instrument invented by Desault to cut any accidental brides or filaments in the rectum and bladder; and which he afterwards used for the removal of the tonsils. It is composed of a flat, silver sheath, open at one edge. The sheath is provided with a cutting blade, which can be forced through the opening, and thus all the parts can be divided with which it comes in contact.

Kip'pernut, Banum bulbocastanum.

Kirate. A weight of four grains, according to Blancard.

Kiriaghuma, Gymneura lactiferum.

Kirk'land's Neut'ral Ce'rate or Oint'ment, see Cerate, Kirkland's Neutral.

Kirn'milk, ([Sc. and Prov.] 'churumilk,') Buttermilk.

Kirronose, Cirrhosis.

Kirrhono'sis, (from κίρρος, 'yellow,') Cirrhosis.

Kirrho'sis, Cirrhosis.

Kirronese, (F.) Coloration icterique, (from κίρρος, 'yellow,') Icteric coloration. Discolored as if by jaundice, according to Ollivier.

Kirsch'wasser, ([G.] Kirsch and Wasser, 'Cherry water,') Kirsch, Kirschenwasser. An alcoholic liquor, obtained from cherries bruised with their stones, by subjecting them to distillation, after having caused them to ferment. See Spirit.

Kiskitomas Nut, Hickory nut.

Kiss, (Sax. kyssan.) Oscula'rè, Basia'rè, Sua'via'rè, (F.) Baiser. To salute with the lips. 'To kiss with inside lip,' deliba'rè os'cula seu ba'sia seu sua'via, meant, of old, an unchaste kiss, delibans os'culum.

Kiss'ingen, Min'eral Wa'ters of. This fashionable resort in Bavaria has several tonic, laxative, and alterative springs, the Ragoczy or Rakoczy being the most important, containing, besides carbonic acid, chloride of sodium, carbonate of lime, sulphate of magnesia, chlorides of potassium and magnesium, chloride of lithium, bromide and iodide of sodium, and carbonate of iron. This water quickens the circulation and stimulates the secretions of the mucous membranes generally, but especially those of the alimentary canal.

An artificial Kissingen or Rakoczy Water is now much employed in this country.

Kist. A weight of 14 grains.

Kitilling, (Prov.) Tickling.

Kitt'ling, (Prov.) Tickling.

Klaproth'ii Sul'phas, (after M. H. Klaproth, the German chemist,) Cadmii sulphas.

Klaproth'ium Sulphu'ricum, see Cadmii sulphas.

Kleptoma'nia, Cleptoma'nia, Klopema'nia, Clopemania, (κλέπτω, 'I steal,' and mania.) Insanity, with an irresistible propensity to steal.

Klinocephal'ia, Clinocephalia.

Klinocephal'ic, see Clinocephalic.

Klip'das, see Hyrax Capensis.

Klopema'nia, (κλοπή, 'theft,' and mania.) Kleptomania.

Knap'knead, (Prov.) see Entogonyancon.

Knare'sborough, Min'eral Wa'ters of, see Harrowgate, Mineral Waters of.

Knead'ing, (from Sax. cneðan, 'to knead,') Shampooing.

Knee, (Sax. cneop.) Genu—k. Encircled hoof, Crusta genu equinæ.

KNEE, HOUSE'MAID'S, Bur'sa patellæ amplifica'ta, (F.) Hygrome du Genou. An inflammation of the bursa, which in most individuals is in front of the patella—(F.) Bourse prérotulienne,—and is apt to inflame and enlarge from effusion in those in whom it is subjected to much pressure. Hence its name. It is a form of capsular rheumatism.

Knee'holly, Ruscus.

Knee'joint, Genu.

Knee'pan, Patella.

Knee'scab, Crusta genu equinæ.

Knido'sis, Cnidosis.

Knife, (Sax. cnif, (F.) Canif.) Cu'tter, Smi'lè, Cu'ttell'us, Tomei'on, Tome'us, Machæ'ra, Machæ'rion, Machæ'ris, (F.) Couteau. A cutting instrument, used in surgery to divide the soft parts, and which only differs from the bistouri or scalpel in being usually larger.

The most common knives are the following:

KNIFE, AMPUTA'TION, (F.) Couteau d'amputation, C. droit, Cu'tter rec'tus. This is the largest of the knives used in surgery. Formerly, they were curved; now they are straight, and provided with one or two edges.

KNIFE, CAT'ARACT, Ceratotomy, Keratotomy, Ceratomy, Keratomy, (F.) Couteau à cataracte. The cataract knives devised by various ophthalmic surgeons, being intended to perform the section of the transparent cornea, are so shaped as to exactly fill the small wound made by them; and thus to prevent the discharge of the aqueous humor until the section is completed. A cutting instrument—a picker or cystitome—is also employed for opening the capsule. (For further description of the knives resorted to by the oculist in cataract, see the various treatises on diseases of the eye, and on surgery.)

KNIFE, CHES'ELDEN'S. A knife, with a fixed handle; very convex on its edge, concave on the back, which was used by Cheselden in lithotomy.

KNIFE, CROOK'ED, Culter falcatulus, Culter curvus, (F.) Couteau courbe. A knife which is crooked and concave on its cutting edge. It was formerly employed in amputation of the limbs.

KNIFE, CROTCH'ET, Cutellus unicus, (F.) Couteau à crotchet. A steel instrument, composed of a round staff, furnished with a handle at one extremity, and at the other with a curved knife. It was formerly used to cut to pieces monstrous fetuses in utero, and to open the head when necessary.

KNIFE, DOUBLE-EDG'ED, Aniceps cutellus, Amphismeila, Amphismile, Catling, (F.) Couteau à deux tranchans, ou désarticulateur ou interosseux. A knife, the blade of which is straight and sharp on both sides. It is used for disarticulating bones; and for cutting the soft parts situate between the bones, in amputation of the leg and forearm.

KNIFE EN SERPETTE, (F.) Couteau en serpette. A sort of knife, of the shape of a serpette or pruning knife, invented by Desault for dividing the bony paries of the maxillary sinus, for the purpose of extracting fungi from it.

KNIFE, LENTICULAR, Culter lenticularis, (F.) Couteau lenticulaire. An instrument, used in the operation of trepanning, for removing inequalities in the inner table of the skull, which may have been left by the crown of the trephine around the opening made by it. It is formed of a lenticular button, fixed at the extremity of an iron staff, which is convex on one side, flat on the other; sharp at both edges, and mounted on an ebony handle.

KNIFE, LITHOT'OMY, (F.) Couteau lithotome. A name given by Foubert to a large knife, the narrow blade of which, four and a half inches in length, was sharp in its whole extent, and made an obtuse angle with the handle. He used it in the lateral operation.

KNIFE, POL'YPUS, Polypotome.

KNIFE, ROOT'CUTTING. In Pharmacy, a knife moving on a joint at its pointed extremity, by which roots and other ligneous matters are divided in pharmaceutical processes.

Knives'man, see Surgery, salvation.

Knit'back, (Prov.) Symphytum.

Knob'weed, Collinsonia.

Knock'kneed, Entogonyancion.

Knot, (Sax. cnotta,) Tubercle.

KNOT, PACK'ER'S, (F.) Nœud d'emballleur. A compressive bandage, used for arresting hemorrhage from the temporal artery or its branches. The nœud d'emballleur is made with a double-headed roller, five ells long. A graduated compress is placed over the opening in the artery, and the bandage is applied over it; the balls of the roller being carried horizontally round to the opposite temple, where they are crossed obliquely and carried back to the part where the compress is situate. The hands are then changed with the rollers, crossing them so as to form a knot, and taking one above the head; the other beneath the chin. They are then crossed again, so as to form several knots, one above the other. This bandage is called, by some surgeons, so'lar or oblique chevestre or capis'trum.

KNOT, SUR'GEON'S, No'dus chirurgicus, (F.) Nœud du chirurgien. A double knot made by passing the thread twice through the same noose. This knot is used frequently in the ligation of arteries, the umbilical cord, &c.

Knot'berries, Rubus chamaemorus.

Knot'grass, Polygonum aviculare.

Knot'root, Collinsonia Canadensis.

Knot'weed, Collinsonia Canadensis, Polygonum aviculare.

Knowlto'nia Vesicato'ria, (after Thomas Knowlton, of the botanic garden at Eltham.) Nat. Ord. Ranunculaceae. An acrid plant of South Africa, used by the Cape colonists as a blister in rheumatism.

Kohl Salat', ('cabbage salad,') Coldslaw.

Koinomias'mata, (κοινος, 'common,' and miasmata,) see Miasm.

Ko'kum, Garcinia purpurea—k. Butter, see Garcinia purpurea.

Ko'la, Sterculia acuminata—k. Acuminata, Sterculia acuminata.

Kol'erus, a name given by Paracelsus to a dry ulcer.

Kolpoklei'sis, (κολπος, 'vagina,' and κλειω, 'I shut up,') An operation for obliteration of the vagina, by paring the mucous surfaces, and bringing them together by suture.

Kolpor'raphy, (κολπος, 'vagina,' and ραφή, 'suture,') Elytrorrhaphy.

Kol'to, Plica.

Kooch'la Tree, Strychnos nux vomica.

Koorchee, see Nerium antidysentericum.

Koos'so, Hagenia Abyssinica.

Kooyahroot, see Valeriana.

Kopyop'ia, Copyopia.

Kordelles'tris Syphilit'ica, Caroba.

Kor'is, (κορυς,) Cimex.

Kous'so, Hagenia Abyssinica.

Krame'ria, (after the Kramers, German botanists,) Krameria trian'dra, Crame'ria, Ratan'hia, Rhatan'ia, Rhat'any, Rat'anhy, (F.) Ratanhie,—Sex. Syst. Tetrandria Monogynia, Nat. Ord. Polygalæ,—is a native of Java. The root, Krameria, (Ph. U. S.,) has a bitter taste; and is astringent, diuretic, and detergent. Dose, \mathfrak{zj} to \mathfrak{zj} .

KRAME'RIA IXI'NA, or Ratanhy of the Antilles, has similar virtues. Savanil'la ratanhy is from the same plant.

Kra'nia, (κρηνια,) see Cornu mas.

Krankenheil, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These waters in Bavaria have a reputation in the treatment of lupus, sycosis, lichen, scrofulous ulcers, ichthyosis, &c.

Krause, Cor'puscles of. Terminal nerve corpuscles, similar to those of Pacini, and met with in the conjunctiva, genitals, &c.

Kreaso'ton, Creasote.

Kreat'ic Naus'ea, see Nausea.

Kre'atine, Creatine.

Kre'atinine, see Creatine.

Kreatoph'agous, (κρεας, gen. κρεατος, 'flesh,' and φαγειν, 'to eat,') Carnivorous.

Kreoso'ton, Creasote.

Kresyl'ic Acid, see Carbo'lic acid, impure.

Kretinis'mus, Cretinism.

Kreuz'nach, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These waters, in Rhenish Prussia, have a reputation for the cure of uterine and scrofulous affections. The chief waters contain chlorides of sodium, calcium, and magnesium, bromide of magnesium, oxide of iron, &c.

Kriebelkrankheit, (G.) (kriebe'n, 'to creep,' and krankheit, 'disease,') Convulsio cerealis.

