P R E F A C E.

ACCIDENTAL circumstances having placed me in a situation allowing much opportunity of observing the management of madhouses, and the treatment of insane persons; and considering the importance of the subject matter of this investigation, I was induced to believe the Public would derive some advantage from a more extended circulation of the Reports of the Committee on Madhouses, than the few copies printed by order of the House of Commons could possibly furnish.

With this view the present edition was undertaken, and is now presented to the Public.

I shall not presume to offer any observations upon the facts contained in the reports; the nature of the evidence being such as to carry a full conviction to the mind of every individual, of the great necessity of the Legislature enacting some powerful laws for the better regulation of madhouses: such observations, indeed, would be foreign to the immediate object of these preliminary remarks.

The report, as printed by the House of Commons, is in four Parts, and the evidence appears in the order in which it arose on the several days of examination, so that it is impossible for any one, unacquainted with the subject, to collect all the information relative to any one point, without great difficulty and labour. To obviate this difficulty, and to place the various subjects in a conspicuous point of view, the whole evidence is here arranged under distinct heads, shewing by a mere inspection, the principal objects to which the attention of the committee was directed.

Annexed to the reports were eight copper-plate engravings, but in this edition they are omitted for two reasons: first, They had no immediate connexion with the evidence, as they were designs for intended buildings: secondly, the reprinting of them would have occasioned considerable delay, and doubled the price of this edition without any corresponding advantage.

Under the head Powers of the Commissioners, it will be seen, much of the evidence of Dr. Powell and of Dr. Latham, relates to the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton, and to the Private Houses; but as the greater part of this evidence was illustrative both of the method in which the Commissioners prosecuted their enquiries, and of the extent of their powers, I preferred keeping the whole as it originally stood, to the separating of it under distinct heads. The connexion however is fully maintained, by the order in which these subjects are arranged, all which relates to the Powers of the Commissioners being placed after the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton, and followed by the evidence relating to Private Houses.

Should any one object to the propriety of this arrangement, he will be enabled to read the evidence in the order as published by the House of Commons, by means of the table prefixed to the Report, shewing the days on which the Committee held its sittings, and the witnesses examined on those days, with a reference to the pages in this edition.

In concluding, I cannot but offer my humble tribute of applause so justly due to the great promoter of this salutary investigation, THE RIGHT HON. GEORGE ROSE, whom posterity, with heartfelt gratitude, will record, as the protector of the wretched, and a benefactor to the miserable. “ HE that “ has improved the virtue, or advanced the happi“ ness, of one fellow-creature
“ may be contented with his own per“ formance, and with respect to mortals like him“ self, may demand like Augustus, to be dismissed
“ at his departure with applause.” *

ORDERED BY THE HOUSE OF COMMONS TO BE PRINTED, 11TH JULY, INST.

THE COMMITTEE appointed to consider of Provision being made for the better Regulation of MADHOUSES in England, and to report the same, with their Observations thereupon, to The HOUSE; and who were empowered to report the MINUTES of the EVIDENCE taken before them from time to time;—HAVE, pursuant to the Order of The House, considered the Matter to them referred, and agreed upon the following REPORT :—

YOUR Committee, deeply sensible of the importance of the Matter referred to their consideration, have applied themselves with great earnestness, to the performance of the duty imposed on them by The House.

The Evidence presented herewith, will show how extensive their inquiries have been. It was their intention to make Observations in detail on the several Heads of the Examination taken before them, and on the several public and private Establishments, for the reception of Insane Persons; but on reconsidering the whole subject, they have thought it advisable, in the first instance, to make their Report more general, for the reasons which will be stated.

Your Committee cannot however hesitate to suggest, with the utmost confidence, from the Evidence they now offer to the House, that some new provision of law is indispensably necessary for insuring better care being taken of Insane Persons, both in England and Ireland, than they have hitherto experienced; the number of whom appear to be very considerable; as the inquiries of the Committee have convinced them, that there are not in the Country a set of Beings more immediately requiring the protection of the Legislature than the persons in this state; a very large proportion of whom are entirely neglected by their relations and friends. If the treatment of those in the middling or in the lower classes of life, shut up in hospitals, private madhouses, or parish workhouses, is looked at, Your Committee are persuaded that a case cannot be found where the necessity for a remedy is more urgent.

It will appear on reference to the Evidence (relying principally on the testimony of the persons keeping the houses,) that in a few of them, the arrangement is as good as the contracted size of the houses, and the small extent of the ground attached to them, will admit; and that the treatment of the inhabitants in them has been kind and proper;—but it is in proof, that there is just and great cause of complaint against by far the greater part of the houses of this description, which have hardly, in any instance, been built for the purpose, and are incapable of being conveniently adapted to it.

Your committee have classed their Observations under the following Heads, that each may be referred to as the occasion may arise:—

Ist.—Keepers of the Houses receiving a much greater number of persons in them than they are calculated for ; and the consequent want of accommodation for the Patients, which greatly retards recovery ; they are, indeed, represented by the President of the College of Physicians, and the Physician acting as Secretary to the visiting Commissioners, who must be considered as the most competent judges on the subject, to be better calculated for the imprisonment than the cure of patients.

IIIdly.—The insufficiency of the number of Keepers, in proportion to the number of persons intrusted to their care, which unavoidably leads to a proportionably greater degree of restraint than the Patients would otherwise be under.

IIIIdly.—The mixing Patients who are outrageous, with those who are quiet and inoffensive ; and those who are insensible to the calls of nature, with others who are cleanly.

IVthly.—The want of medical assistance, as applied to the malady for which the persons are confined ; a point worthy of the most serious attention, as the practice very generally is to confine medical aid to corporeal complaints ; which circumstance the Committee are the more desirous of enforcing on the House, as an opinion has been given, by a respectable Physician and another person of great experience, that where the mental faculties are only partially affected (stated by them to be so in seven eighths of the cases,) medical assistance is of the highest importance.

Vthly.—Restraint of persons much beyond what is necessary, certainly retarding recovery, even beyond what is occasioned by the crowded state of the house ; of which many instances were stated to the Committee. In the course of the Evidence there will be found opinions unfavourable to the use of strait waistcoats, as more oppressive to the Patient even than irons; which induce your Committee to observe, that a waist-coat has been invented, under the view of one of the Members of it, which appears likely to be quite as secure as the one now in use, and infinitely less distressing to the wearer.

VIthly.—The situation of the parish paupers in some of the houses for Insane Persons; respecting the care of whom, when confined in parochial work-houses, the Committee also made some inquiries, as connected with the matter before them, although not expressly included in the reference to them.

VIIthly.—Detentions of persons, the state of whose minds did not require confinement:—On this ground of complaint, Your Committee had very slender means of information.

VIIIthly.—Insufficiency of certificates on which Patients are received into the madhouses.

IXthly.—The defective visitation of private Mad-houses, under the provisions of the 14 Geo. III, c. 49.

The references* are made by Your Committee to the pages of the Evidence, to show, with as little trouble as possible to the reader, what has been said respecting each. On consideration of which, Your Committee are persuaded, that no doubt will be entertained of the insufficiency of the visitation which has taken place, even within the limits of the district assigned to the care of the College of Physicians, from the professional occupations of the visitors not allowing them sufficient time to perform the duties required; and still less doubt will probably remain, of the utter insufficiency or total neglect of those duties in other parts of England. It follows of course, that some amendment of the law is requisite for this part of the subject.

* The references here alluded to, were marked in the margin of the report; but, the method of this arrangement followed in this edition, having placed the subject in different pages, the figures were omitted as useless.

Your Committee cannot resist observing also, that the Commissioners have not the power of withholding a new licence to a person deprived of one for the most flagitious conduct.

In Ireland, the necessity of making some further provision for Insane Persons, appears to be more urgent even than in this part of the United Kingdom; as it will be seen in the Evidence, that, with the exception of two public establishments, and some private houses in Dublin, there are no places appropriated separately for the reception of persons in this state in Ireland. In a few hospitals for general relief of patients, there are wards for Insane Persons, but these are very ill calculated for the attainment of the object that should be had in view; and as there are no poor houses in that part of the United Kingdom, the pauper lunatics are allowed to wander about the country, till those who are outrageous are sent up to Dublin, in a manner shocking to humanity; while the idiots are left to go about the villages, the sport of the common people.

As the Governors of the Asylum at York called the attention of the other House of Parliament, by petition, in the last session, to the management of the establishment, in order to show that it was unnecessary to subject it to the provisions of a Bill then depending, respecting Madhouses; and the Governors of Bethlem succeeded on that occasion in obtaining a clause, while the Bill was in the House, for a partial exemption from the provisions of the Act in favour of that Hospital; Your Committee are desirous of directing the attention of the House to the parts of the Evidence which relate to those two establishments.

Your Committee, impressed with the inadequacy of the Buildings for the reception of Insane Persons throughout England, obtained from an Architect, who has given great attention to this subject, and who has been employed to make designs for an Asylum for the West Riding of the county of York, Plans with Estimates, which they think may be useful to the public, especially in counties where there may be a disposition to erect houses for the reception of Insane Persons under the Act 48 Geo. III. c. 96; as it appears to Your Committee to be highly desirable to promote the operation of that wise and beneficent law, in order to prevent the intolerable evil of these unhappy persons being imprisoned in gaols or in parish workhouses, or permitted to wander about the country in a state of total helplessness and neglect; in the former case, to the great annoyance of the other prisoners or poor, as well as the unnecessary restraint and suffering to themselves; and in the latter, to the great danger of their doing mischief to others or to themselves.—(See Letter from Mr. Finch, near Salisbury, to the Chairman.)

Some suggestions for the improvement in the care and management of Houses for the reception of Insane Persons, will be found in the Evidence.

The length to which this Inquiry has been unavoidably drawn, must in any event have prevented, at this period of the Session, a Bill being passed in the remaining part of it, as perfect as the necessity of the case demands; Your Committee deeply lament the necessity for this delay, because the management in more than one of the places for the reception of the unhappy persons, has been so reprehensible, as, in their opinion, to subject the persons concerned, if it had been known, to criminal prosecutions; but that regret is somewhat abated by a conviction, that the state of those establishments has already been considerably meliorated by the Inquiries which have taken place.

Your Committee are persuaded also, that when the extent of the evil pointed out in this Report shall be generally known, the visiting Physicians in London and its neighbourhood will, as far as the professional calls upon them will permit, give additional attention to the duty they have been desirous of discharging; and that the Justices of the Peace in the several counties, will feel it to be their duty to watch, as narrowly as circumstances will admit, over the conduct of the keepers of these houses, and the treatment of the Patients in them. The Committee trust also, that every Magistrate in the kingdom, who may think the condition of Insane Persons worthy of his attentions, will inform himself as well as he can, respecting abuses of the nature alluded to, that it may be submitted to His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, whether it may be fit in such case, that a prosecution should be instituted at the suit of His Majesty's Attorney General.

If in any instance a Magistrate (during the approaching recess) shall be refused admittance into one of these houses, Your Committee cannot doubt, but that such refusal will have due weight with the persons who may hereafter be authorized to grant licences for keeping Houses of this description, if they shall be invested with a discretion to refuse them to unfit persons.

NEW BETHLEM HOSPITAL.

AFTER the patient Inquiry made by Your Committee on the matters referred to them, they thought it desirable to inspect the New Bethlem Hospital, erected in Saint George's Fields, but not yet inhabited; that they might consider, with the advantage they have acquired from this examination, how far the Building might appear to be well calculated for the accommodation of, and to afford the best chance of cure to, the Patients intended to be soon removed into it; and having accordingly made a careful inspection of that Building, they submit the following Observations:—

On entering the Gallery on the principal Floor, they observed that the windows were so high as to prevent the Patients looking out; with the unfitness of which Your Committee were struck, as intelligent persons had stated in the course of the examination, that the greatest advantage might be derived from the Patients having opportunities of seeing objects that might amuse them. An alteration might be made in this respect, if it shall be deemed proper by the Governors, at little expense, and with no risk of injury to the building; as it was stated by Mr. Upton, the Deputy Architect, that these windows were at first so constructed, but were afterwards built up at the lower part, on a suggestion that it would be inconvenient to expose the Patients to the view of passengers; which inconvenience it is conceived might be very easily obviated. The windows in the upper story appear to be properly constructed.

In the Sleeping Apartments the windows are not glazed, which Your Committee think deprives the Patients, generally, of a reasonable comfort, and may in many cases be really injurious; but what appears to be still more important, there are no flues constructed for the purpose of conducting warm air through the house, except in the lower galleries on the basement story, which are proposed to be warmed by steam. This appears to be deserving of serious consideration, because it is represented that the Patients suffer sensibly from cold; and Doctor Munro, the Physician to the Hospital, stated, that it had not been thought advisable to administer medicines in the winter, on account of the cold of the house.

In this opinion, respecting the advantage to be derived from the Hospital being properly warmed, the Committee are strengthened by the testimony of the Reverend Mr. Beecher, who has witnessed the good effect of it in the Nottingham Asylum, and in other places.

In the Infirmary for Female Patients, there are only three small windows, at a great height, on the northern side of the room; it appears therefore, that something should be done for ventilation, which might easily be accomplished.

The construction of the Privies appears to be very objectionable; and there is only one in each of the upper galleries, one in the criminal part, and two on the basement story; nor are there any privies or urinals in the airing grounds. And it seems doubtful, whether the drain passing under the beds, is on such a construction as will answer the intended purpose.

There is no room set apart for the reception of the dead bodies, which should be provided for.

There are eight acres of ground occupied for the Hospital, including the site of the buildings, the airing grounds, and one acre and an half intended for a kitchen garden; and there are nearly four acres more adjoining, which it is the intention of the Governors to turn to profit, the Act of Parliament restraining them to the use of eight. The Committee, however, think it may be expedient to submit to the consideration of Parliament, the propriety of enabling the Governors to devote this ground to the general purposes of the Hospital, from a conviction of the benefits the Patients derive from exercise, and in many cases from labour.

And that the Patients may not be entirely deprived of these benefits in wet weather, it appears to be desirable that penthouses should be erected against the cross walls of the airing grounds, or a sort of covering in the middle thereof, like those at St. Luke's Hospital.

In the Criminal Part of the building, the Committee find the same objection to the height of the windows, as before mentioned; and that no provision whatever is made for warming this department, although the warming pipes from the basement story are continued to the door at which this part is entered; and it may be useful, if external doors of iron grating should be provided on the basement story.

The Committee have only further to remark, that in this part of the building there is no Infirmary.

Resolved,

THAT the Chairman be directed to move The House, That leave be given to bring in a Bill, to amend and enforce the Provisions of the Act of the 14th Geo. III. c. 49, intituled, "An Act for regulating Madhouses."

11th July, 1815.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

Taken before the Select Committee appointed to consider of Provisions being made for the better Regulation of Madhouses in England.

YORK ASYLUM.

Lunæ, 1^o die Maii, 1815.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE GEORGE ROSE IN THE CHAIR.

GODFREY HIGGINS, Esq. called in, and Examined.

WHERE do you live?—At Skellow Grange, near Doncaster, in Yorkshire.

You are a Governor of the York Asylum, and a Magistrate of the West Riding of Yorkshire?—I am.

Have you any knowledge of the state and condition of the York Lunatic Asylum, and the method of treatment of the patients in that Asylum?—I have.

Have the goodness to state to the Committee how you became possessed of that information?—In the year 1813, application was made to me to grant a warrant against a man who had assaulted a poor woman: upon inquiry, I found the man to be insane, and ordered him to be sent to the Asylum at York. Sometime afterwards he returned, and I was informed he had been extremely ill used. The name of the man was William Vickers. In consequence of this I published several letters and other documents; upon which various meetings of the Governors were held, from time to time, for the course of twelve months, until the 27th of August last; upon which day all the servants and officers of the house were dismissed, or their places declared vacant, except one. Not being perfectly satisfied with what was done, I thought it incumbent upon me to publish a letter to Lord Fitzwilliam, as Lord Lieutenant of that Riding; in which, to the best of my knowledge, I stated every thing that I knew relating to the Institution, and to the abuses which had taken place in that house. The Appendix contains a Report of the Committee appointed to investigate the abuses, and the new Rules and Regulations.

[A Copy of this Pamphlet was laid upon the Table of the Committee.]

In what condition did you find this Asylum when you visited it in the Spring Assize week of 1814?—Having suspicions in my mind that there were some parts of that Asylum which had not been seen, I went early in the morning, determined to examine every place. After ordering a great number of doors to be opened, I came to one which was in a retired situation in the kitchen apartments, and which was almost hid by the opening of a door in the passage. I ordered this door to be opened; the keepers hesitated, and said, the apartment belonged to the women, and they had not the key. I ordered them to get the key; but it was said to be mislaid, and not to be found at the moment. Upon this I grew angry, and told them I insisted upon its being found; and that, if they would not find it, I could find a key at the kitchen fire-side, namely, the poker; upon that the key was immediately brought. When the door was opened, I went into the passage, and I found four cells, I think, of about eight feet square, in a very horrid and filthy situation; the straw appeared to be almost saturated with urine and excrement; there was some bedding laid upon the straw in one cell, in the others only loose straw. A man (a keeper) was in the passage doing something, but what I do not know. The walls were daubed with excrement; the air-holes, of which there were one in each cell, were partly filled with it. In one cell there were two pewter chamber-pots, loose. I asked the keeper if these cells were inhabited by the patients, and was told they were at night. I then desired him to take me up stairs, and shew me the place of the women who came out of those cells that morning; I then went up stairs, and he shewed me into a room, which I caused him to measure, and the size of which, he told me, was twelve feet by seven feet ten inches; and in which there were thirteen women, who, he told me, had all come out of those cells that morning.

Were they pauper-women?—I do not know. I was afraid that afterwards he should deny that, and therefore I went in and said to him, “Now, Sir, clap your hand upon the head of this woman,” and I did so too; and I said, "Is this one of the very women that were in those cells last night?" And he said she was. I became very sick, and could not remain longer in the room; I vomited. In the course of an hour and a half after this I procured Colonel Cooke, of Owston, and John Cooke, Esq. of Cams Mount, to examine those cells; they had come to attend a special meeting, which I had caused to be called that day at twelve o'clock. Whilst I was standing at the door of the cells, waiting for the key, a young woman ran past me, amongst the men-servants, decently dressed; I asked who she was; and was told by Atkinson that she was a female patient of respectable connexions. At a special meeting of the Governors, which I had caused to be called, I told them what I had seen; and I asked Atkinson, the apothecary, in their presence, if what I had said was not correctly true; and I told him, if he intended to deny any part of it, he must do it then: he bowed his assent, and acknowledged what I said was true. I then desired the Governors to come with me to see those cells; and then I discovered, for the first time, that the cells were unknown to the Governors. Several of the committee, which consisted of fifteen, told me they had never seen them; that they had gone round the house with his Grace the Archbishop of York; that they had understood they were to see the whole house, and these cells had not been shewn to them. We went through the cells, and at that time they had been cleaned as much as they could in so short a space of time. I turned up the straw in one of them with my umbrella, and pointed out to the gentlemen the chain and handcuff which were then concealed beneath the straw, and which I then perceived had been fixed into a board newly put down in the floor. I afterwards inquired of one of the Committee of Five, who had been appointed to afford any temporary accommodations which they could for a moderate sum of money to the patients, if those cells had been shewn to that Committee, and I was told they had not. Before I saw these cells I had been repeatedly told by Atkinson, the apothecary, and the keepers, that I had seen the whole house that was occupied by patients; I afterwards was told, by a professional man, (Mr. Pritchett) that he had heard Mr. Watson, the architect, ask one of the keepers what those places were; Mr. Watson at that time was looking out of the staircase windows, and he heard the keeper answer Mr. Watson, that they were cellars and other little offices. The day after my examination of these cells, I went again early in the morning to examine them, after I knew that the straw could have been used only one night; and I can positively say, from this examination, that the straw which I first found there must have been in use a very considerable time. Early in the investigation which took place into this Institution, several gentlemen came forward to state that they had examined the house, on purpose to form a judgment of it, but, though several of them were present when I stated the case of these cells, they did not state that they had seen them. When Colonel Cooke, of Owston, was in one of the cells, he tried to make marks or letters in the excrement remaining upon the floor after it had been cleaned, and fresh straw put upon it; which he did without any difficulty, and which he will be ready to state to the Committee, if required. The day after I saw these cells, I went up into the apartments of the upper class of female patients with one of the men-keepers, as I should suppose, about thirty years of age, one of those who were dismissed in August; and I asked him, when at the door of the ward, if his key would not open those doors; I did not give him time to answer, but I seized the key from his hand, and with it opened the outer door of the ward, and then went and opened the bed-room doors of the upper class of female patients, and locked them again; I then gave him his key again. Mr. Samuel Tuke, a Quaker, at York, was standing by, and saw me.

Do you know of any unfit practices with respect to the female patients?—Yes; I have been informed they have been got with child; and I have now in my hand a copy of a warrant, granted by Frederick L'Oste, of the county of Lincoln, to apprehend James Backhouse, the head-keeper, who was charged with having got with child Elizabeth West, a female pauper, sent to this Asylum by the overseers of the poor of the Township of Louth; the warrant appears to have been backed, on the 17th of June, 1797, by R. Metcalfe. I am informed that he was taken by the authority of this warrant to Louth, where Elizabeth West fathered the child upon him. Elizabeth West was admitted into the Asylum, August the 17th, 1796, was removed May the 8th, 1797, and was delivered of a male child August the 19th, 1797; the keeper Backhouse paid 30*l.* to the overseers of the poor of the parish of Louth, for the maintenance of the bastard; he paid it by three instalments; it appears by the town books, that the overseers of the poor have made themselves debtors in these sums to the township: I am informed that Elizabeth West was a young woman of exceedingly good character before she went to the Asylum; and she is now a woman of exceedingly good character, and has been living some years in a respectable family. Sometime after this the head-keeper retired from this house; upon which occasion a piece of plate was voted to him as a mark of approbation of his conduct during a service of twenty-six years; I have not the most distant suspicion, that any one of the governors who voted for this piece of plate, had any knowledge whatever of this transaction between Backhouse and West, except the physician Hunter.

In what line of life is Backhouse at present?—He now keeps a private Madhouse in York.

Do you know of any case more recent, of the same nature?—Yes; the case of Dorothy Exilby of Kirby Malzeard; she was admitted February 8th, 1801, she was discharged cured February 20th, 1802, delivered of a male child the 21st September, 1802; the father of this child is said to have been one of the patients. I have heard also, and believe from the respectable authority from which I received it, that a woman in a superior situation in life who was there as an insane patient, was got with child by some person within the house.

Do you know whether, amongst the women whom you found as inhabitants of the cells, you have described as having been concealed, there were persons of a better situation of life than pauper lunatics?—I think there were not at that time.

Have you reason to believe that women of that better situation of life, had ever been confined there?—I have not.

Do you know of any cases of cruelty or unnecessary severity having been exercised in that Asylum?—I conceive the case of William Vickers must have been a case both of cruelty and of very great neglect. When I examined him, which I did very soon after I was told he had returned from York, his body appeared to be bruised in many parts; I was informed he had a bad sore on his leg, and I refused to order the overseer of the poor to give him relief, until he had procured for my satisfaction the certificate of Mr. Maples, a surgeon of Thorn (who attended the poor people of the parish) as to his state of health; of which the following is a copy:

“ This is to certify, That I was sent for by Mr. Hopwood
“ of Thorning Hurst, on Thursday the 14th instant, to exa“ mine the state in which William Vickers of Staniforth was “ dismissed from the York Asylum. He had the itch very “ bad, was also extremely filthy, for I saw his wife not only “ comb several lice from his head, but take them from the “ folds of his shirt neck; his health was so much impaired “ that he was not able to stand by himself; his legs were “ very much swelled, and one of them in a state of mortifi“ cation. He is now much recovered both in mind and “ health, by bark and a generous nourishing diet. Witness
“ my hand, this 29th day of October, 1813.

“ Charles Maples.”

Upon that certificate being sent to me, I ordered him relief, and

I began to make enquiries of his relations and friends, into all the circumstances which had taken place respecting him, and I have no doubt, that if the eight or nine disinterested witnesses had been examined by the governors, this case would have been completely made out. Several of the witnesses told me, from the appearance of his back when he first came from York, that he had been flogged; he repeatedly told them so when in the Asylum; and at one time, when one or two of the witnesses were present with him in the Asylum, a woman was brought from the other part of the Asylum, and she told them that she was flogged also. When I saw Vickers, the black marks remained very strong, but the marks of the whip-lashes, which they described, had disappeared. Vickers, at the time I saw him, was in such a state of health, that he could not give an intelligent answer to any question whatever, although he walked about and ate his victuals heartily. Another case which I laid before the governors, was that of the Rev. Mr. Shorey; he was a clergyman, reduced to indigence I believe in consequence of his mental complaint; he had at times, and for considerable periods, intervals of reason; in those intervals, when he was perfectly capable of understanding every thing that was done to him, repeatedly in the presence of his wife he was exposed to personal indignity; and on one occasion he was inhumanly kicked down stairs by the keepers, and told, in the presence of his wife, that he was looked upon no better than a dog; his person swarmed with vermin: And to complete this poor man's misery, the keepers insulted his wife with indecent ribaldry, in order to deter her from visiting him in his unfortunate situation; his wife occasionally visited him, to bring him such little comforts as she could procure by the labour of her hands, for she worked to support him during the time that he was in the Asylum: he had a gold watch, which was lost there, and which his wife could never recover.

How long ago was this case?—I should think not more than three years ago.

Do you know any thing of the cases of two persons of the name of Thirkell?—Yes.

Were they relations?—Yes.

Have the goodness to state to the Committee, what you know about them?—One of them, a labouring man, was sent to the Asylum on the recommendation of Miss Place of York; after some time he disappeared, and has never been heard of from that time to this.

In what way was his disappearance entered in the books?—He was entered "removed;" when Miss Place called to enquire after his state of health, as she told me, she asked Atkinson the apothecary, how he did, and Atkinson said, he was gone away well. I have asked the father of this young man, if he knew whether hand-bills were published, or any means taken to discover him; he said, he never heard of any, and he never could get a sight of a hand-bill.

Did Atkinson, or any one belonging to the Asylum, say, that hand-bills were issued offering a reward for his discovery?—Yes, the steward said so; and on the day when I discovered the concealed cells, I asked Mr. Surr the steward, to produce to me the printer's bill for that quarter of the year in which the hand-bill must have been entered, if any had been printed by the printer of the Asylum; and he told me, after a long search, that he had lost the bill.

How long ago is this?—About two years ago. The other Thirkell was a relation of the former, and came from Sherbon in Yorkshire, and was killed some time after he was in the Asylum by another patient; his death was entered in the book of the Institution where the accounts are kept of what becomes of the patients, under the word, "died." Upon my examining Mr. Surr at the meeting in August, as to the mode in which the casualties were entered, he acknowledged that they were all entered in the same way; but in the case of Thirkell a coroner's inquest did sit, and the verdict of the jury was entered in the order book, which was a book kept locked up for the use of the governors. When a man of the name of Bardwell, alias Chappy, was killed a little after this, and who was endeavoured to be buried privately, and without a coroner's inquest, his death was also entered "died;" but the Reverend Mr. Graham having heard that he had been killed, would not bury him, but insisted upon a coroner's jury being summoned; and the verdict of the jury was, "that he had died by the violence of three other of the patients."

Have you any reason to doubt that the fact was as found by the coroner's jury?—Certainly not; I never meant to attach blame in the case of Thirkell, who was killed, and I only named him in my information to the governors to clearly distinguish his case from that of the Thirkell who had disappeared, for at that time I did not know the christian names of the two.

Do you know whether any book or books are kept, so as to ascertain with accuracy the number of patients admitted, and how they are disposed of, whether by cure, or by death, or escapes, or in any other way?—There was a set of books regularly kept by the apothecary, and also another set by the steward, both of which purported to be a correct account of the admissions of the patients, and how they were disposed of; but I have reason to believe that those accounts were false, and that they were kept falsely on purpose. By the report of the committee of investigation, it appears that the patients admitted from the opening of the Institution up to the 1st of July 1813, had been 2,560, and that the deaths during that period had been 365; but it appears that a publication of the state of the Asylum, signed by Mr. Atkinson the apothecary, was made in the York Herald, August 1812, and another in August 1813; which are as follow:

In the last account, the deaths within the year ending June 1813, appear to be eleven; but I found upon examining the register of the Parish Church of Saint Olave's, that either eighteen or nineteen had been buried in that churchyard alone in that year, and the Committee have ascertained, that twenty-four had really died in that year; it appears therefore, that thirteen were taken from the deaths and added to some other item, to make the sums agree; this would have the effect of disguising the mortality, and also of supporting the credit of the house in a two-fold manner, if added to the cures; and if reference was had to the Extract from the York Herald of August 17th, 1811, I think, that, in that year will clearly appear to have taken place; the following are the two Accounts published for 1811 and 1812:

The Accounts kept by the apothecary and the steward, were Debtor and Creditor Accounts; and as it appears, from a comparison of the Report of the Committee and the extracts from the York Herald, that the deaths of 144 patients had actually been concealed, they must have been concealed from design, because the account is a debtor and creditor account, and if the account was false in one place, it must have been false in more places than one, or else the sum totals could not have agreed; therefore as this arises upon debtor and creditor accounts kept by two men, and they both agreed, and both were false, it must necessarily be a falsification by quadruple entry, not double entry only. I asked the apothecary, who made out these accounts? and he told me, that he did, but that it was his practice to send them to the physician and to the steward for examination, previous to their publication.

Do you know what has become of the books of the Institution?—Yes; the committee for the management of the Institution, about last Christmas, sent to the steward, to desire him to send them his books of accounts. He told them, he would not do it, for the books were his, and he would not give them up, They reported this at a quarterly court; upon which Mr. Brook, the treasurer, was sent to demand them; when, he told Mr.

Brook, that, in a moment of irritation, he had burned them all except a single quarterly account, namely, that for the last quarter of 1814, which he delivered up. A few days afterwards, the steward produced a set of quarterly books for the last sixteen years. The books produced were those occasionally inspected by the governors, and they purposed to contain an account of the sums received for the patients. There was, however, another set of books, which have not been produced, in which the steward entered his actual receipts; and it was by the comparison of a single quarterly account belonging to this set, which accidentally came into the hands of the Committee of Enquiry, with a quarterly book of corresponding date belonging to the former set, that the physician's participation in the weekly payments of certain classes of patients was discovered. I have, I think, therefore reason to believe that the burning of the books, if it actually took place, was not a sudden sally of passion, but a deliberate act of selection; that information was given to me by Mr. Jonathan Gray of York, one of the governors, who was present at the time.

Do you know any thing respecting the mortality within the Asylum?—Yes; I believe the average number of patients during Dr. Hunter's life, for thirty-two years, ending in 1808, was 84; and that the deaths upon the average were eight per annum, or about a tenth of the whole. Since Dr. Hunter's death, the number of patients has been as follows:—In 1809, 156; in 1810, 168; in 1811, 168; in 1812, 186; in 1813, 200; in 1814, 173. The average number of patients was 175. The deaths on an average, have been 25 in a year, or a seventh of the whole. During the year ending the 1st July, 1814, the number of patients was as follows:—1813: July, 200; August, 198; September, 196; October, 199; November, 188; December, 186.—1814: January, 173; February, 160; March, 160; April, 159; May, 139; June, 121. The average number for the year, is 173. The deaths were 33, or nearly one-fifth of the whole. There was no death took place from the 14th July 1814, up to the 3d of February 1815, nearly seven months. In the former year, exclusive of the four that were said to be burned, there was a mortality of one-sixth of the whole patients, 29 out of 173, whereas during Dr. Hunter's life they did not exceed one-tenth of the whole. The same proportion, videlicet, that of 1813-14, would allow 17 deaths during the year ending in July, 1815.

Do you know how many patients have died during the last year, in the Asylum?—When I enquired last, about a month ago, I was told there had been three.

Do you know the mortality that took place in the Institution called the Retreat at York, by which the Committee can be made acquainted with the ratio of deaths in the number of patients?—A greater mortality appears to me to have taken place in the Asylum, than in the Retreat, cæteris paribus. I beg leave to observe, that the calculation ought always to be made on the average number of patients in the house, and not upon the number admitted in the year. I believe the deaths in the Asylum, in the first thirty-six years, were 365; the average number of patients in the Asylum, about 98: the deaths in the Retreat, in sixteen years, were 26; the average number of patients in the Retreat, 46. I have been informed, that of 82 old cases, stated to be incurable, admitted into the Retreat, 16 were discharged cured. At Saint Luke's only 18 out of 323 incurables were reported cured; and from Bethlem Hospital but one out of 78 was discharged cured, and that one was returned to the Hospital.

How long is it since the Asylum was burnt?—A few days after the court of governors at York had ordered a general investigation, by a committee, into the rules and management of the Institution (which was about last January twelvemonth) the building was found to be on fire.

Did any investigation take place how it came to be on fire?—Yes; a general meeting took place immediately on the spur of the occasion, and a committee of five gentlemen was appointed; and they made a report a few weeks afterwards, that they believed four patients had been burnt.

Do you believe more than four people were burnt?—I can hardly state a decisive opinion upon that subject; only it appears by the report of the committee, that several patients had been admitted into the house, of whom no account whatever can be given.

You mean by that, that they are not now existing in the house, and they can produce no proof of their being discharged?—Yes; viz. Margaret Smith, admitted February 17th, 1787; Catherine St. Clair, admitted October 16th, 1790; D. Myson, admitted April 20th, 1796; D. Thackwray, admitted July 20th, 1796; and Mrs. Parke, admitted August 19th, 1797.

At what time of the day or night did the fire break out?—At about eight o'clock in the evening.

Do you know any thing of the use of chains in the house?—Yes, I do; but I never thought or stated it as my opinion, that the use of a chain would have been a charge against the Institution, if it had not been stated by Dr. Best and all the keepers, that to their knowledge there were no chains in the house, and that they were unnecessary.

Did you find any chains in the house?—Yes, I did; I found a chain in one of the cells that was concealed, which certainly did not appear to have been recently used; and I should never have made an observation upon that chain, if it had not, as I have said before, been repeatedly stated by the officers and servants of the Institution, that to their knowledge there was not such a thing in the house.

Did you find, in any other part of the house, chains?—Yes, I did; on the day when all the servants and officers of the house were dismissed, I went to a closet at the side of a fire in one of the cells, and demanded the key of it; we could find all the keys in the house but that, and the carpenter was obliged to open it. In that closet I found an instrument, which I believe is called by Shakespear a gyve; it is a strong iron bar about two feet long, with a shackle at each end, intended to keep open the legs of a patient; it is fastened to an iron belt which goes round the body of the patient, and has two chains to it, and handcuffs for the hands of the patient. I took it directly to the weighing scales, and that part of it which was there, for the chain was wanting, weighed 24lbs. I desired it to be taken care of, in order that the Committee of the House of Commons might see it, if they should be so disposed. It appeared rusty, and not to have been lately used. The keeper could give no account of when it came into the house.

Did you find any where about the house, any chains in such a state as to induce you to think the use of them had been recently required in the house?—No! nor do I believe they had.

Have any new laws been made?—Yes.

Bearing what date?—The new laws were passed last August.

Dr. Best the physician has resigned, has he not?—He has.

So that at this moment there is not an officer belonging to the Institution, who was there during the time the abuses you have been detailing existed?—Yes; there is one, Mr. Brook, the treasurer, who I believe every body thought had conducted himself with very great honour to himself, and advantage to the Institution; Dr. Best resigned lately, assigning ill health as the cause.

Have you any reason to believe that the food of the patients was bad?—Yes; Mary Beckwith, who was examined in the case of Martha Kidd, one of the cases of abuse I laid before the governors, told me, that she was faint for want of something to eat, when attending as a witness, and she was ordered some bread and cheese; that the bread was of the vilest and worst description she ever saw in her life. I asked Mr. Ridsdale, a respectable linen-draper in Pomfret, who was there at that time, if he saw any thing of that bread, and he said he had, and he was ready to make oath of it if necessary, and that it was in his opinion of the worst quality he ever saw in his life; and therefore I think they would have hardly given the witnesses upon such an occasion, such bad bread, if they had not fed their patients with it.

Were the servants of the Institution in the practice of taking fees from any of the patients, or of exacting money from them, upon one pretence or another?—A respectable man of the name of Hanson told me, that when he was a patient in the house, he was shut up in a dark cell naked, sometimes with another patient, and sometimes by himself, for a week at a time or more; that he was obliged to obey the calls of nature in a corner of the room; that the straw was not changed for a considerable number of days; and that at one time when he was there, when the keeper brought him his meat, he promised him five shillings when he went out, if he would get him a shirt; and when he did come out and left the Institution he gave the keeper five shillings according to his promise. I understood this gentleman, that when he gave him the five shillings he was recovered, and on that account, I conceive, he is a credible evidence as to the fact. The physician and apothecary also took fees in one case; a Mr. Mandell, of Doncaster, paid the physician five guineas, upon which occasion Mr. Atkinson also received two, as was stated to me by the relations of the patient who paid them.

What has become of Mr. Atkinson since he was discharged from the Institution?—He has set up a private Madhouse of his own at York.

Do you know that any sums of money have been misapplied?—I have great reason to think there have; and I have stated my reasons at length for that opinion, in my letter to Earl Fitzwilliam.

Do you know an instance of a patient being found out of his proper place?—Yes, I do; one was found by Mr. Samuel Tuke and Mr. Pritchett in the wash-house; it was in the month of April; he was standing on a wet stone floor, apparently in the last stage of decay; he was a mere skeleton; his thighs were nearly covered with excrement in a dry state, and those parts which were not so, appeared excoriated, as did also some parts of his waist. The keeper, who was called, said, that the patient was not accustomed to leave his bed; that he was a perfect child, and could do nothing for himself; that his attendant was killing pigs, and could not therefore attend to him; the bed which he was said to have left was in a most filthy state, and corresponded with that of his body; he was spoken of by all the attendants as a dying man. The further history of this poor creature, however, proved the fallacy of appearances; he was removed to another part of the Asylum, where he was better attended to, and in a few months was so much recovered as to be removed to his parish, in an inoffensive though imbecile state of mind.

GODFREY HIGGINS, Esq. again called in, and examined.

IN your examination of yesterday, you stated that it appeared by the Report, that certain patients were missing or unaccounted for; did the Asylum, or the relatives of any of those persons so missed, take any trouble to discover what had become of them? —Not to my knowledge.

You stated yesterday, that a considerable misapplication of the public money had taken place; will you inform the Committee, as briefly as you can, how that arose, and to whose use the misapplied money was appropriated?—In the seventh page of the Report of the Committee of Enquiry, it will be seen that a classification took place in the year 1785, and it is therein also admitted, that this order was never repealed. From this it appears, that certain weekly payments were directed; and in page 29, it is stated, that “when any patients of a better condition offer themselves to the Asylum, they are admitted upon a rate of payment which may be deemed adequate to their circumstances; and that Dr. Hunter, to whom the Governors think themselves obliged, for his liberal, disinterested, and charitable attendance upon the necessitous objects of the charity, may be requested to do justice to his own interest, by receiving from the friends of such patients the reasonable emoluments of his profession:” And that in the same page, it is also stated what the weekly payments of the patients should be, and what items they should discharge; viz. “the weekly payments, discharge board and lodging, coal, candle, tea, washing, and medicines.” These orders could not be considered obsolete by the physician, because, in 1813, he published a Report, of which the following is a part; and it appears by the order book, that this Report was proposed by himself, and is entered in the book, as follows: “Resolved, That the Report now produced and submitted to the Court by Dr. Best be adopted, and that the same be printed and distributed;” and it contained the following passages: “The friends of the patients pay a weekly sum in proportion to their ability, and by this arrangement, the utility of the Institution is extended to the various classes of society, and at the same time the expenses of the indigent are reduced by the payments of the more affluent patients. Parish and other paupers are maintained at the expense of nine shillings a week; the weekly payments of persons in low circumstances, but not absolutely in the condition of paupers, is from 10s. to 15s.; patients in better circumstances, and in the higher stations of life, are charged with moderation according to their respective means. A certain number of patients, in very distressed circumstances, who pay for their own board, and have no assistance from their parishes, receive the benefit of $$5\text{l.}$ per annum (being the interest of the reduction fund) along with the overflowings of the payments of the more affluent patients. The above payments discharge lodging, board, coal and candle, tea, washing, and medicines; but those patients, whose expenses exceed 9s. a week, are separately charged for their washing. The physician is required to attend gratis on the paupers, and on those who are maintained at reduced payments; but is authorized to receive from the friends of the more affluent patients the reasonable emoluments of his profession." In the above Report it is stated, that parish and other paupers are maintained at nine shillings a week, and we are given to understand that the physician receives emoluments from the affluent only; yet, from seventeen of the patients maintained at nine shillings, the physician was receiving one shilling per week each. It is stated, the physician "is authorized to receive reasonable emoluments from the affluent." Mr. Wilson paid one hundred and nine pounds four shillings per annum, of which the physician only accounted for thirty-six pounds eight shillings, retaining the remaining sum of seventy-two pounds sixteen shillings as "his reasonable emolument." The thirty-six pounds eight shillings paid to the house was also to leave overflowings to the distressed patients. In page 48 of the Report of the Committee of Enquiry it will be seen, that there were

Fourteen patients, at 4s. each per week	-	$\text{£.}145$	12	0
Twelve ditto, at 2s. each per week	- - -	62	8	0
Seventeen ditto, at 1s. each per week	- - -	44	4	0

Now, take the first class of patients at 16s. and the part taken from them at $1\text{l. } 8\text{s.}$; for Mr. Wilson, of Saviour Gate, paid $2\text{l. } 2\text{s.}$ to the Asylum, of which the physician took $1\text{l. } 8\text{s.}$, and there will remain for him	- - -	252	4	0

Which, added to the former, makes	- -	$1,417$	0	0
-----------------------------------	-----	---------	-----	-----

This sum, multiplied by five, the number of years Dr. Best has held the situation, gives	$7,085$	0	0
And by twenty-three, the time Dr. Hunter might have taken these sums, viz. since the year 1785, gives	$32,591$	0	0

Now give me leave to observe, that this statement is founded part on fact and part on reasoning merely from the facts stated by the Committee; but I can prove, on unquestionable evidence, that as much as four pounds a week have been paid; and if I cast off for errors in taking too high an average, or in any other part of the account, 20,000*l.*, I apprehend enough will have been shewn to prove that the physicians had applied to their own use large sums, without any authority.

Was there any committee or visitors who looked after the affairs of the Asylum?—No; the physician had for many years past been the sole physician, sole visitor, and sole committee, and had the whole management of the Institution.

There was no visitation of the Asylum at all by any of the governors, or the magistrates in the neighbourhood?—I never heard that there was any visitation by governors, except at the quarter days, and the annual day; and the magistrates had no authority whatever.

At these quarterly and annual meetings, did the governors who visited examine into the conduct and management of the house?—I never heard that they went over it to examine it at those periods.

There was no duty prescribed to them by the laws?—I do not know of any; they met quarterly to audit the accounts, and to make such orders as they thought proper.

Do you, in point of fact, believe that in that period any personal inspection and examination by the governors, of the state and condition of the lunatics within the Asylum, took place?—No, I do not.

Do you know whether, shortly previous to the time of your visiting the cells you described yesterday, there had been any quarterly meeting of the governors? I think not, but constant meetings had taken place of the committees to enquire into the abuses of the house.

Do you believe the governors knew of the misapplication of the money, or the general mismanagement of the Asylum?—I conceive the physician, who was one of the governors, could not be ignorant of it, whether others were or not, I cannot tell; but I am certain a great many of them were ignorant.

Are you acquainted with any other houses, in which there is any degree of mismanagement of the Lunatics?—Yes, in a house at Spinkwell, near Bradford, the situation in which I found the Lunatic paupers was most deplorable; one of them was chained to a stone floor, wallowing in his own excrement and filth; another of them bolted fast into a chair from which he could not move; this house had no licence, and had never been visited regularly by any magistrates, as the woman-keeper of it told me, and I only got access to it by threatening her, that as I was a magistrate, I would punish her, and that I would ruin her by suing for the fine of 500*l.* Mr. Gee, surveyor, of Little Houghton, was present with me when I visited this house.

How many persons were there confined in it?—I do not recollect, certainly, but about seven or eight.

Were all of them ill treated?—No, not all.

Were those persons so chained down, represented to you as particularly violent?—Yes.

Did they appear to you to be so?—No.

What steps did you take in consequence of finding them in such a situation?—I represented it to the magistrates at the Leeds sessions; but nothing was done, as we were upon the point of building a new place for our paupers in the Riding; and we were in hopes Mr. Rose's bill would pass, which would regulate all these places.

Do you believe those persons remain in the same situation at present?—I saw them sometime after that, and I think their situation was not mended; the second time I visited the house, three patients were chained in one bed; two were lying lengthwise, and one across the other two. A young man, called Craven, the son of an auctioneer at Bradford was present with me.

You say that house had not been regularly visited by any magistrate; have you reason to believe it had ever been visited at all by any magistrate?—I believe Mr. Lister had visited it once or twice a very little time before I had gone there; but I have named the circumstance of this house to a considerable number of the Justices at Pomfret sessions; and, except Mr. Lister, I did not find any that knew of it.

No step was taken, upon your stating to the magistrates what you had seen, for the correction of those abuses, gross as they were, but it was put off on the hope of Mr. Rose's Bill placing these establishments upon a better footing?—Yes, that was the way I understood it was disposed of; I beg leave to add, upon recollection, that it was settled that Mr. Lister should look after this, and see that they were taken care of, as well as the circumstances would admit, until the passing of Mr. Rose's Act.

Do you know whether any thing was done, in consequence of that, by Mr. Lister?—No, I do not; but I dare say Mr. Lister did look after it, and probably their situation is mended.

BRYAN COOKE, ESQ. called in, and examined.

YOU are a Magistrate of the West Riding of the County of York?—I am.

Did you, in March 1814, visit certain cells pointed out to you by Mr. Higgins, in the Lunatic Asylum at York?—I did.

In what state did you find them?—I found them newly cleaned out; the stench was abominable; I turned over the new straw which had been put upon the floor, and the boards were wet; and I pressed my stick upon the floor, to see whether it was impregnated with the moisture, and I could have marked any letter upon it in the remains of the filth. I should say it was hardly possible it could have been cleaned out for a considerable time; the floor was completely saturated with filth.

Do you know any other particulars of the state of the Asylum at York?—The general state of the Asylum was filthy in the extreme.

Have you read the statement made by Mr. Higgins, of the part which you took along with him, in the examination of the Lunatic Asylum?—I have.

Are the statements there made by Mr. Higgins, of your interference in the business, correct?—Perfectly so. I think it was in or about March 1814 there was a meeting, at which I attended, and I was desired by one of the governors to go into one of the day-rooms; he said he had a person there that had formerly worked for him, and he wished to see him. I, together with a governor and Colonel John Cooke, of Camp's Mount, went into a day-room; there were about twelve men patients in it. Upon opening the door, my feelings were so offended, that I could hardly proceed from the stench; I retreated into the passage, and was very near vomiting; Colonel John Cooke, who was with me, staid about two minutes longer in the day-room, and he assured me that he felt the nausea the whole day afterwards.

Veneris, 26^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Dr. CHARLES BEST, of York, called in, and examined.

Is not your attendance here, for the purpose of making some remarks on the evidence given respecting the York Asylum, of which you were Physician?—It is.

Are the questions delivered in by you, such as you wish to have asked you, with reference to some passages of the evidence alluded to?—They are; and I should be glad to answer any other questions which may be put to me by the Committee.

(No. 1.) Did you ever observe thirteen women confined together in a very small room up-stairs at the York Asylum?—I did.

(No. 2.) Was this a common practice?—By no means; it only occurred in consequence of the usual accommodation of these individuals having been destroyed by the previous fire.

(No. 3.) Was it likely to be known to the male keepers, what number of female patients occupied the cells at night?—I should believe not, it being the province of the female keepers only to attend to the female patients.

(No. 4.) Do you know any thing of a young female patient who was permitted to go about the house without any restraint?—I do; the person alluded to was only in a partial state of insanity, and generally conducting herself with propriety; and was in the habit of living during that time with the matron of the house, whose apartment adjoined to the kitchen; it was during her passing from her bed-room to that apartment, that she was seen by Mr. Higgins, as represented in his evidence.

(No. 5.) Do you know any thing respecting any female patients who are said to have become pregnant during their residence at the Asylum?—I only know of such cases by report, they being said to have occurred many years before I had any connection with the Asylum.

(No. 6.) Do you recollect the particulars of the case of William Vickers?—I do; he was brought to the Asylum in a violent state of insanity; he continued in the Asylum for a considerable length of time, varying both in the state of his mind and of his bodily health: in the month of September he was seized with an apoplectic fit, and continued in a state of helpless deplorable bodily illness for some time afterwards, his discharges being involuntary, and it being impossible, with any degree of attendance, to keep him in a state of complete cleanliness; during that period he had a special attendant constantly by him, and was supplied with every extra comfort and attendance which were judged necessary, and which his lamentable situation required; in the month of October, in the very early stage of his convalescence, he was removed from the Asylum; the state in which he then was seen by Mr. Higgins and other persons, who have been mentioned as Witnesses on this case, was occasioned by his previous bodily illness, and not by any improper treatment he had received at the Asylum.

(No. 7.) Were the keepers permitted to strike or flog the patients?—Never: I myself suggested, and was the means of introducing a law into the Asylum, some time previous to the occurrence of the matter now alluded to, that if any keeper or servant should strike or otherwise ill treat any patient in the Asylum, such keeper or servant should be dismissed from his situation. The Committee of Inquiry made special investigation into that particular subject, and did not find any grounds for believing that patients were subject to beating or any other ill treatment in the Asylum.

(No. 8.) Do you remember the case of Mr. Schorey?—I do;

he was in the Asylum at various periods, with certain intervals, for two years or longer; during the greatest part of that time he was constantly visited by his wife, and his wife also frequently (generally about once a week) called upon me to communicate with me respecting him. It is stated in the Minutes of Evidence, that he was repeatedly treated, in the presence of his wife, at the Asylum, with personal indignity. Mrs. Schorey stated in evidence, that she heard him kicked down stairs, which I conceive impossible; and though, as stated above, Mrs. Schorey was in the habit of calling upon me about once a week, during the greatest part of the time her husband was confined in the Asylum, she never, on any one occasion, complained to me of ill treatment, which her husband is said to have received. When I say impossible, I mean impossible that she could have distinguished by the ear whether her husband had been kicked down stairs or not. With regard to his person swarming with vermin, as far as I know, it happened only on one occasion. The case of the Rev. Mr. Schorey was investigated by the Committee of Inquiry of the Governors of the York Lunatic Asylum, and there were circumstances stated in the Minutes of Evidence before that Committee, which do not accord with the statement mentioned in the Minutes of Mr. Higgins's evidence.

(No. 9.) Do you remember the cases of two persons of the name of Thirkell?—Yes: one of them was recovered from his state of mental indisposition, and his friends were written to, to remove him from the Asylum, when he escaped or disappeared from the Asylum. The Committee of Inquiry into this case, as well as that of the other person of the name of Thirkell, and two other persons, whose cases were brought forward by Mr. Higgins, and stated in the public papers as flagrant ones, reported that, in these cases, “no sufficient ground of censure has been established.”

(No. 10.) Do you recollect the mode in which the death and removals of the patients were entered in the books of the Asylum?—They were, during the time I was Physician to the Asylum, and from its first establishment, reported in the books, in all cases, as Admitted, Removed, or Died.

Martis 30^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Dr. CHARLES BEST again called in, and examined.

Have you any further remarks to make upon the evidence given before this Committee by Mr. Higgins?—I beg leave to make the following observations: The first part of Mr. Higgins's evidence which I deem it necessary to notice, relates to the confinement of thirteen poor women at the Asylum, in one small day-room, (Minutes page 1*): upon which circumstance I would merely beg permission to observe, that it was well known to Mr. Higgins, that the usual accommodations of these individuals had been destroyed by a previous fire, and that the arrangement which he witnessed was the result of temporary necessity, and not of habitual practice.

The case of William Vickers, mentioned at page 3, of the Minutes, having undergone an investigation by the Governors of the Asylum, I beg leave to refer to the Resolution upon the subject, at page 16 of the Appendix to Mr. Higgins's letter to Lord Fitzwilliam, which is in these words: "The Governors having taken into their consideration the statement published in the York and other newspapers, respecting the treatment of William Vickers, lately a patient in the Asylum; and having examined upon oath such witnesses as were competent to afford information on the same, are unanimously of opinion that, during the time that the said William Vickers remained in the Asylum, he was treated with all possible care, attention, and humanity." An attempt being made by Mr. Higgins, in his evidence on the same case, (page 3*), to induce the Committee to believe that flogging constituted a part of the treatment of the patients in the Asylum; I think it necessary to state, that the Committee of Governors of the Asylum made this matter an object of particular investigation; and that no evidence whatever could be found to induce them even to suspect such a practice. I also beg leave to state, that, a considerable time before the late occurrences at the Asylum, I was, myself, the means of introducing the following law, to be found in the printed Report of the York Lunatic Asylum:—"That if any keeper or servant shall strike, or otherwise ill treat, any patient in the Asylum, such keeper or servant shall be dismissed from his situation."

The case of Mr. Schorey, which is mentioned (Minutes, page 3*) in such terms as must have excited feelings of horror in the members of the Committee, has also undergone an investigation by a Committee of Governors of the Asylum, who reported their opinion on it in the following words:—"That in the case of the Reverend Mr. Schorey there has been considerable personal neglect, and that, both towards himself and Mrs. Schorey, some of the keepers have conducted themselves in a very reprehensible manner." With respect to the facts of this case, to avoid repetition, I beg leave to refer to my evidence already before the Committee.

The whole of the Minutes of Evidence, (page 3*,) relating to the inaccurate statement of the deaths and admissions published in the newspaper by the apothecary, is calculated to produce an erroneous impression. By omitting to mention that this inaccuracy did not exist in the Steward's books, in which the only official register of the admissions and deaths was to be found, and by a reference to which books this inaccuracy was afterwards detected, Mr. Higgins has apparently intended it to be understood, contrary to what was the real fact, that 144 persons had perished in the Asylum, of whose deaths there was no official record, or, to use his own language in the Minutes of Evidence, that their deaths "had actually been concealed." Though the incorrect statement made by the apothecary in the newspapers, was, of course, very strongly and justly reprehended by the Governors, it did not appear that he had any interest in making it. As, however, my emoluments were variable, and dependent on the estimation in which the Institution was held by the public, it seemed to be thought probable, by some of the Governors, at the Annual Meeting in August last, that the incorrect statement in favour of the Asylum might have originated in me, and, in consequence, a strict inquiry took place on the subject, and it was proved, to the entire satisfaction of the court, in the presence of Mr. Higgins himself, that I had never, on any occasion, examined the apothecary's books with a view to ascertain the accuracy of his Report, and that I had never, on any occasion, altered or corrected it. It is perhaps unnecessary to mention, that, notwithstanding this circumstance, Mr. Higgins has given his evidence on this subject, in such terms as cannot fail to lead to an inference that I was probably accessory to the publication of this inaccurate statement.

The account, given in the same page, of the burning of the Steward's books, is equally calculated to convey an erroneous idea of that affair; and a circumstance mentioned in the same paragraph respecting myself, viz. that the physician's participation in the weekly payments of certain classes of patients, was discovered by a book which accidentally came into the hands of the Committee of Enquiry, is perfectly at variance with fact. At one of the very earliest meetings of the Committee of Governors, and the moment the physician's emoluments became the subject of inquiry, I communicated every particular relating to the accustomed mode of remuneration of the physician, by participation in the payments of the different classes of patients who were not paupers. The burning of the Steward's books at Christmas last, as mentioned in the evidence, did not take place till eleven months after their examination by a Committee of Governors, and after extracts had been made from them, distinctly describing the nature and amount of my participation in the payments of the patients, as will be seen by referring to page 48 of the Report of the Committee, subjoined to Mr. Higgins's publication; from whence, I presume, it will appear, that Mr. Higgins is not warranted in the conclusion, that the burning of the Steward's books, however reprehensible in itself, was a deliberate act of selection, for the purpose of concealing circumstances in regard to the emoluments of the physician. The account of the mortality in the Asylum since the death of Dr. Hunter (Minutes, page 5*) is stated with corresponding unfairness. An inference is attempted to be drawn, unfavourable to the treatment of the patients under my care, by contrasting the mortality of the year ending July 1814, with the average mortality for thirty years under Dr. Hunter; no mention being made that a long-continued and destructive epidemic had prevailed in the Asylum during that year; and that the patients, during a considerable part of the time, were crowded together in an unprecedented degree, and subjected to various unfavourable circumstances by the destruction of their ordinary accommodations by fire.

It was not stated by me, as asserted by Mr. Higgins in the Minutes of Evidence, (page 6*,) that to my knowledge there were no chains in the Asylum: the only assertion I have ever made on this subject was, that when I was first appointed physician to the Asylum, I found chains were used in certain cases; but that I had gradually and totally abolished their employment: which assertion I now repeat.

Some evidence being adduced at pages 6 and 7 of the Minutes,* from which it is to be inferred, that the food of the patients at the Lunatic Asylum was bad; I not only affirm on my own knowledge, that it was both good and plentiful, but have to request that the Committee will permit me to produce certain letters from individuals who had recently been confined in the Asylum at the time Mr. Higgins first published his Statement in the York and Doncaster newspapers. The perusal of these letters may possibly tend, not only to throw light upon this part of the subject, but also to undeceive the Committee in various other particulars relative to the Asylum.

* See note, page 31.

The Witness delivered in the Letters, and they were read, as follow:

“ Sir,

“ As we are accused, at the Asylum, of harsh treatment and cruelty to the patients, neglecting to afford them a sufficient supply of proper food, and inattention to cleanliness; I shall be much obliged to you if you will candidly state what you yourself experienced and observed upon these several points, during your residence at the Lunatic Asylum.

“ I may possibly have occasion to lay your letter before the Governors; but it shall, on no account, appear before the public.

“ I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

“ Charles Best.”

“ Thorne, Nov. 25, 1813.

“ I received yours of the 22d instant, and observe the particulars. During the time I was at the Lunatic Asylum, I was treated with the greatest attention towards my recovery, and having had a very good supply of good provisions: with respect to cleanliness, I always had my linen, and other necessary conveniences, kept in very good order: I never experienced any severe treatment from the managers of the Asylum, having been allowed to walk out at convenient times. I can with the greatest propriety, say, I never saw any of the other patients cruelly treated; for my own part, I think it a great blessing there is such a place provided for the afflicted.

“ Sir, I remain, &c.”

Addressed,

“ Doctor Best, York.”

“ Lincoln, Dec. 1, 1813.

“ Mr. S—— not being acquainted with Mr. P——’s address, has just brought me the letter for that gentleman, which he received from you a few days ago, enclosed in one to himself. I will take care that Mr. P—— shall have it immediately on my return to my country residence the latter end of this week, (which will be sooner than if sent by the post,) and entertain no doubt of his returning such an answer as will be perfectly satisfactory. In the mean time, to prevent any inconvenience that may arise from this unforeseen delay, Mr. S—— and myself think it only due to justice to declare, that we have both of us heard Mr. P—— speak in the highest terms of the kind treatment in every respect which he himself experienced in the York Asylum, and of the great care and attention with which the whole concerns of that Institution, appeared to him to be conducted.

Addressed,
“ Doctor Best.”

I have the honour to be,
“ Sir. &c. &c.”

“ Doctor Best.

“ Dear Sir,

“ I this morning received your kind favour, requesting me to give a fair and candid Statement of my treatment, during my abode at the York Lunatic Asylum; also wishing me to give my opinion respecting the treatment of the several patients that fell under my observation, during my stay at the said Asylum.

“ In answer to these enquiries, I can with heart-felt pleasure state, that my treatment was such as every reasonable person must approve of; not having a want unsupplied, as far as wholesome food, cleanliness, and attention could supply them.

“ Owing to my elevated spirits and eager curiosity, I lost no opportunity of investigating nearly the whole of the rooms and beds in the two galleries in which I was placed, and found the strictest attention paid to cleanliness and good order, through the whole of the rooms I went into.

“ I dined twice at one of the public tables, and was astonished to observe such plenty of good and wholesome food, and regretted the want of appetite, to partake of the several dishes which were brought in regular succession on to the table.

“ My last week's residence at the Asylum, was along with Messrs. D——T—— and a Mr. K——, who informed me that he had met with the best of treatment during the whole of his stay, and that he had always his meals sent to his room, the quantity and quality of which, was such as he fully approved of. I had the pleasure of taking my meals along with him for several days, and had always plenty of good and wholesome food. The room we lodged in contained three beds, which were as good ones as I would wish to sleep on.

“ For your kind treatment, dear Sir, I shall ever hold your name in grateful remembrance, and can assure you, that your daily presence at the Asylum, afforded me the greatest pleasure: your treatment to me, was more like that of a brother than a physician; and I attribute my speedy recovery to your well-judged method of treating me.

“ The house apothecary and keepers merit my thanks, for their readiness at all times to supply my wants, which were numerous, owing to the keenness of my appetite, which I believe was occasioned by the proper treatment and food that was administered to me during my convalescent state.

“ I shall now haste to conclude, by observing, that if the in-section of the whole, or any part of this letter, (the grammatical errors being first corrected,) will be of any service to you, or any individual taking an active part in the establishment, you are perfectly at liberty to lay it before the public; and beg you will not from any scruples of delicacy withhold it, as misrepresentations, such as you advert to in your letter, ought, by all possible means to be crushed in the bud. Independent of your letter, I had been informed that complaints had been made by friends of late patients, against those who had the care of the York Lunatic Asylum. I trust truth will ever prevail over misrepresentation, and if so, those complaints must fall to the ground, as others might be brought forward who could bear testimony to the truth of what I have stated.

“ I shall only add, that it is my hope, that those afflicted with my late malady may never want a Doctor Best, nor the attention I met with under his skilful direction at the York Lunatic Asylum.

“ Hoping this will find you in good health, as it leaves me,
I remain,

“ Dear Sir, &c. &c.”

“ Foston, Dec. 4th, 1813.

“ I this moment have received your favour from the hands of Doctor G——, and am extremely astonished, and even feel indignant at the foul falsehoods which have been propagated in disparagement of York Lunatic Asylum. From the very high estimation in which I hold that useful establishment, as well as from a warm sense of gratitude for the kind usage I on all hands, and at all times received in it; it now becomes imperiously incumbent upon me unequivocally to declare, that no one single instance of the exercise of any harsh treatment, or unnecessary severity, came under my observation; had such occasions of complaint ever occurred, from the wide range that was allowed me, both within and without doors, they could not possibly have escaped my notice; I can with equal sincerity and truth, most conscientiously aver, that an abundant supply of food of the best quality, and in a superior style of excellent cookery, was regularly and duly distributed to each patient, from the highest to the lowest, without a shadow of partiality, and with the most humane care and circumspection. As to cleanliness, the uncommon and general attention paid to that point, in all its acceptations, branches, and departments, was a constant source of the purest satisfaction to me. In short, this is my decided opinion, and I here solemnly assert it, that the whole routine of business required in the management of the Asylum, was uniformly conducted upon the most humane, cleanly, plentiful, yet prudent plan, that such an institution can admit of; and is therefore justly entitled to my warmest approbation and applause. Pray accept of my unfeigned thanks for your unbounded kindness to me, and excess of humanity to that motley and turbulent society, some of whom it seems have rendered themselves so unworthy of your regard. That you may long enjoy health and happiness, is the sincere prayer of,

Sir,

“Your much obliged and humble Servant, &c.

“Foston, near Grantham, Lincolnshire.

“Charles Best, Esq. M. D.”

The accusation of my having received a fee improperly, in a particular case, mentioned at page 7,* was brought before the Committee of Enquiry at York, by Mr. Higgins, in August last, with extremely aggravating circumstances, and was by that Committee rejected as undeserving of notice. My written reply to the charges, presented to the Governors, I beg leave to lay before the Committee.

[It was read, as follows:]

“To the Governors of the York Lunatic Asylum.

“My Lords and Gentlemen,

“An accusation having been this day brought forward against me, by Mr. Higgins, of having charged five guineas for myself; and two guineas, or 2*l.* for the apothecary, for extra attendance on one of my private patients at the Asylum about three years ago, the friends of the patient having been informed by me, that he had broken his leg, when no such accident had in reality befallen him; I beg leave to observe, that I have witnesses at hand, who, should it be the pleasure of this Court, will immediately appear, and as I believe, will prove in the most satisfactory manner, that the patient alluded to did break his leg, and that he moreover suffered a long and distressing bodily illness, not connected with the accident.

“In regard to my recommendation of a remuneration to the apothecary for extra attendance, though I cannot speak with any accuracy as to the fact, at the present period, the circumstance being alleged to, having taken place three years ago; I think it highly probable, that I may have recommended it in the instance under consideration, as I have the recollection of having done so in one or more other instances of casual illness, requiring special medical or surgical attendance.

“In regard to myself, though it is perfectly possible that I may have expressed myself as entitled to extra remuneration for extra attendance in the case alluded to, I have no recollection whatever of having done so in this, or in any other instance. I can however, if it shall be required of me, bring forward satisfactory evidence of having declined such remuneration in other cases, when strongly pressed upon me, not indeed from conceiving that I had no right to receive it, but because I believed that the circumstances of the patient's family rendered it inconvenient to them to incur such expense.

“ Upon this subject I beg leave farther to remark, that the pecuniary arrangements made between the friends of what are called Private Patients in the Asylum, and the Physician, having been always considered, both during the time of my predecessor and myself, as a matter of private contract between the parties themselves; in order to establish any impropriety on the part of the Physician, in expressing himself as entitled to extra remuneration in certain cases, and under certain circumstances, it must be proved that the friends of the patient were apprized by the Physician, at the time the contract was made, that the weekly payment was intended to include extra attendance for protracted bodily illness, as well as ordinary attendance for mental disorder.

“ On the conduct of Mr. Higgins in bringing forward this serious charge at the present time, without any previous notice to the person accused, I must leave it to the Governors present, to form their own opinions.”

(Signed)

Respecting the alleged misapplication of money, mentioned at pages 7 and 8 of the Minutes, the annual meeting of Governors in August last, before whom I subjected myself to a voluntary and most rigorous examination, adopted and published the following Resolution, viz. “ That no criminality attaches to Dr. Best for misapplication of the funds of this Institution.” In regard to the mode which was adopted of remunerating the Physician, considering it objectionable, I do not in the least attempt to defend it; but as it was sanctioned by long-established usage, previous to my appointment; and as the general meeting of Governors at the time I was elected, not only negatively but positively confirmed the existing privileges of the Physician, by rejecting a proposition for enquiring into the emoluments before disposing of the office; I have never felt any doubt in regard to my right of receiving the same emoluments as were enjoyed by my predecessor. I here think it an act of justice due to myself to state, without however assuming any merit for my conduct, that during the five years I was Physician to the Asylum, I voluntarily gave up about 200*l.* per annum out of these emoluments, for the benefit of the Institution.

The assertion at page 8, that the Physician had the whole management of the Institution, is not accurate, the subordinate officers were not appointed by the Physician, and the respective duties of each were regulated, not by him, but by the laws enacted for the purpose by the Governors. The constitution of the Asylum was undoubtedly faulty, and the plan upon which it was built ill adapted to its purpose; but it would be too much to make the Physician for the time being, responsible either for the legislative acts of the Governors during forty years, or for the evils unavoidably arising from the inappropriate structure of the buildings.

If I may be permitted to remark on the evidence of Mr. Bryan Cooke, I would briefly observe, that as it only relates to the state of the Asylum during the pressure of very distressing and unprecedented circumstances, consequent on the destruction of half the building by fire, it throws no light whatever on the usual state of the Asylum at other times. Should it however be thought otherwise by the Committee, I beg leave to contradict the assertion, that "the general state of the Asylum was filthy in the extreme," as stated in page 9 of the Minutes; and to assert, that all the upper parts of the house, consisting for the most part of galleries and bed-rooms, notwithstanding the number of patients, were in a cleanly and orderly state. The temporary day-rooms down stairs, where the most uncleanly patients were placed until new accommodations could be prepared for them, were doubtless; as stated in page 9, in a very disgusting condition. This condition however was not the consequence of neglect, as, without explanation, might be inferred from the evidence, but solely the result of unavoidable necessity.

Do you know that the four cells, or any one of them, alleged by Mr. Higgins to have been concealed from the visitors, were ever shewn to any one visitor?—I do not know that they have been; I know they have been seen by Governors.

Have you seen any person whose duty it was to visit, who has informed you he was aware that there were such cells;—I know that a Governor had seen those cells.

Previous to the time that Mr. Higgins asserts them to have been concealed?—Certainly; I refer to the Reverend Mr. Bulmer of York.

Did it not happen more than once, that patients escaped from the Asylum?—Yes.

How were their escapes registered, as removals, or as having made their escape?—As removals, that being the established mode of entering them for forty years; there was no distinction made in the books; it did not fall to my province to examine the books, but I have a general knowledge that that was the fact.

Were any pains taken to recover such patients as had escaped?

—I believe always, but it did not fall within my province.

Were hand-bills printed?—There were; and to the best of my belief, there never was an omission of the printing of hand-bills; but that did not fall within my province.

What had occurred to make the regulation necessary to prevent the patients being beaten or flogged?—I had frequently heard there was a belief that persons were flogged, and I very frequently walked behind the Asylum myself, and heard such howlings, as, if I was not acquainted with the circumstance of the patients very frequently making noises, I should have believed to proceed from their being beaten; that was more than six months before Mr. Higgins's statements.

It was your practice occasionally to see all the rooms of the Asylum?—Certainly.

Did you often see the four cells alleged to have been concealed?—When there were patients confined in the day-time, in them, which occurred only occasionally.

You only followed the patients into the cells, you did not look to their state and condition?—At the time the patients were in them, I did, and perhaps at other times; but I conceived that the department of taking care of the rooms and keeping them clean, belonged to the housekeeper.

You did not consider yourself called upon to inspect the bedrooms;—When I saw any thing wrong, I observed upon it; I did not conceive it to be my province to attend to the cleanliness of the house, and therefore did not make it a daily practice to examine all the rooms of that very large building.

Did not you consider it your duty to see that the house was kept clean?—Certainly, as far as was in my power.

Did you, in the course of the five years you were Physician, see those four cells that have been referred to?—I did, frequently.

How soon after the visit of Colonel Cooke and Mr. Higgins, did you yourself inspect the cells in question?—I really am not able to say at the present time.

Was it soon after?—I believe it was.

Can you say how long before that visit it was, that you had inspected them?—I cannot.

Can you say of your own personal knowledge, that the representation made by Mr. Higgins first, and by Mr. Cooke afterwards, of the state in which they found those cells, is not perfectly correct?—I cannot say it of my own knowledge.

Have you any and what reason, from the representation of any other person who had examined them, to doubt its correctness?—I have not.

What has been the extent and nature of the interference of the Governors, with respect to the internal management of the Asylum during the time you have acted as Physician?—They met at the Asylum once a quarter, and at the Annual Meeting in August, to examine the accounts, and discuss any matters that might come before them.

Did they at those quarterly meetings, inspect regularly the Asylum?—They did not regularly, only occasionally, which was but seldom.

What do you mean by inspect; what did they do?—They walked round the Asylum, or nearly round; they walked about the Asylum.

Did they see all the rooms?—That I cannot say; they examined the beer and the bread; there was a repugnance on the part of the Governors to enter the rooms where the patients were confined.

Then you apprehend they did not see all the patients?—No, I apprehend they did not.

To whom then was the management and superintendence committed, in the intervals of those meetings of the Governors?—The Physician, the Steward, the Apothecary, and the Matron.

Is the Committee then to understand, that the persons now mentioned, had the complete management and superintendence of every concern respecting the patients, without any inspection whatever of the Governors, otherwise than that which has been already mentioned?—Yes.

What was the regulation of the Asylum, with respect to the friends of the patients being permitted to see them?—They were not permitted to see them without a written order from the Physician, except in particular cases; that was left to the discretion of the Apothecary on the spot.

Martis, 6^o die Junii, 1815.

The Right Honorable GEORGE ROSE, in the Chair.

DR. CHARLES BEST was again called in, and desired to add to his former evidence; which he did, as follows:

LEST it should be thought that the Resolutions to which I have referred, in contradiction to some parts of Mr. Higgins's evidence, were of little moment, in consequence of their being supposed to have been framed by personal friends of my own, for the purpose of protecting my character, I beg leave to observe, that, with the exception of the first of those resolutions, they were all framed after the numerous accession of new governors, which took place in consequence of Mr. Higgins's appeal to the Public relative to the York Lunatic Asylum.

My reason for not recommending the governors of the York Lunatic Asylum to accept the offer of the managers of the Quakers' Retreat to accommodate a part of their patients, on the occasion of the fire, was, that I conceived it was not worth while for the governors to avail themselves of it, in consequence of the trifling accommodation which would be afforded thereby, four beds only having been offered, and the whole number of patients approaching towards two hundred.

What other offer or offers of temporary accommodation were made?—To the best of my recollection, though it did not take place at the same moment, the offer from Nottingham was of eight beds, which I did not recommend them to accept, for the same reasons, superadded to the circumstance of the distance intervening between one Institution and the other.

For how many patients did you then want accommodation?—It is quite impossible for me to say at present.

How many patients were at that time confined in the cells said to be concealed?—It is not in my power to answer that question, for my visits to the Asylum were generally between eleven and five o'clock, which was while the patients were out of their sleeping-rooms.

Do you believe that the number confined in those four cells was thirteen?—I do not conceive it possible that there could have been so many; as it may appear from the evidence relative to the state of the Asylum when seen by Mr. Bryan Cooke, that no steps had been taken by myself and the members of the Committee appointed to make temporary provision for the patients after the fire. I beg to observe, that every means in our power was resorted to, to fulfil the duties which were imposed upon us, both by fitting up temporary day-rooms, by placing new beds in the open galleries, and by writing repeatedly to the friends of various patients who we thought might be taken care of at their own houses, to request they would remove them. But various obstacles occurred to the execution of these projects, from unforeseen causes; and the consequence was, that the patients were most inconveniently crowded in their day rooms for a longer period than they otherwise would have been: some time afterwards, a day-room, which I had immediately after the fire proposed, was actually erected. I beg leave to add, that at the period the fire took place there were to my knowledge three patients in the Asylum, who, after having been previously confined there, had voluntarily returned; two out of the three, without the knowledge or concurrence of their friends. For the accuracy of the statements which I have made in contradiction to those of Mr. Higgins, I beg leave to refer to the following governors of the York Lunatic Asylum:—the Archbishop of York, Godfrey Wentworth, Esquire; Richard Fountayne Wilson, Esquire; the Rev. Robert Croft; John Hall Wharton, Esquire; George Palmer, Esquire; Philip Saltmarsh, Esquire; George Lowther Thompson, Esquire; the Rev. William Dealtry and the Rev. William Bulmer; by which I would wish it to be understood, that I do not mean that each individual mentioned will confirm each individual contradiction which I have made to the statements of Mr. Higgins, but that my testimony in every point will be confirmed by some one or more of them.

BETHLEM HOSPITAL.

Martis, 2^o die Maii, 1815.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE GEORGE ROSE IN THE CHAIR.

MR. EDWARD WAKEFIELD, of Pall Mall, called in, and Examined.

WHAT is your profession?—A land agent.

Have you been led in any way to examine into the treatment of Insane persons?—I have for many years been in the habit of visiting all places where I have heard they have been confined.

Have you any, and if so, what interest, direct or collateral, in the subject?—None whatever, in any way.

You have no other interest, but motives of general humanity and benevolence?—None, whatever.

Are you of opinion, that a useful Act of Parliament may be introduced for the government of the houses in which Insane persons are kept?—I have no doubt, a very beneficial one indeed.

Have you considered the particular objects, which a Committee of Parliament appointed to investigate this subject, should have in view?—It strikes me, that the first and great object of an Act should be, that of holding in confinement persons under this malady, who may be dangerous, either to the public or to their relatives, and in that point of view, I rather consider it as a matter of police. The late Act, commonly called Mr. Wynn's Act, were it rendered imperative upon the different counties of England, instead of optional as it now is, would at once have a great effect upon all the labouring classes of society; and I know not a single step that would produce so great an effect, as the rendering that Act imperative, laying it down as the basis of an Act of Parliament, that it was to confine Insane persons: I think the next great object should be, if possible, securing to those persons in confinement every possible degree of comfort.

How does Mr. Wynn's Act operate, as affecting the labouring classes of the community, you meaning by that expression, pauper Lunatics?—As I understand it, in a county which has built an Asylum, in consequence of that Act, the overseers of the several parishes within that county can no longer retain their pauper Lunatics in their respective workhouses, but are compelled to send them to the County Asylum.

Have you any particular knowledge as to the treatment of pauper Lunatics in workhouses?—I have.

Why do you conceive those pauper Lunatics would be better off in county asylums than in workhouses?—Because in workhouses they are under the care of persons totally and entirely ignorant of the proper treatment of Lunatics in general; because in workhouses, the rooms in which they are kept are ill adapted to the confinement of such persons, and because in some cases which I have seen from those causes, those unfortunate persons have been constantly confined in strait-waistcoats, frequently kept in bed night and day; and because I should hope, that a county Lunatic asylum would be placed under the direction of a competent superintendent; and also, because Lunatics in workhouses are an extreme annoyance to the other inhabitants of those houses.

Do you believe that many Lunatic establishments have been raised under that Act?—I have heard, in twelve counties.

Have you visited the different public establishments for Insane persons, in and about the Metropolis?—Yes; frequently.

Have you visited Bethlem?—I have, frequently: I first visited Bethlem on the 25th of April, 1814.

What observations did you make?—I was introduced, with others, by Mr. Alderman Cox, an official governor, whose feelings being overpowered before we had gone over the men's side, was under the necessity of retiring to the Steward's office, whither he was soon afterwards followed by us, in consequence of a message from the steward, who then informed us, that Mr. Cox was prevented from accompanying us farther. We solicited permission to continue our inspection whilst Mr. Cox remained in the Hospital, but this was declined, and we were compelled to close our visit on that day. On Monday, the 2d of May, we re-visited the Hospital, introduced by Robert Calvert, Esquire, a governor, and accompanied by Charles Callis Western, Esquire, Member of Parliament for Essex, and four other gentlemen. At this visit, attended by the steward of the Hospital and likewise by a female keeper, we first proceeded to visit the women's galleries: one of the side rooms contained about ten patients, each chained by one arm or leg to the wall; the chain allowing them merely to stand up by the bench or form fixed to the wall, or to sit down on it. The nakedness of each patient was covered by a blanket-gown only; the blanket-gown is a blanket formed something like a dressing-gown, with nothing to fasten it with in front; this constitutes the whole covering; the feet even were naked. One female in this side room, thus chained, was an object remarkably striking; she mentioned her maiden and married names, and stated that she had been a teacher of languages; the keepers described her as a very accomplished lady, mistress of many languages, and corroborated her account of herself. The Committee can hardly imagine a human being in a more degraded and brutalizing situation than that in which I found this female, who held a coherent conversation with us, and was of course fully sensible of the mental and bodily condition of those wretched beings, who, equally without clothing, were closely chained to the same wall with herself. Unaware of the necessities of nature, some of them, though they contained life, appeared totally inanimate and unconscious of existence. The few minutes which we passed with this lady did not permit us to form a judgment of the degree of restraint to which she ought to be subject; but I unhesitatingly affirm, that her confinement with patients in whom she was compelled to witness the most disgusting idiocy, and the most terrifying distraction of the human intellect, was injudicious and improper. She intreated to be allowed pencil and paper, for the purpose of amusing herself with drawing, which were given to her by one of the gentlemen with me. Many of these unfortunate women were locked up in their cells, naked, and chained on straw, with only one blanket for a covering. One who was in that state, by way of punishment, the keeper described as the most dissatisfied patient in the house, she talked coherently, complained of the want of tea and sugar, and lamented that her friends whom she stated to be respectable people, neither came to see her, nor supplied her with little necessary comforts; the patients generally complained much of being deprived of tea and sugar. On leaving the gallery, we enquired of them, whether the visit had been inconvenient or unpleasant: they all joined in saying, No; but (which was sufficiently apparent) that the visit of a friend was always pleasant. In the men's wing in the side room, six patients were chained close to the wall, five handcuffed, and one locked to the wall by the right arm as well as by the right leg; he was very noisy; all were naked, except as to the blanket-gown or a small rug on the shoulders, and without shoes; one complained much of the coldness of his feet; one of us felt them, they were very cold. The patients in this room, except the noisy one, and the poor lad with cold feet, who was lucid when we saw him, were dreadful idiots; their nakedness and their mode of confinement, gave this room the complete appearance of a dog-kennel. From the patients not being classed, some appear objects of resentment to the others; we saw a quiet civil man, a soldier, a native of Poland, brutally attacked by another soldier, who we were informed by the keepers always singled out the Pole as an object of resentment; they said, there were no means of separating these men, except by locking one up in solitary confinement. Whilst looking at some of the bed-lying patients, a man arose naked from his bed, and had deliberately and quietly walked a few paces from his cell door along the gallery; he was instantly seized by the keepers, thrown into his bed, and leg-locked, without enquiry or observation: chains are universally substituted for the strait-waistcoat. In the men's wing were about 75 or 76 patients, with two keepers and an assistant, and about the same number of patients on the women's side; the patients were in no way distinguished from each other as to disease, than as those who were not walking about or chained in the side rooms, were lying stark naked upon straw on their bedsteads, each in a separate cell, with a single blanket or rug, in which the patient usually lay huddled up, as if impatient of cold, and generally chained to the bed-place in the shape of a trough; about one-fifth were in this state, or chained in the side rooms. It appeared that the wet patients, and all who were inclined to lie a-bed, were allowed to do so, from being less troublesome in that state than when up and dressed. The end window towards Fore-street was the chief source of entertainment to the patients; they seemed greatly to enjoy the sight of the people walking, and to derive great pleasure from our visit. In one of the cells on the lower gallery we saw William Norris; he stated himself to be 55 years of age, and that he had been confined about 14 years; that in consequence of attempting to defend himself from what he conceived the improper treatment of his keeper, he was fastened by a long chain, which passing through a partition, enabled the keeper by going into the next cell, to draw him close to the wall at pleasure; that to prevent this, Norris muffled the chain with straw, so as to hinder its passing through the wall; that he afterwards was confined in the manner we saw him, namely, a stout iron ring was rivetted round his neck, from which a short chain passed to a ring made to slide upwards or downwards on an upright massive iron bar, more than six feet high, inserted into the wall. Round his body a strong iron bar about two inches wide was rivetted; on each side the bar was a circular projection, which being fashioned to and inclosing each of his arms, pinioned them close to his sides. This waist bar was secured by two similar bars, which, passing over his shoulders, were rivetted to the waist bar both before and behind. The iron ring round his neck was connected to the bars on his shoulders, by a double link. From each of these bars another short chain passed to the ring on the upright iron bar. We were informed he was enabled to raise himself, so as to stand against the wall, on the pillow of his bed in the trough bed in which he lay; but it is impossible for him to advance from the wall in which the iron bar is soldered, on account of the shortness of his chains, which were only twelve inches long. It was, I conceive, equally out of his power to repose in any other position than on his back, the projections which on each side of the waist bar inclosed his arms, rendering it impossible for him to lie on his side, even if the length of the chains from his neck and shoulders would permit it. His right leg was chained to the trough; in which he had remained thus encaged and chained more than twelve years. To prove the unnecessary restraint inflicted on this unfortunate man, he informed us that he had for some years been able to withdraw his arms from the manacles which encompassed them. He then withdrew one of them, and observing an expression of surprise, he said, that when his arms were withdrawn he was compelled to rest them on the edges of the circular projections, which was more painful than keeping them within. His position, we were informed, was mostly lying down, and that as it was inconvenient to raise himself and stand upright, he very seldom did so; that he read a great deal of books of all kinds, history, lives, or any thing that the keepers could get him; the newspaper every day, and conversed perfectly coherent on the passing topics and events of the war, in which he felt particular interest. On each day that we saw him he discoursed coolly, and gave rational and deliberate answers to the different questions put to him. The whole of this statement relative to William Norris was confirmed by the keepers. On Wednesday the 7th of June, when we again visited Bethlem, we discovered that all the male patients who were then naked and chained to their beds in their cells, were in that situation by way of punishment for misbehaviour, and not from disease. In consequence of the discovery made by the gentlemen who went with me, and myself, of the situation of William Norris, and of a drawing which we procured to be made of him in his irons, he was visited by the following gentlemen:—George Holme Sumner, Esq. M. P. Lord Robert Seymour, M. P. William Smith, Esq. M. P. the Hon. Henry Grey Bennet, M. P. R. J. Lambton, Esq. M. P. Thomas Thompson, Esq. M. P. and other Members of the House of Commons; and I have now to state that, at this last visit, I observed that the whole of the irons had been removed from Norris's body, and that the length of chain from his neck, which was only twelve inches, had been doubled.

[The Witness delivered in the Drawing of William Norris, referred to in his Answer.]

Do you know what has become of those chains?—I was informed by Mr. Wallet, the new steward to Bethlem Hospital, that the chains are now in the Hospital, and are to be seen. I was at Bethlem on Saturday week the 23d of April, and found that the old steward, Mr. Alavoine, no longer held the office; and that a new steward, Mr. Wallet, was filling his situation. Mr. Wallet sent for an official governor, Mr. Deputy Greenaway of Bishopsgate-street, to attend me: and although the number of patients was nearly the same as during the last year, I found but one single one chained to his bed, and not a single patient in any one of the side rooms chained to the wall. Mrs. Fenwick, the teacher of languages, to whom I have referred, was walking about the gallery, who, Mr. Wallet told me, was an entirely different creature since she had been treated like a human being.

How was she dressed?—She was dressed like a woman. She immediately came up to me, and asked me how Mr. William Fry, with whom she had lived as a governess, was, and all his family. Mr. Deputy Greenaway stated that a great reformation had taken place in the hospital lately, very much in consequence of a speech that Lord Robert Seymour had made in Parliament; and that, so far from the inspection which took place last year having done any harm, he was satisfied that the hospital had been essentially served. The patients, I understand, are to be removed to the new Bethlem next Midsummer, a great part of which is to be warmed with steam. Mr. Greenaway stated, that were that not the case he felt the necessity of glazing the cells of the present hospital, they in point of fact having been without any glazing for many years.

Did the patients make as many complaints of the ill-treatment they received as they had done on your former visits?—I did not hear any complaints. Norris died on the 26th of February.

Do you happen to know, of your own knowledge, any thing concerning the death of Norris, that would leave you to believe it was occasioned by the long confinement which he had undergone, and the chains he had worn?—No person can doubt that his death, in all probability, was brought on by the state of confinement in which he was held.

