Pyrolig'neous Ac'id, (πυρ, 'fire,' and lignum, 'wood,') Ac'idum pyroace'ticum seu pyrolig'neum seu pyroligno'sum seu pyroxylicum seu lig'ni pyro-oleo'sum seu ace'ticum empyreumat'icum seu lig'neum seu ligno'rum empyreumat'icum, Pyrolig'nic ac'id, (F.) Acide pyroacétique ou pyrolignique ou pyroligneux, Vinaigre de bois. An acid, obtained by distillation from wood, coal, &c., which was once believed to be of a peculiar character. It is now known to be formed of acetic acid and an empyreumatic oil, from which it may be freed; and, in this state, is sold in commerce for Acetum distillatum, Acetic acid of commerce, Ac'idum ace'ticum e ligno vena'te. It is used for similar purposes as distilled vinegar, and for preserving animal substances. It has also been used as an antiseptic in gangrene and sphacelus, and to foul ulcers; wherever indeed creasote is indicated. — The dose of the impure pyroligneous acid internally is from five to thirty drops, three or four times a day. See Acetum acidum.

Py'rolusite, Manganese, black oxide of.

Pyroma'nia, Empresmoma'nia, Incen'diary monoma'nia, (πυρ, 'fire,' and mania,) Insanity, with an irresistible desire to destroy by fire.

Pyroph'agus, Igniv'orous. (πυρ, 'fire,' and φagω, 'I eat,') One who eats fire. A juggler, who eats substances in a state of ignition.

Pyrophlyc'tis Endem'ica, (πυρ, 'fire,' and phlyctis,) Bouton d'Alep.

Pyrophos'phate, see Pyrophosphoric acid — p. de Fer, Ferri pyrophosphas — p. of Iron, Ferri pyrophosphas.

Pyrophosphor'ic Ac'id. An acid formed by heating phosphoric acid. Of the salts formed by its union with bases, Pyrophosphates, the Pyrophosphate of iron is alone officinal.

Pyro'sis, (from πυρω, 'I burn,') Ptyalis'mus pyros'icus, Limo'sis cardial'gia sputato'ria, Ar'dor seu Ebullit'io stom'achi seu ventric'uli, Cardial'gia sputato'ria, Pyro'sis Suec'ica, Apoceno'sis vom'itus pyro'sis, Dyspep'sia pyro'sis, Cnismoreg'mia, Orex'is (of some), So'da, Wa'terbrash, Wa'terqualm, Wa'terpang, Black'water, Chron'ic Gas'tric Catarrh, (F.) Ardeur de l'estomac, Fer chaud, Fer rouge, Cremason, Gorgosset. This affection consists of a hot sensation in the stomach, with eructations of an acrid, burning liquid, which causes a distressing sensation in the parts over which it passes. Attention to diet, and the use of bitter absorbents, will usually relieve, when the disease is functional. Occasionally, it is symptomatic of organic disease of the stomach. Pyrosis also signified, of old, inflammation, gangrene, and a burn.

PYRO'SIS SUEC'ICA, Pyrosis.

Pyrosoph'ia, (πυρ, 'fire,' and σοφία, 'wisdom,') Chymistry.

Pyrotech'nia, (πυρ, 'fire,' and τέχνη, 'art,') Chymistry.

Py'rotechny, Pyrotech'nē, Pyrotech'nia. Art of making fireworks, &c. Also, chymistry. M. Percy has used the term Pyrotechnie Chirurgicale for the art of applying fire or the actual cautery in surgery.

Py'rothonide, (πυρ, 'fire,' and θωνη, 'linen,') Li'quor pyroöleo'sus e lin'teo para'tus. A kind of pyrogenous or empyreumatic oil, produced by the combustion of textures of hemp, linen, or cotton in a copper vessel. The brown product is acid. Its medical properties probably resemble those of creasote. Diluted with three or four times its weight of water, it has been used as a gargle in cynanche tonsillaris.

It is said, also, to be a popular remedy for toothache and skin diseases. When prepared from rags, it is called Rag oil; when from paper, Paper oil, (F.) Huile de Papier.

Pyro'ticus, (πυρωτικός, from πυρω, 'I burn,') Caustic.

Pyrox'ylic Spir'it, see Acetone.

Pyrox'ylin, (πυρ, 'fire,' and ξυλον, 'wood,') Gun cotton, see Collodion.

Pyrox'ylon, see Collodion.

Py'rus, (πυρος,) Triticum.

Py'rus, (from πυρ, 'fire,' because flame is shaped like the pear,) see Pyrus malus—p. Americana, Sorbus Americana.

Py'rus Cydo'nia, Cydo'nia malifor'mis seu vulga'ris, Sor'bus Cydo'nia, Cydo'nia, Coto'nia, Quince Tree, (F.) Coignassier, Cognassier. Ord. Rosaceæ. Sex. Syst. Icosandria Pentagynia. The fruit is termed Cydo'nium ma'lum, Ma'lum ca'num seu coto'neum, Me'lum cydo'nium, Quince, (F.) Coign. Quince seed—Cydo'nium (Ph. U. S.)—are sometimes used in decoction as a demulcent. The fruit makes a pleasant preserve.

Py'rus Domes'tica. Sorbus domestica.

Py'rus Ma'lus, Ma'lus, M. dasyphy'lla seu commu'nis seu sylves'tris, Sor'bus ma'lus, Me'lea, the Ap'ple tree, (F.) Pommier. The apple—Po'mum, Ma'lum, (F.) Pomme—is an agreeable fruit when ripe. When unripe, it disagrees, especially with those of weak digestive powers. The same may be said of the pear, (F.) Poire; the fruit of Py'rus commu'nis, P. sor'bus seu sati'va, Pi'rus, A'p'ios, (F.) Poirier.

Ap'ple Bran'dy is a spirituous liquor obtained from the juice of the apple, and much used in the United States.

Pythogen'ic or Pythogenet'ic Fe'ver, (πυθω, 'I putrefy,' and γεννω, 'I generate,') Typhoid fever.

Py'tia, (πυτία,) Colostrum, Rennet.

Pytis'ma, gen. Pytis'matis, (πυτισμα,) Sputum.

Pyul'con, Pyul'cum, (πυουλκον, from πυο, and ἔκω, 'I extract,') (F.) Tire-pus. A surgical instrument for extracting pus from any cavity. Many pyulca have been employed, all of which act as exhausting syringes.

Pyu'ria, Pyotu'ria, Pyorrhœ'a urina'lis, (F.) Pyurie, Pissement de Pus, (pyo, and ουρον, 'urine,') Discharge of purulent urine; a symptom which occurs in many diseases, particularly in cases of renal calculi, and in organic affections of the bladder. It receives various epithets, according to the part whence the pus proceeds,—as Pyuria urethra'lis, P. rena'lis, and P. vesica'lis.

Pyxida'ria Macrocar'pa, (from pyxis,) Jiquitiba. Nat. Ord. Scrophulariaceæ. The bark is much used in Brazil, as an astringent.

Pyx'is, gen. Pyx'idis, (πυξίς, gen. πυξίδος, made of boxwood, πυξος, Pyx'us.) A box; a pill-box. Also, an emollient ointment.

PYX'IS, Boîte, see Cotylod.

Q. See Abbreviation.

Quabebe, Piper cubeba.

Quack, Charlatan.

Quack Med'icine, Arcanum.

Quack'ery, see Charlatan.

Quack'salver, ([G.] Quacksalber, from quaken, 'to quack,' and salbe, 'salve,') Charlatan.

Quad'rants, Quar'ta pars li'bræ. A quarter of a pound. Three ounces (troy).

Quadrantal, see Amphora.

Quadra'tus, (F.) Carré, (quadrus, 'square,')

A name for muscles whose figure approaches a square. Depressor labii inferioris, Quadratus femoris.

QUADRA'TUS DOR'SI, Q. lumborum.

QUADRA'TUS FEM'ORIS, Quadra'tus, Quar'tus quadrigem'inus quadra'tus, (F.) Tuber-ischio-trochan'térien, (Ch.) Ischio-sous-trochan'térien, Carré de la Cuisse. A muscle situate at the posterior and upper part of the thigh. It is thin, flat, and quadrilateral, and is attached to the outer part of the tuberosity of the ischium; whence it proceeds transversely to the inferior part of the posterior margin of the great trochanter. It rotates the limb, turning the toe outwards.

QUADRA'TUS GE'NÆ, Platysma myoides—q. Radii, Pronator radii quadratus.

QUADRA'TUS LUMBO'RUM, Quadra'tus seu Lum-bar'is exter'nus, Q. dor'si, Flec'tens par lumbo-rum, (F.) Ilio-costal, (Ch.) Ilio-lombi-costal, Carré des lombes. A flat, somewhat thick, irregularly quadrilateral muscle, situate in the loins, at the sides of the vertebral column. It is attached, below, to the crista ilii and ilio-lumbar ligament; and, above, to the inferior margin of the last rib; and, besides, to the base of the transverse processes of the last four lumbar vertebræ. This muscle inclines the loins to its side; depresses the last rib, and is thus a muscle of respiration. It can also raise the hip.

QUADRA'TUS MEN'TI, Depressor labii inferioris. Quad'riceps Exten'sor Mus'cle, (quatuor, 'four,' and caput, 'head,') The great extensor muscle of the leg, including the rectus femoris, vastus externus, vastus internus, and cruraeus.

Quadri'ga, (quatuor, 'four,' and jugum, 'a yoke,') Cataphracta.

Quadrigem'ina Tuber'cula, (quatuor, 'four,' and geminus, 'double,') Eminen'tiæ quadrigem'inæ seu bigem'inæ, Op'tic lobes or tuber'cle, Op'tic gan'glia, Pons Syl'vii, Cor'pora quadrigem'ina seu bigem'ina, Nates et Tes'tes, Quadrigem'inat bodies, (F.) Tubercules quadrigemeaux ou bijumeaux, Éminences bigéminées, Lobes optiques ou bijumeaux. Four medullary tubercles, situate at the posterior surface of the tuber annulare. They are white, externally; gray, internally; oblong; rounded; connected by pairs, and separated by two grooves, which divide them crucially. Of these tubercles—the superior called Nates, Nat'ula, Tuber'cula anterio'ra, Glu'tia, are larger and more prominent than the lower, called Tes'tes, Tubercula posterio'ra. The pineal gland corresponds exactly to the point of intersection of the two furrows that separate them. They give origin to the optic nerves.

Quadrigem'inus Pri'mus et Supe'rior, Pyr-amidalis—q. Quartus quadratus, Quadratus fem'oris—q. Secundus et tertius, Ischiotrochanteria-nus.

Quadrjumeaux (Tubercules), Quadrigenina tubercula.

Quadrinamma'tus, Tetramas'thus, (quatuor, 'four,' and mamma, 'a breast.') Four-breasted.

Quadroon', (from [L.] quatuor, 'four,' a fourth part,) see Mulatto — q. Black, see Mulatto.

Quæ ex Quibus, (οἱ αἱ οὖν.) A Hippocratic phrase, which comprised the vicissitude, succession, and transmutation of diseases, of which mutation and succession four species were chiefly enumerated, — epigenesis, metaptosis, metastasis, and apostasis or abscess. Stephanus Rodericus a Castro wrote a small work under the title "Quæ ex quibus de Morborum Vicissitudinibus."

Quafadil, Melanthium Virginicum.

Quahoil, Cacao.

Quai, Akasja.

Quail, (low L. qualea, [F.] Caille.) Tetrao coturnix.

Quain's Degenera'tion. A form of hypertrophy of the heart characterized by increase of the connective tissue.

Quamash, Camassia esculenta — q. Eastern, Scilla esculenta.

Quandros. Ancient name for a precious stone, believed to exist in the brain of the vulture; and to which was attributed the property of augmenting the secretion of milk, and preserving from deadly accidents. No such stone exists.

Quar'antine, Quar'entine, Quarentaine, ([I.] Quaranti'na, itself from quaranta, 'forty,') Quar'antine. The time during which travellers, returning from a country where the plague or any other pestilential disease exists, are compelled to remain on board ship or in a lazaretto. They, as well as the ship, are said 'to perform quarantine,' and 'to be quar'antined.' Quarantine is sometimes extended beyond forty days, while its duration is generally much less. It is sometimes enforced by land; for example, when contagious diseases require the establishment of cordons sanitaires, and when persons are desirous of leaving infected districts. During quarantine, no communication is allowed between the travellers and the inhabitants of the country. Quarantine is a great impediment to commerce; and is, doubtless, very frequently enforced when there is but little danger of contagion. The evils, however, that might arise from the introduction of a widely-spreading contagious disease are so disastrous as to induce legislators to maintain these laws in perhaps an unnecessary degree of rigor.

Quar'tan, Quarta'nus, (from quartus, 'the fourth,') Quarta'na Fe'bris, An'etus Quarta'nus, Tetarte'us, Quar'tan Ague, (F.) Quarte. An intermittent, the paroxysms of which recur every fourth day, leaving between them two days' interval. We speak also of the Quar'tan Type. A Double Quar'tan, (F.) Double quarte, is one in which one paroxysm occurs on the third and another on the second day, so that there is only one day of apyrexia and two of paroxysms in succession — the paroxysms of every fourth day resembling each other. A Triple Quar'tan is one in which there is a paroxysm every day, and on every three days the paroxysms correspond. A redoub'ling or repeat'ing quar'tan, (F.) Fièvre quarte doublée, is one in which there are two paroxysms every fourth day. See Intermittent.

Quarta'nus, Quartan — q. Remittens, Tetartophia.

Quarta'rius. An ancient measure, equal to one-fourth of the sextarius. See Weights and Measures.

Quarte, ([I.] quartuo, 'a fourth,') Quartan.

Quar'ter E'vil, Quarter Ill. A form of malignant vesicle frequently fatal to the lower orders of animals.

Quar'teron, (from [L.] quatuor, 'four,' a fourth part,) see Mulatto — q. Black, Mulatto.

Quartister'nal, Quadrister'nal. The fourth osseous portion of the sternum, corresponding to the fourth intercostal space.

Quar'tio, (quatuor, 'four,' being four-sided,) Astragalus.

Quassa'tio, (from quassare, quassatum, 'to shake,') Conquassation.

Quassatu'ra, Conquassation.

Quas'sia, (Ph. U. S.,) Lignum Quassie, Febrifugum lignum, Quassy, (F.) Quassic, Bois amer. The wood of Quassia amara and of Q. excel'sa, Picro'na excel'sa, Bittera febrifuga, Lofty Bitterwood tree, Bitter ash, Simaru'ba excel'sa. Ord. Simarubaceæ. West India trees. The former is the Jamaica Quassia — the one in common use; the latter the Surinam Quassia. Quassia was called after Quassi, a Surinam negro, who first employed it in the fevers of the country. It is an intensely durable bitter, without astringency, and has been employed as a tonic and stomachic. It is generally given in the form of infusion. The bitter principle is called Quas'sin, Quas'siin, Quas'sit, and Bit'terin.

QUAS'SIA SIMAROU'BA, Simaron'ba, Simaru'ba, S. officina'lis, Euon'ymus, Bit'ter Simaru'ba, Mountain Damson. The bark of the root, Simaruba, (Ph. U. S.,) is bitter, and not unpleasant. Both water and alcohol extract its virtues. It is not astringent. It is exhibited wherever a simple tonic is required.

Quas'sin, see Quassia.

Quas'sit, see Quassia.

Quater'nio, (from quatuor, 'four,' having four sides,) Astragalus.

Quenouille d'Eau, Typha latifolia.

Quer'cera, (from καραπειν, 'to tremble,') Epialos.

Querci'ni Her'ba, Lichen plicatus.

Querc'ula Mi'nor, (dim. of quercus,) Teucrium chamædrys.

Quer'cus (gen. Quercus) Al'ba, White Oak; QUER'CUS RO'BUR, Common Oak; Q. TINCTO'RIA, Black Oak; Q. RU'BRA MONTA'NA, Red Oak or Spanish Oak; Q. PEDUNCULA'TA, Common British Oak. Ord. Cupuliferae. Sex. Syst. Monœcia Polyandria. (F.) Chêne. The bark of all these varieties — Quer'cus — is probably alike in medicinal properties. It is powerfully astringent and tonic, and has been used internally in intermittents, and externally, in decoction, as an astringent wash, where such is indicated.

The A'corn, (Prov.) Ackerns, Nux Quer'cūs, (F.) Gland, was at one time much used as food; and a decoction was once recommended in dysentery and diarrhoea, in glandular obstructions, &c. A pessary made of it has been advised in immoderate flow of the menses. It is not much used. Roasted acorns, (F.) Glands torréfiés, have been used in the same cases as the decoction.

QUER'CUS COCCIF'ERA, see Kermes.

QUER'CUS INFECTO'RIA. A tree of Asia Minor, which affords Tur'key or Nut galls, Gal'la Tur'cicae seu Querci'næ seu Tincto'riae, Nux gal'lae, Galla max'ima orbicula'ta, Ce'cis, Gal'lae, Galls, Gallnut, (F.) Noix de Galle, Galle de chêne, Casenoles. The Nut gall — Gal'la (Ph. U. S.) — is a morbid protuberance, or tubercle, produced by the puncture of the Diplolepis seu Cynips Gal'lae Tincto'riae, Cynips Quer'cūs fol'lii. It is powerfully astringent and tonic, and has been employed in diarrhoea, intestinal hemorrhage, and intermittents, but is chiefly used, externally, in gargles and injections. The powder, made into an ointment with lard, is used in piles. The ordinary nutgalls of the shops are procured from the Levant. The large Mec'ca or Bus'sorah galls, at times called Dead Sea apples, Mad apples, and Apples of Sodom, are produced on Quercus infectoria. There are upwards of thirty species of oak in the United States, all of which are probably more or less astringent and tonic.

Quick'en Tree, Sorbus aucuparia.

Quick'ening, (Sax. þiccan, 'to make alive.')

The period of gestation when the motion of the foetus first becomes perceptible. This usually occurs about the eighteenth week, and was at one time erroneously believed to mark the time at which the foetus becomes alive — Anima'tio fœ'tûs. It need scarcely be said, that it possesses the principle of life from the moment of the union of the materials furnished by the sexes at a fecundating copulation. When the motion is felt, the female is said to be 'quick with child.'

Quick'ens, Triticum repens.

Quick-in-the-hand, Impatiens.

Quick'lime, Calx viva.

Quick'silver, Hydrargyrum.

Qui'es, 'rest,' Acinesia.

Quillay'a Saponaria. An evergreen tree growing in Chili, South America, the inner bark of which is sometimes given as a febrifuge and as a remedy for coryza.

QUI'NIA, U'RATE OF. A yellow soluble salt employed in intermittent fever, in smaller doses than the sulphate.

QUI'NIA AND CINCHO'NIA, TAN'NATE OF, Quininæ et cinchoninæ tannas.

Qui'næ Ace'tas, Chini'num acet'icum, Acet'as Chini'i seu Chini'ni seu Chini'nicus seu Qui'niæ seu Qui'næ seu Quini'ni seu Kini'ni, Qui'na acet'ica, Ac'etate of Qui'nia or of Quinine. (Prepared by saturating Quinia with diluted Acetic acid.) Has the properties of other salts of quinia.

QUI'NIA ARSEN'IAS, Quini'na seu Qui'næ Arsen'ias, Chini'num Arsenico'sum seu Arsenic'icum, Arsen'iate of Qui'nia or of Quinine, (F.) Arseniate de quinine. (Formed by the union of arsenic acid and quinia.) Employed as an antiperiodic in the dose of from three-quarters of a grain to a grain and a half in the 24 hours.

QUI'NIA AR'SENIS, Q. Diar'senis, Ar'senite of Qui'nia. (A salt resulting from the double decomposition of arsenite of potassa and sulphate of quinia.) It has been used in chronic cutaneous diseases; and as an antiperiodic in ague, neuralgia, &c. Dose, gr. $\frac{1}{2}$, three times a day.

QUI'NIA BRO'MIDUM, Bro'mide of Qui'nia or of Quinine, made by dissolving \mathfrak{Zj} . of medicinal sulphate of quinia in \mathfrak{Zxxxij} . of boiling water, and adding solution of bromide of barium, until a precipitate ceases to be produced. It is really a hydrobromate of quinia.

QUI'NIA CAR'BOLOS, Car'bolate of Qui'nia or Quinine. A preparation containing two equivalents of carbolic acid to one of quinia, which has been used in puerperal affections, typhus, &c.

QUI'NIA CHLO'RAS, Chlo'rate of Qui'nia or Quinine. A white salt formed by heating distilled water, to which a small quantity of chlorate of soda has been added, almost to the boiling point, gradually adding sulphate of quinia. A combination of chloric acid and quinia, which has been employed—it is said successfully—in low pyrexial conditions, as scarlatina, typhus, &c. Chlorates of cinchonia and of quinia are similarly made.

QUI'NIA CI'TRAS, Qui'na seu Chini'ni ci'tras, Ci'tras chini'nicus seu quini'nicus, Chini'num seu Chini'num Ci'tricum, Ci'trate of Qui'nia or Quina or Quinine. (Formed from the union of citric acid and quinia.) It has the same properties as the sulphate.

QUI'NIA DIAR'SENIS, Quininæ arsenis.

QUI'NIA FERROCY'ANAS, Chini'num ferrocyano'genat'um seu fer'rohydrocyan'icum, Ferrocyan'ate or hydrocyanofer'rate of Qui'nia or of Quinine. (This salt is obtained by the decomposition of sulphate of quinia by means of a solution of ferrocyanuret of potassium.) It has all the properties of sulphate of quinia, and, according to some, in a superior degree.

QUI'NIA HYDRI'ODAS, Chini'num hydriod'icum, Hydriodate or Iodhy'drate of Qui'nia; called, also, Ioduretum seu Io'didum Quini'æ, Ioduret or Iodide of Qui'nia, (F.) Hydriodate ou Iodhydrate ou Iodure de Quinine. (This is formed by precipitating sulphate of quinia by means of iodide of potassium.) Given in scrofulous affections; gr. ss.-j., three times a day, to a child.

An iodide and a biiodide have been formed; the latter made by mixing double the quantity of iodide of potassium with sulphate of quinia.

AN I'ODIDE OF IODHY'DRATE OF QUI'NIA, (F.) Iodure d'Iodhydrate de Quinine, is prepared by pouring into an acid solution of quinia a solution of iodide of iron, containing a slight excess of iodine. The precipitate is treated with boiling alcohol; the liquor filtered, and crystals suffered to form. The salt possesses all the properties of the other salts of quinia. Under the name Hydriodate of Iron and Qui'nia, a preparation was introduced by Mr. Battley. It is possessed of tonic and antiperiodic virtues.

QUI'NIA IO'DIDUM, Quininæ hydriodas — q. Ioduretum, Quininæ hydriodas.

QUININÆ LACTAS, Quinæ lactas, Chini'num lacticum, Lactate of Quinia or of Quinine, (F.) Lactate de quinine. (Made by the action of lactic acid on quinia.) Used in the same cases as the other salts of quinia.

QUININÆ MURIAS, Chini'num muriaticum seu sali'tum seu hydrochloricum, Murias chini'cus, Muriate of Quinia or of Quinine. (May be prepared by dissolving quinia in dilute muriatic acid.) Given as an antiperiodic. Dose, gr. ss.-j.

QUININÆ NITRAS, Chini'num seu Chini'num nitricum, Nitrate of Quinia or of Quinine, (F.) Nitrate ou Azotate de quinine. (May be formed by the addition of nitric acid to quinia.) Its properties are those of the sulphate of quinia.

QUININÆ PHOSPHAS, Chini'num seu Chini'num phosphoricum, Phosphate of Quinia or of Quinine. (May be prepared by the addition of dilute phosphoric acid to quinia.) It is thought by many to be next to the sulphate of quinia in its remedial powers.

QUININÆ SULPHAS, Quinine, sulphate of.

QUININÆ TAN'NAS, Tan'nate of Quinia or Quinine. Made by precipitating infusion of bark, or solution of sulphate of quinia, by infusion of galls or solution of tannic acid. Astringent, tonic, and antiperiodic in the same doses as the sulphate.

QUININÆ VALERIAN'NAS, Chini'num seu Chini'num Valerianicum, Vale'rianate or Vale'rate of Quinia, of Quina, or of Quinine. (Acid. valerianic., 3ss., Quinæ sulph., 3ij., Acid. sulphuric. dilut., Aquæ ammoniæ, Aquæ, aa q. s. Dissolve the sulphate in Oj. of water, with the aid of the dilute sulphuric acid, add water of ammonia in slight excess, and wash precipitated quinia with water until freed from sulphate of ammonium. Dissolve the valerianic acid in Ov. of water, heated to 180°, add the quinia, and set aside to crystallize. Decant the mother-water, and dry the crystals on bibulous paper.) It has the properties of the salts of quinia. Dose, gr. j. to gr. v.

QUININÆ ET CINCHO'NIÆ TAN'NAS, Chini'num seu Chini'num tan'nicum, Tan'nate of Quinia and Cincho'nia. This salt has the same properties as the salts of quinia in general, with the astringency of tannin.

Quinicine, Quinici'na, Quinic'ia. When a salt of quinia is exposed to heat with certain precautions, the alkaloid is changed into another isomeric with it, to which this name is given.

Quinicine and its sulphate possess the medical properties of quinia and its salts. Dose, gr. v.-xv.

Quinicus, Cinchonic.

Quinid'ia, Quinidi'na, Quinidine, Chinidine, Cinchotin. An alkaloid of the cinchonas—of many of the genuine at least—obtained from them by the same process as that by which quinia is obtained from the barks that yield it. Its sulphate is more soluble, however, than the sulphate of quinia, and it is left, therefore, in the mother-waters.

The salts of quinidia are markedly antiperiodic. From gr. x. to gr. xxx. will usually arrest a paroxysm.

Quinim'etry, Quiniom'etry, (quinia, and μετρον, 'measure.') The process of measuring the amount of quinia and the other alkaloids in the cinchona barks. Several of these processes are given in the works on Pharmacy.

Quinine or Qui'nine, (from quinquina.) Qui'nia, Qui'na, Kini'num, Ki'num, Sal essentialē corticis Peruvia'ni, Chini'num, Quini'na. An alkaline, uncrystallizable substance: under the form of a porous, whitish mass; almost insoluble in water, soluble in alcohol and ether. It is obtained from different cinchonas, but chiefly from the yellow, and is the active principle of those valuable drugs. It forms, with acids, salts that are in general soluble. The sulphate and vale-rianate and the citrate of iron and quinia are officinal; but quite a variety of other salts have been used medicinally.

QUININE, Ac'ETATE OF, Quinæ acetat—q. Arseniate of, Quinæ arsenias—q. Arsenite of, Quinæ arsenis—q. Azotate of, Quinæ nitras—q. Bromide of, Quinæ bromidum—q. Carbolate of, Quinæ carbolat—q. Chlorate of, Quinæ chloras—q. Citrate of, Quinæ citras—q. Ferrocyanate of, Quinæ ferrocyanas—q. Hydriodate de, Quinæ hydriodas—q. Iodhydrate de, Quinæ hydriodas—q. Iodide of, Quinæ hydriodas.

QUININE, Iodosul'PHATE OF, Iodide of Sul'phate of Quinia, Sul'phate of Iodoquinia. This salt of quinia is made by adding tincture of iodine drop by drop to a mixture of solution of sulphate of quinia in acetic acid and distilled alcohol.

Quinine, Iodure de, Quinæ hydriodas—q. Iodure d'iodhydrate de, see Quinæ hydriodas—q. Lactate of, Quinæ lactas—q. Muriate of, Quinæ murias—q. Nitrate of, Quinæ nitras—q. Phosphate of, Quinæ phosphas.

QUININE, QUI'NA or QUI'NIA, SUL'PHATE OF, Qui'nie seu Qui'ne seu Quini'ne Sul'phas, Qui'ne Disul'phas, Chini'num seu Chini'num Sulphu'ricum, (F.) Sulfate de Quinine—the salt usually employed in medicine—occurs in needles of a pearly and satiny appearance. It is employed with great success in the treatment of intermittents; and is available in many cases, where the bark in substance could not be retained, or would be injurious. Dose, as a tonic, from 3 to 10 grains in the 24 hours. As an antiperiodic it may be carried much farther. Its action, in a large dose, is decidedly sedative. (It is obtained by treating the yellow bark with sulphuric acid. The following form is adopted in the Pharmacopœia of the United States [1873]—Cinchon. flav. in pulv. crass., 3xlviij., Acid. muriat., f3iijss., Calcis in pulv. subtil., 3v., Aquæ, Acid. Sulphur., Alcohol., Carbon. animal., Aquæ destillat., aa q. s. Boil the bark in Oxij. of water, mixed with one-third of the muriatic acid, and strain through muslin. Boil the residue twice successively with the same quantity of acid and water as before, and strain. Mix the decoctions, and, while the liquid is hot, gradually add the lime, previously mixed with two pints of water, stirring constantly, until the quinia is completely precipitated. Wash the precipitate with distilled water, and having pressed, dried, and powdered it, digest it in boiling alcohol. Pour off the liquid and repeat the digestion several times, until the alcohol is no longer rendered bitter. Mix the liquids, and distil off the alcohol, until a brown viscid mass remains. Upon this removed from the vessel, pour Oiv. of distilled water, and having heated the mixture to the boiling point, add enough sulphuric acid to dissolve the quinia. Then add an ounce and a half of animal charcoal; boil for two minutes; filter while hot, and set it aside to crystallize. Should the liquid, before filtration, be entirely neutral, acidulate it very slightly with sulphuric acid. Should it, on the contrary, change the color of litmus paper to a bright red, add more animal charcoal. Separate the crystals from the liquid, dissolve them in boiling distilled water slightly acidulated with sulphuric acid; add a little animal charcoal, filter and set aside to crystallize. Dry the crystals on bibulous paper, with a gentle heat. The mother-water may be made to yield an additional quantity of sulphate of quinia by precipitating the quinia with water of ammonia, and treating the precipitated alkaloid with distilled water, sulphuric acid, and animal charcoal, as before.) The French Codex (1866) has a Sulfate acide de Quinine, a solution of the sulphate of quinia in a diluted sulphuric acid.

QUININE, TAN'NATE OF, Quinæ tannas—q. Valerianate of, Quinæ valerianas.

Qui'ninism or Quini'nism, Quininis'mus, Qui'nism, Cin'chonism, (F.) Intébration ou Iveresse quinique. The aggregate of encephalic or neuropathic phenomena induced by overdoses of quinia.

Quiniometry, Quinimetry.

Quinique, Cinchonic.

Qui'nium. An alcoholic extract, made from cinchona barks the composition of which is known, and which are mixed together in such proportions that the quinia and the cinchonia exist in the relation of two of the former to one of the latter. It is used in pills or in wine, and is said to represent, faithfully, all the useful principles of cinchona. To a similar preparation containing quinia and cinchonia, in the proportion of 91 of the former to 25 of the latter, M. Labarraque has given the name Panchres'tum Chi'ne.

Qui'noa. The seeds of Chenopodium quinoa, a herbaceous annual of Peru and Chili, have been used as an article of food.

Quinoid'ine, Chinioidine—q. Animal, see Chinioidine.

Quino'lin, (quina, and λαιον, 'oil,') Leukoleinum.

Quinol'ogy, Quinolog'ia, Cinchonol'ogy, Cinchonolog'ia, (quina, and λογος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on the cinchonas, or on quinia.

Quinquefo'lium, (quinque, 'five,' and folium, 'a leaf,') Potentilla reptans—q. Majus, Potentilla reptans.

Quinquina, (Peruvian kina kina,) Cinchona—q. Aromatique, Croton cascarilla—q. Bicolor, Cinchona Caribææ cortex—q. Faux de Virginie, Cusparia febrifuga—q. Gris de Loza, Cinchona lancifolia cortex—q. Jaune, Cinchona cordifolia cortex—q. Piton, Cinchona Caribææ cortex—q. Rouge, Cinchona oblongifolia cortex.

Quinquino, Myroxylon peruiferum.

Quin'sy, Cynanche, C. tonsillaris—q. Nervous, Angone—q. Wolf, Lycanche.

Quint'an, Fe'bris quinta'na seu pempt'a seu quin'ta, (from quintus, 'a fifth,') A fever whose paroxysms return only every five days inclu-sively; and between which there are, consequently, three days of apyrexia.

Quinte (F.), (formed, like kink, by onomatopoeia [?].) This word is used synonymously with paroxysm or fit, when speaking of cough,—as une Quinte de Toux—'a fit of coughing,' (Sc.) Kink. Also, the influenza.

Quintefeuille, ([F.] quinte, 'a fifth,' and feuille, 'a leaf,') Potentilla reptans.

Quint'eron, (from quintus, 'fifth,') see Mulatto—q. Black, see Mulatto.

Quintes, see Quinte, and Pertussis.

Quintes'sence, Quin'ta Essen'tia, 'fifth essence.' A name formerly given to alcohol, impregnated with the principles of some drug. It was, consequently, often synonymous with Alcoholic tincture. The most volatile principles of bodies were, also, called Quintes'sences.

Quintister'nal. The fifth osseous portion of the sternum. It corresponds to the 5th and 6th intercostal spaces.

Qui'nua, Chenopodium quinoa.

Quir'icua, see Chloasma.

Quiz'zer, Grind'er. One who examines and prepares students in medical colleges on the subjects taught in them. The term Quiz'zer, in this sense, is restricted to the United States. To 'hold a quiz' is to have an examination in this manner. The origin of the English word is curious. (See Worcester's Dictionary.)

Quotid'ian, Quotidia'nus, Ephem'erus, (F.) Quotidien—itself from quotidiè, 'daily,' (quot, 'every,' and dies, 'day,') That which takes place every day.

QUOTID'IAN FE'VER, Q. a'gue, Fe'bris quotid'ia'na seu hemere'sia seu hemeri'na seu ephem'era seu methemeri'na seu methemer'ia, An'etus quotid'ia'nus, Cathem'erus, Cathemeri'nus, Methemeri'nos, Amphemeri'nos, Amphimeri'nus, Amphem'erus, Quotidia'nus, (F.) Fièvre quotidienne, is an intermittent, the paroxysms of which recur every day. A sim'ple, doub'le, or trip'le quotid'ian, is a quotidian, which has one, two, or three paroxysms in the 24 hours.

R.

R or R is placed at the commencement of a prescription as a contraction of Rec'ip'e. (See Abbreviation.) Originally it was the sign ♃ of Jupiter, and was placed at the top of a formula, to propitiate the king of the gods, that the compound might act favorably.

Rabdoi'des (Sutu'ra), (ραβδοιδης, from ραβδος, 'a rod,' and αἰδος, 'resemblance,') Sagittal suture.

Rab'id, Rab'idus, (F.) Rabique, Rabétique, (from rabies,—rabo, 'I am mad or furious,'—'canine madness,') That which belongs to hydrophobia; as rabid virus, &c. Rabid also means affected with hydrophobia, (F.) Enragé.

Rabétique, Rabid.

Rab'ies Cani'na, Hydrophobia.

Rabique, Rabid.

Racahout, Am'glam quer'neum. A name given by the Arabs to the starch prepared from an edible acorn obtained from Quer'cus Flex, but, according to Plagge, the so-called Racahout of the Arabs, sold in Paris, is a compound of potato starch, chocolate, and aromatics,—as vanilla, or of Caracas cacao, Bermuda arrowroot, farina of wheat, sugar of milk, salep, and vanilla.

Raccoon' Ber'ry, Podophyllum montanum.

Race, (from radice, ablative of radix, 'root,') Breed. The union or aggregate of individuals whose conformation or particular condition differs perceptibly from those of neighboring varieties. In the human species, several races are designated. See Homo.

Racémeux, Racemosus.

Racemo'sus, Rac'emous, Rac'emose, (F.) Racémeux, (from racemus,) In clusters, like grapes,—hence Glan'dulæ racemo'sæ, as the liver, pancreas, &c.

Race'mus. A cluster—as of grapes.

Rachamel'ca, ([Hebr.] רַחֵם rechem, 'the womb,' and מֶלֶךְ molech, 'a king,') Rechamal'ca. A peculiar formative principle, supposed, by Delacaz, to exist in the uterus.

Rache, Porrigo.

Rachis'i, (ῥαχίς, 'the spine,') Rhachitæ.

Rachial'gia, (rachis, and αλγος, 'pain,') Colic, metallic, Rhachialgia, Rhachiodynia, Vertebral disease—r. Mesenterica, Tabes mesenterica—r. Pietoniensium, Colic, metallic—r. Pietonium, Colic, metallic.

Rachialgie Mésentérique, Tabes mesenterica.

Rachialgi'tis, gen. Rachialgi'tidis, Rachialgitis.

Rachid'ian, (from rachis.) Spinal—r. Arteries, Spinal arteries—r. Bulb, see Medulla oblongata—r. Canal, Vertebral canal.

Rachidien, Spinal.

Rachiphy'ma, Rachiphyma.

Rachiphy'ma, gen. Rachiphy'matis, Rachiphy'ma, Rachiphy'ma, Tu'mor Dor'si, (rachis, and φωφα, 'a tumor.') A tumor on the spine or on the back.

Ra'chis, gen. Rach'idis, (ραχis, gen. ραχιδος.) Vertebral column.

Rachis'agra, Rachis'agra, Rhachi'agra, Rhache'agra, Rhachid'agra, Rhachi'tis spina'lis, (rachis, and αγχα, 'a seizure.') A gouty or rheumatic affection of the spine.

Rachi'tæ, Rhachitæ.

Rachit'ic, (ραχit'ic.) Rachit'ic, Rhachit'ic, (F.) Rachit'ic. Relating or appertaining to or affected with rachitis or rickets. Weak, feeble in the joints; defective in development.

RACHIT'IC ROSE-GAR'LAND. The appearance presented by nodular thickenings on the end of the ribs in rachitis.

Rachi'tis, gen. Rachit'idis, Rhachit'is. Inflammation of the spine. Also, Cyrtosis rachia, Cyrtosis, Morbus Anglicus, Osteomalacia infantum, Tuberculosis pectoris, Innutritio ossium, Spina nodo'sa, Rachitis mus, English disease, Rickets, (from ραχis, 'the spine,' ραχit'is μους, 'spine disease,') (F.) Rachitism, Nouure. A disease not known in England before the first quarter of the seventeenth century, and then termed Rickets, (probably from the Sax. ricg or hpic, [Se. and Prov.] Rig, all of which signify the back. Glisson first gave it the scientific name from Rachis, which, in Greek, also means the spine.) It is characterized by crookedness of the long bones; swelling of their extremities; crooked spine; prominent abdomen; large head; and often precocity of intellect. It is accompanied by leanness, general debility, indigestion; and frequently induces atrophy and hectic. Rickets occurs particularly during the first years of existence, in weakly children, born of rickety or scrofulous parents; brought up in damp or confined situations; who are badly nourished, and do not take sufficient exercise. The progress and termination of the disease are very variable. Some children gradually recover their health; others become more and more deformed, and ultimately die of consumption, dropsy, or other organic disease. The treatment is almost wholly hygienic. Pure air; a healthy situation; nourishing diet; exercise; sea or common cold bathing, and tonics, afford the best prospect of success.

RACHITIS ADULTORUM, Mollities ossium.

Rachitisme, Rachitis.

Rachitome, (rachis, and τομή, 'incision.') An anatomical instrument for opening the medulla spinalis without injuring the medulla.

Racho'sis, Rhacho'sis, Raco'sis, (from ραχis or ραχis, 'I wrinkle,' and osis.) A relaxation of the scrotum, Proptoma seu Laxitas scroti, Scrotum pendulum. An excoriation of the relaxed velum pendulum.

Racines du Cervelet, (pl. of racine.) Corpora restiformia—r. de la Verge, see Cavernous bodies.

Rack, Arack.

Raclures des Boyaux, (from racler, 'to scrape,') see Abrasion. Ramenta intestinorum.

Racornissement (F.), (racornir,—[L.] cornu, 'horn,'—'to make hard as horn,') Cornification. A physical property, possessed by animal substances, which consists in a kind of contractility, accompanied with sudden corrugation and curling. It is produced by heat, and by chemical agents, especially by the strong mineral acids.

Raco'sis, (ραχit'is.) Rachosis.

Rad'cliffe's Elix'ir, see Tinctura aloes composita.

Radesy'gè, Radzyge.

Radezy'gè, Radzyge.

Ra'diad, see Radial aspect.

Ra'dial, Radial'is, (from radius.) That which relates to the radius.

Radial Antérieur, Palmaris magnus.

RA'DIAL ARTERY, A. externa Cu'biti. It arises from the brachial, at the upper and anterior part of the forearm; descends on the outer side as far as the lower part of the radius, and proceeds downwards and backwards towards the superior extremity of the space which separates the first two metacarpal bones. It then buries itself in the palm of the hand, where it forms the profound or radial palmar arch. The radial artery gives off the recurrent radial, several radio-muscular branches, the transverse palmar radio-carpal artery, the external superficial artery of the palm of the hand, the external dorsal of the thumb, the dorsalis carpi, dorsal interosseous artery of the index, &c.

RA'DIAL ASPECT. An aspect towards the side on which the radius is situated. (Barclay.) Ra'diad is used by the same writer, adverbially, to signify 'towards the radial aspect.'

RA'DIAL NERVE, Radio-digital (Ch.), Spi'ral Nerve, Spi'ral muscular nerve, Mus'culo-spi'ral nerve, arises from the four inferior branches of the brachial plexus. It is at first situate behind the other nerves of the plexus. It then becomes engaged between the three portions of the triceps brachialis, passes behind the humerus, and descends between the supinator longus and brachialis internus, as far as opposite the upper extremity of the radius. In its course it gives numerous filaments to the triceps, supinator longus, extensor carpi radialis longior, and to the integuments. Opposite to the upper extremity of the radius it divides into two branches—the one posterior, which turns backward into the substance of the supinator brevis, and, when it has reached the space between the two layers of muscles on the posterior surface of the forearm, divides into a great number of filaments, which are distributed to those muscles and to the integuments of the hand. The other branch is anterior. It descends before the supinator brevis and the radius, until, near the inferior third of that bone, it engages itself between the tendons of the supinator longus and extensor carpi radialis longior, and, becoming afterwards subcutaneous, divides into two branches, whose filaments are distributed to the integuments of the thumb, index, middle finger, to the outside of the ringfinger, and to the first interosseous muscle of the back of the hand.

Radial Pettit, see Radialis.

RA'DIAL VEINS, DEEP-SEAT'ED. These follow the same course as the radial artery.

Radial'is Exten'sor Lon'gior, R. externus longior.

RADIALIS EXTER'NUS BRE'VIOR, Exten'sor Car'pi Radialis Bre'vior, Radialis secun'dus, (F.) Second radial externe, Petit radial, Épicondylus-metacarpien (Ch.). An extensor muscle of the wrist, situate beneath the extensor carpi radialis longior. It is attached, above, to the external tuberosity of the humerus, and terminates below by a long tendon, inserted into the posterior part of the upper extremity of the third bone of the metacarpus. It has the same uses as the next muscle.

RADIA' LIS EXTER' NUS LONGIOR, Extensor carpi radialis longior, Radialis externus primus, (F.) Premier radial externe, Grand radial, Huméro sus-métacarpien (Ch.). It is seated at the outer part of the forearm; is thin, but thicker on the outside than on the inside. It is attached, above, to the inferior part of the outer edge, and to the corresponding tuberosity of the humerus, and terminates below by a long tendon, which is attached to the superior extremity of the second bone of the metacarpus. It extends the hand on the forearm.

Rad'iated, Radia'tus, (from radius, 'a ray,') (F.) Rayonné. That which is arranged in rays; in lines, diverging from a common centre. An epithet given to several ligaments, &c.,—as to those which unite the ribs to the sternum, those which unite the tibia and fibula at their inferior extremity, &c.

RA'DIATED SUBSTANCE OF THE KID'NEY, see Kidney.

Rad'ical, Radica'lis, (from radix.) A radical cure, cu'ra radica'lis, is one in which the disease is destroyed, as it were, from the root. It is used in opposition to palliative cure.

RAD'ICAL MOIS'TURE, Humidum radicale.

RAD'ICAL VES'SELS, Vas'cular Rad'icles, (F.) Radicules vasculaires, are the small vessels that take their origin in the tissues, and by their union form larger vessels.

RAD'ICAL VIN'EGAR, Aceticum acidum.

Rad'ices (pl. of radix) Cor'porum Cavernoso'rum Pe'nis, see Cavernous bodies—r. Hyoidei ossis, Cornua hyoidei ossis.

Radiceis'eca, Rhizot'omus, Rhizot'omist, (radix, and secare, 'to cut.')

One employed in collecting and preparing roots was formerly so called.

Rad'icle, Radicula.

Rad'icula, Rad'icle, (F.) Radicule, dim. of radix, 'a root.')

A small root or rootlet; also, Raphanus hortensis.

Radicules Vasculaires, Radical vessels.

Rad'ii Cilia' res, (radius, 'a ray,' pl. radii.) Ciliary processes.

RA'DII FRON'TIS. The folds or wrinkles of the forehead.

Rad'io, (from radius.) In composition, the radius.

RADIOCAR'PAL, Radiocarpia'nus. That which relates to the radius and carpus.

RADIOCAR'PAL ARTICULA'TION is the wrist-joint, or articulation of the os scaphoides, os semilunare, and os cuneiforme of the carpus with the inferior surface of the radius, and the fibro-cartilage, situate below the ulna. It is strengthened by lateral, anterior, and posterior ligaments.

RADIOCAR'PAL TRANS'VERSE PAL'MAR AR'TERY, (F.) Artère radio-carpienne-transversale-palmaire. A transverse branch given off by the radial artery, opposite the lower edge of the pronator quadratus, which sends several branches to the anterior or palmar surface of the carpus.

Rad'iolus, (dim. of radius, 'a rod or spoke,')

Sound.

Radiomus'cular, Radiomuscula'ris. A name given to the branches sent off from the radial artery to the muscles of the forearm in the first part of its course, as well as to the nervous filaments which the radial nerve sends to the same muscles.

Radix, (radix.) Raphanus hortensis—r. de Cheval, Cochlearia armoracia.

Rad'ish, Raphanus hortensis—r. Water, Nasturtium amphibium.

Rad'ius, 'a staff,' 'a rod,' 'a spoke,'—so called from its shape. Cer'cis, Foc'ile mi'nus seu supe'rius, Can'na mi'nor, Os ad cubita'lē, Additamentum ul'næ, Manu'brium ma'nūs, Parape'chyon, Arun'do bra'chii mi'nor, Spoke'bone, (F.) Os du Rayon. A long, prismatic bone, the upper and lesser extremity of which is called the head. This is supported by a cer'vix or neck. At the part where the neck is confounded with the body of the bone is the tubercle or bicip'ital tuberosity or eminence for the insertion of the biceps. The radius is articulated, above, with the os humeri and with the lesser sigmoid cavity of the ulna; below, with the scaphoides, semilunare, and the head of the ulna. Its inferior extremity, which is larger than the superior, is flattened before and behind, is irregularly quadrilateral, and has below a double facette to be articulated with the first two bones of the carpus. On the outer side is the styloid process, and on the inner a concave facette, which joins the ulna. Behind, are grooves for the passage of the extensor tendons. The radius is developed from three points of ossification—one for the body, and one for each extremity.

Radius, Col du, Collum radii.

Rad'ix, gen. Rad'icis, Rhi'za, (F.) Racine. A root: also, the male organ.

Radix, Root or fang of a tooth, is the part contained in the alveolus. The radix or root of the nail is the portion hidden under the skin. Surgeons give the name to prolongations, sent by scirrhus, cancerous, or other tumors into the neighboring parts.

Five Aperient Roots, Quinque radi'ces aperien'tes, were, of old, asparagus, butchers' broom, fennel, parsley, and smallage.

Five Lesser Aperient Roots, Quinque radi'ces aperien'tes mino' res, were caper, dandelion, eryngo, madder, and restharrow.

RA'DIX ASCLEPI'ADIS CRIS'PA, see Gomphocarpus crispus—r. Braziliensis, Ipecacuanha.

RA'DIX COR'DIS, Ba'sis Cordis. The base of the heart.

Rad'ula, (from radere, 'to scrape,')

Raspatorium.

Radzy'gê, Radzygin, Radesyge, Radezyge, (from obsolete Da. word rada, 'malignant,' and syge, 'disease,') The'ria, (properly The'ria, from θηριον [élæos], 'a malignant ulcer,') Lep'ra borea'lis seu Norveg'ica, Norice'gian Lep'rosy. A name given, in Norway, to a disease, bearing considerable analogy to the yaws. Some have esteemed it a species of lepra or elephantiasis, and others a syphiloid affection.

Another form—the Spedalske, or Spedalskhed of Norway, appears to be a variety of tubercular lepra. Under the epithelial scales, numerous acari have been found; and the affection has been called Norice'gian Sca'bies or Itch, Sca'bies crusto'sa, and Sca'bies Norveg'ica Boeck'ii, after Boeck, who well described a case of it.

Raffle'sia Arnold'i, (after Sir Stamford Raffles.) A plant of Java, Order, Rafflesiaceæ, a decoction of which is employed there as an astringent in relaxed conditions of the genito-urinary apparatus.

Rafraichissant, (re, and fraîche, 'cool,') from [L.] refrigerescere, 'to become cool again.' Refrigerant.

Rage, Fra, Fu'ror bre'vis, Or'gê, Thy'mos, (F.) Colère, Rage. Violent passion, characterized by contraction of the muscles of the face, violence in every movement, extreme irritation of the nervous system, acceleration of the blood's motion, and, generally, redness and swelling of the face.

RA'GE, (payn,) Rhage.

Rage, (from [L.] rabies,) Hydrophobia, Rage.

Rage de Tête. An epidemic and fatal malady, which prevailed in France in 1481. It was presumed to be epidemic meningitis.

Ragle (F.), (said to be derived from an Arabic word, which signifies 'to traverse the desert.') A kind of hallucination observed in travellers in the deserts, which resembles the effect of intoxicating liquors, opium, &c.

Rais'ing, Expectoration.

Raisinière (F.), (from raisin.) A name given to a small granular, brownish or blackish tumor, which forms occasionally at the surface of the cornea, in consequence of ulcers or accidental wounds of that membrane.

Rais'ins, Uvæ passæ, see Vitis vinifera — r. de Corinthe, see Vitis Corinthiaca.

Raison, ([L.] ratio,) Reason.

Rakasi'ra. An American balsam; of a brownish or brownish-red color; semitransparent; brittle; softening and exhaling a very agreeable smell when heated. The precise vegetable that furnishes it is not known. It has been used as a balsam in gonorrhœa and urinary affections.

Rake'teeth. A term used in the north of England for teeth which are wide apart, and similar to those of a rake.

Ra'kia, see Spirit.

Rakli Pili. An Indian name for leprosy.

Râle (F.), Ra'tle, Rhon'chus, Rhen'chus, Rhenz'is, (from [D.] Ratel,) Cerch'nus, Rhog'mus (probably an example of onomatopœia). Noise produced by the air in passing through mucus, of which the lungs are unable to free themselves. This condition, Râle trachéal, is chiefly observed at the approach of death, and is commonly called "the rattles."

The term Râle has been given to different sounds during respiration, caused by the air in connection with fluid contained in the bronchi or areolæ of the pulmonary tissue; which are perceived by the stethoscope. Râle has generally been used for a 'moist' sound, heard on auscultation of the chest, while rhonchus has meant a 'dry' sound.

tant, Rhonchus crepitans, see Crepitant — r. Crépitant Redux, see Crepitant.

Râle Muqueux, R. bronchique humide, Rhon'chus mucosus, Hygrobronchiorrhon'chus, Mucous Ra'tle. The sound produced by the passage of air through mucus accumulated in the larger bronchi or trachea, or through softened tubercular matter. This râle occurs in catarrh, and in softened tubercle. When carried to a very high degree, it constitutes gurg'ling, (F.) Gargouillement. The subcrep'itant rhon'chus, (F.) Râle sous-crépitant, is produced by the bubbling of air through liquid of variable consistence in the minute bronchial tubes. When heard at the base of both lungs, it is a sign of capillary bronchitis. When heard at the base of one only, it is generally connected with tubercles higher up.

Râle Sibilant, Rhon'chus sibilus seu sibilans, Sibilant Ra'tle. A slight, though prolonged, whistling sound, occurring either at the commencement of inspiration or of expiration, owing to the presence of mucus, thin and viscid, but not abundant, which obstructs, more or less completely, the smaller bronchial ramifications. It is seated in the small tubes, and occurs in the first stage of bronchitis. The click'ing and whist'ling varieties differ, in the former being short, the latter prolonged. The former is a quick, sharp sibilus or whistle, which ceases almost instantaneously; the latter a prolonged sibilus, of less sharpness, lasting almost the whole time of the movement which it accompanies. To these may be added the hissing variety, the name sufficiently indicating its character.

Râle Sonore, R. bronchique sec ou ronflant, Rhon'chus sonorus, Sonorous Ra'tle. A sound resembling at times the snoring — (F.) Ronflement — of a person asleep; at others the sound of the bass string of an instrument when rubbed with the finger; and not unfrequently the cooing — (F.) Roucoulement — of a dove. It seems to be caused by a contraction of the bronchial tubes, and is characteristic of chronic catarrh.

Râle Sous-crepitant, see Râle muqueux — r. Trachéal, see Râle — r. Vesiculaire, see Crepitation.

Ramberge, Mercurialis.

Rameau, Ramus.

Ramen'ta Intestino'rum, (pl. of ramentum,) Sera'pings of the Intes'tines, (F.) Raclures des Boyaux. The shreds or scrapings, as it were, of the mucous membrane of the bowels, often discharged in malignant dysentery. The evacuation in which these are contained has been termed Diachore'ma xysmato'des.

Ramen'tum, (contracted from radimentum, from radere, 'to scrape,') Fragment, Scabs.

Ra'mex, gen. Ra'micis, Hernia — r. Varicosus, Varicocele.

Ramifica'tion, Ramifica'tio, (ramus, and fâcere, 'to make,') A division of arteries, veins, or nerves into branches. Also, a branch itself.

Ramille, (from ramus,) Ramusculus.

Ramoneur, 'a chimney sweeper.' A horse-hair probang for the removal of foreign bodies in the pharynx or œsophagus.

Rampant (F.), (rampier, 'to climb,' from [L.]

repere, 'to creep,') Re'pens, Rep'tans. That which creeps or crawls. The French Bandage rampant has the folds arranged spirally around the part, leaving intervals between them. It is a retentive bandage, but is easily displaced, and, therefore, not employed.

Rampe, Scale.

Rampes du Limaçon, Scale of the cochlea.

Ram'phos, (ῥαμφος, 'a beak,') Rostrum.

Ram'ulus, (dim. of ramus,) Ramusculus.

Ra'mus, (pl. Rami,) 'a branch,' Cla'dus, Branch, (F.) Rameau. A division of an artery, vein, or nerve. A portion of a bone which forms an angle with the body or main portion; as the ramus of the jaw. Also, the male organ.

RA'MUS DU'RIOR SEP'TIMÆ CONJUGATIO'NIS, Facial nerve.

Ramus'culus, (dim. of ramus,) Ra'mulus, Ramun'culus, Sur'culus, Cladis'cus. A division of a ramus, (F.) Ramuscule, Ramille.

Ra'na, Ranula.

RA'NA ESCULEN'TA, 'esculent frog,' (F.) Grenouille. This frog and the bullfrog, Rana Tauri'na, are eaten as delicacies. They are nutritious, and easily digested.

Rance, Rancid.

Ran'cid, Ran'cidus, Sa'pros, (F.) Rance, (rancere, 'to be stale,') An epithet given to fatty bodies which have become acrid from age or the contact of air. Mild ointments may thus become very irritating, and unfit for the purposes for which they were originally intended.

Ran'dia Dumeto'rum, 'R. of thickets,' (after J. Rand, a botanist of London,) R. Spino'sa, Can'thium Corona'tum, Garden'ia seu Posoque'ria Dumeto'rum seu Spino'sa. A Coromandel shrub; Ord. Cinchonaceæ; the fruit of which, bruised and thrown on the water, intoxicates, or even kills fish. In the form of powder it is a powerful emetic.

Ran'dia Spino'sa, R. dumetorum.

Ra'nine, Rani'na, (from rana, 'a frog,' 'shaped like a frog,') The portion of the lingual artery which advances horizontally between the genioglossus and lingualis muscles as far as the point of the tongue. The ranine vein follows the same course as the artery, and opens into the internal jugular or into the superior thyroid.

Ran'tree, Sorbus aucuparia.

Ra'nula, (dim. of rana, 'a frog,' so called from its resemblance,) Dyspha'gia Ra'nula, Empyrag'ma saliv'arē, Ba'trachos, Batra'chium, Hydroglos'sa, Hypoglos'sis, Hypoglos'sum, Hypoglot'tis, Hypoglos'sium, Ra'na, Frog'tongue, Sublin'gual Cyst, (F.) Grenouillette. A small, soft, fluctuating, and semitransparent tumor, which forms under the tongue, formerly considered to be owing to the accumulation of saliva in Wharton's duct, but now said to be due to obstruction of one of the mucous glands beneath the tongue, as the glands and ducts of Rivini. In order to give exit to the accumulated fluid, and to establish a permanent opening for the discharge of the saliva, the cyst may be punctured, and the opening maintained by a minute cylinder, with a button at each extremity, as has been recommended by Dupuytren; or a portion of the cyst may be removed by the scissors, and the mouth be frequently washed by any astringent lotion. Sometimes the salivary duct is found plugged by a small calculus. Several other forms of sublingual swelling are included in the term ranula.

RA'NULA LAPIDE'A, see Calculi, salivary.

Ranun'culus, Crowfoot, (F.) Renuncule, (Sc.) Yel'low gow'an; Ord. Ranunculaceæ; Sex. Syst. Polyandria Polygynia, (dim. of rana, 'a frog,' because found in marshy places where frogs abound.) A genus of plants, most of the species of which, when taken internally, act as acrid poisons. They are, also, acrid and vesicant when applied to the skin, and have accordingly been often used as counterirritants. In the Pharmacopœia of the United States, Ranunculus is the cornus and herb of Ranunculus bulbosus.

The following species answer to the above description:

RANUN'culus ABORTI'vus, Smallflowered Crow-foot, Chick'enpepper; —

RANUN'culus A'CRIS, R. pratensis seu Steven'ii seu ru'fus seu sylvat'icus seu sic'ulus, Up'right Mead'ow or Tall Crow'foot, But'ter Cups, (Prov.) Crai'sey, Guil'ty Cups, Yel'lowweed, Blis'terweed, Pile'wort, Bur'wort, Mead'owbloom, Yel'low, (F.) Bouton d'or; —

RANUN'culus AL'BUS, Anemone nemorosa — r. Aquaticus, R. sceleratus; —

RANUN'culus BULBO'sus, R. lœ'tus, Bul'bous or Bulbousrooted Crow'foot, But'ter Cups, (F.) Renuncule bulbeuse, Bassinet; —

RANUN'culus DIGITA'tus, R. sceleratus — r. Declinatus, R. flammula; —

RANUN'culus FICA'RIA, R. ver'nus seu præ'cox, Chelido'nium mi'nus, Scrophula'ria mi'nor, Fica'ria ranunculoi'des seu ver'na seu commu'nis, Chelido'nia rotundifo'lia mi'nor, Cursu'ma hæmorrhoida'lis her'ba, Ægole'thron, Less'er cel'andine, Pile'wort, (F.) Petite Chélidoine, Petite Éclair, Ficaire, Herbe aux hémorrhoides. The leaves and root have been used medicinally; the leaves as an antiscorbutic, the root as a cataplasm in piles; —

RANUN'culus FLAM'mula, R. declinata'tus, Flam'mula, Surrec'ta al'ba, Small'er Wa'ter Crow'foot, Less'er Spear'wort, (F.) Petite Douve; —

RANUN'culus ILLYR'icus; —

RANUN'culus LÆ'tus, R. bulbosus — r. Nemorosus, Anemone nemorosa — r. Palustris, R. sceleratus; —

Ra'pa, Rapum, Rapus, Rapys, Raphis, Raphus, Raph'anus, Raphys, Rhaphis, Rhaphus, Rhaph'anus, Rhaphys, and Rhaphys. These terms were applied, of old, to the cabbage or turnip kind.

RA'PA NA'pus, (ῥαπῆς,) Brassica rapa — r. Rotunda, Brassica rapa.

Rape, (rapa,) Brassica napus; also, Stuprum, (from rapio, 'I ravish,')

Raphane'don, (ῥαφανῆδον, from ῥαφάνη, 'a radish,' 'like a radish,') Rhaphanedon. A transverse fracture of a long bone, leaving no splinters — what has been called, in France, Fracture en rave.

Rapha'nia, Convul'sio Raphania, Rhapha'nia, Mor'bus spasmod'icus malig'nus seu popula'ris seu Silesi'acus, Eclamp'sia typho'des, Syn'clonus Rapha'nia. Linnæus gives this name to a convulsive disease, Ergotis'mus, not uncommon in Germany and Sweden, and which has been attributed to the seeds of the Raph'anus Raphanis'trum seu sylves'tris, Raphanis'trum seg'etum seu arven'se, Rapis'trum, being mixed with the corn. The convulsions are seated in the limbs, and are attended with acute pain. See Convulsio cerealis.

RAPHANIA MAIZ'TICA, Pellagra.

Raph'anis, (ραφανισ.) Raphanus hortensis — r. Magna, Cochlearia armoracia.

Raphanis'trum Arven'se, see Raphania.

Raph'anus, Rapa, R. hortensis.

RAPH'ANUS HORTEN'SIS, Raph'anus, R. sativus seu u'iger, Raph'anis, Rhaph'anus, Radic'ula, Rha'phys, Ra'phys, Rhaphs, Ra'pys, Rad'ish, (F.) Raifort, Radis. Ord. Cruciferae. Sex. Syst. Tetradynamia Siliquosa. The root of this plant is a common esculent. It has also been given as a diuretic in calculous affections. The juice, made into a syrup, is exhibited to relieve hoarseness. Radishes have long been celebrated as antiscorbutics.

RAPH'ANUS MARINUS, Cochlearia armoracia — r. Raphanistrum, see Raphania — r. Rusticanus, Cochlearia armoracia — r. Sylvestris, see Raphania.

Ra'phē, Rha'phē, (ραφή, 'a suture.') A name given to prominent lines resembling a raised stitch. Such is the raphe or tramis which divides the scrotum into two parts, and which extends from the anterior part of the anus to the extremity of the penis. The name Ra'phē seu Ra'phē sup'erior seu Lin'ea media'na seu Sutu'ra cor'poris callo'si exter'na seu chor'da longitudi'na'lis Lancis'ii is also given to two prominent lines which are longitudinal and parallel, and are seen at the upper surface of the corpus callosum, extending from the anterior to the posterior extremity of that commissure.

Ra'phex, Chenopodium vulvaria.

Raphiankis'tron, (ραφανιστρον, 'a needle,' and αγκιστρον, 'a hook.') An instrument employed in the formation of artificial pupil.

Ra'phion, (ραφανιον, dim. of ραφανισ, 'a needle,') Needle.

Ra'phis, (ραφης.) Needle, see Rapa.

Ra'phus, Rapa.

Ra'phys, Rapa, Raphanus hortensis.

Rapis'trum, (from rapa.) see Raphania.

Rapontic, Rheum rhaiponticum.

Rapport (F.), (re, and portare, 'to bring,') Rela'tio, Renuncia'tio, 'a report.' A deposition made by a physician or surgeon, to prove the condition of a person, the nature of a disease, the existence or non-existence of pregnancy, sudden or violent death, &c. Formerly, there were the Rapports dénonciatifs, made at the desire of the injured or their friends, and intended to point out to the judges the details of the crime or misdemeanor; the Rapports provisoires, the object of which was to obtain provisions for the injured individual, both as regarded food and medicine, and to defray the expenses of prosecution; and Rapports mixtes, or those which were both dénonciatifs and provisoires. At present, reports or depositions are generally divided into judiciary, or those which serve to throw light on the subject-matter of any civil or criminal cause, and administrative, which afford information on subjects relating to any branch of the public administration, as on the nuisance, or otherwise, of certain establishments, the character of any epidemic, &c.

Rapport, Eructation, Regurgitation.

Rap'tus, gen. Raptūs, (rapiō, raptum, 'I seize violently and suddenly.') A violent and sudden attack or seizure.

RAP'TUS HÆMORRHAG'ICUS. A hemorrhagic attack or seizure.

RAP'TUS MELANCHOL'ICUS. A sudden and violent seizure of melancholy.

RAP'TUS NERVO'RUM. A sudden and violent nervous seizure. A spasm or cramp.

RAP'TUS POSTTERGA'NEUS, (raptus, post, 'behind,' and tergum, 'the back,') Opisthotonos.

Râtelier, (from rateau, 'a rack,') see Dentier.

Ra'tio, Rational'itas, (reor, ratus, 'I think,') A reason, a cause, an explanation, a mode or manner, as Ratio symptom'atum, an explanation of the symptoms — Ratio meden'di, Ge'nus cura-tio'nis, Vi'a curan'di; the reason, mode or man-ner of cure.

RA'TIO MEDEN'DI, see Ratio—r. Symptomatum, see Ratio—r. Victûs, Dietary.

Ra'tion, (from ratio, 'a proportion,') Dia'rium. The daily allowance of necessaries, especially of food, to a soldier or sailor. Diet rations are founded on principles laid down under Dietary; and in all civilized countries are, in essential re-spects, the same. They vary in time of peace and during active service.

The following details exhibit the provisional amounts of dietary articles allotted by each of the more important governments to the soldier in the field. The figures given for the United States army are based on very recent information; those for the Austrian, Prussian, and French armies on official tables published within the past ten years, although it is possible that in the recent Franco-German war these figures may have been somewhat modified. The Russian ration varies in time of peace, there being 196 meat days and 169 fast days in the year; on 117 of the latter, besides other articles, Schtschi (soup and sourcroust well boiled together) and gruel are furnished, and on the remaining 52 days peas and gruel. There is no accessible table of rations issued for the Russian soldier in time of war. The amount allotted to the British soldier is given, in the following table, from Crimean and East Indian experience, as no regular scale of diet has been established, especially as the British army has now been for some time on a peace footing. Such changes as are based on the expe-rience of recent wars may be found in various professional and non-professional works.

* In exceptional cases.

The reduction of the "marching ration" in bulk and weight, without impairing its nutritive power, has received much attention. Professor Horsford, for instance, proposed one consisting of roasted and ground wheat or self-raising flour, — prepared by intimately incorporating bicar-bonate of soda and pulverulent acid phosphate of lime with flour, and forming a dough with water, — and boiled or roasted whole beef, sau-saged, dried and compressed.

Ra'tional, Rationa'lis, (F.) Rationnel. That which is conformable to reason. This epithet is often opposed to empirical; as rational treatment. The French, also, say Signes rationnels, in opposi-tion to Signes sensibles. See Organic.

The Rational method of treating disease, in the language of Dr. Bigelow, recognizes nature as the great agent in the cure, employing art as an auxiliary, to be resorted to when useful or neces-sary, and avoided when prejudicial.

Rational'itas, Ratio.

Rats'bane, Arsenious acid.

Rat'tle, ([G.] Rattel,) Râle.

RAT'TLES, THE, see Râle.

Rat'tlebush, Sophora tinctoria.

Rat'tlesnake, Crotalus horridus — r. Leaf,

Goodyera pubescens — r. Plantain, Goodyera pu-bescens — r. Root, Nabalus albus, Polygala sen-ega, Trillium latifolium — r. Weed, Hieracium venosum.

Rat'tlesnake's Mas'ter, Agave Virginica, Li-atris scariosa, Nabalus albus.

Rat'tleweed, Actæa racemosa.

Rat'ula, Raspatorium.

Rauce'do, gen. Rauce'dinis, Rau'citas, Para-pho'nia rau'ca, Asper'itas Arte'ris as'persæ, Vox rau'ca, Bran'chus, Hoarseness, (Sc.) Roup, (Prov.) Raup, (F.) Enrouement, Raucité, (raucus, 'hoarse.') A change in the voice, which loses its smooth-ness and becomes low and obscure. It is a common symptom in diseases of the larynx and trachea.

RAUCE'DO CATARRH'A'LIS. Hoarseness from cold.

Rauc'itas, Raucedo.

Raucité, Raucedo.

Rau'cous, Raucus, (F.) Rauque, 'hoarse;' as a raucous voice — Vox rauca seu raucis'ona.

Rauque, Raucous.

Rave, (from rapa.) Brassica rapa.

Ra'very, Delirium.

Rawp, Raucedo.

Ray, Diarrhœa.

Rayonné, (from [F.] rayon, [L.] radius, 'a ray,') Radiated.

Rayons sous-iriens, Ciliary processes.

Ra'zor, Cul'ter tonsorius, Machæ'ris, Novac'ula, Xy'rus, Xy'rus, (F.) Rasoir, (radere, rasum, 'to shave,') An instrument for shaving. Used in surgery to remove hairs, where they would interfere with any operation.

Re (L.), in composition, 'back, in return, again.' Before vowels at times, and before h and d, it becomes red.

Reach'ing, (from [Sax.] pæcan, 'to reach,') Vomiturition.

Reac'tion, Reâct'io, (re, 'again,' and agere, actum, 'to act,') An action of resistance to a power applied. A species of vital movement or excitement, tending to prevent or destroy the effects of any noxious power applied to the animal economy, and which by some has been attributed to the vis medicatrix naturæ. It is certainly dependent on the organic instinctive actions of the frame. It is the state of activity which succeeds the action on the nervous system of certain morbid influences.

Read, Rennet.

Read'y Meth'od, Marshall Hall's Method. A mode of restoring respiration in cases of apnoea, proposed by Dr. Marshall Hall. It consists in placing the body in the prone position, making gentle pressure on the back; then removing the pressure, and turning the body on its side and a little beyond, executing these movements sixteen times in the minute. It is also termed the method of prone and postural respiration in apnoea.

Real'gar, Realgal, Arlada, Arladar, Auripigmentum rubrum, Arsenicum rubrum factitium, Abessi, Sandar'acha Græcorum, Red Sulphuret of Ar'senic. A violent poison. See Poison.

Ream, Cream.

Reas'on, Ra'tio, Lo'gos, (F.) Raison. The faculty or property of the mind by means of which man perceives the distinction between right and wrong, in physics as well as in morals. Reason is a just conclusion resulting from the comparison of two ideas, by virtue of which we form a judgment.

Rebolea, Mummy.

Rebona, Mummy. Also, dried fæces, Ster'cus adustum.

Rebouteur, (re, and bouter, 'to put,') Renoueur.

Recamier's Caus'tic. An escharotic solution of chloride of gold, gr. vj., in dilute nitromuriatic acid, f3j.

Receiv'er, Ampul'la, Recip'ient, (F.) Ballon, (recipere, receptum, — re, and capere, 'to take,' — 'to take, to receive,') In Pharmacy, a wide-necked globular vessel, the neck of which widens gradually outwards, to receive the tapering beak of the retort, in distillation. Like the retort, the receiver may be plain or tubulated.

A quilled receiver is one that has a tapering tube from its lower surface, which is inserted into a graduated bottle through a cork joint, when it is desirable to know accurately the amount of fluid that has passed over.

Recep'ta, Prescription.

Receptac'ula Du'ræ Ma'tris, (from receptare, receptatum, 'to receive,') Sinuses of the dura mater.

Receptac'ulum Chy'li, 'receptacle of the chyle,' R. Pecquet'i seu Pecquetia'num, Diverso'rium seu Stag'num chy'li, Sac'culus chy'lifer seu ro'rifer seu lac'teus, Al'veus ampullosus seu ampulles'cens, Utric'ulus lac'teus, Vesic'ula chy'li, Ampul'la chyli'fera seu chy'li, Cister'na lumbaris seu chy'li, chylocys'tis, Chylodochi'um, Lat'ices lac'tei, Lum'bar cis'tern, Res'er'voir or Cis'tern of Pec'quet, (F.) Réservoir du chyle, R. de Pecquet, Citerne lombaire. A considerable dilatation of the thoracic duct, in front of the lumbar region of the vertebral column. It is the commencement of the duct.

RECEPTAC'ULUM COTUN'NI. A triangular space, formed by a separation of the two laminae of the dura mater of the internal ear, near the middle of the posterior surface of the pars petrosa of the temporal bone, where the aquæductus vestibuli terminates. It is always filled with the Fluid of Cotugno.

RECEPTAC'ULUM PECQUE'TI, R. chyli — r. Sellæ equinae lateribus appositum, Cavernous sinus.

Recepta'rii Med'ici, (from receptum.) Physicians, according to Langius, who, without any reason, collect from pharmacopœias and chemical works masses of receipts (recepta) sufficient to load wagons, ("quibus palustra onerare possent.")

Receptiv'ity, Receptiv'itas, (F.) Réceptivité, (recipere, receptum, 'to receive,') A word used by Tissot to express the susceptibility of certain organs to receive morbid impressions.

Recep'tum, Prescription.

Reces'sus, gen. Recessus, 'a retreat,' Abscess, see Lingula, Sinus — r. Ampullaceus, Cavitas elliptica — r. Labyrinthi, see Crista vestibuli — r. Sulciformis, see Fovea vestibuli.

Recette, Prescription.

Rechamelca, Rachamelca.

Rechute, (re, and chute, 'a fall,') see Relapse.

Recidi'va Mor'bi, (recidere, — re, and cadere, — 'to fall back,') Relapse.

Rêcidive, see Relapse.

Rec'ipê, (L.) (re, and capere, 'to take,') A Latin word which signifies 'take,' (F.) Prenez, and with which prescriptions are commenced. It is, often, represented by R, R, and was formerly by \mathcal{R} , the symbol of Jove. See Abbreviation, and R. Substantively, Recipe means a prescription or receipt.

Rêcipient, Receiver.

Reciproca'tion, Vibra'tions of, see Sound.

Rec'ipro-laryngoscopy, (reciprocus, 'mutual,' larynx, and σκοπεω, 'I view,') A hybrid term. Demonstration of a patient's larynx to others.

Reclina'tio, Reclination — r. Palpebrarum, Ectropion.

Reclina'tion, Reclina'tio, (reclinare, reclina'tum, — re, and clinare, 'to bend,' — 'to bend back,') A mode of operating for the cataract, which consists in applying the needle in a certain manner to the anterior surface of the cataract and depressing it into the vitreous humor in such a way that the front surface of the cataract is the upper, and its back surface the lower one.

Reclu'sor Palpebra'rum, (from recludere, reclusum, 'to open,') Levator palpebræ superioris.

Recoa'ro, Min'er'al Wa'ters of. A town in Venetia, at the foot of the Alps, at which there are chalybeate springs.

Recollectio'nis Jactu'ra, Amnesia.

Recomposit'ion, Metasynchrisis.

Reconvalescen'tia, (re, and convalescere, 'to get well,') Convalescence.

Recorda'tio, (from recordari, recordatus, 'to remember,') Memory.

Recorda'tus, Memory.

Recorporati'vus, (re, and corporare, 'to form into a body,') Metasyncretic.

Recov'ery, (from recuperare, — re, and capio, 'I take,' — 'I regain,') Restauratio.

Recrea'tio, (re, and creare, 'to create,') Restauratio.

Rec'rement, Recremen'tum, (re, and cernere, cretum, 'to sift,') Of old, dross, excrement. With the moderns, a humor, which, after having been separated from the blood, is again returned to it; such as the saliva, the secretion of serous membranes, &c. Such fluids are said to be recremen-tit'ial, (F.) Récrémenteux, Récrémentiel; Humo-res inquilini.

Recremen'ta (pl. of recrementum) Vesi'cæ, Urine.

Récrémenteux, see Recrement.

Recrementit'ial Flu'ids, see Recrement.

Recremen'to-excrementit'ial. Applied to secreted fluids, as the saliva, bile, &c., which are in part reabsorbed and in part excreted.

Recremen'tum, Recrement.

Recrudescen'tia, Palincote'sis, Recrudes'cence, (re, and crudus, 'raw,') An increase of a disease after a temporary remission.

Rec'tal, Recta'lis. Appertaining or relating to the rectum, — as 'rectal tube.' See Tube, rectal.

REC'TAL POUCH'ES, INFLAMMA'TION OF. These pouches become inflamed, enlarged, especially in old people, and ulcerated. The condition is sometimes called Encysted rectum, Sac'ciform disease of the anus (Gross).

Rectifica'tion, Rectifica'tio, (rectum, 'right,' and facere, 'to make,') An operation by which certain liquids are purified by distilling them, either singly or after admixture with other substances.

Recti'tis, gen. Recti'tidis, (rectum, and itis,) properly orchitis or proctitis. Inflammation of the rectum, Proctal'gia inflammato'ria.

Rec'to. In composition, relating or belonging to the rectum.

Rectoce'lè, (recto, and κλῆη, 'rupture,') Rec'to-cele of the Vagi'na, Vag'inal Rec'tocele, Rec'to-vag'inal Her'nia, Her'nia rec'ti in Vagi'nam. Prolapsus of the posterior wall of the vagina, constituting a hernia of the rectum.

Rectococcyge'us, Retrac'tor Rec'ti. A muscle, which originates on the anterior surface of the second and third coccygeal vertebrae, and is inserted into the posterior wall of the rectum. It draws the rectum backwards.

Rectola'bial. Appertaining or relating to the rectum and labium.

Rectostenosis, (recto, and στενός, 'contracted,') Stricture of the rectum.

Rec'totome, (from rectum, and τομή, 'an incision,') A hybrid term for an instrument devised by Amussat for incising the rectum in cases of stricture of that bowel.

Rectoure'thral. Appertaining or relating to the rectum and urethra.

Rectou'terine, Rectou'terini'us, (recto, and uterus,) Appertaining or relating to the rectum and uterus.

RECTOU'TERINE CUL-DE-SAC, see Uterus — r. Folds, see Uterus — r. Pouch, see Uterus.

Rectovag'inal, (recto, and vagina,) Rectova-ginal'is. That which relates or belongs to the rectum and vagina.

RECTOVAG'INAL CUL-DE-SAC or POUCH is formed by the reflection of the peritoneum from the upper third of the vagina to the rectum.

RECTOVAG'INAL FIS'TULA is owing to a preter-natural communication between the rectum and vagina through the above septum.

RECTOVAG'INAL SEP'TUM, (F.) Cloison recto-vaginale, is formed by the junction — back to back (or by what the French term adossement) — of the rectum and vagina. It separates these two canals from each other.

Rectoves'ical, (recto, and vesica, 'the bladder,') Rectovesica'lis. Having relation to the rectum and bladder; as the 'rectovesical fold or pouch or cul-de-sac' of the peritoneum, between the rectum and bladder. See Urinary bladder.

Rec'tum, from rectus, 'straight,' so called from a notion that it is straight, which it is not, Intesti-num Rec'tum, Apeuthys'menos, Euthyen'teron, Lon'gaon, Lon'gas, Lon'ganon, Ar'chos, Cys'saros, Prin'ceps, Monoco'lon (?), Bumgut, (Prov.) Jotgut. The third and last portion of the great intestine. It forms the continuation of the sigmoid flexure of the colon, occupies the posterior part of the pelvis, and extends from the left side of the sacro-vertebral articulation to the coccyx, before which it opens outwards by the orifice called the anus. It is cylindrical, but saccated, as it were, at its inferior portion, where it is consequently larger, and is attached to the sacrum by the mesorectum. Like the other portions of the canal it is formed of three membranes. Towards the lower extremity, some parallel and longitudinal wrinkles are observable on its inner surface: these are the Columns, Colum'næ car'næ of the Rec'tum or of Morgagni, (F.) Colonnes du rectum ou de Morgagni. They are merely folds of the mucous membrane, between which is a number of Lacunæ. The arteries of the rectum are numerous. They proceed from the inferior mesenteric, hypogastric, and internal pudic, and are called hemorrhoidal. The veins open, partly into the hypogastric vein, partly into the inferior mesenteric. The nerves proceed from the sciatic and hypogastric plexuses. The rectum receives the faecal matters, as they pass from the colon, which serves as a reservoir for them.

REC'TUM, STRICT'URE OF THE, Stricture recti.

Rec'tus, 'straight,' (F.) Droit. A term, used in anatomy for parts that pursue a straight course; — as REC'TUS ABDOM'INIS, (F.) Pubio-sternale, Sternopubien (Ch.), Droit de l'abdomen. A long flat muscle, situate at the anterior part of the abdomen, and separated from that of the opposite side by the linea alba. It is attached, above, to the cartilages of the last three true ribs; and, below, to the pubis by a very strong tendon, the outer edge of which is continuous with the fascia transversalis. This muscle is inclosed in an aponeurotic sheath; and, in its course, has three or four transverse aponeurotic intersections. It bends the chest on the pelvis, and conversely.

REC'TUS ANTE'RIOR BRE'VIS, Rectus capitis internus minor — r. Anterior longus, R. capitis internus major — r. Capitis anticus longus, R. capitis internus major.

REC'TUS CAP'ITIS INTER'NUS MA'JOR, R. inter-nus mi'nor seu ante'rior lon'gus seu cap'itis anti-cus lon'gus, Lon'gus cap'itis, (F.) Trachélo-basilaire, Grand droit antérieur de la tête. This muscle is long in proportion to its breadth, flat, and broader above than below. It is situate at the anterior and lateral part of the neck, and arises from the transverse processes of the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth cervical vertebrae. It is inserted into the basilar process of the occipital bone.

REC'TUS CAP'ITIS INTER'NUS MI'NOR, R. inter-nus mi'nor seu ante'rior bre'vis, Ren'uens, An-nuens, (F.) Petit trachélo-basilaire, Petit droit antérieur de la tête. This is situate deeper than the last. It is thin, flattened, irregularly quadrilateral, and passes from the anterior surface of the body of the first vertebra, near the origin of the transverse process, to be inserted into the basilar process.

primus, (F.) Trachélo-atloïdo-basilaire, Atloïdo-sous-occipital (Ch.), Droit latéral de la tête. There is a muscle of this name on each side of the head. It is flat, quadrilateral, and passes from the transverse process of the atlas to the occiput, behind the jugular fossa. It inclines the head to one side.

RECTUS CAP'ITIS POSTICUS MA'JOR, R. major cap'itis posticus minor (Albinus), Spin'axoïdo-occipitalis, (F.) Axoïdo-occipital (Ch.), Grand droit postérieur de la tête. A flat, triangular muscle, situate at the posterior and superior part of the neck. It extends from the spinous process of the second cervical vertebra to the external surface of the lower semicircular ridge of the occipital bone. This muscle extends the head, inclines it to one side, and causes it to experience a rotary motion, which directs the face to its side.

RECTUS CAP'ITIS POSTICUS MI'NOR, R. minor, (F.) Tuber-atloïdo-occipital, Atloïdo-occipital (Ch.), Petit droit postérieur de la tête. A flat, triangular muscle, situate beneath the last, which passes from the posterior arch of the atlas to the occipital bone. It extends the head. See also Rectus capitis posticus major.

RECTUS CRU'RIS, R. femoris.

RECTUS EXTER'NUS OC'ULI, Abduc'tor oc'uli, Indignabundus, Indignat'rius, Iracundus, Oculum movens secundus, (F.) Droit externe, Iracible ou Abducteur de l'œil, Orbito-ectus-scléroticien. All the recti muscles of the eye, four in number, arise from the bottom of the orbit, and are inserted into the sclerotic coat of the eye. The Rectus externus is divided, at its posterior extremity, into two portions, one of which is attached to the outer part of the foramen opticum, and the other to the sphenoid bone.

RECTUS FEM'ORIS, Rectus seu Grac'ilis ante'rior seu cru'ris, Extensor cru'ris me'dius superficialis, (F.) Ilio-rotulien, Droit antérieur de la cuisse. A straight muscle, seated at the anterior part of the thigh. It extends from the anterior and inferior spine of the ilium and the cotyloid cavity of the patella. This muscle extends the leg upon the thigh, and conversely. It can, also, bend the thigh upon the pelvis or carry the pelvis forward.

RECTUS INFE'RIOR FEM'ORIS, Gracilis.

RECTUS INFE'RIOR OC'ULI, Depres'sor oc'uli, Tim'idus, Dep'rimens, Hu'milis, Oculum movens quartus, (F.) Sous-optico-sphéno-scléroticien, Droit inférieur ou abaisseur de l'œil, Muscle humble, arises below the optic foramen from the sphenoid bone. It depresses the eye.

RECTUS INTER'NUS MA'JOR, R. capitis internus major—r. Internus minor, R. capitis internus minor.

RECTUS INTER'NUS OC'ULI, Adduc'tor seu Adduc'tor oc'uli, Bibito'rius, Oculi ad'ductor, Oculum movens primus, (F.) Orbito-intus-scléroticien, Droit interne de l'œil ou adducteur ou buveur. It arises from the sphenoid at the inferior part of the foramen opticum. It turns the eye towards the nose.

RECTUS LATERA'LIS, R. capitis lateralis—r. Lateralis Fallopii, R. capitis lateralis—r. Major, R. capitis posticus major—r. Minor, R. capitis posticus minor.

RECTUS SUPE'RIOR OC'ULI, Atto'lens oc'uli seu oculum, Leva'tor seu Eleva'tor oc'uli, Super'bus, Oculum movens tertius, (F.) Superbe, Sus-optico-sphéno-scléroticien, Droit supérieur ou Élévateur de l'œil, Dédaigneux, is attached to the circumference of the foramen opticum.

All the recti muscles are concerned in the voluntary motions of the eye. The oblique muscles have been supposed by Sir C. Bell to execute the involuntary.

Recubito'rium, (recumbere, recubitus, 'to recline,') Anaclinterium.

Recupera'tio, Restauratio.

Recupera'tion, (from recuperare, recuperatum, 'to recover,') Restauratio.

Recu'perative, Recu'peratory. Restorative. Recovering. Belonging to recovery.

Recur'rent, Recur'rens, (from recurrere—re, and currere,—'to run back,') A name given to several arterial and nervous branches, which seem to reascend towards the origin of the trunk whence they emanate; also, to a disease that relapses,—a recurrent tumor, for example.

RECUR'RENT AR'TERIES. This name has been given to several arteries of the forearm, and to one of the leg. In the forearm, there are, 1. The Radial recur'rent, Artère récurrente de l'épicondyle (Ch.), which arises from the superior part of the radial, and ascends between the supinator longus, supinator brevis, and brachialis internus. 2. The ante'rior cu'bital recur'rent, A. récurrente de l'épitrachée (Ch.), which arises from the upper and inner part of the cubital, and ascends between the pronator teres and brachialis internus. 3. The poste'rior cu'bital recur'rent, which arises from the preceding artery, or from the cubital itself, and ascends between the olecranon and internal tuberosity of the humerus. 4. The poste'rior radial recur'rent, A. récurrente olécranienn (Ch.). It arises from the posterior interosseous, and ascends between the posterior cubital and anconeus muscles.—In the leg, the Arteria recur'rens tibia'lis, A. récurrente du genou (Ch.), is furnished by the anterior tibial, and ascends to the tibialis anticus muscle.

RECUR'RENT BAND'AGES are formed by convolutions of bandages, which make a kind of cap for the part—as the head—to which they are applied.

RECUR'RENT FE'VER, see Relapse—r. Sensibility, see Vertebral nerves—r. Stricture, see Stricture.

Recurva'tio, (re, and curvus, 'crooked,') see Hump.

Recuti'tus, (re, 'back,' and cutis, 'skin,') Apella.

Red'bean, Abrus precatorius.

Red'berry, Arbutus uva ursi, Gaultheria, Panax quinquefolium—r. Bitter, Cornus Florida—r. Swamp, Vaccinium oxycoccos.

Red'gown, see Strophulus.

Red'gum, see Strophulus.

Red Head, Asclepias Curassavica.

Red'mailkes, Papaver rhœas.

Red'rod, Cornus sericea.

Red root, Celastrus, Lachnanthes tinctoria, Sanguinaria Canadensis.

Red'shanks, Polygonia persicaria.

Red'water Tree, see Sassy Bark.

Red'weed, Phytolacca decandra.

Redib'ia, Paronychia.

Redimic'ulum, ('a chaplet,') Diadema.

Redingotes Anglaises, 'English riding coats, frock coats,' see Condom.

Redintegra'tio, (re, and integer, 'entire,') Regeneration, Restauratio.

Rédondance, (re, and unda, 'a wave,') Plethora.

Redou, Coriaria myrtifolia.

Redoublement, (re, and doubler, 'to double,') Exacerbation, Paroxysm.

Redoul, Coriaria myrtifolia.

Redresseur Utérin, (re, and dresser, 'to make straight,') Pessary, intrauterine.

Reds, (from the color,) Menses.

Reduc'tio, (reducere, reductum,—re, and ducere, ductum, 'to lead,'—'to bring back,') Reduction, Taxis—r. Præputii impedita, Phimosis.

Reduc'tion, Reduc'tio, Reposit'io, Restitu'tio, Diap'lasia, Diaplas'mus, Syntax'is. A surgical operation, the object of which is to restore displaced parts to their original situation. Thus, we say the reduction or setting of a fracture, when the displaced parts are again brought to their proper relative situation. The reduction of a hernia is the restoration of the protruded parts to the cavity of the abdomen. This is, also, called Taxis.

In Pharmacy, the process of restoring oxides, chlorides, sulphurets, &c., to the metallic state.

Redundan'tia, (re, and unda, 'a wave,') Plethora.

Reduplica'tio, Anadiplosis.

Redu'via, Paronychia.

Reed Mace, Typha latifolia.

Refec'tio, (reficere, refectum, 'to restore,' from re, and facere, 'to make,') Restauratio.

Refecti'va, Analeptica.

Refec'tus, gen. Refec'tus, Restauratio.

Reficien'tia, Analeptica.

Réflexif, Reflex.

Réflex'ion, (re, and flexere, flexum, 'to bend,') Reflex'io, (F.) Reflexion. A bending or turning back. Duplicature. The act of turning the mind back on its actions; so as to constitute contemplation, deliberation.

Réflex'tor Epiglott'idis. A muscle, which arises from the arytenoid cartilage and inner part of the thyroid, and is inserted into the lateral edges of the epiglottis.

Re'flex, Reflex'us, (F.) Réflexe, Réflexif, (same etymon as Reflexion.) A term applied to an action, which consists in the reflection by an efferent nerve of an impression conveyed to a nervous centre by an afferent nerve; hence reflex movement, reflex paralysis, reflex epilepsy, &c.

A reflex action is generally regarded to be one executed without consciousness; like the 'reflex or excito-motory movements' of Dr. Marshall Hall.

Re'flex Move'ments, see Motion—r. Spinal, see Motion—r. System of nerves, see Excito-motory, and Nerves.

Reflex'io, Reflection—r. Palpebrarum, Ectropion.

Réflexion, Reflection.

Réforme, Invaliding.

Refrac'tion, Refrac'tio, Photocamp'sis, Dia-clasis, (re, and frangere, fractum, 'to break,') The change of direction which rays of light experience when they pass obliquely from one medium into another of different density. If the light passes from a rarer to a denser medium, it approaches the perpendicular raised at the point of immersion. The contrary occurs, when it goes from a denser to a rarer medium. The theory of lenses, telescopes, and of the eye, rests entirely on this property of light.

Refrac'ture, Refrac'tura, (F.) Reproduction de la Fracture. A term applied to the fracture by the surgeon of bones already broken, which have been badly united, &c.

Réfrigérant, see Alembic.

Refrig'erants, Refrigeran'tia, Psychica, Antither'ma, Frige'facien'tia, (F.) Rafraichissants, Refrigeratifs, Desaltérants, (re, and frigere, 'to cool,') Medicines which depress the morbid temperature of the body. The chief reputed refrigerants are the Potassæ nitræ (?), the Sodæ boras (?), but chiefly the abstraction of caloric by ice and iced drinks, cold water, cold lemonades, soda water, and effervescing draughts internally; and externally, cool air, cold water, evaporating lotions, and frigorific mixtures.

Réfrigératifs, Refrigerants.

Refrigera'tor, see Alembic.

Regenera'tio, (re, and generare, generatum, 'to beget,') Regeneration, Reproduction.

Regenera'tion, Regenera'tio, Palingen'esis, Palingen'esia, Redintegra'tio, Anagenne'sis, Anaph'y'sis. Reproduction of a part of the body, which has been destroyed, as the skin, nerves, &c. See Nerves, regeneration of.

Régime Sanitaire, see Regimen.

Reg'im'en, gen. Regim'inis, (F.) Régime, (regere, 'to govern,') The rational and methodical use of food, and of everything essential to life, both in a state of health and disease. It is often restricted, in its meaning, to Diet. It is sometimes used synonymously with Hygiene.

Régime Sanitaire and Système Sanitaire mean the measures and regulations adopted to prevent the development and propagation of diseases reputed to be pestilential, — especially plague, yellow fever, and cholera.

Regim'ina, Regimina'lis, (from regimen, gen. regim'inis.) Relating or appertaining to regimen, — as 'regiminal treatment,' or treatment by regimen.

Regi'na Pra'ti, 'queen of the meadow,' Spiræa ulmaria.

Re'gio, Region.

RE'GIO AURICULA'RIS. The region of the ear.

RE'GIO BUCCA'LIS. The region of the cheek.

RE'GIO CARDI'ACA, Epigastric region.

RE'GIO CERVICA'LIS. The region of the neck. The cervical region.

RE'GIO EPIGAS'TRICA, Epigastrium.

RE'GIO FACIA'LIS. The facial region.

RE'GIO FRON'TA'LIS. The frontal region.

RE'GIO GAS'TRICA, Umbilical region—r. Hypochondriaca, Hypochondre—r. Hypogastrica, see Hypogastrium—r. Iliaca, Iliac region—r. Inguinalis, Inguinal region—r. Ischiadica, Ischiadic region—r. Jugalis, Jugal region—r. Lumbalis, Lumbi—r. Mentalis, Mental region—r. Mesogastrica, Umbilical region—r. Nasalis, Nasal region—r. Nuchæ, Nuchal region—r. Nuchalis, Nuchal region—r. Occipitalis, Occiput—r. Occipitalis inferior, Nuchal region—r. Olfactoria, see Locus luteus—r. Perinæi, Perinæum—r. Præcordiaca, Præcordial region—r. Pubis, Pubic region—r. Stomachalis, Epigastric region—r. Stomachica, Epigastric region—r. Temporalis, Temple—r. Umbilicalis, Umbilical region.

Re'gion, Re'gio, (regere, 'to direct,') Anatomists have called regions determinate spaces on the surface of the body or of different organs. Thus, the abdomen has been divided into several; to which different names have been given. See Abdomen, Epigastrium, Hypochondrium, Hypogastrium.

Région Ombilicale, Umbilical region—r. Trachéale, see Suprasternal.

Regional Anat'omy, see Anatomy.

Règles, (from regula, 'a rule,') Menses—r. Dévies, Menstruation, vicarious—r. Difficiles, Dysmenorrhœa.

Régisse, Glycyrrhiza.

Règne Animal, (from regnum, 'a kingdom,') see Animal.

Reg'ular, Regula'ris, (F.) Régulier, (from regula, — regere, 'to govern, — 'a rule,') According to rule. Applied to the types of a disease, and to the pulse, when according to rule.

REG'ULAR PRACTIT'IONER. One who practises his profession according to the rules established by law or professional custom.

Reg'ulus, (dim. of rex, gen. regis, 'a king,') A pure metal. One reduced from its ore.

REG'ULUS ANTIMO'NI, Antimonium.

Regurgita'tion, Regurgita'tio, (re, and gurgere, gen. gurgitis, 'a gulf,') The act by which a canal or reservoir throws back substances accumulated in it. Mitral regurgitation, for example, means the reflux of blood through the left auriculo-ventricular opening, during the contraction of the left ventricle. Regurgitation is also applied to the pu'king or pos'setting of infants; and to the rising of solids or fluids into the mouth in the adult, — from re, and gorge, (gurgere,) 'the throat,' (F.) Rapport. What is called "vomiting at pleasure" is regurgitation.

The substance brought into the mouth by regurgitation, the French call Renvois.

Reichenhall. There are 19 saline springs at this town, in Upper Bavaria. They are used for bathing purposes, by those laboring under serofula and incipient phthisis, and also for inhalation.

Reif, (from [Sax.] hpeor), Psora.

Reil, Island of, Insula cerebri.

REIL, MODERATOR BAND OF. One of the columnæ carneæ passing from the interventricular septum to the yielding wall in the right ventricle.

Rein, (from [L.] ren, gen. renis), Kidney.

Rein Cardiac. Passive congestion of the kidney from disturbance of the circulation, as by affections of the heart and lungs, mechanical obstacle to the circulation, &c.

Reine des Prés, 'queen of the meadows,' Spirea ulmaria.

Reinerz, Mineral Waters of. Reinerz is a small town in Silesia, three German miles from Glatz. The waters are acidulous chalybeates. The principal springs are the tepid drinking spring, the cold spring, and three bathing springs.

Reinforce'ment, Fascic'ulus of, F. Cuneatus. A band of fibres from the corpus innominatum or lateral part of the antero-lateral column of the medulla, which is continued up behind and around the corpus olivare, is lined on its inner or central surface with cineritious substance, enlarges as it ascends, passes over the upper surface of the pons Varolii, and is expanded into the optic thalamus. It thus forms, in its course, the anterior paries of the fourth ventricle, and is brought into view by brushing away the tuberculum cinereum or gray matter of the ventricle. This band has received the name owing to its constantly increasing as it ascends, and being mixed up with gray matter on its inner face, from which it seems to derive new fibres.

Reins, (from [L.] ren, pl. renes), Kidneys, Lumbi.

Reins Succenturiés ou Succenturiaux, Capsules, renal.

Reiss'ner's Mem'brane, see Lamina denticulata.

Rejec'tio, Anag'gē, (rejicere, rejectum, — re, and jacere, 'to cast,' — 'to cast back.') Every excretion by the mouth,—spitting, expectoration, regurgitation, or vomiting.

REJEC'TIO SAN'GUINIS E PULMON'IBUS, Hæmoptysis.

Rejuvenes'cence, Rejuvenescen'tia, (re, and juvenescens, — juvenis, 'a youth,' — 'growing young.') A renewal of youth. The state of being young again. The assumption of the characteristics of youth by the aged.

Relâchant, Relaxant.

Relâchement, Relaxation.

Relapse', Hypot'rophē, Epis'trophē, Hypostrophē, Mor'bi Recidi'va, Hypotropias'mus, (re, and labor, lapsus, 'I fall down.') The return of a disease during, or shortly after, convalescence. The French use Rechute in this sense; and Récidive (Morbus recidi'vus) for the return of a complaint, at a greater or less period after the complete recovery of health.

The terms Relap'sing or Recur'rent fe'ver, Short fever, Five-day fever, Seven-day fever, Seventeen-day fe'ver, Irish Fam'ine Fe'ver, Typh'in'ia, Syn'ocha, Fam'ine ty'phus, Fam'ine fe'ver, Bil'ious Remit'tent fe'ver, Remitting Icter'ic fe'ver, and Mild Yellow fe'ver, Typhus seu Febris recur'rens seu recidi'va, Hun'ger Pest, (F.) Fèvre à rechutes, have been given to a form of continued fever, which has occasionally appeared epidemically, as in Edinburgh, in 1843 and 1847, and afterwards in some portions of the United States, and was generally attended with icteric symptoms. The main phenomena disappear at about the end of a week; but in many cases a relapse occurs about the end of a fortnight. Few die of the affection.

Relap'sing Fe'ver, see Relapse.

Rela'tio, (re, and ferre, latum, 'to carry,') Rapport.

Rela'tion, Func'tions of, see Function.

Relax'ant, Lax'ans, Malact'icum, Chalas'ticum, Paret'icum, (F.) Relâchant, (re, and laxare, 'to loosen,') A medicine which diminishes the tension of organs. Mucilaginous and fatty substances are relaxants.

Relaxan'tia, Emollients.

Relaxa'tio, Relaxation — r. Cordis et Arteriarum, Diastole.

Relaxa'tion, Relaxa'tio, Chala'sis, Chalas'mus, (F.) Relâchement. In Physiology, relaxation is opposed to contraction. In Pathology, it means great looseness of a part.

Relève Paupière, ([L.] re, and levare, 'to raise,') An instrument for raising the eyelid.

Releveur de V'Anus, Levator ani — r. de la Lèvre inférieure, Levator labii inferioris — r. du Menton, Levator labii inferioris — r. de l'Omoplate, Levator scapulæ — r. de la Prostate, Levator prostatae — r. de l'Urèthre, Levator urethrae.

Relig'ious Diseases, (F.) Maladies religieuses. Diseases affecting the nervous system, and arising from the excitement of religious emotions. See Convulsionnaire.

Reliquat (F.), (from [L.] relinquere, relictum, 'to leave,') The remnant or remains of a disease.

Remak' Fi'bres, (after Remak, the German physiologist,) see Fibres, Remak.

Reman'sio Men'sium, (re, and maneo, mansum, 'I stay,') Amenorrhœa.

Remède, ([L.] remedium), Clyster, Medicament — r. du Capuchin, Liquor hydrargyri nitrici — r. du Duc d'Antin, Liquor hydrargyri nitrici — r. de Durande, Liquor anodynus terebinthinatus.

Remed'ial, Medicinal.

Remed'iate, Medicinal.

Rem'ediless, Incurable.

Remedium, (re, and mederi, 'to heal,') Ju-vans, Medicament — r. Dentifricium, Dentifrice.

Rem'edy, Medicament — r. English, Cinchona.

Rem'etic, Medicament.

Remis'sio, (re, and mittere, missum, 'to send,') Decline, Remission — r. Cordis et Arteriarum, Diastole — r. Morbi, Remission — r. Virium, Atony.

Remis'sion, Remis'sio, Epan'esis, An'esis, Submis'sio, Aph'esis, En'dosis, Meio'sis. In a more extensive signification, a temporary diminution of the symptoms of a disease, either acute or chronic, Remis'sio mor'bi. Diminution in the febrile symptoms, such as occurs in a remittent fever between the exacerbations.

Remit'tens, Remittent — r. Icterodes, Fever, yellow.

Remit'tent, Remit'tens, Remit'ting. Any disease which presents remissions.

REMIT'TENT FE'VER, Fe'bris remit'tens, Epan'e'tus, Exac'er'ebating, paroxys'mal, subcontin'ual, endem'ic, endem'ial or endem'ical fever, (F.) Fèvre rémittente, is one which strikingly exacerbates and remits, but without intermission. The ordinary bilious fever of the United States is a simple remittent — Epan'e'tus mi'tis, (F.) Fèvre rémittente simple. Remittent fevers frequently vary in severity with the climate, being more fatal in tropical regions on account of complications, as cerebral derangement, irritable stomach, &c.

REMIT'TENT FE'VER, Bil'ious, Remittent fever, see Relapse.

REMIT'TENT FE'VER OF CHIL'DREN, Fever, infantile, remittent.

Remit'ting Icter'ic Fe'ver, see Relapse.

Rem'ora, (re, and mora, 'delay,') Stoppage, stagnation,—as of blood. Also, the name of two surgical instruments, intended to retain parts in situ. The one was used, formerly, in castration, to prevent the intestines from protruding at the inguinal ring; the other, called Remora Hilda'ni, (F.) Arrêt d'Hildan, Echene'is, was employed to maintain fractures and luxations reduced. It is not now used.

REM'ORA ARA'TRI, Odonis spinosa — r. Hildani, see Remora.

Ren, Kidney — r. Mobilis, Kidney, movable — r. Unguiformis, Horseshoe kidney.

Re'nal, Ren'alis, (from ren.) That which relates to the kidney.

RE'NAL AL'TERATIVES, see Alteratives.

RE'NAL AR'TERIES, Emulg'ent ar'teries, are very large and short, and commonly two in number — one to each kidney. They arise from the sides of the abdominal aorta, forming with it a right angle. The left is commonly a little more anterior and elevated than the right. After a short course, they arrive at the fissure of the kidney, where they divide, before entering it, into three or four very considerable branches.

RE'NAL CAP'SULE, Capsule, renal — r. Nerve, see Splanchnic nerves.

RE'NAL PLEX'USES, Emulg'ent Plex'uses. These are two, one on each side. They proceed from fasciculi of the solar and coeliac plexuses; from the outer side of the semilunar ganglion and the final expansion of the small splanchnic nerves. These plexuses begin by three or four ganglions, situate at the commencement of the renal artery, and they give off from their circumference many fine, straight filaments, which do not anastomose, and which enter the kidney with the divisions of the renal artery. These divisions they accompany.

RE'NAL VEINS, Emulg'ent Veins. These are very large. Their roots follow the same course as the arteries in the substance of the kidney. In the fissure, or pelvic portion of the kidney, they unite into a single trunk, which passes transversely inwards, and opens at the side of the vena cava descendens.

Ren'chus, (ρεχος,) Snoring, Stertor.

Ren'culus, Renic'ulus, Ren'ulus, (dim. of ren.) A small kidney. A lobe of the kidney.

Ren'dering, (as lard,) see Adeps præparatus.

Ren'dles, Rennet.

Ren'al'mia Exalta'ta, (after P. and M. L. Rénéaulme, botanical writers of France,) Alpin'ia exalta'ta seu tubula'ta, (F.) Rénéaulme. A plant of British Guiana, which is possessed of diaphoretic and diuretic properties, and, in large doses, is emetic. It is much used there in dropsy, rheumatism, dysentery, &c. The bruised rhizoma is the part employed.

Re'nes (pl. of ren) Succenturia'ti, (succenturio, 'a subcenturion,') Capsules, renal.

Renic'ulus, (dim. of ren,) Renculus.

Ren'iform, (ren, and forma, 'shape,') Nephroid.

Rennes, Min'eral Waters of. Thermal salines in the department of Aube, France, containing carbonic acid and chloride of magnesium. Temperature, 103° to 121° of Fah. Season, from the 1st of May to October.

Ren'net, Run'net, Coagulum, Py'tia, Pyet'ia, (from [G.] gerinnen, 'to coagulate' [?],) (F.) Présure, Caille-lait. When the fourth stomach or Abomasus of the calf is salted and dried, it possesses the property of coagulating milk when a portion of it is soaked in water, and the infusion — Ren'net, Ren'dles, Rou'ning, (Prov.) Heslop, Cheeselope, Yernin, Earning, Preaser, Read, Run'ning, Steep — is added to milk. Liquid rennet or Rennet wine may be made, according to Mr. Wm. Procter, Jr., of fresh rennets, (about three,) ℥xxiv , chloride of sodium, ℥ij , alcohol, ℥xvj , white wine, ℥xvj , water, q. s. A tablespoonful of this solution coagulates a quart of milk to a firm curd.

REN'NET WHEY, see Serum lactis.

Renoncule, Ranunculus — r. Bulbuse, Ranunculus bulbosus.

Renouée, (re, and nouer, 'to knot,') Polygonum aviculare — r. Acre, Polygonum hydropiper.

Renoueur, (F.) Rebouteur, Rhabilleur, (re, and nouer, — nodus, 'a knot,' — 'to tie or knot,') A bone doctor, a bone setter. One who makes a trade of reducing fractures and dislocations.

Renova'tio, (re, and novare, novatum, 'to make new,') Ananeosis.

Renssela'e'ria Virgin'ica, (after General Van Rensselaer, of Albany,) Peltandra Virginica.

Ren'uens, (renuo, 'I deny by a motion of the head,') Rectus capitis internus minor.

Ren'ulus, (dim. of ren,) Renculus.

Re'num Aton'ia, 'atony of the kidneys,' Nephratonia — r. Paralysis, Nephratonia.

Renuncia'tio, (re, and nunciare, nunciatum, 'to tell,') Rapport.

Renunc'uli Succenturia'ti, (dim. of ren,) see Capsule, renal.

Renversement de la Langue, (re, and vertere, versum, 'to turn,') Paraglossa — r. de la Matrice, Uterus, inversion of the — r. des Paupières, Ectropion — r. du Rectum, Proctocele — r. de la Vessie, Exocyste, Exstrophia of the bladder.

Ren'vois, (re, and envoyer, 'to send,') see Regurgitation.

Réophore, (ρε, 'a current,' from ῥέω, 'I flow,' and φέρω, 'to carry,') Electrode.

Repanda'tio, (repandus, — re, and pandere, 'to spread,' — 'spread backwards,') Lordosis.

Repara'tion, (re, and parare, paratum, 'to set in order,') Restauratio.

Repar'ative, Repar'atory. Having the power of restoring or repairing.

Repellen'tia, Repellents.

Repel'lents, Repellen'tia, Repercutien'tia, Apo-crus'tica, Stal'tica, Repercus'sives, (F.) Répercus'sifs, (re, and pellere, 'to drive,') Medicines which, when applied to a tumefied part, cause the fluids that render it tumid to recede, as it were, from it. Astringents, cold water, ice, &c., are repellents.

Répercussifs, (re, and percutio, percussum, — per, and quater, 'to shake or batter,' — 'I strike back,') Repellents.

Repercus'sio, Contraffissura, Repercussion.

Repercus'sion, Repercus'sio, Anac'lasis. Disappearance of a tumor or cutaneous eruption, in consequence of the application of a repellent. The action of a repellent remedy. The French writers use the term Délitescence, Delitescen'tia, for the sudden disappearance of a tumor, inflammation, eruptive disease, or purulent collection, without the disease occurring in any other part of the body. In this respect delitescence differs from metastasis. Délitescence of an inflammation or 'sudden disappearance' is distinguished by certain French pathologists from Resolution. Repercussion also means Ballotement.

Much unnecessary apprehension has existed in regard to repelling, or 'driving in,' as it is called, different morbid affections — gout, and cutaneous eruptions, for example.

Repercus'sives, Repellents.

Repercutien'tia, Repellents.

Reple'tio, (re, 'again,' and pleo, 'I fill,') Fulness, Plethora.

Repli Longitudinal de la Méninge, (repli, 'a fold,' from [L.] re, and plicare, 'to fold,') Falx cerebri.

Reposit'io, (re, and ponere, positum, 'to place,') Anaplasia, Reduction, Taxis.

Repos'itor, (re, and ponere, positum, 'to place,') An instrument intended to replace the uterus in its proper position in case of displacement.

Repoussoir, (re, and pellere, pulsum, 'to drive,') Punch — r. d'Arêtes, Probang.

Rep'rimens, (re, and premere, 'to press,') Epischeticus.

Reprise. A protracted whistling, sipping inspiration heard in whoopingcough.

Reproductio, Reproductio, Regeneratio, (re, and producere, productum, — pro, and ducere, 'to lead,' — 'to bring forth,') The function by which living bodies produce bodies similar to themselves. See Generation. As a general remark, it will be found true, that the larger animals are uniparous, and the smaller, which are more exposed to destruction, multiparous.

Reproduction Méristématique, see Generation — r. Parthenogenetic, Parthenogenesis.

Reproductivitas, (F.) Reproductivité. Capability of reproducing.

Repulso'rium, (re, and pellere, pulsum, 'to drive,') Punch.

Repurga'tio, Anacatharsis, (re, and purgare, purgatum, 'to cleanse,') According to Castelli, purgation by transpiration or by expectoration. Medicines producing this effect are called Repurgantia.

Re'quies, gen. Requies, (re, and quies, 'rest,') Acinesia.

Requie'tio, (re, and quiescere, quietum, 'to become at rest,') Acinesia.

Res Con'tra Natu'ram, 'things against nature,' (F.) Choses contre nature, are those things which tend to destroy man; — as disease, and everything connected with it.

RES CULINA'RIA, Culinary art — r. Medica, Medicina.

RES NATURA'LES, 'natural things,' (F.) Choses naturelles. Those things which, by their union, were conceived to constitute the nature of man; such as the elements, temperaments, humors, spirits, &c.

RES NON NATURA'LES, 'things not natural,' (?) (F.) Choses non-naturelles. Those things which, anciently, formed the matter of hygiene. See Non-naturals.

RES VENE'REA, Coition — r. Vestitaria, Vestitus.

Rescision, (re, and scindere, scissum, 'to cut asunder,') see Amputation.

Réseau, (from reticulum, dim. of rete, 'a net,') Rete, Reticulum — r. Admirabile, Rete mirabile — r. Intermédiaire, see Corpus spongiosum urethrae — r. Merveilleux, Rete mirabile.

Resec'tio, Resection — r. Articulorum, see Resection.

Resec'tion, Resec'tio, (resicare, resectum, — re, and secare, 'to cut off,') Act of cutting or paring off. A name given, especially by the French surgeons, to operations in which the carious extremities of long bones, or the unconsolidated extremities of fractured bones forming irregular joints, are removed with the saw. — Resec'tio articulo'rum, Decapitatio articulo'rum.

Rese'da Crispa'ta, (from resedo, — re, and sedare, 'to settle,' — 'I calm or assuage,') R. luteola — r. Lanceolata, R. luteola.

RESE'DA LUTE'OLA, R. lanceolata seu crispa'ta, Lute'ola, Weld, Dyer's Weed. A European plant naturalized in the United States, which was at one time used as a diaphoretic and diuretic.

Res'erans, (from resero, 'I open,') Aperient.

Reserve' Air, see Respiration.

Réservoir de la Bile, ([L.] re, and servare, 'to keep,') Gall-bladder — r. du Chyle, Receptaculum chyli — r. des Larmes, Lachrymal sac — r. of Pecquet, Receptaculum chyli — r. de Pecquet, Receptaculum chyli — r. of the Thymus, see Thymus.

Res'ther, Dracunculus.

Residen'tia, (resido, 'I settle or sink down,') Sediment.

Resid'ual Air, see Respiration.

Resi'mus, 'turned up, bent back,' Camus.

Res'in, Resi'na, Rheti'nē, (F.) Résine, (from res, 'I flow,') A vegetable product, commonly dry and concrete, more or less brittle, inodorous or slightly odorous, insipid, or of an acrid warm taste; of a smooth, glassy fracture, heavier than water, inflammable, insoluble in water, soluble in alcohol, ether, and yolk of egg, and negatively electrifiable by friction. Many resins are used in medicine; the greater part are purgative and irritating. Some act like acrid poisons. See Pinus sylvestris.

Pini abietis sponte concreta*, see Pinus abies.

RESI'NA PODOPHYLL'LI, Resin of Mayapple, R. of Podophyllum, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Podophyllin. Prepared from the powdered rhizoma of Podophyllum by the action of alcohol, muriatic acid, and water, a modified formula for which is found in the last edition of the Ph. U. S. (1873). See Podophyllum peltatum. Dose, gr. $\frac{1}{4}$ to gr. j.

RESI'NA SCAMMO'NII, Extractum scammonii — r. Strobilina, see Pinus balsamea, and Pinus mughos — r. Terebinthi, see Pistacia terebinthus.

Resina'tum, Rhetini'tes. Wine impregnated with resin, used by the ancients as a stomachic.

Résine, Resin — r. de Cayenne, Caoutchouc — r. Elastique, Caoutchouc — r. de Gaïac, see Guaia-cum — r. Gomart, see Bursera gummifera — r. de Lierre, see Hedera helix — r. de Turbith, see Globularia alypum.

Résinéine, Résinone, Résinène, (from resin.) A solid or liquid product obtained by the distillation of rosin and lime or an alkali.

Resinoce'rum, Rhetinoce'ron, (ῥητινῆ, 'resin,' and κερως, 'wax,') A mixture of resin and wax.

Résinone, Résinéine.

Resino'sa. In Pharmacy, resinous substances.

Res'inous, Resino'sus, Rhetino'des, (from resin.) Containing resin; like resin.

Résolutifs, (resolvere, — re, and solvere, solutum, 'to loosen,') Discutients.

Resolu'tio, Resolution — r. et Diabrosis Ventrliculi, Gastromalacia — r. Membrorum, Paralysis.

RESOLU'TIO MOR'BI. The resolution or disappearance of a disease; especially when without any critical evacuation.

RESOLU'TIO NERVO'RUM, Paralysis — r. Ventrliculi autopeptica, Gastromalacia — r. Virium, Dialysis.

Resolu'tion, Resolutio, Discus'sio. Removal or disappearance, as of a disease. Resolution is one of the terminations of inflammation, in which the inflamed part returns gradually, and without suppuration, to the healthy condition. Certain inflammatory affections, which terminate in this manner, as mumps, gout, rheumatism, and some forms of scrofula, have been termed by Mr. J. H. James, resolving inflammations. Also, looseness, weakness.

Résolution des Membres, Paralysis.

Resolven'tia, (from resolvere, 'to loosen, to dissipate,') Discutients.

Resolv'ing Inflammations, see Resolution.

Res'onance, (F.) Retentissement, Résonnance, Résonnement, (re, and sono, 'I sound,') A return of sound; a resounding; a reverberation of sounds. A thrilling of the voice more loud than natural; or its existence in a part where it is not heard in health,—as detected by auscultation. A thickened and hardened state of the lungs, caused either by a mass of crude tubercles, or by inflammation, is generally considered to produce this phenomenon, by rendering the lung a better conductor of the murmur of the voice in the bronchi. Hence the origin of the term Bronchophony, (bronchus, and φωνη, 'voice,') (F.) Voix bronchique, Voix tubaire, V. bourdonnante.

Resonance is also used in the sense of resounding; as when the chest is said to be resonant on percussion.

RES'ONANCE, VESIC'ULO-TYMPANIT'IC, see Vesiculo-tympanitic — r. Vibrations of, see Sound.

Res'onant, Res'onans, Res'onans, (F.) Retentissant, Résonnant. Resounding. See Resonance.

Reson'itus, gen. Reson'itus, Contrafissura.

Résonnance, Resonance.

Résonnement, Resonance.

Resor'bens, (re, and sorbere, sorptum, 'to suck up,') Absorbent.

Resorp'tio, Absorption, Resorption — r. Cutanea, see Absorption — r. Cutis, see Absorption.

Resorp'tion, Resorp'tio. Absorption of a fluid which has been previously deposited in a part, as of pus, blood, serum, &c. See Absorption.

Respirable, Respirabilis, (respiratio, and habilis, 'fit,') Capable of being breathed. Adapted for respiration.

Respira'men, gen. Respiram'inis, (respiro, — re, and spiro, — 'I take breath,') Respiration.

Respiramen'tum, Respiration.

Respirateur, Respirator, Respiratory.

Respira'tio, Respiration — r. Abolita, Apnoea — r. Brevis, Dyspnoea — r. Difficilis, Dyspnoea — r. Stertens, Stertor — r. Stertorosa, see Stertor — r. Stertuosa, Stertor.

Respira'tion, Respira'tio, Anap'noë, Anapneu'sis, Pneu'sis spira'tio, Respira'men, Respiramentum, Respira'tus, Respir'itus, Spir'itus. A function proper to animals, the object of which is, to place the materials of the blood—the mixture of the venous blood with lymph and chyle—in contact with atmospheric air, in order that it may acquire the vivifying qualities which belong to arterial blood. The organs for executing this function are, in the mammalia, birds, and reptiles, the lungs. In man, the respiration consists of mechanical and chemical phenomena. The mechanical are Inspiration and Expiration. The evident chemical phenomena consist in the formation of a certain quantity of carbonic acid, the absorption of a part of the oxygen of the air, and the disengagement of a quantity of water in the state of vapor. In the healthy condition the respiration is easy, gentle, regular, and without noise. In man, the respirations are generally about 35 per minute in the first year of life: 25 during the second; 20 at puberty; and 18 in the adult age.

The air of respiration has been divided into first, the residual air, or that which cannot be expelled from the lungs, but remains after a full and forcible expiration, estimated at 120 cubic inches; secondly, the supplementary or reserve air, or that which can be expelled by a forcible expiration, after an ordinary outbreathing, valued at 130 cubic inches; thirdly, the breath, tidal or breathing air, valued at 26 cubic inches; and fourthly, the complementary or complemental air, or that which can be inhaled after an ordinary inspiration, which amounts to 100 cubic inches. This estimate gives 250 cubic inches as the average volume of air which the chest contains after an ordinary expiration.

RESPIRA'TION, ARTIFIC'IAL. The attempt to supply the place of natural respiration, when the latter is in abeyance from any cause, as asphyxia.

Respiration Bronchique, see Murmur, respiratory.

RESPIRA'TION, BRONCHO-VESIC'ULAR, (F.) R. vésiculo-bronchial. A morbid modification of the respiratory murmur, having more or less of the characters of the bronchial and vesicular respiration combined. It denotes incomplete solidification of the lung, as from the presence of tubercle.

RESPIRA'TION OF THE CELLS, Murmur, respiratory — r. Coggedwheel, Respiration, jerking — r. Empêchée, Respiration, jerking — r. Entrecoupée, Respiration, jerking — r. Exagérée, see Puerile — r. Hypervésiculaire, see Puerile — r. Interrupted, Respiration, jerking.

RESPIRA'TION, JERK'ING, Interrupted, Cogged-wheel, or Wavy respiration, (F.) R. Saccadée ou Entrecoupée ou Empêchée. When the murmur of inspiration, in place of being continuous, is interrupted as by starts, it is called 'jerking.' It is a concomitant of incipient pleurisy, pleurodynia, spasmodic asthma, and tuberculosis of the lung with corresponding pleuritic adhesion.

Respiration Luctueuse, see Lactueux — r. Metallic, Tintement métallique — r. Nulle, see Murmur, respiratory.

Respiration Puérile, see Puerile — r. Râpeuse, see Murmur, respiratory — r. Rude, see Murmur, respiratory — r. Saccadée, R. jerking — r. Silencieuse, see Murmur, respiratory — r. Sufflante, Murmur, respiratory — r. Supplémentaire, see Puerile — r. Tubal, see Murmur, respiratory.

RESPIRA'TION, VAG'INAL. The movement of rise and fall of the vagina under the influence of similar movements on the part of the diaphragm.

RESPIRA'TION, VESIC'ULO-BRONCHIAL, Respiration, broncho-vesicular — r. Wavy, Respiration, jerking.

Respiratoire, Respiratory.

Respirator, (F.) Respirateur. Various instruments, under this name, have been contrived for the purpose of tempering the air before it reaches the lungs in winter. One of the best is that of Jeffrey, which is made of several layers of fine wire tissue. A charcoal respirator has been devised to act as a kind of air-filter and prevent noxious effluvia from entering the lungs. The air is said to be made several degrees warmer in this way.

Respirato'rium Ven'tris, Diaphragm.

Respiratory, Respirato'rius, (F.) Respirateur, Respiratoire. Appertaining to respiration. An epithet applied to the murmur heard by auscultation in a healthy adult, during inspiration and expiration. It marks the entrance of the air into the cells, and its passage out of them. See Murmur.

RESPIRATORY CAV'ITIES, Cavities, respiratory — r. External. Nerve, see Thoracic nerves — r. Ganglia, see Encephalon — r. Internal, Nerves, Diaphragmatic nerves — r. Nerve of the face, Facial nerve — r. Nerve, Superior, Spinal nerve.

RESPIRATORY PE'RIOD. The time from the commencement of one inspiration to the occurrence of the next. If this period be regarded as four seconds; a half second, it has been considered, may be occupied in health by inspiration; a half second in expiration, and two seconds in repose.

RESPIRATORY PULSE, Pulse, respiratory.

RESPIRATORY TRACT, Tractus respiratorius. A middle column of the spinal marrow, described by Sir Charles Bell as that whence the respiratory nerves originate. See Nerves.

Respira'tus, Respiration.

Respir'itus, gen. Respiritus, Respiration.

Reserrant, (re, and server, 'to lock up,') Constipating.

Reserré Ventre, Constipation.

Res'ta Bo'vis, Ononis spinosa.

Restagna'tio, (re, and stagnare, stagnatum, 'to overflow,') Eructation.

Res'taurans, Analeptic, Corroborant.

Restauran'tia, Analeptica.

Restaura'tio, Refec'tio, Refec'tus, Analep'sis, Anatrep'sis, Anacom'idē, Anacte'sis, Apocatas'tasis, Recupera'tio, (restaurare, restauratum, 'to repair,') Restoration of strength, after disease or great fatigue; Epanortho'sis, Recrea'tio, Redintegra'tio, Restaura'tio virium. Return of the organs to their normal condition, Recov'ery, Recupera'tion, Repara'tion.

RESTAURA'TIO VIR'IUM, see Restauratio.

Restharrow, Ononis spinosa.

Res'tiform, Restifor'mis, (restis, 'a rope,' and forma, 'shape,') Shaped like a rope, as the corpora restiformia, restiform bodies.

Restifor'mis Proce'sus, Coracoid.

Restitu'tio, (restitu, restitutum, — re, and statuo, 'I set up, — 'I set up again,') Reduction — r. Animæ, Resuscitation — r. Organica, Morioplasticæ — r. Partium deperditarum, Morioplasticæ.

Restitu'tion, (re, and statuere, 'to place,') The act by which, after the head is born, the child's face turns again to the side of the pelvis towards which it was directed at the beginning of labor.

Rest'lessness, Agitation.

Restora'tion, Restauratio.

Restor'ative, Analeptic, Corroborant.

Restraint' Neuro'ses, see Inhibitory.

Restric'tio Intesti'ni Rec'ti seu A'ni, (re, and stringere, strictum, 'to tighten,') Stricture of the rectum.

Resumpti'vum, (re, and sumere, sumptum, 'to take,') Any agent calculated to restore flesh and strength to one who has been reduced.

Resumpti'vus, Resumpto'rius, (re, and sumere, sumptum, 'to take,') Causing to resume or restore, as the strength.

Resumpto'rius, Resumptivus.

Resurrec'tion Man, Resurrectionist.

Resurrec'tionist, Resurrec'tion man, Body-snatcher, (re, and surgere, surrectum, 'to arise,') An individual who violates the sanctuary of the grave to obtain subjects for dissection.

Resuscita'tion, Resuscita'tio, Restitu'tio An'imæ, (resuscitare, — re, and suscitare, — sursum citare seu cire, — 'to move up, — 'to stir up anew,') Revivifica'tion. The restoration of persons, apparently dead, to life. See Asphyxia and Suffocation.

Retch'ing, (Sax. pæcan, 'to retch,') Vomition.

Re'té, 'a net,' Dic'tyon, (F.) Réseau. A name given to the interlacing and decussation of blood-vessels, lymphatics, fibres, and nerves when they form a kind of network. Plexus. Rete has also been applied to the epiploon.

RE'TE MA'JUS, Epiploon, gastrocolic — r. Malpighii, Corpus mucosum.

RE'TE MIRAB'ILE, (F.) Réseau admirable, R. merveilleux. A name given to the ramifications and anastomoses of the internal carotid and vertebral arteries at the base of the brain. In a general manner, the term has been applied to the dense, interlacing network of capillary vessels, made by the sudden breaking up of larger vessels.

RE'TE MIRAB'ILE seu RE'TE VASCULO'SUM MAL-

PIG'HII is the plexus formed on the cells of the lungs by the minute ramifications of the pulmonary artery.

RE'TE MUCCO'SUM, Corpus mucosum.

RE'TE TES'TIS, Re'te Vasculo'sum Tes'tis seu Halleri, Plex'us semina'lis. An irregular plexus or network, formed by the communication of the Vasa recta, Tu'buli seu Ductuli recti, Tu'buli seminiferi recti, (F.) Vaisseaux droits, at the upper and back part of the testicle. These vasa recta are sent out at the back part of the testicle, from the convoluted seminal tubes. The rete vasculosum testis sends out from twelve to eighteen straight tubes, called Vasa efferen'tia, which convey the semen from the testis to the epididymus.

RETEN'TIO FLUX'US HÆMORRHOÏDALIS. Suppression of the hemorrhoidal flux.

RETEN'TIO FÆTUS, Dystocia — r. Lactis, Ischogalactia — r. Lochiorum, Ischiolochia — r. Mensium, see Amenorrhœa — r. Spermatidis, Ischospemia — r. Sudoris, Hydroschesis.

Reten'tion, Retention, Apolep'sia, Apolep'sis, (retinere, retentum, — re, and tenere, 'to hold, — 'to hold back,') Accumulation of a solid or liquid substance in canals intended for its excretion, or in a reservoir intended to contain it for a short period.

RETEN'TION CYST, Reten'tion Tu'mor, Dilata'tion Cyst or Tumor. A cystic formation having its origin in obstruction and dilatation of the larger gland ducts, and retention of the natural secretion in a modified form. (Virchow.)

RETEN'TION TU'MOR, Retention cyst.

RETEN'TION OF URINE, Paru'ria, Retentio'nis vesica'lis, Ischu'ria vesica'lis, Reten'tio Uri'næ, (F.) Rétention d'urine. A disease in which the urine accumulated in the bladder cannot be evacuated, or, at least, cannot be passed without extreme difficulty. In the former case, the retention is said to be complete; in the latter, incomplete. Many writers have distinguished three degrees of this affection, to which they have given the names Dys'ury, Stran'gury, and Is'chury. Retention of urine may depend upon loss of contractility, paralysis of the bladder, &c., or on some obstacle to the passing of the urine, as in cases of pressure of the womb on the bladder, of tumors in its vicinity, foreign bodies in its cavity, inflammation of the urethra, swelling of the prostate, stricture, &c. The pain is extremely violent, and the bladder may be found distended above the pubis. The treatment consists in introducing the catheter or puncturing the bladder, and in combating the cause which has produced the retention by particular means adapted to each case.

Retentissant, (re, and tinnire, 'to tinkle, — 'to ring,') Resonant.

Retentissement, Resonance — r. Autophonique, see Autophonia.

Re'tia (pl. of Rete) U'teri, see Uterus.

Retic'ular, Re'tiform, Reticula'ris, Ret'inus, Amphiblastroï'des, Dictoï'des, Retifor'mis, (from reticulum,) (F.) Réticulaire. That which resembles a net. An epithet applied to many structures in the body, as reticular cartilage.

RETIC'ULAR BOD'Y, Corpus mucosum — r. Substance, Cellular tissue — r. Tissue, Cellular tissue, Adenoid tissue.

Reticula'ria Officina'lis, Lichen pulmonarius.

Retic'ulum, (dim. of Rete,) The Bonnet or Honeycomb bag or stomach, (Sc.) Kingshood, (F.) Bonnet, Réseau — the second stomach of the ruminant animal. See, also, Epiploon, and Rete. Also, a delicate framework of adenoid tissue supporting the proper nervous substance of the brain and spinal cord.

RETIC'ULUM CUTA'NEUM, Rete mucosum — r. Mucosum, Rete mucosum.

Re'tiform, (rete, and forma, 'shape,') Reticular. Re'tiform Tis'sue, Adenoid tissue.

Ret'ina, (from rete,) Tu'nica ret'ina seu amphiblestroïdes seu reticula'ris seu retifor'mis seu intima seu ner'ua oculi, Involucrum re'ti comparatum, Verricula'ris membra'na, Amphiblestroïdes membra'na, (F.) Retine. A soft, pulpy, grayish, semitransparent, very thin membrane, extending from the optic nerve to the crystalline, embracing the vitreous humor, and lining the choroid, without, however, adhering to either of those parts. It terminates by a defined edge—mar'go denta'tus—at the posterior extremities of the ciliary processes. It is constituted, according to most anatomists, by the expansion of the optic nerve. The retina appears to be formed of several laminae, so joined together that it is difficult to discriminate them.

The following are the retinal elements as given by Kölliker and Müller and by Henle:—

Kölliker and Müller.—1. Layer of rods and cones; 2. Outer granule layer; 3. Intergranule layer; 4. Inner granule layer; 5. Fine molecular layer; 6. Nerve-cell layer (ganglionic); 7. Optic nerve expansion; 8. Ends of radial fibres inserted into 9. Membrana limitans.

Henle.—1. Mosaic layers, including rods and cones, external limiting membrane, granule layer; 2. Fibre layer (outer fibre layer); 3. Nerve layers, including external granular layer, external ganglion layer, internal granular layer, internal ganglion layer, optic nerve expansion; and 4. Limiting membrane (membrana limitans hyaloidea).

The thin layer of transparent nucleated cells continued from the indented border, near the outer ledge of the ciliary processes, is called the pars cilia'ris ret'inæ.

The retina is the essential organ of vision; on it the images of objects are impressed. Both it and the optic nerve are devoid of general sensibility. They may be punctured or lacerated without pain being experienced. The nerve of general sensibility distributed to the eye is the fifth pair.

The retina is liable to various morbid conditions, as hyperæmia, inflammation—retinitis—apoplexy, anæmia, atrophy, fatty degeneration, tumors, embolism of its central artery, separation or detachment, &c.

RET'INA, ANÆMIA OF. A peculiar pallid condition of the retina, dependent on contraction of the retinal vessels. It has sometimes been termed Epilepsy of the retina, when occurring during an epileptic attack.

RET'INA, AT'ROPHY OF. An occasional result of inflammation of the structures of the eye, glaucoma, &c. It may be partial or complete, and accompanied with degeneration and atrophy of the optic nerve.

RET'INA, EM'BOISM OF THE CENTRAL AR'TERY OF. A condition produced by obstruction from emboli, characterized by sudden and total blindness, and usually dependent on valvular disease of the left side of the heart.

RET'INA, EP'ILEPSY OF, see Retina, anæmia of—r. Glioma of, see Glioma—r. Ischæmia of, Ischæmia retinæ.

RET'INA, SEPARA'TION OF. Detachment of the retina from excessive elongation of the coats of the eye in severe myopia, diminution in the bulk of the vitreous humor, tumors, effusion, &c.

Retinac'ula, see Retinaculum—r. of Ileocaecal valve, see Fræna of the valve of Bauhin—r. Morgagnii, see Fræna of the valve of Bauhin.

Retinac'ulum, (retinere,—re, and tene're, 'to hold,'—'to hold back,') A surgical instrument formerly used in the operation of castration, and in that of hernia, to prevent the intestines from falling into the scrotum. Retinac'ula are also band-like extensions of a cellulo-membranous structure, which seem to suspend the ovum in the follicle of De Graaf. They correspond to the chalazæ of the egg of the bird. See Bride.

RETINAC'ULUM TEN'DINUM PERONEO'RUM, Vagi'na malleola'ris exter'na. The ligamentous sheaths that retain in situ at the outer ankle the tendons of the peroneal muscles.

Ret'inal, Retina'lis. Relating or appertaining to the retina.

RET'INAL AP'OPLEXY, see Retinitis.

Rétine, Retina.

Retini'tis, gen. Retini'tidis, Inflamma'tio ret'inæ, Amphiblestroïdi'tis, Dictyi'tis, (F.) Retinite, (retina, and itis.) Inflammation of the retina. When it occurs, it is usually an accompaniment of other ophthalmic affections. When there is an extreme tendency to extravasation of blood into the retina, the affection is called Retinitis apoplectica, Ret'inal ap'oplexy.

Retinitis may be associated with syphilis, and is then called Retinitis syphilitica. When this form is confined to the region of the yellow spot, and has a marked tendency to recur, it is termed Central recur'rent retini'tis.

A form of retinitis often met with in Bright's disease of the kidney is designated Retini'tis albumin'rica, Nephrit'ic retinitis.

Retinitis Leucæ'mica is an affection of the retina connected with leucocythæmia.

Retini'tis pigmentosa, R. hemeralop'ica, is characterized by a deposit of black pigment in the retina, which encroaches on the field of vision, the patient seeing better in the daytime than at night. In Retinitis nyctalop'ica, the patient's vision is better in the dusk than in the bright light.

In Retini'tis Hæmorrhag'ica, there is infiltration of the nerve-fibre layer by extravasation, congestion of the veins, &c.

Rétinôide, see Rhétinolé.

Rétinolé, see Rhétinolé.

Ret'inoscopy, Retinoscop'ia, (retina, and σκοπεω, 'I view,') Examination of the retina.

Ret'inus, (from rete,) Reticular.

Retombet, Gros, Passerina tartonraira.

Retort, Retor'ta, Ba'tia, Cor'nu, Cornu'ta, Cornes'ta, Cornumu'sa, (F.) Cornu, (retorqueo,—re, and torqueo, tortum,—'I bend back,') A vessel, commonly of glass or earthenware, employed in distillation. It may have a tubulure for admitting substances while distillation is going on; it is then said to be tubulated, (F.) Cornue tubulée.

Retrac'tion, Retrac'tio, (retrahere,—re, and trahere, tractum,—'to draw back,') State of a part, when drawn towards the centre of the body or backwards;—as retraction of the testicles. Sometimes it is used synonymously with shortening or drawing up; as in retraction of the thigh.

Rétraction de la-Matrice, Retroversio uteri.

Retrac'tor. A piece of muslin split into two tails, applied around the bone or bones to prevent the soft parts from being injured by the saw.

RETRAC'TOR AN'GULI O'RIS, Buccinator—r. Recti, Rectococcygeus.

Ret'rahens Aur'is, (from retrahere, 'to draw back,') Poste'rior seu Tri'ceps Aur'is, Tricauda'lis, Ret'rahens Auric'ulæ seu Auric'ulam, Secundu's propriu'rum Auric'ulæ, Bicauda'lis, Dep'ri-mens Auric'ulæ, Pro'prius Aur'is exter'næ, (F.) Mastôido-conchinien, Mastôido-oriculaire (Ch.), Auriculaire postérieur. It consists of one or more small fasciculi, or fleshy, thin, somewhat irregular fibres, situate behind the ear. These are attached to the mastoid process, and pass horizontally forwards, to terminate at the convexity formed by the concha of the ear. If this muscle had any use, it would carry the ear backwards.

Retrait Ventriculaire, Heart, hypertrophy of.

Rétrécissement, (re, and étrécir, [old F.] estrécir, from [L.] stringere, strictum, 'to make narrow,') Aretatio, Stricture—r. de l'Urèthre, Urethrostenosis.

Retrimenta Vesicae, Urine.

Retrimentum, ('dregs,' from re, and terere, 'to cleanse as by rubbing,') Excrement.

Re'tro (L.), in composition, behind, backwards.

Ret'roceps, (retro, and capio, 'I take,') A form of obstetric forceps, which grasps the back portion of the foetal head.

Retroces'sion, Retroces'sio, Retroces'sus, Retrogres'sus, (retrocedere, retrocessum,—retro, and cedere,—'to give place,') The act of going back. A disappearance or metastasis of a tumor, eruption, &c., from the outer part of the body to the inner.

Retroces'sus, gen. Retroces'sûs, Retrocession.

Retroflex'io U'teri, (retro, and flectere, flexum, 'to bend,') see Retroversio uteri.

Retrogres'sus, gen. Retrogres'sûs, (retro, and gradior, gressus, 'I step,') Retrocession.

Retroœsophage'al. Behind the œsophagus, as in the areolar tissue,—retroœsophageal abscesses, for example.

Retroperitone'al. Relating or belonging to internal parts behind the peritoneum, as retroperitoneal hernia.

Retropharynge'al, Retropharynge'us, (retro, and pharynx, gen. pharyngis, 'the pharynx,') Relating to parts behind the pharynx,—as retropharyngeal abscess,—an abscess in the areolar tissue behind the pharynx.

Rétropulsion de la Matrice, (retro, and pellere, pulsus, 'to drive,') Retroversio uteri.

Retroû'terine, Retroû'teri'nus, (F.) Rétro-utérin, (retro, and uterus,) Behind the uterus, as retroû'terine abscess, (F.) Abcès rétro-utérin;—an abscess seated behind the uterus.

Retrovaccina'tion, (retro, and vaccination,) Vaccination with matter obtained from the cow, after inoculating the animal with vaccine matter from the human subject.

Retrover'sio U'teri, (retro and vertere, versum, 'to turn,') Retrover'sion of the U'terus, Ædopto'sis U'teri retrover'sa, Anapod'isis seu Anapod'ismus U'teri, (F.) Rétroversion, Rétraction, Obliquité ou Rétropulsion de la Matrice. A change in the position of the uterus, so that the fundus of the organ is turned towards the concavity of the sacrum, while the neck is directed towards the symphysis pubis. This displacement is commonly attended with constipation, tenesmus, and retention of urine. Its usual period of occurrence is between the third and fourth months of pregnancy, before the uterus has escaped above the superior aperture of the pelvis. In the treatment, the catheter must be regularly used twice a day, until the uterus, by its growth, rises above the pelvis. The catheter should be small, flat, and curved considerably more than common, in consequence of the distorted course of the urethra. The bowels must be kept open; and absolute rest, in a recumbent posture, be enjoined. Should it be impracticable to draw off the urine, attempts must be made to replace the uterus. The woman being on her hands and knees, the fore and middle fingers of the accoucheur's left hand are to be passed up the rectum to the fundus uteri; which they must elevate, while the cervix uteri is carefully depressed by two fingers of the right hand in the vagina. Should the fingers employed to elevate the fundus not be long enough to effect this object, a piece of whalebone may be substituted, to which a small piece of sponge is attached as a pad, or a repositer may be used.

A simple inclination or bending of the uterus backwards is called Retroflex'ion of the U'terus, Retroflex'io U'teri; not unfrequently, however, this term is employed synonymously with Retroversion of the Uterus.

Rétroversion de la Matrice, Retroversio uteri.

Reu'nio, (re, and unire, 'to unite,') Synthesis—r. Partium separatatum, see Synthesis—r. per Primam intentionem, see Intention—r. per Secundam intentionem, see Intention—r. Vasorum, Anastomosis.

Réunion Primitive, see Intention—r. Secondaire, see Intention.

Rhachiomyelophthi'sis, (rhachis, μυελος, 'marrow,') Tabes dorsalis.

Rhachioparalysis, (rhachis, and paralysis,) Paraplegia.

Rhachiople'gia, (rhachis, and πληγη, 'a stroke,') Paraplegia.

Rhachioscolio'ma, gen. Rhachioscolio'matis, (rhachis, and scolio'ma,) Scoliosis.

Rhachioscolio'sis, (rhachis, and scoliosis,) Scoliosis.

Rhachio'stropho'sis, (rhachis, and στρεφω, 'I turn,') Contortio colum'næ vertebra'lis. Deviation of the vertebral column.

Rhachiot'omus, Rhachiot'omum, (rhachis, and τομη, 'incision,') An instrument for opening the vertebral column.

Rhachipa'gia, Rachipa'gia, (rhachis, and παγω, 'I fasten,') A monstrous union of two foetuses, in which they are connected at the spine.

Rhachiparalysis, (rhachis, and paralysis,) Paraplegia.

Rhachiphy'ma, gen. Rhachiphy'matis, Rachiphyma.

Rhachirrheu'ma, gen. Rhachirrheu'matis, (rhachis, and ρευμα, 'a defluxion, rheumatism,') Lumbago.

Rha'chis, gen. Rha'chidis, (ραχis, gen. ραχιος,) Vertebral column — r. Nasi, see Nasus.

Rhachis'agra, Rachisagra.

Rhachi'tæ, (from rhachis,) Rhachitæ'i, Rachitæ'tæ, Rhache'tæ, or Rachitæ'i. The muscles of the spine.

Rhachi'tes, Spinal; Medulla spinalis, (ραχis, μυελος,) See also Rachitis (ραχitis νοσος).

Rhachit'icus, Rachiticus.

Rhachit'is, gen. Rhachit'idis, Rachitis — r. Adultorum, Mollities ossium — r. Spinalis, Rachisagra.

Rhachitis'mus, (from rhachis,) Rachitis.

Rhacho'sis, Rachosis.

Rha'chus, (ραχος,) Rha'cus, Rha'gus, (from ραγω, or ρηγνυμι, 'I break,') A wrinkle. A laceration of the skin. A lacerated ulcer — ul'cus lac'erum.

Rha'cus, (ραχος,) Rhachus, Wrinkle.

Rhæbauch'en, (ρᾱβος, 'crooked, and αυχην, 'neck,') Torticollis.

Rhæbocra'nia, (ρᾱβος, 'crooked, and κρανον, 'skull,') Torticollis.

Rhæbod'eré, (ρᾱβος, 'crooked, and δερη, 'neck,') Torticollis.

Rhæboscel'ia, (ρᾱβος, 'crooked, and σκελος, 'leg,') see Rhæbosis.

Rhæbo'sis, (from ρᾱβος, 'crooked, and osis,) Crookedness, as of the legs, — Rhæboscel'ia, Scelocambo'sis.

Rhag'ades, pl. of Rha'gas, (ραγας, gen. ραγαδος,) Rhaga'dia, (from ραγω, or ρηγνυμι, 'I break or rend,') Scissu'ræ, Fissu'ræ, F'i'mæ. Ruptures, chaps, or narrow and long ulcers, which form near the origin of mucous membranes, especially around the anus, and which are generally owing to the syphilitic virus.

RHAG'ADES, see Fissure.

Rha'gê, Rhag'ia, Ra'gê, (ραγη,) Suffixes denoting violent rupture or discharge, as in Hemorrhage, Menorrhagia, &c. Also, a fissure.

Rha'ges, (from ραξ, gen. ραγος, 'a grape,') Uvæ passæ.

Rhag'icus, (ραγικος,) Rhagoïdes.

Rhagoidei'tis, gen. Rhagoidei'tis, (rhagoïdes — tunica, — and itis,) Uveitis.

Rhagoï'des, Rhago'des, Rhagoïdeus, Rha'gi-cus, (ραγοïδης, from ραξ, gen. ραγος, 'a berry, 'a grape,') Grape-like; as Tunica rhagoïdes; the uvea. Also, the choroid coat of the eye.

Rha'gus, (ραγος,) Rhachus, Wrinkle.

Rham'ni Bac'cæ, see Rhamnus — r. Succus, see Rhamnus.

Rham'nus, (ραμνος,) R. catharticus, Spina

cervi'na seu domes'tica seu infecto'ria, Rham'nus soluti'vus, Cervispi'na, Buck'thorn, Purg'ing buck'thorn, (F.) Nerprun purgatif, Bourguépine, Épine de cerf. Family, Rhamnaceæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. The berries — Rhamni Baccæ — have a faint and disagreeable odor, and bitterish, nauseous taste. Their juice — Rhamni Succus — is cathartic, and apt to excite griping, which must be obviated by the use of diluents. The name Cathartin, Cathartic acid, has been given to a purgative principle derived from the buckthorn.

RHAM'NUS ALATER'NUS, R. Hispan'icus, Alater'nus latifo'lius, Com'mon alater'nus, (F.) Alaterne. The leaves have been used as detergents and astringents, in the form of gargle especially.

RHAM'NUS FRAN'GULA, Black Alder, Fran'gula al'nus, Al'nus ni'gra, (F.) Aune noir, Bourdane, Bourgène. All the parts of this tree, as well as of the common alder, are astringent and bitter. The bark is most so. The inner, yellow bark of the trunk or root, once called Rhabar'barum plebeio'rum, acts as a cathartic. It has also been employed as an anthelmintic.

RHAM'NUS HISPAN'ICUS, R. alaternus — r. Jujuba, see Jujube — r. Lotus, see Jujube — r. Ziziphus, see Jujube.

Rhan'ter, gen. Rhante'ris, (ραντηρ, from ρανω, 'I besprinkle,') Canthus (greater).

Rhaphane'don, Raphanedon.

Rhapha'nia, Raphania.

Rhaph'anis, Raphanus hortensis.

Rhaph'anus, Rapa, Raphanus hortensis.

Rha'phê, Raphe, Suture.

Rhaphidago'gus, (ραφης, gen. ραφιδος, 'a needle, and αγω, 'I lead,') Porte-aiguille.

Rhaph'ion, (ραφειον, dim. of ραφης,) Needle.

Rhaph'is, gen. Rhaph'idis, (ραφης,) Needle. Also, Rapa.

Rhaphosym'physis, (ραφη, 'suture, and συνφυσις, 'union,') Union by suture, — as of the bones of the cranium.

Rha'phus, (ραφος,) Rapa.

Rha'phys, (ραφης,) Rapa, Raphanus hortensis.

Rhapont'icum, (rha, or rhubarb, of Pontus,) Rheum Rhaponticum — r. Vulgare, Centaurea centaurium.

Rhapontique, Rheum rhaponticum.

Rhaps, (ραπυς,) Raphanus hortensis.

Rha'pys, (ραπυς,) Raphanus hortensis.

Rhata'nia, Krameria rhatania.

Rhat'any, Krameria.

Rhax, gen. Rha'gis, (ραξ, gen. ραγος,) see Vitis vinifera.

Rhe'gê, (ρηγη,) Cramp, Contusion, Laceration.

Rheg'ma, gen. Rheg'matis, (ρηγμα,) Cramp, Contusion, Laceration, Rhexis — r. Ligamentare, Apospasma.

Rheg'mus, (ρηγμος,) Cramp, Contusion, Laceration.

Rhembas'mus, (ρεμβασμος, from ρεμβω, 'I wander about,') Somnambulism.

Rhem'bê, Rhem'bus, (ρεμβη, 'a wandering about, from ρεμβω, 'to wander about,') Irregularity in the return of febrile paroxysms.

Rhem'bus, (ρεμβος,) Rhembe.

Rhen'chus, (ρηγχος,) Rattle, Snoring.

Rhenx'is, (ρηγξις,) Rattle, Snoring.

Rhe'on, Rheum.

Rheophore, (from ρεω, 'I flow, and φερειν, 'to carry,') Electrode.

Rhe'tinë, (ρετινη, from ρεω, 'I flow,') Resin.

Rhetini'tes, (ρετινιτης,) Resinatum.

Rhetinoce'ron, (rhetine, and κερος, 'wax,') Resinatum.

Rhetino'des, (ρητινωδης, from rhetine,) Resinous.

Rhetinoïdes, see Rhétinolé.

Rhétinolé, (from rhetine,) A name given by M. Béal to a medicine which results from the union of a resin with other medicinal substances.

The *Rhétinolé*s of Béal differ from the *Rhétinolé*s in containing but one resin, whilst in the latter there are several.

Rhetoran'chē, (ῥητωρ, 'a public speaker,' and ἄγω, 'I strangle,') see Pharyngitis, follicular.

Rheum, (pronounced room;) Rheu'ma, (F.) Rhume, (ῥευμα, from ῥέω, 'I flow,') Any thin watery discharge from mucous membranes or skin; as the thin discharge from the air-passages arising from cold.

RHEUM, SALT. A popular name in the United States, like 'tetter,' for various cutaneous affections, of the eczematous and herpetic forms more especially. It is at times applied to a kind of chronic psoriasis; and likewise to cutaneous affections in those who immerse the hands in metallic or acid solutions. It has been defined "a vague and indefinite popular name, applied to almost all the non-febrile cutaneous eruptions which are common among adults, except ring-worm and itch."

RHE'UM, Rhabar'barum, Rhe'on, Rha, Rhæ'um, Lap'athum orienta'le seu Chinen'sē, Rhabar'barum ve'rum seu Tartar'icum seu Siber'icum seu Tur'cicum, Rhu'barb, (F.) Rhabarbe, Rhubarbe, (from Rha, [ῥῆ, 'Pa,] now called Volga, a river in Russia, from which it was first brought.) Ord. Polygonaceæ. Sex. Syst. Enneandria Trigynia. The root—Rhe'um (Ph. U. S., 1873) Rhe'i Ra'dix (Ph. B., 1867)—is the part used in medicine. Its odor is aromatic, peculiar, and rather nauseous; taste, somewhat aromatic, subacid, bitterish, and astringent. It colors the saliva and the urine yellow. It is easily pulverized, and forms a powder of a bright buff-yellow color. Both water and spirit extract its virtues. Rhubarb root is purgative, stomachic, and astringent. [?] It is chiefly used for the properties first mentioned. Externally the powder is sometimes sprinkled over ulcers, to assist their granulation. Dose, ℥j. to ʒss. of the powder. In a smaller dose it is stomachic. Numerous species of Rheum, R. palmatum, R. undulatum, and R. compactum, yield rhubarb-root.

The rhubarbs most used in the United States are the Chinese or India Rhu'barb—Rhe'um Sinen'sē seu Indicum; the Russian, Tur'key or Bucharian Rhu'barb—Rhe'um Rus'sicum seu Tur'cicum; and European Rhu'barb.

RHE'UM COMPACTUM, Rheum—r. Indicum, see Rheum—r. Palmatum, Rheum.

RHE'UM RHAPON'TICUM, Rhapont'ic Rhu'barb, Rhapont'icum, Rhabar'barum Dioscor'idis seu Antiquo'rum, (F.) Rhapontique, Rhapontic, Rapontic. The root of this seems to have been the rhubarb of the ancients. It is more astringent than that of the rheum palmatum, and less purgative; for the latter purpose, two or three drachms being required for a dose. French, Rhapontic, or Krimia Rhu'barb, is obtained from this species, as well as from R. undulatum, and R. compactum.

Rhe'um rhapon'ticum is the Pie rhubarb or Pie plant, cultivated for its fleshy esculent leafstalks.

RHE'UM RUS'SICUM, see Rheum—r. Sinense, see Rheum—r. Turcicum, see Rheum—r. Undulatum, see Rheum.

Rheu'ma, gen. Rheu'matis, (ῥευμα, gen. ῥευματος, from ῥέω, 'I flow,') Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Rheum, Rheumatism. Also, inflammation of a fibrous tissue, as in rheumatism and gout. In composition, a flow, a defluxion; also, rheumatism.

RHEU'MA CATARRHA'LE, Bronchitis, chronic—r. Epidemicum, Bronchitis, chronic; Catarrh, epidemic—r. Pectoris, Catarrh—r. Uteri, Leucorrhœa.

Rheumap'ya, (rheuma, and πυρ, 'fever,') Rheumatism, acute.

Rheumarthri'tis, (rheuma, and arthriti's,) see Rheumatism, acute.

Rheumarthro'sis, (rheuma, and arthrosis, 'an affection of the joints,') see Rheumatism, acute.

Rheumatal'gia, (rheuma, and αλγος, 'pain,') Rheumatism, chronic—r. Arthritica, see Rheumatism, acute.

Rheumat'ic, (ῥευματικός,) Rheumat'icus, Rheumatis'mal, (F.) Rhumatismal, Rhumatique. Belonging to rheumatism; as rheumatic fever. Also, applied to one affected with rheumatism, (F.) Rheumatisant.

RHEUMAT'IC AT'ROPHY, Atrophy, rheumatic.

RHEUMAT'IC DIATH'ESIS, Diath'esis rheumat'ica. The special condition of the body that gives occasion to rheumatism. It may exist without presenting the usual phenomena in the joints, whilst the heart may be seriously affected.

RHEUMAT'IC GOUT, see Rheumatism, acute.

Rheumat'ics, Rheumatism.

Rheu'matism, Catarrhœ'a, (from rheuma,) Dol'or Rheumat'icus et arthrit'icus (Hoffman), Rheumato'sis, Myoso'tis, Rheu'ma, Myodyn'ia, (vulg.) Rheu'matiz, Rheumat'ics, (F.) Rhumatisme. A kind of shifting phlegmasia or neuralgia, sometimes seated in the muscles, sometimes in the parts surrounding the joints; and at others, within them, Flying gout. Hence the names Muscular, Articular, and Synovial, which have been applied to it. The disease may be acute or chronic.

RHEU'MATISM OF THE ABDO'MEN, Cœliorrheuma.

RHEU'MATISM, ACUTE, Rheumatis'mus acu'tus seu articulo'rum acu'tus seu universa'lis febrilis seu inflammato'rius seu hypersthen'icus, Arthro'sia acu'ta, Rheumatop'ya, Rheumap'ya, Febris rheumat'ica inflammato'ria, Syn'ocha rheumat'ica, Myoso'tis, Myi'tis, Cau'ma seu Arthri'tis rheumatis'mus, Arthrorheumatis'mus, Synovi'tis rheumatisma'lis, Hæmoarthri'tis, Rheumat'ic Fe'ver, (F.) Rhumatisme aigu, R. articulaire aigu, Fièvre rhumatismale, usually comes on with the ordinary symptoms of fever; soon after which, or simultaneously, or even before the appearance of febrile signs, excruciating pains are felt in different parts of the body, particularly in the larger joints, which are more or less red and swollen; the pain shifting from one to the other, at times with great rapidity. The disease rarely terminates in less than six weeks, during the greater part of which period the febrile symptoms remain severe; and, what is peculiar to the disease, the skin, although it feels extremely hot, may be covered daily with a profuse perspiration, and the pulse appears in no way modified by it. It is one of the essential symptoms of the affection, and consequently affords no relief. The only danger to be apprehended from acute rheumatism, notwithstanding the apparent severity of the symptoms, is the translation or extension of the disease—metastat'ic rheumatism—to some internal part, especially to the heart. This tendency must always be borne in mind. Acute rheumatism seldom terminates in chronic; they who are liable to the former are rarely so to the latter, and conversely. Sometimes it assumes a subacute form, Rheumatis'mus subacu'tus, (F.) Rhumatisme subaigu. The disease will generally run its course in spite of treatment. The usual antiphlogistic plan had better be pursued during the first days of the disease. Bloodletting may be employed, if the vigor of the patient and of the disease seem to require it; but, although the blood is generally buffy, bleeding does not usually seem to afford much relief. The bowels must be kept open, effervescent draughts be administered, and opium be given in full doses to allay pain. This is generally all that is necessary during the first week; after which, advantage will usually be obtained from the exhibition of the sulphate of quinia with sulphuric acid. It does not augment the excitement, and will be found proper in almost all cases. Rheumatic in- inflammation is very different from other varieties, and this may account for the anomaly. After a few weeks the disease usually goes off, but leaves the patient very liable to a recurrence on slight exposures or errors of diet. At times acute rheumatism of the joints puts on the appearance of gout, and seems to be a complication of the two affections. It is then called Gouty or Arthritic rheumatism, Rheumatic gout, Rheumatism arthritica, Rheumathrosis, Rheumathritis, Arthritis rheumatica seu juvenilis, Chronic Osteoarthritis, O. longa, Rheumatoid or Rheumatic arthritis, Nodular rheumatism, (F.) Rhumatisme Nœux, Arthrite Rhumatismale Chronique. When accompanied with deformity of a joint, it is called Arthritis deformans; of several joints, Polyarthritis deformans. When it affects the hip-joint of old people, it is called Morbus coxae senilis.

RHEUMATISM OF THE ARM, Brachiorrheuma—r. Arthritic, see Rheumatism, acute—r. of the Bladder, Cystorrhœma—r. of the Bowels, Enterorrhœma.

RHEUMATISM, CAPSULAR, Rheumatis' mus capsularis. Rheumatism seated in the lining membrane of the joints and bursæ of the tendons. The parts most liable to its attacks are the feet and hands, where it is generally easily recognized by the enlargement of the joints; but the peculiar characters of the disease are, perhaps, most strikingly seen when it attacks the knee.

RHEUMATISM, CEREBRAL, Rheumatic Meningitis, Rheumatic Apoplexy. Meningitis occurring during the progress of acute rheumatism, probably from metastasis.

RHEUMATISM OF THE CHEST, Pleurodynia.

RHEUMATISM, CHRONIC, Arthrosia chronica, Rheumatismus chronicus seu nonfebrilis seu vulgaris seu inveteratus seu habitualis seu frig'idus seu longus, Rheumat' al'gia, Rhumat' al'gia, Rheumatodyn'ia, Arthrodyn'ia, Arthrit'is arthrodyn'ia, (F.) Rhumatisme chronique, Rhumat' al'gie, is attended with pains in the hips, shoulders, knees, and other large joints. These are at times confined to one joint; at others, shift from one to another, without occasioning inflammation or fever. In this manner the complaint often continues for a great length of time, and then goes off. There is no danger attendant upon it; but the patient may become lame, and is always liable to painful recurrences. Neither variety generally terminates in suppuration; but effusion of coagulable lymph is apt to occur, so as to occasion permanent thickening of the parts. The great preventive of chronic rheumatism, and one of the most valuable curative agents, is flannel worn next the skin. The whole class of rubefacients may, also, be used with advantage. The warm bath, especially the natural warm bath, the temperature of which does not vary, is, perhaps, the most successful remedy of all.

RHEUMATISM OF THE EXTREMITIES, Acrorrhœma—r. of the Face, Prosoporrhœma.

RHEUMATISM, GONORRHOËAL, Rheumatis' mus gonorrhœicus, (F.) Rhumatisme blénnorrhagique. Rheumatism associated with gonorrhœa.

RHEUMATISM, MUSCULAR, Rheumatis' mus muscularum seu muscularis, (F.) Rhumatisme musculaire. Pain in the muscular structures, increased by motion.

RHEUMATISM OF THE NECK, Torticollis.

RHEUMATISM, NODULAR, see Rheumatism, acute.

RHEUMATISM, PARTIAL, Merorrhœma.

RHEUMATISM, PRÆABDOMINAL, (F.) Rhumatisme pré-abdominal. Rheumatism of the muscles of the anterior and lateral portions of the abdomen; supposed by MM. Gênest and Requin to be the same as the nervous affection of the peritoneum of Gooch.

RHEUMATISM OF THE SKIN, see Dermalgia—r. Subacute, see Rheumatism, acute.

RHEUMATISM, SYNOVIAL, Rheumatis' mus Synovialis, (F.) Hydrarthrose Rhumatismale. A rheumatic affection, in which an accumulation of non-purulent fluid occurs in the synovial sacs, especially of the knee-joints.

RHEUMATISM, TOPICAL, Merorrhœma.

RHEUMATISM, URETHRAL, Urethral Fe' ver, Stricture Fe' ver. A peculiar affection, apparently pyæmic, probably due to absorption of morbid materials from the urethra; accompanied with subacute inflammation of the synovial membranes and fibrous tissues about the ankle, heels, &c.

RHEUMATISM OF THE UTERUS, Metorrhœma.

RHEUMATISM, VIS' CERAL. Rheumatism affecting the muscular or fibrous tissues of the viscera.

Rheumatodyn'ia, (rheuma, and odvn, 'pain,') Rheumatism, chronic.

Rheumatoid, Rheumatismoid.

Rheumatophthal'mia, Rheumophthal'mia, (rheuma, and ophthalmia.) Rheumatic ophthalmia.

Rheumatop' yra, (rheuma, and πυρ, 'fever,') Rheumatism, acute.

Rheumato'sis, (from rheuma, and osis.) Rheumatism.

Rheumophthal'mia, (rheuma, and ophthalmia.) Rheumatophthalmia, Scleritis.

Rhex'is, (ῥήξις, from ῥήγναι, 'I break,') Rheg'ma, Dirup'tio, Rup'tio, Ruptu'ra, Rup'ture. Rupture of a vessel or organ. Spontaneous opening of an abscess.

Rhex'is Oc'uli. Bursting of the eye from any cause, spontaneous or excited.

Rheno'sis, (ῥήνωσις, from ῥήνωμαι, 'I become wrinkled,') Cutis corruga'tio. Wrinkling of the skin from extenuation of the body; opposed to εκτασις, or distension from repletion.

Rhig'olene, (from ῥίγος, 'cold,') A petroleum naphtha, proposed by Dr. H. J. Bigelow, of Boston, as a local anæsthetic. It boils at 70° Fah., s. g. 0.625, and is applied in the form of spray in the smaller operations, the evaporation of the rhigolene producing a temperature 15° below zero.

Rhi'gos, (ῥίγος,) Rigor.

Rhin, gen. Rhi'nis, (ῥίς, gen. ῥίος,) Nasus.

Rhinal'gia, Rhinodyn'ia, (rhin, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the nose.

RHINAL'GIA AB INTRU'SIS. Pain in the nose from foreign bodies.

RHINAL'GIA VERMINO'SA. Pain in the nose from worms.

Rhinan'chonē, Rhinan'gia, Rhinostegno'sis, (rhin, and αγγων, 'narrowness,') Contraction of the nose. Snuffles.

Rhinan'gia, Rhinanchone, Snuffles.

Rhinencephale, (rhin, and εγκέφαλος, 'brain,') A term applied by Robin to a monstrosity characterized by a prolongation of the soft parts of the nose in the form of a tube, with monopia and absence of the olfactory nerves of the nasal fossæ and the cribriform plate of the ethmoid.

Rhinencephalia, (rhin, εν, 'in,' and κεφαλή, 'head,') Cyclopia, see Rhinencephale.

Rhinenchys'ia, Rhinenchys'ia, (rhin, εν, 'in,' and χυς, 'I pour,') An infusion or injection, made into the nostrils, with a syringe called Rhinenchites.

Rhi'nes, (pl. of rhin,) Nares.

Rhin'eurynter, (rhin, and ευρυνω, 'I dilate,') An apparatus consisting of a bag or sac to be inflated after its introduction into the nose in epistaxis. It resembles the colpeurynter of the obstetrician.

Rhini'tis, gen. Rhini'tidis, Nasi'tis, (rhin, and itis,) Inflammation of the nose. Coryza.

RHINI'TIS ULCERO'SA, Ozena.

Rhino'bion. An instrument consisting of a tube and bladder of goldbeaters' skin, intended for tamponing the nasal fossæ.

Rhinoblennorrhœ'a, Rhinorrhœa.

Rhinoc'acē, Coryza scarlatino'sa, (rhin, and κακος, 'evil,') The offensive discharge from the nose, and other symptoms indicating a morbid condition of the Schneiderian membrane, that accompany the worst forms of scarlatina.

Rhinocatar'rhus, Coryza.

Rhinocéphale, (rhin, and κεφαλή, 'head,') A term applied by Robin to a monstrosity characterized by a projection of the nose, without any appreciable congenital lesion of the encephalon or of the eyes.

Rhinocnes'mus, (rhin, and κνησμος, 'itching,') Itching of the nose.

Rhinodacryol'ithus, (rhin, δακρυν, 'a tear,' and λιθος, 'a stone,') see Dacryolite.

Rhinodyn'ia, (rhin, and οδυνη, 'pain,') Rhinalgia.

Rhin'olite, (rhin, and λιθος, 'a stone,') see Dacryolite.

Rhin'olith, see Dacryolite.

Rhinopho'nia, (rhin, and φωνη, 'the voice,') A nasal voice, called, also, Dyspho'nia immodulata nasa'lis, Porapho'nia nasa'lis seu res'onans, Psellis'mus na'sitas, Mycteropho'nia, Na'sitas, Vox seu Parala'lia nasa'lis. Speaking through the nose.

Rhi'noplasty, Rhinoplas'tia, Rhinoplas'tica (ars), (F.) Rhinoplastie, (rhin, and πλασσω, 'I form,') The operation for forming a new nose, which dates far back. Three chief methods have been described: 1. The method of Celsus, which consists in bringing forward the skin of the cheeks, and forming a septum, if necessary, from the upper lip. 2. The Italian or Taliacotian method or operation, called, also, the German method, on account of the application made of it by Von Gräfe, which consists in paring the edges of the nostrils, and uniting them to a graft taken from the arm, but left attached to it, until union has taken place. 3. The Indian method—practised for ages in the East Indies, where cutting off the nose has been a common punishment for criminals—now generally adopted, in which the graft is taken from the forehead.

Rhinopol'ypus, (rhin, and polypus,) Polypus of the nose.

Rhinop'tia, (rhin, and σιτομαι, 'I see,') The act of seeing over the nose. Squinting over the nose.

Rhinorrhag'ia, (rhin, and ραγη, 'a breaking forth,') Epistaxis.

Rhinorrhagie, Epistaxis.

Rhinor'raphy, Rhinorrhaph'ia, (rhin, and ραφη, 'a suture,') An operation for the removal of epicanthis, which consists in pinching up a longitudinal fold of the skin, including this fold in two elliptical incisions, removing it, and bringing together the edges of the wound by harelip suture.

Rhinorrhœ'a, Rhinoblennorrhœ'a, (rhin, and ρεω, 'I flow,') A discharge of limpid mucus from the nose without any inflammatory symptom. A gleet from the nose.

Rhinosclero'ma, Rhinoscler'ma, (rhin, and σκληρος, 'hard,') Under this name Hebra describes an extraordinary chronic tuberculous induration of the nose and its vicinity, slowly developed and unaccompanied with œdema or inflammatory symptoms.

Rhi'noscope, Rhinoscop'ium, (rhin, and σκοπω, 'I view,') An instrument of the speculum kind for inspecting the nasal passages. The operation is termed Rhi'noscopy, Rhinoscop'ia.

Rhi'noscopy, see Rhinoscope.

Rhino'sis, (ῥίος, 'a skin, leather,')—or from ρικκος, 'ragous,') The state of looseness and excess of skin observed in phthisis.

Rhinostegno'sis, (rhin, and στεγνωσις, 'a constriction or obstruction,') Rhinanchone.

Rhiptas'mus, (ῥιπτασμος, from ριπτω, 'I throw,') Jactation.

Rhiptolu'sia, (ῥιπτω, 'I throw,' and λουω, 'I wash,') Affusion.

Rhis, gen. Rhi'nis, (ῥίς, gen. ῥίος,) Nasus.

Rhi'za, (ῥίζα,) Radix.

Rhi'zagra, (ῥιζαγγρα, from rhiza, and αγρα, 'seizure,') Punch.

Rhizodon'trypy, Rhizodontot'rypy, (rhiza, οδους, gen. οδοντος, 'a tooth,' and τρυπω, 'I perforate,') Perforation of the root of a tooth for the discharge of fluid.

Rhizo'ma, gen. Rhizo'matis, Rhizome, (from rhiza,) The part of the root of a plant, which consists of wood or flesh, as in the carrot.

Rhizonych'ia, (rhiza, and ονυξ, gen. ονυχος, 'a nail,') see Nail.

Rhizoph'agus, (ῥιζοφαγος, from rhiza, and φάγω, 'I eat,') One who lives on roots.

Rhizot'omist, (ῥιζοτομος, from rhiza, and τομη, 'incision,') Radisea.

Rhizot'omus, Apothecary.

Rho'a, (ῥοα,) Punica granatum.

Rhodela'on, Oleum rosa'rum, (rhodon, and ελαιον, 'oil,') Oil of roses, or oil impregnated with roses.

Rho'dia, Rhodi'ola ro'sea, Ro'sea, Rose'wort, (F.) Rhodiole, (rhodon, owing to its odor.) Ser. Syst. Dicoecia Octandria. The root, Roseroot, when dry, has a very pleasant smell, and is slightly astringent. It is not used.

Rho'dinus, (ῥοδινος,) Rho'dius, Rosa'ceus, Ro'seus, Rosa'tus, (F.) Rosat, Rosy. Formed of, or containing, roses.

Rhodi'ola Ro'sea, (dim. of rhodia,) Rhodia.

Rhodiote, Rhodia.

Rhodi'tes Vi'num, (ῥοδιτης οινος,) Wine in which roses have been macerated.

Rho'dium Lig'num, Rho'dium or Rose'wood,

(from rhodon.) The wood or root of a tree supposed to be Genista Canariensis of Linnæus, (F.) Bois de rose, Bois de Chypre. Ord. Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Diadelphia Decandria. The essential oil is a perfume, and possesses cordial and tonic virtues. Its smell is attractive to fish, rats, &c.

Rho'dius, Rhodinus.

Rhododaph'nē, (ῥοδοδάφνη,) Nerium oleander.

Rhododaph'nīs, Nerium oleander.

Rhododen'dron Chrysan'themum, R. chrysan'themum seu aur'eum seu officina'lē, Olean'der, Rosebay, Yell'ow or Yellow-flowered rhododen'dron, Moun'tain Lau'rel, (F.) Rosage, R. chrysanthe, Rose de Sibérie, (ῥοδοδάκτυλον, from rhodon, and δάκτυλον, 'a tree.') Nat. Ord. Ericaceæ. Sex. Syst. Decandria Monogynia. This plant has been recommended in rheumatism, gout, and syphilis. In an overdose it produces acronarcotic symptoms.

RHODODEN'DRON MAX'IMUM, Great Lau'rel, American Rosebay. An indigenous shrub, Ord. Ericaceæ, which flowers in July. It is stimulant and astringent, and has been used by the Indians in gout and rheumatism.

RHODODEN'DRON PUNCTA'TUM. Indigenous; has similar properties.

Rhodome'la Palma'ta, Dulse, Sac'charine Fucus. One of the Algæ, eaten in large quantities throughout the maritime countries of the north of Europe, and in the Grecian Archipelago.

Rhodom'eli, (rhodon, and μέλι, 'honey,') Mel rosæ.

Rho'don, (ῥόδον,) Rosa, Rosa centifolia.

Rhodosa'charum, (rhodon, and σακχαρον, 'sugar,') Confectio rosæ Gallicæ.

Rhodostac'ton, (ῥοδοστακτον,) Mel rosæ.

Rhodostag'ma, gen. Rhodostag'matis, (rhodon, and σταγμα, 'that which has been dropped,') Aqua rosæ.

Rhœ'a, (ῥοία,) Punica granatum.

Rhœadi'na. An alkaloid obtained from all parts of Papaver rhœas, the ripe capsules of Papaver somniferum, and from opium, soluble and in white prisms. Rhœagenine is derived from it.

Rhœados Pet'ala, Papaver.

Rhœagenine, see Rhœadina.

Rhœ'as, gen. Rhœ'adis, see Papaver rhœas.

Rhœbde'sis, (ῥοιβήσις, from ῥοιβέω, 'I sup up,') Absorption.

Rhœ'um, Rheum.

Rhog'mus, (ῥωγμος,) Râle.

Rhoi'tes, (ῥοιτης,) a wine impregnated with the pomegranate, (from ῥοα, the pomegranate.) A confection, made by boiling the juice of the pomegranate in honey.

Rhom'boid, (ῥομβος, 'a rhombus, whose sides are equal with two obtuse and two acute angles,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Having the shape of a rhombus.

RHOM'BOID LIG'AMENT, Costo-clavicular ligament.

Rhomboïde'us, (same etymon as Rhomboid,) Rhomboïdeus major and minor, Rhomboï'des Cervici-dorso-scapulair. A muscle situate at the posterior inferior part of the neck, and at the posterior part of the back. It has a rhomboidal shape, and is attached, by its inner edge, to the posterior cervical ligament, and to the spinous processes of the last cervical vertebra, and of the first four or five dorsal. By its outer edge, it is attached to the spinal or posterior edge of the scapula. It is divided into two fasciculi, constituting the Rhomboideus major and R. minor, the latter being situate higher than the other. This muscle draws the scapula backwards and upwards, and impresses upon it a rotary motion, which brings its inferior angle nearer to the spine; and, consequently, depresses the anterior angle and the shoulder.

Rhom'bos, (ῥομβος,) A bandage mentioned by Galen; so called on account of its rhomboidal shape.

Rhon'chal, Rhoncha'lis, (rhonchus, 'rattle,') Relating or appertaining to rhonchus—as 'rhonchal fluctuation.' The fremitus that occurs through the influence of respiration as an attendant on cavernous rhonchi.

Rhon'chus, (ῥωγχος,) Râle, Snoring, Stertor—r. Cavernous, see Gurgling—r. Cavernulous, see Gurgling.

RHON'CHUS, CLICK'ING. A rhonchus which has been considered positively indicative of the existence of tubercles in the lungs. [?]

Rhopalis'mus, (ῥοπαλισμος,) Priapismus.

Rhopalo'sis, (ῥοπαλον, 'a club,' the hair being matted like a club, and οἰσις,) Plica.

Rhop'alum, (ῥοπαλον,) Penis.

Rho'pē, (ῥοπη, 'a moving forwards or downwards,') Congestion.

Rhotacis'mus, (ῥοτακισμος,) Rotacism.

Rhox, (ῥωξ, gen. ῥωγος, 'a fissure,') Pupil, Uvea.

Rhu'barb, (rha, and βαρβαρος, 'foreign,') Rheum

Rhus (gen. Rhois) Bel'gica, (ῥως,) Myrica gale—r. Copallina, see Rhus typhina.

RHUS CORIA'RIA, Adurion, Sumach, Shumach, Elmleaved Sumach, (F.) Sumac, Sumac des Corroyeurs, Roure ou Rouvre. Ord. Anacardiaceæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. This is the only species of the genus rhus that is innocent. Both the leaves and berries have been used as astringents and tonics.

RHUS GLA'BRA, Smooth Sumach. Indigenous and officinal in the Pharmacopœia of the United States. An infusion of the fruit, — Rhus glabrum [?] Ph. U. S.,—which is acid and astringent, has been used as a cooling drink, and as a gargle. An infusion of the inner bark of the root has been recommended in mercurial ptyalism.

RHUS RADICANS, R. ver'nix, Poison vine (America). This plant is poisonous (see Poisons, Table of), and is extremely acrid, when applied to the skin, producing erysipelas and vesications, and has been used, like R. toxicodendron, in paralysis and other nervous affections.

RHUS SUCCEDA'NEA, see Wax, Japan.

RHUS SYLVES'TRIS, Myrica gale.

RHUS TOXICODENDRON, Toxicodendron, Poison Oak (America), (F.) Sumac vénéneux. The leaves — Toxicodendron (Ph. U. S.) — have been used in paralytic affections and eruptions. It is poisonous, like R. radicans. Dose, gr. ss. to gr. iv.

RHUS TYPHINA, Stag's Horn Sumach, and RHUS COPALLINA, Mountain Sumach, have similar properties with Rhus glabra.

RHUS VENENATA, Poison Sumach, and RHUS PU'MILA, have similar properties with Rhus toxicodendron.

RHUS VER'NIX, R. radicans.

Rhy'as, gen. Rhy'adis, (ῥυας, gen. ῥυαδος, from ῥέω, 'I flow,') Rhy'sis. An ulceration of the lachrymal caruncle with a constant flow of tears.

Rhy'ma, gen. Rhy'matis, (ῥυμα,) Medicament.

Rhynchop'ri'on Pen'et'rans. The pulex penetrans, sand-flea, or chique.

Rhinophy'ma, (ῥήν, and φύμα, 'growth,') Aene rosacea of long standing, in which, by cell-infiltration and hyperplasia of connective tissue deep in the skin, a red lobulated tumor of considerable size has been formed.

Rhypha'ria, (ῥυπαρία, from ῥυπος, 'dirt,') Rupia, Sordes primarum viarum.

Rhy'pia, (ῥυπία,) Rupia.

Rhy'pus, (ῥυπος,) Sordes.

Rhypt'ica, (from ῥυπτίος,) Detergents.

Rhypt'icus, Abstergent.

Rhyptolu'si'e, (ῥυπτω, 'I cleanse,' and λύσις, 'solution,') see Affusions.

Rhy'sis, (ῥυσις,) Flux, Rhyas.

Rhy'sse'ma, gen. Rhy'sse'matis, (ῥυσσημα,) Wrinkle.

Rhythm, Rhyth'mus, (ῥυθμος,) (F.) Rhythme, 'measured movement.' The order of proportion, as regards time, which reigns between the different movements of an organ, or of the organism in health and disease. Thus, rhythm is applied to the diurnal variations of the pulse, and to the paroxysmal movements of an intermittent.

Rhyth'mical, (ῥυθμικός,) Periodical.

RHYTHMICAL CONTRACTIONS OF MUSCLES are those that succeed one another after regular intervals.

Rhyth'mus, (ῥυθμος,) Rhythm.

Rhytido'sis, (ῥυτιδωσις,) Rutidosis.

Rhy'tis, (ῥυτις,) Wrinkle.

Rib, ([Sax.] rib,) Costa — r. False, see Costa — r. Floating, see Costa — r. Sternal, see Costa — r. True, see Costa.

Ribbail's Bandage, see Figure of 8, and Spica.

Ri'bes (of Arab. origin) Glossula'ria, R. uva crispa.

Ri'BES NI'GRUM, R. ol'idum, Glossula'ria ni'gra, Cus'sis, Black Cur'rant, Gazel, (F.) Groseillier noir. Ord. Grossulaceae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. The berries — Black currants — have been recommended in sore throat, and as diuretics. The leaves have been advised for the same purpose. They are chiefly used as preserves.

Ri'BES OFFICINA'LE, R. rubrum — r. Olidum, R. nigrum.

Ri'BES RU'BRUM, R. officina'lē seu vulga'rē, Glossula'ria non-spino'sa seu ru'bra, Red cur'rant, (F.) Groseillier rouge, of which the White is only a variety. It is cultivated, and affords an agreeable fruit — Red cur'rants, (F.) Groseilles. It possesses the qualities of the subacid fruits in general, and makes an excellent preserve.

Ri'BES U'VA CRIS'PA, R. grossula'ria, Common gooseberry. The fruit — Glossula'ria, (F.) Groseille à maquereau, Gooseberry, Feaberry — is agreeable, and makes a good preserve.

Ri'BES VULGA'RE, R. rubrum.

Rib'grass, Plantago lanceolata.

Ribs, see Costa — r. Neck of the, Collum costarum — r. Short, see Costa.

Rib'wort, Plantago Virginica.

Rice, Oryza — r. Canada, Zizania aquatica — r. Disease, Cholera — r. Ground, see Oryza — r. Jelly, see Oryza.

RICE-WA'TER, see Oryza. The evacuations of cholera have been termed, from their resemblance to rice-water, 'rice-water discharges,' and in India 'congee discharges' — congee, in Hindoostanee, meaning 'rice-water.'

RICE, WILD, Zizania aquatica.

Richardso'nia, (after Richardson, an early English botanist,) see Ipecacuanha.

Rich'leaf, Collinsonia Canadensis.

Rich'weed, Actaea racemosa, Ambrosia trifida, Collinsonia Canadensis, Pilea pumila.

Ricin, Ricinus communis.

Ricino'l'es, (ricinus, and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Jatropha curcas.

Ricino'lein. A saponifiable oil like olein, one of the component parts of castor oil; stearin and palmitin being the other ingredients.

Ric'inus Commu'nis, (from ricinus, 'a tick,' which its seed resembles,) Ricinus vulga'ris seu vir'idis, Pal'ma Christi, Cataput'ia major, Faba purga'trix, Cerva, Kerva, Cici, Castor-oil plant, (F.) Ricin, Fève purgatif. Ord. Euphorbiaceae. Sex. Syst. Monœcia Monadelphica. Castor seeds, whence the oil is obtained, are inodorous; taste acrid and slightly sweetish. One or two seeds — Sem'ina Catapu'tiæ majo'ris seu Ric'ini vulga'ris — will act as a cathartic; but the oil is alone used. It is obtained by bruising the castor seeds, previously decorticated, and then expressing the oil without the application of heat. Recently-drawn castor oil, Oleum de kervā seu kerv'ium, Alker'va, O. Ric'ini seu Cic'inum seu Palmæ liq'u'idum seu de Palmā Christi, Carapat, Karapat, — in the United States often called simply Oil, (F.) Huile du Ricin, — is inodorous and nearly insipid. It is cathartic, operating speedily, and may be used in all cases where powerfully stimulating purgatives would be injurious. Dose, ℥j. to ℥jss. Hufeland recommends that a drop of croton oil be added to an ounce of the oil of poppy, and that the mixture be called O'leum Ric'ini Officina'lē.

At the Cape of Good Hope, the oil is obtained from Ricinus liv'idus.

A variety of Ricinus at Cape Verd is employed by the inhabitants to increase the secretion of milk. It is applied in the form of poultice, made with the green leaves, to the mammae, or of a strong decoction, with which the mammae and the external parts of generation are washed. See Ricinolein.

RIC'INUS LIV'IDUS, see Ricinus communis — r. Major, Jatropha curcas — r. Minor, Jatropha manihot — r. Viridis, R. communis — r. Vulgaris, R. communis.

Rick, Malleolus.

Rick'ets, (see Rig,) Rachitis.

Rick'ety, Rachiticus.

Ricord's Pills. Antisyphilitic pills suggested by this celebrated French practitioner, and composed as follows: Hydrarg. protiodid., Lactuc., Gallæ., āā ℥jss., Extract. opii aquos., gr. ix., Extract. guaiac. aquos., ℥j. Divide into 36 pills.

Ric'tus, gen. Ric'tus, (from ringor, ricus, 'I open the mouth wide,') Yawning — r. Lupinus, (lupus, 'a wolf,') see Harelip.

Ride, Wrinkle.

Ridē, Wrinkled.

Ri'der's Bone. See Drill bone.

Ridge'wood Disinfectant, see Powder, disinfecting, Ridgewood.

Ri'ding (of Bones), Os'sium superposit'io, (F.) Chevauchement. Displacement of the fragments of a bone, chiefly produced by the contraction of muscles, which occasions shortening of the limb; the fractured extremities riding over each other instead of being end to end.

Ri'ding Hag, Incubus.
Rieur de Santorini, Risorius novus.
Rife, (Sax. pýre,) (Prov.) Brief. Prevailing; as applied to diseases.

Rift, (from rive, rived.) Eructation.
Rig, ([Sax.] piçg or hpic.) Dorsum.
Righthand'edness, Dex'tral Præm'inence. By some this is considered to be due to the greater development of the left side of the brain, to the larger size of the arteries on that side, and to the left carotid being less tortuous, and, therefore, more direct than the right.

Rigid'itas, Rigidity.
RIGID'ITAS ARTICULO'RUM, Ankylo'sis spu'ria. Stiffness of the joints. False ankylosis.

Rigidité, Rigidity—r. Cadavérique, see Rigidity.
Rigid'ity, Rigid'itas, Ri'gor, (rigere, ryw, 'I stiffen,') (F.) Rigidité, Roideur, Raideur. Great stiffness of fibre, or want of suppleness. The stiffness of the dead body, Cadav'erie rigid'ity, (F.) Roideur ou Rigidité cadavérique, is one of the signs of the cessation of life. It may be removed, however, for a time, by the injection into the arteries of oxygenated defibrinated blood. See Rigor mortis.

Ri'gor, gen. Rig'oris, Rhi'gus, Al'gor, Cold'ness, Cheim'ia, (F.) Frisson, (from ryw, ryeo, 'I stiffen,' especially from cold.) Rigidity. Sensation of cold, with involuntary shivering or shaking of the whole body:—a symptom of fever. A slighter degree, and at times full rigor, is occasionally termed a chill, (Prov.) cream, fri'gus ten'ue, perfrigeratio.

Ri'GOR AR'TUUM, Contractura—r. Cadaverosus, Rigor mortis—r. Congestivus, Chill, congestive—r. Corporis mortui, Rigor mortis—r. Emortalis, Rigor mortis—r. Maxillæ inferioris, Trismus.

Ri'GOR MOR'TIS, R. cor'poris mor'tui seu cadavero'sus seu emortua'lis, Necronarce'ma, (F.) Roideur ou Raideur ou Rigidité cadavérique. 'Stiffness of death.' Death stiffening. The rigidity of limbs that occurs on dissolution. See Rigidity.

Ri'GOR NERVO'RUM seu NERVO'SUS, Tetanus.

Ri'ma, Schis'ma, Schi'za. A fissure, a cleft; as Ri'ma seu Ri'mula Glottidis seu Laryn'gis, the opening of the glottis.—Ri'ma seu R. magna vulvæ, Intro'itus vaginæ, Sinus vulvæ, Sca'pha, Sca'phus seu Fissu'ra magna seu Scissu'ra seu Schi'za vulvæ, Ri'ma seu Fissu'ra pudendi; the opening of the vulva. See Vulva.—Ri'ma o'ris, the opening of the mouth.

Rio Vinaigro, Passambio. A stream of some size in New Granada, which is strongly impregnated with sulphuric acid.

Rip'poldsau. Tonic purgative waters in Baden, containing bicarbonates of iron, manganese, lime and magnesia; sulphates of soda, potash, lime and magnesia; phosphate of lime, chloride of magnesium, alumina, &c.

Rire ou Ris, Risus—r. Canin, Canine laugh—r. Moqueur, Canine laugh—r. Sardoniën, Canine laugh, Risus sardonius—r. Sardonique, Canine laugh.

Ri'sagon, Cassumuniar.

Rish'teh, Dracunculus.

Risig'alum, Orpiment.

Ri'sing, Abscess, see Regurgitation—r. of the Lights, Cynanche trachealis.

Ri'SING or ELEVATION OF THE PULSE, Pulsûs elevatio. The pulse is said to rise, when it becomes more full and frequent, as occurs in the exacerbation of acute diseases.

Risip'ola, Erysipelas—r. Lombarda, Pellagra.

Riso'rius No'vus, (from ridere, risum, 'to laugh,') R. Santorini, (F.) Rieur de Santorini. Santorini gives this name to a portion of the platysma myoides, which passes from the cheek towards the commissure of the lips.

Rissig'alum, Orpiment.

Ri'sus, gen. Ri'sûs, (ridere, risum, 'to laugh,') Ge'lus, Laugh'ing, Laugh'ter, Laugh, (F.) Rire ou Ris. An involuntary movement of the muscles of the face, and of the lips in particular, accompanied with a sonorous and interrupted expiration, commonly indicating mirth and satisfaction.

Ri'SUS A'R'IUM, Ranunculus sceleratus—r. Caninus, Canine laugh—r. Involuntarius, Canine laugh—r. Sardoniën, Canine laugh—r. Sardonicus, Canine laugh—r. Spasticus, Canine laugh.

Ri'ta-Christi'na. A celebrated double monster, born in Sardinia, in 1829. It lived to be nearly nine months old. Two distinct bodies were united at the pelvis. Below, the monster was single.

Rivallie's Caus'tic, Solidified Nî'tric Ac'id. A gelatinous paste made by adding nitric acid in its highest degree of concentration to lint in an earthen vessel. It is usually left on a part for 15 or 20 minutes, or even, as in encephaloid cancer, for 24 hours.

Riv'erweed, Conferva rivalis.

Ri'ving, (from rive, rived.) Eructation.

Rivi'nus, Duct of, see Sublingual gland.

Ri'vus Lacryma'lis, (ri'vus, 'a small stream,') see Palpebra.

Riz, Oryza.

Roan Tree, Sorbus aucuparia.

Rob, Ro'ob, Rob'ub, Ro'hob, Ro'hab, (F.) Extrait des fruits. This word, of Arabic extraction, means the juice of any fruit thickened to the consistence of honey by evaporation, before it has fermented. The juice of the grape, boiled to this consistence, was called Sa'pa, and, when not quite so thick, Defrutum.

Rosenheim, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Rosenheim is 34 miles S. E. from Munich, in Bavaria. The waters contain sulphuretted hydrogen, carbonic acid, carbonate of lime, chlorides of calcium and magnesium, carbonate of soda, and oxide of iron. They are used as tonics.

Ro'senmüller, Or'gan of, Parovarium.

Rose'ola, Exanth'sis Rose'ola, Rose Rash, (F.) Roséole, Eruption anormale, Rosace, Fèvre rouge, Efflorescence érysipélateuse, (from rosa, 'the rose,' on account of the color.) An efflorescence in blushing patches, gradually deepening to a rose-color, mostly circular or oval; often alternately fading and reviving; sometimes, with a colorless nucleus; and chiefly on the cheeks, neck, or arms. It is frequently found, as a symptom, Rose'ola Symptomati'ca, in dention, Rose'ola Infantilis, dyspepsia, rheumatism, &c., and is of no consequence. Infantile rose, Summer rose, &c., are all forms of rose rash. See Roseolæ, Rubeola, and Scarlatina.

ROSE'OLA ACNO'SA, Gutta rosea.

ROSE'OLA ÆSTI'VA. The form of the affection which prevails in summer. The eruption is of a darker color, and is attended with more itching. When occurring in autumn, it is called Rose'ola autumnalis.

ROSE'OLA ANNULA'TA. Characterized by patches in the form of rose-colored rays, with central areas of the color of the skin.

ROSE'OLA VACCIN'IA. An eruption coexistent with the formation of the vaccine vesicle, and commencing around and about the seat of the vaccination, Vaccine lichen.

Rose'olæ, Rose'ola, Roselli'na, Rube'ola spu'ria seu no'tha, False or French measles, (F.) Roséole, Fausse rougeole. This name is given by some to an acute exanthem, midway between measles and scarlatina, and which belongs to neither one nor the other, as it affords no protection against either. It is, also, called Rube'ola by some, and Rube'oloid, a term which is applicable to any eruption resembling rubeola. An eruption which often precedes that of small-pox is termed Roseola Variolo'sa, Erythe'ma Variolo'sum.

Roséole, Roseola, Roseolæ.

Rose'pink, Chironia angularis.

Ro'ses, Milk of. A cosmetic wash, formed, according to one method, of Subcarbonate of potassa, gr. vj., Oil of almonds, ℥j., Essence of bergamot, ℥ij., Rose water, ℥ij., Orange flower water, ℥ij. Mix.

Rot'acism, Rotacis'mus, Rottacis'mus, properly Rhotacis'mus, Psellis'mus rhotacis'mus, (F.) Grassement. A vicious pronunciation of the letter R, common in the northern parts of England, especially near Newcastle. Called, there, the Burr or Burrh.

Rotacis'mus, (ῥωτακισμός;) Rotacism.

Rota'tio, (rotare, rotatum, 'to turn round,') Diarthrosis.

ROTA'TIO SPI'NÆ, Revolv'ing spine. A congenital disposition in some animals, as the calf, similar to the twist of the spinal column seen in lateral curvature.

Rota'tor, (rotare, rotatum, — rota, 'a wheel,' — 'to turn round,') (F.) Rotateur. A name given to several muscles that turn the parts to which they are attached upon their axes; — such as the oblique muscles of the eye, the pronators, supinators, &c.

ROTA'TOR, Trochanter.

ROTATO'RES DOR'SI. Eleven small muscles on each side of the dorsal vertebræ, which arise from the point or upper edge of each transverse process, and pass to the lower edge of the arch of the vertebra above, as far as the base of the transverse process. Their action is to rotate the individual vertebræ on each other.

ROTATO'RES FEM'ORIS, Obturatores — r. Oculi, Oblique muscles of the eye.

Rot'coll, Cochlearia armoracia.

Rotheln, Rubella.

Rottacis'mus, Rotacism.

Rottle'ra Schimpe'ri, (after Dr. Rottler, a Danish missionary.) A large tree of Abyssinia, Nat. Ord. Euphorbiaceæ, the bark of which, called Cortex muse'næ, and formerly known as Cortex braye'ræ anthelmin'ticæ, mixed with kosso, is used in that country against tapeworm.

ROTTLE'RA TINCTO'RIA. A euphorbiaceous plant of India. A powder is attached to the fruit capsule of this plant, which is brushed off and collected when the fruit is dry. It is called Kameyla, Rottle'ra, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Kameela, Kama'la, (Ph. B., 1867,) Kame'la, (Ph. B., 1864;) is used in Northern India as a vermifuge for dogs; and has proved effectual against tapeworm in man. The purgative dose is two or three drachms.

Rot'ula, (dim. of rota, 'a wheel,') Patella, Trochiscus — r. Genu, Patella.

Rot'ulad, see Rotular aspect.

Rot'ular, (from rotula.) Relating or appertaining to the patella.

ROT'ULAR AS'PECT. An aspect towards the side on which the patella is situated. (Barclay.) Rot'ulad is used by the same writer adverbially, to signify 'towards the rotular aspect.'

Rotule, Patella.

Rotu'lian, Rotulia'nus, (F.) Rotulien. Relating or belonging to the rotula or patella.

Rotun'dus, (from rota, 'a wheel,') Round.

Roucou, Terra Orleana.

Rou'en, Min'eral Wa'ters of. This water, known under the name Eau des fontaines de la Maréquerie, is cold, and contains carbonate of iron, carbonic acid, carbonate of lime, chloride of calcium, &c. It is tonic.