Krone, Crown.

Krys'talline, see Crystalline.

Kua Kaha, Curcuma longa.

Kukui Oil, see Aleurites triloba.

Kumbecephal'ic, Cymbecephal'ic, (κυμβη, 'a canoe,' and κεφαλη, 'head,') According to Professor Daniel Wilson, having a boat-shaped head.

Ku'myss, Kou'myss, Kou'mis, Ki'mis, Kou'miss. A beverage used in families of the people of Tartary. It resembles sour buttermilk, without being greasy. According to Sir George Simpson, it is usually prepared from mare's milk, which is merely allowed to stand for some days in a leathern churn till it becomes sour. It is then bottled for use. It is employed in all complaints arising from feeble digestion, and is rather nutritious than exhilarating; but from the same material the Burats and the Kirghez prepare an intoxicating spirit called Aracu, in which they indulge to excess. A similar preparation is said to be in use in the Orkney and Shetland islands.

Kunaree, Nerium odorum.

Kurwa Thumree, see Cucurbito pepo.

Kussaud'er, Convolvulus panduratus.

Kutkuleja, Cæsalpinia bonducella.

Kutu Kurunja, Cæsalpinia bonducella.

Kutubuth. An Arabic name for a species of melancholy, in which the patient is never quiet at any one place, but wanders about here and there. See Cuttubuth. Also, the name of an insect, which lives at the surface of stagnant waters, and is in a constant state of agitation. Some lexicographers imagine that it is on account of this last circumstance that the name of the insect has been given to the disease.

Kwo'so, Hagenia Abyssinica.

Kyano'sis, Cyanopathy.

Kyaput'ty, Caieput.

Ky'esteine, Kiesteine.

Kyestini'ic, Kiestinic.

Kykli'tis, (κυκλος, 'a circle,' and itis,) Cyclitis.

Kyllopod'ia, (κυλλος, 'crooked,' and πους, gen. ποδος, 'a foot,') Kyllosis.

Kyllo'sis, (κυλλος, 'crooked,' 'lame,') Cyllo'sis, Kyllopod'ia. Professor Chaussier so calls congenital distortion of the feet, Club'foot, Polt'foot, Stump'foot, (Prov.) Pommelfoot, Pummelfoot; Tal'ipes, (F.) Pied bot. Of this there are many varieties. In one the foot, instead of resting on the soil by the whole plantar surface, touches it only with the metatarsophalangean articulations. It seems as if turned backwards and broken upon the leg, (Pes seu Tal'ipes Equi'nus, Hip'popus, Oxy'pod'ia, Tip'foot, Horse'foot.) In other cases the foot is twisted inwards, (Val'rus, Tal'ipes varus, Blasop'odes, Blæ'sopus, Cyllo'epus, Cyllop'oda, Cyllopod'ion, Lo'ripes, Cross'foot, (F.) Cagneux,) so that it rests only on the ground on its outer edge; or it may be twisted outwards, (Val'gus, Tal'ipes Valgus, Out'bow foot,) or rest only on its inner edge, or on the back part of the heel, (Tal'ipes calca'neus, Heel club'foot.) In the flat'foot or splay'foot, Duck'foot, Pes pla'nus, Splat'foot, Tal'ipes equi'no-val'gus, Spuri'ous Val'gus, Sar'apus, Plat'ypus, Platypod'ia, (F.) Pied plat, the plantar surface of the foot is flattened instead of being concave.

These deformities are rarely accidental. They are almost always congenital, and may be rectified, at an early period, by proper mechanical means to strengthen the foot gradually, and restore it to its proper shape and direction; and if these means fail, the tendons and muscles concerned in the deformity may be divided. A similar affection of the hand is called Club-hand, Ma'nus cur'ta, (F.) Main bot.

Club or clubbed fingers are also met with, and a condition of the penis has been described, which has received the name of club or clubbed penis. See Penis.

Kymograph'ion, Cymograph'ion, (κυμα, 'wave,' and γραφω, 'I describe,') A wave describer or measurer. An instrument invented by Ludwig, which is self-registering, and exhibits the relation between the waves of the pulse and the undulations produced by respiration.

Kyna, Pastinaca opoponax.

Kyphosis, Cyphosis — k. Inflammatoria, Vertebral disease — k. Paralytica, Vertebral disease.

Kyphoskoliosis, (κυφος, 'gibbous,' and σκολιος, 'crooked,') Cyphoma.

Kyste, Cyst — k. Anéurysmal, Aneurismal sac.

Ky'stein, Kiesteine.

Kysthi'tis, gen. Kysthitidis, Cysthi'tis, (κυσθος, 'the vagina,' and itis,) Inflammation of the vulva and of the mucous membrane of the vagina.

Kystique, Cystic.

Kysthopto'sis, (κυσθος, 'the vagina,' and πτωω, 'I fall,') Prolapsus or inversion of the vagina.

Kys'tis, Cyst.

Kystitome, Cystitome.

Kys'totome, Cystitome.

Kystot'omy, Cystotomy.

Kyte, (Sc. and Prov.) Abdomen, Stomach.

Kyttarrhag'ia, (κυτταριον, 'an alveolus,' and ραγω or ρηγνυμι, 'I break forth,') Discharge of blood from an alveolus.

L.

La Veno Beno, see Falsifications, table of.

Laba'rium, (labi, 'to fall,') Looseness of the teeth.

Labdacis'mus, (λαβδακισμος,) Lallation.

Labda'men, Cistus creticus.

Labda'num, see Cistus creticus.

La'bē, (λαβη, from λαλω, λαμβανω, 'I seize,' 'I take,' 'the act of grasping,') Invasion. Also, employed to denote the first paroxysm of fevers.

La'beo, (from labium,) Chilon.

La'bes, Chilon, Macula.

La'bia Cun'ni, (pl. of labium,) Lips of the vulva — l. Externa, Lips of the vulva — l. Interna seu Minora, Nymphæ — l. Majora, Lips of the vulva — l. Pudendi, Lips of the vulva — l. Pudendi minora, Nymphæ.

La'bial, Labia'lis, (from labium, 'a lip,') Relating or appertaining to the lips.

Labial, Orbicularis oris.

LA'BIAL AR'TERY. Haller and Sabatier call thus the facial artery of the majority of anatomists. The labial arteries, properly so called, coronary arteries of the lips, (F.) Coronaires des lèvres, are two in number. The superior arises from the facial, above, and very close to, the commissure of the lips. It is large and tortuous, and is distributed to the upper lip. The lower arises from the facial, at a considerable distance from the commissure, and proceeds, in a serpentine course, into the substance of the lower lip, to which it is distributed.

LA'BIAL GLANDS, Glandulæ labiales. This name is given to a multitude of muciparous follicles, of some size, round, prominent, and separate from each other, which are found on the inner surface of the lips, below the mucous membrane.

LA'BIAL VEINS are distinguished, like the arteries, into superior and inferior. They open into the facial vein;—a division of the internal jugular.

Labialis, Orbicularis oris.

Labidom'eter, Labimeter.

Labim'eter, (F.) Labimètre ou Labidomètre, (from λαβειν, gen. λαβίδος, 'forceps,' and μετρον, 'measure.') A scale adapted to the handles of the forceps, which indicates the distance of the blades from each other, when applied to the head of the child in utero.

La'bis, gen La'bidis, (λαβις, from λαμβάνειν, 'to seize,') Forceps.

La'bium, (λαμβάνειν, 'to seize,' [?],) Lip—1. Leporinum, Harelip.

LA'BIUM TYMPAN'ICUM. The free margin of the osseous lamina of the cochlea; the term la'bium vestibula'rē being given to a sharp margin of the denticulate lamina overhanging the labium tympanicum.

LA'BIUM U'TERI, Amphideum—1. Vestibulare, see L. tympanicum.

Lab'lab, Dolichos lablab.

La'bor, Parturition.

LA'BOR CHAIR. Obstetric chair. A chair, in which a parturient woman is placed during delivery.

LA'BOR, COM'PLICATED, see Parturition—1. Difficult, Dystocia—1. Dry, Partus siccus—1. Forced, see Parturition—1. Impracticable, see Parturition—1. Inert, see Inertia of the womb—1. Laborious, see Laborious.

LA'BOR, METASTAT'IC. A labor in which the uterine and other muscular force is temporarily suspended, the nervous power seeming to be directed in other channels.

LA'BOR, MISSED. A case of uterogestation, in which, through want of parturient action, the fœtus is retained in utero beyond the ordinary term.

LA'BOR, MOR'ID, Dystocia—1. Pains, see Pains—1. Powerless, see Parturition—1. Precipitate, see Parturition—1. Premature, Parturition, (premature)—1. Prematural, Metastocia, see Parturition—1. Show, see Parturition.

Labo'rans, (from labor, 'disease,') Sick.

Laboratoire, Laboratory.

Laborato'rium, Laboratory—1. Chymicum seu pharmaceuticum, see Pharmacopœia.

Lab'oratory, Laborato'rium, Ergaste'rion, (F.) Laboratoire, (laborare, laboratum, 'to work,') A workshop. A place for preparing chemical or pharmaceutical products, &c.

Laborio'sus, Laborious, Sick.

Labo'rious, Laborio'sus, (F.) Laborieux, (from labor, 'difficulty,') Delivery is said to be laborious, Par'tus laborio'sus, Mogostoc'ia, (F.) Accouchement laborieux, when attended with more difficulty and suffering than usual. With some, laborious labor means one that requires the use of instruments. See Dystocia and Parturition.

Labrisul'cium, (labrum, and sulcus, 'a furrow,') Cheiloeace, Stomacace.

La'brum, Lip—1. Cerebri, Infundibulum of the brain.

Labrus'ca, Bryonia alba.

Labur'num, see Cytisus laburnum.

Lab'yri'nth, (λαβυρινθος,) Labyrinth'us, An'trum buccino'sum. A place, full of turnings, the exit of which is not easily discoverable. Anatomists have given this name to the aggregate of parts, constituting the internal ear, Labyrinth'us au'ris in'time, In'tima pars or'gani audi'tūs, Labyrinth'ic cavity of the ear. The Labyrinth is situate between the tympanum and meatus auditorius internus. It is composed of several cavities, which communicate with each other in the dried bone; as the vestibule, cochlea, semicircular canals, &c. The bony or os'seous lab'yri'nth, cav'itas labyrinth'i, Labyrinth'us os'seus seu du'rus, is lined by perosteum, and also by a pulpy membrane, constituting the membranous labyrinth, Labyrinth'us membran'aceus, on which the auditory nerve is regularly dispersed. This membrane forms two sacs in the vestibule, called sac'culus vestib'uli and sac'culus, respectively, which resemble in shape that of the bony cavities containing them. Each sac contains calcareous matter, constituting the O'toliths and Otocon'ia. When the sac is laid open, upon the upper and outer part, a partition appears, partaking of the nature of the sac, and called by Meckel, Sep'tum vestib'uli nervo'so-membran'aceum.

Labyrinth is also applied to the lateral portions of the ethmoid bone, which are formed of large irregular cells.

LAB'YRINTH, BONY, see Labyrinth—1. Membranous, see Labyrinth.