What was his age?—I understand fifty-five.

Was his body examined?—I understand his body was dissected by Mr. Lawrence of St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

Had you any difficulty in obtaining an entrance into the hospital?—I originally went to Bethlem Hospital with a written order from a Governor. Mr. Alavoine, the then steward, said he was extremely sorry that he could not shew me the hospital, as he could have done the week before; but that a resolution of twenty years standing had been revived, to prevent any persons seeing that Hospital but in company with a Governor; and that in consequence of something which had been publicly said at a meeting, which had been held at the City of London Tavern. I asked Mr. Alavoine who were the Governors; he said it was more than his place was worth to tell. He held in his hand a printed list of the Governors; I requested permission to look at it; he said he could not allow me to do so; that Mr. Poynder, the secretary, who lived at Bridewell Hospital, would furnish me with a copy of the List of Governors. In consequence of which I sent two persons, on Friday, the 22d of April, 1814, to the office of Mr. Poynder, Clerk of Bethlem Hospital, who asked his clerk for a List of the Governors of Bethlem Hospital; the clerk said, "I cannot give a list; Mr. Poynder is below stairs. On furnishing a list, the fee charged by Mr. Poynder must be paid." "What is the fee?" "One guinea." Mr. Poynder now entered from below stairs, and finally refused to give the person I sent a List of the Governors; he, however, forwarded me a list in the course of a few days.

Did he know for whom the application was made; and did he refuse it in consequence of knowing that fact?—He refused to let me have a list at any price whatever. Upon obtaining the list, finding that the Mr. Calverts were Governors, Mr. Western applied to Mr. Robert Calvert, and, accompanied by him, Mr. Western and myself visited the Hospital. After having visited the Hospital, I received a letter from Mr. Poynder, to say, that, on a Saturday, fixing the day, the Hospital was open for my inspection.

Were you acquainted with a person of the name of Matthews, who was confined for many years as a lunatic in Bethlem?—I found the late James Tilley Matthews at Mr. Fox's, who kept a private house, London House, Hackney. He was sent to this private madhouse, half at the expense of Bethlem Hospital, and the other half at the expense of his own friends, in consequence of the representation of Mr. Crowther, the Surgeon to Bethlem Hospital, who, from his having a bad abscess in his back, thought that his remaining within the air of the Hospital would shorten his life, and recommended his being placed somewhere in the country. I understand that he had been confined seventeen years in Bethlem Hospital, during the greater part of which time his relations or friends had been endeavouring to obtain his liberation, with a view to his being sent to Jamaica, where his wife and family were resident. An application, I believe, had been made to the Court of King's Bench, and his liberation refused; but upon what specific ground I cannot tell. During the last summer Mr. Western applied to the Home Secretary of State, presenting a petition from his relations for his discharge. In my opinion, Mr. Matthews was a very unfit person for confinement in Bethlem, without pen, ink, or paper—the use of knife or fork—any fire-place, to which he could retire by himself—and shut up of a night from the time of locking-up till the opening next morning; being a man of considerable accomplishments and great learning; and who evidently had never kept such society as that in which he was confined for so many years. The latter years of his being in Bethlem he was taken from the galleries, where the people generally were, and had a room to himself.

Do you know in what way he was confined prior to his removal to the room you have just mentioned?—I have heard from Mr. Staveley, his nephew, that he was confined in the common gallery, and frequently chained to his bed.

Is Mr. Matthews now alive?—He died sometime in the last autumn.

Mercurii, 3^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

MR. RICHARD STAVELEY called in, and Examined.

WHAT do you know respecting the situation of Mr. James Tilley Matthews, during the time he was confined in Bethlem?—My knowledge of him has been principally within the last eight years, when, in consequence of his declining state of health, and the sufferings he was labouring under, from the manner in which he was confined, I made application, with another relative, who is since dead, (Mr. Dunbar) to the Committee several times, that he might be removed from the Hospital to be in the care of his friends. I grounded this application on the information and evidence of two physicians, of the highest respectability, Dr. Birkbeck and Dr. Clutterbuck, who authorized me to state to the Committee, that he was not by any means in that insane state of mind to render confinement necessary to him; that his mind was certainly affected on one point, but that was more on a philosophical point, with respect to an air-loom system, as to which he fancied there were certain agents employed by the Hospital to annoy him by different modes; and they were of opinion, that, if he was removed from that scene, this would cease. That he was by no means considered as a dangerous lunatic; for, from the evidence of their own officers who attended (the different keepers) that, for the whole time of his being there, the man, so far from interrupting the peace of the house, or creating disturbance, was the man to whom all parties, whether patients or servants of the house, if there were any grievances, made their reference for redress; but there appeared, on the part of Mr. Haslam, which I have told him himself, and which I told to Dr. Monro, a violent animosity against this man. With respect to the circumstance of his being chained, I did not see him so myself, but had it as reported by him; it was previous to my having so much intercourse with him; that arose from his disputing the authority by which he had been sent there, or Mr. Haslam's authority to treat him in the manner he did. Mr. Matthews said to me that Mr. Haslam said in reply, "You dispute our authority," (with an oath) "Sir, we will soon let you know what our authority is;" and the next day he was leg-locked. On inquiry, to find the authority by which he was confined, they informed us it was by the parish officers of Camberwell. I went to the parish officers of Camberwell, who were, of course, very desirous of getting rid of an expense which they had been paying for so many years, and of relieving their own funds of it, if Mr. Matthews's friends would come forward and take the onus on themselves. They attended the Committee of Bethlem Hospital with me, to state the interview they had had with us, and to demand that he might be restored to his friends. The Committee adjourned that day the consideration of the subject till the subsequent Saturday. In the interim we took a legal opinion upon the point, as to the parish officers of Camberwell, they saying, "We certainly are not authorized to appropriate the funds of the parish to the support of this man in Bethlem, when his friends are willing to come forward and relieve us of that charge. We have the assertions of the medical men, who state that he is by no means a dangerous lunatic, and therefore we request he may be given up." Still the Committee persevered in their refusal. It was then desired that they should shew by what authority they held him; that they refused to do, but that they were determined to keep him. The parish officers then consulted, I presume, with their legal adviser, what course they should pursue to be discharged of this expense. They were advised to attend with his friends at the Committee, and again to repeat their request, that he should be given up to his friends; I requesting it at the same time, and the Hospital still refusing, "Gentlemen," they said, "we have nothing more to do with him; let us know the amount that is due, and we tender it you in bank notes; if you hold him, you hold him at your own expense." Finding that they were so very much determined to keep this man, for a reason that they would not state, although his friends were ready and willing to take care of him—I should mention one thing:—the parish officers stated, "If we are to be burthened with this expense, admitting that he is a “madman, are not we authorized to take him, and put him in “our own strong-room at the workhouse?” Still the Committee would not part with him. We then put the thing into the regular channel, by the affidavits of the physicians; and we went into the Court of King’s Bench, and moved for a writ of Habeas Corpus to have him removed. The Hospital finding this, had the Committee of Lunacy, from the College of Physicians, who examined Mr. Matthews. They were with him, I am not certain whether more than once, but I am certain not more than twice, for a very short period of time. Dr. Birkbeck and Dr. Clutterbuck had seen him, at our request, at different times for nearly three weeks or a month, going together, and separately, taking him at any hour when he was not expecting them, and examining him in all the points they chose. In their affidavits, which were very strong, they were decidedly of opinion that he was not in that dangerous state to authorize his being confined. We went into the Court of King’s Bench; but, I presume, that on the evidence of the College of Physicians they were induced to refuse the habeas, assigning some grounds, or pointing out some other course, which I cannot immediately charge my recollection with. It is proper I should state, that, in one of the attendances on the Committee, they desired particularly to know why we were so anxious to have Mr. Matthews out. In the presence of the Committee and Dr. Monro, Mr. Crowther, and Mr. Haslam, I said, we are dissatisfied with his treatment generally, but with his medical treatment particularly; so much so that we wish, as you refuse to let him out, to have an opportunity of medical men seeing him. We asked, “Have you any objection to our bringing in other medical men to see him?” Dr. Monro said, “Certainly not, provided they are men of regular character in their profession, not empirics.” I said, certainly I should not pass such an insult upon you, or bring such a disgrace upon myself, as to bring in any men but those of regular character. In consequence of this, Dr. Birkbeck and Dr. Clutterbuck went to see him; and Mr. Haslam afterwards charged me with surreptitiously bringing medical men to see him, without the authority of the Hospital. Mr. Haslam came into the parlour when Dr. Birkbeck and myself were with Mr. Matthews; and, to shew that there was nothing underhand, in conversation with Dr. Birkbeck, I constantly addressed him as doctor, so did Mr. Matthews. His health becoming, within the last three years, considerably worse, his friends were still more anxious, and constantly urged the Hospital to let him be discharged. He had very bad abscesses in his back, all of which he attributed to the cell that he had been originally placed in, and damp of the house, which, he said, affected most of the patients in the same way, beginning with a numbness about the thighs, and the lower part of the back, and frequently terminating in death. The Hospital, finding the situation that Mr. Matthews's health was in, I believe, were a little alarmed, and he then became a patient of the surgeon, Mr. Crowther, who stated to the Committee that he considered Mr. Matthews's state of health to be such, that, if he was not allowed to have change of air, or a different scene and treatment, he would not answer for his living over the winter. In consequence of that, on an application, Mr. Crowther came to me, and stated, "If you will go to the Committee, and state, that, as a relation of Mr. Matthews, you are very desirous of giving him a change, I have a place near town where he can go, if you propose to pay one half; let them bear the other. There is a certain allowance made by government for him, and there will be but little more expense incurred." They granted it, and he was removed. He was considerably better at first, as Mr. Fox will state, for the first eight or ten weeks; but the abscess in his back continued to gain ground. The last twelve months he fell off very much indeed, and died in January last. I wrote to the clerk of Bridewell Hospital, Mr. Poynder, stating his death; and, at the same time, that I thought it necessary to mention this circumstance, in case I should ever after be called on, on any investigation taking place, that I should state a fact, which I thought was not at all creditable to the Hospital,—that, though Mr. Matthews was only three miles from town, although he had been in this very bad state of health for so long, that neither the physician nor the apothecary had been near him to make any inquiry, or give themselves any trouble; that, if it had not been for the humanity of Mr. Fox, his very kind attention in every respect, which does him the highest credit, as the keeper of one of those houses, Mr. Matthews might have been perfectly neglected. Frequently I got the medical man who attends my own family to go and see him. Mr. Poynder, in reply, states: "With respect to your observation, of the medical men not going to see Mr. Matthews,—it is not customary, nor according to the rules of the house, when patients are absent on leave, that they should go to see them." There is one circumstance very extraordinary, stated in an affidavit which was afterwards made, that Mr. Haslam stated, in a public coffee-house, where Mr. Matthews's case was spoken of, having attracted a good deal of attention, that Matthews was as well as he was; that he had no right to be there, but he should keep him. This was in the hearing of Mr. Dunbar, my relation. When this came before the Committee, Mr. Dunbar said to him in the Committee, "Mr. Haslam, on what grounds can you recommend to the Committee still to persevere in the keeping Mr. Matthews, after your assertion in the City of London Tavern, at such a time, that he was as well as “ you, and there was no more right to confine him within the walls ?” Mr. Haslam made no answer to this. Mr. Dunbar stated in the Committee, “ I have no objection, if Mr. Haslam disputes it, “ to make an affidavit of it.” Mr. Haslam sat perfectly still, and never attempted to refute it.

You say you repeatedly saw the Committee at Bethlem ?—Yes.

What number generally composed that Committee ?—Sometimes I have seen them when there have not been more than four or five ; at other times there have been from ten to a dozen. There have been in attendance always the steward, Mr. Crowther, and Mr. Haslam. Dr. Monro was in ill health, and was not always in attendance. The clerk, Mr. Poynder, on the very day that the Committee gave leave for Mr. Matthews to be removed was not in attendance on the Committee, and I think there were only three or four Governors.

That is the smallest number you have seen composing the Committee ?—Yes.

Did Mr. Matthews inform you, during the course of your visits for the last eight years, that chains had been applied as a punishment to him, in the first part of his confinement ?—He did.

Did you ask any one of the keepers, whether that had been the fact ?—I have asked the keepers, whether or no Mr. Matthews was in that situation that should render it necessary to confine or chain him as Mr. Haslam had ; the invariable answer I received was, that so far from his being a disturber of the house he was the peace-maker.

Did they admit that the chains had been applied ?—Certainly ; after we had gone into the Court of King’s Bench the treatment of Mr. Matthews was very different indeed from what it had been before, for he then was allowed a room to himself.

Lunæ, 8° die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE, in the Chair.

Mr. WILLIAM LAWRENCE called in, and Examined.

WHAT is your situation ?—I am assistant-surgeon to Saint Bartholomew’s Hospital.

Has it happened to you to have much practice among insane persons, or any knowledge of their treatment ?—Not much ; what I know upon that subject has been principally derived from visiting Bethlem occasionally ; the late surgeon was a friend of mine, for whom I officiated sometimes.

Will you state to the Committee any thing that occurs to you upon the treatment of those persons?—I have not any particular observations to make on the subject.

Were you often at Bethlem professionally?—When I have been there, it has been to see patients under Mr. Crowther's care surgically, not on account of insanity, but when they happened to be the objects of surgical attention.

Have you ever made any remark as to the care and treatment of the patients in Bethlem?—I could not help observing the management of them; but I had no object in view in observing it particularly.

Were your observations upon that subject particularly directed to the entire want of classification, and the situation of persons who were in the common rooms; the number of persons that were chained against the wall together?—I have observed that a number of persons in different states have been mixed in that room indiscriminately; some not violent, and some in a state of great bodily irritation.

Did you ever see a person there confined by the name of Norris?—I do not recollect that I did; though I must have been through the Hospital many times while he was there; I have since heard of him, but I suppose he may have been kept rather secret and not so much shewn as other persons were; he is dead; I examined his body after his death, but I do not remember ever having seen him while he was alive; and I think I should have remembered it, if I had seen him, from the peculiar way in which I have understood he was confined.

What did he die of?—He had a very considerable disease of the lungs; a consumption.

Did he die of a decline?—Yes.

Is it your opinion that the manner in which he was confined, may be considered as having hastened his death?—I am not sufficiently aware of the precise manner in which he was confined, nor of his state previous to his death, to give any information on the subject.

He was confined in a square room in which there was no glazing to the windows, and you know the manner in which he was caged; under these circumstances, should you not think a person, having a tendency to that disease, would be considerably injured from the manner in which he was treated?—I have seen so little of him, that I do not imagine I could give the Committee any positive information, or any thing satisfactory, any more than a general surmise or opinion, which any person can form as well as myself; the patient I saw most of was a patient of the name of Matthews.

Did you attend Matthews any considerable time?—For a considerable length of time; first in Bethlem, and afterwards when he had been removed to a private house at Hackney.

What was his disease?—An abscess in the loins.

Had he been subject to that disease for a number of years?—It took place a few months before his removal from Bethlem; I happened to attend for Mr. Crowther, and was called on to see a tumour on his back, which was the first he had perceived of it; this might be six or seven months before he left Bethlem.

Did you ever see him when he was under restraint?—At the time I saw him, he was not personally confined; he was in a room; I think he was never under any personal restraint when I saw him: I remember to have seen him some years before the time I now speak of, then he was in a different part of the house, and not personally confined.

He was a very quiet tractable person?—Perfectly so, all the times when I have seen him; very gentle and quiet in his demeanor.

He was part of the time confined in one of the rooms that opened into the gallery?—Yes, that was a long time ago, it must be some years ago.

Did you ever see a person there of the name of Hurst?—I do not remember it; if I have seen him, I do not remember the name.

Have you lately visited Bethlem?—I have been there within a month.

Has any alteration taken place in Bethlem in the last month, from what it was six months back?—I am not aware that any alteration has taken place; when I have been there latterly, it has been to examine one or two patients ill; and I have not attended to the general state of the hospital.

I believe you opened the body of a person who died of constipation, about a twelvemonth back?—I did not open the patient alluded to; I remember hearing that a patient died in the state mentioned, but I understood from Mr. Crowther, that his body was opened by another gentleman of the name of Langstaff, a surgeon, in Basinghall-street.

Did Mr. Crowther mention any thing as to his having died for want of medicine having been given to him in time?—Mr. Crowther mentioned some circumstances of that kind.

The Committee are to understand, that Mr. Crowther told you that if he had had proper medicines given to him, he would not have died?—That was the purport of what Mr. Crowther said to me; this happened more than twelve months ago; perhaps it might be two or three years; I understood Mr. Crowther to mention, that the bowel had been burst in consequence of the accumulation of the contents, but that is a fact to which the person who opened the body can speak.

Mr. GEORGE WALLET called in, and Examined.

WHAT is your situation?—I am steward of Bethlem Hospital.

How long have you been steward?—It is about three months since I took possession of the situation; I was elected in January.

What was your situation before that time?—I was superintendent of Doctor Rees's Madhouse.

Where is that?—At Hackney.

Do you hold that situation now?—No.

What number of patients are there in Bethlem now?—I think there were 118 on Saturday last, but there were five or six admitted on Saturday, making 123 or 124 now.

Can you distinguish how many of these are in a state of great irritation, and how many are quiet?—No; that is the province of the medical officers.

You do not happen to know that?—I do not; I think there are very few now in a state of great irritation.

Are those kept separate from the quiet ones, or are they mixed together?—They are now mixed together, from the nature of the Hospital; when they are very irritable, they are put into a separate sleeping room, and there kept.

Those in a common state of irritation are kept with the quiet ones, but those outrageous are kept apart?—Yes.

Are any of the patients in a state to be insensible to the calls of nature?—Yes, there are some of them.

Can you say how many?—I cannot say exactly how many; there are but a few, I think.

Of those, are any of them mixed with the other patients, or kept separate?—Mixed with the other patients, provided they are able to be got up, otherwise they are in their own sleeping apartment; there are some in a state fit to be got up, and yet are insensible to the calls of nature.

Then they are in the same room with the cleanly patients?—Yes.

Is not that a great nuisance to the cleanly patients?—It is.

In all cases of great irritation, you consider seclusion one of the means of cure?—Yes.

So that if the patients be exposed to the intrusion of others, and to noise and disturbance, that cure must be considerably retarded?—Yes.

Does not the mixture greatly retard the cure of those who are quiet?—I conclude it must very much.

Do you happen to know whether in the new Hospital, provision is made for keeping those in a state of irritation, separate from the quiet ones?—Yes, I think so; it is intended to put the bad patients into the basement story, and the convalescents on the other floors.

Do you happen to know any thing of the medical treatment?—No, it is not in my department.

Who is the physician to Bethlem?—There is only one, Doctor Monro.

How often does Doctor Monro attend?—I believe but seldom; but my avocations are so numerous, that I may be out of the way when he comes: I hear he has not been round the house but once these three months; he may have been there without my knowledge; he has been at the Hospital more frequently, but not round the gallery; the matron always being in the galleries, would answer that question more pointedly than myself.

You are now speaking of the female wards?—Yes.

How many keepers are there at Bethlem?—There are two men and two females, and an assistant male keeper.

What is the proportion of female patients to male?—I think the females are sixty-eight in number, and the men fifty-two; the females were sixty-two on Saturday, and fifty-two men.

Do you consider two male keepers and two female keepers sufficient for the number of patients in the Hospital?—As they are situated at that Hospital, it is probably sufficient, because they are all put together.

Are there any other attendants besides the keepers?—No.

Do the convalescents act as keepers?—No; they assist sometimes in cleaning and scowering the galleries.

Are not the convalescents who assist, called Cads in the Hospital?—No; the keepers are called Basket-men, and the female nurses, Gallery-maids.

How many sleep in a bed?—Only one; in some cases, there are two females sleep in a room, but they have two beds.

In what sort of beds are they?—Tolerably good ones; they are what they call Hessian beds; a flock bed, three blankets, and a coverlid.

The violent patients sleep upon straw?—Yes.

How often is the straw changed?—As frequently as it becomes wet, it ought to be changed, and I take for granted it is.

How often is all the straw taken out?—Probably once a week; if it is very wet, it is changed oftener.

Is all the straw in all the cribs exchanged weekly, or is any portion left behind?—I cannot say positively whether the whole is removed, but I think not; if any part is left dry, I believe it is put at the bottom; but if any part is wet, it is removed, and the crib is washed.

What is the supply of blankets?—Each patient has three blankets and a coverlid.

How often are they changed?—Some of the patients are dirty, and their blankets are sent to the scowerers; every fortnight they are changed, and they have dry ones given them.

Do the convalescents sleep in sheets?—Some of them.

How often are the sheets changed?—As often as the servants see it necessary; sometimes once a fortnight; it depends upon circumstances.

Can you state what is the supply of sheets that you have in the house?—No; that is the province of the matron.

How large are the cells?—I cannot exactly say; they are large cells at the old Hospital, larger than at the new, they are a full size.

Are the windows glazed?—Not generally; they are partially glazed.

Have you ever been there during the winter?—It was in February when I took possession.

Have you ever seen in the morning, in the cells, that the wood of the walls has been chrystalized over with the hoar frost?—No; there has been but little frost since I have been there.

What is the proportion of blanket patients, as they are termed, to the whole number?—I cannot say.

Can you state what is the proportion of dirty to clean patients?—I think about one-third of the patients may be considered as dirty patients.

How many should you suppose to be in that state, that are insensible to the calls of nature?—Perhaps about five men out of fifty-two; the proportion of females I am not able to speak to, but believe it to be larger in proportion than the number of dirty men.

Since you have been in your situation at the Hospital, have you observed that the patients have suffered much from cold?—I have not observed that; the weather has been generally pretty open since I have been there.

Have they fires at present in the sitting-room?—Yes.

Do they crowd round the fire?—Some do; others prefer being in the galleries.

How many galleries are there?—Two for the men and two for the women; and there is a place called the slips in the attics, for the women.

How many are there of patients?—About twenty-six in each, man's gallery; and the half of sixty-six, thirty-three, in the women's.

Are the smells in Bethlem very offensive?—There is a room called the Infirmary, which is sometimes very offensive, particularly when crowded.

Is it not offensive also from the sewers?—I have not been sensible of that; I think it proceeded more from dirty patients.

What is the allowance of food?—On a Monday they have for breakfast a large bason of water gruel with two ounces of bread in it; for dinner they have a quart of milk porridge, and seven ounces of bread, two ounces of cheese and a quart of beer; for supper they have seven ounces of bread and the same quantity of cheese; that is what we call a meagre day.

How many meagre days are there in a week?—Four; on the three meat days they have for breakfast water-gruel; eight ounces of meat (after being dressed) for dinner, seven ounces of bread, about a pound of potatoes, and a quart of table beer.

What is the sick diet?—The Apothecary orders what he thinks fit; instead of having meat, they have mutton broth; or sometimes, if they are Roman Catholics, they allow them fish; if they are sick, they are allowed a more full diet than the convalescents; their diet is changed according to the state of their health; on the meat days they have a quart of mutton broth as well as meat.

Do you know any thing of the medical practice within the Hospital?—No.

Do you know whether it is the practice to bleed at a particular season of the year?—I believe it is, periodically.

At what season of the year?—I fancy about this time.

Is the bleeding begun?—No; and I believe they are also physick'd periodically.

Is that practice general through the whole ward?—I understand it has been the general practice.

Is bathing periodical too?—Yes.

How often does Mr. Haslam attend the Hospital?—He attends generally very regularly every day.

Does he go regularly round the Hospital every day?—He frequently goes round, passes along the galleries; if there is a patient he has a particular desire to see, he sees that person.

Does he in his visits examine every cell?—I cannot say he does.

So it might happen that months and months might elapse without his seeing the different patients in the Hospital?—It probably might happen; but as I do not go round with him, I do not know.

Where does Mr. Haslam reside?—At Islington.

At what time does he generally come, and how long does he generally stay?—He generally comes at about eleven o'clock, and stays half an hour, or sometimes longer than that.

In case any person should be taken with a fit, what medical or surgical attendance have you?—None but Mr. Haslam; if he has leave of absence for a day or two, he generally leaves word, if an accident happens, to send for a person.

Has Mr. Haslam been absent many days together?—He has never been absent above three days, and then he had leave of absence from the treasurer.

Since you have been in your situation, has it ever happened that a person was ill, and you were obliged to send express for Mr. Haslam, the patient wanting his assistance?—That has never been done since I have been steward of the Hospital.

Have you ever heard that has happened?—I have heard that application has been made from the matron to the apothecary, and he has thought they would die probably, and it was not necessary to give medicine; but that is only hearsay.

Have you ever heard it has been the practice in Bethlem to give medicines in the nature of a punishment?—No, I never have.

Were you acquainted with Norris?—I knew him for that period ten days.

He died on the 28th of February?—Yes.

Do you know how long he had been ill?—He died of a consumption, I understood.

Did you ever know Matthews?—No.

What was the situation you found Norris in, had he any chains upon him?—No.

Had he permission to walk about the gallery?—Yes.

Did he do that?—No, he was not well enough; he was in a dying state when I saw him.

Was he peaceable and tractable?—Quite so.

From what you have heard since you have been in the hospital, do you believe that any other persons besides Norris have been treated in that or a similar manner?—I have heard so from the late surgeon Mr. Crowther.

Did he give you any particulars as to the way in which any other persons had been treated?—He told me that a man had died of constipated bowels; that Mr. Lawrence dissected the body and found that to be the case; he found the intestines burst, in consequence of the long state of constipation, it having remained so long.

Did he attribute that to the neglect of medical attendance?—Yes; I think he mentioned it in a book he published upon that subject, which was an answer to the reviewers.

Did he mention any other case to you?—Yes, also the case of a man who had an iron collar round his neck and a chain to it, which chain was passed through the wall into the adjoining cell.

Did he mention any other?—He spoke generally of the neglect of the medical officers, that medicine was not given them in the way it ought to be.

Did Mr. Crowther ever mention to you, that he considered it necessary, for the security of Norris, to fasten him down in that manner?—He said it was not necessary. I heard Mr. Crowther say, that the keeper went into the cell to restrain Norris from some act of violence, or making a noise, and that he struck Norris; that Norris retaliated, and the consequence was, Norris being a very powerful man, he got him down, and would have murdered him perhaps with a shovel, but that one of the patients went to the assistance of the keeper, and that Norris stabbed him with a knife; I believe he stabbed both the keeper and the patient, and that was the reason of Norris being solitarily confined. The keeper was in a state of intoxication.

Who are the physician and apothecary of Bethlem Hospital?—Mr. Haslam is the apothecary, and Dr. Monro the sole physician.

Since you have been in your situation, have you made much alteration in the internal management of Bethlem?—I observed a good many patients were kept in bed; I desired they might be taken up and dressed, and taken to the fire; I mentioned it to the apothecary; he thought it proper it should be done. I believe the women were kept in bed very much.

Is it your practice now to make every person that is not confined by illness, or in a state of extreme violence, get out of bed and dress himself?—Yes; I go round and see it done.

Have you effected any other improvements in Bethlem, besides making patients get up, who are otherwise in bed?—No; I do not think I had it in my power to do more than that, and having them washed.

How often do you clean their persons?—Their hands and face are washed every morning; if they are not able to do it themselves, it is done for them.

Have you many persons sent from Miles's, at Hoxton?—Yes, a good many.

When they are sent to you, are they sent as incurables, or for the purpose of cure?—For the purpose of cure.

Do you ever know that any person has been sent to you for the purpose of cure, whom Dr. Weir, the inspecting physician at Miles's, had declared in such a state that he ought to be moved to the Batavia Hospital Ship?—No instance of that kind has come to my knowledge.

What is the process by which a seaman, a patient, after having been confined a year in the Hospital, is returned to Miles's?—They are returned to Miles's sometimes before their twelve-month expires; a month, or two or three, if any thing happens to them, such as a paralytic seizure, and epilepsy, or any thing of that sort.

Have you ever known, or ever heard of persons being discharged who were not in the condition, as set forth in the warrant of their discharge; I mean by that, who were not subject to fits, or were not paralytic?—No circumstance of that kind has come to my knowledge; with respect to the seamen, I have heard it.

Can you state to the Committee the authority from whom you heard it?—I think it was from Dr. Weir; but I cannot say positively that it was.

Did you ever hear it with respect to any body else?—I remember a woman who was discharged as paralytic, who came from Hoxton; the nurses said at the time, that she was the strongest patient in the house; she was returned to Miles's.

Do you know Sarah Payne?—Yes.

Was she a strong healthy looking person?—Very much so.

Was she a violent patient?—She was.

By whose order was she sent back to Hoxton?—She was discharged by the medical gentlemen as paralytic.

Had she any paralytic attack during the time she was in the Hospital?—I never heard of an attack.

Had she, in your opinion, the appearance of a person who suffered under paralysis?—I do not know that she had; I saw the difficulty they had in taking her away, in putting on a strait waistcoat; she was very strong.

Are you aware that the patients in the Hospital have most of them knives or cutters?—I have never seen but two things of the sort; a woman had a piece of tin very sharp, fixed in the handle of a knife, which I had taken away but a little time ago; I had the room of a man of the name of Goldney, cleaned out, and in one of the bundles of straw there was a knife, which we took away from him.

Have you inspected the building of the new Bethlem in St. George's Fields?—Yes.

Do you conceive the construction of that building good?—In many points of view, I think it is superior to the old one; the patients will be kept separate, the dirty ones from the cleanly ones; it will allow of the convalescent dining together at a table; the rooms are not so spacious, nor the galleries so wide; airing grounds are wanting in Bethlem; these airing grounds are very good.

Is there any garden ground allowed?—Yes.

So that the convalescent may be permitted to walk?—Yes; I think that practice will contribute very much to amuse their minds and promote their general health.

Has any alteration taken place in the arrangement that existed last year, of the windows of the gallery being 10 feet above the level?—I do not know; but the windows are very high.

At Bethlem, do not the convalescents take great pleasure in looking out at the window at the end of the gallery?—Yes.

Do you not believe that the enabling the patients to look out at the windows in the new Bethlem, would be a considerable source of amusement to them?—I am convinced of it, because many of the patients said, they had heard they were so constructed; that they hoped it was so; they asked me whether it was so or not; that it was a great pleasure and amusement for them to look out.

Do you know by what means the dirt, &c. from the new Bethlem is to be carried away?—I do not know by what means it is to be done: that is to be arranged, I believe.

I mean by dirt, the sewers?—I do not.

Have you ever heard it mentioned, that the reflux of the tide will probably bring back the dirt that is carried away by the preceding tide, and cause considerable offensive effluvia?—I never heard that; but I hear the springs there rise as the tide rises.

The situation is many feet below high water mark?—Yes.

Have you ever heard that there are people alive, who remember the greatest part of that ground being flooded over?—No.

Did you observe how the new Bethlem is ventilated?—Not particularly; it is to be ventilated by having the casements opened.

Are there any additional ventilations since last year?—Not that I know.

Are means taken to warm that Hospital by steam?—Yes, the lower galleries only, the basement story; then, I believe, flues are carried to the dining room, but not in the gallery, I believe.

From your experience in the treatment of these persons, have you any doubt that they suffer sensibly from cold?—Certainly.

Of course, in the old Bethlem they must have suffered considerably in the cold weather?—Certainly.

Do you use the warm bath at the old Bethlem?—It has never been used since I have been there; I never heard that there was a warm bath there.

Do you know whether there is any building erected at the new Bethlem for criminal lunatics?—Yes.

Can a communication take place between the criminal lunatics and lunatics of another description?—No.

Can they communicate in the airing grounds?—No.

Is it your opinion that intermixture of dangerous lunatics with the others, has a tendency to produce much mischief amongst all of them?—Certainly; we have an instance now in Bethlem of a man of the name of Banister Trulock, who, whilst he was suffered to be in the galleries, was perpetually creating insurrections, and persuading patients to commit acts of mischief. They were therefore obliged to shut him up in a separate part of the building.

Where was Trulock confined?—In a part of the building which is taken down.

Is he in personal confinement?—No; but he is not allowed to intermix with other patients.

Was he shewn to the visitors of the Hospital last year?—I do not know; he is generally, I believe, forgot. When the Governors go round, they do not see him.

What is the nature of the inspection of the Governor?—Merely goes round occasionally. The Bethlem Sub-Committee, I see by the rules, should go round once a month.

Do they, in point of fact, go round?—Not as a body, they do not; but some members of that Committee go round more frequently.

When they make that inspection, either in a body or individually, do they see every cell, and examine every part of the Hospital?—Yes, generally.

Do they sign any report in a book?—Not that I am aware of.

There is then no written record of their visitation;—I believe not, unless they do it after they retire to the Committee-room.

There is no book kept in the Hospital, in which such entry is made?—No; there is a book kept in the Hospital, in which strangers, or the friends of patients, if they see any cause of complaint, write down those complaints.

Does that take place often?—No; it has never taken place once since I have been there.

Do you believe, from what you have heard, that the Governors or Sub-committee inspected the cell in which Norris was confined?—I do not know; but since I have been there, they have inspected the cell.

Did you ever hear Mr. Deputy Greenaway say that the Governors of the Hospital knew nothing of the manner of the confinement of Norris, till they saw it in the parliamentary proceedings?—I think I heard him say, he knew nothing of it, and he is a Governor and a member of the Sub-committee; I think I heard him say so; I believe the Governors at large knew of it, because there is a minute of it in the book.

When you were appointed this year, a new Matron was appointed about the same time?—Yes.

Can you state how many patients you found, when you entered upon your office, within the walls of Bethlem?—There were 118.

How many have you now?—We have now 124.

Do you recollect of this 118, how many you found wore chains?—There were a good number in chains, fastened by the legs, and handcuffed, but none walking about with chains. There were more than there are now.

Can you state the proportion of the 118 that then were chained to their bedsteads or the walls?—But a small proportion I think; one week we may have 12 or 14, the next week perhaps 20. They were more permanently numerous than they are now.

What proportion of the 118 were naked, or nearly so?—There were a good many in blanket gowns, now there are but few; we have got them up and dressed them, and they seem cheerful; one man who had been in bed a great while, I had him got up, and he has been very cheerful since, and been a great deal more rational. The reason assigned for his being kept in bed was, that his back was hurt, that he was lame; when he first came in, he used to sit in bed whistling, day and night. I saw him get out of bed, and he appeared to have some defect in his back; but since he has been accustomed to use his limbs, he has got better, and now can walk pretty well.

Whether you do not conceive that the cheerfulness in the patients is occasioned by their now being clothed like other people?—Yes, decidedly so.

Whether you do not conceive, that a pump of fresh water in every area at a Madhouse, must conduce to the cleanliness, health, and comfort of the patients?—Yes, essentially.

Whether you would not strongly recommend, that all beds used by male patients should be, when made, thrown open, and so kept till they are used?—Yes, certainly.

You have a weekly Committee of Governors I believe?—Yes.

How many constitute a committee?—I think three.

Are not most of your medical officers Governors?—No, none of them; we have only two medical officers, the physician and the apothecary.

How many generally form the Committee?—Generally four, five, or six.

Have not you, since you have been in office, known one instance in which bad weather has reduced the three to two?—I think I only recollect one instance in which there were two only.

And they were two Governors?—Yes.

Is it usual for Governors to look round the wards, and walk into the bed rooms?—That does take place sometimes.

Do your medical men do the service of the Hospital gratuitously, or are they paid for it?—They are paid for it by a fixed salary.

What follows in case of the death of a patient at Bethlem Hospital?—The securities are written to, informing them of the death of the patient, and that they may be buried at the Hospital charge of 1*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* or they may take away the body if they please.

Does any inquest take place on the body?—Not unless a person commits suicide, or dies a violent death, then there is an inquest; otherwise, only the searchers see the body.

Is there any room for the reception of dead bodies?—They are removed from the galleries to the cellar.

Are they removed immediately after their death?—In the course of the day.

How long do they remain in the cellar before they are buried?—They are never buried before the following day, or the day after; they more frequently remain three or four days.

Has the Hospital a Chaplain?—No: the Undertaker that buries them, has them buried in a burying ground in Golden Lane. There is a Clergyman who reads the service, and if they are buried by the Hospital, some of the servants of the house attend the funeral.

Are the family of a patient at liberty to send medical men to see the patient when ill?—I do not recollect an instance of the kind; but there is a general order, that I am not to permit any person to see a patient. No person can be admitted, unaccompanied by a Governor.

Are the friends of lunatics permitted to come in, accompanied by a Governor?—They are from ten till twelve on Monday; but if the friends live in the country, they are permitted, at the option of the Steward, to see them at any time.

Then of course you exercise your discretion, whether the patient is in a fit state to see his family?—Just so; sometimes the medical officers leave word that they wish the patient not to be disturbed, and then of course I do not admit any.

Do the keepers of the male and female wards always sleep within hearing?—They sleep in the galleries.

All the patients, male and female, are locked for the night in their cells?—They are locked in; they used to go to bed as soon as between eight and nine at summer time.

At what time are the cells opened?—Six in summer, and seven in winter. The keepers are good sort of men, and I tell them that if the patients are quiet and orderly, to indulge them a little longer, and then they take a candle and lanthorn and send them to bed.

Do not you conceive it would be a considerable comfort to patients who are convalescents, to have lamps?—Yes, if they were out of their reach.

Martis, 9^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

MR. GEORGE LANGSTAFF called in, and Examined.

YOU are a Surgeon?—I am.

Did you examine the body of a person who died some time past in Bethlem?—I have been in the habit of examining a number of bodies, or the greater number of those who died in Bethlem, for Mr. Crowther.

Do you remember the case of a particular person who died of constipation?—I remember one case, but the name of the person I am not acquainted with, nor am I with any hardly that I examine; but I recollect one case, where the person appeared evidently to have died in consequence of retention of fæces, or long constipation.

Do you remember Mr. Crowther making any remark to you as to the circumstances of that person's death?—I do not recollect any thing at present; but in general when I inspected for him, when he was not present, he was desirous of knowing the morbid appearances, and I then gave him the appearances which presented themselves.

Do you recollect an expression being used, that the gut was so charged with the fæces, that it was near bursting?—I recollect that; that the distension was so great, inflammation was the consequence, and mortification; and the fæces partly had got into the cavity of the abdomen.

Did Mr. Crowther mention any thing to you as to the cause of that?—No: I do not recollect any thing.

Do you recollect his having said any thing as to that person not being furnished with medical attendance?—No: I recollect he expressed his sorrow he could not be present, he was very desirous of knowing the circumstances, and he said that it was in consequence of his not having purgative medicine; he did not mention it as attributable to one person or another.

Do you recollect enough to remember that Mr. Crowther was particularly anxious, and stated that the neglect lay somewhere?—Yes: but he did not mention who was the person in fault.

But that the death of the person was caused by neglect?—No, I do not know that he said that: I had formed my opinion that the person might have been saved if the bowels had been attended to; that there was not sufficient cause for the death any where but in the intestines.

Did you know that medicines had not been administered?—No: but from the appearances I naturally concluded there had been some neglect.

Did you open the stomach?—Yes: and every part of the body.

Was there any appearance of medicine remaining in the stomach?—That we cannot tell, the whole alimentary canal was so affected in consequence of the retention of the fæces, it was impossible to tell.

Your impression at the time seems to have been that medicine might have saved the life?—It is a natural conclusion that the bowels might have been relieved.

Are cases of constipation frequent?—I believe the bowels of insane persons are more likely to be affected with costiveness, and not so easily acted upon.

Do you examine the bodies of all persons dying in Bethlem?—Not in all cases; I have generally been called by Mr. Crowther to open the bodies where there was any thing out of the ordinary course.

Did you examine the body of Norris, who died in February last?—No: the man I last examined, was from the bursting of a blood-vessel.

When they send for you, do you attend gratuitously?—Yes: I was intimate with Mr. Crowther, and, knowing he was infirm and at some distance, I attended directly they sent for me.

Have you very lately been called in to assist persons that had been ill in Bethlem?—Yes: on any accident, or any thing which happened, Mr. Alavoine sent for me, or my assistant went for me.

It is a matter of common occurrence, that you, or some person with you, should be called in to assist the patients, in case of any urgent case?—Yes, in any urgent case I have been used to be called.

Have you frequently assisted Mr. Crowther in cases of dissection from Bethlem?—Yes.

Have you seen any other instances of constipation where that might be the cause of death?—No: I do not recollect any other.

Do you recollect saying any thing as to the propriety of giving medicines in the case you have referred to?—I remember saying to the keeper, that it was a great pity he had not had purgative medicine administered to him, that that might have saved him.

When you attend to visit the Hospital, there being no resident medical person within the walls, in what way are you remunerated?—Not in any way; I never thought of remuneration; I thought it my duty from charity.

It is your impression that, at the time, it would have been much better if the man referred to, had had some medicine given to him?—Undoubtedly.

Do you consider that his life was lost in consequence of the want of medicine?—If the question is pressed upon me, I must say, that I think his life was lost in consequence of the retention of the fæces.

As you have frequently assisted Mr. Crowther in the dissection of bodies, where does the operation take place; is there a room provided for the purpose?—No: I have frequently been there when I have been at the risk of getting my death of cold; it is a kind of cellar, with the gratings open upon us.

Not in sight of the patients?—No.

Is it possible to ascertain, from the accumulation of the fæces in the intestines, how long it might have been there without any passage?—I should think three or four days, or a week perhaps.

Mercurii, 10^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

ELIZABETH FORBES called in, and Examined.

YOU are the Matron of Bethlem Hospital?—I am.

How long have you been in that situation?—I was elected the 26th of January.

Were you in any situation before that with respect to the care of Insane persons?—Never: I never saw an insane person till I went to Bethlem Hospital: I commenced the duty the 15th of February.

How many female patients have you under your care at present?—Sixty-six at present; the number is different every week.

How many persons have you under personal restraint, considered as blanket patients?—When I went there first there were about fourteen or fifteen.

How many are there now?—About four or five.

These blanket patients are chained to the wall in the day-rooms?—In general they are; when I went there at first they were.

At present the few that are blanket patients are so fastened to the walls?—Yes: we have but three. One of the female patients has been confined a long time, chained by the leg, as much as five or six years, I have been told; and we have another constantly chained by the hands, that came in about two months since; two of the other blanket patients are only chained at times. I have them loose, to walk about occasionally.

Since you have been in your situation, have you made many alterations in the management of the Hospital?—As far as I had power.

What have those alterations principally consisted in?—In having them washed, and having them cleaned, and their hair cut, and making them as decent as their situations would admit of.

Making them get up?—Yes: having them brought into the side room, and letting them walk about; if they have not been able to walk about without handcuffs, they have been put on, and taken off afterwards.

Did you understand, prior to filling the situation you now hold, that the treatment was very different from that now adopted?—I never made any inquiries about the treatment. Sir Richard Carr Glynn told me they wished for a humane person.

Do not you know that, prior to your appointment, persons laid much longer in bed than they do now; that there were more persons confined in the day-room; that there was more personal restraint in the hospital; and that they had not the same liberty of walking about that they now have?—From the appearance in which I found them, when I went there, in the side-room, I have every reason to believe they were under greater restraint, and were not up so much.

Is the allowance of food to the women the same as to the men?—Just the same, I believe.

In the same proportions; as much bread and meat?—I am not certain; but I believe the females have sufficient.

What is the allowance to the females?—That is under the steward; I see the provisions brought to them, and see that they have enough; and sometimes they have more than they can eat.

Have you adopted any plan of separation, or is there any accommodation to separate the noisy from the quiet?—No, that is impossible; we cannot separate them.

Have you any doubt respecting that noisy person whom you spoke of, that her complaints are greatly irritated by the number of persons going to see her?—She is very irritable if strangers go there; she is very irritable; she is very healthy in appearance, and is a very fine looking woman; she laughs and is pleased when I tell her I will take the chains off, and says I do not mean it.

Have you ever learned she was violent and outrageous, further than abusive?—I never saw any thing further.

Have you ever heard that she attempted, prior to her confinement in Bethlem, or since, any act of violence on herself?—I never heard of it.

Can you state to the Committee what is the proportion of dirty patients to clean ones out of that 66?—We have very few that I can call really dirty patients: all the blanket gown patients that were in the side-room when I went there, were stated to be dirty patients.

Did you find them so?—I found some of them so.

But not all?—Not all.

You found some of those clean who had been confined as being dirty?—I found some of those that I found in the side-room able to walk about, and therefore did not consider it necessary to keep them there.

Do you consider the number of dirty patients, since you have been in your situation, and made that alteration, considerably lessened?—Yes; they look better, and they look more healthy, from walking about.

They are also more cheerful?—Yes, some of them, wherever I see one that I think will admit of walking about, I always let her.

And it has generally answered?—Yes; it has.

Have you not a patient in Bethlem, by the name of Miss Stone?—Yes; Miss Anne Stone.

She was confined in the side-room, and a blanket patient, when you came there?—Yes; I asked the reason of her being always confined to the wall; I was told she was very troublesome and tore her clothes; that she had a good many good things sent to her, but they were all torn; I said I would try her to walk about; if she was mischievous, I said I would have handcuffs; I found she was very quiet, and I took them off; I gave her a couple of caps, and she did not tear them; she looks better, and very comfortable and tidy; and every time I go round the gallery, she says, accept my real thanks for allowing me my liberty. I have sent for clothes for her; and I will take her immediately under my own care, to see that she does not tear them.

Have you any doubt, from the situation in which Miss Stone at present is, that when you receive the clothes she will not tear them?—She promises she will not; and if I can judge from a cap I have given her, which I have seen her wear for the last three weeks or a month, I have every reason to suppose she will not.

The other persons whom you have released, have they made the same advances as Miss Stone?—One that I have walking about, has not sense to know exactly what she should do to be grateful; but I let her walk about.

Then if her mental health is not improved, her bodily health is?—Yes, I think it is. Then I have another patient, far advanced in a decline; she has not sense of feeling, but I let her walk about to comfort her.

Then, from the observations you have made, the plan of management which you have adopted, from its success will induce you to continue it?—Yes.

How often do the medical persons visit the different female wards?—Mr Haslam every day.

Does he visit every cell?—I do not always go round with him; I do sometimes.

When you go, does he do it?—He generally goes through the two galleries.

And opens all the doors?—The keepers always open the doors as persons pass, to shew the patients to them; every body is out of their cells every day, therefore he does not look into the cells.

Does he not look into the cells to see that they are clean, and in a proper state?—Yes; the doors are always opened by the keepers, that he may inspect them.

The apothecary is Mr. Haslam?—Yes.

Mr. Haslam lives at Islington?—He does.

Since you have been matron, have any patients been ill while he was absent?—No; we have had two patients die since I have been there: when one was taken ill, I reported it to Mr. Haslam, and also to Doctor Monroe, who attended her during her illness. She laid about a fortnight before she died.

How often does Dr. Monroe visit?—He attends the committee every Saturday; he never missed since I have been there.

Does he visit the patients then?—If there is any case reported to him, he does.

But he does not go round, like Mr. Haslam?—No, not without there is a case which requires attention; if the case is not reported to him, he does not go.

Do they always report if a person is unwell, or only in particular cases?—When they have a fever, or are in a decline, or in a dangerous state, we report them.

He does not visit those who are ill in bodily health, unless they are specially reported to him?—No.

How long is it since he has personally inspected the female patients?—He was through the female gallery last Saturday.

Prior to last Saturday, how long is it since he has been there?—I cannot say.

How long do you think; a month, two months, or three months?—I think it may have been a month.

When he went through last Saturday, did he see all the patients?—He went expressly to visit a patient last Saturday.

But he did not see all the other patients?—They were all walking about the galleries.

Since you have been matron, have you yourself seen it, or have you heard, that Doctor Monroe was in the habit of personally inspecting the situation of each patient at any given period?—I have never heard it.

And you have never seen it?—No; there are patients who have been in some time, and that have not had any thing done for them.

You mentioned a person who was sick; how often did he attend her,—the last that died?—I believe he did not see her at all; she was not reported to him. I reported her to Mr. Haslam, and begged him to see her; and said, I thought she could not live long. She died of a decline, I believe. Mr. Haslam gave her powders, and that was all that was done, I believe. Mr. Haslam did not report her case to Doctor Monro: she was confined to her bed a fortnight.

How often did Mr. Haslam see her in that fortnight?—Every day, I think, when he came round.

Did he give her any medicine?—A powder, whenever he thought it was necessary. I asked if she had medicine several times, and the keeper said she had a powder.

Do you consider it part of your duty to see the administration of medicine?—I have never seen any medicine but a powder brought in to be administered.

Have they began bleeding in your ward since you became matron?—We have not had a female bled since I have been there.

Nor physicked?—No; there has been a powder given to one or two of them, if the keeper has asked for it.

What do you mean by, if the keeper has asked for it?—If a female complains, the keeper says, she wants a powder for her.

Does she complain to the matron, or to Mr. Haslam?

Has the periodical bathing commenced yet?—We have not had any body bathed there yet; we have no warm bath, we have a cold bath, but in a very inconvenient situation indeed, it is a long way off.

How often is the straw changed in the cells of those who sleep on straw?—Every other day, but if it is wet at all, it is changed every day.

That is, the whole of the straw, the trough entirely emptied?—Yes; I am generally in those galleries five or six times a day.

You have no rules to govern your conduct in the hospital?—There are instructions.

Do you remember a person in the hospital by the name of Sarah Payne?—There was such a person.

How long is it since she left the Hospital?—She came soon after I went, and she was there, I think, about six weeks or two months, to the best of my recollection.

In what state was she?—She was in a very low state when she came, but she was much worse before she went.

Was she violent?—When she came she had been in a strait-waistcoat, but when she came to us she was without restraint; the keeper thought it necessary to chain her, from which she was in a great state of irritation, and was discharged.

Was she chained in consequence of the order of Mr. Haslam?—The keepers generally have the discretion of doing that.

Was it you that ordered her to be chained?—Never.

Do you know whether the keepers consulted Mr. Haslam, as to the necessity of chaining her?—She used to go and rattle at the gate, and push at the gate; she was extremely troublesome, and the keepers chained her.

You stated she was discharged, do you know where she was discharged to?—I think she went to one of the private houses, to Bethnal-green.

Was it not Miles's at Hoxton?—It was.

While she was with you, had she any paralytic attack?—She was much worse when she went back than when she came; she was more violent and unhappy and distressed, always asking if she was going to be murdered, and such things; Mr. Haslam thought she was paralytic.

Had she a fit?—I never knew her have a fit.

No contraction of limbs?—No.

No want of articulation?—No, not at all; but she was always kept hand-cuffed lately, and chained.

She was sent out in a considerably increased state of violence, than when she came in?—Yes; which Mr. Haslam attributed to paralytic.

Was she strong?—Very strong; it required three or four people to move her; she was brought to the side-room every day, but there was great difficulty in moving her, she wanted her liberty I believe.

How many female keepers are there?—Two.

Do you consider the number of keepers sufficient?—We are very much deficient in all female servants in that house, but it will be altered by and by.

Have you understood, prior to your filling your situation, and is it the practice at present, that the keepers manage the hospital according to their own system, without consulting and taking the opinion of Mr. Haslam or Dr. Monro, with regard to putting the patients under personal restraint?—I believe the keepers on the female side have had the sole management; Mrs. Bradbury told me, she never had interfered with the management of the patients, that she left it to the keepers.

That was your predecessor?—Yes; she was seventy years of age, and had been there sixteen years; she told me that, and I told her, that I could not do that, but I must take it all on myself.

Since you have been there, have the female patients appeared to suffer from cold?—No, they have not; I always take care that they have clothing at night.

Prior to your coming there, there were instances of their being naked?—Yes; I once found Miss Stone so, but I desired her to have a gown immediately.

Have you not heard that persons confined there have suffered in their limbs from the cold?—Yes; we have a person a cripple now, whose limbs are so contracted that she can only crawl, from sitting constantly.

Have you not heard that the female patients have suffered considerably from cold in their confinement?—I have heard that they have generally been naked at night.

The windows in the cells are not glazed?—Only a part of them; but there are shutters which keep out all the air at night.

In case of any patients under your care becoming ill in the night, you probably would get no medical assistance for such patient till Mr. Haslam came in the morning?—At night every patient is confined; and any dangerous patient who would do any mischief to herself, is locked by the hand in bed; they can turn to do any thing they wish.

Mr. Haslam leaves you in the evening?—He formerly resided in the building; he had a house there till part of the building was taken down, and since that he has lived at Islington, and goes there every evening after he has been through the gallery.

That is about what hour?—He stays about an hour.

What time does he go away from Bethlem?—Sometimes he comes at twelve, and sometimes at one.

Having staid an hour, he goes away?—Yes; it may be less or more than an hour.

You are totally without medical assistance until his return next day?—Yes.

Is there a house to be provided for him in the new building?—Yes; there is a house for the medical man immediately in the center of the building.

Do any of the governors of Bethlem enter into the internal management of the house?—No; there is a committee every Saturday, and the committee sometimes go round and inspect the house: they inspect all the food, all the provisions every Saturday, and every thing of that sort; they taste the beer and the milk, and examine the butter and things of that sort.

How long is it since any one personally inspected the Hospital?—Last Saturday two of them did.

Before last Saturday, how long?—The Saturday before.

Has the practice prevailed ever since you have been there?—Yes; and always was so, I believe.

Do they look into every cell?—No; they go round the gallery to see that the people are taken care of, and that they are as comfortable as their situations will admit of.

You mentioned two persons who died, one died of a decline; what did the other die of?—Of a paralytic affection.

Did that take place in the day or in the night?—She died early in the morning.

Was it a sudden attack?—She was ill ten days; Dr. Monro visited her twice during her illness.

Did Mr. Haslam see her?—Yes, with Dr. Monro, and every day.

Are the female attendants within hearing of them during the night?—They sleep in the gallery.

So that any patient suffering may make herself heard?—Yes; and if the keepers hear a noise of a night, they get out of bed to see what it is.

MR. JOHN HASLAM called in, and Examined.

YOU are Apothecary of the Hospital at Bethlem?—I am.

How long have you been in that situation?—I was elected in the year 1795, I have been in that situation nearly twenty years.

What number of inhabitants have you in the Hospital now?—I believe there are about 122, within one or two.

What number of keepers are there to those patients?—There are two female keepers, and there are five male keepers, two of whom, in rotation, perform the offices of cook and cutter.

So that there are only three in constant attendance as keepers? Of the males, and two of the females.

Are you of opinion that the five who perform the duty of keepers, are sufficient for the attendance upon 121 Insane persons?—That will depend very much on the state of violence in which such patients may be.

Take them generally, from your experience of twenty years?—At sometimes it will be insufficient, at other times quite enough; I think there are enough, taking the present state of the house.

How many persons are there now under personal restraint?—That I cannot tell, I think there are fewer persons now under restraint than I have recollected for some time.

Does not it occur to you to be necessary to know from day to day, how many are under restraint?—It does not; a person is confined sometimes in the morning, and sometimes let loose at night; others are confined at night, and let loose in the morning.

Have you been round the Hospital to-day?—I have this morning.

Do you think the number of female keepers sufficient?—When there occurs any refractory state of the ladies, the men are obliged to assist.

The answer you have given applies to the present state of the Hospital; suppose instances where the whole numbers are not sufficient, what further assistance is obtained?—We have no more, and we are obliged to do as well as we can with that number; that is the extent of our power.

Whatever the necessity may be?—Yes.

In those cases of necessity, has any application been made to the governors, setting forth the want of additional help?—I do not know that it has.

In the twenty years that you have known Bethlem, has that necessity often occurred?—We have now but half the number we had formerly.

You had more keepers when you had greater numbers?—We had.

Since the reduced numbers of patients in Bethlem, have you ever wanted that additional help, and made an application to the governors for it?—I do not know that there has been any actual want:—greater industry, and more work on the part of the keepers, has supplied additional duty and additional requisition.

You cannot tell the number of persons under positive restraint?—No, it is so uncertain.

How many were under restraint when you went round this morning?—I should think among the females six, and among the males, I think not more than four.

What is the nature of the restraint they were under?—I should divide the subject into restraint and coercion: the ultimatum of our restraint is manacles, and a chain round the leg, or being chained by one arm; the strait-waistcoat, for the bet reasons, is never employed by us; if a patient will not walk, the driving him to walk I call coercion; if he will not go into the bath, he is driven or compelled and coerced to go into the bath.

Those patients under coercion have no irons?—They have not.

How many of the patients under restraint this morning were chained?—I think the number I have stated.

Are you of opinion that if a greater number of keepers were allowed, the necessity of restraint would be less?—I do not think so by any means.

Are not you aware, that in many of the private establishments in the kingdom, there is little or no restraint used?—As far as I have seen of the private establishments, there is more restraint than in our hospital a great deal.

Where are those?—All the private establishments I have seen, and I have seen most of them; I have seen those at Liverpool and those at Manchester.

Have you ever seen the Retreat at York, or the house of Mr. Fox, near Bristol?—No.

Were you ever at the house of Mr. Finch at Laverstock near Salisbury?—No.

Do you feel confident, from a very general inspection of private houses, that there are a greater number of patients under restraint in those houses than in Bethlem?—That is my judgment, and it is the opinion I have formed; I cannot take upon myself to state as to numbers, but as to general impression.

How are the hands secured; with chains?—A manacle, I presume, is a means of confining the wrists, leaving the fingers at liberty, but rendering them incapable of separating their arms for the purposes of effecting violence.

Might not violence be effected by both the hands?—No, you cannot be afraid of any man so secured.

You think that the hands so secured with irons, is less objectionable than when secured by a strait-waistcoat?—A thousand times.

Can the patient move his hands to his face?—Certainly; it is merely a security round each wrist.

Is he not capable of doing himself an injury with his hands secured in that way?—No; he is not able to strangle himself, or to fix the apparatus to hang himself, or do any injury to himself, or any body else.

Did you ever hear of an instance of a person having gouged out one of his eyes?—No, never.

Is he not capable of striking another person with his hands secured with irons?—The hand put up even of a timid person would prevent it.

Is he not capable of striking at another person that may come in his way?—Not to hurt him; he can strike him, but not to hurt him.

Then it is your opinion, if a man is handcuffed in the manner already described, a man of common bodily strength, such as is fit to be employed as a keeper, need not be afraid of injury from the most outrageous maniac?—As far as his hands are concerned, certainly not.

Of what other species of injury need he be afraid?—He might use his feet to kick.

Is it probable that a man's life would be in danger, or that he would be in danger of being overpowered by any such exertions as those?—I think certainly he might.

If his legs or feet were confined, in the usual manner, by footlocks?—Then he would be an innoxious animal.

What are the disadvantages you conceive attending on the use of a strait-waistcoat?—The hands are completely secured, if the strait-waistcoat be tied tightly respiration is prevented or impeded, and it is always at the mercy of the keeper how tight he chooses to tie the waistcoat. If the patient be irritated by itching in any part, he is unable to administer the relief by scratching; or if troubled with flies, in hot weather, it is a painful incumbrance; and, if not changed, is liable to absorb a great deal of perspiration, which renders sometimes the skin excoriated. He cannot wipe his nose, and he becomes a driveller in consequence; he cannot assist himself in the evacuation of his urine or his fæces, or possess personal cleanliness, as long as the strait-waistcoat is applied. Then there is another very curious effect that has resulted from keeping on the strait-waistcoat for a considerable time; in every human hand, accustomed to use the organ of touch, the sentient, or palpitating extremities, or tangent extremities, are deadened, as to their sensibility, from want of use; the nails are pinched up, and I have seen some instances, where patients have been long kept in the strait-waistcoat, where the nail has resembled the claw of an animal; so that I can pretty nearly judge by the look of the hand of a lunatic, if I do not see his face, whether he has been the subject of a strait-waistcoat a long while.

How long has it been left off?—They were used when I came there; but we have left them off by degrees, and now we have got but one patient in a strait-waistcoat.

How long has she been in a strait-waistcoat?—This morning I found she had wished to have it; I spoke of the inconvenience, and recommended the manacles; she said, she was jumping out of herself, she was afraid of doing mischief, and she said, having so long been accustomed to the thing, and it would not last long, as her paroxysms were of short duration, she would prefer it.

Do you think that cases can often occur, in which it can be necessary to confine a person either in manacles or in a strait-waistcoat till such effects shall have been produced?—Yes, if the necessity continued; I have seen a patient continue with unabated ferocity for more than twelve years, with unabated malevolence, and where the necessity for coercion existed the whole of the time.

Sufficient to require either the manacles or the strait-waistcoat?—Sufficient to require that sort of coercion that should prevent his doing mischief.

Is that degree of insanity which requires such a degree of coercion as has been usually applied by the strait-waistcoat, known often to last for such a period as that when the strait-waistcoat is applied, such effects as you have described are known to occur?—Certainly it does not frequently occur.

Have you any objection to mention the name of the person to whom you alluded as having been under restraint for twelve years?—His name was Norris.

Do you know of many other instances of the same nature?—I feel great difficulty in recollecting the names of all the patients who have been in our house for twenty years.

Do you recollect other persons having been in that situation?—We had a man in our house for many years, of the name of Abbott, who had murdered three or four people in one morning, and he was confined by the chain round one arm, and a hole made through from the other cell, by which, when he became furious, he could be drawn down until the keeper came to apply the hand-cuffs; but in general he was at liberty, only this chain round his hand always ready, as he was a man of extreme power.

Did Norris remain in that state of ferocity and consequent confinement till the period of his death?—No; he was released some weeks previously to his death.

Can you recollect about what time that was?—I think he died in February.

Do you recollect at what period he was released from his confinement?—I would say, on guessing at the thing, three weeks or a month before his death.

Are you quite certain it was not longer than that?—It might be longer, I will not be sure; the sum total I recollect very well of every thing, but I cannot charge my memory with particular names.

Was the release in consequence of any alteration in his mind?—He was weaker in his body, and he promised to behave well.

He died of a decline?—Yes, and an affection of the lungs.

What age was he?—I should presume fifty-seven or fifty-eight.

What do you mean by released?—He was suffered to walk about the gallery.

Without chains?—He requested first of all to have a pair of hand-cuffs on to walk about; it was a request of his own.

Did his less degree of dangerousness arise from any alteration in the state of his mind, or from his body having become infirm?—I believe more from the feebleness of his body.

Do you believe that the degree of restraint that Norris was in, was less painful and disagreeable to him than a strait-waistcoat, would have been?—Much more easy; a strait waistcoat would not have been efficient.

Is there not in the books of Bethlem a minute, entered by the governors, and signed by some of them, in which there is a narrative of the case of Norris?—There was, after the case of Norris had made some noise, a committee assembled, convened by the president and the treasurer of our hospital, inviting all those Members of the Lords and Commons who were governors of our hospital to the investigation of the case of Norris, and the subject was gone into by them, and a report prepared thereon.

Was that report made?—That report is in existence in the books at Bridewell.*

When did that investigation take place?—I think it was last June.

You say that was about the time that a noise was made about the case of Norris?—The public papers abounded with it.

Is there not a minute entered in that book of the hospital some years back, in which the reasons that were supposed to warrant the nature of the confinement of Norris, are entered?—That minute is therein recorded, speaking of the report.

That is to say, the report that you suppose was made last June, contains within it the minute to which the Committee allude?—It does.

There would be no objection to produce a copy of it?—I should conceive not the slightest objection; there is nothing to require a moment's secrecy.

Can you state what were the circumstances that led to the alteration in Norris's restraint?—It was mentioned to me, by the servant, that the iron which encompassed him did not answer the purpose, for he could get his hands out of it; and immediately, on such representation, I desired it might be taken off; and, that there might be no doubt of the order being given, I wrote it down, and a copy of that order, written by me, forms a part of the record in the report I have mentioned.

Did that arise entirely from the representation of a keeper only?—Certainly; the thing being inefficient, of course was taken off.

Then, in point of fact, the alteration in the restraint upon Norris arose from the restraint being insufficient?—It having been represented to me, by the keeper who had the care of Norris, that he could get his arms out; it no longer became a security; I accordingly gave him an order to take it off immediately.

Then you are understood to say, he had been under that inefficient restraint for twelve years?—I do not say that by any means.

Then how long had Norris been under that inefficient degree of restraint?—That I cannot tell.

Can you form any recollection of the time; was it a year?—More than one, two, three, or four years certainly. You will be able to collect the precise time, from the date of the resolution of the Committee, that he should be so secured, connected with the order for the release from it; that will give the time, but that time I do not recollect.

Then your answer is, that Norris had been under the same degree of restraint from which he was released, for several years?—Certainly.

And the discovery that it was insufficient was not made till a noise was made about his case?—No, I did not say that; I say the meeting to inquire into it was the result of reports that had gone abroad and appeared in the papers.

Was the order for the release of Norris, so signed by you, given prior to those gentlemen visiting Bethlem, who drew the picture of Norris, and who found him in the situation in which he was?—I never saw any picture, or knew of any picture being drawn; nor did I know of any visitation having been made, when this apparatus or restraint was taken from him. He was confined by a chain round the neck, and a cord affixed to a station, which is an iron bar.

In consequence of whose report was it, that the order was originally given to confine Norris in that manner?—When he had committed various acts of desperation, I suggested that he should be confined in a double cell; that this man, being the most mischievous patient perhaps that ever I saw, should have two cells, a door communicating between them, so that he should have a sitting-room and a bed-room: he should go into his bed-room without his clothes; that would enable the keeper to clean out the sitting-room, and to examine daily his pockets, to see that he had no offensive weapon, or any thing with which he could do mischief; that, when he retired from his bed-room into the other room, the keeper would be enabled to ventilate and sweep the bed-room. This was my proposition, and this forms part of the report alluded to. This was over-ruled, and the present apparatus, by whom contrived I do not know, was exhibited, and its imposition agreed on.

This was the advice you gave to the then Committee?—Yes; and that forms a part of the report alluded to.

By whom was that advice of yours over-ruled?—I cannot say that it was over-ruled; they did not consent to it.

It was over-ruled by the Governors?—By some existing Committee at that time, to whom it was proposed.

It was over-ruled by the Committee to whom it was proposed?—Certainly.

Who composed the Committee to whom that advice was given by you?—I cannot tell, after a lapse of fifteen years.

How many Governors?—It was an open Committee; and sometimes it is one half-dozen, and sometimes another.

As this was a very remarkable case, did not it make any impression on you; did not the circumstance of his case coming before the Committee make a greater impression upon your mind than the case of any ordinary patient?—Certainly; and therefore I proposed additional security, which was what I had the honour to submit to the Committee of his having two cells.

And that proposal was over-ruled by the Committee. Of whom was that Committee composed?—That I cannot tell.

Will it appear upon the minutes of whom the Committee was composed, in which Norris's case was discussed?—I cannot say whether the clerk made a minute of that. When this apparatus was fixed on him I took care that a minute should be made, that I might know who was present.

Do you know by whom the plan of confinement was devised to which he was afterwards subjected?—Not certainly; but I did hear, as a matter of report, that they had some dangerous man in Newgate, for whom this iron had been made, and this was brought from there; but it is mere report.

Did you approve of that mode of confinement?—My other proposition being over-ruled; this, for reasons which ought to be explained, and that form a part of the report, that it met with the concurrence of Dr. Monro and the medical officers.

Among whom was Mr. Haslam?—Certainly.

Then you mean to say, that the plan of confinement by two cells, being disapproved by the Committee, no other or better mode of confining the patient, than that which was adopted, was recommended by the medical officers; but that they consented to and approved the adoption of that which has been already alluded to?—I have no great genius myself for any contrivance of this kind. It is recorded in the minute, that the physicians and the medical officers approved of it. I presume that is correct.

They approved specifically of this mode?—The apparatus was brought into the Committee-room and exhibited.

Will you give your own description of what that mode of confinement was?—There was a sort of frame through which the arms went.

What sort of frame was it?—Iron.

There was an iron frame which went round his body, and to which his arms were confined: was there not?—His arms went through some part of this contrivance; but the machine is particularly described in the report of the Committee.

Have you any thing to say explanatory of the reasons, on account of which the medical officers agreed to this mode of confinement?—I have:—Norris's wrists were so constructed that handcuffs or manacles were of no service; the bones of his hands were smaller than his wrists; and, on many and repeated occasions, where the manacles had been imposed, he slipped them off, and converted them into weapons of offence; so that the ordinary mode, the ultimatum of restraint to which we had hitherto resorted, was unavailing in Norris's case; and that was the reason for further means of coercion.

Do you know whether he was capable of slipping his feet out of the foot-locks?—Certainly he was not.

Was he not confined by an iron collar round his neck, exclusively of that which went round his body, which has been already alluded to, and which neck-collar was fastened by a chain to an upright bar behind his bed?—Yes.

What was the reason for this additional confinement of the neck-collar and chain?—He was inclined to dart forward, and he would not have been secure in his bed-place.

Is it your opinion, that, if this man had been confined in foot-locks, with manacles on his wrists, and his arms fastened behind him, that he would have been able to have darted forwards, and done the mischief that seems to have been apprehended?—I have previously stated, that handcuffs or manacles were unavailing, from repeated experience.

Have not you had much experience in the confinement of maniacs?—Certainly.

Do you conceive yourself incapable of contriving a handcuff, from which a man should not be able to extricate his hands, even though they should be formed as Norris's were?—No; I have no contrivance of that kind; nor do I know of any that would have answered.

Was the strait-waistcoat ever tried upon Norris?—It was.

For what reason was it left off?—It answered no purpose; he burst it to pieces.

Do you know of any contrivance attempted for securing Norris, other than those which have been described already?—None; with the exception of the two cells which were proposed, and not adopted.

Do you mean to say, that a strait-waistcoat could not have been made of sufficient strength to have prevented Norris from extricating himself from it?—That is a question I cannot answer.

Do you believe that a strait-waistcoat might not have been easily constructed, of so much strength as that Norris could not have burst it open?—I cannot tell.

Do you know for how long a time Norris was confined to his bed, manacled in the manner already described?—I have previously said I could not judge of the exact time.

Do you think that his confinement in that manner, during the whole of that period, was necessary?—Certainly.

At what intervals were you accustomed to see Norris during those years?—Frequently; very frequently.

How came it then, that it was not till the month of June last you were acquainted with the circumstance of his withdrawing his hands from that confinement, which was imposed upon him as necessary to his safety, because a handcuff was not a sufficient confinement?—That information I had from the keeper who attended him.

How came it, that it was not till the month of June last, you were acquainted with the circumstance of his withdrawing his hands from that confinement which was imposed upon him as necessary to his safety, because a handcuff was not a sufficient confinement?—I only know his capability of so extricating himself, from the report of the keeper; he might be thinner, and therefore could more easily extricate himself; but I cannot pretend to say.

Did that discovery ever take place, till the noise about his case, of which you have already spoken, had happened?—The dates will prove that.

Is that, or is it not, within your knowledge?—I think it was before, but I will not be sure; it was before our inquisition at Bethlem Hospital.

Do you know, or believe, that the report of the keeper, in consequence of which Norris was released from that species of confinement, in which he had been so long kept, was made to you before the visits which took place to Bethlem Hospital?—I know nothing of the time when the visits did take place.

Before the case of Norris became the subject of common conversation?—I really cannot tell.

You have been asked, whether you know, or believe, that the report of the keeper, in consequence of which Norris was released from the species of confinement in which he had been so long kept, was made to you before Norris's case had become the subject of public conversation?—That the keeper can tell better than I can.

You are only asked, whether you know, or believe, it was before those visits?—I cannot tell.

Do you know, or believe, that the report of the keeper, in consequence of which Norris was released from that species of confinement in which he had been so long kept, was made to you before the visits which took place to Bethlem Hospital? I cannot connect dates in my recollection in that way.

Have you really no belief on the subject?—I cannot say that I have a belief on the subject; I cannot fix the epoch of the public conversation, any further than from reading something of it in the newspapers.

Have you any belief on the subject or not?—I have not.

The Committee are to understand you have no belief or opinion on the subject?—I have not sufficient recollection to found a belief on.

Have you no impression whatever upon your mind, arising from any circumstances which then happened, respecting the time at which the keeper made that report to you, as to Norris's clearing his hands from the instrument of confinement?—I state directly, that I was impressed only with the insufficiency of the apparatus; that was the only impression on my mind.

But the period in which that impression was given to your mind, you do not recollect?—I do not.

And you will state to the Committee, that it was perfectly and entirely unconnected with the discussions then going on by the public, on the subject of Norris?—Certainly, and that question forms a part of my evidence in the report to which I have alluded; and you will find it is there put, that I had not been influenced in the removal of this by any visitation which had been made to Norris, then under a state of confinement, but was the result solely of the report of the keeper, that the thing was insufficient. I should presume, that the fact of his liberation from this apparatus was subsequent to the public discussion on the subject.

You have said, that you visited Norris frequently during the nine years?—I did very frequently.

Was there nothing in the manner in which he was confined, that led you to apprehend that he ought to be released from it as soon as circumstances would permit?—If his ferocity had abated, he would have been released.

Was there nothing in the manner in which he was confined, that led you to apprehend that he ought to be released from it as soon as circumstances would permit?—Certainly.

If his hands could have been confined by the ordinary manacles, would you have seen any necessity for confining him in the mode to which he was subject?—Undoubtedly not.

What is the use of the ordinary manacles?—To prevent the hands being separated, as I have previously explained, for the purposes of violence; each hand being used separately.

Was the belt round his body to which his hands were attached, conceived to be sufficient for the purpose of confining them when it was first put upon him?—The contriver of it must have presumed so.

Did the medical gentlemen who consented to its imposition, think so likewise?—I presume they must.

Then for what purpose was the additional neck-collar and chain introduced?—For additional security; as far as I can state, the neck-collar had existed a considerable time previous to the frame-work for the body; the collar was anterior, and the frame-work for the body subsequent; that I am pretty confident of.

When you applied that species of confinement, which answered the purpose of the manacle, which you have stated, along with foot-locks, to be sufficient to keep in subjection the most outrageous Maniac, rendering him an innoxious animal, why did you not remove the chain which was fastened to the neck of Norris, it then being by your own statement no longer necessary?—The priority of one being put on before the other, I think explains it.

Veneris 12^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

MR. JOHN HASLAM was again called in, and stated, that doubting the accuracy of the information he gave with respect to his approbation of the apparatus in which Norris was confined, on a reference to the Minutes it appeared that the words were as follow: "Ordered, that he be put in the iron " apparatus prepared for him, and approved by Doctor " Morris and the committee, under the direction of the " medical officers;" and stated that it did not appear to him to follow from the Minute, that his approbation was given. After which he was further examined, as follows:

DO you then think that your opinion was not asked?—That I cannot recollect.

What is your opinion of your own duty in such cases?—Having previously recommended the two cells, my opinion finished there.

What is your opinion of your own duty, with respect to giving advice to the committee on the mode of confining the patients?—If it is necessary to consult them, I do so; having previously stated that the ordinary mode of confinement is by handcuffs and by chains round the leg, it is not necessary to consult the committee when it is thought proper to put on restraint, they confide that to their officers.

Among whom you include yourself, of course?—Certainly; there is a law of the Hospital, that no patient shall be put into irons (those are the words) or be released therefrom without my consent.

Do you recollect any other instance, and if any, how many, of patients in Bethlem Hospital, being confined in such a manner as Norris was?—None.

Do you think that the committee would order a mode of confinement totally new, and so apparently coercive as that in which Norris was placed, without consulting that officer to whom the usual direction of confinement in irons was confided?

—I cannot tell what they might do, I cannot answer for the conduct of other persons.

Do you recollect who that committee were?—No.

Do you recollect either, of how many, or of whom that committee consisted?—Neither one nor the other, it is an open committee frequented every Saturday by different persons.

Is not the number always entered on the minute book?—Certainly; the names of the persons attending are always entered in the book.

Can you say whether, after all that has passed, you are not in possession of the number of the committee giving the order for this apparatus to be put?—No; I am only in possession of this report.

You have before you drawings of Norris in his state of confinement, do you admit that they are a correct representation of the manner in which Norris was confined?—I think the apparatus is all correct.

Do you wish it to be understood, from your late explanations, either that you did or that you did not approve of the mode of confinement then ordered?—I preferred the two cells.

Do you wish it to be understood from your late explanations, either that you did or that you did not approve of the mode of confinement then ordered?—I cannot recollect; I should presume, having preferred a different mode, that I could not approve any other than the suggestions of my own mind.

Then you rather imagine that you did not approve it?—I should be very sorry to put it as a matter of imagination, I infer I did not approve it.

Do you infer or apprehend, that so not approving, you made any objection?—I do not recollect any such circumstance.

Do you apprehend that if you had objected to it as an improper mode of confinement, the committee would nevertheless have adopted it?—That I cannot tell.

Do you recollect any instance, in which having remonstrated earnestly against any new mode of confinement or other treatment to be applied to any of the patients, the committee ordered it to be put in execution, notwithstanding such remonstrances on your part?—I never have made any such remonstrances.

Do you apply that to the present, or to any other case, or to all cases?—To all cases.

Then is it to be supposed, that you did not in the present case, make any such remonstrance?—The supposition does not reside with me, it may reside with other persons.

Does the answer apply to the case in question?—Having made no remonstrances, this being a singular instance of such coercion, I have had no occasion to remonstrate against that which did not exist. As to the present case, I say my recollection does not furnish me further than that the natural inference to be deduced from that minute is, that it does not appear that my approval either was asked, or that I interfered at all about it; I had another mode that was not adopted; this was put in execution.

Then do you, or do you not, mean to say, you made any remonstrance in the present case?—I have said, I do not recollect.

Do you recollect that you never have made any remonstrance at all, and yet are uncertain whether you did it in the present case?—Never having made a remonstrance, there being no necessity for such remonstrance, this being a singular instance, it is impossible for me to recollect; it is a matter of inference.

Have you been since of opinion that that mode of confinement was proper?—Yes, certainly.

What do you conceive to be the object of a practitioner in lunatic cases?—He must have various objects.

Do you conceive it to be the object of the practitioner in lunatic cases, rather to remove the disease than to irritate the sufferer?—Certainly.

In what light do you conceive that coercion should be considered?—As a salutary and protecting restraint.

Are you of opinion that no protecting restraint against the violence to be apprehended from Norris, could have been invented more salutary and less irritating to the patient, than that which was inflicted?—The two cells.

No other?—I have no genius for such contrivances myself.

You are simply asked, whether you believe that the confinement in which Norris was placed, was the least irritating and the most salutary which could be devised after the rejection of the two cells?—Perhaps this was the second best.

Do you believe that it was the second best?—According to my present knowledge it was.

How long was Norris confined in these irons?—Nine years.

Do you mean that he was never out of those irons for the whole nine years?—They were never taken off, I believe; I do not know that they were ever taken off; if the keeper took them off, it was unknown to me.

Did you during that period ever make a second attempt to have Norris confined in a different manner?—No.

Were you then satisfied with that mode of confinement for that period of time?—Yes.

Do you recollect at what time the collar was put round his neck?—No; it would appear from the report, that the whole apparatus was put together; but I said at my last examination, that I had something floating in my mind that the collar was put on first, and the body-iron afterwards.

Do you acquiesce in the truth of the statement of the report, that the neck-collar was put on at the same time with the other irons?—I cannot say to the contrary; I have merely floating in my mind, but without any reference to particular circumstances, that they were imposed at different dates.

Do you doubt the statement in the report?—I do not doubt the truth of it.

You have stated in a former part of your evidence, that the collar was put round his neck to prevent his darting forward to the injury of other persons; is that mode of annoying others unusual?—By no means unusual.

Have not you stated, that a patient foot-locked and manacled is an innoxious animal?—I have, where he can be hand-cuffed.

Did not the belt round the body, to which Norris's arms were attached, answer the purpose of handcuffs?—They did not secure his hands, because his hands were at liberty, but they prevented him from throwing out the arm; they confined the arm above the elbow.

For what purpose then was the neck-collar and chain added?—It appears by the report that they were put on together; I cannot answer that question; the report makes it the act of others and not of me.

Did you remonstrate against this additional mode of confinement?—I do not know that it was additional.

The handcuffs are stated as the usual mode; it is stated that the handcuffs were not applicable to this person, and for this reason, the belt round the body to which the arms were attached was used; why then was the neck-collar and chain added?—I can give no reason for the contrivance at all, not having contrived it.

You have stated what you think to be sufficient; why did you acquiesce for nine years in what, by your own account, you did not think necessary?—I have never given such answer, that I did not consider the confinement necessary.

Did you acquiesce in that extraordinary mode of confinement as a sufficient substitution for the hand-cuffs?—It does not appear from the report, that I did so acquiesce.

You were asked, "when you applied that species of confinement which answered the purpose of the manacle, which you have stated along with foot-locks, to be sufficient to keep in subjection the most outrageous Maniac, rendering him an innoxious animal, why did you not remove the chain which was fastened to the neck of Norris, it then, by your own statement, being no longer necessary;" to which you answered, "the priority of one being put on before the other I think explains it?"—It appearing from the report that the neck-collar and body-irons were put on at the same time, there was a necessity for it, and no reason why any part of the apparatus should be removed as long as he continued in that violent state.

Do you mean to say, that in your opinion there was a necessity for it?—I have said so before, always understanding the two cells not having been adopted.

Do you remember any thing respecting the chain by which the neck-collar was fastened to the bar or stantion?—I recollect it was so fastened.

Do you recollect its being at any time lengthened?—No; I do not.

Would any person order that chain to be lengthened, without your knowledge?—That I cannot tell; I do not know the fact that it was lengthened; I cannot tell how far any other person might venture.

Did it ever occur before?—Such a case never happened before.

Do you know what the length of that chain was?—I do not; I never measured it.

Nor do you know, whether it was at one time longer than at another?—I do not.

Do you think that when a man was confined in the manner already alluded to, it was no part of your duty to be minutely acquainted with the particulars of that confinement?—Certainly.

Do you think it an unimportant particular of that confinement, whether the man was able with ease to stand up by the side of his bed or not?—I always understood that he could.

Did you understand that from personal inspection, or not?—I have made him stand up a hundred times to shew the manner in which he was confined, to many persons, even to Members of this House.

Do you mean to say, you do not know that the chain was lengthened in order to enable him to do so?—I do not know it; at least I do not recollect it, and therefore I do not know it.

Do you know, that during the first years of his confinement he was able to stand up by the bed-side without inconvenience?—That I cannot recollect.

Can you recollect when you first ordered him to stand up?—No, that I cannot, but a long time ago.

Will you state what were the particular circumstances attending Norris, which rendered it necessary so to confine him?—When first admitted into the hospital, he appeared perfectly tranquil, and it was intended shortly to discharge him as cured. When he had been there, perhaps a few months, I cannot tell how long, Sir Joseph Banks wrote me a note, requesting I would walk round the hospital with some friends of his, a foreigner of distinction, and others; I took them, after seeing the hospital, into the airing ground, and, as they spoke no English, I was obliged, either in French or German, to speak to them. I said, here is a man who will shortly be discharged, and pointed to him; at that very moment he gave me a most malignant look, and turned off extremely sulky. I saw him waiting for me at the gate, for at that time I resided in the hospital; he was watching, and he had something in his breeches pocket, and the malignity of his look prevented my going through the centre of the hospital, and I went round by the street. I mentioned it to the keeper; he said, he appeared very quiet, but would I like him confined? I said, no, God forbid, on my account. On the following day he attacked the keeper; he drew a knife upon him, and he wounded the keeper in two or three places in the belly. Another patient, of the name of Bacon, assisted the keeper, and he received a stab, and I think another patient, but of that I will not be certain. He was then confined, but he contrived to get this confinement off, the handcuffs; and for a very considerable time every day produced some sort of explosion and violence. The keepers were tired out with him. When I came to him, to assure him he should be put at liberty if he conducted himself properly; he said, it was intended for you, For by God, you wanted to sell me to those infernal brutes you had round the other day; you were making a bargain to sell me. Then, at the expiration of his time as a curable patient, he was retained as an incurable and dangerous patient. All modes of confinement were tried in vain. A very unoffending man, to whom it appeared he had taken some sort of liking, went to him one day, and he bit his finger off, I believe, or nearly so; he lost the use of it. He called the keeper, on one occasion, having fouled his room, to take it up, with the most opprobrious epithets; and while he was taking it up, he snatched the shovel, and if another patient had not drawn him out by the legs he would certainly have killed him; and he said, nothing would have given him so much pleasure as to have destroyed him. I was coming in, on one occasion, to give him medicine, and he had contrived to preserve all the fat from his broth for several days, with which he smeared the bottom of the floor; I came in in the usual way, and, from the grease, was thrown backwards immediately, and a shower of bowls came at me. I cannot particularize the constant and repeated acts of violence of this man, but he was, stating it generally, the most malignant and the most mischievous Lunatic I ever saw in my life; and he had been equally so, by his own confession, when he was in the army, and his back bore many records of the whip.

Are there any other circumstances to be added to these?—I do not immediately recollect others; if I were to sit down to study, and bring the thing more in my own mind, I might coolly perhaps recollect more, but these appear to me sufficient: He was the most ingenious plaiter I ever saw; he made whip-cord by which he would have escaped; he made the finest whip-cord I ever saw, by tearing a sheet, and made a great quantity of rope with it.

Was he hand-cuffed at the time he made that attack on the keeper with the shovel?—No, we never put his hand-cuffs on, they were of no use, he took them off immediately.

Were you a witness of the attack on the keeper, or do you know any thing more of it than from the account which the keeper gave of it?—I was not present.

Or at either of the other attacks of which you have spoken?—No; the only evidence I have is, seeing the stab in the man's belly, and the wounds in the man's head.

Then you know only from the account of the keeper himself, whether those attacks were made with or without provocation?—I was not present.

Was any attempt made to remove that erroneous impression, that you were about to sell him?—Yes, ineffectually.

Do you know whether the treatment of this man by the keepers, was proper?—As far as such treatment came to my knowledge it was; but his aversion was implacable against them.

Do you know whether one of those men who usually attended upon him, was or was not much given to liquor?—The former man who attended him was a very temperate man.

What was his name?—William Howkins; the second, Edward Davis, was certainly occasionally intoxicated.

Do you mean to say he was only occasionally intoxicated, and that it was not a frequent and habitual intoxication?—His drinking was frequent, but I cannot say that his intoxication was constant.

Was it frequent?—I think I may say that it was; he was a man certainly who drank more than he ought to have done, consistently either with his health or his morality.

Was not this man the keeper who represented Norris as having taken the shovel from him, and attacked him with it?—That was the man.

Do you know that Davis was not drunk at that time?—He seemed tolerably sober when he came down to me with his head bruised; I do not think he was drunk at the time.

Will you say, he was sober to your belief?—It is a difficult question.

Was he under the influence of liquor?—Not under the perceptible influence of liquor when he came to me.

Why did you use the word tolerably sober, if you think he was in any degree under the influence of liquor?—I said, not under the perceptible influence of liquor.

Do you think that the habits of this man were such as to render him a proper attendant upon irritable Maniacs?—When not under the influence of liquor, he was a remarkably kind and attentive man.

Do you think that the habits of this man were such as to render him a proper attendant upon irritable Maniacs?—He was a very good kind of man, when he was sober.

