A SERIES OF EDITIONS OF THE

GREEK AND LATIN CLASSICS,

TO BE ISSUED UNDER THE GENERAL TITLE OF

BIBLIOTHECA CLASSICA,

EDITED BY VARIOUS HANDS, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF

GEORGE LONG, ESQ., M.A.,

LATE FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE; CLASSICAL LECTURER OF BRIGHTON COLLEGE;

AND THE REV.

ARTHUR JOHN MACLEANE, M.A.,

TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE; AND PRINCIPAL OF BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

EARLY in the ensuing year will be commenced a Series of the Greek and Roman Authors, carefully edited, with English Notes, on a uniform plan. The series will be especially adapted to the wants of students in the higher forms of public schools and at the universities, and will embrace, in the first instance, those works which are usually read in the course of a classical education.

The works will be edited by various hands; and, to secure uniformity and consistency in execution, the series will be under the united management of Mr. LONG and Mr. MACLEANE.

The first volume will be ready early in 1850. The subsequent volumes will be published at intervals, as regularly as may be found practicable, at the rate of four or five volumes in the year.

The following works are undertaken by the gentlemen whose names are set opposite :—

HOMER: Iliad, } Odyssey }	{ Rev. BENJAMIN HALL KENNEDY, D.D., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge; Head Master of Shrewsbury School.
HESIOD	{ EDWARD LAW LUSHINGTON, Esq., M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; Professor of Greek in the University of Glasgow.
HERODOTUS	{ Rev. J. W. BLAKESLEY, M.A., late Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge.
ARISTOTLE: Nicomachean Ethics }	{ GEORGE LONG, Esq., M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.
THUCYDIDES }	{
XENOPHON: Hellenica }	{
PLATO: Republic, and Selections of Dialogues }	{ Rev. W. H. THOMPSON, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge.
LIVY	{ Dr. WILLIAM SMITH, Editor of the Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities, and of Greek and Roman Biography and Mythology.
TACITUS	WM. B. DONNE, Esq.
VIRGIL }	{ Rev. CHARLES MERIVALE, M.A., late Fellow and Tutor of St. John's College, Cambridge.
LUCAN }	{
CICERO: Orations, and Philosophical Works }	GEORGE LONG, Esq.
SALLUST }	{ W. RAMSAY, Esq., M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge; Professor of Humanity in the University of Glasgow.
JUVENAL and PERSIUS }	{
HORACE	{ Rev. ARTHUR JOHN MACLEANE, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge; Principal of Brighton College.

The under-mentioned volumes are already in progress, and are expected to appear during 1850-1 :—

HERODOTUS, Three Volumes.
ILIAD, One Volume.
HORACE, Two Volumes.

CICERO, Orations, Vol. I.
PLATO, Dialogues, Vol. I.
TACITUS, Vol. I.

Each work will be sold separately; but, as the Publishers expect that they will be enabled to extend the series until it shall approximate to a complete collection of the Greek and Latin Classics, and as they have reason to think that such a collection would be found an acceptable addition to all public and private Libraries, they hope to receive the names of persons who are willing to give encouragement to the scheme, as Subscribers to the entire Series.

PREFACE

The plan of this dictionary was conceived and matured fourteen years since, in 1835; it was submitted to the Minister of Public Instruction of France (Monsieur Guizot) and the Minister of Public Works, who approved it highly and promised it encouragement. Under their auspices the work was commenced; and it has been prosecuted notwithstanding innumerable difficulties. My deficiency, which I willingly avow, I have endeavoured to compensate by constant research; and when this has been unavailing I have had recourse to the knowledge of others, which has been rarely withheld.

But neither my own researches nor the learning of others have protected me from errors inseparable from such a work. Our great lexicographer Johnson having been asked by a lady how he could have defined pastern the knee of a horse, "Ignorance, Madam, pure ignorance," answered he. Assuredly to similar interrogations I may be allowed to offer by anticipation a similar reply.

This dictionary contains besides the words in ordinary use, the principal terms of the sciences, the arts, manufactures, commerce, navigation, etc. The nomenclature of each branch of the arts and sciences would alone form a volume. The limits of my work do not admit of the introduction of more than general terms; but from a desire of excluding none of these, words that could not upon this principle strictly claim admittance have been not unfrequently inserted. I have in this respect been guided by the dictionary of the French Academy. In addition to the terms of the arts and sciences contained in the latter, innumerable terms especially of science, of civil engineering, of the arts and manufactures, of commerce, the customs, finances, political economy, railways, steam-engines have been introduced, many of which are of too recent adoption to have found their way into dictionaries in general.

Before entering, however, into detail I would present a few observations on the French and English dictionaries already published.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH DICTIONARIES.

It has been justly remarked by an eminent French grammarian, Mr. Delalande-Hadley, that the least bad, the least defective of these dictionaries scarcely rises to mediocrity. There are usually wanting in them the most ordinary words and senses in general use of literature, science and technology. In truth, the hapless student is most fortunate when he does not find them, as then he is not led into error: for if by any mischance he should unluckily meet with the word he is looking for, he will for the most part find idle definitions or a numberless host of words in lieu of the one thing sought, the equivalent, the proper term; and if by singular good fortune this is given, it must be known beforehand (and then the research is useless) in order to be extricated from all that surrounds it; the lexicographer having heaped up into one confused mass, rudis indigestaque moles, words, senses, definitions, examples, idioms and proverbs, as if the sole purpose were to challenge the ingenuity of the most skilful:

Devine si tu peux, et choisis si tu l'oses.