Rube'do, gen. Rube'dinis, Ru'bor, 'redness,' (from rubere, 'to be red,') A diffused, but not spotted, redness on any part of the skin; like that which arises from blushing. Blushing.

Rubefa'cient, Erethis'ma, Erethis'ticum, Rubefa'ciens, (ruber, 'red,' and facio, 'I make,') (F.) Rubéfiant. That which produces redness. A medicine which produces redness of the skin. The action is called Rubefaction.

Rubéfiant, Rubefacient.

Rubel'la, (from rubeo, 'I am red,') Rosa'lia, Rube'ola no'tha, Erythe'ma scar'latini'forme, Rotheln, Bas'tard or Ger'man mea'sles, Scarlati'na morbill'o'sa, Hy'brid of mea'sles and scarla'tina, Anom'alous exan'them. A form of eruption resembling measles, sometimes not unlike scarlatina, dusky red, uniformly distributed, without catarrhal symptoms, not contagious, and of very favorable prognosis: by some regarded as co-existent measles and scarlatina. It was at first confounded with variola. It was called Rubeola by Hildenbrand, but this term in England and the United States is generally restricted to measles.

Rube'ola, Rube'ola vulga'ris, (from rubeo, 'I am red,') Rose'olæ, Exanthe'sis, Rube'olæ, Vetera'na, Blac'cie, Fer'sæ, Blac'tiæ, Bavil'æ, Morbil'li, Scarlati'na pustulo'sa seu milia'ris, Fe'bris morbill'o'sa, Ty'phus morbill'o'sus, Phœnicis'mus, Ecphy'mata, Measles, (Sc.) Mirles, (Prov.) Oreas, Crevds, Malls, Maules, Meas'lings, (F.) Rougeole, Fidère morbilleuse. One of the major exanthemata; generally affecting individuals but once, and produced by specific contagion. The rash usually appears on the fourth, but sometimes on the third, fifth, or sixth day of a febrile disorder; and, after a continuance of four days, gradually declines with the fever. The disease generally commences from ten to fourteen days after the contagion has been received. The eruption first shows itself in distinct, red, and nearly circular spots, somewhat less than the ordinary areolæ of fleabites. As these increase in number, they coalesce: forming small patches of an irregular figure, but approaching nearest to that of semi-circles or crescents. These patches are intermixed with single circular dots and with interstices of the natural color of the skin. On the face they are slightly raised, so as to give the sensation of inequality of surface to the finger passed over the cuticle. The disappearance of the eruption is followed by desquamation of the cuticle. Measles is not dangerous of itself; but it is liable to induce pneumonia in winter, and dysentery in summer, which are, at times, very fatal. These are apt to come on at the time of, or soon after, the disappearance of the eruption. When they supervene, they must be treated as idiopathic affections. Rubeola demands a general antiphlogistic treatment. A fungus, Mucor mucedo, was discovered by Hallier in the blood and sputa of patients attacked with rubeola.

Willan has pointed out a Rubeola Spuria, which he calls RUBEOLA SINE CATARRHO. In this the rash runs its regular course, with little fever or catarrhal affection; affording no certain security against the common or regular disease. He also gives the name RUBEOLA NIGRA or BLACK MEASLES, to an unusual appearance of the measles about the seventh or eighth day, when the rash becomes suddenly livid, with a mixture of yellow. In the uncomplicated forms of measles but little treatment is required.

Epidemic measles has occasionally prevailed largely in the military service, and has been called Camp Measles.

RUBEOLA GERMANICA, Rubella — r. Notha, Rubella, Roseolæ — r. Spuria, see Roseolæ, and Rubeola.

Rubeolæ, Roseolæ.

Rubeoline, (from rubeola.) A term proposed by Dr. Wm. Farr for the specific zymotic principle by which measles is propagated.

Rubeoloid, (rubeola, and eidōs, 'resemblance,') see Roseola.

Rubia, (from ruber, 'red,') R. tinctorum seu peregrina seu syvestris seu ma'jor, Erythrodanum, Ra'dix rubra, Dyer's Mad'der, Mad'der, (F.) Garance. Family, Rubiaceæ. Sex. Syst. Tetrandria Monogynia. The root, Rubia, (Ph. U. S.), has a bitterish, somewhat austere, taste, and a slight, not agreeable, smell. It was formerly considered deobstruent, detergent, and diuretic.

Rubiginous, Rubiginosus, (from rubigo, gen. rubig'inis, 'rust,') (F.) Rouillé. Rusty. Having the color of rust. An epithet given to the sputa in certain cases of pneumonia.

Rubinus Verus, (from ruber, 'red,') Anthrax.

Rubor, 'redness,' Rubedo.

Rubrica Fabrilis, (from ruber, 'red,') A red, heavy, earthy matter, formerly employed for making drying plasters — Hard Ruddle, Red Chalk.

RUBRICA SINOPICA. A heavy, compact, reddish earth from Sinope, formerly used in diarrhoea.

Rubrin, (from ruber, 'red,') Hæmatin.

Rubus, (from ruber, 'red,') The pharmacopœial name (Ph. U. S. 1873) of the bark of the root of Rubus Canadensis and Rubus villosus.

Rubus Affinis, R. fruticosus.

RUBUS ARCTICUS, Shrubby Strawberry, Bac'ca Norlandicæ. Ord. Rosaceæ. Sex. Syst. Icosandria Polygynia. The fruit is recommended by Linnæus as possessing antiseptic, refrigerant, and antiscorbutic qualities.

RUBUS BA'TUS, R. cæsius.

RUBUS CÆSIUS, R. Ba'tus, Dew'berry plant, (F.) Ronce bleue. The fruit resembles the blackberry in appearance and properties. The bark of the root of R. trivialis seu Canadensis seu procumbens seu flagellaris, American Dewberry, Low Blackberry, is astringent.

RUBUS CANADENSIS, see R. cæsius.

RUBUS CHAMÆMORUS, Cloud'berry Tree, Chamæmor'rus, C. Norw'gica, Chamæ'drys, Cloud'berries, Knotberries, (F.) Ronce de Montagne. The ripe fruit is sometimes prepared as a jam, and used in fevers, &c., to allay thirst. It has been much extolled as an antiscorbutic.

RUBUS FRUTICOSUS, R. affinis seu paniculatus seu ni'ger seu frondosus seu vulgaris, Com'mon Bram'ble, which affords Black'berries, Bram'ble-berries, (Prov.) Bum'blekites, (F.) Ronce noire. The berries are eaten as a summer fruit, of which they form a poor variety. The bark of the root of the Rubus villosus, American blackberry, High or Standing blackberry, Hairy American bramble, is astringent, and has been used in the last stages of dysentery, and in cholera infantum.

RUBUS IDÆ'US, R. frambæianus, Ba'tos, Rasp'berry, (F.) Framboise, Ronce. The fruit of the best varieties — Rasps, (Prov.) Hindberries — is extremely agreeable, and is much used. It was formerly called Batinon moron (Баривов морон).

RUBUS NI'GER, R. fruticosus — r. Occidentalis, see R. strigosus — r. Paniculatus, R. fruticosus — r. Procumbens, see R. cæsius.

RUBUS STRIGOSUS, Wild red rasp'berry of the United States. The leaves are often used as a mild astringent, as well as those of Rubus occidentalis, Black rasp'berry.

RUBUS TRIVIA'LIS, see Rubus cæsius — r. Villosus, see Rubus fruticosus — r. Vulgaris, R. fruticosus.

Ruck'ing, (from ructus,) Eruetation.

Ructa'men, (from ructare, ructatum, 'to belch,') Eruetation.

Ructa'tio, Eruetation.

Ructua'tio, Eruetation.

Ructuos'itas, see Eruetation.

Ruc'tus, Eruetation — r. Acidus, Oxyregmia — r. Nidorosus, Cnisorregmia.

Rudbeck'ia Laciniata, (after the Rudbecks, of Upsal,) Coneflower, Thimbleweed; indige'nous; Order, Compositæ; is diuretic, and has been given in nephritic affections.

Rud'dle, Hard, Rubrica fabrilis.

Rudimen'tal, Rudimenta'lis, (F.) Rudimentaire, (rudimentum, — from rudis, 'rude,' — 'the first beginning,') That which is but slightly developed.

Rudius, Ex'tract of, Extract of Rudius.

Rudolph'ia Frondo'sa, (after C. A. Rudolphi, a botanist of Jena,) Butea frondosa.

Ruelles, Wrinkles.

Ruft, (from rive, rived,) Eruetation.

Ru'ga, pl. Rugæ, Wrinkle. A term especially applied to the rugæ of the stomach and vagina.

Ru'gæ Pennifor'mes, Palmæ uteri plicatæ.

Rugine, (from Rumina,) Raspatorium.

Rugissement, Rugitus.

Rugi'tus, gen. Rugitûs, Brycheth'mus, (rugire, rugitum, 'to roar,') (F.) Rugissement. A Latin word, which ordinarily expresses the roaring of the lion, and which is used by some medical writers to designate a particular species of borborygmus compared to it.

Ru'gose, (from Ruga,) Wrinkled.

Ru'gous, Wrinkled.

Rum, Taf'ia, Spir'itus Jamaicen'sis, Molas'es Spirit, (F.) Rhum. A spirit distilled from sugar or molasses. See Spirit.

Rum, Bay, Spiritus myrciæ.

Rum Buds, Gutta rosea.

Ru'ma, Mamma.

Ru'men. The paunch of animals. See Plenalvia.

Rumenot'omy, (rumen, and τομή, 'section.') The operation of opening the rumen or paunch of animals in case of impaction, &c. of that organ.

Ru'mex (gen. Ru'micis) Acetosel'la, (from rumo, 'I suck,' in allusion to the Romans sucking it to allay thirst [?],) Sheep Sorrel, Field Sorrel; indigenous; has similar virtues with Ru'MEX ACETO'SUS, R. tuberosus seu intermedius, Lap'athum pratense, Ox'alis Aceto'sa, Aceto'sa vulgaris seu pratensis seu nos'tras, Anax'yris, A. arven'sis, Sour dock, Sor'el, Com'mon Sor'el, (Sc.) Docken, (F.) Oseille, Vinette, Aigrette, Surelle. Ord. Polygonaceæ. Sex. Syst. Hexandria Trigynia. The leaves are sour, and are used in cookery, and also as a refrigerant.

Ru'MEX ACU'TUS, Sharp-pointed wild dock, Oxylap'athum, Lap'athum, L. sylvestre seu acutum, Ru'mex, R. paludosus seu pustillus, Lap'athus, (F.) Patience sauvage. A decoction of the root has long been used in cutaneous affections. It is sometimes employed for the cure of the itch.

Ru'MEX ÆTNE'NIS, R. scutatus.

Ru'MEX ALPI'NUS, Aceto'sa Alpi'na. The systematic name of the plant that affords Monk's Rhubarb, (F.) Rhabarbe des Moines. See Rumex patientia.

Ru'MEX AQUAT'ICUS, Rumex hydrolapathum — r. Britannica, Rumex hydrolapathum — r. Confertus, R. patientia — r. Digynus, Oxyria reniformis.

Ru'MEX GIGANTE'A, Ascle'pias gigante'a, Veg'etabile mer'cury, Mudar, Muddar, Mudarrh. The bark of the root has a reputation in the East Indies for the treatment of leprosy, elephantiasis, &c.

Ru'MEX HYDROLAP'ATHUM, Water Dock, (old Eng.) Brokeleak, Hydrolapathum, Ru'mex aquat'icus seu Britan'nica, Her'ba Britan'nica, Lap'athum aquat'icum, (F.) Parelle, Patience d'eau. The leaves of this plant are subacid, and said to be laxative. The root has been used as a tonic, astringent, and antiscorbutic. It has also been employed externally in some cutaneous affections.

Ru'MEX INTERME'DIUS, R. acetosus.

Ru'MEX OBTUSIFO'LIUS, Lap'athum sylvestre, Bluntleaved Dock, Bitter Dock. The root of this, as well as of R. CRISPUS, Curled, or Sour, or Yel'low Dock — Rumex, (Ph. U. S.) — has similar virtues to those of the other species. Both have been used in decoction in the same cases as sarsaparilla.

Ru'MEX OXYO'TUS, R. scutatus — r. Paludosus, R. acetus.

Ru'MEX PATIEN'TIA, R. confer'tus, Lap'athum hortense, Rhabar'barum monacho'rum, Hippolap'athum, Patien'tia, Gar'den Pa'tience, Monk's Rhubarb, (F.) Patience, Rhabarbe sauvage, Parelle. This root, which is supposed to possess the virtues of rhubarb, but in an inferior degree, is, according to Linnæus, obtained from the Rumex patientia; according to Murray, from the Rumex alpinus.

Ru'MEX PUSIL'LUS, R. acetus.

Ru'MEX SANGUIN'EUS. The root of the bloody dock or bloody veined Dock, has an austere and astringent taste; and has been employed in dysentery. It is called, also, Lap'athum sanguineum, (F.) Oseille ou Patience Rouge, Sangdragon.

Ru'MEX SCUTA'TUS, R. glaucus seu hastifolius seu Ætne'nis seu oxyotus seu hasta'tus, Aceto'sa seu Scuta'ta rotundifo'lia seu Roma'na seu rotundifolia hortens'is seu scuta'ta, Lap'athum scuta'tum seu rotundifo'lium, Ro'man or Gar'den Sor'el, Green Sauce, French Sor'el, (F.) Oseille boucher, Oseille ronde, Petite Oseille. Virtues the same as those of the common sorrel.

Ru'MEX TUBERO'SUS, R. acetosus.

Rumina'tion, Rumina'tio, (ruminare, 'to chew again,' from ruma or rumen, 'the ingluvies,') Merycis'mus. A function peculiar to ruminating animals, by which they chew a second time the food they have swallowed. An analogous phenomenon is sometimes seen in man. One who ruminates is termed, in French, mérycole.

Ru'mis, Mamma.

Rum'met, Pityriasis.

Rump, ([D.] Romp, [G.] Rump f.) Croupon — r. Bone, Coccyx.

Run'ches, Sinapis arvensis.

Runci'na, 'a plane,' Raspatorium.

Runcin'ula, (dim. of runcina), Raspatorium.

Run'kill, Wrinkle.

Run'kle, Wrinkle.

Run'net, Rennet.

Run'ning, Cur'sus, (F.) Course. A succession of leaps, executed with rapidity, to transport the body quickly from one place to another.

RUN'NING, Rennet.

Run'round, see Paronychia.

Runsh, Sinapis arvensis.

Ru'pes, 'cliffs,' Lips of the Vulva. See Lip.

Ru'pia, Rhy'pia, Ulcus atonicum, Ec'phlysis Rhy'pia, Rhy'p'aria, (from ρῦπος, 'filth.') An eruption of large flattish blebs, which contain a fluid — at first serous, afterwards puriform, and often bloody, which rapidly concretes into crusts, at the base of which are ulcers of variable depths. If the spots are of inconsiderable size, it is called Rupia simplex; if the crusts are large and prominent, Rupia prominens.

It requires the use of tonics internally, and of stimulating ointments externally.

Ru'PIA ESCHAROT'ICA, Pem'phigus infan'tilis seu gangreno'sus, Ec'thyma gangreno'sum, known in Ireland under the names white blisters, eat'ing hives, and burnt holes. An affection which bears a close similarity to pemphigus, particularly in the absence of a thick rugous crust, while in its chief feature, that of ulceration, it evidently belongs to Rupia.

Ru'PIA PROM'INENS, see Rupia — r. Simplex, see Rupia.

Ru'pial, Rupia'lis. Appertaining or relating to rupia.

Ruptibil'itas, (ruptio, and habilis, 'able,') Fragilitas.

Ruptil'itas, Fragilitas.

Rup'tio, (from rumpere, ruptum, 'to break,') Rhexis.

Ruptu'rium, (from rumpere, ruptum, 'to break,') Cauterium — r. Commune, Potassa fusa.

Rup'ture, (from rumpere, ruptum, 'to break or burst,') Hernia, Rhexis — r. du Cœur, Cardiorrhexis — r. of the Groin, Bubonocèle — r. of the Heart, Cardiorrhexis — r. de la Matrice, Uterus, rupture of the.

Rup'ture Wort, Herniaria glabra.

Rup'tured, see Hernial.

Rus'cus, R. aculeatus, Brus'cus, Oxymyr'rhinē, Oxymyr'sinē, Myrtacan'tha, Catan'gelus, Myacan'tha, Scop'ia regia, Wild Myrtle, Centromyr'inē, Butcher's Broom, (Prov.) Knechtolly, (F.) Petit houx, Fragon. Ord. Smilacæ. Sex. Syst. Diœcia Monadelphia. The root has been recommended as an aperient and diuretic.

RUSCUS ACULEATUS, Ruscus.

RUSCUS HYPOGLOSSUM, Uvula'ria, Hypoglossum, Hippoglossum [?], Bislina'gua, Bonifa'cia, Laur'rus Alexandri'na angustifo'lia, (F.) Laurier Alexandrin, Langue de cheval. Formerly used against relaxed uvula.

Rus'wut, see Oxyacantha Galeni.

Rut, (from rugitus, 'the exclamation of animals in heat,') Heat.

Ru'ta, (ῥύτη,) R. Grave'olens seu horten'sis seu al'tera, Peg'anum, Besa'sa, Com'mon Rue, (F.) Rue, Rhue, Rue sauvage, Herbe de grace. Ord. Rutaceæ. Sex. Syst. Decandria Monogynia. The plant has a strong, ungrateful odor, and bitter pungent taste. It is so acrid as to blister the skin. Its properties are reputed to be tonic, stimulant, antispasmodic, and emmenagogue. Dose, gr. xv. to ʒij. The leaves are officinal — Ru'ta, (Ph. U. S.)

O'leum Ru'tæ, (Ph. U. S.,) Distill'd Oil of

Rue, is antispasmodic; and, externally, rubefacient. Dose, gtt. ij. to vj.

Rutido'ma, gen. Rutido'matis, see Rutidosis.

Rutido'sis, Rytido'sis, Rhytido'sis, (ῥυτίδω, 'I wrinkle,' and osis.) The act of wrinkling; as Rutido'ma means a shrivelled or wrinkled body. A destruction or atrophy of the eye. Corrugation and subsidence of the cornea.

Ruysch, Glom'erule of, Malpighian corpuscles.

Ruyschia'na Tu'nica, (F.) Lame ou Membrane Ruyschienne. According to Ruysch (pron. Risch), the Dutch anatomist, and the greater part of his disciples, the choroid coat of the eye is formed of two laminae. His son gave to the inner the name Tu'nica Ruyschia'na or Membra'na Ruyschia'na seu Ruysch'ii.

Tu'nica Cellulo'sa Ruyschia'na is the areolar substance under the peritoneal covering of the stomach. It is not numbered among the coats of that organ.

Sabine, Juniperus sabina.

Sablé, 'sanded,' (from sabulum, 'sand,') Having the appearance as if strewed with sand. The terms sablé and piqueté are sometimes applied to the brain, when a slice of it exhibits red points as if it had been strewed with red sand. Such is the case in cerebral hyperæmia.

Sabot de Vénus Jaune, 'yellow sabot of Venus,' Cypripedium luteum.

Sabu'cus, Sambucus.

Sab'ulous, Sabulo'sus, Areno'sus, Psammo'des, (sabulum, 'sand,') The sandy deposit often seen in the urine.

Sab'ulum Cona'rii, see Pineal gland.

Sabu'ra, Saburra.

Sabur'ra, Sabu'ra, Sor'des, (F.) Saburre. This word signifies, by derivation, 'coarse sand, or ballast,' sabulum. In its common acceptation it means foulness of the stomach, as it is sometimes called, from vitiated matters supposed to be retained and accumulated in the stomach—the result of imperfect digestion—and which have been sometimes considered as a morbid product of the mucous secretion of that organ, or of the biliary secretion; at others, as a residuum from alimentary substances badly digested. The Sabur'ral condition or state, Colu'vies gas'trica, Crudita'tes ventric'uli, Sta'tus gas'tricus, Gastris'mus, (F.) Embarras gastrique, État saburral, is an accumulation of saburra in the stomach, (F.) Saburres gastriques, which the Humorists considered to be the cause of a number of diseases.

B., 1867,) is refined sugar.

True Sugars are those with which alcoholic fermentation may be effected by the addition of yeast and water. They are:

Species.	Varieties.
1.....	{ Hard sugar of the cane, maple, beet, chestnut, &c.
2.....	{ Liquid sugar, sugar of malt, of the sweet potato, molasses, honey, &c.
3.....	{ Hard sugar of the grape, ripe fruits, starch, diabetes, &c.
4.....	Hard sugar of the mushroom.

Imper'fect Sugars are those in which alcoholic fermentation cannot be effected by means of yeast and water.

Species.	Varieties.
1.....	Manna.
2.....	Sugar of milk.
3.....	Sugar of jelly or glue.
4.....	Liquorice.
5.....	Picromel.

Sugar, Cane-sugar, Su'crose, is prepared from the expressed juice of the sugar-cane, boiled with the addition of quicklime or common vegetable alkali. It is used, in Pharmacy, for the preparation of syrups, conserves, lozenges, &c. It is nutritious, and is employed as an aliment, and as a eutrophic demulcent and antiseptic. Dissolved in small quantities in water, as in tea, it is apt to disagree with dyspeptics; an evil which does not always occur when the same substance is taken more largely.

Liv'er or Hepat'ic Sugar, (F.) Sucre du Foie, has been found to be a normal formation by the liver. It is more readily assimilated than other varieties of sugar. See Glucose and Glycogenic matter.

SAC'CHARUM ACER'NUM, S. Canaden'sē, Ma'ple Sugar, is often used as a demulcent.

SAC'CHARUM AL'BUM, S. purifica'tum, Sac'charum, (Ph. U. S.,) Sal In'dus, White Sugar, Refined Sugar, is the Loaf Sugar. Double-refined Sugar has been called Tabor'zet. See Saccharum.

SAC'CHARUM ALUMINA'TUM. Equal parts of white sugar and alum, powdered. Used as a styptic.

SAC'CHARUM CAN'DIDUM, S. can'dum seu can'tum seu can'tum, Al'phenic, Na'bot, Sugar-can'dy, Sugar can'died, (F.) Sucre Candi, is the crystallized juice of the cane.

Sacerdo'tis (gen. of sacerdos, 'a priest') Pe'nis, Arum maculatum.

Sachet (F.), (from sac,) Sac'culus. A small bag containing perfumes to be placed among clothes, to communicate to them an agreeable odor. The following is a formula for the powder they contain:—Powdered cloves and powdered cassia, each one ounce; powdered orris root, an ounce and a half; powdered yellow sandal wood, one drachm; oil of roses, twenty-four drops; oil of lavender, oil of bergamot, each one drachm; musk, six grains. A scentbag.

Sack, (F.) Sec, 'dry.' A dry wine used by our ancestors, Vin sec. Probably Sherry.

SACK, Sac, Sac'cus, Secluso'rium, ([Sax.] rac.) A bag or pouch.

SACK or SAC, HER'NIAL, Sac'cus hernio'sus, (F.) Sac herniaire. An envelope or pouch, formed by the serous membrane of the cavity, whence a viscus has escaped. We distinguish, in a hernial sac, its orifice or the opening by which it communicates with the great cavity lined by the serous membrane: its cervix or neck, (F.) Collet, the narrow portion on the outside of the orifice, where strangulation sometimes occurs: the body, (F.) Corps, which is the round, prominent part: and the fundus or bottom, the part opposite to the orifice.

SACK POS'SET, (from sack, and posset.) A posset made of sack, milk, and other ingredients.

SACK or SAC, SE'ROUS. The shut cavity formed by any serous membrane, as by the pleura or peritoneum.

Sack Whey, Wine whey.

Sa'cra Fis'tula, Vertebral column.

Sa'crad, see Sacral aspect.

Sa'cral, Sa'cer, Sacra'lis, (F.) Sacré. That which belongs or relates to the sacrum. A name given to several parts.

SA'CRAL ARTERIES are distinguished into, 1. The Anterior or middle sa'cral, Me'dian artery of the sacrum of Chaussier, which arises from the posterior part of the abdominal aorta, in front of the 4th lumbar vertebra. It descends, in a serpentine manner, upon the sacrovertebral articulation, and on the anterior surface of the sacrum it furnishes many lateral branches, which unite with the lateral sacral arteries, and enter the anterior sacral foramina, to be distributed to the membranes of the marrow, &c. 2. The Lateral sacral arteries, which are two in number, one on each side. They arise from the hypogastric, from the ilio-lumbar, or from the gluteal; and descend before the anterior sacral foramina, anastomosing in an arched manner, towards the coccyx, with the middle sacral. They give off external and posterior branches, which enter the sacral foramina; and internal branches, which are distributed to the pyramidalis, sacrum, &c.

SA'CRAL AS'PECT. An aspect towards the region where the sacrum is situated. (Barclay.) Sacrad is used by the same writer adverbially to signify 'towards the sacral aspect.'

SA'CRAL EXTREMITIES. The lower limbs.

SA'CRAL GROOVES, (F.) Gouttières sacrées. Two longitudinal excavations, slightly marked, at the posterior surface of the sacrum; which appear to terminate the vertebral grooves or gutters.

SA'CRAL NERVES, (F.) Nerfs sacrés, are generally six in number. They arise from the termination of the spinal marrow. The first, united with the great cord which descends from the lumbar plexus, concurs with the three others in the formation of the sacral or sciatic plexus. The third and fourth, with branches of the great sympathetic, form the hypogastric plexus. The fifth and sixth (coccygeal nerve) are distributed to the ischio-coccygeus muscle, and to the sphincter and levator ani.

SA'CRAL PLEX'US, Sciat'ic plex'us—the sa'cral portion of the crural plex'us of Chaussier, constituted as just mentioned, is situate in front of the pyramidalis. It gives off, backwards, two branches, called the pudic, (F.) honteux, and the lesser sciatic. It terminates in the great sciatic nerve.

Sacré, Sacral.

Sa'cro. In composition, relating or belonging to the sacrum.

Sacroco'cyge'al, Sacroco'cyge'us. Relating to the sacrum and coccyx.

SACROCO'CYGE'AL ARTICULA'TION is that of the lower extremity of the sacrum with the superior facette of the coccyx. It is closed by two ligaments,—an anterior and a posterior sacroco'cygeal.

Sacroco'sta'lis, (costa, 'a rib,') Sacrolumbalis—s. Fémorel, Glutæus major.

Sacroco'xal'gia, (sacro, coxa, 'the hip,' and algos, 'pain,') Some authors have called thus a rheumatic affection of the sacroiliac symphysis.

Sacroil'iac, Sacroil'i'acus. That which relates to the sacrum and ilium.

SACROIL'IAC ARTICULA'TION, SYM'PHYSIS or SYNCHONDRO'SIS, Iliosac'ral articula'tion, sym'physis or synchondro'sis, is the union of two surfaces,—two inclined planes, broader above than below; one formed by the sacrum, the other by the ilium. Both surfaces are incrustated by an articular cartilage. The bands which strengthen them are the two sacrosciatic ligaments, the sacrospinal, a sacroiliac ligament, and some irregular fibres. The sacroiliac ligament is a very thick assemblage of short, dense, irregular fibres, occupying the space which the sacrum and ilium leave between them, behind their articular surface. Some authors have termed some irregular fibres, situate in front of the sacroiliac articulation, anterior sacroiliac ligaments, in opposition to the preceding fasciæ, which they call posterior sacroiliac.

SACROIL'IAC DISEASE. A painful acute or chronic inflammatory condition of the sacroiliac articulation, dependent on local injury, accidents of pregnancy or parturition, and a strumous diathesis.

Sacroischiat'icus, Sacrosciatic.

Sacrolombaire, Sacrolumbar.

Sacrolumba'lis, Sacrolumbar.

Sacrolum'bar, Sacrolumba'lis, (F.) Sacro-lombaire. That which belongs to the sacrum and loins.

SACROLUM'BAR, Sacrolumba'lis, Sacrolumba'ris Mus'cle, Sacroco'sta'lis, Dorsotrache'lian portion of the Sacrospinal, of Chaussier, (F.) Lombocosto-trachélien, Sacro-lombaire, is seated at the posterior part of the trunk; is thick and triangular below; flat and thin in the remainder, and terminates in a point at its upper extremity. It is attached to the posterior surface of the sacrum; to the corresponding portion of the crista ilii; to the extremities of the transverse processes of the lumbar vertebræ; to the angles of the eleven inferior ribs; to the tuberosity of the first, and the posterior tubercle of the transverse processes of the last five cervical vertebræ. The sacrolumbalis straightens the vertebral column when bent forwards, and maintains it straight. By means of its insertion into the ribs, it can elevate or depress these bones, according as it contracts from above to below, or from below to above. It acts, consequently, sometimes as an inspiratory, at others as an expiratory muscle.

From six or eight of the lower ribs arises an equal number of fleshy portions, which terminate at the inner side of this muscle, and are called Mus'culi Accesso'rii seu Additamentum ad Sacrolumba'lem, (F.) Accessoires du Sacro-lombaire.

From the upper part of the sacrolumbalis a fleshy slip, called Cervica'lis descen'dens, Cervicalis descendens Diemerbroeck'ii, Transversa'lis collatera'lis col'li, Accesso'rius ad Sacrolumba'lem, (F.) Transversaire grêle, runs up, to be fixed to the transverse processes of the fourth, fifth, and sixth cervical vertebræ, by three distinct tendons. These last parts, though separated by some anatomists, belong to the sacrolumbalis.

Sacrosciatic, Sacroischiat'icus. That which belongs to the sacrum and ischium.

SACROSCIATIC LIG'AMENTS are two ligaments which assist in securing the sacroiliac articulation. The great or posterior sacrosciatic ligament extends from the crista illi and the sides of the sacrum and coccyx to the tuberosity of the ischium. The less or anterior sacrosciatic ligament arises from the same point, and terminates in the spine of the ischium.

Sacrospi'nal, Dorsotrachelian portion of the sacrolumbalis.

Sacrospina'lis. That which relates to the sacrum and spine. Under this name, Chaussier describes the sacrolumbalis, longissimus dorsi, transversalis, transversospinalis, and intertransversalis muscles. He divides it into three portions. It includes the Erector spi'næ, Extensor dorsi communis, Lumbocosta'lis.

Sacrotrachantérien, Pyramidalis.

Sacrover'tebral, Sacrovertebra'lis. That which relates to the sacrum and the vertebrae.

SACROVER'TEBRAL ARTICULA'TION is the junction of the last vertebra of the loins with the sacrum. The angle which these two bones form at the anterior part has been called the Prom'on'tory of the Sa'crum, or the Sacrover'tebral An'gle.

SACROVER'TEBRAL LIG'AMENT is a strong ligament, which passes from the anterior part of each of the transverse processes of the last lumbar vertebra to be attached to the base of the sacrum. Its use is to maintain the articulation of those two bones in situ.

Sa'crum, (neuter of sacer.) Os sacrum seu basilare seu alagas seu latum seu clunium, Ver'tebra magna, Albagia'zi, Hi'eron os'teon, Clu'nis, Subver'tebra, Subver'tebrum, Vet'ula, (from sacer, 'sacred;' because it contributes to protect the genital organs, which were considered sacred; or because it was offered in sacrifice.) The bone which forms the posterior part of the pelvis, and is a continuation of the vertebral column. The sacrum is symmetrical and triangular, situate at the posterior part of the pelvis, and concave anteriorly. It has: 1. A pel'vic or anterior sur'face, which corresponds to the pelvic cavity, and has four transverse furrows, that point out the parts where the primitive portions of the bone were separated from each other. On each side there are four foramina, called anterior sacral; these are oblique, and decrease in size from above downwards. Through them pass the anterior branches of the sacral nerves. 2. A spi'nal or posterior sur'face, which is convex, rough, and covered by muscles. Upon the median line are four horizontal, tubercular eminences, forming a continuation of the spinous processes of the vertebrae; and below, a triangular notch, where the sacral canal terminates. On each side of the surface are four foramina, called posterior sacral, which are smaller than the anterior, and give passage to the posterior branches of the sacral nerves. 3. The ver'tebral sur'face or base. Its greatest extent is transversely. It is articulated with the last lumbar vertebra. On it is seen the orifice of the sacral canal, of a triangular shape, which decreases in width from above downward; terminates the vertebral canal; is lined by a prolongation of the cerebral membranes; contains the fasciculi of the sacral nerves; communicates, externally, by the sacral foramina; and terminates at the triangular notch on the posterior surface of the bone. At the sides of the upper orifice of the sacral canal are two articular processes, which receive the articular processes of the last lumbar vertebra. The projection formed by the union of the base of the sacrum with the last lumbar vertebra is called the prom'on'tory, promonto'rium os'sis sa'cri, great an'gle of the sa'crum or sacrover'tebral an'gle. 4. A coccyge'al face or ap'ex, (F.) Face coccygienne ou sommet, which is very narrow, and is articulated with the coccyx. 5. Two lateral margins, which have, above, a broad, oblique surface, articulated with the ilium.

The sacrum is developed by 30 to 36 points of ossification.

Sa'ga, Midwife. In ancient Rome, the Sagæ exercised, also, the calling of magicians, procurers, and perfumers, and were more especially called upon to induce abortion. Also, Sago.

Sag'aban, Apios tuberosa.

Sagap'num, (σαγαπνον,) Sag'apin, Serapi'non, (F.) Gomme sérapihique. A gumresin, supposed to be obtained from the Fer'ula Per'sica. Ord. Umbelliferae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. Its odor is fetid and alliaceous, taste pungent, bitterish, nauseous. It is in small, agglutinated masses of a yellow color; tenacious, breaking with a horny fracture. It is reputed antispasmodic and emmenagogue. Dose, gr. x. to 3ss.

Sag'apin, Sagapenum.

Sag'men Vi'tri, Soda, subcarbonate of.

Sagit'tal, Sagitta'lis, Sagitta'tus, (from sagitta, 'an arrow,') Arrow-shaped, as —

SAGIT'TAL FUR'ROW, Sagit'tal Groove, (F.) Gouttière sagittale, is a channel on the median line of the inner surface of the skullcap. It is excavated in the os frontis, in the two parietal and occipital bones, and extends from the crista galli to the internal occipital protuberance. It lodges the longitudinal sinus, which has been called the sagittal sinus.

SAGIT'TAL GROOVE, Sagittal furrow — s. Sinus, see Sagittal furrow.

SAGIT'TAL SU'TURE, Biparie'tal Su'ture, Obela'a sutu'ra seu ra'phê, Sutu'ra Virga'ta seu Juga'lis seu Rabdô'des seu Rhabdô'des seu Rhabdô'des seu Biparieta'lis seu Interparieta'lis. The suture which unites the two parietal bones, and which extends, from before to behind, on the median line, from the coronal suture to the lambdoidal. It is so called from sagitta, 'an arrow,' because it seems to meet the coronal suture as an arrow meets the string of a bow.

Sagitta'ria Variab'ilis, (from sagitta, 'an arrow,' owing to the prevalent form of the leaves,) Ar'rowhead, Ar'rowleaf, Ar'rowweed, Wopata of Oregon. Nat. Ord. Alismaceæ. Esculent, yielding fecula like arrowroot. The roots are cooling and subastringent, and are at times applied to the feet in cases of yaws and dropsical swellings of the legs. The leaves are applied to the breasts to dispel milk.

Sagittarium Alexipharmacum, Malacocera'dix, Can'na Indica, Arun'do Indica. A root cultivated in the West Indies, and supposed to be a remedy for wounds by poisoned arrows.

Sagittatus, Sagittal.

Sa'go, Sa'gus, Sa'ga, Sa'gu, Se'gu, Am'yllum pal-maceum, (F.) Sagou, Sague. (Saga is the Malay name for various palms.) A fecula, obtained from the pith of the Sa'gus Rumph'ii, Cy'cas circina'lis, C. revoluta, &c., growing in the Moluccas, Philippine Isles, &c., and which is brought to us in small grains. The same substance is also obtained from the West Indies, but it is inferior to that from the East. By boiling in water or milk, sago becomes soft and transparent, and forms an agreeable and nutritious food in febrile, calculous, and other disorders. It is made palatable by sugar, lemonjuice, or wine, where the last is not contraindicated.

To make sago into a proper mucilage for the sick, a tablespoonful of it should be macerated in a pint of water for two hours, and then boiled for fifteen minutes, stirring assiduously. Care must be taken that the grains are perfectly dissolved by long boiling and constant stirring.

Sago posset is made by putting sago, 3ij., into water, Oij., boiling until the mucilage is formed, then rubbing sugar, 3ss., on the rind of a lemon, and putting it with tincture of ginger, f3j., into sherry, Oss., adding this mixture to the mucilage, and boiling for five minutes. It is a good restorative.

Saint Amand, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Sulphuretted waters, in the department of Du Nord, France. They contain carbonic and sulphohydric acids. The Boue or deposit contains sulphohydric acid, and salts of iron and magnesia. Temperature, 64° to 82° Fahrenheit. Season, from the 1st of June to the 1st of September.

Saint An'thony's Fire, Erysipelas.

Saint Augustine', Cli'mate of. This seaport of Florida is a frequent retreat during the winter season for the valetudinarian from the more northern parts of the United States. The climate is certainly comparatively mild and equable; but it is liable to frequent northeast storms. There are only a few days, however, in winter, in which the invalid cannot take exercise in the open air. Tampa Bay, and Pensacola, in Florida, and Mobile, in Alabama, which are sometimes visited by the consumptive, are less liable to the storms in question.

Saint Leonard's, Cli'mate of. This town, which is situate about a mile to the westward of Hastings, in Sussex, England, is less sheltered than that place, and is therefore a less favorable retreat, during the winter months, for the phthisical valetudinarian.

Saint Moritz or Saint Maurice, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Near this town, in the Grisons, Switzerland, are strongly chalybeate waters, which are employed both internally and externally. The town itself has been recommended as a residence for cases in which steady cold and extreme tenuity of air are indicated. The waters are resorted to in cases of hysteria, neuralgia, leucorrhœa, &c.

Saint My'on, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Cold, acidulous waters, at Saint Myon, near Riom, in the department of Puy-de-Dôme. They contain free carbonic acid, subcarbonate of soda, chloride of sodium, and carbonate and sulphate of lime.

Saint Nectaire, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Springs in the department of Puy-de-Dôme, France. They contain carbonic acid, bicarbonate of soda, and chloride of sodium. Temperature, 75° to 103° Fah. Season, from June 15th to September 15th.

Saint Pardaux, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Chalybeate springs in the department of Allier, France. They contain carbonic acid and iron.

Saint Sauveur, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Sulphurous waters in the department of Hautes-Pyrénées, France. Temperature, 76° to 93° Fah. The springs are frequented from May to October.

Salaam' or Salam' Convul'sion, see Convulsion, Salaam.

Salab, Salep.

Salac'itas, Salacity, Satyriasis — s. Vulvæ, Nymphomania.

Salac'ity, Salaciousness, Salac'itas, (F.) Salacité, (salax, salacis, 'lustful, lecherous.') Lecherousness; strong desire for venery.

Sal'ad, (from [L.] sal, salt, [F.] salé, 'salted,') Sallet, (F.) Salade. Fresh herbs — as lettuce, dressed with salt, oil, vinegar, &c.

SAL'AD CORN, Valeriana dentata.

Salap', Salep.

Salcombe, Cli'mate of. A small place — the Montpellier of Huxham — which is one of the warmest spots on the S. W. coast of England, and, therefore, in this respect adapted for the phthisical invalid as a winter retreat.

Salop', Salop', Saloop' (usually so pronounced,) Salab', Salap'. The prepared bulb of the Orchis mas'cula and other species of Orchis. The salep of Cashmere is from a species of Euloph'ia. Salep is in small, irregular, hard masses. In its composition in relation to water, it is closely analogous to tragacanth. It is possessed of similar virtues with sago, tapioca, &c. The mucilage is prepared by dissolving the powdered salep in hot water, with assiduous stirring, and adding to the solution sugar and milk. An indigenous salep has been made in France from Orchis macula'ta, O. bifo'lia, O. mas'cula, O. milita'ris, and O. latifo'lia. See Saloop.

SALEP', Otaheite, Arrowfoot (Tahiti).

Saler'num, School of. An ancient school of medicine at Salerno in Italy. It was established by Charlemagne in 802; and was the first Christian university at which medicine was taught. It was much celebrated, especially in the 12th century, and, on its account, Salerno was self-styled Civitas Hippocrat'ica. The work on hygiene, "De Conservandâ Valetudine," which bears its name, has passed through several editions in various languages. It is supposed to have been written by John of Milan, in 1100, and is in Leonine verses. (See author's "History of Medicine," Philadelphia, 1872, p. 207.)

Saline', Salinus, Salina'cius, Salinae'idus, Salitus, Sal'sus, Helinus, Hal'myrus, Halico'des, Salinous, (from sal.) That which contains a salt, or has the properties of a salt.

SALINE' DRAUGHT or MIX'TURE. This may be made as follows:—Potass. carbon., ℥j., Acid. citric. seu tartar., gr. xv. seu Succ. limon. recent., ℥ss., Aquæ, f℥viij., Syrup. cujusvis, ℥j. M. Given in divided doses as a febrifuge.

SALINE' EFFERVES'cing DRAUGHT or MIX'TURE is made by adding a due proportion of either of the acids above mentioned, or of lemon-juice, to the proper proportion of the carbonate of soda or of potassa. About 25 grains of the acid saturate 30 grains of the carbonate. See Powders, soda.

Salin'ous, Saline.

Salis Ammoni'aci Flo'res, Ammoniae carbonas.

Saliswitch Frac'ture, Fracture, Saliswitch.

Salit'io, (salio, 'I leap,') Leap.

Salit'us, (from sal,) Saline.

Sal'ium, Saliva.

Salium'ca, Valeriana Celtica.

Saliva, (probably from σάλας,) Si'alon, Si'alon, Si'elon, Pty'sma, Pty'alum, Pty'elum, Sal'ium, Sputa'men, Sputamen'tum, Spu'tum, Spit, Spit'tle, (old Eng.) Spaul, (Prov.) Spoat, Flare. An inodorous, insipid, transparent, slightly viscid fluid; secreted by the parotid, submaxillary, and sublingual glands, and poured into the mouth by the ducts of Steno, Wharton, and Rivinus; the use of which is to mix with the alimentary bolus, and to serve in the process of digestion. It is composed, according to Berzelius, of 992.2 parts of water, 2.9 of a particular animal matter, soluble in water, and insoluble in alcohol, (Pty'aline, princip'ium saliva'le, mat'ria siali'na, Ca'sein of the saliva, Salivary albu'men, Sal'i-vine), of 1.4 of mucus, 1.7 of chlorides of potassium and sodium, 0.9 of lactate of soda and animal matter, and 0.2 of soda. The ptyalin acts as a ferment, converting starchy matters first into dextrin and then into sugar.

SALIVARY AL'BUMEN, see Saliva — s. Calculi, see Calculi, salivary.

SALIVARY FIS'TULÆ, F. Salivosa, Si'alosyrin'ges, are such as depend upon an accidental opening into the excretory ducts of the salivary glands. Fistulae are most commonly met with in the duct of Steno.

SALIVARY GLANDS, Secre'ting organs of the saliva, Salival glands, are situate symmetrically, to the number of four, on each side of the face. Their form is very irregular, and their extent varies according to individuals. Their excretory ducts—Ductus salivarii, (F.) Canaux ou Conduits salivaires—carry the saliva directly into the mouth, without pouring it into any intermediate reservoir, as happens in the case of some of the other glands. The salivary glands have been distinguished into—1, The parotid; 2, the submaxillary; 3, the sublingual; and 4, the intra lingual or lingual, seated at the inferior surface of the tongue, where the mucous membrane forms a fringed fold. See Lingual glands.

Salivated, Saliva'tus, Pty'alized, Sial'ochous, (from saliva.) Affected with salivation.

Saliva'tion, Saliva'tio, S. cal'ida, Epiph'ora ptyalis'mus, Sialis'mus, Spi'tum o'ris, Sial'achus, Sielis'mus, Sialorrhoe'a, Sialoze'mia, Ptyalis'mus, Pty'alism, Flux'us salivæ, (F.) Flux de Bouche, Flux salivaire, Ptyalisme. A superabundant secretion of saliva, occasioned either locally, by the use of irritating masticatories, or under the influence of some cause which acts on the whole economy, and especially of mercurial preparations. In this last case it is accompanied by a coppery taste in the mouth, by swelling of the gums, and sometimes by looseness of the teeth. Salivation may usually be diminished by the use of astringents, laxatives, &c.

Ptyalismus acutus sympatheticus, Salivæ flux'us cibæ visio, Mouth watering, the increased flow of saliva produced by the sight, smell, or thought of agreeable food, is a species of ptyalism, as well as the Ptyalismus acutus mellitus, Apoceno'sis ptyalis'mus mellitus, Dulce'do sputatorum, or Sweet spittle. In this, the saliva has a sweet or mucilaginous taste.

SALIVATION, MERCURIAL, Saliva'tio mercurialis, Sialoze'mia seu Ptyalis'mus mercurialis, P. hydrargyratus, (F.) Ptyalisme mercuriel, Salivation mercurielle. Salivation produced by mercury. The stomatitis that accompanies it is termed mercurial, Stomatitis mercurialis, Hydrargyrostomatitis, (F.) Stomatite mercurielle.

The bark of these and other willows has a slightly aromatic odor, and a bitter astringent taste, which is nearly the same in all the species. It is tonic and astringent, and has been used in intermittents, and in cases of dyspepsia, worms, &c. The active neutral principle has been separated, and called Sal'icin or Sal'icine, Salici'na, Salici'num. It has been found in about fourteen species of salix and eight species of Populus; is like the quinia in medicinal efficacy. Dose, ℞j. to ʒj. of the powder. Dose of Salicin, from 4 to 6 grains.

Sal'sus, Saline.

Salt, (Sal, Hal, Hals, (ἀλς,) (F.) Sel. A name formerly given to a considerable number of substances of very different nature. At present, chemists apply the term Salts generally, to the combination of an acid with one or more bases. Neutral salts are those in which the acid and base reciprocally saturate each other. Acid salts or supersalts, (F.) Sur-sels, are those in which the acid predominates over the base, and the prefixes bi and ter indicate the proportion of acid. Alkaline salts or subsals, (F.) Sous-sels, those in which the base is predominant, when the prefixes di and tri indicate the proportion of base. The different denominations of the salts are compounded: 1. Of the name of the acid: the termination of which is changed into ite, when the name of the acid is in ous; ate, when it is in ic. Thus the salts formed by the sulphurous acid are sulphites; those by the sulphuric, sulphates. 2. This name is followed up by that of the oxide, which enters into the composition of the salt. Thus the sulphate of protoxide of iron is a combination of sulphuric acid with the protoxide of that metal. Frequently, to shorten the name, the word oxide is suppressed; and proto, deuto, trito, &c., put before the acid; as protosulphate of iron. Simple salts are those resulting from the combination of an acid with a single base; double salts, with two different bases; triple, with three, &c. A haloid salt is one constituted after the type of common salt, or which contains a metal and a salt-radical, as chlorine, iodine, &c. An oxysalt is formed from the combination of an acid with an oxide.

When salt is used in an abstract sense, it means the chloride of sodium.

Salt'wort, Prick'ly, Salsola kali.

Salu'ber, Salutory.

Salu'brious, (from salubris,) Salutory.

Salu'briousness, Salubrity.

Salu'bris, (from salus,) Salutory.

Salu'brity, Salu'britas, Salu'briousness, (F.) Salubrité, (from salubris,) Anything which contributes to the health of individuals or of communities. Situations differ materially from each other in this respect, and the cause of the difference is often an interesting topic of inquiry.

Sal'us, gen. Salutis, Sanitas.

Salutaire, Salutory.

Sal'utary, Saluta'ris, Salu'ber, Salu'bris, Hygie'nius, Hygias'ticus, Hygie'rus, Salu'brius, (F.) Salutaire, Salubre, (from salus,) Healthy. That which is favorable to health. Some diseases have been considered salutary; but this is doubtful.

Salutiferous, Salu'tifer, (salus, and fero, 'I bear,') Bringing health; health-bearing.

Salvatel'la, Ve'na salvatel'la, is situated on the back of the hand, near its inner margin. It begins on the posterior surface of the fingers and dorsal surface of the hand, by a plexus, formed by a number of radicles, frequently anastomosing with each other; it then ascends to the inner part of the forearm, where it takes the name—posterior cubital. The ancients recommended this vein to be opened in certain diseases, as in melancholic and hypochondriacal affections; and they attributed to such abstraction of blood considerable efficacy in the cure of disease: hence its name, (from salvere, 'to be well,')

Labiatæ. Sex. Syst. Diandria Monogynia.* Sage leaves, Salvia, (Ph. U. S.,) have a peculiar, aromatic odor, and a warm, aromatic, bitterish taste. Their virtues depend upon an essential oil. They are tonic, stimulant, and carminative. In the form of a weak infusion, sage is occasionally used as a diluent, and as a wash for sore mouth. Dose, gr. xv. to xxx. or more.

SAL'VIA AFRICA'NA, Wild Sage, a South African species, has the same medical properties as Salvia.

SAL'VIA COLORA'TA, Salvia horminum.

SAL'VIA HORMI'NUM, S. colora'ta, Hormi'num, H. coloratum seu sativum, (F.) Sauge-hormin, of the Pharmacopœias, is used in similar cases to Salvia.

SAL'VIA HORTEN'SIS, Salvia.

SAL'VIA LYRA'TA, Wild Sage, Cancerweed; indigestion. The fresh leaves, bruised, are used to destroy warts. It has been supposed to be of use in cancer.

SAL'VIA MI'NOR, Salvia—s. Officinalis, Salvia.

SAL'VIA SCLA'REA, Scla'rea, Gallitrichum, Æthi'opis, Biser'mas, Co'lus Jo'vis, Com'mon Cla'ry, (F.) Sauge sclarée, Grand sauge, Orvale ou Toutebonne. The leaves have been recommended as corroborants and antispasmodics.

SAL'VIA VI'TÆ, Asplenium ruta muraria—s. Vulgaris, Salvia.

Salz'brunn, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These springs have a reputation in cases of eczema and prurigo. They are in Prussian Silesia, 35 miles S. W. of Breslau.

Samad'ra Indica, Ord. Simarubæ, furnishes the Niepa bark, which is possessed of antiperiodic properties.

Sambal'ba, Curatella sambaiba.

Sambalbin'ha, Davila rugosa.

Sam'bo, see Mulatto. Sambo and Zambo also signify the offspring of the Indian and negro.

Sambu'cus, (from σαμβύκη, an ancient musical instrument, said to have been made of its wood,) Sabu'cus, Sambucus nigra seu vulgaris seu arbo'rea seu Canaden'sis, Ac'té, Infe'lix lig'num, El'der, El'norne, El'lentree, El'larne, (Sc.) Boar'tree, Bore'tree, Boun'tree, (Prov.) Bot'try tree, Bur'tree, El'let, El'ren, Scau, (F.) Sureau commun, Supier. Ord. Caprifoliaceæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. (The flower and bark were formerly called Cano'pum.) The flowers, Sambucus, (Ph. U. S.,) Sambuci Flores, (Ph. B., 1867,) berries, and bark of the elder have been used in medicine. The flowers have been reputed diaphoretic and discutient; the berries, aperient and sudorific; the bark, purgative, and, in small doses, deobstruent.

The flowers are sometimes used in fomentations, and to form a cooling ointment.

SAMBU'CUS ARBO'REA, Sambucus — s. Canadensis, Sambucus — s. Chamaeacte, S. ebulus.

SAMBU'CUS EB'ULUS, S. Chamaeactis seu he'lium seu hu'milis seu herba'cea, Eb'ulus, Chamaeactis, Od'ococ, Dwarfelder, Danewort, (F.) Hibbe, Yèble. The root, interior bark, leaves, flowers, berries, (Baccæ seu Grana Actes), and seeds, have all been given in moderate doses as resolvents and deobstruents; and in large doses as hydragogues.

A distilled water of the flowers, Aqua Sambu'ci, Elder Water, was official in the London and Edinburgh Pharmacopœias.

SAMBU'CUS HE'LION, Sambucus ebulus — s. Herbacea, S. ebulus — s. Humilis, S. ebulus — s. Nigra, Sambucus.

SAMBU'CUS PU'BENS, S. pubescens seu racemo'sa, Redber'ried El'der; indigenous. The bark, in decoction, is said to be a valuable hydragogue cathartic.

SAMBU'CUS RACEMO'SA, S. pubens — s. Vulgaris, Sambucus.

Sa'mi Ter'ra, Sa'mian earth. An argillaceous earth, found in the Island of Samos, to which were ascribed virtues similar to those of the Terra Lemnii.

Sa'mius La'pis, Sa'mian stone. A stone found in the Isle of Samos, which the ancients believed to be astringent and refrigerant.

Sam'phire, Crithmum maritimum.

Samp'son, Black, Echinacea purpurea.

Samp'suchon, (σαμψυχον), Origanum majorana.

Sampsychi'non, (σαμψυχινον), Sampsu'chinum. An ointment composed of σαμψυχον, which was perhaps marjoram.

Samp'sychum, (σαμψυχον), Origanum majorana.

San Giulia'no, Min'eral Wa'ters of. At the foot of the mountain San Giuliano, a league and a half from Pisa, are several mineral springs; temperature from 84° to 107° Fah.

The spring, Pozzetto, contains carbonic acid, sulphates of soda, lime, and magnesia; chlorides of sodium and magnesium; carbonates of lime and magnesia; argil and silica.

Sanab'ilis, (sanare, 'to heal,' and habilis, 'able,') Curable.

Sa'nable, Curable.

Sa'namunda, Geum urbanum.

Sana'tio, (sanare, sanatum, 'to cure,') Curation, Cure.

San'ative, Curative.

Sanguimo'tion, (sanguis, 'blood,' and movere, motum, 'to move,') Circulation.

Sanguimo'tory, Circulatory.

Sanguin (Vaisseau), Bloodvessel.

Sanguina'lis Corrig'iola, (from sanguis, because used to stop blood,) Polygonum aviculare.

Sanguina'ria, (from sanguis, 'blood,' owing to the color of its juice,) S. Canadensis seu acau'lis, Blood'root, Blood'wort, Puccoon, Red Puccoon, Red Root, Indian Paint, Tur'meric. Nat. Ord. Papaveraceæ. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Monogynia. A North American plant, the rhizoma — Sanguinaria (Ph. U. S.) — and seeds of which are used in medicine. They are emetic. Dose of the powder, 8 to 20 grains. They are said to reduce the velocity of the pulse. The active principle is called Sanguinari'na or Sanguin'arine.

SANGUINA'RIA, Polygonum aviculare.

Sanguinari'na. See Sanguinaria.

Sanguin'arine. See Sanguinaria.

Sanguine, Sanguineus, Sanguino'sus, Hæmat'icus, Hæmato'des, Hæmate'rus, Hæmati'nus, Hæmo'des, Hæmo'des, Sanguine'ous, Hæmat'ic, (F.) Hématique, Sanguin, (from sanguis), Bloody, bloodlike, having the color of blood, as 'a sanguine countenance.' Relating to or containing blood. Plethoric.

Sanguin'ea, Potassæ nitras.

San'guineness, Plethora.

Sanguine'ous, Plethoric, Sanguine.

SANGUINEOUS CYSTS. Cysts containing blood, either primarily or from accidental hemorrhage into their cavities.

Sanguin'olent, Sanguinolentus, (sanguis), Tinged with blood. An epithet applied particularly to the sputa when so tinged. Bloody.

Sanguino'sus, Sanguine.

Sanguipur'gium, (sanguis, and purgare, 'to cleanse,') Purgation of the blood. A name given by some authors to mild fevers, from an idea that they purged the blood of noxious matters.

San'guis, gen. San'guinis, Blood, Sperm — s. Concretus, Coagulum — s. Draconis, see Calamus rotang — s. Hirci siccatus, see Blood — s. Menstruus, see Menses — s. in Urinâ, Hæmat'uria — s. Virginis primum menstruatæ, see Menses.

Sanguisor'ba Canaden'sis, Can'ada Burnett, (sanguis, 'blood,' and sorbere, 'to absorb,' so called from its astringency.) A tall indigenous plant, Ord. Rosaceæ, with white, sometimes purple, flowers, which appear from August to October. It has the same virtues as SANGUISOR'BA OFFICINA' LIS, S. car'nea seu ru'bra, Ital'ian Pim'pinel, Pim'pinel'la Ital'ica seu officina'lis, (F.) Pim'prenelle noire. It was formerly used as an astringent and tonic, in hemorrhages, dysentery, &c.

Sanguisu'ga, (sanguis, 'blood,' and sugere, 'to suck,') Hirudo.

Sanguisu'gum. A barbarous term, to denote too great an accumulation of blood in the heart.

San'iole, Sanicula, S. Marilandica — s. American, Heuchera cortusa — s. de Mariland, Sanicula Marilandica — s. Yorkshire, Pinguicola vulgaris.

Sanic'ula, (from sano, 'I heal,') Saxifraga granulata.

SANIC'ULA, S. Europæ'a seu officina'rum seu mas, Astran'tia diapen'sia, Cauca'lis Sanic'ula, Cuculla'ta, Dodeca'theon, Sym'phytum petræ'um, Diapen'sia, D. cortu'sa, San'iole, Wood March, (F.) Toute-saine. Ord. Umbelliferae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. This herb was formerly used as a mild astringent. It is bitterish, and somewhat austere.

SANIC'ULA EBORACEN'SIS, Pinguicola vulgaris — s. Europæa, Sanicula.

SANIC'ULA MARILAN'DICA, San'iole, Ma'ryland San'iole, Black Snake'root, (F.) Sanicle de Mariland. This indigenous plant grows in marshes, or low and shaded ground. It is possessed of tonic virtues, and the powdered root is employed in popular practice as a favorite remedy in intermittent fever. It has been recommended also in chorea.

SANIC'ULA MONTA'NA, Pinguicola vulgaris — s. Officinarium, Sanicula.

Sanido'des, (σανιδωδης, 'resembling a board,' from sanis, gen. sanidos, 'a board,' and odes.) One whose thorax is flat, like a board.

Sanie, Sanies.

Sa'nies, Ichor, Ta'bun, Vi'rus, Pus malignum seu corrosivum, (F.) Sanie, (corr. from sanguis, 'blood,') A thin, serous fluid, presenting some of the qualities of pus and blood, and commonly exhaled at the surface of ulcers.

SANIES GANGRÆNO'SA. The fluid resulting from destruction of tissue, differing according to the structures involved.

Sanieux, Ichorous.

Sanio'sus, Ichorous.

Sa'nious, Ichorous.

Sanitaire, Sanitary.

Sanita'rium, Sanato'rium, (sanitas, 'health,') A retreat selected for valetudinarians in consequence of its salubrity. Also, an establishment for the treatment of the sick. The former would be more properly a Sanita'rium, the latter a Sanato'rium.

San'itary, San'atory, (F.) Sanitaire. That which relates to health, and especially to public health, as 'Sanitary commission.'

San'itas, (sanus, 'healthy,') Hygie'a, Hyge'a, Hygian'sis, Hygi'asis, Integ'ritas, Prosper'itas, Valetu'dinis, Sa'lus, Hygie'i'a, Valetu'do, Valitu'do, Valetu'do bo'na seu secun'da seu com'moda, Hyge'i'a, Euzoödyna'mia, Health, (Sc.) Heil, Heyle, Heal, (F.) Sané, (from sanus, 'sound,') Health has been defined — a state in which all the functions are exerted with regularity and harmony. A person may, however, be in health although certain functions are not performed. A blind man, for example, has health when all his functions except sight proceed with regularity. Sanity is often used for soundness of mind. See also Cure.

San'ity, Sanitas.

Sankira, Smilax China.

Sans Paire, 'pairless,' see Azygos vein.

San'ta Cruz, Climate of. This West India island is frequently selected as a winter retreat for the physical valetudinarian from the United States, but it does not seem entitled to any preference, in such cases, over the other islands of the West Indies, while its general salubrity is said to be less than that of many.

Santal Blanc, Santalum album — s. Rouge, Pterocarpus santalinus.

San'talum, see Pterocarpus santalinus.

SAN'TALUM AL'BUM, S. citrinum seu pal'lidum seu myrtifo'lium, Sir'ium myrtifo'lium, Yel'low and White Saun'ders, (F.) Santal blanc. Ord. Santalaceæ. Sex. Syst. Tetrandria Monogynia. White sandal wood is the young timber, yellow sandal wood the old. The virtues of the wood of the white saunders reside in a volatile oil and resinous principle. The odor is fragrant and resembles a mixture of ambergris and roses. It has been used as a stimulant and sudorific, but is not now employed. The oil has been given, with advantage, in gonorrhœa, in the dose of 20 to 40 minims, three times a day. The saunders woods are called, collectively, in French, Santaux.

SAN'TALUM MYRTIFO'LIUM, S. album — s. Rubrum, Pterocarpus santalinus.

Santé, Sanitas.

Santon'ica, see Artemisia santonica.

Santon'icum, (from Santonica, its native place,) Artemisia santonica.

San'tonine, Santoni'num, (Ph. U. S.,) San'tonin, C'inin. A peculiar crystalline substance obtained from Artemisia Santonica. It is directed, in the Ph. U. S. for 1873, to be prepared by digesting santonica, lime, and alcohol together, and expressing; distilling off the alcohol and evaporating; adding acetic acid until in slight excess; washing the resulting crystalline mass, and drying it; boiling the dry residue with alcohol; and, having digested the tincture for several hours with animal charcoal, filtering, and setting aside to crystallize. Santonine possesses the anthelmintic properties of the plant. Dose, five or six grains.

Santori'ni, Car'tilages of, Corniculum laryngis.

SANTORI'NI, Fis'sures of, Incisuræ Santori'ni, (F.) Incisures ou Scissures de Santorini, (after the Italian anatomist.) Clefts at the upper and back of the fibrocartilaginous portion of the external ear.

SANTORI'NI, Tu'bercles of. Small cartilaginous projections at the top of the arytenoid cartilages, which support the ligaments of the glottis. See Corniculum laryngis.

Sanvé, Sinapis.

Sao'ria, Sauar'ja, Saua'ri, (a Guiana name.) The ripe and dried fruit of Mae'ra seu Brob'otrys pic'ta, an Abyssinian tree, which is administered in its native country, in powder, in doses of from 32 to 44 grammes, as a tæniacuge.

Sap, ([Sax.] ræp, [G.] saft,) Ar'borum Suc'cus seu Lym'pha, (F.) Sève. The circulating fluid of the vegetable, which corresponds to the blood of the animal.

Sa'pa, see Rob.

Sapha'da. Paracelsus has given this name to reddish scales adherent to the hair in some eruptions of the hairy scalp.

Saphæ'na, Saphena.

Sapha'tum, Asaphatum.

Saphè'na, Saphæ'na, (σαφης, 'manifest,' 'evident,') (F.) Saphène. A name given to two subcutaneous veins of the lower limb, Saphè'nous veins. These are: 1. The GREAT SAPHÈ'NA VEIN, S. inter'na, Tibiomalle'olar (Ch.), (F.) Grande Veine Saphène ou Saphène interne. Its radicles occupy the inner part of the great toe, and form a transverse arch on the back of the foot, which unites with the saphena externa, and receives at its convex part, which is turned forwards, a number of branches, coming from the toes. These radicles, when united, ascend before the inner ankle, and form a trunk, the size of which is farther increased by several branches that proceed from the region of the tarsus and that of the metatarsus. This trunk ascends vertically at the inner part of the leg; passes behind the inner condyle of the femur; proceeds along the inner part of the thigh; receives other subcutaneous veins, such as the abdominal subcutaneous, the external pudic, &c., and passes through the inferior opening of the crural canal to empty itself into the femoral vein. 2. The LESSER VE'NA SAPHÈ'NA, Saphè'na exter'na, Perone'omalle'olar Vein of Chaussier, (F.) Petite Veine Saphène ou Saphène externe, commences by several roots, which are spread over the dorsum and outer side of the foot, and embrace the outer ankle. Behind this, they unite into a single trunk, which ascends obliquely, approaching the tendo Achillis, and proceeds vertically towards the ham to open into the popliteal vein.

Saphène, Saphena.

Saphe'nous, Saphenous, (from saphena.) Of or belonging to the saphena.

SAPHE'NOUS NERVES are two in number, and are branches of the crural or femoral nerve. They are the short saphenous—ner'vus cuta'neus inter'nus; and the long saphenous—ner'vus cuta'neus inter'nus lon'gus.

The external saphenous, formed by the union of the communicans poplitei and communicans peronei, passes down the leg by the side of the external saphenous vein of the foot.

SAPHE'NOUS O'PENING. An oval and somewhat oblique opening in the fascia lata, a little below Poupert's ligament, for the transmission of the principal superficial vessels. Here, likewise, femoral hernia descends.

SAPHE'NOUS VEINS, see Saphena.

Sap'id, Sap'orous, Sap'idus, (F.) Savoureux, (sapere, 'to taste.') Possessed of sapidity. Having the power of affecting the organs of taste.

Sap'id'ity, Sap'idness, Sap'orous'ity, Sap'or, (F.) Sap'idité. The quality of bodies that gives them taste.

Sapin Commun, ([L.] Sapinus.) Pinus picea. Sapin'dus, (sapo, and Indus, 'Indian soap,') S. Saponaria, Saponaria, Soap'tree, (F.) Savonnier commun. Ord. Sapindaceæ. The name of the plant that affords the Soapnuts, Saponariae Nu'culæ, Bac'cæ Bermuden'ses, Soapberries. A spherical fruit about the size of a cherry, the cortical part of which is yellow, glossy, and so transparent as to show the spherical black nut that rattles within, and includes a white kernel. The cortical part of this fruit, which has similar effects with soap in washing, has been recommended in chlorosis, and as a stomachic and deobstruent.

Sapinette, see Cerevisia.

Sa'po, gen. Sapo'nis, (σαπων, [Sax.] rape.) Smegma, (F.) Savon. A product obtained by treating fatty bodies with caustic alkalies dissolved in water. In the Pharmacopœia of the United States, (1873,) it means Soap made with soda and olive oil. See Sapo medicinalis.

YEL'LOW SOAP is formed of turpentine, oil, and alkali. A soap of subcarbonate of potassa and oil of turpentine—Sapo terebin'thinæ—was formerly used for indolent swellings, under the name of Starkey's soap.

Castile Soap, being made of fine olive oil, is the kind generally selected for internal use. The yellow and soft soaps are the most stimulating; and are, consequently, best adapted for particular cutaneous eruptions.

Internally, soap is purgative and diuretic; externally, it is detergent and stimulant. Soapy water is used with the greatest success in cases of poisoning by acids. It is mostly applied externally to bruises and sprains. In Pharmacy, it is used to favor the solution of resins.

SA'PO AC'IDUS, Ac'id Soap, is a combination of a fixed oil with an acid.

SA'PO AMMONIACA'LIS, Linimentum ammoniæ fortius—s. Ammoniæ oleaceus, Linimentum ammoniæ fortius—s. Amygdalinus, Sapo medicinalis—s. Cacaotinus, Sapo coconeus—s. Calcarius, Linimentum aquæ calcis—s. Castiliensis, see Sapo medicinalis.

SA'PO COCO'NEUS, Sapo cacaoti'nis, Soap of Cocoa'nut Oil, (F.) Savon de cacao, has been much used in Germany in herpetic affections.

SA'PO DU'RUS, S. medicinalis.

SA'PO GUAIACI'NUS, Soap of Guaiac. A soap made from guaiacum and liquor potassæ, officinal in some of the European pharmacopœias.

SA'PO HISPAN'ICUS, see S. medicinalis—s. Kalicus, S. mollis.

SA'PO LIQ'UIDUS, Liq'uid soap, Lo'tio saponacea, is a cosmetic, which is composed of Olive oil, $\frac{3}{4}$ iv., Ol. tartari per deliquium, $\frac{3}{4}$ ss. Rub together, and add Aq. rosarum, $\frac{3}{4}$ xij.

SA'PO MEDICINA'LIS, Sa'po amygdali'nis, Medic'inal soap, (F.) Savon médicinal ou amygdalin, is made of oil of sweet almonds and half its weight of caustic alkali, or, like the Sapo Hispan'icus seu Castilien'sis, Span'ish or Castile soap, Sapo durus, Sapo, (Ph. U. S.,) (F.) Savon dur, of olive oil and soda.

SA'PO MOL'LIS, S. vir'idis seu ni'ger seu ka'licus, Com'mon or Soft soap, (F.) Savon mou ou noir, is made of potassa and oil or tallow. The Sapo vulga'ris or 'common soap,' formerly in the Ph. U. S., was made of soda and animal oil.

SA'PO NI'GER, Black soap, Melanosmeg'ma, is a composition of train oil and an alkali: and GREEN SOAP, Sa'po vir'idis, of hempseed oil, linseed oil, or rape oil, with an alkali. See Sapo mollis.

SA'PO TEREBIN'THINÆ, see Sapo—s. Vegetabilis, Pulvis gummosus alkalinus—s. Viridis, Sapo mollis—s. Vulgaris, see Sapo mollis.

Sapona'ceous, Sapona'ceus, (F.) Saponacé, (from sapo.) Soapy. Containing soap, as Linimentum saponaceum, Soap liniment.

Saponaire, Saponaria.

Sapona'ria, (from sapo,—the juice forming a lather with water,) S. officina'lis, Soapwort, Bruisewort, Boune'ing Bet, Stru'thium, Lana'ria, Lych'nis officina'lis seu sylves'tris, Ibix'uma, Boot'ia vulga'ris, (F.) Saponaire, Savonnère. Ord. Caryophyllaceæ. Sex. Syst. Decandria Digynia. A decoction of the leaves of this plant has been recommended in scrofula, cancer, old syphilis, cutaneous eruptions, jaundice, visceral obstructions, &c. It is hardly ever used. See also Sapindus saponaria.

Sapona'riæ Nu'culæ, see Sapindus saponaria.

Saponé. Soap, to which are added substances capable of communicating to it new properties, without affecting its own.

Sapo'nea. A pectoral medicine, prepared with sweetened syrup of violets and oil of sweet almonds.

Saponifica'tion, Saponifica'tio, (sapo, and facere, 'to make.') The formation of soap. When a putrefying corpse is exposed to water, or is placed in very damp soil, it may undergo a process of saponification, the fatty acids combining with the ammonia, and forming adipocire.

Sa'ponin, (from sapo.) A glucoside occurring in Soapwort and the root of Polygala senega; a solution of which, in water, froths like soap.

Saponulé. A tincture (alcoolé), sufficiently charged with soap to cause it to assume a gelatinous shape.

Sap'onules, Sapon'uli, (F.) Savonules. Imperfect soaps formed by combinations of volatile or essential oils with different bases. See Opo- deldoch. Ac'id Sap'onules are combinations of such oils with different acids.

Saponure. A medicine, formed of soap, in powder, and of resinous or extractive matters.

Sa'por, Sapidity, Savor.

Sapores'ity, Sapidity.

Sa'porous, Sapid.

Sapo'ta, S. A'chras, A'chras sapo'ta seu australis seu zapo'ta, El nispero, Ovalfruted Sapota, (F.) Sapotier, Sapotillier, Sapotilla. Fam. Sapotaceæ. Sex. Syst. Hexandria Digynia. A tree which grows in the Antilles, and particularly at St. Domingo. Its fruit is much esteemed. It resembles the marmalade of quinces; and hence has been called natural marmalade. The seeds make an emulsion, which has been given in nephritic affections. The bark has been recommended as a febrifuge.

Sapo'ta A'chras, Sapota — s. Mulleri, see Bulata.

Sapotier, Sapota.

Sapotil'la, Sapota.

Sapotillier, Sapota.

Saprop'ya, (σαπρος, 'putrid,' and πυρ, 'fever,') Typhus gravior.

Sa'pros, (σαπρος,) Putrid, Rancid.

Sapros'tomus, (sapros, and στομα, 'mouth,') One who has an offensive breath.

Sap'rotes, Putrefaction.

Sar'apus, Sar'apous, (σαπω, 'I grin,' and πους, 'the foot,') One who has a large foot; whose toes are largely separated, or whose feet are much asunder in walking. See Kyllosis.

Sarato'ga, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The Saratoga Springs in New York are ten miles north-east from Ballston. They are much frequented by visitors from every part of the United States. These excellent waters are, as a class, applicable to cases of dyspepsia associated with visceral engorgement, chronic congestion of the liver, biliary catarrh, jaundice, &c.; but, as they differ in composition, it is impossible to state explicitly to what special affections they are universally applicable.

The number of springs now grouped under the general head of Saratoga waters is quite large. At one time, the Congress Spring was the only one which had an extended reputation, but of late years, other waters in this interesting locality have also come into favor. The Columbian, Hamilton, Pavilion, Empire, Washington or Clarendon or White, Putnam, Barrel, Saratoga, and Eureka, are carbonated salines, differing in the proportion of their constituents; some being markedly chalybeate. The High Rock, Seltzer, and Reed's Spring, near Saratoga, are almost simple carbonated waters. The Geyser Spring, as will be seen by the table, is more aperient than the Congress water, and the same may be said of the Hathorn water. In addition to these, are the Star Spring, the United States, and several others of less note. There is also a White Sulphur Spring on the east side of Saratoga Lake.

The carefully prepared table on the ensuing page, from the work of Dr. George E. Walton on 'The Mineral Springs of the United States and Canada, &c.,' N. Y., 1873, p. 169, gives the composition of all the principal springs at Saratoga or in its immediate vicinity.

Sar'entome, (sarco, εν, 'in,' and τομη, 'incision,') En'tome. A modified form of scarificator for stricture of the urethra.

Sarcepiploce'lê, Sarcoëpiplocele.

Sarcepiplom'phalocelê, Sarcoëpiplomphalocelê.

Sarcepiplom'phalus, Sarcoëpiplomphalus.

Sarcoux, Sarcous.

Sarcid'ium, (σαρκιδιον, dim. of σαρξ, 'flesh,') Caruncle.

Sar'cin, Sarcosin.

Sar'cina, 'a pack, a burden,' Fœtus.

SAR'CINA VENTRIC'ULI, S. Goodsir'ii, Merismo-pœ'dia ventric'uli (Robin). A microscopic cryptogamous plant, found in the fluid of water-brash. See Parasites.

Sar'cion, (σαρκιον,) Caruncle.

Sarci'tes, (from σαρξ, 'flesh,') Anasarca — s. Flatusus, Emphysema.

Sarci'tis, (σαρξ, 'flesh,' and itis,) Myositis.

Sar'co, (σαρξ, gen. σαρκος, 'flesh,') In composition, flesh.

Sarcoce'lê, Sar'cocele, Her'nia carno'sa, Scir'rhus testic'uli, (sarco, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Sarco'ma scro'ti, (F.) Hernie charnue. Scirrhus or cancer of the testicle. Can'cer of the testicle, Carcino'ma testic'uli. It has also been called Malignant Sarcocele; as Cystic disease of the testicle, Mor'bus testiculi cysticus, has been termed Cystic sarcocele. This disease affects adults particularly; and appears most commonly after an inflammatory swelling of the testicle. Sometimes it is dependent upon a blow; at others, it makes its appearance without any appreciable cause. It is well known by a hard, heavy, ovoid or spherical swelling of the testicle, which is, at first, slightly or not at all painful, and merely causes an unpleasant traction on the spermatic cord. There is no heat or change of color of the skin; the spermatic cord is swollen, and participates in the affection; very painful shootings occur; the lymphatic glands of the abdomen become swollen, and form a tumor, which may, at times, be felt through the abdomen; and the patient, at length, dies with every sign of the cancerous diathesis. The prognosis is very unfavorable. The only means, indeed, that can save life is the extirpation of the testicle.

When of syphilitic origin, sarcocele is called Syphilitic sarcocele, Mor'bus syphiliticus testic'uli. Tuberculous disease of the testicle has received the name Tuberculous sar'cocele, Mor'bus testic'uli tuberculo'sus.

SAR'COCELE, Cys'tic, see Sarcocele — s. Malignant, see Sarcocele — s. Syphilitic, see Sarcocele — s. Tuberculous, see Sarcocele.

Sarcocol'la, (F.) Colle-chair, (σαρκοκωλλα, from sarco, and κωλλα, 'glue,') A resinous matter obtained from Penæ'a sarcocol'la, P. mucronata, and other species of Penæa, an African shrub, which has been so called from a belief that it facilitates the consolidation of flesh. It is in the form of small, oblong, semitransparent globules, of a yellowish or reddish hue, and smells like aniseed. It was once employed as an astringent and detergent.

Sarcocop'tes, (sarco, and κοπτω, 'I wound,') see Psora.

Sar'code, (from sarco.) One of the secondary forms of the primordial blastema, characterized by the development of certain vital properties, rather than by any appreciable peculiarity of structure. In some of the inferior animals, this amorphous, homogeneous substance, devoid of apparent structure, constitutes the greater portion, and even the whole of the animal, as in the Hydra. The term has been applied to the contents of cells, as of the cells of nutrition, epithelial cells, &c. See Cytoblastema.

Sarco'des, (from σαρξ, 'flesh,' and οδης,) Caruncous.

Sarcod'ic, Sarcod'icus, (F.) Sarcodique. Relating or appertaining to sarcode, as Sarcodic movement, (F.) Mouvement sarcodique.

Sarcod'ic Sub'stance, Sarcode.

Sarcoëpiploce'lê, Sarcepiploce'lê, (sarco, επιπλοον, 'the epiploon,' and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Epiplocele, complicated with sarcoma or sarcocele.

Sarcoëpiplom'phalus, Sarcepiplom'phalus, Sarcepiplomphaloc'e'lē, (sarco, ἐπιπλῶν, 'the epiploon,' and ομφαλός, 'the navel.') Umbilical hernia, formed by scirrhus epiploon or complicated with sarcoma.

Sarcohydroce'lē, Hydrosarcocele.

Sar'coid, Sarcoi'des, (σαρκώδης, from sarco, and αἶδος, 'resemblance.') Resembling flesh.

Sarcolem'ma, gen. Sarcolem'matis, Sarcolem'ma, (sarco, and λεῖμα, 'a coat.') The sheath which surrounds the fibrils of muscle that form a fibre. It is quite distinct from the areolar membrane that binds the fibres into fasciculi.

Sarcolog'ia, (sarco, and λόγος, 'a discourse,') Myology, Sarcology.

Sarcology, Sarcolog'ia. The part of anatomy which treats of the soft parts. It comprises myology, angiology, neurology, and splanchnology.

Sarco'ma, gen. Sarco'matis, (σάρκωμα,) Emphy'ma Sarco'ma, Sarcom'atous Tu'mor, Histioid Growth or Tu'mor, Sarco'sis, Sarcophy'iā, Ecsarco'ma, Exsarco'ma, Tu'mor car'neus, Excrescen'tia car'no'sa, Pol'yypus car'no'sus, (σὰρξ, 'flesh,' and ομα.) Literally, any species of excrecence having a fleshy consistence. The term has, however, of late years, been employed, especially by Virchow and other German pathologists, to embrace a group of tumors, 'the tissues forming which belong to the series of connective substances, but which are distinguished from the tumors formed of the connective tissues by the preponderating development of the cell-elements.' The tissue of granulations formed during the inflammatory irritation of the connective tissue is regarded as the normal prototype of these tumors. (Paget.) Numerous morbid growths, malignant and non-malignant, varying in structure, location, consistence, &c., are vaguely classed under this head.

According to Paget, the following varieties have been described:—

1. Tumors with spindle-shaped cells, the fibroplastic cells of Lebert (Spindel-zellen sarcoma, Recurrent fibroid tumors, Fibroplastic tumors). This form of sarcoma is also called Fasciculated or Albuminous sarcoma, and Plasmoma.

2. Tumors with colossal, giant, many-nucleated, or myeloid cells (Riesen-zellen sarcoma, Myeloid or Myeloplaxic tumors).

3. Tumors with small round cells like the lymph or white blood-corpuscles, or pus, or granulation cells (Rund-zellen sarcoma, Granulations sarcoma, Gliosarcoma, Lymphosarcoma). This form of sarcoma is known also as the Embryoplastic tumor, Soft, Medullary, Glious, Lymphoid or Encephaloid sarcoma.

4. Tumors with stellate cells, and a gelatinous, shiny, intercellular substance, not unlike the material found in a myxoma (Myxosarcoma).

5. Tumors with round or variously-shaped cells, most of which are of large size, and are usually imbedded in a fibrous matrix. In structure no well-defined character distinguishes these tumors from Carcinoma.

6. Tumors in which the cells contain a considerable proportion of pigment, which is most frequently found in the cells described in the last group, in the tumors with round and with fusiform cells (Pigment or Pigmentary sarcoma, Melanoma, Melanotic sarcoma).

In all these forms, according to the same authority, an intercellular substance occurs, which may be either homogeneous or fibrous, or which may present a delicate, net-like or trabecular structure, such as is found in a lymphatic gland.

SARCO'MA, AD'POSE, OF ABERNETHY, see Adipose sarcoma.

SARCO'MA ALVEOLA'RE, S. Medulla're seu Carcinomatodes. A form of round-celled sarcoma, being a carcinomatous degeneration of the sarcoma, usually occurring in the medulla of bone, in the eye, and subcutaneous tissues.

SARCO'MA CARCINOMATO'DES, S. alveolare, Scirrhus — s. Cercosis, see Cercosis.

SARCO'MA, COM'MON VAS'CLAR OR ORGANIZED OF ABERNETHY, Emphy'ma Sarco'ma Vasculo'sum. Under this head, Abernethy included all those tumors which appeared to be composed of the gelatinous portion of the blood, made vascular by the growth of bloodvessels through it. They are vascular throughout; of simple texture; when bulky, napped on the surface with arborescent veins.

SARCO'MA EPU'LIS, Epulis — s. Fibrocellulare, see Tumor, fibrocellular — s. Gelatinous, see Tumor, fibrocellular — s. Glandular, Hodgkin's disease.

SARCO'MA GLOB'ULO-CELLULA'RE SIM'PLEX. The granulation-like round-celled variety of sarcoma.

SARCO'MA LIPOMATO'DES, see Sarcoma lymphadenoides — s. Lipomatous, see Sarcoma lymphadenoides.

SARCO'MA LYMPHADENOÏ'DES, S. molle. The lymphatic, gland-like, round-celled form of sarcoma. In Lipomatous sarcoma, S. lipomatodes, which is one variety of this, a partial transformation into fat-cells takes place by the infiltration of fat; while in Mucous sarcoma, S. myxomatodes, another variety, a mucoid metamorphosis of the basis-substance occurs.

SARCO'MA, MAS'TOID, Mammary sarcoma — s. Medullare or Medullary, see Sarcoma alveolare, Encephaloid, Hæmatodes fungus — s. Molle, Sarcoma lymphadenoides — s. Mucous, see Sarcoma lymphadenoides — s. Myxomatodes, see Sarcoma lymphadenoides — s. Pulpary, Hæmatodes fungus — s. Scroti, Sarcocele.

(For other forms of Sarcoma, see Sarcoma.)

Sarcomateux, Sarcomatous.

Sarcomato'des, Sarcomatous.

Sarcomato'sus, Sarcomatous.

Sarcom'atous, Sarcomato'sus, Sarcomato'des, (F.) Sarcomateux. Belonging to, or having the characters of, sarcoma.

Sarcom'phalum, (σάρκομαλον,) Sarcomphalus.

Sarcom'phalus, Sarcom'phalum, (sarco, and ομφαλός, 'navel.') A scirrhus or fleshy tumor, developed at the navel.

Sarcom'yces, (sarco, and μύκης, 'fungus,') Sarcospongius.

Sarcoph'agus, (σάρκοφαγος, from sarco, and φαγῶ, 'I eat,') Carnivorous, Catheretic.

Sarcophy'ia, (sarco, and φυῶ, 'I grow,') Excrecence, Sarcoma, see Sarcophyte.

Sar'cophyte, (sarco, and φυτῶν, 'a vegetable,') Sarcophyton, Flesh germ. A term proposed by Dr. C. J. B. Williams as synonymous with bioplast, the former, however, expressing the condition and destination of a white cell, leucocyte; the latter its vital and formative properties.

Sarcopsyl'la Pen'etrans, (sarco, and ψύλλα, 'a flea,') Chique.

Sarcopte, Acarus.

Sarcop'tes Sca'biei, (sarco, and κῶπτις, 'I wound,') see Psora, and Parasites.

Sarcopy'o'des, (sarco, πύον, 'pus,' and οδῶς.) Having the appearance of pus mixed with flesh. An epithet given to certain excreted matters, and particularly to the sputa of those laboring under consumption.

Sar'cosin, (from sarco,) Sar'cin, Hypoxanthin. An extractive matter found in the flesh and in the blood.

Sarco'sis, (σαρκωσις, from σὰρξ, gen. σαρκος, 'flesh,' and οσις.) The formation of flesh. Also, sarcoma. SARCO'SIS BUL'BI, Exophthal'mia fungo'sa seu sarcomat'ica. A fleshy growth from the globe of the eye.

SARCO'SIS U'TERI, Metrauxie.

Sarcospon'gus, Sarcom'ycēs, (sarco, and σπῆγος, 'fungus.') A fleshy fungus.

Sarcosto'sis, (sarco, and ostosis, 'formation of bone,') Osteosarcoma.

Sarcoth'lasis, Sarcothlas'ma, (sarco, and θλάω, 'I bruise,') Cu'ro contu'sa. A bruise of the flesh.

Sarcot'ic, (σάρκωτικός,) Incarnans.

Sarcotripteur, (sarco, and τριβω, 'I rub down,') Écraseur.

Sarcotripsie, see Écraseur.

Sar'cous, (F.) Sarceux, (from σάρξ, gen. σαρκος, 'flesh,') Of or belonging to flesh or muscle—as 'sarceous tissue.'

SAR'COUS EL'EMENTS, Prim'itive par'ticles. The elementary particles which, by their union, form the mass of muscular fibre. Under high powers of the microscope, the muscular fibrils seem to consist of alternate rectangular light and dark particles. These are the sarceous elements of Mr. Bowman, which he considers to result from a splitting transversely of the muscular fibre into disks—Bowman's disks—and lengthwise into fibrillæ. Brücke has described the dark particles as refracting light doubly,—hence called disdiaclasts,—while the others are only singly refractile.

Sardi'asis, (from Σαρδῶ, Sardinia, because the Sardonia herba, which grew there, was said to produce it,) Canine laugh, Risus sardonius.

Sardo'nia Her'ba, Ranunculus sceleratus.

Sardon'i'asis, (same etymon as Sardiasis,) Canine laugh, Risus sardonius.

Sardo'nus Ri'sus, Canine laugh.

Sare, Essera.

Sarotham'nus Scopari'us, (σάρος, 'a broom,' and σάρος, 'a shrub,') Spartium scoparium.

Sarrace'nia, (after Dr. Sarrasin, of Quebec,) Sidesaddle plant, Fly'trap, (F.) Sarracénie. The root of Sarracenia flava and S. variolaris is bitter and astringent, and has been used in South Carolina as a domestic remedy in dyspepsia. The root of Sarracenia purpurea or pitcher plant, Indian or Huntsman's cap, is used, in infusion, by the Indians of the North, as a remedy for small-pox; both in the way of prevention and cure.

Sarrasin, (after the Saracens,) Polygonum fagopyrum.

Sarrête, Trismus infantum.

Sarriette, Satureia hortensis—s. do Crête, Satureia capitata.

Sar'sa, Smilax sarsaparilla.

Sar'se Ra'dix, Smilax sarsaparilla.

Sarsaparil'la, ([S.] Zarza, 'a brier,' and parilla, 'a little vine,' or, according to some, from Parillo, a physician who first employed it.) Menispermum Canadense, Smilax sarsaparilla.

SARSAPARIL'LA, FALSE, Aralia nudicaulis.

SARSAPARIL'LA GERMAN'ICA, Gra'men ma'jor seu ru'brum, Salsaparil'la German'ica, Ca'rex Arena'ria, (F.) Laiche, L. des Sables, Salsepareille d'Allemagne, Chiendent rouge. Ord. Cyperaceæ. Sex. Syst. Monœcia Triandria. A plant, which grows plentifully on the seacoasts of Europe. It has been recommended in some mucous affections of the trachea, in rheumatism, gout, &c.

SARSAPARIL'LA IN'DIAN, Hemidesmus Indicus—s. Wild, Aralia nudicaulis.

Sarsaparil'lin, see Smilax sarsaparilla.

Sartaparil'la, Smilax sarsaparilla.

Sarto'rius, (sartor, 'a tailor,' because used in crossing the legs.) Suto'rius, Longis'sinus Fem'oris, Fascia'lis, F. Lon'gus seu suto'rius, (F.) Rio-cresti-tibial, Rio-pré-tibial (Ch.), Couturier. A muscle situate at the anterior part of the thigh. It is long, small, and flattened, and extends, obliquely, from the anterior and superior spine of the ilium to the superior and inner part of the tibia. This muscle can, also, bend the pelvis on the thigh, and conversely.

Sarx, (σάρξ, gen. σαρκος,) Flesh, Pulp.

Sar'za, ([S.] sarza, 'a brier,') Smilax sarsaparilla.

Sas'sa Gum. A gum, occasionally carried into the European markets from the East, and answering exactly to Bruce's description of the product of a tree which he calls Sassa. It has considerable resemblance to gum tragacanth.

Sas'safras, Laurus sassafras, Nectandra cymbarum—s. Medulla, see Laurus sassafras—s. Nut, see Pichurim beans—s. Radix cortex, see Laurus sassafras—s. Radix, see Laurus sassafras—s. Swamp, Magnolia glauca—s. Tea, Sa-loop.

Sas'sy Bark. A poisonous bark of a large tree—Genus, Erythrophle'um, E. Guineen'sē; Nat. Ord. Fabaceæ; Redwater tree of Sierra Leone—growing in Western and Central Africa, used in an ordeal to which persons suspected of witchcraft, secret murder, and other crimes are subjected, to test their innocence or guilt. Hence it is called, in Congo, ordeal bark, and in Ashantee and Liberia, doom bark.

Sat'ellite, Satell'les, gen. Satell'itis. That which guards. That which is placed near.

SAT'ELLITE VEINS are those that accompany arteries.

Sa'the, (σαθῆ,) Penis.

Sa'tias, Satiety.

Sa'ties, Satiety.

Sati'etas, Plesmone, Satiety.

Sati'ety, Sati'etas, Satu'ritas, Sa'tias, Sa'ties, Satura'tio, A'sē, Ple'thos, Ples'monē, (satiare, from satis, 'enough,' 'to give enough,') Disgust for food; commonly produced by repletion.

Sat'in, Lunaria rediviva.

Sat'urans, (saturare, saturatum,—satis, 'enough,'—'to satiate,') Absorbent (medicine).

Satura'tio, Satiety, Saturation.

Satura'tion, Satura'tio. The state of a compound in which its elements are combined in such proportion that a fresh quantity of either cannot be added without producing excess. When an acid or an alkali is directed to be saturated, the saturation is determined by litmus and turmeric.

Saturei'a Capita'ta, (from Σαῦρος, 'the Satyrs,' owing to its presumed power of exciting to venery,) Cil'iated Sa'vory, Thy'mus, T. sylvestris seu capita'tus seu Cre'ticus, Cuni'la, (F.) Sarriette de Crête. Ord. Labiatæ. Sex. Syst. Didynamia Gymnospermia. Possesses similar properties to thyme.

SATUREI'A HORTEN'SIS, Saturei'a, S. sati'va, Cuni'la sati'va Plin'ii, Thym'bra, Sum'mer Sa'vory, (F.) Sarriette. An aromatic plant, cultivated for culinary purposes. It has been used, as an excitant, in anorexia, anaphrodisia, &c.

SATUREI'A ORIGANO'DES, Cunila mariana—s. Sativa, S. hortensis.

Satu'ritas, (saturare, 'to satiate,') Satiety.

Satur'ni Dulce'do, Plumbi superacetas.

Sat'urnine, Saturni'nus, (from saturnus,) Relating or appertaining to lead.

SAT'URNINE BREATH. The peculiar odor of the breath in one laboring under Saturnism.

Saturnis'mus, Intoxica'tio seu Cachex'ia seu Dyscrasia saturni'na, Molybdocachex'ia, (F.) Maladie de plomb, (from saturnus,) Poisoning by lead; lead-poisoning; saturnine cachexy.

Satur'nus, Plumbum.

Satyr'ia, Elephantiasis.

Satyr'i'asis, (σατυρίασις, from Σαῦρος, 'a Satyr,' because the Satyrs were greatly addicted to venery,) S. fu'rens, Satyr'ias'mus, Satyr'is'mus, Estroma'nia, Tenti'go vene'rea, Salac'itas, Brachu'na, Lagne'sis Salac'itas, L. fu'ror masculi'nus, Lagne'a, Lagni'a, Lagno'sis, Lasciv'ia, Lasciv'itas, Tenti'go vere'tri. An irresistible desire, in man, to have frequent connection with the female, accompanied by the power of doing so without exhaustion. The causes are commonly obscure. Sometimes, the abuse of aphrodisiacs has occasioned it. The principal symptoms are:—almost constant erection; irresistible and almost insatiable desire for venery; frequent nocturnal pollutions. Cold lotions; the cold bath; a mild diet; active exercise, &c., are the only means that can be adopted for its removal.

SATYRIASIS FU'RENS, Satyriasis.

Satyriasmus, Satyriasis.

Satyrion, (σατυριον.) Orchis mascula.

Satyris'mus, (σατυρισμος.) Satyriasis.

Satyr'ium, Goodyera pubescens.

Sauar'ja, Saoria.

Sauce Alone', Alliaria.

Sauce, Green, Rumex scutatus.

Sauch, ([Sax.] raih.) Salix.

Sau'erkraut (G.), 'sour cabbage,' Sourcraut, (F.) Chou-croûte. A culinary preparation, made with chopped cabbage, left to attain an incipient state of acetous fermentation. It is reputed, by the Germans especially, to be wholesome, easy of digestion, and eminently antiscorbutic.

Sauge, Salvia—s. des Bois, Teucrium scordium—s. Grande, Salvia sclarea—s. Hormin, Salvia horminum—s. de Jérusalem, Pulmonaria—s. Petite, Salvia—s. Sclarrée, Salvia sclarea.

Saugh, ([Sax.] raih.) Salix.

Saute, Salix.

Saumure, (from sal, and muria.) Muria.

Saun'ders, Red, Pterocarpus santalinus—s. Tree, Pterocarpus santalinus—s. Yellow, Santalum album.

Sau'ra, (σαυρα.) Lizard.

Saurider'ma, (saura, and derma.) Sauriosis.

Saurioi'des, Sauriosis.

Saurio'sis, Saurioi'des, Sauroder'ma, Saurider'ma, (saura, and osis.) The condition of ichthyosis with an altered state of the sebiparous secretion, which gives occasion to an accumulation of sebaceous matter on the skin, suggesting the idea of the coat of a lizard.

Sauroder'ma, (saura, and derma.) Sauriosis.

Saur'rus Cer'nuus, (saura, 'lizard,' and cupa, 'a tail,') Lizard's Tail, Breast weed. Indigenous; Ord. Saururaceæ; flowering in June. It has been used in lumbago. The bruised root is emollient, and is a popular application to inflamed breasts.

Saus'age Poi'son, Allantotoxium.

Saut, ([L.] saltus.) Leap.

Sauteuses, 'leapers,' see Convulsionnaire.

Sauve-rie, 'save life,' Asplenium ruta muraria.

Savanil'la Ratan'hy, see Krameria Ixina.

Save, Salvia.

Saveur, Savor.

Sa'vian Cor'puscles. Corpuscles, described by Savi in the skin of the torpedo, analogous to the Pacinian corpuscles.

Sav'ine, Juniperus sabina.

Savinier, Juniperus sabina.

Savon, Sapo—s. Ammoniacal, Linimentum ammoniac fortius—s. Amygdalin, Sapo medicinalis—s. Animal, Sapo—s. Cacao, Sapo coconeus—s. Calcaire, Linimentum aquæ calcis—s. Dur, Sapo durus—s. Médicinal ou Médical, Sapo medicinalis—s. Mou, Sapo mollis—s. Noir, Sapo mollis.

Savonnier Commun, (from savon.) Sapindus saponaria.

Savannière, Saponaria.

Savonulus, Saponulus.

Sa'vor, Sa'por, Taste, (F.) Saveur. Quality of bodies, by which they act upon the sense of taste. Chemists, at times, avail themselves of this quality to analyze an unknown substance.

Sa'vory, Sap'idus, (F.) Savoureux. An epithet given to bodies that have taste; and particularly to those that excite a very agreeable impression on the organ of taste.

SA'VORY, CIL'LATED, Satureia capitata—s. Summer, Satureia hortensis.

Savoureux, Savory.

Savoyan, Galium verum.

Saw, Pri'on, Ser'ra, ([Da.] Saw e, [Sax.] raga.) (F.) Scie. A surgical instrument, made like a common saw; and used for sawing the bones in amputations, or for removing exostoses, &c. Saws of different sizes and shapes are used in surgery. The crown of the trepan is nothing more than a species of circular saw.

SAW, AMPUTA'TION, Ser'ra amputato'ria. The saw used in amputation.

SAW, HEY'S. An instrument used by Mr. Hey, of Leeds, in fractures of the cranium. It consists of a long handle, to which a small saw with a convex or straight edge is attached, and by which a piece of bone of any shape may be removed. With the trephine, the saw must always be circular.

Saw Palmet'to, Chamærops serratula—s. Wort, Liatris.

Saxif'raga, (saxum, 'a stone,' and frango, 'I break,') Pimpinella saxifraga—s. Anglica, Peucedanum silaus. See Calcifraga.

SAXIF'RAGA CRASSIFO'LIA. Ord. Saxifragaceæ. Sex. Syst. Decandria Digynia. The root of this species of saxifrage has been extolled by Pallas, as pre-eminently antiseptic.

SAXIF'RAGA GRANULA'TA, S. al'ba, Sanic'ula, Se'dum, White sax'ifrage, (F.) Saxifrage granulée. Recommended as diuretic and lithontriptic; but not used.

SAXIF'RAGA RU'BRA, Spiræa filipendula—s. Vulgaris, Peucedanum silaus.

Sax'ifrage, Burnet, Pimpinella saxifraga—s. Granulée, Saxifraga granulata—s. Meadow, Peucedanum silaus—s. White, Saxifraga granulata.

Saxifragus, (saxum, 'a stone,' and frango, 'I break,') Lithontriptic.

Saxon'icus Pul'vis. A powder, prepared with the roots of the wild and the cultivated angelica; the asclepias vincetoxicum, &c. It was considered formerly as an antidote.

Scab, Scab'ies, Crus'ta, Scall, (Prov.) Rove, (F.) Croûte. An incrustation, which forms upon a sore, owing to the concretion of the fluid discharged from it. An eschar.

Scab'by or Scabbed. Covered or diseased with scabs.

Scab'ies, (scabere, 'to scratch,') Psora—s. Agria, Lichen—s. Capitis, Porrigio lupinosa, Porrigio scutulata—s. Capitis favosa, Porrigio favosa—s. Crustosa, Radzyge—s. Fera, Eethyma.

SCAB'IES FER'INA, Itch of animals, Mange, (pronounced Mänge.) A cutaneous disease, which affects almost all domestic animals, but especially the horse, sheep, dog, and cow. It is said to have been transmitted to man; but this is questionable. See Psoriasis.

SCAB'IES HU'MIDA, Eczema—s. Norvegica Boeckii, Radzyge—s. Papuliformis, Prurigo—s. Sicca, Lichen, Psoriasis—s. Venerea contagiosa, Scherlievo.

Scabieuse Ordinaire, Scabiosa.

Scabi'ola, Psora.

Scabio'sa, (scaber, 'rough,' owing to its rough hairy surface,) S. arven'sis, Triche'ra arven'sis, Field Scab'ious, (Sc.) Eastningwort, (F.) Scabieuse ordinaire. Ord. Dipsacæ. Sex. Syst. Tetrandria Monogynia. The plant is bitter and substringent, and was formerly used in the cure of leprosy affections and diseased lungs.

SCABIO'SA ARVEN'SIS, Scabiosa—s. Carduifolia, Echinops.

SCABIO'SA SUCCI'SA, Succi'sa, S. pratensis, Asterocceph'alus succi'sa, Mor'sus Diab'oli, Dev'il's bit, (F.) Mors du Diable, has similar properties.

Scab'ious, Erigeron Philadelphicum—s. Field, Scabiosa—s. Sweet, Erigeron heterophyllum.

Scab'ish, Oenothera biennis.

Scabrit'ies, (scaber, 'rough,') Lichen, Trachoma.

SCABRIT'IES UN'GUIUM. A morbid condition of the nails, in which they are distorted and separated from the matrix. See Onychophyma.

Sca'vola, see Bela-modagam.

Sca'la, (F.) Rampe, 'a ladder.' A machine formerly used for reducing dislocations of the humerus.

SCA'LA OF THE COCH'LEA, Gy'ri seu Duc'tus spirales seu Cana'les coch'leæ, Spi'ral Canal or tube of the cochlea, Cana'lis spiralis coch'leæ, Canalis coch'leæ os'seus, (F.) Rampes ou Échelles du Limacon—are the cavities in the cochlea, separated from each other by the spiral septum. The one—Sca'la inter'na seu poste'rior seu infe'rior coch'leæ, S. tym'pani—would communicate with the cavity tympani by the fenestra rotunda, were it not for the membrane that closes it. The other—Sca'la exter'na seu ante'rior seu super'ior coch'leæ, S. vestib'uli—opens into the cavity of the vestibule. The scala communicate with each other by an opening at the top of the partition.

SCA'LA ANTE'RIOR COCH'LEÆ, see Scala—s. Clausa, see Scala—s. Externa coch'leæ, see Scala—s. Inferior coch'leæ, see Scala—s. Interior coch'leæ, see Scala—s. Media, see membrane of Corti—s. Posterior coch'leæ, see Scala—s. Superior coch'leæ, see Scala—s. Tympani, see Cochlea, and Scala—s. Vestibuli, see Cochlea, and Scala.

Scald'ricks, Sinapis arvensis.

Scale, ([Sax.] rcale, from rcylan, 'to divide, separate,') [G.] Schale, 'shell, peel;') Squa'ma, Le'pis, (F.) Escaille, Ecaille. An opaque and thickened lamina of cuticle, commonly produced by some degree of inflammation of the true skin, over which it is formed.

SCALE, DRY, Psoriasis.

Scalène Antérieur, Scalenus anticus—s. Postérieur, Scalenus posticus.

Scale'nus, (σκαληνος, 'irregular or unequal,') Geometers employ this word to designate a triangle whose three sides are unequal. Anatomists have given the name to two muscles. 1. SCALE'NUS ANTI'CUS, Por'tion of the Costotrachélien (Ch.), (F.) Scalène antérieur, is situate at the internal and inferior part of the neck. It is long and triangular; and is inserted, below, at the upper surface of the first rib; and, above, at the anterior tubercle of the transverse processes of the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th cervical vertebræ. This muscle bends the neck, and draws it to its side. It can also raise the first rib. 2. SCALE'NUS POSTI'CUS, (F.) Scalène postérieur, Por'tion of the Costotrachélien (Ch.), is situate behind the last. It is, also, long and triangular; but more bulky than the S. anticus. It is attached, below, to the outer surface of the first two ribs; and terminates, above, at the summit of the transverse processes of the last six vertebræ of the neck. This muscle bends the neck laterally, and can elevate the first two ribs. Some anatomists, as Albinus and Sömmerring, have described five scaleni muscles on each side, and have called them Scale'nus pri'or, S. min'imus, S. latera'lis, S. me'dius, S. posti'cus. Riolan and Chaussier only describe one scalenus muscle on each side. Cowper and Douglas, and the generality of the English anatomists, admit three, S. anti'cus, S. me'dius, and S. posti'cus; or, pri'mus, secun'dus, and ter'tius; Winslow, Boyer, and many of the French anatomists,—two, as above described.

Sca'ling, (same etymon as Scale,) in dentistry, is an operation which consists in removing the tartar from the teeth.

Scall, (Scale [?], [Sc.] Skaw,) Impetigo, Scab—s. Asbestos, see Eczema of the hairy scalp—s. Crusted, Impetigo—s. Dry, Psoriasis—s. Honeycomb, Porrigio favosa—s. Humid, Eczema

—s. Milky, Porrigio larvalis—s. Papulous, Ecthyma—s. Running, Eczema, Impetigo—s. Vesicular, Eczema capitis—s. Washerwoman's, Psoriasis diffusa.

Scallard, (from scall,) Porrigo.

Scalled Head, Porrigo, P. scutulata.

Scalp, ([D.] Schelp, 'a shell,') (old Eng.) Scop. The integuments covering the head. The hairy scalp is called, also, Capillit'ium, Tricho'ton, Casa'ries, (F.) Chevelure, Cuir chevelu.

Scal'pel, Scalpel'lum, Scalpel'lus, Cul'ter, Incis'o'rium, Smi'lion, (from scalpo, 'I cut,') A cutting instrument, formed of a blade of well-tempered steel, very sharp, of variable shape and size, and fixed solidly in a handle. Its use is to divide the soft parts in operations, dissection, &c.

Scalpel'lum, Scalpel—s. Lenticulare, Phacopis.

Scalpel'lus, Bistoury, Scalpel.

Scal'peum, Bistoury.

Scal'prum, (scalpo, 'to cut, to scrape,') Raspatorium—s. Chirurgicum, Lancet.

SCAL'PRUM DENTA'RIUM, Li'ma denta'ria. A tooth file. A dental file, or file used by the dentist.

SCAL'PRUM RASO'RIUM, Raspatorium.

Sca'ly, (from scale,) Squamous.

SCA'LY DISEASES, Squa'mæ, Lepido'ses, form the second order in Willan and Bateman's system of cutaneous diseases.

Scam'ma, gen. Scam'matis, (σκαμμα,) Fossa.

Scammonée d'Alep, Convolvulus scammonia.

Scammo'nia, see Convolvulus scammonia.

Scammo'niæ Ra'dix, see Convolvulus scammonia—s. Resina, Extractum scammonii.

Scam'monin. A glucoside derived from boiling resin of scammony with dilute sulphuric acid for some time.

Scammo'nium, (σκαμωνια, σκαμμωνιον,) see Convolvulus scammonia—s. Syriacum, Convolvulus scammonia.

Scam'mony, Convolvulus scammonia.

SCAM'MONY, BOUR'BOX. The concrete juice of Perip'loca Mauritiana.

SCAM'MONY, GER'MAN, see Convolvulus sepium.

SCAM'MONY OF MONTPEL'IER, Cynanchum Monspeliacum.

Scam'num Hippocrati'cum, (scamnum, 'a bench,') Ba'thron Hippocrati'on of Galen, (F.) Banc d'Hippocrate. A machine invented by Hippocrates for reducing fractures. It was a sort of bed, six feet long, on which the patient was fixed. Straps were attached above and below the fracture or luxation, and extension and counterextension were effected by a winch. It is described by Galen, Oribasius, Scultetus, &c. See Bathron.

Scandix, gen. Scandi'cis, (σκανδιξ,) S. cerefolium.

SCAN'DIX BULBOCAS'TANUM, Bunium bulbocastanum.

SCAN'DIX CEREFO'LIUM, Scandix, Scand'yx, Pecten Ven'eris, Cerefo'lum, Daucus Seprin'ius, Cherophyll'um, C. Sati'vum seu Cerefo'lum, Anthrisc'us cerefo'lum, Chærefo'lum, Cher'vil, (F.) Cerfeuil. Ord. Umbelliferae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. A culinary herb, which is slightly aromatic and grateful. It is said to be gently aperient and diuretic.

SCAN'DIX ODORA'TA, Sweet Cic'ely. Properties the same as the other. Also, Cherophyllum odoratum.

Scandula'rius Mus'culus, (scandere, 'to climb,') Parthenar, Transversus pedis.

Scan'dyx, gen. Scandy'cis, (σκανδυξ,) Scandix cerefolium.

Sca'pha, (σκαφη,) Scaphus, (σκαφος, from σκαπω, 'I make hollow,') The excavation or cavity of the external ear, between the helix and anthelix. Also, the meatus auditorius externus. The rima vulvæ. The name of a bandage for the head, mentioned by Galen, and called, likewise, Tholus Diocleus.

Scaphion, (σκαφίον, dim. of σκαφή, 'a trough,') Cranium, Papaver (Capsule).

Scaphium Oculare, Pol'vis Ocularis, Eye-glass, (F.) Bassin ou Gondole oculaire, Ceillière. A small porcelain, glass, or metallic vessel, used for applying lotions to the eye.

Scaphocarposuperphalangeus Pol'licis, Abductor pollicis brevis.

Scaphocephalic, (σκαφή, 'a boat,' and κεφαλή, 'head,') Having or relating to a skull that is scaphoid or boat-shaped.

Scaphoid, Scaphoïdes, (σκαφή, 'a boat,' and εἶδος, 'form,') A name given to several parts.

SCAPHOID BONE OF THE FOOT, Os Scaphoïdes Pe'dis seu navicula'rē seu cymbifor'mē, Cym'ba, Boatlike bone, (F.) Scaphoïde du Pied. This bone is situate at the forepart of the astragalus and inner part of the foot. The posterior surface forms a cavity somewhat like that of a boat, for receiving the head of the astragalus. There is a prominence at the inner side of the bone, for the insertion of tendons, muscles, and strong ligaments. The forepart of the bone is convex, and divided into three articular surfaces for articulation with the ossa cuneiformia. Between the os naviculare and astragalus, the foot has its principal lateral and rotary motions; although each of the other joints of the tarsus contributes a little. Part of the tibialis posticus is inserted into it.

SCAPHOID BONE OF THE HAND, Os Scaphoïdes Ma'nūs seu navicula'rē seu cymbifor'mē, Cym'ba, Boatlike bone, (F.) Scaphoïde de la main. The first bone of the first row of the carpus. The upper surface is convex, and articulated with the radius. The under and outer surfaces are also convex—to be articulated with the trapezium and trapezoides. Between the upper and under cartilaginous surfaces there is a rough fossa for the insertion of the capsular ligament. The anterior and inner surface has an oval cavity, where it is articulated with the os magnum, which gives name to the bone. There is a process on the outer end of the bone, for the attachment of part of the anterior transverse ligament of the wrist.

SCAPHOID FOS'SA, Fos'sa Scaphoïdes, (F.) Enfoncement Scaphoïde. A small cavity at the upper part of the internal ala of the pterygoid process, in which the peristaphylinus internus is attached.

Scaphoïde de la Main, Os scaphoides manūs—s. du Pied, Os scaphoides pedis.

Scaphoïdoastrag'alan, Scaphoïdoüstragala'nus. That which relates to the scaphoid bone and astragalus. The articulation of these bones is so called; and the ligament which strengthens it is termed the Scaphoïdoüstragalan ligament.

Scaphoïdocu'boid, Scaphoïdocuboïdeus. That which relates to the scaphoid and cuboid bones. The articulation of these bones is so called.

Scaph'ula, (dim. of σκαφη,) Navicularis fossa. Scaphus, (σκαφος, 'a skiff, a trough,') Auditory canal, external, Rima vulvæ, Scapha.

Scap'ula, Scap'ulum, Pla'ta, Omopla'ta, Homopla'ta, Scop'tula, Epino'tion, Latitu'do hu'meri, Omopla'tē, Os latum hu'meri, Scut'um thora'cis seu cor'dis, Spat'ha, Spath'ula, Pteryg'ium, Chel'o'nium, Spat'ula; Bladebone, Shoulderblade, (Prov.) Shieldbone, Platebone, Spadebone, (F.) Omoplate. An irregular, broad, flat bone, of a triangular shape, situate at the posterior part of the shoulder. It has: 1. A posterior or dorsal surface or Dor'sum, Testu'do scap'ulæ, divided transversely into two parts by a triangular process, called Spine of the Scapula, which terminates by a considerable eminence called Acromion.

Above the spine is the Fos'sa supraspina'ta; below it, the F. infraspina'ta. 2. An anterior or costal surface or ven'ter, forming the Fos'sa subscapula'ris. 3. A superior or cervical edge, which is thin, and terminates, anteriorly, by a strong, curved apophysis, called the coracoid process. 4. A posterior or vertebral edge, called, also, the base. 5. An outer or axillary or inferior edge, having a thick, truncated angle, in which is the glenoid cavity. With this is articulated the head of the humerus. The glenoid cavity is separated from the body of the bone by a narrow part called the cervix or neck. The edges or margins are, also, called costæ. The scapula has three angles—an inferior, superior, and anterior.

SCAP'ULA, Humerus, Spatulus.

Scap'ulæ Na'si, Partes laterales na'si. The lateral parts of the nose.

Scapulaire, Scapular.

Scapula'gia, (scapula, 'the shoulderblade,' and ἀλγος, 'pain,') Arthralgia of the scapula.

Scap'ular, Scap'ulary, Scapula'ris, (F.) Scapulaire, (from scapula.) That which relates or belongs to the scapula.

SCAP'ULAR APONEUROSIS. A broad, thin aponeurosis, with decussating fibres, which is attached, above, to the spine of the scapula; below, to a crest between the teres major and infraspinatus; within, to the spinal edge of the scapula; and which at its middle unites with the thin aponeurosis that covers a part of the external surface of the deltoid.

SCAP'ULAR ARTERIES. These are several. 1. The Superior scap'ular, Superfic'ial scap'ular of Sömmerring, Dorsal'is scap'ulæ superior, Transversa'lis scap'ulæ, T. hu'meri. This arises from the subclavian, and often from the inferior thyroid, or from a trunk common to it and the posterior scapular or transverse scapular or cervical. It passes behind the clavicle, above the superior edge of the scapula, and buries itself between the dorsal surface of that bone and the muscles inserted into it. 2. The inferior scapular or common scap'ular or internal scap'ular or subscap'ular artery, A. Thorac'ica axilla'ris seu ala'ris, is of considerable size. It arises from the inferior part of the axillary artery, behind the brachial plexus, gives off several branches to the armpit, and divides into two branches—the one, Scapula'ris interna, and the smaller of the two, is distributed almost entirely to the serratus major anticus and latissimus dorsi; the other, the larger of the two, Dorsal'is scap'ulæ inferior seu Circumflex'a scapula'ris, which distributes its branches to the subscapular, supraspinal, and infraspinal regions. See Acromial artery.

SCAP'ULAR NOTCH, see Notch, scapular.

SCAP'ULAR VEINS follow the same course as the arteries which they accompany.

Scapula'rē, Scapulary.

Scap'ulary, Scapula'rē, Fas'cia Scapula'ris. A broad, linen bandage, divided into two tails for three-quarters of its length, the undivided extremity of which is attached to the posterior and middle part of a bandage carried round the body, the tails passing over the shoulders, and being attached to the anterior part of the body bandage, to prevent it from slipping down.

Scap'ulo, in composition, the scapula.

Scapulodyn'ia, (scapula, and δυνειν, 'pain,') Pain or rheumatism of the shoulder.

Scapulohu'meral. An epithet given to the shoulder-joint. It is an orbicular articulation, resulting from the reception of the head of the humerus into the glenoid cavity of the scapula. To keep the bones in connection there are—1. A very strong, conoidal capsular ligament, passing from the circumference of the glenoid cavity around the neck of the humerus. 2. A fibreocar- tilaginous ring, called the glenoid ligament, and a synovial capsule.

Scapulo-Huméral, Teres major — s. Huméro-olécranien, Triceps extensor cubiti — s. Hyoidien, Omo-hyoideus — s. Radial, Biceps flexor cubiti — s. Trochitérein, grand, Infraspinatus.

Scapulum, Scapula.

Sca'pus, (σκαπός, 'a shaft, a stalk,') Penis, see Hair.

Scar, (σχαπα, [F.] escarre,) Cicatrix.

SCAR, Seam. To mark with a cicatrix or seam, as scarred, (Sc.) arred, means marked with a cicatrix or seam.

Scarabæ'olus Hemisphæ'ricus, (dim. of scarabæus,) Coccus cacti.

Scar'borough, Min'eral Wa'ters of, Scarborough Spa. A celebrated English chalybeate, at Scarborough, in Yorkshire. One of the springs is a simple carbonated chalybeate, like that of Tunbridge, the other has an admixture of purging salt. Scarborough, having the additional advantage of seabathing, is much frequented by invalids.

Scarcht, (Sax. scyrta,) Hermaphrodite.

Scardam'yg'mus, (σκαρδαμυγμός, Scardam'yg'is, (F.) Clignement, (from σκαρδαμυγεῖν, 'to wink,') Winking. Closure of the eyelids.

Scarf'skin, Epidermis.

Scarificateur, Scarificator.

Scarifica'tion, Scarifica'tio, Am'ycha, Amyx'is, Scha'sis, Catacas'mus, Amyg'mos, Amyg'mus, Schas'mus, Eucharaz'is, (scarificare, scarificatum, σκαρφαραι, 'I make a slight scratch,') The act of scarifying. Also, a small incision, Am'ychē, made into the skin with a lancet, bistoury, or scarificator, for different therapeutical purposes — as to draw blood, or to discharge some effused fluid. When the scarifications are very superficial, and do not go farther than the skin, they are termed by the French Mouchetures.

Scarifica'tor, Scarificato'rium, Schaste'rium, (F.) Scarificateur. An instrument for making scarifications. It consists of a small brass box of a cubical shape, in which 10 or 12 lancet points turn upon a common pivot. By means of a spring, all these blades can be made to issue at once, and make as many scarifications. Other instruments much more simple in construction are so called, intended for the scarification of the conjunctiva, the larynx, &c.

Scarificato'rium, Scarificator.

Scari'ola, Cichorium endivia, Lactuca scariola.

Scari'ole, Cichorium endivia.

Scarla'ta, Scarlatina.

Scarlati'na, ([L.] scarlatte, 'a deep red,') Scarla'ta, Euanthe'sis Rosa'lia, Rosa'lia, Rosa'lia, R. Squamo'sa, Rosa'lis, Rube'ole, of some, Morbil'ii ignei seu confluent'es, Morb'us scarlati'no'sus, Fe'bris scarlatino'sa seu ru'bra, Gut'turis mor'bus epidem'icus Forest'i, Pur'pura, Ty'phus scarlati'nus, Porphyr'is'mus, Porphyr'is'ma, Scarlet or Rash fever, (F.) Fièvre rouge, F. pourprée. The characteristic symptoms of scarlatina are — a scarlet flush, appearing about the second day of fever on the face, neck, and fauces, and progressively spreading over the body, terminating about the seventh day. Two great varieties may be reckoned: — the S. simplex seu febris seu benigna seu sine angina, in which the fever is moderate, and terminates with efflorescence, prostration of strength being trifling; and the S. angino'sa seu paristhmica seu cynanchica seu mit'ior, Fothergill's sorethroat, in which the fever is severe, the throat ulcerated, the eruption later in its appearance and less extensive, often changing to a livid hue. Scarlati'na maligna seu gra'vior, has been reckoned a variety of this, in its worst form. It agrees with the Cynanche maligna of Cullen.

Scarlatina belongs to the major exanthemata, and is a disease chiefly of children. The eruption differs from that of measles, in being an efflorescence not raised above the cuticle. Measles, too, is attended with catarrhal symptoms, while the complication in scarlatina is cynanche.

The disease is generally regarded as eminently contagious, but doubt may and does exist on this point. To the zymotic principle the name Scarlatinin has been given by Dr. Wm. Farr.

The treatment of simple scarlatina need not be much. It must be antiphlogistic. If the throat be very much ulcerated, acid gargles and counter-irritants must be employed; and if the affection becomes manifestly typhoid, and the sorethroat of a malignant character, the case must be treated like typhus gravior, with antiseptic gargles of bark, acid, &c. Anasarca sometimes supervenes on scarlatina, and requires attention. Purgatives are here demanded as well as the use of sorbefeacients, such as mercury and squill, &c.

Scar'latinin, see Scarlatina.

Scar'latinoid, Scarlatino'id'es, (scarlatina, and aidos, 'resemblance,') Resembling scarlatina.

Scarlati'nous or Scarlati'neous, Scarlati'nal, Scarlatino'sus, (F.) Scarlatineux. Relating or appertaining to scarlatina.

Scar'let Ber'ry, Solanum dulcamara — s. Fever, Scarlatina.

Scar'pa's Foram'ina, (after Scarpa, the celebrated Italian anatomist and surgeon.) Two of the four smaller foramina into which the anterior palatine foramen of the superior maxillary bone is divided; the others being called the foramina of Stenson.

SCAR'PA'S SHOE, see Shoe, Scarpa's — s. Triangle, see Triangle.

Scarred, see Scar.

Scatacra'sia, (σκαρ, gen. σκατος, 'excrement,' and κρασις, 'mixture,') Scoracrasia.

Scatacrati'a, (σκαρ, gen. σκατος, 'excrement,' and ακρατία, 'want of power,') see Scoracrasia.

Scaw, Sambucus.

Seal of Salomon, 'seal of Solomon,' Convallaria polygonatum.

Scelal'gia, (scelos, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain of the leg.

SCELAL'GIA ANTI'CA, Neuralgia femoropretibialis — s. Postica, Neuralgia femoropoplitea — s. Puerperarum, Phlegmatia dolens.

Scele'teu'ma, gen. Scele'teu'matis, Skeletu'ma, (σκελετωμα,) Mummy.

Scele'teu'sis, Skeleten'sis, (σκελετωσις, 'I desiccate, I pickle,') Mummification. Also, the mode of making a skeleton, Skeletopæ'ia, Syntax'is.

Sceletog'raphy, Skeletography.

Sceletolog'ia, Skeletology.

Scel'eton, Skeleton.

Sceletopæ'a, Scele'teu'sis, Skeletopæ'ia.

Scel'etum, Skeleton — s. Artificiale, see Skeleton — s. Naturale, see Skeleton.

Scelon'cus, (scelos, and ογκος, 'a tumor,') A tumor of the leg. Phlegmatia dolens.

Scelorrheu'ma, gen. Scelorrhen'matis, Rheumatism'us eru'ris, (scelos, and ρρυπα, 'defluxion, rheumatism,') Rheumatism of the leg.

Scel'os, (σκελος,) Leg.

Sceloscambo'sis, (scelos, and καρβος, 'crooked,') see Rheobosis.

Scelotyr'be, (σκελοτυρβη, from scelos, and τυρβη, 'tumult,') Chorea, Porphyra nautica — s. Agitans, Dystaxia — s. Febrilis, see Subsultus tendinum — s. Festinans, Paralysis agitans — s. Tarrantismus, Chorea.

Scenome'ninx, gen. Scenomenin'gis, (σκημος, 'a hut,' and μηρυξ, 'a membrane,') see Cell.

Scenotho'ria, (σκηνος, 'a hut,' and θεωρία, 'theory,') Cell doctrine.

Scepar'nos, (σκεπαριος,) Ascia.

Scepar'num, (σκεπαριον,) Amnion.

Scepaste'rium, (from σκεπαζω, 'I enwrap,') Couvreechef.

Scepas'trum, Couvreechef.

Scep'trum, (σκεπτρον,) Penis.

Scha'sis, (σχασις,) Scarification.

Schas'mus, (σχασμος,) Scarification.

Schaste'rium, (σχαστηριον,) Fleam, Lancet, Scarificator.

Scho'ba Ar'abum, Artemisia santonica.

Sched'ula, (dim. of scheda, 'a leaf of paper,') Prescription.

Scheele's Green, Arsenite of copper.

Scherbet', Sherbet', Serbet', Tscherbet', Sorbet'tum, Sorbet'tum, Sorbet'tum, Sorbet'. A drink prepared by the Turks, Persians, Egyptians, &c., with sugar and the juice of acid fruits.

Scherlie'vo, Skerlievo, Male di Scherlievo, Male di Breno, Male di Fiume, Male di Scarlievo, Male scabioso venereo, Margaretizza, Mor'bus Croa'tus seu fluminien'sis, Framba'sia Illyr'ica, Scab'ies ven'erea contagio'sa, Vene'real Itch. A name given to a particular form of syphilis, observed in Illyria. It is said to be capable of being communicated without immediate contact; and that its principal symptoms are:—pains in the bones, ulceration of the fauces, pustules, and fungous growths in different parts of the body.

Affections, known by this name, as well as by those of Male di Breno, Falcadi'na, Boala and Frenga, have prevailed in the frontier countries of the Austrian empire, and were generally regarded as contagious, of syphilitic origin, and as having been introduced from a surrounding country. The terms appear, however, in the course of time, to have been applied to a variety of ulcers, eruptions, and other morbid conditions in no way connected with syphilis, so that they lost their former signification.

Schero'ma, gen. Schero'matis, (from σχερος, 'a shore, dry land,') A dryness of the eye from the want of lachrymal secretion.

Schi'as, gen. Schi'adis, Ischias, Neuralgia femoropoplitea.

Schiat'icus, Sciatie.

Schidake'don, (σχιδακηδον,) Schidace'dum, Schindace'dum, Schindal'amus, Schindal'mus, (from σχιζω, 'I cleave,') A longitudinal fracture of a bone.

Schindace'dum, Schidakedon.

Schindal'amus, (σχινδαλαμος,) Schidakedon, Schindylesis.

Schindale'sis, Schindylesis.

Schindal'mus, (σχινδαλαμος,) Schidakedon, Schindylesis.

Schindyle'sis, (σχινδύλησις,) Schindale'sis, Schindal'amus, Schindal'mus, (from σχινδύλω, 'I split into small pieces,') An articulation of bones—by furrowing, as it were,—as in that of the vomer, which constitutes, in part, the septum narium. Also, the act of splitting into small pieces.

Schinela'on, (σχινελαιον, from σχινος, 'the mastic tree,' and ελαιον, 'oil,') O'leum lentis'cinum. Oil of mastic.

Schinoceph'alus, (schinos, 'the squill,' and κεφαλη, 'head,') Scillocephalus.

Schi'nus, (σχινος,) Pistacia lentiscus, Scilla.

SCHI'NUS AR'VEIRA, Arveira. Nat. Ord. Anacardiaceæ. A tree of Brazil, whose bark is slightly aromatic and resinous, and is markedly astringent.

The resinous juice of Schi'nus mol'lè is slightly purgative.

Schinz'nach or Haps'burg, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These springs are situate three leagues from Baden, and are among the most celebrated bathing places in Switzerland. The waters are of a saline sulphurous kind; and have a high reputation in cutaneous and rheumatic affections, visceral obstructions, and glandular enlargements. They contain sulphate of lime, sulphate of soda, chloride of sodium, chloride of magnesium, sulphate of magnesia, carbonate of lime, carbonate of magnesia, and oxide of iron; sulphohydric acid, and carbonic acid gases. The season is from the 15th of May to the 15th of September.

Schis'ma, gen. Schis'matis, (σχισμα,) Fissure, Rima.

Schistoceph'alus, (σχιστος, 'cleft,' and κεφαλη, 'head,') A monster having some part of the head cleft or fissured.

Schistocor'mus, (σχιστος, 'cleft,' and κορμος, 'trunk,') Schistotho'rax. A monster having part or the whole of the trunk cleft or fissured.

Schistom'elus, (σχιστος, 'cleft,' and μελος, 'a limb,') A monster whose limbs are fissured.

Schistor'hachis, (σχιστος, 'cleft,' and ραχίς, 'spine,') Hydrorachis.

Schistoso'mus, (σχιστος, 'cleft,' and σωμα, 'body,') A malformation of the abdomen, in which the fissure and eventration extend over the entire length of the abdomen; the lower extremities being absent, or very little developed, so that the body appears as if truncated inferiorly.

Schistotho'rax, gen. Schistothora'cis, (σχιστος, 'cleft,' and thorax,) Schistocormus.

Schi'za, (σχίζα,) Rima — s. Vulvæ, Rima vulvæ.

Schizatrich'ia, Trichos'chisis, Schizotrich'ia, (σχίζω, 'I split,' and τριχίς, gen. τριχος, 'a hair,') The splitting of the hairs at their extremities.

Schlang'enbad or Schlag'enbach, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Schlangenbad is a much frequented watering place in Germany. The water, which is unctuous, is employed as a tepid bath, in hysteria, nervous excitability, &c. It contains carbonates of lime and magnesia, a little carbonic acid, carbonate of soda, &c.; but has only slight therapeutic value. Temperature, 86° of Fahrenheit.

Schlemm, Canal' of, Canal of Schlemm.

Schnapps, Schiedam', see Gin.

Schneide'rian Mem'brane, Pituitary membrane.

Schoenan'thus, (σχοεινος, 'the common rush,' and ανθος, 'a flower,') Juncus odoratus.

Scho'la, (σχολη,) School.

Scholle'ra Oxycoc'cos, Vaccinium oxycoccos.

School, Scho'la, (F.) Ecole. A place of education. In Europe, the large medical schools are usually attached to the universities. In England, however, there has been no medical school of celebrity at either of the universities of Oxford or Cambridge, owing greatly to their provincial situation. Of late, two schools have existed in London, attached to the London University—University College and King's College. Excellent schools are now connected with the hospitals there and in the larger towns in the provinces. The medical schools of Europe which have been most celebrated are those of Edinburgh, Leyden, Berlin, Halle, Tübingen, Paris, Montpellier, Bologna, Padua, Pavia, and Pisa. In the United States, the medical schools are very numerous. Those of Philadelphia and New York are the most largely attended.

School'ey's Moun'tain, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The waters of this New Jersey spring are a carbonated chalybeate. According to Dr. McNevin, they contain extractive, chloride of sodium, chloride of calcium, chloride of magnesium, carbonate of lime, sulphate of lime, carbonate of magnesia, silica, and carbonate and oxide of iron.

Schousbæ'a Coccin'ea, (after P. K. A. Schousboe, a Danish botanist,) Cacoucia coccinea.

Schuber'tia Dis'ticha, (after G. H. von Schubert, Professor of Natural History at Munich,) Taxodium distichum.

Schwal'bach or Langenschwal'bach, Min'eral Waters of. Schwalbach is a town in Germany, seated on the Aa, 32 miles west of Frankfurt. The waters are gaseous chalybeates, whose invigorating properties are due to carbonate of iron, held in solution by an excess of carbonic acid. They also contain bicarbonate of soda, lime, and magnesia. Employed as a tonic, and in dyspepsia and torpor of the bowels.

Schwann, White Sub'stance of, see Substance, white, of Schwann.

Schwein'furth's Green, Arsenite of copper.

Schwen'deck, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These waters are about 5 leagues from Munich, in Bavaria. They contain carbonic acid, carbonate and sulphate of lime, chloride of calcium, chloride of magnesium, carbonate of soda, and oxide of iron, and are much used for cutaneous affections.

Sciat'ic, Sciat'icus, Ischiat'ic, Ischiat'icus, Ischiad'icus, Schiat'icus, (F.) Sciatique, (from ισχίον, 'the haunch.') Formed by contraction from ischiatric, which latter is still used. See Ischiatic. Used substantively for sciatica.

SCIAT'IC NERVE, GREAT, Nervus ischiad'icus, Great fem'oro-poplite'al (Ch.), (F.) Grand nerf sciatique, ought to be esteemed a continuation of the sacral plexus. It issues from the pelvis, between the pyramidalis and superior gemellus, descends along the posterior part of the thigh, and, after having given branches to the gemini, quadratus, obturator externus, glutæus maximus, semimembranosus, semitendinosus, biceps, and third abductor muscles, it divides, about the inferior third of the thigh, into two branches—the one named the external popliteal, the other the internal.

SCIAT'IC NERVE, LESS'ER, Infe'rior gluteal branch of the sacral plexus, Less'er fem'oro-poplite'al nerve (Ch.), (F.) Nerf petit sciatique, which seems especially formed by the 2d and 3d sacral, is given off from the lower part of the plexus, and escapes from the pelvis beneath the pyramidalis muscle. It gives branches—nervi cutanei clunium inferio'ies—to the glutæus maximus, a sciat'ic branch or infrapel'vic cutaneous or perine'al cutaneous, Pudeu'dalis lon'gus infe'rior, which passes under the tuberosity of the ischium, and furnishes filaments to the glutæus maximus, and to the muscles of the perinæum, urethra, penis, scrotum, &c., and a posterior femoral cutaneous branch—middle posterior cutaneous nerve—the filaments of which traverse the femoral aponeurosis, to be distributed on the skin of the posterior part of the thigh. The principal branch of the lesser sciatic nerve divides, near the ham, into two or three filaments, which descend under the integuments almost as far as the inferior part of the leg.

SCIAT'IC NOTCH, GREAT, Sciatic Fora'men, Inci'su'ra ischiad'ica major, (F.) Grande échancrure sciatique ou grand tron sciatique, is a large notch at the posterior edge of each os innominatum, below the posterior and inferior iliac spine, which is converted into a foramen by the sacrum and sacrosciatic ligaments. The less'er sciatic notch, Inci'su'ra ischiad'ica mi'nor, Lu'na albi'ni, (F.) Petite échancrure ischiatique, is much smaller than the last, from which it is separated by the sciatic spine. It gives passage to the tendon of the obturator internus, and to the internal pudic vessels and nerves.

SCIAT'IC RE'GION, Ischiadic region.

SCIAT'IC SPINE, Spine of the Is'chium, Sp'inous Proc'ess of the Is'chium, is a short, flat, pyramidal eminence on the os innominatum, above the preceding foramen, which gives insertion to the lesser sacrosciatic ligament.

Sciatic'a, Neuralgia femoropopliten.

Sciatique, Neuralgia femoropoplitea, Sciatic.

Scie, (from secare, 'to cut,') Saw.

Science de la Vie, Biology.

Scien'tia Hermet'ica, 'Hermetic science,' Alchemy—s. Medendi, Medicina—s. Medica, Medicina.

Sciero'pia, (σκίερος, 'shady,' and ὤψ, 'the eye,') A defect of vision, in which all objects have a darker hue than natural.

Scil'la, (σκίλλα, from σχιζω, 'I cleave, I split,' or from σκιλλω, 'I dry,') Scil'la seu Squil'la marit'ima, Scyll'a, As'chil, Schi'nus, Oculus Typh'o'nis, Ornithog'alum marit'imum seu squil'la, Stella'ris seu U'rgin'ea scilla, Ce'pa mari'na, Squilla, Squill or Sea onion, Eye of Typhon, (F.) Scille, Oignon marin. Ord. Liliaceæ. Sec. Syst. Hexandria Monogynia. Native of Spain, Austria, &c. The bulb or root of the squill, Scilla, (Ph. U. S.,) has a bitter, nauseous taste, and is extremely acrid, inflaming the skin when rubbed on it. Its acrimony, on which its virtues depend, is destroyed by heat, drying, and keeping. It is extracted by vinegar, spirit, and water. In large doses, squill is emetic and purgative; in small doses, diuretic and expectorant. Its active principle has been called scil'latin. Dose, gr. j. to v. of the dried root, united or not with mercury.

SCIL'LA ESCULEN'TA, Phalan'gium Esculen'tum, Eastern Quamash, Wild Hy'acinth; indigenous; flowering in May. An article of diet among the Western Indians. It is made into bread and into poultices for inflamed breasts.

Scillit'ic, Scillit'icus, (F.) Scillitique, (from scilla.) Containing squill.

Scil'latin, see Scilla.

Scilloceph'alus, Schinoceph'alus, (σκίλλα, 'the squill,' and κεφαλή, 'head,') One who has a large bulbiform head.

Scin'cus, (σκινκος or σκινγος.) A species of Sau'rus or Lacer'ta, common in Egypt, and much extolled by the ancients as alexipharmic and aphrodisiac.

Scinde Boil, Rain boil. A form of furunculus met with in the rainy season in all parts of India.

Scintil'la Ven'eris, 'a spark, a relic of Venus.' A name given by Paracelsus to the impotence and loss of power in the limbs produced by syphilis.

Scintillement de l'Œil, (from scintilla, 'a spark,') 'sparkling of the eye,' Confusio.

Scioma'chy, (σκιομαχία.) Skioma'chia, Skioma'chia, (σκια, 'a shade,' and μαχη, 'a fight,') A gymnastic exercise with the ancients, which consisted in a mock encounter at boxing and jumping with one's own shadow.

Sci'rhus, (σκίρρος.) Scirrhus.

Scir'pus (scirpus, 'a rush') Palus'tris, Eleocharis palustris.

Scirrhe, Scirrhus.

Scirrhophepharon'cus, (scirrhus, βλεφαρον, 'eyelid,' and ογκος, 'swelling,') see Scleriosis.

Scirrhocele, (scirrhus, and κηλη, 'rupture,') Orehocele scirrhusa.

Scirrho'des, (σκιρρωδής, from scirrhus, and odes.) Scirrhus.

Scirrhogas'tria, Scir'rus ventric'uli, (F.) Squirrogastrie, (scirrhus, and γαστήρ, 'stomach,') Scirrhus of the stomach.

Scir'rroid, Scirrho'id'es, Scirrho'd'es, (scirrhus, and ιδος, 'resemblance,') Resembling scirrhus.

Scirrho'ma, gen. Scirrho'matis, (σκιρρωμα.) Scirrhus.

Scirrhophtal'mia, Sclerophthal'mia, (scirrhus, and ὀφθαλμος, 'eye,') Cancer oculi. Cancer of the eye.

SCIRRHOPTHAL'MIA PALPEBRA'RUM, see Scleriosis.

Scirrhosar'ca Neonato'rum, (scirrhus, and σαρξ, gen. σαρκος, 'flesh:,' neonatus, 'new-born,') Induration of the cellular tissue of infants.

Scirrho'sis, (from scirrhus.) Scirrhus.

Scir'rhus, Scirrho'us, Scirrho'd'es, (F.) Squir'rhus, (from scirrhus.) Of or belonging to scirrhus.

SCIR'RHUS SARCO'MA OF AB'ERNETHY, Emphy'ma sarco'ma scirrhum. Hard, rigid, vascular infarction of glandular follicles; indolent, insentient, glabrous; sometimes shrinking and becoming more indurated. Found in glandulous structures.

SCIR'RHUS, Scirrhus, Squir'rhus, Skir'rhus, Scirrho'ma, Scirrho'sis, Can'cer scirrhus, Carcino'ma simplex seu fibro'sum seu du'rum seu reticula're, Indura'tio maligna, Scler'us, Pseudino'ma, Ino'ma, Carcinom'atous sarco'ma, Hard or Fi'brous can'cer, (from σκληρος, 'hard, indurated,') (F.) Squirrhe, Squirre, Schirre, Skirre, Cancer dur ou squirrheux ou fibreux. A disease, so called from the hardness that characterizes it. It is a state of induration, of a peculiar kind, affecting glandular structures generally, but capable of occurring in other textures. It usually precedes carcinoma, of which it may, indeed, be considered as the first stage. Scirrhus must not be confounded with the induration which succeeds inflammation, although the two states are often complicated, and may stand, occasionally, in the relation of cause and effect to each other. Scirrhus is ordinarily accompanied by violent shooting pains. It is also irregular on its surface; and when cut into has a bluish or grayish white color. When the surgeon is satisfied of the existence of scirrhus, he had better remove it at once. No other treatment seems to possess much advantage. See Cancer.

Galen uses the term Scirrho'sis for a livid excrescence caused by inflammation.

SCIR'RHUS ET CARCINO'MA VENTRIC'ULI, see Gastrostenosis cardiaca et pylorica.

SCIR'RHUS, CUIRASS'-LIKE, (F.) Squirrhe en cuirasse. A chronic form of scirrhus, in which a cancerous mass surrounds the chest, giving an appearance like that indicated by its name.

SCIR'RHUS HE'PATIS, Hepatoscirrhus — s. Intestinorum, Enteropathia cancerosa — s. Palpebrarum, see Scleriosis — s. Testiculi, Sarcocoele — s. Uteri, Metroscirrhus — s. Ventriculi, Gastroscirrhus.

SCISSION, (from scindere, scissum, 'to split,') see Generation.

SCISSIPARITÉ, (scindere, scissum, 'to split,') and pario, 'I bring forth,') see Generation.

SCIS'sORS, Scis'sor, 'a carver,' (scindere, scissum, 'to cut,') For'fex, For'pex, Poa'lis, To'mis, (F.) Ciseaux. A well-known instrument in common use, and often employed in surgery. Scissors are composed of two cutting blades, crossing each other and moving upon an axis. They are straight or curved. Sometimes the curve is on the flat side, when they are called, in France, Ciseaux à cuiller; at others, on their edges. The scissors, bent so that the blades make an obtuse angle with the handles, are also much used. They are called, in France, Ciseaux coudés. Scissors are used for dividing soft, loose, isolated parts, which it would be difficult to reach and to cut with the bistoury. They are employed, likewise, in the operation for harelip, and for removing warts, fungous excrescences, &c.

SCIS'sORS, SMELL'IE's, see Perforator.

SCISSU'RA, (from scindere, scissum, 'to split,') Fissure — s. Auris, Incisura auris — s. Vulvæ, see Rima.

SCISSU'RÆ, Rhagades.

SCISSURE, Fissure — s. de Glaser, Fissure — s. Grande médiane du Cervelet, Valley — s. Grande du foie, see Liver, Fissure, glenoid — s. de Santorini, Santorini, fissure of.

SOIT'ta, see Dysentery.

SOLA'REA, Salvia sclarea.

SCL'RA, Sclerotica.

SCLERECTA'sIA, (scleros, and εκτασις, 'dilatation,') Staphyloma of the sclerotic — s. Posterior, Staphyloma, posterior.

SCLERE'ma, gen. Sclere'matis, (from scleros,)

Induration of the cellular tissue — s. Atrophium, see Induration of the cellular tissue — s. Elevatum, see Induration of the cellular tissue.

SCLÈREME, Induration of the cellular tissue.

SCLERE'mia, Induration of the cellular tissue.

SCLERE'mus, Induration of the cellular tissue.

SCLERENCEPHA'lia, Indura'tio cer'ebrī, (scleros, and εγκεφαλος, 'the brain,') Sclero'sis of the Brain, (F.) Endurcissement du cerveau, Sclérose de l'Encéphale. A morbid condition of the brain characterized by induration and atrophy of the cerebral tissue.

SCLER'ia, (σκληρία, from scleros,) Scleriosis.

SCLERi'asis, (σκληρίασις, from scleros,) Sclero'ma, Sclero'sis, Scler'ia, Sclerys'mus, Seph'irus. Any kind of hardness or induration. Sometimes, hardness of the eyelids, Callos'itas seu Scirrhopthal'mia seu Scirrhus palpebra'rum, Scirrhophearon'eus; at others, hardness of the genital organs of the female; probably synonymous with scirrhus. Hardness of the bones, Fragil'itas Os'sium. See Scleroderma.

SCLERi'tis, Scleritis.

SCLEROCATARAC'ta, see Cataract.

SCLEROCHOROIDI'tis, (scleros, choroidea, and itis.) Inflammation of the sclerotic and choroid tunics of the eye.

SCLEROCHOROIDI'TIS POSTE'RIOR, see Staphyloma posterior.

SCLERODER'ma, gen. Scleroder'matis, (scleros, and δέρμα, 'skin,') Scler'iasis, Hide-bound Disease, Sclero'sis Der'matos, Sclero'sis Co'rii. Induration of the derma proper or corium. When the subcutaneous tissues are affected, it is called Sclerosis telæ cellularis et adiposæ. See Induration of the cellular tissue.

SCLERODER'MA ADULTO'RUM, see Induration of the cellular tissue.

SCLERO'des, (σκληρωδης, from scleros, and odes,) Sclerotic.

SCLEROIRI'tis. Inflammation of the sclerotic and iris.

SCLERO'ma, gen. Sclero'matis, (from scleros,) Induration of the areolar tissue, Scleriosis.

SCLERO'MA NEONATO'RUM. Inflammatory induration of the new-born.

SCLEROME'ninx, gen. Scleromenin'gis, (scleros, and μνηξις, 'membrane,') Dura mater.

SCLERONYX'is, Scleriticonyx.

SCLEROPHTHAL'mia, (σκληροφθαλμία,) Hordeolum, Schirrophthalmia.

SCLER'os, (σκληρος,) Hard. In composition, the sclerotica; also, hard.

SCLEROSARCO'ma, gen. Sclerosarco'matis, (scleros, and σάρκωμα, 'a fleshy tumor,') A hard, fleshy tumor seated on the gums, and resembling a cock's comb.

SCLÉROSE, Sclerosis — s. de l'Encéphale, Sclerosis of the brain — s. du Foie, see Hepatitis, chronic — s. Musculaire progressive, see Paralysis, pseudohypertrophic — s. Spinale, Sclerosis, spinal.

SCLERO'sis, (from scleros,) (F.) Sclérose. See Induration of the areolar tissue, and Scleriosis. With Virchow, thickening with condensation.

SCLERO'SIS OF BONE, S. Ossium, Condensing Ostitis, Diffuse Hy'pertrophy of Bone. A result of ostitis, characterized by the filling of the medullary cavity with a compact osseous structure, and the formation of bone on the surface.

SCLERO'SIS OF THE BRAIN, Sclerencephalia.

SCLERO'SIS CO'RII, Scleroderma — s. Dermatos, Scleroderma — s. of the Liver, see Hepatitis, chronic — s. Ossium, Sclerosis of bone.

SCLERO'SIS, SPINAL, (F.) Sclérose Spinale. Two forms of this affection have been referred to: 1. Sclerosis of the antero-lateral columns of the spinal cord; and 2. Sclerosis of the posterior columns, generally described as locomotor ataxia. The former is essentially a hypertrophied condition of the connective tissue, with atrophy of the nerve-substance. See Atrophy, progressive muscular.

SCLEROSIS OF THE STOMACH, Gastric Cirrhosis, Fibroid Infiltration of the Stomach. A condition elsewhere described, under the name of Plastic Linitis. (F.) Sclérose de l'Estomac, Cirrhose gastrique.

SCLEROSIS TELA CELLULARIS ET ADIPOSAE, see Scleroderma.

Sclerosteno'sis Cutanea, (scleros, and συνος, 'contracted,') Induration of the areolar tissue.

Scleros'toma Duodena'le, Anchylostoma duodenale. A form of entozoon met with in Egypt and northern Italy, giving rise, by its presence in the duodenum and jejunum, to serious anæmia, Egyptian chlorosis, with bloody evacuations from the bowels. See Parasites and Worms.

Sclero'sus, (from scleros,) Hard.

Sclerot'ic, Sclerotica, Sclero'des, Scler'a, (from scleros,) Cor'nea opa'ca, Tu'nica du'ra seu albugin'ea seu du'rrior et crassior seu extima seu alba seu can'dida seu innomina'ta oculi, Sclero'tis, Scler'y-men, (F.) Sclérotique. A hard, resisting, opaque membrane, of a pearly white color and fibrous nature, which covers nearly the posterior four-fifths of the globe of the eye, and has the form of a sphere truncated in front. It is strengthened by the expansion of the muscles of the eye, to which expansion many anatomists have given the name Tu'nica albugin'ea seu tendino'sa. The subconjunctival sclerotic, (F.) Blanc de l'œil, forms the white of the eye, Albu'men seu Album seu Albu'go oculi, Lon'chades, Log'ades, Leu'cades. The sclerotic is penetrated posteriorly by a round opening, for the passage of the optic nerve; and, anteriorly, it has a much larger opening, Sul'cus sclerot'icæ, Fora'men sclerotice ant'erius, into which the transparent cornea is received. There are, besides, many small oblong apertures in it for the passage of nerves and vessels proceeding to the interior of the eye. Its inner surface is of a light brown color, owing to a delicate areolar tissue containing brown pigment cells; and hence called Membra'na seu Lam'ina fus'ca. In the fœtus, the sclerotic may be separated into very distinct laminae.

SCLEROT'IC, STAPHYLO'MA OF, see Staphyloma.

SCLEROT'IC ZONE, Arthritic Ring. Vessels given off from a ring of anastomosis of deep conjunctival vessels around the circumference of the cornea, perforating the sclerotic and anastomosing with those of the iris and choroid. This condition is seen in many cases of iritis.

Sclerot'ica, Sclerotic — s. Ceratoides, Cornea.

Sclerot'ical, Sclerotica'lis. Relating or appertaining to the sclerotic.

Scleroticectomy, Sclerectom'ia, (sclerotica, and εκτομή, 'excision,') The operation for forming an artificial pupil by excision of a portion of the sclerotic.

Sclerotici'tis, Scleritis.

Sclerot'ico-choroidi'tis, Poste'rior, Staphyloma, posterior.

Scleroticonyx'is, Scleronyx'is, Sclerotomyx'is, (sclerotica, and ὤξις, 'puncturing,') Perforation of the sclerotic in the operation for cataract by depression.

Scleroticotomy, (sclerotica, and τομή, 'incision,') The operation for cataract by cutting through the sclerotic.

Sclerot'icus, (from scleros,) Indurans.

Sclérotique, Sclerotic.

Sclero'tis, (from scleros,) Sclerotic.

Sclerotit'is, gen. Sclerotit'idis, Inflamma'tio Sclerot'icæ, Leuci'tis, Lonchadi'tis, Logadi'tis, Sclerit'is, Sclerociti'tis, Rheumat'ic ophthalm'ia, Ophthalm'ia arthrit'ica, (sclerotis, and itis,) Inflammation of the sclerotic coat of the eye.

Sclero'tium Cla'vus, (from scleros,) see Ergot — s. Giganteum, see Lycoperdon tuber.

Scler'otome, (σκληρος, 'hard,' and τομή, 'division,') A section of the skeleton has been so called by Goodsir.

Sclerotom'ia, Scleroticectomy.

Scler'ous (scleros, 'hard,') Tis'sue, Tissue, sclerous.

Sclerun'ticus, (σκληρυντικός,) Indurans.

Scler'us, (σκληρος,) Induration, Scirrhus.

Scler'y-men, Sclerotic.

Sclerymeni'tis, (sclerymen, and itis,) Inflammation of the sclerotic coat of the eye.

Scleryn'ticus, (σκληρυντικός,) Indurans.

Sclerys'ma, gen. Sclerys'matis, (σκληρυσμα, from scleros,) Induration; also, induration of the liver.

Sclerys'mus, (σκληρυσμος,) Scleriasis.

Sclopeta'rius, Sclopetic'us, (from sclopetum, 'a gun,') Relating to a gun. Hence, A'qua sclopeta'ria seu sclopetic'a, a water for gunshot wounds. Vul'nera sclopeta'ria seu sclopetic'a, gunshot wounds, &c.

Sclopetopla'gæ, (sclopetum, 'a gun,' and πλάγῃ, 'a wound,') Wounds, gunshot.

Scobs, gen. Scob'is, Pris'ma, Xys'ma, Ramentum, Rasu'ra. A shaving; also, an alkali; and the scoria of any metal.

Scolece'sis, (σκοληκισμός,) Helminthiasis.

Scoleci'asis, (σκοληκισμός,) Helminthiasis.

Scolecolog'ia, (σκοληξ, 'a worm,' and λογία, 'a discourse,') Helminthology.

Scole'sis, Scoliosis.

Sco'lex, gen. Scoli'cis, (σκοληξ, 'a worm,') Ascaris lumbricoides. Scolex was used by Müller, generically, for some imperfectly developed forms of tenia. The head of these being the most characteristic part, it was generally applied to the heads of all forms of cystic and tape worms.

Scolio'ma, gen. Scolio'matis, (σκολιωμα,) Scoliosis.

Scolio'sis, Scole'sis, Scolio'ma, Skolio'sis, Rhachioscolio'ma, (σκολιωσις, from σκολιος, 'crooked,' and osis,) A distortion of the spine to one side from shortening of the muscles or shrinking and atrophy. See Gibbosity and Hump.

Scolopen'dra, (σκολοπεδρία,) Asplenium scolopendrium.

Scolopen'dria, Asplenium ceterach, and A. scolopendrium.

Scolopomachæ'rion, (σκολοπαξ, 'the woodcock,' and μαχαίρα, 'a knife,' so called because it is bent a little at the extremity like a woodcock's bill.) A sort of blunt-pointed bistoury.

Scol'ymus Sati'vus, (σκολυμος,) Cynara scolymus.

Scoop, ([Teut.] Schoepe,) Cochlea'rē, (F.) Curette. A surgical instrument of the shape of a spoon, which is used for the extraction of certain foreign bodies. The scoop is often employed to extract balls impacted in the soft parts; to remove calculi from the urinary bladder in lithotomy, vegetations or soft foreign bodies from the interior of the uterus, &c. A small scoop is sometimes used to extract foreign bodies from the meatus auditorius externus, nasal fossæ, &c.

SCOOP EXTRACT'ION OF CAT'ARACT. A mode of operation by which the lens is removed by a thin, flat, concave scoop, so constructed as to pass readily behind the posterior surface of the cataract. The operation includes incision, iridectomy, laceration of the capsule, and removal of the lens by the scoop.

Scop, (scalp,) Head, Scalp.

Scop'a Re'gia, (scopa, 'a broom,') Ruscus.

Scop'arin, see Spartum scoparium.

Scopa'rius, (scopa, 'a broom,') see Spartum scoparium.

Scope, (σκοπή,) Scop'y, Scop'ia, Scop'ium, Scopos, (from σκοπεω, 'I look around,') A common suffix to words meaning 'view, inspection,' as stethoscope, stethoscopy, &c.

Scopoli'na Atropoi'des, (after J. A. Scopoli, Prof. at Pavia,) Hyoscyamus scopolia.

Scop'tula, Scapula.

Scop'ula, (dim. of scopa, 'a broom,') Brush.

Scor, (σκαρ, gen. σκαρος,) Excrement.

Scoracra'sia, Scoracratia.

Scoracra'ti'a, Scoracra'sia, Scatacra'sia, Scatacrati'a, Copracra'ti'a, Copracra'sia, Incontinentia Al'ei, (scor, and απαρια, 'want of control,') Want of power to retain the feces. Involuntary evacuation of the feces.

Scoracra'sia, Scatacra'sia, and Copracra'sia, although used in the same sense as scoracratia, really mean undue admixture of the excrement. See Scatacrasia.

Scorbut, Porphyra nautica, Purpura hæmorrhagica—s. des Alpes, Pellagra—s. de Terre, Purpura hæmorrhagica.

Scorbu'tic, Scorbu'ticus, (F.) Scorbutique, (from scorbutus, 'scurvy,') That which belongs to scurvy. One affected with scurvy. Applied, at times, indefinitely to a furfuraceous or scurfy—not scurvy—eruption.

Scorbu'tus, ([G.] Scharbock,) see Purpura—s. Alpinus, Pellagra—s. Nauticus, Porphyra nautica—s. Oris, Cancer aquaticus.

Scordine'ma, gen. Scordine'matis, (σκορδινημα,) Carebaria, Pandiculation.

Scordinis'mus, (σκορδινισμος,) Carebaria, Pandiculation.

Scor'dium, (σκορδιον, perhaps from scordon, 'garlic,' from similarity of smell,) Teucrium scor'dium.

Scor'don, (σκορδον,) Allium.

Sco'rith, Sulphur.

Sco'rium, Serotum.

Scor'odon, (σκοροδον,) Allium.

Scorodos'mine, (scorodon, and σμη, 'odor,') Oxide, cystic.

Scorpiodex'is, (σκορπιος, 'scorpion,' and δηξις, 'bite,'—more properly, Scorpiostig'ma; from σκορπιος, and στιγμα, 'puncture,') The sting of the scorpion.

Scor'pion, Scor'pio, Scor'pius, (σκορπιον, and σκορπιος, from σκορπιω, 'I enrage,') A genus of insects having a sting at the extremity of their tail, with which they make dangerous wounds. An Oil of Scorpion was once made from them, which is not now used.

Scorpiostig'ma, gen. Scorpiostig'matis, (scorpius, and στιγμα, 'a puncture,') Scorpiodexis.

Scor'pius, (σκορπιος,) Scorpion.

Scor'teum, 'a leather coat,' Serotum.

Scorzone'ra, S. humilis seu lana'ta seu nero'sa, Escorzone'ra, (from scurzo, old Spanish for viper,) Viperaria, Serpentaria Hispanica, Offic'inal viper's grass, Viper's grass, Goat's grass. Family, Cicchoraceæ. Sex. Syst. Syngenesia Polygamia. The roots have been used as alexipharmics, and in hypochondriacal disorders and obstructions of the viscera. The root of the Scorzonera Hispanica is esculent, but inefficacious as a drug.

Scotas'ma, gen. Scotas'matis, Scoto'ma, Scoto'dia, Scoto'sis, Scotos, (from σκοτος, 'darkness,') Obscurity of vision, darkness, Suffu'sio radians. See Scotodinia.

Scotch Fid'dle, Psora.

Scoto'dia, (σκοτοδια,) Scotasma, Scotodinia.

Scotodin'ia, Scoto'ma, Di'nus scoto'ma, Scotodine, Tenebrico'sa verti'go, Scot'os, Scotas'ma, Scoto'sis, Scot'omy, (σκοτοδινια, from σκοτος, 'darkness,' and δινω, 'I turn round,') Giddiness, with impaired sight, often succeeded by headache. Fixed blind spots in the field of vision, dependent on complete loss of sensibility of a portion of the retina, are called Scotomata. See Vertigo.

Scoto'ma, gen. Scoto'matis, (σκοτωμα,) Scotasma, Scotodinia.

Scot'os, (σκοτος,) Scotasma, Scotodinia.

Scoto'sis, (σκοτωσις,) Scotodinia.

Scott's Ac'id Bath, Nitromuriat'ic ac'id bath.

A bath of dilute aqua regia, employed by Dr. Scott, of India, as a remedy in hepatic diseases. Three pints by measure of muriatic acid, and two of nitric acid, are mixed to form the aqua regia. In preparing this for use, a pint of it is mixed with an equal quantity of water. The acid bath consists of three ounces of this dilute acid to every gallon of water.

Scrobic'ulus, (dim. of scrobs, 'a ditch,') Scrobic'ulum, (F.) Scrobicule, Fossette. A little ditch or furrow.

SCROBIC'ULUS COR'DIS, Anticar'dium, Procar'dium, (F.) Fossette du cœur, Avant-cœur, Anticœur. The pit of the stomach. The depression at the anterior part of the abdomen, below the xiphoid cartilage.

SCROBIC'ULUS VARI'OLÆ, Pockmark.

Scrof'æ, Serofula.

Scrof'ula, Scroph'ula, Scroph'ulæ, (from scrofa, 'a sow;' as Chœras is from χœρος, 'a hog,' because swine were presumed to be subject to a similar complaint,) Scrof'ulo'sis, Mor'bus scroph'ulo'sus, Vit'ium scroph'ulo'sum, Pædatroph'ia glandulo'sa, Stru'ma, Chœ'ras, Co'i'ras, Ta'bes glandula'ris, Adeno'sis scroph'ulo'sa, Scrof'fæ, King's evil, The Evil, Quince, Cruels, and Crewels (Scoticè), (F.) Scrophules, Scrofule, Scrofules, Strumes, Érouelles, Humeurs froides, Tubercules des glandes lymphatiques, Mal du Roi. A morbid state of the system usually characterized by indolent, glandular tumors, chiefly in the neck; suppurating slowly and imperfectly, and healing with difficulty; the disease ordinarily occurring in those of a sanguine temperament, with thick upper lip, &c. The tumors, after suppuration, degenerate into ulcers; which, in process of time, cicatrize, leaving scars. The internal organs are apt to be attacked in those disposed to scrofula; hence they are often the subjects of phthisis and mesenteric affections. Scrofula is hereditary; and is frequently excited by insufficient or improper regimen, and by a close, confined air during the first years of existence. The best treatment is:—to strengthen the system by animal diet, pure air, and exercise, cold bathing, or seawater bathing, &c. Scrofula may exist with or without tubercle. See Tubercle.

Scrof'uloder'ma, (scrof'ulo, and δερμα, 'the skin.) A chronic strumous inflammation of the skin, characterized by indolent red tubercular formations, which tend to unhealthy suppuration, with scabbing and ulceration; healing with distinct scarring.

SCROFULODERMA UNGUA'LE. Inflammation of the matrix of the nail in serofulous subjects.

Scrofulo'sis, Scrophulo'sis, Cucochym'ia seu Cachex'ia seu Dyscrasia scrofulosa, and Scrofulous cachex'ia, are used to signify the cachectic state of the system which characterizes scrofula. See Diathesis.

Scrofulous, Scrophulo'sus, Scrophula'rius, Stru'mous, Strumo'sus, (F.) Scrofuloux, Strumeux. Suffering from, or relating to, scrofula,—as scrofulous cachex'ia. See Scrofula.

Scrophulo'sus, Scrofulous.

Scro'tal, Scrota'lis, (from scrotum.) Relating to the scrotum; as Her'nia scrota'lis, scrotal hernia.

SCRO'TAL FIS'TULA. A urethral fistula having its external opening in the scrotum.

SCRO'TAL NERVE, see Genitoocrural nerve.

Scrotoce'lē, Oscheoce'lē, Oschoce'lē, (scrotum, and κηλη, 'a tumor') Her'nia scrota'lis, Scro'tal her'nia. Inguinal hernia, descending into the scrotum, Scro'tocele.

Scro'tum, (scortum, 'a leather coat') Sco'rium, Os'chē, Os'cheus, Os'chus, Os'cus, Os'cheon, Och'cus, Balan'tion, Pe'rin, Scor'tum, Co'lens, Cu'lens, Marsu'pium, Bur'sula, Bur'sa seu Bur'sa test'ium seu viril'is, Or'chas, Follic'ulus genita'lis, Her'nia, the Purse, the Cod, Cods, (F.) Les bourses. The integuments which cover the testes. These are nothing more than a prolongation of the skin of the inner part of the thighs, perinæum, and penis. The skin is remarkable for its brown color, for the numerous rugæ, especially when the scrotum is contracted; for the great number of sebaceous follicles it contains; and for the long and few hairs which issue from it in the adult. The scrotum is divided into two equal parts by a raphe, which extends from the anus to the root of the penis. Its organization is similar to that of the skin of other parts of the body, except that the chorion is thinner.

Scutel'la, (dim. of scutra, 'a dish') Cup.

Scutella'ria Carolinia'na, (from scutella, 'a cup,' in allusion to the form of the calyx,) S. integrifolia.

SCUTELLA'RIA GALERICULA'TA, Cassida galericula'ta, Tertiana'ria, Skull'cap, (F.) Casside bleue, Toque. Ord. Labiatae. Sex. Syst. Didynamia Angiospermia. This plant has a bitter taste and a garlicky smell. It has been esteemed especially serviceable in tertian ague.

SCUTELLA'RIA HYSSOPIFO'LIA, S. integrifolia.

SCUTELLA'RIA INTEGRIFO'LIA, S. hyssopifolia seu Carolinia'na,—another indigenous variety,—is an intense bitter.

SCUTELLA'RIA LATERIFLO'RA, Skull'cap, Mad-dog skull'cap, Mad'weed, Hood'wort, Blue Pimp'ernel. An indigenous plant, Scutellaria, (Ph. U. S.,) which grows in all parts of the United States in moist places. It was at one time esteemed a preventive of hydrophobia, but is probably possessed of little virtue of any kind. By some, however, it is regarded as a good nervine.

Scutic'ula Digito'rum Ma'nūs, Phalanges of the fingers.

Scut'ter, Diarrhoea.

Scu'tula, (pl. of scutulum, 'a little shield.') The yellow crusts which are formed by the drying up of vesicles, as in favus.

Sébacé, Sebaceous.

Seba'ceo-follic'ular, see Sebaceous.

Seba'ceous, Seba'ceus, (F.) Sébacé, (from sebum,) That which has the nature of suet,—as sebaceous or sebaceous-follicular tumors.

SEBA'CEOUS FLUX, Stearrhœa.

SEBA'CEOUS, SEBIP'AROUS or SEBIF'EROUS GLANDS, Sebaceous Follicles or Crypts, Pimela'denes, Folliculi seba'cei, Cryptæ seba'ceæ, Oil or Miliary glands, are small hollow organs, of a rounded or pyriform shape, seated in the substance of the skin, and opening on its surface by a small, excretory duct; furnishing a yellow, unctuous humor, Smegma cutaneum, Se'bum cutaneum, having some analogy with suet, which is destined to lubricate the surface of the body. Follicles of a similar nature exist around the corona glandis of the male, and under the skin of the labia majora and nymphæ of the female. They secrete a sebaceous matter, which emits a peculiar odor; and hence, after the name of one who described them, have been called Glandulæ odoriferae Tyso'ni, G. Tyso'ni, Ty'son's glands, and, also, Glandulæ odoriferae seu seba'ceæ glandis, G. coro'næ pe'nis, Folliculi seba'cei coro'næ glandis, Glandulæ odoriferae præputii, Cryptæ præputiales.

Sebastoma'nia, (σεβαστος, 'worshipped,' and mania,) Religious insanity, Demonomania.

Sebeste'na, Cor'dia myxa seu sebeste'na seu Africa'na seu domes'tica seu obli'qua, Sebeste'na officina'lis, Seb'esten, Myx'a, Cor'nus sanguinea, Pru'nus sebeste'na, Smoothleaved Cor'dia, Assyr'ian plum, (F.) Sebestier myxa. Ord. Cordiaceæ. The dark, black fruit of the Sebeste'na possesses glutinous and aperient qualities, and is exhibited, in decoction, in various diseases of the chest.

Sebestier Myxa, Sebestena.

Sebif'erous, (sebum, 'suet, fat,' and ferre, 'to carry,') see Sebaceous.

Sebip'arous, (sebum, 'suet, fat,' and pario, 'I bring forth,') see Sebaceous.

Seborrhag'ia, (sebum, 'suet, fat,' and παρην, 'a breaking forth,') Stearrhœa.

Sécateur des Amygdales, (from secare, 'to cut,') Amygdalatome—s. par Écrasement, Écraseur.

Secern'ent, (seccernere, 'to separate,') Secreting. Secern'ing, Secreting—s. Substance of the kidney, see Kidney.

Seces'sio Fæ'cum, (secedere, secessum, 'to secede,') Defecation.

Seces'sus, gen. Seces'sus, Vulva—s. Niger, Melana.

Sèche, Sepia.

Secluso'rium, (secludere, seclusum, 'to shut up,') Sac.

Sec'ondary, (secundus, 'the second,') (F.) Secondeire. Something that acts subordinately to another; as the secondary symptoms of a disease; that is, those which supervene on the primary. A secondary amputation is one performed after the constitutional effects of an injury have mainly passed away. See Fever, secondary, and Hæmorrhagia, for Secondary hemorrhage.

Secundines, Secundines.

Secre'ta, (pl. of secretum,) (Same etymon as Secretion,) Things or matters secreted or separated from the blood.

Sécréteur, Secreting.

Secre'ting, Secreto'rius, Secern'ing, Secern'ent, Secre'tory or Se'cretory, Excern'ent, (F.) Sécréteur, Sécrétoire. That which secretes; as a secreting organ.

Secre'tio, Secretion—s. Lactis, Galactosis—s. Lotii, Uropoësis—s. Urinæ, Uropoësis—s. Vicaria, see Vicarious.

Secre'tion, Secre'tio, Apoc'risis, (seccernere, seccretum, 'to separate,') An organic function, which is chiefly executed in the glands, and consists in an elaboration or separation of the materials of the blood, at the very extremities of the arterial system, or rather of the vascular secretory apparatus, and which differs in each organ according to its particular structure; hence the formation of different fluids—bile, saliva, urine, milk, &c. The term is also applied to the thing secreted — Secre'tum. The secretions are of three kinds—exhalant, follicular, and glandular. Simple secretions are those which exist ready formed in the blood, and pass out of the vessels by an act of exosmosis, while the more complicated are formed from the liquor sanguinis by cell agency. The latter alone are by some called secretions.

Sécrétoire, Secreting.

Secre'to-mo'tory, Secre'tomoto'rius. An epithet applied to nerves which influence secretion in the manner of excito-motory nerves.

Secreto'rius, Secreting.

Secre'tory, Secreting.

Secre'tum, see Secretion.

Sect, Method'ical, (secta, from secare, sectum, 'to cut,') Methodists.

Sec'tio, gen. Secti'onis, Sec'tion. The act of cutting. A division.

SEC'TIO ABDOMINA'lis, see Gastrotomy. The term Gastros'tomy (gastro, and stoma, 'mouth') has been applied to an operation, of doubtful efficacy, to establish an artificial mouth connecting directly with the stomach, by an incision into that organ, usually made in the line of the left linea semilunaris.

Secundi'næ, Secundines.

Sec'undines, Hys'tera, Deuter'ion, Me'træ, Secun'dæ, Secundi'næ, Afterbirth, Afterburden, (F.) Arrière-faix, Secundines, Délivre, (from secundus, 'second,') All that remains in the uterus after the birth of the child — viz., the placenta, a portion of the umbilical cord, and the membranes of the ovum. These are commonly not expelled till some time after the birth of the foetus; hence their name. See Délivrance.

Secun'dus Proprio'rum Auric'ulæ, Retrahens auris.

Se'cus, gen. Se'cūs, Sex.

Sedan'tia, Sedatives.

Seda'tion, Seda'tio, (sedare, sedatum, 'to settle or assuage,') Pau'sis, Catapau'sis. The effect induced by sedatives.

Sed'atives, Sedati'va, Pauon'ta, Sedan'tia, Adeo'ta, Catasta'tica, Deprimen'tia, Depress'ants, (F.) Sédetifs, Calman'ts, Tempérants. Medicines which directly depress the vital forces, and which are consequently employed whenever it is necessary to diminish preternaturally increased action. The chief reputed sedatives are Acidum hydrocyanicum, Acidum hydrosulphuricum, Tabacum, Bloodletting, and certain gases by inhalation, as azote, carbonic acid [?], carburetted and sulphuretted hydrogen.

Sed'hee, Bangue.

Sed'iment, Sedimen'tum, Lem'ma, Residen'tia, (from sedeo, 'I sink down,') (F.) Dépôt. A deposit formed by the precipitation of some one or more of the substances held in solution or suspension by a liquid. That which is formed in urine, at the time of cooling, has been called Hypos'tasis, Hypost'e'ma, Residen'tia, Subsiden'tia, (F.) Dépôt de l'urine. This sediment or deposit varies in different states of the system. In calculous affections it is one of the most important objects of attention.

Sedimen'tum, Sediment — s. Urinæ latericium, see Lateritious — s. Urinæ pityroides, see Fur-furaceous.

Sedil'ia, (sedere, 'to sit,') Nates.

Sed'litz, Min'eral Wa'ters of, Seidlitz water. Springs in Bohemia, near Prague, which are simple salines. They contain sulphate and carbonate of magnesia, chloride of magnesium, sulphates of potassa, soda, and lime, chloride of magnesium, carbonic acid and carbonate of lime. They are employed as purgatives in a multitude of diseases.

ARTIFIC'IAL SED'LITZ POW'DERS, in no respect, however, resembling the natural ingredients, are formed of Sodii et Potassii tartras, ʒij., Sodii bicarbon., ʒij., in one paper; Acid. tartaric., gr. xxxv., in another. To be dissolved separately in water, and mixed. They are called, also, Rochelle powders. See Powders, soda. — The French Codex (1866) has an Eau saline purgative, E. de Sedlitz, Aqua Sedlitzensis, composed of sulphate of magnesia and carbonic acid water. See Pulveres effervescentes aperientes.

Sédon Brûlant, Sedum — s. Reprise, Sedum telephium.

Se'dum, S. a'crè seu glacia'lè seu mi'nus seu vermicula'rè, (sedeo, 'I sit,' owing to its attachment to rocks and walls,) Illec'e'bra, Hellee'e'bra, Illec'e'brum, Vermicula'rè, Vermicula'ris, Pi'per mura'lè, Semperi'vum a'crè, Aci'chryson, Æo'nion, Wall pepper, Jack of the Buttery, Prick'et, Bird's bread, Stonecrop, Biting Stonecrop, Small House'leek, (F.) Joubarbe âcre, Orpin brûlant, Vermiculaire brûlante, Sédon brûlant. Ord. Crassulaceæ. Sex. Syst. Decandria Pentagynia. In its recent state it is very acrid, and proves both emetic and cathartic. Externally, in the form of cataplasm, it produces vesications and erosions. It has been recommended in cancerous and malignant ulcers.

Se'dum Rhodi'ola and S. Al'bum, (F.) Trique-madame, have similar properties.

SE'DUM, Saxifraga granulata — s. Album, see Sedum — s. Glaciale, Sedum — s. Majus, Semperi-vum tectorum — s. Minus, Sedum — s. Rhodi-ola, see Sedum.

Formerly used as a cataplasm in cuts, hemorrhoids, corns, whitlows, &c.

SE'DUM TELEPHOI'DES, S. telephium — s. Vermiculare, Sedum.

Seed, ([Sax.] ræd,) Semen, Sperm.

Segmen'ta Cartilagin'ea, (pl. of segmentum, 'a segment,') see Trachea.

Segmenta'tion, Segmenta'tio, (segmentum, 'a segment,' itself from seco, 'I cut,') The act of being divided into segments or portions. (F.) Segmentation, Fractionnement, Sillonement. A term applied to the division of the vitellus or yolk into 'segments,' each containing a transparent vesicle, which may be a descendant of the primordial or germ cell.

Seg'ments, Ver'tebral, Somatomes.

Segnit'ia, Segnit'ies, (from segnis, 'sluggish,') Sluggishness or torpor in the exercise of a function: — as SEGNI'ES AL'vi, Torpor of the bowels; SEGNI'ES VIR'tum, Languor.

Segnit'ies, Segnitia.

Segray, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Near Pithiviers, in Gâtinais, in the French department of Loiret, there is a chalybeate spring, which has some reputation.

Se'gu, Sago.

Seid'litz, Sedlitz.

Seid'schütz, Seyd'schütz or Said'schütz, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Bitter springs, in the neighborhood of those of Püllna and Sedlitz, in Bohemia, which contain chiefly sulphate, nitrate, muriate, and carbonate of magnesia, sulphates of potassa, soda, and lime; carbonate of lime, iron, and manganese. The water is an excellent cathartic, and is well known in Europe.

fossa, Turk'ish Sad'dle, (F.) Selle Turcique ou du Turc. A depression at the upper surface of the sphenoid bone, which is bounded, anteriorly and posteriorly, by the clinoid processes, and lodges the pituitary gland. It is so called from its resemblance to a Turkish saddle. The broad rough plate, behind, and somewhat overhanging the sella Turcica, is the Dorsum Ephip'pii.

Selle Turcique, Sella Turcica—s. du Turc, Sella Turcica.

Sels Neutres, Neutral salts.

Selters, Seltz or Seltz'er, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Cold, acidulous springs, the source of which is at Seltz, nine leagues from Strasburg, and in the department of the Bas-Rhin. They chiefly contain carbonates of soda, chloride of sodium, sulphates of soda, lime, magnesia, and iron, and much carbonic acid. They are refrigerant, tonic, diuretic, and aperient, but are not much frequented.

ARTIFIC'IAL SELTZ'ER WA'TER may be made from muriatic acid, gr. xxxv., water, Oj., white marble, gr. iij. Keep in a stoppered bottle till dissolved. Add carbonate of magnesia, gr. v., and, after some time, subcarbonate of soda, gr. xxxij.

The French Codex (1866) has a Poudre de Seltz, Poudre gazeuse neutre, made of tartaric acid and bicarbonate of soda, equal parts. This is much used on the continent of Europe, more especially mixed with olaret. In the United States the simple carbonated water, Aqua ac'id'i carbon'ici, is used for the same purpose. See Acidulous water, simple.

The French Codex (1866) has an Eau acidule saline, Aqua acidulo-salsa, as a substitute for Seltzer and similar waters.

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient consists, essentially, of the articles that enter into the Artificial Sedlitz Powders, with a smaller quantity of the Rochelle salt, all highly dried, well mixed, and preserved in well-stopped bottles.

Sembel'la, Selibra.

Semecar'pus Anacar'dium, (σημιον, 'a mark,' and καρπος, 'fruit',) Avicennia tomentosa.

Semeiog'raphy, (σημιωγραφια,) Semeiogra'phia, Semiography, Semiogra'phia, Symptomato'graphy, (σημιον, 'a symptom,' and γραφη, 'a description',) A description of symptoms or signs of disease.

Semeiol'ogy, Semeiot'icē, Semeiol'ogy, Semeiot'icē, Phenomenolog'ia, (σημιων, 'a symptom,' and λογος, 'a discourse',) (F.) Séméiotique. The branch of pathology whose object is the doctrine of the symptoms or signs of disease.

Semei'on, (σημιον,) Sign, Symptom—s. Boethematicum, Indication.

Semeio'sis, (σημιωσις,) Semeiology.

Semeiot'icē, (σημιωτικη,) Semeiology.

Semeiot'icus, (σημιωτικος,) Symptomatic.

Séméiotique, Semeiology.

Sē'men, gen. Sem'inis, (semo, 'I sow',) That which is sown. Seed of plants and animals.

SE'MEN, Sperm—s. Badian, Illicium anisatum—s. Cinæ, see Artemisia santonica—s. Contra, see Artemisia santonica—s. Contra d'Alep, Artemisia santonica—s. Contra vermes, Artemisia santonica—s. Masculinum seu virile seu genitale, Sperm—s. Muliebre, Sperm (of the female)—s. Sanctum, see Artemisia santonica—s. Santonici, see Artemisia santonica—s. Zedoariae, see Artemisia santonica.

Semence, (from semen,) Seed, Sperm—s. de Citronille, see Cucurbita pepo.

Sem'i, (from ἡμισ, 'half',) Semi or demi, in composition, universally signifies 'half'; both in French and English.

Semialbinis'mus, (semi, and albus, 'white',) A diminution in the color of the skin, affecting negroes only.

Semian'imis, Semimor'tuus, Sem'inex, Semivi'vus, (semi, and animus, 'life',) Half-living. Half-dead.

Sem'ibulb of the Fe'male, Bulbus vestibuli.
Semibul'bus Cor'poris Spongio'si, Bulbus vestibuli.

Semicanalic'ulus, (semi, and canaliculus, 'a small channel,') Sulcus.

Semicana'lis, (semi, and canalis, 'a channel,') Sulcus.

Semiceph'alus, Hemicephalus.

Semicir'cular, Semicircula'ris, (semi, and circulus, 'a circle,') (F.) Demicirculaire. That which represents the half of a circle.

SEMICIR'ULAR CANALS, Canal'es seu Duc'tus semicircula'res seu tubu'for'mes seu circula'res, Semicir'culi os'sei, Fu'nes seu Canalic'uli semiannulla'res labyrin'thi, (F.) Canaux demicirculaires, are seated in the pars petrosa of the temporal bone, and open into the vestibule, behind which they are situate. They are three in number, of which one is superior or vertical, — canalis semicircula'ris vertica'lis supe'rior; another posterior or oblique, — canalis semicircula'ris vertica'lis poste'rior seu inter'nus seu infe'rior; and the third exterior or horizontal, — canalis semicircula'ris horizonta'lis seu exte'rius seu exte'rior seu me'dius seu min'imus seu brevis'simus. Their parietes are formed of a bony, compact, hard plate. Their uses in addition are not known: at their termination they have the elliptical arrangements called ampullæ; and by both extremities they open into the vestibule, in the sac at its superior part — the Sac'culus ellip'ticus seu oblon'gus seu hemiellip'ticus seu semiova'lis seu commu'nis, Al'veus seu Utric'ulus seu Si'nus commu'nis seu me'dia'nus, Sinus seu Al'veus utriculo'sus, Sac'culus vestibuli, Me'dian si'nus, Utric'le. In front of the Sacculus ellipticus, nearer the cochlea, and opposite the foramen ovale, is the Sac'culus spha'ricus seu rotun'dus seu pro'prius.

The Membranous semicircular canals, Canal'es semicircula'res membra'nei, Tu'buli seu duc'tus semicircula'res, follow the same course as the osseous, described above.

Semicir'culi Os'sei, Semicircular canals.

Semicir'culus Exsculp'tus, 'semicircle cut out,' Hiatus diaphragmatis aorticus.

Semicon'gium, Half a gallon, or four pints.

Semicu'bium, Semicu'pium, Inses'sio, Inses'sus, Encathis'ma, Excathis'ma, (F.) Demibain, (semi, and cubare, 'to lie down,') A half-bath, or such as receives only the hips or extremities.

Semicu'pium, Bath, half, Semicubium.

Semifibula'us, Peronæus brevis.

Semiho'mo, (semi, 'half,' and homo, 'man,') Atropa mandragora.

Semiinteros'seus In'dicis, Abductor indicis — s. Pollicis, Opponens pollicis.

Semili'bra, Selibra.

Semilla del Guacharo. Various kinds of hard and dry fruits, found in the stomach of the young Guacharo, a sort of nocturnal bird. The fruits are a celebrated South American remedy in ague.

Semilu'nar, Semiluna'ris, (F.) Demilunaire ou Semilunaire, (semi, and luna, 'the moon,') Having the shape of a halfmoon.

SEMIU'NAR BONE, Lunare os.

SEMIU'NAR CAR'TILAGES, Semilu'nar fi'brocar'tilages, Sig'moid car'tilages, Cartilag'ines sig'moides seu semiluna'res, are two fibrocartilages, which exist between the condyles of the os femoris and the articular surfaces of the tibia. The innermost, which is longer from before to behind than transversely, is nearly semicircular. The outermost forms almost an entire circle; an arrangement, in both cases, corresponding to the different surfaces of the tibia. They are thicker at their outer circumference, which is convex, than at the inner, which is concave and very thin. Both are inserted, before and behind, into the spine of the tibia by means of fibrous fasciæ.

SEMIU'NAR FOLD OF DOUGLAS. A lunated edge marking a deficiency in the posterior wall of the sheath of the rectus abdominis muscle.

SEMIU'NAR GAN'GLION, Gan'glion abdomina'le seu splanchnicum seu transver'sum seu sola're, G. surréal (Ch.), belongs to the great sympathetic. These ganglia present considerable variety, and are deeply situate in the abdomen, above and behind the suprarenal capsules. They correspond, posteriorly, to the pillars of the diaphragm and the aorta. They have the shape of a crescent reversed, often surrounded by other ganglia of a smaller size. From their periphery numerous filaments proceed, which go to the formation of the solar plexus.

SEMIU'NAR NOTCH OF THE STER'NUM, Fourchette — s. Valves, Sigmoid valves.

Semiluna're Os, Lunare os.

Semilu'nula (dim. of luna, 'moon') Un'guium, (semi, and lunula,) see Nail.

Sem'imas, gen. Semima'ris, (semi, and mas, 'a male,') Eunuch.

Semimacula'tus, Eunuch.

Semimas'culus, (semi, and masculus, 'male,') Eunuch.

Semimembra'neous, Semimembranosus.

Semimembra'neus, (semi, and membrana, 'membrane,') Semimembra'neus, (F.) Ischio-popliti-fémoral, Ischio-popliti-tibial, (Ch.) Semimembraneus. A muscle situate at the posterior part of the thigh. It is flat, thin, narrow, and aponeurotic in its upper third; broader and fleshy in the middle, and tendinous below. It is attached above to the tuberosity of the ischium; and below — by a tendon, which has three divisions — to the outer condyle of the femur, and to the posterior and inner part of the internal tuberosity of the tibia. This muscle is a rotator inwards, and a flexor of the leg. It can also bend the thigh upon the leg. In standing it maintains the pelvis in position, and can even draw it downwards.

Semimor'tuus, (semi, and mortuus, 'dead,') Semianimis.

Sem'ina (pl. of semen, 'seed') Catapu'tiæ Majo'ris, see Ricinus communis.

SEM'INA FRIG'IDA MAJO'RA. The greater cold seeds. The ancients gave this name to the emulsive seeds of the cucumber, melon, gourd, and watermelon.

SEM'INA FRIG'IDA MINO'RA. The less'er cold seeds. The ancients gave this name to the seeds of the lettuce, purslane, endive, and cichory.

SEM'INA INDAGEER, Nerium antidysentericum — s. Ricini Vulgaris, see Ricinus communis.

Sem'inal, (from semen,) Spermatic.

SEM'INAL CYSTS. A variety of retention-cyst or tumor, under which are included encysted hydrocele and hydrocele of the spermatic cord or spermatocele. The fluid obtained from these cysts usually contains seminal filaments or spermatozoa.

SEM'INAL FIL'AMENTS, Spermatozoa — s. Fluid, Sperm — s. Granules, see Granule.

Semina'le Mem'brum, 'seminal member,' Penis.

Semina'lis, Spermatic.

Seminervo'sus, (semi, and nervus, 'a sinew,') Semitendinosus.

Sem'inex, gen. Semin'icis, (semi, and nex, 'death,') Semianimis.

Semin'ia Morbo'rum, (seminium, 'a seed store,') Predisposition.

Seminiferous, (semen, and fero, 'I carry,') Spermatoph'orous. An epithet given to the vessels which secrete and convey the seminal fluid.

Sem'inist, (from semen,) Animalculist. The term was, also, used for one who believed that the new being was formed by an admixture of the seed of the male with the supposititious seed of the female.

Semin'ium, 'a seed store,' Sperm.

Semiog'raphy, Semeiography.

Semiology, Semeiology.
Semi'on, (σημιον.) Sign.
Semiot'ic, Symptomatic.
Semiorbicula'ris, see Orbicular muscles.
Semiot'icē, Semeiotice — s. Faciei, Physiognomy.
Semipes'tis, Typhus.
Semiple'gia, (semi, and πληγη, 'a stroke,') Hemiplegia.
Semisex'tum, Hemiection.
Semisicil'icus. A weight of one drachm or three scruples.
Semisidera'tio, (semi, and sideratus, 'planet struck,') Hemiplegia.
Semisidera'tus, see Hemiplegia.
Semisom'nis, (semi, and somnus, 'sleep,') Coma.
Semisop'itus, (semi, and sopio, sopitum, 'I put to sleep,') Coma.
Semisopo'rus, (semi, and sopor, 'sleep,') Coma.
Semispec'ulum, (semi, and speculum, 'a mirror,') An instrument used for dilating the incision made into the neck of the bladder in the operation of lithotomy.
Semispina'lis Cap'itis, see Complexus.
SEMISPINA' LIS COL' LI, Semispinalis seu transversospinalis seu spina'lis seu transversa'lis col'li, Artic'ulospinalis, Spina'lis cervic'is, Transverso-spinalis, (F.) Demi-épineux ou transversaire-épineux du cou. This muscle arises from the transverse processes of the six uppermost dorsal vertebrae, by an equal number of distinct tendons, which run obliquely under the complexus, and is inserted into the spinous processes of all the cervical vertebrae, except the first and last. Its action is to extend the neck obliquely backwards and to one side.
SEMISPINA' LIS DOR' SI, Semispinalis externus, Transversospinalis dor' si, Semispinalis (Riolan), Transverso-spinalis, (F.) Demi-épineux du dos, Transversaire-épineux du dos. This muscle arises from the transverse processes of the seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth dorsal vertebrae, by as many distinct tendons, which soon grow fleshy; and then again become tendinous, and are inserted into the spinous processes of the sixth or seventh uppermost dorsal, and two lowest cervical vertebrae, by as many tendons. Its action is to extend the spine obliquely backwards.
SEMISPINA' LIS EXTER' NUS, Semispinalis dorsi — s. Internus, Transversalis dorsi — s. Spinatus, Longissimus dorsi, Semispinalis dorsi.
Semispina'tus Col'li, Semispinalis colli.
Semis'sis, Se'mis. The half of a pound, ounce, drachm, &c.
Semitendino'sus, Seminervo'sus, (F.) Ischio-crēti-tibial, Ischio-prētibial, (Ch.) Demi-tendineux, Demi-nerveux. This muscle is situate at the posterior part of the thigh. It extends obliquely, downwards and inwards, from the tuberosity of the ischium — to which it is attached by a flat tendon, common to it and the biceps — as far as the posterior and inner part of the tibia, to which it is attached by means of another round tendon. Its fibres are commonly interrupted by an aponeurosis. Its uses are the same as those of the semimembranosus.
Semitertia'na, (semi, and tertiana, 'tertian,') Hemitritea.
Semiun'cia, (semi, and uncia, 'an ounce,') Hemioncion.
Sem'ivir, gen. Semiviri, (semi, and vir, 'a man,') Eunuch.
Semiviv'us, (semi, and vivus, 'alive,') Semianimis.
Sem'ola, Bul'lock's. A farinaceous article of diet, which is recommended as highly nutritious and easily digestible, consequently well adapted for infants and invalids; said to consist of the gluten of wheat, with a small proportion of starch. Semola and Semolina resemble each other greatly. They appear, indeed, to be identical.

Semoli'na, Man'na croup. This may be made by grinding wheat in an apparatus, separating the flour from the middlings, dressing the latter four different times in a bolting mill, and sifting through parchment sieves, until the product is perfectly freed from bran. In Poland, it is called Cra'cow groats.

Semolina is generally imported into England from the Baltic, and in Russia is said to be manufactured from buckwheat. It has a granular form like some kinds of oatmeal, a dingy white color, a farinaceous, somewhat insipid, taste, and is well adapted for the diet of children affected with derangement of the bowels. By analysis it is found to consist of the gluten of wheat with a certain proportion of the starch, part of the latter having been removed.

Sempervi'vum A'crē, (semper, 'always, and vivus, 'alive, because always green,') Sedum.

SEMPERVI'VUM TECTO'RUM, S. majus seu tecto-rum, Aizoön, Beiahatalen, Bupthalmus, Bar'ba Jo'eis, Agriocin'ara, Andrachahara, Chrysosper'mum, Houseleek, Sen'green, Feics, Fouets, (Prov.) Cyphel, Jupiter's Beard, (F.) Joubarbe des toits. The leaves have a mild, subacid austerity, and are often applied to bruises and old ulcers.

Semp'stresses' Pal'sy, see Palsy, semp'stresses'.

Se'muda, (σημδα.) Betula.

Semun'cia, Hemioncion.

Se'na, Cassia senna.

Séné, Cassia senna — s. d'Amérique, Cassia Marilandica — s. Faux, Colutea — s. Indigène, Colutea — s. des Prés, Gratiola officinalis.

Senebie'ra Coron'opus, (after J. Senebier, the naturalist, of Geneva,) Cochlearia coronopus.

Sen'eca Oil, (after the Seneca Indians,) Petroleum, (New York.)

Sene'cio, S. vulga'ris, (sener, 'an old man, in allusion to the grayish down on many species,) Erig'erum, Cor'talon, Erig'eron, Ground'sel, Fire-weed, (Sc.) Groundie Swallow, (F.) Senecion commun. Ord. Compositae. Sex. Syst. Syngenesia Polygamia Superflua. A common plant in Europe; frequently applied, bruised, to inflammations and ulcers, as a refrigerant and antiscorbutic.

SENE'CIO AUR'EUS, Gold'en rag'weed, Wild vale'rian, Life root, Squaw root; indigenous, is an excitant, diaphoretic, and diuretic. The dried plant is used in decoction; — 3ss. to Oj. of water.

SENE'CIO HIERACIFO'LIUS, Erechtites hieracifolius.

SENE'CIO JACOBÆ'A, Jacobæ'a, St. James's Wort, Rag'wort, (Sc.) Binnwede, Weebo, (F.) Jacobée. The leaves have a roughish, bitter, subacid, and extremely nauseous taste. A decoction has been used in dysentery. A poultice of the leaves has been recommended in rheumatic affections, and a decoction of the root has often been employed in cases of wounds and bruises.

SENE'CIO VULGA'RIS, Senecio.

Senec'on Commun, Senecio.

Senec'ta, Senectus.

SENEC'TA AN'GUIUM. The cast skin of a serpent. A decoction of it was said to cure deafness.

SENEC'TA DECREP'ITA, Decrepitude — s. Extrema, Decrepitude — s. Summa, Decrepitude — s. Ultima, Decrepitude.

Senec'tus, gen. Senectus, Senec'ta, (from sener, 'an old person,') Ge'ras, Se'nium, Æ'tas seni'lis seu prov'e'cta seu ma'la, Old age, Seni'ty, (F.) Viellesse. The last period of life, commencing, according to some, at 60 years of age — according to M. Flourens, at 70 — but varying according to numerous circumstances. It is characterized by progressive diminution of the physical and mental faculties. See Age.

SENEC'TUS UL'TIMA, Decrepitude.

Sen'ega, Polygala senega.

Sen'egæ Ra'dix, see Polygala senega.

Sen'egal, Gum, Gum'mi Senegalen'se seu Sen'-eca seu Sen'ega seu Sen'ica. The exudation from Aca'cia seu Mimo'sa Sen'egal. Ord. Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Polygamia Monœcia — growing in that part of Africa through which the river Senegal runs. It is in loose or single drops, much larger than gum Arabic or the gum which exudes from the cherry tree, and is much more difficult of solution than the former.

Sens, Sense — s. Génital, Appetite, venereal.

Sensa'tion, Sensa'tio, (sentire, sensum, 'to feel,') Æsthe'ma. The consciousness or cognizance by the brain of an impression caused by an external body on the organs of the senses, (F.) Sentiment. It is not necessarily, however, confined to bodies external to us, for we can receive an impression by touching any part of our own body. The body which communicates the impressions needs but to be external to the part impressed. Sensations are divided into external, internal, and morbid. The external are communicated by the five organs of the senses. The internal are such as occur within the body, and arise from some alteration in the function of the part for the time being. Hunger and thirst are internal sensations, as well as all the natural wants. Morbid sensations may be either internal or external. Objective sensations are produced by impressions on the peripheral nerves, as in vision, audition, &c. Subjective sensations are such as originate centrally or in the encephalon, as tinnitus aurium.

Sensa'tional, Sentient.

Sense, Sen'sus, Sen'sio, Æsthe'sis, (F.) Sens. A faculty, possessed by animals, of appreciating impressions from external objects. The senses are five in number; sight, hearing, smell, taste, and touch. Of these, the first two and the last administer more to the intellect, and hence have been called, by some, the intellectual senses; the other two seem more connected with the nutrition of the body, and hence have been termed corporeal or nutritive senses. Other senses have been suggested — as the intense sensation experienced during the venereal act; a sense of heat and cold; a muscular sense, a common sense or cœnesthesis, &c.

Sen'ses, Ner'vous Sys'tem of the, Medulla oblongata.

Sensibil'itas, Sensibility — s. Anomala, see Irritable — s. Aucta, see Irritable — s. Morbosa, see Irritable.

Sensibil'ity, Sensibil'itas, (sentire, sensum, 'to feel,' and habilis, 'able,') Æsthe'ma. The faculty of receiving and transmitting impressions, and having the consciousness of them. It thus includes three secondary properties, Impressibil'ity, (F.) Impressionabilité, Impressibilité; Transmissibil'ity, and Perceptibil'ity. Bichat defines it as the property possessed by living bodies, of receiving impressions, whether the individual be conscious of them or not. In the former case, where conscious, he calls the sensibility animal; in the latter, where not, he terms it organic. This last is common to vegetables and animals, and presides over nutrition, absorption, exhalation, secretion, &c. The other does not exist in vegetables: it is the origin of the sensations — olfaction, vision, gustation, audition, thirst, hunger, pain, &c. There are few parts of the animal body which are not sensible — if not in health — in disease. The free extremities of the hair and nails, and the epidermis, are not so. See Insensibility.