Do you think that the habits of this man were such as to render him a proper attendant upon irritable Maniacs?—Taking him upon the whole, he was a good keeper.

Do you think that the habits of this man were such as to render him a proper attendant upon irritable Maniacs?—I do not think that any intemperate man ought to be suffered to be about the insane.

Was this an intemperate man?—The quantum of his intemperance I do not know; I have seen him frequently in liquor, and I think more so than a man ought to be who is to attend on Insane persons.

How long was this man retained in his situation as a keeper, when his habits were such as have been described?—He remained till he died.

He was porter?—Yes, he was porter subsequently.

How long did he remain in the office of keeper?—I cannot tell the date; till the death of Howkins, who was porter.

Had he the care of Norris long?—I think he had the care of him for several years.

Are the Committee to understand that the aggravations of Norris's case have been fully detailed?—I think so.

Do you know of Norris being beaten, or, as they call it, polled by any of the keepers?—I do not; I never heard the expression polled used before, nor do I know the fact.

Did you never hear of his being beaten by a man of the name of King, who was once a keeper, and has been discontinued as such?—No, I never heard such a thing.

Do you recollect a man being brought to Bethlem from the Lunatic Asylum at Manchester, where he had killed the person who had the care of him, by stabbing him in the back with a knife?—I do not remember his being brought; I remember his being in the Hospital when I came there.

Was his countenance the most cunning and malignant you ever beheld?—One of the most so.

Did that man form a stiletto out of a mop-nail?—He did.

Had he the most uniform and implacable aversion to the officers and servants of the Hospital?—He had.

Was he continually venting the most horrid imprecations and blasphemies, both by day and night?—I have heard him so express himself.

Was it thought necessary to confine this man in any mode resembling that in which Norris was confined?—Not in the least; he had handcuffs on occasionally.

What are the distinctions between this case and that of Norris, which rendered it necessary in the one, and unnecessary in the other?—Charlton, the man who came from Manchester, was an old man, who did not possess the bodily force of Norris, and he could be secured by handcuffs, and he was confined in his room.

Does the bodily force of Norris make such a distinction between the two cases, as to render that confinement necessary for Norris, and the common handcuff sufficient for the other?—Norris was more violent certainly; I mean, that he was constantly at some mischief. Charlton had more of deep cunning.

Does the bodily force of Norris make such a distinction between the two cases, as to render that confinement necessary for Norris, and the common handcuff sufficient for the other?—It forms a distinction.

Does it form a sufficient distinction to warrant the difference of the confinement?—It does.

Do you recollect a case of R. B. who, during eight years, was mostly in a very furious state, and obliged to be very strictly confined, whose mischievous disposition was manifested on every occasion, who would hurl the bowl in which his food was served against those who passed his cell, and when his hands were secured, would kick, bite, or throw his head into the stomach of those who came near him?—Yes, I remember a person of the name of Robert Bown.

Who entertained a constant aversion to his keeper, and whose life was miserably divided between furious paroxysms and melancholic languor?—Yes.

Was that man ever confined in any other than the common mode?—No.

What was the distinction between this man's case and Norris's?—This man's wrists admitted of handcuffs to secure him.

Have you any other reason to state, for the different modes of confining these two persons?—I have given a reason for Norris, and I have never been accustomed to judge of the thing in this way by comparison; for Bown the confinement by handcuff was sufficient. I have no other reason.

Do you think that a keeper's life might be in danger, or that he would be in danger of being overpowered by such exertions as kicking, biting, or throwing the head into his stomach?—Yes, if thrown with sufficient force.

Do you recollect any thing particular of the manner in which Norris was confined, between 1801 and 1804?—Nothing particularly.

Do you recollect Norris being confined in either of the cells, by a chain which was fixed to a collar round his neck, and passed through a hole in the wall of the cell?—No, I do not.

Do you think that any keeper in Bethlem would dare to confine a patient in such a manner, without your knowledge?—No; and particularly after the law which now exists. If a keeper has occasion to confine a person, when I come into the gallery, he always says, “Sir, such a man behaved ill yesterday, and I was obliged to confine him:” I immediately go to the cell where he is confined, and enquire into the circumstances.

Do you at all mean to dispute the fact of his having been so confined?—I cannot say that I dispute a thing that I know nothing at all about.

Do you think that the fact of his having been so confined, can have happened without your either knowing it, or its having been your duty to know it?—That I cannot tell.

Is it not the duty of the apothecary of Bethlem Hospital, to visit the patients daily?—It is.

Do you, or do you not, think it was your peculiar duty to be acquainted with the state in which such a man as Norris was?—Certainly.

Do you know whether the governors who attended the Hospital, often visited the cell of Norris?—They did frequently, when they went round.

Did they remark his mode of confinement?—They certainly were shewn him; they saw the apparatus in which he was confined.

Did the governors, being so shewn the state of Norris, ever make particular enquiry into his case?—They knew the history of the man. I do not recollect that they made any particular enquiries, or any record on the subject.

You probably attended some of those governors on their visitation?—Probably I might.

Do you attend the governors when they go round?—That is not my duty; I attend the committee.

How often do the committee go round the Hospital?—Once a month, I think.

Did you attend the committee on those visitations?—Yes, I have always attended the committee, when they have gone round as a committee.

Was every patient then made the subject of an accurate visitation?—No; they walked round.

Upon those occasions, was Norris particularly visited?—He was always visited with the rest: If they go round that house, they see the patients.

Do you not know that the committee, according to the mode which you have described, might have walked round for a twelve-month, and unless the situation of Norris had been peculiarly pointed out to them, might have known nothing of the matter?—No; his door was always opened when they went round.

To whom do the governors of Bethlem trust for the proper management of their patients, in the intervals between the monthly visits?—To their medical officers, for the medical management and the moral management.

Is not the treatment and confinement included in the medical management?—It is now termed moral management.

Which includes the mode of confinement?—I fancy it does.

Are you of opinion, that in the nine years, during which Norris was actually chained down to his bed in the irons already so often alluded to, there were no intervals during which he might not, with great propriety, and with advantage to himself, have been relieved from that mode of confinement?—No, there were none such.

Have you reason to believe that he was, during any portion of that time, able to take his arms out of the irons in which they were confined, before they were taken off?—I never knew such fact till it was communicated to me by the keeper.

Have you any reason to believe the keeper knew it before?—I have not the slightest knowledge of any thing on the subject, but what he told me; “Sir, Norris can get his arms out of his irons;” “then in God’s name let them be removed,” said I; that was the first time I heard of it.

Are the servants now employed at Bethlem, who were there last May and June?—That I cannot tell exactly.

Are the keepers now in the employment of Bethlem Hospital, under whose care Norris was in the months of May, June, and July last?—Yes; I believe I can affirm that John Blackburn attended him at that time; there is another man of the name of Rodbard, who was the last who came, and I am uncertain when he came.

Did you, at frequent intervals, enquire of the keeper whether it would be unsafe to release him from that confinement?—No; a new keeper could not judge; I should not have been satisfied with the opinion of a new keeper.

When this iron was taken off, was any thing substituted in its stead?—No.

Why not?—He then promised that he would behave well.

Did he never make that promise before?—I never heard him make that promise before.

Did he promise to you when you took them off, that he would behave well?—He promised when they were taken off, that he would behave well: when he was taken to the fire he wished us to allow him to have a strait-waistcoat on; a strait-waistcoat was put on, and he behaved quietly.

Did he say that to you?—Yes; but he still conceived I mingled poison with his food.

With respect to the Report which has been delivered in, of the Committee of the Governors of Bethlem held on the 23d of June last, the Committee wish to know, whether any other persons were examined upon that occasion besides the physician, the apothecary, the steward, and the keepers of the Hospital?—I do not know; I was up stairs during the time, till I was called down; it was in the lower committee-room; I was up in waiting in the upper room, and I do not know who went in; the physician, Dr. Monro, was present during the whole of the examination, at least he was there at their meeting, and I found him there when I was called in myself to be examined.

Do you know whether any of the Select Committee, who sat on the 23d of June, had visited this man in his previous confinement?—That I cannot take upon myself to determine.

Do you know whether he was then examined?—I accompanied Sir Richard Glynn, our president, to the cell of Norris, and spoke to him.

In what manner was he then confined?—He had then the collar about his neck.

And any thing else?—Confined by one leg; I should not have recollected that, without a particular circumstance connected with it; he was asked, whether he kicked.

Have you now any doubt that the neck-iron with the leg-lock that Norris wore for some months of last year, and which rendered him, to use your own expression, an innoxious animal, would not have had the same effect at any time within the nine years during which he wore the larger quantity?—No; he became weaker.

From the month of May last year, till the month of November, he was secured only by an iron collar and a foot-lock; did they, or not, render him, to use your own expression, an innoxious animal; was not he incapacitated, from doing mischief?—No, he was not incapacitated, had he been in his full vigour and in his full malevolence.

Then he was more feeble?—He was weaker and thinner.

Would not the iron collar and foot-lock have incapacitated him at any time from doing mischief during the nine years, while he wore the larger quantity?—I think not.

Had you ever the curiosity to weigh this apparatus?—No, I never had.

Have you it in the house?—I do not know.

Do not you consider yourself as responsible for the propriety of the manner in which the Lunatics are confined?—I am responsible for the coercion and restraint of the patients, excepting this instance of Norris, where the opinion of the committee was taken, as the Report shews.

In the course of those nine years, in which you tell the Committee you attended the weekly committee when they visited the cells, has it never occurred that the committee asked you, having seen Norris, whether a milder mode of restraint would not answer every good purpose?—Such discussions may have taken place; but I cannot honestly and decidedly say, that I have any distinct recollection of that on my mind.

Is the order which enjoins that no one shall be put under restraint without your consent, generally obeyed?—I believe it is, with this intelligence, that when the necessity of confinement exists, the keeper makes a report to me of such necessity, and I examine into the propriety of it. For an obvious reason I never wish to be present at the first coercion of a patient, as it diminishes the confidence they have in me. I have never received a blow from any of the patients since I have been there, nor have I ever found it necessary to take a keeper with me.

Do you know whether the Committee who signed the Report of the 23d of June, all of them went round the Hospital?—I think not. I remember going with Sir Richard Glynn, and I am certain I left the other members behind.

There are the names to that Report of Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Dynevor, and Lord Willoughby De Broke; were they accustomed to go round and inspect the Hospital?—I am not aware that they did. I am not acquainted with their persons.

Of course, if they had been in the habit of inspecting that Hospital, you would have known their persons?—If they had come to the committee I should; but they might have come and inspected the Hospital without my knowledge.

Do you believe it was their habit to come and inspect the Hospital?—I never heard of their coming; they were not known to the servants.

The committee of governors of Bethlem Hospital of the 24th of June having stated their opinion, that the keeper had for some time before Norris's release intended to have applied for it; do you know what induced them to form that opinion?—Not in the slightest degree. I presume from the evidence they must have heard from the keeper, at whose examination I was not present. I retired the moment my own examination was finished.

Was no enquiry made of you, by the Committee, as to that point?—I think I was asked this question, “Did I know the person of Mr. Sumner?” I said, “No, I did not; I never saw him in my life;” and I was asked, “Was Norris liberated in consequence of several gentlemen of the House of Commons having come round?” I said, I was ignorant that any such persons had come round.

Then what do you mean by liberated, as there used?—The body-irons were taken off.

Do you know whether Norris had either friends or relations in this country?—I believe not. He was an American.

Do you know whether Norris himself had ever made any complaint to the governors?—He never made any complaint whatever to any body, that I heard of.

In what manner did Norris employ himself?—He read; I have supplied him with books myself, frequently. He had a cat which amused him; and he read the newspaper.

If Norris was never tried out of his iron frame for nine years, and if he employed himself in reading books and newspapers, what are the grounds on which you think that it would have been at no time safe during those nine years to have freed him from that rigorous confinement?—From the continuance of his threats, and from the unabated ferocity of his disposition.

Do you think that his threats were likely to be discontinued, while the irritation of such a confinement without abatement continued?—Never having complained of such confinement, it does not appear that he was irritated by the confinement.

He did not complain to you personally, at any one time?—No, he did not. He has often told me that nothing but that would have held him, and that it prevented murder. He had a degree of firmness of manner about him that he scorned complaint.

Have not you stated yourself to have visited a great number of other houses of confinement?—Yes, I have.

Did you ever see in any one of those houses a person so confined?—Never in my life.

Do you believe Mr. Norris was more outrageous than any other Maniac that has ever been confined in any other house you have seen?—I have stated before, he was the most violent and malevolent Maniac I ever saw.

Does Doctor Monro visit generally the Hospital?—Yes, he does.

How often?—Twice a week; Saturday and Wednesday, or Tuesday; he suits his convenience.

When he visits the Hospital, does he go round the male and female wards?—No; that is no part of the duty prescribed to him; he does occasionally go round, and always when a patient is sick.

Do you consider Doctor Monro as having, with yourself, constantly the care of their mental and bodily complaints?—He has the direction of it.

He does attend to administer advice to persons for their mental derangement?—Yes.

You consider him as having, over yourself, the superior management?—Yes.

Does he prescribe, regularly, medicine for patients under mental derangement where they are not under bodily infirmity?—Yes.

Was Doctor Monro in the habit of seeing Norris?—Yes; he was.

Do you, of your own knowledge, know that Doctor Monro assented to the original confinement, as well as allowed of the continuance of that confinement?—Not by recollection, but by reference to that report.

Have you, from the time when he was originally confined, till the period when that mode of restraint was removed, had any conversations with Dr. Monro on the subject of the confinement of Norris?—Yes.

Did he still continue, in those conversations, to approve of the manner and to acknowledge the necessity of confining him in such a way?—He has often to me lamented the necessity of his being confined so strictly.

Do the committee that meet weekly at Bethlem, go round the wards?—Not every week; there is an order that they shall go round monthly.

Do they in point of fact do that?—They have gone round frequently of late.

What do you mean by, of late?—Within, perhaps, the last twelvemonth or two years, I think more frequently than before.

Prior to that, the examination was more remiss?—They had no book recording such visitations till within these two or three years; now it is put down, "The committee visited the house, and found the patients well cleaned and regulated."

Do they go into every cell?—I do not know that they do, because some of the cells are empty.

Wherever a patient is confined, do they go in to visit him?—I think they do.

Then during the whole of that period, that committee must weekly or monthly have visited Norris?—I think they must.

Nine or ten years ago had you usually cells to spare, or were they generally filled?—I think, from the war, we had them pouring in from the Transport Board and the War Office.

You think your cells were generally occupied?—I think so; but there is a mode of getting at the fact of the actual number at any one time?—It appears in the stewards contingent book, where there is a record of the number of patients on each day of the week at the tail of the book.

Do you not think that it would have subjected a Maniac to far less inconvenience, if his cell had been divided in such a manner as to have answered the purpose of a double cell, than to have been confined in a single cell as Norris was confined?—It would have been infinitely preferable.

Do you think, according to the mode of inspection which took place by the different committees at Bethlem a dozen years ago, and the confidence which was placed by the governors in their servants, abuses might easily have taken place without their coming to the knowledge of those inspecting committees?—I think they might.

Do you remember a person of the name of Tilley Matthews?—Perfectly.

What is your opinion of that person's case?—That he was insane.

Do you mean that he was in any degree mischievously insane, or only that he laboured under mental delusion in some particular instance?—I think his mental delusion would have produced mischief, if he could have had the liberty to act according to his delusion.

Are you of opinion that his confinement was neither more protracted nor ever more severe than the necessity of the case required?—Certainly not.

Did not his friends apply to relieve him from it?—They did make two or three applications.

Did they not engage to be answerable for his committing no injury?—I believe they did so; that was then referred to some of our law officers, or our clerk or some other person, who suggested that nobody could be security for the conduct of a madman.

By whose authority was he first sent there?—By the authority, I think, of the parish of Camberwell: I have published his case, and that gives the whole particulars.

Do the governors or managers of Bethlem Hospital think themselves justified in forcibly detaining any person there under the supposition of insanity, when his friends desire to remove him, and offer security for his being kept in proper custody?—I know that the parish of Camberwell applied to remove him, and the application was refused.

In what state of restraint was he ever kept while he was in Bethlem?—I believe he once had a pair of handcuffs on, but for a very little while.

Was he ever chained to his bed?—Yes, I believe he was leg-locked for a little while; he and the keeper Howkins had a scuffle or fight together; he was always master.

Can you state how many years he was confined in one of the ordinary cells?—I cannot tell exactly the time, but after the hearing before the Judges, who deemed him to be insane, there was a requisition on their part, that we would give him a particular room to himself; which we did accordingly, and furnished him with fire, and as many things as the house would afford.

Can you say, whether his detention in one of the ordinary cells was four or five years?—It was more than that; he was confined as an ordinary patient; in fact, we know of no distinction of patients; but, at the requisition of the Judges, we put him in a room by himself, with his drawings.

Did he carry on those drawings, and did he pursue his studies, while he was confined in one of those ordinary cells?—Yes, he did; he began the drawing of his omni imperias palace in one of the ordinary cells.

Did he execute any architectural designs while in one of those rooms?—He began a plan for the Hospital, if I am not mistaken, in the ordinary cell.

In that ordinary cell, was there particular accommodation afforded him?—He had an arm chair, which he conceived to be his throne, and sat on it.

Were the windows glazed of that cell?—Yes, they were partly glazed; and, I think, partly there was a shutter.

Had he free access to the gallery during that time?—Perfectly so; but for a considerable time he would not associate with those people.

Was he shut up in his cell at any particular hour in the evening?—With the others.

What time was that?—That depends on the season; in winter it is early.

At what time in winter?—As it grows dark; say four o'clock, but those who behave well may sit up later; till eight o'clock, with a keeper.

Had he candles in that situation?—No, he never had; his studies terminated with his going into the cell.

Do you know whether he had a wife and family?—He had a wife and two children.

Did they visit him occasionally?—The wife did, in the beginning.

Did the children, latterly?—His daughter came several times; she is now in Jamaica, I believe.

Did they seem convinced of his insanity?—Not in the least.

Was he ever at all violent?—Yes, I have seen him violent; latterly he was extremely cool.

Did he ever betray any symptoms of violence, after he was removed to a more commodious apartment?—Not in the least.

Had he any accommodation there of candles?—I think he had candles; I think he used to engrave; I brought a friend of my own, who taught him engraving gratuitously.

Veneris, 19^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Doctor THOMAS MONRO called in, and Examined.

YOU are physician to Bethlem Hospital?—Yes.

How often do you attend that Hospital?—About three times a week.

On the days of your attendance do you enquire into the particular state of any of the patients, or only go through the Hospital?—I enquire into the state of the patients: I do not always go through the Hospital.

How often may you go through it?—That depends upon circumstances; sometimes I may go twice or three times in the week, sometimes not above so many times in a month; it depends upon circumstances, and upon the patients I have to see: I have a room where I have the patients in generally; the patients I visit I send for into that room.

Are the patients you send for, on account of their bodily health, or their mental derangement?—Both; for their bodily health I most frequently visit them in the body of the house.

Do you ever examine the state of them for their mental derangement only, when they have no bodily complaint?—Most certainly.

The Committee is to understand, you frequently attend those patients on account of their mental derangement, without any bodily complaint?—Yes.

Do you administer medicines, in those cases, for their mental derangement, without regard to their bodily health?—Certainly.

Do you know the number of keepers in Bethlem, male and female?—I believe there are two female keepers and three male keepers.

Has there been no instance of the female patients being attended by a male keeper, as well as two women, since your connection with the Establishment?—The male keepers have been round the house with me to open the doors.

Have there not been males appointed to that duty only?—I am not aware of any male keeper appointed to that duty only.

Do you remember a keeper of the name of King?—Yes, I remember him.

Was he not appointed to that duty?—He used to go round the house with me; I am not aware of his being appointed to that duty, I have nothing to do with the appointment of persons to that situation: I remember the man perfectly well, he used to go round and open the doors for me; he had a wife, who was likewise a keeper.

Have you seen him doing the duty of keeper to the women only?—I have seen him in the women's gallery; as far as I recollect, he did the duty of both.

Have you seen him in the women's gallery?—Frequently; I believe he used to go round the women's gallery when I went, and likewise round the men's gallery.

If he did the duty of both, it follows that the female patients were not solely in the hands of female keepers?—I can speak only to his opening the doors to me.

You are not aware of his being in the women's gallery as a keeper?—He was there when he opened the doors for me.

Are you aware of his attending to that duty, in your absence?—I am not.

You cannot say it did not happen?—No, I cannot.

How long have you been physician to the Hospital?—Ever since the year 1783, I have been backwards and forwards.

Are you not at the head of the department, in the management of the Hospital?—I am the physician.

Do you conceive yourself to be at the head of the department?—Of course, as the physician, at the head of the medical department.

Mr. Haslam is under you?—Of course, as apothecary.

Do you conceive yourself called upon to give orders for the general management of the Hospital?—Whenever I am there.

Of course the Hospital is directed by you?—It is in some measure, not in all; when I am not there I can give no orders.

Do you recollect the fact of Mr. Clark, the chamberlain of the city of London, interfering and dismissing King, as a male keeper of the women patients?—No; I do not recollect the circumstance.

Could that circumstance have happened without your knowing it, you being, as the Committee understand, at the head of the medical department of the Hospital, and of course the Lunatics being under your care?—It might possibly have happened.

You have no recollection of it?—I have not.

That he proposed a regulation, to the exclusion of the male keepers from the women patients?—I have no recollection of the fact.

Is there any season of the year when particular medicine is applied?—Yes.

What season is that?—In the months of May, June, July, August, and September, we generally administer medicines; we do not in the winter season, because the house is so excessively cold that it is not thought proper.

Does that go to them all, male and female?—Yes, not the incurables.

When the medicine is administered at the periods you state, is it varied according to the circumstances of the patients, or is any general remedy applied?—We apply generally bleeding, purging, and vomit; those are the general remedies we apply.

Is that done according to the particular circumstances of each patient's case?—Of course they do not take medicine if they are not in a fit situation to take it.

Is the medicine adapted to the case of each particular patient, or is there any general rule for applying the remedy?—The medicine prescribed is a purgative; it is generally left to the discretion of Mr. Haslam to give the proper dose; that depends upon the state of the patient.

Is the medicine administered to the patients on account of their mental derangement, on the consideration of each separate case; or is any general remedy applied?—It is generally given, certainly.

Are there a certain number of days in the week in which you bleed, and a certain number of days on which you physic?—All the patients who require bleeding, are generally bled on a particular day, and they are purged on a particular day.

And vomited?—Yes, and vomited; only those patients are selected that are thought proper objects of such evacuations.

And those patients who do not require those remedies, how are they attended to?—They are attended whenever they require attendance.

And medicine administered to their particular case?—Yes.

Are any minutes kept of the transactions?—Not that I know of; I generally write on a piece of paper, if Mr. Haslam is not there; if he is there, I generally communicate with him upon the subject.

Are they not all bathed together; immersed in water?—We have not ordered the bathing for some time, because the bath is in a very awkward place; ever since they took down the other part of the hospital, the bath is only in a situation where the men can go, therefore the women have not bathed.

What is the practice which did obtain, till that part of the building was taken down?—Those that it was thought proper to bathe, were bathed; at least so I presume, for I never was present when they were bathed; I gave orders for their bathing.

Were the patients, by your direction, immersed in water twice a week in the month of July, without any reference to the difference of the circumstances between patient and patient?—Those that were thought proper objects of bathing, were ordered into the water; it was left always to the discretion of Mr. Haslam the apothecary.

Did you judge and separate those that were thought proper objects?—No; it was always left to the discretion of Mr. Haslam.

Has there not been a rule in the Hospital for a certain number of years, that in certain months of the year, particular classes of the patients should be physicked, bled, bathed, and vomited at given periods?—Yes.

Generally, without regard to the particular complaints of each?—The particular complaints of each, of course, were considered by the physician and apothecary, and those to whom it was not expected to be beneficial, of course, were exempted.

When the wards were purged and bled, can you recollect how many there were that did not come under that order?—That depended upon the number in the house; the incurables of course were not.

All those that were not incurables, were purged and bled?—Those that required it; there were some that would not bear it; they were not proper objects.

Do you mean to say, that at the time medicine was administered to the patients in the manner already spoken of, the individual case of every patient so physicked or bled, was made the subject of consultation between yourself and the medical attendant Mr. Haslam, or whoever it might be?—Not every individual case; but Mr. Haslam had a general feeling, that those only who were fit and proper to take medicine, took medicine; they were not all arraigned before me certainly.

Could you in such case consider yourself answerable for the selection of the patients who were to undergo the different modes of treatment, as to the propriety of that selection?—Yes, certainly; I considered myself answerable.

You have stated, that the individual cases were not brought before you?—I considered myself answerable, because I knew perfectly well that purging medicine would not do any harm to any body, under the circumstances that I communicated with Mr. Haslam; he had the selection of those patients only, that it was proper to purge.

He had the selection of the patients?—Yes.

Was this selection made by you, or by Mr. Haslam?—I used to go round the house with him, and point out particular patients that I thought it was proper to purge, under the circumstances that I have frequently done.

You have stated, that cases would arise in which you would not go round the house once a month?—Yes.

There might in those intervals arise cases, in which you did not see the patients?—I went whenever there was occasion.

Your answer applies to the bleeding, purging, and bathing; this selection was made by Mr. Haslam?—Yes.

Did you or not make the selection yourself, or trust to Mr. Haslam to make it?—Sometimes I made it myself, and sometimes I left it to him. I communicated with him, in going round the house, on the propriety of such and such patients having purging medicines, and such and such patients being bled and vomited.

The question refers to the general practice in the general course of the administration of medicine; did you take upon yourself to decide which of the patients should be so treated, or was the classification left to Mr. Haslam?—I used to go round the house with Mr. Haslam, and point out to him which I thought the proper patients to undergo those operations. I sometimes have left it to him undoubtedly.

It is done twice a year, is it not?—The bleeding is.

What are the months in which the bleeding takes place?—About the month of May, and the month of June.

A periodical bleeding takes place?—Yes, at about a month or six weeks distance.

Twice, every patient male and female?—Yes.

Whether they have plethoric habits or not?—No, certainly not; we make distinctions; many of the patients go without being bled at all; we do not bleed them indiscriminately.

Are you aware that Mr. Haslam has in his book expressed an opinion, that the practice of vomiting is generally unfavourable?—Yes, I am.

Does the practice still continue in the Hospital, notwithstanding that opinion?—Yes, people may differ in opinion; I vomit my patients freely.

Of course Mr. Haslam follows that practice, under your orders?—Under my orders of course.

It is not practised at St. Luke's, is it?—I do not know indeed.

Is the bathing and vomiting performed at the same periods, or periodically, like the other modes of treatment?—They are ordered to be bled about the latter end of May, or the beginning of May, according to the weather; and after they have been bled they take vomits once a week for a certain number of weeks, after that we purge the patients; that has been the practice invariably for years, long before my time; it was handed down to me by my father, and I do not know any better practice.

Incurables are not physicked?—No, not in general, unless they require it. We do not, generally speaking, give them medicines; if their bowels are in a state of constipation we give them physic.

You have stated a particular period of the year when medicines are given to the patients; is medicine administered to them at other times of the year?—Not in the winter season, unless they are ill and require it, except in some particular cases that we think medicine will be of use; there of course we give it to them.

Medicine is administered to them at other times of the year, if they require it?—Certainly.

On account of their mental derangement, without respect to their bodily complaint?—Yes; if a patient comes in extremely violent and furious, he is purged and bled.

Do you recollect how often you have been round the house to examine the individual patients, in the present year, previous to the present month?—No, I do not indeed; I cannot recollect how often; I never made a memorandum of it.

Has it been once, twice, or three times?—Oh yes, much more considerable than that.

To examine the separate patients?—I do not examine them all separately, only those that Mr. Haslam points out to me. I see all the others of course.

Do you mean that you go round the house to see them?—Yes; when I go round the house, I see the others, but I do not examine particularly every patient, my time would be occupied with nothing else.

Would you treat a private individual patient at your own house, in the same way as has been described in respect of Bethlem?—Certainly not.

As to the physicking and bleeding?—Oh yes, I frequently do exactly the same thing in my own house, at this time of year, with respect to the medical operations; but I understood the question to refer to management.

What is the difference of management?—In Bethlem the restraint is by chains; there is no such thing as chains in my house.

Why is not the restraint by chains and fetters, in your private house?—There is such a number of servants, there is no sort of occasion; I have forty odd patients, and as many servants.

Are you of opinion that as much care is taken in the medical treatment of each individual in Bethlem, as is done in your own private house?—I should suppose so; very little depends upon me, because I am very seldom there, comparatively speaking with the apothecary, he is there every day; a vast deal of the medical treatment must depend upon him.

Are you of opinion, that if a greater number of keepers was allowed in Bethlem, there would be less necessity for restraint?—The more keepers there are, the less necessity I should think for restraint; for the more keepers there are, the more there are to watch them, and prevent them from being riotous and mischievous.

Do you know the number of persons now under restraint in Bethlem, in irons?—No; I have nothing in the world to do with the irons; I never gave an order for a patient to be put into irons in the whole course of my life.

What are your objections to chains and fetters, as a mode of restraint?—They are fit only for pauper Lunatics; if a gentleman was put into irons, he would not like it.

You have stated, that chains and fetters are fit only for pauper Lunatics; what do you mean by that answer?—I mean that pauper Lunatics of course cannot pay for the regular attendance to prevent their doing mischief; and there are so few servants kept for the purpose, that it is the only mode of restraining them.

Have you any objection, in a medical point of view, to the use of chains and fetters as a mode of confinement?—I conceive chains and fetters are fit only for those persons who are excessively furious and violent, and that require a great deal of attention and care, for fear they should do themselves mischief, or any other persons; and in a hospital there is no possibility of having servants enough to watch a great number of persons, without irons; therefore I conceive it is proper in a hospital, though not in a private house: I consider a strait-waistcoat a much better thing than irons.

Are you of opinion, that if a greater number of keepers were allowed in Bethlem, the necessity of restraint by fetters and irons would be less?—They must have a room on purpose to watch them in, if that were the case; the greater the number of keepers the less the number of irons, I should conceive.

Are you of opinion, that the application of the strait-waistcoat would render the putting persons in irons less frequent?—They could not help themselves in strait-waistcoats, they are so excessively long in the hospital, without being seen by any body, in a dark place; in winter from four o'clock to six or seven in the morning; if they were in a strait-waistcoat they could not assist themselves the least in the world.

You have stated the advantage of the strait-waistcoat over irons, have the goodness to state to the Committee all the advantages the strait-waistcoat has over chains?—In the first place, a person in a strait-waistcoat can walk about.

The question of the Committee was meant to allude to manacles, not to the irons by which they were fastened to the wall; do you think that a strait-waistcoat has any advantage over manacles?—Yes, I think it has; with manacles one patient could knock down another with perfect ease; in a strait-waistcoat they cannot, their arms are so confined; I think that is one great advantage, because they are prone to do one another a mischief very often; that is one of the chief reasons: The idea of irons is so very unpleasant to persons in general, I have never thought of making use of them for my patients.

Do you apprehend that the use of irons occasions greater irritation in the patients?—I do not know that it does; I mean the opinion the world entertain; it is not literally the iron being unpleasant to them.

Would not a ligature from behind the patient's shoulders, confining the upper joints of his arms, in your opinion be preferable to manacles, as well as to the strait-waistcoat?—Very likely it might; but I never saw a machine of the kind.

Do you not find the use of the strait-waistcoat extremely inconvenient to the patient in hot weather?—Yes, I should think it is; very often.

Of course, if he is annoyed by flies, preventing his delivering himself from them?—Yes.

Are you accustomed to keep the strait-waistcoat on any considerable time?—Only when it is immediately necessary.

That necessity may last for hours and days, may it not?—Then they are taken off and eased.

Are there not many inconveniences, such as the heat, the confinement of the ligature, and the prevention of respiration?—I have no idea of its preventing respiration.

Its degree of tightness is at the mercy of the keeper?—Yes; and they want a great deal of looking after.

What idea do you affix to the words, that a gentleman would not like irons?—In the first place, I am not at all accustomed to gentlemen in irons; I never saw any thing of the kind: it is a thing so totally abhorrent to my feelings, that I never considered it necessary to put a gentleman into irons.

Do you or not think that a man in a superior rank of life is more likely in a state of insanity to be irritated by such a mode of confinement, than a pauper Lunatic?—Most assuredly.

Are you in the habit of visiting any house in which pauper patients are kept?—Not unless I am desired to go and see a patient.

Are there any paupers at the expense of their respective parishes, confined in Bethlem?—Yes.

In point of fact, is more personal restraint imposed upon them than upon other patients?—Not that I know of.

What is your opinion as to the effect of irritation of any kind, in retarding or otherwise the convalescence of the patient?—It certainly retards their convalescence.

If a convalescent patient is subjected to a more rigorous confinement than is absolutely necessary, is that likely to produce such irritation as to retard his convalescence?—I should think it was.

You have informed the Committee that you think the strait-waistcoat, as an instrument of restraint, preferable to manacles; have you not observed at Bethlem, in going round the galleries, that manacles are much more frequently used than a strait-waistcoat?—They are generally chained to the wall with them.

Are there not many more chained than in a strait-waistcoat?—It would not do to put Hospital patients in a strait-waistcoat, on account of their being left so many hours to themselves, as I have before stated.

Are the outrageous patients and the quiet ones kept in the same apartment in Bethlem?—They are all in separate apartments; they have all rooms to themselves.

Do they not mix in the day-time?—Yes, in the side-rooms, and in the galleries.

Do the outrageous patients and the quiet ones mix in the day-time?—Yes, the unruly are chained in rooms where there are fires, and the quiet ones walk in there.

Do you not think that that may retard the recovery of the quiet patients?—No, I do not indeed, for I think they may learn a great deal from the follies of the others; I have known patients get well by seeing the follies of others, though they did not see their own.

Would you in your own private house, place persons insensible of the calls of nature, and those who are noisy and chained to the wall, in the company of those who were quiet?—My own are all in separate rooms.

Your desire is to recover yours as soon as possible?—Yes.

If there was an advantage in the practice, you would adopt it in your own house, should you not?—Yes, if I saw any particular advantage in it; but they often comment upon each other's follies.

Are you not of opinion, that the mixture of outrageous patients with quiet ones, retards the recovery of the latter?—I think it would be better to separate them.

When you attend the wards, is it usual to find persons walking about in strait-waistcoats?—I do not believe there are any strait-waistcoats in Bethlem now, or very few indeed; they generally use irons; but I have nothing in the world to do with the ordering patients into restraint, that is always done by the apothecary; I never ordered a patient into irons in my life; that I approve of some cases where they are represented to me is matter of fact.

On your visits to the Hospital, do you go into the side-rooms in which the patients are chained to the wall?—Yes.

If you should there find persons in such a state of coercion, who you might imagine might be advantageously released and permitted to walk about in the confinement of a strait-waistcoat only, should you think it consistent with your duty and office to order such alteration?—Yes.

Do you ever so interfere?—Yes, I have occasionally required them to liberate patients.

Do you mean that you have ordered them to be put into strait-waistcoats, and permitted to walk about?—No, I never did that in my life.

You have ordered them to be released?—Yes, I have; I never ordered them into confinement; that power has generally been entrusted to the apothecary.

Do you recollect any thing of the case of one Norris?—Yes.

Be good enough to state what you recollect, and what your opinion was?—I recollect that he was a very ferocious mischievous madman.

Do you recollect the particular mode of his confinement?—Yes, I do.

By whose order was it inflicted?—That I cannot tell.

Were you a medical attendant at the Hospital at the time?—Yes, I was.

Do you recollect whether you approved of that mode of confinement at the time?—Upon my word I do not recollect; I never knew till about a year ago that my name was down in an order with my approbation: I made that discovery about a twelvemonth ago.

As having approved of that order?—As having approved of his restraint.

Of his being so confined as he was?—Yes.

Do you recollect the fact of your having been a party to the transaction at the time?—I must have been, because it was stated to have been done with the approbation of Dr. Monro.

You recollect it, with the aid of that memorandum?—Yes.

Did you visit this man frequently during the years that he was in that confinement?—Yes, I did.

Are you of opinion, that during the whole of that period that particular mode in which he was confined was necessary?—I every now and then said to Mr. Haslam the apothecary, That I thought it very likely that sort of restraint might be lessened; but he told me, in conversation with the keepers, It was a thing that could not be done without the greatest risk; therefore I acquiesced. Within a very few weeks of his death he threatened to murder somebody; he said he would do for somebody, that was his expression, as I was told by the keepers. He was the most determined ferocious madman I ever saw, I think.

Do not you recollect that the quantity of iron worn by Norris was lessened some months before he died?—I understood it was,

Did you see him in that new state?—Yes, frequently; he had no irons at all for several months before he died; a couple of months, perhaps, I do not recollect the exact time.

Is it not the fact, that the last spring the weight of iron he wore was considerably lessened, that he was confined only by a neck iron and a leg chain?—Yes, it was decreased, I think, last spring.

Did not the lesser quantity of iron incapacitate him from doing mischief, and make him as incapable of doing mischief as the larger irons?—It appeared to me his mischievous disposition was worn out during that time in a great degree, for he was in ill health, and ill health will decrease that desire of mischief; he had been for some months spitting about in his room, under the idea that every thing he took was poisonous, that the medical men particularly were poisoning every thing; and that spitting brought on a complaint of the lungs.

Did not that spitting arise from a pulmonary affection?—I believe the idea he had that every thing was poisoned, induced the spitting, and brought on the pulmonary complaint.

May not that pulmonary complaint have been produced by the great quantity of iron he wore for so many years?—I think not.

Do you think a person could have had about him a weight of iron, say six or eight-and-twenty pounds; that he could have been confined to his bed without being allowed to turn round for nine years, or without being able to get out and sit on the edge of his bed, being chained by the head by a chain only twelve inches from the iron stantion, and that that would have no effect upon his general health?—It did not appear to have any general effect upon his health, he was in very good health till within a very short period of his death.

Do you mean that the continuation of Norris in his confinement, was the act of Mr. Haslam, under the opinion of the keepers, and only acquiesced in by you under his representations?—I believe I explained before, that every now and then I mentioned to Mr. Haslam, that I thought probably there might be a diminution of the restraint, but he always mentioned to me that there would be mischief, and that I should be responsible for any accident in case it should happen; I did not like to have that sort of responsibility upon my shoulders. The man was so extremely prone to mischief, even a look would sometimes irritate him to such a degree. I believe I have got in my pocket a thing designed for me by one of the patients. [Producing an iron spike set in wood.]

That does not apply to Norris?—No; I produce that to shew how necessary it is to guard against the contrivances of these people.

Was it thought necessary, for the safety either of yourself or of the keepers, to confine the man who had so manufactured that stiletto, in a manner at all resembling that in which Norris was confined?—No, I never saw any body confined in the manner that Norris was, certainly.

Neither in Bethlem nor in any other place of confinement?—No.

Do you recollect whether the health of Norris had much failed him, before the quantity of iron he wore was lessened?—No, I do not recollect that he had any failing in his health till about last spring. I think that was about the time that he began to fail; he coughed a good deal and complained of having bad nights, and his pulse was quick.

Have the goodness to inform the Committee, whether you do not think that the iron collar and leg-lock Norris wore for the several last months of his life, would have been sufficient to prevent his doing mischief in an earlier stage of his disease?—I do not think it would have been sufficient to confine so ferocious a man.

In answering that question, do you carry in your mind the substance of the iron collar and the leg-lock?—I really do not recollect the substance of it. I should think the iron collar and the leg-lock alone were hardly sufficient to confine a man who would fly out on all occasions, who would strike any man who came near him, and was watching for opportunities of destroying any body who came near him.

In your last answer do you recollect that Norris's arms were in fact free for the six or eight last years of his wearing the iron apparatus?—No, I do not recollect that, nor did I know that they were.

How long was it before he was released from confinement that you knew he could slip his arms out?—I never knew it till it was mentioned to me by the apothecary, I think, last spring.

Have you any reason to believe that any of the keepers who attended him knew it before?—No, I have not.

Do you apprehend that Norris was a more outrageous, mischievous, and dangerous Maniac than you have ever seen either in Bethlem or in any other place of Lunatic confinement?—I think he was the most mischievous patient I ever saw in my life; in Bethlem Hospital I never saw one equally so.

Do you think that he was so much more mischievous than any other patient, as to require that particular mode of confinement to which he was subjected?—That was the mode that was pointed out, there was no other thought of at the time.

Do you recollect that there was any alternative proposed by any other person connected with the Hospital?—Yes, I think I recollect there was an alternative proposed of having a couple of rooms, and that like a wild beast he might have been turned into the room.

Do you think if that alternative had been adopted, the necessity for the other might have ceased?—I think it might not have been necessary to that extent.

Why was not that put into execution?—I cannot answer that question.

Are you of opinion that the confinement to which he was subjected, was no more uncomfortable or painful to the patient than that of having a divided cell?—I should think it was more uncomfortable to the patient.

Is it probable that that greater want of comfort produced additional irritation?—No, I am not aware that it did; he seemed to me to be a most insensible man, little better than a brute; he had not the least feeling whatever. I do not recollect that I ever heard him complain of the fetters he was confined by; he was perfectly lost to all sensibility whatever.

Do you mean all sense as well as sensibility?—I mean all feeling.

All corporeal feeling, or feeling of mind too?—Feeling of mind too; he appeared to me to have lost his mental feeling entirely.

Do you know what his usual employments were?—No, I do not indeed; I only saw him occasionally in his cell.

Do you know whether he read?—No, I do not; I rather think I have seen him with a book in his hand, but I cannot be positive.

Do you remember any circumstance of a battle that he had with a keeper of the name of Davis?—I have heard of such a thing; I do not remember any thing of it.

Did you ever hear that he had his arm broken, in consequence of his being beat with a wooden machine with which the pails are carried up?—Yes, I recollect to have heard it some years ago.

Do you recollect that keeper of the name of Davis?—Yes.

Was he a sober man?—I have seen him drunk.

Have you often seen him drunk?—Not often; I think he has been dead some years.

Was he continued long in his situation after you saw him intoxicated?—No; I think it was the latter part of his time that I saw him intoxicated.

What situation did he hold then?—I think he was porter at that time.

You do not recollect seeing him drunk as a keeper?—No; I do not recollect that I did.

Are you sure that you did not, or only that you do not remember having seen it?—I do not recollect having seen it.

Do you not recollect that he had the general character of a person that was given to intoxication?—I have heard that he was attached to drinking.

You have mentioned bleeding, purging, vomiting and bathing, as the modes of treatment adopted in Bethlem; are you aware of any other mode of treatment?—Whenever it is necessary, whenever patients require medicine of any kind, they have it; that is the general mode of practice in Bethlem.

When you speak of medicine, you mean medicine for their corporeal disease?—I mean for their mental disease, of course, too.

In point of fact, you have neither practised yourself, nor do not believe that there is any other mode of treatment which might be used efficaciously?—I do not say that positively: that is the mode which has been adopted in Bethlem Hospital: whenever a sudorific is necessary, of course it is given; but the general course of the Hospital, for many years, has been by evacuations of that description.

Do you think it is within the scope of medical knowledge to discover any other efficacious means of treating Insane persons?—With respect to the means used, I really do not depend a vast deal upon medicine; I do not think medicine is the sheet-anchor; it is more by management that those patients are cured, than by medicine; but it is necessary to give medicine at particular times; the disease is not cured by medicine, in my opinion: if I am obliged to make that public, I must do so.

There is a new Hospital building for Bethlem?—Yes.

Where is it building?—In St. George's Fields.

Were you consulted, either as to the plan or the situation of the place in which it is building?—I had some conversation with the architect about it, but I was not immediately consulted.

Were you consulted as to the situation of the place?—At this distance of time I do not recollect whether I was or not.

Can you recollect, whether you approved or disapproved of that situation?—It is a situation that is not to be approved of entirely; because I believe St. George's Fields are not reckoned exceedingly healthy; but in conversation with the apothecary next door, he is not of that opinion.

Do you recollect, whether any other place was proposed?—Yes; there was a place proposed up at Islington, in a field near the New River, I think.

Do you not think that a situation, such as you have described at Islington, upon a slope, would be more airy and much more advantageous for the building of such a place as that, than a place so many feet as this is below high water mark?—Certainly.

Is the Committee to understand that the governors who have the management of the building of the new Hospital, did not feel it necessary to consult you, or within your knowledge any other medical person attached to the Hospital, as to the propriety of the spot where it was to be built?—I can hardly recollect the conversation that may have passed; the immediate conversation upon the subject does not occur to me; I certainly was not formally consulted, so far as I recollect.

Do you recollect ever having given an opinion as to the wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of the situation?—No, I do not recollect that I did.

Or upon the health of the patients that would be confined there?—I do not recollect being consulted; I might have been.

Were you consulted as to the plan of the building?—I remember once going down to the surveyor's in Bridewell Hospital, and seeing the plan with him.

That was after the plan was determined on?—I believe it was.

Had the building been begun then?—I cannot say, it must be a couple of years ago, I should think.

Were you never consulted as to the mode of arrangement relative to the classification of patients, and as to the separation of the violent lunatics from the others?—Yes; I believe I was consulted with respect to that; I think I stated that it would be a very proper step to separate them.

Were you asked as to the classification of the patients, and as to the mode of warming the Hospital?—I recollect perfectly well, it was proposed to warm it by tubes.

And your opinion was generally taken as to the mode of making that Hospital more convenient and commodious for patients than the old Bethlem?—I cannot tax my recollection with any immediate conversation with the committee on the subject.

Who were the committee that managed it?—I do not recollect who they were, the president and treasurer I presume, and a certain number of governors; I do not recollect their names at all.

No questions were put in writing upon the subject?—I do not recollect at this distance of time that there were.

Where do you reside generally?—My town residence is upon the terrace in the Adelphi.

Do you reside a great deal in town, so as to be able generally to attend?—Yes.

Have you a house for the reception of Lunatics?—Yes.

That is at a distance from town?—Yes, three miles from London, at Clapton.

What is the amount of the salary you receive from Bethlem Hospital?—A hundred a year.

And no other emoluments?—Not the least in the world ; the 100*l.* is now reduced to 90*l.*

Does your recollection enable you to inform the Committee, as to the case of a patient of the name of Fowler, who died soon after he came out of the cold bath?—I recollect hearing, that a patient died soon after coming out of the cold bath ; that was some years ago.

Do you know the circumstances of that case?—No, I do not, indeed.

Have any instances occurred within your knowledge, in which the periodical bleeding, purging, vomiting, and bathing have proved injurious to the general health of the patients?—No, I do not recollect any instance.

So that the practice would now obtain, if the premises enabled you to do so?—Yes.

Is there not much less restraint used in the Hospital within the last year, towards the male as well as towards the female patients than there was?—I think there is less restraint than there was several months ago.

There has been a new steward in the room of Mr. Alavoine, and a new matron?—Yes.

Are there not fewer persons confined to the wall, and more people walking about?—Certainly.

To what cause do you attribute that relaxation?—As that depends upon Mr. Haslam, I presume he will answer the question.

Is not your opinion taken, as the physician, upon the propriety of releasing or confining those persons?—I have seldom or never been consulted upon the matter ; I should rather think, myself, it might be owing to the opinion of the matron in respect to the women, and very likely the steward, in respect to the men, exercising their authority, under the direction of the apothecary, I presume. I believe that no patient is permitted to be liberated without the approbation of the apothecary.

Is the Committee to understand, that you take the general superintendence of the patients, and authorize bathing, bleeding, vomiting and purging, subject to such exceptions as the apothecary may think proper to make upon examination of the state of the patients?—Yes, that is the case.

Is it the practice to give any medicines besides powders, in the Hospital?—Powders are given, because medicines in the smallest compass generally answer best with Lunatic patients, who are never willing to take any.

Is the Committee to understand that all medicines are given in the shape of powder?—In as small a quantity as they can, not always in powders, for I frequently order medicines in other forms ; but all purgative medicines are best given in the shape of powders and emetics ; the smallest quantity of tartar emetic will produce vomiting: and indeed medicine can be given in their food, which is another reason why powders are better than any thing else.

Do you know whether it is the practice for the private friends of the patients to bring them in articles of provision?—I do not know whether it is; it should not be.

Do you recollect how long Bethlem has been an Hospital for Lunatics?—I believe the present Hospital has been built an hundred and twenty years.

Do you know any thing of the age of the Establishment; was there any establishment for Lunatics there previous to the present Hospital?—I really cannot tell.

Do you know whether there are any records of the Hospital existing?—I do not know.

MR. JOHN HASLAM again called in, and Examined.

IN what way are Lunatics admitted into Bethlem?—By petition; any person applying to the Hospital for such petition, is furnished therewith, as the thing happened yesterday. A man came and described a case, and wished to petition; I filled up the petition for him, as to name, and made enquiry how long the patient had been disordered, which I filled in in the petition. We are obliged to have the parochial certificate, they leave them with us; but Government have the right of sending them as they please, without petition.

Has each governor power, as in other Hospitals, of sending a certain number of patients?—Not the least in the world, and most likely a patient would be sent away. Some person, either physician, surgeon, or apothecary, some medical man certifies that this person is Insane, and has also no fits; but the Committee will understand, this is a very late regulation; a Certificate of Insanity was not required till within the last century.

By what regulation, and who made it; is it necessary that a person should have a Certificate of Insanity for admission into Bethlem?—It having been lately done.

By whose regulation?—I presume all regulations must be by the Committee.

Then the Committee are to understand, that at present no Lunatic is admitted into the Hospital without a certificate from some medical person, that he is deranged?—Yes, excepting he be sent by Government, and that practice is new; the ancient practice, a twelvemonth past, being, that any person might be admitted without any certificate, merely upon the application of their friends.

Must a medical man, subscribing such certificate, be a member of the College of Physicians or Surgeons, or is he qualified to do it by merely opening a shop?—I should presume that any man who opens a medical shop, and practises as an apothecary.

What limit is there to receiving a Lunatic at Bethlem?—Only the fulness of the house.

So if the house is not full, any person coming to Bethlem with a certificate signed by a professional person, could have that Lunatic received within its walls?—Going through the regular forms. You are to petition; that petition is to be signed by a governor; they are to petition one Saturday, and be admitted the next, supposing there is room; and in the mean time it is necessary, that independent of the parochial certificate, that two respectable persons should be bound to receive such Lunatic when discharged.

Is there a ward in Bethlem for incurable patients?—Not a ward; they are all huddled together.

Is there a fund for the maintenance of incurable Lunatics?—There is a specific fund I believe.

Are incurable Lunatics received now in Bethlem?—Not now.

You have said that you have got rid of your incurable Lunatics; how have you got rid of them?—We do not now take any more in, on account, as they say, of the deficiency of the incurable fund, certain Estates in Lincolnshire, which they say are not now so productive.

What constitutes what you call an incurable case?—After a residence of twelve months, if such person has exhibited symptoms of malevolence, or is mischievous, and it is considered necessary that society should be delivered from them, they are declared incurable, which declaration is subsequently confirmed by the governors.

At present there being no incurable establishment, such persons are discharged upon the responsibility of their original recognizances?—They are; but I think it is not more than two months that this notice has been communicated to us as medical men. The Hospital receives no more incurables.

When you discharge a person after his twelve months probation, what is the nature of the discharge you give?—There are two modes of discharging them; one is as incurable, and fit for an incurable establishment; the other incurable, and not fit for an incurable establishment. Generally we call it fit, and not fit.

What do you mean by not fit?—That the person is not of a mischievous disposition; society has nothing to dread from them.

Do you know of what nature the records are, that are kept of the Hospital?—Not of late. In the former clerk's time I used to have free access to them; I seldom see them now.

Are there very old records?—I possess extracts from the records as far back as 1577. The first Hospital was in a place now called Old Bethlem. It was then transferred to the present site.

When the incurable are so divided and placed as incurable, whether their case is liable to any particular treatment with a view to their recovery, or are they abandoned as to their treatment?—They are under the same mode of moral government, but they are not medicined for the cure of this disease.

Does there cease then to be any efforts for their cure after a twelvemonth?—They are then considered as incurable.

You have stated, that a governor of the Hospital signs a petition as a matter of course; what means have the applicants of knowing who are governors of the Hospital?—They are directed to come on Saturday, when a Committee is sitting.

Is a list of the governors of the Hospital easily procured?—I understand they are paid for.

Did you ever hear of one or five guineas being demanded and paid?—No; I paid a guinea myself when I was a candidate.

Who did you pay that to?—To John Woodhouse, the former clerk.

Who is clerk now?—Mr. Poynder.

Do you know that Mr. Poynder is in the habit of making similar demands?—Yes.

Is the receipt of a fee upon this occasion, known to the governors, and permitted by them?—They have fixed it at five shillings, as I understand by a late regulation; they have fixed it, as I understand, by a regulation two or three months ago, at five shillings.

Did you ever hear of an order having been given to the servants of the Hospital, not to furnish a list to anybody whatsoever?—I never did hear of any such order.

Are the female patients attended only by keepers of their own sex?—In a former part of my evidence I stated, that when the women were refractory, a male keeper was called to their assistance.

Was not a male keeper appointed to the service of the females only, since your connection with the Hospital?—No; it was long anterior; I found it was the practice when I came there.

Did not Mr. Clark, who is a visitor at Bethlem Hospital as Chamberlain of the City, find a man so employed?—He is Chamberlain and Treasurer.

Was not a man appointed to do the duty of keeper to the women only?—That has always been the case.

Is there a man now employed as a keeper to the females?—There is, if they should want assistance.

Since you have been connected with the Hospital, has not the duty of a male keeper been confined solely to the women?—Yes.

Have you a male keeper now, that does not wait at all upon the men?—This man, whether he is so denominated in the new system of laws I cannot tell; because we have had a new code of laws lately.

Are they voluminous?—No.

I wish you would let us have a copy of the old laws and the new. Is not he constantly in waiting upon the women as a keeper?—Certainly he is not.

Do you remember a keeper of the name of King, at Bethlem, who is now at Liverpool?—Perfectly.

Was not he employed as keeper of the female patients at Bethlem?—He was occasionally.

Was not King, when keeper of the female patients, charged by Mr. Till, the manager of the London Water-works, with being too familiar with a female patient of great beauty, such female having been a servant of Mr. Till?—I do not know that he was charged by Mr Till with too great familiarity, but the patient herself did charge him with that.

He being the keeper of the female patients at that time?—Yes, she complained to me of it.

What was the result of that investigation?—There was great asseveration on one side, and denial of it on the other; I do not know whether we got at the truth.

Was not the regulation immediately made by the governors, for not again employing men as keepers of women?—They had endeavoured to do that long before, upon another business.

Did not the governors, from learning that fact, direct that no man should again be put as keeper of the women?—I do not recollect that they came to any resolution upon that case; it was about three years ago. Some years ago, a female patient had been impregnated twice, during the time she was in the Hospital; at one time she miscarried; and the person who was proved to have had connexion with her, being a keeper, was accordingly discharged.

Did not Mr. Clark, the Chamberlain, disapproving the practice of employing men as keepers of the female patients, dismiss such male keepers so employed?—I believe he endeavoured to do so to the utmost of his power.

Subsequently to this dismissal, did not you introduce or replace the keeper dismissed by a man of the name of King?—I have nothing to do with the hiring of the keepers; I never recommended him. The servants of the house formerly were all always hired by the treasurer. By the last regulation, the male keeper is hired by the steward, with the approbation of the treasurer and the committee: 'The females are chosen with the approbation of the treasurer and the committee.

How long has that last regulation been adopted?—Six months.

Is it not your practice to cause all the patients of the Hospital, without reference to any difference to circumstance which may exist between their respective cases, to be immersed in cold water twice weekly, from the month of July to the setting-in of the cold weather?—Certainly not; every proper discrimination is made, of those who should, or those who ought not to bathe.

Do you recollect the case and death at Bethlem of a patient of the name of Fowler, whose case, at the time of the death, excited much conversation in the Hospital?—No.

Do you not recollect the striking circumstance of a man of the name of Fowler being found dead, in a very short space of time after he was taken out of the water, hanging by his wrist from the wall of his apartment?—I never heard of such a circumstance.

Do you recollect that a patient of the name of Fowler died soon after being taken out of the bath?—I never did hear of such death.

What has become of King?—He is gone to Liverpool Hospital with his wife.

By whose recommendation did he go?—By mine. One of the physicians there, I believe Dr. Rennick, requesting to have a man and his wife proper to manage such a concern, I accordingly recommended King.

Did you consider him as a person, from the general mildness of his character, and excellence of his temper, to be peculiarly qualified to become the head of a Lunatic establishment?—I never saw any thing about him but mildness, and his wife was, as to temper, superior to himself.

Had he ever been reported to you as remarkable for the irritability of his temper?—I never heard it. He had a lack of courage; he was more frightened at those people than there was occasion for.

Was King the man complained of by the female patient of beauty, as taking too great liberties with her?—He was. But that fact was asserted and denied: it was never proved.

Do you really believe the man to be guilty or innocent of the charge?—I have no reason to believe him guilty.

Do you remember the case of a person who died a few years ago of a constipation of the bowels?—I know no particulars of it.

Do you remember the case about which Mr. Crowther, who was the surgeon of the Hospital, made some observations as to the cause of his death?—I do.

Do you know what those observations were?—Knowing the situation of Mr. Crowther at that time, I paid no attention to it. Mr. Crowther was generally insane, and mostly drunk. He was so insane as to have a strait-waistcoat.

What situation did Mr. Crowther hold in the Hospital?—Surgeon.

How long had he been so?—I do not know; he was surgeon when I came there.

How long did he continue so, after he was in a situation to be generally insane, and mostly drunk?—I think the period of his insanity was about 10 years ago.

And the period of his drunkenness?—He always took too much wine.

How long is it since he died?—Perhaps a month ago.

Then for ten years, Mr. Crowther was surgeon to the Hospital: During those ten years he was generally insane; he had had a strait-waistcoat, and was mostly drunk?—He was.

And during that period he was continued as surgeon to the Hospital?—He was.

Did he attend the patients?—Yes, he did.

Did he attend the patients as surgeon?—Yes, till a week before his death; from his incapacity to officiate as surgeon, he frequently brought some medical professional man to attend.

But he did sometimes attend himself without assistance?—Certainly, he did.

Were the Governors of the Hospital acquainted with the fact of his incapacity?—I should think not. His insanity was confined principally to the abuse of his best friends; he was so insane, that his hand was not obedient to his will.

Do you know any thing of the new Bethlem in St. George's Fields?—I have been there several times.

Have you formed any opinion respecting the situation?—I have so far formed an opinion, that when the Bill was pending for the exchange of our ground, I was requested to go, I think, to the Committee of the House of Lords, to state that the situation of St. George's Fields, was very superior in point of salubrity to Moor-fields; but I refused to depose to its salubrity, having no evidence that it was salubrious.

Whether you had formed any opinion whatever, either way, upon that subject?—Not such an opinion as should influence, perhaps, any other person but myself, from want of sufficient knowledge.

Did you express no opinion upon it?—My opinion must not be inferred from my refusing to depose to its superior salubrity.

Do you mean to inform the Committee, that you were desired to go to the House of Lords expressly for the purpose of giving an opinion in favour of St. George's Fields, as a proper situation? I always understood that such an opinion was to constitute one of the conditions, of its being given to us.

And you under that understanding, have refused to give the testimony?—Certainly, I did.

Were you consulted as to the choice of the ground?—Not at all.

As to the plan of the building?—I sent some memorandums to the surveyor, but I was never consulted; my opinion was, that they should have offered a premium for the best memoir, describing the requisites or desiderata for such building.

In what capacity do you serve Bethlem Hospital?—As Apothecary.

Is that the only capacity in which you serve the Hospital?—The principal part of my duty consists in precisely ascertaining the state of intellect of the patients in that Hospital.

Do you consider yourself as having any other duties to perform in that Hospital?—Enforcing the humane treatment of the patients, and endeavouring as much as in my power lies, to diffuse as much good order and decency of manners amongst those unhappy people as possible.

You have stated in a former answer, that there is an order of the House, by which the confinement of the patients is entirely vested in you?—I have so.

Does the present practice of the keeper correspond with that order?—I think, generally it does.

As well in the women's as in the men's apartment?—I think, generally speaking, I have little reason to complain.

What discretion are we to understand that you allow to the keepers?—If a patient becomes suddenly violent, they must be immediately secured; that is a matter of necessity. When so secured, at my next visit, I always enquire the reason for such confinement or restraint; and if I am satisfied that it is just, it is persisted in as long as I may think necessary; if otherwise, the patient is set at liberty.

Do you remember a woman of the name of Payne, within these last two months; Sarah Payne?—I recollect such a person; I think she came from near Leatherhead.

What became of her?—I do not know; she was discharged from the Hospital; she was paralytic.

She was discharged as paralytic?—She was in a general state of tremor. We apprehended she would soon die; she was incurable. Patients becoming sick and weak, and not being able to undergo the discipline of the house, are immediately discharged.

Do you think that sufficient care was taken, in consequence of the circumstances of pregnancy to which you have already alluded, to prevent male keepers having access to female patients?—I believe, on the part of the governors, that every care was taken. If the female servants, who have alone the means of admitting male keepers among the females, if they have deviated from their duty, such male keepers may intrude.

Do you or do you not, think that the female patients might be sufficiently managed without any male attendance at all?—That is a very difficult question, and must depend on a variety of circumstances, which I am willing to explain. In cases where it is thought proper to oblige them to take medicine by compulsion, I do not think women would effect that purpose so adroitly or so humanely as men.

Is not that always done, or ought it not to be done, in the presence of the medical attendant or the matron?—There are directions by which I am obliged, on the mornings of the administration of medicine, to attend.

Whenever it is necessary to have recourse to compulsion in the administration of medicine to the females, is it not understood that this ought to be done in the presence of the matron or medical attendant; is it thought right to leave this to the accidental care of the servants?—At the period called physicking time, it has been always so left.

Left by practice or by rule?—By practice; there being no rule respecting it.

Are there any other cases in which male attendants would be thought necessary by you?—I think women submit with more temper to men than to their own sex, whenever coercion becomes necessary.

Do you think that male attendants ought to be permitted to have access to the female patients, unless when their assistance is called for by the superintendant of the female ward?—They ought never to have access, but they may be occasionally introduced.

In point of fact, do not the keys of the male keepers open the locks of the female galleries?—No, in no case; the female wards have a double lock and a double key. The females can go into both; but the males can go only into the males' apartments.

How long is it since this regulation of the double keys took place?—Perhaps seven years or more.

Did not the latter case, of pregnancy in a female patient, take place subsequent to this regulation?—I think not; I am pretty sure not.

Is not the superintendant of the female ward constantly upon the spot?—They ought so to be.

You have mentioned the periodical physickings of the patients; will you explain the mode in which the medical department is managed in this instance?—In the spring of the year they are bled; not generally, but with much discrimination; they are ordinarily twice bled if they should require it: they have about half a dozen emetics, and they take cathartic medicines weekly, till Michaelmas. The period of physicking continues from the middle of May, regulated by the season, to the latter end of September. Two bleedings, according to discretion; half a dozen emetics, if there should be no impediment to their exhibition, and the remainder of the time till Michaelmas, a cathartic once a week. They are likewise bathed in the summer time, according to the season, and it is continued according to the season, but not indiscriminately.

Whether more or less, bathing does not go on every Tuesday and Saturday?—It has not begun yet.

When it does begin, does it not go on twice a week, every Tuesday and Saturday?—I am not certain, but I think twice.

Is the condition of health, bodily and mental, of each individual patient accurately examined before the treatment is prescribed?—It is.

By whom?—By myself.

What part does the physician of the Hospital take in this examination?—He usually confides it to me; but if I had any doubt, I would appeal to him.

Does any difference of opinion prevail with respect to the exhibition of emetics?—I am no great friend to emetics, but I submit my judgment to the physician.

Is it by a specific order of the physician, or a general practice which has continued for a number of years?—A general practice, but for which an order is annually given.

Do you know whether there is any general agreement existing among the Faculty, as to the advantage of emetics in cases of Insanity?—I am so much regulated by my own experience, that I have not been disposed to listen to those who have had less experience than myself. I hope you will excuse the appearance of vanity in that answer.

What is the remuneration you receive for the important services you render to Bethlem Hospital?—83*l.* 15*s.* a quarter, 335*l.* a year.

That is all the profits your situation at Bethlem yields you?—Yes.

Are you employed in any other madhouses?—I am not.

In no capacity?—In no capacity as an apothecary.

Not at Miles's?—No, except that every person sent from the Transport Office to Miles's, is examined by me.

You receive a fee for that examination at the Transport Office?—I do.

Are there not less coercion and restraint within these twelve months, imposed on the patients, than in preceding years?—I cannot say that.

Are there not fewer blanket-patients than there were?—There are fewer.

Are there fewer now than formerly?—There are more patients in blanket-gowns in Bethlem Hospital, than either in St. Luke's, or Private Madhouses, for this reason,——

My question is, whether there are not fewer blanket-patients now, than many years ago?—I cannot be certain, because a man is in a blanket-gown one day, and not the next.

Are there fewer patients bearing chains, than there were last year?—I think there may be.

How do you account for that change, who have always regulated the quantity of restraint?—I think the servants are more watchful; and I think we possess better servants than we did formerly.

Did you say watched, or watchful?—I think they are more watchful; and they are infinitely better watched, than in the time of the former steward and matron.

What is the description of person that usually offers himself to you as a keeper?—Not having the hiring the persons, I cannot say.

Do you know at what price they are retained?—The head keeper I think at 45*l.* per annum, and their victuals and some clothing.

Have you not observed, and frequently had reason to complain of drunkenness amongst your keepers?—I have frequently complained of that vice to the steward; this applies especially to the men.

Would not higher wages, in your opinion, procure a better quality of person for the service of keeper, at the Hospital?—No; I think that good example, and proper vigilance, would be quite sufficient.

I think you stated, that the conduct of the keepers and servants of the Hospital, has been much improved of late, since the change of the steward and matron?—Yes.

When were that steward and matron introduced?—About two months ago; it may be three.

Do you think that the late steward was competent to the proper discharge of the duties of his office?—From age and infirmities, I think not.

How long do you think he had been otherwise?—He was gradually declining; he was at the age of 81: and they have allowed him 200*l.* a year as a superannuation.

How long do you think he has been incompetent to the discharge of the duties of his office?—Perhaps he had always more philanthropy than talent: That is a question for the governors to decide.

Do you think, whether from age and infirmity, want of talent, or any other cause, that the late steward was competent to the proper discharge of the various duties of his office, including the management of the servants, at any time within the last five years?—For the last five years I think he has been incompetent.

Veneris, 2^o die Junii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

The Honourable HENRY GREY BENNET, a Member of the Committee, Examined.

HAVE you been in the practice of visiting Bethlem, and when did you first see it?—I visited Bethlem some years ago, and was then very much struck with the condition in which the patients were; there appeared to me to be the greatest coercion in general use; numbers were chained to the wall, fastened to benches and tables, and many of the patients were almost in a state of nudity; I visited it again last year, in company with Mr. Wakefield, Mr. Lambton, and one or two other gentlemen; I found not so many patients in the same state of nakedness and restraint as at my last visit; but in the women's ward up stairs there were many of those unfortunate people chained to the wall, in a small room, some of whom had been so chained for years, during the day; the smell and dirt of the room were in the highest degree offensive; amongst these persons was a woman whose name I understood to be Stone, who was formerly a Governess in a respectable family, evidently a person of some accomplishments, who was chained to the wall, though she did not appear to be at that time, or was stated ever to have been, a furious Maniac. There was also a woman confined in a cell, chained to the wall at the end of the gallery; she had been so confined for several years, was in a state of furious agitation, and her voice and cries could be heard in all that part of the Hospital. I saw also Norris; the iron apparatus in which he had been confined was then removed; but the chain that fastened the neck of the patient to the iron stanchion, as well as the leg-lock, were still used.

Norris stated, that he was fully aware he was a dangerous person; that he should be sorry to be permitted to walk unmanacled in the gallery; but that if he could be prevented from doing others any mischief, which if he was not provoked he should not attempt to do, he should consider the permission of taking that exercise as a great indulgence; he added also, that he had made repeated complaints against the mode of confinement in which he had been for so many years; but that he was now treated like a Christian, and that he felt himself quite comfortable ; he particularly alluded to the pleasure that he felt in being able to sit down on the edge of his bed ; he was employed in reading the newspaper, and he asked me many questions upon the subject of politics, in which he appeared to take the greatest interest. I visited Bethlem on the 27th of May last, in company with other Members of the House of Commons ; Lord Lascelles, Mr. William Smith, Mr. Duncombe, Mr. Frankland Lewis, and Mr. Sturges Bourne. The change that had taken place in the appearance of the Patients in the Hospital was most striking ; on the men's side, no man was chained to the wall ; only one was in bed, and he was ill ; the Patients were mostly walking about in the gallery, and the whole Hospital was clean and sweet. On the women's side, two only, when we entered the Hospital, were chained by the hand. Miss Stone, who had been confined in the Hospital for several years, three of which she had been chained during day-time to the wall, wrapped up in a flannel gown, was sitting by the fire, dressed like a woman, employed in needle-work, and tolerably rational ; she appeared chearful and contented, and most grateful to the Matron, who accompanied us during our visit, for the change that had taken place in her situation.

The woman who was confined at the end of the gallery the year before, in that violent state of irritation above mentioned, was now released, and was walking about the gallery, apparently tranquil ; she repeatedly thanked the Matron for her kindness, and said it was owing to that kindness that she was in the composed and comfortable state in which we found her. I have no doubt that the change which is so visible in the condition of the Hospital, and in the mental improvement of the patients, has arisen from the different treatment that they have received from the new Steward, Mr. Walter, and the new Matron, Mrs. Forbes. To any one who remembered the apparent neglect with which, the preceding year, these unfortunate persons were treated, this change in their condition was most consolatory.

Are you not of opinion, that the iron apparatus, which you have described as having been worn by Norris, was much heavier than can have been necessary for the confinement of any Lunatic, however strong and vigorous he may have been ?—From what I have seen of furious Maniacs in other Hospitals and places of confinement, I should have no hesitation in saying, that it was a mode of restraint unnecessary and unwarranted ; it has always appeared to me, from what I have seen of Bethlem, that the restraint was used there more from feelings of revenge than for purposes of medical cure.

Have you not also occasionally visited St. Luke's Hospital ?—

I visited it last year, as well as on the 6th of May last; at the time of my last visit in the women's ward every one was up and dressed; only six were chained at the end of the galleries; the women's ward was clean and sweet; a considerable number of the patients were employed in needle-work; and though here, as in all the other Public Hospitals for Lunatics, there is a great want of classification and arrangement of the patients, yet the situation of these unfortunate people appeared to be as comfortable as it well could be, in default of that necessary arrangement above alluded to.

In the men's ward two patients only were in bed, one from bodily disease, the other in a paroxysm of violent derangement; almost all the other patients were in the airing grounds.

This side of the Hospital, as well as that devoted to the women, was clean and sweet; but here, as elsewhere, a want of classification appeared to be most sensibly felt.

WILLIAM SMITH, Esq. a Member of the Committee, Examined.

HAVE you been in the habit of occasionally visiting Bethlem? —I visited Bethlem last year, in company with several gentlemen, some of whom are members of this Committee; and I went again on the 27th of last month, with the gentlemen whose names have been already mentioned in the evidence.

The case which most particularly struck me on the first visit, was that of Norris, so often alluded to; his appearance, when I saw him, was certainly not that of an outrageous Maniac; nor can I believe, either from my own observation, or from the accounts which I received from the keepers, at the time, or from the employments to which he was said to be addicted, that he might not have been safely permitted to take exercise in the gallery, either in a strait waistcoat, or under any of the other modes of restraint which are usual in the house. I was informed that he had been chained down in his wooden bedstead for above nine years, ironed in the manner which has been frequently described; which did then, and ever since has appeared to me as a most rigorous and unnecessarily cruel mode of restraint. The only excuse which was made for that peculiar mode was, that he was able to extricate his arms from the usual handcuffs; but supposing this to be true, it did then and ever since has appeared to me, that a very small degree of attention and ingenuity would have suggested various methods, by which he might have been prevented from doing injury, either to himself or others, short of the cruel and constant coercion in which he was kept; and which, when continued unremittingly for such a length of time, I should think far better calculated to drive away the reason of a sane man, than to restore a madman to his senses. At the time we saw him, he only desired to be permitted to walk about the gallery, either in a strait-waistcoat or under some other restraint, saying, that he did not wish to be trusted wholly at large, lest upon some provocation, which he might probably receive from some of the other patients, he might be disposed to strike, or do them an injury; but he thought it very hard to be so constantly and severely confined as he had been.

The man at this time seemed perfectly to understand every thing that was said to him, to have a good recollection of what he had suffered, and to be able to exercise his mental faculties in such a manner as scarcely to give the idea of his being at all insane; his answers to every question put to him were perfectly rational; the keeper informed me that he was not aware of any particular alteration which had taken place in him, just before he had been relieved from a portion of his irons, but that he was then much in the same state as he had been for a considerable time before; from which I concluded at the moment, that the relief might have been afforded him with equal safety a long time before it was granted: in this belief I have since been most completely confirmed.

There was also a woman confined by herself, chained, I believe, in a cell, entirely separated from the rest, at the end of the gallery, who was in a state of extreme violence, uttering the most frightful blasphemies and obscenities; I am told that she also had been confined for many years. There appeared to be a considerable number of persons confined by chains to the walls, in what were called, I think, the side-rooms; most of these were deplorable looking beings, and some appeared violent; but although I do not pretend to give a positive opinion, I do not conceive, and especially from what has since happened, that it was at all necessary to confine them all in this manner. I cannot say that the rest of the house did appear to me to be particularly deficient in cleanliness, or that the general treatment of the patients, in other instances, was such as I should have been disposed to find great fault with, particularly considering the present state of the building, which certainly does not allow either of separating the patients, as probably they ought to be classed, or affording them in other instances, many of those conveniences which would be desirable to persons in their unhappy situation. The airing grounds were damp, small, and encumbered with rubbish; and the whole aspect of the place gave the idea of a prison, and not of an hospital.

On my last visit a considerable alteration had taken place for the better; Norris was dead: but the woman whose case had peculiarly excited our attention, was in the gallery among the other patients, without any restraint: and though she continued noisy, was inoffensive, and, as far as appeared, no object of apprehension; as far as I recollect, there was not a single man chained to the wall in any one of the rooms, and but few of the women; the building of course was nearly in the same situation as the preceding year, but I understood that some additional cells had in the interval been glazed; and the general aspect was more cleanly and cheerful; nor could I learn that any other cause existed for the alteration which appeared, but the change of the Steward and the Matron, and the attention which had been excited by the visits of last year. From the enquiries we made, and the conversation that took place, I am inclined to believe that the advantageous change in the woman who has been spoken of, was full as much the consequence as the cause of her having been indulged in more liberty. I observed one of the men patients, a strong young man, who was rather troublesome, and I was told that he had recently endeavoured to break out, and had exerted considerable force in struggling with the keepers when they set about preventing him; but at the time we saw him, though perfectly at large, it did not appear that the keepers were under any apprehensions of suffering from him any personal injury, and the Steward seemed to walk about among all the patients of every description, totally without fear.

I also went with Mr. Bennet to Bridewell Hospital, to examine the Minute Books, in which the transactions of the superintending Committee of Bethlem are recorded: On inspection of those books, we found that it had frequently occurred, that for months together the Committee who met at the Hospital made no visitation of the Patients or the House; but it appeared that the management was almost implicitly trusted to the medical and other attendants, with whose reports the Committee seemed to have been satisfied, so as to think their frequent personal inspection unnecessary.

The minute made at the time Norris was confined, stated that the irons which had been prepared (without saying by whose order) were imposed upon him by the Committee, with the approbation of the medical attendants; the fact of his having attempted to do injury to the servants, and of the handcuffs being ineffectual for his confinement, were very briefly stated; nor did it there appear, to the best of my recollection, that any other mode less rigorous was suggested; nor could I trace in any subsequent minutes of the Committee, that any proposal had been ever made for mitigating his confinement, in any way or degree whatsoever. The Committees on the whole appeared to have been sufficiently attended, though much more numerous in former years than of late ; and many instances occurred of their attention to the provisions with which the patients were supplied, and other circumstances connected with the economy of the place ; there were also constant reports of admissions and discharges, in which the causes are frequently, and as far as appears, properly mentioned. I found, also, on examining the rough minutes of the General Committee summoned last year to enquire into the case of Norris, that the only persons who were examined as to the propriety of his confinement, were the Physician, the Apothecary, and one of the Keepers.

Jovis, 8^o die Junii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

CHARLES CALLIS WESTERN, Esq. a Member of the Committee, Examined.

HAVE you not occasionally, within the last few years, visited Bethlem?—In May, 1814, I visited Bethlem Hospital ; I did so in consequence of the suggestion of Mr. Wakefield and some other gentlemen, whose humanity had induced them to examine that asylum and others of a similar nature in the Metropolis and its neighbourhood ; Mr. Robert Calvert, a Governor of the Hospital, procured our admission ; he attended himself in person for that purpose, there having been a recent order of the Committee, that nobody should be admitted to inspect the Hospital except in the presence of a Governor ; we visited every part of the building open to inspection. I had never seen any institution for insane persons before, and was therefore unable fairly to appreciate the degree of restraint which it was necessary to impose upon the different Patients, nor the degree of comfort and cleanliness of which their situation was capable ; I will, however, state to the Committee the impressions I received at the time : The building itself appeared to me well adapted to the purpose, the galleries and cells lofty, capacious, and airy ; but there was no protection against cold by glazed windows, nor any means of warming the cells by fires or flues, and there are few of them to which the sun can penetrate, so as to produce much beneficial effect : under these circumstances the Patients must at times suffer extremely from the severity of the weather, nor can they at any time exclude the cold air, but by a miserable shutter, which, if closed, must at the same time exclude all light ; the apartments in general appeared to be clean, and the patients, who were not confined, tolerably comfortable ; and from all the enquiry we could make, they were amply supplied with every sort of food which was proper or necessary for them. I thought, however, there were some confined who might have been at large, and that there was a degree of coercion used beyond what was altogether necessary; there were many chained to the floor in their cells, and many others to the wall: these latter were violent or dirty patients. When taken from their cells in the day-time, they were chained to the wall in rooms appropriated for that purpose, five or six in each. These persons presented a horrid spectacle; and the rooms in which the dirty patients were, appeared to me to be in a more filthy and offensive state than was necessary. My attention was afterwards particularly attracted to a cell in which a man of the name of Norris was confined; and the description of the irons in which he was encased, and which has been given to the Committee, is perfectly correct. The mode of confinement to which this man was subjected, certainly created a degree of suspicion in my mind of the general management of the establishment, and a belief that there must be some want of attention, or sufficient feeling, towards those unhappy persons, on the part of those who had the chief direction or controul over them. At the time I saw Norris, it was impossible to believe that the continuance of all his irons was in any degree necessary, if they ever were so; his frame was much emaciated, and he could extract his arms from that part of the iron which was intended to confine them to his side, but he derived no advantage from so doing, as the irons projecting from his side rendered the situation of his arms more uneasy though free. He was by no means violent in his demeanour, nor in a state of insensibility; he talked freely, and not altogether irrationally; he told us he was aware of his own situation, and of his occasional violence, and confessed that he was not fit to be trusted without some restraint, as he could not answer for himself, and that he might otherwise do mischief to somebody, as he had tried to do before; his mind, therefore, was not in such a state as to render him insensible to his situation, nor to deprive him of all social enjoyments; and in proportion as his mind was rational, his suffering must have been increased during his long and dreadful confinement. A short time after, I visited the Hospital a second time, in company with several Members of the Committee, and to my surprize found Norris freed from the weight of irons that surrounded him, and with no other confinement than a collar round his neck, and a leg-lock to the bed; we conversed with him some time; he expressed much satisfaction at being thus relieved; and at the same time repeated his former declaration, that it might not be safe to trust him without some restraint, in the gallery; we then desired to see the irons that were taken off, but were told that they had been carried to the Blacksmith's and broken up: this statement, however, was false, as they have since been produced to the Committee. In justification of this man's dreadful confinement, I recollect one circumstance mentioned by one of the Keepers, which was confirmed by Norris himself, namely, that his hands were so small, and his wrists so large, that any handcuff large enough to encompass his wrists would have left his hands loose, and therefore they had recourse to this invention for confining his arms to his side. I cannot, however, see in this circumstance any sufficient apology for loading him with irons in the manner in which he remained so many years bound to one spot in his melancholy circumstances. The Committee having determined to meet at Bethlem last Saturday week, I went there again; I had heard great improvements had taken place in the management of the Establishment since last year, and this account I found fully verified; indeed the improvement visible in every part of it appeared to me far to exceed what before I had thought possible. Two female Patients, whom I well remember on my former visit, particularly attracted my notice: one of them, who had been a teacher in a school, was last year chained to the wall in one of the rooms, in which the dirty Patients were confined, with no other covering than a blanket; the other was chained by the leg, in a cell where she had been confined, I understood, several years, and from whence, during the whole time we were present, she uttered incessantly the most dreadful oaths and imprecations, in the most violent and horrible manner: Both these persons were, on this last visit, free from any restraint, well dressed, and walking about the galleries apparently comfortable and contented; the latter, who had been chained by the leg, became at one time a little irritated in consequence of seeing so many strangers, and seemed inclined to be angry, and at one moment rather violent, but being soothed by the Governors and the Visitors passing on, she was again quiet and good tempered, and remained free of restraint, walking about the gallery; there were indeed hardly any of the Patients chained as before, to the wall or the floor, and very few handcuffed; the apartments of the dirty Patients were infinitely less offensive, and I should think, were in as clean and wholesome a state as it is possible to preserve them: in short, the most essential improvements were apparent throughout every part of the Establishment.

Have you not visited St. Luke's?—I visited it once last year.

What was the general impression upon your mind, as to the comparison between that and Bethlem Hospital?—It struck me forcibly at the same time, that the management of St. Luke's was superior to that of Bethlem Hospital at that time, but not I think superior to the management of it now.

Mercurii, 24^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

RICHARD CLARK, Esq. Chamberlain of the City of London, called in, and Examined.

YOU are Treasurer of Bethlem Hospital?—I am.

Can you give the Committee information of the average expense of Patients in the Hospital, by comparison of the revenues with the expenditure?—I have the average of the receipts and expenditure for seven years: the average or ordinary receipts, consisting of rents, land-tax purchased, and dividends amounting to - - - - - £7,690 18 5½

The average of legacies and benefactions during that period - - - - - 1,054 17 11½

The payment on admission of patients, clothing, and maintenance of patients - - - - - 1,304 11 5½

The produce of stock in the Funds was - - - 927 13 3½

Making - - - £10,978 1 2

Ordinary general expenses - - - - - 7,563 19 9

Casual expenses - - - - - 844 15 4

Making - - - £8,408 14 1

How many patients were there before the building was dilapidated?—From 250 to 280; but the great expense has been upon the building; for the building has been, for the last twelve years, in such a state as to render great expense necessary.

So that when you remove to your new building, you will have a larger sum of money at your disposal for the cure and maintenance of the patients?—Yes.

Is there a separate fund for the curable and incurable patients?—Yes.

Can you state to the Committee what is the amount of each fund?—I can furnish the Committee with it at a future time, but I am not prepared now.

Do you recollect whether any resolution has been recently come to, that no more patients shall be received on the incurable list?—Yes; in the present building, our means of accommodating patients now is so small, that we should have been obliged to exclude those whom we wished to assist with a view to curing them. Our first object is to cure; our next object to provide for incurables.

Can you state to the Committee for what reasons, and on what grounds the Governors came to that determination?—I do not know that they have come to any formal determination upon the subject; it was talked of: they admit patients with the hope of cure; they never receive one deemed incurable. They take a patient that there is some hope of curing; and if at the end of the year he is not cured, and they find the patient incurable, in the technical terms of the Hospital, “fit, or not fit.” If a patient is deemed dangerous, either to himself or the public, he is taken in as incurable; but if he is a quiet and harmless patient, that might be as well in a workhouse, we do not receive him.

In point of fact, have you had, for the best part of the century, a fund for incurables?—Yes; we used to have, when the establishment was full, about 120 incurables.

What number of patients is there provided for in the new building?—Two hundred; and the plan, if we can complete it, is for 400.

At present, there is accommodation for 200?—Yes.

Not including the criminal Lunatics?—No; there is accommodation for 60 of them, 45 men and 15 women.

What sum of money does a patient, soliciting admission into Bethlem Hospital, pay?—Parishes and public offices are to pay three guineas for each; and incurables are to pay five pounds deposit, and nine shillings a week, besides their clothing: Those incurables who are sent by poor friends, are to pay the same deposit, and six shillings a week, besides their clothing.

After a twelvemonth’s probation, the persons there referred to are kept as incurables?—Yes; during the twelvemonths they are fed at the expense of the Hospital; afterwards the parishes pay nine shillings, and the friends pay six shillings.

Do they pay any thing upon the returning back of the bond that they enter into in a hundred pounds, to take them away at the expiration of the twelvemonth?—I do not know of any thing being paid on the bond; the clerk has the management of that.

Can you give the Committee any notion what is the cost of each patient, in Bethlem Hospital, per annum?—I have not made the calculation lately; I have some faint recollection, that some few years ago a calculation was made, which made it £20. a head for mere provisions.

How long is it since the building was pulled down, by which means the number of patients was reduced?—About five years, I should think; it was in so bad a state it was necessary to pull it down, and the remainder is obliged to be propped up.

Can you state the average number of patients admitted and restored within the last seven years?—No, I cannot at this moment; but I will make out an account of the number.

Are the female patients solely in the hands of female keepers?—Yes, they are; I know that a very few years ago I got an Order made, that no male servants should be admitted at any time on the female side without being in company with a female, either the matron or a female keeper.

You proposed that as a regulation?—Yes.

It was adopted?—It was.

Subsequently to the adoption of that regulation, has not the practice been departed from; did you not find one male keeper among the female patients?—I do not recollect the circumstance.

The question refers to a keeper of the name of King?—No, I never heard of it; but if the assistance of a male keeper is wanted, a male keeper would be fetched by the female keeper, and would assist in her presence.

Are the keys of the female wards in the hands of the male keepers, so as to give them access in the day or night?—No, I believe not.

When was this regulation made, for the exclusion of male keepers from among the women?—I should suppose it is ten years ago at least.

Are you aware of any alteration, either for the better or the worse, which has taken place in the treatment or management of the patients in Bethlem, within the last two or three years?—I have no immediate recollection of any; the governors, who attend every Saturday, if they see any thing wrong, notice it.

Are those governors generally the same?—No; it is an open committee; the great committee consists of forty-two; they subdivide, taking their months; seven engaging to attend every Saturday, and very often those not on the committee go. We are in great hopes that the committee will be better attended at the new building, though there has never been any want of attending governors. Saturday has been found an inconvenient day, and it is changed to Thursday.