Labyrinth'ic, Labyrinth'icus, Labyrinth'o'des, (F.) Labyrinthique. Relating or appertaining to the labyrinth.

LABYRINTH'IC CAV'ITY OF THE EAR, Labyrinth.

Labyrinth'o'des, (λαβυρινθωδης, from labyrinthus, and odes,) Labyrinthic.

Labyrinth'us, (λαβυρινθος,) Labyrinth—1. Auris Intimæ, see Labyrinth—1. Durus, see Labyrinth—1. Membranaceus, see Labyrinth—1. Membranaceus, see Labyrinth—1. Osseus, see Labyrinth.

Lac, Lacca, Laqueus, Milk—1. Ammoniaci, Mistura ammoniaci—1. Amygdalæ, Emulsio amygdalæ—1. Asafoetidæ, Mistura asafoetidæ—1. Avis, Albumen ovi—1. Guaiaci, Mistura guaiaci.

LAC, GUM, Lacca—1. Lunæ, Marga candida—1. Maris, Sperm—1. Plaster, Antiseptic, see Plaster, Lac—1. Pressum, Curd—1. Primum Puerperie, Colostrum—1. Seed, Lacca—1. Shell, Lacca—1. Stick, Lacca—1. Sulphuris, Sulphur præcipitatum—1. Terræ, Magnesia carbonas—1. Virginis, Virgin's milk.

Lacaph'thon. Presumed to be the bark of some fir or other tree. It entered into the composition of the Cyphi, used in fumigations. Supposed to be the Narcaph'thum or Naseaph'thum.

Lac'ca, (lakah, Arab.,) Gum'mi lac'cæ, Stick, Gum, Seed, or Shell Lac, (F.) Laque, Gomme Laque. Lac is a substance formed by an insect, and deposited on different species of trees, chiefly in the East Indies,—for example, on Croton laciferum, and two species of Ficus—Ficus religiosa, and F. Indica. The various kinds, distinguished in commerce, are stick-lac, which is the substance in its natural state, investing the small twigs of the tree; and seed-lac, which is the same broken off. When melted it is called shell-lac.

Lac was, at one time, used in the form of tincture, as a tonic and astringent; and it still forms part of particular dentifrices.

Lacera'tion, Laceratio, (lacerare, laceratum, 'to tear,') Rhe'ge, Rheg'mus, Rheg'ma, Ruptu'ra, Rupture, Dilacera'tio, Sparag'ma, (F.) Arrachement, Déchirement, Dilacération, Broiement. The act of tearing or rending. The breach made by tearing or rending; as lac'cerated wound, Tre'cis vul'nus lacera'tum, Laceratu'ra, Vulnus laceratum.

Laceratu'ra, see Laceration.

Lacer'ta, Lizard — l. Aquatica, see Ectozaa.

Lacer'ti (pl. of Lacer'tus, 'muscle') Cor'dis, Columnæ carneæ — l. Musculorum, see Muscular fibre.

Lacerto'sus, Muscular.

Lacer'tuli Cor'dis, (dim. of Lacertus), Columnæ carneæ.

Lacer'tus, Brachium, Muscle, see Muscular fibre.

Lac'erum, (lacer, 'torn.') Anything torn, or appearing as if torn, (F.) Déchiré.

LAC'ERUM FORA'MEN ANTE'RIUS, (F.) Trou déchiré antérieur, Hiatus sphéno-pétreux, (Ch.) is an irregular opening, formed by the sphenoid, occipital, and petrous portion of the temporal bone. It is closed by cartilage, and forms a kind of fontanelle, situated at the termination of the petro-occipital suture.

LAC'ERUM FORA'MEN POSTE'RIUS, Foramen jugula'rē, F. lac'erum in basi cra'nii, (F.) Trou déchiré postérieur, Hiatus occipito-pétreux, (Ch.) is formed by the occipital bone and the inferior edge of the petrous portion of the temporal bone. Through it, the internal jugular vein, the eighth pair of nerves, and accessory nerve, pass out of the cranium.

LAC'ERUM FORA'MEN SUPE'RIUS, Sphenoidal fissure.

Lach'anon, (λαχανον, from λαχαινω, 'I dig.') A potherb; O'lus, pl. Olera, a vegetable used as food, (F.) Potager.

Lach'esis Pic'ta, see Arrow-poison.

LACH'ESIS RHOMBEA'TA, Flammon. A poisonous serpent common in the lower forests of Peru.

Lachnanth'es Tincto'ria, (λαχνη, 'wool,' and ανθος, 'a flower,' owing to its woolly flowers, Dilat'ris tincto'ria, Red'root; indigenous. Ord. Hamodorceae. The root is astringent and tonic.

Lach'ryma, (λαχρυμα), Tear. See Vitis vinifera.

Lach'rymal, Lac'rymal, Lacryma'lis, (from lachryma.) Belonging to the tears. This epithet is given to various parts.

LACH'RYMAL APPARA'TUS, see Lachrymal passages.

LACH'RYMAL AR'TERY proceeds from the ophthalmic; and distributes its principal branches to the lachrymal gland.

LACH'RYMAL BONE, Unguis os.

LACH'RYMAL CANAL' OF DUCT, Nasal Canal or duct, Dacryoso'ten, Canalis lac'rymalis seu orbitæ nasa'lis seu Sac'ci lacryma'lis, Duct'us ad Na'sum seu Nasa'lis seu Na'solacryma'lis, is formed by the superior maxillary bone, os unguis, and os turbinatum inferius; and is seated in the outer paries of the nasal fossæ. It is lined by a prolongation of the mucous membrane of the lachrymal sac; and its inferior orifice is furnished with a valvular duplicature. This duct transmits the tears; which have been absorbed at the great angle of the eye, by the puncta lacrymalia, into the nasal fossæ.

LACH'RYMAL CAR'UNCLE, see Caruncula lacrymalis — l. Cyst, Dacryops — l. Duct, Lachrymal canal.

LACH'RYMAL FOS'SA, Fos'sa seu Fo'vea lacryma'lis, is a slight depression at the upper part of the orbit, which lodges the lachrymal gland.

LACH'RYMAL GLAND, Glan'dula lacryma'lis seu innomina'ta Gale'ni, is seated in a depression of the frontal bone at the upper, anterior, and outer part of the orbit. It is about the size of an almond, and of an oval shape, flattened above and below: — its great diameter being the antero-posterior. It is composed of several small lobules, united by areolar tissue, and separated by it as well as by vessels and nerves which creep in the intervals, and consists of two distinct parts, the orbital, — glan'dula lacryma'lis sup'erior seu orbital'ia, (F.) Portion ou Groupe orbitaire, situate in the lachrymal fossa; and the palpebral — Glan'dula lacryma'lis inf'erior seu accessoria seu palpebra'lis, (F.) Portion palpébrale, Groupe palpébral, Glandule congrega'tæ Monroii, which is inclosed in the substance of the upper eyelid. This gland has seven or eight excretory ducts, which open behind the upper eyelid. Its use is to secrete the tears, and pour them on the globe of the eye by the excretory ducts.

LACH'RYMAL GROOVE, (F.) Gouttière lacrymale, is the bony channel which lodges the lachrymal sac. It is seated at the anterior and inner part of the orbit, and is formed by the os unguis and the ascending process of the upper jaw-bone.

LACH'RYMAL HER'NIA, Lachrymal Tu'mor, Her'nia Sac'ci Lacryma'lis, is when the tears enter the puncta, but cannot pass to the nose, and accumulate. By Anel, this was called Drop'sy of the Lachrymal sac.

LACH'RYMAL MUS'CLE, Tensor tarsi.

LACH'RYMAL NERVE is the smallest of the three branches formed by the ophthalmic nerve. It is distributed, particularly, to the lachrymal gland and to the upper eyelid. In its course it gives off a sphenomaxillary and a malar filament.

LACH'RYMAL PAPIL'LA, see Lachrymal puncta.

LACH'RYMAL PASS'AGES, Via lacryma'les, (F.) Voies lacrymales. The organs concerned in the secretion of tears, in spreading them over the eye, and taking them up again to transmit them into the nasal fossæ. The lachrymal passages are composed of the lachrymal gland, caruncle, puncta, ducts, lachrymal sac, and nasal duct, which, together, form the lachrymal appara'tus, (F.) Appareil lacrymal.

LACH'RYMAL PUNC'TA, Tear puncta, Puncta lacryma'lia, Spiram'ina palpebra'rum, (F.) Points lacrymaux, are two small, round, and contractile openings, situate in the centre of a tubercle or papilla, Papil'la lacryma'lis, Tuber'culum lacryma'lē, about a line and a half distant from the inner commissure of the eyelids, and continuous with the lachrymal ducts. These ducts, Lacryma'les Canalic'uli, Canal'es seu Duct'us lacryma'les, Ductus lacrymales latera'les seu puncto'rum lacryma'lium, Cor'nua lacryma'lia seu lima'eum, Collic'ie puncto'rum lacryma'lium, Canalic'uli lima'eum, (F.) Conduits lacrymaux, are two in number — a superior and an inferior — which extend from the puncta to the lachrymal sac. They seem formed by a very delicate prolongation of the conjunctiva, which is continuous with the mucous membrane of the lachrymal sac, (F.) Reservoir des larmes; — the Sac'cus seu S'c'nus seu La'eus lacryma'lis, Dacryocyst'is, Infundib'ulum lacryma'lē.

LACH'RYMAL SAC, see Lachrymal puncta — l. Tubercle, see Lachrymal puncta.

LACH'RYMAL VEINS accompany the artery of the same name, and open into the ophthalmic and palpebral veins.

Lachryma'tion, Lacrymatio — l. Sanguineous, Dacryhæmorrhysis.

Laci'nia, 'a hem or fringe;' hence —

Laci'niæ (pl. of Lacinia) Tuba'rum Fallo'pii, see Tube, Fallopian.

Lacin'iated, Lacinia'tus, (F.) Lacinié, (from lacinia.) Fringed, — as the laciniated extremities of the Fallopian tubes.

Lac'is, (F.) (from lacer, 'to lace,') Plexus.

Lac'mus, Lichen roccella — l. Tinctorius, Lichen roccella.

Lacon'icum, (used by the Aæones, Lacedæmonians;) Vaporarium, see Stove.

Lacq, Laqueus.

Lac'rima, Tear.

Lac'ruma, Tear.

Lac'ryma, Tear.

Lac'rymal, Lachrymal.

Lacryma'lis, Lachrymal.

Lacryma'tio, Lachryma'tion, (from lacryma.) Epiphora. Also, a profuse secretion of tears from any cause,—weeping, Fl'e'tus, Plora'tio, Plora'tus.

Lacrymatome, (lachryma, and τομή, 'incision.') An instrument devised for cases of stricture or obstruction of the lachrymal canals.

Lac'rymine, see Tears.

Lactalbu'men, gen. Lactalbu'miniæ, (lac, gen. lactis, 'milk,' and albumen.) Casein.

Lac'tans, (lactare, 'to give milk,') Nurse.

Lacta'rium, Lacticin'ium, (from lac.) Food prepared from milk. Milk diet or food.

Lactate de Fer ou Ferreux, Ferri lactas—l. de Quinine, Quiniæ lactas.