There is almost a total absence of the language of literature, and of those innumerable idiomatic forms of speech peculiar to each language and which after the words themselves are the most important and useful part of a dictionary. Misinterpretations and barbarisms abound in them; misinterpretations, because when words resemble each other in the two languages, the resemblance is held to be sufficient without a comparison of the definitions to ascertain whether the sense is the same; barbarisms, because words are fabricated when they are unknown. Judging by these works it would be imagined that the French part was written by an Englishman, and the English by a Frenchman, or rather that both are the performance of one equally unskilled in both languages. A few examples will justify the preceding assertions.

OMISSIONS.

Examples of ordinary or literary words wanting.

Aérage, airing; aluminière, alum-works; barème, ready reckoner; beurrerie, butter-dairy; bicorne, two-horned; breveté, patentee; briqueteur, brick-layer; corsetier, stay-maker; douzil, spigot; embêter, to annoy; to worry; embrun, spray; étanche, water-tight; wind-tight; air-tight; Iliade, Iliad; internat, boarding-school; inverse (noun), reverse; Marseillaise, Marseillaise hymn; mioche, brat (a little child); se rappeler, to remember (omitted in nearly all); rétribuer, to remunerate (wanting in most); tournevis, screw-driver, etc., etc. (V. Examples page v).

The omissions in the compounds are most curious; it may even be said that omission is the rule and insertion the exception; in a dictionary of one language this is justifiable, but not in that of two languages, as a compound in one tongue is often translated by a single word in the other, and when it is not, it cannot always be construed literally. For instance bell-hanging is rendered in French by pose de sonnettes, and carpet-bag, by sac de nuit, neither easily guessed; but bill-case is in French portefeuille; burial-ground, cimetière; hair-dresser, coiffeur; night-mare, cauchemar; salt-cellar, salière, etc. Such as are not translated literally have been inserted in this work.

Examples of ordinary senses wanting of words given.

At antécédent is not to be found previous conduct; at cuir, fault in language; égoïste, selfish; favori, whisker; entrepôt, bonded warehouse; portefeuille, bill-case; priser, to take snuff; résine, resin.

DEFINITIONS INSTEAD OF THE PROPER TERM.

Examples of idle definitions or of a host of words instead of the equivalent, the proper term (1).

Aluner, to steep in alum-water, instead of to alum; pétase, winged hat of Mercury, for petasus; cuir bouilli, leather prepared in a certain manner or boiled in some resinous substance to make bottles, buckets, etc. (for waxed leather); coup de soleil, a violent impression of the sun upon those that are exposed to it in hot countries (for sun-stroke). At pantalon, pantaloon and buffoon are given, trousers alone, the only proper term, is omitted. — In the English-French part it is still worse. Arson, action de mettre le feu à une maison (this is called incendie par malveillance); search-warrant, ordre du juge pour faire une visite (mandat de perquisition); waistcoat, chemisette, camisole, veste (which describe perfectly what it is not, as gilet would what it is).

MODIFICATION OF THE SENSES OF WORDS, FORMS, AND IDIOMS.

Examples of words with adjectives, etc., and idiomatic forms wanting.

Bonne pour tout faire, maid of all work; fer forgé, wrought iron; fer laminé, rolled iron; papier vélin, wove paper; papier vergé, laid paper; piano droit or vertical, upright piano; piano à queue, grand piano; terre sainte, consecrated ground; bon voyage! a pleasant journey to you!

Envers et contre tous, in opposition to all men; sauf erreur ou omission, errors excepted; à genoux, on one's knees; un genou en terre, kneeling on one knee; induire en erreur, to lead into error; chanter misère, to plead poverty; passer la plaisanterie, to be no jest; porter préjudice, to be prejudicial, injurious or detrimental to; laver la vaisselle, to wash up the dishes. For others see the words coup, déconsidération, escalier, huile, mémoire, monnaie, rêve, rhume, soir, sourire, souvenir, etc., etc.

BARBARISMS AND MISTRANSLATIONS.

Examples of barbarisms, solecisms and mistranslations.

FRENCH BARBARISMS: Jour du quartier, (quarter-day) for terme; à l'ouverture du livre, (à livre ouvert); puissance exécutive, (pouvoir exécutif); seigneur lige for seigneur suzerain (liege being applied in French to the vassal only and not to the lord).

ENGLISH BARBARISMS: He cousin, she cousin, she defendant (after which other examples might be dispensed with); flying coach for stage coach; to turn a thing with a droll (what it means I have never yet been able to discover); a turning joint (vertebre); it does not concern me NEITHER one way NOR other; to LAY (lie) along upon the ground; wind in the small guts (iliac passion). I would apologize for venturing to present the last example; but I cannot otherwise convey to the reader an adequate idea of the elegance of language constantly remarked in these dictionaries.

(1) The extracts from the French and English dictionaries found in this preface are made from the large Dictionary, generally called Royal dictionary of Boyer, Chambaud, Garner, Des Carrières and Fain published in 1829.

Examples of words fabricated.

Partition in music for score; pass-rose for holly-hock; English taffety for court plaster; pagone or pagona for pancreas; redhibitory for setting aside a contract of sale. To translate the English word walrus the dictionaries invented walrus, walros, and torwac for morse.

Examples of mistranslations.

Actuellement is translated by actually; really instead of at present because of the resemblance; billion, billion (instead of a thousand millions; billion in English means a million of millions); détrempe, water-colours (for distemper [in painting]); dissidence, scission (for difference, schism; scission signifies cutting); emphase, emphasis (instead of magniloquence, pompousness); inofficieux, inofficious, unkind (for that disinherits the legitimate heir; trillion, trillion (for billion); vindict, vengeance (for prosecution of crime); vindict publique, avenging the public (for prosecution of crime by the public prosecutor).

Pomme de pin has been so invariably translated by pine-apple, and vice versa, that all the French journals, in their account of the city feast of the 9th of November, until within the last two or three years, annually charged our aldermen of London, proverbially renowned for their good taste, with having eaten (peace to their digestions!) so many hundred fir-cones!... in French pommes de pin.