SENSIBIL'ITY, RECUR'RENT, see Vertebral nerves.

Sensiferous, (sensus, and ferre, 'to carry,') Sentient.

Sen'sio, Sense.

Sen'sitive, Sensiti'vus, (F.) Sensitif. Having the faculty of feeling. Relating or appertaining to the senses, or to sensation.

Sensito'rium, Sensorium.

Senso'ri-volit'ional. A term applied to nervous fibres which pass to and from the cerebro-spinal axis, and are respectively concerned in sensation and volition.

Senso'rial, Sentient.

SENSO'RIAL POW'ER, according to Dr. Wilson Philip, is composed of the two functions of sensation and volition. Dr. Darwin included in it the power of muscular contraction; but it ought not to be extended to acts in which there is not consciousness.

Senso'rium, S. commu'nē, Or'ganon senso'rium inter'num, Sensito'rium, Empo'rium spirituum, Æsthe'terion, Sen'sory. The common centre of sensations. By many it is considered to be represented by the optic thalami, the corpora striata, and the ganglionic nuclei of the nerves of the different senses.

Sen'sory, Sensorium, Sentient.

SEN'SORY GAN'GLIA. A name given by Dr. Carpenter to a series of ganglionic masses at the base of the brain, which are in direct communication with the nerves of sensation — as the olfactory, optic, auditory, and gustatory.

SEN'SORY NERVES, Nerves of sensa'tion, are so called in contradistinction to Motor nerves. There are general sensory nerves — as those connected with the posterior part of the spinal marrow, and the fifth pair; and special sensory, as those of the senses.

Sen'sus Ægritu'dinis, 'a feeling of sickness,' Indisposition — s. Osmometricus, Olfaction — s. Perversus, Pseudæsthesia.

Sen'tient, Sen'tiens, (from sentire, 'to feel,') Sen'sory, Ideäg'enous, Senso'rial, Sensa'tional, Sensiferous. Feeling; causing feeling.

SEN'TIENT EXTREMITIES OF NERVES are their minute terminations in the organs.

Sentiment, see Sensation.

Senti'na, Pituitary gland.

Separato'rium, (separare, separatum, 'to separate,') A surgical instrument, for separating the pericranium from the skull.

A Sep'aratory, Vitrum Hypoclept'icum, is a pharmaceutical vessel for separating fluids of different densities from each other.

Sepedogen'esis, Sepedogenesis.

Sep'edon, (σπιδων,) Putrefaction.

Sepedono'des, (σπιδωνιδης,) Putrid.

Sepedonogen'esis, Sepedogen'esis, (sepedon, and genesis, 'generation,') A septic disposition or tendency; such as is met with in typhus gravior.

Se'pes, Se'pes, 'a hedge,' 'a row,' as Se'pes seu Se'ries seu Pec'ten den'tium — a row of teeth.

SE'PES DEN'TIUM, see Sepes.

Seph'irus, Scleriasis.

Se'pia, (σπια,) S. Officina'lis, Se'pium, Cuttle-fish, (Sc.) Hosefish, Slievefish, (F.) Sèche. Class, Cephalopoda. The osseous part of the cuttlefish, (F.) Os de Sèche — Præcipitans magnum — has been used as an absorbent, and is often added to toothpowders.

Seplasia'rius. A name formerly given to one who sold perfumes, ointments, &c. (It is derived from Seplasia, the name of a public place at Capua, where such preparations were frequently sold.) A druggist.

Sepsichym'ia, Septochymia.

Sep'sis, (σηψις.) Putrefaction.

Septæ'mia, Septhæ'mia, Septicæ'mia, Sep'tic Fe'ver, (σηπτος, 'putrid,' and αίμα, 'blood,') Putrid Infection. A morbid condition of the blood produced by septic or putrid matters, — animal poisons, especially, — the inhalation of foul air, or septic gases. It resembles pyæmia in its symptoms. The latter may be regarded, however, as a purulent infection; septæmia, as a putrid infection.

Sep'tal, Septa'lis, (from septum.) Relating or appertaining to a septum; as 'septal walls of the heart,' — those that separate the cavities from each other.

Septa'na Fe'bris, (septem, 'seven,') Fever, septan.

Sep'tenary, Septena'rius, (F.) Septénaire, (septem, 'seven,') 'Consisting of seven.' The septenary years of the old believers in critical periods were times at which, it was supposed, important changes might be expected to take place. The grand climacteric was fixed at 63, and it was considered that if a person passed that age, he had well-founded expectations that his life might be protracted to 90.

Septen'niad, (septem, 'seven,') see Climacteric years.

Septe'rius, (σηπτηριος,) Septic.

Sept'foil, Up'right, (septem, 'seven,' and folium, 'a leaf,') Tormentilla.

Septthæ'mia, Septæmia.

Sep'tic, Sep'ticus, Sep'tus, Septe'rius, (F.) Septique, (σηπτος, 'putrid,') That which produces putrefaction. A substance which corrodes and disorganizes the soft parts without causing much pain.

SEP'TIC FE'VER, Septæmia — s. Poison, see Poison.

Septicæ'mia, Septæmia.

Septimes'tris Fœ'tus, (septem, 'seven,' and mensis, 'a month,') see Fœtus septimestris.

Septiner'via, (septem, 'seven,' and nervus, 'a nerve,') Plantago.

Septochym'ia, Sepsichym'ia, (σηπτος, 'putrid,' and χυμος, 'juice,') Putrefaction or putrescency of the humors.

Sep'ton, (from σηπτος, 'putrid,') Azote.

Septopyæ'mia. A combination of septæmia and pyæmia.

Septop'ya, (σηπτος, 'putrid,' and πυρ, 'fever,') Typhus gravior.

Sept'ula (pl. of Septulum) Re'num, Columnæ Bertini — s. Testis, see Septulum.

Septulum, dim. of Septum. A division between small spaces or cavities — as the septula testis or fibrous cords given off by the mediastinum testis to be inserted into the inner surface of the tunica albuginea.

Sep'tum, (F.) Cloison, 'a partition,' (from sepio, septum, 'I fence in,') A part destined to separate two cavities from each other, or to divide a principal cavity into several secondary cavities.

These septa are numerous in the human body. The chief are the following:

SEP'TUM ATRIO'RUM COR'DIS, S. Auricula'rum. The septum or partition between the auricles of the heart.

SEP'TUM AURICULA'RUM, S. atriorum — s. Bronchiale, Bronchial septum — s. Cerebelli, Falx cerebelli — s. Cerebri, Falx cerebri — s. Cochleæ auditoriæ, Lamina spiralis.

SEP'TUM COR'DIS, Septum me'dium cordis. The partition which separates the two ventricles of the heart.

SEP'TUM CRURA'LE, see Crural canal — s. Encephali, Tentorium.

SEP'TUM LU'CIDUM seu pelli'cidum seu ten'uē et pellucidum seu me'dium, Spec'ulum, S. lu'cidum, La'pis specula'ris, Mediasti'num seu Diaphrag'ma ventriculo'rum latera'lium cer'e'bri, (F.) Septum mé'dian, (Ch.) Cloison transparente. The soft portion or medullary substance which separates the two lateral ventricles of the brain from each other. This septum is composed of two laminae; between which a small cavity exists, filled by a serous fluid, ventriculus septi pelli'cidi. See Ventricles of the brain.

Septum Mé'dian, S. lucidum — s. Mé'dian du cervelet, Falx cerebelli — s. Medium cerebri, S. lucidum — s. Medium cordis, Septum cordis — s. Membranaceum auris, see Tympanum.

SEP'TUM NA'RIVM, Interseptum seu Dissepimentum seu Interf'inium seu Discri'men seu Im'brex seu Diaphrag'ma na'rivm, (F.) Cloison des Fosses nasales. The partition between the nares. It is formed by the vomer, the perpendicular plate of the ethmoid bone, and a cartilage of a triangular shape, Septum narium cartilagineum. See Nasal cartilage. These parts are lined by the pituitary membrane, which receives a considerable number of nerves and vessels.

Sep'tus, (σηπτος,) Septicus.

Se'pum, Sevum.

Seque'læ, (from sequor, 'I follow,') popularly Dregs. Morbid phenomena left as the result of a disease.

Sequestrot'omy, (sequestrum, and τομή, 'section,') A hybrid term for the operation for necrosis.

Seques'trum, (sequestrare, 'to separate from,') (F.) Séquestre. The portion of bone, in necrosis, which is dead, and separated from the living bone; acting, while retained, as an extraneous body. When the sequestrum is superficial and small, it is called Exfolia'tion. The portion of bone surrounding it is the Cap'sula seques'tralis.

Sera'peum, Syrup.

Serapi'non, Sagapenum.

Sera'pium, Syrup.

Serbet', Scherbet.

Séreux, Serous.

Sericocar'pus Tortifo'lius, (σηρικος, 'silken,' and καρπος, 'fruit,') Cony'za bifolia'ta, As'ter tortifo'lius; indigenous; Order, Compositæ; is said to be diuretic.

Ser'icum, (σηρικον,) Silk, (from Seres — the Thibetans, probably — from whom it was first obtained,) (F.) Soie. The thread spun by the Bom'byx Mo'ri or Silkworm. Silk is used by surgeons for ligatures, &c.

SER'ICUM AN'GLICUM, see Sparadrapum adhæsivum.

Serid'ion, Seriola.

Se'ries Den'tium, 'a row of teeth,' see Sepes.

Sérieux, Serious.

Séringue, Syringe.

Seri'ola, (σιρις, gen. σιριδος,) Cichorium intybus.

Ser'ious, Ser'ius, (F.) Sérieux, Grave. A term applied to a disease, Dyspath'ia, Mor'bus gra'vis, and to a symptom that is attended with danger.

Ser'is, (σείρις.) Cichorium intybus.

Sermoun'tain, Lacerpitium album.

Ser'o. In composition, serous membrane.

Serocoli'tis, gen. Serocoli'tidis, see Colitis.

Ser'ocyst, see Serocystic.

Serocys'tic, Serocys'ticus. An epithet for tumors of the female breast, Ser'ocysts, which consist, in the first stage, of one or more membranous cysts, produced perhaps by dilatation of portions of the lactiferous tubes.

Seroënteri'tis, gen. Seroënteri'tidis, see Enteritis.

Serohepati'tis, gen. Serohepati'tidis, see Hepatitis.

Ser'oid, Ser'oides, (serous, and ειδός, 'resemblance.') Resembling a serous membrane.

Ser'olin, Seroli'na, (serum, and oleum.) A peculiar fatty matter, found by Boudet in the blood. According to Dr. Austin Flint, Jr., normal faeces contain serolin or ster'corin, produced by a transformation of the cholesterol of the bile during the digestive act.

Seroot'. A ferocious fly of Abyssinia, described by Sir Samuel W. Baker as about the size of a wasp, whose proboscis is terrific, and its bite so painful that it drives wild animals from the regions which it infests from about the middle of July to the middle of October.

Sérosité, Serum.

Seros'ity, Serum.

Ser'ous, Sero'sus, (F.) Séieux, (from serum.) Thin; watery. Relating to the most watery portion of animal fluids, or to membranes that secrete them. See Serum.

Ser'ous Cysts, Hygro'mata. Cysts with thin liquid contents, usually seated in or near secreting glands or membranes, or vascular glands.

Ser'ous Lay'ER, see Tache embryonnaire—s. Membranes, Membranes, serous.

Serpe'do, (serpere, 'to creep,') Psoriasis.

Serpens, Serpent.

Serp'ent, Serpens, An'guis, O'phis, (from serpere, 'to creep,') A snake. Snake broth was, at one time, recommended as a restorative.

Many serpents are venomous; and the bites of some fatal. See Poisons, table of.

Serpent à Lunettes, 'spectacled snake,' Cobra di Capello—s. à Sonnettes, Crotalus horridus.

Serp'ent TEETH. A term used with reference to the torsion of one or more of the incisors, resembling those of the ophidian reptiles.

Serpentine Noire, Actæa racemosa—s. Rouge, Polygonum bistorta.

Serpenta'ria, (from serpens, gen. serpentis, 'a snake,') 'snake root,' Aristolochia serpentaria—s. Gallorum, Arum dracunculæ—s. Hispanica, Scorzonera—s. Minor, Arum maculatum—s. Nigra, Actæa racemosa.

Serpenta'rin, see Aristolochia serpentaria.

Serpentary Root, Aristolochia serpentaria.

Serpentin, 'winding as a serpent,' see Alembic.

Serpentine, (from serpens, 'a serpent,') Ophites.

Serpenti'nus, Ophites.

Ser'pes, gen. Serpe'tis, (serpere, 'to creep,') Herpes.

Serpig'inous, (from serpere, 'to creep,') (F.) Serpigineux. An epithet given to certain affections, which creep, as it were, from one part to another,—Serpiginous erysipelas, (F.) Erysipèle serpiginoux.

Serpig'inous UL'cer, Ulcus serpiginosum.

Serpi'go, gen. Serpi'ginis, (from serpere, 'to creep,') Herpes circinatus, Lichen psoriasis.

Serpil'lum, (from serpere, 'to creep,') Thymus serpyllum.

Serpolet, Thymus serpyllum.

Serpul'lum, (ἰσχυλλόν.) Thymus serpyllum.

Serpyll'um, (ἰσχυλλόν, from ἵσπειν, serpere, 'to creep,') Thymus serpyllum—s. Citratum, see Thymus serpyllum.

Ser'ra, Saw—s. Amputatoria, Saw, amputation—s. Versatilis, Trepan.

Ser'rated, Serra'tus, (from serra, 'a saw,') Dentate, Saw-shaped.

Serra'tula (dim. of serratus, 'saw-shaped,')

Ama'ra. So called from the leaves, owing to their serrated shape. Family, Cynarocephaleæ. Sex. Syst. Syngenesia Polygamia aequalis. A species of Sawwort, recommended in ague.

SERRAT'ULA BE'HEN, Centaurea behen.

Serra'tus, (from serra, 'a saw,') Dentate.

SERRA'TUS ANTI'CUS MI'NOR, Pectoralis minor.

SERRA'TUS MAG'NUS, (so called from its serrated appearance,—(from serra, 'a saw,') Serratus ma'jor anti'cus, S. ma'jor, (F.) Costo-basi-scapulaire, Costo-scapulaire, (Ch.) Grand dentelé. A very broad (especially anteriorly), thin, flat, irregularly quadrilateral muscle, situate at the sides of the thorax. It is attached, before, to the external surface of the first eight or nine ribs, by as many distinct digitations; and, behind, to the spinal edge of the scapula. The superior fibres are almost horizontal; the lower become gradually more and more oblique upwards and backwards. This muscle carries the scapula forwards, and causes it to execute a movement of rotation, which directs its inferior angle forwards, and the anterior upwards. When the shoulder is fixed, it raises the ribs.

SERRA'TUS MA'JOR, Serratus magnus—s. Major anticus, Serratus magnus.

SERRA'TUS POSTI'CUS INFE'RIOR, (F.) Dorso-lombo-costal, Lombo-costal (Ch.), Petit dentelé postérieur et inférieur. A broader and thinner muscle than the following, but nearly of the same shape. It is situate obliquely at the lower part of the back; and extends from the spinous processes of the last two or three dorsal vertebrae, and the first two or three lumbar, to the inferior margin of the last four false ribs. This muscle depresses the ribs, and thus concurs in expiration. It is an antagonist to the next.

SERRA'TUS POSTI'CUS SUPE'RIOR, (F.) Cervici-dorso-costal, Dorso-costal, (Ch.) Petit dentelé supérieur. A flat, thin, quadrilateral muscle, situate obliquely at the posterior inferior part of the neck, and the superior part of the back. It passes from the posterior cervical ligament, from the spinous process of the last cervical vertebrae, from the spinous processes of the first two or three dorsal, to the second, third, fourth, and fifth ribs; into which it is inserted by as many digitations. It raises the ribs, and is, consequently, an inspiratory muscle.

Serre-artère, (serrer, 'to press,' and artère, 'artery,') Presse-artère.

Serre-cou (F.), (serrer, 'to press,' and cou, 'the neck,') An instrument, invented by Chabert, for compressing the jugular vein, in bleeding from that vessel. It surrounds the neck like a collar, and, by means of a pad, exerts the necessary pressure.

Serre-fine (F.), (serrer, 'to press,' and fin, 'fine,') A small spring forceps, invented by M. Vidal. It is formed of a wire of metal, turned in the middle into two spirals, one in front of the other. This constitutes the spring. Each branch describes nearly the letter S; and one extremity forms the spiral, the other lays hold of the parts to be united.

Serre-nœud (F.), (serrer, 'to press,' and nœud, 'a knot,') This name has been given to various instruments, employed by the surgeon for tightening a ligature passed round a pediculated tumor, or any part which has to be destroyed by ligature slowly and gradually. Thus, there is the serre-nœud of Roderic, the constrictor of Herbinaux and of Maisonneuve, the serre-nœud of Desault, &c.

Serre-nœud de Deschamps, Presse-artère.

Serres, Den'tal Glands of, see Tooth.

Ser'tula Campa'na, (dim. of serta, 'a garland,') Trifolium melilotus.

Se'rum, 'whey,' (probably from serus, 'late,' because it remains after the butter and cheese have been separated from milk,) see Serum lactis. Or'rhos, O'ros, Seros'ity, (F.) Sérosité. The most watery portion of animal fluids, exhaled by serous membranes. It is a constituent part of blood, milk, &c. Also, Sperm.

SE'rum OF THE BLOOD, Hæmydor, Or'rhos, Se'rum seu Pchor san'guinis, (F.) Sérum du Sang, is the liquid which separates from the blood, when coagulated at rest. It is of a greenish-yellow color; viscid, slightly coagulable by heat, acids, and alcohol. It is composed of water, chloride of sodium, certain phosphates, and albumen, constantly united to soda, almost in a saponaceous combination.

The fluid which exudes from the albumen of the serum of the blood, when coagulated by heat, is by some called seros'ity.

SE'rum LAC'teum, Serum lactis.

SE'rum LAC'tis seu LAC'teum, A'qua Lac'tis, Serum of Milk, Whey, (Prov.) Whig, (F.) Sérum du lait, Petit lait. That part of milk from which the butter and caseous matter have been separated. It is a transparent, citrine-colored liquid, containing sugar of milk, mucilage, acetic acid, phosphate of lime, and some other saline substances. It is used as a slightly nutritious diluent and refrigerant. The French have magistral formulæ, the basis of which is whey. They are called Petits-laits, or 'wheys.'

SE'rum LAC'tis HOFFMAN'NI, (F.) Petit-lait d'Hoffman, is a name given to the liquid resulting from treating with boiling water milk which has been evaporated to an almost solid consistence. It is not much used.

REN'NET WHEY is made thus: milk, 2 pints, rennet, 3ss., infused in a little hot water; mix and keep in a gentle heat for some hours, then strain.

Sérum du Sang, Serum of the blood.

SE'rum SAN'guinis, Serum of the blood.

SE'rum OF SE'ROUS MEM'BRANES, Se'rum membrana'rum serosa'rum, Water of Drop'sy, (F.) Sérum des membranes séreuses, Eau des hydro-piques. It resembles the serum of the blood, especially in cases of hydrocele. The water of hydrothorax and ascites contains much less albumen:—sometimes enough to coagulate on the application of heat; at others, not.

Ses'amoid, Sesamoi'des, Sesamo'des, Sesamoi'deus, (σάμαν, 'a grain of sesamum,' and αἶος, 'resemblance,')

SES'AMOID BONES, Os'sa seu Ossic'ula sesamoi'dea, are small bones, situate in the substance of tendons, near certain joints. Their number is various. They are commonly more in the male than female. Two are constantly met with beneath the metatarsophalangeal articulations of the great toe. Sometimes, the articulations of other bones of the metatarsus with the phalanges of the toes have them likewise. In the hand, there are two before the metacarpophalangeal joint of the thumb. At times, they are met with in the other metacarpophalangeal articulations. Occasionally, two exist behind the condyles of the femur, in the tendons of the gastrocnemii muscles. A considerable os sesamoideum is also met with in the tendon of the peronæus longus. These bones are commonly round, and flattened only on one surface, which is incrustated with cartilage. Their size is very variable, according to the joints in which they exist. Traces of sesamoid bones are not observed in infants: in them, they are replaced by small, cartilaginous concretions. They are developed by a single point of ossification; and are, like the patella (which is a true sesamoid bone), composed of much cellular substance, covered by a thin layer of compact tissue. The use of these bones is,—to allow the tendon to be inserted into the lever at a greater angle; and thus enable the power to act more advantageously.

Riolan has given the name Ossa sesamoidæa to two bony points sometimes met with;—the one at the outer side of the carotid canal of the temporal bone; and the other at the edge of the cavernous sinus, at the side of the internal carotid artery.

Ses'amum, (σάμαν, σήαμη,) see Sesamum orientale.

SES'AMUM ORIENTA'LE, S. edu'lē seu oleif'erum seu Indicum (?), Ben'nē, Oil'y Grain, (F.) Sésame, Jugeoline. Ord. Bignoniaceæ. The seeds of this African plant were cultivated in Georgia and South Carolina, where the negroes used them with Indian corn as an article of food. They yield a larger proportion of oil than any other vegetable; one hundred weight producing ninety pounds of oil, which is, at least, equal to Florence oil.

Ben'nē oil, O'leum Ses'ami, the oil of the seed, is used in the Southern States as a laxative. The leaves—Sesami folium, (Ph. U. S., 1863,)—Sesamum, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Benne, which are referred to Sesamum orientale and S. Indicum, afford, by infusion, an excellent mucilage.

Sesquiun'cia, Sesquiu'cia, Hemio'lion. An ounce and a half. See Sesqui.

Ses'eli, (σεσέλι,) Laserpitium siler—s. Ægopodium, Ligusticum podagraria—s. Annum, S. tortuosum—s. Carum, Carum—s. Carvi, Carum—s. Creticum, Tordylium officinale—s. Feniculifolium, Sison ammi—s. Graveolens, Apium graveolens—s. Meum, Æthusa meum—s. Patens, S. tortuosum—s. Pratense, Peucedanum silaus—s. des Prés, Peucedanum silaus.

SES'ELI TORTUOSUM, S. Massilien'sē seu an-num seu patens, Ænan'thē striat'a rig'ida, Hartwort of Marseilles. The seeds have a warm taste, and a greater degree of pungency than those of Laserpitium siler, which is the Seseli of some of the Pharmacopœias.

Ses'elis, Laserpitium siler.

Ses'qui. This word, joined with any number, weight, measure, &c., signifies one and a half; as sesquigranum, 'a grain and a half.'

Sesquiun'cia, Sescuncia.

Se'ta Equi'na, 'horsehair,' Hair'worm, Helmin'thus Gor'dii. A kind of worm, found in stagnant water, from 4 to 6 inches long, and twisted into various knots and contortions; color pale-brown, with dark extremities. It is common in the intestines of the Laplanders; causing the Co'lica Lappon'ica, in which the gripings are, at times, exceedingly severe.

Setace'um, Se'ton, (F.) Séton, (from seta, 'a bristle,') A long strip of fine linen or cotton twist, passed through the skin and areolar membrane, to keep up an issue; or through suppurating cavities, between the fragments of fractured bones, &c., to fulfil certain indications. The term is, also, applied to the issue so established. The operation is simple. It consists in laying hold of a fold of skin, and passing a seton-needle through it with the thread attached. Every day a fresh portion of the thread is drawn through the sore. Setons are established in many diseases;—in obstinate ophthalmia, cephalalgia; epilepsy, thoracic and abdominal affections, &c.; but they are not as much used as formerly.

Seta'ria Rocce'la, (from seta, 'a bristle,') Lichen roccella.

Set'fast, see Furunculus.

Se'ton, Setaceum.

Set'terwort, Helleborus foetidus.

Set'ting a Frao'ture, see Reduction.

Sevadil'la, ([S.] Sebadilla,) Veratrum sabadilla.

Seva'tio, (from sebum,) Steatoma.

Sève, ([Sax.] ræp, [G.] Saft, 'juice,') Sap.

Sev'enbark, Hydrangea arborescens.

Sev'endays' Disease, see Trismus.

Sé'rage, (from [L.] separare, 'to separate,') Weaning.

Se'vum, Se'bum, Se'pum, Ste'ar, A'deps ovil'i, Se'vum verveci'num. Suet, mutton suet, the prepared suet of Ovis aries; Pinguedo.

SE'VUM CE'TI, (cetus, 'whale,') Cetaceum.

SE'VUM PRÆPARA'TUM, Se'vum, (Ph. U. S.) Ovil'i se'vum præpara'tum, Præ'pared Su'et, (F.) Graisse de Mouton, Suif, is formed by cutting suet in pieces; melting over a slow fire, and straining through linen. It is emollient, and is sometimes boiled in milk ($\frac{3}{4}$ j. to Oj.), and is used in diarrhoea and dysentery. Its principal employment is in the formation of plasters.

SE'VUM VERVECI'NUM, Sevum.

Sex, Sex'us, Se'cus. The physical difference between male and female in animals and vegetables; as the Male sex, Sex'us potior seu fortior seu vir'ilis; and the Female sex, Sex'us sequior, S. muliebris, Alter Sex'us, 'The Sex.'

Sex'tans, (from sextus, 'the sixth,') Sex'ta pars li'bræ. The sixth part of a pound.

Sexta'rius, (from sextus, 'the sixth,') An ancient measure for liquid and solid substances; the sixth part of a congius. See Weights and measures.

Sex'tula, (from sextus, 'the sixth,') Hexa'gium, ἡξάγιον. The sixth part of an ounce.

Sex'ual, Sexua'lis, (F.) Sexuel, (sexus, 'sex,') That which relates to the sex; which characterizes the sex.

SEX'UAL DISEASES, Mor'bi sexua'les, are the diseases of the genital organs; as SEXUAL FUNCTIONS are the genital functions.

SEX'UAL IN'TERCOURSE, Côition—s. Organs, Genital organs.

Shampoo'ing, Chan'poo'ing, Mass'ing, (F.) Massage, Massément. A Hindoo process, which consists in pressing the body of the bather in a peculiar manner; cracking the various joints, and employing blows and friction. A variety of this was employed by the ancients in their baths. With the Romans the operators were called Fricato'res and Tractato'res.

'Kneading' consists in pressing alternately upon a part of the body to arouse the muscles to more energetic action. It is employed at times in dyspepsia.

Sham'rock, In'dian, ([Ir.] Seamrog or shamrog,) Trillium latifolium—s. Water, Menyanthes verna.

Shan'ker, Chancre.

Shan'ondale Saline' Springs. These are within a few miles of Charlestown, Jefferson county, Virginia. They are mildly aperient and diuretic.

Shape, Vulva.

Share'bone, Pubes.

Sha'ron Springs, New York. These sulphur and chalybeate springs, which are situate about 10 or 12 miles south of Canajoharie, N. Y., and 45 miles west of Albany, are much frequented. The sulphur springs contain carbonate of soda, magnesia, and lime, chloride of lime, sulphate of magnesia, sulphate of lime, chloride of sodium, chloride of magnesium, sulphohydrate of soda, sulphohydrate of lime, silicic acid, carbonic acid, and free sulphohydric acid gas. Their temperature is 48° Fah.

Shov'el Pick'erel Weed, Unisema deltifolia—s. Pond, Unisema deltifolia.

Show, see Parturition.

Showchoo, see Spirit.

Show'erbath, see Bath.

Shrub, (perhaps from Arabic, sharab, 'syrup,' or corr. from syrup.) A compound of spirits, lemonjuice, and sugar.

SHRUB, SWEET, Calycanthus—s. Sweetscented, Calycanthus.

Shrumpshould'ered, see Hump.

Shud'ering, Frem'itus, (from [G.] Schauder, Schauer,) (F.) Frémissement, Tressaillement. A peculiar sensation, felt either externally or internally; and which seems to be the result of a spasmodic movement of the parts in which it occurs. A slight feeling of cold sometimes accompanies it. It is, at times, the result of a moral cause, and is often the precursor of shivering.

Shull'bane, Humerus.

Shu'mac, Rhus coriaria.

Siagantri'tis, gen. Siagantri'tidis, (siagon, αντρον, 'a cavity,' and itis.) Inflammation of the lining membrane of the antrum of Highmore.

Si'agon, (σιγων), Maxillary bone.

Siagon'agra, (siagon, and aypa, 'a seizure,') Arthrit'is maxilla'ris. A gouty or rheumatic affection of the joint of the lower jaw.

Sial'achus, (from sialon), Salivation.

Sialadeni'tis, gen. Sialadeni'tidis, (sialon, αδην, 'a gland,' and itis.) Inflammation of a salivary gland. At times, improperly written Syaladenitis.

Sialagogue, Sialago'gus, Sial'ogogue, Ptyal'agogue, Pty'smagogue, Sali'eans, Saliva'tum, Sialocinet'icus, Apophlegmat'icans per os, (F.) Salivant, (sialon, and ayw, 'I drive,') That which provokes the secretion of saliva. Pyrethrum and mercury are sialagogues. Sialagogues may be of two kinds: those which act through the circulation, and those which act immediately on the salivary organs. Mercury belongs to the former,—pyrethrum to the latter class. The chief sialagogues are armoracia, calamus, meze-reum, pyrethrum, tabacum, and zingiber.

Sial'ica, (from sialon), Medicines which affect the salivary glands.

Sialis'mus, (σιαλισμος), Salivation.

Sial'ochous, (σιαλοχος, from sialon, and χω, 'I pour,') Salivated.

Sialocinet'icus, (sialon, and κινω, 'I move,') Sialagogue.

Sialol'ithi, (sialon, and λιθος, 'a stone,') Calculi, salivary.

Sialolog'ia, (sialon, and λογος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on saliva.

Si'alon, (σιαλον), Saliva.

Sialorrhœ'a, (sialon, and ρηνω, 'I flow,') Salivation.

Si'alos, (σιαλος), Saliva.

Sialos'chesis, (sialon, and σχισις, 'retention,') Retention or suppression of the saliva.

Sialosyrin'ges, (sialon, and συριξ, 'a pipe,') Salivary fistulæ.

Sialoze'mia, (sialon, and ζημια, 'loss,') Salivation—s. Mercurialis, Salivation, mercurial.

Si'amese Twins, see Twins, Siamese.

Sibare, Phrenitis.

Sib'bens, Sib'bens, Frambæ'sia Sco'tica. An infectious disease in the mountainous parts of Scotland, viewed to be of the venereal kind. Sib'in, in the Celtic, means raspberry; and it is said that, in this affection, fungi appear like raspberries. From sib'in, the inhabitants have made sievin, sibben, sibbens, and sivens. By some, this affection is regarded as a complication of the venereal and itch. In the Orkneys, sibbens means itch.

Sib'ilant, Sib'ilus, Sib'ilans, (sibilo, 'I hiss, I whistle,') Making a hissing or whistling sound. See Râle sibilant.

Sibilis'mus Aur'ium, 'hissing or whistling of the ears,' see Tinnitus aurium.

Sib'ilus, Sibilant.

SIB'ILUS AUR'IIUM, see Tinnitus aurium.

Siccant'ia, (sicare, siccatur, 'to dry,') Xeran'tica, (F.) Siccatis. Drying medicines. See Desiccativa.

Siccatis, Siccantia.

Sicca'tio, Drying.

Siccha'sia, (σικχασια, 'disgust,') A distressing disgust for food; such as is experienced by women with child.

Sic'ilicum, Sic'lium. A Roman weight of about two drachms.

Sick, ([Sax.] reoc), Æ'ger, Ægro'tus, Nos'e-rus, Noso'des, Ju'cens, Laborio'sus, Labo'rans, (F.) Malade. Laboring under disease; Diseased, Distem'pered, Ill, Ail'ing, Disor'dered. Such is its acceptation in old English, and generally in the United States. In most parts of the United States, if a patient is affected with a slight indisposition, he is said to be sick; if with one more severe, he is said to be ill; (Prov.) bad, badly. In England, it most commonly means,—affected with disorder of the stomach, or nausea. A sudden fit of sickness is, in Scotland, termed Dualm, Dualm, or Dwaum.

A sick person, Æ'ger, Ægro'tus, (F.) Malade, who is under the charge of a physician, is said to be a pa'tient, or the patient of the physician. At times, but rarely, patient is used for a sick person in the abstract, (from patiens, 'suffering,')

SICK STOM'ACH, Milk sickness, Nausea.

Sick'ly, Morbo'sus, Valetudina'rius, Adyn'atus, Nosac'erus, Noso'des, Mor'bose, Mor'bulent, Un-health'y, (Sc.) Hough, (F.) Maladif. Subject to be sick, or in feeble health. Ailing.

Sick'ness, Disease, Plague—s. Bad of Ceylon, Beriberi—s. Falling, Epilepsy—s. Mountain, Puna.

SICK'NESS-RATE. The ratio of sickness to the population in any locality.

SICK'NESS, RIV'ER, Milk sickness—s. Sea, Nausea marina—s. of the Stomach, Vomiting—s. Swamp, Milk sickness.

Sic'lium, Sicilicum.

Sic'ua, (σικυα), Cuppingglass.

Sic'ula, (dim. of sica, 'a dagger,') Beta, Penis.

Sicye'don, (σικυηδον), Caulodon.

Sic'yos, (σικυος), Cucumis sativus.

Si'da Abu'tilon, Abutilon Avicennæ.

Sid'dons Fe'ver, Fever, Siddons.

Side, Pain in the, Pleurodynia.

Side'bone, Ilium.

Sidera'tio, Sydera'tio, Sidera'tion, (sidus, gen. si'deris, 'a star,' because the condition was thought to be produced by the influence of the stars.) The state of one struck suddenly, without apparent cause, and as if by the influence of the stars or planets—Plan'etstruck. The ancients comprised under this name different morbid conditions, such as paralysis, apoplexy, and gangrene.

SIDERA'TIO, Apoplexy, Asphyxia, Phrenitis—s. Osis, Spina ventosa.

Sidera'tion, Astrobolismus, Sideratio.

Side'rión, (σιδηριον, 'an iron tool,') Ferramentum.

Sideri'tes, (σιδηριτης, from sideros,) Magnet.

Sideri'tis, Magnet, Teucrium chamaepitys.

Siderokre'næ, (sideros, and κρηνη, 'a spring,')

Water, mineral (chalybeate).

Siderope'gæ, (sideros, and πηγη, 'a spring,')

Water, mineral (chalybeate).

Side'ros, (σιδηρος,) Ferrum.

Sidero'sis, (sideros, 'iron,') A disease resulting from the inhalation of iron dust, similar in its morphology, &c., to Anthracosis, resulting from inhalation of coal dust.

Siderox'ylon, (sideros, and ξυλον, 'wood,') Chrysophyllum cainito.

Sidesad'dle Plant, Sarracenia.

Sid'hee, see Gunjah.

Sid'mouth, Cli'mate of. Sidmouth is in Devonshire, England, on the seabeach, at the mouth of the Sid. It is much frequented by invalids, both during the summer and winter. The climate is, however, damp, and subject to sea-fogs.

Siège, (originally from sedes, 'seat,') Anus, Nates.

Sielis'mus, (σιελισμος,) Salivation.

Si'elon, (σιελον,) Saliva.

Sierra Leone Fe'ver, see F. Sierra Leone.

Sieve, ([Sax.] rȳre, rȳre,) see Cribration—s. Drum, see Cribration.

Sifflement (F.), ([L.] sibilare, from sifler, 'to whistle,') Whistling.

Sifflement Modulê, Chant des artères, Bruit musical, 'modulated whistling, or music of the arteries,') Musical sound. A kind of sound heard on auscultation, resembling, at times, the humming of certain insects. Various musical sounds, (F.) Bruits musicaux, are described from fancied resemblances:—as Bruit de piaulement, resembling the clucking of the hen;—Bruit de jappement, resembling the barking or yelping of a young dog;—Bruit de rouet, resembling the noise of a spinning-wheel, &c.

The sound is chiefly met with in those laboring under chlorosis.

Sigault'ian Sec'tion, (after Dr. J. R. Sigault, a French physician,) Symphysectomy.

Si'gê, (σιγη,) Taciturnity.

Sigh, ([Sax.] rican, 'to sigh,') Suspirium.

Sight, ([Sax.] geriht,) Vision—s. Askew, Dysopia lateralis—s. False, Metamorphopsia, Pseudoblepsia—s. Feebleness of, Amblyopia.

Sigilla'tion, Sigilla'tio, (from sigillum, 'a seal,') The mark of a cicatrix.

Sigil'lum (dim. of signum, 'a mark,') Salamo'nis, 'Solomon's seal,') Convallaria polygonatum—s. Virginitatis, Hymen.

Sig'matoid, Sigmoid.

Sig'moid, Sigmoid'al, Sig'matoid, Sigmoid'es, Sigmoid'es, Sigmoid'eus, (sigma, and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') That which has the form of the Greek Σ, or of C, an old form of the sigma.

Sig'moid CAR'TILAGES, Semilunar cartilages.

Sig'moid CAV'ITIES or Fos'sæ OF THE UL'NA, Si'nus Luna'ti, (F.) Cavités ou Fosses sigmoïdes, are two notches at the upper part of that bone, one for the reception of the humerus; the other for that of the radius.

Sig'moid FLEX'URE OF THE CO'LO'N, Flexu'ra sigmoid'es seu ili'aca, S. Roma'num, is a turn the colon takes immediately before its termination in the rectum. See Colon.

Sig'moid Fos'sa (of the temporal bone), Fossæ sigmoïdea—s. Mesocolon, see Mesocolon.

Sig'moid or SEMILUNAR VALVES, Valvulæ Sigmoid'es seu semilunares, Proces'sus Sigmoid'es, (F.) Valvules sigmoïdes ou semilunaires, are three valvular folds, at the commencement of the pulmonary artery and aorta. These valves have the form of a crescent, when applied against the parietes of the vessel. When the blood is sent from the ventricles by their contraction, the valves are applied against the sides of the vessel; but, during the diastole of the ventricle, they are depressed, and prevent the blood from returning to the heart. At the middle of the convexity of each valve is a small, hard, triangular granulum, called Corpusculum seu Globulus Arantii, which completely closes up the passage. It is, also, called Corpusculum Morgagni and C. Sesamoïdeum, (F.) Globule d'Arantius.

Sign, Signum, Semi'on, (F.) Signe. Any present or past circumstance, afforded by the examination of a patient, or of matters concerning him, whence a conclusion may be drawn regarding the nature and seat of his disease. The phenomena which precede the disease are called anamnesitic or commemorative signs;—those which accompany it are termed diagnostic, if they reveal the nature or seat of the disease,—prognostic, when they indicate its probable duration and termination. See Symptom.

Sig'na Assiden'tia, see Assidens.

Sig'nature, Signatu'ra, Signa'tio, (signum, 'a sign,') This term was applied in the Eastern countries, in the middle ages, to mystic characters of good or bad augury, with which it was pretended that every one was marked by the star under which he was born.

SIG'NATURES OF PLANTS meant certain peculiarities in their external formation or color, which indicated that they were adapted for particular diseases;—as in the case of the Lungwort, Liverwort, &c.

Signe, Nævus—s. Avant-coureur, Precursory signs—s. Précurseurs, Precursory signs.

Sig'num, Sign, see Parturition—s. Characteristicum, see Pathognomonic—s. Coniunctum, see Pathognomonic—s. Diacriticum, see Diacritica signa—s. Morbi essentielle, see Pathognomonic.

Sik'ka, Chique.

Si'lach, Silac. An Arabic word, used to designate thickening of the eyelids, Crassit'ies Palpebrarum; and, also, Alopecia.

Silence, see Murmur, Respiratory.

Sile'nê Crassifo'lia, Cucubalus behen—s. Inflata, Cucubalus behen—s. Pennsylvanica, see Silene Virginica—s. Thorei, Cucubalus behen.

SILE'NÊ VIRGIN'ICA, Ground Pink, Wild Pink, Catch Fly. Ord. Caryophyllaceæ. The root has been employed in decoction, as an efficacious anthelmintic. Sile'ne Pennsylvanica probably has the same properties.

Si'ler (gen. Si'leris) Lancifo'lum, Laserpitium siler—s. Montanum, Laserpitium siler.

Sil'iqua, Cera'tion; the carat. A weight of about four grains. A pod.

SIL'IQUA ARAB'ICA, Tamarindus—s. Araci aromatici, see Vanilla—s. Banillæ, see Vanilla—s. Dulcis, Ceratonium siliqua—s. Vanigliæ, see Vanilla—s. Vanillæ, see Vanilla.

Siliquas'trum Plin'ii, (from siliqua, 'a pod,') Capsicum annum.

Silk, ([Sax.] reolc,) Sericum.

Silk Grass, Yucca filamentosa—s. Weed, Asclepias Sullivantii, Asclepias tuberosa—s. Weed, common, Asclepias Syriaca—s. Weed, flesh-colored, Asclepias incarnata—s. Weed, swamp, Asclepias incarnata—s. Worm, see Sericum.

Sillon, Sulcus—s. Horizontal de la veine ombilicale, see Liver—s. Transversale, see Liver—s. de la Veine cave inférieure, see Liver—s. de la Veine porte, see Liver.

Sillonnement, Segmentation.

Sil'lus, (σιλλος,) Camus.

Si'lo, (σιλλος,) Camus.

Sil'phium, (σίλφιον,) Laserpitium.

SILPHIUM LACINIA'TUM, Rosinweed, Compass plant, Polar plant;

SILPHIUM PERFORIA'TUM, Cup Plant, Turpentine Sun Flower, and

SILPHIUM TEREBINTHINA'CEUM, Prairie Burdock; Nat. Ord. Compositæ; indigenous in Ohio and Michigan, and flowering from July to September; yield a fragrant gum which is esteemed stimulant and antispasmodic.

Sil'rus Gla'nis, (σίλουρος,) see Ichthyocola.

Sil'us, (σίλος,) Canus.

Sil'ver, ([Sax.] reolrep, [G.] Silber,) Argentum—s. Ammoniochloride of, see Argentum—s. Chloride of, see Argentum—s. Chloruret of, see Argentum—s. Cyanide of, see Argentum—s. Cyanuret of, see Argentum—s. Iodide of, see Argentum—s. Ioduret of, see Argentum.

SIL'VER FORK DEFOR'MITY. A peculiar deformity characteristic of some forms of fracture of the lower extremity of the radius.

SIL'VER LEAF, Magnolia macrophylla.

SIL'VER, MU'RIATE OF, see Argentum—s. Nitrate of, Argenti nitras—s. Oxide of, see Argentum.

SIL'VER AND AMMO'NIA, CHLO'RIDE OF, see Argentum—s. and Ammonia, chloruret of, see Argentum—s. and Soda, hyposulphite of, Soda et argenti hyposulphitis.

Silves'ter's (Dr. H. R.) Meth'od for Restoring Suspended Anima'tion. This consists in placing the patient on his back, pulling the tongue forward, and then drawing the arms slowly over the head, by which means the ribs are elevated by the pectoral muscles, and the chest is enlarged. The arms are now to be brought down to the side of the chest, which they must be made to compress slightly. These movements must be repeated so as to stimulate respiration.

Sil'ybum, Carduus marianus—s. Maculatum, Carduus marianus—s. Marianum, Carduus marianus.

Sima'ba Ce'dron. Nat. Fam. Simarubaceæ. A South American tree, the seeds of which—cedron seeds—have been used as an antidote for snake-bites. They have, also, been proposed in mental diseases and in epilepsy. The scrapings of the wood have been used as a substitute for sulphate of quinia.

SIMA'BA QUASSIO'IDES, Nima quassioïdes.

Simarou'ba, Quassia simarouba—s. Bitter, Quassia simarouba—s. Faux, Malpighia mourella.

Simaru'ba, Quassia simarouba—s. Excelsa, see Quassia—s. Officinalis, Quassia simarouba.

Simulateur, Malingerer.

Simila'tio, (similis, 'like,') Assimilation.

Simil'ia Simil'ibus, 'like by like,' see Homœopathy.

Simit'ium, Plumbi subcarbonas.

Si'mo, (σίμος,) Canus.

Simo'nea Folliculo'rum, (after Simon, a German dermatologist,) Acarus folliculorum.

Simotrache'lus, (σίμος, 'bent short,' and τραχήλος, 'neck,') Bysauchen.

Sim'ple, (opposite to compound,) A medicinal herb. One skilled in simples is called a Sim'plist or Simplex. 'To sim'ple,' and 'to cull simples,' signify to gather medicinal herbs.

Sim'pler, see Simple.

Sim'pler's Joy, Verbena hastata.

Sim'plist, see Simple.

Sim'ulated Diseases, Feigned diseases.

Simula'ti Mor'bi, Feigned diseases.

Si'mus, (σίμος,) Canus.

Sin, Beset'ting, Masturbation.

Si'na Levan'tica, Artemisia santonica.

Sinape'lon, (σινάπιδιον, from sinapis, and λαϊον, 'oil,') Oil impregnated with mustard.

Sina'pi, (σίναπι,) Sinapis.

Sina'pis, S. ni'gra seu cer'nua seu Oliveria'na, Bras'sica ni'gra, Na'pus, Eru'ca, Sina'pē, Sina'pi, Sine'pi, Napi'um, Na'py, Com'mon Black Mustard, (F.) Moutarde noire ou grise, Sénévé, Sauvé. Ord. Cruciferae. Sex. Syst. Tetradyamia Siliquosa. The seeds are inodorous, when entire, but, when bruised, the odor is very pungent; taste bitterish and acrid. They yield their virtues to water, and afford a bland oil by expression. The seeds are stimulant, diuretic, emetic, and rubefacient. They are sometimes recommended to be swallowed whole, in dyspepsia, torpor of the bowels, &c. Externally, they are applied in the form of cataplasm.

SINA'PIS AL'BA, S. folio'sa, Bonan'nia officinalis, Na'pus Leucosina'pis, White Mustard, also, is used medicinally. It is somewhat less pungent than the black. The distilled oil, O'leum Sina'pis, Oil of mustard, is a powerful stimulant and rubefacient. In the Pharmacopœias of the United States and Great Britain, the seeds of Sinapis nigra and Sinapis alba are official. Flour of mustard, generally called mustard, is the powder obtained from the seeds of both varieties. See Sinapism.

Whitehead's Es'sence of Mustard consists of oil of turpentine, camphor, and a portion of spirit of rosemary: to which is added a small quantity of flour of mustard. It is a celebrated embrocation for rheumatism, &c.

Whitehead's Es'sence of Mustard Pills consist of yellow resin, mustard, and balsam of tolu.

Mustard Whey is made by taking bruised mustard seeds, 3ss., and milk, Oj. Boil together until the milk is curdled, and strain. This whey is used in dropsy.

SINA'PIS ARVEN'SIS, S. Timoria'na, Char'lock, Wild Mustard, Gar'lock, Chad'lock, Runsh, (Sc.) Runch'es, Scald'ricks, Skel'lock, Skel'lie. The seeds are sometimes substituted for black mustard.

SINA'PIS CER'NUA, Sinapis—s. Eruca, Brassica eruca—s. Foliosa, S. alba—s. Nigra, see Sinapis—s. Oliveriana, Sinapis—s. Tamoriania, S. arvensis—s. Tuberosa, Brassica rapa.

Sin'apism, Sinapis'mus, (from sinapis,) A cataplasm, of which mustard forms the basis, which is used for exciting redness, and acting as a counterirritant. It is prepared by mixing flour of mustard and vinegar together for the due consistence. See Cataplasma sinapis.

A sin'apised pa'per, (F.) Papier sin'apisé, was first prepared by a French pharmacien, and said to be more certain than a cataplasm made with the flour of mustard. It consisted in extracting the fixed oil while retaining the rubefacient principle. See Charta sinapis.

Sin'ciput, gen. Sincip'itis, (from semi, 'half,' and caput, 'head,' or sum'mum caput, 'top of the head,') Sincip'ital Re'gion, Syn'ciput, Hemicceph'alum. The French use it synonymously with Vertex, Mesocrani'um, Mesocranium. By some, it is applied to the frontal region or forepart or forehead of the cranium, Hemicceph'alum, Hemicceph'alum. The parietal bones have been called sincip'ital bones, Ossa sincip'itis, (F.) Os du sinciput.

Sindon, (σινδων, 'fine linen,') A small piece of rag, or round pledget, supported by a thread at the middle, and introduced into the opening in the cranium made by the trephine.

Sine'pi, (σινηπι,) Sinapis.

Sin'ew, ([Sax.] rinep,) Tendon.

Sin'gleton's Gold'en Oint'ment is formed of sulphuret of arsenic (realgar), and lard or spermaceti ointment.

Singul'tous, Lygmo'des, Lygo'des, Lyngo'des, (F.) Singultueux, (from singultus,) Relating to or affected with hicough.

Singul'tus, gen. Singul'tus, Lynx, Lyg'mus,

Spasmolygmus, Clo'nus seu Pneu'sis singul'tus, Hic'cough, Hic'cup, (old Eng.) Hicket or Hickot, Hicquet, (Prov.) Heuks, Yez, Yux, Yoke, (Sc.) Es'kin, Ees'kin, (F.) Hoquet. A noise made by the sudden and involuntary contraction of the diaphragm, and the simultaneous contraction of the glottis, which arrest the air in the trachea. It is a symptom of many morbid conditions, and especially of gangrene, but occurs, frequently, in persons otherwise in good health. Also, a sob.

Sin'istrad, (sinister, 'to the left hand.') A term used by Dr. Barclay, adverbially, to signify 'towards the sinistral aspect.' See Mesial.

Sinis'tral As'pect, see Mesial.

Sink'ing, Adynam'ic, see Adynamic—s. Fatal, Shock, nervous—s. Typhoid, see Adynamic.

Sinu'eux, Sinu'ous.

Sinu'os'itas, Sinus.

Sin'u'ous, Sinu'ous, (F.) Sinu'eux, (sinuare, 'to bow, to curve.') An epithet given to certain ulcers, and especially to certain fistulæ, which are tortuous.

Sin'us, gen. Sin'us, 'a bay or curve,' Sinu'os'itas, Abcon'sio, Eurycho'ria, Reces'sus, (F.) Golfe. Any cavity, the interior of which is more expanded than the entrance. In this sense, anatomists have applied the term to cavities in certain bones of the head and face. It has been, also, applied to certain venous canals, into which a number of vessels empty themselves; such as the sinuses of the dura mater and of the spine; the sinus of the vena porta; uterine sinuses, &c.;—and to the bosom and the vulva.

In Surgery, it means a long, narrow, hollow track, leading from some abscess, diseased bone, &c., (F.) Clapier.

Sinuses of bones form part of the nasal cavities. They are the frontal, sphenoidal, maxillary, &c. The name has also been given, occasionally, to the ethmoid and mastoid cells.

Sin'us ACUS'TICUS, Auditory canal, internal—s. Ampullaceus, Cavitas elliptica—s. Aortici, Sinuses of Valsalva—s. Arteriosus, S. pulmonalis—s. Basilar, Sinus transversus—s. Cavern'eux, Cavernous sinus—s. Cavernosi uteri, Sinus uterini—s. Cavernosus, Cavernous sinus—s. Cerebri, Ventricles of the brain—s. Choroidien, S. quartus—s. Circular, of Ridley, Sinus coronarius—s. Circularis, S. coronarius.

Sin'us CIRCULA'RIS I'RIDIS, Canal of Schlemm. A minute canal between the sclerotic coat of the eye and the ciliary ligament.

Sin'us COMMUNIS, see Semicircular canals—s. Coronaire du cœur, see Cardiac veins.

Sin'us CORONA'RIS, S. circula'ris seu circula'ris Ridley, Circular sin'us of Ridley, Cor'onary sin'us. A venous canal, which surrounds, in a more or less regular manner, the pituitary fossa and gland, emptying itself into the corresponding cavernous sinus by each of its extremities.

Sin'us, COR'ONARY, Sinus coronarius—s. Coronary of the heart, Sinus coronary, venous.

Sin'us COR'ONARY, VE'NOUS, Cor'onary sinus of the heart. A name given, on account of its great size, to that portion of the great coronary vein which embraces the left auriculoventricular furrow.

Sin'us COX'Æ, see Cotyloid.

Sin'us DEX'TER COR'DIS, S. vena'rum cava'rum seu veno'sus, Sac'cus vena'rum cava'rum. The right auricle of the heart—A'trium cordis dextrum. See Auricula.

Sinus DROIT, S. quartus—s. Ductus lactiferi, see Lactiferous ducts—s. Ellipticus, Cavitas elliptica.

Sin'us, LYMPH, see Lymph—s. Magni, Sinuses, lateral—s. Maxillary, Antrum of Highmore—s. Médian, see Sinuses, longitudinal—s. Median, see Semicircular canals—s. Morgagnii, Ventricles of the larynx—s. Mucosi, see Urethra—s. Muliebris, Vagina.

Sin'us, OCCIP'ITAL, Sinus occipita'lis. These sinuses commence at the sides of the foramen magnum ossis occipitis, and ascend—becoming broader and nearer each other—into the substance of the falx cerebelli, where they frequently unite. Each opens into the inferior part of the torcular Herophili. They receive the veins of the falx cerebelli, of the dura mater, which lines the fossæ cerebelli, and of the posterior part of the cerebellum. Haller and Sömmerring have given them the name of posterior occipital sinuses, to distinguish them from the transverse sinus, which they have called anterior occipital sinus.

Sin'us, PYRAM'IDAL or PYR'IFORM, Sin'us Pyrifor'mes. A pyramidal space, the laryngo-pharyngeal or lateral pharyngeal sulcus, sinus or fossa, continuous with the pharynx, and sloping down to the entrance into the oesophagus.

Sin'us PYRIFORMES, Sinus, pyramidal.

Sin'us QUAR'TUS, S. perpendicular'is, Straight sin'us, (F.) Sinus choroidien, (Ch.) Sinus droit. This sinus—triangular throughout, wide posteriorly, narrower anteriorly, slightly oblique downwards and backwards—passes along the base of the falx cerebri, from the termination of the inferior longitudinal sinus to the torcular Herophili. It receives the inferior longitudinal sinus, the veins of the lateral ventricles or venæ Galeni, the superior cerebellous veins, &c.

Sin'us TRANSVER'SUS, S. occipita'lis ante'rior, Bas'ilar sin'us. This sinus lies transversely at the anterior part of the basilar process of the occipital bone. It forms a communication between the two petrous sinuses, and the cavernous sinus of one side, and those of the other. Its breadth is commonly very great. It is situate between two layers of the dura mater, and presents, internally, a kind of cavernous tissue.

Sin'us TRIANGULA'RIS, see Sinuses, longitudinal—s. Urogenitalis, Urogenital sinus.

Sin'us UTER'INI, S. caverno'si Uteri, Uterine sinuses. A name given to cavities formed by the uterine veins in the substance of the uterine pareties. They are very large during pregnancy.

Sinuses, Confluence of the, Torcular Herophili.

SINUSES OF THE DU'RA MA'TER, S. seu Fis-tu'la seu Cavita'tes seu Ventric'uli seu Tu'buli seu Sanguiduc'tus seu Receptac'ula Du'ræ ma'tris, are formed by a separation of the layers of the dura mater, which acts as a substitute for the outer membrane of veins. Bichat admits only four great sinuses, of which all the others seem to be dependencies—the two lateral sinuses, the straight sinus, and the longitudinal sinus. To the lateral sinuses belong—the petrous sinuses, superior and inferior; the transverse sinus; the cavernous sinuses; the coronary sinus, and the occipital sinuses. To the straight sinus belongs the inferior longitudinal. The longitudinal sinus, properly so called, has no sinus under its dependence.

SINUSES, FRON'TAL, Frontal sinuses—s. of the Larynx, Ventricles of the larynx.

SINUSES, LAT'ERAL, Sinus transvers'i, S. mag-ni, S. laterales, (F.) Sinus latéraux. Each of these sinuses, distinguished into right and left, begins at the torcular Herophili or confluence of the sinuses, and terminates at the sinus of the jugular vein.

SINUSES, LAT'ERAL PHARYNGE'AL, see Sinus, pyramidal—s. Latero-pharyngeal, see Sinus, pyramidal.

SINUSES, LONGITU'DINAL, S. Longitudinales. These are two in number. 1. SUPERIOR LONGITU'DINAL SINUS, S. falcifor'mis superior seu tri-angularis, Sinus median (Ch.). A long, triangular canal, convex above, concave below, which occupies the whole of the upper edge of the falx cerebri. It is broad behind, and much narrower before, where it commences by a cul-de-sac, at the crista galli of the ethmoid bone. It passes along the frontal or coronal crest, sagittal suture, and the vertical groove of the occipital bone. It receives several veins from the dura mater, and all those that are spread over the convex and plain surfaces of the two hemispheres of the brain. It discharges itself into the upper part of the torcular Herophili. 2. INFERIOR LONGITU'DINAL SINUS, S. falcifor'mis inferior, Ve'na fal'cis cer'ebr'i. This is much narrower than the last, and occupies the inferior edge of the falx cerebri, from its anterior third to the tentorium cerebelli, where it terminates, commonly by two branches, in the straight sinus.

SINUSES, PETRO'SAL OR PE'TROUS, Petrous sinuses.

SINUSES OF VALSAL'VA, Sinus Valsal'væ, are three depressions in the aorta—Sinus aort'ici—and pulmonary artery—Sinus pulmonales—immediately opposite the semilunar valves. Their use is to leave the edges of the valves free, so that they can be caught by the reflux blood. Where the aorta is about to send off the first of its large branches, at the top of the thorax, it is of great size, and has been called the Large sinus of Valsal'va.

SINUSES, VER'TEBRAL, (F.) Sinus vertebraux. Two great venous sinuses, different from those of the dura mater, which extend the whole length of the vertebral canal, from the occipital foramen to the end of the sacrum, behind the bodies of the vertebrae, before the dura mater, and at the sides of the posterior vertebral ligament. At their inner side they communicate with each other by means of branches, which form true transverse sinuses. They are situate at the middle of the body of each vertebra, passing under the posterior vertebral ligament. They receive at their middle part the veins that arise in the spongy tissue of the vertebrae. By their external side the vertebral sinuses communicate with the posterior branches of the vertebral, intercostal, and lumbar veins. At their posterior side they receive the veins, which creep on the prolongation of the dura mater that envelops the marrow.

Si'phon, Si'pho, (σιφων, 'a tube.') A bent tube, whose limbs are of unequal length, employed in pharmacy for transferring liquids from one vessel to another. With this view, the shorter limb is plunged into the liquid, and air is sucked from the extremity of the longer limb. The pressure of the atmosphere forces the fluid through the tube; and the flow will continue as long as the extremity of the lower limb is below the level of the fluid in which the shorter limb is immersed.

An exhausting syringe is, at times, attached to the longer extremity of the siphon, by means of which the air can be drawn from it.

Si'phon, PLUNG'ING. An instrument used in pharmacy for obtaining a specimen,—at times, a measured specimen,—of any liquid. With this view, the instrument is immersed in the liquid, and allowed to remain there until full. The opening at the top is then closed with the thumb; and the contents, thus removed, are allowed to flow out by removing the thumb and permitting the entrance of air. It is a form of the pipette.

The aggregate of the hard parts of the body, or the bones. A skeleton is found in almost all animals, although it may not always be formed in the same manner. In some, as in the crustacea and testacea, it is wholly or partly external, Ex'oskeleton, Der'moskeleton. In others, as in birds, the mammalia, &c., it is internal, En'doskeleton, Neur'oskeleton, (F.) Endo-squelette. It serves as a support for other organs. On it the general shape of the body and of its various parts is greatly dependent. When the bones are united by their natural ligaments, the skeleton is said to be natural, Scel'etum natura'lē; when articulated by means of wires, artificial or articulated, Scel'etum artificia'lē.

Skeleto'pœia, Sceletopœia, Sceletu'sis, (skele-ton, and ποιέω, 'I make.') The part of practical anatomy which treats of the preparation of bones, and the construction of skeletons. Bones are prepared to exhibit their conformation, structure, chemical composition, mode of development, and changes; the different cavities formed by their union; and to demonstrate their connections, relations, modes of union, &c.

Smi'lacin, see Smilax sarsaparilla.

Smilaci'na Racemo'sa, (from smilax.) False Spike'nard; indigenous; Ord. Liliaceæ; is said to be alterative, diuretic and diaphoretic.

Smi'lax, gen. Smi'lacis, (σμυλαξ.) Taxus baccata—s. Aspera Chinensis, Smilax China—s. Aspera Peruviana, Smilax sarsaparilla—s. Canellæfolia, S. pseudochina.

Smi'lax Chi'na, S. aspera Chinen'sis. Ord. Smilacææ. Sec. Syst. Diœcia Hexandria. The root, China, C. orientalis seu ponderosa seu ve'ra, Sankira, Gauquava, Chi'na root, (F.) Squine, Esquine, Racine de Chine, was formerly much employed in cutaneous and venereal affections.

Smi'lax Glau'ca; indigenous; has similar virtues to those of Sarsaparilla.

Smi'lax Hederæfo'lia, S. pseudochina—s. Indica spinosa, Smilax pseudochina—s. Officinalis, Smilax sarsaparilla.

Smi'lax Pseudochi'na, S. Indica spinosa seu canellefo'lia seu hederæfo'lia, Chi'na occidentalis seu spu'ria nodo'sa, American or West India Chi'na. In scrofulous disorders, the root has been often preferred to the oriental kind. In other cases it possesses similar virtues.

Smi'lax Sarsaparil'la, S. Officinalis, Sarsaparil'la, Jamaica Sarsaparil'la, Sartaparil'la, Smi'lax as'pera Peruvia'na, Sar'za, Sar'sa, Carivillan'di, Iva Pecan'ga, Macapat'li, Zar'za, Zarzaparil'la, (F.) Salsepareille. The root of this and other species of Smilax, Sarsaparilla, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Sarsæ Ra'dix, (Ph. B., 1867,) is inodorous; taste bitterish, feculaceous, and fibrous; of a dark color externally; white within. It is possessed of diuretic and demulcent properties, and has been often employed in the sequelæ of syphilis; when, after a mercurial course, nocturnal pains, ulcerations, &c., continue. It has, also, been advised in scrofula, chronic rheumatism, &c.; but its efficacy is, to say the least of it, a matter of doubt. Dose, ℞j. to ʒj. of the powder. It is obtained from Honduras, Brazil, and Peru—the varieties being called respectively, Honduras, (F.) Salsepareille de Honduras; Brazil, (F.) S. de Brésil ou de Portugal, and Peruvian Sarsaparilla, (F.) S. de Pérou ou Caraque.

A principle called Smi'lacin or Sarsaparil'in or Parag'lin has been obtained from it.

Smi'lax Tamnoï'des; indigenous; has similar properties.

Smi'lê, (σμυλη.) A curved, two-edged bistoury. A knife.

Smi'liôn, (σμυλιον, dim. of smile.) Scalpel.

Smit, (participle of smite.) Contagion.

Smit'tle, see Contagious.

Smyr'na, (σmyρνα.) Myrrha.

Smyrnis'mus, (from smyrna.) Embalming.

Smyr'nium Olusa'trum, Smyr'nium, (from smyrna;) the odor of the seeds resembling that of myrrh.) Hipposeli'num, Macero'na, Macedonis'ium, Her'ba Alexandri'na, Gri'elum, Agriose-li'num, Alexan'ders, Alsan'ders. A plant formerly cultivated for culinary purposes. The seeds are bitter and aromatic, and the roots more powerfully bitter. They have been recommended as resolvents, diuretics, emmenagogues, &c.

Snag. A tooth standing alone or projecting beyond the others.

Snag'gleteeth, Odontoparallaxis.

Snag'rel, Aristolochia serpentaria.

Snail, ([Sax.] pnægl.) Limax—s. Shell, Cochlea.

SNAIL TRACK. An aphthous ulceration of the throat met with in the second stage of syphilis Snake'head, Chelone glabra.

Snake, Hood'ed, Cobra di Capello—s. Spectacled, Cobra di Capello.

Snake'root, Garuleum bipinnatum—s. Birthwort, Aristolochia serpentaria—s. Black, Actæa racemosa, Sanicula Marilandica—s. Button, Eryngium aquaticum, Liatris spicata—*s. Snake'weed, Aristolochia serpentaria, Helenium autumnale, Polygonum bistorta—s. American, Cicuta maculata.

Snaps, Phaseolus.

Sneeze'wort, Achillea ptarmica, Helenium autumnale.

Sneeze'ing, ([Sax.] niepan, [G.] niesen, 'to sneeze,' an example of onomatopœia.) Clo'nus Sternuta'tio, Sternuta'tio, Sternutamentum, Sternumentum, Ptar'mus, (Sc.) Nees'ing, (F.) Éternue-ment. A convulsive motion of the expiratory muscles, by which the air is driven rapidly, and rushes sonorously, through the nasal fossæ, carrying with it the mucus and foreign bodies which adhere to the pituitary membrane, and have occasioned the movement.

There are many customs and superstitions connected with the act of sneezing, suggested probably by the violent concussion it gives the frame. "Most grandmothers will exclaim, 'God bless you!' when they hear a child sneeze, and they sum up the philosophy of the subject with the following lines:

Sneeze on a Monday, you sneeze for danger;
Sneeze on a Tuesday, you kiss a stranger;
Sneeze on a Wednesday, you sneeze for a letter;
Sneeze on a Thursday, for something better;
Sneeze on a Friday, you sneeze for sorrow;
Sneeze on a Saturday, your sweetheart to-morrow;
Sneeze on a Sunday, your safety seek,
The devil will have you the whole of the week."
["Lancashire Folklore," in Public Opinion,
March 9, 1867.]

Snir'rels, Nares.

Snob, Nasal mucus.

Snoring, Snore, ([Sax.] pnopa.) Rhen'chus, Ren'chus, Rhenx'is, Ron'chus, Rhon'chus, Ster'tor, (Sc.) Row'ting, (F.) Ronslement. Noise made in the posterior part of the mouth and nasal fossæ during the movements of inspiration, particularly in sleep, both when the person is in health, and in disease, as in apoplexy. In certain affections of the chest—in some cases of pulmonary catarrh—a kind of snoring may be distinctly heard by applying the ear or the stethoscope to the chest.

Snot, Nasal mucus.

Snoth, Nasal mucus.

Snout, ([D.] snuit.) Nasus.

Snow, ([Sax.] pnap.) Nix, Chi'on, (F.) Neige. Water in a solid state, which falls from the atmosphere in white flakes. It is used externally as a tonic and discutient.

Snow'ball, Cephalanthus occidentalis.

Snow'berry, Symphoricarpus racemosus.

Snow'blind'ness, Niphablep'sia. Blindness produced by the reflection of the solar light from snow. As a preventive, Snow-eyes are used by the Esquimaux. These are made of extremely light wood, with a bridge resting on the nose like spectacles, and a narrow slit for the passage of the light.

Snow'drop Tree, Chionanthus Virginica.

Snow-eyes, see Snowblindness.

Snuff, Cephal'ic, ([D.] snuff.) Pulvis asari compositus.

Snuffles, ([D.] snuffelen, 'to breathe hard through the nose,' probably an example of onomatopœia.) Grave'do neonato'rum, Rhinan'gia

Rhinanch'onē. Breathing hard through the nose, often owing to accumulation of the mucous secretions, — an affection to which infants are liable, and which is relieved by oiling the interior of the nostrils.

Snurle, Coryza.

Snurles, Nares.

Soap'wort, Saponaria.

Sob, Singultus, ([Sax.] reopian, 'to grieve,' probably an example of onomatopœia,) (F.) Sanglot. A spasmodic, sudden, and momentary contraction of the diaphragm, immediately followed by relaxation, by which the little air that the contraction has caused to enter the chest is driven out with noise. It is an evidence of corporeal or mental suffering.

Sob'by, Corpulent.

Sob'oles, 'offspring,' Epigone.

Sobri'etas, Temperance.

So'cia Paro'tidis, 'companion of the parotid,' see Parotid.

So'cial E'vil, Prostitution.

Soci'ety, Soci'etas, (F.) Société, (socius, 'a companion,') An association for the promotion of some common object.

Soci'eties, Med'ical. Associations of medical gentlemen for the promotion of science have been numerous, and productive of valuable results. In the United States, societies exist in many of the States, possessing the power of examining into the qualifications of every one who may be desirous of practising within their particular jurisdiction. In some of the States, however, the qualified and unqualified are permitted to exercise their profession with equal privileges and immunities.

Among the medical associations that have issued from time to time useful transactions or publications are the following: IN AMERICA, — The Massachusetts Medical Society; the Physico-medical and Medical Societies of the State of New York; the College of Physicians and the Pathological Society of Philadelphia; and the American Medical Association. IN EUROPE, — The Association of Fellows and Licentiates of the King's and Queen's College of Physicians of Ireland; the Medico-chirurgical and Phrenological Societies of Edinburgh; the College of Physicians, the Medico-chirurgical, the Medical, the Sydenham, New Sydenham, the Pathological, the Epidemiological, and Obstetrical Societies of London; the Associated Apothecaries and Surgeon Apothecaries of England and Wales, and the Provincial Medical and Surgical Association; the Académie de Chirurgie, the Société Médicale d'Emulation, the Société de Médecine, the Académie de Médecine, the Société Médicale d'Observation, and the Société de Biologie, of Paris; the Medico-chirurgical Academy of Vienna; the Medical Societies of Berlin and Copenhagen, &c., &c. IN ASIA, — The Medical and Physical Society of Calcutta.

Valuable medical essays are likewise contained in the published Transactions of the American Philosophical Society; the Royal Societies of London, Edinburgh, Göttingen, &c.; the Imperial Academy of Sciences of Paris; the Imperial Society of Sciences of St. Petersburg and Vienna; the Royal Academy of Sciences of Turin; the Academia Imperialis Leopoldina Naturæ Curiosorum, &c.

Sock'et of the Eye, Orbit — s. of the Teeth, see Alveolus.

Socor'dia, (socors, gen. socordis, from se, 'separation,' and cor, gen. cordis, 'heart,') 'without intellect,' Hallucination.

So'da. (An Arabic word,) (F.) Soude. Protoxide of sodium is obtained by adding caustic lime to a solution of carbonate of soda. The soda in solution may be obtained by evaporation as hydrate of soda. Soda (Ph. U. S., 1873) is procured by the evaporation of solution of soda until ebullition ceases. The French Codex (1866) has a formula for Soude caustique liquide, Lessive de Savonniers. Its action is like that of potassa.

So'da impu'ra, Baril'la, Barig'lia, Baril'lor, So'da Hispan'ica, Ana'tron, Na'tron, Ana'ton, Ni'trum Antiquo'rum, Kelp, Aphroni'trum, Sal alkali'nus fix'us fos'silis, Carbo'nas So'dæ impu'rus, Subcarbo'nas So'dæ impu'ra, Ana'chron, the mineral alkali, is obtained from several sources: — naturally, in Egypt; artificially, from the incineration of marine plants; and from the decomposition of sulphate of soda, &c. It is principally, however, derived from plants growing on the seacoast; — as the Sal'sola sati'va, S. soda, S. tragus, Salicor'nia herba'cea, Salicornia Arab'ica, &c., which are, collectively, called varec or varech, corrupted in the Channel Isles to vraic and vraich, where they are extensively used as manure. The cutting of these plants is there called vraiching. The Barilla ashes are from the ashes of the Salicor'nia Europæ'a; — the Kelp, (F.) Soude de Varec, from the Fucus vesiculo'sus and other varieties; — the Turkey Barilla, Roquette, Cendre du Levant, Rochet'ta Alexandri'na, from the Mesembryanthemum Cop'ticum; — the Alicant Barilla, Soda Alicanti'na seu Alonensis, from the Mesembryanthemum nodiflorum; — and the Carthage'na Barilla, from the Salicor'nia and Sal'sola.

Impure subcarbonate of soda, (F.) Soude du commerce, consists of subcarbonate of soda, potash, chloride of sodium, clay, and other earthy substances. It is chiefly used for preparing the pure subcarbonate.

So'da, Cardialgia, Cephalalgia, Pyrosis.

So'da Aceta'ta, Sodæ Ace'tas, So'dii Ace'tas, Ac'etate of So'dium, Ac'etate of Soda, Ter'ra folia'ta minera'lis, (F.) Acétate de soude. This salt is used in similar cases with the acetate of potassa.

So'da Aëra'ta, Sodæ carbonas — s. Alonensis, Soda — s. Arseniate of, Arseniate of soda.

So'da, BEN'ZOATE OF, Sodæ Ben'zoas, (F.) Benzoate de Soude. This salt has been used in gout and rheumatism to eliminate uric acid. It is prepared by saturating a solution of benzoic acid with carbonate of soda.

So'da, BIBO'RATE OF, Borax — s. Bicarbonate of, Soda, carbonate of — s. Bicarbonate of, Commercial, Sodii bicarbonas venalis — s. Bilate of, Pieromel — s. Borate of, Borax — s. Boraxata, Borax.

So'da, CAR'BONATE OF, Sodæ Carbo'nas seu Bicarbo'nas, So'dii Bicarbo'nas, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Carbo'nas Na'tricum, So'da Aëra'ta, Bicarbonate of Soda, Carbonate of protoxide of So'dium, Bicarbonate of Sodium, (F.) Carbonate de Soude, S. effervescente ou aérée ou crayeuse, Carbonate de Soude Saturée. Made from powdered commercial bicarbonate of sodium by percolation, and drying on bibulous paper. Its use is the same as the subcarbonate, than which it is less caustic, and better adapted for effervescing draughts.

So'da CAUS'TICA, Protoxide of So'dium, Caus'tic Soda, (F.) Soude caustique, S. à la Chaux, Soude pure. (The impure subcarbonate, treated by quicklime, and consequently deprived of its carbonic acid.) It may be used as a caustic like the Potassa fusa, and is even preferable to it, as it does not deliquesce and run.

So'DA, CHLO'RIDE OF, S. Chlorina'ta, So'dæ Chlo'ridum seu Chlorure'tum, Chlo'rinated Soda, Natrum Oxymuriat'icum, Oxymuriate of Soda, (F.) Chlorure de Soude, Chlorure d'oxide de Sodium. This salt is used as a disinfecting agent; both to remove offensive smells in chambers, and to alter the condition of fetid ulcers. See Liquor sodæ chlorinatæ.

So'DA, CHLO'RINATED, Soda, chloride of—s. Citrate of, Sodæ citras.

So'DA, EFFERVESCENT CI'TRO-TAR'TRATE OF, So'dæ Ci'tro-tar'tras Efferves'cens. (Sodæ Bicarb. pulv., \mathfrak{Z} xvij., Acid. tartaric. pulv., \mathfrak{Z} vij., Acid. citric. pulv., \mathfrak{Z} vj. Mix thoroughly, place them in a dish or pan heated to between 200° and 220° , and when the particles begin to aggregate, stir them until they assume a granular form. Then, by means of suitable sieves, separate the granules of uniform size. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, \mathfrak{Z} j. to \mathfrak{Z} ij.

So'DA HISPAN'ICA, see Soda—s. Hydrochlorate of, Soda, muriate of—s. Hypophosphite of, Sodii hypophosphis.

So'DA, HYPOSUL'PHITE OF, Hyposul'phite of So'dium, So'dii hyposul'phis, Sodæ hyposul'phis, (F.) Hyposulfite de Soude. This salt has been absurdly over-extolled in chronic cutaneous, and serofulous affections, and especially in tuberculosis of the lungs, and in all the cases in which the sulphite of soda seems to be indicated. See Sodæ sulphis. Dose, gr. x. and more, in syrup.

So'DA IMPU'RA, see Soda—s. Lithate of, Urate of soda—s. Mephite of, Soda, subcarbonate of.

So'DA MINT. A combination of bicarbonate of sodium, \mathfrak{Z} j., aromatic spirits of ammonia, \mathfrak{f} ij., spearmint water, \mathfrak{f} ij. Dose, \mathfrak{f} ss.— \mathfrak{f} ij. for an adult; \mathfrak{f} ss.— \mathfrak{f} ij. for an infant.

So'DA, MU'RIATE OF, S. muriat'a seu muriat'ica, Al'kali minera'lè sali'nium, So'dæ mu'rias, Sal com'munis seu culina'ris seu fontium seu gem'mæ seu mari'nus seu al'bus seu fos'silis seu lu'cidum, Mu'ria, Na'tron muriat'um, Na'trum muriat'icum, Hydrochlo'rinat'um, Chlorure'tum So'dii, So'dii Chlo'ridum, Com'mon salt, Sea salt, Rock salt, Bay salt, White salt, Quadrichlo'ruet of So'dium, Hydrochlo'rate of protox'ide of So'dium, Hydrochlo'rate of Soda, Chlo'ride of So'dium, (F.) Chlorure de Sodium, Sel marin, Sel de Cuisine. In an impure state, this salt is one of the most abundant of natural productions. It is soluble in 3 parts of water, and is tonic, purgative, and anthelmintic; externally, stimulant. It is a well-known and useful culinary substance. It has been recommended as an antiperiodic in the dose of \mathfrak{Z} ss. or \mathfrak{Z} j.

So'DA, NI'TRATE OF, So'dæ Ni'tras seu Azo'tas, Sodii Nitras, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Na'tron seu Na'trum ni'tricum, Ni'tras na'tricus, Al'kali minera'lè ni'trat'um, Ni'trum rhomboïd'alè seu cu'bicum, Ni'tras Na'tricum, Salpe'tra, Ni'trate of Soda, N. of So'dium, Protoni'trate of So'dium, Cu'bic Ni'tre. Occurs, native, in Peru, but may be made by neutralizing carbonate of soda by nitric acid, evaporating, and crystallizing.

Its virtues are similar to those of nitrate of potassa, for which it has sometimes been substituted.

So'DA, NI'TRITE OF. (Made by heating a mixture of nitrate of soda and charcoal in a crucible to dull redness. When the salt has become white, raise the heat to melt it, pour it on a clean flagstone, break it into fragments, and preserve in a stoppered bottle.) Formerly used in the preparation of Spiritus Ætheris Nitrosi (Ph. B.).

So'DA, OXYMU'RIATE OF, Soda, chloride of.

So'DA, PHOS'PHATE OF, Phos'phate of So'dium, So'dii Phos'phas, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) S. Phosphorata, Sodæ phos'phas, Phosphas Na'tricum, Natrum Oxophosphor'des, Sal mirab'ilè perlat'um, Alkali minera'lè phosphoratum, Subphos'phate of protoxide of So'dium, Subprotophos'phate of So'dium, Subphosphate of Soda, Tribas'ic phosphate of Soda, Taste'less purg'ing salt, (F.) Phosphate de Soude, Sel admirable perlé. (Bone calcined to whiteness and in fine powder, \mathfrak{Z} xxx., Sulphuric acid, \mathfrak{Z} lxxij., Carbonate of sodium, Water, each q. s. Mix the powder with the acid in an earthen vessel, add a gallon of water, and stir. Digest for three days, occasionally adding a little water to replace that lost by evaporation, and frequently stirring the mixture. Pour in now a gallon of boiling water, and strain through muslin, gradually adding more boiling water, until the liquid passes nearly tasteless. Set the strained liquor by, that the dregs may subside, from which pour off the clear solution, and boil down to a gallon. To the concentrated liquid, poured off from the dregs and heated in an iron vessel, add by degrees the carbonate of sodium previously dissolved in hot water, until effervescence ceases, and the phosphoric acid is completely neutralized; then filter the liquid and set it aside to crystallize. Having removed the crystals, add, if necessary, a small quantity of carbonate of sodium to the liquid, so as to render it slightly alkaline; then alternately evaporate and crystallize so long as crystals are produced. Keep in a well-stoppered bottle. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Cathartic dose, \mathfrak{Z} ss. to \mathfrak{Z} j.

So'DA, PHOS'PHATE OF, TRIBAS'IC, S. phosphate of.

So'DA POW'DERS, see Powders, Soda—s. Springs, see Water, mineral (gaseous).

So'DA, SIL'ICATE OF, So'dæ Sil'icas, Sol'uble Glass. Internally it is supposed to promote the discharge of uric acid by the kidneys; externally, it is employed like silicate of potassa, for immoveable bandages.

So'DA, SUBCAR'BOATE OF, Sodæ Subcarbo'nas, S. Carbo'nas, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Sodii Carbo'nas, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Na'tron prapara'tum, Sal Sodæ, S. al'kali, Flos salis, Sagi'men Vi'tri, Car'bonate of So'da, Car'bonate of So'dium, Salt of Soda or of Basil'ta, Subcar'bonate of protox'ide of So'dium, Meph'ite of Soda, (F.) Sous-carbonate de Soude, Sel de Soude. The impure carbonate, dissolved in water; the solution filtered and crystallized. Soluble in two parts of water at 60° . Used as an antacid, and a deobstruent in serofulous and other affections. Dose, gr. x. to \mathfrak{Z} ss.

The dried Carbonate or Subcar'bonate of Soda, or Sodium, Sodæ subcarbo'nas exsiccat'a, Sodæ carbo'nas exsiccat'a, Sodii carbonas exsiccat'a, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Carbo'nas Sodæ siccat'um, (F.) Sous-carbonate de Soude desséché, is employed as an antacid and lithontriptic. Dose, gr. x. to xv.

So'DA, SUBPHOS'PHATE OF, S. phosphate of.

So'DA, SUL'PHATE OF, Sulphate of Sodium, Sodæ Sul'phas, Sodii Sul'phas, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Na'tron vitriola'tum, Sal cathart'icus seu mirab'ilis Glauberi, Al'kali minera'lè sulphu'ricum, Na'trum sulphu'ricum, So'da vitriola'ta, Sul'phas na'tricus, Ape'rient Salt of Frederick, Glauber's Salt, (F.) Sulfate de Soude, Sel de Glauber. (Obtained from the salt that remains after the distillation of muriatic acid, the superabundant acid being saturated with subcarbonate of soda.) It is soluble in three parts of water at 60° , is purgative, and in small doses diuretic. Dose, \mathfrak{Z} vi.—x.

The Lymington Glauber's Salts is a Sulphate of Magnesia and Soda, and is obtained from the mother-liquor of sea-water, or by dissolving Epsom salt in a solution of Glauber's salt.

So'DA, SUL'PHITE OF, Sodæ sulphis—s. Sulphovinate of, Sulphovinate of soda.

So'DA, TAR'TRATE OF, Tar'trate of Potas'sa and Soda, Tar'trate of So'dium and Potassium, Tartarized or Tartarated Soda, Rochelle or Seignette's Salt, Soda Tartariza'ta, Soda Tartarata, Sal Ruppellen'sis seu Seignet'ti seu Polychres'tum Seignetti, Na'tron tartariza'tum, Tar'tras Potas'sæ et Sodæ, Sodæ et Potas'sæ Tar'tras, (Ph. So'dæ Sul'phis, Sodii Sulphis, (Ph. U. S., 1873.) Sul'phite of So'da, Sul'phite of So'dium, may be made by passing a stream of sulphurous acid gas into a strong solution of carbonate of soda, digesting the solution with sulphur at a gentle heat for several days, evaporating, and crystallizing. Like sulphurous acid, it has been used to arrest fermentation, as in yeast vomiting, and in zymotic diseases in general; the sulphurous acid, it is imagined, being set free by the acid of the yeasty matter. Dose, 3j. three times a day. On a similar hypothesis, it has been used locally in sore mouth presumed to be of parasitic origin, 3j. of the salt to f3j. of water. It has also been given in intermittents. See Potassii sulphis.

So'dæ VALERIA'NAS, Vale'rianate of Soda, was admitted into the Pharmacopœia of the United States for 1863, but dismissed in that of 1873. It is chiefly employed for obtaining the other valerianates.

So'dæ ET ARGEN'TI HYPOSUL'PHIS, Hyposul'phite of Soda and Silver, (F.) Hyposulphite de Soude et d'Argent. (This salt is formed by pouring a solution of hyposulphite of soda over oxide of silver recently precipitated by potassa, until the oxide is entirely dissolved. Crystals are afforded by evaporation.) A solution of it is used in the same cases as one of the nitrate of silver.

So'dæ ET POTAS'SÆ TAR'TRAS, Soda, Tartrate of.

Sol, 'the sun,' Gold.

Solaire, Solar.

*Sola'men Intestino'rum, (from solor, 'I comfort,') Pimpinella anisum — s. Scabiosorum, Fumaria.*

Sola'nia, see Solanum dulcamara.

Sol'anin, see Solanum dulcamara.

*Sol'anoid, Solanoï'des, (solanum, 'the potato,' and oides, 'resemblance,') Resembling a potato; potato-like. An epithet applied to a form of cancer, Solano'ma, which appears to be intermediate between scirrhus and encephaloid, increasing more rapidly than the former, yet approaching it in firmness.*

*Solano'ma, (from solanum tuberosum — 'the potato,' and oma,) see Solanoid.*

*Sola'num, (from solor, 'I soothe' [?],) S. ni-grum seu vulgarè seu vulgatum, Com'mon or Gar'den Night'shade, (F.) Morelle à fruit noir. Family, Solanaceæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Mono-* gynia. A narcotic poison. The Huile de Morelle is made by macerating in oil, for several days, the leaves and fruit of this plant. The oil is anodyne and discutient.

SOLA'NUM CAROLINENSE, Horse nettle; indigenous. The juice of the berries is said to have been employed successfully in idiopathic tetanus. [?]

SOLA'NUM DULCAMA'RA, S. scandens seu ligno-sum, Dulcamara, D. flexuosa, Glyciphyllis, Ama'ra dulcis, Στρογγύλος of Theophrastus, Bit'tersweet, Wood'y Night'shade, Bit'tersweet Night'shade, Bit'tersweet Vine, Night'shade Vine, Violet bloom, (F.) Douce-amère, Morelle grimpeante, Vigne de Judée. The taste of the young branches—Dulcamara (Ph. U. S.)—is bitter, followed by sweetness; hence its name. It has been used in many diseases as a diuretic and sudorific, especially in chronic rheumatism, humoral asthma, dropsy, various skin diseases, scrofula, and jaundice; but is of doubtful efficacy. Its virtues seem to depend on an alkaline principle, called Solanin or Solanin, which is sometimes employed medicinally. Dose of dulcamara in powder, ℞j. to ℥j.

SOLA'NUM ESCULEN'TUM, S. tuberosum—s. Fœtidum, Datura stramonium—s. Furiosum, Atropa belladonna—s. Hortense nigrum, Atropa belladonna—s. Humboldtii, S. lycopersicum—s. Lethale, Atropa belladonna—s. Lignosum, S. dulcamara.

SOLA'NUM LYCOPER'SICUM, Lycopersicum esculentum, L. pomum amoris seu Humboldtii seu pseudolycopersicum, Malum lycopersicum, Love-apple plant. The fruit of this, called Toma'ta, Toma'to or Loveapple, (F.) Pomme d'Amour, is much eaten in the United States; and with the French, Spaniards, Portuguese, &c., forms an esteemed sauce.

SOLA'NUM MAG'NUM VIRGINIA'NUM RU'BRUM, Phytolacca decandra—s. Maniacum, Atropa belladonna, Datura stramonium—s. Melanocerasus, Atropa belladonna.

SOLA'NUM MELON'GENA, Melon'gena, Egg-plant, Mad-apple plant, (F.) Aubergine. A native of Asia, Africa, and America. Its oblong, egg-shaped fruit, Pomum Melon'genæ, Malum insaanum, is prepared in soups and sauces, in those countries, like the tomato.

SOLA'NUM NI'GRUM, Solanum.

SOLA'NUM NI'VEUM. A South African plant; the leaves of which, applied to foul ulcers, cleanse them. The fresh juice of the berries and leaves, made into an ointment with lard or fat, is used by the farmers for the same purpose.

SOLA'NUM PANICULA'TUM, Junipeb'a, Jurube'a. A shrub of Brazil, where the juice of the bruised leaves and unripe fruit, and the plant itself and its root, are used as a tonic.

SOLA'NUM PARMENTE'RII, S. tuberosum—s. Pseudolycopersicum, S. lycopersicum—s. Quadri-folium, Paris—s. Racemosum Americanum, Phytolacca decandra.

SOLA'NUM SANCTUM, Pal'estine Night'shade. The fruit of this is globular, and is much eaten in the countries where it is a native.

SOLA'NUM SCAN'DENS, S. dulcamara.

SOLA'NUM TUBERO'SUM, S. esculentum seu Parmenterii, Lycopersicum tuberosum, Pa'pas Americanus, Pap'pus Americanus, America'num Tuberosum, Batta'ta Virginia'na, Bata'tas; the Pota'to, (F.) Pomme de Terre, Parmentière. A native of Peru. A nutritious and wholesome vegetable: one of the most useful, indeed, that exists. One hundred pounds of potatoes afford ten pounds of starch, which is equal to arrow-root as a nutrient and demulcent. It is called Pota'to Flour, P. Starch, French Sa'go, Petit Sague, Com'mon Ar'rowroot, &c.

SOLA'NUM U'RENS, Capsicum annuum—s. Vesicarium, Physalis.

SOLA'NUM VIRGINIA'NUM. Indigenous; is said to resemble Solanum nigrum in its properties.

SOLA'NUM VULGA'RE, Solanum.

Solar, Sola'ris, (F.) Solaire, (sol, gen. solis, 'the sun.') Relating to the sun; having rays like the sun.

SOLAR ASPHYX'IA, see Coup de soleil—s. Exhaustion, see Coup de soleil.

SOLAR PLEX'US, Epigast'ric Plex'us, Plex'us sola'ris, Cent'rum commu'nē, Cer'ebrum abdomi-nalē. A collection of ganglions and filaments, interweaving and anastomosing with each other repeatedly, and belonging to the system of the great sympathetic. This vast plexus, lying on the vertebral column, the aorta, and the pillars of the diaphragm, has a very irregular shape. The ganglions and filaments composing it are soft, reddish, and almost all issue from the semi-lunar ganglions. It receives, also, branches from the pneumogastrics. It seems to be chiefly intended for the aorta, and accompanies all its branches; furnishing many secondary plexuses, which are called the infradiaphragmatic, celiac superior mesenteric, inferior mesenteric, renal or emulgent, spermatic, &c.

SOLAR SPEC'TRUM, see Spectrum.

Soldanel'la, (from solidare, 'to make firm,') Convolvulus soldanella.

Soldier's Spots, Maculae albæ—s. Weed, Matico.

Sole, ([Sax.] rol,) Solum, S. pe'dis, So'lea, (from solum, 'the ground,') Ba'sis corporis, Ich-nus, Superfici'es planta'ris pe'dis, Peti'na, Vestig'ium, Pe'dion, Pe'za, Pla'ta, Plan'ta, Plan'ta'ris superfi'cies pe'dis, Fa'cies conca'va seu infe'rior seu Pla'num seu Conca'vum seu Pars infe'rior seu Planit'ies seu Plan'ta seu Vo'la pe'dis, (F.) Plante du Pied. The sole of the foot; the under surface of the foot.

So'lea, Sole—s. Ipecacuanha, see Ipecacuanha.

Soléaire, Soleus.

Solen, gen. Solé'nis, (σωλην,) Canal, Cradle; see Solenarium, and Vertebral column.

Solena'rium, (σωληναριον, from σωλην, 'a canal, a pipe,') An instrument of surgery, representing a kind of gutter, in the cavity of which the penis was placed, like a limb in a cradle. The word Solen itself—σωλην, Cana'lis—was used, in antiquity, for a grooved channel or cradle, in which a fractured limb was placed.

Solenostem'ma (gen. Solenostem'matis) Ar'gel, Cynanchum oleaefolium.

Sole'us, Gastrocnemius inter'nus, Tibiocalca-nien (Ch.), (F.) Soléaire, (from solea, 'a sole of a shoe,' owing to its shape.) A muscle situate at the posterior part of the leg. It is broad, flat, and almost oval, and is attached, above, to the posterior edge of the fibula, to the oblique line on the posterior surface, and to the inner edge of the tibia. It terminates, below, by a large tendon, which unites to that of the gastrocnemius externus, to form the tendo Achillis. This muscle extends the foot on the leg, and conversely. See Gastrocnemii.

Solice'tio, (from sol, gen. solis, 'the sun,') In-solation.

Sol'id, Sol'idus, Ste'reos, (from solum, 'the ground,') A body whose integrant molecules are so united by the force of cohesion, that they will not separate by their own weight. The solids, in the human body, are the bones, cartilages, tendons, muscles, ligaments, arteries, veins, nerves, membranes, skin, &c. The anatomy, or rather study of the solids, is called Stereol'ogy, from στερεος, 'solid,' and λογος, 'a discourse.'

Solida'go, gen. Solidag'inis, (from solidare, 'to make firm,' in allusion to its properties as a vulnerary.) See Solidago virgaurea.

SOLIDA'GO RIG'IDA, Rig'id Gold'en rod, Bones' styp'tic; indigenous; of the Composite family, flowering in August and September; is astringent and tonic.

SOLIDA'GO SARACEN'ICA, S. virgaurea.

SOLIDA'GO VIRGAUR'EA, S. vulga'ris seu Saracen'ica, Vir'ga aur'ea, Her'ba do'rea, Cony'za co'ma aur'ea, Sym'phytum Petre'um, Eli'chrys'um, Consol'ida Saracen'ica, Gold'en rod, (F.) Verge d'or, Herbe des Juifs. The leaves of Solida'go odo'ra — SOLIDA'GO, (Ph. U. S.) — Fra'grant or Sweet-scented Golden rod — and the flowers, have been recommended as aperients and tonics, in urinary diseases, and in internal hemorrhage.

SOLIDA'GO VULGA'RIS, S. virgaurea.

Sol'idism, (from solidus, 'solid,') Patholog'ia solida'ris. The doctrine of those physicians who refer all diseases to alterations of the solid parts of the body. To the believers in this doctrine, the appellation Sol'idists has been given. The solidists think that the solids alone are endowed with vital properties; that they alone can receive the impression of morbid agents, and be the seat of pathological phenomena. Solidism has been the prevalent doctrine. It is scarcely necessary to say, that in all our investigations, the condition of both solids and fluids must be regarded.

Sol'idists, see Solidism.

Sol'ium, 'a bathing tub,' Baignoire; also, Tania solium, (from solus, because considered to be found solitary or alone.)

Sollu'nar, Solluna'ris, (sol, 'the sun,' and luna, 'the moon,') An epithet applied to a fancied influence exerted by the sun and moon on man in a state of health and disease.

Solubil'ity, Solubili'tas, (solvere, solutum, 'to dissolve,' and habilis, 'able,') That property of a body by virtue of which it can be dissolved in a menstruum; when it is said to be soluble.

Sol'able, Solubilis. Relaxing. Applied to the bowels when gently relaxed. See Solubility.

SOL'UBLE GLASS, Potassa or Soda, silicate of.

Solum, Sole — s. Pedis, Metatarsus, Sole.

Soluté, (solvere, solutum, 'to dissolve,') Solution.

Solu'tio, Solution — s. Alexiteria Gaubiana, see Disinfection — s. Ammoniae subcarbonatis, Liquor ammoniae subcarbonatis — s. Arsenicalis, Liquor arsenicalis — *s. SOLU'TIO SULPHA'TIS CU'PRI COMPOS'ITA, A'qua vitriol'ica ceru'lea, Syd'enham's Styp'tic Water. (Sulph. cupri, Alum., aa \mathfrak{z} ij., Acid. Sulph., \mathfrak{z} ss., Aqua, Oij.; dissolve, and filter.) A styptic, and, largely diluted, an astringent collyrium.

Solu'tion, Solu'tio, Ly'sis, (F.) Dis'solution. An operation which consists in dissolving a solid body in a menstruum. Likewise, the product of such operation — Solu'tum, (F.) Soluté, Liqueur. It means, also, with many, the termination of a disease; — with others, a termination accompanied by critical signs; — and, with others, again, it is synonymous with crisis.

SOLU'TION OF AC'ETATE OF AMMO'NIA, Liquor ammoniae acetatis — s. of Ammonia, benzinated, see Ammoniae sulphas — s. Alkaline, see Fuligokali — s. of Alkaline iron, Liquor ferri alkalini — Soluti'vus, Laxative.

Solu'tum, Solution.

Sol'vens, (from solvere, 'to dissolve,') Solvent — s. Minerale, Liquor arsenicalis.

Sol'vent, Sol'vens, (F.) Fondant. A medicine supposed to possess the property of dissolving or removing obstructions and extraneous substances. Thus we have solvents of the stone in the bladder, &c. See Dissolventia.

SOL'VENT, MIN'ERAL, Liquor arsenicalis.

So'ma, (σῶμα, gen. σωματός,) Body, Corpus.
Somascetics, (soma, and ἀσκησις, 'exercise,')
 Gymnastics.

Somascétique, Gymnastics.

Somat'io or So'matic, (σωματικός,) Somat'icus, (F.) Somatique, (from soma.) That which concerns the body;—as somatic death, or death of the body, in contradistinction to molecular death or the death of a part.

Somatodym'ia, (soma, and δύνω, 'I enter into,') A double monstrosity in which the trunks are united. Of this, there are several varieties:—Vertebrody'm'ia, where the union is by the vertebrae; Ischiodym'ia, by the ossa ischii; Sternody'm'ia, by the sternum; Supra-omphalody'm'ia, (F.) Sus-omphalodymie, by the superumbilical regions; Su'pra et in'fra-omphalody'm'ia, by the superior and inferior umbilical regions; and Sterno-omphalody'm'ia, where the union is by both the sternal and the umbilical regions.

Somatol'ogy, Somatolog'ia, (soma, and λόγος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on the human body. Anatomy.

So'matome, (σῶμα, 'body,' and τομή, 'division,') Ver'tebral Seg'ment. Segments of the body have been so called by Goodsir.

Somatotomy, (soma, and τομή, 'incision,') Anatomy.

Sommeil, (from [L.] somnus,) Sleep—s. Hibern'al, Hibernation.

Sommet, (from [L.] summus, 'highest,') Vertex.

Somnambula'tion, Somnambulism.

Somnam'bulism, Somnambula'tio, Hypnoba'te'sis, Hypnoba'ta'sis, Hypnoba'tia, Hypnobad'isis, Hypnob'asis, Rhembus'mus, Lunatis'mus, Hypno-nergia, Selenoga'mia, Nyctoba'te'sis, Autonyctoba'tia, Seleni'asis, Selenias'mus, Somnambulis'mus, Nyctob'asis, Noctambula'tio, Noctambulis'mus, Nyctoba'dia, Nyctoba'tia, Siph'ita, Syph'ita, Paroni'ria am'bulans, Noctisur'gium, Onciody'n'ia acti'va, Cenospu'dia, Somnovig'il, Somnam-bula'tion, Sleepwalking, (somnus, and ambulare, ambulatam, 'to walk,') A condition of the brain which occasions the individual to execute, during sleep, some of those actions that commonly take place when awake. It has been imagined that the somnambulist is guided solely by his subjective sensations; but there are many facts which induce the belief that the external senses are not always entirely suspended. The causes of somnambulism are very obscure; and the principal indication of treatment is,—so to arrange the bed-chamber of the somnambulist that he cannot get out of it during sleep; and to avoid suppers, as well as all bodily and mental excitement.

SOMNAM'BULISM, MAGNET'IC, MESMER'IC, or ARTIFIC'IAL, Somnambulis'mus artificia'lis, Cataph'ora magnet'ica, Somnip'athy, is that peculiar condition into which individuals are thrown by the animal magnetizer. It occurs only in those of weak nervous temperament; in hysterical females, &c. See Magnetism, animal.

Somnambulis'mus, Somnambulism—s. Artificialis, Somnambulism, magnetic.

Somnam'bulist, Somnam'bulus, Hypnob'ates, Hypnob'ates, Noctam'bulus, Lunat'icus, Noctam'bulo, Somnam'bulo. A sleepwalker.

Somnambulis'tic, Somnam'bulous. Relating or appertaining to somnambulism,—as the 'somnambulis'tic state.'

Somnam'bulo, Somnambulist.

Somnam'bulous, Somnambulistic.

Somnia'tio, (somnium, 'a dream,') The act of dreaming.

SOMNIA'TIO MORBO'SA, Oncironosus—s. in Statu vigili, Hallucination.

Somniferous, Som'nifer, Sopor'ifer, Hypnot'icus, Hypnopoe'us, Soporati'rus, Soporif'ic, Soporiferous, (F.) Hypnotique, Somnifère, Assoupissant, Soporatif, Soporifère, Soporifique; an epithet for a medicine which causes sleep, (from somnus, and fero, 'I carry,')

Somnil'oquist, Somniloqu'us, (F.) Somniloque, (from somnus, 'sleep,' and loquor, 'I speak,') One who talks in his sleep.

Somnilo'quium, Somniloquis'mus, Somnil'o-quism. Talking in the sleep.

Somnil'oquus, Somniloquist.

Som'nium, (from somnus,) Enyp'nion, Insom'nium, Oncir'os, Oncir'on, Onar, Onciropol'ia, a Dream, (Sc.) Sweenin, Sueving, Suecynnyng, Sweeneyng, (F.) Rêve, Songe. A confused assemblage, or accidental and involuntary combination of ideas and images, which present themselves to the mind during sleep. Dr. S. Mitchell, of New York, used the word Somnium to signify the state between sleeping and waking, in which persons perform acts of which they are unconscious. For 'waking dreams,' see Hallucination.

Those distressing dreams which occur during a state of half sleep, are called, by the French, Rêvasseries.

Som'nolency, Somnolen'tia, Hypnæsthe'sis, Hypno'dia, Dormita'tio, Ca'rus, Lethar'gus, Cataph'ora, Cataph'ora, Co'ma, Somnolen'tum, Slum'ber, Heaviness, (F.) Assoupissement, (from somnus,) Sleepiness. Also a state intermediate between sleeping and waking. It is often a symptom of disease.

Somnop'athy, (somnus, and πάθος, 'affection,') Somnambulism, magnetic.

Somnovig'il, (somnus, and vigil, 'awake,') Somnambulism.

Som'nus, Sleep.

Somp'nus, Sleep.

Son, (from summus, the last—that which remains last in the sieve,) Furfur. Also, Sound, (from sonus,)

Son Hydatique, Hydat'ic sound, Hydat'id frem'itus. A sound, heard on percussion over tumors containing hydatids. The sensation experienced by the finger is like that given by a watch struck on the surface opposite the glass.

Son'chus, (σῶχος,) S. Olera'ceus, Hiera'cium olera'ceum, Sowthistle, Sweinethistle, (F.) Laiteron doux. Ord. Cichoraceæ. Most of the species of Sonchus abound with a milky juice, which is very bitter, and said to possess diuretic virtues.

SON'CHUS FLORIDA'NUS, Mulgedium Florida-num.

Sonde, Sound, Specillum—s. Cannelée, Director.

Sonde D'Anel. A very fine stylet of silver, awl-shaped at one end. It is used for probing the lachrymal passages through the punctum lachrymale.

Sonde de Belloc. An instrument invented by Belloc for plugging the nasal fosse, in cases of hemorrhage. It consists of a curved silver canula, open at both ends, and furnished with a button. The instrument is passed through the nares to the throat; and a plug is attached to the button, so that, when the instrument is drawn forwards through the nose, the posterior nostril is stopped.

Sonde Brisée (F.), Eyed probe. A long, straight stylet, composed of two parts, which may be screwed to each other; blunt at one end, and furnished at the other with an eye, so that it may be used either as a probe for punctured wounds, or for a seton needle.

Sonde à Conducteur (F.). A modification of the ordinary catheter;—to facilitate the changing of catheters, without the fear of making false passages. It is a common catheter, open at its beak. The Stylet or Mandrin is one half longer than that of the ordinary catheter. To use the instrument, the stylet is pushed into the cavity of the bladder through the catheter. The latter is then withdrawn by slipping it over the stylet, which is kept in its place, and serves as a guide to a fresh catheter.

Sonde à Dard, (dard, 'a dart,') see Lithotomy (high operation).

Sonde de Laforest. A small, crooked canula, used for probing the nasal duct from below upwards, and for throwing injections into it.

Sonde ou Pince du Hunter. A cylindrical silver canula; of the size of a common catheter; open at both extremities, and containing a wire of iron, one of the ends of which is split into two parts; each being terminated by a small silver scoop, and separating from each other by virtue of their elasticity, when pushed out of the canula, and again approximating when drawn in. It has been used for laying hold of small calculi in the urethra.

Sonde Utérine, Sound, uterine—s. de Varec, Soda.

Songe, Somnium.

Sonitus Aurium, 'sound of the ears,' Tinnitus aurium—s. Cardiacus, see Heart (sounds)—s. Cordis, see Heart (sounds)—s. Fluidi, Hygrecinema—s. Hepaticus, Hepatechema—s. Intestinalis, Enterechema—s. Stomachicus, Gastelechema.

Sonorous Rhonchus, Râle sonore.

Sonus, Sound—s. Vocis, Accent.

Sooja, see Dolichos.

Soojie, Baster's, a farinaceous article of diet, is said to consist of wheat flour sweetened with sugar.

Sool, Gastroperiodynia.

Soor, Aphthæ.

Soot, ([Sax.] root, rot,) Fuligo—s. Cancer, Cancer, chimney-sweeper's—s. Tea, see Fuligokali—s. Wart, Cancer, chimney-sweeper's.

Sophia, (σοφία, 'wisdom,' from its virtues,) Sisymbrium sophia—s. Chirurgorum, Sisymbrium sophia.

Sophistication, (from σοφιστικός, after the manner of the Sophists, 'captious, deceitful,') Falsification.

Sophora Heptaphylla, Anticholerica. Ord. Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Decandria Monogynia. The root and seeds of this shrub are intensely bitter, and are said to have been found useful in cholera, colic, dysentery, &c.

Sophora Tinctoria, Baptisia seu Podalir'ia Tinctoria, Indigofera, Wild Indigo, Indigo Weed, Broom, Indigo Broom, Horsefly Weed, Yellow Broom, Clover Broom, Rattle Bush, Yellow Indigo. An American plant, the taste of whose root is unpleasant, subacid, and nauseous—very similar to that of ipecacuanha. In a large dose, the bark of the root acts both as an emetic and cathartic. It has been considered antiseptic and febrifuge, and has been used, in the form of fomentation or cataplasm, in phagedenic and gangrenous ulcers. A liniment, prepared by simmering the cortical part of the root in cream, has been found an efficacious application to sore nipples and to ulcerated breasts.

Baptisia Leucantha, Tall white false Indigo, an indigenous plant, has the same properties.

Sophronis'tæ Den'tes, (from σωφρονεω, 'I act wisely,') see Dentition.

Sophronis'teres Den'tes, see Dentition.

Sopros'ynê, (σωφροσύνη,) Temperance.

Sop'piens, (sopio, 'I put to sleep,') Paregoric.

Sop'pio, Opium.

Sop'por, gen. Sopo'ris. Sleep, and especially a profound sleep, from which the person can be roused with difficulty. It is a symptom in many of the neuroses.

Sop'por Caro'ticus, Carus.

Sopora'riæ Arte'riæ, Carotids.

Souffle, (from sufflare,—sub, and flare,—'to blow,') see Murmur, respiratory—s. Amphorique, see Cavernous respiration—s. Bronchique, see Murmur, respiratory—s. Funique, Bellows sound, funic—s. Métallique, see Cavernous respiration—s. Placentaire, Bruit placentaire—s. Trachéal, see Murmur, respiratory—s. Tubaire, see Murmur, respiratory—s. Uterin, Bruit placentaire—s. Voilé, see Cavernous respiration.

SOUP'FILE, WHISPERING. A bellows sound heard over solidified lung and excavations when the patient whispers.

Souffrance, Suffering.

Soufre, Sulphur—s. Carburé, Carbonis sulphuretum—s. Iodure de, Sulphuris iodidum—s. Précipité, Sulphur præcipitatum—s. Sublimé, Sulphur sublimatum—s. Végétal, Lycopodium.

Souillure, ([F.] souiller, salir, [Sax.] ryhan, 'to soil,') Pollution.

Soula'mea Ama'ra, Rex amaro'rum. A shrub of the Moluccas; Order, Polygalaceæ; all the parts of which have great bitterness—"horrenda amarities." It is employed by the Malays, and, it is said, with success, in cholera and pleurisy; and as a febrifuge.

Sound, Specil'lum, Styl'us, Explorato'rium, Radi'olus, (F.) Sonde. An instrument used by surgeons to discover whether there be a stone in the bladder. It is usually made of highly polished steel, and is shaped like the catheter. The operation is termed sounding.

The French Sonde has, however, a more extensive signification. It means different instruments introduced into cavities of certain organs, or into wounds, fistulas, &c., to probe their condition, or to fulfil some therapeutical indication. See Sonde.

SOUND, So'nus, ([Sax.] ron,) E'chos, Noise, (F.)

Son, Bruit. The sensation produced on the auditory nerve by the vibrations of a sonorous body. Sounds may be propagated in three modes.

1. By reciproca'tion or con'sonance, as when a sounding body, of a definite pitch, produces a musical tone when another body of the same pitch is sounded near it. 2. By res'onance, as when a sounding body is placed in connection with another, one or more of whose parts may be thrown into reciprocal vibration. 3. By conduc'tion, as where the vibrations are transmitted through fluid, liquid, or solid media.

SOUND, ([L.] sanus, [Sax.] runð,) Healthy.

SOUND, Catheterize, Syncope—s. Auricular, Apyromele—s. Bellows, friction, rasp, saw, lancet, &c., see Bruit—s. Cracked pot, Bruit de pot fêlé—s. Crumpling, pulmonary, Froissement pulmonaire—s. of the Heart, see Heart—s. Hydatic, Son hydatique—s. Laryngeal, Laryngeeche—s. Musical, Sifflement modulé—s. Nélaton's, Sound, porcelain.

SOUND OR PROBE, Por'celain, Nélaton's probe, (F.) Explorateur de Nélaton. A probe having a bulbous extremity of porcelain for probing deep-seated gunshot wounds with the view of detecting the presence of a ball, which makes a leaden mark on the bulb; first, perhaps, used by Professor Nélaton, of Paris, in the case of Garibaldi.

SOUND, U'TERINE, U'terine bougie or probe, (F.) Sonde utérine. An instrument somewhat similar to a small male catheter, to be introduced into the cavity of the uterus, in the diagnosis of diseases of that viscus. When notched on the stem, it enables the size of the uterine cavity to be appreciated, and becomes a good hysterom'eter, (F.) hysteromètre.

Sound'ing, Searching, see Sound—s. the Chest, see Auscultation.

Sound'ness of Mind, Sanity.

Soup, ([G.] Suppe,) see Broth—s. for Infants, Liebig's, see Food, &c., Liebig's.

SOUP, PORT'ABLE, (F.) Tablettes de Bouillon. This is made by dissolving the pure animal matter obtained from bone, concentrating the solution until it gelatinizes, and drying the jelly obtained.

Soupir, (from [L.] suspirium,) Sigh.

Sour Ber'ry, see Oxyacantha Galeni, Vaccinium oxycoccos—s. Crout, Sauerkraut—s. Dock, boreal, Oxyria reniformis—s. Leaf, Andromeda arborea—s. Milk, Buttermilk—s. Sop, Bromelia ananas—s. Tree, Andromeda arborea—s. Wood, Andromeda arborea, Andromeda mariana.

Sourcil, Supercilium.

Sourcilier, Corrugator supercilii, Superciliary.

Sourd, (from [L.] surdus.) Deaf.

Sourds-muets, 'deaf dumb,' see Mutitas surdorum.

Souris, Nystagmus.

Sous (F.), in compound words, Sub.

Spa'do, (σπαδων,) Castratus, Spasm.

Spa'don, (σπαδων,) Castratus, Spasm.

Spagy'ria, Chemistry.

Spag'yrist, (σπαω, 'I separate,' and αγεινω, 'I assemble,' because they reduced compounds into elements, and formed the latter into compounds [?].) A sect of physicians, who pretend to account for the changes that occur in the human body in health and disease, in the same manner as the chemists of their day explained those of the inorganic kingdom. Medici'na Paracelsistica seu Spagy'rica, was likewise called Hermet'ica, because it was believed that the means of cure adopted in it had been found in the books of Hermes.

Spaig, Skeleton.

Spanæ'mia, (σπανος, 'poor,' and αἷμα, 'blood,') Poverty of the blood. Diminution in the quantity of red corpuscles of the blood,—as where bleeding has been carried beyond certain limits.

Spanæ'mic, Spanæ'micum (remedium), Dysplas'ticum, Plastylit'icum et erethilyt'icum, Hæmatolyt'icum, Dyscrasi'acum. Relating to spanæmia.

A medicine whose protracted use is said to impoverish the blood,—as iodine, bromine, &c.

Spandara'pum, Sparadrapum.

Spaning, ([G.] spānen, 'to wean,') Weaning — s. Brash, Brash, weaning.

Span'ish Fly, Cantharis — s. Juice, Extractum glycyrrhizæ.

Spannadra'pum, Sparadrapum.

Spanapo'gon, (σπανος, 'rare,' and πωγων, 'beard,') One who has lost his beard, or has a thin beard.

The Greeks called those who had little beard, or who had lost it, Spanopogo'nes.

Sparadrap, Sparadra'pa, Sparadra'pum, Sparadrapus, Tela emplastrica seu emplastrica, Span'dara'pum, Spannadra'pum. Any adhesive plaster spread upon linen or paper, (F.) Papier médicamenté. The French Codex (1866) even includes Collodion in its list of Sparadraps.

Sparadrap de Colle de Poisson, see Sparadrapum adhæsivum.

Sparadra'pa, Sparadrapum.

Sparadrapier. The name of a machine for spreading sparadraps. A Plaster machine. It consists of a table, with two raised pieces, movable, and furnished with points, by which the cloth can be stretched, and of a lamina or blade of metal to extend the plaster over it.

Sparadra'pum, Sparadrap.

SPARADRA'PUM ADHÆSIVUM, Adhesive Plaster. A spread plaster of the Emplast'rum adhæsivum. It is also called Strapping.

English Courtplaster is a Sparadrap, (F.) Taffetas agglutinatif, T. gommé, Taffetas d'Angleterre, Sparadrap de Colle de Poisson, Ser'icum Anglicum, Emplast'rum Anglicum, E. Anglica'num, E. Adhæsivum Woodstock'i, E. Ichthyocol'læ tel'æ induc'tum, E. Glutino'sum, Te'la Ichthyocol'læ glu'tinans, I'singlass Plas'ter. (It is made by stretching black silk, and brushing it over with a solution of isinglass, ℥j. in proof spirit, ℥xij. to which tinct. benzoin., ℥ij., are added. When dry, this is repeated five times; after which two coats are given it of a solution of tereb. Chia, ℥iv., in tinct. benz., ℥vj., which render it less liable to crack.)

Lis'ton's I'singlass Plas'ter is made by spreading several coats of strong solution of isinglass in weak spirit over oiled silk, or, still better, over animal membrane previously prepared for the purpose from the peritoneal coat of the cæcum of the ox.

SPARADRA'PUM PRO FONTIC'ULIS, Is'sue Plas'ter, is sometimes made of simple diachylon, lbij., Burgundy pitch and sarcocolla, each ℥iv., common turpentine, ℥j. Spread upon linen and polished with a moistened calendering glass rubber.

SPARADRA'PUM seu TE'LA GALTE'RI, Defen'sive Plas'ter, (F.) Toile de Gautier. (This is made of Olive oil, lbss., Suet, ℥iv., Wax, ℥x., Litharge, Common turpentine, Thus, and Mastic, ãã ℥ij., Bole armeniac, Flour, ãã ℥j. Pour it, while liquid, upon cloth, and spread.) Used for issues and to keep on dressings.

SPARADRA'PUM VESICATO'RIVM. Several substances have been introduced as substitutes for blistering plaster, (see Emplastrum lyttæ.) Under the names Te'la vesicato'ria, Blistering Tis'sue, &c.; other forms of which are the Taffetas vésicant ou épispastique, Papier épispastique ou vésicant, Charta vesicatoria. They are made of an etheral or alcoholic extract of cantharides, or of cantharidin, mixed with wax, and spread, in a very fine layer, on silk or paper previously oiled or waxed. They are efficient agents. See Charta cantharidis.

SPARADRAPUM VIRIDĒ, Cornplaster. (This may be made of Yellow wax, ℞ij., Burgundy pitch, ℞xij., Common turpentine, ℞vj., Verdigris, ℞iij., spread on cloth and polished.)

Kennedy's Cornplaster is made of Yellow wax, ℞ij., Venice turpentine, ℞ij., Verdigris, ℞j.

Sparadrapus, Sparadrapum.

Sparag'ma, gen. Sparag'matis, (σπαρᾶσσω, 'I tear,') Laceration.

Sparag'mus, (σπαργμῶς, 'tearing,') Spasm.

Spar'agress, Asparagus.

Spar'agus, Asparagus.

Sparal'lum, Clyster uteri'nus. An injection into the vagina.

Spare'dia. A bandage covered with the white of egg.

Spargan'ium Ramo'sum, (σπαργανιον,) Great Burreed, (from sparganon, owing to the band-like leaves.) Indigenous; Order, Typhaceæ; flowering in July and August. The roots are subastringent, but esculent; yielding a fine fecula, similar to salep. They are sometimes made into a poultice for inflamed mammae.

Spar'ganon, Spar'ganum, (σπαργανον, from σπαργω, 'I swathe,' 'I wrap,') 'Swathing clothes;' a kind of bandage with which children were formerly surrounded. Also, a fascia or band.

Spargano'sis, Spargo'sis, (σπαργανωσις, from σπαργω, 'I am full to bursting,') Extreme distension, as of the breasts by milk, Intumescencia lac'tea mamma'rum, Mastodyn'ia polyg'ala. Sparganosis also means the wrapping of a child in swathing clothes. The term has been employed by Mr. Erasmus Wilson as a more correct expression for the condition usually called Elephantiasis Arabum.

SPARGANO'SIS PUERPERA'RUM, Phlegmatia dolens.

Spar'ganum, Sparganon.

Spargo'sis, (σπαργωσις,) Sparganosis.

Spar'rowgrass, Asparagus.

Spar'sus, (σπαργε, sparsum, 'to throw here and there,') Sporadic.

Spar'tein, see Spartium scoparium.

Spar'tium Jun'ceum, (σπαρτον, 'a rope,'—the ancients using its branches or bark to form a rope,) Span'ish broom. Ord. Leguminosæ. A small European shrub, cultivated in the gardens of the United States, on account of its yellow flowers. The seeds are diuretic and tonic, in small doses; emetic and cathartic in large. They have been used in dropsy—ten or fifteen grains three times a day.

SPAR'TIUM SCOPA'RIUM, Sarotham'nus scopari'us, Cyt'isus scopari'us, Genis'ta, G. scoparia seu hirsu'ta, Cytisogenis'ta, Broom, (F.) Génêt à balai. Broom Tops, Spar'tii Cacum'ina, Scoparii Cacum'ina, (Ph. B., 1867,) Scopa'rius, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) have a bitter taste, and are possessed of diuretic properties. They have been used in dropsies. Dose of the powder, ℞j. to ℞j. All the genistæ have similar virtues. A decoction of genista, along with the cauterization of the pustules under the tongue, has been recommended in hydrophobia. An organic liquid base—Spar'tein or Sparte'ia—has been separated from it, which has narcotic properties; and a yellow crystallized, non-poisonous substance—Scoparin—which is diuretic.

SPAR'TIUM TINCTO'RIUM, Genista tinctoria.

Spa'sis, (σπασίς,) Spasm.

Spasm, Spas'mus, Spas'ma, Spa'sis, Sparag'mus, Synol'cē, Spa'do, Spadon, (F.) Spasme, (σπασμός, from σπᾶω, 'I draw,') The Greeks gave this name to all kinds of convulsions. It is now usually applied to involuntary muscular contractions, and these again have been divided into tonic spasm, Paraton'ia, which consists in permanent rigidity and immobility of the muscles that are the seat of it (see Tetanus); and clonic spasm, which consists in alternate contractions and relaxations (see Convulsion).

Cullen has a class, Spas'mi—the neurospas'mi of Fuchs.

Spas'nia, (same etymon as Spasm [?].) A term used by Mercurialis to designate the lancinating pain produced, at times, in the chest by violent fits of coughing.

Spas'tic, (σπαστικός,) Spasmodicus, Tonic spasm.

Spas'ticum, Tetanic.

Spa'tha, (σπαθη, a broad, flat instrument for stirring liquids, spreading plasters, &c.,) Hypaleipton scapula.

Spathes'ter, gen. Spathes'teris, (from σπᾶω, 'I draw,') A surgical instrument, used by P. Amman for drawing the prepuce over the glans, when too short.

Spathome'lē, (spatha, and μελή, 'a probe,') Spatula.

Spath'ula, Scapula, Spatula—s. Fœtida, Iris fœtidissima.

Spathy'e'ma Fœ'tida, Dracontium fœtidum.

Spatia (pl. of spatium, 'a space') Interlobularia, Interlobular fissures.

Spatilē, (σπαρῖλη, 'human excrement.') A liquid fecal evacuation. Excrement.

Spatium O'ris, 'space of the mouth,' Mouth — s. Trigonum, Lyra.

Spat'erdock, Nuphar advena.

Spat'ula, Spath'ula, (dim. of Spatha.) Spathomēlē, Specil'um latum, (F.) Spatule. A flat instrument, used for spreading plasters, stirring ointments, holding down the tongue, &c. Also, the scapula.

SPAT'ULA PRO O'RE, Glossospatha.

Spaud, Humerus.

Spaul, Saliva.

Spaut'bone, Humerus.

Spaw'bone, Humerus.

Spay'ing, (from σπαω, 'I draw;') [L.] spado, 'a castrated person,' see Castration.

Spear'mint, Mentha viridis — s. Water, see Aqua mentha piperitæ.

Spear'wort, Ranunculus flammula.

Speaut'er, Zinc.

Spec'ial, see Specific.

Spec'ialist, (F.) Spécialiste, (from species, 'a peculiar sort.') One who devotes himself to a specialty; as to diseases of particular parts, as of the eye, ear, chest, &c.

Spe'cies, (F.) Espèces, Spécialités. Official mixtures of substances cut or bruised. Sometimes used for compound powders, as it always appears to have been formerly. See Pulvis.

From species comes spice, (F.) Épice.

SPE'CIES AROMAT'ICÆ, Pulvis cinnamomi compositus — s. Diacinnamomi, Pulvis cinnamomicompositus — s. Diacretæ, Pulvis cretæ compositus — s. Dialapæ, Pulvis jalapæ compositus — s. Diambræ sine odoratis, Pulvis cinnamomi compositus — s. Diatragacanthæ frigidæ, Pulvis tragacanthæ compositus — s. Hieræ picræ, Pulvis aloës cum canellâ — s. Lætificantes Rhazis, Pulvis cinnamomi compositus — s. e. Scordio cum opio, Pulvis cretæ compositus cum opio — s. e. Scordio sine opio, Pulvis cretæ compositus.

Specific, Specificus, Nosocrat'ic, (F.) Spécifique (species, 'a peculiar sort,' and facere, 'to make.') A substance to which is attributed the special property of removing some particular disease. Probably no such remedy exists. Mercury in syphilis, and sulphur in the itch, have been regarded as the strongest examples. The word is also used adjectively in the sense of special; as "mercury has a specific or special action on the salivary glands." See Specificity, morbid.

SPECIFIC OF HER'RENSCHWAND. A once celebrated German vermifuge. It is said to have consisted of 10 grains of Gamboge, with 20 of Carbonate of Potassa. It is affirmed that mercury and arsenic have also been found in it.

Spécificité Morbide, Specificity, morbid.

Specific'ity, Morbid, (F.) Spécificité morbide, is the occult quality of a disease which gives occasion to peculiarity in its nature, evolution and treatment. Such is said to be a specific disease.

Specific'ium Paracel'si, Potassæ sulphas.

Specil'um, Me'lē, Stylus, Exploratorium, (from specio, 'I examine,') Specul'ion, a Probe, Explorator, (F.) Stilet, Styllet, Sonde, Explorateur. A surgical instrument, employed for examining wounds, fistulas, and for passing setons, &c. It is usually formed of silver; and is terminated, at one end, by an olive-shaped button. The eyed probe has an aperture at the other extremity.

The perforator of the Trocar is called a Styllet; as well as the wire or metallic rod of the flexible catheter, which gives it shape and firmness.

SPECIL'UM, Everriculum, Hypaleiptron, Sound — s. Auricularium, Apyromele — s. Cereum, Bougie — s. Excavatum, Stylus excavatus — s. Latum, Spatula — s. Minus, Melotis — s. Sulcatum, see Grooved.

Spéciolē, Species.

Specks of the Cor'nea, see Caligo.

Specul'ion, (σπεκλασιον,) Specillum.

Spec'tacles, (spectare, 'to behold,') Conspicill'la, (Sc.) Breels, (F.) Besicles, Lunettes ordinaires, Conservees. Glasses to assist the sight; arranged so as to be adapted to both eyes. These glasses are more or less concave or convex, according as the sight is more or less short, (myopic), or long, (presbyopic.) Periscop'ic spectacles consist of concavo-convex and convexo-concave lenses, and therefore have but little spherical aberration. Pantoscop'ic spectacles, (F.) Verres à double foyer, have a different focus in the upper and lower part. Prismat'ic glasses are employed in muscular asthenopia. When the glass is adapted to one eye, it is called an Eyeglass, Conspicill'um, Perispicill'um, Vitrum ocula'rē.

Spec'troscope, (spectrum, and σκοπεω, 'I view,') see Spectrum analysis.

Spec'trum, Spectre, (F.) Spectre, (from specio, spectrum, 'I see,') An appearance, real or imaginary.

SPEC'TRUM ANALYSIS, Prismat'ic analysis. A most delicate method of analysis, which consists in decomposing, by means of a prism, the colored light given by the salts of metals to the colorless flames of alcohol or coal gas. The spectrum is passed through a telescope, the apparatus thus constructed being called a spectroscope. It is a useful aid to quantitative analysis, as the colored flame of each metal, even in the minutest quantities, is found to give a well-marked and characteristic spectrum. Bunsen estimated that the amount of sodium which admitted of detection by prismatic analysis was the 195,000,000th part of a grain; of lithium the 70,000,000th; of potassium, the 60,000th; of barium the same; of strontium, the 1,000,000th; and of calcium, the 100,000,000th of a grain. Bloodstains can also be detected in this way. See Poisons.

SPEC'TRUM, OC'ULAR, Spec'trum ocula'rē, (F.) Spectre oculaire. A disturbance of vision, which consists in the appearance of objects after the objects themselves have been withdrawn. See Colors, accidental.

SPEC'TRUM, SO'LAR, Spec'trum Sola'rē, (F.) Spectre solaire. The colored image produced by white light, which has been decomposed by passing through a prism. It consists of seven different colored fringes, arranged in the following order — red, orange, yellow, blue, green, indigo, and violet. Three of these — blue, red, and yellow — are simple; the others being mixtures of them.

Specula'ris La'pis. A transparent mineral, but of what nature is not clear, which was formerly employed in epilepsy. In old times it was used for glass.

Spec'ulum, Catop'ter, Catop'tron, Diop'tron. (In Latin, 'a mirror;' from specio, 'I behold,') In Surgery, it means different instruments for dilating cavities, and facilitating their examination. See Dilator. There are various instruments of this kind, — for examination of the anus, the Speculum ani; of the ear, Speculum auris; of the vagina, Speculum vaginæ, (Colpeurynter, Elytreurynter;) of the uterus, Speculum matricis; of the eye, Speculum oculi; of the nose, Speculum nasi; of the mouth, Speculum oris, ([F.] Bâillon, Pas d'Ane;) of the throat, Speculum gutturis; of the bladder, Speculum vesicæ.

SPEC'ULUM CIT'RINUM, Orpiment — s. Hemontic, Centre, phrenic — s. Indicum, Ferri limatura.

SPEC'ULUM, INTRAU'TERINE. A form of speculum devised for the introduction into the cavity of the uterus of powerful remedies, such as nitric acid.

SPECULUM LARYNGIS, Laryngoscope—s. Lucidum, Septum lucidum—s. Oculi, see Ophthalmoscopy—s. Oris, Glossocatochus.

SPECULUM, PNEUMATIC. A form of aural speculum to which a tube is attached in such a way that the surgeon can by suction produce motion in the membrana tympani.

SPECULUM VENÆRIS, Achillea millefolium.

SPECUS, gen. Specūs, 'a cave,' Vulva—s. Cordis, Ventricle of the Heart—s. Pro medullā spinali, see Vertebral column—s. Vertebralis, see Vertebral column.

SPEDAL'SKE, see Radzyge.

SPEDALSK'HED, see Radzyge, Elephantiasis Græcorum.

SPEECH, ([Sax.] ꝥꝥec), Voice, articulated.

SPEECH'LESSNESS, Mutitas, Aphasia.

SPEED'IMAN'S PILLS, see Pilulæ aloës et myrrhæ.

SPEED'WELL, Brook'lime, Veronica beccabunga—s. Female, Antirrhinum elatine—s. Officinal, Veronica—s. Purslain, Veronica peregrina—s. Water, Veronica beccabunga.

SPELL'BONE, Fibula.

SPEL'TRUM, Zincum.

SPENDING, (from expendere,—ex, and pendere, 'to weigh,—to weigh out, expend,') Ejaculation.

SPE'RAGE, Asparagus.

SPE'RAGUS, Asparagus.

Sperm, gen. Sper'matis, Sperma, (σπέρμα, gen. σπέρματος, from σπείρω, 'I sow,') Spermat'ic fluid or liq'or, Sem'inal fluid, Seed, Se'men, S. viri'lē seu masculi'num seu genita'lē, Semin'ium, Genita'lē, Medull'æ, Ros, Sanguis, Se'rum, Humor genita'lis seu semina'lis seu venereus, Uri'na genita'lis, Geniti'ra, Sper'ma viri'lē, Spermi'um, Tho'rus, Lac ma'ris, Lagne'a, Lagni'a, Lagne'ma, Ger'men, Vita'lē vi'rus, Male's milk, Prop'agatory or gen'ital liq'or, Vi'tal or quick'ening ven'om, (F.) Semence, Fluide séminal. A whitish, viscid fluid, of a peculiar smell, secreted by the testicles, whence it is carried by the vasa deferentia to the vesiculæ seminales, to be thrown into the vagina, during coition, through the ejaculatory ducts and the urethra. It is the fecundating fluid, and must come into actual contact with the germ of the female. The Aur'a sem'inis, Gonaur'a, is incapable of effecting fecundation. The semen, at the time of emission, is composed of two different fluids; the one liquid and transparent, which is considered to be the secretion of the prostate,—the other white, and as thick as mucus; the product of the testicular secretion. The sperm contains, according to Vauquelin, 900 parts of water, 50 of animal mucus, 10 of soda, and 30 of calcareous phosphate. The animal matter is peculiar, and by some termed sper'matin.

Microscopic observations show that it contains spermatozo'a, or more properly spermatozo'ids, for their animalcular nature is not demonstrated. They are produced in cells—sperm cells, Ovules mâles of Robin—and have probably no more title to be considered animalcular than the cilia of the ciliated epithelium. By careful examination, other minute, round, granulated bodies may almost always be detected, which are in all cases much less numerous than the spermatozoa. These bodies are the sem'inal gran'ules, gran'ula sem'inis, spermatoph'ori. Pure sperm, in its most perfect state, consists principally of spermatozooids and seminal granules; both of which are enveloped in a small quantity of fluid, li'quor sem'inis, spermat'ic liq'or.

It has been imagined, but erroneously, that during coition there is a secretion of female sperm—Semen muli'ebri, Thelygonum. The increased secretion that takes place is chiefly from the glands of Duverney.

Sperm also means spermaceti.

Sperm CELL, see Sperm.

Sper'ma, gen. Sper'matis, Sperm—s. Mercurii, Hydrargyrus acetatus.

Sper'ma RANA'RUM, Sperni'ola seu Sperni'olum seu Spermi'ola seu Spermi'olum rana'rum. Frog's spawn. Once used in medicine.

Spermace'ti, (sperma, and cetus, 'a whale,') Cetaceum—s. Whale, see Cetaceum.

Sperma'ra'sia, (sperma, a priv., and ρασις, 'mixture,') Spermatorrhœa.

Spermaspas'mos, (sperma, and σπασμα, 'spasm,') see Spermatorrhœa.

Spermata'ra'sia, Spermatorrhœa.

Spermatacrati'a, (sperma, a priv., and κρατος, 'power,') Spermatorrhœa.

Spermat'ic, Spermat'icus, Semina'lis, Sem'inal, (F.) Spermatique, (σπέρματος, from sperma.) That which relates to the sperm. A name given to different parts connected with the organs of generation.

SPERMAT'IC ARTERIES, Arte'rie Spermat'icæ seu præparan'tes, (F.) Artères testiculaires, A. de l'Ovaire (Ch.), are two in number—one on each side—and arise from the sides of the aorta, sometimes from the renal arteries. They descend, almost vertically, at the sides of the vertebral column, and are distributed differently in the two sexes. In man, the spermatic artery, situate at the side of the vas deferens, issues by the abdominal ring, gives numerous ramifications to the spermatic cord, and divides into fasciculi of branches, one of which goes to the testicle,—the other to the epididymis. In the female, the spermatic artery, ova'rian or utero'o'varian artery, dips into the pelvis, and passes to the ovary, Fallopian tube, and round ligament.

SPERMAT'IC CORD or CHORD, Testic'ular Cord, Funiculus Spermat'icus, Spermatochord'a, (F.) Cordon spermatique ou testiculaire. The vascular and nervous cord by which the testicle is suspended. It is composed of the spermatic artery and veins; of other small vessels; of lymphatics; of nervous filaments from the spermatic plexus, and from the genito-crural branch of the lumbo-abdominal plexus; of the vas deferens, and, very often, of a fibrocellular cord, which unites the peritoneum to the upper part of the tunica vaginalis, and in which encysted hydrocele of the spermatic cord occurs. All these parts are united together by a very lax areolar tissue, and surrounded by coats, which, reckoning from without, are:—1. The skin and areolar membrane. 2. A fibrocellular membrane, formed by the fascia superficialis. 3. A very thin layer, formed by fibres of the cremaster muscle, united archwise before, and often also behind, the cord. 4. The proper sheath of the spermatic vessels, or the tubular prolongation furnished by the fascia transversalis to the cord, on a level with the superior orifice of the inguinal canal. The spermatic cord is commonly shorter on the right side than on the left; and of a different size in different individuals. It ascends almost vertically, from the superior margin of the testicle as far as the lower orifice of the inguinal canal; passes through this canal and enters the abdomen, crossing the epigastric artery. Here it forms an evident elbow, directing its course backward. At this part, also, the organs composing it separate from each other, the vas deferens descending into the pelvis to pass behind the bladder;—the blood-vessels and lymphatics ascending towards the lumbar region, &c.

SPERMAT'IC FIL'AMENTS, Spermatozoa—s. Fluid, Sperm.

SPERMAT'IC GAN'GLION. A large ganglion, formed by branches from the hypogastric ganglion and from the spermatic plexus. It supplies the fundus uteri. Besides these ganglia, Dr. Robert Lee describes ves'ical and vag'inal ganglia, and anterior and posterior subperitone'al ganglia.

and plexuses, which communicate with the preceding, and constitute an extensive nervous rete over the entire uterus.

SPERMAT'IC LIQ'UOR, Liquor seminis, see Sperm.

SPERMAT'IC PAS'SAGES OR WAYS, Via Spermat'ica, are the canals concerned in the excretion of semen. See Testicle.

SPERMAT'IC PLEX'USES OF NERVES, Plex'us testicula'res, are two in number, and are furnished by the renal plexuses. Their filaments, called Spermatic nerves, follow the arteries of the same name to the testicle in man, and to the ovary and Fallopian tube in the female, — ova'rian nerves. They cannot be traced into the substance of these organs.

SPERMAT'IC VEINS — ve'næ spermat'icæ — are two or three in number on each side. They accompany the spermatic artery, and open — those of the right, into the vena cava inferior; those of the left, into the corresponding renal vein. These veins form, above the testicle, a kind of venous network, called, by some, the Spermatic plex'us and corpus varico'sum; and another plexus before the psoas muscles, called the Corpus pampinifor'me.

Sperm'atin, see Sperm.

Spermaticque, Spermatic.

Spermatis'mus, Emis'sio sem'inis, Spermob'olê, (from sperma.) The emission of sperm.

Sperm'atism or Animal'culism is the doctrine which maintains that the embryo is produced by the so-called spermatic animalcules.

Sperm'atist, Animalculist.

Spermatoce'lê, Her'nia semina'lis scro'ti, Osc'heoce'lê semina'lis, Gonoc'e'lê, (sperma, and κῆλη, 'a tumor.') The ancients gave this name to certain swellings of the testicle which were regarded as produced by an accumulation of sperm in the organ. Also, varicocele.

Spermatochor'da, (sperma, and chorda.) Spermatic chord.

Spermato'cle'm'ma, gen. Spermato'cle'm'matis, (sperma, and κλέπτω, 'I steal,') see Pollution.

Spermato'clep'sis, see Pollution.

Spermato'cys'tides, (pl. of Spermato'cystis.) (sperma, and κύστις, 'a bladder,') Vesiculæ seminales.

Spermato'cysti'tis, gen. Spermato'cysti'tidis, (spermato'cystis, and itis.) Inflammation of a vesicula seminalis.

Spermato'cystidorrhag'ia, Caulorrhag'ia ejaculato'ria, Hæmatu'ria ejaculato'ria seu semina'lis, (spermato'cystides, and ῥαγή, 'a breaking forth,') A discharge of blood from the urethra in the act of ejaculation of sperm.

Spermato'des, (σπέρματωδης, from sperma, and οδὴς.) Gonoides.

Spermato'gon'ia, Spermogon'ia, Spermatopœ'ia, Spermatopœ'is, Sperm'ium, (sperma, and γενᾶω, 'I beget,') The preparation or secretion of sperm.

Sperm'atoid, (sperma, and αἶδος, 'resemblance,') Gonoides, Spermatozoa.

Spermato'lep'sis, (sperma, and ληψις, 'a taking away,') see Pollution.

Spermato'lip'sis, see Pollution.

Spermato'logy, Spermatolog'ia, (sperma, and λόγος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on sperm.

Spermato'ph'orous, Seminif'erosus, Spermato'phorus, (sperma, and φέρω, 'I carry,') Sperm-bearing. The cells or granules in the sperm have been so called, Spermato'phori. See Sperm.

Spermato'pœ'ia, (sperma, and ποιῶ, 'I make,') Spermatogonia.

Spermato'pœ'is, Spermatogonia.

Spermato'pœ't'ic, Spermatopœus.

Spermato'pœ'us, Spermatopœ't'icus, Spermatopœ't'ic, Gonopœ'us, Gonopœ't'icus, Gonopœ't'icus. Food to which has been attributed the property of augmenting the secretion of semen, and consequently of exciting the venereal act. Very succulent and very nutritious substances have been so considered.

Spermatorrhœ'a, Spermorrhœ'a, Spermacr'a-sia, Spermatoze'mia, Spermatacr'a-sia, Gonacr'a-sia, Gonacratia, Gonoze'mia, Spermatacrati'a, Gonorrhœ'a ve'ra, (F.) Flux de Sperme, Pollutions, Pertes séminales, (sperma, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') An emission of sperm without copulation. Spasmodic Spermatorrhœa, Spermiaspasmus, is an emission of sperm simultaneous with erection of the penis, or after its partial subsidence. See Gonorrhœa, and Pollution.

SPERMATORRHÆ'A ATON'ICA, Gonorrhœa laxorum.

Spermato'schesis, (sperma, and σχέσις, 'retention,') Retention or suppression of the spermatic secretion.

Spermatoze'mia, (sperma, and ζῆμα, 'loss,') Spermatorrhœa.

Spermatozo'a, pl. of Spermatozo'on, Zoosperm'ata, Zo'osperms, Spermazo'a, (sperma, and ζῶον, 'animal,') Animal'cula semina'lia seu spermat'ica, Fil'a spermat'ica, Corpus'cula sem'inis, Vermic'uli spermat'ici, Sperm'atoids, Spermatozo'id's, Protozo'id's, Sem'inal or spermat'ic fil'aments, Spermat'ic or sem'inal animal'cules, (F.) Zoöspermes, Spermatozoïres. Reputed animalcules seen in the sperm, considered by physiologists to be the formative agents furnished by the male in generation. See Sperm.

Spermatozaires, Spermatozoa.

Spermatozo'id's, (sperma, ζῶον, 'animal,') and αἶδος, 'resemblance,') Spermatozoa.

Sperm'iduct, (sperma, and ductus, 'a duct,') Deferens, vas.

Sperm'olum Rana'rum, Sperma ranarum.

Sperm'ium, Sperm, Spermatogonia.

Spermob'olê, (sperma, and βάλλω, 'I throw,') see Ejaculation, Spermatismus.

Spermœ'dia Cla'vius, (sperma, and οἶδω, 'I swell,') — the diseased seeds, Ergot.

Spermogon'ia, Spermatogonia.

Sperm'olith, Spermol'ithus, (sperma, and λίθος, 'a stone,') A calculus in the spermatic duct or vesicula seminalis.

Spermoneural'gia, (sperma, and neuralgia.) Neuralgia of the spermatic cord.

Spermophlebe'cta'sia, (sperma, φλεψ, gen. φλεβος, 'a vein,') and εκτασις, 'dilatation,') A varicose condition of the spermatic veins.

Spermorrhœ'a, Spermatorrhœa.

Spermot'he'ca, (sperma, and theca, 'a sheath,') A reservoir or sac in the interior of the body of some insects, as the bee, which becomes filled with the fertilizing fluid of the male.

Spermozo'a, pl. of Spermozoön, (sperma, and ζῶον, 'animal,') Spermatozoa.

Sperni'olum Rana'rum, Sperma ranarum.

Spew'ing, ([Sax.] rpipan, [Gr.] πτῖω, [L.] ptuo, 'I spit,') Vomiting.

Sphac'elated, Sphacela'tus, (F.) Sphacélê. Struck with sphacelus.

Sphacela'tion, (from sphacelus.) Mortification. Sphacêle, Sphacelus — s. de la Bouche, Cancer aquaticus.

Sphace'lia Seg'etum, (from sphacelus.) Ergot. Sphacelis'mus, Sphacelus — s. Cerebri, Phrenitis.

Sphac'elus, (σφακελος.) Gangræ'na Sphacelus, Sphacelis'mus, Cold mortifica'tion, (F.) Sphacèle, Gangrène froide, (from σφαζω, 'I slay,') This word is used by some synonymously with gangrene; by others, with gangrene when it occupies the whole substance of a limb. Commonly, it means the disorganized portion, in cases of mortification, anthraconecro'sis, which must be thrown off — or is, in other words, totally dead. The foul disorganized portion of an ulcer — called the slough — must be considered a kind of sphacelus.

Sphacelus was formerly used to denote excessive pain, and also agitation from excessive pain or violent emotion.

SPHAC'ELUS CEREALIS, Ergotism — s. Nosocomialis, Hospital gangrene.

Sphæ'ra, (σφαῖρα, 'a ball,') Pila — s. Marina, Pila marina — s. Thalassia, Pila marina.

Sphæranthus In'dicus, (σφαῖρα, and ἀνθος, 'a flower,') Adaca.

Sphæ'ria Sinen'sis, (σφαῖρα, 'a globe,') Hia Tsao Tom Tchom, Hia Tsao Tong Tchong, Totsu Kaso, Sum'mer-plant winter worm, Veg'etable caterpillar. A fungus which projects from the neck of a lepidopterous insect. It is highly esteemed by the Chinese as a tonic, like ginseng.

Sphærid'ion, (dim. of σφαῖρα,) Globule, Pilula.

Sphæ'rion, Globule, Pilula.

Sphæroceph'ala Ela'tior, (σφαῖρα, and κεφαλή, 'head,') Echinops.

Sphærococ'cus Cris'pus, (σφαῖρα, and κοκκος, 'a berry,') Fucus crispus — s. Helminthochortus, Corallina Corsicana — s. Lichenoides, Fucus amy-laceus.

Sphæ'rula Gale'ni, (dim. of σφαῖρα,) Pilula.

Sphæ'rulæ San'guinis, Globules of the blood.

Spha'gē, (σφαγή,) Throat.

Sphe'donē, (σφενδόνη, 'a sling,') Funda.

Sphe'no, in the composition of anatomical terms, the sphenoid bone.

Sphenoceph'alia, (σφην, 'a wedge,' and κεφαλή, 'head,') Monstrosity, in which the head is wedge-shaped, owing to the projection of the anterior fontanel region.

Sphēno-ēpineuse Artère, 'sphenospinous artery,' Meningeal artery, middle.

Sphenot're'sia, (σφην, 'a wedge,' and τρησις, 'perforation,') Transforation.

Sphe'noid, (σφηνοειδής,) Sphenoï'des, Spheno'des, Sphenoideus, Sphenoïda'lis, (F.) Sphēnoïde, (σφην, 'a wedge,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Wedge-shaped. Hence, SPHE'NOID BONE, Sphenoïdes os, Os basila'rē seu cuneifor'mē seu cu'neo compara'tum seu sphenoida'le seu multiformē seu az'ygus seu papilla'rē seu polymor'phon seu paxilla'rē seu bazilla'rē seu alaeformē seu specoi'deum seu vespiformē seu inconjuga'tum seu pterygoïdeum seu ala'tum seu colato'rii, Pter'ygoid bone. An azygous bone, situate on the median line, and at the base of the cranium. It articulates with all the other bones of that cavity, supports them, and strengthens their union. Its form is singular, and resembles a bat with its wings extended. It has — 1. An infe'rior or gut'tural surface, on which is situate the crista that joins the vomer, a channel which concurs in forming the pterygopalatine foramen, the pterygoid process, the pterygoid fossa, the scaphoid depression, the Vidian or pterygoid canal, the foramina (ovale, spinale, &c.). 2. A supe'rior or cer'ebral surface, on which are — the clinoid processes, the pituitary fossa, the fora'mina (ovale, rotundum, and spinale), the apophy'sis of Ingrassias or lesser wing, the foramen opticum, &c. 3. An occip'ital or poste'rior surface, which is articulated with the basilar process of the occipital bone. 4. An ante'rior or or'bitar na'al surface, having anteriorly a crista to unite with the ethmoid bone, and on each side a round aperture which leads into two cavities in the substance of the bone, separated by a middle septum, and called the sphenoidal sinuses or cells. 5. Two zygomato-tem'poral or exter'nal surfaces, which correspond to the temporal and zygomatic fossæ.

Some divide the sphenoid into body or middle portion; and alæ, which are four in number, and are subdivided into great (Temporal Plates or Wings, A'læ mag'næ) and little (Apophyses of Ingrassias, A'læ mino'res, Processus ensifor'mes).

The Sphenoid suture surrounds the bone.

SPHE'NOID, SPI'NOUS PROC'ESS OF THE, Sphenoid spine.

Sphenoid'al, Sphenoïda'lis. That which belongs or relates to the sphenoid bone.

SPHENOID'AL CELLS, see Sphenoid bone.

SPHENOID'AL COR'NUA, Cor'nua Sphenoïda'lia, Ossic'ula seu Cor'nua Bertini, Ossa triangula'ria, Cor'nua of Bertin, Pyr'amids of Wis'tar, Bones of Bertin, (F.) Cornets sphénoïdaux ou de Bertin, Osselets de Bertin. Two small, thin, and curved bones, situate between the sphenoid and ethmoid, with which they are confounded in the adult. They have the shape of a hollow pyramid, with the base turned backwards, and are developed by a single point of ossification. They are articulated with the sphenoid, ethmoid, palate bone, and vomer.

SPHENOID'AL OR SUPE'RIOR OR'BITARY FIS'SURE, Fora'men lac'erum supe'rius, (F.) Fente sphénoïdale, is a large fissure, situate between the great and little ala of the sphenoid. It is seen at the upper and back part of the orbit, between which and the cranium it is a means of communication, and transmits the third, fourth, and sixth pair of nerves, and the first branch of the fifth pair, to the eye and its appendages.

SPHENOID'AL SI'NUSES, see Sphenoid.

SPHENOID'AL SPINE, Spi'na seu Cris'ta sphenoida'lis, (F.) Épine sphénoïdale, Spi'noous Proc'ess of the Sphenoid: — 1. A projecting crista at the inferior surface of the sphenoid bone, for articulation with the vomer. 2. A triangular process, Apophyse sous-temporale (Ch.), met with near the posterior margin of the same bone, behind the foramen spinale. At the point of the spinous process, a styloid process is frequently met with.

Sphenoi'des, (σφηνοειδής,) Cuneiform, Sphenoid — s. Os, Sphenoid bone.

Sphenomax'illary, Sphenomaxilla'ris. That which relates to the sphenoid and maxillary bones.

SPHENOMAX'ILLARY FIS'SURE, Infe'rior or'bitar Fis'sure, (F.) Fente sphéno-maxillaire ou orbitaire inférieure; called, also, Fora'men lac'erum infe'rius seu sphenomaxilla'rē, is situate at the posterior part of the angle formed by the union of the internal and inferior parietes of the orbit. It is constituted, above, by the sphenoid bone; below, by the superior maxillary and palate bones; and, before, by the malar bone. It is narrower at the middle than at the extremities, and forms a communication between the orbital cavity and the zygomatic fossa.

SPHENOMAX'ILLARY FOS'SA is a name given by some anatomists to a depression at the union of the sphenomaxillary and pterygomaxillary fissures.

Sphenoōr'bitar. A name given by Béc-lard to the anterior part of the body of the sphenoid bone, which is developed by a variable number of points of ossification.

Sphenopal'atine, Sphenopalati'nus. That which relates to the sphenoid and palate bones.

SPHENOPAL'ATINE AR'TERY, Large lat'eral na'al artery, Arte'ria sphenopalati'na, is the termination of the internal maxillary. It enters at the posterior part of the superior meatus of the nose, through the sphenopalatine foramen, and spreads its numerous branches on the pituitary membrane covering the septum, the cornua, and the meatus.

SPHENOPAL'ATINE FORA'MEN is a round aperture, formed by the vertical portion of the os palati and the sphenoid. It establishes a communication between the nasal fossæ and the zygomatic fossa.

SPHENOPAL'ATINE GAN'GLION, Gan'gion of Meckel, Sphenoidal Ganglion (Ch.). A small, nervous, cordiform, or triangular ganglion, of variable size, situate without the foramen sphenopalatinum, in the pterygomaxillary fissure. It seems suspended by several nervous filaments to the trunk of the superior maxillary nerve, and gives off internal or sphenopalatine filaments, inferior or palatine filaments, and a posterior filament, which is the Vidian or pterygoid nerve.

SPHENOPALATINE NERVES, Lat'eral nasal nerves, arise from the ganglion just described, at its inner part, and enter the nasal fossæ by the sphenopalatine foramen. They are five or six in number, and distribute their filaments to the outer and inner parietes of the nasal fossæ. One of the most remarkable branches is the Nasopalatine.

Sphenopalati'nus, Levator palati.

Sphenopari'etal, Sphenoparieta'lis. That which belongs or relates to the sphenoid and parietal bones.

SPHENOPARI'ETAL SUTURE is formed by the articulation of the extremity of the greater ala of the sphenoid with the anterior and inferior angle of the parietal bone.

Sphenopterygopalati'nus, Circumflexus.

Spheno-salpingo-malléen, Laxator tympani—s. Salpingostaphylinus, Circumflexus.

Spheno'sis, (σφηνωσις), see Wedged.

Sphenostaphyli'nus, Circumflex muscles (of the palate).

Sphenotem'poral, Sphenotempora'lis. That which belongs to the sphenoid and temporal bones.

SPHENOTEM'PORAL SUTURE is the suture at the articulation of the great ala of the sphenoid bone with the squamous portion of the temporal. Bécclard gave the name sphenotemporal to the posterior part of the body of the sphenoid, which is developed by distinct points of ossification.

Sphex, gen. Sphex, (σφήξ), Wasp.

Sphincter, gen. Sphincter, (σφιγκτήρ), Constrictor, Musculus constrictorius, (from σφίγγω, 'I constrict.') A name given to several annular muscles, which constrict or close certain natural openings.

SPHINCTER A'NI, Annula'ris A'ni. Many anatomists have described two sphincter muscles of the anus:—1. The S. exter'nus seu cuta'neus, Aspidi'cus, Coccygio-cutané-sphincter, Orbicularis Recti, Constrictor A'ni, Coccygio-anal (Ch.). It is situate around the anus; is elliptical from before to behind; flattened, and pierced at its middle. Its fibres describe concentric arcs, which are attached, behind, to the extremity of the coccyx, by a dense, areolar substance; and are confounded, anteriorly, with the bulbo-cavernosi and transversi perinæi muscles. This muscle contracts and closes the anus. 2. The in'ner or in'ternal Sphincter A'ni, Sphincter intestinalis of Winslow, is by many anatomists considered as the termination of the circular fibres of the rectum. It is annular, and situate around the inferior extremity of the rectum, to the extent of about a finger's breadth. It has the same uses as the other.

SPHINCTER VESI'CÆ, Sphincter of the blad'der. Some anatomists have given this name to whitish, elastic, and circular fibres, which surround the neck of the bladder, but do not constitute a particular muscle. Morgagni has given the name Pseudosphincter to the anterior fibres of the levator ani, which pass beneath the neck of the bladder, and, by their contraction, close that opening. See Compressor urethræ.

Spondyli'um, (σπονδυλίον), Heracleum spondylium.

Sphon'gus, (σφονγγος), Fungus, Spongia.

Sphragidonychar'gocome'ta, (σφραγίς, 'a seal,' ονυξ, gen. ονυχος, 'a nail,' αργός, 'white,' or perhaps αργυρός, 'silver,' and κομω, 'I adorn.') A charlatan who adorned his fingers to the very nails with rings.

Sphyg'ma, (σφυγμη), Pulse.

Sphyg'mic, Sphyg'micus, (F.) Sphygmique, (from sphygma.) Relating to the pulse; pulsatory.

Sphyg'mograph, Sphygmograph'ium, (sphygmus, and γραφω, 'I describe.') An instrument which, when applied over the heart or an artery, indicates graphically the character of the pulse as to force and extent of undulations.

Sphygmolē'gium, (sphygmus, and lego, 'I read,') Pulsilegium.

Sphygmologe (F.), Sphygmolog'ium, (sphygmus, and λεγειν, 'to indicate.') An instrument for showing the quickness or other qualities of the pulse.

Sphygmolog'ia, Sphygmology, Sphyg'mica Doctri'na, Art Sphyg'mica, (sphygmus, and λογος, 'a description.') The doctrine of the pulse.

Sphygmom'eter, Pulsilegium.

Sphyg'mophone, (sphygmus, and φωνη, 'sound.') An instrument devised by Dr. Upham, of Boston, to enable the ear to determine the rhythm, &c. of the pulse of a person at a distance by means of the electric wire.

Sphyg'moscope, (sphygmus, and σκοπεω, 'I examine,') Pulsilegium.

Sphygmoscop'ium, Pulsilegium.

Sphygmossys'tole, (sphygma, and systole, 'contraction.') The time during which the systole at the heart influences the pulse-beat, as demonstrated by the sphygmograph.

Sphyg'mus, (σφυγμος), Pulsation, Pulse.

Sphy'ra, (σφυρα), Malleolus.

Sphy'ron, (σφυρον), Malleolus.

Sphyrot'omy, (σφυρα, 'malleolus,' and τομή, 'section.') The operation of excising the handle of the malleus. The excision of a portion of the membrana tympani is called Myringodec'tomy, (myringa, 'the membrana tympani,' and εκτομή, 'excision,')

Sphyx'is, (σφυξις), Pulsation.

Spic, Lavandula.

Spica, Fas'cia re'pens, Spica ban'dage, (F.) Épi. A bandage, so called in consequence of its somewhat resembling a spike of barley. The turns of the bandage cross like the letter V; each leaving a third of the roller uncovered. It is distinguished into ascending and descending. It may be applied over various parts of the body, and in a different manner in each case: thus, there is the Spica seu Fas'cia inguina'lis, Spica inguina'lis duplex, the spica for the shoulder, and another for the thumb. Ribbail's bandage is a form of spica for the instep, the use of which is indicated where pressure is needed.

Spina, 'a thorn,' Spine, (F.) Épine, (old F.) Espine. A process on the surface of a bone, which has been compared to the spines or thorns on certain vegetables. The chief processes of this name are the nasal spine, the spine of the scapula, the spine of the ischium, the four iliac spines, the palatine spine, the maxillary, the sphenoid, &c. The spine of the back is the collection of vertebræ constituting the vertebral column.

A term of no definite meaning, as is obvious from these various words having been considered its synonyms. By some it is defined to be a disease of the osseous system, in which the texture of the bone dilates, seeming to be distended with air, and constituting a variety of osteosarcoma. By others it is considered to be a tumor arising from an internal caries of a bone; occurring most frequently in the carpus or tarsus. The term itself is a translation from the Arabic of Rhazes. See, also, Hydrarthrus, Mollities Ossium, and Osteoid.

SPINA VERTEBRALIS, Vertebral column—s. Vestibuli, Crista vestibuli.

Spin'ach, Spinacia.

Spina'chia, Spinacia.

Spina'cia, Spina'chia, Spina'cia olera'cea, Spin'age, Spin'ach, (from spina, 'a thorn or prickly,' (F.) Épinard. Ord. Chenopodiaceæ. Sex. Syst. Dicoecia Pentandria. A plant which resembles the cabbage in its dietetic powers. The leaves boiled, with the addition of oil, form a good emollient cataplasm. It has been used in phthisical complaints; but its medicinal properties, if it have any, are not now regarded.

SPINA'CIA OLERA'CEA, Spinacia.

Spinæ, pl. of Spina, Spinous processes—s. Ventositas, Spina ventosa.

Spin'age, Spinacia.

Spinal, Spina'lis, Spino'sus, Spina'tus, Rachit'es, Rachid'ian, (F.) Épinière, Rachidien, (from spina, 'spine,') That which relates to the vertebral column.

SPINAL AC'CESSORY, Spinal nerve.

SPINAL AR'TERIES, Artèræ spina'les, are two in number, viz.: 1. The posterior spinal, Artère médiane postérieure du Rachis (Ch.). It arises from the vertebral, near the corpora pyramidalia, and descends on the posterior surface of the spinal marrow, distributing its ramifications to it. 2. The anterior spinal artery, A. médiane antérieure (Ch.), is larger than the last, and arises, also, from the vertebral. It descends, in a serpentine manner, upon the anterior surface of the marrow; furnishes ramusculi to it, and unites with that of the opposite side, opposite the foramen magnum occipitis. A very tortuous branch arises from this union, which descends as far as the inferior extremity of the marrow, to which it sends numerous divisions.

The term Spinal Ar'teries or Rachid'ian Ar'teries is also given, in the abstract, to all the arteries of the spinal marrow and vertebral canal. The same may be said of the veins and nerves.

SPINAL CORD, Medulla spinalis—s. Debility, Spinal weakness.

SPINAL FORAM'INA, (F.) Trous rachidiens, in the abstract, are the foramina formed by every two contiguous vertebræ, through which the spinal nerves issue. See Vertebral. The term Foramen spina'le seu spino'sum is especially applied, however, to a small foramen, in front of the spinous process of the sphenoid bone, through which the middle artery of the dura mater enters the cranium. It is, likewise, called Foramen sphenospino'sum, (F.) Trou sphéno-épineux ou petit rond, Trou épineux.

SPINAL GAN'GLION, see Encephalon.

SPINAL IRRITA'TION, Rhachialgi'tis, Rhachial'gia, Neural'gia spina'lis, Notal'gia. A modern pathological view, which refers most nervous diseases to irritation of the spinal cord. This irritation is presumed to be indicated by tenderness on pressure over the spinous process of one or more vertebrae, or over the nerves proceeding from the cord and distributed to the parts at the sides of the spine. Such tenderness, however, by no means indicates the pathological condition in question, as it is often met with in those enjoying perfect health. The treatment advised is cupping and counterirritation on each side of the spine, which may be beneficial in such diseases, no matter what part of the frame may be in a morbid state, by exciting a new and revellent impression on a very sensible portion of the cutaneous surface.

SPINAL MAR'ROW, Medulla spinalis.

SPINAL NERVE, Accessory of the Par va'gum or Eighth pair, Accessory nerve of Wil'is, Spinal accessory, Superior respiratory nerve, Elev'enth pair of encephalic nerves, (F.) Spino-cranio-trapézien, Trachélo-dorsal (Ch.), arises from the medulla spinalis, within the vertebral canal, between the anterior and posterior roots of the cervical nerves, at a greater or less distance from the cranium. The roots unite to form the nerve, which ascends into the cranium through the foramen magnum of the occipital bone, and issues by the foramen lacerum posterius, crossing the sternocleidomastoideus, to which it gives filaments, and losing itself entirely on the trapezius muscle. The pneumogastric and spinal accessory nerves together — nervus vagus cum accessorio — resemble the spinal nerves: the former, with its ganglion, being the posterior root; the latter the anterior.

The spinal accessory appears to be the nerve of voice — vocal nerve.

SPINAL NERVES, Vertebral nerves — s. Prolongation, Medulla spinalis — s. System of nerves, see Nerves.

SPINAL, TRUE, see Nerves.

SPINAL WEAK'NESS, Spinal Debility. A term vaguely used for want of power in the extensor or other muscles of the spine, with tendency to deviation of the vertebral column. It is most seen in the nervous and delicate female, and is not unfrequently owing to carelessness of posture.

SPINALES COLLI MINORES, Interspinales colli — s. et Transversales lumborum, Transversalis dorsi.

SPINALIS CERVICIS, Semispinalis colli — s. Colli, Semispinalis colli.

SPINALIS DORSI, Spinalis dor'si ma'jor, (F.) Grand épineux du dos. Winslow calls thus some fleshy fasciculi, which are situated on the lateral surfaces of the spinous processes, from the third dorsal vertebra to the first or second lumbar; and which form part of the transversospinalis of most authors. The same anatomist calls — Spinalis Dor'si mi'nor, Petit épineux du dos — some small, fleshy fibres, situate on each side of the interspinous ligament. They are short, flat, and pass from one spinous process to another. Like the preceding, they form part of the transversospinalis. All these fleshy fasciculi strengthen the vertebral column.

SPINANTS. Medicines which, by their action on the spinal nervous system, excite muscular contraction, as strychnia, brucia, &c.

SPINA'TI, Interspinales colli.

SPINA'TUS, Spinal.

SPIN'NICK, Nanus.

SPINOBUL'BAR, (F.) Spinobulbaire, (spina, 'spine,' and bulbus, 'a bulb,') Relating to the spinal cord and the medulla oblongata; as the Spinobul'bar neuro'ses, (F.) Névroses spinobulbaires, which include paralysis agitans, chorea, and tetanus.

SPINODORSI'TIS, gen. Spinodorsi'tidis, (spina, dorsum, 'the back,' and itis,) Myelitis.

SPIN'NOLA, (from spina, 'the spine,') see Hyarorachis.

SPINO'SUS, (from spina, 'the spine,') Spinal.

SPIN'OUS, Spino'sus, (F.) Épineux, (from spina, 'a thorn,') Having the shape of a spine or thorn.

SPINOUS PROC'ESSES or Apophyses of the Vertebrae, Acan'thæ, Spinae, Cynol'ophoi, Neural Spines of Owen, (F.) Apophyses épineuses, are situate at the posterior part of each vertebra, and afford attachment to the muscles, whose office it is to extend the spine. See Vertebra.

SPINTHERO'PIA, (σπινθηρ, 'a spark, and οΐσις, 'vision,') Confusio.

SPIN'ULA, (dim. of spina, 'a thorn,') Pin.

SPIRAC'ULA, (pl. of spiraculum,) (F.) Spiracules, (from spiro, 'I breathe,') 'breathing holes.' Respiratory pores of the skin.

SPIRÆ CER'EBRI, (σπείρα, spira, 'a fold, a winding,') Convolutions, cerebral.

SPIRÆA DENUDA'TA, (from spira, 'a spire,') S. ulmaria.

SPIRÆA FILIPEN'DULA, Filipendula, Saxifraga ru'bra, Drop'wort, (F.) Filipendule. Ord. Rosaceæ. Sex. Syst. Icosandria Pentagynia. The root of this plant is said to possess astringent and lithontriptic virtues.

SPIRÆA LOBA'TA, S. Palma'ta, Queen of the Prairie, American Mead'owsweet. An oil, resembling oleum gaultheriæ, is obtained from the roots and stems.

SPIRÆA OPULIFO'LIA, Opulus-leaved Spiræa, Nine Bark, has similar properties.

SPIRÆA PALMA'TA, S. lobata.

SPIRÆA TOMENTO'SA, Hard'hack, Red mead'owsweet, Stee'plebush, Ro'sy bush, Whiteleaf. The root of this indigenous species, Spiræa, (Ph. U. S.,) which is abundant in the northern States of the Union, is tonic and astringent; and is usually administered either in the form of extract or decoction, (Spirææ, 3ss., Aquæ, Oj.)

SPIRÆA TRIFOLIA'TA, Gillenia trifoliata.

SPIRÆA ULMA'RIA, S. denuda'ta, Ulma'ria, U. palustris, Regi'na Pra'ti, Bar'ba ca'præ, Bar'bula capri'na, Mead'owsweet, Queen of the Mead'ows, (F.) Ulmaire, Spirée ulmaire, Reine des Prés, Vignette, Herbe aux Abeilles. The leaves have been recommended as mild astringents and diuretics — the flowers as antispasmodics and diaphoretics.

SPIRAL BAN'DAGE. A bandage which ascends obliquely around more or less conical portions of the body, each turn being applied smoothly to the surface, the folds being sometimes reversed to attain this object.

SPIRAL PLATE, Lamina spiralis.

SPIRAMEN'TA PULMO'NUM, 'airholes of the lungs,' (from spirare, 'to breathe,') see Pulmo.

SPIRAMEN'TUM AN'IMÆ, 'airhole of the breath,' Pulmo.

SPIRA'MINA (pl. of spiramen) Palpebra'rum, 'pores of the eyelids,' Lachrymal puncta — s. Pulmonum, see Pulmo.

SPIRA'TIO, (spirare, spiratum, 'to breathe,') Respiration.

SPIRÉE ULMAIRE, Spiræa ulmaria.

SPIRIL'LUM. A variety of cells of bacterial fungi, having a serpentine motion.

SPIR'IT, Spir'itus, (spirare, 'to breathe, to exhale,') (F.) Espirit, Alcoolat. A name given to every liquid product of distillation. Spirits were formerly distinguished into — inflammable; acid, and alkaline; and consequently a number of substances were crowded together, which often resembled each other in no other property than in being volatile. The term is now confined to alcoholic liquors, the chief of which are:

I. Arack' or Arrack'. Distilled from coarse palm sugar, named jaggery; fermented with the bark of the Mimosa leucophylla; also from rice and the fermented juice of the Palm; made in India. Its varieties are:—

1. nah'wah Arrack'. Made in India from the flowers of the Madhuca tree, Basia butyraghea.

2. Tuba. Made from palm wine, in the Philippine Islands. See Arack.

II. Araka. Distilled, by the Tartars, from koumis, fermented mares' milk.

III. Araki. Distilled from dates, by the Egyptians.

IV. Arika. A variety of koumis, distilled from fermented mares' milk, in Tartary and Iceland.

V. Brandy. Distilled from wine, figs, peaches, persimmon, apple, mulberries, and sometimes other fruits, in Europe, Asia, North and South America, wherever wine is made. The best brandy is that of Cognac; the next, that of Bordeaux and Rochelle. The varieties are—

1. Aguardiente (S.). In Peru, the common brandy obtained from grapes is the Aguardiente de Pisco, so called, because shipped at the port of Pisco. Another kind, much dearer, and of excellent flavor, is made from Muscatel grapes, and is called Aguardiente de Italia. It is sometimes seen in the United States.

2. Lau. Made from rice, in Siam.

3. Rakia. Made in Dalmatia from the husks of grapes mixed with aromatics.

4. Rossolio. Made at Dantzic, from a compound of brandy, rossolis, and other plants.

5. Troster. Made on the Rhine, from the husks of grapes, fermented with barley and rye.

6. Sekiskaya vodka. Made from the lees of wine and fruit at Seio.

Brandy is official in the Ph. U. S. (1873) under the name Spiritus Vini Gallici, Spirit of French wine.

VI. Gene'va, Holland, (genièvre, French for juniper.) Distilled from malted barley and rye, rectified on juniper berries, in Holland. Its variety is—

Gin. Made in England, from malted barley, rye, potatoes; rectified with turpentine.

VII. Goldwasser. Distilled at Dantzic, from wheat, barley, and rye, rectified with aniseed, cinnamon, and other spices.

VIII. Kirschwasser. Distilled from the Malach cherry, in Switzerland.

IX. Maraschino, Maraschino. Distilled from the Macarska or Marasca cherry, at Zara, the capital of Dalmatia.

X. Rum, (supposed to be derived from the terminal syllable of the word saccharum; but this is questionable.) Distilled, in the West Indies and South America, from cane-sugar and molasses, and in North America from maple-sugar. Its variety is—Sakee, Saki. A Japanese beverage, distilled from rice.

XI. Slatkaia trava. Made in Kamtschatka, from a sweet grass.

XII. Shoochoo. Distilled, in China, from the lees of mandarin, a wine made from boiled rice.

XIII. Whisky, (supposed to be derived from usque, the first two syllables of usquebaugh, the original name in Ireland,—itself from Irish uisge, and beatha, 'life,' Uisge beatha, Aqua vite, 'Water of life,') Distilled, in Scotland and Ireland, from malted and raw barley, rye, oats, and potatoes; and in the south of France, from sloes. In Ireland, it was called builceam, or madness of the head. The best Scotch whisky is Glenlivet; the best Irish, Enniskillen.

Whisky, under the name Spiritus Frumenti, is official in the Pharmacopœia of the United States (1873). It is the spirit obtained from fermented grain by distillation, and contains from 48 to 56 per cent. by volume of absolute alcohol. For medical use, it should be not less than two years old.

XIV. Y-weer-a. Distilled, in the Sandwich Islands, from the root of the Teeroot, baked, pounded, and fermented.

To these may be added an intoxicating liquor made by the Afghanists, from ewes' milk; and that made in Kamtschatka, from a species of mushroom, named mushroom.

(Acid. nitric., 3ivss., Alcohol. fort., Ovj., Acid. sulphuric., 3ijss., Cupri, 3ij.) Add the sulphuric acid gradually to f3xx. of the alcohol. When cool, put in a glass retort, connected with a Liebig's condenser, and add the copper and 3iv. of nitric acid. Apply heat, and distil f3xij. at a temperature not exceeding 180°. Remove the heat, let the contents of the retort cool to 90°, add remainder of nitric acid, and distil f3ij. as before. Mix the distillate with the remainder of the alcohol, and transfer to half-pint bottles. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Spirit of nitrous ether is occasionally but wrongfully prepared from methylated spirit. It is refrigerant, diuretic, antispasmodic, and diaphoretic. Dose, gtt. xxv. to f3j. Sp. gr. 0.834.

SPIRITUS ÆTHERIS OLEOSUS, Spiritus ætheris sulphurici compositus, Oleum æthereum.

SPIRITUS ÆTHERIS SULPHURICI, Sp. Ætheris, (Ph. B., 1867.) Æther Sulphuricus cum Alcoholē, Liquor Æthereus Sulphuricus, Spiritus vitrioli dulcis, S. Ætheris vitriolici, Liquor Sulphuricus alcoolisatus, Spirit of Sulphuric Ether. (Æther. sulphuric., f3x., Sp. rect., Oj. Mix. Ph. B., 1867.) Stimulant, diaphoretic, diuretic, and antispasmodic. Dose, f3ss. to f3ij.

SPIR'ITUS JUNIP'ERI COMPOS'ITUS, A'qua Junip'eri compos'ita, Compound Spir'it of Ju'niper, (F.) Esprit de genièvre composé. (Ol. junip., fʒss., Ol. carui, Ol. fenicul., aa ʒx., Alcohol. Ov., Aque, Oij. Dissolve the oils in the alcohol, add the water, and mix them. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Stimulant and diuretic. Dose, fʒj. to fʒss. The last edition of the Ph. U. S. (1873) contains also a Spir'itus Junip'eri, made by dissolving a fluid-ounce of oil of juniper in three pints of stronger alcohol.

SPIR'ITUS LAUR'I CINNAMOMI, Spiritus cinnamomi.

SPIR'ITUS LAVAN'DULÆ, Sp. Lavan'dulæ spi'cæ seu Lavand. simp'lex, Spirit of Lavender, Lav'ender Water, (F.) Esprit de Lavande. (Ol. Lavand., fʒj., Alcohol. fort., Oij. Dissolve. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used as a perfume chiefly.

SPIR'ITUS LAVAN'DULÆ COMPOS'ITUS, Tinctu'ra Lavandulæ compos'ita, Red Harts'horn, Lav'ender drops, Compound Spir'it of Lav'ender, (F.) Esprit de Lavande composé. (Ol. Lavand., fʒj., Ol. Rosmarin., fʒij., Cinnamom. pulv., fʒij., Caryophyll. pulv., fʒss., Myristic. pulv., fʒj., Santal. pulv., gr. cccx., Alcohol. Ov., Aque, Oij., Alcohol. dilut., q. s. Dissolve the oils in the alcohol, and add the water. Mix the powders, moisten the mixture with fʒj. of the alcoholic solution of the oils, and by percolation, gradually pouring on the remainder of the alcoholic solution and the diluted alcohol, obtain Ovij. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Stimulant. Dose, gtt. xl. to fʒij.

SPIR'ITUS LETHA'LIS, Carbonic acid.

SPIR'ITUS LIMO'NIS, Spirit of Lem'on, Es'sence of Lem'on, (Ol. Limon., fʒij., Cort. Lim. recente rasp., fʒj., Alcohol. fort., Oij. Dissolve the oil in the alcohol; add the lemon peel; macerate for 24 hours, and filter through paper. Ph. U. S., 1873.) To give odor and flavor.

SPIR'ITUS LUMBRICO'RUM, Liquor volatil'is cornu cervi.

SPIR'ITUS MEN'THÆ PIPERITÆ, Tinctu'ra O'lei Menthæ Piperitæ, Sp. Men'thæ piperit'idis, A'qua Men'thæ piperit'idis spirituo'sa, Spir'it of Pep'permint, Tincture of Oil of Peppermint, Essence of Mint or Peppermint, (F.) Esprit de Menthe poivrée. (Ol. menth. pip., fʒj., Menthæ piperit. in pulv. crass., gr. cxx., Alcohol. fort., fʒxv. Dissolve the oil in the alcohol; add the peppermint; macerate for 24 hours, and filter. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, gtt. v. - xx., as a carminative.

SPIR'ITUS MEN'THÆ SATI'VÆ, Spiritus menthæ viridis.

SPIR'ITUS MEN'THÆ VIR'IDIS, Tinctu'ra O'lei Menthæ vir'idis, Spir'itus Men'thæ sati'væ, A'qua

Men'thæ vulga'ris spirituo'sa, Spir'it of Spear'mint, Tincture of Oil of Spearmint, Essence of Spearmint, (F.) Esprit de Menthe vert.

The Spiritus Menthæ Viridis (Ph. U. S., 1873) is made like the Spiritus menthæ piperitæ, and has the same properties and dose.

SPIR'ITUS MILLEPEDA'RUM, Liquor cornu cervi—s. Mindereri, Liquor ammoniæ acetatis—s. Muriaticus æthereus, Spiritus ætheris muriatici.

SPIR'ITUS MYR'CLÆ, Spirit of Myr'cia, Bay rum. A spirit obtained by distilling rum with the leaves of Myr'cia acris, Euge'nia seu Myrtus acris, M. Caryophyllata, Bayberry Tree. Order, Myrtaceæ, of the West Indies. Used externally like Cologne water, and in cases where whisky would be applied.

SPIR'ITUS MYRIS'TICÆ, Sp. Myris'ticæ Moscha'tæ seu Nu'cis Moscha'tæ, A'qua Nu'cis Moscha'tæ seu Nephrit'ica, Nut'meg Wa'ter, (F.) Esprit de Muscade. (Ol. myrist., fʒj., Alcohol. fort., Oij. Dissolve. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Cordial and carminative. Dose, fʒj. to fʒiv.

SPIR'ITUS MYR'TI PIMEN'TÆ, Spiritus pimentæ—s. Nitri acidus, Nitric acid—s. Nitri dulcis, Spiritus ætheris nitrici—s. Nitri duplex, Nitric acid—s. Nitri fumans, Nitric acid—s. Nitri Glauberi, Nitric acid—s. Nitri simplex, see Nitric acid—s. Nitri vulgaris, see Nitric acid—s. Nucis moschatæ, Spiritus myristicæ—s. Oleosōromaticus Sylvii, Spiritus ammoniæ aromaticus—s. Ophthalmicus Mindereri, Liquor ammoniæ acetatis.

SPIR'ITUS PIMEN'TÆ, Sp. Myr'ti Pimen'tæ seu Pimen'to, A'qua Mirab'ilis, Spir'it of Pimen'to. (Ol. Piment., fʒij., Alcohol. dilut., cong. Solve.) Cordial and carminative. Dose, fʒj., and more.

SPIR'ITUS PULE'GI, A'qua Pule'gii spirituo'sa, Spir'it of Pen'ngroyal, Spir'ituous Pen'ngroyal Wa'ter, (F.) Esprit de Pouliot. (Olei pulegii ʒvij., Sp. rect., Oivss., Aque, q. s. Distil a gallon. Ph. L.) Same as spirit of spearmint in properties and dose.

SPIR'ITUS PYROACE'TICUS, Acetone.

SPIR'ITUS PYROXYLICUS, Pyroxylic spir'it, Wood spirit, Wood alcohol, Pyroxylic alcohol, Methyl'ic alcohol, Hydrated oxide of meth'yle, Bihydrate of Meth'ylene, (F.) Esprit pyroxylique, Esprit de bois. This substance is by some supposed to have been the article given in phthisis by Dr. Hastings, under the names Naphtha and Wood Naphtha. It was probably, however, the Pyroæcetic spirit. See Acetone. When wood is subjected to destructive distillation, about one per cent. of an inflammable volatile liquid, along with other products, passes over, which, when separated and purified, constitutes pyroxylic spirit. It is given in the same cases and doses as Acetone.

SPIR'ITUS RAPH'ANI COMPOS'ITUS, Spiritus armoraciæ compositus.

SPIR'ITUS RECTIFICA'TUS, Sp. Vini rectificat'us seu vino'sus rectificat'us, Enostag'ma, Enclæum, Pyra'nus, Alcohol. A. Vi'ni, Spirit of Wine, (F.) Esprit de Vin rectifié. Rectified spirit is much used in pharmacy to dissolve resinous and other substances. It is seldom exhibited internally, although it exists in the diluted state in all vinous and spirituous liquors. Externally it is employed as a discutient. S. g., according to the British Pharmacopœia, 0·838; that of the United States, 0·835 (see Alcohol), and of Paris, 0·819 to 0·827.

SPIR'ITUS REC'TOR, Aroma—s. Roriferus, Gaz sanguinis.

SPIR'ITUS ROSMARI'NI, Sp. Rosmari'ni officina'lis, Sp. An'thos, Aqua Hungar'ica seu Regi'næ Hungar'icæ, Spir'it of Rose'mary, Hun'gary Wa'ter, (F.) Esprit de Romarin, Alcoolat de Romarin.

(Ol. rosmarini, f3iv., Alcohol, cong. Solve.) Stimulant. Dose, f3j. to f3iv.

SPIRITUS SALIS ACIDUS seu FUMANS, Muriaticum acidum—s. Salis ammoniaci, Spiritus ammoniaci—s. Salis ammoniaci aquosus, Liquor ammoniaci—s. Salis ammoniaci lactescens seu lacteus, Spiritus ammoniaci succinatus—s. Salis ammoniaci sulphuratus, Ammoniaci sulphuretum—s. Salis dulcis, Spiritus aetheris muriatici—s. Salis Glauberi, Muriaticum acidum—s. Salis marini, Muriaticum acidum—s. Salis marini coagulatus, Potassae murias—s. Salis volatilis oleosus, Spiritus ammoniaci aromaticus.

SPIRITUS SAPONIS ALKALINUS. A solution of green soap, f3ij., in alcohol, f3j., to which, after filtration, spirit of lavender, f3ij., is added. It has been recommended as an application in seborrhoea. A more elegant preparation is made by dissolving f3ij. of the soap in f3x. of Cologne water.

SPIRITUS SULPHURICO-ÆTHEREUS CAMPHORATUS, Tinctura ætherea composita—s. Sulphurico-æthereus martialis, Tinctura seu Alcohol sulphurico-æthereus ferri—s. Sulphuris, Sulphuric acid, Sulphurous acid—s. Sulphuris per campanam, Sulphurous acid—s. Sulphuris volatil, Ammoniaci sulphuretum—s. Sulphureus volatil, Sulphurous acid.

SPIRITUS TENUIOR, Alcohol dilutum, Spiritus vini seu tenuior, Proof Spirit, (F.) Esprit de vin délayé. (Generally made for pharmaceutical purposes by mixing equal parts of rectified spirit and distilled water.) S. g. Ph. B., 1867, 0.920; U. S., 1873, 0.941. It is employed in the same cases as those in which alcohol is used; chiefly, as a solvent of vegetable matters, in the form of tinctures.

SPIRITUS VENERIS, Aceticum acidum—s. Vini Gallici, Brandy—s. Vini rectificatus, Spiritus rectificatus—s. Vinosus camphoratus, Spiritus camphoræ—s. Vinosus tenuior, Spiritus tenuior—s. Vitalis, Nervous fluid—s. Vitrioli, Sulphuric acid—s. Vitrioli acidus Vogleri, Sulphuricum acidum dilutum—s. Vitrioli coagulatus Mynsichti, Potassæ sulphas—s. Vitrioli dulcis, Spiritus aetheris sulphurici—s. Vitrioli phlogisticatus, Sulphurous acid—s. Volatil, aromaticus, Spiritus ammoniaci aromaticus—s. Volatil, fœtidus, Spiritus ammoniaci fœtidus.

Spirocolon, Spyrocolon, Orchida, Franzo. A syphiloid affection, first known in Greece, during the war of freedom from 1820 to 1825.

Spirograph, (spiro, 'I breathe,' and γραφω, 'I write,') Atmograph.

Spiroid Canal, (σπειρα, 'a winding,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Aqueductus Fallopii.

Spirometer, Pulnometer, (spiro, 'I breathe,' and μετρον, 'a measure,') properly Anapnometer, Pneomater, Pneusometer, Pneumometer, Pneumatometer, Pneumonometer. Any instrument for measuring the quantity of air concerned in respiration, and consequently the capacity of the lungs. This mode of measurement has been called Spirometry and Pneumetry, as it was formerly called Pulmometry. The term spirometer is now usually applied to a kind of gasometer introduced by Dr. Hutchinson to estimate the quantity of air contained in, or rather expelled from, the lungs under different circumstances. A wet meter is sometimes used to ascertain the breathing capacity, and has been called a Spiroscope, Spiroscopium.

Spiroptera Hominis, (σπειρα, 'a spire,' and πτερον, 'a wing,') see Parasites.

Spiroscope, (spiro, 'I breathe,' and σκοπεω, 'I examine,') see Spirometer.

Spissantia, (spissare, 'to thicken,') Incrassantia.

Spit, ([Sax.] spætan, spittan, 'to spit,') Sputum.

Spit'al, Hospital.

Spit'al, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The village of Spital is situate on the south side of the Tweed, near Tweedmouth. The springs there contain chloride of calcium, sulphate of soda, sulphate and carbonate of lime. They act as saline cathartics.

Spith'ama, (σπιθαμή,) Do'drans. A measure of twelve fingers' breadth, or about nine inches.

Spit'ing, (see Spit,) Exspuition.

Spit'le, Hospital, Saliva, ([Sax.] spætl,) — s. Sweet, see Salivation.

Splanchna, (σπλαγχνα, pl. of σπλαγχνον,) Entails.

Splanchnectop'ia, Splanchnodias'tasis, Situs perversus seu anom'alus intestino'rum, (splanchna, α, 'out of,' and τοπος, 'place,') Misplacement or ectopia of the intestines.

Splanchnelmin'tha, (splanchna, and ελμινθες, gen. ελμινθας, 'a worm,') Worms.

Splanchnneurys'ma, gen. Splanchnneurys'matis, (splanchna, and ευρυω, 'I dilate,') Morbid dilatation of the intestines.

Splanchn'ic, Splanchn'icus, (σπλαγχνικός,) Visceral, (F.) Splanchnique, (from splanchna,) Relating or belonging to the viscera.

SPLANCH'NIC CAVITIES are the three great cavities of the body—those of the cranium, chest, and abdomen.

SPLANCH'NIC NERVES belong to the great sympathetic, and are two in number on each side. They are distinguished into: 1. The great splanchnic nerve, (F.) Grand splanchnal (Ch.). Its roots—four or five in number—come from the 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and sometimes the 10th, thoracic ganglia. They descend inwards, on the sides of the vertebral column, beneath the pleura, and unite into a single trunk, which enters the abdomen through a separation of the fleshy fibres of the pillars of the diaphragm; passes behind the stomach, and divides into several branches, which pass into the semilunar ganglion. 2. The less'er splanchnic nerve, Re'nal nerve, (F.) Splanchnique accessoire of Walther, Petit splanchnal (Ch.), is composed of two distinct branches, proceeding from the 10th and 11th thoracic ganglia, which unite on the 12th dorsal vertebra into a cord that pierces the diaphragm singly; enters the abdomen, and divides into two branches, one of which anastomoses with the greater splanchnic nerve, while the other sends its filaments to the renal and solar plexuses.

Splanchn'ica. Medicines adapted to diseases of the bowels. Also, the 2d order of the class Carliaca of Good; defined, diseases affecting the collatitious viscera, and characterized by disquiet or diseased action in the organs auxiliary to the digestive process, without primary inflammation.

Splanchnodias'tasis, (splanchna, and διαστασις, 'displacement,') Splanchnectopia.

Splanchnod'ynē, (splanchna, and δύνη, 'pain,') Pain in the bowels.

Splanchnograph'ia, Splanchnography.

Splanchnog'raphy, Splanchnograph'ia, (splanchna, and γραφη, 'a description,') The part of anatomy which treats of the viscera.

Splanchnolithi'asis, (splanchna, and λίθος, 'a stone,') The formation of a calculous concretion in any viscus.

Splanchnol'ogy, Splanchnolog'ia, (splanchna, and λογος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on the viscera; also, Splanchnography.

Splanchn'on, (σπλαγχνον,) sing. of Splanchna.

Splanchnopathi'a, (splanchna, and παθος, 'suffering,') A disease of the intestines.

Splanchnosclero'sis, (splanchnon, and σκληρος, 'hard,') Induration of a viscus.

Splanchnot'omy, Splanchnotom'ia, Splanchnotom'ie, (splanchna, and τομή, 'section,') Dissection or anatomy of the viscera.

Splat'foot, see Kyllosis.

Splay'foot, (from splay, 'spread.') See Kylolosis.

Spleen, (σπλην,) Lien, He'par sinis'trum seu adulteri'num, For'mes ventric'uli, Milt. (Sc.) Melt. (F.) Rate. A soft, spongy, parenchymatous organ, of a more or less deep violet red, situate deeply in the left hypochondrium, below the diaphragm, above the colon, between the great tuberosity of the stomach and the cartilages of the false ribs, and above and anterior to the kidney. Its ordinary length is 4½ inches; its thickness 2½; and its weight 8 ounces. Its parenchyma, which is bathed in blood, constituting the pulp, Pul'pa, Substan'tia pulpo'sa seu ru'bra seu vasculo'sa, contains a multitude of grayish, soft, and semi-transparent granulations—sple'nic cor'puscles or Malpighian bod'ies of the spleen, Corpus'cula Malpigh'ii seu lie'nis, Glan'dulæ Malpigh'ii, Ac'ini lie'nis, Vesic'ulæ gri'seæ. It is covered by a serous membrane, furnished by the peritoneum; and by a proper coat, of a fibrous nature, Mem'bra'na pro'pria seu albugi'nea seu fibro'sa, which is intimately united with it, and transmits into its interior delicate, solid, and very elastic prolongations—trabec'ulae. At its inner edge is a fissure—Hi'lus seu Por'ta lie'nis, by which the vessels and nerves enter the organ. The upper extremity is the head, Ca'put lie'nis,—the lower, the tail, Caud'a lie'nis. The exact functions of the spleen are unknown. The best opinion is, that it appertains to hæmatisis, and acts, also, as a diverticulum to the vascular system.

Splenatroph'ia, Atroph'ia lie'nis, (splen, and atrophia, 'atrophy.') Wasting or atrophy of the spleen.

Splenaux'ë, (splen, and αυξη, 'increase.') Splenoncus.

Splen'culi, (pl. of splenculus,) 'small spleens,' Lienculi. See Lienculus.

Spleneo'tama, gen. Spleneotam'atis, Splenoparectama.

Spleneo'tasis, (splen, and εκτασις, 'dilatation,') Splenoparectama.

Spleneotom'ia, Spleneotom'ë, (splen, εκ, 'out of,' and τεμνω, 'I cut.') Extirpation of the spleen.

Spleneotop'ia, Disloca'tio seu Ectop'ia lie'nis seu sple'nis, (F.) Anomosplénopathie, (splen, and εκτοπος,—εκ, and τοπος,—'out of place.') Dislocation of the spleen. Not a common occurrence.

Splenemphrax'is, Splenophrax'ia, (splen, and εμφρασσω, 'I obstruct.') Obstruction of the spleen. See Splenoncus.

Sple'nes, (pl. of splen,) Hypochondriasis.

Splenet'icus, Sple'nicus, Splenit'icus, Lieno'sus, (F.) Rateleur. That which relates to the spleen; one laboring under diseased spleen. A medicine adapted for diseases of the spleen.

Sple'nic, Sple'nicus, Sple'nus, (F.) Splénique, (from splen.) That which relates to the spleen.

SPLE'NIC AR'TERY. It arises from the cœliac; and passes from right to left, forming many windings along the upper edge of the pancreas, which lodges it in a special groove. It reaches the fissure of the spleen, and divides into several branches that enter the organ. In its course it furnishes the pancreatic, left gastroëpiploic, and the vasa brevia.

SPLE'NIC CACHEX'IA, see Cachexia splenica—s. Corpuscles, see Spleen.

SPLE'NIC PLEX'US is a nervous network, which proceeds from the cœliac plexus, and accompanies the splenic artery, sending secondary plexuses to each division.

SPLE'NIC VEIN, Vena sple'nica, V. liena'lis, arises from the spleen, and accompanies the splenic artery; proceeding from left to right, to unite with the superior mesenteric vein, and to form, with it, the abdominal vena porta. In its course, it receives veins corresponding to the vasa brevia, the right and left gastroëpiploic, the duodenal, pancreatic, coronaria ventriculi, and inferior mesenteric veins.

Sple'nica, Splenalgia. Also, medicines which affect the spleen.

Sple'nicus, (σπληνικός,) Spleneticus, Splenic.

Sple'nification, (splen, and φιο, 'I become,') Splenization.

Spleni'ola, (dim. of splen,) Compress.

Splénique, Splenic.

Sple'nis Tu'mor, 'tumor of the spleen,' Ague cake.

Splénisation, Splenization.

Splenis'cus, (σπληνισκος,) Compress.

Splénise, see Splenization.

Sple'nisis, (from splen,) Splenization.

Spleni'ticus, Splenic.

Spleni'tis, gen. Spleni'tidis, (splen, and itis.) Inflammation of the spleen. Empres'ma splenitis, Inflamma'tio lie'nis, I. sple'nis, Splenal'gia phlegmonodea, Lieni'tis, (F.) Splénite, Inflammation de la Rate. A rare disease, characterized by local pain, swelling, and heat, which sometimes terminates by suppuration. It generally affects the capsule—Epispleni'tis, Perispleni'tis—and must be treated like other inflammations.

Sple'nium, (σπληνιον,) Compress—s. Corporis callosi, see Corpus callosum—s. Cruciatum, Croix de Malte.

Sple'nus, S. Cap'itis seu Col'li, (F.) Cervico-dorso-mastoïdien et dorso-trachélien, Mastoidien postérieur, Cervico-mastoïdien (Ch.), Posterior mastoid muscle. So called from its resemblance to the spleen of certain animals. A muscle situate at the posterior part of the neck, and upper part of the back. It is much broader above than below, where it terminates in a point. It is attached, by its inner edge, to the spinous processes of the first five dorsal vertebrae; to that of the 7th cervical, and to the inferior part of the posterior cervical ligament. By its upper extremity, it is attached to the transverse processes of the first two cervical vertebrae, to the mastoid process, and to the posterior surface of the occipital bone. Some have considered this muscle to be formed of two portions, which they have called Splénus colli, and Splénus cap'itis. The splénus extends the head, inclines it, and rotates it. If the splénii of each side act together, they extend the head.

Spleniza'tion, Spleniza'tio, Splenifica'tion, Splenifica'tio, (F.) Splénisation, (from splen.) A term applied to the state of the lung in the first or second stage of pneumonia, in which its tissue resembles that of the spleen. To a conversion of the lung into a spleen-like substance in the yellow fever of Gibraltar, the term splénisis, (F.) Splénise, was given by Louis and others.

Splenoce'lë, Her'nia liena'lis, (splen, and κηλη, 'a tumor.') Hernia formed by the spleen.

Spleno'des, (splen, and odes,) Splénoid.

Splenodyn'ia, (splen, and δύνη, 'pain,') Splenalgia.

Splenog'raphy, Splenograph'ia, (splen, and γραφη, 'a description.') A description of the spleen.

Splénohæ'mia, (F.) Splénohémie, (splen, and hæma, 'blood.') Congestion or hyperæmia of the spleen, a common phenomenon in many diseases, especially in typhoid and intermittent fevers.

Sple'noid, Splenoïdes, Spleno'des, (σπληνοειδής, from splen, and ειδής, 'resemblance.') Spleen-like. Having the appearance of the spleen.

Splenol'ogy, Splenolog'ia, (splen, and λόγος, 'a discourse.') A treatise on the spleen.

Splenomala'cia, Lienomala'cia, (splen, and μαλακός, 'soft.') Morbid softening of the spleen.

Splénoncie, Splenoneus.

Splenon'cus, Megalosplénia, Hypertroph'ia seu Supernutrit'io splénis seu liénis, Intumescen'tia seu Infarctus seu Physco'nia liénis, Splénal'gia subinflammato'ria chron'ica, Splenemphraxis, Splénau'zē, Hypersplenotroph'ia, Li'en in'gens, (F.) Splénoncie, Hypertrophie de la Rate, (splen, and ογκός, 'a tumor.') Tumefaction of the spleen. See Ague cake.

