30 Sept. This patient was ordered to be admitted, for advanced in typhus fever. He was ordered high delirious but not otherwise than is usual in typhus mania. His pulse was extremely small and feeble his respiration frequent and laborious his countenance pale and relaxed and his extremities cold. By giving him wine freely he was somewhat recruited and his head was restored and supported by the wine and the other usual applications. But he had been too long neglected before admission to have any great chance of recovery and as he was an improper patient for the asylum he was, after having remained here four days, dismissed by

Dissection

Two fore ridges were felt near the vertex of the head and crossing the sagit-tal suture; but in removing the scalp there were no corresponding eminences on the bone. The scalp adhered with more than usual force, and, at several points of former adhesion, was membranous. The skull was a little thicker than usual and very solid. The cut edge of the portion removed appeared more nearly than usual to a perfect diploe; but having a long diameter shorter than usual + Posterior rubra were very conspicuous

There was a deep pit in the coronary suture, at the bottom of which bone was deficient. Near this point the dura mater adhered with unusual the sinus was ruptured in various [illegible] the right orbitary plate there was a sharp angular projection. along the [illegible] of the glandula Pacchioni the membranes adhered together so firmly that in removing the Dura Mater, the Pia Mater was necessarily torn from several convolutions of the Brain. A very small quantity of watery fluid appeared effused along the convolutions The medullary substance of the Brain was not particularly firm; but rather darker than usual and the red points were more numerous. Only about half an ounce of [redacted] was found in the ventricles. The posterior elongations of the Lateral ventricles were shorter than usual and as if more dilated than usual. The Cerebellum was very soft
+ +

There was nothing also remarkable in Encephalon.

The Lungs adhered strongly, almost throughout their whole surface to parietes of Thorax. They were not however disased The heart was pretty natural There was some aqueous effusion in its sac of a brownish hue, and 2 or 3 drachms ag. fœcundi

The stomach was greatly enlarged and extended to the umbilical region. It contained a considerable quantity of food mixed with chyme which the patient had taken in the practice of swallowing and more compact than usual The Colon was loaded with fæces for 4 or 5 days & then rose in a state of Derangement.

She continued in this state 2 Months, & then got quite well again, but never recov her former cheerfulness.
She went to service again & continued in one house for 4 Years when about 8 years ago she was again taken ill in the same way as before mentioned, left her Master House & came to her sister in Edinbro' where she remained about 6 Months in a State of Derangement -

She then nearly recovered & returned to her old master with whom she got well in a few weeks -

She continued with him from that time in tolerable mind till about 2 months ago. when she again left him in a state of Derangement and came to her sister in Glasgow where she now is - She does not tear or destroy her clothes - but often occupies herself or wishes to do so in cleaning up the house and her clothes as for a wedding. She raving is generally about the Proposed marriage & sometimes about events in her masters family & particularly about the loss of her money in his hands by his Bankruptcy