Mercurii, 14^o die Junii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

MR. THOMAS GREENAWAY called in, and Examined.

WHERE do you reside?—In Bishopsgate-street.

You are deputy for the Ward of Bishopsgate?—I am.

Are you not one of the Visiting Committee of Bethlem Hospital?—I am one of the Committee of Bethlem Hospital.

Have you been in the constant habit of visiting there?—I have very frequently been; the duty of the Committee is divided, and my months of attendance are June and December.

What do you consider as the principal duty of that Committee, during their times of visitation?—I should consider it the duty of the Committee to attend at the hour mentioned, namely, eleven o'clock, to see the provisions introduced, to see that they are of good quality, and that they weigh the several weights that are directed; all of which I have constantly seen done when I have attended; afterwards I have gone up stairs into the committee-room and been present at the admission and discharge of Patients, occasionally going over the Hospital.

Did you consider the visitation of the Patients as one of your principal duties?—I cannot say that I did; I cannot say that I had that in contemplation as one of the principal duties; and if I might take the liberty of suggesting the reason on which that opinion is founded, it is, that after the Patients are admitted, I consider them as placed under the direction of the medical men, and that those gentlemen are more particularly concerned in visiting and directing the cases of the Patients.

Do you recollect how often it was usual for the Committee, or any members of it, to visit the Patients?—I can speak only to the months when I was attending myself, perhaps about once in a month; the month comprises four visiting days.

Do you not apprehend that the comfort and welfare of the Patients in a considerable degree depended upon the care and attention of the Steward?—Of the Steward for the males, and the Matron for the females, I should conceive.

Have you continued your visits up to the present time?—I have; I was there on Saturday last; I was over the Hospital on Saturday last.

Have you observed any alteration in the management of the Hospital within the last year?—I think I can say that I have.

Advantageously, or otherwise?—Advantageously, no doubt.

To what cause do you principally attribute the improvement?—I attribute it in a great degree to the new Steward and Matron being brought to fulfil their duties at the old house, which originally it was not intended they should have been; for when they were elected, it was considered that they were not to begin their duties till they went to the new house; but the former Steward was so old and infirm, and the Matron the same, that it was judged very desirable to take the new Matron and the new Steward to the old Bethlem Hospital: in consequence of their going there, a great deal of additional pains and care has been taken of the Patients; the Hospital is peculiarly clean; and I think, from the observations I have been able to make, the situation of the Patients appears still more comfortable.

Are you not aware of any other cause which you think may have had some effect in producing those alterations?—In answering that question, I shall perhaps only be repeating a conversation I had with a gentleman, in which the question was put to me, whether it was not, in my opinion, owing in some measure to the investigation which has taken place in Parliament: I undoubtedly did answer, that I thought it might have had this effect, as I have no doubt it had.

What is your opinion as to the effect of occasional inspections, under public authority, of such establishments as Bethlem Hospital?—My opinion is, that it must be attended with a very good effect; but then it certainly should be under the sanction of public authority.

When the Committee go round the house, what do they see? We go through all the galleries, visiting the several sleeping places, and those parts of the house where the Patients are associated, a few of them in a room together; last Saturday I was over the whole house, and on the Saturday se'nnight before that.

Did you see all the sleeping places?—I saw the major part of them, and went into several of them; at the time I went through, the doors of all were open, so that we might have gone into all of them.

MR. RICHARD UPTON called in again, and Examined.

What proportion of the twelve acres in St. George's Fields is proposed to be used for the purposes of the Hospital?—The Governors of the Hospital are limited to eight acres for the use of the Hospital.

Can you inform the Committee how they are appropriated, for airing grounds or kitchen gardens, or what proportion the site of the building occupies?—According to the plan submitted to the Governors, there is one acre one rood and eight perches designed for kitchen garden for the supply of the establishment; with the exception of what the Hospital actually stands upon, and the fore court, no other part is appropriated.

Can you state the quantity of ground the fore court and the building occupy?—No, I cannot.

Is it proposed to build a separate house for any officer of the establishment?—No; the Apothecary and the Steward have both apartments in the buildings, nearly similar; the Matron has a suite of apartments within the building; and those are the only residences for any officers.

Is there proposed to be any garden assigned to those officers?—There is no appropriation made at present; there is an application made, or proposed to be made by them, for separate gardens, and for a separate yard for drying their clothes; the latter proposition has been before the Governors, and they have deferred the consideration of it; they did not seem disposed to accede to it.

The Apothecary, Steward, and Matron have at present separate apartments and separate tables?—Yes, they have.

Is there a pump for the supply of every gallery?—There are four large reservoirs on the top of the building, which are supplied by an engine; there is a pump for each distinct gallery.

Have cold or warm baths been thought of?—Both cold and warm baths; two cold baths are contracted for, and two warm baths are made; the propriety of a warm bath in each gallery has been suggested; the expense was about 40*l.* a bath; the construction of it is deferred, but the Governors seem disposed to adopt that suggestion, on the ground of the effect of the bath being lost, by the patients having so great a distance to go afterwards.

Has the want of privies or urinaries in the airing grounds been shewn to the Governors?—No; that has never been noticed.

What has been the expense of building and fitting up the new Bethlem Hospital?—That question cannot be accurately answered, because the accounts are not at present made up; I can inform the Committee how much has been advanced on account of the works, which is 51,322*l.* 17*s.* on account of the carcase, or covering-in of the building; and 35,910*l.* has already been advanced on the furnishing and completing the building.

What sum has been laid out in fixtures?—The sum has not been advanced distinctly for fixtures or for furnishing; the account has not been made up so as to show what sum has been laid out in fixtures.

At what sum is the expense of the fixtures estimated?—9,500*l.* the fittings and fixtures were estimated at; those estimates have been before the Lords of the Treasury, and grants made upon them.

What proportion of the sum has been expended?—The whole is very nearly completed.

When was the propriety of making other baths taken into consideration?—There have been three meetings of the Committee lately, making internal arrangements, and at one of them the matter was discussed.

How are the warm baths to be heated?—By the steam.

Is there any bath appropriated to the criminal part of the Hospital?—There is not.

Is there water upon every floor, in the criminal part?—There is water only on the basement floor; there is proposed to be a pump-room on the basement story on the male, and another on the female sides, to which the patients, if they are permitted to be out of their cells, will have access.

At what sum was the building and fitting up of the new Bethlehem Hospital estimated?—94,634*l.*; that includes the 9,500*l.* for the fixtures before mentioned.

What is the amount of the contracts entered into?—There have been three distinct contracts in the progress of the work; the first orders were to go on with the basement story, the Governors not having funds to do more; afterwards the Government assisted the Hospital with funds to cover in; the estimate of contract for that was 51,000*l.*; it was done at certain prices; the quantities to be found by admeasurement, which were estimated at that sum; there was a subsequent contract made for finishing and furnishing, upon which a further grant from Parliament was obtained; such further estimate was 39,234*l.*; beyond that, there is a surplus of materials, the property of the Hospital, 1,500*l.* and 2,500*l.* the extra work ordered beyond the 51,000*l.* which makes altogether 94,634*l.*; beyond that, there are several works ordered, such as the warming the building by steam, the contract for which is about 1,100*l.*

Is that calculated to heat more than one story?—the basement story and the day and warming-rooms of all the stories.

How much more would it take to heat the whole building?—I cannot answer that question; but I conceive the addition of expense would be very trivial, because the boiler and all the apparatus would be fully equal to the extension of sending heated air into all the galleries and every part of the building; it would be merely a continuation of the pipes, and such cutting away as might be necessary to fix them. The several sums stated in the former part of my evidence does not include the two buildings proposed for criminal Lunatics, which are designed to contain 45 males and 15 females, conformable with the orders given by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, and are being executed by contracts, amounting to the sum of 18,326*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.* The contingent expenses for levelling the ground, watchmen, labour in trust roads, &c. and including Architect's commission, were estimated at 1,304*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* in addition to the above sum, making together 19,631*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*—These buildings are now nearly completed, and there has been paid on account to the several tradesmen 16,068*l.* out of the money in the hands of the Treasurer of the Hospital.

LORD ROBERT SEYMOUR in the Chair.

[The following Papers were delivered in, and read:]

“ Sir, New Bethlem Hospital, June 27th, 1815.

“ In offering you the enclosed remarks, I trust I shall not give offence for thus intruding them upon your notice. I feel them necessary in reply to some of the evidence I observed in the first part of the printed Report on Madhouses; evidence given in several matters without the parties having the least knowledge of what they have pretended to affirm, or it would have been impossible to have given evidence so grossly in error, particularly with respect to the situation. To remove the false impression and prejudice which such evidence may occasion in the public opinion, with respect to the New Bethlem Hospital, is the only object for my thus troubling you, as from my connection with that concern, I presume no person can explain the particulars of what regards that building equal to myself.

“ I am, Sir, with every respect,

“ Your obliged and humble Servant,

“ The Right Honourable

“ George Rose.

“ R. Upton,

“ Superintendent of Works.”

“ MR. UPTON'S ANSWER to “Objections” which have been made as to the Situation and Construction of the New Bethlem Hospital.

“ Having observed in the first part of the Report of the Evidence given before the Committee on Madhouses, several questions relative to the New Bethlem Hospital, which have been put to persons quite unacquainted with the situation on which it is built, or the arrangements proposed by the design, either as regards the classification of the patients, or the distribution of the quantity of land allotted for the Hospital to be appropriated, which, according to the Act of Parliament for vesting the lease of the Governors of Bethlem Hospital in the site of the Hospital, is limited to eight acres.

“ I observe by the evidence, the height of the building and the thickness of the walls are complained of. With respect to the thickness of the walls, I am of opinion they are not more than of sufficient thickness for the permanent stability of the building, and in due proportion to its height and magnitude: as the term of years is eight hundred and sixty, the period of the lease requires it to be substantial, and also for the prevention of escapes, as the thickness of the walls at the old Hospital have been found, in some very recent cases, but barely sufficient for such purpose; and with regard to the height of the building, being four stories, it is preferable for economy, as only requiring the same quantity of roofing that is requisite for a building of one or two stories; and for inspection and superintendence, the concentration of the patients must afford readier means to the officers for inspection, with fewer servants than can possibly exist with a building of only two stories, which would have extended considerably the site for the building, and thereby covering much more ground, would consequently reduce what is considered more desirable by as much the quantity of airing grounds.

“ The observation upon the rooms under the portico, does not affect the patients, as these rooms are not appropriated for their use. It has also been stated, that it is impossible to classify the patients, for the want of separate staircases to each of the galleries; a reference to the plans will show that the staircases, as they are constructed, have been designed for the express purpose of separating the patients into eight classes, and this is done as effectual for convenience, and at much less expense than could have been obtained by the separate staircases recommended.

“ The omission of glass to the patients' sleeping rooms has been deemed more convenient for ventilating, and also for obviating the disagreeable effluvia, to which, as Dr. Latham has observed, is peculiar to all Madhouses; and excepting the patients' rooms on the basement story, it is not intended that the patients should remain in them in the day-time, or when light can be excluded; and the height of the room windows from the ground supersedes the necessity of that restraint upon the patients that would otherwise be necessary, were these windows made lower. The windows in the galleries have been in general blanked up to the height of five feet from the floor, conformable with the opinion of some of the medical officers, for the purpose of avoiding the irritation to which they are said to have been subject at Moorfields, by the sport of boys and others from the road, and also as being out of the reach of being broke. The assertion, that any of these windows are ten feet above the level, is quite erroneous, there not being a single window that varies more than a few inches from the general level of five feet above alluded to.

“ With respect to the doubt as to the security of the means taken for preventing fire from communicating to the parts of the building appropriated for the patients, I am surprised it should exist, it being totally impossible (according to the construction of that part of the building) that such circumstance can take place.

“ With respect to the privies for the patients being so closely connected with the building, this is rendered unavoidable by this distribution of the patients into classes, each separate class being confined to a gallery, such galleries would be rendered exceeding inconvenient without a privy, and the most effectual means is afforded with water always spontaneously supplied in considerable quantity, by an apparatus appendant to the door, which can never be opened outward without affording such supply; this tends as much as possible to obviate any obnoxious smell to be expected therefrom.

“ Some doubts have existed as to the drainage, and that the dirt may be liable to revert back by the reflux of the tide, and that the level of the situation is many feet below high-watermark; all which is entirely erroneous. The highest part of the sewers for draining the building were constructed early in the year 1812, and in one part have been ever since that period left open, for the purpose of ascertaining the level of the water, but which has never varied, except when there are extraordinary spring-tides; the rising of the springs contributing assistance for carrying off, in place of retarding the filth, and the greatest variation that has taken place in the level from the height to which the springs usually rise, has not exceeded one foot since Midsummer 1810, when I took possession of my residence for the purpose of superintending the works; and opportunities have occurred for making accurate observations, as Palace Yard, Westminster Hall, and the basement stories of houses in Bridge-street, Blackfriars, have been overflowed since that period; and the level of the lowest part of the basement story of the new Hospital, namely, the beer cellar, is at least three feet above the level of the highest tide I ever remember. The pond also has always afforded means for ascertaining the variations with the greatest accuracy; and previous to making the sewer, it has only varied a few inches from its general level when the tide rises to the highest. Previous to forming the plan for building the new Hospital, the levels were taken, and every means were used, with a view to obtain the best possible information, and three premiums were offered for designs, viz. 200*l.* for the best, 100*l.* for the second, and 50*l.* for the third. In consequence of such encouragement, there were thirty-six designs delivered, and the same were referred to Messrs. Dance, Cockerill and Lewis, to determine on the merits of the three best designs for awarding the premiums; that considerable pains were taken by them in examining the whole of the drawings; that having selected the three which in their opinion were the best, they observed, that although they preferred these designs, much reconsideration and improvements would be requisite to render either of them adequate to all the important objects of the institution. These three designs were referred to the Hospital Surveyor, with instructions to make such alterations as he might conceive necessary to the formation of a complete design; that in consequence of such instructions, Mr. Lewis did send letters to the Physician, Surgeon, Apothecary, Steward, and Matron, requesting them to communicate to him whatever suggestions their experience enabled them to recommend to be adopted in the new Hospital, that the plans for the building might be arranged according to what should be considered necessary; that answers were received to the said application from all the medical officers and Steward, the Apothecary in particular, who entered the most fully into the subject; and at various times during the progress of the building he has been solicited to view the same, and many of the arrangements were formed according to his ideas, and also from many communications that were early made to the Building Committee from persons professing to be acquainted with the nature of insanity.

“ HINTS

Suggested to the Committee, respecting New Bethlem Hospital.

“ The cells on the basement story, wherein the more turbulent and filthy maniacs are to be confined, are sufficiently capacious, and would answer the purpose for which they were intended, if some objectionable adjuncts were removed. For instance, the iron bars over the doors of each cell are too long, and consequently too near the hands of the maniac, who is thereby invited to hang himself, by the ready means which the tearing-up of his garments would afford to him. The wooden bedsteads seem too short; they should in no instance, on the male side of the building, be short of six feet four inches. The wooden seat at the end of the bedstead might be more advantageously placed by the side of the head of the bedstead, as was the case in the Old Bethlem. The semicircular sash, which is now made to be opened on the inside, might be opened more advantageously on the outside, as there is a convenient path afforded to the keeper, by the flat roof of the piazza on the outside. This change would give an opportunity to watch over the conduct of a lunatic, by allowing the keeper to see into the cell, beyond the reach of violence; whereas, now the keeper is liable to injury from a maniac, as he is compelled for the purpose of opening or shutting the window, to use a long pole shod with iron, employing both hands and all his attention immediately over the madman, to whom an opportunity is thereby afforded of doing him an injury. On the same floor are the cold-baths, which have been evidently constructed since the first plan was drawn. They are mere waste places, which have been converted into baths, and are deficient in depth and space.

“ On approaching the door which leads into the back garden, near to the baths, the eye is distressed by the appearance of a new building, which has been an after-thought, and which spoils the symmetry of the whole: this structure is an engine-house, to contain a forcing-pump. Now, as this irregularity has taken place, would it not be advisable to construct a capacious cold-bath in a building on the opposite side, which might be so managed as to balance the engine-house? Other after-thoughts are observable in the construction of cellars and other conveniences, for the accommodation of the three principal officers of the establishment, viz. the apothecary, house-steward, and matron.

“ In the building which is intended for the criminal lunatics, many objections might be stated, amongst which is the admission of glass within side the iron bars of the windows, placed immediately on a level with the fist of a patient, whereby he or she might procure a sharp instrument, formed of the fragment of a fractured pane, to destroy themselves, or annoy a neighbour.

“ In the part of separation, between the centre of the building (which is intirely kept free from the patients) the separating wooden doors are not so judiciously contrived as they are in Old Bethlem, which have an additional guard of safety from escape, by an iron fence at a foot's distance, or more, which will allow the fastening of one of the doors, previously to the other door being opened.

“ A LETTER from John Poynder, Esq. to Lord
Robert Seymour, a Member of the Committee.

“ MY LORD,

“ I BEG leave, in answer to your inquiry, ‘ Whether, previous to the discharge of every patient from Bethlem Hospital, a declaration, either verbal or in writing, is demanded from them, expressive of their satisfaction at the treatment they have received during their confinement, and of their thanks to the Committee or Governors of the Hospital on that account,’ to inform your Lordship, that all patients who are discharged well, are brought before the Committee of Governors, which sits weekly at the Hospital, and verbally asked, whether they have any complaints to make against the servants of the house, for their treatment of them since they have been in the Hospital; after answering which question, it is generally suggested to them, that it is customary to return thanks to the Governors for their reception of them; they are then informed, that if they should require advice again, the Governors hope they shall have it in their power to afford it. No other question is ever put, which is calculated to call forth the expression of any 'satisfaction at the treatment they have received during their confinement,' than that which I have stated above; and I have always understood that question, to be rather for the purpose of insuring humane and proper attention from the keepers to other patients during the period of confinement, than from any desire existing on the part of the Governors to recommend their own institution.

" I have the honour to be, My Lord,

" Your most obedient humble Servant,

" John Poynder."

" Bridewell Hospital, 4th July 1815."

NOTTINGHAM ASYLUM.

Veneris, 9^o die Junii, 1815.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE GEORGE ROSE IN THE CHAIR.

The Reverend JOHN THOMAS BECHER called in, and Examined.

YOU are a clergyman, and a magistrate for the county of Nottingham?—I am.

Are you one of the governors of the Nottingham Asylum for the reception of Insane persons?—I am a governor, and one of those entitled Visiting Governors, to whom the management of the Lunatic Asylum near Nottingham is delegated.

Was that Asylum built under the provisions of the Act, generally called Mr. Wynn's Act?—It was built under the provisions of the Act denominated Mr. Wynn's Act, and under that clause of it which enables counties and voluntary subscribers to unite.

When was the Asylum ready for the reception of patients?—About four years ago.

Does the fund for the erection of that Hospital, chiefly arise from voluntary subscriptions, or county rates?—The fund arises partly from voluntary subscriptions, and partly from the county rate; the whole expense is divided into twelve parts, of which seven are defrayed by the voluntary subscribers, four out of the county rate, and one out of the rate for the county of the town of Nottingham.

Can you state what the whole expense for erecting the building was?—For the purchase of land and contingencies relating thereto, 1,911*l.*; for the erection of a lodge at the entrance of the ground, 519*l.*; for the principal buildings, the fence walls, the digging, and all contingencies denominated fixtures, 16,651*l.*; for fitting up and furnishing, including all contingencies not denominated fixtures, 1,788*l.*; this was the original expense: subsequent to which, an expense for wire window-guards and other articles, has been incurred, amounting to 817*l.*; making a total of 21,686*l.*

How many patients is that capable of receiving?—The capacity of the Institution depends in some measure, upon the state of convalescence prevailing among the patients; because the number of convalescents sleeping in the same apartment, may, according to the state of their mind, be considerably increased. I would state it generally, for about sixteen patients of the first or superior class, by which I mean those who contribute to the general charge of maintenance, according to their pecuniary ability: Secondly, about twenty of the second class, consisting of persons in limited circumstances, though not exactly paupers, whose payments are relieved and lowered out of the charity, and the excess of payment imposed upon the more affluent: Thirdly, about forty paupers, sent in the proportions above-mentioned, by the county of Nottingham, and the county of the town of Nottingham: Besides which, there is a ward for about ten persons in a refractory state, without any peculiar appropriation of apartments, according to their class in life; making in the whole, an asylum for 76 or 80 persons.

If paupers only were to be received in this Asylum, could not accommodations be afforded for more than the 76 or 80 persons you have mentioned?—The building consists of a central house appropriated to the use of the principal officers and patients of the first class; of those, more might certainly be admitted, were they paupers: But the other two classes are confined in wings attached on the opposite sides of this central building, one of which is assigned to males, and the other to females. The patients of the second class occupy the upper story; the third class, or paupers, the first and second story; and the basement story, being above ground, is assigned to refractory patients; consequently the same space is allowed precisely for patients of the second class and paupers.

Can you state the size of the rooms?—The size of a single room is about 10 feet by 7 feet, for each patient.

You have no instance of two sleeping in a room?—None, excepting when they are in a convalescent state.

Are they then in separate beds?—Yes, all of them.

How many in a convalescent state sleep in one room?—The largest sleeping apartment that we have for the second and third classes, is denominated a Double-room, but it might probably hold three or four.

Is there any medical advice applied to the patients for their mental complaint, independent of their corporeal complaint?—The rules require, That the physician do enter in a book to be kept for this purpose, the name, age, and abode, of every patient soon after his or her admission, together with a statement of the case, as far as it has come to his knowledge; that he do sub-join a prescription of the medicine, diet, and management, and do add, from time to time, under their proper dates, reports specifying the condition of the patient, with such variations in the treatment as may have been recommended; that each case be completed on the discharge of the patient, by annexing such remarks upon the nature and treatment of the disease, as may be judged likely to prove beneficial to the patient in the event of a relapse, or generally expedient and useful; that every prescription or direction so inserted, be deemed a sufficient authority for the prompt and exact execution of the same; that every such book be the property of the Institution; and that each volume, when finished, be preserved among the documents of the Asylum as an historical record of the state of medical practice in this Establishment; that the contents be not inspected unless by the visiting governors, the physician, the director, or such other person as may receive permission in writing for that purpose, from the house Committee; and that no part of any such manuscripts be transcribed or disclosed, except by the direction of a general quarterly meeting, entered among their proceedings, together with the consent of the physician by whom the same was written, if he be then living.

Are those rules acted upon?—I would generally state respecting the government of the Institution, that no rule can, to my knowledge, be found among our regulations, which is not actually enforced and practised in this Establishment.

Can you state the number of persons cured, in proportion to the number of those who have been received?—Out of 91 received from June the 24th 1813, to June the 24th 1814, eighteen have been dismissed recovered, five on trial, and one relieved.

What allowance is made by the parishes for the pauper Lunatics?—Nine shillings a week, besides the fees to the physician.

The parishes pay those fees?—They do.

Is the Committee to understand, that the nine shillings a week is sufficient for the maintenance of the paupers?—The actual expense of the paupers is ascertained with very strict precision, by an experiment made upon the dietary for a period not less than one week, and the rate of weekly allowance is accordingly from time to time determined. When there is a fluctuation of prices, we direct an experiment immediately on the dietary, and apportion that among the different classes in the Institution; it being a condition, that paupers shall never be charged more than the actual cost of maintenance: the nine shillings covers every expense of board, medicine, and maintenance.

Is the diet of the patients attended to by the physician according to the state of mental derangement?—There is a dietary prescribed for the Institution; but the physician has power to make alterations, according to the circumstances of the patients.

Does he exercise that authority?—He does, whenever his discretion induces him so to do.

Does the Asylum furnish its own medicines?—Yes; the apothecary is also the director and an inmate of the house. The medicines are bought wholesale, and distributed by him according to the directions of the physician.

Have the patients an opportunity of seeing out of the windows?—Yes; ours is a system of great tenderness and indulgence; the patients have very cheerful prospects out of their galleries and day-rooms. We have carried our ideas so far as to employ no iron bars, having made our windows proportionably strong.

How are they off for water?—They have water and water-closets on every floor.

Have they constant access to the water?—Yes, during the day-time.

Are the sexes kept perfectly separate?—The central house is divided by a wall, which entirely detaches the male side of the Asylum from the female; and in all cases the males and females are kept perfectly distinct, as well as the keepers.

Are any of the patients who are outrageous, confined either by irons or strait-waistcoat, and in what way?—Pursuing the same system of mildness, we have made diligent enquiries, with a wish to discover the means of restraining the patients, so as to produce the least possible irritation; and for this purpose we sent our director, before he entered upon the duties of his office, to pass a portion of his time at the "Retreat," an asylum in York, which we understood, was distinguished for lenity of this description. We have adopted, in many instances, the system of restraint in use there; experience has taught us other eligible means; and when a chain has been found necessary, which it is supposed to be in some instances, it has been merely a slight chain, resembling the curb of a bridle, covered with leather, and attached to the bed and to the wrist of the patient, as conceived to be (especially in warm weather) a much less oppressive mode of restraint during the night, than the strait-waistcoat. With regard to outrageous patients, instances have been found, and one, which Admiral Frank accompanied me to inspect, where the fury of the Maniac was so great, that no handcuffs of ordinary strength would restrain him; and in that instance, he was confined in a cell by himself, until his paroxysm abated.

In what manner was he confined, was he chained in his cell?—After our ordinary modes of restraint proved ineffectual, stronger handcuffs were applied, and attached by a chain to the wall; that man has since become perfectly mild; he was a pauper patient. The rules direct, "That the assistants and servants do conform implicitly to the rules of the Asylum, and the orders of the director; that they abstain from acts of unnecessary violence or aggravated oppression towards the patients; that they do not use chains, unless with the knowledge and consent of the director; and that they inflict neither blows nor stripes, but on the contrary, that they behave with the utmost forbearance, tenderness, patience, and humanity, towards the unfortunate sufferers entrusted to their care and protection." The rules determining the authority of the assistants and servants, are suspended in each of the wards; and I have learned from a patient, who came out on trial, that the patients perfectly comprehend the nature of them; and that this information was a source of great satisfaction.

Is there any difference in the diet of the patients, according to their rank in life?—The patients of the first class are dieted according to their payments, consistently with their health; those of the second and third class, in the same manner.

The state of the health is the primary object?—Certainly.

Has the physician any separate institution of his own?—No, he has not; he is not a member of the Committee, in order that the proper controul may be preserved.

How is the physician remunerated for his trouble?—The regulations on that subject are as follow: "That a physician be elected once in every three years, or oftener if the situation shall sooner be declared vacant, who shall be entrusted with the medical treatment of the patients, but shall not accept or demand from any patient, being a pauper belonging to any parish within the said counties, any other than the following fees; videlicet, On the admission of every such pauper, one guinea, and half a guinea at the conclusion of every six months, during the confinement of such patient in the Asylum, which half guinea shall be equally due, should the patient be discharged as cured, or relieved, before the expiration of the first six months: but that no fee, except that paid on admission, shall be received from any pauper placed in the class of incurables, unless such patient be afflicted with any malady independent of Lunacy, requiring medical attendance, in which case, the same fee of half a guinea shall be due every six months, during the continuance of such disease. And that no admission-fee shall be due for any Lunatic pauper, who shall have suffered a relapse, and be re-admitted within three months, after having been allowed to leave the Asylum on trial; and that the fees to be received by the physician, from patients not being paupers, shall be regulated according to the discretion of the visiting governors." "That the physician of this establishment, unless prevented by unavoidable business, do attend this Asylum on the forenoon of every Wednesday, and at other times as frequently as occasions may require." "That the physicians shall, without fee or reward, attend every patient in the second class, whose weekly payments do not exceed half a guinea." "That the physician be entitled to receive the following fees, upon the admission of every patient into the first and second classes, who shall be charged with the weekly payments for maintenance and care hereinafter mentioned; namely, a fee of one guinea, if the weekly payment of the patient be rated at fifteen shillings, or any higher sum not amounting to one guinea; a fee of two guineas, if the weekly payment of the patient be rated at one guinea, or any higher sum, not amounting to one guinea and a half; a fee of three guineas, if the weekly payment of the patient be rated at one guinea and a half, or any higher sum, not amounting to two guineas; a fee of four guineas, if the weekly payment of the patient be rated at two guineas, or any higher sum." "That the fee received by the physician be repeated every half year, during which, any patient in the first or second classes, liable to the same, shall continue in the Asylum; and also that if any such patient be discharged as cured, or relieved, before the expiration of the first half year after his or her admission, the same fee shall be paid to the physician, as would have been due at the end of six months." "That the physician do not claim any admission-fee from patients who have been discharged upon trial, if they should experience a relapse, and be re-admitted within the space of three months." "That no fee except that to be paid on admission, be demanded from any patient, who shall at the time of such admission be declared incurable; and that no fee be claimed from any other patient, after he or she shall be declared incurable, unless any patient so declared incurable, shall be afflicted with any malady independent of Lunacy, requiring medical attendance; in which case, a fee equal to that paid on the admission of such patient, shall be received by the physician once in every six months, during the continuance of such disease." "That the physician be not precluded by the fees herein specified, from accepting more adequate and liberal gratuities, when voluntarily tendered by the friends of patients in affluent circumstances, as an acknowledgment for assiduous or successful attention."

Did you, in the first instance, object to the visitation proposed by the Bill of last session, when that was depending?—It was the opinion of others as well as myself, that the Bill, as it originally stood, would have imposed a severe expense upon the Institution, and that some of the clauses respecting medical practitioners would have produced serious inconvenience; and as we had provided under the Act brought in by Mr. Wynn, what we conceived to be a complete system of visitation, and regular reports both to the governors, and to the quarter sessions, we conceived that the expenses of this Act, would have unnecessarily withdrawn a considerable portion of our funds; but when the modifications, transmitted to Admiral Frank, were introduced, I conceived that the Bill was not in any respect objectionable; and this I understand to be the opinion of Dr. Storer, to whom this Institution is highly indebted. A petition against the Bill was, I believe, transmitted; but I was not acquainted with it, until after it was presented.

Have the lightness and cheerfulness of the house, of which you have already spoken, been adopted from any advice of the medical attendants, with respect to its supposed efficacy in the cure of the patients?—The situation was selected with a view to those objects, conformably, as I believe, to the advice of all the medical men; but I can state that Doctor Storer is particularly an advocate for the system of indulgence, and for the cheerfulness of the building: We assign to each ward suitable yards; and a portion of the ground (of which we have about four acres) is laid out in garden and pleasure grounds, where they are also permitted to walk and labour, whenever the state of their mind is such as to allow it.

Do many, in fact, employ themselves in labour?—Many do; and it is the endeavour of those who manage the institution, to supply the patients with means of employment, both in doors and out of doors, as in their judgment essentially conducive to their health and recovery.

What species of employment have you given the patients?—

Any species of employment to which the patient may be disposed, without prejudice to himself, or those in his class.

Have you observed more cures among those that do labour, than among those who do not labour?—The number of those not accustomed, in ordinary life, to labour, confined in our Institution, are very few, the first class being only five in number; therefore I am unable to answer that question with precision.

What is the number of keepers employed in this Asylum?—The keepers of the first class, are regulated by the agreement with the friends of the patient; they have hitherto, I believe, amounted only to one male, and one female. For the second class, there is one male, and one female keeper. For the third class, one male, and one female: there is also a gardener, who officiates without doors in that capacity; and were the keepers or assistants of the first class multiplied, they would of course be available in cases of emergency. Whenever a patient can be conveniently employed in domestic purposes, it has been the practice so to do, with the double intention of advancing the recovery of the patient, and reducing the number of the servants.

To the care of how many patients is one keeper, in your opinion, equal, taking the outrageous with the placid?—That will depend in some measure, upon the facility of communication existing between the different keepers; in one instance we have a keeper for a ward, containing about ten; in another, a keeper for two wards, containing about twenty; but those two keepers could, on any occasion, co-operate immediately together.

Do you conceive that a keeper, under any circumstances, is equal to the due care of twenty patients?—Twenty patients are seldom found, without some in a state nearly advancing to recovery; and with a disposition, in case of any emergency, to assist the keeper; though we are obliged to distinguish them, to preserve our classification separate, we, in fact, possess two keepers to thirty people.

Is it your opinion, a keeper solely, is equal to the management of twenty insane patients?—It is a point upon which, practically, I am not able to speak with precision; but I should not conceive that any one man was equal to the care of twenty patients, unless he possessed an immediate communication with other officers of the same description. And I should state, that we have the director, his son, who acts as secretary, the keeper of the first class, and the gardener; all of whom might, at a short notice, be brought into any ward of the establishment, as the house is built upon the principle of immediate communication, and general inspection.

RETREAT AT YORK.

Veneris, 26^o die Maii, 1815.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE GEORGE ROSE IN THE CHAIR.

MR. WILLIAM TUKE called in, and Examined.

YOU were the principal promoter of the Retreat at York?—
I was, and have always taken an active part in the attendance on Committee meetings, and every thing that has been done respecting it, from the beginning.

Can you give the Committee in detail, the practice of that establishment?—The general practice, I can; with respect to the patients, every thing is done by those that have the management of them, the Superintendent, and his wife, who has the care of the female part, to make the patients as comfortable as they can, and to endeavour to impress upon their minds, the idea that they will be kindly treated; that is generally the setting out; when that is attained, it is not so difficult to manage the patients.

Can you state the quantum of personal restraint?—That depends upon the state of the patient.

Do you often visit personally, the house?—Frequently.

In those cases do you see all the patients, and all the rooms?—I generally go into all the rooms; sometimes I go into one of the men's apartments, sometimes into the women's apartments; but I most frequently go into all the apartments.

What is the regular visitation to which the house is subjected, and by whom?—There is a committee meets once a month, and oftener if there is occasion, on account of applications from patients, and female visitors are appointed: they are generally three or four in number, one goes out every month, and another is appointed, and they take the general superintendence of the female department; the committee have had full liberty to look into every part of the house, and see all the patients, as the committee look upon it, they are not under any kind of restraint from going amongst the patients; they have but lately appointed men visitors; we have had female visitors appointed for a considerable time. I am the treasurer, and I generally sit with the committee; I am under the appointment of the committee. The committee consist of seven, and two go out every year.

Of whom does the committee consist?—Seven subscribers. They are men; they meet once a month, and minute proceedings, such as the reception and discharge of patients.

Do they see all the patients when they meet?—No, they do not make a point of that; but we have so much confidence in the kindness of the superintendent, that the committee in general, have not thought themselves under the necessity of going so much about the house, as they otherwise probably might have done; but I more frequently go than many of the committee.

So that the patients are not necessarily seen by the committee?—No; we have had an appointment of female visitors some time; lately we thought it might be necessary to appoint male visitors, lest in the course of time any thing should be introduced, that might not be so easily checked afterwards.

What is the duty of the visitors?—The duty of the visitors is to see all the patients, and to make their observations respecting the state of the house, monthly.

Do the visitors make any report to the committee?—Yes; there is a book provided for the female visitors to make a report to the committee, or make any suggestion which occurs to them; the appointment of male visitors is very recent, but it is intended that they shall report likewise, and enter their observations upon each visit.

Can you speak, from your personal knowledge, to the effect of medicine, in cases of mental derangement?—In cases of mental derangement, from what I have learnt, it is thought very little can be done; but when the mental disorder is accompanied by bodily disease of one kind or other, the removal of the complaint has frequently recovered the patient; this comes within my personal observation, having frequently enquired into the effect of medical treatment.

Are you, from personal inspection, acquainted with the nature and the degrees of personal restraint, to which the patients are subjected?—Yes.

What is the general mode of confining violent or outrageous maniacs?—The full extent of that has been generally by something of a kind of belt of leather round the body, with straps to confine the arms; that has frequently been necessary in case of patients (which is not uncommon) who have but very little reason, wishing to tear their own clothes, and of their having a disposition to strike those that come near them.

Is the strait-waistcoat likewise used?—Yes, it is; but this is thought rather preferable to the strait-waistcoat in general, because it does not heat the body so much as the strait-waistcoat, which confines the whole body.

And it leaves the hands free for the use of the patients?—Yes;

they can make a little use of them, but not so much as to do mischief. We have a patient who has long lucid intervals, but is subject to very violent paroxysms, and very sudden, during which, we conceive he would injure any person who came within his power; this man, during his paroxysms, is confined in a separate room, about twelve feet by eight, where he lies on a straw bed, which is changed every day: he is not subjected to chains of any kind, or to any other restraint than what has been already mentioned, except the strait-waistcoat, occasionally.

Is this the case of the most violent patient you have?—It is.

Is the statement published by Mr. Samuel Tuke, and which statement is reviewed in the Edinburgh Review, a correct statement of the mode of treating the patients at the York Retreat?—I had the revision of it before it went to the press, and I know it to be perfectly correct.

Do you know enough of the medical treatment of the patients at the Retreat, to enable you to inform the Committee, whether the patients in the house are periodically physicked, bled, vomited, and bathed?—No such thing; with respect to bathing, the bath is frequently used, and I think the warm bath more than the other, but the treatment is not periodical in either case.

Is the bath used medicinally, or for cleanliness?—Partly both; but the warm bath is used more medicinally, than the cold bath; and it has been observed, that the warm bath has been found very beneficial, particularly in female cases.

None of those operations are periodical?—No; in fact very little medicine is used.

Is the Retreat visited under Act of Parliament?—No, it is not; we consider ours a public institution, and that we are not liable by law to be visited at present, but we have no objection to be visited.

SAINT LUKE'S HOSPITAL.

Mercurii, 3^o die Maii, 1815.

THE RIGHT HON. GEORGE ROSE IN THE CHAIR.

MR. EDWARD WAKEFIELD again called in, and further Examined.

HAVE you visited Saint Luke's Hospital, and what did you find the state of that House?—I visited Saint Luke's Hospital frequently during the last year; the Steward or Governor, Mr. Thomas Dunston, appears to me to conduct that Hospital with great care and discrimination; at the same time it strikes me there are some radical defects; many of the cells are not glazed; there want means of classification, and the galleries look over the large parish burial-ground of Saint Luke's, in which there are almost daily instances of interment occurring under the very eyes of the unfortunate people who are confined there; and the privies, from being in the interior of the house, are frequently offensive. In some degree classification is pursued in the men's wing. On the basement story, nearly all the idiots are kept by themselves; and there are rooms independent of the common day-rooms in each of the women's galleries, where those in a convalescent state knit, make lace, and work with a needle and thread. In many of the cells, every time that I have been over that Hospital, there have been persons chained to a bed nearly naked, covered only with a rug: but in making this remark, I rather wish not to do it by way of blame, because I really do know many instances where it is extremely difficult to do without such restraint; at the same time I think it is a fact the Committee should be aware of, in order to put it in contrast with the French hospitals, where, I am informed, that a much greater number of patients are confined, and also the Quakers' Retreat at York, without an instance of the sort.

What is the number of patients in confinement?—I was there on the 23d of April last; it was then remarkably full; I think there were 330; about 300 is the general number. I should state, that I tasted the bread, cheese, and beer, which were all excellent; and that some of the convalescent patients stated to me, that the greatest comfort which could be allowed to them would be an allowance of snuff and tobacco to the men, and tea and sugar to the women.

From your observation, do you conceive a much larger proportion of the patients in Bethlem were chained when you first visited it in the spring of 1814 than in Saint Luke's?—I apprehend that in the spring of that year, the proportion under violent coercion was infinitely greater in Bethlem than in Saint Luke's; but as I have already stated to the Committee, on the 23d of April this year, I saw but one person in chains in Bethlem Hospital.

Did you not see many more in Bethlem, in the spring of the last year, without clothes, than in Saint Luke's?—There were a class of persons in Bethlem, that of patients, wrapped up in a mere blanket-gown, and chained to the side of a room, who were not at all to be found in Saint Luke's; those patients are such persons as are not aware of the necessities of nature; and I am rather inclined to believe that the patients whom I saw naked and chained in bed in Saint Luke's were of the same description, but it was a different mode of treatment pursued in each Hospital.

At Saint Luke's are the patients that are outrageous kept in the same apartments with those that are passive?—In some instances those that are very noisy are confined to a cell, but those who are violent without being noisy, are chained in the day-rooms.

Were the quiet patients there?—Yes. There is a very remarkable man in Saint Luke's, a sailor, who is leg-locked and hand-cuffed, but I do not make this remark at all by way of complaint, as I consider him one of the most dangerous animals whom I have ever seen; fastened as he is, he flies at you, and would seize any body within his reach with his teeth. Such a man as that must be chained.

Have the patients separate beds in Saint Luke's?—I believe in every instance, and in most instances separate rooms; but I find upon enquiry that those persons whose minds are bent on committing suicide, are prevented by the knowledge that they sleep in a room where another person is always sleeping, and those patients are put in rooms where there are two or three beds.

Have you visited Guy's Hospital; and in what state did you find the insane patients in that Hospital?—There is a ward at Guy's Hospital, which is calculated to receive twenty female patients, termed incurable; it is a separate building from the general Hospital, and is, by being adapted to afford the keeper a complete and constant inspection of every part, by superior modes of ventilation, and in all other respects more suitably constructed than any other erection for the insane within the bills of mortality. The bedsteads for the wet patients are lined with lead, and sloping to one corner; the urine runs off without any offensive smell whatever, which is common in all the other Hospitals I visited. Instead of a strait-waistcoat, in hot weather a leather belt is substituted, which is girted round the body with a small strap round each arm, which allows the patient the use of her hands without the heat of a strait-waistcoat. There is a chair for a very violent patient, that is stuffed much higher than her head, and on each side, so that when she is fastened in it, in the most violent paroxysms it is impossible that she can receive the slightest injury from blows, which she otherwise might receive against the wall. There are in this Hospital two patients, and sometimes there may be more, who are perfectly naked upon straw; one of them, in my opinion, is not at all to be complained of; she is a poor withered old idiot, who lies in a torpid state, and could receive no comforts whatever; it can only be said that she is in existence; and from her not being aware of the necessities of nature, I hardly know that it can be said that she could be done better by than her being permitted to remain covered with clean straw, which I believe is changed daily: I think she is incapable of knowing what a comfort means.

In this Hospital are there any complaints of the patients in the other part of the Hospital being disturbed by the insane ones?—The building is so distinct and perfect from the rest of the Hospital, that I have no conception that any noise made within it could affect the patients of the general Hospital as much as the noise arising from the adjoining streets.

Can you state, with any degree of accuracy, at what distance the Insane ward is from the rest of the Hospital?—I should think, speaking from guess, perhaps 150 yards; it is built upon the panoptican system, entirely on the ground floor; it is a half panoptican.

Is this the best planned of any one you have seen?—Yes it is.

Do you conceive it might be improved upon?—The principle, I think, cannot be; this is on a small scale, and capable of extension,

Mercurii, 24^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honorable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Mr. THOMAS DUNSTON called in, and Examined.

WHAT are you?—Master of St. Luke's Hospital, Old-street.

How long have you been in that situation?—About thirty-five years, and eight years at Bethlem before that.

What is the number of patients in that Hospital?—298 at this time.

What is the proportion of males and females, curable and incurable?—I think, incurable at this time, there are 99: we usually have a hundred, but there is one vacancy at this time. To the best of my recollection, there are about 140 males, the remainder females.

What proportion of the incurables are male, and what proportion female?—I believe the males are about forty, the remainder females.

What is the proportion of curable?—Of the 200 curable patients, there are between 80 and 90 males, remainder females.

By what means are patients admitted?—By a petition, signed by a medical man, and the minister and churchwardens of the parish where the person resided when he became deranged.

To whom is that addressed?—To the Governors of the Hospital.

Has every person who is suffering under that calamity a right of admission into St. Luke's, or by whose authority is such admission granted?—The admission is by the Committee, on the production of the petition and certificate, if their cases come within the rules laid down; namely, having become deranged within twelve months.

What number of patients can St. Luke's conveniently hold?—It is estimated at 300; I have had 305, but it is found a little inconvenient.

Do you know whether applications have ever been refused, for want of room?—Yes; at this time there are between twenty and thirty waiting.

There are 100 incurable patients now upon the Foundation?—Yes.

There is one vacancy?—Yes.

How many candidates are there for that vacancy?—I think there are at this time nearly 700 waiting.

Have you any notion what is the number of persons in confinement, in London and its neighbourhood, as insane patients?—I really cannot exactly answer that question; I should suppose 6 or 7,000.

What is the average number of vacancies that you have, each year, in the incurable list?—They very rarely get well; now and then one does; it is only in consequence of their dropping off by old age; one has been now forty years: there are sometimes two or three in a year.

What is the ordinary number of years that a patient is on the list to be received as an incurable into St. Luke's, before he is so received?—The average of the time at this period is from ten to twelve years before it comes to their turn.

What is the average mortality within St. Luke's?—I cannot speak correctly; I should say, speaking at the moment, from twenty to twenty-four annually.

Can you state to the Committee the number of persons annually admitted on the curable list?—I cannot charge my memory exactly.

As many as 200?—I should think that number, or from that to 240.

If patients are admitted into St. Luke's on the first of January, on the first of January following, if they are not discharged as cured, they are turned out of the Hospital to make room for others, they having been their year of probation?—Yes; it happens that they stay six days beyond the twelvemonth, on account of the twelvemonth being up the day after the Friday on which the Committee meet, so that they cannot be discharged till the next Friday.

Can you state to the Committee, for a certain number of years, out of the 200 that have been annually received, how many have been discharged as cured?—I cannot correctly; but I will furnish such account.

What becomes of those persons when they are so discharged from the Hospital?—That rests entirely with their friends; many of them support them at different houses round London, and many of them return to their parishes.

Does not some friend of the parties enter into a recognizance for taking back the body of the person within the twelvemonth?—Yes; within seven days after notice from the clerk of the Hospital.

It is the same with the parishes?—Yes.

They engage under a penalty?—Yes; two securities in 100*l.* penalty.

What medical attendants are there in the Hospital?—There is a physician, surgeon, and apothecary; the apothecary resides in the house: Mr. Vaux has been our surgeon three or four-and-twenty years; the apothecary has been for a few months.

What is the inspection which takes place in the Hospital?—The apothecary goes round every day; the physician comes three times a week.

Does the apothecary visit every cell daily?—Where there is anybody in bed, he goes, particularly if they are ill; most of the patients are up: he goes into the airing-room with the servant, and knows how they all are.

He personally looks at every separate patient?—Yes.

When the physician attends three times a week, does he do the same?—One day in the week he examines every patient separately; the other days he goes and sees them promiscuously.

If any person is particularly ill, he goes to visit them?—Yes, he does; myself or Mrs. Dunston informs him, and he goes to visit them.

How many keepers are there in each ward?—We have only three male keepers, one to each gallery; but there are two assistants.

That is, for the curable and incurable?—Yes.

How many keepers to the female wards?—There are four female keepers, besides the matron and the assistant matron.

Have the male keepers any thing to do whatever with the female wards?—Yes; when there happens to be a patient that the female keepers cannot manage, one of the male keepers is appointed to assist her, which is frequently the case; I have gone a hundred times myself.

Such male keeper never has any communication with the female ward, except in the presence of a female keeper or the matron?—None, except carrying up the provisions and coals, which is to the servant.

When he carries the coals and provisions, does he enter the gallery, or leave them at the grating at the door?—He enters the gallery and sets them down at the side-table, and calls the maid; the maid comes and receives them, and the man goes away.

} Discharged, having fits, and being too weak in health to take Medicines for their Lunacy.

The Average of the incurable Patients, from 3 to 5 per year.
Waiting to be admitted upon that, about 700.

[Examined, as follows:]

WHAT proportion of your patients are under restraint?—I believe at this time we have not above five.

In the whole?—In the whole; sometimes we have more; but I think at this time, as near as I can judge, about five patients.

And how many that do not wear clothes, what you call blanket patients?—We have nothing of the kind; if they are ever so bad, and nasty and dirty, they are kept in bed one day, and their things washed and then put on again, and they are permitted to walk about.

Who, in Saint Luke's Hospital, is authorised to impose personal restraint on the patients?—Nobody except myself; I do not suffer the servants to do it without my directions.

And you do not apply to the physicians?—No, and never have since I have been there.

They have confidence in you, and do not interfere?—They have.

Which do you prefer of these two, the strait waistcoat or manacles?—Sometimes we are obliged to use both, because they will burst the waistcoat out, and tear it to pieces, but not often.

Which of the two do you prefer?—I should impose the handcuffs before the waistcoat.

What is the advantage of handcuffs then, in your opinion, over the strait-waistcoat?—There is not the risk of the patient's hurting himself with the strings, which they will attempt very often.

Is not the strait-waistcoat more against the health of the patients than the manacles?—I think it is.

Is not it more heating, for instance?—Certainly.

Do not you conceive that a ligature from behind the shoulders of the patient, confining the upper joints of the arms, would have the advantage of manacles, as giving more use of the hands to the patients in the calls of nature?—I do not think it would be so pleasant to the patient; I think it would be more punishment; he would be more confined with it than with his hands before him; I think it would be more hurtful to his joints.

In what capacity did you officiate at Bethlem Hospital, before you were removed to Saint Luke's?—I was first an Assistant Keeper there, and afterwards a Keeper.

Did you become Master as soon as you removed to Saint Luke's?—I did.

What officer at Bethlem do you conceive stands in a situation corresponding to that of Master at Saint Luke's?—The Steward.

Who was Steward at Bethlem during your stay there?—There were two; one Mr. Rushworth was Steward when I first went there, the other was Mr. White.

Mr. Allavoine did not come till after you left?—No.

Do you know any thing of the management of Bethlem Hospital since you left it?—I do not; I went to see a man who was confined there, and thought it very improperly done.

What man; do you recollect his name?—I cannot be certain, but I think it was Norris.

On what account do you think he was improperly confined?—By the iron round his neck.

Are you aware that he had any irons round his body?—I think there was one.

Were you permitted to examine him?—No, I was not.

You have then only a recollection of the general manner in which he was confined, extending only from your own personal observation to the collar round his neck, and the iron bar behind?—Yes.

Had you any opportunity of examining the man?—I asked him how he did; he said, he was pretty well. I asked him further, if he found his confinement any punishment to him? he said, he should rather have his liberty. And I asked him further, if he could conduct himself without any danger to the people about the place, if he had his liberty? and he told me he could not promise; and I was afraid I went further than I had any business to do in a strange house.

Did there appear to you to be any thing in his conduct or appearance, that rendered such a confinement necessary?—From the appearance I saw, I did not think there was.

During the thirty-two years you have been in Saint Luke's, have you not frequently had persons in the most outrageous degrees of insanity?—Yes; I had one that broke out of the New Prison, Clerkenwell; he told the keepers there, they should not keep him; and he would show them that they should not; he broke all his chains, and broke through the wall, and the keepers brought him to me; they were very glad to get rid of him; I believe the man was a master baker; they could not keep him in the house, they could not confine him.

Have you had many other instances of persons quite or nearly as outrageous as that man?—Yes, I have.

Have you had many persons, from whom you would have apprehended danger to the keeper, if at liberty?—Yes, a great many in my time.

Did you ever think it necessary to confine any one of them in a manner at all resembling that in which Norris was confined?—I never did.

How long at a time have you ever found it necessary to keep on the strait-waistcoat, or manacles or footlocks?—I have changed the position of their confinement; I have found it necessary to let them walk about in the day, and confine them at night.

For how long a time, according to the best of your recollection, have you ever found it necessary to keep the most outrageous maniac chained down to his bed?—I have never been in the habit of keeping them in bed above four or five days at a time; I have got them up then, bad as they were, and put their clothes on, and confined them.

And when they were thus got up, in what manner were they then confined?—I had once, and never but once, a small iron belt in the form almost of a dog's collar; it just fitted the man, so that he could not get it under his legs or over his head; and a wrist-lock on each hand; his hands were at liberty: and so confined, he was permitted to walk about without restraint.

Agreeably to the experience you have had now of forty years, can you conceive in any case it could be necessary to keep a man chained down to his bed for nine years together?—No, nor nine weeks.

You have said, that when you visited Norris, you only saw an iron chain or collar round his neck?—An iron chain about his neck; and there was something round his body, but I could not tell what.

When in conversation with Norris, did you observe the solidity of the iron about his neck?—It was loose about his neck.

Was it a heavy chain, or a light one?—It was thicker than a dog-chain, and I thought it quite thick enough for the purpose for which it was made use of; but I cannot tell how thick it was.

Was it not sufficient to hold any man, under any circumstances?—I should think it was strong enough to hold almost a cart-horse.

What effect have you observed severity of confinement, or the reverse, to produce upon the mental health of the patient?—The most tender treatment is always the best, and will do the most.

Does not severity and restraint retard the cure?—That depends entirely on the case.

Does, or does not, severe restraint retard the cure?—I have always dealt kindly with them; mild treatment always does best, I have found.

Under whose inspection is the Hospital of St. Luke's?—There is a Committee of thirty Governors.

How often do they visit, and in what number?—Some of them come always weekly, and sometimes twice a week.

How many?—From two to four come every Friday, and sometimes half a dozen, and some of them on other days.

In those visitations, by whom are the Committee attended?—The physician and surgeon, and I myself attend on the Committee, and the apothecary, if he is wanted.

Do they go all over the house?—Frequently.

Not constantly?—No, but frequently.

When they go all over the house, do they see every patient?—They mostly do; they have all the doors open.

They see the bed-rooms as well as the galleries?—Yes.

Does the physician administer medicine to the insane persons for their insanity?—Mostly for their bodily health; and there are other medicines for insanity.

They do attend to that regularly?—Yes.

In no case have you two in a bed?—No.

Are the clean patients mixed with those who are insensible to the calls of nature?—The unclean patients have a room separate to themselves, and I have thought of making that room bigger, I do not think it is big enough; the clean patients have a larger room; the unclean patients have clean blankets every night, and straw; the wet straw is taken away every morning.

And the clean patients have beds?—Yes, flock beds.

Are the violent cases separated from the more placid?—Yes; the violent cases are put in a small warming-room, and kept separate from the quiet ones.

What number of keepers have you to the men patients?—One in each gallery.

And how many patients are there in the gallery?—Between thirty and forty; then there are two assistants to each gallery if any thing is wanted, and there is nearly the same proportion of female keepers.

You have mentioned that a violent patient will sometimes tear a strait-waistcoat to pieces?—Yes.

Do you think that there would be any difficulty in so strengthening a strait-waistcoat with leather as to render it impossible even for the strongest or most violent maniac to burst it open?—I think it might be done; at the same time I do not think it would be so safe, for, from experience, the idea of the chain is half the confinement to them, and it gives them more liberty, and does not stop the circulation of the blood; they would be always trying to burst a strait-waistcoat.

Mr. GEORGE VAUX called in, and Examined,

YOU are Surgeon to the Hospital of St. Luke's?—Yes.

How long have you attended St. Luke's in the capacity of Surgeon?—I believe above twenty years, but I do not exactly know how long; ever since the new Hospital was built.

What is the attendance required of you, and in what manner is it executed?—That which is required at the Hospital is that which is required in all families where they are liable to accidents, and so on; I am sent for, if I am wanted.

Then you have nothing to do with the medical treatment, except when sent for on cases especially surgical?—Yes; but I consider it also as within my province to watch the state of the patients' extremities in cold weather, and apply remedies, if necessary, to prevent mortification; managed as they now are, that is very seldom required; but unless it was attended to, it might be followed by bad consequences.

Is it usual in St. Luke's to bleed the patients in considerable numbers at any period of the year?—If I understand the question correctly, it is, whether I, as Surgeon to St. Luke's Hospital, have been desired, or it is expected to be done, or it is part of the practice of the House, that the patients should be bled for their insanity, at certain periods of the year; no such practice has ever prevailed, since I was Surgeon to Luke's Hospital; what the Surgeon orders for the patients, the Apothecary prepares, and gives to the patients, according to the instructions he has for the purpose.

Who are the Physician and Apothecary to St. Luke's?—Dr. Sutherland is the Physician, and Mr. D'Aranda is the Apothecary.

Is the Apothecary resident in the Hospital?—He is resident in the Hospital.

Veneris, 26^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Dr. ALEXANDER ROBERT SUTHERLAND called in, and Examined.

YOU are Physician of Saint Luke's Hospital?—I am.

How long have you been so?—Since March 1811.

Since you have been Physician to the Hospital, have the patients of that Hospital been medically treated for the cure and removal of their mental diseases?—Yes, particularly where there is any bodily indisposition accompanying the malady; when we admit fresh cases, there is generally some derangement of the system, mixed with the mental disorder.

They have medicine for the cure and correction of their mental diseases?—Yes; I myself generally attack the cases of mental disorder through the medium of the stomach, I find it answer exceedingly well, the patients invariably have tonic medicines.

With a view to their mental disease?—Yes; moral treatment is of course more especially important in the treatment of persons labouring under mental disorder.

Do you endeavour to alter or rectify the state of the stomach by tonics, purgative medicines, or emetics, or by all the three?—As occasion may require; there can be no general plan of treatment, I presume.

You mean that you endeavour peculiarly to adapt your treatment to the state of each individual patient?—Decidedly so.

Is any thing like a periodical exhibition of medicine, or periodical bleeding of a number of patients, adopted or followed in Saint Luke's Hospital?—Certainly not.

Is the use or exhibition of emetics frequent?—Only when recommended by myself; I occasionally find it absolutely necessary to employ emetics, but just as I should to any other patient whose stomach required it; I very often employ the bath of surprise, cold bathing, but that is dependent upon my recommendation.

You do that only in particular cases?—Only in particular cases; after examining the patient, I sometimes recommend it.

Do you, or do you not, consider one year too short a period at which to give up any expectation of cure, and consequently any medical treatment for the disorder?—It is decidedly too short a period in some instances, because we frequently find patients recover after that period: therefore, in dismissing a patient after having been twelve months in Saint Luke's Hospital, we never make use of the term incurable; they merely leave us uncured.

Do you not conceive the nature of the diet of the patient a very important circumstance in the cure?—It ought to be occasionally regulated, but I should say, only where bodily indisposition is present; the treatment of insane cases, I think, is generally too much on the system of lowering; cases of mental excitement are too frequently treated as cases of active inflammation.

Do you not think that the mixture of patients, in different stages of insanity, must tend very much to diminish the chance of cure of those that are the most quiet?—I should say, the arrangement ought not to be too minute, for we find the convalescent patient exceedingly serviceable in respect of the other patients.

Do not you conceive that the mixture of forty or fifty patients, in different stages of insanity, must tend to diminish the chance of the recovery of those that are the most placid?—Certainly it must be detrimental, if there is no classification; one would avoid distressing the mind by the sight of those who are furious, or in a state of fatuity.

Do you not conceive that the use of a strait waistcoat is very heating to the patients frequently?—It frequently is, in the summer months particularly.

And so far has a tendency to retard the progress of recovery?—I can hardly state whether it might have an effect in retarding the recovery; it might induce bodily indisposition and great debility.

Is it of importance to the cure of a patient, to prevent, as far as possible, any unnecessary irritation of the mind?—Surely.

What is your opinion respecting confinement in irons, or any other confinement beyond that which is absolutely necessary, with a particular view to that point?—In a private establishment I do not make use of irons, but I must confess that the handcuff, particularly in the summer months, is decidedly better than the strait waistcoat in keeping the patient uniformly cool and comfortable ; I should give the preference to that system of confinement ; but in private institutions, it creates alarm perhaps of the friends, and would not be submitted to ; but it is by no means so formidable as might be conceived.

Would not a ligature from behind the patient, confining the upper joints of his arms, render him perfectly incapable of doing mischief, and be more comfortable to him than the strait waistcoat or manacles, by giving him more use of his hands ?—I should conceive there must be great caution necessary in the application of such a ligature.

Any more than in the case of manacles ?—There is no chance of interfering with the circulation of the blood by a manacle ; I should not entrust the application of this, as I conceive of it in my own mind, to the keeper.

But you would that of the strait waistcoat, or the manacles ?—
Yes.

Do not you think it would be possible to confine the arms in the manner which has been already proposed, by a strap of such kind and species as would not be liable to the inconvenience suggested ?—Yes, I think it might be made a very good thing, by preventing its being removed lower down the body, letting the strap pass over the shoulders.

Are you of opinion that any confinement of the patient, beyond that which is absolutely necessary, tends to create such an irritation of mind as interferes more or less with the cure ?—Any unnecessary confinement, I should say, would interfere with the cure ; it is necessary in most cases, to sooth and encourage the patient.

Does not the degree of confinement which may be necessary, depend very much upon the number of attendants who are kept ?—It must certainly. In public establishments, the convalescents frequently give assistance to the keepers, which renders a greater number of keepers unnecessary ; this cannot be looked to in private establishments.

Do you act as physician to any other house for the reception of Lunatics ?—I have two establishments of my own.

You do not there use periodical bleeding, purging, or vomiting ?—No, certainly not.

What is the number of patients in those two establishments ?—At present there are sixteen at Fisher House, Islington ; and thirty at Blacklands, in the King's Road.

How often do you attend Saint Luke's Hospital ?—Three times a week.

When you do so attend, do you see all the patients ?—On the Monday, which is termed the visiting day, I examine each patient individually; the Wednesday is appropriated to visiting the incurables, and attending to any case that may have become unwell since my last visit; on the Friday we admit fresh cases, and dismiss others who have been twelve months in the house, or are cured; and after the Board, I examine each fresh case in my own room, and attend to any case that may want my assistance, previous to leaving the Hospital. I attend on intervening days, in case of being sent for, but there is a resident apothecary who is always in attendance.

Supposing a patient to experience a sudden return of reason, how long would he be continued a patient in Saint Luke's before he was dismissed?—I generally wish to keep such a case a month or six weeks.

When you have convinced yourself of a patient's return to sanity, you dismiss him?—Yes, I report him as cured.

Martis, 30^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Mr. George Vaux, Surgeon of Saint Luke's Hospital, again called in; and desired to add to the evidence he before gave, the following circumstances, which it had, since his examination, occurred to him, might be useful for the Committee to be informed of.

THE Surgeon is by virtue of his office a Member of the House Committee; if any person laboured under any other affliction than merely madness, it might be a question whether it was safe to admit him into the house; if, for instance, a man was walking on crutches, it might be thought unsafe to admit him, for such instruments might be used mischievously by the other patients. If any inconvenient effect should arise from the coercion of the patients, the Surgeon would be applied to immediately; supposing it happened in the night, he would be applied to in the morning, to do what was necessary, and to take proper care of the patients.

Jovis, 8^o die Junii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

WILLIAM SMITH, Esq. a Member of the Committee, again Examined.

HAVE you ever seen St. Luke's Hospital?—I was at St. Luke's once the last year, after having seen Bethlem; and although much of the difference I observed might be owing to the better state of the building, St. Luke's being newer, and in every respect apparently more comfortable, yet I could not but think that there was considerable difference in the management also, and that all those differences were in favour of St. Luke's; in particular, there seemed greatly more attention to the comfort of the Patients in the conduct of the Superintendent and unquestionably there was more cleanliness and less confinement, both as to the numbers confined, and as to severity. On my visit to Bethlem this year, I think it approached as nearly as possible to the state in which St. Luke's was on my visit last year; I also some time ago visited the insane ward at Guy's Hospital, which upon the whole appeared to me to be under better regulation than any of them; I saw the female Patients at dinner, by far the greater part of whom were under no restraint but the vigilance of the Superintendents; there were very few indeed of those who were under some restraint who were prevented from feeding themselves, and every pains appeared to be taken to keep all the apartments as clean as possible, to give to the Patients every comfort which their situation was capable of receiving, and to prevent them from incommoding each other, either by act or by violence of language; the building is entirely separated from the rest of the Hospital, so as to prevent the Patients in the other wards being at all incommoded by the Lunatics; I particularly observed that more attention had been bestowed, and more ingenuity exercised, in the various modes of confinement, so as to keep them in a state of perfect safety, with as little irritation or injury to the body as I apprehend possible; all those Lunatics were paupers. I have also seen Miles's House at Hoxton; the Norfolk Lunatic Asylum, and the Bethlem Hospital at Norwich; in none of which, to the best of my recollection, did I observe the same severity of confinement which was exercised in Bethlem at the time of my first visit there. In those at Norwich, very great attention was paid not merely to the corporeal complaints of the Patients, but also to their mental disorder; and from the manner in which they are visited, I am confident that it is almost impossible for any instance of abuse or ill-treatment to escape notice: I saw some persons there, in a state of dreadful insanity, but no one of them confined in a manner that gave any idea of cruelty; and I am inclined to think that the degree of confinement at Bethlem arose very much from the want of sufficient attendants.

NAVAL MANIACS AT HOXTON.

Martis, 2^o die Maii, 1815.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE GEORGE ROSE IN THE CHAIR.

DR. JOHN WEIR called in, and Examined.

WHAT is your situation?—Inspector of Naval Hospitals.

In the course of your duty have you inspected the house of Messrs. Miles and Company at Hoxton, in which commissioned officers, petty officers and seamen, in a state of insanity, are received?—For these last thirteen years, partly in the capacity of a Commissioner of the late Sick and Hurt Board, and subsequently as Inspector of Naval Hospitals, I have visited the naval Maniacs occasionally when in town, always weekly; but when called upon duty to the public, sometimes I have been prevented for a twelve-month together.

What do you consider to be your duty as Inspector of Hospitals, with respect to the visitation of the house occupied by Messrs. Miles and Company at Hoxton?—To enquire into the general management of the patients.

In your examination of the place of reception, have you attended to their diet and sleeping?—Yes, at every visitation; I see all the patients, their sitting-rooms, bed-chambers or cabins, their diet, their beds, their body linen, &c. I look particularly to see that their heads and skin are kept clean, and that attention is paid to their cleanliness and comforts in general. There are a variety of complaints made, and of course I listen to all of them. I enquire into the medical treatment when any of the patients have any sore, injury, or ailment; if I find they have been neglected, I feel it my duty to represent it to Sir Jonathan Miles the keeper of the house, that the apothecary may be sent for.

Did you ever see them in bed?—No, I never saw the whole of them in bed.

You have never visited them at night?—No.

Do you always visit them on the same day, and at the same hour?—Formerly I visited them at unstated, but latterly at stated periods; on perceiving no material improvement in either case as to the internal economy of the Institution.

Do you make a written report?—Yes, I do, weekly.

Jovis, 4^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Doctor JOHN WEIR again called in, and further Examined.

DID you in the month of November 1812, make any remarks on the treatment of the Maniacs in Messrs. Miles's house, in consequence of directions from the Board of Admiralty to the medical member of the Transport Board?—I did.

[A Paper relating to the management of Insane officers, seamen, and marines, belonging to His Majesty's Naval Service, printed by order of the House of Commons on the 25th of July 1814, and referred to this Committee, was shewn to Doctor Weir.]

Does the Paper signed by you, dated the 13th of November 1812, contain accurately the remarks made by you in obedience to the before-mentioned order?—With the exception of a few inaccuracies I had made in allowing too little space in some of the bed-rooms and cribs, and omitting to mention a set of miserable temporary apartments, appropriated as day-rooms for the mild patients, but opened subsequently to the Admiralty order for the enquiry, the Report is, to the best of my Judgment, in every respect correct.

What is your opinion with respect to the management of the Naval officers in that Establishment?—They are very improperly managed, I think.

Do you know how many officers there are there?—There are now nineteen, of the following ranks; to wit, one Captain of the Navy, four lieutenants of the Navy, three lieutenants of Marines, one surgeon, one purser, one assistant surgeon, one master, one boatswain, two carpenters, one gunner, one master's mate, and one midshipman.

How many of those were in the same sitting-room?—In the officers' sitting-room, as it is called, there were in all fourteen patients, of whom some were commissioned, some warrant, and some petty officers, mixed indiscriminately as to the different forms of the disease, whether violent or passive; one of those was entirely deprived of his intellects, and at the same time totally insensible to the calls of nature, and of course highly offensive to the other patients. In another sitting-room I found the captain and surgeon lodged and victualled with several other lunatics who had not been in the Navy; one of the latter informed me he had been a farmer and afterwards a grocer; another person not belonging to the Navy, said he had been a leather-currier. On withdrawing from the apartment, I represented to the superintendent the great impropriety of classing an officer of the Navy of his rank, with a grocer or a man that had been a farmer; in reply he said, that he conceived him better than any ten captains in the Navy, although he had never been in the naval service.

In a third sitting-room, I found a lieutenant of Marines lodged with a variety of other patients, apparently of an inferior description and not belonging to the Navy; there was also one, who to my knowledge was a pensioner of Greenwich Hospital; in two other sitting-rooms I found the two remaining officers, with several other people of a mixed description, not belonging to the Navy.

Did you see the sleeping places of those officers?—I did.

Describe the size and situation of them?—In one bed-chamber I found a single officer: in a second bed-room I found another officer: in a third, a small room, I found a lieutenant, a very quiet regular man, who had been in the house several years, together with two servants of the house, who were not keepers; one of them was the baker of the Institution.

Was the room large enough, in your opinion, for three beds?—It was not. In a fourth bed-chamber I found another officer, with a servant of the house, also not a keeper. In a fifth bed-chamber, I found two officers and two other persons, not keepers: in a sixth bed-chamber, I found two officers and two other persons: in a seventh, I found one officer, and four others not belonging to the Navy: in an eighth, one officer, in a small bed by himself: in a ninth bed-room, I found three officers, one of whom was totally insensible to the calls of nature, and slept in a double cradle with an officer who was cleanly in his habits. I found three officers in a tenth apartment, containing pauper patients; a private seaman slept in a double cradle with one of those officers. In an eleventh apartment I found three officers: and in a twelfth one officer: in a thirteenth I found two officers, a captain and a surgeon of the Navy; the surgeon is uncommonly slovenly in his person, so dirty indeed that he was discarded from the officers' sitting-room; the captain appeared to me to be in a very critical state of health, much emaciated, and unless some sudden alteration should take place, he cannot live many months; the result, I conceive of confinement and improper management.

Are any number of these patients chained down?—Not any, but several are under personal restraint.

Are there other instances than the one you have already mentioned, of persons answering the calls of nature insensibly?—None among the officers, with the exception of that particular one.

In any or all of the bed-chambers you have now described, have you been struck with any smell offensive to you, so as to render the air unfit for respiration?—I have ever considered them as being crowded, so as to contaminate the air, and render it unfit for respiration.

Do you know how many servants are allowed for the attendance upon these fourteen, who are in one sitting-room?—One keeper or servant.

Have those patients no other assistance, either for dressing or any other purpose?—No other assistance whatever; it was stated to me by the superintendent, yesterday, that there was an additional servant, but that he had to attend other sitting-rooms; I conceive such an attendance utterly inadequate to the duties required, in keeping them clean and comfortable, and in rendering them every other assistance necessary to men in their unhappy situation.

How many keepers are you of opinion should be allowed?—I have thought that one keeper to every ten patients would not be too many; it is necessary that their clothes should be taken off, their hair combed, and their skin washed: From the want of such attentions, one is going with his stockings down; another with his breeches unbuttoned; and in this way their clothes are destroyed, without considering what is due to decency and propriety.

Had you an opportunity of examining their food, and do you conceive it proper for persons in their situation?—I saw them at dinner; and as usual, they dined off beef and potatoes; to which diet they are in a great measure confined. This want of variety in their meals must, I think, be extremely disagreeable and unpleasant to the officers. The above has been so nearly invariably their food, that in the course of my visits for the last twelve or thirteen years, I have found but three or four exceptions. The superintendent informed me, as he had frequently done before, that he occasionally varies their food, by giving them mutton, veal, and sometimes pancakes.

Has it been much your practice to see the patients at their dinner?—Yes; I have gone frequently at dinner-time, and in general I have seen them dining on beef, that has been good in quality.

Have they had other vegetables than potatoes?—Not as I recollect: the meat has been sufficient in quantity; the bread excellent; and the beer good.

Do you conceive the diet to be fit for persons in their situation? I think it is of too stimulating and nutritious a nature, and more calculated to increase than to retard the progress of insanity.

Do the naval patients in this house receive medical treatment for the cure of their insanity?—None whatever.

For what time have any of them been in that house?—Some of them have been there fourteen years, to whom a single grain of medicine has never been administered for the cure of their insanity.

Are you of opinion that a reasonable chance in some of those cases would be afforded, if a course of proper medicines had been applied, and a judicious mode of treatment adopted?—I am most decidedly of that opinion.

Is it not to your knowledge the practice of other Insane houses to administer medicine to their patients?—I am not correctly informed of the general practice, but having gone to Bethlem, and requested to see a journal of the medical treatment of such of the Naval Maniacs as had been admitted into that Hospital for the cure of insanity, I was informed by Mr. Haslam the apothecary, the physician and surgeon not being in the Hospital, that no such journal had been deemed necessary, and that a long established system of treatment was pursued, which consisted simply in bleeding and purging freely in the spring months. This he said had been found beneficial, and from long custom, was now adopted as a standing regulation in the institution. This statement of Mr. Haslam's was afterwards confirmed by Dr. Monro, the physician of Bethlem.

Do you conceive medical treatment to be important in the cure of insanity?—I conceive medical treatment to be of the greatest importance, from a conviction that mental disease invariably proceeds from corporeal derangement of the system; and that when it is practicable to remove the cause by medicine, the effect will instantly disappear. Upon this principle, I am of opinion, that in young subjects, when the disorder has not been of long standing, it may be completely eradicated by a judicious use of medicine, assisted by other co-operating means, such as watching narrowly the paroxysms and intermissions of the disease, adopting a proper regimen, separating the tranquil and orderly patients from those of an opposite description, having recourse to setons, fissures, and the warm bath; and lastly, but above all, correcting the general habit of the Maniacs.

Did you understand this practice to apply to every patient indiscriminately?—Yes.

Are the patients who are most violent, mixed with those who are more calm and tranquil?—Both frantic and mild cases are mixed indiscriminately.

Are you not of opinion that placing the frantic and placid patients in the same apartment, is likely to retard the recovery of the latter?—It is cruel and improper in the extreme, and must retard the progress of recovery.

Do you know what the expense of boarding, lodging, and accommodating the naval officers at Hoxton is?—One pound four shillings and four-pence per week, exclusive of the charge of clothing. This on a superficial view, may be deemed reasonable enough; but when we come to consider the inadequacy of accommodation, and the uncomfortable treatment they experience, and more particularly when we contrast this with the very superior advantages they would enjoy at a Naval Hospital, it will not only appear that the charge is high, but that the money is misapplied.

Do you know the number of the private seamen and marines that are in this house?—136, of whom two were at the time of my visit yesterday confined to their beds from indisposition, and several chained down to the form they were sitting upon in one of the day-rooms, another was in a state of idiotism, and the remaining 127 were either in the sitting-rooms or in the airing-ground.

What was the nature of the complaints which confined the patients to their beds?—One of the patients I found shut up in an apartment upon the ground-floor, appropriated for the reception of ten wet patients. This poor object was exceedingly dirty, much emaciated from an affection of the chest; and had a wooden bowl before him with a few dirty potatoes in it;—but was without drink, medicine, or an individual creature to give him the smallest assistance; the floor, although apparently clean, was moist, and emitted a stench, so as not only to render it offensive to the senses, but extremely obnoxious to patients in the very vigour of life. I asked him, where is your meat; and the keeper immediately said, he has ate the meat; I said, I do not think this man could eat a pound or half a pound of meat. The poor man was so weak, he could not give me an answer; it was only a few days before that he was walking about: the disease was proceeding rapidly. The plank was so wet, I could have written upon it. Nine other persons slept in this room. The poor man was perfectly calm and tranquil, but so weak, he could not get out of his bed; the floor was quite red with the effect of the urine. The other patient confined to his bed was lame in his feet, and subject to epileptic fits. A few weeks since, in company with Dr. Veitch, I found this man totally insensible from a severe attack of his disorder; he was lying in his crib without medicine, without attendance, and without any sick necessary, but with a lump of beef and his allowance of bread remaining untouched at the head of his bed.

In what condition did you find the bed-rooms of the seamen?—I found them, as usual, close, crowded, unventilated, and evidently hurtful to health, more particularly one of them, intended for the accommodation of ten wet patients; this also was, in respect of stench and moisture, nearly on a similar footing with the one I have already mentioned.

Were the seamen classed according to the frantic or mild forms of the disease?—Although there are now three sitting-rooms, they are still permitted to mix indiscriminately. Those patients who are in a state of idiotism, and consequently insensible to the calls of nature, are, as well as the dangerous patients who are chained down, confined the whole of the day in the sitting-rooms with the other patients, to the no small annoyance of the latter.

What are the dimensions of the bed-rooms, and what is the number of persons who sleep in each?—The greater part of the seamen and marines are accommodated in bed-rooms, that contain from one to three patients. Such bed-rooms as contain three patients, are nine feet nine inches in length, six feet nine inches in breadth, and eight feet in height. The bed-rooms that contain either one or two patients, are allowed nearly the same proportional space as those that accommodate three. In each of the apartments for the ten wet patients, they sleep in cradles, having no beds, but blankets and loose straw. Upon the whole, all of them in the most uncomfortable way in which men can possibly be accommodated.

What is the breadth of the passage into which the sleeping-rooms open?—Its greatest breadth, which comprehends about one third of its length, is five feet eight inches, when it narrows to two feet eleven inches. There is another apartment in a distinct building, which contains twenty maniacs in eight double cradles and two bedsteads; sixteen patients in double cradles, and four in the bedsteads.

Is it your opinion, that if the patients in general were allowed to sleep in hospital cradles, it would materially tend to their recovery, and greatly contribute to their comfort?—Very much so indeed.

What are the dimensions of the cribs?—two feet two inches and a half broad, and six feet two inches long; there are some smaller cribs, five feet ten inches in length, and one foot eleven inches in breadth. What with the narrowness of the blankets and sheets, the scantiness of the bed and bolster, and the cramped form of the present bed-place, it forms altogether one of the most uncomfortable places for sleeping I ever saw. These circumstances, added to the patients being too much crowded, render the accommodation in the sleeping-rooms extremely defective, and very inferior to that in His Majesty's Naval Hospitals.

For what reason do you suppose this species of bed is selected by Messrs. Miles?—Because a greater number can be stowed in a less space: there are, I believe, nearly one hundred men in the second story of the building.

What difference of room would the use of the hospital cradle require?—An hospital cradle, I should think, would require a double space.

Are you not of opinion that inconveniences of a very disagreeable nature may arise from two males sleeping together?—I am.

How many patients sleep two in a bed?—Twelve.

How are the bed-rooms ventilated, aired, and lighted?—By a small square window in the side of the building, unglazed, and another small one above the door.

That window and door are unglazed during the whole year?—Yes, constantly unglazed; when the weather is very cold, they have a blind, a kind of scuttle, which they shut.

Do you consider the bed-rooms as sufficiently ventilated?—By no means; it is impossible in so small a space. I have observed particularly in damp weather, in my visitations, that not only the bed-rooms, but the passage that runs between them, were completely damp: I believe they are washed every morning, and unless the weather is very dry and warm, they are seldom dry till the evening; and in wet winter weather they are seldom or never dry during the twenty-four hours.

Is there any method of drying them by means of stoves, that would give warmth in winter?—There is; I have recommended fires for that purpose.

Your hints upon that subject have not been taken?—Nothing has been done. I have further recommended, a great number of times, to the superintendent, that during the winter months, in wet weather, the whole of the passages and bed-rooms should be regularly and constantly cleaned with hot dry sand.

Do you believe that advice to have been followed?—It has not.

How many sitting-rooms are there for the common seamen?—There are three sitting-rooms, two of them built partly within the area of the airing ground and partly without it, immediately opposite the long building already spoken of. Two of those are 26 feet long, 16 feet 5 inches broad, and 10 feet high. They are separated from each other by a thin brick wall at the bottom, in the middle of which is a fire-place, calculated to diffuse heat to both apartments. A third sitting-room has lately been added, nearly of the same size and description, only with a set of fixed tables in it. In the room I first described, there are three windows, in the second two, and in the latter two of a moderate size; they have been considerably enlarged since my Report; the floors are boarded, and there is a form in each room placed round the wall for the men to sit on. Those apartments constitute the eating as well as the sitting rooms; but as the patients are allowed no tables, except in the additional apartment, and as their provisions are served out to them without any kind of method, it is impossible to conceive a more uncivilized appearance than they exhibit at their meals. I confess that it may be impracticable to bring men, who are totally deprived of their reason, into a proper state of order or regularity; but still, those whose mental faculties are only partially affected (and they form seven-eighths of the whole) should, I conceive, be treated in a more rational and creditable manner. Here, as in the sitting-rooms appropriated to the officers, the maniacs are mixed indiscriminately together. This is a distressing circumstance to those who are labouring under the disorder in its mild form, not only from their nerves being very irritable, and in consequence likely to be greatly agitated by the violent and clamorous conduct of the furious patients; but from the air being rendered unfit for respiration, by the insufferable effluvia proceeding from such of the latter as are insensible to the calls of nature, by the crowded state of the apartments, and by the want of ventilation.

Do you consider the size and ventilation of these rooms to be sufficient for the accommodation of the persons confined there?—By no means; it would require six times more space to accommodate them properly, or perhaps ten times more.

What are the dimensions of the airing ground?—The old airing ground is about 70 feet in length and about 60 feet in breadth; since my report an airing ground has been added to the other, nearly of the same extent.

Those two airing grounds are united?—Yes; the wall has been taken down, and the area is now double.

Is there any piazza or covering affording shelter in wet weather?—Since my report, a colonnade, 70 feet in length and 10 feet in breadth, has been annexed to the long building, constituting one side of the area.

What is the expense to the public of the private seamen?—Fifteen shillings per week the first four weeks, and afterwards half a guinea per week.

Have the private seamen any medical treatment?—They have no medical treatment for their insane complaint at Hoxton; but they are sent in their turn to Bethlem, where they have medical attendance. For corporeal disease they have. In what I have before mentioned, as to the officers wanting medical treatment, I alluded to their mental disease.

Are you satisfied with the manner of the medical attendants to their corporeal complaints at Hoxton?—I am by no means satisfied.

In your visits have you found the seamen fully and properly clothed?—I have found them sufficiently clothed.

Have you any reason to suppose that the keepers make any perquisite of their clothes?—There certainly was such a practice; whether it continues I cannot positively say.

You have mentioned patients being sent from Miles's to Bethlem, where they meet with medical treatment for their mental complaints; have you ever known persons sent from Miles's to confinement in Bethlem, when in your own opinion they ought to have been discharged?—On intimating my intentions to the superintendent of discharging a particular patient to the Batavia Hospital Ship at Woolwich on trial, he has frequently objected to the measure, on the plea that Mr. Haslam did not think him sufficiently recovered, and in several instances the same individual patient was afterwards sent to Bethlem.

Have you found any alteration in this respect since your Report of November 1812?—I have found a very great alteration; I have met with no difficulties or opposition at all in discharging the patients; since Mr. Watts, the superintendent, invariably proposes to me, when he conceives a patient is sufficiently recovered to be discharged; and the consequence is, that I recommend him to the Board, who direct Messrs. Miles and Company to discharge him into the Batavia hospital ship on trial.

Do you, in the common course of things, know what becomes of those patients who are sent from Miles's to Bethlem, for the sake of medical treatment, on account of their insanity?—When a patient is removed from Hoxton to Bethlem, he remains twelve months, unless he should recover before, in which last case he is sent to the Transport Office; but if not cured at the expiration of that period, and if his mental malady should not be of a dangerous description, so as to render it necessary for him to be retained there as an incurable for the remainder of his life, he is returned to Hoxton, where he continues.

Who determines that?—I presume the medical officers of Bethlem.

Did any thing particular occur when you visited Hoxton yesterday?—The Superintendent, when he found I was about to make various enquiries into the Institution, as far as respected the Naval lunatics, informed me, that as Sir Jonathan Miles was from home, and as the whole of the concern was under Trustees; he did not conceive himself authorized to allow me to make those enquiries. I then stated to him, as I had hitherto been in the habit invariably of making every enquiry respecting the seamen and marines, without meeting with any opposition from him, I could not see how in any manner he could object to my doing so now. He still remonstrated against it, as also did a Quaker who was in the same apartment, and who appeared to be employed as a clerk on behalf of the Trustees. I then informed him that I was authorized by the House of Commons to come to that Institution to make the enquiries I proposed; they then consented to my proceeding to make those enquiries.

Did they not know you to be the Inspector of Naval Hospitals, and properly authorized by the Transport Board to superintend the Naval maniacs?—They did.

What pretence then did they offer for refusing you admittance to perform your duty?—They said that as the concerns of Sir Jonathan were under Trustees, they did not consider themselves authorized to do so.

After having admitted you, did they make any apology for this refusal?—No, no apology.

Veneris, 5^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

DR. JOHN WEIR again called in, and further Examined.

WHAT number of Naval maniacs are there at present in Bethlem?—Seventeen.

How many officers and seamen have died at Hoxton during the last twelve months?—Eleven out of 136.

Do you consider eleven deaths out of the officers and seamen, during the above period, a great mortality?—I do.

To what cause do you attribute this great mortality?—Chiefly to the want of due attention being paid to cleanliness, ventilation, and dryness in the different buildings and apartments in which the patients are lodged, and to a neglect of cleanliness in their persons: these I conceive to be the very soul and life of health.

Is any return immediately made to you of the deaths of the parties?—Yes, when I go there; but Mr. Watts generally reports their deaths to the Transport Board.

Can you state the total expenses incurred for one year, for the management of Naval maniacs at Hoxton?—In the year 1811, the expenses for board, lodging, clothing, and general medical attendance for Naval maniacs, amounted to 5,028*l.* 15*s.*; about this period there were 14 officers and 126 seamen.

What is your opinion as to the present system of managing insane patients throughout the kingdom, as far as your observation and experience have gone?—From the gross mismanagement and abuses that have and still continue to exist at Hoxton, under the immediate inspection of the present Commissioners for regulating Maniacal Institutions, I am fully satisfied that nothing less than a newly constituted establishment will ever be sufficient to correct the abuses that have crept in universally, both at the public and private Institutions; and to place at the same time those long neglected and pitiable objects on such a footing as to insure their future comfort, as far as is consistent with their respective maladies.

What form of constitution do you think would be the most eligible to effect these important objects?—In my opinion, the power of regulating Maniacal Institutions should be vested in a Board composed of three members, but under the control of the Secretary of State, or some other public Department; the first member should be an able active civilian, the second of the law, and the third a physician; the latter I conceive to be essentially necessary, as all the patients in both public and private institutions should in future be allowed medical treatment for their malady; the members of the Board should be allowed fixed salaries, but the whole of their attention should be directed to the different duties of their official situation, and they should be required to visit all Insane Institutions, whether of a public or private nature, in the Metropolis and its vicinity, and in particular urgent cases, and such as are at a more remote distance, and to report the result of such visitations to the Department under which they are placed. They should likewise correspond with and control every Insane Institution throughout the kingdom.