Splenoparec'tama, gen. Splénoparectam'atis, Splénec'tama, Splenoparec'tasis, Splénec'tasis, (splen, and παρεκταμα, 'excessive volume.') Excessive enlargement of the spleen.

Splenoparec'tasis, Splenoparectama.

Splenophrax'ia, (splen, and φρασσω, 'I shut up,') Splenemphraxis.

Splenorrhag'ia, (splen, and ρᾱγη, 'a bursting forth.') Hemorrhage from the spleen.

Splénoscir'rhus, (splen, and σκιρῶς, 'hardness.') Scirrhus or cancer of the spleen.

Splenot'omy, Splenotom'ia, Splenot'omē, (splen, and τομή, 'I cut.') Dissection of the spleen.

Splint, ([D.] Splinter, from splijten, 'to split,') Hastell'a, Ass'ula, Asser'culum, Pla'gula, Nar'thez, Fer'ula, (F.) Attelle, Éclisse. A flexible and resisting lamina of wood, used in the treatment of fractures, to keep the fragments in apposition, and prevent their displacement. Splints are made of iron, wood, bark of trees, leather, leather felt, gutta-percha, pasteboard, a combination of paraffine and stearine—paraffa-ste'arine, forming a bandage splint, Star'tin's bandage. See Apparatus, immovable. Splints are generally padded, and are fixed by a roller or by tapes, according to circumstances.

SPLINT, BAN'DAGE. see Splint.

Splint'bone, Fibula.

Splin'ter, (F.) Esquille, (same etymon as Splint.) This term is sometimes applied to a small portion of wood, which occasionally enters the skin, and gives rise to much irritation until it is removed, — Acul'eus lig'neus, (F.) Écharde.

It is also applied to fragments that separate from a fractured or diseased bone.

Splin'terbone, Fibula.

Split'cloth, Lin'teum scis'sum. A bandage for the head, consisting of a central part and six or eight tails. The single splitcloth has four tails. It is regarded as the most convenient bandage for the head, face, and jaws.

Split'rock, Heuchera cortusa.

Spoat, (like spit.) Saliva.

Spo'dium Græco'rum, (σποδίων, 'dross,') Album Græcum.

Spoke'bone, Radius.

Spolia'rum, (spolio, 'I deprive of covering,') Apodyterium.

Spo'liative, Spoliati'va, (spoliare, spoliatum, 'to take away,') (F.) Spoliatif. Serving to take away or diminish. Phlebotom'ia spoliati'va, (F.) Saignée spoliative; bloodletting, used for the purpose of diminishing the mass of blood.

Spoliato'rium, (spolio, 'I deprive of covering,') Apodyterium.

Spon'dles, (from spondylus.) Vertebræ.

Spondyl'al'gia, Spondylodyn'ia, (spondylus, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the vertebræ. Cacorrhachitis. See Vertebral disease.

Spondylarthri'tis, (spondylus, αρθρον, 'a joint,' and itis.) Gouty or rheumatic inflammation of the spinal column.

Spondylarthroc'acé, (spondylus, αρθρον, 'a joint,' and κακός, 'evil,') Vertebral disease.

Spon'dyli, (σπονδυλοι.) Vertebræ.

Spondylithe'sis, Spondylolisthe'sis, (spondylus, and ολισθησις, 'a slipping or sliding,') Dislocation of the vertebræ, as of the last lumbar vertebra forwards on the sacrum, thus producing pelvic contraction.

Spondyli'tis, gen. Spondyli'tidis, Inflamma'tio ver'tebræ, (spondylus, and itis.) Inflammation of the vertebræ.

Spondyl'ium, (σπονδυλιον.) Heracleum spondylium.

Spondyloc'acé, (spondylus, and κακός, 'evil,') Vertebral disease.

Spondylodyn'ia, (spondylus, and δύνη, 'pain,') Spondylalgia.

Spondylolisthe'sis, Spondylisthesis.

Spondylopathi'a, (spondylus, and παθος, 'a disease,') A disease of the vertebral column.

Spondylopyo'sis, (spondylus, and πύωσις, 'suppuration,') Vertebral disease.

Spondylo'tomy, (spondylus, and τομή, 'I cut,') Cutting through the spine, as in the foetus in cross-births, where turning is impossible.

Spon'dylus, (σπονδυλος.) A vertebra. Also, the vertex.

Sponge, Spongia — s. Bastard, Acyonium.

SPONGE BATH, Bath, sponge.

SPONGE, PREPARED, see Spongia — s. Tent, see Spongia — s. Tent, carbolized, see Spongia.

Spon'gi, (from σπογγος.) The tumefied glands of the neck.

Spon'gia, (σπογγια.) S. officinalis seu marina, Spon'gus, Sphon'gus, Sponge, (F.) Éponge. An organized marine substance, of the Class Porifera, met with in many seas, but especially in the Mediterranean and Arabian. It is supple, elastic, porous, and capable of absorbing fluids in which it may be placed, and of thus increasing in size. It is employed in surgery for cleansing or washing; for absorbing acrid discharges from ulcers; suppressing hemorrhage when the mouth of the vessel can be compressed by it, and for forming tents for dilating wounds; in which case, the sponge is immersed in melting wax, and cooled before being used. It is then called Spon'gia cera'ta, Waxed, Cerated, or Prepared Sponge or Sponge Tent, (F.) Éponge Préparée. Carbolyzed sponge tents are also employed.

SPON'GIA AS'SA, S. usta — s. Cerata, see Spongia — s. Cynosbati, Bedegar.

SPON'GIA US'TA, S. As'sa, Carbo spon'giæ, Burnt Sponge, (F.) Éponge Torréfiée, contains carbonate and phosphate of lime, carbonate of soda, charcoal, and iodine. It is used in bronchocele, scrofulous affections, and herpetic eruptions; and its good effects seem to be dependent upon iodine. (It is made by cutting sponge into pieces, and heating it, that any extraneous matter may be separated; burning it in a close iron vessel until it becomes black and friable, and, lastly, rubbing it into very fine powder.) Dose, ʒi. to ʒiij.

Spon'giæ La'pis. A name given to small, friable stones found in sponge. They were formerly esteemed lithontriptic.

Spongieux, see Spongoid.

Spongiform, (spongia, and forma, 'form,') Spongoid.

Spong'ing Bath, Bath, sponge.

Spongio'des, Spongoid.

Spongiole (F.), Spongi'olum, Spongi'ola, Spongelet, (from σπογγιον, 'a small sponge,') The soft succulent extremity of the fibrils or true roots of a plant, by which it absorbs or sucks up fluid. Similar spongioles have been supposed to exist at the terminations of the absorbents in animals.

Spon'gion, (σπογγιον.) Ancient name of an epithem made of goats' dung: and also of a malagma, which was considered capable of absorbing the serum in dropsies, like a sponge.

Spongiopi'lin, Spon'giopile, (spongia, 'sponge,' and pilus, 'a hair.') A fabric, composed of sponge and wool, felted together in three layers, and coated, on one of its surfaces, with caoutchouc, which renders it impermeable. It is of great service as a cataplasm, fomentation, vehicle for lotions, liniments, &c.

Spongio'sum (Os), Ethmoid bone.

Spongio'sus, Spongoid.

Spongo'des, (spongia, and odes,) Spongoid.

Spon'goid, Spongoi'des, Spongo'des, (F.) Spongoïde, (σπογγουίδης, σπογγώδης, from spongia, and είδος, 'resemblance.') Resembling sponge. Of the nature of sponge, spongy, spongio'sus, (F.) Spongieux.

SPON'GOID INFLAMMA'TION; Hæmatodes fungus.

SPON'GOID TIS'SUE, (F.) Tissu Spongoïde. An adventitious spongy tissue found in cases of rickets.

Spon'gos, (σπογγος,) Tonsil.

Spong'y, Spongoid — s. Tissue, see Bone.

Spon'sa So'lis, 'spouse of the sun,' Calendula officinalis.

Sponta'neous, Sponta'neus, (F.) Spontanée, (from sponte, 'voluntarily.') That which occurs of itself, or without any manifest external cause. Evacuations are termed spontaneous which are not produced by medicine. Sponta'neous las'situde is that which is not the result of fatigue. Diseases are also spontaneous which supervene without apparent cause. Sponta'neous or intra-utérine amputa'tion is the separation of a limb from the foetus in utero. It has been found, in such cases, that it is the left arm, which is usually wanting.

SPONTA'NEOUS EVOLU'TION, see Evolution — s. Version, Evolution, spontaneous.

Spontéparité, (sponte, 'voluntarily,' and pario, 'I bring forth,') Generation, spontaneous.

Spoon, (from its hollowness,) Umbilicus.

Spoon'wood, Kalmia latifolia, Tilia Americana.

Spo'ra, Spore.

Sporad'ic, Sporad'icus, (F.) Sporadique, (σποραδικος, 'scattered,' from σπάρω, 'I sow.') An epithet for diseases, Spor'ades, Morbi sporad'ici seu disper'si seu sparsi, (F.) Maladies sporadiques, which supervene indifferently in every season and situation, from accidental causes, and independently of any epidemic or contagious influence.

Spore, Spor'ule, Spor'ulus, Spo'rum, Spor'ulum, Sporus, Spora, (σπορος, from σπάρω, 'I sow.') The reproductive body in cryptogamous plants, which is analogous to the seed of phanerogamous plants.

Sporid'ium, (from sporus.) The reproductive body in algaceous plants, which resembles the spore of other plants.

Sporiso'rium Ma'idis, see Pellagra.

Spor'ula, Spore.

Spor'ule, Spore.

Spor'ulus, Spore.

Spo'rum, Spore.

Spo'rus, Spore.

SPOTS, RED, (F.) Taches rouges ou lenticulaires, Rose spots, Lenticular spots, Rose'olæ seu Pap'ula typh'o'sæ. Small red spots which appear in typhoid fever, from the 8th to the 15th day of the disease. They are most frequently seen on the lower and middle portions of the chest, and upper part of the abdomen.

SPOTS, ROSE, Spots, red — s. Summer, Ephelides — s. Wine, Taches de vin.

Spot'ted Fe'ver, Meningitis, cerebrospinal — s. Kidney, see Kidney.

Sprain, (corrupted from strain [?],) Subluxa'tio, Distor'tio, Dias'trophē, Diastren'ma, Luxa'tio imperfecta, Strem'ma, Thlas'ma Strem'ma, Wrench, (Sc.) Wramp, (Prov.) Wrick, Kench, Keak, (F.) Détorse, Entorse, Foulure. A violent straining or twisting of the soft parts surrounding the joints. According to the degree of the sprain, the fibrous parts of the joint may be simply stretched, or they may be ruptured.

This affection, which has been regarded as incomplete luxation, occurs, particularly, in the ginglymoid joints; — as in the foot, wrist, knee, &c. The violence causes an afflux of blood; the serum of the blood is poured out, and often the blood itself, owing to the rupture of vessels; and inflammation arises, which ends in resolution or induration. Local antiphlogistic applications are required, with perfect rest; and, when the inflammatory action has subsided, cold pumping and friction, with the application of a plaster and bandage, will afford support until the parts affected recover their due tone.

SPRAIN FRAC'TURE. Separation of a tendon from its point of insertion, a thin shell of bone being detached.

Sprat, Yellowbilled, Clupea thryssa.

Spray, See Pulverization.

Spray'cure. A variety of the douche, which consists in the application of water in the form of spray. See Pulverization.

Spray-produ'cers, see Pulverization.

Spring'worm. The oxyuris vermicularis.

Spruce, (from Prussia [?],) see Pinus abies.

Spruce Beer, White Spruce Beer. A beer made as follows: To 10 gallons of water, add 6 pounds of sugar and 4 oz. of essence of spruce. Add yeast; and bottle, when ready. It is grateful and antiscorbutic.

SPRUCE BEER POW'DERS may be formed of white sugar, ʒi. and ʒij., subcarbonate of soda, gr. xxvj., essence of spruce, gr. x., in each blue paper; and acid of tartar, ʒss. in each white paper. For half a pint of water.

Staphyli'nus Exter'nus, Circumflexus.

Staph'yilis, (from σταφύλη, 'a grape,') Nipple.

Staphyli'tis, gen. Staphyli'tidis, (staphyle, and itis.) Uvulitis.

Staphyl'ium, (σταφύλιον, dim. of σταφύλη.) Nipple.

Staphylodial'ysis, (staphyle, and dialysis.) Cionis, Staphylædema.

Staphylæde'ma, gen. Staphylæde'matis, (staphyle, and adema.) Augi'na uvula'ris, Dysphagia uvulo'sa, Hypostaphylē, Hypostaphylitis, Staphylodial'ysis, Prolap'sus seu Propto'sis seu Ca'sus seu Cede'ma uvulæ, Him'as, Himanto'ma, Himanto'sis, Staphylon'cus, Staphylon'cia, Productio uvulæ à pituitâ, Uvula decidua seu relaxa'ta seu elongata, Cras'pedon. Relaxation and tumefaction of the uvula, which, either from inflammation or infiltration, hangs down so as to occasion difficult deglutition, cough, &c. Scarification, astringent gargles, and, if necessary, excision, constitute the treatment.

Staphylo'ma, gen. Staphylo'matis, (σταφύλωμα, from staphyle.) Uva'tio, Parop'sis Staphylo'ma, Staphylo'sis, Polygro'ma. A name given to different protrusions of the anterior surface of the eye.

STAPHYLO'MA, AN'NULAR, see Staphyloma of the sclerotic—s. Ciliary, see Staphyloma of the sclerotic—s. Conicum, Staphyloma of the cornea—s. Conicum Pellucidum, Staphyloma of the cornea.

STAPHYLO'MA OF THE COR'NEA, Sugarloaf Cor'nea or Con'ical cor'nea, Con'ical hydrophthal'mia, Staphylo'ma con'icum seu pellu'cidum con'icum, Cor'nea cacumina'ta, Conophthal'mia, Prolap'sus cor'neæ, Ceraton'cus, Keratoconus, Hypercerato'sis, Hypercer'asis, is an unequal, embossed, bluish or whitish, round or conical or hyperboloid tumor of variable size, formed by the projection of the transparent cornea, which is sometimes extenuated and distended, at others thickened.

STAPHYLO'MA I'RIDIS, Pto'sis iridis, Iridauesis.

STAPHYLO'MA RACEMOSUM. This term has been applied to a form of staphyloma in which the cornea is perforated at several points, through which small portions of iris protrude.

STAPHYLO'MA OF THE SCLEROT'IC, Staphylo'ma Sclerot'icæ, Sclerectasia, differs from the last, in the prominence existing on a part of the eye covered by the sclerotic, which is much thinner. It is generally due to irido-choroiditis.

Poste'rior Staphylo'ma, S. Posticum, Sclerectasia Poste'rior, Sclerotico-choroiditis seu Sclero-choroiditis Poste'rior, is a form of the disease whose chief characteristics are posterior elongation of the eyeball, and loss of pigment and atrophy of the choroid.

Ante'rior Staphylo'ma of the Sclerot'ic, Ciliary Staphylo'ma, is a staphylomatous projection of the sclerotic in the ciliary region of the eye.

When the ciliary region around the cornea is involved, it is called Annular Staphyloma.

STAPHYLO'MA OF THE SCLEROT'IC, ANTE'RIOR, see Staphyloma of the sclerotic—s. of the Sclerotic, posterior, see Staphyloma of the sclerotic.

STAPHYLO'MA U'VEÆ, Iridauesis.

Staphylon'cia, (staphyle, and οἶκος, 'a swelling,') Staphylædema.

Staphylon'cus, Staphylædema.

Staphyloplas'tic, Staphyloplas'ticus, (staphyle, and πλασσω, 'I form,') An epithet applied to the operation for replacing the soft palate when it has been lost. Staph'yloplasty, Uranoplasty, Pal-atoplasty, a word of hybrid formation, is the operation for closing the palatine vault.

Staphylor'raphy, Staphylor'aphy, Velosyn'thesis, Staphylorrhaphia, Kionorrhaphia, Cionor'r'haphia, Uranor'r'haphē, Uranorrhaphia, Uraniscorrhaphia, Uraniscorrhaphē, (staphyle, and ῥαφή, 'a suture,') The operation for uniting a cleft palate. It consists in paring the edges of the cleft, passing ligatures through them, and bringing them together.

Staphylo'sis, (from staphyle.) Staphyloma.

Staph'ylotome, (staphyle, and τομή, 'incision,') A knife adapted to the operation for staphyloma.

Staphylot'omy, Staphylotom'ia, Staphyletom'ia. Amputation of the uvula.

Sta'tionary, Stationa'rius, (F.) Stationnaire. A name given by Sydenham and Stoll to certain diseases, which depend upon a particular state of the atmosphere; and which prevail in a district for a certain number of years, and then give way to others.

Stat'istics, Med'ical, Vi'tal Stat'istics, Biostat'istics, (status, 'a state,') (F.) Statistique médicale.

That part of medicine which relates to details—med'ico-stat'istical—connected with the mortality, salubrity, &c. of different states, countries, and situations.

It has, also, been used in a wider sense to signify the same as Numer'ical meth'od, (F.) Méthode numérique; which is applied to the systemization of medical facts, or to the use of numbers in the investigation of disease.

STAT'ISTICS, VI'TAL, Statistics, medical.

Stat'ure, Statu'ra, Meg'ethos, Magnitu'do cor'poris, (F.) Taille, (from stare, statum, 'to stand,') The height of the human figure. The following table exhibits the mean height, in feet and decimals, of 1800 men, taken as they were entered upon the lists of recruits filed in the office of the Adjutant-General of the United States. The results are given for 100 men from each State; and no recruit under five feet five inches was received.

The minimum height for the American soldier is now five feet three inches; while the British standard is five feet five inches, and the French five feet one inch and a half.

It would seem, from the researches of Professor S. H. Dickson, that the stature of Americans is decidedly superior to that of Europeans, and that the same applies, but to a less degree, to the weight.

The following table exhibits the results of several admeasurements, with the heights of some of the monkey species, on the authority of Mr. Lawrence.

Steatoce'lê, (stear, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') A tumor formed by a collection of steatomatous matter in the scrotum.

Steato'ma, gen. Steato'matis, Tu'mor lar'deus, (stear, and oma,) Seva'tio, Emphy'ma encystis steato'ma. An encysted tumor, whose contents are similar to fat.

STEATO'MA MULLE'RI, see Lipoma.

Steatopath'ic, (stear, gen. steatos, and παθος, 'affection,') Relating to affections of the sebaceous glands.

Steatopy'ga, (stear, and πύγη, 'buttocks,') Buttock-hump. Fat buttocks; such as exist in the Hottentot female.

Stearorrhœ'a, Stearrhœa.

Steato'sis, Stearo'sis, (from stear, and osis.) Fatty degeneration of a part, or unusual deposition and accumulation of fat in its adipose tissue.

STEATO'SIS COR'DIS, Adipo'sis cor'dis, Degeneratio adipo'sa cor'dis, Pinguin'udo cor'dis, Cardiethmolipo'sis and Cardiomyolipo'sis (Piorry), Fat'ty heart, Fat'ty degenera'tion of the heart, (F.) Dégénération ou Dégénérescence du Cœur. Unusual deposition of fat on the heart: by some presumed to be occasionally a true adipose degeneration of the substance of the heart.

STEATO'SIS HEPAT'ICA, Adiposis hepatica.

Steatozo'on Folliculo'rum, (stear, and ζωον, 'an animal,') Acarus folliculorum.

Steel, ([Sax.] stýle,) Chalybs.

Steep, Rennet.

Steep'lebrush, Spiræa tomentosa.

Steer's Opodel'doch, see Opodel'doch, Steer's.

Steganop'odes, (στεγανόπους,) Planip'edes. They who have flat feet or are webfooted, (from στεγανός, 'covered,' and πους, 'foot,')

Steg'anus, (στεγανός,) Constipated.

Steg'month, see Parturient.

Stegno'sis, Steno'sis, Constipa'tio, Stipa'tio,

Condensa'tio, Obstruc'tio, (στεγνωσις, from στεγνω, 'I constrict,') Constriction or narrowness of the pores and vessels. Stricture. Constipation. Suppression or stopping or stoppage of the evacuations. See Aretatio.

Stegno'tica, (στεγνωτικά,) Astringents.

Steiro'sis, (στερωσις,) Sterilitas.

Stel'la, 'a star,' Fas'cia stella'ta, (F.) Étoile. A bandage, improperly compared to a star, because it is crossed like the letter X. This bandage is applied upon one or both shoulders. In the first case, it is called simple; in the second, double. It was employed in fractures of the sternum, clavicle, and scapula; in luxations of the humerus, &c.

STEL'LA TER'RÆ, Plantago coronopus.

Stella'ria Me'dia, (stella, 'a star,') Alsine media — s. Scilla, Scilla.

Stella'ta Rup'i'na, (from stella,) Centaurea calcitrapa.

Stel'late Lig'ament. A name given to the anterior costo-vertebral ligament, from its shape.

Stell'ulæ Verheyen'ii, (stella, 'a star,' stellula, 'a little star,') Substan'tia stella'ta serpenti'na seu radia'ta, Ellych'nia. A stelliform plexus of veins at the surface of the kidney, which gives origin to the interlobular veins.

Stelochi'tis, Osteocolla.

Stem Pes'sary, see Pessary.

Ste'ma, (σθημα,) Penis, (especially the glans.)

Stenag'ma, (στεναγμα,) Suspirium.

Stenag'mus, (στεναγμος,) Suspirium.

Ste'no, (from στενός,) in composition, Narrow.

STE'NO, DUCT OF, see Parotid.

Stenobreg'mate, (steno, and βρεγμα, 'the top of the head,') see Cranium.

Stenocar'dia, (steno, and καρδία, 'heart,') Angina pectoris, Cardiostenosis.

Stenochor'ia, Stenochori'asis, (steno, and χωρα, 'space,') Angustia, Narrowness, Stricture. Employed by some for contraction of the vagina especially.

STENOCHO'RIA INTESTI'NI REC'TI, Stricture of the rectum — s. Œsophagi, Dysphagia constricta.

Stenomyete'ria, (steno, and μυκτηρ, 'nose,') Contraction of the nasal passages.

Ste'non or Ste'no, Duct of, see Parotid.

Steno'sis, (στενωσις, stenosis, and osis,) Stegnosis.

Stenostegno'sis, (steno, and stegnosis,) Stenostenosis.

Stenosteno'sis, Stenostegno'sis, (steno, and στενωσις, 'contraction,') Obstruc'tio duct'us Stenonia'ni. Narrowness or contraction of the duct of Steno.

Stenostom'ia, (steno, and στομα, 'mouth,') Contraction of the mouth.

Stenotho'rax, gen. Stenothora'cis, (στενοθώραξ, from steno, and θώραξ, gen. θώρακος, 'the chest,') One who has a narrow chest.

Sten'son's Foram'ina, see Scarpa's foramina.

Stentoropho'nus, (Στεντορ, Stentor, a Greek of powerful voice in the army before Troy; and φωνή, 'voice,') One who has a strong voice.

Step, ([Sax.] stæp,) Pas'sus, (F.) Pas. The step is produced by the separation of the two lower limbs, and includes that space plus the length of the foot.

Steph'anê, (στέφανος,) Crown.

Steph'en's, Mrs., Rem'edy for the Stone. This consisted of lime, prepared by calcining the shells of eggs and snails, made into pills with soap. A decoction was also administered, consisting of chamomile, fennel, parsley, and burdock, with a portion of Alicant soap. Its virtues were dependent upon the lime and the tonic properties of the decoction. Hales, Hartley, Kirkpatrick, Lobb, and others, wrote in favor of this nostrum; and it was ultimately bought by the British parliament for £5000 — about $25,000.

Stephen'sia Elonga'ta, Matico.

Step'mother's Bles'sing, Hangnail.

Steppe Disease, Rinderpest.

Stercobi'lin, (stercus, 'excrement,' and bilis, 'bile.') A coloring matter recently extracted from the feculent contents of the intestines.

Ster'colin, (from stercus.) Serolin.

Stercora'ceous, Stercora'rius, Diachoret'icus, Ster'coral, (from stercus.) Fæ'cal, Fæ'cal, (F.) Stercoraire, Stercoral. Relating to excrement.

The French use the term Fistules stercoraires for fistulæ which are kept up by the constant passage of fecal or stercora'ceous matter. The name Stercoraires is sometimes given, in derision, to those physicians who are fond of purging their patients: d posteriori has been similarly used.

Stercoraire, Stercoraceous.

Ster'corin, (from stercus.) see Excrement and Serolin.

Stercu'lia Acumina'ta, Kola, Cola or Kola Acumina'ta. An African tree, the source of the Kola nuts, which are used in that country as an agreeable stimulant to the nervous system. They contain caffeine.

Ster'cus, gen. Ster'coris, Excrement, Fimus—s. Anseris, Fimus anseris—s. Caninum album, Album Græcum—s. Diaboli, Assafoetida—s. Equi non castrati, Fimus.

STER'CUS HUMA'NUM, Homerda. Human excrement.

STER'CUS LACER'TÆ, Crocodilia.

Sterelmin'tha, (stereus, 'solid,' and ἄλμυς, ἄλμυς, 'a worm.') A class of solid worms, as the bothriocephalus, tænia solium, &c., found in the human intestines and other organs.

Stereocys'tis, gen. Stereocys'tidis, (stereus, and κύστις, 'cyst.') A hard encysted tumor.

Stereoscope, Stereoscop'ium, (stereus, and σκοπεω, 'I view.') A physical instrument, by means of which plane pictures of an object are made on each retina, and so blended as to appear as one in relief.

Also, an instrument for detecting a calculus in the bladder, and foreign bodies in the soft parts. It resembles a common catheter, having an expanded free extremity.

Stereot'ica, (from stereus.) Fortuitous lesions or deformities affecting the hard parts. The 2d order, class Tychica of Good.

Ste'reus, (στερεός.) Solid.

Ster'ile, Ster'ilis, Ag'onos, Aph'orus, Aphor'icus, Ablast'es, Infecun'dus, Barren, (F.) Stérile, (from στερρος, 'barren.') Not producing fruit; infecund.

Ster'ilis, Sterile.

Steril'itas, Agon'ia, Steiro'sis, Stiro'sis, Agenn'e'sis, Agenn'e'sis, Infecun'ditas, Steril'ity, Acye'sis, Bar'renness, Infecun'dity, Apho'ria, Atec'nia, Atoc'ia, (F.) Stérilitéé. Quality of that which is barren. Sterility may be absolute or relative. The former depends upon some vicious conformation of the genital organs, apparent or concealed, and occasionally admits of cure. Sterility is relative when a female does not conceive with one individual, but does with another. Sterility in females is often dependent upon a condition of the uterus characterized by membranous menstruation.

Ster'nad, see Sternal.

Ster'nal, Sterna'lis, (from sternum.) Relating or appertaining to the sternum or breastbone.

STER'NAL AS'PECT. The aspect of the body where the sternum is situate. (Barclay.) Sternad is used by the same writer adverbially to signify towards the sternal aspect.

STER'NAL FORA'MEN. An orifice occasionally seen between the third and fourth pieces of the gladiolus or second bone of the sternum, from arrest of development.

Sternal'gia, Sternodyn'ia, (sterno, and αλγος, 'pain.') Pain referred to the sternum. Angina pectoris.

Ster'no, in composition, the sternum.

Sternoclavic'ular, Sternoclavicula'ris. That which relates to the sternum and clavicle.

STERNOCLAVIC'ULAR ARTICULA'TION is the union of the inner extremity of the clavicle with a round facette at each side of the superior extremity of the sternum. In this articulation there are, besides the incrusting cartilages, two radiated sternoclavic'ular, (F.) Sterno-clavicula'ires rayonnées, one anterior and one posterior; an interclavic'ular ligament extending between the two clavicles, and two synovial capsules, separated by an interartic'ular fibrocartilage. The costoclavic'ular ligament may also be considered to belong to this articulation.

Sternoclaviomastoïdien, Sternocleidomastoi'deus—s. Cleidobrachialis, Pectoralis major—s. Cleidohyoideus, Sternohyoideus.

Ster'noclei'domastoïde'us, Sternomastoïde'us, Clei'domastoïde'us, Mastoïde'us, M. ant'e'rior, Nuta'tor cap'itis, (F.) Sternoclaviomastoïdien, Sternomastoïdien, (sterno, κλεις, 'the clavicle,' and μαστος, 'the mastoid process.') A muscle situate at the anterior and lateral part of the neck. It is long and flattened; simple, above; and divided into two portions below, where it is inserted into the anterior and superior part of the sternum, and the inner quarter of the clavicle. Above, it terminates at the mastoid process, which it embraces, at the neighboring part of the temporal bone, and at the outer third of the upper curved line of the occipital bone. It carries the head forward; inclines, and rotates it to one side. When both contract, they bend the head directly forwards.

Sternocostal, Triangularis sterni—s. Costoclavio-huméral, Pectoralis major—s. Huméral, Pectoralis major.

Sternodyn'ia, (sterno, and ὄδυνη, 'pain,') Sternalgia—s. Syncopalis, Angina pectoris—s. Syncoptica et Palpitans, Angina pectoris.

Sternohyoïde'us, Sternocleidohyoïde'us, Sternohyoïdes, Hyoïdes pri'mus, (F.) Cleidohyoïdien, (from στερρον, 'the sternum,' and ὑοιδής, 'the os hyoides.') A muscle situate at the anterior part of the neck; inserted, above, at the inferior edge of the body of the hyoid bone; below, into the upper part of the posterior surface of the sternum,—at the posterior part of the sternoclavic'ular articulation, and sometimes into the cartilage of the first rib. It depresses the os hyoides.

Sternomastoïdien, Sternocleidomastoïdeus—s. Pubien, Rectus abdominis.

Sternoomphalodym'ia, (sterno, ομφαλος, 'navel,' and δύω, 'I mingle,') see Somatodymia.

Sternopa'gia, (sterno, and παγω, 'I fasten.') A monstrous union of fœtuses, in which they are attached at the sternum.

Sternothyroïde'us, Sternothyroïdes, Bron'chius. A muscle situate at the anterior part of the neck. It is attached, above, to the oblique line seen on the outer surface of the thyroid cartilage; and terminates, below, at the upper part of the posterior surface of the sternum, and the cartilage of the second rib. When it contracts, it depresses the thyroid cartilage and os hyoides by the medium of the thyrohyoid membrane.

Ster'num, Ster'non, (στερρον, from στερρος, 'solid,') Pec'tus, Os ac'ser seu pec'toris seu xiphoides seu gladi'oli seu ensifor'me, Scut'um cor'dis seu pec'toris, Breastbone, Hæ'mal Spine of Owen. An azygous symmetrical bone, situate at the forepart of the chest. It is flat; broad above; narrower in the middle; and terminates, below, by a pointed cartilage—the xiphoid. It has an anterior or cutaneous surface, a posterior or mediastinal—a superior or clavicular extremity, and an inferior or abdominal. It is articulated with the clavicles and the seven upper ribs on each side, by means of their cartilages. In the adult, it is divided into three parts,—the manubrium; the body—gladiolus, mucro; and the inferior part or point, ensiform process, processus ensiformis, (F.) appendice sternal, a. xiphoides ou ensiforme. According to Bécclard, it is formed of six principal bones, which he names, from their position, 1. Primi-sternal or clavi-sternal: 2. Duo-sternal: 3. Tri-sternal: 4. Quarti-sternal: 5. Quinti-sternal: 6. Ultimi-sternal or Ensi-sternal.

Sternumen'tum, (sternuo, sternutum, 'I sneeze,') Sneezing.

Sternutamento'ria, (sternuto, sternutatum, 'I sneeze,') Achillea ptarmica.

Sternutamen'tum, Sneezing.

Sternuta'tio, Sneezing.

Sternutatoire, Sternutatory.

Ster'nutatory, Sternutato'rius, Ster'nutory, Sternutamen'tum, Errhi'num, Ptar'micum, Anar-rhi'num, (F.) Sternutatoire. A substance which provokes sneezing; as tobacco, &c. See Errhine.

Ster'nutory, Sternutatory.

Sterteur, Stertor.

Ster'tor, gen. Sterto'ris, Ron'chus, Rhon'chus, Ren'chus, Rhen'chus, (F.) Sterteur, Ronflement, (stertere, 'to snore,') The deep snoring which accompanies inspiration in some diseases, particularly in apoplexy. Such respiration is said to be ster'torous, (F.) Sterto'reux; Respira'tio ster-tuo'sa seu stertens seu stertoro'sa.

Ster'torous, see Stertor.

Stethæ'mia, Hyperæ'mia Pulmo'num seu Pec'toris, Congestio Pulmo'num seu Pec'toris, (F.) Hyperémie ou Congestion des Poumons, (from stetho, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Hyperæmia of the lungs. Congestion or accumulation of blood in the pulmonary vessels.

Steth'o, (from στήθος, 'chest,') in composition, 'the chest.'

Stethocathar'sis, (stetho, and καθάρσις, 'a purging,') Expectoration.

Stethoch'ysis, (stetho, and χύω, 'I pour out,') Hydrothorax.

Stethodes'mis, (stetho, and ἑσπας, 'a bandage,') Corset.

Stethodes'mium, Corset.

Stethodes'mus, Corset.

Stethom'eter, (stetho, and μετρον, 'measure,') An instrument, proposed by Dr. Richard Quain, for measuring the extent of movement of the walls of the chest, as a means of diagnosis in thoracic diseases. It consists of a flat case, not unlike a watch-case, having on its upper surface a graduated dial and index, which is acted on by a simple mechanism. A silk cord, long enough to surround one-half the chest, passes through an aperture in the case. The dial is graduated into fifty equal parts, each of which represents the 1-200th of an inch. In using the instrument, the dial is placed firmly against the spine, and the point of the tape over the sternum, or at any other spot according to the part to be examined. The extension of the string, as indicated by the dial, shows the amount of elasticity of the parietes of the thorax. See Chestmeasurer.

Under the name thoracom'eter or chestmeas-urer, Dr. Sibson has described an instrument of his invention, which is employed with a similar view as the stethometer of Dr. Quain.

Stethoparal'ysis, Paral'ysis nervo'rum thora-cis, phrenico'rum, &c.; (stetho, and παράλυσις, 'paral'ysis,') Palsy of the muscles of the chest.

Stethorrheu'ma, gen. Stethorrhœu'matis, (stetho, and ῥευμα, 'defluxion,') rheumatism, 'Pleurodynia.

Steth'oscope, Stethoscop'ium, Stethos'copum, Echoscop'ium, Psophom'eter, Thoracoscop'ium, (stetho, and σκοπεω, 'I examine,') An instrument invented by Laënnec, of Paris, for exploring the chest. The stethoscope, sometimes called Pec- toriloque, is a cylinder of wood, from four inches to a foot long; pierced through and through by a longitudinal canal about a quarter of an inch in diameter. The longer ones are generally composed of two portions, that fit together by means of a screw, one of which is hollowed at the extremity, in the shape of a funnel. These two portions being screwed to each other, the physician lays hold of the instrument, as he would of a pen, puts the funnel-shaped extremity on the chest of the patient, and applies his ear to the other. To explore the pulsations of the heart, the funnel is plugged up by a piece of the same kind of wood accurately adapted to it, and pierced by a canal of the same width as that in the body of the instrument. Stethoscopes are now made in the plainest and lightest manner, and without any plug. Double or binau'ral stethoscopes have, likewise, been invented to enable both ears to be used at the same time.

Stethoscopes are sometimes flexible, like the flexible ear-trumpet.

This mode of examining affections of the chest, Steth'oscopy, Stethoscop'ia, &c., is what Laënnec terms Auscultation médiate, Me'diate Ausculta-tion.

Stethoscop'ia, see Auscultation and Stetho-scope.

Stethoscop'ic, Stethoscop'icus, (F.) Stéthosco-pique. Furnished by stethoscopy or auscultation, as a 'stethoscopic sign.'

Steth'oscopy, see Stethoscope.

Ste'thus, (στήθος,) Thorax.

Stew, ([old F.] estuve, [Sax.] stēpa,) Stove.

Sthen'a, Sthen'ia, Diath'esis sthen'ica, Sta'tus sthen'icus, Vis auc'ta, (σθένος, 'strength,') 'power,') Excess of strength; excitement of the organic actions. A word used especially by the Brunonians, as well as Asthenia, its antitheton. Sthenic or dynamic diseases are such as depend upon excessive excitement.

Sthen'ic, Active.

Sthen'icus, (from σθένος, 'strength,') Active.

Stên'ique, see Active.

Sthenop'ya, (from σθένος, 'strength,' and πυρ, 'fever,') see Synocha.

Sti'an, ([Sax.] stāgend, from stāgan, 'to ascend,') 'to rise,') Hordeolum.

Stib'i, (στίβι,) Antimonium.

Stibial'is, Antimonial.

Stib'ialism, Stibialis'mus, (from stibium, 'anti-mony,') The aggregate phenomena produced by antimonials when given in large quantities—antimonial intoxication or poisoning.

Stibia'tus Tar'tras Lixiv'iæ, Antimonium tartarizatum.

Stib'ii Buty'rum, Antimonium muriatum—s. Deutomurias sublimatus, Antimonium muria-tum—s. Hydrosulphuretum rubrum, Antimonii sulphuretum rubrum—s. Oxidum acido muriatico oxygenato paratum, Algaroth—s. Submurias præcipitando paratum, Algaroth—s. Sulphurati hydrosulphuretum rubrum, Antimonii sulphuretum rubrum—s. Sulphuretum nigrum, Antimonium—s. Vitrum, Antimonii vitrum—s. et Potassæ deutotartaras, Antimonium tartarizatum.

Stibioder'mic, see Unguentum antimonii.

Stibio'sum Hydrosulphure'tum cum Sul-phurē, Antimonii sulphuretum præcipitatum — s. Oxidum, Antimonium diaphoreticum.

Stib'ium, Antimonium.

Sti'chas (Stoechas) Arab'ica, Lavandula stoechas.

Stick'wort, Agrimony.

Stic'tapulmona'cea, (from στικτός, 'spotted,') Lichen pulmonarius.

Stiff joint, Mus'cular, Contractura.

Stiff joints, Milk-sickness.

Stiff neck, Torticollis.

Stifle Joint. The femoro-tibial articulation of cattle.

Stigh, Hordeolum.

Stig'ma, (στίγμα, 'a small puncture,') Cicatri-cula.

Stig'mata, (pl. of stigma,) see Nævus and Pecthiæ. The breathing pores of insects are so called.

Stig'mata Ovario'rum, Cicatri'ces Ovario'rum. The cicatrices left in the ovary after the escape of ova.

Stilbo'ma, gen. Stilbo'matis, (στίλβωμα, from στίλβω, 'I make shining,') Cosmetic.

Stilet, (dim. of stilus,) Specillum.

Still, (from stilla,) Alembic.

Still Layer of Poiseuille, Space of Poiseuille.

A thin stratum of liquid in contact with the capillary vessels, in which the white corpuscles of the blood seem to be retarded, while the red corpuscles are hurried along in the centre of the current.

Still'a, Gutta.

Stilla'tio San'guinis e Na'ribus, (stillare, stillatum, 'to drop,') Epistaxis.

Still'birth, see Stillborn.

Still'born, Na'tus Mor'tuus, Par'tus Emor'tuus, (F.) Mort-né. Born still or lifeless; dead born; a stillborn child, Necrotoc'ion; stillbirth.

Stillicid'ium, Substil'ium, (stilla, 'a drop, and cedere, 'to fall,') This term is often used synonymously with Strangury. It means the flow of any liquid—particularly the urine—drop by drop. Also, a kind of embrocation, Stillicid'ium su'pra par'tem, effected by dropping a liquid upon a part.

STILICID'ium LACRYMA'rum, Epiphora — s. Narium, Coryza — s. Sanguinis e naribus, Epistaxis — s. Supra partem, see Stillicidium — s. Urinæ, see Stillicidium.

Stillin'gia, (after Dr. Benj. Stillingfleet, an English botanist,) S. sylvatica, Queen's root, Queen's delight, Yaw root, Mar'cory, Cockup hat. An indigenous plant, which grows in pine barrens, from Virginia to Florida. Sex. Syst. Monœcia, Monadelphia. Nat. Ord. Euphorbiaceæ. The root — Stillingia, Ph. U. S. — is said to be used in syphilis, obstinate cutaneous affections, &c., like sarsaparilla.

Stil'us, Stylus.

Stimato'sis, Stymato'sis, Hæmorrhag'ia Pe'nis, Stymatorrhag'ia, Phallorrhag'ia, Caulorrhag'ia, (from στυμα, 'priapism,' itself from στυναι, 'to erect,' and osis,) Hemorrhage from the male organ, accompanied or not with priapism.

Stim'mi, (στίμμη,) Antimonium.

Stim'ulant, Stim'ulans, Ex'citans, In'citans, Incent'ium, Irritans, Exci'tant, Incit'ant, Hypersthen'ic, Pyretogenet'ic, (from stimulare, 'to goad,') A medicine which has the power of exciting the organic action of the different systems of the economy. Some stimulants are diffusible — that is, have a prompt but temporary action; others are permanent or persistent. The action of stimulants is called stimulation, stimulatio, incitatio.

The chief stimulants are the following: Æther Sulphuricus, Ammonia, Assafoetida, Brucia, Camphora, Capsicum, Castoreum, Cinnamomum, Co-paiba, Cubeba, Guaiacum, Hydrargyri Præpa- rata, Iodinium, Nux Vomica, Olea Essentialia, Opium (in small dose), Piper, Sinapis, Strychnia, Zingiber — Alcohol, Caloric, Electricity, Mental Emotions (the Impetuous).

Stim'ulus, 'a goad,') Incitamen'tum, Irrita'men, Irritamen'tum, Poten'tia Irritans. Anything which excites the animal economy.

Stine, Hordeolum.

Stinge. A variety of urticaria affecting the mouth and nose of cattle in hot weather.

Stink'poke, Dracontium fœtidum — s. Weed, Chenopodium anthelminticum, Datura stramonium, Polanisia graveolens.

Stipa'tio, (stipare, stipatum, 'to stop up,') Stegnosis.

STIPA'TIO TE'LÆ CELLULO'SÆ INFAN'TUM. Induration of the cellular tissue of children.

Stiro'sis, (στειρωσις, from στερος, 'sterile,' and osis,) Sterilitas.

Stitch, (same root as stick — [Sax.] stican, 'to pierce,') (Sc.) Stomd, (Prov.) Dag, (F.) Point, (L.) Punctum. An acute lancinating pain, like that produced by the puncture of a sharp needle.

STITCH, COM'MON, Suture, common — s. Loop, see Suture — s. Royal, see Suture — s. in the Side, Pleurodynia.

Stizolo'bium, (στιζω, 'I prick,' and λοβιον, 'a small pod,') Dolichos pruriens.

Stlen'gis, (σπλεγγίς,) Strigil.

Stobæ'a Rubricaul'is, (after Dr. Stobæus, of Sweden, a patron of Linnaeus.) A South African plant, Nat. Ord. Compositæ. A tincture of the bruised roots is diuretic, and of great service in gravel.

Stock'ing, Elas'tic, see Stocking, laced — s. Gum, see Stocking, laced.

STOCK'ING, LACED, Elas'tic or Gum Stock'ing, (F.) Bas lassé. A bandage used by surgeons, which consists of a stocking made of firm cloth or dogskin, admitting of being tightly laced anteriorly. It is made, also, of elastic gum cloth. It is employed in varices and ulcers of the legs.

Stœ'chas Arab'ica, (στοιχας,) Lavandula stœchas.

Stœchiol'ogy, Stœchiolog'ia, (F.) Stœchiologie, (στοιχειον, 'element,' and λογος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on, or the theory of, elements; hence of the elementary parts of organized substances.

Stoichei'on, (στοιχειον,) Element.

Stokes, Disease of, see Exophthalmia.

Sto'ma, gen. Sto'matis, (στομα, gen. στοματος,) Mouth.

Fœtor of the mouth with a bloody discharge from the gums. See Cancer aquaticus. Also, Scurvy.

STOMAC'ACÉ, Porphyra nautica — s. Gangræno-sum, Cancer aquaticus — s. Universale, Purpura hæmorrhagica.

Stomacal, Stomachal.

Stom'ach, (στομαχος,) Stom'achus, Ventric'ulus, Nedys, Anocœ'lia, Gas'ter, Gluttu'patens, Mac, (of animals,) (Sc.) Kyte, Pechan, (F.) Estomac, (from stoma,) One of the principal organs of digestion. It is a musculo-membranous reservoir; continuous, on the one side, with the œsophagus; on the other, with the duodenum. It is situate beneath the diaphragm, between the liver and the spleen; and occupies the epigastrium and a part of the left hypochondrium. In it the food is formed into chyme. When viewed externally, the stomach has: 1. An ante'rior face, which looks a little upwards. 2. An infe'rior face, directed downwards. 3. An inferior or colic margin, which is convex and extensive, and is called the greater curvature, curvatu'ra ma'jor, (F.) Grand courbure.

It gives origin to the omentum majus. 4. A superior or diaphragmatic mar'gin, which is shorter, concave, and is called the lesser curvature, curvatura mi'nor, (F.) Petit courbure. The lesser omentum is attached to this. 5. A left or oesophageal orifice, called, also, the cardia, Os ventriculi or upper orifice. 6. A right or intestinal or inferior orifice, called the pylorus. 7. A considerable dilatation, situate to the left of the cardia and greater curvature — the great tuberosity or great cul-de-sac or fundus or splenic portion, saccus cæcus of the stomach; fundus seu saccus ventriculi, pars seu portio lienalis. 8. A less extensive dilatation, situate to the right of the greater curvature, — the lesser tuberosity or lesser cul-de-sac, antrum pylori seu pyloricum, pars seu portio pylorica, Pyloric por'tion, Antrum pyloricum. The inner surface of the stomach is of a reddish-white color, and has a marbled appearance. It is constantly covered by thick mucus and is lined by a mucous membrane, which presents numerous wrinkles or rugæ. The parietes of the stomach consist of three membranes in superposition. The outermost is serous, and is an extension of the peritoneum. The middle coat is muscular, — some of its fibres running longitudinally; others, transversely, and others obliquely. The innermost membrane is of a mucous nature, Crusta villosa ventriculi, Gastromyodesis, but not exactly a continuation of the membrane that lines the oesophagus. The mucous and muscular membranes form, at the pylorus, a valve, called the Pyloric valve. These three coats are united by a dense, close, areolar membrane; and, between the mucous and muscular coats, along the two curvatures especially, is a quantity of muciparous glands, called Glands of Brunner. The Matrix is the fibrous network uniting the cylindrical tubes of the stomach, and also surrounding the intestinal tubes. The arteries of the stomach are very numerous, and proceed from the coronaria ventriculi, the pyloric, splenic, and right and left gastroepiploic. The veins have the same name, and pursue the same course as the arteries. They pour their blood into the trunk of the vena porta. Its lymphatic vessels are very numerous, and pass into ganglia, situate along the two curvatures. The nerves of the stomach proceed from the pneumogastric, and three divisions of the coeliac plexus.

STOM'ACH-PUMP, Gastrenchyta, Antlia gastrica, (F.) Pompe pour l'estomac. A useful instrument for conveying fluids to the stomach when deglutition is impracticable, and for pumping out the contents of that organ. It consists of a forcing syringe, to the bottom and nozzle of which flexible tubes can be attached. When the object is to force fluids into the stomach, the stomach tube must be attached to the nozzle, and passed down the throat, — the tube connected with the bottom of the syringe being placed in the fluid to be injected. To empty the stomach, the stomach tube must be attached to the bottom of the instrument. This instrument has been of great service where poisons have been taken. The antidote, when any exists, and is at hand, should be promptly administered, if it is capable of at once neutralizing the poison.

The stomach-pump was first employed in America by Dr. Physick, in the year 1812.

Stom'achal, Stomach'ic, Stomach'ical, Cardi'

acus, (στομαχος), Stomach'icus, Stomacha'lis, Viscera'lis, (F.) Stomacal, Stomachique. That which belongs to the stomach; that which is good for the stomach; which strengthens the stomach. A medicine that gives tone to the stomach.

Stomachal'gia, (stomach, and αλγος, 'pain.') Cardialgia.

Stom'achi Resolu'tio, 'weakness of stomach,' Dyspepsia.

Stomach'ic, Stomachal.

Stomach'ical, Stomachal.

Stomachique, Stomachal.

Stom'achus, (στομαχος, from stoma.) This word has been used in several different acceptations; for example, for the oesophagus, for the cardiac orifice of the stomach (see Cardia), and for the stomach itself. Hippocrates calls the neck of the bladder στομαχος κυστιως; and the neck of the uterus της μητρας στομαχος.

Stomal'gia, Stomatal'gia, Stomatodyn'ia, (stoma, and αλγος, 'pain.') Pain in the mouth.

Stomap'ya, (stoma, and πυρ, 'fire, fever.') Aphthæ — s. Aphtha, Aphthæ.

Stomatal'gia, (stoma, and αλγος, 'pain.') Stomalgia.

Stomatel'cia, Stomateleco'sis, (stoma, and ελκος, 'an ulcer.') Ulceration of the mouth.

Stomat'ia, Stomatopathi'a, (from stoma.) Disease of the mouth.

Stomat'ic, (στοματικός), Stomat'icus, (F.) Stomatique. A medicine used in diseases, &c., of the mouth. Dentifrices, masticatories, &c., are stomatics.

Stomati'tis, gen. Stomati'tidis, (stoma, and itis), (F.) Inflammation de la Bouche. Inflammation of the mouth.

STOMATI'TIS, APH'THOUS, S. follicular or ulcerous or parasitic, Em'phlysis Aph'tha, A. Adultor'um, (F.) Stomatite, S. aphtheuse ou folliculeuse ou ulcéreuse ou diphthéritique ou gangréneuse ou pseudomembraneuse. An inflammation of the follicles of the mouth, constituting the aphthæ of the adult, which is generally accompanied by cephalic, gastric, and general disturbance. It may be either discrete or confluent, and requires general and local treatment, adapted to the case. See Aphthæ.

STOMATI'TIS CATARRHA'LIS. Catarrhal inflammation of the mucous membrane of the mouth.

STOMATI'TIS CREMO'SA, Aphthæ.

STOMATI'TIS DIPH'THERICA. Diphtheritic inflammation of the mouth.

STOMATI'TIS, ERYTHEM'ATOUS. Simple inflammation of the mouth.

STOMATI'TIS EXSUDATI'VA, Aphthæ — s. Follicular, S. aphthous — s. Gangrenosa, Cancer aquaticus — s. Gangrenous, Cancer aquaticus — s. Materna, Stomatitis of nursing women.

Stomatogas'tric, Stomatogas'tricus, Stomatogas'tric, Stomogas'tricus, (stoma, and γαστήρ, 'the stomach,') Appertaining to the mouth and stomach; as the stomatogastric ganglia of the lower animals. See Encephalon.

Stomatomala'cia Pu'trida, (stoma, and μαλακία, 'softness,') Cancer aquaticus.

Stomatonecro'sis, (stoma, and νεκρωσις, 'death,') Cancer aquaticus, Stomacace.

Stomatono'ma, (stoma, and νομή, 'an eating ulcer,') Stomacace.

Stomatopa'nus, (stoma, and πᾶς, 'a glandular tumor,') Stomatophy'ma glandulo'sum, Pa'nus Fau'cium. Tumefaction of the glands of the mouth.

Stomatophy'ma, gen. Stomatophy'matis, (stoma, and φύμα, 'a swelling,') A swelling of the mouth.

Stomatophy'ma Glandulo'sum, Stomatopanus.

Stomatoplas'tic, Stomatoplas'ticus, (stoma, and πλάσσω, 'I form,') An epithet for the operation of forming a mouth where the aperture has been contracted from any cause—Stomatoplas'ty.

Stomatorrhag'ia, Stomatorrhæ'a, Hæmorrhag'ia o'ris seu fau'cium, San'guinis proflu'vium ex O'ri, Hæmorrhoi'des O'ris, Stomato'sis, Stomorrhag'ia, (F.) Hæmorrhagie buccale, (stoma, and ῥήγνμι, 'I break out,') Hemorrhage from the mouth.

Stomatorrhag'ia ALVEOLO'rum, Phatnorrhagia—s. Gingivarum, Ulorrhagia.

Stomatorrhæ'a, (stoma, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') Excessive flow of liquid from the mouth. See, also, Stomatorrhagia.

Stomatoscope, (stoma, and σκοπεω, 'I view,') Any instrument for keeping the mouth open, so as to permit the parts within to be inspected—Spec'ulum o'ris. Also, an instrument which, like the laryngoscope, is provided with a mirror to reflect light on the interior of the mouth.

Stomatosep'sis, (stoma, and σῆψις, 'putrefaction,') Cancer aquaticus.

Stomato'sis, (from stoma,) Stomatorrhagia.

Stomatospas'mus, (stoma, and spasmus,) Trismus.

Stomaty'phus, (stoma, and typhus,) Stomatitis, pseudomembranous.

Stomenceph'alus, Stomoccephalus.

Stomocceph'alus, Stomenceph'alus, (F.) Stomocéphale, Stomencéphale, (stoma, and κεφαλή, 'head,') A genus of monsters having two contiguous eyes, or a double eye occupying the median line; the nasal apparatus atrophied and forming a tube (trompe); the jaws rudimental; and the mouth imperfect or wanting. (I. G. St. Hilaire.)

Stomoman'ion, (stoma, 'face,' and μανός, 'thin' [?],) Platysma myoides.

Stomorrhag'ia, Stomatorrhagia.

Sto'rey's Worm Cakes. An empirical preparation formed of Calomel, Ḑj., Jalap, ʒj., Zingib., Ḑij., Sacch., ʒj., Cinnab. antim., q. s. to color them, Syrup. simpl., q. s. to make into cakes.

Stork'bill, Geranium maculatum, Erodium cicutarium.

Storks'bill, Erodium.

Stound, ([Ice.] stunde, 'to be in pain,') Stitch.

Stove, Æstua'rium, Stu'pha, (old French) Estuée; a Stew, [F.] Étuve. A limited space, warmed artificially, and in which the air is slowly renewed. It is used for drying various substances, as plants, extracts, conserves, &c., or for taking vapor baths. In this case the stew or stove is said to be wet or humid; in the opposite case it is said to be dry, (F.) sèche. The latter, which is used by the Turks, is the Py'ria, Pyriate'rium, Lacon'icum, Calida'rium or Calda'rium, Suda'tio concamera'ta, Turkish, Eastern, or Roman bath. In the true Turkish bath, however, the air of the bathing apartment is densely charged with vapor, which the so-called Turkish bath, of modern introduction here and elsewhere, is generally not. The former is their Tepida'rium or Vapora'rium, (which see.) These kinds of baths greatly excite the cutaneous transpiration, and are valuable agents in rheumatic and other affections.

Stoy's Med'icine for Hydropho'bia, see Anagallis.

Stra'bi, (στραβος,) see Strabismus.

Strabilis'mus, Strabismus.

Strabismom'eter, (strabismus, and μετρον, 'measure,') An instrument for measuring the linear deviation of a squinting eye.

Strabis'mus, (στραβισμός,) Strabilis'mus, Parop'sis Strabismus, (from στραβος, 'twisted; 'one who squints,') Strabos'itas, Loxophthal'mus, Disto'rio, Lus'citas, Il'los, Illo'sis, Il'o'sis, Helo'sis, Squint'ing, Squint, Crosseye, (Prov.) Doyle, Glee'ing, (Sc.) Skel'lie, Skee'ly, (F.) Strabisme, Vue louche, Louchement. Want of concordance of the optic axes. It may be dependent upon natural or acquired inequality in the action of the motor muscles of the eye; on a convulsive state of one of those muscles; a difference in the sensibility of the two eyes; or a cerebral affection. In the treatment, if the disease seems to depend upon an excess of strength in one of the motor muscles, we must endeavor to give tone to that which is too weak by placing before the eye a mask having a small aperture on the side to which it is necessary to direct the pupil; or by wearing glasses provided with a piece of looking-glass on the side to which the eye is viciously turned, so that the reflection may be inconvenient, and occasion the organ to be turned in an opposite direction; or by putting a black patch on the angle opposite to that to which the eye is turned. If owing to weakness, the organ must be strengthened by being exerted alone, and leaving the other at rest. If the disease be symptomatic of cerebral affection, attention must, of course, be directed to the latter.

Strabismus may be single, or affect one eye only, or double, affecting both eyes, and it may be conver'gent or diver'gent, that is, with the ball drawn towards the nose or away from it.

Those affected with strabismus are called Stra'bi, Strabo'nes, Strabo'ni, Streb'li, Il'i, Il'i-des, Squint'ers, Squint'eyed, (Sc.) Gleyed, (F.) Louches, Bigles. A slight deviation is generally called a Cast in the Eye, and, sometimes, a Cock-eye.

STRABIS'MUS, CONVER'GENT, see Strabismus—s. Divergent, see Strabismus—s. Double, see Strabismus—s. Single, see Strabismus.

Strabom'eter, (F.) Strabomètre. A graduated instrument devised for the purpose of measuring the degree of strabismus.

Strabo'nes, (στραβωνες,) see Strabismus.

Strabo'ni, see Strabismus.

Strabos'itas, Strabismus.

Strabot'omy, Strabotomy, (στραβος, 'one who squints,' and τομή, 'incision.') The operation for the removal of squinting by the division of the muscle or muscles that distort the eyeball. A Strabotomist is one who practises strabotomy.

Strae'death, see Death.

Strain, (σπρᾶγναι, [L.] stringere, [F.] estreindre, 'to constrict or squeeze,') Sprain.

STRAIN, Colare, (F.) couler. To pass decoctions, infusions, &c., forcibly through linen; also, to exert an effort. This is accomplished by fixing firmly the parts where the muscles to be exerted originate, in order that their full power may be developed.

Strain'ing, Nisus.

Straits of the Pel'vis, see Pelvis.

Stramoine, Datura stramonium.

Strangal'ides, (σπρᾶγγαλιδες,) pl. of strangalis, (from σπρᾶγγω, 'I compress,') Small, hard tumors, which form as in the breast when the milk does not find issue.

Stranga'lium, (σπρᾶγγαλιον,) Tubercle.

Stran'galis, gen. Stranga'lidis, (σπρᾶγγαλις,) Tubercle.

Strangalis'mus, (σπρᾶγγαλισμος,) Strangulation.

Stran'gers' Fe'ver, see Fever, strangers'.

Strangula'tio, (σπρᾶγγω, 'I compress,') Orthopnea, Strangulation—s. Uterina, Angone—s. Vulvæ, Hysteria.

Strangula'tio, Strangulatio, Pnix, Pnix'is, Pnix'os, Pnix'ma, Strangalis'mus, (F.) Étranglement, Strangulation. State of a part too closely constricted. Thus we say that there is strangulation of an intestinal hernia, when the opening that gives passage to the portion of protruded intestine seriously intercepts the continuity of the digestive canal. In Legal Medicine, it means the forcible obstruction of the air-passages, by a ligature or by the hand, for criminal purposes. See Suffocation.

Stran'gulator, see Lycoides.

Strangul'ion, Strangury.

Strangu'ria, Strangury—s. Cruenta, Cystorrhagia.

Strangurie, Strangury—s. Menstruelle, Dysmenorrhœa.

Strangu'rious. Affected with or of the nature of strangury.

Stran'gury, (σπρᾶγγουρία,) Strangu'ria, Paru'ria stillati'tia, Dysu'ria, Uri'næ Stillicid'ium seu Substil'ium, Strangul'ion, Strangul'ion, (F.) Strangurie, (σπρᾶγγω, 'to squeeze,' and οὐρον, 'urine,') Extreme difficulty in evacuating the urine, which issues only drop by drop, and is accompanied with heat, pain, tenesmus at the neck of the bladder, &c. See Ischuria, and Retention.

Stranx, (σπρᾶγγε,) Gutta.

Strap'ping, ([Sax.] ῥεποπ, 'a strap,') The dressing of ulcers by means of straps or strips of adhesive plaster, linen, &c. Also, the plaster thus applied.

STRAP'PING, WA'TER, see Water-dressing—s. Wet, see Water-dressing.

Strathpeffer, Min'eral Wa'ters of. A sulphuretted water, at Strathpeffer, a few miles west from Dingwall, in Ross-shire, Scotland. It contains sulphate of soda, sulphate of lime, chloride of sodium, sulphate of magnesia, and sulphohydric acid.

Stratio'tes, (σπρᾶτιωτης,) Achillea millefolium.

Strat'um Bacilla'tum seu Bacillo'sum seu Bacillo'rum, 'bacillary layer,' (from sternere, stratum, 'to spread out,') see Tunica Jacobi.

STRAT'UM BOWMAN'NI. The anterior elastic lamina of the cornea, between the proper cornea and the conjunctival epithelium, which, according to Bowman, aids the cornea in maintaining its exact curvature.

Straw'berry, ('strewberry,') Fragaria—s. Bush, Euonymus Americanus—s. Shrubby, Rubus arcticus.

STRAW'BERRY TONGUE. A characteristic appearance of the tongue in scarlatina, in which, after the clearing away of a thick white fur, the organ becomes preternaturally red and clean.

STRAW'BERRY TREE, Euonymus Americanus—s. Wild, Fragaria Virginiana.

Streak, Prim'itive, (from [Sax.] ῥεπice, 'a line,') Groove, primitive.

Streat'ham, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Streat-ham is a village near London. The waters are saline and cathartic.

Streb'li, (σπρᾶβλοι,) see Strabismus.

Streblo'sis, (σπρᾶβλος, 'twisted,') Luxation.

Strem'ma, gen. Strem'matis, (σπρᾶμμα,) Luxation, Sprain.

Strepito'sus Mor'bus seu Affec'tus, (F.) Maladie bruyante, 'noisy disease.' A kind of flatulent disease, said by Sorbait to be not uncommon in the Austrian Alps, in which emphysematous tumors form on different parts of the body,—accompanied by sonorous excretion of gas by the mouth and anus.

Strep'itus, (from strepere, strepitum, 'to make a noise,') Bruit—s. Aurium, 'noise of the ears,' Tinnitus aurium.

Stretch'ing, ([Sax.] ῥεπeccan, 'to stretch,') Pandiculation.

Stri'a Cor'nea. The superficial stratum of the tænia semicircularis.

STRi'A VASCULA'RIS. A vascular strip on the outer wall of the membranous canal of the labyrinth.

Stri'æ, (pl. of stria, 'a furrow,') see Vibices—s. Ciliares, Ciliary processes—s. Corneæ, Tænia semicircularis—s. Longitudinales Lancisii, see Corpus callosum—s. Medullares, see Processus teretes—s. Retinæ subjectæ ligamento ciliari, Halo signatus—s. Semilunares, Tænia semicircularis—s. Terminales, Tænia semicircularis—s. Transversales Willisii, see Corpus callosum.

Stri'ated, Stria'tus, (F.) Strié, (from stria, 'a channel or groove,') Marked with small channels or grooves, or with lines of another color.

Stri'ated Coat, see Artery—s. Muscular fibre, see Muscular fibre.

Stria'tus, (striare, striatum, 'to make grooves or furrows,') Cannellè, Grooved, Striated; see Corpora striata.

Stribili'go, gen. Stribili'ginis, Efflorescence.

Strictu'ra, Stricture—s. Ani, Stricture of the rectum—s. Intestini recti, Stricture of the rectum — s. Intestini recti spasmodica, Stricture of the rectum, spasmodic — s. Œsophagi, Dysphagia constricta — s. Œsophagi callosa, Dysphagia constricta — s. Œsophagi spasmodica, Œsophagismus — s. Stric'ture, Strictu'ra, (stringere, strictum, 'to draw tight,') Coarcta'tio, Stegno'sis, (F.) Rétrécissement. A diminution or contracted condition of some tube or duct, as the Œsophagus, rectum, urethra, &c. This must be dilated by appropriate bougies. Strictures may, also, occur in the intestines: they are unmanageable, with the exception of those of the rectum, which admit of topical applications.

Stric'ture, Car'diac, see Gastrostenosis — s. Fever, Rheumatism, urethral — s. of the Œsophagus, Dysphagia constricta — s. of the Pharynx, Dysphagia constricta.

Stric'ture of the Rec'tum, Strictu'ra A'ni seu Intesti'ni Rec'ti, Archostegno'ma, Rectostenosis, Euthyenterostenoma, Archostegno'sis, Archostenosis, Proctoœnclisis, Angusta'tio et Restric'tio intesti'ni rec'ti seu a'ni, Stenochoria intesti'ni, Proctostenosis organica, occurs organically, and is a very serious affection; being generally dependent upon scirrhus.

Stric'ture of the Rec'tum, Spasmod'ic, Strictu'ra Recti seu Intesti'ni Rec'ti spasmod'ica, Obstruc'tio Recti spas'tica. An affection occurring in the nervous especially, which subsides spontaneously, after a longer or shorter continuance. It may also be of chancreoid origin.

Stric'ture of the Stom'ach, Gastrostenosis, Coarcta'tio seu Strictu'ra ventriculi. See Gastrostenosis cardiaca, &c.

Stric'ture of the Ure'thra, Urethrostenosis — s. of the Urinary bladder, Cystostenochoria — s. Vesicæ urinariæ, Cystostenochoria.

Stricturot'omy, Urethrotomy.

Stri'dor Den'tium, 'grinding of the teeth,' Brygma.

Strié, Striated.

Stri'ga ('a furrow') Cartilagino'sa Cor'dis, Isthmus of the fossa ovalis.

Strig'is, Strig'ilis, (from stringere, 'to touch lightly,') Stlen'gis, Stelen'gis. A fleshbrush. Also, an instrument, anciently used in the baths, for scraping off the sweat. The process was called Strigilla'tio, Strigilla'tion.

Striped Mus'cular Fi'bre, see Muscular fibre.

Strobili'tes, (στροβιλίτης, from στροβίλος, strobilus, 'a cone of the pine,') Wine impregnated with the cones of the pine.

Stroem'ia, (after H. Stroem, a Norwegian naturalist,) Cadaba.

Stroke, Apoplec'tic, (from [Sax.] aprican, 'to strike,') An apoplectic seizure.

Stroke, Back, of the Heart, Impulse, Dia-tolic.

Stroke, Paralyt'ic. A sudden attack of encephalospinal paralysis.

Stroke, Wa'ter, see Hydrocephalus internus.

Stro'ma, gen. Stro'matis, Strag'ulum, Stramen'tum, (στρομα, 'a bed or couch,' from σπρῶννω, 'I spread out; I cover,') The bed or foundation texture of an organ, — as the stroma of the ovary. Applied, also, to the bed or base of any formation, — as the 'amorphous stroma' of serofulous formations.

Stro'ma, Intertu'bular, see Kidney.

Stro'mal, Stroma'lis, (from stroma.) Relating or appertaining to the stroma of an organ.

Strongle, Strongylus — s. Géant, Strongylus gigas.

Strongul'ion, Strangury.

Stron'gylus, (from στρογγυλος, 'round,') Hippocrates and others mean the As'caris lumbrici col'des by this term. The Strongylus gi'gas, Eustron'gylus gi'gas, As'caris viscera'lis seu rena'lis, Fusa'ria viscera'lis et rena'lis, (F.) Strongle, S. géant, is, however, distinct. It has an obtuse, flat head; mouth surrounded with six flattish papillæ; the whole bursa of the male truncated; the tail of the female rounded. It is sometimes met with, — five inches, a foot, a foot and a half, and even three feet long, and from two lines to half an inch in diameter. It is occasionally found in the human kidney; rarely in other viscera, and still more rarely in the intestinal tube. See Parasites.

STRON'GYLUS, (στρογγυλος,) Teres — s. Bronchialis, see Parasites — s. Longevinatus, see Parasites and Worms.

Stro'phos, (στροφος, from στρεφω, 'I twist,') Tormina.

Stroph'ule, Strophulus.

Stroph'ulus, Lichen'asis stroph'ulus, Ebulit'io, Exanthema seu Exor'mia stroph'ulus, Red Gum, Gum Rash, Red Gown, Tooth Rash, (F.) Strophule, Feux de dents. It consists of an eruption of red, or sometimes whitish pimples, White Gum, Milk-spots, occurring in early infancy, chiefly about the face, neck, and arms, surrounded by a reddish halo; or interrupted by irregular patches of cutaneous blush. All the varieties under this genus arise in consequence of the extreme vascularity and irritability of the skin at this period of life, when the constitution is liable to be disturbed by irritation, either in the alimentary canal, gums or other parts. None of these eruptions are of any importance, and no medical treatment is usually necessary. If the stomach seems at all disordered, a little rhubarb and magnesia may be administered occasionally. Willan and Bateman reckon five species, — Strophulus intertinctus, Red gum or gown; S. albidus, White gum; S. confertus, Rank red gum, Tooth rash; S. volaticus or Erythema volaticum, and S. candidus.

STROPH'ULUS PRURIGINOSUS is rather an obstinate form of lichen, with pruriginous papules, and should therefore be more properly termed Lichen pruriginosus.

STROPH'ULUS SYLVES'TRIS, Ignis sylvaticus — s. Volaticus, Ignis sylvaticus.

Stro'phus, (στροφος, from στρεφω, 'I twist,') Tormina.

Struc'tio, (from struere, structum, 'to build,') Structure.

Struc'tural, Structura'lis. Of or belonging to structure.

Struc'ture, Structu'ra, Struc'tio, Conforma'tio, Catasceu'e. The arrangement of the different tissues or organic elements of which animals and vegetables are composed. See Tissue.

Stru'ma, gen. Strumæ, Bronchocele, Scrofula — s. Follicular, Bronchocele.

STRU'MA ADIPO'SA, Obes'itas col'li. Fatty neck. Prominence of the neck from obesity.

STRU'MA FUNGO'SA, Encephaloid.

Strumes, Scrofula.

Strumeux, Scrofulous.

Strumo'sis Cer'ebri, Encephalophymata — s. Pulmonum, Tubercles of the lungs.

Strumo'sus, Scrofulous.

Stru'mous, Scrofulous.

Struthioph'agus, (στρούθιον, 'a young ostrich,' and φαγω, 'I eat,') Struthiophagous tribes still exist in some parts of Africa.

Stru'thium, (στρούθιον,) Saponaria.

Strych'nia, (from strychnos,) Strychni'na, Strych'nine, Strych'nin, Strychni'num, Strych'nium, Teta'nium, Vauque'tin, Tet'anin. An alkaline principle; solid, crystalline, inodorous, bitter, and excessively poisonous, which has been found in Strych'nos nux vom'ica, S. Colubri'na, S. Tieuté, Ignat'ia ama'ra, Cer'bera Theve'tia, and C. Aho'vai. (Nucis vomicae rasur., $\frac{3}{4}$ xlviij., Calceis pulv., $\frac{3}{4}$ vj., Acid. muriat., $\frac{3}{4}$ ijss., Alcohol., Alcohol. dilut., Acid. sulphuric. dil., Aque ammoniac., Carbon. animal. purif., Aque, $\frac{3}{4}$ q. s. Macerate the nux vomica in two gallons of water, acidulated with one-third of the muriatic acid, for 24 hours; then boil for two hours, and strain with expression through a strong muslin bag. Boil the residue twice successively in the same quantity of acidulated water, each time straining as before. Mix the decoctions, and evaporate to the consistence of thin syrup; then add the lime, previously mixed with a pint of water, and boil for ten minutes, frequently stirring. Pour the whole into a double muslin bag, and having washed the precipitate well with water, press, dry, and powder it. Treat the powder repeatedly with diluted alcohol, in order to remove the brucia, until the washings are but faintly reddened by nitric acid. Then boil it repeatedly with alcohol until deprived of bitterness, mix the several tinctures, and distil off the alcohol by means of a water-bath. Having washed the residue, mix it with a pint of water, and applying a gentle heat, drop in sufficient diluted sulphuric acid to neutralize and dissolve the strychnia; then add purified animal charcoal; boil for a few minutes, filter, evaporate, and crystallize. Dissolve the crystals in water, and add sufficient water of ammonia to precipitate the strychnia. Lastly, dry the precipitate on bibulous paper. Ph. U. S., 1873.) The action—therapeutical and toxic—of strychnia on man and animals is exactly like that of the alcoholic extract of nux vomica. It is, however, more active. An eighth of a grain is sufficient to kill a large dog; and a quarter of a grain produces marked effects on the human body, when in health. It has been given in paralysis and other cases like nux vomica. Dose, one-sixteenth to one-twelfth of a grain. See Poisons, table of.

STRYCH'NIA, AC'ETATE OF, Strychniæ acetat.

STRYCH'NIA, AR'SENITE OF. A soluble salt employed in intermittent fever in the minimum dose of the sulphate.

STRYCH'NIA, BRO'MIDE OF, Strychniæ bromidum—s. Hydriodate of, Strychniæ hydriodas—s. Iodate of, Strychniæ iodas—s. Iodide of, Strychniæ hydriodas.

STRYCH'NIA, I'ODIDE OF IODHY'DRATE OF, (F.) Iodure d'Iodhydrate de Strychnine, is made by pouring a solution of ioduretted iodide of potassium into a solution of a salt of strychnia, treating the precipitate with boiling alcohol, and crystallizing. Used in the same cases as strychnia. Dose, a tenth to a sixth of a grain.

STRYCH'NIA, MU'RIATE OF, Strychniæ murias—s. Nitrate of, Strychniæ nitras—s. Sulphate of, Strychniæ sulphas.

STRYCH'NIA AND ZINC, DOUBLE I'ODIDE OF, Zinc and strychnia, double iodide of.

Strych'niæ Ace'tas, Strychnium seu Strychninum aceticum, Acet'as strychnii seu strychnicus, Ac'etate of strychnia or strychnine. (This salt is formed by the direct combination of strychnia with acetic acid.) It is given in the same cases as pure strychnia.

STRYCH'NIA BRO'MIDUM, Bromide of Strychnia. Prepared by a process analogous to that for bromide of quinia. It is prescribed in syrup, each drachm of which contains gr. $\frac{3}{4}$ of strychnia.

STRYCH'NIA HYDRI'ODAS, S.Iodhy'dras, Strychnium hydroiodicum, Hydri'odas seu Iodhy'dras strychnicus, Hydri'odate or I'odide of strychnia, is prepared by mixing a solution of iodide of potassium with a concentrated solution of acetate of strychnia.

STRYCH'NIA I'ODAS, Strychni'ne I'odas, Strychni'na ioda'ta, Strychnium seu Strychninum Iod'icum, I'odas Strychnii seu Strychnicus, Iodate of

Strych'nia or Strych'nine. (This salt may be formed by adding a concentrated solution of iodic acid to strychnia, treating with boiling alcohol, filtering, and leaving it to spontaneous evaporation.)

STRYCH'NIA MU'RIAS, Muriate of Strychnia. (The product of the union of muriatic acid and strychnia.) Used in the same cases as strychnia.

Liquor Strych'niæ, Solution of Strych'nia, (Ph. B., 1867,) is composed of Strychnia, gr. iv., Acid. hydrochlor. dil., $\frac{3}{4}$ vj., Sp. rectific., $\frac{3}{4}$ ij., Aq. destillat., $\frac{3}{4}$ vj. Dose, gtt. iv.—viij.

STRYCH'NIA NI'TRAS, Strychnium Nitricum, Nitrate of strychnia or strychnine, (F.) Nitrate ou Azotate de strychnine. (The product of the union of nitric acid and strychnia.) Used in the same cases as strychnia.

STRYCH'NIA SUL'PHAS, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Strychnium sulphuricum, Sulphate of strychnia or strychnine, (F.) Sulfate de strychnine. (This product of the union of strychnia and dilute sulphuric acid was admitted into the Ph. U. S. for 1863.) It is the salt of strychnia usually prescribed.

Strychni'na, Strychnia.

Strych'nine, Strychnia—s. Azotate of, Strychniæ nitras—s. Sulphate of, Strychniæ sulphas.

Strychni'num, Strychnia.

Strych'nism, see Strychnos nux vomica.

Strych'nium, Strychnia—s. Aceticum, Strychniæ acetat—s. Nitricum, Strychniæ nitras—s. Sulphuricum, Strychniæ sulphas.

Strychnoma'nia. With the ancients, the delirium caused by the Strychnos or Atropa belladonna.

Strych'nos, (στροχνος), Atropa belladonna, Solanum dulcamara—s. Colubrina, see Strychnia and Strychnos nux vomica—s. Guianensis, see Curare—s. Ignatii, Ignatia amara.

STRYCH'NOS NUX VOM'ICA, Nux Vomica, Metel'la, Caninum, Kooch'la tree. Nat. Ord. Loganiaceæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. (F.) Vomiquier. A tree of the family Strychnoides, which grows in India, and the seeds of which have been long sold in the shops, under the names Nux Vom'ica, Vom'ic or Poison nut, Bachelor's buttons, &c., (F.) Noix vomique. For a long time, these seeds were used only for poisoning rats, but subsequently an alcoholic extract was prepared from them, which was administered in paralytic affections, in small doses. The dose of the ALCOHOL'IC EXTRACT, Extractum nucis vomicæ spirituosum seu nucis vomicæ resinorum seu nucis vomicæ alcoholicum (Ph. U. S., 1863) seu nucis vomicæ, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) (F.) Extrait alcoolique de noix vomique, is half a grain to two grains. It produces a kind of tetanic convulsion in the paralyzed parts, when given to the requisite extent. It has also been administered in chronic diarrhoea and dysentery. When taken to such an extent as to induce toxic phenomena—Strychnism—it causes at first, or when given in a smaller dose, greatly augmented excitability of the spinal nervous system, with slight transient paroxysms or spasms of the limbs, and hurried respiration. In larger doses, the excitability is still more developed, with paroxysms of prolonged general tetanic convulsions, laryngismus or contraction of the glottis, violent efforts of respiration, and asphyxia. The most important principles obtained from it are strychnia and brucia. Igasuria has also been derived from it. See Strychnia, Bruca, Igasuria.

The following is the formula for the preparation of the EXTRACTUM NUCIS VOMICÆ of the Ph. U. S., (1873,) Alcoholic Extract of Nux Vomica. Take of Nux vomica, in fine powder, $\frac{3}{4}$ xij., Alcohol, a sufficient quantity. Mix the nux vomica with four fluidounces of alcohol, and allow the mixture to stand for an hour. Then introduce it into a cylindrical percolator, and gradually pour alcohol upon it until the tincture passes without bitterness. Distil off the alcohol, by means of a water-bath, until the tincture is reduced to half a pint, and evaporate this to the proper consistence.

The bark is the false angustura or false cusparia bark; Rohun. See Brucea antidysenterica.

The wood of STRYCHNOS COLUBRINA, Modira caniram, an Indian tree which contains strychnia, was formerly considered a specific against the bites of venomous animals, and was recommended by Boerhaave in intermittents. It is the Lignum Colubrinum, (F.) Bois de Coleuvre.

Under the names strychny, and strychnos, different kinds of nightshade are described by Dioscorides.

STRYCHNOS PORATORUM, 'strychnos of drinkers,' Clear'ing nut. The fruit of a large tree of Silhet, which, when ripe, is sold in the markets of India, and has been introduced into those of London, under the name Nirmullees or Nirmillies. One of them is well rubbed for a minute or two around the inside of a vessel containing water, which it purifies by causing the impurities which the fluid contains to be deposited, it is supposed, by its albumen and casein.

STRYCHNOS PSEUDOQUINA, Quina do Campo, of Brazil, is used by the natives as a substitute for cinchona.

Stuffing, Cynanche trachealis, Filling.

Stultit'ia, Fatuitas.

Stump, ([G.] Stumpf, [D.] Stomp,) (F.) Moignon. The part remaining from which a limb or other part has been amputated or removed in any manner. Also, the portion of a tooth remaining in the alveolus, after the corona has been removed, (F.) Chicot.

Stump'foot, Kyllosis.

Stunned, ([old French] Estonné, Étonné, [L.] attonitus, 'astonished,' [Sax.] ŕuman, 'to stun,') An epithet applied to one who, in consequence of a fall or other accident, has received such a concussion of the brain as to deprive him, for a time, of his mental manifestations.

Stupa, (stupa,) Stupa, Stuppa, Stupe'on. Tow, used in certain surgical apparatuses and dressings, (F.) Étoupe. Also, a Stupe, that is, cloth or tow used in fomentations. A flannel or other article wrung out of hot water, plain or medicated, applied to a part, is a stupe. The act of applying such stupe is called stu'ping.

Stupe, Stupa.

Stupefacien'tia, (stupere, 'to be benumbed,' and facere, 'to make,') Narcotics.

Stupefactifs, Narcotics.

Stupefac'tio, Narcosis.

Stupefants, Narcotics.

Stupe'on, (stupa,) Stupa.

Stupid'itas, (from stupere, 'to be benumbed,') Idiotism, Imbecility.

Stu'ping, see Stupe.

Stu'por, (stupere, 'to be benumbed,') Eplex'is, Eplex'ia, Consterna'tio, (Sc.) Swarf, Swerf, (F.) Stupeur. Diminished activity of the intellectual faculties, often amounting to lethargy. It occurs in many affections, especially in the neuroses.

Stu'por, Narcosis — s. Artuum, Obdormitio — s. Dentium, Hæmodia — s. Formicans, Formication — s. Mentis, Fatuitas — s. Vigilans, Catalepsy.

Stup'pa, (stupa,) Stupa.

Stupa'tion, Stuprum.

Stuprum, Rape, Stupa'tion, (F.) Défloration, Viol. Forcible and illicit connection with a married or unmarried woman. When committed upon the latter, which is most commonly the case, it is also called Deflora'tion, Deflora'tio, Devirgina'tio, Vitia'tio, Apanthis'mus, &c. In judging whether rape has been committed under such circumstances, the state of the genital organs, the age of the individual, and the possibility of accidents and diseases of the parts, will have to be considered. It will be necessary, also, to be acquainted with the evidences of virginity; and to determine, — if signs of virginity no longer exist, — whether its loss be attributable to copulation, or to the introduction into the vagina of any other body than the male organ, &c. Recent deflowering can, of course, be much more readily distinguished than that which has taken place some time. Rape almost always includes the idea of violence, while sexual intercourse with persons in an unconscious condition, or with idiots or insane persons, is, at times, separated from rape, and reckoned as violation.

Stur'dy, ([F.] Étourdi, [old F.] Estourdi, 'gid-dy,') see Cœnurus.

Stut'tering, ([D.] stotteren, 'to stutter,' formed by onomatopœia,) Balbuties.

Sty'an, ([Sax.] ŕigenð, from ŕigan, 'to ascend, to rise,') Hordeolum.

Stye, Hordeolum.

Stygmates. M. J. Cloquet has proposed this word, or Stigmates, (from stigma, pl. stigmata, 'a mark,') to designate the marks, in form of cicatrices, which remain on the peritoneum after the obliteration of the neck of a hernial sac. They are, commonly, radiated folds, of a whitish appearance, more or less thick, and of a fibrous or fibrocartilaginous nature.

Stylet', (from stylus,) see Specillum.

Sty'li, (pl. of stylus,) Styloid processes.

Styliens (Muscles), see Bouquet anatomique de Riolan.

Sty'liform, (stylus, and forma, 'shape,') Styloid.

Stylis'cus, (from stylus,) Tent.

Sty'lo, (from στυλος, 'a style,') in composition, the styloid process of the temporal bone.

Stylocer'atohyoide'us, Stylohyoideus — s. Ceratoides, Stylohyoideus.

Stylochon'drohyoide'us. A name given by Douglas and Albinus to a fleshy fasciculus which the stylohyoid muscle sometimes presents, and which is attached to the lesser cornu of the os hyoides. It is the same fasciculus which Santorini calls Stylohyoïdes no'vus, Stylohyoideus alter.

Styloglos'sus. A muscle situate at the anterior and superior part of the neck. It is narrow behind, much broader before; is attached to the styloid process of the temporal bone, and to the stylomaxillary ligament; and is inserted into the side of the tongue. It raises the base of the tongue and carries it backwards.

Stylohyoide'us, Stylocer'atohyoide'us, Styloceratoïdes, Stylohyoïdes major, (F.) Stylohyoidien. A muscle situate at the superior, anterior, and lateral part of the neck. It is thin and narrow, — especially posteriorly; anteriorly, it opens to give passage to the tendon of the digastricus. It is attached to the styloid process of the temporal bone, and to the body of the os hyoides. It raises the os hyoides, and carries it backwards.

STYLOHYOID LIGAMENT is a fibrous flattened cord, which passes from the styloid process to the lesser cornu of the os hyoides.

STYLOHYOID NERVE is the second branch given off by the facial.

Styloid, Styliform, (στυλοειδής,) Styloides, Graphioides, Graphoides, Graphiodes, Graphiodes, Belonoides, (from στυλος, 'a style,' 'a peg,' 'a pin,' and ειδός, 'shape,') Shaped like a peg or pin.

STYLOID COR'NUA, see Hyoides os.

STYLOID PROC'ESSES, Pencil-like Proc'esses, Processus Belonides seu Belemnoides seu Belonoides seu Graphioides seu Graphoides, Styli, are, 1. A long and slender process of the temporal bone, to which are attached the styloglossus, stylopharyngeus, and stylohyoid muscles, and the stylohyoid and stylomaxillary ligaments. This sometimes remains distinct in many animals, and is then called the styloid bone, (F.) or styloiden. 2. Two slender and pyramidal processes at the inferior extremities of the radius and ulna.

Stylomas'toid, Stylomastoides. That which relates to the styloid and mastoid processes.

STYLOMAS'TOID ARTERY, Arteria Stylomastoides, arises from the posterior auricular, and, in some subjects, from the occipital. It enters the stylomastoid foramen; passes along the aqueduct of Fallopius, and spreads its ramifications on the mucous membrane of the tympanum, and in the mastoid cells and semicircular canals; and terminates by anastomosing with a branch of the Arteria meningea media, which enters by the Hiatus Fallopii. Murray has given the name—Stylomastoid—to the posterior auricular artery itself.

STYLOMAS'TOID FORA'MEN, Foramen Stylomastoides seu Aqueductus Fallopii, (F.) Trou anonyme, is situate at the inferior surface of the petrous portion of the temporal bone, between the styloid and mastoid processes. It terminates the aqueduct of Fallopius, and gives passage to the facial nerve.

Stylomax'illary, Stylomaxillaris. That which relates to the styloid processes and the jaw.

STYLOMAX'ILLARY LIG'AMENT. A ligamentous, flat cord, extending between the styloid process and the angle of the jaw.

Stylopharynge'us, Levator seu Dilatator pharyngis, L. pharyngis exte'rior, (F.) Stylothyropharyngien. A muscle situate at the anterior and lateral part of the neck. It is slender; thin above; attached to the styloid process of the temporal bone, and terminates in the parietes of the pharynx, as well as at the posterior margin of the thyroid cartilage. It raises the pharynx and carries it backwards. Professor Chaussier has united, under the name Stylo-pharyngien, the three constrictor muscles of the pharynx, the stylopharyngeus, and palatopharyngeus.

Styloph'orum Diphyl'lum, (στυλος, 'a style,' and φερω, 'I bear,') Meconop'sis diphyl'la, Chelidonium diphyl'lum, Celandine or Hornpop'py, Bruiseroot. An indigenous plant, of the family Papaveraceæ, growing from western Pennsylvania to Wisconsin, which flowers from May to August. The juice is fetid and narcotic. Infused in wine, it has been given internally in gravel; and has been applied externally to contusions, &c.

Stylostix'is, (stylus, 'a style,' and στιξ, 'the act of puncturing,') Acupuncture.

Stylo-thyro-pharyngien, Stylopharyngeus.

Stylus, (στυλος, 'a stake, a style,') Stilus, Sound.

STYLUS EXCAVATUS, Specillum excavatum. A hollow sound.

Sty'ma, gen. Sty'matis, (στυμα, from στυειν, 'to stiffen,') Erection, Priapismus.

Stymato'sis, (from styma, and osis,) Stimatosi.

Stym'mata, pl. of stym'ma, (στυμμα, gen. στυμματος, 'that which constricts or thickens,') The most solid ointments. Also, the ingredients proper for increasing their consistence.

Styp'sis, (στυψις,) Astriction, Constipation.

Styp'teria, (στυπτηρια,) Alumen, Styptics.

Styp'tic, (στυπτικός,) see Styptics.

STYP'TIC, BINEL'LI'S, Aqua Binellii—s. Brocchieri's, Aqua Brocchieri—s. Colloid, see Colloid.

STYP'TIC, EATON'S. A name first given to Helvetius's Styptic, when introduced into Great Britain. It is now usually made of calcined green vitriol, $\frac{3j}$, proof spirit, tinged with a little oak bark, Oij .

STYP'TIC, HELVE'TIUS'S, see Ferrum tartarizatum, and Styptic, Eaton's—s. Pagliari's, Hæmostatic, Pagliari's.

STYP'TIC, RUSPI'NI'S, Li'quor Stypticus Ruspi'ni. A nostrum, said to consist of Gallie acid, a small quantity of Sulphate of zinc, and Opium, dissolved in a mixture of Alcohol and Rose-water, which has had much reputation as an internal and external astringent.

Styp'tics, Contrahen'tia, Constricti'va Medica'men'ta, Constrin'gentia, Anastaltica, Catastaltica, Styp'teria, (F.) Styptiques, (στυπτικά, from στυψω, 'I constringe,') Sometimes used synonymously with astringent, but generally applied to a substance employed to arrest hemorrhage,—Enn'mon. A mechanical styptic is one that arrests the flow of blood, by being applied immediately to the mouth of the bleeding vessel, or by inducing a coagulum, mechanically, in it. A chemical styptic is one which coagulates, chemically, the blood around a bleeding orifice.

Styrac'inum O'leum. Oil obtained by boiling storax in good olive oil.

Styrax, gen. Styracis, (στυραξ, gen. στυρακος,) A resin obtained from Styrax officinalis, and S. calami'ta. It is the solid storax;—offic'inal storax. There are two kinds of storax met with: 1. Red Sto'rax, Gum Storax, Thus Judæo'rum, Styrax ru'bra, Styracis bal'samum, Bal'samum styracis officinalis, which is obtained by incision from the Styrax officinalis, and perhaps from the Liquidambar Orientale. The purest is in tears; but it has lost some of its smell in drying. 2. Common Storax, Styrax calami'ta. That which has been received in reeds or vessels, and has had sawdust added immediately to thicken it. The odor of storax is fragrant; the taste aromatic. It is considered, like the other balsams, to be stimulant and expectorant, but is rarely used long.

Purified Storax, S. colata seu purificata, S. præparata seu præparatus, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Extractum styracis, is storax purified by means of rectified spirit and straining. Dose, gr. x. to xxx.

Sty'sis, (στυσις,) Erection, Priapismus.

Suave'olens, (suavis, 'sweet,' and olens, 'smelling,') Beneolens.

Sua'via, pl. of sua'vium, (from suavis, 'sweet,') see Kiss.

Sub (L.), in composition, 'beneath,' or 'a lower degree.' Before c it becomes suc; before f, suf; before g, sug; before p, sup; before r, sur; and before s, sus. In some words, however, it is su, as in suspiro. The French sous, as a prefix, has the same signification.

Subac'idus, Acidulous.

Subac'tio, Chiro'sis, Cheiro'sis, (subigo, subactum,—sub, and ago,—'I subject, I prepare,') The operation of making plasters, extracts, &c., with the hand, or with the pestle and mortar.

Subaffec'tio, Hydrophathia.

Subagita'trix, gen. Subagitatri'cis, (sub, and agitare, 'to agitate,') Tribade.

Subarach'no'id, (sub, and arachnoid,) Subarachnoid'ean, 'under the arachnoid membrane.' A term applied to various spaces situate between this membrane and different nervous structures, — anterior, posterior, superior, and spinal subarachnoid spaces. The fluid filling these spaces is called the subarachnoid or cerebro-spinal fluid.

Subatloide'us, Infraatloideus, (F.) Sousatloïdien. That which is situate beneath the atlas or first cervical vertebra. Chaussier has given this name to the second pair of cervical nerves.

Subaxoide'us, Infraaxoideus, (F.) Sousaxoïdien. That which is below the axis or vertebra dentata. Chaussier has given this name to the third pair of cervical nerves.

Subazo'tas (gen. Subazota'tis) Bismu'thicus, Bismuth, subnitrate of.

Subbo'ras (gen. Subbora'tis) Na'tricum, Borax.

Subcartilagin'eum, (sub, and cartilago, 'cartilage,') Hypochondre.

Subchlo'ris (gen. Subchlo'ridis) Cal'cicus, Calceis chloridum.

Subcla'vian, Subcla'vius, Subclavicula'ris, (F.) Sousclavier, (sub, and clavis, 'clavicle,') That which is under the clavicle.

SUBCLA'VIAN ARTERIES, (F.) Artères sousclavières, are situate at the upper part of the chest, and the lateral and lower parts of the neck. The right arises at the corresponding side of the trachea, and comes off from the arteria innominata or brachiocephalic trunk. The left leaves the aorta at the end of the arch. Both extend as far as the superior surface of the first rib, in the space between the scaleni muscles, beyond which they take the name axillary arteries. The subclavian arteries run, for some distance, without sending off any branch. In the neighborhood of the first rib, however, they give off—1. Upwards, the vertebral and inferior thyroideal. 2. Downwards, the internal mammary and superior intercostal. 3. Outwards, the transverse cervical or posterior scapular, the superior scapular, and the posterior cervical or profunda.

SUBCLA'VIAN OR SUBCLA'VIUS MUS'CLE, Subclavi'us, (F.) Costo-claviculaire (Ch.), Sous-clavier, is situate at the superior and anterior part of the chest. It is attached, by its inner extremity, to the superior surface of the cartilage of the first rib, and by its superior margin and outer extremity to the inferior surface of the clavicle. This muscle depresses the clavicle, and carries it forward. When the shoulder is fixed, it can raise the first rib.

SUBCLA'VIAN VEINS, (F.) Veines sous-clavières, are continuations of the axillary, and extend from the inferior extremity of the scalenus anticus, in front of which they pass, to the vena cava superior, which they form by their union. The right subclavian vein is very short, the left longer and broader. These veins receive the mouths of the internal and external jugulars, vertebral and superior intercostal. The left subclavian receives two veins more than the right—the left internal mammary and left inferior thyroideal. The thoracic duct opens into the left subclavian, the corresponding great lymphatic vessel into the right.

Subclavic'ula, (sub, and clavicula, 'clavicle,') The first rib.

Subclavicula'ris, Subclavian.

Subcla'vius, Subclavian muscle.

Subcor'acoid, 'under the coracoid process,' as the subcoracoid dislocation of the humerus.

Subcrep'itant, (sub, and crepitant,) see Râle muqueux.

Suberuen'tus, 'somewhat bloody,' (sub, and eruentus, 'bloody,') Hyphemos. That which has the color and nature of blood. An epithet given to certain excreted substances, which are mixed with blood, or have the appearance of blood.

Suberuræ'i, see Cruralis.

Subcuta'neous, Subcuta'neus, (sub, and cutis, 'the skin,') Intercuta'neus, (F.) Sous-cutané. That which is placed immediately under the skin. See Hypodermic.

SUBCUTA'NEOUS SEC'TION, Hypodermatomy.

SUBCUTA'NEUS COL'LI, Superficialis colli—s. Malæ (nervus), Orbital nerve.

Subdelir'ium, Typhomania.

Sub'dita, Subditit'ia, (subdere,—sub, and dare, 'to give,'—'to put under,') Pros'theta. Medicines introduced into some one of the natural apertures—as suppositories, pessaries, &c.

Subditit'ia, Subdita.

Subduc'tio, (sub, and ducere, ductum, 'to lead,') Dejection.

Su'ber, gen. Su'beris, Cork—the bark of Quercus suber or Corktree, (F.) Liège. Family, Amentaceæ. Sex. Syst. Monœcia Polyandria. Cork, when burnt, is applied as a mechanical styptic to bleeding piles, &c. Surgeons use it for making tents, and it has been recommended to be worn as an amulet to suppress the secretion of milk!

Su'beth, Coma.

Subfronta'lis Sutu'ra, (sub, and frons, gen. frontis, 'the forehead,') A suture resulting from the articulation of the os frontis with the nasal process of the superior maxillary bone and the proper bones of the nose.

Subglossi'tis, (sub, and γλωσσα, 'the tongue,') An inflammatory condition of the lower surface of the tongue and the structures in immediate contact with it.

Subgrondation, Depression.

Subhumera'tio, (sub, and humerus, 'the shoulder,') Catomismus.

Subicu'lum Cor'nu Ammo'nis. The sigmoid convolution of the cornu.

Subigita'trix, gen. Subigitatri'cis, (sub, and agitare, 'to agitate,') Tribas.

Subinflamma'tio, Subinflammation—s. Hepatis, Hepatitis, chronic.

Subinflamma'tion, Subinflamma'tio, (sub, and inflammatio,) Inflammation'cula, Hypophlegma'sia. A mild degree of inflammation, so slight as hardly to deserve the name inflammation. Broussais understood by the term, an augmentation in the vital phenomena of the vessels that convey white blood. There are, however, no such vessels. Lymphatic engorgements, scrofula, herpes, and cancer be considered subinflammations.

Subintran'tes Fe'bres, (sub, and intrare, 'to enter,') Communican'tes fe'bres. Fevers primarily intermittent, whose paroxysms approximate, so that one paroxysm begins before that which preceded it has gone through its stages.

Subinvolu'tion. A condition of retarded or imperfect restoration of the uterus to its original dimensions after delivery.

Sub'ject, (subjicere, subjectum,—sub, and jacere,—'to place under,') Cadaver.

Sub'jective Sensa'tions, see Sensation.

Subjee, Bangue.

Subligac'ulum, (sub, and ligare, ligatum, 'to bind,') Truss.

Subligatu'ra, Truss.

Sub'limite, Corro'sive, Hydrargyri oxymurias.

Sublima'tio, Enæorema, Sublimation.

Sublima'tion, Sublima'tio, Meteoris'mus, Hypo'sis, (sublimare, sublimatum, 'to raise on high,') An operation by which dry and solid matters are volatilized and condensed at the upper part of a subliming apparatus. Calomel, sal ammoniac, &c., are commonly obtained by sublimation. The product of sublimation is a Sub'limite, Sublima'tum, (F.) Sublimé.

Sublima'tum Corro'sivum, Hydrargyri oxymurias.

Sublima'tus Corro'sivus, Hydrargyri oxymurias.

Sublime, Enæorema.

Sublime, Sublimis.

Sublime, see Sublimation — s. Corrosif, Hydrargyri oxyurias.

Subl'mis, (F.) Sublime, 'high, elevated, superficial.' Anatomists have given the name subl'mis to certain muscles which are situate more superficially than their kindred muscles. These last they have called profundi. Of the former, the flexor sublimis digitorum is an example.

The French use the term respiration sublime for the respiration which is accompanied by considerable elevation of the ribs, and with separation of the alae nasi at the time of inspiration.

Sublin'gua, (sub, 'a lower degree,' and lingua, 'tongue,') Uvula.

Sublin'gual, Sublingua'lis, (F.) Sous-lingual, (sub, and lingua, 'the tongue,') That which is seated under the tongue.

SUBLIN'GUAL AR'TERY, with some, is the Lin'gual. With others, it is a branch given off by the lingual opposite the genioglossus muscle, which is distributed particularly to the sublingual gland, to the mylohyoid, and genioglossus muscles, &c.

SUBLIN'GUAL GLAND, Glan'dula sublingua'lis seu lingua'lis Bartholinia'na seu Rivinia'na, is seated in the substance of the inferior paries of the mouth, beneath the anterior part of the tongue. It is smaller than the submaxillary, of which it frequently seems to be only a prolongation. It is oblong, flattened, amygdaloid, and is covered by the mucous membrane of the mouth, beneath which it projects. This gland has 10 or 12 excretory ducts — Ductus Rivinia'ni seu Waltheria'ni — some of which open beneath the frænum linguae, joining Wharton's duct, while others pierce the mucous membrane of the mouth separately. It has the same structure as the parotid.

Sublin'guum, Uvula.

Sublin'guum, Epiglottis.

Sublob'ular, Sublobula'ris, (sub, and lobulus, 'a little lobe,') That which is placed under a lobe.

SUBLOB'ULAR VEINS OF THE LIV'ER. The veins in which the intralobular veins terminate. By their union, the sublobular veins form the hepatic veins.

Subluxa'tio, (sub, and luxare, 'to dislocate,') Subluxa'tion. An imperfect luxation of a bone; see Luxation. Not unfrequently, used for a sprain.

Submam'mary, Submammar'ius, (F.) Sous-mammaire, (sub, and mamma, 'the breast,') Under the mamma or breast; — hence, submammary inflammation, inflammation of the areolar tissue beneath the mamma.

Submax'illary, Submaxilla'ris, Inframaxilla'ris, (F.) Sous-maxillaire, (sub, and maxilla, 'the jaw,') That which is seated beneath the jaw.

SUBMAX'ILLARY GAN'GLION is a small nervous ganglion, situate opposite the gland. It seems to be formed by the superior branch of the Vidian nerve, and communicates with the lingual nerve of the inferior maxillary. Its filaments form a plexus which penetrates the submaxillary gland.

SUBMAX'ILLARY GLAND, Max'illary Gland, Glan'dula submaxilla'ris seu maxilla'ris seu angula'ris, Hypognath'aden, Hyposial'aden, is a salivary gland, less than the parotid, seated at the inner side of the ramus and body of the inferior maxillary bone, in the triangular space between the two bellies of the digastricus. Irregularly ovoid, and flattened on three surfaces, it has the same aspect and organization as the other salivary glands. Its excretory duct is called Wharton's Duct, Ductus Whartonia'nus seu submaxilla'ris, and terminates at the side of the frænum linguae, by a very small orifice. It is called Ductus infe'rior.

Submen'tal, Submenta'lis, (F.) Sous-mental, (sub, and mentum, 'the chin,') Situate under the chin.

SUBMEN'TAL AR'TERY is furnished by the facial, near the base of the jaw. It passes forwards along the attachment of the mylohyoideus, to which it furnishes branches that cross it to anastomose with those of the sublingual. Near the median line it bifurcates, to be distributed to the chin and muscles of the infrahyoid region.

SUBMEN'TAL VEIN, which accompanies the artery, opens into the labial.

Submer'sion, Submer'sio, (sub, and mergere, mersum, 'to plunge,') The act of plunging, or being entirely plunged, in a liquid.

Asphyxia by submersion, A. Immerso'rum, Drowning, is not owing to a certain quantity of liquid being introduced into the alimentary or air-passages, but simply to the interception of air, and of the respiratory phenomena. It is a case of suffocation, the signs of which, on dissection, are equivocal, without circumstantial evidence.

Submis'sio, (sub, and mittere, missum, 'to send,') Remission — s. Cordis, Systole.

Submu'cous, Submuc'o'sus, (sub, and mucus,) Under a mucous membrane, — as the 'submucous areolar tissue.'

Submu'rias (gen. Submuriat'is) Ammoni'aco-hydrargyr'icus, Hydrargyrum præcipitatum.

Submus'cular, Submuscula'ris, (sub, and musculus, 'a muscle,') Seated beneath muscles or a muscular layer.

Suboccip'ital, Suboccipita'lis, (F.) Sous-occipital, (sub, and occiput,) That which is situate under the occiput.

SUBOCCIP'ITAL NERVE, Occipital nerve.

Subor'bitar, Suborbita'rius, Infraör'bitar, Infraör'bita'lis, Infraör'bita'rius, (F.) Sous-orbitaire, (sub, and orbita, 'the orbit,') That which is seated beneath the orbital cavity.

SUBOR'BITAR AR'TERY, Arte'ria Suborbita'ria, Infraör'bitar Ar'tery, proceeds from the internal maxillary, from which it separates near the anterior and superior part of the zygomatic fossa. It enters the infraorbital canal, and passes through it, giving branches to the anterior and superior dental canal; issues by the foramen infraorbitarium; and divides, in the fossa canina, into a number of branches, which lose themselves in the neighboring parts. The infraörbitar vein follows the same course.

SUBOR'BITAR CANAL, Infraör'bitar Canal, (F.) Canal ou Conduit sous-orbitaire, is a small canal, which runs obliquely through the substance of the inferior paries of the orbit. It begins, behind, by a simple gutter, and divides, anteriorly, into two branches, one of which descends into the anterior paries of the maxillary sinus, while the other passes out, in the canine fossa, by an orifice, called Fora'men infraör'bita'rium, (F.) Trou sous-orbitaire. The infraörbitar artery and nerve pass along it.

SUBOR'BITAR FIS'SURE, Infraör'bitar Fis'sure, Fissu'ra infraör'bita'lis, Ri'ma cana'lis orbita'rii. A fissure in the superior maxillary bone: the superior commencement of the suborbitar canal.

SUBOR'BITAR FOS'SA, Canine fossa.

SUBOR'BITAR NERVES, Infraör'bitar Nerves, seem to terminate the superior maxillary. They issue from the infraörbitar canal by the foramen of the same name, and spread out in a radiated manner in the fossa canina, to divide into superior or palpebral filaments, inferior or labial, internal or nasal, and external or buccal.

Subperitone'al, Subperitonea'lis, (sub, and peritoneum,) That which lies under the peritoneum.

SUBPERITONE'AL APONEURO'SIS, Fascia, subperitoneal — s. Ganglia, see Spermatic ganglion — s. Inflammation, see Parametritis.

Subplacen'ta, Decidua membrana.

Subpleur'al, Subpleura'lis, (sub, and pleura,) Situate under the pleura.

Subpoplitæ'us, Popliteus muscle.

Subpu'bic Arch, Ar'cus subpu'bicus, (sub, and pubis.) A strong arch of the superior pelvic aponeurosis, which completes the posterior orifice of the obturator or subpubic canal.

SUBPU'BIC MEM'BRANE, Obturator membrane.

Subpubiofemora'lis, Adductor brevis—s. Prostaticus, Compressor prostatae.

Subpu'tris, (sub, and putris, 'putrid,') Hypo-saprus.

Subscap'ular, Subscapula'ris, (F.) Sous-scapulaire, (sub, and scapula.) That which is beneath the scapula.

SUBSCAP'ULAR FOS'SA, Fos'sa subscapula'ris. A considerable excavation at the anterior surface or venter of the scapula, in which the subscapularis is seated.

SUBSCAP'ULAR MUS'CLE, Subscapula'ris Mus'cle, Immer'sus, Infrascapula'ris, (F.) Sous-scapulo-trochinien, (Ch.) Porte-feuille, Muscle-sous-scapulaire. A muscle situate in the above-mentioned fossa. It is flat, broad, and triangular; is attached, by its base, to the subscapular fossa and to the anterior lip of the edge of the spine of the scapula, and is inserted into the lesser tuberosity of the humerus. It carries the arm in rotation inwards. It can also depress it, and bring it towards the body.

SUBSCAP'ULAR NERVES are two in number. One arises from the brachial plexus above the clavicle; the other from the posterior aspect of the plexus within the axilla. They are distributed to the subscapularis muscle.

Subse'rous, Subsero'sus, (sub, and serous.) Under a serous membrane,—as the subserous areolar tissue.

Subsiden'tia, (sub, and sedere, 'to settle,') Sediment.

Sub'stance, Æsthesod'ic, see Æsthesodic—s. Émaillée des Dents, Enamel of the teeth—s. Horny, see Tooth—s. Hyaline, Cytoblastema—s. Intercellular, Cytoblastema—s. Vitrée des Dents, Enamel of the teeth.

SUB'STANCE, WHITE, OF SCHWANN. A hollow cylinder within the tubular nervous fibre, which differs in composition and refracting power from the matter that occupies the centre of the tube.

Substan'tia Adaman'tina Den'tium, 'adamantine substance of the teeth,' Enamel—s. Cineritia, see Kidney—s. Cinerea gelatinosa, Substantia gelatinosa—s. Compacta, see Bone—s. Eburnea, see Tooth.

SUBSTANTIA FERRUGIN'EA, Lo'cus cine'reus. An ash-colored substance produced by the existence of well-marked pigmentary matter in the floor of the fourth ventricle or rhomboid fossa.

SUBSTANTIA FILAMENTO'SA DEN'TIUM, Enamel.

SUBSTANTIA FUS'CA, 'brown substance.' A name given to certain spots in the brain—also called Substantia nigra, &c.—which have a dark color from the presence of ganglion cells.

SUBSTANTIA GELATINO'SA seu CINE'REA GELATINO'SA. The translucent posterior portion of the posterior horns of the gray matter of the spinal cord; the remaining portion being called Substantia cine'rea vasculo'sa spongio'sa.

SUBSTANTIA GLOMERULO'SA, see Kidney—s. Grisea centralis, see Medulla spinalis—s. Hyalina, Cytoblastema—s. Interna, see Kidney—s. Nigra pedunculi, see Peduncles of the brain—s. Ossea dentium, see Tooth—s. Ostioidea, see Tooth—s. Perforata anterior, Locus perforatus anticus.

SUBSTANTIA PERFORATA ME'DIA. When the pia mater has been removed from the space between the crura cerebri, termed the intercrural or interpeduncular, the surface appears cribriform, from the perforations of the numerous minute vessels which penetrate it. This is the substantia perforata media of Vieq d'Azyr.

SUBSTANTIA PERFORATA POSTERIOR, see Tarini pons—s. Pulposa dentis, Dental pulp—s. Radiata, Stellula Verheyenii—s. Rhomboidea, Corpus dentatum—s. Rubicunda, see Kidney—s. Spongiosa, see Bone—s. Spongiosa urethrae, Corpus spongiosum urethrae—s. Stellata serpentina, Stellula Verheyenii—s. Vasculosa, see Kidney—s. Vitrea, Cytoblastema—s. Vitrea dentium, Enamel.

Sub'stative, Substanti'vus, (substare—sub, and stare,—'to stand under or subsist,') An epithet applied by Dr. Paris to aliments which are nutritious, in contradistinction to adjective aliments, which are themselves not possessed of nutritive virtues, but impart to the digestive organs greater energy, so as to enable them to extract more nutriment from the substantive aliments. Meat, for example, is a substantive aliment; the condiment, as mustard, eaten with it, an adjective aliment.

Substil'lum, (sub, and stilla, 'a drop,') Stillidium.

Sub'stituted Presenta'tion, see Presentation.

Sub'stitutive, Substituti'vus, (F.) Substitutif, (sub, and statuere, 'to place,') That may be substituted or put in place of another. An agent is said to be 'substitutive,' which—as in the case of nitrate of silver applied to inflammation of a mucous membrane—substitutes a temporary irritation for one tending to be more permanent. Such a mode of treatment is termed sub'stitutive medica'tion, (F.) Médication substitutive.

Subsul'tio, (subsilio, subsultum,—sub, and salio,—'I make short leaps,') Palpitation.

Subsul'tus (gen. Subsultus) Ten'dinum, Sal'tus ten'dinum, Olo'nus subsul'tus, Subsul'tus, Carpolog'ia spasmod'ica, Myopal'mus, Twitch'ing of the Ten'dons, (F.) Soubresaut des tendons. Twitching, communicated to the tendons by the involuntary and instantaneous contraction of the muscular fibres. It is more observable at the wrist than elsewhere, and is an evidence of great cerebral irritability and debility when it occurs at an advanced period of fever.

The muscular agitations or twitchings observed in febrile diseases, especially of children, have been termed Convulsibil'itas, Sclerotyr'bè febrilis, and Irritabil'itas morbo'sa.

Subsur'ditas, (sub, and surdus, 'deaf,') Deafness.

Subtroph'ic, Subtroph'icus, (sub, and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Relating or appertaining to defective nourishment or nutrition.

Subu'beres, (pl. of subu'ber,) (sub, and ubera, 'the breasts,') Infan'tes engen'tes, Suck'ing children. Infants at the breast, in contradistinction to Exuberes, απογαλακτοι, or those which have been weaned.

Subun'guial, Subun'guis, Subun'guicis, (F.) Sous-ungéale, (sub, and unguis, 'a nail,') Belonging to parts under the nail—as subunguial exostosis, (F.) Exostose sous-ungéale, an exostosis under the nail of the great toe especially.

Subver'sio Stom'achi, (sub, and vertere, ver-sum, 'to turn,') Vomiturition.

Subver'tebra, (sub, and vertebra,) Sacrum.

Subver'tebrum, Sacrum.

Sub'vola, (sub, and vola, 'the palm of the hand,') Hypothenar.

Suc, Succus—s. de Citron, see Citrus medica—s. Gastrique, Gastric juice—s. Intestinal, Succus entericus—s. de Kino, Kino—s. du Limon, see Citrus medica—s. Médullaire, Marrow—s. Musculaire, Muscle juice—s. Nourricier, Liquor sanguinis—s. Pancreatique, see Pancreas.

Suc, as a prefix, Sub.

Succa'go, gen. Succag'inis, (from succus,

'juice.') The inspissated juice of plants, robs, jellies, &c.

Succédané, Succedaneum.

Succeda'neum, Succida'neum, Substitu'tum, Antiballom'enium, Surroga'tum, Autemballom'e-num, Quid pro quo, (succedere, —suc, and cedere, —'to go under, to come in place of another,') (F.) Succédané. An epithet for medicines that may be substituted for others possessing similar properties. Also used, in dentistry, for an amalgam for filling teeth.

Succenturia'tus, (succenturiare, —suc, and centuria, —'to supply a soldier to fill a vacancy; and hence, 'to substitute or put in the room of,') That which is a substitute for another—as Renes succenturiati, Ventriculus succenturiatus, &c.

Suc'char, Saccharum.

Succida'neum, Succedaneum.

Succin, Succinum.

Suc'cinate of Ammo'nia, (F.) Succinate d'Ammoniaque, Sel volatil de Succin, is official in the French Codex (1866).

SUC'CI'NATE OF IRON, Iron, succinate of.

Succinotu'ra, (suc, and cingere, cinctum, 'to gird,') Diaphragm.

Succinc'tus, Diaphragm.

Suc'cini Resi'na, Musk, artificial.

Succin'ic or Suc'cinic Ac'id, Ac'idum Suc'cini, A. Succin'icum, A'cor Succin'eus, Sal Suc'cini, Sal volatilè Suc'cini, (F.) Acide Succinique, has been considered antispasmodic and diaphoretic, in the dose of from five to twenty grains.

Suc'cinum, Su'cinum, Elec'trum, Am'bra, Am'brum, Am'par, Beren'cè, Am'ber, Yel'low Am'ber, (F.) Succin, Ambre jaune, (from succus, 'juice,' because at one time supposed to exude from a tree.) This kind of fossil resin, which is found on the shores of the Baltic, is composed of a resinous matter, of essential oil, and an acid sui generis. It is inodorous, except when heated or rubbed; insipid; in fragments of a pale, golden-yellow color; transparent, and has a shining lustre. S. g. 1.08; insoluble in water, and slightly acted on by alcohol. It is used for affording its essential oil, obtained by destructive distillation—the O'leum Succini, (Ph. U. S.) Bal'samum Suc'cini, (F.) Huile de Succin. This oil possesses stimulant, antispasmodic, diuretic, and rubefacient properties.

The O'leum Suc'cini rectificat'um, Rectified Oil of Amber, is made as follows:—Oil of Amber, Oj., water, Ovj. Mix in a glass retort, and distil until Oiv. of the water have passed with the oil into the receiver; separate the oil from the water, and keep it in a well-stopped bottle. (Ph. U. S., 1873.) The French Codex (1866) also contains a volatile oil and spirit of amber, Esprit Volatil de Succin, and Huile Volatile de Succin.

The White am'ber, Leucolec'trum, (F.) Ambre blanc, is a variety.

SUC'CI'NUM CINE'REUM, Ambergris—s. Griseum, Ambergris.

Succion, Sucking.

Succi'sa, (from succidere, succisum, 'to cut,' from its indented appearance,) Scabiosa succisa—s. Pratensis, S. succisa.

Succocolla'ta, Chocolate.

Succolla'ta, Chocolate.

Suc'cory, Wild, Cichorium intybus, Chironia angularis.

Suc'cuba, see Succubus.

Suc'cubus, gen. Suc'cubus, (suc, and cubare, 'to lie,') Some authors have used this word synonymously with nightmare. Others mean by it, and by Suc'cuba, a female phantom, with which a man in his sleep may believe he has intercourse—as In'cubus has been applied to the male phantom, with which a female may dream she is similarly situate. See Incubus.

Suc'cus, Su'cus, Chy'lus, O'pos, Opis'ma, Chylis'ma, Ecchylo'ma, Apothlim'ma, Juice, (F.) Suc, Jus, (from sugere, suctum, 'to suck,') The fluid obtained by pressing plants, flesh, &c., Suc'cus expres'sus; Opolè (official), Opolide (magistral), according to Chéreau. The French Codex (1866) has formulæ for the preparation of several sucs. Succus is also applied to certain animal fluids, as S. Gastricus, &c.

SUC'CUS ACA'CIÆ GERMAN'ICÆ INSPISSA'TUS, see Prunus spinosa—s. Acaciæ nostratis, see Prunus spinosa—s. Arborum, Sap—s. Aurantii, see Citrus aurantium—s. Cicutæ spissatus, Extractum conii.

SUC'CUS CONI'I, Juice of Conium, J. of Hemlock. The last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873) directs that a convenient quantity of fresh conium leaves be thoroughly bruised, the juice pressed out, and one measure of alcohol added to every five measures of the juice.

Succus Tarax'aci, Juice of Dan'delion, is prepared by a similar process.

SUC'CUS CYRENA'ICUS, Laserpitium.

SUC'CUS ENTER'ICUS, S. Intestina'lis, Li'quor intestina'lis seu enter'icus, Intes'tinal or Enter'ic Juice or Fluid, (F.) Suc intestinal. The fluid copiously secreted from the lining membrane of the small intestines.

SUC'CUS EXPRES'SUS, Apothlimma—s. Gastricus, Gastric juice—s. Glycyrrhizæ, Extractum glycyrrhizæ—s. Hypocistidis, see Cytinus—s. Intestinalis, Succus entericus—s. Japonicus, Catechu—s. Limonis, see Citrus medica—s. Liquiritiæ, Extractum glycyrrhizæ—s. Muscularis, Muscle juice—s. Nervus, Nervous fluid—s. Nutritius, Chyle—s. Orni concretus, see Fraxinus ornus—s. Pancreaticus, see Pancreas.

SUC'CUS SCOPA'RII, Juice of Broom, (Ph. B., 1867,) is prepared by bruising 7 lbs. of fresh broom tops in a stone mortar, pressing out the juice, adding to every three measures of juice one of spirit; setting aside for seven days, and filtering. Dose, fʒj.—ij.

SUC'CUS SPISS'ATUS ACONI'TI NAPE'L'I, Extractum aconiti—s. Spissatus atropæ belladonnæ, Extractum belladonnæ—s. Spissatus conii maculati, Extractum cicutæ—s. Spissatus hyoscyami nigri, Extractum hyoscyami—s. Spissatus lactucæ sativæ, Extractum lactucæ—s. Taraxaci, see Succus conii—s. Thebaicus, Opium.

Succus'sion, Succus'sio, Hippocrat'ic Succus'sion, (succutio, succussum, —suc, and quatio, —'I shake from beneath,') A mode of ascertaining the existence of a fluid in the thorax (fluctuation by succussion), by giving the body one or more slight shakes.

Succus'sion, Ballottement.

Su'chor, Saccharum.

Su'cinum, Succinum.

Suck'ing, Suc'tio, Suc'tus, Bdal'sis, Myze'sis, (F.) Succion, (from sugere, suctum, 'to suck,') The act of drawing liquid into the mouth by forming a vacuum with the tongue acting as a piston, during inspiration.

SUCK'ING BOT'TLE. A bottle so formed that, when filled with milk, it can be sucked from instead of the breast.

SUCK'ING CHILD, Lactens. A suckling.

Suck'le, Lacta'rè, (F.) Allaiter ou Alaiter. To give suck. To nurse.

Suck'ling, Lactation, Lonicera periclymenum, Sucking child.

Sucre, Saccharum—s. Candi, Saccharum candidum—s. du Foie, see Saccharum—s. de Lait, Sugar of milk—s. de Saturne, Plumbi superacetat—s. Tors, Penidium.

Su'crose, (from sucro,) see Saccharum.

Suc'tio, (sugere, suctum, 'to suck,') Exsuctio, Sucking.

Suc'tion Pow'er. The force presumed to be exerted on the blood in the veins by the active dilatation of the heart. See Derivation.

Sucto'ria, (sugere, suctum, 'to suck.') Animals provided with mouths for sucking. Also, organs for sucking or adhesion; hence termed suctorial—as suctorial oscula.

Sucto'rial, see Suctoria.

Suc'tus, gen. Suc'tus, Sucking.

Suc'cus, gen. Suc'cus, Succus.

Sudam'ina, pl. of suda'men, Hydro'ata, Hidro'ta, Pap'ule sudora'les, Suffersu'rae, Alha'sef, Plan'ta noc'tis, Bo'a, (from sudor.) Small vesicles which appear upon the skin, especially in the summer time, in hot countries, and in diseases attended with much sweating, sweat vesicles. It is a miliary eruption. See Miliary fever.

SUDAM'INA, Desudatio, Echaubouluures, Lichen tropicus.

Suda'rium, Achicolum.

Suda'tio, Ephidrosis.

Sudatium'cula, (dim. of sudatio.) Ephidrosis.

Sudato'ire, Sudatory.

Sudato'ria, Hidrosis—s. Maligna, see Sudor Anglicus.

Sudato'rium, Achicolum.

Su'datory, Achicolum. As an adjective, (F.) Sudato'ire, anything that excites, or is accompanied by, sweating.

Su'dor, gen. Sudo'ris, Hi'dros, Mate'ria perspirato'ria, (F.) Sueur, 'sweat.' The product of cutaneous transpiration when visible on the surface of the body. It is colorless; of an odor more or less strong and variable; and of a saline taste. It is composed, according to Berzelius, of water, lactic acid, lactate of soda united with a little animal matter, chloride of sodium, and a little chloride of potassium, an atom of earthy phosphate, and some oxide of iron.

Su'dor, Miliary fever.

Su'DOR AN'GLICUS, S. Anglica'nus, Hidron'osus, Hidrop'gra, Hidropy'etus, Fe'bris seu Miliaris sudato'ria, Sudor miliaris, Mor'bus sudatorius, Ephem'era maligna seu sudato'ria seu Britan'nica seu Anglica pestilens, Pes'tis Britan'nica, Sudato'ria maligna, Sweat'ing Sick'ness, Sweat'ing Fe'ver, (F.) Suette, S. miliaire, S. épidémique, Sueur Anglaise. A very severe epidemic disease, characterized by profuse sweating, which appeared in England in 1486, and recurred at different times until about the middle of the sixteenth century. It was accompanied with coldness, excessive prostration of strength, palpitation, frequency and inequality of the pulse, &c., and terminated favorably or unfavorably in the course of 24 hours. The French have given the name SUETTE DE PICARDIE, Suette des Picards, Fièvre suante, Miliaris sudato'ria, Su'dor Picard'icus, to an epidemic disease, which has appeared several times in that province, the principal symptoms of which were profuse sweats and a miliary eruption. The disease recurred in 1821, and has been described at length by M. Rayer, who considers it to consist of a simultaneous state of inflammation of various tissues, and proposes to class it with variola, scarlatina, and measles.

A form of it in which the perspiration was of a black color was called Sudor Ang'licus nig'er, Melanephidro'sis, Black English sweating sickness or fever.

Su'DOR COLLIQUATI'VUS, S. profusus.

Su'DOR CRUEN'TUS, S. sanguin'eus, Hematidrosis, Hemathidrosis, Ephidro'sis cruen'ta, Hemor'rhag'ia per Cut'em, (F.) Hématidrose, Sueur de Sang, Sweating of blood, Bloody sweat, Hem'orrhage from the skin. Cutaneous perspiration intermixed with blood;—a very uncommon affection.

Su'DOR DUL'CIS, Saccharorrhœ'a cuta'nea, Ephi- dro'sis sacchara'ta. A discharge of saccharine matter by perspiration.

[?]) Death, or suspended animation from impeded respiration, whether caused by the inhalation of noxious gases, drowning, hanging, strangling, or smothering. The principal morbid appearances in such cases are: the lungs of a deep-blue color, with the blood extravasated in the air-cells; right auricle and ventricle more or less filled with dark blood, as well as the neighboring veins; lividity of the countenance, turgescence, and, perhaps, rupture of the vessels of the brain; left side of the heart containing much less blood. See Asphyxia.

Treatment of suspended animation by suffocation in general. The patient must be conveyed into a room not too warm. Bloodletting must be used, if at all, with caution;—friction must be employed with salt, or warm flannels; stimulating fluids, in a dilute state, be poured into the stomach by means of a tube, and attempts be made to inflate the lungs. Laryngotomy, if necessary.

For the treatment suggested by Dr. Marshall Hall, and by Dr. Silvester, see Ready method, and Silvester's method.

SUFFOCA'TION, Puigopho'bia, (F.) Étouffement, is used, as strangling is, for threatened suffocation. It means the state of dyspnoea and oppression experienced when a sufficient quantity of air does not enter the lungs, or when the chemical phenomena of respiration are imperfectly executed; as in cases of asthma.

Suffocation de Matrice, Hysteria — s. Uterine, Angone, Hysteria.

SUG'AR, MAGNET'IC, Saccharum Magnet'icum. A quack preparation, said to be composed of sugar and cannabis. It is given in nervous cases.

SUG'AR, MA'PLE, Saccharum acernum, see Acer saccharinum.

SUG'AR OF MILK, Saccharum lactis, Galactosaccharum, Lactose, Lactine or Lactin, (F.) Sucre de Lait, Sel de Lait, is obtained from whey by evaporation and crystallization; s. g. 1. It possesses the demulcent properties of the sugars.

SUG'AR, MUS'CLE, Inosite — s. Pine, see Arrowroot — s. Starch, Glucose — s. Urinary, Glucose — s. Various, see Saccharum.

Sug'arberry, Celtis occidentalis.

Sugarcoat'ed. Covered with a layer of refined sugar. Sugarcoated pills are prepared like the sugarplums of the confectioners, and are much used in modern pharmacy, especially when they are composed of nauseous ingredients. See Dragée.

Sug'arloaf Stump. A conical shape assumed by the stump after amputation, presenting the appearance described by its name; due to excessive muscular retraction.

Suggilla'tion, Sugilla'tio, Li'vor, Ædema cruentum, Sugillation, Bruise, (sugillare, sugillatum, 'to beat black and blue,') By most authors used synonymously with ecchymosis and ecchymoma. It is, also, applied to the spots or ecchymoses which occur in consequence of intrinsic causes, — in disease and in incipient putrefaction. It is common in dead bodies. Li'vor seu macula mortua. To this last case it is, indeed, restricted by some medico-legal writers; and an interesting question sometimes arises: — Whether the appearance has been induced before death or afterwards? Whether it is a case of ecchymosis or of suggillation? In the former, the extravasated blood will usually be coagulated; not so in the latter. It is often, however, difficult to form a correct judgment without reference to the history of the case.

Suggrun'dium, (sug, and gradior, 'I go,') The cave of a house.

SUGGRUN'DIUM OC'ULI, Superciliary arch — s. Superciliorum, Frontal protuberance.

Suici'da, Suicide.

Suici'dal Insan'ity, Suicide.

Su'icide, Suici'dium, (sui cædes, 'murder of one's self,') The act of killing one's self. Autochi'ra, Autocoton'ia, Idiocoton'ia, Autophon'ia. Suicide is very frequently the result of disease of the mind; the individual seeming, at times, to be irresistibly impelled to self-destruction; — Melancholia Suicid'ium seu autochi'ria, Auto'phonomania, Suici'dal Insan'ity. Also, one who commits self-murder; Suici'da, Autochir.

Sulphocar'bolates, Sulphophe'nates, Phenylsul'phates. A class of salts prepared by heating together pure carbolic and sulphuric acids, diluting with water, and saturating with the base, as soda, zinc, &c. They are employed in diseases supposed to have a parasitic origin, as zymotic diseases, &c. The Sulphocarbolates of magnesium, potassium, sodium, iron, copper, ammonium, lead, calcium, quinia, zinc, &c., have been prepared, and several of them employed therapeutically; the Zinc sulphocarbonate as an injection in gonorrhœa, vaginitis, &c., and a dressing to suppurating wounds, gr. v. to f3j.; and also internally in diarrhœa in the same doses as the sulphate. The Lead sulphocarbonate has sometimes been employed as a substitute for the acetate. The Sodium sulphocarbonate has been used in phthisis and zymotic diseases in doses of ten to sixty grains, and in smaller doses, as well as externally, in children in stomatitis, scarlatina with severe sorethroat, thrush, &c. The Calcium sulphocarbonate has been prescribed in doses of five grains to young rachitic children.

Sulphocarbolic Ac'id, Sulphophe'nic Acid, Phenylsulphuric Acid. A compound soluble crystalline acid, resulting from the union of hydrated sulphuric acid and pure carbolic acid. Its odor is similar to that of carbolic acid, and its action as a disinfectant and antiseptic is considered by some to be more potent than that of carbolic acid alone. See Sulphocarbolates.

Sulphophe'nates. Salts formed by the combination of sulphuric and phenic acids with bases, as soda, &c. See Sulphocarbolates.

Sulphosin'apisin. A peculiar ingredient of sinapis alba; a white, bitter, soluble neutral substance.

Sulphovi'rate of So'da. A crystalline salt prepared by the action of sulphuric acid on alcohol, at a specific temperature, carbonate of baryta being added, the resulting sulphovinate of baryta being neutralized by carbonate of soda. It is a purgative in the dose of five or six drachms. Sulphovinic or sulphethyl'ic acid is itself a bisulphate of the oxide of ethyl.

Sulphovi'nic Ac'id, see Sulphovinate of soda.

Sul'phur, gen. Sulphuris, Sul'fur, Seo'rith, Thei'on, Thi'on, A'verich, Ter'ra folia'ta, Fu'mus cit'rinus, Aquila, Brim'stone, (F.) Soufre. Native Sul'phur is called Rock and Black Sulphur, Sul'phur vi'vum seu ni'grum. Sulphur, as we meet with it, is in rolls, Sulphur in rot'ulis seu rotundum, Roll Brim'stone. It is a volcanic production, and is obtained, in large quantities, from Solfatara, in Italy. Roll Sulphur is impure sulphur, melted, and run into moulds. It is unpleasantly odorous, when heated or rubbed; insipid; solid, and brittle. S. g. 1.99. Fusible at 226°; volatilizable by heat, and condensing unchanged.

When sulphur is combined with a simple body or a compound radical it forms a sulphuret, (F.) Sulfure.

SULPHUR AL'COHOL, Mercaptan.

SULPHUR ANTIMONIA'TUM, Antimonii sulphuretum præcipitatum—s. Caballinum, see Sulphur sublimatum—s. Carburet of, Carbonis sulphuretum—s. Chloratum, Sulphur, chloride of.

SULPHUR, CHLO'RID OF, Sulphuris Chlo'ridum seu Dichlo'ridum, Sul'phur chlo'ratum, Hypochlo'retum sulphuro'sum, Chlo'rum hypersulphuratum, Dichlo'ride or Protochlo'ride or Hypochlo'ride or Subchlo'ride of Sul'phur, Bisulph'uret of Chlo'rine, is obtained by passing dry chlorine gas over washed and dried flowers of sulphur, until they are for the most part dissolved, and distilling the decanted fluid from the excess of dissolved sulphur. One drachm of the liquid to an ounce of lard has been used in lepra, psoriasis, and other chronic cutaneous diseases. Ten drops, dissolved in ether, have been given in adynamic fever.

SULPHUR, DICHLORIDE OF, Sulphur, chloride of—s. Hypochloride of, Sulphur, chloride of—s. Iodatum, Sulphuris iodidum—s. Iodide of, Sulphuris iodidum—s. Ioduret of, Sulphuris iodidum—s. Liver of, Potassæ sulphuretum.

SULPHUR LO'TUM, Sulphur sublimatum lo'tum, Washed Sulphur, Magiste'rium Sulphuris, Sulphuris Flo'res lo'ti, is prepared by pouring boiling water on sublimed sulphur, so as to wash away any acid it may contain, and then drying it.

SULPHUR NI'GRUM, Sulphur vivum, see Sulphur sublimatum.

SULPHUR PRÆCIPITA'TUM, Lac Sulphuris, Milk of Sulphur, Præcipitated Sulphur, (F.) Crème de Soufre, Soufre précipité, is prepared by boiling sublimed sulphur and lime together, and adding muriatic acid to precipitate the sulphur.

SULPHUR, PROTOCHLO'RID OF, Sulphur, chloride of—s. Subchloride of, Sulphur, chloride of.

SULPHUR SUBLIMA'TUM, Sulphur, Sublimed Sulphur, Flow'ers of Sulphur, (F.) Soufre sublimé, Fleurs de Soufre, is the sulphur of commerce, sublimed in close vessels.

Sulphur is possessed of stimulant, laxative, and diaphoretic properties. As a laxative, it is used in hemorrhoidal and other affections. In the itch, applied externally and taken internally, it has been considered as a specific, and it is a valuable remedy in most cutaneous affections that are local. Dose, ʒss. to ʒij.

The fæces or dregs, left in the purification or sublimation of sulphur, are called Horse Brim'stone, Dregs of Sulphur vi'vum, Sulphur caballinum seu vivum, Sulphuris vi'vi recremen'ta. They are very impure, and are only used externally.

Vitri'oli dephlogisticatum*, Oil of Vitriol, Spir'it of Vitriol, Vitriol'ic Ac'id, A'cor seu Spir'itus Sulphuris, (F.) Acide Sulphurique ou Sulfurique. Sulphuric acid is inodorous; has a strong acid taste, and is corrosive. S. g. 1.843, (Ph. U. S.) It is escharotic, stimulant, and rube-facient. Mixed with lard, it is sometimes used in local pains, and certain cutaneous affections. United with bases it forms sulphates, (F.) Sulfates.

SULPHURIC AC'ID, AROMAT'IC, Ac'idum Sulphu'ricum Aromat'icum, A. vitriol'icum aromat'icum seu vitriol'icum alcoho'li aromat'icum, Elixir vitri'oli seu vitrioli aromaticum seu vitrioli Mynsich'ti seu vitrioli Edinburgen'sium seu vitrioli cum tinctu'râ aromaticâ seu vitrioli dulcē seu acido-aromat'icum, Al'cohol cum aromat'ibus sulphuricatus, Tinctu'ra ac'idī sulphurici, is formed of Sulphuric acid, f3ijss., Ginger, bruised, 3j., Cinnamon, bruised, 3jss., Alcohol, Oij. (Ph. U. S., 1842.) In the last edition (1873) it is made of Sulphuric acid, 3vj., Ginger, in coarse powder, 3j., Cinnamon, in coarse powder, 3jss., Alcohol, q. s. Mix gradually the acid with Oj. of alcohol, and allow the liquid to cool. Mix the cinnamon and ginger, and, in a percolator, pour alcohol upon them gradually until a pint has passed. Then mix the diluted acid and the tincture. Dose, gtt. x. to xxx. Its properties are like those of the next preparation, than which it is more frequently employed, being more agreeable.

Sulphuric or Sulphuric Ac'id Lemonade, (F.) Limona de Sulfurique, is made by adding together sulphuric acid, water, and syrup. Nitric and phosphoric lemonades are similarly prepared.

SULPHURIC AC'ID, DILUTED, Ac'idum Sulphuricum dilutum, A. vitriol'icum dilutum, Elix'ir vitrioli, Spiritus vitrioli ac'idus Vogle'ri, Elix'ir of Vitriol, (F.) Acide sulfurique délayé ou dilué, is formed, according to the Pharmacopœia of the United States, (1842,) by adding Aq. destillat., f3xij., to Acid. sulph., f3j. According to the last edition, (1873,) it consists of Acid. sulphur., 3ij., Aque destillat., q. s. to make together a pint. Its s. g. is 1.082. It is tonic, astringent, and refrigerant. Dose, gtt. x. to xx., largely diluted. When used as a gargle, half a drachm may be added to f3vj. of water.

Very dilute sulphuric acid was formerly termed Phleg'ma vitrioli.

Sulphuris Carbure'tum, Carbonis sulphuretum.

SULPHURIS CHLO'RIDUM, Sulphur, chloride of — S. Dichloridum, Sulphur, chloride of.

SULPHURIS IO'DIDUM, S. Iodure'tum, Sulphur Ioda'tum, Iod'uret or Iodide of Sulphur, (F.) Soufre Ioduré, Iodure de Soufre. It is thus directed to be prepared in the Ph. U. S., 1873: Iodin., 3iv., Sulphur. sublimat., 3j. Rub together until they are thoroughly mixed. Put the mixture into a flask, close the orifice loosely, and apply a gentle heat, so as to darken the mass without melting it. When the color has become uniformly dark throughout, increase the heat so as to produce liquefaction, incline the flask in different directions, in order to return into the liquid any portions of iodine which may have condensed on the inner surface of the vessel; allow the flask to cool; break it, and put the iodide into bottles, which are to be well stopped.

SULPHUROUS AC'ID, Ac'idum Sulphuros'icum seu Sulphuris volat'ilē seu Sulphuro'sum seu Sulphuros'um, Spir'itus sulphuris seu sulphuro'sus volat'ilis seu sulphuris per camp'anam seu vitrioli phlogistica'tus, Gas sulphuris, (F.) Acide Sulfureux, Air Acide Vitriolique. (Obtained by treating mercury with concentrated sulphuric acid, or by burning sulphur.) Acidum sulphuros'um, Sulphurous acid, prepared by treating sulphuric acid with charcoal by means of heat, receiving the acid into distilled water, was admitted into the Pharmacopœia U. S. for 1863. Its s. g. is 1.035. It is sometimes used in the gaseous, at others in the liquid, state. Sulphurous acid gas is used to disinfect clothes, confined air, letters coming from infected places, &c. It is also exhibited with great success, in the form of fumigation, in the treatment of certain chronic cutaneous affections, and of sciatic and rheumatic pains in general. If respired pure, it acts in the manner of violent irritants, and is not long in producing death. It has been considered to be fatal to the lower forms of animal and vegetable life, by denying them the oxygen necessary for their existence, and hence has been used as a parasiticide and to prevent fermentation, and likewise in zymotic diseases in general.

United with bases, it forms Sulphites, (F.) Sulfites, which have been employed in the cases for which sulphurous acid is indicated. The sulphites of soda, potassa, ammonia, magnesia, and lime have been used, but the two first mentioned are alone officinal. The bisulphites are also resorted to, especially that of lime, which is said to preserve oleaginous or fatty substances against spontaneous changes. The hyposulphites are used for the same purposes and in the same doses as the sulphites.

Sultz'malt, Min'eral Waters of. Sultz'malt is a village in the department of the Upper Rhine, where are several sources of cold, acidulous waters, which seem to contain carbonic acid, subcarbonate of soda, subcarbonate of lime, sulphate of lime, and a little bitumen. They are refrigerant, aperient, and alterative.

SUPERCILIARY ARCHES, Superciliary Ridges, Ar'cus supercilia'res, Suggrun'dia oculo'rum, (F.)

Arcades sourcilières, are two slightly projecting apophyses situate at the anterior surface of the os frontis, above the superior margin of the orbits. They are separated by the nasal bossé, and covered by the superciliaris muscle, to which they give attachment.

SUPERCILIARY RIDGES, Superciliary arches.

Supercil'ium, (pl. supercil'ia), Oph'rys, Oph'rya, Val'lum, (F.) Sourcil, (super, and cilium, 'the tarsal cartilage.') The eye'brows, (Sc.) Brees, (Prov.) Eyebreen, are two arched eminences—convex above, and more or less prominent, according to the individual—which lie on the superciliary arch of the os frontis, above the eyelids, and extend from the sides of the root of the nose to the temple. Their inner extremity or head is more prominent than the outer or tail. The eye-brows are covered with short and stiff hairs, which are directed obliquely from within outwards, and are commonly of the color of the hair. The skin in which these hairs are implanted rests on the orbicularis palpebrarum, the frontalis, and superciliaris muscles, which move the eyebrows in different directions. The eyebrows serve as an ornament to the countenance, and by covering the eye defend it from the impression of too strong a light. They direct the perspiration also from the eye.

SUPINA'TOR RA'DII BRE'VIS, S. bre'vis seu mi'nor, (F.) Epicondyloradial (Ch.), Supinateur court ou petit supinateur. A muscle seated at the outer and back part of the forearm. It is flattened, triangular, and curved upon itself in such a manner that it embraces the superior extremity of the radius. It is attached, on the one hand, to the external tuberosity of the humerus, and to a small portion of the posterior surface of the ulna, and is inserted into the upper third of the outer and upper surfaces of the radius. It produces, by contracting, the motion of supination.

SUPINA'TOR RA'DII LONGUS, S. longus seu ma'ior, Brachioradial'is, (F.) Huméro-sus-radial, (Ch.) Long ou grand supinateur, is seated at the anterior and outer part of the forearm. It arises from the inferior part of the outer edge of the os humeri, and from the external intermuscular aponeurosis; and is inserted, by a long tendon, into the outer edge of the radius, near the base of the styloid process. It causes the supination of the forearm, which it can likewise bend on the arm.

The Ph. B. (1867) contains a formula for Suppositoria Plum'bi composita, Compound Lead Suppositories, the ingredients of which are acetate of lead, opium, benzoated lard, white wax, and oil of theobroma. It is prepared by a process similar to that for Suppositoria hydrargyri.

A solid medicine, in the form of a cone or cylinder, usually intended to be introduced into the rectum; — either for the purpose of favoring or of restraining evacuations, or to act as an anodyne. The vehicle commonly used for the active ingredients is Cacao butter, Oil of theobroma. It may require admixture with one-eighth part of wax to give it the proper consistence. Tallow with the same proportion of wax is used at times. The application of a suppository is termed Balanismus.

Uterine and vaginal suppositories are also prepared for introduction into the uterine cavity, or cervical canal and the vagina. These are now made, like suppositories for the rectum, of cocoa butter, with or without wax, impregnated with the medicine to be exhibited, as acetate of lead, opium, bromide of potassium, morphia, tannin, &c. Gelatin and glycerin have been substituted for cocoa butter. Urethral suppositories, medicated bougies, have also been employed.

The last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873) contains formulæ for suppositories of carbolic acid, tannic acid, aloes, assafetida, belladonna, morphia, opium, lead, and lead and opium. The British Pharmacopœia (1867) has formulæ for only four official suppositories, — tannic acid, mercury, morphia, and lead. See Suppositoria acidi carbolicici, S. acidi tannici, &c.

According to a general formula in the Ph. U. S. (1873), the medicinal portion of each suppository is to be mixed with a small quantity of oil of theobroma, by rubbing them together, the mixture being then added to the remainder of the oil previously melted and cooled to the temperature of 95°. Mix thoroughly, without applying more heat, and immediately pour the mixture into suitable moulds, having the capacity of thirty grains each. The moulds, previously made cold, must be kept so by immersion in iced water. All difficulty in removing suppositories from the moulds may be obviated by having the moulds previously dusted with lycopodium. In the absence of suitable moulds, suppositories may be formed by allowing the mixture, prepared as above, to cool, care being taken to keep the ingredients well mixed, and dividing it into parts, each of which shall weigh thirty grains, and may be made into a conical or other convenient form for a suppository.

Formation or secretion of pus, (from sup, and pus, gen. puris.) See, also, Pyogenia. It is a frequent termination of inflammation, and may occur in almost any of the tissues. This termination is announced by slight chills; by remission of the pain, which, from being lancinating, becomes heavy; by a sense of weight in the part, and, when the collection of pus can be easily felt, by fluctuation. When the collection of pus becomes prominent, the abscess is said to point or to come to a head. When pus is thus formed in the areolar membrane, and is collected in one or more cavities, it constitutes an abscess. If it be formed from a surface exposed to the air, it is an ulcer; and such ulcers we are in the habit of establishing artificially in certain cases of disease.

Sup'purative, Suppu'rans, Suppurati'vus, Diapye'ticus, Epye'ticus, Sup'purant, (F.) Suppuratif, Pyopô'tique. That which facilitates suppuration. Suppuratives are generally vesicants mixed with lard.

Supraclavic'ular, Supraclavicula'ris, (supra, and clavicula.) That which is above the clavicle.

Supracosta'les, Levato'res Costa'rum, (F.) Supracostaux, (from supra, and costa, 'a rib.') A name given to twelve small fleshy fasciculi, which are flattened, triangular, and with radiating fibres. They pass from the transverse processes of the dorsal vertebrae to the superior margin of the rib beneath. Spigelius, Cowper, Boyer, Chaussier, and others consider them to form part of the intercostales externi.

Supraôr'bital Arch. A curved and prominent margin of bone, forming the upper boundary of the orbit, and separating the horizontal from the vertical portion of the bone.

SUPRAÔR'BITAL AR'TERY, see Frontal.

Supraôr'bitar, Supraorbital, Supraorbital'is, Supraorbital'ius, (F.) Sus-orbitaire, (supra, and orbita.) That which is situate above the orbit.

SUPRAÔR'BITAR FORA'MEN, F. Supraorbital'ium seu orbitarium superius, (F.) Trou sus-orbitaire ou orbitaire supérieur, is a notch or foramen completed by a ligament at the inner third of the orbital arch. It gives passage to the supraorbital or superciliary artery, a branch of the ophthalmic, which ascends the forehead, and is distributed thereto.

Suprapu'bian, Suprapu'bie, Suprapubia'nus, (supra, and pubes.) That which is seated above the pubis.

SUPRAPU'BIAN NERVE, (F.) Nerf suspubien, is the internal ramus of the inguino-cutaneous branch of the first lumbar nerve. It is the genito-crural branch of Bichat. It descends almost vertically before the psoas muscle; and near the crural arch divides into two branches. One of these accompanies the spermatic cord, and is distributed to the cremaster, scrotum, and integuments on the inner part of the thigh. The other issues from the pelvis with the femoral filaments, traverses the aponeurosis of the thigh, and is distributed to the integuments of the upper and anterior part of the limb.

Suprare'nal, Suprarena'lis, (F.) Surrénal, (supra, and ren, 'the kidney.') Seated above the kidney; as the suprarenal capsule.

SUPRARE'NAL BOD'Y, Capsule, renal — s. Capsule, Capsule, renal.

Suprascap'ular, Suprascapula'ris, (supra, and scapula.) Seated above the scapula; as SUPRASCAP'ULAR NERVE. This arises from the fifth cervical, passes through the suprascapular notch, and is distributed to the supraspinatus and infraspinatus muscles.

Suprascapula'ris, Suprascapular, and Supraspinatus muscle.

Supraspina'tus, Supraspino'sus, Supraspina'lis, Supraspi'nal, Supraspi'nous, (F.) Sur-épineux, Sus-épineux, (supra, and spina.) That which is seated above a spine.

SUPRASPI'NAL MUS'CLE, Superscapula'ris, Suprascapularis, (F.) Sus-spino-scapulo-trochitérien, Petit sus-scapulo-trochitérien (Ch.), is situate in the fossa supraspinata. It is elongated, thick, and triangular, and is attached, on the one hand, to the two inner thirds of the fossa supraspinata; and terminates, on the other, at the anterior part of the great tuberosity of the humerus. This muscle raises the arm.

Supraspino'sa Ligamen'ta, Supraspinal ligaments, are two in number. 1. The Dorsolumbo-supraspinal ligament, (F.) Ligament sur-épineux dorso-lombaire, extending above the spinous processes of the dorsal and lumbar vertebrae from the 7th cervical as far as the median crista of the sacrum. 2. Cervical supraspinal ligament, (F.) Ligament sur-épineux cervical, which extends above all the cervical spinous processes, and is attached, above, to the outer occipital protuberance.

Supraster'nal, Suprasterna'lis, (supra, and sternum.) That which is above the sternum or breast-bone. The Fos'sa suprasterna'lis, Jugulum, Fos'sa Jugula'ris, (F.) Région trachéale, is the depressed space in the neck above the sternum.

Surgeon, Chirurgion, Chirou'naux, Chirurgus, Vulnecum medicus, Cheiria'ter, Chiria'ter, Iū'trus, (F.) Chirurgien, (old French) Surgien, (χαρ, 'the hand,' and εργον, 'work,') One who practises surgery. The surgeon, says Celsus, ought to be young, or, at all events, not advanced in life. His hand must be steady, expert, and never tremulous; he must use the right or left with equal facility; his sight must be clear and penetrating; his mind intrepid; and, although unmoved when he proceeds to operate, he must not be in haste, nor cut less than is necessary, but finish his operation, as if the cries of the patient made no impression upon him.

In the Middle Ages, the universities of Italy and Spain sent out educated surgeons, as well as physicians, under the name chirurgi physici.

Surgeon-accoucheur, Accoucheur, see Surgeon-apothecary.

Surgeon-apothecary. One who unites the practice of surgery with that of the apothecary. A general practitioner. He is the ordinary medical man or family medical attendant in England, and when he combines, as he usually does, obstetrics with his practice, he is termed a surgeon-accoucheur, in contradistinction to the physician-accoucheur, who practises as a physician and an accoucheur. See Apothecary.

Sursels, (sur, and sel, 'a salt,') Supersalts, see Salt.

Surtouts Ligamenteux de la Colonne Vertébrale, (sur, and tout, 'all,') Vertebral ligaments.

Surumpe (S.). A disease to which the traveller in the Cordilleras is liable. It consists of a violent inflammation of the eyes, caused by the reflection of the bright rays of the sun. The conjunctiva is highly inflamed, and the lids swell and bleed. The pain is intense, and frequently induces delirium.

Survie, (sur, and vie, 'life,') Survivorship.

Survivorship, (F.) Survie, (supervivere, — super, and vivere, 'to live,' — 'to live above or longer,') In legal medicine, this word means the probability that any individual has survived others in an accident which has been fatal to all. This is often an important question connected with the inheritance of property, and on which physiology can rarely afford more than presumptive grounds for conclusion.

Sus, same as sursum, 'above.' A prefix in certain Romanic words signifying above.

Sus-carpien (F.), (sus, and carpe, 'the wrist,') Above the wrist. An epithet given by Chaussier to the dorsal artery of the wrist — Artère sus-carpienne — a branch of the radial.

Sus-épineux, Supraspinatus — s. Hépatique, see Hepatic veins — s. Maxillo-labial, Levator anguli oris — s. Maxillo-labial, grand, Levator labii superioris alæque nasi — s. Maxillo-labial moyen, Levator labii superioris proprius — s. Maxillo-nasal, Compressor naris — s. Omphalodymie, see Somatodymia — s. Optico-sphéno-scleroticien, Rectus superior oculi — s. Orbitaire, Supraorbital — s. Phalangien du ponce, Abductor pollicis brevis — s. Pubio-fémoral, Peetinalis — s. Scapulo-trochitérien le plus petit, Teres minor — s. Scapulo-trochitérien petit, Supraspinatus — s. Spino-scapulo-trochitérien, Supraspinatus.

Susceptibility, facile suspiciens, (sus, and capio, 'I take,' — 'easily taking, or undertaking,') Sensibility in its most enlarged acceptance. Impressibility. This term, with the epithet nervous, is sometimes used for that increase in the moral sensibility which is particularly observed in nervous affections.

Suscep'tio Intestino'rum, Intussusception.

Suspendic'ulum, (sus, and pendere, 'to hang,') Cremaster.

Suspen'sa, (sus, and pendere, pensum, 'to hang,') Enaeorema.

Suspenseur, Suspensory.

Suspensoire, Suspensory.

Suspensorium, Suspensory — s. Hepatis, Suspensory ligament of the liver — s. Testis, Cremaster.

Suspensory, Suspensorius, (F.) Suspenseur. That which sustains or suspends.

SUSPEN'SORY BAN'DAGE, Suspensorium, (F.) Suspensoir ou Suspensoire, is a bandage intended to support the scrotum in cases of diseases of the testicles or of scrotal hernia. It consists of a kind of bag, fixed above to a cincture, and retained below by strings passing between the thighs and fixed to the cincture behind.

SUSPEN'SORY LIG'AMENT OF THE LENS. A thin, transparent membranous structure between the vitreous body and the ciliary processes of the choroid connecting the anterior margin of the retina with the anterior surface of the lens, and assisting in retaining the lens in its position.

SUSPEN'SORY LIG'AMENT OF THE LIV'ER, Falciform Ligament, Broad Ligament of the Liver, Ligamentum la'tum, Suspensorium hepatis, Pependic'ulum hepatis, is a triangular duplicature of the peritoneum, between the inferior surface of the diaphragm and the upper surface of the liver, which is continuous with the great falc of the umbilical vein.

SUSPENSORY LIGAMENT OF THE MAMMA. Fibrous processes passing from the anterior layer of the superficial fascia to the integument and nipple, inclosing in their areolae masses of fat.

SUSPENSORY LIGAMENT OF THE PENIS is a fibrocellular fascia, of a triangular shape, which extends from the anterior part of the symphysis pubis to the corpus cavernosum, which it sustains. A similar ligament belongs to the clitoris.

SUSPENSORY LIGAMENT OF THE SPLEEN. A fold of peritoneum connecting the spleen with the diaphragm.

Suspen'sum, Enæorema—s. Urinæ, Enæorema.

Suspira'tion, (su for sub, and spirare, spiratum, 'to breathe,') Suspirium.

Suspira'tus, gen. Suspira'tūs, Suspirium.

Suspir'itus, gen. Suspir'itūs, Suspirium.

Suspir'ium, Suspira'tio, Suspira'tus, Suspir'itus, Myg'mus, Mych'mus, Mychthis'mus, Stenag'mus, Stenax'is, Sigh, Suspira'tion, (old E.) Sithe, Sythe, (F.) Soupir. A short, audible breathing. Also, voluntary contraction of the diaphragm and intercostal muscles, the effect of which is to restore the due relation between the circulation and respiration, or to free ourselves from an inconvenient sense of weight felt in the chest when we are much depressed—a weight which appears to be chiefly dependent on the functions of the heart being disturbed through the moral influence. The sigh differs from the sob, the latter being involuntary and spasmodic. Sighing, occurring in fevers to a great extent, indicates considerable depression. If accompanied with a vocal sound, it constitutes a groan.

When the respiration, on auscultation, resembles sighing, it is called, by some, Suspirious or Suspirious, (F.) Suspirieuse.

SUSPIR'ium CARDIACUM, Angina pectoris.

Sustenta'ulum, (sus, and teneo, tentum, 'I hold,') Aliment—s. Tali, see Calcaneum.

Sustenta'tor Clito'ridis, Erector clitoridis—s. Penis, Erector penis.

Susurra'tion, (susurrare, susurratum, 'to murmur, to whisper,') Whispering.

Susur'rus, 'a murmur,' Bourdonnement—s. Aurium, Tinnitus aurium.

Sute'la, (sute, sutum, 'to sow,') Suture.

Su'terberry, Xanthoxylum fraxineum.

Suto'rius, (sutor, 'a shoemaker,') Sartorius.

Sut'ter, Saccharum.

Su'tural, Sutura'lis; (same etymon as Suture.) Relating to a suture.

SU'TURAL LIGAMENT, Ligament, sutural.

Su'ture, Sutu'ra, Sute'la, Ar'mæ, Rha'phæ, (sute, sutum, 'to stitch,') Dovetail joint, (F.) Engrenure. A kind of immovable articulation, in which the bones unite by means of serrated edges, which are, as it were, dovetailed into each other. The articulations of the greater part of the bones of the skull are of this kind. The coronal, lambdoidal, and sagittal sutures are called true sutures, Sutu'ræ veræ, the two temporal are called false sutures, sutu'ræ no'thæ seu spu'riæ seu squamo'sæ.

A dentated suture—Sutu'ra denta'ta—is one in which the processes are long and dentiform, as in the interparietal suture. In a ser'rated suture—sutu'ra seu syntax'is serra'ta—the indentations and processes are small and fine, like the teeth of a saw, as in the suture between the two portions of the frontal bone. In the sutu'ra limbo'sa there is, along with the dentated margins, a degree of bevelling of one, so that one bone rests on the other, as in the occipitoparietal suture.

SUTURE, in Surgery, Rha'phæ, Stitch, is an operation which consists in stitching the lips of a wound to procure their union. The suture was, at one time, largely employed; but, in modern times, its use has been wisely restricted. There are few wounds in which the edges may not be brought together by adhesive plaster appropriately applied. This kind of union, by adhesive plaster simply, has been absurdly termed Sutu'ra sic'ca or dry suture, in opposition to the Sutu'ra cruen'ta, (F.) Suture sanglante, or Suture properly so called. The suture is generally formed with waxed thread and straight or curved needles, according to the arrangement of parts. The chief sutures are the interrupted suture, the quilled suture, the glov'er's suture, and the twist'ed suture.

1. The INTERRUPTED SUTURE, (F.) Suture à points séparés, Suture entrecoupée, is formed by passing a needle, armed with a ligature, through the lips of the wound previously brought into contact; and then tying the extremities of the thread. The other stitches are made in the same manner. They are separate or interrupted. It is the suture most commonly used.

2. The QUILLED SUTURE, Sutu'ra clava'ta, (F.) Suture enchevillée ou emplumée ou empennée, Compound Suture, is merely the interrupted suture, with this difference, that the ligatures are not tied over the face of the wound, but over two quills or rolls of plasters, or bougies, which are laid along the sides of the wound. It is used by some surgeons, on account of there being less danger of the stitches tearing out. It is not much employed. The CLAMP SUTURE, used by Dr. Sims, of New York, in the treatment of vesicovaginal fistulæ, is a modification of this. It is formed by two cylinders of silver or lead, perforated at several points for the passage of small pieces of fine silver wire, which are to supply the places of thread, and are prevented from slipping by perforated shot carried down upon them, pressed against the cylinders, and kept in place by being firmly pinched with pliers.

3. The GLOVER'S SUTURE, Contin'ued or Uninterrupted Suture, (F.) Suture de Pelletier ou en surget, is executed by introducing the needle first into one lip of the wound from within outwards, then into the other in the same way; and, in this manner, sewing up the whole extent of the wound. It has been chiefly used in wounds of the intestinal canal. It is now rarely employed except for stitching up dead bodies. The common stitch or suture, Sutura puncta'ta, (F.) Suture à points passés, has been used in similar cases. Various other sutures or stitches have been proposed for the union of the intestines in wounds thereof, as the suture of the four masters, (F.) Suture des quatre maîtres, in which both ends of the intestines are stitched on a piece of the windpipe of some animal, or on a cylinder of cardboard oiled;—the Suture of Ramdohr, with ensheathing or invagination of the upper into the lower part of the intestine;—the Suture of Bertrandi, (F.) Suture à points passés, which differs only from the continued suture in the ligature being passed through, not over, the margins of the solution of continuity;—the Suture of Jobert, in which a union of the serous surfaces, brought in contact, is promoted by a kind of invagination;—the Suture of Lembert, which consists in stitching the mucous surfaces together, without implicating the serous coat, tying the knots, and leaving the ends of the ligatures internally. In Gély's suture, a modification of Lembert's, two needles are inserted near the angle of the wound, then carried along the interior of the bowel, parallel with the wound, for the sixth of an inch, and brought out precisely at the same level. The threads are then crossed, each needle being passed through the puncture made by the other, the threads tied and cut off.

4. The ROYAL STITCH OR SUTURE is the name of an old operation for the cure of bubonocoele. It consisted in putting a ligature under the hernial sac, close to the abdominal ring, and then tying that part of the sac, so as to render it impervious by the adhesive inflammation thus excited.

5. The STA'PLE SUTURE consists of a piece of steel wire, shaped like a staple, the ends of which are ground to a triangular or glover's point. In using it, the points of the staple are to be brought through both margins of the wound, and then bent back.

6. The TWIST'ED SUTURE, (F.) Suture entortillée, is employed, chiefly, to unite wounds of the cheeks and of the free edges of the lips. To perform it, a pin or needle is passed through the edges of the wound, so as to keep them thoroughly in contact. A piece of thread is then wound accurately around the pin, from one side of the division to the other, in the form of the figure 8. Delicate rings of India-rubber have been substituted for the figure of 8 turns, especially after ovariectomy. This form of suture is then called the India-rubber suture. The number of pins and sutures must, of course, correspond with the extent of the wound. This is the suture used in cases of harelip. The BUTTON SUTURE of Dr. Bozeman, of Alabama, employed in vesicovaginal fistula, is a modification of this.

7. The Suture à Anse or Loop stitch of Le Dran has only been employed in cases of wounds of the intestines. For this purpose, the edges of the wound are brought together, and as many needles, with unwaxed threads, used as there are to be stitches. Each stitch is then made by passing a needle through the edges; and all the ligatures which belong to one side of the wound are tied together, and twisted so as to form a thread, which is fixed externally.

8. The IMPLANT'ED SUTURE, (F.) Suture implantée, is formed by pins arranged parallel to the edges of the wounds, and implanted in their substance. By means of threads, the needles are approximated so as to bring the edges of the wound together.

9. The PLAS'TIC SUTURE, so called by Prof. Pancoast, of Philadelphia, its proposer, is a suture by tongue and groove. The groove is made by an incision in the part, which is to receive the flap. The tongue is made on the flap by bevelling off the two surfaces, cuticular and adipose. The suture is made by passing a loop of thread, by two punctures, deep through the inner lip of the groove. The two needles are passed through the base of the tongue, and again through the outer lip of the groove. The two ends of the thread are then tied over a small roll of adhesive plaster, by which the tongue is, of necessity, forced deep into the groove. Four raw surfaces are thus firmly held in connection, making the union of parts, by this suture, a very certain process. In the Shot'ed Suture, perforated shot are used for purposes of compression in connection with wires and a metal bar through which a hole is drilled for the passage of the wires, in wounds.

Symmet'ria, Symmetry.

Symmet'rical, Symmet'ricus, (F.) Symétrique.

An epithet given to those parts of the body which, if seated on the median line, may be divided into two equal and perfectly like halves; or which, if situate the one to the right, the other to the left of this line, have a similar conformation and a perfectly analogous arrangement.

SYMMET'RICAL DISEASES, see Symmetry.

Sym'metry, (συμμετρία, from sym, and μετρον, 'to measure,') Symmet'ria, Commen'sum, Membro'rum Om'nium Competen'tia, Propor'tio, (F.) Symétrie. The regularity in form observed in many parts situate on the median line, and also the resemblance which exists between many organs that are situate on each side of the median line — Bilat'eral Sym'metry. Bichat first noticed that this symmetry was confined to the organs of animal life — as the head, brain, spine, organs of sense, locomotion, &c.

It has been affirmed — and there is evidence in favor of the assertion — to be a law of the animal economy, that, owing to symmetry of nutrition, when uninfluenced by disturbing agents, all general or constitutional diseases affect equally and similarly the corresponding parts of the two sides of the body. This has been called the Symmetry of Diseases, and the resulting diseases are said to be symmet'rical.

Sympas'ma, gen. Sympas'matis, (συμπασμα, from sym, and πασσω, 'I sprinkle,') Cataplasma.

Sympathe'sis, (συμπαθησις,) Sympathy.

Sympathetic, Sympath'icus, Sympathet'icus, (F.) Sympathique, (from sympathy,) That which depends on sympathy. Sympathetic affections of an organ are those morbid phenomena that supervene without any morbid cause acting directly on it, and by the reaction of another organ primarily affected. Thus, itching of the nose is a sympathetic affection, produced by irritation in the intestinal canal.

The epithet sympathetic is also given to different nerves. See Trisplanchnic, Pneumogastric, and Facial.

SYMPATHET'IC, GREAT, Trisplanchnic nerve — s. Middle, Pneumogastric — s. Nerve, Trisplanchnic nerve.

SYMPATHET'IC POW'DER, Pul'vis sympathet'icus or Pow'der of sym'pathy of Sir Kenelm Digby, was composed of calcined sulphate of iron prepared in a particular manner. It was long supposed to be able to cure a wound if applied to the weapon that inflicted it, or even to a portion of the bloody clothes. It is proper to remark, however, that the wound itself was carefully excluded from the air and from all irritation. The notion is still occasionally met with of cleaning and polishing the instrument with which the wound was inflicted until the latter heals. (See Author's "History of Medicine," Philada., 1872, p. 236.)

Sympathet'icus Mi'nor, Facial nerve.

Sympathet'ismus, Sympathy.

Sympathi'a, Sympathy. Consent of parts.

Sympath'icus, Sympathetic.

Sympathique, Sympathetic — s. Nerv, Trisplanchnic nerve.

Sym'pathy, (συμπαθεια, from sym, and παθος, 'suffering,') Sympathi'a, Sympathe'sis, Compas'sio, Consen'sus, Sympothet'ismus, Xympathi'a, Conflux'io, Conspira'tio, Commer'cium, Consortium, Homoioopath'i'a, Homoeth'nia, Adelphix'is, Symbolis'mus, Symboliza'tio, Sym'bolum.

The connection that exists between the action of two or more organs more or less distant from each other, so that the affection of the first is transmitted secondarily to the others, or to one of the others, by means unknown. A knowledge of the particular sympathies between different organs throws light on the etiology of diseases, their seat, and the particular organs toward which our therapeutical means should be directed. See Irritation.

Sympathy of Continuity is seen in the case of a membrane that is continuous, as in the action of demulcents in catarrh; Sympathy of Contiguity in the case of parts that are near, as in the action of aloes in amenorrhœa; and Remote Sympathy concerns organs that are at a distance from the part impressed, as in the case of tetanus from an injury.

SYM'PATHY, CURE BY, Medici'na sympathet'ica, M. Magnet'ica. A mode of treatment, at one time prevalent, which was based on the idea that a mysterious consent exists between parts of the body and agents, for which there was no real foundation. See Sympathetic powder and Trial by Bier-right.

Sympep'sis, (sym, and πεψις, 'coction, digestion,') Coction.

Sympexions, see Sympexis.

Sympex'is, (συμπεξις,) Concretion. M. Robin has applied the term Sympexions to solid concretions found in the vesicles of the thyroid gland, spleen, lymphatic ganglion, in the small cysts of the glands of the neck and body of the uterus, and, almost always, in the liquid of the vesiculæ seminales. Little is known of their composition.

Sym'phora, (συμφορα, from sym, and φω, 'I carry,') Congestion.

Symphore'ma, gen. Symphore'matis, (συμφορημα,) Congestion.

Symphore'sis, (συμφορησις,) Congestion.

Symphoricar'pus Racemo'sus, Snowberry, (συμφορεω, 'I bear together,' and καρπος, 'fruit,' owing to the clustered berries.) An indigenous plant, Order, Caprifoliaceæ, Tribe, Lonicææ, whose berries are large, bright white, and remain till winter; flowering from June to September. The root is tonic and astringent, and has been used in ague, and by the Indians in syphilis.

Symphy'ia, (συμφυια,) Symphysis.

Symphyceph'alus, Metopa'ges, Cephalopa'ges, (from συμφυης, — sym, and φω, 'I grow,' — 'united together,' and κεφαλη, 'head,') A monstrosity, in which twins are united by the head.

Symphyse, Symphysis.

Symphyse Cardiaque. (Same etymon as Symphysis.) Adhesion of the pericardium, the result of inflammation.

Symphyseot'omy, Symphysot'omy, Symphysiot'omy, Synchondrot'omy, Symphyseotom'ia, Symphysiotom'ia, (from symphysis, and τεμνω, 'I cut,') The operation or section of the Sym'physis, Sigault's operation or section. This operation is performed with the view of augmenting the diameter of the pelvis, in order to facilitate delivery in certain cases of faulty conformation of that cavity, with wedging of the head of the child therein. To perform the operation, (F.) désymphyser, the female is placed on her back; the pubes is shaved; and, with a strong scalpel, the soft parts are divided on the median line. The articulation is then cut. As soon as the fibrous parts which hold the bones together are divided, they separate to a certain distance from each other; and the delivery may be accomplished. The knife with which the operation is performed is called, by the French, Couteau symphygien.

Symphys'ia, (from συνψω, 'I grow together.') A malformation consisting in the union of parts that are usually divided.

Symphysien, see Symphyseotomy.

Symphysiotom'ia, Symphyseotomy.

Symphysiot'omy, Symphyseotomy.

Sym'physis, Symphy'ia, Coalescen'tia, Coal'itus, Coalit'ia, (F.) Symphysie, (συνψωσις, from syn, and ψω, 'I grow.') A union of bones. The bond of such union. The aggregate of means used for retaining bones in situ in the articulations. The name symphysis, (F.) Symphysie, has, however, been more particularly appropriated to certain articulations; as to the symphysis pubis, sacroiliac symphysis, &c. See Monster.

Sym'physis, Coalescence, Commissure, Insertion — s. Cartilaginea, Synchondrosis — s. Ligamentosa, Syndesmosis — s. Menti, see Maxillary bone, inferior — s. Ossium muscularis, Syssarcosis — s. Pubis, Pubic articulation.

Symphysodactyl'ia, (symphysis, and δακτυλος, 'a finger.') An abnormal union of the fingers.

Symphysop'sia, (symphysis, and ωψ, 'the eye.') A monstrous fusion of the two eyes into one.

Symphysot'omy, Symphyseotomy.

Sym'phytos, (συνψωτος, 'grown or produced with,') Hereditary.

Sym'phytum, (συνψωτον,) Symphytum officina'lē seu album seu Bohe'micum, Consol'ida ma'ior, Com'frey, Al'um, Al'us, (Prov.) Knitback, (F.) Grande Consolide, Oreilles d'âne. Ord. Boraginaceae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. The roots of this European plant are very mucilaginous, and are employed as emollients. They are used in decoction in hæmoptysis, dysentery, chronic diarrhoea, &c.

Sym'phytum, Solidago virgaurea — s. Album, Symphytum — s. Bohemium, Symphytum — s. Minimum, Bellis — s. Minus, Prunella — s. Officinale, Symphytum.

Sym'phytum Petræ'um, Co'ris Monspelien'sis, Montpell'lier Co'ris. An intensely bitter and nauseous plant, which is said to have been useful in syphilis. See, also, Sanicula.

Symplocar'pus Angustispa'tha, (from συνπλοκη, 'connection,' and καρπος, 'fruit,' from the coalescing ovaries,) Dracontium angustispatha — s. Fœtidus, Dracontium fœtidum.

Sympod'ia, Monopod'ia, (sym, and πους, gen. πόδος, 'a foot.') A monstrosity in which there is coalescence of the lower extremities.

Symp'tom, Sympto'ma, Semei'on, Ac'cidens, Ca'usa, (F.) Symptôme, (συνπτωμα, from syn, and πτω, 'a fall,' from πτω, 'I fall.') Any change, perceptible to the senses in any organ or function, which is connected with morbid influence. It is by the aggregate and succession of symptoms that a disease is detected. The term Symptoms of Symptoms has been used for the effects which result from the symptoms of a disease; but which effects are not essentially connected with the disease itself. Thus, the debility arising from the frequency of evacuations in dysentery is a symptom of symptoms. Symptom, at one time, was generally used in the same sense as sign; but with many, perhaps most, of the present day, the former signifies a functional or vital phenomenon of disease, while the latter is applied to that which is more directly physical; and hence the expressions functional or vital phenomena or symptoms, in contradistinction to the physical signs afforded by auscultation, percussion, &c. See Sign.

Sympto'ma, gen. Sympto'matis, Symptom — s. Turpitudinis, Nymphomania.

Symptomat'ic, (συνπτωματικός,) Symptomat'icus, (F.) Symptomatique. Relating or appertaining to symptoms or signs, Semiot'ic, Semiot'icus. That which is a symptom of some other affection. Thus, we speak of a symptomatic disease, in opposition to one that is idiopathic, symptomatic fever, &c.

Symptomatog'raphy, (symptoma, and γραφη, 'a description,') Semeiography.

Symptomatol'ogy, Symptomatolog'ia, Symbol'ogy, Symbolog'ica, (symptoma, and λογος, 'a treatise,') The branch of pathology, the object of which is the observation (phænomenoscopia) and knowledge of symptoms.

Sympto'sis, (συνπτωσις, from syn, and πτω, 'I fall,') Depression or collapse, emaciation or atrophy, either of the whole body or of a part.

Syn, as a prefix, Sym.

Synæ'rema, gen. Synæ'rematis, (συναίρεμα,) Corrugation.

Synæ'tion, (συναίτια, from syn, and αἷτις, 'a cause,') Concausa.

Synan'ché, Cynanche, Cynanche tonsillaris.

Synancie, Cynanche.

Synaphymeni'tis, gen. Synaphymeni'tidis, (συναψη, 'a conjunction,' ίμην, 'a membrane,' and itis,) see Ophthalmia.

Synap'tase, (syn, and αἰτείν, 'to join;') with amygdalin it forms hydrocyanic acid,) see Amygdalin.

Synarthro'dia, Synarthrosis.

Synarthro'dial, Synarthrodia'lis. That which belongs to synarthrosis; as Synarthrodial articulation.

Synarthrose, Synarthrosis.

Synarthro'sis, (συναρθρωσις, from syn, and αρθρωσις, 'articulation,') Synarthro'dia, Abarticula'tio, Coarticula'tio, (F.) Synarthrose. An immovable articulation. Synarthrosis includes three species: Suture, Harmony, and Gomphosis.

Synathrois'is, (συναθροισις, syn, and αθροίζειν, 'to collect,') Congestion.

Synathrois'mus, (συναθροισμος,) Congestion.

Syncan'thus, (syn, and κανθος, 'the corner of the eye,') A morbid adhesion between the globe of the eye and the orbit.

Syn'chiton, (syn, and χιτων, 'a coat,') Conjunctiva membrana.

Synchondro'sis, Sym'physis seu Cop'ula seu Connex'io cartilagin'ea, Chondrosyndes'mus, (syn, χονδρος, 'a cartilage,' and osis,) Union or articulation of bones by means of cartilage; as the articulations of the ribs with the sternum, by means of their cartilages of prolongation.

Synchondrot'omy, (syn, χονδρος, 'cartilage,' and τεμνεν, 'to cut,') Symphyseotomy.

Synchron'ius, Synchronous.

Syn'chronous, Syn'chronus, Synchron'ius, Isoch'ronous, (συχρονος, from syn, and χρονος, 'time,') That which occurs at the same time. Thus, the pulsations of an artery are said to be synchronous with those of the heart.

Syn'chronus, (συχρονος,) Synchronous.

Syn'chysis, (συχχυσις, from syn, and χυω, 'I pour,') Confusio — s. Scintillans, Confusio — s. Sparkling, Confusio.

Syn'ciput, Sinciput.

Syn'clitism, (συν, 'together,' and κλινος, 'inclined,') Synclit'ic movement of the fœtal head. Parallelism of the plane of the child's head, in a natural presentation, to the planes of the pelvis and vagina.

Synclit'ic. Relating to synclitism. See Synclitism and Enclitic.

Synclone'sis, (συνκλονησις,) Synclonus.

Syn'clonus, Synclone'sis, (συνκλονω, — syn, and κλονω, 'I shake,') — 'I shake together,') Tremulous, simultaneous, and chronic agitation of various muscles, especially when excited by the will; Clon'ici universa'les, Clon'us. (Young.) Also, general spasm, spas'mus universa'lis. See Tremor, Chorea, &c.

Syn'clonus BALLIS'MUS. Paralysis agitans — s. Beriberia, Beriberi — s. Chorea, Chorea — s. Ra- phania, Raphania — s. Saltans, Chorea — s. Tremor, Paralysis agitans, Tremor.

Syncomis'tus, (συνκομιστός, from συνκομίζω, — syn, and κομίζω, 'I bring,' — 'I bring together,') Autop'oros, Pa'nis domes'ticus, P. secunda'rius, P. ciba'rius, P. confusa'neus. Bread of the whole wheat, or of the unsifted meal. House'hold bread. Also, a cataplasm made of the same.

Syn'copal, Syn'copa'lis, Syn'cop'ticus, Syn'cop'tus, (from syncope.) Relating or appertaining to syncope; as Syn'copal Fe'ver, Fe'bris Syn'copa'lis. A pernicious intermittent, characterized by repeated attacks of syncope.

Syn'copē, (συνκοπή, from συνκοπτω, — syn, and κοπτω, 'I fall,' — 'I fall down,') Defec'tio seu Deliq'uium An'imæ seu An'imi, Leipopsych'ia, Lipopsych'ia, Apsych'ia, Apsych'ia, Lip'sis An'imi, Asphyx'ia, Apopsych'ia, Lipothym'ia, Leipothym'ia, Lipopsych'ia, Eclips'is, Sub'itus an'imi ca'sus, Anencephalohæ'mia, Ap'sychy, Swoon, Swoon'ing, Swoal'ting, Faint'ing, Faint'ing fit, Faint'ness, Exolu'tion, (Sc.) Drow, Dualm, Searff, Swerf, Swarth, (Prov.) Fower, Sweb'bing, Sween'ing, Swoand'ing, Sound, (F.) Évanouissement, Défaillance, Pâmoison. Complete, and, commonly, sudden loss of sensation and motion, with considerable diminution, or entire suspension of the pulsations of the heart and the respiratory movements. Syncope is, commonly, an affection of no consequence; but, sometimes, it is an index of diseased heart. Placing the patient in the horizontal posture; sprinkling cold water over the face, and the application of volatile substances to the nose, are all that will be required during the fit. See Asphyxia and Suffocation.

An approach to this condition is termed faintishness; and the person is said to be faint; (old E. and Prov.) Sweenish or Sweamish.

Syn'copē An'gens, Angina pectoris — s. Anginosa, Angina pectoris.

Syn'cop'ticus, (συνκοπτικός,) Syn'copal.

Syn'cop'tus, Syn'copal.

Syn'erit'ica, (from συνκοίνω, 'I put together,') Condensantia.

Syndac'tylus, (syn, and δακτύλος, 'a finger,') Aschistodaetylus.

Syndes'tomy, (συνδέω, 'I bind together,' and τομή, 'excision,') Perit'omy, Circumci'sion of the Cor'nea. An operation designed to cut off the supply of blood from the cornea by a division and part removal, not only of the conjunctival but also of the subconjunctival vessels. It is resorted to in pannus.

Syndesmi'tis, gen. Syndesmi'tidis, see Ophthalmia. Also, inflammation of articular ligaments; Inflamma'tio ligamento'rum, (from syndesmus, 'ligament,' and itis.)

Syndesmog'raphy, Syndesmograph'ia, (syndesmus, and γραφή, 'a description,') A description of the ligaments. The part of anatomy which describes the ligaments.

Syndesmol'ogy, Syndesmolog'ia, (syndesmus, and λόγος, 'a treatise, discourse,') A treatise on the ligaments.

Syndes'mopharynge'us. A fasciculus of the constrictor pharyngis superior.

Syndesmo'sis, Synenro'sis, Synymen'sis, Connex'io seu Syn'physis ligamento'sa, Commis'm'ra ner'væ, Connervat'io, Colligat'io, (F.) Synnévrose, (from syndesmus, and osis.) The articulation of two or more bones by means of ligament; as of the radius with the ulna.

Syndesmot'omy, Syndesmotom'ia, (syndesmus, and τέμνω, 'I cut or dissect,') Dissection of the ligaments.

Syndes'mus, (συνδέσμος,) Bandage, Ligament.

Syn'dromē, (συνδρομή, from syn, and δρόμος, 'a course,') Concurs'us, Con'course. A name given by the Empirical Sect to the union of symptoms which takes place in diseases: Syn'dromē pletho'- rica, for example, meant the aggregate of symptoms produced by plethora.

Syndyas'mus, (συνδυασμός, from syn, and δυο, 'two,') Coition.

Syn'éches, (συνεχής, 'continuous,') see Continued fever.

Synechi'a, (συνεχία, from syn, and έχω, 'to have,' or 'to hold,') Adhesion between the iris and transparent cornea, or between the iris and crystalline lens. The former case is called Synechia ante'rior; the latter, S. poste'rior, Pto'sis diplopia. If exudations of plastic lymph from the edge of the pupil are thrown out, so as to fringe its whole circumference, tying it down to the capsule of the lens, the centre of the pupil remaining clear, the condition is called Cir'cular or an'nular syne'chia, or exclu'sion of the pu'pil. When the pupil is occluded by a thick nodule of exudation, it is called occlu'sion of the pu'pil.

Synenergi'a, Synergy.

Synergi'a, Synergy.

Synergie, Synergy.

Syn'ergy, (συνέργια,) Synergi'a, Synenergi'a, (F.) Synergie, (from syn, and εργον, 'work,') A correlation or concurrence of action between different organs in health; and, according to some, in disease.

Syn'esis, (συνεσις,) Intellect.

Syneuro'sis, (συννεύρωσις, from syn, and νεύρον, 'a sinew,') see Syndesmosis.

Synezi'sis, Synize'sis, Considen'tia, (from syn, and ζυνναι, 'to join,' or from συνίζω, 'to sit down together,' from syn, and ἵζω, 'I sit,') A falling together.

SYNEZISIS PUPIL'Æ, Parop'sis Synze'sis, Call'igo à Synize'si, Call'igo seu Imperforat'io seu Phthi'sis pupill'æ, Olo'sure or occlu'sion or obliteration of the Pupil. This disease is sometimes a faulty conformation, depending upon the continued existence of the membrana pupillaris, or the absence of the pupil. It is, in other words, congenital. At other times, it is owing to accident, and supervenes on violent ophthalmia, or on the operation for cataract. They who are affected with syneze'sis are completely blind, the iris having no central aperture. In certain cases, a remedy may be obtained by making an opening in the iris, which may supply the place of the pupil, and through which the rays of light may reach the retina. The operation is called the operation for artificial pupil.

Syn'genes, (συνγενής, from syn, and γίγναι, 'I beget,') Hereditary.

Syngen'icus, (συνγενικός,) Congenital.

Synhymen'sis, Synymensis.

Synimen'sis, Synymensis.

Synize'sis, Considentia, see Syneze'sis.

Syneuro'sis, (συννεύρωσις, from syn, νεύρον, 'a tendon,' and osis,) Syndesmosis.

Synnévrose, Syndesmosis.

Syn'ocha, (from συήχω, — syn, and έχω, 'I have or hold,' — 'I continue,') Inflam'matory or Dynam'ic Fe'ver, Angiop'gra, Stenop'gra, Fe'bris causo'des seu caumato'des seu deū'rens seu ar'dens seu contin'ua sanguin'ea seu contin'ua non pu'tris seu acmas'tica seu acū'ta seu acū'ta sanguin'ea seu continens seu continens non pu'trida seu angioten'ica seu sthen'ica seu sanguin'ea seu inflam'mato'ria, Humot'onos, Syn'ochus (Vogel), S. impu'tris (Galen), Ene'cia cau'ma seu ton'ica, Phlogop'gra, Cau'ma, Calentu'ra contin'ua, (F.) Fièvre ardente ou continente inflammatoire ou sanguine ou irritative ou angioténique ou inflammatoire, Gastro-entérite intense; General inflammation. A species of continued fever, characterized by increased heat; and by quick, strong, and hard pulse; urine high-colored; disturbance of mind slight. It requires, of course, the most active treatment.

SYNOCHA RHEUMATICA, Rheumatism, acute — s. Vaccina, Vaccina.

Syn'ochal, Synocha'lis. Relating to, or having the characters of, synocha.

Syn'ochus, (συνόχος, 'continued,') Enc'cia syn'ochus, Fe'bris len'ta, (Linnaeus.) Continued fever, compounded of synocha and typhus:—in its commencement often resembling the former; in its progress, the latter: Mix'ed fe'ver, Com'mon contin'ued fe'ver, Syn'ochoid fe'ver. See Acmasticus, Continued fever, Fever, and Typhus.

SYNOCHUS, Synocha—s. Biliosa, Fever, gastric, Fever, bilious—s. Catarrhalis, Influenza—s. Ictero-des, Fever, yellow — s. Imputris, Synocha — s. Miliaria, Miliary fever — s. Varicella, Varicella.

Synol'cē, (συνολκη, from syn, and elkw, 'I draw,') Spasm.

Synosteog'raphy, Synosteograph'ia, (syn, osteon, 'a bone,' and γραφω, 'I describe,') The part of anatomy which describes the joints.

Synosteol'ogy, Synosteolog'ia, (syn, osteon, 'a bone,' and λογος, 'a treatise,') A treatise on the joints.

Synosteosis, Synosto'sis, (syn, osteon, 'a bone,' and osis,) Union by means of bone.

Synosteotomy, Synosteotom'ia, (syn, osteon, 'a bone,' and τεμνω, 'to cut,') Dissection of joints.

Synosto'sis, Synostosis. The term has also been applied to the premature and abnormal obliteration of the sutures, as a cause of deformity and irregularity of the human skull.

Synostot'ic, Synostoticus. Relating or appertaining to Synostosis.

Synote, (syn, and ους, ωτος, 'an ear,') A genus of double monsters of I. G. St. Hilaire, the second face of which is represented only by two ears close together, or a double median ear.

Synovia, (syn, and ων, 'ovum, an egg,') Mucila'go, Un'guen seu Unguentum seu Smeg'ma articula'rē, Azun'gia articula'ris, Mucila'go articula'rū seu junctura'rū, Hu'mor articula'ris, Hydrar'thrus, Hu'mor seu Hu'midum nati'vum seu Glu'ten articula'rū, Arthrohydrinē, Jointoil, (F.) Synovie. A fluid resembling the white of egg, which is exhaled by the synovial membranes surrounding the movable articulations. The synovia has been found, on analysis, to consist of water, albumen, soda, chloride of sodium, phosphate of lime, and—Fourcroy fancied—uric acid. Its use is to lubricate the joints, and the sheaths in which tendons play.

Synov'ial, Synovia'lis. That which relates to the synovia.

SYNOVIAL CAP'SULES, see Membrane.

SYNOVIAL CYSTS. These include dropsies and enlargements of synovial sheaths, as from localized pressure, under which bursæ may also be newly formed; cystic transformation, and dilatation from follicular obstruction.

SYNOVIAL GLANDS, Hav'ers's Glands, Glandulæ articula'res seu Synovia'les seu Haversia'næ, are the secretory fringes which float in the interior of the synovial capsules. See Capsules. They do not seem to be glandular. They have been called Synov'ial fimbriæ, (F.) Franges synoviales.

SYNOVIAL MEMBRANES, see Membrane.

Synovitis, gen. Synov'itidis, (synovia, and itis,) A term, badly compounded, applied at times to inflammation of the synovial membrane, arthrophlogosis synovia'lis. When it affects the bursæ, it is sometimes called Bursitis. When of strumous origin, the inflammation is often accompanied with a gelatiniform or pulpy degeneration of the synovial membrane, constituting Arthrit'is Gelatinosa.

SYNOVITIS RHEUMATISMA'lis, Rheumatism, (acute).

Syn'tasis, (συντασις, from συντείνω, — syn, and τείνω, 'I stretch, — I strain,') Tension of parts: hence συντακτικά are medicines which render parts tense. Syntex'is, on the other hand, means Colli-

qua'tio, or wasting of the body, (from συντηκω, 'I melt together,')

Syntax'is, (συνταξις, from syn, and τασσειν, 'to put in order,') Articulation, Reduction, Taxis—s. Serrata, see Suture.

Syntecop'ya, (syntexis, and πυρ, 'fever,') Hectic fever.

Syntectycop'ya, Hectic fever.

Synteno'sis, (syn, τενω, 'a tendon,' and osis,) A species of articulation in which two bones are joined by means of tendon; as the sesamoid bones with the toes, the rotula with the tibia, &c.

Syntere'sis, (συντηρησις, from syn, and τερειν, 'to keep,') Prophylaxis.

Syntere'ticus, (συντηρητικός,) Prophylactic.

Syntex'is, (συντηξις,) Colliquation, Consumption, see Syntasis.

Synthena. A term employed by Paracelsus to designate a species of epilepsy, accompanied by cardialgia and tormina.

Syn'thesis, (συνθεσις,) Reu'nio, 'composition or putting together,' (from syn, and τιθημι, 'I place,') A surgical operation, which consists in uniting parts that are divided; and approximating such as are separated or distant from each other. Reu'nio par'tium separata'rū, Syn'thesis of continu'ity, means the union of the edges of a wound, or the approximation of the extremities of a fractured bone. Syn'thesis of contigu'ity is the reduction of displaced organs; as in cases of hernia and luxations. See Composition.

Synthetis'mus. The aggregate of operations and means for reducing a fracture, and maintaining it reduced:—comprising extension, counter-extension, coaptation, and bandaging.

Syn'tonin, (syn, and τονος, 'a muscle,') see Fibrin.

Syntrim'ma, gen. Syntrim'matis, (συντριμμα, from syn, and τριβω, 'I rub,') Contritio.

Syntrip'sis, (συντριψις,) Contritio.

Syn'trophus, (συντροφος, from syn, and τροφω, 'I nourish,') Connutritus.

Synulo'sis, (συνουλωσις, from syn, ουλω, 'I cicatrize,' and osis,) Cicatrization.

Synulo'tica, (συνουλωτικά,) Cicatrisantia.

Synu'sia, (συνουσία,) Coition.

Synymen'sis, Synhymen'sis, Synymen'sis, (syn, and ύμην, 'a membrane,') Union of bones by membrane, as in the case of the bones of the head in the foetus. Syndesmosis.

Sy'phac, Peritoneum.

Syph'ilides, (F.) Syphilides, Dermo-syphilides, Dermatosies vérolenses, (from syphilis,) The cutaneous eruptions that appertain to constitutional syphilis are so denominated by the French writers. The principal varieties of these are Syphilitic mac'ulæ, or pigmentary stains, exanthematous eruptions, and a variety of papular, vesicular, and other Syphiloder'mata.

Syphilidia'ter, gen. Syphilidia'tri, Syphilidia'trus, (syphilis, and ιατρος, 'a physician,') A pox doctor. One who occupies himself in treating syphilis.

Syphilidog'raphy, Syphilography.

Syphilidol'ogy, Syphilology.

Syphilidoma'nia, Syphilomania.

Syph'iline, (from syphilis,) A term proposed by Dr. Wm. Farr for the specific zymotic principle by which syphilis is propagated.

Syphilipho'bia, (syphilis, and φοβος, 'dread,') Monoma'nia Syphilitica. A morbid dread of syphilis, giving rise to fancied symptoms of the disease; a form of hypochondriasis.

Syph'ilis, gen. Syphil'idis, S. vene'rea seu maligna, Syphilis, Syphilis'mus, Cachex'ia seu Caco'hym'ia Vene'rea, Ma'lum vene'reum, Puden'dagra, Me'vium, Lu'es, L. vene'rea seu syphilis, Mor'bus Gal'licus seu Ital'icus seu Hispan'icus seu Neapo'litanus seu Ind'icus seu aphrodis'ius, Patur'sa, Basilis'eus, Bo'x, Sod'oma Gallo'rū, Vene'real, Vene'real Disease, Pox, French Pox, French Crust, French Distem'per, Foul or Bad Disease, old cant term Grin'comes, (Prov.) Pip, (Sc.) Glengore, Glengour, Grandgore, (F.) Vérole ou Grosse Vérole, Maladie vénérienne, Mal de Naples, Mal Français, Maladie de Vénus. (The etymology of syphilis is unknown. Some consider it to proceed from cus, 'a hog,' and φίλω, 'I love;' others, from συν, 'with,' and φίλω, 'I love;' and others, with more probability, from σιφίλος, — formed, by contraction, from σιπαλος, — 'a reproach,' &c.) It is an infectious disease, communicable by coition, or by the contact of parts that are only lined with a thin epidermis; as the lips, nipple, &c. It generally makes its first appearance by a chancre, followed sooner or later by a bubo. The chancre is a primary symptom, and there are other symptoms which are secondary or constitutional. These are: — ulcers in the throat; copper-colored blotches on the skin; pains in the bones, nodes, &c.: the last are sometimes termed tertiary phenomena. Hence the terms Primary Syphilis, S. Primigenia, (F.) S. Primitiva; Secondary Syphilis, S. Secundaria, (F.) S. Secondaire; and Tertiary Syphilis, S. Inveterata, (F.) S. Tertiaire, are applied to the disease according to the stage of the syphilitic infection. The origin of syphilis is not known. It is believed to have been introduced into Europe from America, at the end of the 15th century. [?] Its progress is extremely variable, as well as its duration, which is often unlimited, if left to itself. Mercury is by many esteemed the best remedy, but the disease admits of cure without it. Almost every antisyphilitic composition, whose use is attended with success, probably contains mercury united with diaphoretics or other medicines. It is generally sufficient to keep the mouth sore for a fortnight for the cure of chancre: for venereal sorethroat, and other recent constitutional symptoms, eight or ten weeks may be required; and, of course, a longer time, if these symptoms have persisted longer. Sometimes, after mercury has been given for a time, the symptoms continue stationary; and do not yield until the mercury has been discontinued, and tonics and eutrophics have been administered. The preparations of iodine have been much used in the repellent treatment of this disease, especially the iodide of potassium.

SYPHILIS COR'PUSCLES. Microscopic bodies, said to have been noticed by some observers in the blood of syphilitic patients.

SYPHILIS HEREDITARIA, S. ingenita, Hereditary Syphilis. Constitutional syphilis of the child, derived during foetal life from one of the parents.

SYPHILIS IN'DICA, Framboesia — s. Ingenita, Syphilis hereditaria — s. Inveterata, see Syphilis — s. Primary, see Syphilis — s. Primigenia, see Syphilis — s. Primitiva, see Syphilis.

SYPHILIS PSEUDOSYPHILIS, Lu'es Syphiloïdes, Pseudosyphilis. A term given to ulcers or other affections that resemble syphilis, but are indeterminate in their character—the symptoms being irregular in their appearance, and usually yielding spontaneously, or under the use of tonics, change of air, &c. The condition has not been at all well defined. Sivvens, Radesyge, &c., have been referred to this head.

SYPHILIS, SEC'NDARY, see Syphilis — s. Secundaria, see Syphilis — s. Tertiary, see Syphilis — s. Vaccinal, Vaccino-syphilis.

Syphilitisation, Syphilization.

Syphilis'mus, Syphilis.

Syphilit'ic, Syphilit'icus, (F.) Syphilitique, Vérolique, Vérolé. Belonging or relating to, or affected with, syphilis, (F.) Syphilité.

Syphiliza'tion, Syphiliza'tio, (F.) Syphilisation. Saturation of the system by inoculation with the matter of syphilis. It has been used as a curative procedure in syphilis, as well as a preventive of that disease, and for the cure of other cachexiæ, as cancer.

Syphiloderm'a, pl. syphiloder'mata, gen. Syphiloderm'atis, (syphilis, and δέρμα, 'skin.') A cutaneous eruption of a syphilitic character.

Syphilog'eny, Syphilogen'ia, (syphilis, and γεννᾶω, 'I generate.') The origin or generation of syphilis.

Syphilog'raper, (syphilis, and γραφῶ, 'I describe.') A writer on syphilis.