Lactat'ics. Medicines which influence the secretion and excretion of milk.

Lacta'tion, Lacta'tio, Thela'sis, Thelas'mus, (lactare, lactatum,—lac, 'milk,'—'to suckle,' 'to give milk,') Suck'ling:—the giving of suck, (F.) Allaitement. The French make four varieties of lactation. 1. Allaitement maternel, Maternal Lactation, when the mother suckles the child. 2. A. étranger mercenaire, when another suckles it. 3. A. artificiel, when the child is brought up by hand. 4. A. animal, when suckled by an animal.

Lacté, Lactic.

Lac'teal, Lactic—1. Sac, see Lactiferous vessels—1. Swelling, Lactiferous swelling.

Lac'teals, Chyliferous vessels.

Lac'tein, Milk, solidified.

Lac'tens, (lacteo, 'I suck,') Sucking child.

Lac'teous, Lactic.

Lac'tes, Mesentery, Pancreas.

Lac'teus, Lactic.

Lac'tic, Lacticus, Lac'teous, Lac'teus, Galac'ticus, Galac'tinus, Lac'teal, Milk'y, (F.) Lacté, Laiteux. Appertaining to, or resembling or containing milk.

LAC'TIC AC'ID, Ac'idum Lac'teum seu Lac'tis seu Lac'ticum, Acid of milk, Galac'tic, Nan'ceic or Ca'seic Ac'id, (F.) Acide Lactique. This has been recommended as a therapeutical agent in atonic dyspepsia, owing to its being presumed to be one of the gastric acids secreted in health. It is given either in the form of lemonade or of lozenge. The acid is obtained either from milk or from the juice of the red beet. One drachm to three drachms may be taken in the twenty-four hours.

Lac'tica, (Arab.) Typhoid.

Lac'ticans, (from lac, 'milk,') Nurse.

Lacticin'ium, Lactarium.

Lac'ticus, Lactic.

Lactifère, Lactiferous.

Lactiferous, Galactoph'orons, Lac'tifer, (F.) Lactifère, (lac, and fero, 'I carry,') Milk-conveying.

LACTIFEROUS or LAC'TEAL SWEL'LING. A tumefaction of the breast, supposed by Sir Astley Cooper to arise from a large collection of milk in one of the lactiferous tubes, the result of chronic inflammation of the tube near the nipple, with closure of its aperture, and obliteration of the canal for an inch or more. The tube requires to be punctured.

LACTIFEROUS VES'SELS, Lactiferous or Galactoph'orous Ducts, Tu'buli lactiferi seu galactoph'ori, Ductus lactiferi seu lac'tei, (F.) Vaisseaux ou conduits lactifères, are the excretory ducts of the mammary gland, each of which, running towards the nipple, dilates beneath the areola into an elongated sacculus,—the lacteal or galactophorous sac, receptacle or si'nus or ampul'la, sac'culus seu si'nus lactiferus, Si'nus ductus lactiferi.

Lactifuga, Lac'tifuge, (lac, and fugo, 'I drive away,') Medicines which dispel milk.

Lacti'go, gen. Lactig'inis, (from lac, 'milk,') Porrigo larvalis.

Lac'tin. Sugar of milk.

Lac'tinated, Lactina'tus, (from lactin.) Relating or appertaining to lacticin. Lacticin, or sugar of milk, being hard, it is used for the division and dilution of substances; and powders thus formed have been called lactinated powders.

Lactin'ia, (from lac, 'milk,') Food prepared with milk.

Lactip'otor, (lac, and potare, 'to drink,') Galactopotes.

Lac'tis (gen. of lac, 'milk,') Concretio'nes, Infaretus mammae lacteus.

LAC'TIS REDUNDAN'TIA, Galactia—1. Retentio, Galactischesis—1. Sanguinolenti excretio, Galactohæmia.

Lactisu'gium, (lac, and sugere, 'to suck,') Antlia lacten.

Lactiv'orus, (lac, and vorare, 'to devour,') Galactophagous.

Lactocel'le, (lac, and κελή, 'a tumor,') Galactocèle.

Lac'toline, Milk, solidified.

Lactom'eter, (lac, and μετρον, 'a measure,') Galactometer.

Lactophos'phate of Lime, Calcis lactophosphas.

Lac'to-pro'tein. An albuminoid substance, precipitated by a solution of nitrate of mercury, after removing from milk the casein by acetic acid, and the albumen by heat.

Lactose, (from lac, 'milk,') Sugar of milk.

Lactu'ca, (from lac, 'milk,' so called, from its milky juice.) Lactuca Sat'iva, Let'tuce, Gar'den Lettuce, Eunu'chium Meco'nis, Thri'dax, Thridac'inè, Cher'bus, (F.) Laitue ordinaire; Ord. Compositæ, is used as a wholesome salad. The seeds possess a quantity of oil, which, when formed into an emulsion, has been advised in arid urine, &c.

The inspissated juice, Lactuca'rium, Thridac'è, Let'tuce Op'ium, resembles, in odor and appearance, that of opium, and is, like it, narcotic, but uncertain. Dose, gr. j. to x., and more. Water distilled from lettuce, Eau de laitue, is used in France as a mild sedative. An active principle, Lactucin, has been derived from lactucarium.

LACTUCA ELONGA'TA, see L. virosa—1. Floridana, Mulgedium Floridanum—1. Graveolens, L. virosa—1. Marina, Fucus vesiculosus.

LACTUCA SCARI'OLA, L. Sylves'tris, Scari'ola, (F.) Laitue Scariole ou Sauvage, possesses a stronger degree of bitterness than L. sativa. It has similar virtues with Z. virosa.

LACTUCA SYLVES'TRIS, L. scariola—1. Villosa, Mulgedium acuminatum.

LACTUCA VIRO'SA, L. grave'olens, Strong-scented Lettuce, (F.) Laitue vireuse. The odor of this plant, the leaves of which are used in medicine, is strongly narcotic, and the taste bitter. They are narcotic, diuretic, and aperient, and have been used in dropsies. Lactu'ca elonga'ta, Wild Lettuce of the United States, has been employed for L. virosa.

Lactuca'rium, see Lactuca.

Lactu'cimen, gen. Lactucin'inis, (from lac, 'milk,') Aphthæ.

Lactucin'ina, Aphthæ.

Lac'tucin, see Lactuca.

Lactu'men, gen. Lactu'minis, (from lac, 'milk,') Porrigo larvalis.

Lactu'mina, Aphthæ.

Lacu'na, Canalic'ulus, (dim. of lacus, 'a lake, or deep ditch, or cistern,' λακός, and λακκος.) A Fos'sa or Ditch. A small cavity in a mucous membrane, the parietes of which secrete a viscid humor. It is used synonymously with crypt. Also, the external opening of such cavity.

LACU'NA, Crypta, Fontanella—1. Cerebri, Infundibulum of the brain, Pituitary gland.

LACU'NA seu SUL'CUS seu SUL'CULUS LA'BII SUPERIO'RIS, Amab'ilè, Amato'rium, Phil'trum. The hollow of the upper lip under the nose.

LACU'NA MAG'NA, see Urethra.

Lacu'næ, pl. of Lacuna, see Urethra.

LACU'NÆ OF BONE. Certain dark stellate spots, with threadlike lines radiating from them, seen under a high magnifying power. These were at first believed to be solid osseous or bone corpuscles or cells, Corpuscula ossium, Corpuscles of Purkinje, (F.) Cellules des os ou osseuses, Corpuscules des os ou noirs ou ramifiés ou calcaires, Ostéoplastes; but are now regarded as excavations in the bone—Sacculi chalicophori—with minute tubes or canaliculi proceeding from them, and communicating with the Haversian canals. The lacunæ and canaliculi are fibres concerned in the transit of nutrient fluid through the osseous tissue.

LACUNÆ GRAAFIANÆ, L. mucosæ vulvæ. The mucous follicles of the vagina.

LACUNÆ, HOWSHIP'S. A condition in rarefying osteitis, in which the edge of the melting bone-tissue is broken by shallow curves or deeper semicircular excavations, the concavity being outwards, between every two of which there is an angular projection of the intervening portion of bone.

LACUNÆ MORGAGNI, see Urethra.

LACUNÆ MUCOSÆ VULVÆ, L. Graafianæ—L. Palpebrarum, Meibomius, glands of.

LACUNAR, gen. Lacuna'ris, La'quear, 'an arched roof or ceiling.' The roof of a chamber. Hence, LACUNAR ORBITÆ. The roof of the orbit.

LACUNAR VENTRICULI QUARTI SUPERIOR, Valvula Viousseni.

Lacune de la Langue, Cæcum foramen—L. de Morgagni, see Urethra.

La'cus (gen. Lacus) Lacryma'lis, (lacus, 'a lake,' or cistern, laxos;) see Lachrymal puncta.

LA'CUS LACRYMARUM. A small space in the inner angle of the eye between the lids, towards which the tears flow, and at which the triangular canal formed between the closed lids terminates.

La'da, Piper nigrum.

Lada'num, see Cistus creticus.

Ladendo, Influenza.

La'dies' Mantle, Alchemilla.

La'dies' Slipper, Show'y, Cypripedium spectabile—L. Slipper, stemless, Cypripedium acaule—L. Slipper, yellow, Cypripedium luteum.

La'dies' Smock, Cardamine pratensis.

Ladre, (from Lazarus [?]) Leprous.

Ladriere, (F.) (from ladre), Léproserie, Maladerie. A vulgar name for elephantiasis, or lepra. Also, a hospital for the reception of the leprous, Leprosarium, Do'mus leprosa'ria, Leper hospital.

La'dybird, Coccinella septempunctata.

La'dybug, Coccinella septempunctata.

La'dycow, Coccinella septempunctata.

Lady Crespigny's Pills, see Pilulæ Aloes et Kinæ Kinæ.

LADY HES'KETH'S PILLS, see Pilulæ Aloes et Kinæ Kinæ.

LADY WES'TER'S PILLS, see Pilulæ Aloes et Kinæ Kinæ, and Pilulæ Aloes et Mastiches.

La'dy's Thumb, Polygonum persicaria.

La'dens, pl. Læden'tia, (lædo, 'I hurt.') Anything hurtful or injurious, as to the economy.

Læmopar'ysis, (læmus, and paralysis), Æsophagoplegia.

Læmoscir'rhus, Can'cer pharyn'gis et æsoph'agi, Læmostenosis seu Dyspha'gia scirrhus'a; (from læmus, and σκιρῶς, 'scirrhus.') Cancer of the pharynx or œsophagus.

Læmostenosis, (læmus, and στενωσις, 'narrowness') Dysphagia constricta—L. Scirrhusa, Læmoscir'rhus.

Læ'mus, (λαῖμος), Pharynx.

Læ'sio, (lædere, læsum, 'to hurt') Lesion—L. Continui, see Continuity, solution of.

Lætifican'tia, (lætifico,—lætus, and facio—'I make glad.') Medicines formerly used as cordials, in depression of spirits, &c.

Læviga'tio, (lævis, 'light, smooth.') Levigation.

Læ'vitas Intestino'rum, (lævis, 'smooth,') Lientery.

Lag Teeth, Molar teeth.