Have you any reason to believe that Mr. Haslam, the apothecary at Bethlem, has any personal interest in Sir Jonathan Miles's establishment at Hoxton?—From the difficulties I have met with in discharging the men, from observing Mr. Haslam favourable towards the side of Sir Jonathan Miles and Company, and from having seen him occasionally in the house, and extremely familiar with the Superintendent, I am inclined to believe there may be some understanding subsisting between them.

Have you ever been offered presents at Sir Jonathan Miles's?—Soon after I began to be employed in making visitations at Hoxton, fish and game, perhaps two or three times, were sent from Messrs. Miles to me; I desired that in future they would never send any thing of the kind to me again, or I should return it.

Would you not, at Hoxton, and in all other public Institutions, strongly recommend that all the beds to be used by men, when made, should be thrown open, and kept so, till they are used?—Most certainly.

Would not insane persons derive great advantage from the use of a pump within their reach?—Certainly.

Would you not recommend that a pump should be placed in every airing yard?—Certainly.

Doctor JAMES VEITCH called in, and Examined.

WHAT situation do you hold?—I am a Graduate of Edinburgh, and a Staff Surgeon in the Navy.

How long have you been in the habit of visiting Messrs. Miles's house at Hoxton?—Between three and four months; generally once every week, with two exceptions, I believe.

What is your opinion of the accommodation afforded to the maniacal officers and seamen in that Institution?—I conceive the accommodation exceedingly bad; very ill calculated to give that bodily and mental relief, which is so essentially necessary for the comfort and recovery of insane people.

Can you state any particulars?—The sitting apartment is by far too small for the number of officers; the rooms in which they sleep are crowded; some of them contain three, and others four beds; they are much too small for that number, and there is not proper attention paid to classification throughout the whole establishment.

Is the space allowed for exercise adequate to the necessity?—Entirely inadequate, both for officers and seamen; I conceive exercise to be of the utmost importance in the cure, and in affording relief to patients in that disorder.

You speak of the airing-ground in the enlarged state in which it now is?—I do; I think it is still entirely inadequate.

Are the violent and the passive maniacs kept separate, or are they together?—They are blended together.

What is your opinion as to the impropriety of that?—I conceive it highly injurious that they should be both mingled; they should be classed, certainly, according to the form of their complaint.

Have you had opportunities of observing whether inconveniences have arisen from mixing those who are insensible to the calls of nature with other patients?—Certainly: it is the character of that institution not to separate those patients, and I know it to be the fact: on visiting Hoxton on Wednesday last, I found one of the sleeping-rooms in which a patient lay extremely depressed by disease, emaciated and filthy, highly offensive indeed; the boards were soaked with urine, or some moist substance; but from the excessive smell of urine, I naturally inferred it was from that cause; he was actually locked in and without an attendant, and I saw neither drink nor medicine; he had a bowl with some potatoes in it; I saw nothing like medical attention or nursing.

Would you not recommend that, in all public Institutions for insane persons, all the beds to be used by men, when made, should be thrown open, and kept so till they are used?—Certainly: I think it of much utility.

Do you not apprehend that, in all these cases, a pump supplied with good water, in each yard, would contribute to the health and comfort of the patients?—Certainly; any thing which contributes to cleanliness, to amusement, and to occupation, must be useful.

On your visit to the house at Hoxton, what society did you find the Captain of the Navy in, who is stated to be there?—I found him in the same apartment with a person who was stated to be a tanner; and I also found a Marine officer very improperly associated with a Greenwich pensioner and some parish paupers; an officer sleeping in the same room with servants of the house who were not keepers, and a man they stated to be a baker.

In what situation did you find the sleeping-rooms?—I found the cabins generally contained three maniacs, into a space, certainly, in point of dimensions, very inadequate to the purpose; their cribs were, I think, about the breadth of two feet two inches and a half, and six feet two inches and a half long; there was a smaller set of cribs about six feet in length, certainly constituting very uncomfortable places to sleep in, and must, particularly during the summer months, aggravate their complaints.

Whether you have not observed that frequently two lie in the same bed?—Yes.

In how many instances did you find two men in the same bed at Hoxton?—There were six beds with two men in each.

Were these seamen?—They were seamen or mariners; I am clearly of opinion that the practice of allowing them to be so closely associated during the periods of sleep, is injurious to health and to morals; as it is of the utmost importance in the cure of maniacs to maintain their bodily health, as well as to avoid such consequences as have been before alluded to.

Whether, on visiting the bed-rooms, you have been occasionally struck by offensive smells in them?—On visiting the bed-rooms of the officers, and the cabins of the seamen, I have not been struck with any offensive smells, such as actual stench, but the sleeping cabins of the seamen were close and musty; and, on the third instant, on visiting an apartment in which there was the sick maniac I have already alluded to in my evidence, the smell and nature of the apartment was utterly unfit for a human being to reside in, in any shape: the adjoining apartment was in the same state, and was capable of containing a similar number of patients.

Were the floors in these two cases wet?—They had been attempted to be dried up; but from the smell and the appearance, they were soaked with urine.

Whether you have not seen at Hoxton, frequently, a strait waistcoat in use?—Yes, as well as handcuffs, and men chained down to the benches.

Whether you do not think that the close confinement of the upper joints of the arms would render the patients incapable of doing mischief?—I conceive that in the general number of cases, such a restraint is all that will be required.

Whether, in most cases of insanity, the confinement of the upper joints of the arms would not render the patients incapable of doing mischief?—In a great majority of cases, it is all that would be required.

In the course of your visits, have you ever happened to witness an interment of any kind?—Never.

Is it your opinion, from the observations you have made as to the mode of inspection practised by the medical Commissioners, that a change in the system is absolutely necessary?—From my observations and opinions already detailed as to the state of Hoxton, I do think that a change is essentially necessary.

Do you mean a complete change?—A radical change.

What is your opinion as to the efficacy of medicine in the cure of mental disease?—I conceive that in recent cases, and those unconnected with organic læsion of the brain, mal-conformation of the skull, and hereditary disposition to insanity, that medical treatment is of the utmost importance.

MARTHA WALL and MARGARET SLATER, Searchers, of the Parish of St. Leonard, Shoreditch, were called in, and Examined.

To Martha Wall.]—WHAT duty have you to perform?—When we go to search, that is, to view the bodies that are deceased; to the best of our judgment, we are sworn to give a true report to the parish clerk.

Of every person who dies in the parish?—Yes.

And you do, wherever you hear of a person dying, call at the house to view the body?—Yes.

And are you always admitted to see it?—Yes: if we are not admitted, we endeavour to find out where it is removed to, if it has been removed without our knowledge.

If the body has been removed without your knowledge, you endeavour to find where it is?—Yes.

In the parish or out?—Yes, in or out of the parish.

If it has been buried before you hear of it, you proceed no further?—We proceed as far as to make a report to the magistrate, whom we are sworn before, to see the corpse; but one great mischief is, that, in the dissenting grounds, they bury them without a certificate; were there to be certificates granted to those grounds, we should be able to follow them much further than we do.

Are there many burying-grounds which do not belong to any religious place of worship?—Yes; if they bury at one parish church, they must come to the parish clerk, where the party has died, for a certificate.

If you are satisfied with the appearance of the corpse, you proceed no further?—Yes: without particular grounds for it.

Do you make a report to the parish clerk, whether there is any thing particular or not?—Yes, in all cases, the disorder of which the person has died, is represented to the parish clerk.

Is Sir Jonathan Miles's Madhouse within your parish?—Yes.

Are you called upon, when lunatics die there, to view the bodies?—Yes: none pass there without our seeing them, to our knowledge; and I believe, of late years, they have been very particular.

You see all the bodies that die there, you think?—Yes.

Where are they put?—There is a place put apart for them to be removed to, where we see them.

Have you any reason to believe any lunatics have died, whose corpse you have not seen?—Not to our knowledge; we have had them brought back.

You have no reason to suspect that you do not see them all?—No.

Have you any account of the number that have died there?—We could make out an account of all of them.

Martis, 9^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

DR. JOHN WEIR again called in, and further Examined.

DO you know if every naval maniac who dies at Hoxton, is examined by the searchers of the parish, previous to the body being interred?—I have been informed by the superintendent, that the searchers of the parish examine every naval maniac that dies at Hoxton, previous to the body being sent to the undertaker.

When a naval maniac dies, where is the body deposited?—On the death of a patient, the body is washed, put into a shell, and placed in the dead house, where it is secured by a lock and key.

Do you know what expense is incurred by the public, for burying a naval lunatic officer and seaman?—the undertaker informed me, it was done by contract, and that for a seaman, the sum amounted to 1*l.* 15*s.* and for an officer, 5*l.* 5*s.*

Where are the officers and seamen buried?—The undertaker informed me that the seamen lunatics were buried in the pauper burying ground of Shoreditch, and the officers in Shoreditch churchyard.

What does the medical establishment at Bethlem consist of?—It consists of one physician, one surgeon, and one apothecary.

What is the average number of patients they have to attend?—The number is in a continual state of fluctuation, arising from receiving and discharging, and also from the death of patients.

When you visited Bethlem in 1812, what was the number of patients then in it?—One hundred and forty-eight.

Have you visited it since?—Not to make any particular enquiry, but merely to see one or two naval patients.

Have you not visited the naval patients that were in Bethlem, since you made your Report in 1812?—No, I have not visited them regularly; if a common seaman in Bethlem applies to his friends to be removed, the Transport Board send to me, and I visit that patient, but I am not permitted to visit generally.

Do you consider the medical establishment at Bethlem, fully adequate to the treatment of 148 patients?—I am of opinion that the present medical establishment is insufficient, even if they were to pay a strict and exclusive attention to the 148 patients committed to their charge; but that is not the case, for they attend at Bridewell likewise, and the physician and surgeon are in private practice, the former extensively so, and the apothecary lives at Islington; so it should seem probable that the Hospital is frequently left without any medical assistant at it, in case of emergency.

What is your opinion as to the medical treatment of naval patients received at Bethlem?—From the indiscriminate system of bleeding and purging in the spring months, which I have already adverted to; from having observed patients lying perfectly naked and covered up in straw; from their mixing the mild and frantic patients together, and others being unnecessarily loaded with chains; I am of opinion both that the medical treatment is injudicious, and that uncalled-for severity is practised towards them: however requisite it may be to impose a restraint on, and to inspire maniacs with a dread of their keepers, it will appear but reasonable that the mildest possible methods should be adopted for the accomplishment of those objects.

With a view that due attention and justice should be done to the medical treatment of each individual patient, what extension of medical establishment do you conceive would be necessary in Bethlem?—It appears to me that such an extensive field as this Hospital presents for improvement in the treatment of insanity, should be duly cultivated for this purpose; the various cases should be considered: and the result of the practice in each, carefully inserted in a journal to be kept for that purpose: From this, the most important practical knowledge might be communicated to the medical profession in general; to effect this great object, I am of opinion, there should be three or four physicians, and a proportionate number of surgeons and other medical attendants attached to them, the same as at other public Hospitals.

Do you think it would be advisable to separate Bethlem and Bridewell Hospitals, into two distinct medical establishments?—As the medical treatment of insanity has hitherto been much overlooked, or at least enveloped in mystery, with a view therefore to extend medical enquiry into the nature of this malady, and the more successful treatment of it, I am of opinion it would be a wise measure to separate them.

How often do the Commissioners for Lunatics, visit the naval maniacs at Messrs. Miles and Co. Hoxton?—I have been informed by Mr. Watts the superintendent, once in six months.

Do you know, if at each visitation, their enquiries are directed to the medical treatment of either the mental or corporeal diseases of the naval maniacs?—I have very lately been informed by the Superintendent, that they make no enquiry whatever into either the corporeal or mental diseases of the naval maniacs at Hoxton.

As the Commissioners for Lunatics, on their different visitations to Hoxton, make no kind of enquiry into the medical treatment of naval maniacs, either as to their corporeal or mental diseases, do you conceive medical men alone competent to perform such visitations?—I have been informed by the superintendent of the Institution, that the enquiries of the Commissioners for Lunatics, on their different visitations to Hoxton, are chiefly directed to the lodging, victualling, and general accommodation of the patients, to see that none but such as are afflicted with insanity, have been received into the Institution, and that none are retained in it after being sufficiently recovered to be discharged: From the above outline of duty, I conceive medical discrimination is not necessary, and that any other description of intelligent men are competent to perform such visitations.

As there appear to be a great variety of sentiments prevailing, even amongst the most enlightened class of men, as to the management of insane people, to what cause do you attribute this difference of opinion?—I attribute this difference of opinion chiefly to the want of practical observation, as it is only by comparison that we are enabled to appreciate the superiority of one institution over another; until within the last eighteen years, the primary object of almost every insane institution, whether of a public or private description, has been the security of those pitiable objects; comfort, medical and moral treatment, have been in a great measure overlooked; happily however for that class of society, the Quakers' Retreat at York has at last convinced the world how much may be done towards the amelioration of their condition.

Veneris, 12^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Doctor JOHN WEIR again called in, and further Examined.

YOU have generally stated an opinion that the establishment for Naval Maniacs at Hoxton was radically defective; will you be pleased, for the convenience of the Committee, to reduce your observations on this head into as succinct a form as possible?—I consider the establishment for Naval Lunatics at Hoxton, as having been and as still being radically defective, owing to the total want of medical and moral treatment for the mental disease; to the want of proper medical treatment for the corporeal diseases of both officers and seamen; to the want of proper day-rooms; to the want of separate bed-rooms for both officers and seamen; to the want of some change in the diet of the latter; to the want of a gallery in which the officers may exercise themselves in bad weather; to the want of a proper gallery for the seamen, for the same purpose; to the want of sufficient airing ground for both officers and seamen; to the want of classification according to the mild or frantic character of the disease, both as it respects officers and seamen; to the want of proper menial attendance, not only to keep both officers and seamen clean and comfortable, as far as the circumstance of their respective cases will admit, but also, under circumstances of increased excitement, to diminish the necessity of personal restraint; to the want of order and decency in the seamen at their meals; and to the want of a sick room and proper nursing for such officers and seamen as may be confined to their beds, either through mental or corporeal disease. These appear to me to be among the principal radical defects in the present mode of managing the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton.

On your different visitations to Hoxton, you have mentioned that you have frequently seen the apothecary; do you mean that you have found him there in the execution of his duty, or were you obliged to send for him in order to see him?—In all cases, whenever I had occasion to see him, I was obliged to send for him, otherwise I never saw him.

Were you satisfied with the medical treatment of the patients?—On the contrary, I was very much dissatisfied.

What were your usual hours of attendance there?—In general from twelve to two, but I have visited the Institution at almost all hours.

Are you of opinion that if the apothecary had been attentive in the discharge of his duty, you probably would have found him there in the course of your frequent visits?—I do think so.

Sabbati, 13^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Dr. JAMES VEITCH again called in, and further Examined.

WHAT do you conceive to be the principal defects in the treatment and care of the officers, seamen, and marines, in His Majesty's Navy, who are in the house of Sir Jonathan Miles, at Hoxton?—On the most deliberate reflection upon a subject highly interesting to that description of people, my opinion is, that the sitting-room of the officers is too small; their mode of accommodation during the night, that of three and four sleeping in the same bed-room, is also highly objectionable; the cribs and cabins, appropriated for the seamen to sleep in, are crowded, ill-ventilated, and often damp; and I have already described, on a former examination, two sleeping-rooms, with a sick patient in one of them, found in a condition utterly unfit for the habitation of a human being in any state; there is a want of attention in the application of medical and moral as well as menial resources. As I have never seen the apothecary but when sent for by Dr. Weir, and there are no means taken to employ judiciously the body, or to direct the mind to its healthy course, a great proportion of those Maniacs, in my judgment, might be rendered useful. The same character of diet is too indiscriminately applied to all forms and varieties of this most afflicting disease; and I am assuredly correct in stating, that it contains too much animal food; it ought to consist more of farinaceous aliment. With a view to rendering an institution for the reception of Lunatics useful to the fullest extent, the patients should not only be classed according to the character of their diseases, but the important consideration of mental and corporeal action, as a means of cure, should never be lost sight of. The patients, where there is a probability of cure, should be visited daily by a medical man; not looked at, but individually spoken to and conversed with, in order to arrive at a knowledge of the particular character of insanity they labour under, and the impressions acting upon them from time to time, such inquiry being necessary to successful result in the treatment of this disease. The physician who would prescribe to bodily diseases without a history of symptoms and causes, as far as they could be traced, would soon lose his reputation and his practice; and such inquiry is no less necessary in the endless varieties of Maniacal disease: the ferocious, the imbecile, the melancholy, the convalescent, the clean, and the unclean, are all blended together. All is chaos and confusion, and decidedly exhibiting a want of proper system in the treatment of men whose sufferings give them a strong claim to attention from the benevolence, humanity, and generosity of their country, in whose service their diseases have been contracted.

In the course of your examination of places where Insane persons are confined, are you of opinion that sufficient attention has been paid to the state of their mental derangement, as distinguished from their physical complaints?—From the knowledge I have of such places, I am of opinion that sufficient attention has not been directed either to their mental or corporeal complaints. They have been often consigned to neglect and empirical routine.

Jovis, 18^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Dr. JOHN WEIR again called in, and Examined.

HAVE you visited the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton, since your last attendance on the Committee?—I have.

Did you observe any alterations in the Naval Department of the Establishment?—Since my last visitation, a small distinct airing-ground has been formed for the accommodation of the officers, who were before indiscriminately mixed in a general airing-ground, with other Maniacs, many of them of a low class; besides this, there has been some white-washing; and, with a view to ventilation, the doors of the wet apartments have been latticed. On this occasion I was accompanied as usual by Dr.

Veitch, when, to my great surprise, I was informed by Sir Jonathan Miles, that the Doctor, though a Navy Surgeon, could not be allowed to visit the patients any longer with me. I should here remark, that Dr. Veitch has never interfered, directly or indirectly, with the management of the patients, or any thing belonging to the Establishment.

Mercurii, 24^a die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

The following Letter was laid before the Committee, by the Chairman, and read.

“ Sir,

“ London, May 23d, 1815.

“ HAVING, in my Report of the 3d of November, 1812, submitted to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and to the Commissioners for Transports, &c. my opinion as to the management of such Naval patients and Prisoners of War as are admitted into the house of Messrs. Miles and Co. at Hoxton, for the cure of Insanity; and having expressly stated that I considered this Establishment as radically defective, inasmuch that no alterations or improvements, in its present constitution, could render it an eligible receptacle for Naval Maniacs; I proceeded to suggest, that, on the principle of humanity, it was expedient to erect a Lunatic Asylum in the vicinity of Haslar, not merely on account of its central situation, and the facility it would afford to the reception of patients from on ship-board, but also from the consideration that the medical and other departments of the latter would be fully adequate to its management. I observed that it should be built at such a distance from the Hospital as to preclude the possibility of the patients there being disturbed by the noise of the frantic Maniacs; at the same time, that there should be such an immediate communication with it, that the latter might be attended, victualled, and clothed, nearly in the same manner as if they were in the Hospital itself.

“ In addition to the above suggestion, and to the evidence I have since advanced before your Committee, with a view to substantiate the policy of the measure; I now beg to enclose a more detailed statement of the advantages which would result from such a plan; humbly beseeching the Committee to take it into their serious consideration, and provided it should “ meet their approbation to recommend its adoption, and to “ cause it to be inserted in their minutes.

“ I am, Sir,

“ Your most humble Servant,
“ J. WEIR.”

“ Right Hon. George Rose,
“ &c. &c. &c.”

Suggestions for the erection of a NAVAL LUNATIC Asylum in the Vicinity of Haslar Hospital.

“ BY such an arrangement, the Naval Maniacs would be “ immediately placed under the superintendence of the Governor
“ and Lieutenants of the Hospital; they would receive from the “ physicians and surgeons of the Establishment, the best physical “ and surgical treatment, both for their insane and corporeal “ diseases; every means would be taken as to the moral treat“ ment or management of the patients, to bring the mind from “ its unhappy bias, by bodily exercise, walks, conversation, “ reading, writing, and other innocent recreations; the mild, “ frantick, idiotick, and convalescent patients would be dis“ tinctly separated from each other, both in the day-rooms, “ galleries, colonnades, and airing-grounds. By means of the “ extensive airing-grounds proposed to be formed for the dif“ ferent classes of patients, they would have the advantage of “ pure air, more space to range in, and a greater variety of “ objects to amuse their minds and improve their general health.
“ Proper commodious day-rooms would be fitted up for the ac“ commodation of twelve or fifteen patients, whose insane com“ plaints might be of a similar description; and the rooms would “ be heated by steam and lighted by gas, with a view to prevent “ the damage of fire being communicated to the building; each “ of the patients, whether officer or seaman, would be allowed
“ a separate and distinct bed-room, so as to prevent them from “ being exposed to any unnatural propensity, to which the disease “ might otherwise incline them; the different classes of patients “ would be allowed galleries and colonnades to exercise in “ during bad weather, which would contribute both to their “ comfort and to the preservation of their health. The patients “ would be allowed proper menial attendance, not only for the “ purpose of keeping them as clean and comfortable as their “ respective cases would admit, but such as would also, in a “ great measure, supersede the necessity of personal restraint.
“ The diet for officers simply under mental disease, with the “ exception of diminishing the quantity of animal food and small “ beer, would be varied, as in the case of persons of their rank

“ in common health. And as to the seamen simply under “ mental disease, with a like exception of diminishing the quan“ tity of animal food and small beer, their diet would be varied
“ according to the usage of Greenwich Hospital. As the latter “ would be provided with tables, forms, and spoons, their meals
“ would be served out to them in a more decent and creditable “ way. Under corporeal disease both officers and seamen would “ be put on a scale of diet agreeably to the standing regulation “ of Naval Hospitals. The vicinity of Haslar Hospital to the “ Asylum would be highly advantageous, from its central situa“ tion, and the facility it would afford to the receiving of patients
“ from His Majesty’s ships at Portsmouth, from the Royal “ Marine Infirmary, and from the Depôts of Prisoners of War
“ at Forton and Porchester; but more particularly from the “ consideration that the Medical, as well as the other Depart“ ments of Haslar, would be fully adequate to the management “ of the intended Asylum, both in peace and in war, without “ any additional expense to the Public. The great expense in “ conveying Naval Maniacs from Naval Hospitals, Marine In“ firmaries, and Prison Hospitals, in different parts of the king“ dom, in a stage-coach, or covered cart, attended by a proper “ person as a guard, to the Transport Office, when they are “ immediately put into a hackney-coach and sent to Hoxton,
“ and after this removed backwards and forwards to Bethlem and
“ the Batavia Hospital Ship at Woolwich, would, in a great “ measure, be done away. In the case of an officer or seaman “ being afflicted with any severe corporeal disease, he would be “ provided with a comfortable sick-room, detached from the “ rest of the patients, and be allowed proper nursing attend“ ance. As the clothing and victualling of the patients would “ be done by contract, under the superintendence of the Go“ vernor and Lieutenants of the Hospital, a considerable saving
“ would be made to the Public; and this also applies to funeral “ expenses of the patients. Such of the patients as are in a “ calm tranquil state of mind would have the privilege of attend“ ing, with their respective keepers, divine worship, on Sunday,
“ in Haslar Chapel. And lastly, it is both my decided opinion,
“ and that of a great number of enlightened medical men, that “ incalculable advantages would be derived from proper medical “ treatment, such as would be afforded to these miserable objects
“ by the establishment of the Asylum in question. In this man“ ner the mental disease would be in many instances cured, and “ a proportionate number of estimable individuals restored to “ their friends and society.”

Dr. JOHN WEIR again called in, and further Examined.

DID you send a copy of your Report on the management of the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton, dated 3d November, 1812, to the Transport Board, previous to your having sent it to the Admiralty?—I did: on or about the 3d of November, 1812, I sent the original copy of that Report to Doctor Harness, the Medical Commissioner of the Transport Board; who, in consequence of directions from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, had made a recent inquiry into the general management of the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton; but it was not until the 18th of April, 1813, that I sent a copy of it to the Admiralty.

What were your motives for sending a copy of that Report to the Admiralty?—On or about the 18th April, 1813, I learned that the Commissioners for Transports, &c. had, in consequence of Dr. Harness's late enquiry into the management of the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton, proposed to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty certain suggestions for ameliorating their condition; but as they did not extend to the patient being removed from Hoxton, I was desirous of communicating to their Lordships my sentiments on the subject.

How long had you attended the Naval maniacs at Hoxton previous to November 1812?—I have attended altogether about thirteen years; about eleven years previous to that Report.

What was the state of that house, in your opinion, altogether, previous to November 1812, as to the management of the maniacs?—Very bad; a great deal worse than it is at present: I think it has been in a progressive state of improvement ever since I attended it. I found the patients very badly managed at first.

Were your remonstrances attended to in the early years, previous to November 1812?—All complaints made by me to the Transport Board were in general attended to.

In what did the improvements principally consist?—Particularly in cleanliness in the apartments, and in the cleanliness of their persons; and altogether in every thing there seemed to be an improvement, the building excepted; in that there was no alteration.

Is it possible to form any correct notion of what that house was when you first knew it, from the state in which it appears now?—I cannot positively say: the time is so long, and the alteration has been so progressive, that it is impossible I can charge my memory with the particulars; but I may say, that I believe I have been the only person that has regularly visited the Institution from the Naval Medical department; it was originally attached to the Sick and Hurt Office, now to the Transport Board.

The remarks you made to the Transport Board in 1812 are alluded to, as if that was the first representation you had made upon the subject to the Transport Board?—I had occasionally made different Reports on abuses that existed, previous to that time; but not in such a detailed statement as I did in my general Report in 1812.

Was the house at Hoxton in a better state in 1812 than it had been during the former periods of your visiting it?—Yes, I think it certainly was, in conformity with what I have already stated; it certainly had been in a state of occasional improvement; I do not mean of rapid improvement.

Have you been there since the day that you examined it by the instruction of this Committee?—Yes; the last visitation I made to Hoxton, I reported to the Committee certain alterations which had been made, particularly as to the wall and the airing ground.

Did you see any alteration in the state of cleanliness, and any classification of the patients, or any separation of the clean from the dirty?—No, I saw no alteration of the classification, nor a separation of the clean from the dirty; my enquiries did not extend to the officers sleeping in their bed-rooms.

Did you enquire the last time you were there, whether six persons slept in double beds?—No.

From whom had you that information?—Mr. Watts, the superintendent, told me so; but I know it to be a notorious fact; he has told me invariably, that is the case.

When the Committee visited Hoxton yesterday, they found the patient to whom you have alluded in your former evidence, who was ill of a consumption, in a tolerably comfortable situation; is he in the same situation now, as he was when you first found him?—No, he is not. In consequence of my remonstrance to the superintendent, he was immediately removed to a drier and higher situation; at the same time, his present situation is totally unfit for a person in the state in which he is; he has no proper regular attendance, nor any fire; there is only another maniac to attend him: there are only three menial servants to attend 136 patients, and one of them cannot be spared to attend this man.

When you were last there, you saw this man?—I did.

In the former instance, when you saw him, he was ill dieted?—Yes; he had nothing but potatoes, and he was locked up; he is now in an apartment where eight patients sleep in four beds; that is still a very improper place for a person in his situation.

Do you think that he is now fed as he ought to be, considering the state of his health?—By no means; one of the great defects in that house is, that there is no proper attention to the sick.

Is he not visited by the apothecary?—I suppose he is occasionally; I enquired what had been done for him the last time I was there, and was told there had been a powder given him on Sunday morning, and that he was to have another powder to-day: he had not seen him on that day.

When you say, that his diet was improper, do you speak from actual knowledge of what his diet is, or from a supposition that it is the same as to other Lunatics?—I speak from information I have received of the superintendent, as to his particular case.

What was the diet that the superintendent told you he received?—It consisted chiefly in different preparations of milk.

Do you apprehend, that it is impossible that the sick in such a house as Miles's, can be attended with propriety, unless there be some portion of the house set aside as a kind of Infirmary?—In my opinion it is impossible, unless a sick room is appropriated for the specific purpose.

Do you think that the want of proper accommodation for the Naval Maniacs, proceeds principally from the great number assembled in one place, and that in the house of an individual?—I think that the mismanagement of the Naval Maniacs in general, as I have already said, proceeds from the want of proper day-rooms, proper bed-rooms, proper airing-grounds, and proper classification; and in all those respects, the Institution is defective; and likewise from the want of proper attendance.

Do you think that it would be probable, that any individual undertaking such a charge, could procure space, ten or even six times larger than that now occupied for the reception of the Naval Maniacs?—I cannot say that: I should conceive it is difficult in the neighbourhood of London; but I am of opinion the Naval patients ought to have five or six acres.

What number of Naval Maniacs, including prisoners of war, was the greatest you ever knew at one time?—I do not know that they ever exceeded the present number, 136 seamen: there were nineteen or twenty prisoners of war who have been discharged; but on the ships coming home, about an equal number of deranged seamen have been received; when all the Navy are paid off, it may extend perhaps, to 150 or 160.

Are you not of opinion, that the appointment of additional attendants upon the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton, would materially lessen the personal restraint imposed upon the patients?—I am most decidedly of opinion, that if they had more attendants, there would be less necessity for personal restraint.

Are there any Naval Maniacs there, who have lost their senses on account of wounds in the service?—I know of none.

Martis, 30^a die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

MR. JAMES BIRCH SHARPE called in, and Examined.

YOU are a Member of the College of Surgeons, residing at Hoxton?—Yes.

Do you practice as Surgeon and Apothecary?—I do.

How long have you attended the house of Sir Jonathan Miles at Hoxton?—Five years, up to the first of last March.

In what capacity?—As Surgeon and Apothecary; generally styled Surgeon.

What is your age?—I am twenty-six.

What have you conceived to be your duty?—To attend to all lunatics within that place, who may be indisposed at any time; any who may be in a bad state of health.

Has the duty required of you by Sir Jonathan Miles, or the keeper of the house, been to attend solely to their corporeal ailments, or to pay any attention to their mental disorders?—I never understood I was to pay any attention to their mental disorders; merely to their corporeal complaints.

Do you apprehend that any good effect might have arisen from attention to their mental ailment?—Undoubtedly so.

But no such attention has been expected from you?—Certainl not.

What have been the hours of your attendance?—Till within a month or two, or perhaps three months, I was required to attend daily, by eleven in the morning, but now I am required to attend daily, by ten o'clock.

Did you frequently meet Doctor Weir?—No; I have frequently seen him, but never could get a meeting but twice, and that was by application.

What was the reason that you were not to be seen when Doctor Weir attended the house?—Because Doctor Weir came always at one o'clock, or thereabouts, consequently I was never there at that time, unless by accident, which did once occur.

Were you always ready to attend him?—I have always expressed a desire, if he should wish it at any time; and I may state that it has been put to him, whether he would wish to see me, but he has uniformly refused.

Did you ever meet the Medical Commissioners when they visited the house?—I have seen them there, but never expressly met them; I never was required to meet them, and when I have seen them, they never put to me any questions concerning the state of the patients, or their medical treatment in any particular, which to me was matter of surprize.

Did you conceive it your business to attend to the cleanliness, order, or management of the patients in any way?—It never was required of me till very lately, by Sir Jonathan Miles; but if I saw any thing that I thought in the least improper, I made a point of mentioning it; I always took that upon myself.

What time do you mean, by very lately?—Six months or more.

To whom did you mention it?—To the managers, Mr. John Watts, and Mr. Griffiths, and lately, to Sir Jonathan Miles.

Were those representations attended to?—Always.

How many patients were there generally upon the whole establishment?—I never could accurately tell; I have conceived them to be 600; I have always rated them, I believe, at more than they have absolutely been; I have frequently thought there must have been 600 in that house.

Have you ever had among those, any number of patients in a state of most violent and outrageous insanity?—A great many.

Persons who were considered to be dangerous to their keepers?—Certainly; there are many at this time under such circumstances.

What mode of confinement is adopted to secure such persons from doing mischief?—Different modes.

State them?—To the men in particular, handcuffs and chains to the leg, and to both legs, and also a chain from the handcuffs, to a chain passing between their legs, at their ancles, called bazils: that is the course when they are up; also when they are in bed, their arms, one or both, are put through a large ring in their crib, before the handcuffs are put on; and I have seen in some instances, where the man was very strong, and very violent, also a chain, from the chain of the bazil to the foot of the crib.

How long a time was it usual for such patients, to be confined in the manner you have represented?—Generally on their going to bed, which, I believe, is about seven or eight o'clock, or may be a little earlier; the most violent, I believe, are put to bed first; they are kept in that state till they get up in the morning, which is six or seven o'clock.

Did you ever know the most violent patient, and from whom the greatest mischief was to be apprehended, chained down in his bed for any length of time together?—At no other times, except when either it was necessary for me to attend them under particular circumstances, or at their sleeping hours.

Under such circumstances of necessary surgical attendance, what was the longest time that you can recollect such patient ever to have been so confined?—I believe there was a condemned lunatic, as they term it, a man sent from Newgate who had murdered his wife; he had an inflammation, and a formation of matter on one arm; he was determined to destroy himself; it was almost impossible so to confine him as to keep the poultice on his arm, and the necessary application; and I think he was under such confinement as I have described, for three, four or five weeks; sometimes the restraint was greater; and if he seemed the least better, he was immediately relieved to a certain extent; that was a very particular case, and it was a matter of great difficulty to do the man any service.

When the confinement was no longer required, on account of the medical treatment of his arm, was the man continued in it for the safety of the keepers, or other persons about the house?—No; he was so weak after this illness, that when he got out of the illness, no chain or fastening was put upon his hands, and the man seemed much more composed, and more rational.

Then you have never known, in any other case than that, a patient chained down to his bed for more than one or two days?—I have never known a man chained to his bed during the day, unless there was a necessity for my attending him for some particular purpose; I have only known them so confined when they were sent to their bed, at night.

Do you recollect a patient of the name of Captain Evans?—Yes, I know him perfectly well.

Do you know in what apartment he is confined?—Yes, on Mr. Griffiths's side.

Do you know how long he has been in that room?—No; but some months.

Was the apartment in which he was confined, before his removal into that room, as good and convenient for his situation?—The first time I saw him was in that room; I believe he was not in that house, till he was placed in that room.

Do you interfere at all with the diet of the patients?—If I see it necessary.

Do you know whether wine or beer, or other fermented liquors are allowed as part of it?—When I order it, it is always given.

Does it form any part of their diet?—Beer does, in their regular diet; that I believe is small beer.

Do you know whether wine is allowed to them as matter of indulgence?—No, I cannot say that it is to my knowledge.

How long has Sir Jonathan Miles himself, been personally engaged in the superintendence of the house?—I cannot say exactly; I have seen him very busily employed about the house of late, that is, I think, the latter end of last year, and the whole of this, but not before. I cannot say as to what share he may take in the management of it.

Do you think that any alteration to the advantage of the patients, has taken place since his personal attendance?—No, I do not know of any.

What is your opinion generally as to the propriety of the treatment of the patients, during the five years you have been accustomed to attend, as to diet, cleanliness, exercise, coercion, and moral treatment?—As far as diet, cleanliness, and exercise may go, I can find no fault whatever; I think it has been correct and fair; but with respect to coercion and moral treatment, I can say nothing upon that point, because I have not seen any thing at all done with an intent to cure the insane person; with respect to coercion, it has generally been from motives of safety and personal prudence.

Is not that treatment more directed to the safe confinement than to the recovery of the patient?—Undoubtedly.

The species of coercion which you have already described, you conceive to have been perfectly sufficient to provide for the safety of the keeper and the other patients, even against the most violent attempts of the most outrageous maniacs?—Yes, though notwithstanding I have seen men break through a great deal of restraint; their handcuffs have been frequently broken, and their chains have been snapped; and they have even got their hands out of the handcuffs.

What is the general rule of the house, with respect to using force, or striking any of the persons confined?—Striking a patient they consider as an undue force, and therefore if any keeper should strike a patient, he is instantly discharged; I believe I have known two instances during my attendance there, in which a keeper struck a patient in each instance but once, and he was discharged either that night or the next morning.

Are you of opinion, that your inspection of the house was such, as that if any person had been so ill treated by the keepers, it must have come to your knowledge?—Certainly; as far as I have been able to see.

Have you never observed upon any of the patients, such marks as induced you to suppose they might have been beaten?—Yes, I have frequently seen bruises, and I have then enquired into it; but I have found such bruises to have arisen from falls, or from injury that they have done to themselves in struggling against the restraint.

You mean that on examination, your own mind has been convinced, that the bruises have resulted from such causes, and not from the ill treatment of the keepers?—Yes.

Do you recollect a patient of the name of Wilson?—I do.

Do you recollect any circumstance respecting that gentleman, which induces you to suppose he had been ill treated in the way alluded to?—No; he had, I perfectly well remember, a cut over one of his eyes, which I was desired to attend to; I cannot say whether I was not sent for in consequence of the circumstance; if my memory serves me, it was in consequence of a fall in the garden; I remember the circumstance perfectly well; I have an idea there was also a cut in his lip.

In the course of your attendance, have you had much opportunity for observation on the conduct of the keepers?—Yes, I have.

What is your opinion of them?—I consider that they have not acted improperly, but I believe it has only been owing to a fear of being turned away; they are of a class of beings not likely to act from very fine feelings; in a general point of view, I think their conduct has been fair.

From your observation on the superintendents, do you think that they would themselves be guilty of any violence towards any of the patients, or that they would permit it to be used by any of the subordinate keepers?—Certainly not; the very contrary, so far as I have seen.

Do you consider yourself as having the care of the naval lunatics?—Not entirely.

Of course, any that are ill in the intervals between the visits of Dr. Weir, come within your care?—Certainly; in fact I never understood that Dr. Weir had authority to order, or to attend, in case of bodily disease.

Do you remember the case of a person who is ill of a consumption, who has lately been removed out of the situation in which he had been kept, into a better apartment?—I understand that Dr. Weir made a report respecting a man of the name of Blake; he was removed out of what is called the straw room, to a room where several others sleep.

What was the state of the patient when he was confined in that room?—He was ill at that time, and he was in a weak state; he had fever, but he had not pulmonary consumption.

Do you think that the situation in which he was then placed, was one that was suited to his state of health?—I did; in fact he was there, I believe, if not exactly by my orders, at least by my consent; for I saw him every day in that room.

What was the state of the room; was not the room tainted with the smell of urine, and the floor stained red with it?—It is stained with urine, and it has a smell at the first part; but I believe towards the close of the day, that very much goes off; but from what I have seen, it is impossible to get it out of the boards, though I know the room is washed every morning, because I have been exceedingly particular about this room.

Do not you think a mode might be contrived, by which the urine might be carried off from under the bed, without tainting the floor?—To some of the cribs they have a drawer lined with lead.

Does that answer the purpose?—I cannot say accurately, because it is in a room where there are others not so furnished, consequently I cannot judge of the effect of it.

Do you believe that a construction of that kind would answer the effect of carrying off the urine?—To a certain extent, but not if the floor of the crib was made of wood; it might be managed, but not easily, I think.

That person has now a better apartment?—He is now dead; he died on Sunday morning.

He was removed into a better apartment?—He was removed certainly into a more comfortable apartment; but at the time he was lying in that lower apartment, he had had a diarrhoea upon him; and in fact he has been offensive the greater part of the time that he has been in that better room, insomuch that if he had lived long, I should have removed him into a room by himself.

Do not you think that an establishment in the nature of an infirmary, is necessary for persons whose bodily health is affected?—The room in which Blake was, was adapted to that purpose; there was a fire-place made in it: but there were never enough to occupy it as such; and in most cases a separate room is required.

What was your reason for not considering him in such a state as that it was fit for him to be removed from the place where he was first found by Doctor Weir?—Because he was a dirty patient, exceedingly so.

Is it the practice there, if patients are dirty, to keep them in such a place as that in which this patient was confined?—To sleep them in such a room.

So that if a person is unable to move out of his bed, he may lie in such a place as that in which Doctor Weir found this man, Blake, for days, or weeks, or months?—If the disease continues upon him.

Any disease that confines him to his bed?—No, certainly not; if he is really in the ordinary way a dirty patient, by having a stool a day, he would not remain in such a room, because I have such patients removed generally into a little room by themselves, as there are a number of such rooms in the gallery.

Is it a practice in the house, for persons who are insensible to the calls of nature to be placed in the same day-room with those who are not in that situation?—No, they are removed into a room where there are others in such situation, if there should be any others; if not, they remain in a room by themselves.

Are not all the rooms of the lunatic seamen open, so that the whole of the patients can go backwards and forwards into such room as they think fit?—No, certainly not; because those patients who are dirty, are generally kept in a room by themselves; among the seamen, where there are those who cannot answer to the calls of nature, they are generally placed in a part of a large room. I have answered the question particularly as to the officers, with respect to the seamen, it is not strictly attended to.

Will you take upon yourself to assert distinctly, that in no instance an officer in that lamentable situation, insensible to the calls of nature, has been placed in a room where other officers were, not so insensible to the calls of nature?—To the best of my knowledge they never have, during my attendance.

If you found them in that situation, you would have mentioned it?—I should have instantly ordered a removal.

Have you ever known an instance of a clean patient being put into a room with a number of dirty ones?—No.

Do you know whether all the patients have single beds?—No, I cannot answer to that.

Do you know the reverse?—I do not.

Do you not know the reverse in the case of pauper patients?—No, I have never seen two in one bed.

Neither male nor female?—Never; I was never but once in a part where the female patients sleep of a night; I was then called to an accident, and I cannot say that I saw two in any bed.

In the room in which Blake was confined, how many patients slept?—I do not know how many; there were several.

Were there not eight?—Very likely more than eight.

How many beds were there?—That I cannot say.

Do you think there are more than four?—I think there are more than eight; there are three wooden cribs and some beds on castors.

Will you take upon yourself to say that those eight persons do not sleep in four beds in that very room?—In that very room I may certainly say so.

Do you know that at this moment six persons sleep in double beds in that house?—No, I do not.

Had Mr. Watts any communication with you upon that subject?—Yes, he has mentioned it to me, and I observed to him such a thing would be improper; he also said it was improper, and that he never allowed it himself; but there are rooms where there are but two, and three beds.

Will you take upon yourself to say that Mr. Watts, in expressing to you his observations upon the practice, stated that it had not taken place in his house?—I cannot charge myself as to that fact; I cannot say that he said it had never taken place; but he said that it was exceedingly improper, and he would not allow it.

You cannot inform the Committee, at present, whether such a practice existed last night in the house?—I cannot say that such a fact existed last night, or at any time, but I can say that I believe it is not the case.

What was the diet of Blake at the time he was confined in that lower room?—His diet was tea and bread and butter in the morning, or he might have had any thing else he would have taken; he had milk porridge, he had rice milk, he had not at that time porter at first, but he has had porter and broth in addition since.

Can you state that he has had it, or only that you have ordered it?—I have ordered it, and they have consented to it; I have not seen him take it.

The Committee have been informed, that when that man was seen by Doctor Weir, the room was locked, and there was a bowl by him in which there were a certain number of potatoes, and that upon Dr. Weir's asking as to the diet, the man said, he had ate his beef. Do you believe from the state in which he was that he was capable of eating beef, or that potatoes and beef were fit for him?—He certainly had not it by my order, and if he had it, it was very improper.

At the time referred to it is stated that he was very ill?—Then it was very improper indeed.

The patients have now the use of certain gardens as exercising grounds?—Yes.

How long has that been the practice?—The officers have for some little time back had the use of the garden; before, they used to walk in a yard; there is the addition of a large airing ground for the seamen.

Did you see Blake every day?—Yes, when he was ill, I saw him every day; when he got better, I saw him every other day.

What medicines did you principally give him, powders?—No, the diarrhœa was checked by two doses of calomel, which is my invariable remedy; I then ordered him a nutritious diet. Had the disorder continued, I should have sent him a mixture I am in the habit of giving there.

Are you acquainted with the fact, that at certain times of the year wine and ale are given to the patients?—Yes, I do know that fact certainly.

Are you consulted upon it?—No; I took the liberty of observing once, and that was the last time it was given, I think it was about Christmas, when they gave every patient a drop of ale, that it was very improper.

They did it in the first instance without consulting you?—In every instance; if they had consulted with me, I should have said positively that it was improper.

Do not you believe that the patients, generally speaking, have more exercise and air than they used to have?—They have better air, and of course they have more exercise, for the grounds are larger. I believe the same regulations are now acted up to, and the yards are larger. I always lamented that I have not more management over the lunatic seamen, and that it was not in my power to attend to their insanity; it may appear very strange that I have these feelings, and have not taken any notice of it. I did think once of writing to the Transport Board: but conceiving that the consequence might be prejudicial to me, I declined interfering.

Have you any appointment under Government?—No, only under Sir Jonathan Miles.

Have you ever dissected the body of any one who has died at Hoxton?—I have never been permitted to make an anatomical examination of those lunatics who have died there; I have wished to do it, but they have objected to it; that people would consider their house was a house of experiment, and merely to cut up bodies. I think if examinations, in all cases, were to take place, the greatest benefits would accrue from such examinations.

What do the Commissioners do when they visit the house of Sir Jonathan Miles?—They pass through most of the rooms, and look over most of the patients, and look to the certificates.

Do they compare the certificates with the patients who have been admitted?—They do not; that is to say, they do not take a certificate and then look for patient A. and see whether it is proper or not.

By whom are you paid?—I am paid by Sir Jonathan Miles.

Do you consider such a plan proper in regard to the Government patients?—I think it opens a field to undue influence, and cannot ensure proper attendance; and this, without any reference to the class or character of the patient; for these two reasons, that if he is paid generally for his attendance, he may not do all that is necessary; and if he is paid individually for so many patients, he may absolutely do too much, in order to make out a bill.

Martis, 6^o die Junii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Doctor JOHN WEIR, again called in, and Examined.

WHEN did you last visit the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton?—
On the 31st of May last.

Did you find any alterations as to the accommodation and management of the patients, since your former visit?—I found that several of the officers had been removed from their old bed-rooms into others of a better description. I likewise found Lieutenant M'Dougal, of the marines, removed from his day-room, where he had a Greenwich pensioner as his inmate, into another, in which there were naval officers only; indeed of late there has been a continued succession of changes with a view to improve the establishment.

Did you observe any fresh cause of complaint in the treatment and management of the patients?—In one of the seamen's bed-rooms, containing three cribs, I found a patient lying in one of them, with a large foul ulcer on his leg, having a poultice applied to it; the bandage was stiff and offensive, and appeared as if it had not been washed for several days. I have to remark here, that whatever has been the description or character of any wound or sore in any of the patients, poultices have invariably been applied, and these renewed and regulated by one of the three menial servants.

Can you inform the Committee what has become of the hectic patient, whose death, on your former examination, you stated to be probable?—John Blake, the patient in question, died on the 28th ultimo; and I have reason to think that his death was accelerated by the damp situation, and by the want of proper medicine and nursing attendance.

Do you wish to add any thing to the former evidence you have given?—When I was a member of the Sick and Hurt Board, I made verbal reports only; but since I have been appointed Inspector of Naval Hospitals, I have in general sent in to the Transport Board a written report; and I have from time to time, for the information of the Transport Board, given a detail of the abuses and defects in the management of Naval Maniacs at Hoxton, as represented in my Report to the Admiralty, in the year 1812: But as the radical defects in the management of the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton were thoroughly known to the Medical Commissioners and other members of the Transport Board, I confined myself, in my reports, to the mention of such abuses and improprieties as were of a temporary nature, and which I conceived to require prompt correction. In all minor concerns, I found that my application to the superintendent on the spot had a much better effect in remedying the evil complained of, than by representing it to the Transport Board. In the Enquiry instituted by the Board of Admiralty on the Naval Lunatics at Hoxton, in the year 1812, besides Doctor Harness the Medical Commissioner, the honourable Captain Boyle, another member of the Board, and Mr. Houseman, deputy secretary, were present. I did at that meeting, point out to them on the spot, those radical defects which I stated in my report on the management of Naval Maniacs at Hoxton, in 1812; and did, at the same time, without reserve, represent to them the expediency of removing the patients from Hoxton to the vicinity of Haslar.

What length of time intervened betwixt this enquiry and the communication of your report to the Board of Admiralty?—About six months. On my last visit I found that Mr. Thompson, a master in the navy, has within these last few days been sent from Hoxton house to the Batavia Hospital ship in a state of derangement, without my having reported to the Transport Board his being in a state fit for removal; and also a seaman.

Is it customary to send persons from the house at Hoxton to the Batavia transport, without your report?—Seldom or never, when I have been upon the spot.

How do you know that Mr. Thompson the master was in a state of derangement?—Because I had examined him from time to time; and the surgeon of the Batavia told me yesterday, that he was mad, and that he did not know what to do with him.

Doctor JOHN HARNESS called in, and Examined.

HOW long have you been in the habit of visiting the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton?—Occasionally as a Commissioner for Sick and Wounded Seamen, from the year 1800 to 1806; less frequently from that time to the present, as a Commissioner of the Transport Board, by reason of the appointment of Inspectors of Hospitals.

Have the Naval Maniacs been regularly visited by any other medical person, during the above periods?—They were occasionally visited by other Commissioners for Sick and Wounded Seamen, previously to 1806, but from that time have been regularly visited by Doctor Weir, as Inspector of Hospitals, when not employed on more distant service. I have brought with me the Report of a visitation by Doctor Blair, in 1798.

[The same was delivered in, and read, as follows:]

Report of Doctor Blair's Visitation to the house of Messrs. Miles and Kaye at Hoxton, on the 5th of October 1798:

“ Visited the house at Hoxton of Messrs. Miles and Kaye for “ the reception of Lunatics, and examined the provisions, accom“ modations, and general state of the patients; the bread, beef, “ cheese and beer, were all remarkably good, and the patients “ whom I examined, among whom were four of the men who “ lately made their escape, declared, that they had them in plenty.
“ The accommodations were also very clean and well aired, and “ they have sufficient airing-ground for walking in the open air;

“ in which last respect these accommodations have greatly the “ advantage of Bethlem Hospital.

“ The principal defect in institutions of this kind arises from “ the convalescent patients not being separated from those in a “ deranged state. If such separation could be made, and the “ convalescents were to have an opportunity of inspecting the re“ gulations of the house, and particularly that which requires a “ continuance of their confinement for some time after an appa“ rent return of reason, in order to guard against the consequences “ of relapses; and if in this state they were also allowed to lay “ their complaints freely before the Board (which at present is “ not suffered in any case) I do not see in what further respect
“ the situation of persons in their unfortunate circumstances “ could be materially improved.

“ R. Blair.”

Is the control of the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton immediately vested in the medical department of the Transport Office?—No; it is under the College of Physicians, but there is under the medical department of the Transport Office a medical inspector, whose duty it is to examine and report whatever may appear to him to require remedy.

Do you conceive the Naval Maniacs to be better managed now than they were on your first visiting them?—I do.

To what cause do you attribute the improvement?—Partly perhaps to the attention of the proprietor of the Establishment, but chiefly to the attention paid by the Board to every suggestion for improvement.

Can you state to the Committee in what those improvements have consisted?—They have much greater space than they had at former periods.

Do you mean by greater space, that they have greater accommodation in their airing-ground, in their day-rooms, and in their bed-rooms, than they had at a former period?—They have.

Greater, in proportion to their numbers, than they had at the time of Doctor Blair's report in 1798?—I cannot speak to that; their numbers were very small in 1798; the buildings are very much enlarged, much more attention is paid to their clothing, they are not so loose as they were, and those in the habit of rending their clothes are confined in strait-waistcoats.

Is there more room in the airing-ground?—I do not know that; it is larger in proportion to the number. I am sure that the officers do not lie so many together as they used to do, they are more separated; that I consider is a great improvement.

Used the officers to lie in the same bed?—They have been pointed out to me as lying in the same bed; they now lie singly.

Do you mean to say, that since the report of 1812, every officer and seaman in Mr. Miles's house at Hoxton has had greater accommodation in his bed-room, and in the day-rooms and the airing-grounds, than he had formerly?—They certainly have, in their bed room, sitting room, and in the accommodation to defend them from wet.

So that you would consider the state of the officers and seamen in the year 1812, as being better than it was in 1798, and in the year 1815 as being better than what it was in the year 1812?—They are bettered in proportion as their buildings and places have been enlarged.

Generally speaking, the Committee are to understand that the accommodation of the officers and seamen at those periods above-mentioned, is better than it was at prior periods?—They have ever been so well accommodated, I never could find any fault at the times I attended; there were so few, there appeared to be perfect room for the patients. Since their numbers have increased so much, they have required more space, and they have erected piazzas and various accommodations.

Do you mean to say, that in the various examinations you have made at Hoxton, you never found any fault?—I do not recollect that ever I did.

Do you recollect Captain Evans there?—I do.

Do you think he was accommodated as a person in his rank ought to have been?—He was accommodated as well as the Institution would admit.

Did you find, in your different visitations there, that either officers or seamen slept two together in a bed?—I never saw them so sleeping; but I understood that they were placed two in a bed; but my visitations were very seldom. On the death of Doctor Johnson, I was Chairman of the Sick and Wounded Board; and then the visitations immediately fell to Doctor Weir, and he has constantly attended since that time.

When you were told that persons slept two in a bed, did you consider that a circumstance for which fault was not to be found?—If the accommodations would admit of more; but they were very large beds.

If the accommodations could have admitted more, should you have thought two Maniacs ought to be put together in the same bed?—Certainly, I should not if the accommodations would admit of more.

At that period there were fewer persons than there are now?—At the time I visited, there certainly were.

Did you make any remonstrances to Mr. Miles upon that subject? I do not know that I did, for I thought the beds were sufficiently ample; they were not enraged patients.

Then of course, considering the beds were sufficiently ample, you did not conceive there was any thing to be apprehended from two male patients sleeping together in the same bed; your objection being, of course, to the size of the beds, and not to their so sleeping together?—Perhaps there were four or five beds in a room, never less than two or three.

The Committee is to understand you do not object to two Maniacs sleeping together in the same bed, if the bed is large enough to hold them?—I certainly would not put them into one bed, if I could accommodate them with two.

If there was room for large beds of the ample size of which you speak, do you not conceive there would have been ample room for two smaller beds to contain a single patient each?—Yes, I think that very probable.

Do you not think that must be the case?—That would depend upon the space between the beds; not knowing the dimensions of the rooms it is impossible for me to answer that question; if a considerable space was not allowed between them there might be two beds; but at our Hospitals we allow two feet.

When you visited Mr. Miles's Establishment, and found there was nothing to find fault with; did you observe that the clean and the unclean, the riotous, the furious, and the quiet patients were all mixed together?—I have seen them in the airing grounds, but those who were extremely violent were generally moved; I have gone to the confined place to see those that were secured: a surgeon of the name of Pitt, I recollect, who was violent, was removed in consequence of his violence.

In consequence of your representation?—No; he had been removed when I went.

You never saw a furious person in the same room with one who was more quiet?—Yes, I have certainly, fastened to a chain.

Insensible to the calls of nature, and dirty?—Never; I have always found them clean. I have seen a man in a strait-waistcoat fastened in a chair.

Did you then remonstrate against that patient being confined in that room with other persons who were more placid?—He was in a state of fatuity rather than violence.

Then would he not be insensible to the calls of nature?—He certainly was.

Did you not object to a person insensible to the calls of nature, being in the same room with those who were not?—I certainly would point out the impropriety of such a measure, but if the Institution would not allow of additional room it could not be amended.

The Committee have understood you to say, that in the different visitations you have made to Mr. Miles's at Hoxton, you never saw any thing to find fault with; do you not think the improper classification of the patients; the mixture of those in a state of fatuity with persons possessing in a stronger degree their reason, the violent with the quiet, and the dirty with the clean, a most improper mode of keeping such patients, and as such fit for your representation as a visitor, in order that a better mode of treatment might be adopted?—I certainly never saw in my visitations such a thing, that I did not immediately mention to Miles; he would say, Sir, that person is so confined, he can do no injury to any one; and as to the inconvenience attending it, there is a person always in readiness to clear away every thing.

How many servants were there at Miles's house at that time?—I do not know, indeed.

Did you feel it your duty to enquire into the number of servants, in proportion to the number of patients?—I considered that those patients were not under any care but that of the College of Physicians. I went to see whether their provisions were good, whether they were treated with tenderness, or whether they had any thing to complain of. I never considered it my duty to attend to them at all, it was a mere benevolent visitation.

Were you named by the Board to attend them?—They never directed me, it was an act of benevolence on my part to go. The College of Physicians had the direction of those persons when they were sent to those places.

The seamen were confined in Miles's house, from the year 1791?—Long before that.

There is a return laid before the Committee, purporting to be an account of the number of patients remaining at Hoxton-house on the 31st of December every year, since 1791; were you belonging to the Transport Office at that period?—No; I was appointed in January 1806; my duties would not allow my attending them, and Doctor Weir was appointed to visit them, from the same motives from which I visited them, motives of humanity.

Can you state to the Committee, who visited by order of the Board, the naval patients from 1791 to 1806, when Dr. Weir was appointed?—Doctor Johnson, who is now dead; Doctor Blane and Doctor Blair visited, but not by order of the Board.

You never visited yourself, by order of the Board?—No; we used to drop in occasionally, but we conceived that they were under the superintendence of the College of Physicians.

The Committee is to understand your visitations at Hoxton were from motives of benevolence, not conceiving it a part of your public duty?—Not at all; only one might suggest to another, Let us go and see how the naval patients are, and whether they want any thing.

Have you ever made any enquiry into the general management of the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton, by the direction of the Board of Admiralty?—I did, in conjunction with Commissioner Boyle, and Doctor Weir, towards the end of the year 1812.

Did you communicate the result of the enquiry to the Board of Admiralty?—It was communicated by the Transport Board.

Did Doctor Weir, who assisted you in this enquiry, furnish you with any remarks on the management of the Naval Maniacs at Hoxton?—He did.

Did the Transport Board send, with its Report to the Board of Admiralty, a copy of the remarks you received from Doctor Weir?—They did not, it being known by the Board that their Lordships had already been put in possession of those remarks by Doctor Weir himself.

Why was not Dr. Weir's Report transmitted to the Admiralty till six months after it had been delivered to the Transport Board?—My colleagues were absent from town, and it was necessary to have a certain number to form a Board, and it was thought proper not to take that matter into consideration until there was a full Board.

What was your opinion as to the general management of the naval patients, at the time you made this enquiry?—That the management was susceptible of improvement, as suggested in the Board's letter to the Admiralty of the 1st May 1813.

Did any of them, at that time, or at any other period, receive moral and medical treatment for their insane disease?—No other, I believe, than what the seamen experienced in their turn at Bethlem; and this gave rise to the Board's proposal to the Admiralty, that a medical man, accustomed to the diseases and habits of seamen, should be specially appointed to the care of them.

Did you find officers and seamen mixed indiscriminately, without any regard to the violent or mild form of the disease?—Officers were, in no cases that I observed, mixed with seamen; and I understood, that in the most violent state of their paroxysms they were kept apart from their respective classes.

Is it your opinion that such an indiscriminate mode of blending the patients must tend greatly to aggravate the disease, and retard the progress of recovery?—It is certainly desirable that the indiscriminate blending of the patients together should be avoided.

Are you of opinion that the bed-rooms, varying from six feet nine inches to five feet ten inches in breadth, and from nine feet nine inches to nine feet eleven inches in length, are sufficiently spacious for three bed-places and three patients to sleep in?—This space may be sufficient, if it be admitted that three patients may be in one cabin; but the Board's proposal to the Admiralty went to provide, that every man should have a cabin to himself not less than four feet by seven feet.

When sixteen or seventeen apartments, of the same dimensions, are only separated from each other by means of a wooden partition, and a passage which runs from two feet eleven inches to five feet eight inches in breadth, do you conceive if 51 patients are bolted in from nearly the setting to the rising of the sun, that the air, under such circumstances, must not be highly contaminated, and rendered unfit for the purposes of respiration?—The air would certainly be more contaminated if it were not in the power of the managers at Hoxton to afford at all times, when they shall judge it expedient, a thorough ventilation by means of the windows, which are left unglazed; but, even in its worst state, I think the air would be far more fit for the purposes of respiration than what all the patients have been accustomed to during their service at sea in the between decks of a ship.

Do you think that cribs or bed-places of the breadth of about two feet only, are sufficient for a man of full stature in which to bend his lower extremities, and to afford him space for comfortable repose?—These are the full dimensions allowed to officers of the army, on board of transports; but the men are allowed only eighteen inches; and on board of ships of war a seaman is allowed only fourteen inches.

Is it your opinion that when a patient is confined to his bed from corporeal disease, it is possible for him to receive such nursing attendance as is suitable to the nature of his complaint, from the two menial servants at Hoxton, whose duty it is to attend the whole of the 126 patients?—I do not; and with that view one of the stipulations, under which an increased allowance for the maintenance of Lunatics was submitted to the Admiralty, was, that a separate ward or apartment should be provided for the sick, with a proper number of nurses and attendants.

Do you think it proper to place a patient, labouring under corporeal disease, in a bed-room with other patients in bodily health?—I do not.

How many patients did you find sleeping two in a bed?—Some beds were pointed out to me in which two patients were to sleep; I do not, however, know the number; but the Board recommended that each man should have a cabin to himself.

At the time of your enquiry, by order of the Board of Admiralty, what number of officers and seamen were at Hoxton?—Sixteen officers, and 132 seamen.

How many menial servants had the officers to attend on them?—I do not know.

Doctor Weir states the number of officers at fourteen, who were mixed with six other patients, and had only one attendant for the whole; was this in your opinion a sufficient attendance?—The attendance did not, on the visitation in 1812, appear to be sufficient; and the Board, for the increased allowance which they submitted to the Admiralty, agreed that there should be a sitting-room for every ten officers, and one servant to each room.

Do you conceive a sitting-room, nineteen feet five inches in length, and fourteen feet in breadth, sufficient for the accommodation of twenty persons, chiefly of the above description?—Certainly not.

What menial attendants had the seamen?—I do not know what number of attendants they actually had.

What number of servants would, in your opinion, be sufficient to keep the patients and their apartments as clean and comfortable as their respective cases have required?—The Board required, upon the proposed advance of price before referred to, that there should be one attendant to every fourteen patients; and that is decidedly my opinion.

Were you ever present when the seamen were at their meals?—I do not remember that I ever was.

As the Lunatic officers at Hoxton, the old infirm seamen at Greenwich, and those who are sent to the Naval Hospitals for the cure of corporeal disease, are allowed chairs, forms, and tables at their meals; do you not conceive it would be more creditable to the Naval department of the Country, and the Government at large, to grant the Lunatic seamen a similar indulgence?—I think that every accommodation and indulgence, that may not be unsuitable to the nature of their malady, should be allowed to them.

At the time of your public enquiry at Hoxton, how many day-rooms had the seamen?—Two.

Did you conceive these rooms sufficiently large and commodious for accommodating the number of patients lodged in them?—They were not thought to afford sufficient space, the managers of the House were therefore required and did provide more space.

Were the officers allowed a distinct airing ground, or were they mixed with mechanics and people of an inferior description?—In the airing-ground with the officers there were other persons; but they could not have been from the very inferior stations of life, as persons of their description could not have paid the higher price for subsistence.

What were the dimensions of the airing-ground for the seamen, when you made your enquiry?—I did not ascertain the exact dimensions.

Supposing the number of them to have been 126, including the prisoners of war, as has been stated by Dr. Weir, it is your opinion that an area of 64 feet eight inches long, and 60 feet 8 inches broad, surrounded by a high wall on each side, was a sufficient space to enable them to take that degree of exercise which their bodily health required; and which would, in conjunction with other means, ultimately cure their insane malady?—The airing-ground did not appear to be sufficiently large; and therefore, one of the stipulations under which an additional price was recommended to the Admiralty, was, that a greater space should be allowed for airing-ground. I admit that exercise may contribute to bodily health, but I am not very sanguine in the expectation of a permanent cure for mental disease.

Did the airing-ground afford any piazza or covered way to shelter them in wet weather, or were there any forms or benches for them to sit upon?—The airing-ground did not afford any of those accommodations; but that a piazza should be made was one of the proposed stipulations.

Did the premises in which the naval patients were lodged, afford any thing like a gallery, for either the officers or seamen to exercise in during bad weather?—I did not observe any.

Do you think it proper for a captain in the navy to live with and eat at the same table with a mechanic or tradesman, or for a lieutenant of marines to live in the same apartment with a Greenwich pensioner or any other person of an inferior class of society?—I see no impropriety in a captain of the navy being associated under such circumstances with a respectable tradesman; but it certainly is not proper that officers should be associated with persons from the inferior classes of society. Considering, however, in what manner society is constituted in this country, and that the commissions in the army and navy are open to all, I fear some difficulty might be found in drawing a correct line in a private Institution like Hoxton, where the ability to pay commands appropriate accommodation, unless distinct apartments were allotted for the sole accommodation of naval officers.

Do you think it proper that four officers of different ranks should sleep in four beds in the same room, the foul and clean patients being indiscriminately mixed?—It appears, by my answer to a former question, that my opinion was, that every patient should have a cabin to himself; but if from necessity, four officer patients must be put into one room, I think the particular rank of each individual not of much importance.

Do you think it proper that servants belonging to the house, not keepers, should sleep in the same bed-room with officers of the navy?—When the safety of the patient requires that some person should sleep in the same room with him, it does not appear to me to be of much importance whether the person to whom the charge is committed acts as a keeper during the day or only during the night.

Have any alterations or improvements been made at Hoxton, for the comfort and amelioration of the condition of the Naval Maniac Patients since your enquiry in 1812?—Additional space has been allowed to the seamen patients, both in the sitting-room and in their airing-grounds.

How did it happen that such alterations and improvements were not made before that period, seeing that the abuses had subsisted so long?—Doctor Weir, who by his instructions is required to visit the patients weekly when in town, never reported the necessity for it. It is, however, to be observed, that since Doctor Weir's regular visits commenced in 1806, the number of patients has increased from 85 to 150.

What is your opinion as to the utility of medical treatment of Insanity?—Although much may be effected by medical treatment, I have before stated, that I am not sanguine in the expectation of a permanent advantage from it.

When you were a member of the Sick and Hurt Board, was there ever any proposal made, by you or your colleagues, to the Board of Admiralty, to get the Naval Maniacs removed from Hoxton to Deal Hospital or Bethlem?—No such proposal was at any time made by me; and I am not aware that the official records of the department furnish any proof of such a proposal having been made by either of my colleagues.

Would you recommend that the Naval Maniacs, confined at Hoxton, should be removed to Deal Hospital or Bethlem?—By no means; I consider such removal highly objectionable for various reasons, which are given in the letter of the Transport Board to the Admiralty.

Since Doctor Weir has been in the habit of visiting the Maniacs at Hoxton, has he ever expressed an anxious wish to have them removed to Bethlem, or placed upon a similar footing to that of the seamen and marines at Greenwich Hospitals, or in the Naval Hospitals and Marine Infirmaries?—In November 1812, Doctor Weir made some suggestions to that effect.

Has Doctor Weir taken repeated occasions to expostulate with you on the necessity and propriety of this measure?—Since the suggestions of Doctor Weir were received in 1812, I have had repeated conversations with him as to the expediency of this measure.

[A LETTER from Alexander M^cLeay, Esq. Secretary to the Transport Board, to the Right Honourable George Rose, dated 26 June, with Two Enclosures, were delivered in, and read; and are as follows :]

“ Sir,

“ Transport Office, 26 June, 1815.

“ It appearing by the Third Report of Evidence from the Committee of the House of Commons on Madhouses, that Dr. Weir, when examined before the Committee on the 6th instant, stated that Mr. Thompson, a Master in the Navy, had within the last few days been sent from Hoxton House to the Batavia Hospital Ship, in a state of derangement, without the Doctor's having reported to the Transport Board his being in a fit state for removal, and that he knew Mr. Thompson was in a state of derangement, because he had examined him from time to time; and the Surgeon of the Batavia had told him, on the preceding day, that he (the Master) was mad, and that he did not know what to do with him; I am directed by the Board to acquaint you that Mr. Thompson was removed from Hoxton, as usual in similar cases, upon the report of Sir Jonathan Miles, dated 17th of May, of which a copy is enclosed for the information of the Committee, together with a copy of the official report of the Surgeon of the Batavia, dated the 25th instant; from which it will appear, that Mr. Thompson, the Master above mentioned, has continued free from unfavourable symptoms.”

Jovis, 8^o die Junii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

SIR JONATHAN MILES called in at his own request, and Examined.

WHERE do you reside?—At Hoxton-house, Hoxton.

How long have you kept that house?—Myself and my family, above a hundred years; myself, personally, twenty-five years; I was born in the house, and have been there ever since.

Have you been personally engaged in the management of the house for twenty-five years?—Yes, I have; I have two managers under me; I have not been always upon the spot, but mostly.

Have you any partner?—None.

How long have the rooms been aired and ventilated in the manner they are at present?—I suppose about eighteen months in the way in which they are now.

Have you ever taken the judgment of other persons, as to the competency of the mode in which they are aired and ventilated?—No further than that of my own medical man; it is a plan of my own.

By whom is that medical man engaged and paid?—By myself.

To whom is he answerable?—To me.

Do you allow him a satisfactory sum for his attendance?—Yes; I never heard him complain yet of what I allowed him.

Is he liable to be discharged at any time at your pleasure?—Yes.

What is the sum you allow?—I do not recollect the precise sum, but it is nearly 150*l.* a year.

Have Patients insensible to the calls of nature ever been placed in the same beds or cradles with clean Patients in your house?—No.

Has not it happened that a Patient insensible to the calls of nature has used the same bed with a man who was cleanly in his person?—No.

Are they never mixed, either in the sitting or the sleeping rooms?—No, they are not, they are divided; the cleanly by themselves, and the dirty in other apartments.

Uniformly without exception?—Yes, uniformly without exception.

Have you any person of the name of Evans in your house?—Yes, Captain Evans.

In what state of health is that gentleman?—He is in a very good state of health at present, but he is troubled with fits; there is no likelihoods of his dying at present that I can see; he eats his food very heartily, and is as well as can be expected of a man in his situation.

Has his situation been such as to require medical attendance?—It has.

Has that medical attendance been given him?—It has; Mr. Sharp has attended him.

Has Mr. Sharp any directions from you to give any particular attention to the Patients on account of their insanity, or merely when their bodily health seems to require it?—Merely when their bodily health requires it, nothing further.

Is any medical attention particularly directed in your Establishment to the cure of the insanity?—None; our house is open to all medical gentlemen who choose to visit it.

That is at the expense of the Patient?—It is.

Do you mean to say, that if any medical person visits your house with the intention of seeing the state in which the patients are generally, he would be admitted?—No; what I mean by its being open to any medical gentleman is, that if they send a Patient, they will visit their own Patients.

Then unless the friends of a Patient send a medical attendant, he will not receive, during any length of time which he shall be confined in your house, any course of medicine or attention whatever, merely with reference to the cure of his insanity?—Certainly not.

What proportion of the persons confined in your house, receive visits from medical persons sent by their friends?—That I am not able to answer.

Can you form any opinion what proportion receive those visits?—I cannot.

Do any of them?—Certainly.

Whereabouts is the number of Patients under confinement with you?—484.

How many of those are, properly speaking, Government Patients?—130 seamen and marines, and 18 officers.

Are not the Government Patients under the more immediate care and attention of Doctor Weir?—Doctor Weir never prescribed any thing for them, he only inspects into their clothing and victualling; he has never prescribed for one to my knowledge.

You do not consider yourself as at all responsible for the medical treatment of the Government Patients?—Yes, I am, because Mr. Sharp is appointed by me to attend them.

Do the Government Patients receive any medical treatment for the cure of their insanity?—I cannot say that they do exactly, because they are Patients who have been sent to Bethlem, and returned back after the first twelvemonth.

Then of the 336 in your house who are not Government Patients, inform the Committee how many, to the best of your knowledge and belief, receive any medical attendance whatever, with a view to the cure of their insanity?—Not any that I know of, only by their own Doctor.

How many are visited by their own medical men?—That I cannot tell, without reference to my Books.

Do you suppose there are twenty?—Yes, from twenty to thirty probably.

It is your opinion then, that there are above 300 persons in your house, who receive no attention whatever, on account of the peculiar complaint for which they are confined?—Certainly, they have nothing prescribed for the cure, no doubt of that, their pay will not allow it.

What attention is paid, in your house, to the clothing of the patients?—They are clothed when they want it; we generally write an order to the Board for what clothes we want for the Government Patients, and the order is sent down, and the clothes are procured, and Dr. Weir inspects to see that they have them. With respect to the pauper Patients, we apply to the different parishes, or to their friends, who send them clothes when they want them, which are regularly put on.

If, then, the Government Patients are not properly supplied with clothing, you consider that as the fault of their superintendent, and not yours?—Clearly so.

Supposing, that is to say, that you had made the application to the Transport Board?—Yes; we never let any man go without clothing, and the Board always sends an order down, on our writing for them.

You think they are sufficiently clothed?—Yes. In the year 1808 the Patients were very badly clothed, and went about the yard stark naked, with only a bit of a blanket on them. I could not get Dr. Weir to interfere, and I reported it to the visitors of the College of Physicians, and a letter was written to the Transport Board, and since that time they have been properly clothed, on my representation.

For what Parishes do you keep the insane paupers?—St. James's is one, St. Margaret's, Westminster, and a great many other Parishes.

Are any of those Parishes in the habit of sending their medical men?—Certainly they are, whenever it is wanted.

Not periodically?—No.

On your sending?—No, without our sending they come two or three times a year, or more or less.

They have always free admission?—Certainly.

Can you take upon you to say, that all the Parishes send their medical men?—I believe so.

At what rate do you keep the parish paupers?—10s. 6d. a week. The Government patients I receive 10s. 6d. a week for, and find medical attendance.

Do they all sleep single?—Yes, all but six cribs that are double.

Have you not a bed or beds containing more than two each?—I believe there are two cribs containing three each, but I am going to remove them.

Are there not four?—I cannot say indeed.

Are you doubtful whether in your own house there are one, two, three, or four cribs, in each of which three persons sleep?—I am not exactly clear how many there are of those, I must say.

How often do you personally visit the apartments of the patients?—Every day.

Every bed-room?—No, not every bed-room; I go through the house every day where they sit, and see them. I have two superintendents, to whom I pay very large salaries. I go through the house every day to see the provisions which are furnished to the patients.

How often do you see all the bed-rooms?—About twice a week.

But you cannot speak to the number of treble cribs you have in those rooms?—No, I cannot precisely; I believe there are six double cribs and two treble cribs; those double cribs were approved of by Doctor Harness.

Is each of the two containing three, wide enough to allow the persons using them lying in parallel lines?—Yes; those double cribs are safer than bedsteads for the patients.

Do any two Patients sleep in the same bed without a separation?—No, they do not, there is a board between each nearly four feet high, that applies likewise to the cribs for three.

When you say that you visited the bed-rooms twice a-week, do you mean that you visited them at stated times, or as may happen?—As it may happen.

Do you give previous notice of your visits?—No, I do not.

When the Commissioners visit your house, do they inspect into the diet and provisions of the Patients?—Yes, they do.

Have they ever stated to you any complaints upon that subject?—Not any, they have always approved of it.

Do they visit the bed-rooms?—They go through the house and see every place.

Have they made any complaints upon that subject?—Not any.

Do you mean to say that the house has been at all times, during the last ten or twelve years, in a state as little subject to complaint as it is at present?—It certainly is better than it was, since the improvement; it is larger, but I never had any complaint.

Had you ever, in point of fact, any complaint of your house being too crowded?—No, I had not.

Do you ever refuse Patients when sent to you?—Never.

Do you mean, you have always spare beds?—We have always some, not above three or four perhaps; but we always have a great number going out and in.

You mean to assert, that the house has never been so full as to compel you to put two persons in one bed?—I cannot say that; we have in former times, not just now; we have not for the last two or three years, because we have had more room.

Are the violent and the quiet patients separated in your house?—They are.

How long has that been the case?—For the last eighteen months, I should think.

Do you mean to speak particularly to the period of eighteen months?—Near about that time, I should think.

What was the case before that time?—The violent Patients used to sit amongst the others.

To what part of the establishment do you speak?—I speak of the whole.

Was there at that time any separation in the house, of the three classes, the Government Patients, Pauper Patients, and those whom you call Pay Patients, who were sent by their friends, and for whom a greater allowance is made?—Certainly.

How long has the separation been made between the Government and the Pauper Patients?—I cannot tell how long it has been, perhaps two or three years; I think it must be more than three years.

On what account, or for what reason, were they then separated?—By desire of Doctor Weir.

Then before this separation, which took place at the request of Dr. Weir, the Paupers and the Government Patients were thrown together indiscriminately?—The yards opened into each other, and they walked one amongst the other.

Did they sleep separately before?—Yes, they always had the same gallery they have now.

At that time there was no separation of the violent from the quiet Patients?—No, at that time there was not, but there is now.

What was the reason of the separation of the violent Patients which you mentioned to have taken place about eighteen months ago?—It was a plan of my own; I thought it better to divide them, to keep them separate from the others.

What is the separation of which you speak?—By placing them in a room by themselves.

In a bed-room or sitting-room?—Both in the bed-rooms and sitting-rooms.

Is it the practice of the house to permit all the Patients who are at liberty to mix together?—According to their classes; those that are not violent walk about with the others.

Do you mean that all those Patients whom you class as violent Patients are prevented from walking about with the others, and confined in a separate room during the day?—Certainly, they are kept in a separate room, and walk out when the others go in.

In what manner do you confine or restrain violent Patients?—In waistcoats or handcuffs, according to the state they are in; handcuffs are safest of the two.

Have you any persons chained to their beds, or to the sides of the rooms?—No, not one; we have not a thing of the sort.

Have you ever, in the course of your practice, met with men in the most outrageous degrees of insanity, and such as you apprehended would if at liberty have been guilty of violence, or even murder, upon the keeper or others?—Several.

Was the degree of confinement of which you have been speaking, sufficient for those persons?—Generally so; there have been men who have been more heavily ironed than others, but those were persons sent from Newgate, who have been tried for murder, but the Jury had brought it in insanity, and the irons have been put on by order of the Lord Mayor; they stay with us till they either get better or die; one has been sent back quite well, and another is with me, who is getting better.

Do not you think a strait-waistcoat a more irritating instrument of restraint than manacles?—I am sure it is.

Do not you conceive that a belt from behind the Patient's shoulders, confining the upper joints of the arms, would be preferable to manacles, as giving the Patient the use of his hands in all the calls of nature?—No, I do not; because if a Patient is bad, it must injure his arms, he would always be working; with a half waistcoat I think it might be done; I will make the experiment certainly.

Have you ever opposed the discharge of Patients from your house, when it has been proposed by any medical attendant?—Never.

Do you know whether the persons you have employed as superintendents have so done?—No, never; I am sure they have not in any instance.

Do you know of any patients who have been discharged without your approbation, when you have thought them unfit?—Certainly; eight men were discharged one day, and nine another, by order of Doctor Weir, in the year 1803, who in my opinion were not cured.

Have you had any and what reason to suppose that those men were not in a state fit to be discharged?—By examining them.

After their discharge, did any circumstances come to your knowledge which confirmed you in the opinion that they were unfit to have been sent out?—I never heard any thing more of them after they left my house.

At Christmas, Easter, and Michaelmas, is there any change in the diet of the Patients?—The poor people on Easter Sunday have all roast veal; on Michaelmas Day they have geese and giblet pies, in the higher class; and on Christmas Day they have roast beef and plumb pudding, and a pint of ale each man; that has been a standing rule a long while; and sometimes a glass of negus.

Did you ever consult your medical attendant, whether that was proper?—No; I was certain myself that it could not do them any mischief, so small a quantity.

POWERS OF COMMISSIONERS, &c.

Jovis, 11^o die Maii, 1815.

THE RIGHT HON. GEORGE ROSE IN THE CHAIR.

DR. RICHARD POWELL called in, and Examined.

YOU are a Fellow of the College of Physicians?—I am.

And Secretary to the Commissioners appointed under the Act of the 14th of the King, for the regulation of Madhouses?—Yes; and have been so from September 1808.

Do the College of Physicians annually elect five Fellows for visiting Madhouses within seven miles of the Metropolis?—They do; according to the directions of the Act, and at their general meeting in September.

Do the Commissioners meet as prescribed under that Act, to grant licences?—They do, according to the directions of that Act.

Do the Commissioners visit the houses once a year, and occasionally at other times?—They do; all houses once, and where there appears a necessity, more than once.

Do they, on such visits, examine minutely into the state of the houses, and into the condition of all the apartments in them, and as to the care of the patients?—Yes.

Do they enquire into the medical treatment of the patients?—Not particularly.

Do they at all enquire into the medical treatment?—Into the medical attendance, certainly; that is to say, it is very frequently asked, Who attends this patient? but into the propriety of the medicine administered, or into the medical treatment of the patient, they do not go; nor do they make this enquiry in every case.

Do they make minutes of their observations in those examinations?—They do; their present minute book, which I have been ordered to bring with me, I beg leave to lay before the Committee.

[Dr. Powell produced the same.]

The Commissioners are sworn of course?—They are ; every part of the Act, I believe, is fully complied with ; it is the wish of the Commissioners that it should.

The minutes contain every particular which the Commissioners think deserve their notice, with their observations thereupon?—After the visitation, all the circumstances respecting every house visited on that day, are read over ; and they determine upon the general minute that shall be entered upon the minute book, from the loose minutes taken at the time, and from their own recollection.

Have circumstances occurred tending to impeach the character of any of those houses, upon the visitations made?—Certainly. Every fault that is found, impeaches the character ; and there are many noticed in that book.

If any discovery is made deserving censure or animadversion, is that stated in a paper, and hung up in the censor's room of the College?—Very seldom ; because the method of publication by such mode of hanging up, has been thought to be completely inefficient : It is thus hung up in a private room, into which few persons go ; but if any minute is made containing censure, or finding fault with particular conduct, the secretary is usually directed to write to the keeper, and to inform him of the circumstance : And if the house has been ill conducted, the Commissioners make a point of visiting again very speedily, in order to see whether the same objection still exists.

Have instances occurred of keepers refusing admittance to the visitors?—No, I believe not ; not within my knowledge, certainly.

Is an exact account kept of the whole of the proceedings of the Commissioners?—The minute they agree upon is entered, it is again read to them at their next meeting, and they sign it after consideration, as will appear from the book before the Committee ; of course very many things occur during a visitation which are not mentioned in the minutes.

Have you reason to believe that regular accounts are transmitted of patients in the houses within seven miles of London, within three days after their admission?—There are instances to the contrary ; but in general I believe they are very correctly returned.

When instances to the contrary have occurred, what has been done upon it?—If the omission appeared to have originated merely from error, the Commissioners have reprehended the keeper and directed greater attention for the future ; but in glaring instances they have ordered prosecutions.

In what instances can such omission have originated in error?

—The confusion for instance between parish paupers and patients that are paid for ; parish paupers not being returnable under the Act.

Have not the keepers of all those houses full information of the nature of their duty, which distinguishes between the parish paupers and the others?—I suppose they have, as far as the Act can give it.

Then how can it have arisen from error?—The Act is obscure : I can point out instances in the register where the return has been delayed to four or five days, instead of being made within three.

Do you mean to say those are the only cases where they have not complied with the Act?—Certainly not ; there have been cases in which the Commissioners have even directed prosecutions.

Have the Commissioners directed prosecutions in all cases, except those of a trivial departure from the law?—No ; this has depended upon their investigation of the facts, and I can probably answer the question better by a fact. A person was found confined in a house, one of the Commissioners had seen this person who was admitted into this house without any certificate ; the Commissioners visited, and found that he was so ; he had been there but a little time, and his conversation then was exceedingly correct ; they found that a statement had been made to the keeper, that the Commissioner had so seen him, and believed him to be insane ; he took this report for a certificate, which it was not ; but this was merely a mistake, without any intention of concealment, and so far excusable. This man, in consequence of the reprehension of the circumstance by the Commissioners, got at large, but he was insane, and very soon in confinement again ; his was insanity of conduct, not of conversation.

Are you aware of Lunatics being admitted without a certificate at all, in any case?—No, I am not ; when I say that, I beg to state that I could refer to an instance where a Lunatic has been received and confined without any certificate, or without any return, and the Commissioners have ordered a prosecution against the party ; but as a general conduct, certainly not.

As far as you are enabled to speak upon the subject, have those orders for admission been properly attested?—Yes, generally so, certainly ; I would beg here to state to the Committee, that in consequence of the irregularity of such orders, the Commissioners directed papers to be printed and used containing the medical certificate which ought to be required, and which they expected to find ; and also blank returns of the circumstances required by the Act to be filled up by the keepers ; and which are now mostly used, but not always, as they have no power to compel it.

“Warwick-lane, London.”

Do you always compare the number of persons in confinement in any given house, with the number of certificates?—No; it is impossible to do that.

Why is it impossible?—We have a file brought with the certificates jumbled together upon that file; patients have gone out of the house, and the certificates remain upon the file; in short, we only take some of these papers and collate them, and see that they accord with our registers and returns; we do not attempt to go through the whole, but take one indiscriminately, and see that that is correct, and from finding three or four so, we rather infer that the whole are so.

Do not you think the mode of entry might be so arranged and ticketed, on filing those certificates, that it might be easy to compare the certificates with the persons then under confinement?—Yes; but we have no power to direct it.

Of course, that would prevent altogether almost the possibility of a person being there, for whom there was not a proper certificate?—We are so far secure of the certificate, that the name of the medical person signing the certificate, as well as that of the friend of the patient, is entered in our book.

You are not sure that the man may be there?—No; the patient may be gone, we know nothing of him in the register beyond his admission; the Act provides for nothing more.

Recognizances are taken always before the licences are granted? They are in the Court of Chancery.

Have the Commissioners regular returns from the country, with respect to the number of houses and the names of the patients confined in them?—They are imperfectly made in very many instances: many houses in the country do receive patients and never return them at all; we communicate this to the Clerk of the Peace, when we know it; he uses his judgment, and there the matter ends. The Commissioners receive no return of houses as they are licensed; the only knowledge they have of a house even being in existence in the country, is the receipt of a return, if made by the keeper, of the admission of a patient therein.

Have many returns been made to the Quarter Sessions, so far as you know, of minutes of the state of houses for the reception of Lunatics, at the visitation of licensed houses within the respective counties?—The Act directs that the visitors in counties may, if they think necessary, make minutes in writing. In case such minutes are made, then they are directed to return a copy of the minutes so made to the secretary; but they may visit without making any minutes at all. The copies of minutes, which have been so returned, are certainly not from all those counties containing houses.

In the event of a licence being withdrawn from a person keeping a house for the reception of Insane persons, on account of gross misconduct, have the Commissioners power to refuse that man a new licence, if he should apply for one the next day? Certainly not, under the Act. I know no instance, however, of a licence ever having been taken away.