Syphilog'raphy, Syphilograph'ia, Syphilidog'raphy, Syphilidograph'ia, (syphilis, and γραφῶ, 'I describe.') A description of syphilis.

Syph'iloid, Syphiloïdes, (syphilis, and εἶδος, 'resemblance.') Resembling syphilis; as 'a syph'iloid affection.'

Syphilol'ogy, Syphilolog'ia, Syphilodol'ogy, Syphilodolog'ia, (syphilis, and λογία, 'a discourse.') The doctrine of syphilis and its management. A treatise on syphilis.

Syphilo'ma, gen. Syphilo'matis, (syphilis, and ομα.) A term given by Wagner to what he regards as a specific syphilitic new formation, having a definite structure of cells and nuclei; just as there is a specific carcinomatous new formation in cancer.

Syphiloma'nia, Syphilidoma'nia — vulgarly, Nod'dle Pox. A mania, with which some persons are affected, so that they subject themselves to antivenereal treatment, under the erroneous impression that they are affected with syphilis.

Syph'ita, Somnambulism.

Sy'phon, see Siphon.

Syrigmopho'nia, (σyrιγμος, 'piping,' and φωνή, 'voice.') A piping state of the voice.

Syrig'mus, (σyrιγμος.) Tinnitus aurium.

Syrin'ga, (from syrinx.) Eustachian tube, Fistula, Syringe, Trachea — s. Clysmatica, Syringe (clyster).

SYRIN'GA VULGA'RIS, Li'lac vulga'ris, Common Li'lac. Ord. Oleaceæ. The leaves and fruit are bitter and somewhat acrid, and have been used as tonics and antiperiodics.

Syr'inge, Syr'inx, Syrin'ga, Si'pho, Siphun'culus, Squirt, (F.) Seringue, (from σyrιγξ, gen. σyrιγγος, 'a pipe.') A familiar apparatus through which any liquor is injected.

Various forms of syringe are used in medicine and surgery.

SYR'INGE, CLYS'TER, Syrin'ga clysmat'ica, Clystanti'um, (F.) Clysopompe. A syringe for administering clysters.

SYR'INGE, CUP'PING, Antlia sanguisuga.

Syrin'ges (pl. of syrinx) Aërif'eri, 'air tubes,' see Bronchia.

Syring'icus, (from syrinx.) Fistulous.

Syringi'tis Eusta'chii, (syringa, and itis.) Inflammation of the Eustachian tube.

Syring'mus, (σyrιγμος.) Tinnitus aurium.

Syringo'des, (σyrιγγώδης.) Fistulous.

Syringotome, Syringotomus, Syringot'omus, (syrinx, 'fistula,' and τεμνῶ, 'to cut.') A surgical instrument, formerly used in the operation for fistula in ano. It is a bistoury, concave at its edge, and terminated by a long, flexible, probe-pointed stylet. This stylet or probe was first introduced by the external opening of the fistula into the rectum, whence it was drawn externally through the anus, carrying with it the cutting edge of the instrument, which divided the intermediate parts.

Syringot'omy, Syringotom'ia. The operation for fistula in ano by incision.

Syr'inx, gen. Syrin'gis, (σyrιγξ, gen. σyrιγγος.) Eustachian tube, Fistula, Syringe, Trachea — s. Hiera, Vertebral column.

Syrmais'mus, (from σyrμαίω, 'I evacuate.') A gentle evacuation by vomiting or stool.

Syrop, Sirop.

Syr'up, Sir'up, Syrupus or Syr'upus, Serapi'

um, Scrape'um, (F.) Sirop, Syrop, Saccharolē liquide, Saccharhydrolē, (derived, according to some, from σῆμα, 'I draw,' and σῆμα, 'juice;' but, more probably, from the Arabic Sirup, Sirab, or Scharab, which signifies 'a potion.') A saturated solution of sugar in water, either simply or united with some vegetable or other principle. Syrups, in general, require two pounds of sugar to the pint, and they are judged to be sufficiently boiled when a portion, taken up in a spoon, flows like oil. In the Pharmacopœia of the United States, it was directed that syrups, whose density is not precisely determined by the process, should have the s.g. 1.261 when boiling, and about 1.319 at ordinary temperatures. Syrups should be kept in small bottles in a cool place. They are chiefly used to render medicines palatable. See Syrupus simplex.

SYR'UP, VEG'ETABLE, OF VELNO, (F.) Sirop végétal de Velno. (Made of the roots of burdock and dandelion, leaves of spearmint, senna, coriander, liquorice, sugar, and water.) It has been prescribed as a eutrophic, especially in syphilis; but, like the syrups of sarsaparilla, is, perhaps, mainly indebted for its efficacy to the sugar. The corrosive chloride of mercury is often added to it.

SYR'UP OF VIN'EGAR, Syrupus aceti—s. of Violets, Syrupus violæ—s. of Wild cherry bark, Syrupus pruni Virginianæ.

Syr'upus, S. simplex.

SYR'UPUS ACA'CIÆ, Syr'up of Gum Ar'abic, (F.) Sirop de Gomme. (Acaciæ, 3ij., Sacchar., 3xiv., Aquæ, f3viiij. Dissolve the gum in the water; add the sugar, dissolve with a gentle heat, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) A good pectoral syrup. Dose, f3j. to f3ij.

SYR'UPUS ACE'TI, S. Ac'idi Aceto'si, Syr'up of Vin'egar, (F.) Sirop de Vinaigre. (Aceti, Oijss., Sacch. purif., lbijss. Boil to form a syrup. Ph. E.) It is refrigerant and antiseptic. Dose, f3j. to f3ij.

SYR'UPUS AC'IDI ACETO'SI, S. aceti.

SYR'UPUS AC'IDI CI'TRICI, Syr'up of Cit'ric Ac'id, (F.) Sirop d'acide citrique. (Acid. citric. pulv., 3ij., Ol. limon., Miv., Syrup., Oij. Rub the acid and oil with a fluidounce of the syrup; add the rest of the syrup, and dissolve with a gentle heat. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Virtues the same as those of the Syrupus limonis.

SYR'UPUS AC'IDI TARTAR'ICI, (F.) Sirop d'acide Tartarique, is similarly prepared.

SYR'UPUS CUM Æ'THERE SULPHU'RICO PARA'TUS, Syr'up of E'ther, (F.) Sirop d'éther. (Very Pure sugar, 1000 p., Distilled water, 500 p.; dissolve in the cold, and strain; add Sulphuric ether, 48 p. Shake for five or six days, and draw off the limpid syrup. Ph. L.) Properties like those of ether.

SYR'UPUS AL'LII, Syr'up of Gar'lic, (F.) Sirop d'ail. (Allii recent. concis. et contus., 3vj., Acet. destillat., Oj., Sacchar., 3xxiv. Macerate the garlic with f3x. of the acid, in a glass vessel, for four days; then express the liquid; mix the residue with the remainder of the acid, and express until a pint is obtained by filtration; lastly, introduce the sugar into the clear liquid, and agitate until dissolved. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Use, same as that of garlic. Dose, f3j. to f3iv.

SYR'UPUS ALTHÆ'Æ, S. ex Althæ'a seu de Althæ'a seu Althæ'æ officinalis, Syr'up of Marsh-mallow, (F.) Sirop de Guimauve. (Althææ rad. recent. cont., lbss., Sacch. pur., lbij., Aquæ, Oiv. Boil the root in the water to one-half, and press out the liquor; when cold, defecate; add the sugar, and boil. Ph. L.) Emollient and demulcent. Dose, f3j. to f3ij.

SYR'UPUS AMO'MI ZINGIB'ERIS, S. zingiberis.

SYR'UPUS AMYG'DALÆ, Syrup of Al'monds, S. of Or'geat, Or'geat, (F.) Sirop d'amandes, S. d'or'geat. (Amygdal. dulc., 3xij., Amygdal. amar., 3iv., Aquæ, Oij., Sacchar., 3lxxij. Blanch the almonds, and rub them in a mortar to a very fine paste, adding, during the trituration, three fluidounces of the water, and a pound of the sugar. Mix the paste thoroughly with the remainder of the water; strain with strong expression; add the remainder of the sugar to the strained liquid, and dissolve it with the aid of a gentle heat. Strain the syrup through muslin, and having allowed it to cool, put it into bottles, well stopped, in a cool place. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Demulcent.

SYR'UPUS ANTICAUSO'TICUS, see Anticausodic.

SYR'UPUS ANTISCORBU'TICUS, S. de Armora'ciâ compos'itus, Antiscorbutic Syr'up, (F.) Sirop antiscorbutique, S. de Raifort composé. (Leaves of Cochlearia, Buckbean, Watercresses, Horseradish root, and Bitter oranges, each lbj., Cinnamon, 3jss. Cut, and pour on White wine, lbiv. Macerate for two days; distil over Oj. in a sand-bath; add to this Sugar, lbij., and form a syrup. Again, take what remains in the cucurbit: pass it through cloth; let it rest; decant, and add Sugar, lbij.; make into a syrup, and clarify with white of egg. Mix it with the first while yet warm. Ph. P.) Antiscorbutic, alterative, tonic, stomachic, &c. Dose, fʒij. to fʒij.

SYRUPUS DE ARMORA'CIÂ COMPOS'ITUS, S. anti-scorbuticus.

SYRUPUS AROMAT'ICUS, S. de Artemis'ia compos'itus, Aromatic Syrup, Compound Syrup of Mugwort, (F.) Sirop d'armoise composé. (Tops of artemisia vulgaris, in flower, ʒvj., Inula root, Ligusticum levisticum, and Fennel, each ʒss., Pennyroyal, Catmint, Savine leaves, each ʒvj., Marjoram, Hyssop, Pyrethrum, Rue, Basil, each ʒij., Aniseed and Cinnamon, each ʒix.; bruise and macerate in Hydromel, lbxvii.; distil over Oss.; add to this a pound of sugar. Again, take the liquid that remains in the cucurbit, strain it gently; and add Sugar, lbiv. Then mix the two. Ph. P.) Tonic, emmenagogue, &c.

SYRUPUS DE ARTEMIS'IA COMPOS'ITUS, S. anti-scorbuticus — s. Asparagi, see Asparagus.

SYRUPUS AURANTII, S. Aurantiorum seu Citri Aurantii seu Corticis aurantii seu Aurantii Corticis (Ph. U. S.) seu e Cortic'ibus Aurantiorum seu de Cortic'ibus Aurantiorum, Syrup of Orange peel. (Aurant. dulc. cort. pulv., ʒij., Magnes. carb., ʒss., Sacchar. pulv., ʒxxvii., Alcohol, Aquæ, aa q. s. Moisten the peel with alcohol, fʒss., introduce into a conical percolator, and pour alcohol upon it until fʒvj. of tincture have passed. Evaporate this portion at a temperature not above 120° to fʒij., add the carbonate of magnesium and sugar, ʒj. Rub them together, gradually adding water, Oss. Filter, add sufficient water to make Oj.; dissolve in it the remainder of the sugar with a gentle heat, and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) In the British Pharmacopœia (1867), it is made by mixing Tincture of orange peel, fʒj. with Syrup, fʒvij. Stomachic. Dose, fʒj. to fʒij.

A Syrup of Orange Juice, Orange Sherbet, Syrupus e Succo Aurantiorum, may be made by adding white sugar, lbij., to lbj. of the juice of oranges, strained and clarified.

SYRUPUS AURANTII FLO'RI, Syrup of Orange Flowers, S. Aurantii Floris. (Ph. B., 1867.) (Ag. Aurant. flor., fʒxx., Sacchar., ʒxxxvj. Dissolve the sugar in the water with the aid of a gentle heat. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

SYRUPUS BALSAM'ICUS, S. toluanus.

SYRUPUS CAL'IS, Syrup of Lime, Saccharate of Lime, Su'crate of Lime, is made by adding alcohol to a strong solution of slaked lime in syrup. It was proposed as a substitute for lime-water.

SYRUPUS CAL'IS LACTOPHOSPHATIS, Syrup of Lactophosphate of Lime. An unofficial syrup, variously made; one formula for which includes lactic acid, freshly precipitated phosphate of lime, orange-flower water, and white sugar. See Calcis lactophosphas.

SYRUPUS CARYOPHYLL'LI RU'BRI, S. Infusio'nis flo'rum caryophyllo'rum, S. Dian'thi Caryophyll'li, Syrup of Clove July flower or of Clove Pinks. (Petaltorum dianth., Caryoph. recent. unguibus resectis, lbj., Aquæ bull., Oiv., Sacch. purif., lbvij. Ph. E.) Aromatic.

SYRUPUS CAS'IE SEN'NÆ, S. sennæ.

SYRUPUS DE CICHORIO COMPOS'ITUS, S. de Rhe'o, Compound Syrup of Succory, (F.) Sirop de chicorée composé, Syrup de Rhubarbe composé. (Root of Succory, ʒvj., Leaves of succory, ʒix., Leaves of fumitory and scolopendrium, each ʒij., Alkekengi berries, ʒij. Boil in water, Oxiv. to Oxij.; pass through cloth, and dissolve in it white sugar, lbv. Boil till it has the consistence of syrup. Again, take Water, Oviiij., Rhubarb, ʒvj., Yellow Sanders and Cinnamon, each ʒss. Infuse for twenty-four hours; pass through linen, and add the preceding syrup. Ph. P.) It is laxative and stomachic. Dose, fʒj. to fʒss.

SYRUPUS CINCHO'NÆ CUM VI'NO, S. de kinâ kinâ cum vino.

SYRUPUS CINCHO'NÆ, Syrup of Cincho'nia. (Simple syrup, one pound, Sulphate of cinchonia, nine grains. Mix.) Six spoonfuls are commonly sufficient to arrest an intermittent.

SYRUPUS CITRI AURANTII, S. aurantii — s. Citri medicæ, S. limonum.

SYRUPUS COC'CI, Syrup of Cochineal. (Cocc. cont., Div., Ag. destillat. bullient., Oj. [Imp. meas.], Sacchar., lbij. vel q. s., Sp. rectificat., fʒijss. vel q. s. Ph. L.) Chiefly used as a coloring agent.

SYRUPUS CUM CODEINÂ, (F.) Sirop de Codéine. The French Codex (1866) has a syrup of codeia, made by dissolving codeine in distilled water, and adding white sugar.

SYRUPUS COL'CHICI AUTUMNA'LI, S. Colchici, Syrup of Mead'ow Saffron. (Rad. colch. autumn. recent., ʒj., Acidi acetosi, fʒxvi., Sacch. pur., ʒxxvj. Macerate the root in the vinegar for two days, occasionally shaking the vessel; then strain with gentle expression. To the strained fluid add the sugar, and boil to a syrup. Ph. E.) Diuretic, antiarthritic. Dose, fʒj. to fʒss. or more.

SYRUPUS CORTICIS AURANTII, S. aurantii — s. e Succo citrionum, S. limonum.

SYRUPUS CRO'CI, Syrup of Saffron, (F.) Sirop de Safran. (Croci stigmat., ʒj., Aquæ ferrent., Oj., Sacch. purif., lbijss. Ph. L.) Cardiac. Chiefly used for coloring.

SYRUPUS DIACODION, Diacodium — s. Dianthi caryophylli, S. caryophylli rubri.

SYRUPUS EMETINÆ, Syrup of Emetine. (Simple syrup, lbj., Emetine, gr. xvj.) In small doses, expectorant, and in large, emetic.

SYRUPUS EMPYREUMAT'ICUS, Molasses — s. Ferri iodidi, Liquor ferri iodidi — s. Ferri phosphatis, see Ferri phosphas — s. Fuscus, Molasses.

SYRUPUS HEMIDESMI, Syrup of Indian Sarsaparilla, Syrup of Hemidesmus. (Hemidesm. cont., ʒiv., Ag. destillat. bullient., Oj., Sacchar. purificat., ʒxxvii. Ph. B., 1867.) A weak preparation of hemidesmus. Dose, fʒj.

SYRUPUS HYDRARGYRI, Syrupus de mercurio mediante gummi — s. Infusionis florum caryophyllorum, Syrupus caryophylli rubri.

SYRUPUS IPECACUAN'NÆ, Syrup of Ipecacuanha, (F.) Sirop d'Ipecacuanha. (Ipecac. in pulv. crass., ʒj., Alcohol. dilut., Oj., Sacchar., lbijss., Aquæ, q. s. Macerate the ipecacuanha in the alcohol for fourteen days, and filter. Evaporate the filtered liquor to six fluidounces, again filter, and add sufficient water to make the liquid measure a pint; add the sugar, and evaporate by a water-bath to a proper consistence.) In the Ph. U. S., 1873, it is directed to be made by mixing Ext. Ipecac. fluid., fʒij., with Syrup, fʒxxx. It may also be made by displacement. The French Codex (1866) contains also Sirop d'Ipecacuanha composé, S. de Desessarts.

SYRUPUS DE JALAP'Æ, Syrup of Jal'ap. (Jalapæ pulv., ʒx., Sem. coriandr., Fœnicul. dulc., aa ʒss., Aquæ, fʒxijss., Sacch., ʒxxv. Ph. P.) Cathartic. Dose, fʒij. to fʒss. for children.

SYRUPUS DE KI'NÂ KI'NÂ CUM VI'NO, S. Cincho'ne cum vi'no, Syrup of Cincho'na with wine, (F.) Sirop de quinquina au vin. (Cort. cinchonæ officinalis, ʒij., Ext. cinchonæ, ʒvj., Vini albi [Vin. Lunel. seu enjuevis ei similis], Oj., Alcohol. [s. g. '985 to '915], fʒj., Sacchar. alb., lbijss. Bruise the cinchona; gradually add the alcohol, so as to form a soft mass; pour on the wine; macerate for two days, and strain. Dissolve the extract, add the sugar, and make a syrup. Ph. P.) Dose, fʒss. to fʒj.

SYRUPUS KRAMER'IE, Syrup of Rhat'any. (F.) Sirop de Ratanhia. (Ext. kramer. fluid., fʒxij., Syrup. fʒxxiv. Mix them. Ph. U. S., 1873. It may also be made by displacement from Kramer. in pulv. crass., lbj., Sacchar., lbijss., Aquæ, q. s.)

An adjunct to astringent mixtures; or given in diarrhoea, a teaspoonful to a child.

SYRUPUS LACTUCARII, Syrup of Lactucarium, (F.) Sirop de Thridace. (Lactuc., \mathfrak{z} j., Syrup., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ xiv., Alcohol. dil., q. s. Rub the lactucarium with enough of diluted alcohol to give a syrupy consistence. Pass half a pint of tincture by percolation; evaporate, at a heat not above 160° , to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ j.; mix with the syrup previously heated, and strain, while hot. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Anodyne; but not of much efficacy.

SYRUPUS LIMO'NIS, S. limonum—s. Succi limonis, S. limonum.

SYRUPUS LIMO'NUM, S. Limonis (Ph. U. S.) seu citri med'icæ seu e suc'co citro'num seu e suc'co limo'num seu suc'ci limo'nis, Syrup of Lemon, Lemon Syrup, (F.) Sirop de Limon. (Limon. succ. colat., Oj., Sacchar., \mathfrak{z} xlvij., Aquæ, Oj. Mix, dissolve, and strain.) Cooling and agreeable.

SYRUPUS E MECO'NIO, S. papaveris—s. de Melle, Mellitum simplex.

SYRUPUS MERCURIO MEDIAN'TE GUM'MI, S. Hydrargyri, Mercurius gummosus Plenck'ii, (F.) Sirop de Mercure, Mercur gommeux de Plenck. (Hydrargyri pur., \mathfrak{z} j., Gum. acaciæ, \mathfrak{z} ij., Syrup. diacod., \mathfrak{z} ss. Rub together till the mercury is extinguished. Ph. P.) Possesses the properties of blue pill. Dose, gr. ij. to viij. or more.

SYRUPUS MOR'I, S. e suc'co muro'rum seu suc'ci mor'i, Syrup of Mulberries, (F.) Sirop de mûres. (Mori succ. colat., Oj., Sacchar. purif., lbj. Ph. L.) Gratefully refrigerant.

SYRUPUS E SUC'CO MORO'RUM, S. mori.

SYRUPUS MORPHILÆ ACETATIS, Syrup of acetate of morphia. (Liq. morphicæ acet., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ j., Syrup., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ xv. Ph. D.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ ss. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ j., as an opiate.

SYRUPUS MORPHILÆ MURIATIS, Syrup of muriate or hydrochlorate of morphia. (Liq. morph. muriat., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ j., Syrup., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ xvij. M. Ph. D.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ ss. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ j., as an opiate. A formula for Sirop de Chlorhydrate de morphine, Sirop de morphine, is given in the French Codex (1866).

SYRUPUS MORPHILÆ SULPHATIS may be made in the same way.

SYRUPUS NI'GER, Molasses—s. Opii, see Syrupus papaveris.

SYRUPUS PAPAV'ERIS, S. papaveris somniferi seu papaveris al'bi seu e meco'nio seu de meconio, Diacodium, Syrup of poppies, (F.) Sirop de pavots blancs ou diacode. (Papav. capsul. exsicc., et contus. exemptis seminibus, \mathfrak{z} xxxvj., Spirit. rectificat., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ xvj., Sacchar. purificat., lbj., Aquæ destillat. bullient., q. s.) A process for its preparation is given in the Ph. B., 1867.

The Dublin college had a SYRUPUS O'PII, called Common Syrup of Poppies, which was made by dissolving 18 grains of the Watery Extract of Opium in 18 ounces of boiling water. Properties those of opium and syrup.

A Syrup of Opium, Sirop d'Opium, is official in the French Codex (1866).

SYRUPUS DE PAPAV'ERE ERRAT'ICO, S. rhœados—s. de Pomis compositis, see S. sennæ—s. Proteæ, see Protea mellifera.

SYRUPUS PRU'NI VIRGINIA'NÆ, Syrup of Wild cherry bark. (Pruni Virginian. in pulv. crass., \mathfrak{z} v., Sacchar., \mathfrak{z} xxvij., Aquæ, q. s. Moisten the bark with water; let it stand for 24 hours; transfer it to a percolator; pour water gradually upon it, until a pint of filtered liquor has passed. Add the sugar in a bottle, and dissolve by agitation. Ph. U. S.) Dose, as a demulcent expectorant, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ j. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ ij.

SYRUPUS E PULMON'IBUS VITULI'NIS, see Sirop. SYRUPUS QUI'NIÆ, Syrup of Quinia. (Simple syrup, 2 pints, Sulphate of quinia, 64 grains.) Six spoonfuls are commonly sufficient to arrest an intermittent.

SYRUPUS E QUIN'QUE RADICIBUS, Syrup of five roots, (F.) Sirop des cinq racines, S. diurétique.

(Rad. Apii, Foeniculi, Apii petroselinii, $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} v. Infuse for 24 hours in boiling water, Ojss., and strain. Add Rad. asparag., Rusci aculeati, $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} v., Aquæ, Ovj. Boil and reduce to half; adding, towards the end, the residue of the preceding infusion. Boil again for some minutes; strain, and add White sugar, lbvj. Ph. P.) Aperient and diuretic. Used in obstructions of the liver, spleen, and mesentery; and in dropsy, &c. Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ ss. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ j. or more.

SYRUPUS RHAM'NI, S. Rhamni cathartici seu de Spi'nâ cervi'nâ seu spi'næ cervi'næ, Syrup of Buckthorn, (F.) Sirop de nerprun. (Rhamn. succ., Oiv., Zingib. concis., Pimentæ contrit., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} ij., Sacch. purif., lbvj., or q. s., Spirit rectificat., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ vj.) The process for its preparation is given in Ph. B., 1867. Cathartic, but apt to gripe. Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ iv. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ ij.

A factitious syrup has been made of aloes, dissolved in simple syrup.

SYRUPUS RHE'I, Syrup of Rhubarb. (Rhei in pulv. crass., \mathfrak{z} ij., Alcohol., Oss., Aquæ, Ojss., Sacchar., lbj. Mix the alcohol and water; pour $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ iv. on the rhubarb, mixed with an equal bulk of sand, and allow the whole to stand four hours; put the mass into a percolator, and gradually pour on the alcohol and water. By means of a water-bath, evaporate to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ xij., add the sugar, and make a syrup. Ph. U. S., 1851.) In the Ph. U. S. for 1873, it is made by mixing Ext. Rhei fluid., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ ij., with Syrup, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ xxix. Dose to a child, as a laxative, one or two teaspoonfuls.

SYRUPUS RHE'I AROMAT'ICUS, Aromatic or Spiced Syrup of Rhubarb. (Rhei pulv., \mathfrak{z} ijss., Caryophyl. pulv., Cinnam. pulv., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} ss., Myrist. pulv., \mathfrak{z} ij., Alcohol. dilut., q. s., Syrup., Ovj. Mix the powders, and, having moistened the mixture with $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ ij. of the alcohol, introduce it into a conical percolator, and pour diluted alcohol until a pint of tincture has passed. Add this to the syrup, previously heated, and mix thoroughly.) The aromatic syrup of rhubarb is a gentle carminative cathartic. Dose to a child, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ j.; to an adult, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ j.

SYRUPUS DE RHE'O, Syrupus de cichorio compositus.

SYRUPUS RHÆ'ADOS, S. de papav'erē errat'ico seu papaveris erratici, Syrup of Red Pop'py, (F.) Sirop de coquelicot. The Ph. B. (1867) has a formula for the preparation of this syrup from fresh red poppy petals, refined sugar, distilled water, and rectified spirit. Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ j.

SYRUPUS RO'SÆ, S. rosa'rum solutivus seu e ro'sis sic'cis seu ro'sæ centifoliae seu rosa'ceus solutivus, Syrup of Roses, (F.) Sirop de roses pâles. A formula for this syrup was given in an earlier edition of the London Pharmacopœia. Gently laxative. Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ ij. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}$ jss. or more.

SYRUPUS RO'SÆ GAL'LICÆ, Syrup of Red Roses, (F.) Sirop de roses rouges. Made by moistening red rose, in powder, with diluted alcohol, and, in a percolator, pouring on diluted alcohol until a certain portion of the tincture has passed; evaporating this to a certain point, and adding water; then, having added the sugar, dissolving it with a gentle heat. (Ph. U. S., 1873.) Mildly astringent. Added to stomachic infusions.

SYRUPUS RU'BI, Syrup of Blackberry Root. In the Ph. U. S. (1873) it is directed to be made by mixing fluid extract of blackberry, Oss., with syrup, Ojss. In that of 1863, it was made by percolation. Gently astringent, and used as an addition to prescriptions for diarrhoea of children.

SYRUPUS SAC'CHARI, S. simplex—s. Sarsæ, S. sarsaparillæ.

SYRUPUS SARSAPARIL'LÆ, S. Sarsæ, S. Sarsæ, Syrup of Sarsaparilla, (F.) Sirop de Salsepareille. (Rad. Sarsap. cont., lbj., Aquæ bullient., cong., Sacch. purif., lbj. Macerate the root for 24 hours; boil to Oiv. Strain while hot; add the sugar, and boil. Ph. L.) Used in the same cases as the root. Dose, fʒj. to fʒiv. and more.

SYRUPUS DE SASSAPARILLÆ ET SEN'NÆ COMPOSITUS, Compound Syrup of Sarsaparilla and Sen'na, (F.) Sirop de Cuisinier. (Rad. Sarsap. concis., lbij. Infuse for 24 hours in Warm water, Oxij.; boil for a quarter of an hour; pass with expression, and boil again the residuum in Ox. of water. Reduce this to Ovj., and repeat the operation 2 or 3 times. Mix all the liquors and boil them together with Flowers of borage, White roses, Senna leaves, and Aniseed, each ʒij.; reduce to half; pass, and add Honey, lbij. Boil to a syrup. Ph. P.) It is considered to be alterant, depurative, and sudorific. Dose, fʒss. to fʒij. Corrosive chloride of mercury is sometimes added to it.

A similar syrup, under the name SYRUPUS SASSAPARILLÆ COMPOSITUS, Compound Syrup of Sarsaparilla, (F.) Sirop de Salsepareille Composé, is directed in the Pharmacopœia of the United States. (Sarsaparill. pulv., lbij., Lign. guaiac. pulv., ʒij., Rosæ centifol., Sennæ, Glycyrrhiz., āā ʒij., Ol. Sassafras, Ol. Anisi, āā ℥v., Ol. Gaultheriæ, ℥ij., Aquæ, Oj., Alcohol. dilut., q. s., Sacchar., lbvij. Mix the solid ingredients, except the sugar, with Oij. of diluted alcohol, and let it stand for four days; add in a percolator diluted alcohol until Ovj. of tincture have passed. Evaporate to Oij., add water, filter, add the sugar, dissolve with aid of heat, and strain while hot. Rub the oils with a small portion of the solution, and mix thoroughly with the remainder. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

A syrup under the name of Rob antisiphiliticum de Laffecteur, (F.) Rob ou sirop antisiphilitique de Laffecteur, although a secret preparation, has been much used on the continent of Europe. Numerous formulæ have been given for making it. Bouchardat makes it of sarsaparilla, senna leaves, aniseed, cinnamon, syrup of elder, sugar, and water.

SYRUPUS SAR'ZÆ, S. sarsaparillæ.

SYRUPUS DE SCAMMO'NIO, Syrup of Scammony. (Pulv. scammon., ʒss., Sacch. alb., ʒiv., Alcohol., —s. g. 985 to 915.—fʒvij. Heat the mixture moderately, then set fire to the alcohol with a lighted taper, and agitate constantly, until the flame is extinguished. Suffer it to cool, pass through cloth, and add Syrup of violets, fʒiv. Ph. P.) Each fʒj. contains 20 grains of scammony. Cathartic. Dose, fʒj. to fʒss.

SYRUPUS SCILL'Æ, S. scillit'icus seu scill'æ marit'ime, Syrup of squills. (Acet. scillæ., Oj., Sacch., lbij. Dissolve and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Diuretic, expectorant, and emetic. Used in the same cases as the oxymel.

SYRUPUS SCILL'Æ COMPOSITUS, Mel Scill'æ Compositum, Compound honey of squill, Compound syrup of squill, Hicc syrup. (Scillæ pulv., Senegæ pulv., āā ʒiv., Antim. et Potass. Tart., gr. xlviij., Sacchar., lbijss., Alcohol. dilut., Aquæ, āā q. s. Mix the squill and seneka, moisten the mixture with half a pint of diluted alcohol, let it stand for four days, then by percolation with diluted alcohol obtain a pint of tincture. Boil this for a few minutes, evaporate by means of a water-bath to half a pint, add fʒxiv. of boiling water, and filter. Dissolve in this the sugar, heat to the boiling point, and strain while hot. Dissolve in it while still hot the tartrate, and add enough boiling water through the strainer to make three pints, and mix the whole thoroughly together.)

It is often given as an emetic in cases of croup, and in catarrh, especially in children. Dose, to infants, 10 drops to a drachm, repeated every 15 minutes, if vomiting be desirable.

SYRUPUS SEN'EGÆ, Syrup of Sen'eka. (Senegæ pulv., ʒiv., Sacchar. pulv., ʒxv., Alcohol. dilut., Oij. Made by percolation, evaporation, &c. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

This is a favorite stimulant expectorant with many practitioners. Dose, fʒj. or fʒij.

SYRUPUS SEN'NÆ, S. cas'ia sen'ne, Syrup of Sen'na. (Sennæ, ʒij., Sem. fœnicul. cont., ʒj., Sacch. pur., ʒxv., Aquæ bullient., Oj. Macerate the senna leaves and fennel seeds with a gentle heat for an hour, strain, add the sugar, and make into a syrup.) Cathartic. Dose, fʒij. to fʒjss. or more.

The Parisian Codex formerly had a Syrupus de Sennâ of a compound character, called Syrupus de pomis compos'itus, (F.) Sirop de pommes composé. It contains also borage, bugloss, &c. Dose, fʒss. to fʒij.

SYRUPUS SIM'PLEX, Syrupus, (Ph. U. S.,) S. sacchari, Saccharum clarificatum, Liqueurum, Sim'ple syrup, Syrup, Com'mon syrup of capillaire. (Sacchar. pulv., ʒxxxvj., Aquæ destillat., q. s. Dissolve the sugar by heat in fʒxx. of the water, raise the temperature to the boiling point, and strain while hot. Incorporate with the solution sufficient distilled water through the strainer to make the syrup measure Oij., fʒxij., or weigh ʒiv. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Syrup thus prepared has the specific gravity 1.317. The Ph. B. (1867) has a different formula. Used to cover nauseous tastes, &c.

SYRUPUS DE SPI'NÂ CERVINÂ, Syrupus rhamni — s. de Stœchade communis, see Lavandula.

SYRUPUS TOLUTA'NUS, S. Toluta'ni seu toluif'era bal'sami seu balsam'icus, Balsam'ic syrup, Syrup of Tolu, (F.) Sirop de Baume de Tolu. (Tinct. Tolut., fʒij., Aquæ, Oj., Sacchar., ʒxxxvj., Magnes. carb., gr. cxx. Rub the tincture with the carbonate and ʒij. of sugar, and then with the water; filter, add remainder of sugar, dissolve and strain. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used as a demulcent and to give flavor.

SYRUPUS VIOL'Æ, S. violæ odorat'æ, S. violæ-rum, S. e suc'co violæ-rum, Syrup of violets. (Flor. recent. viol. odorat., lbij., Aq. bull., Oviij., Sacch. pur., lbxv. Macerate in a covered vessel for 24 hours, pass without expression through linen, add the sugar so as to form a syrup. Ph. E.) Very gently laxative. Dose, fʒj. to fʒj.

SYRUPUS E SUC'CO VIOLÆ-RUM, S. violæ.

SYRUPUS ZINGIB'ERIS, S. amo'mi zingiberis, Syrup of gin'ger, (F.) Sirop de gingembre. (Extract. Zingib. Fluid., fʒj., Aquæ, fʒxlj., Sacchar., ʒlxxij., Magnes. carb., gr. clx. Made like syrupus senegæ. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Excitant. Dose, fʒj. to fʒss.

Sys, as a prefix, like Sym.

Sysomiens, (sys, and σωμα, 'body.') A family of double monsters, of I. G. St. Hilaire, characterized by the union or fusion of two bodies surmounted by heads completely separate.

Syspa'sia, (συσπασις, from συσπαιω, —sys, and παιω, 'I draw,' —'I contract.') Clonic spasm, with diminished sensibility and inability of utterance. A genus in Good's nosology, which includes convulsion, epilepsy, and hysteria.

Syspa'sia CONVUL'SIO, Convulsion — s. Epilepsia, Epilepsy — s. Hysteria, Hysteria.

Syssarco'sis, (sys, σαρξ, gen. σαρκος, 'flesh,' and osis,) Commissu'ra os'sium car'nea, Sym'physis os'sium muscula'ris, Connex'io os'sium carno'sa, Carna'tio, Concarna'tio. Union of bones by means of muscles, such as the union of the os hyoides with the lower jaw, of the scapula with the ribs, &c.

Systal'sis, Systole.

Systal'tic, (συσταλτικός,) Systal'ticus, Peristalt'ic, (συστελλω, —sys, and στελλω, —'I contract,') (F.) Sistaltique. A systaltic motion in a part is one in which there is alternate contraction and dilatation. See Systole.

Systat'ica, (from συστατή, — sys, and ιστημι, 'I place,' — 'I associate.') Diseases affecting several or all of the sensorial powers simultaneously; irritation or inertness of mind extending to the muscles or external senses, or of the muscles or external senses extending to the mind — the 4th order, class Neurotica, of Good.

Sys'tem, Syste'ma, (συστήμα, from sys, and ιστημι, 'I place,') (F.) Système. This word, taken in a good sense, means the collection and arrangement of different matters having an analogy to each other, or working towards the same end. In natural history, it means a methodical arrangement of objects for the purpose of facilitating their study. System is, however, sometimes used in an unfavorable sense in physical science, and often means a purely gratuitous supposition, by which the march of nature is attempted to be universally explained, and to which everything is made to bend. In anatomy, system is an assemblage of organs composed of the same tissues and intended for similar functions — for instance, the nervous system, muscular system, &c.

Syste'ma, gen. Syste'matis, System — s. Vascular, Vascular system.

Sys'tematism. A method, according to which every fact of a science is collected around an opinion, true or false. One who reduces things to such a method is called a Sys'tematist.

Sys'tematist, see Systematism.

Sys'tematol'ogy, Systematolog'ia, (systema, and λογος, 'a discourse,') The doctrine of or a treatise on systems.

Système, System — s. Vasculaire à sang noir, see Vascular — s. Vasculaire à sang rouge, see Vascular.

System'ic or Sys'temic. Belonging to the general system — as 'systemic circulation' in contradistinction to the 'pulmonic.'

Sys'tolé, (συστολή, from sys, and στέλλω, 'I contract,') Systal'sis, Constrict'io, Contract'io seu Angusta'tio seu Submis'sio seu Mica'tio cor'dis. The movement of constriction or contraction of the heart, to give impulse to the blood, or to cause its progression. It is opposed to the Diastole of the organ.

Systol'ic or Sys'tolic, Systol'icus, (F.) Systolique. Relating to the systole of the heart, — as 'systolic murmur.'

Sythe, ([Sax.] þican, 'to sigh,') Suspirium.

Syzyg'ium Nervo'rum, (συσζυγος, 'united,' from sys, and ζυγος, 'a yoke,') Par nervorum.

T.

T-bandage, T fas'cia, Fas'cia T-for'mis seu Heliodo'ri, Cru'cial Ban'dage. A bandage shaped like the letter T. It consists of a strip of linen, of variable length and breadth, the middle of which is attached, at right angles, to the extremity of another strip, also of variable length and breadth. When two such strips are attached, at a distance from each other, the bandage is called a double T. This bandage is used, principally, for supporting the dressings after the operation for fistula in ano, in diseases of the perineum, groin, anus, &c.

T-FAS'CIA, T-bandage.

Tabac, 'tobacco,' Nicotiana tabacum — t. des Montagnes, Arnica montana — t. des Savoyards, Arnica montana — t. des Vosges, Arnica montana.

Taba'ci Fo'lia, Nicotiana tabacum.

Taba'cum, 'tobacco,' Nicotiana tabacum.

Tab'anus, 'the horsefly.' A troublesome fly in the Hudson's Bay territory, called, by the voyageurs, Bulldog, which makes a perforation like a leechbite, from which it sucks the blood.

Tabardillo (S.). A kind of highly adynamic fever, common in South America.

Tabarzet, Saccharum album.

Tab'asheer, Tab'aschir, Tab'axir. A substance found in the knots of the bamboo, in the East Indies, as a consequence of a morbid condition of the part. It is distinguished for its great proportion of silicic acid, in combination with a small quantity of mineral and vegetable matters; as well as for its slight refractive property. It has been used in obstruction of the bowels. The sweet juice of the bamboo stalks has also been called Tabasheer.

Tabefac'tion, (tabes, and facere, 'to make,') Emaciation.

Tab'efy, Emaciate.

Tabella, Tab'ula, Tabula'tum, Lozan'ga, Lozan'gia, Mor'sulus, Morsell'us, Loz'enge, Tessell'a, (F.) Tablette, Losange. A solid medicine, composed of a powder, sugar, and mucilage, Electua'- rium solidum; and generally shaped like a disk. See Pastil and Troch. The three comprise the Saccharolés solides.

TABEL'LA, (dim. of tubula, 'a table,') Table.

TABEL'LA Absorben'tes, T. de magnesiâ.

TABEL'LA AC'IDI OXAL'ICI, T. ad si'tem, Loz'enges of Oxal'ic Ac'id. (Acid. oxalic., 3j., Sacch. alb., 3ss., Ol. limonis, gtt. xij. seu gtt. xvij. Make into lozenges with Mucilage of gum tragacanth. Ph. P.) Lozenges are made in the same way with the citric and tartaric acids. They are refrigerant.

TABEL'LA DE ALTHÆ'Â, Loz'enges of Marsh'-mallows. (Rad. althææ pulv., 3jss., Sacchar. alb. pulv., 3ivss.; f. massa. Ph. P.) Demulcent; expectorant.

sentériques, Phthisie mésentérique. An engorgement and tubercular degeneration of the mesenteric glands, followed by emaciation and general disorder of the nutritive functions. The disease is often owing to inflammation or irritation of the lining membrane of the intestines, giving occasion to enlargement of the glands of the mesentery—as injury to the upper or lower extremities causes inflammation and enlargement of the lymphatic glands of the axilla and groin. It occurs particularly in children of a scrofulous diathesis, and in those who are weaned too early or fed on indigestible substances. Diarrhoea, emaciation, anorexia, or immoderate appetite, hardness and swelling of the abdomen, and, towards the end, hectic fever, are the chief symptoms of this affection, the prognosis of which is unfavorable. On opening the bodies of those who die of the disease, the mesenteric glands are found disorganized, tubercular, or in a more or less advanced state of suppuration. The treatment is the same as in scrofulosis. Frictions may be added over the abdomen and spine, and mercury given in small doses, so as to excite a new action in the system. The food must be easy of digestion, and the bowels be kept soluble.

Tarsophy'ma, gen. Tarsophy'matis, (tarsus, and φυμα, 'a tumor,') A swelling of the tarsus.

Tarsoraphy, Tarsorrhaph'ia, Tarsorrhaph'ia, (tarsus, and ραφή, 'suture,') An operation for diminishing the size of the opening between the eyelids when it is enlarged by surrounding cicatrices.

Tarsot'omy, Tarsotom'ia, (tarsus, and τομή, 'incision,') The section or removal of the tarsal cartilages.

Tar'sus, (ταρσος) Plan'ta pri'ma seu Rasce'ta seu Rasce'ta pe'dis, Pe'dium, Clavic'ulæ pe'dis no'dus. 1. The posterior part of the foot. The tarsus consists of 7 bones arranged transversely in two rows, between which amputation is sometimes performed. The first or Tib'ial row, (F.) Première rangée, R. jambière, consists of the astragalus and os calcis; the second or metatarsal, (F.) Seconde rangée, R. métatarsienne, of the scaphoides, cuboides, and three ossa cuneiformia. 2. The Tar'si, Tar'sal car'tilages, Tar'sal fibrocartilages, Or'choi seu Or'chi, Crepid'ines seu Coro'næ seu Che'læ seu Un'guæ Palpebra'rum, Thar'si, Cil'ia, are two small cartilaginous layers, seated in the substance of the free edge of each eyelid. The upper is larger and broader than the lower. Both commence at the bifurcated extremity of the tendon of the orbicularis palpebrarum, and pass to the opposite commissure of the eyelids. They are broader in the middle than at their extremities.

Tar'tar, (from tart, 'acid' [?],) Antimonium tartarizatum (improperly), Potassæ supertartras impurus—t. Calcareous, Potassæ subcarbonas—t. Crystals of, Potassæ supertartras—t. Emetic, Antimonium tartarizatum—t. Salt of, see Potash and Potassæ subcarbonas—t. Soluble, Potassæ tartras, see Potash—t. of the Teeth, Odontolithus.

Tarta'rei Mor'bi. A term employed by Paracelsus to designate certain diseases which he attributed to tartar.

Tar'tari Crystal'li, Potassæ supertartras.

Tartar'ic Ac'id, Ac'idum tartar'icum seu tartar'osum seu tar'tari essentia'lē, A'cor tartar'icus, Sal tar'tari essentia'lē, Tarta'reous ac'id, (F.) Acide tartrique. (Potassæ bitart., lbjss., Aq. destillat. ferv., cong. ij., Crete ppt., lbj., Acidi sulph., lbj. Boil the bitartrate with two gallons of the water, and gradually add the prepared chalk until no more bubbles appear; let the tartrate of lime subside; then pour off the fluid, and wash the tartrate of lime with distilled water until it is tasteless. Pour upon it the sulphuric acid, diluted with three pints of the distilled water, boil for half an hour with repeated stirring, and filter through calico; evaporate to sp. gr. 1.21, let it cool, separate crystals of sulphate of lime, evaporate, crystallize, and purify by filtration, etc. Ph. B., 1867.) It is refrigerant and antiseptic, but is chiefly used for making effervescent draughts with soda.

Tartar'ic Lemonade, Tartaric Acid Lemonade, is made by adding syrup of tartaric acid to water.

Ta'sis, (τασις,) Extension, Tension.

Taste, (from [F.] tâter, [old F.] taster, 'to taste, feel,' [G.] tasten, 'to feel,') Gus'tus, Gen'sis, Gen'ma, Geuth'mos, (F.) Goût. One of the five external senses which instructs us of the savors of bodies, and of which the tongue is the principal organ. Gusta'tion, Gusta'tio, is the exercise of this faculty. In disease the taste frequently becomes variously vitiated. The nerves of taste are probably the glossopharyngeal, and, perhaps, also, the lingual branch of the fifth pair. See Savor.

Tatouage, Tattooing.

Tattoo'ing, (F.) Tatouage. A practice with the South Sea Islanders of puncturing the skin, and forcing coloring matters into the punctures. Sailors in all countries are in the custom of practising it by rubbing or forcing gunpowder into the punctures. The figures thus formed remain through life.

The process has also been employed surgically, as in cases of opacity of the cornea.

Tatzé. The fruit of Myrsina Africa'na, a native of Abyssinia, the Cape of Good Hope, the Azores, and Algeria, which is used as a tœnia-fuge.

Taupe, Talpa.

Taur'in. A substance found in the decomposed bile of the intestines and the muscles of the mollusca.

Tauroch'olic Ac'id, see Cholic acid.

Taurol'la, (ταυρος, 'a bull,' and κόλλα, 'glue,') Glue made of the ears and genitals of the bull. It was formerly much esteemed.

Taur'us, (ταυρος,) Penis, Perinæum. Of old, the lower part of the male organ with the raphe extending to the anus.

Tax'is, (ταξις, 'arrangement,' from τασσω, 'I order,' 'I arrange,') Reposit'io, Reduc'tio, Syn-tax'is. A methodical pressure exerted by the hand on a hernial tumor, for the purpose of reducing it. This operation is generally easy in herniæ that are free from adhesions, of small size, and with a large opening into the sac; but it is very difficult and frequently impracticable in those that are adherent or strangulated. To perform the taxis, the patient should be put in the horizontal posture, and in one in which the parietes of the abdomen are relaxed. The manual procedure varies in each species of hernia. In all cases, too strong pressure of the parts must be avoided; as inflammation and gangrene might be induced. The displaced organs must be pushed into the abdomen, according to the direction of the axis of the hernial sac. The reduction is sometimes favored by bloodletting ad deliquium; the warm bath; warm fomentations; tobacco; emollient glysters; and, at times, by cold applications, as ice, &c. In a case of strangulated hernia, should the taxis fail, an operation becomes necessary.

Taxo'dium Dis'tichum, (taxus, and αἶδος, 'resemblance,') Cupressus disticha, Schubertia disticha, Cypress, American or Bald Cypress; indigenous. Nat. Ord. Coniferae. A balsam obtained from it is applied to cuts and wounds. The resin from the cones is diuretic and carminative.

Taxonom'ic, Taxonom'icus, (F.) Taxonomique. Relating or appertaining to taxonomy or biotaxy.

Taxon'omy, (ταξις, 'order,' and νομος, 'law,') Biotaxy.

Tax'us Bacca'ta, (ταξος,) the Yew tree, Smilax, (F.) If. Family, Coniferae. Ser. Syst. Diœcia Monadelphia. The ancients believed the yew to be poisonous; but the fruit may be eaten without inconvenience. The leaves have been often recommended in epilepsy. The resin obtained from the bark has been called albir.

TAX'US CANADEN'SIS, American Yew, Ground Hem'lock; indigenous. The leaves are said to be sedative. [?]

Tax'wax, see Nucha.

An excrementitious humor, secreted by the lachrymal gland, and poured between the globe of the eye and the eyelids, to facilitate the motions of those parts. The tears are saline, in-odorous, and colorless. They turn the syrup of violets green; and contain chloride of sodium, with excess of base, phosphates of lime and soda, and albumen, and a special organic matter called Lac'rymine and Therpe'ine.

In Pharmacology, tear means any gummy or other exudation, the droplike form of which has been considered to resemble tears.

Teleph'ium, (after Τηλεφος, Telephus, son of Hercules,) Ulcus telephium, Achille'um, Tele'phian ulcer. The ancients gave this name to any ulcer of a very bad kind, and difficult to cure, because the wound which Achilles inflicted on Telephus degenerated into a similar ulcer.

TELEPH'IVM, Sedum telephium.

Tellu'rium, (F.) Tellure, (from tellus, gen. tel-luris, 'the earth,') A metal first met with in the gold mines of Transylvania. It is of a bluish-white color, very volatilizable; specific gravity 6.115; and oxidizable in the air and by heat.

The salts of tellurium occasion the exhalation of so disagreeable an alliacious odor from the body, that they have not been much experimented with as therapeutical agents.

Telor'asis, (της, 'far,' and ὥραω, 'I view,') Presbytia.

Te'lum, 'a dart,' Penis.

Tempe, Temple.

Tem'perament, Temperamen'tum, Temperatu'ra, Tempera'tio, Tempe'ries, (from temporare, 'to moderate,' originally from tempus, gen. temporis, 'time,' the great temperer,) Complex'io, Cra'sis, Eucra'sia. A name given to the remarkable differences that exist between individuals, in consequence of the variety of relations and proportions between the constituent parts of the body. Thus, of old, it was supposed that, according to the predominance of any one of the four humors then generally admitted,—blood, lymph, bile, and atrabilis, or black bile,—the manifestations of the functions were tempered or modified so as to give rise to a sanguine, lymphatic, choleric, or atrabilious or melancholic predominance or temperament. The idea of the existence of certain of these humors has been banished; yet the influence of some, as of the blood, lymph, and bile, is still admitted by many. Too much influence has, doubtless, been assigned to temperament in the sense in which it was formerly, and still is, generally understood, although there can be no question that difference of organization occasions a difference in the activity of organs.

TEM'PERAMENT, BIL'IOUS, Choleric temperament.

Tem'perance, Temperan'tia, Sophros'ynē, Nephali'otes, Sobri'etas, Sobri'ety. Moderation, opposed to gluttony and drunkenness. The advantage of temperance, in a hygienic point of view, requires no comment.

Temp'érants, (from temporare, 'to mitigate,') Sedatives.

Tempera'tio, Temperament.

Temperatu'ra, Temperament.

Tem'perature, see Heat.

Tempe'ries, Temperament.

Tempe'stas, gen. Tempesta'tis, (from tempus, 'time,') Season.

Tem'ple, Tem'pus, Re'gio Tempora'lis, Crotaphus, (F.) Tempe. A depression, on each side of the head, between the forehead and eye anteriorly, and the ear posteriorly. The temples, distinguished into right and left, correspond to the temporal fossa on each side. (The word is said to be from the Latin tempus, 'time,' because in this part the hair first begins to turn white, and to indicate age.)

Tem'poral, Tempora'lis, (from tempus.) That which relates to the temples.

TEM'PORAL APONEUROSIS or FAS'CIA is a very strong aponeurosis, of a bluish, shining color, which is attached to the whole of the curved line of the temporal bone; to the posterior edge of the malar bone; to the superior margin of the zygomatic arch; and forms an envelope for the temporal muscle.

TEM'PORAL ARTERIES, Crotaphite Ar'teries, are several:—I. The Temporal Artery, properly so called, arises from the outer side of the superior part of the external carotid. It ascends between the ramus of the jaw, the meatus auditorius externus, and the parotid gland, which covers it as far as the zygomatic arch. Above this it becomes subcutaneous; and, when it has attained the middle of the temporal region, it divides into two branches; the one anterior—A. tempora'lis fronta'lis seu inter'na seu ante'rior; the other posterior—the A. tempora'lis occipita'lis seu exter'na seu super'ior. The temporal artery, before its division, gives off—1. Branches to the parotid; to the joint of the lower jaw; to the meatus auditorius, and to the masseter. 2. The transverse artery of the face. 3. The mid'dle tem'poral, which arises beneath the cheekbones, and traverses the temporal aponeurosis immediately beneath that bone. II. The Deepseated Tem'porals—A. tempora'les profun'dæ. These are two in number. They arise from the internal maxillary, and have been distinguished, from their position, into anterior and posterior. They send their principal divisions to the temporal muscle.

TEM'PORAL BONE, Os tem'poris seu tempora'le seu arcua'le seu arma'le seu parieta'le infe'rius seu crotaphum seu memen'to mo'ri seu mendo'sum seu crotaphit'icum seu lapido'sum, is seated at the lateral and inferior part of the cranium, of which it forms part; and contains, within it, the special organs of audition. It is usually divided into three portions—1. The Squa'mous, Pars squamo'sa, Squa'ma, Lepi'sma, Os lepidoi'des seu squamo'sum seu squamifor'mē, (F.) Portion écailleuse ou squameuse. 2. The Mas'toid portion. 3. The Pe'trous portion, Pe'trous Proc'ess, Pyramis trigo'na, Os lapide'um seu lapido'sum seu sax'eum seu petro'sum seu lithoi'des seu du'rum seu prærup'tæ ru'pi assimila'tum seu nerua'le, Pars petro'sa, P. pyramida'lis os'is tem'poris, (F.) Portion pierreuse, Rocher, Os pétreux, Apophyse pyramidale, A. pétée.

It has—1. An auric'ular or exter'nal face, on which is a surface that makes part of the temporal fossa; the zygomatic process; the glenoid cavity; the fissure of Glaser; the meatus auditorius externus; the mastoid process; the digastric groove; the canalis caroticus; the jugular fossa; the styloid process; the stylomastoid foramen, &c. 2. A cer'ebral or inter'nal sur'face, which corresponds to the cavity of the cranium, and on which is the Pars petrosa, the hiatus Fallopii, the meatus auditorius internus, the fissure of the aquæductus vestibuli, a portion of the gutter for the lateral sinus, &c. 3. A circumference, on which are observed the orifice of the bony portion of the Eustachian tube, the aquæductus cochleæ, &c. The temporal bone is articulated with the sphenoid, occipital, parietal, malar, and inferior maxillary bones. It is developed from five points of ossification.

TEM'PORAL FAS'CIA, Temporal aponeurosis.

TEM'PORAL FOS'SA, Fos'sa tempora'lis, is an excavation observed at each side of the head. It is filled by the muscle whose name it bears, and is formed by the temporal and sphenoid bones below; by the parietal and frontal above; is separated by a transverse crista from the zygomatic fossa; and completed, before, by the cheekbone.

TEM'PORAL MUS'CLE, Tempora'lis, Crotaphites, (F.) Arcadi-temporo-maxillaire, Temporo-maxillaire (Ch.), is a broad, flattened, triangular muscle, which fills the temporal fossa. Its fibres are attached to the temporal aponeurosis and fossa; and all converge into a strong tendon, which passes under the zygomatic arch, and is inserted into the coronoid process of the lower jaw. This muscle raises the lower jaw, and applies the teeth against each other.

TEM'PORAL NERVES. These are distinguished into the superficial temporal, furnished by the inferior maxillary branch of the fifth pair, behind the condyle of the jaw; and the temporales profundi—anterior and posterior—furnished by the same nerve at its exit from the cranium. Sömmering has given the name temporal to the divisions sent by the facial nerve to the temporal regions.

TEM'PORAL VEINS were formerly called Ætioli Phleb'es, Aqu'ilæ Ve'næ.

Tempora'lis, Temporal.

Tem'poro, (tempus, gen. tem'poris, 'temple,') in composition, the temple.

Temporoauriculaire, Attollens aurem.

Temporofacial, Temporofacialis. Belonging to the temple and face.

TEMPOROFACIAL NERVE, Nervus temporofacialis. A branch of the facial nerve distributed to the face and temple.

Temporomaxillaire, Temporomaxillary, see Temporal muscle.

Temporomaxillary, Temporomaxillaris, (F.) Temporomaxillaire. That which belongs to the temporal bone and lower jaw.

TEMPOROMAXILLARY ARTICULATION, or joint of the lower jaw, is seated between the glenoid cavity and transverse process of the temporal bone on the one hand, and the condyle of the lower jaw on the other. Two thin cartilages cover the surfaces of these bones. The one is common to the transverse process, and the portion of the glenoid cavity anterior to the fissure of Glaser; the other belongs to the condyle. This articulation is furnished with an interarticular fibrocartilage, two synovial capsules, and two lateral ligaments: the one internal, and the other external.

TEMPOROMAXILLARY NERVES of Bichat are the divisions of the facial nerve distributed to the temporal and maxillary regions.

Temporoparietal Suture. The suture connecting the temporal and parietal bones, consisting of two parts—the squamous suture, and the parieto-mastoid suture.

Temps Critique, see Menses.

Tem'pus, gen. Tem'poris, 'time,' Temple—t. Intercalare, Apyrexia, Intermission.

Tem'ulence, Ebrietas, Ebriositas, Methysmus, Methysis, Temulentia, Temulency, Inebriation, Intoxication, Drunk'ness;—from wine, Enophlygia, Enophlyxis, Vinolentia, Vinolence, (F.) Iveresse, (from temetum, 'wine, any intoxicating drink.') Plater gave this name to delirium: Ettmüller, to an apoplectic condition, depending upon drunkenness, the Apoplexia Temulenta or dead-drunkenness. Commonly Temulentia is used synonymously with drunkenness—Méthé—and is often employed in the description of diseases to indicate a state resembling drunkenness. Mania e Temulentia is the same as Delirium Tremens. The French use the term Iveresse for drunkenness, Iroguerie for habitual drunkenness. Chronic alcoholic intoxication is used in the same sense as the latter.

Temulen'tia, Temulence.

Tenac'ula, pl. of tenaculum, Bonenippers—t. Volsella, Forceps (lithotomy).

Tenac'ulum, (tenax, tenacis, 'holding fast,' from teneo, 'I hold.') A kind of fine hook attached to a handle which is thrust through the parietes of a bloodvessel to draw it out and enable it to be tied.

TENACULUM, ASSALINI'S. An ingenious instrument, invented by Assalini. It consists of a forceps, or double tenaculum, the points of which are fine, sharp, and bifurcated, so as to be readily received into each other when the instrument is closed on the artery, which it is by a spring. It is of great use when the surgeon has no assistant at hand. (The instrument is figured in S. Cooper's "First Lines.")

Tenaille Incisive, (from tenacula.) Bonenippers.

Ténalgie Crépitante, see Al.

Tenas'mus, Tenesmus.

Ten'dines (pl. of ten'do) Corona'riae, Coronary tendons.

Ten'dinous, Tendino'sus, Tendin'eus, Sin'eus, (F.) Tendineux, (tendo, gen. ten'dinis, 'a tendon.') Relating or appertaining to, or having the nature of, tendons.

TEN'DINOUS TU'MOR. A term used synonymously with fibroid tumor.

Ten'do, gen. Ten'dinis, Tendon—t. Achillis,

Achillis tendo—t. Cordiformis, Centre, phrenic—t. Cordis venosus, Circulus callosus Halleri—t. Intermedius, Centre, phrenic—t. Oculi, Ligament of Zinn—t. Palpebrarum, see Orbicular muscles.

Ten'don, Ten'do, Pronerva'tio, Ten'on, (from τανω, 'I stretch,') Sin'ew, Thew, Leader, (Prov.) Guider. A fibrous cord, more or less round, long, or flattened; of a white, pearl color, and composed of very close parallel fibres. The tendons are attached to the bones, by one extremity; by the other they receive the insertions of the fleshy fibres: sometimes they afford attachment to fleshy fibres at both ends—as in the digastric muscle. The tendons must be considered as so many cords for transmitting the motion of muscles to the bones or levers.

Tendon d'Achille, Achillis tendo—t. Achillis, Achillis tendo—t. Central or cordiform of the diaphragm, Centre, phrenic.

TEN'DON, TRE'FOIL. The cordiform tendon of the diaphragm. See Centre, phrenic.

TEN'DON OF ZINN, Ligament of Zinn.

Ten'dons, Twitch'ing of the, Subsultus tendinum.

Teneotom'ia, Tenotomy.

Ténesme, Tenesmus—t. de l'Œsophage, Œsophagismus—t. Vésical, Bradysuria.

Tenes'mus, Teines'mus, (τενισμος.) Tenas'mus, Tines'mus, (from τανω, 'I stretch,') Proctica seu Obstipa'tio Tenesmus, Proctospas'mus, Tinag'mus, (F.) Ténesme, Épreintes. Frequent, vain, and painful desires to evacuate; one of the chief symptoms of inflammation of the lining membrane of the digestive tube, as of dysentery.

Used at times, also, for forcing-down pains of the uterus and bladder.

TENES'MUS VESICÆ, Bradysuria—t. Vesicæ mucosus, Cystirrhœa.

Ténêtte, (from [F.] tenir, [L.] teneo, 'I hold,') see Forceps.

Ténia, Tænia.

Ténifuge, Tæniafuge.

Tennessee', Min'eral Wa'ters of. On the waters of the French Broad River, in this State, is a large, clear, thermal spring. The heat is so great that, on first going into the water, it is almost insupportable. There are calcic chalybeate springs at Montvale, in Blount Co., which have a reputation in chronic diarrhoea and scrofula; and chalybeate waters at Beersheba, in Grundy Co.

Ten'on, (τενω, gen. τενωτος.) Tendon.

Tenon, Cap'sule of, Fascia of Tenon—t. Fascia of, Fascia of Tenon—t. Membrane of, Fascia of Tenon—t. Space of, see Fascia of Tenon.

Tenoni'tis, (after Tenon.) Inflammation of the capsule of Tenon.

Tenont'agra, (tenon, and αγρα, 'seizure.') A variety of gout, which affects the tendinous parts of muscles, or the tendinous ligaments which strengthen certain articulations.

Tenontotom'ia, Tenotomy.

Tenontotro'ti, (tenon, and τετρασσω, 'I wound,') They who are wounded in the tendons.

Ténophyte, (tenon, and φυειν, 'to grow,') A growth of an osseous or cartilaginous nature on a tendon.

Tenor'rhapsy, Tenorrhaph'ia, (τενω, 'a tendon,' and ραφη, 'a suture,') Union of a tendon by suture after it has been divided.

Ténosynite Crépitante, see Al.

Tenosyni'tis, gen. Tenosyni'tidis, Tenosynovi'tis (?), (F.) Ténosynite. An imperfectly formed term, (tenon, syn, and itis.) denoting inflammation of the synovial sheath of a tendon. See Al.

Tenosynovi'tis, (tenon, and synovitis.) Inflammation of tendons and their sheaths, the result of injury, or of gout, rheumatism, &c.

Ténotome, Tenot'omus, (from tenon, and τομη, 'incision.') An instrument for dividing tendons, especially by the subcutaneous method.

Tenotomy, Tenotomia, Teneotomia, Tenontomia, Tenontotomia, Sec'tio seu Dissec'tio tendinum, (F.) Ténonomie. The operation of dividing a tendon, often practised for the removal of luxarthrus, or deviation of the joints, — as in clubfoot.

Tenseur, Tensor — t. de l'Aponévrose fémorale, Fascia lata muscle.

Tension, Tensio, Tensura, Tasis, Diatasis, Entonia, (Entonia is also used for overtension,) Contensio, Distentio, (from tendere, tensum, 'to stretch.') State of a part which is stretched, when its textures are distended by the afflux of fluids, or the accumulation of gas; or when its fibres are drawn, as it were, in an opposite direction, and are, consequently, more resisting than usual.

The tension of the eyeball, ocular or intra-ocular tension, varies in degree in health and disease, especially in glaucoma, intraocular tumors, &c.

Tensive, Tensivus, Tenosus, (F.) Tensif. Accompanied by tension, or by a feeling of tension, — as a tensive pain.

Tensor, Tensoris, (F.) Tenseur. That which stretches or renders tense.

TENSOR CHOROIDEÆ, Ciliary muscle — t. Palati, Circumflexus musculus.

TENSOR TARSII, Lachrymal Muscle. A small muscle belonging to the inner commissure of the eyelids, well described by Professor Horner, of Philadelphia, and hence termed Muscle of Horner. It is about three lines broad and six long; arises from the posterior flat surface of the os unguis, near its junction with the ethmoid bone, and passes forwards and outwards, lying on the posterior face of the lachrymal ducts. As it approaches the commissure of the lids, it splits into two nearly equal parts, each of which is appropriated to a duct, and inserted along its course, almost to the punctum lacrymale. Its chief office seems to be to influence the position of the punctum lacrymale, and to regulate the course of the tears through the lachrymal ducts.

TENSOR TYMPANI, Inter'nus Aur'is, Internus Mallei, (F.) Salpingo-malléen. A small muscle which arises from the petrous portion of the temporal bone, and the cartilage of the Eustachian tube, and terminates by a tendon, which is reflected over the processus cochleariformis, and is inserted into the apophysis of the handle of the malleus.

TENSOR VAGINÆ FEMORIS, Fascia lata muscle.

Tensura, (tendere, tensum, 'to stretch,') Tension.

Tensus, (tendere, tensum, 'to stretch,') Penis.

Tent, Tenta, Turunda, and its dim. Turundula, Peniculus, Penicillus, Penicillum, Motos, Lemnicus, Licinium, Linamentum, Priapiscus, Styliscus, (F.) Tente, Mèche, (tendere, tensum or tentum, 'to stretch,') In surgery, tents are small rolls of lint, of a cylindrical or pyramidal shape, which are introduced into wounds and deep ulcers, to prevent them from closing before they are filled up from the bottom. Tents are sometimes, also, made of prepared sponge, gentian root, slippery elm, &c., &c. They are not so much used as they formerly were; except, perhaps, for dilating the os and cervix uteri. Tangle tents — made of Lamina digitata — are generally used for this purpose.

Tent, Sponge, see Spongia.

Tentacula'ria, Filaria hominis bronchialis.

Tentaculum Cerebelli, (from tendere, tensum or tentum, 'to stretch,') Tentorium.

Tenta'men Med'icum, 'a medical trial,' (from tentare, 'to try,') An examination in medicine, in the Prussian universities, which is conducted both in writing and visâ voce before the dean of the medical faculty.

Tente, Tent — t. du Cervelet, Tentorium.

Tenti'go, gen. Tentig'inis, (from tendere, tensum or tentum, 'to stretch,') Priapism — t. Venerea, Nymphomania — t. Veretri, Satyriasis.

Tentipelum, (tendere, tensum or tentum, 'to stretch,' and pellis, 'the skin,') Ancient name of a cosmetic, with which, it was pretended, wrinkles could be effaced.

Tentorium, T. cerebelli superextensum, T. cerebelli, Tentaculum cerebelli, Septum encephali, Diaphragma cerebri, Interseptum horizontalia Pacchioni, Processus transversus duræ matris, Lateral processes of the dura mater, Transverse septum, (F.) Tente du cervelet, Plancher du Cerveau, Septum transverse (Ch.), (tendere, tensum or tentum, 'to stretch,') A process of the dura mater, which separates the cerebrum from the cerebellum. It extends from the internal horizontal spine of the occipital bone, directly forwards to the sella Turcica of the sphenoid.

TENTORIUM CEREBELLI, Tentorium.

Tentum, (from tendere, tensum or tentum, 'to stretch,') Penis.

Tent'wort, Asplenium ruta muraria.

Tenuis Ma'ter, Pia mater.

Tenuitas Aquosa, 'watery thinness,' Prædominium aquæ.

Tephrosia Apollinea, (tepos, 'ash-colored, gray,') Galega Apollinea of Egypt and Nubia. Order, Leguminosæ. The leaves are often mixed with senna.

TEPHROSIA PURPUREA, Galega purpurea of the coast of Coromandel. The root is bitter, and a decoction of it is prescribed by the native doctors in dysentery, hientery, and tympanites.

TEPHROSIA SEN'NA. The leaves are used for senna by the people of Popayan.

TEPHROSIA TOXICARIA, Galega toxica'ria of Cayenne. The leaves are used for poisoning fish. It has been suggested as a substitute for digitalis.

TEPHROSIA VIRGINIANA, Galega Virginiana.

Tepidarium, (tepidus, 'moderately warm,') see Stove.

Tep'litz, Töplitz.

Ter'ras, gen. Ter'atis, (teras, gen. terasos,) Monster.

Teratog'eny, Teratogen'ia, (teras, and γενος 'generation,') The formation of monsters.

Teratolog'ical, Teratolog'icus, (F.) Tératologique. Same etymon as the next. Relating or appertaining to Teratology.

Teratolog'y, Teratolog'ia, (τεραλογία, from teras, and λογος, 'a discourse,') A treatise on monsters.

Terato'sis, see Monster.

Ter'ceron, (from [F.] terce, [L.] tertius, 'third,') see Mulatto — t. Black, see Mulatto.

Terebellum, (F.) Terabelle, (teras, and βέλα, 'a leech,') A pneumatic machine, which, when connected with a cupping apparatus, largely increases the amount of local depletion. The term is also applied to an instrument for perforating the foetal cranium. See Terebellum.

Terebel'la, (from τερω, 'I bore,') Trepan.

Terebellum. A name given by Dugès to a perforator, Perce-crâne, of his invention.

Terebin'thina, (from τερεβινθος, 'the turpentine tree,') Tur'pentine, Bo'tin, Al'botin, Alt'il'ibat, Bruti'no, (F.) Térébinthine. A substance of the consistence of honey, which flows from many trees of the Terebinthinaceæ and Coniferæ families. It is viscid; shining; more or less transparent; inflammable; of a warm, pungent taste; strong smell; and is entirely composed of resin and essential oil, without benzoic acid. It is soluble in alcohol. See Pinus sylvestris. All the turpentines are stimulant, diuretic, and cathartic. Terebinthina (Ph. U. S.) is the concrete juice of Pinus palustris and other species of Pinus.

TEREBINTHINA ARGENTORATEN'SIS, see Pinus picea—t. Balsamea, see Pinus balsamea—t. Canadensis, see Pinus balsamea—t. Chia, see Pistacia terebinthus—t. Communis, see Pinus sylvestris—t. Cypria, see Pistacia terebinthus—t. Empyreumatica, see Pinus sylvestris—t. Laricina, see Pinus larix—t. Veneta, see Pinus larix—t. Vera, see Pistacia terebinthus—t. Vulgaris, see Pinus sylvestris.

Terebinthinate, Terebinthina'tus, (F.) Térébinthiné, Abiétique. Having the qualities of or impregnated with turpentine.

Térébinthine, Terebinthina—t. de Bordeaux, see Pinus sylvestris—t. de Chic, see Pistacia terebinthus—t. Commune, see Pinus sylvestris—t. de Copahu, Copaiba—t. d'Égypte, see Amyris opobalsamum—t. de Gilead, see Amyris opobalsamum—t. du Grand Caire, see Amyris opobalsamum—t. de Judée, see Amyris opobalsamum—t. de Médée, see Pinus larix—t. de Vénise, see Pinus larix.

Térébinthiné, Terebinthinate.

Terbin'thus, (τερβινθος) Terminthus—t. Gummifera, Bursera gummifera—t. Lentiscus, Pistacia lentiscus—t. Vulgaris, Pistacia terebinthus.

Ter'ebra, (τερεω, 'I bore,') 'a borer,' Trepan.

Térébrant, see Terebratio.

Terebra'tio, (from terebrare, terebratum, 'to bore,') Trepanning. The French use the term Térébration for the puncturing of a bone by any instrument, and a pain is said to be térébrant, when it seems as if the part was penetrated or bored.

Térébration, see Terebratio.

Tere'do (gen. Tere'dinis) Os'sium, (τερεω, 'I bore,') Caries, Spina ventosa.

Ter'es, gen. Ter'etis, ('long and round,' from tero, 'I rub;' as if 'rubbed smooth or rounded,') Stron'gylus, Cylindroi'des. An epithet given to many organs, the fibres of which are collected into round fasciculi.

TERES LIGAMEN'TUM, (F.) Ligament rond. This name is given to the round ligament in the cotyloid cavity of the os innominatum, which is attached to the head of the bone, and to the bottom of the cavity. It is, also, given to a small fibrous fascia, which extends from the coronoid process of the ulna to below the bicipital tubercle of the radius. Also the round ligament of the uterus.

TERES MA'JOR, (F.) Anguli-scapulo-huméral, Scapulo-huméral (Ch.), Grand rond, is situate at the inferior and posterior part of the shoulder. It is attached, on the one hand, to the outer surface of the scapula; to the corresponding part of its axillary margin; and, on the other, to the posterior margin of the bicipital groove of the humerus. It carries the arm backwards and inwards, and carries it, also, inwards in rotation. When it acts with the longissimus dorsi and pectoralis major, it applies the arm against the lateral part of the chest, and keeps it forcibly there.

TERES MI'NOR, No'nus hu'meri Placenti'ni, (F.) Le plus petit sus-scapulo-trochitérien (Ch.), Petit rond, Margini-sus-scapulo-trochitérien, is situate at the posterior and inferior part of the shoulder; it is narrow and flattened, from above to below, in its inner half; and, from before to behind, in the outer. It is attached, on the one hand, to the outer surface of the scapula, near its inferior angle; and, on the other, to the inferior part of the great tuberosity of the humerus. It depresses the arm, and causes it to turn on its axis from within outwards. It also carries it backwards.

Tere'sis, (τηρησις,) Observation.

Teret'rium, (τερετριον, from τερεω, 'I bore,') Trepan.

Ter'etron, (τερετρον,) Trepan.

Ter'gal, (from tergum, 'the back,') Dorsal.

Tergem'ini, Trigemini.

Ter'gum, Dorsum, Vertebral column.

Ter'minal Cav'ities, see Pulmo.

Termina'lia, see Myrobalanus.

Terminol'ogy, (termen, gen. ter'minis, 'a term,' and λογος, 'a discourse,') Nomenclature.

Termin'thus, Terebin'thus, (τερμινθος, 'the turpentine tree,') Phy'ma Anthrax Terminthus, Ber'ry or Fun'gous car'buncle. The ancients gave this name to a tumor, surmounted by a black pustule, and resembling the fruit of the turpentine tree.

TERMIN'THUS, Pistacia terebinthus.

Ter'minus ('limit') Superior As'peræ Arte'ria, Larynx.

Termonol'ogy, (termo, gen. termo'nis, 'a term,' and λογος, 'a discourse,') Nomenclature.

Terms, (periods,) Menses.

Ter'ra Absor'bens Minera'lis, 'absorbent mineral earth,' Magnesia carbonas—t. Aluminis, Argilla pura—t. Amara aërata, Magnesia carbonas—t. Amara sulphurica, Magnesia sulphas—t. Argillacea hydrata, Argilla pura—t. Argillacea pura, Argilla pura—t. Bolaris, Argilla pura—t. Foliata, Sulphur—t. Foliata mineralis, Soda acetata—t. Foliata tartari, Potassa acetata—t. Fornacum, see Bricks—t. Fullonica, Cimolia purpurescens—t. Japonica, Catechu, Nauclea gambir.

TER'RA LEM'NIA, Lemp'nias, Argil'la bo'lus fla'va, Lem'nian Earth. A name given by the ancients to a solid, reddish, astringent substance, prepared with the pulp of the fruit of the Baobab, an African tree, according to Prosper Alpinus. It seems, however, to be an argillaceous earth. It has been employed as an astringent.

TER'RA LIVON'ICA. A terra sigilla'ta or sealed earth from Livonia, redder than that from Silesia, and very astringent.

TER'RA MARI'TA, Curcuma longa.

TER'RA NOCERIA'NA. A whitish, soft, and astringent earth, found in the environs of Nocera, in Italy.

TER'RA ORLEA'NA, Pigmen'tum uru'cu, Uru'cu, Annoto, Arnotta, (F.) Rocou, Roucou, Bichet. A pigmental matter obtained from the seeds of Bixa Orlea'na seu Orella'na seu America'na, Orella'na. In Jamaica, it is recommended in dysentery, and is considered to possess astringent and stomachic qualities. It is called, according to its shape, Flag, Roll, or Egg Annoto.

Span'ish Annoto, Bix'a, is in small, oblong cakes. It is chiefly employed as a coloring matter.

TER'RA OS'SEA, Mate'ria os'sea. Bony matter. The earthy portion of bones.

TER'RA PONDERO'SA, Baryta—t. Ponderosa muriata, Baryta, muriate of—t. Ponderosa salita, Baryta, muriate of.

TER'RA PORTUGAL'ICA, Bar'ros, Bucaros. A reddish, astringent, styptic earth, obtained from Portugal.

TER'RA SAPONA'RIA, Cimolia purpurescens.

TER'RA SIGILLA'TA, (sigillatus, furnished with little figures—sigilla,) Sealed Earth. A bole or earthy matter, made into little cakes or flat masses, and stamped with certain impressions, as with the head of the Grand Seigneur. To these belong the Terra Silesi'aca, Terra Lem'nia, T. Tac'eica. See Bolus and Bolus alba.

TER'RA SILESI'ACA, see Terra sigillata—t. Talcosa oxyanthracodes, Magnesia carbonas—t. Turcica, see Terra sigillata.

TER'RA URI'NE. The earthy deposit in the urine.

TER'RA VITRI'OLI DUL'cis, Colcothar.

Ter'rapin, Emys palustris.

Terre Bolaire, 'bolar earth,' Bolus — t. Foliee Minerale, Sodæ acetæ — t. Foliee de Tartre, Potassæ acetæ — t. Magnésienne, Magnesiæ carbonas — t. Noix, Bunium bulbocastanum — t. Pesante, Baryta — t. Sigillée, see Bole.

Terrette, Glechoma hederacea.

Ter'rity, Cell, see Cell.

Ter'rors, Night, see Night terrors.

Ter'tian Fe'ver, Febris tertiana, An'etus tertianus, Tritæus, Ter'tian or Third Day A'gue, Third Day Fe'ver, (F.) Fièvre tierce, (from tertius, 'the third.') An intermittent, whose paroxysms recur every third day, or every 48 hours. The mildest, and the most pernicious, intermittents belong to this head. As a general rule, it is the most manageable form of ague.

A double tertian, (F.) Double tierce (Fièvre), has a paroxysm every day, — the paroxysms of alternate days being associated.

Tertiana'ria, (from its virtues in tertian fever,) Scutellaria galericulata.

Tes'sara, (τεσσαρα, 'four,') Cuboid.

Tessel'la, (dim. of tessera, 'a small quadrangular stone for paving,' &c.,) Tabella.

Tess'ellated, Tessellatus, ('furnished with small quadrangular stones,') Having a quadrangular arrangement, like a pavement. See Epithelium.

Tes'sera, 'a quadrangular stone, wood,' &c. Cuboid.

Test, Dan'iel's, (from testis, 'a witness,') see Docimasia pulmonum — t. Hydrostatic, see Docimasia pulmonum — t. Ploucquet's, see Docimasia pulmonum — t. Static, see Docimasia pulmonum.

TEST TYPES. Printed matter in type of various sizes, from the smallest to the largest, employed by the oculist to determine the acuteness of vision.

Tes'ta, 'a shell,' see Ostrea — t. Ovi, see Ovum, Membrana putaminis.

TES'TA PRÆPARATA, Prepared Oys'tershell. Oystershell, freed from extraneous matter, washed with boiling water, reduced to powder, and prepared in the same manner as Creta præparata.

Testa'ceous, Testaceus, (F.) Testacé, (from testa.) A powder, consisting of burnt shells. These contain carbonate of lime chiefly, and hence the term has been applied to cretaceous substances. See Creta.

Tes'tæ Forna'cæ, (fornax, gen. forna'cis, 'a furnace,') Bricks — t. Ostrea, see Ostrea.

Tes'ter, Lung, see Lung tester.

Tes'tes, (pl. of testis, 'a witness,') The Testicles; see Testicle. Vulgarly, the Stones, Ballocks. A name, also, given to the inferior tubercles of the corpora quadrigemina, to distinguish them from the superior, called Nates.

TES'TES CER'EBRI, see Quadrigemina tubercula — t. Muliebres, see Ovarium.

Test'icle, Testis, T. viri'lis, Testic'ulus, Or'chis, Po'mum amo'ris, Did'yms, Androa'rion, Her'nia, Gem'ini, Gemelli, O'cum, Codling, (F.) Testicule, (dim. of testis, 'a witness,' because the testicles are 'witnesses' of virility.) The name of two glandular organs, contained in the scrotum, whose office is to secrete sperm. The substance of the testicle, Pul'pa tes'tis, consists of numerous conical, flattened lobules — lob'uli testis — whose bases are directed towards the surface of the organ, and the apices towards the corpus Highmorianum. They are formed of a gray and softish substance, composed of tortuous canals, called Tu'buli seu Canalic'uli seu Ductus seminiferi seu semina'les, Vasa semina'lia, Vas'cula serpenti'na, folded on each other, and of extreme fineness; the number of which, according to the estimate of Monro, is 62,500, and the total length 5208 feet. All these canals, uniting in their course, pass through the corpus Highmorianum, concur in forming the epididymis, and give origin to the vas deferens. The testicles are covered, immediately, by a fibrous membrane, of an opaque white color, and very tough, called Tu'nica Albugin'ea, Du'ra ma'ter tes'tis, or, simply, Albugin'ea, Perites'tis, (F.) Pérididyme, of which the corpus Highmorianum is only an enlargement. See Albuginea. Over this, again, is the tunica vaginalis, the second envelope of the testis. See Vaginal coat of the testicle.

TES'TICLE, CAN'cer of, see Sarcocoele — t. Cystic Disease of, see Sarcocoele — t. Fungus of, benign, Hernia testis — t. Granular Swelling of, Hernia testis — t. Hernia of, Hernia testis.

TES'TICLE, IR'RITABLE. Abnormal sensibility of that organ, which is painful on manipulation. It has been termed also Chronic Neural'gia of the testicle. Castration should never be practised for its relief. See Orchidalgia.

TES'TICLE, RETAINED, see Crypsorchis — t. Swelled, Hernia humoralis.

Testicon'dus, (testis, and condere, 'to hide,') Crypsorchis.

Testic'ular, Testicula'ris, (F.) Testiculaire. Belonging or relating to the testicle.

Testicule, Testicle.

Testic'ulus, Testicle — t. Accessorius, Epididymis — t. Caninus, Orchis mascula.

Testimo'nium Maturita'tis, 'evidence of fitness.' A certificate of complete education, required, in the Prussian universities, of a candidate, before he can be admitted to examination for the degree of Doctor of Medicine.

Tes'tis, Testicle — t. Feminus, Ovary — t. Irritable, Orchidalgia, Testicle, irritable — t. Minor, Prostate — t. Muliebris, Ovary — t. Virilis, Testicle.

Testi'tis, gen. Testi'tidis, (from testis, and itis,) Hernia humoralis.

Testudina'tio Cra'nii, 'arched like the back of a tortoise,' (from testudo,) Camarosis.

Testu'do, gen. Testu'dinis, (from testa, 'a shell,') Chelo'næ, (F.) Tortue. A genus of reptiles, including the turtle, the flesh of which is much esteemed as an article of diet.

Also, an encysted tumor, which has been supposed to resemble the shell of a testudo; Emphy'ma encys'tis gan'glion. See Talpa.

TESTU'DO CER'EBRI, Fornix — t. Scapulae, see Scapula.

Tete, (teat,) Nipple.

Tetan'ic, Tetan'icum, Spas'ticum, Convulsi'vum, Convul'sive, (F.) Tétanique, (from tetanus,) A remedy which acts on the nerves, and, through them, on the muscles, occasioning, in large doses, convulsions. The chief agents of this class are Nux Vomica, Strychnia, Brucia, Arnica, and Toxicodendron. Also, an epithet for a tonic convulsion.

Tetan'illa, (dim. of tetanus,) A paroxysmal disease, described by Trousseau as of a rheumatic character, which is preceded by formication, and affects the hands, arms, or lower limbs, unattended with pain or fever. This is the mildest form; but in graver cases, the whole body becomes implicated, and the fingers are said to be invariably drawn up into a cone. Its most frequent causes are diarrhoea and lactation. It has been called, also, Tet'any, Intermit'tent tet'anus, Idiopath'ic contrac'tion and paral'ysis, Idiopath'ic muscular spasm, Contrac'tion of the extrem'ities, and Intermit'tent rheumat'ic contrac'tions.

Tet'anin, Strychnia.

Tet'anine, (from tetanus,) A term proposed by Dr. Wm. Farr for the specific poisonous principle by which tetanus is produced.

Teta'nium, Strychnia.

Tetaniza'tion, Tetanisa'tio. The production or condition of tetanic spasms, in which the patient is said to be tet' anized.

Tetano'mata, pl. of tetano'ma, (τετανώματα,) Tetanothra.

Tétanos, Tetanus.

Tetano'thra, pl. of tetano'thrum, (τετανώθρα,) Tetano'mata, Erugato'ria, (from τετανω, 'stretched free from wrinkles.') Medicines which remove wrinkles.

Tet'anus, (τετανω, 'stretched,' from τενω, 'I stretch,') Spasm with rigidity, Convul'sio In'dica, Holoton'ia, Holoton'icus, Holotet'anus, Tet'anus universa'lis, Ri'gor nervo'sus seu nervo'rum, Exten'sio seu Disten'sio, Enta'sia tet'anus, Cat'ochus cervi'nus seu holoton'icus, (F.) Tétanos, Mal de cerf. A disease which consists in a permanent contraction of all the muscles or merely of some, without alternations of relaxation. It is characterized by closure of the jaws; difficulty or impracticability of deglutition; rigidity and immobility of the limbs and trunk, which is sometimes curved forwards (Emprosthot'onus), sometimes backwards (Opisthot'onus), and sometimes to one side (Pleurothot'onus). When tetanus is confined to the muscles of the jaws, it is called Tris'mus. It is a most formidable affection. The means of treatment are:—copious and repeated bloodletting; bathing, cold and warm; powerful doses of opium, and anæsthetics. In Traumat'ic Tetanus, or that which supervenes on a wound, every extraneous matter must, of course, be removed from the wound, and soothing applications be made to it. When occurring in the puerperal condition, it is called Puerperal Tetanus, Tetanus Puerperarum. Tetanus is sometimes also produced by the action of morbid poisons, as strychnia, brucia, &c.

Tet'any, Tetanilla.

Tetartæ'us, (τεταρταος, 'occurring on the fourth day,' from τεταρτος, 'the fourth,') Quartan.

Tetartophu'ia, (τεταρτος, 'the fourth,' and φυνω, 'I arise,') Quarta'nus remit'tens. A quartan, in which the intermission is inordinately short or imperfect.

Tête, (from [L.] testa, 'the skull,') Caput, Head—t. de Veau, Elephantiasis of the Greeks.

Tet'ra, (τετρα, 'four,') in composition, four.

Tetradrach'mon, (τετραδραχμον, from tetra, and δραχμη, 'a drachm,') A weight of four drachms or half an ounce.

Tetrago'nus, (τετραγωνος, from tetra, and γωνια, 'an angle,') Platysma myoides.

Tet'rahit Longifo'rum, Galeopsis grandiflora.

Tetramas'thus, (tetra, and μαστος, 'a breast,') Quadrinammatus.

Tetra'myron, (τετραμυρον, from tetra, and μυρον, 'an ointment,') An ointment consisting of four ingredients.

Tetrangu'ria, (tetra, and anguria,) Cucurbita citrullus.

Tetranthe'ra Pichu'rim, (tetra, and ανθηρα, 'anther,') Pichurim beans.

Tet'rao (gen. Tetrao'nis) Cotur'nix, (after τετραξ, Cotur'nix, the Quail, (F.) Caille; Class, Aves; Ord, Gallinaceæ. The quail is an esteemed article of diet. The Greek name is ορυξ, gen. ορυγος; and the places, called Ortygia, are named after it. The excrements of the quail were formerly extolled in epilepsy, and the fat in specks of the eye.

Tetraphar'macum, (tetra, and φαρμακον, 'a medicine,') A medicine consisting of four ingredients.

Tetras'celus, (tetra, and σκελος, 'leg,') A monster having four legs.

Tetras'toma Rena'le, see Parasites.

Tetrob'olon, (τετρωβολον, from τετρα, and οβολος, obolus.) The weight of four oboli or two scruples.

Tetro'ros, (τετρωρος,) Astragalus.

Tet'ter, ([Sax.] teeter,) Herpes—t. Crusted, Impetigo—t. Eating, Lupus—t. Honeycomb, Por-rigo favosa—t. Humid, Eczema impetigo—t. Milky, Por-rigo larvalis—t. Moist, Eczema—t. Pustular, Impetigo—t. Running, Impetigo—t. Scaly, Psoriasis.

Tet'terwort, Chelidonium majus.

Teuc'rium Ægypti'acum, (τευκριον, after Teu- cer,) T. capitatum—t. Belium, T. capitatum.

TEUC'RIMUM CAPITA'TUM, T. Bel'ium seu Ægypti'acum, Po'l'ium Capita'tum, Po'ley Moun'tain of Montpel'lier, Ord, Labiata, is, generally, substituted for T. chamædrys. The common Po'ley Mountain is the Teuc'rium monta'num; and the Gold'en Po'ley Moun'tain, the Teuc'rium Po'l'ium, Po'l'ion.

TEUC'RIMUM CHAMÆ'DRYS, T. officina'le, Chamædrys, C. mi'nor re'pens seu vulga'ris, Quer'cula mi'nor seu Calamandri'na, Trissa'go, Chamæ-drops, Trixa'go, Com'mon, Creeping or Small Ger-man'der, English Treacle, (F.) Petit chène, Chê-nette, Germandrée officinale. This is possessed of aromatic and bitter properties. The dose of the dried powder is from ʒss. to ʒj.

TEUC'RIMUM CHAMÆ'PITYS, Chamæpitys, Arthet'ica, Arthret'ica, Aju'ga, A. seu Bu'gula Chamæ-pitys, Ab'iga, Chamæmo'rus, P'va arthrit'ica, Hol'o'cyron, Io'nia, Sideri'tis, Com'mon Ground'pine, (F.) Petite Ivette. Properties like the last. The tops and leaves have been recommended as aperients and tonics, especially in female obstructions, and in paralytic disorders.

TEUC'RIMUM CRE'TICUM, T. hyssopifo'l'ium seu rosmarinifo'l'ium, Rosmari'nus sta'chadis fa'ci'z, Po'ley Mountain of Candy, Po'l'ium Cre'ticum. The tops and whole herb enter into the old compounds, Mithridate and Theriaca. It has a moderately aromatic smell, and a nauseous, bitter taste, and is placed among the aperients and corroborants.

TEUC'RIMUM FLA'VUM has similar properties to T. chamædrys.

TEUC'RIMUM HYSSOPIFO'L'ium, T. creticum.

TEUC'RIMUM I'VA, Chamæpitys moscha'ta, P'va, I. moscha'ta Monspeli'en'sium, Chamæpitys anthyl-lus, French Ground'pine, (F.) Ivette musquée. It has similar virtues to T. chamæpitys, but is weaker.

TEUC'RIMUM MARIT'imum, T. marum.

TEUC'RIMUM MA'RUM, T. marit'imum, Ma'rum Sy-ri'acum seu Cre'ticum seu ve'rum seu Cortu'si, Ma-jora'na Syri'aca, Chamædrys inca'na marit'ima seu ma'rum, Orig'anum Syri'acum, Ma'rum ger-man'der, Syr'ian herb mas'tich, Cat thyme, (F.) Marum ou Germandrée maritime, Herbe aux chats. A very aromatic plant, of a camphorated smell; formerly much used in medicine as a tonic, anti-spasmodic, emmenagogue, &c.

TEUC'RIMUM OFFICINA'LE, T. chamædrys—t. Pa-lustre, T. seordium—t. Pyramidale, Ajuga—t. Rosmarinifolium, T. creticum.

TEUC'RIMUM SCOR'DIUM, T. palus'trē, Scor'dium, Trissa'go palus'tris, Chamædrys palus'tris seu scor'dium, All'ium red'olens, Wa'ter German'der, (F.) Germandrée scorodone, Sauge des bois, Germandrée aquatique. The leaves have a garlicky smell, and bitterish, slightly pungent taste. It has the tonic properties of the other Teveria.

Tex'tum Interlobula'rē, (texere, textum, 'to weave,') Interlobular tissue.

Textu'ra, Texture—t. Organica, Histos.

Text'ural, Textura'lis. Relating or appertaining to a texture.

Tex'ture, Textu'ra, Tex'tus, (from texere, textum, 'to weave,') Te'la, Hy'pha, Hy'phē. The particular arrangement of the tissues that constitute an organ.

Tex'tus, gen. Textūs, Texture, Tissue — t. Cellulosus, Cellular tissue — t. Desmosus, Desmoid tissue — t. Erectilis, Erectile texture — t. Nervosus, Plexus nervorum — t. Organicus, Cellular tissue — t. Papillaris, Corpus papillare — t. Parenchymalis, Cellular tissue.

Tha'ria, (Θηρ, 'a wild animal,') Radzyge.

Thal'ami Cor'porum Cavernoso'rum Pe'nis, see Cavernous bodies.

THAL'AMI NERVO'rum OPTICO'rum seu OP'tici, Eminēt'ie mag'na cer'ebri, Gan'glia cer'ebri positi'ca, Ocu'ra medull'ae oblonga'te (of some), Stria'ta cor'pora super'na posterio'ra, Collic'uli nervo'rum optico'rum, Op'tic thal'ami, Poste'rior cer'ebri gan'glia, (F.) Couches des nerfs oculaires (Ch.), C. des nerfs optiques, C. optiques. Two rounded and irregular surfaces, which are seen exposed in the lateral ventricles of the brain, and in the third ventricle, the inferior surface of which presents two projections, called Corpora genicula'ta, that furnish several filaments to the optic nerves. The name was given from a belief that the optic nerves originate from them. They, however, arise more posteriorly from the corpora quadrigemina or optic lobes; and adhere merely to the inner margin of those bodies. Gall considers that the thalami act as ganglions to the nerves; and, hence, he calls them Grands ganglions cérebraux inférieurs. They are, also, called Poste'rior gan'glion of the cer'ebrium. From the thalami and corpora striata fibres proceed upwards to constitute the convolutions of the brain, and the various bands that connect the different parts of the brain together. The upper and inner parts of the thalami are so closely connected as to form one continued surface, called Commissu'ra mollis. The posterior parts turn downwards and outwards; after which they are elongated to form the two white cords, termed Tractus op'tici.

Thal'amus, pl. thal'ami, (Θαλαμος,) (F.) Couche. 'A room or chamber; a bed.' The place in which a nerve originates, or has been considered to originate.

THAL'AMUS REGA'LIS, Pericardium.

Thalassolu'trum, (Θαλασσα, 'sea,' and λουτρον, 'a bath,') Bath, sea.

Thalassom'eli, (Θαλασσα, 'sea,' and μελι, 'honey,') A cathartic medicine, composed of equal parts of sea water, honey, and rain water, exposed to the sun during the dog days in a pitched vessel.

Thalic'tron, (Θαλικτρον,) Thalictrum, T. mag'num seu fla'vum seu flaves'cens seu pratens'e seu nigricans seu rugo'sum seu vagina'tum, Rhabarb'arum pau'perum, Meadow rue, Poor man's rhubarb, (F.) Pigamon jaunâtre, Rue des prés, Fausse-rhabarbe, Rhabarbe des pauvres. Ord. Ranunculaceæ. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Polygynia. The root resembles rhubarb in its properties.

Thalic'trum Anemonoi'des, Mead'ow Rue, Rue-leaved Anem'ony. An indigenous plant, flowering in April and May.

Thal'lum, (from Θαλλος, [L.] thallus, 'a green bud or shoot,') A metal discovered in 1861 by spectrum analysis, in which it gives a very brilliant green ray. It is found in certain seleniferous and telluriferous deposits, in the native sulphur of Lipari, &c., and resembles lead physically in its aspect, color, density, &c., as well as in its toxic action on the economy.

The salts of thallium, especially the nitrate, are very soluble.

Thal'us, 'a shoot.' A condition of the filaments of a fungus when, by excessive multiplication and interweaving, they become matted together.

Thamarin'dus, Tamarindus.

Thame, (thumb,) Pollex.

Thanas'imus, (Θανασιμος, from θανατος, 'death,') Mortal.

Thanat'icus, (from thanatus.) Relating or appertaining to death. Thanat'ici (morbi) of Dr. Wm. Farr are fatal affections from violence.

Thanat'odes, (Θανατωδης,) Mortal.

Thanatognomon'ic, Thanatognomon'icus, (thanatus, and γινωσκω, 'I know,') Characteristic of death — as a thanatognomonic sign.

Than'atoid, Thanatoï'des, (thanatus, and ειδος, 'resemblance,') Resembling death. Apparently dead.

Thanatolog'ical, Thanatolog'icus, (F.) Thanatologique. Relating or appertaining to thanatology.

Thanatol'ogy, (thanatus, and λογος, 'a discourse,') Thanatolog'ia, Thnescolog'ia, (F.) Thanatologie. A treatise on, or the doctrine of, death.

Than'atus, (Θανατος,) Death.

Thap'sia, (from the island Thapsus.) The Dendly car'rot, Thap'sia ascle'pias. Family, Umbelliferae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. The bark of the root operates violently, both upward and downward. It is not used.

THAP'SIA SILPH'IUM, a North African plant, has similar properties. Six to ten grains of the powder produce several alvine evacuations.

Thap'sium Actæifo'lium, (after the isle of Thapsus,) Ligusticum actæifolium.

THAP'SIUM ATROPURPUREUM, T. cordatum, Roundheart. Order, Umbelliferae. The flowers, which appear in June, are of a dark purple.

THAP'SIUM BARBINO'DE, Mead'ow Parsnep. An indigenous plant of the Northern and Western States, which flowers in June. Flowers, yellow.

Both these plants have been esteemed vulnerary, antisyphilitic, and diaphoretic, and as antidotes to the bite of a rattlesnake.

THAP'SIUM CORDA'TUM, T. atropurpureum.

Thap'sus Barba'tus, Verbascum nigrum.

Thar'si, see Tarsus.

The, Thigh.

Thé, Thea — t. des Apalaches, Ilex vomitoria — t. du Canada, Gaultheria — t. d'Europe, Salvia veronica — t. de France, Salvia — t. de Jersey, Celastrus — t. de la Mer du Sud, Ilex vomitoria — t. du Mexique, Chenopodium ambrosioides — t. du Paraguay, Ilex Paraguensis.

Thé de Saint Germain, Espèces Purgatives. An infusion of a powder composed of senna leaves, flowers of sambucus, aniseed, fennel seed, and cream of tartar, official in the French Codex (1866).

Thé de Simon Pauli, Myrica gale — t. Suisse, Falltranck.

The'a, (Chinese teha,) Cha'a, Tea, (F.) Thé. There are two principal varieties of teaplant, Thea Sinen'sis, — the Thea Bohe'a, and Thea vir'idis, the black tea, and the green. Ord. Camelliæ. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Monogynia. In commerce, many kinds of tea are met with. Several of the differences between these appear to result from the age at which the leaves have been collected, and the mode of their desiccation.

Tea-drinking was introduced into Europe about the year 1666, since which time its use has become almost universal; and, in spite of the assertions of medical terrorists, it is, except in particular idiosyncrasies, entirely harmless. It is not unfrequently adulterated. See Falsifications, table of. Tea is astringent, and gently excitant in nervous headache, &c.

By an analogical transference, very common in language, the word Tea has been used almost synonymously with infusion — as Beef tea, Mint tea, &c.

THE'A GERMAN'ICA, Veronica.

Theba'ina, Paramorphia.

Thebe'sius, Veins of. A name given to supposititious branches of the coronary veins, which Christopher Adam Thebesius, a German anatomist, described as opening into the heart by small depressions observable in the right auricle, and which have been called Foram'ina Thebe'sii. No such veins can be demonstrated. The valve at the orifice of the coronary vein, in the right ventricle, is called Val'vula Thebe'sii, V. Guiffartiana, V. venæ magnæ, Valve of Thebesius.

The'ca, (Θηκη,) Case, Vagina, Sheath—t. Cerebri, Cranium—t. Cordis, Pericardium—t. Folliculi, see Folliculi Graafiani—t. Vertebralis, see Vertebral canal.

The'cal, Theca'lis, (from theca, 'a sheath,') Relating or appertaining to a sheath—as of a tendon.

Theci'tis, gen. Theci'tidis, (theca, and itis.) A term of hybrid formation, signifying inflammation of the sheaths of tendons.

The'in, (from theca,) see Coffea Arabica.

Thei'on, (Θειον,) Sulphur.

Theiope'gae, (theion, and πηγη, 'a spring,') Waters, mineral, sulphureous.

Theiother'mæ, (theion, and Θερμη, 'heat,') Waters, mineral, sulphureous.

Thela'sis, (Θηλαζω, 'I give suck,') Lactation.

Thelas'mus, (Θηλασμος,) Lactation.

Thelas'tria, (Θηλαστρια,) Nurse.

The'lé, (Θηλη,) Mamma, Nipple.

Theli'tis, gen. Theli'tidis, (F.) Thélite, (thele, and itis,) Inflammation of the nipple.

Thelon'cus, (thele, and ογκος, 'a swelling,') Mastoneus.

Thelorrhag'ia, (thele, and ραγη, 'a rupture,') Hemorrhage from the nipple.

Thelygon'ia, (Θηλυς, 'female,' and γονη, 'generation,') The part taken by the female in the act of generation. The procreation of female children. Also, nymphomania.

Thelyg'onum, (Θηλυς, 'female,' and γονη, 'sperm,') Sperm (of the female).

Thelyp'teris, gen. Thelypter'idis, (Θηλυς, 'female,' and πτερις,) Pteris aquilina.

The'nad, Thenal.

The'nal, The'nar, (from thenar.) Relating or appertaining to the thenar.

THE'NAL AS'PECT. An aspect towards the side on which the thenar is situated. (Barclay.) Thenad is used adverbially by the same writer to signify 'towards the thenal aspect.'

The'nar, (Θεναρ, from Θενω, 'I strike,' 'I push,') The palm of the hand or sole of the foot.

THE'NAR, Flexor brevis pollicis manûs, Palm.

THE'NAR or THE'NAL EM'INENCE is the projection at the anterior and outer part of the hand formed by the abductor brevis, opponens, and flexor brevis pollicis.

THE'NAR or THE'NAL MUS'CLE. Riolan and Winslow give this name to the fleshy mass, formed of the abductor brevis, opponens pollicis, and the interior part of the flexor brevis pollicis. In the foot, Winslow gives the name Thenal muscle to the abductor and flexor brevis pollicis pedis.

Theobro'ma (gen. Theobro'matis) Ca'cao, (Θεος, 'God,' and βρωμα, 'food,') Cacao.

Theobro'mina. A substance obtained from the cocoon, resembling caffeine, but more bitter and less soluble.

Theoma'nia, (Θεομανια, from Θεος, 'God,' and mania,) Demonomania.

Theople'gia, (Θεος, 'God,' and πληγη, 'a stroke,') Apoplexy.

Theoplex'ia, (Θεος, 'God,' and πλησσω, 'I strike,') Apoplexy.

Theoretical, (Θεωρητικός,) Theoret'icus, Theo'ricus, (Θεωρεω, 'I contemplate,') (F.) Théorétique,

Théorique. That which is confined to theory, or is connected with it. An epithet also applied to a sect of physicians, who founded their doctrine chiefly on reasoning.

Theo'ria, (Θεωρια,) Theory.

Théorique, Theoretical.

The'ory, (Θεωρια,) Theo'ria, (F.) Théorie. The speculative part of a science. The connection established in the mind between a general fact, or the least possible number of general facts, and all the particular facts dependent thereon: for example, the motions of the heavenly bodies, and the most important natural phenomena are connected with a single fact, previously known by observation; viz. that the force of gravity acts inversely according to the square of the distance. This constitutes the theory of universal gravitation. Theory must not be confounded with system. Theory regards nature as it is, and is a rigid deduction from facts. System is too often the creature of the imagination, to which nature is made to bend.

THE'ORY OF MED'ICINE, In'stitutes of Medicine. Theoret'ical Medicine, is that part of the science which attempts philosophically to account for the various phenomena that present themselves during health as well as in disease. It is the philosophy of medicine. The Institutes of Medicine are generally considered to comprise Physiology and its applications to Pathology, Hygiene, and Therapeutics. By some they are considered to include General Pathology and General Therapeutics.

Therapei'a, (Θεραπεια,) Curation, Therapeutics.

Therapeu'sis, Therapeutics.

Therapeu'ta, (Θεραπευτης,) Therapist.

Therapeu'ter, (Θεραπευτηρ,) Therapist.

Therapeu'tes, (Θεραπευται,) Therapists.

Therapeu'tical, Therapen'ticus. Relating or appertaining to Therapeutics.

Therapeu'ticé, (Θεραπευτικη, [τεχνη,]) Therapeutics.

Therapeu'tics, Therapen'ticé, Therapen'tia, Therapen'sis, Iatrotechnicé, Therapei'a, Therapi'a, Curato'ria Meth'odus, Methodus Meden'di, Practice of Phys'ic, (F.) Thérapeutique, Thérapie, (from Θεραπεω, 'I wait upon, I alleviate, I attend upon the sick,') That part of medicine, the object of which is the treatment of disease. With others, the department which comprises an explanation of the modus operandi of medicines.

Therapeu'ticus, Therapeutical.

Thérapeutique, Therapeutics.

Therapeu'tist, Therapeu'ta, Therapen'tes, Therapeu'ter. One who practises therapeutics. A practitioner of medicine. To be a good therapist, a man must be well versed in every department of medicine, and capable of observing and reasoning well. He may be a good observer, and yet a bad reasoner. He cannot practise well unless he is both. Hence, the comparatively small number of good therapists.

Therapi'a, (Θεραπεια,) Therapeutics.

Thérapie, Therapeutics.

The'ria, (Θηρ, 'a wild animal,') Radzyge.

The'riac, Theriaca—t. of Antipater, Antipatri theriaca.

Theri'aca, (Θηριακα,) The'riac, (from Θηρ, 'a ferocious or venomous animal,') Treacle, Molasses, (F.) Thériaque. Also, a medicine, believed to be capable of curing or preventing the effects of the bite of a venomous animal. In this sense it is chiefly used by writers. The'riac and The'riacal have been used adjectively for medicinal.

THE'RIACA ANDROM'ACHI, Ven'ice Treacle, is an ancient alexipharmic electuary; consisting of a farrago of 61 different ingredients, which possessed the most opposite properties. It was invented by Andromachus of Crete, and prepared by order of Nero. It has received various modifications; and, to the discredit of the Faculté de Médecine of Paris, held its place in their Codex, with even an additional number of ingredients. The French Codex (1866) still retains it under the name of Thériaque, with all its ingredients, 57 of these being first formed into a powder, Poudre Thériacale. The Electuarium Opium polypharmacum of the Codex has contained acid ingredients, 5; astringent, 5; bitter, 22; indigenous aromatics, 10; umbelliferous aromatics, 7; balsams and resinous substances, 8; fetid ingredients, 6; narcotics, 1; earthy substances, 1; gummy or amylaceous, 4; saccharine, 3; total, 72! and one of these the flesh of the viper! A little more than a grain of opium is contained in each drachm of the compound.

THERIACA ARTICULORUM. Colchicum—t. Celestis, Tinctura opii—t. Communis, Molasses—t. Edinensis, Confectio opii.

THERIACA GERMANORUM. An extract or rob, prepared from juniper berries. Used as a stomachic.

THERIACA LONDINENSIS, Cataplasma Cymini. A cataplasm of cumin seed, bay berries, germander, snakeroot, cloves, honey, and sometimes opium, or syrup of poppies.

THERIACA TARTARICORUM, Allium.

Theriaki. In Turkey, opium-eaters, or they who indulge largely in the use of opium, are so called.

Thériaque, Theriaca.

Theriatrica, (ἑρπ, 'an animal,' and ιατρικα, 'medicine.') Veterinary art.

Theriodes, (θεριωδης, from ἑρπ, 'a venomous animal,' and odes,) Ferine.

Therio'ma, gen. Therio'matis, The'riom, (θεριωμα, from ἑρπ, 'a venomous animal,' and oma.) Any extremely malignant ulcer. Sometimes confined to ulcers of the lungs.

The'riom, (θεριον,) Therioma.

Theriotomy, (ἑρπ, 'an animal,' and τρυφω, 'to cut,') Zootomy.

Ther'ma, (θερμα,) Heat—t. Emphytum, Animal heat.

Ther'mæ, pl. of therma, (θερμα.) Warm baths or springs. See Waters, mineral.

THER'MÆ FABARILÆ, Pfeffers, mineral waters of—t. Piperinæ, Pfeffers, mineral waters of—t. Plumbariæ, Plombières, mineral waters of.

Ther'mal, Therma'lis, (from therma.) Relating or appertaining to heat. Hot, warm,—as 'a thermal mineral water.'

THER'MAL HAM'MER, see Hammer.

Therman'tica, (θερμαντικα.) Calefacients.

Thermas'ma, gen. Thermas'matis, (θερμασμα,) Fomentation.

Therme, see Heat.

Ther'mic, Ther'micus, (from therma.) Relating or appertaining to heat.

THER'MIC FE'VER. A term proposed by Dr. H. C. Wood, Jr., for sunstroke. See Coup de soleil.

Thermolu'sia, (therma, and λυω, 'I wash,') Bath, warm.

Thermom'eter, (therma, and μετρον, 'measure,') see Heat—t. Centigrade, Fahrenheit, &c., see Heat.

Thermom'etry. The application of the thermometer in disease, the heat varying in different morbid conditions.

Thermosystalt'ic, Thermosystalt'icus, (F.) Thermosystaltique, (therma, and συσταλτικός, 'adapted for contracting,') A term applied to a muscle which is influenced, in its contraction, by heat and cold,—as athermosystaltic means one not so influenced.

Thermote'riom, (therma, and τρυφω, 'to preserve,') An apparatus for keeping food warm in the nursery, sick-chamber, or when travelling.

Thermotherapei'a, (therma, and therapeia,

'treatment of disease,') Treatment by means of heat, and especially of hot air.

Ther'mum Em'phytum, (therma, and εμφύτος, 'innate,') Animal heat, Biolychnium.

The'sis, (θεσις, 'a proposition,') from τήθημι, 'I put,') 'A position or proposition.' Dissertatio seu Disputatio inauguralis, Inaugural Dissertatio. The name usually given to the essay composed by a candidate for graduation in medicine, which he is at times required to defend publicly. Often, however, it is a mere form, giving useless labor and trouble to the student, inasmuch as it is executed as a task, and never afterwards regarded by the preceptor or by others. Sandifort, Haller, Smellie, and Stoll have published collections of these. In many universities, of Germany especially, the Disputatio inauguralis is the public dissertation; while the Theses are questions put to the candidate, and answered in writing, in the Latin language.

Theve'tia Ahouai, (after Andrew Thevet, a French monk, who travelled in Brazil in the sixteenth century,) Ahouai. Fam. Apocynæ. The kernels of the nut of this Brazilian tree are said to be a violent poison. In the Antilles its nuts are called Noix de Serpent; and they are used against the bites of serpents.

THEVE'TIA NERIFO'LIA, Yel'low Olea'nder, Ex'ile Tree. This tree, common in the gardens of Southern India, has similar acrid properties. It has been given in tincture prepared from the bark as an antiperiodic in intermittent fever.

Thew, ([Sax.] ðeop,) Tendon.

They, Thigh.

Thicklist'ed, Palsy.

Thieves' Vin'egar, Acetum aromaticum.

Thigh, ([Sax.] ðeoh,) Fe'mur, Fe'men, Crus, Me'rus, Me'rium, (Sc.) The, They, (F.) Cuisse. (Of old, Fe'mur meant the thigh generally, and especially the outer part; Fe'men, the inner.) The part of the lower limb which extends from the pelvis to the leg. The thigh is larger at its superior than inferior part, and has the form of an inverted and truncated cone, slightly depressed from within outwards. Above, it is bounded, anteriorly, by the groin; externally, by the hip; behind, by the fold of the nates; and within, by the perineal region. Below, it is bounded, anteriorly, by the prominence of the knee; posteriorly, by the ham. It is formed of a considerable number of muscles, bloodvessels, lymphatics, nerves, &c., and is covered by a strong aponeurosis.

Thigh'bone, Femur—t. Neck of the, Collum femoris.

Thim'bleweed, Rudbeckia laciniata.

Thi'on, (θειον,) Sulphur.

Thirst, ([Sax.] ðyrst,) Si'tis, Dip'sa, Potio'nis desiderium, (F.) Soif. A simple desire for, or absolute want of, liquids. Physiologists are not entirely agreed regarding the seat of thirst; some place it in the fauces, others in the stomach. Its immediate cause is not known. It has been attributed to a dry condition of the nervous papillæ of the mouth and fauces from suppression of the salivary and mucous secretions. This is probably true; but, again, it is owing to the wants of the system,—a supply of fluid being required to compensate the numerous losses that are constantly taking place. Thirst is an internal sensation,—an instinctive want,—arising from organization, and inexplicable. It is an urgent symptom in many diseases, particularly in those of vascular excitement.

THIRST, EXCES'SIVE, Polydipsia—t. Morbid, Dipso'sis.

Thirst'y, Dipsodes.

Thla'dias, (θλαδίας, from θλαω, 'I crush,') Eunucho.

Thla'sias, (θλασίας,) Eunuch.

Thla'sis, (θλασις,) Contusion — t. Depressio, Depression.

Thlas'ma, gen. Thlas'matis, (θλασμα,) Contusion — t. Concussio, Concussion — t. Stemma, Sprain.

Thlas'pi, (θλασπίς,) Pen'nycess. Ord. Cruciferae. Sex. Syst. Tetradymania Siliculosa. Two species of thlaspi are directed in some pharmacopœias for medical use: Thlaspi arven'se or Tre'acle mus'tard; and Thlaspi campes'trē seu hirsutum seu vulga'tius, Lepid'ium campes'trē, Lep'ia seu Ibe'ris campes'tris, Mith'ridate mus'tard. The pharmaceutical properties of both kinds resemble those of common mustard.

THLAS'PI BUR'SA, T. bursa'tum, Thlaspi seu Capsell'la seu Ibe'ris seu Nasturt'ium seu Rod'schied'ia bur'sa pasto'ris, Bur'sa pasto'ris, Shepherd's purse, Col'cowort, St. James's wort, Poor man's Parmacit'y, (F.) Fleur de St. Jacques, Bourse à berger ou à pasteur, Tabouret. A common European plant, introduced into this country. It is slightly astringent, but is little used.

THLAS'PI BURSA'TUM, Thlaspi bursa — t. Nasturtium, Lepidium sativum — t. Sativum, Lepidium sativum.

Thlib'ias, (θλιβίας, from θλιβω, 'I crush,') Eunucho.

Thlipsenceph'al'ia, see Derencephalia.

Thlipsenceph'alus, (θλιψίς, 'compression,' and εγκεφαλος, 'the encephalon,') A monster in whom the skull is open, not merely in the frontal and parietal, but also in the occipital, region, a distinct fontanelle not existing.

Thlip'sis, (θλιψίς,) Compres'sio. Compression, and especially constriction of vessels by an external cause. Oppression.

Thnescolog'ia, (θνησκω, 'I die,' and λογος, 'a discourse,') Thanatology.

Thnēto'blaste, (θνητος, 'mortal,' and βλαστος, 'germ,') A term proposed by M. Robin for the heteromorphous and anatomical element of the different tumors called 'cancerous.'

Thnēto'blastique, Cancerous.

Tho'lus, (θολος, 'a vaulted chamber,') Achiculum — t. Diocleus, Scapha.

Thomso'nian. One who practises or believes in Thomsonianism.

Thomso'nianism, Thom'sonism. A fanciful doctrine, of which a person of the name of Thomson, of New England, was the founder. One of its leading principles is, that the human body is composed of four elements [?] — earth, air, fire, and water; and one of its apothegms, that metals and minerals are in the earth, and, being extracted from the depths of the earth, have a tendency to carry all down into the earth who use them; that the tendency of all vegetables is to spring up from the earth, and therefore to uphold mankind from the grave.

The Thomsonians are Botanical Doctors. See Herb doctor.

Thoracente'sis, Thoracocentesis.

Thorachique, Thoracic.

Thorac'ic, Thorac'icus, (from thorax,) (F.) Thoracique ou Thorachique. That which relates or belongs to the chest; as Thoracic vis'cera, &c.

THORAC'IC INF'E'RIOR AR'TERY, Arte'ria Thorac'ica Exter'na Inf'e'rior seu Lon'ga seu Mamma'ria exter'na seu Thorac'ica inf'e'rior, (F.) Deuxième des Thoraciques (Ch.), arises from the axillary, a little below the preceding, and descends vertically over the latter part of the thorax, and the serratus major anticus. It afterwards bends inwards, becomes subcutaneous, and divides into several branches, which embrace the breast. It gives numerous ramifications to the pectoralis major, serratus anticus, intercostals, ganglions of the axilla, mamma, &c.

THORAC'IC SUPE'RIOR AR'TERY, Arte'ria Thoracica Exter'na Supe'rior, (F.) Artère thoracique supérieure, Première des Thoraciques (Ch.), arises from the axillary artery or from the acromial, and descends forwards between the pectoralis major and p. minor, to which it distributes itself by a great number of branches. In some subjects there are two or three Arte'rie thorac'icæ exter'næ superio'res.

THORAC'IC DUCT, Duc'tus thorac'icus seu thoracicus poste'rior seu vertebra'lis seu chy'lifer seu chy'li seu lac'teus seu ro'rifer seu Pecqueti seu Pecquetia'nus, Ve'na al'ba thora'cis, Al'veus ampulles'cens, Distributo'ria lac'tea thorac'ica, Galla'ria, Duct of Pec'quet, Alimen'tary duct, (F.) Canal ou Conduit thoracique ou de Pecquet, is the duct in which the lymphatics of the lower limbs, abdomen, left superior extremity, left side of the head, neck, and thorax terminate. It begins at the receptaculum chyli, which is formed by the union of five or six large lymphatic trunks — themselves formed from the union of all the absorbent plexuses of the abdomen. The duct ascends into the chest through the pillars of the diaphragm, and by the side of the aorta and vena azygos. It contracts in dimension as far as the 6th dorsal vertebra, when it inclines toward the left hand, ascends behind the arch of the aorta, passes behind the left internal jugular vein, and opens at the posterior part of the subclavian vein of the same side. Its embouchure is furnished with two valves, which prevent the blood from passing from the vein into the duct.

THORAC'IC LIMBS are the upper limbs, so called because they are articulated with the lateral and upper parts of the chest.

THORAC'IC, LONG or INF'E'RIOR, Mammary inferior external artery.

THORAC'IC NERVES. The short or anterior thoracic nerves are two in number. They arise from the brachial plexus, and divide into an anterior and a posterior branch, the former distributed to the pectoralis major muscle, the latter uniting with a branch of the other to form a loop, from which numerous branches are given off to the pectoralis major and p. minor.

The long thoracic nerve, Poste'rior thorac'ic, Exter'nal res'piratory of Sir Charles Bell, is a long branch which arises from the fourth and fifth cervical nerves, immediately after their escape from the intervertebral foramina, and passes downward to be distributed upon the serratus magnus muscle.

THORAC'IC REGIONS are the different regions of the chest. Thus, we say, anterior, lateral, and superior thoracic, &c.

Thorac'ica, (from thorax,) Pectoralis.

Thorac'ics, First of the, Mammary superior external artery.

Thoracique, Thoracic.

Tho'raco, (from thorax,) In composition, the thorax or chest.

Thoracocente'sis, Thoracente'sis, Thoracot'omy, (thoraco, and κέντησις, 'puncture,') Paracente'sis thora'cis. Perforation of the chest to evacuate contained fluid — as in empyema.

Thoracocys'tis, gen. Thoracocys'tidis, Thoracocystis.

Thoracodid'ymus, (thoraco, and δίδυμος, 'a twin,') A monstrosity in which twins are united by the thorax.

Thoracod'ynē, (thoraco, and ὄδυνη, 'pain,') Pleurodynia.

Thoracodyn'ia, Pleurodynia.

Thoraco-facial, Platysma myoides.

Thoracogastrodidymus, Didymus symphyothoracogastrius, Xiphodidymus, (thoraco, γαστήρ, 'the belly,' and δίδυμος, 'a twin.') A monstrosity in which twins are united by the chest and abdomen.

Thoraco-maxillo-facial, Platysma myoides.

Thoracom'eter, (thoraco, and μέτρον, 'measure,') Stethometer.

Thoracom'yodyn'ia, (thoraco, and myodynia,) Pleurodynia.

Thoracopathi'a, (thoraco, and παθός, 'disease,')

Disease or suffering in the chest.

Thoracoscop'ia, (thoraco, and σκοπεῖν, 'I inspect,') see Auscultation.

Thoracoscop'ium, Stethoscope.

Thoracot'omy, (thoraco, and τέμνειν, 'to cut,') Thoracocentesis.

Thoracys'tis, gen. Thoracys'tidis, Thoracocys'tis, (thorax, and κύστις, 'a bladder,') Encysted dropsy of the chest. Hydatids in the chest.

Tho'rax, gen. Thora'cis, (θώραξ, gen. θωρακος, 'a cuirass,' 'a coat of mail,') Cith'rus, Ven'ter me'dius, Pec'tus, Ste'thus, Scu'tum pec'toris, Bir, Che'lys, Cus'sa, the Breast, the Chest, (F.) Poi'trine. One of the splanchnic cavities, Ca'vum thora'cis, bounded posteriorly by the vertebræ, laterally by the ribs and scapula, anteriorly by the sternum, above by the clavicle, and below by the diaphragm. It is destined to lodge and protect the chief organs of respiration and circulation—the lungs and the heart.

Tho'RAX, Corset.

Tho'rê, (σperm,) Sperm.

Thorn'apple, Datura stramonium—t. Red, Datura sanguinea.

Thor'oughstem, Eupatorium perfoliatum.

Thrix, (θρίξ, gen. τριχος,) Capillus, Hair.

Throat, ([Sax.] Þrocte, Þrocta,) Ju'gulum intersti'tium, Jugula'rē, Gut'ter, Spha'gē, (Prov.) Chokes, Droat, Hause, Hose, (Sc.) Halse, Hawse, Witter. The anterior part of the neck. (F.) Gorge. Also, the pharynx.

Throat'root, Geum Virginianum, Liatris.

Throat'wort, Campanula trachelium.

Throb'bing, Pulsati'vus, Sphyg'micus, Sphygmodes, Pulsatory, (F.) Pulsatif. A throbbing pain, (Prov.) Stang, (F.) Douleur pulsative, is a kind of pain which is, or seems to be, caused or augmented by the pulsation of arteries.

Throe, (from [Sax.] Þropian, 'to suffer,') Agony; Pains, labor.

Thromballo'sis, (θρομβος, 'a clot,' and αλλοίωσις, 'I change,') The change resulting from coagulation of blood in the veins. See Thrombosis.

Throm'bi (pl. of thrombus) Lac'tei, Infarctus mammae lacteus.

Thrombocys'tis, (thrombus, and κύστις 'a cyst,') The cyst occasionally surrounding a clot of blood—as in encephalic hemorrhage.

Thrombo'sis, (θρομβωσις, from thrombus, and osis,) Coagulation; applied especially to coagulation of blood in a bloodvessel. It now generally designates the partial or complete obstruction of any portion of the circulatory apparatus by a morbid product developed in situ. The clot—thrombus, autochthonous clot—is usually fibrinous. The coagulum may be carried onward, (see Embolism,) or it may go on to suppuration, independent of other disturbances caused by its presence.

Throm'bus, (θρομβος, 'a clot,') see Thrombosis. Also a small, hard, round, bluish tumor, Hæmato'ma, formed by effusion of blood in the vicinity of a vein opened in the operation of bloodletting. It is commonly owing to the opening of the vein and that of the skin not corresponding, to excessive smallness of the cutaneous orifice, or to small, fatty granules which prevent the discharge of the blood. Compresses dipped in salt water, camphorated spirit, and slight compression, usually disperse it. See Blood.

THROM'BUS NEONATO'RUM, Cephalæmatoma—t. Pelvic, Hæmatocele, pelvic—t. of Vulva and Vagina, Hæmatocele, pudendal.

Throp'ill, (corr. from throat,) Trachea.

Throp'ple, Trachea.

Throt'tle, (dim. of throat,) Trachea.

THROT'TLE, (from throat,) To press powerfully or continuously with the fingers on the throat, so as to endanger or produce apnoea and death.

Throw, (from [Sax.] þropian, 'to suffer,') Agony; Pains, labor.

Thro'wort, Leonurus cardiaca.

Thrush, Aphthæ—t. Fungus, see Aphthæ—t. Milk, Aphthæ—t. White, Aphthæ.

Thrus'ty, Dipsodes.

Thryp'sis, (θρυψις, from θρυπώ, 'I break in pieces,') Comminution.

Thu'ja Occidenta'lis, Thuya occidentalis.

Thumb, ([Sax.] þuma,) Pollex. "To bite the thumb" at any one is to bid defiance to him.—Shakspeare, "Romeo and Juliet," Act I., Scene I.

Thu'rea, (from thus,) Juniperus lycia—t. Virga, Juniperus lycia.

Thus, gen. Thu'ris, (from θύω, 'I burn perfumes,') see Pinus abies—t. Americanum, see Pinus sylvestris—t. Fœminium, see Pinus abies—t. Judæorum, Croton cascarilla, Styrax, Thymiana—t. Libanotos, Juniperus lycia—t. Masculum, Juniperus lycia—t. Verum, Juniperus lycia—t. Vulgare, see Pinus abies.

Thymelco'sis, (thymus, and ἔλκος, 'an ulcer,') Ulceration of the thymus gland.

Thymia'ma, gen. Thymia'matis, (Θυμίαμα, from Θω, 'I burn perfumes,' 'a perfume,') Thus Judæorum, Muskwood, (F.) Narcaphthe. A bark from Syria, Cilicia, &c., supposed to be the product of the liquid storax tree. It has an agreeable balsamic smell, approaching that of liquid storax. See Lacaphthon and Narcaphthon.

Thymia'ma, Fumigation, Suffimentum.

Thymiasiotech'nia, (thymiasis, and τεχνη, 'art,') Thymiatechny.

Thymia'sis, (Θυμίασις,) Fumigation.

Thymiatech'ny, Thymiatech'nia, Thymiasiotech'nia, Cu'ra fumigato'ria, (θυμίαμα, 'a perfume,' and τεχνη, 'art,') The art of employing perfumes in medicine.

Thy'mic, Thy'micus, (F.) Thymique. Having relation to the thymus, as thymic asthma. — Relating to thyme, as thymic acid.

Thy'mic Ac'id, (pron. ty'mic,) Thy'mol, (F.) Acide Thymique. An antiseptic acid analogous with carbolic acid, obtained as a solid by refrigeration of the oil of thyme, or in the liquid form by treating the essence of thyme, in which it is associated with a hydrocarbon, called thymene, with an aqueous solution of an alkali, as soda or potash, and separating it from the thymate thus formed by the addition of an acid. In a concentrated form, it has been employed for cauterization of the dental nerves. In very weak solution, it has been used as a dressing for wounds, &c. It is almost insoluble in water, but soluble in ether and alcohol.

Thy'mion, (Θυμίων,) Thy'ma, Thy'mus, Por'rum, Por'rus, Verru'ca rhagoi'dea, Verru'ca mi'nor, (from θυμός, 'thyme,') A small wart on the skin, resembling a bud of thyme.

Thymio'sis, (from thymion,) Frambœsia — t. Indica, Frambœsia.

Thymique, Thymic.

Thymit'es, (Θυμινες,) Wine impregnated with thyme.

Thymit'is, (Θυμός, 'thymus,' and ἰtis,) Inflammation of the thymus gland.

Thy'mol, (pron. ty'mol,) Thymic acid.

Thymopathi'a, Psychopathi'a, (Θυμός, 'the mind,' and πάθος, 'affection,') A disease of the mind.

Thy'mos, (Θυμός,) Rage, Thymus.

Thymoxal'mé, (Θυμός, 'thyme,' οξύς, 'acid,' and ἅλς, 'salt,') A compound of thyme, vinegar, and salt.

Thy'mum, Thymus.

Thy'mus, (Θυμός,) Glandula Thy'mus, Cor'pus Thymic'num seu Thy'micum, Gland'idium, Thy'mus gland, Cor'pus incomprehensib'il'e of Joseph Frank, — Sweet bread of the butcher. An organ, concerned in hæmotosis, which is seated in the upper separation of the anterior mediastinum. The thymus has the appearance of a glandular body. It is oblong; bilobate; soft, and very variable in size and color. In the fœtus, it is very large, and contains in a central cavity—reservoir of the thymus—a milky fluid; but it gradually disappears, and in old age is scarcely discernible. The arteries, called thy'mic, are from the inferior thyroid, internal mammary, bronchial, and mediastinal. The veins have the same arrangement. It receives some nervous filaments from the pneumogastric nerves, the phrenic, and the inferior cervical ganglia.

Thy'mus, (Θυμός,) Thy'mum, T. vulgaris seu tenuifolius seu horten'sis, Common or Garden Thyme, (F.) Thym, T. ordinaire, Fariyoute. Ord. Labiatæ. Sex. Syst. Didynamia Gymnospermia.

This herb has an agreeable, aromatic smell; and a warm, pungent taste. It is reputed to be resolvent, emmenagogue, tonic, and stomachic. It is not much used. The volatile oil, O'leum Thy'mi, Oil of Thyme, is officinal. It has been used on cotton as an application to carious teeth, and also as an ingredient in liniments.

Thy'mus, (Θυμός,) Psyche, Satureia capitata, Thymion — t. Calaminthus, Melissa calamintha — t. Capitatus, Satureia capitata — t. Ciliatus, T. mastichina — t. Creticus, Satureia crepitata — t. Hortensis, Thymus — t. Includens, T. serpyllum.

Thy'mus Mastichi'na, T. Ciliatus, Ma'rum vulga'rè, Clinopod'ia, Mastichi'na Gallo'rum, Thym'bra Hispan'ica, Ja'ca In'dica, Com'mon herb Mast'ich. A low shrubby, Spanish plant, used as an errhine. It has a smell like mastich. Its virtues resemble those of the Marum Syriacum, but it is said to be less powerful.

Thy'mus Multiflo'rus, Melissa nepeta — t. Nepeta, Melissa nepeta.

Thy'mus, Res'ervoir of the, see Thymus.

Thy'mus Serpyll'um, T. inclu'dens, Herpy'los, Herpyll'os, Serpyll'um, Serpul'um, Serpil'um, Gila'rum, Serpyll'um vulga'rè mi'nus, Moth'er of Thyme, Wild Thyme, (F.) Serpolet. This plant has the same sensible properties as the garden thyme, but has a milder and rather more grateful flavor. Len'on Thyme, Serpyll'um citra'tum, is merely a variety of Thy'mus Serpyll'um. It is very pungent; and has a particularly grateful odor, approaching that of lemons.

Thy'mus Sylvar'icus, Clinopodium vulgare — t. Sylvestris, Satureia capitata — t. Tenuifolius, Thymus — t. Vulgaris, Thymus.

Thyremphrax'is, (thyreo, and ἀφραξίς, 'obstruction,') Bronchocele.

Thy'reo, Thyro, (from θυρεός, 'a shield,') in composition, the thyroid cartilage or gland.

Thyreoadeni'tis, Thyreoiditis.

Thyreöaryt'enoid, Thyreöarytenoïde'us, or Thyreöarytenoï'des. That which relates to the thyroid and arytenoid cartilages.

THYREÖARYT'ENOID LIG'AMENTS, Ligamen'ta thyreöarytenoïde'a seu vocal'ia, Infe'rior Lig'aments of the Lar'ynx, Lips of the Glottis, Vocal Cords or Ligaments, are two ligaments about two lines broad, formed of elastic and parallel fibres, which are contained in a duplicature of the mucous membrane of the larynx. They extend horizontally from the anterior projection at the base of each arytenoid cartilage to the middle of the angle of union of the thyroid cartilage. They are the essential organs of voice. See Glottis.

THYREÖARYT'ENOID MUS'LES, THYREÖARYTENOÏDE'I, are thin muscles, which arise from the middle and inferior part of the posterior surface of the thyroid cartilage; whence they proceed backwards and outwards, to be inserted into the outer part of the base of the arytenoid cartilage. They give the necessary tension to the ligaments of the glottis, in the production of the voice. Santorini has given the name Thyreöarytenoïdeus obliquus to a portion of the arytenoïdeus muscle.

Thyreöce'lè, (thyreo, and κήλη, 'a tumor,') Bronchocele.

Thyreöepiglott'ic, Thyreöepiglottide'us, Thyreopiglott'icus. Sabatier and Santorini have given this name to the outer portion of the thyroarytenoid muscle; because it passes from the thyroid cartilage to the anterior part of the epiglottis.

Thyreohy'oid, Thyreohyoïde'us, Thyrohyoï'des, Thyrohy'oid, Hyodeothyreo'des. That which belongs or relates to the thyroid cartilage and os hyoides.

THYREOHY'OID, THYROHY'OID or HYOTHY'ROID MEMBRANE is a very broad, yellowish, fibrous membrane, thicker than at the middle than at the extremities, which is attached, above, to the posterior surface of the body and great cornu of the os hyoides; and, below, to the whole superior edge of the thyroid cartilage. The lateral thyrohyoid ligaments may be considered as the margins of the thyrohyoid membrane. They pass between the superior cornua of the thyroid cartilage to the extremities of the greater cornua of the os hyoides. A small cartilaginous or bony nodule — cartilago triticea, corpusculum triticeum — is sometimes found in each.

Thyreohyoideus or Hyothyroideus Muscle is situate at the anterior and superior part of the neck. It is attached to the oblique line on the anterior surface of the thyroid cartilage; to the inferior edge of the body of the os hyoides, and to the anterior portion of its great cornu. It approximates the thyroid cartilage and os hyoides to each other, by raising the cartilage, and with it the whole larynx; or, it can depress the os hyoides.

Thyreoid, Thyroid.

Thyreoides, Thyroideal.

Thyreoidien, Thyroideal.

Thyreoiditis, Thyreoidenitis, Thyreoiditis, Angina thyreoides, (thyreo, and itis.) Inflammation of the thyroid gland.

Thyreomus, (thyreo, and ovkos, 'a tumor,') Bronchocele.

Thyreopharyngeus, Thyropharyngeus.

Thyreopharyngo-palatinus. The chief muscular mass of the soft palate, consisting of a thyreopalatine and a pharyngopalatine portion (Luschka).

Thyreophraxia, (thyreo, and φρασσα, 'I obstruct,') Bronchocele.

Thyreopigloticus, Thyreoëpiglottic.

Thyro, in composition, see Thyreo.

Thyroärytenoid, Thyreoärytenoid.

Thyrocele, (thyro, and κελη, 'a tumor,') Bronchocele.

Thyrocriopharyngeus, see Cricopharyngeal.

Thyrohyoid, Thyreohyoid.

Thyropharyngostaphylinus, Palatopharyngeus.

Thyroid, Thyreoid, Thyroidea, (Θυροειδής, from θυρα, 'a gate or folding-door,' or from θυρεος, 'a shield,' and ειδής, 'form,') That which has the shape of a folding-door.

THYROID ARTERIES, Thyroideal arteries — t. Artery of Neubauer, see Thyroideal arteries.

THYROID AXIS. A short, thick trunk, arising from the first portion of the subclavian artery, dividing almost immediately into the inferior thyroid, suprascapular, and transversalis colli.

THYROID BODY, Thyroid gland.

THYROID CARTILAGE, Cartilago Scutiformis seu Scutalis seu Clypealis, Coöperatorium, C. peltalis seu peltatus, Scutum, Adam's Mor'sus Os, is the largest of the cartilages of the larynx, at the anterior part of which it is situate. It is larger transversely than vertically; broader above than below; and seems formed by the junction of the two quadrilateral plates, which produce, by their union, an angle that projects forwards. Its two posterior margins terminate above, and on each side, by an ensiform prolongation, called the greater cornu of the thyroid cartilage, cornu superius seu longum; and, below, by a less prominent eminence, the lesser cornu, Cornu inferius seu breve, which is articulated with the cricoid.

THYROID GLAND or BODY, Corpus Thyroideum, Glandula Thyroidea, (F.) Gland ou Corps Thyroide, is an organ, the uses of which are not known. It covers the anterior and inferior part of the larynx, as well as the first rings of the trachea, and seems to be composed of two lobes, flattened from before to behind, which are united by a transverse prolongation of the same nature as themselves, called the Isthmus. At times, there arises from the upper border of the isthmus, or the lateral lobes in the neighborhood of the isthmus, a third or middle lobe — Pyr'amis, Processus pyramidalis, Colum'na media, Appen'dix glandulae thyroideae. This lobe is sometimes independent, and forms a number of roundish or longish lobes; when it has been called Glandula thyroidea accessoria. The tissue of the thyroid is soft, spongy, and of a brownish color; but its intimate structure is unknown. It is formed of several distinct lobules; collected in lobes of greater or less size. They are composed of granulations, some of which contain a yellowish or milky fluid. The thyroid gland receives four large arteries, called Thyroideal, as well as corresponding veins. Its nerves proceed from the pneumogastric, and from the cervical ganglia. No excretory duct has ever been found in it.

Thyroideal or Thyroidal, Thyroideus, Thyreoides, (F.) Thyroïdien, Thyröïdien. That which concerns the thyroid gland or cartilage.

THYROIDAL or THYROID ARTERIES are two on each side. 1. The superior Thyroideal, superior laryngeal, superior guttural, arises from the anterior part of the external carotid, and proceeds to the upper part of the thyroid gland, after having given off a laryngeal branch and a cricothyroid. 2. The inferior Thyroideal, inferior guttural, much larger than the last, arises from the upper part of the subclavian. It passes, in a serpentine manner, to the inferior part of the thyroid gland, to which it is distributed, after having given a number of branches to the neighboring parts, among which is the cervicalis ascendens. The inferior thyroideal artery is occasionally replaced by the Thyroid artery of Neubauer, Artery of Neubauer, which arises directly from the curvature of the aorta.

THYROIDAL VEINS are—1. A superior thyroideal, and several middle thyroideal, which open into the internal jugular vein. 2. An inferior thyroideal, much larger than the preceding, whose branches form — by anastomosing with those of the opposite side, in front of the trachea — a very remarkable venous plexus, which J. Cloquet calls the infra-thyroideal plexus. The inferior thyroideal veins open, — the left into the corresponding subclavian; the right, into the vena cava superior.

Thyroïdien, Thyroideal.

Thyropharyngeus, Thyreopharyngeus. Valsalva, Morgagni, Santorini, and Winslow have given this name to the portion of the constrictor pharyngis inferior, which is attached to the thyroid cartilage.

THYROPHARYNGEUS, Constrictor pharyngis, see Cricopharyngeal.

Thyrophraxia, (thyro, and φρασσα, 'I obstruct,') Bronchocele.

Thyrotomy, (thyro, and τομή, 'section,') Division of the thyroid cartilage, as for the removal of foreign bodies in the larynx, &c.

Thyr'sus, (Θυρεος,) Penis.

Thysselinum, Peucedanum palustre — t. Palustre, Peucedanum palustre.

Tiarel'la Cordifo'lia, (dim: of tiara, tiara, 'the turban of the Persian sovereigns,' from the form of the capsules,) Coolwort. A tonic and diuretic.

Tibi-peronæo-tarsien, Peronæus longus.

Tib'ia, 'a flute or pipe,' Cue'nè, Procu'minum, Fo'eilè ma'jus, Arun'do seu Can'na ma'jor, Can'na ma'jor seu domestica cru'ris, Shin'bone. The largest bone of the leg. A long, irregular, and triangular bone, situate on the inner side of the fibula. It has: 1. A Superior or femoral extremity, which is very large, rounded, and has two eminences at the sides, called Tuberosities of the Tib'ia, or Tib'ial tuberosities. The outermost is articulated with the fibula. On its head are two articular, oval, concave surfaces, separated by a process, called Spine of the tibia, which are articulated with the condyles of the Os femoris.

2. An inferior or tarsal extremity, having an articular surface beneath, which joins the astragalus; within, a triangular eminence, which forms the malleolus internus; and, on the outside, a triangular surface, which articulates with the fibula. 3. The body or shaft of the tibia has three faces, separated by three angles, the anterior of which is the most prominent, and is called the spine or crista of the tibia or tibial spine. It is the shin. The tibia is articulated with the femur, fibula, and astragalus. It is developed by three points of ossification, one for the body, and one for each extremity.

TIBIA MINIMA, Fibula.

Tibiad, see Tibial aspect.

Tibiæus, Tibial—t. Anticus, Tibialis anticus.

Tibial, Tibialis, Tibiæus, (F.) Tibial, Jambier, (from tibia.) That which relates to the tibia or to the leg.

TIBIAL APONEUROSIS, (F.) Aponévrose Jambière, surrounds the muscles of the leg. It is continuous, above, with the femoral aponeurosis, and arises, also, from the head of the fibula, and from several fibrous expansions which detach themselves from the tendons of the triceps, sartorius, gracilis, and semitendinosus. Thence it descends around the leg, attaching itself to the whole extent of the anterior and inner edges of the tibia. It sends, below, an expansion, which passes before the tendo Achillis, and is continuous with the anterior annular ligament of the tarsus. It is attached, also, to the sheath of the peroneal muscles.

TIBIAL ARTERIES are two in number. 1. Arteria Tibialis Antica, which arises from the popliteal, before its bifurcation; passes immediately through the opening in the upper part of the interosseous ligament, and reaches the anterior part of the leg; when it turns downwards, and descends obliquely between the extensor communis digitorum pedis and the tibialis anticus, anterior to the interosseous ligament; glides under the anterior annular ligament of the tarsus, and takes the name Dorsalis tarsi. Among the numerous branches given off by the tibialis antica may be distinguished—the Tibialis recurvens, A. malleolaris interna, and A. malleolaris externa. 2. A. Tibialis postica, arises from the bifurcation of the popliteal artery; and, slightly tortuous, descends between the two planes of the posterior muscles of the leg, until it arrives under the arch of the calcaneum, where it divides into two branches—the Plantar arteries.

TIBIAL ASPECT. An aspect towards the side on which the tibia is situated. (Barclay.) Tibiad is used adverbially, by the same writer, to signify 'towards the tibial aspect.'

TIBIAL NERVES are two in number. 1. The anterior tibial nerve, Prætibio-sus-plantaire (Ch.). One of the two branches in which the external popliteal terminates. It accompanies the arteria tibialis antica. 2. The posterior tibial nerve, Branche tibiale du nerf fémoro-poplite (Ch.), is the internal popliteal.

TIBIAL VEINS, ANTERIOR AND POSTERIOR, have the same arrangement as the arteries which they accompany.

Tibialis Anticus, Tibiæus anticus seu anterior, Hip'picus, Catæx musculus, (F.) Tibio-sus-métatarsien, Tibio-sus-tarsien (Ch.), Jambier antérieur. A muscle situate at the anterior part of the leg. Above, it has the shape of a triangular prism; below, it is slender and tendinous. It is attached, above, to the anterior part of the external tuberosity of the tibia; to the superior half of the outer surface of that bone; and to the anterior surface of the interosseous ligament. Below, its tendon terminates at the base of the first cuneiform bone, and at the posterior extremity of the first metatarsal bone. This muscle bends the foot on the leg, and directs its points inwards, at the same time that it raises its inner edge. It can, also, bend the leg on the foot, and prevent it from falling backwards in standing.

TIBIALIS GRACILIS, Plantar muscle.

TIBIALIS POSTICUS, (F.) Tibio-tarsien, Tibio-sus-tarsien (Ch.), Jambier postérieur. This muscle is situate at the posterior and deep part of the leg. It is thicker above than below, and is attached, above, to the posterior surface of the fibula, to the posterior surface of the tibia, and to the interosseous ligament. Its tendon terminates, below, at the tuberosity on the inferior extremity of the os scaphoides. This muscle extends the foot on the leg, at the same time raising its inner edge. It likewise extends the leg on the foot. It was called Nauticus by Spigelius, because sailors bring it chiefly into action in climbing the mast.

TIBIO-CALCANIEN, Soleus—t. Phalangettien, Flexor longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans—t. Sous-tarsien, Tibialis anticus—t. Sus-métatarsien, Tibialis anticus—t. Sus-tarsien, Tibialis anticus.

TIBIOTAR'SAL, Tibiotar'seus, (F.) Tibio-tarsienne. What relates to the tibia and tarsus.

TIBIOTAR'SAL ARTICULATION is the articulation of the foot with the leg. It is formed by the tibia and the astragalus, and is strengthened by lateral and by anterior and posterior ligaments.

TIBIO-TARSIEIN, Tibialis posticus.

Tic, (from [Sax.] teogan, [G.] ziehen, 'to draw,') Ticitch'ing, Vellic'ation. A local and habitual convulsive motion of certain muscles, and especially of some of those of the face. It is sometimes called Tic convulsif ou Tic non douloureux, Spasmodic Tic, Hypercinesia of the facial nerve, Histrionic or Mimic Spasm of the Face, Spasmus facialis, (F.) Hyperkinésie du facial, Spasme facial, Convulsion mimique, to distinguish it from Tic douloureux, Néuralgie du trijumeau, N. faciale, Prosopalgie, Douleur faciale, Neuralgia faciei, Epileptiform Neuralgia, Chorea Neuralgica, and has been termed a partial chorea or form of Chronic chorea, Chorea faciei. See Neuralgia.

Tic Douloureux, 'painful tic,' Neuralgia, facial—t. Non douloureux, see Tic.

Tic Rotatoire, Hyperkinésie de l'accessoire de Willis. A hypercinesia of the muscles supplied with nervous distribution from the external branch of the spinal nerve. The term torticollis spasmodique has been applied to one variety of it.

Tic, SPASMODIC, Neuralgia.

Tick, (F.) Tique, (G.) Zecke, Ixodes ricinus—t. Wood, Ixodes ricinus.

Tickle Weed, Veratrum viride.

Tickling, ([L.] titillare, [Sax.] tanklan, 'to tickle,') (Sc.) Kit'ling, Kit'illing, (F.) Chatouillement. This word sometimes means the action of tickling, (titilla'tio, titilla'tion.) at others, the sensation produced by this action (pruritus). A vivid sensation, which commonly causes laughter, and a state of general spasm that may be dangerous if too long protracted. There are some parts of the body where we are easier tickled than others; for example, the soles of the feet, and the hypochondriac region.

Tickseed Sunflower, Coreopsis trichosperma.

Tickweed, Hedeoma—t. Sunflower, Coreopsis trichosperma.

Tico'ra Febrifuga. A Brazilian plant, Order, Rutaceæ, the bark of which is intensely bitter, astringent, and antiperiodic.

TICO'REA JASMINIFLO'RA. A decoction of the leaves is said to be drunk by the Brazilians as a cure for frambœsia.

Ti'dal Air, (from tide,) see Respiration.

Tierce, ([L.] tertius, 'third,') see Tertian.

Tig'ala, Saccharum.

Tige ('a stalk') Pituitaire, Infundibulum of the brain—t. Sus-sphenoïdale, Infundibulum of the brain.

Tig'lia seu Tig'lii Gra'na, see Croton tiglium.

Tigretier, see Mania, dancing.

Tikim'ma, Cacoucia coccinea.

Tilbury, Min'eral Wa'ters of. A saline chalybeate at West Tilbury, in Essex, England. It is not much frequented.

Til'ia, T. Europæa seu grandiflo'ra seu cardi-folia seu pauciflo'ra seu plataphyll'a, (akin to tilia, 'the elm tree,') Phily'ra. The Lime, Lind, or Lin'den tree, (F.) Tilleul. Ord. Tiliaceæ. The flowers have been supposed to possess anodyne and antispasmodic virtues.

Til'ia America'na, T. gla'bra seu Canaden-sis, Lin'den, Linn, Bass'wood, White'wood, Spoon'-wood. A mucilage, prepared by macerating the inner bark in cold water, has been applied to burns. It may be made into a cataplasm by thickening it with bran.

Til'ia CANADEN'SIS, T. Americana—t. Glabra, T. Americana.

Tilleul, Tilia.

Tillicher'ry Cor'tex, Nerium antidysentericum.

Til'ma, gen. Til'matis, (τιλμα, from τιλλω, 'I pluck,') Linteum.

Til'mus, (τιλμος,) Carphologia, Evulsion.

Til'y, of the In'dians, Viburnum dentatum.

Timac. The name of an East India root, but of what vegetable is not clear. It is said to possess diuretic properties; and hence has been given in dropsies.

Timbales (F.), 'kettle-drums.' Folded membranes inclosed in a cavity on the under part of the abdomen of insects, giving rise, by the rapidity of their movements, to a drumming noise.

Timbre (F.), 'the sound of a bell,' (τυμβαϊον, from τυπτω, 'I strike,') [?] The quality of sound by which one voice, or one instrument, can be distinguished from another when producing the same note.

Tim'idus, Rectus inferior oculi.

Tin, ([Sax.] tin,) Stannum, Cassit'erus, Cattit'erus, Ju'piter, Stu'piga, La'os, Plum'bum al'bum seu can'didum, (F.) Étain. A solid metal; of a characteristic odor when rubbed; insipid; whitish; s. g. 7.291; giving a peculiar tinkling sound when struck. It is used, in medicine, only as a mechanical anthelmintic. Dose, \mathfrak{zj} . of the Pulvis Stanni, Stannum granula'tum or Granular tin, (F.) Poudre d'Étain, in molasses. (This is made by melting tin in an iron vessel over the fire, and, while it is cooling, stirring until it is reduced to a powder, which is passed through a sieve.)

The French Codex (1866) has a preparation, Limaille d'Étain, Limatu'ra Stan'ni, Tin filing.

TIN, BUT'ER OF, Tin, muriate of—t. Chloride or Chloruret of Tin, muriate of—t. Deutohydrochlorate of Tin, muriate of.

TIN'FOIL, Stannum folia'tum, Stanni'olum, is used for plugging carious teeth, &c.

TIN GLASS, Bismuth.

TIN, GRAN'ULAR, see Tin—t. Muriate of, superoxygenated, Tin, muriate of.

TIN, MU'RIATE OF, Fu'ming liq'uor of Liba'vius, Mu'rias Stan'ni seu Oxyd'uli Stan'ni, Stan'ni chlo-ridum, Stannum chlora'tum seu muriat'icum, Salt of Tin, Butter, Chloride or Deutohydrochlorate or Superoxygenated Mu'riate of Tin, (F.) Sel d'Étain. (This is formed of tin, one part, concentrated muriatic acid, three parts. To be crystallized by the aid of heat.) A violent cathartic. Dose, gr. ij. or iij. It is also used for injection in gonorrhoeal and purulent discharges from the vagina.

TIN, SALT OF, Tin, muriate of—t. Sulphuret of, Aurum musivum.

Tinag'mus, (τιναγμος,) Concussion.

Tinas'mus, Tenesmus.

Tinctu'ra, (from tingere, tinctum, 'to dye,')

Tincture, Essen'tia, (F.) Teinture Alcoolique, Alcoolé, Alcohol, Alcoolature. The term tincture is generally restricted to spirituous solutions of vegetable, animal, and some saline substances. It corresponds, therefore, with the word Quintessence, in one of its old significations; and with the Alcoolatum of the Codex of Paris. It is not unusual, however, to speak of aqueous tincture, ethe'ral tincture (Éthérolature, Béral), &c. Tinctures are usually made either with pure alcohol or proof spirit. Those made with pure alcohol are precipitated by water; and, therefore, are seldom used internally; those with proof spirit are common additions to infusions, decoctions, &c. Tinctures ought not, of course, to be united with any vehicle which can decompose them, or separate anything from them in a palpable form; unless such decomposition is desired by the prescriber. In making tinctures, the ingredients should be reduced to a coarse powder,—maceration being made in close vessels, exposed to a heat of about 80°,—and frequently shaken. When completed, they must be filtered, and put away for use in close bottles. When the process of percolation is employed, great care must be taken so that the substances treated may be, as far as possible, exhausted of their soluble principles, and a perfectly clear tincture be obtained. To those who are not familiar with the process, the plan of maceration is preferable. (For full directions in regard to percolation, see U. S. Pharmacopœia, 1873, p. 3.)

TINCTU'RA ABSIN'THII COMPOS'ITA, Essen'tia absin'thii compos'ita seu ama'ra, Com'pound tincture of absinth or worm'wood. (Absinth., Artem. pontic., Caryoph., \mathfrak{aa} \mathfrak{zss} , Sacch., \mathfrak{zij} , Alcohol., Oss. Macerate for fifteen days. Ph. P.) Tonic, stomachic, vermifuge, and carminative. Dose, \mathfrak{zij} . to $\mathfrak{f\mathfrak{zss}}$.

TINCTU'RA ACA'CIÆ CAT'ECHU, T. catechu—t. Acetatis Ferri cum Alcohole, see T. ferri acetatis—t. Acidi Sulphurici, Sulphuricum acidum aromaticum.

TINCTU'RA ACONI'TI, (Ph. U. S., 1842,) Tinctura Aconiti folio'rum, (Ph. U. S., 1851,) T. A. Fo'lii, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Tincture of Aconite. (Aconit. folior., \mathfrak{ziv} , Alcohol. dilut., Oij. Macerate for 14 days, express, and filter through paper. It may also be made by displacement. Ph. U. S., 1863.) Dose, gtt. xx. or xxx. It is rubbed on the seat of neuralgia. This preparation is dismissed in the last edition (1873).

TINCTU'RA ACONI'TI RADI'CIS, Tincture of Aconite root. (Aconit. radialis in pulv. subtil., $\mathfrak{z}xij$, Alcohol., Oij. Prepared by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Uses, same as the last.

TINCTU'RA ÆTHE'REA CAMPHORA'TA, Solutio cam'phoræ æthe'rea, Li'quor nervi'nus Bang'ii, Spiritus sulphu'rico-æthe'reus camphora'tus, Naph'tha vitri'oli camphora'ta. (Camphor., p. i., Æther, sulphuric., p. ii.) Stimulant in atonic diseases, arthritic cardialgia, and spasm. Dose, 20 to 30 drops in white wine.

TINCTU'RA ÆTHE'REA FER'RI, Alcohol (seu Tinctura) sulphurico-æthereus ferri—t. Alcoholiæ Chinæ composita, T. cinchonæ composita—t. Alcoholica corticum aurantiorum Whyttii, Tinctura cinchonæ amara—t. Alexipharmica Huxhami, Tinctura cinchonæ composita.

TINCTU'RA AL'OËS, T. Aloës Socotri'næ, Essen'tia Aloës, Al'cohol cum Aloë perfolia'ta, Tincture of Aloës. (Aloës Socot. pulv., $\mathfrak{z}j$, Glycyrrh., $\mathfrak{z}ij$, Aquæ, Ojss., Alcohol., Oss. Macerate for 7 days, and filter. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Properties, those of aloës. Dose, $\mathfrak{f\mathfrak{zss}}$. to $\mathfrak{f\mathfrak{zss}}$.

TINCTU'RA AL'OËS ÆTHE'REA, T. Aloës vitriola'ta, Æthe'ral Tincture of Aloës. (Aloës So- cot., Myrrh., āā 3jss., Croci, 3j., Sp. ætheris sulph., Oj. Digest the myrrh in the ether for 4 days; then add the aloes and saffron. Ph. E.) Stimulant and cathartic. Dose, f3j. to f3ij.

TINCTURA AL'OE'S COMPOS'ITA, Elix'ir Proprieta'tis seu Proprieta'tis Paracel'si seu aperiti'vum seu Al'oe's, Tinctura Al'oe's cum Myrrhā seu Aloēs et Myrrhæ (Ph. U. S.) seu Al'oe's et Myrrhæ crocata, Elix'ir of long-life, Com'pound Tincture of Al'oe's, (F.) Elix'ir de longue vie, Baume de vie de Lelièvre. (Aloēs Socot. in pulv., Myrrhæ pulv., āā 3ij., Alcohol., q. s. Mix the powders, and obtain two pints of tincture by percolation. It may also be obtained by maceration.) Purgative and stomachic. Dose, f3j. to f3ij.

Boerhaave's Elix'ir consisted of aloes, myrrh, saffron, and tartrate of potassa, digested in alcohol and water.

Rad'cliffe's Elix'ir is formed of Aloes Socotr., 3vj., Cort. cinnam., Rad. zedoar, āā 3ss., Rad. rhei, 3j., Coccinell., 3ss., Syrup. chamni, 3ij., Sp. tenuior., Oj., Aquæ puræ, f3v.

TINCTURA AL'OE'S ET MYRRHÆ, T. aloēs composita—t. Aloēs et Myrrhæ crocata, T. aloēs composita—t. Aloēs vitriolata, T. aloēs ætherea—t. Amara, T. gentianæ composita—t. Ammonia composita, Spiritus ammonia succinatus—t. Amomi repentis, T. cardamomi—t. Amomi zingiberis, T. zingiberis.

TINCTURA ANGUSTURÆ, T. Cuspariæ, Tincture of Angustura. (Cort. cuspar. in pulv. crass. redact., 3ij., Sp. vin. ten., Oij. Digest. Ph. D.) Dose, f3j. to f3ij.

TINCTURA ANTIFEBRILIS WARBUR'GI, see Bebeeru.

TINCTURA ANTIDONTAL'GICA, Tooth'ache Tincture. (Tannin., 3j., Mastich., gr. v., Ether., 3ij. M.) To be applied on cotton wool to the tooth previously dried.

TINCTURA ARISTOLOCHIÆ SERPENTARIÆ, T. serpentariæ.

TINCTURA AR'NICÆ, Tincture of Ar'nica. (Ar'nica, 3vj., Alcohol., Ojss., Aquæ, Oss., Alcohol. dilut., q. s. Mix the alcohol and water, slightly moisten the arnica with a portion of the mixture, bruise thoroughly in a mortar; pack it firmly in a percolator, and pour on it the remainder of the mixture, and then sufficient diluted alcohol to measure two pints. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, gtt. v. to x. Applied, diluted with an equal proportion of water, by means of lint, as an excitant to bruises, and in cases of neuralgia. Tinctura Arnice of the British Pharmacopœia (1867), made by percolation, from the root—the U. S. preparation being from the flowers—is much weaker.

TINCTURA AROMAT'ICA, T. cinnamomi composita—t. Aromatica ammoniata, Spiritus ammonia aromaticus.

TINCTURA ASSAFÆTIDÆ, T. Fer'ulæ Assafætidæ, Tinctura fæ'tida, Tincture of Assafæ'tida. (Assafætid. contus., 3iv., Alcohol., Oij. Macerate for 7 days, and filter. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, gtt. xv. to f3j.

TINCTURA ASSAFÆTIDÆ AMMONIATA, Spiritus ammonia aromaticus.

TINCTURA AURANTII, T. Cor'ticis Aurantii, Tincture of Orange Peel. (Aurant. cort. amar. in pulv., 3iv., Alcohol. dilut., q. s. Moisten the powder with two fluidounces of diluted alcohol, pack in a conical percolator, and gradually pour upon it diluted alcohol, until two pints of tincture are obtained. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Stomachic. Used as an adjunct to stomachic draughts. Dose, f3ss. to f3ij.

TINCTURA AUR'EA, Alcohol (seu tinctura) sulphuricoæthereus ferri.

TINCTURA BELLADONNÆ, Tincture of Belladonna. (Belladonnæ folior., 3iv., Alcohol. dilut., q. s. Made like Tinct. aurantii. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, gtt. xv. to xxx.

Tinctura Belladonnæ of the British Pharmacopœia (1867), made by percolation, is half the strength of the preceding.

TINCTURA BENZO'INI, Tincture of Benzoin. (Benzoin. in pulv., 3vj., Alcohol., Oij. Macerate for 7 days and filter through paper. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

TINCTURA BENZO'INI COMPOS'ITA, T. Benzoēs composita, Balsamum Catholicum seu Per'sicum seu traumat'icum, Elix'ir traumaticum, Balsamum Commendato'ris, Com'pound Tincture of Benzoin, Friar's or Ver'vain's Balsam, Wade's or Jesuit's drops, Commander's or Wound Balsam, Balsam for Cuts. (Benzoin. pulv., 3ij., Styrac., 3ij., Balsam. tolu., 3j., Aloēs Socot. pulv., 3ss., Alcohol., Oij. Macerate for 7 days, and filter. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Stimulant. Used chiefly to wounds and ulcers.

The basis of Tur'lington's Balsam of Life, Tur'lington's Bal'sam, is the Compound Tincture of Benzoin. The following form is recommended by a committee of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy:—Alcohol., Oviiij., Benzoin., 3xiij., Styrac. liquid., 3iv., Aloēs Socotrin., 3j., Balsam. Peruvian., 3ij., Myrrhæ, 3j., Rad. angelic., 3ss., Balsam. tolu., Ext. glycyrrh., āā 3iv. Digest for 10 days, and strain.

The Es'sence of Colts'foot consists of equal parts of the Compound Tincture of Benzoin and Balsam of Tolu, to which is added double the quantity of Rectified Spirit of Wine. It is sold as a pectoral.

TINCTURA BUCHU, T. Buchu, T. Buco, Tincture of Buchu. (Buch., 3ijss., Spirit. tenuior., Oj. Prepared by maceration, percolation, and filtration. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, f3j. to f3iv. See Diosma.

TINCTURA BUCKU, Tinctura buchu.

TINCTURA CALUM'BÆ, (Ph. U. S., 1873.) T. Calum'bæ seu Colom'bæ, (Ph. U. S., 1851.) Tincture of Calumba or Colum'bo Bitters. (Columb. rad. cont., 3iv., Alcohol. dilut., q. s. Moisten the powder with a fluidounce of diluted alcohol, transfer to a conical percolator, and gradually pour diluted alcohol upon it until two pints of tincture are obtained. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, f3ss. to f3iv.

TINCTURA CAM'PHORÆ, Spiritus camphoræ.

TINCTURA CAM'PHORÆ COMPOS'ITA, T. Opii Camphorata, (Ph. U. S.,) T. Camphoræ cum opio, Compound Tincture or Camphorated Tincture of Opium, Compound Tincture of Camphor, Elix'ir Paregor'icum, Paregor'ic Elix'ir. (Opii in pulv., Acid. Benzoic., āā 3j., Ol. anisi, f3j., Mellis despumat., 3ij., Camphor., 3ij., Alcohol. dilut., Oij. Mix. Macerate for 7 days, and filter through paper. Ph. U. S., 1873.) One fluidounce contains nearly gr. ij. of opium. Anodyne. Dose, f3j. to f3ij.

Squire's Elix'ir, an empirical carminative preparation, is thus made, according to one formula. (Opii, 3iv., Camphor., 3j., Coccinell., 3j., Fenicul. dulc., 3ij., Tinct. serpent., Oj., Sp. anisi, cong. ij., Aquæ, Oij., Auri musivi, 3vj.)

TINCTURA CAN'NABIS IN'DICÆ, Tincture of Indian Hemp, Tinctura Cannabis, (Ph. U. S., 1873.) Tincture of Hemp. (Ext. Cannab. Indicæ, 3vj., Alcohol., Oj. Dissolve and filter. Ph. U. S.) Dose, about 40 drops.

TINCTURA CANTHARIDIS, T. C. Vesicato'riæ, T. Ly'tæ seu Mel'oe's vesicato'rii, Tincture of Cantharides, Tincture of Blistering Flies, T. of Span'ish Flies, (F.) Teinture rubéfiante. TINCTURA MELAMPODII, Tinctura hellebori nigri — t. Meloës vesicatorii, Tinctura cantharidis — t. Metallorum, Liliun Paracelsi — t. Mimosæ catechu, Tinctura catechu.

TINCTURA MOSCHI, Tincture or Essence of Musk. (Mosch. in pulv. redact., $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$., Sp. vini rect., Oj.) Dose, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$. to $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}\text{iv}$.

TINCTURA MYRRHÆ, Tincture of Myrrh, Simple Tincture of Myrrh. (Myrrhæ cont., $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$., Alcohol., Oij. Prepared by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Tonic, 'deobstruent,' antiseptic, and detergent. It is chiefly used in gargles, and applied to foul ulcers, spongy gums, &c.

Hudson's Preservative for the Teeth and Gums consists of Tinct. myrrh., Tinct. cinch., Aq. cinnam., \mathfrak{aa} $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$., Eau d'arquebuse, $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$., Pulv. gum. Arab., $\mathfrak{z}\text{ss}$. M.

TINCTURA NERVINÆ BESTUCHERII, Tinctura (seu alcohol) sulphuricoætherea ferri — t. Nervina Halensis, Tinctura (seu alcohol) sulphuricoætherea ferri — t. Nervinotonica, Lamotte's, Alcohol (seu Tinctura) sulphuricoæthereus ferri.

TINCTURA NUCIS VOMICÆ, Tincture of Nux Vomica. (Alcohol., s. g. 837, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$., Dry Extract of Nux Vomica, 3 gr.) Dose, gtt. v. to xxx., in cases where the nux vomica is indicated. It is directed in the Ph. U. S. (1873) to be prepared as follows: Nucis vomicæ pulv., $\mathfrak{z}\text{vii}$., Alcohol., Oij. Prepared by percolation. Dose, gtt. v. to xx.

TINCTURA OLEI MENTHÆ PIPERITÆ, Spiritus menthæ piperitæ.

TINCTURA OLEI MENTHÆ VIRIDIS, Spiritus menthæ viridis.

TINCTURA OPII, T. Thebaica seu Sedativa, Theriacal cales'tis, Alcohol cum Opio, Tincture of Opium, Liquid Laudanum. (Opium pulv., $\mathfrak{z}\text{ijss}$., Aquæ, Alcohol., \mathfrak{aa} Oj., Alcohol. dilut., q. s. Macerate the opium with the water for three days, with frequent agitation; then add the alcohol, and continue the maceration for three days longer. Introduce the mixture into a percolator, and when the liquid has ceased to pass, pour diluted alcohol upon it until two pints of tincture are obtained.) Thirteen minims represent one grain of opium. Properties, those of opium. Dose, gtt. xx. to lx. By macerating the dregs remaining after making the Tinctura Opii in a solution of Tartaric Acid, a solution is obtained which is said to be devoid of the exciting and constipating properties of the tincture of opium. Gray calls it Haden's Li'quor Opii Sedativus.

TINCTURA OPII ACETATA, Acetated Tincture of Opium. (Opium exsicc. pulv., $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$., Aceti destill., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}\text{xi}$., Alcohol., Oss. Rub the opium with the vinegar, add the alcohol, and having macerated for 7 days, express, and filter. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Twenty drops are equivalent to a grain of opium.

TINCTURA OPII AMMONIATA, Ammoniated Tincture of Opium, Edinburgh Faregoric Elixir. (Acid. benz., Croci, \mathfrak{aa} $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$., Opium, gr. c., Ol. anisi, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$., Liqueur. ammoniæ fort., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}\text{iv}$., Spirit. rectificat., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}\text{xvj}$. Macerate for 7 days, express and filter. Ph. B., 1867.) Each $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$. contains 5 grains of opium. Used like the Tinctura Camphoræ Composita.

TINCTURA OPII CAMPHORATA, Tinctura camphoræ composita.

TINCTURA PLUMBOSA, Liquor plumbi subacetatis dilutus.

TINCTURA OPII DEODORATA, Deodorized Tincture of Opium. (A solution of dried pulverized opium, \mathfrak{z} ijss., in water, shaken with ether; and, the ethereal solution having been poured off, evaporating until all traces of ether have disappeared; mixing with water, and filtering; and adding water through the filter sufficient to make the liquid a pint and a half; adding, lastly, half a pint of alcohol, and mixing. Ph. U. S., 1873.) By treating the opium with water in place of alcohol, the resinous and odorous principles are sparingly taken up. Its strength is that of Tinctura opii.

TINCTURA PYRETHRI, Tincture of Pelletory. (Pyreth. pulv., \mathfrak{z} iv., Spirit. rectificat., Oj. Prepared by maceration, percolation, and filtration. Ph. B., 1867.)

TINCTURA QUASSIÆ, T. Quassiae excelsæ, Tincture of Quassia. (Quassiae pulv., \mathfrak{z} ij., Alcohol. dilut., Oij. Prepared by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Tonic. Dose, \mathfrak{f} 3j. to \mathfrak{f} 3ij.

TINCTURA QUASSIÆ COMPOSITA, Compound Tincture of Quassia. (Cardam. sem. contus., Cocci contus., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} ss., Cinnam., Quassiae, $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} vj., Uvar. passar., \mathfrak{z} vij., Sp. tenuior., Oij. [Imp. meas.]. Digest for 7 days, express, and filter. May be prepared also by percolation. Ph. E.) Dose, as a tonic, \mathfrak{f} 3j. or \mathfrak{f} 3ij.

TINCTURA QUINÆ COMPOSITA, Compound Tincture of Quina. (Quinæ sulph., \mathfrak{z} v. and \mathfrak{z} j., Tinct. aurantii, Oij. [Imp. meas.]. Digest for 7 days, and filter. Ph. L.) Each fluidrachm contains a grain of the sulphate.

TINCTURA QUINÆ SULPHATIS, Tincture of Sulphate of Quina. (Sulphate of Quina, gr. vj., Alcohol. \mathfrak{f} 84j, \mathfrak{f} 3j. M.) Dose, \mathfrak{f} 3j. to \mathfrak{f} 3iv., in the day.—Tinctura Cincho'næ Sulphatis may be made in a similar manner.

TINCTURA QUINÆ, Tincture of Quina. (Quin. sulph., gr. clx., Tinct. aurantii, Oj. Dissolve by gentle heat, let it stand for three days in a closed vessel, and filter. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, \mathfrak{f} 3ss.—ij.

TINCTURA RHABARBARII, Tinctura rhei—t. Rhabarbari composita, Tinctura rhei composita—t. Rhabarbari vinosa, Vinum rhei palmati.

TINCTURA RHEI, T. Rhabarbari seu Rhabarbari spirituosæ seu Rhe'i seu Rhe'i palmati, Tincture of Rhu'barb. (Rhei pulv., \mathfrak{z} ij., Cardam. pulv., \mathfrak{z} ss., Alcohol. dilut., Oij. Prepared by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Stomachic or purgative, according to the dose employed— \mathfrak{f} 3j. to \mathfrak{z} ij. as a stomachic; \mathfrak{f} 3iv. to \mathfrak{f} 3j. as a purgative.

TINCTURA RHEI COMPOSITA, T. Rhabarbari composita, Compound Tincture of Rhu'barb. (Rhei rad. concis., \mathfrak{z} ij., Glycyrrhiz. rad. cont., \mathfrak{z} ss., Zingib. rad. concis., Croci stigmat., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} ij., Aquæ, \mathfrak{f} 3xij., Sp. ten., Oj. Ph. L.) Properties, same as the last.

TINCTURA RHEI ET ALIQUOES, Elixir sa'cerum, Tincture of Rhu'barb and Aloes. (Rhei concis., \mathfrak{z} x., Aloes pulv., \mathfrak{z} vj., Cardam. cont., \mathfrak{z} ss., Alcohol. dilut., Oij. Macerate for 14 days, express, and filter.) Properties, like the last.

Rymer's Cardiac Tincture consists of an infusion of Capsicum, Camphor, Cardamom seeds, Rhu'barb, Aloes, and Castor in Proof Spirit, with a very small quantity of Sulphuric Acid.

TINCTURA RHEI ET GENTIANÆ, Tinctura rhei Ama'ra, Tincture of Rhu'barb with Gentian. (Rhei cont., \mathfrak{z} ij., Gentian cont., \mathfrak{z} ss., Alcohol. dilut., Oij. Macerate for 14 days, express, and filter. It may also be prepared by displacement.) Properties, same as the last.

TINCTURA RHEI ET SENNÆ, Tincture of Rhu'barb and Sen'na, War'ner's Gout Cor'dial. (Rhei pulv., \mathfrak{z} j., Sennæ pulv., \mathfrak{z} ij., Coriandr. pulv., \mathfrak{f} ss., Uvar. passar. acinis exemptis, lbss., Alcohol. dilut., Oij. Macerate for 7 days, express, and filter. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, \mathfrak{f} 3ss. to \mathfrak{f} 3ij.

TINCTURA RHEI, Tinctura rhei—t. Rhei amara, Tinctura rhei et gentianæ—t. Sacra, Vinum aloës.

TINCTURA SABI'NÆ, Tincture of Sav'ine. (Sav'ine, dried and powdered, \mathfrak{z} ijss., Proof Spirit, Oj. Made by maceration and percolation. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, \mathfrak{m} xv. to xxx.

TINCTURA SANGUINARIÆ, Tincture of Blood-root. (Sanguinar., \mathfrak{z} iv., Alcohol., Aquæ, $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ q. s.—three measures of alcohol to one of water. Prepared by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, 30 to 60 drops.

TINCTURA SAPONIS CAMPHORATA, Linimentum saponis camphoratum—t. Saponis et Opii, Linimentum saponis et opii.

TINCTURA SCILLI, Tincture of Squill. (Scillæ, \mathfrak{z} iv., Alcohol. dilut., Oij. Prepared by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, gtt. xv. to lx.

TINCTURA SEDATI'VÆ, Tinctura opii.

TINCTURA SENEGÆ, Tincture of Sen'ega. (Senegæ rad. pulv., \mathfrak{z} ijss., Spirit. tenuior., Oj. Prepared by maceration and percolation. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, \mathfrak{f} 3ss.—ij.

TINCTURA SENNÆ, T. Sen'næ composita, Elix'ir Salu'tis, Daff'ly's Elix'ir, Tincture of Sen'na. (Sennæ fol., \mathfrak{z} ijss., Carui sem. cont., Coriandr. cont., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} ss., Uvarum passarum demptis acinis, \mathfrak{z} ij., Sp. ten., Oj. Prepared by maceration and percolation. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, \mathfrak{f} 3j.—iv. Stomachic, carminative, and cathartic.

TINCTURA SENNÆ ET JALAP'Æ, Tincture of Sen'na and Jal'ap. (Sennæ, \mathfrak{z} ij., Jalap. pulv., \mathfrak{z} j., Coriandr. cont., Carui cont., $\mathfrak{a}\mathfrak{a}$ \mathfrak{z} ss., Cardam. cont., \mathfrak{z} ij., Sacch., \mathfrak{z} iv., Alcohol. dilut., Oij. Macerate for 14 days, express, and filter. It may also be prepared by displacement.) Dose, \mathfrak{f} 3j. to \mathfrak{f} 3ij.

TINCTURA SERPENTARIÆ, T. Serpentariæ seu Virginia'næ seu Aristolochiæ Serpentariæ, Tincture of Snake-root. (Serpent., \mathfrak{z} iv., Alcohol. dilut., Oij. Prepared by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Tonic. Dose, \mathfrak{f} 3ss. to \mathfrak{f} 3ij.

TINCTURA STOMACHICA, Tinctura cardamomi composita.

TINCTURA STRAMO'NII, Tincture of Stramo'nium. (Stramon. sem. pulv., \mathfrak{z} iv., Alcohol. dilut., Oij. Prepared by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Dose, ten to twenty minims.

TINCTURA STRYCH'NIÆ, Tincture of Strych'nia. (Alcohol., s. g. 837, Oj., Strychniæ, gr. iij.) Dose, 6 drops to 24. Properties, those of strychnia.

TINCTURA (seu ALCOHOL) SULPHURICOÆTHEREÆ FER'RI, Gut'tæ nervinæ, Liq'uor Anodynus Martialis, Alcohol æthereus ferra'tus, Naph'tha Vitri'oli Martialis, Solu'tio Muria'tis fer'ricæ æthereæ, Spiritus sulphuricoæthereus martialis, Tinctura nervina Halen'sis seu toniconervina Halen'sis seu aur'ea seu nervina Bestuchef'fi seu nervinotonica (Lamotte's) seu æthereæ fer'ri, Æther Martialis, De La Motte's Gold'en Drops, Bestucheff's Nervous Tincture, (F.) Elixir d'Or de M. le Général de la Motte. An ethereal solution of chloride of iron. It is much used in gout, hypochondriasis, &c.

TINCTURA SULPHURIS VOLAT'ILIS, Liquor fumans Boylei.

TINCTURA SUM'BUL, Tincture of Sum'bul. (Sumbul. rad. in pulv. crass., \mathfrak{z} ijss., Spirit. tenuior., Oj. Prepared by maceration and percolation. Ph. B., 1867.) Dose, \mathfrak{m} x.—xxx.

TINCTURA THEBAICA, Tinctura opii, Vinum opii.

TINCTURA TOLUIFERÆ BAL'SAMI, T. Bal'sami Tolutani, T. Tolutani, (Ph. U. S., 1842.) T. Tolutana, (Ph. U. S., 1863.) T. Tolu, (Ph. U. S., 1873.) Tincture of Bal'sam of Tolu. (Bals. Tolutan., 3iij., Alcohol, Oij.) Reputed to be expectorant and corroborant. Dose, f3ss. to f3j. or more.

TINCTURA TONICA NERVI NA HALEN'SIS, Tinctura (seu Alcohol) sulphuricoætherea ferri.

TINCTURA VALERIANÆ, Tincture of Valerian. (Valerian. pulv., 3iv., Alcohol, dilut., Oij. Prepared by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Stimulant and antispasmodic. Dose, f3ss. to f3j.

TINCTURA VALERIANÆ AMMONIATA, T. Valerianæ volatilis, Ammoniated or Volatile Tincture of Valerian. (Valerianæ cont., 3iv., Sp. ammon. arom., Oij. Macerate for seven days, express, and filter. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Like the former. Dose, f3ss. to f3j.

TINCTURA VERA'TRI, T. Veratri albi, Tincture of White Hellebore. (Rad. verat. alb. cont., 3viiij., Alcohol, dilut., Oijss. Ph. E.) Emetic and cathartic, but not very manageable. Dose, gtt. v. to x.

TINCTURA VERA'TRI VIRIDIS, Tincture of Green or American Hellebore. (Veratr. virid. pulv., 3xvj., Alcohol, Oij. Moisten the powder with f3iv. of alcohol, pack it firmly in a cylindrical percolator, and gradually pour alcohol upon it until Oij. of tincture are obtained. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Sedative. Dose, gtt. vij. every three hours until the pulse is reduced.

TINCTURA ZINGIBERIS, T. Amomi Zingiberis, Tincture of Ginger. (Zingib. pulv., 3viiij., Alcohol, Oij. Made by percolation. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Stimulant and carminative. Dose, f3ss. to f3j.

TINCTURA ZINGIBERIS FORTIOR, Strong Tincture of Ginger, Essence of Ginger. (Zingib. pulv. subtil., 3x., Spirit. rectificat., Oj. Prepared by percolation.) Dose, m.v.-xx.

TIN'EA UN'GUIS. A condition of the nail in which it appears to be eroded.

TIN'EA VE'RA, Porrigio favosa.

TIN'Æ, pl. of tinea, Worms.

TINES'mus, Tenesmus.

Ting'ling, (tinnire, 'to jingle,') (Sc.) Dirling. A sharp, purring or thrilling sensation, not always painful.

Tink'er's Weed, Triosteum.

Tink'ling, Metal'lic, (like tingling,) Tintement métallique.

Tin'na, see Chloasma.

Tinnimen'tum Metal'licum, (from tinnio, 'I tinkle,') Tintement métallique.

Tinni'tus (gen. Tinnitūs) Aur'ium, (from tinnio, tinnitum, 'I tinkle,') 'ringing of the ears,' Fluctua'tio seu Son'itus seu Susur'rus seu Sib'illus seu Strep'itus seu Sibilis'mus aurium, Paracu'sis imagina'ria, Ote'chus, Syrig'mus, Syring'mus, Sib'illus elango'sus, E'chos, Eneche'ma, Bom'bus, Bom'bita'tio, Mur'mur, (F.) Tintement, T. d'Oreille, Tintouin, Bourdouement, Bruissement. An imaginary sound, like the ringing of a bell, the noise of wind, the murmur of water, &c., heard in health and in sickness. It is often an accompaniment of cerebral disorder.

Tintement, Tinnitus aurium—t. Bullaire, T. métallique.

Tintement Métallique (F.), Cliquetis métallique, Tintement bullaire, Tinnimen'tum metal'licum, Ca'nor stethoscop'icus, Metal'lic Respiration, Metal'lic Voice, Metal'lic Tink'ling. A particular noise, heard by the stethoscope when applied to the chest, and which, according to Laënnec, resembles that caused by striking glass, metal, or porcelain with a pin; but is, perhaps, more like the sound of the keys of a musical snuff-box. The tintement métallique or metallic tinkling is heard on causing the patient to speak or breathe; but is more distinct when he coughs. When the phenomenon is not so strongly marked, it produces only the metal'lic resonance. The 'metallic tinkling' is a pathognomonic symptom of a communication between the bronchia and cavity of the chest; in other words, of Pneumothorax.

Tintement d'Oreille, Tinnitus aurium.

Tintinnab'ulum, 'a bell,' (from tintinnio, 'I ring,') Uvula.

Tintouin, Tinnitus aurium.

Tipfoot, see Kylosis.

Tipsa'ria, Decoctum hordei.

Tique (F.), (G.) Zeeke, Ixodes ricinus.

Tire-balle, (tirer, 'to draw,' and balle, 'a ball,') Forceps (bullet).

Tire-fond (F.), (tirer, 'to draw,' and fond, 'bottom,') A surgical instrument, formerly used to elevate the piece of bone sawed off by the trephine.

Tire-pus, Pyulcon.

Tire-tête (F.), (tirer, 'to draw,' and tête, 'head,') Tractor. A name given to different instruments used for extracting the head of the child when left in the uterus, and in certain cases of difficult labor. The crotchet is one of those, as well as the Tire-tête à bascule of Levret, &c.

Tires, Milk-sickness.

Tiretoir (F.), Tirtoir, (from tirer, 'to draw,') An instrument used by dentists for extracting the incisors of the lower jaw.

Tisane (F.), Ptis'ana or Ptis'sana, Ptisan, (from πτισανη, 'pearl barley,' itself from πτισσω, 'I decorticate,') (F.) Hydrolé. A name given to aqueous medicines, containing but little, if any, medicinal agent. The ancients gave the name particularly to the decoction of barley. The French Codex (1866) has formulæ for a large number of Tisanes.

Tisane Commune, Decoctum hordei.

Tisane de Feltz. A celebrated antisyphilitic, formed of sarsaparilla, isinglass, sulphuret of antimony, and water, boiled together. According to some, bichloride of mercury, and to others, arsenic, enters into its composition. M. Rayer, supposing that it acted by the arsenic it contains, proposed to replace it by arseniate of potassa; and Guibourt, who was of the same opinion, by arsenious acid, in order to insure certainty of action.

Tis'ic, Phthisis.

Tis'ical, Phthisicus.

Tis'sick, see Phthisic.

Tis'sue, Tex'tus, Te'la, (F.) Tissu. By this term, in anatomy, is meant the various parts, which, by their union, form the organs, and are, as it were, their anatomical elements. Histological anatomy is the anatomy of the tissues, which are the seat of the investigations of the pathological anatomist. The best division, indeed, of diseases would be according to the tissues mainly implicated. For the elementary tissues, see Fibre. The compound tissues, which, by associating or combining variously, form every organ of the body, have been variously classed; but every division is imperfect and liable to objection.

Tis'sue, ACCIDENTAL OR ADVENTIT'IOUS, (F.) Tissu Accidentel, consists of every substance—foreign to the primitive organization of the economy, but yet organized and living—which may be developed in the interior or at the surface of organs. Laënnec divides the accidental tissues into two sections: 1. Those that resemble others in the animal economy, or analogous accidental tissues. 2. Those that have nothing analogous in the body, and which are always the result of a morbid process—the heterologous or heteroclitic accidental tissues. To the first class belong ossifications, accidental fibrous, fibrocartilaginous, cartilaginous, areolar, and corneous tissues, hairs, the serous membranes of certain encysted tumors, the mucous membranes of fistulous canals, and accidental synovial membranes. To the second belong tubercles, scirrhus, melanosis, &c.

Tis'sue, ARE'OLAR, Cellular tissue.

Tis'sue, CARTILAG'INOUS, Hymenochondro'des seu Hymenochondroï'des (Textu'ra seu Te'la). See Cartilage.

Tis'sue, INOD'ULAR, Te'la inodula'ris, (F.) Inodule, Tissu inodulaire. A name given by Delpech to an accidental fibrous tissue, developed in suppurating wounds, which is the principal agent in cicatrization. It has at first the appearance of a reddish cellulofibrous layer; but soon loses its vascularity; and its fibres, which pass in all directions, become of a dull white color, and of a consistence and hardness that may be compared to those of the strongest articular ligaments. It is well seen in the cicatrix left after burns.

TIS'SUE, SCLEROUS, Te'la sclero'sa, (F.) Tissu scléreux. This name has been used collectively for the cartilaginous, osseous, and fibrous tissues.

Tis'sue-ma'king, Histogenetic.

Tit, (τιτθῆ, [Sax.] τιτ,) Nipple.

Tithe'né, (τιθηνη,) Nurse.

Tithym'alus Cyparis'sias, (τιθυμᾶλος,) Euphorbia cyparissias — t. Lathyrus, Euphorbia lathyrus — t. Latifolius, Euphorbia lathyrus — t. Palustris, Euphorbia palustris — t. Paralys, Euphorbia paralys.

Titillamen'tum, Gargarism.

Titilla'tion, (titillare, titillatum, 'to tickle,') Tickling.

Tit'thé, (τιτθῆ,) Mamma, Nipple.

Tit'thion, (τιτθιον, dim. of titthos,) Nipple.

Tit'this, (τιτθις,) Mamma, Nipple.

Tit'thos, (τιτθος,) Mamma, Nipple.

Tit'ty, Mamma, Nipple.

Tituban'tia, 'a staggering,' Bredouillement.

Tituba'tio, (titubare, titubatum, 'to stagger or totter,') Fidgets, Vacillatio — t. Linguae, Balbuties.

Tjettek, Upas tieuté.

Tme'tica, (τμητικά, from τμνω, 'I cut,') Incidentia.

To-and-fro Sound, Bruit de frottement.

Toad'flax, Antirrhinum linaria — t. Bastard, Comandra umbellata.

Toast'water, A'qua tos'tæ pa'nis, (F.) Eau panée. (Toast well half a slice of a stale loaf of bread, put it into a pitcher, and pour over it a quart of water. After two hours, decant the water from the bread.) It is a common drink in febrile affections.

Tobac'co, (from tabacos, the Caribbean name for the pipe in which it was smoked [?]) Nicotiana tabacum — t. English, Nicotiana rustica — t. Indian, Lobelia inflata — t. Poison, Hyoseyamus niger.

TOBAC'CO AMAURO'SIS. A form of amaurosis, with atrophy of the optic nerve, said to be met with in those addicted to the excessive use of tobacco.

TOBAC'CO ROOT, see Valeriana.

TOBAC'CO, WILD, Lobelia inflata, Nicotiana rustica.

Toc'etus, (τοκετος,) Parturition.

Tocodomycodori'tis (gen. Tocodomycodori'tidis) Malig'na Vagina'lis, (tocus, μύκος, 'mucus,' δόξα, 'skin,' and itis,) Colpocace puerperarum.

Tocol'ogy, (tocus, and λόγος, 'a discourse,') Obstetrics.

To'cus, (τοκος,) Parturition.

Tod'dy. A name given by the English to sweet, delicious, and refreshing liquors procured in India by wounding the spathæ of certain palms. The best is obtained from the Cocos nucifera.

It is obtained in large quantities from Saguë'rus sac'charifer seu Rum'phii, Pal'ma In'dica vin'a'ria secun'da, Saguë'rus seu Gomu'tus Gomu'to, Aren'ga sac'charifera, Gomu'to palm. It is called, also, Ne'va, and by boiling yields a coarse kind of sugar, called Jag'gery. The inhabitants of the Moluccas used in their wars a liquor obtained by macerating the fruit, which the Dutch called Hell water, A'qua inferna'lis.

Toddy is, also, the common name for a mixture of spirit and water sweetened, and usually spiced with nutmeg.

TOD'DY TREE, Mamei.

Toe, ([Sax.] τα,) Digitus pedis — t. Hammer, see Hammer toe — t. Supernumerary, see Monster.

Toep'litz, see Töplitz.

To'fus, Tophus.

Toile, (from [L.] tela,) a web; as—

To'kas, (τοκας, gen. τοκαδος,) Puerpera.

To'ken, Plague, see Plague token.

Tokodynamom'eter, (tocus, δυναμς, 'power, and μετρον, 'measure,') An instrument devised for the purpose of measuring the force of uterine contraction.

Tokol'ogy, (tocus, and λόγος, 'a discourse,') Obstetrics.

To'la, Tonsil.

Tol'erance, Toleran'tia, (tolerare, 'to bear,') The power of bearing. A word used by the Italian school of Rasori, to signify the power of bearing large doses of certain potent remedies, as tartrate of antimony and potassa. See Contrastimulus.

To'les, Tonsil.

To'lium, Tonsil.

Tol'les, Tonsil.

Tol'lum, Tonsil.

Tolu', (from Tolu in South America,) see Toluifera balsamum.

Toluifera Bal'samum, (tolu, and ferre, 'to bear,') Myroxylon seu Myrospermum Toluiferum. Ord. Leguminosæ. Ser. Syst. Decandria Monogynia. The name of the tree which affords the Tolu, Bal'sam of Tolu, Bal'samum Tolutanum, (Ph. U. S.,) Tolutanum, Toluifera Bal'sami Bal'samum, Goac'onaz, Red Bal'sam of Peru, (F.) Baume de Tolu, B. de Carthagène ou d'Amérique ou de Saint Thomas. It has a very fragrant odor, and warm, sweetish taste; is thick, and of a reddish-yellow color. It is stimulant and expectorant [?], and is used in coughs. It is chiefly, however, employed on account of its flavor.

Tolutanum, see Toluifera balsamum.

Tom of Bed'lam, see Abraham man.

Tomac'inum, (τομή, 'a cutting up,') Isicium.

Tom'aclum, (same etymon,) Isicium.

Tomac'ulum, (same etymon,) Isicium.

Toma'ta, (Indian,) Solanum lycopersicum.

Toma'to, Solanum lycopersicum.

To'mé, To'mus, Tomy, (τομή, τομος, 'incision,') A common suffix, as in Lithotome, Bronchotomy, &c.

To'mé, Cut, Incision.

Tomei'on, (τομειον,) Knife.

Tomen'tum Cer'ebri, (tomentum, 'a flock of wool,') The infinite number of small vessels which pass between the pia mater and convolutions of the brain. They enter the substance of the brain at right angles.

Tom'eus, (τομεις,) Knife.

To'mis, (τομεις,) Scissors.

Tomotoc'ia, (τομή, 'section,' and τοκος, 'parturition,') Cæsarean section.

Tom Toe, Pollex, see Digitus pedis.

Tone, To'nus, (ταῖος, from τεινω, 'I brace or give vigor,') The state of tension or firmness proper to each organic tissue. It is the effect of tonicity. See Elasticity.

Ton'ga, see Datura sanguinea.

Ton'gres, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The town of Tongres is about a league from Maestricht in the Low Countries. The springs, of which there are several, are chalybeate, containing carbonates of iron and magnesia.

Tongue, (Sax. tung, [D.] Tong,) Lingua, Glos'sa, Glot'ta, (F.) Langue. The tongue is a muscular, symmetrical, and very mobile organ; situate in the mouth, from the os hyoides and epiglottis to the incisor teeth. Its particular use is, to procure the sensation of savor; and it aids in the acts of sucking, mastication, deglutition, pronunciation, and exspuition. It has the shape of a pyramid, flattened above and below; rounded at its angles, and terminated, anteriorly, by a blunt point. Its upper surface, called the dorsum, is free, flat, and divided into two portions by a median furrow, lin'ea media'na; at the posterior extremity of which is the fora'men cæcum or fora'men of Morgagni. The inferior surface is free, and covered by the mucous membrane on its anterior third and sides; but behind and in the middle it is attached to the lower jaw by means of the genioglossus; and to the hyoides by the hyoglossus. Its margins are rounded; thick behind, thinner anteriorly. Its tip, or point, or dental extremity is rounded and free:—the root, base, or hy'oid extremity, radix lin'guæ, is continuous with the epiglottis and velum palati. It is very thick at the foramen cæcum; but thinner as it approaches the hyoid bone. The tongue is composed of muscles, and covered by a mucous membrane—Periglot'tis, Involu'crum lin'guæ, Membrana seu Tu'nica vagina'lis seu Cutis seu Epider'mis seu Tu'nica seu Involu'crum mucosum seu Crus'ta villosa lin'guæ—which forms also the frænum beneath the tongue. On this membrane are seen the different papillæ. The nerves of the organ proceed from the inferior maxillary, glossopharyngeal and hypoglossal. The first and second are connected with taste; the last with the motions of the organ. Some recent observers, however, consider the glossopharyngeal to be the special nerve of gustation. The arteries are the lin'gual, from the external carotid; and the pal'atine and ton'sillar, from the labial. The veins are the superficialis lin'guæ, rani'na, lingua'lis, and submentalis. They open into those of the pharynx and larynx. Its lymphatic vessels pass into numerous ganglia, situate at the edge of the hyoglossi muscles. Two glands beneath the tongue, immediately behind the frænum, have received the name glands of Blandin, after that anatomist. See Sublingual gland.

TONGUE, BLACK. A fever which prevailed in the Western States in the winter of 1842–3; probably typhoid fever. According to some, an epidemic erysipelas.

TONGUE DEPRES'SOR, (F.) Abaisse-langue. An instrument, consisting of a spatula attached to a handle, for depressing the tongue in examinations of the mouth.

TONGUE, HER'NIA OF THE, Glossocœle.

TONGUE, INFLAMMA'TION OF THE, Glossitis—t. Red, Fever, see Typhus.

Tonguehold'er, Glossocatochus.

Tonguescraper, Cure-langue—t. Tie, see Angloglossia.

Ton'ic, (τονικός,) Ton'icus, (F.) Tonique. Relating to tone.

Tonic, Ton'icus, Tono'ticus, Antasthen'icus, (F.) Tonique, Fortifiant, in Therapeutics, means a medicine which has the power of exciting slowly, and by insensible degrees, the organic actions of the different systems of the animal economy, and of augmenting their strength in a durable manner. Bitter, vegetable substances which are not associated with an acrid or narcotic principle, preparations of iron, cold water, &c., act as tonics. Tonics are also called Comfortan'tia, Confortati'ca, Corroboran'tia, Confirman'tia, Roboran'tia, &c.

The following are the chief Tonics:—Acidum Arseniosum, Acidum Nitricum, Acidum Sulphuricum, Argenti Nitras, Bismuthi Subnitras, Carbo Ligni, Cascarilla, Cinchona, Cinchonina, Colomba, Cornus Florida, Cupri Acetas, Cupri Sulphas, Cuprum ammoniatum, Cusparia, Eupatorium perfoliatum, Ferri Præparata, Gentiana, Liriodendron, Lupulina, Piperina, Prunus Virginiana, Quassia, Quinia, Salix, Salicina, Serpentina, Zinci præparata, Aquæ Minerales acidulæ et ferrugineæ; and Mental Tonics, (Confidence, Hope, Amusement.)

Ton'ic POW'ER, Irritability.