Lagento'mum, (λαγως, 'a hare,' en, and τομη, 'section.') Harelip.

La'ger Beer, see Cerevisia.

Lagne'a, (λαγνεία), Coition, Satyriasis, Sperm.

Lagnei'a, (λαγνεία), Coition, Satyriasis, Sperm.

Lagne'sis, (from λαγνής, 'lustful,') Furor Femininus, Nymphomania—L. Furor masculinus, Satyriasis—L. Salacitas, Satyriasis.

Lagneum'a, gen. Lagneum'atis, (λαγνευμα), Coition, Sperm.

Lagni'a, (λαγνεία), Coition, Satyriasis, Sperm.

Lagno'sis, (from λαγνόν, 'lustful,') Satyriasis.

Lagocheil'us, (λαγως, 'hare,' and χείλος, 'lip,') Harelip.

Lag'ones, pl. of Lagon, (λαγones), Flanks.

Lagonop'onos, (lagones, and πονος, 'suffering,') Pleurodynia.

Lagophthal'mia, (λαγως, 'a hare,' and ὀφθαλμός, 'an eye,') Lagophthalmus, Lepori'nus Oculis, Hare's Eye, (F.) Œil de Lièvre. A vicious arrangement of the upper eyelid, which is so retracted that it cannot cover the globe of the eye during sleep. It has been asserted that this condition of the eye is natural in the hare when asleep.

Lagophthal'mus, (λαγωφθαλμος), Lagophthalmia, Geum urbanum.

Lagos'toma, gen. Lagostom'atis, (λαγως, 'hare,' and στομα, 'mouth,') Harelip.

Laï, Aï.

Lait Répandu, ('milk diffused,') (F.) L. épanché. A popular expression in France, under which is comprehended every kind of disease—and particularly vague pains—occurring after delivery; all being ascribed to diffusion or deposition of milk.

Lait de Terre, ('milk of earth,') Magnesiæ carbonas—L. de Vache, Milk of the cow—L. Virginale, Virgin's milk.

Laiteron Doux, (from lait, from its milky juice.) Sonchus oleraceus.

Laiteux, Lactic.

Laitiat, ([F.] from lait.) Sour whey in which different wild fruits have been macerated. Said to be much used in the Jura as a refreshing drink.

Laitue Ordinaire, (from lait, from its milky juice.) Lettuce—L. Sauvage, Lactuca scariola—L. Scariola, Lactuca scariola—L. Vireuse, Lactuca virosa.

La'ity, La'ici, (λαος, 'the people,') Formerly, and generally at the present day, the people as distinguished from the clergy. Frequently, however, employed in the sense of the people as distinguished from those of the other learned professions. A layman is one of the laity.

Lake'weed, Polygonum hydropiper.

La'lia, (λαλία, 'speech,') Voice, articulated.

Lalla'tion, Lalla'tio, Lambdacis'mus, Labdacis'mus, Lul'labi speech. Sauvages uses this term for a vicious pronunciation, in which the letter L is improperly doubled or softened or substituted for R.

Lalople'gia, (lalía, and πληγή, 'a stroke,') Glossolysis.

Lamac, Acaciæ gummi.

Lambdacis'mus, (from the Greek letter Λ, λαμβδα.) Lallation.

Lamb'doid, Lambdoid'al, Lambdoi'des, Lamb-

do'des, Lambdōi'deus, (A, — λαβδα, — and ειδος, 'shape, resemblance.') Anatomists have given the name LAMBDROID'AL SUTURE, Sutu'ra Lambdoida'lis seu lambdōi'des seu lambdōi'dea seu pro'ra, to the suture, formed by the parietal bones and the occipital, because it resembles the letter A (lambda) of the Greeks. It is the Occip'ito-parietal suture, Suture occipitale, (Ch.) In this suture, the ossa Wormiana are most frequently met with; and the denticulations are most distinctly marked.

Lambeau, Flap.

Lambiti'vum, (lambere, 'to lick.') Eclectos.

Lamb'kill, Kalmia latifolia.

Lamb'killer, Andromeda mariana.

Lamb's Quar'ters, Chenopodium album.

Lame, Lamina — l. Cornée, Tænia semicircularis — l. Ruyschienne, Ruyschiana tunica — l. Vitree, see Table.

Lamel'la, Lamina — l. Plana, Planum os.

Lamel'lar, Lamello'sus, Lam'inated, (F.) Lamellé, Lamel'leux, Lamineux, composed of thin laminae or leaves — as the Lamellar or laminated tissue; i. e. the areolar tissue.

Lamellé, Lamellar.

Lamel'leux, Lamellar.

Lame'ness, Claudication.

LAME'NESS, U'TERINE. A condition of the lower extremity induced by pressure on the nerves situate within the pelvis.

Lamier, Lamium album.

Lam'ina, Lamel'la, ('a plate,') (F.) Lame. A thin, flat part of a bone, a plate or table, as the cribriform lamina or plate of the ethmoid bone. Lamina and Lamella are generally used synonymously; although the latter is properly a diminutive of the former.

LAM'INA CILIA'RIS, Ciliary zone.

LAM'INA CINE'REA, L. Termina'lis. A thin layer of gray substance which forms the anterior part of the inferior boundary of the third ventricle of the brain.

LAM'INA COR'NEA, Tænia Tari'ni. A yellowish band or a thickening of the lining membrane of the ventricle, by which the vena corporis striati is overlaid in the lateral ventricle of the brain.

LAM'INA CRIBRO'SA, Cribri-form lamella — l. Cribrosa ossis ethmoidi, see Criblé.

LAM'INA DENTICULA'TA, Haben'ula inter'na seu sulca'ta, Zo'na denticula'ta, Lim'bus lam'inæ spira'lis. A remarkable covering of the outer fifth of the vestibular surface of the osseous zone, called denticulata, from a beautiful series of teeth, which form its outer margin, and project into the vestibular scala of the cochlea. The mem'brane of Reiss'ner, membra'na vestibula'ris, arises from the inner part of the limbus, and extends outwards, at a considerable angle with the osseous spiral lamina.

LAM'INA ELAS'TIC. Bowman describes an anterior and a posterior elastic lamina investing the fibrous part of the cornea, the former transparent, glossy, and structureless, the latter the membrane of Demours or Descemet. See Aqueous humor.

LAM'INA PERITONÆ'I EXTER'NA. The outer lamina or fold of the peritonæum.

LAM'INA PRI'MA CU'TIS, Epidermis.

LAM'INA RETICULA'TA seu RETICULA'RIS, see Corti.

LAM'INA SPIRA'LIS, Sep'tum sca'læ seu coch'leæ audito'rie. A partition between the scalæ of the cochlea. The largest part of this, next the modiolus, is formed of bone. The remainder, or that part next the opposite side of the scalæ, is composed of a cartilaginous membrane, called by Val-salva, Zo'na seu Zo'nula Coch'leæ. By some anatomists the lamina is divided into a Zona os' sea and Z. mol'lis. By others it is considered to consist of four laminae, when examined with a strong glass: a Zona os'cea next to the modiolus — a Zona coria'cea seu choria'cea seu media'na seu ner'cea, on the outer side of this: a Zona vesicula'ris — and a Zona membrana'cea, which is, perhaps, the lining membrane of the cochlea. The middle portion of the membranous zone, between the inner and the outer clear belt is the Portio seu Zo'na seu Haben'ula pectina'ta. At the apex of the cochlea, the lamina spiralis terminates by a pointed hook-shaped process, ham'ulus, rostrum. The Crista Spiralis is the portion of the tympanal wall of the ductus cochlearis, resting on the lamina spiralis, and is continuous with the membrana basilaris.

LAM'INA OF A VER'TE'BRA, see Vertebra.

Lam'inæ Dorsa'les, Dors'al lam'inæ. Two oval masses on each side of the primitive groove of the embryo, which approach so as to form a groove, in which are lodged the future brain and spinal marrow.

LAM'INÆ SPONGIO'SÆ NASI, Turbinate bones.

LAM'INÆ VENTRA'LES, L. viscera'les. Thickened prolongations of the serous layer of the germinal membrane, which, by their union, form the anterior wall of the trunk of the new being.

Lam'inar Mem'brane, Membrane, laminar.

Lamina'ria Digita'ta, Tan'gle, Sea tangle, Sea girdles. One of the Algæ eaten in Scotland, and hawked about the streets with the Pepperdulse. It has been proposed to make tents and bougies of it. The tents have been employed in stricture of the lachrymal passages and to dilate the neck of the uterus.

The leaf of a seaweed — a species of Laminaria — is employed in the Himalayas under the name of goitre leaf; so called because chewed by the inhabitants where goitre prevails.

Lam'inated, Lamellar.

Lamineux, Lamellar.

La'mium Al'bum, (from lama, 'a ditch or bog,' because often found there, [?]) L. folio'sum, Urti'ca mor'tua, Galeop'sis, Archangel'ica, Dead or White Archangel Nettle, (F.) Ortie blanche ou morte, (Sc.) Day'nettle, (F.) Lamier. Ord. Labiatae. Infusions of this plant were formerly recommended in uterine hemorrhage and leucorrhœa.

LA'MIUM AMPLEXICAUL'É, Dead Nettle, Henbit; naturalized; flowering from May to October; is regarded as tonic, diaphoretic, and laxative.

Lamotte, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These thermal springs are in the department of Isère, France. Temperature, 184°.

Lampourde, Xanthium.

Lampropho'nus, (λαμροφωνος, from λαμπος, 'clear,' and φωνη, 'voice.') Having a clear voice.

Lamps'na, (λαψαρη,) Lapsana.

Lam'pyris (gen. Lampyr'idis) Noctil'uca, (λαμπυρις, from λαμπω, 'I shine,' and ουρα, 'a tail.') Cicindela.

La'na Philosopho'rum, ('wool of philosophers.') Zinci oxidum.

Lana'ria, (from lana, 'wool,') Saponaria, Verbascum nigrum.

Lance de Mauriceau, (F.) An instrument invented by Mauriceau for perforating the head of the fetus. A perforator.

Lance'let, Lancet.

Lance'ola, Lancet.

Lan'cet, Lance'ola, Lancet'ta, Sehaste'rion, Scal'pum chirur'gicum, Lance'let, Phle'me, Fleam, (Prov.) Fame, (F.) Lancette, (dim. of lancea, 'a lance or spear.') A surgical instrument used in the operation of phlebotomy. It is composed of two parts — the handle, (F.) Chasse, and the blade, (F.)

Lame. The former is made of two small plates of ivory, bone, or shell, movable on the blade, for whose preservation they are intended. The blade is formed of well-polished steel. Lancets are made of different shapes; some being broad-shouldered—others, spear-pointed. The French distinguished three kinds: 1. Lancette à grain d'orge, which, on account of the almost oval shape of its point, makes a large opening. 2. The L. à langue de serpent, which is very narrow towards the point; and 3. L. à grain d'avoine, which holds a medium station between the two former, and is generally preferred.

The Abscess Lancet is merely a large lancet for the purpose of opening abscesses.

The employment of a lancet for opening abscesses, &c., is called Lancing.

Lancet'ia, Lancet.

Lancette, Lancet.

Lancettier, (F.) A lancet case.