In the various visitations the Commissioners have made, has no instance occurred, which, in the opinion of the Commissioners, would have justified the withdrawal of the licence?—I cannot immediately lay my hand upon a minute of the sort; but I remember one, where the Commissioners would have thought it justifiable to have refused the licence, if they had had the power: they never have withdrawn it.

Has no instance occurred within your observation, of circumstances falling under the cognizance of the Commissioners, which would have justified their withdrawing the licence?—Probably many circumstances of ill conduct would have done that, and there have been abundant instances of such, but the Commissioners have never in fact withdrawn the licence; how far they would have considered themselves justified in doing it, I cannot say.

Do you conceive that the provisions of the Act of the 14th of His present Majesty, are sufficient for carrying into effect the purposes intended by that Act?—I do not; the visitations have done an immensity of good; but the Commissioners have not sufficient powers.

State to the Committee the deficiencies, so far as they have fallen under your own observation?—May I be permitted rather to refer to the copy of a letter to a Peer, which will point out the chief deficiencies of the present law.

[The Letter, together with one to the Chairman of this Committee, were read, as follow:]

“ My Lord,

“ THE Commissioners under the Act for regulating Mad-“ houses in London, and within seven miles of the same, and “ within the county of Middlesex, beg leave to offer to your “ lordship their acknowledgments for the communication made
“ to them through Dr. Pemberton, relative to the above Act.
“ The suggestions and alterations proposed by your lordship, “ meet their entire concurrence; at the same time, as they relate “ only to local circumstances, and as the Commissioners are “ aware of many other defects, more immediately falling under “ their own cognizance, they have taken the liberty of suggesting “ them, in order that when embodied with the alterations pro“ posed by your lordship, a complete revision of the Act may “ take place.

“ The Commissioners beg to state, that the subject has “ heretofore on various occasions been taken into their most “ serious consideration; that the alterations they will have the “ honour of submitting, have been maturely weighed, and “ severally laid before counsel, for their opinion; that the “ whole have been digested into form; and of the opportunity “ now afforded by your lordship’s offer, they feel it to be impor“ tant to the interests of the public that they should hasten to “ avail themselves.

“ The Commissioners therefore propose to submit to your “ lordship, in the first instance a very general view of the insuffi-“ ciencies of the Act in its present form; of the modifications
“ of which it is susceptible; and of the new matter which it may “ be thought proper to introduce therein. They deem it unneces“ sary to detain your lordship with a detail of inaccuracies of “ verbal expressions in the Act, although such are numerous,

 “ and productive of much inconvenience in the execution of it,
 “ because any such alterations can be better explained, and more “ easily made, if the subject shall hereafter receive minute con“ sideration. For the same reason, the Commissioners will also “ omit some charges which refer to convenience alone, such as “ the manner in which the oaths are directed to be administered
 “ (p. 1093) and the place of their meeting, which is limited to “ the Hall, or some other convenient place in the College of “ Physicians (p. 1094).

“ That various defects in the provisions of the Act generally
 “ do exist, appears from the Minutes of the Commissioners;
 “ the necessity for their frequent recourse to legal advice, and
 “ the publications of the proceedings of Courts of Law, and “ your lordship’s recent information in the county of Wilts, is “ one proof among many that similar defects are felt in the more “ distant counties of England. That the verbal expression of “ those provisions is not in all instances clearly made, may be “ illustrated by an opinion of the late Lord Kenyon in 1782, “ which begins thus, ‘ I cannot give a receipt to provide for the “ inaccuracies of an ill-penned law.’

“ The first point to be considered in order, is the granting of “ licences, which (page 1095) the Commissioners are required “ to grant to all persons who shall desire the same; and by the “ opinion of counsel, they have been advised, that no impro“ priety of conduct, not even a previous conviction of offences “ under the Act, or the forfeiture of the licence under one of its “ clauses, will, as the law at present stands, justify their refusals.

“ The Commissioners (p. 1095) are also restricted in granting “ licences to one day in the year; it would be advisable that “ they should possess the power to grant them at any other time; “ provided that the licences all terminated on the usual day of “ the year that the other licences are granted for. It is to be ob“ served, that the Magistrates of counties have the power of “ granting licences at any General Quarter Sessions.

“ The sums to be paid by persons taking out licences are now “ regulated by the number of houses, and by one single division
 “ only (as they may be ten in number, or more than ten (p.
 “ 1095) of the number of patients who shall be confined in each “ house. Under the present regulations, therefore, provided “ they be contained in one house, twelve patients or eighty “ patients require the same licence.

“ The Commissioners imagine, that a scale may be formed “ according to the number of patients contained in one establish“ ment, rather than the number of houses of which it may con“ sist; which may not be more burthensome to the keepers in “ general, not much more productive to the fund from which “ the expenses of the commission are defrayed, and yet be more “ equal and just to all parties, than the present arrangement.

“ Such an adoption, too, will obviate some objections which “ occur in the execution of the Act, and do away the motives
“ which exist to confine a great number of these unfortunate “ persons in a small space. Further; as it will hereafter be “ proposed that parish paupers shall not continue to be, as they “ are at present, deprived of any of the benefits of the Act; and “ as such Lunatics are received at lower prices by the keepers,
“ it might be proposed that houses licensed for their express re“ ception, should pay for their licences only half the sum “ determined upon for others.

“ As licences are now granted (p. 1095) any person may re“ quire one; and it is true that he is rendered by his recognizance “ amenable for the conduct of the house; but such licensed “ person may not reside in the house; he may, if he pleases, “ entrust the charge thereof to a servant; and further, although “ one person only may take out the licence, it frequently happens “ that others also have a trading interest in the concern; it seems, “ therefore, proper and reasonable that these circumstances “ should be regulated, that all the parties interested should be “ answerable for the conduct of a Lunatic house, and join in the “ licence; and also that one of the parties to whom any house is “ so licensed, should reside upon the spot. Perhaps this provi“ sion might be enforced by a penalty attached to disobedience
“ of it.

“ Again, the present Act allows the confinement of one “ Lunatic in a house without any licence (p. 1092); and this “ provision looks very properly to the accidental occurrence of “ Insanity in private families, and to their security, under such “ afflicting circumstances, from vexation or interruption; but “ this privilege is construed to extend much further; for persons “ consider themselves to be justified by it, in confining any num“ ber of patients in distinct houses, and even in contiguous ones.

“ The superintendence of the Commissioners is thus evaded,
“ and they recommend that provisions be introduced into the “ Act, by which the practice may be prevented. As also the “ words of the Act at present stand (p. 1100) the penalty will “ be found to be incurred by those who shall ‘admit, harbour, “ entertain or confine any (person as a) Lunatic,’ which circum“ stances of actual occurrence render it expedient to change into “ ‘admit, harbour, entertain or confine any Lunatic,’ omitting
“ the words in a parenthesis.

“ The line of conduct to be observed by the keeper of the “ licensed house, should seem to follow next in order; and the “ directions of the Act, by which these are to be regulated, (p. 1099) will require very material alterations.

“ Pauper Lunatics, sent by parish officers, are exempted from any returns on their admission into a Lunatic house, such as are required for other patients; and the Commissioners have found also, that as the law at present is interpreted, no medical certificate is required to justify their confinement; this practice they have endeavoured, but not effectually, to do away; and the fiat of the parish officer alone is thus sufficient to consign a person to confinement.

“ The Commissioners conceive it will be thought right, upon every principle of humanity and justice, that all exemptions of this kind should be done away, and more particularly so, because it has been sometimes contended, that even private patients, if they be but admitted upon the same low terms as parish paupers, may be classed with them, and exempted from returns and the other provisions of the Act.

“ A certificate of some physician, surgeon, or apothecary, as to the Insanity of the patient is necessary (p. 1100) to justify the admission of such patient into a licensed house, to which description it ought, in the present state of the profession of medicine, to be added, some physician, surgeon, or apothecary, legally qualified to practise as such. The nature of the certificate should also be definitely expressed, and affirm, that the medical person who signs it has actually visited the patient. The London Commissioners have recommended the form which is attached to this Report, and on their visitations examine and compare the files of such certificates, and they would advise that a similar form should be added in an appendix to the Act.

“ The keeper is also bound (p. 1100) to return the name or names, and place or places of abode of the person or persons by whose direction the lunatic is admitted; and as the certificate of the medical person is directed to be signed and sealed by him, so ought also the direction of the friends of the patient, which is not at present required by the Act.

“ The returns to be made by the keeper to the secretary in London, on the admission of any lunatic, are by the present Act directed to comprise certain particulars, but these were found to be very defective, until the adoption of the form annexed to this Report; and there is still considerable difficulty in persuading the keepers of some houses in the country to employ it: It is recommended, that a similar form be adopted in the Appendix to the Act. As the return now stands, it will be seen that besides the patient, there are three distinct parties concerned; i. e. the friend or friends who desire, the medical “ man who advises the admission of the patient, and the keeper

“ or person to whom the house is licensed; and it is particularly “ advised that these three characters should be kept separate, and “ that a clause in the Act should prohibit every individual from “ signing the return in more than one capacity; and that no “ keeper or other person interested in a licensed house should “ sign a certificate for admission into it, in the character of a “ medical practitioner.

“ Further than this it seems necessary, that the observance of “ this most important point of medical certificates should be en“ forced by a penalty, which ought to be imposed upon the par“ ties concerned, if any such medical certificate shall be proved “ to be improperly granted, and without personal examination
“ of the patient: And here the Commissioners cannot but ap“ prove your Lordship's suggestion, that a plan of the whole “ house to be licensed and its respective rooms should be deli“ vered in at the time of first taking out a licence, and as often
“ as any change shall take place or the Commissioners require
“ the same; it will afford the Commissioners an information “ which is important, and which they do not at present possess, “ further than by the knowledge they acquire by repeated visita-
“ tions; perhaps the accuracy of such plan will be better enforced
“ by a penalty for every false return, than by an oath on the part “ of the keeper.

“ It will also be proper to direct the keeper to make still fur“ ther returns of the state of their houses, besides the returns “ within a certain number of days of patients received therein,
“ and also at the time of taking out the annual licence, that the “ keeper should deliver to the secretary an account of all the “ patients then entertained under his care, and that he should “ make a return to the secretary, within the same number of “ days, of discharges, or deaths, or other changes, which may “ occur therein; and these circumstances, with their several “ dates, ought to be added in separate columns, to the corres“ ponding names in the register, which at present can only ac“ count for the admission of patients, and affords no means of “ obtaining that further information, which is so often sought for “ as important.

“ The visitations to be made by the Commissioners, and their “ several duties and mode of election, come next (p. 1099), and “ will probably require no alteration; but it is suggested, that if “ the mode of paying for licences according to the number of “ patients, as before stated, be adopted, it will also be proper “ that the remuneration to the Commissioners should follow the “ same rule, rather than, as at present, one guinea should be “ paid to each for every house visited; there should also be a “ clause to empower them in their visitations to liberate from “ confinement any person, whom they shall have sufficient reason “ to consider as of sane mind, or improperly confined, which at “ present they do not possess; as under many cases of such oc“ currence, the slower though regular process of the law must,

 “ from the time it requires, be a source of infinite distress to in“ dividuals in such a situation.

“ The Commissioners in London are by the Act (p. 1092) “ elected annually on the last day of September, the former “ Commissioners then quit their office; the new Commissioners “ meet for the purpose of granting licences on or within ten days “ of the third Wednesday in October, which licences are to “ commence on the 20th of November following. Now either
 “ the licences should commence on the day upon which they are “ granted, or the new Commissioners should be specially em“ powered, if they please, to visit during the remaining term of “ the licences granted by their predecessors, and not to leave, as “ seems at present to be the case, seven weeks, i. e. from Sep“ tember 30th to November 20th, without any regular superin“ tending power.

“ It is enacted (p. 1097), that any part of the Report of the “ Commissioners which conveys censure or animadversion upon “ any house, shall be hung up in the Censor's room of the Col“ lege, to be perused and inspected by any person who shall “ apply for that purpose; and the insufficiency of this provision
 “ to any good purpose must be manifest. It is therefore pro“ posed to alter it, and to direct that a copy of such part of the “ Report as conveys censure, *shall be communicated to the “ keeper of the house, and also entered in a separate register
 “ to be kept in a convenient place at the College, for public “ inspection.*

“ The Commissioners ought also to have a power vested in “ them by the Act, of taking recognizances at the time of grant“ ing licences; and the clause giving them this power should “ also require, that they be returned to the Quarter Sessions for “ the county, a power which the Commissioners for other coun“ ties at present possess.

“ The application of the Act to the counties of England and “ Wales generally, might demand various considerations accord“ ing to local circumstances; but it is supposed that any such
 “ will not require much deviation from those which the London “ Commissioners recommend, founded upon ample experience.

“ In relation however to the houses in counties, it may be ob“ served, that (p. 1102) the keepers are directed to make a re“ turn of the lunatics they admit, to the Secretary to the London “ Commissioners, within fourteen days from such admission;

“ which names, &c. are to be entered in a separate register.
 “ Now as the Act stands, such entries must be imperfect and “ insufficient; these returns from the keepers are the only inti“ mations of the existence of such houses which the Secretary “ receives, and even these are in some instances wholly omitted,
 “ and houses exist, and no returns are ever received from them.
 “ It would therefore supply a material check upon such irregular“ ities, if the Clerk of the Peace for the county or place where “ such houses are licensed, shall be obliged, under a penalty, to “ return a list to the Secretary in London, of such Licences, “ within a given time after they are granted. And it is further “ presumed, that the purposes of the Act would more effec“ tually be promoted, if the Commissioners for counties were “ directed to make regular minutes of the state and condition of “ houses, and of the number of patients confined therein, and to “ transmit copies thereof to the Secretary in London, under “ certain penalties, rather than that such minutes and transmis“ sions should be left so much at large, as is done by the terms “ of the present Act.

“ There is furthermore another general provision of the pre“ sent Act (p. 1104), which seems to require some modification.
 “ It is there provided, that the Act shall not extend to any of the “ Public Hospitals within this kingdom. And the Commis“ sioners suggest, that this should be confined to pauper lunatics “ admitted into such institutions as objects of charity, and not “ extended to those who pay, and sometimes largely, for their “ accommodation and treatment, as is at present the case in a “ variety of places, which shelter themselves under this designa“ tion, and receive patients of all descriptions who may offer.

“ The Commissioners beg leave finally to observe to your “ Lordship, that any illustration, by cases of actual occurrence,
 “ of the opinions contained in this general statement, is for ob“ vious reasons passed over; but if it should be deemed neces“ sary, there is no point here mentioned which may not be sup“ ported by evidence as recorded in their minutes and register,
 “ and that it will be their especial duty to assist in rendering this “ important Act more practically applicable to circumstances in “ its execution, and still more conducive than it is at present to “ the public good.

“ I have the honour to be, my Lord,

“ Your Lordship's obedient Servant,

“ R. POWELL, M. D.

“ To the Right Honourable

“ the Earl of Radnor,

“ &c. &c. &c.”

“ To the Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE.

“ Sir,

“ April 22, 1813.

“ I HAVE the honour of communicating to you the papers to “ which I referred, respecting the Madhouse Act; and the fol“ lowing short account of the proceedings of the Commissioners “ upon that subject, with which it seemed proper that you “ should be acquainted. In the spring of the year 1811, Mr.
“ William Wynn's Bill for regulating Pauper and Criminal Lu“ natics, was brought before Parliament, for the purpose of in“ troducing some amendments therein; and on that occasion Sir “ Lucas Pepys and I had some conversation with him upon the “ subject of the Act for regulating Madhouses, in consequence “ of which the Commissioners entered into a full consideration
“ of the provisions of the Act, and made therein such altera“ tions as they conceived likely to be practically beneficial; these “ were submitted to the opinion of Mr. Warren, the College “ counsel, and Lord Radnor has the only copy of his reply to “ the more general suggestions which were contained in the “ amended Act. The Act, as at that time altered, forms the “ chief part of the copy which Lord Radnor has now laid be“ fore you. The Commissioners then thought it to be their “ duty to call the attention of the College to the subject, and to “ require their determination upon the propriety of making an “ application to the legislature for the amendment of the Act;
“ but after the annual change of the College officers and Com“ missioners, the consideration passed by at the time; and it has “ now been renewed in consequence of certain circumstances
“ which have occurred in Wiltshire, under the immediate notice
“ of the Earl of Radnor, and have induced him to interest him“ self in the endeavour to prevent a repetition of them. Re“ ports from the visitors in counties are very irregularly made;
“ and one dated November 23, 1812, which refers to the subject
“ before us, is the first, which for many years back has been re“ ceived from the county of Wilts. This Report states, that 23 “ persons were confined in a licensed house then visited, eight of “ whom were paupers sent by parish officers, and details many “ circumstances in its management, which deserved severe cen“ sure. On examining the register of lunatics admitted into “ such houses, it appeared that not one of the 15 patients who “ were not paupers had been returned to the Secretary in Lon“ don, for the insertion of the name therein, according to the “ directions of the Act; and this information was immediately “ stated officially from the Commissioners to the Clerk of the “ Peace for the county, but he has not noticed to them the re“ ceipt of such communication. On March 18th last, Sir

“ Francis Milman laid before the Commissioners a letter from “ Lord Radnor to Doctor Pemberton, enclosing a plan intended “ to obviate in future the evil which had been recently found to “ exist in Wiltshire; and at the same time requesting to know if “ the Commissioners had any suggestions to offer upon the same “ subject. The Commissioners thus applied to, referred to the “ paper which had been drawn up in 1811, and made some addi“ tions thereto, in consequence of some circumstances of still “ later occurrence; but they judged, that in answering Lord “ Radnor’s letter, it would be desirable, in the first instance, to “ address a more general report to his Lordship, and to lay be“ fore him a view of the practical objections to the existing Act,
“ and of those alterations which appeared to them to be neces“ sary. A copy of this letter I have now the honour to trans“ mit to you. Lord Radnor took the trouble to digest these “ suggestions into the form of the clauses of an Act of Parlia“ ment, which he returned for the consideration of the Commis“ sioners, who, in order that their bearings and relations to the “ present Act might be more clearly seen, directed that such of “ them as had not been noticed on the former occasion, should “ be added thereto, and the whole entered in their proper places
“ in an interleaved copy of the present Act. This copy was “ then sent to Lord Radnor, for his opinion and observations,
“ and has been communicated by him to you. The Commis“ sioners, however, are aware from experience, that much more “ caution and attention will be necessary in wording the Act, so “ as to make it clear and definite in its practical application; and “ believe, that it would be better to form a new Act altogether, “ than to attempt to amend the old one; and they purposed, in “ the next place, to apply for the direction therein of some per“ son especially conversant in the form and language of Acts of “ Parliament, and they submit it to you, that some such step “ will still be proper, before any application is made to the “ Legislature.

“ I have the honour to be, Sir,

“ Your most obedient humble servant,

“ R. POWELL, M. D. Sec^r. ”

You have stated, that the Commissioners have visited all the houses within their jurisdiction at least once a year; can you recollect the state of the house kept by Sir Jonathan Miles at Hoxton?—The Committee will give me leave rather to read to them the Report of the Commissioners, with respect to their visitation of that house on the 28th of March, 1815, as it stands on their minutes. “The number of patients was about 486, of whom about three-fourths were paupers.”

State to the Committee what is meant by the word about; can not you ascertain the number correctly?—No.

Do not you count them?—We take down on our rough minutes the number in each yard.

When you enter the house, do you ask the keeper how many patients there are?—Yes.

What means have you of ascertaining whether he gives you a true account or not, or that you see them all, unless you count the patients?—We take most especial care to go into every room in the house, and we know, I believe, every room in it.

Has it ever occurred to you to find out, during the period you have had any concern with the visitation of the medical Commissioners, that cells or places were concealed from your knowledge?—I think not.

May not the keeper, by shifting the patient from room to room, keep some from your view?—I think it is a possible thing; I hardly think that a probable thing; the Commissioners are very much upon the alert in looking over every part of the house.

Do not you think, seeing the certificate of every patient, and counting the patients, would be the means best adapted to prevent any deception?—They would be means unquestionably, but I think it would take the Commissioners more than a day to go over the house of Sir Jonathan Miles in that way, and they probably are not there above two or three hours.

How can you secure to a patient, on his recovering his sanity, his liberation?—We have no power of liberation under the Act.

You are not sure you see them once a year, though you mean to see them?—We do our best, and we mean to see them.

Could not you make the keeper furnish you with a list, and make him responsible?—I think it would be a very good provision, if such were produced at every time of visitation.

The keeper knows how to apply the names?—We proceed thus: I take a memorandum-book in my hand; I enter the names as the man gives them to me; and if we come within a few names of his number, we think ourselves very well off. Where any patient complains to the Commissioners that he is improperly confined, or they see reason from his manner to think him so, into that case they then more particularly examine. But supposing they find the patient's conversation correct, they know better than to infer immediately that he is well, and that his conduct will also be so; and if they did, they have no power under the Act to liberate him. They usually in such case direct the secretary to write to the friends of the patient, and say, We require, that if his confinement be longer protracted, the propriety of such confinement be justified by a more repeated and particular examination of some medical practitioner. For it is obvious to the Committee, that the Commissioners cannot, on their visitations, have time enough to examine into individual cases of lunacy; for doubtful ones may require many hours and repeated visits; and if the Commissioners were to act from the impulse of the moment, or barely to judge from propriety of temporary conversation, they might let half the lunatics they see loose, though they were very unfit to be at large.

Do you not think it possible, that upon your visitation, some of the patients may be kept out of your way?—Certainly, it is possible that their local situation may be changed, for you cannot muster insane persons.

Might not some mode be easily devised of securing to the Commissioners, when visiting, a view of every patient?—Probably it might: I am not aware of such a mode at present; but the plan of each house would at least secure our seeing every room.

Would not a list made out from the certificates by the keeper, for which he is responsible, answer the purpose?—A list, with certain corresponding numbers, would do it in some degree. I have suggested heretofore, that for greater certainty, every return made by a keeper should have a number affixed, as well as the names.

Is the application of the patient personal to the Commissioners, when they visit, or by letter?—Usually personal, but sometimes by letter; our correspondence is tolerably large.

Will you proceed to read the minutes you made on the examination of Mr. Miles's house?—"The number of patients, 486, of whom about three-fourths were paupers."

Do not you distinguish paupers in the returns?—The Act expressly excludes paupers from any return: I think evil arises from it. Though the entering of the names of paupers in the register would occasion great trouble, yet it may for instance happen, that a man may become suddenly insane in a parish in London; that he is found so in the streets, and he is sent by the parish to a madhouse; he may, perhaps, be a man of great respectability, and his friends might apply to the secretary, for the purpose of finding him from the register; yet as no return is made of him, they could not get the information. The fact is, that the parish officers send in pauper lunatics by their individual act, even without a medical certificate. "The number of keepers at home, (for that the Commissioners generally look to, not the number upon their establishment,) was thirty-two."

Have the keepers of those houses notice of your approach?—Certainly not; so much care is taken, that the secretary of the College, does not intrust even the porter of the College with the conveyance of the summonses.

Do you not find, that the intention of your visitation is usually known before you arrive?—I should think it impossible; instances have occurred in which we have thought it probable, and the care now taken, has been in consequence of such instances. The Commissioners have visited a house on a miserable day in December; they have found patients therein improperly chained; they have been told it is impossible to keep clothes upon those patients; they have gone again to the same house within a week, having reprehended the conduct of the keeper, and found not one instance where a patient was chained, and not one of them without clothes, where the same patients were: they therefore have, from the striking and great differences, occasionally thought that there must have been some communication of their intention to come again; the amendment, however, may possibly have arisen from the effect of their first visit, and attention to their representations. For the last four or five years, the Commissioners have shifted the mode of sending their summonses, as it might chance to be known from that cause; if a servant of the College took out notices, it might be thought worth the while of the keepers of the houses to endeavour to corrupt such a person, to gain the knowledge.

Is your visit stated and regular?—No; irregular, certainly; it is the principle of the visitation that it should be so.

The Act requires that it shall be between eight in the morning, and four in the afternoon?—Yes; “These houses (Miles’s) are “in very excellent order, and the Commissioners have the satisfaction to find, that all their suggestions have been completely “complied with.” There is hardly a visitation that we have not been endeavouring to improve the state of those houses; and we have got by degrees, one thing after another, a great deal done indeed; so that I am convinced at the present moment, looking to the class of patients, those houses are as well managed as any houses about London.

Is that the whole of your minute, as to that house?—Yes; there was nothing to reprobate there; where any thing is required to be done, in consequence it is entered.

Did you particularly observe the apartments in which the Naval patients were confined?—Certainly; there are two classes, I believe, of government patients, the officers, and the private men.

Do you recollect the size of the chambers in which the officers were?—The officers are confined with other pay patients, paying about the same sum, I believe; we do not know the distinction, at the visitations, between Naval officers and other pay patients, but I believe such persons are confined with others.

Were the quiet patients among the Naval Maniacs, mixed with the turbulent ones?—I think, to the best of my recollection, not;

there is a room sufficiently large for the patients who are in it, and there is a yard in which they walk, of sufficient size; there are separate rooms in which violent patients are confined; but certainly I have seen violent patients confined in chains in the day-room used by other patients.

Have you seen dirty patients with the clean?—I do not know particularly: they contrive, upon the whole, to keep them very clean; and such are usually confined in other rooms.

Can you say whether the violent patients are separated from the more placid?—Whether that is done uniformly, I cannot tell: I certainly have, as I said, seen violent patients in the day-rooms; but I again have seen most other violent patients confined in rooms separated from them.

Would you not think it right, in all cases, that those two descriptions should be separated from each other?—I think the management of insanity requires the practice of separation, according to the state of the disease; but it is never done in this country. Insane houses, are places which seem rather intended for the safe confinement and imprisonment of Lunatics, but not one of them seem fully calculated for the cure of them.

Are there, or not, particular apartments for the violent and turbulent, so as to keep them within the same walls?—Certainly; every establishment has places professedly for the violent patients.

Is it the practice of that establishment, so to apply their apartments?—Certainly; the last time we went round, I do recollect that a man was confined in a strait-waistcoat, in a chair, in the day-room of those patients; but I believe the principle of the house now under consideration is, to separate the violent from the quiet as much as they can.

Are there patients insensible to the calls of nature, kept in the same apartments with the clean patients, in this house of Miles's?—I do not think there are; certainly not generally.

Is that an object of enquiry with the Commissioners?—Most unquestionably: they would reprehend such a thing if they saw it; they would say, "Those patients are too violent, or too dirty to be here, they should be removed;" but that may have been said a hundred times, without its being put upon their minutes. I believe, as far as I can judge, that the general practice is that of separation.

Is it the practice of the Commissioners to ask that question, Whether they are separated?—One particular point looked to in visiting a house is, to see the rooms where the violent patients are confined; that is a leading enquiry, always particularly asked, and never, or rarely overlooked.

The next question would be, Whether they are not occasionally mixed?—I believe, as I have said, that violent patients are occasionally mixed with others ; and I think, as matter of opinion, the mixture is improper.

Are those insensible of the calls of nature, occasionally mixed with those who are clean ?—I believe that it may have been the case occasionally ; I think I have seen patients who might have been passing their urine, for instance, in a day-room with others.

Was that noticed to the keepers, and were they directed to keep that patient separate in future ?—It was mentioned to the keepers, certainly, but no minute is made of such details. It has probably been said, “ This patient should be separated from the others, they are improperly mixed :” indeed a great deal is said and suggested upon every visitation, and much more than can be written down.

Is there all the care taken which can be, considering the situation of the houses, to separate the turbulent from the quiet, and the clean from the unclean ?—According to their means, I think there is. The Commissioners have written to the Commissioners of Transports, to tell them, that the Naval patients are too much crowded.

How does the fact of their being too much crowded, agree with the fact you have stated, of Miles’s being in an excellent state ?—All the houses, which take patients at a low rate, are too much crowded ; it is by the number they make their profit, nor could they be accommodated singly at their present rate.

How does it consist, also, with the putting together the clean and the unclean, and the quiet and the turbulent ?—I think a separation is made between them commonly. In answering your questions, I must look to exceptions.

Do the Commissioners make that enquiry at every house they visit ?—Certainly ; but it must be remembered that Lunatic houses are mostly common dwelling houses, fitted to the purpose, not originally built for it.

When did you write to the Commissioners of the Transport Board, stating that the Naval patients were too much crowded ?—I will endeavour to find out a letter ; there is one on the 5th of December, 1808, stating that the day-room for the seamen was much too small. An answer was received, stating, that Dr. Weir had attended, and made a temporary arrangement to remedy the evil complained of, and had directed further accommodation.

On your last visitation there, did you observe the room in which a lieutenant of the navy was confined, whether any body was with him, or not ?—It is not within my recollection, at the present moment, to have seen such a patient.

Did you observe any room, where any officer was confined, where two servants of the house slept in the same room with him?—I do not recollect such a fact coming before us.

Have you any minute of the size of the rooms, and whether the rooms appeared too much crowded with beds?—No.

Do you think mad persons ought to sleep together?—I think it a very improper thing that any two mad people should sleep together.

Was not that the case at Miles's?—I think the officers, in general, were in separate rooms.

Is the fact, of the day-room occupied by the Naval officer, being likewise occupied by pay-patients, known to the Commissioners?—I suppose those patients pay all the same; we know only that they are not paupers.

In a variety of instances, did you, or not, observe officers in the Navy, sleeping in rooms with persons not belonging to the Navy?—I do not know who the officers in the Navy are; they have no uniform; it is a distinction which we do not make; they are all together; nor do we ask who sleeps in this or that bed.

Did it fall within the observation of the Commissioners, at their last visitation, that persons slept promiscuously in the same room, who were insensible to the calls of nature, with those who were not?—No, it did not, certainly.

Was any enquiry made, whether such cases existed or not?—No, I think I can say, certainly not.

You have no means of knowing, whether there was an instance of a double cradle, in which a seaman slept with an officer?—I do not understand what a cradle is; if it means a double bedstead, they have in that, and other houses, some double bedsteads, with a high board between them, and one sleeps on each side.

Did it fall within your observation, that in this house of Miles's, two officers were in the same room, one perfectly clean, and the other so dirty, as to be excluded from the officers' sitting-room?—Certainly not, within my observation: it appeared to me that the house was particularly clean in all its parts, and no where offensive.

How long preceding the 28th of March, had the Commissioners visited it before?—That house was visited in November, I think.

Do you think it possible to visit the patients at night?—The Act does not give us the power of going after five o'clock, and I think it is in some degree a proper regulation.

You go into the bed-chambers when you visit?—Yes.

In any, or all of the bed-chambers, have you been struck with any offensive smell, so as to render the air unfit for respiration?—So much the contrary, that at our last visitation, I never saw a place so clean in my life; there was not a single offensive smell, even from the violent patients; I remarked it particularly on that day.

Do you know how many keepers there are to attend upon the 486 patients?—They stated on that day, that the number of keepers then at home, was thirty-two.

Male and female?—Yes.

By keepers you mean, including all the servants of the house?—They generally include them, I believe.

You do not know how many of those keepers were necessary for the common purposes of the house?—I do not.

To attend those, and probably to perform all the duties of the house, the number of keepers was thirty-two?—Yes; it is not always easy to distinguish between the keepers and the patients, in going round.

Was that number of keepers more or less than it had been before?—The keepers in all those houses are very uncertain in number; they send them out with private patients.

Do you think that number of keepers sufficient for the attendance upon that number of patients?—When we are told a man has this sort of accommodation, we may say, and do say, it is bad, it is not the accommodation he ought to have: but the keeper tells us, I am allowed but ten shillings a week for every thing I do for this man; with which we must be satisfied. In one instance a patient may require a keeper, and in another instance, a keeper might be sufficient for fifteen or twenty.

Can you form an opinion how many patients a keeper can look after?—I cannot; I have seen one patient who has required two keepers.

From your account, it appears possible that patients may have been produced to you as servants of the house?—I have seen patients act as servants, and have seen the porter of the house also a patient; they certainly do manage to get one patient to take care of another, and it is not a thing I should object to; the thing I object to in the management of Lunacy is, that there is not occupation of mind enough.

Have you had opportunities of examining their food, upon your visitations?—Not particularly; we look at the food when we are there, about dinner-time; enquire into the allowance, and learn from the patients whether they have a sufficiency; but the truth is, they are usually over-fed, rather than under-fed, considering that they have no employment.

Are specimens produced to you of the bread, meat, beer, and milk?—No further than that we see, by going into the kitchen, what they have.

Have they any other meat but beef?—I do not know; if we went there and saw a sufficiency of beef, we should not think of asking, when had they mutton.

Do you think it necessary to examine into the quantity and quality of their diet?—Most unquestionably.

Do you minutely examine into those subjects at the different houses?—Not very minutely; but we enquire into it. I am sure I have seen dead sheep hanging up at Miles's, for they have a slaughter-house, and kill their own meat, therefore I should not infer that their diet was only beef.

Do you see samples of each article of food?—No.

Should not the diet of the patients be altered according to their state?—Certainly; some of the patients, who are weak and debilitated, cannot be kept too well; others must be kept low.

Did you ever enquire as to the attendance of the apothecary at Miles's, or did you ever see him?—Yes, certainly.

Is he a man of experience?—The apothecary of the house is a Mr. Sharp, I have seen different medical men there, who have been looking after their patients, and have attended patients myself occasionally.

Mr. Sharp is a very young man?—He is a young man, but he is a competent man, I think.

Does he live near enough to be within call?—I think he does; he lives in Myrtle Street, Hoxton.

Have you often seen him there on your visits?—Yes, certainly.

Who regulates the diet?—The keeper of the house.

You have no means of knowing whether any or what proportion of those patients have had medicine?—No.

It is stated here, that some of them have been fourteen years without medicine being administered?—I think it very likely; and in some instances, very proper. I could mention a physician who was in one house before the Act passed in 1774, and who died very recently; his bodily health was very good, medicine was not necessary for him, and would have been productive of no benefit whatever.

Are you of opinion that mental disease proceeds frequently from corporeal disease of the system?—Certainly.

In that case medical treatment must be of great importance?—Certainly, I do believe that it is so, and often effectual.

Should you not think that seamen, from the nature of their mode of life, were particularly subject to have their mental disease caused by corporeal infirmities?—I have not experience enough to say that. In intemperate people it frequently is so.

Is it your opinion, that placing the frantic and the placid patients together, is likely to retard the recovery of the latter?—Certainly, that is my opinion.

Did you at the last visitation observe a patient exceedingly dirty, much emaciated, in a room where the floor, although cleaned, was full of moisture, and stunk, so as not only to render it offensive to the senses, but extremely obnoxious to the patients in the vigour of life?—We saw in going through that house not one room that made any offensive impression upon us; we found the rooms in general very clean, and we turned down the sheets in three or four of the bed-rooms and found them exceedingly clean; we went into all the rooms; we found in two or three instances men who were sick, but they were, in my opinion, tolerably comfortable.

From the observations the Commissioners have entered in their book, as to the state and condition of the house on the 28th of March, are you of opinion they would consider themselves warranted in visiting it again in the course of the year?—I do not know what houses the Commissioners will visit, the thing is never determined upon till the moment of their meeting.

From the report you have read of Miles's house, is that so worded as to induce you to believe that the Commissioners would think themselves called upon to visit it again this year?—That is matter of belief only, but I should say, no.

Is it an object of examination with the Commissioners, whether the sleeping-rooms are of a proper size considering the number of persons who sleep in them?—Most unquestionably.

Can you state the size of the rooms at Messrs. Miles's?—No.

Neither the length, breadth, and height?—I cannot.

Do the Commissioners, in passing by the bed-chambers, enquire the number of patients who sleep in each?—Certainly, there are the beds.

Has it never occurred to the Commissioners, that there were too many persons slept in each?—Yes; and it has been said, These rooms are too small.

Did they order any of the beds to be taken out?—No, they were not so small as to be a nuisance, unfortunately, they have too much air in those places instead of too little; if there were three people in a room of that size which is stated, and the window not closed, there would be danger of their being too cold rather than close.

Did you observe, that in some of the rooms there were no bedstead or cradles, but that the patient slept on straw?—No.

Did you ever look into the beds?—We have turned some of them down, generally at our visitation, in two or three of the rooms, taking them indiscriminately.

Did the form of the bedstead ever appear to you to be singularly inconvenient?—That for the sailors it is an uncomfortable one; they have stated it as necessary; generally speaking, in these houses, common bedsteads are used for patients.

Did you not see great objection to Insane persons of the male sex lying together?—It is a wrong thing, but it cannot be expected that a man who pays only ten shillings a week, should have a separate bed.

Did it come within the knowledge of the Commissioners, that the seamen confined at Hoxton slept, in several instances, two in a bed?—It did not; we have constantly objected to patients sleeping together.

Have they been separated?—They have told us they cannot afford to do more, and I have rather wondered they have done so much.

In case of your finding any fault, is there any report made to you of its being amended?—No, no report, but our own subsequent personal observation; but in case of any thing glaringly wrong, we make such visit almost immediately. In one house, for instance, we found patients most improperly chained; we immediately wrote officially, to insist upon the removal of the evil: we visited the house again within a week, and we found the evil was removed.

You have never expressly prohibited the practice of their sleeping two in a bed?—No; the parishes pay in most instances only ten shillings a week; and if we required more accommodation, the price must be raised, and the consequence of that might be, that the parishes might withdraw their patients altogether, and keep them in the workhouses, in which case they would be ten times worse off.

Did you observe how the rooms were ventilated and lighted?—It has been one great point with us to attend to ventilation throughout, and I believe we have done a great deal with respect to its improvement.

Are the windows and doors unglazed the whole year?—Some of them are: the greater part of this house is like a common dwelling-house.

Do you consider the bed-rooms as sufficiently ventilated?—I think, generally speaking, there is too much air there, rather than too little.

Did you visit Messrs. Miles's house in 1813?—Yes, on December the 16th.

What was the nature of your report?—"Very good and well-regulated houses."

Did you visit that house in 1812?—Yes; on the 25th November 1812.

What was the nature of your report then?—"That it was a well-regulated house."

Is the space allowed for exercise adequate to the necessity?—That is matter of opinion; I think it is.

The Naval patients are in the house you have visited, of Messrs. Miles?—They are.

Have you observed lately, in your visitations, the men chained?—A good many of the seamen are chained, and necessarily so. I myself think the handcuff the best mode of confinement, much better than the strait waistcoat.

What induces you to give a preference to the handcuffs over the strait-waistcoat?—The strait waistcoat is of stout and close texture, and retains the moisture of the body, creating heat and irritation; and the patient cannot even feed himself.

Do you believe that a strong person could break through a strait-waistcoat?—I have seen a man with a strait-waistcoat put on him, who has been out of it in ten minutes.

Do you not consider it possible to make a strait-waistcoat of such materials as would be strong enough to hold such a man?—I should suppose it was; but a man of that sort, could not wear one strait-waistcoat long, it would require to be changed; such a man would be much better handcuffed, or perhaps with a chain.

When did you visit a house at Kingsland, with the name of Glanville on the door?—The 5th of January last.

How many patients were there?—Three.

Men or women?—Women I think, but I am hardly certain.

Turn to the visit of that house last year?—It was on the 19th of April 1814; the number of patients was then three; the report then was “A comfortable house.”

Did you examine the rooms in which those women were confined?—Certainly; I went all over the house.

Were they in bed?—I think there is one woman constantly in bed there; but I have no notice of that sort.

Do you remember whether at either of your visitations you found a lad of 18 or 19 in bed?—Never, to my knowledge in bed.

Did you see the mistress of the house?—Yes.

How many servants had she?—I have not noted down; there were but three patients, who were none of them violently insane, none requiring medical treatment? they were rather debilitated in intellect; the woman herself and one maid seemed fully sufficient for the care of them. They are rather settled patients; they belonged to the aunt of Mrs. Bignell; Mrs. Glanville and she has since kept the house open for the use of these patients; it is rather a sort of lodging-house for patients who want care more than bodily restraint, and appears to me a comfortable house for such. This register, beginning with 1813, shews that she has received three patients since that time: there is the name of a male among them.

Were you aware of the practice of the women being kept perpetually in bed?—One of the women we have seen constantly in bed, seemingly as matter of choice; I recollect the persons of two of the women, and I am sure they have been there ever since 1808.

When did you last visit Mr. Warburton's house at Hoxton?—On the 28th of March.

How many patients were there?—About ninety.

What was the state of the house?—A very good house.

Were they crowded?—That is matter of opinion; the rooms are very large, and I should say, not. There is, however, in that house this inconvenience; we go there in the day, and perhaps the room is exceedingly comfortable; but all the bedsteads are press-bedsteads, so that we do not see the beds.

Turn to the Bethnal-Green house, occupied by Talbott; how many patients were confined there on your last visit?—"The 12th of January 1815, the number of patients, 360, of whom about 230 were sent by parishes; the number of keepers at present at home 17. Considerable improvements have been lately made in the accommodation of these houses: there is sufficient provision for the violent patients to be kept in separate rooms; the Commissioners consider these to be clean and well-regulated establishments; but that some divisions, and especially those of the pauper men and pay women, are very much too crowded; the secretary was directed to inform Mr. Warburton of this latter part of their opinion." Then on the 5th of January, we came to Rhodes's house: "The number of patients, 275, of whom about 215 are paupers; the pauper department, especially that appropriated to women, is unwholesomely crowded; some pauper men were chained upon their straw beds with only a rug to cover them, and not in any way defended from the external cold." I should state, that instead of writing to Mr. Warburton, I went to him myself and mentioned these inconveniences of the place; he stated the uncertainty of things at present, and that the great number depended upon temporary causes; but that if it continued, he would build another room for them. "The part of the establishment appropriated to private patients was well arranged, and the accommodation good; but to the floor of one of the apartments chains were affixed, which the Commissioners think ought to be removed;" the secretary was directed to communicate to Mr. Warburton the objections.

Do you recollect any particular house to which you could turn the attention of the Committee, where any of the objections in respect of management can be pointed out, as existing in the greatest degree?—It is a difficult question; but as it is urged, it appears to me that one of the best houses for building and accommodation, is the worst in point of management; especially of Payne's.

How many days does the visitation last?—Usually about six.

How many houses do you visit on a day?—That depends upon circumstances; some days perhaps, two; others, six or eight.

How many licensed houses have you to visit altogether?—Thirty-four.

Can you state to the Committee, the area you have to go round, the number of miles?—I cannot state it in miles: The Act places under the Commissioners, all houses in the county of Middlesex, and within seven miles; Lewisham, Stockwell, Wallham Green, Enfield, and Plaistow, are the extreme points of the circle.

What may be the number of patients the Commissioners are expected to visit yearly, under the Act?—Under 2,000.

Have any unnecessary restraints occurred to you, in the course of your visitation?—We have thought so; we have in several instances been of opinion, that persons were improperly chained.

Are you of opinion, that the state in which the patients are as to the degree of Insanity, is nearly the same in the various houses, or are there any houses at which you observed a greater number of disorderly and outrageous patients, on the average of numbers?—No; I do not think that that is the case.

Under similar circumstances of payment, would you not apprehend that there would be about an equal number of keepers, to the same number of patients, required in each Establishment?—I think so; but they are enabled to employ one patient to assist another, in many instances.

Have you any reason to imagine, that keepers of any of these houses have substituted a more rigorous confinement than was necessary, in the room of proper attendants?—Yes, I think so.

Lunæ, 22^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

SIR LUCAS PEPYS, M. D. called in, and Examined.

HAVE the goodness to state to the Committee, whether you are now one of the Visiting Physicians of the houses for the reception of insane persons, under the Act of the 14th of the King?—I am.

How long have you discharged the duties of that office?—I have done it several times; having been President of the College for seven years, of course I must have attended three different visitations during that time : I am now a common visitor, one of the five.

Your authority extends to houses within seven miles of London ?
—It does.

Have the goodness to say how often in the year the visitors go round those houses ?—There is no fixed time for going round the houses ; every house is visited once in the course of the year, several twice, sometimes oftener.

When those visits are made, do the physicians go round the whole of the house ?—The whole of the house ; they endeavour to see every patient, and every room, that is their object ; always to see every patient and every room.

On what occasions are enquiries made, as to the medical treatment of the patients ?—Every thing relating to the patient, as well as can be enquired during the time : In a very large house it is impossible to enquire particularly, but if any persons desire to have conversation with the Commissioners, they are always attended to.

Does the time which can be spared by the visitors enable them to make very minute and particular enquiries, as to the treatment of the patients ?—By no means.

On those visits has attention been paid to the number of patients who are under restraint, either by irons or strait waistcoats ?—Those who are particularly insane are evidently so, and therefore more attention is paid to those who are apparently convalescent, and wish to have conversation with the Commissioners ; those evidently insane there is no use in talking to.

With respect to those under severe restraint, has the time permitted the Commissioners to enquire as to the necessity for that degree of restraint ?—Whenever there has appeared any confinement by chains, they have been particularly attended to, and in every case the chains have been ordered to be altered for strait-waistcoats ; but among the pauper patients it is very difficult to get rid of chains : we have pretty well got rid of them. In my opinion there is no necessity for chains in any state of insanity where they can have sufficient attendants.

Can you form any judgment as to the number of attendants that will be necessary for outrageous patients, to prevent chains being used ?—It is very difficult to draw any line about it ; it must depend so much upon the particular circumstances : two keepers to three or four patients would be fully sufficient I should conceive.

In the visits made by the Commissioners, have they an opportunity of learning whether medical assistance is given for the cure of insanity, where there is no bodily complaint ?—In our enquiries, we have found very little attention paid to the cure of the patients.

Have you had an opportunity of observing whether the outrageous patients and the quiet ones are kept separate, or whether they are mixed?—A great deal too much mixed.

All the provisions of the Act of the 14th of the King are attended to, as far as depends upon the College?—I believe most strictly.

Have any instances occurred of persons who have been deprived of their licences, applying for a renewal?—I do not know of any.

Are you of opinion that the mixture of the quiet patients with the outrageous ones, very considerably retards the cure of the former?—I should apprehend it would, very considerably.

Are you of opinion that the strait-waistcoat is a less painful restraint than irons?—Far preferable to irons, and less painful.

In the course of your duty of visiting the houses in and near London, have you had occasion to visit the house of Sir Jonathan Miles at Hoxton?—Frequently.

What is your opinion with respect to the accommodation afforded to the patients there, as to the size of the rooms, and the care of the patients, generally?—In general, the house is extremely well appointed and taken care of, but it is much too full; there are too great a number of patients to be under the care of any one superintendent.

Have you observed any thing in the treatment of any of the patients there that attracted your attention particularly, as to their being in a state of cleanliness or otherwise?—In general, the rooms are kept very clean and sweet, as well as the nature of their confinement will admit of.

Have you any reason to be confident that you saw all the rooms when you visited that house?—I apprehend we saw all the rooms that we required to see; in short, every room that is not open we require to be opened, sometimes one Commissioner sees two or three, and another Commissioner sees two or three others.

Have you any opportunity of knowing whether in any instance two people slept together in the same bed?—I am afraid that is often done; I do not know particularly that it is done at Sir Jonathan Miles's, but it is often done.

Are you of opinion that is a pernicious practice?—Very pernicious, and ought to be avoided; but amongst the paupers it is almost impossible, with such a number as they have, to avoid it; the pay is not sufficient.

Did any thing occur to you, as to the size of the rooms, in proportion to the number of people to sleep in them?—I think they are well proportioned to the number of patients; they are well ventilated.

In visits made to that house, did it happen to you to have seen any patients who were insensible to the calls of nature, in the same room with other patients?—I think not; I think the dirty patients are always kept separate in their sleeping-rooms.

And in their day-rooms?—Yes, I think they are.

In the course of the duty performed by the Commissioners, do they visit Bethlem Hospital?—No, they have no jurisdiction over Bethlem.

You consider that as exempt?—Yes, particularly so, under the Act.

Do you always compare the number of persons in confinement with the certificates?—One of the Commissioners generally looks at the certificates, to see that they are proper.

Is there any thing like a personal examination, so as to ascertain that those whose certificates are shewn to you, are in point of fact confined there?—That is almost impossible; there are four hundred patients, some of whom have been there ten or twenty years; the certificates of those lately admitted are examined; the penalty is upon the house, in case of their being received without a certificate.

Do not you think a sort of table might be so arranged, as to enable you to see directly the persons in the house, classed according to the certificates?—I think it would be very easy, and that it would be useful; but it has not been done.

You have informed the Committee, that upon your visitation of any house you endeavour to see all the patients confined in that house, and all the rooms; what are the means you take to see all the patients and all the rooms?—We have our secretary's list: With regard to the number confined in that house, we ask the question of the keeper of the house, How many have you here? That being answered, we then proceed immediately to see the different patients, and as far as the secretary can in the time, he takes down the individuals' names as he goes on.

What is the check you have upon the keeper's account?—The book.

As far as you have time to use it?—Yes.

Do you not apprehend that when the number of patients amounts to so many as has been mentioned, three or four hundred, it would be easy for some persons to be introduced into the house, and kept there, without any check upon them from the certificates?—Certainly it would be very easy to do it.

Would not such a table as has already been alluded to, prevent such abuse?—No doubt.

By irons; do you mean chains to the wall or bedstead?—I mean any restraint by iron.

In point of fact, are you acquainted with the mode of confinement which has been practised in Bethlem for years past?—Not personally, only by conversation: I have often talked to Dr. Monro upon the subject; he thinks them necessary in Bethlem.

Be good enough to inform the Committee, whether you do not think a strait-waistcoat is more unfavourable to health, than manacles confining the wrist?—I think it is more unfavourable to health if it is continued.

May it not be unfavourable to respiration?—I should think not: It must be very heating.

On those visits, does the secretary take minutes of all the proceedings?—He takes minutes of every thing that passes; those minutes are read afterwards, after they are drawn out; at the next meeting, they are read over to us, and we sign them, those who are present at the examination.

And any thing that appeared to you, either as to the size of the rooms or the treatment of the patients, or any other occurrence that attracted your attention, would appear upon those minutes?—Certainly.

You have told the Committee, that two keepers would be sufficient for three or four outrageous patients: upon the average, putting the placid with the outrageous, what number would you allow?—There are many situations of patients where one keeper would be perfectly competent to take care of thirty or forty; there are too few keepers at all the houses, in my opinion.

Have you stated that to the keepers?—Yes, we have.

Have they, in consequence of your stating that, increased the number?—They have not.

Do the Commissioners examine into the admission of patients, since their last visitation?—Generally; one of the Commissioners takes the certificates, while the other two perhaps are going through the house and looking at the bed-rooms.

The certificates are, in point of fact, examined?—Yes: they are.

Does it always appear, that they are signed by persons who are known by some one of the Commissioners to be a practitioner in medicine?—Very often inferior, and in the opinion of the Commissioners, very improper persons do give certificates. Every man who writes his name apothecary, is competent to sign a certificate, that is one very great evil; it would be extremely desirable that that should be corrected.

In a public receptacle for Maniacs, where the proportion of violent patients might be supposed to be as great as usual, what number of keepers would you suppose were adequate to the proper attendance on 120 patients?—There certainly ought not to be more than 20 patients to one keeper; there ought to be five keepers at least, taking the good and the bad together.

What number of Commissioners attend?—Five.

On entering any one of the licensed houses, you divide the duty?—Just as it happens; if it is a small house we go through it altogether.

When you last visited Hoxton, did you personally see all the sleeping rooms?—I believe two only went to see the dormitories.

Were you one of the two?—No; I took the examination of the licences that day.

Has it occurred to you within these few years, to have seen those rooms?—Often.

You spoke to the sweetness of the sitting-rooms?—Yes; I think they are well ventilated, but too much crowded.

Have you not been struck with an offensive smell on entering the sleeping-rooms?—Amongst the paupers, not amongst the others, in all the houses the paupers are too much crowded.

Do not the beds touch nearly?—In some rooms they do; but the rooms have been opened of course before we go in the forenoon, and ventilated.

Do they know when you are coming?—By no means; we are bound always to keep it secret, we never go in our own carriages, but in chaises or hackney-coaches, that they may not see us coming.

Are your visits made at pretty regular intervals, or are they sometimes uncertain?—Perfectly uncertain.

Are you of opinion that it is probable any abuses of considerable magnitude may exist between the intervals of your visits?—Very considerable abuses certainly may exist; but then they know nothing of our coming, so they must be always prepared for us. We ask no questions; we have the doors opened, and walk into the rooms; it is done as well as it can be under the circumstances, but the Commissioners ought to be a longer time in each house.

You wish to see the master of the house, of course?—We never go without enquiring for him.

He is not always forthcoming?—No, certainly not, on account of the uncertainty of our coming.

Who in such case produces the certificates?—The master of the house has them all filed, and the wife or the head-keeper generally has them ready to produce.

DR. LATHAM called in, and Examined.

AS President of the College, you are one of the visiting physicians of the houses, for the confinement of Insane persons? I am.

Be so good as to state how often the Commissioners visit the houses for Insane persons in and near London, under the authority of the Act of the 14th of the King?—We visit all the houses once a year; and if there is any particular reason, we visit again, and sometimes even a third time, if the state of any house seems to require it.

On those visits, do the Commissioners examine the state of the rooms, with respect to the number of the patients contained in them?—I believe, always.

And of the patients themselves?—And of the patients themselves.

Are enquiries made whether medicine is prescribed to the patients, when the patients are not subject to any bodily complaints?—I suppose that in most of the houses medicine is seldom or never administered, except in cases of bodily complaint.

Are you of opinion that if medicines were occasionally administered to patients for insanity only, it would be productive of any chance of recovery?—I think it is probable it would.

Are the outrageous and the quiet patients in general in the house, visited by the Commissioners whilst kept together?—I am afraid they are kept too much together.

Are you of opinion that that circumstance considerably retards the cure of the quiet patients?—Undoubtedly.

Have you, in the visits to these houses, seen many instances where the patients are under severe restraint?—Certainly; there are some that it is necessary to keep under very severe restraint.

In irons or in strait-waistcoats?—Usually in a strait-waistcoat. We have generally, as far as was in our power, done away the use of irons and chains; but there are some cases in which I think it is impossible chains can be dispensed with. One case, particularly forces itself upon my recollection; the case of a man committed from Newgate for murdering his wife in Shoe-lane, a powerful and strong man, and it was necessary to keep him in chains to restrain him from doing mischief; In that state I saw him two or three months after he had destroyed his wife. He could not be confined in a strait-waistcoat; but these cases are not frequent.

Are you of opinion, if a sufficient number of keepers were employed, that restraint by irons, or a strait-waistcoat, might be dispensed with?—I think it impossible that restraint of some kind or other could be dispensed with, even with any number of keepers. Violence takes place sometimes very suddenly. In a visitation not long ago, my attention was called to a person whom I conversed with some time, and so much was I of opinion that this person might probably be left at large, that I desired some of my colleagues to examine him. He perhaps might fancy that I had left him rather abruptly, and notwithstanding I thought it possible this man might be sane, he vociferated in an instant, "I am Jesus Christ;" and it was almost impossible to restrain him from doing violence. A paroxysm may come on therefore when it is least expected.

Can you form any conjecture of the number of keepers that would be necessary for the care of 100 persons, taking the usual average of outrageous and quiet patients?—I cannot very easily answer that question. The mode of confinement is certainly exceedingly improper in many of these houses. They will probably, in a room of such an area as this, have forty or fifty persons confined; some with strait-waistcoats, some with handcuffs, and others apparently very composed; so much so, that we have sometimes supposed that the keepers themselves might be insane patients, mistaking them, in truth, for the patients. I believe it is no unusual thing to employ those who are getting a little better as keepers to the rest; we always enquire the number of keepers that they have; and according to circumstances, we say, That is very well, or, you do not seem to have a sufficient number.

Has it often occurred to you, to find the number of keepers insufficient?—It may be thought so; but I cannot make up my mind to say it is often so. It always struck us, that there were more patients confined in a given space than there ought to be. And the observation the keepers make in reply to what I have stated, is this, That really the sum which they receive is so very trifling, that they cannot afford better accommodation.

How are their bed-rooms?—I think not so much crowded as their sitting-rooms.

In the course of visits by the Commissioners, have you ever visited the house of Sir Jonathan Miles at Hoxton?—Yes.

Please to state any observation you made on your visit?—If I recollect right, the minute we made upon the last visitation, was very much in favour of the house. Indeed, I visited a patient so late as Saturday last, a private person; and in the apartment where I saw that person, and the apartments through which I went to see that person, there seemed to be considerable order and regularity.

But in the ordinary visits made by the visitors, did you go through all the rooms in Sir Jonathan Miles's house?—I believe I did every one, bed-rooms and all, and examined their beds.

Did it appear that the space allowed for their beds in their sleeping-rooms was generally sufficient for the patients?—I think there was space enough.

Among the pauper patients?—I think so; one may think them rather more crowded than is right; But the sum paid for this accommodation is in truth so very trifling, that you cannot expect that accommodation for the paupers as for those that pay better; but in the rooms of the paupers they had two or three blankets upon each bed. The man said, he believed they had all three a-piece; we examined one, and found only two blankets upon it, but the man said, we should find most or all the rest, as had been stated.

In the sitting-rooms, were the cleanly patients kept with the wet patients, as they call them?—It will often happen to be the case, that there will be some uncleanly persons, who from paying the same price by the week, are put in the same situation as the others; but if they are habitually uncleanly, I believe they are removed.

Is it the practice of the visitors to ask, whether they are separated or not?—We ask to see the room where they generally put the uncleanly patients, and we have usually seen the rooms where they put their uncleanly patients.

Did you pay any particular attention when you were there last, to the Naval patients?—I cannot say I paid more attention to them than to the rest; Sir Jonathan is now making some alterations with respect to the Naval patients, at this time.

Did you ever enquire whether those patients who are insensible to the calls of nature, are mixed in the same room with the other patients in the day-time, or sleep in the same room at night?—I believe they do not sleep together; we should condemn it much, if they did.

Should you not, if you found two patients sleeping together, think it highly reprehensible?—Highly so.

Should you not order them to separate them?—We should reprehend the practice, but we have no authority whatever to go beyond this reprehension.

You have this authority, that you could refuse the licence at the end of the year?—No, we have no power to refuse a licence to any man.

Did you ever enquire whether officers of the Navy, who were there confined, slept in the same bed as persons not officers in the Navy?—I have not enquired; but it was stated to me, that an objection of that kind had been started, and they said, no such thing had ever happened there.

Did it ever fall in your way to see a Report that was made by Dr. Weir, the Inspector of the state of Naval Hospitals, in 1812?—I believe I have seen the Report.

Did you not in consequence pay particular attention, in your next visitation, to see that the circumstances contained in that report so complained of, did or did not exist?—I think it is likely that attention was paid to it, but I was not one of the Commissioners at that time; but I believe, partly in consequence of that report, and of the Bill which was in agitation last year, that all, or at least a majority of the houses have been very much mended. Some of the smaller houses never will, and never can be mended, unless Parliament arm the Commissioners with greater authority than they now have.

Are you acquainted, that in Miles's house they use a bed, a cradle, and a double bed?—I have seen what may be termed a double cradle, with a partition; but that seems to me to be convenient enough.

If for instance, in such a double cradle a dirty patient slept with a clean patient, should you not think that highly objectionable?—Not more than if they slept in distinct ones, for they are in fact separate, and do not touch each other. That does not appear to me reprehensible; considering the sort of people confined in these cradles, those that are put into these wooden beds or cradles, are, generally, those that are unclean: but the nearer the clean patient is to the unclean patient, the more uncomfortable he may be supposed to be.

It never fell under your examination, during the examination of Miles's house, that an officer with clean habits was placed in the same double cradle with a seaman of dirty habits?—No, it did not.

Of course, if that had fallen within your observation, you would have considered it highly reprehensible?—Certainly; because the classing of an officer with a private seaman would not have been overlooked.

You would also consider it highly reprehensible, if, either in the day-room or bed-room, the officer of the navy was classed with the private seaman, or persons of inferior condition?—Of course it is proper that each, as near as may be, should be put with those of his own order.

Did you ever observe, that the practice to which I have alluded, took place at Miles's?—I do not know that I have: but in truth, if I kept a Madhouse, I should rather be disposed to mix the patients. A person that has been accustomed to a certain train of ideas, and has gone mad under such a train, I should mix with other persons.

Have you ever seen the old Bethlem or St Luke's?—It is a long time since I have visited them: I consider them more especially as places of confinement: I consider that all the Madhouses under the present regime are more calculated for places of confinement than as places for cure.

Are not you of opinion, that if attention was paid to the cure of patients of that description, it might frequently succeed?—It cannot I conceive succeed under the present plan of confinement, to its full extent. When the governors of Bethlem were about to rebuild it, they issued an advertisement, inviting those who had an opinion to give upon the subject, to give it. I wrote a paper and transmitted it to the governors; recommending, That in their arrangement for the confinement of those unfortunate people, they should take care to have sufficient room for exercise. That they should employ some in gardening, others in planting, &c. That they should without exception, put them to some sort of bodily exertion; and if they could not make their labour productive, that they should have keepers even to play with them at tennis, fives, or any thing else which might be calculated to change the ideas they had previously entertained. It appears to me, that the area which the people in new Bethlem have to exercise themselves in, is much too small for any arrangement of the kind, that I took the liberty of suggesting to them.

But upon the whole, are you of opinion that if more attention was paid to the cure of those patients, it might not in some instances succeed?—My opinion is, it certainly would. In answering that question, I am very far from imputing blame to the keepers of the Madhouses, I rather impute blame to the relatives of the unfortunate people themselves, who shut them up there, in order that they may be out of the way; and that, in nine cases out of ten, is the fact. They get them away from their family into safe keeping. I have no hesitation in saying, that in nine cases out of ten, there is very little attention paid on the part of their relatives to those that are confined; and if they were placed in proper situations, where their minds could be attended to, and where they could have a little more bodily exercise, they might more frequently be relieved.

Would not medical assistance be of use?—I think it might; but the unfavourable circumstances under which they are placed, the crowded situation in which they are put, makes it almost impossible for any medical plan to be followed up with advantage.

You say, that you gentlemen Commissioners under the Act, are not aware that two male patients are put in the same bed?—No, not exactly in the same bed; they are put into those double cradles.

You said you did not only inspect the bed-room, but the bed clothes; in doing that you must be struck with the difference of size between bed and bed: the Committee have learned there are six beds with two in each: when you examined the house of Sir Jonathan Miles the other day, did you visit the pauper patients?—Last Saturday I only went to see a single patient.

When you last visited it with the other visiting physicians, did you go through the bed-rooms where the pauper patients were confined?—I believe I did, but it is a very extensive house.

Do you remember whether there was any offensive smell in any of the rooms?—There generally is in all Madhouses; for it seldom happens that there are not some confined who are unclean with respect to their water.

Did you, when you were there, see any sick person lying in a wet ward where the paupers slept during the day-time?—I do not know that I did; but it is possible.

Do you consider the space allowed for exercise as an airing-ground at all adequate for the use of Naval patients at Hoxton?—Generally speaking, the airing-ground is too little every where; it is merely a space to walk in, but is not for the labour they ought to take, or the amusements they ought to be allowed. I think I before observed, that since the Act was brought into Parliament last year, that Madhouses, generally speaking, are very much improved.

It cannot have escaped you, that Sir Jonathan Miles has much enlarged his ground?—He is now making improvements, which commenced about six weeks ago.

What are the improvements that are now going on?—Improvements with respect to the accommodation of the Naval patients, which, however, curtail the accommodations for the rest.

Whether in your visits to private Madhouses you enquire into their diet?—It is generally observed upon by some of us.

What opinion have you occasion to form respecting their diet?—The diet has been in the larger houses very good; in some of the smaller, I am afraid very meagre.

What is the diet at Miles's?—They kill a great deal of meat; I believe the general diet is mutton and beef; they make very little discrimination in the food for their patients, which I think should be done.

Did you ever make any enquiry as to the quality of the food?—Not particularly; but I think in the larger houses the patients live well enough.

Do you not think, that in some of the houses they live too well for their cure?—I think they do; when I have seen a gentleman with his bottle of wine set before him, and two or three dishes of meat, I have thought that not the method in which insanity ought to be treated.

Should you conceive that a room of eight feet square was sufficient for a sleeping place for three people?—It should contain three beds; I do not know how they can put three beds in a room of that size.

Do you know, in fact, that there are three persons sleeping in that space at Miles's?—One of Miles's people told me on Saturday, that a complaint had been made that two keepers and one gentleman slept in the same room.

You did not enquire whether two people slept in one of these beds?—No, I did not go then as a visitor; I went to visit a private patient.

Whether you do not think that a room eight feet square is of too small dimensions even for two patients?—No doubt about it.

That it must be very prejudicial to their health?—Undoubtedly; but as I said before, it is not for cure but for confinement that most of these places are established.

Has it often occurred to you to see patients visited by their relatives?—Not very often. I have too much reason to believe that their relatives, after they have put them into these houses, are not very solicitous about them.

What is your opinion of the effect produced upon the minds of insane persons, by inflicting upon them more severe coercion than the state of the complaint renders necessary?—A certain degree of coercion may be necessary; but the excess of coercion can by no means be proper. Coercion appears to me to be necessary, in the first instance, for the safety of the patient himself; in the next place, for the security of those about him; and it is more especially necessary to convince the insane person himself that he has some superior. Coercion, in my mind, is of more moment in that point of view than in any other. In some instances, therefore, though coercion may be beyond what is absolutely necessary, it may nevertheless be proper, inasmuch as it makes the insane person to feel that he has a superior who can controul him; for unless the insane person is convinced that his keeper has such controul over him, and that he will exercise it if necessary, you have very little chance of curing a madman; it is difficult to be quite sure whether the coercion is unnecessarily severe or otherwise. I have often desired the strait-waistcoat to be taken off, and have been very glad to have it put on again instantly; though a patient has promised that he would conduct himself properly, yet his mind has not been steady enough to keep that promise.

Do you apply the same observations to the coercion by irons and chains?—Chains are pretty much disused, but now and then are necessary; and if the coercion of the strait-waistcoat be not sufficient, they must have recourse to irons occasionally.

The mode of coercion particularly alluded to was that of chaining a patient to the walls, as has been frequently practised?—I consider the chaining them to the walls to be generally improper, but there may be cases which absolutely require it.

Do not you think a ligature from behind the shoulder, confining the upper joints of the arms of the patient, renders him incapable of doing mischief?—That is generally done better with a strait-waistcoat.

Are you of opinion that the time which the Commissioners can possibly spare in their visitations, is sufficient for them to examine minutely and attentively the state of the house, and of the patients in it?—The examination necessarily is not so minute as perhaps it ought to be. In going into such a house as Miles's, if we are to examine each individual patient, and enter into conversation with him, a week would not be sufficient for the purpose. If we see them outrageous, there can be no doubt about them; if we see them idiots, there can be no doubt about them: but those that look otherwise, we are in the constant habit of speaking to; in half a minute we are, perhaps, convinced that they are equally insane with the rest. The first person I conversed with after I had been there, I had reason to believe was sufficiently sane; and upon desiring my colleagues to ask him questions, he immediately broke out into very strong and blasphemous language; so that even those we speak to we often find will conduct themselves very well, and yet be perfectly insane. The first time I was a Commissioner, we examined a house at Plaistow; there were two women confined, which I thought were not insane: The keeper said they were, and that we were mistaken: We desired them to write to their friends, to give them a trial: We were all of opinion these women were improperly confined, and desired their friends would take them out. Upon our next visitation the following year, I had, of course, considerable curiosity to know what had become of these two people: One had drowned herself, and the other had hanged herself. So that if even we suppose the patient is really sane, we feel a great deal of difficulty, and we must very often trust to what the keepers say. We are obliged now and then to take their opinion upon the subject as to whether they have for the last month been orderly, and whether their friends talk of removing them; and if no friends have been there, which is too often the case, we have requested the friends to be informed of our opinion.

Do you make a practice of enquiring into the character and conduct of the under-keepers?—I do not know that we do particularly; the masters of the houses are interested in having tolerably good people about them, and it is rather a beneficial occupation, I believe, for the keepers themselves; and if their conduct is bad, we have no means of removing them.

Supposing you discovered a keeper to be drunk, to be passionate, or deficient in courage, and so be inclined to adopt more violent means than necessary?—We can reprehend it, but nothing more; the Act gives us no power at all in that and many other particulars.

Mercurii, 24^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Doctor LATHAM attends, and delivers in the following Statement:

“ HINTS respecting the general Management and Employment of Insane Persons.

“ HAVING observed in the public papers an address, accompanied with proposals for the erection of a new Hospital for Lunatics, I could not refrain from throwing together a few ideas which I had entertained upon the subject; for it has long been my opinion, that the unfortunate persons, for whose benefit such houses have been constructed, might, under a more enlarged system, reap more extended advantages than they at present receive from the very restricted mode of confinement now generally followed.

“ I have repeatedly been a Commissioner, appointed by the Royal College of Physicians under the Act “ For the regulating of Madhouses.” In the execution of my official duties, I have always been struck with the decorum and propriety of behaviour which a single keeper has been able to maintain among the majority of the unhappy persons whose unfortunate condition has rendered their confinement necessary. The question on such occasions, which naturally presented itself, was whether that management, by which such great decorum was produced in an assemblage of fifty or a hundred persons, might not be extended so as to provide some occupation also, which might be beneficial to the unhappy patients, and productive likewise to the Establishment. Reflect but an instant upon the situation in which a man must find himself, when, upon the least dawn of returning reason, he sees himself surrounded by objects under all the different gradations of mental misery; and it will at once be conceded to me, that any thing, however trivial, upon which his faculties could then be exercised, might contribute in an incalculable degree towards his comfort, and consequently towards his speedier recovery. Consider too, the influence which the employment of the body possesses also over the mind, and it will readily be acknowledged, that something ought to be devised, by which the bodily strength of the patient might be made subservient towards its comfort and direction, at this most critical period of its weak and irregular condition.

“ It is a fact not to be controverted, that in those Asylums for Lunatics, where labour makes a part of the medical regimen, a greater number of the patients recover, than in those receptacles where, from the superior rank and opulence of the patients, nothing like bodily exertions are required; and surely it must be a mistaken notion to suppose, when a disease has levelled to the same common standard the peer and the beggar, that one must be deprived of a remedy which is affording comfort, and perhaps a cure, to the other. For this disease is not like many other visitations of Providence, which may afflict a man without destroying those consolations which are to be derived from his superior means and rank in society: But here the mind being equally lost in all, the man can feel no more actual gratification who possesses such distinctions, in reality, than the poor wretch who is constantly fancying himself in possession of them; for every thing is either false in perception, or perceived to no salutary or proper purpose, by both of them. Why then can it be supposed, that an establishment, according to the rank of a person should be necessary, when from that very establishment it not unfrequently happens, that the source of the mental misery can be traced; and why is the equipage of carriages and servants, sometimes indeed even legally authorized and allowed, when perhaps the privation of those most unnecessary appendages might constitute the first most important step towards correcting those ideas, on which the cure so very materially depends? Painful indeed it is to see a man devoid of all mental energy waited upon by a number of servants, supplied with all the luxuries of life, and carried about in his coach with all the accustomed pomp and grandeur of elevated rank; who, had he but the least glimmering of reason, would tell you, that he derives not any enjoyment from such indulgences, which are habitual to him, and which cannot be otherwise than trifling and illusory, when compared with such exercises as might call forth his bodily exertions, and along with them, in a more earnest and effectual manner, possibly engage his mind also.

“ On the importance, then, of some plan which may have for its object that sort of labour, which, by exercising the body, may occupy the mind also, I think there can be no doubt; and I trust it may not be deemed too presumptuous in me, who have seen something of the arrangements necessary for Insane persons, if I offer my observations for the consideration of such as may be contemplating any new Establishment on a large scale. And first, then, I would observe to the Governors of Bethlem, who are now about to build their new Hospital, that the site should be chosen with the full approbation of their intelligent physician; that the plan of the building should combine utility with convenience; that the solitary cells should be placed where the noise from the more furious Maniacs can least incommode those who are becoming more tranquil; and that these should so be disposed, that their cells may communicate with small apartments, which will allow only of a few being associated together; and where, as in an Infirmary, their general health, which often very materially suffers, may be more fully restored; and where they may wait until that period when the medical officer shall deem it prudent for them to mix together in greater number.

“ But here, unfortunately, the usual arrangements for Lunatics terminate; for afterwards, there is no diversity of occupation, but the same horrid spectacle constantly presenting itself to agonize the mind, which, in its then tottering and enfeebled state, cannot be supposed able to support itself, but must often sink again into that abyss of misery from which it seemed to have been emerging. Here, then, is the precise period when some pleasurable object should be presented to the mind, instead of those which are terrifying; when its occupation should become amusing to it, and its pursuits rational. And this must be effected by finding an easy and proper employment for the body. A large and spacious gallery might be so constructed as to admit of various exercises in rainy seasons; and when the weather was fine, the more innocent diversions might be allowed in an open court, which should be flagged throughout, and provided with little boxes for the patients to retire into, when from the labour of fives, the hoop, or the skipping rope, the intendants should think it prudent for them to rest themselves: For the patients should never be permitted to manage their own exercises, which might sometimes end in sudden tumult; but should always be under the guidance of two or three keepers, each of whom, as a sort of ludi-magister, might on every occasion be appealed to as the director and regulator of their sports.

“ But if a man can play, he has also generally strength enough to work; and although he might not be unequal to a full day of labour, yet his time should not therewith be altogether so occupied as to afford but little opportunity for amusement. Such an alternation of exercise as that which arises out of actual labour, relieved with play, would naturally arrest his attention; and he would soon be collected enough in his behaviour, to shew that he was sensible of any little indulgences which might be extended to him, and which, in a well-regulated Establishment, would generally be at hand to be afforded him. Of all the different sorts of labour, I cannot be supposed capable of pointing out the most proper. A garden, I presume, consisting of a few acres, would supply the means of an almost endless variety; for it might be so planned and appropriated, as to admit of digging, planting, weeding, hoeing, wheeling, and every thing else connected with horticultural labour and amusement; and one part of it should be a bowling-green. The sawing of stone is another easy and most useful occupation: The manufacture of osier-work, and of twine, and a variety of other safe and useful occupations would soon present themselves; in many of which the female patients might also be employed, as well as in mending and washing, and getting up the linen of the whole Establishment, but I will not become tedious, by enumerating the many matters from which might be derived benefit to the patients and advantage to the Institution; since several of much importance would necessarily connect themselves with it, if conducted upon the enlarged scale which I have taken the liberty of proposing, and obtrude themselves daily, for the consideration of an active manager. Here, then, I will close my observations, with a hope, that what I have urged, under a conviction of its practicability, may sometime or other be adopted, for the relief of the most deplorable malady that can possibly afflict mankind."

Jovis, 8^o die Junii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Doctor JOHN LATHAM was again called in, and Examined.

HAVE you reason to believe that any house or houses within the Bills of Mortality, are in the practice of receiving Patients without a license?—Last year we were under the necessity of prosecuting a person, who we understood was receiving Patients without a license; we prosecuted her to conviction; when she was called up for judgment, we found in truth that she was not able to pay the fine, and had absconded. After a lapse of some months, we heard of this very person keeping a house under another name, at Twickenham; we immediately sent down our solicitor, with proper officers, to arrest her for the debt; she was committed to prison, and after having remained there a certain length of time, she petitioned the Commissioners for her release; this however we refused to grant her; she was afterwards, though opposed by the Commissioners, set at liberty under the Insolvent Act; and we have reason to believe, at this very moment, that she has opened another house at Richmond.

What became of the costs of that suit?—They were paid by the Commissioners from first to last; the costs were nearly 400*l.* besides considerable trouble we had from time to time.

Have you reason to believe that there are other houses without licenses receiving Patients, within the Bills of Mortality?—We know in truth, that houses for the reception of one Patient only are opened, and a great many of them with proper Keepers; but that leads, in my opinion, to this very great inconvenience: If I can put my relative that may be insane into one of those houses, I can put my relative that is sane into one of those houses, without any sort of difficulty; therefore a rich person has it in his power at any time to evade the Act altogether.

As the Law now stands, a house keeping one insane Patient not requiring a license, half a dozen standing close together may be included, and thus escape observation?—That is the case certainly; I conceive they should be liable in some way or other to the visitation of the Commissioners, or it may be productive of very serious inconvenience.

Within the Bills of Mortality you have no reason to believe that any other Madhouse unlicensed keeps more than one Patient?—No, we do not know that there are others, but if we did, even in this case at Richmond, though it is an aggravated case, we cannot prosecute any more, we have not the means of prosecuting, and if prosecuted, it is, as the Committee will perceive, easily evaded.

As the Law now stands, the Keeper of any house in the country, not within the Bills of Mortality, is required to return a Patient within a fortnight of his admission, under the penalty of 100*l.* to the College of Physicians?—Yes.

Do you believe that return is always made?—I fear, not always made; there are some places from which no return whatever has been made; we have reason to believe that there are a great number of houses in several of the counties which have never been licensed by the Justices; I think I can speak to one in the county of Chester, in the very neighbourhood of Chester; there is no return of any having been licensed there.

Consequently they cannot be visited?—Certainly not. There is another point, as to the licensing those houses out of the immediate jurisdiction of the College, which I would wish to mention; the postage of a very considerable correspondence, and many other expenses, are defrayed from the funds of our commission, which has authority within the county of Middlesex, and over the houses within the jurisdiction of the College; and it appears objectionable to me that the county of Middlesex shall be at the expense of proceedings as to houses in other parts of the kingdom.

Are not half the fines applicable to the same object?—Yes, but we have not the means of enforcing the payment of the fines; and the Committee will observe, in the instance I have stated, that we were defeated in obtaining any part of the fine; if the commission was fully put to work, we should think it our duty to look into several other matters, but the funds are so small they would not defray the expense of any legal proceeding.

The Law of the 14th of the King directs the Magistrates to chuse two of their own body to attend you on your visitation, has that nomination ever taken place?—Never with respect to the London District; I am not aware that that provision of the Act extends to us.

DR. RICHARD POWELL again called in, and delivered in the following Papers, pursuant to the directions of the Committee.

“ R. Powell, M. D. Secretary,

“ June 7th, 1815.”

“ No Returns have ever been received from any part of Wales.”

HAVE you reason to believe, that there are houses for the reception of insane persons, within the Bills of Mortality, that are not licensed?—No; there has been a house not licensed, certainly; I have some reason to think that there is one now in the neighbourhood of Richmond, which is not licensed.

Have you visited lately, Sir Jonathan Miles's house, at Hoxton?—Yes, we visited it on Tuesday, and chiefly in consequence of what had been mentioned in this Committee.

Did you observe any alterations in that house?—Yes, one of the courts is divided by a wall; which is not an improvement, in my opinion.

Was there a greater classification of patients?—No, not greater than heretofore.

It appears in your minute that is entered, that “ the Commissioners report that they found that all the apartments were perfectly sweet and clean, and the general conduct of the house was satisfactory in all respects, at the same time, keeping in mind the sums which were paid for the accommodation of the patients;” did you enquire, or did you see that the clean were separated from the unclean, and the violent from those who were in a less deranged state?—There always has been a separation, in the same degree that there is in this way; for example, there is a room in one division for the more violent patients, the other patients, if they choose, may have access to that room; they have another room to themselves, but they have access to the room where the more violent are kept.

Is it your opinion, that that state of classification can be considered as satisfactory?—I should say distinctly, as matter of opinion, not ; but that is matter of opinion ; I do not think classification is attended to enough any where.

Did you enquire whether two patients ever slept in the same bed?—Yes, we did.

Was it allowed that that practice still continued?—I think we saw six double beds, if I mistake not.

Do you mean six beds, each for two people?—Yes.

Is that also what you consider as satisfactory?—No ; but the general management is highly so ; I think double beds are improper ; but I should mention, we have occasionally taken a good deal of pains, to ascertain whether there are any improper practices in consequence ; we have had the evidence of the keepers, and the more rational lunatics, and we have no reason to believe that there are improper practices to any extent.

Have you visited lately, the house of Mr. Warburton, at Bethnal Green, under the care of Mr. Rhodes?—We have, on the 5th of January, 1815.

It appears by the Minutes, that “ the number of patients was 275, of whom about 215 were paupers ; that the paupers’ department, especially that appropriated to women, is unwholesomely crowded ; some pauper men were chained upon their straw beds, with only a rug to cover them, and not in any way defended from the external cold ;” what steps did the Commissioners take, in consequence of finding the establishment in that situation?—We communicated to Mr. Warburton, the objections made by the Commissioners, and I saw Mr. Warburton personally, and communicated the opinions of the Commissioners respecting such proceeding ; he said, that the state of lunatic houses was so uncertain, that he had refrained from going to expense ; but that he had it in contemplation to build, if the necessity should continue ; and that they were crowded then, in consequence of the New Bethlem not being yet opened.

Do you know whether any steps were taken on the part of Mr. Warburton, to provide the covering which was necessary?—I have reason to believe that there were, for he stated that it should be done immediately.

Have you visited that establishment since that period?—I believe we have not.

He has another house?—He has two establishments close together, the other houses seem to me to be better managed.

Did you not, in consequence of the condition in which you found some of the pauper patients, to whom your minute alludes, feel it your duty to enquire, whether the promises Mr. Warburton had personally made to you, had been kept by him?—We have not since visited the house, but we have always found Mr. Warburton ready to remedy any inconveniences complained of.

Does your confidence in Mr. Warburton's having acted according to your suggestions, arise from any thing more than supposition?—Yes, from experience in former cases.

That is five months ago; how often are you accustomed to visit?—Perhaps twice a year, or three times; perhaps once, if every thing is right; I think we visit those houses generally twice a year.

When did you visit the same house last, before your visit on the 5th of January, 1815?—On the 20th of May, 1814.

What was your report then?—"The pauper patients 150; clean and well regulated houses; but the pauper divisions are too much crowded."

Do you not think, that if on May the 20th, 1814, there were 150 pauper patients, which you then reported as too much crowded, the inconveniences arising from over-crowding of that division, must have been considerably increased when there were 215?—No doubt about it.

Did you, on May the 20th, 1814, make any representation to Mr. Warburton, on the subject of their being too much crowded?—I suppose it was done of course; there is no order entered, but I have no doubt it was done.

Finding that Mr. Warburton, so far from complying with your request, added 65 patients to a division, already too much crowded, what reason have you for saying, you always found Mr. Warburton ready to comply with the requests which the Commissioners have made?—Because we have found fault on various occasions; we have, for instance, visited the house again within a week; and we have found the circumstances which we complained of, remedied.

Do you not think that one of the greatest evils that can arise in an establishment of this nature, is, there being too many patients crowded together?—It is an evil; but then the Committee will bear in mind, that according to Mr. Warburton's account, the opening of Bethlem will take away his extra patients, and leave him only a moderate number; and I believe that is the case.

Turn to your last visit before to the same house?—On December 1st, 1813, there were 200 paupers; the minute is—"the paupers' department too much crowded."

When had you visited last before that?—June 21st, 1813, there were 190 pauper patients; the report entered is, "very good houses."

Has any enlargement been made of that house, during the period of your visitation?—Yes; great part of the house has been rebuilt; the apartments of the women paupers are new-built, but not those of the men paupers.

On December the 18th, 1812, there is the Report of the Commissioners, that there were 200 parish patients in the same house, "several of the pauper women were found chained to their bedsteads and naked, without any other means of covering themselves, but a hempen rug; the Commissioners resolved that the accommodation for paupers in this establishment, is infamously bad, and such as to require immediate reform;" what steps did you take upon that?—We wrote to Mr. Warburton to tell him of it immediately, and visited again the 24th of December.

What does your Report on that day state?—"That the improvement in the state of the paupers is extraordinarily great, and all the patients are now properly clad, notwithstanding that at the former visitation, Mr. Rhodes assured the Commissioners they could not be kept clothed."

Has not Mr. Warburton a second house at Bethnal Green, under the care of a man of the name of Talbot, in which the insane paupers of the parish of Mary-le-bone, and other parishes are kept?—There are two large houses, in which the poor of many parishes are kept; I cannot speak as to what parishes.

Have you not observed, in visiting the house under the care of Talbot, the property of Warburton, that less personal restraint is imposed upon the patients, and there were fewer without cloaths?—I think that is the case; it is a better managed house; I cannot speak to the numbers.

Have you not observed there are fewer wearing chains at Talbot's, than at Rhodes's?—I cannot answer that question from my recollection.

Are not the rooms at Talbot's improperly crowded with beds?—They are very much crowded.

Are not the airing grounds most inconvenient and close, particularly that for the women?—Certainly so; but that house also has been a good deal improved lately.

It appears by your minute, that on the 4th of December, 1811, Mr. Rhodes's house contained 160 paupers; the Report of the Commissioners is, "that the whole establishment is in great confusion, and a great part of the house is rebuilding." There is the case of a young woman, whom the Commissioners say, "they saw no reason, from her conversation and conduct during their visitation, to consider insane," and they directed the Secretary "to write to her friends, to recommend, that if her confinement be necessary, it should be justified by the result of a more particular and repeated examination, to be made by some physicians, and also to Mr. Warburton, to whom the house is licensed, to communicate the opinion of the Commissioners, that the place of confinement adopted, in the midst of a number of cases of marked insanity, is more particularly improper for a girl of nineteen years of age, and whose deportment appeared to them to be correct." The Commissioners seem to have continued their enquiries upon this subject, for by the minutes of a future day it appears, "that Mr. Warburton stated, that the allowance of this young person, of 40*l.* per annum, will not afford her more conveniences than she receives, or admit of a separate establishment;" do you recollect whether any change took place in the situation of that person; whether she was either removed from the house, or her situation made better?—Her situation was certainly better when we were there again; I took notice of the girl two or three times, and that she was more comfortable; I do not know whether she is there at present.

Do you know what followed in consequence of that recommendation?—I do not recollect; it was in 1811.

Have you any power of directing such an examination, as that referred to in your minute, to take place without applying to the friends?—I think not; it is what we have done, but I doubt our having the power of doing it, if it is resisted.

Can you give the Committee any information, as to whether Mr. Warburton attends personally, and what degree of personal attendance he gives to his houses?—I cannot.

What power have the Commissioners under the Act, to call upon the Clerks of the Peace, for returns from the country?—None.

Have the Commissioners had occasion to correspond with the Clerks of the Peace?—Yes.

What has been the result of such correspondence?—Very various; at one time, for instance, we endeavoured to ascertain what houses did exist in the country, and I then wrote to all the Clerks of the Peace of Counties, and I got answers in general; we have also reports from the Clerks of the Peace, with respect to visitations which have taken place, but not many; if there appears any thing wrong in such reports, we then communicate with the clerks of the peace; if no answer is received, I write to him again till I get one; I have had one letter saying, that they would not pay the postage of the letters; we found from reports of visitations made by some of the Clerks of the Peace, that there are houses without any licences at all.