One of the innumerable erroneous indications is presented to the reader, as it proves how entirely these works have been left as they were by the self-styled authors of new dictionaries, the principal novelty of which consists of the new name they bear and some new blunders added to the already plentiful stock. At the word Louvre, the reader will find in nearly all dictionaries the king of France's palace at Paris. This was true in the reign of Charles IX, and of Henry IV, down to that of Louis XIV. But no king of France has inhabited it since Louis XV. It would be as well to define it the king of France's hunting-seat, as it was in the good old time of Dagobert, or his strong-hold, because it was so under Philip Augustus. For a hundred and fifty years then has this definition been erroneous; but it has remained as it was written perhaps by the first lexicographer, whose definition was probably right when he penned it.

These extracts assuredly prove the truth of the preceding assertions; they might have been increased ten or a hundredfold.

HISTORY OF THE DICTIONARIES OF THE TWO LANGUAGES.

The history of the dictionaries of the two languages explains their insufficiency.

The earliest French and English dictionary of which I find any record is an anonymous publication of 1570. In 1611 Cotgrave's appeared and of this Johnson speaks in terms of high encomium, calling it "a truly valuable work" and "a rich store-house of old French and English also." Boyer's name replaced or perhaps supplanted Cotgrave's; Boyer's alone has survived.

The French and English dictionaries are but reprints of Boyer and Chambaud with mere changes in the size, sometimes with insignificant corrections and additions and frequently with fresh faults. Boniface put into octavo what was before a quarto, added his name, the announcement of 5000 familiar terms and many new faults (1). Wilson selected among the materials of Boyer; but as he does not appear to have known French (a slight disadvantage it must be confessed), he was naturally and necessarily directed by chance. The smaller dictionaries are made from the larger ones or rather in what they give they are the larger ones in a diminutive form.

Boyer and Chambaud. Boyer was a French protestant who sought a refuge in England at the revocation of the edict of Nantes. He died in 1729. He published his dictionary in 1699 or 1702. The first edition of the dictionary of the French Academy appeared in 1694; the second, not until 1718; so that Boyer must have compiled his from the first. Johnson's great work which will ever be the basis, the foundation of English lexicography was not published till 1755, i. e., twenty-six years after Boyer's death. There existed before Johnson's, according to Lord Chesterfield, no English dictionary, nothing but word-books in which "all words, good and bad," says he, "are there jumbled indiscriminately together insomuch that the injudicious reader may speak and write as inelegantly, improperly, and vulgarly, as he pleases, by and with the authority of one or other of our word-books."

(1) At pendulum Boniface corrected un pendule into une pendule (which means a clock) and at licence called patente and given by Boyer, Chambaud and Wilson as droit d'auban, the old name for it, Boniface has corrected it into droit d'aubaine.

How faithfully does this description portray the state of the French and English dictionaries, that bear internal evidence of their having been composed from the word-books Lord Chesterfield describes. Boyer then composed his dictionary, if he did not transcribe Cotgrave's with Sherwood's supplement, as his successors have done with regard to his, from the English "word-books" before there existed an English dictionary. In the absence then of proper guides he fabricated the words with which he was unacquainted. It is too easy to estimate the value of words coined by a foreigner by no means impressed with the genius of our language. Chambaud who at least knew French, and I doubt whether Boyer was well acquainted with his own language, succeeded Boyer; he was justly desirous of availing himself of the labours of Johnson; but he seems to have contented himself with translating Johnson's definitions; a system which has a most grave inconvenience, that of introducing every thing that approaches the word, all its synonymes, in short every thing that is not the word, and of excluding naught but the word itself. It is however this dictionary of Boyer, published in all forms, and copied, even to the misprints (1), transcribed under all names, which has been the guide of all who have studied French and English for a century and a half, for five generations!

THE GENERAL DICTIONARY.

This work has been composed from dictionaries exclusively English or French. Among the former the dictionaries of Johnson, Webster and Richardson have been taken for its basis. I have often culled from Smart's Walker remodelled; and I regret not having been acquainted, until nearly the end of my task, with Worcester's critical and pronouncing dictionary, whose nomenclature is rich. I have never consulted Ash, who, after his etymology of curmudgeon, can inspire no confidence. Of the French, the dictionary of the Academy is naturally the ground-work; its authority has always been with me decisive. I am however much indebted to the two dictionaries of Laveaux and Boiste, but perhaps still more to the valuable pages of Bescherelle.

I have abstained from naming in my title any other than general dictionaries, having scrupulously avoided adding names, too frequently all that is borrowed from the books. A long list of names in a title-page is often extracted from a catalogue.

SOURCES OF NEW WORDS.

Nearly all the new words, not literary, introduced into this dictionary have been borrowed from the following works; and the obligation is here acknowledged with pleasure and gratitude: Brande's Dictionary of Science, Literature and art, Hebert's Engineer's and Mechanic's Encyclopædia, Loudon's Encyclopædias of Agriculture, Gardening, Plants, and cottage, farm and villa Architecture and Furniture; M^c Culloch's Dictionary of Commerce and Commercial Navigation and Ure's Dictionaries of Chemistry and Mineralogy and of Arts, Manufactures and Mines; for innumerable terms of the arts and manufactures I am principally indebted to Dr. Ure's esteemed works, and for very many to the personal kindness of the learned author. For these terms in French I have had recourse to translations of several of these works and to the French Dictionnaire du Commerce et des Marchandises, but principally to the personal assistance of the most competent French authorities in every department; and no fewer than five members of the Institute have with a disinterestedness, characteristic of the scientific men of France, favoured this work with more than ordinarily important contributions.

The part of the Dictionary relating to the Natural Sciences has been wholly entrusted to Dr. Doyère, Professor of Natural History of the French University and author of works on these subjects. Dr. Doyère has placed the scientific name first, and afterwards the vulgar terms, marked with the sign of familiar words, thus (C).