Lancinant, Lancinating.

Lancinating, Lancinans, (lancinare, lancinatum,—from lancea, 'a lance,'—'to strike or thrust through,') (F.) Lancinant, (substantive, Élancement.) A species of pain which consists in lancinations or shootings, similar to those that would be produced by the introduction of a sharp instrument into the suffering part. It is especially in cancer that this kind of pain is felt.

Lanc'ing, see Lancet—1. the Gums, Déchaussement, see Gum lancet.

Lanci'si, Nerve of, see Corpus callosum.

Land's End, Climate of. The climate of the Land's End, in England, resembles that of the south of Devonshire, but is more relaxing. It is considered to be most likely to prove beneficial in consumptive cases in which the disease is accompanied by an irritated state of the pulmonary mucous membrane, producing a dry cough. Where the system is relaxed, and the secretion from the lungs considerable, the climate, it is conceived, will generally prove injurious. As a brumal retreat, the southern coast of Devonshire would seem to be preferable to it.

Langdebeef, ('ox tongue,') Anchusa officinalis.

Langeac, Min'eral Waters of. Acidulous mineral waters at Langeac, in the department of Haute Loire, France. They are employed as refrigerant, aperient, and diuretic. They contain carbonic acid, carbonates of soda and magnesia, and a little iron.

Langenschwalbach, Schwalbach.

Langii A'qua Epilep'tica, Epilep'tic Water of Langui, formerly employed against epilepsy. It was composed of the flowers of convallaria and lavender, Spanish wine, cinnamon, nutmeg, mistletoe, peony and dittany roots, long pepper, cubeba, and rosemary flowers.

Langue, (from lingua,) Tongue—1. Abaisseur de la, Glossocatochus—1. de Carpe, Fish-tongue, see Lever—1. de Cerf, Asplenium scolopendrium—1. de Cheval, Ruscus hypoglossum—1. de Chien, Cynoglossum—1. de Serpent, Ophioglossum vulgatum.

Langueur, Languor.

Lan'guor, Aph'esis, Faint'ness, (F.) Langueur. A species of atony, depression or debility, which generally comes on slowly.

Lang'wort, (Prov.) Veratrum album.

Lania'rii Den'tes, (F.) Dents Laniaires, (from laniare, 'to tear,') The canine teeth.

Lank, (Prov.) Inguen.

Lan'tina, Sage'tree, Blue'berry, (F.) Cailleau. The leaves of this indigenous plant form a fine-scented tea, like L. Cam'ara or Baha'ma Tea, and L. Pseudothe'a or Brazil' Tea. The tea is used as a diaphoretic.

Lantho'pia, (from λανθάνω, 'I remain concealed,' and opium,) see Porphyrroxin.

Lanth'opine, see Porphyrroxin.

Lanu'go, gen. Lanu'ginis, Pi'li cu'tis, Plu'ma, (lana, 'wool,') The soft, fine hair on different parts of the body, especially in the young.

LANU'GO PRI'MA, Geneias—1. Pudendorum, Pubes—1. Siliquæ hirsutæ, see Dolichos pruriens.

Lanuvium, (from lana, 'wool,') Vulva.

Laôn'ica Cura'tio seu Cu'ra, (λαος, 'the people,') A popular mode of treating the gout in the middle ages, "which consisted in the employment of local applications proper for evacuating the morbid matter." [?]

La'os, Tin.

Lapac'ticus, (λαπαζειν, 'to evacuate,') Cathartic, Laxative.

Lapag'ma, gen. Lapag'matis, (λαπαγμα,) An evacuation.

La'para, (λαπαρά,) Abdomen, Flanks, Lumbi.

Lapareuterotom'ia, Laparoenterotomy.

Laparoce'lé, La'parocèle, (lapara, and κηλη, 'rupture,') Lum'bar Her'nia, through a separation of the fibres of the quadratus lumborum, and a protrusion of the aponeurosis of the transverse muscle on the outside of the mass common to the sacrolumbalis and longissimus dorsi.

Laparcystotom'ia, (lapara, κυστις, 'bladder,' and τομή, 'section,') See Lithotomy.

Laparoëlytrotom'ia, (lapara, ελυτρίον, 'vagina,' and τομή, 'section,') Cæsarean section.

Laparoenterot'omy, Lap'aroenterotom'ia, Lapareuterotom'ia, (lapara, εντέρον, 'intestine,' and τομή, 'incision,') The operation of opening the abdomen and intestinal canal for the removal of disease.

Laparoscop'ia, (lapara, and σκοπεω, 'I examine,') Abdominoscopia.

Laparot'omy, Laparotom'ia, (lapara, and τομή, 'section,') Gastrotomy, especially when executed in the lumbar region. See Gastrotomy.

Lap'athus, (λαπαθος,) Rumex acutus.

Lap'athum, (λαπαθον,) L. acutum, Rumex acutus—1. Aquaticum, Rumex hydrolapathum—1. Chinese, Rheum—1. Hortense, Rumex patientia—1. Orientalis, Rheum—1. Pratense, Rumex acetosus—1. Sanguineum, Rumex sanguineus—1. Scutatum, Rumex scutatus—1. Sylvestre, Rumex acutus, R. obtusifolius—1. Unctuosum, Chenopodium bonus Henricus.

Lapax'is, (λαπαξις,) Evacuation.

La'pé, (λαπη,) Mucus.

Lapidil'lum, (lapis, gen. lapidis, 'a stone,') Blasius has given this name to a kind of scoop used for extracting stone from the bladder.

Lapilla'tio, (from lapillus,) Lithia.

Lapil'li (pl. of Lapillus) Glan'dulæ Pineæ'lis, see Pineal gland.

Lapil'lus, (dim. of lapis, 'a stone,') A small stone; gravel; a grain of sand.

La'pis, gen. Lap'idis, Calculus—1. Accipitrum, Hieracites—1. Ærosus, Calamina—1. Ammoniaci, see Ammoniac gum—1. Animalis, Blood—1. Armenius, Melochites—1. Aureus, Urine—1. Bezoardicus, Bezoar—1. Cæruleus, Cupri sulphas—1. Calaminaris, Calamina—1. Carneolus, Cornelian—1. Causticus, Potassa cum calce, Potassa fusa—1. Collymus, Ætites—1. Contrayervæ, Pulvis contrayervæ compositus—1. Cyanus, L. lazuli.

LA'PIS DIVI'NUS, L. Ophthalmicus seu Ophthalmicus Sancti Ivesii, Cuprum alumina'tum, (F.) Pierre divine, (Cupri sulphat., Alumin., Potass. nitrat., $\bar{a}\bar{a}$ \bar{z} j. Melt together, adding at the end Camphor., \bar{z} ss.) Employed to make an eye-water, \bar{z} j. ad aquæ, \bar{z} iv.

LA'PIS FULMIN'EUS, Ceraunion—1. Hematites, Hæmatites—1. Heracleus, Magnet—1. Infernalis, Argentii nitras—1. Infernalis alkalinus, Potassa fusa—1. Infernalis sive septicus, Potassa cum calce—1. Judaicus, Judaus (lapis).

LA'PIS LA'ZULI, L. Cy'anus, Azulci, Laz'ulite, (F.) Pierre d'azur. A stone, of a beautiful blue color; opaque; close-grained; fracture, dull.

It is composed of silex, alumina, carbonate and sulphate of lime, oxide of iron, and water. It was formerly looked upon as a purgative and emetic, and given in epilepsy.

LAPIS MALUCEN'SIS, Bezoard of the Indian porcupine—l. Nauticus, Magnet—l. Ophthalmicus, l. Divinus—l. Ophthalmicus St. Ivesii, l. Divinus—l. Phœnicites, Judæus (lapis)—l. Porcinus, Bezoard of the Indian porcupine—l. Prunellæ, Potassæ nitræ fusus sulphatis paucillo mixtus—l. Pumicis, Pumex—l. Sardius, Cornelian—l. Septicus, Causticum commune, Potassa fusa—l. Specularis, Septum lucidum—l. Syderitis, Magnet—l. Syriacus, Judæus (lapis)—l. Vini, Potassæ supertartras impurus.

Lap'pa, (λαβειν, 'to lay hold of,') Aretium lappa, Galium aparine, Lippitudo—l. Minor, Xanthium.

Lap'pula Hepat'ica, Agrimony.

Lap'sana, (λαψανη,) Lamp'sana, Napi'um, Papilla'ris her'ba, Dock'cresses, Nip'plewort, (Sc.) Bol'gan leaves, (F.) Lampsane, Herbe aux Mamelles. This plant is a lactescent bitter. It has been chiefly employed, however, as an external application to sore nipples, &c.

Lap'sus (gen. Lapsūs) Pilo'rum, ('falling of hairs,') Alopecia.

Lag, Laqueus.

Laque, Lacca.

La'quear, gen. Laquea'ris, ('an arched roof or ceiling,') Lacunar.

LA'QUEAR VAGI'NÆ, Fun'dus Vagi'næ, (laquear, 'the inward roof of a house,') The part of the vagina in which the cervix uteri terminates. See Vagina.

La'queus, ('a noose, a snare,') Fu'nis. A cord, ligature or bandage, with running knots;—a Noose, a loop. A fillet, Bro'chos, Pach'etos, (F.) Lac, Laq ou Lacq. The term is applied to a bandage or fillet of any kind, attached by means of a loop upon any part, with the view of fixing it; as in certain cases of labor, where a hand or foot presents; or to facilitate extension in luxations and fractures.

Also:—A prominent band in the brain, Lemnis'cus, behind the brachium posterius of the corpora quadrigemina, which marks the course of the superior division of the fasciculus olivaris.

LA'QUEUS GUT'TURIS, 'Noose of the throat.' Violent inflammation of the tonsils, in which the patient appears as if suffocated by a noose. According to some, gangrenous cynanche.

Larch, Pinus larix.

Lard, (from lardum,) Adeps, A. præparatus—l. Benzoated, Unguentum benzoini.

Lardacé, Lardaceous.

Larda'ceous, Larda'ceus, Lar'deus, Lard'iform, Lardifor'mis, (F.) Lardacé, (from lardum,) An epithet given to certain organic alterations in the textures, whose aspect and consistence resemble lard or wax, (F.) Tissus lardacés. They constitute what has been termed the Larda'ceous or chol'esterine Disease, lardac'eous, wax'y, cell'ulose, albu'minoid or albuminous, and amyloid degenera'tion, or infiltra'tion, Ba'cony disease, Mor'bus Larda'ceus seu amyloï'des seu cé'reus, (F.) Maladie Amyloïde ou Lardacée. From their waxy appearance, the pathological condition has been called Cero'ma. The organs most apt to be affected by it are the liver, kidneys, spleen, and lymphatic glands, but it may occur in any soft part.

Lar'deus, Lardaceous.

Lar'diform, Lardaceous.

Lar'dum, Adeps.

Large, (from largus,) Broad.

Lar'idum, Adeps.

Lar'ix, gen. Lar'iceis, (λαριξ, gen. λαρικος,) Pinus larix—l. Communis, Pinus larix—l. Decidua, Pinus larix—l. Europæa, Pinus larix—l. Pyramidalis, Pinus larix.