Ton'ic SPASM, Spas'mus ton'icus, Convul'sio tonica, Conduc'tio, Spas'tic, Tonus, Enton'ia, Entosis, Enta'sia. A rigid contraction of muscles without relaxation, as in trismus, tetanus, &c. See Tetanus and Spasm.

Tonic'ity, Tonic'itas. The faculty that determines the general tone of the solids. Excessive tonic'ity causes er'ethism or crispness; deficient tonic'ity, at'ony or weakness. Tonic'ity has been used in the same sense as irritability.

Tonique, Tonic.

Ton'ka Bean, Dipterix odorata.

Ton'odes, (τονωδης,) Tensive.

Tonomètre, (τονος, 'tension,' and μετρον, 'measure.') An instrument devised by Von Graefe to measure the degree of tension of the eyeball, as in glaucoma.

Tonom'etry, (same etymon.) Measurement of tension, as of the eyeball. See Tonomètre.

Tono'ticus, (τονωτικός,) Tonic.

Ton'sil, Tonsil'la, Amygdala, Paristh'mia, Paristh'mium, Amphibran'chium, Glandula colli, To'la, Tol'les, To'les, To'llium, Tollum, Spong'os, Antias, (pl. Anti'ades), Almonds of the ear, Almonds or Bulbs of the throat, (F.) Amygdale, Tonsille, (Prov.) Earkecker. An ovoid collection of follicles, about half an inch in length, similar in shape to an almond, and situate, on each side, between the pillars of the velum palati. The inner surface, projecting into the isthmus of the throat, is covered by the mucous membrane, in which are the orifices of a dozen cells, whence a transparent, viscid mucus oozes on pressure. This mucus is destined to facilitate deglutition, by lubricating the isthmus faucium; and is forced out during the passage of the alimentary bolus.

Tonsil-guillotine, Amygdalatome.

Tonsil'la, pl. tonsillæ, Tonsil.

Tonsil'læ Pestilen'tes, Cynanche maligna.

Ton'sillar, Tonsilla'ris, (F.) Tonsillaire. Appertaining or relating to the tonsils.

Tonsilla'rum Gangræ'na, Cynanche maligna.

Tonsille, Tonsil.

Tonsil'lia, Cynanche tonsillaris.

Tonsillit'ic, Tonsillit'icus, (better Tonsillar.) Belonging or relating to the tonsils; as the 'tonsillitic branches of the glossopharyngeal nerve.'

Tonsilli'tis, (tonsilla, and itis), Cynanche tonsillaris.

Tonsillitome, (tonsilla, and τεμνω, 'to cut,') Amygdalatome.

Tonso'rius Cul'ter, (tonsor, 'a barber,' and cultor, 'a knife,') Razor.

Tonus, (τονος,) Tonic spasm—t. Trismus, Trismus.

Too'dle, Tooth.

Toot, Coriaria ruscifolia.

Tooth, (Sax. toð), Dens, Mor'dex, O'dous, (Prov.) Toodle, (F.) Dent. The teeth, Den'tes, Mord'ices, are small, hard bodies fixed in the alveoli of each jaw, and serving to seize, and to cut, tear, and triturate, alimentary substances. True teeth are found only in man, the mammalia, reptiles, and fish. The teeth have, in general, the shape of an irregular cone, the base of which is towards the interior of the mouth; and the apex, single or divided, towards the bottom of the alveoli. Each tooth has a part situate out of the alveolus, and covered by a vitriform substance. This part is called the crown or coro'na. It is bounded by a narrower portion, called the cervix, (F.) collet, which separates it from the portion in the alveolus—the fang or root, odontorrh'ize, (F.) racine. In the adult, the teeth are 32 in number, 16 to each jaw; these consist of 4 incisors, 2 canines, 4 *bicuspid*s, and 6 molars. (See these various terms.) The teeth inclose a vascular and nervous pulp, in a central cavity, Cavitas Pulpæ, Cavum Dentis, Antrum dentale. They are formed of a very hard, compact tissue; and the corona is covered by a vitreous substance called Enamel, Substantia vitrea seu adamantina, (F.) Email. The Enamel organ, Organon adamantinum, is a peculiar structure formed in the development of the teeth, by the growth and multiplication of epithelial cells dipping down into the mucous tissue. With a papilliform process developed in the same tissue, the rudiment of the tooth is formed. The incisor and canine teeth are developed by a single point of ossification; the lesser molars, by two; and the larger, by four or five. See Dentition. Researches by Retzius, Müller, and others, have led them to believe that the ivory of the tooth, Dentine or Dentin, Ebur, Substantia eburnea, Substantia ossea of Malpighi, proper tooth substance, bone of the tooth, osseous substance of tooth, toothbone, consists of tubular fibres, — Dentinal fibres, — which contain organic deposits of calcareous salts; and of intertubular substance, in which are observed corpuscles or osseous cells of the tooth, called, by Professor Owen, calcigerous cells, which also contain earthy salts. At the part where the enamel terminates at the cervix of the tooth, the crusta petrosa seu fibrosa, cor'tex osseus, cementum, cementum or cortical substance, commences in an extremely thin stratum, in a thin layer of true bone, slightly modified in structure; passes down and gradually increases in thickness towards the extremity of the root, where it is generally the thickest. It is said by Nasmyth to have been traced on the enamel, and Purkinje and Fränkel thought that it lined the cavities pulpæ. They gave it the name Substantia ostioides. It is the matéria tartarea of Malpighi. It has been found, however, that the hard substance deposited on the inner surface of the dentine, at the age of twenty years or later, and which encroaches on the cavity, has a distinct structure from the cement, and resembles in part dentine, and in part bone. It is the horny substance of Blumenbach, the osteodentine of Owen, and the secondary dentine of Tomes. In the compound teeth of the herbivorous animal, a deposition is found on the surface of the enamel, which has been called cementum. Müller, however, regards it to be a deposit from the salts and the saliva, and to be essentially the same as what is called tartar in the human subject. The Dentinal glands of Serres are small white bodies which are seen, anterior to the eruption of the teeth, studding the mucous membrane. They are caused by the prominences of the outer epithelial layer of the enamel organ.

TOOTH BONE, see Tooth.

TOOTH, DENU'DING PROC'ESS OF. The gradual removal of the enamel without evidence of disease. It is most common in old persons.

TOOTH EDGE, Agacement des dents, Hæmodia—t. Paste, Dentifricium—t. Rake, Dentiscapium—t. Rash, Strophulus—t. Shell, dog-like, Dentalium.

TOOTH WOUNDS. Wounds inflicted by the teeth of animals, and which do not owe their gravity to any poison conveyed into the tissues. They are punctured, penetrating, or lacerated, and often serious in result.

TOOTH'ACHE, Odontalgia—t. Bush, Xanthoxylum fraxineum—t. Tree, Aralia spinosa, Xanthoxylum clava Herouli.

TOPHA'CEOUS, Tophaceus, (F.) Tophacé, (from tophus.) Relating or belonging to tophus, — as 'a tophaceous concretion.'

TOPHA'CEOUS CONCRE'TION, Tophus.

To'phi, see Tophus.

TOPHUS, (τοφος.) Tofus, 'a porous or friable stone,' Osteotophus, Tophaceus Concretion. A collection of hard, calcareous matter, which forms, particularly at the surface of joints affected with gout, Arthrotophus, (see Calculi, arthritic.) and, occasionally, in the interior of organs, around the teeth, &c. It likewise meant gravel, and chazaza.

TOP'IC, Topicus, (from τοπος, locus, 'a place.') A local application, (F.) Topique. See Local.

TOP'ICUS, (τοπιος.) Local, Topic.

TOPINA'RIA, Talpa.

TOP'IQUE, Topic.

TOP'litz or Tep'litz, Mineral Waters of. Toplitz is a town of Bohemia, celebrated for its numerous thermal springs. The water resembles that of Gastein, and is employed for bathing purposes in gouty and paralytic affections, functional uterine derangement, &c. Temp. 120° Fah. Season, from the 1st of June to the 15th of September.

TOPOGRAPH'ICAL ANAT'OMY, (τοπος, 'a place or region,' and γραφω, 'I describe,') see Anatomy.

TOQUE, (a kind of hat,) Scutellaria galericulata.

TOR'cular, (from torqueo, 'I twist,') Tourniquet. A press for wine, oil, or cider.

TOR'cular HEROPH'ILI, Press of Herophilus, Lechevion, Le'nos, Le'num, Fourth Sinus, Confluence of the Sinuses, (F.) Confluent des Sinus, Pressoir d'Hérophile. A smooth and polished cavity, of irregular shape, in which several sinuses of the dura mater meet. It is situate before the internal occipital protuberance, at the union of the three great duplicatures of the dura mater. It has six openings into it:—one above, that of the superior longitudinal sinus; two below, answering to the occipital sinuses; one anterior, belonging to the straight sinus; and two lateral, and very broad, which lead into the lateral sinuses, and convey from the cavity the blood that has been poured into it by the others.

TOR'culum, (from torqueo, 'I twist,') Tourniquet.

TORDYL'ium, (τορδυλιον.) T. Officina'le, Tor'dylum, (τορδυλον.) Seseli Cre'ticum seu Montanum, (F.) Séseli de Crète. Family, Umbelliferae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. The seeds and roots of this Southern European plant are considered carminative and diuretic. They enter into the theriaca.

TOR'nia ASIAT'ica, (after Olaf Toren, of Gothenburg, a pupil of Linnæus.) Cela-dolo. A small Malabar plant, the juice of whose leaves, sweetened with sugar, is said to cure gonorrhœa.

TOR'mentil, Geranium maculatum, Tormentilla.

TORmentil'la, (from tormina, for which it was used,) T. erecta seu sylvestris seu officina'lis seu tuberosa, Fragaria tormentil'la officina'lis, Potentil'la tormentil'la, Heptaphyllum, Consolida rubra, Common Tor'mentil, Up'right Sept'foil, (F.) Tormentille. Ord. Rosaceæ. Sex. Syst. Icosandria Polygynia. The root, Tormentilla, (Ph. U. S.) has a slightly aromatic odor, and austere, styptic taste. It is astringent. Dose of the powder, gr. x. to ʒi.

TORMEN'tum, 'pain, suffering,' (from torqueo, 'I twist,') Ileus, Intussusceptio.

TOR'mina, pl. of tormen, Strophus, Celial'gia, Encelial'gia, Anile'ma, Anile'sis, Gripes, Mulligrubs, Fret'ting, (F.) Tranchées, (from torqueo, 'I twist,') Acute colicky pains. Dysentery. TOR'MINA CEL'si, Dysentery—t. Parturientium, Pains, labor—t. Post partum, see Pains, labor.

TORNAC'ulum, (from torquere, 'to twist,') Tourniquet.

TOROS'itas, (from torosus, 'brawny,'—torus,

'brawn.') Corpulentia carnosita, Habitus athleticus. Muscular strength.

Toro'sus, Muscular.

Torpe'do, gen. Torpe'dinis, (torpeo, 'I am torpid,') Narcosis.

Torpefactio Universa'lis, (torpeo, 'I am torpid,' and facere, 'to make,') Holonarcosis.

Torpeur, Torpor.

Torpid, Torpidus, (F.) Torpidus, Engourdi, (from torpeo, 'I am sluggish,') Numb. Incapable of exertion and of feeling. Dull, stupid, inactive.

Torpiditas, Torpor.

Torpidus, Narcotized, Torpid.

Torpor, gen. Torporis, Torpiditas, Noth'otes, Parapsis ex'pers, Torpidity, (F.) Engourdissement. State of a part which becomes numb, and almost incapable of motion. Torpor, Torpidity, Torpidness, Torpidude are also applied to a debilitated, sluggish condition of a part, or of the whole of the body; Aër'gia, (F.) Accablement. See Hibernation.

Torpor, Narcosis — t. of the Colon, see Colon, torpor of the — t. Intestinum, Constipation — t. Soporificus, Nocar.

Torquay, (pron. Torkee.) A town in Devonshire, England, which, on account of the mildness of its climate, and its sheltered situation from the bleaker winds, is a frequent retreat for the phthisical invalid.

Tor'sion, Tor'sio, (from torquere, tortum, 'to twist,') The act of twisting. Torsion of the extremities of bleeding vessels — Angios'trophē — is sometimes used to arrest hemorrhage.

Torsk, see Oleum morrhue.

Tortelle, Erysimum.

Torticolis Spasmodique, Tic rotatoire.

Torticollis, (torquere, tortum, 'to twist,' and collum, 'the neck,') Torticolis, Caput seu Collum obstipum, Obstipa cer'vix, Cer'vix rig'ida, Obstipitas cap'itis seu col'li, Trachel'agra, Enta'sia Lox'ia, Lox'ias, Cephalolox'ia, Ancylod'erē, Ancylod'eris, Rhebo'ra'nia, Rhebau'chen, Rhebo'd'erē, Auchenorrhē'ma, Rheumatis'mus col'li seu cer'vici, Stiff'neck, Wry'neck, (Prov.) Slab, (F.) Obstipité. A variety of rheumatism, seated in the muscles of the neck, which prevents the motion of the head, and causes the patient to hold it inclined to the side affected. It is, commonly, of short duration; usually disappearing in a few days. Rubefacients are the best topical applications. The term is also applied to permanent contraction of the muscles of the neck, which causes the head to be held to one side. The remedy is the division of the contracted muscles.

Tor'toise, Fresh-wa'ter, Great, (torquere, tortum, 'to twist, to wind,') Hydraspis expansa.

Tortue, 'tortoise,' Testudo.

Tortu'ra O'ris, (from torqueo, 'I twist,') Canine laugh, Neuralgia faciei — t. Oris paralytica Linnæi, Paralysis, Bell's.

Tor'ula Cerevis'ia, (from torus, 'a knot,') T. Ace'ti, Saccharom'ycetes seu Mycoder'ma cerevis'ia, Cryptococ'cus fermentum seu cerevis'ia, Yeast plant, (F.) Champignon du ferment. One of the simplest forms of vegetation, capable, under favorable circumstances, of vegetating rapidly, and assisting in producing the fermentation of saccharine substances. The plant has been found in vomited fluids, and in feces. See Parasites.

Tor'ulus Glan'dis, (dim. of torus, 'a fleshy part,') Crown of the glans.

To'rus, 'a fleshy part,' Muscle — t. Manûs, Metacarpus.

To'ta Bo'na, 'all good,' Chenopodium bonus Henricus.

Totsu Kaso, Sphæria Sinensis.

Tot'ty, Vertiginous.

To'tum Carno'sum, 'all fleshy,' Pancreas.

Touch, Tactus, Tactio, Ha'phē, Hap'sis, Tactio, Palpation, (F.) Toucher, (from [L.] toccare,

'to touch,') One of the five senses, and that which makes known to us the palpable qualities of bodies, such as their consistence, quality, &c. It is seated, particularly, in the hands; and differs from tact in being active. See Esaphe and Palpation.

'To touch the mouth with mercury' is to produce the constitutional effects of that agent, as evinced by the falling away of the gums, &c.

Touch Bon'ies, Corpuscula tactûs — t. Corpuscles, Corpuscula tactûs.

TOUCH-ME-NOT, Impatiens fulva.

TOUCH, ROY'AL. It was at one time almost universally believed, in England, that the royal touch would remove Scrofula or King's Evil (as it was thence called). This superstition is now entirely exploded. Edward the Confessor was the first English king who touched for the Evil. Medals of gold or silver were often suspended around the necks of the persons touched. These were called touching or healing pieces.

Toucher, 'touch,' Esaphe, Touch — t. Vaginal, Esaphe.

Touch'ing Piece, see Touch, royal.

Touch'wood, Boletus igniarius.

Touloucounin, see Carapa touloucouna.

Tour de Maître, 'a master turn or feat,' Coup de maître.

Tourbillon Vasculaire, (from turbo, gen. turbis, 'a whirlpool,') Vasa vasorum.

Tournesol, ([F.] tourner, 'to turn,' and sol, 'the sun,') — a translation of ἡλιοτροπιον, heliotropium, Heliotropium Europeum, Lichen roccella.

Tourniole, (from tourner, 'to turn,' like Run-round,) Paronychia.

Tour'niquet, (pron. toorniket or turniket,) Tor'cular, Tor'culum, Tornaculum, Præ'ulum, Præ'ulum, Præ'ulum seu Prelum arteria'le, Verticil'um, Fas'cia tor'tilis, (from [F.] tourner, 'to turn,') A surgical instrument for stopping the course of blood in a limb, by exerting a strong compression upon the principal artery. It was invented by a French surgeon, Morel, in the middle of the 17th century; and was modified, subsequently, by Nuck, Verduc, Monro, Petit, and Louis. It is used to suspend, for a time, the circulation in a limb during great operations; to arrest arterial hemorrhage in cases of wounds; to compress certain aneurismal and other tumors, &c.

Tournis, ([F.] tourner, 'to turn,') see Cœnurus.

Tous-les-mois, 'every month,' Am'yllum canna'ceum, Canna, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Cân'na Starch. A fecula obtained from the rhizome of Canna edu'lis, which flowers every month. It resembles potato starch, and may be substituted for arrowroot. It is procured from St. Kitts. According to the Ph. U. S. (1873), it is derived from an undetermined species of Canna.

Tout, Nates.

Toute Bonne, 'all good,' Salvia sclarea.

Toute Épice, 'all spice,' see Myrtus pimenta — t. Sainte, Sanicula.

Toux, Tussis — t. Bleue, Pertussis — t. Bronchique, Bronchial cough, Cough, tubal — t. Caverneuse, see Cavernous respiration — t. Convulsive, Pertussis — t. Quintese, Pertussis — t. Tubaire, Bronchial cough, Cough, tubal.

Tow, ([Sax.] top,) Stupa.

Town Cachex'ia. The general cachectic condition of pallor and anæmia met with in densely populated towns.

Toxæ'mia, Toxicohæmia.

Toxæ'mic, Toxicohæ'mic, Toxicæ'mic, Hæmatotox'ic, Hæmatotox'ic, Hæmatotox'ic, Toxæ'micus, Toxicohæ'micus, Toxæ'micus, Hæmatotox'icus, Hæmatotox'icus, Hæmatotox'icus. Relating or appertaining to a poisoned state of the blood.

Toxémie, Toxicohæmia.

Toxhæ'mia, Toxicohæmia.

Tox'ic, (from toxicus,) Poisonous.

Toxicæ'mia, Toxicohæmia.

Tox'ical, Poisonous.

Toxica'ria Macassarien'sis, see Upas.

Toxica'tio, (from toxicum.) Poisoning.

Toxicémie, Toxicohæmia.

Toxicoden'dron, (toxicum, and δένδρον, 'a tree,') Rhus toxicodendron.

Toxicohæ'mia, Toxicæ'mia, Toxihæ'mia, Toxæ'mia, Toxhæ'mia, (F.) Toxicohémie, Toxicémie, Toxémie, (toxicum, and αἷμα, 'blood,') Poisoning of the blood.

Toxicohémie, Toxicohæmia.

Tox'icoid, Toxicoides, (toxicum, and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Resembling poison.

Toxicol'ogy, Toxicolog'ia, (toxicum, and λογος, 'a description,') A treatise on poisons.

Toxico'ses, (G.) Toxikosen, (from toxicum, 'an arrow,' originally 'arrow poison,' and osis.) A family of diseases, according to the classification of Fuchs, caused by the reception of poisons into the system.

Tox'icum, (τοξικόν, from τοξον.) Poison, Venom.

Toxihæ'mia, Toxicohæmia.

Toxicus, Poisonous.

Trabec'ula, (dim. of trabs, gen. trabis, 'a beam,') (F.) Trabécule, 'a small beam.' Applied to prolongations of fibrous membranes which form septa, as in the corpora cavernosa and the testes; to the medullary fibres, which form the commissures; and to the fleshy projections, which form the columnæ carneæ, &c.

TRABEC'ULA CEREBRI, Corpus callosum.

Trabec'ulæ Car'neæ, Columnæ carneæ — t. Cordis, Columnæ carneæ — t. Corporum cavernosorum, see Cavernous bodies — t. Splenis, see Spleen — t. Willisii, Chordæ Willisii.

Trabes Cor'dis, (pl. of trabs, 'a beam,') Columnæ carneæ.

Trabs, 'a beam,' Penis — t. Cerebri, Corpus callosum — t. Medullaris, Corpus callosum.

Trace, Prim'itive, Groove, primitive.

Trache'a, (τράχεια, fem. of τράχυν, 'rough,' ἀρτηρία, understood,) (generally, however, accented Trachea;) Trache'a seu Trachei'a arte'ria, (τράχεια ἀρτηρία;) Trache'lus, Bron'chus, As'pera arte'ria, Fistula spiritua'lis seu pulmona'lis, Can'na, Syrin'ga, Syrinx; the Wind'pipe, Wo'sen, Weas'and, Wizen, Wee'sel, Throt'tle, (Sc.) Throp'ill, (Prov.) Keck'corn, Keck'er, Throp'ple, (F.) Trachée, Trachée artère; (composed of ἀνρ, 'air,' and τρέπειν, 'to keep,') The trachea is a cylindrical, fibrocartilaginous and membranous tube, flattened behind, and situate on the median line, before the vertebral column, from the inferior part of the larynx, as far as the third dorsal vertebra. There it divides into two branches, the bronchiæ, which separate, one to go to each lung. The trachea, the function of which is to convey air to the lungs during respiration, is composed: 1. Of cartilaginous rings, An'nuli cartilagin'ei, Segmen'ta cartilagin'ea, Or'b'es cartilagin'osi, incomplete behind; situate one above the other, and kept in situ by a fibrous membrane. 2. Of a mucous membrane, which lines it internally, and contains numerous mucous follicles. 3. Of transverse muscular fibres, not well marked, which occupy its posterior surface. 4. Of vessels, which proceed from the superior and inferior thyroideal. 5. Of nerves, that are given off by the pneumogastric and cervical ganglia.

The breathing tubes of insects are termed Trach'eæ.

TRACHE'A ARTE'RIA, Trachea.

Trach'eæ, see Trachea.

Trach'eal, Trachea'lis, (F.) Trachéal. Appertaining to the trachea. An epithet applied to respiration as heard through the stethoscope opposite the trachea, larynx, and root of the bronchia; the air appearing as if sucked in from the cylinder during inspiration, and expelled during expiration.

TRA'CHEAL GLANDS. Mucous follicles on the posterior surface of the trachea. They are small, flattened, ovoid bodies.

Trachea'lia, (from trachea.) Cynanche trachealis.

Trachea'lis. The fibres of unstriped muscle, which pass from one portion of each of the tracheal cartilages to the other, at the posterior part of the trachea, have been so called by some anatomists. When they contract, they approximate the extremities of the cartilage; diminish the calibre of the trachea; and thus increase the velocity of the air forced through it, as in coughing; and facilitate the removal of any irritating substance in contact with the lining membrane.

Trachée, Trachea — t. Artère, Trachea.

Trachei'tis, (trachea, and itis.) Cynanche trachealis.

Trachel'agra, Torticollis, (τραχηλος, 'neck,' and αγρα, 'seizure,') Also, gout in the neck.

Trache'lian, (from trachelus.) Cervical.

Trachelis'mus, (from trachelus.) A term proposed by Dr. Marshall Hall, for a fancied spasmodic action of the muscles of the neck, which he esteems to be the cause of many morbid phenomena, by inducing compression of the veins of the neck and an impeded return of blood from the head.

Tracheli'tis, (trachelus, and itis.) Cynanche trachealis.

Trache'lium America'num, (from trachelus, having been used in throat affections,) Lobelia cardinalis.

Trachélo - attoïdo - basilaire, Rectus capitis lateralis — t. Attoïdo-occipital, Obliquus superior capitis — t. Basilaire, Rectus capitis internus major — t. Basilaire, petit, Rectus capitis internus minor.

Trache'lodiaphragmat'ic, Trache'lodiaphragmat'icus. The fourth pair of cervical nerves, whence the phrenic nerve chiefly arises.

Trachelodyn'ia, (trachelus, and δύνη, 'pain,') Pain in the neck.

Trachélo-mastoïdien, Complexus minor — t. Occipital, Complexus — t. Scapulaire, Levator scapulae.

Trache'lus, Collum. Trachea.

Trache'obronchi'tis. Inflammation of the trachea and bronchia.

Tracheoce'lé, (trachea, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Bronchocele.

Tracheoph'ony, (trachea, and φωνη, 'voice,') Laryngophony.

Tracheophthi'sis, see Phthisis laryngea.

Tracheophy'ma, gen. Tracheophy'matis, (trachea, and φύμα, 'a swelling,') Bronchocele.

Tracheop'ya, (trachea, and πυρ, 'fever,') Cynanche trachealis.

Tracheorrhag'ia, Hæmop'toë seu Hæmop'tysis larynge'a et trachea'lis, (trachea, and ρήγνυμι, 'I break forth,') Hemorrhage from the trachea.

Trach'eoscopy, (trachea, and σκοπεω, 'I view,') Inspection of the trachea by a mirror, &c., similar to that for examination of the larynx.

Tracheostenosis, (trachea, and στενωσις, 'contraction,') Contraction or narrowness of the trachea.

Tracheotome, (trachea, and τεμνω, 'I cut,') An instrument of the trocar kind for opening the trachea.

Tracheot'omy, see Bronchotomy.

Trachi'tis, gen. Trachi'tidis, (trachea, and itis.) Cynanche trachealis.

Tracho'ma, gen. Tracho'matis, (from τράχυν, 'rough,') Aspre'do, Aspritu'do, Pladar'otes, Asperitu'do, Scabrit'ies, Gran'ular conjuncti'va, Gran'ular eye'lid, Chronic gran'ular conjunctivi'tis, (F.) Aspérité des Pauvères. A roughness of the inner surface of the eyelids. A variety of ophthalmia, of which three kinds have been designated — T. sabulo'sum, from sand, &c. getting between the eyelids; T. carunculo'sum, Pladaro'sis, Pladaro'sis, Morum pal'pebræ int'er'næ, from fleshy excrescences; and T. herpet'icum, from hard pustules on the inner surface of the eyelids. This last is also called Fico'sis, and Pal'pebra fico'sa. See Blepharoxystum.

TRACHOMA GLANDS, see Bruch.

Trachypho'nia, (τραχὺς, 'rough,' and φωνή, 'voice.') Roughness of the voice.

Tract, Trac'tus, (from trahere, tractum, 'to draw out lengthwise.') A track or course; a region.

TRACT, OP'TIC, see Optic nerves — t. Respiratory, see Respiratory tract.

Tracta'tio Manua'ria, (tractare, tractatum, 'to handle,') Diacheirismus, Surgery.

Trac'tor, (trahere, tractum, 'to draw,') Lever, Tire-tête.

Tractora'tion, (trahere, tractum, 'to attract, influence,') Perkinism. See Tractors, metallic.

Tracto'res, (tractare, tractatum, 'to handle,') see Shampooing.

Trac'tors, Metal'lic. Metallic agents introduced by Dr. Elisha Perkins, of Connecticut, about the end of the last century, to cure diseases. The parts were rubbed with these tractors, and hundreds of thousands of cases were reported to have been cured by the Tractora'tion. The affections in which they were chiefly used were local inflammations and pains in different parts. The good effects were doubtless owing to the influence exerted by the mind over the body. The bubble did not exist long. See Perkinism.

Trac'tus, Tract.

TRAC'TUS INTERME'DIO-LATERA'LIS. A small group of cells forming a projection of gray matter of the spinal cord opposite the junction of the anterior and posterior cornua.

TRAC'TUS INTESTINO'RUM, Intestinal tube — t. Opticus, see Optic nerves — t. Respiratorius, Respiratory tract.

TRAC'TUS SPIRA'LIS FORAMINULENTUS, T. Spiralis foraminosus seu foraminum cochleæ. Minute openings at the base of the modiolus, arranged in a spiral manner, which transmit the filaments of the cochlear nerve. The central canal of the Tractus is longer than the rest, and is called Cana'lis seu Tu'bulus centra'lis modi'oli seu cochleæ. Winding closely round the modiolus is a small canal — Cana'lis spira'lis modi'oli (Rosenthal), Tu'bulus spira'lis modi'oli, Cana'lis peripher'icus modi'oli, O. ganglionaris.

Tradescan'tia Virgin'ica, (after John Tradescant, gardener to Charles I.,) Spi'derwort; indigenous; Order, Commelynaceæ; flowering from May to August. The roots are demulcent.

Tragacan'tha, (τραγός, 'a goat,' and ακανθα, 'a thorn,' owing to its hirsute boughs,) Gummi Tragacanthæ seu Astrag'ali Tragacanthæ, Gum Tragacanth, Gum Dragon. The concrete juice of Astrag'alus Tragacanthæ or Astrag'alus Ve'rus, a native of Persia. Ord. Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Diadelphia Decandria. (F.) Gomme Adragant, Adragant, Adragante, Adraganthe. This gum is inodorous, nearly insipid, of a whitish color, semitransparent and striated. It is in thin, vermiform pieces, and does not form a smooth, uniform mucilage with water. It is demulcent, but is rarely used alone.

Trage'a, Trage'ma — t. Aromatica, Pulvis cinnamomi compositus.

Trage'ma, gen. Trage'matis, (τραγῆμα, 'a sweetmeat,') Of old, in the plural — Trage'mata — it meant a dessert. Afterward, like Tragea, it meant an aromatic powder containing much sugar.

Tragi Bar'bula, see Tragus.

Trag'icus, Tragien (Ch.), (from Tragus.) A small, flat, triangular muscle which almost wholly covers the outer surface of the tragus, arising from its base and terminating at the top of the eminence.

Tragien, Tragicus.

Tragomascha'lia, Tragomas'chalē, (τραγός, 'a goat,' and μασχάλη, 'axilla,') The strong, unpleasant odor of the armpits.

Tragoph'o'nia, (τραγός, 'a goat,' and φωνή, 'voice,') Egophony.

Tragopo'gon, Bar'ba hir'ci, (τραγός, 'a goat,' and πύγων, 'beard,') A genus of plants, Ord. Cichoraceæ; Sex. Syst. Syngenesia Polygamia Equalis; (F.) Barbe de Bouc,—of which the roots of the Tragopo'gon porrifo'lium, Sal'sifi, Sal'sify, Sal'safy, Oysterplant, Oysterroot, Vegetable oyster, (F.) Salsifis ou Cercifis, and the young shoots of the T. pratens'is, Mead'ow Sal'sifi, Common Goat's Beard, (F.) Salsifis des prés, are eaten as food. The root of the latter has been used as a diuretic.

Tragoseli'num, (τραγός, 'a goat,' and ελίον, 'parsley,') Pimpinella saxifraga — t. Angelica, Ligusticum podagraria — t. Magnum, Pimpinella magna — t. Majus, Pimpinella magna — t. Saxifraga, Pimpinella magna.

Trag'us, (τραγός, 'a goat,' from its being furnished, in some persons, with hair, like the beard of a goat,) Hir'cus, Hir'quus. A small, flattened, triangular nipple situate before the meatus auditorius externus, which it appears to conceal. It is covered with hair in old people, whence its name, Tragi seu Hir'ci bar'bula. Also, the peculiar, goatlike smell of the axillæ.

TRA'GUS MATTHI'OLI, Salsola kali.

Trainasse, (from trainer, 'to trail,') Polygonum aviculare.

Train'ing, ([F.] trainer, from trahere, 'to draw,') (F.) Entraînement. A system of treating man and animals, so as to develop their full physical powers. It is practised especially as regards the prize-fighter and the race-horse, and appertains to what have been termed by the French Organoplastics.

Traitement, ([L.] tractare, [F.] traiter, 'to treat,') Curatio — t. Palliatif, see Palliation.

Tra'mè, (τραμή,) Perinæum.

Tra'mis, (τραμῖς,) Perinæum.

Trance, Catalepsy, Ecstasis — t. Death, see Asphyxia.

Tranchées, (from transcendere, 'to cut across,') Tormina — t. Uterines. Pains, after.

Trans, in composition, through, across, over, or beyond.

Transfigura'tio, (trans, and figurare, figuratum, 'to form,') Transformation.

Transfora'tion, (F.) Sphenotricie, (trans, and foro, 'I pierce,') Repeated perforation of the base of the skull in craniotomy.

Transforma'tion, Transforma'tio, Transfigura'tio, Transmuta'tio, Metab'olè, (trans, and forma, 'form,') Change of form. M. Quatrefages uses the term transformation for changes which take place in the egg,—metamorphosis for alterations which occur after its exclusion.

Transformations de Tissu (F.). The French pathologists designate thus the change that occurs in an organ, the tissue of which becomes similar to that of another organ. The chief transformations are cartilaginous, osseous, and adipous. See Tissue.

Transfu'sion, Transfu'sio, Metach'ysis, (from transfundere — trans, and fundere, fusum, — 'to pour,') To pour from one vessel into another.

TRANSFU'SION OF BLOOD, Transfu'sio San'guinis, Cu'ra Medea'na, Methæmachym'ia, Hæmatometach'ysis, Hæmometach'ysis, Diach'ysis, Transplan'ta'tio med'ica no'va, Chirur'gia transfuso'ria, Exotichæmato'sis. The act of passing the blood of one animal into the veins of another; an operation which was formerly used to fulfil various therapeutical intentions. It has been revived in cases of uterine hemorrhage; and, apparently, with some success.

Transit'ion Tu'mor, Tumor, transition.

Transla'tion, (trans, and ferre, latum, 'to carry,') Metastasis.

Transmigra'tion of the O'vum. Occasionally a corpus luteum is found in the ovary opposite to that in which the ovum was developed. Such a transition, whether occurring by an extrauterine or an intrauterine channel, is called the transmigration of the ovum.

Transmissibil'ity, (trans, and mittere, missum, 'to send,') see Sensibility.

Transmuta'tio, (trans, and mutare, mutatum, 'to change,') Transformation.

Transpira'tio, (trans, and spirare, spiratum, 'to breathe,') Perspiration — t. Unilatera, Hemidiaphoresis.

Transpiratoire, Perspiratory.

Transplanta'tio, (trans, and plantare, plantatum, 'to plant,') Metaphytei'a. A pretended method of curing diseases, devised by Paracelsus — by making them pass from one individual to another, either animal or vegetable.

TRANSPLANTA'TIO, Morioplastice.

TRANSPLANTA'TIO DEN'TIS, Insit'io dentis, Transplantation of a tooth. The act of transplanting a tooth from one person to another.

TRANSPLANTA'TIO MED'ICA NO'VA, Transfusion.

Transplanta'tion, Transplantatio.

TRANSPLANTA'TION OF THE COR'NEA. The insertion of the cornea of other animals as a substitute for that of man, in cases in which the latter has been destroyed; — a useless and unsuccessful operation.

TRANSPLANTA'TION OF THE SKIN, Skin-grafting — t. of a Tooth, Transplantatio dentis.

Trans'port, (trans, and portare, 'to carry,') Delirium.

Transposit'io, (trans, and ponere, positum, 'to place,') Metathesis, Transposition.

Transposit'ion, Transposit'io, Metath'esis. Change of situation.

TRANSPOSIT'ION OF THE VIS'CERA, Polype'ria promiscua translati'va, In'tus inver'sus, is a congenital vice of conformation, which consists in the viscera being found out of the situations they ordinarily occupy: the heart, for example, being on the right side; the liver on the left, &c.

Trans'udate, see Transudation.

Transuda'tio, (trans, and sudare, sudatum, 'to sweat,') Diapedesis, Transudation.

Transuda'tion, Transuda'tio, (F.) Transsudation. The passage of a fluid through the tissue of any organ, which may collect in small drops on the opposite surface, or evaporate from it. The material that so transudes is called a trans'udate, transuda'tum.

TRANSUDA'TION, Exosmose.

Transuda'tum, see Transudation.

Transversaire, Transverse — t. Épineux, Transversalis dorsi — t. Épineux du cou, Semispinalis colli — t. Épineux du dos, Semispinatus dorsi — t. Grêle, see Sacrolumbalis.

Transversal de la Conque, Transversalis auris — t. du Nez, Compressor nasi — t. des Orteils, Transversus pedis.

Transversa'lis, (from transverse,) Transverse.

TRANSVERSA' LIS ABDOM'INIS, (F.) Lombo-abdominal (Ch.), Transverse de l'Abdomen. This muscle is seated, deeply, on the lateral parts of the abdomen. It is flat, thin, and broader before than behind. It is attached, above, to the cartilage of the last true rib, and to that of every false rib; and, below, to the inner lip of the crista of the ilium; to the two outer thirds of the crural arch, and to the upper part of the pubis. Its fibres, moreover, are inserted, behind, by means of broad aponeuroses, into the top of the transverse and spinous processes of the first four lumbar vertebrae; and, before, into the linea alba, and the ensiform cartilage. This muscle, all of whose fibres have a transverse direction, constricts the belly, and diminishes the base of the chest, by drawing inwards the ribs to which it is attached.

TRANSVERSA' LIS ANTI'CUS PRI'MUS, Rectus capitis lateralis — t. Collateralis colli, see Sacrolumbalis.

TRANSVERSA' LIS COL'LI, Transversalis Major colli, Longissimus Cervicis, Portion of the Sacrospinal (Ch.), (F.) Transversaire. A muscle, seated at the posterior and lateral part of the neck and upper part of the back. It is attached to the transverse processes of the five or six lowest vertebrae of the neck; and to those of the four or five first dorsal. It extends the vertebrae of the neck, and inclines them to its side. See Semispinalis colli.

TRANSVERSA' LIS DOR'SI, Transversospinalis, Multifidus Spinae, Lumbocervical portion of the Spinal (Ch.), (Transverso-spinalis Lumbo'rum, Transversospinalis Dor'si, Transversospinalis Col'li), Musculus sacer, Spinales et transversales lumbo'rum, Semispinalis inter'nus sive Transverso-spinalis col'li pars inter'na (Winslow), Lombodorsi-spinal, &c., (F.) Transversaire épineux. This muscle, usually called, by English anatomists, Multifidus spinae, and including all the Transversospinales, is situate in the vertebral gutters extending from the posterior parts of the sacrum to the second cervical vertebra. It is thicker in the neck and loins than in the back and behind the sacrum. Its use is to straighten the vertebral column, and to impress upon it a slight rotary motion.

TRANSVERSA' LIS FA'CIEI, see Artery and Temporal — t. Nasi, Compressor naris.

Transversa'rius, Transverse.

Trans'verse, Transver'sus, Transversa'lis, Transversa'rius, (F.) Transverse, Transversaire, (from trans, 'across,' and vertere, versum, 'to turn,') That which runs across: also, that which relates to the transverse processes of the vertebrae.

TRANS'VERSE AR'TERY OF THE FACE arises from the temporal; passes transversely across the face, in front of the condyle of the lower jaw, and gives its branches to the different muscles of the cheek.

TRANS'VERSE FIS'SURE, see Liver — t. Fossa, see Liver — t. Ligament of the Atlas, Annular ligament.

TRANS'VERSE PERINE'AL AR'TERY, Urethrobular (Ch.), is given off from the upper branch of the internal pudic; and passes inwards and forwards above the transversus perineæ muscles, as far as the bulb of the urethra, into which it dips, subdividing into numerous branches.

TRANS'VERSE PERINE'AL MUS'CLE, Transversus perineæ.

TRANS'VERSE PROC'ESSES OF THE VER'TEBRÆ, Diapophyses of Owen, (F.) Apophyses transverses des vertèbres, are the bony eminences that jut out transversely and posteriorly from the sides of the vertebrae.

TRANS'VERSE SU'TURE, Sutu'ra transversa'lis, runs across the face, and sinks into the orbit; joining the bones of the skull to those of the face, but with so many irregularities and interruptions, that it can scarcely be recognized as a suture.

Transverse, Transverse — t. de l'Abdomen, Transversalis abdominis — t. de l'Oricule, Transversus auris — t. du Périnée, Transversus perineæ.

Transversospinal, Semispinalis colli, Semispinalis dorsi — t. Spinalis, Transversalis dorsi — t. Spinalis colli, Semispinalis colli — t. Spinalis dorsi, Semispinalis dorsi.

Transver'sus, Transverse.

TRANSVER'SUS AUR'IS, Transversus Auric'ulæ,

(F.) Transverse de l'Oricule (Ch.), Transversal de la Conque, is often wanting. A muscular ligament formed of some transverse fibres, situate semicircularly behind the projection of the helix which divides the concha into two portions.

TRANSVER'SUS PEC'TORIS, Triangularis sterni.

TRANSVER'SUS PE'DIS, Scandula'rius, (F.) Transversal des Orteils, Métatarso-sous-phalangien transversal du premier orteil (Chaussier). A muscle which arises by fleshy slips from the heads of the metatarsal bones of the three outer toes. Its tendon is inserted into the base of the first phalanx of the greater toe, being blended with that of the adductor pollicis.

TRANSVER'SUS PERINÆ'I, Leva'tor Ani par'vus, Transverse perine'al muscle, (F.) Ischio-périnéal (Ch.), Transverse du Périnée, is placed at the posterior part of the perinæum. It is thin, triangular, and situate transversely. Its external extremity is attached to the ramus and tuberosity of the ischium: its inner extremity is confounded with its fellow of the opposite side, and with the anterior part of the sphincter ani and posterior part of the bulbocavernosus. The use of this muscle is, to compress the urethra, and to support the rectum and bladder. To a fasciculus of this muscle, Santorini has given the name Eleva'tor seu Ejacula'tor Ure'thræ.

TRANSVER'SUS PERINÆ'I AL'TER, Prostat'icus infe'rior. A small muscle, which occasionally accompanies the last.

TRANSVER'SUS PROSTATÆ, Compressor prostatae.

TRA'PA NA'TANS, Trib'alis, (F.) Macre flottante, Noix ou Châtaigne d'Eau. Ord. Onagraceæ. Sex. Syst. Tetrandria Monogynia. The plant which affords the Nuc'es aquat'icæ, Trib'uli aquat'ici, Caltrops. The nut is considered nutrient and demulcent, and is said to be useful in diarrhoea from abrasion of the bowels, and in calculus. A poultice is sometimes made of it to discuss hard and indolent tumors.

TRA'PEZA, (τραπέζα), Mensa.

TRA'PEZE, Trapezium, Trapezium.

TRA'PEZIUM OS, (τραπέζιον, 'a trapezium.') So called from its shape: Os multan'gulum seu polygo'num majus, (F.) Os trapèze. The first bone of the second row of the carpus. It is articulated above with the scaphoides; below, with the first bone of the metacarpus; within, with the trapezoides and second metacarpal bone. Anteriorly, posteriorly, and externally, it gives attachment to ligaments.

TRA'PEZIUS, Cuculla'ris, (F.) Dorso-susacromien (Ch.), Trapèze, Capuchon. A muscle, seated at the posterior part of the neck and shoulder, and at the upper part of the back. It has the shape of a trapezium; is attached, on the one hand, to the inner third of the upper curved line of the occipital bone; to the posterior cervical ligament; to the spinous processes of the seventh cervical vertebra; and of all the dorsal vertebrae; and, on the other hand, to the spine of the scapula; the acromion and the outer third of the posterior margin of the clavicle. Its upper fibres are situate obliquely downwards and outwards; the transverse and inferior, obliquely outwards and inwards. This muscle elevates the shoulder; carries it backwards, or depresses it, according as its upper, middle, or lower fibres contract separately. It straightens the head, also, and inclines it to one side.

TRA'PEZOID, (τραπέζιον, 'a trapezium,' and ειδος, 'a shape or resemblance,') Trapezoides.

TRA'PEZOID LIG'AMENT, Ligamentum trapezoï'des. The anterior part of the coracoclavicular ligament. It is a very strong fibrous fasciculus, which has the shape of a trapezium, and is situate obliquely between the acromion process and clavicle.

TRAPEZOÏ'DES OS, Os multan'gulum seu polygo'num minus seu pyramida'lē car'pi. The second bone of the second row of the carpus — so called from its shape. It is smaller than the trapezium, on the inside of which it is situate. It is articulated, above, with the os naviculare; below, with the second metacarpal bone; on the outside, with the trapezium; and internally, with the magnum. Anteriorly and posteriorly, it affords attachment to ligaments.

TRAPPIS'tine, (after the monks of La Trappe,) see Arquebusade, Eau d'.

TRAUBE'S (after Traube, who described them) Curves. A term applied by physiologists to rhythmical variations of arterial pressure occurring in animals that have been subjected to the action of curara, after total cessation of respiratory movements and section of both vagi.

TRAUBENKUR, Grape cure.

TRAULIS'mus, (τραυλισμος), see Balbuties, and Blæsitas.

TRAUL'OTES, (τραυλοτης), see Blæsitas.

TRAU'ma, gen. Trau'matis, (τραυμα, gen. τραυματος), Wound.

TRAUMAT'IC, Traumat'icus, Vulnera'rius, Vulnerary, (F.) Traumatique, (τραυματικός, from trauma.) Anything relating to a wound or injury; as traumatic affections of the skin, — pernio, parasitic diseases, &c.

TRAUMAT'ICA, Detergents, Vulneraries.

TRAUMATICINE, (from trauma), Liquor guttæ perchæ.

TRAUMAT'ICUS, Traumatic, Vulnerary.

TRAU'mATISM, Traumatism'us, (F.) Traumatisme. The condition of the organism occasioned by a grave wound. The Trau'matism of Labor includes lesions arising in the course of parturition, as laceration of the os and vagina, &c.

TRAUMATOCOMI'UM, (trauma, and κομω, 'I take care of,') A hospital for the reception of the wounded.

TRAUMATOPNŒ'a, (trauma, and πνω, 'I breathe,') A condition met with in wounds of the lung and pleura, in which the air passes in and out the wound during respiration.

TRAUMATOP'YRA, Fe'bris traumat'ica, (trauma, and πυρ, 'fever,') A wound fever, or fever consecutive to a wound.

TRAV'ail, ([F.] travailler, 'to labor,') Parturition.

TRAVAIL d'Enfant, 'child labor,' Parturition.

TRAV'eller's Joy, Clematis vitalba.

TREAD, Cicatricula — t. of the Cock, Molecule.

TREAT'ment, (from [L.] tractare, [F.] traiter, 'to treat,') Curatio.

TREAT'MENT, DRY. One in which the patient is almost wholly, if not wholly, interdicted from the alimentary use of fluids; a valuable modus medendi in inflammatory and hemorrhagic conditions.

TREE, Elk, Andromeda arborea — t. of Heaven, Ailanthus glandulosa — t. of Life, Thuya occidentalis — t. Sour, Andromeda arborea.

TREEAK FAROOK. A native nostrum, used in India for beriberi. Its composition is unknown. It is a thick extract into which some terebinthinate enters, and is said, by regular practitioners in India, who have used it, to subdue the pulse.

TRÈSTE Aponévrotique, Centre, phrenic, (from [L.] trifolium, from tri, and folium, 'a leaf,') Menyanthes trifoliata — t. d'Eau, Menyanthes trifoliata — t. des Marais, Menyanthes trifoliata.

TRE'ma, gen. Tre'matis, (τρημα), Foramen, Vulva.

TREMBLEMENT, Tremor — t. Métallique, see Tremor.

Trem'bles, Milksickness.

Trem'bling, Tremor—t. Fevers, Intermittent fever—t. Mercuriel, Palsy, mercurial.

TREM'BLING, Se'nile, Chore'a senilis. Involuntary but uniform contractions of muscles, occurring over a limited space, and succeeding each other with excessive rapidity, in old persons generally.

Tremel'la Auric'ula Ju'dæ, (from tremere, 'to tremble,') Peziza auricula.

Tre'mor, Trepida'tio, Syn'clonus Tre'mor, Tro'mospas'mus, Tro'mus, Trem'bling, (F.) Tremblement, (from tremere, 'to tremble,') Involuntary agitation of the body, or of some part of it, without any obstacle to voluntary motion. It depends, generally, upon debility of the muscular, or of the nervous system; and, hence, is observed in convalescence, and in typhoid affections. It occurs, also, in old people; in hard drinkers; and in workers in certain metals, as mercury and lead. In the last case, it is called Tremor metallicus seu metallurgorum, Paral'ysis ag'itans metal'lica, Rheumatis'mus metallicus, Metall'ic sha'king palsy, (F.) Tremblement métallique. Tremor seems to resemble paralysis more than convulsion. See Palsy, mercurial, Paralysis agitans, and Pavitatio.

TRE'MOR AR'TUUM, Paralysis agitans—t. Coactus, Paralysis agitans—t. Cordis, Hippus, Palpitation—t. ab Hydrargyro, Palsy, mercurial—t. Lead, Palsy, lead—t. Mercurial, Palsy, mercurial—t. Trepan', Trep'anum, (τρύπανον,) Try'panon, Trip'anon, Terebell'a, Peret'rium, Peret'rium, Ser'ra versatilis, Chænic'is, Chænic'ion, Ter'ebra, Ter'etron, Ter'etrium, Vertib'ulum, (F.) Trépan, (from τρίπω, 'I turn,' or from τρυπώω, 'I perforate,') A surgical instrument resembling a wimble, and worked in the same manner. It is used for removing portions of bone, and particularly of the bones of the skull. The term trepan is given more particularly to the part of the instrument that makes the perforation. The handle is so constructed as to receive different bits,—as the crown, the Trépan perforatif or Perit'rium, the T. exfoliatif or Desquamato'rium trepanum, and the T. abaptis'ta. 'To trepan' is to use the trepan.

In Great Britain and the United States this instrument has been superseded by the trephine, which is more manageable.

Trepana'tio, Trepanning.

Trépanation, Trepanning.

Trepang', Biche de mer.

Trepan'ning, Terebra'tio, Anatre'sis, Cephalotype'sis, Craniotype'sis, Trepana'tio, Trype'sis, Tre'sis, Pri'sis, Pri'smus, Fora'tio, (F.) Trépanation. The methodical application of the trepan.

Trep'anum, Trepan.

Trephine', (from τρίπω, 'I turn,') The instrument which has replaced the trepan in some countries. It consists of a simple, cylindrical saw, with a handle placed transversely like that of a gimlet, and from the centre of the circle, described by the teeth of the saw, a sharp little perforator projects, called the Centrepin. The centrepin is capable of being removed, at the surgeon's option, by means of a key for the purpose. It is used to fix the instrument until the teeth of the saw have made a circular groove, sufficiently deep for it to work steadily. The pin must then be removed. Sometimes the pin is made to slide up and down, and to be fixed in any position, by means of a screw. See Trepan. 'To trephine' is to use the trephine.

Trepida'tio, (trepidare, trepidatum, 'to be agitated,') Tremor—t. Cordis, Cardiotromus.

Trépied (tripod) Cœliaque, see Cœliac artery—t. Vital, Tripod, vital.

Trepon'do, (tres, 'three,' and pondus, 'a pound,') A weight of three pounds.

Tre'sis, (τρῖσις, from τρίω, 'I bore,') Properly, a perforation. A wound. A forcible solution of continuity in a soft part, commencing externally. A genus in the nosology of Good.

TRE'SIS, Trepanning, Wound—t. Causis, Burn—t. Punctura, Puncture—t. Vulnus, Wound—t. Vulnus laceratum, see Laceration—t. Vulnus simplex, Cut.

Tressaillement, (trans, 'beyond,' and salio, 'I leap,') Shuddering.

Tresso'ria, (low Latin,) Episi'on. A term formerly applied to the hair covering the mons veneris, the absence of which has, by the vulgar, been esteemed a matter of reproach.

Tri, (τρί,) in composition, three.

Tri'acle (old E.), Molasses.

Tri'al, Beset'ting, Masturbation.

TRI'AL BY BIER'RIGHT. An ordeal, founded on a superstition formerly prevalent, that the wounds of a murdered person would bleed afresh if the body were touched ever so lightly, in any part, by the murderer.

Tri'angle, Carot'id, see Cervical triangles.

TRI'ANGLE OF HESS'ELBACH. A triangular interval on the posterior aspect of the abdominal wall, through which direct inguinal hernia finds its way, and the sides of which are formed by the epigastric artery, and the margin of the rectus muscle; and the base by Poupart's ligament.

Triangle Médullaire, (tri, and angulus, 'an angle,') Fornix.

TRI'ANGLE, OCCIP'ITAL, see Cervical triangles.

TRI'ANGLE OF SCAR'PA. A triangular depression in the upper part of the thigh, the base of which is formed by Poupart's ligament; the outer side by the tendon of the psoas and iliacus muscles, and the sartorius; and the inner side by the pectineus and adductor longus. Through the centre of this hollow, the femoral artery runs, with the femoral vein internal to it.

TRI'ANGLE, SUBCLA'VIAN, see Cervical triangles—t. Submaxillary, see Cervical triangles—t. Vesical, see Urinary bladder.

Tri'angles, Cer'vical, see Cervical.

Triangular, Trigo'nos, Triangula'ris, (F.) Triangulaire. That which has three angles.

TRIANGULAR OF INFRAPU'BIAN LIG'AMENT, Ligamentum triangula'rè seu infrapub'ianum, is a ligamentous fascia with short fibres, situate transversely beneath the symphysis pubis, which it strengthens. Also, a ligament extending from the coracoid to the acromial process of the scapula.

Triangula'ris, Depressor anguli oris—t. Coccygis, Coccygeus—t. Nasi, Compressor naris.

TRIANGULA'RIS STER'NI, Sternocostal (Ch.), Pectoralis inter'nus, Transver'sus pec'toris. A muscle situate at the anterior and inner part of the chest, behind the cartilages of the ribs. It has the shape of a lengthened triangle, the base of which is directed downwards. It is attached to the posterior, lateral, and inferior part of the sternum, whence its fibres pass upwards and outwards, and terminate by as many distinct digitations at the cartilages of the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th true ribs. This muscle depresses the ribs and contributes to expiration.

Tri'badism, see Tribas.

Trib'alus, (τρίβαλος,) Trapa natans.

Trib'as, gen. Tri'badis, (τρίβας,) (F.) Tribade, (from τρίβω, 'I rub,') Fric'trix, Frica'trix, Futu'trix, Mas'cula, Subagita'trix, Subigita'trix, Ete'ris'tria. A female whose clitoris is so large as to cause her to be regarded as a hermaphrodite. One who acts as a male with another female or practises tribadism.

Triba'sic, (from tri, and basis,) see Salt.

Trib'uli Aquat'ici, (pl. of tribulus, from τρίβαλος,) see Trapa natans.

Tri'cæ, (from τριξ, gen. τριχος, 'a hair,') Plica — t. Incuborum, Plica — t. Seroforum, Plica.

Trica'go, gen. Tricag'ginis, Teucrium chamædrys.

Tricauda'lis, (tri, and cauda, 'a tail,') Retrahens auris.

Triceph'alus, (tri, and κεφαλη, 'head,') A monster with three heads.

Tri'ceps, gen. Tricip'itis, (tri, and caput, 'head,') A name given to muscles that have three fleshy bundles at one of their extremities.

TRI'CEPS ADDUC'TOR FEM'ORIS. Under this appellation are comprehended three distinct muscles; Adductor brevis, A. longus, and A. magnus. See Adductor.

TRI'CEPS AUR'IS, Retrahens auris — t. Brachialis, Triceps extensor cubiti — t. Brachii, Triceps extensor cubiti — t. Crural, Triceps cruris.

TRI'CEPS CRU'RIS, Femoralis, (F.) Trifémoro-rotulien (Ch.), Crural, Trifémoro-tibi-rotulien, Triceps crural ou de la cuisse, is situate at the anterior, inner, and outer part of the thigh. It is formed of three bundles at its superior extremity, viz.: 1. A middle fasciculus, the Cruralis of most anatomists, Crure'us, Femore'us; see Cruralis. 2. An external fasciculus, the Vastus externus, Extensor cru'ris vastus seu externus. 3. An inner fasciculus, the Vastus internus. It is attached, above, to the anterior, inner, and outer surfaces of the femur, and to the two edges of the linea aspera, from the base of the trochanter to within four fingers' breadth of the knee. Below, it terminates by a large tendon, which is attached to the base and edges of the patella, as well as to the inner and outer tuberosities of the tibia. The triceps extends the leg on the thigh, and conversely.

Triceps de la Cuisse, Triceps cruris.

TRI'CEPS EXTEN'SOR CU'BITI. Tri'ceps brachialis seu bra'chii seu exten'sor, Extensor tri'ceps seu cu'biti, (F.) Scapulo-humero-olecranonien (Ch.), Triceps brachial. This muscle, which occupies all the posterior part of the os humeri, is described as two muscles by Douglas, and as three by Winslow. It arises by three heads. The first or long head — long head of the biceps externus of Douglas, Ancone'us ma'ior of Winslow — arises from the anterior extremity of the inferior costa of the scapula, near its neck, and below the origin of the teres minor. The second head, or short head of the biceps externus of Douglas, Ancone'us externus of Winslow, arises from the upper and outer part of the os humeri, at the base of the great tuberosity; and the third head, — Brachialis externus of Douglas, Ancone'us inter'nus of Winslow; — the shortest of the three, arises from the back part of the os humeri, behind the flat tendon of the latissimus dorsi. These three portions unite about the middle of the arm, so as to form one thick and powerful muscle, which is inserted at the upper part of the olecranon. It extends the forearm on the arm, and conversely.

TRI'CEPS MAG'NUS, Adductor magnus — t. Minor, Adductor longus femoris — t. Secundus, Adductor brevis — t. Suræ, see Gastrocnemii.

Tri'chæ Incubo'rum, (τριξ, gen. τριχος, 'a hair,' and incubi, 'the Fauns' [?],) Plica.

Trichangi'a, (tricho, and αγγια, 'vessels,') Capillary vessels.

Trichangiecta'sia, Angiecta'sia, Trichocir'sus, (tricho, αγγιον, 'a vessel,' and εκτασις, 'dilatation,') Morbid dilatation of the capillary vessels.

Trichatroph'ia, (tricho, and atrophia,) A disease of the hair, in which it becomes altered in structure, soft and brittle, with atrophy of the hair-bulb.

Trichaux'ë, Trichaux'is, (tricho, and αυξη, 'increase,') Increase in the quantity and size of the hair, without change of texture.

Trichaux'is, Trichauxe.

Triche'ra Arven'sis, (from τριξ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,') Scabiosa.

Trich'ia, (from τριξ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,') Entropion.

Trichi'asis, Trichio'sis, Tricho'sis, (from τριξ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,') Morbus pila'ris. This name has been given to several affections. 1. To a disease of the kidneys or bladder, in which filamentous substances, resembling hairs, are passed in the urine. This is also called Pilinic'tio. It must be regarded as a variety of Catar'rhus vesicæ. 2. To a painful swelling of the breasts, in childbed women, when the milk is excreted with difficulty; a disease attributed, by Aristotle, to a hair swallowed by accident, and carried to the breasts through the circulation. 3. To inversion of the eyelashes, Trichi'asis Cilio'rum. See Entropion. Trichi'asis Coac'ta is a matting and interlacing of hair, either from neglect and dirt, or in bedridden women and children.

TRICH'ASIS CILIO'RUM, see Trichiasis — t. Coacta, see Trichiasis — t. Lactea, Infarctus mammae lacteus.

Trichil'ia Emet'ica, Elcæja. A tree, Order, Meliaceæ, common on the mountains of Yemen and in Senegal. The fruit is used by the Arabs as an emetic. The ripe seeds are formed with sesamum oil into an ointment for the itch.

TRICHIL'IA TRIFOLIA'TA, a bush of Curaçoa, a decoction of the roots of which is used to promote abortion.

Trich'ina Spira'lis, (from τριξ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,' from its small size,) Pseudalius trich'ina. A small species of entozoa, Fam. Nematoidea, discovered in the muscles of voluntary motion. Trichinae consist of very minute cysts, of an oblong figure, having considerable resemblance, in size and color, to young pediculi, and are somewhat allied to the eels found in paste and vinegar. Küchenmeister regarded them as the primitive state of Trichocephalus dispar; but this has not been confirmed. When taken with the food, they multiply in the intestines and then migrate to the muscles. No symptoms have, as yet, been observed to be pathognomonic of their presence in the muscles. It would appear, however, that they may be the cause of the morbid phenomena produced by eating the flesh of animals in which they existed, and likewise of sausage poisoning (see Allantotoxium), and of the poisoning resulting from eating pork and ham. The condition thus induced has been called Trichini'asis, Trichini'tis, Trich'ina, Trich'inous or Trichin'atous disease. See Parasites and Worms.

Trichini'asis, see Trichina spiralis.

Trichini'tis, see Trichina spiralis.

Trichino'sis, (trichina, and osis,) see Trichina spiralis.

Trich'inous, Trichino'sus. Relating or appertaining to trichina, as trichinous disease, trichinous pork, &c.

Trichino'sis, see Parasites.

Trichio'sis, (from τριξ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,') Trichiasis — t. Distrix, Distrix.

Trichis'mus, Capilla'tio, Fissu'ra pila'ris. A capillary fracture, fissure, or crack.

Trichiu'ria, (tricho, and ουρα, 'tail,') Trichocephalus.

Trich'cho, (τριξ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,') in composition, hair.

Trichocéphale de l'Homme, Trichocephalus.

Trichoceph'alus, Trichoceph'alus dispar, (tricho, and κεφαλη, 'head,') Trichu'ris, T. vulga'ris seu intestinalis, As'caris trichu'ria, Trichin'ria, Trichoceph'alus seu Mustigo'des hom'inis, Long thread'worm, Whip'worm, (F.) Trichocéphale de l'homme. A worm, from an inch and a half to two inches long; the head acute; the body spirally involuted in the male, almost straight in the female. The trichocephalus dispar generally inhabits the cæcum and colon, and is rarely met with in the small intestines. It gives rise to no peculiar symptoms, and requires the usual anthelmintic treatment.

Trichocir'sus, (tricho, and κίρσος, 'a dilated vessel,') Trichangiectasia.

Trichocla'sia, (tricho, and κλάσις, 'fracture,') Trichocla'sis, Fragilitas Crin'ium. A breaking of the hair, giving it an appearance as if jointed.

Trichocla'sis, Trichoclasia.

Trichodyschroia, (tricho, and δυσχρωσία, 'bad or defective color,') Discoloration of the hair; alteration or variation of the natural pigment of the hair.

Trichog'enous, (tricho, and γεννάω, 'I generate,') Hair-forming; as a 'trichogenous remedy,'—one that promotes the growth of hair.

Trichol'abis, (τριχολαβίς, from tricho, and λαμβάνω, 'I seize hold of,') Madisterium.

Trichola'bium, (τριχολαβίον,) Madisterium.

Tricholog'ia, (tricho, and λέγω, 'I collect or pluck,') Carphologia. See Trichology.

Trichol'ogy, Tricholog'ia, (tricho, and λογος, 'a description,') A treatise on the hair.

Tricho'ma, gen. Trichom'atis, (from τριξ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,') Capillamentum, Plica.

Trichom'anes, (tricho, and μανός, 'thin,') Asplenium trichomanoides—t. Crenata, Asplenium trichomanoides.

Trichomaphyte, Trichomaphyton, (trichoma, 'plica,' and φυτον, 'a vegetable,') A cryptogamous growth, found in plica, and said, by some, to be its cause. Mycoderma plicæ.

Trichoma'tion, (τριχωματισμός,) Capillamentum.

Trichom'atose Hair, (from trichoma,) Plica.

Trichom'onas, gen. Trichomon'adis, Trichom'onad, (tricho, and μονάδ,) An animalcule found by M. Donné in the mucus of the vagina, where cleanliness had not been attended to, and to which he has given the name Trichom'onas vagina'lis. By some it is considered to be nothing more than ciliated epithelium separated from the uterus.

Trichom'yces Decal'vans, (tricho, and μύκης, 'fungus,') see Porrigo decalvans—t. Tonsurans, see Porrigo decalvans.

Trichono'sis, Porrigo—t. Cana, Canities—t. Furfuracea, Porrigo decalvans—t. Plica, Plica—t. Poliosis, Poliosis.

Trichono'sus, (tricho, and νόσος, 'disease,') A disease of the hair.

Trichopathi'a (tricho, and πάθος, 'affection,') Pli'ca, Plica Polonica.

Trichopath'io, (same etymon,.) Relating or appertaining to affections of the hair.

Trichophy'ia, Trichophyt'ica, (tricho, and φύω, 'to grow,') Remedies that promote the growth of the hair.

Trichophytie (F.), (tricho, and φυτον, 'a vegetable,') A cutaneous affection produced by the trichophyton, as Trichophytie Syco'sique, or Tinea Syco'sis.

Trichophyton, (tricho, and φυτον, 'a vegetable,') see Plica—t. Decalvans, see Porrigo decalvans—t. Sporuloides, see Fungus, Parasites, and Plica—t. Tonsurans, see Fungus and Porrigo decalvans.

Trichorrhœ'a, (tricho, and ρῶω, 'I flow,') Deflu'vium Capillo'rum. A simple fall of the hair from any cause.

Trichosan'thes Ama'ra, (tricho, and αμάρ, 'a flower, from the ciliated corollæ,') Order, Cucurbitaceæ. A plant of India; the seeds are bitter and astringent, sometimes emetic. In Jamaica, it is considered to be a poison, and is used for killing rats.

TRICHOSAN'THES CORDA'TA. The root is used by the natives of India as a substitute for calumba root.

TRICHOSAN'THES CUCUMER'INA. The fruit is considered in India to be anthelmintic.

TRICHOSAN'THES INC'ISA, Gashed Trichosanthes, of the forests of India. The fruit is esteemed to be poisonous. Pounded and intimately blended with coconut oil, it is used in India as an application to offensive sores of the ears, and to ozaena.

TRICHOSAN'THES VILLO'SA, of Java. The fruit acts like colocynth.

Trichos'chisis, (tricho, and σχίζω, 'I split,') Schizotrichia.

Tricho'sis, Pila'rē ma'lum, (from τριξ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,' and osis,) Morbid organization or deficiency of hair. A genus in the system of Good.

TRICHO'SIS, Entropion, Trichiasis—t. Area, Porrigo decalvans—t. Athrix, Alopecia—t. Distrix, Distrix—t. Furfuracea, Porrigo furfurans—t. Hirsuties, Hirsuties—t. Plica, Plica—t. Poliosis, Poliosis—t. Setosa, Hystriasis.

Trichosyphilo'sis, (tricho, and syphilis,) Syphilo'ma of the Hair. A change in the structure of the hair, the shaft of which becomes swollen and dark-colored, drying up and splitting or breaking off;—a result of the syphilitic taint.

Trichothe'cium, (tricho, and θήκη, 'a place of deposit,') A form of fungus, giving rise to a vegetable parasitic disease of the hair.

Tricho'ton, (τριχωτος, 'covered with hair,') Scalp.

Trichu'ris, (tricho, and ουρα, 'a tail,') Trichocephalus.

Triclisper'ma (gen. Triclisper'matis) Grandiflo'ra, (τριξ, 'hair,' and σπέρμα, 'seed,') Polygala paucifolia.

Tricoptilose (F.), (τριξ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,' and πτερος, 'a feather,') A diseased condition of the hair characterized by a longitudinal division similar to the barbs of a feather, and by dryness, brittleness, &c.

Tricrot'io, see Pulse, tricrotic.

Tric'rotous, see Pulse, tricrotic.

Tricus'pid, Tricus'pis, Tricus'pida'lis, Tricus'pida'tus, (tri, and cuspidis, gen. cuspidis, 'a cusp, a point,') That which has three points.

TRICUS'PID VALVES, Val'vule tricus'pides seu triglo'chines seu tricus'pides, are three triangular valvular duplicatures, formed by the inner membrane of the right cavities of the heart, around the orifice by which the auricle communicates with the ventricle. The elongated and pointed top of each of these valves is continuous with the chordæ tendinæ, which set out from the columnæ carneæ of the heart. These valves are depressed to allow the blood to flow from the auricle into the ventricle; and are raised to prevent its reflux into the auricle.

Tricus'pis, gen. Tricus'pidis, Tricuspid.

Trienceph'alus, Trienceph'alus, (F.) Trienceph'ale, Triocéphale, (tri, and εγκεφαλος, 'the encephalon,') A monster wanting three cephalic organs of sense—smell, hearing, and vision. See Aprosopia.

Tri'ens, Un'ciæ quat'uor. (From tri, 'three,') The third part of a pound. Four ounces, troy.

Trifa'cial, Trigemini.

Trifemoro-rotulien, Triceps cruris—t. Tibi-rotulien, Triceps cruris.

Trifo'lium Aceto'sum, (tri, and folium, 'a leaf,') Oxalis acetosella—t. Aquaticum, Menyanthes trifoliata—t. Aureum, Hepatica triloba—t. Cervinum, Eupatorium cannabinum—t. Fibri-num, Menyanthes trifoliata—t. Hepaticum, Hepatica triloba.

TRIFO'LIUM MELILO'TUS OFFICINA'LIS, T. officina'lē seu odora'tum seu caballi'nium; (from tri, and folium, 'a leaf;') Melilotus, Melilotus citrina, Lotus sylvestris, Ser'tula Camp'na, Coro'na regia, Com'mon melilot, (F.) Métilot. Ord. Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Diadelphia Decandria. The infusion or distilled water of this plant has been employed in cases of ophthalmia. It has also been used in fomentations, gylsters, &c.

TRIFOLIUM OFFICINALE, T. melilotus officinalis — t. Paludosum, Menyanthes trifoliata — t. Palustre, Menyanthes trifoliata.

Trigas'tric, Trigas'tricus, Triven'ter, (tri, and γαστρον, 'belly.') That which has three bellies. An epithet for muscles so circumstanced.

Trigem'ini, Tergem'ini, (tri, and gem'inus, 'double;') 'threefold,' 'triplets.') The fifth pair of nerves, Nervi divisi seu gustato'rii, Nervus quintus seu tremellus seu mix'tus seu sympatheticus medius seu sympathicus medius seu anony-mus seu innomina'tus, Par trigem'inum seu quin'tum nervorum cerebr'alium seu tri'um funiculo-rum, Trifa'cial or Trigem'inal nerve, (F.) Nervus gustatif innominé, Nervus à trois cordes, Nervus trijumeau. This nerve arises below the tuber annulare by one large posterior root from the corpora restiformia, and by two small anterior roots from the corpora olivaria, whence, proceeding forwards to the side of the sella Turcica, the filaments composing the large root form a ganglion — the Gasserian. Emerging from this ganglion, the filaments, of which the large root consists, form, with those constituting the small roots, and which had not passed through the ganglion, two flattened trunks, each of which is soon divided into three branches, in such a manner, however, that the first or ophthalmic branch, and the second or upper maxillary, are composed exclusively of the filaments that arose from the corpora restiformia and passed through the Gasserian ganglion; while the third or lower maxillary branch is composed in part of those filaments, and in part of those that arose from the corpora olivaria, and passed on one side of the ganglion without going through it. The whole of the first and second branches, and a part of the third are sensorious nerves, while the remaining part of the third — the manducatory or masticatory — is entirely motiferous, and passes to the pterygoid and other muscles concerned in mastication.

Trigo'na Cervica'lia, Cervical triangles.

Trigone Cerebral, (τρικων, 'a triangle,') Fornix — t. Vesical, see Urinary bladder.

Trigone'la Fœ'num, T. Fœ'num Græ'cum, (dim. of τρικων, 'a triangle,' from the shape of its flower,) Fœ'ugreek, Fœ'ugreek, Fœ'num Græ'cum, Bu'cceras, B. Fœ'num Græ'cum, Car'phos, Ægoc'eras, (F.) Fœ'ugrec, Sénégrain. Ord. Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Diadelphia Decandria. A native of the south of France. The seeds have a strong, disagreeable smell, and an unctuous, farinaceous taste; accompanied by a slight bitterness. They are chiefly used in poultices.

Trigo'nos, (τρικωνος,) Triangular.

Trigo'num Lieutaud'i, Urinary bladder — t. Olfactorium, 'olfactory triangle,' see Mam-millary eminence — t. Vesicae, see Urinary bladder.

Trigo'nus Lieutaud'i, (τρικωνος,) see Urinary bladder — t. Vesicae, see Urinary bladder.

Trijumeaux, (tri, and jumeau, 'a twin,') Trigemini.

Trilabe, Pince à trois branches. A lithotrite consisting of a sheath containing a stem with three branches at its vesical end, and an independent branch in the centre.

Tril'ium Latifo'lium, (from triliz, 'triple,' its parts being chiefly in threes,) Broadleaf Bethroot, Bethroot, Rattlesnake root, Wake'robin, Cough'root, Indian Balm, Ground Lil'y, Jew's Harp, Indian Sham'rock, Pariswort, Truelove. Ord. Trilliacæ. Sex. Syst. Hexandria Trigynia.

A plant peculiar to North America, which blossoms in the spring. The root is astringent.

There are many species of Trillium, all of which possess the same properties.

Trimeth'ylamin, Trimethyl'ia. A volatile liquid prepared from the same source as propylamin, and isomeric with it. It is obtained from decomposition of certain bodies, as fish, and also from ergot, from certain weeds, &c. It is said to be efficacious in the treatment of acute articular rheumatism.

Trintanelle Malherbe, Passerina tartonraira.

Triocéphale, Trioccephalus.

Triocéphalia, Aprosopia, see Triencephalus.

Triocéphalus, Triencephalus.

Trior'chis, gen. Trior'chidis, (tri, and ορχις, 'a testicle,') One who has three testicles.

Triosteospermum, Triosteum.

Triosteum, T. perfoliatum seu majus, (tri, and οστέον, 'a bone,' in allusion to the three bony nuts,) Triosteospermum, Bastard Ipecacuan'ha, Fever root, Feverwort, Tinker's weed, Horse gin'seng or gentian, Ipecac, Wild Coffee, White gin'seng, Gentian, White Gentian, Sweet Bitter. Indigenous; Ord. Caprifoliaceæ. In very large doses, Triosteum (Ph. U. S.) proves emetic. It is a good cathartic, in doses of twenty or thirty grains. It sometimes operates as a diuretic.

Triosteum Angustifolium, T. minus, has similar virtues.

Tripe de Roche, 'rock tripe.' Different lichens — Rock lichen, Stone moss — of the species Gyrophora, inhabiting the Arctic regions of America, bear this name. They are eaten as food by the hunters.

Triphar'macum, (τρίφαρμακον, from tri, and φάρμακον, 'a medicine,') A medicine composed of three ingredients.

Triple Phos'phate, see Calculi, urinary.

Triplet, (triplex, 'triple,') One of three children born at the same accouchement or gestation. Also, relating to triplets — as a 'triplet conception.'

TRIPLET MON'STERS, Mon'stra trip'lica seu trigem'ina, are such as have parts of the body tripled. They are rare.

Tri'pod, Vi'tal, (τρίπους, from tri, and πους, gen. podos, 'foot,') (F.) Trépied vital. The heart, lungs, and brain have been so called, as their united action is necessary for the maintenance of life.

Trips'is, (τρίψις,) Contusio, Trituration.

Tripudia'tio Spas'tica, (tripudiare, tripudia-tum, 'to leap, to dance,') Chorea.

Tri'pus ('tripod') Cœli'acus seu Halle'ri, see Cœliac artery.

Trique-madame, Sedum album.

Triqu'etra Os'sa, (triquetrum, 'three-cornered,') Wormiana ossa.

Triqu'etrum (Os), Cuneiform (bone).

Tris'mus, (τρίσμος, from τρίσ, '1 gnash,') En-tasia seu Tonus Trismus, Capis'trum, Masticatory spasm of the face, Lock'ed Jaw, Spas'mus seu Rigor seu Tetanus maxillæ inferioris, Gnathospas'mus, Stomatospas'mus, (F.) Mal de Machoire. Spastic closure of the under jaw, a partial tetanus, arising from erethism of the masticatory or motor branch of the fifth pair of nerves. Cullen makes two varieties — T. nascentium seu neonatorum, Nineday fits, (F.) Sarrète, attacking infants during two weeks from birth, and T. traumaticus, originating from a wound.

In the West Indies, and in South America, Trismus nascentium is called Seven days' disease, (F.) Maladie de sept Jours.

TRISMUS CAPISTRA'TUS, Brédissure — t. Catarrhalis maxillaris, Neuralgia maxillaris — t. Clonicus, Neuralgia faciei — t. Cynicus, see Canine laugh — t. Diastrophe Sauvagesii, Paralysis, Bell's — t. Dolorificus, Neuralgia faciei — t. Maxillaris, Neuralgia faciei — t. Nascentium, see Trismus — t. Neonatorum, see Trismus — t. Sardonicus, Risus sardonicus.

Trispermum, (tri, and σπέρμα, 'a grain or seed.') An ancient cataplasm, consisting of three seeds — cumin, bay, and smallage.

Trisplanchnia, (tri, and σπλῆγχνον, 'viscus,') Cholera.

Trisplanchnic, Trisplanchnicus, (F.) Trisplanchnique. That which relates to the viscera of the great cavities.

TRISPLANCHNIC NERVE, Nervus trisplanchnicus seu sympatheticus magnus seu sympathicus seu ganglionicus seu vasomotorius, (F.) Nervus sympathicus ou grand sympathique; Great sympathetic, Intercostal, Ganglionic or Vertebral nerve, Nerve of organic life — named by Bichat the organic nervous system, in opposition to the other nervous parts, called the animal nervous system. Gall terms it the nervous system of the automatic functions. It has also been called the ganglionic nervous system. It is termed Trisplanchnic because it distributes its branches to the organs in the three great splanchnic cavities — the cranium, chest, and abdomen. It is composed of a series of ganglia, united by intermediate branches, and passing along the side of the spine to the lowest part of the trunk, communicating by a branch with each of the thirty pairs of spinal nerves and several of the cerebral nerves, and detaching nerves from its several ganglia which accompany the arteries, and are distributed particularly to the organs of involuntary functions. At its upper part it is concealed in the canalis caroticus and cavernous sinus, and is joined there by a branch of the 6th pair of nerves and by a twig from the Vidian nerve of the 5th pair. In passing down by the side of the spine, it forms three ganglia in the neck — the superior, middle (thyroid ganglion), and inferior (vertebral ganglion); 12 in the back — the thoracic; 5 in the loins — the lumbar; and three or four sacral. When it reaches the coccyx it unites with its fellow from the opposite side, forming a small ganglion — the coccygeal ganglion impar, azygous ganglion. Meckel divides it into two portions — 1. The central ganglia or central part, composed of the numerous ganglionic plexuses in the abdomen, the centre of which is the semilunar and solar plexuses. 2. The external ganglia, limitrophes, or external part, which comprise the series of ganglia situate at the sides of the spine, from the base of the cranium to the sacrum. The great sympathetic seems to form a distinct nervous system, destined for the organs of involuntary motion; for although communicating with both brain and spinal marrow, it does not seem to be immediately under the influence of either. Its special functions are not yet, however, well understood, and are the subject — as they have always been — of much interesting investigation.

Trisplanchnitis, (trisplanchnic, and itis.) Cholera (spasmodic).

Trissa'go, gen. Trissag'inis, Teucrium chamaedrys — t. Palustris, Teucrium scordium.

Tristemia'nia, (triste, 'sad,' and mania), Melancholy.

Trister'nal. Béchard has given this name to the third bony portion of the sternum — that which corresponds to the third intercostal space.

Tristit'ia, (from tristis, 'sad,') Athymia, Mœror.

Tritæophy'a America'na, Fever, yellow.

Tritæophyes, Tritæoph'ya, (τρίταφης, from tritæus, and φων, 'form.') A fever whose type approaches the tertian. Sauvages gave the name Tritæophya Vratislavien'sis to an epidemic which broke out in the Prussian army at Breslau, in the middle of the last century.

Tritæ'us, (τρίταφης,) Tertian fever.

Triticum Æstivum, (from terere, tritum, 'to thrash,') T. cereal'le, seu Cevallos seu compactum seu erina'ceum seu Gaertneria'num seu Linna'num seu praino'sum, Sum'merwheat, and TRITICUM HYBERNUM seu Glan'cum seu Muticum seu Sic'ulum, Win'terwheat, (F.) Froment. Ord. Gramineæ. Sex. Syst. Triandria Digynia. From these plants our wheaten flour is obtained, by grinding the seeds — Wheat, Py'rus, Fru'mentum — and to them we are indebted for our bread and pastry. The nutritive properties of wheaten flour are so well known as not to need comment.

Bread, Pa'nis, (F.) Pain, mixed with milk, constitutes the ordinary emollient poultice; and the crumbs of bread, M'æ pa'nis, are a common excipient for pills and boluses.

M'ca Pa'nis is officinal in the British Pharmacopœia (1867), and is used as an ingredient of Cataplasma carbonis.

TRITICUM ARVEN'SE, T. repens — t. Cereale, T. æstivum — t. Cevallos, T. æstivum — t. Compactum, T. æstivum — t. Erinaceum, Triticum æstivum — t. Faginum, Polygonum fagopyrum — t. Gaertnerianum, T. æstivum — t. Glaucum, see T. æstivum and T. repens — t. Hybernum, see T. æstivum — t. Linnaeanum, T. æstivum — t. Muticum, see T. æstivum — t. Pruinosum, T. æstivum.

TRITICUM RE'PENS, T. arven'se seu glau'cum, Agropyrum revis'simum, Bro'mus gla'ber, Gra'men seu Gra'men can'num seu Dioscor'idis seu re'pens, Lolia'ceum radic'e repen'te, Grass, Dog'grass, Couch'grass, Quick'ens, Twiteh'grass, (Sc.) Ron-nachs, (F.) Chiendent. The roots are sweet, and possess aperient properties. They are said also to be diuretic.

TRITICUM SIC'ULUM, T. hybernum — t. Spelta, see Alica.

Tri'tio, (terere, tritum, 'to rub, to grind,') Contritio, Trituration.

Tri'ton Palus'tris, (from Τριτων, 'the sea deity,') see Ectozaa.

Trito'rium, (from terere, tritum, 'to wear away,') Infundibulum.

Tritu'ra, Contritio, Trituration.

Tritura'tion, Tritura'tio, Tritu'ra, Tri'tus, Tri'tio, Trip'sis, (terere, tritum, 'to rub, to grind,') The act of reducing a substance to powder. See Contritio.

Tri'tus, gen. Tritûs, Contritio, Trituration.

Triven'ter, gen. Triven'tris, (tri, and venter, 'belly,') Trigastic.

Tro'car, Tro'char, A'cus paracent'icus seu paracentet'ica seu tri'quetra vulga'ris, Paracent'icion, Paracentet'erion, (corrupted from the [F.] Trois-quarts or Trocart, 'three quarters,') so called from the triangular shape of the point — Tri'guetrum. An instrument used for evacuating fluids from cavities, particularly in ascites, hydrocele, &c. A trocar consists of a perforator or stylet and a canula, which is so adapted to the perforator, that when the puncture is made, both enter the wound with facility; after which, the stylet being withdrawn, the canula remains in the wound, and affords the fluid a ready passage outwards.

Trocart, Trocar.

Troch, (from τροχος, 'a wheel,') Trochiscus.

Trochan'ter, gen. Trochan'teris, Trokan'ter, Rota'tor, (from τροχῶν, 'I run or roll,') Anatomists have given the names great and little trochanter to two processes at the upper extremity of the femur. The great trochan'ter, glu'tus, is the one on the outside; the less is lower down and more internal. Both afford attachment to rotator muscles of the thigh, and hence their name. Chaussier, by the word trochanter, means the larger process; the smaller he calls trochantin.

Trochanter'ian, Trochanteria'nus, Trokanter'ian. That which belongs or relates to the great trochanter.

Trochantin'ian, Trokantin'ian, Trochantinia'-nus. That which belongs or relates to the trochantin or less trochanter.

Tro'char, Trocar.

Troches (pl. of trochē) of Bicarb'ionate of Soda, Trochisci sodæ bicarbonatis—t. of Bismuth, Trochisci bismuthi—t. of Carbonate of lime, Trochisci carbonatis calcis—t. of Catechu, Trochisci catechu—t. of Chalk, Trochisci carbonatis calcis—t. of Chlorate of potash, Trochisci potassæ chloratis—t. of Cubebs, Trochisci cubebæ—t. Nitre, Trochisci nitratis potassæ—t. of Peppermint, Trochisci menthiæ piperitæ—t. of Santonin, Trochisci santonini—t. of Tannic acid, Trochisci acidi tannici—t. of Tartaric acid, Trochisci acidi tartarici.

Troch'ia, (τροχία, 'the rut of a wheel,') Orbit.

Trochil'ia, (τροχίλια) Trochlea.

Trochin, (from τροχάειν, 'to turn,') Chaussier has given this name to the smaller of the tuberosities at the upper extremity of the os humeri; because it gives attachment to one of the rotator muscles of the arm—the subscapularis.

Trochin'ian, Trochinia'-nus. That which belongs or relates to the trochin.

Trochis'ci, (pl. of trochiscus,) see Trochiscus.

TROCHIS'CI ACA'CLÆ, Troches of Gum Arabic, (F.) Tablettes de Gomme Arabique. (Acac., \mathfrak{z} iv., Amyli, \mathfrak{z} j., Sacchar., lbj. Make into a mass with rose water, and form lozenges. Ph. E.) To allay cough.

TROCHIS'CI AC'IDI TAN'NICI, Tan'nic Acid or Tan'nin Lozenges. (Acid. tannic., gr. cccx., Tinct. tolut., \mathfrak{f} ss., Sacchar. purif., \mathfrak{z} xxv., Acaciæ pulv., \mathfrak{z} j., Mucilag. acaciæ, \mathfrak{f} ij., Aq. destillat., \mathfrak{f} ij. To be divided into 720 lozenges. Mix. Ph. B., 1867.) Each lozenge contains half a grain of tannic acid. The last edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia (1873) directs them to be made as follows: Acid. tannic., \mathfrak{z} j., Sacchar. pulv., \mathfrak{z} x., Tragacanth. pulv., gr. cxx., Aque aurant. flor., q. s. To be divided into 480 lozenges.

TROCHIS'CI AC'IDI TARTAR'ICI, Troches of Tartar'ic Ac'id. (Acid. tartar., \mathfrak{z} ij., Sacchar., \mathfrak{z} viii., Ol. limon., \mathfrak{m} x. Form into troches with mucilage. Ph. E.) Refrigerant and demulcent.

TROCHIS'CI AMMO'NIÆ, see T. pectorales—t. Beechii nigri, T. glycyrrhizæ glabræ.

TROCHIS'CI BISMUTHI, Bis'muth Lozenges. (Bismuth. alb., gr. 1440, Magnes. carb., \mathfrak{z} iv., Calcis carb. præcip., \mathfrak{z} vj., Sacchar. purif., \mathfrak{z} xxix., Acaciæ pulv., \mathfrak{z} j., Mucilag. acaciæ, \mathfrak{f} ij., Aque rosæ, q. s. To be divided into 720 lozenges. Ph. B., 1867.)

TROCHIS'CI CARBONA'TIS CAL'CIIS, T. e Cre'tæ, T. Cre'tæ, (Ph. U. S.,) Troches of Car'bonate of lime or chalk, Lozenges for the heart'burn, Tablet'æ ad ardo'rem ventriculi seu cardiac'gicæ seu ad so'dam. (Cret. præp., \mathfrak{z} iv., Acaciæ pulv., \mathfrak{z} j., Myrist. pulv., \mathfrak{z} j., Sacch. pulv., \mathfrak{z} vj. M. Form into troches with water. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Antacid and absorbent.

TROCHIS'CI CAT'ECU, Cat'echu Lozenges, (F.) Tablettes de Catechu. (Catechu pulv., gr. dccxx., Sacchar. purif., \mathfrak{z} xxv., Acaciæ pulv., \mathfrak{z} j., Mucilag. acaciæ, \mathfrak{f} ij., Aq. destillat., q. s. Mix, and divide into 720 lozenges. Ph. B., 1867.)

TROCHIS'CI E CRE'TÆ, T. carbonatis calcis—t. Cre'tæ, T. carbonatis calcis.

TROCHIS'CI CUBE'Æ, Troches of Cu'beb. (Oleoresin. cubeb., \mathfrak{f} ss., Ol. sassa., \mathfrak{f} ij., Glycyrrhiz. pulv., \mathfrak{z} iv., Acaciæ pulv., \mathfrak{z} ij., Sacchar. pulv., \mathfrak{z} ij., Syrup. tolutan., q. s. To be divided into 480 troches. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Excitant; in relaxed sorethroat, &c.

TROCHIS'CI seu PASTIL'LI EMETI'NÆ PECTORA'LES, Pec'toral Lozenges of Em'etine. (Sugar, \mathfrak{z} iv., Emetine, gr. xxxii. Form into lozenges of nine grains each.) One is a dose.

TROCHIS'CI ESCHAROT'ICI, Escharot'ic Troches. (Hydrag. oxymer., p. 8, Amyli, p. 16, Mucilag. tragac., q. s. Make into troches, to which a few drops of laudanum may be added. Ph. P.) Used in foul ulcers, to remove excrecences, &c.

TROCHIS'CI ESCHAROT'ICI DE MIN'IO. (Plumbi. oxid. rubr., p. 16, Hydrag. oxymer., p. 32, Mic. panis, p. 128, Aq. rosæ, q. s. Ph. P.) Used like the last.

TROCHIS'CI FER'RI REDAC'TI, Reduced Iron Lozenges. (Ferri redact., gr. dccxx., Sacchar. purificat. pulv., \mathfrak{z} xxv., Acaciæ pulv., \mathfrak{z} j., Mucilag. acaciæ, \mathfrak{f} ij., Aque destillat., \mathfrak{f} ij. vel. q. s. M. Ph. B., 1867.)

TROCHIS'CI FER'RI SUBCARBONA'TIS, Troches of Subcar'bonate of Iron. (Ferri subcarb., \mathfrak{z} v., Vanill., gr. xxx., Sacchar. in pulv., \mathfrak{z} xv., Mucilag. tragac., q. s. To be divided into 480 troches. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Tonic.

TROCHIS'CI GLYCYRRHI'ZÆ, T. G. Gla'bræ seu Be'chici nigri, Liq'uorice troches, Black pec'toral lozenges. (Ext. glyc. glabr., Gum. acac., aa p. j., Sacch. purif., p. ij. Dissolve in warm water; strain; evaporate, and form into troches. Ph. E.) Demulcent. To allay cough.

TROCHIS'CI GLYCYRRHI'ZÆ CUM O'PIO, T. Glycyrrhizæ et O'pii (Ph. U. S.) seu Theba'ici seu sedati'vo-balsam'ici seu pectora'les re'gis Dano'rum, Liq'uorice Troches with O'pium, Wis'tar's Lozenges. (Extract. opii in pulv., gr. xxiv., Glycyrrhiz. in pulv., \mathfrak{z} ij., Sacchar. in pulv., \mathfrak{z} ij., Acaciæ in pulv., \mathfrak{z} j., Ol. anisi, \mathfrak{m} xv. Make into 480 troches. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Demulcent and anodyne. An analogous formula is given in the British Pharmacopœia (1867), under the name Trochisci O'pii, Opium lozenges.

Spit'ta's Lozenges for coryza, hoarseness, and sorethroat, are composed as follows: Cubeb. recent. in pulv., \mathfrak{z} ij., Extract. glycyrrhiz., \mathfrak{z} j., Myroxyl., \mathfrak{z} j., Acaciæ, \mathfrak{z} iv., Syrup., q. s. Make into troches of ten grains each.

TROCHIS'CI GUMMO'SI, Gum Troches. (G. acac., p. v., Amyli, p. j., Sacch. pur., p. xij. Make up the troches with rose-water. Ph. E.) Demulcent.

TROCHIS'CI IPECACUAN'HÆ, Ipecacuan'ha Lozenges, Troches of Ipecacuan'ha, (F.) Tablettes d'Ipecacuan'ha. (Ipecacuanh. in pulv., gr. cxx., Sacchar. in pulv., \mathfrak{z} viii., Marante in pulv., \mathfrak{z} ij., Tragacanth. in pulv., gr. cxx., Syrup. aurant. cort., q. s. Make into 480 troches. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

TROCHIS'CI LACTUCA'RII, Troches of Lactuca'rium. (Prepared with Lactucarium in the same proportion and manner as the opium lozenges. Ph. E.) Each lozenge contains between the fifth and sixth of a grain of lactucarium.

TROCHIS'CI MAGNE'SIÆ, Troches of Magne'sia. (Magnes., \mathfrak{z} ij., Sacchar. pulv., \mathfrak{z} ix., Myrist. pulv., \mathfrak{z} j., Mucilag. tragacanth., q. s. Make into 480 troches. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Useful in acidity of the stomach, with constipation.

TROCHIS'CI MEN'THÆ PIPERIT'Æ, Troches of Peppermint. (Ol. menth. piperit., \mathfrak{f} ij., Sacchar. in pulv., lbj., Mucilag. tragacanthæ, q. s. Make into 480 troches. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used as a carminative.

TROCHIS'CI MOR'PHIÆ, Troches of Mor'phia, Morphia Lozenges. (Morphiæ hydrochlor., gr.

Trochiscus, (τροχισκος), Phthois, Artis, Col'lix, Col'ice, Phthois, Rot'ula, Cyclis, mus, (dim. of τροχος, 'a wheel,' 'anything circular.') A troch or round table, (F.) Trochisque. See Pastil and Tabella. A solid medicine, prepared of powders, incorporated by means of mucilage, crumb of bread, juices of plants, &c. In French nomenclature, the trochisque differs from the tablette,—the former containing no sugar. This form of preparation is adapted for the purpose of allowing the medicines of which the troch is composed to dissolve slowly in the mouth, and to pass gradually into the stomach. See Trochisci. The Parisian Codex has two formulæ for troches for external use.

Trochisque, Trochiscus.

Troch'iter, gen. Trochite'ris, (from τροχαιον, 'to turn.') The larger of the two tuberosities at the upper extremity of the os humeri; so called because it affords insertion to rotator muscles.

Trochite'rian, Trochitérien (Chaussier). Anything belonging or relating to the trochiter.

Troch'lea, (τροχλία), Trochil'ia, (F.) Trochlée on Troklée. A pulley; (from τροχαιον, 'to turn,')—for example, the articular surface at the lower extremity of the os humeri; so called from its forming a kind of pulley on which the ulna moves, in flexion and extension of the forearm. Also, the cartilaginous pulley over which the tendon of the trochlearis muscle passes, at the upper and inner part of the orbit. Pulleys are needed as mechanical powers in the reduction of dislocations where much force is required.

TROCH'LEA LABYRINTHI, Cochlea.

Trochlea'ris, Obliquus superior oculi.

Trochléateur, Grand, Obliquus superior oculi—t. Petit, Obliquus superior oculi.

Trochlée, Trochlea.

Tro'choid, (τροχοειδής, from τροχος, 'a wheel,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Trochoi'des, Ar'ea commissu'ra. An articulation in which one bone turns upon another, like a wheel upon its axle; as the Atloïdoïxoid articulation. See Axea commissura.

Troëne, Ligustrum vulgare.

Troisquarts, (trois, 'three,' and quarts, pl. of quart, 'a fourth,') Trocar.

TROPÆ'OLUM TUBERO'SUM, Ulluco. A tuberous plant, cultivated in the Sierra, Peru. It is smaller than the potato.

Troph'alis, gen. Trophal'idis, (from τροφή, 'nourishment,') Colostrum.

Tro'phê, (τροφή,) Aliment, Cibatio, Pabulum.

Troph'esy. A name proposed by Prof. Laycock for the results of disorder of the nerve-force of a motor order regulating nutrition.

Tro'phi, (from τροφή, 'nourishment.') In insects, the parts of the mouth that are employed in receiving and preparing the food.

Troph'ic, Trophical.

Troph'ical, Troph'ic, Troph'icus, (from trophe.) (F.) Trophique. Relating to nourishment or nutrition.

Troph'ical or Troph'ic NERVES, Motor Spinal Nerves. The organic nerve or nerves of the sympathetic system have been so termed, from the belief that they are concerned in nutrition.

Troph'imus, (τροφίμος,) Nutritious.

Tropho'des, (τροφῶδες, from τροφή, 'nourishment,' and odes.) Nutritious.

Trophoneuro'ses, (τροφῆ, 'nourishment,' and neurosis.) Morbid conditions of the process of nutrition, owing to modified nervous influence.

Trophon'osi, Trophon'isi, (τροφῆ, 'nourishment,' and osis, 'a disease.') Diseases of nutrition.

Troph'y, Troph'ia, (τροφή, a suffix denoting 'nourishment or nutrition,') as in hypertrophy, 'excess of nourishment or nutrition.'

Troponu'si, Morbi troph'ici, (τροπή, 'the solstitial or tropical point where the sun turns or alters its course,' and nosos, 'a disease.') Diseases that prevail in the tropics.

Trousse, Case (pocket).

Trousse-galant, (trousser, 'to dispatch,' and galant, 'a gallant,') Cholera morbus.

Trousseau, 'a bundle,' Fasciculus.

Trousseaux Arrière-mésentériques (F.). A name given by Winslow to the nervous plexus situate between the two mesenteric plexuses of which it is a dependence, and which descends into the pelvis to concur in the formation of the hypogastric plexus.

Trouts (Ir.), (perhaps from the speckled appearance of the skin,) see Melasma.

Trubs, Lycoperdon tuber.

Truck, see Medicament.

Truculen'tus, (from trux, gen. trucis, 'ferocious,') Homicidal.

Trudge'backed, see Hump.

True love, Paris, Trillium latifolium.

Truffe, Lycoperdon tuber.

Truffle, (pron. Truffle.) Lycoperdon tuber — t. Hart's, Elaphomyces granulatus.

Trum'pet Creep'er, Tecoma radicans — t. Flower, Tecoma radicans — t. Weed, Eupatorium purpureum.

Trun'cus, Trunk.

Trunk, Truncus, (F.) Tronc. The principal part of the body, to which the limbs are articulated. The trunk has been divided into three parts: — a superior, the head; a middle, the thorax, and an inferior, the pelvis. These three regions contain the great splanchnic cavities. They are united by a common stalk — the vertebral column. To the middle are articulated the superior extremities; and, to the inferior, the lower extremities.

The trunk of an artery, vein, nerve, or lymphatic, is its largest part, which has not yet given off branches. It is, also, applied to the parent vessel, after branches have been sent off.

Truss, ([F.] trousser, 'to tie up,') Brach'erium, Brach'erium, Brach'ilē, Brach'ivolum, Bracheri'olum, An'ma, Hom'ma, Subligac'ulum, Subligat'u'ra, (F.) Brayer. A hernial bandage for keeping hernia reduced. The ancient trusses were inelastic. They consisted simply of a pad and strap. At the present day, elastic bandages are alone employed. They possess the advantage of making an equable and continuous pressure on the aperture of the sac, and of yielding to the changes of form in the abdominal parietes. The most important part of these bandages is a piece of narrow steel, flat, and adapted to the shape of the body. This is the spring, (F.) Ressort. It embraces the body on the side affected; extends from beyond the spine, and terminates, opposite the ruptured part, by an iron plate, to which it is riveted. The posterior surface of this plate is furnished with a convex pad, (F.) Pelote, adapted in shape and size to the aperture which it has to close. The spring is covered with leather, and its inner surface is padded; a strap extends from its posterior extremity; passes round the sound side, and is attached to the plate of the pad. This strap is pierced with numerous holes, which allow the patient to tighten or slacken it at pleasure. Trusses have been variously constructed; and different patents obtained for the modifications. They all act upon the above principle. Sometimes they have a double pad.

Trygo'des, (τρῳγῶδες, from τρυξ, gen. τρυγος, 'lees,' and odes.) Feculent.

Tryp'anon, (τρῑπανον,) Trepan.

Trype'sis, (τρῑπησις, from τρυπαω, 'I bore,') Trepanning.

Tryp'sis, (τρῑψω, 'I rub,') Friction.

Tsara'ath. True leprosy is so called by the Jews.

Tsa-Tsin, Rhynchosia excavata.

Tscherbet', Sherbet.

Tsetse, Glossina morsitans.

Tshettik, Upas tieuté.

Tsia'na, Costus.

Tsit'la. A South African root of the Araceæ family, which contains a very large quantity of sweet tasted starch. According to Dr. Livingstone, when dried, pounded into meal, and allowed to ferment, it is not an unpleasant article for food.

Tsjampaca, Michelia champaca.

Tu'ba, 'a trumpet,' Tube — t. Acustica, Eustachian tube — t. Aristotelica, Eustachian tube — t. Cæca, Tuba Fallopiana — t. Eustachii, Eustachian tube — t. Uterina, Tuba Fallopiana — t. Vocalis, Tube, vocal.

Tubaire, Tubal.

Tu'bal, Tuba'ris, (F.) Tubaire, (from tuba, and tubus.) Relating to a tube or tubes, and especially to the Fallopian.

Tu'bal NEPHRITIS, Kidney, Bright's disease of the — t. Pregnancy, see Pregnancy, tubal — t. Respiration, see Murmur, respiratory.

Tub'boe. A form of frambæsia or yaws attacking the feet.

Tube. A name given to some parts which are hollow, and which have, at times, the shape of a trumpet, Tu'ba, Tu'bus, Sal'pinx, (F.) Trompe, Tube.

TUBE, ALIMENTARY, Canal, alimentary — t. Auditory, see Auditory canal, external.

TUBE CASTS. A term applied to the casts or moulds of the uriniferous tubes of the kidney, observed in the urine by the microscope in diseases of those organs. The casts are fatty, desquamative, hyaline, granular, &c., and are observed especially in Bright's disease.

TUBE OF THE COCH'LEA, see Scalae of the cochlea — t. Eustachian, Eustachian tube.

TUBE, FALLOPIAN, Tu'ba Fallopi'na seu Fallopii seu Fallopiæ seu uteri'na seu cæ'ca, Me'trosal'pinx, Hys'terosal'pinx, Oviduc'tus muli'ebri, Vas deferens muli'eri, Duc'tus varico'sus uteri, Proces'sus latera'lis uteri, Mea'tus semina'lis uteri, Me'atus semina'rius uteri, Cor'nu uteri, O'viduct, U'terine tubes, Vec'tor canal, (F.) Trompe de Fallope ou utérine, is a canal floating in the abdomen, and extending on each side from the superior angle of the uterus as far as the sides of the brim of the pelvis. They are 4 or 5 inches long. Near the uterus, they are straight and very narrow; but, in their course, they widen, become tortuous, and terminate by a free, expanded, and Fimbriated extrem'ity; called, also, Folia'ceum ornamentum, Mor'sus diab'oli, Infundib'ulum seu Digitatio'nes seu Fim'briæ seu Vexil'la seu Lacin'ie tuba'rum Fallopii, (F.) Morceau frangé, Pavillon de la trompe, Morceau ou Morsure du diable. Within, the tubes are hollow and lined by a mucous membrane: the tissue exterior to which is spongy and erectile. The use of the Fallopian tubes is to conduct the sperm to the ovarium, and the fecundated ovum back to the uterus. They establish a communication between the cavity of the peritoneum and that of the uterus, the abdominal termination being termed Os'tium abdomina'le seu oû'rium; the uterine, Os'tium uteri'num, Apertu'ra uteri'na. When the tube embraces the ovary, a funnelshaped cavity — Corol'la infundibulifor'mis — is formed at its extremity, into which the ovule passes.

TUBE, INTES'TINAL, Canal, alimentary.

TUBE, ŒSOPHAGE'AL, Stomach Tube. A long elastic gum tube, capable of being passed into the œsophagus or stomach.

TUBE, POL'LEN, see Pollen.

TUBE, REC'TAL, Defecation tube. An elastic gum tube, similar to the stomach tube, which is sometimes passed into the colon, to remove air from that intestine, or to enable enemata to be thrown up into it.

TUBE, STOM'ACH, see Tube, œsophageal.

TUBE, VO'CAL, Tu'ba voca'lis. The part of the air passages above the inferior ligaments of the larynx, including the passages through the nose and mouth.

Tu'bercle, Tuber'culum, (dim. of tuber,) Tu'ber, Strangal'ion, Stran'galis, Tuber'culous Deposit, (vulg.) a Ker'nel, a Knot, (F.) Tubercule. A tumor in the substance of organs, from the production of new matter; — sensation null; growth sluggish. In Pathological Anatomy, the term is generally given to a species of degeneration which consists of an opaque matter, of a pale yellow color; having, in its crude condition, a consistence analogous to that of concrete albumen. It subsequently becomes soft and friable, and gradually acquires a consistence and appearance analogous to those of pus. Tubercles may be developed in different parts of the body, as in the tissue of the alimentary canal; in serous structures, as the pleura, peritoneum, and arachnoid; in the liver, kidney, spleen, and lungs; in the lymphatic glands, &c., but they are most frequently observed in the lungs and mesentery. Pulmonary tubercles, Pneumophymata, Tuber'cula Pulmo'num, (F.) Tubercules pulmonaires, characterize Tuber'cular Phthi'sis. See Phthisis pulmonalis. Mesenter'ic tubercles are often met with in the same affection, but particularly in Tubes Mesenterica.

Laënnec classed tubercles among the accidental tissues, which have no resemblance to the natural tissues, and which never exist except in consequence of morbid action. The prevalent doctrine at the present day is that they are the products of a serofulous degeneration. Tubercle is, in other words, merely a local expression of a constitutional serofulous affection. The view has been held by some writers that tubercle is a degeneration of previously existing structures — whether physiological or pathological; by others that it is a morbid exudation, a new formation. According to Virchow, although tubercle is a result of the death of healthy or diseased tissues, the local process — tuberculosis — also results in the exudation of a material during a tuberculous inflammation; such material undergoing a kind of organization, succeeded by its death, and by its breaking and shrivelling up into a tubercle. This gradual change is termed tubercularization. Broussais conceived that tubercles were formed exclusively by inflammation of the white vessels, but no such vessels are now described. Tubercle is produced independent of inflammation, but the latter may be excited around a tubercle or a mass of tubercles, and promote their further development or their progress towards softening and destruction of structure. When tubercles in any organ are few in number, they may pass to the state of permanent induration without danger to the patient; but when they are very numerous, they usually cause serious mischief. Dr. Baron considered that they were produced by hydatids.

The morbid condition which gives rise to the development of tubercles, Tuberculiza'tion, is termed Tuber'culous disease, Tuberculo'sis, Morbus tuberculo'sus, Strumo'sis seu Phymato'sis pulmo'num, and Dyscrasia Tuberculo'sa. Tubercles are seen of various forms, — to wit, in fine points, (F.) Poussière tuberculeuse, gray and yellow granulations, the former being miliary tubercles; and gray and yellow tubercular masses, softened, and cretaceous. The tubercular mass may undergo a cheesy degeneration, a yellow spot being visible at first and afterwards involving the whole structure. When tubercular matter is examined under the microscope, small, irregular-shaped bodies — Tu'bercle corpuscles, (F.) Corpuscles tuberculeux, associated with molecules and granules — are visible, their longest diameter being $\frac{1}{2000}$ to the $\frac{1}{1200}$ of an inch. They contain several granules, and of course vary in appearance with the progress of the disease, approximating, perhaps, pus cells in their general character. See Phthisis pulmonalis.

Tuber'cular, Tuber'culous, Tuberculo'sus, Tuber'culate, Tuber'culated, (F.) Tuberculeux, Tuberculé. That which relates to tubercles, or which is formed by tubercles.

TUBER'CU'LAR OR TUBER'CU'LOUS CONSTITU'TION OR DIATH'ESIS, Phthisio'sis, is the habit of body which predisposes to tubercular phthisis; as Tuberculous Cachex'ia, Tuberculo'sis, Morbus tuberculo'sus, Dyscrasia tuberculo'sa, is the constitutional condition of one affected with tubercles.

TUBER'CU'LAR MATTER. A morbid production, contained in cysts, or loose in the tissue of organs. It varies, in its consistence, at the different periods of the tubercular affection: being, at first, compact, and yellowish; at times, calcareous; afterwards pultaceous, semifluid, and curdy. See Tubercle.

TUBER'CU'LAR PHTH'ISIS is that produced by the development of tubercles, as in the lungs.

TUBER'CU'LAR SORETHROAT, Pharyngitis, follicular.

Tuber'culate, Tubercular.

TUBER'ULATE SARCO'MA OF AB'ERNETHY, Emphy'ma Sarco'ma tuberculo'sum, Tu'mor tuberculo'sus. Tubercles, firm, round, and clustering; pea-sized or bean-sized: yellowish or brownish-red; when large, disposed to ulcerate, and produce a painful, malignant, and often fatal sore. Found chiefly in the lymphatic glands of the neck; often, simultaneously, in other glands and organs.

Tulbag'hia Allia'cea, (after Tulbagh, a Dutch governor of the Cape of Good Hope.) A South African plant, Nat. Ord. Asphodelaceæ, the bulbs of which, boiled in milk, are recommended in phthisis and as an anthelmintic.

Tulbaghia cepa'cea and T. viola'cea serve the same purpose.

Tu'lip, Cape, Homeria collina — t. Tree, Liriodendron.

Tulipier, Liriodendron.

Tulipifera Lirioden'dron, (tulipa, 'tulip,' and ferre, 'to bear,') Liriodendron tulipifera.

Tu'pius, Valve of, Bauhin, valve of.

Tum'bleties, see Irregular practitioner.

Tumefac'tio, (tumere, 'to swell,' and facere, 'to make,') Swelling — t. Mollis, Puffiness.

Tumescen'tia Pituito'sa, (from tumescere, 'to swell,') Leucophlegmatia.

Tumeur, Tumor — t. Anomale, see Hæmatodes fungus — t. Arénacée, Psammoma.

Tumeur Blanche. The French use this term synonymously with White Swelling. See Hydrarthrus. The term is, however, applied by the generality of surgeons to swellings of the greater joints, without change of color of the skin, and of a more or less firm consistence, which are dependent upon disease of the osseous or of the soft parts about the joint.

Tumeur Caverneuse, see Hæmatodes fungus — t. Encephaloïde, Encephaloid — t. Erectile, see Hæmatodes fungus — t. Fongoïde, Encephaloid — t. Fongueuse, Encephaloid — t. Gommeuse, Gumma — t. Hémorrhagiale circonscrite, see Aneurism — t. Lymphatique des articulations, Hydrarthrus — t. Ossivore, Encephaloid — t. Perlée, Cholesteatoma — t. Pulpeuse, Encephaloid — t. Spléniforme, Encephaloid — t. Spongieuse, Encephaloid — t. Variqueuse, see Hæmatodes fungus.

Tu'mor, (tumere, 'to swell,') On'cos, On'cus, Epar'ma, Epar'sis, Emphy'ma, Excrescen'tia (Sauvages), Écphy'ma, (Sc.) Sic'almé, (F.) Tumeur. A rising or prominence, of greater or less size, developed by a morbid cause in some part of the body. Cullen defines a tumor to be "a partial swelling without inflammation." Sauvages restricts the term to a rising formed by the congestion of a fluid, and he calls excrescences those which have a fleshy or osseous consistence. Boyer defines it "any preternatural eminence developed on any part of the body." Good uses it synonymously with tubercle. Boyer's is the best general definition. Tumors differ greatly from each other, according to their seat, the organs interested, their nature, &c. According to Virchow, a tumor, however parasitic it may appear to be, is always a part of the body from which it springs: the laws of the body govern also the growth of the tumor.

According to Paget, the term Tumor is applied to such morbid growths or growing parts as — 1, are isolated from surrounding parts by distinct investing layers of tissue; 2, though continuous with the natural parts, are abruptly circumscribed in the greater part of their extent; or, 3, are formed of new materials infiltrated and growing in the interstices of natural parts. See Swelling.

Tu'mor, A'denoid, Adenoma — t. Adiposus, Lipoma — t. Albus, Hydrarthrus — t. Anomalous, Hæmatodes fungus — t. Artuum, Obdormitio — t.

Tu'mor, CAV'ERNOUS. A tumor whose structure is of so loosely reticulated a nature as to resemble the corpora cavernosa of the penis.

Tu'mor, CEL'LULAR. A form of tumor occurring in cellular tissue which does not contain fat.

Tu'mor, CELLULO'FIBROUS, Tumor, fibrocellular — t. Cheloïdes, see Canceroid — t. Cysticus, Encystis — t. Cysticus serosus, Hygroma — t. Desmoïdes, Tumor, fibrous — t. Dilatation, Retention cyst — t. Epithelial, see Epithelial.

Tu'mor, ERE'C'TILE. A tumor produced by the development of a soft, vascular tissue which is susceptible of elevation and depression. See Erectile.

Tu'mor, FAT'RY, Lipoma — t. Fibroädiposus, Tumor, fibrofatty.

Tu'mor, FIBROCALCA'REOUS, Tu'mor fibrocalca'reus. A fibrous tumor containing earthy matter.

Tu'mor, FIBROCEL'LULAR, Cellulo'f'ibrous tumor, Tumor fibrocellulo'sus. A soft and elastic form of fibrous tumor, a variety of the gelatinous sarco'ma of Rokitansky, of which the softer kind of polypus of the nose is an example.

Tu'mor FIBROCELLULO'SUS, Tumor, fibrocellular.

Tu'mor, FIBROCYS'TIC, Tumor fibrocys'ticus. A fibrous tumor containing cysts.

Tu'mor, FIBROFAT'RY, Tumor fibroädipo'sus. A fibrous tumor containing fat.

Tu'mor, FIBROMUS'ULAR, see Myoma — t. Fibromusculosus, see Myoma.

Tu'mor, FIBRONU'CLEATED, Tumor fibronucleo'sus. A tumor composed of fibrous tissue mixed with elongated nuclei.

Tu'mor, FIBRONUCLEO'SUS, Tumor, fibronucleated — t. Fibroplastic, Sarcoma, Myeloid — t. Fibrosus, Tumor, fibrous — t. Fibrosus recurrens, see Tumor, fibrous.

Tu'mor, Fi'BROUS, Des'moid Tumor, Fi'brous growth, Fibro'ma, Fi'broid, Ino'ma, Tumor fibro'sus seu desmoïdes, Inohylo'ma. A tumor or growth formed of fibrous tissue. When recurring after repeated removal, the term Recur'rent fi'broid, Sarco'ma fusocellula'rë, Tumor fibro'sus recur'rens, is applied to it.

Tu'mor FICO'SUS, Ficus — t. Flatulentus, Emphysema.

Tu'mor, FLOAT'ING. A mass movable in the abdomen, about the size and shape of a kidney. It may be a movable kidney or a loosely attached ovarian cyst, a collection of feces, &c.

Tu'mor FUGAX, see Fugacious — t. Fungating, see Fungating — t. Fungosus articuli, Spina ventosa — t. Fungosus sanguineus, Hæmatodes fungus — t. Gangliformis, Ganglion, nervous — t. Genarum, Meloncus — t. Genu albus, Genocace — t. Glandulæ parotidæ, Parotidoneus.

Tu'mor, GLAN'DULAR, Tumor Glandulo'sus. A tumor growing in or near a gland, and resembling it in structure. See Adenoma.

Tu'mor GLANDULO'SUS, Tumor, glandular — t. Granulation, see Granulation — t. Gummatous, Gumma — t. Gummy, Gumma — t. Histioid, see Sarcoma and Histoid — t. Lacteus, Galactocoele — t. Laminated nacreous fatty, Cholesteatoma — t. Lardeus, Steatoma — t. Leucæmic or Leukæmic, Lymphoma — t. Lymphoid, Lymphoma — t. Malacrum, Meloncus — t. Milklike, Encephaloid.

Tu'mor, MIXED. A tumor in the composition of which more than one kind of tissue is implicated, — the fibromuscular, for example.

Tumultus Cor'dis. Irregularity of action of the heart.

Tun'belly, Physconia.

Tun'bridge Wells, Min'eral Wa'ters of. A celebrated acidulous chalybeate in Kent, England, a few miles distant from the village of Tunbridge, and thirty-six miles south of London, which is much frequented, especially for cases of anæmia, chlorosis, &c. It contains carbonic acid, carbonate of iron, and sulphate of magnesia.

Tun'da Oc'uli, Conjunctiva membrana.

Tun'dus Cor'dis, Mucro cordis.

Tunga, Chique.

Tu'nic, Tunica, Chi'ton, Coat, (F.) Tunique. An envelope. A name given to different membranes, which envelop organs: as the tunics or coats of the eye, stomach, bladder, &c.

TU'NICA GRANULO'SA, 'granular coat.' An investment of the ovum exterior to the zona pellucida, described by Dr. Barry, but the existence of which as a structure, distinct and independent from the membrana granulosa, is denied.

TU'NICA HORTEN'SIS, Dianthus caryophyllus—t. Innominata oculi, Sclerotic—t. Interna oculi, Retina—t. Intima, see Artery—t. Intima oculi, Retina.

TU'NICA JACO'BI, Membrana Jacobi, Ja'cob's coat or mem'brane. A highly delicate serous membrane, interposed between the retina and the choroid coat, discovered by Dr. Jacob, of Dublin. Its structure is curious, being composed of cylindrical, transparent, highly refractive staff-shaped bodies, Bacilli,—hence called Stra'tum bacillo'sum seu bacilla'tum seu cylindro'rum, Bac'illar layer of the retina,—which are arranged perpendicularly to the surface of the retina, their outer extremities being imbedded, to a greater or less depth, in a layer of the pigmentum nigrum, and are continued into the more internal layers of the retina by means of thin processes—the filaments or fibres of Müller.

TU'NICA VASCULO'SA HALLE'RI. One of the two layers of vessels of the choroid, formed by the coarser arterial and venous trunks.

TU'NICA VASCULO'SA OC'ULI, Choroid, see Eye.

TU'NICA VASCULO'SA TES'TIS, 'vascular coat of the testis,' Pia ma'ter testis. An extremely delicate membrane, consisting of minute ramifications of the spermatic vessels united by areolar tissue, which separates the lobules of the testis from each other. It is situate immediately within the tunica albuginea, and incloses the substance of the gland. It sends processes inward that separate the lobules, in the same manner as the pia mater is reflected between the convolutions of the brain.

TU'NICA VIT'REA, Hyaloid membrane.

Tunic'ula, (dim. of tunica), Tu'nicle, (F.) Tunicule. A fine membrane, coat, or skin. Clitoris.

Tunique, Tunic—t. Albuginée, Albuginea—t. Commune de Bichat, Endangium—t. Striée, see Artery.

Tun'elling. A term sometimes employed for the treatment of stricture of the urethra, by making pressure upon it from within so as to promote its removal by absorption. It is also applied to catheters, sounds, urethrotomes, as tunnelled catheters, &c., which are not solid throughout, but have a tunnelled cavity.

Tun'nyfish, Salt'ed, Omotrichos.

Tuphloënteri'tis, Typhloënteritis.

Tu'phus, Typhus.

Tupina'ria, Talpa.

Tur'ba Hæmorrhoida'lis, 'hemorrhoidal disorder,' see Hæmorrhoids.

Turbatio'nes An'imi, (turbare, turbatum, 'to disorder,') Affections of the mind.

Turbinated Bones, Ossa turbina'ta. Bones shaped like a top, (from turba, gen. turbinis, or turben, 'a top,') Ossa spongio'sa, O. ter'tia maxillæ superio'ris, Cor'nua, Con'chæ na'rrium seu ven'eris, Tur'bines na'si seu na'rrium, Conchyl'ia, Bucc'ina, Lam'inæ spongio'sæ na'si, (F.) Cornets. Very thin, bony plates, rolled up in the form of horns, and situate in the nasal fossa. 1. Ossa spongio'sum supe'rius or Cornet de Morgagni,—the highest. 2. Ossa spongio'sum me'dium, the middle cornu of French anatomists—the ethmoid'al cor'nu or Ossa spongio'sum supe'rius seu turbina'tum of English anatomists, Ossa convolutum supe'rius, Con'cha, C. na'rrium supe'rior seu Morgagnia'na, (F.) Cornet moyen. This bone projects inwards and downwards into the cavity of the nose, from the ethmoid cells at the side of the nasal lamella, and serves to enlarge the organ of smell. It is convex towards the septum, and concave outwards. 3. Ossa spongio'sum seu turbina'tum infe'rius, Con'cha infe'rior, Convolutum infe'rius os, Os sous-ethmoid'al (Ch.), projects at the under part of the side of the nose, is convex towards the septum and concave outwards. It is connected to the os maxillare, os palati, and os unguis. 4. Sphenoid'al cornu. All the turbinated bones extend the olfactory surface.

Tur'bines Na'si seu Na'rium, (pl. of turbo, gen. turbini, 'a top,') Turbinated bones.

Turgen'tia, Turgescence.

Turges'cence, Turges'cence, Turgid'ity, Tur'gidness, Turgescent'ia, Turgen'tia, Orgas'mus, (from turgescere, 'to begin to swell,' turgere, 'to swell,') Superabundance of humors in a part. The term Turges'cence of Bile was formerly used to denote the passage of that fluid into the stomach, and its discharge by vomiting. A vital action of turgescence or expansibility — Turgor vitalis — has been presumed to exist in the capillaries of certain organs and in erectile tissues; but the generality of physiologists do not admit it.

Turgescent'ia, Turgescence.

Distension of the gall-bladder by bile.

Turgid'ity, Turgescence.

Tur'gidness, Turgescence.

Tur'gor Vita'lis, see Turgescence.

Tur'key Corn, Corydalis formosa — t. Pea, Corydalis formosa.

Turk'ish Bath. A form of bath of Turkish origin, in which the individual passes into bathing apartments of increasing temperature, after which he undergoes shampooing of the whole body, &c. See Stove.

Tur'merie, Curcuma longa, Sanguinaria Canadensis.

Turn of Life, see Menses.

Turn'ing, Ver'sio, Ver'sion, (from [F.] tourner, 'to turn,') (F.) Version, — as TURN'ING OF THE Fœ'tus, Ver'sio Fœ'tus. Generally, the operation of bringing down the feet, or some part of the lower extremity, when the presentation of the child is such that it cannot be delivered by the natural efforts. This has been termed podal'ic version, in contradistinction to cephal'ic ver'sion, which consists in bringing the head down, — in shoulder-presentations, for example, — and is termed internal version; to distinguish it from external version or that which is induced by external pressure, applied through the parietes of the abdomen and uterus. Bimanual version and bipolar version are intended to act simultaneously on both poles of the fetal ovoid, — the former externally, through the abdominal walls; the latter both externally and internally.

It is demulcent and expectorant, and has been used in coughs, and pulmonary affections in general, and in some cutaneous diseases.

TUSSILA'GO FAR'FARA, Tussilago — t. Hybrida, T. petasites.

TUSSILA'GO PETASITES, T. hybrida seu petasi'tes hermaphrodi'ta, Petasi'tes, P. major seu rubens seu officinalis seu hybridus seu vulga'ris, But'terbur, Pest'ilentwort, (F.) Pétasite, Herbe aux teigneux, Chapelière. The roots of this plant have been recommended as aperient and alexipharmic. They have a strong smell, and a bitterish, acrid taste, aromatic, but not agreeable.

TUSSILA'GO PETASITES HERMAPHRODITA, T. petasites — t. Vulgaris, Tussilago.

Tus'sis, (dim. Tussic'ula,) Beg'ma, Bex, Tusse'do, Bex'is, Tus'sis nervo'sa, Catar'rhus, Pneus'sis Tus'sis, Cough, Cough'ing, Hau't, Hoast, (Prov.) Conf, (Sc.) Host, Hoist, (F.) Toux. A violent, sonorous, frequent, and short expiration, by means of which the air, in passing rapidly through the bronchia and trachea, carries along with it the mucus of the parts, which forms the sputa. The cough is said to be dry, when unaccompanied by expectoration. It is symptomatic of many diseases. See Bronchitis.

Tus'sive, Tussivus, (from tussis,) Belonging or relating to cough; — as tussive vibration; the vibration of the parietes of the chest, caused by coughing.

Tuta'mina, pl. of tuta'men, 'a defence,' 'a protection,' (from tutare, 'to defend.') Parts are so called which defend or protect others.

TUTA'MINA CER'EBRI are the scalp, pericranium, bones of the skull, and the meninges.

TUTA'MINA OC'ULI are the eyebrows, eyelids, and lachrymal apparatus.

Tutenag, Zincum.

Tut'hia, Tutia.

Tu'tia, Pom'pholyx, Cadmi'a, Alfasa, Mesera, Capni'tis, Tu'thia, Ox'idum zin'ci impu'rum, Tutty. The oxide of zinc that attaches itself to the chimneys of furnaces in which ores of zinc are smelted. It is in the form of gray incrustations; and is sometimes used for making an eye-salve. It is prepared, for this purpose, by levigation.

Tut'tering, Stuttering.

Tut'ty, Tutia.

Ty'lé, (τυλη,) Callosity.

Tylo'ma, gen. Tylo'matis, (τυλωμα, from tylus, and oma,) Callosity.

Tyloph'ora Asthma'tica, (tylus, and φειν, 'to bear,') from the fleshiness of the leaflets of the corolla, Asclepias asthma'tica, Cynan'chum Ipecacuan'ha seu vomito'rium seu viridiflo'rum seu tomento'sum, Ipecacuan'ha of the Isle of France, (F.) Ipecacuanha blanc de l'île de France. Order, Asclepiadaceæ. A native of various parts of the East Indies, both of the continent and islands. The root is acrid, and is used on the coast of Comorandel as a substitute for ipecacuanha. In large doses, it is emetic; in smaller, often repeated, it is cathartic. It is recommended, also, as a diaphoretic, and especially in humoral asthma.

Tylo'sis, (τυλωσις, from tylus, and osis,) Callosity. Applied also to inflammation of the lids, when the substance of the lid, along the margin, is thickened and hardened.

Ty'lus, (τυλος, 'a knot,') Callosity.

A swelling of the abdomen, caused by accumulation of air in the intestinal tube or in the peritoneum. Tympanites may be idiopathic or symptomatic. The former depends upon exhalation of air from the inner surface of the intestine, or from decomposition of substances contained in it; the latter is the result of some organic affection, and often depends upon obliteration of the digestive tube, which prevents the gas from escaping. Idiopathic tympanites may be more readily cured. The symptomatic is usually fatal. On dissection, in such cases, the stomach and intestines are found enormously distended; with strangulation or disorganization of some part of the mucous membrane of the intestine. Carminatives may be proper when tympanites depends upon atony of the digestive organs; but, in cases of the symptomatic kind, they cannot be productive of advantage, and may do harm.

Sometimes the air is contained in the cavity of the peritoneum — constituting Tympanites abdomina'lis, Aëropéritonie of some — the accumulation in the intestines being called Tympanites intestina'lis.

Tym'panum, (τῑμπανον, 'a drum,') The Drum or bar'el of the ear, Ear drum. The names Cav'ity of the Tym'panum or of the Drum, Cav'itas seu Cav'um Tym'pani, An'trum seu cav'itas antro'sa Au'ris, (F.) Tympan, Cavité du tympan, Caisse du tambour ou du tympan — have been given to a cavity of an irregular shape, which constitutes the middle ear, and has been compared to a drum. It is situate in the pars petrosa of the temporal bone, between the meatus auditorius externus and the labyrinth. This cavity is lined by a mucous membrane; and communicates, externally by means of the Eustachian tube, which is situate between it and the pharynx. The tympanum has six parietes. 1. An external, which is almost entirely formed of the Mem'brane of the Drum, Membra'na tym'pani, Diaphrag'ma seu Mediastinum Tegumen'tum au'ris seu Sep'tum membrana'ceum, Myrin'ga, My'rinx, (F.) Membrane du tympan — a species of thin, transparent circular septum; convex within and concave without, which closes the inner extremity of the meatus auditorius. 2. An internal, on which are the Fenes'tra ova'lis, Prom'ontory, and Fora'men rotu'ndum. 3. A superior. 4. An inferior, on which is the glenoid fissure. 5. A posterior, on which are the opening of the mastoid cells, and the pyramid. 6. An anterior on which are the Processus cochleariformis and the inner orifice of the Eustachian tube. The cavity of the tympanum is crossed by a series of four small bones, articulated with each other by diarthrosis, moved by certain muscles, and representing a kind of bent lever extending from the membrana tympani to the fenestra ovalis. They are called the Bones or Ossicles of the Ear, and are the malleus, incus, os orbiculare, and stapes.

It is continued fever, accompanied with great cerebral irritation and prostration. (See Fever.) By most writers, this disease was formerly divided into two varieties—ty'phus mit'tior and ty'phus gra'vior. Dr. Thomas King Chambers treats of both under one generic name — typhfever. The term Ty'phus ambulato'rius is applied to a walking case of typhous fever, in which the infection induces local changes, as in the intestines, without any appreciable constitutional disturbance, although at times fatal in its results.

Prisons, F. lenticulaire, Typhus contagieux, is attended with rigors and heat, alternating; little or no perspiration; pulse, tense and hard, usually quick, but fluttering; pain over the forehead and vertex; a 'mulberry rash,' appearing on the fifth to the seventh day of the disease, and lasting till the end; delirium succeeded by stupor, signs of incipient putrescency,—as true petechiæ, vibices, hemorrhages, &c., Pete'chial, Mac'ulated or Spotted Fever, Febris maculo'sa. See Fever, purpuric malignant. Typhus, under particular circumstances, seems to be communicable; but if proper attention be paid to cleanliness and ventilation, there is not much danger of communication. The general principles of treatment, laid down under the head of Fever, are applicable here. All the varieties of continued fever resemble each other in the cardinal points, although they may differ in many of their characters. Ventilation and cleanliness; warm or cold ablution or sponging; keeping the bowels free; and attending to symptoms as they may rise, with the avoiding of all irritation of every kind, are the main indications. When symptoms of great prostration occur, the strength must be supported by wine; and tonics be exhibited, with the mineral acids. Of the tonics, the sulphate of quinia is perhaps as good as any, while it is free from the objection which applies to most others,—of being too bulky. In the whole management of this affection, however, the physician has to discriminate carefully between oppression and prostration. The former may require evacuations; the latter cannot.

It is now maintained that there is an essential difference between the two varieties, typhoid fever and typhus; that the former is essentially an abdominal affection, and dependent upon, or connected with, an inflamed or ulcerated condition of the follicles or glands of Peyer; hence it has received the names Fèvre mésentérique, F. typhoïde, Maladie ou Affection typhoïde, F. entéro-mésentérique, Entérite typhoïdique, Typhoémie entérique, Entéro-mésentérique typhoïde, Exanthème intestinale, Dothinentérie, Dothinentérite, Dothiententerie, &c., Neodididite, Typhodididite, Entérite folliculeuse, Gastro-entérite with nervous affection of the brain, Follicular gastroenteritis, F. enteritis, Enteritis folliculo'sa, Typhus abdominalis, T. intestinalis, T. sporadicus, Enterotyphus, T. ganglionaris abdominalis, Febris intestinalis ulcero'sa, F. nervosa gastrica, F. nervosa enterica, F. enterica seu mesenterica seu intestinalis, F. nervosa mesenterica, Enterhelcol'sis nervosa, Typhus entericus, Neop'ya, Neotyphus, Typhoid affection, Enteric, Intestinal or Peyerian fever, Pythogen'ic fever, Abdominal Typhus, Night Soil fever. Accompanying this form of fever there is generally pain or gurgling on pressing the right iliac fossa, over the seat of the intestinal lesion; with more or less diarrhœa, and a typhoid eruption, consisting of rose-red papulæ, (see Spots, red), which appears mostly on the abdomen in the second week of the disease. They are distinct from true petechiæ, as they can be removed by pressure; and distinct also from sudamina, which are perhaps the universal accompaniments of sweating, and are consequently a variety of miliaria. The common continued fever or synochus of Great Britain and of this country belongs to this variety, and the Red Tongue Fever of Kentucky was considered by Professor Bartlett to be typhoid fever.

Certain modern French writers have considered the Typhus of the European continent, Typhus of Europe, pestilential fever, contagious typhus, Hung'ary fever, hos'pital fever, camp fever, jail fever, lenticular pete'chial fever, (F.) Peste d'Europe, &c., to be identical with the typhoid affection. They admit but one fever on the European continent—the typhoid. Typhus, they maintain—but by no means establish the position—to be peculiar to England.

Ul'cer, (ἔλκος,) Ul'cus, Hel'cos, Elco'sis, Elco'ma, Hel'cus, Helco'ma, a Sore, (Sc.) Sair, (Prov.) Kile, (F.) Ulcère. A solution of continuity in the soft parts, of longer or shorter standing, and kept up by some local disease or constitutional cause. Richerand makes four great distinctions between a wound and an ulcer. 1. A wound arises from the action of an extraneous body: the cause of an ulcer is inherent in the economy. 2. A wound is always idiopathic: an ulcer is always symptomatic. 3. A wound has essentially a tendency to heal, because the action of its cause has been momentary: an ulcer, on the contrary, has a tendency to enlarge, because its cause persists. 4. The treatment of a wound is purely surgical; that of an ulcer is medical as well. The immediate cause of an ulcer is perverted nutrition, the formative cells losing their plastic power. Ulcers have been variously divided, according to their nature—into simple, sinuous, fistulous, fungous, gangrenous, scorbutic, syphilitic, cancerous, scirrhous, epithelial, encephaloid, inveterate, rodent, scrofulous, phagedenic, virulent, cacoëthic, sordid, carious, varicose, &c. The treatment consists in removing, by appropriate means, the internal and the local causes which keep up the ulceration, and in exciting the vessels of the part, where necessary, by appropriate bandaging, &c.

UL'cer, A'DEN, see Beriberi—u. Canceroid, Lupus—u. Chironian, Chironium—u. Cochinchina, see Cochinchina and Beriberi.

UL'cer, COLD. A term applied by Mr. Paget to small inflammatory ulcers occurring spontaneously at the extremities of the body, sometimes preceded by gangrenous spots, and resembling in some respects ulcerated chilblains.

UL'cer, CORRODING, Ulcer, rodent—u. Delhi, see Delhi—u. Erosive, of the Derma, Lupus.

UL'cer, GOUTY. A form of ulcer, usually superficial, observed in gouty parts of the body or over gouty deposits.

UL'cer, HEMORRHAGIC. A form of ulceration characterized by occasional bleeding from its surface. It may be connected with a hemorrhagic diathesis or be an outlet for vicarious menstruation. An ulcer associated with varicose veins is usually called a varicose ulcer.

UL'cer, IRRITABLE, Neural'gic Ulcer. An ulcer, usually occurring in the tibial region, characterized by intense pain and hyperæsthesia.

UL'cer, RODENT, Lupoid or Corroding Ulcer. A destructive local cancerous affection, beginning as a dry wart, afterwards ulcerating, becoming converted into an indolent sore, without granulation. When of extensive size, it is accompanied with a fetid purulent discharge. It is to be treated by the cautery, by escharotics, or the knife.

UL'cer, ROUND, Ulcer of the stomach, perforating.

UL'cer, SCORBUTIC. An ulcer or sore modified in its progress by the general scorbutic taint.

UL'cer, SE'NILE. Dry, dusky ulcers commonly met with in the dry, withered limbs of those who have a degeneracy of the arteries, &c., from old age.

UL'cer OF THE STOMACH, PERFORATING. An ulcerated condition of the stomach, dependent on obstruction of the bloodvessels of that organ, usually occurring in the posterior wall of the pyloric portion. The perforation of the serous coat has the appearance of having been cut with a punch. It is called also Round ulcer, Ul'cus ventriculi rotundum seu perforans.

The term Gastrelco'sis has been applied generically to ulceration of the stomach from any cause.

Ulcus'culum, (dim. of ulcus.) Ulcer—u. Cancerosum, Chancre.

U'lô, (υλη,) Cicatrix.

Ule'ticus, (from ulon.) Gingivalis.

U'licus, Gingivalis.

Uli'tis, gen. Uli'tidis, (ulon, and itis.) Ouli'tis, Gingivi'tis, Inflamma'tio gingivæ, Periodonti'tis, Gingiva'rum, (F.) Ulite, Gengivite, Inflammation des gencives. Inflammation of the gums.

ULI'TIS SER'TICA, Cancer aquaticus.

Ulluco, Tropæolum tuberosum.

Ulmairé, Spiræa ulmaria.

Ulm'ria, (from ulmus.) Spiræa ulmaria—u. Palustris, Spiræa ulmaria.

Ulmus, U. campestris seu glabra seu montana seu nuda seu sativa seu sabra, Picea, Common Elm, (F.) Orme, Ormeau, Orme pyramidale ou châmpêtre. Ord. Ulmaceæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. The inner, rough bark—Ulm Cortex (Ph. B., 1867)—of this tree is inodorous, and has a bitter, austere, and mucilaginous taste. It is considered tonic, alterative, and diuretic, and has been used chiefly in lepra and other cutaneous affections. See Ulmus Americana.

ULMUS ALATA, Lynn Wahoo. The bark of the root has been used successfully as a cataplasm in phlegmonous inflammation.

ULMUS AMERICANA, U. fulva seu rubra, Rough-leaved, Red, or Slippery Elm. The inner bark—Ulmus fulva, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Ulmus, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) is highly mucilaginous, and is used in coughs, diarrhoeas, and dysenteries, and as a poultice for tumors, lacerated and contused wounds, &c. It may be employed, also, as a tent for dilating openings or passages.

ULMUS CAMPESTRIS, Ulmus—u. Fulva, U. Americana, U. rubra—u. Glabra, Ulmus—u. Montana, Ulmus—u. Nuda, Ulmus—u. Sativa, Ulmus—u. Scabra, Ulmus.

ULNA, (ὀλνῆ,) O'lenē, Foc'ilē inf'rius seu ma'jus, Can'na bra'chii, Os cu'biti inf'rius, Os procubitalē, Ou'bitus, Arun'do bra'chii ma'jor, Cu'bit. Anatomists have given this name to the bone of the forearm which forms the prominence of the elbow, during the flexion of that joint. It is the longer and larger of the two bones, and is inserted at the inner side. Its upper and larger extremity has, behind, a considerable process, called olec'ranon; and, before, a smaller one, called cor'onoid. These two eminences are separated from each other by the greater sig'moid or semilun'ar fos'sa or olec'ranoid cav'ity, which receives the articular trochlea of the humerus. The tubercle of the ulna is a small, rough spot, under the root of the coronoid process, for the insertion of the Brachialis internus. On the outside of this extremity of the bone is the less'er sig'moid cav'ity. It is articulated with the head of the radius. The inferior extremity of the cubitus, which is much smaller than the superior, and articulated with the radius, has a surface that corresponds to the fibrocartilage which separates it from the os cuneiforme; and a pointed process called sty'loid. The body of the ulna is manifestly triangular. It is articulated with the os humeri and radius, and, mediatly, with the os cuneiforme. It is developed by three points of ossification. — Also the elbow.

ULNAD, see Ulnar aspect.

ULNAIRE, Ulnar.

ULNAR, Cubital.

ULNAR ARTERY. The larger of the two subdivisions of the brachial artery, commencing immediately below the bend of the elbow, running along the ulnar side of the arm to the wrist, and passing across the palm of the hand to form the superficial palmar arch. The anterior and posterior ulnar recurrent arteries are branches of the ulnar given off in the forearm.

ULNAR ASPECT. An aspect towards the side on which the ulna is situated. (Barclay.) Ulnad is used adverbially by the same writer, to signify 'towards the ulnar aspect.'

ULNAR NERVE is a branch of the brachial plexus, from which it arises in common with the inner head of the median and internal cutaneous nerve, and is distributed to the muscles and integument of the forearm and hand.

ULNAR RECURRENT ARTERY, see Ulnar.

ULNAR VEINS are two veins, anterior and posterior, distributed to the forearm.

ULNARIS, (from ulna.) Cubital—u. Externus, see Cubital muscles—u. Gracilis, Palmaris longus—u. Internus, see Cubital muscles.

Uloc'acé, (ulon, and κακος, 'evil,') Cancer aquaticus, Stomacace.

U'lon, (ὀλον,) Gingiva.

Ulon'cus, (F.) Uloncie, (ulon, and ογκος, 'tumor,') Swelling of the gums; epulis.

Ulorrhag'ia, Ulemorrhag'ia, Oulorrhag'ia, Stomatorrhag'ia, Hæmorrhag'ia gingiva'rum, Ulorrhæ'a, (ulon, and ῥήγνυμι, 'I break forth,') Bleeding from the gums.

Ulorrhæ'a, (ulon, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') Ulorrhagia.

Ulo'sis, (ule, and the suffix osis.) Cicatrizatio.

Ulot'ica, (from ule.) Cicatrissantia.

Ulot'richi, (ὀλη, 'wood,' and τριχ, gen. τριχος, 'hair,') Those who have woolly hair.

Ultimister'nal. Professor Bécclard gave this appellation to the sixth or last bony portion of the sternum. He calls it also Ensister'nal.

Ultimum Mo'riens, 'last dying.' A term given to the part of the economy which dies last. The muscular contractility of the right auricle is said to be the last to disappear. See Punctum saliens.

U'lum, (ὀλον,) Gingiva.

U'va Cris'pa, Fucus crispus.

U'VA LATIS'SIMA, Broad Green La'ver, Green Sloke, Oys'ter green; Order, Algæ; is used at table cooked in the same way as the next, to which it is greatly inferior.

U'VA UMBILICA'LIS, Por'phyra lacinia'ta seu umbilica'lis, Lacin'iated Pur'ple La'ver, abundant on the shores of Great Britain, is pickled with salt and sold in London as La'ver. It is eaten at table, stewed with pepper, butter or oil and lemon-juice or vinegar. It has been suggested, also, as an antiscorbutic.

Um'bel, Yel'low, Cypripedium luteum.

Um'bilic, Umbilical, Umbilicus.

Umbil'ical, Um'bilic, Umbilica'lis, (F.) Ombilical, (from umbilicus.) That which belongs or relates to the navel.

UMBILICAL ARTERIES, which exist only in the fœtus, seem, as it were, continuations of the primitive iliaes. They clear the umbilical ring, and proceed to the placenta, to which they carry the residuum of the blood sent to the fœtus by the umbilical vein. As soon as respiration is established, the blood ceases to pass by the umbilical arteries, which become obliterated, as well as the vein, and are transformed into two very strong ligamentous cords,—the vein forming the Ligamen'tum rotun'dum of the liver.

UMBILICAL CORD, Funiculus umbilicalis.

UMBILICAL RE'GION, Re'gio umbilica'lis seu gas'trica seu mesogas'trica, Mesogas'trium, (F.) Région ombilicale, is the middle region of the abdomen, in which the umbilicus is placed. The sides of this are called the flanks or lum'bar re'gions. In the umbilical region are the omentum majus; the inferior extremity of the duodenum; the jejunum; and the greater part of the mesentery; the aorta; vena cava; the trunks of the renal arteries and veins; the origin of the spermatic arteries, &c.

UMBILICAL RING, An'nulus umbilica'lis, (F.) Anneau ombilical, is a fibrous ring, which surrounds the aperture of the umbilicus, and through which umbilical hernia occurs in children.

UMBILICAL VES'ICÆ, Vesicula umbilicalis.

UMBILICAL VES'SELS, (F.) Vaisseaux ombilicaux, include the two arteries and umbilical vein. The umbilical vein arises from the placenta, and terminates at the fissure on the inferior surface of the liver of the fœtus, to which it conveys the blood necessary for its nutrition.

Umbilica'lis, Umbilical.

Umbil'icated, Umbilica'tus, (F.) Ombiliqué. Depressed in the centre like the umbilicus,—as an 'umbilicated pustule.' The term Umbilication is applied to such a condition of depression.

Umbilica'tion, see Umbilicated.

Umbili'cus, Umbili'cum; Um'bo, Om'phalos, Ra'dix seu Me'dium ven'tris, Mesompha'lum, Mesom'phalum, Protme'sis (navel of a new-born child); the Um'bilic, Na'vel, (Prov.) Spoon, (from um'bo, 'the button or prominence in the middle of a buckler,' or from ὀμφαλός, or rather ομφαλός, which signifies the same, as well as the navel,) (F.) Ombilic, Nombil. A round cicatrix, about the median line of the abdomen. It is in the situation of an aperture, which, in the foetus, affords passage to the vessels of the umbilical cord.

UMBILICUS MARI'NUS, Cotyle'don mari'na, Andro'sacē, Acetab'ulum mari'num, Andro'sacē Mat-thi'oli, Fun'gus petrēus mari'nus. A submarine production, found on rocks and the shells of fishes, in the south of France. It is reputed to be anthelmintic and diuretic.

Um'bo, gen. Umbo'nis. The deepest part of the arched membrana tympani, corresponding to the termination of the handle of the malleus. Elbow, Umbilicus.

Umbrel'la Tree, (dim. of umbra, 'a shade,') Magnolia tripetala.

Umschlag, ([G.] um, 'around,' and schlagen, 'to throw,') see Compress.

Unbow'elling, Exenterismus.

Unca'ria Gam'bir, Nauclea gambir.

Un'cas, In'dian, Veratrum viride.

Un'cia, (ογγυα,) Ounce.

Un'ciform, Uncifor'mis, Uncina'tus, (uncus, and forma, 'shape,') That which has the shape of a hook.

UN'CIFORM BONE, Os uncifor'mē seu hama'tum seu uncina'tum, (F.) Os crochu. The fourth bone of the second row of the carpus. Its shape is very irregular. Inwards and forwards, it has a considerable eminence, which is curved upon itself, and gives attachment to the annular ligament of the carpus. It is articulated with the os semilunare, os magnum, os cuneiforme, and the fourth and fifth metacarpal bones. It is developed from a single point of ossification.

UN'CIFORM EM'INENCE, Hippocampus minor.

UN'CIFORM PROC'ESS, Proces'sus uncina'tus seu Blumenbach'ii, Great Proc'ess of the Eth'moid. The most considerable of the thin irregularly twisted laminae on the inferior surface of the ethmoid bone, which narrow the opening of the maxillary sinuses.

Uncina'tus, (from uncinus,) Unciform.

Un'cinus, Hook.

Uncon'scious, Non-con'scious, (un, and conscious,) (F.) Inconscient. Without cerebral appreciation, or that which occurs without such appreciation, as 'an unconscious movement.'

Un'ction, (ungere, unctum, 'to anoint,') In-unction, Unguentum, Unguentum hydrargyri.

Un'ctor, (same etymon.) The anointer in ancient bathing establishments.

Uncto'rium, Elæothesion.

Unctua'rium, Elæothesion.

Unctuos'itas Elephant'ina. An increased secretion of sebaceous matter in the congestive stage of Elephantiasis Græcorum.

Un'cus, gen. Unci, Hook.

Undercliff, Isle of Wight, Cli'mate of. The Undercliff comprehends a tract of country from Dunnose to St. Catherine's Hill, on the southeast coast, about six miles in length, and from a quarter to half a mile in breadth. It is well protected from the colder winds; and the climate is remarkably equable, as well as mild and dry, so that there are not many days during the winter in which the invalid cannot take exercise in the open air. It is an excellent climate for the pulmonary valetudinarian.

Undim'ia. A name given by Paracelsus to a tumor filled with a gelatinous matter, like the white of egg.

Undo'sus, (from unda, 'a wave,') Cymatodes.

Undula'tio, (from unda, 'a wave,') Fluctua-tion.

Unedo, gen. Unedo'nis, Arbutus unedo — u. Papyracea, Arbutus unedo.

Un'gual, Unguea'lis, Un'gueal, Ungua'lis, (from unguis, 'a nail,') Belonging or relating to the nails of the hands or feet.

UN'GUAL FUR'ROW. A transverse groove in the nail from loss of substance, — an evidence of a cachectic condition.

UN'GUAL MA'TRIX, see Nail.

Un'guen, gen. Un'guinis, (from ungere, unctum, 'to anoint,') Unguentum — u. Articulare, Synovia.

Un'guent, Ar'matory, Hoplochrysm.

Unguenta'ria, see Myristica moschata.

Unguenta'rius, Myrep'sus, Myropæ'us, Myro-po'les, Myropo'lus, Pigmenta'rius, (from ungere-tum,) One who makes and sells ointments. A perfumer.

Unguen'tum, Un'guen, Diachrysm'a, My'ron, Un'ction, Salve, (F.) Onguent, (from ungere, unctum, 'to anoint,') Ointment. Ointments are topical applications, of a consistence more or less analogous to that of lard. They are used chiefly as local applications to ulcers and wounds; but are sometimes rubbed upon a part in cutaneous affections; and, especially, where it is desired that the constituents of the ointment shall be absorbed. Ointments are of less consistence than cerates, although the terms are often used indiscriminately. Unguen'tum (Ph. U. S., 1873) is adopted as the name of Unguentum Adipis (Ph. U. S., 1863). See Unguentum ceræ; Pomatum.

UNGUEN'TUM AC'IDI CARBOL'ICI, Ointment of Carbolic Acid. (Acid. carbolic., gr. lx., Un-quent, gr. cccxx. Mix thoroughly. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used in cases in which carbolic acid is indicated externally.

UNGUEN'TUM AC'IDI NITRO'SI, Ointment of Nitrous Acid, Poma'tum seu Unguen'tum Ni'tricum seu Oxygenat'um, (F.) Pommade oxygénée, Graine oxygénée, Pommade d'Alyon. (Adip. suilli, ℞j., Acid nitros., ℥vj. Melt the fat, and rub in the acid gradually, till cold. Ph. E.) Stimulant. Used in itch and other cutaneous eruptions, and in foul ulcers.

The French Codex (1866) has also a Pommade Nitrique, P. oxygénée, composed of nitric acid and lard.

UNGUEN'TUM AC'IDI TAN'NICI, Ointment of Tannic Acid. (Acid. tannic., gr. xxx., Adipis., ℥j. Rub together until thoroughly mixed. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used like Unguentum gallæ.

UNGUEN'TUM ACONIT'ILÆ, Ointment of Aconit'ia. (Aconit., gr. viij., Sp. rectif., ℥ss., Adipis præparat., ℥j. Ph. B., 1867.) In neuralgic pains.

UNGUEN'TUM AD'IPIS, U. ceræ.

(Olei de mucilagibus, 1000 p., Ceræ flavæ, 250 p., Resinæ, Terebinthin., aa 125 p. Liquefy; strain and stir till cold. Ph. P. — Common olive oil might be substituted for the Oil of mucilages.)

UNGUEN'TUM AMMONIACA'LE GONDRE'TI, Pom-made de Gondret — u. Amygdalinum, Ceratum Galeni.

UNGUEN'TUM ANTIMO'NI, (Ph. U. S.,) U. Anti-

monia'le, U. Antimonii Tartarizati, Unguentum Antimonii Tartarizati, (Ph. B.,) U. Antimonii Potassio-tartratis, U. tartari emetici, Ointment of tar'tarized or tartarated antimony, Antimonia'li Ointment, Tar'tar emetici ointment. (Antimon. et potass. tartrat. in pulv. subtiliss., gr. c., Adipis, gr. cccc. Ph. U. S., 1873.) If a drachm of this ointment be rubbed upon any part, night and morning, it will excite, in a few days, a painful pustular eruption. Hence, it is employed as a counterirritant. This preparation is also called Ung. Tar'tari stibiatum seu emetici, Ung. e Tar'taro stibiatum, A'deps tar'tarē stibii medicatus, Ung. Tartra'tis Potas'se stibiatum, (F.) Pommade d'Autenrieth, Pommade stibiée. This method of employing the tartrate of antimony and potassa, as a revellent, is, at times, called stibioder'mic, (F.) La méthode stibio-dermique.

UNGUENTUM AQUE ROSE, Ointment of Rose water, Cold Cream. (Aque Rose, f3ij., Ol. amygdal. express., 3iijss., Cetecei, 3j., Cere albæ, gr. cxx. Melt together, in a water-bath, the oil, spermaceti, and wax; then add the rose-water, and stir while cooling. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Cooling to irritated surfaces.

UNGUENTUM ARMA'RUM, Hoplochrysa — u. Arthanite, see Arthanita — u. Articulare, Synovia.

UNGUENTUM ATROPIÆ, Ointment of Atropia. (Atropiæ, gr. viij., Spir. rectific., f3ss., Adipis præparat., 3j. M. Ph. B., 1867.) Smear around the eye to dilate the pupil.

UNGUENTUM BASILICON FLAVUM, Ceratum resinæ — u. Basilicon nigrum, Unguentum resinæ nigre — u. Basilicum viride, Unguentum subacetatis cupri.

UNGUENTUM BELLADONNÆ, Ointment of Belladonna. (Ext. belladonnæ, 3j., Aque, f3ss., Adipis, gr. cccxxx. M. Ph. U. S., 1873.) An anodyne application to irritable ulcers, &c.

UNGUENTUM BENZOINI, Ointment of Benzoin, Benzoated Lard. (Tinct. Benzoin., 3ij., Adipis, 3xvj. Melt the lard by means of a water-bath, add the tincture, and when the alcohol has evaporated, remove the ointment and stir. Ph. U. S., 1873.) The Ph. B. (1867) has a different formula, under the name of A'deps Benzoi'tus. A substitute for lard in seasons when the latter may become rancid.

UNGUENTUM CADMI'I IODIDI, Ointment of Iodide of Cadmium. (Cadmii Iodid. pulv., gr. lxij., Unguent. Simpl., 3j. M. Ph. B., 1867.)

UNGUENTUM CALOMEL'ANOS, U. Hydrargyri Subchloridi, Ointment of Cal'omel, Ointment of Subchloride of Mer'cury. (Calomel, gr. lxxx., Prepared Lard, 3j. In chronic cutaneous affections.

UNGUENTUM CALOMEL'ANOS COMPOSITUM, Compound Ointment of Cal'omel, Ban'yer's Ointment. (Calomel, 3ij., Burnt alum, 3iv., Carbonate of lead, 3iv., Venice turpentine, 3vj., Spermaceti ointment, 3jss.) In scalled head and other chronic cutaneous affections.

UNGUENTUM CANTHARIDIS, Unguentum lyttæ.

UNGUENTUM CERÆ, (al'ba vel fla'va), Unguentum simplex, (Ph. U. S., 1851,) Unguentum adipis, (Ph. U. S., 1863,) Unguentum, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Linimentum simplex, Wax Ointment, Ointment of Lard, Oil and Beeswax, (F.) Onguent de cire. (Cere flav., 3ij., Adipis, 3viij., [Ph. U. S.,] or — Cere, 3ij., Ol. oliv., 3v.)

In the Ph. B. (1867), under the name Unguentum simplex, it is prepared by melting together, White wax, 3ij., Prepared lard, 3ij., Almond oil, f3ij.

Emollient. A mild dressing. Also, the basis of most of the compound ointments.

UNGUENTUM CERA'TUM, Ceratum Galeni — u. Cerussæ, Unguentum oxidi plumbi albi, Unguentum plumbi subcarbonatis — u. Cerussæ acetatæ, Ceratum plumbi superacetatis, U. plumbi superacetatis.

UNGUENTUM CETA'CEI, U. Sper'matis Ce'ti seu al'bum, Linimentum al'bum, Spermaceti ointment, (F.) Onguent de blanc de baleine. (Cetecei, 3vj., Cere albæ, 3j., Ol. amygd., Oj., vel q. s. Ph. B., 1867.) The ordinary dressing for blisters and excoriations. See Ceratum cetacei.

UNGUENTUM CITRINUM, U. de althæâ, U. hydrargyri nitratis.

UNGUENTUM COC'ULI, Ointment of Cocculus Indicus. (Take any quantity of Cocculus Indicus; separate and preserve the kernels; beat them well in a mortar, first alone, and then with a little lard; then add lard till it amounts altogether to five times the weight of the kernels. Ph. E.) Used to destroy vermin, and to cure scabies, and ringworm of the scalp.

UNGUENTUM CONI'I, Ointment of Hemlock. (Conii fol. recent., Adipis, aa lbj. Boil the hemlock in the lard till it becomes crisp, and express through linen. Ph. L.) Used to irritable tumors and ulcers.

UNGUENTUM CON'TRA SCA'BIEM WERLHOF'II, Unguentum hydrargyri præcipitati albi.

UNGUENTUM CREASO'TI, Ointment of Creasote. (Creasot., f3ss., Adipis, 3j. Mix thoroughly. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used in chronic cutaneous affections.

It is double this strength in the Ph. B., 1867.

UNGUENTUM CU'PRI SUBACETA'TIS, Unguentum subacetatis cupri.

UNGUENTUM DIACH'YLI AL'BI, Unguentum Lithargyri. (Prepared by mixing equal parts of Litharge and Linseed oil, or by boiling together Olive oil, 3xv., Litharge, 3ij. 3vj., and Lavender oil, 3ij.) Employed in certain forms of eczema and in profuse sweating of the feet.

UNGUENTUM DIAPOMPHOL'YGOS, Unguentum oxidi zinci impuri.

UNGUENTUM DIGESTIVUM SIM'PLEX, U. Terebinthinæ et ovo'rum vitell'i, Simple digestive ointment, (F.) Onguent digestif simple. (Terebinthin. pur., 64 p., Vitell. ovorum, no. 2, vel 32 p. Mix for a long time in a glass mortar, and add, gradually, enough of the Oil of Hypericum (Milepertuis) to make a soft ointment. Ph. P.) Detergent. It may be rendered more so by adding a little of the Acetate of copper.

UNGUENTUM EL'EMI, Ointment of El'emi. (El'emi, 34, Unguent. simpl., 3j. Melt, strain through flannel, and stir until the ointment solidifies. Ph. B., 1867.) Uses, the same as the next.

UNGUENTUM EL'EMI COMPOSITUM, Unguentum e gum'mi el'emi seu de terebinthinâ et adipi'bus seu El'emi, Linimentum seu Balsamum Arcæ'i, Compound Ointment of El'emi, Balsam of Arcæus, (F.) Baume ou Onguent d'Arcéus. (El'emi, lbj., Terebinthinæ vulgaris, 3x., Sevi præparati, lbj., Olive olei, f3ij. Melt the elemi with the suet, remove it from the fire, and mix in the turpentine and oil. Strain the mixture through a linen cloth. Ph. L.) Stimulant and digestive. To keep open issues, &c.

UNGUENTUM EPISPAS'TICUM DE DAPHNÊ GNID'IO, A'deps corticē daph'nes gnid'ii medicatus, (F.) Pommade de Garou. (Adip. præpar., 320 p., Cere, 32 p., Cort. daphn. gnid., 128 p. Melt the fat and wax, and add the bark softened in water. Boil until the water is evaporated; then pass through cloth. Ph. P.) To keep open blisters, issues, &c. See Unguentum mezerei.

UNGUENTUM EPISPAS'TICUM FOR'TIUS, Cerate of cantharides — u. Epispasticum mitius, Unguentum lyttæ — u. Epispasticum viride, Unguentum lyttæ medicatum — u. Flavum, Unguentum de althæa.

UNGUENTUM GAL'LE, Ointment of Galls, O. of Nutgall. (Gallæ in pulv., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$, Adipis, $\mathfrak{Z}\text{viij}$. M. Ph. U. S., 1873.) As an astringent in piles, indolent ulcers, &c.

UNGUENTUM GAL'LE COMPOS'ITUM, U. Gallæ et Opii, U. Gallæ cum O'pio, (Ph. B., 1867.) Compound Ointment of Galls, Ointment of Galls and O'pium. (Gall. in pulv. subtil., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{vj}$, Adipis, $\mathfrak{Z}\text{vj}$, Opii pulv., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ss}$. M. Ph. L.) Used in painful hemorrhoids. $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ss}$. or $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$. of camphor is sometimes added.

UNGUENTUM E GUM'MI EL'EMI, Unguentum compositum — u. Hellebori albi, Unguentum vetratri.

UNGUENTUM HELMON'DI, (Hydrarg. ammoniat., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$, Unguent. sulphuris, $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$.) Employed in psoriasis of the scalp and face.

UNGUENTUM HYDRAR'GYRI, U. cæruleum seu Neapolitanum seu mercuria'le, Cera'tum mercuria'le, A'deps Hydrar'gyri medica'tus, Mercurial Ointment, Neapolitan ointment, Blue ointment, U'ction, (F.) Onguent mercuriel ou Napolitain.

The Strong Mercurial Ointment, Unguentum Hydrar'gyri fortius, of the London Pharmacopæias, U. Hydrar'gyri, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) is thus made: Hydrarg., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{xxiv}$, Adipis, Sevi, \mathfrak{aa} $\mathfrak{Z}\text{xij}$. Rub till the globules cease to be visible.

The Mild'er Mercurial Ointment, U. Hydrar'gyri Mit'ius, is made by adding, to one pound of the strong, two pounds of lard.

Mercurial ointment is antisyphilitic and discutient. It is rubbed on the inside of the thigh, in venereal affections; especially in those cases where mercury, given internally, runs off by the bowels. The stronger ointment is used for this purpose. The weaker is employed as a dressing, or as an application to cutaneous eruptions.

UNGUENTUM HYDRAR'GYRI AMMONIA'TI, Unguentum hydrargyri præcipitati albi — u. Hydrargyri calcis albæ, Unguentum hydrargyri præcipitati albi.

UNGUENTUM HYDRAR'GYRI COMPOS'ITUM, Compound Ointment of Mer'cury. (Unguent. hydrarg., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{vj}$, Ceræ flav., Ol. olivæ, \mathfrak{aa} $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$, Camphor, $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ss}$. Ph. B., 1867.)

UNGUENTUM HYDRAR'GYRI IO'DIDI RU'BRI, Ointment of Red Iodide of Mer'cury. (Hydrarg. iodid. rubr. in pulv. subtilis., gr. xvj., Unguent., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$. Rub together thoroughly until mixed. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Both these ointments may be applied to serofulous and indolent ulcers.

UNGUENTUM EX HYDRAR'GYRO MIT'US DIC'TUM CINE'REUM, Unguentum oxydi hydrargyri cinereum.

UNGUENTUM HYDRAR'GYRI NITRA'TIS, U. hydrargyri nitra'ti seu supernitra'tis hydrar'gyri seu hydrar'gyri compos'itum seu mercuria'le cit'rinum seu cit'rinum ad sca'biem, Bal'samum mercuria'le, A'deps hydrar'gyri nitra'te medica'tus, Ointment of Nitrate of Mer'cury, Cit'rino Ointment, (F.) Onguent de nitrate de mercure, O. citrin contre la gale, Pommade citriné. (Hydrarg., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ss}$, Acid. nitric., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ijss}$, Adipis, $\mathfrak{Z}\text{xvjss}$. Dissolve the mercury in the acid, heat the lard in an earthen vessel, and when the temperature reaches 200°, remove it from the fire. Add the mercurial solution, and stir with a wooden spatula as long as effervescence continues, and afterwards occasionally until the ointment stiffens. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

In the Ph. B. (1867) the ingredients are: Mercury, $\mathfrak{Z}\text{iv}$, Nitric acid, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}\text{xij}$, Prepared lard, $\mathfrak{Z}\text{xv}$, Olive oil, $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}\text{xxxij}$.

A milder ointment, Unguentum nitra'tis hydrar'gyri mit'ius, is made with triple the quantity of oil and lard. It is stimulant and detergent, and is much used as an application to herpes, porrigo, and cutaneous eruptions. The weaker ointment is sometimes used in ophthalmia tarsi, &c.

UNGUENTUM HYDRAR'GYRI NI'TRICOÖX'YDI, U. subnitra'tis hydrar'gyri seu Ox'ydi hydrar'gyri rubri, U. H. ox'idi rubri, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) U. dentox'ydi hydrarg. nitra'ti seu hydrargyri rubri seu ex hydrar'gyro oxyda'to rubro seu mercurii rubrum seu ophthalmicum rubrum seu subnitra'tis hydrargyrici, Bal'samum ophthalmicum rubrum, Ointment of Nitric or Red Oxide of Mer'cury, Red Precipitate Ointment, Golden Ointment, Singleton's Eye Salve, (F.) Pommade de Lyon, P. d'Oxide Ronge de Mercure. (Hydrarg. oxid. rubr. in pulv. subtiliss., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$, Unguent., gr. cccxxx. Rub the oxide of mercury with the ointment, gradually added, until they are thoroughly mixed. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

In the Ph. B. (1867) it is made by mixing Red oxide of mercury, in very fine powder, gr. 62, with Yellow wax, $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$, and Oil of almonds, $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$.

Stimulant and escharotic. Applied to foul ulcers, to inflammation of the tarsi, &c.

Belleville's Ce'rate, which has been long used in cases of scalled head, and of chronic cutaneous diseases in general, is made as follows: Plumbi acet., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$, Hydrarg. oxyd. rubr., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ss}$, Hyd. chlorid. mit., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$, Ceræ albæ, $\mathfrak{Z}\text{iv}$, Ol. oliv., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{vj}$. Melt the last two, and add the others in fine powder.

UNGUENTUM HYDRAR'GYRI OX'IDI FLA'VI, Ointment of Yellow Oxide of Mercury. (Hydrarg. Oxidi Flav. in pulv. subtiliss., gr. lx., Unguent., gr. cccxxx. Rub together until thoroughly mixed. Ph. U. S., 1873.) The oxide is perfectly amorphous, without any crystalline grains, and is therefore adapted for application to the conjunctiva.

UNGUENTUM HYDRAR'GYRI OX'IDI RU'BRI, Unguentum hydrargyri nitricooxydi — u. ex Hydrargyro oxydato rubro, Unguentum hydrargyri nitricooxydi.

UNGUENTUM HYDRAR'GYRI PRÆCIPITA'TI AL'BI, *U. Rub the iodine and iodide first with the water and then with the lard until mixed. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used as a local application to goitrous and other swellings.

Unguentum Iodi (Ph. B., 1867) is composed of Iodin., gr. xxxij., Potass. iodid., gr. xxxij., Spirit. tenuior., $\mathfrak{f}\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$, Adeps preparat., $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$.

UNGUENTUM IO'DINI COMPOS'ITUM, U. Iodin'i compos'itum, (Ph. U. S.,) Compound Ointment of Iodine. (Iodin., gr. xv., Potassii iodid., gr. xxx., Aq., $\mathfrak{M}\text{xxx}$, Adipis, $\mathfrak{Z}\text{ij}$. Rub the iodine and iodide first with the water and then with the lard until they are thoroughly mixed. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

UNGUENTUM IODINUM, U. iodini—u. Irritans, U. lyttae.

UNGUENTUM LAURINUM, O'leum lauri-num, Adeps lauro medica'tus, Bay Ointment, (F.) On-guent ou Huile ou Pommade de laurier. (Fol. lauri, 500 p., Adip. suilli, 1000 p. Bruise in a marble mortar; evaporate all humidity by boiling; and add Bay berries, in powder, 500 p. Digest and pass through linen. Ph. P.) Reputed to be corroborant and nervine. It is simply emollient.

UNGUENTUM LENITIVUM, U. de althæa—u. Liliaceum, Crinomyron—u. Lithargyri, Unguen-tum diachyli albi.

UNGUENTUM LYTTE, Unguentum canthar'idis seu vesicato'rium seu irritans seu ad vesica'ta seu infu'si mell'oēs vesicato'rii seu epispas'ticum mit'tius, Blistering Salve, Ointment of Spanish Flies, Ointment of Infusion of Spanish Flies, Milder Blistering Ointment. (Cerat. cantharidis, gr. cxx., Cerat. resin., gr. cccxl. Mix thoroughly. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is stimulant and epispastic, and is chiefly used for keeping up the discharge from a blistered surface.

UNGUENTUM LYTTE MEDICATUM, Adeps canthar'idibus medica'tus, Pomat'um seu Unguentum epispas'ticum vir'idē stim'ulans ac'ribus, Green Blistering Ointment, (F.) Pommade épispastique verte. (Pomat'um seu unguenti canthar'id., 64 p., Unguent. populei, 168 p., Ceræ albæ, 256 p., Cupri acetat., Ext. opii, āā 24 p. Melt the unguentum populeum and wax, and add as they cool the oxide of copper, cantharides, and opium. Ph. P.) Use, same as the last.

UNGUENTUM LYTTE MEDICATUM ALIUD, Adeps canthar'idibus medica'tus al'ius, Pomat'um epispas'ticum fla'vum et mit'tius, Yellow Blistering Ointment, (F.) Pommade épispastique jaune. (Pulv. cantharid., 120 p., Adip. præp., 1680 p., Aquæ, 250 p. Melt the lard, mix the cantharides, and add the water at the same time; place the whole on a gentle fire, stir continually for two hours, and add a little water to replace that which has been evaporated. Pass through linen and strain. Keep it in a water-bath, and add powdered Turmeric, 8 p. Let it cool till the superfluous liquid separates, pour off, and add Yellow wax, 250 p., Oil of lemon, 8 p. Ph. P.) A complex preparation. Use, same as the last.

An ointment, not very philosophically combined, was used by Dr. Physick, which is known by the name of "Dr. Physick's Issue Ointment." It is made by boiling half an ounce of powdered Cantharides in two ounces of Rose-water, and evaporating until one-half of the fluid is driven off, having previously added 15 grains of Tartar emetic. The decoction is to be strained, and three ounces of Olive oil, an ounce and a half of White wax, and one ounce of Spermaceti added to it, and the mixture then boiled till all the water is evaporated.

UNGUENTUM MELANICUM CAUSTICUM, Causticum Æthiopicum.

UNGUENTUM OPHTHALMICUM, Unguentum oxidi zinci impuri—u. Ophthalmicum rubrum, Unguentum hydrargyri nitricooxydi.

UNGUENTUM OPII, Ointment of Opium. (Opii pulv., f3j., Adipis, f3j. M. Ph. L.) To be used where the local application of opium by inunction is needed.

UNGUENTUM OXIDI HYDRAR'GYRI CINE'REI, Adeps seu Unguentum ex hydrar'gyro mit'tius dic'tum cine'reum, Ointment of gray oxide of mercury, (F.) Onguent gris. (Oxyd. hydrarg. ciner., p. j., Adipis suilli, p. iij. Ph. E.) Properties, like the mercurial ointment. It is not much used.

UNGUENTUM OXIDI PLUM'BI ALBI, U. cerus'sæ seu al'bum, Ointment of white oxide of lead, White ointment. (Ung. simplicis, p. v.; Oxyd. plumb. alb., p. j. Ph. E. and P.) Cooling and desiccative. Applied to excoriated and burnt surfaces.

UNGUENTUM OXIDI PLUM'BI CARBONA'TI, U. Plumbi subcarbonatis—u. Oxidi zinci, Unguentum zinci.

UNGUENTUM OXIDI ZIN'CI IMPU'RI, U. tu'tiæ seu ophthalmicum seu diapompholygos, Adeps ox'ido zin'ci medica'tus, Eye-salve, Tut'ty ointment, Ointment of impure oxide of zinc. (Linim. simpl., p. v.; Oxyd. zinc. impur. præp., p. j. Ph. E.) Generally used in ophthalmia tarsi and atonic ophthalmia.

UNGUENTUM PICIS LIQ'UIDÆ, U. Pi'cis seu e Pi'cæ, Tar Ointment. (Picis liquid., Sevi, sing., lbj. Melt, strain, and stir till cold. Ph. U. S., 1873.) In the Ph. B. (1867) it is made of tar, f3v., and yellow wax, f3ij. Stimulant and detergent. Used in tinea capitis, and other cutaneous eruptions.

UNGUENTUM PICIS NI'GRÆ, Unguentum resinæ nigræ—u. Plumbi acetatis, Ceratum plumbi superacetatis—u. Plumbi carbonatis, Unguentum plumbi subcarbonatis.

UNGUENTUM PLUM'BI COMPOSITUM, Compound Ointment of Lead. (Emp. plumbi, lbij., Ol. oliv., f3xviij., Cret. præpar., f3vj., Acid. acet. dil., f3vj. Dissolve the plaster in the oil with a slow fire; then add the chalk, and afterwards the acid, constantly stirring until they become cold. Ph. L.) Used as a dressing to flabby, indolent ulcers.

UNGUENTUM PLUM'BI IO'DIDI, Ointment of Iodide of Lead, (F.) Pommade d'Iodure de Plomb. (Plumb. iodid. in pulv. subtiliss., gr. lx., Unguent., gr. cccxxx. Ph. U. S., 1873.) In the Ph. B. (1867) it is made by mixing thoroughly Iodide of lead, in fine powder, gr. lxij., with Simple ointment, f3j. Used as a eutrophic in chronic, glandular, and other swellings.

UNGUENTUM PLUM'BI OXIDI CARBONA'TI, Unguentum plumbi subcarbonatis.

UNGUENTUM PLUM'BI SUBACETA'TIS COMPOSITUM. The Ph. B. (1867) has a formula for the preparation of this ointment somewhat different from the Ceratum Plumbi Subacetatis. The ingredients are Solution of subacetate of lead, f3vj., Camphor, gr. lx., White wax, f3viij., and Oil of Almonds, Oj.

UNGUENTUM PLUMBI SUBCARBONATIS, U. plum'bi carbonat'is (Ph. U. (Plumbi carbonat. in pulv. subtiliss., gr. lx., Unguent., gr. ccccx. Rub together until thoroughly mixed. Ph. U. S., 1873.) In the Ph. B. (1867) it is made by mixing thoroughly Carbonate of lead, in fine powder, gr. lxij., with simple ointment, 3j. Chiefly used as a dressing for burns.

UNGUENTUM PLUMBI SUPERACETATIS, U. acetat'is plum'bi seu saturninum seu nutritum seu cerus'sæ acetat'æ, Balsamum universa'le, Ointment of sugar or acetate of lead, Sat'urnine ointment. (Acetate of lead, in fine powder, gr. xij., Benzoated lard, 3j. Mix thoroughly. Ph. B., 1867.) Cooling, desiccative. Called, also, Balsamum saturninum, Butyrum satur'ni, Linimentum plumbatum, Poma'tum satur'ni, Ung. triphar'macum.

UNGUENTUM PLUMBICI CARBONATIS, Unguentum plumbi subcarbonatis.

UNGUENTUM POPULEUM, A'deps papav'erè, hyoscy'amo et belladon'nâ medica'tus, (F.) Pommade ou Onguent Populéum. (Fresh buds of the Populus nigra, 500 p., macerated in Adeps suillus prep. melted, 1500 p., for 24 hours. Preserve this. Take Black poppy leaves, Belladonna, Hyoscyamus, Black nightshade, aa 128 p.; bruise in a mortar with the former preparation; boil until all the humidity is evaporated, and strain. Ph. P.) Anodyne. Applied to local inflammations, hemorrhoids, sore nipples, cancer, &c. Green elder ointment is often sold for this. See also Populus.

UNGUENTUM POTASSÆ HYDRIODATIS, U. potass'ii io'didi, (Ph. U. S.,) Ointment of hydri'odate of potassa, O. of iodide of potassium, (F.) Pommade d'Iodure de Potassium. (Potassii Iodid. in pulv. subtiliss., gr. lx., Aque, f3ss., Adipis, gr. ccccx. Dissolve the iodide in the water boiling hot, in a warm mortar, add the lard gradually, and thoroughly mix. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

In the Ph. B. (1867) it is made by mixing Iodide of potassium, gr. lxiv., Carbonate of potash, gr. iv., Distilled water, f3j., Prepared lard, 3j. — Half a drachm of this ointment is rubbed on scrofulous glands, goitre, &c.

UNGUENTUM POTASSÆ SULPHURATÆ, Ointment of Sulphurated Pot'ash. (Potassæ sulphurat., gr. xxx., Adipis Preparat., 3j. Rub together. Ph. B., 1867.)

UNGUENTUM POTASSÆ IO'DIDI, Unguentum potassæ hydriodatis — u. Pulveris meloës vesicatorii, Cerate of cantharides.

UNGUENTUM RESINÆ. (Resin., 3viij., Cere flavæ, 3iv., Unguent. simpl., 3xvj. Melt with a gentle heat, strain the mixture while hot, through flannel, and stir constantly while it cools. Ph. B., 1867.) It is the Ceratum resinæ, Ph. L.

UNGUENTUM RESINÆ FLAVÆ, Ceratum resinæ flavæ.

UNGUENTUM RESINÆ NIGRÆ. U. resinæ nigrum seu basil'icon nigrum seu Pi'cis nigrae seu Pi'cis tetraphar'macum, Black basil'icon, Black resin ointment, Ointment of pitch, Ointment of black pitch. (Resin. nigr., Cere flavæ, Resinæ flav., aa 3ix., Olei olivæ, Oj. Ph. L.) Uses, the same as those of Ceratum resinæ or Yellow basil'icon.

UNGUENTUM RESINÆ PI'NI SYLVES'TRIS COMPOSITUM, Unguentum de althæâ — u. Resinosum, Ceratum resinæ flavæ — u. Resumptivum, Unguentum de althæâ — u. Sabinæ, Ceratum sabinæ.

UNGUENTUM SAMBU'CI, U. sambuci'num seu ner'vium, Green ointment, El'der ointment, (F.) Onguent de sureau. (Sambuci flor., lbij., Adipis prep., lbij. Boil. Ph. L.) Emollient.

superacetatis — u. ad Scabiem Zelleri, Unguentum hydrargyri præcipitati albi — u. Simplex, Ceratum Galeni, Unguentum ceræ — u. Solidum de cicutâ, Emplastrum cicutæ — u. Spermatis ceti, Unguentum cetacei.

UNGUENTUM STRAMO'NII, Ointment of Stramo'nium, Stramo'nium Ointment. (Ext. stramon., 3j., Aq., f3ss., Adipis, gr. ccccx. Rub the extract with water until uniformly soft, and then add the lard. Ph. U. S., 1873.) An anodyne ointment to irritable ulcers, hemorrhoids, &c.

UNGUENTUM SUBACETATIS CU'PRI, U. cu'pri subaceta'tis seu deter'gens seu basil'icum vir'idè seu æru'ginis, Balsamum seu Cera'tum seu Unguentum vir'idè, Ointment of subac'etate of cop'per, Ver'digris ointment. (Cu'pri subacet. in pulv. subtiliss., 3j., Ung. simpl., 3xv. Add the subacetate to the ointment previously melted with a moderate heat, and stir till cold.) Detergent and escharotic.

UNGUENTUM SULPHURATUM AD SCA'BIEM, A'deps sulphurè et ammo'niæ muriat'è medica'tus. (Adipis, 120 p., Sulph. lot., 60 p., Ammonis muriat., Aluminæ sulphat., aa 4 p.; fiat unguentum. Ph. P.) Antipsoric.

Bail'ey's Itch Ointment is composed of olive oil, lard, nitre, alum, sulphate of zinc, and cinnabar; scented with oil of aniseed, oil of origanum, and oil of spike, and colored with alkanet root.

UNGUENTUM SULPHURATUM ALCALI'NUM AD SCA'BIEM, A'deps sulphurè et carbonat'è potass'æ medica'tus, Hel'merich's Al'caline Sulphurated Itch Ointment, (F.) Pommade antipsorique de Hel'merich, Pommade de Helmerich. (Adip. prep., 800 p., Sulphur. lot., 200 p., Carbonat. potass. pur., 100 p.; fiat ung. Ph. P.) Use, same as the last.

Bate'man's Itch Ointment resembles this. It is colored with cinnabar, and scented with essence of bergamot.

UNGUENTUM SULPHURIS, U. e sulphurè, Sulphur ointment. (Sulph., 3j., Adip., 3ij. Ph. U. S., 1873. Rub together until thoroughly mixed. — In the Ph. B. (1867) Sulphur, 3j., Lard, 3iv.) Used chiefly in itch, and some herpetic affections.

UNGUENTUM SULPHURIS COMPOSITUM, U. Antipso'ricum, Compound Sulphur Ointment, Itch Ointment, Jack'son's Itch Ointment, (F.) Pommade Antipsorique de Jasser. (Sulph. sublim., lbss., Veratri rad. contus., 3ij., Potassæ nitrat., 3j., Saponis mollis, lbss., Adipis, lbjss., Ol. bergamot., ʒxxx. Ph. L.) The Unguentum Sulphuris Compositum of the older Ph. U. S. was made as follows: — Sulphur., 3j., Hydrargyri ammoniat., Acid. benzoic., aa 3j., Ol. bergamot., Acid. sulphuric., aa f3j., Potassæ nitrat., 3ij., Adipis, lbss. To the melted lard add the other ingredients, and stir till cold. Use, the same as the last; but it is more stimulating.

UNGUENTUM SULPHURIS IO'DIDI, Ointment of Iodide of Sulphur. (Sulphur. iodid. in pulv. subtiliss., 3ss., Adipis, 3j. Rub the iodide with the lard gradually added until mixed. Ph. U. S., 1873.) In the Ph. B. (1867) it is made by rubbing together Iodide of sulphur, gr. xxx., and Prepared lard, 3j. An excellent application in chronic cutaneous affections.

UNGUENTUM SUSI'NUM, Crinomyron.

UNGUENTUM TABAC'I, Tobacco Ointment. (Tabac. in pulv., 3ss., Adipis, 3viij., Aque, q. s. Moisten the tobacco with water, and, by percolation, pass water through it until four fluidounces are obtained. Evaporate to the consistence of a soft extract, and mix with the lard. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Applied to irritable ulcers, tinea capitis, &c.

UNGUENTUM TAR'TARI EMET'ICI, U. antimonii — u. Tartari stibiati, U. antimonii — u. e Tartaro potassæ stibiati, U. antimonii — u. Tartratis potassæ stibiati, U. antimonii.

UNGUENTUM TEREBINTHINÆ, Ointment of Turpentine. (Oil of Turpentine, ℥j., Resin, in coarse powder, gr. lx., Yellow wax, Prepared lard, āā ℥ss. Melt together. Ph. B., 1867.) Uses, the same as Ceratum Resinæ or Yellow Basilicon.

UNGUENTUM VERA'TRI, U. Vera'tri al'bi seu helleb'ori al'bi, White hellebore ointment. (Veratr. pulv., ℥ij., Adipis, ℥viij., Olei limon., ℥xx.) Used in cases of itch, where sulphur is objected to. It is not equally efficacious.

The principal ingredients in the Ointment of Veratrum, Ph. E., were white hellebore and muriate of ammonia.

UNGUENTUM VERA'TRIÆ, Ointment of Vera'tria, Vera'tria Ointment. (Veratr., gr. xx., Adipis, ℥j. Mix. Ph. U. S., 1873.) In the British Pharmacopœia (1867) it is directed to be made of Veratria, gr. viij., Prepared lard, ℥j., Olive oil, ℥ss., well mixed together. To be rubbed on the part in neuralgic and other pains.

UNGUENTUM AD VESICA'TA, U. lyttæ—u. ad Vesicatoria, Cerate of cantharides—u. Vesicatorium, Unguentum lyttæ—u. Viride, Unguentum subacetatis cupri.

UNGUENTUM ZIN'CI, U. ox'idi zin'ci seu zin'ci ox'idi, (Ph. U. S.,) Zinc ointment, Ointment of Oxide of Zinc. (Zinci oxid., gr. lxxx., Unguent. benzoïn., gr. cccc.; mix. Ph. U. S., 1873.) In the Ph. B. (1867) it is made by adding Oxide of Zinc, gr. lxxx. to Benzoeated lard, ℥j. Use, the same as that of the Unguentum tutie.

UNGUENTUM ZIN'CI OX'IDI, U. zinci.

Un'gues Adun'ci, 'hooked nails,' see Onychophytosis.

UN'GUIS OS, Os lacrymal'e, Lach'rymal bone. A small, quadrilateral, very thin, and semitransparent bone, which has been compared to a human nail, and is situate at the anterior and inner part of the orbit. It aids in the formation of the lachrymal gutter and the nasal duct. It is articulated with the frontal, superior maxillary, ethmoid, and inferior spongy bones, and is developed by a single punctum ossificationis.

Un'gula Caballi'na, 'horse's hoof,' Tussilago.

Un'gulæ Palpebra'rum, 'hoofs of the eyelids,' see Tarsus.

Unhealth'y, Sickly.

U'nicornroot, Aletris farinosa, Chamælorium luteum.

Uniloc'ular, Unilocula'ris, (unus, 'one,' and loculus, [diminutive of locus,] 'a cell.') Having one cell or cavity; as biloc'ular means having two cells or cavities; multiloc'ular, having many.

U'nio, gen. Unio'nis, Pearl.

Unio'culus, (unus, 'one,' and oculus, 'eye,') Cyclops, Monoculus.

U'nion by the First and Sec'ond Inten'tions, see Intention.

Unipa'riens, Uniparous.

Unip'arous, Unipa'rient, Unipa'riens, (unus, 'one,' and pario, 'I bring forth.') Producing one at a birth.

Unip'olar, (unus, 'one,' and polus, 'pole,') see Neurine.

Unise'ma Deltifo'lia, (unus, 'one,' and semen, 'seed' [?],) Ponteder'ia corda'ta, Shorel Pick'erele-weed, Pond Shovel, Shovelleuf, Water Plantain.

An indigenous plant, Ord. Pontederiaceæ, Sex. Syst. Hexandria Monogynia, which grows in water, and flowers from June to August. The root is emollient and astringent.

U'nit of Heat, see Heat.

Unitaires (Monstres) (F.), (from unitas, 'oneness,') A class of monsters in which are found only the complete or incomplete elements of a single individual; in contradistinction to Compound monsters, (F.) Monstres composés, in which there are the complete or incomplete elements of more than one.

Unité de Chaleur, see Heat.

Uni'ting Ban'dage, (from unire, unitum,—unus, 'one,'—'to join into one,') (F.) Bandage unissant. A bandage for bringing the edges of a wound into approximation. The arrangement of such a bandage differs according as the wound is transverse or longitudinal.

Univ'ocal Genera'tion, (unus, 'one,' and vox, gen. vocis, 'voice,') see Generation.

Unoc'ulus, (unus, 'one,' and oculus, 'eye,') Borgne, Cyclops, Monoculus.

Uno'na Polycar'pa, Cœlocline polycarpa.

Unor'ganized, Inorganic.

Un'striped Mus'cular Fi'bre, see Muscular fibre.

Un'well, see Indisposition. 'To be unwell,'—and, in Scotland, 'to alter,'—is, popularly, to menstruate.

U'pas. A word used in the Archipelagos of Molucca and Sunda, and signifying Veg'etable Poi'son; I'po, Bo'hon, Po'hon, or Boa or Bo'on U'pas, Po'hon Antiar, Upas Antiar, Ants'jar. A substance used by the natives of those places for poisoning their arrows. The smallest quantity is capable of destroying the largest animal. The tree which produces it is said to be the Antiar'is seu I'po Toxicaria, Toxicaria Macassar'ensis. Another species of upas, U. Tieuté, Tshettik or Tjettek, is the produce of a Strychnos, S. Tieuté. Upas antiar, like corroval and vao, the South American arrow poisons, appears to kill by paralyzing the heart; while U. tieuté causes the most violent convulsions. Many idle stories are told regarding the upas tree, most of which are fabulous.

U'rachus, (U'racus, Urinac'ulum, uron, and εχω, 'I contain,') (F.) Ouraque. The urachus, in certain animals, is a long membranous canal, which arises from the bladder, makes its exit from the abdomen by the umbilicus, and terminates in the pouch called allantois. According to Sabatier, this is the arrangement of the urachus in the human foetus; but Bichat and other anatomists consider, that when the canal exists in it, it is a malformation. They regard it as a kind of suspensory ligament of the bladder, Ligamentum suspensorium u'rachi seu vesicæ, extending from the top of that organ to the umbilicus; and, at the umbilicus, confounded with the abdominal aponeurosis.

Uracrati'a, (uron, a, priv., and κρατος, 'power,') Enuresis.

U'racus, Urachus.

Ura'mia, Ura'mia, (F.) Urémie, Uroémie, (uron, and αἷμα, 'blood,') A condition of the blood in which it contains, or is presumed to contain, urea, and to give rise to sundry morbid phenomena implicating the nervous centres more especially.

Ura'mic, Ura'micus, (F.) Urémique. Relating or appertaining to uræmia.

Ura'li, Curare.

U'rana, (from uron,) Ureter.

U'rané, (ουραν,) Urinal.

Ura'rin, Curarin.

Uranisconi'tis, (uraniscus, and itis,) Palati'tis, (F.) Palatite. Inflammation of the palate.

Uranis'coplas'ty, Uraniscoplas'ticé, (uraniscus, and πλαστικός, 'forming.') The operation of engrafting in case of deficiency of the soft palate.

Uraniscorra'phia, (uraniscus, and πάγη, 'a suture,') Staphylorrhaphy.

Uranis'cus, (ουρανικός, 'a round ceiling or canopy,') Palate.

Uranoplasty, Staphyloplasty.

Uranorra'phia, Staphylorrhaphy.

Uranus, (ουρανός, 'heaven,') Palate.

Uraposte'ma, gen. Uraposte'matis, Abscess'us urino'sus seu urina'lis, Ura'de'ma, (uron, and αποστήμα, 'an abscess,') A tumefaction produced by the escape of urine. An abscess containing urine.

Ura'ri, Curare.

U'ras, gen. Ura'tis, Urate.

U'rate, U'ras, Lith'ate, Li'thas, (from uron.)

A generic name for salts, formed by the combination of uric or lithic acid with different bases. U'rate or Lith'ate of So'da, for example, is found in arthritic and certain urinary concretions; U'rate or Lith'ate of Ammo'nia in certain urinary deposits. The lateritious deposits are formed of amorphous urates. The U'rate of Ammo'nia, Ammoniz' U'ras, is used externally as an ointment in chronic cutaneous affections. The U'rate of Quinia, a soluble yellow salt, has been employed in intermittents.

Ure'a or U'rea, Ure'um, U'ren, Uren'ium, U'ricum, Mat'e'ria urino'sa, Princip'ium seu Sal urino'sum, Neph'r'in, (F.) Urée, (from uron.) A white, pearly, brilliant substance, in transparent plates, inodorous, and of a cool taste; very soluble in water; deliquescent, and soluble in alcohol. It exists, in great quantity, in the urine; and is an essential part of it. It has been used as a diuretic. Dose, gr. xv. to ℥j. Nitrate of Urea has been used in like cases, in doses of 2 to 10 grains in the day, in solution or in pill.

Ure'al or U'real, Urea'lis. Relating or appertaining to urea.

Ureoc'hysis, Urech'ysis, (uron, and εκχysis, 'effusion,') Effusion of urine into the areolar membrane.

Ure'do, gen. Ure'dinis, (urere, 'to burn,') Urticaria.

Urée, Urea.

Ure'ma, gen. Ure'matis, (ουρημα,) Urine.

Urémie, Uræmia.

Urémique, Uræmic.

U'ren, Urea.

Uren'ium, Urea.

U'rens, (from urere, 'to burn,') Caustic.

Ureorrhæ'a, (uron, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') Diabetes.

Uresisæsthe'sis, (uresis, and αἰσθησις, 'feeling,') Diuresisæsthesis.

Ure'sis, (ουρησις,) Micturition.

Ure'ter, gen. Urete'ris, (ουρητηρ,) U'ra'na, Ve'na al'ba re'num, Canal'is ner'veus fistulo'sus re'num, Duc'tus seu Duc'tor Uri'næ, Vas urina'rium, (F.) Urétère. A long, excretory canal—membranous and cylindrical—which conveys the urine from the kidney to the bladder. It extends, obliquely, between the pelvis of the kidney, with which it is continuous, and the bas-fond of the bladder, into which it opens. It enters at the posterior and inferior part, for some distance between the coats, and opens into the cavity of the bladder, at the posterior angle of the Trigone vésical. The ureter is formed of an exterior, white, opaque, and fibrous membrane; and of an inner, which is mucous.

Ureteral'gia, (ureter, and αλγος, 'pain,') Pain in the course of the ureter,—as from calculus, Ureteral'gia calculo'sa.

URETERAL'GIA CALCULO'SA, see Ureteralgia—E. Inflammatoria, Ureteritis.

Urétère, Ureter.

Ureter'icus, (from ureter.) An epithet for ischury, &c., arising from an affection of the ureter.

Ureteri'tis, gen. Ureteri'tidis, Ureteral'gia in- flammato'ria, Ureterophlegma'sia, (ureter, and ίτις.) Inflammation of the ureter; generally caused by calculus.

Ureterolith'icus, (ureter, and λίθος, 'a stone,') An epithet applied to ischury or other affection caused by a stone in the ureter.

Ureterol'ithus. (Same etymon.) Calculus in the ureter.

Ureterophlegma'sia, (ureter, and phlegmasia, 'inflammation,') Ureteritis.

Ureterophlegmat'icus, (ureter, and φlegμα, 'phlegm or mucus,') Any affection caused by mucus accumulated in the ureter.

Ureteropy'icus, (ureter, and πυον, 'pus,') An epithet applied to affections caused by the presence of pus in the ureter.

Ureterorrhag'ia, (ureter, and ῥαγή, 'rupture,') Hemorrhage from the ureter.

Ureterostomat'icus, (ureter, and στόμα, 'orifice,') That which is dependent upon obstruction of the orifice of the ureter.

Ureterothrombo'ides, (ureter, θρομβος, 'grumous blood,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Ischury from grumous blood in the ureter.

Ure'thra, (ουρηθρα, from ουρω, 'I pass the urine,') Canal'is seu Meat'us seu Duc'tus urina'rius, U'rias, Ure'tra, Fistula urina'ria, Pter urina'rium seu uri'næ, (F.) Urèthre, Urètre. The excretory ducts for the urine in both sexes; and for the sperm in man. In the latter, it is 8 or 10 inches long; and extends from the neck of the bladder, os'tium vesica'le, to the extremity of the penis, in which its external aperture, os'tium cutaneum, is situate. In the male urethra, three portions are distinguished: 1. A prostat'ic por'tion, Par's prostat'ica, near the bladder, about an inch and a quarter in length, which traverses the prostate gland. 2. A mem'branous por'tion, Isth'mus ure'thræ, Par's ure'thræ membrana'cea, Par's muscula'ris seu interfascia'lis seu pelvi'na seu nu'da, (F.) Portion symphysaire, from 8 to 10 lines long, which is separated from the rectum by the areolar tissue only. 3. A spon'gy por'tion, Par's spongio'sa seu cavernosa, (F.) Portion spongioculaire, which expands, anteriorly, to form the glans, and which commences at the bulb of the urethra. See Corpus spongiosum urethrae. Before opening externally, the canal has a dilatation, called the Fos'sa seu Fo'vea seu Fossic'ula navicula'ris seu Morgagn'i. On the interior of the urethra two white lines are perceptible—the one above, the other below. The latter commences at the verumontanum; and at the surface of this, the ejaculatory ducts and prostatic ducts open. The urethra is lined, in its whole extent, by a mucous membrane; on which are seen, particularly at the bulb, the orifices of a number of follicular ducts, Lacu'næ or Si'nuses or Foram'ina of Morgagn'i, Si'nus muc'o'si, (F.) Lacunes de Morgagni, proceeding from or constituting the Glands of Morgagni or of Littre, (F.) Glandes de Morgagni ou de Littre, Glandule Littre'nae. At about an inch and a half from the opening of the meatus, one of these lacunæ is generally found, much larger than the rest, and is named Lacu'na mag'na. The arteries of the urethra are numerous, and proceed from the internal pudic,—the largest branches entering the bulb. The veins follow the course of the arteries. The lymphatics pass into the inguinal and hypogastric plexuses. The nerves come from the pudic and gluteal. In the female, the urethra is only about an inch long. It is wider than in man, and susceptible of great dilatation. It is very wide at its commencement; and descends obliquely forwards, to terminate at the top of the external aperture of the vagina by the meat'us urina'rius, os'tium vagina'le ure'thræ. In its course, it is slightly curved, the concavity being forwards.