Whole works have been read for railway terms and those of steam-engines, for many of which I am indebted to Dr. Lardner's kindness. The terms of commerce have been extracted from my Manual of Commercial Terms in English and French, those of the Post-office from the conventions between Great Britain and France, and the "articles agreed upon between the post-offices" of the two countries. Various technological vocabularies that have been collected by private gentlemen and especially those made in England by Engineers of the French government, have been communicated to me. Law terms naturally attracted my serious attention; either they did not exist in the French and English dictionaries or they presented the still greater inconvenience of being given erroneously (V. arson, and search-warrant, page 11). Mr. Marie, a French barrister and since Minister of Justice, and Mr. Else and the late Mr. Leahy, members of the English bar, have kindly afforded me the most valuable assistance.

Examples of terms of commerce, science or the arts and manufactures not in other dictionaries.

Artesian (HEBERT); cholérine (COPLAND); copartnery (M^c CULLOCH); dahlia (LOUDON); to madder (URE); to ret (URE); unindifferency (BLACKSTONE); air-stove (HEBERT); bleach-works (URE). I would refer the reader to the English-French dictionary for the following words. For commerce: bank (with 3 new compounds); dock (of 5 compounds 4 are new); cash (4 out of 6, and among the new is cash-office, caisse); bill (6 out of 8); for civil engineering: bridge, drain, lock, pile and its compounds, rail, and particularly road and its compounds; for the arts and manufactures: gas (with 8 new compounds); engine (9 new compounds), cotton (10), iron (15), and coal (44 compounds, 21 of which are in no other dictionary).

In ordinary language or in that of literature the new words added are numerous and important. Familiar terms have been gleaned from authors, from tradesmen's catalogues, from all sources. I have done what Johnson alleges he could not do, but probably did not attempt, I have "visited the warehouses of merchants, and shops of artificers, to gain the names of wares, tools and operations of which no mention is found in books."

I have borrowed considerably from the terms of our own great writers and from those of the French, including authors of our own times, preserving those antiquated or obsolete words or senses that are to be found in the standard authors of either country. The English should assuredly be able to read with the assistance of a French dictionary Pascal, Corneille, Racine, Molière, La Fontaine, Boileau, Montesquieu, Bossuet, Fléchier, Massillon, Voltaire, Rousseau, Mirabeau, Chateaubriand, De Lamar-tine, Béranger, etc. I have inserted words sanctioned by such writers, "quand même" as Balzac has well expressed it, "l'usage n'en aurait pas encore corrigé l'amertume de la nouveauté." Much circumspection, it is admitted, should be used in granting such acts of naturalization; but the French Academy did not exclude from the first edition of their dictionary Balzac's neologisms féliciter, urbanité, etc.; they have since admitted La Fontaine's Fabuliste and the bienfaisance of Abbé de Saint-Pierre; and what should we now say to a lexicographer of antiquity, had there been any, who should have obstinately refused to admit into his rolls Cicero's neologism moral philosophy or Plato's Providence?

I have scrupulously abstained from creating new words; it is the business of the lexicographer to record the creations of others. No terms have been added but those that have been found and have been deemed legitimate.

Examples of literary terms or those in general use that are not in other dictionaries.

Anarchiser (MIRABEAU), to throw into anarchy; archinoble (LESAGE), most noble; boutonnet (VOLTAIRE), little bud; briqueteur, brick-layer; buvard, blotting-case; calcaire (noun) (ACADÉMIE), lime-stone; causant (SÉVIGNÉ), chatty; chloroforme, chloroform; un dépendant, (LA BRUYÈRE), a dependant; dérailer, to run off the rails; détrôner (VOLTAIRE), to dethrone; diablogue (RABELAIS, LA FONTAINE, VOLTAIRE), devilkin; enténébrer (CHATEAUBRIAND), to involve in darkness; ergoterie (ROUSSEAU), cavilling; escompteur, discounteer; Iliade, Iliad; inestimé (DELILLE), unesteemed; inharmonieux (LAHARPE), unharmonious, unmusical; inindustrie (MIRABEAU), unskilfulness; internat, boarding-school; internissable (VOLTAIRE), unsullied; magnanerie (DARCY), silk-worm nursery; mésinterpréter (ROUSSEAU), to misconstrue; mioche (BESCHERELLE), brat; poisseux (BUFFON), pitchy; se rappeler (ACADÉMIE), to remember (wanting in nearly all); statuette, statuette; trass (BESCHERELLE), tarras or terras (a cement much used); viaduc (BESCHERELLE), viaduct; etc., etc. For other words, see OMISSIONS, page 11.

Obsolete words and senses of the French classics not in other French and English dictionaries.

OBSELETE WORDS: Accointement (CORNEILLE), skilfully; assembleur (LA FONTAINE), collector, gatherer; bon-homme (LA FONTAINE), simple easy man; breveté (LA FONTAINE), brevity, shortness; cachement (MOLIÈRE), hiding; consonner (MOLIÈRE), to harmonize; fioux (LA FONTAINE), child; grippeminaud (LA FONTAINE), grimalkin; hommeau (LA FONTAINE), little man; jarni (MOLIÈRE), by heaven; penaille and penaillerie (LA FONTAINE), monks; polide (RACINE), pretty; tête-bleu (MOLIÈRE), zounds; voi (RACINE), indeed; bless me, etc. OBSELETE SENSES: Assembleur (LA FONTAINE), collector, gatherer; compasser (MOLIÈRE), to consider; to weigh; malpropre (CORNEILLE, MOLIÈRE), unfit; ressentiment (CORNEILLE), injury; ressentiment (FLÉCHIER, VOLTAIRE), feeling; sentiment (CORNEILLE), resentment; trotter (LA FONTAINE), to follow fast, etc.