Do the Returns from the Clerks of the Peace, enable you to ascertain the number of private and public madhouses within each county?—No; there was something wrong with respect to a house in Worcestershire; I wrote to the Clerk of the Peace for the county; but found that the house was kept in a borough, where there is a particular Clerk of the Peace; when I wrote to the Clerk of the Peace for the county, I received from him an answer, of which this is a copy.

“ Worcester, Sept. 10th, 1813. No step whatever has been taken in this county respecting Lunatic Asylums, nor has any account of Mr. Ricketts’s house, at Droitwich, been made to the Sessions, or the Clerk of the Peace, or any license been taken out by him; I have laid accounts of postages, &c. for these kinds of business before the magistrates, who are so very particular in their allowances in this county, that they have told me they cannot allow them, and have advised me, when I receive such applications, not to attend to them.”

We followed that up, by writing to the Chairman of the Quarter Sessions.

It appears in the Report of December 12th, 1814, that “ the Secretary laid before the Commissioners, Reports which had been received of the state of Lunatic Houses in the City and Ainsty of York; the Secretary stated, that from the four houses mentioned in this Report, as being licensed to Doctor Charles Best, Mr. Skipwith, James Backhouse, and William Barker, returns had been only made for insertion of one patient into the house of Doctor Best, and one into the house of Mr. Backhouse: whereas it appeared from the Report, that at the last visitation, nine patients were confined in the house of Doctor Best, three in that of Mr. Skipwith; five in that of Mr. Backhouse; and three in that of Mr. Barker: The Secretary was directed to communicate these circumstances to the Clerk of the Peace, to refer him to the Act for his guidance, by which certain penalties are affixed to the omission of such Returns, and to desire him to consider this as an official communication of the facts, which the Register may be produced to substantiate;” what followed on that communication?—He acknowledged the receipt of the letter.

Is there not a penalty for persons not making a return?—Yes, a penalty of 100*l.* for each.

In looking to the minutes of December the 17th, 1810, of two houses at Bethnal Green, licensed to Mr. Warburton, but under the care of Mr. Rhodes, there is this entry: “ Confined, 250 patients, men and women nearly equal; servants about sixteen; not less than twenty patients were ill with a fever; a young girl was in the same bed with a woman who was dying; some women were lying on the floor, and others at different ends of the same bed; the Commissioners could get no satisfactory information respecting the medical attendance on the patients ill with fever:” Did you visit the house soon after that examination?—I do not know how soon after.

Had you any communication with Mr. Warburton, as to the state in which the Commissioners found that house?—Certainly, the report was sent to him.

Can you state to the Committee what was done in consequence?—I cannot; sometimes we send for those in whose house any thing is wrong, and then have personal communication with them on the subject.

It appears upon the minutes of the same day, that “the Commissioners directed the Secretary should write to Mr. Warburton, and state to him the circumstances noticed as being objectionable, in the present state of his houses under the care both of Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Talbot; and with respect to the latter, to recommend to him immediately, either to diminish the number of patients, or to extend the means for their accommodation:” It appears also that at a subsequent meeting, “the Secretary reported that he had received a letter from Mr. Thomas Warburton, in answer to that addressed to him in compliance with the minutes of the last meeting, in which it was stated, that medical attendance was regularly and uniformly given to the sick, in the house under the care of Mr. Rhodes, and that the present overflow, in the house under the care of Mr. Talbot, was owing to a temporary cause, and depended on the small number of admissions which had recently taken place at St. Luke’s Hospital; that there was reason to believe this would not continue long, but that if it did, either the numbers should be diminished, or the means for their accommodation be increased;” do you know whether either of those three events has taken place?—I do not think Talbot’s house is so crowded as it was.

The pauper patients are not returned to you?—No, they are not; but we take the numbers on our visitations.

What is your entry as to Talbot’s house on the 17th of December 1810?—“The patients at Mr. Talbot’s house were 360, men and women nearly equal.”

What is your entry on December 12th, 1814?—The number of patients in the same house consisted of 360 also; the Commissioners, on the 12th of December 1814, remark, that “they consider this house as clean and well regulated; but that some divisions, and especially the pauper men and pay women, are very much too crowded.”

Have you recently complained to Mr. Warburton that his house is much too crowded?—On the 5th of January last, I went to Mr. Warburton, for the purpose of communicating that, and talked to him upon the subject.

Have you received any communication from him that he will either diminish the number of his Patients or not take in any more?—Yes, there is such a communication, it is entered upon your Minutes.

It appears in the Minutes of the Commissioners, May 28, 1815, that at the house of Mr. Burrow at Hoxton, “there are 140 Patients of whom 100 are paupers;” the Commissioners report "that the pauper department is too much crowded, many of the patients are double bedded, which is improper; that it is an indifferent house; and that the circumstances noticed at the last visitation are but imperfectly remedied." Have the Commissioners visited that house since?—No.

Do you know whether any alteration has taken place upon any of the subjects you complained of?—No, not since May the 23d, certainly.

The objections made on March 23, 1815, to the house, are as follow: "Mr. Burrow himself is absent from home, the pauper men's department is too much crowded, their privy is in a most offensive state, part of the yard near the pump is under water, and there are accumulations of cinders and refuse matter in other parts of it:" Of all these various complaints, are any or all of them remedied?—The Secretary was directed to write and inform Mr. Burrow, and then on the 23d of May we found them but imperfectly remedied; whether more has been done since, I cannot say.

The insane paupers are committed to Madhouses without certificates, and their names are not returned to the College of Physicians?—Just so.

Under those circumstances, how can you ascertain the contents of any Madhouse?—The Returns do not give the number present at any Madhouse, but we enquire into the number at our visitation; "What number of Lunatics have you, what number occupy this room, what number occupy this yard;" and so on.

That you ask of the Madhouse Keeper?—Yes.

What check have you upon his representation?—None.

The following EXTRACT was read from the Evidence given by Dr. Powell on the 11th of May; page 247.

"Could not you make the keeper furnish you with a list, and make him responsible?—I think it would be a very good provision, if such were produced at every time of visitation.

"The Keeper knows how to apply the names?—We proceed thus: I take a memorandum book in my hand, I enter the names as the man gives them to me, and if we come within a few names of his number, we think ourselves very well off. Where any Patient complains to the Commissioners that he is improperly confined, or they see reason from his manner to think him so, into that case they then more particularly examine. But supposing they find the Patient's conversation correct, they know better than to infer immediately that he is well, and that his conduct will always be so; and if they did, they have no power under the Act to liberate him. They usually, in such case, direct the Secretary to write to the friends of the Patient, and say, 'We require, that if his confinement be longer protracted, the propriety of such confinement be justified by a more repeated and particular examination of some medical practitioner. For it is obvious to the Committee, that the Commissioners cannot, on their visitations, have time enough to examine into individual cases of Lunacy, for doubtful ones may require many hours and repeated visits, and if the Commissioners were to act from the impulse of the moment, or barely to judge from propriety of temporary conversation, they might let half the Lunatics they see loose, though they were very unfit to be at large.'"

Supposing the friends of the Patients to take no notice of the requisition so made of a more repeated and particular examination, what would be the next step that the Commissioners would take?—Such cases have frequently occurred, and always have been noticed.

That is to say, a further examination has taken place?—Yes; and in some instances the Patients have been liberated, and in others they have been still confined, and a medical man has written to me, stating the grounds of his opinion.

Supposing the requisition had not been complied with, what step could you next have taken?—I do not know that we could take any more than writing again; but I believe they have in every instance been attended to.

Supposing a Patient originally received into a Madhouse, with a regular certificate, afterwards completely to recover his senses, if such requisition on your part should be refused; if the connections of the party should combine with the keeper to detain him; do you know any certain means afforded by the present Act, by which his release could be obtained?—No.

If the friends or connections should grow indifferent as to the release of the party, and the proprietor of the house should chuse to detain him, do you know of any certain means by which he could regain his liberty?—No.

Have you ever known any instance where a person has been confined on grounds which to you appeared insufficient?—Yes, several.

Have you ever been instrumental to the release of such persons?—Yes, I think several.

Had you confined yourself to the bare performance of the duties imposed on you by the Act, do you think such persons would have been released?—I do not know; I should think probably not.

Do you recollect any instance or instances in which such confinement appeared to you to be attended with unnecessary aggravations?—Yes.

Are you of opinion that, supposing a person to be constitutionally inclined to insanity, the irritation of such confinement might have a tendency to bring it on where it otherwise would not have appeared, or to aggravate the degree of it?—In predisposition, any irritation will do that.

Supposing Insanity to supervene, or any aggravation of it in consequence of such treatment, would not that very insanity be held as a sufficient reason for future confinement?—Surely; if a man is insane from any cause, he ought to be confined.

Have the Commissioners the power of applying for a Habeas Corpus?—I do not know.

They have not that power by the Act of the Fourteenth of the King?—Certainly it is not expressed there.

What means have pauper Patients, supposing they become sane, of being removed out of those establishments?—The Commissioners look to the case of pauper Patients as to others; at the last visitation but one, for instance, I was directed to write to the parish of Saint Andrews, Holborn, of which Thomas Collins is a pauper, to desire that the state of mind of such Patient may be ascertained by the repeated and particular examination of some medical practitioner; and that the result of such examination may be transmitted to the Commissioners, he having conducted himself properly at that time.

Then the Committee understand that, except from interference on the part of the Commissioners, a pauper Patient so confined, and becoming sane, has no means of getting out of these establishments?—Not under the Act; the Act expressly excludes pauper Patients, even from any returns.

For the trouble that you have in the visitations, for keeping the books in the manner such as the Committee have seen them, and the time and labour which you give; what is the amount of the remuneration you receive?—50*l.* a year has always been paid to the Secretary; the Commissioners direct the sum.

From what source is that 50*l.* derived?—From the sum paid for licenses; the Commissioners also are paid from that fund.

PRIVATE HOUSES, &c.

Mercurii, 3^o die Maii, 1815.

THE RIGHT HON. GEORGE ROSE IN THE CHAIR.

MR. EDWARD WAKEFIELD again called in, and Examined.

WHAT Private Houses have you visited within the Bills of Mortality?—The first house that I applied to see, was kept by Peter Gilles Briant, at Gore-house, Kensington, who refused letting any person see a patient within his house or the house itself, or any thing in it. The next was kept by a person of the name of Pearce, at Chelsea; in that house there were four patients only, all of whom I saw; they were idiots, without any coercion; the house generally dirty; but otherwise, from the superficial glance I had of it, I saw no reason to find any fault with it. The next place I went to was Norman House, at Fulham; this was a house kept by a man of the name of Talfourd, for females only; there were in it fourteen ladies, all of whom I saw, and was delighted with the manner in which they were treated, and with the degree of happiness which they appeared to enjoy; I remained with them nearly two hours; conversed with every individual; and could not find, that either hand-locks or leg-locks were ever used: Some of them stated, that they frequently went to church; that they attended a fair in the neighbourhood (Brook Green fair); and two had walked to Walham Green, to see Louis XVIII. I think it difficult to speak too highly of Norman House generally; I believe there was no man in the house, except the husband of the woman who kept it, and there was the greatest kindness towards the patients. I next visited Mr. Fox's, London House, Hackney; this is a house that I think admirably conducted: Mr. Fox himself is an apothecary, living in Norton Falgate, and it is managed by his wife, who is a judicious good-natured woman, whom all the patients seemed very much to respect; every time that I was there, Mr. Tilley Matthews was living, and in point of fact was the advising manager of the conduct of the patients in that house; it is a large house, capable of the sexes being kept distinct and separate, and they were here classed, according to their habits in life; one lady, who conceived herself to be Mary Queen of Scots, acts as preceptress to Mrs. Fox's little children, and takes great pains in teaching them French, &c.

Are the patients in that house roomily accommodated?—Quite so; they are not crowded.

Are the violent kept from the more placid?—Yes, they are so; I saw none violent; indeed I believe the violence in general is more or less, according to the treatment; I visited that house a dozen times at least, and Mr. Matthews took me over every part of the house, and told me the case of every patient. I visited Talbot's (generally called the White House) at Bethnal Green; this is a large house, chiefly occupied by parish paupers; I arrived there just at their dinner-time; I tasted the pudding and the meat, and saw the rations, as they may be called, of each individual served out, and thought it all excellent; it is a house in which there are nearly 300 patients.

Do you know the price received for the parish paupers?—I have heard that the terms were 10s. a week, but now 9s. 6d.; the house is well ventilated constantly, and whitewashed; at the time of day that I was there, all the patients, except one or two under bodily disease, were up, and down stairs; the chamber windows were all thrown open, the bed-clothes of the male patients turned half way down during the day. The wet or dirty patients sleep upon straw, on a bedstead in the shape of a trough; from those bedsteads the straw was emptied, the bedsteads raised up from where they had stood at night, standing on one end; there were chains on the sides of many of those bedsteads, and I understood the patients were leg-locked or arm-locked of a night; and perhaps it proves the restraint under which even these patients live, that the keeper, Mr. Talbot, stated to me, that a patient knowing himself to be leg-locked, seldom flew into those paroxysms which he would do without that. The house is a building ill-constructed for the purpose; but at the time of the year that I was there (the month of May) the patients were all out in the yards, it was a fine sun-shiny day; I apprehend, that in winter-time, when they are obliged to be under cover, the day-rooms must be excessively crowded; from the view which I had of it, my opinion is, that the treatment is as good as the man is capable of giving to such persons in such a building.

Are not the premises much crowded, particularly the sleeping-places?—Certainly; the sleeping-rooms are crowded with beds; in all instances, I believe two in a bed, and Mr. Talbot admitted in some instances three.

Are not the ceilings of the bed-rooms improperly low?—They are.

Are not those rooms so crowded with beds, as to bring the bedsteads nearly in contact with each other?—Yes, they are.

The men and women are in separate rooms?—Yes, perfectly distinct.

In all the houses you saw, did you find the male and female patients in separate rooms?—Yes, in all the houses I visited, I never saw them mixed.

Is it not the practice of the servants of Mr. Talbot's house, to clean by a mop, the floors of the bed-chambers every morning?—The day I was there, the whole had been mopped and scoured through; and considering the very ill construction of the building, I cannot imagine it can be better done by. I observed Mr. Talbot with a large snuff-box among the patients, and that as we walked amongst them, they all came running up to him to enjoy a pinch of snuff; and I have no doubt it is one of the means of gaining their confidence.

Does not each airing-ground at this place contain a pump?—I recollect it in two airing-grounds, and I dare say it was in all.

Do not you apprehend, that a great advantage arises to the patients, from their having so great a command of water?—I have no doubt it is a great source of comfort and health, and of amusement; I wish the Committee to understand that the premises are incapable of any thing like classification; and I neither saw employment nor amusement attempted there.

There are no distinct airing-grounds for the patients who were convalescent, and those who were otherwise?—No, there are not; adjoining this house there is another large establishment, called the Red House, kept by a man of the name of Rhodes; but in point of fact, I believe, like the last, that it belongs to Mr. Warburton. The Red House is the only private establishment that I know of within the Bills of Mortality, which has been built for the express purpose of keeping the Insane; the greater part of the house is devoted to patients of a superior class, the female and male part of the establishment being divided at the staircase; there were some ladies whom I saw at dinner; there were panes of glass in the two upper pannels of the door out of the gallery, which enabled the keeper to inspect them without their being aware of the inspection. The wings are occupied by pauper patients; the sexes perfectly distinct from each other, the whole centre of the house, and the large garden, dividing the two wings; the management of the pauper patients appears to me to be as similar to that of those at Talbot's as it is possible to be.

Is there the same management as to the beds, exposing them to ventilation during the day, as there is at Talbot's?—Yes, just the same; the airing-grounds are infinitely too small for the number of patients; on the day I saw them, being a particularly fine day, when they were all locked out of doors in the fresh air, still they were huddled together in one mass like a flock of sheep. I applied at Sir Jonathan Miles's receiving houses at Hoxton, for leave to look over them; Mr. Watt, the person who had the care of that house (Sir Jonathan Miles not living there) stated, that it was in the hands of trustees, who had determined that no persons should be permitted to look over the buildings; I argued with him the injury that he might do himself from such a refusal, and his answer was, that an inspection of that house would be signing its death-warrant.

Do you know whether that is the house in which the naval Insane patients are received?—It is. The next I went to was kept by Mrs. Burrows a widow, and her son, at Hoxton; this is an old house extremely inconvenient for the purpose; but still the parish paupers are kept distinct from patients who pay at a different rate, and there are several attempts at classification; at the end of one of the yards, there is a distinct building for the male parish paupers; the general treatment, I conceive, to be like that of the other houses where they take parish paupers. I examined some of the men in a convalescent state, as to their food, who stated in the strongest way, that they had plenty; the rooms had been all mopped down as they were at Talbot's; there were the same sort of trough beds, where some patients were chained in the night.

Were the patients generally well treated?—I believe so; I have been at Mr. Warburton's, at Hoxton, but not over the whole house, for want of time; at this establishment there are very large gardens; some of the patients pay rather liberally; and in those gardens are many small distinct houses, and I wish to draw the attention of the Committee to the great benefit of those distinct houses; the great enjoyment which a patient who has the means of paying for it, receives from living in a small house, surrounded by a garden, without the noise or the annoyance of violent Maniacs about him. I have no reason to believe that the treatment in this house is any other than in general good; at the same time it may be necessary to state to the Committee a case which has come particularly under my consideration; the case of the Reverend Charles Chawner, who was confined in that house during seven years, and in whose liberation I was instrumental. There were great difficulties in finding any attorney who would take up such a cause; it was refused over and over again by different attorneys, on account of the uncertainty of payment; and it was taken up by the mere chance of meeting with an attorney going into my brother's chambers with a brief, who said, that he would undertake to effect the liberation of Mr. Chawner; this he accomplished by a trick, for he laid a plan for

Mr. Chawner to go to an oculist, where he was sent in a hackney coach with a keeper. Mr. Chawner asked the keeper to let him drive to the house of a friend, and he went to the house of the attorney, who took him in, and shut the door upon the keeper. During the time of his confinement, for many years he had constantly and reiteratedly applied to the Commissioners appointed by the College of Physicians to visit that house for his liberation, and he has stated to me that the only terms upon which they would allow him to go out, was, that of acknowledging himself to have been insane. After his liberation, Mr. Warburton applied by a writ of Habeas Corpus against the attorney to bring him up to the Court of King's Bench, which was answered by Mr. Chawner, being set by the side of his counsel Mr. Jekyll, to be dealt with as the Court might direct. Lord Ellenborough said, in the first instance, that he must return to the place from whence he escaped, but Mr. Warburton said he could not take him in without a certificate, which Mr. Park applied to Lord Ellenborough to sign; but as the Act of Parliament directs that none but a medical man could sign a certificate, Lord Ellenborough refused to do so, but directed Mr. Jekyll to desire that Mr. Chawner's attorney should find a certificate of his insanity. Mr. Jekyll said, he stood there to shew that Mr. Chawner was sane, and therefore could not be a party to sign a certificate that he was otherwise. Mr. Chawner then volunteered to go from one term to the next into Doctor Sutherland's house, and, in the ensuing term again appeared in the Court of King's Bench, with affidavits from Doctor Sutherland and various physicians, of his being perfectly sane, and amongst others of Sir Lucas Pepys, who himself had been a visiting commissioner, and had frequently refused his liberation when applied to. The result was, that he was set at liberty, and returned to his living in Derbyshire. I visited a house at Kingsland, where the name of Glanville is upon the door, but the woman who kept it stated to me, that that was not her name; in this house were four patients, three women and one lad, all in or on their beds, in rooms without any ventilation, and almost more offensive than any thing I ever put my head into; the lad, of 18 or 19, was upon a bed in his clothes, but with a strait-waistcoat; the women were in bed; they were in different rooms, but with the curtains drawn all round them, and in a very close state.

Was this in the day-time?—Yes, it was; the woman who kept the house stated to me, that she only kept one woman servant, and that she had, as I understood, from 80*l.* to 100*l.* a year with each of those patients; and my opinion is, that the family were maintained with the payments from those four patients, who were kept in this dreadful state, while she managed to subsist out of the allowance: I asked her, how often the commissioners attended that house; she said very seldom; she did not recollect to have seen them for a year.

Did it occur to you to ask, why you found them all in bed in the day-time?—She said, the ladies chose to be in bed, and the lad was so furious they could keep him in no other way; he appeared to me to be an idiot, for though I shook him by the hand, and endeavoured to converse with him, he only made a noise, and I could get no coherent answer whatever.

Did she admit that those patients always kept their beds?—She said, one of them, an Irish lady, had not been out of bed for many years.

Did you come away with the impression, that she took that method of confining them?—That was the impression, I had respecting them; my opinion is, that they were locked into these rooms and very little attended to.

Did she state, whether there was any medical attendant to the house?—I do not recollect that she did; I have seen two houses at Somer's Town; in one of them, the male patients were all in one day-room; there were about seven or eight in number; the room was extremely close and offensive; the garden and the upper part of the house being occupied by 14 or 15 females, who were chiefly French; it appeared to me that the house did very well for the ladies, but that for the purpose of accommodating them the men were all stuffed together. I saw some of the ladies' bed-rooms, which were remarkably neat. In the other house there were only five or six patients, all nearly idiots; and I thought they were under the care of a good fatherly kind of a man; the house was generally sweet and clean, and I saw nothing to find fault with there. I called on Doctor Monro, in the Adelphi, and asked his permission to see Brook House, Hackney; he politely said that I should be quite welcome, provided I could get the leave of the friends of each of his patients; knowing the thing to be impossible, not knowing who the patients were, I made no further effort. I applied at Fisher House, Islington, which belongs to Doctor Sutherland; the housekeeper refused to let me see any part of it; but in justice to Doctor Sutherland, I must state to the Committee, that he has since desired me to call and look over every part of it; I have not done so.

In these several houses, had you the means of learning what medical assistants attended occasionally?—Many of these houses belong to physicians, or they had a share in them, and attended them of course.

Did you learn whether these houses had been visited by the commissioners?—That was a question I invariably put at every house, and I think it was generally answered, that they were seldom visited ; but I am not aware of any house that the Commissioners had entirely neglected. In those private houses, where parish paupers are kept, I have had great complaints made against the parishes for not providing their poor with sufficiency of clothing. In closing the account with I have given of houses of this sort within the Bills of Mortality, I beg to say, that I have been received with great civility by many keepers of Private Houses, and the public institutions of Saint Luke's and Guy's Hospitals ; and that the general feeling which I have upon the subject, is, that there is great merit due to many individuals for the humanity which they exercise to the unfortunate persons under their care ; and that I should be very much hurt, if any observation that I made in any place should tend to injure the character of the business of a keeper of a Madhouse.

What opportunities have you had of making observations respecting places for the reception of insane persons out of the bills of mortality ?—Whenever I am professionally called as a land-surveyor into any part of England, if I can possibly devote a day to see these sort of houses or gaols, I am in the constant habit of visiting them. I was at the public Asylum at Exeter on the 15th of April, 1814. This has been a large mansion, situated on the outside of the town, commanding very fine prospects, and the governors have made such alterations in the building, that it is nearer to a building erected purposely for the occupation of insane persons, than any other buildings which I have ever seen. Chains are used in the Asylum ; and one male patient, whom I saw, perfectly naked. He was a young man who had been there some years, of extraordinary athletic powers ; of extreme maniacal violence, never having the use of his reason ; and I have a great doubt in charging any cruelty in his being naked. I think his body had become hardened through the disuse of clothes, as the face and hands are ; and I feel pretty confident that, in this instance, there was no loss of comfort to the individual. His violence was so great, that it was a matter of necessity to handcuff him, to prevent destruction to every body that came near him. He laid upon straw, not being aware of the necessities of nature. He was confined in a room in which there was a fire-place, and in winter I conclude that there was a due degree of warmth in this room. The head keeper of this public establishment appeared to me a humane and intelligent man. He had been there 11 years. Some of the male patients were working in the garden, and I believe generally were out of doors, either in the large garden attached to the house, or in the different airing grounds. The patients asked for snuff ; and from what I can learn, very few are debarred of the use of pen, ink, and paper. The house is white-washed once a year and well aired. There is one of Dr. Cox's rotatory chairs in the same room in which the bath is; but the keepers could not point out instances in which it had been of any service. Some of the men patients were playing at fives in the airing ground, and there was a large shed in the centre to shade them from the heat of the sun in summer, and also in occasional rains.

I was attended through the Asylum by Mr. M'Intosh, the treasurer, who seemed to think that he was taking something upon himself in introducing me without the leave of the medical staff of the Asylum, there being a very strict rule that strangers should not be admitted without their leave. When I make this remark, I beg to say, that I have the highest opinion of the philanthropy of Mr. M'Intosh, and I do not doubt that he only exercised the necessary caution to a stranger; at the same time I am not satisfied that I saw every patient in the house; I do not think I did.

[The Witness put in the rules and regulations for the management of the Establishment at Exeter.]

September 28th, 1814, I visited a Private House at Box, about six miles from Bath, kept by Dr. Langworthy; who stated that it had been a house of this sort for 200 years, but that he had only had it for a year. It is delightfully situated, the house and ground commanding cheerful views. There were four women in a small yard. I saw in a place which on one side I must call a cellar, and on the other side it is open to a yard, in which there were four women. In this room or cellar I saw lying upon straw, on fixed bedsteads, two women nearly naked; around their beds there was a deal partition. I heard more in similar places making a great noise; Dr. Langworthy stating that they were perfectly naked, I did not attempt to look at them. The room in which they were confined is entirely dark; and I think in the course of my visiting these places I never recollect to have seen four living persons in so wretched a place. Dr. Langworthy stated, that in his house only one patient sleeps in a bed, and seldom more than one in a room. He takes only forty patients. He keeps six women and three men servants for them; white-washes twice a year. The house was new doing up, but the apartments ill adapted for the confinement of maniacs. The men I did not see, although I requested so to do. Dr. Langworthy, without in words refusing it, led me towards the door, where his carriage was standing, and said, he had an engagement, which rendered it necessary for him to go immediately to Bath. The man servant was going to get up behind the carriage, and who stated that he acted partly as a keeper, said it was not a day that the men were up, and therefore it would be impossible to see them. Dr. Langworthy said, that his terms were, for a man patient 25s.; stating that there ought to be a greater pay for men than women, as they required more coercion, consequently a greater number of servants. Dr. Langworthy, in answer to a question, whether he used blanket-gowns, replied, that in winter he sowed them up in a blanket.

September 21st. I called at Dr. Fox's, at a house near Bristol. Dr. Fox has laid out a very large sum of money upon building an establishment, being a series of houses for the purpose of classification. The houses are built entirely of iron and stone, to the right hand side. The three different houses are devoted to three classes of female patients. To the left are three houses for three classes of men patients. I did not see above two or three patients even in strait waistcoats, none in chains, or any in bed. The landry is converted into a chapel on a Sunday, where service is regularly performed. To each building is a distinct and separate yard, at the end of which are cells for refractory and dirty patients, which has yet a distinct yard. The cells are warmed by flues. The first patients I saw were female paupers; in the second, the middle class of female patients. In their yards there were silver pheasants and doves, with which they amused themselves. There is a separate bed-room to each patient, all well ventilated, whitewashed, and cleaned: the patients tranquil, without coercion, but not allowed to remain in bed. In this part of the buildings there is an infirmary for those in bodily ill health; a cold and warm bath. The Doctor thinks highly of the efficacy of the former. Those who pay most, occupy the upper part of his own house, the centre part of all the building, which communicates with the yard, in which tame fowls are kept. To describe the side of the premises in which the men are confined, is to repeat the same thing. The Doctor does all he can to lead them to occupy themselves. Those who have been used to trades or farming occupations easily take to gardening, farming, or jobs about the house; but he remarked, it was much more difficult to give employment to gentlemen. He had a turning lathe; but from the nature of the tools, few can be trusted with them; music, drawing, cards, drafts, back-gammon, &c. Those who are convalescent walk about the premises, in the centre of which is a bowling-green. He thinks that separate confinement is not useful; that a patient cannot easily be brought to submit to coercion; whilst in company they only suffer the lot of others, and that they coerce one another. He has 70 patients, 28 servants. The wet patients sleep upon straw, but the bedsteads are on an excellent construction; the premises are delightfully and cheerfully situated; the walls surrounding the yards twelve feet high, but large mounds of earth are raised in the centre, which allow the patients to enjoy the view without danger of getting over the wall. Dr. Fox also keeps greyhounds for his patients' amusement.

The 25th September I called upon Mr. Finch, Surgeon, at Laverstock, near Salisbury. This gentleman appears to me to be a humane man; a man of sense, and conducts his house in an admirable manner. He has 120 patients, and he begged me to take time to converse with the whole of them, and hoped that, without his being present, I would ask them the manner in which they were fed and treated. The paupers are kept distinct from the others, and the sexes separate. He had not a single patient in a strait-waistcoat or in chains; and states that the proportion of dirty patients, through attention, is very small. He treats patients insensible of the calls of nature as he would young children, setting them on the night-chair when they arise in the morning. The house is finely placed; without the patients being seen, they are amused by a cheerful country and the sight of the high road; in the gardens they walk about and appear cheerful, and stated themselves to be well fed and taken care of. Every possible kind of amusement was provided for them; billiards, back-gammon, cards, books, &c. &c. in doors; bowls, cricket, greyhounds, riding on horseback and in a carriage, out of doors; a chapel on a Sunday; two distinct and separate houses within 500 yards for those patients whose friends are fearful of their being placed in a large establishment. In the pauper wards, white-washing every other month and plenty of ventilation; 14s. per week for pauper patients. Mr. Finch finds that the rotatory chair producing nausea is most useful, as the pain it excites takes the patient's mind off to it rather than to the disease.

The moment a patient is brought ironed, he takes them off. In this establishment I saw all that Tuke has written realized; and no words in which I can describe it, I think, can characterize it in too high terms.

Mr. Finch keeps a book, in which are registered the peculiarities of the disease of every patient, and the mode of treatment which has been adopted. His certificate is also in an admirable form.

[The paper was put in, and is as follows:]

The 5th of October, I visited Mr. Gillett, at the five-mile house, near Taunton; I arrived there at dinner-time, and was pleased to find the master and mistress and about twelve female patients round the same table, none of them under coercion. I went up stairs; it is an old roomy farm-house, with many apartments, generally two beds in a room. I asked to see the pauper patients, and was shown into a back yard with high walls, in which were three idiot men. Here I heard some noise of patients, whom I asked to see, but Mr. Gillett refused me that favour. In the kitchen were two or three idiots; the mistress, Mrs. Gillett, seemed to be most kind, humane, and attentive. Mr. Gillett bragged of having been a keeper at Bethlem, and was sent from that hospital to Exeter Asylum, from whence he came to keep this house for himself. I saw little in this house either to praise or to blame; but after having observed men of judgment, like Dr. Fox and Mr. Finch, exercising the most discriminating faculty in adapting amusements for the perverted minds of such wretched beings, I could not but lament that any should be consigned to the care of ignorant and brutal manners.

Have you had opportunities of observing the treatment or condition of Insane persons in Parish Workhouses?—I saw in the parish workhouse of St. Luke's, 26 patients; the females were huddled together in a small gloomy dirty room, near to which were small bed-rooms, in which were two or three idiots in bed.

The men were generally strolling about in the yard of the workhouse. I understood from the governor of the workhouse, that the parish maintained them much cheaper in the workhouse, than by sending them to any establishment for the reception of Insane persons; and that none were sent by that parish to such establishments, but the violent and the dirty; that is the only workhouse I have seen in London.

On the 5th of December I looked through the workhouse of the united parishes of St. James and St. Mary at St. Edmundsbury. The whole of the paupers are farmed at 3s. 6d. per head per week, seven of whom are Maniacs or Idiots; there were four old women in two cells, two beds in each cell, three of these women were in bed; one an idiot; one dressed, sitting upon the bed, in the same cell, who was able to walk about, but without any faculty of mind; the two in the other cell were talking Maniacs, the other three were walking about in other parts of the workhouse. From my knowledge of the general government of the house, I knew the keeper to be a very humane man, and his wife an industrious and clean woman, but more ignorant people of this lamentable disease, cannot exist; they talk of these women who I saw in bed, being violent at a certain period of the moon, and it being necessary to confine them at that time.

As far as fell within your knowledge, had these people any medical assistance, was any thing done towards the cure of them?—There is an apothecary who has an annual stipend for attending the house.

Has he any particular care of these patients?—He knew of them, for he was pointing them out to me.

Do you know whether their cases were particularly attended to by him, so as to give them any medical assistance?—I apprehend not. About three years since I was at the workhouse at Kendal in Westmoreland? the workhouse of that parish is under the very best management; the master and mistress complained to me of the great nuisance which the Maniac paupers were to the rest of the establishment. There are two or three strong rooms belonging to this workhouse, where those persons are kept during paroxysms of violence; at other times when they are walking about the house, they are made the sport of the children, and of idle people about.

Have you visited any gaols or houses of correction, and noticed any Lunatics confined in them?—There was at the house of correction in Kendal, about three years since when I was there, a Madman whom I have known for many years. He has lucid intervals for a great length of time, frequently for eight or nine months together, but is subject to paroxysms of extreme violence. He was committed to the house of correction not for an offence, but as a Maniac; and he has been placed in a cell which has been built for persons under solitary confinement. He never sees any body but those who take him his food, and has no occupation whatever, and had been, when I last saw him, thus suffering the dreadful punishment of solitary confinement for ten years. The house of correction itself is under the very best management, and the prisoners most humanely treated, and I do not mean to cast the slightest reflection upon it.

About three years since I was at Lancaster Castle, where there are four Maniacs confined for having committed murder during the paroxysms of insanity. Lancaster Castle will be allowed, by all those who have been in the habit of visiting gaols, to be one of the very best managed in the kingdom, and one in which I can hardly imagine that any unnecessary coercion is used. Mrs. Higgin, the wife of the gaoler, complained to me of the nuisance of these Maniacs; that the complaint that had been made in Parliament, arose from one of the turnkeys having gone into the cell where a man was usually confined in a strait-waistcoat; that in the night he had got rid of that restraint, and upon the keeper going into the cell, the Madman seized him, upon which the keeper hit him with a whip which he had in his hand. I imagine from this circumstance, told me by Mrs. Higgin, that these keepers, who, I am satisfied, are excellent persons for taking care of criminals, are very unfit to look after Insane persons, or they could not have thought of hitting a person in that state with a whip; and I relate the circumstance to the Committee, to shew the great necessity of taking all such persons out of gaols, and putting them into proper places of security.

In the house of correction at Exeter, I know two men who have been confined there some years for Insanity, and who are a great nuisance to their fellow-prisoners, and are, in point of fact, an eye-sore to that most excellent establishment.

Jovis, 4^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

MR. EDWARD WAKEFIELD again called in, and further Examined.

YOU were resident two years in Ireland?—I was.

Can you, from that residence, give the Committee any useful information as to the state of Private Madhouses there?—It is not in my power to give any information about the houses; but for the information of the Committee, I beg to draw their attention to the circumstance, that from Ireland not being subject to any poor laws, no pauper Maniacs are confined as in England in workhouses, but are seen wandering about the country, as strikes almost every person who has travelled there. There are some Private Madhouses in Dublin, and two places of public reception, one a ward in the house of industry, and the other a separate establishment, founded, I believe, under the will of Dean Swift; but of the particulars I am not informed. In the year 1808, I heard a physician of great eminence state to the Right Honourable John Foster, that of the Insane persons who were sent up to Dublin, the treatment of them was so little understood, that the accustomed mode was tying them with a cord to the back of a car, and forcing them to walk the distance they might have to come; and this gentleman's expression was, "I give you my honour, that of the Insane persons sent up to Dublin, at least one in five loses an arm from the tightness of the ligature producing mortification, which renders amputation necessary." The proposal of that gentleman, with whose opinion I agree, is, that the counties should unite, and that each province should build a Public Asylum under provisions similar to those in Mr. Wynn's Bill. I have read the report of a trial which took place in Dublin about four years since, in which it was proved, that a female was taken to a Madhouse on the certificate of a physician who had never seen her; it was afterwards proved that she was perfectly sane: her husband after some time obtained her release from the house, and brought an action against the keeper of the house, and recovered damages. In going through the country, I frequently saw pauper Maniacs in villages, who were the sport of the common people; and some of them who were not outrageous, are by no means unfrequent as hanging about the houses of the first noblemen and gentlemen in the country.

In consequence of the observations you have made on the state and management of the Lunatic Establishments, and the manner of inspecting them, are you of opinion that medical persons exclusively ought to be Inspectors and Comptrollers of Madhouses? —I think they are the most unfit of any class of persons. In the first place, from every enquiry I have made, I am satisfied that medicine has little or no effect upon the disease, and the only reason for their selection, is the confidence which is placed in their being able to apply a remedy to the malady. They are all persons interested more or less. It is extremely difficult, in examining either the public Institutions or the private houses, not to have a strong impression upon your mind, that medical men derive a profit in some shape or form from those different establishments. It will be found that almost all the medical attendants of the public Hospitals possess private houses; there are few of the private houses, to which the introduction of a physician is not to him a matter of great importance. The rendering therefore any interested class of persons the Inspectors and Comptrollers, I hold to be mischievous in the greatest possible degree.

If such is your opinion, of what class of persons, and in what manner would you propose to nominate Inspectors and Comptrollers?—It strikes me that the constitutional guardian of all persons in this country incapable of taking care of themselves, is the Lord Chancellor; of course he could not look after such people, but from him I think the appointment should be derived; and it appears to me, that he should not be confined to any class or profession of persons. Certainly at this time there are Quakers who are neither medical men or of any professional class, who are conspicuous for the extraordinary treatment of Insane persons, by the attention and kindness which they pay to them; and an Act of Parliament might work an injury if it prevented, whoever might be the person who appointed Inspectors and Comptrollers from appointing those gentlemen, who, in point of fact, have done more good than any others to their fellow creatures suffering under this malady. The person to choose, would be an able, active, conscientious man, let his profession be what it might.

Have you any doubt that persons can be found in this Metropolis who would, without a salary, superintend and be proud of so superintending an establishment of this kind?—I beg leave to lay it down as a principle, that there ought to be no employment without a proportionate reward;—at the same time I think, that to this distressing subject there might be found many benevolent and philanthropic persons who would cheerfully devote a great part of their time to such examination. I think that any Act that shall be brought in should create as much individual responsibility as possible, attended with every degree of general inspection.

Do you think the College of Physicians ought to nominate the Inspectors and Comptrollers?—I think by no means; the College of Physicians do not include a vast part of the medical profession who have taken up their degrees in the Scotch Universities, and consequently, independent of the objection which I have already pointed out against medical persons, are a part of the profession particularly objectionable.

Martis, 9^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

DR. RICHARD FOWLER OF SALISBURY, called in, and Examined.

ARE you a general practising physician, or confined to the cure of insanity?—A general practising physician.

Were you visiting physician of the house of Mr. Spencer at Fonthill, in the county of Wilts, licensed for the reception of lunatics by the justices of the peace for the county of Wilts, in the year 1812?—I was.

How long have you been visiting physician of that house?—I have been visiting physician to two houses in that county, of which that is one, for the last twelve or fourteen years.

State to the Committee, what was the condition of Mr. Spencer's house in the year 1812?—I beg to refer to minutes made at the time, and signed by the Magistrate, the clerk of the peace for the county, and myself.

How did it happen that you were accompanied by the clerk of the peace?—The Bill at present existing, enacts, that the Commission shall consist of one physician, two magistrates, and the clerk of the peace for the county; whereof two, one of whom shall be a physician, shall form a quorum; a visit was made the 23d of November 1812.

[The Witness read the Paper, as follows:]

“ MINUTES made by John Hungerford Penruddocke, Esq. Visiting Justice, and Richard Fowler, M.D. Visiting Physician, of the State and Condition of the house of Arthur Spencer, at Fonthill, in the county of Wilts, (licensed for the reception of Lunatics, by the Justices of the Peace of the county of Wilts, in Sessions assembled) as to the Care of the Patients; and of all such other Particulars as they think deserve notice; with their Observations thereupon.

“ THE number of patients confined in this house is 23, of these 14 are men, and nine women; of the men seven are supported at their own expense, one from the produce of his own estate, managed by the parish officers, and six are paupers sent by parish officers. Of the women, seven are supported at their own expense, and two are paupers sent by parish officers. The day-room for males and females of the better class is a small hall with a good fire, and decent; the bed-rooms for females of the better class are decent and clean; the day-room for paupers is a small kitchen, in which the cooking for the family is provided. Of the men, only one was without fetters, or handcuffs, and only three of the men were out of their sleeping-rooms. The sleeping-rooms for the men are twelve in number. The first a small room with two sleeping-places, consisting of boards nailed together, about three feet in width, with boards at the sides; a small window gave light to this room, the glass of which was broken, and the holes filled with pieces of cloth, &c.

Only one person inhabited this room, and he was chained to the bedstead. The next room had two sleeping-places of the same description, both occupied; the patients were also chained to the bedsteads, and the only light or air admitted through three holes in the wall, (in different places) four inches wide by two and a half high, where bricks had been removed; the third room was also occupied by two patients, confined in a similar way. The window which lights this room is a small glazed window, and one half of it gives light to the fourth room, occupied by one patient, confined in a similar way. No air admitted to these rooms. In all these four rooms the bedding appeared to be blankets and quilts. Only one close-stool in the whole, and that out of the reach of either of the patients. These four rooms are above stairs; but from the situation of the house on the side of a hill, are on a level with the garden ground behind it, and with this garden the bed-rooms of the females of the better class communicate. The next room is on the ground floor, about twenty feet by sixteen, and seven feet high. This room is divided into six cells of nine feet long by five feet wide; three on each side, with a passage three feet wide between, and communicating with each. Neither of these six cells is plastered or whitewashed, the walls built of greenstone and extremely damp, the partitions between the cells, framed brick work, and between the cells and the passage, wood; not the least air or light admitted, except when the doors are opened. The principal door immediately opposite a pig-stye and dung-heap, about seven feet distance. On opening this door and the door of the first cell, the smell extremely offensive, and nearly preventing further inspection; three only of these cells floored with wood; the other three were on the bare earth, apparently without any addition or coat to keep the patient dry. The ceiling of the cells nearly on a level with the garden walk on the south side. The furniture of these cells was a long box, about six feet long by two and a half wide, raised from the ground for a bedstead, to which the patients were chained; in some of them the patients had blankets and coarse rugs, in others only straw. The patients allowed to be out in the air about once a week, during which time the cells are cleansed (as asserted by the attendant) and clean straw, &c. supplied when necessary.

“The eleventh room is a long narrow cell, partitioned from a coal house on one side, and another cell for a female on the other, taken out of a large outhouse for depositing wood, &c. and separated from the other part of the building by wooden partitions. These cells, of which there are three, are about nine feet long by five wide, and six feet high, without either air or light, except when the doors are opened. The twelfth room is a separate building, also detached, about nine feet long, seven feet wide, and seven feet high, occupied by one person, with decent bedding, and lighted by a window over the door; the building of wood plastered on the inside, but no ventilation. The patients appeared to be fit objects for confinement; but no more than fourteen certificates of medical men produced. The certificates produced were fourteen; seven for the women of the first class, four for men of the first class, one for the patient maintained out of his own estate, managed by the parish officers; and two for paupers, so that certificates were omitted for three men of the first class only.

“ No notices ever sent to the college.

“ Mr. Spencer too ill to attend the visitors, from an apoplectic fit.

“ Men servants.—One constantly attending the patients, and one occasionally.

“ Female servants.—Two constant, but employed also in the domestic concerns of the family, &c. The garden airy and open; but the patients are seldom allowed to go out till after dinner. Breakfast hour, eight and nine—Dinner hour, one—Tea at four, and Supper at six.

“ The health of the patients, on the whole, good.

(Signed)

“ J. H. Penruddocke.

“ Richard Fowler, M.D.”

You visited this house in consequence of your duty, as having been appointed the Physician to attend Madhouses in the county of Wilts?—I did.

You have stated that only one of the men was without irons; are you of opinion that that degree of restraint was necessary for those who were so restrained?—I am of opinion that it was not necessary; and it was stated, when the keepers were asked the reason for putting them in irons, that it would require a larger expence than they could afford, to keep servants to take care of them if they were not ironed.

Do you conceive such a degree of confinement, when unnecessary, to be prejudicial either to the bodily health, or to the chance of recovery, of the patient?—I should consider it injurious both to the health of the body and the mind, and likely to retard recovery; and I have seen recoveries take place from bodily labour in the open air, and the mind being employed.

Are you of opinion that any additional degree of irritation of mind is produced by such unnecessary restraint in those patients who have lucid intervals?—We saw in this very house decided proofs of its being so produced; upon remonstrating against it, on our next visit, we found persons released from that degree of constraint, very much improved.

You have stated, that you found great insufficiency in the light and air supplied to those patients, how were they supplied with food and water?—We had no means of ascertaining that either of them was withheld; the poor creatures themselves could not tell us; but we had no reason to think they were unnecessarily stinted in the one or the other.

Are you of opinion that the confined space in which you have represented some of the patients to be kept, without air or light, tended considerably to retard recovery?—I am decidedly of opinion that it did retard recovery.

What particular effects do you think have been produced by that degree of confinement without light and air?—That of the blood not having undergone the change necessary to good health, which is produced by free exposure to air.

Were the Lunatics confined in their cells, very dirty in their persons?—They were so dirty, that on opening the door of the first cell, the smell was so offensive as nearly to prevent further inspection; it made me extremely sick, who have been all my life accustomed to the smells of a dissecting room; and the Clerk of the Peace, a remarkably strong hale young man, and a man not at all likely to be fastidious, vomited extremely, and he was unable for some time to perform his duty.

What was the appearance in the look of the patients, in consequence of their confinement without light and air?—All pallid, all bleached; one of the patients was so bad, that they told me they did not expect him to live; I thought it my duty to tell them, “If this man dies, I am so satisfied it is from improper treatment, that I shall do all I can to convict you of murder; I state it now in the presence of the Clerk of the Peace of the county, and the Magistrate attending, that I shall bring a charge of murder against you.”

Can you give the Committee any particular description of the state in which you found that individual whose case you thought so dangerous?—He was confined alone in one of the oblong troughs, chained down; he had evidently not been in the open air for a considerable time, for when I made them bring him into the open air, the man could not endure the light; he was like an Albino blinking, and they acknowledged he had not; upon asking him how often he had been allowed to get out of the trough, he said, “perhaps once in a week or ten days, and sometimes not for a fortnight;” he was not in the least violent, he was perfectly calm, and answered the questions put to him rationally; his breathing was then so difficult, that I thought his life likely to be affected by it.

What was the immediate bodily complaint under which he laboured?—The difficulty of breathing, from not having been in the open air for a considerable time; in passing through the lungs, the blood, from a dark and nearly a black colour, assumes a ver-million colour, and this change, so necessary to existence, could not have taken place without exposure to air; we take away life by preventing this change in hanging or drowning; it is not by apoplexy, as used to be supposed.

Are you of opinion that the manner in which the man was chained in his bed, had in this particular instance any effect upon his health?—By preventing motion and that healthy change which motion produces.

You were understood to state, that in some instances there were no coverlids to the beds?—In some instances, only straw.

Was the straw wet?—There was clean straw at the top, but from the extremely offensive nature of the smell upon opening the door, I should take for granted it was wet at the bottom, though it was too offensive to make an accurate examination; we conceived it impossible to proceed from any thing but filth in the trough.

Were the men and women in the day-room together?—Yes, they were.

Were the men and women turned into the airing-ground together?—We understood not; that the women were sent into the garden, and the men into a sort of farm-yard.

Were any of those patients in a state of great irritation?—Very violent, some of them, and required confinement.

Were they kept in the same rooms with those who were more quiet and tranquil?—Those who were very violent, were kept in separate cells.

When they were sent out in the airing-ground, were they with others, or alone?—My own conviction is, that they were never taken up at all; I was told they were taken up to be shaved, but I had no evidence that they were.

How long has Mr. Spencer kept this house?—He is a very old man; perhaps twenty or thirty years.

Did you ever visit it before?—As soon as I was appointed, and was in that neighbourhood (not having read the Act of Parliament) I went with Mr. Beckford's steward, of whom they rented the house, and told them that I wished to visit the house; they said I had no right to visit without the Clerk of the Peace and a Magistrate. Mr. Steel, Mr. Beckford's steward, a Lieutenant-Colonel of the Local Militia, said, "I think if you consult your own interest, you will not refuse it:" upon his saying this, we went through the place.

Did you see the house then?—We went merely cursorily over it.

How long is that ago?—It is some years ago; I resided sixteen miles from it, and those appointed for Salisbury were not the visiting magistrates for that district, and on my proposing to go over, there was difficulty about it, none being appointed for that district.

So that in point of fact, the house has never been minutely visited and inspected, till the date of that Report?—It has not.

How often, according to the Act of Parliament, are you obliged to inspect these houses?—I do not recollect the act of Parliament specifying the time; it is generally an arrangement between the visiting magistrate and the physician; the physician is merely an attendant upon the magistrate, and the onus lies upon the magistrate.

You have stated that only fourteen of the patients in the house were received by regular certificates, do you happen to know whether there was any, and what authority, for receiving the others?—A certificate is the only authority on which they can be received.

You were understood to say, that the magistrates proposed to exact a fine, the amount of which was 1,800*l.*, how much did they exact?—200*l.* so the Clerk of the Peace told me, and that the rest was remitted, on account of the plea of poverty.

You were understood to state, that every man that was hand-locked was likewise leg-locked?—I am not sure that every man was; some had a chain of about ten or twelve inches, connecting the legs together like fetters, and those that were handcuffed, were handcuffed with the wrists closed.

Having given a full account of the state in which you found Mr. Spencer's house at Fonthill in the year 1812, have the goodness to state whether you have since visited that house; and if you have, the condition in which you found it?—I visited the Madhouse at Fonthill again on the 5th May 1815, in company with the visiting magistrate John Hungerford Penruddocke, Esq. and the Clerk of the Peace for the county, Mr. Swayne; partly in consequence of this report I have delivered in, and partly in consequence of infirmities, the person who kept the house at the time when the first report was made, had given up the management of the house to a nephew of his; that nephew went over the house with us as the keeper of the house when we made this inspection; I made the following Minutes: Upon comparing the present state of this house with its state in November 1812, when occupied by Mr. Arthur Spencer, considerable improvements appear to have been made by Mr. J. F. Spencer, the present Proprietor; videlicet, the sleeping-rooms for the men are now properly lighted with casement windows, and thereby better ventilated, and the rooms fitted up with more suitable bedsteads; an additional bed-room has been recently fitted up and better adapted to the purpose than any of the former; two other detached rooms, eight feet square, lighted with casements over the doors, have been also recently erected in the yard adjoining the garden, which appear suitable for the purpose; the sleeping-room on the ground-floor, which on the former visit was divided into six cells, with a passage communicating therewith, has been materially improved; three of the cells have been converted into a day-room properly battened and plastered, with a fire-place and stove, and large casement window admitting light and air thereto, and to the three remaining cells, which have been also battened and plastered, and ventilators introduced in the walls; the pigstye and dung-heap opposite this room have been also removed, the cells adjoining the wood-house appear to have been repaired and white-washed, and ventilators introduced through the doors; these are now occupied by patients who appeared extremely refractory and violent; but Mr. Spencer assured the visitors that their confinement there had been temporary, and that these cells were about to be taken down, and more appropriate rooms provided for the unfortunate objects: Eighteen patients confined; videlicet, three male patients maintained by their friends, one from the produce of his own estate, managed by parish officers; and three paupers; and six female patients, maintained by their friends; and two paupers; certificates of mental derangement produced, and Mr. Spencer reported that notices were regularly transmitted to the College of Physicians, &c. The patients all appeared fit objects for confinement, and in general healthy; all the male patients, with the exception of three, were fettered or hand-cuffed, but their violent behaviour during the visit appeared to render some restraint of this sort necessary; patients admitted to the open air at all times between nine in the morning and six in the evening, unless during the paroxysms of their complaints; upon the whole, much improvement has taken place, but much remains to be done to make the premises suitable to the purpose for which they are appropriated; and Mr. Spencer assured the visitors, it was his intention to remove the whole buildings to a more elevated and airy situation, which he pointed out, and which the visitors recommended him to adopt as soon as possible; they also recommended him to cause the earth round the two new sleeping-rooms to be removed, so as more effectually to drain off the water descending from the hill and roof, &c. which he promised to complete forthwith.

What was the number of attendants upon the last visit?—I think there were two men and three women; but the women were employed also in domestic purposes.

Was the man whom you found so ill in 1812, in the same state in 1815?—His health was so materially improved, that I thought him in no danger; he was walking about, but hand-cuffed, and his legs chained together.

Did he appear violent?—Not in the least.

You have stated that all the male patients, except three were fettered or hand-cuffed, are you of opinion that that degree of restraint was necessary, considering the state of their disorder?—I did not think it necessary in all the cases; and I thought the mode of confining them injurious in every case; in the first place, I thought the mode of confining their legs injudicious, for it was for no other purpose than to prevent the patients getting out of the premises, the walls not being sufficient to secure them; that ought to be provided for by the keeper of a Madhouse; I think that a man ought not to be in chains merely to save the expense of a keeper; besides which, the mode of confinement by a strait-waistcoat I think more mild and more secure than that of hand-cuffing them; a man who is violent can injure another, or himself, when hand-cuffed, and therefore it must be merely to save expense.

Have you had occasion, in the course of your duty as a visiting physician, to visit the house of Mr. Finch?—I visit Mr. Finch's house, upon the average, two or three times every year, and have done for the last fifteen or sixteen years.

In what state have you found the patients there?—I found there, that they appear to be as well accommodated as they can be in any house that is not absolutely built for such an institution; it is a house that was built for a private house; they are humanely taken care of, and the house is, upon the whole, as well regulated as a house of that kind can be; more room for the patients would be an improvement, and in a place built for the purpose, great improvements might be made; it is within a mile and a half of Salisbury, in a very healthy situation, and there is very ample garden ground, in which all the patients are allowed to walk.

What is the number of the patients accommodated there?—I think from sixty to eighty.

Did it appear to you that any of those patients were under more severe restraint than was necessary?—I never saw a patient in that house under more restraint than appeared to me necessary.

Upon the whole, is the Committee to understand that you are of opinion this house of Mr. Finch's is as well calculated for the reception and cure of patients, as a house, not constructed especially for the purpose, is likely to be?—Yes, or as attention to private interest will in human nature permit; if it was rather larger for the number of patients, it might be better.

Is the Committee to understand, that in your opinion a public establishment has advantages over those that are kept by private persons?—If regulated as infirmaries are, that is, superintended by a public board sitting weekly, or twice a week, I should say they had most decided advantages.

In your observations upon Mr. Finch's house, you draw your comparison more from what ought to take place in public institutions, than from those of private establishments you have examined?—Yes; I should say it was infinitely the best private establishment I have ever seen.

What is the number of servants at Mr. Finch's?—I do not recollect the number, but they appeared to me to be ample; I never saw patients left without a servant; there are servants about the rooms and about the grounds, and there are none of the patients under restraint, except those in whom there was an appearance of violence.

Are you of opinion that the provisions of the Act of the Fourteenth of the King, now in force, are sufficient to answer the purposes intended by it?—It appears to me they are totally inefficient; it has always struck both the magistrates and myself that our visits were quite inefficient; it appeared to me that they were inefficient upon a great number of points; that they were inefficient as to ascertaining whether we had or had not seen all the rooms appropriated to patients belonging to the house; that they were inefficient, inasmuch as we had no means of ascertaining when persons appeared to be tolerably sane at the time, whether it is a lucid interval, or permanent. Upon a general scale, I should conceive this would render a future Bill more operative. First, No licence to be granted till a plan of the distribution of the whole house and grounds adjoining has been delivered on oath to the Quarter Sessions or College of Physicians. Second, Any change of the distribution of rooms or erection of new ones, to be notified to the Quarter Sessions for the county next occurring. Third, A Return, after the manner or form of a military return, to be delivered at each Quarter Session, stating the name, age, and state of bodily and mental health; length of confinement, and mode of treatment as to confinement of every patient. Fourth, When patients appear to the visitors in a sound state of mind, the keepers commonly say that the present appearance is merely a lucid interval; perhaps therefore it might be useful to order that such patients shall be separately noted for re-examination at all subsequent visits. Fifth, That a separate Report of patients discharged, and whether cured or not, in the interval of each visit, should be delivered to the inspectors. Sixth, As to the space; a calculation of the space requisite for patients in Hospitals, stated in a paper published lately by Sir Gilbert Blane.

You have mentioned that you thought the names of the persons confined should be inserted in the certificates delivered to the Sessions; do you not think that considerable inconvenience of the most painful kind would arise to families from the publicity given to the names of persons confined in these houses?—I think in the choice of evils we must take the least, and that it is a greater object to let the fact be known who are confined there, than any inconvenience from the fact being known to gentlemen of honour, who would not make an improper use of the disclosure.

In your inspection of any of those places of confinement, has it occurred to you to meet with patients, who either from your own observation or from the report of the keepers, appeared to be in a state of most outrageous madness?—In the very last visit I made at Hindon, there was a patient in a state of the most furious madness which can be described, in one of the boxes.

Was he naked?—No, he had blankets to cover him; he was properly covered.

Did this man appear to be in such a state, that you suppose he would have murdered any person if he had been at liberty?—I think he would; and indiscriminately direct his violence against any person.

In what manner was this man confined?—He was chained by one hand and one leg into a trough, in which his bed was.

Did that mode of confinement appear to you and to the keeper, sufficient to guard against any accident, without the addition of any other irons?—Yes; there are many persons, however furious they may be against others, who are not disposed to self-murder; there are others innocent as to others, perpetually bent on self-murder; the habits of such a person are soon known; this individual appeared to be bent only on injuring others, not himself.

Have you ever seen in any of the houses you have visited, any restraint imposed on the most outrageous maniacs, beyond that of hand-cuffs, leg-locks or strait-waistcoats?—I do not recollect to have seen any other restraint except that; I think I have seen a person who was very violent, with a belt of iron round his waist, and chained near a wall.

MR. WILLIAM FINCH, of Laverstock, near Salisbury; called in, and Examined.

WHAT is your profession?—A Surgeon, and Keeper of an Asylum for insane persons at Laverstock, near Salisbury.

How long have you kept that house?—Sixteen years.

What is the usual mode in which outrageous maniacs are confined in your house?—Usually with a strait waistcoat, as being more mild than any other method that I know of.

Do you ever use irons, and of what sort are they?—I have used iron hand-cuffs occasionally, but they are an improvement of my own, and leg-locks.

Are those the only instruments of confinement you use?—They are.

Do you think that any degree of violent insanity, which has ever come under your knowledge, requires a more strict coercion?—Certainly not, than the one I have mentioned.

According to your experience, does the bodily health, and the chance of the recovery, depend at all on the manner in which the patients are confined?—Certainly.

Does unnecessary restraint tend to increase irritation?—Surely.

Does it operate in that manner peculiarly on patients who have lucid intervals?—I am not prepared to answer that question; I know generally, on patients it produces irritation.

You consider that irritation is very disadvantageous to the patient?—I do certainly.

How many patients have you in your house?—About 100.

Have you any paupers?—Yes, I have about forty in a distinct establishment, forming part of the 100.

At what price per head?—From twelve to fourteen shillings per week.

Can all your patients help themselves to water to drink, or do they depend upon your servants, for the water they may want?—I pay that attention, that I never leave the Asylum myself, and they are constantly supplied; whenever they want water, they ring the bell, and the servants go over for it: they are never denied. I go through the house every day, and they make complaints to me of any thing they think improper; they complain whenever a servant attempts or threatens violence, and even sometimes when they are spoken cross to.

During one year, forty-two patients were admitted; how many were cured?—Twenty-two; and seven convalescent, in the same year.

Have you had any of those persons who were discharged cured, last year, returned upon you this?—To the best of my recollection, I had but one returned.

It is a circumstance of frequent occurrence?—Yes, it is; and next year it may happen more frequently.

On what authority do you receive patients into your house?—I have formed a certificate with a double security, one from the relations, and one from the physician, of which the following is a copy:

Form of the CERTIFICATE necessary to be signed by one or more of the Relatives of every patient (excepting paupers), before their admission into the Lunatic Asylum, at Laverstock, near Salisbury.

Upon this certificate I received a patient; this certificate was brought by one of the relatives.

[The Witness delivered it in, and it was read, as follows:]

“ He^y Broadway A Potcarey of Gillingham Certefy that

“ Hay. Broadway.”

Do you happen to know any thing of the person who signed that?—No; I recollect asking the daughter who it was; and she said, he kept a druggist's shop in the parish, and occasionally attended the poor people in the village.

Was it upon the authority of this certificate you received the patient?—I should not have conceived it necessary, from the man's circumstances, to have had a certificate; at the same time, I cannot measure a man's abilities by his spelling or writing; I should have taken the certificate, and made a complaint of it, as I did, the first time there was a meeting of the magistrates, and Doctor Fowler; that I thought it an improper thing, that a man capable of sending such an instrument, should be authorized with the power.

When you state, that from the situation of the person, you would not have thought it necessary to require a certificate, do you mean, that from the visible state of derangement he was in, you would have taken him into your house, as you would any one else brought there in such a situation?—Certainly; he laboured under derangement at the time he was brought, he had been guilty of some excess; and I conceived it a temporary thing, which it proved to be, and I gave him a little cooling medicine, and sent him home in a short time, probably within the time specified in the Act of Parliament, requiring me to make my return, which is ten days.

Did you examine the provisions of the bill proposed by Mr. Rose, last year?—I did minutely at the time.

Do you consider any of them as liable to be injurious to private establishments?—I conceive particularly so.

In what manner?—I understood there was a stipend required, according to the number of patients, rich or poor; I recollect perfectly, one of my objections was, it was hard the parish should be taxed for those who paid twelve or fourteen shillings a week, the same as those who paid three or four guineas; that it was a tax upon the parish, in fact, a tax on the consumer.

The Bill proposed to enact the erection of a pump in every airing and exercising yard, would not that erection contribute much to the comfort and health of the patients?—I cannot conceive in what manner; there are certain times, both in women and men, when they might labour under bodily complaints, when the free access to a pump might not be prudent.

Are there any cases in which you would allow free exercise, and yet prevent their taking the quantity of water they desired?—Yes, in many cases where foot-exercise was important.

You have stated, that your servants procure water for your patients whenever they desire it?—Whenever it is proper, of course; I speak in a qualified sense; sometimes they are taking medicines, and the free access to water, might be the death of the patient, or at all events it might counteract the effect of the medicine; the servants know when they are taking medicines, and when it is from any cause imprudent.

You believe that a free access to water from every patient in a Lunatic establishment, might, under particular circumstances, be prejudicial to the health of the patient?—They are sometimes induced to take strong and violent exercise, and which indeed may be conducive to their restoration, yet under such exercise, an uncontrolled access to water may be highly improper.

In the practice you have had of this disease, do you find the patients are particularly sensible to irritation on the part of the keepers, and equally sensible to their kindness?—In both cases, particularly.

Of course the greatest care is taken by you, to have those persons about them, whose gentleness and kindness of manner, will win the confidence, and sooth the wounded spirit of the patient?—That is my study, to have persons about them, who will, by their softness of manners, and good temper, and good disposition, allay their disease, or at least, not aggravate it. I am not only particular in the selection of my servants, but invariably discharge them, however valuable in other respects, if I detect any act of violence exercised towards the patients.

The Committee is to understand, that as little restraint as possible, is the leading principle of your establishment?—Yes; out of 100 patients, I have seldom had more than two or three under personal restraint; they are generally brought to me with shackles upon them; I invariably make it a rule to take their fetters off, unless it is absolutely necessary to retain them.

Neither irons nor strait-waistcoat?—Without any sort of confinement.

Do you recollect a woman being sent to you from Christchurch, within this twelvemonth, who had been confined in the parish workhouse under strong restraint, and was in irons when she arrived at your house?—She was under strong confinement when brought to my house; I cannot say whether by cords or chains, but her hands and feet were confined; since that time she has had no personal restraint, further than being kept in her room, and has assisted in the house occasionally.

In the classification of persons confined in your establishment, is especial care taken to place those who are noisy in a distinct part of the building from those who are tranquil?—There is; so that those who are quiet, cannot be disturbed by those that are noisy.

Have you any doubt, that separation of the noisy from the quiet patients, is essential to the recovery of the latter patients?—Certainly.

Are your patients accustomed to take much exercise?—A great deal of exercise; I think it necessary to health; I was led to this remark, by observing a few years ago, that my pauper patients recovered in a greater number, than those in a better situation in life, which I attributed to their being employed in my garden, in working, digging, &c.

Is it your opinion that the employment of the body contributes in a great degree to the restoration of the health of the mind?—It is.

Is it your practice to allow patients of all descriptions, the more opulent as well as the paupers, to work and employ themselves in your garden?—I allow them to work if they should be so inclined; but as I could not enforce that upon my superior patients, whose habits of life are not congenial with it, I substituted amusements to supply its place; such as bowling greens, cricket, billiards, and all the different amusements which act upon the mind, and keep the body in exercise; and then I found a corresponding good attend the superior patients, as well as the others.

Have you any doubt that that practice, which has been so successful in your own establishment, might be as successfully adopted throughout the different public establishments?—That is my idea; I do think so; I think they cannot be perfect in their treatment without it; I can give a very strong case of a patient I had from St. Luke's; he was a man of opulence, sent there as a pauper, (and of course some other precluded from the advantages of the Institution) he came to me afterwards as a gentleman, with no increase of property: this man came to me a most miserable object from St. Luke's, after having been there a twelvemonth, and discharged as incurable; he was so bad, that he had lost nearly the use of his limbs; he walked upon his toes; he could scarcely get from the coach to my house; the muscles of his legs were contracted; he was so nasty in himself, that he ate his own fæces, and would his own flesh, if he had not been prevented; he tore it immediately as he came to me; I tried to put him into a room where he could do no mischief to himself, or any one else, but took off every restraint; I found him within a few days somewhat more composed; some little time afterwards he became so bad again, I was obliged to use some restraint, so as to prevent his eating his own fæces; from having a man attending him two or three times every day to the privy, his disposition to filth was lessened; by attending to his bowels, and keeping him strongly exercised in the garden and the fields, I found him gaining strength daily; within six weeks, capable of playing bowls; and I sent him home perfectly restored in four months, where he carried on the business of a coach proprietor for three years afterwards, and called upon me many times in his gig, and thanked me for my attention to him.

What extent of ground have you round your establishment?—I have nine acres of pleasure ground, for my superior patients, and from half an acre to an acre, for the paupers.

Is there not a mound within your grounds, from which the patients can observe what passes in the public road, at a small distance, without being themselves the subjects of observation?—There is.

Do you not conceive that the sight of the country, and objects passing by on the road, contribute not only to the amusement of Lunatics, but aids in no small degree their restoration?—I think so very much, and consider myself particularly fortunate in having such advantage at my Asylum; I have established carriages and horses, so that my patients may enjoy every comfort they can at their own houses; I have had patients remain with me by choice, after they have been recovered; I have at this time under my care, some who voluntarily placed themselves under my care.

Do you not consider the practice of leaving the men's beds open in the morning, till they are used at night, is desirable?—I think it is a very good thing; but our rooms are well ventilated, and the windows thrown open; and I have my rooms white-washed once in every month or six weeks.

Mercurii, 10^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

HENRY ALEXANDER, Esq. called in, and Examined.

WHAT is your situation?—I am resident at Ipswich, and am a banker.

Have you had an opportunity of observing the treatment of insane persons in parish workhouses any where?—In some small degree; I think I have visited seven and forty workhouses; but in going round, in only nine instances have I met with any of those unhappy people; and perhaps in only three that it will be necessary to mention particularly, the others rather generally. In the forty-seven I visited, I think there were only four, where there was any accommodation at all for the reception of such persons, and in three only, where there was any suitable accommodation; the houses I visited were chiefly in Devon, Cornwall, Somersetshire, and some in Gloucestershire, and Wilts, and some in the Isle of Wight.

When you say that there were only three that had particular accommodation, you mean three, where the insane paupers were separated from the other paupers?—Yes; the fourth I considered such a very unsuitable place, that it should hardly be reckoned with the others, as considering that a place was provided for them.

When you say places provided, you mean places separated from the other paupers?—Only four.

What were your observations?—In the three I have just alluded to, one is in the city of Bristol; they had a very large number of insane poor in that house.

Is that for the whole city, or for a particular parish?—For the whole city, it is now incorporated in one; when I was there, about a year and three quarters since, the number of insane poor was two and twenty, I think.

Can you state the whole number of paupers in the house at the same time?—I cannot say that at present; I cannot find the memorandum in that case.

By poor, do you mean paupers?—Yes.

Such poor as were detained there at the expense of their parish?—Yes, entirely I think; there were eighteen that appeared to be comfortably provided for, in a large good room, and there was a female to attend them; and it was rather a remarkable thing that the whole of these, I think, without any exception, were females; one or two of them was in bed, and one was under restraint, and confined there: it appeared to be rather a case of necessity.

Was she furious?—She appeared quiet when we were there; but they told us she was frequently very violent indeed.

What was the nature of the restraint?—Nothing more than two cords that went across the bed; nothing more than that.

Were the others noisy?—No, I think they appeared to be in good order; there were four others that were confined in cells, I may say under ground, that were considered incurables; and as such, were set aside to linger out the remainder of their existence in a sad way.

Under what restraint were they?—They were each confined in wooden cells; one was a woman entirely naked, she had plenty of clean straw: they appeared to have been provided that morning with clean straw.

Did they know of your coming?—No.

Had she any blankets?—No, nothing but straw; she had no covering at all: it appeared in some respects an unwholesome place, but there was as much cleanliness as we could look for.

Were they cleanly in their persons?—They appeared so; but this room was so dark, we were not able to judge.

Was there no window in the cells?—I think there were small bars which admitted some little light.

What do you mean by wooden cells; a wooden cage, or partitioned off?—They were partitioned off.

What was the size of them?—I did not measure them, but I apprehend they might be about four feet wide, and the depth I can hardly tell, but not exceeding six or seven feet.

For each patient?—For each patient: they were divided more like pig-styes than any thing else. I have, in one or two houses, seen these places of confinement, though I hardly know how to describe them; they are very strong cells.

But inconveniently small?—I apprehend there is room for them to lie out at length, and little more than that. There was one thing I considered extremely improper with regard to that house; there was a sailor who had misconducted himself with regard to the matron, and he was confined in this place, locked up.

In one of the cells?—No: before the cells there is a passage, and he was confined in that.

Was he in irons?—No: he was only locked in.

Had he free access to the women's cells?—They were locked, but there was an opening in the door to let in air and light.

Had each of those cells such windows as you describe?—Yes.

There was a great want of light?—There was very little light indeed: I did not consider that they had been rigorous towards this sailor, but it seemed very unsuitable that he should be confined there with four females, one of them perfectly naked.

But their doors were locked?—Yes.

Then he had not the means of access to them?—No, he had not; but they were quite exposed to view.

Will you be so good as to state to the Committee any other house you visited?—The next I have to mention, is at Leskeard, in Cornwall.

Did you enquire whether there was any other Lunatic Asylum in Bristol?—I saw no other; and it does not occur to me, at the present time, that there is one; but at the time I was there, my object was not confined to Lunatics in particular, but to workhouses in general; we always enquired whether they had any Lunatics confined, and made a point of seeing them.

And you concluded those were all the pauper Lunatics of the city of Bristol?—Yes, undoubtedly. At Leskeard there were two women confined.

In a fit place for them?—Very far from it: indeed I hardly know what to term the places, but they were no better than dungeons.

Were they under ground?—No; they were buildings, but they were very damp and very low. In one of them there was no light admitted through the door; neither light nor air. Both of them were chained down to the damp stone floor, and one of them had only a little dirty straw, which appeared to have been there for many weeks.

No bed-place at all, but sleeping on the stone floor to which she was chained?—Yes: the chain was a long one, and fastened to the centre, and admitted of her just coming outside, where she sat.

Was she violent?—By no means; she was perfectly quiet and harmless. I would just mention her case: we felt much interested in her situation, and we enquired the reason of her confinement of the mistress of the workhouse; and it appeared she had been confined many months, both winter and summer; and the only cause they assigned was, that she was troublesome; they could not keep her within; she was roving about the country, and they had had complaints lodged against her from different persons.

Not of any act of violence?—Not at all, we enquired particularly, and they gave us no other reason than her being troublesome. We asked if she was allowed water to wash herself, and we found she was not; it was of no use to her, the mistress said. I do not know that there is any thing else particular as to her; but the whole place was very filthy.

Filled with excrements, and very offensive?—Yes; not her cell particularly. To give an idea of it, the fowls and chickens were kept in the pantry where they kept the food for the poor. Part of the poor had an allowance from their parish, and provided their own food; those that were incapable, such as children and infirm persons, were farmed by the governor and governess.

Do you know at what rate?—I have not the memorandum of that; it was very low. I know it might not be amiss to mention, that, where I have enquired, in different places, the cost of providing for the poor, it amounts to four or five shillings, and, in one case, from four to five shillings and three-halfpence a week; that is at Plymouth, where they are provided for.

With respect to this woman whom you found chained to the floor, you probably were led into conversation with her; did she tell you the wants she felt there?—Not at all, she appeared incapable, the mind appeared gone very much; she was about thirty years of age; and it appeared, I think, that about seven years before she was a very respectable maid-servant, who lived in various reputable families there, and was about to be married to a young man who left Leskeard and went to reside at Plymouth Dock, and not hearing from him, she went over, and found he was about to be married the next day to another person, and it had such an effect upon her mind, that she has been deranged ever since. A friend was with me, who, though not professionally a medical man, has attended a good deal to the wants of his poor neighbours about him, and he had no doubt at all she might have been restored if proper means had been used.

Did she appear in a bad state of health, independent of the loss of reason?—She was extremely dejected and very much emaciated, but I attributed it to not having sufficient nutriment. We examined the provision, which was very poor.

She was not allowed water to wash herself?—No.

Did you ask whether she had enough to drink of water?—We did not ask that question; we put it as a question, whether she had water or not; and they said, No, she made no use of it: the other woman was confined in the same manner, on the stone floor, chained; but there was a window in the cell, and she had a bed that, I think, rested upon the floor, I do not think there was any bedstead. She kept the place particularly neat; her greatest complaint was, that she had nothing to do; but she shewed us several places in her arms, which she said arose from the children throwing stones at her, which they were allowed to do, and insult her very much.

The children in the house?—Yes.

Was she quiet?—She was very loquacious, but, in other respects, appeared very quiet; they said she had been a very industrious woman, but that she was high at times.

By high, they meant troublesome?—Yes.

But not outrageous?—I think they did not go so far as to say she was very troublesome; we did not discover any thing that appeared to justify her being chained down, either from her appearance, or from conversation with the mistress; and with regard to the other, they said directly that she was not high.

There was nothing in your conversation with them that led you to believe there was any thing to justify their being chained down?—Certainly not; it may be satisfactory to know, that, in consequence of its being mentioned to two or three principal persons in the town, they sent down immediately to ascertain the situation of these two persons, in consequence of our representation; and that I have since had the satisfaction of knowing that this woman, in particular, has been liberated from her confinement. There certainly was a great want of attention on the part of some persons in the town. There was a small charity school upon the new plan, and the ladies of the committee, who frequently inspected the school, had to pass by the door of this poor creature, and yet it did not appear to have taken their attention; and she must have been daily an object of their observation.

By liberated, you mean that her chains were taken from her?—She has been removed out of this dungeon entirely.

But still confined within the walls?—I rather think she goes about the house with the children. Another house I visited, was at Tavistock: with regard to that, I am sorry my information will not be altogether satisfactory, as we did not see the Insane poor themselves: we went to visit the house, in which sixty poor persons were confined; and after going through the house, the situation of which was dreadful, indeed I could not stand up at all in some of the lower rooms; the rooms were very small, and in one of the bed-rooms, seventeen persons slept; one man and his wife slept in the room with fifteen other people.

Were there any Insane persons in that workhouse?—There were three which we were not permitted to see. We enquired if there were any Insane persons; and, upon expressing a desire to see them, we were at first refused, on the ground that the place was not fit for us to go into; but we persisted in our intreaties to see them, and went up the yard, where we understood the cells were, and upon entering them, we found that the inmates had been removed; there were three of them.

They had been removed out?—They had been removed out that morning.

For what purpose?—The cells had been washed and cleaned out.

Who refused you?—The master of the house. He did it not in a peremptory manner at all, but told us it was unfit for us to go, and indeed we found it so.

What was the state of the cells?—I never smelt such a stench in my life, and it was so bad, that a friend, who went with me, said he could not enter the other. After having entered one, I said, I would go into the other; that if they could survive there the night through, I could at least inspect them.

There were three cells?—Yes: the cells themselves were not small; there were bedsteads which were completely rotten with filth; they were more like hand-barrows.

Were there any bed-clothes?—There were none at that time. I think there was straw, but no bed-clothes; I cannot say that they never had any bed-clothes.

At what season of the year did this visit take place?—I think it was in July; the latter end of June, or the beginning of July, in the year 1813. The stench was so great I felt almost suffocated; and, for hours after, if I ate any thing, I still retained the same smell; I could not get rid of it; and it should be remembered that these cells had been washed out that morning, and the doors had been opened some hours previous.

Did they know you were coming there?—No, they did not at all know it; we generally took care to see them as they were. There was no window, but a small hole cut in the door. I really do not believe I could have survived an hour, scarcely, in one of those places; it was a most suffocating dreadful smell.

Do you know the size of the room where the seventeen people slept?—The room was small, but it was rather lofty, because it went up to the roof. There are no other houses that I have to mention, particularly, in which Insane poor were confined.

Did you find any other houses where there were any Insane inhabitants at all?—Yes, in six other places, but there was no separate place of confinement for them.

Did they appear to be well treated in those six other places?—I think we saw no exception at all to good treatment.

Were they under restraint of any sort, in those six other places?—In one only. In several cases they were extremely troublesome, very noisy; they were kept with the other poor, and constantly walking about, and making great noise.

And disturbing the other poor?—Yes: it was extremely troublesome to us the very little time we were there; we could hardly get them away from us. At Kingsbridge there were two.

They were mixed with the other paupers, and were extremely troublesome to them?—They were certainly. There were but few poor at Kingsbridge. There are two other cases of idiots; I do not know whether it is worth while mentioning them; one at Falmouth, and another at Teignmouth.

Were they in any separate confinement?—No; they were mixed with the other paupers pretty much.

Were they troublesome to the other paupers?—Not materially, I think; but they did not appear to me at all fit objects to be exposed with the others. There was something extremely disgusting and hardly human in the appearance of them; they had each of them only a very thin gown on.

Men or women?—Both of them men; and they were perfectly indecent, indeed, particularly in the case of the person at Teignmouth. I have no other cases to mention of insanity. The state of some of the other workhouses was dreadful, particularly one at Modbury in Devonshire; there were sixty old persons, thirteen of whom were in one room, with a small casement at the end of it; some of the provisions were kept in the same room, which consisted of sour bad barley bread; we tasted some of that bread, which was most unpalatable. The passage to the room was open to the weather in many places. The poor complained heavily of the situation in which they were placed, and some of them expressed a wish for death; it was a sleeping-room as well as a general keeping-room; they were in this room day and night.

Had you an opportunity of knowing what the other part of the diet of the paupers was?—We saw no other provision. There was a house where the poor were somewhat similarly situated, at St. Clement's near Truro; the poor were allowed half-a-crown a week.

How many people might there be in that house?—I think there were thirteen persons; but it was divided into separate rooms, and in one room there were five aged persons; they were all aged poor, so much so, that they were not able to help themselves even to water, and their food consisted entirely of barley bread, of a similar description to what I have just represented; we tasted it in both cases.

Did you happen to hear whether, in either or both of those places, the poor were farmed within those buildings; and at what price?—At the one at Modbury they were not farmed, it was under the management of the overseers; the other people were allowed half a crown a week, and this house to live in, they supplied themselves. Of the houses we visited, in the greater part of them we had very much to complain of the inattention of the overseers; in many places they did not visit more than once in seven months.

That you learned from the paupers themselves?—Not only from the paupers themselves, but from the governors, or from the mistresses of the houses; it is a general complaint.

Are there any Insane poor in the neighbourhood of Ipswich?—None in the workhouses; several have been sent to the Norwich Bethlem. I do not remember a single instance of an Insane pauper at Ipswich.

It is the custom to send them to Norwich?—When they can get admission for them.

Lunæ, 22^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

LORD ROBERT SEYMOUR, a Member of the Committee, delivered in the following Statement.

“ I AM a Director of the Poor of the Parish of St. Mary-le-bone, and in the practice of visiting the insane poor of that parish at Mr. Warburton’s Bethnal Green. I very frequently see them; and it is due to the servants, who have the care of those unfortunate persons, to say, that they are in a state, as little uncomfortable, as the humane and tender attention of such servants can make them: But the house having been built for the use of a private family, as houses of a like nature have generally been, is very unfit for the great number of persons it now contains; the ceilings are extremely low, the beds are so closely stowed as to be nearly in contact with each other, and the airing or exercising grounds are most inconveniently small. When first I visited this house, I thought I could see that the water supplied to the patients, by the servants of the house, was not in quality and quantity always what it should be. I therefore recommended to Mr. Warburton, to fix a pump in each airing-yard, which he most obligingly and readily did; and these pumps have not only much contributed to the health and comfort of all the patients, but also to their amusement. I wish I could also now prevail on Mr. W. to extend and enlarge the airing-grounds of his several houses; the sacrifice of ground would be very small on his part, and the substantial benefit the enlargement would render to the numerous patients he has under his care, would in my mind be incalculable. The present airing-yard now used by the women at Bethnal Green, is most shamefully small and close. It has always appeared to me, in the Madhouses I have seen, that the keepers were too few, and that the fewness of them subjected the patients to much restraint, which would be avoided, were the keepers more numerous.

“ The parish of Mary-le-bone is in the excellent practice of visiting, by its medical staff, its insane poor every month. The staff consists of an eminent physician, a surgeon and apothecary, who, after their visitation, make to the Directors of the Poor a Report* in writing, of the state of every pauper they have seen, as well as of his provisions and bed. I wish,

* Vide the accompanying form of Report.

“ for the most obvious reasons, that such reports could shew
“ that the male patients sleep singly.

“ Every body who is connected with parochial workhouses “ must have learnt, that the practice of putting male paupers
“ into one bed, frequently leads to the most abominable conse“ quences.

“ This detail I give, in the hope of other parishes adopting the “ practice of Mary-le-bone. Of other parishes, it is the miser“ able policy to keep the poor, when Insane, in their work“ houses; in which, the parishes not having proper places for “ securing these unfortunate persons, they are kept in strait“ waistcoats, or in more painful durance, which greatly increases “ irritation, and retards their cure; at the same time that it is a “ mischievous annoyance to the other inhabitants of the work“ house.*

“ The ordinary maintenance of a pauper in the parish of “ Mary-le-bone costs this parish about seven shillings weekly,
“ and in a state of Lunacy ten shillings; and to the paltry dif“ ference between the two sums, are the chance of recovery and “ comfort of half the Insane poor of England completely sa“ crificed.

“ Under this conviction, I would strongly recommend that a “ clause be inserted in our intended Bill, empowering all Ma“ gistrates to cause the Lunatics to be removed from their re“ spective Workhouses to the Licensed Madhouses, at the charge “ of the respective parishes.

“ I am, on much observation, decidedly of opinion with Mr.
“ Haslam, that manacles are a milder instrument of restraint “ than a strait-waistcoat, which is more heating, and less favour“ able to health; but I think that a strap, of whatever material, “ from behind the shoulders, confining the upper joints of the “ arms of a patient, would be highly preferable to both, by ren“ dering the hands of such patients more useful to him in all “ calls of nature.

“ I, in the course of last year, repeatedly saw Norris, the “ Maniac, in his cell at Bethlem, when I always found him fas“ tened by a very strong iron collar to his bedstead, and chained
“ by the leg to the bedstead. He more than once told me, that “ he considered himself as a dangerous Lunatic; and I have no “ doubt that he continued to be so to the time of his death: But “ I am convinced that the iron collar and leg-lock by which he “ was secured when I saw him, would have rendered him inca“ pable of doing mischief at any period of his long and most “ painful confinement.

“ I recommend that a register be regularly kept in every Li“ censed Madhouse, agreeably to the form annexed,* to be “ open at all times to the inspection of Visitors, Commissioners, “ Magistrates, and all other persons authorized to inspect such “ houses for the reception of Insane persons.

“ Effectual provision to be made to enforce the keeping such “ Register, under penalties, and incapacity to keep such houses,

“ A correct List of patients, agreeing with the form of Re-

Mercurii, 24^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Mr. THOMAS BAKEWELL called in, and Examined.

YOU have a house for the reception of Insane persons at Spring Vale in Staffordshire?—I have.

Is your house regularly visited by the persons appointed to visit houses for Insane persons?—They come occasionally, but I cannot say they are regular visitations; one of the magistrates is a neighbour, and comes frequently, but that cannot be called a regular visitation.

How often are the regular visits made?—I suppose Mr. Whitby, the Magistrate, comes every month.

How often are the visitations made as the Act directs?—They have not honoured me with a regular visitation; appointments have been made but they have not been kept: the physician is my neighbour, and he frequently calls upon me, and the Magistrates more or less frequently.

How often is your house visited in the manner directed by the 14th of the King, by the physician and the Magistrates?—My house has never been visited, as directed by the Act of Parliament, by two Magistrates and a physician together.

How long have you kept this house?—Six years and a half.

How many patients have you in your house at present?—At this time, five-and-twenty.

Upon an average, during six years you have kept the house, how many have you had?—I suppose, upon the average, twenty, or one or two-and-twenty.

Males and females?—Yes.

Of different classes?—Yes; of all descriptions.

Are any of them parish paupers?—Several.

What proportion do the parish paupers bear to those who pay for themselves?—I suppose I have six or seven paupers.

What do you receive for the parish paupers?—I now charge at the rate of 40*l.* a year; I have raised it lately.

If you take them for a less period than a year, do you charge at that rate?—Yes, I do.

At the rate of 15*s.* 6*d.* per week?—Yes.

How many keepers have you in your house?—One besides myself. I am the head-keeper; I am always at home, unless business absolutely calls me away, and then I employ an additional keeper.

Does that keeper perform any other duty besides attending Insane persons?—Sometimes he takes the Insane people out into the garden to work, and works with them.

Does he perform any other duties at all?—Yes, he does; but this applies only to the keeper of the male patients; I have other keepers for the female patients.

What proportion are the females to the males in your house?—I think there must be about nine females and sixteen males, but continually changing; generally about two-fifths females.

For the attendance on the 16 males you have one keeper, who occasionally works in the garden, and performs some of the duties of the house?—Yes.

How many keepers have you for females?—I have three; they merely do the office of the house, and are servants.

What other services do those persons perform, besides attending those patients?—They do the work of the house.

They are cook and house-maid?—Yes, and nurse.