URE'THRA, BLIND DUCTS OF THE, see Cæcus—

u. Mucous lacunæ of the, see Cæcus—u. Stricture of the, Urethrostenosis.

URE'THRA, VAS'CLAR TU'MOR OF, Ure'thral Hemorrhoid or Polypus. A small scarlet, extremely sensitive, spongy vegetation at the opening of the female urethra. See Hæmorrhoids.

Ure'thral or U'rethral, Urethra'lis, Ure'thricus. Relating to the urethra.

URE'THRA' FEVER, Fever, urethral—u. Hemorrhoids, Urethra, vascular tumor of—u. Polypus, Urethra, vascular tumor of—u. Rheumatism, Rheumatism, urethral.

Urethral'gia, (urethra, and αλγος, 'pain.') Pain in the urethra; Gonorrhœa.

Urèthre, Urethra.

Urethremphrax'is, Urethrophrax'is.

Urethri'tis, (urethra, and itis.) Inflammation of the urethra; Gonorrhœa.

Ure'throblennorrhœ'a, (urethra, βλεννα, 'mucus,' and ῥέω, 'I flow.') Gonorrhœa; gleet.

Ure'throce'lê, (urethra, and κηλη, 'tumor,') Ure'throcele. A thickening of the cellular tissue surrounding the female urethra, having the appearance of a tumor, and leading at times to ulceration and vesical catarrh.

Ure'throcystauch'enotom'ia, (urethro, cystauchen, 'neck of the bladder,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut,') see Lithotomy.

Ure'throcys'teocœneury'smatotom'ia, (urethra, κυστις, 'the bladder,' ανευρυσμα, 'dilatation,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut,') see Lithotomy.

Ure'throcy'steotrache'lotom'ia, (urethra, κυστις, 'the bladder,' τραχηλος, 'neck,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut,') see Lithotomy.

Ure'throhæmorrhag'ia, (urethra, αἷμα, 'blood,' and ῥήγνυμι, 'I break forth,') Urethrorrhagia.

Urethrophrax'is, Urethremphrax'is, (urethra, and φρασσα, 'I obstruct,') Obstruction of the urethra.

Ure'throplas'tic, Ure'throplas'ticus, (urethra, and πλασσω, 'I form,') An epithet given to the operation, Ure'throplasty, which supplies defects in the canal of the urethra.

Ure'throplasty, see Urethroplastic.

Urethror'aphy, Urethrorrhaphy.

Urethrorrhag'ia, Urethrohæmorrhag'ia, Caulorrhag'ia seu Hæmatu'ria stillatit'ia, (urethra, and ῥήγνυμι, 'I break out,') Hemorrhage from the urethra.

Urethror'r'haphy, Urethrorrhaph'ia, Urethrophaphy, (urethra, and ῥαφη, 'a suture,') 'suture of the urethra.' The operation of closing a urethral fistula by suture.

Urethrorrhœ'a, (urethra, and ῥέω, 'I flow,') A discharge of any kind from the urethra.

Ure'throscope, Urethrosco'pium, (urethra, and σκοπεω, 'I examine,') An instrument on the principle of the ophthalmoscope, laryngoscope, &c., for inspecting the interior of the urethra.

Ure'throscopy, (F.) Urèthrosco'pie. Inspection of the interior of the urethra.

Ure'throstenosis, Strictu'ra ure'thræ, Urostenosis, Urethrosten'ia, (F.) Urèthrosténie, Rétrécissement de l'Urèthre, (urethra, and στενωσις, 'narrowness,') Stricture of the urethra. This may be spasmodic, or organic, requiring dilatation or cutting. Organic stricture is caused by the contraction of inflammatory deposit upon, within, or beneath the mucous membrane, or of the cicatrix of a ruptured or injured urethra; the former being simple organic stricture, the latter traumatic or cicatricial stricture. Other varieties are described according to the nature of the obstruction, as whipcord, ring, bridle and ribbon strictures.

Ure'throtome, Urethrot'omus, (F.) Urèthrotome, (urethra, and τεμνω, 'I cut,') An instrument so called by Le Cat, with which he divided the skin and urethra, in lithotomy. An instrument for dividing strictures of the urethra.

Ure'throtomy, Urethrotom'ia, Stricturot'omy. An operation, which consists in opening the urethra with the Urethrotome, for the removal of stricture. See Boutonnière.

Ure'throvag'inal. Relating to the urethra and vagina, as Urethrovaginal fistula.

Urethrymeno'des, (urethra, ἔμην, 'a membrane,' and odes.) That which is caused by a membrane formed in the urethra.

Uret'ics, (from uron.) Medicines which influence the urinary secretion.

Uri'asis, (from uron.) Lithia, Uresis.

U'ric Ac'id, Ac'idum u'ricum seu urolith'icum seu lith'icum, Lith'ic, Uryl'ic, Cal'culous, Bezoürdic, Lithia'sic or Lithen'ic Acid, (F.) Acide urique ou lithique ou lithénique ou lithiasique ou de l'urine.

An acid which exists in human urine, chiefly, if not wholly, in the form of urate of soda or urate of ammonia, and which in combination constitutes the greater part of urinary calculi. It is very sparingly soluble, and often deposited in combination from the urine in health. See Calculi.

U'ric Ox'ide, Ox'idum u'ricum, Xan'thic ox'ide, Xan'thine, U'rous ac'id. A substance not discovered in healthy urine, although probably bearing some relation to the yellow coloring matter. It is a very rare ingredient of calculous concretions, whose history is little known.

Uricæ'mia, (uric [acid], and αἷμα, 'blood,') A term proposed by Professor Flint for the condition of the blood in which there is presumed to be an excess of uric acid.

U'ricum, Urea.

U'ricus, (from uron.) Urinary.

Uridro'sis, (uron, and ἰδρως, 'sweat,') Urinous sweating, (F.) Sueur urineuse.

U'rinary, Urina'rius, Urina'lis, Urino'sus, U'ricus, Uret'icus, (F.) Urinaire, (from urina.) That which relates to the urine.

U'RINARY APPARA'TUS, Urinary organs.

U'RINARY BLAD'DER, the Blad'der, Ves'ica Urina'ria, Cys'tis, Urocys'tis, (F.) Vessie. A musculomembranous reservoir, intended for the reception of the urine, until the accumulation of a certain quantity solicits its excretion. The bladder is situate in the hypogastric region, between the rectum and pubis in man, and between the pubis and vagina in the female. Its upper region is not covered, except by the peritoneum, posteriorly. From its centre arises the urachus. Its lower region is bounded, anteriorly, by the prostate, in man; and rests on the vesiculae seminales and rectum. In the female, it corresponds to the vagina. The lowest portion of this region bears the name Bas-fond. The anterior surface of the organ is not covered by peritoneum. It is attached to the symphysis pubis by a fibrocellular expansion called the anterior ligament. The posterior ligaments or rectovesical folds—pliœ semilunares—are duplicatures of the peritoneum on its posterior surface, which extend from this surface to the rectum in the male, and to the uterus in the female. The bladder is composed of a serous membrane, formed by the peritoneum; of a muscular membrane; of a somewhat thick layer of areolar tissue; and is lined on its inner surface by a mucous membrane, which is sometimes raised up, here and there, in long prominences or columns by the muscular fibres beneath. To this condition, the French anatomists give the term vessie à colonnes. In the bas-fond the two ureters open, and the urethra commences; and the triangular space, which the apertures of these three canals leave between them, is termed, by the French, the Trigone vésical or Vésical triangle, Trigonus seu Trigōnum vesicæ seu Lietaud'i, Corpus trigōnum. In the orifice of the urethra, which is also called the neck of the bladder, there is, at its lower part, a more or less prominent tubercle, which is formed by the anterior angle of the Trigone vésical, and is called the Vésical uvula, Uvula vesicæ, Valvula vesico-urethralis seu pyloïca, (F.) Luette vésicale.

The arteries of the bladder proceed from the hypogastric, umbilical, sciatic, middle hemorrhoidal, and internal pudic. Its veins, which are more numerous than the arteries, open into the hypogastric venous plexus. Its nerves emanate from the sciatic and hypogastric plexus; and its lymphatic vessels pass into the hypogastric ganglia.

U'INARY CAL'CULI. The calculi which form in the urinary passages. See Calculi, urinary.

U'INARY FEVER, Fever urethral.

U'INARY FIS'TULA. An abnormal communication between the urinary passages and the external surface, as the perineum and scrotum. Urine, in greater or less quantity, sometimes finds an outlet through it. The fistula may be simple or attended with induration and loss of substance.

U'INARY OR'GANS, Urinary apparatus, Organa uropoëtica, Apparatus uropoëticus. The organs concerned in the formation of urine—the kidneys. The common acceptation includes, also, the bladder and urinary passages.

U'INARY PAS'SAGES, (F.) Voies urinaires. The aggregate of canals and cavities intended to contain the urine and convey it externally. These ways are composed of excretory ducts, which form the tubular portion of the kidney; of calices; pelvis; ureters; bladder; and urethra.

Urina'tion, (from urina.) Micturition. M. Béraud elaborately defines it after Ch. Robin, — a function, the result of which is the expulsion of matters principally solid, but held in solution, which have become improper for nutrition.

Urinato'rium, (from urina.) Urinal.

U'rine, Uri'na, U'ron, (σῦρον,) Ure'ma, Lo'tium, Lot, La'pis aur'eus, Omich'ma, Recrementa seu Retrimen'ta vesicæ, A'qua pe'dum, A'qua, Water, (old Eng.) Stale, Lee, Chamber-lee, (Prov.) Herrin, Netting, Saag. An excremental fluid; secreted by the cortical part of the kidney, filtered through the tubular portion, poured guttatim from the apices of the tubular papillæ into the pelvis of the kidney, and transmitted by it to the ureters, which convey it slowly, but in a continuous manner, into the bladder, where it remains deposited, until its accumulation excites a desire to void it. The excretion of the fluid takes place through the urethra, and is caused by the action of the abdominal muscles and diaphragm and the contraction of the fibrous coat of the bladder. Urine is transparent; of a citron-yellow color; of a peculiar odor, and of an acid, saline, and slightly bitter taste. That which is passed some time after taking fluid is less colored, and less odorous and dense than that which is voided several hours after eating. The first is the Uri'na potûs, (F.) Urine de la Boisson ou des Boissons, U'rine of drink; the latter, Uri'na san'guinis, (F.) Urine de la digestion, Urine de la cœction, Urine cuite ou du Chyle, Cœcted u'rine, U'rine of diges'tion. Three distinct varieties of urine may, according to Dr. Golding Bird, be recognized: First. That passed some little time after drinking freely of fluids, which is generally pale, and of low specific gravity—1.003 to 1.009—Uri'na potûs. Secondly. That secreted after the digestion of a full meal; s. g. 1.020 to 1.028, or even 1.030—Urina chy'li seu ci'bi. Thirdly. That secreted independently of the immediate stimulus of food and drink, as after a night's rest, which is usually of average density—1.015 to 1.025, and presents the essential characters of urine—Uri'na san'guinis. The average quantity of urine secreted in the twenty-four hours in health is estimated by Dr. Parkes to amount to 52½ fluid-ounces.

The following are the ordinary constituents of healthy human urine:—urea, uric acid, hippuric acid; extractive matters, embracing alcohol extract, spirit extract, and water extract, with their respective constituents; mucus; brown coloring matter of the urine, (hæmaphæin); red coloring matter of the urine, (uroerythrin); carbonic, lactic, hydrochloric, sulphuric, phosphoric, silicic, and hydrofluoric acids; soda; potassa; ammonia; lime; magnesia; and peroxide of iron. The proportion of solid matters in 1000 parts of urine may vary from 30 to 70 and upwards. The following table expresses the relative amounts of the different components in every 100 parts of the solid matter, according to the analysis of different observers:

	Berzelius.	Lehmann.	Simon.	Marchand.
Urea,	45.10	49.68	33.80	48.91
Uric acid,	1.50	1.61	1.40	1.59
Extractive matter,
Ammonia salts,	36.30	28.95	42.60	32.49
and Chloride of sodium,
Alkaline sulphates,	10.30	11.58	8.14	10.18
Alkaline phosphates,	6.88	5.96	6.50	4.57
Phosphates of lime and magnesia,	1.50	1.97	1.59	1.81

Its average specific gravity is 1.015.

Dr. Golding Bird obtained the following results on examining 1000 parts of urine passed in health after 10 hours' fasting; and after dinner in the evening.

	Urina sanguinis.	Urina cibi.

The following table gives an analysis of the chief constituents of the urine excreted by a healthy male adult in the twenty-four hours. It must be borne in mind, however, that even in health, each of these constituents may vary under special circumstances. It is compiled from the observations of Dr. Parkes and other authorities on the subject.—(Kirkes, Handbook of Physiology, Phila., 1873, p. 358.)

Water.....	52 fluidounces.
Urea.....	5124 grains.
Uric acid.....	85 "
Hippuric acid—uncertain.....	10 to 15 "	(probably.)
Sulphuric acid.....	31-11 "
Phosphoric acid.....	45 "
Chlorine.....	105 "
Chloride of ammonium.....	35-25 "
Potash.....	58 "
Soda.....	125 "
Lime.....	3-5 "
Magnesia.....	3 "
Mucus.....	7 "
Extractives:—Creatin, Creati- nin, Pigment, Xanthin, Hy- poxanthin, Resinous matter, &c.....	154 "

The urine, when first passed, is generally acid, and this has been ascribed to uric acid, hippuric acid or lactic acid. It is, doubtless, however, owing to the acid phosphates present.

Sometimes, the urine, in health and disease, exhibits appearances that have received special names. Thus, that which is characterized by a deficiency of solid matters generally, has been called Hydruria, (ὑδρῦρ, 'water;') by a deficiency of urea, Anazoturia, (αν, privative, and azote;) by a superabundance of urea, Azoturia; by the presence of albumen, Albuminuria; by greater density, Banuria. Urine in which the deposit consists of lithic acid, and the lithates, has been termed Lithuria; and that in which the deposit consists of the earthy and earthy alkaline phosphates, Phosphuria, Ceramuria, (κεραμῦρ, 'pot-ter's earth,') &c., &c. At times, a pellicle forms on the surface, (Cre'mor urinae), which consists of mucus and some salts: at others, there is a cloud, (Nube'ula, Nubes), towards its upper part, which is called Enaë're'ma when it is suspended, as it were, about the middle of the liquid. Occasionally, there is a sediment, to which the names Hypostasis, Sedimentum, &c., have been given. (See these various words.) The urine is deserving of attention in disease; but it has often been considered a matter of more importance than it merits. Some empirics have presumed to pronounce on the nature of disease by simply inspecting the urine. See Uroscopy. (For the various tests employed in the detection of foreign bodies in the urine, as bile, sugar, albumen, &c., see appropriate works on the subject.)

Human urine was, at one time, considered aperient; and was given in jaundice, in the dose of one or two ounces. Cows' urine, Uri'na vac'cæ, All'flower wa'ter, was once used, warm from the cow, as a purge, in the dose of Oss.

Urine has been variously designated by pathologists, according to its appearance, &c.; for example:

URINE, ANÆMIC, Uri'na anæ'mica. A term used, but not felicitously, for the form of urine that occurs in anæmia, chlorosis, &c.

Urine Ardente, Ardent urine—u. Black, Melanuria—u. Bloody, Hæmaturia—u. de la Boisson, Urine, hysterical, see Urine—u. Briqueté, see Latentitious—u. Chylous, Chyluria—u. de la Coction, see Urine.

URINE, CRUDE, (F.) Urine crue. Urine that is thin, transparent, and but little colored, affording neither cloud nor deposit.

Urine Crue, Urine, crude—u. Cuite, see Urine.

URINE, CYSTINIC, Cystinuria, (F.) Cystinurie. Urine containing cystine or cystic oxide in solution, or as a deposit.

URINE, DIABETIC, Uri'na diabética, Saccharine urine. Urine passed in Diabètes mellitus, Melitu'ria. It contains a large quantity of sugar analogous to that of the grape, which may be separated in the form of crystals. In other respects the urine is very abundant and very limpid in that affection. See Urine.

Urine de la Digestion, see Urine.

URINE, DROP'SICAL, is an ammoniacal urine, often containing much albumen and scarcely any urea.

URINE, DYSPEPTIC, has been found to precipitate tannin abundantly, and to putrefy soon.

Urine Épaisse, Urine, mucilaginous—u. Extravasation of, see Extravasation.

URINE, FEBRILE, Uri'na febrilis. Urine discharged in inflammation and inflammatory fever.

URINE, FILAMEN'TOUS, see Filamentous.

URINE, FLOCCULENT, (F.) Urine floconneuse, is when it is troubled by flocculi suspended in it.

Urine Floconneuse, Urine, flocculent—u. des Goutteux, Urine, gouty—u. Furfuraceous, see Furfuraceous.

URINE, GOUT'Y, (F.) Urine des Goutteux, contains much phosphate of lime, and, after severe attacks of gout, precipitates a mixture of the uric and rosacic acids.

Urine Huileuse, Urine, oily.

URINE, HYSTERICAL, is clear, colorless, and similar to the Urine de la Boisson.

URINE, ICTERICAL, contains bile.

URINE, INCON'TINENCE OF, Enuresis.

URINE OF INFLAM'MATORY DISEASES. This is generally small in quantity, and very high-colored.

URINE, INVOL'UNTARY DISCHARGE' OF, Enuresis.

URINE, JUMENTOUS, Uri'na jumento'sa seu jumenta'ria, (F.) Urine Jumentouse. A term sometimes used for ammoniacal urine, rendered turbid by a substance similar to small grains of dust, which causes it to resemble the urine of herbivorous animals.

Urine Lactescente, U. milky—u. Laiteuse, Urine, milky.

URINE, MILK'Y, (F.) Urine lactescente ou laiteuse. White and troubled urine.

URINE, MUCILAG'INOUS, (F.) Urine épaisse. Urine containing much mucus.

URINE, NER'VOUS. Thin and very liquid urine; such as is passed shortly after the attack of nervous diseases.

URINE OF NER'VOUS FE'VERS is generally very thin, and often deposits a mixture of uric and rosacic acids.

URINE, OIL'Y, (F.) Urine huileuse, is that which pours like oil, or which has an oily pellicle at its surface.

URINE, OXAL'IC, Oxalu'ria. Urine containing a salt of the oxalic acid. See Oxalatic.

URINE, PHOSPHORES'CENT, Phosphoru'ria, Phosphu'ria. Urine which is luminous or phosphorescent.

URINE, PURPU'RIC, see Porphyruria—u. Retention of, see Retention of urine.

URINE, RICK'ETY, contains much phosphate of lime.

URINE, SAC'CHARINE, Urine, diabetic—u. Salt of, Ammoniac carbonas—u. Sandy, Arenosa urina—u. Stoppage of, Ischuria—u. Ténue, Urine, thin.

URINE, THIN, (F.) Urine ténue. Urine that is transparent, slightly colored, and of but little density.

Urineux, Urinous.

Uriniferous, Urinifer, (F.) Urinifère, (from urina, and fero, 'I carry.') That which carries urine.

URINIFEROUS SUBSTANCE OF THE KID'NEY, see Kidney.

URINIFEROUS TUBES OR DUCTS OF BELLINI, Tu'buli seu ductus uriniferi Bellini, vel Bellini'ni, Tu'buli Bellini seu rec'ti, Bellinia'ni Ducttus, Bellinia'næ Fis'tulæ. The collection of small tubes, converging from the cortical part of the kidney to the apices of the papillæ. The tortuous uriniferous ducts are called Tubes of Ferrein, Tubuli contort'i seu Ferrein'i.

Urinip'arous, (F.) Urinipare, (urina, and parere, 'to produce.') An epithet for tubes in the cortical portion of the kidney, which prepare the urine.

Urino'des, (from urina, and odes,) Urinous.

Urinom'eter, (from urina, and μετρον, 'measure,') Urom'eter, Urogravim'eter. A small hydrometer for taking the specific gravity of urine. The urinometer suggested by Dr. Prout is divided into 60 degrees, the zero being the point at which it floats in distilled water. The numbers on the scale added to 1000, the specific gravity of water, give the particular specific gravity.

U'rinous, Urino'sus, Urino'des, (F.) Urineux, (from urina.) Having the character of urine. Similar to urine.

Urinovag'inal, Vesicovaginal.

Uri'tis, (uro, 'I burn,' and itis.) Inflammation consequent on a burn.

Uroce'lê, (Ede'ma sero'ti urino'sum, Uroscheocele'lê, Oscheocele'lê urina'lis, Urocele, (uron, and κηλη, 'a rupture.') A tumor of the scrotum, owing to the effusion of urine into the same, and into the areolar tissue.

Uroches'ia, Urochez'ia, (uron, and χεζειν, 'to go to stool.') A discharge of urine by the bowels.

U'rochrome, (uron, and χρωμα, 'color.') The coloring matter of the urine, so called by Thudichum. It is a yellowish amorphous substance, yielding by decomposition a dark material called Uromel'anin.

Urocris'ia, (uron, and κρινω, 'I judge,') Urocrite'ria. A judgment formed either of the urine or of disease, after inspecting the urine. Also, the crisis of a disease by uresis. Urocrite'ria is the symptom by which such judgment is formed.

Urocrite'ria, (uron, and κριτηριον, 'criterion,') see Urocristia.

Urocyan'ogen, (uron, and κυανος, 'blue,') Urocy'anose. A blue sediment seen especially in the urine of cholera patients.

Urocy'anose, Urocyanogen.

Urocy's'tis, gen. Urocy's'tidis, (uron, and κυστις, 'a bladder,') Urinary bladder.

Urocysti'tis, gen. Urocysti'tidis, (urocystis, and itis.) Cystitis.

Urocystocatar'rhœs, Cystirrhœa.

Urodial'ysis, (uron, and διαλυσις, 'dissolution, loss of strength,') A partial and temporary suspension of the function of the kidney, such as occurs in the course of most acute diseases. A condition of the function of the kidney and of the urine, similar to that observed in acute diseases, but without local mischief or preceding inflammatory fever, has been termed, when occurring in children, Urodial'ysis Neonato'rum; in the aged, Urodial'ysis Senum.

Urodochi'um, (ουροδοχων, ουροδοχειων, from urine, and δεχομαι, 'I receive,') Urinal.

Urodyn'ia, (uron, and δύνη, 'pain,') Pain during the excretion of the urine.

Urœde'ma, gen. Urœde'matis, (uron, and οιδημα, 'a swelling,') Urapostema.

Uroëmie, Uramia.

Uroër'ythrin, (uron, and ερυθρος, 'red,') see Porphyria.

Urogen'ital, Urogenita'lis, Gen'itoi'urinary, Gen'itoi'urina'rius. Relating or appertaining to the urinary and genital apparatus — as the 'urogenital organs,' Organa urogenita'lia.

UROGEN'ITAL SI'NUS, Sinus urogenita'lis. A cavity or canal in the embryo of the mammalia opening externally, in which the excretory ducts of the Wolffian bodies, the ureters and the efferent parts of the generative apparatus, terminate internally. It is prolonged into the urachus. Subsequently it becomes separated by a process of division into a pars urina'ria and a pars genita'lis. The former, extending towards the urachus, is converted into the urinary bladder; while from the latter are formed the vesiculae seminales in the male, and the middle portion of the uterus in the female.

Uroglau'ic, (uron, and γλαυκος, 'blue,') see Uroxanthin.

Urogravim'eter, (uron, gravis, 'heavy,' and μετρον, 'measure,') Urinometer.

Urohæ'matin, Hæmaphæin.

Urol'ithi, (uron, and λιθος, 'a stone,') Calculi, urinary.

Urolithi'asis, Lithia.

Urolitholog'ia, (uron, λιθος, 'a stone,' and λογος, 'a description,') A description of, or treatise on, urinary calculi.

Urolithotom'ia, Lithotomy.

Urol'ogy, Uronology.

U'romancy, Uromanti'a, (from uron, and μαντεια, 'divination,') The art of divining diseases by simple inspection of the urine, Uroscop'ia, Uroscopy, Ouroscop'ia, Ouroscopy. One professing to be able to do this is called Uroman'tes. Vulgarly, a water-doctor, water-caster.

Uromel'anin, see Urochrome.

Urom'eles, (F.) Uromèle, (ουρα, 'a tail,' and μελος, 'a limb,') A genus of monsters in which the two lower limbs are united, very incomplete, and terminated by a single foot, which is almost always imperfect, the sole being turned forwards.

Urom'eter, (uron, and μετρον, 'measure,') Urinometer.

Urom'phalus, (uron, and ομφαλος, 'navel,') Her'nia U'rachi. A monstrosity, which consists in the protrusion of the urachus at the umbilicus.

U'ron, (ουρον,) Urine.

Uron'cus, (uron, and ογκος, 'a swelling,') A urinary swelling.

Uronol'ogy, Uronolog'ia, Ourolog'ia, Ourology, Urol'ogy, Urolog'ia, (uron, and λογος, 'a discourse,') The part of medicine which treats of the urine.

Urophthi'sis, (uron, and phthisis,) Diabetes mellitus.

Uropla'nia, (uron, and πλανη, 'wandering,') The presence of urine in other parts than the urinary organs.

Uropoë'sis, Uropoë'sis, (uron, and ποιω, 'I make,') Secre'tio uri'næ seu lo'tii. The secretion of urine by the kidney.

Uropoët'ic, Uropoët'icus, (F.) Uropoëtique. Concerning or favoring the production of urine.

Uropoie'sis, Uropoesis.

Uropyg'ii Glan'dulæ, (ουρα, 'tail,' and πυγη, 'rump,') A caudal sebaceous gland in birds, supplying the fatty secretion with which they anoint their feathers.

Uropyg'ion, Coccyx.

Uropyg'ium, Croupion.

Urorrhag'ia, (uron, and ῥαγη, 'a breaking forth,') Diabetes.

Uror'rhodin, (uron, and ῥόδον, 'a rose,') see Porphyria.

Urorrhœ'a, (uron, and ῥεω, 'I flow,') Enuresis, Diabetes.

Uros'acin, (uron, and ροσα,) see Porphyria.

Uroscheocele'lê, (uron, σχημα, 'scrotum,' and κηλη, 'rupture,') Urocele.

Uroscopy and Uroscop'ia, (uron, and σκοπεω, 'I examine,') see Uromantia.

Uro'ses, (from uron, and osis.) Diseases of the urinary organs.

Uros'tealith, Urosteal'ithus, Urosteato'ma, (uron, στεαρ, gen. στεαρως, 'suet,' and λιθος, 'stone,') A peculiar fatty ingredient of urinary calculi, discovered by Heller.

Urosteato'ma, (uron, and στεαρ, gen. στεαρως, 'fat,') Urostealith.

Urostenosis, Urethrostenosis.

U'rous Ac'id, Uric oxide.

Uroxan'thin, Uroxan'thine, (uron, and ξανθός, 'yellow,') A yellow coloring matter found in the urine by Heller, which is decomposable into a red coloring matter, ur'rhodin, and a blue, uroglau'cin, — the former having the same composition as indigo red, the latter as indigo blue.

Uroze'mia, (uron, and ζημια, 'loss,') Diabetes — u. Albuminosa, Kidney, Bright's disease of the — u. Mellita, Diabetes mellitus.

Ur'rhodin, (uron, and ρόδον, 'rose,') see Porphyria.

Urros'acin, (uron, and rosa, 'rose,') see Porphyria.

Urti'ca, (from urere, 'to burn,') U. dioica seu ma'jor seu his'pida, Cni'dē, Pyr'ethrum, Ad'icē, Com'mon sting'ing net'tle, (Prov.) Et'tle, (F.) Ortie. Ord. Urticaceæ. Sex. Syst. Monœcia Tetrandria. This plant has been long used for medical and culinary purposes. The young shoots, in the spring, are considered to possess diuretic and antiscorbutic properties. The pain produced by its sting is well known, but it is not to be compared to the torture occasioned by Urti'ca stim'ulans, and U. crenula'ta of India; and still less, to Urti'ca urentis'sima of Timor, which is called by the natives Daoun Setan, 'Devil's leaf,' on account of the persistence and severity of the pain. Nettles have been used as stimulants to paralytic limbs.

URTI'CA BALEA'RICA, U. pilulifera — u. Crenulata, see Urtica — u. Dioica, Urtica — u. Hispida, Urtica — u. Iners magna foetidissima, Galeopsis — u. Major, U. dioica — u. Minor, U. urens — u. Mortua, Lamium album.

URTI'CA PILULIF'ERA, U. Pilulo'sa seu Roma'na seu Balea'rica, Pillbearing Net'tle, (F.) Ortie Romaine. The seed was formerly given in diseases of the chest.

URTI'CA PILULO'SA, U. pilulifera — u. Romana, U. pilulifera — u. Stimulans, see Urtica.

URTI'CA U'RENS, U. mi'nor, Dwarf net'tle, (F.) Ortie brulante. A lesser variety of the nettle, possessing similar virtues. It is said to check hemorrhage, when prescribed internally.

URTI'CA URENTIS'SIMA, see Urtica.

Urticaire, Urticaria — u. Maritime, Urticaria maritima.

Urtica'ria, Enanthe'sis urtica'ria, Ure'do, Scarlati'na seu Fe'bris seu Par'pura urtica'ta, Cnido'sis, Urtica'ria porcel'iana, Ecanthe'ma urtica'tum, Epinye'tis pruriginosa, Fe'bris ru'bra pruriginosa, Sal'tans ro'sa, (F.) Urticaire, Fievre Ortie, Porcelaine; Nettlerash, (Prov.) Nettlesprings; vulgarly Hives, Bold Hives; (from urtica, because the eruption resembles that produced by the stings of a nettle.) A disease distinguished by those elevations of the cuticle called wheals. They have a white top, and are often surrounded by a diffuse redness. They excite intolerable itching, especially when the person is warm in bed. The eruption frequently goes and comes once or more in the 24 hours, and is generally dependent upon gastric derangement. In some people, nettlerash is induced by eating shellfish, eggs, nuts, &c., Urtica'ria ab inges'tis. It is not usually a disease of any consequence, and its treatment is limited to the use of absorbent laxatives, and simple general means. Willan has described six varieties of the complaint: — Urtica'ria febrilis, U. ecan'tida, U. per'stans, U. confer'ta, U. subcutanea and U. tuberosa. Other names are also given to some of these varieties, as Urticaria acu'ta, U. chron'ica, U. tubercula'ta, and U. ædematosa. Gull has described a facti-tious urticaria, which has also been called Myode'ma.

URTI'CA'RIA MARIT'IMA, (F.) Urticaire Maritime. An eruption of a salutary character produced by sea-bathing.

URTI'CA'RIA PORCEL'IANA, Essera, Urticaria.

Urtica'tio, Cnido'sis, Urtica'tion, (from urtica.) A sort of flagellation with nettles; — used with the intention of exciting the skin.

Urucu, Terra Orleana.

Uryl'ic Ac'id, Uric acid.

Usne'a Cra'nii Huma'ni, Lichen saxatilis — u. Florida hirta, Lichen plicatus — u. Hirta, Lichen plicatus — u. Plicata, Lichen plicatus.

Us'quebaugh, Whisky, see Spirit.

Ussacu, Hura Brasiliensis.

Ussat, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These springs, in the department of the Ariège, in the Pyrenees, are acidulous thermal waters, containing sulphates and carbonates of lime and magnesia, and chloride of sodium, with traces of arsenic. They are chiefly used as baths in hysteria, chorea, neuralgia, and many other nervous affections.

Ustil'go, gen. Ustilag'inis, (same etymon as Ustio.) Ergot.

Ustilag'inous, Ustilagin'ea, (F.) Ustilagineux. Relating or belonging to ergot, as Gangrana ustilaginea; see Ergotism.

Us'tio, (urere, ustum, 'to burn,') Burn, Ustion.

Us'tion, Us'tio, Caus'is. The act of burning or of applying the actual cautery. Also, the effect of cauterization; a burn.

Ustula'tio, Ustula'tion, (dim. of ustio.) A pharmaceutical operation by which a substance is dried by heat. It is often restricted to the roasting of ores to drive off the volatile matters, as in the case of arsenic.

Usua'lia, (pl. of usualis, 'usual, ordinary,') from usus, 'use,') see Official.

Usure des Dents, ('wearing out of the teeth' from use,) Odontotripsis.

U'sus, 'use,') Habit.

U'ta. A local affection — perhaps a form of epithelial cancer — seen in certain districts of Peru.

Utah, Min'eral Wa'ters of. There are thermal sulphureous waters, the Hot Springs, at Salt Lake City, which are said to be useful in cutaneous affections, chronic rheumatism, &c.

U'ter, gen. U'tris, 'a leather bottle,' Uterus.

Uteral'gia. A hybrid word, (from uterus, and αλγος, 'pain,') Metralgia.

U'teri Adscen'sus, Hysteria — u. Anteversio, Hysteroloxia anterior — u. Carcinoma, Metrocarcinoma — u. Convulsivus morbus, Lorind matricis — u. Coryza, Leucorrhœa — u. Exulceratio, Hysterelcosis — u. Flexio, Hysteroloxia — u. Inclinatio, Hysteroloxia — u. Obliquitas, Hysteroloxia — u. Pronatio, Hysteroloxia anterior — u. Pruritus, Nymphomania — u. Reflexio completa, Hysteroloxia posterior — u. Retroversio, Hysteroloxia posterior — u. Rheuma, Leucorrhœa — u. Ulcus, Hysterelcosis — u. Versio incompleta, Hysteroloxia.

U'terine, Uteri'nus, (F.) U'terin, (from uterus.) That which belongs or relates to the womb.

UTERINE APPEN'DAGES, INFLAMMA'TION OF, see Parametritis.

UTERINE AR'TERY, Ar'teria uteri'na hypogas'trica. Its size is always in a ratio with the greater or less state of development of the uterus. It arises from the hypogastric, either separately or with the umbilical, or from the internal pudic; passes upon the lateral parts of the vagina, to which it gives branches; and afterwards ascends on the sides of the uterus, and divides into a considerable number of very tortuous branches, which enter the tissue of the organ.

UTERINE BOUGIE', Sound, uterine.

U'TERINE BROTH'ER, Uteri'nus fra'ter. One born of the same mother, but of a different father.

U'TERINE EL'EVATOR. A modification of Prof. Simpson's intrauterine pessary, under this name, for rectifying malpositions of the uterus, was proposed by Dr. J. Marion Sims, of New York. See Pessary, intrauterine.

U'TERINE GLANDS, Utricular glands — u. Hemorrhoid, see Hæmorrhoids — u. Murmur, Bruit placentaire.

U'TERINE MUS'CLE OF RUYSCH consists of some fleshy fibres at the fundus of the uterus, which he regarded as forming a particular muscle.

U'TERINE RUSH, Bruit placentaire — u. Sound, Sound, uterine.

Uteri'nus Fra'ter, Uterine brother.

Uteroabdom'inal Suppor'ter, see Belt, Russian.

Uterogesta'tion, (uterus, and gestare, 'to carry,') Pregnancy.

Uteroma'nia, Nymphomania.

Uteroöva'rian Ar'tery, see Spermatic artery.

U'terotome, (badly compounded from uterus, and τομή, 'incision,') Hysterotome.

Uterot'omy, Hysterotomy.

U'terus, (ὑτέρα,) Uter Utric'ulus, Vul'va, Lo'ci, L' multi'ebres, Ven'ter, Vis'cera, Conceptac'ulum, Ma'trix, Ar'eum seu A'ger natu'ræ, Hys'tera, Me'tra, Eugi'um, Eugi'on, Ang'us, Del'phys, Al'vus, Epompha'lium, Gas'ter, Ma'ter, Me'ter, Ne'dys, the Womb, (Sc. and Prov.) Wayme, Wame, Weam, Wem, (F.) Matrice, Sein. The uterus, destined to lodge the foetus from the commencement of conception till birth, is a hollow symmetrical organ, having the shape of a truncated conoid: it is situate in the pelvis, between the bladder and the rectum, above the vagina, and below the convolutions of the small intestine. The uterus is flattened from before to behind, and is nearly an inch in thickness. It is two inches broad at its highest part, and becomes narrower towards the vagina; terminating in a contracted portion, called the cer'vic or neck, to distinguish it from the rest of the organ, called the body, Cor'pus u'teri. From its fun'dus, basis, or upper portion, the Fallopian tubes pass off. The mouth is called Os u'teri, Os tin'cæ, Os u'teri exter'num, Orific'i-um vagina'le. See Os uteri. At the point where the body of the uterus is continuous, below, with the neck, the cavity is slightly constricted, forming what is sometimes named the inter'nal or'ifice, Os u'teri inter'num, Os inter'num, Isth'mus seu os'tium u'teri supe'rius seu inter'num, Orific'i-um u'teri'num cana'lis cervi'cis u'teri. Between these is the Can'a'lis cervi'cis.

The cavity of the uterus is very small, and its parietes are thick. The portion of the cavity corresponding with the body is triangular and flattened. Its superior angles present the extremely fine orifices of the Fallopian tubes. The cavity of the neck is slightly dilated before opening into the vagina. The uterus is composed — 1. Of a serous membrane. This is external, and furnished by the peritoneum; which is reflected upon the uterus from the posterior surface of the bladder and the anterior surface of the rectum. These folds of the peritoneum are sometimes called, respectively, the anterior and the posterior ligaments. The former are also named the vesicoüterine, and the latter the rectoüterine folds or pli'cæ semiluna'res, (F.) Pli's de Douglas, — the pouch, thus formed, being termed Douglas's cul-de-sac or space. The serous membrane forms, also, the broad ligaments of the u'terus, Ligamen'ta la'ta, Al'æ vesper'tilio'nis, Re'tia U'teri. These contain, above, the Fallopian tube; beneath and anteriorly, the round ligaments; and behind, the ovary. They are two membranous productions or duplicatures of the peritoneum, sent from the edges of the uterus and posterior extremity of the vagina, in a transverse direction, to be fixed to, and to line, the side of the pelvis. 2. Of a mucous membrane, which is a prolongation of that of the vagina, and extends into the tubes. 3. Of a proper tissue, whose thickness is considerable. It is of a close texture; is grayish and elastic; and resists the instrument that divides it. Its fibres belong to the muscular tissue of organic life. During gestation it becomes markedly muscular. The arteries of the uterus proceed from the spermatic and hypogastric. Its veins follow the same course, and bear the same name as the arteries. They are very tortuous, and form large sinuses in the parietes of the organ, called U'terine Si'nuses. The nerves of the uterus proceed from the sciatic and hypogastric plexuses. Its lymphatic vessels are very multiplied; and during pregnancy acquire enormous dimensions. The changes experienced by the uterus during gestation, and after delivery, are very numerous and important to be known. They regard its situation, direction, size, shape, texture, connections, vital properties, &c.

The uterus is said to be one-horned, U. unicor'nis, when only half of the organ is developed; a second rudimentary horn may, however, be present. It is said to be two-horned, U. bicor'nis, when, in consequence of the incomplete coalescence of Müller's ducts, the horns of the organ diverge.

U'TERUS, Abdomen — u. Anteversion of the, Hysteroloxia anterior — u. Bicornis, see Uterus.

U'TERUS BIF'IDUS, 'a bifid uterus.' A double uterus. One separated into two cavities.

U'TERUS, CATARRH' OF, Leucorrhœa.

U'TERUS DIADEL'PHYS, (di, and ἄδελφος, 'a brother,') A uterus in which there has been separate development and non-coalescence of the ducts of Müller. It is not strictly a double uterus.

U'TERUS DU'PLEX, 'a double uterus,' Dihysteria — u. Epistaxis of, Metrostaxis — u. Hernia of, Hysterocele — u. Hourglass contraction of the, Chaton — u. Inclinator, Hysteroloxia.

U'TERUS, INVER'SION OF THE, Inver'sio U'teri, Metranas'trophê, Adopto'sis U'teri inver'sa, (F.) Inversion ou Renversement de la Matrice. The uterus displaced and turned inside out. This can only happen through want of caution on the part of the medical practitioner. It is a fatal accident, unless speedily reduced. This must be done by gradually returning the superior part by grasping it with the hand, and making the rest follow.

U'TERUS, INVOLU'TION OF, see Involution.

U'TERUS, IR'RITABLE, Neural'gia of the Uterus. A disease characterized by deep-seated pain in the lower part of the abdomen and in the back and loins, generally diminished by lying down and increased by exercise, and more severe for a few days preceding and during menstruation. On examination per vaginam, the uterus is found to be tender on pressure, Metryperæsthe'sis; and the cervix and body slightly swollen, but not usually indurated. It is an obstinate affection, but frequently ends of itself after years of suffering. The treatment must be, — the horizontal posture; local bloodletting to the uterus; emollients; soothing injections; narcotics, warm bath, &c. See Hysteralgia.

U'TERUS MASCULI'NUS, see Ejaculatory ducts — u. Neuralgia of the, Uterus, irritable — u. Obliquus, Hysteroloxia — u. One-horned, see Uterus — u. Retroversion of the, Hysteroloxia posterior.

U'TERUS, RUPTURE OF THE, Metrorrhæz'is, Hysterorhæz'is, Ruptu'ra seu Perfora'tio U'teri, Laceration of the Womb, (F.) Rupture ou Déchirure de la Matrice. This dreadful accident occurs during labor, and is known to have taken place, when the child's head suddenly recedes during a pain, with vomiting, sinking of the pulse, cold sweats, &c. When it is evident that this has occurred, the hand must be passed into the uterus, and the feet of the child be brought down.

Cases are on record, in which partial lacerations of the uterus have healed, and the patient has done well. This is a rare event, and not to be anticipated.

UTERUS, SUBINVOLUTION OF, see Subinvolution.

UTRICLE, Utriculus, (dim. of uter, gen. utris, 'a small bag or bottle,') see Ejaculatory ducts, Semicircular canals, Uterus.

UTRICLE, PRIMORDIAL, Utriculus primordia-lis. A delicate membrane, of protein composition, which lines the cell wall of vegetable structures, and from the exterior of which the layer of cellulose is secreted.

UTRICULAR, Utricula'ris. Relating to or resembling a small bag or bottle.

UTRICULAR GLANDS, Glandulae utricula'res seu uterinae. The glands or follicles in the interior of the uterus, which are concerned in the formation of the decidua.

UTRICULUS, Utricle, see Ejaculatory ducts, Semicircular canals, Uterus — u. Communis, see Semicircular canals — u. Lacteus, Receptaculum chyli — u. Primordialis, Utricle, primordial — u. Prostaticus, see Ejaculatory ducts.

Some anatomists have given this name to the choroid coat of the eye; others, to the posterior layer of the iris, on account of the black and very thick varnish that covers it. See Iris.

U'VEA, COM'MISSURE OF THE, Ciliary ligament. Uvée, Uvea.

Uve'i'tis, gen. Uve'i'tidis, (F.) Uvélite, (uvea, and itis,) properly, Rhagoidei'tis. Inflammation of the uvea. See Iritis.

Uvig'ena, Uvula.

Uvig'era, Uvula.

U'vula, (dim. of uva, 'a grape,') Pinnaculum for'nice guttura'lis, U'va, Staph'yle, Tintinnabulum, Columel'la, Ci'on, Ci'onis, Garga'reon, Colum'na o'ris, Gurgu'lio, Intersep'tum, Proces'sus seu Cartila'go U'viser, Uvig'ena, Uvig'era, Hi'mas, Plec'trum, Sublin'gua, Sublin'guum, Pop of the Throat, (Sc.) Pop of the Hass, (F.) Luette. A fleshy appendix or prolongation, which hangs from the middle or free edge of the velum palati. The uvula has a conical shape, and is of a greater or less size in individuals. It is formed, especially, by the mucous membrane of the velum palati; and contains within it the azygos uvulae muscle. Its use is not clear.

Also, a small prominence or lobule in the portion of the cerebellum that forms the posterior boundary of the fourth ventricle, U'vula cerebel'li. It is on the median line, and behind the nodulus. See Vermiform process, inferior.

U'VULA CEREBEL'LI, see Uvula — u. Decidua, Staphyloedema — u. Elongata, Staphyloedema — u. Relaxata, Staphyloedema — u. Vesicae, see Urinary bladder — u. Vesical, see Urinary bladder.

U'vular, Uvula'ris, (F.) Uvulaire, (from uvula.) That which belongs to the uvula.

U'VULAR GLANDS are small follicles, belonging to the mucous membrane covering the uvula.

Uvula'ria, (so called from the flowers hanging like the uvula [?],) Ruscus hypoglossum.

UVULA'RIA PERFOLIA'TA, Small'er Bell'wort; indigenous; Order, Melanthaceae; flowering in May and June. The root, when fresh, is subacid and mucilaginous. A decoction of the plant is used in sore mouth. It is said to cure the bites of rattlesnakes.

UVULA'RIA GRANDIFLO'RA and U. SESSILIFO-LIA have similar properties.

Uvuli'tis, gen. Uvuli'tidis, (uvula, and itis,) Angi'na uvula'ris, Staphyli'tis, Cioni'tis, Inflam-matio u'vulae, (F.) Inflammation de la Luette, Falling down of the Palate. Inflammation of the uvula. When to a slight degree, Hypostaphyli'tis.

Uzaidella [P.], Chenopodium ambrosioides.

Vaccin, see Vaccina.

Vacci'na, V. primig'ena seu vaccinato'ria seu antivariolo'sa, Vaccin'ia, Vari'ola vacci'na, V. vaccini'ca seu tuto'ria seu tu'trix, Exanthe'ma vacci'na seu antivariolo'sum, Syn'ocha vacci'na, Em'phlysis vacci'na inser'ta, Vacci'ola, V. scutella'ta, V. ve'ra, Vari'ole tuto'rie, Cowpox, Cow-pock, Kinepock, Inoculated Cowpox, (from vacca, 'a cow,') (F.) Vaccine. The cowpox is a disease of the cow, arising spontaneously, or perhaps from the small-pox contagion of man, or from the matter of grease in horses conveyed by the milkers, which, if transmitted to man by means of inoculation, may preserve him from small-pox contagion. The promulgation of this valuable property of the vaccine virus is due to Dr. Jenner. When inoculating for small-pox in Gloucestershire, England, in 1775, he was surprised to meet with a number of persons in the same district, on whom the insertion of the virus produced no effect, although they had never passed through small-pox.

On investigation he found that all these persons had previously been affected by a pustular eruption of the cow, which they had taken by milking the animal; and which eruption they called Cowpox. This discovery induced him to institute experiments, and he found that such preservative effect actually existed. The Vaccine Virus, Virus Vaccinum, (F.) Vaccin, the fluid of the eruption, is not now usually taken immediately from the cow; experience having demonstrated that it is perhaps as efficacious when obtained from the human vesicle. The characteristic of cowpox eruption is a semitransparent, pearl-colored vesicle, with a circular or somewhat oval base: its upper surface, until the end of the 8th day, being more elevated at the margin than in the centre: and the margin itself being turgid, shining, and rounded, so as often to extend a little over the line of the base. This vesicle is filled with clear lymph, contained in numerous little cells, that communicate with each other. After the 8th or 9th day from the insertion of the virus, it is surrounded by a bright-red, circumscribed areola, which varies in its diameter, in different cases, from a quarter of an inch to two inches; and is usually attended with a considerable tumor and hardness of the adjoining areolar membrane. This areola declines on the 11th or 12th day; the surface of the vesicle then becomes brown in the centre; and the fluid in the cells gradually concretes into a hard, rounded scab or crust, of a reddish-brown color, which at length becomes darker, contracted, and dry, but is not detached till three weeks after vaccination. It leaves a permanent, circular cicatrix, about five lines in diameter, and a little depressed; the surface being marked with very minute pits or indentations, denoting the number of cells of which the vesicle had been composed. This is the progress of the genuine cowpox. At times fever, Vaccinal fever, occurs about the 9th or 11th day; but, at others, not the slightest indisposition is felt. Aberrations from this progress occur, which must be attended to; as the same preservative influence is not exerted by irregular or spurious cowpox. If the eruption runs speedily to a height, has an areola too early, is irregular at its edges, and contains pus instead of a limpid fluid, it cannot at all be depended upon. In addition to the vesicle which develops itself at the seat of vaccination, an eruption of a similar kind, Vaccin'olæ, sometimes occurs in other parts of the body, running its course at times with the other. It resembles, and perhaps is, varicella.

Small-pox occurs occasionally as an epidemic after vaccination. For awhile the enthusiastic advocates of vaccination would not admit the affection to be small-pox; and accordingly they gave it the name Varioloid. It is unquestionably small-pox, but modified, and greatly divested of its terrors by previous vaccination; and it is said to happen less frequently after vaccination than after small-pox inoculation. Vaccination is now practised everywhere, except among those in whom ignorance and prejudice exclude the lights of reason and philanthropy. There is ground, however, for the belief that for full protection, revaccination may be occasionally necessary.

Vaccination, Vaccinatio, (from vacca, 'a cow,') Cowpox inoculation, Jennerian inoculation. An operation which consists in inserting the vaccine virus under the cuticle, so that it may enter into the absorbents. It is extremely simple, and requires merely that the point of the lancet should be held under the cuticle for a short time. The best time for taking the matter from the Cowpox vesicle, for vaccination, is about the 7th or 8th day, before the appearance of the areola, when it ought to be limpid and transparent. The most certain method is to pass it from arm to arm; but this is not always convenient; and hence it is taken upon points or pieces of quill, or between glasses. It must, of course, be softened for use. This is done by means of a little water, which does not destroy its efficiency. The scab, too, which falls off about the end of three weeks—sooner or later—is capable of communicating the affection, if dissolved in water; and this is the most common method of transmitting the vaccine virus in some countries.

Vaccinator, Vaccinist. One who inoculates for the cowpox. Also, an instrument employed for this purpose.

Vaccine, Vaccinus, Vaccinallis. (F.) Vaccinal, (same etymon as Vaccination.) Relating or appertaining to vaccination; as the vaccine vesicle, 'a vaccine physician.'

Vaccine, Vaccina—v. Lichen, Roseola vaccinaria.

Vaccinella, (dim. of vaccina.) A term employed by some to designate spurious cowpox, Vaccin'olis, Vaccin'ola spuria seu leprosa, (F.) Vaccinelle, Vaccinoide.

Vaccinia, Vaccina—v. Palustris, Vaccinium oxycoccos.

Vaccinifer, (vaccina, and fero, 'I carry.') An instrument intended as a substitute for the lancet in vaccination.

Vaccinine. A term proposed by Dr. William Farr for the specific zymotic principle by which cowpox is propagated.

Vaccin'olæ, (dim. of vaccina.) see Vaccine.

Vaccinist, Vaccinator.

Vaccinium Macrocarpon, see Vaccinium oxycoccos.

VACCINIUM MYRTILLUS, (either corrupted from hyacinthus, or, more probably, from baccinium, from bacca, 'berries,' in allusion to its fruit,) Vitis idæa myrtillus, Vaccinia myrtillus, Vaccinium nigrum, Myrtleberry, Bilberry, Bleaberry, Whortleberry, Black Whorts, (Sc.) Blaeberry, (Prov.) Hurtleberry, Whimberry, (F.) Airelle Anguleuse, Raisin de Bois. Ord. Vacciniceæ. Sex. Syst. Octandria Monogynia. The berries—Bacca Myrtillorum—are esteemed to be antiscorbutic, when prepared with vinegar. They are also said to possess antiseptic and subastrigent properties when dried. They are not used in medicine; but are frequently eaten with milk and sugar.

VACCINIUM NIGRUM, V. myrtillus.

VACCINIUM OXYCOCOS, Oxycoccos, O. palustris, Schollera oxycoccos, Vaccinia palustris, Vitis idæa palustris, Moorberry, Cranberry, Mossberry, Swamp Redberry, Sourberry, (F.) Canneberge. The berries are pleasantly acid and cooling. They make an agreeable preserve. The common American cranberry is from Vaccinium macrocarpon, Oxycoccos macrocarpus.

VACCINIUM PENNSYLVANICUM, Low Blueberry. The leaves and bark of the root are astringent.

VACCINIUM PUNCTATUM, V. vitis idæa—v. Resinosum, Gaylussacia resinosa.

VACCINIUM STAMINEUM, Buckberry, Squaw Huckleberry, Deerberry. The leaves of these plants are astringent.

A decoction of the leaves has been used in calculous affections. They are astringent. The ripe berries are pleasantly acid, and refrigerant. Whortleberries are furnished by different species of Vaccinium.

Vaccinoide, (vaccina, and eidōs, 'resemblance,') Vaccinella.

Vaccin'olis, Vaccinella.

Vaccino-syph'ilis, Vaccinal Syph'ilis. A syphilitic inoculation by means of vaccine virus.

Vacuole, (dim. of [L.] vacuus, 'empty,') Areola.

Vagin, Vagina.

Vagina, 'a sheath,' V. muliebris seu uterina seu uteri seu penis, Sinus muliebris seu Pudor'is seu Puden'di, Co'leus, Pe'ris, Pe'rin, Col'pus, Vulvovaginal canal, (F.) Vagin, Conduit ou Canal de la pudeur. A cylindrical canal, five or six inches long; situate within the pelvis, between the bladder and rectum. It communicates by one extremity, Anus seu introitus seu ostium seu orificium vaginæ vel hymenæ, Os externum vaginæ, with the vulva; by the other, Foramen seu Fundus seu Laqueus, with the womb, the Pars seu Portio vaginalis uteri, the neck of which it embraces. The vagina is lined, internally, by a mucous membrane, which presents, along the anterior and posterior walls, a longitudinal ridge, called the columnus of the vagina, columnæ rugarum, and is partly closed, in young females, by the hymen, and carunculæ myrtiformes. Around the mucous membrane is a layer of spongy, erectile tissue; and a cellulovascular membrane. A constrictor muscle; numerous vessels furnished by the vaginal artery, particularly; veins and nerves, proceeding from the sciatic plexus, also enter into the composition of the organ.

VAGINA, 'a sheath,' The'ca, (F.) Gaine. A term extended to many parts, which serve as envelopes to others. Thus, it is sometimes applied to the fascia enveloping the limbs; to areolar membrane enveloping the muscles, and entering between their fibres; to that which surrounds the bloodvessels; to the synovial membranes surrounding tendons, and lining the gutters of bones, &c.

VAGINA OF THE VE'NA POR'TA, Sheath of the Vena Porta, (F.) Gaine de la Veine-porte, is the areolar membrane that accompanies the divisions of the vena porta into the substance of the liver.

Vaginæ Mucosæ, see Bursæ mucosæ—v. Synoviales, 'synovial sheaths,' Bursæ mucosæ.

Vag'inal or Vagi'nal, Vagina'lis, (from vagina, 'a sheath,') Relating or pertaining to the vagina or to a sheath.

VAG'INAL ARTERY. This exists, as a matter of course, only in the female. It arises from the hypogastric, or from the uterine, vesical, internal pudic, umbilical, &c., and sends its branches, first to the lateral parts of the vagina, and afterwards to the anterior and posterior surfaces.

VAG'INAL BIL'IARY PLEX'US. A plexus of ramifications of the hepatic duct through the capsule of Glisson.

VAG'INAL BRANCH'ES OF THE VE'NA POR'TA are those which have to pass through the sheath of the capsule of Glisson, previous to entering the interlobular spaces. In this course, they form the vaginal plexus. There are, also, vaginal branches, and a vaginal plexus formed by the hepatic artery.

VAG'INAL COAT OF THE EYE, see Eye.

VAG'INAL COAT OF THE TESTICLE, Tu'nica Vagina'lis seu elytrōides seu elytrōdes, Tu'nica vagina'lis communis testis et funiculi spermatici, Fascia infundibuliformis of Hyrtl, Tu'nica fibrosa communis, is the serous membrane which envelops the testicle. Before the descent of the testicle, the tunica vaginalis does not exist. It is formed by a prolongation, furnished by the peritoneum to the testicle when it issues from the abdomen. The tunica vaginalis forms a close sac, investing the testicle and epididymis, without containing them in its cavity, and reflected so as to form a bag around the circumference of the testis; hence it is divided into Tu'nica vagina'lis propria and Tu'nica vagina'lis reflexa. Between the two layers, the inner surface is smooth, and lubricated by a serous fluid.

Inflammation of the tunica vaginalis has been called Vaginalitis, (F.) Vaginalite.

VAG'INAL PROC'ESS OF THE TEM'PORAL BONE, (F.) Apophyse vaginale ou engainante, Gaine de l'apophyse styloïde, Chaton, is a bony crista, which embraces the base of the styloid process.

VAG'INAL PULSE, Pulse, vaginal—v. Respiration, Respiration, vaginal—v. Suppositories, see Suppositories and Pessary.

Vaginalitis, gen. Vaginalitidis, see Vaginal coat of the testicle.

Vaginis'mus. A name given by Dr. J. Marion Sims to spasm of the sphincter muscle of the vagina, with hyperæsthesia of the surrounding parts, and altered structure, which may require division by the knife.

Vagini'tis, gen. Vagini'tidis, (vagina, and itis.) Inflammation of the vagina. When occurring during childbirth, it is called puer'peral vagini'tis, and is generally due to the pressure of the foetal head. When accompanied with leucorrhœa, and the growth of papillary projections on the surface of the membrane, it is called, from its granular appearance, Vagini'tis granulosa, Granular vaginitis, (F.) Psorelytie. See Leucorrhœa (vaginal).

Valeria'na, V. officinalis seu mi'nor, Leucolach'anum, Wild or Offic'inal Valer'ian, (F.) Valériane. Ord. Valerianaceæ. Sex. Syst. Triandria Monogynia. The root, Valeria'na, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Valerianæ Radix, (Ph. B., 1867,) has been long extolled as an efficacious remedy in epilepsy, and in a variety of nervous complaints. It has been also advised as a tonic, antispasmodic, and emmenagogue. It has a strong, fetid odor; bit-terish, subacid, and warm taste; and its virtues are extracted by water and alcohol. The distilled oil is officinal in the Pharmacopœia of the United States.

The Kooyah root or Kooyahs of the Indians in Oregon, used by them for making a bread called Supale, is said to be that of Valeriana officinalis or Valeriana edulis, probably the same as that sometimes written Kous. It is frequently called Tobacco root. It has to be buried in the ground for two days to deprive it of its noxious properties. The bread has an offensive taste to those not accustomed to it.

VALERIA'NA CAPEN'SIS, a South African species, has similar virtues.

VALERIA'NA CELTICA, V. Saxatilis, Spica Celtica seu Celtica Dioscoridis seu Alpi'na, Nardus Celtica, Saliu'ca, Nardum Gallicum, Celtic Nard, (F.) Nard Celtique. The roots of this Alpine plant have been recommended as a stomachic, carminative, and diuretic. It has a moderately strong smell, and a warm, bitterish, subacid taste.

VALERIA'NA DENTA'TA, A. locus'ta, Corn Sal'ad. A wholesome, succulent plant, cultivated in Europe as a salad. It is antiscorbutic and gently aperient.

The Vanel'loe — Sil'iqua vanill'æ seu banill'æ seu vanigliæ seu vanil'liæ seu ar'aci aromatici — is a long, flattish pod; containing, under a wrinkled, brittle shell, a reddish-brown pulp, with small, shining, black seeds. The parasitic plant which affords this pod is the Epidendrum Vanil'la, Vanil'la aromatica seu Mexicana, and other species. Family, Orchidaceæ. Sex. Syst. Gynandria Monandria. Vanelloes have an unctuous, aromatic taste, and a fragrant smell, like that of some of the finer balsams, heightened with musk. Although chiefly used as perfumes, they are reputed to possess aphrodisiac virtues.

Va'POR CREASOTI, Inhalation of Creasote. (Creasot., ℥xij., Aquæ bullient., f3vij. Mix the creasote and water in an apparatus so arranged that air may be made to pass through the solution, and may afterwards be inhaled. Ph. B., 1867.)

Va'POR I'ODI, Inhalation of Iodine. (Tinct. iodi, f3j., Aquæ, f3j. Mix in a suitable apparatus, and, having applied a gentle heat, let the vapor that arises be inhaled. Ph. B., 1867.)

Va'POR SAN'GUINIS, 'vapor of the blood,' Gaz sanguinis.

Vapora'rium, Atmist'ion, Atmolu'tron, Lacon'icum, Bal'neum vapo'ris, Va'por bath, (F.) Bain de vapeur, (from vapor, 'steam.') A remedy in rheumatic and cutaneous affections; and wherever it is important to impress the cutaneous surface. In the Russian Va'por Bath, the vapor is produced by throwing water over hot stones, and the bather passes, at once, from the heated condition to cool or cold water, not only with impunity, but with positive pleasure. Its temperature is from 122° to 145°.

Trousseau has suggested, in the treatment of phthisis, Vaporarium — a room filled with steam — in which the patient always remains, — thus imitating the atmosphere of a moist, warm climate.

Varicel'la, (dim. of Variola,) Em'phlysis seu Exanthema seu Syn'ochus varicel'la, Vari'ola lymphat'ica seu spu'ria seu sylves'tris, Vari'olæ no'the seu illegit'ime seu volat'icæ seu pucel'le, Pseudovari'olæ, Æol'lion, Æol'lum, Chick'empox, (F.) Varicelle, Pétite vérole volante, Vérolle, Vérette, Fausse variolæ. A disease characterized by vesicles scattered over the body, which are glabrous, transparent, and about the size of peas. They appear in successive crops, are covered by a thin pellicle, and, about the third, fourth, or fifth day from their appearance, burst at the top, and concrete into small, puckered scabs, which rarely leave a pit in the skin. Three varieties have, sometimes, been designated. 1. The V. lentifor'mes or lenticular chick'empox, which are irregularly circular, and flattened on the top; the fluid being at first whitish, and afterward straw-colored. This is the common chickenpox. 2. The Varicella conifor'mis, Pem'phigus variol'ides, Vari'ola lymphat'ica, Crystal'li, Hydrach'nis, Varicel'la verruco'sa, Vari'olæ verruco'sæ, Conoid'al Chick'empox, Glass'pox, Wind'pox, Sheep'pox, Swinepox, Waterpox, Waterjags, in which the vesicles are generally acuminate, and the fluid pellucid throughout. 3. The Varicel'la globular'is or Hives, in which the vesicles are globular and larger; the fluid being, at first, whey-colored, and afterwards yellowish. These divisions are, however, very arbitrary, for they are generally confounded.

Hornpox is a popular variety of varicella.

Variola has been, sometimes, mistaken for this disease, and conversely. A little attention to the history of the eruption in the two affections will prevent error. Varicella is not contagious. At times, it prevails epidemically. It cannot be propagated by inoculation. The treatment is extremely simple; rest, abstinence, and the antiphlogistic regimen being all that is generally required. See Varioloid.

VARICEL'LA VARIOLOIDE'A, Varioloid — v. Verucosa, see Varicella.

Varicel'lar Fever, see Varioloid.

Varicifor'mes Paras'tatæ, (varix, pl. varices, and forma, 'form.') With some authors, the ducts of the epididymis, because they seem knotty and varicose.

Varicobleph'aron, (varix, and βλεφαρον, 'eyelid.') A varicose tumor of the eyelid.

Varicoce'lè, (varix, and κηλη, 'a tumor,') Var'icocoele, Oscheocoe'lè varico'sa, Her'nia varico'sa, Ra'mex varico'sus, Spermatoce'lè, Cirsoce'lè. A varicose dilatation of the veins of the scrotum and spermatic cord; usually, by English and American writers, restricted to the latter, like Cirsocele. This latter variety of the disease is more common on the left side than the right. It appears under the form of a soft, doughy, unequal, knotty, compressible, and indolent tumor, situate in the course of the cord, and increasing from below upwards. It is less when the individual is in the recumbent posture, and increases when he is erect. It is, ordinarily, an affection of no moment, and is very common, requiring merely the use of a proper suspensory bandage. It has been advised, in bad cases, to tie the enlarged vein, but the operation is not free from danger induced by phlebitis. Sir A. Cooper has proposed the removal of a portion of the scrotum, so as to render the remainder of it a natural bandage. This plan has been found effectual.

Varicomphalus, (varix, and ομφαλος, 'the umbilicus.') Varicose tumor of the umbilicus; circomphalus.

Var'icose, Varico'sus, Var'icous, (F.) Variqueux, (from varix.) Affected with varix: or belonging to, or connected with, varix; — as a varicose vein; a varicose ulcer, one kept up by varices.

Varicos'itas, see Varix — v. Conjunctivæ, Cirsophthalmia.

Varicos'ity, see Varix.

Varic'ula, dim. of Varix. Also, a varicose swelling of the veins of the tunica conjunctiva.

Var'iola, Var'iolæ, V. ve'ræ, Var'iolæ, Em'pye'sis Var'iolæ, Pes'tis seu Fe'bris variol'o'sa, Æolec'thyma, Small-pox, Pox (North of England), (from varius, 'spotted,' or from vari, 'pimples,') (F.) Variolæ, Petite Vérole, Picote. A disease, now of somewhat less interest than before the discovery of vaccination. It is of a very contagious nature, and is supposed to have been introduced into Europe from Asia, at an early period of the middle ages. It is characterized by fever, with pustules appearing from the third to the fifth day, and suppurating from the eighth to the tenth, and it possesses all the distinctive properties of the major exanthemata. It is capable of being produced by inoculation, but this inoculated small-pox — Var'iolæ inser'ta — communicates the disease as readily through the air as the natural small-pox, or that received without inoculation.

Small-pox is distinguished into two classes, according to the character of the eruption, the discrete or distinct, and the confluent. 1. In VARIOLA DISCRE'TA, Em'pye'sis variol'a discre'ta, Var'iolæ discre'ta benigna, Var'iolæ regula' res seu discre'tæ, Distinct small-pox, the pustules are usually of the size of peas; distinct, distended, and circular; the intervening spaces being red; the fever inflammatory throughout, and ceasing when the eruption is complete. 2. In VARIOLA CONFLUENS, Em'pye'sis variol'a confluent, Var'iolæ regula' res confluent, Vesic'ulæ Di'væ Bar'baræ, Confluent Small-pox, (F.) Variolæ confluent, Vésicules de Sainte-Barbe, the pustules are confluent, or run together; flaccid and irregularly circumscribed; the intervening spaces being pale, and the accompanying fever typhoid. In children, diarrhoea, and, in adults, pyalism, with swelling of the hands and feet, generally appear, towards the period of the secondary fever, stadium suppurationis, which occurs from the tenth to the thirteenth day. The fever that precedes and accompanies the eruption is called the Eruptive fever. The prognosis is favorable in the distinct kind, if properly managed. The confluent is always dangerous, the unfavorable symptoms being — flattening of the pustules, or subsidence of the eruption; the breathing becoming much obstructed or oppressed; or marks of inflammatory and congestive affections occurring in the different viscera. The treatment of the distinct kind is very simple: the antiphlogistic regimen being all that is necessary. The confluent kind requires the same management as typhus fever.

When the pimples are confluent in patches, the patches being, however, separated by intervals of unaffected skin, it constitutes the clustered, coherent, or corymbose variety — Var'iolæ corymbo'sa. When there are comparatively few pustules, and the general eruption scarcely passes beyond the vesicular stage, the term Varicell'oid small-pox, Variola curta, has been applied to it. Other forms of variolæ have been mentioned, such as the petechial and hemorrhagic; V. cruenta, or black pox; V. gangrenosa, &c.

VARIOLA, O'VINE. A disease of sheep resembling, but not identical with, small-pox in man.

VARIOLA SEMICONFLUENS. Variola in which the pustules touch each other without coalescing.

VARIOLA SPU'RIA, Varicella — v. Vaccina, Vaccina — v. Vaccinatorum, Variol'oid — v. Varicelliformis, see Variola.

VARIOLA sine VARIOLIS, Var'iolous Fe'ver. These terms are applied to cases occasionally observed during the prevalence of variola, in which the constitutional phenomena are present without the cutaneous eruption.

Var'iolæ, Variola — v. Equinæ, see Grease — v. Illegitimæ, Varicella — v. Modificatæ, Variol'oid — v. Nothæ, Varicella — v. Pucellæ, Varicella — v. Sylvestris, Varicella — v. Tutoriæ, Vaccina — v. Veræ, Variola — v. Verrucosæ, see Variola — v. Volaticæ, Varicella.

Var'iolation, Inoculation (Small-pox).

Variolæ, Variola.

Variolæux, Variolous.

Var'iolæ, Variola.

Var'iolic, Variolous.

Var'ioline, (from variola.) A term proposed by Dr. Wm. Farr for the specific zymotic principle by which small-pox is propagated.

Variolique, Variolous.

Var'ioloid, Abortive Small-pox, Var'iolous, Var'ioloides, Var'iolæ modifica'ta seu mitiga'ta seu vaccinato'rum, Varicell'la (of some), Varicell'la varioloides, (variola, 'small-pox,' and αἶδος, 'form,') (F.) Variolæ modifiée, — resembling small-pox. This is, really, small-pox, modified by previous inoculation or vaccination; and hence it has been properly called modified small-pox. That it is small-pox is proved by the fact, that matter, taken from a varioloid pustule, will communicate small-pox to one who has never been vaccinated. It is, almost always, a milder disease than small-pox; and this circumstance, with its shorter duration, exhibits the salutary effects of previous vaccination or inoculation. It has appeared epidemically.

Occasionally, when varioloid is epidemic, varioloid or varicell'lar fe'ver occurs without the eruption. This is the varicell'æ sine varicell'is of Mr. Erasmus Wilson, who calls varioloid, varicella.

VARIOLOID FE'VER, see Varioloid.

Var'iolous, Variolous.

Var'iolous, Variolous, Var'iolic, (F.) Variolæux, Variolique. Relating or belonging to variola.

Var'iolovaccina'tion. Inoculation with variolovaccine lymph.

Variqueux, (from varix.) Varicose.

Var'ix, gen. Var'icis, Phlebeury'sma, Phlebec'tasis, Her'nia seu Ecta'sia vena'rum, Angiecta'sia vena'sa, Ix'ia, Cir'sus, Ced'ma, Var'icose Vein, (F.) Varice, is considered, by some, to come from the verb variare, 'to turn,' 'to twist,' — on account of the sinuosities of varicose veins. Dilation of a vein; Varicos'itas, Varicos'ity. Varices are owing to local retardation of the venous circulation; and, in some cases, to relaxation of the parietes of the veins. They are very common in the superficial veins of the lower limbs, especially of pregnant females. The tumor or tumors formed by varices are soft, knotty, unequal, indolent, and livid; without pulsation, and yielding readily to the impression of the finger, but returning as soon as the compression is discontinued. Sometimes the vein bursts and gives rise to hemorrhage. The treatment is usually palliative, and consists in exerting a uniform and constant pressure upon the part, by means of an appropriate bandage. The radical cure has, also, been obtained by extirpation, division of the vein or ligature. The second course is apt to be followed by phlebitis.

Va'sa VASO'RUM, 'vessels of vessels,' V. nutrit'ia seu nutrit'ia, (F.) Vaisseaux des Vaisseaux. Small vessels that supply larger ones with blood for their nutrition. The cardiac or coronary arteries and veins may be regarded as the vasa vasorum of the heart. However minutely a vessel is traced, its parietes will be found supplied with blood for their nutrition by a smaller vessel.

Va'sa VORTICO'SA, Ve'næ vortico'sæ, (vortex, 'a whirlpool,') (F.) Vaisseaux tourbillonnés, Tourbillon vasculaire. The contorted vessels which creep on the choroid coat of the eye; ciliary veins.

Va'sal, (from vas, 'a vessel,') Vascular.

Vasco'a Amplexicaul'is, (after Vasco de Gama.) A South African shrub, Nat. Ord. Leguminosæ, the roots of which taste like liquorice. They are used, in decoction, in catarrh and phthisis, and are a good substitute for liquorice.

Vas'cula (pl. of vasculum) Serpenti'na, see Testicle.

Vas'cular, Vascularis, Vasculosus, Angei'al, Va'sal, (F.) Vasculaire, Vasculaire, (from vas, 'a vessel,') vasculum, 'a little vessel.' That which belongs or relates to vessels;—arterial, venous, or lymphatic; but generally restricted to blood-vessels only. Full of vessels. Bichat gave the name Vas'cular sys'tem, Sys'tema vaso'rum, Hæm-ataul'ica, to the bloodvessels, and of this he made two divisions. 1. The Ar'terial sys'tem, or Sys'tem of red blood, (F.) Système vasculaire à sang rouge, which commences with the radicles of the pulmonary veins; and includes the pulmonary veins, the left cavities of the heart, and the aorta with all its ramifications. The blood, in this system, is distributed to the general capillary system, where it loses its arterial quality and becomes venous. 2. The Ve'nous sys'tem or Vas'cular sys'tem of black blood, (F.) Système vasculaire à sang noir, carries the blood from every part of the system to the lungs. It takes its origin in the general capillary system; continues in the veins, right auricle and ventricle of the heart, and the pulmonary artery and its branches, and is finally lost in the capillary system of the lungs. See Circulation.

Vascular'ity, Vascular'itas, (F.) Vascularité. The state of being vascular, or largely supplied with vessels.

Vas'cularization. A condition of bone associated with fungating osteitis, in which the tissue becomes canaliculated, and is said by some observers to be occupied by capillary vessels. It is due to the greater influx of fluid pabulum to the bone.

Vascul'eux, Vascular.

Vas'culomo'tor, Vasomotor.

Vasculo'sa, (from vasculum,) Choroidea tunica.

Vas'culum, (dim. of vas, 'a vessel,') Penis, Vessel.

VAS'CVLUM ABER'RANS, (aberrare, 'to wander from,') Vas aber'rans-Halleri, Ductus aber'rans, Aber'rant duct, Appen'dix to the Epidid'ymis. A small convoluted duct, of variable length, generally connected with the duct of the epididymis, immediately before the commencement of the vas deferens.

Vase à Saigner, 'bleeding vessel,' Cup.

Vasoden'tine, (vasum, 'a vessel,' and dens, gen. dentis, 'a tooth,') A modification of the dentine by the permanent distribution of red blood to it through vascular canals. (Owen.)

Vasomo'tor, Vas'culomo'tor, (F.) Vaso-moteur, Vasculo-moteur, (from vas, 'a vessel,' and motor, 'mover,') That which causes movement in the vessels. Fibres of the great sympathetic are 'vasomotor.'

Vas'tus. That which is vast, or has a great extent, as—

VAS'TUS EXTER'NUS and VAS'TUS INTER'NUS. Two considerable fleshy masses, which form part of the triceps cruris. See Triceps.

Va'sum, Vessel.

Va'ter, Ampul'la of, (F.) Ampoule de Vater, (called after Vater, a German anatomist.) An ampulla formed by the orifice of the pancreatic duct in the duodenum.

Va'ter, COR'PUSCLES OF, Corpuscles, Pacinian.

Vate'ria In'dica, (after Abraham Vater, a physician and botanist of Wittenberg,) see Copal.

Vaticin'ium Chiroman'ticum, (vaticinor, 'I foretell,') Chiromancy.

Vault, ([old F.] Voulte, 'a round or turn,' from volvere, volutum, 'to turn,') For'nix, Cam'era, (F.) Voute. A name given by anatomists to several parts which are rounded superiorly; concave and arched inferiorly,—as the Vault of the cranium or the upper part of the skull,—the Palatine vault or roof of the mouth, &c.

Vault'ing of the Chest, Voussure précordiale—v. Précordial, Voussure précordiale.

Vauque'line, (after Vauquelin, the French chemist,) Strychnia.

Veal Broth, Veal tea.

VEAL TEA, Veal Broth. This may be made in the same manner as beef tea, by using a pound of fillet of veal, free from fat and sliced, and a pint and a half of boiling water; and boiling for half an hour. It may also be made with the same quantity of the fleshy part of a knuckle of veal.

Vecor'dia, 'want of reason,' Idiocy.

Vec'tis, (vehere, vectum, 'to carry,') Lever — v. Elevatorius, Elevator — v. Triploides, Elevator, triploid.

Vec'tor Canal, (vehere, vectum, 'to carry,') Tube, Fallopian.

Veg'etable, Vegetabilis, (F.) Végétal, (from vegeo, 'lively,' and vegeo or vigeo, 'I flourish,') Appertaining or relating to plants. A vegetable, Phyton, (φύρον,) is an organized being devoid of sensation and voluntary motion, which receives its nutriment, essentially, by the roots. The study of vegetables is Phytology, Phytolog'ia.

Végétal, Vegetable.

Vegetal'ity, Vegetalitas, (F.) Végétalité, (from vegeo or vigeo, 'I am active,') The aggregate of physiological phenomena, which exist alone in the vegetable, but are common to both plants and animals. See Animality.

Vegetarian, see Vegetarianism.

Vegetarianism, (same etymon as Vegetation.) A modern term, employed to designate the view, that man, for his full mental and corporeal development, ought to subsist on the direct productions of the vegetable kingdom, and totally abstain from flesh and blood. An embracer and practiser of this doctrine is called a vegetarian.

Végétatif, Vegetative.

Vegeta'tion, Vegetatio, 'growing like a plant,' (from vegeo or vigeo, 'I am active,') A morbid production, which rises as an excrescence on an organ or part, as on the valves of the heart. The term is also applied to the fleshy granulation, Hypersarcosis, which sometimes arises at the surfaces of wounds or ulcers.

VEGETA'TION, DENDRIT'IC, Cancer, villous.

Veg'etative, Vegetativus, Phyticus, (F.) Végétatif. Having relation to growth or nutrition; hence, the vegetative or nutritive functions.

VEG'ETATIVE LAY'ER, see Tache embryonnaire.

Vegetati'vus, Vegetative.

Ve'hicle, Vehiculum, 'a carriage,' Oche'ma, Constituens, (F.) Véhicule, (from vehere, 'to carry,') Anything which serves to carry; thus air is the vehicle of sound; the arteries are the vehicles of the blood, &c. In Pharmacy, the name vehicle is given to any excipient, or to substances which serve as the media of administration for any medicine.

Véhicule, Vehicle.

Veiled Puff, see Cavernous respiration.

Vein, Ve'na, dim. Ve'nula, Phlebs, Phleps, (F.) Veine. The veins are vessels for the conveyance of blood from every part of the body to the heart. They are found wherever there are arteries, and altogether form the venous system, which may be subdivided into two distinct secondary systems. 1. The General ve'nous system, which commences in all the organs by very minute radicles, and terminates in the heart by the cava and the coronary vein. 2. The Abdom'inal ve'nous system, which is limited to the abdominal cavity; commences, also, by a great number of branches, and terminates in the liver by a single trunk, which subdivides in that organ. It is called, also, the System of the Ve'na Por'ta or the Por'tal System. See Porta. The veins form two sets, one deep-seat'ed, Ve'næ satel'lites, V. com'ites, V. concom'ites, which accompany the arteries; the other superfic'ial or subcuta'neous. Their parietes, which are thinner than those of the arteries, are composed of three coats; the outermost, of areolar tissue interwoven with elastic fibres or a muscular stratum in the larger veins; the middle coat elastic, with muscular fibres, longitudinal as well as transverse — the proper membrane; the other, the common or inner membrane, which is thin, polished, and has numerous duplicatures or folds forming parabolic valves. These valves are most numerous in the veins of the lower extremities. The coats of the veins are supplied with small arteries or vasa vasorum, veins, and lymphatics. They have not as many nervous filaments as the arteries. These filaments — vasomotor — are from the great sympathetic.

Vélar, Erysimum.

Vellari'na. A pale yellow oil from the hydrocotyle Asiatica,—from Vellarai, the native name of this East Indian plant. It has a reputation in the treatment of leprosy affections.

Vellica'tion, (vellicare, vellicatum, 'to twitch,') Tic.

Velosyn'thesis, (velum, and συνθεσις, 'a putting together,') Staphylorrhaphy.

Ve'lum, 'a veil, a cover,' Velum pendulum palati — v. Apophysi vermiformi obtentum, Valvula Vieussensii — v. Interjectum cerebelli, Valvula Vieussensii.

VE'LUM INTERPOS'ITUM. A vascular membrane, reflected from the pia mater into the interior of the brain through the transverse fissure. It separates the under surface of the body of the fornx from the cavity of the third ventricle.

VE'LUM MEDULLA'RE ANTI'CUM, Valvula Vieussensii.

VE'LUM MEDULLA'RE INFE'RIOUS, (F.) Voile médullaire inférieur. A name given, by Reil, to the medullary band or strip, by which the cerebellum communicates with the medulla.

VE'LUM MEDULLA'RE POSTE'RIOUS seu POSTI'CUS seu SEMILUNA'RE, Valvula Tari'ni. The small posterior valve of the cerebellum; a thin medullary plate, situate between the medulla oblongata and vermis inferior, in front of the nodulus.

VE'LUM PALA'TI, Velum pendulum palati — v. Palatinum, Velum pendulum palati.

VE'LUM PEN'DULUM PALA'TI, 'pendulous veil of the palate,' Ve'lum, V. Palati'num seu Pala'ti seu Pen'dulum seu Staphyli'num, Palu'tum pen'dulum seu mol'te seu mob'ile, Pen'dulum seu Claus'trum Pala'ti, Pala'tum Mol'te, Soft Pal'ate, (F.) Septum Staphylin (Ch.), Voile du Palais. A movable, soft, and broad septum, attached to the posterior extremity of the palatine arch, and separating the mouth from the pharynx. Its form is nearly quadrilateral. Its anterior surface corresponds to the mouth; the posterior to the pharynx. Its superior edge is fixed to the palatine arch; the inferior is free, floating, and has an appendix at its middle—the uvula. The lateral margins of the velum are held down by two folds, separated from each other by a triangular space; these are called the pillars; the anterior passes to the base of the tongue, the posterior to the sides of the pharynx. The velum palati is formed of a mucous coat, which contains numerous follicles, and of a muscular stratum, in which are the peristaphylini interni and p. externi muscles, the glossostaphylini, the pharyngostaphylini, and the palatostaphylinus. The arteries of the velum palati are furnished by the internal maxillary, the labial and the superior pharyngeal. Its veins open into the internal jugular. Its nerves are sent off from the ganglion of Meckel, and come from the palatine branches. The glossopharyngeal nerve, likewise, sends it some filaments.

VE'LUM PUPIL'LE, Pupillary membrane — v. Staphylinum, Velum pendulum palati—v. Vieussensii, Valvula Vieussensii.

Vel'vet Leaf, Abutilon Avicennæ, Pareira.

Venæsec'tio, (vena, 'a vein,' and secare, 'to cut,') see Bloodletting—v. Revulsoria, see Bloodletting.

Ve'nal, Venous.

Venefic'i'um, (venenum, and facere, 'to make,') Poisoning.

Venena'tion, (from venenum,) Poison, Poisoning, Venom.

Venena'tus, Venomous.

Vénéneux, Poisonous.

Ven'ense, Venomous.

Vene'num, Poison, Venom.

Vene'real, Vene'reus, Aphrodisi'acus Vene'rean, (F.) Vénérien, (from Venus, gen. Ven'eri, 'the goddess of pleasure,') That which relates to the pleasures of love. In a more restricted sense, the word vener'eal—as well as aphrodisi'ic—is synonymous with syphilit'ic, and also with syphilis. Some authors have proposed that those diseases which are produced by excess in venery should be called vener'eal; and that syphilit'ic should be limited to those which are the result of impure connection. It is, also, used in the same sense as aphrodisiac,—adapted to excite venereal desire.

VENE'REAL DESIRE', Libido—v. Diseases, Syphilis.

Vénérien, Venereal. Also, one laboring under syphilis; as Hôpital des vénériens.

Veneriv'agus, (venus, gen. veneris, 'the pleasures of love,' and vagare, 'to wander,') Libidinous.

Ven'ery, (from venus, gen. veneris,) The pleasures of love. Sexual communication. Coition.

Venesec'tion, (vena, 'a vein,' and secare, 'to cut,') see Bloodletting.

Venimeux, Venomous.

Venin, (from venenum,) Venom.

Venivel (Ceyl.), Pereiria medica.

Veno Beno, see Falsifications, table of.

Ven'om, Vene'num, Tox'icum, Venena'tion, (F.) Venin. A poisonous fluid secreted by certain animals, as the viper, in a state of health, and which they preserve in a particular reservoir, to use as a means of attack or defence. It differs, according to some, from virus, as the latter is always the result of a morbid process, which may be produced by the individuals who receive it, in their turn, and be transmitted to others.

VEN'OM, QUICK'ENING, Sperm—v. Vital. Sperm.

Ven'omous, Venena'tus, Ven'ense, (F.) Venimeux. An epithet applied to animals which have a secretion of venom, as the viper, rattlesnake, &c., as well as to the venom itself; and, by some, to liquids in the animal body, which have been so perverted by previous disease, that their contact occasions serious mischief in sound individuals; as happens in hydrophobia. Virus is more commonly used in this case.

Venos'itas, (from vena, 'a vein,') Venosity—v. Sanguinis, Prædominium sanguinis venosi.

Venos'ity, Venos'itas, Ve'nousness, Ve'nous state or cachex'ia, Malana'mia, Melano'sis universalis, (F.) Mélanémie, (from vena, 'a vein,') A condition in which, it has been supposed, the blood is moved slowly; is more venous; and the venous blood itself in greater quantity. This state is said to be chiefly observed in hemorrhoids, gout, hypochondriasis, melancholia, &c. In general, it signifies abundance of veins in a part; afflux of blood into the veins.

Ve'nous, Ve'nal, Veno'sus, (F.) Veineux, (from vena, 'a vein,') Appertaining to a vein, or to the blood of the veins; as venous cachexia, venous pulse.

VE'NOUS CACHEX'IA, Venosity—v. Hum, Bruit de Diable—v. Pulsation or Pulse, Pulsus venarum—v. State, Venosity—v. System, see Vascular—v. System, abdominal, Porta vena.

VE'NOUS SYS'TEM OF JA'COBSON. A system of vessels in the three classes of vertebrated animals other than the mammalia, which forms a communication between the vena porta and the vena cava.

Ve'nousness, Venosity.

Vent, ([L.] ventus,) Wind.

Ven'ter, gen. Ven'tris, Abdomen, Belly, Uterus. In law, venter designates the maternal parentage of children. Thus, if A were B's child by his first wife, he would be described in law as 'by the first venter.' 'A died seized, leaving two infant daughters by different venters.' In anatomy, the term is applied to a broad surface of a muscle or a bone, as venter of the ilium.

VEN'TER I'MUS, 'lowest belly,' Abdomen, Hypogastrium—v. Inferius, Abdomen—v. Infimus, Abdomen—v. Magnus, Inguvies—v. Medius, Thorax—v. Musculi, see Muscle—v. Parvus, Hypogastrium—v. Propendens, Hysteroloxia anterior—v. Renum, Pelvis of the kidney—v. Supremus, Cavum cranii.

Venteaux, (from ventus, 'wind,') Windy.

Ventila'tion, Ventila'tio, (from ventilare, ventilatum, 'to fan,') (F.) Ventilation, Aérage, Aération. The act of renewing the air of vessels, hospitals, and apartments, or of situations where many people are collected together. The utility of such renewal must be evident, when it is considered that atmospheric air loses its oxygen during respiration, and carbonic acid supplies its place. Stagnant air, also, becomes loaded with numerous impurities, and where numbers are crowded together, a large amount of zymotic or fermentable matter is exhaled from the lungs, and taken in again during respiration. This is, indeed, a great cause of the mortality which occurs in camps and cities, and hence one of the greatest hygienic improvements of modern times has been a proper attention to circulation of air, and various arrangements have been made for this purpose in hospitals and similar establishments. They are almost all, however, based on the renewal of air by suction, forcing, or both.

Ventilation is one of the most valuable additions to our stock of therapeutical agencies in many diseases. Instruments used for the purpose of renewing the air, in ships, apartments, &c., have been called ventilators. The term has, also, been applied to the free exposure of wounds and ulcers to the air; as well as to the act of directing a current of air upon them,—by the common bellows, for example.

Ventosité, Flatulence.

Ventos'ity, (from ventus, 'wind,') Flatulence.

Ventouses Scarifiées, (from ventosus, 'full of wind,') Cupping with the scarificator.

Ventouses Sèches, Cupping, dry.

Ven'tral, (from venter, 'the belly,') Abdominal.

VEN'TRAL HER'NIA, Her'nia ventral'is. Direct hernia occurring in any part of the abdomen. It is most frequently found between the recti muscles. When the hernia takes place below the xiphoid cartilage, it is called epigast'ric her'nia, hernia epigastrica; when in the loins, lumbar hernia, her'nia lumbaris.

Ventra'le, 'a belly band,' Belt (Russian).

VENTRA'LE CUTA'NEUM, 'cutaneous apron,' (F.) Tablier. An elongation of the nymphæ in the Bosjesman female, which hangs down before the vulva like an apron.

Ventre, (venter, 'the belly,') Abdomen—v. Inférieur, Abdomen—v. Relâché, see Diarrhœa—v. Resserré, Constipation.

Ven'trê Inspicien'do, Dê, see De ventre inspicendo.

Ven'tricle, Ventriculus, (dim. of venter, 'a belly,') (F.) Ventricule. Literally, a little belly. A name given, in anatomy, to various parts.

VEN'TRICLE OF ARAN'TIUS, V. or Cavity of Arantii, (F.) Ventricule d'Arantius ou d'Arantii. A small cavity, lined with gray substance, at the point of the calamus scriptorius.

VEN'TRICLE OF THE CEREBELLUM, see Ventricles of the brain—v. Fourth, see Ventricles of the brain—v. Fifth, see Ventricles of the brain—v. Pulmonary, V. right—v. of the Septum, see Ventricles of the brain—v. Sylvian, see Ventricles of the brain—v. Third, see Ventricles of the brain.

Ventricles of the Brain, Ventriculi seu Cavitates seu Sinus Cerebri, (F.) Ventricules du cerveau, are five cavities in the interior of that organ, which are distinguished into the lateral ventricles, middle ventricle, fourth ventricle or ventricle of the cerebellum, and fifth ventricle. The middle ventricle or third ventricle, (F.) Ventricule moyen du cerveau, is situate in front of the pineal gland. It is bounded, above, by the tela choroidea and the fornix; below, by a portion of cerebral substance, which separates it from the base of the cranium; laterally, by the thalami nervorum opticorum; anteriorly, by a medullary cord, called the anterior commissure; and, posteriorly, by another medullary cord, called the posterior commissure. It communicates with the lateral ventricles by two openings, situate behind the anterior pillar or crus of the fornix. The Lateral ventricles, Ventriculi laterales seu magni seu majores seu priores seu superiores seu tricornes, (F.) Ventricules latéraux, are two in number. They are large, and, owing to their considerable curvature, occupy a great part of the cerebral centre. They are bounded, above, by the inferior surface of the corpus callosum; anteriorly, by the curved portion of the same body; posteriorly, by a considerable mass of cerebral substance; and, internally, they are separated from each other by the septum of the ventricles, —a medullary plate, which is given off from the lower part of the corpus callosum. The lateral ventricles have, in their upper and anterior portion, the Corpora striata, Thalami optici, and Tænia semicircularis: —their inferior portion contains the Corpus fimbriatum, Cornu Ammonis, &c. Each of the ventricles has a body or centre —cella media—and horns, or cornua. The Fourth ventricle, Ventriculus cerebelli seu quartus seu Arantii, Sinus rhomboides, (F.) Quatrième ventricle, is situate beneath the aqueduct of Sylvius, by which it communicates with the third ventricle. It extends from this aqueduct to the upper part of the medulla; and is seated in the substance of the tuber annulare. The Fifth ventricle, Ventriculus septi pelli'cidi, Incisura septi, Ventricle of the septum, Sylvian ventricle, (F.) Cinquième ventricle, is the small serous cavity between the laminæ of the septum lucidum; called, also, Sinus of the septum lucidum, S. of the median septum (Ch.).

VEN'TRICLES OF THE HEART, Ventriculi cordis, Species cordis, (F.) Ventricules du cœur, are two in number. The Right ventricle, Pulmonary ventricle, Ventriculus anterior seu prius seu pul- monalis, (F.) Ventricule droit ou pulmonaire, is situate at the forepart of the heart, the base and apex corresponding to those of the heart. In it are seen the Colum'næ car'næ and Chor'dæ tendinæ. The right ventricle communicates with the right auricle by the Ostium venosum, and from it the Pulmonary artery arises. Around the auricular orifice is a tendinous margin or ring, from which the tricuspid valve is given off. The use of the ventricle is to send the blood, by its contraction, along the pulmonary artery to the lungs. The Left ventricle, Ventriculus aorticus seu posterior seu secundus, (F.) Ventricule gauche ou aortique, is situate at the posterior and left part of the heart. Its parietes are thrice thicker and stronger than those of the right, owing to its having to send the blood over the whole system. The inner surface has the same general appearance as that of the right. The Colum'næ car'næ and Chor'dæ tendinæ are, however, much stronger. It communicates with the left auricle by means of the Mitral valve; and from it proceeds the largest bloodvessel of the body—the aorta.

VEN'TRICLES OF THE LAR'YNX, Ventriculi seu Sacculi laryngei, Ventriculi Morgagnii, Alveoli seu Sinus laryngei seu Morgagnii, Sinuses of the larynx, (F.) Ventricules ou Sinus du larynx, are two depressions in the larynx, comprised between the superior and inferior ligaments.

VEN'TRICLES, LAT'ERAL, see Ventricles of the brain—v. Left, see Ventricles of the heart—v. Middle, see Ventricles of the brain—v. Pulmonary, see Ventricles of the heart—v. Right, see Ventricles of the heart.

Ven'tricose, Abdominous.

Ven'tricous, Ven'tricose, Ventricosus, (F.) Ventru. Bellied. Having a large belly. See Abdominous.

Ventric'ular, Ventricularis, (F.) Ventriculaire. Relating to a ventricle.

Ventricules du Cerveau, Ventricles of the brain—v. du Cœur, Ventricles of the heart—v. Latéraux, Ventricles, lateral.

VENTRICULUS CALLO'SUS, V. Bulbosus, 'callos stomach.' The gizzard or third stomach of the gallinaceous bird, (F.) Gésier. It consists of a double-bellied or digestive muscle; is lined by a firm cuticle, and forms a kind of pouch, depending from the alimentary tube, in which the second stomach terminates, and from which the duodenum or Ventriculus succenturiatus issues.

In the interior of the gizzard numerous pebbles are found, which seem to be destined to aid in the trituration of the food. The gizzard is an organ of mastication, and is possessed of great muscular power.

Vera'tria, Veratrina.

Verat'rina, Verat'ria, Verat'rinum, Ver'atrin, Ver'atrine, (from veratrum,) A vegetable alkali, found in the seeds of Vera'trum sabadil'la, V. officina'lē, Helo'nias officina'lis, and Asagr'a officina'lis, which are known in commerce under the names Cebadil'la, Cevadilla, and Sebadilla, and are imported from Mexico. They usually occur, in commerce, mixed with the fruit of the plant, are two or three lines long, of a black color, and are shining, flat, shrivelled, winged, and elastic seeds. Veratrine is solid, white, pulverulent, and inodorous; of a very acrid taste; decomposable by heat; very soluble in water, and soluble in alcohol. When prepared in the usual manner, it still contains other substances,—Sabadil'lin, Virid'ia, Veratroid'ia, gum resin of the sabadilla, and black greasy matter. It is extremely poisonous, and but little used internally in medicine. Magendie gave it as an emetic and drastic in very small doses. It has been recommended to be applied in the way of friction, or endermically, (from gr. v. to xx. to ℥j. of lard or cerate,) in various neuralgic affections. The two alkaloids, Virid'ia and Veratroid'ia, which are obtained from veratrina, are depressants of the circulation. Viridia produces death, however, by paralysis of the respiratory nervous system;

Veratroidia, by asphyxia. Viridia is soluble, Veratroidia insoluble, in ether.

The following is the formula for the preparation of Veratrin in the Ph. U. S., 1873: Take of Cevadilla, ℥xxiv., Alcohol Sulphuric acid, Water of ammonia, Purified animal charcoal, Magnesia and water, each a sufficient quantity. Digest the cevadilla with eight pints of alcohol, for four hours, in a distillatory apparatus, with a heat approaching to boiling, and pour off the liquid. To the residue add another gallon of the alcohol, mixed with the portion distilled; digest for an hour, and pour off the liquid. Digest for a third time with the same quantity of alcohol, together with the portion last distilled, and again pour off. Press the remains of the cevadilla, mix and strain the liquids, and, by means of a water-bath, distil off the alcohol. Boil the residue three or four times in water acidulated with sulphuric acid, mix and strain the liquids and evaporate to the consistence of syrup. Add magnesia in slight excess, shake the mixture frequently, then express, and wash what remains. Repeat the expression and washing two or three times, and having dried the residue, digest it with a gentle heat several times in alcohol, and strain after each digestion. Distil off the alcohol from the mixed liquid, boil the residue for fifteen minutes in water mixed with a little sulphuric acid and purified animal charcoal, and strain. Having thoroughly washed what remains, mix the washings with the strained liquid, evaporate with a moderate heat to the consistence of thin syrup, and drop in sufficient water of ammonia to precipitate the veratrin. Lastly, wash the alkaloid with water, and dry it with a gentle heat.

An analogous form is given in the British Pharmacopœia for 1867.

Ver'atrine, Veratrina.

VER'ATRINE or VERA'TRIA, SUL'PHATE OF, Vera'trin sul'phas, (F.) Sulfate de Véatrine, possesses the same virtues as veratrine. A solution of one grain in two ounces of distilled water has been suggested as a substitute for the Eau médicinale d'Huison—a celebrated gout remedy—in the dose of ℥j. to ℥ij.

Verat'rinum, Veratrina.

Veratroid'ia, see Veratrina.

Vera'trum Al'bum, (verē atrum, 'truly black,' from the color of the roots [?],) Helleb'orus al'bus, Elleb'orum al'bum, Elleb'orus al'bus, Cher'bachem, White hel'lebore, Lang'wort, (F.) Vératre blanc, Hellébore ou Ellébore blanc, Véaire blanc, Vaire, Tue-chien. Sex. Syst. Polygamia Monœcia. Nat. Ord. Melanthaceæ (Lindley).

The root or rhizoma of this common European plant is indebted to the veratrine for its properties. It is inodorous; has a bitterish, acrid, nauseous taste, and is violently emetic and purgative, even when applied to an ulcerated surface. It is, also, possessed of errhine properties, and acts, externally, as a stimulant. It is rarely exhibited internally. Sometimes it is given as a sneezing powder; but it operates with great violence. It forms, also, an itch ointment. See Unguentum veratrinæ.

The seed—dried fruit—of this plant, Cevadil'la, Sabadil'la, (Ph. U. S. and Ph. B.,) have been used mostly as anthelmintics. Dose, gr. ij. to a child four years old. It possesses the same general properties as the veratrum album.

Powdered sabadilla, under the name Poudre des Capuchins, was formerly employed for destroying lice and vermin.

VERA'TRUM VIRI'DE, Amer'ican or Green Hel' lebores, Swamp hel'lebores, In'dian poke, In'dian Un'cas, Poke'weed, Bear'weed, Itch'weed, Tickle'weed, Earth'gall, Dev'ilbit, Wolf'bane, Pup'pet root, is indigenous in the swampy districts of almost every part of the United States. The properties of the rhizoma are like those of the genus. It has been brought forward, however, in recent times, in the Southern States, as a powerful sedative in inflammatory diseases. Dose, eight drops of a saturated tincture every three hours, until its sedative effects are induced.

Ver'tebræ, pl. of vertebra, Spondyli, Spondyles, Whet'tlebones, (F.) Vertèbres, (from vertere, 'to turn,') This name has been given to the bones which by their union form the vertebral or spinal column. The vertebrae are short, thick, very angular bones, twenty-four in number, and situate one above another. The body—centrum, of Owen—of the vertebra is the middle and anterior portion. Above and below it is articulated, by means of a fibrocartilage, with the contiguous vertebrae. The Proc'esses, (F.) Masses apophysaires, of each vertebra are: 1. The spinous proc'ess, situate behind, and in the median line. 2. The two transverse proc'esses, standing off from each side. 3. The four articular or oblique proc'esses—zygapophyses, of Owen—two superior and two inferior—which serve to unite the vertebrae with each other. These transverse and articulating processes are made continuous with the lateral and posterior parts of the body of the vertebra by narrow bony portions or pedicles, on each of which are notches. These, by their union with similar notches in the contiguous vertebra, form the lateral foramina, (F.) Trous de conjugaison, through which the spinal nerves leave the vertebral canal. The different processes are united with each other, so as to form a kind of ring of the lateral and posterior parts of the vertebra; and the foramen within this,—that is, between the body and processes, foramen vertebra'le rachid'ium,—concurs in forming the vertebral canal. The arch or lamina of a vertebra, neurapophysis, is the part from which the several processes project. The vertebrae have particular characters, according to the regions they occupy. They are divided into seven cervical, twelve dorsal, and five lumbar. The first cervical is called atlas; the second, axis or vertebra dentata; and the seventh, vertebra prominens seu prominens. The vertebrae are articulated with each other. Those of the back are joined, moreover, to the ribs by their articulating surfaces—parapophyses. The first or atlas is articulated with the occipital bone; and the last lumbar vertebra with the sacrum. The cervical vertebrae are developed by nine points of ossification; the dorsal and lumbar by eight.

Vertebral, Vertebra'lis. That which relates or belongs to the vertebrae.

VERTEBRAL ARTERY, Poste'rior cer'ebral ar'tery (Ch.), is the largest of the branches of the subclavian. It arises from the posterior part of that vessel; is lodged in a canal, (F.) Petit canal vertebrae, formed by the foramina in the transverse processes; enters the cranium, and proceeds to anastomose with its fellow of the opposite side, and to form the Basillary artery. Besides the branches sent to the neck, the vertebral artery gives off the ante'rior and poste'rior spinal ar'teries, and the infe'rior cerebellous, in the cavity of the cranium.

VERTEBRAL CANAL, see Vertebral column.

VERTEBRAL COLUMN, Rac'his, Rha'chis, No'tus, Aenes'tis, Cari'na, C. hom'inis, Spi'na, S. dor'si seu vertebra'lis, Colum'na spina'lis seu vertebra'lis seu *dor'si, Dor'sum, Ter'gum, Comp'ages Vertebra'rum, Acan'tha, Sa'era fis'tula, Hi'era Sy'rinx, Spine, Backbone, (Sc.) Backsprent, (F.) Colonne vertebrale, Épine du dos, Échine. A kind of bony column, situate at the posterior and central part of the trunk; extending from the head to the sacrum; flexible in every direction, yet very solid, and hollowed by a canal called vertebral, which gives it lightness without diminishing its strength, and runs through its whole length. The vertebral column is formed by the superposition of the vertebrae. It represents a pyramid, whose base is below. Anteriorly, it is convex in the neck; concave in the back, and convex, again, in the loins. Behind, the curvatures are of course the reverse of these. There is also in the dorsal region a lateral curvature, the concavity of which is towards the left side. Considered as a whole, the vertebral column has an ante'rior or prespi'nal surface; a poste'rior or spi'nal; two lat'eral; a base; and an a'pex or top. In the nomenclature of Chaussier, the anterior surface, in the neck, is called trache'lian; in the back, predor'sal; and in the loins, prelum'bar. The dorsal surface has at its middle the spinous processes; and at its sides the vertebral gut'ters, (F.) Gouttières vertebrales, formed by the union of the vertebral plates, (F.) Lames vertebrales, which, by their junction, constitute the spinous processes. These are filled by the sacrospinalis muscle. The sides or lateral surfaces present the foramina resulting from the union of the vertebral not'ches, (F.) Échancrures vertebrales. These are called vertebral foramina, (F.) Trous de conjugaison, and give passage to the vertebral nerves. The base of the vertebral column is oblique, to unite with the sacrum, and forms with it an angle called sacrovertebral angle or promontory. The a'pex or top of the vertebral column is articulated with the occipital bone. Sometimes the term vertebral column includes the whole of the column from the occipital bone to the extremity of the coccyx. The Vertebral or spi'nal or rachid'ian canal, So'ten, Cana'lis vertebra'lis seu medul'lā spina'lis, Sp'e'cus pro medul'lā spina'li seu vertebra'lis, exists through the whole of the vertebral column,* whose curvatures it follows. It is continuous, above, with the cranium; below, with the sacral canal, if we consider the vertebrae to terminate at the sacrum. It is lined by a prolongation of the meninges, forming the The'ca vertebra'lis, and lodges the spinal marrow.

The vertebral column, which unites lightness with solidity, serves to support the head and chest. It is the seat of all the movements of the trunk, the weight of which it transmits to the pelvis. It lodges and protects the spinal marrow, and gives passage to the vertebral nerves, and to numerous vessels.

VERTEBRAL DISEASE, Rachia'gia (of some), Ca'ries of the Ver'tebrae, Spondylarthrocac'e, Spondylocac'e, Kypho'sis inflammato'ria seu paralytica, Gibbos'itas cario'sa, Ca'ries vertebra'rum, Spondylal'gia, Spondylopyo'sis, Tuberculo'sis Ver'tebra'rum. The spinal column is liable to distortion (see Hump), at times, without the vertebrae being much, if at all, diseased. At other times, a more formidable affection is induced; the vertebrae becoming carious, and the intervertebral cartilages ulcerated; followed by a more or less complete loss of power over the lower extremities. In such case, on examining the spine, one or more of the spinous processes is found to project beyond the rest. The disease was first well described by Mr. Percival Pott; and hence it has been called by the French, Maladie de Pott, Malum seu Gibbus Pottii, Pott's disease or boss or curvature. It usually occurs in scrofulous subjects, and the treatment consists in establishing a counterirritation by blisters, issues, or the moxa, opposite the transverse processes of the diseased vertebrae. The sore must be suffered to remain open, and the patient kept in the horizontal posture until the use of the limbs is recovered; employing tonics, the free admission of fresh air, &c., at the same time.

VERTEBRAL FORAMEN. See Vertebrae.

VERTEBRAL LIGAMENTS, (F.) Ligaments vertebraux, Surtouts ligamenteux de la colonne vertebrale, are distinguished into anterior and posterior. They consist of long, ligamentous coverings; the anterior occupying the anterior part of the vertebral column; and the posterior seeming to arise from the occipitoaxoid ligament, and seated behind the bodies of the vertebrae, from the axis to the sacrum.

VERTEBRAL NERVE, Trisplanchnic.

VERTEBRAL NERVES, Spi'nal Nerves, (F.) Nerfs rachidiens, spring successively from the spinal marrow, from its origin to its termination. These nerves—30 pairs in all—arise by two roots; one ante'rior, from the an'terior or an'terolateral column of the spinal marrow, and the other poste'rior, from the poste'rior or posterolateral column, and afterwards issue by the vertebral and sacral foramina. Each of these roots seems to have a distinct function; the posterior being destined to convey sensation to parts; the anterior, motion. The posterior root, however, gives occasion, by its influence on the anterior, to reflex movements; while the anterior, by reacting on the posterior, induces the phenomena of recur'rent sensibility. On the posterior root, before its junction with the anterior, there is a ganglion, Intervertebral gan'gion. Of the 30 pairs of nerves, 7 are cervical, 12 dorsal, 5 lumbar, and 6 sacral. See Nerves.

VERTEBRAL POLYARTHRITIS, see Polyarthrititis.

Vertebrated, Vertebra'tus, (F.) Vertébré. Provided with vertebrae.

Vertebres, Vertebrae.

Vertebro'dym'ia, (vertebra, and δύω, 'to mingle,) see Somatodymia.

Vertebroil'iac Ligament, Ileolumbar ligament.

Ver'tex, gen. Ver'ticis, Cor'yphè, Corys, Aerori'a, Spon'dylus. The top or highest part or crown of the head, (F.) Sommet; (Sc.) Can'tel, Nuc, Pal'lat, Pal'ad. See Sinciput.

VER'TEX COR'DIS, Mucro cordis—v. Cubiti, Olecranon—v. Palpitans, Fontanella—v. Presentation, see Presentation.

Vertib'ulum, (from vertere, 'to turn.') The rounded head of a bone, as of the humerus; a joint; trepan.

Vertic'ula, (from vertere, 'to turn,') Articulation.

Vertic'ulum, Articulation.

Vertic'ulus, Articulation.

Vertige, Vertigo—v. Stomacale, Vertigo a stomacho læso.

Vertig'inous, Vertigino'sus, (old Eng. and Prov.) Totty, (F.) Vertigineux. Relating or pertaining to vertigo; Gid'dy, Diz'zy.

Verti'go, gen. Vertig'inis, (from vertere, 'to turn,') Di'nos, Ilin'gos, Di'nus seu Hallucina'tio seu Autal'gia verti'go, Circumgyra'tio, Gid'diness, Diz'ziness, Swim'ming of the head, (Prov.) Swee, Swim'ming, (F.) Vertige, Etourdissement. A state in which it seems that all objects are turning round, or that the individual himself is performing a movement of gyration, Verti'go gyro'sa. Two varieties have been designated:—simple verti'go, where the objects are seen; and scotodyn'ia, in which the sight is obscured, and the individual often falls. Vertigo is dependent upon the condition of the brain as affected by the circulation, and often announces an attack of apoplexy or epilepsy.

VERTI'GO A STOM'ACHO LÆ'SO, Abdom'inal Diz'ziness, (F.) Vertige Stomacale. Vertigo dependent on or associated with well-marked gastric symptoms.

VERTI'GO GYRO'SA, see Vertigo—v. Tenebriosa, Scotodynia.

Veru'gas (S.), (from verruca, 'a wart.') A peculiar disease, affecting certain localities of Peru, which manifests itself by sorethroat, pains in the bones, and other febrile symptoms. In the course of a few days, an eruption of red pimples or boils appears. These sometimes increase in magnitude till they become nearly as large as an egg, and discharge blood copiously. It is ascribed to the water of certain springs in the valleys, and especially in that of Surea, called Aqua de Veruga.

Ve'ru Monta'num, 'a mountain spit,' Gallinagin's caput.

Ver'vain, Verbena officinalis—v. Blue, Verbena hastata.

Verecine, Verbena officinalis.

Vesa'lius, Fora'men of. A small aperture in the sphenoid bone, at the inner side of the foramen ovale.

Vesa'nia, Vesa'niæ, (from ve, negative, and sanus, 'sound,') 'madness.' Derangement of the intellectual and moral faculties, without coma or fever. Many nosologists have used this as a generic term, under which they have included the different species of mental alienation, hypocondriasis, somnambulism, and some even hydrophobia. See Nosology.

VESA'NIA MA'NIA, Mania.

Vesa'niæ, Insanity, Vesania.

VESI'CA SACCA'TA, Cystostenochoria—v. Sacculata, Bladder, sacculated, Cystostenochoria—v. Urinaria, Urinary bladder.

Vesi'cæ Irritabil'itas, Cysterethismus—v. Unguinosæ tendinum, Bursæ mucosæ.

Ves'ical, Vesica'lis, (F.) Vésical, (from vesica.) That which belongs or relates to the bladder.

VES'ICAL AR'TERIES vary in number and origin. The umbilical artery always sends off two or three: the middle hemorrhoidal, internal pudic, and obturator furnish others, which ramify and anastomose in the parietes of the bladder; the hypogastric furnishes one which is somewhat larger, the Vesicoprostatic (Ch.), and proceeds to the bas-fond of the bladder, sending numerous ramifications to it as well as to the surrounding parts.

VES'ICAL GAN'GLIA, see Spermatic ganglion—v. Ligaments, see Urinary bladder—v. Oxide, Oxide, cystic—v. Triangle, see Urinary bladder.

VES'ICAL VEINS, much more numerous than the arteries, open into the hypogastric plexus.

Ves'icant, (from vesica.) Blister.

Vesica'rium, Ovarium.

Vesica'tion, Vesica'tio, (from vesica.) The action of a vesicant. The formation of blisters.

Vésication Volante (F.), 'a flying vesication.' A temporary vesication produced by art.

Vésicatoire, Blister—v. Magistral, Blister, magistral—v. Volant, see Blister.

Vesicato'rium, Blister.

VES'ICLE OF BAER, Vesic'ula Baerii, (F.) Vésicule de Baer. The ovule in the follicle of De Graaf; which was well described by Baer in 1827.

VES'ICLE OF DEVELOPMENT, V. of Evolution. A vesicle or cyst concerned in histogeny.

VES'ICLE OF EVOLU'TION, V. of development—v. Germinal, see Molecule—v. Malignant, Anthrax—v. Purkinjean, see Molecule—v. Umbilical, Vesicula umbilicalis—v. Valentinian, see Molecule—v. Wagner's, see Molecule—v. Web-erian, see Ejaculatory ducts.

Ves'icles, Ascherson's. When fluid fat and fluid albumen are shaken together, the resulting fat globules become surrounded by an albuminous layer. The vesicles, thus formed, are called after Ascherson, their describer.

VES'ICLES OF DE GRAAF, Folliculi Graafiani—v. Lung, see Pulmo—v. Malpighian, Cellules, bronchic, see Pulmo—v. Seminal, Vesiculæ seminales.

Vesicoce'lê, (vesica, 'a bladder,' and κηλη, 'a rupture,') Cystocele.

Vesicoprostat'ic, see Vesical.

Ves'icou'rachal, Vesi'coûracha'lis. Relating or appertaining to the bladder and urachus,—as a 'vesicou'rachal fistula.'

Ves'icou'terine, Vesi'coûteri'nus. Appertaining or relating to the bladder and uterus.

VESICOU'TERINE FOLDS, see Uterus.

Ves'ico-u'tero-vag'inal. Relating to the bladder, uterus, and vagina,—as vesico-utero-vaginal hernia.

Ves'icovag'inal, Vesi'covagina'lis, Vag'ino-ves'ical, U'rinovag'inal. Relating to the bladder and the vagina,—as vesicovaginal fistula.

VES'ICOVAG'INAL HER'NIA, see Cystocele.

Vesic'ula, Cyst'inx, Ves'icle, Blis'ter, (F.) Vésicule, (dim. of vesica.) A small bladder or cyst.

VESIC'ULA, Ves'icle, Ec'phlyis, Cyst'inx, Pomphus, in Pathology, means a small orbicular elevation of the cuticle containing lymph, which is sometimes clear and colorless, but often opaque and whitish or pearly-colored. It is succeeded either by a scurf or by a laminated scab.

VESIC'ULA UMBILICA'LIS, V. alba seu om'phalomesenter'ica seu sem'inato'sa seu ova'lis, Vesi'ca intestinal'is, Vitellic'ulus, Umbil'ical or Intes'tinal Ves'icle, Vit'elline Pouch, Vitel'licle, (F.) Vésicule ombilicale. A small, pyriform, round, or spheroidal sac, which, about the fifteenth or twentieth day after fecundation, is of the size of a common pea, and probably acquires its greatest dimensions in the course of the third or fourth week. After the seventh week, it becomes shrivelled and disappears insensibly. It seems to be situate between the chorion and amnion, and is commonly adherent either to the outer surface of the amnion or to the inner surface of the chorion, but at times is loose between them. The vit'elline ped'icle, which attaches the vesicle to the embryo, is continuous with the intestinal canal; and, up to twenty or thirty days of embryonic life, is hollow. — Duc'tus om'phalomesenter'icus seu vitello-intestinal'is seu vitella'rius, Vit'elline Duct. Its arteries are the omphalomesenteric. The Vit'elline flu'id, contained in the vesicle—in the Vit'elline or Yolk mem'brane—has been compared, from analogy, to the vitell'us or yolk of birds; and, like it, is an oleaginous and albuminous substance, which is inservient to the nutrition of the embryo.

Vesic'ulae, pl. of vesicula, constitute the 6th order of Bateman's classification of Cutaneous Diseases.

VESIC'ULÆ SEMINA'LES, V. semina'ria seu spermat'ice, Cap'sulæ semina'les, Conceptac'ula semina'ria, Gonocyst'ides, Spermatocyst'ides, Sem'inal ves'icles, (F.) Vésicules séminales, Gardouches, Greniers, are two small membranous sacs, which serve as reservoirs for the sperm, and probably secrete a fluid to be mixed with it. They are situate beneath the bladder, and above the rectum, behind the prostate and to the outer side of the vasa deferentia. They are of an irregular conoidal shape; flattened from above to below; embossed on their surface, and of a grayish tint. Their posterior extremity or fundus terminates by a round cul-de-sac. Their anterior extremity or neck is narrow and elongated, and is continuous with the excretory duct of the vesicula. This duct joins the vas deferens, and forms with it the ejaculatory duct. The interior of the vesiculæ exhibits several cells, which communicate with each other, and are lined by a very thin mucous membrane.

VESIC'ULÆ SEMINA'LES MULIERUM, Nabothi glandulæ — v. Spermaticæ, see Vesiculæ seminales.

Vesic'ular, Vesicula'ris, (F.) Vésiculaire. Of or belonging to a vesicle; full of or containing small vesicles or cells. The cortical or gray matter of the brain is sometimes termed vesicular. See Cortex cerebri and Neurine.

Vesic'ulous, Vesiculo'sus, (F.) Vésiculeux, (from vesica.) Shaped like or characterized by vesicles.

Vesic'ulotympanit'ic, Vesic'ulotympanit'icus. An epithet for a sound or resonance heard on percussion, which consists of the vesicular and tympanitic sounds combined. It occurs, according to Dr. Flint, when the parenchyma of the lungs is incompletely solidified.

Ves'pa, Wasp.

Vespertilio'nis A'la, 'bat's wing.' A triangular portion of the broad ligament of the uterus, formed by the ligament of the ovary and the ovary itself. See Uterus.

Ves'sel, Vas, Va'sum, dim. Vas'culum; Ang'ion, An'gus, Conceptac'ulum, ([L.] vas, vasculum), (F.) Vaisseau. A canal, more or less elastic, formed by the superposition of membranes, and distinguished, according to its uses and general arrangement, into Artery, Vein, and Lymphatic. See, also, Vascular.

Vess'eloup, 'wolf fizzle,' Lycoperdon.

Vessie, (from vesica, 'a bladder,') Urinary bladder — v. Col de la, Collum vesicæ — v. à Colonne, see Urinary bladder — v. Natatoire, Air-bladder.

Vestib'ular, Vestibula'ris, (F.) Vestibulaire, Relating or appertaining to a vestibule.

VESTIB'ULAR NERVE, see Auditory nerve.

Ves'tibule, Vestib'ulum, (from vestio, 'I clothe or cover,') The porch or entrance to a house; hence —

VESTIBULE, Vestib'ulum, V. vaginæ, Prona'us, A'trium vaginæ, Am'bitus genita'lis mul'iebris, Canal vulvaire, is a smooth cavity between the perinæum and nymphae in the female, which leads to two passages — to the urethra above and to the vagina below. Henle includes the labia pudendi also.

VESTIBULE OF THE EAR, Vestib'ulum, V. os'seum, V. labyrin'thi, (F.) Vestibule. A cavity of an irregular shape, which forms part of the labyrinth or internal ear. The vestibule is situate on the inner side of the tympanum; on the outer side of the meatus auditorius internus; before the semicircular canals and behind the cochlea. It is lined by a particular membrane, and contains the liquor of Cotunnus and branches of the auditory nerve. There is also another membrane, constituting the membranous ves'tibule, but it is not an exact imitation of the osseous cavity. It is composed of two distinct sacs, which open into each other — the sac'culus vestib'uli and the sac'culus. There are three contiguous cavities in the vestibule; one of which, the semi'oval, is situate above; another, the hemispher'ical, below; and the third, or sul'ciform, which is the orifice of the aquæductus vestibuli, behind.

Vestib'ulum Labyrin'thi, Vestibule of the ear — v. Nasi, see Nares — v. Oris, see Mouth — v. Osseum, Vestibule of the ear — v. Vaginæ, Vestibule.

Vestige (F.), Vestig'ium, 'a vestige,' 'a trace.' A kind of fracture of flat bones, consisting of a simple incision having the mark of the instrument that caused it. The term is also applied to a part of the body, which may have no evident use in man, and yet may be greatly employed in animals. For example, the muscles of the external ear in man are almost devoid of use, or are vestiges of what they are in certain animals.

Vestig'ium, Sole, Vestige — v. Foraminis ovalis, Ovalis fossa — v. Pedis, Metatarsus.

Vestimen'tum, Vestitus.

Vesti'tus, gen. Vesti'tus, Vestimen'tum, Esthe'ma, Esthe'sis, Res vestia'ria, Vest'ment, Clo'thing, Dress, Ves'ture, (F.) Vêtement, (from vestire, vestitum, 'to clothe,') Any substance used for the purpose of covering nakedness, or preserving from atmospheric temperature by being worn on the body. The best clothing in winter is composed of articles that are bad conductors of caloric, and do not admit of ready evaporation of the matter of perspiration. In this respect, woollen vestments deserve the first place, and cotton the second. Color has likewise to be regarded—the darkest hues transmitting solar heat most readily through them. It has been found that the same rule applies to odors—the darker colors retaining a greater amount of odorous particles than the lighter. Hence the necessity of white walls, white bedclothes, &c., in hospitals; for it is probable that the law applies to contagious miasms.

Vest'ment, Vestitus.

Ves'ture, Vestitus.

Ve'ta, Puna.

Vêtement, ([L.] Vestimentum,) Vestitus.

Vetera'na, Rubeola.

Veterina'rius, see Hippia'ter and Veterinary.

Vet'erinary, Veterina'rius, (F.) Vétérinaire, (from veterinus, 'that which bears burdens;' itself, perhaps, from vehiterinus, from vehere, 'to carry,') That which appertains to beasts of burden; hence, veterinary surgeon, (see Farrier,) veterinary college, veterinary medicine, &c.

VET'ERINARY ANAT'OMY, see Anatomy.

VET'ERINARY ART, Ars seu Medic'ina veterina'ria, Zoöi'asis, Zoiatri'a, Theriat'rica, Mu'lomedici'na, Zoötherapi'a, Zoötherapeuti'cæ, Ars zoiat'rica, Far'riery. The art of treating the diseases, &c., of cattle.

Veternos'itas, (from veterus, 'aged;' because old persons are subject to somnolency,) Coma vigil.

Veter'nus, see Coma vigil.

Vétiver, Andropogon muricatus.

Viability, see Viable.

Vi'able, Viab'ilis, (from vita, [F.] vie, 'life,' and habilis, 'able,') A word introduced with great advantage from the French into our language. It is an epithet applied to a foetus whose organs are properly formed, and so developed as to permit its continued existence. Every foetus is not viabile. Anencephali have lived ten or twelve days, yet they are not viable. The older the foetus, the more viable it is. It is an idle prejudice that a child, born at the end of eight months, is less likely to live than one born at the end of seven. The signs of viability are drawn from the weight, length, external conformation, &c., of the foetus. It may be laid down as a general rule, that no foetus born before the end of the seventh month is viable.

Vi'æ (pl. of via) Chylif'eræ, Chyliferous vessels.

Vi'æ CLANDESTI'næ, Clandes'tine Pas'sages. Supposititious secret ways or passages or 'royal roads,' to account, for example, for the rapid transmission of substances taken into the stomach to the kidneys or bladder.

Vi'æ EXTRAORDINA'RIÆ LAC'TIS, Galactoplasia—v. Lacrymales, Lachrymal passages—v. Primæ, Ways, digestive—v. Secundæ, Ways, second.

Vi'al, Phiala.

Viandes Faisand'ées, ([L.] vivenda, from vivere, 'to live,') see Hyposaprus.

Viber'num, see Viburnum.

Vibi'ces, (pl. of vibex, 'the mark of a stripe,') Mol'opes, Stri'æ, (F.) Vergettures. Large purple spots, like the marks produced by the strokes of a whip, which appear under the skin in certain malignant fevers. They are unfavorable indications, as they denote great prostration.

Vibra'men, gen. Vibra'minis, (vibrare, 'to quiver,') Oscillation.

Vi'brans, Vibratory.

Vibratile, (from vibrare, vibratum, 'to quiver,') Vibratory.

Vibratil'ity, Vibratil'itas, (F.) Vibratilité. Capability of being thrown into vibration.

Vibra'tio, Oscillation, Vibration—v. Cardiaca, Palpitation—v. Cordis, Palpitation.

Vibra'tion, Vibratio—v. Pectoral, see Fremitus—v. Tactile, see Fremitus—v. Tussive, see Tussive.

Vibra'tions of Sound, see Sound.

Vibra'tor, Deferens vas.

Vi'bratory, Vi'brans, Vi'brative, (F.) Vibratile, Vibratoire. An epithet applied to the pain that accompanies some neuralgiae, which seems to the patient to vibrate among the nerves.

Vi'BRATORY MO'TION, see Cilia.

Vibra'tus, gen. Vibra'tus, Oscillation.

Vib'rio, gen. Vibrio'nis, (from vibrare, 'to quiver,') A genus of infusory animalcules, of which different species are met with,—for example, Vib'rio pro'lifer, in almost all putrescent fluids containing protein, and in the pus of chancres; in which last the V. line'ola has likewise been found. Bacteria are considered by many synonymous with Vibriones; both indicate the existence of organic substances associated with putrefaction. See Micrococci.

Vibris'sæ, (from vibrare, 'to quiver,') The hairs which grow at the entrance of the nostrils and of other apertures. In the feline tribe, the whiskers.

Vibur'num seu Viber'num Acerifo'lium, Ma'ple-leaved Ar'row Wood, (from viere, 'to bind;' several species having long flexible twigs,) Dock-mackie; Ord. Caprifoliaceæ. A plant used by the Indians, and afterwards by the Dutch, as an external application to tumors.

VIBUR'NUM CASSINOI'DES, Ilex Paraguensis.

VIBUR'NUM DENTA'TUM, Ar'row Wood, Meal'y Tree, Til'y of the Indians. Ord. Caprifoliaceæ. A high indigenous shrub, of the same family as V. lentago; the bark of which has been used by the Indians as a diuretic.

VIBUR'NUM EDU'LÈ flourishes in the Hudson's Bay territory. The fruit has an orange color, and is less acid, more fleshy, and more agreeable to the taste than the cranberry.

VIBUR'NUM LÆVIGA'TUM, Ilex Paraguensis.

VIBUR'NUM LENTA'GO, Sweet Vibur'num, Nann'y-berry. A handsome indigenous tree, which flowers in May and June; used as an antiperiodic.

VIBUR'NUM PRUNIFO'LIUM, Black Hare, Sloe-leaved Viburnum, Sloe. Indigenous; flowering in May. The leaves have been used as tea. It has been supposed to be a valuable remedial agent in the nervous disorders of pregnancy and uterine diseases, and to prevent abortion!—all of which may well be questioned.

VIBUR'NUM SLOE'LEAVED, V. prunifolium—v. Sweet V. lentago.

Vic-le-Compte, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Vic-le-Compte is a small village in the department of Puy-de-Dôme, three leagues from Issoire; where there is an acidulous chalybeate, which is aperient.

Vica'rious, Vica'rius, (from viciis, 'change,') Taking the place of another,—as 'vicarious secretion,' Secre'tio vica'ria; a secretion which takes place in one part instead of another.

Vicar's Bray, Min'eral Wa'ters of. This spring is situate in Perthshire, Scotland, about two miles from Dollor, and near to Blarngone.

The water is one of the strongest chalybeates known.

Vice, (vitium, 'a defect,' 'a fault,') Cacosis—v. Secret, Masturbation.

Vice de Conformation. Faulty formation of a part of the body.

Vich'y, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Carbonated alkaline chalybeates, the sources of which are at Vichy, six leagues from Moulins, in the department of Allier. The springs are seven in number. Almost all are thermal; give off bubbles of carbonic acid gas, have a slightly sulphureous odor, and contain a very large amount of alkali. They range in temperature from 53° to 110° Fah. They deposit carbonates of lime and magnesia, and a little oxide of iron. They afford on analysis, in one pint of the water, 106° Fah., carbonate of potassa, 2.04 gr.; carbonate of soda, 26.00; carbonate of magnesia, 1.38; carbonate of iron, 0.02; carbonate of lime, 2.31; carbonate of strontia, 0.01; chloride of sodium, 4.10; sulphate of soda, 2.29; phosphate of soda, 0.78; carbonic acid gas, 14.74 cubic inches. They are employed as tonics, particularly in chronic affections of the liver and abdominal viscera generally, in old catarrhs, diseases of the joints, diabetes, &c., and wherever the use of strongly alkaline waters is indicated. The season is from the 15th of May to the 15th of September.

VICH'Y WA'TER, FACTIT'IOUS, A'qua Vicien'sis, (F.) Eau de Vichy, is made of simple Acidulous water, 3xxss., impregnated with twice its bulk of Carbonic acid, Subcarbonate of soda, gr. xxxij., Sulphate of soda, gr. xvj., Chloride of sodium, gr. iv., Subcarbonate of magnesia, gr. ss., Chloride of iron, gr. ½. Mix. Ph. P. The French Codex (1866) has an Eau Alcaline Gazeuse, A'qua Alkali'na Efferves'cens, which may be employed as a substitute for Vichy and similar waters.

A VICH'Y WA'TER POW'DER, (F.) Poudre pour Eau de Vichy, is made as follows: Sodæ bicarb., 5 gram., Sodii chlorid., 20 centigram., Sodæ sulph., 50 centigram., Magnes. sulph., 15 centigram., Ferri sulph., 1 centigram., Aquæ, 625 gram. Mix. To render it gaseous, add Acid. citric, 3 gram.

Vic'ia Ervil'ia, Ervum.

VIC'IA FA'BA, Fa'ba, F. ma'ior seu vulga'ris, Or'obus fa'ba, Common gar'den bean, (F.) Fève ou Fève des marais. Ord. Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Diadelphia Decandria. A native of Egypt. There are many varieties of beans, none of which are easy of digestion. They are proverbially flatulent, especially when old. When young, they are more digestible and wholesome. Bean meal was one of the four resolvent meals of the ancients.

Vicinitrac'tus, gen. Vicinitractûs, (vicinus, 'near,' and trahere, tractum, 'to draw,') Erysipelas.

Vicinit'raha, Erysipelas.

Vicis'situde, Vicissitu'do, (from vicis, 'change,') Constant change. The vicissitudes of the atmosphere, as regards its barometric, thermometric, and hygrometric condition, have to be guarded against by the delicate, and yet, by the new impressions they produce, they are probably a cause of the greater mental and corporeal activity of the inhabitants of the temperate regions of the globe.

Vir'ga, 'a rod,' Penis — v. Cereza, Bougie — v. Cerebri, Pineal gland.

Virgil'ia, (after the poet Virgil,) Cladrastis tinctoria.

Vir'gin, Vir'go, gen. Vir'ginis, Par'thenus, Ex'pers nuptia'rum, (F.) Vierge, Pucelle. A female who has never had sexual intercourse. Applied, also, occasionally to the male so circum-stanced.

Vir'gin Mary This'tle, Centaurea benedicta.

Vir'ginal, (from virgo.) The external genital organs, of the virgin especially. Also, relating or appertaining to a virgin, Virginal'is.

Vir'GINAL GENERA'TION, Parthenogenesis — v. Membrane, Hymen.

Virginal'le Claus'trum, 'a virginal fence,' Hymen.

Virgin'ia, Min'eral Wa'ters of. There are several celebrated mineral springs in Virginia, on the western side of the Blue Ridge. Two Thermal springs are in Bath Co. The Warm Spring, as it is called, issues with a bold stream, sufficient to turn a mill, and to keep the waters of its basin at the temperature of 91°. It is estimated that six thousand gallons flow from it a minute. The water is unctuous and sedative in rheumatism, gout, neuralgia, nephritic diseases, &c. The Hot Spring is a few miles from the warm. There are several springs at temperatures varying from 76° to 106° Fah., which are used for bathing purposes in chronic rheumatism, gout, congestion of the liver, &c. They are slightly sulphureous.

The Rock'bridge Alum Springs are situate 17 miles west of Lexington, and are in much favor. One pint contains sulphate of lime, 0.413 gr., sulphate of magnesia, 0.552, protoxide of iron, 0.587, alumina, 3.011, crenate of ammonia, 0.153, chloride of sodium, 0.055, free silicic acid, 0.213, free sulphuric acid, 0.689, free carbonic acid, 1.100 cubic in. They are used in dyspepsia, scrofula, chronic diarrhoea, and cutaneous affections. The Bath Alum Springs are about 17 miles west of the Rockbridge Springs, in Bath Co. A pint contains sulphate of potassa, 0.032 gr., sulphate of magnesia, 0.160, sulphate of lime, 0.317, protoxide of iron, 2.722, alumina, 1.536, crenate of ammonia, 0.222, silicate of soda, 0.394, free sulphuric acid, 0.985, carbonic acid gas, 1. They are more chalybeate than the last.

About 15 miles from Staunton are Strib'ling's Springs, alum and chalybeate; and near Warrenton, in Fauquier Co., there is a sulphureous water, called Lee's Springs, which is much frequented. The Alleghany Springs, in Montgomery Co., are purgative and diuretic, the chief constituents being the sulphates of lime and magnesia. Bedford Alum Springs, in Bedford Co., are chalybeate waters. Jordan's White Sulphur Springs, in Frederick Co., are mildly aperient. Palouki Alum Springs resemble the waters of the Rockbridge Alum. Rauley Springs, in Rockingham Co., are said to be the purest chalybeate waters in the State. The Red Sweet Springs, now called the Sweet Chalybeate Springs, are at the eastern foot of the Alleghany, in Alleghany Co. They are also slightly purgative; containing the sulphates of magnesia and soda, chloride of magnesium, &c., with sesquioxide of iron. The Yellow Sulphur Springs, of Montgomery Co., contain, also, preparations of lime, &c., and several purging sulphates. The Healing Springs, of Bath Co., are thermal waters, which are said to be efficacious in various ulcerated conditions, in secondary and tertiary syphilis, &c. The Variety Springs, in Augusta Co., are so named because they include sulphur, chalybeate, and other waters. See, also, West Virginia.

Vir'ginis Vitia'tio, 'violation of a virgin,' Defloration.

Virgin'ity, Virgin'itas, Parthene'ia, Integ'ritas, Maid'enhoo, Maid'enhead, (F.) Virginité, Pucelage, (from virgo.) The state of one who has never had carnal commerce.

Vir'gin's Bow'er, Com'mon, Clematis vitalba, Clematis virginica — v. Bower, upright, Clematis recta — v. Sweet-scented, Clematis flammula.

Vir'GIN'S MILK, Lac Vir'ginis seu Virginal'le seu Virgineum, (F.) Lait virginal. A tincture of benjamin or of any other balsam, precipitated by the addition of water, which gives it a milky appearance. Also, subacetate of lead precipitated by water. It has been used as a cosmetic, to remove freckles, &c.

Virgin'itas, Virginité — v. Deflorata, Defloration.

Vir'go, gen. Vir'ginis, Virgin — v. Aurea, Solidago virgaurea.

Vir'gula, (dim. of virga, 'a rod,') Penis.

Vir'ide Æ'ris, 'green of brass,' Cupri subacetat — v. Montanum, Cuprum.

Virid'ia, see Veratrum viride.

Vir'ile, (from vir, 'a man,') Penis.

Vir'ile, Vir'il'is, (from vir, 'a man,') Relating or appertaining to the adult age.

Vir'ILE AGE, see Age.

Viriles'cence, (from virilis, — vir, 'a man,' — 'manly,') The state of the aged female in which she assumes some of the characteristics of the male.

Viril'ia, (from vir, 'a man,') Pudibilia.

Viril'itas, gen. Virilita'tis, Adult age, see Age.

Virilita'tis Ino'pia, see Impotence.

Virilité, see Age.

Viril'ity, Adult age, see Age.

Vi'rose, Virous.

Vi'rous, Vi'rose, Viro'sus, (F.) Vireux, (from virus.) Possessed of noxious properties. Also, substances having a peculiar nauseous taste and odor.

Viro'sus, Virous.

Vir'tue, Faculty.

Vir'tus, gen. Virtu'tis, 'power,' (allied to vir, 'a man,') Faculty, Property — v. Formatrix, Plastic force — v. Plastica, Plastic force.

Vir'ulent, Virulen'tus, (from virus.) That which is of the nature of a virus or which is caused by a virus. Highly noxious.

Vi'rus. A Latin word, which signifies poison, but which, in medicine, has a somewhat different acceptation. By it is understood a principle, unknown in its nature and inappreciable by the senses, which is the agent for the transmission of infectious diseases. Thus we speak of the variolic, the vaccine, and the syphilitic viruses. Virus differs from venom in the latter being a secretion natural to certain animals, while the former is always the result of a morbid process. — a morbid poison.

Vi'rus, Ichor, Poison, Sanies — v. Vaccine, see Vaccina — v. Vitale, Sperm.

Vis, gen. Vi'ris, (allied to vir, 'a man,') Force — v. Adhæsionis, Cohesion (force of) — v. Attractionis, Cohesion (force of) — v. Aucta, Sthenia — v. Cohæsionis, Cohesion (force of) — v. Conservatrix, V. medicatrix naturæ—v. Elastica, Elasticity—v. Essentialis, Plastic force.

VIS EXPULTRIX. The organic force by which, it was supposed, useless and effete materials were removed from the body.

VIS FORMATIVA, Plastic force.

VIS A FRONTE, 'force from the front.' An action which is exerted from before; as that of the capillaries in the circulation of the blood.

VIS GENERATRIX, Potentia generandi—v. Imminuta, Asthenia—v. Insita, Irritability—v. Irritabilitatis, Irritability.

VIS MEDICATRIX NATURÆ, V. conserva'trix, Autocrati'a, Autonom'ia, Autocrato'ria, Authy-gian'sis, Autotherape'i'a, Physiat'rice, Physioauto-crati'a, Physiocrati'a, Physiocrati'a, Physiocrati'a, (F.) Force médicatrice. A term, employed by some, to express that instinctive healing power, in an animal or vegetable, by virtue of which it can repair injuries inflicted upon it, or remove disease.

VIS METABOLICA, Metabolic force.

VIS MOR'TUA. Under this name Haller included the mechanical properties of membrane, —flexibility, extensibility, elasticity, &c.—which are totally independent of the vital properties. They remain some time after the complete extinction of life in all its functions; seem to be connected with the mechanical arrangement of particles and the chemical composition of the substance in which they reside, and not to be affected until the progress of decomposition has become sensible.

VIS MUSCULARIS, Myodynamia—v. Nervorum, Nervous power—v. Nervosa, Nervous power—v. Plastica, Plastic force—v. Reproductiva, Plastic force.

VIS A TERGO, 'force from behind.' An action of impulsion or propulsion, as that of the heart in the circulation of the blood.

VIS VITÆ, Irritability, Vis vitalis.

VIS VITALIS, Vis Vitæ, Vis seu Fac'ultas Zo'tica, (F.) Force vitale. The vital force—Bi'od of Von Reichenbach—which distinguishes living matter from the dead. Also, Irritability.

VIS ZO'TICA, Vis vitalis.

Visage, (from [L.] videre, visum, 'to see,') Countenance.

Visca'go (gen. Viscag'inis) Beh'en, (viscum, 'birdlime,') Cucubalus behen.

Vis'cera, (pl. of viscus,) Entrails, Uterus, see Viscus.

Vis'ceral, Splanchnic.

VIS'ERAL CAV'ITY. One of the two great cavities which may be said to be inclosed in the arrangement of the segments of the skeleton. See Neural cavity.

VIS'ERAL PLATES. The lateral parts of the middle layer of the embryo lying beyond the chorda dorsalis, which afterwards unite to form the mesial plate.

Viscera'lis, Splanchnic, Stomachal.

Viscera'tion, Exenterismus.

Viscères, ([L.] viscera,) Entrails.

Visco'nia, Physconia.

VIS'cum AL'bum, Is'us, Is'ia, Da'bach, Mis'tletoe, (F.) Gui, Gui de Chêne, Gillon. A parasitic plant, which grows on a number of trees. Order, Lorantheæ. Sex. Syst. Diœcia Tetrandria. That of the oak—Vis'cum querc'i-num—has been most celebrated, but it does not differ from the others. It was, at one time, much used in epilepsy and other neuroses; the wood or leaves being given in powder, in the dose of ʒss. or ʒj. The berries, also called Pommes hémorrhoidales, from their supposed virtues, are drastic; and, when applied externally, are maturative.

VIS'cum CAPEN'SE. A South African parasitic shrub, which grows on the stems of several species of Rhus and Euclea.

VIS'cum FLAVES'CENS, V. verticilla'tum, Yel'low or Yel'lowish Mistletoe, indigenous, has been given in the same cases as the Viscum album.

VIS'cum VERTICILLA'TUM, V. flavescens.

Vis'cus, gen. Vis'ceris. Any internal organ of the body.

Vis'io, Pupil, Vision.

Vis'ion, Sight, Vis'io, Vi'sus, (from videre, visum, 'to see,') Op'sis, Om'ma, (F.) Vue. The action of seeing. The sight is one of the five senses, and the eye is its organ. By it we distinguish colors, and appreciate most of the physical qualities of external objects. The eye is composed of different transparent media, whose curvatures and refractive powers are so combined as to render insensible the aberrations of sphericity and refrangibility, and to concentrate the numerous rays proceeding from more or less distant objects. These rays traverse, successively, the transparent cornea, the aqueous humor, the crystalline, the vitreous humor, and strike upon the retina, on which they impress the figure of the object whence they have proceeded; and, in order that no obscurity may arise from the reflections, which might otherwise occur, the anterior of the eye is lined by a membrane—the choroid—which is itself covered internally by a dark pigment. This absorbs the light, like the dark pigment in the interior of telescopes, and thus obviates confusion. As the rays proceeding from an object must cross each other in their course to the retina, it follows that those proceeding from the upper part of an object must fall upon the lower part of the retina, and conversely, so that the object must be impressed upon the retina in an inverted position; yet experience teaches us to appreciate the position accurately.

Vis'ion, BINOCULAR, see Binocular—v. Colored, Chromopsia—v. Dichromic, Dichromism and Achromatopsia—v. Double, Diplopia—v. Iridescent, Chromopsia—v. Manifold, Polyopsia—v. Multiple, Polyopsia—v. Phantasmatum, Metamorphopsia—v. Single, see Binocular.

Vism'ia Guianen'sis, (after Visme, a merchant and botanist of Lisbon,) Hypericum Guianense.

Vis'nomy, Physiognomy.

Vis'rium Or'ganum, (from videre, visum, 'to see,') Eye.

Viso'rius, Visual.

Vis'ual, Visua'lis, Viso'rius, (F.) Visuel. That which concerns the sight or belongs to vision.

VIS'UAL AN'GLE is the angle formed by the crossing of two rays, proceeding from opposite points of any body, in their passage through the pupil. It is by the size of this angle that we judge, to a certain extent, of the dimensions of objects.

Visuel, Visual.

Vi'sus, gen. Vi'sus, (from videre, visum, 'to see,') Vision—v. Acrior, Nyctalopia—v. Aeris, Oxydercia—v. Brevior, Myopia—v. Coloratus, Chromopsia—v. Debilitas, Asthenopia—v. Decolor, Achromatopsia—v. Defiguratus, Metamorphopsia—v. Dimidiatus, Hemiopia—v. Diurnus, Hemeralopia—v. Duplicatus, Diplopia—v. Hebetudo, Amblyopia—v. Juvenum, Myopia—v. Longior, Presbytia—v. Lucidus, Photopsia—v. Muscarum, see Metamorphopsia—v. Nebulosus, Nebula—v. Nocturnus, Nyctalopia—v. Senilis, Presbytia.

Vi'ta, Life—v. Propria, Irritability.

Vi'tal, Vita'lis, Biol'ic, Biol'icus, (F.) Vital, (from vita,) Relating or appertaining to life.

VIT'AL CAPAC'ITY, Pulmon'ic or Lung or Breath'ing capac'ity. A term employed by Dr. Hutchinson to designate the number of cubic inches of air which a person can forcibly expire after a full inspiration. He found that for every inch of height—from five feet to six—eight additional cubic inches of air can be given out by a forced expiration. The quantity, however, is influenced, also, by weight and age. See Respiration.

VITAL CEN'TRE, Centrum vitale—v. Dynamics, see Dynamic—v. Force, Vis vitalis—v. Point, see Centrum vitale.

VITAL PRIN'CIPLE, Flam'mula seu Au'ra vitalis, Microcosme'tor, Vital Flame, (F.) Flamme vitale. The principle which, in association with matter, as in organized bodies, controls its manifestations and properties, and distinguishes organized matter from the inorganic. We know nothing of this principle, except as a force in connection with organization.

VITAL PROP'ERTIES, see Properties, vital—v. Statistics, medical—v. Vortex, Life.

Vital'ba, (vitis, 'vine,' and albus, 'white,') Clematis vitalba.

Vitalism, Vitalis'mus, (from vita.) The doctrine of the vitalist—vitalis'ta—who ascribes every function of the organism to the direct agency of a vital principle or force.

Vitalist, see Vitalism.

Vitality, Vital'itas, (F.) Vitalité. The vital principle or force; also, used in the sense of vital action or movement. Vitality is said to be dormant, when the actions or movements of an organized body are so obscure as not to be perceptible unless it be placed under circumstances favorable for their manifestation.

Vitalize. To endow with life.

Vitals, Vita'lia. Parts that are necessary for life—the heart, lungs, and nervous centres more especially.

Vitarob'orant, Palm'er's, (vita, and roborare, 'to strengthen,') A farinaceous preparation, which appears to consist of a mixture of the red or Arabian lentil and wheat flour, the latter in considerable amount, sweetened with sugar. It bears some resemblance to Revalenta.

Vitellary, Vitelline—v. Membrane, Zona pellucida.

Vitelline, Zona pellucida.

Vitelline, Vitel'linus, Vitellary, Lecitho'des, (from vitellus, 'the yolk of an egg,') Appertaining to or resembling the vitellus or yolk. Also, the yolk membrane. A modification of albumen found in the yolk of egg. See Vesicula umbilicalis.

VITELLINE CAV'ITY, Latebra—v. Disk, Pro-ligerous disk—v. Duct, see Vesicula umbilicalis—v. Fluid, see Vesicula umbilicalis.

VITELLINE PED'ICLE or APOPH'YSIS is the pedicle which attaches the umbilical vesicle to the embryo. See Vesicula umbilicalis.

VITELLINE POUCH, Vesicula umbilicalis—v. Vessels, Omphalomesenteric.

Vitellomesenteric, Omphalomesenteric.

Vitel'lum O'vi, 'the yolk of an egg,' see Ovum.

Vitel'lus Ovi, see Ovum.

Vit'ext, gen. Vit'icis, (from vico, 'I bind' [?]) V. Ag'nus cas'tus seu verticilla'tus, (F.) Gattilier, Petit Poivre, Poivre de moine ou sauvage. Ord. Verbenaceæ. Sex. Syst. Didynamia Angiosperma. The Chaste Tree. The seeds, when fresh, have a fragrant smell, and an acrid, aromatic taste. Formerly, they were celebrated as antaphrodisiacs.

Vit'i Sal'tus, 'Vitus's dance,' Chorea.

Vit'ia (pl. of vitium) Pri'mæ Conformatio'nis, see Monster.

Vitia'tio, (vitare, vitiatum, 'to violate,') Stuprum.

Vitilig'ines, (pl. of vitiligo,) Ephelides, Lineæ albicantes.

Vitili'go, gen. Vitilig'inis, (from vitulus, 'a calf,' hence 'calfskin,') Achroma, Herpes exedens, Lepa, Porrigo decalvans—v. Alphus, Lepa alphoides—v. Melas, Lepa nigricans—v. Nigra, Lepa nigricans.

Vitiligo'f'idea, (vitiligo, and eidōs, 'resemblance,') A disease of the skin, so called from its resembling the vitiligo of Willan. It appears under two forms: either as tubercles—V. tuberosa—varying from the size of a pin's head to that of a large pea, isolated or confluent; or as yellow patches of irregular outline, slightly elevated, and with but little hardness—V. pla'na, Xanthelas'ma pla'nium, Xantho'ma.

Vit'is Al'ba Sylves'tris, Bryonia alba—v. Apyrena, see V. Corinthiaca.

VIT'IS CORINTH'ACA. Ord. Vitaceæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. This plant affords the U'væ Corinthi'acæ pas'sæ mino'res, Pas'sæ Corinthi'acæ, Pas'sulæ mino'res, Corinthi'acæ, Currants, (Prov.) Curr'berries, (F.) Raisins de Corinthe; which are the dried fruit of the Vitis Corinthi'aca or Vitis apyre'na; and are similar, in their properties, to the raisin.

VIT'IS IDÆ'A MYRTIL'LUS, Vaccinium myrtillus—v. Idæa palustris, Vaccinium oxycoccos—v. Idæa punctata, Vaccinium vitis idæa—v. Sativa, V. vinifera.

VIT'IS VINIF'ERA, V. sat'iva, Am'pelos, A. Oinoph'orus, Grapevine, Vine, (F.) Vigne. Vine leaves and the tendrils have an astringent taste, and were formerly used in diarrhœa, hemorrhage, &c. The juice or sap, called Lac'ryma, has been recommended in calculous disorders and in cases of chronic ophthalmia. The juice of the unripe fruit is called Ver'juice. The Grape, U'va, Bo'trys, Staph'ylê, Rhaz, (F.) Raisin, when ripe, is a wholesome, delicious fruit; and, when dried, forms the U'væ pas'sæ majo'res, Pas'sulæ majo'res, U'væ pas'sæ so'le sicca'tæ, U'væ pas'sa, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Uvæ, (Ph. B., 1867,) Zibebæ, Raisins. These are inodorous; and to the taste, subacidulous, sweet, and mucilaginous. They are demulcent and nutritive.

Vit'ium, Disease—v. Caducum, Epilepsy.

VIT'IIUM CONFORMATIO'NIS. A disease or fault of conformation.

VIT'IIUM DIVI'NUM, Epilepsy—v. Herculeum, Epilepsy—v. Scrophulosum, Scrofula.

Vitra'ria, Parietaria.

Vitré, (from vitrum,) Hyaline.

Vitreocapsuli'tis, (vitreo, 'appertaining to the vitreous humor,' and capsulitis, 'inflammation of a capsule,') Hyalitis.

Vitreous, (from vitrum,) Hyaline—v. Body, Corpus vitreum—v. Humor, Corpus vitreum—v. Humor of the ear, Vitrine auditive—v. Table of the skull, see Table.

Vitreus, Hyaline.

Vitreux, Hyaline.

Vitri'na Audito'ria, Vitrine auditive—v. Ocularis, Corpus vitreum.

Vitrine Auditive (F.), Humeur vitrée, (from vitrum,) Aqu'ula vit'rea auditi'ca, Vitri'na audito'ria, A'qua labyrin'thi membrana'cei, Endo-lymph'a, End'olymph, Liq'vor Scar'pæ, Liq'vor or Flu'id of Scar'pa, Vitreous Hu'mor of the Ear. The fluid contained in the membranous labyrinth of the ear, so called from its resemblance to the vitreous humor of the eye.

Vit'riol, (from vitrum, 'glass,') Ferri sulphas—v. Blanc, Zinci sulphas—v. Blue, Cupri sulphas—v. Green, Ferri sulphas—v. Roman, Cupri sulphas—v. Vert, Ferri sulphas—v. White, Zinci sulphas.

Vitri'olum Al'bum, Zinci sulphas—v. Ammoniacale, Ammonie sulphas—v. Ceruleum, Cupri sulphas—v. Cupri, Cupri sulphas—v. Cyprium, Cupri sulphas—v. Ferri, Ferri sulphas—v. Goslariense, Zinci sulphas—v. Martis, Ferri sulphas—v. Romanum, Cupri sulphas—v. Veneris, Cupri sulphas—v. Viride, Ferri sulphas—v. Zinci, Zinci sulphas.

Vitroden'tine, (vitrum, and dens, gen. dentis, 'a tooth,') The superficial layer of the true dentine in fishes, taking the place of the enamel.

Vi'trum, Hy'alos, Glass, Bran'cia, (F.) Verre. Glass, coarsely powdered, has been sometimes used to remove specks of the cornea.

Powdered glass has been regarded, but erroneously, as a poison. It acts only mechanically.

The saline scum which swims on glass when first made has been used in toothpowders. It is called San'diver, Sel de verre, Glass gall, Fel vi'tri, &c.

Vi'trum ANTI'MO'NI, see Antimonii vitrum—v. Hypoclepticum, Separatorium—v. Oculare, see Spectacles—v. Sublimatorium, Aludel.

Vit'ta, Bandelette, Caul.

Vitta'ria Cet'erach, (vitta, 'a band, a fillet,') Asplenium ceterach.

Vit'tie Vayr, Andropogon muricatus.

Vit'ulary Fe'ver, Partu'rient A'poplexy, Partu'rient fever, (F.) Fièvre vitulaire. A fatal disease occurring in connection with parturition in cows, characterized by tendency to congestion of the brain, apoplexy, &c.

Vivace, (from vivax, gen. vivacis,—from vivere, 'to live,'—'living long, tenacious of life,') An epithet given by Levret to uterine polypi, which he considers to be, commonly, vegetations of some ulcer in the interior of the uterus, and incurable.

Viver'ra Civet'ta, see Civetta.

Vivipare, Viviparous.

Viviparité, see Viviparous.

Vivip'arous, (F.) Vivipare, (vivus, 'alive,' and pario, 'I bring forth,') An epithet applied to animals whose young are brought forth detached, without requiring to be hatched, as in the Oviparous. The condition may be termed Vivip'arousness, (F.) Viviparité. See Generation.

Vivip'arousness, see Viviparous.

Vivisec'tio, (vivus, 'alive,' and secare, sectum, 'to cut,') Vivisection.

Vivisection, Vivisec'tio, Vivasec'tio, Biotom'ia, (vivus, 'alive,' and secare, sectum, 'to cut,') The act of opening or dissecting living animals. One who performs vivisections is a Vivisector.

Vleminckx, Solu'tion of, see Calcis sulphuretum.

Vo'cal, (from vox,) Oral—v. Cords, see Cords, vocal—v. Ligaments, see Cords, vocal—v. Tube, see Tube, vocal.

Voca'lis, Vowel.

Voce di Petto, 'chest voice,' see Voice—v. di Testa, 'head voice,' see Voice.

Vocifera'tio, Anaphonesis.

Voice, Vox, Au'dē, Pho'nē, (F.) Voix, (from vocare, 'to name, to call,') An appreciable sound produced by the air, when driven from the lungs, throwing the inferior ligaments of the glottis into vibration. The function by which this is effected has been called Phona'tion. It is a function of animal life; and, in animals, is limited to the production of the simple or instinctive voice, as well as in the idiot; but, in intellectual man, becomes much more complicated and articulated,—an evidence of his intellectual superiority.

VOICE, ARTIC'ULATED, Speech, Loque'la, Glos'sa, Glot'ta, La'lia, Phra'sis, (F.) Parole, Voix articulée, is the voice as produced by the glottis, modified by the motions of the tongue, lips, and other parts of the vocal tube. Most physiologists agree in regarding the glottis, or the space between the thyroarytenoid ligaments plus the ligaments themselves, as the part where vocal sounds are formed; but the mechanism of this formation is a matter of dispute. The greater part of individuals regard the glottis and its ligaments, with the vocal tube, or the space which the sound has to traverse after it is produced in the glottis, as a reed instrument, like the clarinet, the inferior ligaments of the glottis constituting the reed. In speech, as ordinarily effected, the tongue, lips, teeth, &c., are concerned, but there are some authentic cases on record, where it has been accomplished after the tongue has been removed. In such cases, the articulated voice must have been produced in the glottis alone, or in it aided by an obscure action of the parts above it.

The singing voice is not limited to the larynx; the pharynx would seem to be concerned also. The notes that are produced in the latter have been termed supralarynge'al, or notes of the second register. They constitute the pharynge'al voice, falet'to or faucette voice or voce di testa (I.), Voix de tête, Voix de fausset (F.). The larynge'al voice or voice of the first register, Chest voice, is the Voce di Petto (I.), Voix de Poitrine (F.). The laryngeal voice, which is always more elevated, by an octave, in the female than in the male, furnishes the types called Sopra'no, Al'to or Contra'tto, Tenore, and Basso. The first two belong to the female voice; the last two to the male. The Bar'itone is between the bass and tenor.

VOICE, BLEAT'ING, Egophony—v. Cavernous, Pectoriloquy—v. Chest, see Voice, articulated.

VOICE, CHOL'ERIC, Vox choleric'a, Choleropho'nē, Cholerapho'nia. The peculiar husky voice of those affected with cholera.

VOICE, CONVUL'SIVE, Vox convulsi'va, (F.) Voix convulsive. A neurosis of the voice, consisting in the production of discordant sounds—acute and grave—which cannot be brought to the natural tones by any effort of volition. It seems to be caused by disordered contraction of the muscles of the larynx.

VOICE, FALSET'TO, see Voice—v. Goat's, Egophony—v. Laryngeal, Laryngophony, see Voice—v. Pharyngeal, see Voice—v. Tracheal, Laryngophony.

Voie, ([L.] via,) Way.

Volat'ica, (volare, 'to fly,') Lichen.

Volatiliza'tion, Volatilisa'tio, Volatisa'tio, (from volare, 'to fly,') The operation of reducing volatilizable substances into gas or vapor.

Volatisa'tio, (volare, 'to fly,') Volatilization.

Volcanisation, see Vulcanite.

Volit'ion, Volit'io, (from volo, 'I will,') The act of willing. Hence:

Volit'ional. Relating to volition. Thus the muscles may be moved by a volitional or by an emotional impulse.

Vol'nus, gen. Vol'neris, Wound.

Volontaire, Voluntary.

Volonté, Voluntas.

Volsel'la, (vellere, 'to pluck,') Acanthabolus, Forceps, Madisterium—v. Patini, Valet à Patin.

Vol'taism, (after Volta,) Galvanism.

Vol'tus, Countenance, Face.

Volumet'ric, Volumet'ricus, (F.) Volumétrique, (from volume, and meter,) Relating to the measurement of volumes; as the volumet'ric method of analysis for the urine, the principle of which consists in adding to a known quantity of urine the exact amount of a test liquid required to precipitate the whole of any one ingredient contained in it. It is frequently employed for the determination of the chlorine, urea, phosphoric and sulphuric acids, and sugar, of the urine.

The British Pharmacopœia (1867) contains numerous test solutions for volumetric estimations of various substances, with full directions as to apparatus, &c.

Vol'untary, Hecus'ius, Volunta'rius, (F.) Volontaire, (from voluntas, 'will.') Relating to the will; as 'voluntary muscles,' muscles which act in obedience to the will, and produce voluntary movements, (F.) Mouvements conscients ou volontaires.

Volun'tas, gen. Volunta'tis, Volent'ia, Arbit'rium, Cupid'itas, Boule'sis, Bule'sis, Thele'ma, (F.) Volonté, (from volo, 'I will.') Will or desire.

VOLUN'TAS seu CUPID'ITAS DESEDEN'DI, Lubi'do intesti'ni. Desire to go to stool.

Vol'va, Vulva.

Vol'vulus, (from volvere, 'to roll,') Ilcus — v. Intestinorum, Intussusceptio.

Vomen'di Cona'men Ina'nē, 'vain effort at vomiting,' Vomiturition.

Vo'mer, gen. Vo'meris, 'a ploughshare,' Os vo'meris, Os maxillæ superio'ris undec'imum, Ara'trum, Plough'share bone. One of the bones of the face, so called from its resemblance. It is an azygous bone, forming the posterior part of the septum narium. It is thin, flat, and quadrilateral; and is articulated, below, to the superior maxillary and palatine bones; and above, to the sphenoid, ethmoid, and cornets of Bertin. It is developed by a single point of ossification. Also, the penis.

Vom'ica, gen. Vom'icæ, Pyocys'tis, (from vomere, 'to vomit,' 'to cast up,') (F.) Vomique, Crachement de pus. A term used by some authors for any encysted collection of purulent matter in the interior of a viscus. It is commonly, however, restricted to a purulent collection in the lungs, encysted or not, which may be discharged by the mouth, by breaking into the bronchial tubes. Two kinds of vomica are distinguished: the one caused by the softening or breaking down of pulmonary tubercles; the other, of much more rare occurrence, formed by a circumscribed abscess of the lungs. Instead of opening into the bronchia, the abscess is sometimes discharged into the cavity of the pleura, causing empyema.

Vom'icine, Brucine.

Vomique, Vomica.

Vomiquier, Strychnos nux vomica.

Vomissement, (from vomir, [L.] vomere, 'to vomit,') Vomiting — v. de Sang, Hæmatemesis.

Vom'it, (vomere, vomitum, 'to vomit,') Emetic — v. Black, Fever, yellow, Melæna.

Vom'it, DRY, OF MAR'RIOTT. A once celebrated emetic, called 'dry,' from its having been given without solution. It consisted of equal portions of tartrate of antimony and potassa, and sulphate of copper.

Vomitif, Emetic.

Vom'itine, Emetine.

Vom'iting, Vom'itus, Vomit'io, Vomit'ium, Vom'itum, Evomit'io, Ana'tropē, Em'esis, Em'etus, Pal'mus vom'itus, Ægritu'do ventric'uli, Spew'ing, Pu'king, Sick'ness of the Stom'ach, (old Eng.) Par'breaking, (Sc.) Bok'king, Bock'ing, Bra'king, Brocht, (Prov.) Hull'uping, (vulg.) Casca'ding, Cast'ing, (F.) Vomissement. The act by which solids and liquids, contained in the stomach, are ejected by the mouth. Vomiting is the effect of some special irritation of the nerves of the stomach, calling, by reflex action, on the appropriate muscles to expel the contents of the viscus. It is not accomplished solely by the contraction of the stomach, as was for a long time believed. That organ, indeed, assists in the process; but the main cause is the compression exerted upon the parietes of the viscus by the diaphragm and abdominal muscles. Vomiting is a symptom common to numerous diseases. At times, it is sympathetic, as in affections of the kidney, uterus, brain, &c.; at others, it is symptomatic, as in gastritis, peritonitis, &c. When very troublesome, it may often be palliated by effervescent draughts, aromatics, sinapisms, or blisters to the epigastric region, &c.

VOM'ITING AT PLEAS'URE, Regurgitation — v. of Blood, Hæmatemesis — v. Stercoraceous, Copremesis.

Vomit'io, gen. Vomitio'nis, Vomiting — v. Sanguinis, Hæmatemesis.

Vomit'ium, Vomiting.

Vomito Negro, 'black vomit,' Fever, yellow — v. Prieto, Fever, yellow.

Vomitoire, Émétique.

Vomito'rium, Emetic.

Vom'itory, Emetic.

Vom'itum, Vomiting.

Vomiturit'ion, Vomiturit'io, Emes'ia, Dysmes'ia, Subver'sio stom'achi; ineffectual efforts to vomit; Vomen'di cona'men ina'nē, Retch'ing, Reach'ing, Heav'ing, (old Eng.) Bolke, (Sc.) Bok, Bock, Braking. Some authors mean, by this term, a vomiting of but little matter, or that which is effected almost without effort. The first acceptance is the most general.

Vom'itus, gen. Vomit'us, (from vomere, vomitum, 'to vomit,') Vomiting — v. Cruentus, Hæmatemesis — v. Fæculentus, Copremesis — v. Marinus, Nausea marina — v. Navigantium, Nausea marina — v. Niger, Fever, yellow — v. Pituitosus, Blenne'mesis — v. Profusus, Hyperemesis — v. Purulentus, Pyemesis — v. Sanguinis, Hæmatemesis — v. Stercoris, Copremesis.

Voor'a'ra, Curare.

Vor'tex of the Heart. A peculiar arrangement of the superficial muscular fibres of the ventricle, consisting of a coiling inwards at the apex of the heart, around which they are arranged in a whorl-like form or vortex.

VOR'TEX, Vi'tal, 'vital whirlpool,' (from vertere, vertere, 'to turn,') Life.

Vor'tices Len'tis. A penniform or whorled appearance presented by the peculiar arrangement of the radiated fibres of the crystalline lens.

Vo'tive Tab'let, (from votum, 'a vow,') Tabula votiva.

Vouacapoua America'na, Geoffræa inermis.

Voussure Précordiale, Præcor'dial vault'ing, Vault'ing of the chest, (vouter, 'to arch,' from [L.] volvere, volutum, 'to curve,') 'præcordial arching, vaulting, or prominence.' The elevation or arching of the parietes of the thorax, as witnessed in the newborn child, when air has been received into the lungs, and in certain thoracic affections, as in hypertrophy of the heart.

Voûte, (from [L.] volvere, volutum, 'to curve,') Vault — v. Médullaire, Corpus callosum — v. à Trois Piliers, Fornix.

Vow'el, Voca'lis, (from vox, gen. vo'cis, 'the voice,') (F.) Voyelle. Physiologically, a continuous breath or sound, produced in the glottis; but more or less modified by the form of the vocal tube, through which it has to pass. In the English language, a, e, i, o, u, æ, and y are vowels.

Vox, gen. Vo'cis, Voice — v. Choleric, Voice, choleric — v. Clandestina, Whispering — v. Clangosa, Oxyphonia — v. Convulsiva, Voix convulsive — v. Nasalis, Rhinophonia — v. Rauca, Raucedo, Raucous voice — v. Raucisona, Raucous voice.

Vulcanite, Den'tal, (from Vulcanus, Vulcan, 'the god of fire.') A compound of caoutchouc and sulphur or sulphur compounds, used in the formation of plates for artificial teeth, &c. The formation of vulcanite is termed Vulcanization, (F.) Volcanisation, Sulfuration.

Vul'ga, Vulva.

Vul'nera Sclopeta'ria, pl. of vulnus, and sclopetum, 'a gun,' see Sclopetarius and Wound—v. Sclopetica, see Sclopetarius and Wound—v. à Sclopetis, see Sclopetarius and Wound.

Vulnéraire, Vulnerary—v. Suisse, see Fall-tranck.

Vulnerarius, Traumatic.

Vul'nerary, Vulnerarius, Traumaticus, Traumatic, (from vulnus, gen. vulneris, 'a wound.') (F.) Vulnéraire. A name applied by the ancients to medicines, which they considered capable of favoring the consolidation of wounds. The property has been ascribed to various plants. The French Codex (1866) has an Eau Vulnéraire Rouge, composed of 19 different articles, most of which are the fresh leaves of plants.

Vulnera'tio Ner'vi, (vulnerare, vulneratum, 'to wound,') Neurotrosis.

Vul'nerum Vinc'tu'ra, 'binding of wounds,' Deligation.

Vul'nus, gen. Vul'neris, (from vellere, 'to pluck or tear,') Wound—v. Laceratum, see Laceration—v. Sclopetarium, Wound, gunshot—v. Sclopeticum, Wound, gunshot—v. Simplex, Cut.

Vul'pis Mor'bus, 'disease of the fox,' Alopecia.

Vulsel'lum For'ceps, (from vellere, vulsum, 'to pluck,') see Forceps (vulsellum).

Vultu'osus (F.), Vultuosus, 'full of expression,' (from vultus,) Corvisart has used the expression, Face vultuose, Facies vultuosa, for the face when it is more florid and swollen than in the natural state. This appearance, which is observed in active aneurism of the heart, according to Corvisart, is owing to the afflux of blood into the arterial capillaries, and hence differs from the livid and swollen appearance caused by the accumulation of blood in the venous capillaries, constituting Face injectée.

Vul'tus, gen. Vultūs, Countenance, Face—v. Tetricus et Mœstus, Seythropasmus.

Vul'va, (from volve're, 'to enfold,' or from valve, 'folding doors' [?],) Uterus, especially of animals; see Vulva.

VUL'VA, Volvea, Hor'tus, Cun'nus, Puden'dum muli'ebrè, Pudenda mulieb'ria, Sin'us pud'o'ris, Le'tar, Chærus, Ar'vum, Buc'ca, Bul'ga, Cadur'eus, Cus'tos, Fe'men, An'nulus, Fe'mur sum'mum, Follic'ulus, Fun'dus, Gre'minum, Hia'tus, Lanu'vium, Navis, Oppid'ulum, Spe'cus, Vulga, Cym'ba, Cys'tus, Sal'tus, Clitor'ium, Os'tium, Sul'cus, Con'cha, Por'tus, Por'ta, Fores (of virgins), Interfemin'eum, Mulieb'ria, Fos'sa magna muli'ebris, Epi'seion, Es'chara, Tre'ma, Hor'tulus cupid'inis, Byssos, Ca'va, Caver'na, Del'phys, Del'ta, Fo'vea, Gynæce'um, Secess'us, Vallis fem'orum, Eugi'um, Eugi'on, Lo'ci muli'ebrès, Fe'male puden'dum, Fe'male or'gans of genera'tion, Fe'male parts, Shape, (F.) Vulvee. A longitudinal opening between the projecting parts of the external organs of generation in the female, extending from the mons veneris to the perineum, and which is called, also, Fossa magna. Some anatomists mean, by this term, the whole of the external genital organs of the female:—mons veneris; labia majora, and the cleft or vestibule separating them; the clitoris; nymphæ; meatus urinarius; entrance of the vagina; with the hymen or the caruncula myrtiformes, fossa navicularis, and fourchette.

VUL'VA, Fora'men commu'nè ante'rius, I'ter seu Ad'itus ad infundib'ulum, I'ter seu Ad'itus ad ter'tium ventric'ulum, Ri'ma ad infundib'ulum, Aper'tu'ra ante'rior ventric'uli ter'tii cer'ebr'i. An opening situate at the junction of the optic thalami, in the third ventricle of the brain, and immediately beneath the anterior crus of the fornix.

Vulvaire, Chenopodium vulvaria, Vulvar.

Vul'var, Vulva'ris, (F.) Vulvaire, (from vulva.) That which relates to the vulva. Chaussier gives this name to the external pudic arteries, because they are distributed to the vulva.

VUL'VAR HER'NIA, Pudendal hernia.

Vulva'ria, (from its use in diseases of the vulva [?],) Chenopodium vulvaria.

Vulvee, Vulva.

Vulvi'tis, gen. Vulvi'tidis, (vulva, and itis.) Inflammation of the vulva.

Vulvoû'terine, Vulvoûteri'nus, (F.) Vulvoû'térin. Relating or appertaining to the vulva and uterus.

VULVOÛ'TERINE CANAL', Vagina.

Vulvovag'inal, Vulvovagina'tis. Relating or appertaining to the vulva and vagina.

VULVOVAG'INAL GLANDS, Cowper's glands in the female.

Waist'coat, Strait, Indu'cula, (F.) Camisole, Gilet de force. A dress, used for restraining maniacs, or those laboring under violent delirium. It has long sleeves, which are tied behind the body, so that the arms cannot be extricated from them. It ought, of course, to be made of very resisting materials.

Wake'robin, Arum maculatum, Trillium latifolium.

Wal'cheren Fe'ver. A form of remittent fever which at one time prevailed in Walcheren, the most western of the islands of the Netherlands.

Wale, ([Sax.] palan, 'marks of stripes,') Wheal.

Walk'ing, Gres'sus, Inces'sus, Deambula'tio, Ambula'tio, Bad'isis, (F.) La Marche, Progres'sion, ([Sax.] pealcan, 'to walk,') The action by which we change place, by means of a succession of steps in the same direction. In walking forwards, the centre of gravity is constantly altered; and a series of small, parabolic curves is described on the heads of the thighbones, the extent of which is regulated by volition, under the guidance of vision.

Walla'chia, Min'eral Wa'ters of. There are many excellent sulphureous springs in this country, especially those at Bobotsch, Fineschti, Sibitschiudi Suz, Bräsa, Otschin, Serboneschte, Kimpalungi, Kosia, and Oloneschti. Chalybeate and saline springs have, also, been found at Sibitschiudi Suz.

Wall'eyed, (of uncertain etymology.) Applied to a horse, not perfectly white or cream-colored, which has a white iris. (Prov.) Having eyes with too much white. In the north of England, persons having the white of the eye very large and to one side, are so called. Applied also to an eye with little or no sight, "all white like a plastered wall."

Wall'flower, (probably Gaulflower.) Cheiranthus cheiri.

Walthe'ria Douradin'ha, (after A. F. Walther, medical professor at Leipsic.) A plant of Brazil, Order Sterculiaceae, which is used there in diseases of the chest, and in venereal affections. It is a demulcent.

Wal'ton, Min'eral Waters of. A mineral spring near Tewkesbury, in Gloucestershire, England. It is an acidulous chalybeate.

Wame, (womb,) Belly, Uterus.

Wampee, Peltandra Virginica.

Wan'dering Cells, see Amœboid.

Wang, ([Sax.] pang, peng, 'the cheek,') Genæ.

WANG TEETH, Molar teeth.

Want, (from past participle of Sax. panian, 'to wane,' 'to fall away,') 'need of that which is necessary,' (F.) Besoin. This word is sometimes used to express the imperious necessity which impels us to take food, drink, &c. (See Hunger and Thirst.) In a more general sense, it means the impressions transmitted by the organs to the brain, when it is necessary that they should act. These wants are called instinctive desires and internal sensations or stimuli. Such are the desires or wants to eat, drink, void the urine, breathe, (besoin de respirer), &c.

WANT, in the sense of indigence, (L.) Egestas, Indigentia, is the cause of a number of diseases.

Wa'ter, ([Sax.] pætep, [G.] Wasser, A'qua, Hy'dor, Protoxide of Hydrogen, (F.) Eau. Water was at one time regarded as a simple element. It is now known to consist of eight parts by weight of oxygen and one of hydrogen. It freezes at 32°, and boils at 212° of Fahrenheit, and is taken as the unit in all tables of specific gravity of solid and liquid substances. Water, as we meet with it, is very different in its state of purity; generally, it contains small quantities of saline matter; at other times, as in sea-water and mineral waters, it is largely impregnated. The characters of water, as met with under ordinary circumstances, are well compared by Celsus, "Aqua levissima pluvialis est; deinde fontana; tum ex flumine; tum ex puteo; post hæc ex nive, aut glacie; gravior his ex lacu; gravissima ex palude." Pure water — A'qua pu'ra — is one of the best diluents that can be used. When cold, and especially when iced, it is one of the most useful refrigerants, and, in the form of the cold, tepid, and warm bath, it is serviceable in numerous diseases. WA'TER, DISTILLED, A'qua destilla'ta, Ho'lly Water, (F.) Eau distillée, Hydrolat, is generally ordered in extemporaneous prescriptions, but is rarely used. In some cases, however, it is absolutely necessary; the water, containing any saline impregnation—hard water, for example—decomposing certain substances. Distilled water has been recommended as a diet drink in cancerous affections; and it is used in the religious ceremonies of the Catholic Church. In the Pharmacopœia of the United States, it is directed to be made as follows: Take of water, ten gallons. First distil two pints, and throw them away; then distil eight gallons. Keep the distilled water in glass bottles.

The mineral springs of the several States of the Union are referred to under each State; as New York, Vermont, &c. A table of the fixed constituents which enter into the composition of some of the more celebrated springs abroad is given by Dr. Pereira, in his "Elements of Materia Medica and Therapeutics." There is, also, a "Table of some of the principal Mineral Waters," at home and abroad, in the Author's "General Therapeutics and Materia Medica," vol. ii. p. 460, 6th edit., Philadelphia, 1857. One or two useful works have been recently published on this subject.

Mineral waters may be divided into four classes: 1. Gaseous or Acidulous. 2. Chalybeate or Ferruginous. 3. Saline. 4. Sulphureous. These may be thermal or cold, natural or artificial. Many of these divisions, however, run into each other; some of the substances, which they hold dissolved, belonging to one class as well as to others. Other classifications of a more minute character have been suggested by writers on the subject of mineral waters.

1. Gaseous, Acidulous or Carbonated Mineral Waters, So'da or Beer Springs, A'que minera'les acidulæ, (F.) Eaux minérales gazeuses ou acidules. The waters referred to this class are those that contain carbonic acid gas in such quantity as to communicate to them certain sensible qualities. Waters impregnated with free carbonic acid sparkle when drawn from the spring, or when poured into a glass. They have a sharp, acidulous taste; but become rapid from exposure to the air. Along with the carbonic acid there are generally present portions of saline, earthy or metallic matter, chiefly carbonates of lime, magnesia, and iron. Waters highly impregnated with carbonic acid gas are grateful to the stomach, increase the appetite, and are diuretic; hence their utility in dyspepsia, hypochondriasis, and gout. Their properties are, of course, modified by the saline matter that may be also contained in them. The most celebrated among the acidulous waters are those of Bar, Chateldon, St. Myon, Mont d'Or, Langeac, Seltzer, Schlangenbad, Sultzmatt, Pyrmont, Spa, Carlsbad, Cheltenham, Scarborough, Saratoga, Ballston, and the Sweet Springs of Virginia.

2. Chalybeate or Ferruginous Mineral Waters, A'que minera'les ferrugineæ seu chalybeatæ seu martia'les seu ferro'sæ, Chalybeatæ, Chalybocatæ, Sideropneumæ, Siderokrenæ, (F.) Eaux minérales ferrugineuses, contain iron—sulphate, chloride or carbonate, generally the latter—held in solution by an excess of acid. Chalybeate waters have a peculiar styptic taste. They are transparent when taken from the spring; but, when exposed for some time to the air, a pellicle forms on the surface, and a deposit of the iron takes place. Chalybeate waters are used as tonics in debility of all kinds; in all cases, in fact, where iron is considered to be indicated. They are the most numerous of all the classes of mineral waters. In this dictionary those only are specified which have some celebrity; yet there are about one hundred, more than sixty of these being saline, and forty sulphureous. The most celebrated chalybeates are those of Tunbridge, Scarborough, Spa, Bussang, Forges, Vichy, Pyrmont, Passy, Provins, and Vals.

3. Saline Mineral Waters, A'que minera'les salinæ, Am'na alcaliza'ta (Paracelsus), Hydral'mæ, (F.) Eaux minérales salines. Waters holding in solution different saline substances in greater quantity than the acidulous waters. They differ in properties, according to the salts contained in them. The salts usually present are sulphates, chlorides, and carbonates; and the bases, with which the acids forming these are combined, are soda, magnesia, and lime. Saline mineral waters are usually aperient; and the most noted are those of Seltzer, Sedlitz, Balaruc, Bourbonne-les-Bains, Baden, Epsom, Cheltenham, &c.

To this class may also be added Sea Water.

4. Sulphureous Mineral Waters, A'que minera'les sulphuræ; when warm, termed Thiothermæ, Thiope'gæ, Thiothermæ, Fon'tes sulphu' rei cal'idi, (F.) Eaux minérales sulfureuses ou sulfurées ou sulfureuses ou hépatiques, &c. These waters owe their distinguishing character to an impregnation of sulphuretted hydrogen, and are at once recognized by their peculiar fetid smell, resembling that of rotten eggs. They usually contain saline substances, which modify their powers. From the action of the sulphuretted hydrogen, they are useful in cutaneous affections; and, from the combined action of this and the saline matter, they are valuable agents in diseases of the digestive organs. They are also employed in cutaneous eruptions; and the warm sulphur baths have been especially celebrated in such cases, as well as in rheumatic affections. The most renowned sulphureous waters are those of Baréges, Bagnères-de-Luchon, Cauterets, Bonnes, Aix in Savoy, Aix-la-Chapelle, Enghien, Harrowgate, Moffat, Virginia Springs, &c.

Some springs, as those of Bath, Buxton, Dax, Matlock, Warm and Hot Springs of Virginia, &c., are almost pure Thermal Mineral Waters. They are valuable agents in rheumatic affections, the warmth being equable during the whole period the individual is immersed in them; which cannot be the case in the artificial thermal bath.

Artificial Mineral Waters, (F.) Eaux minérales artificielles ou factices, are imitations of the natural; and some of them—as the factitious Cheltenham water, and Sedlitz water—answer the purpose of the natural water tolerably well. The acidulous and chalybeate waters are, however, most easily imitated.

WA'TER, MIN'ERAL, Acidulous water, simple—w. Nutmeg, Spiritus myristicæ—w. Orange flower, see Citrus aurantium—w. Oxygenated, Hydrogen, peroxide of—w. Pennyroyal, Spirituous, Spiritus pulegii—w. Peppermint, Aqua menthæ piperitæ—w. Pimento, see Myrtus pimenta—w. Potash, Liquor potassæ effervescens—w. Protoxide of Nitrogen, Aqua nitrogenii protoxydi.

WA'TER, RAIN, Aqua pluvialis seu plu'via seu im'brium, (F.) Eau de pluie, when collected at a distance from houses or other elevated objects, is the purest natural water, and has the least specific gravity. The only bodies which it usually holds in solution are carbonic acid, and minute traces of carbonate of lime and chloride of calcium.

WA'TER, RICE, see Oryza.

WA'TER, RIV'ER, Aqua fluvialis, is derived from the conflux of numerous springs and rain water. It is, generally, pretty pure.

WA'TER, ROSE, Aqua rosæ.

WA'TER, SEA, Aqua Mari'na, Alma, Hu'mor Do'ridis, (F.) Eau de Mer, Eau salée. This contains chlorides of sodium, magnesium, and potassium, bromide of magnesium, sulphate of lime, carbonate of lime, and sulphate of magnesia. It is cathartic, and forms the usual glyster at sea. It makes an excellent tonic bath; superior in most cases—especially in scrofula—to the fresh-water bath.

WA'TER, SEARLE'S PAT'ENT OXYG'ENOUS AËRATED, Aqua nitrogenii protoxydi—w. Seydshütz, Sedlitz water.

WA'TER, SNOW, Aqua niva'ta, (F.) Eau de neige, has usually been deemed unwholesome. It exactly resembles rain water in composition, and is equally salubrious.

WA'TER, SO'DA, Acidulous water, simple—w. Soft, see Water, hard—w. Spearmint, Aqua menthæ viridis.

WA'TER, SPRING, Aqua fonta'na, Hydrop'gê, (F.) Eau de fontaine, contains, in addition to the substances detected in rain water, more or less sulphate of lime. When this is to such an extent as to curdle soap, the water is said to be hard; if not, soft. Hard water is, of course, inferior to soft, for domestic and medicinal purposes.

WA'TER, STYPTIC, Syd'ENHAM'S, Solutio sulphatis cupri composita—w. Tar, see Pinus sylvestris—w. Toast, see Toast water.

WA'TER, WELL, Aqua putea'lis seu putea'na seu ex pu'teo, (F.) Eau de puit ou de source, is the same as spring water, but liable to impregnation, owing to the land springs filtering into the wells, and conveying impurities into them.

Wa'ter Bed, Hydrostatic Bed. A bed contrived by Dr. Arnott, which, in consequence of its being placed on water, is well adapted for the bedridden.

Wa'ter Blebs, Pemphigus.

Wa'ter Brash, Pyrosis.

Wa'ter on the Brain, Hydrocephalus—w. Brain fever, Hydrocephalus internus.

Wa'ter Brax'y. A blood-disorder of some animals, as the sheep, characterized by tendency to coagulation in the circulatory apparatus.

Wa'ter Can'cer, Cancer aquaticus.

Wa'ter Can'ker, Cancer aquaticus.

Wa'ter-cas'ter, see Uromantia.

Wa'tercress, Sisymbrium nasturtium.

Wa'tercure, Hydrosudotherapeia.

Wa'ter-doo'tor, see Uromantia.

Wa'ter-dress'ing. The treatment of wounds and ulcers by the application of water. It generally consists in dipping folds of lint in water, and placing them on the part:—the whole being covered with oiled silk, elastic gum, or spongopiline. Wa'ter strap'ping or wet strap'ping means the treatment of ulcers, and certain cutaneous affections of the extremities, &c., with strips of linen or cotton saturated with water.

Wa'ter-flag, Yellow, Iris pseudacorus.

Wa'terfright, Hydrophobia.

Wa'ter-gru'el, see Avena and Grits.

Wa'ter Hem'lock, Cicuta aquatica.

Wa'ter of the Head, Hydrocephalus.

Water-jags, see Varicella.

Wa'ter Lil'y, Nymphaea odorata.

Wa'ter-pang, Pyrosis.

Wa'ter-pars nep, Creep'ing, Sium.

Wa'ter-pep'per, Polygonum hydropiper.

Wa'ter-pox, see Varicella.

Wa'ter-pur'pie, Veronica beccabunga.

Wa'ter-qualm, Pyrosis.

Wa'ter-rad'ish, Sisymbrium nasturtium.

Wa'ter-shield, Brasenia hydropeltis.

Wa'ter Strap'ping, see Water-dressing.

Wa'ter Stroke, see Hydrocephalus internus.

Wa'ter-tar'get, Brasenia hydropeltis.

Waters, The, Liquor amnii—w. Bag of, see Liquor amnii—w. Discharged or broken, Profusio aquæ—w. Distilled, Aquæ destillatæ—w. First, Primitivæ—w. Green, see Lochia.

Wa'tery Eye, Epiphora.

Wattweil'er, Min'eral Waters of. Wattweiler is a small town in the department of Haut-Rhin, at the foot of the Vosges. The waters are acidulous chalybeates, and contain carbonates of iron, lime, and soda, chloride of sodium, and free carbonic acid.

Wax, ([Sax.] pxxe), Cera—w. Ear, Cerumen.

WAX, JAPAN'. Obtained from Rhus succeda'nea of Japan. It is of a medium quality between beeswax and the ordinary vegetable tallow.

WAX, MYR'TLE, Bayberry tallow. A wax obtained from the fruit of Myrica cerifera, Wax myrtle, Candleberry myrtle; an indigenous plant, which yields the bayberry bark, possessing tonic, stimulant, and astringent properties. It has been prescribed in dysentery.

WAX, VEG'ETABLE, see Cera flava—w. Yellow and White, Cera flava et alba.

Wax'ing Ker'nels, Wax'enkernels, Crescen'

tiæ, (F.) Croissances, Croissants, Glandes de croissance. A popular term for small tumors, formed by an enlargement of the lymphatic glands—in the groins of children particularly. They have been looked upon as connected with the growth of the body,—hence their name.

Wax'y Degeneration, see Lardaceous—w. Liver, see Lardaceous—w. Spleen, see Lardaceous.

Way, ([Sax.] wæg,) O'dos, V'i'a, Passage, (F.) Voie. A name given to different canals.

Way'bread, ([Sax.] wæg bræde,) Plantago major.

Wayme, Womb, Belly, Uterus.

Ways, Diges'tive, Diges'tive Pas'sages, Pri'mæ Vi'æ, (F.) Voies digestives, Premières voies, are the series of hollow organs of digestion, composed of mouth, œsophagus, stomach, and small and large intestines. The term is often restricted to the first three of these.

WAYS, SEC'OND, Second Pas'sages, Secundæ vi'æ, (F.) Secondes voies, comprise the chyloferous vessels, the lymphatics, and the bloodvessels.

Weak, (from [Sax.] wican, 'to yield, to totter,') Infirm.

Weak'ness, Debility—w. Spinal, see Spinal.

Weaksight'edness, Asthenopia.

Weal, ([Sax.] welan, 'marks of stripes,') Wheal.

Weam, (Womb,) Belly, Uterus.

Weam Ill, Colic.

Wean'ing, (from [Saxon] penan, 'to wean,') Ablacta'tio, Apogalactis'mus, (Prov.) Spa'ning, (F.) Sévrage. The act of depriving the infant, permanently, of the breast, in order to feed it on other and more solid nourishment.

WEAN'ING BRASH, see Brash, weaning.

Wearing, (from [Sax.] wepan, 'to wear,') Consumption.

Weas'and, ([Sax.] wæpanð,) Trachea.

Weath'ercocks, Impatiens.

Weavers' Bot'tom. Chronic inflammation of a bursa over the tuberosity of the ischium, occasionally observed in weavers, and due to pressure of the part.

Web, ([Sax.] wep,) Caligo, Pterygium—w. Muscular, Panniculus carnosus.

Web'eye, Caligo, Pterygium.

Webbed Fin'gers, Dactylion.

Webe'rian Cor'puscles, (after Weber, a German anatomist,) see Ejaculatory ducts—w. Organ, see Ejaculatory ducts.

Wedged, ([Sax.] wæcg, 'a wedge,') Inclu'sus, Inhæ'rens, (F.) Enclavé. The head of the fœtus is said to be wedged, locked or impacted in the pelvis, when it remains fixed, notwithstanding the uterine efforts.

The condition is called Inclu'ed'tio seu Incla-va'tio fœ'tûs, Spheno'sis, (F.) Enclavement. See Paragomphosis.

Weebo, Senecio Jacobææ.

Weed, (from [Sax.] wēdan, 'to rage,') see Mastitis and Ephemera, puerperal.

WEED, AR'ROW, ([Sax.] wēod,) Sagittaria variabilis—w. Beetle, Galax aphylla—w. Breast, Saururus cernuus—w. in the Breast, see Mastitis—w. Butter, Erigeron Canadense—w. Wind, Asclepias tuberosa.

Weep'ing, (from [Sax.] wēopan, 'to weep,') Fletus—w. Tear, Tear.

Wee'sel, Trachea.

Weid, (Weed,) see Mastitis.

Weight, (from [Sax.] wægan, 'to weigh,') (F.) Pesanteur, see Stature. A sensation of heaviness or pressure over the whole body, or over a part—the stomach or head, for example.

WEIGHT OF OR'GANS. The average weight of each organ in the adult is, according to Quain, as follows:

Heart, male.....	11	Ounces.
" female.....	9	"
Brain, male.....	49½	"
" female.....	44	"
Spinal cord.....	1 to 1¾	"
Liver.....	50 to 60	"
Pancreas.....	2¼ to 3½	"
Spleen.....	5 to 7	"
Lungs, male.....	45	"
" female.....	32	"
Thyroid cartilage.....	1 to 2	"
Thymus (at birth).....	1½	"
Kidney.....	4½	"
Suprarenal capsules....	2	drachms.
Prostate.....	6	"
Testes.....	¾ to 1	ounce.
Unimpregnated uterus.....	7	to 12 drachms.

Weights and Meas'ures, Pon'dera et Mensu'ræ, (F.) Poids et Mesures. The importance of possessing a uniform system of weights and measures has impressed the scientific of all countries, and numerous endeavors have been made to accomplish the object. It is, however, a matter of considerable difficulty, and one not likely to be attained. The more modern French measures are upon decidedly the best footing, but they are not yet generally adopted. The greatest diversity, indeed, prevails in the measures, both of weight and capacity. Some of the following tables will show that every subdivision of the pound, as well as the pound itself, differs in England and in France.

WEIGHTS. (Ph. U. S., 1873.)

Troy Weight,—Pondus pharmaceuticum seu medicinale.

The weights employed by physicians and apothecaries in the United States in prescribing and dispensing medicines are those derived from the Troy pound. The scale is as follows:

One Pound,	℔	=	12 Ounces	=	5760 Grains.
One Ounce,	℥	=	8 Drachms	=	480 Grains.
One Drachm,	ʒ	=	3 Scruples	=	60 Grains.
One Scruple,	ʒ	=		=	20 Grains.
One Grain,	gr.	=		=	1 Grain.

This table may be differently stated as follows:

lb.	oz.	Drachms.	Scrups.	Grs.
1	12	96	288	5760
	1	8	24	480
		1	3	60
			1	20

These, and the signs by which they are denoted, were the same in all the British Pharmacopœias until 1864, as well as in the American.

MEASURES OF CAPACITY. (Ph. U. S., 1873.)

One Gallon (Congius),	C.	=	8 Pints	=	61,440 M.
One Pint (Octarius),	O.	=	16 Fluidounces	=	7,680 M.
One Fluidounce,	℥	=	8 Fluidrachms	=	480 M.
One Fluidrachm,	ʒ	=		=	60 M.
One Minim,	℥	=		=	1 M.

To avoid the danger of mistakes by confounding the Troy and the avoirdupois pounds, the term pound has been discontinued in the formulæ of the United States Pharmacopœia—the desired weight being expressed in ounces, each containing 480 grains. The ounce is always written Troyounce; and the drachm and scruple are disused, their equivalents being expressed in grains. On the other hand, the General Medical Council of Great Britain resolved (1863) that "the weights used in the British Pharmacopœia shall be the Imperial or avoirdupois pound, ounce, and grain; and that the terms drachm and scruple, as designating specific weights, shall be discontinued; and the same system is adopted in the edition of 1867. The following are the weights and measures of that Pharmacopœia, with their symbols:

WEIGHTS. (Ph. B., 1867.)

Avoirdupois Weight.

Pound.	Ounces.	Drachms.	Troy grains.
1	= 16	= 256	= 7000
	1	= 16	= 437.5
		1	= 27.34375

The drachm is sometimes divided into three scruples, and the scruples into ten grains. The pound of 7680 grains avoirdupois = 7000 grains Troy, and hence 1 grain Troy = .97 grains avoirdupois.

The Avoirdupois Weight was used by the Dublin College.

MEASURES OF CAPACITY. (Ph. B., 1867.)

1 Gallon, C.	=	8 Pints.
1 Pint, O.	=	20 Fluidounces.
1 Fluidounce, fl. oz.	=	8 Fluidrachms.
1 Fluidrachm, fl. dr.	=	60 Minims.
1 Minim, ℥.

The gallon holds 10 lbs. avoirdupois of distilled water, at a temperature of 60° Fahrenheit.

MEASURES OF LENGTH. (Ph. B., 1867.)

1 Line	=	$\frac{1}{2}$ inch.
1 Inch	=	$\frac{39.1393}{39.1393}$ seconds pendulum.
12 Inches	=	1 foot.
36 "	=	3 feet = 1 yard.
Length of pendulum vibrating seconds of mean time in the latitude of London, in a vacuum at the level of the sea	=	39.1393 inches.

RELATION OF MEASURES TO WEIGHTS. (Ph. B., 1867.)

	Grs. of water.
1 Minim is the measure of	0.91 "
1 Fluidrachm is the measure of	54.68 "
1 Fluidounce " " " " " "	1 oz. or 437.5 "
1 Pint " " " " " "	1.25 lbs. or 8750. "
1 Gallon " " " " " "	10 lbs. or 70,000. "

The measures in the Ph. U. S. (1873) have the same names as in the British, but their value is different; the pint weighing 16 oz. 291.2 grs. avoirdupois, and the fluidounce 455.7 grs. In the formulæ, the Acids and the Oils are ordered by weight; other liquids by measure. The gallon is not used, that measure being always expressed in pints. In Continental Europe, all medicines are weighed, and the gramme is becoming universally used.

POIDS DE MARC.

The Poids de Marc is that employed by the French Pharmaciens, when the new weights are not;

One Pound	} contains {	16 Ounces.
One Ounce		8 Drachms.
One Drachm		3 Scruples.
One Scruple		24 Grains.
One Grain

(For the relative values of the old French and English weights, see p. 1118.)

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES OF THE METRICAL SYSTEM.