Unauthorized and useless words that are in new dictionaries merely because they have been in old ones have been pitilessly suppressed; and room has thus been found for new and useful words without exceeding the size of ordinary dictionaries.

COMPOUNDS.

In both dictionaries the compounds are inserted when they are not translated literally or when they are rendered by single words. This is an important part of a Dictionary of two languages; but these terms are not generally given in a dictionary of one language only. Brass-foil is in no English lexicon; but one must be gifted with powers of divination to surmise that it is called in French oripeau or cliquant. The dictionaries insert brass-candlestick, brass-canon, brass-kettle, brass-money, that are translated literally. These then I have suppressed or rather I have replaced them by other compounds not construed literally, the number of which has been so greatly increased that I have sometimes (as at the word coal) as many as forty-four compounds, twenty-one of which are in no other dictionary. In the French-English dictionary these compounds are scarcely fewer. Among those of the word porte, there are in this work seventy-six, sixty-one of which are in very few French and English dictionaries, and of these twenty-nine are to be found in none.

SUPPRESSIONS.

Not however satisfied with making valuable additions to the vocabulary, I have endeavoured to render the service of suppressing improprieties not merely of language, that have been accumulating for more than a century. I have never forgotten that I was writing for the young and that the instructor of youth is invested with a moral priesthood.

COINS, WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The coins, measures and weights of one country have been accurately reduced to those of the other. It will be readily imagined that for both nations the new system has been adopted; a table of them has been added at the end of the dictionary. The Annuaire du bureau des longitudes, which is an authority in England and France has been taken for the basis of these reductions. (See page 602 and the words of the table.)

POLITICAL INSTITUTIONS AND PUBLIC FUNCTIONS.

The greater part of political institutions and of public functions, when they differ in the two countries, have been succinctly explained. (V. état civil, états généraux, tiers état, etc.) This dictionary gives at the names of the months of the calendar of the first French republic, constantly met with in French works, the corresponding time of the ordinary calendar. (V. Vendémiaire, Brumaire, Frimaire, Nivôse, Pluviôse, Ventôse, etc.)

ABBREVIATIONS.

The greater part of readers will not learn with indifference that the principal abbreviations and contractions in use are found in the following pages; they are destined for the foreigner, who is often embarrassed by their absence.

GRAMMATICAL PART.

It is superfluous to dwell on the importance of the grammatical accuracy of a work intended to serve as a guide and destined by its very nature to be an authority. The dictionaries of the two languages are in this respect sadly deficient; they commonly unite in one article the active and neuter verb and not unfrequently words of two or three different denominations. Since, the preposition, adverb and conjunction, forms a single article. The dictionaries constantly construe the verb active by the neuter and vice versa. Surpass, the active verb, is rendered by exceller, l'emporter, which in French are neuter verbs and which necessarily mislead the student; it should be exceller sur, l'emporter sur. These faults are of constant recurrence. Much care has been bestowed on this portion of the work. Attention has been called, especially in the French-English dictionary, to the principal grammatical distinctions; and observations have been added and frequently examples to elucidate them (See the words dont, échapper, gens, le (the pronoun), ni, on).

se, voir, etc.). The student has been cautioned against confounding such words as in one of the languages are rendered by two different words in the other. This will perform the service of a dictionary of synonymes. (V. apporter and amener, to bring; aveu, confession and confesse, confession; briser, casser and rompre, to break; jour and journée, day; opprimer and oppresser, to oppress; partial and partiel, partial; retourner and revenir, to return; soir and soirée, evening; soupçonneux and suspect, suspicious; etc.)

ACCEPTATIONS OF WORDS.

Like Johnson, whose example cannot be too often imitated, I have presented the acceptations of words in their genealogical order, i. e. in the logical order in which they were probably formed or at least deduced from each other.

By this system, the student understands them better and the memory retains them more tenaciously, for the various senses present to the mind but a series of modifications of one and the same idea, because they follow each other and are connected together like so many links of a chain. The different senses are separated from each other by numbers, in order that they may not be taken for synonymes of the same acceptations. Obsolete senses, however, are generally placed last, but before those of the arts or sciences. Acceptations peculiar to certain objects or to certain arts and sciences are given in the alphabetical order of their designations. (V. aiguille, canon, face, œil, pièce, tête.) Words that are nearly synonymous or that differ by their style only are united under the same number.

I deem it unnecessary in a dictionary of two languages to give definitions that may be sought elsewhere and that occupy space better devoted to what can be found there alone. My definitions are, in general, but means of distinction: anoblir, to ennoble, is defined by to confer nobility on, in order to distinguish it from to ennoble (give excellence to), which is rendered in French by ennoblir; at jour I have put day (space of time from sun-rise to sun-set), that it may not be confounded with day (space of time from rising to retiring to rest), in French, journée.

In this part of my task I have every where observed and denoted those most important distinctions between the acceptations of words taken in a proper or a figurative sense, applied exclusively to persons or to things, employed in a good or a bad sense. These may be reckoned among the principal difficulties of the study of foreign languages; for a word the same in signification not unfrequently receives a totally different application in passing from one language to another.

Use in a good or a bad sense. Words often assume a bad sense in one language which they have not in another. Femelle is applied in a good sense in French to animals only; in relation to persons it is used in a bad sense; to translate into French a female friend or a female deity by une amie femelle, une divinité femelle, would be making an egregious and ridiculous mistake; these two expressions would be equivalent in English to a she friend, a she deity. Pathos, unlike the Greek or English word pathos, being used in a bad sense, means in English bathos, bombast, fustian, rant. The above is more than sufficient to prove the absolute necessity of such indications in dictionaries.