Have you any other servants in the house besides those?—I have only three female servants; but my wife is as much of a keeper as the servants, and more so.

Can you state the size of the rooms in your house, in proportion to the number of people who sleep in them?—My house was built for the purpose: What we call the cells, are ten feet square by ten feet high; the bed-rooms are twelve feet by sixteen, and I believe twelve feet high.

How many sleep in the cells?—Never more than two.

Two do sleep in them?—Occasionally, when we are full; never more than one in a bed: there are two single beds, one on each side of the room.

Are any of the patients in your house under restraint?—Several at times, but none constantly.

Of what nature?—Some have occasionally a strait-waistcoat on during the paroxysm of the disease.

Any in irons?—Some occasionally, but none constantly.

Can you state how many were under personal restraint at the time you quitted home?—I suppose there might be about five.

Of what nature was that restraint?—Merely to prevent escape, locks to the feet.

Any thing on the hands or the body?—No; two locks, one to each ankle, with a connection.

Are any of your patients insensible to the calls of nature?—I think two of them are so occasionally.

Are they kept in the same day-rooms with the other patients?—They are always occasionally brought out; but not brought into the day-room, unless their situation will justify it, for they form part of the family.

They are not brought into the day-room at the time that they have that insensibility?—Certainly not; it is mostly in the night that the effect of that takes place, and they are cleaned in the morning.

What is the size of your airing-ground?—It is only for the men; I suppose it may be about sixty feet long by fifteen or twenty wide; but there are never more than five or six in that place.

Is that the garden?—No, indeed; we call it Bethlem, for it is considered a sort of punishment to be put there, and they are only there in case of behaving amiss: it is so called as a punishment.

Is there any other place where the patients are accustomed to take their exercise?—Large extensive grounds, pleasure grounds, and waste lands near; I take them with me all over the country; they never go but with myself or my wife.

Are you a professional man, a Surgeon?—I am not; I was instructed by my uncle, but had not a regular medical education.

Have those patients any medical attendance for their insanity?—They have constant attendance by myself.

And the only medicine administered for their mental complaints, is by yourself?—Occasionally I call in a physician.

How near does he live?—A mile and a quarter from me.

Do you speak of medicine for their mental or corporeal complaints?—I do not look upon medicine as of great importance for the mental disease; but there are bodily complaints connected with it, requiring the application of medicine.

Do you consider medical assistance important, where a person labours under mental disease?—Certainly so, in every case.

Medical treatment adapted to the particular case of the individual?—Yes, certainly, there are some symptoms of bodily disorder which attend every case of insanity, as far as my observation goes.

What are those symptoms?—A torpid state of the bowels, a tendency to constipation, which requires continually to be guarded against, and that can be only by the use of medicine.

Of course during that tendency to constipation, the mind becomes more irritable, and the disorder is increased?—Yes; but if there is any medicine whatever which has an effect on the hallucinations of the mind, it is purgative medicine.

How long have you been in the capacity of taking care of persons in this situation?—I have had patients of my own for nearly twenty years, in a private way.

Were you brought up under any one who could instruct you in the manner of treating persons in that situation?—I was some years with my uncle, who succeeded to his father, who was my grandfather, and I knew his practice.

Can you state to the Committee the proportion of cures and discharges in your house, for any given number of years?—Yes, I can. From October 1808, to May 1815, there have been received into my house, males single, fifty-eight; married, thirty-six; total ninety-four; females single, twenty-four; married, twenty-six; total, fifty; making together 144; recent cases, or such as had not been more than two months bad, seventy; old cases, or such as had been from two months to two years bad, forty-seven; very old cases, or such as had been more than two years bad, twenty-seven. Of the seventy recent cases, sixty-one have been discharged, recovered; two died; two were removed convalescent; and five remaining in the house, in a convalescent state. Of the forty-seven old cases, twenty have been discharged, recovered; of the twenty-seven very old cases, two only have been discharged, recovered.

Had any of those been in other houses?—None but aggravated cases scarcely come to me; there were but eight cases in my whole life in which I was called in, in the first instance.

All the others have been cases which had been before referred to other persons?—I cannot exactly say; but that has daily taken place.

Is it then your opinion, that the early application of medical treatment to that disease, has a tendency almost always to occasion the recovery?—The proper union of medical and moral means has almost always an effect upon the cure, I think in nine cases out of ten at least.

Should you extend your observation to those cases which may be considered hereditary?—Certainly; I do not think its being hereditary is any impediment to cure, but a relapse is more to be expected.

Of those persons who have been discharged out of your house, has it fallen to your lot to know how they went on afterwards?—I have generally heard that they were extremely well, and have often met them; I have had very affecting interviews with many of them. I could find from fifty to a hundred of my former patients in a morning's ride, who are now well and happy, and useful members of society.

Has it ever come under your observation, that persons afflicted with insanity have met with bad treatment, either in private houses or in their own families?—A great many.

Can you state to the Committee, any cases in which that has taken place at home?—A patient of mine was taken home, in consequence of an agreement between the parish and his two sons, to keep him for less money than I kept him. Sometime after, in one of the most dreadful evenings of the last winter but two, he came to my house in a most deplorable situation, having been all that day and the night before in a most dreadful fall of snow. His first expression was "I come for you to save me from those devils my sons, who will murder me; they beat me and abuse me till I had like to have lost my life, and I hope you will save me." In consequence of which I made an application to a Magistrate, and had him brought by a regular Order; he afterwards completely recovered, and is now again with his family: His statement appeared credible from what I saw, for they threatened to beat him in my presence, but I told them they had got into the wrong box.

What was the age of the man?—I suppose between fifty and sixty; we can come at nothing more than circumstantial evidence. I am convinced that a lady of fashion and fortune withheld the means of cure from an elder sister, in consequence of expense, though that sister's own income was more than sufficient to procure the best means the country afforded; she is now kept at an obscure place, at a very small expense, and under very improper treatment, as I conceive.

Do you know that in private families, persons are often kept in situations entirely unfit for them, so to be placed in consequence of the want of a public Asylum to receive such persons?—I think so; if it is meant by public Asylum, where they could be sent without expense. A poor woman died upon the breaking up of the hard frost the last winter but one, after existing ten years in an old house inhabited by no other person but herself, in a state of perfect nakedness, without bed-clothes, with nothing but straw to lie upon: she was grown double, and her body covered over with hair, in consequence, as it is supposed, of cold: She was a wife and a mother; her husband and children were living.

She was confined as a lunatic?—She was. There is a poor woman now living in a country village near to me, who, it is reported, is in a most dreadful situation as to accommodations and bed, and so on; and she has been in that state twelve years without any relief. I knew an instance of a person of very respectable family, who became insane soon after giving birth to a son. Such cases are generally supposed easy of recovery from particular circumstances; that it is merely a temporary irritation. She was packed up into a back garret, where she was coarsely fed and coarsely clothed, while her husband enjoyed every luxury that money could purchase in the house below, till that son became of age, and had her released. I know another family, who have kept a brother for seven years in confinement, without any means of recovery, for the sake, as I fully believe, of his property, though they are all in opulent circumstances. I have known an instance of a son very evidently taking measures to prevent the recovery of his father; and have known several instances of people in opulence, taking measures to prevent the recovery of their own brothers. I have seen evident proofs of vexation and disappointment in a wife, on the unexpected recovery of her husband; the same in a husband, on the unexpected recovery of his wife; and in a mother, on the unexpected recovery of a son. I have now in the house a woman, who has been confined in a dark garret, without the comforts of a fire, for the best part of twenty years: her husband confessed to me, that he had not seen her for many years: the servant told me, that nobody saw her but herself; and she only to take her food and take away the necessities: the woman was perfectly inoffensive. He himself was trading at the rate of a thousand pounds a week, by his own confession. Upon his bankruptcy, he was obliged to provide some means of treatment for her, and he desired me to take her. I have found her very susceptible of good treatment; she seems to take a delight in looking at my children, and the comforts of a good fire, and has some little exercise, occasionally walking out in the open air.

You trust your own children with her?—Yes; she sets at the kitchen fire with my servants and children, and she attends prayers at night.

Can you state to the Committee any facts relative to the treatment of the insane poor in their respective parishes?—I know parishes where they keep lunatics, and I have every evidence I can have, that they are very improperly treated. There is a workhouse in our neighbourhood, where they have a cell which opens outwardly into the yard, but has no communication internally with the house, and where they have no comfort of a fire.

How many have you known kept there?—Two or three at a time. My father knew a person who was chained naked, lying upon straw for fifty years, in a workhouse.

What was the parish in which that took place?—Ashbourn, in Derbyshire.

Can you state to the Committee any further details, as to the treatment of lunatics in workhouses?—There was a very glaring instance of a person being taken from me before he could be perfectly recovered, though in a convalescent state, and carried to a workhouse; where I afterwards heard that he met with improper treatment, and he died under it very soon.

The parishes, of course, have an interest in preventing patients coming to your house, in order to save the expense?—They never bring them to me but under two considerations; one, when the Magistrates will not permit their remaining in the workhouse; and next, when they feel it an object to have them cured. The last pauper patient I discharged had been with me fifteen months, and was discharged as well as he ever was in his life.

Is it the practice of the parishes around you to keep their insane paupers in the workhouse?—Yes; there is one in my own parish, which they refuse to send to me at this time.

Is there not an Asylum, either projected to be built or building, for the reception of pauper lunatics in your county?—Yes, they are now digging the foundation.

The intention is, to lodge there all the pauper lunatics?—Yes, of all descriptions, criminal lunatics, dangerous idiots, and pauper lunatics, curable and incurable: it is intended, I suppose, for the reception of any, after they have established it.

What is your opinion as to the plan of the institution?—I think it an extremely bad one.

What is your reason for so thinking?—Because I think there should be a discrimination between new cases, or those that can be called curable, and those that are incurable: and it is my firm belief, that a large public Asylum, in which all descriptions of lunatics are admitted, is a great deal more calculated to prevent recovery than to promote it, under the best regulations possible.

What is your reason for so thinking?—I think that the mind should be entirely divested of the idea of incurable lunacy; close confinement is necessary in such Asylums, and the company of incurable lunatics.

Should not you think, that if arrangements took place in a large Asylum, so that there might be a classification of patients, with large airing-grounds, affording opportunities for exercise, work, and employment both of body and mind, that objection you have stated would no longer exist?—Not entirely, unless the different apartments were entirely separated. I would admit of a community of Asylums, having a large inclosure, sufficient for all the purposes of exercise, and employment in agriculture, and garden ground, and so on; and I would say, that the size of that inclosure should be at least equal in number of acres to the number of patients admitted: if I admitted 100 patients, I would have 100 acres, which should be secured by an inclosure from the inconveniences of escape, and the inconveniences of intrusion from idle curiosity: But I would recommend that the curative system should be entirely separate from the system of keeping incurables; I think that nothing in the world can reconcile them together: and there is one circumstance that points out the propriety of it, and that is this: that if you use the proper means of recovery for a certain time, you may then give it up as incurable; for the number of cases of cure which occur, after twelve months treatment, is so small, as not to be worth attention.

In your opinion, of few persons who have been admitted four or five years, can you entertain any reasonable hope of cure?—Not a reasonable hope; there may be a solitary case now and then.

You consider persons who have been confined twelve months, as on the incurable list?—I do not treat them as incurable in my house; but I think they may be fairly considered as incurable, if there is no gleam of convalescence in twelve months, under proper treatment.

What are the modes of confinement you adopt in violent cases?—The strait-waistcoat generally, and sometimes I am compelled to fasten them on to the bed. I have beds that have wooden canopies over them, to make them comfortable; and on one side I have a small chain that suits the arm, and another to the leg; and when they are very violent, I chain one leg and one arm to the side of the bed, so that they cannot get out of bed, but they can reach whatever they want.

Have you ever had in your custody maniacs of a very outrageous description, who were supposed to be extremely dangerous to their keeper and even to themselves?—I never considered any as dangerous to myself; I have had many very violent. I consider coercion as necessary only for the person himself, and should use it while he was in a violent state; but I should despise the keeper who feared them himself; but those paroxysms never continue.

Have you had melancholy patients, who wished to commit suicide?—I have had one case of suicide in the house, but it was after the patient was set at liberty; he was put from under restraint, so that he went about where he pleased. There never can be a case where it can be necessary to confine them constantly.

Have you ever had cases where persons refused to eat?—Yes.

What is your method in those cases?—I force food down in the same way as medicine is forced, holding the nose, and putting something into the mouth, with the body in a reclined posture, so that they cannot refuse to take it.

You have not been obliged to break the teeth?—Never; I have a vessel with a pipe, and I force the pipe between the teeth, opening the teeth so as to get that in.

Do you apprehend, that the mode of confinement by chaining to the bed, which you have already described, was sufficient for the most outrageous maniac you ever saw?—Certainly; the strait-waistcoat is alone sufficient, making their feet secure, so that they cannot kick; the strait-waistcoat is the best thing possible.

You would not keep a man for a month in a strait-waistcoat?

—I never found occasion for keeping a man under close confinement for a month.

How long has the interval of the most violent maniacs lasted?

—Very uncertain; sometimes for several days together they are obliged to be kept under restraint; it is an irregular intermittent disease, in every sense of the word.

Did you ever know any ill effects attend the use of the strait-waistcoat?—Never in my life; it keeps the arms in the most easy posture; they are more easy with it than without it, I think.

How long have you kept a patient in a strait-waistcoat?—I cannot suppose that they would be kept in a strait-waistcoat more than eight-and-forty hours; it would be necessary to set them at liberty, to clean them within that time; they would want to be got up, and to have their bed cleaned, and so on.

Do you think it is customary to place a number of persons in an insane state in a day-room together?—Yes; there is no doubt of that.

Under which circumstance each individual is in the habit of talking upon the favourite topic?—Of course.

Do you consider the confusion and noise that arises from that circumstance, unfavourable to recovery, or liable to irritate and increase the disorder?—In a limited sense I do not think it has any bad effect, but on an enlarged scale, it must have bad effects; where there are only four or five, their hallucinations are opposed to each other, and it may have a good effect.

What is the nature of the employment of the poorer classes?—With me it is generally gardening, and doing offices about the house.

Is that compulsory?—No; we never compel them to work, but they consider it a privilege: if they behave amiss I turn them away from their work, and send them back to Bethlem. I think the labour of Lunatics might be made productive, and highly beneficial in point of cure, upon all occasions it is of the first consequence with respect to physical health. All that the power of medicine can do, is to restore the body to its pristine state of health; the hallucinations of the mind are cured by employment, and diverting the thoughts.

Do not you conceive that a ligature from behind the patient's shoulders, confining the upper joints of his arm, would incapacitate him from doing mischief, and be more pleasant to himself, as making his hands useful to him in all the calls of nature?—I have often thought, that a way of confining the elbow down to the body might answer the purpose of a strait-waistcoat, leaving the hands at liberty; and I have used one myself, and I would use it if I had an Institution exactly to my own mind; but that I cannot have. The only perfect Institution must be, one where there is a wall sufficiently high to prevent escape: the only thing we have in many cases to provide against, is the propensity to escape. If I had that advantage, I would use nothing in general; for there is no occasion for it unless they are furious, and then I would take them to their cell: but they have always a propensity to escape; when the paroxysms are coming on, they feel uneasy, and think they should be better any where else. I have had some of them run away, and come back again. One man went away, and after a week he came back again. I had perceived that he was going off, and I caught at him to lay hold of him; he was very lusty, and he escaped from me, and we could not find him afterwards: he came back in about a week, saying he had been at London, and had been in Wales; that he thought he should have died, and he had determined to come back.

From the observation you have made upon Lunatics, do you think their memory is peculiarly retentive and correct as to what has occurred to them during their paroxysms?—Yes, particularly so; and the reason is, that what passes under the paroxysm arises from strong erroneous conceptions. Our memory depends upon the strength of our conceptions, whether erroneous or not; and those are stronger than usual, though erroneous. I do not believe that insanity is an injury to the mental faculties at all.

Do you make it a practice on any occasions to favour the illusions of your patients?—Never, but always to divert their mind from them.

Jovis, 25^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

MR. THOMAS BAKEWELL again called in, and Examined.

HAVE you ever known any instances in which severity of treatment very much increased, or appeared almost to have produced insanity?—I can speak to one instance where severity in a Madhouse was supposed to have aggravated the disease, and to have continued it against the efforts of nature; the case of a young man, who continued quite mad during seven years of confinement, and recovered afterwards simply by being set at liberty, and having the comforts of society; and I believe there are many cases of that description, but I cannot speak to them; it is my opinion, that if insane persons were treated as fellow-beings, with kindness and gentleness, with an alterative medical system suited to the case, they would much more frequently recover than they do now.

Veneris, 9^o die Junii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Sir JOHN NEWPORT, Baronet, a Member of the Committee, Examined.

DO you know of any other houses established for the reception of Lunatics, except those in Dublin?—There is an establishment of that nature in Cork, Waterford, Limerick, Ennis, and, I believe, Clonmell and Kilkenny; but they are all connected with houses of industry, or other establishments for the reception of infirm poor; and in consequence of that, cannot receive that attention which the nature of the disorder of those persons requires. Those establishments are in part provided for under the presentments of Grand Juries, by the levy of a very limited sum on the several counties to which they are annexed; but I consider them as so entirely insufficient to answer the purposes of such establishments, that some years since I unsuccessfully submitted to Parliament a proposal for the establishment of one house in each of the four provinces of Ireland, appropriated specially to the reception of those patients.

Do those houses receive insane persons from different parts of the country, in the same manner that the house in Dublin does, or do they confine their attention to insane persons in their own immediate neighbourhood?—They are intended for insane persons of the vicinage merely; but in consequence of finding insane persons at large in a district to which they do not belong, they, of course, have thrown upon their funds, in many instances, the care of persons not at all connected with the counties to which they belong. Some time since, the Institution in Waterford, being burdened with nearly one-third of the whole number, who had wandered to Waterford from different districts of the country; the late Secretary for Ireland, Mr. Pole, on my representation, felt it necessary to relieve that establishment from this charge, by transferring to Dublin between thirty and forty persons so afflicted.

Are there any means of relieving those paupers by parishes in Ireland?—There are not any; and the presentment in any one of those districts, is by law not to exceed 150*l.* in any one year, I understand, however, that in the City of Cork they have very humanely exercised a power, from the necessity of the case, of making presentments to a much larger amount.

Mr. GEORGE HENRY MALME called in, and Examined.

WHAT are you?—I am an attorney.

What concern have you in the management of Saint John's and Saint Margaret's?—I am at present one of the governors of the poor, and one of the vestry of Saint John's parish, which is united with Saint Margaret's.

Are there any pauper lunatics belonging to those parishes, sent out to any house for the reception of such persons?—Yes; we send them generally to Sir Jonathan Miles's house.

How many are there at present there?—I cannot charge my memory accurately with the number; I think about twenty.

For what purpose are they sent there?—I have always supposed they were sent there for the purpose of being cured of their disorder, or at least put under medical direction for the purpose of facilitating the cure, if possible; and I am convinced all the officers are of that opinion.

Was any enquiry ever made, to your knowledge, of Sir Jonathan Miles, whether any medical treatment for their cure was allowed or exhibited in his house?—I am not aware of any such application having been made to him, because he has been a number of years the person who received the Lunatics; the conviction on my mind was so thorough, that I did not think it necessary to enquire; I have asked my brother officers, and they answered me in the affirmative.

You mean then that, from your own knowledge, it was not merely your own conviction, but that of your brother officers, that attention was paid there, not merely to their health but to their cure?—Certainly; we have had persons returned to us repeatedly as cured, and therefore of course I supposed it must be the case.

Was the apothecary engaged to look after the poor of the parish, ever sent to examine into the state of those persons?—I recollect his going with the officers there for that purpose.

How often?—It is only once within my recollection, which takes in probably about two years and a half: we generally have made a point of going occasionally, as we went that road, to see that they were alive, and how they were provided for.

When the parish apothecary was sent to examine them, was he particularly directed to enquire into their state of sanity, or was that wholly entrusted to the supposed care of the apothecary of Sir Jonathan Miles's house?—He went there and examined them all in succession: when we go they are brought into a room for the purpose, in succession, and we examine them, and endeavour to find out from our own observation, how far they can answer the questions put to them; and the keeper of the Madhouse, in order to give us a more direct idea of the state they are in, usually introduces into conversation with them, some point on which he knows they are more easily affected, so that we may catch the conviction how far they are recovered.

Can you at all recollect what proportion of the numbers sent thither have been returned cured?—I do not recollect any one instance of cure, where the disorder has not subsequently broke out again. I can bring to my recollection several instances, where they remained for a few months, and were sent back to us as cured by Mr. Watts the superintendent; but when they returned to their friends, the disorder broke out again; it appeared as if the cessation of the restraint occasioned its return.

What do you pay to Sir Jonathan Miles?—Half-a-guinea per week with each, and furnish them with clothes; generally two suits a year are sent; we send them two suits with each, and generally they are asked for again at the return of the year.

Does that apply to both sexes?—Yes.

Do you keep any who are insane in the workhouse?—Some few who are a little flighty, or under temporary derangement of judgment, but none whose continuance there is dangerous to themselves or to others.

Veneris, 19^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

JOHN HARRIOTT, Esq. a Magistrate at the Thames Police-Office, called in and Examined.

ARE you informed of any irregular proceedings in any house for the reception of Lunatics?—About eight years ago, a Swedish sailor applied to me, in my official capacity, saying that a few months before he had been taken in a state of drunkenness to a house for the reception of Lunatics, kept by Mr. Vaux, at Bethnal Green; and that in the way to that house he had been robbed by a publican, from whose house he had been taken. I sent for the publican, and also for Mr. Vaux; Mr. Vaux attended, he heard the sailor's statement, and he acknowledged the fact, that such a man had been brought by the publican to his house, excusing himself, by saying that he was received by a man who had the care of his house in his absence, and whom he considered trusty. I then enquired about the certificate, and he acknowledged that he had been received without any certificate, and had been detained a month; the man in consequence of having been detained for that time, had been prevented taking any measures for the recovery of his property, which was wholly lost to him.—Mr. Vaux and the publican both died soon afterwards.

Lunæ, 19^o die Junii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Mr. GEORGE VAUX, Surgeon of Saint Luke's Hospital, attending, was called in, and stated as follows:

I OBSERVE in the Evidence of John Harriott, Esquire, respecting irregular proceedings in a house at Bethnal Green for the reception of insane persons, that it is stated to have been kept by Mr. Vaux, which may possibly be supposed to allude to me; I hope therefore I shall not be thought intrusive in assuring the Committee that I never kept a house at Bethnal Green, and that I am in utter ignorance of the circumstance referred to by Mr. Harriott.

[The Chairman having communicated to the Committee a letter from Mr. Finch, who has a house near Salisbury for the reception of insane persons, stating that he had made a cure of a poor woman, who had been sent to him from a parish workhouse, in which she had been kept chained to the wall for some years;* they have thought it expedient to print it, in a hope that, by giving publicity to the same, it may operate as an incitement to parishes to afford a chance of cure to unhappy persons in similar situations, instead of keeping them during their lives in the most distressing and painful durance.]

The said Letter was read, and is as followeth:

“ Sir, “ Laverstock Asylum, June 16, 1815.

“ I take the liberty of troubling you with this letter, on account of the pauper Lunatic (by the name of Grandy) who was sent to this Asylum, at your recommendation, from Christchurch, and on whose behalf you felt an interest, when I had the honour of appearing before you some short time since. Indeed this was a case above all others which was deemed incurable. I believe you recollect her having been discharged on that account from other asylums. I have completed her cure, and would engage to keep her so, provided I have the future management of her. I am aware it requires much delicacy in handling; still I know the thing to be practicable. Indeed I know but of few cases of direct mania (I mean that species of disease which is attended by strong excitement) but what I deem curable.

“ Although I intend to discontinue the admission of paupers at this Asylum in future, still I earnestly solicit the honour of your kind recommendation in other cases, as opportunities may offer, and which will be ever most respectfully acknowledged by

* See this case referred to in page 318 of Mr. Finch's evidence.

“ Sir,

“ Your obedient and very humble Servant,

“ W. Finch, Surgeon.”

Veneris, 30^o die Junii, 1815.

Lord ROBERT SEYMOUR in the Chair.

MR. THOMAS WARBURTON called in, and Examined.

ON what account do you attend the Committee?—I came in consequence of having expressed a wish to attend, in consequence of observations made by Mr. Wakefield before this Committee. It struck me on reading the minutes of Mr. Wakefield's testimony before this Committee, that an impression must have been left on the minds of the Members of this Committee, that the reverend Charles Chawner had been unjustly confined in my house at Hoxton. The reverend Charles Chawner was, surreptitiously I may say, conveyed from under my care by Mr. Wakefield, or some person employed by him for that purpose; in consequence of that I applied for an Habeas Corpus to have him brought back; some doubt arising in the mind of Lord Ellenborough, it was determined that Mr. Chawner should be removed to a house at Islington, under the care of Dr. Sutherland. After that period, an action was brought against me in the Court of King's Bench, the result of which was a proof that I had acted perfectly regular towards Mr. Chawner; that he was a lunatic, and at that period there were physicians in Court ready to certify his insanity; that so far from Mr. Chawner going to his living immediately upon his liberation, as stated by Mr. Wakefield, I can with confidence state, that since that period he never had attended to any clerical duty, nor had he been considered in a state so to do; but that he had been for a length of time in Nottingham Gaol for law expenses, incurred by the improper interference of Mr. Wakefield. That is what I wish to state to this Committee; and that I have every reason to believe that Mr. Chawner at this moment labours under the same delusions and false perceptions, that he has entertained for the last twelve or fourteen years.

Under what authority was Mr. Chawner first committed to your charge?—Under a certificate of Mr. Croft, the surgeon, in Burlington-street, who stated to me, that Mr. Chawner was then at his sister's, in Hart-street, Bloomsbury; that he had attempted to destroy himself by tying himself up to the bed's post, but had been prevented. In consequence of that, Mr. Croft had written to his wife in the country, and to his other relations, and had communication with his sister, at whose house he was; and I believe it was by the joint approbation of all his relations that he was brought to my house; he was at that time under my care for perhaps twelve months, or near it; I had every reason to hope that he was cured of his lunacy, and recommended his wife to take him home, and make a trial of him. It was but some weeks, or a few months at most, before he was sent a second time under my care, by an application from Mr. Croft, and by a certificate signed by Doctor Chawner, his brother, a physician of great respectability; he continued under my care from that period, except occasionally going to dine with his sister, or some of his friends, occasionally visiting them until the period alluded to in the first part of my evidence, when he was taken away by the act of Mr. Wakefield. I had during the period of his being a second time under my care, pointed him out especially to the Commissioners, and they had arranged with Mr. Croft, that in addition to their general visitations, he should be visited by one of their own body, which was Doctor Stone, of Charter House Square. Doctor Stone had unlimited authority to visit him as often as he thought fit; and if he at any one of those visitations considered it fit and proper that he should have his liberty, he was to have it accordingly; but on every visitation of the Commissioners generally, or of Doctor Stone separately, the uniform report was, "Mr. Chawner is a lunatic, and ought not to have his liberty."

Previous to the visits which Dr. Stone paid to Mr. Chawner, had he any medical attendance?—He was medically, I think, in the first instance, for a short time under the care of Doctor Robert Willis. I know Doctor Robert Willis did see him occasionally; but as far as related to his medical treatment, I always considered him under the care of Mr. Croft, who directed medicine to him occasionally; and the apothecary of the house was in constant attendance on him. Had not Lord Ellenborough stopped the proceedings in the action he brought against me, I was prepared to prove his insanity, down to the time of his escape from my house.

MR. EDWARD WAKEFIELD called in, and made the following Statement.

I WISH to explain to the Committee the conduct I pursued respecting the Reverend Mr. Chawner.—Mr. Chawner applied to me at the time that I was calling upon a clergyman at Mr. Warburton's to know whether I was the brother of Mr. Wakefield, a barrister. I asked him the reason of his question; he said he was improperly and unjustly confined in that house, and that he apprehended a Chancery barrister, could without difficulty procure his release. In consequence of this application, I took opportunities of having various conversations with Mr. Chawner, to endeavour to satisfy myself of the truth of his statement. I am aware that the shades of insanity border so closely upon those of a state of reason, that it is extremely difficult to determine the fact, after various conversations; but still my mind was so much impressed that Mr. Chawner was not a fit object for confinement, that I asked one of Mr. Warburton's keepers, what was the particular sort of insanity with which Mr. Chawner was afflicted; his reply was, "He is no more mad than you are; but it is a mere family dispute; he is confined by his wife and relations." Such an expression from one of the servants of the house, determined me to put the case, if possible, into a regular state of inquiry; for this purpose I did apply to two or three attornies, explaining to them what I had heard; but at the same time not proposing to take upon myself the legal expenses of such an inquiry. I have already stated to the Committee the difficulty which I experienced in finding a solicitor to take the cause up; but as I have already stated, I met with a gentleman taking a brief into my brother's chambers, who professed his inclination and his ability to have the case fairly tried: the manner in which he either conducted the cause, or taking Mr. Chawner from the house of Mr. Warburton, are circumstances of which at the time I was perfectly ignorant, and over which I never had the slightest control; the first suit that was tried, was that of Mr. Warburton's application to the Court, to procure the body of Mr. Chawner by a writ of Habeas Corpus; in this, as I have already stated, Mr. Warburton was unsuccessful, and as I have understood, for I was not in Court at the time of the decision upon the affidavits of Sir Lucas Pepys, and other physicians, that Mr. Chawner was sane; soon after that, I saw Mr. Chawner in the street, and he thanked me for the part I had taken in procuring his liberation; I told him that he was perfectly welcome to any exertions which I had made in his favour, and that I was ready to assist him, as I would be any other human being whom I thought under oppression; but that if my opinion had any weight with him, I trusted that from that moment, all further proceedings were ended; that as he had told me he was in dispute with Mrs. Chawner and his family; I requested him not to think of returning to her, but to sit himself down quietly without any further family disputes; a short time after this, I was very much surprized by receiving a subpoena to attend as a witness in the Court of King's Bench, Mr. Chawner having been advised to bring an action against Mr. Warburton for having illegally confined him. In that action Mr. Chawner was non-suited, and as I understood from the Report that I read in the newspapers, for I did not stay the trial out, that the non-suit arose from the declaration using the legal term, having demanded from Mr. Warburton damages for the original confinement of Mr. Chawner, in which Mr. Warburton was justified by the certificate of medical persons; but that by a non-suit being entered up, it left the case open for a fresh trial, had Mr. Chawner chosen to have confined his declaration merely to damages, after having got well; it was not till the day before yesterday, that I knew Mr. Chawner was at present confined in Nottingham Gaol for debt, at the suit of the attorney, for costs in those actions; and although I lament that such a circumstance should have occurred to him, still it is one which I am very glad has been brought before the Committee, because I know it was an object of inquiry, to ascertain the means by which any person unjustly confined could procure their liberation; giving full credit to Mr. Warburton's statement, that Mr. Chawner was a fit object for detention, still the circumstance will prove the extreme difficulty which might occur to one who was not a fit object of detention to procure his liberation. Independent of this explanation, I will beg to say, that in consequence of various conversations with some of the patients of Mr. Warburton, I entertain a very high opinion of his humanity, and the discriminating way in which he treats persons labouring under this dreadful malady.

MR. THOMAS WARBURTON, again called in, and further Examined.

HOW often do the Commissioners usually visit your houses?—Seldom more than twice a year.

Have they ever, at those visits, made any complaints respecting them, and of what nature?—They have complained of the houses at Bethnal Green, where the pauper lunatics are confined, being too crowded: they admit that there are more patients in those houses than they wish should be there; but I do not think the complaint warranted to the extent, as would appear by the minutes of the Commissioners' report to this Committee. The Commissioners will direct the patients of different classes to be brought into what they call day-rooms; it is very rare indeed that one-half of those patients are in those rooms at any one period; some of them are employed in different parts of the house, occupying themselves in a variety of ways, others are generally out of the rooms, and especially female patients, of whose rooms the complaint, as being too crowded, are almost continually under a large covered place, in the nature of a piazza; still I admit the houses are too full, and I have, from time to time, from my own desire, as well as at the suggestions of the Commissioners, kept enlarging the premises, and adding to the rooms; and additions most certainly have been made since the Commissioners last visited, particularly one of the houses, or I do think they would have stated that fact to the Committee, because there have been apartments added since their last visits, to accommodate, at least, from forty to fifty patients.

It has appeared before this Committee, that on the 20th of May, 1814, there were 150 pauper patients in one of your houses, and that in the opinion of the Commissioners, it was too much crowded on the 5th of January, 1815; it appears that there were 215 patients in the same division; has any increase of that house taken place in the interim?—There must have been a gross mistake, either in the first or second report; but I imagine in the first, because it is impossible, and I know it to be impossible, that the increase could have been any thing like what the Commissioners have stated; and I would add, that from the period from May, 1814, to January, 1815, there had been rooms built sufficient to accommodate, I should suppose, upon a moderate calculation, from 40 to 50 patients, and that since January last, there have been additional rooms, sufficient to accommodate at least 50 more.

Have you any rule for the number of patients to be taken into your houses?—I prepared the house which is under the direction of Mr. Talbot, to accommodate with great comfort 300, and from 40 to 50 patients, that 350 would by no means crowd it, at that period, not expecting that it would ever exceed that number; but it has gone on increasing, to the number of 365 to about 380, sometimes more than 65, but very rarely more than 80, since I prepared it for 350: I have made some additions, and should have continued to add to the extent of the airing grounds, and of the buildings, but have suspended doing so, waiting the result of the Bill that was pending in Parliament, and of the opening of the new Bethlem: the old Bethlem usually contained 300 patients; for the last three or four years, the number has been reduced to something about 130, thereby throwing upon the houses kept for the purpose of accommodating paupers, and the lower order of lunatic patients, an excess beyond the usual quantity, of near 200, which excess, I had reason to believe, would be taken off by the opening of the new Bethlem.

When the making addition to the buildings were stopped, was the reception of additional patients stopped also?—In some instances, where we could do it without giving offence to the parishes; we have, as far as we could, declined taking, but those instances are rare.

Has such an instance occurred in the parish of Mary-le-bone? Never; we are particular in discharging from the house, every patient that we think can in any way be trusted, and within this year, there have been discharged from the house conducted by Talbot, I should imagine from 30 to 40, many of them perfectly recovered of their insanity, some of them in such a state as might be trusted, but not, in my opinion, perfectly cured of their insanity.

Were the parish of Mary-le-bone to send you ten additional patients to-morrow, should you admit them?—We should have great disinclination to offend the parish of Mary-le-bone; we should certainly take them in, although we took another house for them.

You mean to say, that in point of fact, patients are scarcely ever refused on account of the houses being too full?—Very rarely.

How often do you personally visit the houses kept by Rhodes and Talbot?—Twice a week constantly; and my son, who is lately graduated in physic, in the University of Cambridge, visits these houses twice a week also, on separate days to those on which I visit.

You, of course, consider yourself as responsible for the treatment of all the patients, in the several houses belonging to you, paupers as well as others?—I do.

It appears on the evidence, that in the house kept by Rhodes, the report of the Commissioners in January last was, that some pauper men were chained on their straw beds, with only a rug to cover them, and not in any way defended from the external cold; and on the 18th of December, 1812, the Commissioners report, that there were 200 parish patients apparently in the same house, among whom several pauper women were found chained to their bedsteads, and naked, without any other means of covering themselves but a hempen rug; the Commissioners resolved, that the accommodation for paupers in this establishment is infamously bad, and such as to require immediate reform; how do you account for these circumstances?—To the first part, respecting men found naked, I should conceive it impossible for any person in that house to be in that state, unless he was so outrageous as to tear and destroy whatever was about him: the second part has reference to some women; in answer to that I would state, that it must be in the recollection of the Commissioners, that they visited that house late in the day, at the time when the outrageous women paupers were being put to bed, and that there must have been some error in their opinion, respecting the women naked being chained to their bedsteads, for the fact was, just as the nurses were preparing to put them to bed, the Commissioners entered the premises, and the nurses, in order to conceal the naked women from the view of the Commissioners, huddled three or four of them into a room until the Commissioners passed by, in order that they might have time afterwards to put them properly to bed; that was the fact, as stated to me by Mr. Rhodes, and by the nurses themselves; I was angry with the nurses for endeavouring to conceal a patient from the view of the Commissioners, under any circumstances.

It appears by the report of the Commissioners the next week, that the improvement in the state of the paupers is extraordinarily great, and all the patients are now properly clad, notwithstanding that, at the former visitation, Mr. Rhodes assured the Commissioners that they could not be kept clothed; can you explain that?—I would answer that in this way, that had the Commissioners, in the first visitation alluded to, gone to that house at the hour they did on the second, they would have found it precisely in the same state they found it in on the second visitation; but going just at the time when these violent lunatic women were putting to bed, on whom to leave any garment is not humanity, because you must either pinion the lunatic so tight, as not to leave them the least liberty or use of their hands, or whatever garment is upon them will be destroyed instantly, and therefore they could derive no benefit by having them left on: there is an annual expenditure of from 100*l.* to 150*l.* in bedding and bed-clothes, for the paupers only.

Do you recollect any conversation with the Commissioners, respecting a young woman whom they seemed to consider as unnecessarily confined, towards the latter end of the year 1811?—I do.

What explanation have you to give of that circumstance?—The young woman became insane in Devonshire; she strayed away from a person with whom she lived to Exeter; she went to an inn, and engaged a large room to set up a dancing-school; she was impressed with an idea that she danced better than any person in the world, and was to make a very large fortune by teaching dancing; she had other extravagances and delusions, such as straying away from whatever situation her friends placed her in, and exposing her person in such a manner as created great anxiety and uneasiness in the minds of her friends and family; I do not recollect the exact time that she had been under my care at the period the Commissioners made the observation; but at that period she entertained the same delusions, and had the Commissioners examined her upon those particular points, they would have been satisfied of her insanity. She remained in that situation some time longer, having the liberty of going off the premises, going to church, which is the case with convalescent patients, walking about the villages, and amusing themselves in various ways, when they recover so far as to be trusted to do so. Her delusions in the course of time very much diminished, and she at length married a servant who had formerly lived in my house; that was communicated to her father by myself, and I believe, though I cannot speak positively to the fact, her father (she was a natural child) has done something for the young man, to put him in a way of business. It was a considerable length of time after the Commissioners made the observation, before she was so far recovered as to have the liberty I mentioned; she was committed to my care by her father.

What medical assistance is provided for the patients in your several houses?—In my house, Whitmore House, Hoxton, Doctor Robert Willis has been in the constant habit of attendance during the last twenty-five years, until such time as he has been particularly occupied in a situation of great responsibility; since Doctor Willis has discontinued his attendance, it has been regularly visited by Doctor Ainslie. My houses at Bethnal Green are medically attended by Mr. Dunston, who has had great experience in cases of insanity, being the son of the Steward of St. Luke's Hospital, and having been brought up in that establishment; other physicians are occasionally called in, and other medical men are sent, either by the parishes, as is the case particularly at Mary-le-bone, or by their friends; but the medical attendance is quite sufficient for all purposes.

Is Doctor Ainslie a man of much experience in cases of insanity?—He has for the last twenty-five years attended my house occasionally, in the absence of Doctor Willis; and I believe him to be a man possessing great knowledge of mental disease.

You then mean to inform the Committee, that the pauper as well as the other patients in the houses at Bethnal Green, are medically attended on account of their insanity, not merely for their bodily complaints?—I do.

And that this attendance has always been afforded them, and regularly?—Certainly; and I would say further, that in every recent case of insanity, or every case where the bodily health of the patient requires medical attendance, it is given to almost as great a degree to the pauper, as it is to any other description of patients; I would also add to that, that in my opinion medical and moral treatment must go together to effect the cure, generally speaking, of insane patients.

What payment do you receive for the parish pauper patients?—Ten shillings a week each.

Is there any apartment in either of those houses peculiarly appropriated for the reception of the sick?—Not any one particular apartment for such sick as require to be kept in bed; these are kept by themselves in such division of the house as they may chance to be. If it be a lunatic pauper, there is one part of the house in which there are what we call nursing rooms, bed-rooms; if it be another description of patients, the same in their division of the house; but for such as are paralytic or bodily ill, and are capable of coming down stairs, there is in every division of the house a room kept in winter-time particularly, for the paralytic patients.

Have the houses under the care of Rhodes and Talbot, been always managed with the same care and attention that they are at present?—I think always; I have reason to believe the Commissioners are rather prejudiced against Rhodes; but he has been in my employ near thirty years, and I do not believe there is a more humane man living than he is.

In the Minutes of the Commissioners of December 17th, 1810, it is said, “that in the house under the care of Mr. Rhodes, not less than twenty patients were ill of a fever; a young girl was in the same bed with a woman who was dying; some women were lying on the floor, and others at different ends of the same bed; the Commissioners could get no satisfactory information respecting the medical attendance on the patients ill with the fever.” This report was sent to Mr. Warburton. Does Mr. Warburton object to this representation, or has he any thing to offer in explanation of it?—I perfectly recollect that a fever did prevail on the pauper women’s side of the house at that time; that the medical attendance was never less than once a day, but more frequently twice; that such medicines and nutriment, and every other care that could be taken of them, was taken of them; for from the time of the fever making its appearance, I was in the constant habit of going every day, and more frequently twice a day myself. I could say nothing to the observations made respecting two women being in bed together, or to the circumstance of a person being found lying in the passage; but it is impossible for any person to go round any establishment where there are 100 lunatics, and not see a number of them voluntarily throwing themselves down in different positions, and in different directions. I imagine that persons lying on the floor, were not ill of the fever, and were such as will at any time throw themselves in any situation.

Have you at different times since you have kept houses for the reception of insane persons, had patients in the most extravagant and violent degrees of disorder?—A great number indeed.

As bad as you suppose maniacs could be?—I have.

In what manner have you found it necessary to confine such persons?—The most violent pauper lunatic never required confinement beyond a leg-lock and manacles; and I never yet saw a lunatic that could not at certain times, under the guidance of a keeper, be allowed some liberty to walk about. If, as is often the case, the lunatic was so bad as to kick at any person he came near, the only restraint put upon him was what I should call hobbles, almost in the manner you would put round a cow when milking, leaving him sufficient space to walk, but not sufficient to kick.

Have you had at different times violent insane persons, whose hands were so small as that they could not be confined with manacles?—I do not recollect such a circumstance.

Supposing it to have occurred, to what should you have had recourse?—To a very stout strait-waistcoat; I never saw a man so bad yet, that could not be held by a strait-waistcoat; we must make it proportionably strong.

Have you in fact, ever seen a man whose wrists were larger than his hands?—I do not recollect that I ever did.

How long at a time do you recollect ever to have thought it necessary, to confine the most outrageous lunatic in a strait-waistcoat?—I never saw a lunatic so outrageous that might not occasionally have at least one hand at liberty, although it might be necessary to keep him under the restraint of a strait-waistcoat for a considerable length of time; for the way I direct, if a man is very outrageous, you must keep him confined, but you give him one hand; let him exercise that and an arm a length of time; change the hands and ease him in that manner; but if he had both hands free, he might do a great deal of mischief.

Do you conceive that the present inspection to which insane houses are liable from the Commissioners, is sufficient to prevent gross abuse, if the keeper in any such house should be induced to practise it?—I do not, if the keeper was induced to practise it.

What is your opinion respecting the operation of severe confinement upon patients who labour only under a slight degree of insanity?—It never ought to be exercised; such treatment must have a tendency to increase the disorder.

Can you tell the Committee, from your own personal observation, what the Commissioners do when they visit your houses? They generally attend to the cleanliness of the house, and the apparent comfort of the patients; they also attend to any patient that makes application to them respecting his confinement; but the short time they are necessarily obliged to be in the house, affords them but an imperfect knowledge, either of the manner in which the house is conducted, or the state of the patient's health.

What length of time do they usually pass?—Perhaps rather under than over an hour.

During that time, do they only see such patients as desire to see them?—They go into every room.

Do they see all the patients?—In case the patient does not wish to see them, and seeing them come conceals himself; and in such a case, I state to the Commissioners that such a patient does not wish them to see him, and produce him if they desire it.

Do they see all the patients?—Yes, they go from room to room.

What reason have you for supposing that the Commissioners indulge any prejudice against Rhodes?—From observations that have been made by the secretary to myself.

Do you think such prejudice, if it exists, has been totally without cause?—I think that if they had a more thorough knowledge of the man, such prejudice would never have taken place in their minds; his manner may have created it, he being very cold and reserved in his manner.

From your knowledge of cases of insanity for upwards of forty years, and your experience in the mode of treating them, do you think that any necessity could exist for chaining any man upon a wooden bedstead for a number of successive years without intermission, or even partial release?—I do not.

What is your opinion of the utility of classing patients in different stages of insanity and convalescence, and of the best manner in which it may be accomplished?—I conceive it to be of the utmost importance to class the patients according to the extent of their disease, or of their approaching to convalescence, or in a state of convalescence; the outrageous lunatics should be as much as possible kept in one room; I would prefer keeping a number of violent lunatics in one room, to that of keeping them in separate rooms; I have seen a great benefit derived from that plan, by the superior noise, or the greater noise of one quieting and subduing the noise of another; by so classing them, out of ten noisy lunatics a considerable portion of them will be quiet; but if you put those ten lunatics into ten separate rooms, the whole ten will be continually noisy. Paralytic lunatics, and such as are out of health, should be kept together; I am speaking now of pauper lunatics; those that are neither violent nor paralytic are much better associating together than being separate, and such as are capable of amusing themselves either at any play, or diversion, or labour, should be thrown in the way of occupation, and should, as far as the keeper has the power of doing so, be urged to employ themselves; the same applies to the higher order of patients, as far as classification goes, only the treatment must be different to that description as to their general accommodation; for instance, if a private gentleman is violent, as far as classification goes, it must be practised with patients of a different description; but the course of accommodation must be very different to what can be afforded to paupers, both as to occupation and amusement.

Veneris, 5^o die Maii, 1815.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE GEORGE ROSE IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. JAMES BEVANS, Architect, of Gray's Inn Square, called in, and Examined.

DO you know the new building of Bethlem Hospital, those of Saint Luke, the insane wards at Guy's Hospital, the Asylum at York, and the Retreat at York?—I know them all particularly.

What are the defects of the new buildings of Bethlem Hospital in Saint George's Fields?—The first fault I should find with Bethlem, is its excessive expense, which is occasioned by the very unnecessary thickness of the walls; its being four story high is another great objection to it, on account of the impossibility of the Governor or Steward being able to have that complete inspection which it is necessary he should have in such an establishment. Another great defect is, that several of the apartments are rendered extremely gloomy, in consequence of the immense portico which is in the front of the building. There not being separate staircases to each of the galleries, renders it impossible to classify the patients in the way which I think it is necessary they should be. There being no glass to the major part of the windows in the patients' sleeping-rooms, makes it necessary for them to exclude the day-light with the cold air, while the patients are confined in them, which, when I consider the time that they are so confined, must in my opinion tend much to increase the malady. I think, excepting for noisy patients, which are very few in number, that the thick brick walls between the sleeping apartments are unnecessary. I do not think that their method for preventing fire from communicating from one gallery to another is secure. The privies for patients are too closely connected with the building. I think the servants' hall up-stairs is unnecessary and objectionable. The manner of closing up the front-windows, so as to prevent the patients from looking out, is another objection which Bethlem Hospital is liable to.—St. Luke's Hospital is liable to most of the objections I have stated as to Bethlem, and in addition, it has no means of warming the sleeping apartments of the patients, and of course has no means of ventilation when they are inhabited. The water-closets in St. Luke's are too much attached to the building, as they open directly into the gallery. The day-rooms are much too small; the method of warming them by a fire-place with a grate before it, is objectionable; the Hospital does not contain sufficient means for classifying the patients, and is equally inconvenient with Bethlem Hospital for the inspection of the principal keeper. There is no security against fire communicating from gallery to gallery.—At Guy's Hospital there is the best building for the accommodation of insane persons which I have seen in or near town, but it has no provision for classifying the patients, nor for warming the sleeping apartments; it is wholly devoted to incurable females.—The Asylum at York is upon a very bad construction throughout.—The Retreat near York is also defective, as it regards the convenience of inspection; and the galleries, in consequence of there being cells on both sides, and being more than one story high, are too gloomy.

Do you know any thing of the Private Madhouses within the Bills of Mortality?—Yes; I have been over Miles's at Hoxton, Burroughs's at Hoxton, Talbot's and Warburton's at Bethnal Green, and most of the smaller houses; the whole of them are radically bad for the purpose.

What do you consider to be the general defects which pervade them?—Too many patients are made to sleep in one room; in some of them, there is a great want of ventilation, and they are ill calculated for either inspection or classification.

Are the apartments so constructed as to admit of their being easily cleaned?—Many of them are not.

Are they free from bad smells?—Many of them are not.

Are they warmed in a manner which you deem convenient or sufficient?—By no means.

Do you mean that they are not sufficiently warmed for either the comfort or the health of the patients?—For both.

Have they in general sufficient gardens or airing-grounds?—Most of them have very insufficient.

Do you think that it is an easy matter to find a house which has not been erected for the purpose of receiving insane patients, which is capable of being accommodated properly and sufficiently to the business?—I am decidedly of opinion it is not easy; I almost think it impossible.

What is it that induces you to speak so decidedly on the conveniences and accommodations which are necessary for the comfort and benefit of insane persons?—In the course of my profession as a surveyor, I had to go over Brook House, Burroughs's house, and Miles's house, and afterwards over St. Luke's Hospital: upon going over which, my mind was immediately struck, that there must be something radically wrong in the treatment of insane persons in private houses. Seeing paupers in St. Luke's much better taken care of, than persons in a higher sphere are in other houses; which led me into the subject, and induced me to turn my attention particularly to it, which I have now done for about four years, and in the course of that time I have visited almost all the private houses for the reception of insane persons, in or near London.

Lunæ, 8^o die Maii, 1815.

The Right Honourable GEORGE ROSE in the Chair.

Mr. JAMES BEVANS, again called in, and produced several Plans; which were inspected by the Committee.

ARE there any means of classification in the insane ward of Guy's Hospital?—There are none.

What is the treatment of patients who are insensible to the calls of nature?—They are continually confined to their own cell.

Is there any method of warming their cell?—None; and the cells are not sufficiently ventilated.

Is there a fire-place in the day-room?—Yes, with an iron guard round it.

Are the windows glazed?—They are glazed.

YORK West Riding LUNATIC ASYLUM.

Copies of the DESIGNS and DESCRIPTIONS thereof, presented to the Magistrates of the West Riding of Yorkshire ; made in pursuance of a public Advertisement, and in conformity to the following particulars :

(Copy.)

“ FOR the information of those who are inclined to deliver Plans for the Pauper Lunatic Asylum to be erected at Wakefield, it is stated that the house is to be adapted to the accommodation of 150 Patients, an equal number of each sex.

“ There are to be twelve day-rooms, which may be used also as dining-rooms for the Patients and their attendants : each of these should contain from 350 to 500 square feet. It is desirable that none of the day-rooms should be above the second floor or story. Eight of the day-rooms must be provided with distinct privies, so situate as to be accessible to the Patients, without going into the courts, and so constructed as not to be offensive to the rooms.

“ Eight courts at least must be provided for the Patients to take exercise in, contiguous to, or very easily communicating with the day-rooms, and overlooked by them. Each court must contain not less than 600 square yards ; they should have as nearly a south aspect as can be obtained, and the boundary should be so contrived as to intercept as little as possible the view of the surrounding country.

“ There must be at least eight galleries immediately communicating with eight of the day-rooms, for the Patients to take exercise in, when the weather will not permit their going into the courts.

“ Nearly all the Patients must have distinct sleeping rooms, which must generally contain about 80 square feet. The sleeping-rooms for the attendants or keepers, should contain not less than 100 square feet.

“ Twelve at least of the Patients’ lodging rooms must be so constructed as to prevent, in the greatest practicable degree, the passage of sound from them to other parts of the building, from which they must not be distinct.

“ A work-room, where from twenty to thirty patients may be employed in weaving, &c. must be provided ; also two rooms for the occasional separation of sick Patients.

“ A Committee-room, which may serve as a Chapel ; apartments for the Governor and Matron, so placed as to afford them the easiest oversight of their respective departments ; Apothecary’s shop ; rooms for Steward and domestic servants ; domestic offices ; two rooms, one contiguous to the men’s, the other to the women’s wards, for drying beds and linen ; a laundry, brewhouse, bakehouse, and bath must also be provided.

“ The structure must be so designed that it may be enlarged hereafter for the reception of an additional number of Patients of each sex. The method of extending the building must be shewn in the drawing. The number of day-rooms need not be increased for an addition of 50 Patients. The Asylum must be designed with a strict regard to facility of inspection, both in regard of the Patients and their attendants ; complete ventilation ; and as great a degree of cheerfulness as is compatible with the requisite degree of security.

“ The distribution of the buildings for the male and female Patients, must be such as to obtain, as far as possible, the distinctness of two separate establishments.

“ All the partitions, as well as the outer walls, are to be of brick, and the whole of the building must be constructed so as to be fire-proof. Provision must be made for the diffusion of heat through it, and the mode described on the plan.

“ Tanks, for the reception of rain-water, must be provided ; and the manner of supplying the different parts of the house with both rain and spring-water be pointed out.

“ The plans required are, a general plan of the ground and the scite of the building ; a plan of each story, drawn to the scale of ten feet to one-fourth of an inch.

“ Geometrical elevation sufficient to exhibit the general appearance of the buildings to the same scale ; section shewing the general construction of the roof, floors, &c. to double the above scale. Architects are at liberty to send drawings to any scale they may think proper, explanatory of the detail of any parts of the building."

Copy of a LETTER to the Magistrates of the West Riding of the County of Yorkshire.

" Gentlemen,

" IN consequence of your Advertisement, I have made a Design for the intended Asylum for the Care and Cure of Insane Paupers; which I herewith transmit for your consideration.

" At first sight the Design may, from the extent of ground it covers, be thought expensive, but upon mature consideration, I am of opinion it is the cheapest plan that can be adopted, where sufficient land may be obtained; the galleries in this plan occupy only one story; and, when compared with those occupying several, which is generally the case, have the following decided advantages; first, cheapness: by having cells on both sides of the galleries, their cubical contents are lessened; the walls, having nothing but the roof to carry, may be much slighter; and as the external walls of the galleries form the divisions of the airing grounds, much of the expense in building fence-walls, where there are several stories, is saved; there being only one story of cells, it is not necessary to arch them over to secure the building from fire; it also saves the expense of staircases: Against which advantages, the only disadvantage is, some additional expense in the quantity of roofing, which is trifling when compared with the savings. Exclusive of the great benefits which this plan gives in other respects, the great advantage of inspection must be obvious. In a Pauper Asylum for 150 patients, it cannot be expected that more than eight Under-Keepers will be employed in looking after them; if there were several stories, it would be impossible for the Governor to have that complete inspection of them and the patients; it would also place those in the upper stories more out of the reach of their airing-grounds, which, with Patients indisposed to action, would prevent their leaving their galleries to obtain air and exercise.

" As I only received your printed Particulars on the 27th of last month, you must consider the Design as an hasty production. so far as it regards your Instructions, as I completed all my arrangements within twenty-four hours; and, from my other avocations, have had but very little time since to look at them; the drawings will not be so complete as they should be; but as it is the design and not the drawings you want, I hope you will excuse this defect. I believe, with regard to the number and dimensions of the apartments and airing-grounds, I have literally complied with your printed Particulars; with regard to the distribution of the buildings, you will find the male and female apartments completely separated, not only as it regards the Patients, but also as it regards the Servants, so that any of the Patients that are capable may be employed to assist the Servants, without danger of their mixing with the other sex, or of making their escape. With regard to Inspection, the object is one of such Importance, that, of itself, it would have been sufficient to have induced me to have placed all the Patients as nearly as possible on one floor. The Governor and Matron, when in their sitting rooms, look into eight of the day-rooms, and, by means of sash-doors, through all the galleries and all the airing-grounds, and also into the work-rooms: and as the floors of their rooms are considerably above the ground-floor of the galleries, they have complete inspection, without being themselves overlooked either by the Patients or Under-Keepers; they have likewise immediate communication with any of the day-rooms or airing-grounds, and each gallery forms as it were a distinct establishment. The Patients in one gallery cannot, in any way, overlook those in any other, except from the window of the day-room on the one pair; this may, however, be completely remedied by a Venetian blind with wide laths, the front edges of which must be prevented from going lower than a level, and thus the Governor, by turning the blind up, prevents the Patients overlooking him.—See N. B. p. 367.

“ Ventilation is completely obtained, by having windows on each side the galleries; the bow window, at the end of each gallery, not only makes the gallery cheerful, but it affords the Patients a prospect differing from that of their respective airing-grounds. The Keeper’s room being placed close to the day-rooms, gives him a ready communication not only with the Patients under his care, but also with any other gallery or airing-ground; and his window overlooking the adjoining airing-ground, will be a check upon the Patients there, for if they could know that their own keeper was not in sight, they would not know but that they were inspected by another Keeper; it also admits of a communication between the Governor and Keeper without going through the day-room. By means of the basement under the Governor’s sitting-room, there is a complete communication from the domestic part of the establishment to the galleries, independent of each other, and without passing through the Governor’s room or in any way overlooking him, yet it is always under his inspection, and thus the whole and every part and every person, whether Patient or Keeper, is continually under the eye of the Governor or his Assistant, those Patients only excepted who may be confined in their cells. There is a minor part of inspection too, which, in the present Hospitals, is bad, that is, the having a small opening in the cell door, through which an artful malicious Patient may do a mischief to his Keeper while looking in at him, and he would consider years spent in the accomplishment of such an object well employed: to avoid which, I propose that one of the small panes of glass in the window over the cell door should be a looking-glass hung on a swivel, by which the Keeper, without the least danger, would see all parts of the cell.

“ I propose that the whole of the building occupied by the Patients should be warmed by steam; first, on account of its safety as to fire; second, on account of its wholesomeness, as a greater degree of heat cannot be communicated than the air will bear without injury to its nature. I have sent a sketch of an apparatus, which may be contrived to produce any heat required; a small one should be fixed in each cell: the apparatus is so contrived that the Patients cannot possibly do any mischief either to it or to themselves. The condensed water must be preserved for washing, as it will be pure and save soap. As a very unpleasant effluvia arises from the perspiration of insane persons, I propose to place a small ventilator in the ceiling of each cell, to allow it to pass off into the roof, which may be regulated by the Keeper at discretion; a convenience scarcely applicable to any other building. It is too common to consider an insane person as a being incapable of any rational amusement; hence, in addition to the neglect of keepers, arises that absurd practice of locking up patients in solitary cells early in the evening, and not liberating them again till late the next morning: and to make this unnecessary confinement still more irksome, in the two largest public hospitals in London, there is no glass to the windows of the cells; in consequence of which, even the light which nature would afford is excluded by shutters, and insanity is treated as an unpardonable crime that cannot be too severely punished: such treatment certainly tends to increase, and not to remedy the malady. The keepers should rise at six o'clock in the summer, and at seven in the winter, and those patients who feel inclined should do so likewise; but no patient in health should be allowed to lay in bed after a certain hour: I further propose, that the patients should not only have the light afforded by the sun, but that every part should be rendered cheerful, by lighting the whole with gas; and having acted as surveyor to one of our large gas-light establishments in London, I know it may be accomplished at a very cheap rate, and free from risk. That part of my design dedicated to the use of the patients, which is two stories high, I propose rendering fire-proof by means of iron girders, supported by iron columns and brick arches, turned between the girders, as adopted by — Strutt, in his mill at Derby; all the floors next the ground to have a current of air underneath; between the joists, should be laid a counter-floor of Lord Mahon's composition, which will keep it perfectly dry, and prevent the dry rot. I should also propose the same kind of counter-floor throughout the domestic apartments; and I would propose that the partitions which are not of brick, should be similarly constructed, as it is one of the best methods of preventing a fire from spreading yet known, and is, upon the whole, cheaper than brick-work. The brewhouse, bakehouse, the wash-house, and the laundry, I have separated, as to communication with the house; the wash-house and the laundry to be entered from the female servants' yard; the brewhouse, (which necessarily occupies two stories) and the bakehouse, to be entered from the male servants' yard; on the top of the brewhouse there must be a large liquor back, or cistern, which ought to have soft water to supply the brewhouse, the wash-house, the steam boilers, &c. &c. &c. over the Governor and Matron's sitting-rooms; in the roof there should be large cisterns, to supply each wing with water; and by having a pipe from the same, by communicating it with a leather hose and branch, it may be used to extinguish any fire that may happen. Over each of the patients' privies, must be a cistern, and the privies must communicate with a good drain, by a large air-trap, covered with a strong iron grate, and should be washed out by letting the whole of the water from the cistern over it, into it, at the opposite end of the air trap, about 11 o'clock in the forenoon, and the last thing in the evening, every day: this will keep the place as free from smell as can be expected. All the communications to the privies are through the open air, except on the one pair floor, where I could not accomplish it without disfiguring the building; I propose a small warm bath in each infirmary, to be heated from the steam boiler. The bedsteads for the wet patients should be a trough, the bottom having a current to an air trap, communicating with a drain, and should be lined with either lead or tinned copper, and should have a false bottom of wood put together, so as to allow the wet to pass through, yet so fixed that the patient should not be able to move it, although the keeper may daily take it up and wash it; for which purpose there should be a supply of water to each, and care should be taken that the wood bottoms should be well dried before they are again used. In the day-room for the wet patients, there should be a commodious place for washing them, which may be easily supplied with warm water from the steam boiler; I propose the whole of the sashes to the cells to be of cast iron, and to be hung upon Sir G. O. Paul's plan, which will save the necessity of having iron bars, and yet completely answer the purposes of ventilation and security. I have placed the cells for the noisy patients at the extremities of the wings, and by a small passage to them, cut off the communication of sound with the gallery. I have contrived the chapel, so that the men and women shall be completely separated by a partition; the galleries I propose for the superior officers of the establishment; and by a very simple contrivance, the partition in two minutes, may be converted into a table, for the Committee to sit round.

"I should have sent several more drawings, explanatory of my intentions, but from the shortness of the time, I cannot. The building may be enlarged, simply by adding cells at the ends of the galleries, at pleasure."

"From your respectful friend,

"No. 14, Gray's Inn Square, 22nd of 2^{me} 1815."

"James Bevans."

"N. B. I consider the gallery on the first floor as a defect; but I was obliged, by the printed particulars, to insert it.—Vide the following Extract from a letter to one of the Magistrates."

"The plan which I sent down, is not exactly the one which I should adopt, were I left perfectly at liberty to erect an Asylum for the cure of insane paupers. It is a great deal more expensive than I have any idea is necessary; but being restricted by your printed particulars, I could not send all my ideas to you, as some of them would have differed from the instructions."

Veneris, 16^o die Junii, 1815.

Lord ROBERT SEYMOUR in the Chair.

Mr. JAMES BEVANS delivered in, by order of the Committee,

Designs for an Asylum for Seventy insane Paupers; with an Estimate of the Expense of building the same:—Which was read as follows:

TOTALS of Estimates of a Design for an Asylum for 70 Patients, made by order of the Committee of the House of Commons, in various ways.

With the Sleeping Apartments, containing 80 superficial feet, and the Galleries 10 feet wide:

In Yorkshire	-	-	£13,686
Near London	-	-	17,910

With the Sleeping Apartments reduced to 63 superficial feet, and the Galleries to 9 feet in width:

In Yorkshire	- -	£12,834
Near London	- -	16,788

A DESCRIPTION of the Design for the intended London Asylum for the care and cure of the Insane: Made in pursuance of the directions of a Committee, of which Edward Wakefield was the Chairman, after the Committee had visited various Houses and Hospitals appropriated for this purpose; the details were given to the Committee of the House by Edward Wakefield.

The PLAN of the Building is an irregular heptagon, with seven wings radiating from the seven sides of the central building:

It is drawn for the accommodation of 150 Patients, but it may be enlarged from time to time so as to accommodate a very large number:

It affords perfect security from escape, with the least appearance of confinement.

It allows of air, exercise, water and inspection; inspection, not only of the Patients, but of the Keepers likewise:

It obviates the disadvantages which has been alleged to result, in some case, from the abrupt admission of strangers, as every person may be admitted to inspect nearly the whole building, the day-rooms, and the airing grounds, without going amongst the Patients:

It provides for the proper classification of the Patients:

It renders staircases for the Patients unnecessary, and gives them easy access to the day-rooms and the airing grounds:

It admits of an easy and prompt assemblage of the Keepers and Servants in the central building, should any circumstances render it necessary.

All its parts are thoroughly ventilated, and are light and cheerful.

Upon a large scale, it is by far the cheapest building that can be constructed.

The central building on the first floor contains a committee room, and sleeping rooms for the Officers and Servants; the ground floor contains a suite of rooms for the Superintendent, the Matron, the Apothecary; and these are surrounded by an inspection gallery, without which are the day-rooms and the entrances to the galleries, which contain the Patients' bed-rooms.

The rooms for the Superintendent, &c. are glazed next the inspection gallery, as are likewise the Patients' day-rooms, both on the side next the gallery and on the side next the airing grounds; and thus both the day-rooms and the airing grounds are completely inspected from the central rooms, and from the inspection gallery likewise.

The central rooms are ventilated by windows above the roof of the day-rooms, and the day-rooms are ventilated by windows above the roof of the Patients' galleries. These rooms are raised considerably above the day-rooms, by which means the inspection of the Patients is perfect, without the possibility of the Inspector being himself overlooked by the Patients.

The entrances to the Patients' galleries are in the inspection gallery.

The Patients' galleries have bed-rooms on each side, lighted by a small window in the exterior wall, close under the ceiling, and by another window over the door; in the ceiling of each room is a ventilator communicating with the roof. The Patients' galleries are lighted from windows above the roof of the bed-room; and as the windows are placed on both sides the galleries, all the galleries and every room admits of thorough ventilation. One room in each of these galleries is appropriated for sleeping rooms for the Keepers. The airing grounds are entered through the day-rooms, and from the end of each of the Patients' gallery, without communicating with the day-room. In each of the airing grounds is a covered walk.

In each of the airing grounds is a pump for the use of the Patients.

The walls of the airing ground being placed in a ha-ha, will allow of an uninterrupted view of the adjoining country.

The water-closets are placed on the outside of the building, and may be entered either from the Patients' galleries or from the airing grounds; on the top of each is a large cistern for the purpose of the water-closets, and the waste pipe from the cistern should form the spout to the pump in the airing ground; thus the cisterns must always be kept filled, and a supply of water secured at all times; by placing the water-closet outside the building, with a covered way between them and the Patients' gallery, all annoyance therefrom is prevented.

All the sashes are to be of iron, hung on the plan of Sir G. O. Paul; which will afford security and ventilation, without the appearance of iron bars.

Two rooms are placed at the bottom of each of the Patients' gallery, for the purpose of confining noisy Patients, or those who may be insensible to the calls of nature: they are so contrived that those within them cannot in any way annoy the other Patients.

A steam boiler is to be constructed in the basement, under the Porter's room, for the purpose of warming the whole of the building and baths.

Notwithstanding the convenient and intimate connection of every part of the building, it possesses two most important advantages, which no other form of building can so completely possess; viz. that each of the Patients' galleries, day-rooms and airing grounds, is, as far as regards the Patients, a complete and separate establishment of itself; and from the nature of the inspection it allows to the Superintendent, the means of selection for classification is excellent.

The separate Building, for Patients of superior Rank.

This building will not in any respect have the appearance of a place of confinement: it will contain three distinct classes of Patients, each having his or her separate Keeper;—12 Patients may be accommodated with each 3 rooms; 8 with two rooms, and 8 with one large room; each of the Patients will have a separate door to his or her apartments, opening into the arcades, or the galleries over them. The galleries are inclosed toward the airing ground with ornamental iron work, to prevent sudden accidents; at the extreme ends of the galleries are proper water-closets. In the central building is a coffee room, where those whose condition will admit thereof, may, if they wish, take their meals and read the newspapers: on the principal story is a chapel; the offices are in the basement.

J. W. CROKER, Esq.

SIR,

Transport-Office, 1st May, 1813.

IN return to Mr. Barrow's Letter of the 2d October last, signifying the direction of the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that we should cause a visitation to take place as soon as might be convenient by the Medical Commissioner of this Board, assisted by Dr. Weir and Dr. Baird, or either, of the insane patients that have from time to time been discharged from His Majesty's Naval Service, into the Hospitals or Receptacles for persons of that description in the vicinity of the metropolis, and a Report to be made for their Lordships' information, of the names, cases, periods of confinement and cure, with the probabilities of recovery of the patients in question; We request you to inform their Lordships, that a visitation of the Lunatics in Hoxton and Bethlem has been made by Dr. Harness and Commissioner Boyle, accompanied by Dr. Weir; the enclosed Papers, Nos. 1 and 2, show the names of the patients confined at those places, the periods of their confinement, with an opinion upon each, as to the probability of his recovery; which opinion however cannot be implicitly relied on, for the reasons expressed in Dr. Weir's Letters, Nos. 3. and 4.

In regard to the medical treatment, care and accommodation of the patients in Bethlem, we saw no reason for complaint, the whole of the arrangements being under the direction of the Governors of that Hospital, who receive the patients without charge to the public, further than for their clothing, excepting in the case of incurables, where a charge of five shillings per week is also made for subsistence.

Upon the visitation at Hoxton, it appeared from the increased numbers some further accommodation was required; the price at present paid for subsistence is twenty-four shillings and fourpence per week for officers, and fifteen shillings and sixpence per week for men, for the first twenty-eight days; afterwards, ten shillings and sixpence per week; the proprietor of Hoxton House has however agreed to allow all the accommodation which we have required* and which appears to us to be ample for the purpose, for thirty-one shillings and sixpence per week for officers, and sixteen shillings and sixpence per week for men; and to this arrangement we propose to accede, unless we should hear from their Lordships to the contrary.

The principal defect at this institution, after the alteration we have required shall be carried into effect, will be the want of a medical attendant, accustomed to the habits and diseases of seamen, for the purpose of regulating as circumstances may require, their allowance of provisions, attending any who may labour under bodily disease, and applying such remedies as may be judged advisable for the mental disease; we would therefore recommend, that, for this service we should be authorized to appoint a naval surgeon of experience and known ability, and to furnish him with such instructions as may appear to us advisable, allowing him twenty-one shillings per day for his services, together with his time, as in a naval hospital, and fifteen shillings per week for lodging-money, being the pay and allowance made to a surgeon of an hospital for prisoners of war.

Dr. Weir, in some remarks on the management of lunatic patients, which we some time since received from him, suggested the propriety of a building being erected especially for their reception, in the neighbourhood of Haslar Hospital; but we do not recommend this suggestion because we have doubts whether it would be advisable to assemble a number of lunatic seamen in the neighbourhood of such a port as Portsmouth, being fearful of the effect it might produce on the minds of seamen in general, and further, because we are of opinion that the erection of a suitable building for the reception of two hundred patients, would be very considerable, and we much doubt, whether the present medical establishment of Haslar would admit of such an additional duty being thrown on it; it is certain, however, that the number of inferior attendants would require to be increased, and must be persons accustomed to the care of patients afflicted with that distressing malady, and must be upon a very different establishment from the attendants upon patients in the ordinary states of disease; and it appears to us, that many other objections to Dr. Weir's suggestion might be urged, whereas in the arrangement which has existed for so many years, there is no expense of building or repair, or payment of attendants, the whole charge being included in the daily allowance for victualling, and which, of course would decrease as the extent of the service should be diminished.

* These Papers were not printed in the original Reports of the House of Commons.

In return to that part of Mr. Barrow's letter of the 30th ultimo, which relates to the removal of the insane prisoners at Hoxton, we beg to state, that it appears to us a measure highly advisable; and we have sent prisoners of this description away, whenever they have been reported in a fit state for removal; and we have been enabled to find persons capable of taking charge of them; and we will now send off the remainder by the first suitable opportunity, if their Lordships should think it proper.

We are, Sir, your most humble Servants,

(Signed)

Rupert George.

APPENDIX, No. 3.

Copy of the REPORT from the Committee of Governors of BETHLEM HOSPITAL, to the General Court appointed to inquire into the Case of James Norris, one of the Patients confined in Bethlem Hospital.

REPORT

Of a select Committee of the Governors of Bethlem Hospital, appointed by a Court held on the 23d June 1814, for the purpose of inquiring into the management of the Hospital and the general health of the patients; such Committee consisting of twenty-four Governors, being all the Members present at such Court, and also of all the Members of both Houses of Parliament who are Governors of the Hospital, being forty-two in number; and which select Committee met at the Hospital of Bethlem on the 25th June, and was attended by the following Governors:

SIR RICHARD CARR GLYN, Baronet, President.

RICHARD CLARK, Esquire, Chamberlain of London, Treasurer;

The Right Honourable the Earl of Shaftesbury.

Right Honourable Lord Willoughby de Brooke.

Sir Walter Stirling, Bart. M. P.

Sir John Perring, Bart. M. P.

Charles Mills, Esq. M. P.

Charles Barratty, Esq.

Hugh Powell, Esq.

James Upton, Esq.

David Caddell, Esq.

William Wix, Esq.

John Birch, Esq.

William Drewe, Esq.

T. C. Glynn, Esq.

John Leech, Esq.

Charles Hoppe, Esq.

Thomas Hunter, Esq.

This Committee having been informed, that they were convened in consequence of certain statements having lately appeared in the public papers, which involved the general charge of cruelty and mismanagement towards the patients in Bethlem Hospital, and also the particular charge of one of such patients having been for many years confined in irons in a manner repugnant to humanity, and not warranted by the necessity of the case, proceeded to inquire into the correctness of such statements, and for that purpose examined the Physician, Apothecary, Steward and

Keepers of the Hospital, and also received the information of such of the Governors as have been for many years past in the habit of attending the weekly Committees when patients are received and discharged, and also of going over the Hospital and viewing the state of the patients; and with respect to the general charge of cruelty and bad management, this Committee is of opinion, on the fullest consideration, That no foundation whatever exists for such a charge, it appearing, in addition to the personal knowledge of the Governors themselves, that no complaints have been made of inhumanity or ill treatment, either by the patients or their friends, the former of whom are invariably asked on their discharge, in the presence of the weekly Committee, in what manner they have been treated while in the Hospital, and whether they have any complaints to make; and the friends and relatives of the patients having at all times, both during and after the confinement, the opportunity of preferring any complaints either to the Committees, Sub Committees, or Courts of the Hospital, or to the very numerous individual Governors, while it appears, that neither of such modes of appeal have in any instances been resorted to.

That in the opinion of this Committee, every attention has on the contrary been paid in the Hospital to the cleanliness, the health, and the comfort of the patients confined therein, and that every degree of indulgence consistent with the security of the patients and the safety of those employed has been observed; and it is further the opinion of this Committee, that on a fair comparison with any other Lunatic Asylums in this country, the Hospital of Bethlem would be found to possess equal if not superior claims to public estimation; and they believe they may with confidence appeal to the general opinion, having for the space of nearly three centuries borne testimony to the correctness of this statement.

The Committee, however, attribute the imputation of undue rigour which has recently gone forth, to a regulation of the Hospital, which has been long since acted upon, although not sufficiently considered by objectors, namely; that no patients are admitted as incurable patients, unless satisfactory proof is produced that they are absolutely mischievous and dangerous to others and themselves, a rule, which while it affords additional security to the public, in preserving many lives, and also increased advantage to relatives, in relieving them of so calamitous a charge, does yet involve this necessary consequence, that more restraint must in the generality of such cases become necessary, than in the cases of patients who are not so mischievously disposed, and who rarely meditate any attempt upon the lives of others. While therefore it is considered that no fewer than one half of the patients, both male and female, at present in the Hospital, are incurable patients, and consequently have been received as dangerous patients, and so in the main continue; it is apprehended that such circumstance should be borne in mind, lest due allowance for the restraint under which they may be found, should fail to be made.

This Committee, secondly, proceeded to investigate the particular case of James Norris, and they found with respect to such patient, as follows:—

That he was first admitted into the Hospital as a curable patient on the 1st of February, 1800, and reported uncured on the 7th day of February, 1801, and then received as a dangerous and incurable Lunatic on the 14th of February, 1801. That from the last-mentioned period he evinced repeated symptoms of a malignant and ferocious disposition, and that two years after he was admitted an incurable, (viz. in the year 1803), he stabbed William Howkins, one of the keepers, with a knife, which had been incautiously left by a relative of a patient when visiting the Hospital, and that upon one of the patients going to the relief of such keeper, he stabbed him also, neither of the wounds however having proved fatal; it is also believed that he, at the same time, attempted the life of a third person: That, upon these attempts, he was more closely confined, but not in the mode which was afterwards adopted, and which will be hereafter more particularly mentioned. That from the period of his attempting the lives of the keepers, he appears to have lost no opportunity of committing acts of violence and mischief, having particularly a habit of darting forward in a sudden and unexpected manner upon such persons as came within his reach, and repeatedly threatening their lives, as well as frequently throwing violently at them whatever articles came in his way, and were likely to effect his purpose. That his bodily strength being considerable, and his cunning and dexterity greater than those of any other patient, he became a terror to every person whose duty or inclination brought them into the Hospital; one instance of mischief in particular having been the biting off the finger of a man named Thompson, and more of which instances might be particularized if necessary. That upon iron handcuffs having been placed on his wrists for the purpose of restraining him, he was enabled to extricate himself from them with ease, by passing his hand through them in consequence of a peculiar conformation, his wrists being larger than the bones of his hands, and which instruments were then converted by him into dangerous weapons, and thrown at others. That at length all the ordinary modes of confinement known in the Hospital having been resorted to in vain, a representation was made by the Medical Officers to the Weekly Committee of the Governors, in the beginning of June, 1804, stating that some further confinement had become necessary in this particular case, and their opinion was taken as to the best method of restraint. A proposal appears to have been at the same time submitted to the Committee by the Medical Officers, for allowing two apartments to the patient, as night and day-rooms, communicating by a door between them, which it was conceived would answer the purpose of security; but on account of the way in which the Hospital was kept constantly filled by patients from the Army and Navy, it was not thought advisable to adopt this plan, as the employment of the rooms would necessarily prevent some one patient from being maintained in the Hospital, for the whole period during which Norris might remain there; and the Committee therefore did not consider themselves justified in excluding another patient on his account; some alternative then became necessary, and it appears that, on the 16th of June, 1804, an apparatus of iron was submitted to the Committee, which sat on that day, for their approbation, consisting of three distinct parts—First, a collar encircling the neck, and confined by a chain to a stauncheon, or pole, fixed at the head of the patient's bed, leaving him at liberty to rise, to lie down, to turn himself in, and to stand near or sit down upon his bed, but not to depart further from it;—Second, an open worked frame, the lower part of which encircled the body; and the upper part of which passed over the shoulders, having on either side apertures for the arms, which encircled them above the elbow, but left the lower part of the arms hanging down, and at liberty, so that while the act of throwing or other violence was prevented, the patient was enabled to feed himself, to keep himself clean, and to assist himself in the ordinary evacuations of nature;—and Third, a chain passing from the ancle of the patient to the foot of the bed, by which additional security appears to have been obtained, and the habit of kicking (to which the patient was particularly addicted) was restrained. The Committee of the 16th June, on considering such contrivance, came to the following Resolution, which is entered in the Minute Book of that date, viz. “It appearing to the Committee that James Norris, one of the patients, is a very violent and dangerous lunatic, and had several times done mischief to the servants; Ordered, that he be put in the iron apparatus prepared for him, and approved by Dr. Monro and the Committee under the direction of the Medical Officers.”

This Committee further inquired, whether, during any period of the above mode of confinement having been in use, any handcuffs, or other fetters for the hands, had been ever used, and they ascertained that they had not.

This Committee then proceeded to examine the iron-work in question, and upon the fullest inquiry and consideration, they are of opinion, that, presuming the idea of the double cell not to have been acted upon, no better mode could have been devised for securing a patient of so dangerous a description, with equal advantage to himself, it appearing to them that neither pressure nor pain have been occasioned by any part of such restrictions, there being less of friction and excoriation produced by a metallic substance, if properly adapted to the purpose of confinement, supposing such confinement to be of a permanent nature, than from ligatures formed of other materials, even admitting that the latter would afford equal security.

The Committee further find, that no complaint whatever has been made by the patient himself, either of pressure or pain, during the whole period of his confinement; and that his bodily health does not appear to this Committee to have suffered during that time in any degree from that cause; that he has been enabled at all times to feed himself, and to assist himself in his evacuations, neither of which advantages would have been possible, if he had been confined in a strait-waistcoat, even supposing that such a mode of confinement would have been sufficient for his security (which in his case, it does not appear that it would, even for a single week;) and that therefore, however unsightly in itself, such a method of restraint as that now under consideration may be, and however painful may be the reflection, that it should in any single instance become necessary to employ it, this Committee is notwithstanding of opinion, that the peculiar nature of the case before them did justify its application, in this particular instance, and that so far from having been attended with the effects which have been attributed to it, it appears to have been upon the whole rather a merciful and humane, than a rigorous and severe imposition; its use having, as to this patient, been warranted by the circumstances which have been detailed, and that in all probability the lives of others have been saved by its adoption.

This Committee, however, finding on their investigation, that part of the above-mentioned iron-work, namely, the frame work of the body, had been removed from the patient, proceeded to inquire at what time, on what account, and by whose orders this alteration had taken place; and on particular inquiry into this part of the subject, they found that it had been removed by the Keeper on the 17th May last, in consequence of a written order from the Apothecary, of which the following is a Copy:

" To J. Blackburne."

" Let the body-irons be taken off from Norris, as they do not seem to afford any security.

" 17th May, 1814.

(Signed) " J. Haslam."

On inquiring into the reasons of such order having been given, the Committee found that it was in consequence of the Keeper (Blackburne) having represented to the Apothecary, that the patient was able to get his arms out of the apertures which have been mentioned, from the circumstance of his having of late become somewhat thinner than he was, and that one of the chief objects of that part of the confinement having been the security of the arms, the Apothecary had considered it would be unnecessary to continue such restriction at all, longer than it was found sufficient to answer the purpose for which it was designed, particularly when the Keeper, whose personal safety was most in question, appeared satisfied that it might be safely dispensed with. On further inquiring, as to the present state of health of the patient, it appeared to this Committee, that he had not been altogether in as good health of late, as he had been for the fourteen preceding years of his confinement in the Hospital, and that the statement of his having recently become thinner, was correct, but that he was by no means seriously out of health at this time, nor had he been so at any period of his confinement; neither did it appear to this Committee, that the particular mode of his confinement has had any effect in producing either the thinness, or the change in his general health, which have been adverted to.

The Committee were further desirous of ascertaining whether the statement made by the keeper to the apothecary, and under which, the order for removing part of the confinement had been given, was owing to a simple conviction on the part of the keeper, that such portion of the confinement had really become unnecessary, or whether he had acted from any other motives, in making such application to the apothecary; and the Committee are induced to think, that although that application by the keeper, might have been quickened by his having heard some remarks as to Norris, from persons visiting the patients, yet that he had for some time before intended to apply to the apothecary, and that such application was not in consequence of those remarks, but would have taken place if they had never been made.

Upon the whole, this Committee are of opinion, that it cannot be satisfactorily established, either that any cruelties have been ever practised in Bethlem Hospital, as has been recently stated, or that the case of James Norris in particular, which has been selected as an instance, in support of such statement, affords any proof to that effect; and upon the fullest consideration which the Committee has been able to give to the charge, as comprising both these particulars, they beg leave to represent it to the Court of Governors as their decided opinion, That no foundation whatever exists for the imputation which has been made, and that on the contrary, the general management of the Hospital, as affecting the health, the cleanliness, and the comfort of the patients, is of a nature creditable to the Governors and others concerned in its administration, and such as would not suffer upon a comparison with any other institution of a similar description.

* The amount of the rents for the last two years is not to be considered as fixed; large allowances are claimed by the tenants on account of the non-completion of the drainage, embankments and other improvements in the Fens in Lincolnshire, and the future amount of the rents will depend upon the extent of the improvements effected. It is expected the Land Surveyor will recommend a very considerable abatement from the amount given, especially under the present depreciation in farming concerns; and in addition to what has been already advanced in the above improvements, a further expenditure, to a large amount, will be required to defray the charge of two farm-houses, barns, &c., now building, and to complete the drainage and embankment.

APPENDIX, No. 7.

INSTRUCTIONS for the Admission of PATIENTS into BETHLEM HOSPITAL.

ALL poor Lunatics who have not been disordered more than one year before admission, and who have not been in any Hospital before, may be admitted at all seasons, and remain till cured, provided the same be effected within twelve months; and all such as have been longer than that time, may be admitted (at the discretion of the Committee) from Lady-day to Michaelmas only, when they are to be discharged, unless there be then a prospect of cure.

According to the regulations of the Hospital, persons in the undermentioned situations cannot be admitted, viz. women with child; persons afflicted with the palsy, convulsive or epileptic fits; such as have become weak through age or long illness, mopes, and idiots; those who are blind, or so lame that they are obliged to use a crutch or wooden leg; and such as are infected with the venereal disease or itch.

The Petition which accompanies these instructions must be FAITHFULLY filled up, according to the directions contained in the margin of it, and signed either by the parish officers, or by such relation or friend as may apply on the patient's behalf.

The certificate of settlement must also be signed and SEALED by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish where the patient's settlement is, in the presence of two witnesses, one of whom must make oath of the due execution thereof, before two Justices of the Peace for the county or place, who are to allow the same under their hands.

The certificate of insanity must be signed by some Physician, Surgeon, or Apothecary (who has visited the patient) in presence of the same two witnesses, who will sign the attestation thereof, and one of whom must make oath to the same, before the two Justices of Peace.

When the Petition and Certificates are returned, they will be laid before the Committee at Bethlem Hospital, who sit there only on Saturday mornings at Ten o'clock, and who will make an order as soon as there is a vacancy, for the patient to be brought to be viewed and examined by them and the Physician, and to be then admitted, if a proper object.

But the patient must not be brought up, till such an order is made.—And one week before the time appointed for the examination, there must be left in the lodge of Bridewell Hospital, Blackfriars, a note of the names of two housekeepers, in London, or the suburbs, who must be present at Bethlem Hospital, at Ten o'clock in the morning precisely, when the patient is to be admitted, and enter into a bond of 100*l.* to pay for clothes, during the patient's continuance in the Hospital, and to take him or her away when discharged by the Committee; and to pay the charge of burial, if the patient dies in the Hospital.—Patients not sent by parishes or public bodies are admitted free, but those sent by parishes or public bodies, pay 3*l.* 3*s.* each on admission.

It is necessary that some person should attend with the patient, who can give an account of the case.

N. B. No Governor, Officer or Servant of the Hospital, can be security for the Patient.

JOHN WEBSTER, Sec.