Lark'spur, Branch'ing, Delphinium consolida.

Larme, (from lacryma,) Tear.

Larmoiment, (from larmoyer, 'to shed tears,') Epiphora.

Larnaudés, Disinfecting Liquid of, see Zinci sulphas.

Laroche' Posay', Min'eral Wa'ters of. Simple sulphurous waters in the department of Vienne, France. Season, from the 1st of June to the 15th of September.

Lar'rea Mexica'na, (after J. A. De Larrea, a Spanish savant,) L. glutinosum, Cre'asote plant, Order, Zygophyllaceæ. A shrub, growing in Arkansas, Southern Texas, New Mexico, and Northern Mexico, which abounds in a strong-scented resinous matter, and is used, externally and internally, in rheumatism, and in syphilitic and other pains.

Lar'va, Mask. Also, the larve, grub, or vermiform condition of an insect; the first change it experiences after leaving the ovum. Larves of insects are occasionally developed in the intestinal canal from ova swallowed. See Ectozaa.

Larva'ceous. Masked. A term applied to fevers,—larvaceous fevers, gout,—larvaceous gout, arthrit'is larva'ta. See Masked.

Larve, Mask.

Larvé, Masked.

Laryngé, Laryngeal.

Larynge'al or Laryn'geal, Larynge'us, (F.) Laryngé, Laryngien, (from larynx,) That which belongs to the larynx.

LARYNGE'AL ARTERIES are given off from the thyroid arteries.

LARYNGE'AL NERVES, (F.) Nerfs Laryngés, are two in number—a superior and an inferior. The superior laryngeal nerve is given off from the trunk of the pneumogastric, at the upper and deep part of the neck. It passes downwards and inwards, behind the internal carotid artery, and divides into two secondary branches; the one, external, which distributes its filaments, on the outside of the larynx, to the sternothyroid, hyothyroid, constrictor inferior, cricothyroid muscles, &c. The other, the internal, which crosses the thyrohyoid membrane, and gives filaments to the epiglottis, the mucous membranes of the pharynx and larynx, to the arytenoid gland; the arytenoid and cricothyroid muscles, and ultimately intermingles with the inferior laryngeal nerve. The inferior laryngeal nerves or recu'r-rents, Nervi reversi'vi, Rameaux trachéaux, (Ch.) arise from the trunk of the pneumogastric within the thorax. They ascend in the furrow, which separates the trachea from the œsophagus, to be distributed on the neck, after having been reflected—the left around the arch of the aorta; the right around the corresponding subclavian. They send off filaments to the cardiac plexuses; to the pareties of the œsophagus and trachea; to the thyroid gland; to the inferior constrictor of the pharynx; the posterior and lateral cricoarytenoid and thyroarytenoid muscles; and to the mucous membrane of the pharynx and larynx.

LARYNGE'AL PRTHI'SIS, Phthisis, laryngeal.

LARYNGE'AL POUCHES. Small culs-de-sac, which lead from the anterior part of each ventricle of the larynx upwards, for the space of half an inch, between the superior ligaments on the inner side and the thyroid cartilage on the outer, reaching as high as the upper border of that cartilage at the sides of the epiglottis. Numerous small glands open into them.

LARYNGE'AL SOUND, Laryngeche.

LARYNGE'AL VEINS open into the internal jugular. Winslow gives the name laryngeal to the superior thyroid artery.

LARYNGE'AL VOICE, see Voice.

Larynge'chê, (laryngo, and ἦχη or ἦχος, 'sound.') The laryngeal sound heard by the stethoscope during breathing and speaking.

Laryngemphrax'is, (laryngo, and εμφραξις, 'obstruction.') Obstruction of the larynx from any cause.

Laryngien, Laryngeal.

Laryngis'mus. Spasm of the glottis, giving occasion to contraction or closure of the opening.

LARYNGIS'MUS STRID'ULUS, Asthma thymicum.

Laryngit'is, gen. Laryngitidis, (laryngo, and itis.) Inflammatio Laryngis, Cynan'chê seu Angi'na laryngé'a, Inflammation of the Lar'ynx, (F.) Laryngite, Catarrhe laryngien, Angine laryngé. This disease, in some measure, resembles croup; but is usually devoid of that peculiar sonorous inspiration which attends the latter. There is, also, pain upon pressing the larynx; and, while laryngitis is a disease of more advanced life, croup attacks children. The membraniform exudation is, also, absent; probably because the inflammation being seated above the glottis, the coagulable lymph is readily expectorated. It requires the most active treatment. Various forms of laryngitis have been described, such as Catarrhal laryngitis, acute and chronic; Chronic glan'dular laryngitis, or Follicular disease of the lar'ynx,—the Dyspho'nia clerico'rum or Cler'gyman's sorethroat; Phthis'ical laryngitis, or Larynge'al phthi'sis, Diffuse cellular laryngitis, Acute œdem'atous laryngitis, Gout'y laryngitis, &c.

Simple Laryngitis is called by some mu'cous Laryngitis, Laryngitis acu'ta seu mucosa acu'ta, (F.) Laryngite muqueuse, to distinguish it from submucous Laryngitis or Œdema of the glottis.

Chronic Laryngitis is generally regarded as synonymous with laryngeal phthisis; but it may exist independently.

LARYNGITIS ACU'TA, Laryngitis—l. Chronic, see Phthisis laryngea—l. Crouposa, Cynanche trachealis—l. Exudativa, Cynanche trachealis—l. Membranacea, Cynanche trachealis—l. Mucosa acuta, Laryngitis—l. Mucous, Laryngitis (simple)—l. Œdémateuse, Œdema of the glottis—l. Polyposa, Cynanche trachealis—l. Pseudomembranacea, Cynanche trachealis—l. Sero-purulenta, Œdema of the glottis—l. Spasmodica, see Cynanche trachealis—l. Submucous, Œdema of the glottis—l. et Tracheitis chronica, see Phthisis laryngea—l. et Tracheitis infantilis, Cynanche trachealis.

Laryn'go, (from λαρυγξ, gen. λαρυγγος.) in composition, larynx.

Laryngoc'acê, (laryngo, and κακος, 'bad,') Cynanche trachealis.

Laryngocatar'rus, Catarrhus laryngis seu laryngé'us et trache'al'is, (F.) Catarrhe laryngé. Catarrh affecting the larynx and trachea more especially, as indicated by alteration of the voice—hoarseness—itching and sensation of burning in those parts; short cough and expectoration, &c.

Laryngo-et-trac'heo-Phthi'sis, Phthisis laryngea.

Laryngog'raphy, Laryngograph'ia, (laryngo, and γραφη, 'a description.') An anatomical description of the larynx.

Laryngol'ogy, (laryngo, and λογος, 'discourse.') A treatise on the larynx.

Laryngoparal'ysis, see Aphonia.

Laryngoph'ony, Laryngopho'nia, Tracheoph'ony, Larynge'al voice, Tra'cheal voice, (laryngo, and φωνη, 'voice.') The sound heard in health, when the stethoscope is placed over the larynx or trachea at the time a person speaks. The voice appears to pass immediately up to the ear of the auscultator. A similar physical sign exists when there is a cavity in the lungs, and the instrument is placed over it while the patient speaks. See Pectoriloquy.

Laryngophthi'sis, Phthisis laryngea.

Laryngoscope, Lar'ynx spec'ulum, Spec'ulum laryn'gis. An instrument on the same principle as the ophthalmoscope, which, by means of a mirror, enables the larynx to be inspected.

(The mode of employing this valuable aid to diagnosis, and the appearances presented on laryngoscopic examination, will be found in appropriate works on the subject.)

Laryngoscopy, Laryngoscop'ia, Laryngoskop'ia, (laryngo, and σκοπω, 'I view.') Inspection of the larynx.

In the year 1829 a speculum of the kind was exhibited to the Hunterian Society of London by Dr. B. Babington, under the name of Glottiscope.

Laryngospas'mus, Asthma thymicum.

Laryngos'tasis, (laryngo, and στασις, 'a settling, or stagnation.') Cynanche trachealis.

Laryngostenosis, (laryngo, and στενωσις, 'contraction.') Contraction or narrowness of the larynx.

Laryngot'omy, Laryngotom'ia, (laryngo, and τομή, 'incision.') A surgical operation, which consists in opening the larynx, either to extract a foreign body, or to remedy an obstruction of the glottis. The operation is, sometimes, erroneously called Bronchot'omy and Tracheot'omy.

Laryngotracheit'is, Cynanche trachealis—l. Tracheitis, with Diphtheritic exudation, Cynanche trachealis.

Lar'ynx, gen. Laryng'is, (λαρυγξ, gen. λαρυγγος.) Caput seu Oper'culum seu Init'ium seu F'undus superior seu Ter'minus superior seu Pars pri'ma as'peræ arte'riæ. The apparatus of voice is situate at the superior and anterior part of the neck; and at the top of the trachea, with which it communicates. It is composed of four cartilages,—the thyroid, cricoid, and two arytenoid; is moved by a number of muscles, and lined by a mucous membrane, having certain membranous reflections, constituting the superior and the inferior ligaments of the glottis, &c.

The superior or pharyngeal opening of the larynx is called Os'tium pharynge'um seu Ad'itus laryn'gis, Orific'ium super'ius laryn'gis, Hyperglot'tis, Ri'ma hyperglot'tica, and Fissu'ra larynge'a pharyn'gis.

The larynx is destined to give passage to the air, in the act of respiration, and to impress upon it certain modifications, which constitute voice. Its dimensions vary in different individuals. In men, it is always larger, and situate lower, than in women.

LAR'YNX, PELLIC'ULAR OR PLAS'TIC INFLAMMATION OF THE, Cynanche trachealis.

LAR'YNX SPEC'ULUM, Laryngoscope.

Las'anum, (λασανον.) Aph'edra, Aph'edron, Sella familiar'ica, (F.) Chaise percée. A close stool.

Lasciv'ia, (from lascivus.) Satyriasis.

Lasciv'itas, Satyriasis.

Lasci'vus, Libidinous.

La'ser, gen. La'seris, Laserpitium—l. à Larges feuilles, Laserpitium latifolium.

Laserpit'ium, La'ser, Sil'phium, σπος σιλφιον. A term applied, anciently, both to a plant and its juice, regarding the nature of neither of which we possess any precise information. Bentley, Laurence, Geoffroi, &c., regard it to have been the same as assafoetida;—Theophrastus, Dioscorides, and the ancient scholiast of Aristophanes, however, by assigning a sweet and agreeable fla-from Persia—the latter being the most valuable. The Laserpitium is called by Avicenna, Altihit.

LASERPITIUM ASPERUM, L. latifolium.

LASERPITIUM LATIFOLIUM, L. asperum, Gentiana alba, White Gentian, Cervaria alba, (F.) Laser à larges feuilles. The root of this plant is bitter and tonic.

LASERPITIUM MONTANUM, L. siler.

LASERPITIUM SILER, L. trifoliatum seu montanum, Seseli, Seselis, Siler montanum seu lancifolium, Heartwort, Sermountain. The seeds and roots are possessed of aromatic properties.

LASERPITIUM TRIFOLIATUM, L. siler.

Lask, Diarrhoea.

Lassitude Oculaire, Copyopia.