Distinction between persons and things. The difference in this respect is very great between any two languages; in one, words apply to both which in another are employed of one only of the two. Incurable (incurable) is used of persons and things, whereas inguérissable, its synonyme, is employed of persons only. Méritant is said of persons only and may be translated by deserving or meritorious; méritoire on the contrary is used but of things and can be rendered by meritorious only, as deserving is not employed in English of things. Natal is similarly distinguished from natif, both signifying native. Fréquenter must be translated by to frequent (a place); but to frequent the society of (persons). Sometimes this affects the place of the adjective as in malhonnête. (V. SUICIDE.) In short it is a distinction that must constantly be made and that must consequently be learned; where is it to be recorded if not in a dictionary?

Distinction between the proper and figurative senses. This I consider one of the most important parts of the study of a language and consequently of the dictionary of two tongues. For blindness the French use cécité in the proper sense, for a want of sight, and aveuglement in the figurative for ignorance, although aveugle (blind) is employed in both cases. On the other hand, mûr in the proper sense is with us ripe, and in the figurative, mature; lisible is properly legible, but figuratively readable. It has been well said that every language has its peculiar metaphors, so established by usage that if the nearest equivalent term is substituted ridicule ensues. Had Young found the distinction between entrailles (proper and figurative) and boyaux (proper only) denoted in dictionaries, he would not have written to Fénelon: "Monseigneur, vous avez pour moi des boyaux de père," my lord, you have the entrails of a father for me.

EXAMPLES.

Examples have been inserted when they have been deemed necessary to elucidate the value of a word or a sense, to illustrate the manner of using it, to render more obvious the distinction between a word and its synonymes, or to exemplify some grammatical difficulty, frequently to show some particular use of prepositions that differ in the two languages; they have not been repeated at derivatives; the reader must refer to the primitive. I have studiously avoided adducing examples of obsolete significations that might lead the student into error. The limits of this work have not permitted me to consider literary beauty in the examples which have been reduced to what mathematicians call their lowest terms. After having thus altered or maimed them I have been unwilling to add to them the names of authors.

MODIFICATION OF THE SENSE OF WORDS.

The sense of words, and especially the manner of translating them, is often considerably modified by the addition of other words, especially adjectives or nouns subjoined to nouns, adverbs to verbs, etc.; or these have forms peculiar to themselves. Groseille signifies a currant; but grosse groseille or groseille à maquereau, is gooseberry; or if groseilles is considered to mean gooseberry then groseille à grappes becomes currant and groseilles la crème our gooseberry fool. I have given the principal sorts of things when not translated literally, as piston plein is not Englished by full but solid piston; papier de Chine is not China but India paper; encrier à pompe, not pump but hydraulic inkstand. A literal translation would often be unintelligible and not unfrequently ludicrous, as piano à queue (grand piano) would inevitably, if the evil genius of a luckless student, unable to find it in his dictionary, and thus left to chance, were to light on piano with a tail! Much attention has been devoted to this department of lexicography; the reader is referred to words bois, coton, effet, fer, lampe, lettre, machine, monnaie, papier, savon, naigre, etc. The verbs have also adverbs peculiar to them and which to be known must be gleaned from reading and ought to be recorded in dictionaries. The French say lutter ferme or fort (to struggle firm or strong) which we render by to struggle hard but douter fort we do not translate by to doubt hard but to doubt much, although we say for pleuvoir fort, to rain hard or fast; transpirer abondamment is with us perspire copiously or profusely. In fact they cannot be guessed, but must be learned, and ought therefore to be found in the columns of a dictionary.

IDIOMS AND FAMILIAR PHRASEOLOGY.

Idioms and familiar phraseology are after words the most important part of a dictionary of two languages; they are indispensable, fundamental, the very essence of a language. It is a strange fact that in dictionaries exclusively English they are rarely noticed; and in the greater part of dictionaries wholly French they occupy a prominent part. From isolated words the foreigner cannot form idioms; he must receive them as a people have made them; he must take the home-born plant and not substitute an exotic production.

I have inserted all those in general use and those I have collected, either in my reading or in my personal intercourse with the French, during a twenty years' residence in Paris. They are placed where they will probably be sought, at the important word, which is not a slight innovation; they are separated from the acceptations and examples; they are classed so that one may be readily found without a perusal of the whole; the nouns are presented in the following order: 1. the word with the adjective; 2. with other nouns; 3. with prepositions; 4. with verbs. The verbs are not less methodically arranged: 1. attended by adjectives or adverbs; 2. accompanied by nouns; 3. in any part of their conjugation; 4. when attended by prepositions or adverbs, so profoundly modify the sense in English. Each of these series is exhibited in alphabetical order. (V. heure, pied, pierre, temps, tête, voie, etc.; faire, vouloir,

PREPOSITIONS, MOODS, ETC., GOVERNED BY WORDS.

Prepositions. This work shows what prepositions are governed by words when they differ in the two languages. Grammars can present but few such words; the place of these indications is the dictionary. Mine is, I believe, the first that has supplied them. They are perhaps the greatest difficulty to be encountered in the study of a language, and few or none are so thoroughly conversant with them as to be able to dispense with assistance. How then is a learner to imagine, to guess that the French say angry against (fâché contre) and not with; and pleased of (content de) and not with; to consist in and never to consist of; to answer of, to dispense of, to threaten of, to inspire a sentiment to any one, to reproach a. th. to a. o., etc.

Moods, etc. When a word governs the subjunctive mood in French it is always noticed by being marked (subj.) or [subj.]; no indication is given when the mood governed is the indicative. (V. abominable, admirer, v. n., bien que, bon, douter, quoique, etc.) If the verb requires ne or admits of the suppression of pas or point, it is stated in a note at the end of the word, and frequently elucidated by an example. (V. craindre, cesser, oser, pouvoir, savoir.)

PRONUNCIATION.