The French Metrical or Metric System of Weights and measures is decimal and founded on the Metre, which is the unit of length, based on the measurement of the quadrant of a meridian of the earth. The unit of surface is the Are, which is the square of 10 metres. The unit of capacity is the Litre, the cube of $\frac{1}{10}$ of a metre. The unit of weight is the Gramme, the weight of distilled water, of maximum density, which fills a cube of $\frac{1}{1000}$ of a metre. Multiples of each of these are expressed by Deka or Deca, ten, as Decagramme; Hecto, a hundred, as Hectolitre; Kilo, a thousand, as Kilometre, &c. Fractional quantities are denoted by Deci, one-tenth, as Decigramme; Centi, one-hundredth, as Centimetre; Milli, one-thousandth, as Millilitre, &c.

MEASURES OF LENGTH. (Metrical System.)

One Myriametre	=	10,000 Metres.
One Kilometre	=	1,000 Metres.
One Hectometre	=	100 Metres.
One Decametre	=	10 Metres.
One Metre	=	The ten millionth part of a quarter of the meridian of the earth.
One Decimetre	=	The tenth part of one Metre, or 0.1 Metre.
One Centimetre	=	The hundredth part of one Metre, or 0.01 Metre.
One Millimetre	=	The thousandth part of one Metre, or 0.001 Metre.

The value of these measures may be expressed in the ordinary scale of measures in use in the United States and England as follows:

	English inches.	yd.	ft.	inch.
Myriametre	393710	=	10936	1' 2"
Kilometre	39371	=	1093	1' 10"
Hectometre	3937.1	=	109	1' 1"
Decametre	393.71	=	10	2' 9.7"
Metre	39.371	=	1	0' 3.37"
Decimetre	3.937
Centimetre	0.393
Millimetre	0.039

WEIGHTS. (Metrical System.)

One Myriagramme	=	10,000 Grammes.
One Kilogramme	=	1,000 Grammes.
One Hectogramme	=	100 Grammes.
One Decagramme	=	10 Grammes.
One Gramme	=	The weight of a cubic Centimetre of Water at 4° C.
One Decigramme	=	The tenth part of one Gramme, or 0.1 Gramme.
One Centigramme	=	The hundredth part of one Gramme, or 0.01 Gramme.
One Milligramme	=	The thousandth part of one Gramme, or 0.001 Gramme.

The value of these weights may be expressed in the Troy scale as follows:

	Troy grains.	lb.	oz.	dr.	gr.
Myriagramme	=	154340	2344	=	26 9 6 0
Kilogramme	=	15434	0234	=	2 8 1 24
Hectogramme	=	1543	4023	=	0 3 1 444
Decagramme	=	154	3402	=	0 0 2 344
Gramme	=	15	4340
Decigramme	=	1	5434
Centigramme	=		543
Milligramme	=		0154

MEASURES OF CAPACITY. (Metrical System.)

One Myrialitre	=	10 cubic Metres, or the measure of 10 Milliers of Water.
One Kilolitre	=	1 cubic Metre, or the measure of 1 Millier of water.
One Hectolitre	=	100 cubic Decimetres, or the measure of 1 Quintal of Water.
One Decalitre	=	10 cubic Decimetres, or the measure of 1 Myriagramme of Water.
One Litre	=	1 cubic Decimetre, or the measure of 1 Kilogramme of Water.
One Decilitre	=	100 cubic Centimetres, or the measure of 1 Hectogramme of Water.
One Centilitre	=	10 cubic Centimetres, or the measure of 1 Decagramme of Water.
One Millilitre	=	1 cubic Centimetre, or the measure of 1 Gramme of Water.

The following tables, from the U. S. Phar., 1873, and British Phar., 1867, give an accurate view of the relations between the weights and measures adopted by them and those of the metrical system, with many items of statistical interest in connection with this subject, not previously published:

The French medicinal pound (Livre médicinale) of the same scale has a value of three-fourths of the poids de marc, or 6612 French grains, equivalent to 5670.5 Troy grains. The poids de marc was in use prior to the revolution of 1789, and was succeeded by the decimal system. In 1812, the old pound was made equal to half a kilogramme—500 grains; and this was taken as the unit. The French grain then became equivalent to .8365 Troy grain, or .0542 gramme. This modification was not made absolute until 1827, but so much confusion resulted that the decimal system was in 1857 made obligatory.

MEASURES OF CAPACITY.

The measures of capacity adopted by the United States and British Pharmacopœias have been already given. The following tables give the relative values of the measures of capacity employed in different countries, and also of different measures of capacity in the same country—the wine and imperial gallons, for example.

He gives also the following 'Carmen Mnemonicum,' which exhibits the analogies of the Roman and British Imperial weights.

To the congus and gallon, each, ten pounds allow,
On the bushel and amphora eighty bestow;
Rome's pound, as in Troy weight, twelve ounces obtains,
But her ounce is Boirdupois, strictly, in grains:
Denarii drams, scruples scrupli define,
Sextarius answers to our bottle of wine,
And the mna's a short pint — fourteen ounces in fine.

A good section on weights and measures is contained in the edition of "The Seven Books of Paulus Aegineta," by Mr. Francis Adams, published by the Sydenham Society of London, vol. iii. p. 609, London, 1847.

APPROXIMATIVE WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Besides the weights and measures above mentioned, employed by the moderns, there are modes of estimating the quantities of substances by approximation. For example:

A glassful or cupful, ([F.] Verre,) is reckoned to contain 4 or 5 fluidounces.
A wineglassful, $1\frac{1}{2}$ ounce or 2 fluidounces.
A tablespoonful, ([F.] Cuiller à bouche,) about half a fluidounce.
A coffee or dessertspoonful, about 2 fluidrachms.
A teaspoonful, a fluidrachm.
A handful, manipulus, ([F.] Poignée,) as much as can be held in the hand.
The Pugillus, ([F.] Pincée,) as much as can be held by the three fingers.

These last quantities are occasionally prescribed by the French practitioners. Their weights must, of course, vary, according to the article. The authors of the Parisian Codex have valued them, as regards certain substances:

A Pugillus of chamomile flowers weighs.....	dr.	gr.
“ arnica.....	1	48
“ marshmallow.....	1	24
“ mallow.....		60
“ fennel seeds.....	1	60
“ aniseed.....	1	12

A hen's egg, newly laid, weighs about 2 ounces and 2 drachms; when deprived of its shell, 2 ounces. The white weighs 1 ounce 2 drachms and 57 grains; the yolk, 5 drachms and 15 grains.

Weilbach, Min'eral Wa'ters of. The village of Weilbach is in the plain between the Maine and the southern extremity of the Tannus hills. It has in its neighborhood a cold, sulphurous, alkaline spring, the water of which is bottled and exported, although not of great efficacy. Its use is at times combined with that of the saline springs of Nassau and of Baden-Baden in various chronic abdominal and thoracic affections.

Weintraubenkur, Grape cure.

Weitbrecht, Lig'ament of, Ligament of Weitbrecht.

Welcome to Our House, Euphorbia cyparissias.

Weld, Reseda luteola.

Welk, Whelk, (like Wheal.) An inequality; a protuberance; a cutaneous eruption of this character. Acne.

Welter's Bit'ter, Acid, carbazotic.

Wemb, (Womb,) Belly, Uterus.

Wemding, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These waters are situate about four leagues from Donauwörth, in Bavaria. They contain sulphuretted hydrogen, carbonates of lime, magnesia, and soda, sulphates of lime and magnesia, a little chloride of calcium, and oxide of iron, and are much used in asthenic diseases.

Wen, ([Sax.] pen,) Lu'pia, (F.) Loup. A name given to circumscribed, indolent tumors, without inflammation or change of color of the skin. They may be met with in almost every part of the body. Their magnitude, as well as nature, is very variable. The term is sometimes given to an encysted tumor, and to bronchocele.

West'ern Islands, see Azores.

West In'dies, Cli'mate of. The climate of the West Indies has long been regarded as favorable to the consumptive. In confirmed consumption, it appears, however, to be positively injurious. As a prophylactic for those predisposed to consumption, it is generally favorable. The nature of the patient's constitution, in regard to the effects of elevated temperature, has always to be taken into account. In diseases that are benefited by warm climates, the West Indies afford an appropriate residence. The islands in which the invalid can best obtain all the advantages of the climate are Jamaica, Barbadoes, St. Vincent, Antigua, St. Kitts, and Santa Cruz.

West's Spring, see South Carolina, mineral waters of.

West Virgin'ia, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Several popular places of resort and celebrated springs are situate in this State. Berkeley Springs, in Morgan Co., are thermal calcic waters, chiefly employed for bathing purposes. Capon Springs, in Hampshire Co., contain carbonates of soda and magnesia, iodine, bromine, silicic acid, &c., but no definite analysis has been made. The White Sulphur Springs, in Greenbrier Co., are widely known and much frequented. They have a reputation for their aperient and alterative qualities, and contain the unusual combination of purgative sulphates, sulphuretted hydrogen, and salts of lime. An analysis by Prof. W. B. Rogers gives, in a pint of the water, the following ingredients: Carbonate of magnesia, 0.146 gr.; carbonate of lime, 0.441; chloride of sodium, 0.065; chloride of magnesium, 0.020; chloride of calcium, 0.003; sulphate of soda, 1.169; sulphate of magnesia, 2.379; sulphate of lime, 9.148; sulphate of alumina, 0.003; protosulphate of iron, 0.019; earthy phosphates, a trace; organic matter, 0.001; carbonic acid, 1.06 cubic in.; sulphuretted hydrogen, 0.37; oxygen, 0.05; nitrogen, 0.54.

The Sweet Springs, in Monroe Co., are thermal calcic waters, diaphoretic and diuretic, and said to be efficacious in gravel, atonic dyspepsia, &c. The Red Sulphur Springs, in Monroe Co., are affirmed to exert a sedative influence on the pulse, diminishing the number of its beats; and also to allay irritation of the pulmonary mucous membrane. The water is cathartic in small quantities, diuretic in large. It possesses only a small proportion of saline ingredients. It contains chiefly an organic matter, or sulphur-compound, as it has been called, which is separated in the form of a jelly by air, acids, &c. The Salt Sulphur Springs, in the same county, are alkaline sulphurous waters; and there is also an iodine spring, containing bromine. The former is employed in hepatic engorgements, herpetic diseases, &c., the latter in scrofula and syphilis.

Wet Brain. Excessive serosity of the brain or its membranes, as observed in delirium tremens.

Wet Strap'ing, see Water-dressing.

Whahoo, see Euonymus.

Wheal, ([Sax.] palan, 'marks of stripes,') Weal, Wale, Pom'phus. A ridge, or elevation of the skin, produced by a rod or whip, or as if produced in that manner. Such elevations are seen in urticaria.

Wheal'worm. The Acorus autumnalis, or Harvest-bug.

Wheat, ([Sax.] hpeate,) Triticum—w. Indian, Zea mays—w. Turkey, Zea mays.

WHEAT PHOS'PHATES. The organized phosphates of the bran—usually discarded—are said to assist assimilation. A decoction of bran should be evaporated, mixed with sugar, and reduced to powder.

Wheeze, ([Sax.] hpeoan,) (Prov.) Re'z'le, (formed probably, like whiz and whisper, from the sound it expresses.) To breathe with difficulty and noise, as in asthma.

Whelk, (like wheal.) Acne, Welk—w. Chin, Sycosis—w. Rosy, Gutta rosea.

Whet'tlebones, Vertebrae.

Whey, ([Sax.] hpaeg,) Serum lactis.

WHEY CURE, (G.) Molkenkur, (F.) Cure de petit lait. In the Kursaal of many of the German watering places, a space is set apart for whey drinkers. The whey is a pleasant diluent, and the saccharine matter it contains may act as a eutrophic; but the main effect on the valetudinarian is probably produced by the new impressions made upon him by his visit to the watering place.

Wiesba'den, Min'eral Wa'ters of, see Wisbaden.

Wies'sau, Min'eral Wa'ters of. These waters are situate about four leagues from the convent of Waldsassen, in Bavaria. They contain carbonic acid, carbonates of lime and magnesia, chlorides of calcium, magnesium, and aluminium, carbonate of soda, and much oxide of iron. The Bavarians consider them to resemble the waters of Pyrmont.

Wild, ([Sax.] plð.) An epithet given to the countenance, when not in harmony with the condition of the individual, and indicating strong mental emotion;—a wild look, (F.) Physiognomie égarée.

Wild'bad, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Wildbad is a small town of Wurtemberg, not far from Baden-Baden. The water is thermal, from 95° to 100° of Fah., and is chiefly employed externally in cases in which thermal waters are indicated, as chronic paralysis, rheumatism, &c. It is seldom used internally, a pint containing only about three grains of solid ingredients, which consist of salts of soda, potash, magnesia, and lime. The proportion of carbonic acid gas is very small.

Wildeg, Wa'ters of. This iodated and bromated spa near Schinznach, in Switzerland, has some celebrity in strumous diseases and chronic glandular swellings. It contains chloride of sodium, chloride of magnesium, sulphate of lime, iodide of sodium, bromide of sodium, &c.

Wild'fire, Erysipelas.

WILD'FIRE RASH, Ignis sylvaticus.

Wildungen, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Wildungen is situate a few miles from Cassel, in Germany. In its neighborhood are several mineral springs, which have been found to be efficacious in gravel, lithic acid diathesis, vesical catarrh, &c.

Wil'kinson's Salve or Ointment. An ointment for scabies, composed of the following ingredients: Flor. sulphur., Ol. fagi, āā ʒvj., Cretæ alb., ʒiv., Saponis virid., Azumg. porci, āā ʒij. M. Hebra.

Wind, ([Sax.] pinð,) (an example of onomatopœia—coind.) Ventus, An'emos, (F.) Vent. Winds exert considerable influence on the animal economy; acting by their temperature, which necessarily modifies that of the circumambient air, as well as by their moisture or dryness, and by the emanations of different kinds which they transport to greater or less distances. The winds which blow over a considerable extent of country are dry and serene: those which come from the ocean are moist and chilly.

WIND, Breath, see Flatulence.

WIND OF A BALL OR SHOT; sometimes, improperly termed Wind'age. A term applied to the compression of air, supposed to be produced by the passage of a ball near a part of the body, so as to occasion what has been called a wind contusion.

WIND CONTU'SION, see Wind of a ball—w. Dropsy, Emphysema, Tympanites—w. Flower, Anemone—w. Pipe, Trachea—w. Pox, see Vari-cella—w. Root, Asclepias tuberosa—w. Weed, Asclepias tuberosa.

Wind'age, see Wind of a ball.

Wind'iness, Flatulence.

Wind'y, Flatulentus, Flat'ulent, Va'porous, (F.) Venteux, Flatueux. That which causes wind or flatulence; also, that which is caused by wind or flatulence; as windy food, windy colic, &c. Also, one affected with flatulence, or who is 'troubled with the wind.'

Wine, ([Sax.] pin, [G.] Wein, originally, perhaps, from ovos.) Œ'nos, V'i'num, Meth'u, (F.) Vin. A name given by chemists to all liquors that have become spirituous by fermentation. The term is generally, however, restricted to the fermented juice of the grape, or of fruits, the product of whose fermentation resembles, in almost all respects, that of the juice of the grape. Wine is composed of alcohol, ænanthic ether, saccharine matter, malic acid, tartaric acid, bitartrate of potassa, acetic acid, an extractive coloring matter more or less bitter and partly resinous, and an aromatic substance. The extractive coloring matter is chiefly met with in red wines. All these constituents, except the alcohol, are found ready formed in the grape. The alcohol proceeds from the decomposition of the saccharine matter. A part of the acetic acid is also formed during fermentation. In all wines, too, there is more or less of an odorous principle, partly derived directly from the grape, and partly formed during fermentation, which has the characters of an essential oil, constitutes the perfume or bouquet of the wine, and is said not to exceed the forty-thousandth part of the wine. It is regarded as a true ether—a combination of oxide of ethyl with oenanthic acid.

The following table, drawn up by Mr. Brande, exhibits the quantity of spirit in different kinds of wine and liquors. It is proper, however, to remark that many of these wines are prepared for the London market, and are more brandied or "reinforced" than the same varieties sold in the United States. This is strikingly the case with port. Dr. Henderson, too, has observed that some of the wines analyzed by Mr. Brande were mixed with a considerable quantity of adventitious alcohol. Dr. Henderson's additions and corrections have the letter H. affixed.

The only wine recommended in some pharmacopœias is Sher'ry, Vi'num, V. al'bum, V. al'bum Hispan'icum, V. Xer'icum, Leuca'nus. It is a dry wine; the least variable in its properties, and agrees best with the dyspeptic. The brown sherries differ from the pale in the addition of a coloring liquid to the former, termed Arrope, which is prepared by boiling sherry down to a syrup; but they frequently owe their hue to burnt sugar or caramel. Other wines used officinally are: Canary or Sack wine, Vi'num Canari'um; Mountain wine, Vi'num al'bum montanum; Tent wine, Vi'num tinto; Rhen'ish wine, Vi'num Rhena'num; and Port wine, Vi'num ru'brum, V. ru'brum Portugal'licum, V. Porten'se. A rich, sweet wine called Paxarete, a form of sherry, is made near Xeres, and occasionally prescribed.

The wines habitually drunk are almost innumerable. Those that are sweet, or contain a large portion of free saccharine matter, are decidedly the least wholesome to the dyspeptic.

When wine is good and of a proper age, it is tonic and nutritive; when new, flatulent and cathartic, disagreeing with the stomach and bowels. In medicine it is a valuable tonic in the last stage of typhus, when the skin is not too hot and dry. Its use, however, requires great caution; and when once commenced under proper circumstances, it cannot be suddenly dropped without mischief. It is, perhaps, the best permanent stimulus in the catalogue of the materia medica.

Mulled Wine is made as follows: Take of bruised Cinnamon, $\mathfrak{z}\frac{1}{2}$, half a Nutmeg, grated, and ten bruised Cloves. Infuse in boiling Water, Oss., for an hour; strain, and add Sugar, $\mathfrak{z}\text{ij}$. Pour the whole into a pint of hot Port or Sherry. Useful in adynamic conditions.

Wine-whey, White-wine whey, (Prov.) Sack'-whey. Take of good milk, two-thirds of a pint, and add water to make a pint. Take of sherry, or any other good white wine, two glasses, and of sugar, a dessertspoonful. Place the milk and water in a deep pan on the fire, and the moment it boils, pour into it the wine and sugar. Stir assiduously for 12 or 15 minutes, while it boils. Lastly, strain through a sieve.

It is a good mode of giving wine in adynamic states.

Wisba'den or Wies'baden, Min'eral Wa'ters of. Wisbaden is a town of Nassau, about 6 miles north of Mainz, and 22 west of Frankfort. It has been long celebrated for its hot springs, and is the most frequented of all the German watering places. There are 18 or 20 thermal springs, the principal of which contains chloride of sodium, with small quantities of salts of potash, lime, iron, magnesia, arseniate of lime, bromide of magnesium, carbonic acid, &c. These waters are valuable in chronic gout and rheumatism, hepatic congestion with hemorrhoids, and chronic skin diseases connected with abdominal plethora. The temperature of the hot spring varies from 150°–160° Fah.

Small bones, which are sometimes observable in the sutures of the bones of the cranium, of which they form a part. They are called Wormia'na, from Olaus Wormius, who is said to have first described them. They had been previously, however, mentioned by G. Andernach, a physician at Strasburg. The Ossa Wormiana exist more commonly in the sutures of the vault of the skull; especially in the lambdoidal, sagittal, and squamous. They are uncommon at the base of the skull. Their size is very variable, and shape irregular. Their structure and development are similar to those of the other bones of the cranium; and, like them, they are bounded by sutures.

Wormit, Artemisia absinthium.

Worm'root, Spigelia Marilandica.

Worms, originally from (L.) Vermes, Helminths, (F.) Vers; Entozo'a, Entozoa'ria, Enterozo'a, Endozo'a, Entelminth'a, Enthelminth'es, Tin'es, Helminth'i, Entoparasites, (F.) Entozoaires. Animals whose common character is that of existing only in other animals; (hence their name entozoa, from εντος, 'within,' and ζωον, 'animal.') They are met with, not only in the natural cavities, but even in the tissue of the organs, but chiefly in the intestines — Ver'mes intesti'ni seu intestinal'es, Helmin'thia al'vi seu pod'icia, Splanchnelminth'ia, Intes'tinal worms, (F.) Vers intestinaux, Angibromelminthie of Piorry. Cuvier, Rudolphi, Brera, Bremser, Laënnec, Küchenmeister, and others, have endeavored to classify them, — some according to their shape; others, according to their anatomical characters.

Worms form the second class of the first group of Animal Parasites according to the classification of Küchenmeister. They are subdivided by him as follows:

VER'MES, HELMIN'THA.

A. Platyel'mia, Flat worms, (πλατυς, 'flat,' and ελμινς, 'a worm.')

First Subclass. — Cestoid'en, cestode or tape worms, (κεστος, 'a band or girdle,' and ειδος, 'resemblance.')

First Order — Bothriocephali; Bothriocephalus latus.

Second Order — Tæniæ.

I. Tæniæ, which occur in the mature state. —

1. Tænia solium; 2. Tænia mediocancellata; 3. Tænia nana.

II. Immature Tæniæ. — 1. Cysticercus cellulosæ; 2. Cysticercus tenuicollis; 3. Echinococci; Appendix, — Acephalocysts; 4. Cysticercus vesicæ hominis.

Second Subclass. — Trematoda, — worms endowed with suckers for adhesion and imbibition, (τρημα, 'a hole.')

Family I. Monostoma. — 1. Monostoma lentis.

Family II. Distoma. — 1. Distoma hepaticum; 2. Distoma lanceolatum; 3. Distomum heterophyes; 4. Distomum hæmatobium; 5. Distomum ophthalmobium.

B. Nematel'mia, Round or thread worms, (νημα, 'a thread,' and ελμινς, 'a worm.')

1. Tricocephalus dispar — Trichina spiralis; 2. Oxyuris vermicularis; 3. Strongylus gigas; 4. S. longevaginatus; 5. Anchylostomum duodenale; 6. Ascaris lumbricoïdes.

(For further information as to these and other parasites and their usual habitats, see Parasites.)

The most common of these are: — the Oxyuris vermicularis, Ascaris lumbricoïdes, and Tæniæ, which are found in the intestines. The origin of these worms is extremely singular, and more favorable than any other fact to the hypothesis of spontaneous generation in the lowest tribes of animated nature. They are certainly not identical with any worms out of the body. They are most commonly met with in children improperly fed; but their presence cannot be positively detected by any symptoms, except that of the discharge of the worms themselves in the evacuations. They may, of course, give rise to every kind of irritation in the intestinal tube, and to sympathetic disturbance in most of the functions; but all these signs may be produced by intestinal irritation resulting from other causes. See Anthemintics.

Worms, see Aene — w. Erratic, see Erratic.

Worm'seed, Artemisia santonica, Chenopodium anthelminticum — w. Levant, Artemisia santonica.

Worm'seed Goose'foot, Chenopodium anthelminticum.

Worm'weed, Cors'ican, Corallina Corsicana, Polanisia graveolens — w. White, Corallina.

Worm'wood, Bien'nial, Artemisia biennis — w. Canada, Artemisia Canadensis — w. Common, Artemisia absinthium — w. Creeping, Artemisia rupestris — w. Lesser, Artemisia Pontica — w. Roman, Artemisia Pontica — w. Sea, Artemisia maritima — w. Silky, Artemisia glacialis.

Wor'sum, (from [Sax.] pýp, 'pus,') Pus.

Wort, Mus'tum, Infu'sum By'nes seu Bra'sii seu Malt'i, (F.) Mout de la Bière. An infusion of malt. This has been recommended in scurvy. One measure of ground malt is added to three equal measures of boiling water. The mixture must be well stirred, and left to stand covered three or four hours. Dose, one to four pints, daily. It has, also, been recommended in other cases, where a strong putrescent disposition appeared to prevail in the fluids, as in cancerous and phagedenic ulcers. It is not now employed.

Wort, ([Sax.] pýp), Herb.

Wort'wale, Hangnail.

Wo'sen, (Weasand), Trachea.

Wound, ([Sax.] pund), Vul'nus, (diminutive Vulnus'culum), Vol'nus, Pla'ga, Traum'a, Tro'ma, Tre'sis, Tre'sis Vul'nus, Bla'bè, Tym'ma, (F.) Plaie, Blessure. A solution of continuity in the soft parts, produced by some mechanical agent. Wounds present innumerable differences, as regards their situation; the parts interested; their direction; size; shape; the nature of the instrument or agent by which they are produced; their more or less simple or complex character, duration, &c. A wound is called incised, (F.) Coupure, Incision, when made by a cutting instrument; — punctured, Nyg'ma, (F.) Piqure, when made by a pointed instrument; — lacerated, (F.) Déchirure, Plaie par arrachement, when the parts are lacerated or torn by the wounded body; — poisoned, Celulitis venenata, Necrosis, (F.) Plaie envenimée, when some virulent or venomous substance has been introduced; — and contused, (F.) Plaie contuse, when produced by a blunt body. Gun'shot wounds, Scelopetopla'gæ, Vul'nera sclopeta'ria seu à sclope'tis seu Sclopel'ica, (F.) Plaies d'armes à feu ou d'arquebuse ou d'arqubuse, Coup de feu, belong to the last division. Lesions produced in battle are classed by Dr. Farr under Polem'ici (morb'i).

Woura'li, Curare.

Woura'ri, Curare.

Woura'ru, Curare.

Wour'nils, War'bles. Irritation of the skin of horses and cattle produced by the œstrus bovis, causing inflammation from deposits of lymph from the development of larvæ from the egg, supuration, &c.

Wour'sum (Sc.), (from [Sax.] pýp, 'pus,') Pus.

Wrack Blad'der, Yel'low, (F.) Varec, Fucus vesiculosus—w. Sea, Fucus vesiculosus, Pila marina.

Wramp, Sprain.

Wrap'ping Up, (of the hydropathists,) Émail-lottage.

Wrat'ack, Nanus.

Wrench, (from [Sax.] ppingan, 'to wring,') Sprain.

Wret, 'wart,' Verruca.

Wret'weed, Euphorbia palustris.

Wrick, Sprain.

Wright'ia Antidysenter'ica, (after Dr. Wright, a physician and botanist of Jamaica,) Nerium antidysentericum.

Wrink'le, ([Sax.] ppincle,) Ru'ga, Rhy'tis, Ry'tis, Rha'cus, Rha'chus, Rha'gus, Rhy'sse'ma, Corru'ga'tio cut'is, Ruelles, (Sc.) Run'kle, Run'kill, (Prov.) Crin'klecran'kle, (F.) Ride. A furrow or fold in the skin of the face, forehead, vagina, &c. See Corrugation.

Wrink'led, Rugo'sus, Ru'gous, Ru'gose, (F.) Ridé. Full of wrinkles.

Wris'berg, Abdom'inal Brain of. The solar plexus.

WRIS'BERG, CAR'TILAGES OF, Cuneiform cartilages of the larynx — W. Ganglion of, Cardiac ganglion — W. Nerve of, see Cutaneous nerves.

Wrist, ([Sax.] pýp't, from ppæ'tan, 'to wrest,') Carpus.

Wrist'drop. Paralysis of the muscles of the forearm, induced by the poison of lead.

Wri'ters' Spasm, see Spasm, writers'.

Wrong Heir, Cancellus.

Wry'neck, Torticollis.

Wura'li, Curare.

Wurst'gift, 'sausage poison,' Allantotoxi-cum.

X.

X Leg, Entogonyancon.

Xalap'pa, Convolvulus jalapa.

Xan'thelas'ma Palpebra'rum. A condition like Vitiligoidea favosa, near the inner angle of the eyelids, usually associated with or dependent upon hepatic derangement.

XANTHELAS'MA PLA'NUM, (xanthos, and πλασμα, 'lamina,') see Vitiligoidea.

Xan'thic Ox'ide, Uric oxide.

Xan'thine, Uric oxide.

Xan'thium, X. Struma'rium seu Orienta'lē seu Vulga'rē, Barda'na mi'nor, Lap'pa mi'nor, Less'er Bur'dock, Bur'weed, Bur'thistle, Cloth'bur, Cock'lebur, (F.) Lampourde, Petit Glouteron, Petite Bardane, (from xanthos, because of the color the plant yields.) This herb, as one of its names imports, was once esteemed for the cure of scrofula. The seeds have been administered in cutaneous affections.

Xanthiu'ria, Xanthuria.

Xanthochro'ia, (xanthos, and χρoα,) Xanthopathia.

Xanthoder'ma, (xanthos, and derma,) Xanthopathia.

Xantho'ma, (xanthos, and oma,) Xanthopathia. See Vitiligoidea.

Xanthomel'anous, Xanthomelano'sus, (xanthos, and μελας, gen. μελας, 'black,') An epithet applied to people of yellow, brown, or olive skin, and black hair.

Xanthopathi'a, (xanthos, and παθος, 'affection,') Xanthoder'ma, Xanthochro'ia, Xantho'ma. The yellow coloration of the skin—flave'do cutis—produced by pigmentary change. Mr. Erasmus Wilson considers, under this head, Lentigo and Chloasma.

Xanthopi'erin and Xanthopi'crite, (πικρος, 'bitter,') see Xanthoxylum clava Herculis. The term Xanthopierite is also applied to a bitter yellow principle obtained from several other plants.

Xanthop'sia, (from xanthos, and οψις, 'vision,') Yellow vision,—as sometimes occurs in jaundice.

Xanthorrhiza, (xanthos, and ρίζα, 'root,') Xanthorrhiza apiifolia.

XANTHORRHI'ZA APIFO'LIA, Xanthorrhiza, X. simplicis'sima seu Marbo'ica, Xanthorrhiza tinctoria, Yel'lowroot, Par'sley-leaved Yellowroot, Yel'lowwort, Shrub yel'lowroot. The root of this American plant—Xanthorrhiza, (Ph. U. S.)—is a strong and pleasant bitter; and, in the dose of two scruples, sits easy upon the stomach.

Xanthorrhœ'a, (xanthos, and ῥω, 'I flow,') from its yellow resin, Grasstree. A genus of trees in Australia, Nat. Order, Liliaceæ, of which there are several species. Two resins are obtained from them: one, the Yel'low resin of Xanthorrhœ'a or of New Hol'land, Resi'na lu'tea No'vi Bel'gii, Bot'any Bay res'in or gum, Ac'aroid res'in or gum, Resi'na vel Gum'mi acaroides, which probably resembles tolu and storax in medicinal properties; the other the red resin of Xanthorrhœ'a, Blackboy gum.

Xan'thos, (ξανθος,) Yellow.

Xantho'sis, Xan'those, (from xanthos, and οσις,) A term applied to the yellow discoloration often observed in cancerous tumors—especially in encephaloid of the testicle.

Xanthox'ylm, see Xanthoxylum clava Herculis.

Xanthox'yllum, (xanthos, and ξύλον, 'wood,') X. Fracin'eum, X. America'num, X. fraxinifo-lium, X. ramiflo'rum, X. tricar'pum, Prick'ly ash, Shrub'by prick'ly ash, Tooth'ache bush, Tooth'ache tree, Pellitory, Yell'lowwood, Su'terberry. Ord. Xanthoxylaceae. A spirituous infusion of the bark—Xanthoxylum—Ph. U. S.—has been highly recommended in cases of violent colic. The fresh juice, expressed from the root of xanthoxylum, is said to afford relief in the dry bellyache of the West Indies. A decoction of the bark is sometimes used as a wash to foul ulcers.

XANTHOXYLUM CAROLINIANUM has similar properties; but is more acrid.

XANTHOXYLUM CLAVATA HERCULIS of the West Indies, (F.) Clavaler à feuilles de frêne, Frêne épineux, is a very strong stimulant and powerful sialagogue; and has been given internally in rheumatism. A neutral, very bitter, and astringent substance has been obtained from it, called Xanthopierin, Xanthopierite, and Xanthoxylin.

XANTHOXYLUM FRAXIN'EUM, Xanthoxylum—x. Fraxinifolium, Xanthoxylum—x. Octandra, Fagara octandra—x. Piperitum, Fagara piperita—x. Ramiflorum, Xanthoxylum—x. Tricarpum, Xanthoxylum.

Xanthu'ria, Xanthiu'ria, (from xanthos, and ουρον, 'urine.') A condition of the system and of the urine, in which xanthic oxide is deposited from the urine.

Xantoli'na, Artemisia santonica.

Xenodoce'um, (ξενόδοκειον, from ξενος, 'a stranger,' and δοκεω, 'I receive,') Hospital.

Xenodoche'um, (ξενόδοχεον,) Hospital.

Xeran'sis, (ξηρανσις, from ξηρος, 'dry,') Arefaction, Drying.

Xeran'tia, (from ξηρος, 'dry,') Siccantia.

Xera'sia, (from ξηρος, 'dry,') Xera'sia cap'itis. A disease of the hairs, which become dry, cease to grow, and resemble down covered with dust.

XERA'SIA CAP'ITIS, Xerasia.

XERA'SIA SAURIOIDES. An accumulation of sebaceous substance on the surface of the skin, desiccating in scales or spines.

Xe'rian, (from ξηρος, 'dry,') Catapasma.

Xe'ro, (from ξηρος, 'dry,') in composition, dry.

Xerocollyr'ium, (xero, and κολλυριον, 'a collyrium,') Collyrium sic'cum. A dry collyrium.

Xeroder'ma, gen. Xeroder'matis, Dermato-xera'sia, (xero, and δερμα, 'skin,') Diminution of secretion of the sebaceous glands.

XERODER'MA ICHTHYO'DES, Ichthyosis.

Xero'ma, gen. Xero'matis, (xero, and ομα,) Xerophthalmia—x. Conjunctival, Xerophthalmia.

XERO'MA, LACH'RYMAL. Suppression of the lachrymal secretion. See Xerophthalmia.

Xeromyce'ter, gen. Xeromyce'tris, Xeromycteria.

Xeromycte'ria, Xeromyce'ter, (xero, and μυκτηρ, 'the nose,') Dryness of the nose.

Xerom'yron, Unguentum sic'cum, (from xero, and μυρον, 'an ointment,') A dry ointment.

Xeroph'a'gia, (xero, and φάγω, 'I eat,') Excessive use of dry aliment. A kind of regimen to which the ancient athlete subjected themselves, with the view of increasing their strength.

Xerophthal'mia, Ophthal'mia sic'ca, Ophthalmoxero'sis, Xero'ma, (xero, and οφθαλμια, 'inflammation of the eye,') An inflammation of the eye, without discharge. The term—as well as Conjunctival and Lach'rymal Xeroma, and Ocular Conjunctiva—has been given to cases in which the conjunctiva is so changed, that it presents more of the characters of skin than of mucous membrane. It is incapable of radical cure. Also, lippitudo.

Xerotrib'ia, (xero, and τριβω, 'I rub,') see Friction.

Xerotrip'sis, Friction, dry.

Xime'nia. An African plant, the leaves of which are anthelmintic. See Agiaholid.

Xiphister'num, (xipho, and sternum,) Xiphoid.

Xiph'o, (from ξίφος, 'a sword,') in composition, the ensiform cartilage.

Xiph'o'des, Xiphoid.

Xiphod'ymus, (xipho, and δευω, 'to mingle,') Thoracogastrodidymus.

Xiph'oid, Xiphoides, Xipho'des, Ensifor'mis, (xipho, and αδω, 'shape,') Sword-shaped. Cartila'go Xiphoides seu Xiphoides seu Scuta'lis seu Ensiformis seu Pelta'lis seu Pelta'tus, Furcella infe'rior, Mucrona'tum os, Mucrona'ta Cartila'go, Chon'drus, Proces'sus xiphosterna'lis seu xiphoides seu Ster'ni xiphoides, Xiphister'num, En'siform cartilage, (F.) Appendice ou cartilage xiphoides, C. mucroné, Appendice sous-sternale, Palette. The name of the appendix which terminates the sternum beneath.

XIPH'OID LIG'AMENT, Costoxiphoid Ligament, (F.) Ligament xiphoidien ou costo-xiphoidien, is a small, very thin ligamentous fasciculus, which passes from the cartilage of prolongation of the 7th rib to the anterior surface of the xiphoid cartilage, into which it is inserted by its fibres decussating with those of the opposite ligament.

Xiphopa'ges, Didymus Symphyoepigas'trius, (xipho, and πηγνυμι, 'I fix,') A monstrosity, in which twins are united by the epigastrium, as in the case of the Siamese twins.

Xy'lene, Xylol.

Xyloal'o'es, (ξύλον, 'wood,' and aloes,) Agallochum.

Xylobal'samum, see Amyris opobalsamum.

Xylocas'sia, Laurus cassia.

Xylocinnamo'mum, Laurus cinnamomum.

Xy'lol, Xy'lene, (ξύλον, 'wood,') A new colorless hydrocarbon derived from coal naphtha by distillation, mixture with sulphuric acid and dry distillation, and subsequent purification. It has been employed in variola, but its remedial powers are not yet known. It is given in doses of 10 to 15 drops to adults, 3 to 5 drops to children, every hour or two, in that disease.

Xympathi'a, Sympathy.

Xy'ris, (from ξύρον, 'a razor,' from the shape of its leaves,) Iris foetidissima.

XY'RIS BULBO'SA, X. In'dica seu Carolinia'na, Yell'ow-eyed Grass; indigenous; Ord. Xyridaceae; flowering from July to September. The roots and leaves are said to be used by the Hindoos in lepra and chronic cutaneous diseases in general.

Xy'rum, (ξύρον,) Novacula.

Xy'rus, (ξύρος,) Novacula.

Xys'ma, gen. Xys'matis, (ξύσμα,) Linteam, Rasura, Scobs.

Xys'mus, (from ξύω, 'I scrape,') Rasura.

Xys'ter, gen. Xyste'ris, (ξύστηρ,) Raspatorium.

Xys'tos, (ξύστος, 'scraped,') Linteam.

Xys'trum, (ξύστηρον,) Raspatorium—x. Ophthalmicum, Ophthalmoxyster.

Y.

Yam. This esculent root is principally obtained from three species of Dioscorea, — ala'ta, bulbifera, and sati'va. They grow spontaneously in both the Indies, and their roots are eaten promiscuously, as the potato is with us. Their taste is somewhat like that of the potato.

Yam Root, Wild, Dioscorea villosa.

Yard, ([Sax.] γῆρδ,) Penis.

Yar'row, Com'mon, ([Sax.] γεappe,) Achillea millefolium.

Yaup'on, Ilex vomitoria.

Ya'va Skin, Elephantiasis Arabum.

Yawn'ing, (from [Sax.] geonan, 'to yawn,') Chas'mē, Chas'mus, Hia'tus, Ric'tus, Osce'do, Oscita'tio, Clo'nus pandicula'tio maxilla'rum, Ga'ping, (F.) Baillement. Yawning consists of a deep inspiration, with considerable separation of the jaws, executed slowly and in an involuntary manner, and followed by a prolonged and more or less sonorous expiration. This respiratory movement is preceded by a feeling of oppression in the epigastric region, and in the muscles of respiration and mastication. Yawning has been conceived to be owing to torpor in the pulmonary circulation; the causes producing it being commonly ennui, fatigue, sleepiness, monotonous sounds, hunger, sympathy, &c. Yawning often precedes the invasion of certain intermittents, attacks of hysteria, &c., and it may, by its frequency and obstinacy, become a true disease.

Yaw'root, Stillingia.

Yaws, Framboesia.

Yeast, Yest, ([Sax.] gert, from γῆρ, 'a storm,' γῆρῖς, 'stormy,') Fermen'tum Cerevis'ie, Spu'ma Cerevis'ie, Barm, (F.) Levûre, Levûre de la Bière. A peculiar product which collects on the surface of beer while fermenting. Yeast is antiseptic and tonic. It has been much extolled in putrid fevers, — a tablespoonful being given as a dose, in porter, wine, &c. It is also applied in the form of cataplasm to foul ulcers. In all these cases it acts by virtue of the generation of carbonic acid gas.

YEAST PLANT, Torula cerevisiæ.

Yēble, (from Ebulus,) Sambucus ebulus.

Yecke, (Yuke,) Psora.

Yelk, ([Sax.] gealep, 'yellow,') see Ovum.

Yel'lot, (Yellow,) Icterus.

Yel'low, ([Sax.] gealep,) Fla'vus, Lu'teus, Xan'thus, (from past participle of Sax. gealan, 'to burn,') One of the seven primitive colors.

YEL'LOW ASH, Cladrastis tinctoria — y. Berry, Podophyllum montanum — y. Dye Tree, Coclocline Polycarpa — y. Fever, see Fever, yellow — y. Fever, mild, see Relapse — y. Jack, Fever, yellow — y. Ladies' bedstraw, Galium verum.

YEL'LOW LIG'AMENTS, (F.) Ligaments jaunes, occupy the spaces between the vertebral plates, from the interval which separates the second vertebra from the third to that which separates the last vertebra from the sacrum. They are so called in consequence of their color.

YEL'LOW PAINT, Hydrastis Canadensis — y. Parilla, Menispermum Canadense — y. Root, Jeffersonia Bartoni — y. Root, parsley-leaved, Xanthorrhiza apiifolia — y. Root, shrub, Xanthorrhiza apiifolia.

YEL'LOW STAR, Helenium autumnale — y. Weed, Ranunculus acris — y. Wood, Xanthoxylum fraxineum — y. Wort, parsley-leaved, Xanthorrhiza apiifolia.

Yel'low Spring, see Ohio, mineral waters of.

Yel'low Springs. These are in Chester county, Pennsylvania. The temperature of the chief spring is 52° Fah. The water contains no marked impregnation.

Yel'lows, Cypripedium luteum, Icterus, see Leucorrhœa, Ranunculus acris.

Ye'men Ul'cer, see Beriberi.

Yerba del Soldado, 'soldier's herb,' Matico — y. de Huaca, Datura sanguinea.

Yer'nin, Rennet.

Yest, Yeast.

Yeux Ardents, Ardent eyes — y. d'Écrevisse, Cancrorum chelæ.

Yew'er, see Mamma.

Yew'tree, ([Sax.] ȝp,) Taxus baccata — y. American, Taxus Canadensis.

Yex, (by onomatopœia,) Singultus.

Y'lech, Ilech.

Ylia'ter, Ilech.

Yoke, (by onomatopœia,) Singultus.

Yolk, (Yelk,) see Ovum and Vesicula umbilicalis — y. Membrane, see Vesicula umbilicalis.

Yo'pon, Ilex vomitoria.

York Springs. These are in Adams county, Pennsylvania. One of them — a saline, containing sulphates of magnesia and lime, and chloride of sodium — is a mild cathartic and diuretic; the other is a strong chalybeate.

Youk, ([G.] jucken, 'to itch,') Itching, Psora.

Young, Mr. James, Disinfect'ant of, see Man-ganese, sulphate of.

Youth, ([Sax.] ȝeoguð,) Adolescence.

Yp'selloglos'sus, Basioglossus.

Y'rides, Orpiment.

Ysam'bra, Pedigam'bra. An ancient Spanish poison, of which hellebore formed the greatest part.

Ys'ope, Hyssopus.

Yuc'ca, (Peruvian name,) Jatropha manihot.

YUC'CA FILAMENTO'SA, Bear's Grass, Silkgrass. Indigenous. A tincture of the root has been used in gonorrhœa.

Yuke, ([G.] jucken, 'to itch,') Itching, Psora.

Yux, (by onomatopœia,) Singultus.

Y-wer-a, see Spirit.

Za'el, Borssail.

Zaf'fran, Crocus.

Zaf'fre, Smalt.

Zam'bo, see Mulatto and Sambo.

Za'mia Integrifo'lia, see Arrowroot — z. Pumila, see Arrowroot.

Zan'na. A kind of Armenian bole, used by the ancients as a desiccative. It was also called Zarnacha.

Zanthorrhiza Apiifo'lia, Xanthorrhiza apiifolia.

Zanthoxylum, Xanthoxylum.

Zappa'nia Nodiflo'ra, (after P. A. Zappa, an Italian botanist,) Anacoluppa.

Zar. A variety of hysteria among the Abyssinian women.

Zarnacha, Zanna.

Zar'sa, Smilax sarsaparilla.

Zarzaparil'la, Smilax sarsaparilla.

Zea Mays, (ζα or ζαα, was the ancient name of a sort of corn, from ζαω, 'to live,') Z. vulga'ris, Mays, M. ze'a seu America'na, A'dor, Indian Corn, Corn, Turkey or Indian Wheat, Maize, Mayz, (F.) Mais, Graine de Turquie, Blé d'Inde ou d'Espagne ou d'Italie ou de Turquie. Ord. Gramineæ. A native of America, and much used over the whole of the continent as an article of diet. It is ground for the same purposes as wheat, and forms an excellent bread. The fecula or starch — corn starch, maize'na — makes an agreeable aliment: four tablespoonfuls of the starch to a quart of milk, boiled for a few minutes. It may be sweetened and flavored, and eaten like blancmanger.

Zédoaire Rond, Kæmpferia rotunda.

Zédoar'ia, Kæmpferia rotunda — z. Longa, see Kæmpferia — z. Rotunda, see Kæmpferia.

Zed'oary, Kæmpferia rotunda.

Zelo'sis, (ζηλωσις), Zelotypia.

Zelotyp'ia, (from ζηλος, 'love,' and τυπος, 'form,' 'model,') Zelo'sis. It has been proposed to apply this name to the violent mental affection produced by the acknowledged or presumed infidelity of a beloved object, and to the consequences of such affection — melancholy, mania, &c.

Ze'ma, gen. Zem'atis, (ζεμα), Decoction.

Zen'icon, (ζενικον) Ancient name of a Celtic poison used for poisoning arrows.

Zeoec'riton Dis'tichum, (ζεα, 'corn,' and κριθη, 'barley,') Hordeum.

Ze'phach, Peritonæum.

Zer'ma, Zerna.

Zer'na, Zer'ma. Among the barbarous Latin writers it signified ulcerated impetigo, Impeti'go ulcera'ta.

Zerum'bet, Cassumuniar.

Ze'sis, (ζεις), Effervescence, Decoction.

Zest, see Citrus medica.

Zestolu'sia, (ζεστολουσια, from ζεστος, 'hot,' and λουω, 'I wash,') Bath, hot.

Zibebæ, see Vitis vinifera.

Zib'ethum, Civetta.

Zigni'tes, Zingrites.

Zinc, Zink, Zin'cum, Zin'kum, Speil'trum, Speau'ter, Tu'tenag, Zin'chum, Zint, Stan'num In'dicum. (Perhaps formed etymologically from [G.] Zin, 'tin,') A metal obtained from calamine and blende. Its color is bluish-white; lustre of the fresh surface considerable, but soon dulled, from the facility with which it oxidates; hard; texture striated; s. g. 6.8. Melts at 700° Fah., burns with a bright flame in a higher temperature, and is volatilized in the form of a white, flocculent oxide. Its use in medicine is in the formation of the preparations to be presently mentioned.

The Ph. B. (1867) has a granulated Zinc, Zincum granulatatum, made by fusing commercial zinc and pouring it into cold water, and afterwards removing the granulated zinc from the water and drying it.

ZINC, ACETATE OF, Zinci acetat — z. Butter of, Zinci chloridum — z. Carbonate of, Zinci carbonas præcipitatus — z. Carbonate of, impure, Calamina — z. Chloride of, Zinci chloridum — z. Chlorure de, Zinci chloridum — z. Cyanide of, Zinci cyanuretum — z. Cyanure de, Zinci cyanuretum — z. Ferrocyanide of, Zinci ferrocyanas — z. Ferrocyanate of, Zinci cyanuretum — z. Flowers of, Zinci oxidum — z. Granulated, see Zinc — z. Hydrocyanate of, Zinci cyanuretum — z. Iodide of, Zinci iodidum — z. Ioduret of, Zinci iodidum — z. Lactate of, Zinci lactas.

ZINC COL'IC, see Zinci oxidum.

ZINC AND MORPH'IA, DOUBLE IODIDE OF, (F.) Iodure double de Zinc et de Morphine. (This salt is prepared by boiling iodide of iodhydrate of morphia with water and zinc, after they have acted on each other for some days, filtering and crystallizing.) It is considered to combine the properties of morphia and the salts of zinc, and has been prescribed as an anodyne and antispasmodic. Dose, a quarter of a grain.

Zinc, Oxide de, Zinci oxidum — z. Oxide of, Zinci oxidum — z. Oxide of, commercial, Zinci oxidum venale — z. Oxide of, impure, Tutia.

ZINC, OXYCHLO'RIDE OF. A preparation of zinc employed by the dentist for temporary filling, and in the treatment of sensitive dentine; made by mixing a concentrated solution of the chloride with oxide of zinc recently prepared by burning zinc.

ZINC, PHOS'PHATE OF, Zinci phosphas.

ZINC AND STRYCH'NIA, DOUBLE IODIDE OF. This salt is prepared by digesting for several days, in hot water, iodide of iodhydrate of strychnia and zinc, filtering and crystallizing. It has been proposed in the same cases as strychnia.

Zinc, Sulfate de, Zinci sulphas — z. Sulphate of, Zinci sulphas — z. Sulphocarbolate of, see Sulphocarbolate — z. Valérate de, Zinci valerianas — z. Valerianate of, Zinci valerianas.

Zin'chum, Zincum.

Zin'ci Ace'tas, Ac'etate of Zinc, (F.) Acétate de Zinc. (Zinci oxid. venal., 3ij., Acid. acetic., f3viiijs., Aque destillat., f3v. Mix the acid and water, and digest the oxide of zinc in the mixture for half an hour, heat to the boiling point, filter while hot, and set aside to crystallize. Drain the crystals in a funnel, and dry on bibulous paper. An additional quantity of crystals may be obtained by evaporating the mother-liquor to one-half, slightly acidulating with acetic acid, and crystallizing. Ph. U. S., 1873.)

Frequently used to form a gently astringent wash in ophthalmia and other local inflammations; and as an injection in gonorrhœa.

ZIN'CI CARBO'NAS IMPU'RUS, Calamina.

ZIN'CI CARBO'NAS PRÆCIPITA'TUS, Z. Carbo'nas Præcipita'ta, (Ph. U. S., 1873.) Præcipitated carbonate of Zinc. (Zinci sulphat., Sodii carbonat., aa ℥ij., Aq. bullient., cong. Dissolve the sulphate of zinc and carbonate of soda respectively in Oiv. of water. Mix the solutions; stir, and set the mixture by, that the precipitate may subside. Having poured off the supernatant liquid, wash the precipitate with hot water, until the washings are nearly tasteless, and dry with a gentle heat. Ph. U. S., 1873.) Used to prepare the Zinci oxidum.

ZIN'CI CARBO'NAS PRÆPARA'TUS, Calamina præparata — z. Chloridi liquor, see Burnett's disinfecting liquid — z. Chloretum, Zinci chloridum.

ZIN'CI CHLO'RIDUM, Z. chlorure'tum seu chlore'tum, Zin'cum chlora'tum seu muriat'icum, Chlo'ride or Chlo'ruret of Zinc, (F.) Chlorure de Zinc. (Liq. zinci chlorid., q. s. Evaporate to dryness in an evaporating dish, fuse the dry mass, pour the liquid on a flat stone, and when congealed break the mass in pieces, and keep in a well-stopped bottle. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is very deliquescent in the air, forming the Butter of Zinc, Buty'rum Zin'ci.

Chloride of zinc is a powerful escharotic, and is the basis of different caustic applications. See Pasta zinci chloridi. It is, also, much employed as an effective antiseptic. See Burnett's disinfecting liquid.

ZIN'CI CHLORURE'TUM, Z. chloridum.

ZIN'CI CYANURE'TUM, Z. Cyan'idum seu Hydrocyanas seu Prus'sias, Zin'cum cyanogena'tum seu Borus'sicum seu Zoët'icum, Cyanide or Hydrocyanate of Zinc, (F.) Cyanure de Zinc. (This salt is formed by adding sulphate of zinc to hydrocyanate of potassa so long as any precipitate is thrown down. When dried and calcined at a low heat, the product is a mixture of cyanuret of zinc and of potassium. It has been recommended in nervous cardialgia. Dose, from one-sixteenth to one-twelfth of a grain.

It is chiefly used as a caustic; one part of the chloride being mixed with four, three, or two parts of flour, according to the desired strength, and a few drops of water being added to form a paste.

ZIN'CI FERROHYDROCY'ANAS, Zin'ci ferrocyannure'tum, Cyanure'tum Ferrozinc'icum, Zin'cum Ferrohydrocyan'icum, Ferrocyanide or Ferrohydrocyanate of Zinc. (Made by the mutual decomposition of boiling-hot solutions of sulphate of zinc and ferrocyanate of potassa.) It has been recommended in the same cases as the last preparation.

ZIN'CI HYDROCY'ANAS, Zinci cyanure'tum.

ZIN'CI IODIDUM, Z. Iodure'tum, Zin'cum Ioda'tum, Iode'tum Zin'ci seu Zin'cium, Protoiodure'tum Zin'ci, Iodide or Iodure't of Zinc, (F.) Iodure de Zinc. (This salt is made by boiling together iodine and zinc to dryness, and subliming.) An ointment, composed of a drachm to an ounce of lard, has been used in cases where the external use of iodide of potassium is indicated.

ZIN'CI IODURE'TUM, Z. iodidum.

ZIN'CI LAC'TAS, Lac'tate of Zinc. A white soluble salt, given in epilepsy, in doses of two grains, gradually increased to ten.

ZIN'CI NIX, Zinci oxidum.

ZIN'CI OXIDUM seu OX'YDUM, Zin'cum calcina'tum, Ni'hil Al'bum, La'na Philosopho'rum seu Philosoph'ica, Nix Zin'ci, Ni'hil Gri'seum, Pom'pholyx, Oxide of Zinc, Flow'ers of Zinc, (F.) Oxide ou Blanc de Zinc, Fleurs de Zinc. (Procured by exposing precipitated carbonate of zinc to a low-red heat, so as to drive off the carbonic acid and water. Ph. U. S., 1873.) It is said to be tonic and antispasmodic; externally detergent and desiccative. Employed in epilepsy, chorea, &c. Usual dose, gr. ij. to x.; but it is probably inert. For its external use, see Ung. zinci. This oxide is said to be capable of producing a colic resembling that caused by lead, and called Zinc Colic.

ZIN'CI OXIDUM IMPU'RUM, Tutia.

ZIN'CI OXIDUM VENA'LE, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Commer'cial Oxide of Zinc. A pure oxide of zinc, employed for making Zinci acetat.

ZIN'CI PHOS'PHAS, Phos'phate of Zinc. A white insoluble salt, which has been employed in insanity occurring in convalescence from fevers, epilepsy, &c. Dose, in pill, one to three grains.

ZIN'CI PRUS'SIAS, Zinci cyanure'tum.

ZIN'CI SUL'PHAS, (Ph. U. S., 1873,) Sul'phate of Zinc, Zin'cum Vitriola'tum, Vitriolum Al'bum seu Gostarien'se seu Zin'ci, Sul'phas Zin'cium, Gil'la Vitri'oli seu Theophras'ti, Sal Vitri'oli seu Vomitivum Vitri'oli, Chalcant'hum Al'bum, White Vitriol, White Cop'peras, (F.) Sulfate de Zinc, Couperose blanche, Sulfate zincique, Vitriol blanc. (Zinc. in frustulis, $\frac{3}{4}$ iv., Acid. sulphuric., $\frac{3}{4}$ vj., Aquæ destillat., Oiv. To the zinc and water, previously introduced into a glass vessel, add by degrees the sulphuric acid, and, when the effervescence shall have ceased, filter the solution through paper; then boil it down till a pellicle begins to form, and set aside to crystallize. Sulphate of zinc is inodorous; taste, styptic. It is in white, semitransparent, efflorescent crystals; soluble in three parts of water at 60°. It is emetic, tonic, antispasmodic, and, externally, astringent. A nostrum, sold under the name Antipertus'sis, and, as its title imports, given in whooping-cough, contains this salt as its chief ingredient. Dose of the sulphate as an emetic, gr. x. to $\frac{3}{4}$ ss.; as a tonic, gr. j. to ij. Used externally as a collyrium, gr. j. to water f $\frac{3}{4}$ j. A solution of the salt, to which a little sulphate of copper has been added, is said to constitute the Disinfecting Liquid of Larnaudès.

ZIN'CI VALERIA'NAS, Zin'cum valerian'icum, Valer'ianate or Vale'rate of Zinc. (A salt formed by saturating valerianic acid with freshly prepared carbonate of zinc, or by the double decomposition of valerianate of soda and sulphate of zinc. Ph. B., 1867.) It is in pure white, pearly scales, and has been recommended as a tonic in neuralgic diseases, epilepsy, &c. The dose is one or two grains several times a day.

Zingri'tes, Zigni'tes. A stone, resembling glass; to which the ancients attributed marvellous properties.

Zink, Zinc.

Zin'kum, Zinc.

Zint, Zincum.

Zin'ziber, (ζγγιβερ,) Amomum zingiber.

Zi'phac, Peritonæum.

Zir'bus, Epiploon—z. Adipinus, Epiploon, gastrocolic.

Zitt'man's Decoc'tion, Decoctum Zittmanni.

Ziza'nia Aquat'ica, (Ζίζανιον was the ancient name of some wild grain,) Wild Rice, Can'ada Rice, Water Oats; Ord. Gramineæ; called by the Indians, Menomene; grows abundantly on the marshy margins of the northern lakes and waters of the upper branches of the Mississippi. The grain resembles oats. It furnishes the northern savages and the Canadian traders and hunters with their annual supplies of grain.

Ziz'yphum (Arab.), Jujube.

Ziz'yphus Ju'juba, see Jujube—z. Nitida, see Jujube.

Ziz'yphus CENOP'LIA, Z. Nape'ca; Ord. Rhamnaceæ; common all over India. The fruit is eaten by the natives. It is of a pleasant acid taste. A decoction of the bark of the fresh root is used to promote the healing of fresh wounds.

Ziz'yphus SATI'VA, see Jujube—z. Sylvestris, see Jujube.

Zoa'gria, (ζωη, 'life,' and αγω, 'I catch up.') The saving and preservation of life, Zoë'sis. A reward for preserving life, Sos'trum. A votive offering hung up in the temples for a life saved.

Zoanthro'pia, Melanchol'ia zoanthro'pia, (zoon, and ανθρωπος, 'a man.') A species of monomania, in which the patient believes himself transformed into an animal. Lycanthropia and Cynanthropia belong to this species of monomania.

Zoara, Insomnia.

Zo'e, (ζωη,) Life.

Zograph'ia, Zoographia.

Zoiatri'a, (zoon, and ιατρία, 'medical treatment,') Veterinary art.

Zoia'trus, (zoon, and iatros, 'a physician,') Hippia'ter.

Zoia'mus, (from zoon,) Animality.

Zomid'ium, (ζωμίδιον, dim. of ζωμος,) Jus.

Zo'mos, (ζωμος,) Consommé, Jus. See Broth.

Zo'na, (ζώνη, 'a girdle,') Herpes zoster—z. Car-tilaginea, see Lamina spiralis—z. Castitatis, Hymen—z. Choriacea, see Lamina spiralis—z. Ciliaris, Ciliary zone—z. Cochleæ, see Lamina spiralis—z. Zo'NA PELLUCIDA, Oölem'ma pellucidum, Vit-el-lary mem'brane, Cho'rion (of some), (F.) Vitel-line, Membrane vitelline, Enveloppe ovarique, Coque, Membrane coquillière. The membrane that surrounds the yolk in the mammalia is so called on account of its breadth and peculiar transpar-ency.

Zo'NA RETICULA'RIS. This term has been ap-plied by J. Arnold to the inner layer, as Zona glomerulosa has been to the outer layer, of the stroma of the cortical part of the suprarenal capsule. The main portion he calls Zo'na fas-ciculata.

Zo'NA SERPIGINOSA, Herpes zoster.

Zo'NA TENDINO'SA. The whitish circle around each auriculoventricular orifice of the heart. See Circulus callosus Halleri.

Zo'NA VIRGINITA'TIS, Hymen.

Zone, Cingulum—z. of Haller, Ciliary zone—z. Sclerotic, Sclerotic zone.

Zoöam'ylin, (zoon, and amylum, 'starch,') Gly-cogenic matter.

Zoöbiolog'ia, (zoon, βίος, 'life,' and λογος, 'a treatise,') see Physiology.

Zoöchemi'a, Chemistry, animal.

Zoöchem'ical, Zoöchym'ical, Zoöchem'icus, Zoöchym'icus. Appertaining or having relation to animal chemistry.

Zoö'chemy, Chemistry, animal.

Zoö'chymy, Chemistry, animal.

Zoö'des, (ζωώδης, from zoon, and odes,) Animal.

Zoogénies, see Zoögeny. Bouchut has applied the term Zoogénies to animal parasites infesting the body.

Zoög'eny, Zoögen'ia, Zoögen'esis, (zoon, and γεννᾶω, 'I beget,') The doctrine of animal for-mation.

Zoög'raphy, Zoögraph'ia, Zograph'ia, (zoon, and γραφῆν, 'a description,') A description of animals. The natural history of animals.

Zoöhem'atine, Hematine.

Zoöhy'las, (zoon, and ῥᾶν, 'matter,') Animal matter.

Zoöhy'lica Concremen'ta. Concretions formed of animal matter.

Zoöi'asis, (zoon, and ιατρίς, 'curation,') Veteri-nary art.

Zo'oid, Zoöi'des, (ζωοειδής, from zoon, and εἶδος, 'resemblance,') Resembling or belonging to an animal. Every living cell may be regarded as a Zoöid.

Zoölog'ical, Zoölog'icus, (F.) Zoölogique, (zoon, and λογος, 'a description,') Relating or appertaining to the natural history of animals.

Zoölogist, Zoölogis'ta, Zoölogus. One skilled in the natural history of animals.

Zoöl'ogy, Zoölog'ia. The natural history of animals.

Zoömagnetis'mus, Magnetism, animal.

Zoöm'yous, (zoon, and μυκος, 'mucus,') Mucus.

Zoömyx'a, (zoon, and μυξα, 'mucus,') Mucus.

Zo'ön, (ζωον,) Animal.

Zoönom'ia, Organozoönom'ia, Zoön'omy, (zoon, and νομος, 'law,') The law which governs the organic actions of animals in general—Animal Physiolog'ogy, Zoöphysiolog'ia.

Zoöno'ses, (zoon, and νσος, 'disease,') Diseases produced by morbid animal poisons; as hydro-phobia, glanders, &c.

Zoönosol'ogy, Zoönosolog'ia, (zoon, νσος, 'a dis-ease,' and λογος, 'a description,') The nosology of animals.

Zoöpathol'ogy, Zoöpatholog'ia, (zoon, παθος, 'a disease,' and λογος, 'a description,') The pathol-ogy of animals.

Zoöph'agous, Zoöph'agus, (F.) Zoöphage, (ζωοφάγος, from zoon, and φαγω, 'I eat,') Feeding on animals. Carnivorous.

Zoöphthal'mus, (ζωοφθαλμος,) Hydrophthalmia.

Zoöphysiol'ogy, Zoöphysiolog'ia, (zoon, and physiologia,) Physiology, animal, Zoonomia.

Zoöphyte, Zoöph'ytum, (zoon, and φυτον, 'a plant,') Phytozoön, (F.) Phytozoaire, An'imal plant. A name given to the lowest class of ani-mals, which seem to form the transition between the animal and the vegetable kingdoms.

Zoö'sis, (from zoon,) Animation, Zoagria.

Zoösper'mata, Spermatozoa.

Zoöspermes, Spermatozoa.

Zoösperms, Spermatozoa.

Zoöthap'sis, (ζωη, 'life,' and θαπῖω, 'I inter,') Burial alive. Premature interment.

Zoöt'ic Ac'id, (from zoon,) A term sometimes applied synonymously with prussic acid.

Zoöt'omist, Zootom'icus, (zoon, and τεμνω, 'I cut,') One who dissects animals.

Zoöt'omy, Zoötom'ia, Anatom'ia anima'lis seu comparati'va seu compara'ta, Theriot'omy, Com-par'ative Anat'omy. The anatomy of animals. Animal anatomy.

Zoötrroph'ic, (zoon, and τροφή, 'nourishment,') Relating to the nourishment of an animal; as Zootrophic powders, which are intended to im-prove the general nutrition.

Zopis'sa, (ζωπισσα, from ζωος, 'living,' and πισσα, 'pitch,') see Pinus sylvestris.

Zo'pyron, (ζωπυρον, from ζωω, 'I am alive,' and πυρ, 'fire,') Fomites.

Zos'ter, gen. Zoste'ris, (ζωστήρ, 'a girth,') Her-pes zoster.

Zoste'ra Mari'na, Pila marina—z. Maritima, Pila marina.

Zostère, Pila marina.

Zoster'ic, Zoster'icus. Relating or appertain-ing to Herpes zoster.

Zouzinet'te, Narcissus pseudonarcissus.

Zo'zar, Saccharum.

Zuc'aro, Saccharum.

Zuc'carum, Saccharum.

Zu'char, Saccharum.

Zu'charum, Saccharum.

Zu'chra, Saccharum.

Zula'pium, Julep.

Zygapoph'y'ses, (ζυγον, 'a yoke,' and apophy-sis,) see Vertebrae.

Zygo'ma, gen. Zygo'matis, (ζυγωμα, from ζυγον, 'a yoke,') Malæ os; see Zygomat'ic process.

Zygomat'ic, Zygomat'icus, Juga'lis, Ju'gal, (F.) Zygomatique. That which relates to the zygoma or cheekbone.

ZYGOMAT'IC ARCH, see Zygomat'ic process—z. Bone, Malæ os.

ZYGOMAT'IC Fos'sa is the space included be-tween the posterior margin of the outer ala of the pterygoid process and the crista which descends from the malar tuberosity to the superior alveolar margin.

ZYGOMAT'IC Mus'cles are two in number. 1.

Zygomaticus major, Distort'or o'ris, (F.) Zygomatico-labial (Ch.), Muscle grand zygomaticque, which is situate obliquely at the forepart and sides of the face. It is a small, rounded muscle; arises from the outer surface of the os malæ, and is inserted at the commissure of the lips, which it raises and draws outwards. It acts principally in laughing. 2. Zygomaticus minor, (F.) Petit Zygomatico-labial (Ch.), Petit Zygomaticque, does not always exist. It is situate on the inner side of the last; arises from the outer surface of the os malæ, and is inserted at the corner of the mouth, or rather into the upper lip, which it raises and draws outwards.

ZYGOMATIC PROC'ESS, Processus zygomaticus, Apophysis zygomatica, An'sa cap'itis, Ma'lar or Ju'gal proc'ess, (F.) Apophyse zygomaticque, Anse de la Tête, arises from the outer surface of the temporal bone by two roots, one of which is transverse, Condyle du temporal (Ch.), and the other longitudinal: between them is the glenoid cavity. The process passes forwards, and is articulated with the posterior angle of the os malæ, with which it forms a bony bridge, called the Zygomatic arch, Ar'cus seu Pons zygomaticus, (F.) Arcade zygomaticque. The cavity beneath the bridge is sometimes called Zygoma.

ZYGOMATIC ST'URE is placed between the zygomatic parts of the temporal and cheek bones; and slants obliquely downwards and backwards.

Zygomaticus, Zygomatic.

Zygomaticque, Zygomatic — z. Grand, Zygomaticus major — z. Petit, Zygomaticus minor.

Zygomatico-auriculaire, Anterior auris — z. Labial, Zygomaticus major — z. Labial, petit, Zygomaticus major — z. Maxillaire, Masseter — z. Oriculaire, Anterior auris.

Zygophyllum Faba'go, (zyes, 'a yoke, a pair,' and φαλλον, 'a leaf,') (F.) Fabagelle. Ord. Zygophyllaceæ. A Syrian and Mauritanian plant, possessed of an acrid and bitter taste. It has vermifuge properties. The Arabs believe that the recently expressed juice of Zygophyllum simplex is capable of removing specks from the cornea.

Zy'mé, (ζυμη,) Ferment.

Zymo'ma, gen. Zymo'matis, (ζυμομα,) Ferment.

Zymo'sis, (ζυμωσις, from zyma, and osis,) Fermentation, see Zymotic.

Zymot'ic, Zymoticus, (F.) Zymotique, (from zyma,) Relating or appertaining to fermentation. A zymotic disease is any epidemic, endemic, contagious, or sporadic affection, which is produced by some morbid principle acting on the organism similar to a ferment — as the major exanthemata. Zymoses has been used by some to signify such affections. In the classification of Dr. Wm. Farr, Zymotic diseases, Zymot'ici mor'bi, comprise diseases which are epidemic, endemic, communicable, inoculable, capable of propagation from existing foci, or of generation; induced by a specific material or poison, or by the want or bad quality of food. This class includes four orders: — miasmatic, enthetic, dietetic, and parasitic diseases.

ZYMOT'IC PRIN'CIPLES. Certain matters which, of themselves or by their transformation, propagate zymotic diseases, as variola, typhus, syphilis, &c. Taking their names from the diseases which they produce, they are called, by Dr. Wm. Farr, Varioline, Typhine, Syphiline, &c.

ZYMOT'IC THE'ORY OF DIS'EASE, see Fermentation theory.

Zythog'ala, (zythus, and γαλα, 'milk,') Posset.

Zy'thum, Cerevisia.

Zy'thus, (ζυθος,) Cerevisia.

HENRY C. LEA'S

(LATE LEA & BLANCHARD'S)

CLASSIFIED CATALOGUE OF MEDICAL AND SURGICAL PUBLICATIONS.

In asking the attention of the profession to the works advertised in the following pages, the publisher would state that no pains are spared to secure a continuance of the confidence earned for the publications of the house by their careful selection and accuracy and finish of execution.

The printed prices are those at which books can generally be supplied by booksellers throughout the United States, who can readily procure for their customers any works not kept in stock. Where access to bookstores is not convenient, books will be sent by mail post-paid on receipt of the price, but no risks are assumed either on the money or the books, and no publications but my own are supplied. Gentlemen will therefore in most cases find it more convenient to deal with the nearest bookseller.

An ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, of 64 octavo pages, handsomely printed, will be forwarded by mail, post-paid, on receipt of ten cents.

It is manifest that only a very wide circulation can enable so vast an amount of valuable practical matter to be supplied at a price so unprecedentedly low. The publisher, therefore, has much gratification in stating that the very great favor with which these periodicals are regarded by the profession promises to render the enterprise a permanent one, and it is with especial pleasure that he acknowledges the valuable assistance spontaneously rendered by so many of the old subscribers to the "JOURNAL," who have kindly made known among their friends the advantages thus offered, and have induced them to subscribe. Relying upon a continuance of these friendly exertions, he hopes to be able to maintain the unexampled rates at which these works are now offered, and to succeed in his endeavor to place upon the table of every reading practitioner in the United States the equivalent of three large octavo volumes, at the comparatively trifling cost of SIX DOLLARS per annum.

These periodicals are universally known for their high professional standing in their several spheres.

I.

THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF THE MEDICAL SCIENCES,

EDITED BY ISAAC HAYS, M.D., is published Quarterly, on the first of January, April, July, and October. Each number contains nearly three hundred large octavo pages, appropriately illustrated whenever necessary. It has now been issued regularly for over FIFTY years, during nearly the whole of which time it has been under the control of the present editor. Throughout this long period, it has maintained its position in the highest rank of medical periodicals both at home and abroad, and has received the cordial support of the entire profession in this country. Among its Collaborators will be found a large number of the most distinguished names of the profession in every section of the United States, rendering the department devoted to full of varied and important matter, of great interest to all practitioners. Thus, during 1874, articles have appeared in its pages from nearly one hundred gentlemen of the highest standing in the profession throughout the United States.*

ORIGINAL COMMUNICATIONS

Following this is the "REVIEW DEPARTMENT," containing extended and impartial reviews of all important new works, together with numerous elaborate "ANALYTICAL AND BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES" of nearly all the medical publications of the day.

This is followed by the "QUARTERLY SUMMARY OF IMPROVEMENTS AND DISCOVERIES IN THE MEDICAL SCIENCES," classified and arranged under different heads, presenting a very complete digest of all that is new and interesting to the physician, abroad as well as at home.

Thus, during the year 1874, the "JOURNAL" furnished to its subscribers 85 Original Communications, 113 Reviews and Bibliographical Notices, and 305 articles in the Quarterly Summaries, making a total of about FIVE HUNDRED articles emanating from the best professional minds in America and Europe.

That the efforts thus made to maintain the high reputation of the "JOURNAL" are successful, is shown by the position accorded to it in both America and Europe as a national exponent of medical progress:—

America continues to take a great place in this class of journals (quarterlies), at the head of which the great work of Dr. Hays, the American Journal of the Medical Sciences, still holds its ground, as our quotations have often proved.—Dublin Med. Press and Circular, Jan. 31, 1872.

Of English periodicals the Lancet, and of American the Am. Journal of the Medical Sciences, are to be regarded as necessities to the reading practitioner.—N. F. Medical Gazette, Jan. 7, 1871.

The American Journal of the Medical Sciences yields to none in the amount of original and borrowed matter it contains, and has established for itself a reputation in every country where medicine is cultivated as a science.—Brit. and For. Med.-Chirurg. Review, April, 1871.

This, if not the best, is one of the best-conducted medical quarterlies in the English language, and the present number is not by any means inferior to its predecessors.—London Lancet, Aug. 23, 1873.

Almost the only one that circulates everywhere, all over the Union and in Europe.—London Medical Times, Sept. 5, 1868.

And that it was specifically included in the award of a medal of merit to the Publisher in the Vienna Exhibition in 1873.

The subscription price of the "AMERICAN JOURNAL OF THE MEDICAL SCIENCES" has never been raised during its long career. It is still FIVE DOLLARS per annum; and when paid for in advance, the subscriber receives in addition the "MEDICAL NEWS AND LIBRARY," making in all about 1500 large octavo pages per annum, free of postage.

II.

THE MEDICAL NEWS AND LIBRARY

is a monthly periodical of Thirty-two large octavo pages, making 384 pages per annum. Its "NEWS DEPARTMENT" presents the current information of the day, with Clinical Lectures and Hospital Gleanings; while the "LIBRARY DEPARTMENT" is devoted to publishing standard works on the various branches of medical science, pagged separately, so that they can be removed and bound on completion. In this manner subscribers have received, without expense, such works as "WATSON'S PRACTICE," "TODD AND BOWMAN'S PHYSIOLOGY," "WEST ON CHILDREN," "MALGAIGNE'S SURGERY," &c. &c. With Jan. 1875, was commenced the publication of Dr. WILLIAM STOKES'S new work on FEVER (see p. 14), rendering this a very desirable time for new subscriptions.

As stated above, the subscription price of the "MEDICAL NEWS AND LIBRARY" is ONE DOLLAR per annum in advance; and it is furnished without charge to all advance paying subscribers to the "AMERICAN JOURNAL OF THE MEDICAL SCIENCES."

III.

THE MONTHLY ABSTRACT OF MEDICAL SCIENCE.

The publication in England of Ranking's "HALF-YEARLY ABSTRACT OF THE MEDICAL SCIENCES" having ceased with the volume for January, 1874, its place has been supplied in this country by a monthly "ABSTRACT" containing forty-eight large octavo pages each month, thus furnishing in the course of the year about six hundred pages, the same amount of matter as heretofore embraced in the Half-Yearly Abstract. As the discontinuance of the "Ranking" arose from the multiplication of journals appearing more frequently and presenting the same character of material, it has been thought that this plan of monthly issues will better meet the wants of subscribers, who will thus receive earlier intelligence of the improvements and discoveries in the medical sciences. The aim of the MONTHLY ABSTRACT will be to present a careful condensation of all that is new and important in the medical journalism of the world, and all the prominent professional periodicals of both hemispheres will be at the disposal of the Editors.

Subscribers desiring to bind the ABSTRACT will receive, on application at the end of each year, a cloth cover, gilt lettered, for the purpose, or it will be sent free by mail on receipt of the postage, which, under existing laws, will be six cents.

The subscription to the "MONTHLY ABSTRACT," free of postage, is TWO DOLLARS AND A HALF a year, in advance.

As stated above, however, it will be supplied in conjunction with the "AMERICAN JOURNAL OF THE MEDICAL SCIENCES" and the "MEDICAL NEWS AND LIBRARY," making in all about TWENTY-ONE HUNDRED pages per annum, the whole free of postage, for SIX DOLLARS a year, in advance.

The first volume of the "MONTHLY ABSTRACT," from July to December, 1874, can be had by those who desire to have complete sets, if early application be made, for $1 50, forming a handsome octavo volume of 300 pages, cloth.

In this effort to bring so large an amount of practical information within the reach of every member of the profession, the publisher confidently anticipates the friendly aid of all who are interested in the dissemination of sound medical literature. He trusts, especially, that the subscribers to the "AMERICAN MEDICAL JOURNAL" will call the attention of their acquaintances to the advantages thus offered, and that he will be sustained in the endeavor to permanently establish medical periodical literature on a footing of cheapness never heretofore attempted.

PREMIUM FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS TO THE "JOURNAL."

Any gentleman who will remit the amount for two subscriptions for 1875, one of which must be for a new subscriber, will receive as a PREMIUM, free by mail, a copy of "FLINT'S ESSAYS ON CONSERVATIVE MEDICINE" (for advertisement of which see p. 15), or of "STURGES'S CLINICAL MEDICINE" (see p. 14), or of the new edition of "SWAYNE'S OBSTETRIC APHORISMS" (see p. 24), or of "TANNER'S CLINICAL MANUAL" (see p. 5), or of "CHAMBERS'S RESTORATIVE MEDICINE" (see p. 16), or of "WEST ON NERVOUS DISORDERS OF CHILDREN" (see page 21).

* * * Gentlemen desiring to avail themselves of the advantages thus offered will do well to forward their subscriptions at an early day, in order to insure the receipt of complete sets for the year 1875, as the constant increase in the subscription list almost always exhausts the quantity printed shortly after publication.

The safest mode of remittance is by bank check or postal money order, drawn to the order of the undersigned. Where these are not accessible, remittances for the "JOURNAL" may be made at the risk of the publisher, by forwarding in REGISTERED letters. Address,

MEDICAL LEXICON; A DICTIONARY OF MEDICAL SCIENCE: Containing a concise explanation of the various Subjects and Terms of Anatomy, Physiology, Pathology, Hygiene, Therapeutics, Pharmacology, Pharmacy, Surgery, Obstetrics, Medical Jurisprudence, and Dentistry. Notices of Climate and of Mineral Waters; Formulæ for Official, Empirical, and Dietetic Preparations; with the Accentuation and Etymology of the Terms, and the French and other Synonymes; so as to constitute a French as well as English Medical Lexicon. A New Edition. Thoroughly Revised, and very greatly Modified and Augmented. By RICHARD J. DUNGLISON, M.D. In one very large and handsome royal octavo volume of over 1100 pages. Cloth, $6 50; leather, raised bands, $7 50. (Just Issued.)

The object of the author from the outset has not been to make the work a mere lexicon or dictionary of terms, but to afford, under each, a condensed view of its various medical relations, and thus to render the work an epitome of the existing condition of medical science. Starting with this view, the immense demand which has existed for the work has enabled him, in repeated revisions, to augment its completeness and usefulness, until at length it has attained the position of a recognized and standard authority wherever the language is spoken.

Special pains have been taken in the preparation of the present edition to maintain this enviable reputation. During the ten years which have elapsed since the last revision, the additions to the nomenclature of the medical sciences have been greater than perhaps in any similar period of the past, and up to the time of his death the author labored assiduously to incorporate everything requiring the attention of the student or practitioner. Since then, the editor has been equally industrious, so that the additions to the vocabulary are more numerous than in any previous revision. Especial attention has been bestowed on the accentuation, which will be found marked on every word. The typographical arrangement has been much improved, rendering reference much more easy, and every care has been taken with the mechanical execution. The work has been printed on new type, small but exceedingly clear, with an enlarged page, so that the additions have been incorporated with an increase of but little over a hundred pages, and the volume now contains the matter of at least four ordinary octavos.

A book well known to our readers, and of which every American ought to be proud. When the learned author of the work passed away, probably all of us feared lest the book should not maintain its place in the advancing science whose terms it defines. Fortunately, Dr. Richard J. Dunglison, having assisted his father in the revision of several editions of the work, and having been, therefore, trained in the methods and imbued with the spirit of the book, has been able to edit it, not in the patchwork manner so dear to the heart of book editors, so repulsive to the taste of intelligent book readers, but to edit it as a work of the kind should be edited—to carry it on steadily, without jar or interruption, along the grooves of thought it has travelled during its lifetime. To show the magnitude of the task which Dr. Dunglison has assumed and carried through, it is only necessary to state that more than six thousand new subjects have been added in the present edition. Without occupying more space with the theme, we congratulate the editor on the successful completion of his labors, and hope he may reap the well-earned reward of profit and honor.—Phila. Med. Times, Jan. 3, 1874.

About the first book purchased by the medical student is the Medical Dictionary. The lexicon explanatory of technical terms is simply a sine qua non. In a science so extensive, and with such collaterals as medicine, it is as much a necessity also to the practising physician. To meet the wants of students and most physicians, the dictionary must be condensed while comprehensive, and practical while perspicacious. It was because Dunglison's met these indications that it became at once the dictionary of general use wherever medicine was studied in the English language. In no former revision have the alterations and additions been so great. More than six thousand new subjects and terms have been added. The chief terms have been set in black letter, while the derivatives follow in small caps; an arrangement which greatly facilitates reference. We may safely confirm the hope ventured by the editor "that the work, which possesses for him a filial as well as an individual interest, will be found worthy a continuance of the position so long accorded to it as a standard authority."—Cincinnati Clinic, Jan. 10, 1874.

We are glad to see a new edition of this invaluable work, and to find that it has been so thoroughly revised, and so greatly improved. The dictionary, in its present form, is a medical library in itself, and one of which every physician should be possessed.—N. Y. Med. Journal, Feb. 1874.

With a history of forty years of unexampled success and universal indorsement by the medical profession of the western continent, it would be presumption in any living medical American to essay its review. No reviewer, however able, can add to its fame; no captious critic, however caustic, can remove a single stone from its firm and enduring foundation. It is destined, as a colossal monument, to perpetuate the solid and richly deserved fame of Robley Dunglison to coming generations. The large additions made to the vocabulary, we think, will be welcomed by the profession as supplying the want of a lexicon fully up with the march of science, which has been increasingly felt for some years past. The accentuation of terms is very complete, and, as far as we have been able to examine it, very excellent. We hope it may be the means of securing greater uniformity of pronunciation among medical men.—Atlanta Med. and Surg. Journ., Feb. 1874.

It would be mere waste of words in us to express our admiration of a work which is so universally and deservedly appreciated. The most admirable work of its kind in the English language.—Glasgow Medical Journal, January, 1866.

A work to which there is no equal in the English language.—Edinburgh Medical Journal.

Few works of the class exhibit a grander monument of patient research and of scientific lore. The extent of the sale of this lexicon is sufficient to testify to its usefulness, and to the great service conferred by Dr. Robley Dunglison on the profession, and indeed on others, by its issue.—London Lancet, May 13, 1865.

It has the rare merit that it certainly has no rival in the English language for accuracy and extent of references.—London Medical Gazette.

HOBLYN (RICHARD D.), M.D.

A DICTIONARY OF THE TERMS USED IN MEDICINE AND THE COLLATERAL SCIENCES. Revised, with numerous additions, by ISAAC HAYS, M.D., Editor of the "American Journal of the Medical Sciences." In one large royal 12mo. volume of over 500 double-columned pages; cloth, $1 50; leather, $2 00.

It is the best book of definitions we have, and ought always to be upon the student's table.—Southern Med. and Surg. Journal.

NEILL (JOHN), M.D., and SMITH (FRANCIS G.), M.D.,

Prof. of the Institutes of Medicine in the Univ. of Penna.

AN ANALYTICAL COMPENDIUM OF THE VARIOUS BRANCHES OF MEDICAL SCIENCE; for the Use and Examination of Students. A new edition, revised and improved. In one very large and handsomely printed royal 12mo. volume, of about one thousand pages, with 374 wood cuts, cloth, $4; strongly bound in leather, with raised bands, $4 75.

The Compend of Drs. Neill and Smith is incomparably the most valuable work of its class ever published in this country. Attempts have been made in various quarters to squeeze Anatomy, Physiology, Surgery, the Practice of Medicine, Obstetrics, Materia Medica, and Chemistry into a single manual; but the operation has signally failed in the hands of all up to the advent of "Neill and Smith's" volume, which is quite a miracle of success. The outlines of the whole are admirably drawn and illustrated, and the authors are eminently entitled to the grateful consideration of the student of every class.—N. O. Med. and Surg. Journal.

There are but few students or practitioners of medicine unacquainted with the former editions of this unassuming though highly instructive work. The whole science of medicine appears to have been sifted, as the gold-bearing sands of El Dorado, and the precious facts treasured up in this little volume. A complete portable library so condensed that the student may make it his constant pocket companion.—Western Lancet.

In the rapid course of lectures, where work for the students is heavy, and review necessary for an examination, a compend is not only valuable, but it is almost a sine qua non. The one before us is, in most of the divisions, the most unexceptionable of all books of the kind that we know of. Of course it is useless for us to recommend it to all last course students, but there is a class to whom we very sincerely commend this cheap book as worth its weight in silver—that class is the graduates in medicine of more than ten years' standing, who have not studied medicine since. They will perhaps find out from it that the science is not exactly now what it was when they left it off.—The Stethoscope.

HARTSHORNE (HENRY), M.D.,

Professor of Hygiene in the University of Pennsylvania.

A CONSPECTUS OF THE MEDICAL SCIENCES; containing Handbooks on Anatomy, Physiology, Chemistry, Materia Medica, Practical Medicine, Surgery, and Obstetrics. Second Edition, thoroughly revised and improved. In one large royal 12mo. volume of more than 1000 closely printed pages, with 477 illustrations on wood. Cloth, $4 25; leather, $5 00. (Lately Issued.)

The favor with which this work has been received has stimulated the author in its revision to render it in every way fitted to meet the wants of the student, or of the practitioner desirous to refresh his acquaintance with the various departments of medical science. The various sections have been brought up to a level with the existing knowledge of the day, while preserving the condensation of form by which so vast an accumulation of facts have been brought within so narrow a compass. The series of illustrations has been much improved, while by the use of a smaller type the additions have been incorporated without increasing unduly the size of the volume.

The work before us has already successfully asserted its claim to the confidence and favor of the profession; it but remains for us to say that in the present edition the whole work has been fully overhauled and brought up to the present status of the science.—Atlanta Med. and Surg. Journal, Sept. 1874.

The work is intended as an aid to the medical student, and as such appears to admirably fulfil its object by its excellent arrangement, the full compilation of facts, the perspicuity and terseness of language, and the clear and instructive illustrations in some parts of the work.—American Journ. of Pharmacy, Philadelphia, July, 1874.

The volume will be found useful, not only to students, but to many others who may desire to refresh their memories with the smallest possible expenditure of time.—N. Y. Med. Journal, Sept. 1874.

The student will find this the most convenient and useful book of the kind on which he can lay his hand.—Pacific Med. and Surg. Journ., Aug. 1874.

LUDLOW (J. L.), M.D.

A MANUAL OF EXAMINATIONS upon Anatomy, Physiology, Surgery, Practice of Medicine, Obstetrics, Materia Medica, Chemistry, Pharmacy, and Therapeutics. To which is added a Medical Formulary. Third edition, thoroughly revised and greatly extended and enlarged. With 370 illustrations. In one handsome royal 12mo. volume of 816 large pages, cloth, $3 25; leather, $3 75.

The arrangement of this volume in the form of question and answer renders it especially suitable for the office examination of students, and for those preparing for graduation.

TANNER (THOMAS HAWKES), M.D., &c.

A MANUAL OF CLINICAL MEDICINE AND PHYSICAL DIAGNOSIS. Third American from the Second London Edition. Revised and Enlarged by TILBURY FOX, M.D., Physician to the Skin Department in University College Hospital, &c. In one neat volume small 12mo., of about 375 pages, cloth, $1 50.

 By reference to the "Prospectus of Journal" on page 3, it will be seen that this work is offered as a premium for procuring new subscribers to the "AMERICAN JOURNAL OF THE MEDICAL SCIENCES."

Taken as a whole, it is the most compact vade mecum for the use of the advanced student and junior practitioner with which we are acquainted.—Boston Med. and Surg. Journal, Sept. 22, 1870.

It contains so much that is valuable, presented in so attractive a form, that it can hardly be spared even in the presence of more full and complete works. Its convenient size makes it a valuable companion to the country practitioner, and if constantly carried by him, would often render him good service, and relieve many a doubt and perplexity.—Leavenworth Med. Herald, July, 1870.

The objections commonly, and justly, urged against the general run of "compend," "conspectus," and other aids to indolence, are not applicable to this little volume, which contains in concise phrase just those practical details that are of most use in daily diagnosis, but which the young practitioner finds it difficult to carry always in his memory without some quickly accessible means of reference. Altogether, the book is one which we can heartily commend to those who have not opportunity for extensive reading, or who, having read much, still wish an occasional practical reminder.—N. Y. Med. Gazette, Nov 10 1870.

GRAY (HENRY), F.R.S.,

Lecturer on Anatomy at St. George's Hospital, London.

ANATOMY, DESCRIPTIVE AND SURGICAL. The Drawings by

H. V. CARTER, M.D., late Demonstrator on Anatomy at St. George's Hospital; the Dissections jointly by the AUTHOR and DR. CARTER. A new American, from the fifth enlarged and improved London edition. In one magnificent imperial octavo volume, of nearly 900 pages, with 465 large and elaborate engravings on wood. Price in cloth, $6 00; leather, raised bands, $7 00. (Just Issued.)

The author has endeavored in this work to cover a more extended range of subjects than is customary in the ordinary text-books, by giving not only the details necessary for the student, but also the application of those details in the practice of medicine and surgery, thus rendering it both a guide for the learner, and an admirable work of reference for the active practitioner. The engravings form a special feature in the work, many of them being the size of nature, nearly all original, and having the names of the various parts printed on the body of the cut, in place of figures of reference, with descriptions at the foot. They thus form a complete and splendid series, which will greatly assist the student in obtaining a clear idea of Anatomy, and will also serve to refresh the memory of those who may find in the exigencies of practice the necessity of recalling the details of the dissecting room; while combining, as it does, a complete Atlas of Anatomy, with a thorough treatise on systematic, descriptive, and applied Anatomy, the work will be found of essential use to all physicians who receive students in their offices, relieving both preceptor and pupil of much labor in laying the groundwork of a thorough medical education.

Notwithstanding the enlargement of this edition, it has been kept at its former very moderate price, rendering it one of the cheapest works now before the profession.

The illustrations are beautifully executed, and render this work an indispensable adjunct to the library of the surgeon. This remark applies with great force to those surgeons practising at a distance from our large cities, as the opportunity of refreshing their memory by actual dissection is not always attainable.—Canada Med. Journal, Aug. 1870.

The work is too well known and appreciated by the profession to need any comment. No medical man can afford to be without it, if its only merit were to serve as a reminder of that which so soon becomes forgotten, when not called into frequent use, viz., the relations and names of the complex organism of the human body. The present edition is much improved.—California Med. Gazette, July, 1870.

Gray's Anatomy has been so long the standard of perfection with every student of anatomy, that we need do no more than call attention to the improvement in the present edition.—Detroit Review of Med. and Pharm., Aug. 1870.

From time to time, as successive editions have appeared, we have had much pleasure in expressing the general judgment of the wonderful excellence of Gray's Anatomy.—Cincinnati Lancet, July, 1870.

Altogether, it is unquestionably the most complete and serviceable text-book in anatomy that has ever been presented to the student, and forms a striking contrast to the dry and perplexing volumes on the same subject through which their predecessors struggled in days gone by.—N. Y. Med. Record, June 15, 1870.

To commend Gray's Anatomy to the medical profession is almost as much a work of supererogation as it would be to give a favorable notice of the Bible in the religious press. To say that it is the most complete and conveniently arranged text-book of its kind, is to repeat what each generation of students has learned as a tradition of the elders, and verified by personal experience.—N. Y. Med. Gazette, Dec. 17, 1870.

AN ANATOMICAL ATLAS, illustrative of the Structure of the Human Body. In one volume, large imperial octavo, cloth, with about six hundred and fifty beautiful figures. $4 50.

The plan of this Atlas, which renders it so peculiarly convenient for the student, and its superb artistic execution, have been already pointed out. We must congratulate the student upon the completion of this Atlas, as it is the most convenient work of the kind that has yet appeared; and we must add, the very beautiful manner in which it is "got up," is so creditable to the country as to be flattering to our national pride.—American Medical Journal.

SHARPEY (WILLIAM), M.D., and QUAIN (JONES & RICHARD).

HUMAN ANATOMY. Revised, with Notes and Additions, by JOSEPH LEIDY, M.D., Professor of Anatomy in the University of Pennsylvania. Complete in two large octavo volumes, of about 1300 pages, with 511 illustrations; cloth, $6 00.

The very low price of this standard work, and its completeness in all departments of the subject, should command for it a place in the library of all anatomical students.

HODGES (RICHARD M.), M.D.,

Late Demonstrator of Anatomy in the Medical Department of Harvard University.

PRACTICAL DISSECTIONS. Second Edition, thoroughly revised. In one neat royal 12mo. volume, half-bound, $2 00.

The object of this work is to present to the anatomical student a clear and concise description of that which he is expected to observe in an ordinary course of dissections. The author has endeavored to omit unnecessary details, and to present the subject in the form which many years' experience has shown him to be the most convenient and intelligible to the student. In the revision of the present edition, he has sedulously labored to render the volume more worthy of the favor with which it has heretofore been received.

HORNER'S SPECIAL ANATOMY AND HISTOLOGY.
Eighth edition, extensively revised and modified.

In 2 vols. 8vo., of over 1000 pages, with more than 300 wood-cuts; cloth, $5 00

WILSON (ERASMUS), F.R.S.

A SYSTEM OF HUMAN ANATOMY, General and Special. Edited by W. H. GOBRECHT, M.D., Professor of General and Surgical Anatomy in the Medical College of Ohio. Illustrated with three hundred and ninety-seven engravings on wood. In one large and handsome octavo volume, of over 600 large pages; cloth, $4 00; leather, $5 00.

The publisher trusts that the well-earned reputation of this long-established favorite will be more than maintained by the present edition. Besides a very thorough revision by the author, it has been most carefully examined by the editor, and the efforts of both have been directed to introducing everything which increased experience in its use has suggested as desirable to render it a complete text-book for those seeking to obtain or to renew an acquaintance with Human Anatomy. The amount of additions which it has thus received may be estimated from the fact that the present edition contains over one-fourth more matter than the last, rendering a smaller type and an enlarged page requisite to keep the volume within a convenient size. The author has not only thus added largely to the work, but he has also made alterations throughout, wherever there appeared the opportunity of improving the arrangement or style, so as to present every fact in its most appropriate manner, and to render the whole as clear and intelligible as possible. The editor has exercised the utmost caution to obtain entire accuracy in the text, and has largely increased the number of illustrations, of which there are about one hundred and fifty more in this edition than in the last, thus bringing distinctly before the eye of the student everything of interest or importance.

HEATH (CHRISTOPHER), F.R.C.S.,

PRACTICAL ANATOMY: A Manual of Dissections. From the Second revised and improved London edition. Edited, with additions, by W. W. KEEN, M.D., Lecturer on Pathological Anatomy in the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. In one handsome royal 12mo. volume of 578 pages, with 247 illustrations. Cloth, $3 50; leather, $4 00. (Lately Published.)

Dr. Keen, the American editor of this work, in his preface, says: "In presenting this American edition of 'Heath's Practical Anatomy,' I feel that I have been instrumental in supplying a want long felt for a real dissector's manual," and this assertion of its editor we deem is fully justified, after an examination of its contents, for it is really an excellent work. Indeed, we do not hesitate to say, the best of its class with which we are acquainted; resembling Wilson in terse and clear description, excelling most of the so-called practical anatomical dissectors in the scope of the subject and practical selected matter. . . . In reading this work, one is forcibly impressed with the great pains the author takes to impress the subject upon the mind of the student. He is full of rare and pleasing little devices to aid memory in maintaining its hold upon the slippery slopes of anatomy. —St. Louis Med. and Surg. Journal, Mar. 10, 1871.

It appears to us certain that, as a guide in dissection, and as a work containing facts of anatomy in brief and easily understood form, this manual is complete. This work contains, also, very perfect illustrations of parts which can thus be more easily understood and studied; in this respect it compares favorably with works of much greater pretension. Such manuals of anatomy are always favorite works with medical students. We would earnestly recommend this one to their attention; it has excellences which make it valuable as a guide in dissecting, as well as in studying anatomy. —Buffalo Medical and Surgical Journal, Jan. 1871.

BELLAMY (E.), F.R.C.S.

THE STUDENT'S GUIDE TO SURGICAL ANATOMY: A Text-Book for Students preparing for their Pass Examination. With engravings on wood. In one handsome royal 12mo. volume. Cloth, $2 25. (Just Issued.)

We welcome Mr. Bellamy's work, as a contribution to the study of regional anatomy, of equal value to the student and the surgeon. It is written in a clear and concise style, and its practical suggestions add largely to the interest attaching to its technical details. —Chicago Med. Examiner, March 1, 1874.

We cordially congratulate Mr. Bellamy upon having produced it. —Med. Times and Gaz.

We cannot too highly recommend it. —Student's Journal.

Mr. Bellamy has spared no pains to produce a really reliable student's guide to surgical anatomy—one which all candidates for surgical degrees may consult with advantage, and which possesses much original matter. —Med. Press and Circular.

MACLISE (JOSEPH).

SURGICAL ANATOMY. By JOSEPH MACLISE, Surgeon. In one volume, very large imperial quarto; with 68 large and splendid plates, drawn in the best style and beautifully colored, containing 190 figures, many of them the size of life; together with copious explanatory letter-press. Strongly and handsomely bound in cloth. Price $14 00.

We know of no work on surgical anatomy which can compete with it. —Lancet.

The work of MacLise on surgical anatomy is of the highest value. In some respects it is the best publication of its kind we have seen, and is worthy of a place in the library of any medical man, while the student could scarcely make a better investment than this. —The Western Journal of Medicine and Surgery.

No such lithographic illustrations of surgical regions have hitherto, we think, been given. While the operator is shown every vessel and nerve where an operation is contemplated, the exact anatomist is refreshed by those clear and distinct dissections, which every one must appreciate who has a particle of enthusiasm. The English medical press has quite exhausted the words of praise, in recommending this admirable treatise. —Boston Med. and Surg. Journ.

OUTLINES OF PHYSIOLOGY, HUMAN AND COMPARATIVE.

With Additions by FRANCIS GURNEY SMITH, M. D., Professor of the Institutes of Medicine in the University of Pennsylvania, &c. With numerous illustrations. In one large and handsome octavo volume, of 1026 pages, cloth, $6 50; leather, raised bands, $7 50.

In fact, in every respect, Mr. Marshall has presented us with a most complete, reliable, and scientific work, and we feel that it is worthy our warmest commendation.—St. Louis Med. Reporter, Jan. 1869.

We doubt if there is in the English language any compend of physiology more useful to the student than this work.—St. Louis Med. and Surg. Journal, Jan. 1869.

It quite fulfils, in our opinion, the author's design of making it truly educational in its character—which is, perhaps, the highest commendation that can be asked.—Am. Journ. Med. Sciences, Jan. 1869.

We may now congratulate him on having completed the latest as well as the best summary of modern physiological science, both human and comparative, with which we are acquainted. To speak of this work in the terms ordinarily used on such occasions would not be agreeable to ourselves, and would fail to do justice to its author. To write such a book requires a varied and wide range of knowledge, considerable power of analysis, correct judgment, skill in arrangement, and conscientious spirit.—London Lancet, Feb. 22, 1868.

There are few, if any, more accomplished anatomists and physiologists than the distinguished professor of surgery at University College; and he has long enjoyed the highest reputation as a teacher of physiology, possessing remarkable powers of clear exposition and graphic illustration. We have rarely the pleasure of being able to recommend a text-book so unreservedly as this.—British Med. Journal, Jan. 23, 1868.

CARPENTER (WILLIAM B.), M. D., F. R. S.,
Examiner in Physiology and Comparative Anatomy in the University of London.

PRINCIPLES OF HUMAN PHYSIOLOGY; with their chief applications to Psychology, Pathology, Therapeutics, Hygiene and Forensic Medicine.

A new American from the last and revised London edition. With nearly three hundred illustrations. Edited, with additions, by FRANCIS GURNEY SMITH, M. D., Professor of the Institutes of Medicine in the University of Pennsylvania, &c. In one very large and beautiful octavo volume, of about 900 large pages, handsomely printed; cloth, $5 50; leather, raised bands, $6 50.

With Dr. Smith, we confidently believe "that the present will more than sustain the enviable reputation already attained by former editions, of being one of the fullest and most complete treatises on the subject in the English language." We know of none from the pages of which a satisfactory knowledge of the physiology of the human organism can be as well obtained, none better adapted for the use of such as take up the study of physiology in its reference to the institutes and practice of medicine.—Am. Journ. Med. Sciences.

We doubt not it is destined to retain a strong hold on public favor, and remain the favorite text-book in our colleges.—Virginia Medical Journal.

The above is the title of what is emphatically the great work on physiology; and we are conscious that it would be a useless effort to attempt to add anything to the reputation of this invaluable work, and can only say to all with whom our opinion has any influence, that it is our authority.—Atlanta Med. Journal.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

PRINCIPLES OF COMPARATIVE PHYSIOLOGY. New American, from the Fourth and Revised London Edition.

In one large and handsome octavo volume, with over three hundred beautiful illustrations. Pp. 752. Cloth, $5 00.

As a complete and condensed treatise on its extended and important subject, this work becomes a necessity to students of natural science, while the very low price at which it is offered places it within the reach of all.

KIRKES (WILLIAM SENHOUSE), M. D.

A MANUAL OF PHYSIOLOGY. Edited by W. MORRANT BAKER,

M. D., F. R. C. S. A new American from the eighth and improved London edition. With about two hundred and fifty illustrations. In one large and handsome royal 12mo. volume. Cloth, $3 25; leather, $3 75. (Lately Issued.)

Kirk's Physiology has long been known as a concise and exceedingly convenient text-book, presenting within a narrow compass all that is important for the student. The rapidity with which successive editions have followed each other in England has enabled the editor to keep it thoroughly on a level with the changes and new discoveries made in the science, and the eighth edition, of which the present is a reprint, has appeared so recently that it may be regarded as the latest accessible exposition of the subject.

On the whole, there is very little in the book which either the student or practitioner will not find of practical value and consistent with our present knowledge of this rapidly changing science; and we have no hesitation in expressing our opinion that this eighth edition is one of the best handbooks on physiology which we have in our language.—N. Y. Med. Record, April 15, 1873.

This volume might well be used to replace many of the physiological text-books in use in this country. It represents more accurately than the works of Dalton or Flint, the present state of our knowledge of most physiological questions, while it is much less bulky and far more readable than the larger text-books of Carpenter or Marshall. The book is admirably adapted to be placed in the hands of students.—Boston Med. and Surg. Journ., April 10, 1873.

In its enlarged form it is, in our opinion, still the best book on physiology, most useful to the student.—Phila. Med. Times, Aug. 30, 1873.

This is undoubtedly the best work for students of physiology extant.—Cincinnati Med. News, Sept. '73.

It more nearly represents the present condition of physiology than any other text-book on the subject.—Detroit Rev. of Med. Pharm., Nov. 1873.

DALTON (J. C.), M. D.,

Professor of Physiology in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, &c.

A TREATISE ON HUMAN PHYSIOLOGY. Designed for the use of Students and Practitioners of Medicine. Fifth edition, revised, with nearly three hundred illustrations on wood. In one very beautiful octavo volume, of over 700 pages, cloth, $5 25; leather, $6 25.

Preface to the Fifth Edition.

In preparing the present edition of this work, the general plan and arrangement of the previous editions have been retained, so far as they have been found useful and adapted to the purposes of a text-book for students of medicine. The incessant advance of all the natural and physical sciences, never more active than within the last five years, has furnished many valuable aids to the special investigations of the physiologist; and the progress of physiological research, during the same period, has required a careful revision of the entire work, and the modification or rearrangement of many of its parts. At this day, nothing is regarded as of any value in natural science which is not based upon direct and intelligible observation or experiment; and, accordingly, the discussion of doubtful or theoretical questions has been avoided, as a general rule, in the present volume, while new facts, from whatever source, if fully established, have been added and incorporated with the results of previous investigation. A number of new illustrations have been introduced, and a few of the older ones, which seemed to be no longer useful, have been omitted. In all the changes and additions thus made, it has been the aim of the writer to make the book, in its present form, a faithful exponent of the actual conditions of physiological science.

NEW YORK, October, 1871.

In this, the standard text-book on Physiology, all that is needed to maintain the favor with which it is regarded by the profession, is the author's assurance that it has been thoroughly revised and brought up to a level with the advanced science of the day. To accomplish this has required some enlargement of the work, but no advance has been made in the price.

The fifth edition of this truly valuable work on Human Physiology comes to us with many valuable improvements and additions. As a text-book of physiology the work of Prof. Dalton has long been well known as one of the best which could be placed in the hands of student or practitioner. Prof. Dalton has, in the several editions of his work heretofore published, labored to keep step with the advancement in science, and the last edition shows by its improvements on former ones that he is determined to maintain the high standard of his work. We predict for the present edition increased favor, though this work has long been the favorite standard.—Buffalo Med. and Surg. Journal, April, 1872.

An extended notice of a work so generally and favorably known as this is unnecessary. It is justly regarded as one of the most valuable text-books on the subject in the English language.—St. Louis Med. Archives, May, 1872.

We know no treatise in physiology so clear, complete, well assimilated, and perfectly digested, as Dalton's. He never writes cloudily or dubiously, or in mere quotation. He assimilates all his material, and from it constructs a homogeneous transparent argument, which is always honest and well informed, and hides neither truth, ignorance, nor doubt, so far as either belongs to the subject in hand.—Brit. Med. Journal, March 23, 1872.

Dr. Dalton's treatise is well known, and by many highly esteemed in this country. It is, indeed, a good elementary treatise on the subject it professes to teach, and may safely be put into the hands of English students. It has one great merit—it is clear, and, on the whole, admirably illustrated. The part we have always esteemed most highly is that relating to Embryology. The diagrams given of the various stages of development give a clearer view of the subject than do those in general use in this country; and the text may be said to be, upon the whole, equally clear.—London Med. Times and Gazette, March 23, 1872.

Dalton's Physiology is already, and deservedly, the favorite text-book of the majority of American medical students. Treating a most interesting department of science in his own peculiarly lively and fascinating style, Dr. Dalton carries his reader along without effort, and at the same time impresses upon his mind the truths taught much more successfully than if they were buried beneath a multitude of words.—Kansas City Med. Journal, April, 1872.

Professor Dalton is regarded justly as the authority in this country on physiological subjects, and the fifth edition of his valuable work fully justifies the exalted opinion the medical world has of his labors. This last edition is greatly enlarged.—Virginia Clinical Record, April, 1872.

DUNGLISON (ROBLEY), M. D.,

Professor of Institutes of Medicine in Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia.

HUMAN PHYSIOLOGY. Eighth edition. Thoroughly revised and extensively modified and enlarged, with five hundred and thirty-two illustrations. In two large and handsomely printed octavo volumes of about 1500 pages, cloth, $7 00.

LEHMANN (C. G.).

PHYSIOLOGICAL CHEMISTRY. Translated from the second edition by GEORGE E. DAY, M. D., F. R. S., &c., edited by R. E. ROGERS, M. D., Professor of Chemistry in the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, with illustrations selected from Funke's Atlas of Physiological Chemistry, and an Appendix of plates. Complete in two large and handsome octavo volumes, containing 1200 pages, with nearly two hundred illustrations, cloth, $6 00.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

MANUAL OF CHEMICAL PHYSIOLOGY. Translated from the German, with Notes and Additions, by J. CHESTON MORRIS, M. D., with an Introductory Essay on Vital Force, by Professor SAMUEL JACKSON, M. D., of the University of Pennsylvania. With illustrations on wood. In one very handsome octavo volume of 336 pages, cloth, $2 25.

ATTFIELD (JOHN), Ph. D.,Professor of Practical Chemistry to the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, &c.

CHEMISTRY, GENERAL, MEDICAL, AND PHARMACEUTICAL; including the Chemistry of the U. S. Pharmacopœia. A Manual of the General Principles of the Science, and their Application to Medicine and Pharmacy. Fifth Edition, revised by the author. In one handsome royal 12mo. volume; cloth, $2 75; leather, $3 25. (Lately Issued.)

No other American publication with which we are acquainted covers the same ground, or does it so well. In addition to an admirable exposé of the facts and principles of general elementary chemistry, the author has presented us with a condensed mass of practical matter, just such as the medical student and practitioner needs.—Cincinnati Lancet, Mar. 1874.

We commend the work heartily as one of the best text-books extant for the medical student.—Detroit Rev. of Med. and Pharm., Feb. 1872.

The best work of the kind in the English language.—N. Y. Psychological Journal, Jan. 1872.

The work is constructed with direct reference to the wants of medical and pharmaceutical students; and, although an English work, the points of difference between the British and United States Pharmacopœias are indicated, making it as useful here as in England. Altogether, the book is one we can heartily recommend to practitioners as well as students.—N. Y. Med. Journal, Dec. 1871.

It differs from other text-books in the following particulars: first, in the exclusion of matter relating to compounds which, at present, are only of interest to the scientific chemist; secondly, in containing the chemistry of every substance recognized officially or in general, as a remedial agent. It will be found a most valuable book for pupils, assistants, and others engaged in medicine and pharmacy, and we heartily commend it to our readers.—Canada Lancet, Oct. 1871.

When the original English edition of this work was published, we had occasion to express our high appreciation of its worth, and also to review, in considerable detail, the main features of the book. As the arrangement of subjects, and the main part of the text of the present edition are similar to the former publication, it will be needless for us to go over the ground a second time; we may, however, call attention to a marked advantage possessed by the American work—we allude to the introduction of the chemistry of the preparations of the United States Pharmacopœia, as well as that relating to the British authority.—Canadian Pharmaceutical Journal, Nov. 1871.

Chemistry has borne the name of being a hard subject to master by the student of medicine, and chiefly because so much of it consists of compounds only of interest to the scientific chemist; in this work such portions are modified or altogether left out, and in the arrangement of the subject-matter of the work, practical utility is sought after, and we think fully attained. We commend it for its clearness and order to both teacher and pupil.—Oregon Med. and Surg. Reporter, Oct. 1871.

FOWNES (GEORGE), Ph. D.

A MANUAL OF ELEMENTARY CHEMISTRY; Theoretical and

Practical. With one hundred and ninety-seven illustrations. A new American, from the tenth and revised London edition. Edited by ROBERT BRIDGES, M. D. In one large royal 12mo. volume, of about 850 pp., cloth, $2 75; leather, $3 25. (Lately Issued.)

This work is so well known that it seems almost superfluous for us to speak about it. It has been a favorite text-book with medical students for years, and its popularity has in no respect diminished. Whenever we have been consulted by medical students, as has frequently occurred, what treatise on chemistry they should procure, we have always recommended Fownes', for we regarded it as the best. There is no work that combines so many excellences. It is of convenient size, not prolix, of plain perspicuous diction, contains all the most recent discoveries, and is of moderate price.—Cincinnati Med. Repertory, Aug. 1869.

Large additions have been made, especially in the department of organic chemistry, and we know of no other work that has greater claims on the physician, pharmacist, or student, than this. We cheerfully recommend it as the best text-book on elementary chemistry, and bespeak for it the careful attention of students of pharmacy.—Chicago Pharmacist, Aug. 1869.

Here is a new edition which has been long watched for by eager teachers of chemistry. In its new garb, and under the editorship of Mr. Watts, it has resumed its old place as the most successful of text-books.—Indian Medical Gazette, Jan. 1, 1869.

It will continue, as heretofore, to hold the first rank as a text-book for students of medicine.—Chicago Med. Examiner, Aug. 1869.

ODLING (WILLIAM),Lecturer on Chemistry at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, &c.

A COURSE OF PRACTICAL CHEMISTRY, arranged for the Use of Medical Students. With Illustrations. From the Fourth and Revised London Edition. In one neat royal 12mo. volume, cloth, $2.

GALLOWAY (ROBERT), F.C.S.,Prof. of Applied Chemistry in the Royal College of Science for Ireland, &c.

A MANUAL OF QUALITATIVE ANALYSIS. From the Fifth London Edition. In one neat royal 12mo. volume, with illustrations; cloth, $2 50. (Just Issued.)

The success which has carried this work through repeated editions in England, and its adoption as a text-book in several of the leading institutions in this country, show that the author has succeeded in the endeavor to produce a sound practical manual and book of reference for the chemical student.

Prof. Galloway's books are deservedly in high esteem, and this American reprint of the fifth edition (1869) of his Manual of Qualitative Analysis, will be acceptable to many American students to whom the English edition is not accessible.—Am. Jour. of Science and Arts, Sept. 1872.

We regard this volume as a valuable addition to the chemical text-books, and as particularly calculated to instruct the student in analytical researches of the inorganic compounds, the important vegetable acids, and of compounds and various secretions and excretions of animal origin.—Am. Jour. of Pharm., Sept. 1872.

BLOXAM (C. L.),Professor of Chemistry in King's College, London.

CHEMISTRY, INORGANIC AND ORGANIC. From the Second London Edition. In one very handsome octavo volume, of 700 pages, with about 300 illustrations. Cloth, $4 00; leather, $5 00. (Lately Issued.)

It has been the author's endeavor to produce a Treatise on Chemistry sufficiently comprehensive for those studying the science as a branch of general education, and one which a student may use with advantage in pursuing his chemical studies at one of the colleges or medical schools. The special attention devoted to Metallurgy and some other branches of Applied Chemistry renders the work especially useful to those who are being educated for employment in manufacture.

We have in this work a complete and most excellent text-book for the use of schools, and can heartily recommend it as such.—Boston Med. and Surg. Journ., May 28, 1874.

Of all the numerous works upon elementary chemistry that have been published within the last few years, we can point to none that, in fulness, accuracy, and simplicity, can surpass this; while, in the number and detailed descriptions of experiments, as also in the profuseness of its illustrations, we believe it stands above any similar work published in this country. . . . The statements made are clear and concise, and every step proved by an abundance of experiments, which excite our admiration as much by their simplicity as by their direct conclusiveness.—Chicago Med. Examiner, Nov. 15, 1873.

It is seldom that in the same compass so complete and interesting a compendium of the leading facts of chemistry is offered.—Druggists' Circular, Nov. '73.

The above is the title of a work which we can most conscientiously recommend to students of chemistry. It is as easy as a work on chemistry could be made, at the same time that it presents a full account of that science as it now stands. We have spoken of the work as admirably adapted to the wants of students; it is quite as well suited to the requirements of practitioners who wish to review their chemistry, or have occasion to refresh their memories on any point relating to it. In a word, it is a book to be read by all who wish to know what is the chemistry of the present day.—American Practitioner, Nov. 1873.

Among the various works upon general chemistry issued, we know of none that will supply the average wants of the student or teacher better than this.—Indiana Journ. of Med., Nov. 1873.

We cordially welcome this American reprint of a work which has already won for itself so substantial a reputation in England. Professor Bloxam has condensed into a wonderfully small compass all the important principles and facts of chemical science. Thoroughly imbued with an enthusiastic love for the science he expounds, he has stripped it of all needless technicalities, and rounded out its hard outlines by a fulness of illustration that cannot fail to attract and delight the student. The details of illustrative experiment have been worked up with especial care, and many of the experiments described are both new and striking.—Detroit Rev. of Med. and Pharm., Nov. 1873.

One of the best text-books of chemistry yet published.—Chicago Med. Journ., Nov. 1873.

This is an excellent work, well adapted for the beginner and the advanced student of chemistry.—Am. Journ. of Pharm., Nov. 1873.

Probably the most valuable, and at the same time practical, text-book on general chemistry extant in our language.—Kansas City Med. Journ., Dec. 1873.

Prof. Bloxam possesses pre-eminently the inestimable gift of perspicuity. It is a pleasure to read his books, for he is capable of making very plain what other authors frequently have left very obscure.—Va. Clinical Record, Nov. 1873.

It would be difficult for a practical chemist and teacher to find any material fault with this most admirable treatise. The author has given us almost a cyclopedia within the limits of a convenient volume, and has done so without penning the useless paragraphs too commonly making up a great part of the bulk of many cumbersome works. The progressive scientist is not disappointed when he looks for the record of new and valuable processes and discoveries, while the cautious conservative does not find its pages monopolized by uncertain theories and speculations. A peculiar point of excellence is the crystallized form of expression in which great truths are expressed in very short paragraphs. One is surprised at the brief space allotted to an important topic, and yet, after reading it, he feels that little, if any more, should have been said. Altogether, it is seldom you see a text-book so nearly faultless.—Cincinnati Lancet, Nov. 1873.

Professor Bloxam has given us a most excellent and useful practical treatise. His 666 pages are crowded with facts and experiments, nearly all well chosen, and many quite new, even to scientific men. . . . It is astonishing how much information he often conveys in a few paragraphs. We might quote fifty instances of this.—Chemical News.

WÖHLER AND FITTIG.

OUTLINES OF ORGANIC CHEMISTRY. Translated with Additions from the Eighth German Edition. By IRA REMSEN, M.D., Ph.D., Professor of Chemistry and Physics in Williams College, Mass. In one handsome volume, royal 12mo. of 550 pp., cloth, $3.

As the numerous editions of the original attest, this work is the leading text-book and standard authority throughout Germany on its important and intricate subject—a position won for it by the clearness and conciseness which are its distinguishing characteristics. The translation has been executed with the approbation of Profs. Wöhler and Fittig, and numerous additions and alterations have been introduced, so as to render it in every respect on a level with the most advanced condition of the science.

BOWMAN (JOHN E.), M. D.

PRACTICAL HANDBOOK OF MEDICAL CHEMISTRY. Edited by C. L. BLOXAM, Professor of Practical Chemistry in King's College, London. Sixth American, from the fourth and revised English Edition. In one neat volume, royal 12mo., pp. 351, with numerous illustrations, cloth, $2 25.

very handsome octavo volumes, with 500 wood engravings, cloth, $6 00.

PARRISH (EDWARD),Late Professor of Materia Medica in the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy.

A TREATISE ON PHARMACY. Designed as a Text-Book for the Student, and as a Guide for the Physician and Pharmacist. With many Formulæ and Prescriptions. Fourth Edition, thoroughly revised, by THOMAS S. WIEGAND. In one handsome octavo volume of 977 pages, with 280 illustrations; cloth, $5 50; leather, $6 50. (Just Issued.)

The delay in the appearance of the new U. S. Pharmacopœia, and the sudden death of the author, have postponed the preparation of this new edition beyond the period expected. The notes and memoranda left by Mr. Parrish have been placed in the hands of the editor, Mr. Wiegand, who has labored assiduously to embody in the work all the improvements of pharmaceutical science which have been introduced during the last ten years. It is therefore hoped that the new edition will fully maintain the reputation which the volume has heretofore enjoyed as a standard text-book and work of reference for all engaged in the preparation and dispensing of medicines.

Of Dr. Parrish's great work on pharmacy it only remains to be said that the editor has accomplished his work so well as to maintain, in this fourth edition, the high standard of excellence which it had attained in previous editions, under the editorship of its accomplished author. This has not been accomplished without much labor, and many additions and improvements, involving changes in the arrangement of the several parts of the work, and the addition of much new matter. With the modifications thus effected it constitutes, as now presented, a compendium of the science and art indispensable to the pharmacist, and of the utmost value to every practitioner of medicine desirous of familiarizing himself with the pharmaceutical preparation of the articles which he prescribes for his patients.—Chicago Med. Journ., July, 1874.

The work is eminently practical, and has the rare merit of being readable and interesting, while it preserves a strictly scientific character. The whole work reflects the greatest credit on author, editor, and publisher. It will convey some idea of the liberality which has been bestowed upon its production when we mention that there are no less than 280 carefully executed illustrations. In conclusion, we heartily recommend the work, not only to pharmacists, but also to the multitude of medical practitioners who are obliged to compound their own medicines. It will ever hold an honored place on our own bookshelves.—Dublin Med. Press and Circular, Aug. 12, 1874.

We expressed our opinion of a former edition in terms of unqualified praise, and we are in no mood to detract from that opinion in reference to the present edition, the preparation of which has fallen into competent hands. It is a book with which no pharmacist can dispense, and from which no physician can fail to derive much information of value to him in practice.—Pacific Med. and Surg. Journ., June, '74.

With these few remarks we heartily commend the work, and have no doubt that it will maintain its old reputation as a text-book for the student, and a work of reference for the more experienced physician and pharmacist.—Chicago Med. Examiner, June 15, 1874.

Perhaps one, if not the most important book upon pharmacy which has appeared in the English language has emanated from the transatlantic press. "Parrish's Pharmacy" is a well-known work on this side of the water, and the fact shows us that a really useful work never becomes merely local in its fame. Thanks to the judicious editing of Mr. Wiegand, the posthumous edition of "Parrish" has been saved to the public with all the mature experience of its author, and perhaps none the worse for a dash of new blood.—London Pharm. Journal, Oct. 17, 1874.

STILLÉ (ALFRED), M.D.,Professor of Theory and Practice of Medicine in the University of Penna.

THERAPEUTICS AND MATERIA MEDICA; a Systematic Treatise on the Action and Uses of Medicinal Agents, including their Description and History. Fourth edit., revised and enlarged. In two large and handsome 8vo. vols. of about 2000 pages. Cloth, $10; leather, $12. (Now Ready.)

The care bestowed by the author on the revision of this edition has kept the work out of the market for nearly two years, and has increased its size about two hundred and fifty pages. Notwithstanding this enlargement, the price has been kept at the former very moderate rate. A few notices of former editions are subjoined.

Dr. Stillé's splendid work on therapeutics and materia medica.—London Med. Times, April 8, 1865.

Dr. Stillé stands to-day one of the best and most honored representatives at home and abroad, of American medicine; and these volumes, a library in themselves, a treasure-house for every studious physician, assure his fame even had he done nothing more.—The Western Journal of Medicine, Dec. 1865.

We regard this work as the best one on Materia Medica in the English language, and as such it deserves the favor it has received.—Am. Journ. Medical Sciences, July 1865.

We need not dwell on the merits of the third edition of this magnificently conceived work. It is the work on Materia Medica, in which Therapeutics are primarily considered—the mere natural history of drugs being briefly disposed of. To medical practitioners this is a very valuable conception. It is wonderful how much of the riches of the literature of Materia Medica has been condensed into this book. The references alone would make it worth possessing. But it is not a mere compilation. The writer exercises a good judgment of his own on the great doctrines and points of Therapeutics. For purposes of practice, Stillé's book is almost unique as a repository of information, empirical and scientific, on the actions and uses of medicines.—London Lancet, Oct. 31, 1865.

Through the former editions, the professional world is well acquainted with this work. At home and abroad its reputation as a standard treatise on Materia Medica is securely established. It is second to no work on the subject in the English tongue, and, indeed, is decidedly superior, in some respects, to any other.—Pacific Med. and Surg. Journal, July, 1868.

Stillé's Therapeutics is incomparably the best work on the subject.—N. Y. Med. Gazette, Sept. 26, 1868.

Dr. Stillé's work is becoming the best known of any of our treatises on Materia Medica. . . . One of the most valuable works in the language on the subjects of which it treats.—N. Y. Med. Journal, Oct. 1868.

The rapid exhaustion of two editions of Prof. Stillé's scholarly work, and the consequent necessity for a third edition, is sufficient evidence of the high estimate placed upon it by the profession. It is no exaggeration to say that there is no superior work upon the subject in the English language. The present edition is fully up to the most recent advance in the science and art of therapeutics.—Leavenworth Medical Herald, Aug. 1865.

The work of Prof. Stillé has rapidly taken a high place in professional esteem, and to say that a third edition is demanded and now appears before us, sufficiently attests the firm position this treatise has made for itself. As a work of great research, and scholarship, it is safe to say we have nothing superior. It is exceedingly full, and the busy practitioner will find ample suggestions upon almost every important point of therapeutics.—Cincinnati Lancet, Aug. 1868.

GRIFFITH (ROBERT E.), M.D.

A UNIVERSAL FORMULARY, Containing the Methods of Preparing and Administering Official and other Medicines. The whole adapted to Physicians and Pharmacutists. Third edition, thoroughly revised, with numerous additions, by JOHN M. MAISCH, Professor of Materia Medica in the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy. In one large and handsome octavo volume of about 800 pages, cloth, $4 50; leather, $5 50. (Just Issued)

This work has long been known for the vast amount of information which it presents in a condensed form, arranged for easy reference. The new edition has received the most careful revision at the competent hands of Professor Maisch, who has brought the whole up to the standard of the most recent authorities. More than eighty new headings of remedies have been introduced, the entire work has been thoroughly remodelled, and whatever has seemed to be obsolete has been omitted. As a comparative view of the United States, the British, the German, and the French Pharmacopœias, together with an immense amount of unofficial formulas, it affords to the practitioner and pharmacist an aid in their daily avocations not to be found elsewhere, while three indexes, one of "Diseases and their Remedies," one of Pharmaceutical Names, and a General Index, afford an easy key to the alphabetical arrangement adopted in the text.

The young practitioner will find the work invaluable in suggesting eligible modes of administering many remedies.—Am. Journ. of Pharm., Feb. 1874.

Our copy of Griffith's Formulary, after long use, first in the dispensing shop, and afterwards in our medical practice, had gradually fallen behind in the onward march of materia medica, pharmacy, and therapeutics, until we had ceased to consult it as a daily book of reference. So completely has Prof. Maisch reformed, remodelled, and rejuvenated it in the new edition, we shall gladly welcome it back to our table again beside Dunglison, Webster, and Wood & Bache. The publisher could not have been more fortunate in the selection of an editor. Prof. Maisch is eminently the man for the work, and he has done it thoroughly and ably. To enumerate the alterations, amendments, and additions would be an endless task; everywhere we are greeted with the evidences of his labor. Following the Formulary, is an addendum of useful Recipes, Dietetic Preparations, List of Incompatibles, Posological table, table of Pharmaceutical Names, Official Preparations and Directions, Poisons, Antidotes and Treatment, and copious indices, which afford ready access to all parts of the work. We unhesitatingly commend the book as being the best of its kind, within our knowledge.—Atlanta Med. and Surg. Journ., Feb. 1874.

To the druggist a good formulary is simply indispensable, and perhaps no formulary has been more extensively used than the well-known work before us. Many physicians have to officiate, also, as druggists. This is true especially of the country physician, and a work which shall teach him the means by which to administer or combine his remedies in the most efficacious and pleasant manner, will always hold its place upon his shelf. A formulary of this kind is of benefit also to the city physician in largest practice.—Cincinnati Clinic, Feb. 21, 1874.

The Formulary has already proved itself acceptable to the medical profession, and we do not hesitate to say that the third edition is much improved, and of greater practical value, in consequence of the careful revision of Prof. Maisch.—Chicago Med. Examiner, March 15, 1874.

A more complete formulary than it is in its present form the pharmacist or physician could hardly desire. To the first some such work is indispensable, and it is hardly less essential to the practitioner who compounds his own medicines. Much of what is contained in the introduction ought to be committed to memory by every student of medicine. As a help to physicians it will be found invaluable, and doubtless will make its way into libraries not already supplied with a standard work of the kind.—The American Practitioner, Louisville, July, 74.

FENWICK (SAMUEL), M.D.,Assistant Physician to the London Hospital.

THE STUDENT'S GUIDE TO MEDICAL DIAGNOSIS. From the Third Revised and Enlarged English Edition. With eighty-four illustrations on wood. In one very handsome volume, royal 12mo., cloth, $2 25. (Just Issued.)

The very great success which this work has obtained in England, shows that it has supplied an admitted want among elementary books for the guidance of students and junior practitioners. Taking up in order each portion of the body or class of disease, the author has endeavored to present in simple language the value of symptoms, so as to lead the student to a correct appreciation of the pathological changes indicated by them. The latest investigations have been carefully introduced into the present edition, so that it may fairly be considered as on a level with the most advanced condition of medical science.

Of the many guide-books on medical diagnosis, claimed to be written for the special instruction of students, this is the best. The author is evidently a well-read and accomplished physician, and he knows how to teach practical medicine. The charm of simplicity is not the least interesting feature in the manner in which Dr. Fenwick conveys instruction. There are few books of this size on practical medicine that contain so much and convey it so well as the volume before us. It is a book we can sincerely recommend to the student for direct instruction, and to the practitioner as a ready and useful aid to his memory.—Am. Journ. of Syphilography, Jan. 1874.

It covers the ground of medical diagnosis in a concise, practical manner, well calculated to assist the student in forming a correct, thorough, and systematic method of examination and diagnosis of disease. The illustrations are numerous, and finely executed. Those illustrative of the microscopic appearance of morbid tissue, &c., are especially clear and distinct.—Chicago Med. Examiner, Nov. 1873.

So far superior to any offered to students that the colleges of this country should recommend it to their respective classes.—N. O. Med. and Surg. Journ., March, 1874.

This little book ought to be in the possession of every medical student.—Boston Medical and Surg. Journ., Jan. 15, 1874.

PATHOLOGY AND MORBID ANATOMY. With numerous Illustrations on Wood. In one very handsome octavo volume of over 250 pages, cloth, $2 50. (Lately Published.)

We have been very much pleased by our perusal of this little volume. It is the only one of the kind with which we are acquainted, and practitioners as well as students will find it a very useful guide; for the information is up to the day, well and compactly arranged, without being at all scanty.—London Lancet, Oct. 7, 1871.

It embodies in a comparatively small space a clear statement of the present state of our knowledge of pathology and morbid anatomy. The author shows that he has been not only a student of the teachings of his confrères in this branch of science, but a practical and conscientious laborer in the post-mortem chamber. The work will prove a useful one to the great mass of students and practitioners whose time for devotion to this class of studies is limited.—Am. Journ. of Syphilography, April, 1872.

Y.A TREATISE ON THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF*MEDICINE; designed for the use of Students and Practitioners of Medicine. Fourth edition, revised and enlarged. In one large and closely printed octavo volume of about 1100 pages; cloth, $6 00; or strongly bound in leather, with raised bands, $7 00. (Just Issued.)

By common consent of the English and American medical press, this work has been assigned to the highest position as a complete and compendious text-book on the most advanced condition of medical science. At the very moderate price at which it is offered it will be found one of the cheapest volumes now before the profession. A few notices of previous editions are subjoined.

Admirable and unequalled.—Western Journal of Medicine, Nov. 1869.

Dr. Flint's work, though claiming no higher title than that of a text-book, is really more. He is a man of large clinical experience, and his book is full of such masterly descriptions of disease as can only be drawn by a man intimately acquainted with their various forms. It is not so long since we had the pleasure of reviewing his first edition, and we recognize a great improvement, especially in the general part of the work. It is a work which we can cordially recommend to our readers as fully abreast of the science of the day.—Edinburgh Med. Journal, Oct. '69.

One of the best works of the kind for the practitioner, and the most convenient of all for the student.—Am. Journ. Med. Sciences, Jan. 1869.

This work, which stands pre-eminently as the advance standard of medical science up to the present time in the practice of medicine, has for its author one who is well and widely known as one of the leading practitioners of this continent. In fact, it is seldom that any work is ever issued from the press more deserving of universal recommendation.—Dominion Med. Journal, May, 1869.

The third edition of this most excellent book scarcely needs any commendation from us. The volume, as it stands now, is really a marvel: first of all, it is excellently printed and bound—and we encounter that luxury of America, the ready-cut pages, which the Yankees are 'cute enough to insist upon—nor are these by any means trifles; but the contents of the book are astonishing. Not only is it wonderful that any one man can have grasped in his mind the whole scope of medicine with that vigor which Dr. Flint shows, but the condensed yet clear way in which this is done is a perfect literary triumph. Dr. Flint is pre-eminently one of the strong men, whose right to do this kind of thing is well admitted; and we say no more than the truth when we affirm that he is very nearly the only living man that could do it with such results as the volume before us.—The London Practitioner, March, 1869.

This is in some respects the best text-book of medicine in our language, and it is highly appreciated on the other side of the Atlantic, inasmuch as the first edition was exhausted in a few months. The second edition was little more than a reprint, but the present has, as the author says, been thoroughly revised. Much valuable matter has been added, and by making the type smaller, the bulk of the volume is not much increased. The weak point in many American works is pathology, but Dr. Flint has taken peculiar pains on this point, greatly to the value of the book.—London Med. Times and Gazette, Feb. 6, 1869.

WATSON (THOMAS), M. D., &c.LECTURES ON THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF*PHYSIC. Delivered at King's College, London. A new American, from the Fifth revised and enlarged English edition. Edited, with additions, and several hundred illustrations, by HENRY HARTSHORNE, M. D., Professor of Hygiene in the University of Pennsylvania. In two large and handsome 8vo. vols. Cloth, $9 00; leather, $11 00. (Lately Published.)

It is a subject for congratulation and for thankfulness that Sir Thomas Watson, during a period of comparative leisure, after a long, laborious, and most honorable professional career, while retaining full possession of his high mental faculties, should have employed the opportunity to submit his Lectures to a more thorough revision than was possible during the earlier and busier period of his life. Carefully passing in review some of the most intricate and important pathological and practical questions, the results of his clear insight and his calm judgment are now recorded for the benefit of mankind, in language which, for precision, vigor, and classical elegance, has rarely been equalled, and never surpassed. The revision has evidently been most carefully done, and the results appear in almost every page.—Brit. Med. Journ., Oct. 14, 1871.

The lectures are so well known and so justly appreciated, that it is scarcely necessary to do more than call attention to the special advantages of the last over previous editions. The author's rare combination of great scientific attainments combined with wonderful forensic eloquence has exerted extraordinary influence over the last two generations of physicians. His clinical descriptions of most diseases have never been equalled; and on this score at least his work will live long in the future. The work will be sought by all who appreciate a great book.—Amer. Journ. of Syphilography, July, 1872.

We are exceedingly gratified at the reception of this new edition of Watson, pre-eminently the prince of English authors, on "Practice." We, who read the first edition shall never forget the great pleasure and profit we derived from its graphic delineations of disease, its vigorous style and splendid English. Maturity of years, extensive observation, profound research, and yet continuous enthusiasm, have combined to give us in this latest edition a model of professional excellence in teaching with rare beauty in the mode of communication. But this classic needs no eulogium of ours.—Chicago Med. Journ., July, 1872.

ESSENTIALS OF THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF MEDICINE. A handy-book for Students and Practitioners. Fourth edition, revised and improved. With about one hundred illustrations. In one handsome royal 12mo volume, of about 550 pages, cloth, $2 63; half bound, $2 88. (Just Ready.)

The thorough manner in which the author has labored to fully represent in this favorite handbook the most advanced condition of practical medicine is shown by the fact that the present edition contains more than 250 additions, representing the investigations of 172 authors not referred to in previous editions. Notwithstanding an enlargement of the page, the size has been increased by sixty pages. A number of illustrations have been introduced which it is hoped will facilitate the comprehension of details by the reader, and no effort has been spared to make the volume worthy a continuance of the very great favor with which it has hitherto been received.

The work is brought fully up with all the recent advances in medicine, is admirably condensed, and yet sufficiently explicit for all the purposes intended, thus making it by far the best work of its character ever published.—Cincinnati Clinic, Oct. 24, 1874.

We have already had occasion to notice the previous editions of this work. It is excellent of its kind. The author has given a very careful revision, in view of the rapid progress of medical science.—N. Y. Med. Journ., Nov. 1874.

The present edition of Dr. Hartshorne's work is a very decided improvement upon the former ones in many particulars, and is fully up to the most advanced state of the science.—Leavenworth Medical Herald, Nov. 1874.

Without doubt the best book of the kind published in the English language.—St. Louis Med. and Surg. Journ., Nov. 1874.

As a handbook, which clearly sets forth the ESSENTIALS of the PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF MEDICINE, we do not know of its equal.—Va. Med. Monthly.

The aims of this handbook are purely practical, and therefore it has not been thought right to increase its size by the addition of the chemical, botanical, and industrial learning which rapidly collects round the nucleus of every article interesting as an eatable. Space has been thus gained for a full discussion of many matters connecting food and drink with the daily current of social life, which the position of the author as a practising physician has led him to believe highly important to the present and future of our race.—Preface.

FLINT (AUSTIN), M.D.,*Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine in Bellevue Hospital Med. College, N. Y.A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE DIAGNOSIS, PATHOLOGY, AND TREATMENT OF DISEASES OF THE HEART. Second revised and enlarged edition. In one octavo volume of 550 pages, with a plate, cloth, $4.

Dr. Flint chose a difficult subject for his researches, and has shown remarkable powers of observation and reflection, as well as great industry, in his treatment of it. His book must be considered the fullest and clearest practical treatise on those subjects, and should be in the hands of all practitioners and students. It is a credit to American medical literature. —Amer. Journ. of the Med. Sciences, July, 1860.

We question the fact of any recent American author in our profession being more extensively known, or more deservedly esteemed in this country than Dr. Flint. We willingly acknowledge his success, more particularly in the volume on diseases of the heart, in making an extended personal clinical study available for purposes of illustration, in connection with cases which have been reported by other trustworthy observers. —Brit. and For. Med.-Chirurg. Review.

In regard to the merits of the work, we have no hesitation in pronouncing it full, accurate, and judicious. Considering the present state of science, such a work was much needed. It should be in the hands of every practitioner. —Chicago Med. Journ.

With more than pleasure do we hail the advent of this work, for it fills a wide gap on the list of textbooks for our schools, and is, for the practitioner, the most valuable practical work of its kind. —N. O. Med. News.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE PHYSICAL EXPLORATION OF THE CHEST AND THE DIAGNOSIS OF DISEASES AFFECTING THE RESPIRATORY ORGANS. Second and revised edition. In one handsome octavo volume of 595 pages, cloth, $4 50.

Dr. Flint's treatise is one of the most trustworthy guides which we can consult. The style is clear and distinct, and is also concise, being free from that tendency to over-refinement and unnecessary minuteness which characterizes many works on the same subject. —Dublin Medical Press, Feb. 6, 1867.

The chapter on Phthisis is replete with interest; and his remarks on the diagnosis, especially in the early stages, are remarkable for their acumen and great practical value. Dr. Flint's style is clear and elegant, and the tone of freshness and originality which pervades his whole work lend an additional force to its thoroughly practical character, which cannot fail to obtain for it a place as a standard work on diseases of the respiratory system. —London Lancet, Jan. 19, 1867.

This is an admirable book. Excellent in detail and execution, nothing better could be desired by the practitioner. Dr. Flint enriches his subject with much solid and not a little original observation. —Ranking's Abstract, Jan. 1867.

He can still speak from a more enormous experience, and a closer study of the morbid processes involved in tuberculosis, than most living men. He owed it to himself, and to the importance of the subject, to embody his views in a separate work, and we are glad that he has accomplished this duty.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON URINARY AND RENAL DISEASES, including Urinary Deposits. Illustrated by numerous cases and engravings. Second American, from the Second Revised and Enlarged London Edition. In one large and handsome octavo volume of 616 pages, with a colored plate; cloth, $4 50. (Lately Published.)

The author has subjected this work to a very thorough revision, and has sought to embody in it the results of the latest experience and investigations. Although every effort has been made to keep it within the limits of its former size, it has been enlarged by a hundred pages, many new wood-cuts have been introduced, and also a colored plate representing the appearance of the different varieties of urine, while the price has been retained at the former very moderate rate.

The plan, it will thus be seen, is very complete, and the manner in which it has been carried out is in the highest degree satisfactory. The characters of the different deposits are very well described, and the microscopic appearances they present are illustrated by numerous well executed engravings. It only remains to us to strongly recommend to our readers Dr. Roberts's work, as containing an admirable résumé of the present state of knowledge of urinary diseases, and as a safe and reliable guide to the clinical observer.—Edin. Med. Jour.

The most complete and practical treatise upon renal diseases we have examined. It is peculiarly adapted to the wants of the majority of American practitioners from its clearness and simple announcement of the facts in relation to diagnosis and treatment of urinary disorders, and contains in condensed form the investigations of Bence Jones, Bird, Beale, Haasall, Prout, and a host of other well-known writers upon this subject. The characters of urine, physiological and pathological, as indicated to the naked eye as well as by microscopical and chemical investigations, are concisely represented both by description and by well executed engravings.—Cincinnati Journ. of Med.

RENAL DISEASES: a Clinical Guide to their Diagnosis and Treatment. With illustrations. In one neat royal 12mo. volume of 304 pages, cloth, $2 00.

The chapters on diagnosis and treatment are very good, and the student and young practitioner will find them full of valuable practical hints. The third part, on the urine, is excellent, and we cordially recommend its perusal. The author has arranged his matter in a somewhat novel, and, we think, useful form. Here everything can be easily found, and, what is more important, easily read, for all the dry details of larger books here acquire a new interest from the author's arrangement. This part of the book is full of good work.—Brit. and For. Medico-Chirurgical Review, July, 1870.

The work is convenient in size, its descriptions of methods and appliances are sufficiently complete for the general practitioner, and the chapters on Electro-physiology and diagnosis are well written and readable. For those who wish a handy-book of directions for the employment of galvanism in medicine, this will serve as a very good and reliable guide.—New Remedies, Oct. 1874.

It is a well written work, and calculated to meet the demands of the busy practitioner. It contains the latest researches in this important branch of medicine.—Peninsular Journ. of Med., Oct. 1874.

Eminently practical in character. It will amply repay any one for a careful perusal.—Leavenworth Med. Herald, Oct. 1874.

This little book is, considering its size, one of the very best of the English treatises on its subject that has come to our notice, possessing, among others, the rare merit of dealing avowedly and actually with principles, mainly, rather than with practical details, thereby supplying a real want, instead of helping merely to flood the literary market. Dr. Lincoln's style is usually remarkably clear, and the whole book is readable and interesting.—Boston Med. and Surg. Journ., July 23, 1874.

We have here in a small compass a great deal of valuable information upon the subject of Medical Electricity.—Canada Med. and Surg. Journ., Nov. 1874.

THE PATHOLOGY AND TREATMENT OF VENEREAL DISEASES. Including the results of recent investigations upon the subject. Third edition, revised and enlarged, with illustrations. In one large and handsome octavo volume of over 700 pages, cloth, $5 00; leather, $6 00.

In preparing this standard work again for the press, the author has subjected it to a very thorough revision. Many portions have been rewritten, and much new matter added, in order to bring it completely on a level with the most advanced condition of syphilography, but by careful compression of the text of previous editions, the work has been increased by only sixty-four pages. The labor thus bestowed upon it, it is hoped, will insure for it a continuance of its position as a complete and trustworthy guide for the practitioner.

It is the most complete book with which we are acquainted in the language. The latest views of the best authorities are put forward, and the information is well arranged—a great point for the student, and still more for the practitioner. The subjects of visceral syphilis, syphilitic affections of the eyes, and the treatment of syphilis by repeated inoculations, are very fully discussed.—London Lancet, Jan. 7, 1871.

Dr. Bumstead's work is already so universally known as the best treatise in the English language on venereal diseases, that it may seem almost superfluous to say more of it than that a new edition has been issued. But the author's industry has rendered this new edition virtually a new work, and so merits as much special commendation as if its predecessors had not been published. As a thoroughly practical book on a class of diseases which form a large share of nearly every physician's practice, the volume before us is by far the best of which we have knowledge.—N. Y. Medical Gazette, Jan. 28, 1871.

It is rare in the history of medicine to find any one book which contains all that a practitioner needs to know; while the possessor of "Bumstead on Venereal" has no occasion to look outside of its covers for anything practical connected with the diagnosis, history, or treatment of these affections.—N. Y. Medical Journal, March, 1871.

CULLERIER (A.), and Surgeon to the Hôpital du Midi.

BUMSTEAD (FREEMAN J.),
Professor of Venereal Diseases in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, N. Y.

AN ATLAS OF VENEREAL DISEASES. Translated and Edited by FREEMAN J. BUMSTEAD. In one large imperial 4to. volume of 328 pages, double-columns, with 26 plates, containing about 150 figures, beautifully colored, many of them the size of life; strongly bound in cloth, $17 00; also, in five parts, stout wrappers for mailing, at $3 per part.

Anticipating a very large sale for this work, it is offered at the very low price of THREE DOLLARS a Part, thus placing it within the reach of all who are interested in this department of practice. Gentlemen desiring early impressions of the plates would do well to order it without delay. A specimen of the plates and text sent free by mail, on receipt of 25 cents.

We wish for once that our province was not restricted to methods of treatment, that we might say something of the exquisite colored plates in this volume.—London Practitioner, May, 1869.

As a whole, it teaches all that can be taught by means of plates and print.—London Lancet, March 18, 1869.

Superior to anything of the kind ever before issued on this continent.—Canada Med. Journal, March, '69.

The practitioner who desires to understand this branch of medicine thoroughly should obtain this, the most complete and best work ever published.—Dominion Med. Journal, May, 1869.

This is a work of master hands on both sides. M. Cullerier is scarcely second to, we think we may truly say is a peer of the illustrious and venerable Ricord, while in this country we do not hesitate to say that Dr. Bumstead, as an authority, is without a rival. Assuring our readers that these illustrations tell the whole history of venereal disease, from its inception to its end, we do not know a single medical work, which for its kind is more necessary for them to have.—California Med. Gazette, March, 1869.

The most splendidly illustrated work in the language, and in our opinion far more useful than the French original.—Am. Journ. Med. Sciences, Jan. '69.

The fifth and concluding number of this magnificent work has reached us, and we have no hesitation in saying that its illustrations surpass those of previous numbers.—Boston Med. and Surg. Journal, Jan. 14, 1869.

Other writers besides M. Cullerier have given us a good account of the diseases of which he treats, but no one has furnished us with such a complete series of illustrations of the venereal diseases. There is, however, an additional interest and value possessed by the volume before us; for it is an American reprint and translation of M. Cullerier's work, with incidental remarks by one of the most eminent American syphilographers, Mr. Bumstead.—Brit. and For. Medico-Chir. Review, July, 1869.

ON SYPHILIS AND LOCAL CONTAGIOUS DISORDERS. In one handsome octavo volume; cloth, $3 25.

Bringing, as it does, the entire literature of the disease down to the present day, and giving with great ability the results of modern research, it is in every respect a most desirable work, and one which should find a place in the library of every surgeon.—California Med. Gazette, June, 1869.

Considering the scope of the book and the careful attention to the manifold aspects and details of its subject, it is wonderfully concise. All these qualities render it an especially valuable book to the beginner, to whom we would most earnestly recommend its study; while it is no less useful to the practitioner.—St. Louis Med. and Surg. Journal, May, 1869.

The most convenient and ready book of reference we have met with.—N. Y. Med. Record, May 1, 1869.

Most admirably arranged for both student and practitioner, no other work on the subject equals it; it is more simple, more easily studied.—Buffalo Med. and Surg. Journal, March, 1869.

In one large octavo volume of over 800 pages, $5.A SERIES OF PLATES ILLUSTRATING "WILSON ON DISEASES OF THE SKIN;" consisting of twenty beautifully executed plates, of which thirteen are exquisitely colored, presenting the Normal Anatomy and Pathology of the Skin, and embracing accurate representations of about one hundred varieties of disease, most of them the size of nature. Price, in extra cloth, $5 50.

Also, the Text and Plates, bound in one handsome volume. Cloth, $10.

No one treating skin diseases should be without a copy of this standard work.—Canada Lancet.We can safely recommend it to the profession as the best work on the subject now in existence in the English language.—Medical Times and Gazette.Mr. Wilson's volume is an excellent digest of the actual amount of knowledge of cutaneous diseases; it includes almost every fact or opinion of importance connected with the anatomy and pathology of the skin.—British and Foreign Medical Review.

Such a work as the one before us is a most capital and acceptable help. Mr. Wilson has long been held as high authority in this department of medicine, and his book on diseases of the skin has long been regarded as one of the best text-books extant on the subject. The present edition is carefully prepared, and brought up in its revision to the present time. In this edition we have also included the beautiful series of plates illustrative of the text, and in the last edition published separately. There are twenty of these plates, nearly all of them colored to nature, and exhibiting with great fidelity the various groups of diseases.—Cincinnati Lancet.BY THE SAME AUTHOR.*THE STUDENT'S BOOK OF CUTANEOUS MEDICINE and DISEASES OF THE SKIN. In one very handsome royal 12mo. volume. $3 50.NELIGAN (J. Fully equal to all the requirements of students and young practitioners.—Dublin Med. Press.

Of the remainder of the work we have nothing beyond unqualified commendation to offer. It is so far the most complete one of its size that has appeared, and for the student there can be none which can compare with it in practical value. All the late discoveries in Dermatology have been duly noticed, and their value justly estimated; in a word, the work is fully up to the times, and is thoroughly stocked with most valuable information.—*New York Med. The diagnosis of eruptive disease, however, under all circumstances, is very difficult. Nevertheless, Dr. Neligan has certainly, "as far as possible," given a faithful and accurate representation of this class of diseases, and there can be no doubt that these plates will be of great use to the student and practitioner in drawing a diagnosis as to the class, order, and species to which the particular case may belong. While looking over the "Atlas" we have been induced to examine also the "Practical Treatise," and we are inclined to consider it a very superior work, combining accurate verbal description with sound views of the pathology and treatment of eruptive diseases.—*Glasgow Med. A COMPLETE PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE DISEASES OF CHILDREN. Second Edition, revised and greatly enlarged. In one handsome octavo volume of 742 pages, cloth, $5; leather, $6. (Lately Published.)

FROM THE PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

In presenting to the profession the second edition of his work, the author gratefully acknowledges the favorable reception accorded to the first. He has endeavored to merit a continuance of this approbation by rendering the volume much more complete than before. Nearly twenty additional diseases have been treated of, among which may be named Diseases Incidental to Birth, Rachitis, Tuberculosis, Scrofula, Intermittent, Remittent, and Typhoid Fevers, Chorea, and the various forms of Paralysis. Many new formulæ, which experience has shown to be useful, have been introduced, portions of the text of a less practical nature have been condensed, and other portions, especially those relating to pathological histology, have been rewritten to correspond with recent discoveries. Every effort has been made, however, to avoid an undue enlargement of the volume, but, notwithstanding this, and an increase in the size of the page, the number of pages has been enlarged by more than one hundred.

227 WEST 49TH STREET, NEW YORK, April, 1872.

The work will be found to contain nearly one-third more matter than the previous edition, and it is confidently presented as in every respect worthy to be received as the standard American text-book on the subject.

Eminently practical as well as judicious in its teachings.—Cincinnati Lancet and Obs., July, 1872.

A standard work that leaves little to be desired.—Indiana Journal of Medicine, July, 1872.

We know of no book on this subject that we can more cordially recommend to the medical student and the practitioner.—Cincinnati Clinic, June 29, '72.

We regard it as superior to any other single work on the diseases of infancy and childhood.—Detroit Rev. of Med. and Pharmacy, Aug. 1872.

We confess to increased enthusiasm in recommending this second edition.—St. Louis Med. and Surg. Journal, Aug. 1872.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

Sixth edition, revised and augmented. In one large octavo volume of nearly 800 closely-printed pages, cloth, $5 25; leather, $6 25.

The present edition, which is the sixth, is fully up to the times in the discussion of all those points in the pathology and treatment of infantile diseases which have been brought forward by the German and French teachers. As a whole, however, the work is the best American one that we have, and in its special adaptation to American practitioners it certainly has no equal.—New York Med. Record, March 2, 1868.

LECTURES ON THE DISEASES OF INFANCY AND CHILDHOOD.

Fifth American from the sixth revised and enlarged English edition. In one large and handsome octavo volume of 678 pages. Cloth, $4 50; leather, $5 50. (Just Issued.)

The continued demand for this work on both sides of the Atlantic, and its translation into German, French, Italian, Danish, Dutch, and Russian, show that it fills satisfactorily a want extensively felt by the profession. There is probably no man living who can speak with the authority derived from a more extended experience than Dr. West, and his work now presents the results of nearly 2000 recorded cases, and 600 post-mortem examinations selected from among nearly 40,000 cases which have passed under his care. In the preparation of the present edition he has omitted much that appeared of minor importance, in order to find room for the introduction of additional matter, and the volume, while thoroughly revised, is therefore not increased materially in size.

Of all the English writers on the diseases of children, there is no one so entirely satisfactory to us as Dr. West. For years we have held his opinion as judicial, and have regarded him as one of the highest living authorities in the difficult department of medical science in which he is most widely known.—Boston Med. and Surg. Journal.

SMITH (EUSTACE), M. D.,

Physician to the Northwest London Free Dispensary for Sick Children.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE WASTING DISEASES OF INFANCY AND CHILDHOOD. Second American, from the second revised and enlarged English edition. In one handsome octavo volume, cloth, $2 50. (Lately Issued.)

This is in every way an admirable book. The modest title which the author has chosen for it scarcely conveys an adequate idea of the many subjects upon which it treats. Wasting is so constant an attendant upon the maladies of childhood, that a treatise upon the wasting diseases of children must necessarily embrace the consideration of many affections of which it is a symptom; and this is excellently well done by Dr. Smith. The book might fairly be described as a practical handbook of the common diseases of children, so numerous are the affections considered either collaterally or directly. We are acquainted with no safer guide to the treatment of children's diseases, and few works give the insight into the physiological and other peculiarities of children that Dr. Smith's book does.—Brit. Med. Journ., April 8, 1871.

THE OBSTETRICAL JOURNAL. (Free of postage for 1875.)

THE OBSTETRICAL JOURNAL of Great Britain and Ireland; Including MIDWIFERY, and the DISEASES OF WOMEN AND INFANTS. With an American Supplement, edited by WILLIAM F. JENKS, M.D. A monthly of about 80 octavo pages, very handsomely printed. Subscription, Five Dollars per annum. Single Numbers, 50 cents each.

Commencing with April, 1873, the Obstetrical Journal consists of Original Papers by British and Foreign Contributors; Transactions of the Obstetrical Societies in England and abroad; Reports of Hospital Practice; Reviews and Bibliographical Notices; Articles and Notes, Editorial, Historical, Forensic, and Miscellaneous; Selections from Journals; Correspondence, &c. Collecting together the vast amount of material daily accumulating in this important and rapidly improving department of medical science, the value of the information which it presents to the subscriber may be estimated from the character of the gentlemen who have already promised their support, including such names as those of Drs. ATTHILL, ROBERT BARNES, HENRY BENNET, THOMAS CHAMBERS, FLEETWOOD CHURCHILL, MATTHEWS DUNCAN, GRAILY HEWITT, BRAXTON HICKS, ALFRED MEADOWS, W. LEISHMAN, ALEX. SIMPSON, TYLER SMITH, EDWARD J. TILT, SPENCER WELLS, &c. &c.; in short, the representative men of British Obstetrics and Gynecology.

In order to render the OBSTETRICAL JOURNAL fully adequate to the wants of the American profession, each number contains a Supplement devoted to the advances made in Obstetrics and Gynecology on this side of the Atlantic. This portion of the Journal is under the editorial charge of Dr. WILLIAM F. JENKS, to whom editorial communications, exchanges, books for review, &c., may be addressed, to the care of the publisher.

THOMAS (T. GAILLARD), M.D.,

Professor of Obstetrics, &c., in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, N. Y., &c.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE DISEASES OF WOMEN. Fourth edition, enlarged and thoroughly revised. In one large and handsome octavo volume of 800 pages, with 191 illustrations. Cloth, $5 00; leather, $6 00. (Now Ready.)

The author has taken advantage of the opportunity afforded by the call for another edition of this work to render it worthy a continuance of the very remarkable favor with which it has been received. Every portion has been subjected to a conscientious revision, and no labor has been spared to make it a complete treatise on the most advanced condition of its important subject.

A few notices of the previous editions are subjoined:—

Professor Thomas fairly took the Profession of the United States by storm when his book first made its appearance early in 1868. Its reception was simply enthusiastic, notwithstanding a few adverse criticisms from our transatlantic brethren, the first large edition was rapidly exhausted, and in six months a second one was issued, and in two years a third one was announced and published, and we are now promised the fourth. The popularity of this work was not ephemeral, and its success was unprecedented in the annals of American medical literature. Six years is a long period in medical scientific research, but Thomas's work on "Diseases of Women" is still the leading native production of the United States. The order, the matter, the absence of theoretical disputativeness, the fairness of statement, and the elegance of diction, preserved throughout the entire range of the book, indicate that Professor Thomas did not overestimate his powers when he conceived the idea and executed the work of producing a new treatise upon diseases of women.—PROF. PALLEN, in Louisville Med. Journal, Sept. 1874.

Briefly, we may say that we know of no book which so completely and concisely represents the present state of gynecology; none so full of well-digested and reliable teaching; none which bespeaks an author more apt in research and abundant in resources.—N. Y. Med. Record, May 1, 1872.

We should not be doing our duty to the profession did we not tell those who are unacquainted with the book, how much it is valued by gynecologists, and how it is in many respects one of the best text-books on the subject we possess in our language. We have no hesitation in recommending Dr. Thomas's work as one of the most complete of its kind ever published. It should be in the possession of every practitioner for reference and for study.—London Lancet, April 27, 1872.

We are free to say that we regard Dr. Thomas the best American authority on diseases of women.—Cincinnati Lancet and Observer, May, 1872.

No general practitioner can afford to be without it.—St. Louis Med. and Surg. Journal, May, 1872.

Its able author need not fear comparison between it and any similar work in the English language; nay more, as a text-book for students and as a guide for practitioners, we believe it is unequalled. If either student or practitioner can get but one book on diseases of women, that book should be "Thomas."—Amer. Jour. Med. Sciences, April, 1872.

To students we unhesitatingly recommend it as the best text-book on diseases of females extant.—St. Louis Med. Reporter, June, 1869.

Of all the army of books that have appeared of late years, on the diseases of the uterus and its appendages, we know of none that is so clear, comprehensive, and practical as this of Dr. Thomas', or one that we should more emphatically recommend to the young practitioner, as his guide.—California Med. Gazette, June, 1869.

It would be superfluous to give an extended review of what is now firmly established as the American text-book of Gynecology.—N. Y. Med. Gazette, July 17, 1869.

This is a new and revised edition of a work which we recently noticed at some length, and earnestly commended to the favorable attention of our readers. The fact that, in the short space of one year, this second edition makes its appearance, shows that the general judgment of the profession has largely confirmed the opinion we gave at that time.—Cincinnati Lancet, Aug. 1869.

It is so short a time since we gave a full review of the first edition of this book, that we deem it only necessary now to call attention to the second appearance of the work. Its success has been remarkable, and we can only congratulate the author on the brilliant reception his book has received.—N. Y. Med. Journal, April, 1869.

HODGE (HUGH L.), M.D.,
Emeritus Professor of Obstetrics, &c., in the University of Pennsylvania.

ON DISEASES PECULIAR TO WOMEN; including Displacements of the Uterus. With original illustrations. Second edition, revised and enlarged. In one beautifully printed octavo volume of 531 pages, cloth, $4 50.

From PROF. W. H. BYFORD, of the Rush Medical College, Chicago.

The book bears the impress of a master hand, and must, as its predecessor, prove acceptable to the profession. In diseases of women Dr. Hodge has established a school of treatment that has become world-wide in fame.

Professor Hodge's work is truly an original one from beginning to end, consequently no one can peruse its pages without learning something new. The book, which is by no means a large one, is divided into two grand sections, so to speak: first, that treating of the nervous sympathies of the uterus, and, secondly, that which speaks of the mechanical treatment of displacements of that organ. He is disposed, as a non-believer in the frequency of inflammations of the uterus, to take strong ground against many of the highest authorities in this branch of medicine, and the arguments which he offers in support of his position are, to say the least, well put. Numerous woodcuts adorn this portion of the work, and add incalculably to the proper appreciation of the variously shaped instruments referred to by our author. As a contribution to the study of women's diseases, it is of great value, and is abundantly able to stand on its own merits.—N. Y. Medical Record, Sept. 15, 1868.

WEST (CHARLES), M.D.

LECTURES ON THE DISEASES OF WOMEN. Third American, from the Third London edition. In one neat octavo volume of about 550 pages, cloth, $3 75; leather, $4 75.

As a writer, Dr. West stands, in our opinion, second only to Watson, the "Macaulay of Medicine;" he possesses that happy faculty of clothing instruction in easy garments; combining pleasure with profit, he leads his pupils, in spite of the ancient proverb, along a royal road to learning. His work is one which will not satisfy the extreme on either side, but it is one that will please the great majority who are seeking truth, and one that will convince the student that he has committed himself to a candid, safe, and valuable guide.—N. A. Med.-Chirurg. Review.

We have to say of it, briefly and decidedly, that it is the best work on the subject in any language, and that it stamps Dr. West as the facile princeps of British obstetric authors.—Edinburgh Med. Journal.

Embodying the long experience and personal observation of one of the greatest of living teachers in diseases of women, it seems pervaded by the presence of the author, who speaks directly to the reader, and speaks, too, as one having authority. And yet, notwithstanding this distinct personality, there is nothing narrow as to time, place, or individuals, in the views presented, and in the instructions given; Dr. Barnes has been an attentive student, not only of European, but also of American literature, pertaining to diseases of females, and enriched his own experience by treasures thence gathered; he seems as familiar, for example, with the writings of Sims, Emmet, Thomas, and Peaslee, as if these eminent men were his countrymen and colleagues, and gives them a credit which must be gratifying to every American physician.—Am. Journ. Med. Sci., April, 1874.

Throughout the whole book it is impossible not to feel that the author has spontaneously, conscientiously, and fearlessly performed his task. He goes direct to the point, and does not loiter on the way to gossip or quarrel with other authors. Dr. Barnes's book will be eagerly read all over the world, and will everywhere be admired for its comprehensiveness, honesty of purpose, and ability.—The Obstet. Journ. of Great Britain and Ireland, March, 1874.

HODGE (HUGH L.), M.D.,*Emeritus Professor of Midwifery, &c., in the University of Pennsylvania, &c.THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF OBSTETRICS. Illustrated with large lithographic plates containing one hundred and fifty-nine figures from original photographs, and with numerous wood-cuts. In one large and beautifully printed quarto volume of 550 double-columned pages, strongly bound in cloth, $14.

The work of Dr. Hodge is something more than a simple presentation of his particular views in the department of Obstetrics; it is something more than an ordinary treatise on midwifery; it is, in fact, a cyclopædia of midwifery. He has aimed to embody in a single volume the whole science and art of Obstetrics. An elaborate text is combined with accurate and varied pictorial illustrations, so that no fact or principle is left unstated or unexplained.—Am. Med. Times, Sept. 3, 1864.

We should like to analyze the remainder of this excellent work, but already has this review extended beyond our limited space. We cannot conclude this notice without referring to the excellent finish of the work. In typography it is not to be excelled; the paper is superior to what is usually afforded by our American cousins, quite equal to the best of English books. The engravings and lithographs are most beautifully executed. The work recommends itself for its originality, and is in every way a most valuable addition to those on the subject of obstetrics.—Canada Med. Journal, Oct. 1864.

It is very large, profusely and elegantly illustrated, and is fitted to take its place near the works of great obstetricians. Of the American works on the subject it is decidedly the best.—Edinb. Med. Jour., Dec. '64.

TANNER (THOMAS H.), M.D.ON THE SIGNS AND DISEASES OF PREGNANCY. First American from the Second and Enlarged English Edition. With four colored plates and illustrations on wood. In one handsome octavo volume of about 500 pages, cloth, $4 25.

The very thorough revision the work has undergone has added greatly to its practical value, and increased materially its efficiency as a guide to the student and to the young practitioner.—Am. Journ. Med. Sci., April, 1868.

With the immense variety of subjects treated of and the ground which they are made to cover, the impossibility of giving an extended review of this truly remarkable work must be apparent. We have not a single fault to find with it, and most heartily commend it to the careful study of every physician who would not only always be sure of his diagnosis of pregnancy, but always ready to treat all the numerous ailments that are, unfortunately for the civilized women of to-day, so commonly associated with the function.—N. Y. Med. Record, March 16, 1868.

We recommend obstetrical students, young and old, to have this volume in their collections. It contains not only a fair statement of the signs, symptoms, and diseases of pregnancy, but comprises in addition much interesting relative matter that is not to be found in any other work that we can name.—Edinburgh Med. Journal, Jan. 1868.

SWAYNE (JOSEPH GRIFFITHS), M.D.,*Physician-Accoucheur to the British General Hospital, &c.OBSTETRIC APHORISMS FOR THE USE OF STUDENTS COMMENCING MIDWIFERY PRACTICE. Second American, from the Fifth and Revised London Edition, with Additions by E. R. HUTCHINS, M.D. With Illustrations. In one neat 12mo. volume. Cloth, $1 25. (Lately Issued.)

 See p. 3 of this Catalogue for the terms on which this work is offered as a premium to subscribers to the "AMERICAN JOURNAL OF THE MEDICAL SCIENCES."

It is really a capital little compendium of the subject, and we recommend young practitioners to buy it and carry it with them when called to attend cases of labor. They can while away the otherwise tedious hours of waiting, and thoroughly fix in their memories the most important practical suggestions it contains. The American editor has materially added by his notes and the concluding chapters to the completeness and general value of the book.—Chicago Med. Journal, Feb. 1870.

The manual before us contains in exceedingly small compass—small enough to carry in the pocket—about all there is of obstetrics, condensed into a nutshell of Aphorisms. The illustrations are well selected, and serve as excellent reminders of the conduct of labor—regular and difficult.—Cincinnati Lancet, April, '70.

This is a most admirable little work, and completely answers the purpose. It is not only valuable for young beginners, but no one who is not a proficient in the art of obstetrics should be without it, because it condenses all that is necessary to know for ordinary midwifery practice. We commend the book most favorably.—St. Louis Med. and Surg. Journal, Sept. 10, 1870.

A studied perusal of this little book has satisfied us of its eminently practical value. The object of the work, the author says, in his preface, is to give the student a few brief and practical directions respecting the management of ordinary cases of labor; and also to point out to him in extraordinary cases when and how he may act upon his own responsibility, and when he ought to send for assistance.—N. Y. Medical Journal, May, 1870.

WINCKEL (F.).*Professor and Director of the Gynecological Clinic in the University of Rostock.A COMPLETE TREATISE ON THE PATHOLOGY AND TREATMENT OF CHILDBED, for Students and Practitioners. Translated, with the consent of the author, from the Second German Edition, by JAMES READ CHADWICK, M.D. In one octavo volume. (Preparing.)

LEISHMAN (WILLIAM), M.D.,Regius Professor of Midwifery in the University of Glasgow, &c.

A SYSTEM OF MIDWIFERY, INCLUDING THE DISEASES OF PREGNANCY AND THE PUERPERAL STATE. In one large and very handsome octavo volume of over 700 pages, with one hundred and eighty-two illustrations. Cloth, $5 00; leather, $6 00. (Lately Published.)

This is one of a most complete and exhaustive character. We have gone carefully through it, and there is no subject in Obstetrics which has not been considered well and fully. The result is a work, not only admirable as a text-book, but valuable as a work of reference to the practitioner in the various emergencies of obstetric practice. Take it all in all, we have no hesitation in saying that it is in our judgment the best English work on the subject.—London Lancet, Aug. 23, 1873.

The work of Leishman gives an excellent view of modern midwifery, and evinces its author's extensive acquaintance with British and foreign literature; and not only acquaintance with it, but wholesome digestion and sound judgment of it. He has, withal, a manly, free style, and can state a difficult and complicated matter with remarkable clearness and brevity.—Edin. Med. Journ., Sept. 1873.

The author has succeeded in presenting to the profession an admirable treatise, especially in its practical aspects; one which is, in general, clearly written, and sound in doctrine, and one which cannot fail to add to his already high reputation. In concluding our examination of this work, we cannot avoid again saying that Dr. Leishman has fully accomplished that difficult task of presenting a good text-book upon obstetrics. We know none better for the use of the student or junior practitioner.—Am. Practitioner, Mar. 1874.

It proposes to offer to practitioners and students

"A Complete System of the Midwifery of the Present Day," and well redeems the promise. In all that relates to the subject of labor, the teaching is admirably clear, concise, and practical, representing not alone British practice, but the contributions of Continental and American schools.—N. Y. Med. Record, March 2, 1874.

The work of Dr. Leishman is, in many respects, not only the best treatise on midwifery that we have seen, but one of the best treatises on any medical subject that has been published of late years.—London Practitioner, Feb. 1874.

It was written to supply a desideratum, and we will be much surprised if it does not fulfil the purpose of its author. Taking it as a whole, we know of no work on obstetrics by an English author in which the student and the practitioner will find the information so clear and so completely abreast of the present state of our knowledge on the subject.—Glasgow Med. Journ., Aug. 1873.

Dr. Leishman's System of Midwifery, which has only just been published, will go far to supply the want which has so long been felt, of a really good modern English text-book. Although large, as is inevitable in a work on so extensive a subject, it is so well and clearly written, that it is never wearisome to read. Dr. Leishman's work may be confidently recommended as an admirable text-book, and is sure to be largely used.—London Med. Record, Sept. 1873.

RAMSBOTHAM (FRANCIS H.), M.D.

THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF OBSTETRIC MEDICINE AND SURGERY, in reference to the Process of Parturition. A new and enlarged edition, thoroughly revised by the author. With additions by W. V. KEATING, M.D., Professor of Obstetrics, &c., in the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. In one large and handsome imperial octavo volume of 650 pages, strongly bound in leather, with raised bands; with sixty-four beautiful plates, and numerous wood-cuts in the text, containing in all nearly 200 large and beautiful figures. $7 00.

We will only add that the student will learn from it all he need to know, and the practitioner will find it, as a book of reference, surpassed by none other.—Stethoscope.

The character and merits of Dr. Ramsbotham's work are so well known and thoroughly established, that comment is unnecessary and praise superfluous. The illustrations, which are numerous and accurate, are executed in the highest style of art. We cannot too highly recommend the work to our readers.—St. Louis Med. and Surg. Journal.

To the physician's library it is indispensable, while to the student, as a text-book, from which to extract the material for laying the foundation of an education on obstetrical science, it has no superior.—Ohio Med. and Surg. Journal.

When we call to mind the toil we underwent in acquiring a knowledge of this subject, we cannot but envy the student of the present day the aid which this work will afford him.—Am. Jour. of the Med. Sciences.

CHURCHILL (FLEETWOOD), M.D., M.R.I.A.

ON THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF MIDWIFERY. A new American from the fourth revised and enlarged London edition. With notes and additions by D. FRANCIS CONDIE, M.D., author of a "Practical Treatise on the Diseases of Children," &c. With one hundred and ninety-four illustrations. In one very handsome octavo volume of nearly 700 large pages. Cloth, $4 00; leather, $5 00.

These additions render the work still more complete and acceptable than ever; and we can commend it to the profession with great cordiality and pleasure.—Cincinnati Lancet.

Few works on this branch of medical science are equal to it, certainly none excel it, whether in regard to theory or practice.—Brit. Am. Journal.

No treatise on obstetrics with which we are acquainted can compare favorably with this, in respect to the amount of material which has been gathered from every source.—Boston Med. and Surg. Journal.

There is no better text-book for students, or work of reference and study for the practising physician than this. It should adorn and enrich every medical library.—Chicago Med. Journal.

GROSS (SAMUEL D.), M.D.,

Professor of Surgery in the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia.

A SYSTEM OF SURGERY: Pathological, Diagnostic, Therapeutic, and Operative. Illustrated by upwards of Fourteen Hundred Engravings. Fifth edition, carefully revised, and improved. In two large and beautifully printed imperial octavo volumes of about 2300 pages, strongly bound in leather, with raised bands, $15. (Just Issued.)

The continued favor, shown by the exhaustion of successive large editions of this great work, proves that it has successfully supplied a want felt by American practitioners and students. In the present revision no pains have been spared by the author to bring it in every respect fully up to the day. To effect this a large part of the work has been rewritten, and the whole enlarged by nearly one-fourth, notwithstanding which the price has been kept at its former very moderate rate. By the use of a close, though very legible type, an unusually large amount of matter is condensed in its pages, the two volumes containing as much as four or five ordinary octavos. This, combined with the most careful mechanical execution, and its very durable binding, renders it one of the cheapest works accessible to the profession. Every subject properly belonging to the domain of surgery is treated in detail, so that the student who possesses this work may be said to have in it a surgical library. A few notices of the previous edition are subjoined:—

It must long remain the most comprehensive work on this important part of medicine.—Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, March 23, 1865.

We have compared it with most of our standard works, such as those of Erichsen, Miller, Fergusson, Syme, and others, and we must, in justice to our author, award it the pre-eminence. As a work, complete in almost every detail, no matter how minute or trifling, and embracing every subject known in the principles and practice of surgery, we believe it stands without a rival. Dr. Gross, in his preface, remarks "my aim has been to embrace the whole domain of surgery, and to allot to every subject its legitimate claim to notice;" and, we assure our readers, he has kept his word. It is a work which we can most confidently recommend to our brethren, for its utility is becoming the more evident the longer it is upon the shelves of our library.—Canada Med. Journal, September, 1865.

The first two editions of Professor Gross' System of Surgery are so well known to the profession, and so highly prized, that it would be idle for us to speak in praise of this work.—Chicago Medical Journal, September, 1865.

We gladly indorse the favorable recommendation of the work, both as regards matter and style, which we made when noticing its first appearance.—British and Foreign Medico-Chirurgical Review, Oct. 1865.

The most complete work that has yet issued from the press on the science and practice of surgery.—London Lancet.

This system of surgery is, we predict, destined to take a commanding position in our surgical literature, and be the crowning glory of the author's well earned fame. As an authority on general surgical subjects, this work is long to occupy a pre-eminent place, not only at home, but abroad. We have no hesitation in pronouncing it without a rival in our language, and equal to the best systems of surgery in any language.—N. Y. Med. Journal.

Not only by far the best text-book on the subject, as a whole, within the reach of American students, but one which will be much more than ever likely to be resorted to and regarded as a high authority abroad.—Am. Journal Med. Sciences, Jan. 1865.

The work contains everything, minor and major, operative and diagnostic, including mensuration and examination, venereal diseases, and uterine manipulations and operations. It is a complete Thesaurus of modern surgery, where the student and practitioner shall not seek in vain for what they desire.—San Francisco Med. Press, Jan. 1865.

Open it where we may, we find sound practical information conveyed in plain language. This book is no mere provincial or even national system of surgery, but a work which, while very largely indebted to the past, has a strong claim on the gratitude of the future of surgical science.—Edinburgh Med. Journal, Jan. 1865.

A glance at the work is sufficient to show that the author and publisher have spared no labor in making it the most complete "System of Surgery" ever published in any country.—St. Louis Med. and Surg. Journal, April, 1865.

A system of surgery which we think unrivalled in our language, and which will indelibly associate his name with surgical science. And what, in our opinion, enhances the value of the work is that, while the practising surgeon will find all that he requires in it, it is at the same time one of the most valuable treatises which can be put into the hands of the student seeking to know the principles and practice of this branch of the profession which he designs subsequently to follow.—The Brit. Am. Journ., Montreal.

The object of the author has been to present, within as condensed a compass as possible, a complete treatise on Surgery in all its branches, suitable both as a text-book for the student and a work of reference for the practitioner. So much has of late years been done for the advancement of Surgical Art and Science, that there seemed to be a want of a work which should present the latest aspects of every subject, and which, by its American character, should render accessible to the profession at large the experience of the practitioners of both hemispheres. This has been the aim of the author, and it is hoped that the volume will be found to fulfil its purpose satisfactorily. The plan and general outline of the work will be seen by the annexed

CONDENSED SUMMARY OF CONTENTS.

INDEX.

Its author has evidently tested the writings and experiences of the past and present in the crucible of a careful, analytic, and honorable mind, and faithfully endeavored to bring his work up to the level of the highest standard of practical surgery. He is frank and definite, and gives us opinions, and generally sound ones, instead of a mere résumé of the opinions of others. He is conservative, but not hide-bound by authority. His style is clear, elegant, and scholarly. The work is an admirable text-book, and a useful book of reference. It is a credit to American professional literature, and one of the first ripe fruits of the soil fertilized by the blood of our late unhappy war. —N. Y. Med. Record, Feb. 1, 1872.

Indeed, the work as a whole must be regarded as an excellent and concise exponent of modern surgery, and as such it will be found a valuable text-book for the student, and a useful book of reference for the general practitioner. —N. Y. Med. Journal, Feb. 1872.

It gives us great pleasure to call the attention of the profession to this excellent work. Our knowledge of its talented and accomplished author led us to expect from him a very valuable treatise upon subjects to which he has repeatedly given evidence of having profitably devoted much time and labor, and we are in no way disappointed. —Phila. Med. Times, Feb. 1, 1872.

PIRRIE (WILLIAM), F. R. S. E.,

Professor of Surgery in the University of Aberdeen.

THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF SURGERY. Edited by JOHN NEILL, M. D., Professor of Surgery in the Penna. Medical College, Surgeon to the Pennsylvania Hospital, &c. In one very handsome octavo volume of 780 pages, with 316 illustrations, cloth, $3 75.

HAMILTON (FRANK H.), M.D.,

Professor of Fractures and Dislocations, &c., in Bellevue Hosp. Med. College, New York.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON FRACTURES AND DISLOCATIONS. Fourth edition, thoroughly revised. In one large and handsome octavo volume of nearly 800 pages, with several hundred illustrations. Cloth, $5 75; leather, $6 75.

It is not, of course, our intention to review in extenso, Hamilton on "Fractures and Dislocations." Eleven years ago such review might not have been out of place; to-day the work is an authority, so well, so generally, and so favorably known, that it only remains for the reviewer to say that a new edition is just out, and it is better than either of its predecessors. —Cincinnati Clinic, Oct. 14, 1871.

Undoubtedly the best work on Fractures and Dislocations in the English language. —Cincinnati Med. Repertory, Oct. 1871.

We have once more before us Dr. Hamilton's admi-nable treatise, which we have always considered the most complete and reliable work on the subject. As a whole, the work is without an equal in the literature of the profession. —Boston Med. and Surg. Journ., Oct. 12, 1871.

It is unnecessary at this time to commend the book, except to such as are beginners in the study of this particular branch of surgery. Every practical surgeon in this country and abroad knows of it as a most trustworthy guide, and one which they, in common with us, would unqualifiedly recommend as the highest authority in any language. —N. Y. Med. Record, Oct. 16, 1871.

ERICHSEN (JOHN E.),Professor of Surgery in University College, London, &c.

THE SCIENCE AND ART OF SURGERY; being a Treatise on Surgical Injuries, Diseases, and Operations. Revised by the author from the Sixth and enlarged English Edition. Illustrated by over seven hundred engravings on wood. In two large and beautiful octavo volumes of over 1700 pages, cloth, $9 00; leather, $11 00. (Lately Issued.)

Author's Preface to the New American Edition.

"The favorable reception with which the 'Science and Art of Surgery' has been honored by the Surgical Profession in the United States of America has been not only a source of deep gratification and of just pride to me, but has laid the foundation of many professional friendships that are amongst the agreeable and valued recollections of my life.

"I have endeavored to make the present edition of this work more deserving than its predecessors of the favor that has been accorded to them. In consequence of delays that have unavoidably occurred in the publication of the Sixth British Edition, time has been afforded to me to add to this one several paragraphs which I trust will be found to increase the practical value of the work."

LONDON, Oct. 1872.

On no former edition of this work has the author bestowed more pains to render it a complete and satisfactory exposition of British Surgery in its modern aspects. Every portion has been sedulously revised, and a large number of new illustrations have been introduced. In addition to the material thus added to the English edition, the author has furnished for the American edition such material as has accumulated since the passage of the sheets through the press in London, so that the work as now presented to the American profession, contains his latest views and experience.

The increase in the size of the work has seemed to render necessary its division into two volumes. Great care has been exercised in its typographical execution, and it is confidently presented as in every respect worthy to maintain the high reputation which has rendered it a standard authority on this department of medical science.

These are only a few of the points in which the present edition of Mr. Erichsen's work surpasses its predecessors. Throughout there is evidence of a laborious care and solicitude in seizing the passing knowledge of the day, which reflects the greatest credit on the author, and much enhances the value of his work. We can only admire the industry which has enabled Mr. Erichsen thus to succeed, amid the distractions of active practice, in producing emphatically the book of reference and study for British practitioners of surgery.—London Lancet, Oct. 26, 1872.

Considerable changes have been made in this edition, and nearly a hundred new illustrations have been added. It is difficult in a small compass to point out the alterations and additions; for, as the author states in his preface, they are not confined to any one portion, but are distributed generally through the subjects of which the work treats. Certainly one of the most valuable sections of the book seems to us to be that which treats of the diseases of the arteries and the operative proceedings which they necessitate. In few text-books is so much carefully arranged information collected.—London Med. Times and Gaz., Oct. 26, 1872.

The entire work, complete, as the great English treatise on Surgery of our own time, is, we can assure our readers, equally well adapted for the most junior student, and, as a book of reference, for the advanced practitioner.—Dublin Quarterly Journal.

DRUITT (ROBERT), M. R. C. S., &c.THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF MODERN SURGERY.

A new and revised American, from the eighth enlarged and improved London edition. Illustrated with four hundred and thirty-two wood engravings. In one very handsome octavo volume, of nearly 700 large and closely printed pages, cloth, $4 00; leather, $5 00.

All that the surgical student or practitioner could desire.—Dublin Quarterly Journal.

It is a most admirable book. We do not know when we have examined one with more pleasure.—Boston Med. and Surg. Journal.

In Mr. Drutt's book, though containing only some seven hundred pages, both the principles and the practice of surgery are treated, and so clearly and perspicuously, as to elucidate every important topic. We have examined the book most thoroughly, and can say that this success is well merited. His book, moreover, possesses the inestimable advantages of having the subjects perfectly well arranged and classified, and of being written in a style at once clear and succinct.—Am. Journal of Med. Sciences.

INJURIES OF THE EYE, ORBIT, AND EYELIDS: their Immediate and Remote Effects. With about one hundred illustrations. In one very handsome octavo volume, cloth, $3 50.

It is an admirable practical book in the highest and best sense of the phrase.—London Medical Times and Gazette, May 18, 1867.

BRYANT (THOMAS), F.R.C.S.,
Surgeon to Guy's Hospital.

THE PRACTICE OF SURGERY. With over Five Hundred Engravings on Wood. In one large and very handsome octavo volume of nearly 1000 pages, cloth, $6 25; leather, raised bands, $7 25. (Lately Published.)

Again, the author gives us his own practice, his own beliefs, and illustrates by his own cases, or those treated in Guy's Hospital. This feature adds joint emphasis, and a solidity to his statements that inspire confidence. One feels himself almost by the side of the surgeon, seeing his work and hearing his living words. The views, etc., of other surgeons are considered calmly and fairly, but Mr. Bryant's are adopted. Thus the work is not a compilation of other writings; it is not an encyclopaedia, but the plain statements, on practical points, of a man who has lived and breathed and had his being in the richest surgical experience. The whole profession owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Bryant, for his work in their behalf. We are confident that the American profession will give substantial testimonial of their feelings towards both author and publisher, by speedily exhausting this edition. We cordially and heartily commend it to our friends, and think that no live surgeon can afford to be without it.—Detroit Review of Med. and Pharmacy, August, 1873.

As a manual of the practice of surgery for the use of the student, we do not hesitate to pronounce Mr. Bryant's book a first-rate work. Mr. Bryant has a good deal of the dogmatic energy which goes with the clear, pronounced opinions of a man whose reflections and experience have moulded a character not wanting in firmness and decision. At the same time he teaches with the enthusiasm of one who has faith in his teaching; he speaks as one having authority, and herein lies the charm and excellence of his work. He states the opinions of others freely and fairly, yet it is no mere compilation. The book combines much of the merit of the manual with the merit of the monograph. One may recognize in almost every chapter of the ninety-four of which the work is made up the acuteness of a surgeon who has seen much, and observed closely, and who gives forth the results of actual experience. In conclusion we repeat what we stated at first, that Mr. Bryant's book is one which we can conscientiously recommend both to practitioners and students as an admirable work.—Dublin Journ. of Med. Science, August, 1873.

Mr. Bryant has long been known to the reading portion of the profession as an able, clear, and graphic writer upon surgical subjects. The volume before us is one eminently upon the practice of surgery and not one which treats at length on surgical pathology, though the views that are entertained upon this subject are sufficiently interspersed through the work for all practical purposes. As a text-book we cheerfully recommend it, feeling convinced that, from the subject-matter, and the concise and true way Mr. Bryant deals with his subject, it will prove a formidable rival among the numerous surgical text-books which are offered to the student.—N. Y. Med. Record, June, 1873.

This is, as the preface states, an entirely new book, and contains in a moderately condensed form all the surgical information necessary to a general practitioner. It is written in a spirit consistent with the present improved standard of medical and surgical science.—American Journal of Obstetrics, August, 1873.

WELLS (J. SOELBERG),

Professor of Ophthalmology in King's College Hospital, &c.

A TREATISE ON DISEASES OF THE EYE. Second American, from the Third and Revised London Edition, with additions; illustrated with numerous engravings on wood, and six colored plates. Together with selections from the Test-types of Jaeger and Snellen. In one large and very handsome octavo volume of nearly 800 pages; cloth, $5 00; leather, $6 00. (Lately Published.)

The continued demand for this work, both in England and this country, is sufficient evidence that the author has succeeded in his effort to supply within a reasonable compass a full practical digest of ophthalmology in its most modern aspects, while the call for repeated editions has enabled him in his revisions to maintain its position abreast of the most recent investigations and improvements. In again reprinting it, every effort has been made to adapt it thoroughly to the wants of the American practitioner. Such additions as seemed desirable have been introduced by the editor, Dr. I. Minis Hays, and the number of illustrations has been largely increased. The importance of test-types as an aid to diagnosis is so universally acknowledged at the present day that it seemed essential to the completeness of the work that they should be added, and as the author recommends the use of those both of Jaeger and of Snellen for different purposes, selections have been made from each, so that the practitioner may have at command all the assistance necessary. Although enlarged by one hundred pages, it has been retained at the former very moderate price, rendering it one of the cheapest volumes before the profession.

A few notices of the previous edition are subjoined.

On examining it carefully, one is not at all surprised that it should meet with universal favor. It is, in fact, a comprehensive and thoroughly practical treatise on diseases of the eye, setting forth the practice of the leading oculists of Europe and America, and giving the author's own opinions and preferences, which are quite decided and worthy of high consideration. The third English edition, from which this is taken, having been revised by the author, comprises a notice of all the more recent advances made in ophthalmic science. The style of the writer is lucid and flowing, therein differing materially from some of the translations of Continental writers on this subject that are in the market. Special pains are taken to explain, at length, those subjects which are particularly difficult of comprehension to the beginner, as the use of the ophthalmoscope, the interpretation of its images, etc. The book is profusely and ably illustrated, and at the end are to be found 16 excellent colored ophthalmoscopic figures, which are copies of some of the plates of Liebreich's admirable atlas.—Kansas City Med. Journ., June, 1874.

LAURENCE (JOHN Z.), F.R.C.S.,
Editor of the Ophthalmic Review, &c.

A HANDY-BOOK OF OPHTHALMIC SURGERY, for the use of Practitioners. Second Edition, revised and enlarged. With numerous illustrations. In one very handsome octavo volume, cloth, $3 00.

For those, however, who must assume the care of diseases and injuries of the eye, and who are too much pressed for time to study the classic works on the subject, or those recently published by Stelliwag, Wells, Bader, and others, Mr. Laurence will prove a safe and trustworthy guide. He has described in this edition those novelties which have secured the confidence of the profession since the appearance of his last. The volume has been considerably enlarged and improved by the revision and additions of its author, expressly for the American edition.—Am. Journ. Med. Sciences, Jan. 1870.

TAYLOR (ALFRED S.), M.D.,Lecturer on Med. Jurisp. and Chemistry in Guy's Hospital

MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE. Seventh American Edition. Edited by JOHN J. REESE, M.D., Prof. of Med. Jurisp. in the Univ. of Penn. In one large octavo volume of nearly 900 pages. Cloth, $5 00; leather, $6 00. (Just Issued.)

In preparing for the press this seventh American edition of the "Manual of Medical Jurisprudence," the editor has, through the courtesy of Dr. Taylor, enjoyed the very great advantage of consulting the sheets of the new edition of the author's larger work, "The Principles and Practice of Medical Jurisprudence," which is now ready for publication in London. This has enabled him to introduce the author's latest views upon the topics discussed, which are believed to bring the work fully up to the present time.

The notes of the former editor, Dr. Hartshorne, as also the numerous valuable references to American practice and decisions by his successor, Mr. Penrose, have been retained, with but few slight exceptions; they will be found inclosed in brackets, distinguished by the letters (H.) and (P.). The additions made by the present editor, from the material at his command, amount to about one hundred pages; and his own notes are designated by the letter (R.).

Several subjects, not treated of in the former edition, have been noticed in the present one, and the work, it is hoped, will be found to merit a continuance of the confidence which it has so long enjoyed as a standard authority.

THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE. Second Edition, Revised, with numerous Illustrations. In two large octavo volumes, cloth, $10 00; leather, $12 00.

This great work is now recognized in England as the fullest and most authoritative treatise on every department of its important subject. In laying it, in its improved form, before the American profession, the publisher trusts that it will assume the same position in this country.

POISONS IN RELATION TO MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE AND MEDICINE. Third American, from the Third and Revised English Edition. In one large octavo volume of 850 pages.

This work, which has been so long recognized as a leading authority on its important subject, has received a very thorough revision at the hands of the author, and may be regarded as a new book rather than as a mere revision. He has sought to bring it on all points to a level with the advanced science of the day; many portions have been rewritten, much that was of minor importance has been omitted, and every effort made to condense a complete view of the subject within the limits of a single volume. Dr. Taylor's position as an expert has brought him into connection with nearly all important cases in England for many years. He thus speaks with an authority that few other living men possess, while his intimate acquaintance with the literature of toxicology on both sides of the Atlantic, renders his work equally adapted as a text-book in this country as in Great Britain.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE INFLUENCE OF THE MIND UPON
 THE BODY IN HEALTH AND DISEASE. Designed to illustrate the Action of the Imagination. In one handsome octavo volume of 416 pages, cloth, $3 25. (Just Issued.)

The object of the author in this work has been to show not only the effect of the mind in causing and intensifying disease, but also its curative influence, and the use which may be made of the imagination and the emotions as therapeutic agents. Scattered facts bearing upon this subject have long been familiar to the profession, but no attempt has hitherto been made to collect and systematize them so as to render them available to the practitioner, by establishing the several phenomena upon a scientific basis. In the endeavor thus to convert to the use of legitimate medicine the means which have been employed so successfully in many systems of quackery, the author has produced a work of the highest freshness and interest as well as of permanent value.

INSANITY AND ITS TREATMENT: Lectures on the Treatment, Medical and Legal, of Insane Patients. With a Summary of the Laws in force in the United States on the Confinement of the Insane. By ISAAC RAY, M.D. In one very handsome octavo volume of 471 pages; cloth, $3 25.

This volume is presented to meet the want, so frequently expressed, of a comprehensive treatise, in moderate compass, on the pathology, diagnosis, and treatment of insanity. To render it of more value to the practitioner in this country, Dr. Ray has added an appendix which affords information, not elsewhere to be found in so accessible a form, to physicians who may at any moment be called upon to take action in relation to patients.

It satisfies a want which must have been sorely felt by the busy general practitioners of this country. It takes the form of a manual of clinical description of the various forms of insanity, with a description of the mode of examining persons suspected of insanity. We call particular attention to this feature of the book, as giving it a unique value to the general practitioner. If we pass from theoretical considerations to descriptions of the varieties of insanity as actually seen in practice and the appropriate treatment for them, we find in Dr. Blandford's work a considerable advance over previous writings on the subject. His pictures of the various forms of mental disease are so clear and good that no reader can fail to be struck with their superiority to those given in ordinary manuals in the English language or (so far as our own reading extends) in any other.—London Practitioner, Feb. 1871.

ON OBSCURE DISEASES OF THE BRAIN AND DISORDERS
 OF THE MIND; their incipient Symptoms, Pathology, Diagnosis, Treatment, and Prophylaxis. Second American, from the third and revised English edition. In one handsome octavo volume of nearly 600 pages, cloth, $4 25.

LEA (HENRY C.).

SUPERSTITION AND FORCE: ESSAYS ON THE WAGER OF LAW, THE WAGER OF BATTLE, THE ORDEAL, AND TORTURE. Second Edition,
 Enlarged. In one handsome volume royal 12mo. of nearly 500 pages; cloth, $2 75.
 (Lately Published.)

We know of no single work which contains, in so small a compass, so much illustrative of the strangest operations of the human mind. Foot-notes give the authority for each statement, showing vast research and wonderful industry. We advise our confrères to read this book and ponder its teachings.—Chicago Med. Journal, Aug. 1870.

As a work of curious inquiry on certain outlying points of obsolete law, "Superstition and Force" is one of the most remarkable books we have met with.—London Athenæum, Nov. 3, 1866.

He has thrown a great deal of light upon what must be regarded as one of the most instructive as well as interesting phases of human society and progress. . . The fulness and breadth with which he has carried out his comparative survey of this repulsive field of history [Torture], are such as to preclude our doing justice to the work within our present limits. But here, as throughout the volume, there will be found a wealth of illustration and a critical grasp of the philosophical import of facts which will render Mr. Lea's labors of sterling value to the historical student.—London Saturday Review, Oct. 8, 1870.

As a book of ready reference on the subject, it is of the highest value.—Westminster Review, Oct. 1867.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR. (Lately Published.)

STUDIES IN CHURCH HISTORY—THE RISE OF THE TEM-PORAL POWER—BENEFIT OF CLERGY—EXCOMMUNICATION. In one large royal 12mo. volume of 516 pp. cloth, $2 75.

The story was never told more calmly or with greater learning or wiser thought. We doubt, indeed, if any other study of this field can be compared with this for clearness, accuracy, and power.—Chicago Examiner, Dec. 1870.

Mr. Lea's latest work, "Studies in Church History," fully sustains the promise of the first. It deals with three subjects—the Temporal Power, Benefit of Clergy, and Excommunication, the record of which has a peculiar importance for the English student, and is a chapter on Ancient Law likely to be regarded as final. We can hardly pass from our mention of such works as these—with which that on "Sacerdotal Celibacy" should be included—without noting the literary phenomenon that the head of one of the first American houses is also the writer of some of its most original books.—London Athenæum, Jan. 7, 1871.

Mr. Lea has done great honor to himself and this country by the admirable works he has written on ecclesiastical and cognate subjects. We have already had occasion to commend his "Superstition and Force" and his "History of Sacerdotal Celibacy." The present volume is fully as admirable in its method of dealing with topics and in the thoroughness—a quality so frequently lacking in American authors—with which they are investigated.—N. Y. Journal of Psychol. Medicine, July, 1870.