Lassitu'do, (lassus, 'tired,') Copos.

Last, Inguen.

Lat'ebra, (latebra, 'a hiding place,') Vitelline Cavity. A spherical swelling formed in an impregnated egg by the dipping down of the white yolk into the centre of the yellow yolk.

La'tens in O're, ('lying hid in the mouth,') Pterygoideus internus.

La'tent, La'tens, (latere, to lie hid,') 'lying hid,' 'concealed.' An epithet applied to certain diseases or states of disease, in which the symptoms are so concealed and obscure, morbi occulti, as to escape the observation of the physician. Thus, we say latent inflammation, latent period of small-pox.

Lat'erad, (latus, gen. lateris, 'the side,') A term used adverbially by Dr. Barclay to signify 'towards the lateral aspect.'

Lat'eral As'pect, see Mesial.

Laterit'ious, Laterit'ius, Lateric'ius, (F.) Briqueté, (later, gen. lateris, 'a brick,') An epithet applied to the brickdustlike sediment, occasionally met with in the urine of persons afflicted with fever, Sedimentum urinae lateric'ium; — (F.) Urine briqueté. See Urate.

Lateroflex'ion, Lateroflex'io, (latus, gen. lateris, and flexio, 'a bending,') A bending to one side,—as of the uterus.

Lat'ero-verse'ion (F.), Lat'erover'sio. A turning or version — as of the uterus — to one side.

Latescen'tis (gen. of Lates'ens) Chor'dæ Mus'culus, ('muscle of the hidden cord,') Palmaris longus.

La'tex (gen. of Lati'cis) Ni'veus, ('snowy liquor,') Milk.

Lath'yris, Euphorbia lathyris.

Lath'yris. Several varieties of Lathyrus are known in Europe, Spain especially; the seeds of which, when thoroughly ripe, are narcotic, producing also excessive headache. If young and tender, they are an article of diet.

Latib'ulum, (from lateo, 'I lie hid,') The foyer of a febrile poison; whence it spreads to every part to induce a paroxysm. See Clavier.

Lat'ica, (from lateo, 'I lie hid,') Amphimer'ina lat'ica of Sauvages. A species of quotidian remittent, whose paroxysms are very long, and which is accompanied with latent or slightly developed fever,—whence its name.

Lat'ices Lac'tei, Receptaculum chyli.

Latis'simus Col'li, (superlative of latus, 'broad,') Platysma myoides.

LATISSIMUS DORSI, Anisalp'tor, Aniter'sor, Bra'chium mo'vens quart'us, (F.) Lumbo-huméral, (Ch.) Dorsi-lombo-sacro-huméral, Muscle grand dorsal, M. très large du dos. A flat muscle; broad, especially below; thin; quadrilateral; and situate at the posterior, lateral, and inferior region of the trunk. It is attached to the posterior half of the outer lip of the crest of the ilium; to the posterior surface of the sacrum; to the spinous processes of the six or seven last dorsal vertebrae, to all of those of the loins, and to the last four false ribs, and is inserted by a strong tendon at the posterior edge of the bicipital groove of the humerus. Its upper fibres are almost horizontal: the middle very long and oblique upwards and outwards; and the anterior almost vertical. This muscle carries the arm backwards, depressing it, and making it turn on its axis. It also draws backwards and downwards the prominence of the shoulder. When, suspended by an arm, we make an effort to raise ourselves, it draws the trunk towards the arm. It can, also, raise the ribs by assuming its fixed point on the humerus, and become an inspiratory muscle.

Laur'us, Laur'us nobilis, Daph'ne, Laur'el, Sweet Bay, (F.) Laurier, L. noble ou des cuisines ou commun ou d'Apollon. Nat. Ord. Lauracæ.

The leaves and berries, Laurus (Ph. L.), have a sweet, fragrant smell, and an aromatic, astringent taste. Sweet bay has been advised as a stomachic and carminative, but is now rarely used. It is, sometimes, employed as a fomentation and in gylsters; and the berries are an ingredient in the Emplas'trum Cumi'ni. The French Codex (1866) has a Huile de Fruits de Laurier.

LAURUS ÆSTIVA'LIS, L. benzoin—L. Alexandrina angustifolia, Ruscus hypoglossum.

LAURUS BEN'ZOÏN, Benzoin odoriferum, Laurus pseudobenzoin seu æstivalis, Spice wood, Spice bush, Ben'jamin bush, All'spice bush, Wild all-spice, Spice berry, Fe'ver wood, Fever bush. An indigenous shrub, growing in moist, shady places, in all parts of the United States; flowering early in spring. All parts of the shrub have a spicy, agreeable flavor, which is strongest in the bark and berries. An infusion or decoction of the small branches is used in popular practice as a vermifuge, and an agreeable drink in low fevers. The bark has been used in intermittents; the berries, dried and powdered, for allspice. The oil of the berries is used as an excitant.

LAURUS CAMP'HORA, see Camphor—L. Canella, L. Cassia.

LAURUS CAS'SIA, L. Canell'a, Per'sea cassia. The species of laurus which yields the Ca'sia, Cas'sia, Canell'a, Cassia lignea seu cinnamo'mea, C. lignea Malabar'ica, Cor'tex Canell'æ Malabar'icæ, Cortex cras'sior, Xy'lo-cas'sia, Canell'a Malabar'ica et Javen'sis, C. Cuba'na, Ar'bor Juda'ica, Canellifera Malabar'ica, Cinnamo'mum Malabar'icum seu In'dicum seu Sinen'se, Calihacha canell'a, Wild Cin'namon, Malabar' Cinnamon, (F.) Cannelle de Malabar ou de Java ou de la Chine ou des Indes ou de Coromandel, C. fausse, C. matte, Casse en bois ou aromatique. The bark and leaves abound with the flavor of cinnamon, for which they may be substituted; but they are much weaker. The unopened flowerbuds are used in the same manner. Aqua Cas'siæ, Water of Cassia, prepared by distillation, was official in the Edinburgh Pharmacopœia.

LAURUS CINNAMOMI'DES, Nectandra cinnamomoides.

LAURUS CINNAMOMUM, Per'sea cinnamo'mum, Cinnamo'mum, C. Zeylan'icum, Darse'ni, Darsi'ni, Cin'namon, Xy'locinnamo'mum, Cu'rdo Canell'a, (Sc.) Cannel, (F.) Cannelle, Baume de Cannelle, Cannelle officinal ou de Ceylon. Cinnamon bark, which is obtained, also, from Cinnamo'mum aromaticum, is stimulant and carminative, and is employed, chiefly, as a grateful aromatic, to cover the taste of nauseous remedies. Dose, gr. x. to ℥j. The Flowers, called Cas'siæ Flo'res in the shops, possess aromatic and astringent virtues, and may be used wherever cinnamon is required. The volatile oil of the bark—O'leum Cinnamo'mi—Oil of Cinnamon, is official in the Pharm. U. S., 1873.

LAURUS CUBEBA, Piper cubeba—L. Culilaban, L. Culilawan.

LAURUS CULILAWAN, L. Culil'aban seu Caryophyllus, Cinnamo'mum Culil'awan. The tree that affords the Cor'tex Culilawan seu Culilaban, Culilawan, Culitlawan, Cortex caryophylloides seu Caryophylloides Amboinen'sis. This bark resembles the sassafras in appearance and properties, and is used in Java as a condiment.

LAURUS SASSAFRAS, Per'sea sas'safras, Sassafras, S. officina'le, Cor'nus mas odora'ta, Anhuiba, Aguefree, Aguetree, (F.) Pavanne. Indigenous in the United States. Sassafras wood and root, Sassafras Ra'dix, and especially the bark of the root, Sassafras Radi'cis Cor'tex (Ph. U. S. 1863), Sassafras (Ph. U. S., 1873), have been considered stimulant, sudorific, and diuretic. The virtues depend upon an essential oil, O'leum Sas'safras, the odor of which is not unlike that of fennel. It has been used in cutaneous diseases, chronic rheumatism, &c., in the form of infusion, which has also been taken as tea. See Saloop.

The pith of the stems, Sassafras medull'a, (Ph. U. S.), abounds in gummy matter, which it readily imparts to water, forming a limpid mucilage, which is much employed as a collyrium in ophthalmia, and as a drink in dysentery, catarrh, &c. (one drachm of the pith to a pint of boiling water).

LAUTIS'SIMA VI'na. (Superlative of lautus, 'elegant.') Wines were formerly so called, which were strongly impregnated with myrrh.

Ord. Labiatae. The odor of lavender flowers, Lavan'dula (Ph. U. S.), is fragrant and agreeable; taste warm and bitterish—depending upon an essential oil. It has been used as a stimulant; particularly in the form of the oil—O'leum lavan'dulae, (Ph. U. S.) The dried leaves have been employed as an errhine.

The French use, also, LAVAN'DULA STOE'CHAS, Stoe'chas et Sti'chas Arab'ica, French Lav'ender, of which they have a compound syrup, Syrupus de stoe'chadæ compos'itus; given as a pectoral.

LAVAN'DULA LATIFO'LIA, Lavandula, L. Spica. LAVAN'DULA SPI'CA (Linnaeus), L. Latifo'lia, Spica, French Lav'ender, (F.) Lavande, Aspic, Spic, yields the Oil of Spike, O'leum spi'cæ, (F.) Huile d'Aspic ou de Spic, which is used to make varnishes, and as a liniment in paralysis.

Lep'ra, Lep'ira, (λεπρος, 'scaly,') Lepido'sis, Lepri'asis, Lepro'sis, Lepros'itas, Vitili'go, Lep'ra Græco'rum, Her'pes furfuraceus circina'tus, Lep'rosy, Leap'ery, (Sc.) Lepyr, Lipper, (F.) Lèpre, Mal Saint-Main, Dartre furfuracée arrondie. This term has been applied to various affections, very different in character. 1. To the Leprosy of the Jews, East'ern Lep'rosy, Leu'cē, Lepido'sis, Lepri'asis canes'cens, Lep'ra Mosa'ica seu Hebræo'rum, — a variety of the Al'phos or Lep'ra al'phoi'des. The leuce was, generally, not scaly, but consisted of smooth, shining patches, on which the hair turned white and silky, and the skin, with the muscular flesh, lost its sensibility. It was incurable. 2. To the Elephantiasis or Lep'ra of the Arabs, see Elephantiasis; and, 3. To the Lep'ra of the Greeks, which includes all the varieties met with at the present day. It is characterized by scaly patches of different sizes, but having always nearly a circular form. Bateman and Willan describe three chief varieties of this lepra.

1. Lep'ra al'phoi'des, Lepido'sis Lepri'asis al'bida, Al'phos, Morphæ'a al'ba, Vitili'go al'phus, Al'baras al'ba, Al'baras, Al'baros, Lèpre écailléuse of Alibert, White lep'rosy, Al'phous Disease. An affection, characterized by white patches, surrounded by a rose-colored areola, which appears here and there on the surface; depressed in the middle. A blotchy, and not dangerous form of the disease, common at the present day in Arabia, is termed Baras. Under a more hideous form, called Djedam, the joints swell, then sluggish and spreading ulcers form, causing frightful sores on various parts of the body, and death gradually supervenes.