In the French-English dictionary it has been thought unnecessary to insert the pronunciation when it is regular (there is no tonic accent to mark); it is given when there are long sounds, irregularities or difficulties. I have been guided by the Academy when this work expresses an opinion on the subject, which is unfrequent, generally by Abbé d'Olivet's Traité de Prosodie and by Catineau's French Pronouncing Dictionary. It has not been attempted to translate the pronunciation; the irregular pronunciation of each language has been rendered by the regular and simplest sounds of the same tongue. The sounds of the one rendered by those of the other present in every case a most inaccurate pronunciation and, in all difficult cases, scarcely a remote idea of the real sound. To be convinced of the absolute truth of this assertion the reader is referred to the key of the French pronunciation (page viii), where the attempt has been made and where, I fear, it has failed. Does, in reality, fwawng give any real notion of the proper sound of the French word foin? The most important improvement introduced into this part of the work is the indication of the length or brevity of the sounds, by pointing out the long sounds of those vowels or diphthongs that have both long and short ones. This in French makes a material difference in the pronunciation and at times in the sense of the word; tache (spot) and tâche (task) are as different in French as man and mane are in English.

VOCABULARIES OF MYTHOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES AND NAMES OF PERSONS.

These two vocabularies contain all the important names that differ in the two languages; they also comprise the names connected with Biblical, Greek and Roman antiquity; they have been compiled with great care. The genders when they are considered doubtful are omitted.

GENERAL ORDER AND TYPOGRAPHICAL ARRANGEMENT.

One of the most important ends to be attained was to introduce order and method into the "tenfold confusion" found, where all was "dark, wasteful, wild." Senses, definitions, examples, idioms and proverbs were, to use the language of Lord Chesterfield, "jumbled indiscriminately together," so that a student adventuring into these wild regions was more likely to lose himself than find the object of his search. The definitions of words that have but one acceptance or all the senses of which correspond in both languages have been suppressed. When a definition or an explanation, which is generally a single word, is inserted, it is in a parenthesis and in a type different from the translation. All the acceptations follow each other without interruption, in order to present at a glance the whole of the significations of the word; these acceptations are separated from the examples; the latter open a new paragraph and bear numbers corresponding to those of the senses; they are given in a smaller type as are likewise the grammatical observations at the end. The examples are, in their turn, separated from the idioms and these begin another paragraph with the type of the acceptations.

After having presented to the reader all the details that the limits of a preface admit (and I fear rather to have abused his indulgence), I have but to request him to compare this dictionary with other works of the same description. I wish it to undergo serious and critical examination. I venture to suggest a few words for comparison. For ordinary terms : apoplexie, atteinte, comprendre, coup, déconsidération, doux, escalier, fâché, fini, fleuve, frapper, jour, monnaie, moralité, pantalon, pension, pensionnat, père, représailles, rester, rêve, rhume, soir, soirée, vache, vif, vigne, etc.; for the arts and manufactures : coton, cuivre, fer, gaz, houille, huile, soie, etc.; for commercial terms : assurance, banque, capital, commis, compte, compagnie, dock, effet, envoi, escompte, paiement, police, présentation, prix; for the customs : entrepôt, droit, transit; for engineering : coussinet, écluse, pavé, pont, route, vapeur, etc.; for the grammatical part : s'attendre, bien, ce, cesser, craindre, dessous, dessus, dont, échapper, feu (adjective), gens, s'indigner, je, le (pronoun), ni, on, pardonner, se, sien, tu, voir; for law : arbitre, comparaitre, contrat, détention, emprisonnement, héritier, homicide, magistrature, perquisition, vol; for military terms : faction, file, garnison; for mining : filon, galerie, etc.; for the navy : ancree, armée, bâtiment, câble, flotte, mât, voile, etc.; for post-office terms : dépêche, lettre, port, etc.; for railways : convoi, rail, train, etc.; for general technology : machine, pompe, puits, roue, treuil, vis, etc.

The pleasing duty now devolves on me of acknowledging my obligations, which are great and numerous. The difficulties of the translation from English into French have been submitted to Frenchmen and vice versa. The gentlemen, whose names I have the honour to inscribe here, have been kindly pleased to enrich these volumes with some of their most valuable information. I would here offer them the expression of my gratitude.

These gentlemen are Professor Elie de Beaumont, Member of the Institute of France (for geology and mineralogy); Rob^t. Bell, Esq. author of the Lives of the Poets, the History of Russia, the Life of Canning, etc. (for English literature); Professor Blanqui, Member of the Institute of France (for political economy and commerce); Professor Combes, Member of the French Institute (for mining and mechanics); Monsieur Cortambert, author of several works and professor of geography (for geography); Cesar Daly, Esq. architect and director of the Revue des Travaux Publics (for architecture); Professor Donaldson, of University College (for architecture and building); Rich. Else Esq. barrister of London (for law); Professor Frémy, of the École Polytechnique (for chemistry); Admiral Giffard (for naval terms); Professor Guigniaut, member of the Institute of France and Secretary General of the Council of the University of France (for geography); Edw^d. Holmes, Esq. of London (for music); Dr. Lardner, director of the Cabinet Cyclopædia, author of the Steam-engine, etc. (for the exact sciences and civil engineering); the late Mr. Leahy, barrister of London (for law); Monsieur Marie, formerly Minister of Justice and Keeper of the Seals (for law); D. M^c Carthy, M. D. physician to the English Embassy in Paris (for the medical sciences); the late Admiral Massieu de Clerval, commissioner of the Board of Admiralty (for the navy); General Saint-Arnaud (for military terms); Monsieur Sichel, M. D. (for ophthalmology); Captain Stephenson, of the Scotch Fusilier Guards (for military terms); Dr. Ure, F. R. S. (for chemistry, the arts and manufactures); Monsieur De Vilback (for music); Monsieur Villemain, Perpetual Secretary to the French Academy and formerly Minister of Public Instruction (for the French language and literature). I regret infinitely the utter impossibility of naming here the many other persons to whose kindness this work is indebted for various and not unimportant contributions.

The gentlemen who have so kindly afforded assistance to the dictionary and the public in general are earnestly entreated to communicate their observations; it is by these principally that I hope to correct the errors that have inevitably found their way into these pages; they will be gratefully received and will meet with all due consideration.

I confidently trust that I have conscientiously and faithfully fulfilled the promises of the title of my work; it is for others to appreciate the execution of my task; but like Johnson I confess that "I look with pleasure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the spirit of a man that has endeavoured well."

EXPLANATION OF THE SIGNS

EMPLOYED IN THE FRENCH-ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

- | | |
|--|---|
| — Represents the repetition of the French word, répétition du mot français . | , Or, ou . |
| = Represents the repetition of the English word, répétition du mot anglais (1). | * Elevated style, style soutenu . |
| † Antiquated, vieilli . |  Poetical language, style poétique . |
| ‡ Little used, inusité . | † Biblical style, religious expression, style biblique ;
expression religieuse . |
| In the proper sense, au propre . | (Familiar style, style familier . |
| § In the figurative sense, au figuré . |) Trivial style, style trivial . |
| ↓ General acceptance, acception générale . | ○ Popular language, terme populaire . |
| ✓ Irregular verb in English, verbe irrégulier en anglais . | ⊖ Low expression, terme bas . |

— before final letters signifies that these letters are changed in the feminine into those that follow either immediately or after the pronunciation : TROMPEU-R, SE, i. e. trompeur, in the masculine, and trompeuse, in the feminine.

N. B. When the signs, abbreviations, etc., precede the first number, they apply to all the senses of the word; when they follow a number they are applicable to the acceptance of that number only. These signs placed after the English apply to the latter.

Prepositions in parentheses. — The French preposition used before a noun or pronoun is in small capitals, and the corresponding English one in italics; the French preposition used before a verb is in italics and the English one Roman. Thus at the word FACHÉ (DE, for; de, to; que [subj.]) signifies that before a noun or pronoun de is used in French and for in English; être fâché de quelque chose, to be sorry for any thing; before a verb de is used in French and to in English, or sometimes que with the following verb in the subjunctive mood : être fâché de voir quelque chose, to be sorry to see any thing; je suis fâché que ce soit ainsi, I am sorry it is so.

Irregular verbs in parentheses. — In the irregularities of the irregular verbs, in parentheses, the first word is the present participle, the second the past participle; in the other parts the moods and tenses are marked. The parts that are not irregular are not given. As the imperfect of the indicative is derived from the present participle, the conditional from the future, and the imperfect of the subjunctive from the preterit of the indicative, they are omitted. This observation applies equally to the imperative. When at a verb the manner of conjugating it is not pointed out, the verb is regular; if ending in er it is conjugated like parler; in ir like finir; in oir like recevoir; in re like rendre.

(1) = shows that the English word is the same as that which translates the French word marked thus (—) the first time it occurs in the paragraph; if the first time there is =, that signifies that the French word may be translated by all the English words of the various acceptations.

KEY OF THE FRENCH PRONUNCIATION.

TABLE OF FRENCH SOUNDS WITH THE NEAREST ENGLISH SOUNDS,

(Some of the latter are very remote from the genuine French sounds).

- A. A as ma, ami (1); â as âme, tâche (2); an as flan (3); ai as è (4); ai as ä amee; ah ahm, tahsh; ang flang; a gai (5); ain as main (3); au as Paul; au as aube.
 ga; aing maing; ô Pol; o obe.

When ai has not the pronunciation marked, it is to be pronounced as è, which is the sound it most generally has.

- C. Ch as chat.
 sh sha.

- D. D at the end of a word is not pronounced.

- E. E as le (6); é as dé; è as père (4); ê as rêve (7); eau as beau; ein uh luh; a day; pair; rave; o bo; ing as sein (3); en as lent (3); eu as jeune (6) (young); eû as jeune (8) (fast).
 sing; ang lang; ü zhun; ü zhun.

E unaccented at the end of a word is mute; e without an accent at the beginning or in the middle of a syllable is pronounced è unless the contrary is pointed out.

Er at the end of a word is pronounced é unless the contrary is denoted.

- G. G (before a, o, u) as gai; g (before e, i, y) as général (9); gu as guide.
 g gay; zh zhanaral; g gheed.

- J. J as jeune (9).
 zh zhun.

- O. O as botte; ô as pôle (10); oi as boîte; on as bon (3); oin as foïn (3) ô bot; o pole; waw bwawt; ong bong; wawng fwawng;
 ou as fou.
 oo foo.

- Q. Qu as quel.
 k kel.

- S. S (between two vowels) as vase.
 z vahz.

S (one s) at the end of a word is not pronounced.

- T. T (one t) at the end of a word is not pronounced.

- U. U as du (11); ui or uy as fuite (12); un as un (3).
 ung ung.

 When the pronunciation is not inserted there is no irregularity in it.

All the vowels and diphthongs having long and short sounds are short, unless the pronunciation is given as long.

Double consonants are pronounced as single ones; when those having a nasal sound are double they no longer retain their nasality.

(1) Like the English a in sad.

(2) Like the English a in far.

(3) All the nasal sounds are totally different from any sounds in the English language.

(4) The sound of ai or è does not exist in English.

(5) As the English a long in mane.

(6) As u in bud.

(7) This sound does not exist in English; it is the same as that of è but longer.

(8) The short sound of the English u is somewhat lengthened.

(9) This sound is that of the s in the English word invasion.

(10) This is rather more open than the English long o.

(11) This sound does not exist in English; it is not at all the English oo or u.

(12) This sound is not to be found in English; it cannot be too strongly recommended to avoid pronouncing it like wo.
